Post to farewell troops today

Public invited to send-off ceremony at 4 p.m. in Doughboy Stadium

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

As Fort Benning Soldiers prepare to deploy to Southwest Asia again, the post will host a send-off ceremony at 4 p.m. today in Doughboy Stadium.

The ceremony is a way to thank the Soldiers and their families for their contributions and sacrifices, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

Some 36th Engineer Group and 3rd Brigade Combat Team Soldiers have departed already, so they'll miss Public Affairs intern Annette Fournier singing the national anthem. David Staton, a country singer, will perform his song, Godspeed, and others in a free hour long concert.

Guest speakers include Georgia Gov. Sonny Perdue, U.S. Sen. Saxby Chambliss, U.S. Rep. Sanford Bishop, the mayors of Columbus and Phenix City and Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general.

The Silver Wings, Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Team, will drop in with the colors of the 3rd Brigade and the 36th Engineer Group, which will be presented to Col. Steven Salazar, commander of 3rd Brigade, and Col. James Brooks, commander of the 36th Engineer Group.

The Infantry Band will perform, and a brief fireworks demonstration will conclude the ceremony. The public is invited to attend.

Army to deploy CROWS to Iraq

Designed to get gunners out of turret, in vehicle

Common Remotely Operated Weapon System-equipped humvees navigate a road in Iraq last year. The new system's advanced technology provides 98 percent accuracy.

The Army is sending powerful reinforcements next week to Iraq via a shipment of 35 cutting-edge, vehicle mounted weapons systems designed to save coalition lives and destroy enemy forces like never before.

This first wave of Common Remotely Operated Weapon Stations will be divided among Special Forces, military police, infantry and transportation units. Congress recently approved $70.5 million to provide for the manufacture and deployment of 254 units by year's end.

CROWS, manufactured by Recon/Optical, Inc., is a gunner-operated system capable of remotely aiming and firing a suite of crew-served weapons from inside the relative safety of armored vehicles.

The idea is to get the gunner out of the turret — an extremely dangerous position that has been the cause of a significant number of injuries and deaths in Operation Iraqi Freedom, said Staff Sgt. Robert Jones.

Jones is the project NCO for crew-served weapons with the Directorate of Combat Development's Small Arms Division. He will assist in training the units who are receiving the CROWS and assess the system in combat operations. It will be the second tour to Iraq for the new system.

The first rotation, conducted from late December 2003 to March, showed the four initial CROWS effectively accomplished the objective to protect the gunner from IEDs and small arms fire. But, Jones said, it's the secondary purpose, taking out the enemy, that makes the CROWS such a valuable tool for Soldiers in the field.

The top-mounted weapons system was initially designed to fire the MK-19 grenade machine gun, M-2 .50 caliber machine gun, M-240B medium machine gun and M-249 squad automatic weapon, providing flexibility for varying mission requirements. More flexibility for different unit missions has been added with the development of new weapon kits since March like the T230-LF, the 30 mm machine gun known for its role in the Apache attack helicopter's arsenal.

The system comes equipped with a daytime video camera featuring dual-action stabilization for rough rides, a laser range finder, ballistic computer, second generation forward looking infrared sights, heavy thermal weapons sight and state-of-the-art display and control panel system.

With streaming video and the laser range finder, a gunner can continuously pan 360 degrees while on the move in an urban environment, zoom in on targets, target a point of impact and the ballistic computer will adjust the weapon's point of aim accordingly, Jones said. With a stationary platform, the system is capable of identifying, targeting and destroying enemy elements beyond 2,000 meters with one-shot, one-kill accuracy and no collateral damage.

"We have engaged enemy targets from over 1,000 meters from the stationary position with immediate destruction. The point accuracy from our .50 caliber mounted on the CROWS is a great combat multiplier," said 1st Lt. Brandon Bure, 2nd Battalion, 12th Cavalry Regiment, Camp Victory North, Iraq, in an after action review of his unit's experience with one of the original four CROWS. "Once bore sighted and zeroed, we will hit a target we aim for. We can not replicate this with standard, crew-served weapons."

Post to honor MLK with service

Thursday's event to recognize contributions

Tawny Archibald Campbell

A commemorative service to honor Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. will be from 11 a.m. to noon Thursday at Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. The theme is "Remember! Act! Celebrate! A Day On, Not a Day Off."

The service, hosted by the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, will feature guest speaker the Rev. Otis Moss, III, a pastor at Tabernacle Baptist Church in Augusta, Ga.

Sgt. 1st Class Michelle Fonseca, equal opportunity adviser, said she had an opportunity to attend a speech Moss gave at Fort Hood years ago and thought he would be a powerful addition to this years ceremony.

"He will be talking about Dr. King, the civil rights movement and (Dr. King's) dream for us as a society moving toward equality," Fonseca said.

There will also be a variety of entertainment, including Danny Whitehead performing King's speech "I See the Promised Land" and musical selections by the Stowers Elementary School Chorus and the Rev. Antoine Paden.

Winners of the Faith Middle School "I have a Dream Essay Contest" will be recognized by the commanding general during the program, and if time permits, the first-place winners in each grade will be asked to read their essays, Fonseca said.

After the ceremony, cake, punch and coffee will be served in Classroom 1-A, in honor of both the national holiday and King's birthday, which is observed Jan. 17.

"The significance of Martin Luther King Jr. is he was an instrumental leader in our community and in the civil rights movement because of his vision of equality and justice for all, just not for African Americans," Fonseca said. "A lot of people looked up to him."

With his view of nonviolence, she said, King made an impact on many people, helped change laws and played a large part in desegregation.

"It is of the utmost importance that we continue to live the dream of the dreamer," said Master Sgt. Vincent McNeill, EO office NCOIC, "and educate our Soldiers and civilians on the contributions made by this great American."

The service is one of eight ethnic observances and commemorations hosted each year by the EO Office.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS

It's a new year. I'm Bushed.

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Who said: "I think we can all agree the past is behind us?"
a: Jessica Simpson
b: President Bush
c: Scott Peterson
If you guessed "b," kudos to you.

That was the quote, Jan. 1, on my brand-spanking new "Bushisms" calendar, one of those quote-a-day thingys guaranteed to keep me laughing all year long. It was a gift from a friend, a closet conservative struggling to keep up a liberal facade. It's not working, and like all the best Jerry Falwell imitators, I keep telling her to, "Come out!"

It's a new year, time to shed old baggage, old habits and yes, even old fantasies, like my friend's. Time to wake up to the coffee and smell the truth. Time to put the past behind us.

In most cases, New Year's resolutions, by nature, are designed to do just the opposite.

One of my coworkers has resolved to simplify her life — to *de*clutter. Toward that end, she's purchased a number of books, bags and portable, expandable, file-like contraptions designed to corral the clutter. It'll never happen.

Same coworker, like a gazillion other Americans, has resolved to lose 10 pounds. Far be it from me to cast stones at anyone planning a dream diet, because I'm a moving target myself (and fairly easy to peg from a good distance.) But, like the president, I think we can all agree the past is behind us, and our "behinds" will never be size 6 again. Get over it. Go shopping. Now there's a resolution for you.

Just the other day I read an innovative alternative to the traditional resolution. The author and his family compiled a list of regrets from last year, i.e., too much time in front of the TV, not enough attention to homework, etc.

No more pie-in-the-sky promises. No more never-agains. Just a candid recap of the past. Make a list, write it down, wad it up and throw it away. Start fresh each day and resolve to make good choices. I like that.

I don't know who decided we should herald the new year with new resolve. I'm sure he meant well, but good intentions shouldn't be reborn and shot down once a year.

I'm all about "turning over a new leaf" or "turning a page" — whatever — but if your calendar is like my quote-a-day thingy, you're turning a page every day. So resolve to start every new day like it's a new year and put the past behind you.

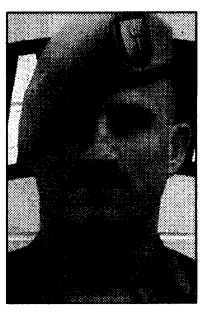
Happy New Day.

What creed do you live by?

Chaplain (Maj.) Paul Lasley
Ranger Training Brigade

Pvt. Randy Laible lived and loved the Ranger Creed. He died of a brain aneurism in February 2004 after serving almost two years at Camp Rogers where the Benning Phase of Ranger School takes place. He enlisted in the Army to become a Ranger.

Laible's parents, Rob and Julie, were here for his Airborne School graduation last year. They visited the Ranger Memorial, where he told them he wanted to go to Ranger School, and how he was committed to living the Ranger Creed.



The Ranger Creed, that which makes a Ranger a Ranger is his commitment to the creed.

Rangers exemplify physical stamina, professional and tactical competence, courage and leadership. All those characteristics are summed up in the Ranger Creed, and then some. The creed, the Ranger ethos it represents, dominated Army life for Laible.

Rangers say the creed in unison at PT each morning, at changes of command, and in formation before meals. They say it as they shuffle out the aircraft doors for parachute assaults into enemy territory.

The creed is more than the sum of its parts. It is the paradigm for living and serving this great nation. It gives moral clarity in a morally murky world. It's the moral trajectory — in combat or in peace.

Laible lived and loved the Ranger Creed. He stood in front of the Ranger Memorial and recited the creed more than a year ago while his mother and father beamed with pride. Recalling that day, his mother made a needlepoint of the creed and gave it to the 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

Laible's memory and spirit, like so many other Rangers, live on in the words of the creed.

Rangers aren't perfect, but they're committed to all that is good and right in our Army. They're committed to their brothers in arms.

Recall the words of Col. Joshua Chamberlain, a Medal of Honor recipient from the Civil War, who spoke of the correlation between how one thinks and how one lives:

"We know not of the future, and cannot plan for it much. But we can hold our spirits and our bodies so pure and high, we may cherish such thoughts and such ideals, and dream such dreams of lofty purpose, that we can determine and know what manner of men we will be whenever and wherever the hour strikes, that calls to noble action ... no man becomes suddenly different from his habit and cherished thought."

Ask yourself this — what kind of man or woman will you be when the time for noble action calls?

For Rangers like Laible, the cherished thought and habit that suggest how to live when the time for noble actions calls is the Ranger Creed.

The Ranger Creed

Recognizing that I volunteered as a Ranger, fully knowing the hazards of my chosen profession, I will always endeavor to uphold the prestige, honor and high esprit de corps of the Rangers.

Acknowledging the fact that a Ranger is a more elite soldier who arrives at the cutting edge of battle by land, sea or air, I accept the fact that that as a Ranger, my country expects me to move further, faster and fight harder than any other soldier.

Never shall I fail my comrades. I will always keep myself mentally alert, physically strong and morally straight. And I will shoulder more than my share of the task, whatever it may be, one hundred percent and then some.

Gallantly will I show the world that I am a specially selected and well-trained soldier. My courtesy to superior officers, neatness of dress and care of equipment shall set the example for others to follow.

Energetically will I meet the enemies of my country. I shall defeat them on the field of battle for I am better trained and will fight with all my might. Surrender is not a Ranger word. I will never allow a fallen comrade to fall into the hands of the enemy and under no circumstances will I ever embarrass my country.

Readily will I display the intestinal fortitude required to fight on to the Ranger objective and complete the mission, though I be the lone survivor. RANGERS LEAD THE WAY!

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

Requesting coverage of news events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include battalion-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations and group photos.

The frequency of such events on post and small number of photojournalists on The Bayonet staff prohibits us from covering these sorts of events.

Also, Army Regulation 360-1, which governs the production and content of Army newspapers, states covering such events is not a function of the post newspaper or the Public Affairs Office.

If you need a photographer to record events for official purposes, call the Training and Audiovisual Support Center's photo lab at 545-1398.

Deadlines

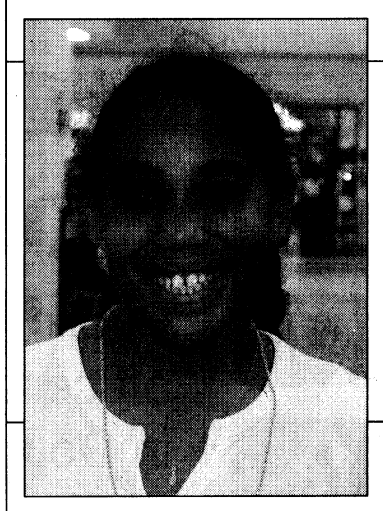
Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

If you submit an announcement for post briefs or community briefs, check it when it appears in The Bayonet. Then, if you must resubmit it at a later date, submit it as it ran in the paper.

You may fax briefs or announcements only.

Corrections



We strive for accuracy, so if we make an error, call us at 545-4622 so a correction can be printed in the next edition of The Bayonet.

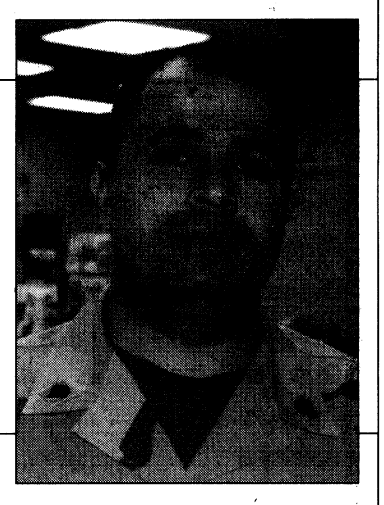
VARIOUS VOICES

What are your New Year's resolutions?

Latonya Campbell, family member — "My New Year's resolution is to change my attitude, because sometimes I can get a bad attitude. I always get in trouble because I roll my eyes when I'm mad or I don't get my way. I want to change that."

Spc. Chris Holmes, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "My New Year's resolution is to come home alive from Iraq. It would be hard on my (family) if something happened to me. I'm just going to stick with my buddies and keep my head down."



Sgt. Lasandra Hicks, MEDDAC — "I don't have any resolutions, because I know I won't keep them anyway. I think I set too high of goals for myself, and then I get frustrated and don't end up keeping them."

Spc. D'Arlo Smith, MEDDAC — "My New Year's resolution is to get promoted. I'm so close, but I still have a little ways to go. I'm going to take some college classes and try to do everything I can to get enough points."

Earta Norwood, family member — "I don't really have any resolutions because I know what I want to change about myself, and it's the same stuff I work on all year."

Spc. William Lopez, 53rd Troop Command — "My New Year's resolution is to come home safe from deployment. While I'm over there, I'm just going to think of wife and kids and do my best to stay safe."

Environmental study looks at Harmony Church site

Comment period underway for assessment

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

New temporary housing will be built in Harmony Church for 3,400 Soldiers from the 25th Infantry Division's 5th Brigade, coming to Fort Benning and to be incorporated as a tenant unit Oct. 1.

The light brigade is coming to Fort Benning on a provisional basis, and depending on the outcome of the Base Realignment and Closure Initiative, the unit may become a permanent tenant. The temporary structures are intended to last for six to 10 years, with the possibility of being replaced by permanent structures in the interim.

In preparation for the barracks and support facilities, the Directorate of Public Works' Environmental Management Division is reviewing an environmental assessment of the proposed building site.

The proposal, completed by contractor, The Environmental Company, was done in compliance with the National Environmental Protection Act. NEPA mandates that any new construction on federal installations must have the least possible impact on the environment.

The EMD is reviewing the assessment to decide if the proposal is acceptable, and if approved, the Fort Worth District Corps of Engineers will begin accepting bids from contractors to get construction underway as soon as possible.

The assessment and approval process have been accelerated because of the short time frame before the new troops arrive. The accelerated assessment took three months, compared to another EMD project, the two year assessment of the Digital Multipurpose Range Complex, said EMD's Polly Gustafson.

The new facilities will be built in an area where World War II era structures once stood, but these complexes were destroyed during the last 15 years.

The sewer lines and other infrastructure for the buildings still exists, meaning the new construction will make less impact on the environment, said John Brown, EMD program manager.

Three sites were proposed as possible locations for the construction, all three of which had been previously disturbed by building in the past.

"By having a site that has been built on in the past helped us a great deal with the timeline," Brown said. "If we would have had to assess land that had never been disturbed before, we never would have made our deadline."

Annette Fournier
The new facilities will be built near the First Division Road gate, if the assessment is approved.

"We have to think about the air and water, natural resources, endangered species, erosion and cultural resources," said Patrick Chauvey, chief of Environmental Programs Management Branch. "We need to think about the whole picture to make an informed decision, and cause the least impact on the environment."

The facilities being built are pre-fabricated modular units, produced in a factory and then assembled in place, speeding up the building process.

The barracks and dining areas will be the first units to go up in the new complex, with administrative buildings and other facilities being built last.

If the building site is approved, construction should begin by early spring with the project being completed by Oct. 1, ready for the incorporation of troops into the new unit. NEPA says the public must be informed of proposals and have a chance to comment on it, so the EMD is soliciting public opinion for the next 15 days.

For questions or comments on the proposed project, contact John Brown at 545-7549 or brownje@benning.army.mil.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center, Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Management Division, Fort Benning, Georgia, hereby announces the completion and public availability of an Environmental Assessment (EA) and Draft Finding of No Significant Impact (FNSI) concerning the construction, maintenance, and use of temporary support facilities for the new 5th Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division and the training that would be conducted by this Brigade Combat Team (BCT) on existing ranges and training areas at Fort Benning, Georgia.

These documents were prepared pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

The Army intends to temporarily station the 5th Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division at Fort Benning. BCT Soldiers will begin to arrive at Fort Benning by early Fall of 2005; the BCT is expected to be at full strength with approximately 3,400 Soldiers by mid-October 2005.

As such, temporary facilities are needed so that Soldiers will have facilities to support them. Temporary construction would include parking areas, maintenance, barracks, administrative, dining, and other support facilities. The BCT would train using existing ranges and training areas on Fort Benning.

Three alternatives are considered in the EA. Alternative I is to locate the temporary support facilities on approximately 247 acres of land in three clustered areas within the East, North, and Central Harmony Church cantonment area.

Three World War II buildings would be demolished and two others would either be reused by the BCT or demolished.

The BCT would train on the Light Infantry ranges and practice light maneuvers on the training areas that currently exist at Fort Benning; existing environmental controls and monitoring for environmental effects for these areas would continue.

Alternative II would involve locating the temporary support facilities for the BCT within the East Harmony Church cantonment area within an area covering approximately 238 acres.

The existing military police dog kennel and the Bradley drivers' training course would be relocated to accommodate the facilities in this location. BCT training would be the same as with Alternative I.

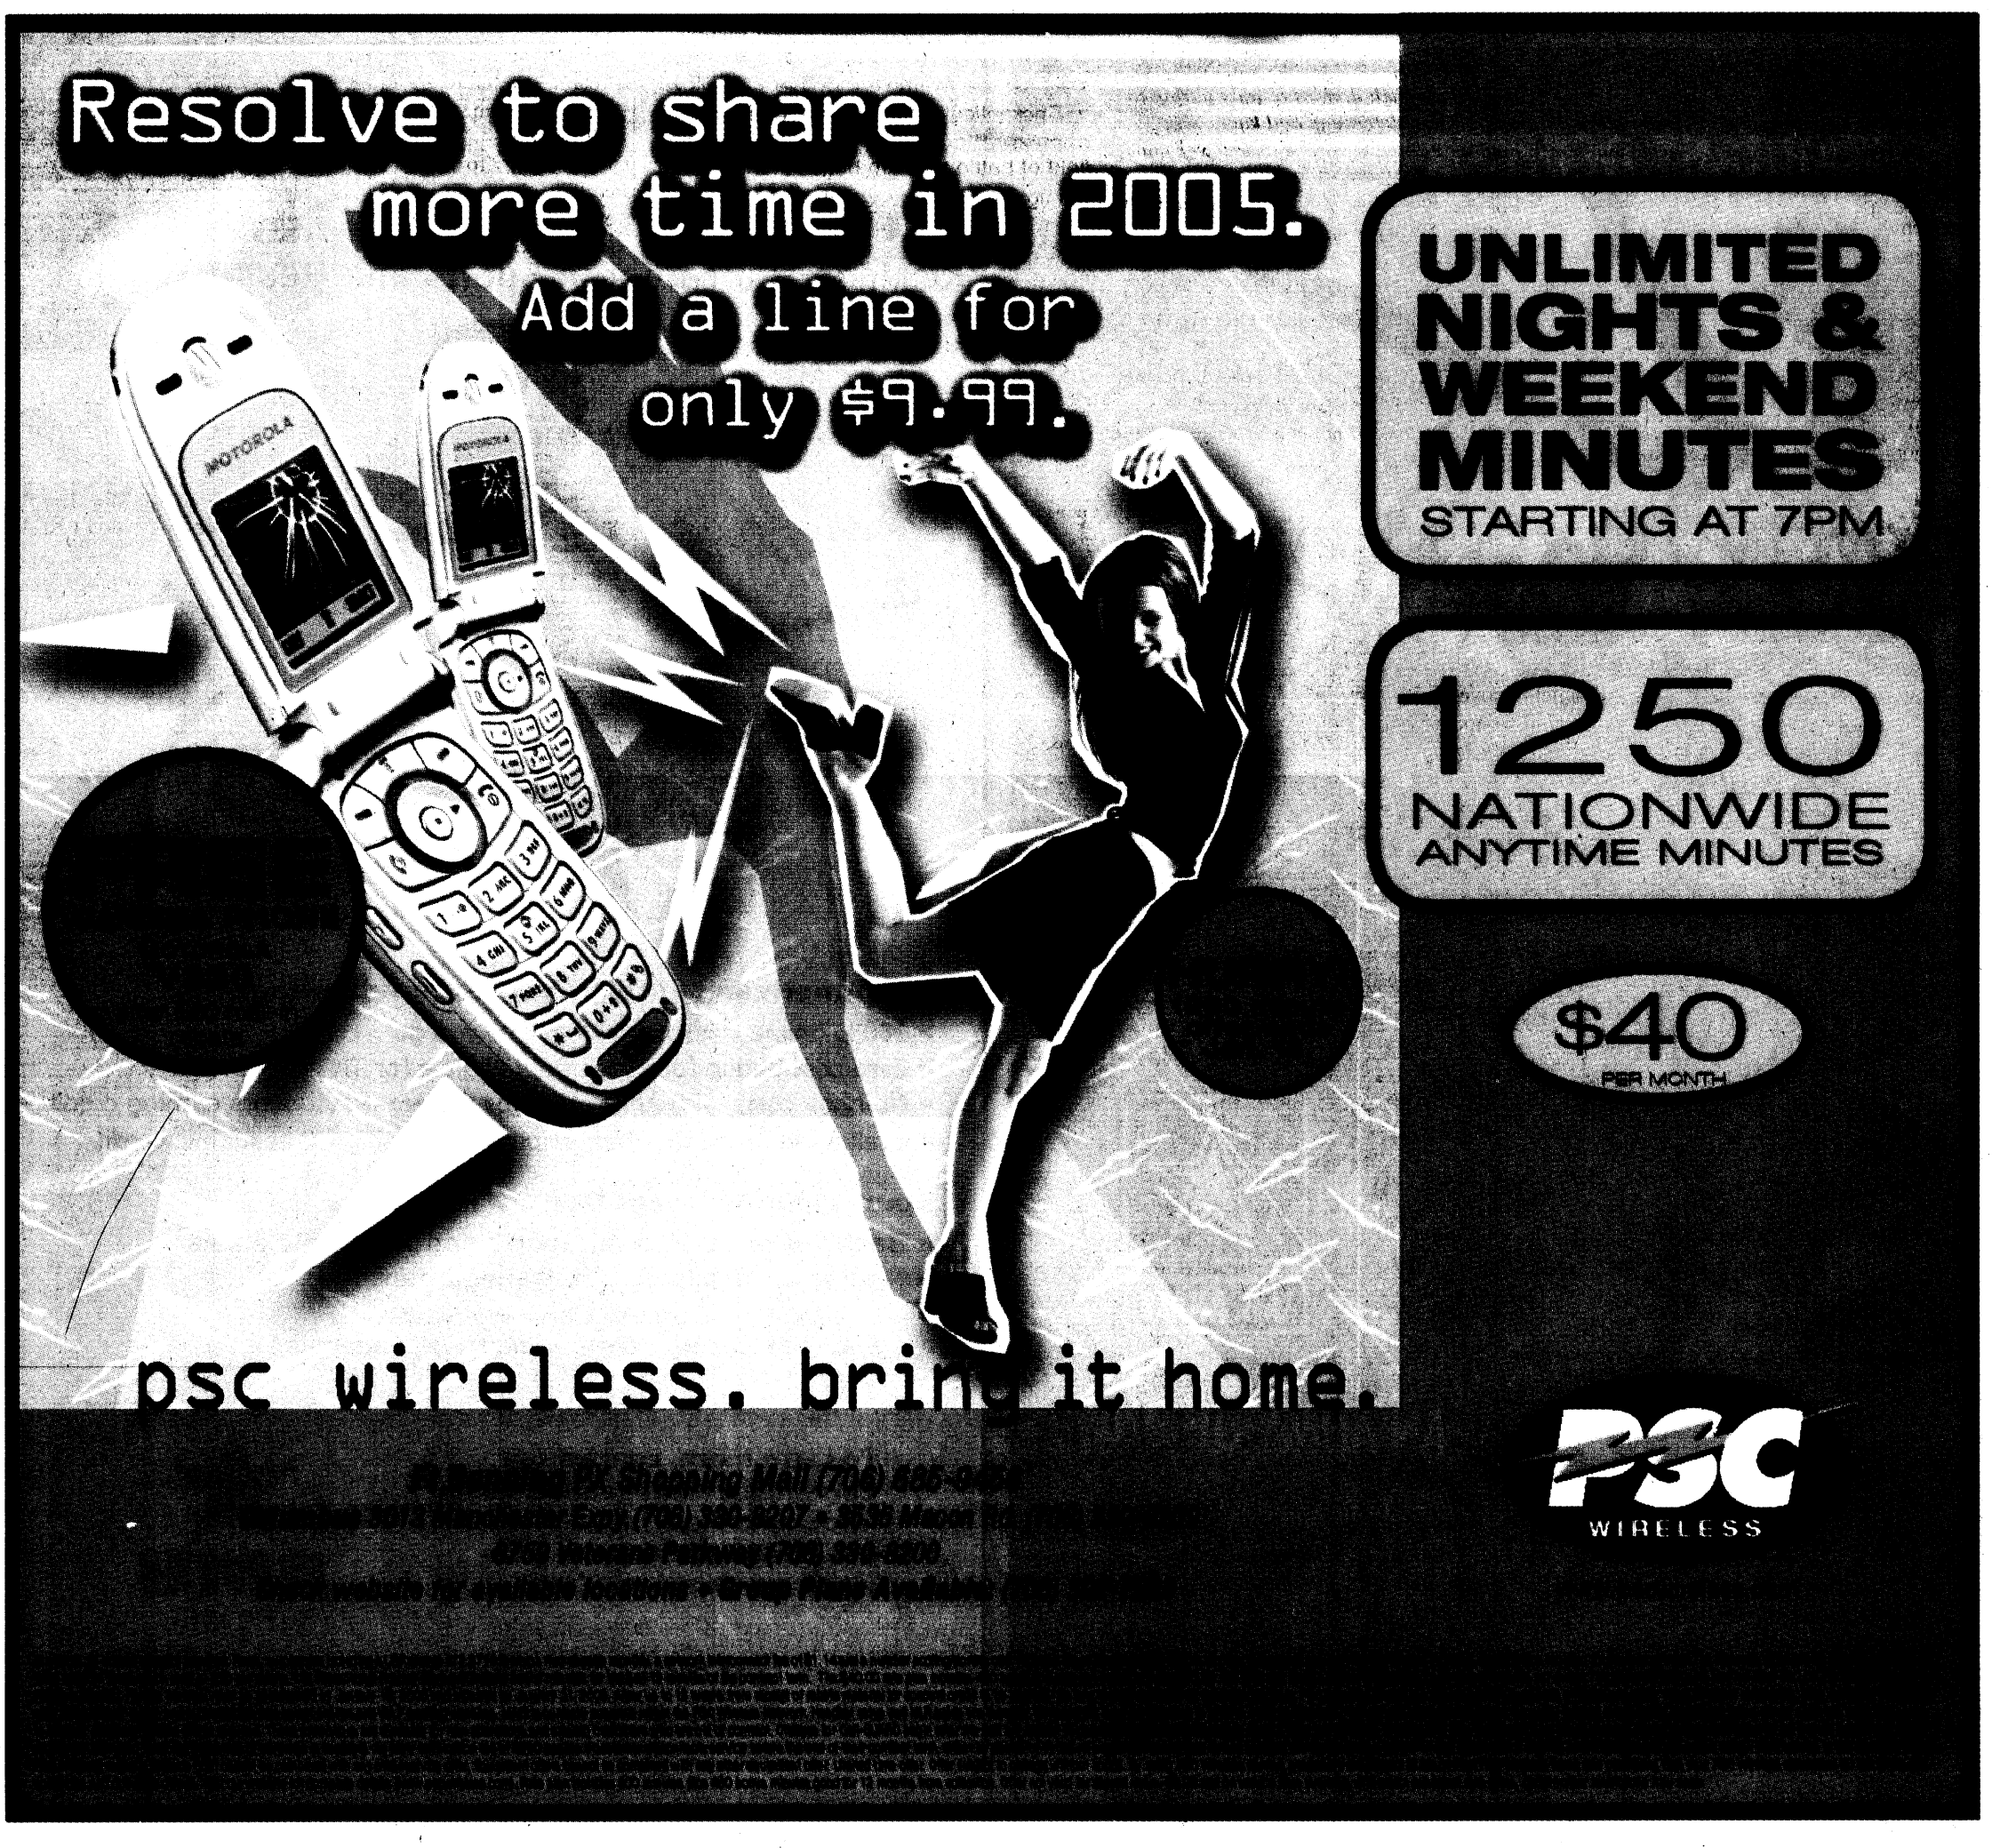
Alternative III is the no-action alternative. With this alternative, no support facilities would be constructed for the newly arriving troops that will comprise the 5th/25th BCT.

Soldiers would instead be housed in hotel rooms or rented apartments off-post in the communities near Fort Benning. Administrative and maintenance duties would be performed in existing facilities or off-post leased properties. BCT training would be the same as with Alternative I.

The EA evaluates the effects associated with each of the alternatives on soils, water quality, biological resources, land use, recreation, socioeconomics, environmental justice, cultural resources, transportation, utilities, hazardous materials and waste, public health and safety, air quality, and noise.

The EA and Draft FNSI for the proposed action have been completed and made available to the public for a review period of 15 days starting from the first day of publication in The Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, in accordance with Title 40 of the Code of Federal Regulations, Part 1501.4(e)(1) and Army Regulation 200-2, 'Environmental Effects of Army Actions.'

These documents are available at the following locations, as well as the following Web site:



http://www.benning.army.mil/EMd/_program_mgt/legal/index.htm.

a. W.C. Bradley Memorial Library, located at 1120 Bradley Drive, Columbus, Georgia.

a. South Lumpkin Library, located at 2034 South Lumpkin Road, Columbus, Georgia.

a. Fort Benning Main Post Library, located in Building 93, Fort Benning, Georgia.

Anyone wishing to comment on the proposed action or request additional information must write to the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Programs Management Branch (Attention: Mr. Patrick Chauvey), Building 6 (Meloy Hall) Room 309, Fort Benning, Georgia 31905-5122, or call (706) 545-4211.

First Command may owe refunds to customers

Business agrees to pay $12M settlement

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Military personnel who were misled by the financial and investment firm First Command Financial Services are entitled to a refund, the Securities and Exchange commission announced Dec. 15.

First Command neither admitted nor denied the accusations of misleading investors, but agreed to pay a $12 million settlement to military families who purchased and terminated systematic investment plans between Jan. 1, 1999 and Dec. 1, 2004.

The SEC said the firm exaggerated their success rates, covered up high fees on long-term contractual plans, and neglected to tell customers that most of their early investment went to commissions.

Investors said First Command gave faulty information about other plans, such as the Thrift Savings Plan and no-load mutual funds.

First Command Financial Planning and Services are currently sanctioned to do business at Fort Benning. It's common for students in Infantry Officer Basic Course and Infantry Career Captains Course to hear sales pitches from First Command, said Capt. Julie Heumphreus, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

First Command has been successful in its selling practices partly because many of their sales agents are former military. First Command has more than 1,000 sales agents, many retired officers, in nearly 200 branch offices located near military bases around the U.S. and in foreign countries, according to the National Association of Securities Dealers.

Nearly 297,000 military families invest with them.

Fort Benning has experienced problems with companies and their sales practices violating regulations, resulting in three being banned from selling products at Fort Benning.

Three insurance companies, Madison National, American Amicable and American Fidelity have all been barred from post for soliciting trainees in a captive audience and presenting deceptive information.

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate sent letters to people who purchased plans from American Amicable between January 2001 and October 2004 because they may be eligible for a refund.

To avoid these situations in the future, Col. Lyle Cayce, Staff Judge Advocate, said Soldiers who are planning to invest should have an attorney or independent financial advisor examine the contract before they purchase anything.

Legal Assistance Attorneys at the Office of Staff Judge Advocate can offer free advice to Soldiers.

"Agents frequently make high pressure sales pitches and encourage Soldiers to sign up immediately," Cayce said.

"Fort Benning wants to make sure Soldiers aren't being victimized by unscrupulous companies," Cayce said. "We're taking aggressive steps to identify companies who treat Soldiers unfairly or who violate statutes and regulations. We're working to prevent this from happening in the future."

Anyone who thinks they may be eligible for a refund should see the NASD Web site at www.nasd.com and follow the link to First Command restitution information, or contact First Command representatives Sam Pride at 323-1980 or Bob Watson at rfwatson@firstcommand.com.

RC officers get new promotion policy

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Under a new policy effective this month, Army Reserve officers will no longer compete for promotion against National Guard officers. Full-time Army Reserve officers will also compete for promotion only with other full-timers.

The assistant Secretary of the Army (Manpower and Reserve Affairs) approved a change in promotion policy that creates new competitive categories for officers previously considered under the single Army Promotion List, or APL competitive category:

- A National Guard category
- An Army Reserve category for Active-Guard-Reserve officers, known as AGRs
- A category for all other Army Reserve officers.

The change will enable RC mandatory promotion boards to select officers based upon "the unique force structure requirements" of the Army Reserve and Army National Guard, said Col. Mark Patterson, Officer Division chief in the Directorate of Military Personnel Management, G-1.

This change will lead to greater efficiency in meeting manning requirements, resulting in greater predictability and equity among all considered officers, he said.

Within the new categories, the number of officers selected for promotion will be closely related to the officers needed in that category, Patterson said.

The change "will ensure the right officers, in the right components are selected at the right time to meet the needs of the Army," Patterson said.

In the past, the APL competitive category included all Guard and Reserve officers except for chaplains and Army Medical Department officers.

Patterson said it was difficult to forecast how many National Guard officers versus Army Reserve officers would get promoted.

One component might have the vacancies and the other component would get the promotions.

If officers were over-selected in one component, Patterson said it became difficult for them to find a higher graded position. And in the Reserve system, an officer must be assigned to a position of higher grade before he or she can be promoted.

"This initiative allows the reserve components to grow leaders in a practiced, predictable and manageable manner," Patterson said.

"There will be no change in when and where we're going to hold the board."

The most significant change will be that Guard officers will compete only against other Guard officers, Patterson said.

Army Reserve Troop Program Unit officers, Individual Mobilization Augmentees and Individual Ready Reserve officers will not have to compete against AGR officers.

Under the new system, "board members will compare like officers with like officers," said Lt. Col. Craig Vest, chief of the Officer Selection Policy Branch.

When asked what officers can do to ensure they are competitive for promotion, Patterson replied with three suggestions:

"First, seek out and excel in the most challenging jobs; this includes opportunities to support the Global War on Terrorism. Second, complete your military and civilian education requirements for promotion. Third, review your promotion consideration file. Officers should be proactive in the management of their career," he said.

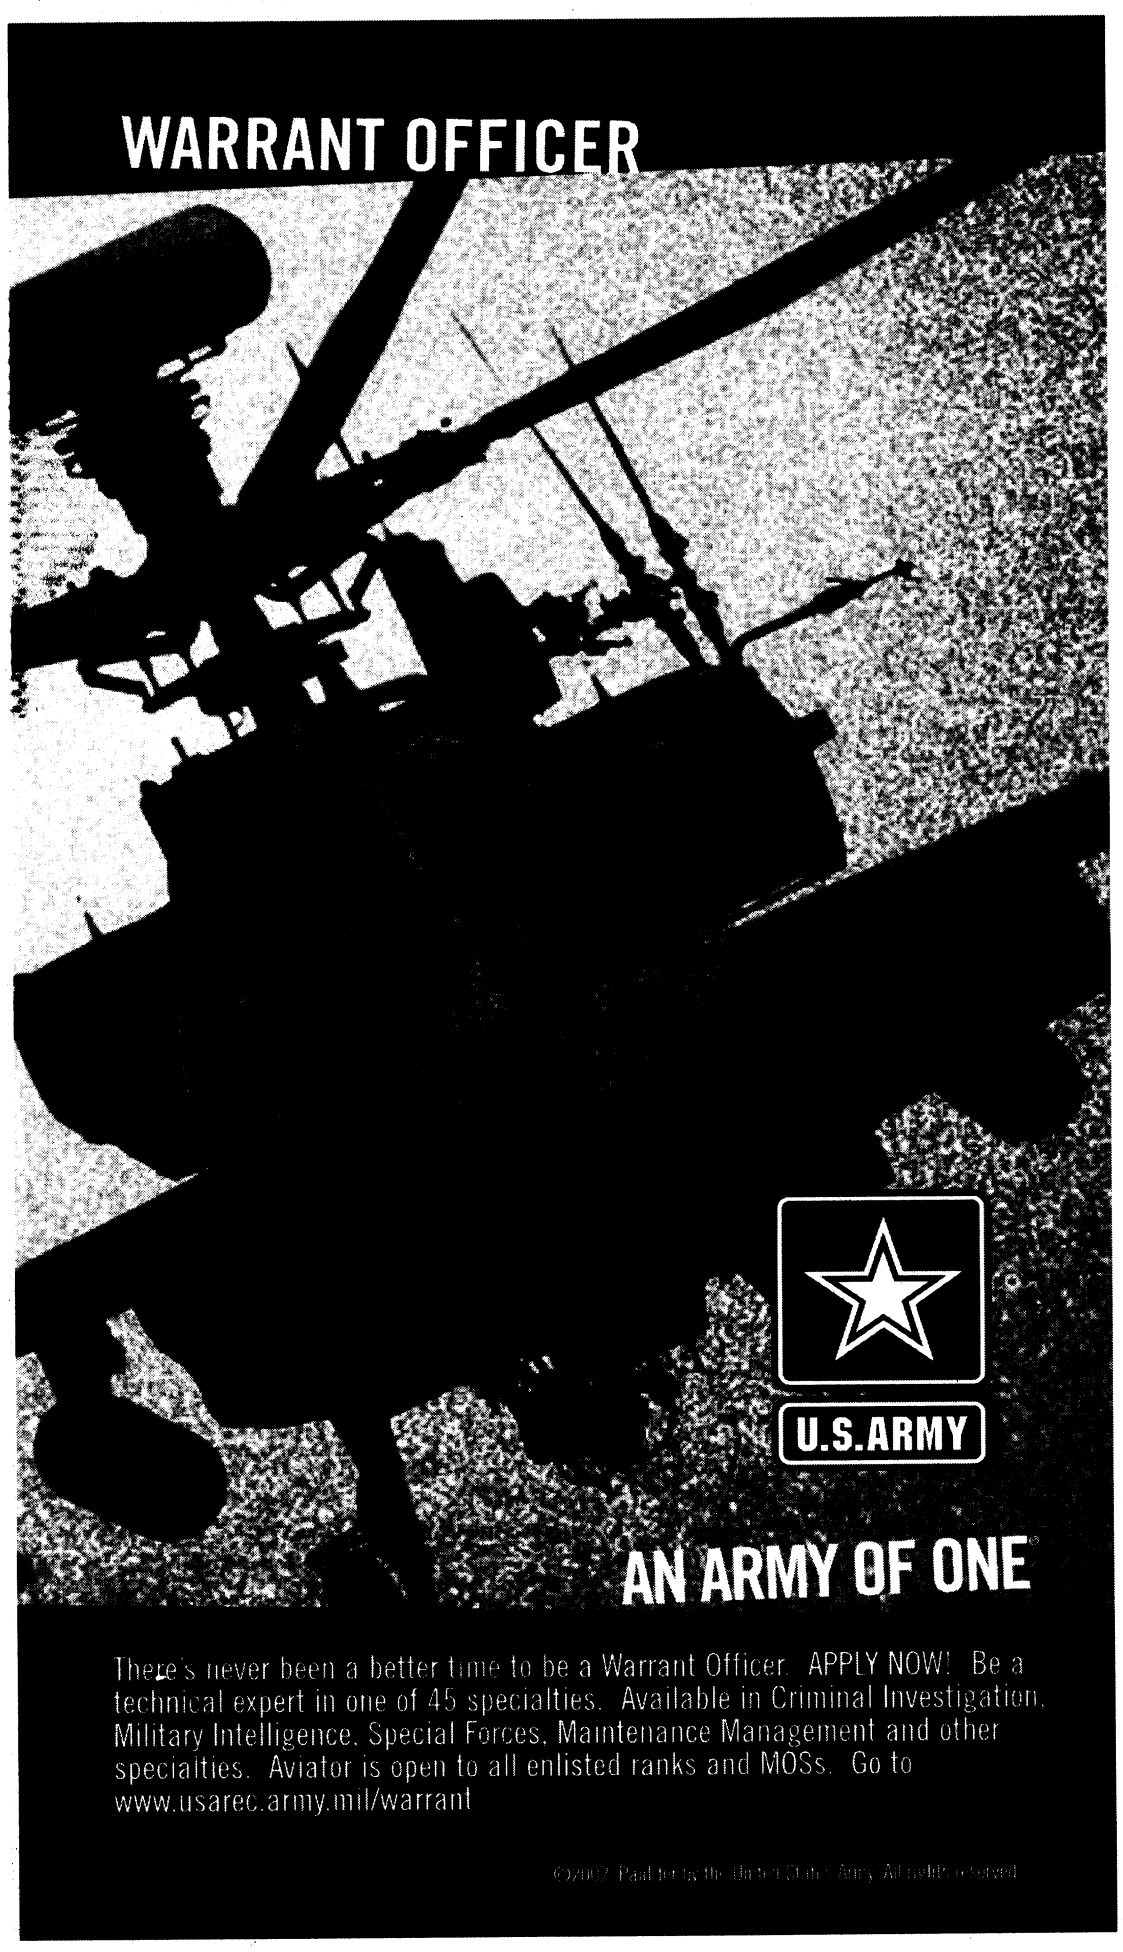
In a general court-martial Dec. 8, a first lieutenant was convicted of two felony charges of committing indecent acts upon two minors.



1st Lt. Jason J. Burkos, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was sentenced by Judge Richard Gordon to 24 months confinement, forfeiture of $1,500 a month for 24 months and dismissal from the Army.

The minors, both boys, were 12 years old at the time the offenses occurred between December 2002 and January 2003.

The boys were not related to each other or to Burkos. One of them lived in the same apartment complex as Burkos, who apparently had a habitual relationship with the boy, said Maj. Joshua Shuey, chief of criminal law with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Shuey said this case is unusual because cases of this nature almost always involve nonblood-related family members like stepchildren.

Because the offenses occurred off-post, Burkos was originally indicted by the Columbus District Attorney after grand jury proceedings concluded there was enough evidence to support the charges. The trial was continued several times because of difficulty procuring witnesses, many of whom were deployed. The state eventually turned the case over to the Army.

CROWS: System boosts gunner accuracy to 98 percent in the Army's urban battlefield, said Jones.

The heavy thermal weapon sights surpass conventional sights and exponentially increase the survivability and surveillance capabilities of vehicles equipped with the system, he said.

"During the first night we arrived at Al-Karama, the thermal sights couldn't have been more effective," said Sgt. James Reid, 410th Military Police Company, in one of his unit's AARs of the CROWS battle performance. "We were able to spot insurgents and vehicles at a greater distance than the other Soldiers with PVS-7Bs. In one engagement, a Jeep came out around 1,000 meters away and had an insurgent armed with an RPG in the back which no one else could see but our two CROWS. The threats were then neutralized."

The CROWS is capable of conducting detailed, high-resolution surveillance operations from several kilometers away — a valuable tool for coalition forces on the ground in Iraq, Jones said. Their efforts to identify the enemy and prevent the use of IEDs has been hampered by urban surveillance capabilities until now.

While conducting the initial combat assessment in February, Jones deployed two CROWS teams along a main supply route that had been plagued by IEDs.

"Using the enhanced night capabilities, the CROWS systems were able to observe the route at key areas of interest without being detected by threat personnel," he said. "As a direct result of this mission, no IEDs were found or encountered along the route for several days. The CROWS system proved to be an extremely effective tool in preventing and deterring the enemy's activities against coalition forces."

This surveillance capability rounds out a package of assets well-designed to protect mounted gunners and maximize their potential as weapons in an urban environment.

The CROWS' evolution from an idea to protect turret gunners to a full-spectrum combat multiplier is one Jones said could help turn the tide on the Iraqi front.

"This is going to change the way we fight the war," he said. "If we can get all these units on the ground, it will change the ways commanders can employ their units to engage the enemy."

Assisting in the development of the CROWS is one of several tasks in keeping with DCD's mission to support Soldiers.

"The mission of DCD is to write requirements and ensure Soldier needs are met," said Maj. Glenn Dean, chief of the Small Arms Division. "Soldier input through the chain of command and surveys will ensure the Soldiers have what they need to fight and win. Other programs in development include a new weapons family and unmanned aerial vehicles like the Raven.

"When we find technologies, like the CROWS, that provide a dramatic increase in capability, we try to put it in Soldiers' hands as quickly as possible."

Taxes: Soldiers receive free tax filing

training from the Internal Revenue Service on federal tax preparation and will receive specific training on state tax preparation from the Georgia and Alabama State Revenue Services Department," Morales said.

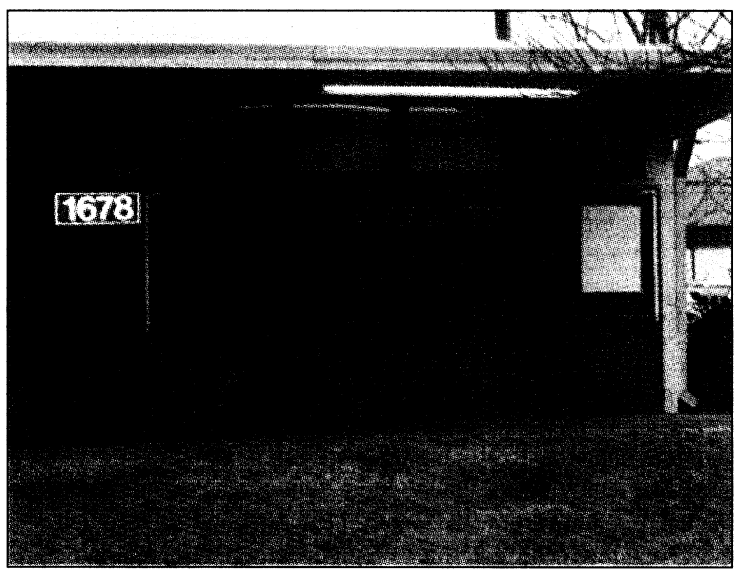
The Tax Center is composed of Soldiers, civilian volunteers and a few hired civilians. The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate oversees the Tax Center and sent out the notices to all the units on Fort Benning seeking volunteers to work at the center, said Staff Sgt. Cecile Morgan-Green, Tax Center NCOIC.

"The Soldiers are all highly trained and ready," Morgan-Green said. "If we don't know something, we won't lie to you. We'll tell you we don't know, but we will help you find out the answer."

The Tax Center is part of the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance, a program provided by the IRS which gives the Tax Center staff a direct line to the IRS to find answers to customers' specific needs.

Aside from VITA, the Tax Center uses the IRSs Tax Wise Program.

For Soldiers who prefer e-filing, the Tax Center offers that option.



Customers must bring the following documents to the Tax Center:

- Active duty, retiree, or dependent ID card,
- W-2 Forms, 1098's, or1099's
- Social security card for dependents and individual filing
- Last year's tax return paperwork
- If a spouse or designated agent is doing the taxes for a deployed Soldier he or she needs a power of attorney authorizing the spouse or designated agent to file taxes on their behalf.
- If child care is paid, obtain a receipt from the child-care provider along with their social security number
- Deployed single Soldiers may leave someone a power of attorney to have them file their taxes while they are gone. The Soldier's bank account information is needed so the return can be deposited directly into the account.

"When Soldiers deploy the April 15 deadline is suspended until the Soldiers return," Morales said. "Once they return they have 180 days to file their taxes."

Appointments aren't necessary to visit the Tax Center, located in Building 1678 on Ingersoll Avenue across the street from the Wynnsong movie theater and behind the new post chapel construction site. Parking is located on the lot next to the construction site.

For hours of operation or more information, call 545-4267.

The Fort Benning Tax Center will open Jan. 18. Soldiers, dependents and retirees qualify for the free tax service. All customers will be seen on a walk in basis. The center is located on Ingersoll Avenue behind the new chapel construction site.

Deaf mechanic honored by mayor

The moment Timothy Malaby saw the information sheet, he knew who he needed to nominate for the Mayor's Committee for Persons with Disabilities Employee of the Year — David Keeter.

"For me he is one of the most interesting people you could ever meet," said Malaby, ITT Industries equipment repair supervisor.

Keeter, who has been deaf since birth, was hired two years ago as a heavy equipment mechanic and moved up to lead mechanic three months ago.

"I'd never worked with anyone like him before, and I had reservations," Malaby said. "He's done an outstanding job for us. He's very popular here, and the guys who work for him really enjoy it. He is very effective in getting work done."

Keeter, who communicates with a notepad and pen, has been a mechanic for 24 years. He has worked with civil service and was named Employee with Disabilities of the Year in the1980s.

"I'm not sure what it was, according to Mr. Malaby, (that made me) stand out," Keeter said. "My guess is that I have been reliable and thorough in my work. I give more than one hundred percent at my job. I have always been told to help other mechanics, so I guess my ability to troubleshoot and show my co-workers 'my bag of tricks' helped."

Only a few adjustments have had to be made to accommodate Keeter's disability, Malaby said. Another deaf man works at the shop, so ITT hires a sign language interpreter for their annual benefit briefing. They also installed fire alarms with flashing lights.

If an employer is looking at hiring a person with disabilities, both Malaby and Keeter say to go for it.

"If the person has the qualifications and experience needed for the position, instead of simply 'Why should I hire someone with a disability?' I would say, 'Why not?'Keeter said. "The employers may benefit from a good-working, loyal and reliable employee."

Never accepting the words "can't" or "no" from anyone, even themselves, is advice Keeter gives to anyone with a disability.

"They probably get those words more often than those who do not have disabilities," Keeter said. "They need to believe they can do things as well if not better than others."

Keeter received a plaque Dec. 2 at a ceremony hosted by Bob Poydasheff, Columbus mayor, and Gail McKoon, executive director of the Columbus Consolidated Government Individual with Disabilities Program.

CID employee retires after 37 years at Fort Benning

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

When Harris County Sheriff and ex-CID agent Mike Jolly asked his old friend, Sinnie Borel, over lunch what she was thinking when she decided to retire, she said, "Well, what do you think I'm gonna do? Die behind my desk?"

Born in the old post hospital that now houses the National Infantry Museum, Borel grew up a military brat in Columbus and went to work for the Adjutant General right after high school. She was almost a permanent fixture on post until she made the decision to step down and move on with her life.

"I gave it a lot of thought," she said. "I have a friend who has retired and she said the money is about the same and I figured, 'why keep working then?'"

So after 37 years of working for the Army, Borel decided to call it quits Dec. 17. And the walls of the Fort Benning Criminal Investigative Division office where she has worked for 35 of those 37 years didn't come crashing down.

"They thought that place would fall apart if I left, " Borel said. "They didn't want me to leave because I've been there so long, but you have to have a life after CID."

Not that she didn't love her job. She said she has 35 years of great memories with agents who, because of the nature of their job, ended up feeling more like family than Soldiers she happened to work with.

"That's really the only thing I think I'll miss — the people," she said. "It's been a lot of fun. I've met some really great people in CID. I can't see myself wanting to work with anybody else."

And her coworkers feel the same. They have come to depend on Borel as the permanent anchor on an ever-changing team.

"Sinnie is the type of person who makes you look forward to coming to work," said Special Agent Mark Jackson, 86th Military Police Detachment (CID). "Even in CID, in an environment like this where the most horrible things end up as your cases.

"She always had a smile. She was the one to keep you grounded and remind you of what's important and that's what I think will be acutely missed without her here."

So countless bosses and coworkers later, thousands upon thousands of criminal cases later, Borel has a pension, a letter from the president and a coin from the post commanding general for her almost four decades of service.

But more importantly, she has cups. Cups that agents have brought to her from all the different duty stations, cities and countries they visit in the course of their jobs. Cups that will fill a room in her home and remind her of the friends she made and good times she had over the years.

But Borel is just like most people looking back on their lives — there are down times too.

She can remember having to help the casualty assistance office from time to time during the Vietnam War. Typing letters to the loved ones of Soldiers killed in action still affects her today.

"It's the saddest thing when you are working, just doing what you have to do and you come across a name you know," she said. "There were a few of those."

But dwelling on the past isn't something Borel said she is likely to get overly caught up in. The 55-year-old has plenty of other endeavors to fill the days of her life now that she's on her own.

A mother to three and grandmother to four, Borel said time with her family will become one of many luxuries she plans on enjoying.

"My sister is about to retire and we recently got back into crafting and quilting, so we'll have plenty of time to do that," she said.

"And I would love to travel, so I don't see myself getting bored. It's going to be nice to not have to worry about traffic, getting up early and getting to work on time. I don't think I'll ever get tired of not having to do anything."

Hotline succeeding in foiling Iraqi insurgents

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Leads generated through a hotline to report insurgent activity in Iraq demonstrate that the Iraqi people want to bring an end to the violence against innocent civilians and critical infrastructure, a top officer in the Army's 1st Cavalry Division told reporters in Baghdad Dec. 28.

Brig. Gen. Jeffrey W. Hammond, the division's assistant commander for support, said the tips hotline received more than 400 calls during the past few months. These tips enabled the coalition to take prompt action — from freeing several women who had been kidnapped for ransom, to identifying and destroying vehicle-borne improvised explosive devices which were rigged and ready to explode.

Billboards throughout Baghdad promote the hotline as a way for the Iraqi people to "fight the war in secret" without fear of reprisal, Hammond said. Because of a campaign of intimidation aimed at Iraqis who are helping to move their country forward, "people were virtually paralyzed to reach out for help," he said. Now, thanks to the hotline campaign, "people today are picking up the phone and calling us. They are sharing information," the general said.

Hammond said the hotline and its success has "hit a nerve with the insurgents" who regularly vandalize billboards promoting the campaign.

But Hammond said the 200 billboards around Iraq are replaced as quickly as they're destroyed.

He called the enemy "a selfish minority" using practices that "have no connection whatsoever to the Islam religion" and no interest in "the short- or long-term needs of the Iraqi people."

In Baghdad, Hammond said, the enemy is a mix of foreign fighters, former regime elements, religious extremists and criminals who "are trying to impede progress by attacking critical infrastructure and civilians."

Hammond said their tactics — murdering civilians simply "for doing what's right for the people of Iraq" and attacking electrical towers, hospitals and other infrastructure — are part of a plan to instill fear and gain power."

Former Vice CSA speaks about Iraq, Soldiers' role

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The Combat Arms and Tactics Directorate continued its Combat Leader Speaker Program Dec. 15 with a lecture by retired Gen. John Keane, a former vice chief of staff of the Army.

Post commander Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, introduced Keane to the Soldiers and civilians in Marshall Auditorium.

"No one has been more engaged in fighting the enemy than he," Freakley said. "He spent a great deal of time taking the post-Vietnam Army and transforming it into the fighting force it is today."

Keane told the Soldiers he would talk about two things — the war in Iraq and their role in it.

Today's war, he said, is similar to what happened to him when he was younger. Keane led troops of the 101st Airborne Division in Vietnam.

"That has stayed with us a long time," he said, "and now is a most dangerous and critical period. This war will define the 21st century."

Keane told the Soldiers he expected them to still be fighting this war at the end of their careers, because we are fundamentally fighting a clash of values and ideas, not battling for land.

"This political movement, with political ideology, is rooted in one of the great religions of the world," he said.

Keane said the fight against terrorism will be much like the 70-year struggle against communism. In the end, he said communism was "finally beat with a better idea."

"We tried to contain communism," Keane said, "and to do that we had to fight in two wars in Korea and Vietnam."

Keane said this is much more critical and serious because the enemy believes they can win — not by defeating the military, but by defeating the American people.

"They are opposed to universal suffrage, the separation of church and state and democracy because it protects the rights of the minority and the rights of individuals," Keane said.

"And when they attacked, they believed we lacked character, and we gave them plenty of reason to think that."

Keane said our lack of response to bombings at the Marine barracks, the embassy and the USS Cole gave them that idea, so they designed an operation that would separate Americans from their leadership and the financial center of the country.

"It was a brilliant tactical move," he said, "but a strategic failure. Their ignorance of us is their undoing."

The American response, designed to break our opponents will, he said, is a huge success. He cited the recent democratic elections in a country the former Soviet Union failed to dominate as proof of our success.

"The operation in Iraq was a brilliant and bold plan," Keane said, "because combat power is more than a rationalization of ships, Soldiers and tanks. It's leadership, skill and the will of Soldiers.

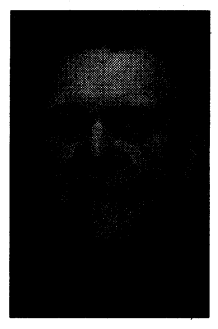
"We're either combat leaders or aspiring to be," he told the audience, and challenged the Soldiers to spend time reading and talking to people who know more than they do.

"Fighting an insurgency is the toughest form of warfare," he said, "and the last time we fought an insurgency, we lost.

"You need to work your share of the 'intellectual' capital. Your skills are critical, so work on the skills you're lacking."

Drawing on his own combat experience, he said the Soldiers needed to be in top physical condition in order to get through long days and learn to counter any tendencies to micromanage their subordinates.

He told them courage on the battlefield "won't just show up," and to make sure they have moral courage as they walk through daily life.



"And you never get so senior that you can't afford to share in the dangers of those you lead," Keane said. "Courage is an expectation. It will be there when you need it as long as you know you need it."

Keane said he felt it is not too much to ask that the leaders dedicate their professional lives to their Soldiers.

"War is personal, frequently terrifying and often brutal. Death is silent and full of horror," he said. "You are willing to die. That's what separates you from others. And Soldiers continually demonstrate they are willing to give up everything ... for one another. It's a simple yet profound sense of duty. The American people will always be in your debt for that honor.

"I came to talk, to share thoughts, but also to pay my respect," Keane said. "You have had or will have the honor of leading Soldiers in combat. What you do is so important."

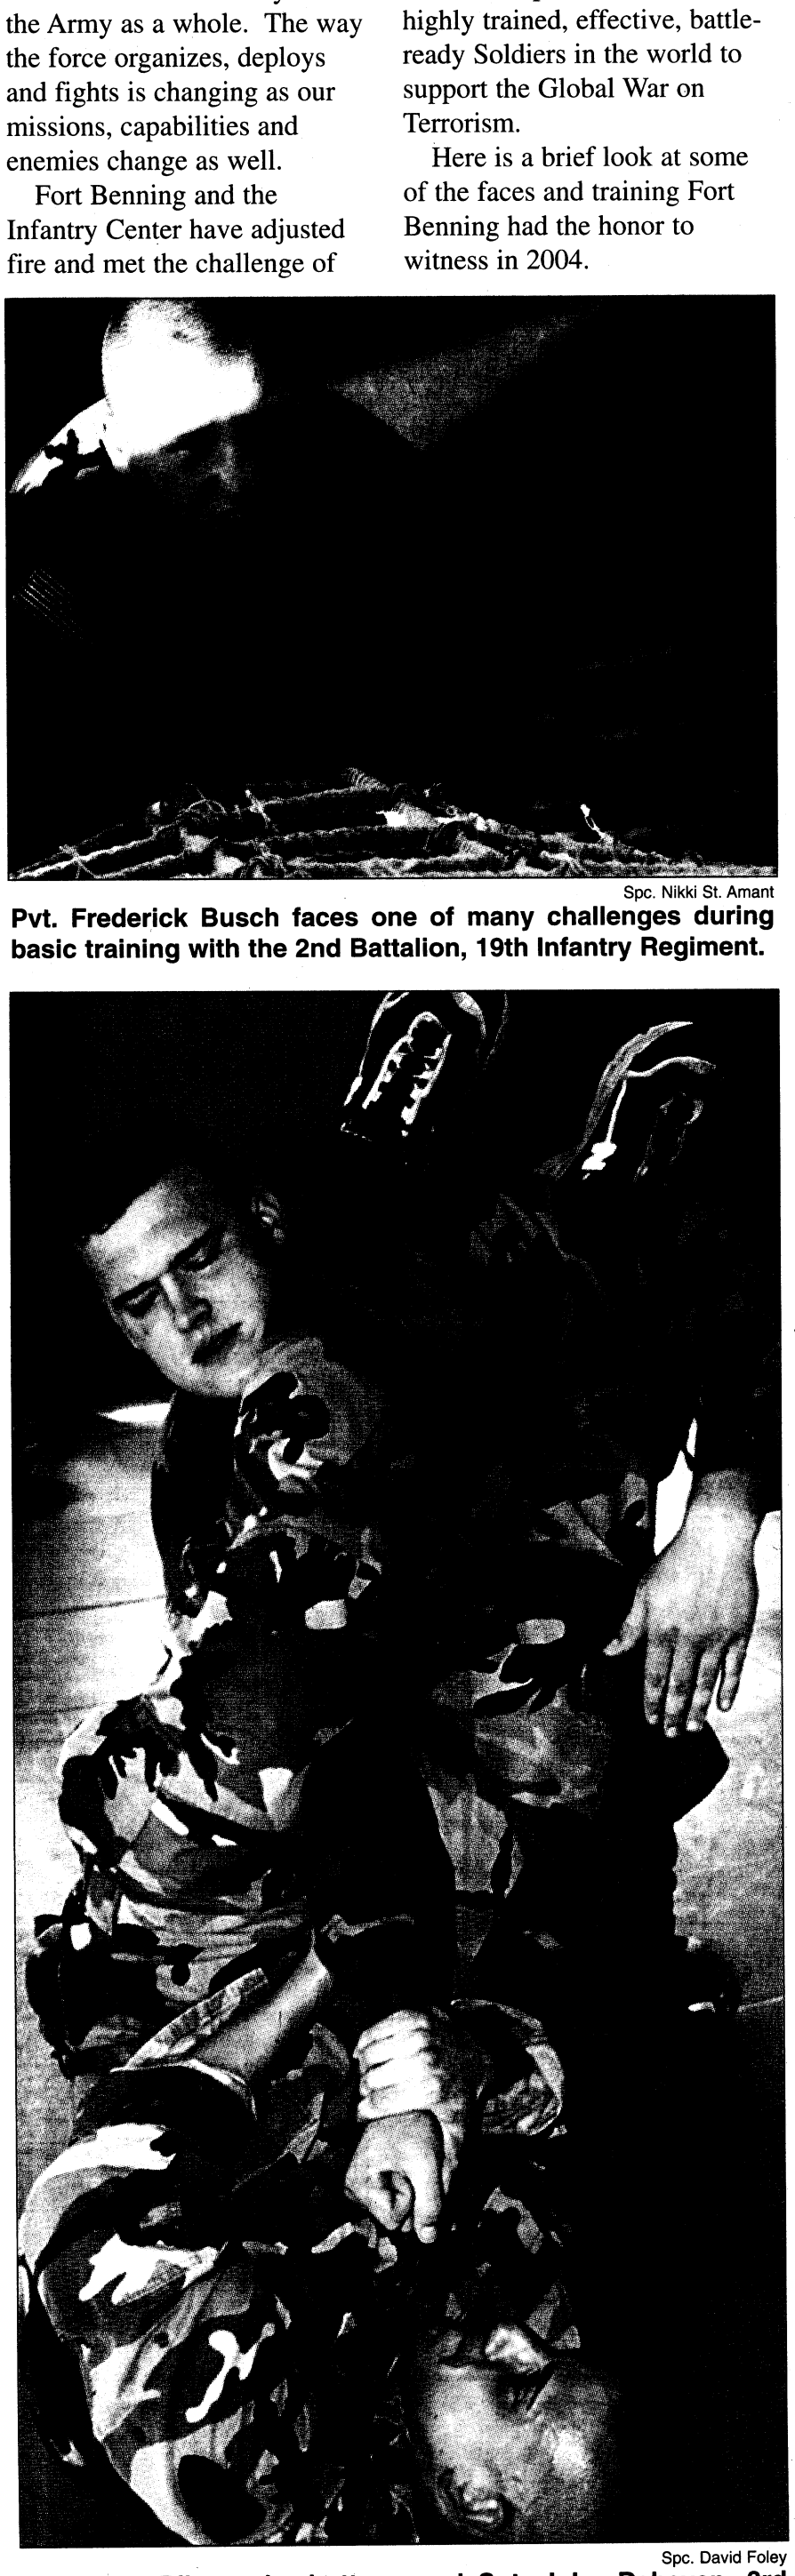
2004 In Review

This past year was a time of transformation for the Infantry and the Army as a whole. The way the force organizes, deploys and fights is changing as our missions, capabilities and enemies change as well.



Fort Benning and the Infantry Center have adjusted fire and met the challenge of transformation even as it adapts its schools, courses and doctrine to produce the most highly trained, effective, battle-ready Soldiers in the world to support the Global War on Terrorism.

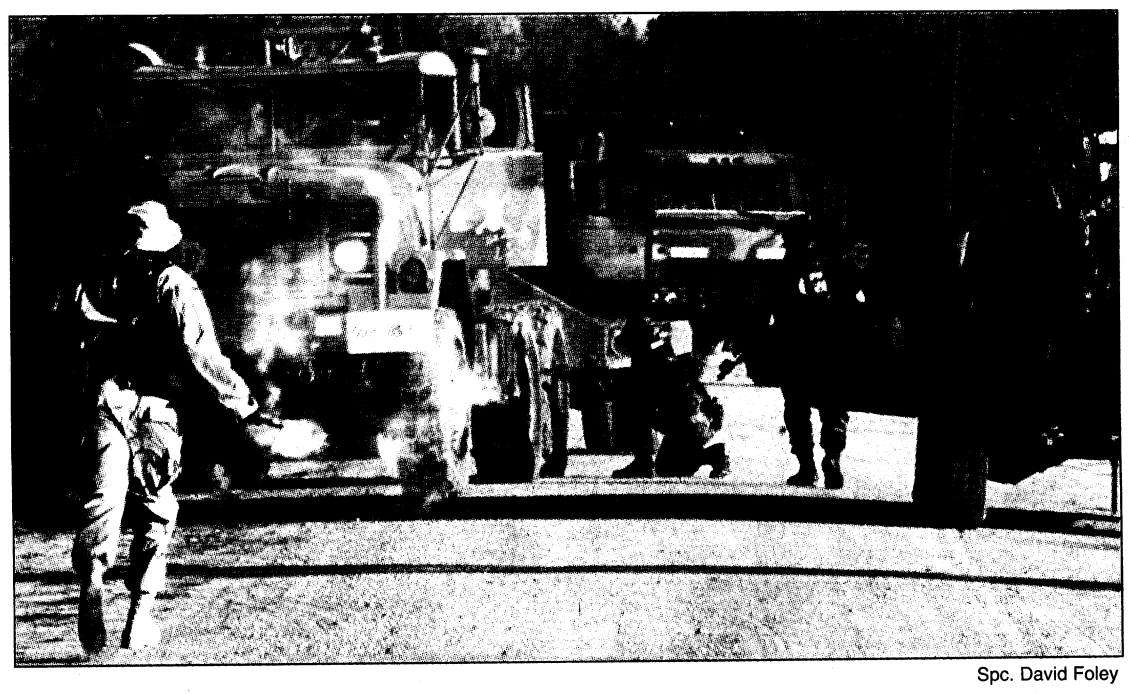
Here is a brief look at some of the faces and training Fort Benning had the honor to witness in 2004.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Pvt. Frederick Busch faces one of many challenges during basic training with the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

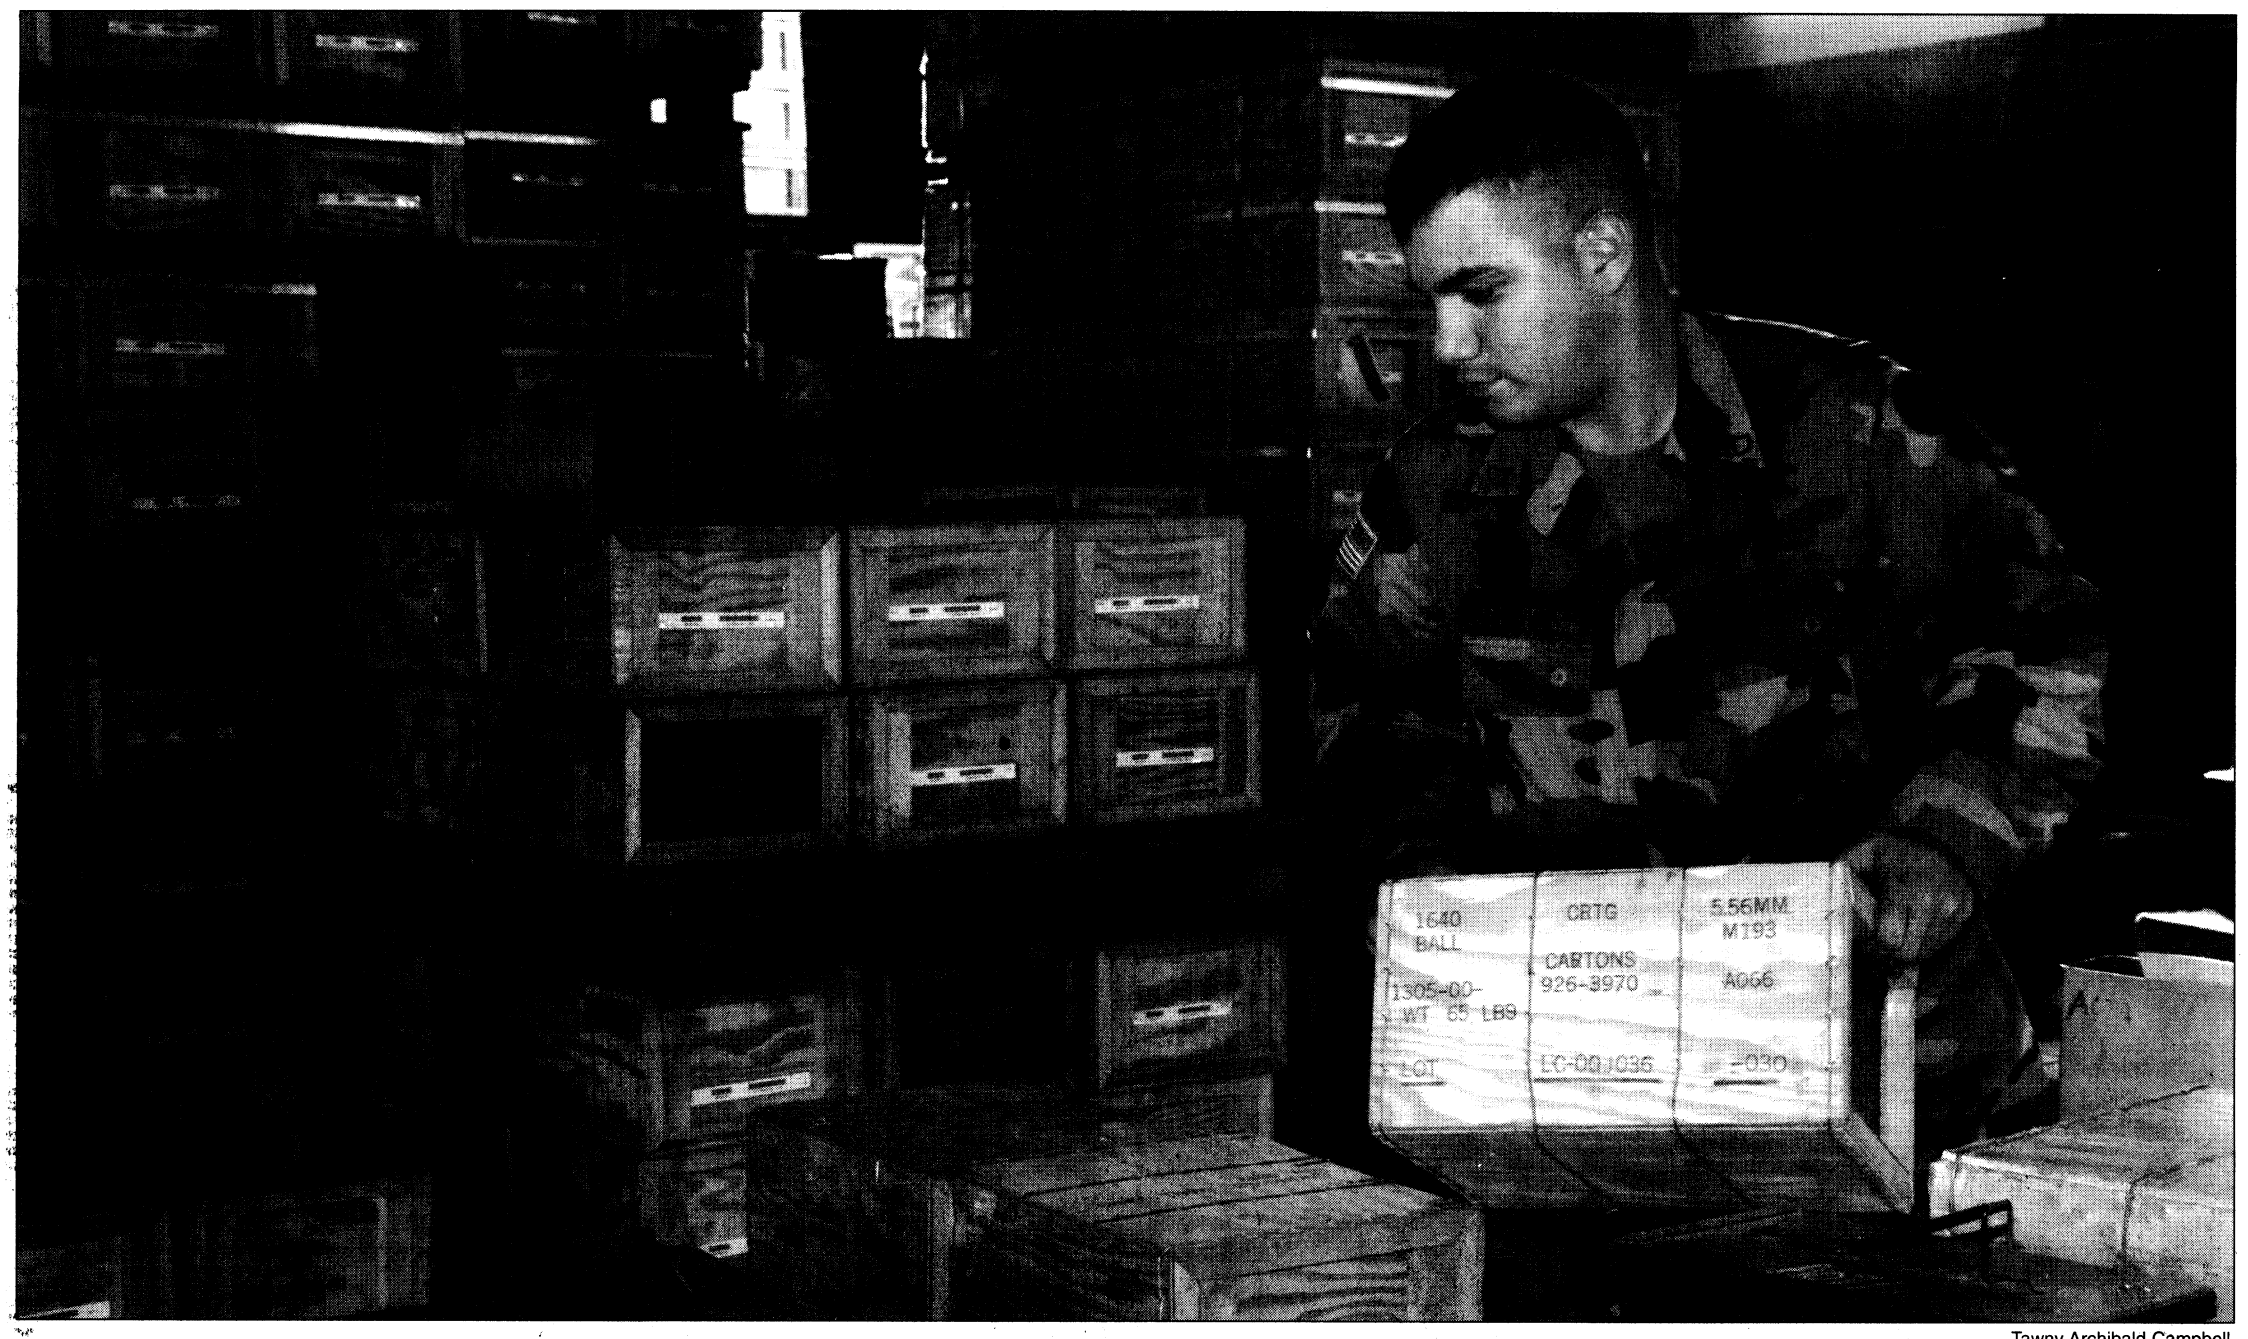
Spc. David Foley

Pfc. Marc Dibernado, bottom, and Sgt. John Dehaven, 3rd Brigade, get combatives training developed from feedback provided by Soldiers deployed in Iraq and Afghanistan.



Spc. Eliamar Castañon

Pvt. Rafael Castro exits the 34-foot tower on Mann Field during the first phase of airborne training. Students have to complete four consecutive exits to standard or they are failed.



Spc. David Foley

Pvt. Brian Wick, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, tries to float his way across an obstacle at the Leader Reaction Course during basic training. Those who failed watch his efforts.

Spc. David Foley

Being responsible for more than 1 billion rounds of ammunition is a big job, but it's all in a day's work for 89B, ammunition specialists.

The ammo specialists of the 608th Ordnance Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion are responsible for all munitions at Fort Benning's Ammunition Supply Point.

With only three ASPs in the United States, their work and training is in high demand, said Staff Sgt. Quentin Moore, operations sergeant at ASP.

"We store, upkeep, package, ship, issue, receive, inventory and inspect every single round," Moore said. "We deal with 700 to one billion rounds per magazine, or bunker, depending on the ammunition size."

Pfc. Federico Vasquez joined the Army two years ago hoping to see the world.

"I was always interested in guns and ammunition, and you can learn a lot about ammunition in this field," Vasquez said. "I wanted to be in the Army in part because there's so much honor in it, and I could do something for my country.

"I watch TV and there are so many people oppressed with no freedom. I wanted to preserve ours."

After four months of training at Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Ala., the ammunition specialists learned to identify the different types of ammunition, read lot numbers, condition codes and ammunition classifications, operate a folk lift, fill out paperwork and use special computer programs.

> "You can go a week without food and days without water, but in combat, you can't go a day without ammunition."

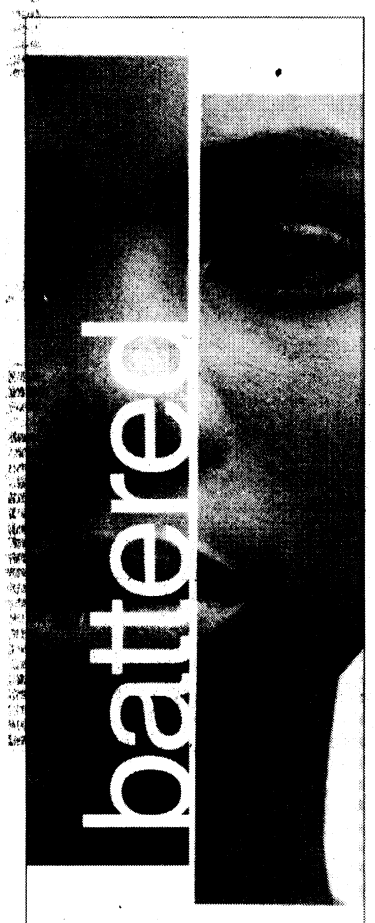
"AIT was a cram session where they throw everything at you and hope some of it sticks," Vasquez said. "We learned about artillery, small arms, explosives, riot control and smoke grenades.

"This job is real easy, but it isn't for everyone. There are a lot of things to remember. And you will definitely work," he said.

While deployed with his unit to Iraq, Vasquez realized just how important his job was.

"We are a very high priority in the military. You can go a week without food and days with out water, but in combat, you can't go a minute without ammunition," he said. "A unit has to have an ammo dog, whether it's an 89B or someone assigned as a detail.

"Someone has to know something about ammunition, because you can't just put a hand grenade in a grenade launcher."



Vasquez said 89Bs use a lot of math, memorization, organizational, people and communication skills.

"A lot of it is hands on," he said. "Ammo is a good field. It's easy, and for the most part, it's a 'nine to five' job."

Pfc. Mona Thomas was excited about joining the Army and wanted to be in an MOS where she could work with ammunition and be out in the field.

"We help Soldier's train by supplying them with their ammunition needs, so they can get ready for war," Thomas said.

"We help people. That's what I enlisted for four more years. I really enjoy it, and there is still a lot more to learn."

COMMUNITY

Annette Fournier

Pfc. Ricardo and Jasmine Castilleja became the proud parents of Lucian at 2:41 a.m. Jan. 1 in Martin Army Community Hospital. Lucian was the first baby of the new year born in the Chattahoochee Valley.

Oh Boy!

Benning boasts Baby New Year

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Jasmine and Pfc. Ricardo Castilleja looked tired but happy as the first-time mom and dad held their baby boy, Lucian, at Martin Army Community Hospital Monday morning.

After 12 hours of labor, Lucian made his appearance at 2:41 a.m. Saturday, making him the first baby born in 2005 in the Chattahoochee Valley. He weighed 6 pounds, 8 ounces.

Ricardo was at Fort Benning for Basic Combat Training, but is now stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky. When he moved, Jasmine stayed with her parents, so they could help her during the pregnancy and she could continue classes at Columbus State University.

Jasmine and her mother, Hart Navarro, were shopping in Wal-Mart when the labor started. Ricardo headed straight to Fort Benning when he heard the news. He arrived at the hospital at 10:30 p.m., in time to join other family members to support Jasmine during Lucian's birth.

"When he was born, I just started crying with joy," the new mom said. "He's going to be our pride and joy."

Navarro is excited about the birth of her first grandchild.

"I'm so happy to have such a beautiful grandson. Jasmine was so strong through this, and I'm proud of her."

Col. Donald M. Bradshaw, MEDDAC commander, and Maj. Joyce Cowan, head nurse of Labor and Delivery, presented the family two gift baskets of baby supplies.

"It's exciting and fun to have the first baby of the year born here," Bradshaw said. "It's a great way to start the new year."

Yellow Ribbon Room connects families

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It may not look like home sweet home, but the 36th Engineer Group's Yellow Ribbon Room has all the creature comforts.

The room, formally opened in a ceremony Dec. 30 in the unit's headquarters building, offers a meeting place for spouses and 24-hour Internet access and e-mail capability. It also boasts a comfortable couch, television, refrigerator, microwave and a place for young children to play.

Col. Jim Brooks, the 36th's commander, created a similar room when he was a battalion commander at Fort Drum, N.Y. His unit spent a year in the Balkans and he found the idea had merit.

Although most of the Soldiers and families have computers at home, Brooks said the room will be good for those who don't. And he hopes to be able to have a video link sometime in the future.

Brooks approached Steve Hesler, the president of the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, for help getting the idea for the room off the ground.

As a result, the 36th's Yellow Ribbon Room became the first of eight such rooms around post to be formally dedicated. The remainder of the 12 computers Hesler was able to get will be set up in similar rooms at each of 3rd Brigade's five battalions and for the families of the more than 70 deployed MEDDAC Soldiers.

"AUSA is a good bridge from the community to the military," Hesler said. "People from Alabama and Georgia always call me to find out how they can help."

So he told them AUSA wanted to buy refrigerators, microwaves and printers.

Hesler's in touch with what's going on at Fort Benning, and he turned being at the right place at the right time into a windfall for the Yellow Ribbon Rooms. The day after he spoke with Brooks, he saw computers headed for the property disposal office.

Those computers, said Col. Don Sando, chief of TRADOC System Manager Stryker-Bradley, came from a coordination cell at Fort Lewis, Wash., that moved here to work for Sando.

"We got all their office equipment," Sando said, "and a lot of it was excess."

The 50-person cell was reduced to nine. Hesler knew it would be easy for the Army to give the computers to a private organization like AUSA and he snapped them up.

At the time the room was dedicated, Brooks said about 500 of his Soldiers were already deployed and two more companies were scheduled to leave in early January. Several spouses had already used the room, as evidenced by the yellow ribbons bearing their names attached to the board by the door.

"I expect it will become heavily used as the deployment goes on," he said. "It's intended to be operational twenty-four hours, seven days a week so any family member has access at any time."

Family Readiness assistant site manager Evelyn Livermore said she's proud of the room and will be working to get the word out to the spouses that it is available. She's been at the 36th full-time since July and said the job is paying off.

"You can tell Soldiers are gone," she said. "Spouses are calling more, needing help and info and advice."

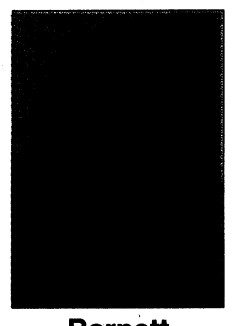
And from the perspective of a military spouse, she said she's glad the room is up and running providing a comfortable place where spouses and children can come use the computers at their convenience.

"We want to make sure everyone is taken care of," she said.

AFAP delegates share experiences from DoD meeting

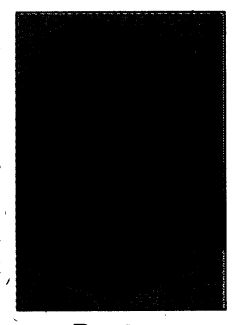
Melissa House
Bayonet staff

They got involved for different reasons, but in the end, April Barnett and Cynthia Payton found themselves in Washington, D.C., representing Fort Benning at the Department of the Army's Army Family Action Plan conference.



The conference, the AFAP Super Bowl of sorts, was the culmination of a year's worth of information and issues discussed at AFAP symposiums around the world. More than 125 delegates met to narrow more than 100 issues down to the five most important under the theme "Setting Standards of Living for an Expeditionary Army."

Barnett, a military spouse for the past five years, first became involved with AFAP in Baumholder, Germany. She said she walked off the plane and into the Army Community Services office to find out where she could volunteer.



"They were planning their February AFAP conference," Barnett said, "but I didn't even know what it was at that point."

After a year, she took a paid position with ACS, and before she left Germany, she was the installation volunteer coordinator. So, when she moved to Fort Benning, she again walked in to volunteer.

"AFAP is an ongoing thing," she said. "It's not just once a year. It's a grassroots program and a lot of people don't know about it. It's amazing when you look at what's come out of AFAP. The end results affect our families."

Barnett

Payton

At the DoD conference, Barnett was assigned to one of two working groups talking through a number of child-care issues.

"Since I don't have children, it was a learning experience," she said. "I knew child care was an issue, and we got to hear about it from the Reserve and National Guard side and from spouses not near military installations."

The group narrowed their list of 13 issues to five, and then two.

"We had to look at it from the perspective of what is going to affect the Army in the big scheme of things," she said. Her group decided on child-care fees and expansion of Army-sponsored

Rangers receive Medal of Honor

Family of Vietnam vet donates medal

The Ranger Training Brigade received a rare gift Dec. 30. The family of Staff Sgt. Robert Pruden, for whom the brigade's headquarters is named, presented Pruden's Medal of Honor to the brigade, quite possibly making it the only Army unit to have possession of the military's highest honor.

Marlys and Larry Pruden traveled from their home in Minnesota, accompanied by 10 of their children, their children's spouses and grandchildren, to deliver the medal awarded posthumously to their second son for heroism in Vietnam.

The couple and their 12 surviving children, received the award from President Nixon in 1971 during a ceremony in Washington, D.C. They hung it on the wall next to a picture of their son, and there it stayed more than a quarter of a century.

"We're getting up in years," said Marlys, who at 76, still bears a remarkable resemblance to the picture of Robert at 18. "We have so many children — who would it go to? He trained here. This is where it belongs."

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. If I am legally separated, am I still married or not?

A: There are only two possible married statuses: married and unmarried.

An unmarried individual may be single, divorced or widowed. In rare cases, people who were married can receive an annulment, which sets aside the marriage as if it never existed.

To answer the question then, parties who are legally separated are still married. Does it matter if they have a signed, notarized separation agreement?

No; they are still married.

What if they haven't lived together or even seen each other in years?

It doesn't matter; they are still married.

Many Soldiers and dependents think if they get a separation agreement from "JAG," it will be as good as a divorce. A separation agreement can be used as part of the paperwork submitted to the court to obtain a divorce, but a separation agreement by itself is not a divorce.

State court action is required to obtain a divorce, and there are no exceptions.

The Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division offers weekly family law briefings to discuss this and other legal aspects of domestic relations.

Fort Benning youth in the news

Faith Middle School's Lisa Madler asked her seventh-graders to describe the strangest homework assignment they were ever given. Here are a few of their responses:

Baby, this half-baked flour assignment is strange

Homework redefines 'flour power'

Jackie Bradford
Faith Middle School

What was the strangest homework assignment I was ever given? We each had to bring a bag of flour to class.

The flour sacks were to become our "babies." Really.

We tried to make them look like babies. We put yarn on them, dressed them up, colored them — anything and everything imaginable to make them into babies.

The assignment was to treat the bag of flour like it was a real baby — my baby.

If the teacher caught a student without his or her baby, that student was given an automatic "F." Since we couldn't take this risk, we had to keep a baby journal and a log book.

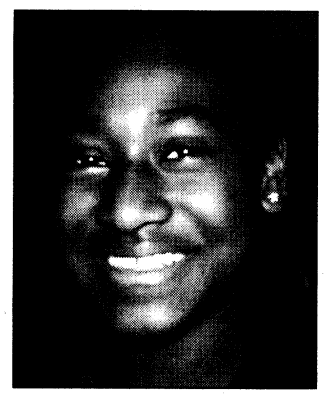
The baby-flour-sack had to be returned to the classroom after one week, and it better not have any punctures, taped tears or other signs of mishap. If there were any signs of abuse, it took away from our final grade.

The next week, we received grades based on what we did right and wrong.

It was too strange.

If we had too many baby-sitters listed in our log books, the teacher determined we neglected our babies.

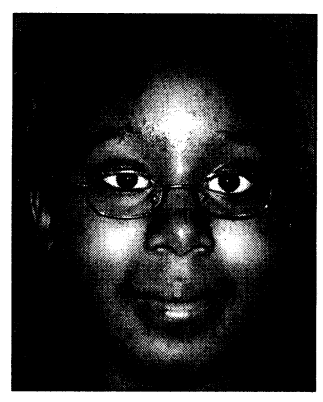
We lost points again.



OK, it really made no sense to me. It was just a big bag of flour under constant supervision.

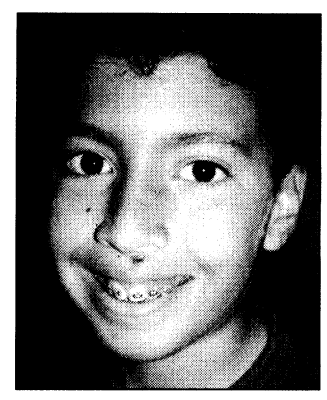
Now, as I'm getting older, I'm starting to understand the purpose of this strange assignment. I see why it was important.

It was meant to let us know there is a lot of hard work in taking care of and being responsible for a baby.



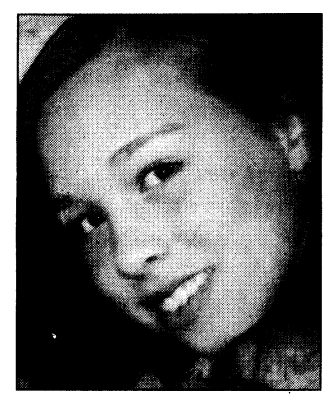
Were any of us ready to take care of children yet?

The answer was a definite NO.



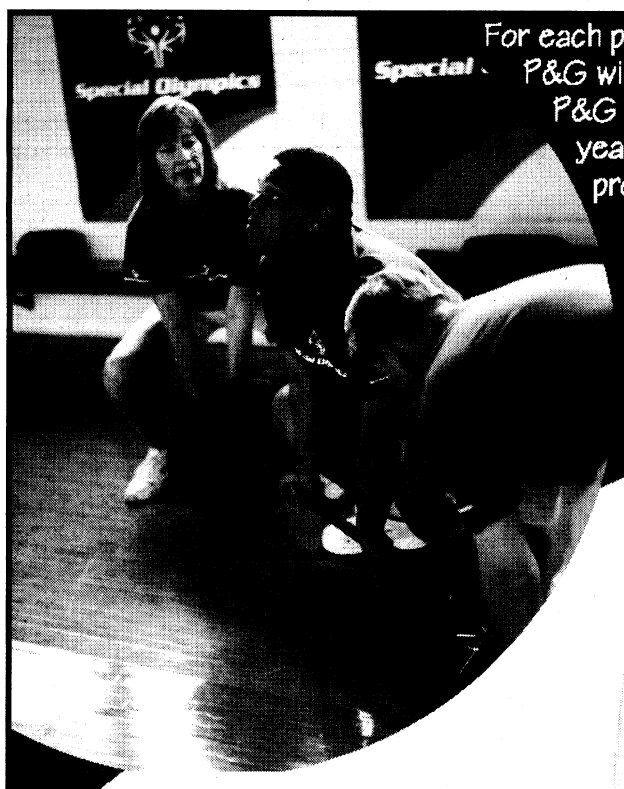
Noelani Conley

"The only homework assignment I think was really strange was given to me when I was in the first grade. We had to put our bare feet in this nasty pudding stuff that was on plates.
Then we had to put our nasty pudding-coated feet on a piece of paper.
When it dried, we took it home and made a dog out of it.
Then, when we came back to school, we had to show them in front of the class and talk about them.
That was the nastiest, smelliest, strangest homework assignment I have ever had in my life."



Ta'keyah Royal

"The strangest homework assignment I ever had was in the sixth grade.
The assignment was from Mrs. Shaw. It was to think about her over the weekend. This was so strange because most teachers have never asked me to do that before.
But then, most teachers aren't like Mrs. Shaw.
She's funny, nice and lots of fun. Her class is the most loving."



Alex Melendez

"The strangest assignment I ever got was when we had to color a hamburger and write what kind of things we would like in it, such as meat, pickles, lettuce, ketchup, mustard, etc. I don't know why we had to do it, we just did.
It had nothing to do with our schoolwork or what we were studying at the time. It was a very random and strange homework assignment. To this day I'm still puzzled by it. Why would I need to know that? How will the assignment benefit me when I grow up? That was without a doubt the weirdest assignment ever."

Ashley Ballesteros

"The strangest assignment I ever had was when we had to look at leaves. In the fourth grade we had to look at the different sizes and shapes of leaves. I remember going outside to get some leaves off the ground and trees. We lived in Washington state, so there were plenty of leaves to chase. The next day we put all the leaves together and each of us picked a leaf. Then we sorted the leaves by shape and color and tried to identify the trees they came from.
Though it was a strange assignment, it was very useful because I learned about the many different types of trees. Sometimes strange assignments are fun and valuable."

AFAP: Makes difference

community-based child-care programs as their top two issues.

"I think they were two of the most difficult issues because they dealt with funding and numbers," she said.

"But we had good DA subject matter and expert support."

All the delegates sat through briefings and a question and answer session with the chief of staff of the Army, saw the newly designed BDUs and were reminded that today's Army is all volunteer.

Payton, a mother of four with 14 years as an Army spouse under her belt, found the conference was a learning experience.

"Most people see things (brought up during AFAP) change at Benning, and that's fine," Payton said.

"It makes things more liveable for you here, but if you can see it at the Army level, it's even better. The Army does care."

Both women said they would love to go back as delegates to the DA conference, but would also like to see other people who are involved in AFAP locally have the opportunity as well.

"It's something to be proud of — to see your issues get to the DA level and get attention," Barnett said. "It's the opportunity to see a cross section of the Army. If you want to know what the Army looks like, that was it."

Given the chance to be a fly on the wall in another meeting, Barnett would have listened in on the employment group — since they discussed things of interest to her, like family member access to the Army's e-learning programs.

Payton said she would have enjoyed herself a little more had she been anywhere but where she was.

Her cross section worked on half of the medical and dental issues.

"We had tough issues that the average person really wouldn't want to tackle," Payton said, "like Tricare referral and abortion."

Her group eventually discussed possible Tricare coverage for pregnancy termination in cases when the fetus has a lethal congenital anomaly.

"I learned new things about Tricare," she said. "Tricare doesn't just cover the Army, so any changes to beneficiary coverage have to go through the Army, the Navy and the Air Force."

At the end of the conference, the delegates voted on the top five issues to be worked at the DA level.

Though Fort Benning's AFAP conference is normally held in the spring, the 2005 event won't take place until fall.

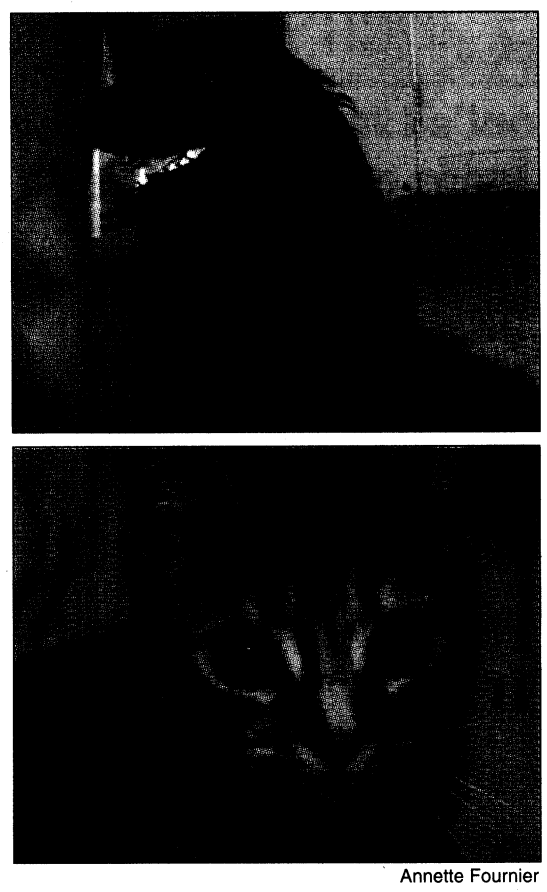
Ngai Province of Vietnam in 1969, when his team came under heavy fire during an ambush mission. Pruden charged the enemy to draw fire away from his men. Twice he was wounded, and twice he got back up. The third shot killed Pruden, but not before he killed several of the enemy, called for evacuation and saved his men.

Pruden's father was not surprised to learn of his son's heroism when a notification officer knocked on his door 35 years ago.

"Even when he was little, he was a leader," Larry said. "He was the boss. That's what we called him. All the kids in the neighborhood wanted to be like him."

This was the third trip to Fort Benning for Marlys and Larry. They attended the dedication of Pruden Hall in 1991 and later a Ranger reunion.



Pruden, who also received Vietnam's highest honor, their equivalent of the Medal of Honor, was preparing to re-enlist when he was killed. He attended Ranger School and the Noncommissioned Officer Indoctrination Course at Fort Benning.

"He said if he was going to fight, he was going in with the best, the (Rangers,)" Larry said.

Pruden is buried at Fort Snelling National Cemetery in Minneapolis. His Medal of Honor will be displayed at Pruden Hall when a display case is built, said Maj. Michael McNally, the brigade's operations officer.

Say farewell to the troops today at 4 p.m. at Doughboy Stadium

Achieve resolutions

Chaplain (Capt.) Derek Murray
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

REFLECTIONS

"It is better not to vow than to make a vow and not fulfill it." Ecclesiastes 5:5

I resolve to gain 72 pounds this year. I know it won't be easy, but this is just something I really want to do.

With a little hard work and discipline, I think I can make it, though I may get miserably sick if I try to accomplish it in one day, one week or even one month.

However, I can reach my goal if I just pace myself, eat an extra helping for dinner, add a few extra cookies in my lunchbox, or maybe just have a big bowl of ice cream before bedtime each night.

According to my calculations, it takes about 3,500 calories to gain 1 pound of flabby new flesh. There are only 252,000 calories standing between me and size XXXL!

It would take 84 bowls of sugar crunch cereal a day to gain this weight in a month. Some may think this is too ambitious, but I have stamina, stubbornness and a sweet tooth on my side.

Many well-intentioned folks make pretty outlandish resolutions with the coming of each new year. Typically, they set their sights on weight loss, getting in shape or eating healthy foods.

Health clubs depend on the influx of new memberships spawned by the lofty goals of the overweight.

The first week of January is perhaps the busiest week for treadmills, StairMasters and exercise classes.

However, by the first week of February, the crowded gym usually thins out dramatically. When March rolls around, the the local health club is a ghost town.

Resolutions are good if they're achievable. A good resolution is one that, through small, incremental steps, causes a long-term change in your life.

The resolutions that work well are those that take hard work, discipline and time.

Beware of overnight success stories, because we all know fad diets, gizmo workouts and overcommitment may bring immediate results, but are not sustainable over time.

Those resolvers who accomplish their goals are able to keep free from the allure of a quick fix and make permanent investments in their future.

Resolves for your New Year's Resolution:

- I will not set my goals too high.
- I will not get discouraged.
- I will not look for overnight success.
- I will invest in long-term solutions.

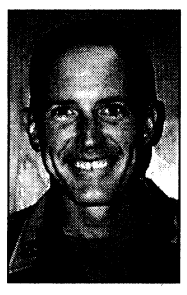
Be committed for attainable goals

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



Where do you stand on New Year's resolutions? There really are only two camps, aren't there? There are the "doers" and the "don'ters."

Some folks are resolutely determined to sit down and formulate what this year's plan of attack is going to be.

They buy the Better Body by Jake platinum edition, invest in a dynamite new workout wardrobe, complete with coordinating socks, and then hit it hard — maybe.

Then there are those whose only New Year's resolution is they are bound and determined, absolutely ironclad, they will not make any New Year's resolutions.

The bitter sting of seeing the Better Body by Jake platinum edition videos still in shrink-wrap on the Fourth of July is just too much emotional trauma and guilt to endure. So they choose to play it safe and figure, "I can't disappoint myself if I don't attempt anything."

Hawkins

So which camp do you fall in? Truth be known, I've pitched my tent on both sides of the equation with frustrating regularity.

Some years, I've nailed the goals I've set for myself, and I've felt the satisfaction that comes with success.

Other years, I've looked back and said, "What was I thinking ... What was I doing?' I've known what it's like to be my own travel agent for guilt trips.

So, with all the collective wisdom of my own resolution triumphs and tragedies across the years (and some helpful information from leaders and counselors I respect), here are some things I'll share with anybody who's trying to decide if he or she will, or won't, do the resolution thing.

If you're interested in making your own New Year's resolutions stick, here's what I say:

- Determine whether you are "committed" or "interested." When it comes to breakfast, the chicken (eggs) is interested — the pig (bacon) is committed. Is this a goal you have truly chosen to make a must-do, or is it a goal that is more of just a want-to?
- Don't make it a resolution if it doesn't matter to you. Your likelihood of success is in direct proportion to how much your goal moves you in your gut. An easy way to determine whether you're interested or committed is to first do the gut check.
- Make S-M-R-T resolutions. Make them specific. Specific goals get achieved far more often than vague or general ones.

Make them measurable. If you're going to achieve it, how will you know when you're there? Mission complete?

Make them realistic. OK, I'm probably not going to make the Mr. Universe finals this year, but I can make it a goal to reduce my body fat by 5 percent, have a date night with my wife, at least once every two weeks or be an assistant coach for my daughter's soccer team.

Those goals are very attainable.

Make them timely. What matters to you right now? What must you take action on right now for the life you want? It's got to matter to you.

Want some personal coaching on making and keeping those New Year's resolutions?

Come see me at the Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza, at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill or call 545-1760.

SPORTS

Post welcomes new sports director

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

Ken Wetherill wanted a drink of water, not a life changing experience. At the age of 19, Wetherill went for a jog and stopped by a Marine recruiting station for a drink of water.

"I walked in and this huge Marine asked me if I was there to sign up," Wetherill said. "I told him no, and he said I wouldn't be able to cut it anyway. So I signed up. Now I think about it and it wasn't a bad thing."

Wetherill

Wetherill, Fort Benning's new sports and fitness director, left the Marines 5th Force Recon after four years because of an injury. A sports fanatic to the end, he caught wind of an opening for a sports coordinator in Japan and applied. There, he said, he "started from the bottom and worked my way up."

After 12 years in Japan, Wetherill transferred to Germany as the U. S. Army Europe sports director for three years, and then decided it was time to come back to the United States.

He arrive here with his wife, Ayano, and their daughter, Arisa, 7, in early December.

> "I want to bring games back to the big venues. There's something about stepping on a field in a stadium, under the lights during prime time, than stepping on a field in the backyard behind the units."
> Ken Wetherill
> Post sports and fitness director

As the new sports and fitness director, he oversees all fitness and aquatics operations and sports programs on Fort Benning.

Army cowboys win championship titles

Army News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Professional cowboys Trevor Brazile and Luke Branquinho, wearing the black and gold uniforms of Team U.S. Army, won two world championship titles Dec. 11.

Both cowboys were selected earlier this year to represent the Army on the Professional Rodeo Cowboy's Association tour.

Defending World Champion Brazile took home his third consecutive all-around PRCA title while steer wrestler Luke Branquinho earned his first at the National Finals Rodeo in Las Vegas.

"This has really been a great year for me," said Brazile. "I'm just so grateful to have support from my family and the Army to do this, and I want to thank them and thank all the Soldiers who are protecting our freedoms. They make it possible to live in this country, to provide for my family and compete in the sport that I love."

The National Finals Rodeo events included a strong Army presence, including a performance by the 82nd Airborne All-American Chorus, recognition for recently returned veterans of Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom and a visit from the 35th chief of staff of the Army, Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker, who met with each Army cowboy, presenting them with Army coins.

"Receiving this coin from the chief of staff of the Army is a huge honor," said Branquinho. "We're all just doing our jobs here. The Army does so much for this country — it means a lot to know that we're making Soldiers proud."

The trees along Dixie Road might begin to show blotches of green, red and yellow and not because of seasonal changes.

The wooded area on Dixie Road next to the Fort Benning Golf Course and the bunker area off 10th Mountain Division Road have been designated for paintball.

"The places we designated were occasionally being used for paintball shooting (already,)" said Bill Place, Outdoor Recreation Manager, "so we put up the signs so everybody could use them."

Place said that the courses are open to anyone as long as they play safely. They're free, but no supervision is provided, so parents should supervise children. And there are rules everyone must follow:

- No shooting at vehicles and stay out of housing areas. Players will be responsible for damage.
- Always police the areas after playing.
- Players are not allowed to build or dig on the courses. There are places to seek cover in both locations.
- Most importantly, be safe.

The Paintball Park on Main Post will rent equipment to players who use the free areas, said Rory Calhoun, owner of Flying Colors, the contracting company that runs the park.

"Players may rent our equipment to use outside the park," Calhoun said. "A deposit will be required for the equipment but will be given back to the customer once the equipment is returned."

Equipment rental includes:

- Guns: $25 deposit required
- Paintball rounds: 500 rounds from $16 to $20
- CO2: $3.50 to $4.50. Tanks can be rented.
- Masks can be purchased or rented for $3.

For more information on the free paintball designated areas, call Outdoor Recreation at 545-7978. For information on the Paintball Park on Main Post, call 267-5038 or 405-9777.

Director: To improve fitness, sports programs on post triathlons. The intramural sports program will also be spruced up, he said. A triathlon is scheduled for June and a body building and power lifting meet later this year.

"Our job is to get the word out to Soldiers and have them come out and participate in the different sports programs," Wetherill said.

Along with the changes in the sports programs, Wetherill has come to Fort Benning in time for the renovations and construction of the sports facilities. Renovations beginning this week at Gowdy Field will include new lights and foul poles and netting to block the balls from going into the stands. The renovation is scheduled to be completed by the end of February. Doughboy Stadium will also receive a minor face lift.

"I want to bring games back to the big venues," Wetherill said. "There's something about stepping on a field in a stadium, under the lights during prime time, than stepping on a field in the backyard."

Nancy Hadley, assistant sports and fitness director and aquatics director, said it's refreshing to have Wetherill on board.

"I see great potential in (Wetherill) improving the sports programs on post," Hadley said. "He's a good guy. We needed the help and hopefully he'll be just that."

The biggest project to begin this year within the sports fitness centers is the construction of a fitness center on Stewart/Watson Field.

Construction is scheduled to begin on the 95,000 square-foot, two-story facility in the fall. The facility will have a 50 meter pool with a zero depth entry area for children, three basketball courts, two racquetball courts and various cardio and weight work out areas.

The construction is estimated to be complete within 18 to 24 months after the ground breaking, Wetherill said.

"I'm walking in at a great time, Fort Benning is the place to be," Wetherill said.

"There is a lot of stuff happening with a lot of potential. For all your sports, fitness and aquatic needs, we want to encourage you to go through us because we need to be supporting you."

As part of the new and improved sports and fitness program, Wetherill plans on staring a sports council for Soldiers and civilians on post.

"The objective is to target areas in the program that needs to be improved and to find out what it is our customer wants," he said.

For more information on the sport and fitness programs on post, call 545-4300.

Cowboys: Wrap up 2004 with four championships

NFR comes in the Army's first year of partnership with the PRCA.

"It just keeps getting better," said Col. Thomas Nickerson, director of Strategic Outreach for U.S. Army Accessions Command. "Trevor and Luke's victories show the skill and determination of our cowboys and is such a fitting tribute to the Soldiers who serve around the world."

With these titles, the Army can count four World Championships in 2004 alone. Earlier this year, Army bull rider Mike Lee won the Professional Bull Riders World Championship and Top Fuel driver Tony Schumacher led the Army to the NHRA Top Fuel World Championship.

These cowboys wear the signature black and gold of Team Army: Brazile, Branquinho, Andy Bolich, Cody DeMoss, Wayne Folmer, Zack Oakes, Brittany Pozzi and Fred Whitfield.

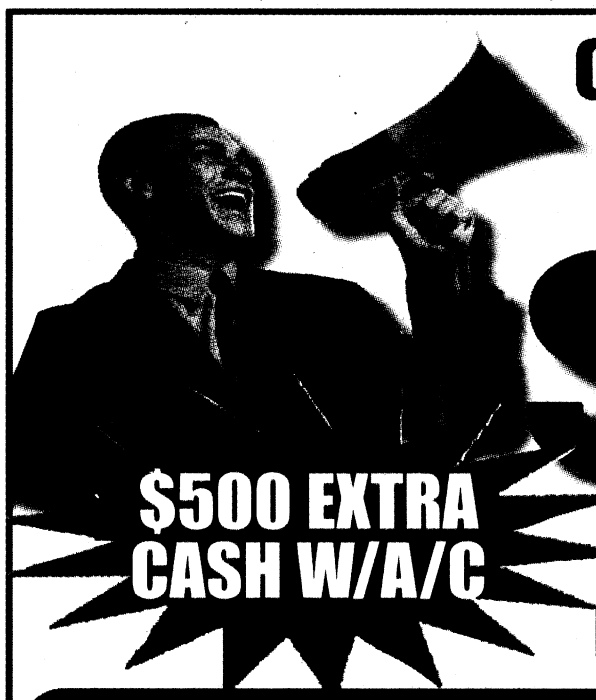
Evangel Temple Welcomes Vietnam War Hero

Having grown up in a preacher's home in South Texas, and having set his sights on being a preacher himself, the last thing on Dave Roever's mind was going to war. But at the height of the Vietnam conflict, Roever received his draft notice. Having no desire to go into the infantry, he joined the Navy and served as a river boat gunner in the elite Brown Water Black Beret, PBR division 573, stationed in Vietnam.

Eight months into his duty in Vietnam, in July 1969, Roever was burned beyond recognition when a phosphorous grenade he was poised to throw exploded in his hand six inches from his face. His injuries should have been fatal. However, he survived and was transported stateside where he faced a long recovery. With is faith in God intact, and with the faithful, loving support of his young bride Brenda, he succeeded. The ordeal left him hospitalized for fourteen months, where he underwent fifteen surgeries. His survival and life are miraculous.

His story is one of supernatural intervention and fierce determination to fulfill his destiny despite the scars. In 2003, thirty-four years after his initial injury in Vietnam, Roever was awarded the Purple Heart as well as other service medals.



Today, with his humorous style, Dave Roever is enthusiastically received both nationally and internationally as a public speaker. His message is one of hope. Using his war experience of loneliness, peer pressure, disfigurement, and pain, his experiences in wholesome relationships with his parents, wife, and children, Roever talks about solutions to problems such as drug and alcohol abuse, drinking and driving, teen pregnancy, suicide and low self-esteem.

Since the terror attacks of September 11, 2001, his work with the United States military has expanded, and includes military academies and installations both on U.S. soil and in hot spots on other continents.

Roever is the author of four books: Welcome Home, Davey; Scarred; Nobody's Ever Cried for Me; Magic Fountain. He and his wife Brenda make their home in Fort Worth, Texas.

Evangel Temple is honored to welcome Dave Roever on Sunday, January 9, in the 8:45 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. services. Evangel Temple is located at Veterans Parkway and Airport Thruway in Columbus. Call 323-1876 for additional information.

It's estimated 8,000 people turned out Jan. 7 to say goodbye to the Soldiers who'll be deploying over the next few weeks. The Silver Wings, Fort Benning's command parachute exhibition team, was scheduled to drop in, but an overcast sky put an end to those plans. By month's end, 4,000 Kelley Hill troops will be in or on the way to Iraq.

Benning says goodbye

Post, local, state officials promise family support

"We will not fail you," Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley said at the Jan. 7 departure ceremony for the Kelley Hill troops who'll leave for Iraq in waves over the next few weeks.

But Freakley was speaking to the troops, not for them. He assured the 8,000 Soldiers and family members at Doughboy Stadium that Fort Benning and the surrounding communities will "take care of your families." That, he said, is a guarantee.

"So focus on your mission. Trust your training, trust your equipment, trust your leadership and your country," he said. "We will not fail you."

And to their families, Freakley offered the same assurance.

"Trust your spouses, trust each other, trust your family readiness group, Fort Benning, Columbus, Phenix City and our nation," he said. "For we will not fail you either."

Freakley was one of several speakers at the event, which featured music by the Infantry Center Band, local performers and up-and-coming country star David Staton.

Georgia Gov. Sonny Perdue, Sen. Saxby Chambliss, Rep. Sanford Bishop, Columbus Mayor Bob Poydasheff and Phenix City Mayor Jeff Hardin each reiterated Freakley's statement.

The Soldiers and their families are all "part of our Georgia family," the governor said, regardless of where they call home.

"It doesn't matter if you're a Georgia native or come from clear across the country. You're here now, and that makes you one of our own," he said, and "with each of you goes our pride, our determination to do all in our power to support you ... and take care of your family while you're away."

The majority of the 3rd Brigade's 4,000 troops will leave for Iraq in the coming weeks, some for the second or third time. But the mass exodus in support of ongoing operations in Afghanistan and Iraq actually began late last year, when members of the 988th Military Police Company left

$1.3 M to be refunded to 900 Soldiers

Companies barred from post

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The American Amicable Insurance Company has agreed to refund more than $1.3 million to nine hundred Soldiers who purchased insurance policies after being improperly solicited by the company, while training at Fort Benning.

Soldiers who purchased policies from American Amicable in 2002 while in training at Fort Benning have 180 days to to request a refund, while deployed Soldiers have 180 days from the date they return and process though CONUS.

American Amicable agents gave sales pitches to Soldiers in the Basic Combat Training Brigade and other training units, under the guise of teaching financial planning.

The Soldiers were a captive audience, and the companies presented deceptive information, violating Army regulations, said Col. Lyle Cayce, Fort Benning's Staff Judge Advocate.

"The products were marketed as investments or retirement funds, when in truth, they were simply life insurance policies," Cayce said.

The company was barred from post, along with two other insurance companies, Madison National and American Fidelity, after BCTB Soldiers complained about the improper solicitation.

The company agreed to the settlement after negotiations with the Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate and the Georgia Insurance Commission, with hopes it would help their case to be allowed to once again do business at Fort Benning.

> "We are working hard to make sure Soldiers who are entitled to refunds will receive them. To avoid this happening in the future, Soldiers should always consult a financial planner or an attorney before purchasing any policies."

The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board met Tuesday to decide if that would be possible. The decision is still pending.

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate sent letters to 400 Soldiers who bought life insurance informing them of the refund, and are notifying 450 more. American Amicable will also notify Soldiers.

To get the refund, Soldiers must submit the affidavit sent to them by American Amicable that confirms that they bought the policy while in basic

When Pvt. Samuel Tolman thinks of his big brother, Pvt. James Tolman, he thinks of dead arms.

"You get dead arms when you get hit in the arms so hard they go numb," Samuel said, describing what happened to him when they were younger.

At 18, Samuel, the little brother, initiated one of the biggest decisions of their lives — the Army.

Samuel, an Infantry Soldier at 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, decided to join the Army right out of high school and pumped up his 22 year-old brother enough to do it too.

THE LEGACIES OF RACISM

One drop of blood?

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

In Louisiana, my blonde-haired, blue-eyed, fair-skinned daughter is considered black. I'm OK with that. Her great-grandmother on her father's side was black.

Under my home state's archaic, Napoleonic law, if you have a drop of black blood in you, then black you are and heir to the discrimination you would face in many parts of that beautiful state.

People aren't born racists. They are raised that way. It is a way of life spawned in ignorance centuries ago and passed down over the generations. But that is no excuse.

People make a choice to be racist. They choose to fear that which they do not know or that which they think they know. They choose to ignore the very principles this country was founded upon.

I'm not ignorant. I know when John Hancock signed the Constitution, blacks weren't considered people and therefore not considered worthy of God-given rights. But our wise forefathers made the Constitution a living document that could change and adapt with the times while maintaining it's core values of freedom and equality.

Times have changed. Blacks, Hispanics, Indians, Asians and aliens are all born with the right to freedom and equality.

We have fought and died together on front lines around the world for the rights of those not fortunate enough to have been born in this great nation.

But among our ranks are still those who consider the man or woman of color unworthy.

If only those few who still hold tight to the ignorance of yesterday would open their eyes to see the world is passing them by.

Times have changed, and we are a nation of many different cultures. We are thriving despite adversity and slowly coming to terms with our diversity.

Still, too often, those who call themselves patriots, try to pick and choose when, where and to whom the Constitution applies. That in and of itself is downright unAmerican.

There are still problems. But look how far we have come. Look at how rich the fabric of our culture is. Look around at the faces of the world that flock to this great nation because they believe in what it stands for. What is wrong with us if we don't even believe in the freedom our own country is based on?

I see tomorrow as a bright future where true equality and freedom will no longer be an idea we preach loudly to the masses of the world, but a standard by which we live peacefully, an example for the world to follow.

That is my dream.

Keeping the dream alive

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Have you ever read something that seemed correct at first glance, but then it dawns on you that something about it just isn't right?

I had one of those moments recently while reading about Martin Luther King and the Reformation.

Did you catch it?

Martin Luther, the German theologian who initiated the Protestant Reformation, nailed his 95 Theses to the door of the church in 1517.

Martin Luther King Jr., an American clergyman, was a prominent leader in our civil rights movement in the 1960s.

And since King has Luther's name, that sort of typo is understandable.

On the eve of King's actual birthday — Saturday — I set out to find out more about each man and found their lives have more parallels than just their names.

Both men enrolled in college at a young age, King at 15 and Luther at 17. By 21, Luther had earned a master's degree and at age 27, King had earned a doctorate. I didn't realize anyone offered master's degrees in the 1500s.

Luther, apparently, was pressured by his father to study law, but entered a monastery instead and was ordained a priest. A few years later, he published his Theses, angered that the Catholic church was selling indulgences (pardons for sins) in order to raise money to build St. Peter's Basilica in Rome.

So fast forward 150 years.

What were the odds that a child named for a great religious reformer would continue in the family business — ministry — and become one of the great reformers of his time?

But King did. He became a minister, challenged segregation and racial discrimination in our country, and eventually paid with his life.

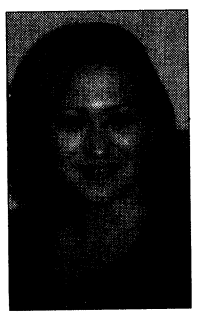
In 1983, Congress passed legislation establishing the third Monday in January as a national observation of his life, his work and his dream.

You know his dream. And if you ever have the chance to hear someone deliver the speech from memory, it will move you.

Every so often, my son's birthday falls on the MLK holiday. It did the year he turned 1, and I remember thinking it would be fun for him to occasionally get to be out of school on his birthday.

But celebrating King's birthday should be so much more than just having a day off of work and school. It should be a day to really think about the legacy he left Americans and the world.

Don't forget his namesake either, another visionary who challenged the practices of a powerful religion he felt weren't quite right.



Let's take some time to look at our children and hope, or even pray, that there will be great visionaries among them who will continue to stand up for others and not back down.

CORRECTION

Last week's edition of The Bayonet said the Ranger Training Brigade may be the only unit to have possession of a Medal of Honor. Fort Benning's 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment has two from past graduates.

Differences only skin deep

Annette Fournier
Bayonet Staff

In a college class, I played a game that made me take a close look at the remaining legacy of segregation. In the game, we had little piles of different colored beads.

The color of the beads represented various ethnic groups, and when a facilatator asked a question, you selected the color bead that corresponded to your answer.

The questions were designed to help us determined how diverse our lives were.

Some of the questions were what color are most of the people in your neighborhood, school or workplace? What color are most of the people in your favorite movie or book? What color is your boss?

For each question asked, the players had to select a bead to drop into the cup.

The list went on and on, and by the end of the game, I looked down at my cup filled mostly with white beads.

Other people were also looking at cups that mostly matched their own ethnic group.

The game started me thinking about the diversity of the people in my life. I grew up in a middle-class, mostly white suburb, where most everyone I knew looked like me.

More than 50 years after Brown v. Board of Education, every school I attended had been almost entirely white. My neighbors were white, and most of my friends were white.

I realized my life was shockingly segregated. I started questioning why it was I lived in such a diverse society, yet I didn't really know my fellow Americans beyond the perceptions I had from TV or the occasional friend or acquaintance?

One section of Dr. Beverly Tatum's book, Why are all the Black Kids Sitting Together in the Cafeteria?, focuses on self segregation, the way people separate themselves to be around people who have similar socio-economic and ethnic backgrounds.

Tatum asserts that one of the ways to work towards a truly multicultural society is to seek out friendships with people different from ourselves and learn more about other cultures.

Trying to follow the book's advice, I signed up for an African dance class, attended soul food fests and salsa nights, started tutoring English as a second language classes, took classes about different religions and historical interpretations, and joined diverse student organizations.

The first few times I went to meetings or parties where I was the only white person, I was uncomfortable.

But in Cincinnati, the sixth most segregated city in America, I was welcomed into vibrant, interesting communities of people who had formerly seemed so different from me.

Finding my place in these communities gave me some of the richest, most satisfying experiences of my life, and lasting relationships with people who I ordinarily would never have met. I discovered that the people I met weren't all that different after all.

Perhaps the way to keep Martin Luther King's dream alive is to look at our own communities and beliefs, and make a concerted effort to get past the color line.

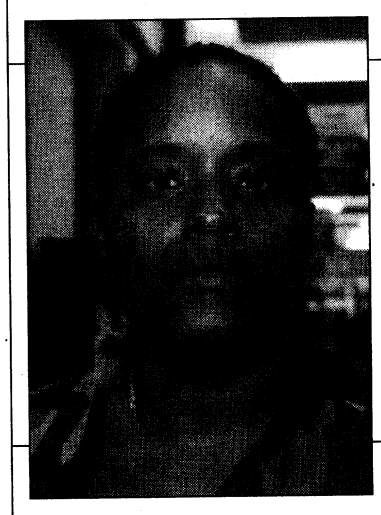
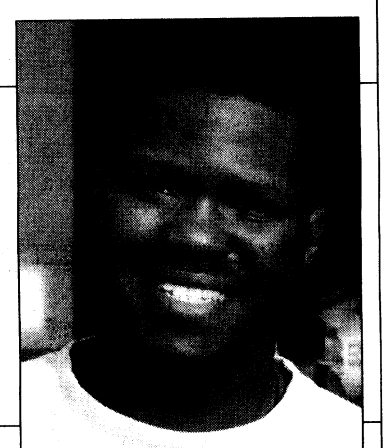
VARIOUS VOICES

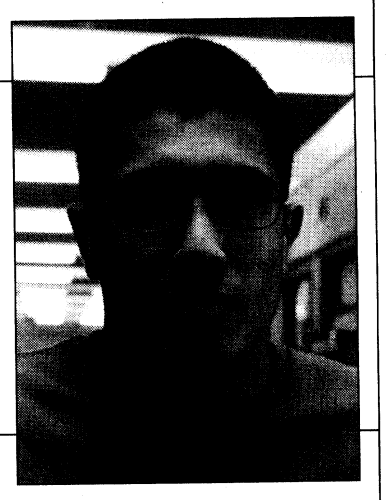


How can we combat racism?



Staff Sgt. Lovan Deloach, 3rd Brigade Combat Team — "Education is the best way to fight racism. If you don't know about other cultures, it's easy to say you don't like this or that about a group of people. With education, you can learn to respect and accept people."

Spc. Jerod Krueger, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think we need to really focus on education. Most people don't know a lot about other races and cultures, so we don't understand each other. Ignorance and fear are where racism originates."



Sgt. Monette Newkirk, 3rd Brigade Combat Team — "Segregation is still a problem. People should be able to feel comfortable living wherever they want and not feel like an outsider. Too many neighborhoods are divided."

Michael Dewayne, family member — "I think it's really important that people understand the issues from both sides. There's no reason for racism to continue being a problem, and we can make some progress if people can work to understand each other's perspectives."

Donna Smith, family member — "I think we need to work to tolerate other people, no matter their race, culture or religious background. A little education helps too."

Spc. Richard Loza, 75th Ranger Regiment — "I'm not sure what we should do. I know that there are racist groups out there, but I haven't been affected by them. As far as I'm concerned, I don't think it's a problem."

for Afghanistan for Operation Enduring Freedom, and 150 Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group's 598th Maintenance Company headed to Kuwait and Iraq.

Elements of the 13th Corps Support Battalion, including the 223rd Heavy Equipment Transport Platoon, and Detachment 31 of the 1207th U.S. Army Field Hospital are among those who've already left Fort Benning for Southwest Asia.

But those Soldiers left with little fanfare. There's been nothing like the departure ceremony, in scale, since the 3rd Brigade's "Dog Face Soldiers" returned from Iraq in the summer of 2003.

It was not, however, the first of its kind. Units were hailed here during World War II, Korea and Vietnam. One such ceremony was depicted in the movie We Were Soldiers, when the 1st Cavalry Division headed to Vietnam.

Unlike the Soldiers who went before, the Soldiers honored Friday were "volunteers every one," Bishop said. The thousands present were asked to stand and be recognized.

Poydasheff said he's making plans for a return trip to Fort Benning, perhaps early next year.

"I'm looking forward to greeting you with another ceremony like this one," he said.

ceremony, the troops filed out of the stadium and boarded buses headed for Lawson Army Airfield. From there, they headed to Iraq.

Master Sgt. Kerrethal Avery attended the ceremony long enough to know "this was a first." In her 18-year career, she's never had a send-off like this.

"That's why I love Columbus," she said. "Because everybody really loves and supports the military."

Avery, who returned from Korea in August, left her 17-year-old daughter at home with her cousin, who'll care for her for a year. It's easier to say goodbye at home, she said.

"She's used to it, because I've been with so many deployable units," said Avery, who served in Afghanistan. "But it's just easier not having her here when I get on that bus.

"I have great family support, and she'll be fine," Avery said. "And I'm coming home — one hundred percent, I'm coming home."

Col. James Brooks, the 36th's commander, left with his troops. Nearly 75 percent of the unit's Soldiers went to Iraq in 2003. Rest assured, he said, they're well-trained and capable.

Brooks said he's confident in Freakley's assurance that Fort Benning and the local community will take care of the 36th Engineer Group families.

"I do, I trust them all," he said. "There's no doubt not one of them wouldn't help if they were needed. No doubt at all."

That makes the engineers, with one less worry on their minds, "safer and more effective," Brooks said.

"And that increases the odds of me bringing them all home safe."

ASAP unveils new prevention, education course

Links violence, alcohol, drugs

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Army Substance Abuse Program has unveiled a new program designed to educate Soldiers about the connection between substance abuse and violent behavior.

"ASAP has long realized the inherent connection between violence and substance abuse," said Yvonne Wilbanks, ASAP chief. "We're excited about this new program."

Lt. Col. Dave Thomas, the ASAP special projects officer, developed the new course.

"The goal is to educate Soldiers in the 17- to 24-year-old range," Thomas said, "but it's for commanders, too.

"If they can find alternate sources of entertainment for Soldiers, they can reduce instances of violence."

Thomas sees the post's military police blotter reports and said there has been a significant increase in violent acts, especially those where alcohol is involved.

He's also done a lot of research and uses some of the statistics when he talks to Soldiers at the newcomer's briefing.

"I give them the doom and gloom, then give them the good news — there are things available for them," Thomas said. "Soldiers need to know the rules, then they need to know the consequences of breaking the rules."

In accordance with Army Regulation 600-85, every Soldier must receive four hours of substance abuse training annually. The training must be documented, and the records are kept at the ASAP office.

But Thomas doesn't think the four hours of training is enough. The Army Reserve field artilleryman works for the Federal Emergency Management Agency as a civilian doing a lot of mitigation.

"Invest now, save later," he said. "A Soldier receives two days of training after a DUI or drug referral. We need to do it before."

Thomas said it's key to head off problems before they develop and cause serious consequences. It saves the Army money in the long run.

The Army must pay to train a new Soldier to replace one chaptered out of the Army for substance abuse.

Wilbanks said commanders need to make sure Soldiers are aware of the early symptoms of substance abuse and encourage them to refer themselves for help.

"Commanders have often heard from their Soldiers, 'It wouldn't have happened if I hadn't been drinking,'" she said. "They know early intervention can improve the chances of a good treatment outcome."

Recent events, she said, indicate substance abuse, especially alcohol abuse, isn't limited to Soldiers, but spouses as well. And, the impact of family member addictions cannot be overlooked.

"Our Soldiers need to focus on getting battle-ready," Wilbanks said. "However, a spouse on the home front with an alcohol or drug addiction can cause stress, anger and preoccupation that may lead to accidents and lowered productivity."

Children can be seriously affected by an addicted parent, she said, and may even be subject to neglect or violence.

"There can be deaths related to it," she said. "It's just tragic."

Wilbanks said a lot of the Soldiers sit through the prevention classes thinking the information either doesn't apply to them or never will, but many later remember what was said when drug and alcohol problems effect them.

"Everything has some sort of impact," she said.

NCOA loses, gains commandant

Sgt. Maj. has 'no regrets' after 30 years

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

When you walk into his office, you can tell he's been places. You see plaques, walking sticks, oriental swords and just about every military coin you can imagine.

When he stands up — at almost 6 feet — and shakes your hand, you know he's been places.

Charles Raper left home for the Army 30 years ago, never thinking he would make it a career. Jan. 5, Command Sgt. Maj. Charles Raper, former commandant of the Henry Caro NCO Academy, took his first steps to get ready to go home.

In a change of command ceremony outside of Infantry Hall, Raper relinquished his position as the commandant of NCOA to Command Sgt. Maj. Steve M. Warnock, former Infantry Training Brigade command sergeant major.

"There's a lot of things you can do in the Army, but one of the most important and most responsibility laden is training leaders," said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, during the ceremony.

Freakley emphasized the importance of the role the NCOA holds in training all the NCOs in the Army and therefor falls on the shoulders of its commandant. He said he could think of no finer men to take that mission than Raper and Warnock.

Freakley listed Raper's accomplishments while commandant of the NCOA.

The changes the NCOA underwent in the two years of Raper's command outnumbered the changes of the academy's past 25 years.

Raper graduated more than 5,500 students from the Primary Leaders Development Course, Basic NCO Course, Advanced NCO Course and Drill Sergeant School. During the 2003 U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy accreditation visit, the Henry Caro NCOA was recognized as the best NCO Academy Armywide.

Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, post command sergeant major, has known Raper for more than 20 years and has been stationed with him for more than 10 of those years.

"We walked our first patrol together in June 1982 in the mountains of Bad Tolz, Germany, and we've been Ranger buddies ever since," Kelso said. "There are so many adjectives that can be used to describe leaders of his caliber — loyal, dedicated, hard, fair. He's everything you expect in a professional NCO."

Raper has nothing but good things to say about his time in the military.

"I have no regrets," he said. "If I could go back, I wouldn't change a thing. The Army and the people I've met in my career have become my family. The best thing the Army has given me is discipline. It's the word that sums up all the years."

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

Command Sgt. Major Charles Raper bid farewell to the NCO Academy Jan. 5.

Raper will officially retire in April and head home to Oklahoma City with his wife of seven years, Dorothy.

"I don't know what I'm going to do, but I'm going to do something," Raper said. "I'm not the kind of guy that can just relax."

During the change of command, Raper challenged Fort Benning to ensure the NCOA continues to excel.

"I can't think of a finer replacement for me than (Warnock)," he said. "He's definitely ready and is the guy who can take this to the next level. He's got ideas of his own that I know he'll successfully play out over the next three years."

Kelso said Raper will be missed in the ranks of the Infantry NCOs.

"His 30 years of service have been a benefit to the Army and therefore the nation."

In recalling anecdotes of Kelso and Raper's time together, Kelso said not many were publishable.

"I will, however, always remember the time at the Oklahoma Club in Munich," Kelso said. "But that's a story for another day."

Vehicle registration skyrockets on post

Accountability key for visitors, personnel

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

More than 8,000 Department of Defense vehicle decals have been issued here since the I-185 access control point reopened and enforcement of the mandatory registration policy kicked in.

"That number is about ten times more than we issued in the same time period before it became mandatory," said Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Murphy, operations NCO with the Provost Marshal's Office.

The decals are mandatory for Soldiers, family members, civilian employees, contractors and anyone who routinely conducts business on Fort Benning.

Mandatory visitor registration took effect at about the same time, requiring anyone entering the post without a decal to provide legal identification and register for a temporary visitor's pass.

"The benefit is we are now able to identify exactly who is coming and going on post," said Provost Marshal Col. Sean Finnegan. "The decal system is to facilitate the military members on post, so we're not stopping them to find out what they are doing every time they come on post ."

Finnegan described the system as more of an administrative tool than a security exercise in that the registration process doesn't bar anyone from post but provides documentation of exactly who is on post at any given time and what their business with the installation is.

"The only security aspect of the registration process is that when the threat level goes up and we need to be more vigilant and prudent, the decals afford us greater control over who gets really scrutinized," said Finnegan.

Visitors can register for 24-hour passes as long as the threat level permits.

Service members here in a transient status can apply for 30-day passes. Soldiers stationed here are required to register for an installation decal as soon as possible.

Drivers, military and civilian, also need to attend the post motorcycle safety course before they can operate a motorcycle on post.

30th AG gets educational face-lift for troops

Bays, auditorium, remodeled to help train Soldier

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

First impressions matter.

During the last eight months, 30th AG and the Training Support Center have worked together to improve the appearance of the first place Soldiers set their eyes on when they come into the Army.

"This is the first place Soldiers come to after MEPS, and we want it to look as professional as we are," said Lt. Col. Christine Richardson, battalion commander.

The remodeling included the addition of displays that show the different places of training for both the Infantry Training Brigade and the Basic Combat Training Brigade. The TSC and the 30th AG have focused on making sure all the displays placed in Johnston Hall are educational and training related, said Sissy G. Hines, chief of TSC.

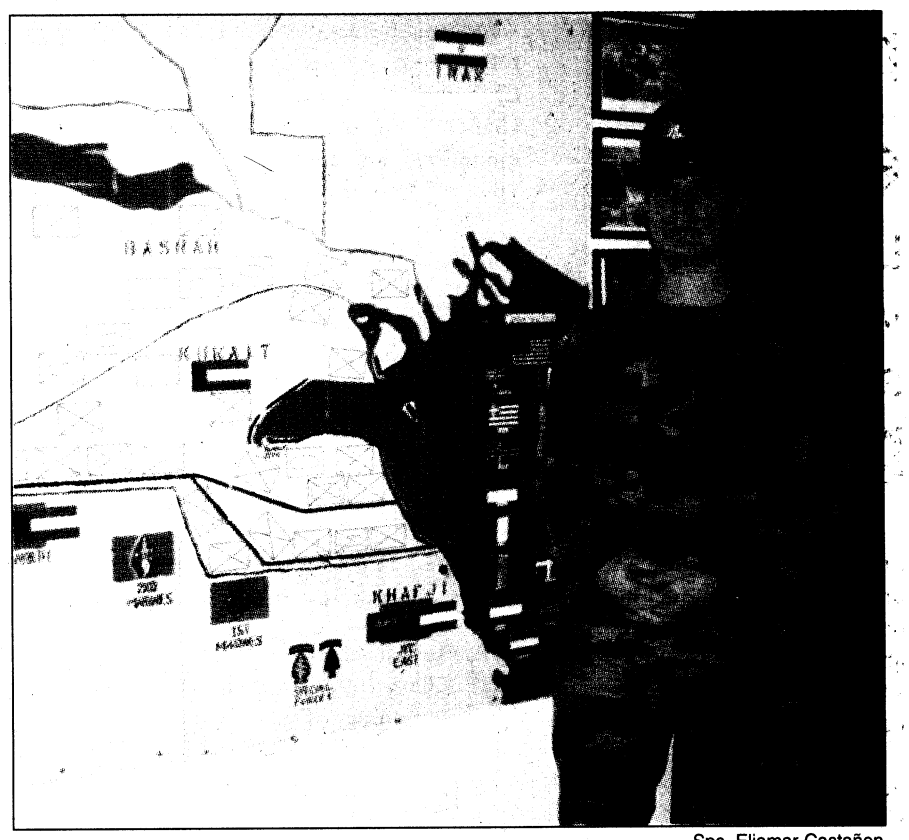
Although TSC's main mission is to supply simulated weapons for training, Hines said they took on the challenge of remodeling 30th AG by providing all the displays in the building.

"We tried to take the theme the Army, the transformation of the Army," she said.

The auditorium inside Johnston Hall also received a new look. Inside the auditorium are paintings of the 10 active-duty division patches, divisions where many of the Soldiers who train on Sand Hill will be going. Next to each is a framed history of the division.

The biggest change that has taken place at 30th AG is the renovation of five bays.

Sgt. 1st Class Michael Morton, a former senior drill sergeant of A Company, 30th AG, took on the task of remodeling each bay with a theme from the biggest wartime conflicts the U.S. has participated in.



The bay themes are Desert Storm, Baghdad, Normandy for the D-Day invasion, Bastogne for the Battle of the Bulge and Landing Zone X-Ray for Vietnam. A sixth bay is in the works to represent Inchon for the Vietnam War.

"Most Soldiers who come into the Army don't know much Army history," Morton said. "Now I hear them in the chow hall talking about their bays and comparing them."

Each bay has a map of the battle it represents with the units that fought during that battle or war. Around the bay there are photographs from the battles and citations of different medals awarded to Soldiers from the Civil War through Somalia. Morton placed the 50 state flags throughout the bays for the Soldiers.

Joe Galloway, a journalist who covered Vietnam, donated copies of the photographs he took while he was in Vietnam.

The only thing all the bays have in common is the Hooah! Room. Each bay has a room available to the Soldiers that depicts all tasks the Soldiers will complete during their first training phase. For his project, Morton was awarded the Army Commendation Medal on Jan. 6.

Recon course feels transformation growing pains

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

2nd Lt. Derrick Raymond covers a battle buddy during evasion training while a student at the Reconnaissance Surveillance Leader Course.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Transformation is in full swing for the 4th Ranger Training Brigade's Reconnaissance Surveillance Leader Course.

Armywide restructuring has formed 16 brigade combat teams — each of which will have a reconnaissance battalion. Every Soldier in those battalions, from the commander down to the private, is supposed to be able to operate in covert, reconnaissance missions.

Do the math.

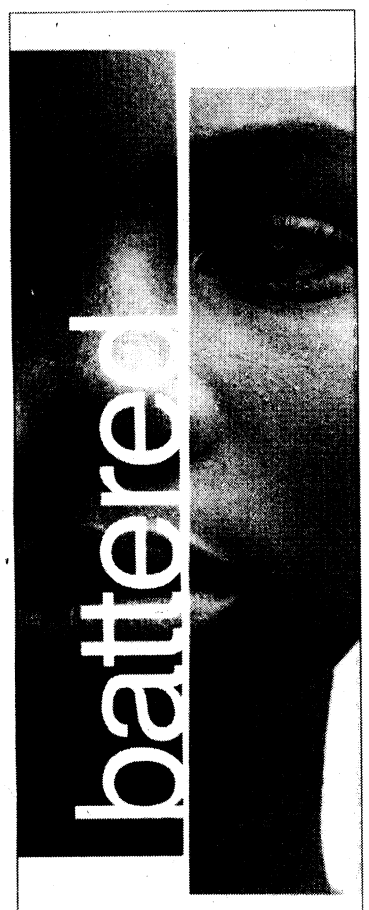
With a staff of only 29 instructors, the course is accustomed to handling about 220 students a year. This year, those 29 instructors will train 400 new recon Soldiers. By 2007, the number of students will triple, the number of cadre will more than double and the course will explode into something much more than the small company it is now.

"Recon has always been a small community — until now," said Maj. Eric Flesch, commander of the 4th Ranger Training Brigade's Reconnaissance Surveillance Leaders Course. "The recon force is quadrupling — this is transformation in action."

Flesch said the cadre have had to pull a major change-step in the way they do business. It used to be you had to be Ranger-qualified and meet minimum rank requirements. Now, everyone is supposed to get the training from privates first class on up to the colonels.

Flesch said the new doctrine is a work in progress as the cadre encounter new issues, new technology emerges and the lessons learned in Iraq and Afghanistan grow.

"The number of people who need the training is so big now," he said. "We are keeping up using a train-the-trainer philosophy for now. These guys will have to go back to their units and teach a battalion everything they know."



Still undecided is whether a reconnaissance transition course or some sort of specialty training will be created for commanders and their staff, he said. Even though the changes have only just begun, the school is feeling the effects. Normally the cadre teach about eight cycles a year, and the remainder of the time they perform observer controller duties for LRS companies around the world. This year they did just that and then taught two extra cycles. Those two cycles were part of the course's prioritization of an overwhelming list of tasks, Flesch said.

"These additional courses are unit specific because we just can't train everybody at once," he said. "These guys are next in line to deploy, so the pressure was on to get them ready."

The courses were for the 82nd Airborne Division and 101st Air Assault Division. The RSLC will train the 10th Mountain Division this summer. And their mission doesn't stop with training Soldiers.

The RSLC is currently working with the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate and the Directorate of Combat Developments on shaping the task organization for the future recon units.

"This is a huge transition," Flesch said. "It's really a great undertaking for the Infantry Center and 4th RTB."

AWOL count at 17 since holiday season

Numbers expected to rise this week

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Since the holiday season ended Jan. 3, 17 Soldiers have been reported absent without leave, post military police officials said.

The majority of that number were basic trainees who did not return to training after Christmas exodus, said Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Murphy, operations sergeant with the Provost Marshal's Office.

"These are just initial numbers," he said. "A lot more will be reported by the end of next week. I'm guessing we'll have about 25 to 30."

AWOL and desertion are Uniform Code of Military Justice violations with sentences including administrative punishment, monetary fines, discharge from the Army and jail time. "There are serious consequences for desertion and AWOL," said Maj. Josh Shuey, chief of Criminal Law with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. "We look at the circumstances on a case-by-case basis."

The difference between AWOL and desertion lies in the Soldier's intent, Shuey said. Desertion is defined as willfully leaving without permission with the intent to "avoid hazardous duty, shirk important service or remain absent permanently."

With the nation at war, many Soldiers leave with the intent to avoid deployment, but Shuey said it is hard to prove.

"Unless they come right out and say, 'I'm leaving and I'm never coming back,' or 'I'm leaving because I'm not going to deploy,' it is almost impossible to prove they are deserters," he said.

Most of the AWOL cases here aren't desertions. Shuey said about 50 percent happen because Soldiers are under stress because of financial, marital, family or drug and alcohol problems. These Soldiers either don't feel the chain of command can help them or have turned to their superiors for help and been stonewalled.

"Either way, we look at a lot of different factors when we decide how hard to prosecute an offender," said Shuey. "We look at the length of time they are gone, how they came back, voluntarily or involuntarily, their performance before and after the offense and the reasons why they left. Each case is different."

Some of the services on post available to help Soldiers and commanders are Army Community Services, chaplains, the Army Substance Abuse Program and Mental Health services at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Refund: Insurers pay cheated troops training in 2002.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley ordered an administrative investigation, resulting in four officers and seven NCOs receiving letters of reprimand from their chain of command.

Another insurance company, First Command Financial Services, agreed Dec. 15 to refund money to Soldiers who were sold policies in a misleading manner, violating Army regulations. First Command will pay $12 million in settlements to military families who purchased and terminated systematic investment plans between Jan. 1, 1999, and Dec. 1, 2004.

"We are working hard to make sure Soldiers who are entitled to refunds will receive them," said Capt Julie Heumphreus, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. "To avoid this happening in the future, Soldiers should always consult a financial planner or an attorney before purchasing any policies."

Soldiers who believe they are owed a refund should contact Heumphreus, at 545-3286 or at humphreusj@benning.army.mil

Brothers: Both hope to meet in Iraq

good with my life," Samuel said. "The Army was the best career choice for me. I want to be part of a Special Forces team."

James, an interrogator with a language modifier, is completing basic training with 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, before heading to Monterey, Calif., to complete advanced individual training at the Defense Language Institute.

"(Samuel) was the one who was signed up and ready to go," James said. "I saw how excited he was and that motivated me to do the same thing. I didn't want to be an Infantryman though."

After a two-and-a-half year religious mission in Panama, James is fluent in Spanish and looks to learn more languages while he's in the Army.

"I want to go to Iraq," James said. "It would be ideal to be able to serve with my brother overseas. We're already talking about what we can do to get stationed together."

The Tolmans see each other at church every Sunday.

Samuel arrived here about six weeks before James and had a better idea of what basic was like by the time he arrived.

"I scared him by telling him horror stories," Samuel said.

Both Tolmans agree they have motivated each other. But motivation only means one thing — competition.

On their last PT tests, James scored a 235 and Samuel scored 209. The worst blow came for Samuel when his non-Infantry, big brother brought back flashbacks of dead arms by scoring 38 out 40 during basic rifle marksmanship — Samuel scored 24 out of 40.

"I've made so much fun of him for that," James said.

"I've always looked up to him more than anybody," Samuel said. "Him doing better than me isn't that big of a deal. I expected him to. He's got everything figured out. He even got the best looks in the family."

Both Tolmans graduate this month. Samuel will graduate ITB Jan. 28 and head to Fort Carson, Colo. James graduates BCTB Jan. 27.

"This has been a great experience for both us," James said. "It would be better if we could've been in the buddy program, but this worked out well. We'll always be able to share our stories no matter where we are."

The jaws of life use hydraulics to crunch through the steel of a car's frame to free people trapped inside. Fire Station 32 on Custer Road mostly gets calls for medical emergencies and accidents.

Firefighting 21Ms can take the heat

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

"I remember the extreme heat and the flames. The temperature inside the burning C-130 was 1,200 degrees," Spc. Jose Lopez said. "It was so hot it melted the reflective tape on my gear and cracked my face mask."

For Lopez and Pvt. Andrew Blankenheim, firefighters with the 508th Ordnance Company, this was the most memorable experience during training to become 21Ms, Army firefighters.

"Aircraft rescue was the toughest thing we covered," Blankenheim said. "The high-octane aircraft fuel burns so hot, you have to use foam rather than water to fight the fire. If it was a real fire, we'd have to worry about the passengers inside the plane and the flames spreading."

Sgt. Joel Root, NCOIC for the 12 military firefighters at Benning, put out the flames on burning C-130s during his deployment for Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

"We fought fires, went on medical calls and car accidents. It's the same job whether we're in war or at home," Root said.

Army firefighters train for 14 weeks at Goodfellow Air Force Base in San Angelo, Texas, with Navy, Marine, Coast Guard, Air Force and civilian firefighters.

Their training certifies them to fight fires, clean up hazardous materials and provide basic emergency medical care. They continue their education with correspondence courses and have hands-on training every day, unless they have a call.

"Here at Benning, for our fire training, we do things like burn junked cars and cut them up with the jaws of life or saws and practice using the ladder truck for rescues," Lopez said. "We also fill a big pit with various types of fuel and fight the flames to work on fires from different fuel sources."

Besides fire training, the 21Ms have to keep up with hazardous materials, medical and rescue training. Hazardous materials can be difficult to deal with, Lopez said, because chemicals need to be contained and cleaned in specific ways.

"There are some chemicals, that if burning, will actually spread if we try to use water or a fire extinguisher. We also have to contain and clean up chemicals in certain ways. For instance, if we let some chemicals wash into a sewer it could taint the water supply."

Fort Benning has three fire stations, located at Lawson Army Airfield, Vibbert Road and Custer Road. DoD civilians and Army firefighters staff the stations, with two to three Soldiers on duty in each station at all times. The response time from the time the station gets the call to the time the trucks are rolling out the door is usually about one minute.

Annette Fournier

Firefighter Cpl. Nicholas Southerland checks the SCBAs, self contained breathing apparatuses, in the rescue truck.

The majority of calls for Custer Road's Station 32 are for medical assistance in homes, for training units or car accidents. They stay busy with an area that includes Sand Hill, Kelley Hill, Harmony Church and surrounding areas.

"Some of those calls are really hard to see, especially if its a kid or a baby who's hurt." Lopez said. "My first day at work here we were called to a suicide. That was really tough."

The firemen are also the first responders for car accidents. Some tools the emergency response truck carries are the jaws-of-life, a hydraulic ram used to pry a dashboard up off of trapped passengers, the K-12 saw used to cut a car's roof off, large air bags that are placed under a flipped car and inflate to either remove people from the car or flip it over, and seat belt cutters.

The toughest part of the job, Blankenheim said, is the 72-hour work week. Fort Benning's firemen work 24 hour shifts, with every other day off.

With a team needed at the firehouse at all times, 21Ms don't get the holidays and three day weekends most Soldiers get. However, after training, PT and calls, there is a lot of free time, Blankenheim said.

Despite the hours, the fire fighters feel dedicated to their mission.

"For me, the best thing about my job is that I never know what's going to happen," Lopez said. "Every day is something new."

Combined support force continues to refine relief efforts

Red Cross will need $400M in donations

Samantha L. Quigley
American Forces Press Service

Lance Cpl. Thomas J. Grove

The tsunami leveled homes and caused massive destruction in Southeast Asia when it hit Dec. 26. The U.S. government has promised $350 million for relief efforts for an area that lost 150,000 lives.

UTAPAO, Thailand — Relief efforts continue in the Southeast Asian region devastated by the Dec. 26 earthquake and resulting tsunami.

Water-production facilities are being established in Indonesia in coordination with the host government, said Marine Lt. Col. Robert Krieg, lead future operations planner for Combined Support Force 536.

Five C-130s have arrived at Banda Aceh with an Air Force mobility support team to organize an airport ramp area. That, Krieg said, is one of the "critical things" needed at Banda Aceh.

"It's a small airfield," he said. "We're trying to put a lot of supplies through there. Many nations are trying to put supplies through there. Those folks are really going to help the effort down there."

The U.S. Navy pre-positioning ship MV Pless, with the capability to offload fresh water, is off the coast of Sumatra, Indonesia. Those operations have not begun, but the ship is standing by should the Indonesian government make such a request. The USS Duluth also arrived in the area and is ferrying supplies to shore via amphibious landing craft.

Debris has also begun being cleared from Sri Lanka. At least 150 metric tons of debris was cleared from the roads. Some was deposited to reconstruct the seawall, and some was taken to a Sri Lankan landfill.

Pulau Simeule, a small island about 60 miles off the coast of Indonesia, is getting new attention. The USS Bonhomme Richard is delivering supplies to the island's 1,000-person population.

Numbers continue to grow with the relief efforts. Krieg said 850 sorties have been flown since the beginning of operations.

They have moved 46,000 gallons of fresh water, 4,009 pounds of food and 775,000 pounds of supplies. They have also transported 153 injured people, he said.

In a release from the American Red Cross, the West Central Georgia Chapter is focusing on four main areas of immediate assistance: food distribution, vaccination and health, relief supplies and water and sanitation.

• Food distribution — The American Red Cross is coordinating with other organization to purchase and distribute culturally appropriate food like rice, lentils and canned fish for more than 2 million people a day for six months.

• Emergency water and sanitation — The Red Cross will provide mass numbers of disaster victims with safe drinking water, water for sanitation purposes and safe waste disposal systems.

• Vaccination and healthcare — The Red Cross will work in partnership with organizations like UNICEF and the World Health Organization in measles immunizations and other health intervention campaigns for as many as 22 million children in affected countries.

This may include distributing polio vaccines and malaria protections along with Vitamin A.

• Relief supplies — During the next six months, the American Red Cross will distribute emergency supplies like tents, cooking supplies, hygiene kits and more to the millions who need help.

The American Red Cross estimates that it will require $400 million to provide immediate relief and respond to long-range needs in the months and years to come.

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT FOR THE PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF A SHOPPING CENTER, FORT BENNING

The U.S. Army Infantry Center, Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Management Division, Fort Benning, Georgia, hereby announces the completion and public availability of the Environmental Assessment (EA) and Draft Finding of No Significant Impact (FNSI) concerning the construction of a shopping center on Fort Benning, Georgia. These documents were prepared pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) proposes to construct a new shopping center for use by authorized individuals at Fort Benning. The proposed action would consist of construction and operation of a shopping center containing a main store, MCSS and a food court including an Anthony's Pizza, Robin Hood Deli, Burger King, Taco Bell, Church's Chicken, Manchu Wok, Charley's Grilled Subs, A & W, and Baskin Robbins. Services would include a barber shop, beauty shop, laundry/dry cleaners, alterations shop, optometrist/eyecare office, flower shop, one-hour photo store, nutrition center, shoe store, amusement arcade, beauty supply, collectibles, roving concessions, category enhancer, and local artisan.

New construction would consist of reinforced concrete slab/foundation with masonry/metal stud exterior walls, steel structure and built-up partitions, AAFES-provided shelving, suspended ceilings and recessed energy-efficient lighting. Exterior support would include required utilities, communications, paving, walks, curbs, storm drainage, site improvements, electrical, mechanical, and fire protection for a complete and usable facility. Only AAFES-authorized patrons would use the facility. These patrons are primarily active duty and retired military personnel, their family members, and certain categories of reserve military personnel.

The EA evaluates the effects associated with the proposed action on soils, vegetation, water quality, wildlife, socioeconomics, land use, environmental justice, cultural resources, utilities, noise, air quality, hazardous materials containment/disposal, public health and safety, and the protection of children.

The EA and Draft FNSI for the proposed action have been completed and will be available to the public for a review period of 30 days starting from the first day of publication in The Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, in accordance with part 1501.4 (e)(1) of Title 40 of the Code of Federal Regulations and Army Regulation 200-2. These documents are available at the following locations, in addition to the following Web site: www.benning.army.mil/EMD/Legal&PublicNotices.htm.

• W.C. Bradley Memorial Library, located at 1120 Bradley Drive, Columbus, Georgia.

• South Lumpkin Library, located at 2034 South Lumpkin Road, Columbus, Georgia.

• Fort Benning Main Post Library, located in Building 93.

Anyone wishing to comment on the proposed action or request additional information must write to the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Programs Management Branch (Attention: Melissa Kendrick), Building 6 (Meloy Hall) Room 309, Fort Benning, GA 31905-5122, or call (706) 545-9878.

Attention Armed Forces Personnel:

Are you nearing the end of your service with no plan for when you get out?
I was there, and I can help.

Dear Fellow Soldier,

My name is Carl DiBene, and I am a former Army SSG. I am writing this letter to warn you about some of the challenges you are going to face when you leave the military.

Challenge #1: "Get Rich Quick" schemes

Many companies make huge promises that you'll gain large incomes and personal wealth overnight. What they won't tell you until it's too late is that you will have to exploit your friends and family to get them, and no one wants to do that.

Challenge #2: Officers Get the Best Opportunities

Employers believe the Officers run the US Military. Just look around. The best jobs offered at job fairs, at the ACAP locations, and in the Decision Times are for Jr. Officers. I saw one company that offered management positions to the Officers and stuck the enlisted in truck driving positions. I don't think that's right. Are we supposed to believe that a NCO who managed 5 to 120 soldiers through peacetime and combat operations doesn't have the skills to manage a couple of truck drivers? That's just ridiculous!

Challenge #3: Security in Kuwait or Iraq, Police Officer, or Military Post Gate Guard

As I filled out a police application after I left the Army, I thought, "Why would I trade in one uniform for another and risk my life now with strangers? Why would I continue to work weekends, holidays, and night shifts, especially since I would start off at the bottom of the rank structure?" I was a Staff Sergeant (P) when I got out. I didn't want to go back to the bottom!

Challenge #4: The Career Search

On average a soldier will go through 6-7 jobs in their first five years out of the service. Why? Many don't know exactly what they want from a career or they will just take a couple of different jobs until they figure it out.

Ask your self this question…

Do you want:
1. Job Security?
2. The opportunity to prove yourself in a growing career?
3. An education that improves your skills?
4. A comfortable retirement when you are ready?
5. Personal wealth for you and your family?

If you are a Junior NCO, Specialist, Senior NCO, or Sergeants Major; ETSing or retiring soon, we have an opportunity for you. Your MOS is not a factor; your attitude is!
If you answered yes to 1 or more of these questions then you MUST spend two hours with me. Explore a career with us on Thursday 27 January, 2005 from 1900-2100. Success Group International will sponsor their Crossfire Seminar at the Wingate Inn on Rollins Way in Columbus, GA. I will share my story with you and show you how to choose a career that will take care of you and your family for years to come.

Crossfire: "A Postwar Success Plan for Our American Heroes."

For your tickets, call 1-800-524-1954, ext 120 and ask for SGM (RET) Calvin Smithers.

Yours for success in the greatest mission of them all – Life…

Carl DiBene

P.S. You've spent years protecting the future of our great country. Don't you think it's time to protect your own? Call 1-800-524-1954, ext 120 today. I guarantee this will be the most important step you take after stepping out of uniform.

Bad actors make good Soldiers, leaders at IOBC culmination

They'll never win a Tony, but these Soldiers hope to win the hearts and minds of the Iraqi people

Story and photos by Bridgett Siter

"The majority of this class will end up in a division, and they'll see action real soon. When they get over there on the ground, they'll think about (what they learned here,) and it'll cut down on their losses."

Staff Sgt. Robert Nauman
NCOIC cadre

It's a far cry from Broadway, but the Infantry Officer Basic Course cadre are hoping the actors' adage, "A bad dress rehearsal means a good opening night," applies to their students' performance last week.

The stage was McKenna Complex, the site of Fort Benning's premier urban operations training site, and the actors were mostly second lieutenants, students in the final phase of the 16-week IOBC.

While some obviously enjoyed their roles as opposing forces, or OPFOR, most of the class's 106 students stayed in character as young Infantrymen confronting the enemy and hostile villagers for the first time.

"Dress rehearsal" was actually a culmination exercise, a nonstop, weeklong recap of everything they'd learned and, likely, everything they'll need to know when they head into a war zone.

And they will head into a war zone. It's not a matter of "if," but when," said cadre Staff Sgt. Robert Nauman, who evaluated the students as they conducted a mock search and rescue operation.

"The majority of this class will end up in a division, and they'll see action real soon," Nauman said.

"When they get over there on the ground, they'll think about (what they learned here,) and it'll cut down on their losses."

To a casual bystander, the culmination exercise included a hefty dose of mass chaos.

The students who alternated playing OPFOR were simply bad actors having a really good time.

They enjoyed harassing their classmates and frequently spiced the script with mischief.

The object was to "make it harder now, very confusing, so when they get over there in a real situation, they know the right thing to do," Nauman said.

"You plan as much as you can and give them small goals at first, but as you see them pick it up, you add to it. You throw more at them."

Playing OPFOR was a welcome break for the students, because the rest of the time, they were under constant pressure.

Culmination week begins with a 16-mile foot march and doesn't let up until the final air assault five days later. Sandwiched between are continuous challenges, including convoy operations, cordon and search, and traffic control. All with four good hours of sleep and three square MREs a day.

There's a lot of emphasis on "stability and sustainment," the process of securing an area — in this case McKenna Village — and establishing a working relationship with its citizens.

"It's all about winning the hearts and minds of the people," said Capt. Reggie Williams, the senior platoon trainer who spent a year in Iraq with the 82nd Airborne.

In the "real world" — meaning Iraq — that's what the Soldiers will be doing, Williams said.

"It's no longer a destroy mission," he said. "We're rebuilding a nation."

2nd Lt. David Huntoon was "killed" during the hostage release operation. He could've taken the opportunity to take a break, to rest there where he was lying when his "laser alarm" was activated, indicating he'd been shot.

Instead, Huntoon and his fellow casualties hunkered down next to a building, out of the way but close enough to watch the exercise unfold.

"Everybody's armchairing this thing," he said. "You want to see it play out till the end to see what you'd do differently."

Apparently, there were some things that should've been done differently, Williams told the class during an after action review.

But all in all, bad acting aside, the students performed exceptionally well with a casualty rate of less than 20 percent.

Seventy percent "is considered an acceptable risk in an urban operation," he said.

"It goes back to rehearsal. You had plans and contingency plans, and it showed," Williams said.

"Rehearsals will pay dividends in a real world situation."

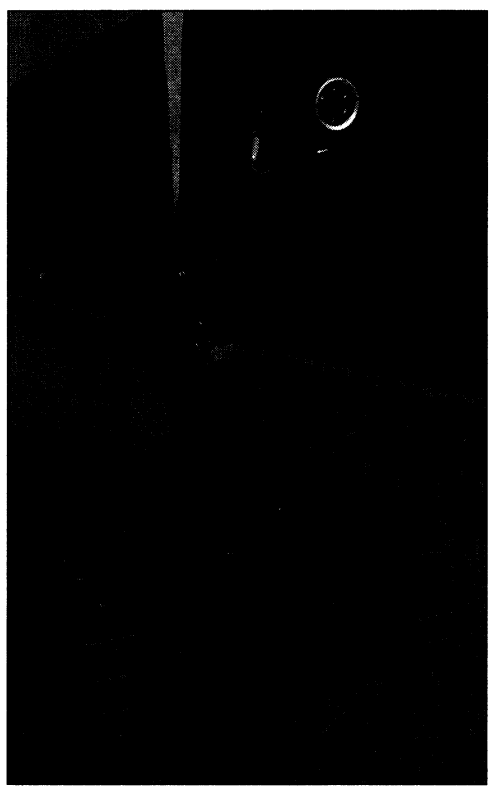
EOD robots perform high-tech wonders in Iraq

Spc. Jonathan Montgomery
Army News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Whenever an explosive ordnance disposal technician heads downrange, one thing is certain: the robot goes first.

"The cost of losing a robot is not nearly as close as losing a trained EOD person," said Sgt. 1st Class Gregory Carroll, NCOIC of the 184th Ordnance Battalion, an EOD Robotics team from Fort Gillem, Ga., deployed to Baghdad. "Time on target is our biggest danger, and these robots eliminate us from having to go downrange if we don't have to."

Since their EOD inception, robotic systems have saved numerous lives by helping to wipe away the threat of improvised explosive devices and vehicle-borne IEDs encountered daily throughout the Iraqi theater of operations.



Not surprisingly, 95 percent of all EOD robots are used for reconnaissance missions and delivering explosives to the hazard for detonation, Carroll said.

"We wouldn't have EOD guys if we didn't have robots to take the hit," he explained about the constant number of IED casualties along main supply routes and in close-quarter urban areas. "These robots are a human cost-saving mechanism."

In addition to taking an IED blast, EOD robots also get shot at by small arms fire, Carroll said.

These "man-portable" robots, initially employed by Infantry units for advance scouting purposes, dually serve as multi-versatile, lightweight machines supplementing EOD teams on the roads of Iraq.

"The IED threat is so critical," said Capt. Jason Souza, OIC of the 184th EOD Robotics team.

Spc. Jonathan Montgomery

An explosive ordnance disposal robotic "Talon" is employed Jan. 6 by the 184th EOD Robotics Team stationed in Baghdad, Iraq.

The EOD missions in both Iraq and Afghanistan have exceeded the demand for robots, he said.

The robots, easily thrown in the back of a helicopter or tactical vehicle, each consist of thousands of interlocking parts. They are primarily designed as a track vehicle with a retractable arm claw and camera, and are also capable of being armed with a grenade launcher or other Infantry arsenals.

"You put this (robot) on the ground, and people know who you are," Carroll said. "(Iraqi) kids go 'Boom! Boom!' when they see us because they know an explosion is going to happen. People start to scatter."

Common city obstacles such as getting over a curb or wading through a foot of sewer water are overcome often with the remote control expertise of a skilled EOD technician, but sometimes a bomb blast can get the best of the robot's size, strength and dexterity.

"One lady came back (to the robot repair depot) with only two tracks in her hands," said Marine Master Sgt. Thomas Bogosh, senior NCO of the Joint Robotic System Repair Station in Iraq. "They weren't even whole tracks, only parts of them."

His repair station workers, many of whom are former Army and Air Force, work to salvage destroyed robot parts, some still covered in white phosphorous and oil.

But whatever the hurdles, the EOD teams who are out making a safer Iraq are doing so by learning from each other.

"(EOD) is a joint service environment, but we're definitely one team, one fight," said Navy Petty Officer 2nd Class Jennifer Smith, EOD information technician. "We're a tight community, which shares a lot of information with each other. Whoever needs equipment, gets equipment in EOD."

EOD technicians are schooled on many different types of robots in case the one they prefer is in the repair shop.

A well-working, repairable robot completes more than 1,000 missions during its theater tenure.

The missions wear and tear these battle droids more than in the United States, Bogosh said.

"A year's worth of work back home is equal to one day in Iraq for these robots," he said.

Editor's note: Spc. Jonathan Montgomery serves with the Multinational Corps – Iraq Public Affairs Office.

Multinational force preps for Iraqi elections Jan. 30

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Troops from Multinational Force Iraq are working to ensure every Iraqi who wants to vote has the chance to do so in the Jan. 30 election.

The election is "a high stakes" event for the Iraqi people and for the coalition, said a senior MNFI official. "This is the first democratic election since the state of Iraq was established in 1928," said the official. "I guess you could really say it's the first election in this part of Iraq in 5,000 years."

The Independent Election Commission of Iraq is running the election. The commission, set up under the Transitional Administration Law, has nine members.

Iraq has 13 million eligible voters, roughly half the population. They already are registered to vote through the identification process set up for distributing rations. The commission plans to set up 6,000 voting sites nationwide, each with up to five voting booths. Iraqis living in 14 other countries also may vote in the election.

Iraqis will be voting for members of the 275-seat National Assembly. That group will then choose a president, deputy presidents and prime minister. Then the assembly will become a constitutional convention and design a permanent government for the country.

At the end of December, 256 "entities," or parties, and 6,239 assembly candidates were registered for the election. The administrative law states that 25 percent of the assembly must be women.

The commission can call on MNFI for support. The official said any request from the commission must be in writing; it must be appropriate for the MNFI to provide the support; and it must be available.

"The areas that we are primarily involved in are security, logistics and communications," the official said.

Coalition forces are not, for example, involved in any voter-education effort, nor will coalition troops pass out literature on the elections.

Security obviously is the greatest concern as the election approaches, and officials expect violence in the country to intensify.

The two most dangerous provinces now are Anbar and Ninewa. The commission is working with MNFI units to increase security in those provinces, but this will be tough, the official said, especially in Anbar, where Marines and Soldiers recently ended a major offensive against insurgents in Fallujah.

Iraqi and coalition officials are adamant that the election must have an Iraqi face, which means Iraqis must provide the security. MNFI officials are planning a layered security system around the polling places. Iraqi police, and Iraqi army and National Guard personnel will provide immediate security around polling places.

The next layer of security will be in surrounding neighborhoods, where people and vehicles will be screened. Beyond that, other checkpoints will set up.

"MNFI may be involved in the outer cordon and as a quick-reaction force," the official said.

The commission has asked that coalition forces play a greater role in Ninewa and Anbar provinces.

Iraqi officials are looking at a number of emergency provisions to help the election be successful.

These include declaring a three-day public holiday centered around the elections, closing schools from Jan. 17 to Feb. 1, restricting vehicle movement around polling centers due to the threat from vehicle-borne bombs, limiting pedestrians in polling areas, and so on. Some of these provisions already have been agreed to; others are under discussion.

After the election, the votes will be counted and the National Assembly will convene at the end of February.

Meet Bill and Lil at the Tax Center

Hall of Famers still serving Soldiers

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

Lillie Galbraith was looking for a way to get her husband out of the house.

"I didn't like to watch a lot of television, and that's what Billie did," Lillie said. "I told him I was going to volunteer for the tax center, and he came along. We've been doing it for thirteen years."

The Galbraiths have volunteered at the Fort Benning Tax Center since 1992. Back then, they were often the only volunteers there.

Lillie used to take her Reader's Digest to work because there were so few customers.

Not so these days. The number of customers they see each year between January and April has jumped from hundreds to thousands. The workload is huge, but the Galbraiths stick with it.

"We want to look out for the Soldiers," Billie said. "There's no need for them to go downtown and get ripped off, when they can come here and we'll do their taxes for free."

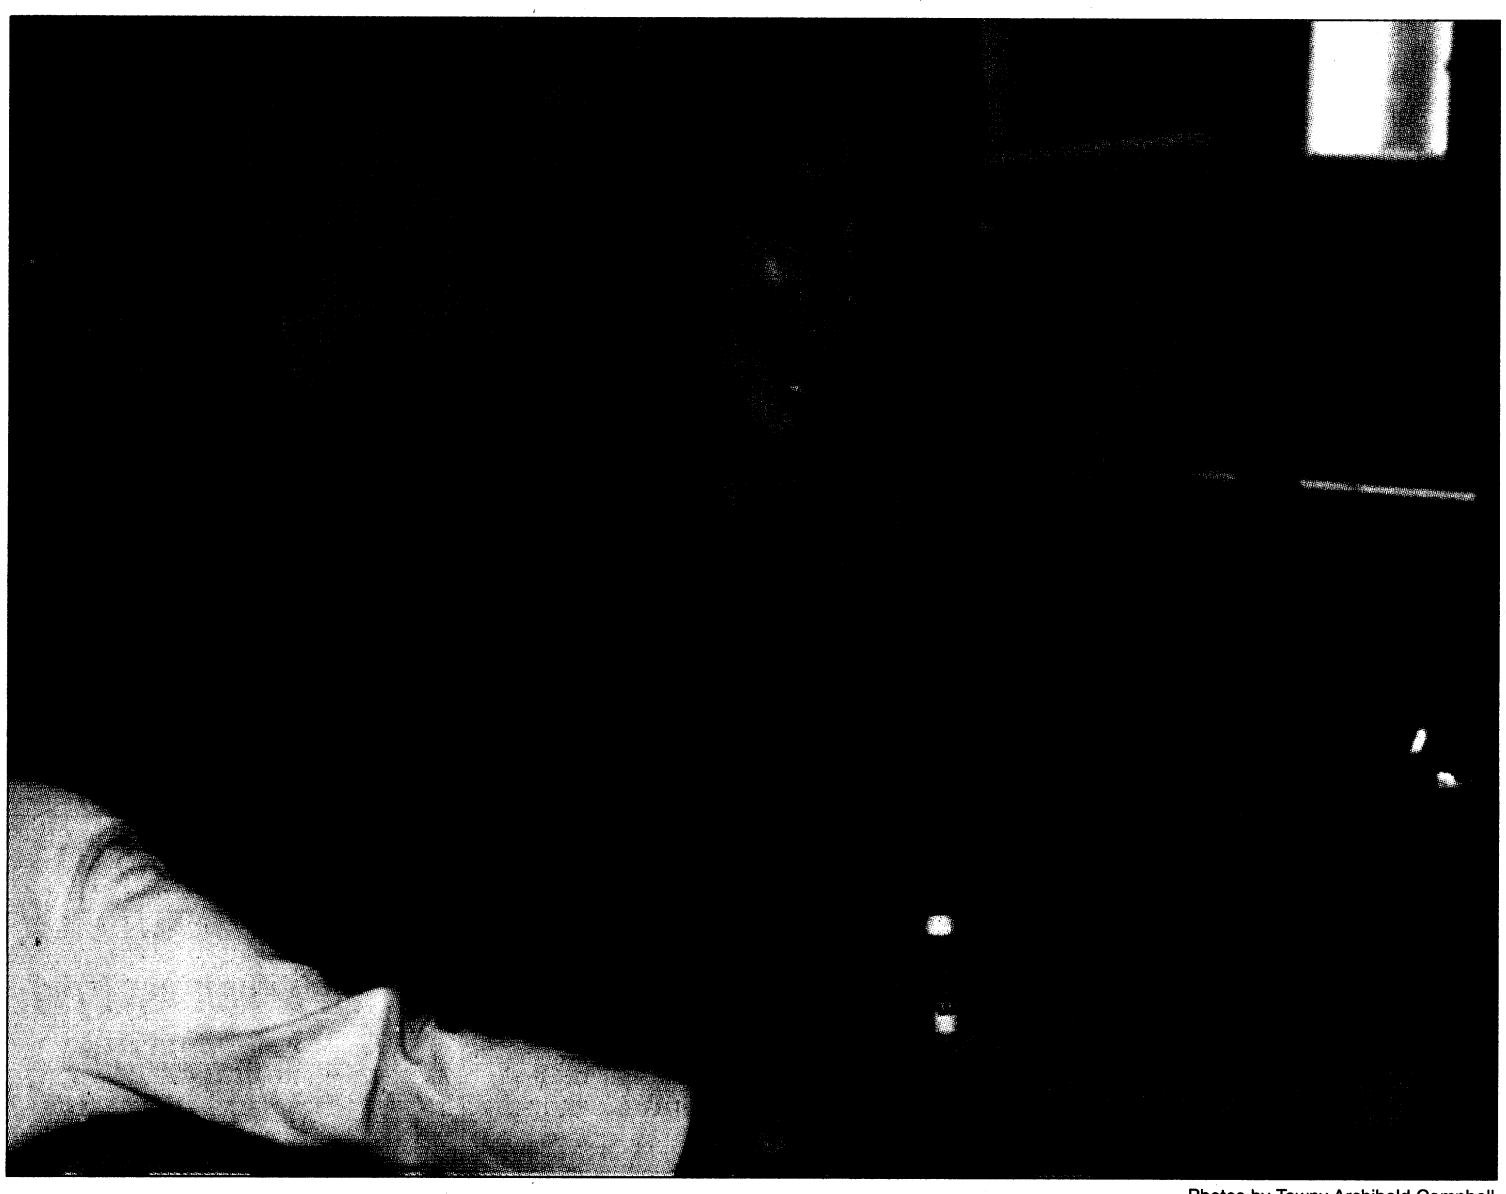
Billie served in the Army for 26 years, so he understands the importance of helping Soldiers.

"When I was in the Army, they didn't provide this service," he said. "I learned to do my taxes on my own."

The couple has seen a lot of changes in the past 13 years — in the center and the tax code. And they've trained hard to keep up with the times.

But change hasn't always come easy to Billie, the old-fashioned one of the two. He still does taxes by hand, while his wife does them on a computer.

Billie stays away from computer at home, too, but that's OK with Lillie.



"He's had the same remote control for years, and he still

Cynthia Hill, a resource teacher with the Columbus State University Math Collaborative, encourages students as they build paper houses during Math Day Wednesday at E.A. White Elementary. Each part of the house symbolized a different characteristic of the student. The project was designed to help them learn to analyze information using symbols.

Math matters

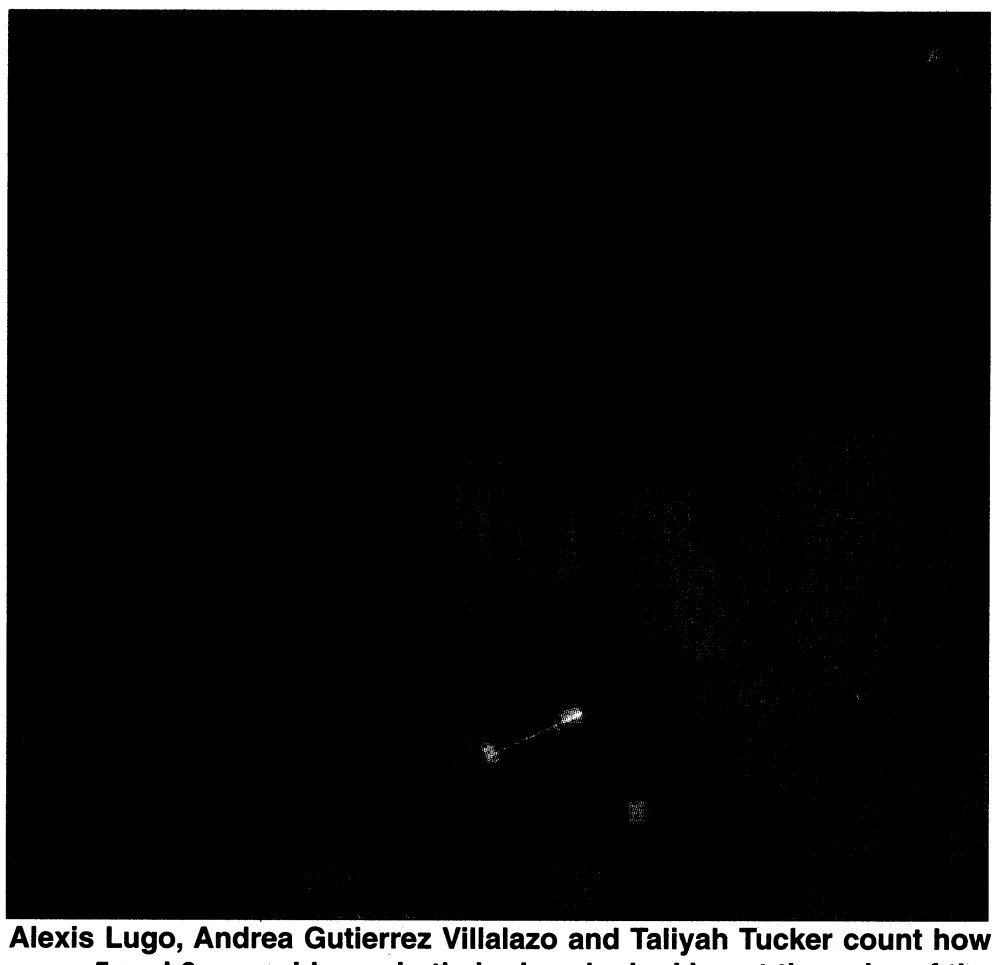
Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

E. A. White Elementary students learned to recognize and use symbols Wednesday and Thursday with help from Columbus State University teachers.

Cynthia Hill, a resource teacher with CSU's Math Collaborative, challenged the students to use shapes as symbols to design a house that would describe the artist. For instance, a red roof meant the artist was 5 or 6 years old, a smoking chimney meant he or she didn't own a pet, and a square-shaped house meant the artist was a girl.

"This introduces algebraic thinking," Hill said. "By introducing symbols, we teach them that things can represent information. It is a fun way to collect, organize and analyze data."

Nan Boyett is the third grade teacher responsible for bringing the problem-solving exercise to the school.



"We decided to have them come out as part of our year's theme 'Math Matters,'" she said.

"We want them to be able to tackle a problem, break it down and come up with a reasonable solution."

Hill started the exercises by reading a book about the Gigglemajigs who found different shapes in a store. The students then became shape-finders themselves.

In the end, each house was unique, and it symbolized a unique child. Hill could describe the artists using the symbols they chose.

"It is a fun way to learn math," said Emily Harvey, a first grader. "I like hard problems, because I have to really put my mind into it — like today."

Alexis Lugo, Andrea Gutierrez Villalazo and Taliyah Tucker count how many 5 and 6 year olds are in their class by looking at the color of the roof pasted on each paper house.

Schools vie for Faith students

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Area high schools are looking for Faith Middle School students to join their student bodies next year.

It's Robyn Hughey's job, as the counselor for eighth-graders at Faith, to help the students and parents decide which school is best for them.

Hughey organized the annual High School Day at Faith so representatives from local public and private schools could meet with parents and students and help them understand their options.

"I started doing this a few years ago as a convenience to Fort Benning parents who weren't familiar with the Columbus area and high schools," Hughey said. "I feel it is important to bring all the high school representatives to the parents on post, so (parents) don't have to get a map and drive around Columbus to find all the different schools."

All students on post are assigned to Spencer High School or Chattahoochee County High School. However, students may attend an area magnet school if they qualify.

"They usually have to have a 3.0 GPA or better, along with teacher recommendations and high test scores," Hughey said. "Eighty percent of the students here will go to the neighboring schools."

Hughey has brochures from each of the schools for students who didn't attend the Jan. 13 High School Day.

"I encourage parents to talk to their sons or daughters, but if they have questions, I welcome them to call or come by and see me," Hughey said. "Just remember, the better the report card, the more high schools they are eligible for."

Celebrate America! designed to benefit families

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

To start off the new year, Family Advocacy and Child and Youth Services offer a series of free events for the Fort Benning community.

The programs are designed to unite families during the tough times that come with deployments, said Rebecca Welch, Fort Benning's Family Advocacy Program manager.

The first in a series of six events, Celebrate America! is scheduled for 3 p.m. Sunday at the Youth Services Center on Main Post.

"We're trying to host events that will benefit those spouses left behind with children and will educate, inform, entertain and serve as a stress outlet for parents and children," Welch said.

"We hope to create a family-oriented environment where parents can bond with their children in a creative and entertaining way."

Celebrate America! is a magic show performed by Magical Debbie, an independent entertainer who aims to educate and entertain children.

"During the show, the children will learn a lot of fun facts of our country's history and presidents," Welch said.

Although the show is geared for children from preschool through 12 years old, Welch said everyone is welcome.

"I know I'm still a kid at heart, and even I'll enjoy it, so there really is no cut-off age," she said.

Shows scheduled for the next few months include:

- Fabulous Family Magic Show, Feb. 13
- Reach For The Stars, March 6
- The Giggle-Including Goofy Magic Show!, April 17
- Circus Berzerkus Puppet Show, May 22.

For more information on the shows, call 545-0892.

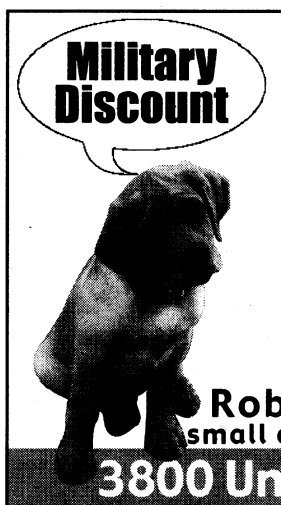
presses the wrong button," she teased. "On a computer, you can't do that."

Billie and Lillie, who were inducted into the IRS Hall of Fame a few years ago, met at Fort Jackson, S.C., when Lillie was visiting her uncle there.

"I lived next to Fort Gordon and never even looked at a Soldier," she said. "Then I went to Fort Jackson and met him."

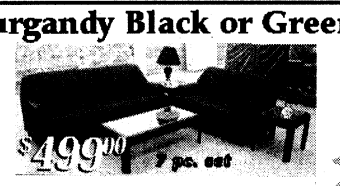
The rest is history. The Galbraiths have four children and have raised two of their grandchildren for the past 10 years.

The couple plans to volunteer at the Tax Center again this year, but at 78 and 75, Bill and Lillie have decided to work at a more comfortable pace. Between doctors' appointments, the Tax Center and the grandchildren, there's time for little else.



The Tax Center, scheduled to open Tuesday, is located in Building 1678 on Ingersoll Avenue across the street from the Wynnsong movie theater and behind the new post chapel construction site.

The hours of operation are Monday, Wednesday, Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.; Tuesdays and Thursdays from 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m.; and select Saturdays.



For more information on the Tax Center or to schedule an appointment with Billie or Lillie, call 545-4267.

TAPS supports family survivors

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

In the wake of a fatal Army National Guard aircraft crash in Alaska in 1992, Bonnie Carroll and the other widows realized their military losses were far different from civilian losses.

So, Carroll founded the Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors, a non-profit organization based in Washington, D.C., for families to get the help they need when a military family member dies.

TAPS offers peer support, crisis intervention, case work, grief counseling referral and an annual survivor seminar and "Good Grief" camp for kids. It's honorary board includes former president Jimmy Carter, former senator Bob Dole and actor Ben Stein.

Survivor Shelly Hall wants to get the word out about the program in light of what she calls the "tragic increase" in the numbers of military widows.

"The numbers are just staggeringly increasing," Hall said. "And as hard as it is, as sad as it is, there are so many out there. TAPS can help bring something good out of tragedy."

Hall should know. She lost her husband, 2nd Lt. Kelly Hall in a plane crash eight weeks after the family arrived in Germany in 1998.

The couple's five children ranged from 6 years to 11 months old. Ironically, Kelly died piloting a C-12, the same aircraft that Carroll's husband died in, in 1992.

After a "less than ideal" casualty notification and casualty assistance experience, Hall found TAPS nine months after her husband's death.

She and the children have been involved in the program ever since and it has made a difference in their lives. Her oldest daughter, Tyler, was recently asked to contact the daughter of a Soldier killed in the Mosul bombing.

"Tyler talks with her by (instant messenger)," Hall said, "and they plan to meet Memorial Day weekend."

TAPS members spend Memorial Day weekend at a survivor seminar and kids' camp in Washington, D.C.

"They talk about their loss," she said. "It's so helpful for children with a new loss, but also to my daughter.

"She loves what TAPS does. She says it makes her feel normal."

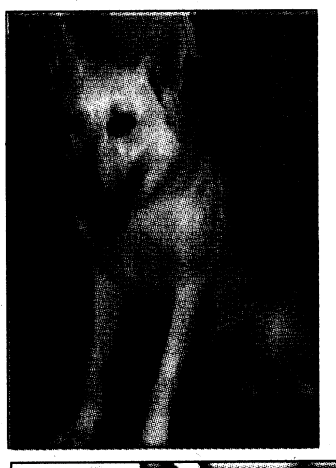
Hall knows her children will experience new grief at every developmental age. She's two classes away from finishing her bachelor's degree at Columbus State University and will immediately start on a masters in counseling. Her specialty — grief therapy for children and adults.

"I've learned some amazing things from TAPS," Hall said, "and I want to get the word out."

Although Hall believes Army casualty assistance officers are aware of TAPS, she'd like the information about the program to become part of the casualty notification process.

"It needs to be immediate," Hall said. "I'd like to see a window available during the process. It would relieve stress on the casualty assistance officer, so they can do their job."

The TAPS Web site has information that helps widows or widowers find out about resources available by state. Hall discovered her children qualify for free college tuition in Michigan, her husband's home state.



Hall and the children recently appeared on a daytime FoxNews program to tell their story and talk about TAPS. Since the show, Hall said men from her husband's 1992 flight school class have donated money to the program and sent photos of Kelly to them.

Since Hall's son, Tony, was only 2 when his father died, she said the fact that he has no memories of Kelly is an issue. He recently wrote a note to his dad on a balloon for his 7th birthday party and released it.

"There's going to be grief in our lives forever," Hall said. "TAPS helps you realize that every grief is different, but every grief is normal."

Volunteers needed to transport veterans

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It will take a very special person to meet the need of local veterans who struggle to make it to their appointments at the VA hospital in Tuskegee, Ala.

Tommy Smith, president of the local chapter of Disabled American Veterans, said there's an urgent need for volunteer drivers to transport vets to and from the Central Alabama Veterans Health Care System.

That's a lot to ask of anyone, Smith said, and it's hard to find someone willing and able — someone who can pass the physical exam, possesses a driver's license and has automobile liability insurance.

Those who are typically willing to volunteer for long periods of time are usually retirees and, therefore, senior citizens. They may not be able to pass the physical exam, or they may not feel comfortable driving a 14-passenger van.

"That's the case," Smith said, "And I just can't get anyone to (commit) that much of their time."

But the position could be shared or rotated by more than one volunteer, said William Petty, the hospital's chief of volunteer services.

The Tuskegee facility has a satellite clinic in Columbus, where veterans receive care for minor illnesses or injuries. But they're referred to Tuskegee when their illness of condition requires more than routine care.

"These are patients who have been put on a regular schedule to see the doctor," Williams said. "They need this kind of care consistently. In some cases, when they can't make it to their appointments, they go without proper care altogether, and their health goes down hill."

For more information, call Smith at 563-2508, or Williams at 1-800-214-8387 ext. 3979.

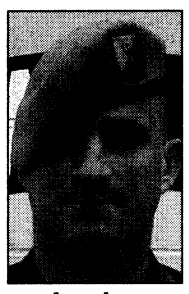
Hard life, simple faith

Chaplain (Maj.) R. Paul Lasley
4th Ranger Training Battalion

REFLECTIONS



Many families at Fort Benning are experiencing difficult and stressful times. Family and relationship stress. Financial stress. Professional stress. Combat and deployment stress, at a minimum, includes the risk of life and death — not to mention the stress of new, single-parent families due to the deployment of a dad or a mom.

Difficult and uncertain days in our lives are stressful. The difficulties and uncertainty affect us as individuals, as families, as husbands, wives and children. Stressful times are best embraced with the arms of faith.

One thing I would encourage everyone to remember during times of unique stress in our lives is this: "Predicate your hope and expectations during the stressful and uncertain days — upon the most basic and fundamental component of your life." For most people, the most fundamental component in our life is faith. The harder life is, the simpler our faith should be. The more murky and complex our lives become, the more important the "fundamentals" of our life become.

As a Christian, I believe God's love and concern for me is best communicated and demonstrated by Jesus' words in Matthew 6:27-28, 32:

"Who of you can add a single thing to your life by worry? See how the lilies of the field grow? They do not labor or spin. Your heavenly father knows what you need, and he will provide it to you."

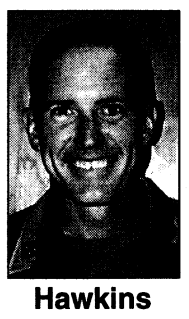
Lasley

In other words, like Walt Disney would say, "all the bare necessities" in life, you can be most certain God will provide. God is not merely a spiritual father figure. He is, in fact, the creator and sustainer of the universe — who loves and knows you intimately, and is concerned about every detail of your life. God is concerned about your spouse, your children and you.

Please, let these uncertain and stressful times in your life become a time when God "comes through" for you. I would clarify that encouragement a little further. If your faith is in Christ (a simple childlike faith in him) and predicated on the reality that Christ died for you, perhaps you will discover or rediscover this wonderful promise to those whose hope is in Christ:

"Yet he did not waver through unbelief regarding the promise of God, but was strengthened in his faith and gave glory to God, being fully persuaded that God had power to do what he promised." (Romans 4:20-21)

Time-tested tips for good goodbyes



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

"You can feel the tension rising, just like the thermometer," he lamented. "We both know that we ought to be making the most of every moment, but it's sooo hard — it's like the stress monster is just waiting to explode at any moment, and I don't want it to — I want to have a good goodbye, not a bad one."

Are you, or is someone dear to you, getting ready to deploy? Do you know what it feels like to watch the invisible deployment monster rear its ugly head when you least want it to?

If so, you're not alone; it's an all too familiar drama that most of us have experienced when faced with a major separation.

There was something in the gut of this Soldier that told him that leaving on a note of friction and fighting was exactly what he didn't want to do, but he just couldn't seem to avoid falling in that ditch. He knew that having a good goodbye was exactly what he needed to happen as he headed out for Operation Iraqi Freedom 3, but he just didn't know how to go about creating one.

Hawkins

How can you have a good goodbye in the middle of so many things pulling you in the opposite direction?

Well, take some helpful hints from those who have gone before you.

First of all, don't forget to touch. Guys, most often for her, gentle, caring, nonsexual touch is money in the bank. For him, ladies, the gift of yourself, physically and generously, is truly the gift that only you can give.

Next, how about playing a game of Top 3. Ask each other, "Hey, what are the top three things I can do for us to have a good goodbye?" Then, just like Pizza Hut, deliver.

Then, creatively make some together time. Plan your own "great date."

It doesn't have to be fancy or expensive — it just has to be romantic and meaningful.

Lastly, don't forget to promise fidelity. Your commitment to stay true to one another needs to be the steel stake driven into frozen ground that keeps you anchored to each other.

Find a creative way to give your mate the gift of your commitment.

Here's some other time-tested ways to earn bonus points with the one you love and ensure that it's a good goodbye:

• Carve out whatever time you can (a minute, an hour, a day, a weekend) to "make a memory."

Capture your gift of time to each other with a special video or photo that you can lean on in the months to come.

• Remember that children do just about as well as mom and dad do.

If you're upbeat and positive, then guess what? The kids will likely follow your lead.

• Ambush your lover with secret surprises as they depart. Hide love notes where she'll stumble across them for days or weeks to come.

Let him guess where the next note will pop up in his uniform or duffle bag. Leave a fun piece of yourself with each other.

Want some personal coaching on more ideas on how to have a good goodbye and coping with deployment? Come see me at the Cross-Roads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill for our new series Deployment S.O.S.: Secrets of Success. Services are open to all.

Post Soldiers invited to fire in tourney

AMU hosts combat pistol competition

Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the Fort Benning Combat Pistol Championship Feb. 4 to 6 at Parks Range. This is the first postwide combat pistol championship conducted in more than a decade.

All Soldiers — regular Army or Reserve or National Guard on active duty who are assigned or attached to Fort Benning — are eligible to compete for the title of Fort Benning Combat Pistol Champion. Personnel can be of any military occupational specialty and rank. No pistol shooting experience is necessary. Army Marksmanship Unit pistol shooters will provide training for all competitors. The competition is free to all Fort Benning Soldiers.

Participants will compete with the M-9 or M-11 pistol. The Marksmanship Unit has a limited number of pistols available for Soldiers who do not have assigned weapons. Ammunition will be provided by USAMU. All firing will be done in battle dress uniform with helmet and individual combat gear (minus body armor and protective mask).

"Combat pistol shooting under arduous and stressful conditions is the consummate application of modern close combat skills," said USAMU Commander Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag. "The Army's experience in the Global War on Terrorism confirms the chief of staff's direction that every Soldier must be a rifleman. The firing skills you will learn and reinforce and the training materials we issue will help you to better prepare yourself as individual combat shooters and to instruct other Soldiers to excel with their sidearms."

The top three finishers in both the Open and Novice Divisions will be awarded plaques. The overall Service Pistol Champion will receive the Commanding General's Marksmanship Cup Trophy award and the Soldier's name will be engraved on the trophy, which will be displayed in Infantry Hall.

Non-distinguished Soldiers who finish in the top 10 percent of the Pistol Excellence in Competition Match will be awarded the Four-Point Bronze Excellence in Competition Pistol Badge, a permanent marksmanship award which can be worn on the Class A uniform. All Soldiers will receive Certificates of Training.

Soldiers who excel in the Combat Pistol Championship may be selected to compete with the USAMU as a member of the Army Service Pistol Team in this year's Interservice and National Championships.

"This is more than a competition. This is three days of excellent training," said Michael J. Behnke, USAMU chief of competitions. "We highly recommend this competition to all Soldiers, especially those who are issued a pistol."

Registration will be at Parks Range

Aerobics class heats up heart rates

Classes just one of many activities at fitness centers

Whether it's getting in shape, staying fit or just letting off a little extra steam, the aerobics classes at Briant Wells Fitness Center offer something for everyone.

Beginner and advanced classes cover a wide range of cardiovascular exercises, including aero mix, step combo, spinning, core crunch, box aerobics and high-step.

"When a person who hasn't worked out in a while comes in, they tell me to take it easy on them," said Rebecca Foist, aerobic instructor. "In these classes you have control."

The classes are designed for all levels of ability and fitness. Foist said the goal is to keep everyone on a bell curve. This means taking the heart rate through a series of ups and downs, strengthening the cardiovascular system.

"The whole point is not to keep you at a high, intense level all of the time," Foist said. "I think the floor exercises are best for beginners because it is easier to learn the moves and control the heart rate."

Most of the regular exercisers in the classes are spouses of Soldiers, both male and female. The classes are small, with about 10 participants.

"These classes are for anyone wanting to make a life change," Foist said. "That's what we're here for."

With the recent deployments, Foist said those left behind often need an outlet for stress.

For many, that includes the consistency of an exercise regimen.

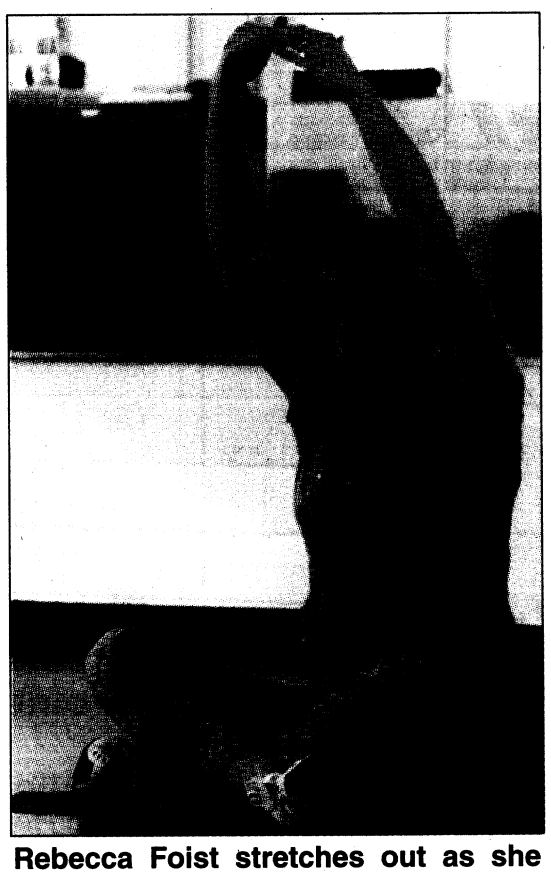
"Exercise is like flossing your teeth," Foist said. "If you want healthy teeth and gums you will make it a habit. Exercise requires the same attention to detail."

Foist said many of her regulars are looking for "me time."

"We are constantly giving to others," she said. "We make ourselves available to our kids, spouse, job, family, the community — give a little back to yourself. It's only an hour."

The fee is $25 per month for unlimited classes or $3 per class.

Besides the aerobics classes, Briant Wells offers a variety of aquatic activities, including swimming lessons, aqua jog, water aerobics, a water safety courses mom and tot classes and senior swim time.



"Water is a hundred times denser than air, so when you swim, you work both sides of the body simultaneously and get a total body workout," said Vivian Pedrozo, who manages the heated indoor pool. "It's also low-impact."

The fitness center also offers racquetball courts, strength training equipment, elliptical trainers, treadmills, stair machines and free weights.

The gym is open from 5:30 to 7:30 a.m. for physical training and 7:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. for general use.

Use of the facility is free for ID card holders and their families.

For more information, call 545-4388 or 545-5709.

Pick a partner. Place a wager. Play eight weeks. That's the premise behind a new board game, The Fitness Challenge — "the game designed for the wannabe exerciser."

And now that we're midway through January and having trouble keeping our resolution to exercise, lose weight, or both, this might just be the solution.

The game's creators, a mother-daughter pair of wannabe exercisers, wanted to provide people with a fun way to start and stick with an exercise program. According to the Web site, www.fitness challenge.com, you're a wannabe exerciser if:

• your health club membership doesn't remember you

• you associate sweat with fevers and the flu

• you use exercise equipment to dry fine washables.

My neighbors are playing the game, which is available in stores around Minneapolis or by ordering it from their Web site. For those who like to support good causes, $1 from each sale goes to the Fitness Challenge foundation, Inc., a non-profit organization that supports charities and organizations promoting health and wellness, medical research and family and childrens' issues.

Participants play at their own levels, either beginner, intermediate or advanced, creating a book from wagering coupons that allow them to choose rewards for beating their partner's workout score.

Exercises come from two lists — star-studded or star-lite — including everything from aerobics to kayaking to yoga.

I'm thinking it's worth a try. According to the list I can get

World-class coach toughs it out for global cause

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Most people are lucky to accomplish one or two things in their life that are truly noteworthy on the grand scale. Lt. Col. John Hoogasian has those one or two and enough left over for three or four less motivated lifetimes.

Forget that he has a doctorate in philosophy. Ignore the fact that he's served more than 30 years in the National Guard, Army Reserves and regular Army. Never mind that he spent 30 years in public education while juggling military service.

All that aside, there can't be much left. Except he is a world-class coach who sits on the United States of America Track and Field National Committee for Pole Vault Development, an initiative of the national track and field team after a brief hiatus from Olympic gold medal dominance in the 1980s.

A former pole vaulter and decathelete, Hoogasian coached for several high schools and colleges, including his current position at Holy Cross College in Massachusetts.

"Holy Cross has become somewhat of a center of excellence for pole vaulting," Hoogasian said. "Many of the country's elite vaulters seek us out for assistance."

He trained national champions like Mike Drummey, a three-time All-American pole vaulter and two-time NCAA champion, who holds a standing New England record of 18 feet 6 and a half inches.

He organized and coached at several elite track and field clinics and is considered one of the top four pole vaulting coaches in the country, which led to his selection on the USATF committee.

He still has an earnest love for the sport that hasn't changed over the years.

"Pole vaulting is unique among track and field events," he said. "They are competing against one another, but also against a bar. They turn to each other for input and advice. It's almost like a brotherhood or sisterhood of coaches and athletes. It can be collegial as well as competitive."

But that has all been put on hold because Hoogasian, remember, is a student of philosophy, and believes the greater cause is more important than self.

After retiring from the Army in 2001, he volunteered to remain available if the country needed him. The call came last year.

He was pulled back on active duty in November and from 6:30 to 9 a.m. Feb. 4. The competition kicks off at Phillips Range at 9 a.m. with an opening ceremony. USAMU pistol shooters will provide classroom pistol training to all competitors that morning at Phillips Range. The training continues that afternoon on Parks Range with live-firing and weapon familiarization.

The Commanding General's Pistol Match will be conducted the morning of Feb. 5 followed by the Excellence in Competition Pistol Match in the afternoon at Parks Range. The Command Sergeant Major's Pistol Match will be shot the morning of Feb. 6 at Parks Range. The awards ceremony is scheduled for 2 p.m. Feb. 6 at Phillips Range.

For more information on the Fort Benning Combat Pistol Championship, contact Behnke at 545-7841 (DSN 835-7841), fax 545-6252 or e-mail michael.behnke@usaac.army.mil.

A copy of the Fort Benning Combat Pistol Championship program and schedule is available on the USAMU Web site at www.usamu.com. Competitors should pre-register by faxing or e-mailing a letter of intent by Jan. 28.

star-studded exercise credit for playing broomball and star-lite credit for leisurely ice-skating.

Walking is also on the list, so maybe I can earn points while walking the dog or hiking in from the far reaches of the Infantry Hall when the parking lot is overflowing on days when hundreds of 3rd Brigade Soldiers are having one of their marathon pre-deployment briefings.

Because the program is designed to keep you exercising for eight weeks, it should be long enough for working out to become a habit.

And the creators gave four exercise tips. Exercise in the morning, park further out, take the stairs and get a buddy.

Hmmm.

I'm off to a good start. Yesterday morning, I had to park halfway to Alabama, something actually possessed me and I took the stairs (all the way to the sixth floor).

Now, all I need is someone to bet against.

Who's game?

Coach: Called for duty

came here to work as the executive officer for the Directorate of Combat Developments.

That meant taking a leave of absence from coaching and his wife of 32 years.

"You have to take a world-wide perspective when deciding what's important in life," Hoogasian reflected.

"A lot of the time in the U.S. we sit back fat, dumb and happy. When 9-11 happened, I felt a personal need to contribute, a sense of duty that was more global than just taking care of things locally. Actions speak louder than words."

203rd deploys in support of OIF III

Forward Support Battalion goes on yearlong mission

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

There were tears, hugs and last-minute phone calls on Kelley Hill Jan. 16, as the Soldiers of the 203rd Forward Support Battalion and other small components from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team prepared for a 12 month or "until mission complete" deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom III.

The 203rd will support the logistical needs of the 3rd BCT, said Lt. Col. Chuck Salvo, battalion commander. Salvo said the 203rd is composed of more than 40 MOSs to support the needs of the 3rd BCT during this deployment.

"This is a very satisfying experience and the Soldiers take deep pride in knowing it," Salvo said. "The Soldiers are very fired up and ready to get this deployment over with."

"This deployment is important to help combat terrorism and keep it from striking

Nine in unit return after year deployment

Tawny Archibald Campbell

There were no tears on Saturday night, only smiles — big, wide, toothy smiles.

"Which one is he? Which one is my daddy?" said Madyson Jordan, 3, trying to figure out which of the Soldiers looked closest to the daddy she remembered.

Suddenly a huge grin crossed her small face as she pointed and said, "There he is. I saw him. I saw my daddy."

Not only was Spc. Justin Jordan, of the 926th Medical Detachment, coming home to his little girl, who once asked if she could be mailed overseas to join him, he also came home to his wife and a 7-month-old son he'd never met.

"It's a big difference seeing him in a picture and touching him now," Jordan said. "My kids are my life and just to see my son for the first time and to come home safe … you can't describe it."

Jordan, along with eight other members of the 926th Medical Detachment and two National Guard units, arrived at Lawson

Soldiers overpaid midmonth

53,000 will pay back hundreds

Eric Cramer
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers who see an extra few hundred dollars in their mid-January paychecks shouldn't spend it.

The Defense Finance and Accounting Service made an error that caused about 53,000 Soldiers to be paid too much in January.

The Army will collect the funds from end-of-month paychecks to restore financial balance.

Most of the affected Soldiers received overpayments of between $200 and $300.

There were 316 Soldiers who received overpayments of more than $500, a DFAS official said.

When the Army "draws back" the overpayments, it will take back the overpayments of $500 and more in two installments, officials said, to reduce potential hardship for Soldiers.

Those who received less than $500 extra will see the drawback in the January end of the month paycheck, said Col. Kenneth Crowder, director of Army Pay Operations for the Defense Finance and Accounting Service.

Those affected are Soldiers who have Army meal cards, but who are authorized for reimbursement for some meals,

Post Tax Center opens doors for Soldiers

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Tax Center is open for business.

Tuesday, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, was an honored guest at the ribbon cutting ceremony marking the opening of tax season at Fort Benning.

Freakley chose the staff's junior Soldier, Pfc. Steven Goodloe, to cut the ribbon during the ceremony.

He told the staff the center's mission is an important one and their hard work is appreciated.

"We do everything in this Tax Center that can be done downtown," Freakley said. "I want to thank you all for coming over here and helping people do their taxes. I get my taxes done here. If you don't, shame on you."

Capt. Luis Morales, Tax Center officer in charge, said the opening day was better than he expected.

"The waiting room was filled before the ribbon was cut," Morales said. "The Tax Center is ready to handle customers and encourages Soldiers to visit the center instead of paying someone else.

"Our services are free, and our staff has received extensive training from the Internal Revenue Service on federal tax preparation and the Georgia and Alabama State Revenue Services Department," he said.

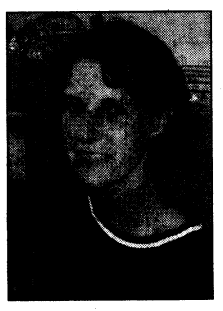
CAN I SAY POOP HERE?

Where's the gift horse?



Melissa House
Bayonet staff

You've all heard it. Taking care of a pet is a big responsibility, a full-time job even. So those of you parents trying to pacify your young (or old) horse-crazy daughters need to keep right on pacifying. Don't give in just yet.

For the past few months, I've had the opportunity to fulfill a childhood dream of having a horse without having to make the permanent commitment associated with forking over a huge sum of money to actually buy the horse. Betcha didn't know you can lease a horse just like you can lease a car.

And horse leases work just like car leases. Once you ride off on the horse, you're responsible for its upkeep – fuel, garage, maintenance. In reality, horse fuel isn't that pricey, but unlike a car, a horse has to be fueled twice a day. Unless you happen to be lucky enough to have a horse garage on your property, you'll have to drive your car to fuel your horse.

Fueling, in itself, isn't too bad. It's just that horse fuel, like any other fuel, has byproducts – gas and, well, poop. So now, you'll need to clean up after fuelings.

Oddly enough, horses produce three or four "byproducts" for each fueling, and it can't be disposed of in cute little baggies. Think shovel and contractor-grade wheelbarrow.

The great trade-off to having your horse fueled, it that it's always ready to go. Why walk when you can ride, right? Jump right on and go for a spin? Not so fast. Horses, unlike cars, get itchy. And without opposable thumbs, the only way to scratch that itch between the shoulder blades is by rolling. In the mud. Which, of course, needs to be removed before you can throw on the "seat saver," your saddle.

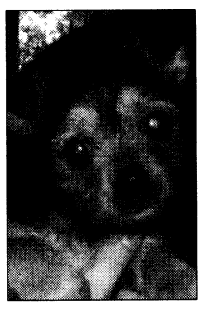
Now, off on your ride. Every car has its quirks. Right now, my turn signals like to go out at the most inconvenient times. Horses have quirks, too. But they usually involve shadows, the wind, and that horse-eating fence on the corner. Never mind the fact that you've passed it a million times. Today, it's evil, and if you're not paying attention, you may wind up on your fanny on the ground.

Horse maintenance is great. Ever tried to get a 1,000 pound animal to swallow a paste that smells as bad as it looks? And don't forget that hooves aren't like tires — good for 40,000 miles. They're giant fingernails and have to be trimmed, shaped and buffed about every six weeks. Horse teeth need care, too. It's called "floating" the teeth and involves jacking open the horse's mouth and going after the teeth with something resembling a small orbit sander on a jackhammer chassis.

I hesitate to mention all those horse "accessories" you'll need. You can't get by with an occasional air freshener. Horses need brushes, combs, picks, shampoo, lotions, creams, fly sprays, bandages, sponges, sheets, blankets, buckets, halters, lead ropes, lunge lines and sometimes even spandex.

Truth be told, a horse is a lot of work. You parents out there with the horse-crazy daughters — you may want to settle by offering to pay for riding lessons. My parents kept me at bay for years that way.

But now, with money invested in fuel, maintenance and all those accessories (except the spandex, it's not for manly horses) that whinny Rick gives when he sees me walking around the corner, well, it's priceless.



Nobody puts Baby in the corner

Baby G. Nash
Special to The Bayonet

I love my human mom. I can't really recall my canine mom, since I left the litter five weeks ago. But boy, my human mom is great.

My human boy is lots of fun. He lets me lick his hair and scratch his head. My human dad just got back from what mom called a deployment. He's pretty cool too, although every now and then I hear him call me a rat, which is quite confusing since I'm pretty sure I'm a dog.

But in my house there are these two other things, which I'm assuming are dogs also. When mom says, "Dogs, come here!" they run to her too. My mom says my brain was fully developed last week, so I'm going to stick with the notion of them being dogs too.

But these "dogs" are nothing like me. They are about a million times bigger, and they don't seem to have the same joie de vivre that I do.

From what I've heard, Bessie is 8 years old, and she is the mom of the boy dog, Brewster, who is 7. They have lived at my house since they were puppies, like me, but they've been around a lot longer.

I've been trying like heck to make these dogs like me. For everyone's entertainment, I will locate my tail, and then proceed to chase it until I'm dizzy. The humans laugh at me, but the other dogs think I'm crazy. I guess they don't remember being puppies since it's been a while.

Bessie is a lot more tolerant, I guess since she's a mom and has had to put up with Brewster bugging her for the last seven years.

She lets me lick her face, and the other day she was lying in the back yard, so I climbed my way up on her back and stood there. I felt like the queen of the world. Then she realized I was up there and that was the end of that.

Brewster, well, Brewster is a force to be reckoned with. I'm not quite sure why he isn't impressed by how cute I am, because every time I go within two feet of him, he growls, a long, deep, guttaral growl. I have to admit, it is very scary, and I back off immediately.

Mom is always telling Brewster, "Bruce, be nice to Baby." I guess he's a slow learner or just maybe he just doesn't care.

I am hoping to slowly but surely win over these dogs. I get bigger every day, so I'm hoping within the next few months they'll actually maybe accept me as a real dog.

I will continue to try to get them to play with me, because they seem to be a bit overweight (Dad, quit feeding them all that venison!)

I will do my best to make them like me. I am a part of the family now, whether they like it or not. I'm here to stay. Nobody puts Baby in the corner.

There's something to be said for change. It isn't always bad. There I was, sitting in a tiny crate with what was left of my littermates, when the biggest change of my short life happened. This nice lady walked in and pointed at me and said, "I want that one!"

Confused, I looked around. She couldn't be talking about me. I was the runt. And being a Chihuahua, that means I was barely there. But, sure enough, she picked me up, and we were on our way after a brief exchange of signatures and a couple hundred bucks.

I was terrified. This lady seemed nice enough, but my sister was nowhere to be found. My little crate wasn't in the car as far as I could see, and this metal contraption on wheels we got into made me want to barf up my puppy chow.

But then we got to this place called "home," and it was warm and the lady, — she called herself "Mommy" — played with me and petted me and gave me my own soft, little bed. Not bad at all.

And then, about a week later, two smaller people came home, and they are just loads of fun. They pick me up whenever I want and push me around in this stroller thing. They let me snuggle up in their laps while they watch something called "SpongeBob" and feed me little pieces of this great stuff called chicken. (Try it if you get a chance.) It only gets better!

For a while, I missed my sister, and I missed our little crate, and I missed the little world I once knew. But now I'm almost 12 weeks old and I know a good thing when I see it.

I've got little toys of my own and nice wet food every day. We go on what Mommy calls "adventures" to our friends' houses and to stores where there are other dogs to see and aisles and aisles of cool doggy stuff.

I've got the run of the house pretty much, and there are only a few simple rules, so this is actually working out to be way better than my old house.

No one paid attention to me there. No one loved me because I was the runt. No one rocked me to sleep and let me under the warm covers when it was cold at night. I was scared there, but it was all I knew.

Now I'm a big boy, and I've got a mommy and a daddy and a Haley and Courtney who just love me and love me and love me. They think I was the best Christmas present ever and swear they won't ever take me back to my old house.

Even when I have what they call "accidents" (I'm not sure exactly what the big deal is about that — there's nothing accidental about it), they just show me where to go next time. I thought for sure I was a goner when I pulled a number two on Mommy's bed, but I tried really hard to remember the rules after that and things are going fine now.

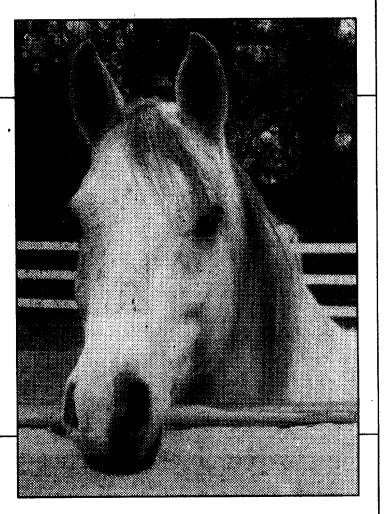
They are so patient with me.

I try to tell my people they are the best Christmas presents ever too, but I can't talk like they can, so I just lick them and wag my little tail until I fall over, and they laugh.

What I'm trying to say is, change isn't always bad.

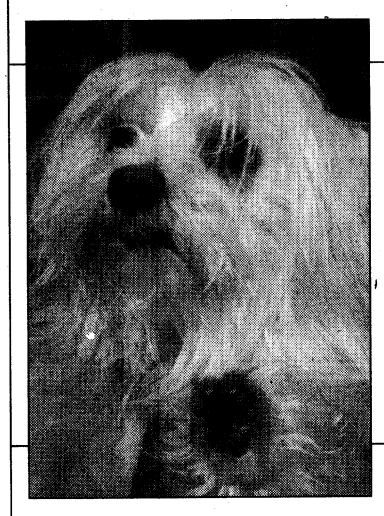
Sometimes it is scary, and sometimes you aren't always sure what's going to happen. But a lot of the time it works out and ends up being really cool.

So if you have to move somewhere new or do something different, keep your tail up, be brave and remember to count your blessings!

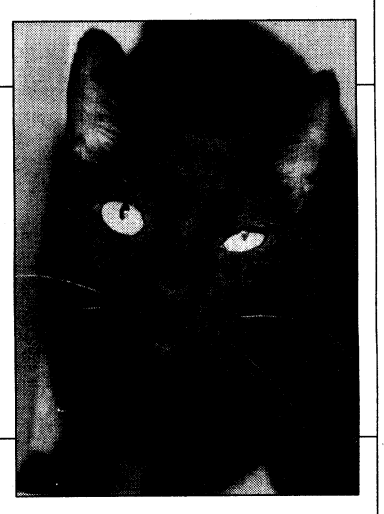


Oh yeah, if you've never had a pet before, there are a lot of us out there looking for someone to love. If you get a chance, stop by the local pound and see if you can't find your next best friend. Remember, change can be good!

VARIOUS VOICES

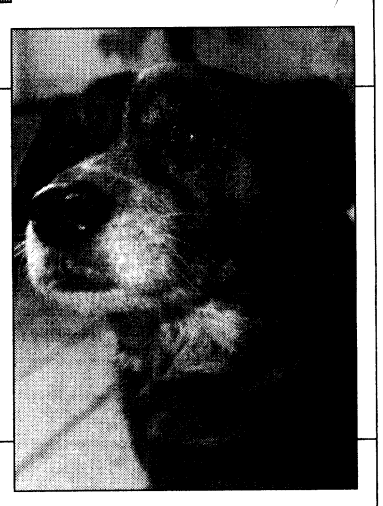


What are your pet peeves?



Baby G. Nash, Australian silky terrier — "I hate being caught flagrante delicto while relieving myself inside. Yeah, I know I should go outside, but sometimes it seems far for my puppy legs. It's also been too cold outside lately."

Riicoshey (Rick) Hildebrand-House, Arabian — "I can't stand it when Melissa combs the dreadlocks out of my mane. I worked so hard, rolling in the mud to get them just right, and then she gets rid of them and gives me sissy braids to keep my hair flat."



Cody Tasker, Maltese — "I don't like to be left alone. When other dogs come around, I want to sniff them and bark at them, but my owner, Norma, won't let me. But she lets me get up in her truck and watch the traffic all day. I love that!"

Freckles, domestic short hair — "I live at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. They won't let me eat the weight management dog food, even though it's my favorite. I don't like it when people call me she, I'm male. Why do people insist on calling all cats she?"

Matti Sheldon, golden retriever mix — "I hate when my owner, Ronnie, puts the gate up and makes me stay in the kitchen. She makes me take a bath after I roll in the mud."

Emily Mitten, cocker Spaniel — "I don't think my owner, Doug, gives me enough treats. I would eat them all day if I could. I also wish he would stay home and play ball with me all day."

MLK's message still inspires

King honored with singing, speeches

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. commemorative service was held Jan. 13 in a packed Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

The guest speaker was the Rev. Otis B. Moss III, pastor of Tabernacle Baptist Church in Augusta, Ga. Newsweek called Moss "one of God's foot Soldiers, committed to transforming the lives of youth."

Moss said if it weren't for King, he wouldn't be here. King introduced his parents to one another.

"So, I literally wouldn't be here if (he) hadn't hooked them up," he said.

But having King as his parents' matchmaker is not Moss's only claim to fame. His extensive resume includes a bachelor's degree in religion and philosophy from Morehouse College, where he was student body president and named by the NCAA as an All-American track and field athlete.

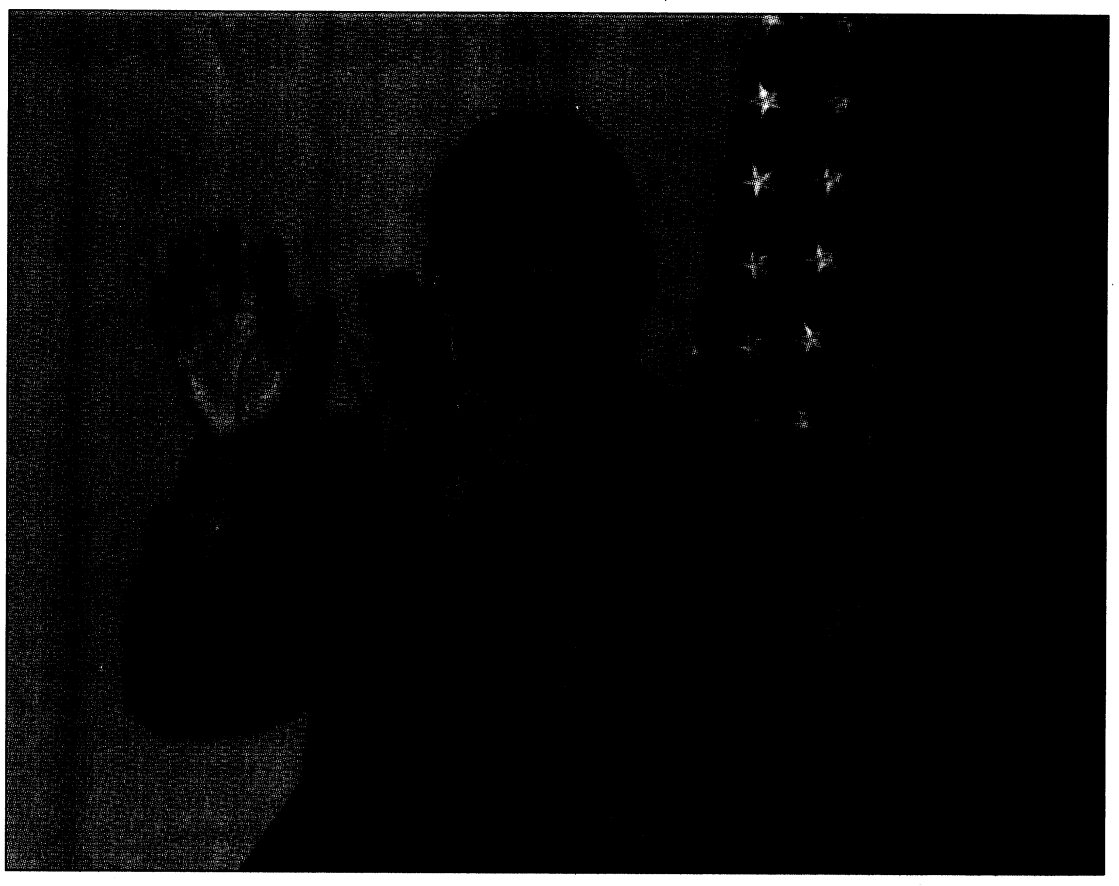
He earned a master's degree in divinity with a concentration on ethics and theology at Yale, and was selected for the Benjamin Mays Scholarship and the Yale University Magee Fellowship. He attended seminary and earned his Ph.D. in religion and social change at the University of Denver.

Moss has spoken at events and churches in South Africa, Puerto Rico, Egypt and across the United States. He has been honored with various awards for his work with youth and political organizing.

In his address, Moss focused on King's legacy in the Civil Rights movement and his efforts to help the poor help themselves.

Paraphrasing King, Moss said, "We are to be on the side of those who are oppressed throughout the world. We need to break down every barrier that keeps us from being who God wants us to be."

The event included remarks from Commanding Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, an invocation by Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin, and a dramatic presentation of King's speech, I See the Promised Land, performed by Shaw Infrastructure's Danny Whitehead.



Moss encouraged the audience to search for the presence of God in their lives, and railed against materialism.

"Don't ever confuse 'bling-bling' with blessings. A blessing is knowing that God is standing with you. Remember, God is not some kind of cosmic bellhop, there to pick up your luggage with all your 'bling-bling' in it," Moss said.

He said America still has work to do in the realm of race relations.

"I don't know when things will change, but I know the footsteps of change are visible in the sand," Moss said.

The audience gave Moss a standing ovation.

Annette Fournier

The Rev. Otis B. Moss received a standing ovation after his speech Jan. 13 in Marshall Auditorium.

Entertainment was provided by Rev. Antoine Paden, singing His Eye is on the Sparrow.

The Stower's Elementary School Chorus sang the national anthem and Lift Every Voice and Sing, with impromptu accompaniment by the audience.

The winners of Faith Middle School's "I Have a Dream" essay contest were recognized with certificates awarded by Freakley.

The first place winners, Laura Becker, Ta'keyah Royal and Kaneisha Sigears, read their essays.

Former commander of 1st Corps, Ft. Lewis, speaks on post

General says, 'Remember the basics'

Master Sgt. Paul Ebner
Public Affairs NCOIC

A former commander of 1st Corps and Fort Lewis, Wash., addressed a full-house at Marshall Auditorium Jan. 12, as part of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate's Combat Leader Speaker Program.

Retired Lt. Gen. George Allen Crocker, a Vietnam veteran, spoke about preparing for combat by offering a list of what he considered things every Soldier should know today, tomorrow and yesterday.

When you don't know what to do, go to the list, Crocker said. The first on his list was "physical fitness, physical fitness, physical fitness." Physically fit Soldiers have a better chance of surviving a battlefield injury, he said.

"My gosh, for that alone, I would try to stay physically fit and push my Soldiers to be fit."

He urged the audience to meet the Army standard.

"A lot of study has been done on the current standards. They are good standards," he said.

> "That weapon is your baby. You should know how to assemble, disassemble, reduce stoppage and maintain it blindfolded. Be an expert with your weapon. Marksmanship counts."
> Retired Lt. Gen. George Crocker
> Former commander of 1st Corps

Crocker discussed marksmanship next. "We are all about shooting weapons and killing the enemy," he said. "You have to hit what you shoot at, whether it's firing artillery, a tank or your own weapon. You have to hit him to kill him. We don't ever want to shoot to scare." Combat support and combat service support units must also maintain marksmanship.

"That weapon is your baby," Crocker said. "You should know how to assemble, disassemble, reduce stoppage and maintain it blindfolded. Be an expert with your weapon. Marksmanship counts." The difference between American forces and foreign forces is leadership, Crocker said. Leadership development was third on his list.

"Average people will excel with good leadership," he said. "Put a lot of time into developing leaders. Don't be a one-man show. Leadership development is a leader's legacy." Knowing the basics was the fourth point on Crocker's list. In the Infantry, basic skills are combat, fire and maneuver drills. "You need to know what you will do at the small unit level when you encounter the enemy," he said. " You need to know the simple things, like where the enemy is, where your men are and what they can do? There is a lot of technology today, but don't forget the basics."

Military Zone warned by post

Post reviews Zone's selling practices

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Military Zone, an electronics store located in a kiosk at the Peachtree Mall, was reviewed by the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board Dec. 14, after two Soldiers filed complaints.

The Soldiers said they were taken advantage of when the business charged them 19.2 percent interest on laptops, which will amount to $760 in interest by the time they finish paying for the computers.

Soldiers also said they were overcharged for the SONY VAIO K25s.

The laptop's market value is between $1,495 and $1,659, but after taxes and interest on the three-year contract, the Soldiers will each pay $5,184 for the computer.

Their contracts state that if the laptop is returned, the Soldier is still responsible for 30 percent of the purchase price, amounting to $1,187.

Dec. 4, the same day the Soldiers filed their complaints, Military Police investigators visited the business and reviewed its policy on financing Soldiers.

Military Zone's owner, Stuart L. Jordan, said the Soldiers knew what they were agreeing to when they purchased the laptops, and he does not claim to sell products for the lowest prices.

"Military Zone exists to offer electronics for people who have bad credit or no credit," Jordan said.

"If someone has good credit we encourage them to buy their computer elsewhere, but most of our customers have been turned down by stores like Circuit City or Best Buy," he said.

"We are offering a service to the community by helping people rebuild their credit."

Jordan said the finance companies he works with take a risk accepting a contract with someone with bad credit, so he is therefore justified in charging higher prices.

Military Zone has been selling computers and electronics to active duty military, retirees, and government employees since August 1996, according to its Web site.

Jordan said he gets repeat buyers and referrals from customers who have been pleased with the computer and service from Military Zone.

Military Zone was able to produce several customers who said they were satisfied with its services and products.

Jordan said that Military Zone sells Sonys because they rank highest in customer satisfaction, and he wants to please customers. He plans to start financing customers with good credit to expand business and avoid further problems with post.

The company does not accept cash or checks, so all transactions must be financed.

Jordan said his business practices are legitimate, and there is no sign posted in his store stating that customers are getting the best prices available.

In a report to the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board submitted by Military Police investigator, Sherry L Davis, Jordan said it is legal to charge higher prices and interest rates to people with bad credit.

The business has not been placed off limits. The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board voted to send a letter to Military Zone, warning the company to use fair business practices with Soldiers.

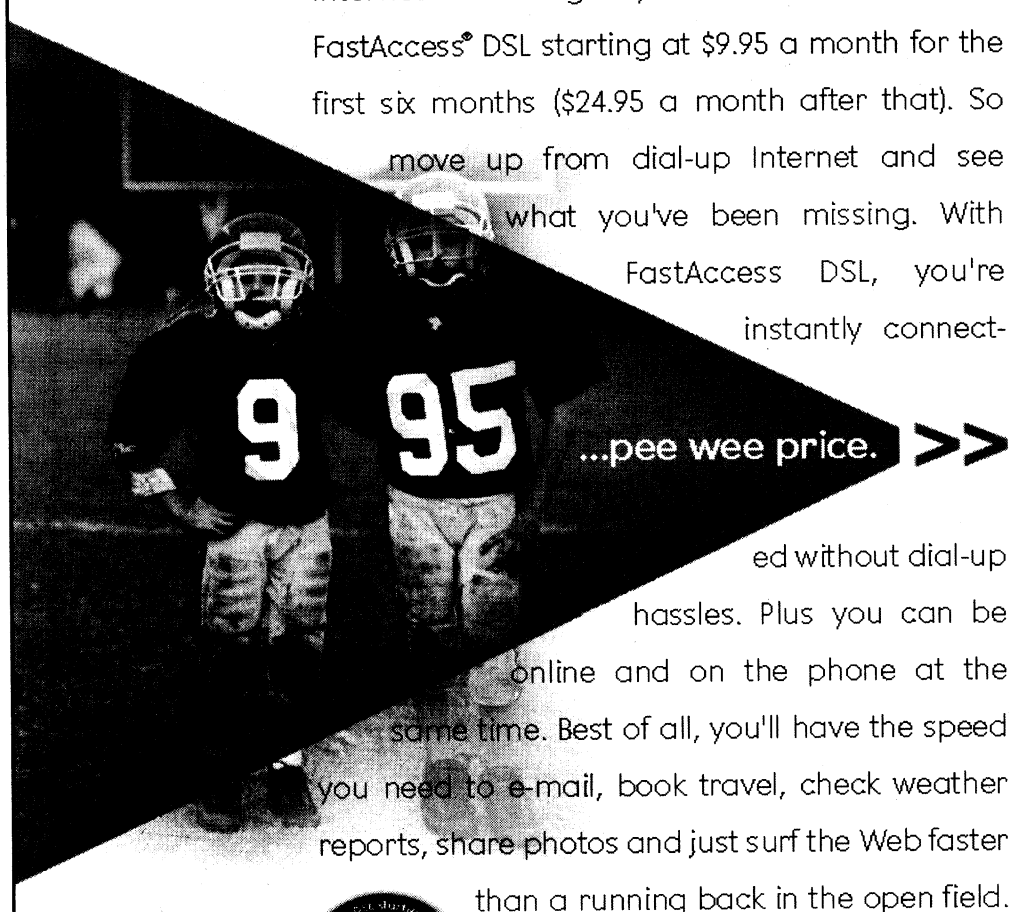
Lounge no longer off-limits

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Cellars Lounge on Victory Drive was removed from the off-limits list after the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board voted Dec. 22 that the lounge had taken sufficient measures to improve the quality of the business.

In October, Military Police conducted an investigation of the property to check security measures, surveillance equipment, identification cards, employees' urinalysis results, and records for criminal activity.

Another off-limits business appeared before the board to ask to be removed from the off-limits list.



The Chopstick House, formerly called the China Inn and the China King Express, was barred because of improper advertising on post. The business changed ownership in May, but the transaction is not final, and the board determined that merely changing the name does not warrant allowing them back on post.

the home front while simultaneously bringing democracy to the Iraqi people," said Command Sgt. Maj. Edwin Matos, the battalion's sergeant major.

Matos said the Soldiers trained for 18 months to prepare for this deployment.

The training included rotations to the Joint Readiness Training Center, the National Training Center and extensive training in convoy live fires.

"The Soldiers are very prepared," Matos said. "The toughest part now, as always, is leaving behind our families. I can only say their real motivation is getting back to them."

Capt. Katherine Klus, with the 703rd Forward Support Battalion, Fort Stewart, Ga., drove to Fort Benning to say goodbye to her husband of just five months, Capt. Matthew Klus. Katherine deployed to Iraq Jan. 17, the day after her husband, in support of OIF III.

While she watched her husband board the bus that took him and his Soldiers to Lawson Army Airfield, Katherine said she hopes that once they get back from this deployment, they'll be stationed together.

"It's easier to see him go knowing I'm going out there, too," Katherine said. "We're not going to be together or see each other while we're out there, but if we're going, it's better to go at the same time."

This is the first deployment for Spc. Bernina Blackwater, 203rd chaplain assistant.

"I won't say I'm not nervous, because I am," she said.

"But I believe in the mission, and I know I'm going with good Soldiers."

A number of small components from other units on Kelley Hill flew out with the 203rd FSB, including Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, and the Brigade Troops Battalion.

Army Airfield at 11:30 p.m. Jan. 14, 365 days after leaving. A handful of family members welcomed them home.

"There were happy faces on the Soldiers and the family members," said Col. Jeff Haun, 14th Combat Support Hospital commander.

The detachment was responsible for inspecting latrines and dining facilities, assessing base camps, teaching field sanitation and conducting entomology research in Iraq. The job, Jordan said, was to keep the Soldiers clean and healthy as possible.The families planned to spend the long weekend celebrating a late Christmas before the Soldiers return for a weeklong reintegration, followed by block leave.

"When I get home, I'm going to tickle my daddy and watch a scary movie with him," said Tayleen Jimenez, 7. "When I saw my daddy, I almost screamed because I just love him so much. Now I'm going to have him here for always."

1,000th Stryker rolls out in Anniston

Grant Nulle
Army News Services

WASHINGTON — Production of the 1,000th Stryker vehicle was celebrated Jan. 12 at Anniston Army Depot, Ala., 33 months to the day former Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki signed for the first Stryker there April 12, 2002.

The Stryker program is a good example of "public-private partnerships," said Col. Alexander Raulerson, depot commander. He said the program matched the expertise of government and the private sector to improve the Army.

Anniston assembles two-thirds of the Strykers, and the other third are built in London, Ontario, Canada.

Anniston hosts an assembly and test station operated by Stryker partner General Dynamics, said Bob Baker, Anniston plant manger with General Dynamics. The depot provides facilities and laboratories for test analysis of materials and paints all the vehicles.

Of the 1,000 Strykers built thus far, almost 800 have been fielded, said Col. Peter Fuller, Stryker project manager. Another 1,451 are on order.

> "It lends itself to missions in Iraq, where moving forces rapidly to points of conflict as quickly as possible is needed."
> Col. Alexander Raulerson
> Depot commander

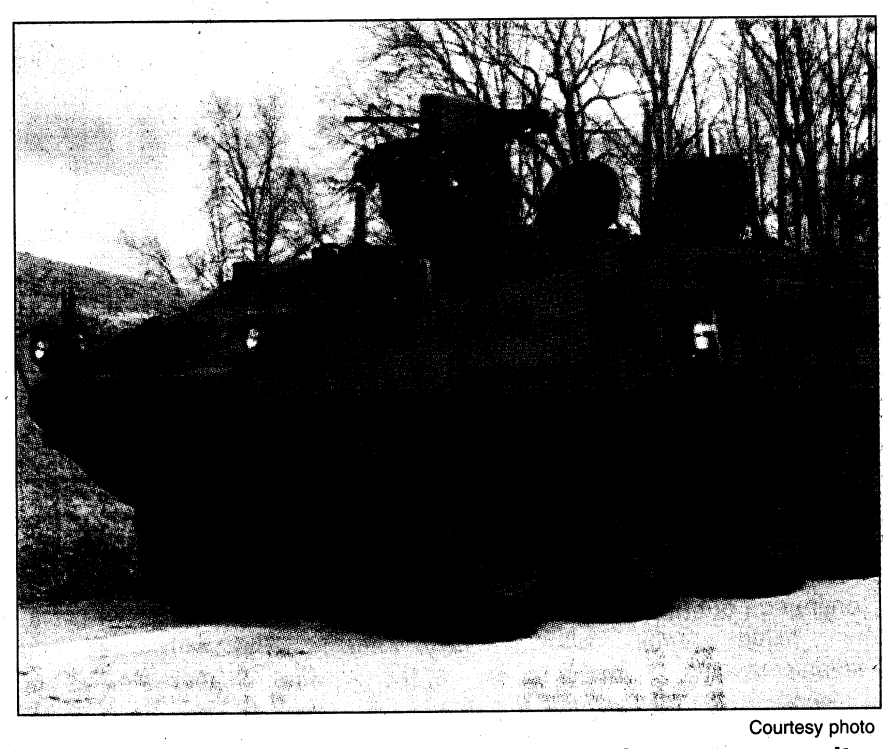
Fuller said the 311 Strykers that have been in Iraq for the last 14 months have logged more than 4 million miles, with an operational availability rate of 97 percent.

Soldiers have praised the Stryker's ability to move swiftly and quietly. Sgt. Benjamin Herman, a team leader from 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry Regiment, a Stryker Brigade Combat Team, said Iraqis call SBCT Soldiers "Ghost Riders" because they arrive with little noise or warning.

Wheeled and mobile, the Stryker takes Soldiers point-to-point as safely as possible and much faster than any other conveyance, said Raulerson, who has observed the Stryker's performance in Iraq. "It lends itself to missions in Iraq, where moving forces rapidly to points of conflict as quickly as possible is needed."

The Stryker is the first major combat system purchased by the Army since the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle was acquired in 1988.

The second SBCT rotated to Iraq in November. 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division from Fort Lewis, Wash., operates Strykers brought over by 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division.



The Stryker has ten variants, eight of which have been built and fielded. The Infantry Carrier and Reconnaissance vehicles add up to more than half of those produced so far, totaling 565.

There have been 36 anti-tank missile guided vehicles produced, 53 fire support vehicles, 42 engineer squad vehicles, 129 mortar carrier vehicles, 55 commander's vehicles, and 60 medical evacuation vehicles.

Baker said the mobile gun system and the nuclear, biological and chemical variant are slated to go into production this summer.

Lt. Gen. Joseph L. Yakovac Jr., military deputy to the assistant secretary of the Army for Acquisition, Logistics & Technology attended the activities this week at Anniston.

"The Stryker is an example of the Army's effort to transform itself into a more agile, deployable and lethal force," he said.

Guardians allowed to shop at post commissary

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Children of deployed Soldiers can continue to benefit from commissary shopping thanks to a Department of Defense directive.

The directive allows an "agent" to shop on behalf of an authorized commissary shopper — whether the child of deployed Soldiers — someone who needs assistance shopping, or someone who cannot shop because of illness or disability.

Though agent authorization is a DoD program, it is managed at each military installation.

"We have a standard form letter that is good for one year," said Lisa Colson, Fort Benning's ID card section supervisor.

In order to process an authorization on behalf of a child, Colson said her office must have a copy of the parent's deployment order, a copy of the child's ID card and a guardianship document.

Colson said her office has issued very few agent authorizations for this deployment, possibly because many guardians are already ID card holders.

Commissary manager Gary Hensley said the authorization is a great way to help caregivers save on groceries.

"If you're a grandparent and suddenly have three kids to feed, (this) makes it easier," he said.

> "If you're a grandparent and suddenly have three kids to feed, (this) makes it easier. It becomes expensive to provide meals. This way, they continue to get the benefit."

"It becomes expensive to provide meals. This way, they continue to get the benefit."

Hensley said sales at the commissary are booming because prices off post are so much higher.

Because the commissaries are subsidized by the government, shoppers can purchase items for less.

"No grocery store can sell items at cost," he said.

"(The commissary) is quite a savings — 25 to 35 percent."

Hensley sees authorized agents in the store regularly, although most of them are shopping for elderly retirees instead of children.

"This is not anything new," Hensley said.

"We've been doing this for years. We just have more husbands and wives on active duty now.

"I'm glad we do it," he said.

Overpaid: Soldiers will return money

he said.

Crowder said an incorrect date entered into a computer database caused the error.

He said DFAS was changing to the new rate for meal reimbursements when a data entry error backdated the change to 2004.

"It (the computer system) tried to apply the new rate to the entire previous year," Crowder said.

He said DFAS is notifying the affected Soldiers via their Army Knowledge Online accounts and through their chains of command.

"Every Soldier involved will receive a personal e-mail explaining what occurred and what the corrective actions are," Crowder said.

Taxes: Filed free for ID card holders

The biggest problem the center faces every year, said Carrie Snyder, a civilian volunteer, is having people come without their W-2s.

Although places off post prepare taxes with paycheck stubs, they always make customers bring their W-2s back to the office once they get them.

To avoid delays in preparing taxes, here is a list of the documents required by the Tax Center staff:

- Active duty, retired, or dependent ID card,
- W-2 Forms, 1098s, or 1099s,
- Social Security card for dependents and individual filing,
- Last year's tax return paperwork,
- A spouse or designated agent must have a power of attorney to file taxes for a deployed Soldier,
- If child care is paid, obtain a receipt from the child-care provider along with the provider's Social Security number,
- Deployed Soldiers can leave someone with a power of attorney to file their taxes, but the Soldier's bank account information is required for direct deposit.

When Soldiers deploy, the April 15 deadline is suspended until the Soldiers return, Morales said. Upon return, they have 180 days to file their taxes.

All customers will be served on a walk-in basis at the Tax Center, which is located in Building 1678 on Ingersoll Avenue across the street from the Wynnsong movie theater.

The hours of operation are from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Wednesday, Friday; from 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays; and every other Saturday after this weekend.

For more information on the Tax Center, call 545-4267.

Avionic mechanics tune chopper circuitry

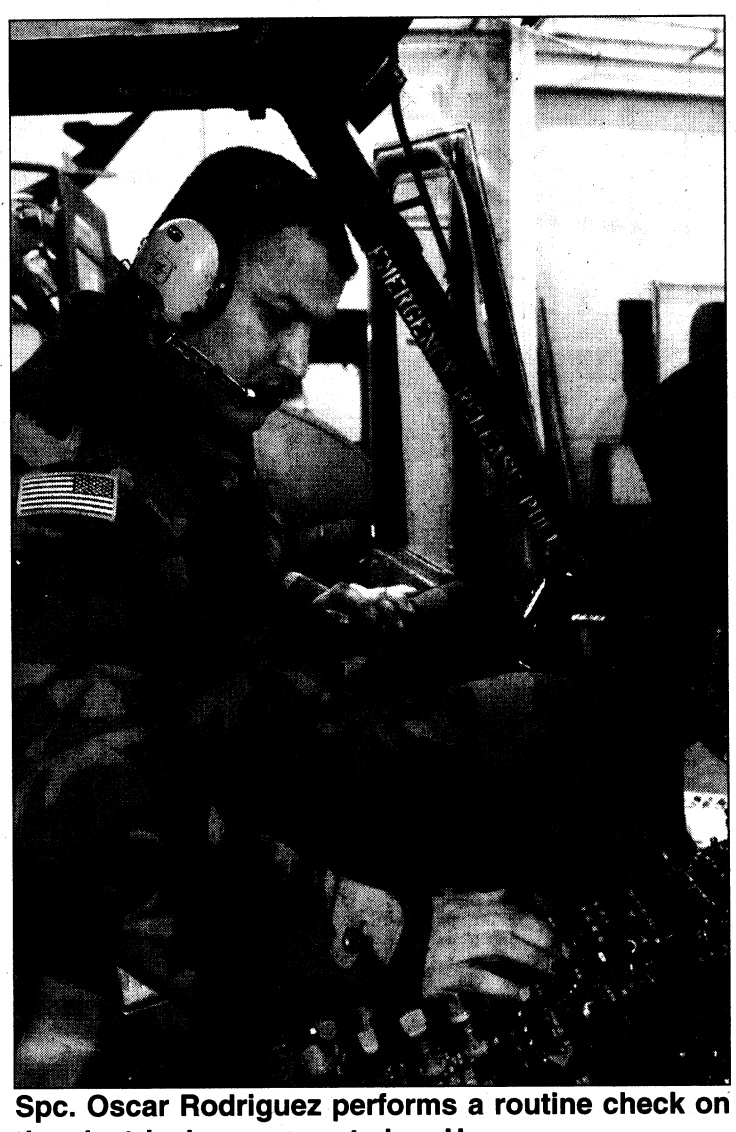
15Ns repair anything with wires

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Not many people look for an MOS with a long school when joining the military, but that is exactly what Pfc. Josh Steele wanted — a long MOS and one where he could work with his hands.

The perfect fit was becoming a 15N, avionic mechanic.

After eight months in Fort Eustis, Va., Steele was assigned to the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) at Fort Benning.



"The work is really technical," he said. "We work on classified radio equipment, electronics and wiring, anything to do with navigation systems, radar, and night vision scopes — anything that contains a circuit board."

The mechanics are trained to work on Hueys, Blackhawks, Apaches, Chinooks, Kiowa Warriors and Littlebirds.

Avionic mechanics are called in when there's a problem with the airframe, Steele said. They assess the problem, isolate the fault and replace or repair the part that's gone bad. In the civilian world, they'd be called an electrical technician.

"I picked this MOS because I wanted a challenge, and it's one of the top ten longest (training) MOSs in the Army," he said. "I didn't want to do the same thing every day."

Steele's dad has a master's degree in electrical engineering, so he grew up around circuit boards and wires.

Spc. Oscar Rodriguez performs a routine check on the electrical components in a Huey.

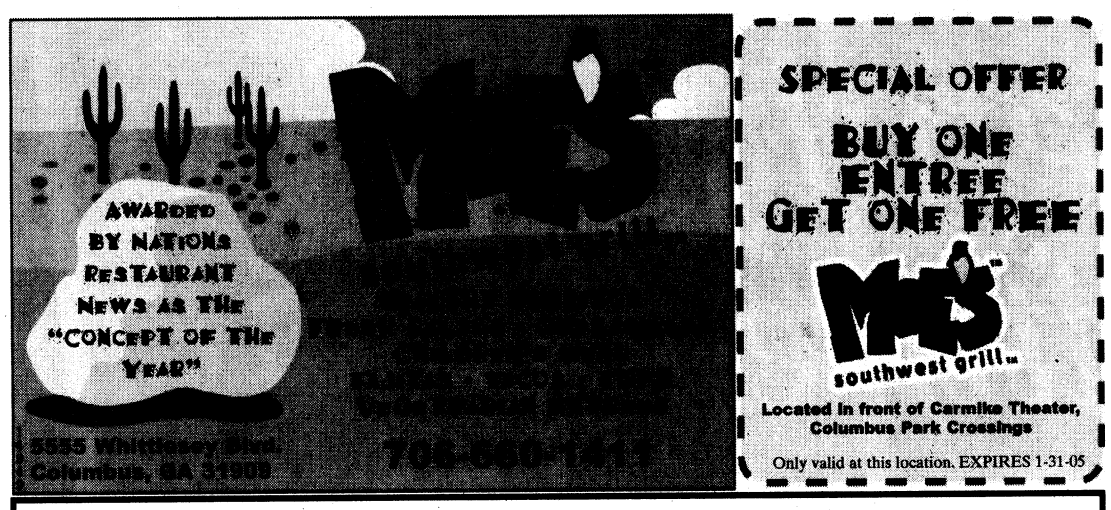
"I wanted something in electronics where I could have good opportunities in the civilian world without a college degree," Steele said.

Sgt. Ed Belanger, of the 249th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), is a National Guardsman. His unit was activated to take the place of the 498th when the main body deployed to Iraq last year.

He's had the unique experience of working as an avionic mechanic for the government and his guard unit.

"I've been doing this for thirteen years," said Belanger, who chose to go into avionics while in the Marine Corps. "I can fix anything a wire goes into."

Avionic mechanics may start out working in a hangar but can graduate to a crew chief position and be part of the chopper crew where they help on the intercom, perform maintenance flight checks on the ground, and then make sure things work in the air.



The job description changes daily, Belanger said, and that's what keeps the 15Ns excited to come into the hangar.

"It's not boring here," Steele said. "There is always something new to figure out or learn."

Attention Armed Forces Personnel:

Are you nearing the end of your service with no plan for when you get out?
I was there, and I can help.

Dear Fellow Soldier,

My name is Carl DiBene, and I am a former Army SSG. I am writing this letter to warn you about some of the challenges you are going to face when you leave the military.

Challenge #1: "Get Rich Quick" schemes

Many companies make huge promises that you'll gain large incomes and personal wealth overnight. What they won't tell you until it's too late is that you will have to exploit your friends and family to get them, and no one wants to do that.

Challenge #2: Officers Get the Best Opportunities

Employers believe the Officers run the US Military. Just look around. The best jobs offered at job fairs, at the ACAP locations, and in the Decision Times are for Jr. Officers. I saw one company that offered management positions to the Officers and stuck the enlisted in truck driving positions. I don't think that's right. Are we supposed to believe that a NCO who managed 5 to 120 soldiers through peacetime and combat operations doesn't have the skills to manage a couple of truck drivers? That's just ridiculous!

Challenge #3: Security in Kuwait or Iraq, Police Officer, or Military Post Gate Guard

As I filled out a police application after I left the Army, I thought, "Why would I trade in one uniform for another and risk my life now with strangers? Why would I continue to work weekends, holidays, and night shifts, especially since I would start off at the bottom of the rank structure?" I was a Staff Sergeant (P) when I got out. I didn't want to go back to the bottom!

Challenge #4: The Career Search

On average a soldier will go through 6-7 jobs in their first five years out of the service. Why? Many don't know exactly what they want from a career or they will just take a couple of different jobs until they figure it out.

Ask your self this question…

Do you want:
1. Job Security?
2. The opportunity to prove yourself in a growing career?
3. An education that improves your skills?
4. A comfortable retirement when you are ready?
5. Personal wealth for you and your family?

If you are a Junior NCO, Specialist, Senior NCO, or Sergeants Major; ETSing or retiring soon, we have an opportunity for you. Your MOS is not a factor; your attitude is!
If you answered yes to 1 or more of these questions then you MUST spend two hours with me. Explore a career with us on Thursday 27 January, 2005 from 1900-2100. Success Group International will sponsor their Crossfire Seminar at the Wingate Inn on Rollins Way in Columbus, GA. Army allots millions to curb divorce statistics

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

One in five married Soldiers sent off to war will get a divorce.

Recent studies, showing a 21 percent divorce rate among couples where one spouse has been sent off to war, has the Army looking into ways to curb the trend.

The Army allotted $2 million for a variety of marriage programs including retreats, free babysitting, counseling and vouchers for romantic getaways to places like the Opryland Hotel in Nashville, Tenn.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Peter Frederich, director of the Chaplain Family Life Center, said the program, "Building Strong and Ready Families," began about 1998 in Hawaii and was picked up and pushed forward by the chief of chaplains and the vice chief of staff of the Army.

In May of 2003 (the Army G-1) authorized a program to help the first group of Soldiers coming home from Iraq, Frederich said.

"All Soldiers are afforded the opportunity to go on the marriage retreat after they return from block leave," Frederich said.

Each unit is responsible for making sure its Soldiers know the program is available. When the 3rd Brigade came back from Iraq, Frederich said, there were dozens of retreats.

"(Deployments) are very stressful on families," Frederich said. "It is hard on people, just being gone, but there is a big effort on the part of the military to help Soldiers and their families."

In his experience, Frederich said high divorce rates generally come from Soldiers who have had no marital help. With the support from the military, Soldiers could have a 0 percent divorce rate.

"The Army knows it has an issue, and it has put a lot of money and thought into treating its Soldiers," he said.

For families who have just sent a Soldier off on a deployment, Frederich suggests tapping into support systems, church groups and family readiness groups.

"The single best thing you can do is hook in with groups you are familiar with, so you don't get isolated," Frederich said. "I would also say to hang in there — dark nights are followed by bright mornings — and stay connected whenever you can."

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Divorce rates have soared to 21 percent among war veterans, according to a Dec. 29 Associated Press report.

Phillip Clipps, a Reserve Soldier, is a veteran of the deployment cycle. His wife, Staff Sgt. Lisa Whitney, has deployed three times in nine years, leaving him home with the kids.

She returned from a yearlong deployment to Iraq Jan. 14 with the 926th Medical Detachment.

"It takes a lot of communication," Clipps said. "You need to communicate via e-mail, instant message, talk on the telephone and send pictures."

When a spouse first leaves, Clipps said, it's important to spend a lot of time with family, go out to the movies, eat out, help kids with their homework and talk about the person who is gone.

"The biggest adjustment is for her, not me," Clipps said about his wife's return. "She has been in charge ninety eight percent of the time, and now she has to play mom, handle work, cook dinner and be a wife.

"The (hardest part) for me is to give her space," he said. "You don't want to be an overbearing spouse. They need to be comfortable and gradually return to home life. That takes communication too, and it takes time."

Frederich said he regularly sees couples trying to reconnect after spending so much time apart.

"They have had dramatically different experiences and may struggle to understand and appreciate each other," Frederich said.

Whether a couple has been married 15 years or 15 days, they will face some challenge during a deployment, Frederich said. "What it means is you are human. It's not the end. It's more like, 'Welcome to the club.'"

For help dealing with the stress of deployment or reintegration, call the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760 or visit Building 1206 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Abu Ghraib MP found guilty, sentenced to decade in jail

Prosecutor says hour of punishment has arrived for Graner

Spc. Matthew Chlosta
Army News Service

FORT HOOD, Texas — The first Soldier to face a contested court-martial for abuse at Abu Ghraib Prison was sentenced Jan. 15 to 10 years in a military prison.

A military panel, consisting of four officers and six enlisted Soldiers, convicted Spc. Charles A. Graner Jr., 372nd Military Police Company, of five charges: conspiracy, dereliction of duty, maltreatment of detainees, assault and committing indecent acts.

In addition to the prison sentence, Graner will be reduced to private and dishonorably discharged.

Four other Soldiers previously pleaded guilty to charges stemming from the Abu Ghraib incident.

Graner contested the charges against him, claiming he was following orders.

Graner's civilian lawyer, Guy Womack, argued, "MI (military intelligence) was in charge (at the prison) and Specialist Graner was just following orders," throughout the weeklong trial.

The panel was apparently not swayed by the defense team's arguments after hearing testimony from some of the Iraqi prisoners who had been photographed and mistreated by Graner in 2003.

Also called to the witness stand were other Soldiers from Graner's unit who had pleaded guilty and agreed to testify in courts-martial plea agreements.

They included:

• former Staff Sgt. Ivan Frederick, (demoted to private, sentenced to eight years in prison, bad conduct discharge),

• former Spc. Megan Ambuhl, (reduced in rank to private, bad conduct discharge)

• and former Spc. Jeremy Sivits, (demoted to private, sentenced to one year in prison, bad conduct discharge).

Also testifying was former Spc. Armin Cruz, 205th Military Intelligence Brigade, who also previously pleaded guilty and was sentenced to eight months in prison, reduced to private, and given a bad conduct discharge.

During pre-sentencing arguments early Jan. 15, the chief prosecutor, Maj. Michael Holley, III Corps, addressed the panel.

"The hour for Specialist Graner to be punished is finally here," he said to the panel, composed of Iraqi combat veterans.

"I ask that you don't forget the victims. The enemy needs rallying points. I can't begin to tell you how much this affects how our captured Soldiers will be treated.

"Do not let the men who have fallen in honor be mentioned in the same breath as the name of the accused," he said.

Graner, who did not testify in the proceedings, was allowed to give an unsworn statement during the sentencing phase.

"He (Graner) never said, in three hours, he was sorry," Holley continued. "You now can make him responsible for his actions."

How do I love thee? Let me count the ways ...

Sexually transmitted diseases

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Sexually transmitted diseases are as old as the act by which they are shared. The bacteria, viruses and protozoa that cause them have evolved into sometimes annoying, sometimes miserable and, sadly, sometimes deadly assailants.

There are seven major diseases people can contract and share in the name of love: genital herpes, chlamydia, gonorrhea, human papillomavirus, trichomoniasis, syphilis and HIV/AIDS.

Let's take a look at what these love bugs can do.

Genital Herpes

Herpes is one of the few STDs that has no cure. The Centers for Disease Control estimates that 45 million Americans, or roughly 20 percent of the population over the age of 12, are infected with genital herpes.

Many people exhibit no symptoms and, unaware they have it, spread it to every person with whom they have sexual contact. Those who do exhibit symptoms usually have their first outbreak two to four weeks after they are exposed.

The disease is characterized by:

• open sores on the genital, anal or oral mucous membranes,

• outbreaks which happen about four to five times in the first year after exposure and then gradually become less frequent and less severe,

• fatal complications for infants who contract the disease during birth.

While there is no cure for herpes, antiviral medications and suppressive therapy can reduce the severity and frequency of outbreaks.

Chlamydia

The CDC estimates 2.8 million people are afflicted with chlamydia each year. It is known as the "silent" STD, because only about 25 percent of those infected exhibit any symptoms at all.

The disease is characterized by:

• symptoms that appear one to three weeks after the initial exposure,

• unusual vaginal discharge, burning during urination, lower abdominal pain, nausea, fever and bleeding between periods in women,

• discharge, burning, itching and painful, swollen testicles in men,

• increased risk of pelvic inflammatory disease, or PID, in women.

About 40 percent of women who contract chlamydia and go untreated end up with PID, which can cause permanent damage to the fallopian tubes and uterus, leading to chronic pain and infertility. It also increases the risk of a potentially fatal ectopic pregnancy.

An ectopic pregnancy occurs when a fertilized egg begins to develop outside the uterus.

Gonorrhea

Gonorrhea is another bacterial STD. The CDC reports about 700,000 cases a year. Most people infected with the bacteria experience mild symptoms or none at all.

The disease is characterized by:

• painful urination, increased discharge and bleeding between periods in women,

• an increased risk of PID,

• burning, a white, yellow or green discharge and swollen, painful testicles in men. It can lead to epididymitis, a painful condition which can cause infertility.

Untreated, gonorrhea can spread to the blood and joints, becoming a life-threatening condition.

HPV

Human papillomavirus is a condition caused by any one of more than 100 types and strains of viruses, according to the CDC. About 30 of those viruses are transmitted sexually.

Most people infected with HPV will have no symptoms and will clear the infection naturally without consequence. However, 10 of the 30 sexually transmitted viruses that cause HPV are high-risk viruses that cause serious complications.

The disease is characterized by:

• abnormal PAP results in women,

• severely increased risk of cancers of the cervix, vulva, vagina, anus or penis,

• in some cases, genital warts, small or large, which sometimes resemble cauliflower.

The CDC reports there are 20 million people infected with HPV, the most common STD. About 50 percent of sexually active adults will contract the disease at some point in their lives.

Trichomoniasis

Trichomoniasis is caused by a single-celled protozoan parasite. It is the most curable STD and is fairly common. The CDC reports about 7.4 million new cases a year.

Men rarely experience any symptoms and frequently pass the infection to women without knowing they have the disease. Symptoms take between five and 28 days to appear.

The disease is characterized by:

• temporary irritation, slight discharge and slight burning after urination or ejaculation in men,

• frothy yellow-green discharge with a strong odor, irritation, itching and lower abdominal pain in women.

Syphilis

Known as "the great imitator" because it's symptoms mimic those of many other conditions, syphilis is a three-stage disease with serious, potentially fatal complications if untreated.

The disease is characterized by:

• a first stage in which a firm, round, painless sore forms at the site where the bacteria entered the body. Sometimes there are multiple sores. The sore is small and usually goes unnoticed.

• a second stage characterized by rashes. Usually the rash consists of red or reddish-brown bumps on the palms and soles of the feet, although other rashes may form anywhere on the body and may look different. Sometimes they are so faint, they go unnoticed.

• other second-stage symptoms like fever, swollen lymph glands, sore throat, patchy hair loss, headaches, weight loss, muscle aches and fatigue. The second stage symptoms will resolve on their own with or without treatment.

• if untreated, the disease enters a third stage. Late stage syphilis does silent damage to internal structures like the brain, nerves, eyes, heart, blood vessels, liver, bones and joints. This damage is permanent and sometimes progresses for years before it causes poor coordination, paralysis, numbness, gradual blindness, dementia and death.

Pregnant women infected with syphilis have an extremely high rate of stillbirths, and babies who contract the disease during birth can die in weeks if they are not treated.

HIV/AIDS

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome is caused by the Human Immunodeficiency Virus.

HIV can be contracted when infected blood, semen or vaginal secretions come in contact with broken skin or mucous membranes.

Once in the body, HIV slowly reproduces over time until it starts affecting the body's immune system. Once the infected person's immune system becomes weakened to the point it can't fight off viruses, cancers and bacteria, he or she is diagnosed with AIDS.

The disease is characterized by

• an extremely long incubation period before symptoms appear — sometimes a decade or more.

• a susceptibility to infections of any kind. AIDS sufferers often contract rare forms of cancer and animal diseases because their bodies can't fight off even the simplest infection or cancerous growth.

• an extremely high mortality rate. Although there are drugs which can suppress HIV for years, and many people live for long periods of time without developing full-blown AIDS, most people eventually die from the complications of the diseases they catch as a result of the syndrome. The disease is incurable.

It is estimated by the CDC that there are about a million people living with HIV or AIDS in the United States. They also estimate that between 180,000 and 280,000 of those people don't know they are infected.

As of 2003, 524,060 Americans have died from AIDS.

So, those are the major players in the STD world. Wanna know how you can avoid getting caught with your pants down at the doctor's office?

Abstain from having sex until you are in a long-term, monogamous relationship with someone who has been tested and given a clean bill of health.

A lot of you won't do that. So if you have an "active" sex life, at least be smart about it. Try following these suggestions:

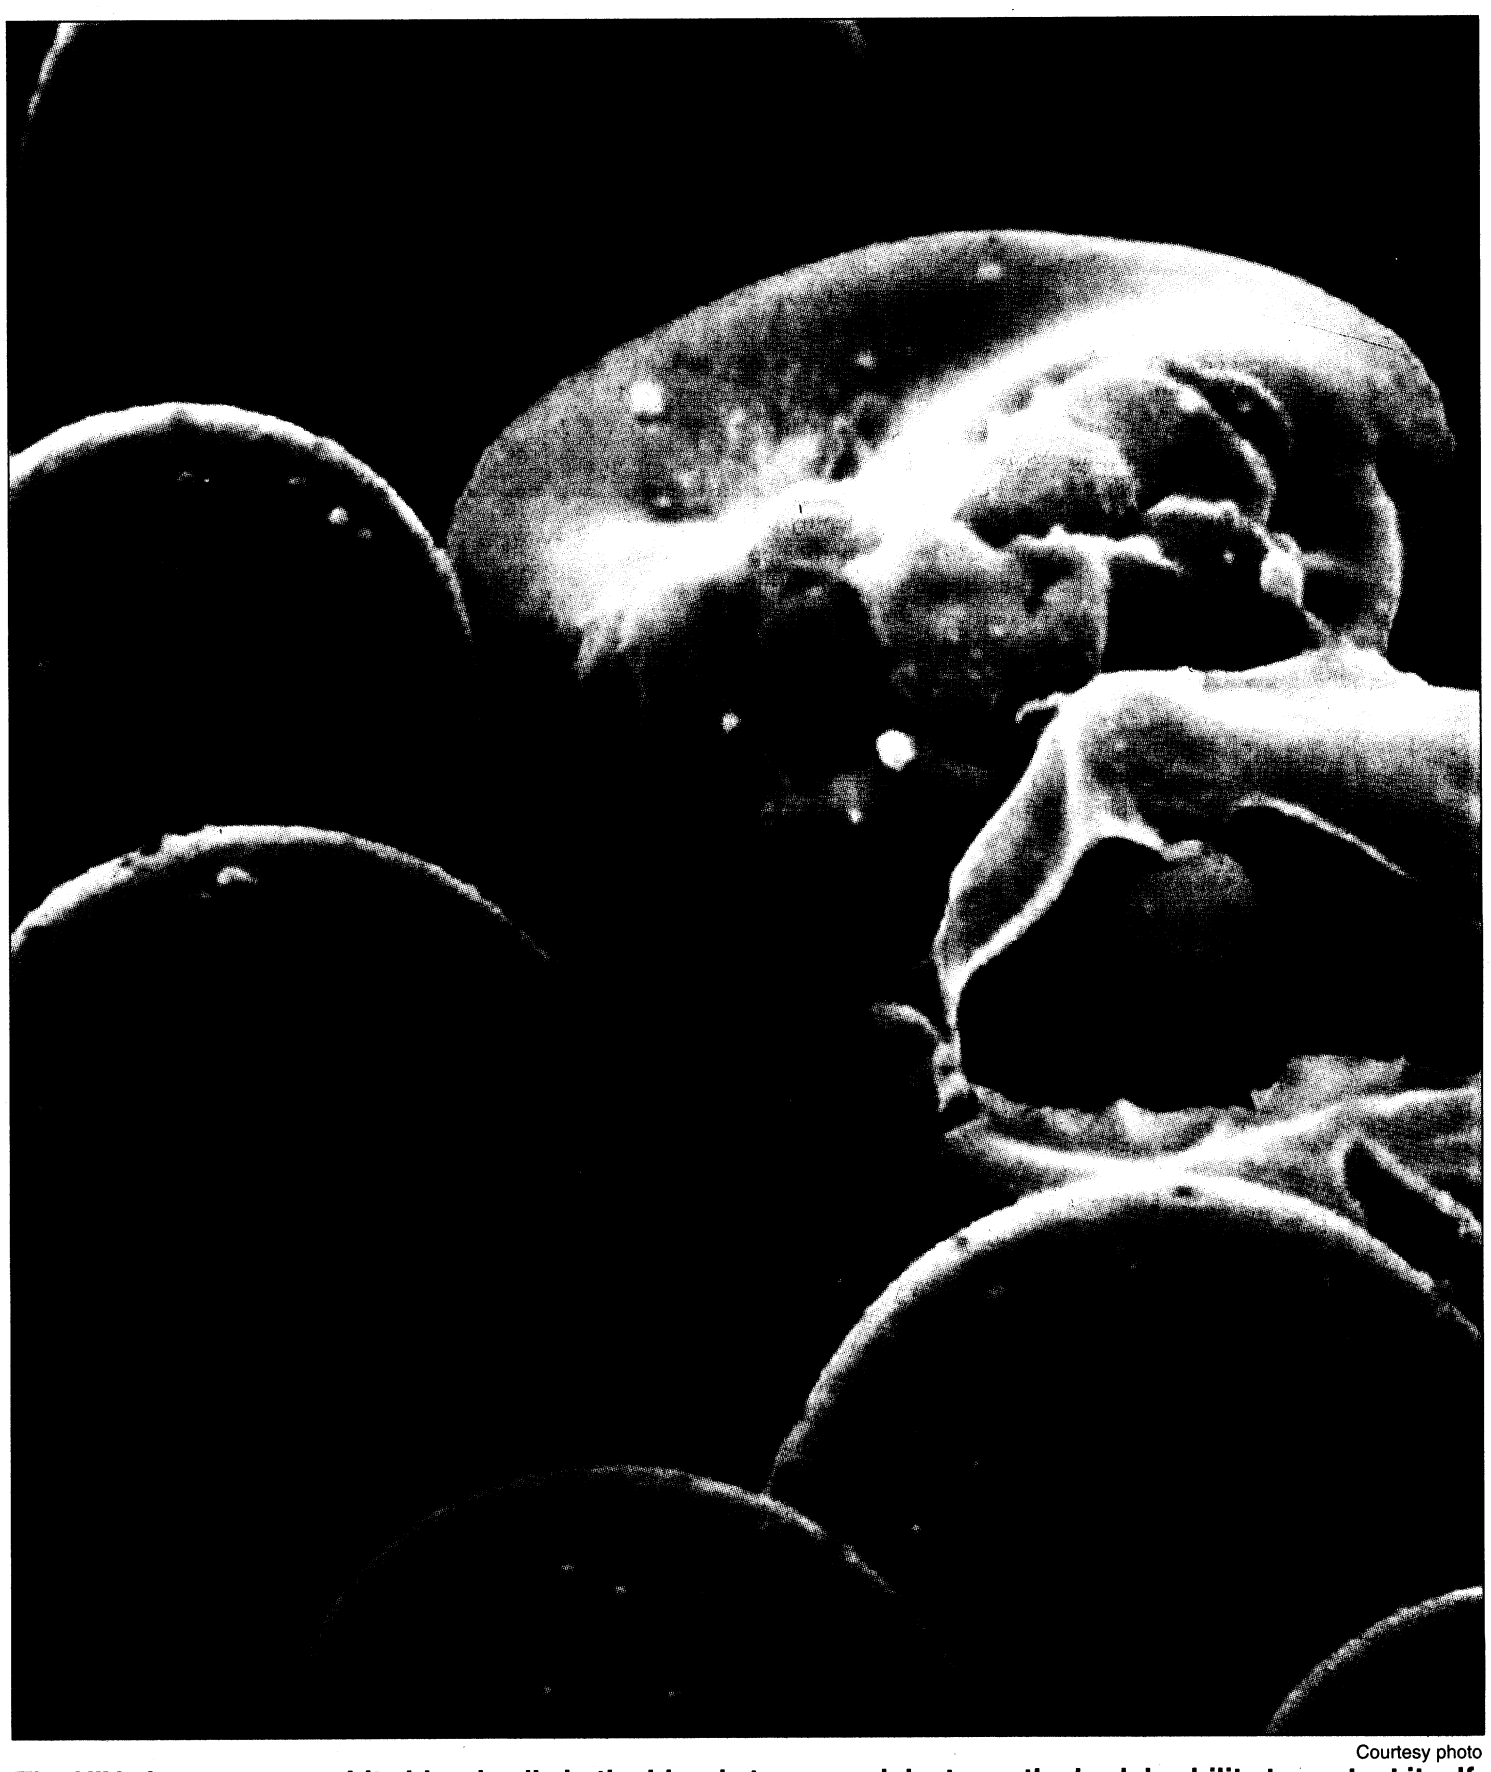
• Limit your number of sexual partners — it's an odds game you are playing with your life.

• Before sleeping with someone, ask them to get tested. It isn't unreasonable considering what's at stake.

• Always use protection. Condoms are by no means a fool-proof protection, but they help.

• Most of these diseases can be transmitted easily by oral sex. Use protection. Yes, you can get herpes on your eye. It's a mucous membrane.

• Get tested. Regularly. Lots of symptoms don't show up in carriers. You could be destroying your body without even knowing it. Or worse, you could be giving those diseases to a lot of other people. If you are in the military, testing is free. If you are not, there are clinics. No excuses.



• Even if you are married, get tested now and then. You never know.

• If you think something is wrong, see a doctor. Don't ignore it and wait for it to go away on its own.

So, if you are gonna do it, do it smart.

Minimize your risks, use protection, get tested and get treatment if needed. The longer you wait, the worse it gets.

Your ability to reproduce and enjoy sexual activity can be compromised by these diseases. Some are deadly, and it isn't only your life you are risking.

Pathfinders wrap-up final training

Pathfinder School students conducted end-of-course testing near Fryar Drop Zone Tuesday.

The week's field training exercise wrapped up the three-week course. It consisted of nearly nonstop drills in identifying, constructing and controlling helicopter and airplane landing zones.

The students were scored in two positions, team leader and team leader assistant, and had to complete several tasks within predetermined time limits.

"We break them up into twelve-man teams and then give them an hour of planning time," said Staff Sgt. John Foster, Pathfinder School cadre member. "During the planning time, they have to construct a sandtable, figure out what they are going to do, issue a warning order and then an operation order.

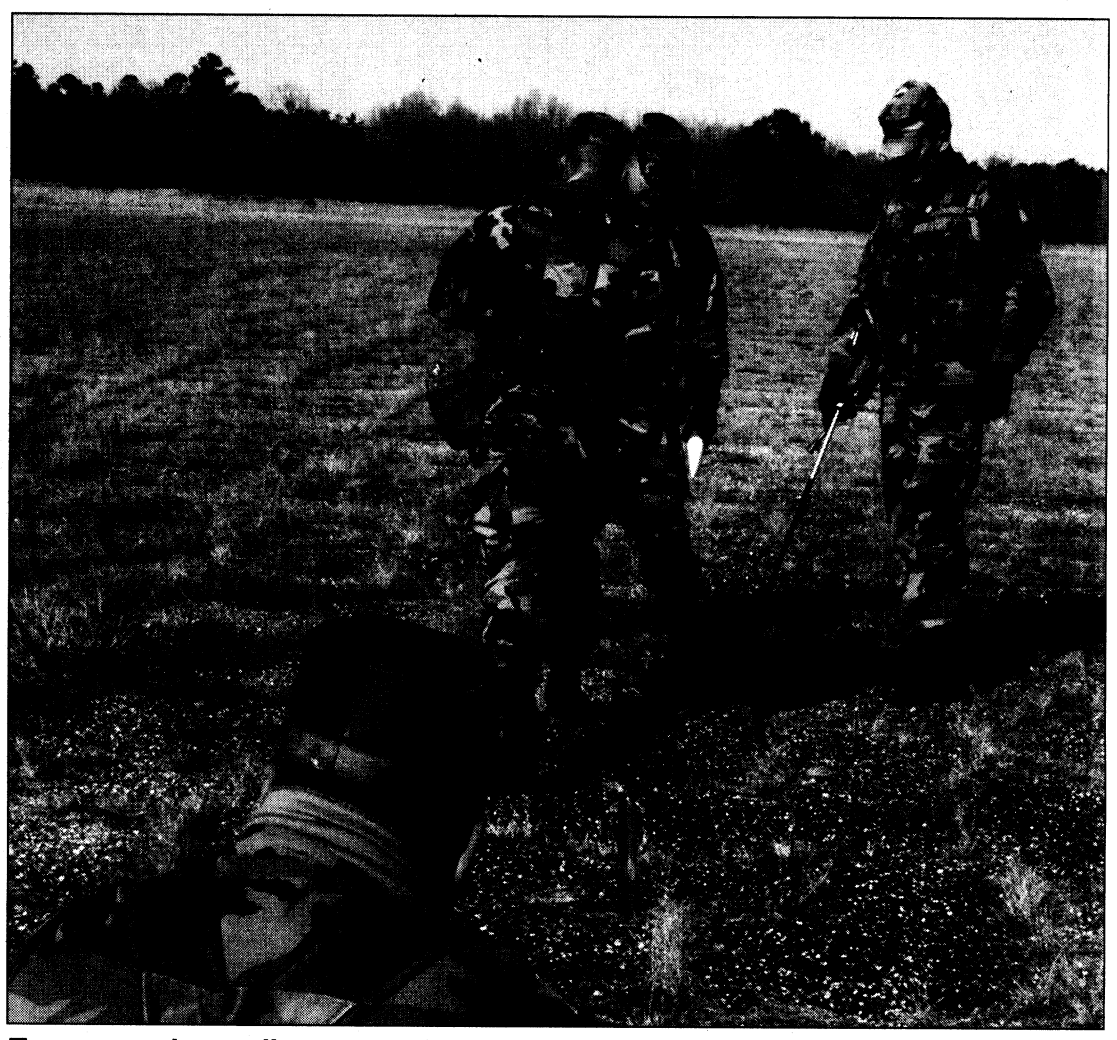
"Then they get fifteen minutes per (kilometer) of travel time. Once they get to the site, they have thirty minutes to find a point of impact and one hour to set up," he said.

The students set up helicopter landing zones for both sling loads and troop transports using a compass, tent pegs, flashlights and rubber bands.

Foster said the course is one of the Army's tougher schools.

"The first two weeks are tough," he said. "It's like sticking your mouth around a fire hose and turning it on. We just cram a lot of information down their throats in a short amount of time."

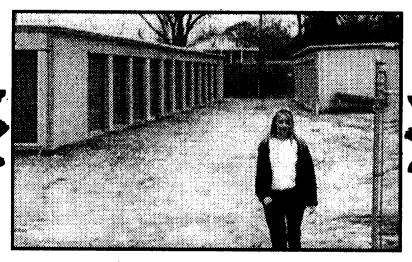
Subjects covered during the instructional phase are:



- rigging a sling load,
- sling load inspection,
- lift capabilities of different aircraft,
- tensile strengths of different types of rope,
- assessing a landing zone area and determining the amount of usable and nonusable space,
- navigating from the air,
- determining how many paratroopers can land on a drop zone,
- verbally guiding a plane or helicopter onto a landing zone.

Pathfinder student Staff Sgt. Eric Doss said the Pathfinder course was one of the harder Army schools he has attended in his 10-year career.

"It's everything I expected and more," he said. "The cadre were extremely professional and knowledgeable."



Doss, a Black Hat instructor at Airborne School, has attended the Infantry Mortar Leader Course, Ranger School, and Jumpmaster School, among others.

Out of an average Pathfinder class of 52 students, Foster said only about 25 to 30 usually graduate.

Team members discuss and pace off measurements during end-of-cycle testing Tuesday. The students have one hour to set up their landing zones.

ORGANIZATION ROCKS

The words organize and tagonize are derived from the same root word, that guttural "guh" in the middle. Or*guh*nize. A*guh*nize. It's the sound prehistoric man used to convey utter exasperation at the lack of storage space inside caves. No place to store a burgeoning rock collection.

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"Start the year off right at our storewide sale!" the sale paper read. "Organize your home for less than $800!"

Some things never change. The need to organize is as old as time. It's certainly a universal problem for military families who have to weed through their "stuff," pack it, ship it, unpack and find a new place to store it or display it every few years. Guh.

The problem is compounded by our need to hold onto tangible reminders of where we've been and what we've done along the way. It's our artificial root system.

Each year, or with every move, we resolve to pare down, scale back, declutter and organize. It's a noble goal, but nobility shouldn't come with an $800 price tag, and there's nothing noble (or even attractive) about a houseful of rubber boxes with burp lids.

Nope, organization starts with a clean sweep. It can be painful; I'm not going to lie to you.

But the pain won't kill you if you take it slow and count your successes along the way.

If you only weed out the file cabinet this week, that's a success.

If the linen closet gets cleaned and organized by the end of the month, that's a step in the right direction.

It's taken you years to accumulate all that stuff. If you have kids, pets, a job, a regular exercise regimen or the need for occasional food and sleep, give yourself a lot of time, maybe the whole year.

With that in mind, use the following list as a guideline — only a guideline — to get started on the path to organization. Along the way, you'll discover what works for you and what doesn't.

Start with a pocket size notepad and a pen — or a crayon if you can't find a pen amid the clutter. (There's a crayon in the kitchen in the junk drawer under the microwave. That's universal, too.)

Begin by listing the areas of your home that need organizing. Don't worry about consistency or details. Your list will probably read something like this: living room, front closet, all closets, car port, pantry, file cabinet, computer cabinet, drawers, linens, videos and DVDs, music, books, vanities, medicine cabinets, etc.

Now some of these chores will take longer than others, and some can be broken down into doable chunks. Perhaps organizing the living room includes making room for videos and DVDs.

Perhaps you'll want to organize all the medicine cabinets in the house at the same time to accurately assess the need to purchase or purge toothpaste or Tylenol.

Keep this list handy. You'll probably add to it now and then, and you'll definitely want to mark your progress by crossing items or areas off the list as you finish them.

This is a good time to decide how you want to tackle your organization project. If the clutter is an eyesore in the "public" areas of your home, you may want to start at the front door and work your way back. Coming home every day to a clean, clutter-free entrance will give you the incentive to stick to your resolution.

On the other hand, you may start in the room where you spend the most time — perhaps the kitchen or bedroom — or the area that is the least daunting, a small space such as a bathroom.

Wherever you decide to start, keep your expectations realistic. You may accomplish a great deal this weekend and then hit a roadblock with the kids' busy schedule.

Don't get discouraged if progress comes to a screeching halt for a few days, a few weeks or the rest of soccer season.

When this happens, use those random and rare blocks of time — half an hour here and there — to tackle the easier chores on your list.

One drawer.

One cabinet.

One toy box at a time.

Use the time you spend on the phone multitasking. Weed through papers and magazines, sock drawers, that kitchen junk drawer, your recipe collection … you name it.

Designate one place for cast-offs. Keep a box or laundry basket in a closet or in the garage and fill it with potential yard sale items.

Now's a good time to sit down with the family and schedule a yard sale for the spring or summer. Together decide how you'll use the money. A family vacation, perhaps?

Once you've settled on a goal everyone's excited about, you'll all be more willing to part with the stuff that was relegated to the back of the closet years ago.

Maybe you'll even part with some of the stuff you collected in the 90s, when we all cultivated a "country clutter" look.

Remember the 90s? We collected everything. We collected baskets for the sake of collecting baskets and hung them everywhere. If we occasionally used one for storage or display, well, that was a bonus. The primary purpose of our basket collections was pure aesthetics.

And that was OK for a time. Heck, it's OK now and forever if you like it that way. But chances are, if you've read this far, you've yet to make peace with the dust bunnies that took up residence on the pine shelves, and you're tired of watching your primitive pie safe shed paint chips. You're sick of fluffing pillows and rearranging slipcovers. You're longing for a fresh, uncluttered look, and the only way to get it is to corral the clutter and pare down.

Can't decide what goes and what stays?

Maybe this will help:

- If you spend more time than you like dusting your "collection," it's time to eliminate the problem and the needless waste of time.
- If you know at least two people with the same collection (remember Beanie Babies?) it's not original, and therefore it's not making a design statement that's uniquely you. You're way too cool for that.
- Is your collection never complete? Are you always looking for an additional piece and spending money on it?
- Have you run out of room to display all of your collection? Are you holding onto it hoping it'll "fit" in your next house?
- Is it sentimental? Is only part of it sentimental? Did the collection start with something passed on from Mom or Grandma?
- Is it valuable but not particularly sentimental? Ever heard of eBay?
- Are your collections souvenirs of your travels? Can you remember where they all came from?

Still not sure you can part with it? Try this: The next time you move or the next time you're away from the house for a few days, list everything — furniture, electronics, appliances and decorations — that fill each room.

When you unpack or return home, see how many things you forgot about. Chances are, you're so used to them being there, you never notice them any more and you're probably not truly enjoying them.

Organization goes hand-in-hand with a clutter-free environment. "Stuff" requires maintenance, even if it's only a weekly dusting.

Minimize the maintenance and you'll simplify your life. A simple life is an organized life.

See how that works?

Even "eye clutter" takes a toll on your peace of mind. Not sure if there's "too much going on" in your living room? If visitors tend to scan the room during conversation, maybe there's too much going on.

Confine "arrangements" to one or two walls for a relaxing atmosphere. Don't fall into the habit of decorating every space. A bare wall, especially one painted a pretty color, makes a statement on its own.

When it comes to displaying collections that are definite keepers, confine them to one area. An arrangement of Hummels in the china cabinet is more attractive than Hummels on parade throughout the house. Less dusting, too.

If your collections are mementos of your travels — and you've traveled a lot! — maybe it's time to rethink your souvenir habit. Invest in a good camera and keep a scrapbook of your travels. That's much more personal than a

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Are you "legally fit?"

A: Every Soldier should have a legal checkup once a year. What sorts of things should a legal checkup look for? Here are some examples:

• Do you have a will? If so, does it still accurately reflect your desires?

• Do you need a power of attorney? If you have given out a POA, is it still valid?

• Are you up-to-date on your income tax filing? Both federal and state? Do you have copies of your prior year returns?

• Do you have certified copies or originals of important legal documents, such as birth and marriage certificates? Are they easily accessible?

• Do you have copies of all other documents of legal significance, such as divorce decrees, court orders for child or spousal support, leases, etc.?

• Have you checked your credit report in the past year? Have you attempted to resolve any unfavorable entries?

If you need a legal document or have a legal problem, contact an attorney. Being legally fit is as important as being physically fit.

snow globe.

And how about those trophies and wall-mounted certificates of achievement? Take photos of the trophies and take the certificates off the wall. Scrap them all — in a book, of course. Then toss the trophies.

Of course, you don't want your home to look institutional. You should definitely decorate with things you cherish. And the movies, books and music have to go somewhere.

The trick is to condense them. All the movies go in one place, all the books in one place, etc.

Sounds simple enough, right? Obviously not.

Ever notice how the remote control gravitates to the underbelly of the couch? We tend to put things down on the nearest surface and leave them there. That's why videos get stacked on top of the TV instead of the drawer below.

I can't guarantee you'll ever eliminate that problem, but you can definitely minimize it by reducing the number of "collection points" in your home.

Every horizontal surface is a potential collection point — every table, bench or chair.

Try this experiment: start at the front door (or the back door if that's where the family typically enters) and do a walk through. How many collection points are there between the door and your kid's bedroom? Chances are, if he makes it past the first one with his bookbag, he'll drop it on the next or the next.

The same is true for the mail, the newspaper, the dog's leash and the tennis shoes.

The more collection points you eliminate between the front door and the trash can, the more likely you are to open, sort, file and toss. Surface space is an invitation to procrastinate.

By reducing the number of horizontal surfaces in your house, you'll also reduce the need to nag everyone to pick up after themselves.

Of course, you can't get rid of every table in the house. If the kids insist on leaving their clutter on the dining room table, try this trick: keep a laundry basket on your closet shelf for items you have to confiscate after a fair warning.

Decide what chore your child must do to earn it back. If he or she decides it isn't important enough, relegate it to the yard sale bin.

No job is finished until the paperwork is done, and that includes organization.

Purchase a sturdy file cabinet, preferably two drawers or more. Label the folders in the top drawer for the papers you frequently use, such as bills, shot records, warranties, envelopes, etc.

The bottom drawer should have a folder with each child's name on it. Here's where you store grade cards, schoolwork and artwork.

When the file begins to bulge, about once a year, scan everything at 25 percent and create a scrapbook. Label it with the child's name and the year.

As for the originals, let your child use them to create a coffee table book, magnets or a calendar as a Christmas present for Grandma and Grandpa.

Now that you've reduced the clutter in your home, it'll be easier to organize the rest of the stuff you're hanging on to. Time to reach for that notebook again.

List the groups of items you need to find a permanent place for. Your list will look something like this: cleaning supplies, brooms and mops, outdoor toys, tools (including those you want to keep handy, such as scissors, a hammer, nails and a screwdriver,) photographs, linens, videos, DVDs, CDs and books, all those bath products, polishes, lotions, seasonal items, like Christmas decorations or pool equipment, etc.

Start with one place for one product. For instance, gather all the toiletries, weed through them and store them in one area, perhaps under the bathroom sink.

Designate one closet near the most frequently used door for those items that come and go often — the dog's leash, umbrellas, coats, sports equipment …

This is where you'll have to be creative. Chances are, you still have more "stuff" than storage. Guh. Here are a few creative storage ideas:

- Try a new twist on an old favorite — baskets. Use picnic baskets, old suitcases, hatboxes and the like to store photographs, magazines, Christmas decorations, etc. All of these storage alternatives can be purchased at yard sales and thrift shops. I know one gal who couldn't part with her vintage basket collection, so she used it to "hide" Christmas decorations year round. The baskets looked pretty and tidy atop her kitchen cabinets.
- Reserve one dresser drawer in each bedroom for the items that typically get used daily and dropped on top of the dresser — keys, books, paperwork, etc.
- Designate one drawer in each bedroom for linens. Store flat and fitted sheets inside a coordinating pillowcase.
- Look for storage and display pieces with lids or doors. They're less likely to become a gathering spot for additional clutter.
- When it absolutely, positively has to be stored in a big, rubber box, use stackable, clear boxes, label them on each side, and put them in the garage or an out-of-the-way closet.
- Keep two hampers in each bedroom closet, one for whites and one for colored clothes.
- Wrap fragile keepsakes (i.e. baby mementos, wedding cake topper, etc.) in sports T-shirts or dance uniforms that you also want to save.

Once you've organized your home, you'll need to make regular organization a habit. No problem.

Make it a point to do a clean sweep at least once a year. As you become conscious of your tendency to collect "stuff," you'll be more willing to pass it up or part with it. Your annual clean sweep will be less of a hassle. Moves will be a breeze.

And once you've established organization habits that work for your family, you'll certainly have more time to enjoy the important things — like family — or to curl up with a good book or surf the Internet.

TAKE OWNERSHIP SERIOUSLY
Humane Society offers advice for pet care

Pets should be spayed, neutered, part of family

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The American Veterinary Medicine Association estimates there are more than 60 million pet dogs and 70 million pet cats in the U.S.

The surveys show companionship is the greatest benefit for those pet owners. Many hug their animals daily, take them on vacations and celebrate their birthdays.

So why do animal shelters take in thousands of animals each year?

Because many people don't think long term when they take on the responsibilities associated with owning a pet, said Joan Sammond, director of the Muscogee County Humane Society animal shelter.

Sammond has been involved in work with various humane societies for more than 18 years and worked at the Columbus shelter for four.

The MCHS shelter is Georgia's largest no-kill shelter, according to their Web site. About 2,500 of the 3,000 animals that come into the facility each year are successfully adopted.

Sammond said Christmas and summer are the biggest times of the year for people to add pets to their families. Most, she said, are pets for children or spouses.

> "We see a lot of relinquishments from Soldiers when they deploy and even more from their spouses once the Soldier is gone."
> Joan Sammond
> Muscogee County Humane Society

Because she sees so many unwanted animals in the shelter each year, she's an advocate of spaying and neutering.

"Responsible pet owners always spay and neuter their pets so they don't breed unwanted litters," Sammond said.

According to the AVMA, spaying and neutering helps pets lead longer, healthier lives.

Sammond said responsible ownership includes providing proper vet care and annual vaccines, adequate food, water and shelter and spending time with the animals.

"Make them part of the family," she said.

The number one excuse owners in the area give when relinquishing their pets is moving. Sammond said it's not a valid excuse, because animals are allowed all over the world.

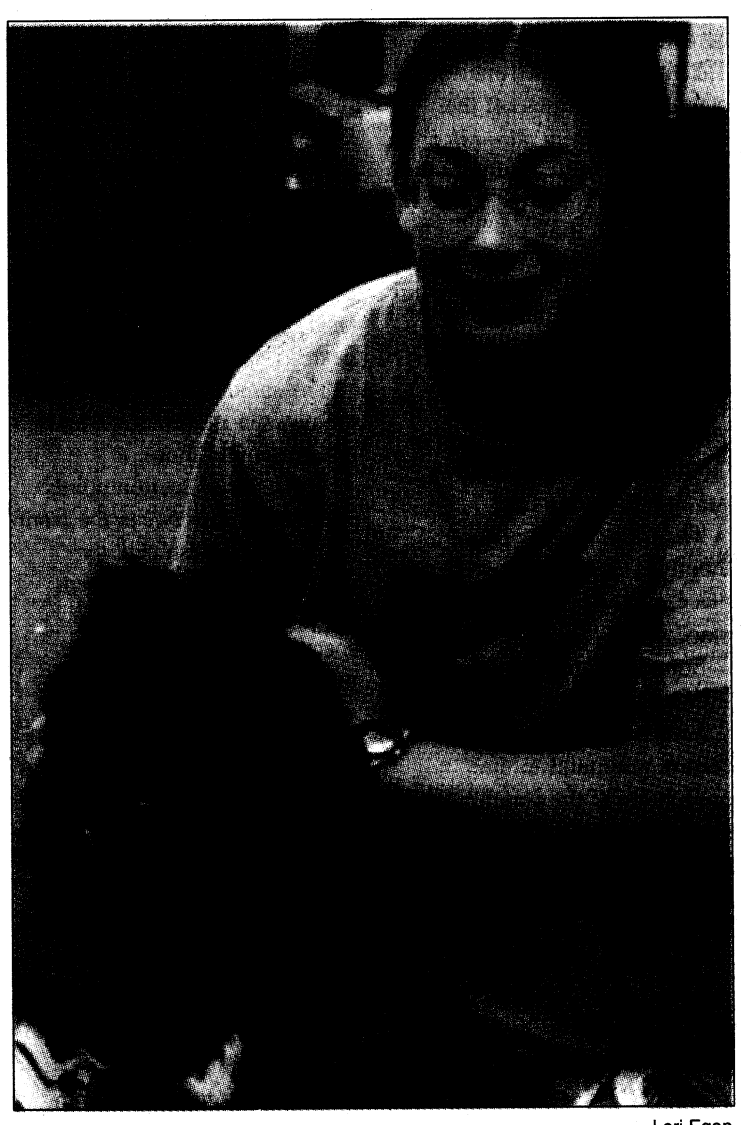
"We see a lot of relinquishments from Soldiers when they deploy and even more from their spouses once the Soldier is gone," Sammond said.

And relinquishment isn't just a problem in the Fort Benning area.

The Humane Society of the U.S. has Soldiers and their pets on its radar. Its Web site, www.hsus.org, urges military families to work hard to keep pets in the family and resist relinquishing them to shelters.

A brochure on Caring for Your Pet When You are Called to Duty, is available on the site, along with a checklist Soldiers can use for temporary care situations.

Soldiers are encouraged to contact their local animal shelter if they cannot find the care they need for their pets.



Sammond said the MCHS has a very active foster program used by Soldiers during the 2003 deployment.

The program, she said, welcomes volunteers.

Another reason pets end up at the shelter is because couples are adding a baby to the family, Sammond said.

To her, it's just another excuse, and its another topic the HSUS addresses. Their site also has information on introducing pets to a new baby.

For answers to a variety of questions about caring for pets, visit www.hsus.org. To adopt a pet from the MCHS, or to find out more about their pet fostering program, call 563-3647.

Reframe discouragement

Chaplain (Capt.) Michael L. White
CONUS Replacement Center

REFLECTIONS

"Elijah was afraid when he got (Queen Jezebel's) message, and he ran to the town of Beersheba in Judah. He left his servant there, then walked another whole day into the desert. Finally, he came to a large bush and sat down in its shade. He begged the Lord, 'I've had enough. Just let me die! I'm no better off than my ancestors.'" (1 Kings 19:3-4 CEV)

The prophet Elijah is probably best known for his heroic actions on Mt. Carmel, described in 1 Kings 18, where he called fire from heaven to consume a water-soaked sacrifice to God.

The Bible tells us the fire consumed not only the sacrifice, but licked up every drop of water on the altar and in the trench dug around the altar to collect the run-off.

After such a magnificent display of God's power, one might think Elijah would never again suffer disappointment or discouragement.

However, if you read 1 Kings 19, which includes the verses I've quoted here, you will see that isn't the case. In fact, the events described in this passage may well be defined as Elijah's darkest day.

Surprisingly, when Elijah received word from Queen Jezebel that she intended to kill him just as he had killed her false prophets, he ran into the desert to the south of Judah.

When he finally stopped, he begged God to let him die.

What a contrast of attitudes Elijah displayed in this moment of weakness. He went from the height of glory and faith in God's power to the depth of despair in just a couple of days.

White

It seems unbelievable that a prophet and man of such faith could drop so quickly, and yet, it proves that Elijah was, in his own words, "no better off than my ancestors."

We are all subject to troubles that produce disappointment and discouragement in our lives. We may not get the job we interviewed for, the assignment we wanted, or the promotion we thought we'd earned, but that doesn't mean God no longer loves us, or that he has abandoned us.

I've learned that when I don't get what I prayed for, it's because God has a better plan. I usually don't figure that out until much later, when I can look back with 20-20 hindsight. I've learned from experience that this is always the case, so now I just wait to see God's better plan revealed.

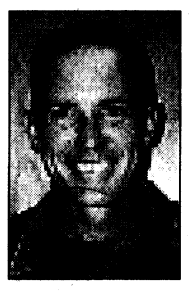
That doesn't mean I don't get disappointed or discouraged over what I perceive to be my losses. Rather, it means that in the midst of my sadness, I begin looking for the silver lining.

Whatever your disappointment or discouragement is today, I encourage you to reframe it for a fresher perspective. Remember that, from his eternal perspective, God is infinitely wiser and more knowledgeable about what we need than we will ever be.

We must trust that he has a better plan for us than we could ever imagine for ourselves.

Spiritual general order supplies faith

Bible passage gives refuge, encourages



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

"Midshipman Hawkins! Give me your first general order!"

That's what the Marine Cadet Upperclassman barked at me as a bead of sweat dripped off my nose onto his meticulously shined low quarters.

One of the very first things I did in the military was learn the value of "forgetting some things to memory." I discovered that general orders are like that.

The first general order was "I will assume my post in a military manner and take charge of all government property in view."

Hawkins

It was a piece of wisdom I was expected to commit to memory so that anytime, anywhere, under any circumstance, I would have a pocketful of wisdom and guidance I could draw upon.

If you've said goodbye to your Soldier, let me recommend a Deployment S.O.S.

The S.O.S. stands for "secret of success."

I'd recommend you adopt the following verse as your very own Spiritual General Order. It's one of my favorite verses, and it's a verse you can forget to memory and pull out anytime, anywhere, under any circumstance in the coming year. It can give encouragement and inspiration "to drive on" on the days when it seems like driving may be just too much to ask.

What is this spiritual general order for your deployment? It's Psalm 46:1 and it goes like this: "God is my refuge and strength, an ever-present help in times of trouble."

I suspect that sometime during the course of the next 12-plus months, a refuge will be a pretty handy place to have. Where will you turn when it seems as if the storms of life are billowing in faster than you can batten down the hatches?

God promises that if you'll let him, he will be your refuge. Would you like more strength for the journey you're embarking on?

Then the good news is, God says you don't have to do this deployment in your own strength.

No matter how many crayons get stuck up your little one's nose, no matter how many mechanics get to know you on a first-name basis, no matter how many bad hair days are lying in wait for you, there is an unending strength God wants to give you for each day's challenges.

Do you get frustrated when you call someone for help and get a busy signal? Want to hear some good news? God's refuge and strength is ever present — he'll never put you on hold.

Rest in the assurance today that when you call, he hears ... always.

Want some personal coaching on more ways to enjoy a successful deployment?

Call 545-1760 or come see me at the Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza or at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel. Services are at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill and everyone is invited.

We are continuing with our series Deployment S.O.S.: Secrets of Success. I look forward to serving you.

The Fort Benning Combatives School hosted title-winning fighters as guest instructors for the third-level combatives course this week.

The guest instructors were John Renken, an instructor at the Combatives School in Fort Campbell, Ky., and James Cook, a professional Muay Thai fighter from San Francisco.

The two came to Fort Benning to help instruct the kickboxing portion of the third-level combatives course.

"Muay Thai fighting, or Thai kickboxing, is the basketball or football of Thailand," Cook said.

"The children there grow up watching the sport on television," Cook said. "It's a good sport for the military because the basics of it are easy to learn."

Renken said combatives are the basis for warrior ethos.

"To become a warrior, you have to be subjected to conflict, stress and physical duress. Combatives does that (therefore) instilling the warrior ethos.

"Every Soldier is going to go to war and have to fight," Renken said. "This school is for everybody.

"All Soldiers, regardless of what their job is, are Infantrymen first, so this is a gender-neutral course everyone should take."

Combatives is also a good way to instill confidence in Soldiers, Renken said. Those who don't like to be hit can learn to become more comfortable with it.

"I've been in more than sixty-eight fights, but I still don't like to be hit," Renken said. "But you'll definitely get to be more comfortable if you're put in that situation."

The Combatives Program is divided into three levels.

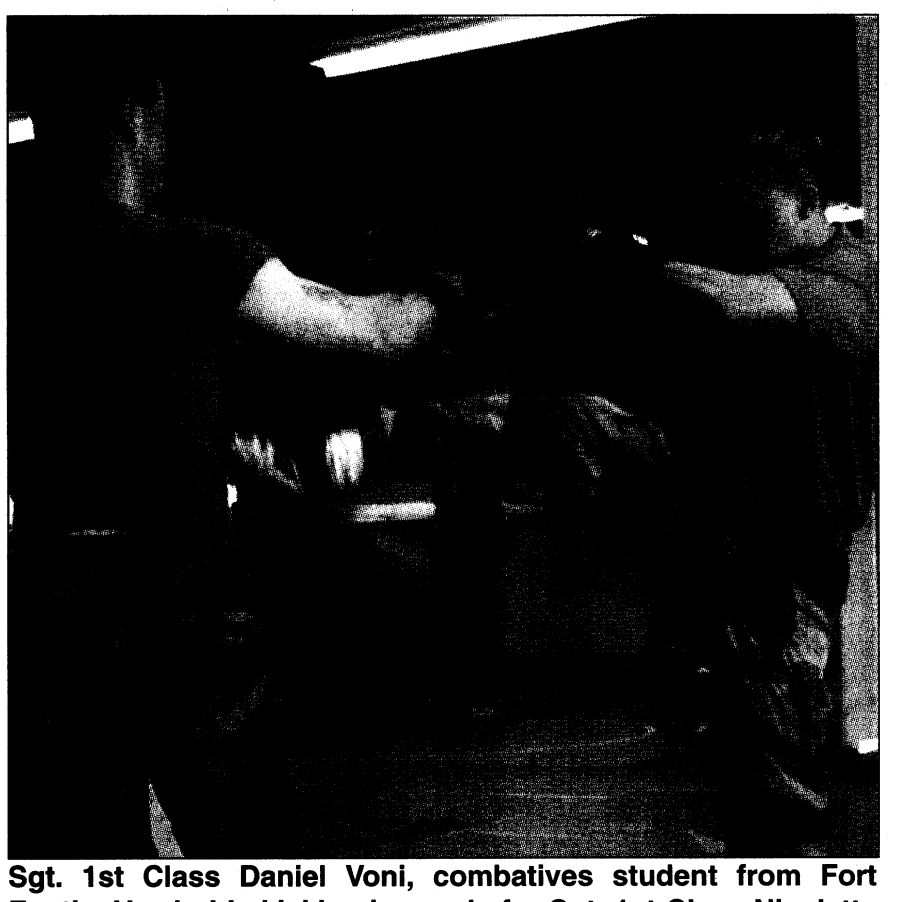
The first level teaches the basics of grappling and how to get out of the worst-case scenario, said Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larsen, Combatives School NCOIC.

The second level teaches advanced techniques, and the third level introduces stand-up fighting, weapons and kickboxing.

Cook, who teaches Thai kickboxing in San Francisco, said it's not only an easy sport to learn, but it's also a great method of weight loss.

"This is great for cardio and body toning," he said.

"After doing this for a week, I've known people to lose up to ten pounds. After you learn the basics, you can just go to any (gym) and do it on your own."



This is the first time Cook has instructed a military group. He hopes it'll be great for establishing civilian and military relationships.

"We're tapping into top talent," Larsen said. "(Renken) is our main guy at Campbell and he's a martial arts expert. The same thing is true of (Cook). He is a world class teacher and fighter so they are both main feeder points of the program."

Sgt. Oscar Miranda, with the 173rd Airborne Brigade from Italy, came to Fort Benning to become a certified combatives instructor for his unit. The 173rd is deploying to Afghanistan and will begin its combatives program there.

"This is a fantastic program," he said.

"It'll be good for the rest of the Army. We all need it."

Soldier goes from failing to prevailing

All-Army athlete keeps running on fast track

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

From failing the run portion of his first PT test to competing on the Military World Cross-Country Team, Sgt. 1st Class Shannon Swords has come a long way in 13 years.

Before joining the Army, Swords was a wrestler and powerlifter. He weighed 205 pounds and was proud of it. He thought the military had met its match — then came his first diagnostic Army Physical Fitness Test.

"I did really well in the pushups and in the sit-ups," he said. "Then I ran the two miler and failed miserably. That was an eye opener."

As a "PT failure," Swords was targeted by a drill sergeant determined to make or break him.

Swords accepted the challenge. If he was allowed to run each evening around the company area, he said, by the end of the cycle, he would beat that drill sergeant in the PT run.

Swords ran his first PT test in 18:46. He graduated from basic training at 55 pounds lighter, and finished the run in 12:36.

His drill sergeant finished in the high 13s.

"(The cadre) couldn't believe I'd made that much progress, and neither could I," Swords said.

"That's when I knew I had a knack for running."

Feeling better, being thinner and having overall better health has kept Swords out pounding the pavement day in and day out. He has run in 30 states and in countries like Belgium, Germany, France, Luxembourg, England, Italy, Korea and Australia.

Swords has been on the All-Army Track and Cross-Country Teams and the World Military Cross-Country Team. He has run six ultra marathons, 24 marathons, eight Army 10-Milers and plans to run a 100-miler in August. He recently took up triathlons.

In 2003, Swords placed 13th out of more than 20,000 runners in the Army 10-Miler and came in third in his age group.

"I run mainly for two reasons," Swords said. "First, it's a chance just to think. Second, it helps me keep my sanity."

Swords frequently runs during his lunch hour, and it's paid off. His fastest two mile on the PT test was 9:15.

"When you ask Soldiers what they hate most on the PT test, seventy-five percent will tell you the run," Swords said. "People just approach running the wrong way."

New runners often set their expectations too high and hurt themselves trying to overachieve, he said.

"If you need to, run thirty seconds and walk for three minutes," Swords said. "Each time, try to improve, even if it's only one second."

For more seasoned runners, Swords suggests keeping splits and checking them often to make sure you're keeping on pace. Also, know that during any race, you will want to quit.

"At about the half or three-quarter mark you want to quit — no matter how long the race," Swords said. "That's the hardest part. You're in a lot of pain and halfway (through the race) you can't see the end.

"You have to decide, before the race, not to give in to temptation. Switch to autopilot and rely on instincts."

Swords has also integrated cycling into his regimen. The thrill of the competition and the desire to try new and more challenging things has kept him running 60 miles, biking 120 miles and swimming 5,000 meters each week. He's now training for the Armed Forces Triathlon Championships in June.

"My dad's a runner and has always been fit. One day I asked him why he needed to stay so fit if he didn't compete," Swords said. "He said his goal is that when he's eighty, he wants to still enjoy his grandkids.

"I think that's what it all boils down to. I want to live a quality life, and this is it."

SPORTS BRIEFS

DEA trains for mission

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

Drug Enforcement Administration agents and intelligence analysts fire at Fiske Range Wednesday. DEA personnel are training at Fort Benning to prepare to deploy to Afghanistan. Their mission will be to help the Afghan police develop a well-organized federal narcotics agency.

"The best way the American people can combat this war is to not use drugs," said G. W. O'Hara, chief of foreign advisory and support teams for the Drug Enforcement Administration.

The DEA mobilized FAST agents, who are training at Fort Benning to prepare to deploy to Afghanistan. The special agents and intelligence analysts volunteered for the mission, O'Hara said, and are training in military protocol.

The DEA's mission is to provide guidance and conduct investigations to identify, target and disrupt illicit drug trafficking. In Afghanistan, they'll focus mainly on helping the Afghan police develop a federal narcotics agency.

"We'll also be working on individuals, or king pins, who are involved in the illegal trafficking of opium, morphine and heroin," he said.

While at Fort Benning, DEA personnel will train in land navigation, communications, combat life saving, IEDs, advanced weapons and more importantly, cultural awareness.

O'Hara said it is important the FAST agents understand the Bush to ask Congress for $80 billion

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration intends to ask Congress for an estimated $80 billion budget supplemental, most of it to help cover the costs of operations in Iraq and Afghanistan, U.S. and defense officials announced Tuesday.

The anticipated funding request is in addition to the $25 billion Congress approved last summer in the fiscal 2005 defense appropriations bill, and senior defense officials told military analysts today it is the last supplemental request expected this fiscal year.

In announcing the request today, President Bush said it will help the United States maintain two pledges: to provide U.S. troops "whatever they need to protect themselves and complete their mission," and to stand with the Iraqi people and against their terrorist oppressors.

"This supplemental budget request will fulfill these important pledges and again makes clear to terrorists that our resolve is firm and we will complete our mission," the president said.

Details of the supplemental request are still being worked out, but White House officials said $75 billion of the request will support ongoing operations in the global war on terror through the rest of the fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

"Most of these funds will support American troops on the ground by continuing to provide them with the equipment and other supplies they need," Bush said. "The request also provides for the continued pursuit of al Qaeda and other terrorist elements in Afghanistan and elsewhere," while supporting Afghanistan's "great progress."

Soldier dies in accident

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

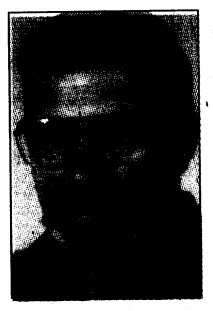
An Airborne student was killed after her parachute malfunctioned during a jump Tuesday afternoon at Fryar Drop Zone.

Pfc. Megan E. Adelman, 19, was conducting the second jump during her final week of training, when her parachute deployed but failed to inflate, said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, in a press conference Wednesday afternoon.

"Our hearts, our prayers and our thoughts go out to her family," Freakley said.

Adelman is survived by her husband, Pfc. Joshua M. Tenney, her parents, Mark and Melissa Adelman, two brothers and a sister.

A memorial service is scheduled for 10 a.m. today at the Main Post Chapel. Following the service, the remaining 303 Soldiers of Adelman's class will graduate at Eubanks Field.



Members of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, will accompany Adelman's body home and participate in her funeral services.

Col. Jim Yarbrough, deputy commanding general and master parachutist, said an expert rigger with experience in accident investigation was flown from Fort Bragg, N.C., Tuesday to assist post officials in investigating the malfunction.

Delayed retirement means new life for old 1SG, new life for Ranger

Bridgett Siter

John Campbell's office is empty except for Billy the Big-Mouth Bass hanging on the door and a half-empty jar of "Anti-BS Pills" on the desk. The walls have been stripped of 30 years of memories, including a photo of Campbell with Mel Gibson, a certificate of appreciation from former President Clinton and dozens more from the senior Army officials who've passed his way.

The bare walls bother Campbell. He's leaving the office in tears, and he doesn't care who knows it.

"I'm an old first sergeant," he said. "I could never see me getting emotional. But I've been here so long ..."

Campbell never finished the statement, and he's a man who typically finishes what he starts. He said so.

As chief of the Aviation Division and the manager of Lawson Army Airfield, Campbell's greeted most every dignitary who dropped in for a visit since 1980. He came to the rescue when Clinton's staff left some of their equipment in D.C. He was responsible for the safe send-off and return of thousands and thousands of Soldiers. And he worked hand in hand with the joint services to develop training for special operations — training he can't talk about.

"In all that time, I've never not finished a mission," said Campbell, who retired last week after 29 years at the Airfield — the first three as a first sergeant and the NCO in charge.

Before that, he was an Infantryman, until an injury he sustained in Vietnam took him out of combat arms for good.

But before aviation operations, before the Infantry, there was the Navy.

Campbell said he was an ornery 17-year-old kid from Philadelphia, when a friend tactfully suggested he "might want to join the service."

He served in the Navy from 1959 to 1962. He got out during the Cuban Missile Crisis and was quickly recalled. With orders in hand, he went to see an Army recruiter.

Reinventing the wheels

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

My old minivan is ugly, I admit, but I'm awfully proud of it. It's paid for, it gets me from point A to point B without breaking the bank, and its "champagne" color hides dirt really well (which is a good thing, since it gets washed about once a year.) Those are the qualities I admire most in a vehicle.

Never mind that the passenger window is "stuck up" and there's a stain back there that looks just like Madonna and child. The other Madonna, circa 1990, after the whole Like a Virgin thing. I don't know who the child is — it could be a really short back-up dancer. The point is, I just don't care.

You see, I'm not what you'd call a "car person." I don't assign my car a gender or pet name, as some of my friends do, though if pressed, I'd have to say "she's" like the homely friend one tries to fix up with a blind date.

"Is she hot?" he asks.

"Oh boy, has she got a great personality. Great personality. And she's good with kids."

Nope, my mini could never be classified as hot wheels, and I'm OK with that. I simply don't care. I'm auto immune.

I don't get misty-eyed when I think about my first car — a 1977 Dodge Aspen, champagne colored and easy on gas — and I don't go gaga over the latest sports car or SUV.

In the interest of full disclosure, I do break a sweat during the rare vintage Corvette sighting, and I'd be unAmerican if I didn't recognize the beauty in a 1965 Mustang. Hmm, I guess I have a bit of a soft spot for old school wheels, so maybe I'm not totally dispassionate.

In fact, come to think of it, I'm totally not dispassionate about some of the newer retro cars. I hate them with a passion. They're an eyesore.

Obviously, I'm trying to be tactful here, because some people are really sensitive about their choice of automobiles. They don't understand my lack of car care anymore than I understand their total devotion. I just don't want strangers hating me for dissing their choice of wheels.

That said, what are they thinking up there in Detroit? Today's new models look like really bad mutations of earlier models. Much earlier.

Apparently, everything old is new again, only uglier and more expensive. If the masses are clamoring for old school, give them the real thing. Is there a law against resurrecting an old favorite without trying to put a new spin on it?

Oh well, it's a good thing I don't care.

Those of you who are passionate about cars — and those of you who appreciate a car for its personality, like me — will find a bunch of both at the annual Jordan High School car show Feb. 26. It's the largest car show in town, I'm told. That's a good thing, since the proceeds help local students, including some of Fort Benning's finest.

To learn more about the car show, check out B-1, or call 649-0769.

Maybe I'll enter my champagne-colored minivan with the great personality. I'm betting it would be in a class by itself.

Chicks dig guys who drive their own cars

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

My first car was a 1974 Pontiac Firebird with a Super Duty 455 V8 engine, and I only got to drive it three times before it was wrecked.

It was the car of all cars for an 18-year-old chick right out of high school. Talk about getting attention — not that anyone could ignore the car, you could hear it and see it a mile away.

But aside from that, guys dig chicks with muscle cars.

I bought the car from my buddy for $3,000. I thought it was a steal.

It was canary yellow with its original black leather interior. It didn't have air conditioning, because the previous owner believed no muscle car needed an air conditioner — driving it fast with the windows rolled down was the way to go.

I got the car in the midst of a California heat wave, so I set out to find an air conditioner.

I didn't have a driver's license and therefore, no insurance, so I couldn't even drive it home from my buddy's house.

My roommate, Saul, was the designated driver, and he didn't mind one bit. Chicks dig guys with muscle cars.

He let me drive it three times, less than a quarter of a mile each time. God forbid, I might get pulled over and the car get towed!

After my third time behind the wheel of my Trans Am, Saul rear-ended a guy in bumper-to-bumper traffic. There wasn't much damage to the other car, but my front bumper was completely twisted.

I couldn't get the hood open to change the oil or add water. No more driving it, right?

So I thought.

While I was at work, my roommate decided there was no reason not to drive the car. He drove it every day while I was gone until the car had had enough.

He called me at work and said the engine wouldn't start.

"It's all right, it's been sitting for a long time," I said. "No big deal. It's at home parked, so I'll call the repair guy and have him fix it tomorrow."

"No Ely, I'm in Santa Fe Springs, and the car is dead."

I could've died. Santa Fe Springs is almost 45 minutes away from where we lived.

We had it towed, and the repair guy said I should've known better than to drive it without oil or water. He said I shouldn't have driven it at all until I could get all that stuff straightened out and I had to pay $3,000 to have the transmission rebuilt.

So needless to say, that was the end of my dream of a charcoal gray glossy paint job with the firebird on the hood. Never mind air conditioning.

My first car was an awesome car, but I can never say I drove down the freeway going 135 mph with the windows rolled down and my hair flying in my face.

Instead, I can only say my first car was a 1974 Pontiac Firebird with a Super Duty 455 V8 engine that I only drove three times before my roommate wrecked it.

LETTER

Racism not just about color

I read the Opinion section Jan. 14, as I always do. This time it was about "The legacies of racism."

I was born in Korea and adopted into a white family at the age of 4. I'm 41 now. I've been exposed to a wide variety of racism.

Racism isn't just about color, it's about labeling, categorizing, feeling superior, comfortable and fitting in. Education helps in understanding about the differences. But it doesn't solve the problem. Learning to accept that people are just different, we all have to share this world and that it takes a variety of people and what they can offer to make our world a better place to live.

Bad, evil, greed and stupidity knows no racism. That's what we should fight against for the good of our children.

Iraqi elections remind us freedom isn't free – just ask Hancock

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

An observant reader called the office on a training holiday to tell me about an error in the paper — John Hancock didn't sign the Constitution, he signed the Declaration of Independence.

My coworkers don't understand how that slipped by me. They're convinced I was present for both signings. I wasn't, but that doesn't discount the error.

But it might account for my lapse of memory — Alzheimer's, series of small strokes, not enough Omega-3 — anyway, a quick Internet search refreshed my failing memory.

At the end of the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia in September 1787, 39 men representing 12 of the 13 states signed the Constitution. Rhode Island chose not to send any delegates.

But before we could get to the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence needed to be written and signed.

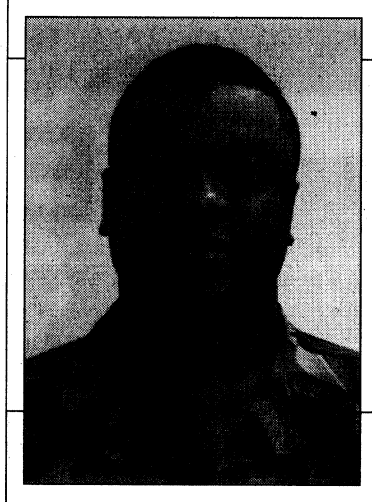
There's no forgetting Thomas Jefferson's role in this process, but as the president of the Congress, John Hancock was the first of the 56 signers.

Hancock, one of New England's wealthiest men, lost most of his fortune during the war. He wasn't alone. According to the Internet, 16 others also lost their fortunes. Nine signers of the Declaration of Independence lost their lives in the war, from wounds or hardships inflicted by the enemy. Five were captured and tortured by the British, and the list of consequences continues.

As we know, freedom isn't free.

After months of preparation and training, Fort Benning Soldiers have once again left their families and friends to deploy to Southwest Asia.

There, Soldiers will help rebuild a free nation.

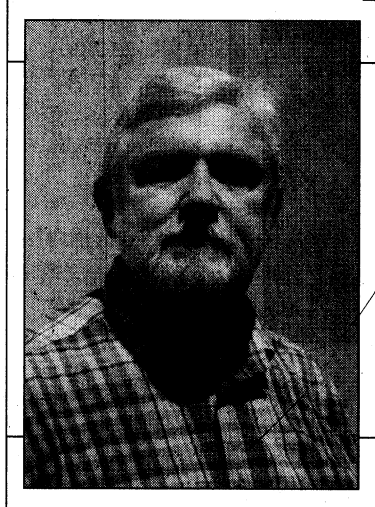


A free nation with an election next week where a national assembly, president and two deputy presidents will be elected. A prime minister and department ministers will be named also.

The national assembly, all 270 chosen to represent Iraq, will become a constitutional convention to shape the country's permanent government.

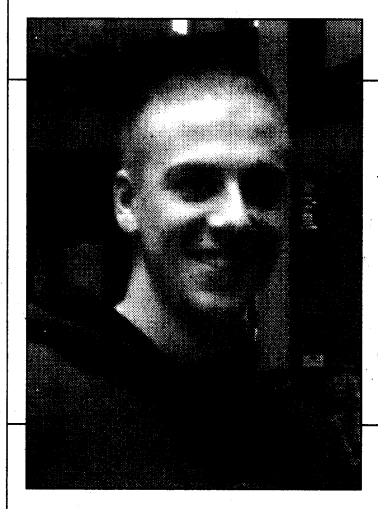
A constitutional convention where delegates debate the issues of building a new government. Some 200 years from now, Iraqi schoolchildren will learn the names of the men and women who accepted that freedom isn't free and suffered to achieve it.

VARIOUS VOICES

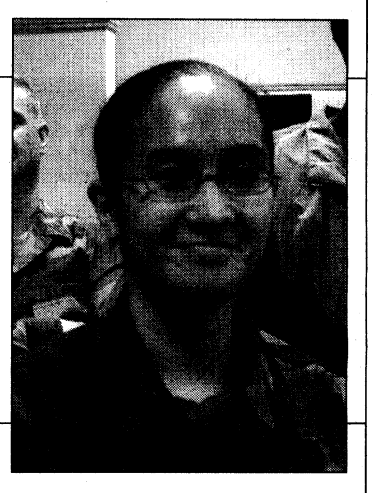


Tell me about your first automobile.

Master Sgt. Vincent McNeill, Equal Opportunity NCOIC — "It was a 1978 Ford LTD, gray with a burgundy top. I was 16, and I had limited driving time. I had to pay half the car note and insurance. When I left for the Army, it was still there. When I came home, it was gone."



Amy Goss, family member. — "I had a 10-year-old Reliant K that I named Ashley. I had it for three years, and finally it would shut off whenever I was at a stop sign. When the registration ran out, I drove it to a junkyard. It's probably still sitting there."



Jim Grant, Grant Sports Fields — "My first car was an old WWII military jeep, the M1A1. I bought it from a salvage yard when I was 15. I was the first of my friends to have a car, and we would drive it around the Columbus back roads."

Celestina Crawford, family member — "I had a red 1987 Honda Civic CRX. I was completely in love with it. It was like a little go-cart. My best friend and I would cruise around in it. The day before my 18th birthday this guy in a truck hit it and totaled it."

Spc. Chris Rodriguez, 99th Civil Engineering Squadron — "I loved my first car. It was a 1984 Ford Ranger with four-wheel drive. It snowed a lot the year I bought it, and I was the only one who could go anywhere."

Spc. Mai Wade, CONUS Replacement Center — "I had an old Ford Ranger that barely worked. I hated it. Everyone in my school drove these cute, preppy cars, and I had this piece of junk."

Dragons train in Kuwait for OIF 3

Command Sgt. Maj. Don Becker
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

After having already sent several Soldiers and leaders on the advance party flight, the rest of the "Can Do" battalion began arriving in Kuwait Jan. 16.

The flights were long (about 17-18 hours), but we were well taken care of by the flight attendants and crews. Some flights were fortunate enough to make only one stop for fuel, while others made several.

Once in Kuwait, we loaded onto a bus for another two hour trip to our new temporary home, Camp Buehring. Here we'll wait the arrival of the vehicles we sent from Fort Benning in November, zero and test fire our weapons systems, continue to train for our upcoming mission and get accustomed to the new time zone (eight hours ahead of the EST).

Camp Buehring has a lot to offer, including an AAFES shoppette, Burger King, Subway, Pizza Inn, jewelry store, Internet café, phone centers, gym, MWR tent, coffee shop, post office, barbershop, alterations shop, donut shop and a laundry service.

The dining facility has great food and the lines go fast considering how many people are here. As good as we have it here, we're all looking forward to moving north and getting on with our mission in Iraq.

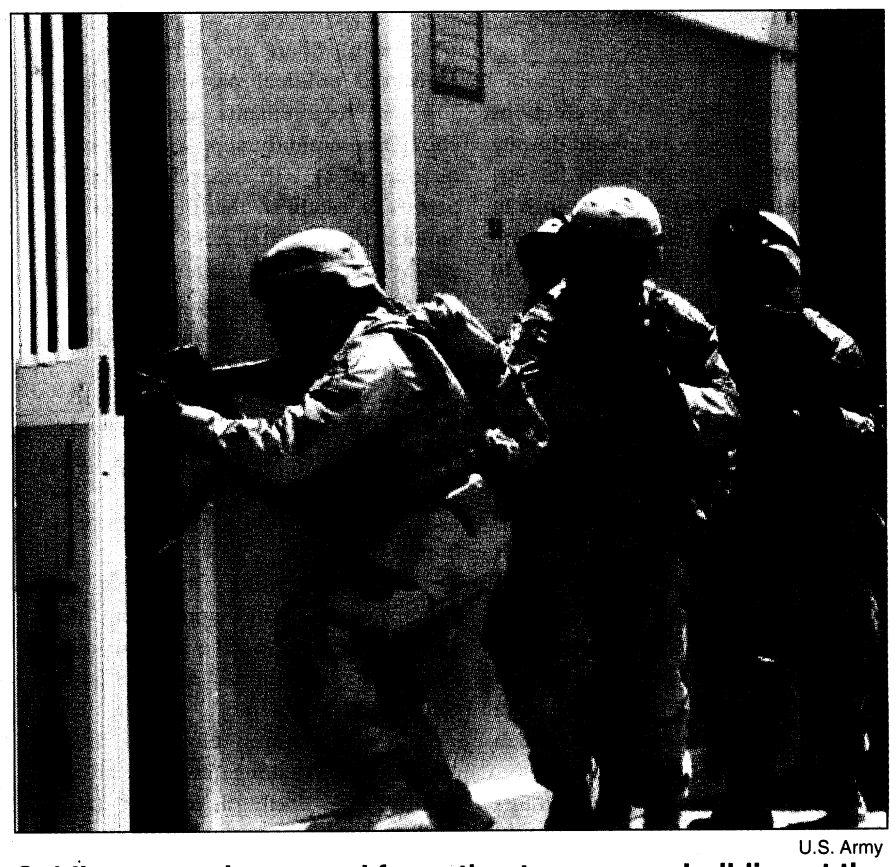
Knowing that we're here only temporarily limits our settling in, so we're still living out of our duffle bags and rucksacks.

Before heading north, we're all conducting additional improvised explosive device (IED) awareness and rules of engagement training. A Company immediately started military operations in urban terrain training and our Scouts conducted reflexive fire drills.

Several Soldiers are getting licenses for the civilian vehicles we will use, but with the way the locals drive, it's they who need the training — not us.

Thanks to all the great people who eased the pain of our leaving Fort Benning.

At the airport, we all received goody bags filled with sun screen, food, drinks and neck pillows and there were tables set-up with free paperback books and donated hats.



John Burke, from the 15th Regiment Association, was on hand for several of our flights — John, as always, we appreciate your support of our Soldiers.

We'd also like to thank our families — wives, husbands, sons, daughters, mothers and fathers who saw us off and have the most difficult job during our absence, the waiting and the worrying.

I can assure you all the Can Do battalion is well trained and we will perform our mission professionally and as safely as possible.

Don't forget to visit our battalion Web site from time to time to see photos and read updates from the commander.

Green patches unique to 3rd BCT Soldiers

Spc. Natalie Loucks
3rd Brigade Combat Team Public Affairs

It is a recent tradition Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, "Sledgehammer," 3rd Infantry Division are immensely proud of.

It is a symbol of competence, camaraderie and easy identification, one that catches the eye of those outside the brigade.

The green name tapes, U.S. Army patch, special skill tabs, badges and Marne unit patches normally sewn on the woodland battle dress uniform were sewn on the desert combat uniforms of 3rd BCT Soldiers due to a rapid deployment, said Maj. Ed House, 3rd BCT operations officer.

The brigade participated in Operation Desert Spring in Kuwait during the spring of 2002, House said. The deployment timeline was short and the tan tags and patches were not readily available.

Col. Daniel Allyn, former 3rd BCT commander, made the decision to pull the green patches off the woodland BDUs and transfer them to the DCUs.

The deployment to Operation Iraqi Freedom 1 continued this tradition for the Sledgehammer Brigade.

"It was a way to identify the brigade and logistically, it made sense," House said. "(Most) Soldiers already had the green sewn on and it was easy for the new Soldiers to get the green ones sewn on instead of having to change everyone's uniforms."

During OIF 1, the "Green Patch Brigade" made a name for themselves. Captured enemy Soldiers identified 3rd BCT as "different" than the other units with the 3rd ID patch, House explained.

"The Iraqi people thought we were Special Forces," said Spc. Steven Gamble, a truck driver in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, and OIF 1 veteran. "They saw us as an elite force."

The green patches may have a different effect during OIF 3, House said, because the unit is not focused in one location, but a mission of providing stability and support where the brigade's units are geographically separated while working to accomplish one common goal.

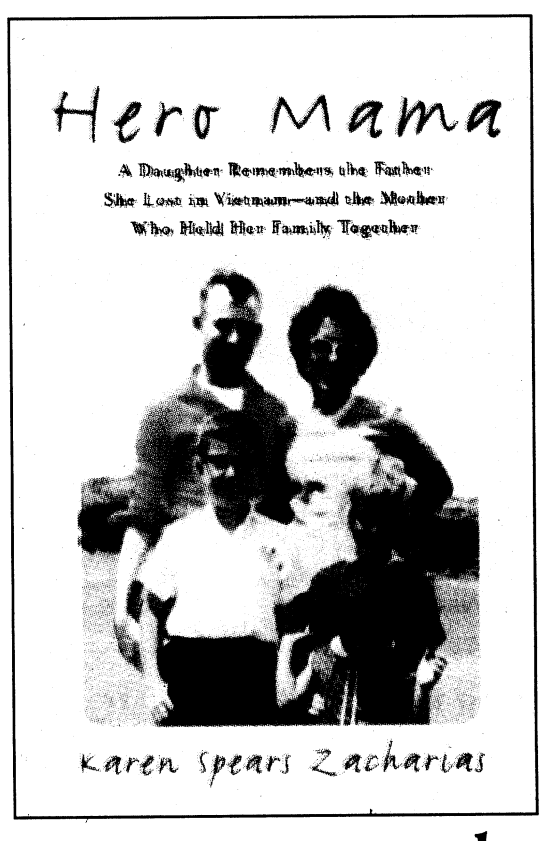
House said the 3rd BCT has always been slightly different from other divisional units due to the geographic separation of being based at Fort Benning. The 1st, 2nd and 4th Brigades of the 3rd ID are assigned to Fort Stewart.

"I like the idea of being different," said Pfc. Johan Echaniz, HHC. "I know who's in our brigade just by looking at the color on their uniform."

Echaniz had never heard of green patches being sewn on DCUs before being assigned to 3rd BCT.

"I didn't understand why we would put green patches on our tan uniforms when everyone else had tan patches. It seemed odd at the time," he said. "When I heard the story of why we did it, it made sense."

House served in OIF 1 and is currently serving in OIF 3 with the 3rd BCT.



"The patches don't make the unit," House said. "However, I like the fact that we are different. We stand out and we are outstanding."

House said it doesn't take green patches to distinguish a 3rd BCT Soldier from the rest.

"I can walk across camp and easily recognize a Sledgehammer Soldier," he said. "The discipline he or she shows is easily identifiable."

Soldiers help pave way to new Iraqi constitution

Staff Sgt. Rebekah-mae Bruns
Army News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The elections in Iraq are only days away and despite recent bombings and insurgent threats, the city streets of Baghdad continue to bustle with activity. Sirens sound in the distance. Horns honk as cars try to push their way through the morning traffic, and Iraqi men and boys of all ages stand on the streets selling newspapers.

In a bustling city of nearly 8 million inhabitants, car bombings and threats are not the only signs of an upcoming election. Not far from the usual newspaper peddlers, individuals distribute posters and pamphlets for various political parties, all vying for a space in the new Iraqi government.

The surrounding walls of buildings and concrete barriers are littered with posters and political messages, much the same as any election in the U.S.

On one wall, a poster shows Iraq's top religious Shiite cleric, Ali Al Sistani, next to a checked voter's box with the message, "It is the international duty for each Iraqi to vote."

On another poster sponsored by the Christian Democratic Party, known as Rafadian — roughly translated as the "Land Between Two Rivers" — the message reads, "For a safe and free Iraq and one country, vote for Unidm Kna. Vote!"

"The parties are campaigning now to put their candidates in place to establish a new Iraqi constitution," said Capt. Khris Scarcliff, 32, of Kankakee, Ill.

When voters go to the polls on Sunday, they will vote for two things — a national assembly to write the new Iraqi constitution, and council members to represent each of the 18 provinces in Iraq.

In addition to writing a constitution, the 275-member assembly will select a president and two deputy presidents. They will also confirm the president's choice of prime minister through a simple majority vote.

Currently there are more than 200 registered political parties, of which 111 met requirements and garnished enough community support to make it on the ballot. In order for political parties to establish themselves on the ballot, officials required every third candidate of the named party be female. This was done to help give voice to a gender often left out of government in the Muslim world.

"The goal is to have twenty-five percent of the National Assembly be female," said Staff Sgt. Jacques Dextradeur, who works with the 1st Calvary Division's Government Support Team.

Dextradeur admits there is no guarantee this will happen, but the measures are set to give Iraqi women the same opportunities as their male counterparts.

In the upcoming elections, Iraqi officials are breaking new ground by treating the northern part of Iraq, predominately inhabited by Kurds, as an autonomous region. It is seen as part of the country, but considered self-governing and therefore will elect its own National Assembly to write a constitution separate from the rest of Iraq.

The compromise is a great one, considering the Kurds have been in conflict with their neighbors and longed for land of their own for over two centuries, Dextradeur said. Still, no one knows how long this long awaited concession will last.

"When (Iraqis) write their new constitution, they'll decide whether or not they like this," Dextraduer said. "We don't know what they'll decide."

It would appear the only dispute between the Kurds and the current Iraqi government is the northern city of Kirkurk. Nearly 25 percent of Iraq's oil comes from this area, making it an extremely valuable asset to both communities.

It has been made clear by both the Iraqi and the American governments that the Iraqis are the ones holding the historical landmark elections. It will be the first free and open elections for the country since 1944.

Pfc. Katrina Tucker

Political posters can be seen throughout the Iraqi capital, urging the Iraqi people to vote.

The plan in place calls for the Iraqi police force and the Iraqi Army to help maintain security at polling sites, but if needed, the American military will execute support, if specifically requested by the Iraqi Government.

"(Soldiers) will be providing election security for a safe and sound environment for their area," Scarcliff said.

Officials want to ensure locals vote despite terrorist threats. During the last couple of weeks, Soldiers have helped assess what security measures might be needed at polling sites. The actual sites, however, are a closely guarded secret.

1st Lt. Jason DeSoto, 27, of Fayetteville, Ark., works with the Arkansas National Guard's 1st Battalion, 153rd Infantry Regiment. In their sector of Baghdad, which borders the heavily fortified International Zone, home of the interim Iraqi government, there are 22 polling sites. But locals have yet to be told where these sites are.

"It's confusing sometimes for the Iraqi people because they don't have all the information they need right now," DeSoto said. "But it denies insurgents the ability to come up with or mount a plan to attack that site."

The Iraqi government plans to announce the locations of the polling sites only a day or two before elections. By giving a late announcement, officials are hoping to head off specific attacks on sites against Iraqi voters.

DeSoto said the number one concern the Soldiers have heard from Iraqis is the security of the polling sites.

Editor's note: Staff Sgt. Rebekah-mae Bruns is assigned to the 39th Brigade Combat Team Public Affairs.

Rangers receive awards for combat deployment

Kimberly Laudano
75th Ranger Regiment

More than 50 Rangers were recognized Jan. 20 for their actions during a recent deployment in support of Operations Enduring and Iraqi Freedom.

Lt. Col. John G. Castles, commander of the 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, presented two Bronze Stars with Valor Devices, 39 Bronze Stars, three Purple Hearts and six Joint Commendation Medals. Several Rangers also received Army Commendation Medals and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

Between October 2004 and January, the battalion conducted more than 140 direct action raids between missions in Iraq and Afghanistan, Castles said.

Sgt. 1st Class James K. Anderson, a C Company platoon sergeant, was awarded the Bronze Star for his role in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

While deployed, Anderson was crucial to mission success, serving as the platoon sergeant and senior NCO for his team, according to his citation.

Anderson described what earning the medal means to him.

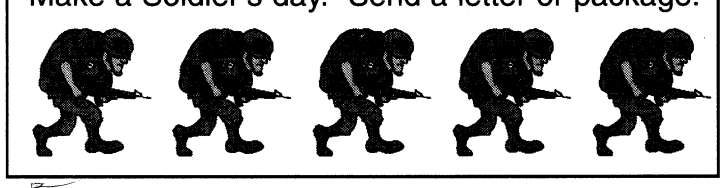
"It lets me know that as a leader, I safely deployed all of my men to combat, led them through numerous combat operations, and brought every one of them back to their families," he said.

Anderson said the medal is a small token for the excellence of not only himself, but for his platoon.

"Receiving this award is a great honor, but I couldn't do it without my men," he said. "Because of them, we were successful in every operation we conducted."

Capt. Roger A. Crombie, commander of C Company, echoed the citation on Anderson's award.

"Rangers honestly look up to Sergeant First Class Anderson. He is a great leader, Ranger, husband and soon-to-be father."



Anderson, a native of Martinez, Calif., has spent his 11-year Army career with the Rangers.

He deployed four times in support of OEF and two times in support of OIF.

Castles concluded the ceremony with a reminder about the missions "quiet professionals" in the 75th Ranger Regiment conduct.

Though deployments, homecomings and missions cannot always be publicized like some other units because of the nature of the Ranger job, "know that your service does not go unnoticed and is relied upon now more than ever," he said.

Deployments are tough.

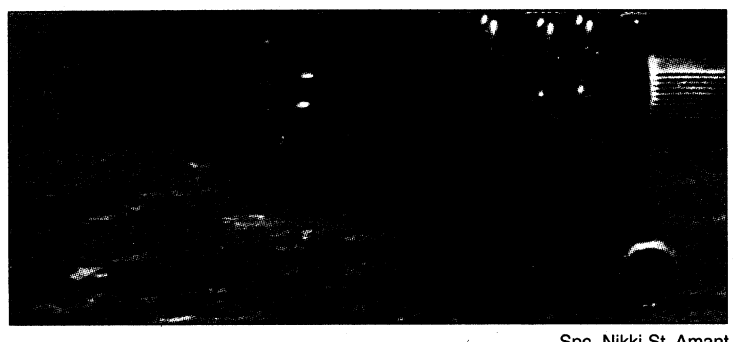
Post tests current M-9 sidearm, future alternatives



Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The Directorate of Combat Developments and Soldier Battle Lab began an experiment Monday analyzing the current issue M-9 handgun and possible alternative weapons.

"I want to make it clear, this is not a selection of a new pistol," said Charley Pavlick, project officer with DCD's Small Arms Division. "We are responding to concerns we have from OIF and OEF that report a lack of confidence in the M-9 for several reasons. This is an analysis of different features and characteristics that are available with other weapons platforms."

Some of the concerns with the M-9 include numerous stoppages, uncomfortable function control, and the low lethality of the 9 mm ball round, Pavlick said.

The Army hasn't made an official decision to make a move from the M-9 to a new sidearm, Pavlick said. DCD will rewrite the draft requirements documents after the experiment is complete and then officials will make a decision.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

The M-9 is being evaluated to see if it continues to meet current personal protection requirements.

Army officials made the decision to switch from a .45 caliber sidearm to the 9 mm in 1954, but that change wasn't fully implemented until 1984, Pavlick said. It was only when the supply of rebuilt .45s began running out that the Army finally started the 9 mm Personal Defense Weapon program.

"The decision to switch was strictly logistical," he said. "The U.S. was trying to move toward NATO joint operability, and we were fighting the Cold War. Target effect wasn't a factor in that decision. Now it is."

The performance of better sights, larger calibers and double-action-only firing mechanisms are what DCD analysts will be taking a look at.

The test firers for the experiment are representative of the force, Pavlick said. Soldiers of varying rank, MOS and gender are included.

The testing started this week with a baseline qualification to assess the basic marksmanship of the firers with the M-9 and familiarization fires with the alternative weapons.

Staff Sgt. Michael Morten is one of the test firers. He fired the .45 caliber version of the Swith and Wesson 99.

"You can really feel the difference," he said. "It fits better in my hand, the sights are easier. I thought it would have more kick being a .45, but the recoil is the same as the 9 mm. I thought it was excellent."

Lucky Irishman catches ride to States, sights set on Special Forces

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

Michael McKenna has been in the United States for more than 10 years waiting for the opportunity to join the Army — an opportunity that comes quickly for some. For him, it took longer than expected. An immigrant from Ireland, McKenna came to the U.S. specifically to join the Army.

A Soldier at F Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, McKenna was guided from a young age by three simple words: De Oppresso Liber — the motto on the Special Forces crest that reads To Free the Oppressed.

"I don't even remember how old I was when I saw it," McKenna said. "I was reading a magazine article on Vietnam and saw the crest and it's meaning in a photograph.

"I'm from an oppressed country, so I knew that's who I wanted to be a part of."

McKenna, an Irish Catholic from Northern Ireland, which is still controlled by England, wanted to free those who, like him, grew up oppressed.

As soon as he finished school, McKenna began working to save money to come to America. He contacted a friend in Pennsylvania and moved there to stay with him while he arranged to join the Army. But his goals were far from being met.

"When I arrived to Pennsylvania, my friend had dropped off the face of the Earth," McKenna said. "I didn't know anyone else and I was an immigrant. So I did the only thing I knew to do — I worked."

A self-proclaimed jack-of-all-trades, McKenna worked odd jobs until he could find a way to come into the Army. He went from an eager 20 year old to a determined 30 year old.

Now training to become a mortarman, McKenna knows he'll more than likely deploy once he graduates Infantry training.

"I'll be proud to serve, because Soldiers volunteer to put their lives on the line for freedom," McKenna said.

Pvt. Dustin Clarck, one of McKenna's battle buddies, said there is no other Soldier he would rather serve with.

"I know I'll be taken care of if (McKenna) is behind me," Clarck said.

McKenna has shown his determination during training by doing his best to stay with the pace of the younger Soldiers, said Staff Sgt. Jaime Olivarez, McKenna's platoon drill sergeant.

"During training McKenna injured himself, but instead of letting that slow him down, he stepped it up," Olivarez said.

"I just want to get on with my military career," McKenna said. "I want to go out to my unit and take advantage of all the military schools they can offer me. Then I'll be ready for Special Forces."

Although McKenna is determined to make it through this, he said that there's always a plan B. He plans on staying in the states and attending college since he never had that chance after high school.

"But I can't fail," McKenna said. "I'm the one who is representing all those back home who couldn't do it."

McKenna graduates Infantry training Feb. 11 at Kannel Field on Sand Hill. After graduation he will report to Fort Polk, La.

Death: Chute fails to open

Initial findings show no evidence Adelman attempted to deploy her reserve chute, Yarbrough said, and there were no immediate indications the rigger who packed the chute was at fault.

All 125 of that rigger's packed chutes were pulled from the line and 15 percent were inspected. All 15 were found to be packed to standard, Yarbrough said. The rigger will not return to duty until the investigation is complete.

"We will rally around that trooper," Yarbrough said. "We have absolute confidence in his proficiency. He and his rigger compatriots are taking this very hard."

The last Fort Benning airborne training fatality was in 1990.

Out of 12.5 million jumps Armywide in the last four years, there have been only two instances of a parachute not deploying.

senior official told the analysts.

In addition, it will provide funds to repair or replace war-torn equipment, build three more modular Army brigades and continue training and equipping Iraqi and Afghan security forces, the official said.

Officials said the funding will enable the Army to maintain or replace equipment that's been subject to excessive wear and tear and to replace equipment too expensive to repair.

"We get about four years of war on equipment for every year it is deployed in Iraq and Afghanistan," an Army official said.

The supplemental will also help the Army bring the number of brigade combat teams to 39 by the end of the fiscal year.

A small portion of the supplemental will cover military construction, including housing, tactical equipment shops and support needs for deployed units in Southwest Asia.

Officials said they're confident the supplemental, if approved, will cover basic operational needs associated with the war, particularly in the U.S. Central Command area of operation.

"It's exactly what we need to maintain the force as we take this effort further in Iraq and Afghanistan," an official said.

The balance of the request — about $5 billion — will cover State Department embassy construction and operations in Iraq, support for partners in the war, and the humanitarian crisis in Sudan's Darfur region, and other activities, officials said.

The administration is expected to submit the supplemental request to Congress shortly after Feb. 7, when the president delivers his fiscal 2006 budget request.

FAST: Helps Afghanis develop narcotics agency

country and the threats they will face in that country.

Special Agent F. Tarentino said training with the military is not tough. A former officer in the 1st Ranger Battalion, and now a DEA agent for more than six years, Tarentino said the camaraderie is the same although the mission is different.

"For many of us that have military experience, this training is the best of both worlds," he said. "We have the best job there is in federal law enforcement, and we can still train in the military environment we miss."

Tarentino and Special Agent G. Brittain said it comes down to patriotism.

"The opium trafficking has gotten out of control," Brittain said. "What we do, in some respect, can help the Soldiers who are (deployed)."

FAST agents will deploy for 90 day rotations, said E. Knoth, FAST deputy chief. Five teams of six agents — two teams in country at all times — will work with the DEA office in country.

This program is funded for two years and will be evaluated for extension.

O'Hara said the mission has no estimated end date, but they hope to help the Afghan police develop a well organized narcotics agency that will join force with narcotics agencies around the world.

In 2004, 5,000 metric tons of opium were produced in Afghanistan, Knoth said. The United Nations reported that Afghanistan is also the world's leading supplier of heroin. About 10 percent of the heroin consumed in the U.S. comes from that region.

> "The opium trafficking has gotten out of control. What we do, in some respect, can help the Soldiers who are deployed."
> Special Agent G. Brittain
> Drug Enforcement Agency

Knoth doesn't expect the presence of 12 agents to significantly reduce production levels immediately, but by training the Afghan interdiction units, the DEA hopes to raise awareness within the country that the war against narcotics traffickers can't be fought alone.

Although no direct link has been established between the terrorists involved in the Global War on Terrorism, O'Hara and Knoth agreed the continued production of heroin fuels the cash flow of drug lords who support terrorists.

According to a news release, the DEA is joining the coalition partners, the State Department and DoD in the U.S. Embassy Kabul Counternarcotics Implementation Plan, a Five Pillar Plan to help reduce the heroin production in Afghanistan and contribute to the rebuilding of the country.

The DEA's participation in the Five Pillar Plan is an expansion of Operation Containment, in which the agency is working with 19 countries to choke the flow of drugs and precursor chemicals in to and out of Afghanistan.

Before Operation Containment started in 2002, only 407 kilograms of heroin were seized. During the first nine months of 2004, Operation Containment seizures had gone up to 14,932 kilograms of heroin.

ACES
Continuing education helps Soldiers advance

Marketability boosted by degrees

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Nineteen years after he joined the Army, Sgt. 1st Class Cornell Jones decided it was time to get his degree.

Jones, a MEDDAC recruiter at Fort Benning, is taking classes through eArmyU to earn a business management degree.

"I counsel Soldiers to further their education, and I recruit by promoting the Army programs," Jones said. "What better way to get an education — let the Army pay for it."

Paul Lapointe is the education services officer with the Army Continuing Education System. His job is to help Soldiers get the education they want by using military educational benefits.

"We provide voluntary education opportunities; none of this is mandatory," Lapointe said. "We cover a full range of programs for Soldiers, starting with high school completion and basic skills all the way up to master's degree programs."

The counselors with ACES are trained to help Soldiers determine their academic level, what they hope to accomplish, what a reasonable timeline is and how they can best reach that goal, Lapointe said.

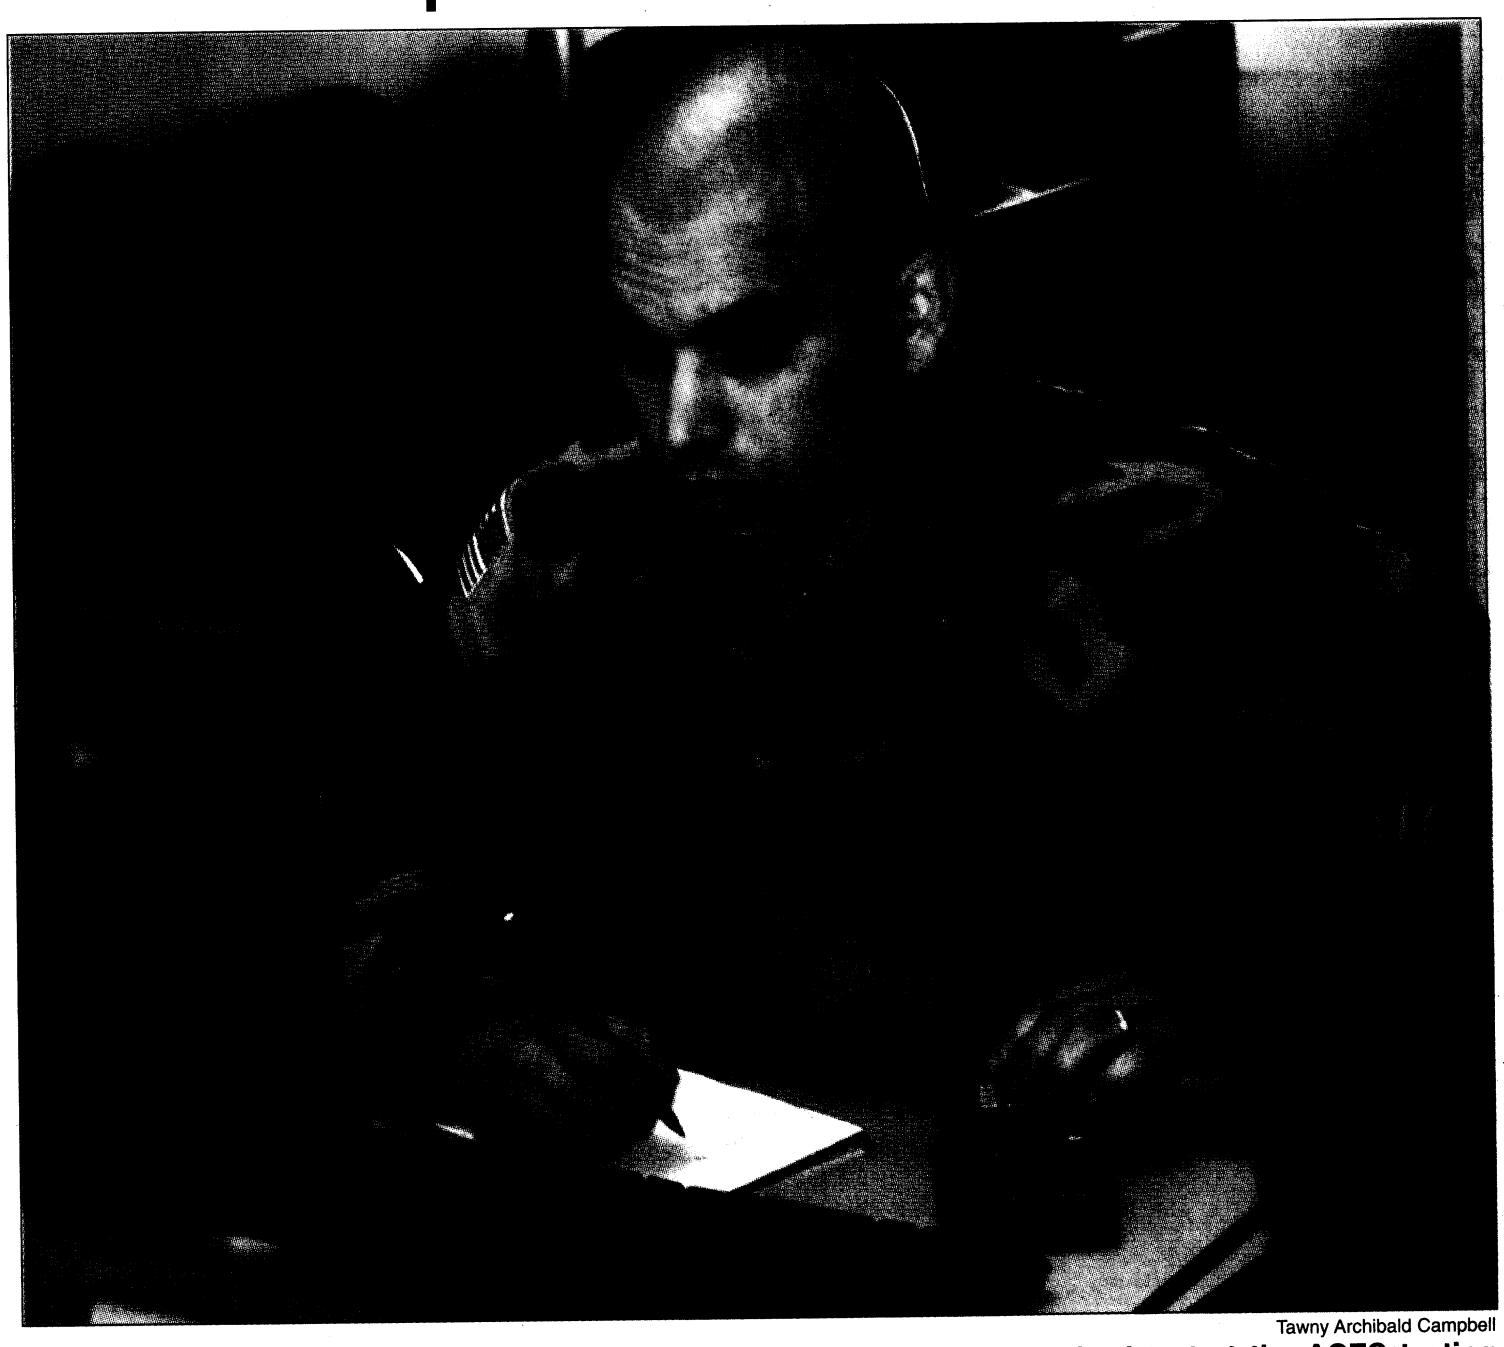
"We want Soldiers to come out (of the military) and be very marketable," he said.

"Education is a quality of life program."

The counselors work as liaisons between the Soldiers and the schools they are attending.

They can help enroll Soldiers in eArmyU and apply for tuition assistance. They will also recommend several schools who accept tuition assistance and the Montgomery G.I. bill and help the Soldier determine which learning style is best for them — online, traditional classrooms or distance learning.

"Soldiers need to come here before they commit to any college," Lapointe said. "We will help them set up a program and a school that is best for them."



"If you don't know what to do, you need to come and see us," he said. "All the schools we work with are accredited, credible schools. They all accept tuition assistance and will work with the military."

To make a college degree more feasible, several schools have been invited on post to offer classes and degree programs. There are seven colleges with offices at Soldiers' Plaza and classrooms are set up at Soldiers' Plaza, Kelley Hill, Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and Infantry Hall.

For Jones, who prefers to do his school work online, ACES is a place where he can go with his questions, get academic advice and learn how to best use the resources available to him.

"It's a one-stop shop," Jones said. "You can get everything done here."

ACES is located in Building 2602 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Spc. Rebecca Stephens prepares to give Pfc. Rebecca Howard an I.V. at Troop Medical Clinic 1. Both Soldiers are part of the 690th Medical Company (ground ambulance). 91Ws regularly practice their medical skills on one another to stay proficient.

Medics cash in on training opportunities

His grandpa and dad both served in the medical field, so when it came time for Pfc. James Evans to choose an MOS, his mind was made up.

"I was sure I wanted to join the first time I walked in (the recruiter's) door," said Evans, 14th Combat Support Hospital. "I said, 'What do I do to get into the Army?' I didn't want to be a health care specialist. I wanted to be a doggone combat medic."

Health care specialist is the official name of the 91Ws, but in the field, they are known as combat medics.

"I wanted to be in a line unit or at an aid station, not in a hospital," Evans said. "Eventually I want to be a physician's assistant. I like dealing with patients."

At AIT, in Fort Sam Houston, Texas, medics participated in a medevac exercise and learned to triage patients and load them in a Blackhawk. This experience made Evans want to go to flight medic school and work with a dustoff or medevac unit.

> "I like the medical field, and I like helping Soldiers. (Medics) have the ability to affect Soldiers directly."
> Sgt. Bradford Banks
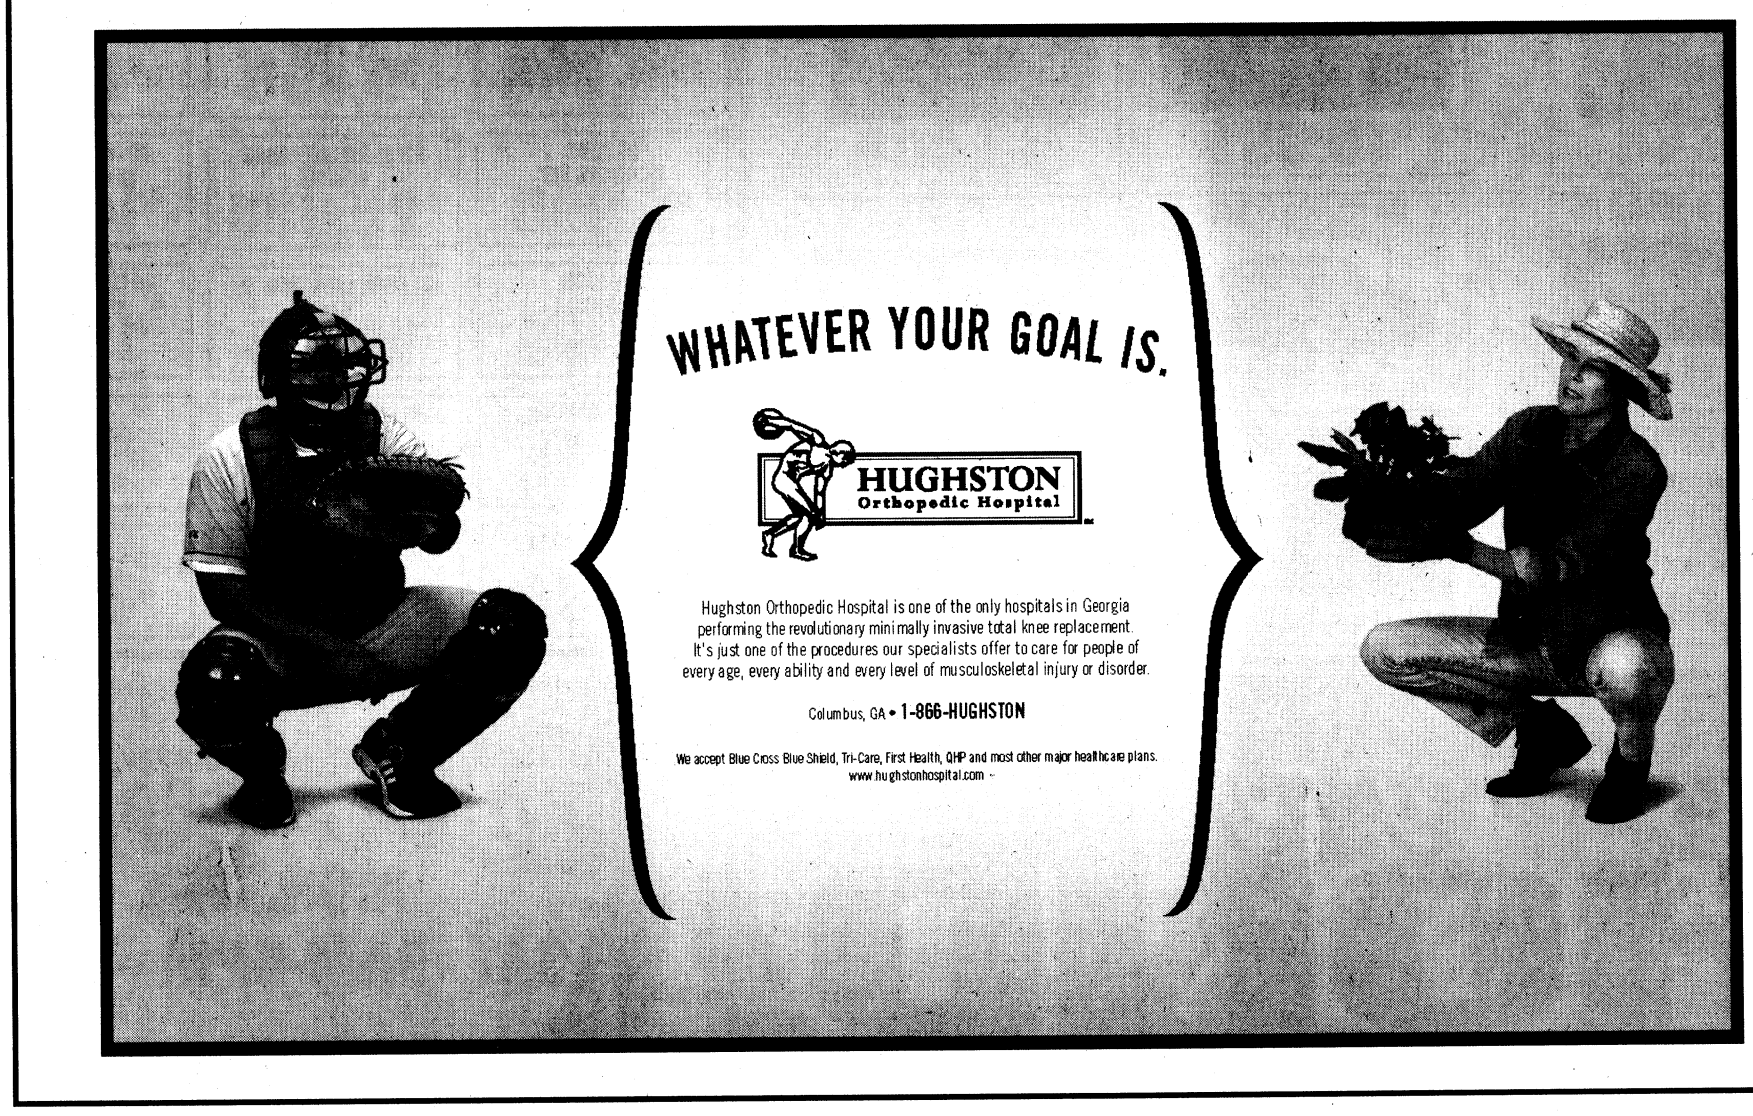
> MEDDAC

Spc. John Baird started as a "straight whiskey," a medic with no identifier, but took additional training to become a certified licensed practical nurse, 91W, M6.

Baird initially joined the Army as a cannon crew member in a field artillery unit, but when it came time to re-enlist, he decided he wanted to be a medic. After 16 weeks of 91W training, Baird went through 46 weeks of M6 training, including academics and hospital clinicals.

"My favorite part is patient care, and when we get deployed, we will get to do a lot of that," Baird said. "It is satisfying to know you made someone's day better."

After completing the 91W portion of school, health care specialists can earn identifiers and become specialized in nursing, orthopedics or physical therapy.



Once they graduate, they're assigned to an emergency room, troop medical clinic, combat support hospital, forward support battalion or any other unit in the military where medics are authorized.

"This field gives you a lot of good opportunities in the Army," Evans said. "Almost every unit in the military has a medic, whether they are dustoff, a line unit, combat support hospital … In this MOS you can work with all of them."

Sgt. Bradford Banks, with MEDDAC, was first assigned to a light Infantry unit and now works in a troop medical clinic.

"I like the medical field, and I like helping Soldiers," Banks said. "(Medics) have the ability to affect Soldiers directly."

Air Force trains for Iraqi mission

A team of about 550 Airmen from 18 units around the country trained at Fort Benning for three weeks to prepare for a six month deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Units began departing this week, and the rest are scheduled to leave Saturday. They will replace one battalion of combat engineers in the 3rd Infantry Division.

In Iraq, the Red Horse Expeditionary Squadron engineers will construct runways, roads and buildings at forward operating bases. To prepare the Airmen for dangers they might encounter moving to different locations, their training focused on live fire maneuvers, navigational skills and convoy operations.

"The Air Force is looking forward to working with the Army," said Capt. Rex Shorman of the 723rd Expeditionary Red Horse squadron. "The training here has been outstanding. We have a lot of experience, but we also have a lot of youthful Airmen who will benefit from this training."

A lot of the training has been in the classroom, but Jan. 21, the Airmen experienced a long day at Malone Range 26. There they practiced emergency medical treatment, guarding access points, securing a perimeter, movements with a translator and crowd control.

The contractor, JMDS, provided actors for the angry crowd.

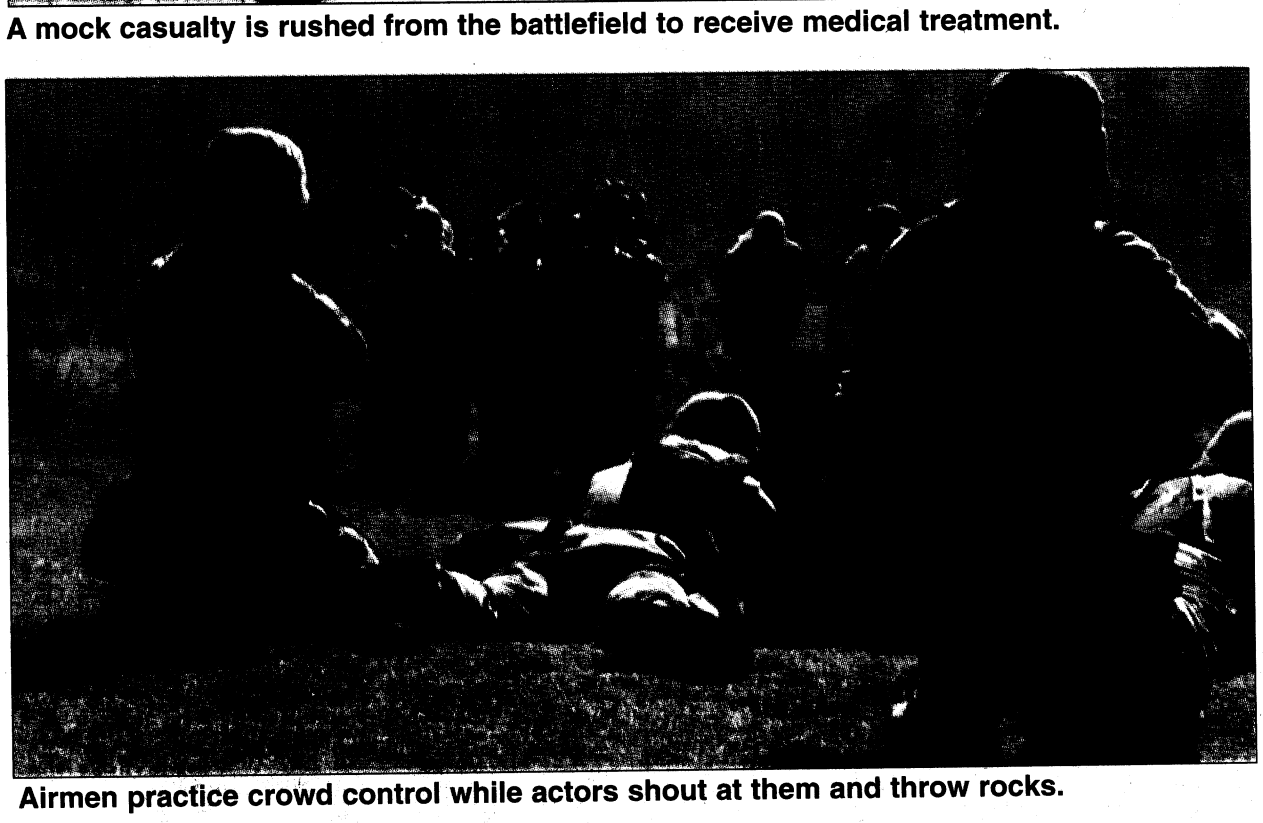
They yelled in Arabic, threw rocks and kicked dirt at the Airmen, crossed perimeter lines and tried to goad them into reacting inappropriately.

"Push 'em back! Come on let's move!" yelled Army cadre, when the crowd moved too close to the perimeter. The Airmen moved as a team to force the crowd back behind the barbed wire.

Most of the actors in the crowd were Iraqi refugees from the Saddam Hussein regime, said Steven Duffey, JMDS project manager.

"This training will be really valuable to the younger guys who have never deployed," said Staff Sgt. Edgard Bonillas. "The convoy training, the combat lifesaver training, and the time on the range shooting pop-up targets are really going to pay off."

In his seven years with the Air Force, Bonillas has deployed for support missions in Saudi Arabia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates and Iraq.



This will be the first deployment for Airman 1st Class Robert Buckwater, who said he was impressed with the training and cadre at Fort Benning, and feels better prepared for what he'll face in Iraq.

"The things we're learning will help us stay safe, and I feel more confident about our mission," he said.

"I'm ready to do my job and serve America."

A mock casualty is rushed from the battlefield to receive medical treatment.

An Airman practices skills he learned in combat lifesaver training by evaluating the injuries of a patient and preparing an IV.

Army to renovate substandard barracks

$250 million part of $10 billion IMA undertaking

Eric Cramer
Army News

WASHINGTON — Soldiers living in barracks will see big improvements beginning this spring, as the Army's Installation Management Agency begins to execute a $250 million program upgrade the Army's most deficient barracks.

The funding was made available as a short-term fix to improve 177 barracks that were identified as "red," or substandard under the Installation Status Report.

The plan is to upgrade those facilities from red to amber within a year.

"This funding gives IMA one more way to improve quality of life for our Soldiers," said Philip E. Sakowitz, deputy director of the IMA.

"It's not the end of the story, of course."

The IMA plans to spend about $260 million a year to sustain barracks facilities, he said.

IMA has been steadily building and renovating barracks under a long-term $10 billion program. In two years, many barracks upgrades have been completed while units were deployed in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

"Now we can tackle the barracks that need the most attention first," Sakowitz said

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Kenneth O. Preston said the Army's goal is to take care of Soldiers.

"This gives us a chance to do it better," Preston said. "The American Soldier deserves the highest standard of living whether they're married or single. The barracks isn't just room and board to our single Soldiers, it's their home."

George Lloyd, a strategic planner for Unaccompanied Personnel Housing, said the Army has identified 177 barracks buildings that require changes. He uses the medical term "triage" in which the most serious cases are treated first. Work on those facilities will be begin in April 2005 and will likely be completed by September 2006, Lloyd said.

He said the Army has allotted about $250 million a year, above its normal building and maintenance budget, to the improvement program.

During the renovation process, some Soldiers will be moved out of barracks and off post.

Those most likely to be affected during the renovations are "geographic bachelors" — Soldiers at locations remote from their families.

Lloyd said some junior enlisted Soldiers may also be authorized Basic Allowance for Housing while renovations of their barracks are under way.

"We've identified about 20,000 individual Soldiers' units we feel are critical, or 'red,'" Lloyd said.

"Our goal is to make them more livable, get them to 'amber' and then renovate to meet the one plus one standard that is our goal."

The "1+1" standard will provide a home-like atmosphere for Soldiers in the barracks environment, he said.

The standard provides a two-bedroom module for every two junior enlisted Soldiers, and each NCO is assigned a two-room module.

"We haven't achieved that standard Armywide yet," Lloyd said.

He said the Army has finished about $6 billion of a scheduled $10 billion in improvements to reach the 1+1 standard.

Scam targets Army civilian personnel

Civilian Personnel Advisory System

Army employees have received phone calls from a person claiming to be a contractor with the Army Benefits Center-Civilian (ABC-C).

The caller reportedly asks personal questions for the purpose of "preparing an annuity estimate." The ABC-C is not contacting employees for this reason.

Employees are reminded that the Army Benefits Center-Civilian (ABC-C) is the primary source within the Department of the Army for providing information and counseling on Federal Employees Health Benefits, Federal Employees Group Life Insurance, Thrift Savings Plan, and CSRS/FERS benefits for Army employees.

The ABC-C will occasionally contact an employee on a benefit issue without prior contact from the employee to resolve health plan discrepancies, etc.

The ABC-C does not employ contract personnel and will only make such calls during the normal business hours of 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. (CT).

The local advisory centers and operation centers may also contact employees to coordinate the benefits specified above.

For the Flexible Spending Account and Long Term Care benefits, the Office of Personnel Management has designated SHPS (Sykes Health Plan Services) and Long Term Care Partners, respectively, to administer these programs.

Non-appropriated fund employees, as necessary, would be contacted by a representative from the NAF Human Resources Office.

If an employee feels uncomfortable with someone making contact with them, he or she can always call to verify the source.

Employees should always be cautious before disclosing any personal information to an unfamiliar source concerning their Federal benefits.

Campbell: Retires reluctantly

"I guess I just thought the grass was greener in the Army," he said with a shrug. "Not much grass in the Navy anyway."

Campbell loved the Army, and he loved the Infantry in particular. The Infantry made him grow up, he said. He spent two tours in Vietnam and was even featured in a Stars and Stripes article about a clandestine mission. He'd rather not talk about the mission, but he's quite proud of the article.

"It used to hang right there," he said, pointing to a bare spot on a bare wall.

After an RPG put an end to his Infantry career, Campbell was assigned to aviation operations in Korea in 1970. There he learned to love the airfield.

But at Fort Benning, he learned to love heading up what he calls "the Army's premier power projection point."

"It's been fun, real fun," he said. "I've worked with the Rangers. I've worked with special forces — you name it. I've worked with the Air Force, the Navy and the Marines. I've been there and done that, so I know what the troops need."

Campbell said it's time to retire, and though he's going reluctantly, he's grateful for the time he's spent at Lawson, especially the last five years. Those years are a bonus.

Campbell suffered from arterial venous malformation — "too many veins in the left lobe," he explained — a condition that began to cause seizures and memory loss in 1999. He underwent 14 hours of surgery, and the doctor gave him a 20 percent chance of survival. If he survived, he'd have to retire.

"My wife said, 'They don't know you like I know you,'" said Campbell, who experienced short-term memory loss for months after the surgery. "And she ought to know. She's my best friend. I wouldn't be here if it weren't for her."

Donna nursed her husband back to health, and he reported to work three months later. But suppose Campbell had opted to retire?

"I wouldn't be alive today," said Staff Sgt. Martin Patterson. "I owe him everything."

Patterson and another Ranger were struck by lightning at the airfield during the 2003 Ranger Rendezvous. Campbell was the first on the scene and performed CPR until an ambulance arrived.

"I did what anybody would've done," he said. "But when he left here, there was still no pulse. I never thought he'd make it."

Now Campbell and Patterson talk at least once a week, and Campbell stays abreast of Patterson's progress — his health and his career.

The two will be life-long friends, "like family," said Patterson, who also suffered short-term memory loss, defied the doctor's grim prognosis, and returned to active duty with the Rangers.

He sees that kind of irony in every aspect of their relationship.

"If he (had retired) I wouldn't be here," Patterson said. "And everything he went through with (his surgery,) helped him understand what I was going through, and he's helped my family (understand.)

"I don't know if I've ever told him he's my hero, but I'm pretty sure he knows it," Patterson said. "What don't I owe him?"

CENTCOM 1-year PCS assignments

Army senior leaders decided to transition many of the CENTCOM 179-day Individual Augmentee taskings to one-year PCS tours, effective Jan. 1, to increase operational capability and increase stability for these deployed operational HQs.

Volunteers with the right skills and experiences to meet these requirements are needed.

These headquarters include: Multi-National Forces-Iraq, Multi-National Corps-Iraq, Multi-National Security Transition Corps-Iraq, Task Force 134, Project and Contracting Office-Iraq, and Combined Forces Command-Afghanistan.

The total current PCS requirement is approximately 733 positions (443 officers, 43 warrant officers, and 247 enlisted). Of these positions, approximately 40 percent have a PCS report date of January 2005. The remaining positions are phased throughout 2005.

The positions call for all grades, commissioned and warrant, and nearly all skills.

The total requirements for January to March 2005 are 414 Soldiers.

For more information, contact your career manager today.

New teams to provide expanded human intelligence capabilities

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

The Defense Intelligence Agency's new Strategic Support Branch is providing enhanced human intelligence capabilities to better support combatant commanders in the War on Terror, senior defense officials said Monday.

The new teams, made up of about 10 civilians and service members, are being deployed to support combatant commands' warfighting capabilities with improved human intelligence, officials said.

The teams may include case officers, linguists, interrogators and other specialists from the Defense Human Intelligence Service, DIA's long-standing human intelligence arm. The Strategic Support Branch was developed over the past year in cooperation with the CIA, and information gathered by the teams will be shared with other U.S. government intelligence activities, officials said. The teams are managed and developed by the Defense Intelligence Agency, but officials emphasized that when deployed, they and their activities remain under the control of military commanders.

Officials told reporters the new teams were formally established after Congress was consulted about them and approved their funding in the fiscal 2005 budget. DIA received the funding to stand up, manage and develop the teams. Officials stressed that the new teams are "not a spy network," as some media reports have suggested, but rather, an element that collects human intelligence not readily available through high-tech intelligence-gathering methods.

The 9/11 commission report pointed out the need to improve the U.S. human intelligence capability "across the board." President Bush reiterated this view during a recent press interview. Since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and well before the 9/11 commission's report was released, the Defense Human Intelligence Service was already taking steps to become "more focused and task-oriented for the Global War on Terror," Pentagon spokesman Larry Di Rita said in a statement released Sunday.

A key objective, he said, was to improve the level of tactical and operational intelligence available to assist combatant commanders for specific missions involving regular or special operations forces.

"The closer we looked at it, the more convinced we became that we did not have the right organization, the right structure, the right training," a defense official said. And most importantly, he said, it became evident that the department's human intelligence capabilities weren't organized to serve on a rotational basis in two places like Iraq and Afghanistan.

Defense officials said the new teams, which may operate in a clandestine manner, will provide a rotational human intelligence base that provides sustainable support to combatant commanders.

They stressed that this was not being done to compete with traditional CIA activities, as some press articles have asserted, but rather, to enhance the military's ability to gather the intelligence it needs to support its own operations.

"You simply cannot fight a long-term war with a pick-up team" that's pulled from other locations as needed to support a human intelligence requirement, an official said.

"When you do that, first, you don't have a long-term sustainment kind of capability, and second, you deplete the capabilities from the place where they were drawn from."

Officials said enhancing this capability is expected to have a big payoff to DoD as it transforms itself to better confront 21st century challenges.

"We're simply now facing new challenges in the Global War on Terror, and DoD is looking for better ways to organize to meet new world challenges," an official said.

Wolfowitz says world can't look other way in face of evil

Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

Peaceful nations "cannot close their eyes or sit idly by in the face of genocide," Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz said Monday at a U.N. General Assembly ceremony commemorating the 60th anniversary of the liberation of Nazi death camps.

Wolfowitz told the assembly that it took the most terrible war in history to end the horrors the Nazis inflicted on the world.

He said through the special commemoration, U.N. member states are doing more than reflecting on what happened at the death camps. They are "affirming their rejection of such evil and making a statement of hope for a more civilized future, a hope that 'never again' will the world look the other way in the face of such evil."

The General Assembly held the commemorative session, the first in its history, to mark the liberation of Auschwitz-Birkenau camp, a symbol of the Holocaust that slaughtered at least 6 million Jews and others in World War II, the deputy defense secretary said.

The commemoration was held three days before the actual anniversary of the liberation of the camp by Soviet troops on Jan. 27, 1945, in order not to conflict with ceremonies that will be held in Austria.

"War is not something Americans seek, nor something we will ever grow to like," Wolfowitz said. "Throughout our history, we have waged it reluctantly, but we have pursued it as a duty when it was necessary.

> "War is not something Americans seek, nor something we will ever grow to like."
> Paul Wolfowitz
> Deputy Secretary of Defense

"We're here to reflect on the magnitude of the occasion how totalitarian evil claimed millions of precious lives," Wolfowitz said.

"Americans have fought often to liberate others from slavery and tyranny in order to protect our own freedom," Wolfowitz said. "Cemeteries from France to North Africa, with their rows of Christian crosses and Stars of David, attest to that truth."

He said the U.N. commemoration remembers people who fell victim to tyranny because of their political views, their heritage or their religion, in places where human slaughter was a systematic industry of state.

"Today, we also pay tribute to all the Soldiers of many Allied nations who participated in the liberation of the Nazi death camps, for their courage and sacrifice and for the care they provided to the survivors," Wolfowitz said.

TEMPORARY BRIGADE COMBAT TEAM SUPPORT FACILITIES AND BRIGADE COMBAT TEAM TRAINING AT Fort Benning, Georgia

The United States Army Infantry Center, Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Management Division, Fort Benning, Georgia, hereby announces the completion and public availability of an Environmental Assessment (EA) and Draft Finding of No Significant Impact (FNSI) concerning the construction, maintenance, and use of temporary support facilities for the new 5th Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division and the training that will be conducted by this Brigade Combat Team (BCT) on existing ranges and training areas at Fort Benning, Ga. These documents were prepared pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

The Army intends to temporarily station the 5th Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division at Fort Benning. BCT Soldiers will begin to arrive at Fort Benning by early fall of 2005; the BCT is expected to be at full strength with approximately 3,400 Soldiers by mid-October 2005. As such, temporary facilities are needed so Soldiers will have facilities to support them. Temporary construction would include parking areas, and maintenance, barracks, administrative, dining, and other support facilities. The BCT would train using existing ranges and training areas on Fort Benning.

Three alternatives are considered in the EA. Alternative I is to locate the temporary support facilities on approximately 247 acres of land in three clustered areas within the East, North, and Central Harmony Church cantonment area. Three World War II buildings would be demolished and two others would either be reused by the BCT or demolished. The BCT would train on the Light Infantry ranges and practice light maneuvers on the training areas that currently exist at Fort Benning; existing environmental controls and monitoring for environmental effects for these areas would continue.

Alternative II would involve locating the temporary support facilities for the BCT within the East Harmony Church cantonment area within an area covering approximately 238 acres. The existing military police dog kennel and the Bradley drivers training course would be relocated to accommodate the facilities in this location. BCT training would be the same as with Alternative I.

Alternative III is the no-action alternative. With this alternative, no support facilities would be constructed for the newly arriving troops that will comprise the 5th/25th BCT. Soldiers would instead be housed in hotel rooms or rented apartments off post in the communities near Fort Benning. Administrative and maintenance duties would be performed in existing facilities or off-post leased properties. BCT training would be the same as with Alternative I.

The EA evaluates the effects associated with each of the alternatives on soils, water quality, biological resources, land use, recreation, socioeconomics, environmental justice, cultural resources, transportation, utilities, hazardous materials and waste, public health and safety, air quality, and noise. The EA and Draft FNSI for the proposed action have been completed and made available to the public for a review period of 15 days starting from the first day of publication in The Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, in accordance with Title 40 of the Code of Federal Regulations, Part 1501.4(e)(1) and Army Regulation 200-2, Environmental Effects of Army Actions. These documents are available at the following locations, as well as the following Web site: http://www.benning.army.mil/EMd/_program_mgt/legal/index.htm.

b. South Lumpkin Library, located at 2034 South Lumpkin Road, Columbus, Ga.

c. Fort Benning Main Post Library, located in Building 93, Fort Benning, Ga.

Anyone wishing to comment on the proposed action or request additional information must write to the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Programs Management Branch (Attention: Mr. Patrick Chauvey), Building 6 (Meloy Hall) Room 309, Fort Benning, Georgia 31905-5122, or call (706) 545-4211.

Tsunami relief rocks tonight at Bradley

Area bands donate funds to Red Cross

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Tonight six area bands will play at a benefit concert, the Tsunami Rock Relief, to raise money for tsunami victims.

Doors open at 6 p.m. and the show starts at 7 p.m. at the Bradley Theatre, 1241 Broadway. Tickets are $10.

Bands will perform 30-45 minute sets with DJs, Obeh, Drizno and Timm-90 playing between sets.

All proceeds from tickets, concessions and T-shirt sales will go to the American Red Cross.

The bands featured are A. Armada, Battleflag, Lakeside, Spy for Hire, One Night Stand, and Sketch Art.

The bands, from Columbus, Athens and Auburn, are a mix of styles, ranging from indi-rock and pop-punk to showgaze pop.

Sketch Art includes band members from Sky Dog Gypsy, and will appeal to an older crowd, organizer Melissa Golden said.

Golden, a 24-year-old Columbus Tech student, decided with her friends at a New Year's Eve party that they wanted to help.

They brainstormed ways to raise money for the victims and get the community involved.

"It started out really small," Golden said. "I was just going to throw a big party at my house and give all the proceeds to the Red Cross. Then I thought, if we're going to do it, let's do it big and get the community involved."

Golden felt the need to get personally involved because of the millions of children affected.

"I guess I just have a big heart when it comes to people in need," she said.

"It's great that a group of young people organized this,"

Retired Col. Roy Brooks, 91, drives regularly for the Red Cross. He and a group of volunteers cart patients from Martin Army Community Hospital to and from the parking lot. Brooks started the shuttle program eight years ago. It has been a constant struggle to keep volunteers on staff.

Volunteer drivers needed

It's early morning and a brisk 30 degrees outside, but the wind feels like an arctic blast. There are no empty parking spots save the back row, which is so far from the hospital you need binoculars to find the front door. You don't feel good, you're running late, and you just want to get inside before that cough turns into pneumonia.

Then around the corner comes a shuttle that looks like a stretch golf cart, with an old guy in a bright red jacket at the helm. Before you know it, you are at the clinic door headed toward a warm waiting room.

Retired Col. Roy Brooks, 91, takes time every day to haul the sick, the weary and the just plain lazy from the backwaters of the parking lot to the front doors of Martin Army Community Hospital.

He's one of nearly 20 big-hearted Red Cross volunteers who brave the cold, heat and rain year-round to make hospital visits a little easier for MACH patients.

"We don't refuse anyone a ride," Brooks said. "We don't take tips or any other form of compensation. We do it because we are helping people who need a ride. Handicapped, sick people or people with small kids. There are a lot of people who could really use some help. But we don't turn anyone down."

> "I figure the Army was so good to me. I got so many free vacations and such good pay. I guess I just decided to give some of those good times back."

Car show scheduled for Feb. 26

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The 12th annual Jordan High School Champion Car Show is scheduled for Feb. 26, weather permitting.

Tom Vinson, Muscogee County's Teacher of the Year and the car show chairman, said the show will likely be bigger than ever, and it's already well established as the biggest car show in town.

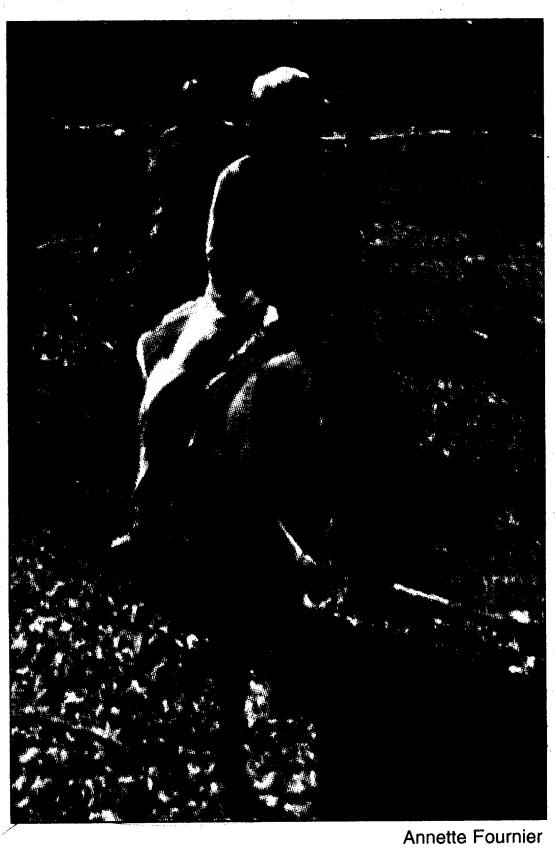
"It's huge," Vinson said. "But there's always room for more. We'd love to see a lot of people from Fort Benning there."

More than 2,500 people are expected at this year's event, which will be held at the school at 3200 Howard Ave. Food vendors and entertainers will participate.

Competitors will vie for first-, second- and third-place trophies in 28 classes, including antiques, muscle, modified, trucks, motorcycles and foreign cars. There's also a class exclusively for students and "restorations in progress."

Specialty awards include people's choice, oldest car and truck, best paint, best interior and best engine.

Registration begins at 8 a.m., and judging starts at 9 a.m. Winners will be announced at 4 p.m.



A $20 nonrefundable pre-registration fee is due by Feb. 25. Registration at the show is $25. Show officials reserve the right to determine class entry, and their decisions are final.

If it rains, the show will be held March 5.

The car show is a project of Jordan High School and Partners In Education. Proceeds benefit school programs.

For more information, call 649-0769.

Do you spend your weekends looking for something to do? You'll find adventure for a bargain at Roosevelt Stables.

The sightseeing trails twist through trees, creeks and patches of bamboo in scenic F.D. Roosevelt State Park. There's not a sound but the beat of hooves and the occasional cry from a bird. The rugged paths meander over hills and into valleys, providing beautiful views and an adventure in the 10,000 acre state park.

All rides are led by a guide on the 28 miles of trails, and the nature trails are great opportunity to experience the joys of trail riding, owner Connie Hall said.

If you want to learn to ride, now is a great time to saddle up. Roosevelt stables is offering half-price rides for military personnel, their families, retirees, DoD civilians and contractors until March 5.

"It's a wonderful experience. Most riders see wildlife like deer, wild turkeys, foxes and lots of birds."

Riders can expect gentle horses who are used to inexperienced riders, Hall said.

"Ninety percent of the people who come to the stables have never ridden before, or have not ridden in years," she said. "We can accommodate all riders here. Most people can ride one of our horses or ponies, a larger person can ride a draft horse, and small kids can ride miniature horses."

Children younger than 6 can't ride the trails, but they can sit on a horse and be lead around.

The stable has about 25 horses, but about 15 are actually at the stable. The rest are given a break from riders, and put out to pasture for a few months at a time. They also have a sheep, miniature donkeys, dogs and several cats, which are up for adoption.

The stable offers one to four hour rides. September through May they have overnight camping rides and moonlight rides. Draft horses pull wagons for those who prefer not to saddle up, and a team of miniature horses pulls a cart for kids. Roosevelt stables also teach Western or English style riding lessons.

The price with the military discount is $15 for a one hour trail ride $30 for a two hour ride and $50 for a wagon that seats seven.

Horse owners can bring their horse and use the trails for $5 a day and pay $15 to lodge a horse in the stable overnight. Riders must call ahead to schedule a ride at 628-7463.

For a description of the trails, see their Web site at www.rooseveltstables.com.

Q: What is a class action lawsuit?

A: Suppose you go on a Caribbean cruise, but instead of having fun in the sun, you get a bad case of food poisoning. Suppose also that you are not alone, and 200 of your fellow passengers also got sick.

If the people who got sick wanted to sue the cruise line, would they each have to hire their own attorney?

Would legal action against the cruise line mean as many at 201 separate lawsuits?

A class action lawsuit is when a group of individuals similarly affected join together in a common lawsuit. In that way, two or more persons can share attorney fees and the expenses of pursuing a civil case.

In theory, this sounds like a good thing. Potential members of the class may be contacted and asked to join in the suit, which would give them an opportunity to share in an judgment or settlement.

Sharing can be negative though, as a class action judgment or settlement may be smaller than a separate court action, and it is divided among the members of the class.

When you hear about large awards in the courts, those are often not class action cases, and if they were, the award would have to be divided among class members. Speak to an attorney if you are considering a class action lawsuit.

Insurance official wants consumers to 'get smart'

Office of Commissioner of Insurance

When it comes to insurance, knowledge is your best policy. That's why Insurance Commissioner John W. Oxendine and the National Association of Insurance Commissioners are encouraging consumers to get smart about their coverage during the fourth annual Get Smart About Insurance Week.

Although most Americans (72 percent) feel they have about the right amount of insurance coverage, only 33 percent say they understand the details of the coverage "very well," according to a recent survey by the NAIC.

During this week, consumers are urged to call Oxendine's Consumer Services Division at (800) 656-2298 or (404) 656-2070, to request a free brochure and get information on what they should expect from insurance coverage.

They may also visit the commissioner's Web site at www.gainsurance.org to take part in an interactive quiz that allows consumers to gauge their level of "insurance smarts."

"Get Smart About Insurance Week isn't about selling or canceling policies," Oxendine said.

"It's about making sure you and your family are properly covered. We believe the Georgia Insurance Commissioner's Office is your best resource for insurance-related questions and concerns.

"As demonstrated by the survey results, last year's Get Smart About Insurance Week raised awareness among consumers and helped connect them with their agents and state insurance departments for information about their coverage."

The 33 percent who understand their policy very well represents a rise of 6 percentage points from last year's survey.

According to Oxendine, there are several steps consumers can take to get smart about their insurance coverage and ensure they are getting the best deal for the right kind of insurance.

"We recommend consumers know what kind of coverage they need before they shop around. Each individual consumer should watch out for his or her own best interests," Oxendine said.

Other recommendations from the commissioner's office include:

• Check with the Consumer Services Division of the office for free tips and up-to-date information prior to purchasing health, life, auto, home or other insurance coverage.

• Schedule a routine "checkup" with your insurance providers at least once a year.

• Inquire about the cost benefit of opting for higher deductibles; this may save a consumer money.

• Ask specifically about discounts for good driving records, good health, good grades, special education or training.

• Shop around for identical insurance products and services. Not every insurance company charges the same rate for the same product.

• Remember an insurance policy is a legal document. Therefore, read it carefully.

"The Georgia Insurance Commissioner's Office is a terrific source of unbiased information," Oxendine said. "You may not have the coverage you need. You may have more than you need.

"You may feel that you've been treated unfairly when shopping for insurance, or you may just want help understanding how different kinds of insurance work. No matter what your situation is, we are there to help you get smart about insurance."

Relief: Concert will help victims of Dec. 26 tsunami

said Mitzi Oxford, Red Cross Development director. "They've done a great job, and I hope a lot of people will come out to support it."

While the number of victims is still growing, authorities say more than 200,000 people lost their lives when the tsunami devastated 3,000 miles of coastline in Southeast Asia Dec. 26.

The Red Cross had raised $239 million Dec. 27, but they need about $400 million to aid the victims, according to the Red Cross's Web site.

The primary needs are food, clean water, sanitation, vaccinations, healthcare and supplies for basic shelter.

The Red Cross is focusing on sanitizing water supplies to avoid the spread of disease. Health care workers are vaccinating millions of children against diseases like measles.

Authorities are also concerned about malaria, often fatal to children, which spreads rapidly when infected mosquitoes breed in standing water.

The funds raised by the concert will go directly to the International Red Cross.

"Everyone should come out and support it," Golden said. "It isn't just for college students or young people. We want everyone to come out and help those who really need it."

Drivers: Needed to shuttle patients from parking lot

Brooks and his band of volunteers are no strangers to service.

Before he started the volunteer shuttle driver program eight years ago with Retired Officers Association members, Brooks spent 34 years on active duty.

After he retired, he worked for H&R Block for 19 years.

He still believes in the value of serving.

"I figure the Army was so good to me. I got so many free vacations and such good pay," he said.

"I guess I just decided to give some of those good times back."

Joe Emehiser, Fort Benning Red Cross station manager, said Brooks is "just amazing."

"If I make it to 91, I'm hoping to just be able to remember my name and where I live," he said.

"All those guys are great. They are so dedicated in providing this extremely valuable service.

"They really do care about Fort Benning."

Brooks and his wife of 71 years, Reva, bundle up and brave the elements five days a week.

But they can't do it all alone.

The volunteers can't keep up with the workload at the hospital.

Five are sick and unable to drive, and Brooks' efforts to recruit more volunteers haven't yielded any results.

The drivers have assisted nearly 400,000 patients over the past eight years, but face serious problems as the number of patrons increases and drivers dwindle.

Brooks said the program is in danger.

The volunteer process isn't complicated. Requirements include a current valid driver's license, Red Cross training on procedures and policies, and coordination with hospital authorities for a valet license. As long as drivers can pass Brooks' driving test, they're good to go.

The aging chauffeur said he plans to drive another 10 years, with or without volunteers.

"I worked hard for my retirement, and me and the wife can live just fine on colonel's pay," he said. "But there's a lot of people who need help."

For more information on volunteering as a driver for the shuttle service, call Brooks at 689-7473 or Emehiser at 545-5194.

Local teen 'scouts' for success

Boy Scout Chase Middleton, right, puts together a shelving unit with Spc. David Rossi, Ranger Indoctrination Program, at Donovan Research Library.

Only about three out of every 100 Boy Scouts will reach the rank of Eagle Scout, but that's just what Charles "Chase" Middleton of Fort Benning's Boy Scout Troop 27 is hoping to achieve.

Middleton is a Life Scout trying to reach the next rank, Eagle Scout, before his 18th birthday in September, the cut-off date.

"It's important for me to become an Eagle Scout, because my dad, his three brothers, and my grandfather were all Eagle Scouts," Middleton said. "I want to do it because it will make my family proud."

Scouts have to hold a leadership position for six months, receive at least 22 badges, plan and complete a community service project and be selected by the Eagle Scout review board.

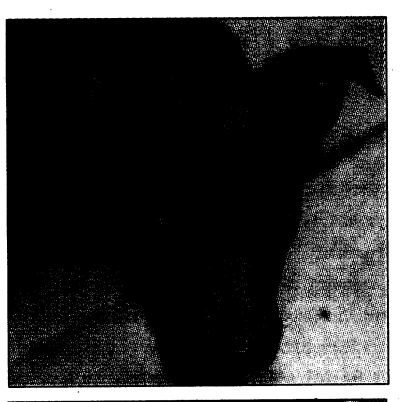
For his service project, Middleton is working with other scouts at Donovan Research Library in Infantry Hall, where he started volunteering two years ago to fulfill the 20 hours community service required by his school.

The Eagle Scout project is planned and managed by the Scout who must invest at least 100 hours, said Scoutmaster Maj. Shawn Scott, Army Physical Fitness School.

"It is sort of a culminating event of all their leadership experience," Scott said. "The Scout finds a project, makes all the contacts, plans it, has to find people to work the project and has to be the one in charge all the way to completion."

A junior at Columbus High School, Middleton takes advanced placement classes, earning a 4.2 grade point average. He also plays football and wrestles.

"It's important for me to do well in school, because I want to get into a good college," Middleton said. He hopes to go to University of Mississippi, his parents' and grandparents' alma mater.



Chase's parents are Lt. Col. Charles and Suzanne Middleton.

His father, a doctor previously assigned to Martin Army Community Hospital, is now at Fort Stewart.

"Chase is a great role model for the younger guys because he's always anxious to participate and try challenging activities," Scott said. "He is quick to smile, and I can tell he really enjoys Scouting."

Help thy neighbor

God gives opportunities to do good

REFLECTIONS

Chaplain (Capt.) Jeffrey Van Ness
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Coming to Fort Benning from a drier climate in the Southwest, the one thing my family and I have noticed the most is the incessant humidity in this part of the country.

It seems that even on the driest of days, there is still an element of moisture present in the surrounding air.

When I opened my storage closet a few days ago, I realized some items I had stored had started to rust. Some tools, a metal dog cage and even the bassinet all my children used in their infancy had fallen victim to the woes of humidity.

Items I was certain had great value, sure weren't of much value now. I thought about how much better it would have been if I had given these things away before we moved, to someone who could have used them. In trying to save my possessions, I had, in fact, ruined them.

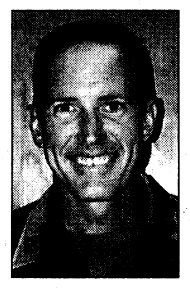
I think sometimes we can, almost unknowingly, become slaves to our stuff. The saying goes, the person who dies with the most stuff wins. How sad and how untrue.

In Galatians 5:1, Paul tells that, "So Christ has really set us free. Now make sure that you stay free, and don't get tied up in slavery."

On first read, my reaction was that this really doesn't apply to me, I've never been a slave. And then I thought about it some more. There is so much need in the world. Every day God places opportunities to do good and give to others, right in front of me.

If I take the command to love my neighbor seriously, I am obligated to at least give these things some thought and evaluate where I might miss the opportunity to give even the smallest of things, like simply smiling at someone.

And maybe that simple smile is all they needed at that moment.



Christ challenges us to throw off the yoke of slavery that the world would place on us, to listen to his voice and obey his commands. Jesus can free us from that yoke of slavery.

My prayer today is that we would not let the opportunities God places before us to help our neighbors slip by.

Spouses need team support also

Group offers inspiration, support

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Hawkins

After the "black hat" cocked the lever of an empty revolver against my temple and let the hammer slam forward, I got the point he was so colorfully and indelibly trying to communicate.

"Never, Hawkins," he said, "Never, ever depart friendly lines alone ... never go to the fight without your team."

It was Phase I of the Special Forces Q Course, and I was about as green as they come in terms of well-honed patrolling skills. In a moment of high enthusiasm and low brain power, I stealthily left the safety of our patrol base to undertake a mission all by myself. Bad choice as the revolver to my head, face in the dirt, black hat on my back only minutes later illustrated. He wasn't being brutal; though he may have been a bit dramatic. He wasn't being cavalier; he was training me for a vital truth to help keep me alive in combat. And it worked.

The lesson I learned that day is that Soldiers don't win battles by themselves. We all need a team. We need security, and we need support.

Here's the parallel — Wives, husbands, "Never, ever depart friendly lines alone ... never!" If your Soldier has gone forward, you need to be reassured that he or she is not being asked to wage the war alone.

Your Soldier has a phenomenally dedicated team backing him or her up from start to finish — and you should too.

If you are the spouse of a deployed Soldier, then I am begging you to never, never undertake this battle by yourself. We all need a team and that includes you.

Let me make you an offer. If you feel you don't have a "team" to turn to (people around you to encourage, inspire and support), then I've got a solution.

It's the "Keeping It Together While the Army's Taken You Apart" support group for spouses of deployed Soldiers.

We had our initial meeting Jan. 20 and the response was overwhelming. A great "team" of women came together saying, "Hey, we want a place where we can enjoy the benefits of mutual encouragement, inspiration and support, and we're willing to give ourselves to that."

The doors to this team's clubhouse are wide open — child care is provided, all you have to do is show up. It's that easy!

So many responded that we are changing locations to better serve this group.

Beginning Thursday, the support group will launch, from 6 to 8 p.m., at the Kelley Hill Chapel.

The only requirement is pre-registration, to make arrangements for food and child care. Call me at 545-9014 to register.

Remember — never depart friendly lines alone — everybody needs a team.

If you would like to speak to one of our counseling team at the Family Life Center, call 545-1760 or visit our office in Soldiers' Plaza.

I am also at the CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays. Our new series is Your Best Life Now.

I look forward to serving you.

• What to watch

With a dry sports weekend, I'll be tuning in to ESPN for the Winter X Games, starting at 9 p.m. Saturday. If you're really "jonesing" for some football, Friday Night Lights is out on DVD.

• Tiger roars

Tiger Woods won the Buick Invitational in San Diego with a -16. He's slowly clawing his way back to the top, winning his first match play since October 2003. Only Vijay Singh stands in his way.

• Chastisement from beyond the grave

Canadian resident Archibald Bennitz gave a lashing to NHL commissioner Gary Bettman and players' union chief Bob Goodenow. In his obituary, he called them "skunks" for denying him the pleasure of watching the NHL and asked that Bettman steps aside and give Wayne Gretzky the job that's rightfully his.

WCAP prepares for 2008 Olympics

March kicks off summer games applicant phase

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The Army's World Class Athlete Program will begin accepting applications in March for the Olympic trials for the 2008 summer games.

The WCAP, based at Fort Carson, Colo., is responsible for the development of Army athletes for international competitions.

Requirements for the program are strict. Athletes must be nationally ranked in their respective sport or be able to document their ability to compete at world-class events. Sport-specific requirements also apply.

The application and acceptance process is rigorous and lengthy, so interested individuals should begin putting together packets as soon as possible.

If accepted, athletes are assigned to the WCAP and most are stationed at Fort Carson, though some sports are based at other locations where training support is area specific.

WCAP athletes continue to train as Soldiers while they are assigned to the program and are required to maintain Army standards in all areas. After the Olympics, athletes who placed well remain assigned to the WCAP for one year to promote the Army and the program.

"Once they are accepted into the program, their number one job is to train and compete for the Olympics," said Maj. Michael Hagen, WCAP commander.

"But they are still Soldiers. They go to PLDC and BNCOC. We conduct sergeant's time, mandatory periodic training and we send them to the range."

Hagen said WCAP Soldiers spend a significant amount of time away from home, especially winter sports. The majority of winter sports competitions are held overseas and athletes are often gone almost the entire season.

"Most of the athletes can reasonably expect to spend at least four to five months TDY in a year," Hagen said.

For more information on the WCAP or application procedures, visit the recreation and leisure section of the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Web site at www.armymwr.com.

Kourtney Sanks, an Alabama state powerlifting record holder, works out at Fort Benning's Briant Wells Fitness Center Jan. 21.

Powerlifting trio racks up world records

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

After having seven children, Susan Jackson's body wasn't cut out for bodybuilding anymore — so, she turned to powerlifting, three years ago, at 36.

Susan now holds four American records, a world championship title and an Alabama state record.

Her husband, Sgt. 1st Class Alfred Jackson, a drill sergeant with 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, is a national champion and state record holder.

"My whole family is naturally strong," Susan said. "Not to say it comes easy, because it is very hard, but it's competition and you meet good friends."

With an average of 12 hours in the gym each week, Susan's goal is to always lift just one more pound than the day before.

"I'm insane," she said. "You have to have a drive to do this. Powerlifting is between you, your will and your mind. And you have to be strong in all three."

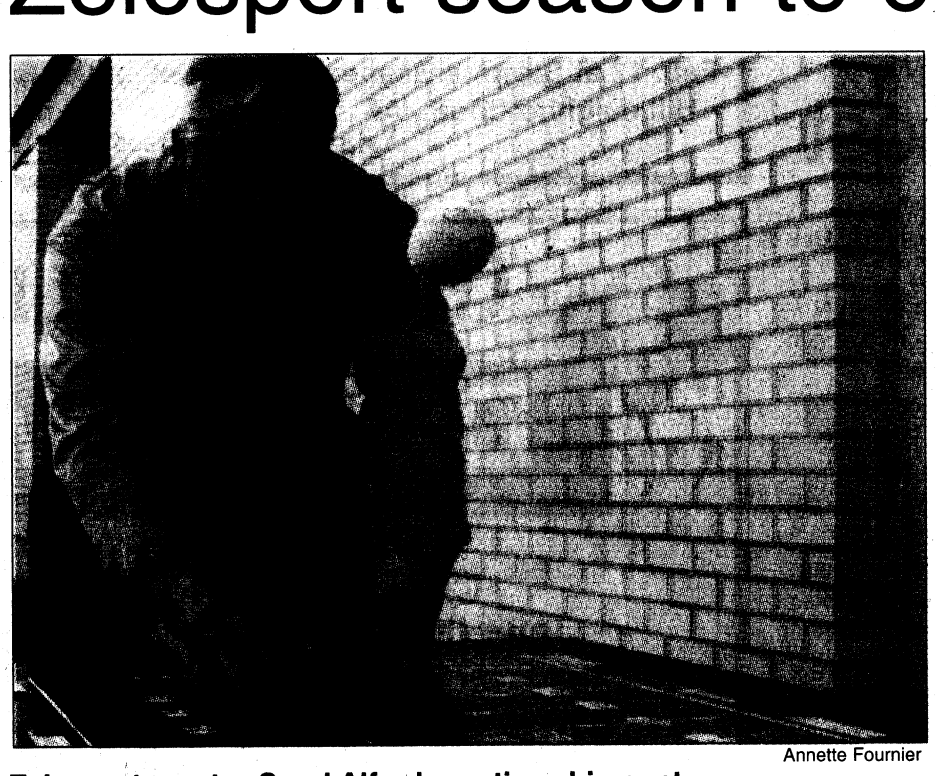
Susan is very competitive, mostly with herself, always wanting to set a new personal record in the gym and at competitions.

"I want to be the best," said Susan, a certified powerlifting trainer who lifts in the 198-pound weight class.

Her four American records are: bench, 240; squats, 325; dead lift, 380.5; total weights, 935.

Susan's husband is more of a lightweight. At 161 pounds, he dead lifts 485 pounds and bench presses 464 pounds.

The former wrestler has made it his goal to break a world record in the next two years.



The third member of this powerlifting trio is Susan's workout partner, Kourtney Sanks.

Sanks played football and lifted weights in high school to stay fit, then fell in love with powerlifting.

He was the state high school weightlifting champion in Alabama twice and started training for powerlifting championships in 2001.

Zelosport season to open in Columbus

Dexterous digits could palm cash in tabletop football

Annette Fournier

Winning $500 to $5,000 could be just a flick of the finger away for competitors in the Zelosport Football League's championship.

People with dexterous digits are being encouraged to sign up for the Columbus competition.

The game is based on tabletop football, in which a player flicks a triangular piece of paper with a finger to score touchdowns on the opponent. Zelosport is a more sophisticated version of the game, with a specialized board, game pieces and scoring system.

"You don't have to be Michael Jordan to play this game," said Spud Alfred, Zelosport's creator.

"It doesn't matter if you're a kid or an adult, man or woman or if you have a disability. If you have one finger that works, you can win the competition," he said. "You don't need to train all day or take steroids to win this kind of football."

Before his current career as a special investigator for the U.S. Office of Personnel Management, Alfred was an award-winning track and field star and Olympic-hopeful.

His Olympic dreams ended when Jimmy Carter called for the U.S. to boycott the 1980 Moscow Olympics after the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan.

Kick Ziss: Karate kicks up confidence, discipline

Classes offered on post for all interested

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Ron Ziss has never taken "no" for an answer, so when a martial arts instructor in Japan told him Americans couldn't make it in his school, he set out to prove him wrong.

"I found out real fast why Americans didn't stay there," Ziss said. "They trained arm on arm and shin on shin. The first day, a brown belt hit my wrist so hard I thought he broke it. It took three months to heal."

Two years and many bruises later, 23-year-old Ziss left Japan with a brown belt of his own and the beginnings of a new career.

As a martial arts instructor at Fort Benning's Wellness Center for the past 13 years, Ziss teaches students as young as 5 the ancient art of karate.

"It really gives you self-confidence and self-discipline," he said. "That transfers into regular life. It helps you focus and pay attention to details."

Ziss said karate is more than fighting.

"One of the things you learn is that it hurts to get hit and it hurts to hit," he said. "In here, you are used to getting kicked and punched, so when something happens out there (on the street), you don't get scared and just start flailing. You have control of yourself."

Martial arts teach skills needed at any age — like coordination and how to deliver power, even if it's just moving furniture, Ziss said.

"We don't play games here. It's difficult," he said. "There is an old saying that goes, 'It can only be comprehended after a long, hard discipline in practicing that which is most difficult to practice, and enduring that which is most difficult to do.'

"The way I relate this is that some things you do well and some are more difficult," he said. "You get more out of doing that which is hard than doing that which is easy."

Ziss teaches his students to always try to become better, and not to worry about the color of their belts as much as the skills they are mastering.

Paul Mazure and his son, Paul Michael, 7, are mastering the same skills at the same time. The two tested for their yellow belts the same day and attend classes together regularly.

"We started (karate) in Indianapolis, going one day a week, and found it was a good way to spend time together," Paul said. "It's taught (Paul Michael) discipline and helps him focus more. Plus it's better than sitting on the couch and watching TV."

Paul Michael enjoys the classes, and spending them with his dad makes it even better.

"We practice at home in the living room, and my mom thinks it's cool because she likes me to learn new things," he said. "My dad is good, just like me, and we improve every day."

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Emily Colster practices during karate class at the Fort Benning Wellness Center Jan. 22.

Martial arts classes are Sunday through Wednesday at the Wellness Center, next to the Officers' Club. Classes are $40 per month for unlimited participation.

For more information, call Ziss at 571-0336 or the Wellness Center at 545-4162.

Stowers Stampede continues post racing tradition in schools

Race part of more than 20-year legacy

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Susan Emerson taught at Faith Middle School for 30 years. For more than 20 of those years, she went above and beyond her normal duties and organized the Faith Holiday Race. Every year, runners young and old flocked to participate in the jaunt. At one time, more than 1,000 competitors pulled on sneakers for the annual challenge.

Then Emerson retired and it seemed the Fort Benning race was over.

Stowers Elementary School physical education teacher Adam Weinbaum didn't want the tradition to die, so five years ago, he created the Stowers Stampede.

"It was really important to me that we continue the legacy of having a race at Fort Benning within the school system," Weinbaum said.

The Stowers Stampede hasn't gotten the huge turnouts the Holiday Race was blessed with in its peak, something Weinbaum would like to see change.

He said the race usually draws about 200-250 runners, mostly children. He would like to see that number grow. The entry fee was lowered this year and a 10K race was added, moves Weinbaum hopes will help boost registration numbers.

This year's race, scheduled for Feb. 12, will include a one-mile fun run with two age brackets, 8 years old and younger and ages 9 to 14, a 5K wheelchair race and run, and a 10K race.

Breakfast will be served between 7:30 and 8:45 a.m. and will cost $2.

The entry fee is $5 for kids 14 and younger and $10 for kids and adults 15 and older. Units may run for free, but if members want T-shirts, the cost is $10.

The races will start and end at Stowers Elementary School.

For more information, call Weinbaum at 544-2567.

Weights: Not a challenge

"I like the atmosphere and the energy that comes from the one-on-one competitions," Sanks said. "You're competing against the weights and the next guy."

Sanks hopes to make the International Powerlifting Federation's world team and become the all-time best bench presser in the 181-pound weight class.

He's already on the right track, having bench pressed 530 pounds in a competition and more than 550 pounds in practice.

To beat the world record, he needs to lift 600 pounds.

"Everyone thinks you have to have brute strength," Sanks said.

"But, that is only forty percent of it. You have to be patient and use technique. The numbers don't come overnight."

All three train at the Briant Wells Fitness Center and agree it's one of the best training facilities in the tricommunity area.

"The people in powerlifting are the biggest-hearted, nicest people you could ever meet," Susan said. "That's one of the reasons we love it so much."

And, Susan is quick to add, powerlifting is a sport you can "grow old" in.

"There's an 80-year old man who lifts," Susan said, "and one woman has Parkinson's disease. They set everything up for her, and she lifts."

The trio will be traveling to Gainesville, Ga., Feb. 26, for the U.S. Amateur Powerlifting Committee tournament, a national qualifier for Bench America, which will be broadcast later this spring on ESPN.

competitions, and open a health club with his wife, but soon found his dreams collapsing around him.

He injured his knee throwing the javelin, and doctors detected cancer, which developed from steroid use while training for the Olympics. He lost his health club, his home and his marriage.

Despite the tough times, Alfred kept hope and today credits his recovery from cancer to his faith.

He said he was permanently changed from his brush with death.

"I realized the important things in life are family and the simple things. I want to see Zelosport succeed because it's a great family activity."

The first 256 people to sign up for the Columbus tournament are automatically entered, and eligible for the first round's $500 first prize.

In December, the top 16 players from the 14-city Georgia tour will play for the $5,000 grand prize.

The ZFL's "Celebrate Freedom" tournament will kick off Feb. 4 and 5.

The competition begins at 7 p.m. Feb. 4 and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m Feb. 5 at Gym Tech of Columbus, 5870 Veteran's Parkway.

The entry fee is $5. A portion of the proceeds will go to Oliver North's Freedom Fund, which provides college money for kids whose parents were killed in action in Iraq.

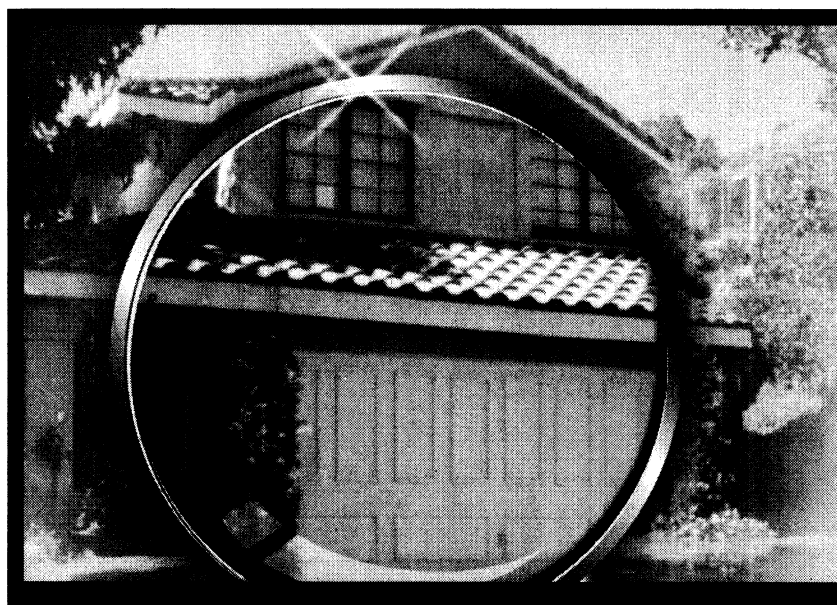
"AFTER A TERRORIST ATTACK YOUR FIRST INSTINCT MAY BE TO RUN. THAT MAY BE THE WORST THING YOU COULD DO."

~ Mario Polit, Firefighter, Ladder 106, FDNY ~



Knowing what you should do in a terrorist attack isn't just a matter of common sense. It takes some reading, some learning and some planning. That goes for people who live in small communities too. Readiness is for every American family, business and school. The terrorist threat is real and we can't afford to go unprepared.

Learn to put together an emergency supply kit, how to make a family communication plan, and how you should respond to an act of terror. All of that information is clearly explained at www.ready.gov. If you prefer, you can call 1-800-BE-READY (1-800-237-3239) for a free copy of the brochure, "Preparing Makes Sense. Get Ready Now."

ARE WALKING DOWN THE STREET.

What do you get when you mix Christianity, Judaism and Islam? In many parts of the world, it's a recipe for disaster. Yet in America, it's a formula that has peacefully endured for over 200 years. In fact, not only has it endured, it's flourished.

The pundits may say that the ability for different faiths to coexist here comes from a lack of intensity and passion for any religion in America. But nothing could be further from the truth. Because we are free to choose which religion, if any, we'd like to follow, it enables us to have a deeper, more personal relationship with our faith than would otherwise be possible.

And because no one religion needs to feel threatened by another, we can look to the similarities that unite us, instead of focusing on the differences. Two hundred million Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus agree. To learn more about freedom of religion, visit rememberfreedom.org. Or, feel free to ask the spiritual leader of your choice.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

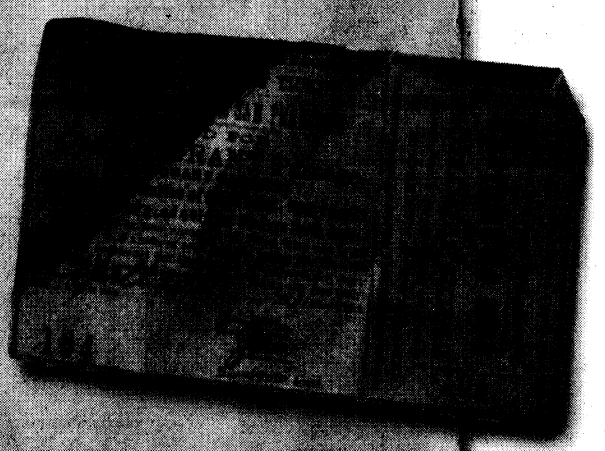
How "WE HAVE NOTHING TO EAT"



became "DAD, CAN I BORROW THE CONVERTIBLE?"

Millions of Americans can trace their roots back to an ancestor who came to the new world with a hunger. Metaphorically speaking, it was a desire for freedom. But more often than not, this noble goal was directly tied to a powerful physical need for a good, hot meal.

They came from countries around the globe, yet their stories were remarkably similar. They had left behind hard times, oppression and just about everyone they knew and loved to seek out a better life in the land of opportunity. And while it wasn't necessarily easy, they found that with a little hard work, perseverance and good old-fashioned gumption, they could achieve a quality of life far beyond what they had known before. They were free to live their own lives and prosper by their own hands. In fact, perhaps the greatest testament to the power of freedom is that, simply by working hard and educating their children, the world's tired, poor and hungry have become the nation with the highest standard of living on earth. Transportation unit heads to Kuwait, Iraq

Soldiers of the 104th Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group, deployed to OIF 3 from Lawson Army Airfield in the early hours of Jan. 28.

Separated from their families shortly after 4 a.m., the 123 troops were quiet as they waited to board the commercial flight at about 6:15 a.m.

There were soft-spoken comments like "another day, another dollar," as they filed out of the terminal and onto the tarmac. Many Soldiers said goodbye via cell phones as they hauled their carry-on bags into the blustery cold.

"Tell my kids I love them, and to take care while I'm gone," said Sgt. 1st Class Monica Bell. "I will be home soon. Mommy loves you."

More than 100 Soldiers left Fort Benning Jan. 28. The transportation unit will support the 3rd Brigade Combat Team in Iraq.

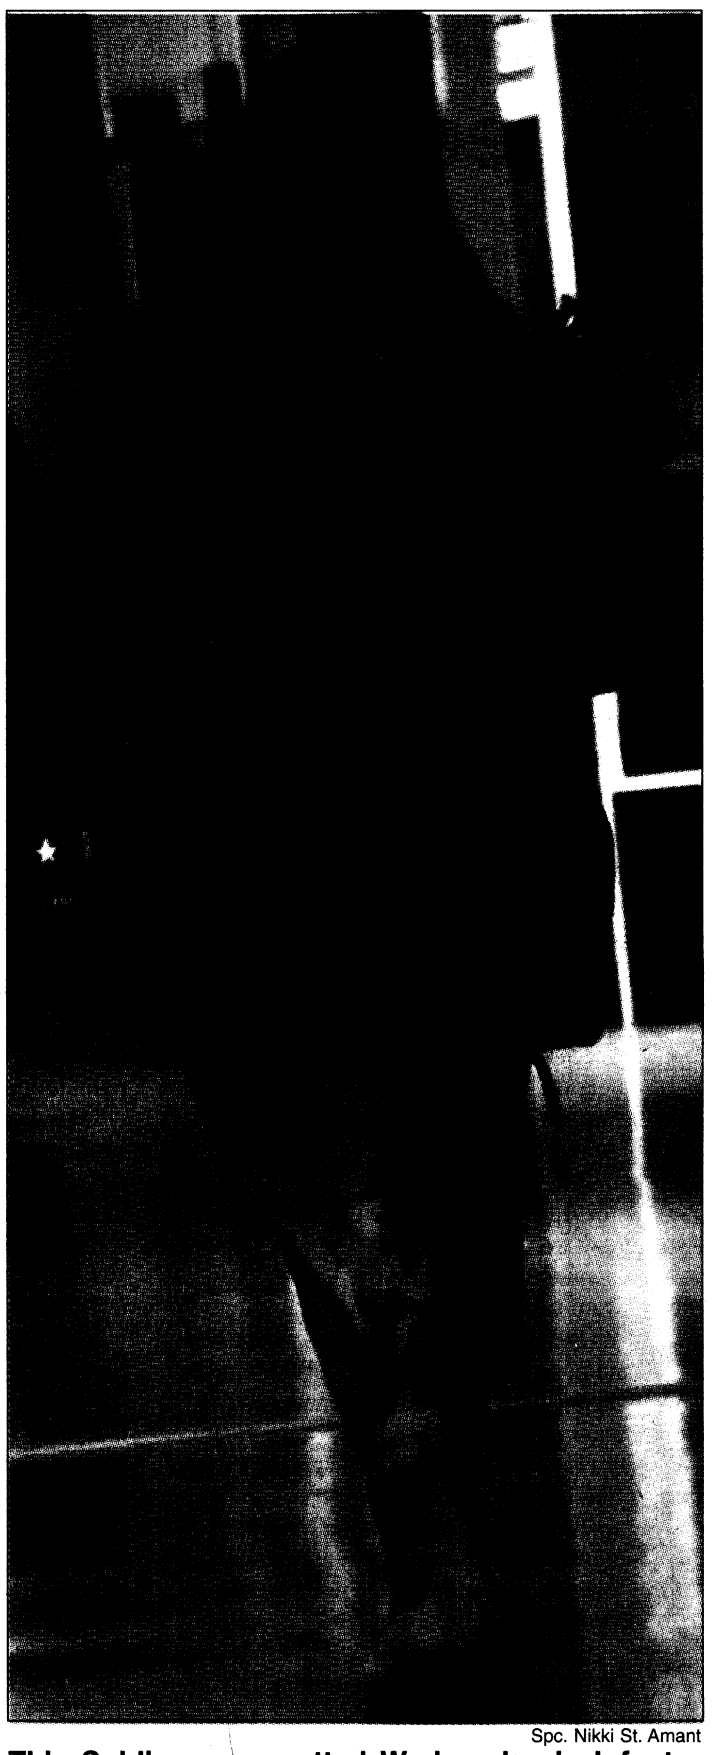
Regulation clear about uniform and appearance

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The Army is a standards-based organization.

When asked about sightings of Soldiers carrying backpacks with orange straps and wearing desert-colored boots with woodland BDUs, the post's top NCO, Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso, shook his head.

"That's not right," he said. "And all leaders — no, all Soldiers should make on-the-spot corrections when obvious departure from the regulation is noticed."



Army 670-1, Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms covers uniform dos and don'ts. Kelso said many posts implement their own uniform policies. Fort Benning's policy is posted on the Web site, www.benning.army.mil, and contains more definitive guidelines.

"Rules about wearing facial camouflage into the PX are covered in the post policy," Kelso said. "And it also covers things like wearing Camelbacks and when and where Soldiers can wear patrol caps."

The commanders and command sergeants major of Fort Benning's major subordinate commands signed the policy, which is faithful to the Army regulation, Kelso said. All Soldiers should receive a copy of it when they sign in.

"These are living documents, and violations may be the result of a lack of Insurance Co. pays back troops

Soldiers face deadline to request refund

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The American Amicable Insurance Company sent letters to more than 900 Soldiers Jan. 14 to inform them they may be eligible for a refund.

American Amicable is refunding $1.3 million to Soldiers who purchased insurance policies while in training at Fort Benning in 2002. The company was placed off-limits after its agents gave sales pitches to Soldiers in the Basic Combat Training Brigade and other training units under the guise of teaching financial planning and sold insurance policies as investment or retirement programs.

The Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission are investigating American Amicable's actions. The Department of Justice has subpoenaed the company's records and is working with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. The SEC may have jurisdiction to prosecute the company for securities violations, because agents represented the products as investments.

At the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board's hearing on American Amicable, the company used Staff Sgt. Daniel Bates as an example of a satisfied customer. When Capt. Julie Heumphreus, SJA, spoke

Iraqi refugees teach Fort Benning Soldiers

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

"I left Iraq because people from Saddam Hussein's regime were always coming to my classes, watching me, insulting me and interrupting when I talked," said Dr. Abbas Al-Kafagy, former professor of Agriculture and Sociology at Basra University.

"They would call my house and try to intimidate me because I talked to my students about problems with the government."

The soft-spoken Al-Kafagy is still talking about the problems he saw in Hussein's regime, but no one interrupted his class Jan. 31, as he taught Soldiers and DEA agents about cultural practices in Southwest Asia.

Al-Kafagy and other Iraqis, many refugees from the Hussein government, are working for contractor JMDS, teaching military personnel about language and culture and participating in training exercises for Soldiers.

Al-Kafagy, who worked on agricultural development projects in

GOOD GRIEF

Who will honor our Hero Mamas?

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I met Karen Spears Zacharias last Friday at Sayers Library, where she was signing copies of her book, Hero Mama. Sorry you missed it.

About 25 people showed up to hear Zacharias speak about growing up in Columbus after her father was killed in Vietnam. The weather was awful, granted, and the book's been out less than a month, so she wasn't expecting a big turn-out.

Me, I was hoping for a full house, because I know her message was so much bigger than the book — which, by the way, is awesome. The book simply gives her a platform, a means of spreading her message, and her message is one of support for the families of fallen Soldiers.

Two years ago, Zacharias traveled to Vietnam, where she erected a crude memorial to her father using rocks and photos and soil from the bloody Ia Drang, where Staff Sgt. David Spears died in 1966.

There she met Peter, the son of a Vietnamese Soldier killed during that war. His death left Peter, his mother and his siblings in poverty.

That's something Zacharias could relate to. After her father was killed, her mother used his meager death benefits to move her family to a trailer park in one of Columbus' seedier neighborhoods.

They struggled for years to make ends meet with no help, no support from any military agency or organization. There was no "survivors support group" or grief counseling, no "once an Army family, always an Army family" mentality.

Though we've come a long way in that department, we've still got quite a way to go. War widows tell Zacharias they feel forgotten.

"There's still a disconnect in this country," she said. "Not only do these (wives) lose their spouses, but they also lose their lifestyle."

In Vietnam, Zacharias learned, war widows are treated as heroes. Yes, they live in poverty, because everybody lives in poverty, but they're never allowed to go hungry. They are revered and cared for by everyone. They're never forgotten. They're Hero Mamas, Peter said.

"That's the kind of (support) I'd like to see in this nation," Zacharias said.

Though the story of Hero Mama took place in another time, another war, the feelings and frustrations you'll read about are surely universal for anyone, anywhere who's ever lost a loved one in combat. It's an amazing story about an amazing struggle.

Here, I'm shamelessly plugging Hero Mama (and the fact that it's $6 cheaper at the Main Mall Post Exchange than out there.) Give it a read and say a prayer for all our Soldiers, their Hero Mamas and Papas, and the kids, like Zacharias, who should never doubt our nation's concern for its military families.

Stop the bad teeth nightmare

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

I have a recurring nightmare, where I wake up in a panic, sweating, wondering if it was real. It starts as a regular dream. Sometimes I'm back in high school, sometimes at work. Then, my teeth start falling out. Every time, I wake up and check to make sure my teeth are still there.

I have good reason for this dream. You see, I have a family history of poor teeth. One grandma had a full set of dentures after she graduated from high school. My other grandma's "pearly whites" are few and far between. I guess I got the soft teeth gene from both sides of my family.

I've always been a good brusher and flosser, but to no avail. Each time I visit the dentist, I expect bad news. I believe I've had half a dozen root canals or so.

(Have I mentioned that I am petrified of dentists? With good reason.) I have so much metal in my mouth, I prefer plasticware to the finest silverware money can buy. I've thought about going a week without brushing my hair, living on a diet of Twinkies, and sending in a video to Extreme Makeover so I can get some of those porcelain veneers.

When I had my daughter, I prayed she would have teeth like her father's. She's only 21 months old, so I'm not sure how her teeth will turn out, but I'm doing my part. Ceilidha loves to brush, which is a huge plus. Watching her mimic me flossing is quite the spectacle.

Children may be predisposed to poor teeth, but there are things parents can do to help them have good oral health.

• Make sure they finish their bottles or sippy cups before bed. Prolonged exposure to sugars in milk or juice can decay teeth.

• Don't let them walk around with a bottle or cup. Falling with something in the mouth can cause permanent damage.

• If you give treats, do it with a regular meal. Saliva produced during meals helps neutralize acid and rinse away sugars.

• Schedule the first dental checkup before the first birthday and visit the dentist regularly.

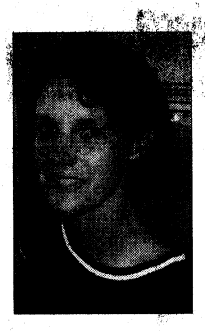
• If you can't brush right after a meal, try some gum with xylitol — Koolerz is a good choice. It can dramatically reduce your chance of getting cavities.

• Drink more water.

Genetics may play a part in oral health, but how well we take care of our teeth — that's all up to us.

You can relay on us, can we rely on you?

Melissa House
Bayonet staff



Did you know one in four people will develop cancer? I didn't either, until last week. The stat surprised me, but it shouldn't have.

I've lost a grandmother to cancer. Two of her children, my aunt and uncle, were cancer survivors before they were 55. My uncle's wife is a survivor.

So when I do the math, that's four of 12 in three generations. The cancer hasn't hit my generation yet, but I'd be extremely naive to think it won't.

And because there's not a single person in The Bayonet office who hasn't been touched by cancer, it shouldn't surprise anyone to hear we're starting our Relay for Life fundraising efforts early this year.

The event is May 13-14 at Shaw High School's Kinnett Stadium.

As "lifers," we're committed to raising at least $100 per person. But we're not content to stop there.

Mark your calendar for April 16. That's the day we'll hold our annual Relay for Life yard sale. Proceeds will be donated to the American Cancer Society in honor of and in memory of those people in our lives who've been touched by cancer.

How about doing some spring cleaning and decluttering around your house? Let us turn your "trash" into cancer's treasure. Check those closets, cabinets, garages and basements for things you don't need, then drop them off with us.

I'm hosting this year's yard sale at my house because I have the most stuff to sell and I don't want to to load it up and tote it somewhere. This way, the stuff can roll right out my doors and onto my lawn.

Swing on by 309 Miller. Leave your stuff on the front porch, the back porch or in front of the garage (which is actually on Eames Street).

If you're not doing anything May 13-14, you know we'd like to have you on our team.

And there are other teams on post participating, too — like Fort Benning schools and Martin Army Community Hospital.

Last year, Team "Friends of the Infantry Training Brigade" was brand-new, but that didn't keep them from winning three awards including best campsite and most money raised online. They're all great teams.

So look for the signs in the yards, and we'll see you out there.

I just saved a whole bunch of money!

(you can too)

I just saved a bunch of money by using the Auto Craft Shop — a whole bunch of money!

My 2004 Chevy Silverado 2500 HD, which doesn't have the Allison transmission, needed its 15,000 mile checkup. Because I just love the truck, I'm following the recommended scheduled maintenance program.

I called a local dealership to make an appointment for the maintenance and just happened to ask what it would cost. $430!

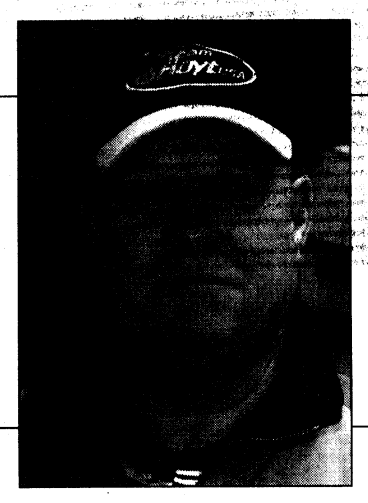
I don't happen to have $430 sitting around gathering interest. If anything, I would be paying interest on $430.

A co–worker suggested I call the Auto Craft Shop and ask what it would cost to have the work done there.

I called and spoke with Allen Singleton, who patiently explained what a 15,000 mile maintenance would include: change the oil, rotate the tires, check filters and fluids, etc., and told me the cost would be considerably less than $430. Probably not more than $150, which meant I would still be able to buy gas for the truck.

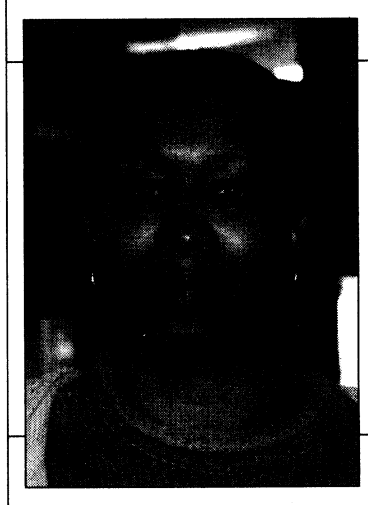
Almost before I got to work Tuesday morning (just a slight exaggeration) I got a call from the Auto Craft Shop. My truck was done and ready to be picked up. And what did I owe? $43.75! $43.75!!

I did the happy dance in the office and another co–worker said if I didn't do the dance again, she'd give me a ride to pick up my truck. Woo hoo! $43.75!

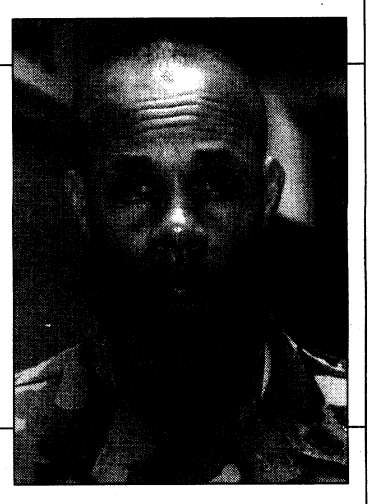


I saved $386.25 by calling the Auto Craft Shop. I am one happy camper and you could be too if you call 545-2337 or 545-4870 the next time you need work done on your car.

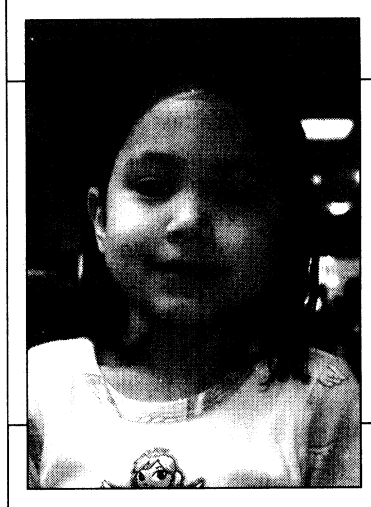
VARIOUS VOICES



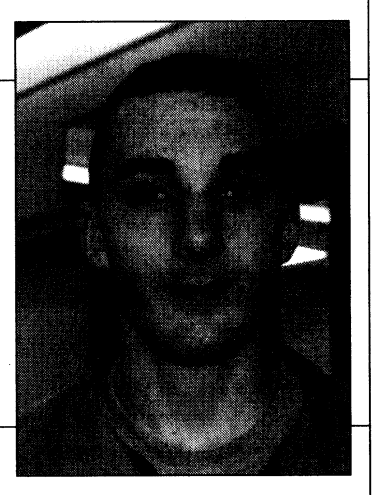
What is the best way to support military families?



Eva Campbell, family member — "I am the chairperson of my church's military family support group. We have birthday parties for the kids of deployed Soldiers, babysit for stressed parents and send cards and gift boxes. It's about caring for families."



Retired Master Sgt. Richard Townsend, Columbus — "We can spend time with them. Take (deployed Soldiers') kids to a baseball game, and just make them feel special. If you support military families, you're supporting Soldiers, too."



Wendy Groce, family member — "Have a support group. Being there for one another is important, and we can all support each other. If someone is struggling, help them with child care, food, whatever a family needs."

Spc. Wayne Bowden, 45th Maintenance Company, 3rd Brigade Combat Team — "We need to make the public more aware of how much stress military families are under. Deployments can be really depressing, and young families don't have a lot of money. Help them out."

Destany Westlake, family member — "You can draw a picture for a family if they're sad, or play with the little kids. My mom says people helping out with the yard work is good, too."

Pvt. Vinney Egitto, Infantry Training Brigade — "Even if it's inconvenient, be there for families who need help. Write letters to Soldiers and help out families who have someone deployed."

"Ma" Rainey's house still stands at 805 Fifth Ave. in downtown Columbus. She sang in the church choir of Friendship Baptist Church and at Springer Opera House during her time in Columbus.

Legend was Columbus native

Black History Month is a time to focus on the achievements and experiences of black people. This month The Bayonet will feature local people, places and events that are significant to black history. One local woman enjoyed national fame and her Southern style helped shape a truly American art form, the blues.

The legendary singer Ma Rainey was born Gertrude Pridgett on April 26, 1886. She spent her Sundays as a young girl singing in the choir at Friendship Baptist Church on Sixth Avenue.

She met comedian Will "Pa" Rainey in 1902 and began touring the Southern Vaudeville circuit. They were married in 1904. Ma Rainey made her first appearance at Springer Opera House in 1912, according to the Columbus Visitors Bureau. She gained prominence when she started recording with Paramount in 1923 and record 94 songs, at least 47 of which she had written.

Rainey was famous for her glittering, sequined dresses, ornate headdresses and powerful voice. Her striking style led to her being dubbed "the Mother of Blues." She was inducted into the Georgia Music Hall of Fame and was recognized with the 1993 Woman of Achievement Award.

She worked with greats like Bessie Smith, Louis Armstrong, Lovie Austen, Buster Bailey, and Tommy Dorsey.

She returned to Columbus in 1935 after retiring from her music career, and moved in with her brother, Thomas Pridgett, a deacon at Friendship Baptist Church.

Ma Rainey lived in the big, white, rambling house at 805 Fifth Ave. until her death from a heart attack in 1939. She was buried in Porterdale Cemetery on Victory Drive.

The house made the National Registry of Historic Places in 1992.

'Sixstar' keeps it light

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

During the first week of Infantry basic training, Spc. Michael Freedman picked up the nickname Sixstar, "for his delusions of grandeur."

As the story goes, during a detail, Freedman took control of the situation by telling everybody what to do while he sat reading a Soldier's Manual, said Spc. Michael Anderson, A Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment.

"He's good at delegating and then sitting down to supervise," Anderson said. "But he's good for morale. He kept us from taking everything too seriously."

Freedman graduated Infantry training with A Company Jan. 21 and is waiting for orders to Fort Riley, Kan.

The 23-year-old Texas native graduated with a bachelor of arts from Tulane University in New Orleans. During his senior year in college, he decided to join the Army, but because of inprocessing problems, he delayed the Army for a year. He went to China instead, where he used his degree to teach English.

His experience in a country not run by a democracy re-affirmed his belief in fighting for democracy.

"Knowing the Iraqi people just had their first election in decades really emphasized the importance of our mission," Freedman said. "I could care less about not finding weapons of mass destruction. Democracy is definitely worth fighting for. I wasn't going to sit idly. We're all part of history."

When Freedman signed up for the Army, he knew he wanted to experience the enlisted Army before considering applying for the Officer Candidate School.

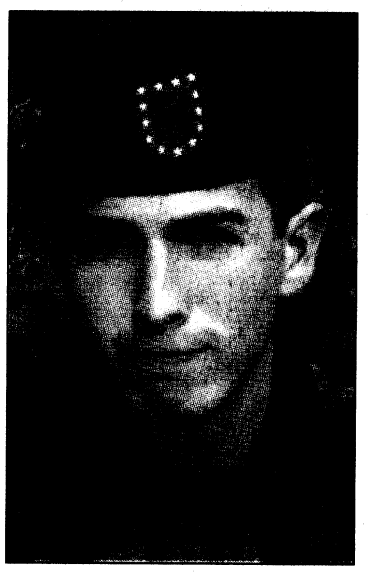
"I knew that if I was going to do it, I was going to be on the ground experiencing the same things as the other enlisted Soldiers," Freedman said. "Having a college degree didn't make a difference."

Freedman knows he will probably deploy soon, but he is confident of the training he has received at Fort Benning.

He said the best part of the training was the instructors.

"Listening to the stories from a Soldier who has been deployed was a mentoring experience," he said.

Aside from enjoying the stories from his drill sergeants' combat experience, Freedman also enjoyed the urban assault training, since he knows he'll probably need it soon.



Pvt. Jordan Hanford gave Freedman his nickname and will also go to Fort Riley. Hanford said he is glad Freedman enjoyed (urban assault training) because he will look to him for help when they train at Riley.

"He always keeps the atmosphere light," Hanford said. "But he can be serious when he needs to be."

One of the things Anderson and Hanford said was a good trait in Freedman is his ability to look at things from different angles.

"When something's going on, he tries to look at it from every perspective, and it helps us grasp the situation better," Anderson said. He said Freedman understands and accepts the reality of deployment better than most Soldiers.

"Every time you need him, Sixstar always pulls through," he said.

"Knowing the Iraqi people just had their first election in decades really emphasized the importance of our mission. I could care less about not finding weapons of mass destruction. Democracy is definitely worth fighting for. I wasn't going to sit idly. We're all part of history."

Black History event focuses on history

African dance, food, music and a speech will be featured at the Black History Month Celebration from 11 a.m. to noon Feb. 22 in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

The event will feature an African dance presentation by the Ophelia DeVore Performing Company and a musical medley by the Wilson Elementary School choir, and a food tasting of traditional black cuisine. The guest speaker will be Brig. Gen. Abraham J. Turner, former commander of Infantry Training Brigade and current commanding general of Fort Jackson, S.C.

Turner will focus on this year's theme, the 1905 Niagara Movement. The movement was a group of black men who banded together to find solutions to social and economic problems in the black community.

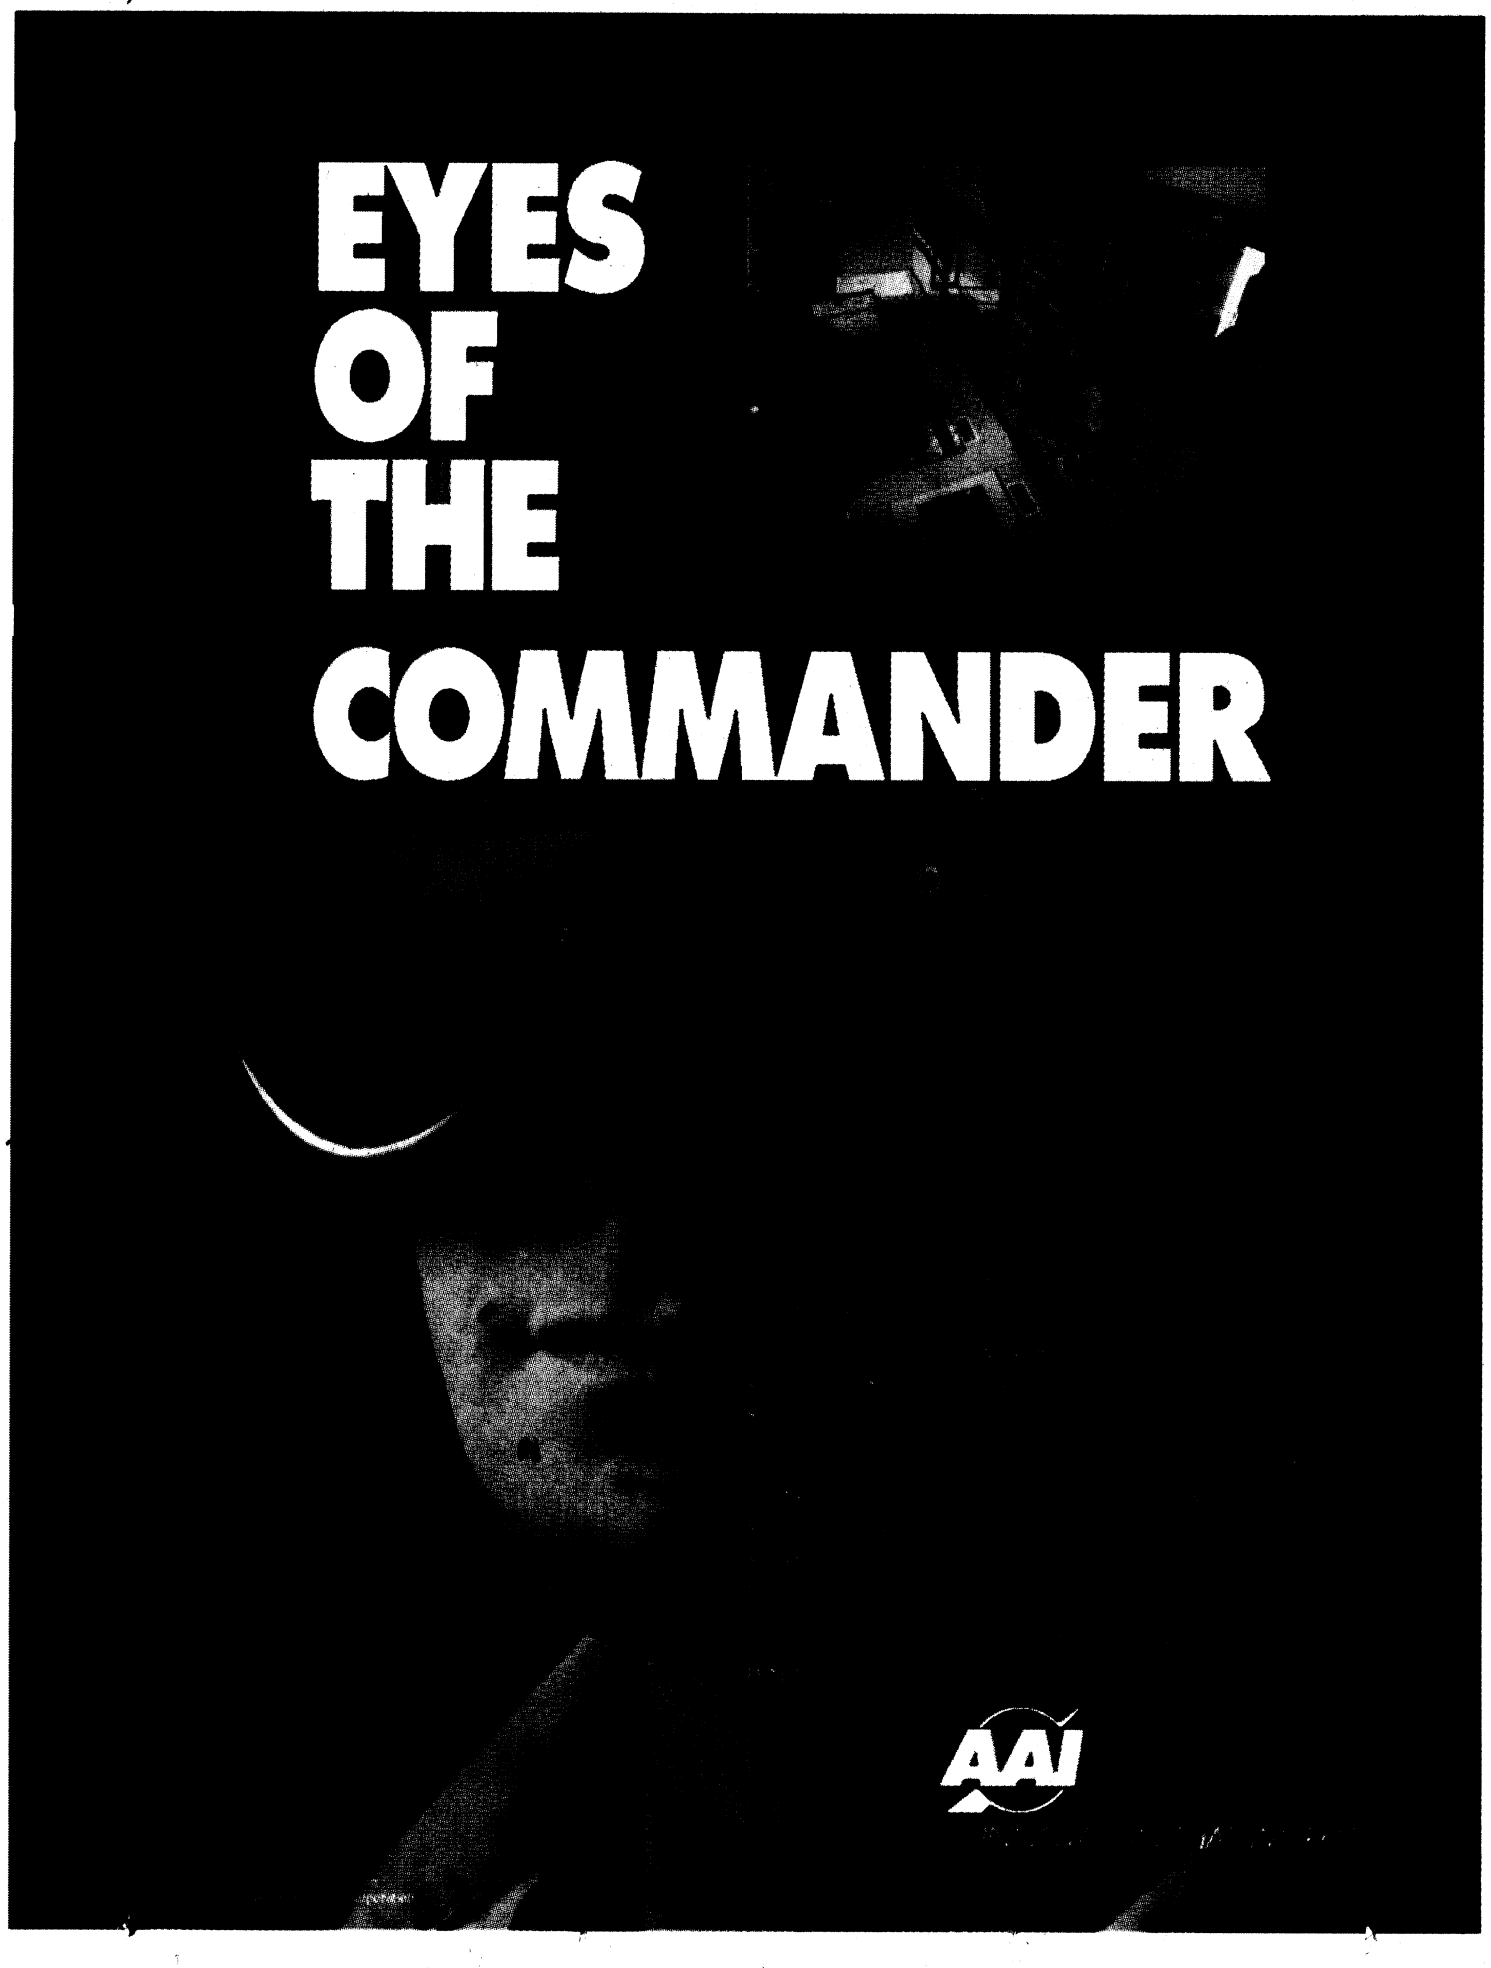
Led by academic and author, W.E.B. DuBois, they focused on issues of freedom, suffrage, and respect and honor for manhood.

The Niagara Movement initially met secretly, renouncing the accommodationist policies of Booker T. Washington.

Washington supported racial segregation and thought black people should build an economic base by learning a skilled trade and not through a college education. Washington espoused these ideals in his famous 1895 address, the Atlanta Compromise.

In the speech, before a mainly white audience, he held up his hand with fingers splayed then clenched it into a fist, saying whites and blacks could be as separate as the fingers on a hand, but strong like a fist when brought together, but only when necessary.

DuBois disagreed with the separatist philosophies, and is known for supporting academic education as a method for change. The popularity that Washington's ideas were receiving prompted DuBois and others to organize the Niagara Movement.



The movement would eventually be the foundation for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"This is a great opportunity for people to understand and experience African-American culture," said Sgt. 1st Class Courtney Gray with Equal Opportunity. "It will be an interesting experience, and I encourage people to come out and support the program."

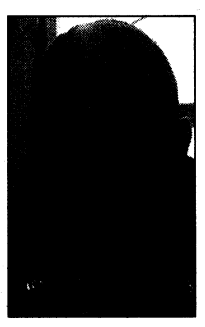
CSM says good-bye after 30 years

O'Neil will miss camaraderie, not rucksacks

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Command Sgt. Maj. Michael O'Neil developed a bit of a back problem about six months ago. He blames it on years and years of road marches with an 80-pound rucksack.



Medicine and therapy keep the pain at bay, and were it not for the Army's 30-year retirement policy, he figures he'd be good to go for another 10 or 12 years.

Retiring is "hard, very, very hard," he said.

"If they'd let me, I'd stay in till I couldn't walk anymore," said O'Neil, whose retirement ceremony today at Infantry Hall marks the end of a journey that began two weeks after high school graduation when he was simply "looking for something to do." He found it in the Infantry.

"I fell in love with the Army," O'Neil said Tuesday, as he sipped coffee in the Infantry Hall cafeteria, reflecting on a career that took him out of West Virginia and across the continent, zig-zagging from North Carolina to California and back, to Hawaii to Alaska and back once again, this time to Columbus, where he and his wife will settle for good.

Somewhere in there, he spent a few years as a mountaineering instructor at Cheju-Do, Korea, where he met and married Agatha. The couple has three daughters.

O' Neil

O'Neil's favorite assignment was the time he spent with the 82nd Airborne Division as a first sergeant.

"It was hard work, but very rewarding," he said. "Everybody loves being a first sergeant."

Apparently, everybody loved this first sergeant. O'Neil's recollections were interrupted by another Soldier, 1st Sgt. Bruce Meyers, who was a scout team leader when O'Neil was with the 82nd. The two hadn't seen each other since 1994.

O'Neil's career review took a back seat to his reunion with Meyers.

"This guy is the greatest," said Meyers, after playing catch-up with his old first sergeant. "He's the epitome of what an Infantry first sergeant should be."

Why is that?

"It's simple. When it came down to it, no one ever doubted he cared for his Soldiers," said Meyers, now Fort Benning's ANCOC branch chief. "First sergeants are known for being hardasses, but your Soldiers know if you're really taking care of them.

"First Sergeant O'Neil really cared."

O'Neil dismissed Meyer's praise with a shake of his head.

"If you make one comment about me, let it be this," he said. "I'm not going to miss the cold and the rain and the rucksack. This is what I'm going to miss — the camaraderie, the people.

"I've worked with thousands of people, but the Army's small enough that you're going to eventually catch up with your friends again."

Smoke billows in controlled burning areas near Lawson Army Airfield. The burns sometimes smolder for days as dead leaves, trees and foliage are eliminated to reduce the possibility of a major forest fire.

Benning burns by design

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Portions of Fort Benning are going up in flames, but it's by design. The smoke hovering in the past few weeks is the result of scheduled understory burning that will end Aug 31.

The burning occurring now is mainly understory burning and site preparation, said Jack Greenlee, Fort Benning's graduate forester. The prep work clears the way for the hand planting of longleaf pine seedlings in the spring.

Greenlee said the controlled burning schedule ensures the post is complying with a biological opinion written for managing the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker population. The paper recommended one-third of the 90,000 manageable training area acreage be burned each year.

The goal this year, he said, is to burn 32,000 acres and as of last week, 8,273 acres had been burned.

"We burned two areas last Thursday — one off of Highway 27," Greenlee said. Since the fire was burning with an east wind, he said many residents saw the smoke in the Main Post area.

No areas were burned this week because of the rain.

Greenlee said half of the acreage is burned in the March and April time frame, when low humidity and southwesterly winds provide "ideal burning conditions."

"We have two different objectives," he said. "Burning during the December to March dormant season, is important for reducing the fine fuels provided by pine straw and grasses on the forest floor."

Burning in the April to August growing season maintains the habitat.

Controlled burning has also taken place on the Alabama side, west of the air field, Greenlee said, and he plans to get a jump on the Kelley Hill training areas.

"I'd like to get them burned while 3rd Brigade is gone," he said.

Greenlee, who has been the post forester since 1980, said the forestry branch prepares detailed burn plans for each training area.

The plans have weather data the team uses to try to lessen the impact of the smoke from the fires.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT

'Can Do' ready to move north

Command Sgt. Maj. Don Becker
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

Spc. James Howard

Soldiers with B Company, 1st Battalion 15th Infantry Regiment, conduct MOUT training at Camp Buehring, Kuwait, prior to leaving for Iraq.

The Soldiers and leaders of the Can Do battalion received equipment from the port and we're now ready to assume our mission in Iraq. We train every day and are rehearsing the approach march that will get us from Kuwait to our area of operations north of Baghdad.

The weather attempted to hinder our training late last week by giving us a daylong downpour that created mud puddles with the consistency of molasses, but we're ready to move into the forward operating base that we'll call home for at least the next year.

The lines at the dining facility continue to move along rapidly despite the large number of Soldiers sharing the camp with us. The people at the shoppette over here could learn a thing or two about customer throughput from them. Burger King just isn't the same as back in the States, but the coffee shop serves-up a mean "cappuccino chia latte" and judging from the line at the Pizza Inn, I'm guessing that the food's pretty good there too.

How's the food at the dining facility? Well, let's just say that I'm glad there's a gym here, otherwise some of us would be placed on the Army's overweight program.

For breakfast you can get meat and scrambled eggs or an omelet, freedom (formally French) toast, pancakes or waffles, biscuits, gravy, hash brown potatoes and grits.

But that's just on the main line. In the dining areas they have cold cereal, oatmeal, fresh fruit, yogurt, coffee, milk, fruit drinks, Gatorade and more.

Lunch and dinner feature both a short order and a main line. Short order normally serves hamburgers, hotdogs, freedom fries, corn dogs, pizza and hotwings (but the guys serving them don't look like the Hooters' girls!).

Some of the main line entrees include spaghetti, steak, chicken, fish, pork, turkey, ribs and lasagna and they all come with some sort of a starch (rice, noodles, and potatoes) and a vegetable. In the dining areas they have salad, potato chips, soda, fruit and desserts (cake, pie, ice cream).

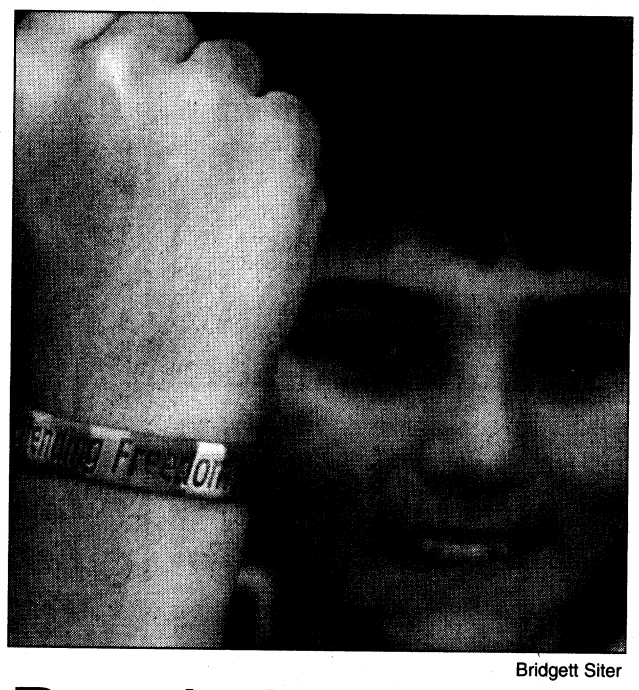
Everyone on the ground has had ample time to call home, so if you're a Can Do spouse and haven't heard from your loved one yet, be sure to counsel them when they finally do call.

Lt. Col. Gary Brito updates the FRG newsletter weekly (located on www.frgnews.com, 3rd Brigade Combat Team Web site, then to the 1-15 link), so be sure to check it regularly to see what the battalion is doing.

F and Headquarters and Headquarters companies recently conducted a successful convoy live fire exercise.

The scenario had targets along a road that traveled through both desert and urban settings. The Soldiers engaged the targets from the seats of their humvees and trucks while moving in a multivehicle convoy formation. The Soldiers had only seconds to identify targets and decide whether they were anti-Iraqi forces, or civilians going about their daily life.

Spc. Matthew Kotin, 22, from Fayetteville, N.C., said the training was great.



"I liked going through different situations like driving under the overpass," he said. "I like how they set up the scenarios."

Spc Anthony Welsh, 23, from Kansas City, Mo., and an OIF I veteran said the close-quarters marksmanship taught a lot and the training better prepares the unit for moving north.

In military operations in urban terrain and shoothouse site training, the Soldiers used special subcaliber ammunition in order to add realism to the training and practiced movement in and around buildings.

We're all studying for the rules of engagement, Iraqi language and culture test that the brigade has instituted to ensure we understand the rules of engagement and have a working knowledge of the Iraqi people and how they live.

The next report will be from Iraq, where we'll start the relief in place and transfer of authority with our predecessors who have already been there for more than a year. Meanwhile, check out the battalion Web site to see some of our Soldiers in action and four of our outstanding NCOs re-enlisting (yes, the bonus is tax free.) Can Do!

Bands benefit troops

Phil Randazzo is a Las Vegas insurance broker who took a gamble on America's devotion to its troops.

Two years ago, a week after the war started, Randazzo was angered by the headlines. Anti-war rhetoric and protests made the news daily.

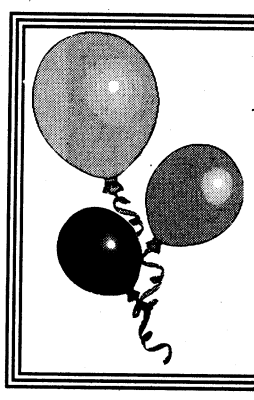
"I got fed up with it real fast," he said. "I told my wife, 'I'm going to have a pro-troops rally.' She thought I was crazy. I can't even organize my dry cleaning."

Crazy, maybe, but it worked. Las Vegas loves a party. Nearly 6,000 people poured into Randazzo's parking lot four days later, and nearly $27,000 was donated to send calling cards overseas.

The LA Times ran an article about the event, calling it the largest pro-troops rally in the country. The article spawned a greater response, so Randazzo continued his efforts, organizing events and Web sites to rally support for the troops.

To date, he's raised more than $163,000, but he's set his sights much higher — $1 million. The money will go to the Armed Forces Relief Trust, which disburses funds to troops and their families in need.

In December, Randazzo launched his latest campaign — wristbands — an idea he said he stole from Lance Armstrong. The wristbands are selling for $3, $1.59 of which goes to the AFRT. The rest pays for production and distribution.



"I'm not making any money off of these, not a cent," Randazzo said. "I've never even been in the military. But you just have to turn on the History Channel and see what these guys have gone through for (us) and you can't help but want to do something."

Fort Benning residents can order the bracelets online at www.defendingfreedom.net. Or they can order them through the Stowers Elementary School PTO and save shipping and handling costs.

The Stowers PTO will sell the camouflage bands, which read, "Defending Freedom" and "Pray for our Troops," until Feb 11.

Randazzo is also distributing the bands free to deployed troops. Last week, he delivered 10,000 to Camp Pendelton for deploying Marines.

To order wristbands from Stowers' PTO, call Deborah Wadsworth at 685-9822 or Krisy Suarez at 689-9898.

Truckers: Deploy to OIF

This was the second deployment for the Desert Storm veteran and mother of four.

Spc. James Watkins said the families of the deployed Soldiers will be well taken care of. The unit has a well-established family readiness group and access to the Yellow Ribbon Room, which is furnished with computers and phones so families can e-mail or call their loved ones.

The unit will spend about three weeks in Kuwait before moving north to Iraq. During the next year or more, the unit will conduct missions in support of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team.

Staff Sgt. Melvin McCollum said the unit has trained for the deployment for eight months.

Convoy live fires, weapons qualifications and theater-specific training prepared the truckers for the dangers they will face this tour. Watkins said the unit is as ready as it can be and morale is high.

While some Soldiers were quiet as they boarded the plane, some joked and laughed in the pre-dawn darkness as they waited their turn to take a seat. Bringing up the rear, single Soldier 2nd Lt. Chris McKindra smiled as he chatted with a friend who stayed behind with the rear detachment.

"No wife, no kids, no parents here to see me off," he said. "I guess you can't miss what you don't have. I'll miss the United States, but I don't have any fears. No fears at all."

SJA: Continues investigation into off-limits insurance co.

with the 3rd Brigade Soldier, he had a different story.

Bates bought the policy in 1996. He paid $60 a month and tried to cancel the policy several times without a response from the company. He tried again after American Amicable was placed off-limits, but a company representative tried to convince him to keep it.

"He tried several times to cancel, but they kept giving us the runaround," said Pamela Bates, his wife. "Through all of this, we've learned a lesson. We need to make sure the company is reputable and what we're buying is what we want."

The company eventually refunded Bates $240 instead of the $4,000 he paid into the policy. Bates accepted the refund and gave up on getting back the rest of the money.

"Captain Heumphreus was an absolute godsend," Pamela said. "She helped us so much, and we're just glad it's over."

Spc. Michael Joswiak purchased a policy in 2002 while at BCTB before going to his unit, 3rd Battalion, 21st Infantry Regiment, 25th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash. He is currently in Iraq, so his mother, Kathy Joswiak, is handling the refund paperwork.

"He thought he was investing in a retirement policy," she said. "The policy was useless once he turned 35, and they were charging him one hundred dollars per paycheck. We're just hoping he'll get the money back without any difficulties."

The SJA and the Georgia Insurance Commission are trying to ensure Soldiers don't have trouble getting the refunds.

"We're proud the installation is aggressively trying to protect Soldiers," said Col. Lyle Cayce, SJA. "We will enforce rules and ensure that companies are respecting Soldiers and not taking advantage of them."

To get the refund, Soldiers must submit the affidavit from American Amicable within 180 days of being notified. Deployed Soldiers have 180 after processing through CONUS.

Iraqis: Hope for freedoms

"I'm really glad to teach American Soldiers, because America liberated my country, and sacrificed its young Soldiers for the good of my people," Al-Kafagy said.

The 58 year old just voted in his first election and showed off his finger, stained with ink from the voting process.

"I cried when I voted, because this is the first time I was able to say what I want for my country," Al-Kafagy said.

"This election is the answer for my society."

He was pleased with the turnout for the election and is anxious to see the progress it will facilitate.

"I want to see Iraq with an open, free society where new ideas and technology will be welcomed. What we need now is not discrimination or separation between the Kurds, the Shiites and the Sunnis. We need to have one Iraq and work together to rebuild."

"I hope in a democratic Iraq there will be more freedom," Al-Kafagy said. "If you want to pray, go to pray, and if you don't, no one should bother you."

Another JMD teacher shares Al-Kafagy's dream.

Mohamed Shwani is a Kurd from Northern Iraq who left the country in 1996 with his family. His brother, a United Nations employee, was given an ultimatum — leave or your family will be killed.

"I was only nine or ten then, and I didn't really know what was going to happen," Shwani said. "Some people told us we should go to Iran, but we chose to go with the Americans. People said, 'If you go with them they'll kill you.' But the Soldiers took good care of us."

The family went to Guam for three months to learn English and secure asylum in the United States. Shwani is thankful for the help the United States provided him and his family, most of whom now reside in Atlanta.

He hopes to to stay in the United States, and has even considered joining the military to work as a translator. Shwani would be an able translator. He speaks Kurdish, Arabic, Spanish, Bosnian, and a bit of Farsi. For now, he is content working with JMDS.

"I'm proud of the job I'm doing, and I'm making friends and improving my English," he said. "I'm glad to be doing this job because America helped us get out of Iraq. My family was in danger there, and now I can return the help by training Soldiers. They will make Iraq safe."

knowledge rather than intentional," he said.

Mixing the BDU with the desert boots isn't technically against the regulation.

"It's not right, but it's not specifically covered in the regulation (or) the post policy," Kelso said. "It didn't occur to us that someone would mix the two."

Command Sgt. Maj. Lonny Wright of the U.S. Army Infantry School said many Soldiers in the mismatched uniforms are preparing to deploy. They may not have all the correct uniform parts, he said, and shouldn't be considered in violation of the regulation.

Kelso highlighted one policy he said, is "violated almost constantly."

"Soldiers are not authorized to wear BDUs into establishments that primarily serve alcoholic beverages, he said. "Sports bars are a good example. They have 'bar' in their name. But Hooters is a place that's not exactly a family dining atmosphere. It's more of a beer and wings place, and Soldiers can't go there in BDUs.

"We're not so simplistic that we don't expect violations to occur, but it's a leadership responsibility to make corrections," he said.

Pentagon, senate seek to increase survivor benefits

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Pentagon leaders and Capitol Hill legislators want to increase the available combined government death benefit for families of fallen service members by about $250,000.

If enacted, the change would double the $262,000 now available to families of service members killed in wartime operations, said David S.C. Chu, undersecretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness, Tuesday during testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee. The issue has been studied for two years.

Defense leaders believe that sum ought to be nearer to $500,000, Chu told the panel, by increasing the maximum coverage offered by the Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance program and raising the death gratuity payment.

The current survivor's death gratuity payment, which is tax-free, is about $12,420. Survivors of service members killed in war operations can also receive $250,000 in maximum SGLI coverage.

DoD and Senate proposals would increase the death gratuity payment to $100,000, and boost maximum SGLI coverage to $400,000. The Pentagon would pay the premiums for the extra $150,000 in SGLI coverage when participating service members are in a combat zone.

> "There is nothing in the financial sense that we can do to replace a lost service member."
> David S.C. Chu
> Undersecretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness

If approved, the change would be retroactive to Oct. 7, 2001, the day Operation Enduring Freedom began.

The U.S. government "already provides a significant set of programs to help the families of those who give their lives in service to the country," Chu said.

Current programs available to surviving spouses with children, he said, approximately provide "dollar-for-dollar, what the military member was earning on active service."

DoD also provides transitional housing assistance for surviving spouses and children, Chu said, as well as access to the Tricare health system and commissary and exchange systems, and education benefits.

The proposed increase in survivor's monetary benefits would also provide "greater recognition" of the sacrifices America's service members have made during the Global War on Terrorism, said Sen. John Warner, chairman of the SASC. DoD officials reported Tuesday that 1,415 Americans have died in Iraq and 156 others died in Afghanistan and other wartime theaters during the Global War on Terrorism.

Some Senate members noted that survivors of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks were paid an average of $2 million per family.

The proposed changes to G.I. death benefits for survivors wouldn't apply to families of service members killed during those terrorist attacks.

"There is nothing in the financial sense," Chu said, "that we can do to replace a lost service member." Yet, the government can provide "the appropriate financial tools," to comfort surviving spouses and families so they can go forward.

Post plays experimenting role for future

Future combat system testing major task

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning agencies began experimenting with new Army force structures Monday as part of the transition to the future combat system.

Fort Benning's role in the experiment is to ensure the Army's focus on the Soldier as the centerpiece is maintained as structure and missions change, said Lt. Col. Everett Johnson, Analysis Division chief with the Soldier Battle Lab.

The new units of action and employment will incorporate new technologies, communications needs and capabilities and battle staff requirements, but the effectiveness and impact of higher-level changes have to be analyzed all the way down to the individual Soldier, he said.

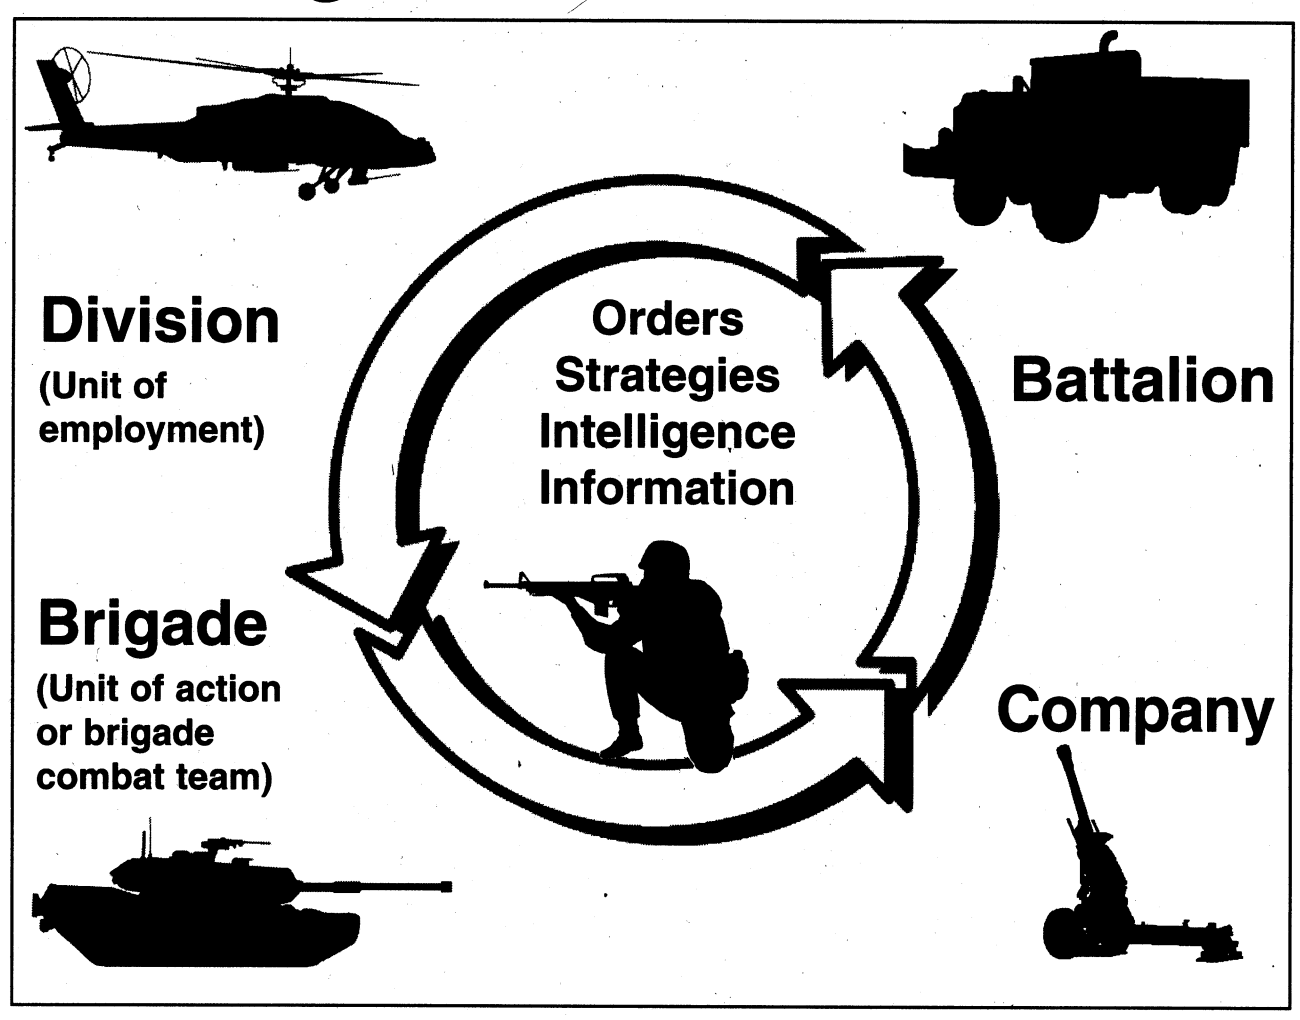
The Army's new way of doing business will let information flow laterally, in real time, through all echelons instead of up and down the chain of command.

By using cutting-edge technologies, the new force structure will rapidly communicate, and plan and execute missions with the most accurate information at their fingertips.

That information will come from UAVs, satellites, and instantaneous intelligence and situational reports from squad and company elements on the ground.

The first phase of this year's experiment is focusing on virtual scenarios.

Picture it as an online game where all users are looking at a map and watching elements move and react to different scenarios. Company commanders are looking at the same screen as division-level commanders and can discuss tactics and receive guidance as quickly as they can type or speak over a secure connection. Platoon leaders, squad leaders and support elements are included in the information network and can adjust fire accordingly.



The next phase will incorporate more involved testing with actual Soldiers with weapons in hand moving through a virtual environment on virtual missions.

"All of this stuff we are doing is going to be documented in future combat system tasks, which future units will have to perform," said Tollie Strode, a future combat system doctrine analyst with the Directorate of Combat Developments. "The Infantry Center and school will incorporate those tasks into the future combat system manuals, which are equivalent to our current field manuals."

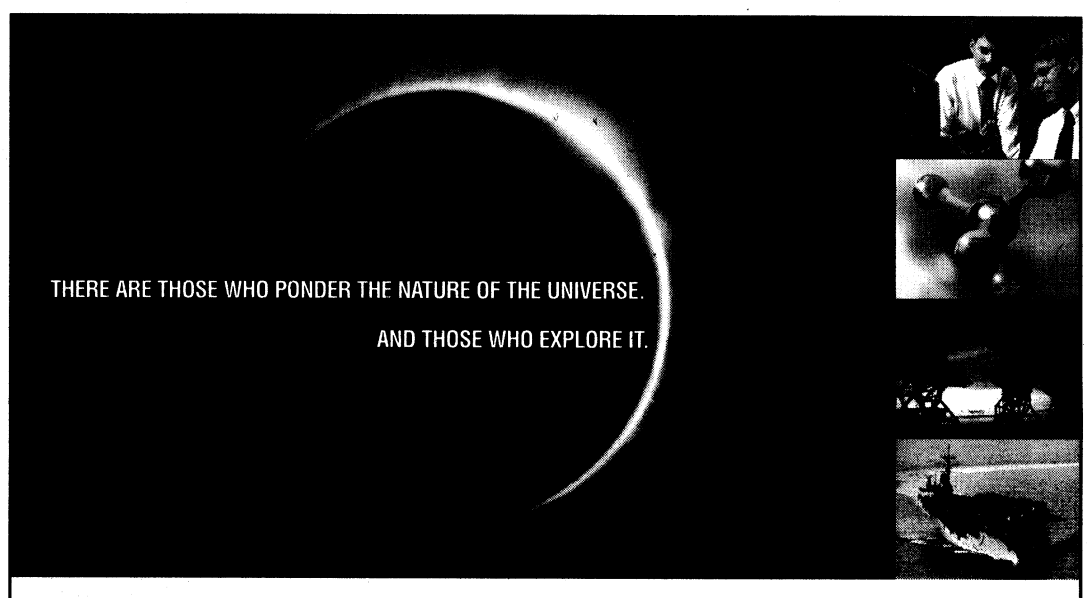
The yearlong experiment, dubbed Omnifusion, is one phase of testing designed to help establish a fully operational future combat system unit by 2014.

Testing last year focused on the brigade-size unit of action and this year's focus is the division-level unit of employment.

Fort Benning is one element of the total experimental force, which encompasses almost every major Army command. Fort Knox, Ky., is taking the lead, Johnson said.

At Fort Benning, SBL works hand in hand with the directorates of Combat Development and Combined Arms and Tactics. The 29th Infantry Regiment's Experimental Force Company is providing Soldiers as test subjects and subject matter experts from Fort Knox, and Fort Sill, Okla., are participating as well.

The depth of this phase of experimentation will progress until it culminates in the fall.



Experiment staff will collect data on mission effectiveness and lethality and get feedback from the test subjects. DCD then will analyze that information and incorporate its findings into new requirements documents.

Every year, the system will be refined, fine-tuned and tested in a constant drive toward the 2014 goal, Johnson said.

"This is a huge undertaking," said Capt. Clint Cox, one of the Soldiers participating in the testing. "I wouldn't want to be anywhere else. These Soldiers have a lot to give with their combat experience. They are helping to shape the FCS Soldier."

After loading a patient onto an air ambulance, medics from the 14th Combat Support Hospital run back to a safe distance while the casualty is evacuated.

Medics train for life, death

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

As the Huey slowly circled above the clearing, a red cross became visible atop a large green canvas tent.

Dozens of Soldiers waited outside, while others inside were preparing for casualties.

The chopper touched down and the Soldiers sprang into action.

A group of medics rushed to unload a life-size training dummy nicknamed "Shem."

The command at the 14th Combat Support Hospital did all they could to make the field training exercise as realistic as possible — chopper and all.

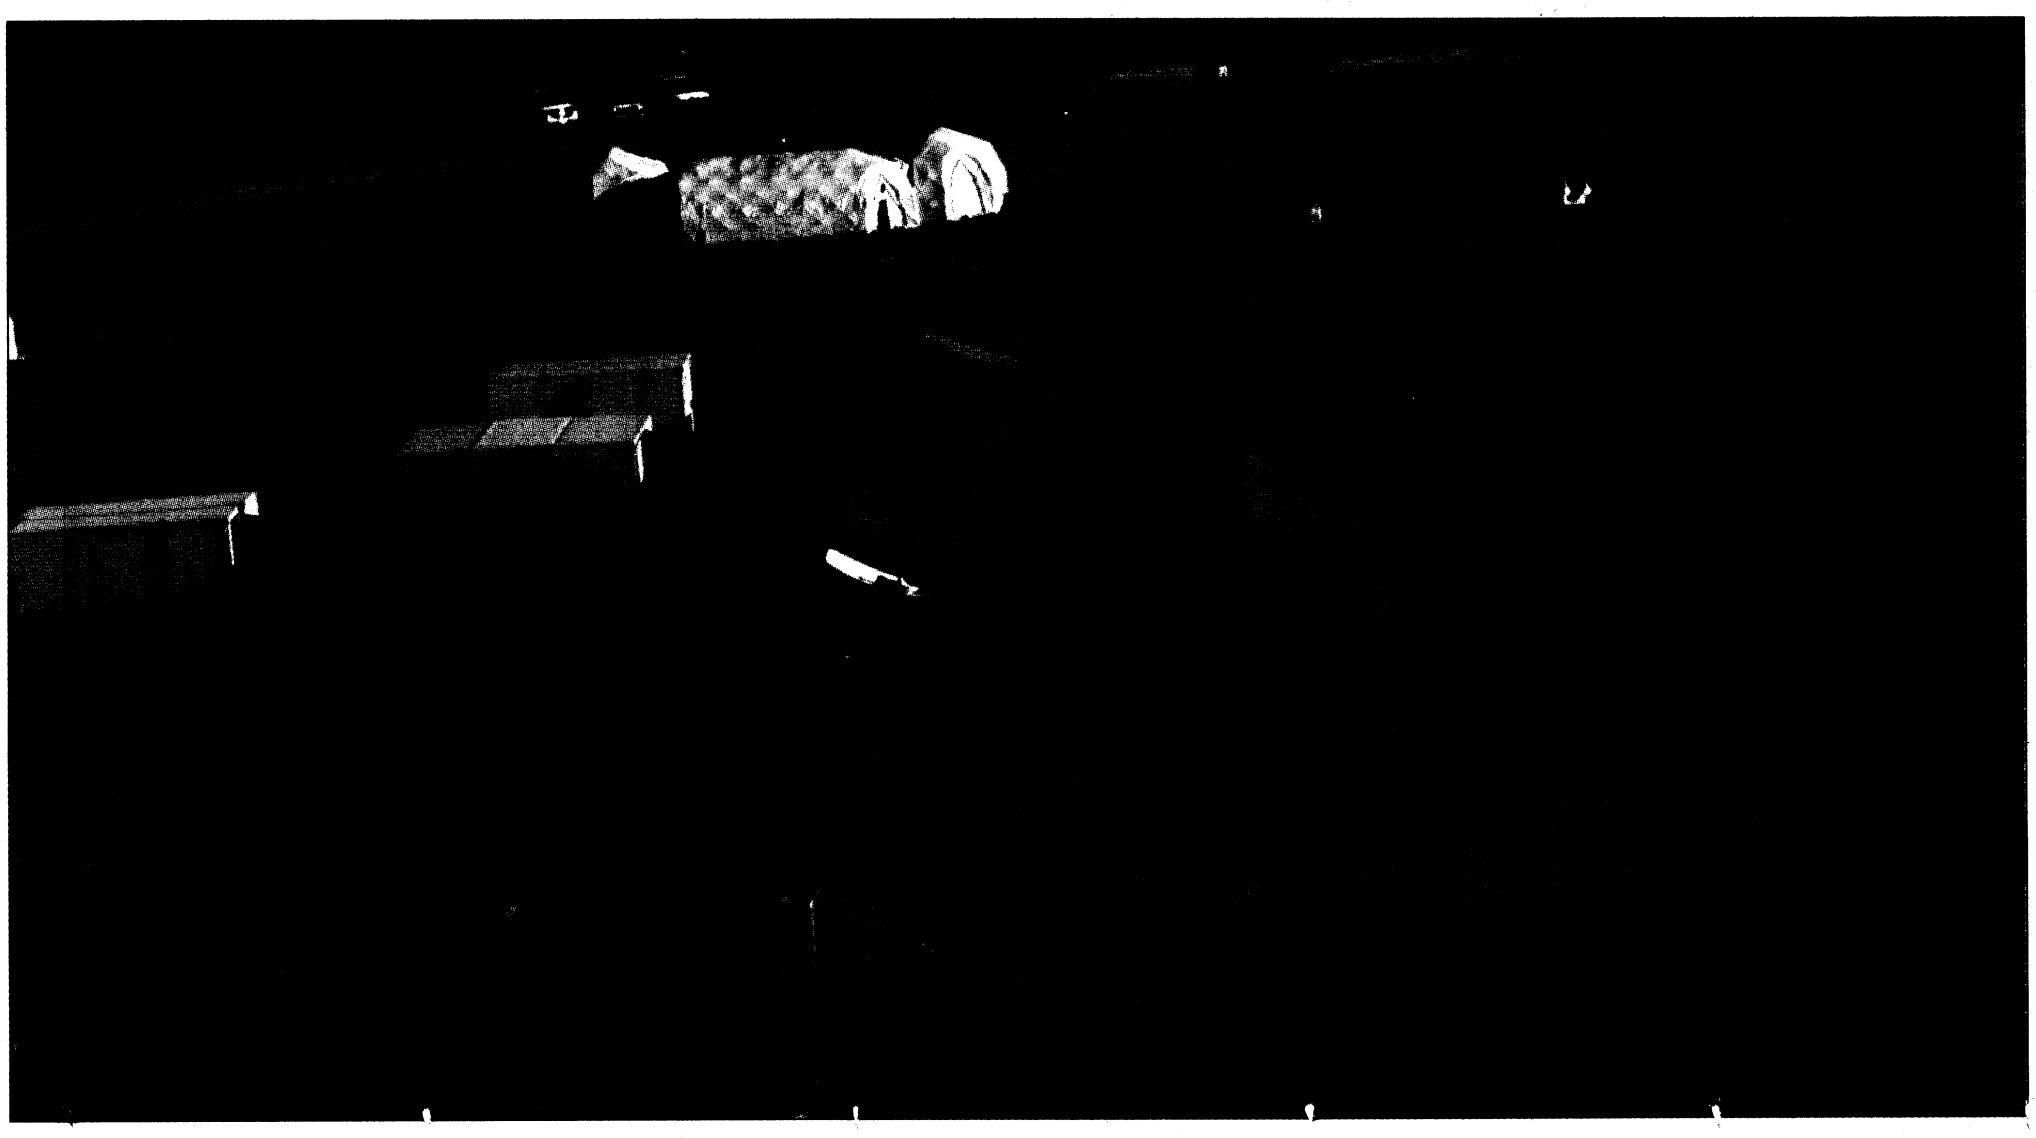
At full capacity, the mobile hospital could hold 248 patient beds and cover 15 acres of land, said Lt. Col. Barbara Holcomb, deputy commanding officer, chief nurse.

The medical facility has most of the components of a regular hospital — an operating room, intensive care units, labs, radiology, physical therapy, optometry, orthopedics, ear, nose and throat, gynecology and other specialty care providers.

It's staffed with physicians, medics, nurses, nutritionists, patient administrators, mechanics and logistics personnel.

"(The hospital) is a series of tents connected together. We have the capabilities to take care of immediate, life-threatening injuries," Holcomb said. "The ultimate goal is to return patients to duty and not evacuate them."

The 14th pulled out all stops for "Shem," who was triaged, sent to the operating room for an amputation and then moved into an intensive care unit.



Pfc. Mike Connell, a mental health specialist, said the helicopter scenario gave Soldiers an opportunity to practice their skills in a very realistic environment.

He said the FTX also helped Soldiers become more familiar with the process of building and running a large mobile facility.

"One of the biggest things was getting to see what it's going to be like when we are actually deployed," Connell said. "I watched how everything fit together and saw everyone work in their specific roles. It is exciting being able to practice your MOS this way."

Spc. Amanda Sohr ties temper linings that will be used as a heater duct when the eight-section tent is assembled.

Soldiers wait outside the Emergency Medical Treatment tent for a medevac to drop off casualties. The 14th Combat Support Hospital, a mobile unit, provides most of the services a regular hospital offers.

Fort Benning leaders worked on a five-year plan Jan. 20 to 21 at the Callaway Gardens Mountain Creek Inn.

"The real purpose of the offsite was to set the conditions for the leadership of Fort Benning to get together and determine the best way ahead for Fort Benning for the next five years," said Col. Charles Cornwell, post chief of staff. "The goal is to make Fort Benning a center of excellence."

The leaders of every unit and directorate on post attended the conference and were split up into groups to discuss specific topics.

The spouses who attended were also separated into spouses groups to discuss specific topics.

Since the focus of the conference was to turn Fort Benning into a center of excellence. The offsite groups talked about the main areas to improve, a few of those being:

• Making Fort Benning a center of excellence for producing trained Soldiers and adaptive leaders — To do this, the groups agreed, Fort Benning needs to employ the top tier officer, NCO instructors and civilian employees using state-of-the-art, interactive learning programs to train the Army's Soldiers and leaders.

During this discussion, people, training methodology, learning technology, equipment and information operation campaigns were discussed.

• How to Make Fort Benning a Center of Excellence for Tenant Units and Activities — To do this, the groups agreed, Fort Benning will improve such areas as Soldiers' Plaza, by turning it into a true one location in and out processing center; improve the installations support to deploying units by ensuring Soldiers are efficiently trained and prepared for their mission. The groups would also like to improve world class support to Soldier's and families at or better than the civilian community by ensuring Fort Benning housing, transportation, medical, dental and childcare meet both routine and unique needs.

• To Make Fort Benning a Center of Excellence for Strategic Platforms — To do this, Fort Benning will create a World Class Joint Deployment Center with capacity to hold 1200 deploying and redeploying personnel.

This center will meet the requirements of combatant commanders. The goal is also to create a deployment platform that can move units of action and brigade combat teams within 72 hours.

• Determine how to make Fort Benning the home of choice for Soldiers and Families — The intent is to provide a safe and secure environment with a long term, unsurpassed quality of life. The hope is this will attract Soldiers and families to seek a Fort Benning assignment, motivate families to choose on post quarters, and motivate families of deployed Soldiers to remain in quarters. The main goal is to have 95 percent occupancy by 2005.

> "The goal is to make Fort Benning a center of excellence."
> Col. Charles Cornwell
> Post chief of staff

• Determine how to make Fort Benning a Center of Excellence for leader development and career management of officers, NCOs, and Department of the Army civilians — Fort Benning will provide an institution that recruits, trains, rewards, and promotes excellence in service and whose reputation draws the best to serve and whose alumni take with them a culture of excellence to the rest of the Army.

The spouses who attended the conference also participated in discussion groups that covered areas.

Some of those topics were Fort Benning community-based wellness and healthcare; military spouse career opportunities, continuity, and portability; ways of improving post Child and Youth Services, recreational facilities, child care, gym and fitness centers, clubs and restaurants.

They also sought a way to assist spouses in finding employment.

Secretary praises 'breathtaking' courage of Iraqis

John D. Banusiewicz
American Forces Press Services

WASHINGTON — The Iraqi people showed "breathtaking" individual and collective courage by participating in the country's Jan. 30 election, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Feb. 1.

While it's too soon to know how things will turn out in the long run, the election was "an amazing accomplishment for the Iraqi people," he said.

"I think that 35 years of a repressive dictatorship can change people," Rumsfeld said. "It can affect their ethics and their morale and their confidence.

"Under Saddam Hussein, if you stuck your head up and disagreed, you'd be killed, so people learned not to disagree. And yet here they showed a collective and individual act of courage that was just breathtaking."

During an interview with Fox News, Rumsfeld said that a campaign of intimidation failed to keep most Iraqis from voting.

"They were told if they voted they would be killed," he said. "The election workers were told they'd be killed if they worked at the election area. Iraqi security forces were attacked, and they stayed right there and did their job.

"The important thing was they saw that the overwhelming majority of the Iraqis want to vote, they want to have elections, they want to be free, they want to make a success out of their country and they saw that everyone else felt that way," he said.

People must be patient as the election's aftermath plays out, Rumsfeld said. He said that counting the votes will take about two weeks, and the newly elected national assembly must be organized and seated before it selects a president, two deputy presidents and a prime minister. Then the prime minister must select the people to serve on the cabinet and run the government's various ministries. The process may last through April.

"It takes time for it. Democracy is not efficient. It's the best form of government that anyone's ever tried, but it doesn't do things in one second because it's not dictatorial.

"So we're in a period where we're going to have to work with them and have them sort through and fashion an Iraqi solution to how they're going to manage their freedom."

The question of when U.S. forces can come home from Iraq will be answered by conditions not by a timetable, Rumsfeld said.

"It will depend on how fast the Iraqi people are able to come together, as they did on election day, and develop that capacity to provide their own security," he said.

"They're doing it — they've made good strides. We're making good progress, and notwithstanding where you hear, 'Well, the Iraqi security forces aren't very good.' In fact, they did a very good job on election day."

In the meantime, Rumsfeld said, the progress achieved and progress that lies ahead should be a great source of pride for U.S. service members.

Say Ahhhhhh!

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Niasia Vaughn, opens her mouth for Capt. Mark Maher, a dentist at Love Dental Clinic, to examine her teeth during Children's Dental Health Month at Santa Fe Child Development Center.

A healthy smile is always in style

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

You know what they say about an ounce of prevention? Well, when it comes to dental health, a little prevention can save a lot of toothaches in the long run.

February is "Children's Dental Health Month," and the folks at the Dental Activity are on a crusade to make sure children and parents have the education and tools they need to have a happy, healthy smile, said Cathy Hatfield, community health hygienist.

Hatfield said there are several misconceptions about children's dental health. For example, parents often think children don't need to worry about dental health care because they don't have their adult teeth yet.

During health month, Hatfield, along with post dentists and hygienists, travel to each school and child development center, teaching children how to care for their teeth. They teach proper brushing and flossing techniques and give children tips to avoid cavities.

Col. John Bryson, chief of Pediatric Dentistry at Love Dental Clinic, said good oral health begins early.

"The American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry recommends the first dental exam should be at one year," Bryson said. "It's like a well-baby checkup."

The dentist looks at the baby's gums, checks for signs of dental disease and talks to parents about the use of bottles and sippy cups, the importance of brushing and flossing their child's teeth and the use of fluoride.

Everybody loves a love story

The Bayonet wants yours

Bridgett Siter

Did you hear the one about the guy who left a trail of candy kisses from the front door to the bedroom? "I kiss the ground you walk on," read the note he left his wife. Lucky woman.

If you like that story, you'll love our Valentine edition of The Bayonet. Of course, if we don't get a better response to our plea for love stories, there won't be a Valentine edition of The Bayonet.

To date, we've only heard from two of you. But boy howdy, those two love stories are awesome. It would be a shame not to print them. Alas, two stories does not a paper make.

C'mon now, you know you know a great story. It can be funny or sweet or mushy (go easy) or even sad. We all loved Titanic.

We want to hear about how you met, how he (or she) proposed, how you "keep it together" when you're apart ... you name it. Something funny happen at the wedding? The honeymoon?

Send your story (or a story about someone you know) to fbbayonet@mindspring.com. Or, you can call me at 545-9135 or fax me at 682-0095. Be sure to include a phone number.

Can't wait to hear from you.

Oh, by the way, that lucky woman with the candy kisses was Maria Sardina, and her thoughtful husband is Staff Sgt. Anthony Sardina.

Author of Hero Mama shares story of survival

Zacharias tours with message of support

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Karen Spears Zacharias preached to the choir Jan. 28 at Sayers Library.

The author of Hero Mama spoke briefly about our nation's failure to properly care for the families of fallen servicemen and women. It's a sermon she typically delivers to civilian audiences.

"No matter what your political leanings are, know that somewhere out there is a twelve-year-old boy and a nine-year-old girl trying to make sense of their family's sacrifice," she said. "No military family should have to endure that alone."

Zacharias was that 9-year-old girl in 1965, when Staff Sgt. David Spears said good-bye to her and her brother before heading into the Ia Drang Valley with the 25th Infantry Division.

"I believe you both are old enough now to understand," he said. "I promise I'll come home."

Spears got it wrong on both accounts. He never made it back alive, and his daughter struggled for years to make sense of her loss, her mother's desperate search for solace in alcohol and promiscuity, and the total lack of compassion she encountered.

"It really bothers me that you don't have a daddy," a classmate told her. "I don't like being around you because of that."

"I'm sorry," Karen said, and she was — sorry and certain she was somehow to blame for her father's death and her mother's grief.

"I didn't have the tools necessary to make the distinction between support for the Soldier and opposition to the war," she told her audience Friday. "Frankly, I didn't even have the skills to articulate my feelings."

Somewhere along the way, Zacharias found the words to share her story in a book dedicated to her mother. Hero Mama was released three weeks ago by William Morrow. Zacharias, who spent much of her childhood in Columbus, is touring to promote the book and the message.

She recounted her trip, in 2003, to Vietnam, where a gigantic monument honors the wives and mothers of that country's fallen soldiers.

"No, I don't think we'll ever see a monument to our hero mamas in this country, but it's not a statue that makes the difference," she said. "It's the attitude of the heart."

It took Zacharias eight years to complete Hero Mama. The book, the trip to Vietnam, and her work with Sons and Daughters in Touch, a national organization for the children of servicemen killed in Vietnam, was a mission Zacharias said her father left her.

With that mission complete, she's set out on a mission all her own.

"I hope this helps people see things through the eyes of a child," she said. "If you're that (child) out there trying to make sense of it, how do you do that? Who's helping you synthesize that information?

"This is not a political story. It's a story of a family's sacrifice," she said. "The message is this — I don't care what your stance is, you need to support these families."

Hero Mama is on sale at the Main Mall Post Exchange, and copies are available at Sayers and Donovan libraries.

Hardaway students appreciate NCOA partnership

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

Brittney Proper, a senior at Hardaway High School, always thought of Soldiers as stern, rigid and tough — then she met the Soldiers of the NCO Academy.

"They are more laid back than I expected," Proper said. "I thought they were all like the guys in the movies, but they aren't, unless they need to be."

The NCOA Soldiers began visiting Hardaway as part of the Partners in Education program. Through the program, units on post serve as mentors for Fort Benning schools as well as schools in the community.

The NCOA was officially inducted into the PIE program on Veterans Day, and shortly after the induction, Proper designed the Hardaway and NCOA PIE banner that hangs in the hallways of the school.

For Proper's work on the banner, the NCOA presented her with a certificate of appreciation and a NCOA coin with her name on it.

"When we went to our first PIE meeting with the NCOA, we didn't know what to expect from them," said Cathy T. Kirkland, Hardaway's assistant principal. "But they are wonderful. They've been a great addition to Hardaway."

Since the induction, the academy has helped the school by providing reading material for the school's silent reading program, including 150 copies of The Bayonet. They donated ribbon for Red Ribbon Week, helped with the

Toothache can be an emergency

American Dental Association

Thousands of dental emergencies — from injuries to a painful, abscessed tooth — happen every day.

Would you know what to do if your child broke a tooth or had a tooth knocked out while playing outdoors?

What if you had a bad toothache in the middle of the night and couldn't get to the dentist until the next day?

Knowing what to do can lessen the pain and save a tooth that might otherwise be lost.

Keep your dental office phone number and an emergency number where the dentist can be reached after hours with other emergency numbers, such as your family doctor and fire and police departments.

Some families post these numbers on the refrigerator or inside a kitchen cabinet door near the phone.

Call the dentist immediately for instructions on how to handle a dental emergency.

• Toothache — Rinse the mouth with warm water to clean it out. Gently use dental floss or an interdental cleaner to remove any food or other debris that may be caught between the teeth. Never put aspirin or any other painkiller against the gums near the aching tooth. This could burn gum tissue. If the toothache persists, try to see the dentist. Don't rely on painkillers. They may temporarily relieve the pain, but your dentist should evaluate the condition.

• Knocked-out (avulsed) tooth — Try to find the tooth. This may not be as easy as you think if the injury took place on a playground, basketball court or while skateboarding, so try to stay calm. Hold the tooth by the crown and rinse the root in water if the tooth is dirty. Don't scrub it or remove any attached tissue fragments. If it's possible, gently insert and hold the tooth in its socket while you head to the dentist. If that's not possible, put the tooth in a cup of milk and bring it to the dentist. Time is critical for successful reimplantation.

• Broken tooth — Rinse your mouth with warm water to clean the area. Use cold compresses on the outside of the cheek to help reduce the swelling.

• Tongue or lip bites or wounds — Clean the area gently with a clean cloth and apply cold compresses to reduce any swelling. If the bleeding can't be controlled, go to a hospital emergency room or clinic. You may be able to reduce bleeding from the tongue by pulling it forward and using gauze to put pressure on the wound.

• Objects caught between teeth — Try to gently remove the object with dental floss. Never use a sharp instrument to remove any object that is stuck between your teeth. If you can't dislodge the object with floss, call your dentist.

• Possible broken jaw — Apply cold compresses to control swelling. Get to the hospital emergency room immediately.

To lower tax bill, remember credits, deductions when filing

Georgia Society of CPAs

If you're focused on lowering your 2004 tax bill, don't forget to claim the tax credits to which you are entitled. According to the Georgia Society of CPAs, while both deductions and credits can lower your tax bill, they are by no means created equal. Tax credits are more valuable than deductions in cutting your tax bill.

The Society offers the following explanation of the differences and outlines credits you may be qualified to claim on your tax return.

Understanding the tax difference

Whether you itemize or take the standard deduction, tax deductions are used in calculating your taxable income. Deductions reduce your tax bill by lowering your taxable income. The amount you save from deductions depends on your marginal tax bracket. The higher your tax bracket, the more you can save. Tax credits, on the other hand, apply after you have determined your tax liability and cut your tax bill dollar-for-dollar.

Here's an example: For an individual in the 25 percent tax bracket, a $1,000 tax deduction reduces the tax bill by $250. By contrast, a $1,000 tax credit reduces the tax bill, dollar-for-dollar, by $1,000. So, if you owe the IRS $2,000, a $1,000 tax credit cuts your tax bill in half.

Some common tax credits

There are many tax credits; the most common are child- and education-related and many have age implications. Here is an overview:

- The child tax credit for 2004 is $1,000 for each qualifying child. The basic requirement is that your child be younger than age 17 at the end of the calendar year and claimed as a dependent on your return.
- The adoption credit for 2004 is $10,390 per qualifying child.
- The Credit for the Elderly or Disabled is available to individuals who are either age 65 or older or are under age 65 and retired on permanent and total disability.
- The child and dependent care credit provides a tax credit of between 20 and 35 percent of qualifying expenses. The credit is available to parents who, in order to work, pay someone to care for a dependent child younger than 13 or for a relative who is incapable of self-care. For 2004, the dollar limit on expenses toward which you can apply the credit percentage is $3,000 for the care of one dependent and $6,000 for two or more.
- The Hope Scholarship Credit provides a credit of up to $1,500 per student during each of the first two years of college. The credit applies only to tuition and related fees (not room and board) and the qualifying student must be enrolled at least half-time in a college or vocational school.
- The Lifetime Learning Credit applies to tuition costs for undergraduate and graduate level courses and also to courses for improving job skills. The credit is equal to 20 percent of your eligible Lifetime Learning expenses, for a maximum $2,000 credit.
- The earned income credit is aimed at reducing the tax burden on lower-income taxpayers. Persons with or without a qualifying child may claim this credit. For tax year 2004, the maximum credit is $2604 for persons with one qualifying child, $4,300 for persons with two or more qualifying children and $390 for persons without a qualifying child.

Special rules apply

Many tax credits are reduced or eliminated for higher income taxpayers. In some cases, the credits cannot be claimed simultaneously. For example, you cannot take the Hope Credit and the Lifetime Learning Credit for the same student in the same year. Some credits require that you itemize your deductions and some exclude taxpayers who are married and file separately.

Refundable and nonrefundable credits: know the difference

There are two types of credits: non-refundable and refundable. Non-refundable tax credits can reduce tax to zero, but can't be used to get a refund. Non-refundable tax credits include the dependent care credit, the credit for the elderly or disabled, the Hope and Lifetime Learning credits and the adoption expenses credit.

In most cases, the child tax credit is non-refundable but in certain cases, it is partially refundable for lower-income families.

A refundable credit such as the Earned Income Credit can reduce your tax below zero and provide you with a refund. For this reason, CPAs point out individuals with zero taxable income who are eligible for the EIC should file a tax return to receive the benefits of this credit.

To find out more about these credits, contact a CPA or visit the Internal Revenue Service Web site at www.irs.gov.

Dental: Rinsing doesn't prevent decay regularly becomes a habit," Bryson said. "Start early and let it be a routine."

Bryson said some people are prone to cavities, but proper dental habits can prevent most large-scale problems.

One of the best ways to deter cavities, Bryson said, is to brush within 20 minutes of eating, when teeth are most prone to decay.

Hatfield suggests rinsing with water when a toothbrush isn't available. But rinsing alone is not enough to prevent decay.

"We teach the kids by having them pretend they are going to McDonalds for lunch," Hatfield said. "They don't have their toothbrush on hand, so they can rinse out their mouth with water."

Food left on the teeth for 24 hours turns as hard as stone, Hatfield said. It takes a dental hygienist to get it off.

"We have the children pretend they just had a meal, and they take their dishes to the sink to clean up," she said. "If they let them sit overnight, the food on them will get hard and start to rot."

It's the same with teeth, she said. If they don't brush, the food on their teeth will get hard and cause plaque and decay. Using mouthwash alone, instead of brushing, is like spraying disinfectant over the pile of dishes — it doesn't fix the problem.

"Moms and dads need to be behind us one hundred percent on this," Hatfield said. "Dental health greatly affects (all aspects) of your life. If a child with a toothache goes to school, he doesn't feel good and doesn't pay attention like he should. It affects everything."

Hatfield said children who attend one of DENTAC's presentations will receive an oral exam by a dentist, a new toothbrush and a sticker. The hygienists will send a paper home with the children that tells parents what they need to do for their child's oral health.

"We know parents have so many things on their minds already," Hatfield said. "But, brushing and flossing their child's teeth before they go to bed at night — that is the simplest thing you can do. That's prevention."

PIE: Program motivates students school swim team and choir and help instruct the JROTC students. They're currently working on a tutoring program.Sgt. Maj. Tony Winterfeld, NCOA assistant commandant, said this is the academy's opportunity to get rid of the stereotypical image of Soldiers.

"We are humans, not robots," he said. "We have a different side to us. This is a way of showing that we do care about the community we live in. A lot of Soldiers end up retiring here."

Winterfeld said this has been both a satisfying and learning experience for the NCOA Soldiers.

"The (Soldiers) get to see how schools have changed from when they went to school," he said. "For those of us who have children, this gives us an opportunity to see how well the schools have progressed with the times."

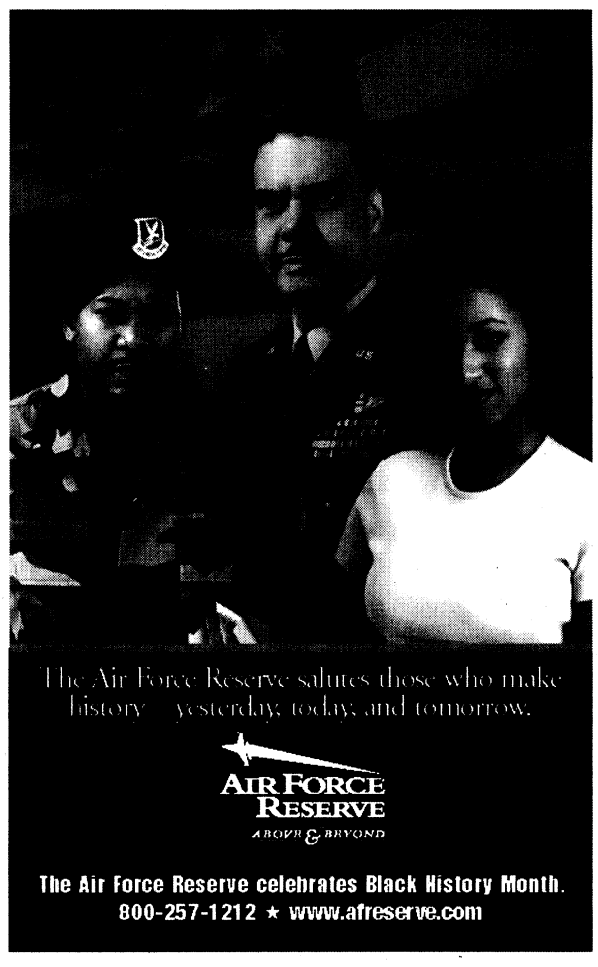
Spc. Eliamar Castañon

Brittney Proper, a senior at Hardaway High School, shows her art work to Sgt. Maj. Tony Winterfeld, NCO Academy assistant commandant, at Hardaway Tuesday.

The satisfying part of the partnership is the constant appreciation received from the students, he said.

"I'm really glad they are here," Proper said. "Not to demean our other partners because they are great too, but this has been the best year because of the NCOA."

Winterfeld said the hardest part of the partnership is getting the students to understand they aren't there to recruit.



"We're not trying to convince any of these kids to join the Army," Winterfeld said. "We want them to know and understand that we are here to help them out in any way we can."

TOUGH CHOICE, TOUGH KIDS

Young lives marked by difficult choices

Alex Melendez
Faith Middle School

The hardest decision I ever made was which parent my sister and I would live with. They were getting a divorce, and it was up to me to choose where I wanted to live. I was really confused about it — they're both great parents, so I couldn't decide.

You know how sometimes it feels like your head is going to explode because you are thinking too hard? My head was about to explode. If I were to live with my mom, my dad would be upset. If I lived with my dad, my mom would be upset. It wasn't like picking out a pair of pants.

So, I made my decision. My sister and I chose to live with my dad.

We go to see Mom during summer and winter vacations. She's living in New Jersey, and we spend time with her and other family and friends. We're sad when we leave. I thought I would miss her more, but we talk every day on the phone, and I feel like she's closer than she is.

I know that my parents care about me equally. Sometimes you may have a hard decision to make, but you always have to do what's best for you, whether it turns out ok or not.

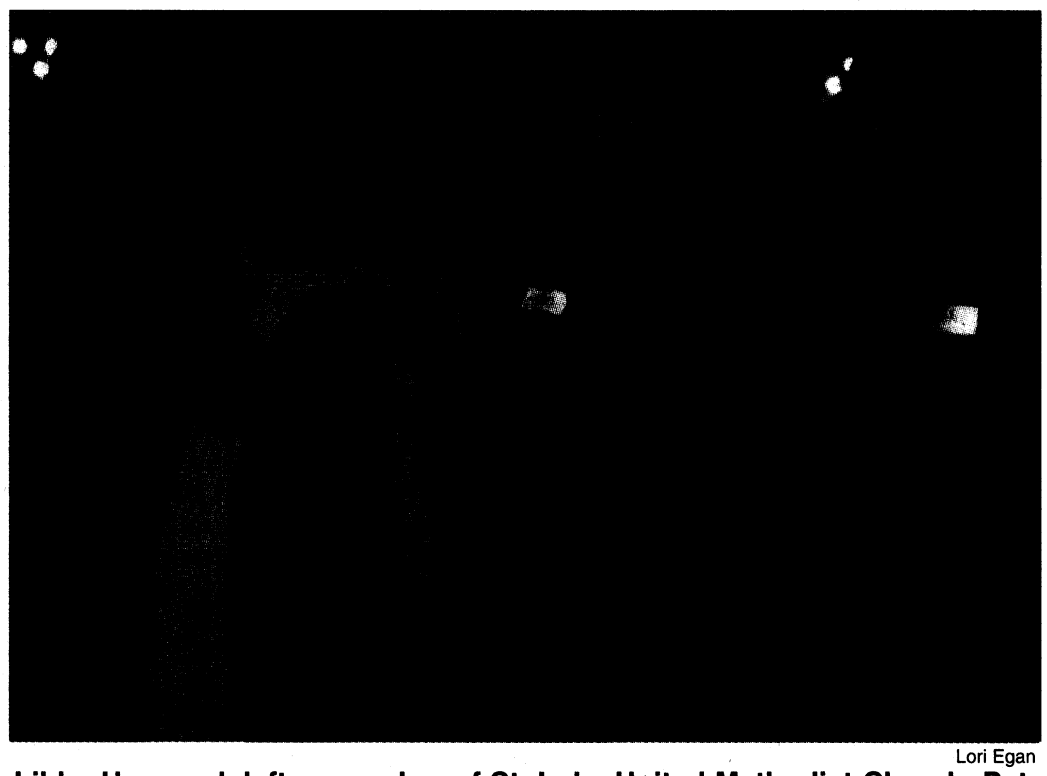
Shantil Ferguson
Faith Middle School

When I was only 8 years old, I had to make the hardest decision of my life — whether to stay with my mom in Florida or move to Texas to live with my daddy.

It was so hard to choose, because they both take really good care of me, and they love me very much. When they asked me what I wanted to do, I said I wanted to stay with them both. That wasn't an option, so I chose to live with my dad. At the time, I spent very little one-on-one time with him, and he convinced me we would have a lot of fun together. I really didn't want to leave my mom, but I wanted to see new things. I went with my dad.

To tell the truth, everything has worked out just fine, so I don't regret my decision.



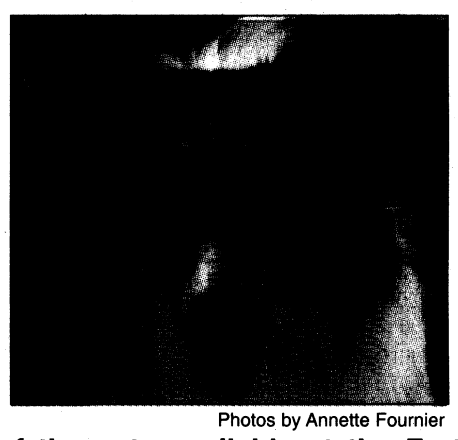
Right choice, right time

Darius Czerny
Faith Middle School

It is safe to say the hardest decision I ever had to make was whether to live with my oma — my grandma — in Germany, or with my mom here. I love them both, but I wouldn't be here if it wasn't for my mom, so I decided to live with her.

Still, it was definitely the hardest decision I have ever made, because I was confused and scared. I had to think of the future. Living with my mom turned out to be the right thing to do, because just a while later, my dad left for Iraq. I have helped her with my brothers who are 9 and 6 years old. I don't do much — I'm usually just the referee as I try to keep them out of her hair. My mom would be going in circles if it wasn't for me. It is not exactly a walk in the park, but I'd do anything for my mom. I know I made the right choice.

It's about serving



Lori Egan

Libby Housand, left, a member of St. Luke United Methodist Church, Pvt. Jordan Hanford and Pfc. Nick Camano, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, clap with the music of Lighthouse, one of the church's praise bands Saturday night. The Soldiers were the first Infantry Soldiers invited to the church as a part of Operation Appreciation, a ministry that brings basic trainees to the church once a month for a respite from basic training. Pfc. Brian Winzig, from Valley City, Ohio, said he thought the Soldiers would be serving the pizza, not being served by church volunteers, who want to demonstrate their support for Soldiers. "These guys need to know that we're behind them regardless of what they hear elsewhere," said Chuck Clark, one of the volunteers at St. Luke.

Lenten season begins

REFLECTIONS

A married couple had lived together for 25 years in what outwardly seemed like a reasonably good union.

They went to church together every Sunday and prayed every night before they retired. But they did have one problem that seemed insurmountable.

They could not have a conversation that didn't end up in an argument.

Finally, the wife decided she'd had enough, but because of her religious scruples, divorce was out of the question. She had a better idea.

One night as the couple settled down for their nightly prayers, she turned to her husband.

"We must put an end to this terrible situation," she said. "We can't go on like this. Since today is the first day of Lent, why don't we pray that things will change. Let's pray that the Lord will call one of us home to him. Then I can go live with my sister."

Although one would suspect that the wife's proposal fell short of the true Lenten spirit, nevertheless Lent is the season when the call to reform and change is emphasized.

Lent is the season for serious reflection on the direction in which our life is headed. That is why prayer becomes central to the Lenten journey.

You hear God calling you from one direction, the world from another. The question is, which way do you go? The decision is yours.

It is precisely at these times when prayer becomes most important to us. We literally must pray our way out of the wilderness.

Life is a continuous series of peaks and valleys, highs and lows. None of us can avoid the wilderness-experience times when our whole inner-world feels drab and cold and empty.

This Wednesday marks the beginning of Lent. During the next 40 days, prayer allows us to discover once again the importance of our relationship with the Lord. It allows us here and now to prepare for a future filled with the understanding that we are not alone.

It is not just a mindless alternative to a mindless present. No, it is hope realized, justice satisfied, love fulfilled, truth triumphant.

"All things new" means that God is keeping faith with the world of his own creating.

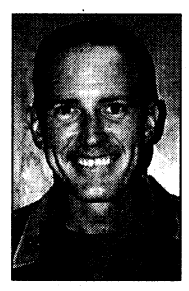
Enlarge your vision, don't shrink it

Ups and downs of life manageable with determination



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

From the time she was a little girl, Tara Holland dreamed of becoming Miss America.

In 1994, she entered the Miss Florida pageant and won the title of first runner-up. She decided to try again the following year. She entered the same contest, and once again, was only named runner-up. Tempted to give up and quit, she didn't — she enlarged her vision and stayed focused on her goal.

How'd she do it? Well, after losing twice in a row at state level competitions, she decided to regroup and refocus. Instead of tossing in the towel, she redoubled her efforts to envision her success. She rented dozens of videos of local pageants, state pageants, Miss Teen, Miss Universe, Miss World — whatever she could find.

As Tara watched each young woman crowned a winner, she pictured herself in that situation. She pictured herself receiving the crown. She pictured herself walking down the runway victorious.

Hawkins

Time and time again, as Joel Osteen recounted in his book, Your Best Life Now, she envisioned herself winning. She worked hard — very hard — at enlarging her vision and seeing herself as a winner.

In 1997, a reporter asked Tara if she was nervous walking down the runway of the most prestigious pageant in the world, with millions of people watching on television as she had just been named (you guessed it) Miss America.

Tara's response was interesting.

"No, I wasn't nervous at all," she said. "You see, I had walked down that runway thousands of times before."

When do you feel tempted to toss in the towel and quit? Are you willing to enlarge your vision?

Maybe you're faced with the challenge of a deployment. Perhaps work has you feeling like a failure. Do you wonder if your parenting is making any difference?

If feelings of inadequacy or insecurity are knocking at your door, don't answer.

Instead try heading in a different direction — don't shrink your vision, enlarge it.

See yourself succeeding marvelously during this deployment. Rehearse in your mind how you'll find respect and fulfillment on the job. Picture what it would be like to have the admiration and love of your children.

Enlarge your vision!

Want help and encouragement with that? If it's deployment you're dealing with, the "Keeping It Together" support group at meets 6 to 8 p.m. Thursdays at Sightseeing Road Chapel.

Child care is provided on-site. The only requirement is that you pre-register by calling me at 545-9014, so we can arrange for food and child care.

If there are other issues you'd like help with, come talk to our counseling team. They're located in the Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza. The phone number is 545-1760.

You can also join me at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at Kelley Hill.

Do not thou forget me."

RTB defense key to win

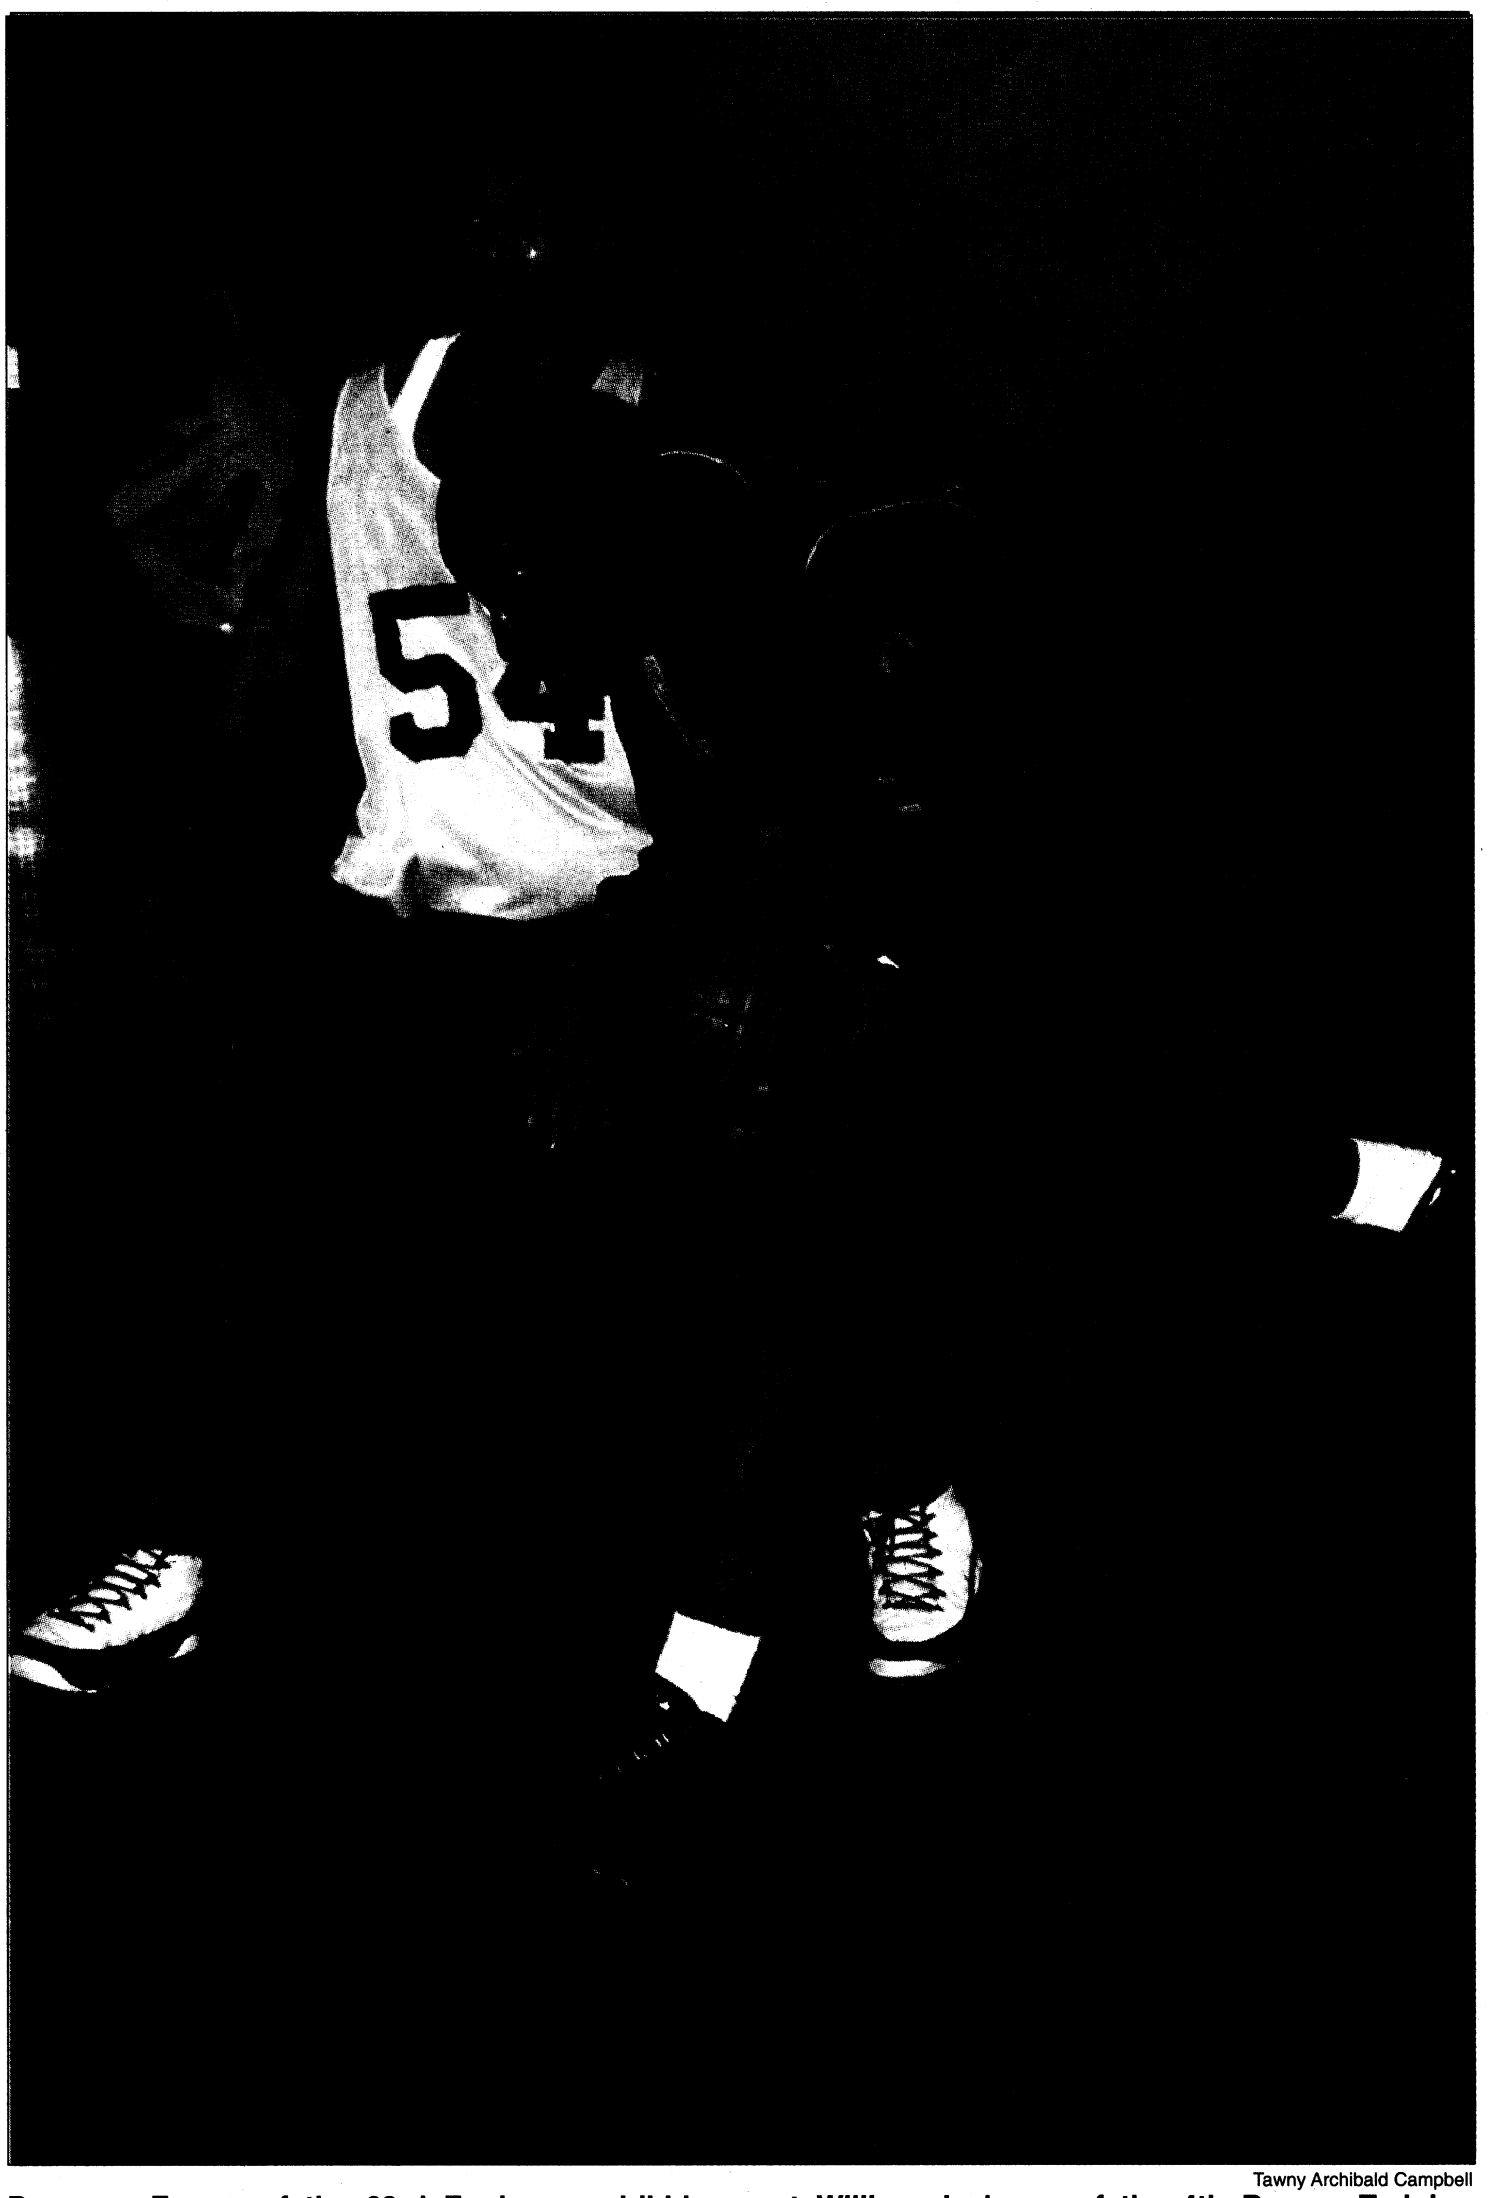
Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Down six after the half, the 4th Ranger Training Battalion defense fueled a series of runs in the come-from-behind, 49-40 victory against the 63rd Engineers.

"We were trailing all game and then the defense turned it up and we all got excited," said William (Ali) Jackson, who led RTB with 12 points. "No one here has played together, so (at first) we just tried to see what everyone had."

In reality, RTB's win was deceiving, because midway through the second half, the Engineers were up 30-28.

Jackson was fouled on a shot, the basket counted, and a good free throw put RTB in the highest digits on the board for the first time in the game. A baseline jumper from Alvin Butler, moments later, pushed the lead to three. Then two quick baskets by Charles Barnwell gave RTB a commanding 6 point lead.



The Engineers' Marion Benefield planted a shot from outside the arch for a three point gain, but RTB answered tit-for-tat, not letting the Engineers close the gap.

"At the start we had a few turnovers and got them to the line," said Dewayne Evans, point guard for the Engineers. "We just had a lot of turnovers and were not in sync. We were just trying to work out the first-game bugs."

The turnovers and fatigue were the Engineers' undoing. They were able to make some outside shots, but a scrappy RTB swiped away most of the rebounds and passes inside the paint. The last couple of minutes were not pretty. Foul after foul followed and the Engineers were never able to close the growing gap.

"We had a lot of heart and a lot of hustle," Jackson said. "We played hard on the floor. The team with the most heart wins."

RTB is now 1-0 for the season. Jackson scored the game high with 12 points, followed closely by the Engineers' Kennie Ervin with 11 points. Other high scorers were Benefield with nine and RTB's James Greening adding eight for the win.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

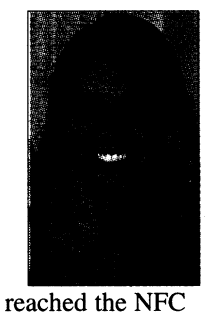
• Super Sunday

In case you've been living in a spider hole, I'll remind you Super Bowl XXXIX is Sunday. Kick off is at 6:25 p.m. on FOX. Here's bettin' halftime performer Paul McCartney's wardrobe functions properly.

• Sammy swings to Baltimore

The Chicago Cubs will trade outfielder Sammy Sosa to the Baltimore Orioles for infielder Jerry Hairston and two minor-league prospects. Did the Yankees run out of money after acquiring Randy Johnson?

• Warm up the engines



The 2005 NASCAR Nextel Cup Series will warm up fans Feb. 12 with the Budweiser Shootout (8:10 p.m. on FOX) at Daytona International Speedway. The Daytona 500 pits Feb. 20.

• Football fanatics rejoice

I get stuck in that purgatory between the end of football season and opening day of baseball, and without hockey this year, I'll be watching the Arena Football League. It's football indoors on a smaller field, basically, but hey, it's football, and it'll get me over the hump. You can catch it Sunday afternoons on NBC.

Trophy up for grabs

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

My name is Erin, and I'm a Patriots fan. OK, I got that out of the way. With that said, my co-workers are worried about me writing an objective commentary about Super Bowl XXXIX, when reigning champs New England Patriots will take on the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday in Jacksonville.

Sure, I have my pick for who's going to win (I'll let you figure that one out for yourself). But I also know anything can happen.

Take Super Bowl III. The New York Jets were 17 1/2 point underdogs to the Baltimore Colts. Jets quarterback Joe Namath guaranteed a win. Putting the cart before the horse, yeah, but they did actually win.

This year's Miss Cleo is Terrell Owens, wide receiver for the Eagles, who so eloquently said, "We will win the Super Bowl," before the Eagles even reached the NFC Championship game. OK, Terrell, time to put the Lombardi trophy where your mouth is.

The big question is, will he even play? Owens was sidelined by an ankle injury in a Dec. 19 game against Dallas. His doctor will not medically clear him to play. Owens says he's playing, regardless, and some speculate he will be used as a third receiver.

So beyond all the predictions and soothsayers, what does it boil down to? Quarterbacks, coaches, turnover ratio? Do statistics and facts and figures really have anything to do with the outcome of the game?

I gave up on statistics last fall during the ALCS Championship. According to the stats, the Red Sox could not possibly come back from a 3-0 game deficit against the Yankees to win the ALCS. Good thing the Red Sox didn't listen.

Maybe it's time for Philly fans to get their championship team. After three failed attempts in the last four years at the NFC Championship, they finally got it this year. The Eagles have only made one trip to the Super Bowl, in 1981, and lost to Oakland. Is this their year?

Statistics say no. The Pats are favored by seven points. Like I said, I'm a Pats fan, but it's not over 'til the fat lady sings. The Red Sox made that abundantly clear.

It's 60 minutes of the NFL's two best teams aspiring to be the best team, the world champions. It's anybody's game.

Soccer season to begin in Columbus

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

For all you soccer lovers out there, it is time to hit the field.

Spring registration for the Columbus Adult Soccer Association will be from 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday, at Woodruff Farm Soccer Complex.

The registration is for both men's and women's leagues and includes all levels of play.

Registration is $55 per person. That does not cover uniform or equipment costs.

Cindy Rhein, CASA registrar, said the league is open to anyone age 18 and older. Games will be played once a week on Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays, depending on the division.

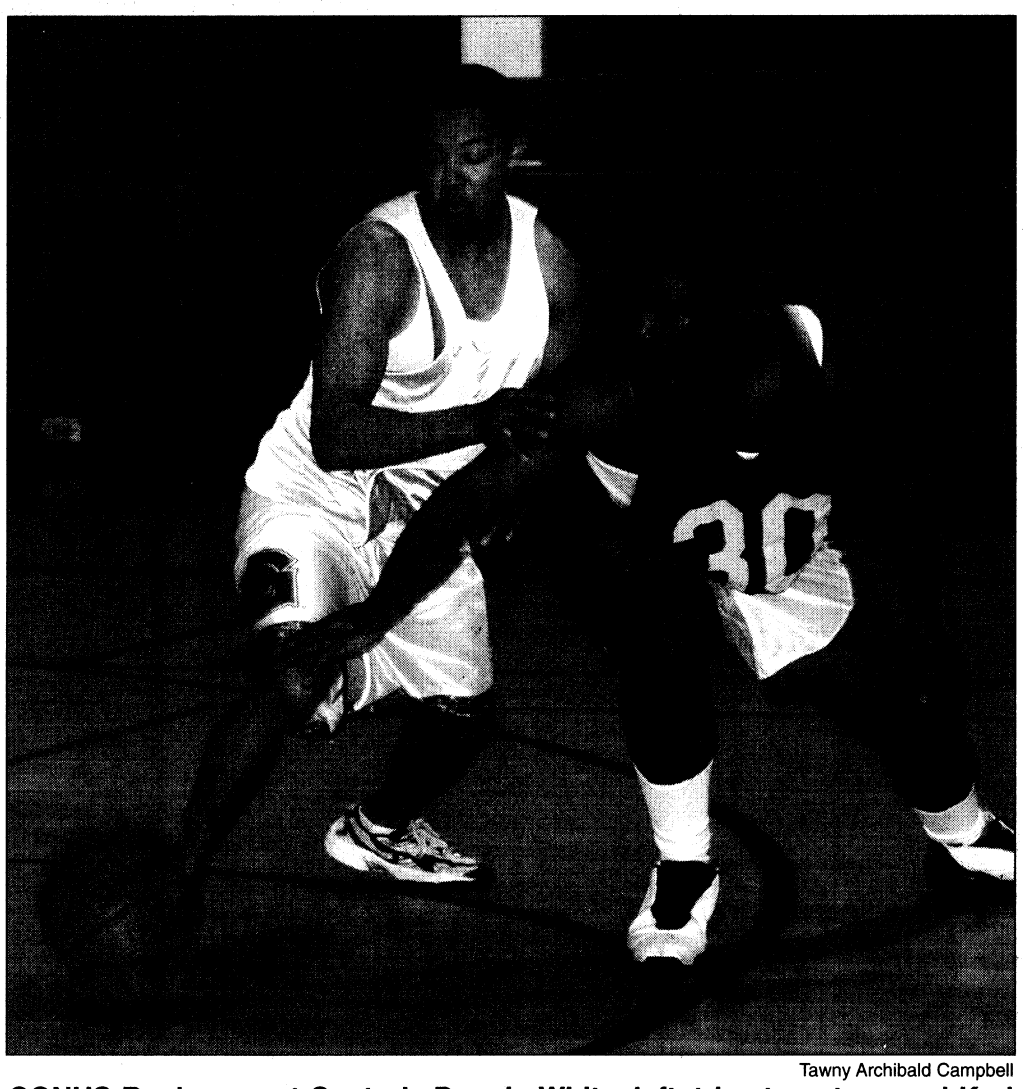
There are three men's divisions and usually one women's division.

The 90-minute games are tentatively scheduled to begin in March and the season will last for 10 weeks, ending with a tournament for the top four teams in each division, Rhein said.

A preseason tournament is scheduled Feb. 19 to 21.

If you are interested in playing soccer but have never been on a team, Rhein said not to worry.

"We will define the leagues for you and let you make the decision as to where you want to play," Rhein said.



"Soccer is becoming very popular, and it's a great way to make new friends and meet new people."

Additional registration dates will be at the Woodruff Farm Soccer Complex from 7 to 9 p.m. Feb. 9, and from 1 to 5 p.m. Feb. 13.

Late registration is $75.

For more information, call Rhein at 570-1200 or go to www.casasoccer.com.

The big mouth and the boy with blue eyes and other tales of great love

The Bayonet readers share favorite stories for Valentines Day

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Courtesy photo

Francis Schroeder wed Marie Schlueter on Halloween in 1936. The couple was married more than 60 years.

Ask anyone at The Bayonet about The Greatest Love Story Ever, and they'll tell you it started right here under our noses.

We knew Ely and Brian were perfect for each other from day one, when Ely — (then) Pfc. Eliamar Castañon — arrived fresh from the Defense Information School, where all Army journalists are trained. It was providence.

I can't say why exactly we knew they were perfect for each other. They had nothing in common, he a tall, skinny white boy from Wisconsin, and she a Mexican from California who joined the Army with "her boys," a purely platonic posse of Latinos who would surely intimidate any prospective suitor. (Think J-Lo in uniform with extremely territorial back-up singers.)

Of course Brian — Spc. Brian Trapp — didn't know he was a prospective suitor, and Ely wasn't prospecting. But everybody else in the office saw it coming.

Brian was great about "showing the ropes" to our new writers, so he and Ely spent a lot of time together from the start. They became great friends, hung out together on the weekends and that sort of thing.

Then one weekend they went on assignment to Providence Canyon, "Georgia's Little Grand Canyon," in Lumpkin, Ga. That's where "they knew," as they tell it.

Silly kids, they kept it a big secret from the rest of us, despite our constant attempts to matchmake. They kept it a secret right up until Brian started packing for Iraq.

Spc. Trapp is coming home next month to marry Spc. Castañon. It'll be a private affair in Wisconsin. Then he's going back to Iraq. When he comes home for good, they'll make plans for a big Mexican Catholic wedding in California.

Someone here in the office dubbed their story The Greatest Love Story Ever, and it's definitely a contender. But some of our readers have really great love stories of their own, and we're so glad they shared them.

There were no video cameras around back in 1920-something, when Marie Schlueter met a handsome blue-eyed law student from Creighton University.

It's a good thing she shared her memories with her granddaughter, Annette Fournier, a Public Affairs intern at Fort Benning. Marie's been gone a couple of years, but her love story lives on.

Marie was a wicked young woman. She bobbed her hair, and the proper young ladies at St. John's High School For Girls in Omaha, Neb., didn't bob their hair. She was expelled, of course, but later readmitted.

One evening after school, she crossed the street to Creighton University to watch a play. Ostensibly to watch a play — much later she admitted she was simply looking for boys.

The play was boring, and Marie was restless, so she turned to chat with her neighbor again and again. Loudly, it would seem, because the young man in front of her finally had enough.

"Would you please be quiet!" he barked.

What a rude young man, she thought. What nice blue eyes.

Those blue eyes belonged to Francis Schroeder. He spotted Marie across the dance floor a few weeks later and remembered her as the girl who talked too much. He invited her to dance anyway.

Later he asked her for a date. He drove his dad's Model T to impress young Marie, who'd never ridden in a car before. The two were an item from then on.

The Depression forced Francis to put his education on hold. He was determined to have his law degree before he married, so he went home to South Dakota without Marie.

Annual prayer breakfast set

Post commander will speak

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's an annual, national event.

The folks in Washington, D.C., have already held theirs. And Feb. 23, everyone in the tricommunity is invited to attend Fort Benning's version of the National Prayer Breakfast.

This is the 53rd year for the national breakfast, a tradition in place in the nation's capital since President Eisenhower.

President Bush was the guest speaker at the Feb. 3 event in Washington.

"Prayer has always been one of the great equalizers in American life," Bush said. "Here we thank God for his great blessings in one voice regardless of our background."

Post commander Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley will be the guest speaker for the local celebration, which begins at 7:30 a.m. Feb. 23 at the Officers' Club.

Tickets are available from unit first sergeants and unit chaplains.

The suggested donation is $4 for Soldiers E-4 and below and $6.25 for E-65s and above.

For more information, call 544-9485 or 545-2288.

New director takes over Club Beyond

Veteran enjoys working with military kids

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

There's a new, friendly face on post, and he's looking out for the teenagers.

Steve Paquette is the new, full-time director of Fort Benning's Club Beyond, a youth program sponsored by chaplains at military installations worldwide.

Paquette is going to be the kind of guy Fort Benning teens can really relate to.

He left the Army in 2001 after serving 10 years. His last assignment was as a K9 handler on post, and he had his heart set on joining the Georgia State Patrol. When that didn't pan out, he said, he found himself at a crossroads.

"In the summer of 2000, I felt called to do full-time youth ministry," he said, "so I started looking at different youth opportunities."

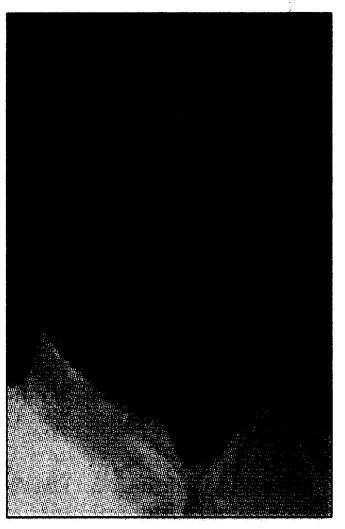
But with his resume out with various police departments in the area, and not a single job offer, he reluctantly decided to go home to Simsbury, Conn.

One week before he planned to leave, with his things boxed up and loaded in the truck, Paquette got a call from the Phenix City Police Department.

"I knew I was meant to stay in the area," he said. But staying wasn't easy. Several times, through the past few years, he almost went home to be closer to his father, who was battling cancer. None of the police departments in the north called.

Instead, he got a call from James Rockwell, the area director for Young Life. Paquette had already spent several years with the Young Life program, doing volunteer outreach ministry for Columbus, Shaw and Pacelli high schools. Rockwell heard about the opening at Fort Benning and knew Paquette wanted a full-time youth ministry.

"I love working with kids," Paquette said. "I enjoyed my time in the military, and I like being around the military."



He said his experiences will help him connect with the teens. He's a veteran of Haiti and Somalia, enduring military life and the rigors of deployment. Paquette admits he's never had to wait on the home front, like many of the teens who attend Club Beyond.

"Military kids have a different mindset, because they know they'll move eventually," he said. "Most have been to six or more schools by the time they get to seventh or eighth grades and they're more willing to accept people for who they are."

Paquette didn't hold club meetings until January, because he wanted to "meet the kids where they're at" before having them meet him where he is. Paquette's office is inside the old AAFES gas station building on Wold Avenue where the club also meets.

"I wanted to get out and get to know them," he said, "so I went to Faith (Middle School) and talked with the principal, Doctor Gonzales."

> "Military kids have a different mindset, because they know they'll move eventually. Most have been to six or more schools by the time they get to seventh or eighth grades and they're more willing to accept people for who they are."
> Steve Paquette
> Club Beyond director

So reaching the middle-schoolers was easy, he said, noting it's much harder to get out to meet the high school students at all the different schools.

"My biggest group is eighth graders at Faith," Paquette said. "And they'll be the ones who spread the word once they get into high school."

About 25 teens in sixth through 11th grades meet with Paquette from 5 to 6:30 p.m. Sundays at "The Shack," as the club's home is called. Although the building has been marked for demolition for many years, Paquette said it's a great place. The main club room has a stage, a sound system and room for plenty of teens.

Meetings begin, he said,with music and activities designed to get all the teens involved.

"Then we play some crazy games and end with a message about Jesus," he said. Those games usually involve wacky tasks like fishing candy worms out of ice water with toes and feeding them to someone else — with the toes, or digging candy out of pie tins filled with flour.

He's looking ahead to early morning Bible studies and outreach projects to give the kids and opportunity to give back to the community.

"Some may say I'm still a teenager," he said. "Thirty-one and still a kid.

"I don't know if a lot of parents know about Club Beyond, but it's a great thing for kids of deployed parents."

For more information about Club Beyond, call Paquette at 545-2359 or 681-8948.

Students aim to 'pie' principals

Here's your chance to send Napoleon Dynamite and Orville Redenbacher abroad. Members of Faith Middle School's National Junior Honor Society are collecting movies, popcorn and candy to send to injured servicemen and women at the hospital in Landstuhl, Germany. It's a noble cause, of course, but these kids have an ulterior motive. The more they collect, the more principals they get to pummel with pies.

Here's how it works, said Tonya Hart, NJHS advisor. If the students collect 50 movies, they get to "pie" Assistant Principal Jimmy Cochran; 100 movies means Principal Julio Gonzalez is the target; and 150 movies earns them the privilege of hitting Assistant Principal Mike Starrett with a pie.

Drop off new or used videos or DVDs at the school or Ranger Joe's on Victory Drive in Columbus by Feb. 25.

ASK THE JUDGE

Capt. Luis A. Morales
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Can you please explain some of the common tax credits and deductions I may be able to take advantage of this year?

A: A credit is a dollar-for-dollar reduction of the taxpayer's tax liability. A refundable credit can be greater than the tax owed. Taxpayers not only can have their tax reduced to zero, but they can also receive a refund of the excess credit. A nonrefundable credit can also be greater than the tax, but the nonrefundable credit can only reduce tax liabilities to zero. Taxpayers do not receive a refund for any excess nonrefundable credit.

These are the three more common tax credits:

• The Child Tax Credit — This is a refundable credit of $1,000 for each qualifying child. A taxpayer may be entitled to a child tax credit for each qualifying child for whom the taxpayer claims an exemption. The taxpayer must be allowed the personal exemption deduction with respect to such child.

To claim the Child Tax Credit the taxpayer must provide the name and the identification number on the tax return for each qualifying child.

• The Child and Dependent Care Credit — A nonrefundable credit is allowed for a portion of qualifying child or dependent care expenses paid for the purpose of allowing a taxpayer to be gainfully employed.

To be eligible for the credit, a taxpayer must maintain a household for any dependants under the age of 13. The credit may also be claimed for any person who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself.

• Earned Income Credit — The Earned Income Credit (EIC) is a refundable tax credit. Eligible taxpayers can receive a refund for this credit even if they owe no tax and had no income tax withheld.

EIC provides tax relief to low-income workers, including workers without children.

An individual who does not have a qualifying child may be eligible for the credit if the principal place of residence of the individual is in the U.S. for more than one-half of the tax year, the individual (or spouse) is at least 25 and under 65 before the close of the tax year, and the individual is not claimed as a dependent by another.

Other information about tax law can be found at http://www.irs.gov.

The Fort Benning Tax Center hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday; 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesday; 10:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Thursday; and 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. every other Saturday — Feb. 19, March 5, March 19 and April 2. All customers are seen on a walk-in basis.

Tooth decay on rise fueled by sugar, starches, bad habits

American Dental Association

Many parents across the country will issue a common refrain at dinnertime tonight: "You'd better eat that — it's good for you."

There's another old favorite in the parental arsenal of dietary admonitions: "Don't eat that — it'll rot your teeth."

Now more than ever, we are faced with a bewildering array of food choices from fresh produce to sugar-laden processed convenience meals and snack foods. What we eat and when we eat it may affect not only our general health but also our oral health.

Americans are consuming foods and drinks high in sugar and starches more often and in larger portions than ever before. It's clear that "junk" foods and drinks have gradually replaced nutritious beverages and foods for many people.

Alarmingly, a steady diet of sugary foods and drinks can ruin teeth, especially among those who snack throughout the day. Common activities may be contributing to the tendency toward tooth decay. These include habitually grazing on foods with minimal nutritional value, and frequently sipping on sugary drinks.

When sugar is consumed over and over again in large, often hidden amounts, the harmful effect on teeth can be dramatic. Sugar on teeth provides food for bacteria, which produce acid. The acid, in turn, can eat away the enamel on teeth.

Almost all foods have some type of sugar that cannot, and should not, be eliminated from our diets. Most of them contain important nutrients and add enjoyment to eating. But there is a risk for tooth decay if your diet is high in sugars and starches. Starches can be found in everything from bread to pretzels to salad dressing, so read labels and plan carefully for a balanced, nutritious diet.

Tips to reduce the risk of tooth decay:

• If you choose sugary foods and drinks, do so with meals. Saliva production increases during meals and helps neutralize acid production and rinse food particles from the mouth.

• Limit between-meal snacks. If you crave a snack, choose nutritious foods and consider chewing sugarless gum afterward to increase saliva flow and help wash out food and decay-producing acid.

• Drink more water.

• Brush teeth twice a day and clean between teeth with floss or an interdental cleaner.

• See your dentist regularly.

Readers: Share lasting love stories

But Marie grew tired of waiting. After eight years of letter-writing, she gave him an ultimatum — "Come get me, or I'll marry someone else." He did and she didn't and the two were happily married more than 60 years.

"But she never did stop talking at the movies," her granddaughter said. "We always had to say "Shhh, Grandma, would you please be quiet."

"I figured she was my good-luck charm."

Brian Flemming

Brian Flemming's love story includes a $20 wager. His older brother, Pat, bet that Brian would meet the love of his life before his 30th birthday.

In November 1998, less than a month before Brian turned 30, he made the final cut in a karaoke contest at a local tavern. While waiting his turn at the mic, he struck up a conversation with a young woman named Shannon, who helped him select a song, Billy Joel's She's Always A Woman. He won first place.

"I figured she was my good-luck charm," said Flemming, who works for Omega Training. "I remember thinking, 'I'm gonna keep her.'"

When his birthday rolled around, Flemming gladly anted up $20. He sang at the wedding four years ago, and Shannon recently learned she's pregnant.

Sgt. Danny McCormick married his high school sweetheart nearly 21 years ago, and he's still crazy about her.

Several years ago, Danny and Jenny renewed their vows in a ceremony quite different from the first one hosted by her mother. This time, Jenny wanted a traditional church wedding, with one exception — she wanted "to obey" edited from the vows. The preacher reluctantly agreed.

On the day of the wedding, all day long, Jenny's brother good-naturedly campaigned for "to obey" to be reinstated in the vows. The preacher got so flustered he (you guessed it) slipped the forbidden phrase into the vows. Jenny gritted her teeth and said, "I do." Her brother caught it all on video.

Danny accidently recorded over the wedding video weeks later, and his wife was elated.

"I figure we all have one exception — she wanted "to obey" edited from the vows. The preacher reluctantly agreed.

"I figure we all have memories that are more precious than any hard evidence could ever be," said Danny, who's assigned to the 3rd Army Augmentation Company training at Fort Benning.

"I feel like I'm the luckiest person in the world."

Cindy Haines

Bill Haines fell in love with the gal across the street in San Antonio, Texas. Cindy had an 11-year-old daughter, Lisa. Bill's son, Adam, was 11 also.

The kids were buddies, but Bill and Cindy knew each other only as neighbors until both of their spouses abandoned them. They began to rely on each other for help with the kids. Bill mowed her lawn. Cindy cooked him dinner.

Then one morning, Cindy awoke with blurred vision, no sensation on one side and no sense of taste. Bill drove her to the hospital where she was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis, a progressive, debilitating uncurable disease.

The future looked bleak for Cindy, who tried to push Bill away.

"I thought no man would want to continue a relationship facing the uncertainty of what multiple sclerosis might do to me," she said.

Bill wouldn't budge. He continued to look after Cindy and her daughter.

One day she brought him a glass of iced tea while he was mowing her lawn. He took a sip and said, "It's about time we got married."

"That's right," Cindy replied.

Lisa was Cindy's bridesmaid, and Adam was best man.

That was 13 years ago. Both kids are married now with children of their own. Bill and Cindy moved back to Columbus, her hometown, and he works for Shaw on Fort Benning. She's doing well.

"I feel like I'm the luckiest person in the world," she said. "And I thank God every day for blessing me with Bill."

"Prayers do get answered."

Karen Faircloth

Karen Faircloth figures God had a hand in orchestrating her marriage, too.

She was a single mom, and her young son longed for a dad — someone who would be active in his life. Pray about it, Karen told him, and he did. Adam prayed every night for nearly two years.

Karen and her son moved to Warner Robins, Ga., in 1999, when she landed a job at the Air Force base.

On the day she was scheduled to in-process, she got lost.

Finally, frustrated, she pulled into the nearest parking lot and rationalized, "every civilian working here has in-processed, therefore anyone I ask should be able to tell me where to go."

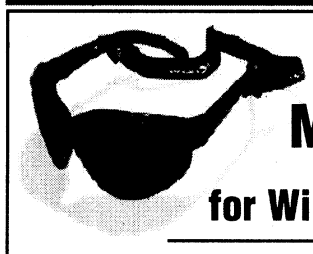
A pick-up truck pulled alongside Karen's car, and she rolled down her window just as the driver did.

She explained the situation and he laughed. Turns out he was starting a new job that day, too, and he was lost, looking for the building where he would in-process.

The two finally found the building and stayed side-by-side throughout the in-processing.

They've stuck side-by-side ever since, figuratively.

Capt. James Faircloth III is in Iraq now, and his wife and son, Karen and Adam, pray each night for his safe return.



"Prayers do get answered," she said.

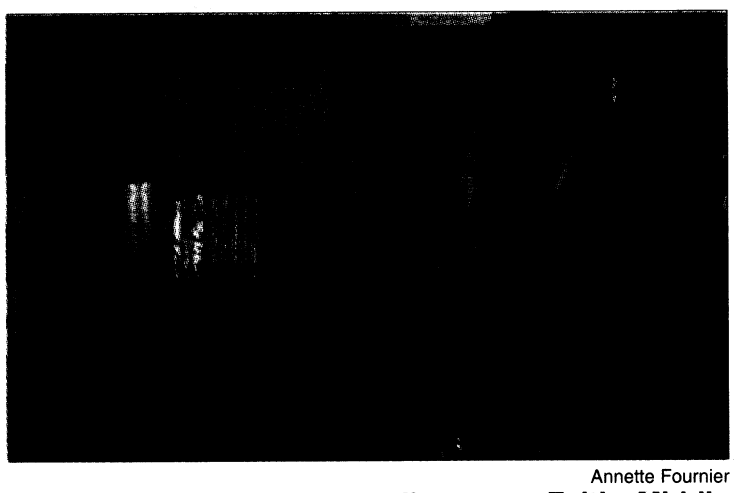
Guest speaker at Faith discusses tsunami effects

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Students at Faith Middle School got a personal perspective on the tsunami that hit Asia when Chrysantha Tillekeratne, a native of Sri Lanka, spoke at the school Feb. 4.

About 180 students attended Tillekeratne's presentation, which focused on the tsunami's affect on Sri Lanka and cultural tidbits about the country.



Several students and teachers had shocked expressions as Tillekeratne described the events of the morning the tsunami hit. It was a Sunday, so many families were relaxing at the beach when suddenly the sea receded by a kilometer, leaving live fish flopping on the sand, he said.

The people on the beach were shocked, and went rushing onto the wet sand to see what was happening. Kids ran around picking up fish and seashells, and others watched the ocean wondering what was happening.

"It was like a magical scene," Tillekeratne said. "It was all very strange and bizarre, like nothing we had ever seen before." After about 25 minutes of the odd manifestation, the water returned as swiftly as it had gone, but in waves that were 30 feet high and going 500 mph.

"The people who were out running around never had a chance to get away," Tillekeratne said. "Can you imagine standing on the beach and watching your children wash out to the sea? It was so terrible."

In Sri Lanka, a nation of 20 million, about 50,000 people were killed and 800,000 left homeless after the tsunami.

Volunteers help the wounded in Thailand.

Relief work is still being conducted in the area, and Tillekeratne expressed his thanks for the 1,500 Marines who are working throughout Sri Lanka.

"Your servicemen and others from around the world are aiding the people greatly," Tillekeratne said. "All of Sri Lanka must now put their shoulders to the wheel to rebuild our country."

Women ignore higher risk of heart disease, warning signs

Dr. Carolyn Landolfo
MCG Health System

Since 1984, more women than men have died of heart disease, but only 8 percent of women think heart disease is a major concern.

It's important for all women to be aware of their own risk for heart disease and take action to keep their hearts healthy. Making simple lifestyle changes can reduce your risk significantly.

MCG Health System and the American Heart Association urge all women to take the following steps to help prevent heart disease.

• Stop smoking. While smoking is commonly linked to lung cancer, it also has dramatic effects on cardiac health. Just one pack of cigarettes a day can double your risk of heart attack. Ease yourself down the path to becoming a nonsmoker by joining a support group, or create your own with a friend. Use nicotine gum or the patch and consult your physician..

• Exercise and eat right. Thirty minutes of exercise on most days of the week, combined with sensible eating, not only improves heart health, but helps you look and feel better too. Form a walking group with friends, join a gym or plan activities you love, such as swimming, tennis or biking. Limit foods high in saturated fats and make fresh, healthy choices such as chicken, turkey, fruits, vegetables and whole wheat products.

• Get regular checkups. Women who wouldn't even consider not getting their annual mammograms and Pap smears sometimes forget to have their blood pressure, cholesterol and glucose levels checked annually.

• Know if you're at risk. If you are older, are African American or have a family history of cardiac problems, you are at greater risk for heart disease. Diabetes, low levels of good cholesterol (HDL) or high levels of triglycerides (a type of fat) are risk factors women should be concerned about.

• Know the warning signs of a heart attack, including pain, squeezing or pressure in the chest, profuse sweating, pain or numbness in the left arm, fatigue, feelings of indigestion or heartburn, or nausea and vomiting.

Uncommon signs that may appear more often in women or the elderly include:

• Weakness and rapid heartbeat accompanied by shortness of breath, nausea, profuse sweating, pain in the arms and dizziness or fainting;

• Extreme fatigue after physical activity or stress, rather than chest pain (usually experienced by men);

• Nausea and pain high in the chest or back;

• Unexplained fatigue and trouble sleeping (sometimes experienced up to a month before heart attack); and

• Shortness of breath without symptoms of chest pain.

Women at risk for heart disease should seek medical attention immediately if they experience any of these signs and symptoms.

All women should be aware that heart disease is not just a concern for men anymore.

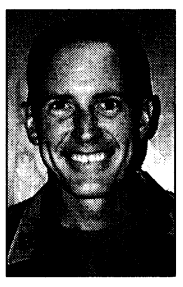
Everyone welcome

(Maj.) Jeffrey
Chaplain, Family Life Center

Some things you just can't stop. Plan on more reality television and gossip about Paris Hilton and scientific studies on the dangers of your favorite food.



And plan on the CrossRoads service. Even the deployment of the 3rd Infantry Division can't stop this new postwide chapel service. It still meets at 11 a.m. every Sunday, at the Kelley Hill Chapel, providing "a safe place to hear a dangerous message."

The casual, contemporary, relevant service keeps drawing a crowd.

The upbeat worship and friendly atmosphere create a place where Soldiers and their families can find encouragement for challenging times.

Our January series, "Deployment SOS," prepared everyone for the mission ahead, culminating with a drawing for a free day spa for the spouse of a deploying Soldier. Upcoming series will touch on subjects close to the heart of our military community.

A lively children's church program, Promiseland, means both parents and kids can have a meaningful time to learn about Christian life. The monthly potlucks aren't bad either!

Hawkins

The chapel service, like our deployed Soldiers and families, has adjusted to its new mission. The "Keeping it Together" support group helps spouses of deployed Soldiers and the chapel's "Adopt-a-Soldier" program assures that GIs in Iraq will not be forgotten — chapel members will be praying for specific Soldiers and writing to them.

If you don't have a church or chapel home and are looking for a place of inspiration and encouragement — a place with people who share your struggles and challenges — check out CrossRoads. The crowd still numbers in the hundreds, but we have room for you.

For more information on the CrossRoads service, call me at 545-9014.

Bring back the fun of childhood's moments

Find ways to add creativity to grind of everyday life

Chaplain (Capt.) Christian Pierce
Martin Army Community Hospital

REFLECTIONS

When I was a small child I loved the game "tag." It was a rush of pure excitement to be chased and escape from being "it."

It didn't matter where we were, a game of tag could break out in a moment's notice.

"Tag, you're it!"

I don't know who thought of it, but someone decided to add a twist to this timeless game by increasing the risk of being tagged.

It was the classic rule of nature — girls against boys, and the girls would be the chasers. If we were tagged, we were taken behind the tree and kissed by our captor.

We had to confront our fear of cooties, not knowing what this disease would do to a young boy.

We ran like the wind, screaming and yelling, knowing capture by the girls was imminent.

They seemed faster and enjoyed this mythical power that they had over us. We were giddy, hooting and hollering, watching our species get caught and taken behind the tree for a kiss.

They all had the same look of stupidity when they returned, convincing all of us that cooties must affect brain function. Wow, this was a fun game with high adventure.As an adult who is many years removed from his childhood, I miss the spontaneous fun and creativity of my childhood.

I have noticed that my life is compartmentalized into work, family and recreation, but for my children, all non-survival activities are some form of play.

It seems that one of my goals was to grow out of my childhood, and consequently, maturity meant that I had to stop having spontaneous fun.

I have noticed when I am having problems at work or in relationships, I am not having any fun.

My conclusion is that life without fun is not worth much, and some studies have concluded that people who struggle with self-worth and depression lack fun in their lives.

Perhaps it is time to re-evaluate my attitude towards playing. I wonder what would happen if I ran up to my boss and tagged him, declaring him "it?"

OK, that may be a little too sophisticated for a work environment void of spontaneous fun, but perhaps there is some game that we could play together.

There is no more enduring leadership quality than a boss who wants to have fun. The challenge is that fun cannot be forced.

To make things fun, I have to be sensitive to the dynamic of fun and my own awareness of what is fun for me.

I know that when I really want to have fun there is no loser or winner, just an invitation to play. There are hidden rewards in having fun, so why not break out into a game of tag?

It has been decades since I have played this game, and I never told anyone my secret: I sure did love being tagged.

"I asked for all things, that I might enjoy life. I was given life, that I might enjoy all things. I received nothing that I asked for but all that I had hoped for. My prayers were answered."

— prayer of a Civil War Soldier

Erin Nash

• Happy trails Emmitt
The NFL's all-time leading rusher Emmitt Smith retired the same way he came in — a Dallas Cowboy.

• Hall of Famers
Congratulations to Dan Marino and Steve Young, who will be inducted into the 2005 Football Hall of Fame.

• Rumor central
The Minnesota Vikings are saying Randy Moss is not on the trading block. Green Bay QB Brett Favre will give the Packers a decision by the end of the month but is not expected to retire.

• Last hurrah
The NFL Pro Bowl will be shown at 7:30 p.m. Saturday on ESPN, from Hawaii. Tom Brady, Peyton Manning and Ronde and Tiki Barber are just a few of the big names expected to play.

•Jose can you see?
Retired slugger Jose Canseco has written a tell-all book, saying he and former Cardinal Mark McGwire gave each other steroid shots, among other athletes. As usual, the athletes deny it.

• Lakers coachless
L.A. Lakers coach Rudy Tomjanovich recently resigned mid-season, citing health reasons. He said he'll never coach again.
Reports speculate Kobe Bryant is open to former coach Phil Jackson, who led the team to three NBA titles, returning.
Jackson said he is open to talks with the Lakers, although he hasn't been contacted yet.

Post names combat pistol champ

Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Public Affairs

The New England Patriots weren't the only ones who won a championship Super Bowl Sunday. A Soldier of the 690th Medical Company won the Fort Benning Combat Pistol Championship Feb. 6.

Spc. Victor Carrillo was the Fort Benning overall Service Pistol Champion and received the Commanding General's Marksmanship Cup Trophy award; Carrillo's name will be engraved on the trophy, which will be displayed at Infantry Hall. Fort Benning Deputy Commanding General Col. James C. Yarbrough presented the trophy to Carrillo at the awards ceremony Sunday afternoon.

Speaking at the awards ceremony, USAMU Commander Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag stressed the importance of marksmanship in today's Army and reminded all the Soldiers who competed that every Soldier is a warrior; he then introduced Yarbrough, the guest speaker.

"One of the missions of the AMU is improving combat readiness and that's what this competition has done this weekend," Yarbrough said. "Precision pistol shooting is not easy to do; it's good training and builds confidence. You can take this training back to your units and increase your unit's lethality."

Yarbrough said the USAMU has conducted marksmanship training for about 700 Soldiers recently for leaders to bring back to their units to train their troops.

"I enjoyed the competition. The AMU is always professional and they make the event fun," Carrillo said. "The training also helps in combat. Your marksmanship ability improves and that gives you confidence with your weapon."

Sgt. 1st Class William Albrecht, an Army Reservist stationed at Fort Benning, took first place in the Open Division followed by Master Sgt. Blaine Huston of the CONUS Replacement Center in second place. Sgt. Justin Fernandez of the 71st Military Police Detachment, who never competed with a pistol before, won the Novice Division in which USAMU Sgt. Maj. Vidal Ybarra finished second and 2nd Lt. Joseph Humphrey of the Infantry Training Brigade, placed third.

"This is a lot different from how we shoot but it's good training," Fernandez said. "The AMU instructors

Little fighter puts heart into wrestling

4-year-old competes against odds

Tawny Archibald Campbell

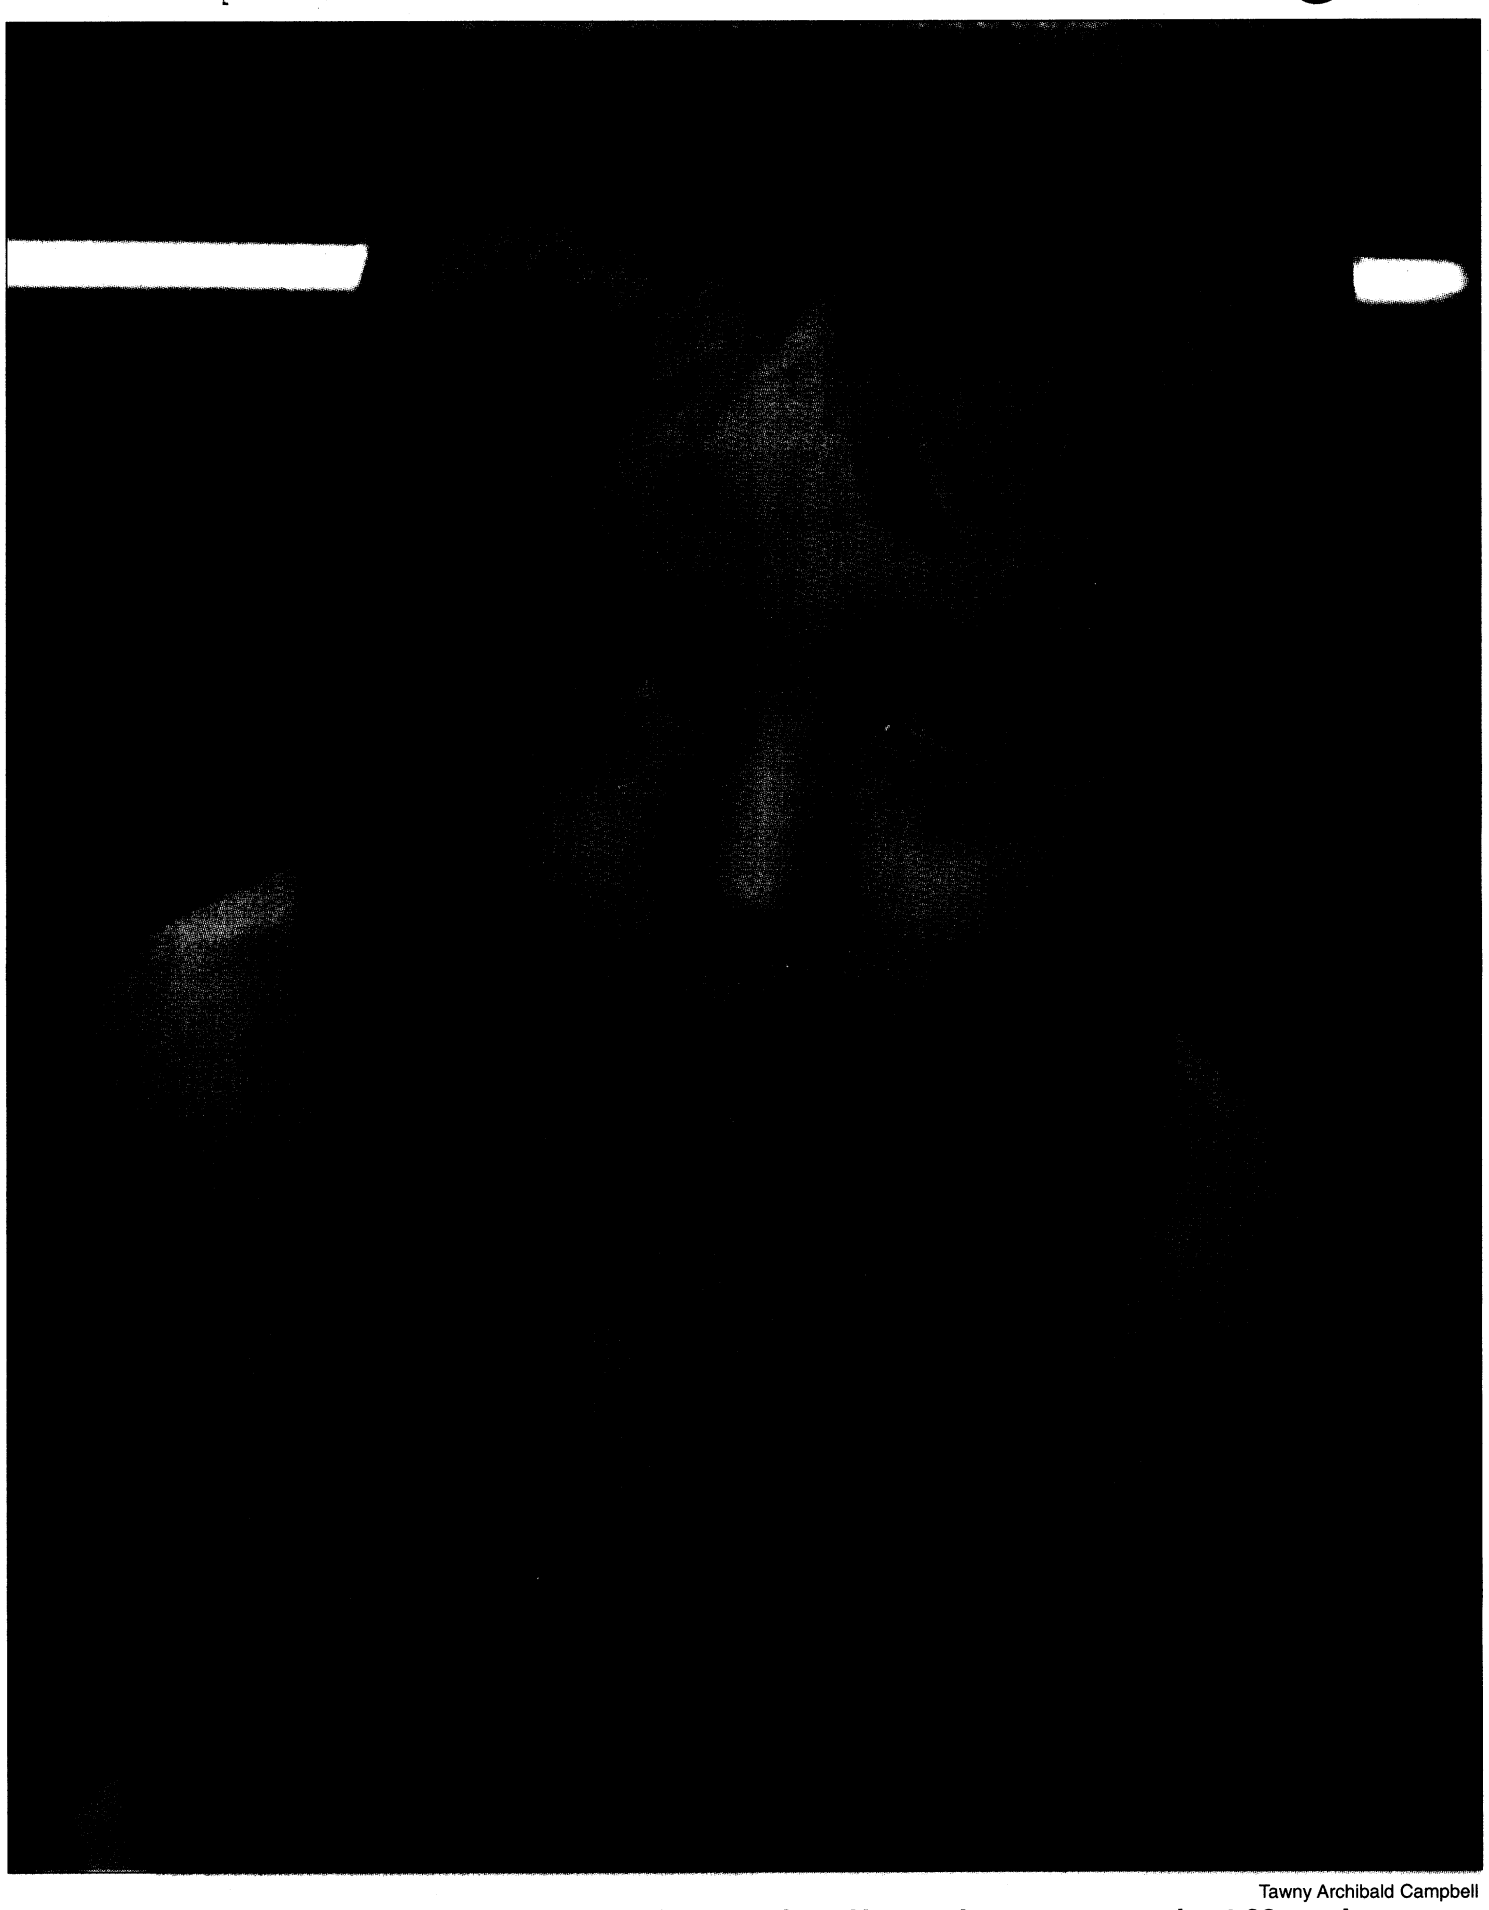
If it weren't for the scars visible above the arm-hole of his tiny black and gold singlet, it would be hard to believe this little wrestler was different than any other 4 year old.

But, Benny Fielding is different. He has already won one of the most important matches of his life and proven he's a fighter.

Born prematurely, at 32 weeks, he weighed 2 pounds and suffered from TA Fistula.

"Basically he didn't have an esophagus," said Ben Fielding, Benny's dad and coach. "His trachea was essentially connected to his lungs, so they disconnected it and, over a series of fifteen surgeries, built a new esophagus."



Benny spent the first three months of his life in the hospital and had a feeding tube attached to his stomach until he was two.

"The first two years of his life were rough, and the last two years, nobody has even known (what happened)," said Jolene Fielding, Benny's mom. "He has just blended in with the rest of the kids. We're trying to make everything as normal for him as possible. I don't want him to ever feel restricted."

Ben, an All-American college wrestler and state high school champ, thought wrestling would be the perfect sport for his son, one where he could gain confidence and where size didn't matter.

However, Ben had to convince his wife before he could sign Benny up for the team.

It's their first season wrestling, so coach John Wright didn't know what to expect.

When he decided to coach the "Black Knights" he wasn't expecting to have 24 wrestlers, including two girls, stick out the season.

"They have done great, I'm proud to say," Wright said. "When people see us competing in tournaments around the state, they are surprised to know we're a first year team."

In their last tournament, 11 of the Black Knights wrestled and five placed in their age brackets.

"Everything about this year has exceeded all my expectations," Wright said. "In the beginning, we thought we'd measure success if a few kids stuck through practice and competed. Now look."

The team is comprised of wrestlers ages 4 to 14, and only about six to seven of them have ever had any previous wrestling experience, Wright said.

Joey Denova, 12, is one of those who wrestled before joining the Black Knights.

"I've been wrestling since kindergarten," Denova said. "I've been wrestling pretty much my whole life, and I love

Stowers Stampede slows down with soft sign-ups

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

If you're scared, say you're scared. Saturday's Stowers Stampede features a new event, a 10K run that winds through Bouton Heights and Davis Hill — key words "heights" and "hills." It's a challenging race, said Adam Weinbaum, race coordinator.

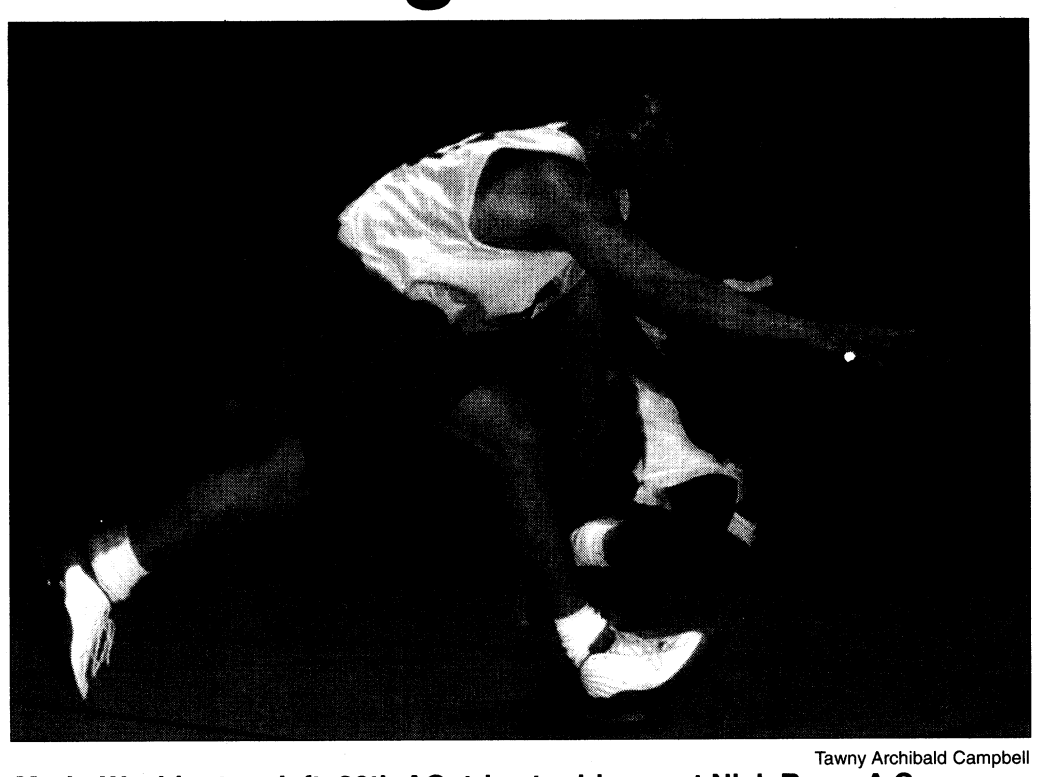
"It's a kick-butt course," he said. "Only the serious need apply."

The Stowers Stampede is a Fort Benning tradition, started more than 20 years ago by Susan Emerson, Faith Middle School PE teacher, who first dubbed it the Faith Race.

When Emerson retired, she passed the baton to Weinbaum, a former Faith teacher. When he moved to Stowers, he took the race with him, and he believes the name change and relocation may have thrown off a lot of potential participants.

Stowers, nestled between Bouton Heights and Davis Hill, is accessed by a private drive and surrounded gently sloping hills. It's off the beaten path, so racers aren't exactly beating a path to sign up for the Stowers Stampede. To date, about 50 people have registered, Weinbaum said.

The race has always featured a one-mile fun run for the younger crowd and a 5K wheelchair race and run. Weinbaum added the 10K to draw more competitive runners. Either they haven't "heard the word," or they've heard about the hills, he said. Maybe it's too tough.



"The guy who came in second in the 5K last year said it was the toughest 5K he'd ever done," Weinbaum said. "He said it felt more like a 10K."

The event starts at 7:30 with a $2 breakfast. The fun run starts at 9 a.m.

Registration is $5 for kids 14 and younger, $10 for 15 and older. Units may participate free.

For more information, call Weinbaum at 544-2567.

Benny: 'He's a miracle boy'

"She's been through so much and spent all that time in the hospital with him," Ben said. "He was in an incubator the first three weeks of his life, and she couldn't even touch him. For her to go through that and then see him on the mat, it's tough."

Jolene admits she wasn't excited about wrestling at first, but has since changed her mind.

"His first wrestling match, I cried the whole time," she said. "It was mostly pride, and I was nervous. He is just so little.

"I said that as long as it's fun for him, he can wrestle. And he does, he has fun. He wakes up every morning and asks 'Do I have wrestling today?'"

At 32 pounds, Benny is smaller than his opponents and has lost the matches he's wrestled in, but he won't give up, Ben said.

"Why do I have him wrestling? First of all, he's smaller than other kids and I want him to have confidence, and not be intimidated by other kids," Ben said. "In the military, when you move around a lot, athletics is a way to meet people, have friends and build strong values."

Wrestling is also safer, Ben said, because wrestling is a one-on-one competition where athletes are grouped according to size.

"It's a good sport to start out in," Ben said. "It gives you confidence in yourself that you can go out and beat the big kids. It also helps develop self-esteem at a young age. Wrestling is you against the other guy, against the world."

In spite of everything Benny has gone though, his parents don't want people to feel sorry for him.

"People can know about his past and know his history — that he's a miracle boy," Jolene said, "But I don't want people to ever treat him differently. He is definitely a blessed little boy and so resilient."

Jolene's biggest fear is that her son will feel like he is less than anyone else.

"I want him to always know he can do it, and never compare his tummy to anyone else and say, 'I have these (scars) so I can't do it,'" she said. "I'm just too proud of him. He loves wrestling. Whether he's winning or losing, he's having fun.

"He and my husband wrestle all the time and Ben's is kind of rough with him. I think that's why he laughs when he's out there on the mat.

"He fights back hard, and he's had to be a fighter. After all he's been through, he's our little fighter."

Pats clip Eagles, claim dynasty

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

It's a good year to be me — sportswise, that is. Last April, my husband was half of the winning team of the Best Ranger Competition. In October, my 30 years of faithfulness paid off when the Boston Red Sox won the World Series. And now, my New England Patriots have won their third Super Bowl in four years, beating the Philadelphia Eagles 24-21. Can you say dynasty?

Before the championship games were even set, the Eagles' Terrell Owens declared they would win the Super Bowl. Sorry Terrell, it just wasn't meant to be. He did start the game despite being injured just six weeks ago and contributed a lot to the Philly offense.

The biggest smack talker was Freddie Mitchell. He told the New England defense he had something for them, but could only name one defensive player. He also said Benjamin Franklin was the first president of the United States. Needless to say, the Pats' strong safety Rodney Harrison caught more receptions from Philly QB Donovan McNabb than Mitchell did. Sounds like Mitchell has some studying to do, both on and off the field this off season.

The game came down to experience. Pats' QB Tom Brady came into the big game 8-0 in postseason games. Brady is unflappable, and his expertise showed. With two minutes left and the Eagles' needing to score, McNabb was still having his guys huddle, when he should have been trying to get the ball within field goal range to at least try to tie the game.

Although the Pats' had a lot of penalties, the interceptions thrown by McNabb were the difference in the game.

So the big question being thrown around now is, are the Pats a dynasty? Sure. Only the Dallas Cowboys have won three Super Bowls in four years.

But can the Pats keep the ball rolling? Offensive coordinator Charlie Weis is headed to Notre Dame to coach the Fighting Irish. Defensive coordinator Romeo Crennel is off to be the head coach of the Cleveland Browns. No matter, the real genius behind the team is head coach Bill Belichick. Belichick sees the team as players, not as positions. This was no more evident than during the regular season, when kicker Adam Vinatieri faked a field goal and threw into the end zone for a touchdown.

Sorry Philly, better luck next year. You played a great game and now have the experience you need to go back and win. As long as it's not against the Patriots.

Black Knights: Game on

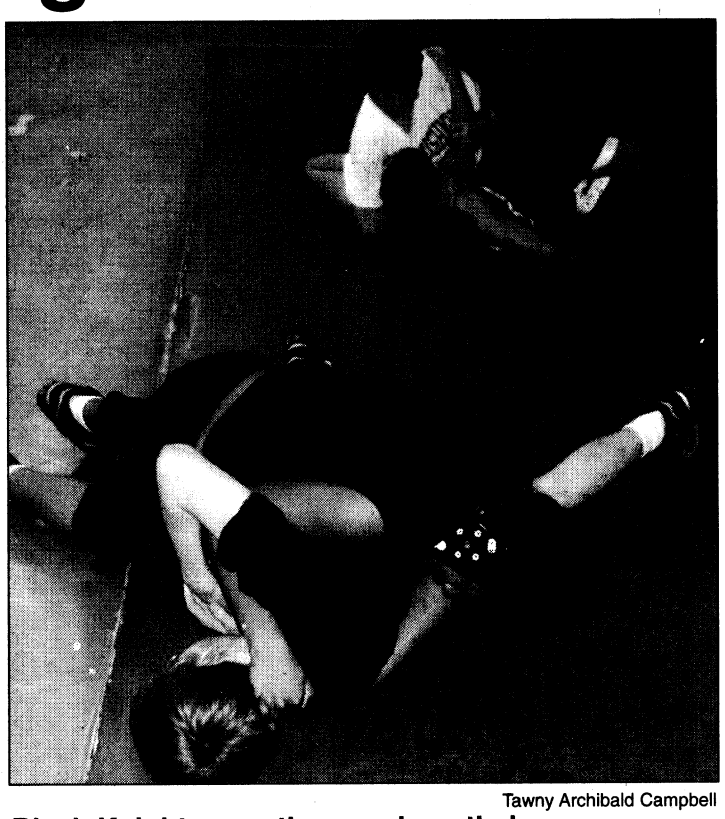
tournaments and competing. If I win, that's a good thing too."

Denova said his dad was the one who got him involved in wrestling, and now he's hooked.

"Wrestling is something you can't blame on anybody else," he said. "If you lose, it's your fault. It's just you and the other guy."



Haley Ryan, 7, is one of the two girls on the team. Her dad helps coach and her brother also wrestles for the team.

She started the sport because he brother wrestled and she wanted to spend more time with both him and her dad.

"I go to the gym with my dad and practice," Ryan said. "It's so much fun, and I can beat the boys."

Wright has six assistant coaches, mostly dads, who help throughout the season. Two other coaches deployed earlier this year.

The Black Knights season began in December and will last through the end of the month. The next tournament will be on Saturday followed by a state qualifier meet on Feb. 19. The state competition will be on Feb. 26.

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Black Knights wrestlers work on their moves.

"Hopefully, we will have some wrestlers compete at state," Wright said. "I would not be surprised if we placed four or five kids in the tournament."

Pistol: 1st match in decade

made on-the-spot corrections on the firing line to improve our shooting. Also, the more rounds you get to put down range is good training to improve your shooting."

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit conducted the Fort Benning Combat Pistol Championship Feb. 4 to 6 at Parks Range. This was the first postwide combat pistol championship conducted in more than a decade.

Competing for the title of Fort Benning Combat Pistol Champion were more than 40 Fort Benning Soldiers from the 71st MPs, 29th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, 11th Infantry Regiment, 36th Engineer Group, U.S. Army Dental Activity, CONUS Replacement Center, the 3rd Brigade of the 3rd Infantry Division as well as staff members (non-shooters) of the USAMU; non-Fort Benning Soldiers also competed in the Excellence in Competition Match.

The top finishers in the Pistol Excellence in Competition Match were awarded the Four-Point Bronze Excellence in Competition Pistol Badge, a permanent marksmanship award, which can be worn on the Class A uniform. Recipients were Maj. David Harrington of Fort Gillem, Ga., and USAMU gunsmiths Spc. Jared Adams and Sgt. Thomas Grieve.

Army Marksmanship Unit pistol shooters provided M-9 pistol training for all competitors and all Soldiers received Certificates of Training.

"I didn't do very well but it was a great experience. I was really impressed with the whole competition," said Lt. Col. Edward Stawowczyk of TSM-Close Combat Missile Systems. "The instructors were professional; they're not only good at their craft but they're also great teachers, too. You don't find that in a lot of people."

WE KEEP HUNDREDS OF KIDS AFTER SCHOOL.

They love our many extended-day programs. They go to an extraordinary new kind of public school. It's called a Community School for Excellence.

It's open up to 15 hours a day, 6 days a week, 52 weeks a year. Like many schools in this program, it has medical and dental services and a social worker on site. Its extended hours are filled with unique academic and recreational activities.

It's a school where teachers have more time to teach. And students are physically and emotionally better prepared to learn.

So, if you have trouble getting your kids to go to school, find out how you can make it a place they won't want to leave.

(There's no punch line.)

What do you get when you mix Christianity, Judaism and Islam? In many parts of the world, it's a recipe for disaster. Yet in America, it's a formula that has peacefully endured for over 200 years. In fact, not only has it endured, it's flourished.

The pundits may say that the ability for different faiths to coexist here comes from a lack of intensity and passion for any religion in America. But nothing could be further from the truth. Because we are free to choose which religion, if any, we'd like to follow, it enables us to have a deeper, more personal relationship with our faith than would otherwise be possible.

And because no one religion needs to feel threatened by another, we can look to the similarities that unite us, instead of focusing on the differences. Two hundred million Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus agree. To learn more about freedom of religion, visit rememberfreedom.org. Or, feel free to ask the spiritual leader of your choice.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

Army wants new helmet data

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

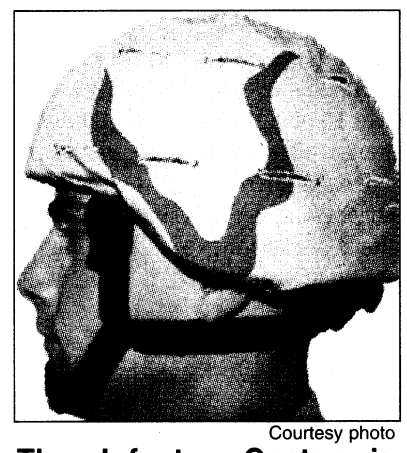
"In the last analysis, the U.S. Soldier will not wear the best helmet in the world if he does not want to wear it."

— Charles Houff and Joseph Delaney
Historical Documentation of the Infantry Helmet Research and Development, 1973

Late last year, the Army launched a study on the effectiveness of the new Advanced Combat Helmet. As the proponent for the helmet, the Infantry Center and School was tasked to lead the study and "conduct a holistic review of the requirements and materiel solutions for Soldier head protection."

The study comes in the wake concerns that the helmet offers less protection on the back and sides of a Soldier's head.

"These questions provided an opportunity," said Bill McLaughlin, operations research and systems analyst with the Directorate of Combat Development's Concepts, Analysis and Integration Division. "As leaders, we need information."



To gather information, the CAID developed a helmet and body armor survey, which can be accessed through the Infantry home page at www.infantry.army.mil/surveys/ppe/ ppe.htm.

The survey, said CAID chief Lt. Col. Dan Evans, is an opportunity for Soldiers with experience to provide feedback that can improve the helmet and protective equipment."

"The challenge," Evans said, "is if a guy walks away from an event and doesn't get seen by medical personnel, we don't get that info." He has heard stories from Fort Benning Soldiers who say their personal protective equipment — helmet and body armor — saved their lives.

"The key, though, is the helmet

White sees dream fulfilled as buildings moved to museum site

World War II Street well underway

Bridgett Siter

Fresh cement was poured for foundations at the site of the new Infantry Museum, and Jerry White's fingerprints are all over them. Figuratively.

Retired Maj. Gen. White, who commanded Fort Benning from 1991 to 1994, was involved from the get-go. Before the get-go, actually.

He started the National Infantry Association back in 1993, when a Department of the Army directive called for the destruction of World War II era buildings. The association raised money to move several buildings, including Gen. George Patton's sleeping quarters, from Sand Hill to Main Post, near the National Infantry Museum on Baltzell Avenue.

There they stayed until Sunday, when a convoy of trucks moved the buildings to the South Lumpkin Road site of the new museum, a stone's throw from the Custer Road intersection. It was a painstakingly slow process, and White was there every step of the way. Literally.

"I walked with them the entire way. They're my babies," he said. "I tried to get those buildings to talk to me all the way down. They have some stories to tell."

It took 12 years and nearly $230,000 to move the buildings, which will be featured on World War II Street, one of several attractions in Heritage Park,

Two killed in Iraq

Soldiers killed in separate incidents

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning community is mourning the loss of two Soldiers killed earlier this week in Iraq in separate incidents.

The families of both Kelley Hill Soldiers have been notified, but the Department of Defense had not issued an official news release at press time. Therefore, The Bayonet, a command information news source, cannot publish the Soldiers' names.

"In a situation like this, when the community already knows about this loss, and they're hearing about it on the news, it makes it difficult to refrain from printing what we know to be the truth about our Soldiers who died as heroes fighting the war on terrorism," said Rich McDowell, Fort Benning's Public Affairs officer.

"Our thoughts are with their families and friends and the Soldiers they fought alongside who must pick up and carry on the fight," he said.

A 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, Soldier was killed and another injured Monday when an IED exploded during a patrol near Baqubah. The injured Soldier is expected to recover.

The Wednesday death of a 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, Soldier is under investigation.

WHERE IN THE WORLD?

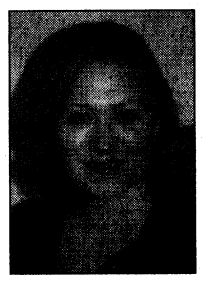
Don't know much about geography

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

We've all heard the stats. Most Americans are lost in the world of geography.

In a U.S. National Geography survey, 87 percent of Americans between 18 and 24 couldn't point out Iraq on a map and 83 percent couldn't find Afghanistan. Three out of 10 people couldn't find the Pacific Ocean, which covers nearly a third of the planet. And here's the kicker. A lost 11 percent could not find America on the map. I would suggest they look between Mexico and Canada, but somehow I don't think that would work.

How is it that so many of us are so geographically challenged? As a geography nut, this drives me crazy. I'm endlessly curious about the world, and wonder why others aren't. Out of sheer curiosity, I can spend hours gazing at maps, just so I can look at Mali and say, so THAT'S where Timbuktu is!



Granted, the world is a giant place. The names and borders of countries change often enough to keep most of us on our toes. But in every one of these nations, people are living, working, politicking and doing all the things people do.

The inherently curious can find enough to keep them occupied for a lifetime by investigating these cultures and their people.

And beyond political borders, looking at different types of maps can teach us much about the world.

On a topographical map, it's apparent how mountain ranges, gorges and bodies of water once kept populations isolated from one another, allowing distinct ethnic differences to evolve.

Maps showing the location of fertile land, swamps or river basins explain patterns of settlement and history.

For instance, people like to settle along bodies of water. Just look at Columbus and Phenix City.

During the antebellum era in the American South, runaway slaves escaped capture by going to less populated areas. Maroon communities with populations in the hundreds thrived in the inhospitable swampland of the Carolinas.

Runaway slaves in Brazil did the same, but went to the uninhabited rainforest rather than the swamps. If not for the flood plains and climate of Southeast Asia, Asians would have a difficult time growing rice. They would have to depend on another Asian crop for sustenance, perhaps bananas. Can you imagine eating sushi or Kung Pao chicken over bananas?

In Cambodia, rice production is possible because the rainy season and the directional flow of the Mekong River flooding a large lake, the Tonle Sap. After the water recedes, the land is enriched with minerals that provide perfect conditions for rice. If not for the flood basin, Cambodians would be out of luck.

More than that, there's a reason that Northern Europeans eat potatoes and equatorial people eat spicy peppers. Cuisines developed around the crops that flourished where societies grew.

A glance at a mineral map explains some of the vicious battles between the U.S. government and the Lakota in South Dakota. The Black Hills are chock-full of gold, and everybody wanted it.

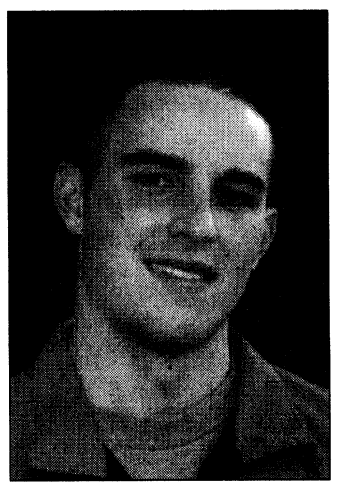
Mineral wealth is one reason for the instability and wars plaguing Africa, with its deposits of copper, gold, diamonds, oil and other minerals.

If you saw ITB Soldier Yusifu Kabia on A-1, you know he fled his home country Sierra Leone to escape violent rebels. The rebels bought their weapons with profits from the diamonds beneath the nation's soil. They killed hundreds of thousands and made millions.

Looking at maps showing the predominant religion in a population, a person can trace the spread of Islam out of Mecca and into North Africa. It traces eastward until it runs into Hinduism and Buddhism pushing back from the East. I think anyone would agree that religion certainly affects current world politics.

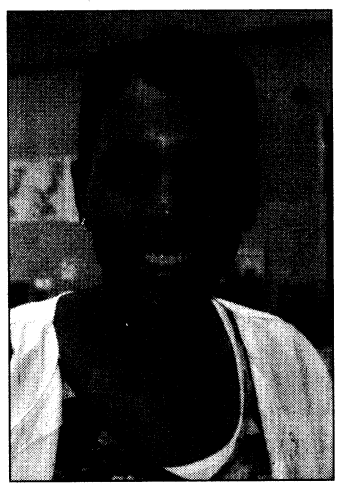
To understand history, culture, politics, religion, anthropology, sociology and the rest of the 'ologys,' a person needs to have an idea of the world. Knowing geography is essential to understanding why nations interact the way they do, and where our nation fits into the world community. But for some reason, it's not a priority to many Americans. In June 1999, George W. Bush commented to a Slovakian reporter, "The only thing I know about Slovakia is what I learned firsthand from your foreign minister." However, the future president had met with a Slovenian leader. Oops!

One of my co-workers recently confused Sierra Leone with South Africa. When I pointed out that she was a tad off on the location, she shrugged and said, "It's over there somewhere." She called it Sri Lanka for the rest of the conversation.

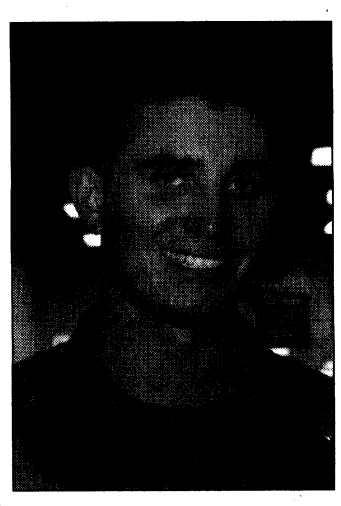


I guess if a governor can make a geographical gaffe and still be elected president my co-worker's confusion isn't too big a deal. But it makes me wonder if people in Sri Lanka and Sierra Leone get America mixed up with Armenia.

VARIOUS VOICES

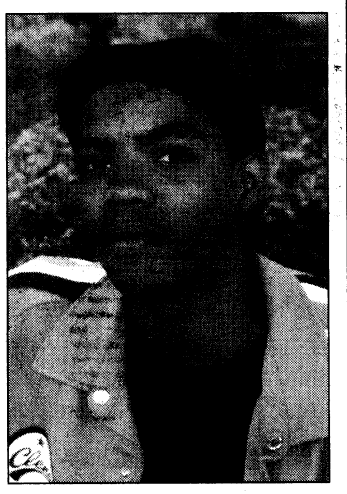


How well would you do on a geography test?

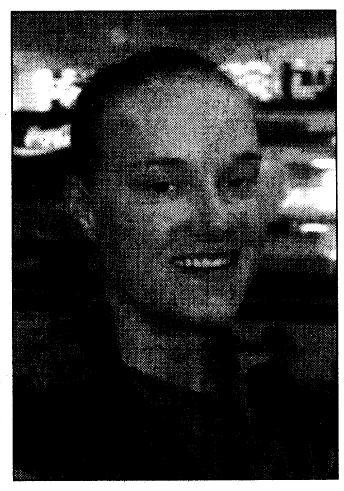


Katie Anderson, family member — "I wouldn't do as well as I should. I teach third grade, and I always point out the places we talk about on the map. Geography should be integrated into everything we teach, because it is important for every subject."

Pvt. Brad Graham, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment — "I would do really well. I've studied a lot about the habitats and cultures of other countries because I want to be a geologist. You have to understand climates and terrain. I still want to do it after I get out of the Army."



Juanita Tapper, family member — "I wouldn't do too bad. I like to look at the globe just to see where things are. My husband being in Iraq has made me more aware of the world. Internationally, I know the most about Africa and Asia."



2nd Lt. Andrew Jensen, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I would do all right. With current events, you can't help but learn geography if you watch the news. I know Southeast Asia the best because I visited a friend in Thailand and I've been to Japan."

Naoko Uchiumi, family member — "I'm from Japan and I've traveled a lot internationally, so I think I would do pretty well. I could beat my American husband in a geography quiz!"

Kendall Wilson, family member — "I might not do that well. I've never had a geography class in American schools, but we had a world regions class when I lived in Germany. My dad is in Iraq, so I know some of that region."

Spc. Jessica Martindale, 244th Engineer Battalion — "I wouldn't do very well. It's not that I'm not interested, but I just never studied it much. I will be seeing a lot of new geography when I deploy in a few weeks."

Army focuses on problem of Soldier loss

The U.S. Army Safety Center is now the U.S. Army Combat Readiness Center, a knowledge center that connects the dots on all information that pertains to the loss of a Soldier — our combat power.

Knowledge is power. This simple truism is echoed in our adoption of Composite Risk Management, because the more you know about the total hazards you face, the more effectively you can manage the risk. Real power comes from sharing knowledge from the top to the bottom of your formation.

CRM recognizes that a loss is a loss, no matter where it happens, and every loss degrades combat power. During FY04, our worst year for accidental fatalities in a decade, our Army lost a Soldier every 32 hours to an accident. We are outpacing last year in almost every category of accident. This clearly is a big challenge for our Army.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower said, "If you can't solve a problem, enlarge it." In our case, enlarging the problem translates to viewing losses in a larger context.

We are developing the capabilities to take a more holistic look at how and why we are losing Soldiers. To date, no single agency collects, analyzes, and reports such holistic data to allow commanders to apply CRM and reduce or prevent losses. In recognition of this void, the CSA and Secretary of the Army expanded our mission and redesignated us as the Combat Readiness Center Jan. 31.

When we look at all losses — accident, combat, medical, and criminal — the true impact on our readiness emerges. We are losing a Soldier every nine hours. Not only do we lose a precious life and comrade, but we also lose combat power and must recruit and train a replacement. This adds to the challenge of an Army at war. Our name change signifies our role in enhancing combat readiness and, to be frank, frees us from the negative connotation the word "safety" holds for young Soldiers, those at highest risk. We will retain all our core competencies in safety, but our emphasis on CRM and readiness will increase. This strategy will be effective, since all generations understand the importance of a fully functioning unit.

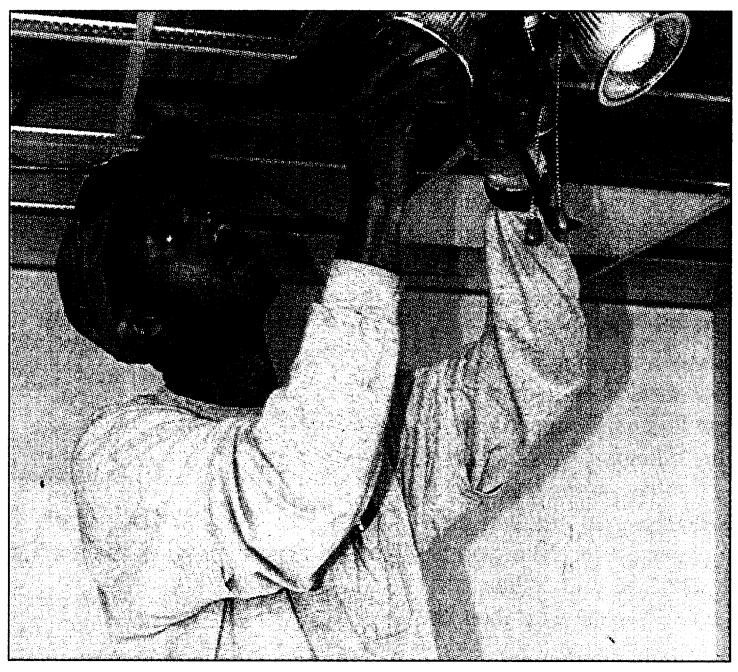
What does this mean to you? We are taking a more holistic look at loss and providing you with a greater awareness of its impact on readiness. We also are accelerating our reports on what we know after a loss occurs. We are your knowledge broker and data warehouse. Our goal is to be fast, holistic, digital, preventive, and predictive. Knowledge is power, but sharing this knowledge is what makes it actionable and powerful.

We will gather data on all losses, but our attention will primarily be on accidental and selected combat situations where the reason for the loss is unknown. The CRC will apply its own assets and leverage the capabilities of other relevant organizations to provide you with the trends, lessons learned, applications for TTPs and tools for your use.

Two items of note: We are not throwing the baby out with the bath water. Safety is still a strong component of what we do. We are collaborating with other organizations to connect the dots, not own them or do their jobs.

Shortly, we will go hot on a new program of quick-turn SITREPs. These Preliminary Loss Reports will contain brief reports on losses and near real-time synopsis of what we know, so you are aware of the issue quickly.

Whenever possible, we will alert you to trends as well. This service is in its infancy, and I look forward to your feedback as we refine it. We plan in the coming weeks and months to look at those things beyond fatalities that lead to lost workdays for our Soldiers and DA civilians.



We continue to evolve to meet the needs of our transforming Army. When asked what we can do to enhance readiness, we want to be there with the knowledge and tools to help.

Knowledge is power — combat power!

NCOA to move to historic building

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

Michael Bush, electrical supervisor, installs a ceiling fan in a bedroom on the third floor of Building 17.

The NCO Academy on Fort Benning is moving to a new and improved home.

Building 17, one of the quartels built more than 80 years ago by the Soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment, was renovated to become the new home of the Henry Caro NCOA.

A year ago, Fort Benning's single Soldiers lived in Building 17, but because of a desperate need for renovations, the Soldiers were moved into family housing areas while the building was renovated.

Now, the renovations are almost complete, and the building will be handed over to the NCOA instead of the single Soldiers who lived in it, said Craig Taylor, acting chief of the Directorate of Public Works.

Taylor said it was necessary to get approval from State Historic Preservation officials before renovating Building 17 because of the building's historic value. Since the renovations won't change the building's appearance, approval was granted faster than usual.

"It's not going to be a brand new building," Taylor said. "But the renovations are going to bring it up to standard."

The move is part of the Basic Officer Leaders Course initiative, which will begin in April at Fort Benning, Taylor said. The course will take over the NCOA buildings requiring the NCOA to move.

"The NCOA is moving to accommodate the new BOLC mission, but it's a move that works out for the best," Taylor said.

The different NCOA courses, including the Primary Leadership Development Course, BNCOC, ANCOC and Drill Sergeant School, were split into four buildings for training, said Sgt. Maj. Tony Winterfeld. He said the move will allow Soldiers to eat, sleep, live and train in the same area.

By April 1, phase one of the two-phase project will be complete, and PLDC students will move into Building 17.

More than 200 rooms were renovated, and 50 bedrooms were knocked down to make 20 classrooms, Taylor said.

PLDC students will live on the third floor and occupy 10 of the 20 classrooms on the first floor. The small group leaders will also have cadre offices on the same floor as their students.

Winterfeld and Taylor both said the last phase of the project will be completed in August. At that time, BNCOC students will move into the second floor of the building and begin training in Infantry Hall instead of Building 880. DSS students will use the classrooms in Building 17 that are not being used by PLDC.

New lighting will be installed in the field between Building 17 and 73, which will be designated as the NCOA's PT field. The dinning facility in Building 83 will be the official NCOA dining facility, Winterfeld said. An arms room, supply rooms and dayrooms will also be added to the building.

"We're trying to make the Fort Benning academy a world class NCOA," Taylor said. "The NCOs play a tremendous role in the history of the Army. Placing them in a building with as much history as the NCO is a good way of preserving the historical value of the building."

Buffalo Soldiers laid foundation for integration

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Today the Army is as diverse an organization as the American society it reflects, and Soldiers rise through the ranks based upon their ability and leadership.

However, it was not long ago only white men could be officers, and before that, only white men were officially sanctioned Soldiers. Despite that, people of color have served in every conflict America has faced, back to the Revolution. One particularly famous group of Soldiers who broke ground for generations to come were the so-called Buffalo Soldiers.

Following the Civil War and emancipation, free black people sought a new way of life away from the discrimination established in American society at the time. More than 180,000 black Soldiers had served during the Civil War, with 33,000 dying in service. In light of their accomplishments, Congress established two cavalry and four Infantry regiments of black troops in July 1866.

These Soldiers served mostly in the western frontier lands, and were nicknamed the Buffalo Soldiers by the Cheyenne and Comanche.

There are many explanations for why they were dubbed this, but one of the most common says Native Americans thought the troops resembled buffaloes, with their shaggy appearance after patrolling for months at a time and their cloaks made from buffalo hides. Also, buffaloes fight ferociously, just as the Buffalo Soldiers were known for their fighting prowess.

They may have been a force to reckon with in battle, but they struggled to meet their basic needs. When the cavalries were set up, most of the recruits were Civil War veterans who were paid $13 a month, plus room, board and clothing. If a Soldier got sick, his pay was docked $10 a month for not being able to perform his duties.

Despite challenges, the Buffalo Soldiers made a name for themselves. Twenty Soldiers in the 9th and 10th Cavalries were awarded the Medal of Honor when they pulled wounded troops out of an ambush by the Warm Springs Apaches in New Mexico.

They fought against Mexican revolutionaries, Geronimo, Sitting Bull, Billy the Kid and other old western legends. They also helped to explore and map vast areas of the west, from the Dakotas to New Mexico.

They worked to build infrastructure and establish order in the frontier. They strung telegraph lines, built towns, repaired outposts, escorted stage coaches and trains, fought cattle rustlers and protected crews building the railroads.

The Buffalo Soldiers had the fewest deserters of any units at the time.

In the 1890s they made up 20 percent of the frontier's cavalry forces.

The Buffalo Soldiers fought in disputes both within the country and in Cuba, and were finally disbanded in 1944.

In the mid-1940s the federal government ordered the military to examine the roles and abilities of black troops. In 1954, the same year that Brown v. Board of Education declared that "separate but equal" was anything but, the military proclaimed units would be integrated.

Infantry recruits minority officers

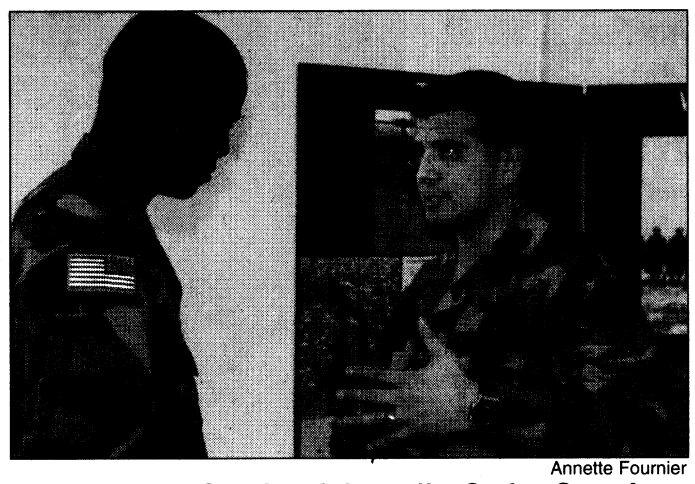
The Office of Infantry Proponency sent teams to seven historically black colleges and universities to recruit minority students for the Infantry.

The team of minority Soldiers are speaking with ROTC students about the opportunities available in the Infantry.

The recruiting teams were initiated by TRADOC three years ago when it became apparent minority recruitment into the combat arms was steadily decreasing.

"It's a problem we need to address," said Sgt. Maj. Joshua Simmons, chief enlisted manager of the Office of Infantry Proponency. "The lack of minority representation in combat arms is a problem. We had to start discussing the situation, and desensitize it so we could work on it. I think that's where we are now, in the fixing process."

The team spent Feb. 15 at Florida's A&M University in Tallahassee to talk to ROTC students. FAMU's ROTC program was selected because it has exceeded its commissioning goals for the last three years, and because the program is mostly minority, said Master Sgt. Dennis Dolan, senior military instructor for FAMU.



"I'm glad we have the officers here. The cadets get a chance to hear from successful black officers. It gives them a reality check, so they know they should do their best academically and physically."

Capt. Randy Garcia, Infantry branch representative, told cadets they would find great leadership opportunities in the Infantry.

"You're going to lead troops right off the bat, and we're going to invest in you as a leader," he said. "You will be trained by the most modern and well-equipped Army in the world."

The officers in the team vary with each trip, but FAMU's team had experience in many areas of Infantry, including Ranger School, Special Forces, airborne, Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade. The team consisted of Lt. Col. Matthew Coleman, deputy commander of 11th Regiment, Capt. Thedius Burden, BCTB, Capt. Chris Murray, WHINSEC, and OIP's Garcia and Simmons.

Aviation representatives from Fort Rucker, Ala., and armor from Fort Knox, Ky., also went to FAMU to talk about opportunities, with all three teams taking good-natured shots at the other branches.

Annette Fournier

Capt. Randy Garcia, right, tells Cadet Sgt. Jean Pierre about career opportunities in the Infantry.

"In one tank, you have forty thousand rounds of ammunition in seventy tons of hot, rolling steel," armor's Capt. Melvin Sanders said. "As a lieutenant commanding a tank, you will have more fire power than an entire company of Infantry Soldiers."

Col. Glen Norris, with the aviation branch, also ribbed the Infantry officers.

"I started out in Infantry, but I had to get that rucksack off of my back, so I decided to go to flight school," he said. "But no matter which branch you select, the cream of the crop go to the combat arms."

The only female presenter, Black Hawk pilot Capt. Maggie Smith, encouraged female cadets to look into aviation. Female attendance at the presentation was low, as the ROTC commanders only required male cadets to attend.

"I came because I want to be informed of all the avenues open to me," said Cadet Sgt. Terika Anderson. "I learned a lot from the presenters, and I feel fired up by their talks."

Simmons did his best to fire up the cadets by having a student stand up and shout the motto, "Lead me, follow me, or get the hell out of the way!"

Simmons said it's important for minority officers to lead the way for enlisted Soldiers.

"I had to wait a long time before I ever had a black commander," he said. "It's time to change that, and I'm looking to you to be the future of the Army."

Sand Hill Soldiers get laser 'trigger time'

System helps reinforce fundamentals

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers are getting hands-on training with a new, but old, piece of equipment.

The Laser Marksmanship Training System, which was developed in 1999, debuted last week at Sand Hill at 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, and was in use Tuesday at 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

"This is a really practical training tool," said Lt. Col. Michael Chyterbok, commander of 1st Bn., 329th Inf. Regt. Chyterbok arranged to have a team from the 100th Infantry Training Division travel to Fort Benning and conduct training.

The LMTS is a low-cost training tool that allows Soldiers to practice the fundamentals of marksmanship using their assigned weapon.

A battery-powered laser fits into the barrel of the weapon and electronic targets record shots fired.

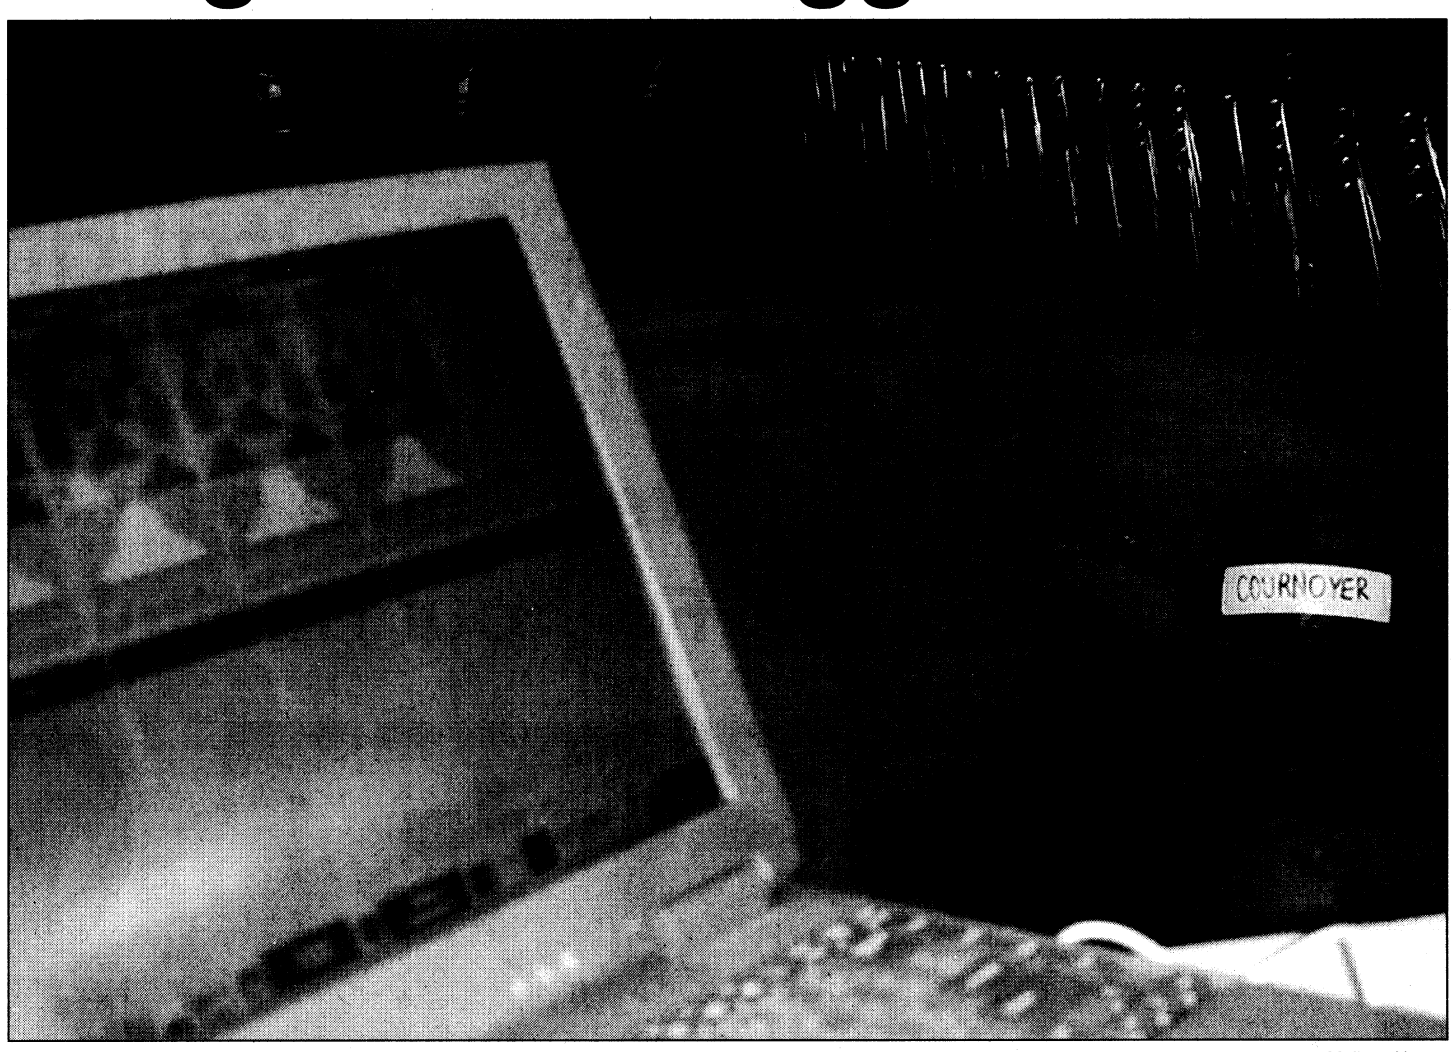
"The most important thing for any Soldier is to have his weapon zeroed to his eyesight," Chyterbok said. "And because the LMTS training is done in 'dry fire' mode, it lets the Soldiers concentrate on the fundamentals."

The fundamentals of marksmanship, from Army Field Manual 23-31, are steady position, aim, breath control and trigger squeeze.

At the first station, Soldiers reviewed the fundamentals they learned from the drill sergeants and participated in a reflexive target exercise. The second station gave the Soldiers hands-on practice in applying the fundamentals and getting a good sight picture and the first round of dry-fire practice at a 25 meter target.

Station three had the Soldiers grouping their shots and making the adjustments necessary to bring the shot group to the center of the target before moving to the final station — an electronic qualification course.

"This beats the dime and washer drill," said Sgt. 1st Class Pedro Soto, the LMTS master trainer. "This training is more beneficial. We get to work one-on-one with the private. He won't leave until he masters it."



While the LMTS is not designed to replace zeroing and qualification using live rounds, Chyterbok said it should help reduce the amount of ammunition the Soldiers have to use to get zeroed and qualified at the range. Soldiers may be able to zero using only 9 rounds instead of 27.

"Keep in mind it's a training aid," Soto said. "I don't necessarily expect the privates to get to the range and zero right away, but they're frightened on the range, and this helps build confidence before they get there."

Soto, a 22-year veteran who spent 12 years on active duty, also spent seven years as a drill sergeant.

"I'm a drill sergeant still," Soto said, "just not in a drill sergeant capacity. But we help the drills by teaching the range commands and identifying the guys who the drill sergeants will have to spend time with before they get to the range and start firing."

Soto said he and his team took a company through the LMTS training late last year and their statistics were impressive.

Melissa House

The LMTS tracks the shots of Pvt. Nick Cournoyer, D Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

"Ninety-four percent of the Soldiers received a first-time 'go' (when they qualified)," Soto said. "And they had 25 expert shooters. That's unheard of."

Since the LMTS is computerized, Soto can provide immediate feedback to commanders about the number of rounds a Soldier need to get his weapon zeroed and which Soldiers were unable to qualify with the laser targets. He can also get down on the ground and help a Soldier who is struggling.

"I do this because I like it," Soto said. "And I like to pass our knowledge down to these kids."

Capt. Andrew Kiser, commander of D Company, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., said this was the first time in five training cycles he's used the LMTS. He hoped the Soldiers would be closer to their real zero by the time they got to the range. And he hoped the training would help reduce the number of rounds his company uses to zero.

Normally, it takes 15 to 20 rounds per Soldier, times 220 Soldiers in the company, Kiser said. "We'll see this time how many it takes."

Kiser said his Soldiers would go to the EST after they completed the LMTS. The EST, he said would help "get the recoil jitters out.

"I'm sold on this though," Kiser said. "The EST is a good tool, but I think this is much better. The (drill sergeants) can operate this. We don't have to go anywhere."

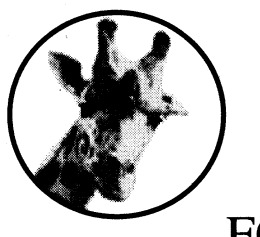
At $34,900 per set of 10, the LMTS is less expensive than the EST.

"Some will say it's not realistic, because it's a dry-fire mode," Chyterbok said, "but it does have a special receiver group you can add to the weapon and fire a round from it.

"And if you have a private who can't shoot diddly," said LMTS' 1st Sgt. Brad Clark, "you've not spent anything, except the battery."

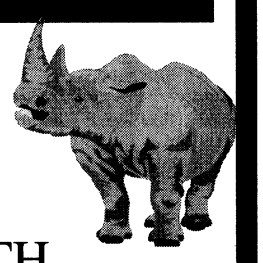
A battery for the LMTS laser runs $1 or less, Soto said, and he's had a few Soldiers who have run through a battery or two trying to zero and qualify on the electronic system.

"That's so outdated," Soto said. "Here they're getting their hands on something and getting trigger time."



LMTSs are currently found only in Reserve and National Guard units, information about the system is being added to Army Field Manual 23-9.

"It's a nice system," Chyterbok said. "We just need to get more people exposed to it."



"With the exposure we're getting at Benning, we'll be busy," Soto said.

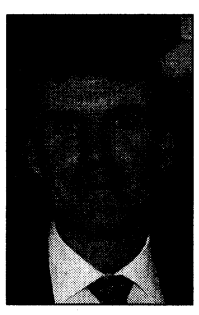
Retired CSM speaks to Benning Soldiers

Melissa House
Bayonet staff



Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Kevin Connell addressed a crowded Marshall Auditorium Tuesday as the guest lecturer for the Combat Leader Speaker Program run by the Combat Arms and Training Directorate.

Connell retired in 2001 after 24 years of Army service. Prior to his retirement, he served as the command sergeant major for the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"It's about time we have a speaker of the caliber we have today, to give us the essence of the fundamentals of leadership to lead men and women in to combat," said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commander. "He's packed a lot of adventure and excitement into his career."

Connell spent the majority of his career serving with special forces or Ranger training units and saw combat in Panama and El Salvador.

"He was most valuable when he was training young Soldiers," Freakley said. "And he was at his best when it was the toughest."

Connell

Connell, the most recently retired of the past CLSP speakers, told the audience he would try to "spill everything he knew" during his lecture.

"Things have changed," he said. "And you'll have to change, too."

He gave the audience the same advice he gave his NCOs — become experts in all things at their level.

"When young Soldiers come to ask questions, that's how you gain credibility and gain confidence," Connell said. "Take the time. Dig in books. Do extra work."

Connell gave the young leaders a list of areas they should focus on to be successful.

• Marksmanship

"I had the luxury and the time to work with world-class shooters," Connell said. "I tried to pick up as much as I could. Bottom line up front — marksmanship is about trigger control — firing without disrupting your sight picture."

Connell said top shooters spend a great deal of time doing dry fire, where they work the fundamentals of shooting without actually firing a round.

"Dry firing won't hide bad habits that would be covered by the recoil," he said. "And you need to incorporate tactical reloads with dry fire into your training."

NCOs should learn to be shooting coaches, he said, to analyze shots and teach new Soldiers where rounds hit targets at different distances.

Connell spent a weekend with the 3rd Infantry Division Soldiers before they left for Iraq and said they've been outfitted with the best equipment and optics.

"The optics just help acquire targets a little faster," he said. "But Soldiers still have to have the fundamentals, and they need to be able to shoot from both sides and around vehicles, barricades and corners."

Stress shooting, he said, is the best way to challenge Soldiers and build their confidence by getting their heart rates up and teaching them to control their breathing.

Leaders should also train special-purpose weapons and incorporate progressive training with gloves, goggles and body armor.

Connell warned the leaders that the saturation time for young shooters is between one and two hours.

"After two hours, they peak, then drop," he said.

• Physical Training

"Combat-focused PT is something that shouldn't drop off the calendar when you are deployed," Connell said. "Your diet changes, your environment changes. The best way to relieve that is a good PT program."

Flexibility, he said, is important. So is the need to work aerobic, interval, speed, grass drills and circuit training.

"None of this is new. It's been around for a while," he said.

"But you've got to have balance — find the happy medium between cardio and strength training. Physical training and physical fitness is a lifetime commitment," he said.

• Combat Medical Skills

"Guys want to know who can take care of them," Connell said. "You need to cross train medical skills for trauma situations and incorporate that into your training."

• Convoy Operations and Urban Training

"Wheeled vehicles will get away with you if you don't manage them," Connell said.

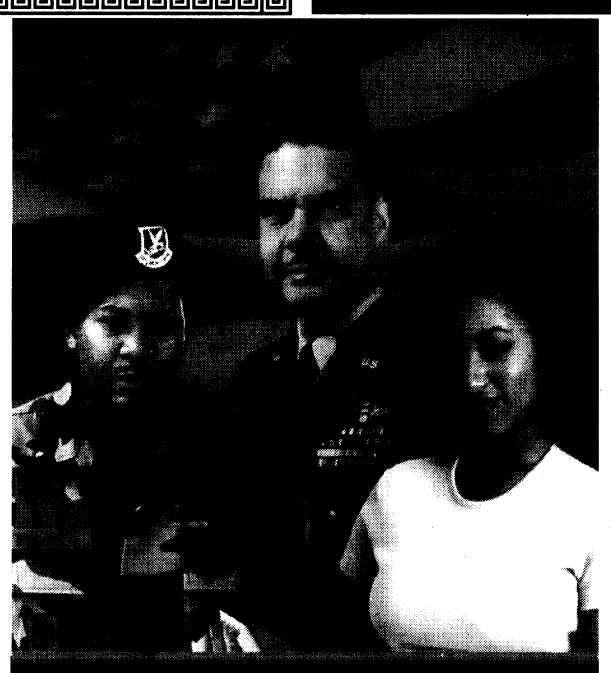
The way to combat that, he said, is to make sure drivers know and understand their vehicles and make sure convoy commanders are "on the ticket."

In urban operations training is key to make sure no one goes without mutual support, Connell said

He emphasized the need for young squad and team leaders to know how to call for fire.

"Adjust your (tactics, techniques and procedures)," he said. "You can't choreograph close quarters combat. You have to know how to fill the void when something goes wrong.

"Don't underestimate the enemy," Connell said.



"They're sharp and crude, but crude works, and that puts Soldiers under a lot of stress. That's where trust and integrity is everything. You have to operate together.

"The Army's in good shape," he said. "But this is not going away soon. You owe it to your young Soldiers to train them well and make our Army stronger."

Policy allows deployed Soldiers to re-enlist 'out of window' for tax-free bonuses while overseas

Sgt. David Foley
Army News Service

Like any major corporation, the Army is always looking for ways to retain its trained and qualified employees.

One of the ways the Army does this is by providing Soldiers with re-enlistment bonuses.

Until recently, only Soldiers of certain rank or military occupational specialty qualified for re-enlistment bonuses. Soldiers also had to wait for their re-enlistment window to open before they could re-enlist, thus making it difficult for them to get tax-free bonuses by signing up during a deployment. However, all that changed Jan. 18, when the Department of the Army sent out a military personnel message to Army career counselors around the globe. The Selective Re-enlistment Bonus-Deployed Program allows deployed Soldiers to re-enlist while abroad for a chance to receive a tax-free bonus of up to $15,000.

"Basically, you can re-enlist outside of your window while deployed to take advantage of the re-enlistment bonus in a deployment area where it will be tax free," said Sgt. 1st Class Jorge Garcia, career counselor, Task Force Dragon, Camp Victory, Iraq.

Garcia said the program is a great opportunity for Soldiers because many of them wouldn't qualify for a re-enlistment bonus if they re-enlisted without being deployed.

Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Wilkerson, 18th Airborne Corps, re-enlisted in front of the Al Faw Palace Feb. 7 and was awarded a $5,600 bonus.

Wilkerson said he didn't get the opportunity to re-enlist during his last deployment because his window wasn't open and he waited until this deployment just so he could re-enlist in Iraq.

However, he said he was glad to hear about the bonus and thinks it will encourage other Soldiers to re-enlist even though they are more likely to deploy again.

Maj. Raymond Bowyer, who swore in Wilkerson during his re-enlistment ceremony, said he fully supports the program.

"I think it will contribute to keeping good Soldiers who are 'sitting on the fence' and can't decide whether to stay in the Army," Bowyer said.

"It gives them benefits that will help to make the decision easier."

Soldiers have two options when re-enlisting under the new program.

They can sign up for the needs of the Army, which lets the Army choose their next duty station; or stabilization, which locks in their current duty station for two years after they redeploy.

Even though most Soldiers will qualify for a bonus if they re-enlist while deployed, Garcia said not everyone will get the full $15,000 and some may not even qualify for a bonus at all.

"It's all in the math," he said.

Under the new program, Soldiers will fall into two categories based on their pay grade and time in service. Soldiers in their initial term of enlistment who have served between 17 months and six years fall into the A zone, whereas Soldiers who have served between six and 10 years fall into the B zone.

Soldiers in the A zone will be awarded 1.5 times their monthly base pay multiplied by the number of years they re-enlist for beyond their current ETS date. Soldiers in the B zone will qualify for their base pay multiplied by the number of years they re-enlist for. All bonuses will be paid in one lump sum.

Garcia said Soldiers in some MOSs might qualify for more money based on their standard bonuses.

"For instance," he said, "an explosive ordnance disposal specialist normally qualifies for 3.5 times their base pay multiplied by the number of years and can go up to $30,000, so they would want to stick with that option."

For more information about Selective Re-enlistment Bonuses, Soldiers should speak to their career counselor.

Soldier: Escapes homeland after brother's death

child. I watched them shoot Ibiahim to death in front of me."

Pfc. Yusifu Kabia, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, a native of Sierra Leone, fled from the violence of civil war in 1994 at the age of 23.

Since the country's independence in 1961, a steady peace and legitimate government has been difficult to establish. Political unrest has resulted in six coups and repeated violence.

In the early 1990s, the West African nation was unstable, so when civil war broke out in neighboring Liberia, the chaos spilled over into Sierra Leone.

The Revolutionary United Front, aligned with the National Patriotic Front of Liberia, took over cities and committed atrocities on its citizens. As the death toll rose, the RUF forced young adults and children to be Soldiers.

"I saw the rebels go to people on the street and chop off their hands or legs and just leave them," Kabia said. "They would drug children so they didn't know what they were doing and force them to kill their own family. Now those kids are adults, and they have to live with the fact they killed their family even though they didn't know what they were doing."

About 200,000 people were killed during the nine year civil war according to BBC news. Half of the 4.5 million people in Sierra Leone lost their homes or fled the country. Citizens were murdered, raped, tortured and mutilated by the rebels.

Kabia left Sierra Leone two months after his brother was killed, leaving behind his mother, young sister, infant son and girlfriend. He hoped to bring his family to the United States when he went to live with his father in New Jersey.

In 1998, his girlfriend, 25-year-old Kadiatu, was killed by rebels. The continuing violence drove many of his friends to Senegal, Gambia, Guinea or Ivory Coast. Others were killed or disappeared. Kabia urgently needed to get his family out of the country.

For 10 years he'd worked at an aluminum plant, struggling to make ends meet and sending money home to Sierra Leone. It wasn't enough. Kabia joined the Army hoping a solid career would help him help his family.

"I am the main provider now, and I was sending money home, but it was not enough to bring them here. I hope that by joining the Army, I can support them better," he said.

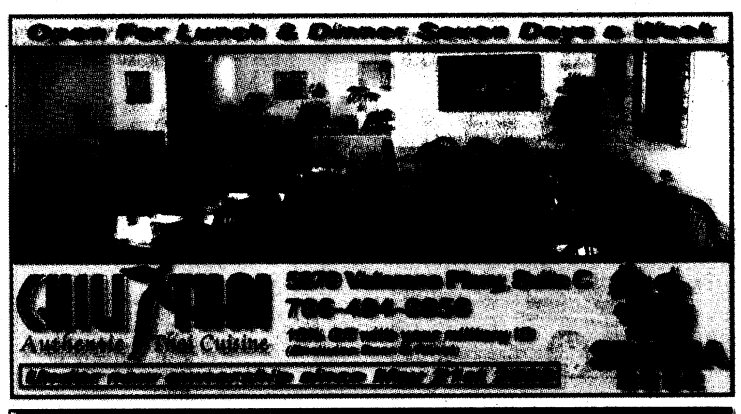
Kabia is in his 11th week of training. Company Commander Capt. Ben Fielding said he's doing well.

"He's a lot older than the other guys here, and he's had really tough life experiences," Fielding said. "He's showing leadership potential. The only problem he had was qualifying with his weapon."

Kabia's experience made it difficult to fire a weapon.

"Every time I would pick up a gun, I would see the face of my brother. It was hard to put those images out of my mind and concentrate. But my first sergeant and company commander helped me overcome it."

Sebastian Bolesch



Children were routinely recruited to fight for the Revolutionary United Front in the 1990s in Sierra Leone.

Now the 34 year old believes he's ready for the challenges of being a Soldier.

"Whenever I have a difficult time, I think of my family and how I want to help them. Remembering them, and imagining the day they will finally come here gives me the strength to keep going."

ACH: Feedback requested by Infantry Center

has to be fitted properly," Evans said, "and it has a lot of pad configuration options. It's lighter and it's so popular, Soldiers are willing to get whatever size is available, whether it's their size or not."

The fit factor, the team agreed, plays a large part in the study's findings.

"The fit, the wear, the placement of pads — all affect vulnerability," McLaughlin said. He's studying photos from the field, from which he can identify improperly fitted ACHs.

"The helmet is just one item of personal protective equipment," he said. "It has to be worn in conjunction with other pieces — the interceptor body armor with the collar on, the ballistic eye protection. It all functions together."

While the ACH has 8 percent less surface area than the Personnel Armor System Ground Troops, or Kevlar, helmet had, most of the material was removed from the front of the ACH, with a smaller amount removed from the sides. Nothing was removed from the back of the helmet, Evans said.

The team urged Soldiers and leaders to heed DA messages about damaged equipment. The equipment should be sent to the Natick Soldier Center with information about the event.

"We need to capture that to give to the combat and the materiel developer to help them come up with new things for the operational environment," McLaughlin said.

"We may find this design that's comfortable for the desert might not be for the jungle."

Soldiers who take the survey should be as specific as possible when making comments and suggestions about the ACH, Mc Laughlin said

"We need more than just 'It's too heavy or it's too hot'," he said. "We know if a Soldier doesn't feel comfortable in it, he won't wear it or wear it right."

CAID executive officer, Maj. Craig Besaw, said survey data will be used to compare helmets and identify needs. The team is working with other agencies and collecting data on ACH and its variations for aviators and armor crews.

The team knows there have been fatalities in Soldiers who were wearing the helmet, but know there are successes too. They want Soldiers to take the survey and let them know the good news about the helmets.

"It's a real good helmet," Besaw said. "We don't want Soldiers to lose confidence in the helmet." He said the study findings are due to the Army's Training and Doctrine Command by June, but the survey would be open after that so they could continue to collect data from the field.

An advisory message addressing the proper wear of the ACH is available at https://peosoldier.army.mil.

White: Said museum is for Soldiers the first phase of the new museum project. World War II Street will be a replication of just that — a typical street on an Infantry post during the Second World War. It will include barracks, a chapel, a mess hall, dayroom, supply room and Patton's quarters.

For White, World War II Street is the benchmark in the fulfillment of a dream that began to take shape in 1997.

"That's when we — the association — started to get serious about the museum," he said. "Before that, we'd raise funds to support or improve the old one. But we decided it was time to think bigger."

No wonder. The existing museum, originally the post hospital, can accommodate only 10 percent of its collection, valued at more than $30 million. The climate cannot be adequately controlled to preserve precious artifacts in the facility, which was built more than 80 years ago.

In 2000, the association spun off the National Infantry Museum Foundation for the sole purpose of raising funds to construct what White, the foundation's chairman, called a long-overdue tribute to the American Infantryman.

"This will be the first time in history that we've done something special for the Infantry Soldier," he said. It's the Infantry Soldier who took more than 80 percent of the combat casualties and earned more than 50 percent of the medals in the 230-year history of our nation, White said.

Of course, the millions of dollars the museum and park are expected to generate is a mighty attractive feature to Muscogee County taxpayers, and "that's a wonderful thing," White said. But the true value of the project cannot be measured in dollars.

"What we're doing, we're doing to honor Soldiers," he said. "That's what it's all about and nothing else."

The challenge now is to carefully restore and refurnish the World War II buildings. White expects them to be complete in a few months.

> "What we're doing, we're doing for Soldiers. That's what it's all about and nothing else."
> Retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White
> Chairman of the National Infantry Museum Foundation

Though the museum itself will be the centerpiece of the 200-acre complex, White's particularly excited about the parade field and Walk of Honor, which will feature bronze, life-size, historical vignettes depicting Infantrymen in combat. It will also include monuments and memorials, much like the existing Sacrifice Field, across from the Main Post museum.

The park's greatest attraction may well be it's parade field and stadium, where an estimated 40,000 families will gather each year for basic training graduations. That's what will bring them to the $70 million park, White said, but its message will keep them coming back.

"It'll be a wonderful day when you can sit in that stadium overlooking the parade field and look across at the Walk of Honor which will lie beyond it," he said. "It'll be wonderful to see the Infantry's past, present and future come together right there for all to see."

That wonderful day may well be sooner than many expected when the foundation broke ground on the museum in September. If work progresses on schedule, White said, the parade field may be used for graduations this time next year.

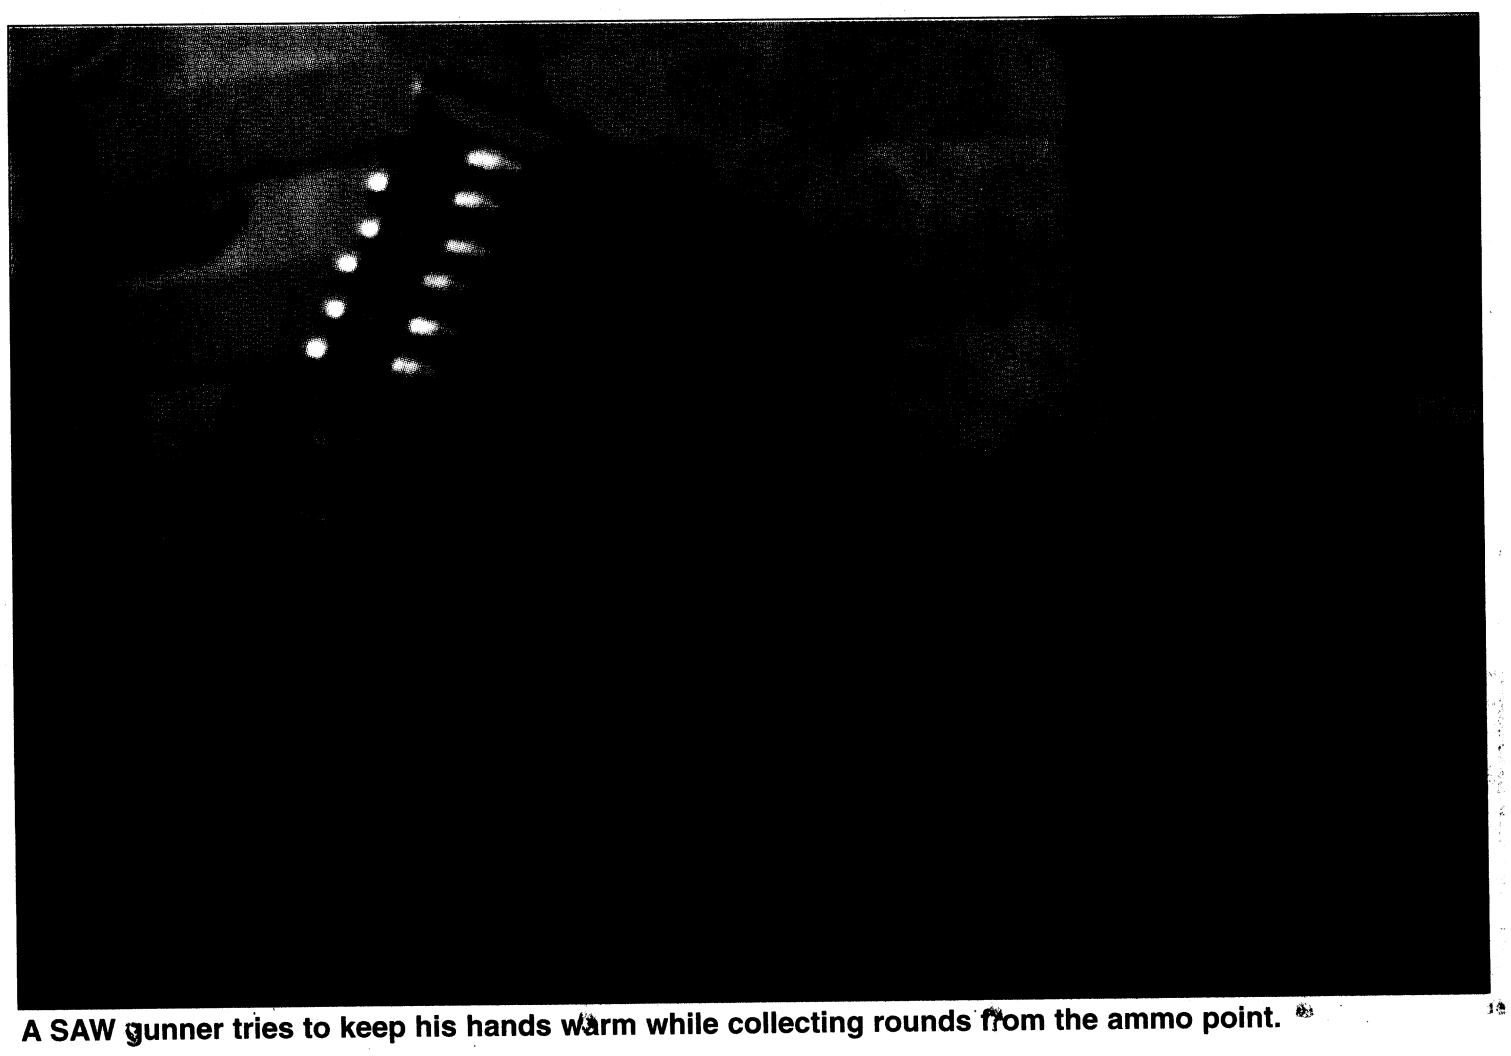
Basic trainees scramble to don their gas masks after the first surprise of their end-of-cycle FTX — sneaky drill sergeants armed with smoke grenades.

Basic training goes up in smoke

"Rock Steady" 2nd Platoon Soldiers braved cold weather during the first day of their end-of-cycle field training exercise. Set to graduate in two weeks with the rest of B Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, the troops' spirits were high as they huddled around a make-shift campfire, fueled in part by empty ammunition boxes.



The first training event of the day caught the platoon, which had posted no security, off guard. As they sat around the fire joking and laughing, drill sergeants appeared out of the woods. The Soldiers were hit with smoke grenades and mortar simulators as they scrambled to put on their gas masks and man weapons. The campfire huddle dispersed and the Soldiers manned foxholes the rest of the morning.

Ammo boxes go up in smoke to keep troops warm as they waited their turn on squad movement lanes during day one of an FTX Feb. 11. Drill sergeants soon ordered the fire extinguished.

Pvt. Joe Hudson applies camouflage paint, as he prepares for training during his last FTX.

21Js build path for Soldiers

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

As the owner of a construction company, Pfc. David Mayo knew everything he needed to know about construction.

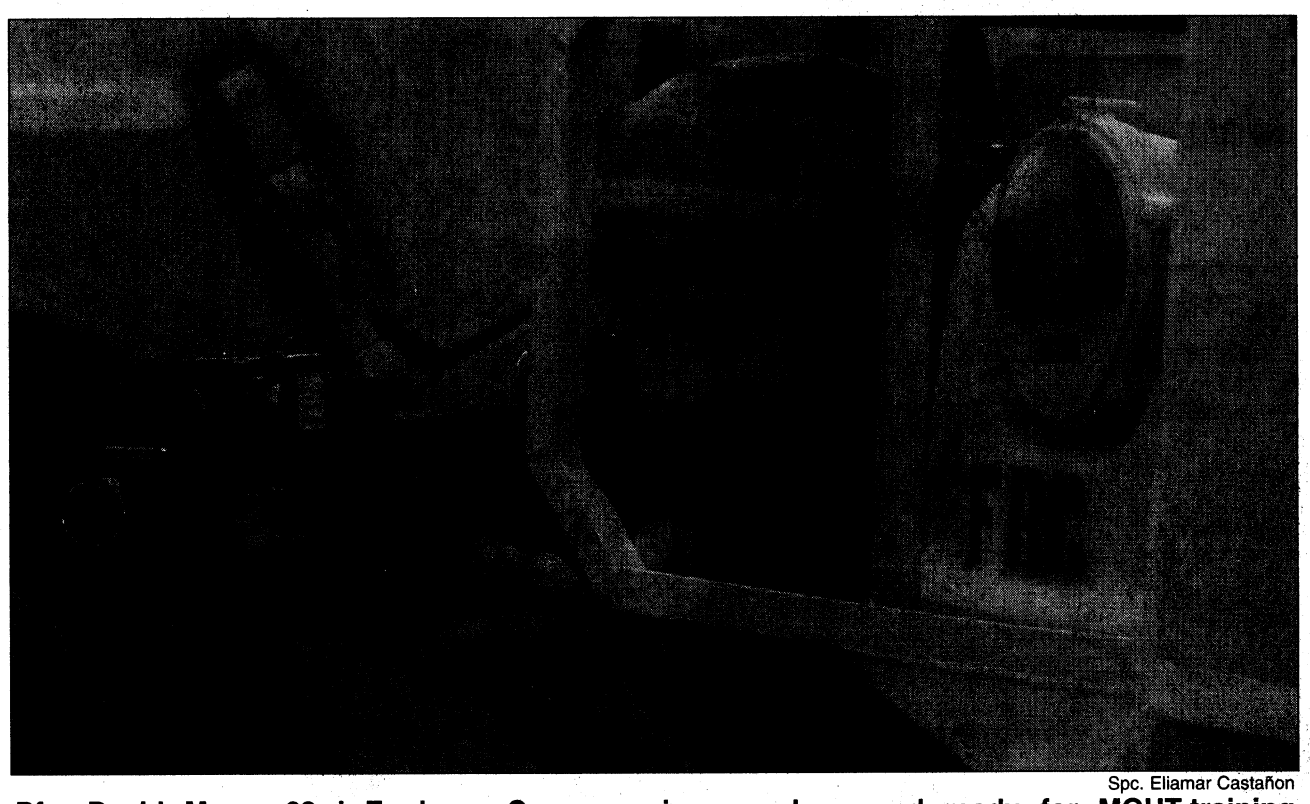
Once he tired of life as a civilian and decided he wanted to do something different, he joined the Army as a general construction equipment operator — 21J.

"I liked my job, I just didn't like the way the civilian sector worked," Mayo said.

Because of his construction experience, Mayo didn't have to attend the six weeks of advanced individual training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. Instead he reported for duty with the 63rd Engineer Company.

Sgt. Marion Benefield, a platoon NCO, did attend AIT where he learned the capabilities of his equipment, how to maintain and operate equipment and the basics of construction.

Some of the equipment 21Js operate include the compacting roller, the C-truck, which excavates, and the air compressor.



"It's a good job and it's not all that hard," Benefield said. "It doesn't take long to learn how to operate the equipment, and you get a lot of on-the-job training once you get to a unit. It's a job that you could really use in the civilian sector. The best part is going back to the site when the project is completed and seeing the result."

But for Benefield, the idea of using his job skills in the civilian sector is far from happening as the Soldiers are training for an October deployment.

When the Soldiers aren't working at a project site or equipment maintenance, they train for deployments.

Benefield deployed to Iraq for six months and said their mission included the construction of a main safe area and its fuel points.

"I'm not afraid of deploying," Mayo said. "I'm pumped up and ready to go."

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

Pfc. David Mayo, 63rd Engineer Company, is geared up and ready for MOUT training Wednesday morning. The Soldiers are training for an October deployment.

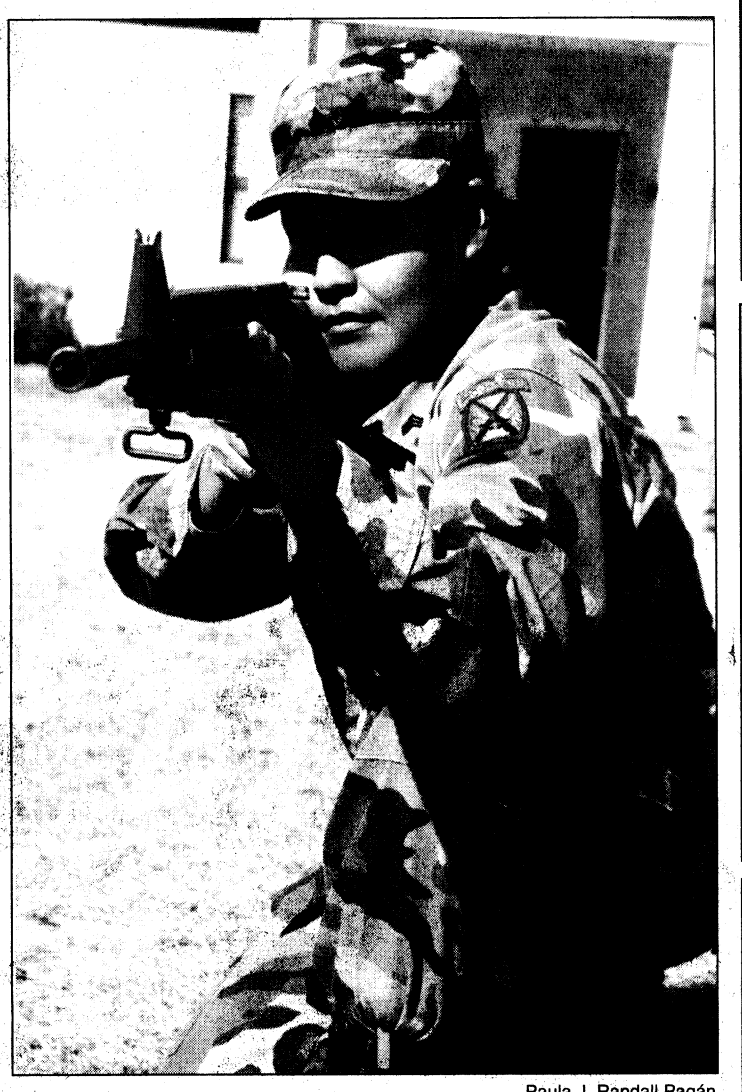
1st female Soldier graduates SDM instructor course

Course helps improve marksmanship

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Since the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit started its Squad Designated Marksman Instructor Course last year, USAMU Soldiers have helped more than a hundred of our Army's men improve their war-fighting marksmanship skills. However, Feb. 11, the first female Soldier graduated from the course.

Sgt. Rhoda D. Riley became the Army's first school-trained Squad Designated Marksman instructor. She is a light wheeled vehicle mechanic with the 4th Battalion, 25th Field Artillery Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y. The 26-year-old is from Laguna, N.M.



"When my unit told me I was selected to take this course, I had no idea what it was. They told me it was a marksmanship class, and I thought that was pretty cool," Riley said. With the exception of yearly qualifications, she said she didn't have many opportunities to go to the range, so the course was a good experience.

Riley, who has been in the Army for more than two years, said she joined to become the first female member of her family to serve in the military. Her grandfather served in the Navy in World War II, and her three uncles were in the Army, Navy and Marines.

Riley, the only woman in the class, said the best part of the class was using the Advanced Combat Optical Gunsight day telescope sights, called ACOGs, and the computerized marksmanship training systems. The toughest part was learning to read the wind.

"This class will also help me with my positioning," Riley said. "I used to have problems shaking a little bit, but the class helped with that."

Riley will go back to her unit and pass along her training to her fellow Soldiers. Her unit is preparing to deploy to either Afghanistan or Iraq.

Paula J. Randall Pagán

Sgt. Rhoda Riley became the first female graduate of the Squad Designated Marksman course Feb. 11.

"This training will help Soldiers in combat," she said. "It will make them better shooters and more confidant with their weapons."

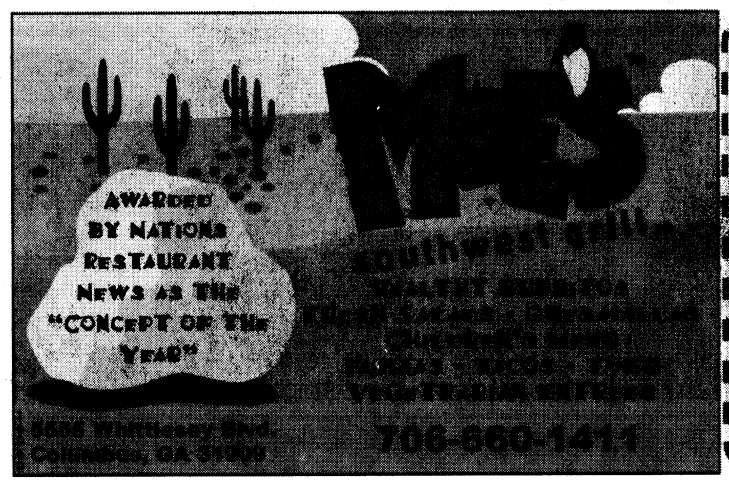
As part of the Squad Designated Marksman Instructor Course, Soldiers are instructed in areas of marksmanship, range estimation and target detection. The course is available to NCOs in team leader through platoon sergeant positions, with priority going to Soldiers in combat arms.

The course is leader training to develop Soldier long-range shooting skills, said Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag, USAMU commander.

"The course offers commanders an excellent tool to train Soldiers in combat and advanced marksmanship techniques," Liwanag said. "This is especially valuable now with troops deployed in combat and with the Army chief of staff's emphasis on individual Soldier combat skills."

Recently, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker said that "every Soldier is a rifleman."

When they complete the course, trainers will have the ability to identify and train Soldiers in their units to hit targets 500 meters out. Targets at 200 and 300 meters won't be much of a challenge, Liwanag said.



"Leaders get hands-on training, range practical application and training materials provided by the Army Marksmanship Unit," he said.

The award-winning shooters of the Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Team teach the course. These shooters specialize in firing small arms that are organic to units within the military, including the M-14, bolt-action rifles and all variations of the M-16 and M-4.

For more information on the Squad Designated Marksman Instructor Course, contact Michael J. Behnke, USAMU chief of competitions, at michael.behnke@usarec.army.mil, or phone 545-7841.

Handsome is as handsome does. Two of America's most popular presidents were also the homeliest. Washington's face bore smallpox scars, and false teeth distorted his mouth. It is believed, but never proven, that Lincoln suffered from Marfan Syndrome, which gave him a gaunt, "elongated" appearance. His hands were marred and calloused, believe it or not, from excessive hand shaking.

SERVICE FLAGS

Way to show support for military

Blue star represents hope, pride

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

During World War I, a father with sons serving off the shores of France started a tradition still in use 87 years later.

The service flag, or blue star banner, hangs in the windows of homes across Fort Benning and the country.

The red and white banner, bearing one or more blue or gold stars, has gone by many names, but "service flag" is the official name of the banner authorized by the Department of Defense to be displayed by immediate family of service members serving during a time of conflict.

Over the years, there have been many misconceptions surrounding the service flag, said Johnny Brooks, a contractor on Fort Benning, who wears a service flag lapel pin.

"I wear my lapel pin every time I go to a meeting," Brooks said. "People ask if it's a new Texas flag. Many people don't know (the flag) exists."

The history of the service flag is full of patriotism and symbolism. The flag was patented by Army Capt. Robert Queissner in 1917, and in 1918 President Woodrow Wilson approved a suggestion allowing mothers, who lost a child serving in the war, to wear a gold gilt star on the traditional black mourning arm band.

According to ServiceFlags.com, this led to the tradition of covering the blue star on the flag with a gold one if a service member dies.

The colors of the stars are symbolic. The blue star represents hope and pride, while the gold represents sacrifice for the cause of liberty and freedom.

The DoD Directive 1348.20, authorizing the service flag in 1967 and revised in 2002, states the flag "may be displayed in a window of the place of residence of persons who are members of the immediate family of a person serving in the Armed Forces of the United States during any period of war or hostilities … for the duration of such period of war or hostilities."

The directive also defines family members as a wife, husband, mother, father, stepmother, stepfather, parent through adoption, foster parents, children, stepchildren, children through adoption, brothers, sisters, half brothers and half sisters of a member of the U.S. armed forces.

The DoD does not authorize grandparents to fly the service flag, but an effort is being made to revise the directive.

The flag may also be displayed by an organization to honor members of that organization serving in the military.

Brooks has a son in Iraq and a son-in-law in Afghanistan, so he hangs a flag bearing two blue stars.

"Anyone who has a son, daughter, husband or wife serving in the armed forces can have a flag," Brooks said. "They don't have to be deployed, just in uniform in a

Gospel concert draws headliners

Military can get cheaper tickets with ID

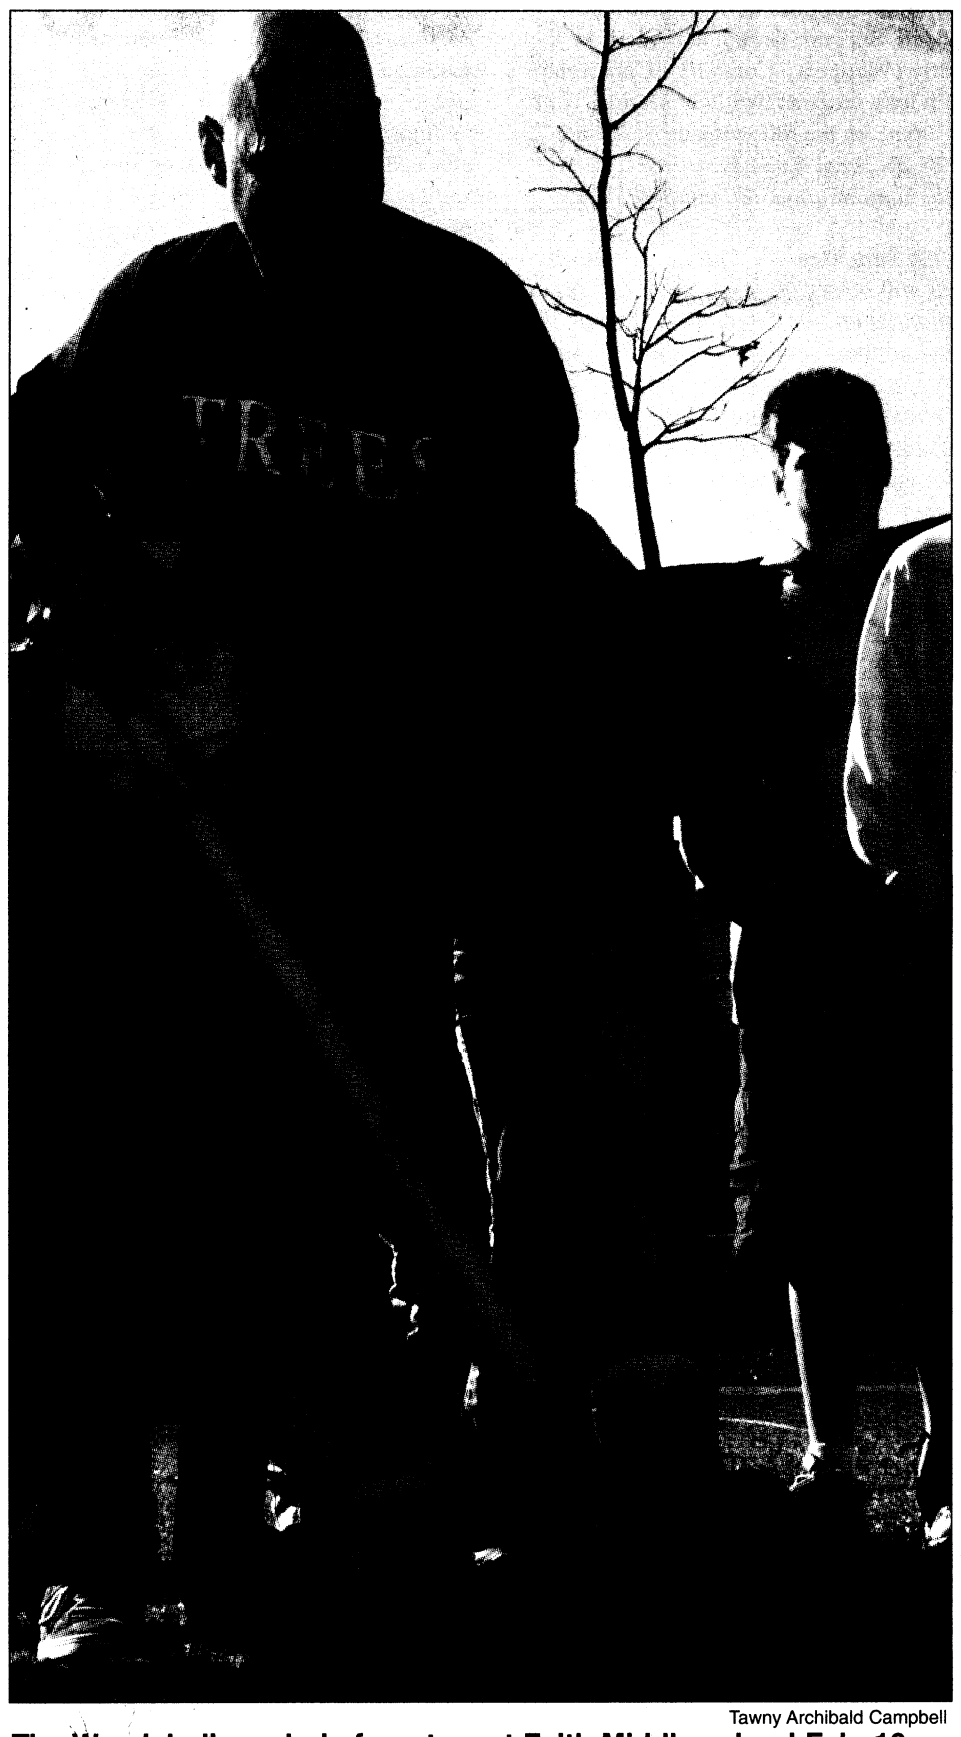
Gospel will take center stage at the "Sisters in the Spirit" concert at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Columbus Civic Center.

The star-studded tour will feature Yolanda Adams, a two-time Grammy winner and recipient of 13 Stellar Music gospel awards.

Musical director Sheila E. will accompany the vocalists. She has worked with greats like Prince, Diana Ross, Ringo Starr and Marvin Gaye.

Other performers will include Martha Munizzi and Kelly Price, both of whom have recorded bestselling albums, and the band RiZen, a 2004 Dove and Stellar Gospel nominee, with Adriann and Aundrea Lewis, Knika Trigg and Ashley Jones. RiZen's high-power vocal style has been compared to Patti LaBelle.



The Sisters tour celebrates the spiritual strength of women.

"As women take on a stronger role in leadership, business, social and family decisions, we go through a period where we don't have time to congratulate ourselves on our own accomplishments," said Juanita Bynum, author of several self-help and faith-centered books who will also perform in the tour.

"The purpose of the 'Sisters in the Spirit' tour is to give back a little bit, to think about just you for a day."

Military personnel will receive $7 off tickets with a valid ID. Without the discount, tickets are $35 for lower level and $31 for upper level seating.

Tim Womick digs a hole for a tree at Faith Middle school Feb. 10.

Can you see the trees for the forest?

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

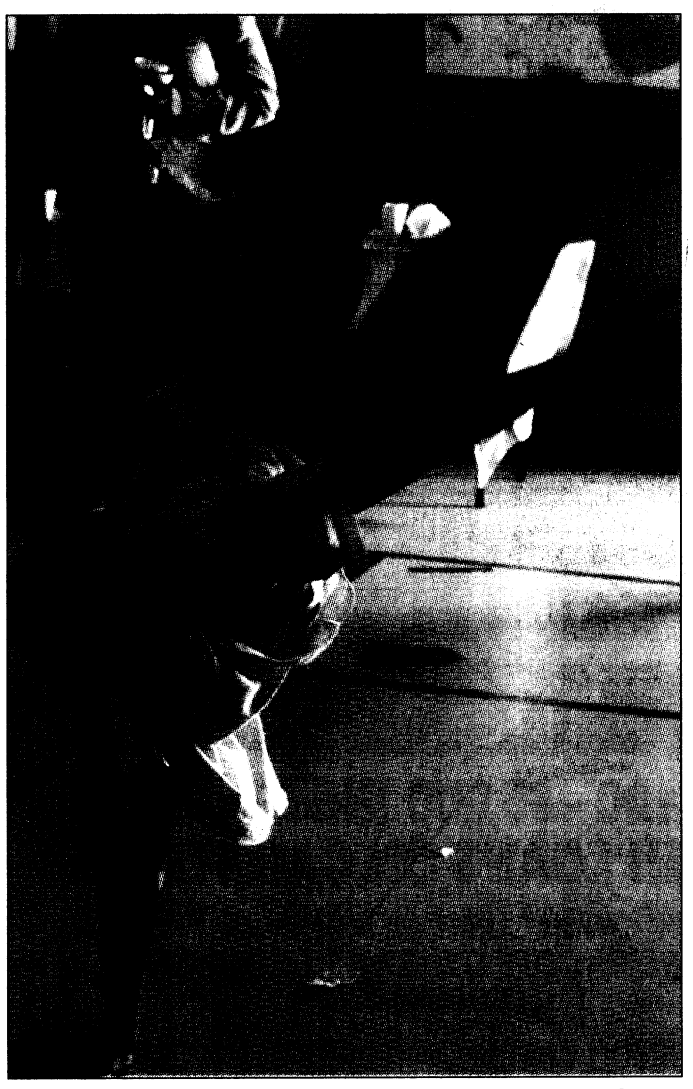
Trees make paper. Paper makes books. Books give knowledge. Knowledge has power.

Tim Womick, of Tree Family, an urban forestry consultation and education effort, used a mixture of humor, high energy and science to teach seventh-graders at Faith Middle School the importance of trees during an Arbor Day assembly Feb. 10.

"Is this dollar bill made with trees?" Womick asked. "Ha! You are wrong. Eighty percent of a dollar bill is made from cotton and twenty percent is flax. No tree died to make this greenback."

Womick, a modern-day Johnny Appleseed, said his goal is to help students recognize the role of trees in so much of what they do, see, eat and even wear every day — from clean air to ice cream.

Thinking about trees doesn't mean just the ones in the forest, Womick said.



"What about the tree that shades your air conditioning unit and helps cut down on your power bill?"

Womick wanted students to realize that trees do more than shade places and drop leaves in the yard. Products from trees can be found in toothpaste and a bottle of Sunny D.

"The program is fast-paced so they will pay attention and not get bored," Womick said. "For teachers, it helps

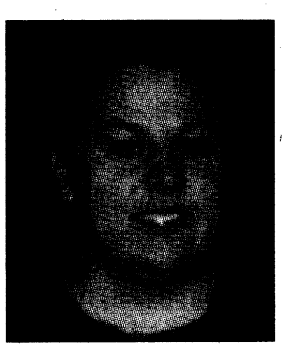
Jordan students give thousands to help babies



School has record for raising funds for March of Dimes

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Nikki Davis, the daughter of retired Maj. Burt and Anna Davis, works weeknights and weekends to save money for college.

Nonetheless, the Jordan High School senior was the first in line when a March of Dimes representative visited her school Feb. 11.

Davis and her classmate and co-worker, Shelby Bedgood, forked over their paychecks, more than $300, for the March of Dimes.

Nikki Davis

Students raised nearly $2,000 on the first day of the school's annual fund-raiser, which ends April 23.

That means the school ended its first day of fund-raising more than one-third of the way to it $5,600 goal.

"It just touches your heart — the babies. We watched a video that showed what these babies and their parents go through," Nikki said.

"That motivated everybody to give."

The March of Dimes was established in 1938 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to save America's youth from polio. When the Salk polio vaccine was declared safe and effective in 1955, the organization began to focus on preventing premature births, treating birth defects and reducing infant mortality.

Jordan High School joined the effort nearly 40 years ago and has raised more money than any other school in the state of Georgia for more than three decades, except for one year.

"I'll never forget that year," said Doris Dysick, who taught social studies at Jordan for 28 years.

Until her retirement in 1999, Dysick spearheaded the school's March of Dimes campaign.

She worked hard to inspire her students to give, and it's a lesson they learned well,

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Can I get out of a contract by going to see JAG?

A: Many clients come to Legal Assistance with contractual problems. If the other party has failed to deliver or perform as promised, then the client may have a legal remedy.

But what if it is simply a case of "buyer's regret," when the buyer reconsiders the deal and thinks it is unnecessary or too expensive. Can he or she "get out" of the contract on such grounds?

Contracts do not normally contain language that will give the buyer a way out of the agreement unless there was a "material breach."

A material breach occurs if one of the parties fails to meet a major obligation in the contract, like if a book club seller fails to deliver the Pick-of-the-Month but still sends a bill.

But agreeing to pay more for something than it is worth is probably not grounds to cancel a contract.

Usually a person only realizes they have bought into a "bad bargain" after the fact. The remorse comes when the buyer sees that he or she has paid too much for a set of encyclopedias or a health club membership or a time share arrangement. Buyer's regret is not a basis for voiding a contract, and the person on the bad end of the deal is stuck.

Therefore, the buyer who later changes his or her mind about a contract should not expect the seller to simply tear up the contract.

There have been times when companies have refinanced or let buyers out of a contract early due to some hardship, but this is the exception and not the rule.

Most people are strictly held to the terms of their contracts.

In short, getting out of a contract isn't always possible. So be sure you are willing to abide by the terms of any contract you sign.

Blue Star: Shows support for military time of crisis."

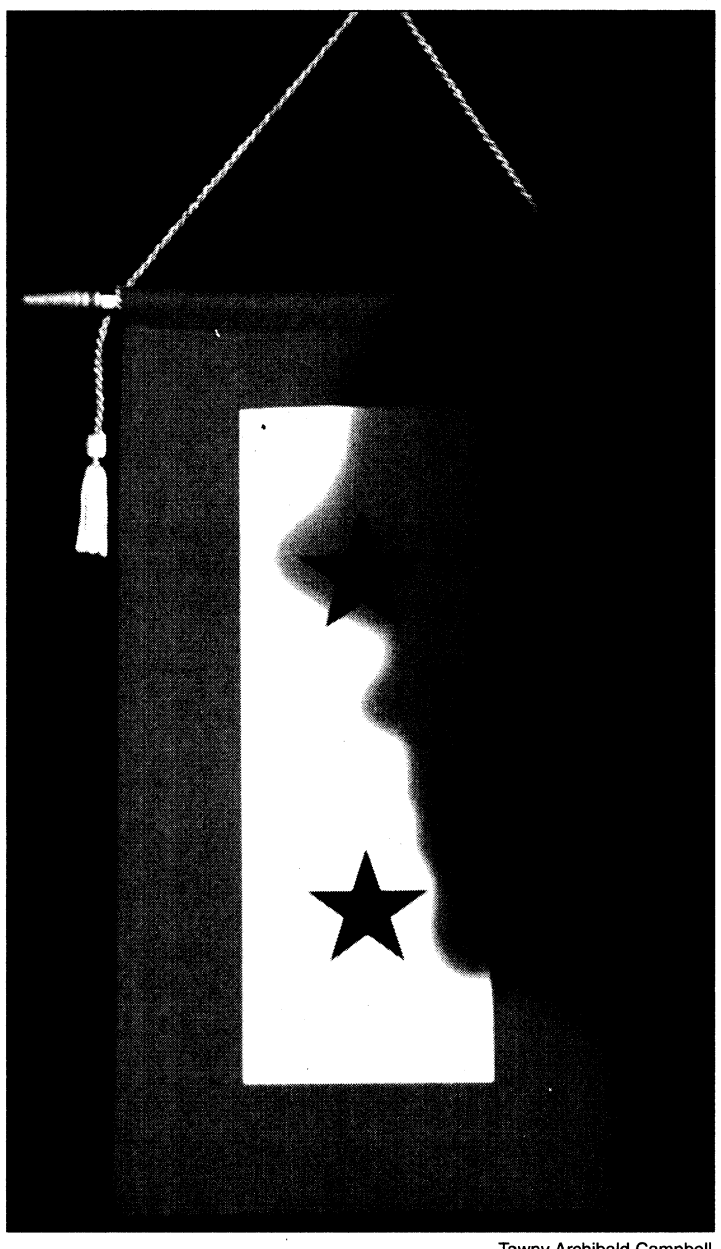
Isabel Perez remembers seeing the flag and thinking it was a general's flag.

"I saw it in a post exchange and it had one, two and three stars," Perez said. "I thought it was for a general, and it would be in his house or on his car. Then my husband explained it to me."

Perez's husband and son are both in the service, so she displays a dual-star flag in her window.

"I want people to know I have a son and husband serving," Perez said. "We are in the military, we are not ashamed of that, and we need to have more people serving their country."



Tatum Doherty, who grew up in a military family and married a Soldier, had always been taught the service flag was only to be flown when a Soldier was deployed. So, when her husband was sent to Iraq, she pulled out her flag.

"When we got married in 2001, (the flag) was one of those household purchases (one) makes right away," she said. "You never know when (your spouse) may get deployed."

Doherty flies the flag not only for her husband, but also in support of all the Soldiers and husbands serving in the military.

"Our husbands give their lives for this country and we need to show our support for them," she said.

Doherty sent a flag, lapel pin and car window sticker to her mother-in-law soon after her husband was deployed.

Tawny Archibald Campbell

The service flag is displayed by families when military personnel serve during a time of conflict.

"People will stop her in the parking lot and ask why the sticker is on the car," Doherty said. "She explains that her son is overseas and people tell her they will keep him in their prayers."

For more information on the history of the service flag, or to purchase a flag from an authorized dealer, visit www.ServiceFlags.com, www.usflag.org or www.bluestarmothers.org.

FYI

Display of Service Flags — in accordance with Department of Defense Directive 1348.20 and Department of Defense Instruction 13.28.33-M

- The service flag may be displayed in the window of a home of organization, facing out from a front window.
- The flag is designated to have a blue star, or stars, on a white rectangular field within a red boarder.
- The number of stars corresponds with the number of individuals serving in the military.
- The flag is to be displayed with one point of the star facing up.
- It is not to be embroidered on such articles as cushions, handkerchiefs or impressed on paper napkins, boxes or any item designated for temporary use and discarded.
- There is a $1,000 fine for people who manufacture the flag without obtaining a certificate of authority to manufacture.
- The gold star added to the flag should be smaller than the blue star to create a border surrounding the gold star.

Trees: Fibers used in shirts, really?

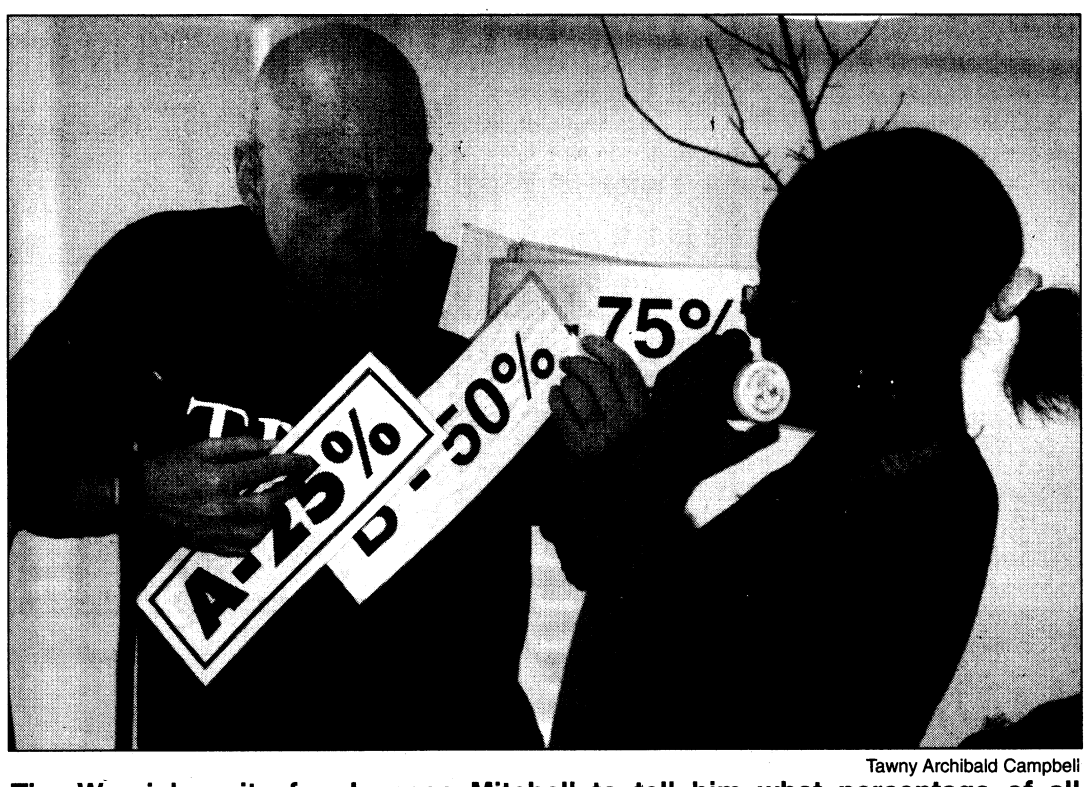
reinforce what they are trying to teach.

"Several kids came up to me today and thanked me. They said usually programs are so boring with someone standing up and lecturing. This is interactive," he said.

Michael Bowers, a seventh-grader, thought the program was funny, and he liked how Womick pulled students out of the audience to joke around with them.

"I learned that trees have many reasons for being on earth, and we have many reasons to keep them around," Bowers said. "I learned a lot about money, and how trees aren't associated with dollar bills. I didn't know my shirt contained some tree (fibers) in it."



Bowers described Womick as "wacky, loony and crazy." He said the presentation helped him gain a better perspective on trees.

"He teaches without getting out a book," Bowers said. "It is another point of view."

Womick said too often Arbor Day seems to be a big secret, and he hopes to change that through his educational efforts.

"Ninety-five percent of the people reading this can't tell the difference between a maple and oak, let alone what trees are in their yards and what maintenance they need," he said.

"In Georgia, Arbor Day is the third Friday in February, so take the time to learn a little about your trees and what they offer you."

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Tim Womick waits for Janessa Mitchell to tell him what percentage of all medicine comes from trees and plants. Womick spoke to the Faith Middle School students during an Arbor Day assembly Feb. 10.

Fun Tree Facts from www.ArborDay.com

- The tallest tree is "Harry Cole," a 371-foot giant redwood.
- The tallest tree species in Georgia is the tulip tree.
- The Georgia state tree is the live oak.

Charity: Begins at Jordan High because in 1988, some of her former students were teaching at Spencer High School.

"They beat us," said Dysick, who no longer divulges her fund-raising methods.

"Let's just say these kids come from the lower and middle class. They're exposed, it seems, to real life more than a lot of kids their ages," she said.

"They know what it means to be in need, and they want to help."

Jordan students have raised as much as $12,000 in a year — that during the late 1970s when the nation was in a recession. In the past five years, they've raised more than $44,000.

The annual fund-raiser is a tradition the students cherish, said Dysick, who now coordinates school fund raising efforts citywide.

This year, as Jordan students assembled to kick-off the March of Dimes campaign, their motives were more personal than usual.

In a hospital bed across town, the wife of the school's assistant principal was in premature labor.

"That puts a face to the problem," Nikki said. "It's sad, but it's motivating."

Law Day Association sponsors essay, art contest

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Law Day Association is sponsoring an art contest for kids from kindergarten through fifth grade and essay contest for students from sixth to eighth grade to celebrate National Law Day on May 1.

This year's theme is "We the people in action," and focuses on the role of a jury in a trial.

"We hope the essay and art contests will get kids interested in the legal system," said Laura Grant, vice president of the Fort Benning branch of the Law Day Association.

"It's important for people to have an awareness and understanding of the judicial process."

The Law Day Association is also planning to have mock trials at post schools for kids to see the law in action.

The winners will have their work displayed in Infantry Hall and receive savings bonds.

The first place winners from third to eighth grade will receive a $100 savings bond, and second and third places will receive $50 savings bonds.

The winners in the kindergarten to second grade contest will win a pizza party for their class.

The winners will be chosen by a selection committee of Law Day Association members.

- Students should submit artwork on a poster board.
- Essays should be no longer than 1,000 words.
- The students should not write his or her name on the piece. A separate cover sheet should include the child's name, grade level, school and the teacher's name. The essay is to be submitted by a teacher.

Entries must be submitted no later than April 15 to Gail Wilson in the Fort Benning Schools central office, Building 2670 on Custer Road, Room 2.

For more information, call Laura Grant at 545-3285.

The Ten Commandments of Consumer Credit

1. Thou shalt not worship money, or its material benefits. (Remembering that love of money is the root of all evil.)

2. Thou shalt plan ahead in all thy earning and spending and borrowing (and repaying).

3. Thou shalt not permit monthly installments on consumer credit to be more than 20 percent of thy monthly take-home pay (that is, after compulsory deductions, but exclusive of payroll deduction for debt service and savings).

4. Thy total consumer indebtedness shall not be more than six months' normal income.

5. Thy shalt honor thy obligations to thy creditors.

6. Thou shalt not borrow for a period longer than the life expectancy of the goods or the next repetition of the service or due date (Remembering that taxes, vacations and insurance premiums come around at least once a year).

7. Thou shalt not regularly finance month-to-month charges and credit card billings; if thou dost so once, thou shalt repay in 12 months or less.

8. Thou shalt put aside regularly until though has accumulated at least three months' income in thy savings account.

9. Thou shalt be willing to postpone purchases, mistaking not thy "wants" for thy "needs."

10. Thou shalt not covet; neither shalt thou extend thyself to "keeping up with the Joneses" (being cautioned that thou might keep up with them right into bankruptcy court).

Check blood pressure frequently

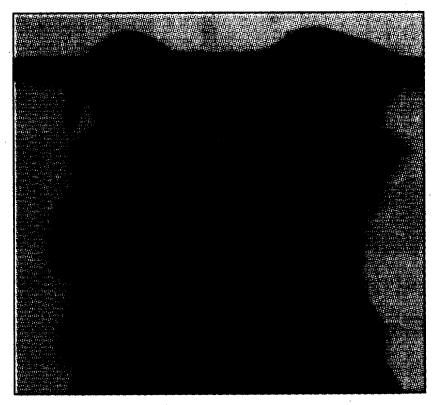
Dr. John Thornton
MCG Heart Center

You think you're healthy — you're at a good weight, you work out, you try to eat right. But have you checked your blood pressure lately?

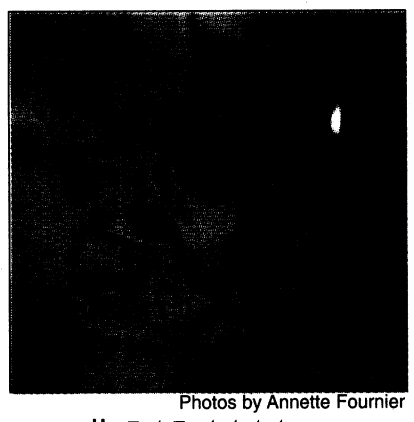
High blood pressure is known as the silent killer, because people often aren't aware their blood pressure is elevated. Left untreated, high blood pressure can lead to heart attack, heart failure, stroke and kidney disease.

Start taking steps now to prevent the onset of this risk factor for heart disease.

Step 1: Have your blood pressure evaluated annually. Stop by local health fairs, pharmacies or your doctor's office to check your blood pressure. Old recommendations suggested a blood pressure below 140 over 90 mm Hg was normal. But new research indicates those with blood pressures between 120-139 mm Hg systolic or 80-89 mm Hg diastolic are in a prehypertension range and more likely to develop high blood pressure. Your blood pressure should be below 120 over 80 mm Hg.



Step 2: Learn the risk factors. You're more likely to have high blood pressure if your parents had it, if you're African American or if you're male. Blood pressure also tends to increase with age, and those with diabetes, gout and kidney disease or pregnant women are more likely to have high blood pressure.



Step 3: Take control. If you're overweight, lose weight to reduce the strain on your heart. Get regular physical activity, and limit alcohol to no more than one or two drinks per day. Stop smoking, aim for a healthy low-sodium diet and try to reduce the stress in your life. Check with your physician to find out if any medications or oral contraceptives you're taking could raise your blood pressure.

Step 4: Visit your physician. If you have high blood pressure (140 over 90 mm Hg or higher), you need to be evaluated by a physician to determine a course of treatment. Options include lifestyle changes and or medication.

By recognizing and taking control of the risk factors, you can help prevent high blood pressure. Educate yourself today to prevent heart disease tomorrow.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school:

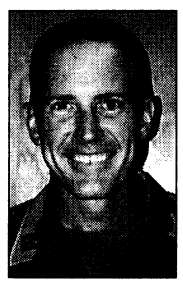
- Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.
- Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.
- Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

Fight burnout

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Ever experience burnout? It's easy to fall prey, especially in the high op-tempo of an Army at war. Listen to this counselor's story and see if you can relate.

In some ways it was a typical breakfast meeting. The waitress was pleasant, the eggs were average, and the restaurant was full of busy people. We shared a cup of black, coffee-like substance, and the first few times my client took a sip, he managed to spill quite a bit of it. His trembling hand was just one of the symptoms of his burnout. That's why we were meeting. He wanted to know if I could help him.



I picked up a fork and explained that as long as I used it for eating, the fork would last indefinitely. However, if I began to use it to drive nails or dig trenches, it would soon break. The key was to use it for what it was designed to do.

The look in his eyes told me he "got it," but I still went on to say that people are like the fork. When they do what they are not designed to do, they eventually break.

Sure enough, I had him take his Personality Profile Assessment, and it showed that he was designed to work on projects where there was a definite goal.

He derived immense satisfaction from reaching goals. He also needed to work by himself about half the time.

However, what his job required on a day-to-day basis was another story. His primary task was to supervise a dozen people and maintain operations.

Hawkins

No goals. No projects. No time alone. Consequently, his job was sucking the life out of him. Much credit for his recovery goes to his leadership team who was willing to change his day-to-day duties to better fit the design of a valuable team member.

So how do you know if you or a loved one is suffering from burnout? Here are some early warning signs:

- chronic fatigue
- anger at those making demands
- self-criticism for putting up with the demands
- cynicism, negativity and irritability
- a sense of being besieged
- exploding easily at seemingly inconsequential things
- frequent headaches and gastrointestinal disturbances
- weight loss or gain
- sleeplessness and depression
- shortness of breath
- suspiciousness
- feelings of helplessness
- increased degree of risk taking.

Fight burnout and find out what you were designed to do. We can help you at the Family Life Center with life coaching designed around a great personality profile tool we use called The Flag Solution.

Call 545-1760, or introduce yourself to me at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel located on Kelley Hill. I look forward to meeting you and serving you.

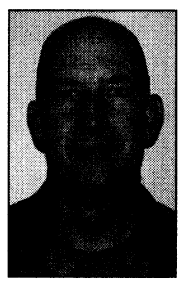
God's love goes beyond our emotions

Chaplain (Maj.) Harry Rauch
3rd Brigade Combat Team

REFLECTIONS

Webster's Dictionary defines love as "a feeling of strong personal attachment induced by sympathetic understanding or by ties of kinship and affection." But this definition won't hold when we compare it to the love of God.



God's love is not induced by something in man. Indeed, while we were yet sinners Christ died for us.

He died for us not because of what we are, but because of what he is. Love is defined by actions; we understand what love is by what love does.

God's love goes beyond emotion and demands the use of the mind and will. Emotional love cannot be commanded, but God's love is commanded from those who know and follow Jesus Christ.

When the Apostle Paul said love is patient, he was talking about patience with people rather than patience with circumstances.

We often become impatient with patience. We think of patience as belonging to the elderly and infirm, who are too feeble to be impatient. Without patience, no virtue at all is genuine.

Rauch

If love disappears when people frustrate us or disappoint us, then it is not really love at all. It is in fact a kind of selfishness.

If I insist that other people must please me and conform to my way of doing things, then I'll break off my friendship. This is not love, it is self-centeredness.

But Christian love operates in a real world. In this world, people will lie to you, they will annoy you, and they will disappoint you. Love is patient, it is not blind.

The Christian knows that everyone suffers from a curvature of the soul. Love recognizes this, and realizes that forbearance is required if love is to be a reality. We are all sinners, we all make mistakes, and we all fail to be the kind of people God wants us to be.

Love is kind. In actuality, patience and kindness go hand in hand. Like a good marriage, they fulfill each other. Patience by itself can be merely passive indifference.

Enduring wrong could happen out of weakness. But to be kind to the person who has done the wrong is a triumph of love. To be kind demonstrates that you are actively seeking another's highest good.

Love puts up with a lot and continues to be kind. We need to be patient and kind to those whom God loves. No man can love with Christian love unless he becomes a Christian.

He may admire this love, he may sense that it holds the solution for society's difficulties, he may speak well of it, but he cannot practice it unless Jesus Christ, who is love himself, lives inside him.

Not every Christian manifests this kind of love. We must be rightly related to God, because love is the product of a relationship with God.

Jesus told his followers, "By this shall all men know you are my disciples if you have love for one another."

"Forgive me Lord, if sometimes I forget,
You know about all the reasons that are hid,
You understand the things that gall and fret,
You know me better than my mother did."

SPORTS

Celebrate Presidents' Day, play ball!
Our 34th president, Dwight D. Eisenhower, lived with his family at 206 Austin Loop, while stationed at Fort Benning as a major from 1926 to 1927. During that time he coached the Fort Benning Doughboy football team to an all-Army championship.

Bench notes

Erin Nash

• The puck stops here

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman canceled the hockey season Wednesday because of salary disputes. It's the first time since 1919 that the Stanley Cup has not been awarded. Since my other teams are world champions the Bruins got the cup on my TV.

• Phil swings to victory

Phil Mickelson won the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am at -19. This is his second victory in two weeks. Can he get the green jacket again this year?

• Jarrett claims pole

Dale Jarrett won the pole position for Sunday's Daytona 500.

Jimmie Johnson, who won the Budweiser Shootout last weekend, will be in the front with Jarrett.

Watch the race at 2 p.m. Sunday on FOX.

• AFC continues dominance

The AFC won the Pro Bowl with Peyton Manning leading the way. Manning threw three touchdown passes in the 38-27 win and also nabbed the MVP honors.

• Mailman's last delivery

Karl Malone, a 19-year veteran of the NBA, retired with the Utah Jazz, the team he started with when he was picked 13th in the draft in 1985.

Medics power back second half

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

A tough defense on both ends of the floor, followed by good luck, helped A Company, 14th Combat Support Hospital beat the Conus Replacement Center, 34-25, Tuesday in intramural basketball.

If the score at the half was any indicator, CRC up 13-12, both teams played a tight game with strong rebounds and a lot of missed shots.

"We started off slow and had a lot of turnovers and missed opportunities," said Woodrow Jarrett, of A Company.

"The second half we planted our defense and played a two-three (zone). We got a couple of fast breaks and got into the game making the easy shots."

A Company took control immediately after the half when Anthony Clark hit a foul shot followed up by a hook shot by Terry Campbell.

CRC responded with a shot of their own, only to be outdone by Christopher Harris, leading scorer for the night, who hit a shot outside the arc, putting the Medics back up, 18-15.

A few quick breaks and some well placed passes helped infuse CRC.

Cheryl Harmon hit a short jumper under the net, to tie up the game and a wide-open Emmanuel Smith duplicated the move.

A shot from Dennis Grimes just inside the three-point line finished off the unanswered run, bringing CRC up, 24-20.

CRC pulled within one point with six minutes left in the game, but the Medics were not willing to accept defeat.

Campbell, Harris, Clark and Christopher Burch all found open shots and the ball was dropping like flies as the clock continued to run down.

"They got up by one at the half, but we came out with some good aggressive defense and the mindset to stop them," Jarrett said.

"We made the easy shots on the breaks and that made the game."

Lisa Carr, coach of CRC, described the game as a "fast-paced struggle to the last minute."

She said defense was the key to the game, but admitted her team got a little discouraged by some of the calls and mentally couldn't get back into the game.

"We were up by four until the last few minutes of the game and the other team came back and ran up six (points)," Carr said.

"It was a very low-scoring game. Defense was tight on both sides and after the half things just kind of exploded." Harris led the scoring with 14 points, followed by Clark and Marcus Bell, all of the Medics, with 8 points. Johnny Raymond, CRC, also scored 8.

The race route was in no way crowded, but the fast, challenging course drew some of Fort Benning's top runners. The Feb. 12 Stowers Stampede one mile, 5K and 10K, had about 200 registered runners,

"Our numbers are low, but we skipped a year, people forgot and the location is out of the way," said Adam Weinbaum, race organizer.

Justin Carrillo, 10, won the largest race of the morning, the one-mile fun run, with a time of 7:53.

"Running up the hills was the hardest part," said Trevor Crookston, 8. "I ran for exercise and to get faster. I'm in the walking and jogging club (at Stowers) and that's my training."

All-Army athlete Shannon Swords won the 5K and came in second on the 10K, only steps behind Joe Campbell who finished with a time of 35:24.

"This was the fastest 10K I've ever run," Campbell said. "It was monumental for me, because Shannon Swords was there. He was injured and stayed back a little and helped coach me through the physical and psychological points of the race."

Next year, Weinbaum said, the Stampede may include a half-marathon course that could incorporate the Fort Benning fitness trail, located between Bouton Heights and the golf course.

"It would be a good mix of dirt and pavement," he said. "This year, we were kind of disappointed not as many people came out. I'm not sure if it was because so many are deployed."

Who said girls don't like sports

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

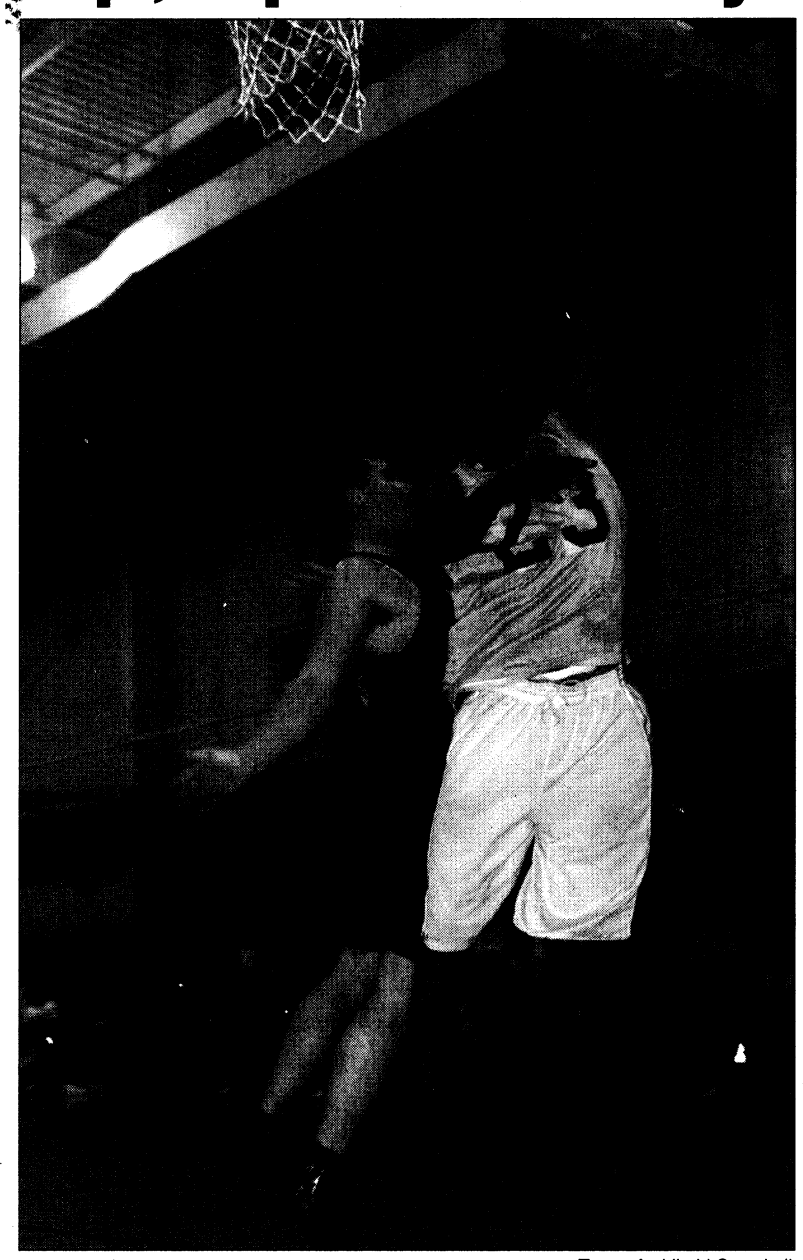
I knew I had a problem, I just didn't realize how bad it was until a few years ago.

It was Sunday afternoon. I was home alone watching the Masters. Yes, the golf tournament. That was when I finally admitted to myself that I loved sports, and it was only going to get worse.

I was born into a family of athletes — my dad has been a runner for decades, and has competed in both the Boston and New York City marathons. My aunt is also a runner, my uncle a former bodybuilder.

I played some sports as a kid. While I enjoyed playing, it was competition that got my adrenaline pumping. That's why I love watching sports, preferably in person, but I'll watch anything and everything on TV.

I was watching an interview with the model from the GoDaddy.com commercial, which aired during the Super Bowl. She was asked if she knew what teams had played in the Super Bowl. Surprise, she didn't. I was flabbergasted. Granted, not everyone is a football fan, but I'm hedging a bet most people knew what teams actually played. Right then and there, I was embarrassed, not only for her, but for giving women a bad name.



My guess is that a lot of women don't watch sports because it wasn't something they were interested in growing up. I wasn't either. I was always waiting "just five more minutes" for the endless football game to be over. Five minutes can be a lifetime in football.

It wasn't until I was an adult I learned to appreciate both the beauty and the brawn of sports. I love watching a great catch in the end zone and a great bench-clearing brawl. I can frequently be found at home watching ESPN — it's a regular dinnertime staple in the Nash household.

So girls, take a few hours and sit and watch some sports, whether it be NASCAR or a baseball game. I can't promise you'll like it, but you may be surprised.

Besides, you can find some great sports gear in pink these days.

SPORT BRIEFS

ON POST

Softball tryouts — The post softball team will begin tryouts Tuesday through Thursday.

The try-outs will be at the softball fields across from the Audie Murphy Fitness Center and will run from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. All players must have their own equipment.

The team is limited to active duty Soldiers, Reservists, National Guard, dependents and their families (must be at least 18 years of age and not eligible for high school or YS sports).

For more information, call Ken Wetherill at 545-4300.

CG Golf Scramble — The Fort Benning Golf Club will conduct the CG Golf Scramble Thursday.

Tee times are 7:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m.

Cost, $20 for members and $25 for non-members, includes cart and greens fees.

For more information, call 687-1940.

Coaches wanted — The Fort Benning Sports and Fitness Office is accepting resumes for coaches for post softball teams.

Send resumes to the sports directors office in Briant Wells Fitness Center or e-mail to ken.wetherill@benning.army.mil.

CYS soccer registration — Child and Youth Services will conduct soccer registration through Feb. 28 for children ages 4-15. Children must have a CYS card.

Registration is 8:30 to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday for walk-ins and 2 to 4 p.m. by appointment only.

Coaches are needed for the season. A family member will play for free if a parent coaches.

For more information, call 545-2079.

Paintball parties — Birthday parties are available at the Paintball Park.

The cost is $20 per child with 10 or more children. This includes 200 rounds of paint plus a Subway sandwich, chips and a drink.

Units can also use the Paintball Park at reduced rates. With a minimum of 150 players, it is $25 per person for 500 rounds of paint.

Unit or training funds can be used, and there is an option of playing on other designated paintball fields.

For more information or reservations, call 405-9777 or 267-5038.

OFF POST

Soccer pre-season tournament — The Columbus Adult Soccer Association will have a pre-season tournament Saturday through Monday at the Woodruff Farm Soccer Complex.

Cost is $250 per team. Roster limit is 12 players. There will be a men's open, men's 30 and older and co-ed division.

For more information, call Jeffrey Jackson at 545-0554.

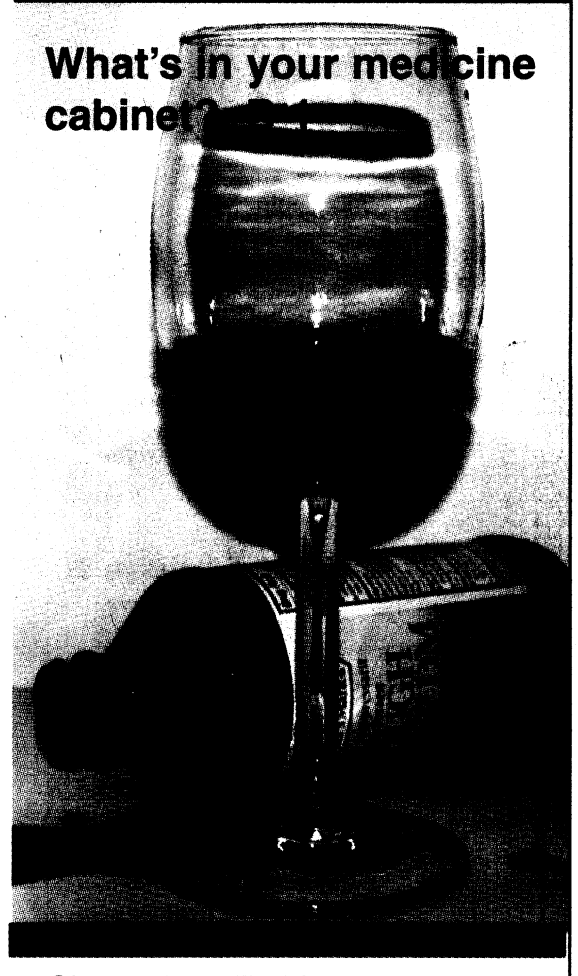
Vol. 63, No. 8 Published in the interest of the Fort Benning community Friday, Feb. 25, 2005



Inside

Time is running out. Monday is the deadline for parents of Fort Benning students to complete the DoDEA Customer Satisfaction Survey. It's your chance to tell us what you think of Fort Benning schools. The survey short, simple and completely confidential. Log on to www.DoDEA.edu or stop by your child's school.

Stowers was in the spotlight Tuesday — not Stowers Elementary School, but its namesake, Cpl. Freddie Stowers, the first African-American World War I Soldier to be awarded the Medal of Honor. A portrait of Stowers was unveiled during Fort Benning's Black History Month celebration. For more about the event and Stowers, see A-4.

Are you sure someone hasn't stolen your identity? Con artists recently gained access to the personal and financial information of 147,000 Americans. Could you be one of them? Learn more about the biggest identity heist in history on A-15.

What's in your medicine cabinet?

Channel 9 will videotape messages from the families of deployed Soldiers Tuesday from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m. in Infantry Hall, Room 5. The messages will be sent to deployed units.

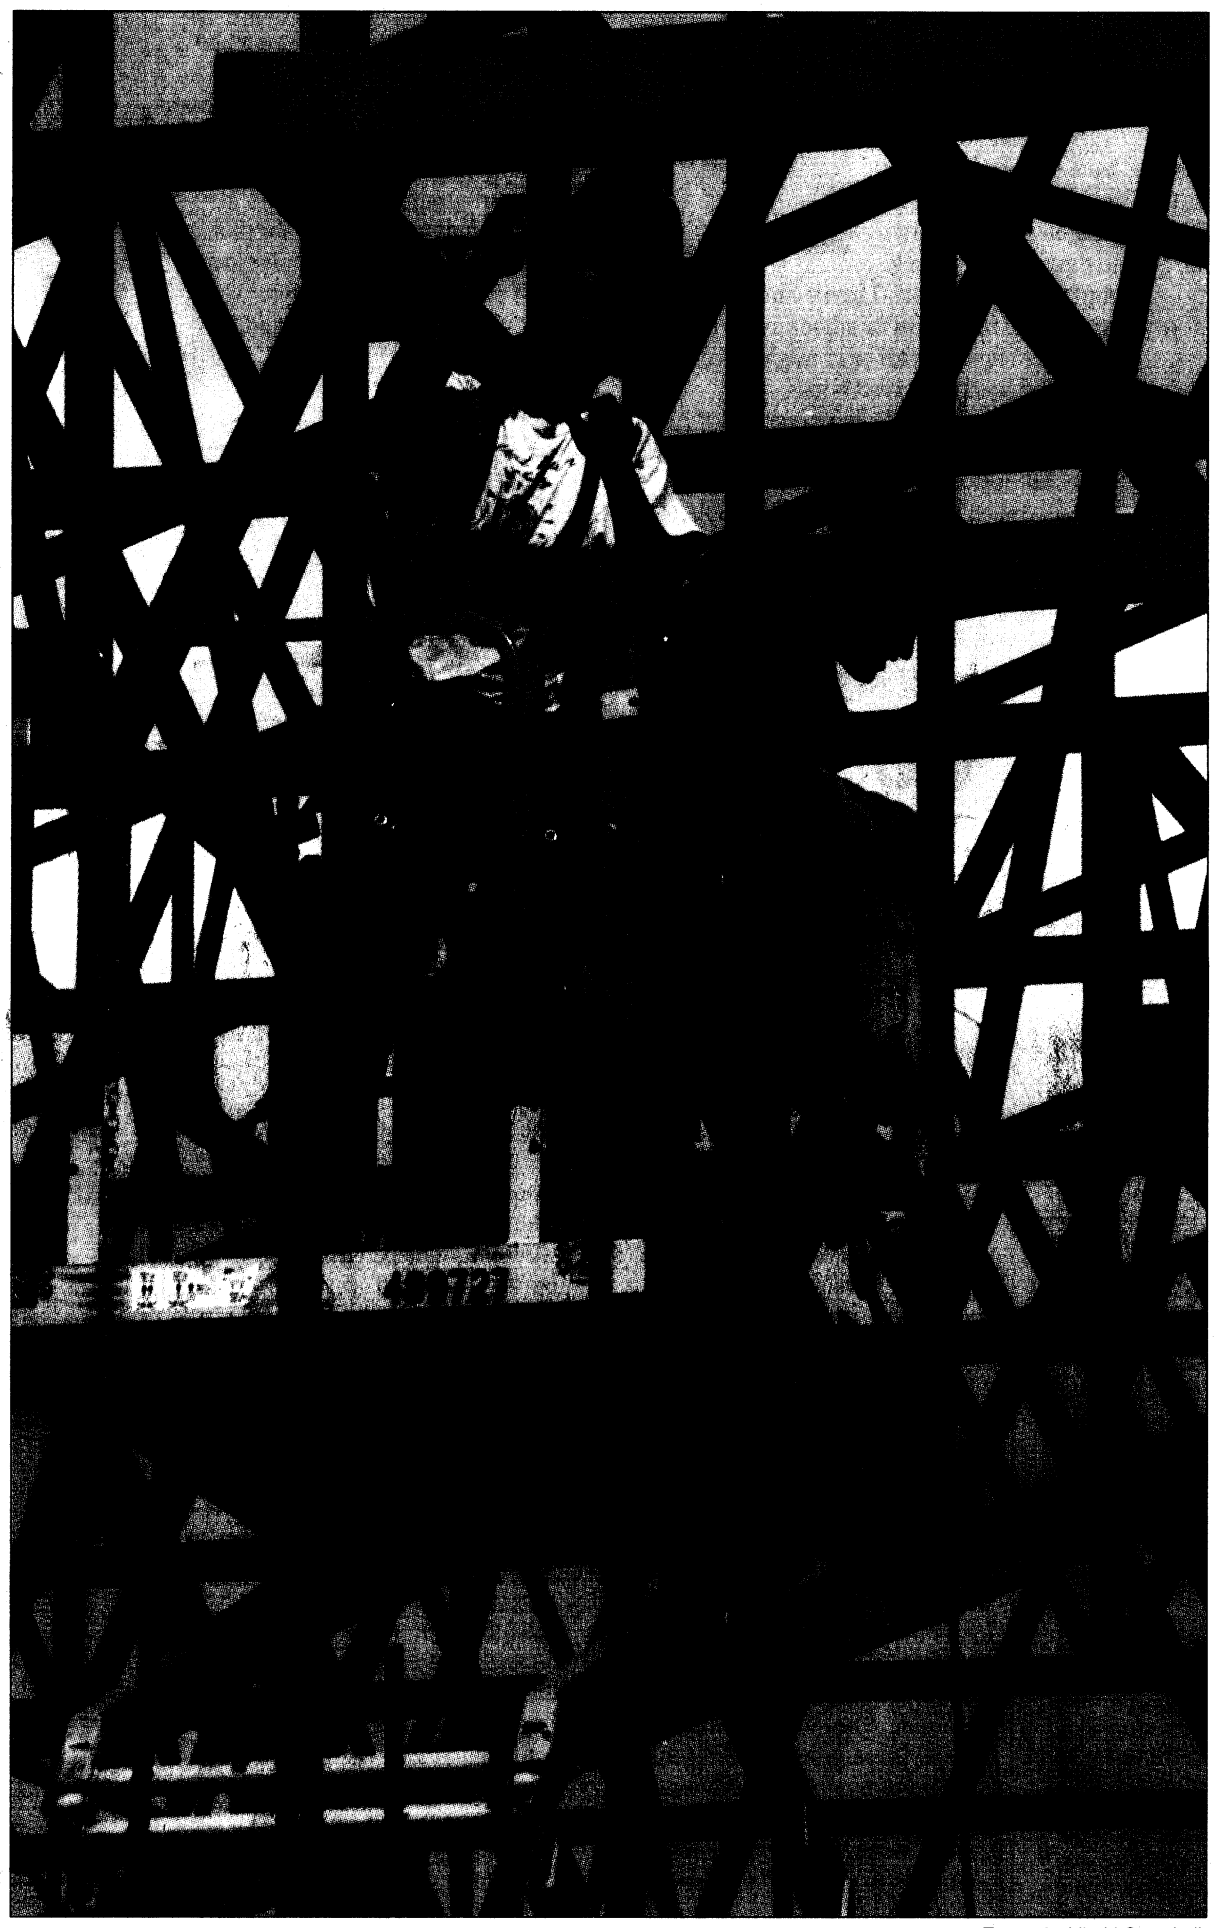
Experts say 'transfer schools'

Final decision not expected until after BRAC decision

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The verdict is in. A panel of experts recommends Fort Benning schools be transferred to local school system.



Unless Pentagon officials choose to disregard the advice of three experts they selected to assess data collected during the yearlong transfer study, Fort Benning's six elementary schools and one middle school will likely be transferred to the Chattahoochee School System.

The panel's recommendation will be considered after President Bush approves or disapproves the recommendations of the Base Realignment and Closure

See STUDY, A-15

The panel of experts included:
■Kern Alexander, Ed.D., chair of the Board of Editors for the Journal of Education Finance, director of the Institute for Education Finance.
■Richard Salmon, Ed.D., expert on school finance, expert witness for Department of Education in federal trials, former Naval Reserve commander.
■Deborah Verstegen, Ph.D., professor of education at the University of Virginia

A-maze-ing grace

Jason Merriott, left, and Daniel Seabolt, of Composite Construction, prepare to weld frames to support the chandeliers that will grace the sanctuary of the chapel being built on Ingersoll Street across from Faith Middle School. Construction is on schedule, said Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin, U.S. Infantry Center Chaplain, who expects the chapel to be completed in October.

Friends remember Salie as gentle giant

Bridgett Siter

Salie

Sgt. 1st Class David Salie was a gentle giant, said those who served alongside him. The 34-year-old, 6 feet, 5 inch father of four loved to watch his children fish, and he had a secret penchant for poetry.

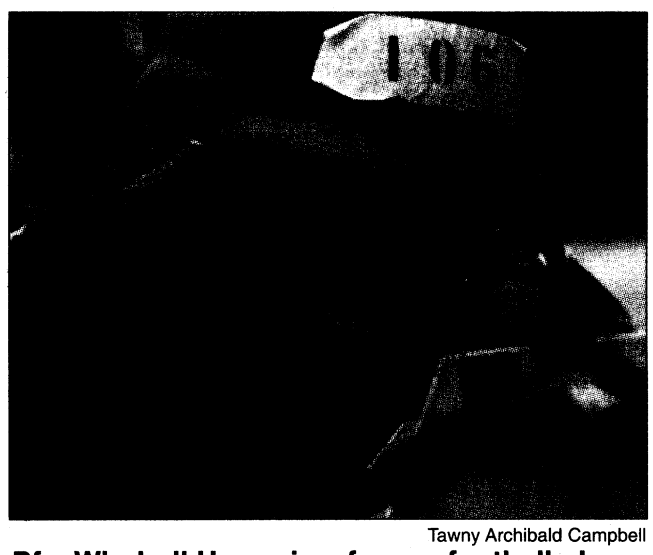
"If you wrote down on paper all the qualities you'd want in a father, the Salie kids had them all in David," said Capt. Bobby Toon, the commander of B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment.

Toon made that statement to the Soldiers who attended Salie's memorial service in Iraq last week, and his words were shared with the folks who attended a memorial service Tuesday at The Infantry Center Chapel on Fort Benning.

Salie was killed in Iraq Feb. 14 when an IED exploded near the Humvee he was riding in during a patrol of Baquba.

Toon recalled meeting Salie in 2003 during a live-fire exercise at Cactus Range. He was a "mountain of a man" who dragged two Soldiers from a vehicle and hefted them over his shoulders.

When Toon was tasked to stand up B Company last year, Salie was his "number one draft pick," but Toon offered him the option of staying with the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.



"Sir, I'm in," Salie said.

"That was one of his favorite sayings," said Toon, who imagined his friend standing at the gate of Heaven, awaiting "initial counseling" — "'Sir, I'm in,' he'll say."

Salie, an Army brat who called Columbus home, joined the Army in 1988. He served in Panama with the 82nd Airborne

Pfc. Windrell Hayes is a former football player with the Jets and the Packers.

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

There was a time when 29-year-old Windrell Hayes thought he had it all.

He had a beautiful wife, a college education and a career with the the NFL.

After being released from the New York Jets in October 2001 and spending the following spring with the Green Bay Packers, Hayes realized he wasn't all that happy with his life. He didn't enjoy playing professional football, and he wasn't having fun.

"I got into football because my brother played, and I was jealous of all the attention he got," Hayes said. "When I wanted to quit in high school, people got mad at me, so I just rode with it."

Once he was drafted into the NFL, football was "just a job," he said. It was then Hayes decided to give up his football career and do something he could be proud of, something that would make his family proud. He joined the Infantry.

"This was something I really wanted to do, it wasn't a last resort of any kind," said Pfc. Hayes, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment. "I felt like this was the right thing to do. I played football for a while and was living off what I had made, but I wanted something more."

Once he decided to join the Army, there was no turning back. He packed

Nancy Drew, where are you?

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Nancy Drew was so much a part of my youth that I still buy her books every time I see them at yard sales or used books stores. I'm talking about the classics, mind you — the contemporary Nancy leaves a lot to be desired.

Which brings me to my point. What happened to Nancy Drew?

She was brilliant, brave and witty — empowered when women typically weren't. She drove a hot little convertible and hung out with a cool crowd — cool because they were all brilliant, brave and witty. They were teenage super sleuths.

Nancy Drew appealed to the adventurer in me. She appealed to the adventurer in millions of kids, as did the Hardy Boys and Trixie Belden. Their appeal was so great it overcame (again and again) a great and hefty obstacle — the dictionary.

Nancy's creator, Carolyn Keene, employed a challenging vocabulary, which surely would've cost her a lot of fans were it not for her riveting storylines.

Like four generations of readers, I was forced to give up, "look it up" or decipher the word using context clues, something my third-grade teacher taught me.

I preferred the latter method, so like Nancy, I became a bit of a detective myself.

But I never spent too much time mulling over a word. In a pinch, I actually consulted the dictionary. Between Nancy Drew and Noah Webster, I learned to love words, and I learned to use them fairly well I like to think.

Nancy and her chums don't appeal to my children as they did me, probably because their stories are too tame for the "reality generation." That's too bad.

What's worse, in an effort to buttress a sinking ship, Nancy's series — authored by God knows who since Keene left the scene — has been "dumbed down" big time. No need for a dictionary.

I suppose half a century of literary success is success indeed, and Nancy should retire (with Ned and the convertible) to a cozy cottage on the lake. Retire with dignity, I say. Don't pander to the dumb masses.

Smart is cool like other side of pillow

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I'm a Jeopardy freak. I've been tuning in since I was little, and every night at 7 p.m. my family knows it's Jeopardy time. My 5-year-old son can even hum the final question music.

So last summer, I took notice when a man named Ken Jennings, a 30-year-old software engineer from Murray, Utah, started winning multiple games.

Wow, I thought, this guy is good.

What was it about Ken that appealed so much to me and others? He's an average looking guy — someone you probably wouldn't take a second glance at on the street. He's mildly funny and affable, but I still wondered, why did I like Ken so much?

Then I figured it out. Ken is cool because he's smart. I got to thinking, how many people are cool because they're smart? Not many.

Growing up, I always had my nose in a book. That wasn't cool.

Now I'm 30, and I have my nose in at least two books at a time and read an average of two to three books a week. And you know what? I don't care if people call me a nerd or a bookworm or whatever choice words they might have. I can be cool and still read books.

I attended college for one year and found it utterly boring. I've felt inadequate since, because these days a college degree is pretty much required, a status symbol, a guarantee of getting a better job.

I also know that because I yearn for knowledge, I have the kind of smarts that you can't buy at college.

An interesting perspective on this can be seen on The Apprentice. Those currently vying for the apprenticeship with Donald Trump are divided into two teams, book smart and street smart.

The street smart team named themselves Net Worth, because as a collective group they make three times as much money as the book smart group.

There's something to be said for that.

Ken's streak ended after 75 games and earnings of more than $2.5 million. I attribute it to exhaustion, mental and physical.

He'll be back in the Ultimate Tournament of Champions, playing against other previous winners, most who are five-time winners, before Jeopardy changed the rules to let winners play until they lose.

It's cool to be smart, because looks fade and money can be lost in one bad stock investment.

Smarts last forever and Ken has proved that smart is cool.

CORRECTION

In last week's edition of the Bayonet, Sgt. Rhoda D. Riley was reported as being assigned to 4th Battalion, 25th Field Artillery Regiment, 10th Mountain Division. Riley is actually assigned to 710th Brigade Support Battalion that provides direct support to 4th Battalion, 25th Field Artillery. The Bayonet regrets the error.

Don't let ID theft ruin your good name

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

When the phone messages started cluttering up my answering machine, I just deleted them. I knew the caller had the wrong number. Neither my husband nor I had a loan with Associates Financial Services, so we couldn't possibly have an overdue loan payment.

Then came the 11 p.m. phone call from the loan collector. A few minutes after I gave him a piece of my mind for calling so late, it became apparent we had a problem.

He was thinking we were in Washington state. We were actually in Washington, D.C., and according to him, we were 90 days past due on a $1,000 bike financed at a bike shop in Tacoma, Wash.

And we found out the next morning when we started calling the credit bureaus, that the bike was just the tip of the iceberg. All in all, there were seven past due lines of credit with various well-known retailers to the tune of more than $10,000.

Without knowing it, we were also the proud owners of a Rolex, a new computer, several appliances and a few thousand dollars of assorted "stuff."

How did it happen? From what we could piece together, two Soldiers at Fort Lewis, Wash., went on a one-week shopping spree. One had a military ID card with my husband's name, the other was posing as his "boss," using an ID card with the info of a guy my husband had worked for almost exactly three years earlier.

It's hard to pinpoint exactly where the two got their information, but the scary thing was, they were using my birthdate on the ID with my husband's name.

Thankfully a brainy clerk at Radio Shack found it a little odd that the other Soldier could only produce one form of ID for the new computer he was purchasing and denied him credit after talking with my husband's former boss's wife.

At the time, the real Keith was deployed to Bosnia.

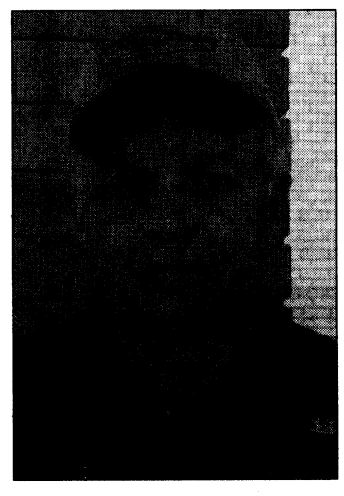
So the spree was halted, but no one was quick enough in the whole process to take any info that would have helped get these buffoons arrested.

It took more than six months, a ream of paper and a toner cartridge to finally get things back in order. Dealing with the credit agencies is not the easiest thing in the world, but we also had to deal with each of the seven companies.

To add insult to injury, one even sent us a bill showing we had paid the line of credit, as if it were actually ours! And, a full year later, another company sent us a note about the fraudulent account, so we dug the file out and faxed the information they needed.

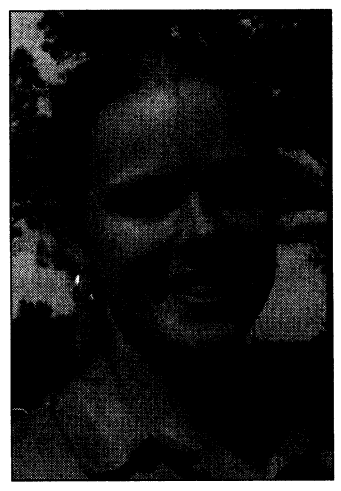
Don't let this happen to you.

Safeguard your financial information. Shred documents containing your account numbers or other sensitive information. Use passwords, when available, vary them and change them occasionally. Use a firewall on your computer to help prevent losing your personal information over the Internet. Be aware of your spending so you can identify any charges you might not have made on a credit card.



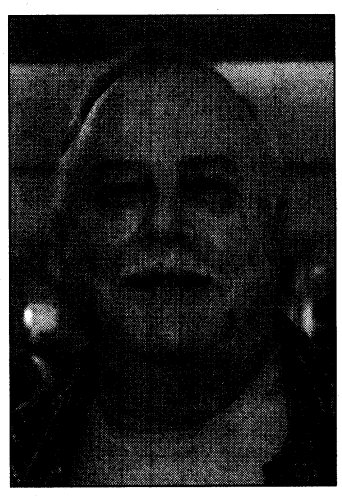
Almost 10 million Americans were victims of some form of identity theft in 2003. That's a staggering number, but pales in comparison with the $47.6 billion lost. More of that money comes from crooks opening new lines of credit than from actually stealing from your existing accounts.

If an identity thief is successful, it helps to know what to do, then do it quickly.

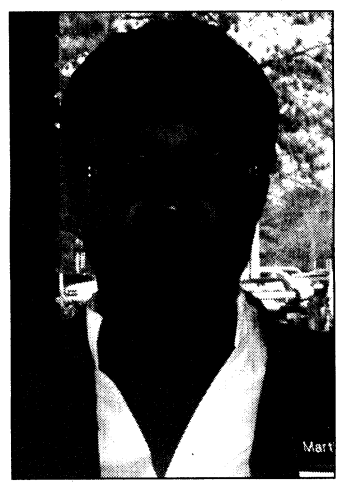


Type 'identity theft' into your search engine and you'll have a list of Web sites that can help you, or visit www.consumer.gov/idtheft and download their informative booklet on preventing and dealing with identity theft.

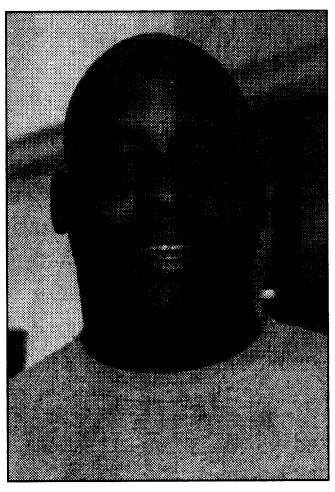
VARIOUS VOICES



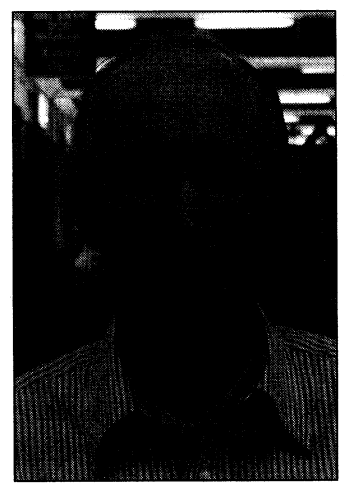
Do you think the quality of education is improving?



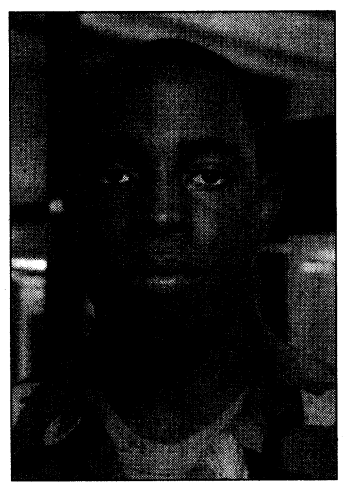
Don Wood, retired Army, Columbus — "I think American education is going down. It's mostly bad teachers. When I worked in recruiting, I worked closely with teachers, and some of them couldn't pass the Army qualification exam."



Lisa Atchison, family member — "I think it's improving for kids with special needs. My sister has twins and one of them is hard of hearing. The state sends special tutors to help her child learn sign language. The state helps them at no cost to my sister."



Lee Palino, retired Air Force, Columbus — "I don't think it's getting better, even though they spend so much money on it. They need to hire better teachers, especially in the youngest grades. That's when kids get their educational foundation."



Martha Smalls, AAFES employee — "I think it's OK and keeps getting better. I would like to see them spend more for extracurricular activities. They have so much in schools now, computers and all. We just had the protractors and calculators when I was there."

Spc. Darrel Scott, 217th Military Police Company — "I think it's going down. I wish they would change Army education to let spouses or kids of Soldiers use the GI Bill for their education."

Arthur Willis, retired Army, Columbus — "I hope it will get better, but it seems like its not going too well. I think it's the responsibility of the mommies and daddies to teach them, and give them a love of learning."

Pvt. Michael Hines, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment — "It's getting better. There's not so much gang violence in the schools as there used to be. I think education could be improved with more focus on community service."

Army Emergency Relief ready to kick-off campaign

Campaign hopes to raise $175,000

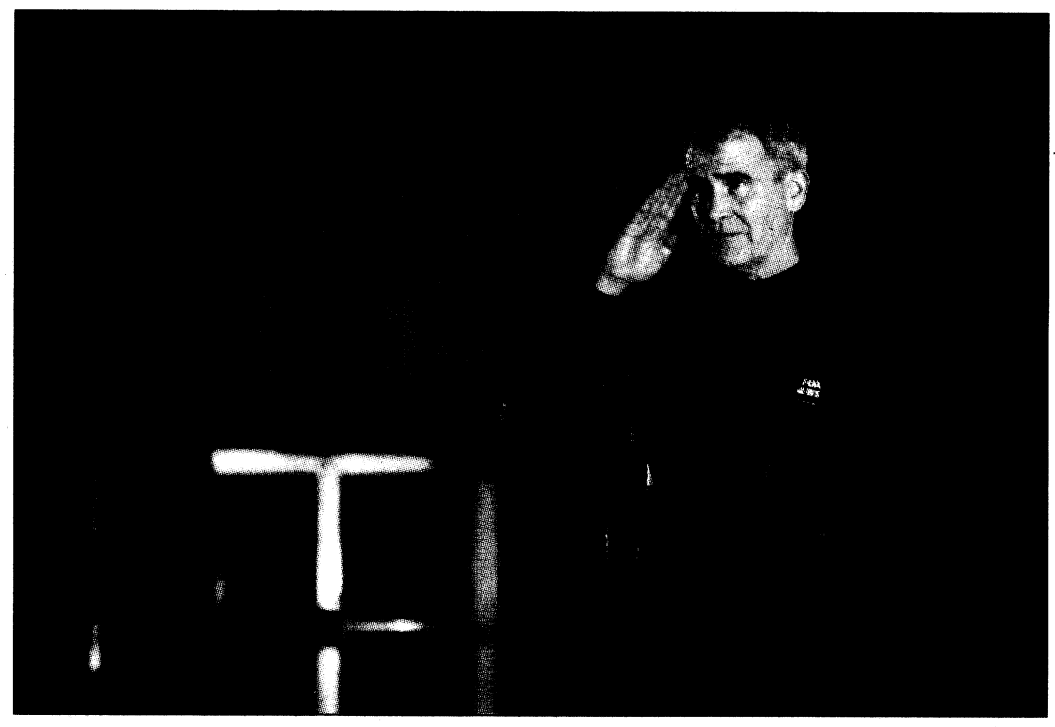
Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will kick off the 2005 Army Emergency Relief Fund drive at 2 p.m. March 1 in Infantry Hall.

That's the same day the Armywide campaign begins, and Lionel Grant, the post's AER campaign officer, said the post's goal is to contribute at least $175,000 to the centralized AER fund.

The funds are dispersed throughout the year in the form of interest-free loans or grants, depending on the recipients financial situation. Historically, Grant said, Fort Benning collects around $200,000 for the fund.

"But that wouldn't get us through two months of assistance," he said. Monthly assistance provided to Soldiers and families in the Fort Benning area runs just shy of $1 million, Grant said.



"Anything the Soldier contributes during the campaign, is just a drop in the bucket," Grant said. "We average more than $800,000 per month in financial assistance."

Some of that assistance, he said, is in the form of grants to widows and orphans of retired Soldiers, that don't need to be repaid. Soldiers can receive assistance with paying utility bills or in getting utilities reconnected and in helping families travel in emergency leave situations. One form of assistance Grant said the AER is working on is helping Soldiers take care of their vehicles.

"We're trying to help take care of automotive maintenance needs before the car breaks down."

For more information about AER or the campaign, call the installation coordinator, Master Sgt. William R. Balinski, at 545-7517 or 545-4043.

Donate blood, save three lives

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

Did you know that one pint of blood can save three lives? It's true. Look it up.

When you donate one pint of blood, it is separated into three components — red blood cells, plasma and platelets.

The red blood cells help patients who suffer from severe trauma or bleeding disorders. The plasma helps burn patients and shock victims. Platelets are mainly used for cancer or leukemia patients.

The Red Cross will hold its quarterly blood drive from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. March 24 at the post Red Cross office in Soldiers Plaza.

"We need to collect 1,200 pints of blood per day to supply all (regional) hospitals with a safe level of blood," said Lane Brown, donor recruiter representative with the Columbus and Fort Benning Red Cross Blood Services.

A safe amount of blood would be five pints a day, Brown said, and there is currently only a day and a half worth of blood on reserve for hospitals.

"Our blood reserve has been very low and if it continues that way, we'll have to buy blood from other regions," said Joe Emehiser, post Red Cross office manager. "We encourage people who are able to donate blood to participate."

Service members and their spouses who were not able to participate in blood drives because of overseas assignments in Europe may now qualify thanks to a revision to the donor deferral guidelines.

According to a press release by the American Red Cross Blood Services, the Red Cross has revised it's guidelines for Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD) and a variant of CJD (vCJD), the human variant of Mad Cow. The revision will allow thousands of donors previously not able to donate to participate in upcoming blood drives. The new guidelines call for deferral only if the donor has spent five years or more in Europe since Jan. 1, 1980; three months or more in the United Kingdom from Jan. 1, 1980, through Dec. 31, 1996; or received a blood transfusion in the U.K. since Jan. 1, 1980.

Anyone who spent less than six months on or associated with the military bases in Belgium, the Netherlands or Germany between 1980 and 1990 or Spain, Portugal, Turkey, Italy or Greece between 1980 and 1996 will be allowed to donate.

Brown said the goal for the upcoming blood drive is 33 pints of good blood. She encourages those who want to donate but cannot participate during the March 24 blood drive to visit the American Red Cross Columbus Donor Center or call 317-3529.

To make an appointment for the March 24 blood drive on post, visit www.givelife.org and set up an appointment.

For more information, call the post Red Cross office at 545-5194 or the Columbus Donor Center at 317-3529.

Scam targets families of military KIA

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Officials with the Department of Homeland Security are warning the public about two new Iraq-related Internet scams, including one directed at the relatives of fallen U.S. Soldiers.

"These new Internet fraud schemes are among the worst we have ever encountered," said Michael J. Garcia, assistant secretary of homeland security for immigration and customs enforcement. "Most troubling is the fact that some are targeting the relatives of U.S. Soldiers killed in Iraq. We are also concerned about the fact that these criminals are impersonating (Immigration and Customs Enforcement) agents and referring to ICE's official Web site in an effort to steal money from Americans who have lost loved ones."

The first scheme involves e-mail sent to relatives of U.S. Soldiers killed in Iraq.

Claiming to be a volunteer working with U.S. forces, the sender states that a late friend, who also was a U.S. Soldier killed in Iraq, was a very good friend of the relatives' slain son or daughter. The sender then goes on to ask for assistance in obtaining funds kept for them by the deceased friend, promising more details when the relative responds to the e-mail. The sender then adds a link to the portion of Immigration and Customs Enforcement's actual Web site discussing ICE operations in Iraq.

In the second scheme, a blanket e-mail is being distributed that claims to be from an Immigration and Customs Enforcement official in Iraq who is responsible for tracking down funds looted from the Iraqi Central Bank by Saddam Hussein's son. The sender lists ICE's Web site address in the e-mail in an effort to seem credible. The sender then asks for confirmation of the e-mail address of the recipient, stating, "there is a very important and confidential matter which I want us both to discuss."

Contributions of black Americans celebrated at event

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Black History Month Event was celebrated with music, dance, food and speeches Feb. 22 in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

The event began with the unveiling of a portrait of Cpl. Freddie Stowers by Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, and guest speaker, Brig. Gen. Abraham Turner.

Freakley invited Wilson Elementary School student Sasha Bills to come on stage and assist in the unveiling.

Stowers, the namesake of Stowers Elementary on post, was the first African American Soldier to receive the Medal of Honor for WWI, awarded posthumously in 1991. Stowers earned the award during an attack in the Marne, in which men in his unit, the 371st Infantry Regiment, had suffered 50 percent casualties. Stowers succeeded in overrunning a German machine gun nest, and was mortally wounded attacking a second, but inspired his men who managed to secure Hill 188.

In his address, Turner continued the focus on history.

He talked about the 1905 Niagara Movement, founded by W.E.B. DuBois, which brought together a group of black scholars and leaders to discuss a plan to further civil rights.

The movement would eventually spurn the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

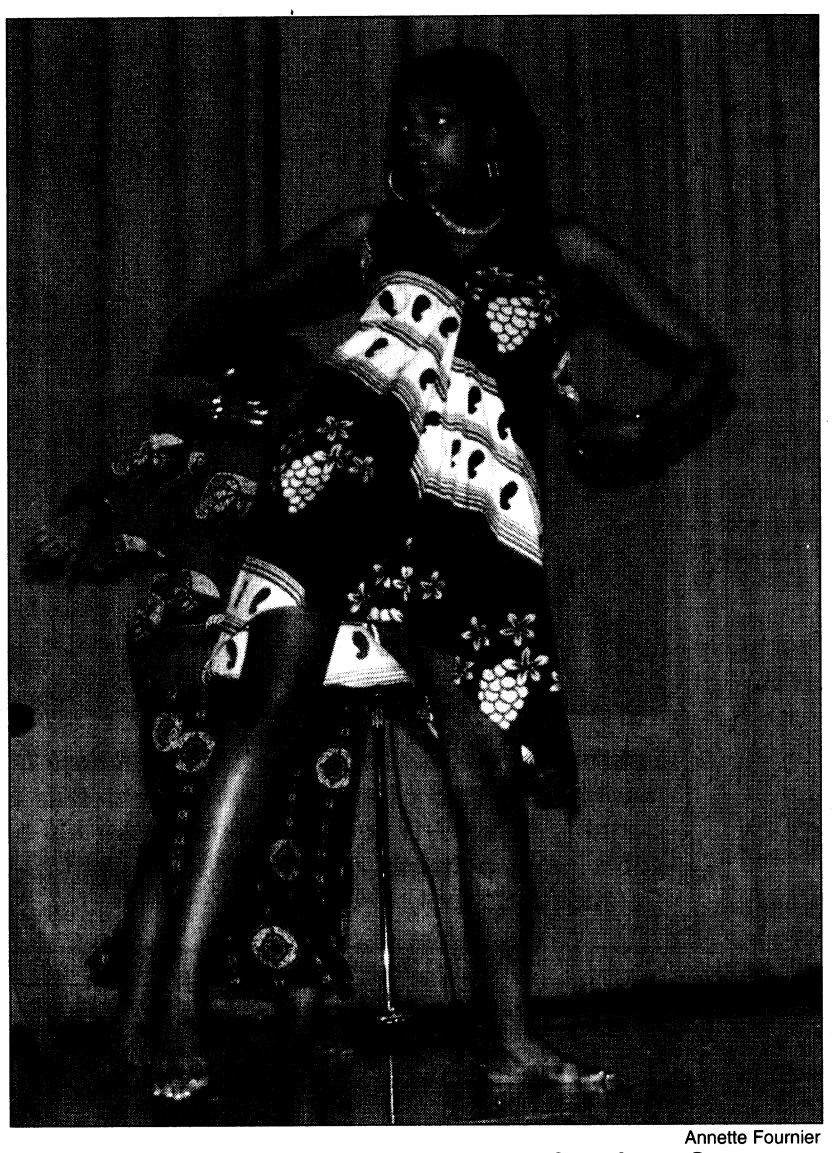
Turner also talked about the history of black Soldiers and the change from segregation to an integrated Army.

"The Army was integrated ten years before the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Leaders looked to the Army for a model of integration and to prove that inclusion could work," Turner said.

Freakley mentioned the importance of recognizing black contributions to the military and America.

"The traditions, values and strength that African Americans brought from their diverse countries of origin and difficult passages not only reinforced the moral and political fabric of our country, but added beauty to our culture as well," Freakley said.

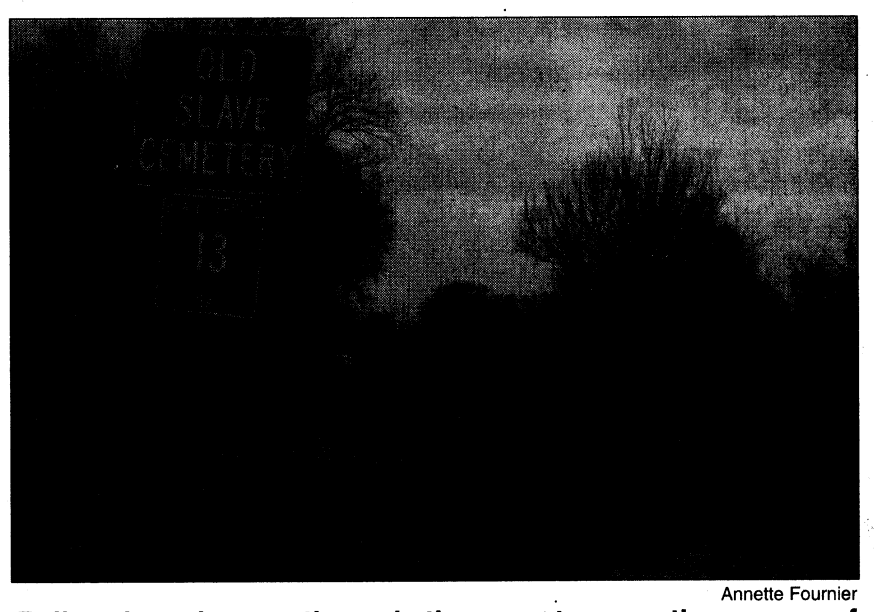
"Divided we can be defeated, but united we can never be taken apart."



Paula Johnson, who works for the 75th Ranger Regiment, sang The Star Spangled Banner and Lift Every Voice and Sing, often called the black national anthem. The Wilson Elementary School chorus also sang a medley and Everybody Rejoice.

The Ophelia DeVore Performing Company presented an African dance to music from a South African musical, accompanied by drummers.

A food sampling with traditional black cuisine followed the event.



Turner is currently commanding general at Fort Jackson, S.C., but spent time at Fort Benning as commander of the Infantry Training Brigade.

His other duty stations include Fort Bragg, N.C., West Point, N.Y., Korea, and Camp Doha, Kuwait. He also served in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, Operations Iraqi Freedom and Enduring Freedom, and a combat jump into Panama during Operation Just Case in 1989.

Columbus cemetery may hold remains of slaves

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Trash blows along railroad tracks cutting through a a small, weed-filled lot on the corner of Sixth Avenue and Sixth Street in downtown Columbus. A sign tells passersby this spot is the final resting place for people from Columbus' past.

No headstones mark the graves, so not much is known about the people buried there. One persistent but unsubstantiated theory says the cemetery was for slaves.

In the deep South during the 18th and 19th century, almost 50 percent of the population was enslaved. Columbus would have had similar percentages, so it is possible slaves are entombed there.

According to the research of the late Alfonzo Biggs, local historian, the cemetery started in about 1760 with the last three people, Elijah Johnson, Estella Gate Little and "Frankie Coleman's grandmother" buried in about 1920. A map from 1828 shows the cemetery with a church adjacent, where apartments now stand. There was also a wash house for women and a brickyard, according to documents from the Historic Columbus Foundation, Inc.

The cemetery was old even in 1828, as the map shows the "new" black cemetery, Porterdale, two blocks south, on what is now Victory Drive. The railroad came through in 1886, and got permission from city officials to cut through the cemetery, which was not officially recognized.

There is compelling evidence for the authenticity of the cemetery, but little can be set in stone until more research is done. The spot is on the Columbus Black History Tour, with a sign marking the spot, but no information posted. For now the spot will remain a mysterious little piece of Columbus' past, inspiring more questions than answers.

For more information about the black history tour or a map of the driving tour, visit the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau at 900 Front Ave. or call 322-1613.

Global posture realignment will better support future ops

Policy official says purpose is to expand allies roles

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Realigning the U.S. defense posture around the world involves a whole lot more than deciding where to base U.S. troops overseas, the Pentagon's top policy chief told civilian leaders visiting here Feb. 18.

Undersecretary of Defense for Policy Douglas J. Feith told alumni from the Joint Civilian Orientation Conference the unprecedented review of the U.S. global defense posture involves far-reaching concepts.

These range from where troops are based, to what facilities the country maintains overseas, to how the U.S. military interacts with other militaries, to what legal arrangements are in place to support future operations.

Feith told business, civic and academic leaders, who traveled throughout the Pacific in September to observe military operations in the region, that the country's current defense posture reflects the World War II and Korean War legacy.

Even during substantial force reductions following the Cold War, when the United States reduced its troop strength in Europe and Asia, there was no effort to rethink global posturing, he said.

"Nobody looked strategically (or) comprehensively at where we want to be positioned around the world for the next 50 years or so," he said.

In fact, Feith said, "nobody in American history ever sat down and looked this way at where we have our forces around the world."

One purpose of global realignment is to make it easier for the United States to work with other countries in fulfilling its military obligations, Feith said.

This includes expanding allied roles, building new partnerships, and ensuring the framework is in place so the United States is able to live up to its commitments to other countries, he said.

In realigning the forces, it's critical that the U.S. military has the flexibility it needs to deal with uncertainty, he said.

"We no longer flatter ourselves into thinking that we know where we are going to have to operate," he said.

He cited military operations during the past decade and a half — after Iraq invaded Kuwait in the early 1990s, in the Balkans, and most recently in Afghanistan and Iraq after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks — and said most were not foreseen.

This is in stark contrast to the Cold War, he pointed out, when the central focus of the military was fixed solely on central Europe, Germany and Korea.

Not knowing where the military might have to operate "is not an excuse for not planning," Feith said.

"It simply means that you have to plan to be surprised — so you need the flexibility to operate anywhere, quickly."

To support this need, Feith said the military now focuses, not just within, but also across, regions of the world. The old concept of combatant commanders "owning" forces in their region is gone. No longer are forces committed to only a certain region.

"We now have a single global force, and it's for the whole world," Feith said.

This concept is already playing out in support of the war on terror, he said. Troops from Korea are deploying to Iraq, and units from Germany, to Afghanistan.

This concept of a single global force requires rapidly deployable capabilities.

"We have to be ready to deal with surprises, and be ready to move quickly," Feith said.

Feith said this capability is critical to keeping crises in check.

"We recognize that it is far better to move to prevent a problem from becoming a crisis, or a crisis from becoming a war, than to go in too late," he said. "So the ability to move quickly is a crucial strategic asset."

This demands the kinds of forces and defense posture around the world that support rapid deployment, he said, and the structure in place to support those activities. This includes how units are structured, to what type of equipment they use, to what facilities are available to support their deployments.

"A whole lot of pieces fit together (to support a) light, effective, lethal, agile, easily deployable force that can take advantage of this revised defense posture," Feith said.

One of the most important considerations in realignment the U.S. global defense posture is to resist the temptation to focus on numbers and instead, to think in terms of capabilities, the undersecretary said.

It's critical that when the military brings 70,000 service members and about 100,000 family members and contractors back to the United States that it's not viewed "as a retrenchment or a withdraw from the world or an undermining of our commitment to our partners around the world," Feith said.

New technology and ways of operating have increased military capabilities to the point where fewer troops can now accomplish more than larger forces did in the past, he said.

"For example, a few years ago, we needed multiple sorties to destroy a single target. Now we can destroy scores of targets with a single sortie," Feith said, thanks to precision bombs that have revolutionized warfighting capabilities.

"We now get so much more military capability out of smaller forces than was ever possible before," he said.

"So the key concept is capabilities, not numbers."

Feith said the United States is sharing these principles with its allies and adversaries alike as it moves forward to revamp its defense posture around the world to better meet challenges and threats of the 21st century.

"We want everyone to know what we're thinking and to understand the strategic rationale," he said.

Cody praises tech advances

Vice chief speaks at AUSA event

Ali Bettencourt
Army News Services

Projected onto the screen larger than life so that the more than 500 conference participants could see, a lone Soldier knelt in the mud of Mosul.

His head bowed, what at first looked like an extension of the mountains behind him, soon came into focus as a mountain of equipment born on his weary back.

Gen. Richard A. Cody, vice chief of staff of the Army, challenged the crowd at the opening session of the Association of the United States Army Winter Symposium last week on why the photo, taken during the early days of the Iraq war, doesn't represent what "right looks like" for Army Soldiers on today's battlefield.

"That Soldier will carry a 70-pound rucksack; he's a good Infantryman," Cody said. "But 110 pounds? Is this Soldier equipped for agility against an adaptive enemy?"

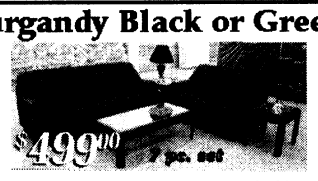
Pointing to the picture, Cody paused, "Never forget that that is your customer," he said.

"Our job is to get this right for them."

Speaking to a crowd of military officers and civilians, contractors and industry and academic partners, Cody outlined the advances the Army has made since the onset of the Global War on Terrorism and the work still to be done.

"Back during World War II, the nation was shocked and horrified by German U-boat attacks on allied fleets," Cody said.

"American ingenuity quickly found a solution with sonar and other technology. How will history judge our success against improvised explosive devices, suicide bombers and other asymmetric threats?"



"This conflict calls for focus and intensity in our science and technology communities," Cody continued.

"As you look at (Soldiers' faces) you must ask yourself, are we giving them everything they need and are we getting it to them quickly enough?"

Cody praised the advancements that have been made over the last three years, highlighting the comprehensive, joint and rapid work that has been done to combat improvised explosive devices through the Joint IED Defeat Task Force; to provide improved individual Soldier equipment through the Rapid Fielding Initiative; and to introduce new technological solutions to the battlefield through the Rapid Equipping Force initiative.

While visiting the Program Executive Office for Simulation, Training and Instrumentation in Orlando, Fla., the day before the symposium, Cody saw first-hand the cutting edge work the Army is conducting in the live, virtual and constructive simulation training world to help prepare Soldiers for combat.

Declared fit for duty, amputee plans return to Iraq

Captain meets recovery goal for son's birth

Samantha L. Quiqley
American Forces Press Service

Like many Operation Iraqi Freedom veterans, U.S. Army Capt. David Rozelle's story began in Iraq. Unlike many of those same veterans, his is set to continue there as well.

Cleared to return to the same battlefield where he was injured, Rozelle said he is the first amputee in recent military history to be returned to a dangerous command.

Rozelle arrived in Hit, Iraq, with the 3rd Armored Calvary Regiment from Fort Carson, Colo., in April 2003. Initially, his role in the town was as the "de facto sheriff," he said.

Aside from the fact that it was hot, what stood out about the mission was that it was a success, he said.

"From the time we hit the ground in Hit, from the first recon day to the point of my injury, it truly was a successful mission," Rozelle said. "We, within days, got the things back working. We made some good friends quite quickly."

He also was tapped to become one of the first service members outside of special operations to train Iraqis to defend themselves. However, that never came to be.

On June 21, 2003, Rozelle was traveling the road that led to the police academy to participate in the program to train Iraqis when his Humvee hit an antitank mine buried by insurgents. Later he found out that the mine his Humvee hit was the last in a line of nine mines the insurgents had buried.

The Humvee became airborne and landed on Rozelle's right leg. Of the three Soldiers in the vehicle, he was the only one injured.

"At first, I really didn't realize I was injured," he said. "The vehicle blew up, and I looked down and had what looked like all my parts and I had some good shrapnel and some bleeding, but I was alive and grateful."

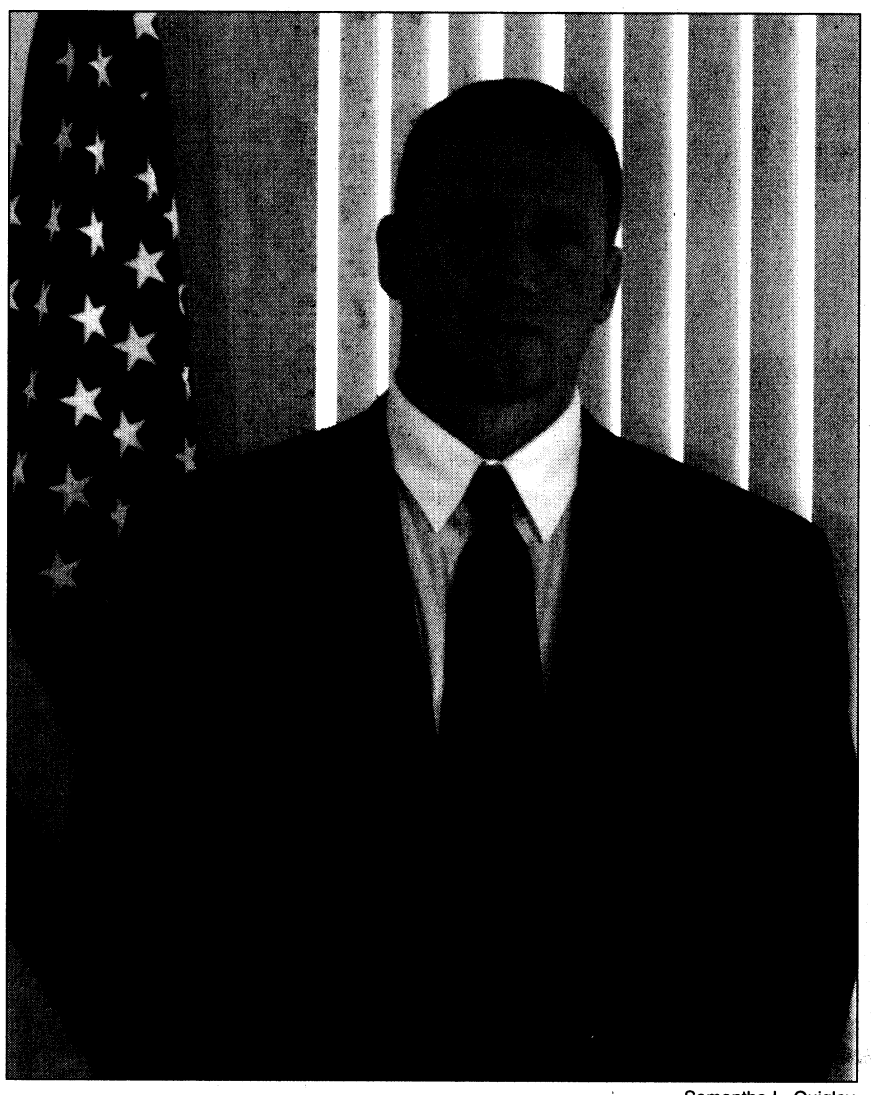
The incident cost him his right foot, but earned him a Bronze Star with V device and a Purple Heart for his service in Iraq.

Following the usual medical route, Rozelle went through Landstuhl Regional Medical Center in Germany before ending up at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

There, he bargained with the hospital commander, promising to meet amazing goals in his recovery, if he could make it to Colorado for the birth of his son. He arrived two days before the due date and ended up waiting for a week before his son was born.

"The baby was waiting on me to get home," Rozelle said.

The baby may have been waiting, but so were the amputee patients at Walter Reed — whether they knew it or not.



Back at Walter Reed, Rozelle was one of the first OIF amputee patients, and he had to find his own way through the healing process.

It started when his boss made it clear to Rozelle and his rear detachment commander that his only mission was to get fit for active duty.

He took that mission very seriously, spending three to four hours per day training, likening the experience to basic training.

"The other four to five hours a day I spent staying in touch with other Soldiers, calling back to Walter Reed, sending e-mails to other guys who are injured, creating awareness for people with disabilities from the very start. I wanted to help take care of Soldiers, give them what I didn't have, which was knowledge of what's next," he said. "I found a leadership role for myself within the Army for amputees."

The training got him in shape and gave him a way to connect with and encourage other amputees to get back to their lives. He is snow skiing again and runs everything from Turkey Trots to marathons. He even organized a Walter Reed team for the Army 10-miler.

Samantha L. Quigley

Capt. David Rozelle lost his right foot when the Humvee he was riding in hit an antitank mine near the city of Hit, Iraq. Rozelle has since made huge strides in his recovery and reaches out to help other amputees. During his recovery, he wrote a book, Back in Action: An American Soldier's Story of Courage, Faith, and Fortitude, at the suggestion of family and friends.

A group of doctors at the hospital had put a team together for the race when Rozelle approached them with the idea to let some of the patients take some of the slots. And so the "Missing Parts in Action Team: Some Assembly Required" was born.

"I beat most of the Navy and Air Force and kept up with the Marines," he said. "We just need to make people aware."

When Rozelle returns from Iraq, he has been asked to return to a position at Walter Reed before going on to Command and General Staff College. It will be doing one of the things he does best: Encouraging amputee patients to not give up and helping them realize that they can do the things they used to do.

"I am amazed ... by the spirit of the American Soldier," he said. "That's what I say to America: 'Celebrate the spirit of the American Soldier.'

"These guys need to understand that, both the amputees and the able-bodied Soldiers, ... that the Soldiers who are shown at Walter Reed are not ready to quit. They want to come back and join (their units) in combat, in a combat role. With modern science, that's a possibility."

Rozelle said the celebration of that spirit is readily evident.

"All you have to do is go over to Walter Reed sometime," he said, recounting stories of Walter Reed patients needing items and receiving an overwhelming response, and of a pillow company catching wind of plans to send pillows to troops in Iraq.

"They sent ... 6,000 pillows for our Soldiers," he said. "That is incredible."

Beyond these acts of support and generosity, Rozelle told of an individual who was supporting troops in a very big way.

"There's a guy over at Walter Reed who has now started an organization to continue it, but he, out of his own pocket, (is) giving every injured Soldier who separated from service $30,000 to get his life started again," he said. "America supports our Soldiers."

The captain, who claims to be an excellent hop-scotcher, also has found time during his recovery to write a book. Back in Action: An American Soldier's Story of Courage, Faith, and Fortitude is Rozelle's story of his injury, recovery and return to a command on the same battlefield.

He said the book, which he dedicated to his wife and son, came about at the suggestion of his friends and family. They are also the reason, he said, why he is going back to Iraq.

"There's a job to be done," he said.

The Soldiers were headed back to their company area after being officially inducted into the Infantrymen brotherhood through an Honor Hill ceremony.

Soldiers join Infantry brotherhood

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

I am the Infantry.

I am my country's strength in war, her deterrent in peace.

I am the heart of the fight — wherever, whenever.

I carry America's faith and honor against her enemies.

I am the Queen of Battle.

I am what my country expects me to be the best trained Soldier in the world.

In the race for victory,

I am swift, determined, and courageous, armed with a fierce will to win.

Never will I fail my country's trust.

Always I fight on through the foe, to the objective, to triumph over all.

If necessary, I fight to my death.

By my steadfast courage, I have won 200 years of freedom.

I yield not to weakness, to hunger, to cowardice, to fatigue, to superior odds, for I am mentally tough, physically strong, and morally straight.

I forsake not my country, my mission, my comrades, my sacred duty.

I am relentless.

I am always there, now and forever.

I am the Infantry!

Follow me!

-Infantryman's Creed

The closer they got to the gravel walk of Honor Hill the louder you could hear them shout.

The Soldiers of D Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, were inducted into the Infantry brotherhood Tuesday night after 13 weeks of Infantry training.

Pfc. Jamie Padgett, 4th Platoon Soldier, started off on this final mission thinking it was going to be easy. But as he got closer to the end, he said he began to think about the buddies he was going to leave behind once it was over and, surprisingly enough, he said he is going to miss his drill sergeants.

"You see the hill and you let loose," Padgett said.

"It was intense. We were screaming at the top of our lungs. We started off in training doing only four miles and here we are doing a twelve-mile road march. The platoon did it together, we all pushed each other through it to the end. Now we're Infantrymen and it was worth every bit of it."

"Over the past weeks, the Soldiers achieved the standards required to be called Infantrymen," said 1st Sgt. Ben Adams, D Company first sergeant.

"This is the step that transforms a Soldier from a civilian to an Infantryman. They join the Infantry brotherhood. Honor Hill is symbolic to their welcoming."

Torches light the Soldiers' path to the landing where they are greeted by a U.S. flag with a bonfire on each side and unlighted torches in front of it.

As the Soldiers fill their canteen cups with "grog" — usually a sports drink concoction — they make a horseshoe formation around the flag as their drill sergeants light torches and talk about different battles.

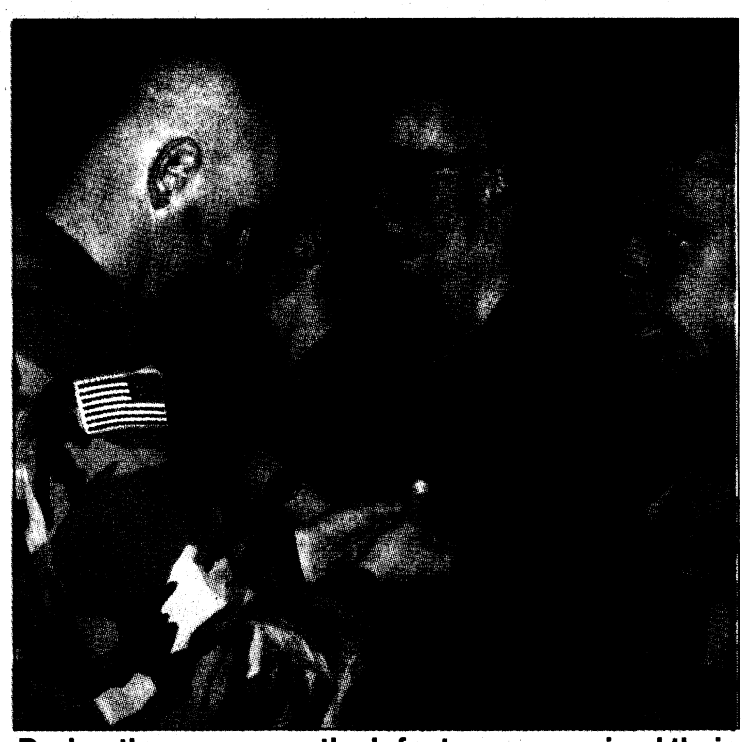
The Soldiers learn that each torch represents the different American battles the Infantry has fought gallantly and won, Adams said.

The last torch is lighted by the company's honor graduate.

The final torch represents the battles of the future that the Soldiers will fight as Infantrymen.

After lighting the torches and toasting the Infantry, the Soldiers had their crossed rifles pinned by their drill sergeants.

The crossed rifles are the symbol of the Infantry, which represent the warrior spirit and the battle focus of the brigade and its mission.

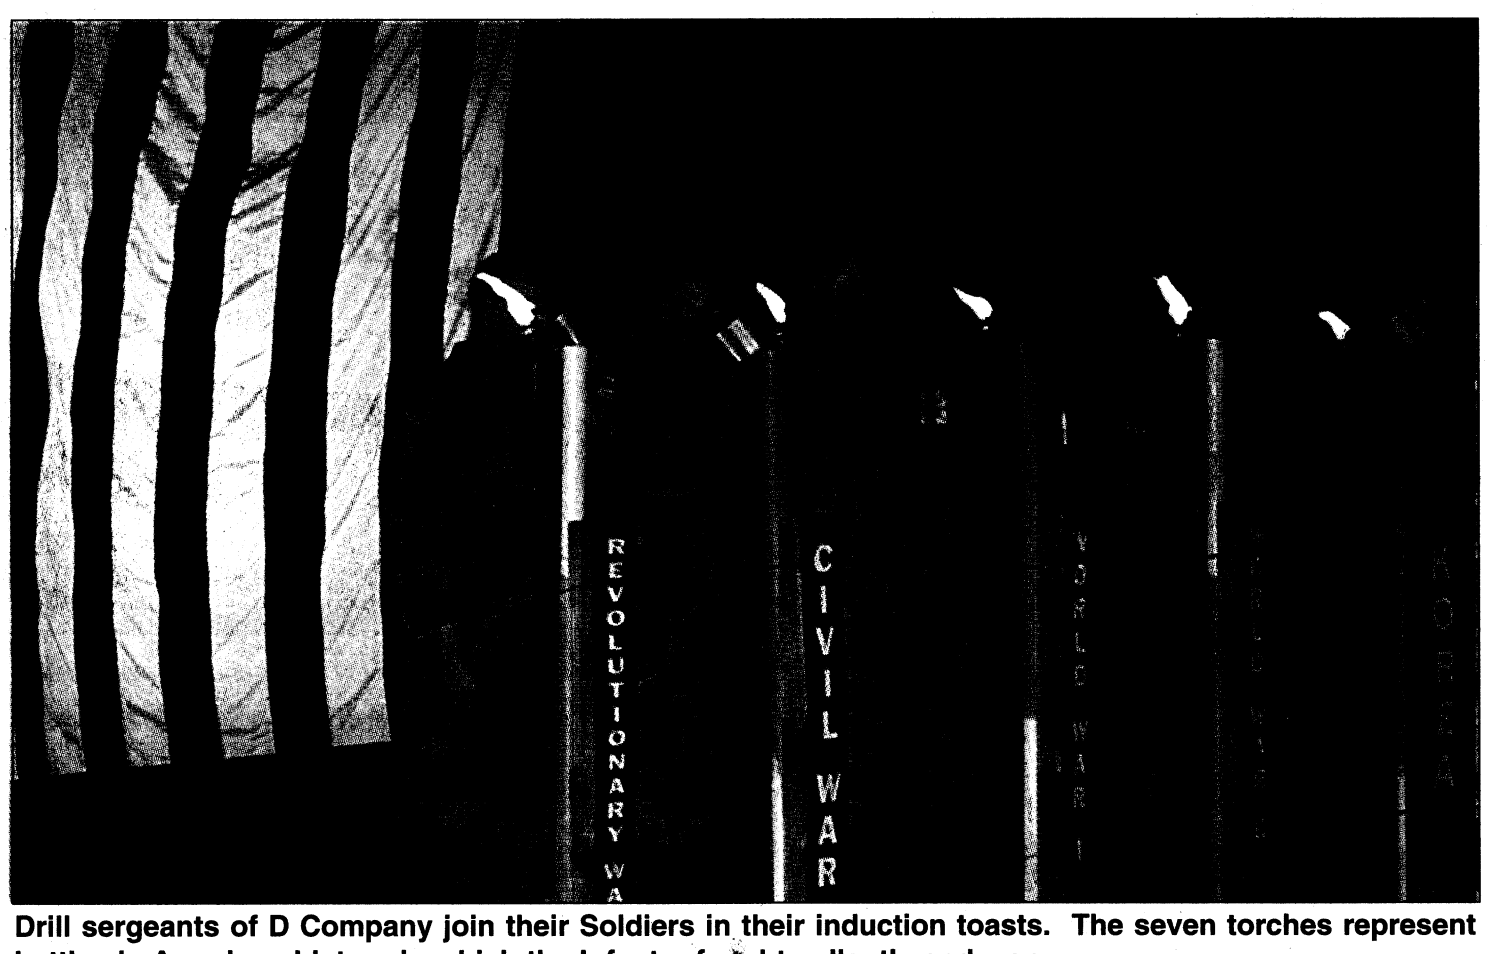


For Pvt. Bob Body, the ceremony brought a feeling of camaraderie that he had never experienced before.

A former Marine, Body joined the Army after Sept. 11, and said this ceremony was the culmination of everything he had been working so hard for.

"It's about time," Body said. "This makes it all worthwhile."

At the end of the ceremony, Pvt. James Harrell, company honor graduate, took over the formation as all the Soldiers recited the Infantryman's Creed.



The company marched back to their company area where they were greeted by the Soldiers of E Company cheering them on.

During the ceremony, the Infantrymen received their crossed rifles, which represent the warrior spirit and battle focus of the brigade and its mission.

Pvt. James Harrell, honor graduate of D Company, leads his comrades in reciting the Infantrymen's creed.

Drill sergeants of D Company join their Soldiers in their induction toasts. The seven torches represent battles in American history in which the Infantry fought gallantly and won.

Soldiers benefit from new distance learning

Earn promotion points through online courses

Meggan Kring
Distributed Learning System

Step through the Army's portal to promotion points and better pay — interested? Read on.

Imagine being able to go online, select a course you need for promotion points or an upcoming deployment, without ever leaving your duty station or your home.

Now you can register for that course, take the course and have the results put in your training and personnel record for credit accountability and, for enlisted personnel, for promotion points. The promotion points, of course, lead to better pay.

You don't have to imagine being able to do this. It's here. The Army is revolutionizing Army training with the Distributed Learning System.

DLS is the infrastructure that delivers distributed learning, providing the Soldier self-development, unit and mission-critical training to support both synchronous training (where the instructor and student interact while linked via videoconferencing, teleconferencing or the Internet) and asynchronous training (where the instructor and student interact via e-mail and the Internet). Distributed learning instruction may not even require an instructor's presence.

"One of the things that's important to the Army leadership from the chief of staff on down, whether it's the officer or the NCO chain, is Soldiers being able to reach out and touch training — that's the bottom line message," said Col. Sharon Holmes.

Holmes is the Project Manager for DLS, which consists of five components including Digital Training Facilities, the Army Learning Management System, Army e-Learning, Enterprise Management Center and the Deployed Digital Training Campus.

Soldiers can take advantage of the DLS DTF's, which were developed to provide Soldiers a place to access Web-based, job-related and self-development courses away from the work place and distractions of home.

DLS, under the direction of Holmes, has successfully fielded 274 fully operational DTFs worldwide. TRADOC oversees the development of Military Occupational Specialty Qualification courseware and is an integral part of the Army team fielding the Army LMS. DLS is currently fielding a new Army LMS that provides access to distributed learning courseware and facilitates collaboration with other students and instructors.

The combined capabilities will make training coordination more efficient, delivery more flexible and provide Soldiers the ability to track their own training history.

Distributed learning affords the Soldier many benefits, including increased training flexibility and opportunities, and less time away from their duty station and family.

"DLS provides ... the opportunity to distribute standardized training to Soldiers and units through the application of information technology," Holmes said.

For more information, visit www.dis.army.mil, or call the Fort Benning DTF manager at 545-9086.

Staff Sgt. Cecile Morgan-Green and Sgt. Dale Scott verify tax documents before they are sent out. Morgan-Green and Scott volunteer at the Tax Center.

Ten years ago, Staff Sgt. Cecile Morgan-Green was given two options — join the Army as a mortician or legal specialist.

The choice was easy.

"They said (paralegal) was a good job, and I agree," she said. "I've been doing this for ten years and I absolutely love it. This is a people-person job, and I love people."

At the nine-week advanced individual training course at Fort Jackson, S.C., the 27Ds dabble in the various aspects of the job. They spend two weeks learning to type 35 words per minute, and then spent the rest of the time learning how to prepare Article 15s, court-martial packets and chapter packets.

"The job is mostly hands-on knowledge rather than school knowledge," said Green, with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Infantry Center. "I think the job is much better than what I was told it would be. I love my job. I can't say that enough. The only part that I hate is criminal law division — courts-martial.

"You feel so sorry for those people, but they did the (crime) and need to be punished."

Green said her favorite part of her MOS is legal assistance and trial defense.

"In trial defense, the ones who are getting court-martialed come in and spill their guts to us, then we find the best way to help defend them — if they come clean," she said. "Our motto is, 'Defending those who defend America.'"

Legal assistance mostly deals with family law, Green said. Many people come in for help with unpaid child support, something the 27Ds really can't help with.

Green said her job is varied and always interesting.

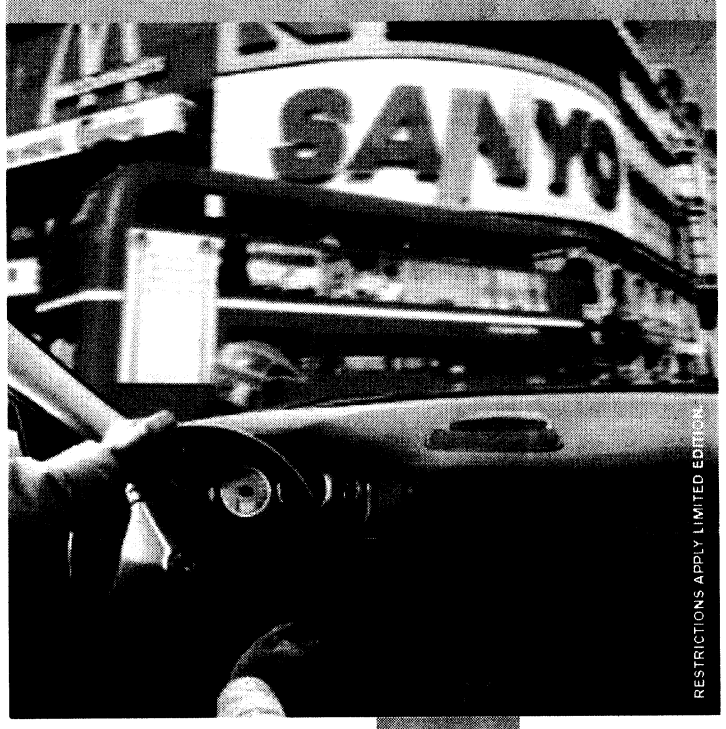
Paralegals can work as legal assistants, in claims, administrative law, criminal law, trial defense, operational law and as court reporters.

"To do this job you have to be a people person and have a good personality," Green said. "You deal mostly with the public, and need to be very patient.

"We love our MOS and you don't find many people who leave it."

The best part, Green said, is helping others.

"Seeing how you can help someone," she said, "and hearing 'Thank you," or 'God bless you' is such a pleasure."



The British are coming! The British are coming!

Fort Benning will host the United Kingdom/U.S.A. Sports Social today from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. at Doughboy Stadium. The teams will play rugby, softball and soccer. There will be a cocktail party at the Officers' Club sponsored by the U.K.

ARE YOU ONE OF THEM?

2,800 Georgians possible ID theft victims

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

An information management company, ChoicePoint Inc. was scammed into disclosing the personal and financial information of about 147,000 Americans to con artists who used the information to steal people's identities.

The company discovered the fraud in October 2004, but claim the Los Angeles Police Department would not allow them to contact victims until January, because it would interfere with the ongoing investigations.

The perpetrators gained access to names and addresses, social security numbers, driver's license numbers, credit reports, and financial information such as bankruptcies, liens, judgements, professional licenses, and property information.

The criminals got around security measures by setting up at least 50 accounts with the company using stolen identities of individuals who worked for legitimate businesses in the Los Angeles area. Posing as agencies doing background checks, they had information electronically sent to them, according to ChoicePoint.

ChoicePoint said the criminals were very sophisticated and able to circumvent security measures because of the fake identities. At the time of the fraud, the information checked out, so the company didn't detect a problem, until they started noticing a lot of requests for information being faxed in from Kinkos stores in the Los Angeles area. So far, police have identified 750 cases of identity theft resulting from information obtained through ChoicePoint.

Nigerian Olatunji Oluwatosin, currently of North Hollywood, pled no contest to charges of fraud last week and was sentenced to 16 months in prison. Oluwatosin was apprehended after he returned to the same Kinkos he had previously sent fraudulent requests from.

While people in California, Texas and Florida seem to be the most affected at this point, information was stolen concerning people in all 50 states and three U.S. territories.

California is the only state that requires companies to notify consumers if they may have had their information stolen. ChoicePoint said they will notify the rest of the people who had their information stolen, but it is possible that more people were affected. In Georgia, 2,805 people will be notified that their information may have been compromised.

ChoicePoint, based out of Alpharetta, Ga., near Atlanta, has accounts with about 50,000 corporate and government agencies. The multibillion dollar company sells information on millions of Americans for checks on background, credit and security, and owns 50 other information companies.

Identity fraud is currently the fastest growing crime in America, with ten million victims a year.

In the case of ChoicePoint, consumers had no control, but normally there are ways to protect against identity theft, said Ann Pratcher, manager of Financial Readiness, Army Community Service.

"The thing that's so eerie with the nature of this crime is that people had no control over their information," Pratcher said. "Many of them didn't even know that ChoicePoint had this information on them. It's a common problem. A lot of people aren't aware of the information collected about them."

Pratcher gave this advice to protect yourself against identity fraud.

• Georgia residents are entitled to two free credit reports every year from the major credit reporting agencies. Get a copy of your credit report and check it carefully.

• Be careful with your mail, both what you send and what you receive. Put mail in a post office box, not out in the mail box.

• Many identity thefts happen after a thief changes a victim's address without that person ever knowing. If you seem to be receiving less mail than usual or missing items, call your post office.

• Check account statements carefully, and keep a log of transactions, especially if you suspect there might be a problem.

> "The thing that's so eerie with the nature of this crime is that people had no control over their information. Many of them didn't even know that ChoicePoint had this information on them."

> Manager of Financial Readiness

• Don't write your social security number on checks or give it out frivolously. Only financial and government institutions have the right to ask for it.

• Before giving out information, verify that the company is legitimate. Make sure that you initiated the contact, not the other way around, before giving out information.

• Don't provide information to insecure Web sites, and keep your firewalls and spyware detectors updated on your computer.

If you think you may be a victim of identity fraud or to learn more about protecting yourself, call Financial Readiness at 545-5485.

These flipping quarters!

Study: Says schools not cost effective

Commission. The president is not expected to make a BRAC decision before September. That's good news, said Chuck Walls, Fort Benning's garrison manager.

"Obviously it's not the news we wanted," Walls said, "but it gives us a clear understanding of where they stand, and it gives us the opportunity to clarify our position. It gives us more time to work on the issue.

"Our position is, and always has been, that we want our schools to stay under DoDEA," he said.

Fort Benning teachers received word of the panel's recommendations when they returned to school Tuesday. Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of the Georgia and Alabama District, sent a letter home with students Wednesday alerting parents about the study release.

McMullen was unavailable for comment at press time.

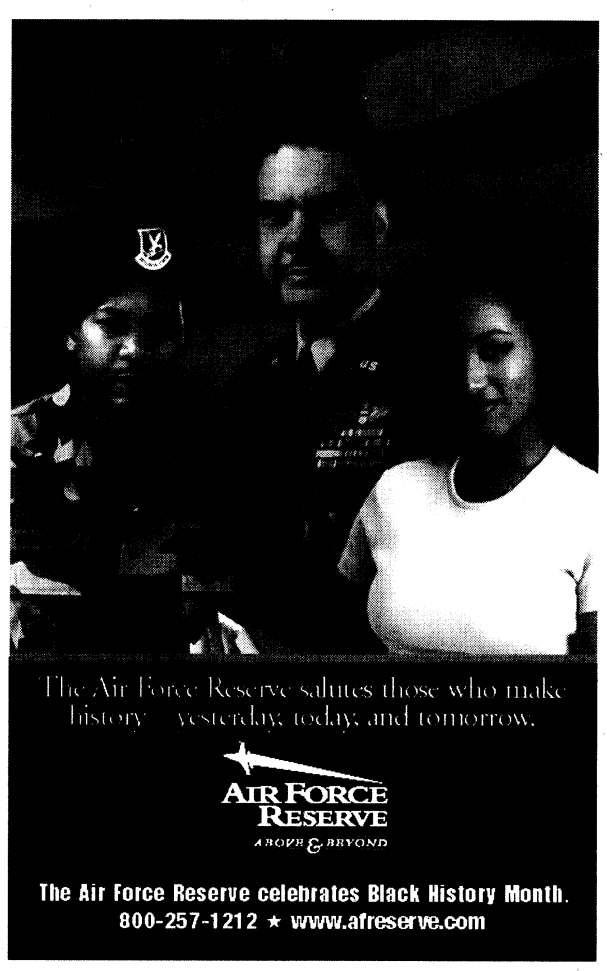
The Donahue Institute of the University of Massachusetts completed the second phase of a three-part study on the feasibility of transferring control of 58 stateside schools to local school systems. Included in this phase was an analysis of costs involved in such a transfer.

The first phase included an assessment of the condition of school facilities, and the third phase, the results of which had not been published at press time, studied the affect a transfer would have on the military family's quality of life, if any.

The purpose of the UMASS team's study, according to DoDEA's executive study summary posted on its Web site, www.DoDEA.edu, was "to design and develop a systematic, thorough and objective data collection and cost benefit analysis" to turn over to the panel, which included Kern Alexander, Richard Salmon and Deborah Verstegen, all experts in the field of education finance.

During the data collection phase, the study team "built upon" data collected in previous studies, reviewed financial documents and demographic data, and visited installations, where they met with school officials and military leaders.

Fort Benning's Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley traveled to Peachtree City, Ga., in October 2003 to urge DoDEA Director Dr. Joe Tafoya to reject the idea of transferring the post's 3,000 elementary and middle school students to local systems.



The panel's proposal would do just that — transfer responsibility for Fort Benning students to Chattahoochee County, which educates less than 500 students.

The panel recommended a "special arrangement contract" to enable students from Loyd and McBride schools to attend Chattahoochee County Schools. Loyd and McBride are located in Muscogee County.

The experts also recommended DoDEA remain responsible for the maintenance, operation and improvement of post schools. They would simply be "turned over" to Chattahoochee County.

DoDEA would also continue to offer a preK program, as Georgia employs a lottery system for preK enrollment.

Schools at Alabama's Fort Rucker and Maxwell Air Force Base, also part of DoDEA's Georgia/Alabama School District, will not be transferred to local systems, if officials heed the panel's advice. Robins Air Force Base, Ga., would transfer to the Houston County School System.

Salie: Buried Wednesday on post

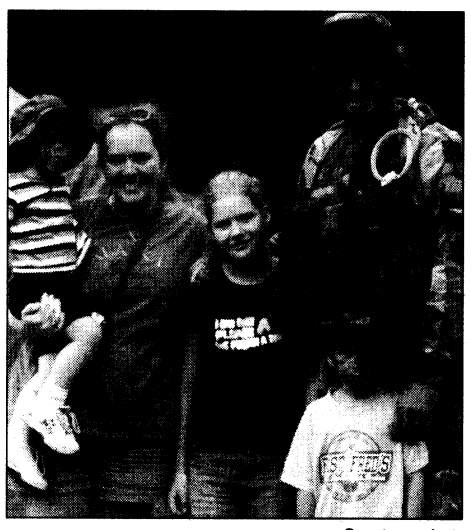
Division, where he experienced a pivotal moment in his career, one he related to famed military reporter Joe Galloway, who called Salie a friend.



While guarding a street between two American checkpoints, Salie watched a car approach. The Soldiers didn't get word that the car had been cleared, so when it sped toward them, they opened fire, killing everyone in it, including a pregnant woman on her way to the hospital.

"David said he thought long and hard after that incident," Galloway wrote in a Feb. 17 tribute to Salie. "In the end, he decided the right thing to do was stay in the Army and work his way up the ranks so he could train Soldiers, teaching them to avoid such costly mistakes."

As a sergeant first class, Salie was doing just that, Toon said, "he was a shining example of ... a leader, a teacher and a mentor."

Salie was buried Wednesday at the Fort Benning Main Post Cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, Deanna, two daughters, Chyna and Haley, and two sons, Lucas and Hunter. His parents, Patricia Miers and James Salie, live locally.

his bags, kissed his wife and two children and left for what he calls "the heart of it all."

"I didn't want to be an officer, because this is my first time in, and I want the whole experience of the Army," Hayes said. "I knew physically I could hang with anybody in the Infantry, and mentally I'd be OK."

Only four weeks into basic training, Hayes knows his decision to leave the stadium and move on was a good one. As a private, he is making less money, but that doesn't bother him.

"Fortunately I've seen both sides of the fence, and it's more important to do something you enjoy," he said. "I think the only reason I (played) ball was because I was caught up in the money. When it came down to it, money wasn't important."

Hayes now focuses on being a good Soldier and leader. His football training comes in handy at Sand Hill.

"In (football), you learn to push your body and not quit. You might crawl, but you don't stop," Hayes said. "In football, you get told what to do and you learn not to take offense. It motivates you."

Hayes said the same is true in the Army.

"Basic training is a lot like spring training," he said. "But this is more interesting — I get to play with weapons and roll in the dirt and navigate terrain."

Company Commander Capt. John Westbrook said Hayes is a "good example of a citizen Soldier."

"He's definitely an asset to the platoon," Westbrook said. "He's not arrogant or egotistical about where he came from. He's very committed to being a Soldier, and it's evident in the way he carries himself.

"He's not trying to spotlight himself," Westbrook said. "He doesn't want special treatment. He's just one of the guys."

Robotripping

Are your children doing it?

A survey of more than 7,000 teenagers by the Partnership for a Drug-Free America shows one in five reported taking a prescription painkiller without a doctor's prescription.

- Teens who smoke are three times more likely to use alcohol, eight times more likely to use marijuana and 22 times more likely to use cocaine.
- July is the most common month for kids to start using drugs. That's when they're least supervised, prone to boredom and most susceptible to peer pressure.

Kids are raiding medicine cabinet for high

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Would you recognize a drug dealer if you saw one? Try looking in the mirror.

In a report released late last year, the Partnership for a Drug-Free America warned kids are getting high at an alarming rate using drugs they find at home in mom and dad's medicine cabinet.

It's a national epidemic, the report said, and though it's growing fastest in the middle-class suburbs, no demographic is immune — not even Fort Benning, where 12 middle and high school students have been caught in the past few weeks sharing prescription and over-the-counter drugs with their classmates.

The students attended three schools, including two Muscogee County high schools, and all were suspended or reassigned to the Academic Success Center in Columbus.

One mother, who asked not to be identified, said her child and a friend purchased Xanax, a tranquilizer, from a classmate. One student passed out in the restroom and was hospitalized for several days.

"It takes one second, one stupid decision, to ruin your life," the mother said. "His is pretty much ruined for the next few years."

A juvenile court judge ordered the students to attend the alternative school, undergo random drug testing and relinquish or delay getting their drivers' licenses for at least two years.

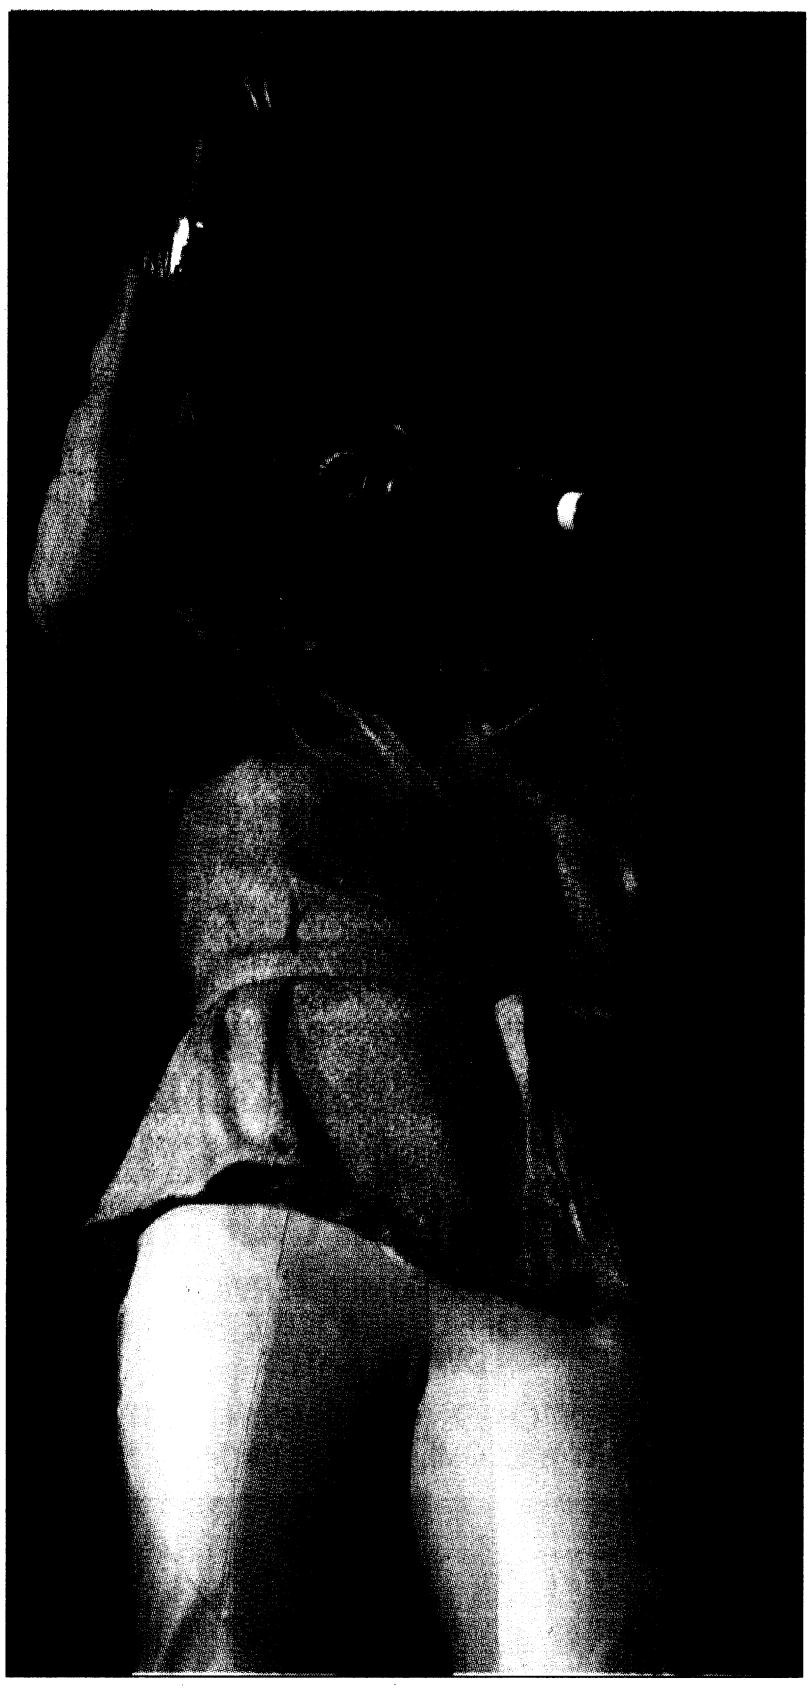
"My son has never been in trouble before, he made good grades, he was a near-perfect kid," the mother said. "Why would he let peer pressure do this to him?"

According to the American Medical Association, there's a reason the young man's mother didn't see it coming. This kind of drug abuse, in the early stage, isn't typically accompanied by the warning signs parents have been trained to look for.

"Some of this can go on and not be noticed by parents and peers," said Michael Maves, chief executive of the AMA, in a Washington Post article dated Oct. 8. 2004.

"It sometimes doesn't stand out like other things, in terms of truly illegal drugs, but it's no less serious."

Though the vast majority of commonly abused household drugs are not physically addictive, they are psychologically addictive and damage the brain, respiratory system and heart. The number of deaths attributed to "legal" drug abuse is rising.



Still, prescription and over-the-counter drug abuse continues to spread quickly, officials said, because these kinds of drugs are "fashionable" in the way ecstasy was fashionable in the 1990s, but much easier to obtain. It's no challenge for a computer savvy teen to order prescription drugs online, and there are countless "how to" Web sites and chat rooms devoted to the subject.

"Why use weed when you can Robotrip? You don't need a dealer to get high," one site reads, referring to one of the most popular trends in drug abuse, the use of cold syrups like Robitussin to get high and induce hallucinations.

Concert empowers, inspires women

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

"We want to build you up, not only in body, but in spirit and soul," said R&B singer and songwriter Kelly Price. "We want you to have three hundred and sixty degrees of joy. That's why we're here."

The "we" Price is referred to is the multi-talented cast of women who performed in the Sisters in the Spirit concert Monday night at the Columbus Civic Center. The event, sponsored by the MWR, was created to help women become empowered and find a common tie through music and worship, Price said.

"Tonight is about you ladies. You were meant to be here tonight, and you will walk out of here with the spirit," she said to the predominately female audience. "If I had to put a theme to what we are doing here, I would say it was to be three hundred and sixty degrees whole."

Price said women need to feel whole and complete. They need to find balance, to take time to strengthen themselves instead of always helping everyone else while neglecting their own needs and wants.

"We feel that if we look out for ourselves, we are selfish," Price said, "but God expects you to take care of yourself. Your whole emotional needs need to be met so you can raise your whole children.

"That's why we're here, because we want you to have some abundance in life."

The concert featured Price, Grammy award winner Yolanda Adams, preacher Dr. Juanita Bynum, singer and songwriter Martha Munizzi, drummer and singer Sheila E. and the musical group RiZen.

"We watch Juanita on TV, and with her ministries and how she blesses us — we just had to come," said Vicki Williams of Phenix City. "This has been awesome with all the worship and ministry. It has just been amazing."

CG leads post prayer breakfast

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Following in a tradition begun by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1953, members of the tricommunity gathered at the Officers' Club for the National Prayer Breakfast.

The breakfast evolved from small groups of senators and representatives who met for prayer and Bible study during World War II in to Eisenhower's Presidential Prayer Breakfast. The name changed in 1970 to emphasize the purpose of the gathering — prayer — rather than the president.

President Bush spoke Feb. 3 at the celebration in Washington, D.C., less than 10 hours after delivering his State of the Union address, said Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin. Bush praised prayer as "one of the great equalizers in American life. Here, we thank God for his great blessings in one voice, regardless of our background."

"That is what we are here for today," Cocklin said. "We, too, ask for God's wisdom, guidance and blessings."

The celebration featured special music performed by Staff Sgt. Albert Davis, and readings by Fort Benning chaplains and members of the local Jewish, Muslim, and Mormon communities.

Cocklin said it is customary to invite someone from out-of-town to come and motivate, inspire and challenge the audience.

"Brigadier General Benjamin Freakley, our speaker is of the caliber that if he wasn't already here, we'd be inviting him to come," Cocklin said.

"But let me tell you a few things not found in his biography," he said. "His compassion for Soldiers and their families knows no limits and he has a solid faith that is unwavering."

Freakley said the nation is still striving toward the ideal of "one nation under God," and like our forefathers Washington and Lincoln, we are again a nation in prayer, engaged in a fight we didn't ask for.

Wilson student's Arbor Day art takes state title

A Wilson Elementary School budding artist received accolades last week for a poster he drew for his art teacher.

Feb. 16, Raul Delgado and his family traveled to Atlanta and met the governor, who presented him a certificate of recognition from the National Arbor Day Foundation.

Raul was honored Feb. 17 at a ceremony outside his school for "his outstanding, creative representation of the important role of trees in cities and towns." His original poster won the Georgia state Arbor Day Art Contest.

Delgado

"We want everyone to try to get into these activities," said Georgia forester Johnny Williams.

Raul is the first winner to come from Williams' forestry district, and after receiving his certificate, Raul helped the forester plant new trees in front of the school.

Bill Diesselhorst, the Georgia and Alabama District assistant superintendent, issued a proclamation from the Arbor Day Foundation, celebrating the importance of trees, green space and environmental stewardship for the future. More than 100 years ago, he said, J. Sterling Morton, the Arbor Day founder, began transforming Nebraska prairie into forest.

"Trees help all of us to have a better future," he said. "We're adding beauty."

Diesselhorst had Raul and his classmates promise to "cherish, protect and care for the trees at the school" — a job that would be a 'treemendous' responsibility.

Raul drew his prize-winning sketch of a house with a tree behind it.

Although he said his favorite subject is science, he enjoyed drawing the poster and thought he'd enter a few more contests.

Raul's mother, Gloria Delgado, said the family went to Atlanta with Raul.

"It was a great experience for all of us," she said.

Gloria said she did a lot of painting and drawing with her son when he was younger, and that may have played a part in his interest in art.

"He's so creative," she said. "He enjoys to paint and draw."

She said Raul came home one day and told her he had a poster to make, and a week later, told her he was going to enter a state contest.

"He put a lot of emotion and dedication into that poster," she said.

Doctor gives advice to alleviate allergy symptoms, suffering

Dr. Bill Dolen
MCG Health System

Every spring, millions of Americans continue to live with seasonal allergy symptoms, despite the fact that relief is available for the drippy nose, sneezing, congestion, and itchy, watery eyes caused by allergies to tree pollens and other sources. The following are the top five steps allergy sufferers should take in order to help relieve the onset of symptoms:

• Anticipate. Seasonal allergies happen at predictable times. If you first start having trouble every year during the second week of March, then be sure you have current refills and start taking your medications the first week of March. Seasonal allergies are easier to treat when caught early, before they get severe.

• Seek relief. Many people try to tough out the allergy season, leaving them miserable, decreasing their work productivity and affecting their general quality of life. Don't just put up with the symptoms. From medications to immunotherapy, relief is available.

• Limit side effects. Some medications may cause side effects such as sleepiness. If these side effects are intruding in your daily life, know that you don't have to put up with them. If you're having trouble, tell your doctor, who can find other treatments that have fewer side effects.

• Don't just self-treat. If you're self-treating with over-the-counter medications but not getting enough relief, see your doctor. With the proper medication, seasonal allergies can be kept under control.

• Seek professional advice. Ask your doctor whether you should consult with a board-certified, trained allergist-immunologist. A specialist can help you find out exactly what you are allergic to (which will help predict when you might have trouble), and can work with your regular doctor to find a personalized medication strategy. Allergy shots are still the best hope for long-term relief of seasonal allergies.

Currently there is no cure for seasonal allergies, but by working with a medical professional to find the right medications and by staying on a medication regimen, it is possible to help prevent the misery of the allergy season.

Beware of pay-per-call numbers

Better Business Bureau

You can get everything from recorded sports scores to psychic reading by calling 900 numbers. These numbers are also used to conduct surveys or contests or charitable fund-raising.

The information provider, the company or organization you call, sets its own price for the service and usually bills you through your local telephone company.

The Federal Telephone Disclosure and Dispute Resolution Act governs pay-per-call services in the United States. It requires advertisements for such services to include:

• the cost of the call — it may be a flat rate, a per-minute charge, or calculated on some other basis. The ad must state the maximum amount you can be charged,

• the odds of winning or the factors that determine your chance of winning any sweepstakes, prizes or awards, and how you can enter the contest without calling the 900 number,

• if it is a private company offering information about federal programs,

• and that the company is not endorsed, approved or authorized by the government.

Generally, 800, 888 or 877 numbers are toll-free. However, charges for pay-per-call services through these numbers are allowed if the consumer:

• signs a written contract that describes the service and how much it will cost,

• verbally agrees to provide their credit card account, debit or calling card number to pay for the charges.

It is illegal to be connected to a 900 number pay-per-call service through a toll-free number, or for a pay-per-call service to call you back collect after you have dialed a number that you thought was toll-free.

To protect your business against unauthorized pay-per-call charges, the Better Business Bureau suggests the following:

• don't make the call if you don't know the cost,

• be aware that if you are placed on hold, you may be charged for that time,

• do not respond to urgent messages from strangers to call pay-per-call numbers.

Fraudulent pay-per-call services, usually based outside the U.S., may leave messages pretending to be calling about a family emergency, a prize or a debt. Find out where unfamiliar area codes are based. If you call the number of business based in another country, you may be dialing a pay-per-call service.

If you use a pay-per-call service, carefully examine your phone bill, and review the charges.

Drugs: Found at home can kill

are hard to track, officials admitted, but the number of calls from teens to poison control centers nationwide about cough medicine abuse has more than doubled in the last five years. And prescription drugs are now second only to marijuana as a category of illicit substance abused by teens, according to a 2003 survey.

Recently, several national chains, such as CVS, Wal-Mart and Walgreens, have begun checking ID when selling certain cough and cold medicines.

At CVS, you must be 18 to buy products containing Coricidin, which is often used in "cocktails" with drugs such as Dramamine or NyQuil. Consumed in quantities, Coricidin pills cause a high similar to ketamine, a hallucinogen.

"Punch bowl cocktails," a frat party staple for years, are now popular with middle and high schoolers who combine prescription painkillers like Percodan and Vicodin with alcohol and over-the-counter liquid medicines. Even mouthwash is used.

But more and more, teens are opting to skip the party altogether. Prescription pills are more convenient, more discreet and more lucrative. The Fort Benning teen paid $1 for the Xanax, but easy-to-obtain prescription pills, such as Ritalin and Adderall, typically sell for up to $5 a piece.

Fort Benning school officials frown on the sharing of medicines of any kind, said Robyn Hughey, Faith Middle School's eighth-grade counselor. The school's policy forbids students to "self-medicate" or share medicines, even those they consider harmless or helpful. A "real friend," she said, will send a sick friend to the nurse's office.

"You never know who might have an adverse reaction to anything," Hughey said. "Our primary concern, always, is safety." Hughey urged parents to watch for the warning signs of drug abuse — behavioral changes, a drop in grades and a new crowd of friends.

But the Fort Benning teen showed none of these symptoms, and his mother warned parents not to assume their children are immune.

"I never thought my son would do it. He's a good kid," she said.

"Don't ever think it can't happen to you."

Prayer: One way to have peace

"How do we get through?" Freakley asked. "With a triangle centered on God."

The first two parts of the triangle, he said, are tactical fitness — being faster than your opponent on any day of the battle — and physical fitness and strength to make it to 70 or 80 years old.

"The third is spiritual fitness," he said. "You have to have the holy sprit. And there's only one field manual, the Bible, and one trainer, the Lord."

Freakley chose three men from the Bible to illustrate spiritual fitness — Joshua, Jabez and Paul.

"You should read the book of Joshua from cover to cover," Freakley said. "He was an 11B, an infantryman, a private and a scout. And he became the combatant commander of the army of Israel. He was commissioned by the Lord.

"Imagine the Lord speaking to you as you deploy to Iraq or Afghanistan," Freakley said. "Do not tremble, do not be dismayed, for the Lord is with you wherever you go."

He said the prayer breakfast is all about communication. Without meditating of God's word and praying, people aren't communicating.

Jabez, he said, knew and respected the Lord and wanted to be in his good will. Paul counseled the people to rejoice in the Lord and to be anxious about nothing.

"I was a brigade S-3 in Desert Storm and I prayed as hard as I could for their safety," Freakley said.

"It was phenomenal, the peace that came to me. I experienced it and I want you to experience it.

"When you understand that God is in the center of the triangle, you don't have to worry about anything," Freakley said. "And I want to encourage you to pray like the leaders in the Bible — for yourselves, for each other. And we will never be 'one nation under God' unless we pray for each other.

Concert: Focuses on women

Williams said the concert was a way to strengthen and edify women in many different aspects of life.

"If you leave here and are not encouraged and uplifted, something is wrong," she said.

"If you're living what you sing, when you leave here, this feeling will never die."

Sharwander Pearman and Renee Thornton drove over an hour from Americus to be at the concert and to "be blessed."

Pearman wanted to improve her spirit, and said she had reached a new level of spirituality by the end of the concert.

"It's amazing to see the connection they make with being a women and how we're all woven in a bond," she said.

"We are all here to endure, and this helps us make it."

Jordan Jennings displays some of the books she donated to the hospital.

Third-grader celebrates birthday by giving gifts

Donates books to hospital

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Jordan Jennings had a groovy idea for her ninth birthday. She invited her third-grade classmates to donate children's books to Martin Army Community Hospital.

"I got so much for Christmas — everything I wanted. So I just decided to help other kids," said Jordan, who celebrated her Feb. 2 birthday with a '60s and '70s themed party.

Decked in bell-bottoms and tie-dye, Jordan's friends came bearing new books, 30 in all, which she delivered to Joe Emehiser, the director of the Fort Benning station of the Red Cross.

Emehiser said the books will be placed in areas around the hospital, such as waiting rooms and the pediatrics ward, where children can enjoy them.

"I'm really impressed with this young lady — that she'd think about reaching out to others on her birthday," Emehiser said.

Jordan is the daughter of Maj. Darren and Michelle Jennings. Michelle said her daughter "couldn't think of a thing" she wanted for her birthday.

So Michelle suggested they "try something different," something that would serve a greater purpose.

"We've been bombarded with devastating images of the tsunami and the children in Iraq. There's a lot of suffering going on," Michelle said. "I know we couldn't do anything on such a grand scale, but we could tackle a problem locally. That's when she came up with the book idea."

Michelle said the birthday party book drive was a success because Jordan's classmates at Dexter Elementary supported the idea. It's an idea her daughter would like to see "catch on."

"I think it would be a good idea if other people did it," she said.

Dear Soldier,

I'm writing to you with the utmost respect and heartfelt thanks. You are doing something remarkably brave for our country and the futures of everyone residing in it.

At times you may feel you can't take another step or you don't want to live the lifestyle of fighting and moving all over anymore, but that's when you push onward and continue with the march to victory.

I can understand and have empathy for your situation as I am the daughter of an active-duty Army lieutenant, and I, too, become discouraged.

When I become distressed, I remember what you, my father and the other Soldiers like you are doing for everyone in such a selfless manner. I realize that you are putting your life on the line and fighting to help me and so many others who are still looking at "what they want to be when they grow up," to give us the freedom we were born with and sometimes take for granted.

You are an inspiration to millions of American citizens, as you are one who has answered the call of our great nation in a time of trouble. You were brave enough to go out and fight for one of the greatest privileges this world has to offer, and you still haven't given up, and because of this you have my gratitude and my utmost respect.

The thoughts and well wishes of many are with you in your time of need. You are a Soldier, and I hope you can regain the strength that's been lost and push toward another day, another thought, another goal and the courage to continue on. You have given of yourself and you are truly a hero because of that.

Sincerely,
Santina Chamberlain

It's that glorious time of year when Christmas and all its gifts are a memory, and the holidays and all their bills are all too much of a reality. How'd you do this year? Are you free and clear of the undertow of overspending and the financial quicksand of yuletide mismanagement, or does the month of February have you scratching your head wondering, "Now tell me, how'd I do this to myself again?"

If things are feeling more than a little pinched at your house, realize that you're in good company. In fact, take the quiz below and see which statements you think are false, true or exaggerated:

At age 65 ...

- Nearly half of all Americans are dependent on relatives.
- Nearly one-fourth are still working.
- Only 2 percent of all Americans ever reach the point of being able to live off the financial resources they've accumulated.
- One-third of all Americans are dependent on charity.

If you thought each was true, you are absolutely correct. Amazing, isn't it? Most folks I know (especially a good number of us in the military trying to make ends meet on a limited budget) could benefit from a financial "extreme makeover."

What are the keys to getting your money matters under control and achieving financial security? Well, in his excellent resource, Master Your Money, author Ron Blue gives a step-by-step plan for getting from where you are to where you want to be regarding your finances. I'll take the next few weeks and take a look at how he can help you tidy up your financial house. But before we get into specifics, read closely the four biblical principles he shares that can help you dig out of any financial hole and get control of your money so that your money doesn't get control of you.

Principle One — God owns it all. An owner has rights — a steward has responsibilities. I'm not the owner of my money, God is. So my role is to, first of all, be responsible with what he gives me.

Principle Two — We are in a growth process. Money can be a great teacher. God uses it in our lives as a tool, a test and as a testimony.

Principle Three — The amount is not important. Wealth is not sinful and poverty has no virtue. It's what we do with what God gives us, great or small, that makes the difference.

Principle Four — Faith requires action. You can't fake what your checkbook reveals. Our spending is a reflection of our values.

Tune in next week, and we'll take a look at how to launch yourself toward financial freedom and the joy that comes in living life free from financial slavery. In the meantime, if we can help you here at the Family Life Center with some financial coaching or referrals to our money experts at Army Community Services, give us a call at 545-1760 or introduce yourself to me at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel.

A mother whose only son was preparing for college wrote the following letter to the college president:

"Dear Sir,

My son has been accepted for admission to your college and he will soon be leaving me.

I am writing to ask that you give your personal attention to the selection of his roommate. I want to be sure that his roommate is not the kind of person who uses foul language or tells off-color jokes, smokes, drinks or chases after girls.

I hope you will understand why I am appealing to you directly. You see, this is the first time my son will be away from home, except for his three years in the Marines."

REFLECTIONS

Nothing, apparently, could make that mother let go. Not even the U.S. Marines. Our savior comes to us today telling us we've got to let go.

In the Gospel lesson about the seed dying first before it can come to life, Jesus was trying to prepare his disciples for his death.

They didn't want to hear about it. They refused to accept it. They couldn't believe that he whom they had experienced as lord of life was going to be executed. In order to help them understand, Jesus told them a simple, beautiful story about the seed.

Jesus told them his death was absolutely necessary if there was to be new life; that the great God who sent him as lord of life was a God who worked through a process of death and resurrection; that was the way God had chosen to bring new life into the world. Unless Jesus died, the fulfillment the disciples had begun to feel in his presence would not bear fruit.

Jesus was emphasizing in the strongest possible terms that God was in control.

"Thy will be done," we pray, to which we add, "on earth as it is in heaven." This means "God's will is done perfectly and unconditionally."

But how do we put it into effect? It is a problem of motivation. We have to want to do the will of God and not merely do it out of a sense of duty.

Some of us come to church out of sense of obligation. There is a grimness about it. "I have to go to church," we say.

The great breakthrough comes when we realize that genuine joy and satisfaction can come only by seeking the will of God.

The Lord Jesus is the supreme model of joyful, expectant, unconditional letting go and giving oneself over to the will of God.

"Unless a grain of wheat falls to the earth and dies, it remains alone. But if it dies, it bears much fruit." When you feel the pressure to judge your life by man's standards, not God's, let go of the old values.

Let them die, so that you can begin to grow into the new life of joy and peace. Let go, and your new life will bear much fruit.

"I looked for my soul, but my soul I could not see.
I looked for my God, but my God eluded me.
I looked for a friend, and then I found all three."

SPORTS

The British are coming! The British are coming!
Fort Benning will host the 2005 United Kingdom/U.S.A. Sports Social today from 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. at Doughboy Stadium. The teams will play rugby, softball and soccer.
Oh yeah, there's a cocktail party at the Fort Benning Officers' Club afterwards sponsored by the UK.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• Gordon gains third win

Jeff Gordon won The Great American Race, the Daytona 500, Sunday. Tony Stewart led for most of the race, and Dale Earnhardt Jr. made a comeback in the last few laps, to no avail. This is Gordon's third time winning the Daytona 500.

• Scott wins after shootout

The Nissan Open was a washout last weekend, with only 36 holes of the 54 required by PGA rules played.

Adam Scott defeated Chad Campbell with a four-foot par putt on the 18th hole.

The last time 36 holes decided the winner was at the 1996 Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens.

• Spring training, smack talk begin

Spring training has already started, but not without Red Sox right fielder Trot Nixon taking a swipe at Yankee Alex Rodriguez, calling him "not a real Yankee."

Don't forget to start your fantasy baseball now. I'm going to give it a try this year.

• What to watch

• College basketball — Saturday: Kentucky at Alabama, 1:30 p.m. on CBS, LSU at Auburn, 4 p.m. on FOX, Georgia Tech at Miami, 4 p.m. on NBC

• NASCAR — Sunday at 2 p.m. on FOX, the Auto Club 500 from California Speedway

14th glides to easy victory

After the first few minutes of the game, there was no question as to who would win the match between C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment and B Company, 14th Combat Support Hospital, Tuesday at Audie Murphy Gym.

The 14th had it all the way, winning 42-33.

The Combat Support Hospital jumped to an early 12-3 lead in the first few minutes of the game, and the gap increased as the timer ticked down. By the end of first half, they were up 25-8 and were still going strong.

"It was a fast-paced, hard-hitting ball game," said Jarvis Smith, coach of the Combat Support Hospital. "The 14th came out with accurate shots and had good ball handling and defensive pressure. That got us up by the half."

It looked like the 14th was going to plow through the second half like they had the first. They had gained a 20-point lead when the 29th Inf. Regt. started to slowly work their way back up the scoreboard.

Jose Torres was fouled on a three-pointer and hit two of his three foul shots. Eddie Ruff closed the gap a little more when he capitalized on a steal and then hit a jumper a few minutes later.

"The first half we were not playing with energy, like we usually do," Torres said. "We didn't hit any of our shots and the defense was bad.

"We made a push at the end of the game and played better defense. We started to hit our shots, but it was too late by then."

With powerful men under the basket, the Combat Support Hospital used height and speed to keep the 29th at Bay.

"The edge we had was our hustle on offense and defense," Smith said. "We had some big men on the board and we didn't give up many defensive rebounds. On the offensive rebounds, more often than not, it led to points."

One of the Combat Support Hospital's leaders was Charles Coine, who was the leading scorer with 12 points. Other leaders were Robert Reuter, of the Combat Support Hospital, and Torres and Ruff from the 29th.

Rebounding leads to 4th RTB win

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Pounding the boards and putting the ball back up proved to be the deciding factor in the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's 51-45 win over the 30th AG, in intramural basketball Tuesday, at Audie Murphy Gym.

The game looked a lot closer midway through the game with 4th RTB down 25-26. The team sprung into action after the half scoring six points before the AG knew what hit them. Soon the 4th RTB was up by nine.

"They scored more points than we did and we needed to make a better effort on the boards with our rebounds," said Mario Washington with 30th AG. "We didn't control the tempo of the game and let (4th RTB) get in. We let the pressure get to use and we lost control."

The AG played catch-up for the better part of the second half, and with 2:37 on the clock, the game was tied, 43-43. Alvin Butler, of 4th RTB, broke the tie followed by lay-up by teammate Andre Moye. After that, there was no looking back.

"The game started out close, but about midway through we started to fall back and the other team started to pull away," said Demetrius Crittenden, 4th RTB. "We came to the sideline and made adjustments to tighten up the defense."

Once the defense got on track, Crittenden said the offense started to click and they were able to capitalize on turnovers.

"We also started to rebound," he said, "something we didn't do in the first half."

The tight rebounding and tough defense proved too strong of a combination for the 30th AG to overcome.

"We were just out rebounded at crucial points in the game," Washington said.

Washington led the game with 25 points. Moye added 19 points and Ali Jackson of 4th RTB hit 16.

Nascar team thanks troops

Maj. William Thurmond
Army News Service

If you have ever watched a NASCAR race you could not help but notice the impact modern corporate marketing has had on the nation's fastest-growing spectator sport.

For example, the field for Saturday's Hershey's Take 5 300 at Daytona Raceway Saturday contained 43 racecars, each colorfully adorned with the logos of their many sponsors.

The paint schemes on these NASCAR Busch Series racers featured household names like McDonalds and Fruit of the Loom. Others sported the names of relatively obscure products, such as "Boudreaux's Butt Paste" (a baby product, in case you were wondering whether to keep reading or notify the authorities).

But one of the cars did not glorify commerce. It asked for fans' support, but this product is not available in stores.

It simply asked for you to pray for Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen, Coast Guardsmen and Marines.

The number 72 Pray 4 Our Troops (P4OT) Chevrolet was driven by veteran driver Donnie Neuenberger.

A cancer survivor, the race marked his return to racing following his treatment for Follicular Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma.

See NASCAR, C-2

Nascar: Appreciates troops' sacrifice

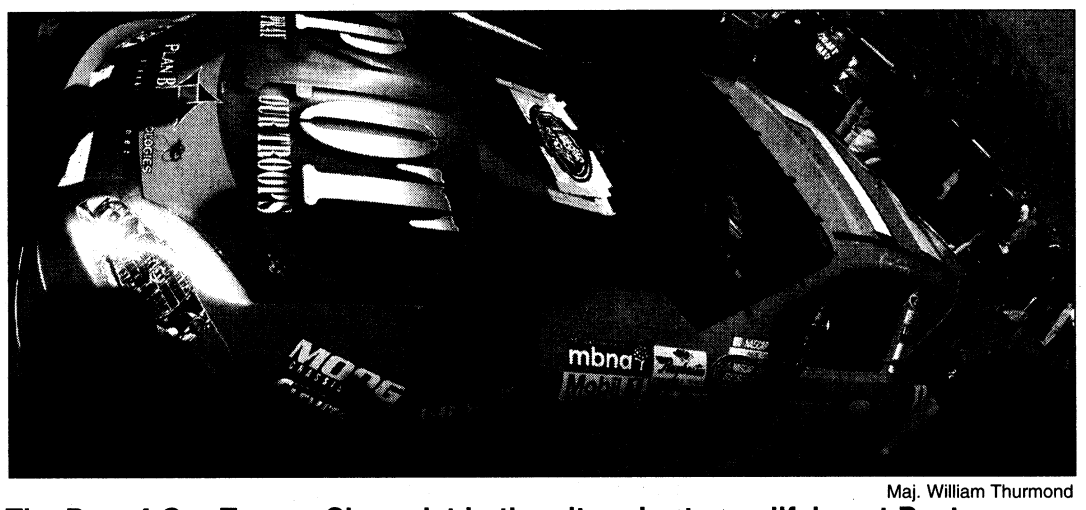
According to his Web site, he is "...currently in partial remission and will continue a maintenance program over the next two years."

P4OT.com is dedicated to encouraging prayer and support for American military forces around the globe.



"(We) get this busy world, and we can forget that we have loved ones, friend and family overseas," Neuenberger said. "Anytime you can do anything in a forum like this to help remind people that we have so many people protecting this country, you just can't lose.

"I think this is very important. I'm one hundred percent behind everything our military does. For me, driving this car is an honor."

Neuenberger said his experience with cancer and his desire to recognize the sacrifices of military men and women keeps him focused.

"I can leave here tomorrow as long as I know that I gave one hundred and ten percent. I would never quit. I am very fortunate to be able to do this," Neuenberger said.

Though Neuenberger's car suffered engine problems and dropped out of the race a few laps shy of the finish, he lapped the track 100 times, and the car's distinctive logo was seen by thousands of NASCAR fans in the stands. And millions more watched on TV. A small group of people spent a lot of their own money to encourage folks to pray for troops like you and me. And if I know NASCAR fans, they did.

Your sunny smile deserves a work environment to match.

At the southernmost tip of the continental U.S., the greatest asset of Key West, FL is its balmy, sub-tropical weather. The sun shines almost every day on Lower Keys Medical Center, the city's sole health care provider and largest employer. We rely on the care and dedication of our staff to make LKMC a warm and comfortable place for every patient. We are seeking:

Critical Care Services Manager
Current BLS & ACLS certification required; BSN preferred.
Candidates must have previous ER & ICU experience with proven managerial skills.

Risk Management/ Performance Improvement Manager
State of Florida Risk Management license required.

ICU RNs • ER RNs • Med/Surg RNs
Medical Technologist
Microbiology Area Coordinator

We offer competitive salaries and great benefits including relocation allowance. Apply today to Lower Keys Medical Center, Attn: Human Resources, 5900 College Road, Key West, FL 33040. Phone: 305-294-5531, Ext. 4761, Fax: 305-296-2520, E-mail: mary.kelly@lkmc.hma-corp.com

WHEN YOU'RE WAITING FOR A TRANSPLANT, WHAT'S MORE IMPORTANT: YOUR MEDICAL STATUS OR YOUR FINANCIAL STATUS?

Andre Weiss/Nonstock/Picture Quest

Contrary to rumors you may have heard, the transplant waiting list is completely blind to wealth or celebrity status. Once you're on the list for a donor organ, what really counts is the severity of your illness, time spent waiting, blood type and other important medical information. Call 1-800-355-SHARE or visit www.shareyourlife.org for honest information on organ donation. And remember, if you want to be a donor, you must tell your family or it may not happen.

A PRIEST, a RABBI and an IMAM ARE WALKING DOWN THE STREET.

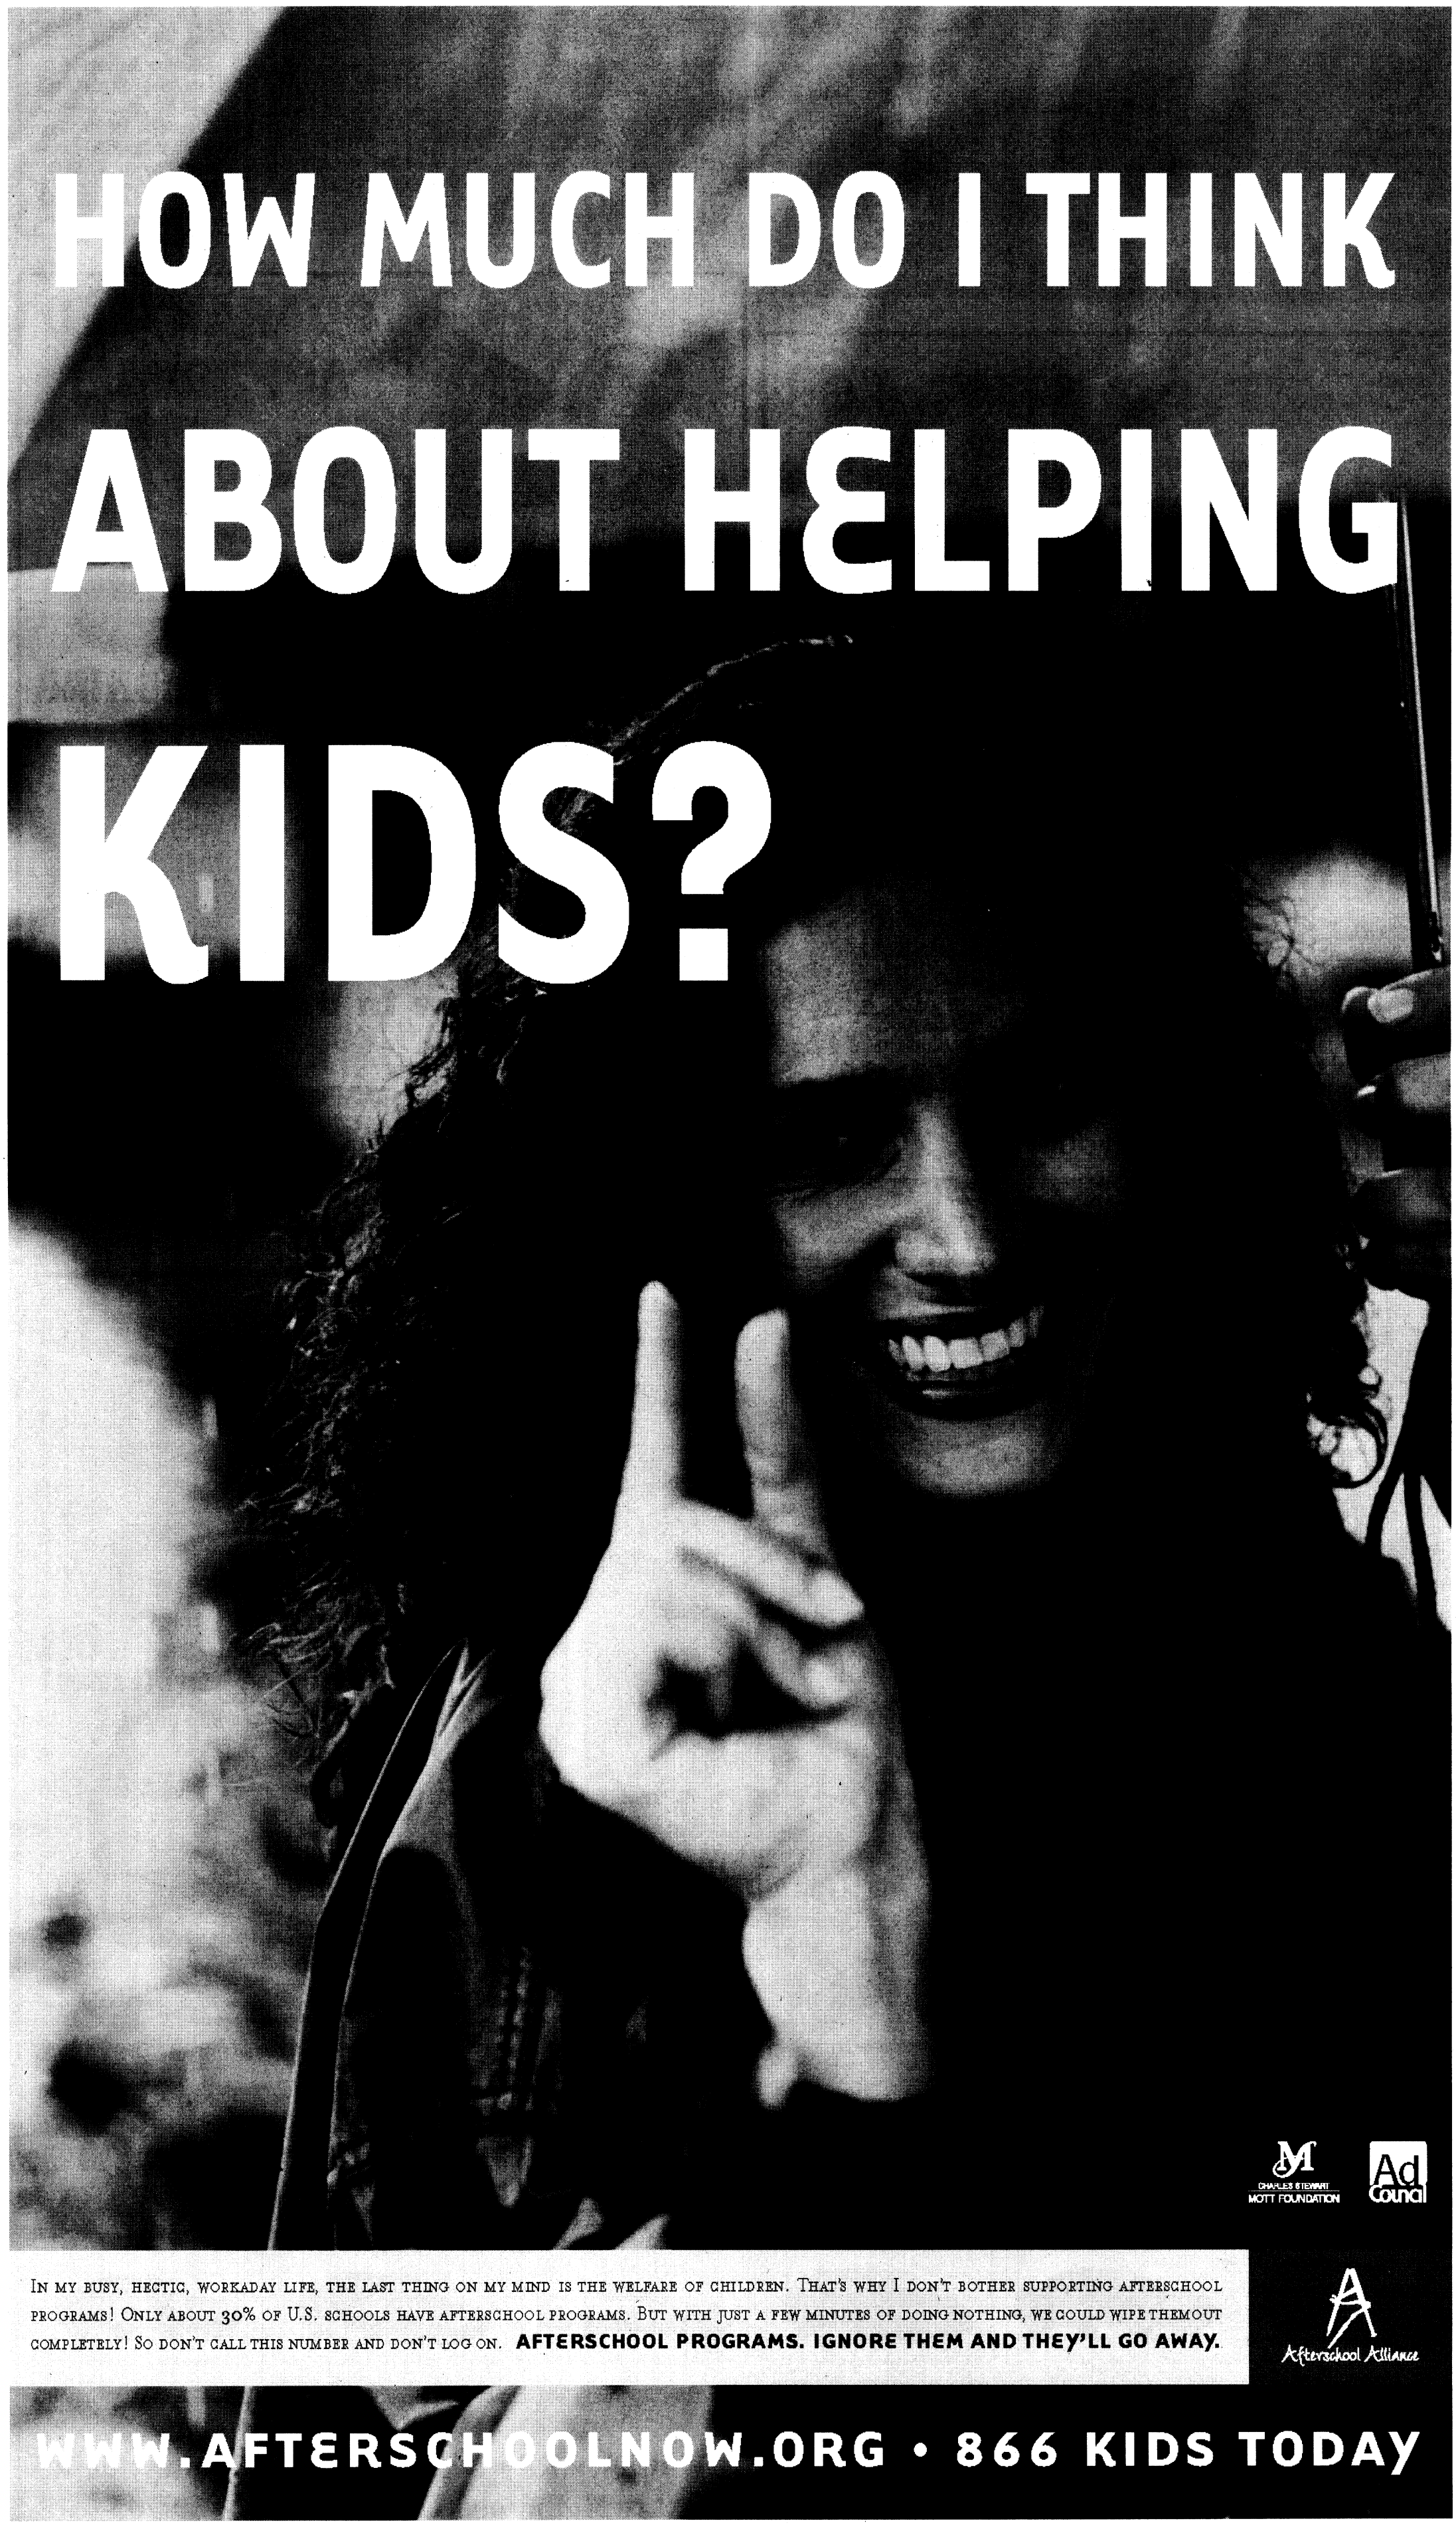
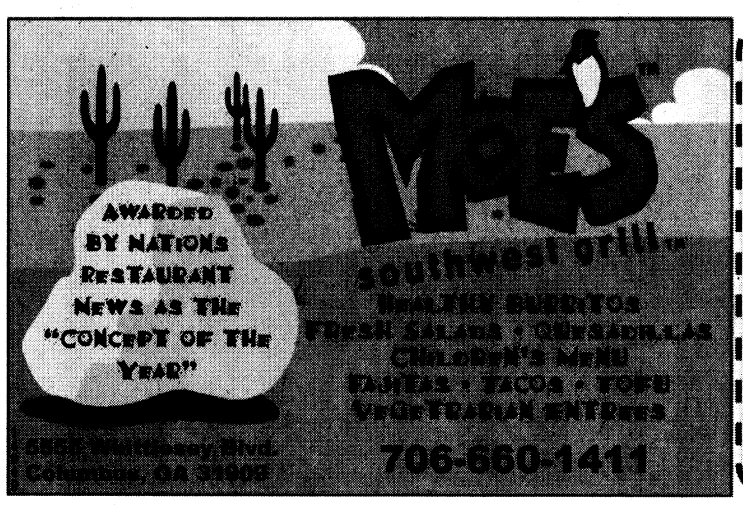
(There's no punch line.)



What do you get when you mix Christianity, Judaism and Islam? In many parts of the world, it's a recipe for disaster. Yet in America, it's a formula that has peacefully endured for over 200 years. In fact, not only has it endured, it's flourished.



The pundits may say that the ability for different faiths to coexist here comes from a lack of intensity and passion for any religion in America. But nothing could be further from the truth. Because we are free to choose which religion, if any, we'd like to follow, it enables us to have a deeper, more personal relationship with our faith than would otherwise be possible.

And because no one religion needs to feel threatened by another, we can look to the similarities that unite us, instead of focusing on the differences. Two hundred million Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus agree. To learn more about freedom of religion, visit rememberfreedom.org. Or, feel free to ask the spiritual leader of your choice.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

Are heroes born?
Or are they made?

Inside every child is a hidden strength, an unknown ability, a hero waiting to be discovered. In afterschool programs, kids get involved in all kinds of activities – scholastic, athletic and creative. Activities that help them realize they have the potential to do better and reach further than they ever imagined. Because in the end, that's what makes a hero. Let us know you want afterschool programs in your area. Call 1-800-USA-LEARN.

Transfer study not over

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The verdict is not in.

As reported in last week's The Bayonet, the Department of Defense Education Activity released a summary of the second phase of the three-phase transfer study. The report said a panel of education and finance experts reached a "verdict" recommending Fort Benning schools be transferred to a local school system, and their recommendation was based on the cost effectiveness of running on-post schools.

Their verdict is not the final verdict, post officials said. The value of a Department of Defense education cannot be measured in dollars, and they believe the results of the study's third phase will bear them out.

"We're not questioning the validity of the panel's findings," said Col. Rick Riera, Fort Benning's garrison commander. "But theirs is a business perspective. To them it makes sense. To us, it does not.

"We'll look at this from the perspective of what is best for the Soldier and his family," Riera said. "We're an Army at war, and (our schools) are one of the things that sustains the Soldier. As far as I'm concerned, it's not over."

Transfer studies are nothing new. The possibility of relinquishing control of post schools to off-post systems was considered twice in the last 16 years. But this one is different because it was launched more than two years ago by DoDEA, whereas the previous studies were conducted by a congressional committee.

This time around, the Donahue Institute of the University of Massachusetts is studying the feasibility of maintaining or transferring 58 schools on 14 installations using independent, objective experts to evaluate data. Each system is being studied individually.

The first phase included an assessment of the condition of school facilities, and the second phase, as stated, evaluated the cost of maintaining versus transferring.

Phase two results are "merely recommendations" based on cost figures that are out of date, since the study was launched before the war on terrorism, said Cindy Gibson,

DEA agents finish

Bridgett Siter

The United Nations says Afghanistan is the world's leading supplier of heroin, and money from the traffic fuels terrorist activity around the world. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration found a solution — FAST.

DEA Foreign Advisory and Support Teams have been training at Fort Benning since January to prepare to deploy to Afghanistan, where they'll help that country's police force establish an effective narcotics agency.

"Certainly it's different than what a lot of us have done, and it's not what people see on TV," said E. Knoth, FAST's deputy chief. "A big part of it will be mentoring, training and advising the Afghan counternarcotics unit."

It's a different kind of mission for the agents and intelligence analysts who typically counter drug operations stateside, but it's no less dangerous.

Aside from assisting Afghan forces, the agents will also "investigate, identify, target and disrupt" illicit drug trafficking in a volatile country. That will likely make them targets for terrorists.

"Afghanistan is a war zone," Knoth said. "We want to draw upon the Soldiers' experience, because they've been there for some time now, and they can tell us what to expect and how to operate in that environment."

Toward that end, more than 30 agents and analysts spent a week at Fort Benning's Warrior Training Center, where they learned small unit tactics, pathfinder skills, medical evacuation procedures and aircraft orientation — which means the correct way to enter and exit an aircraft on a "hot" landing zone.

The week culminated with a counterdrug operation at the McKenna MOUT site, Fort Benning's premiere training facility for military operations in urban terrain. There they conducted a mock search and seize exercise.

2nd Lt. Sam Hone was the officer in charge of DEA training at the Warrior Training Center.

He said this was the first time an Army unit, other than Special Forces, has had the opportunity to train DEA. The center conducts 11 Pre-Ranger courses and eight Air Assault courses each year. The cadre tailored elements of both to meet FAST's specific needs, Hone said.

"(We) took the mission of preparing them for deployment very seriously," he said, "as though we were deploying ourselves."

The classroom teaching and field training was invaluable, Knoth said, but the agents, typically former military or law

Travel card info lost

WASHINGTON — About 900,000 Defense Department employees may be affected by Bank of America's loss and the possible compromise of government travel card information, Pentagon officials said today.

The General Services Administration and Bank of America notified DoD that GSA "SmartPay" travel cards are affected. Officials said Bank of America has been monitoring the affected accounts and there has been no evidence of fraud or misuse of the accounts.

Bank of America is sending letters to affected employees.

"Information regarding travel card program accounts for individual card holders has been lost, and it is possible that information has been compromised, though we don't believe that is the case," said Teresa McKay, the Defense

Palmatier

When Cpl. Jacob Palmatier was killed Feb. 24, the Army lost a Soldier dedicated to serving others, those who knew him said.

"He did more for any Soldier than anyone else I've met in the Army," said Spc. James Mays, who served with Palmatier in Korea and with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, at Fort Benning.

Palmatier "worked insane hours" to make sure paperwork was complete for promotions and such while working in the company's personnel office, Mays said.

"He was dedicated like no one else I know, and I had more respect for him than anyone else I know," he said, recalling how Palmatier worked diligently around the clock

Some might say Spc. Justin Carter was a stereotypical young Soldier. The 21-year-old from Mansfield, Mo., loved to hunt, loved his pick-up truck and loved the Army.

When the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment combat engineer was killed Feb. 16, his stepfather told a Columbus reporter he died doing what he loved.

"My son, and that's what I considered him to be, lived his life to the fullest," Brett Misemer told the Ledger-Enquirer.

Carter was the definition of a good Soldier, said Staff Sgt. Keith Greeley, who accompanied Carter's body to Missouri for burial. There, he MOVING ON...

Flipping quarters ... again, again!

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

How many times have you said, "If I have to move one more time, I'll flip out!?"

Back in the day, I looked forward to PCSing. A new assignment for Tom meant a new canvas for me. A new house was a clean slate, an opportunity to create a fresh look with the same furnishings and accessories I brought from the last house. It was a challenge I enjoyed.

For a while.

We've lived in something like 14 or 15 homes in nearly 20 years of marriage. Somewhere along the way, the decorating challenge became a burden, and I really, really wanted to skip it altogether. I even said, once or twice, "God as my witness, this time I'm not going to paint, I'm not going to plant flowers, and I'm absolutely not going to buy new rugs and curtains."

Of course I always do buy rugs and curtains, flowers by the flat and paint by the five-gallon bucket. I cannot live in an "undecorated" house. Like so many of you, I was born to nest just as my husband was born to be a Soldier.

So, you ask, if one cannot make peace with four white walls and a linoleum floor, how does one make peace with the inevitable — moving, relocating, transferring, PCSing, whatever one calls it?

If one loves to decorate, how does one keep that passion alive move after move after move?

How does one make a home out of these flipping' quarters?

Glad you asked. My reply would be:

Geez, woman, one needs to get a hold of one's self. One appears to be flipping' out. One obviously needs professional help. I'd recommend a counseling session with Ashley Holt of Ashley's Interiors.

And how is one supposed to pay for a professional decorator?

Glad you asked.

Holt has offered her services for free, essentially. When you sign up for the Officers and Enlisted Spouses Clubs' Flipping Quarters, you'll get a chance to learn her surefire tips to make decorating fun and easy every time.

Members of the OSC and ESC are invited to meet Holt May 17 for dinner and decorating at the Officers Club. The event costs only $20, and — get this — two lucky people who sign up by March 16 will get a makeover for one room in their on-post homes.

Holt will lend her expertise, local merchants have donated $2,500 worth of products, and the OSC and ESC board members have agreed to do the work. Those two lucky people and their two lucky families will spend a weekend free at Uchee Creek.

The big "reveal" will be filmed, so the folks who attend the Flipping Quarters dinner event will get to see the families flip out when they return to their new and improved quarters.

But wait, there's more.

Flipping Quarters participants will also tour the renovated rooms!

That's right, on May 17 you could be one of the lucky people who get to tour the rooms Holt designs and decorates.

You could be one of the lucky few people with whom Holt shares her secrets to success.

You could even be one of the lucky folks who get a room revamped.

So put down the newspaper — it'll keep — and rush right over to the Thrift Shop or Bit of Benning to purchase a ticket for Flipping Quarters.

If it's too early for the shops to be open, say 5 a.m., call one of the OSC or ESC board members who also have tickets for sale.

Just joking, of course. They do have tickets, but please don't call them at 5 a.m. They'll flip out.

Welcome to my wonderful world

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

My husband once said I led a sheltered life. Apparently, that hasn't changed much in the almost 15 years we've been married, because last week, my co-workers decided I'm living in a bubble.

I'll admit it. I'm an optimist. My glass is always half-full. I'll give you that inch until I figure out that you're taking me for a mile.

In my world, I'll give money to help the policemen by new vests, save the whales or cure cancer. I just can't help it.

So when someone brought an abandoned bloodhound to the barn and needed someone to take him in, I was definitely not that someone.

Ha. It only took five minutes of looking at his sad, droopy eyes and counting his ribs — and a little prompting from my youngest son — before I caved in. But this wasn't a skinny puppy. He was a full grown dog and I had no plan of attack.

In my world, full-grown, purebred dogs are loved, cherished members of the family. And, as such, they're also housebroken. Abe, as the boys named him, wasn't housebroken, but it took me almost 24 hours to figure that out.

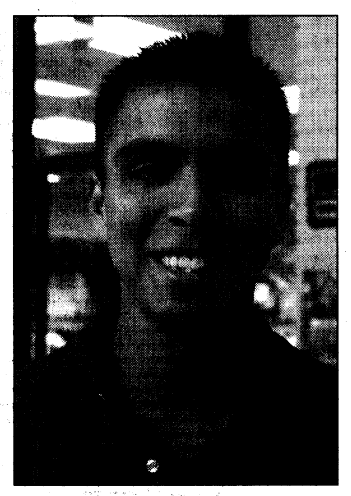
When he lifted his leg on the computer cabinet. I could only be thankful the doors were closed when it happened.

Abe left a few more presents before I decided he needed to become an outside dog. And for those of you inclined to offer him a good home — thanks. He's already frolicking in the one-acre yard at his new home in Alabama.

A neighbor suggested I might need to get a big S tattooed on my forehead. I'm hoping it was to stand for soft-hearted, but I don't think that was what he meant.

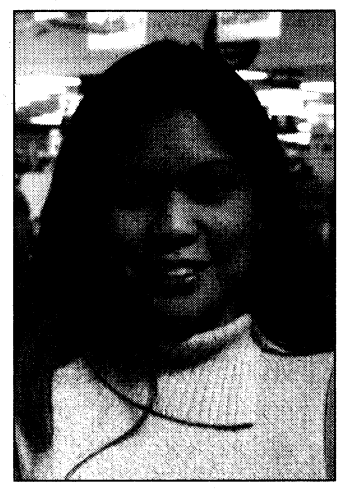
But that's my world. Family pets are just that. They're fed, bathed and loved.

There's also a lot of naivete in my world. I saw marijuana for the first time in college, when the MPs brought some into my law class to show us what it looked and smelled like. It went back out the door, and I've never seen it again.



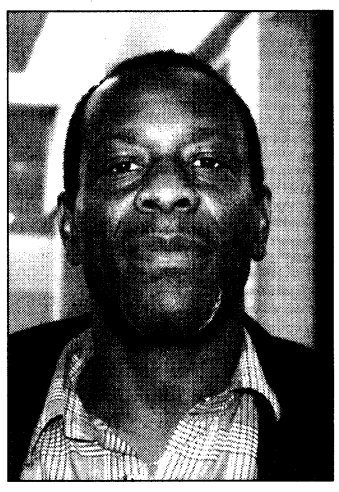
Then, a few months ago, I saw a rock of crack cocaine on my street — literally. It fell out of the guy's car when the MPs pulled him out. He was parked right in front of the gate to one of the child care centers. Thank goodness he managed to pull over, because he could have plowed into the parking lot just as easily.

And now drugs are invading our schools. It's affecting kids, regardless of race, regardless of their parent's rank. It's scary. I hope we can do something.



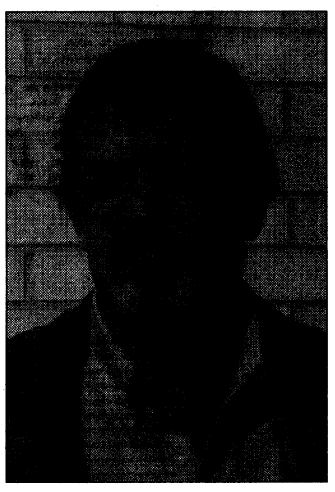
In my world, dogs don't need me, because they don't get abandoned, drugs don't end up on my street or in my children's schools. It's my world, but it's OK. They know me there.

VARIOUS VOICES

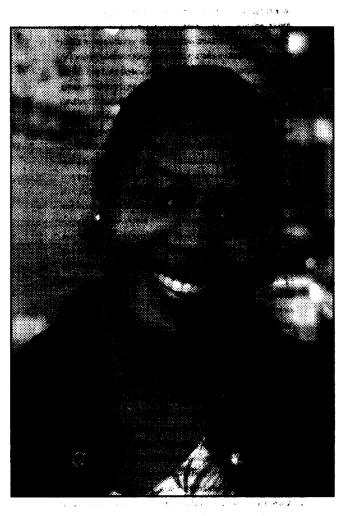


How do you decorate your house to make it feel like home?

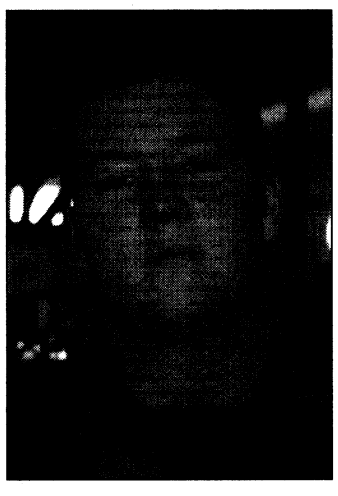
Spc. Joseph Hernandez, 4th Ranger Training Battalion — "My wife decorates the house, so I just go along with whatever will make her happy. She designs most of the rooms, but you can tell my area because it's the messy part."



Rachelle Wiles, family member — "I paint and put up pictures. I would like to get new furniture, but then my husband and I would have to agree on a style. I like leather and matched sets that look really modern. My husband's style is kind of old fashioned."



Chuck Blanchard, AAFES employee — "My wife, Michiko, decorates with lots of plants and nice fragrances. She has good style and it always looks nice. But what really makes my house a home is just having my wife there with me"



Dolores Ortiz, family member — "I like lots of plants and fresh flowers. Family pictures and artwork make a house look nice. My husband and I are from Puerto Rico, and we lived in Germany. So we picked up some different cultural styles from places we've lived."

James Evans, SAIC — "My wife takes care of the house. She puts up family photos and knick knacks. My only areas are the garage and the yard. And when I'm in trouble, the doghouse. I know what it's like to be in there!"

Rolanda Moore, family member — "To make the house feel good, I open the windows to let the sun in. My kids are happy as long as they have their toys. My son would rather have toys than a bed. He loves sleeping on the floor with a blanket."

Senior Airman Joel Boxberger, Hurlburt Field, Fla. — "I think plants are good. I have a palm tree in my living room at home in Florida. I also like putting up pictures of family."

Veteran thanks ITB for son's training

My son, Pvt. Andrew Abernathy, with A Company, 2nd Battalion, 19 Infantry Regiment, was awarded the Expert Rifleman Badge along with the Coin of Excellence, Feb. 18.

I want to thank Lt. Col. John McCarthy, battalion commander, Capt. David Newell, company commander, and his drill sergeants for the excellent rifle marksmanship training my son has received for him to have performed so well.

I am a veteran and I know how important this phase of training is.

Is it spring yet?

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Well, it's March, the month spring will officially begin — at least that's what the calender says. It makes me deliriously cheerful to know spring is approaching. I love the feeling that everything is fresh and new.

Usually the beacon of spring for me is the birds returning from the South. But now that I'm living here, in the winter vacation land for birds, I heard bird calls all winter, and very loudly.

The exterior wall of my apartment building is covered with decorative stones jutting off the wall. A family of birds has nested between the rocks on the wall outside my bedroom, so when I close my eyes to sleep, I hear chirping and scuffling amplified through the wall.

When I first heard them, I was going to tell the apartment complex to clean out the nest. The chirping wasn't too bad, but the messes outside my window I could live without. But the birds have kind of grown on me.

My yearning for spring exploded a few night ago in Kmart. I spent too much money on plants, all of which I will undoubtedly kill before long. I originally just wanted an aloe to replace my most recent victim of overwatering. But then I saw a wonderfully tacky bird feeder. After listening to the birds scratch and chirp behind the wall for months, I bought it with the hope that they will decide to stay for the summer.

I imagine by the time I go back to buy more bird seed, I'll be ready for another aloe, always with the hope that maybe this one will make it. That's the thing about spring. There's always a chance for a new beginning.

3rd ID assumes Task Force Baghdad mission

Spc. Emily J. Wilsoncroft
Army News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The 3rd Infantry Division officially took over Task Force Baghdad Feb. 27 during a transition of authority ceremony with the departing 1st Cavalry Division.

"Today marks the passing of the torch for advancing the freedom of the people of Baghdad," said Maj. Gen. Peter Chiarelli, 1st Cavalry Division commander. "The 1st Cav drew upon the important lessons gained by those who preceded us and our sincere wish is that we have contributed wisely to the 3rd ID in their preparation for this mission."

The 1st Cav. has had elements in Iraq since relieving 1st Armored Division Soldiers. Now, after more than a year serving as Task Force Baghdad headquarters, 1st Cav. Soldiers are heading back to Fort Hood, Texas.

With the famous giant crossed-swords statues looming over the Sahet Alihtifalat Alkubra parade grounds, the transition was led by Lt. Gen. John Vines, Multinational Corps Iraq commander.

"Today, we welcome Maj. Gen. William Webster and Task Force Rock of the Marne back to Iraq," Vines said. "Twenty-two months ago, your division spearheaded coalition forces attacks as it fought its way to Baghdad, leading to the toppling of Saddam Hussein and his imposed tyranny on the Iraqi people. Twenty-two months ago, you stood on this very ground in victory."

Maj. Gen. William G. Webster Jr., 3rd Inf. Div. commander, and Vines congratulated Chiarelli and 1st Cavalry for a job well done, referencing Iraq's Jan. 30 elections and other benchmarks of progress.

"Together, you and our Iraqi partners improved the way of life for the Iraqi people, conducting more than 800 civil engineering projects totaling more than $104 million in Baghdad."

"You've sponsored 14 Iraqi police academies, rebuilt 600 schools, conducted more than 70 electrical projects totaling $1.8 million, and contributed $8.3 million in grants to Iraqi businesses," he continued. "Finally, under Task Force Pegasus tutelage, the 40th Iraqi National Guard Brigade took control of its own operational area in Baghdad, marking the first time an Iraqi Brigade has done so. Without question, you have positively touched every aspect of Iraqi life — truly a phenomenal feat!"

He also emphasized the need to continue the hard work that began with the elections.

"As great and historic a day as January 30th was for the Iraqi people — and frankly the world — it was not the ultimate goal, which is a free and secure Iraq," Vines said. "We, the Iraqi government and the coalition know there is still much work to be done, but Iraq's progress to date is both extraordinary and irreversible."

Chiarelli welcomed the Marne Division and expressed confidence in the Soldiers who are taking over.

"The 3rd ID is well-trained, led by gifted officers and non-commissioned officers, and blessed with great Soldiers," Chiarelli said. "The division is poised to ensure Baghdad moves powerfully toward complete self-sufficiency. The people of Baghdad have a partner in the 3rd Infantry Division as committed to the mission as any they will ever see on their streets.

"Major General Webster, you've been a great friend to the Cav," he continued, "and I know that the people of Baghdad will embrace you and your Soldiers as warmly as they have the 1st Cav. Baghdad has a special place in the history of the world and it stands on the precipice of greatness once again."

Upon taking command of TF Baghdad, Webster acknowledged the responsibility being given to him and accepted the mission at hand.

"The 3rd Infantry Division has trained hard and is ready," Webster said. "We will work with our Iraqi partners as they continue to increase their capability to protect the Iraqi people from any foe."

"We will help the people of Iraq maintain their right to freedom and the pursuit of a prosperous future for all Iraqi citizens," Webster promised. "Our Soldiers know this is right and just."

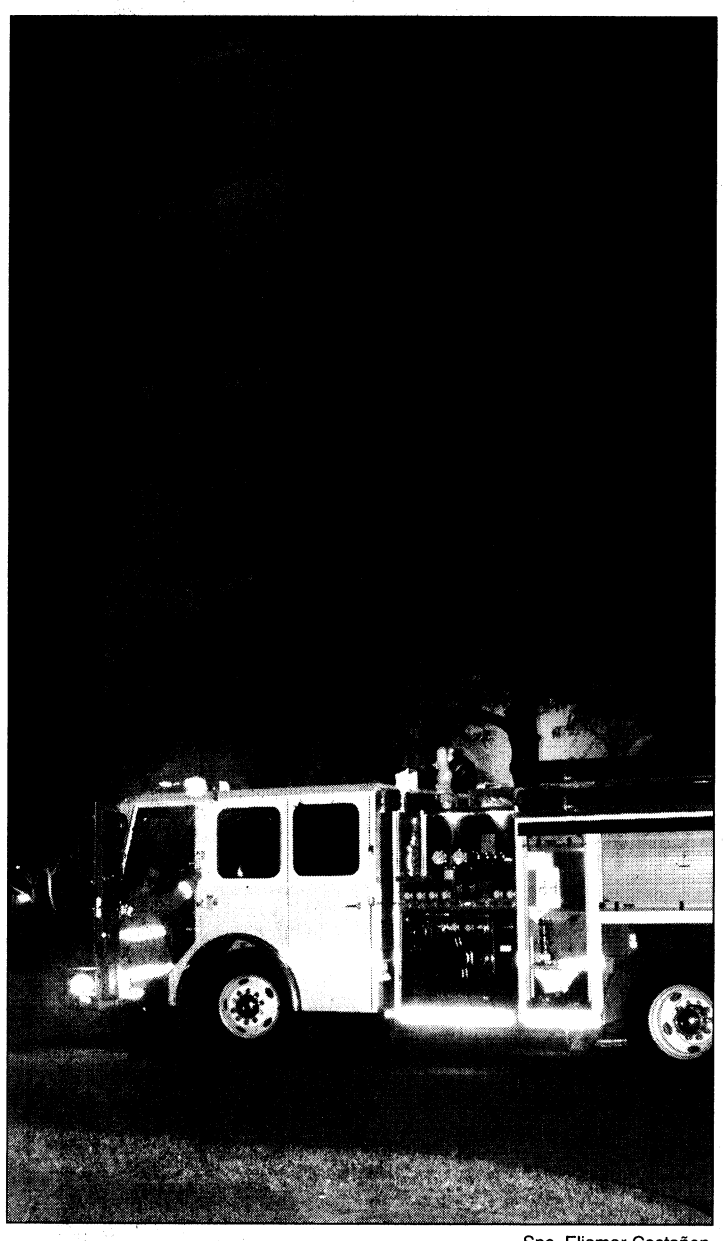
A local Columbus TV station spent Tuesday afternoon and evening at Infantry Hall videotaping personal messages from family and friends of Fort Benning Soldiers deployed to Iraq.

WTVM Channel 9 News Director Rick Moll said opportunities like these are an integral part of the relationship between Fort Benning and the surrounding community.

"This is important," he said, "because they are our people. They're our neighbors and our friends."

The event was originally scheduled to start at 3 p.m., but Moll said numerous families were standing by just after 2 p.m. The video crews began taping at 2:30 p.m.



"When we showed up, people were already lined up at the door," he said. "Hundreds of family members turned out. It would have been a success if only ten people showed up because that is ten Soldiers we would have helped. We just wanted to be a conduit for people to get the message out to their loved ones."

The messages will be transferred to DVDs and Moll said the disks should be on a plane headed towards Iraq in about two weeks.

"Things like this make it really hard on me," said Debra Campos. "Even seeing other Soldiers here makes me cry, but this will make it better for him, so it's important. It's a really good thing."

Campos' husband of two years, Kelvin, is a sergeant deployed with 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

The Infantry Center Chapel gets fire scare

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

The Fort Benning Fire Department responded to an emergency call at 7:39 p.m. Feb. 25 at The Infantry Center Chapel.

The call was placed after the chapel's fire alarm was set off by the steam coming out of a faulty boiler in the chapel, said Chief Arthur Simmons, of the Fort Benning Fire Department.

"There was a crack in the metal that allowed the water to leak out of the boiler which caused it to overheat," Simmons said. "The steam was enough to set off the fire alarms."

Which was a good thing. If the boiler overheating was left unnoticed for another 15 minutes, there might have been more than just an overheated boiler to replace, Simmons said.

The alarm went off during the 2005 United Kingdom/USA Sports Social. A Soldier working with the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, was working during the event when he noticed the fire alarm was going off. He quickly called the military police and reported it.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ronald Smith said there was very minimal damage and services were resumed as scheduled the following day but there is no heat in the chapel.

The cost to repair the faulty boiler is being estimated by SHAW Industries.

Authors @ the Columbus Library features familiar face

Melissa House

War correspondent Joe Galloway, co-author of We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young, shared his experiences at the Columbus Public Library Feb. 28. Galloway was the first in a series of Authors @ the Columbus Public Library program, sponsored, in part, by the National Infantry Foundation.

"We have him to thank for being able to cover war from the Soldiers' point of view," said retired Col. Greg Camp, the Foundation's executive vice-president. "We came to know Joe when he showed up on LZ X-Ray — he was used to sneaking onto helicopters. He's the original embedded reporter."

After serving four tours as a war correspondent in Vietnam, Galloway became a driving force to have embedded reporters when Soldiers deployed for Operation Iraqi Freedom in 2003.

"There's no other place to cover a war than right out there with Soldiers," Galloway said. "If you're not there, you're not getting the right story."

Galloway, who was born three weeks before the attacks on Pearl Harbor, grew up in a house half-way between each of his grandmothers. His father went to war, he said. So did his father's six brothers and his mother's four brothers.

When asked why he felt it was necessary to tell the stories of the families in the book, Galloway said growing up in houses full of frightened women had an impact on his heart.

"Just because the last shot has been fired on the battlefield, doesn't mean the war is over," he said. "In a book such as this, with such sacrifice, their sacrifice had to be told as well."

He held back tears as he recognized the women in the audience who had lost husbands, fathers, brothers and sons. Those women included Pat Miers, the mother of Sgt. 1st Class David Salie, whose funeral Galloway attended last week.

Galloway said individuals can take a step that changes their lives forever. He took that step Nov. 14, 1965, when he got on the helicopter that took him into the Ia Drang Valley.

"It was dead dark when the choppers left," he said, "when a voice out of the dark said 'follow me.'" The voice belonged to Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley, who led him to the 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry, command post, through the bodies of fallen Soldiers.

"I was feeling pretty good." He said. "I had an exclusive seat at the biggest event of the war. Until ten of seven the next morning when all hell broke loose."

Galloway

As the bullets flew, Galloway said the thump in his ribs was Plumley's combat boot. Plumley told Galloway he couldn't take any pictures lying on the ground.

"I thought if I was going to die here today, I'd rather die standing up," Galloway said. "And when I got up, fear went away. I learned something there. I'm eternally grateful. It was a true honor to have been there and to be able to later tell their story."

In four days of fighting, the unit lost more than 200 Soldiers. Telling their story, Galloway said, was a labor of love. He knew he couldn't tell the story in the small amount of space his newspaper would allow, but it wasn't until 15 years after the battle, and after seeing Vietnam footage on television, that he decided the time to tell it had arrived.

"I found myself sitting in a chair shaking like a leaf and crying like a baby," he said. "And what do you do? You can either run from it or turn and face it."

Galloway called retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore, the unit's battalion commander at the Ia Drang, and asked if he was ready to start the book. Moore was ready, and wanted to go spend a night on the battlefield. Galloway wanted to write the stories of the families.

After 10 years of research, and countless hours of writing, Galloway and Moore published the book. They had visited the battlefield and spent the night.

"The foxholes were still there and you could see where the perimeter was," Galloway said. "And General Moore walked the perimeter all night. In the morning, we all felt reasonably at peace — that somehow it was all right. The men who died there were at peace, and so were we.

"I wrote the book," he said, "and I can't bear to this day to read it — the stories of the women and the children and how (what happened) resonates through their lives. They say time heals all wounds. Not that one."

Galloway had reservations about making the book into a movie because he said most of Hollywood's Vietnam movies don't portray anything correctly, and it bothers him how the Vietnam veteran is presented. The only movie he's sat all of the way through is Hamburger Hill.

"I wrote the book and I can't bear to this day to read it — the stories of the women and the children and how (what happened) resonates through their lives. They say time heals all wounds. Not that one."

Joe Galloway
Co-author of We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young

"I do what I do, write, because you were good and honest," he said. "You might not have been the greatest generation, but you were the best of your generation."

He said he pushed to have the embedded reporters and a boot camp for them because there were very few reporters left in the business who understood the Army. The decision to embed 700 reporters, he said, was a "bold stroke," but he knew it would work. The reporters riding with the young lieutenants and NCOs learned from them and got to bond with them.

"And how can you not keep in touch with the finest (Soldiers), who let you stand beside them?" he asked.

And telling the Soldiers' stories might not have happened if not for Galloway's mother. He said he was driven out of college a few weeks into his first semester by a German language teacher with ill-fitting dentures. He was 17 and driving his mother to the office to sign his enlistment papers. In a last-ditch attempt, his mother asked him about his journalism plans. They were in front of the newspaper office, so Galloway went in to ask the editor if he needed a reporter. He got the job and Galloway said his mother saved him from a "probably short and unhappy Army career."

In 1998, Galloway received the Bronze Star Medal with V device for valor for rescuing wounded Soldiers in the Ia Drang in 1965. He is the only civilian to have received a medal for valor during the Vietnam War.

Army to issue badge

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

A new badge recognizing those troops who have been in combat will debut in March, said Lt. Gen. F. L. Hagenbeck, Army deputy chief of staff, G-1, in a U.S. Army press release Feb. 11.

The Close Combat Badge will recognize specific Armor, Cavalry, Field Artillery and Combat Engineer Soldiers, colonel and below, serving as Infantrymen in units purposefully reorganized to conduct Infantry-unique, close combat missions and personally present and under fire while conducting those types of missions.

The way the badge will look has not been determined yet. Although it will begin to be awarded in March, Hagenbeck said, it will probably be autumn before the badge appears in clothing sales stores.

He said the combat patch worn by all Soldiers in a combat zone will remain the visual symbol for Soldiers who have served in a combat theater. The CCB is awarded only to those who meet its specific criteria.

"Everyone is in danger on today's 360-degree battlefield," Hagenbeck said. "This recognizes those deliberately planned offensive combat missions designed to close with the enemy and destroy or capture them."

Hagenbeck said the badge is designed to recognize the efforts of Soldiers in units, which have been reorganized and used as Infantry, and will be retroactive to Sept. 11, 2001.

Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, post command sergeant major, said he is very glad the new badge will be awarded to non-Infantry Soldiers.

"It's a great thing to recognize those Soldiers who didn't join the Army as Infantrymen but who are now serving as Infantrymen," Kelso said. "Chains of command in theater need to ensure they award the CIB and the CCB to Soldiers who meet the criteria and not award it as an 'I was there' badge."

The Combat Infantryman Badge has been awarded to Infantry personnel with an Infantry or Special Forces military occupational specialty who have satisfactorily performed duty while assigned as a member of an Infantry or Special Forces unit, brigade or smaller size and the unit was engaged in active ground combat.

enforcement officers, learned valuable lessons in their "down time" — like the chow hall at the CONUS Replacement Center, where they stayed.

"We learned a lot just chatting with guys who were over there," he said. "They could tell us what equipment worked and what didn't, what to expect from the Afghans, that kind of thing."

The biggest challenge for the agents, was not training with the Rangers at the Warrior Training Center — it was the cadre's constant use of Army acronyms, Knoth said with a laugh.

"It took a while to figure out what they were talking about," he said, recalling an incident when a Soldier asked the agents if they'd considered using mules in Afghanistan.

"We were trying to figure out what M-U-L-E stood for. It had to be an acronym."

Turns out, the Soldier was talking about a pack mule, commonly used in Afghanistan's mountainous terrain.

Two six-man FAST teams will be in Afghanistan mid-March, and another will rotate with them 90 days after. Knoth believes the DEA agents leave Fort Benning "better prepared and more confident."

"We'll be working alongside military assets over there, so not only do we need the tactical training we got here, but we need to feel comfortable with them also," he said.

"I think we've achieved our goal here."

Transfer: Decision not expected until fall public affairs officer for DoD's stateside schools. The third phase will be a "huge portion of consideration."

The third phase deals with the quality of life issue, which means, essentially, that experts will consider the impact post schools have on military families; how they feel about them, and how they feel about losing them are also considerations.

As Riera said, the study involves "a lot of criteria," and none more important than "our Soldiers' quality of life."

Fort Benning residents agree. More than 1,000 families made their desire to keep post schools known during a town-hall meeting in 2003.

It's a message post officials heard loud and clear, and it's the message the post commander took to Peachtree City, Ga., in October 2003 when he met with Dr. Joe Tafoya, the director of DoDEA.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, father of five and himself a product of the DoDEA system, spoke with conviction when he urged Tafoya to reject the possibility of a transfer.

"I know the value of our schools," Freakley said after that meeting. "I won't give up the fight."

Tafoya sent a message to school officials and teachers after the release of the study's second phase.

"Some of the recommendations are difficult to accept, but they are just that — recommendations. These are not DoDEA's recommendations, and they are not the recommendation of the Department of Defense," he said, adding that a final decision is not expected until late this year.

"There will be ample opportunity for people to get involved," Tafoya said. "The question is what can you do. I encourage you to do what we've always done in our schools — provide the best quality education we can."

Palmatier: Fascinated with Iraqi culture

his first two weeks on Kelley Hill. His unit was at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., and Palmatier made it his mission to "learn everything he could about his job," so he could help the Soldiers when they returned.

"The Army lost a great one," Mays said of Palmatier, who was killed when an improvised explosive device hit his vehicle during a combat mission near Muqdadiyah.

Palmatier, 29, earned a bachelor's degree from Illinois College before enlisting in 2002.

His wife, Bridget, wrote in a letter to his colleagues that her husband was fascinated with the culture and traces of ancient civilization he found in Iraq.

Bridget urged the Soldiers of the 1st Battalion to honor her husband by taking an interest in the people, the customs and culture around them.

"Please do not allow his passing to create hatred," she wrote. "He was kind, gentle and forgiving. The last thing he would want was for his friends to feel pain, and holding hatred in the heart only causes pain to the one who holds it."

Bridget's words were read during a memorial service at Forward Operating Base Normandy Feb. 27, when those who served alongside Palmetier shared memories, like Mays', of a Soldier dedicated to Soldiers.

The 3rd Brigade's newspaper, Hammer Times, recorded 1st Lt. David Suttles tribute to Palmatier:

"(He) never refused to grant a favor," said Suttles, who recalled sending Palmatier to buy four first lieutenant rank insignias for a recent promotion ceremony in Iraq.

There were no first lieutenant rank left when Palmatier got to the troop store. Undaunted, he purchased four second lieutenant ranks and a black marker.

"He was resourceful," Suttles said, "and always willing to help no matter what the situation was."

Palmatier, who is also survived by his parents, John and Margaret, will be buried in Illinois.

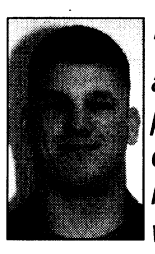
Carter: Took initiative said, family members painted a picture of a young man who loved the outdoors and always tried to make sure everybody was happy.

That's the Carter Capt. David Stanley knew. At a memorial service in Iraq, Stanley said Carter often reminded him "that everything would work out."

Carter's dedication and attention to detail made him a "cornerstone to the success" of his company and led to his being selected as the company's armorer, Stanley said. Carter took it upon himself to revamp procedures in the arms room to increase accountability and improve readiness.



"Specialist Carter found a way to take care of everybody," Stanley said, adding that Carter often offered him new equipment, which he usually declined. "(But) every time I drew my weapon from the arms room, I'd find a new gadget on it. He didn't do it just for me, he did it for everybody. That's the kind of Soldier he was."

Carter joined the Army in 2002 soon after graduating from Mansfield High School where he was active in the Future Farmers of America. He is survived by his parents, Brett and Becky Misemer.

The arms room explosion that killed Carter is under investigation.

Department's deputy chief financial officer.

The U.S. Secret Service is conducting the investigation, with help from the Defense Criminal Investigative Service.

Officials said that although there has been no evidence of criminal activity, release of details on the circumstances of the loss could jeopardize the investigation.

"Indications right now are that it is an accidental event," McKay said.

"The bank has been monitoring the accounts involved from the onset, and to date there has been no indication of fraudulent activity."

The information is personal cardholder information — names, Social Security numbers, addresses and account numbers — on magnetic tape.

The loss occurred in late December. GSA notified DoD on Jan. 19. McKay said the delay was necessary to protect the integrity of the investigation.

"The bank is in the process of notifying cardholders of the situation," McKay said.

"They will be given a special customer service number that has been set up by the bank specifically for this purpose.

"If (cardholders) have any questions, they can contact the bank. If they would like, they may request that the bank cancel the card and reissue a card to them."

Tips for securing your financial information

These simple but effective suggestion can help consumers protect their financial and personal information.

• Be discriminating when providing personal information such as Social Security number and account or credit card information over the telephone, in person or on the Internet. Don't give this information unless you are sure or the person with whom you are dealing.

• Protect your Social Security number and the Social Security numbers of your children and other family members by not carrying them in your wallet.

• Report lost or stolen checks, credit or debit cards immediately. Bank of america will block payment on the check numbers or account numbers involved.

• Store cancelled checks, new checks and account statements in a safe place.

• Notify your banker of suspicious phone inquiries such as those asking for account information to verify a statement of award a prize.

• Review your credit report at least once a year. Make sure all information is up-to-date and accurate.

• Memorize your PIN and refrain from writing it, your Social Security number or credit card number on a check.

• Tear or shred any pre-approved credit offers to which you do not respond. Thieves can use these offers to assume your identity.

• Keep mail secure. Don't mail bills or sensitive information from your home or unsecured mailboxes. Retrieve and review your mai promptly. Thieves may use the personal information contained in your mail to steal your identity.

• If you do not receive your regular bills when expected, call the company to find out why.

• Review your monthly account statements thoroughly. Investigate suspicious items immediately to head off any possible fraud before it occurs.

• Do not carry your Social Security card, passport or birth certificate unless needed that day.

• Beware of fraudulent e-mail messages that ask for account and personal information to reactivate or verify your accounts. Don't give out this information unless you are sure of the person with whom you are dealing.

The Federal Trade commission provides a variety of useful information and resources related to identity theft. Visit the FTC ID Theft Web site at http://www.consumer.gov/idtheft/.

If you think you have been a victim of identity theft, the three major credit bureaus have resources dedicated to assist you. McKay added that consumers should always keep an eye on any credit accounts they have.

"It's always prudent for any cardholder to monitor their monthly statements (and) dispute any charges they may question, and also it's important for all of us to get a credit report at least once a year and look at the content of that report," she said.

Bank of America has set up a hotline for those affected. The number is (800) 493-8444. Cardholders who notice irregularities in their accounts should call the Bank of America at the 800 number printed on the back of their cards, McKay said.

AER: Goal to raise $175,000 for Soldiers

$175,000 — the AER goal for 2005. The challenge Cornwell posed was to go above and beyond that amount.

"$175,000 is a small amount," he said. "I don't want anyone picking up Fort Benning's slack. We should pick up our own slack."

AER is a nonprofit, private organization that provides no-interest loans and grants in times of need to Army Soldiers, retirees, widowers and members of other branches assigned to Army installations.

Those seeking aid do not have to contribute to the fund to be eligible for assistance, said Lionel Grant, the installation AER officer for Fort Benning.

Fort Benning's AER program provided more than $964,000 of financial assistance to 869 individuals last year.

The campaign runs through the end of April.

Local Buffalo Soldier honored Sunday

Columbus native, 83, served with 92nd Inf. Div.

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Columbus' Peaceful Baptist Church ended its monthlong celebration of Black History Month by honoring the oldest member of its congregation, a former Buffalo Soldier.

Sgt. Maj. Alan Gibson, the Infantry Training Brigade's operations sergeant major, introduced Sam Pearson as a national hero, not because he fought the Germans in 1943 (Pearson's quick to make that clear — "I shot at nobody, and nobody shot at me,") but because he fought for the right to serve his country.

"He served under very difficult conditions because of the color of his skin," Gibson said during the Sunday morning service.

As Gibson recapped the history of the Buffalo Soldiers, 83-year-old Pearson sat on the front pew wearing a smile ear to ear and patch of the Buffalo Soldier on his shoulder.

In 1866, Congress authorized the creation of six regiments of black troops and filled their ranks with freed slaves and Civil War veterans. Legend has it the Comanche gave them the name Buffalo Soldiers, because they wore buffalo skins as they escorted settlers across the western frontier.

"They certainly had the qualities of a buffalo," Gibson said, "courage, tenacity and strength."

That courage and tenacity earned them the right to serve again in World War II, when the 92nd was activated. That's when Pearson, a Columbus native and a product of the segregated South, joined the ranks of the Buffalo and shipped off to Italy, where he hauled ammunition for U.S. forces — forces he wasn't allowed to mingle with. That was OK with Pearson.

> "A (young lady) told me I was part of history. She said I was a hero. I never thought of it that way. I was just proud."
> Sam Pearson
> Buffalo Soldier

"We didn't deal with them, and they didn't bother us," he said. "That was just the way it was, and we accepted it. I was just proud to be there."

After the war, Pearson moved to Virginia. He returned to Columbus when his wife died 15 years ago. He worked as a plasterer for a while. These days he's a part-time janitor.

"I just can't seem to sit still," he said.

Pearson was full of energy Sunday — "stepping like a pony," he called it. But truth be told, he's one of a dying breed, like the buffalo he wore on the patch on his sleeve.

World War II veterans are dying at a rate of more than 1,200 a day, and the 92nd Infantry Division Buffalo Soldiers, a minority in color and number during World War II, are few and far between today. Pearson has met only two since he left the unit.

Though he never considered himself a hero and never imagined others viewed him that way, Sunday's service left Pearson believing the history of the Buffalo Soldier may live on. Once he thought young folks would rather hear how he helped plaster the walls of the Peachtree Mall than how he served as a Soldier.

"A (young lady) told me I was part of history," he said. "She said I was a hero. I never thought of it that way. I was just proud."

36th Engineer Group to get new bridge company

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Engineers will be arriving at Fort Benning in the coming months to be incorporated into a new bridge company under the command of 36th Engineer Group.

The new unit, the 362nd Multi-Role Bridge Company, will be one of only five of its type, and will be one of the largest, with 183 personnel.

Originally another bridge company, deactivated out of Korea, was set to come to Fort Benning also, but that unit will go to Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., instead.

The 362nd MRBC will train to transport and assemble portable ribbon bridges and dry support bridges.

The bridge company will also train with brigade combat teams and units of action, because as a combined arms support unit, the 362nd is deployable. At this point they are not scheduled to deploy. However, if personnel and equipment arrive and training goes on schedule, the company could be eligible for deployment sometime next year.

The unit's Soldiers are already arriving, and the rest of the personnel should be here by October, said Lt. Col. Todd Ratliff, deputy commander, 36th Engineer Group.

There have been some challenges with getting the company's equipment because the unit doesn't travel light, Ratliff said.

He expects to have all the 150 pieces of rolling equipment by January 2006.

The company will have 56 combat bridge transporters, 44 trailers to carry bridge sections called bays, 14 upgraded MKII-S boats, several wreckers and bulldozers and an excavator.

All their equipment is used to build ribbon bridges across rivers up to 710 feet, and dry support bridges that span gaps up to 162 feet.

Ribbon bridges are used on rivers too deep to ford with vehicles. They are constructed of sectional bays that are floated across a river and pushed into place by boats, then connected together with large pins.

Assembled, the bridges can support up to 96 tons, the equivalent of a tractor trailer carrying a tank.

If they are needed for several months or for fast-flowing water, a bridge can be anchored with cables.

Fort Benning is the ideal setting for bridge company training, Ratliff said. Benning has diverse waterways such as ponds with standing water and the Chattahoochee River with its fast flowing current, 10 feet per second.

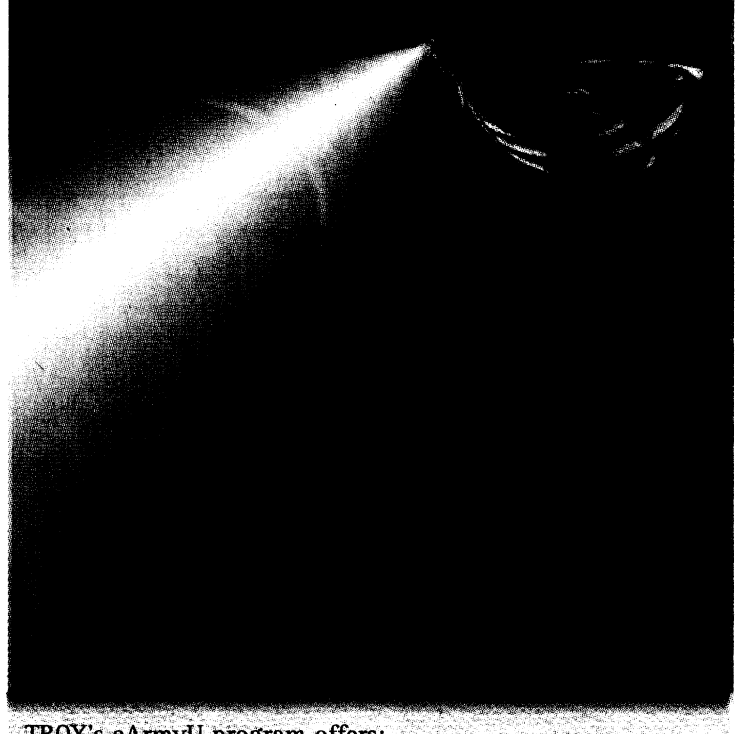
Courtesy photo

Engineers attach a ramp to a ribbon bridge. The bridge company coming to Fort Benning will have 183 personnel, and be one of only five bridge construction units in the Army.

After training, the company will be able to assemble a bridge 297 feet long in about two and half hours, Ratliff said.

"Putting together one of these bridges is an exact science, because the bays have to be fitted together at an angle while fighting a current," he said. "It's physics at its finest."

The unit must also be aware of environmental concerns, such as erosion.



They lay down geo-textile matting to guard the shoreline against depletion and protect the ground from being churned up by the flow of heavy, tracked vehicles crossing the bridge.

These types of bridges have been used in Operation Iraqi Freedom Bosnia.

"Fort Benning is an ideal training location, and it's exciting to have a unit with these capabilities coming," Ratliff said.

Foot Soldiers bleed Infantry blue

Queen of Battle's ranks filled with elite

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

"I was running with my battle buddies, chasing some guys into a treeline, and I could hear bullets ricocheting off the trees around me. I could hear bombs blowing up on one side and bullets whipping through the air.

"I slipped and fell into a puddle, and got back up and kept running. I remember being wet, covered in mud, freezing, and scared of being shot, but I had my buddies watching my back. For me, that memory sums up what it means to be an Infantryman."

For Sgt. Israel Sanchez, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, this story of one night during his deployment in Iraq brings up many memories of tough times and camaraderie in the Infantry.

Sanchez remembers why it was important to him to become an Infantryman.

"As a kid, I remember seeing Soldiers marching in parades," he said. "They looked so proud, so disciplined, that I knew I wanted to be in the Army. I wanted that blue cord hanging from my shoulder to stand out as an Infantryman."

The history of the American Infantryman precedes the founding of America. Leading up to the Revolutionary War, each colony had its own militia and the colonies lacked a cohesive defense.

George Washington and the Continental Congress unified the militias in June 1775 and established the Infantry. The fighting forces were a success, and today the Infantry makes up 13 percent of the Army.

The Infantry is important because its troops are the force on the ground who can secure an area, said Master Sgt. Gary Fox, Career Management NCO, Office of Infantry Proponency.

"It takes foot Soldiers to hold ground against combatants," Fox said. "The support units and the other combat arms are important, but it couldn't be done without the Infantry."

It takes 13 weeks of basic training and advanced infantry training to become an Infantryman, with additional follow-on training after the Soldiers are assigned to a unit.

Infantrymen can train at many schools, like Ranger, Airborne, Pathfinder, Master Fitness, Combatives, Javelin Gunner, Master Gunner, Antitank Weapons, and more.

As Infantry officers climb the ranks, professional development courses include Infantry Officer Basic Course, Infantry Captains Career Course, Intermediate Level Education, Senior Service College and War College. Infantry NCOs go to Primary Leadership Development Course, Basic NCO Course, Advanced NCO Course, First Sergeants Course, and Sergeant Major's Academy.

There is a focus today on training, because the Infantryman has to be a multi-tasker who is situationally aware and can think on his feet, said Capt. Randy Garcia, Infantry Branch representative.

"The Infantry isn't about being a grunt toting a gun through the woods somewhere," Garcia said. "It's about leading Soldiers and developing the communication and analytical skills needed to take charge. Today's Infantryman is a much better Soldier than at any time in the past."

The Army's determination to train the best Soldier possible has resulted in changes in the Infantry in the last few years. In the past, anyone who chose to be Infantry came in as 11X, Infantryman unidentified. After basic training, an 11X chose to become either an 11B, Infantryman, 11C, Infantry Mortarman, 11H, Heavy Anti-Armor Weapons Infantry, or 11M, Mechanized Infantry.

> Master Sgt. Gary Fox
> Office of Infantry Proponency

The Infantry was realigned in September 2001, and all Infantry slots were converted into Infantry or Mortar. The concept behind the realignment was to make an all-around Infantryman, capable of being assigned in either light or heavy units.

"It encourages an Infantryman to become well-rounded and capable of more skills," said Sgt. 1st Class Montana Haas, 11C Career-Management NCO, OIP.

A former recruiter, Haas said adventurous people choose to join Combat Arms, especially Infantry.

"The person who picks Infantry wants to jump out of planes, shoot weapons and blow things up," he said. "When I first joined the Army, I wanted to go to the 82nd Airborne, because I knew I would get to do things I could never do in the civilian world."

EIB training kicks off for 300

Two-week instructional phase prep for testing March 15 to 17

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

About 300 Infantrymen began two weeks of training Tuesday at Burroughs Range in preparation for the Expert Infantryman Badge testing March 15 to 17.

The preparation phase consists of classes and extensive hands-on training in core Infantry skills, qualification cadre said.

The Soldiers met four prerequisites prior to reporting for the instructional portion of the qualification. Interested Soldiers must score a 70 or better in each event of the Army Physical Fitness Test, qualify as an expert with the M-16 or M-4 rifle, complete a 12-mile road march within three hours and qualify on night and day land navigation courses.

"The purpose of the EIB is to recognize outstanding Infantry Soldiers who attain a high degree of professional skill, expertise and excellence," said Command Sgt. Maj. Milton Fields, 29th Infantry Regiment command sergeant major.

The qualification is difficult. Out of an average 300 Soldiers, only about 40 percent will earn their EIB, said the 29th Inf. Regt. operations sergeant major, Sgt. Maj. Mark Sweeney,

The 60 percent who don't make the cut fail because they do not qualify in three of the 32 tested tasks, Sweeney said. The tasks cover critical Infantry skills like map reading, communications, first aid, security and intelligence, nuclear, biological and chemical operations and the use of an array of small arms, grenades and mines.

If Soldiers fail to meet the standards, they may retest once during the current EIB testing phase. They may try again during the next test. Sweeney said the EIB is typically an annual event, but is sometimes held biannually.

Soldiers who qualify and obtain the EIB also earn 30 promotion points, Sweeney said.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center's EIB qualification is available to qualified Soldiers assigned to the post or remote Ranger camps attached to the post. In some cases, when other installations do not have a major Infantry command that can administer the EIB, such as Fort Jackson, S.C., eligible Soldiers are allowed to travel here to qualify, Sweeney said.

PLDC course adapts to modern warfare

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Students attending the Primary Leadership Development Course at Fort Benning are seeing new training.

Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Longstreet, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, NCO Academy, said the current PLDC class is the first to participate in a pilot program designed to help familiarize NCOs with issues that affect Soldiers in today's Army.

"We focus on things besides regular training," Longstreet said. "(The pilot program) added various reporting procedures, requests for medical evacuations and incorporated improvised explosive devices — something we were doing already."

A course on sexual assault was added to go along with the sexual harassment classes already being taught. Land navigation and site training were also consolidated.

"It's good because all (NCOs), not just those in combat arms, will know what to do," said Sgt. Matthew Tennill, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. "When they go on a convoy, they will know what to do with an IED on the side of the road. They can be the leader — step up and take control of the situation."

Besides basic training, this was the first time in the field for Sgt. Teria Wright, from Fort Jackson, S.C.

"If somebody were to take me (without PLDC) and put four Soldiers under me, I wouldn't know what to do," Wright said. "Everything they have added to this course is important, and noncombative Soldiers learn things we wouldn't have known before."

Neither of the Soldiers felt the program's seven-day work week was an issue. They felt taking out the breaks helped them retain information and stay in "learning mode" longer.

"Everything goes by quicker because the weeks run together," said Sgt. Brynton Hester, of Fort Gordon, Ga. "We don't have much time off, so the continual training instills discipline to be a Soldier twenty-four seven, not just as a nine to five job."

Hester said he thinks the training has changed because it is "a different war with different tactics, and we need to change our training to adapt to the world today."

The students in this PLDC cycle will graduate Thursday.

Sgt. Jeremy McCaray, of Fort Jackson, S.C., pounds in a tent stake as he prepares to batten down the hatches for what could be a stormy night. The Soldiers at PLDC spent five days and nights performing situational training exercises at Fort Benning's Wendy Field.

Sgt. Brant Smith, Fort Rucker, Ala., waits for a signal to move through a linear danger area as Soldiers practice a scroll to the road procedure as part of their PLDC training at Fort Benning.

Sgt. Mahasin Muhammad, of Fort Gordon, Ga., radios in information she receives from the lookout Soldier during a reporting procedure drill Tuesday.

Theodor "Dr.Seuss" Geisel (1904-1991) wrote Green Eggs and Ham when a friend bet him he couldn't write a book using less than 50 words. Geisel won the bet but never collected.

First-grader Santana Gibson sits on the lap of Wilson Elementary's D.A.R.E. officer, Sgt. Jessica Mitchell, while Kelsea Norris jokes with them. Mitchell participated in the first grade's celebration of Dr. Seuss's birthday, which included eating green eggs and ham and making "oobleck."

Celebrating SEUSS

"I don't think I like green eggs, so I'll just try the ham," said 7- year-old Zachary Ojeda, looking down at his plateful of green eggs and ham.

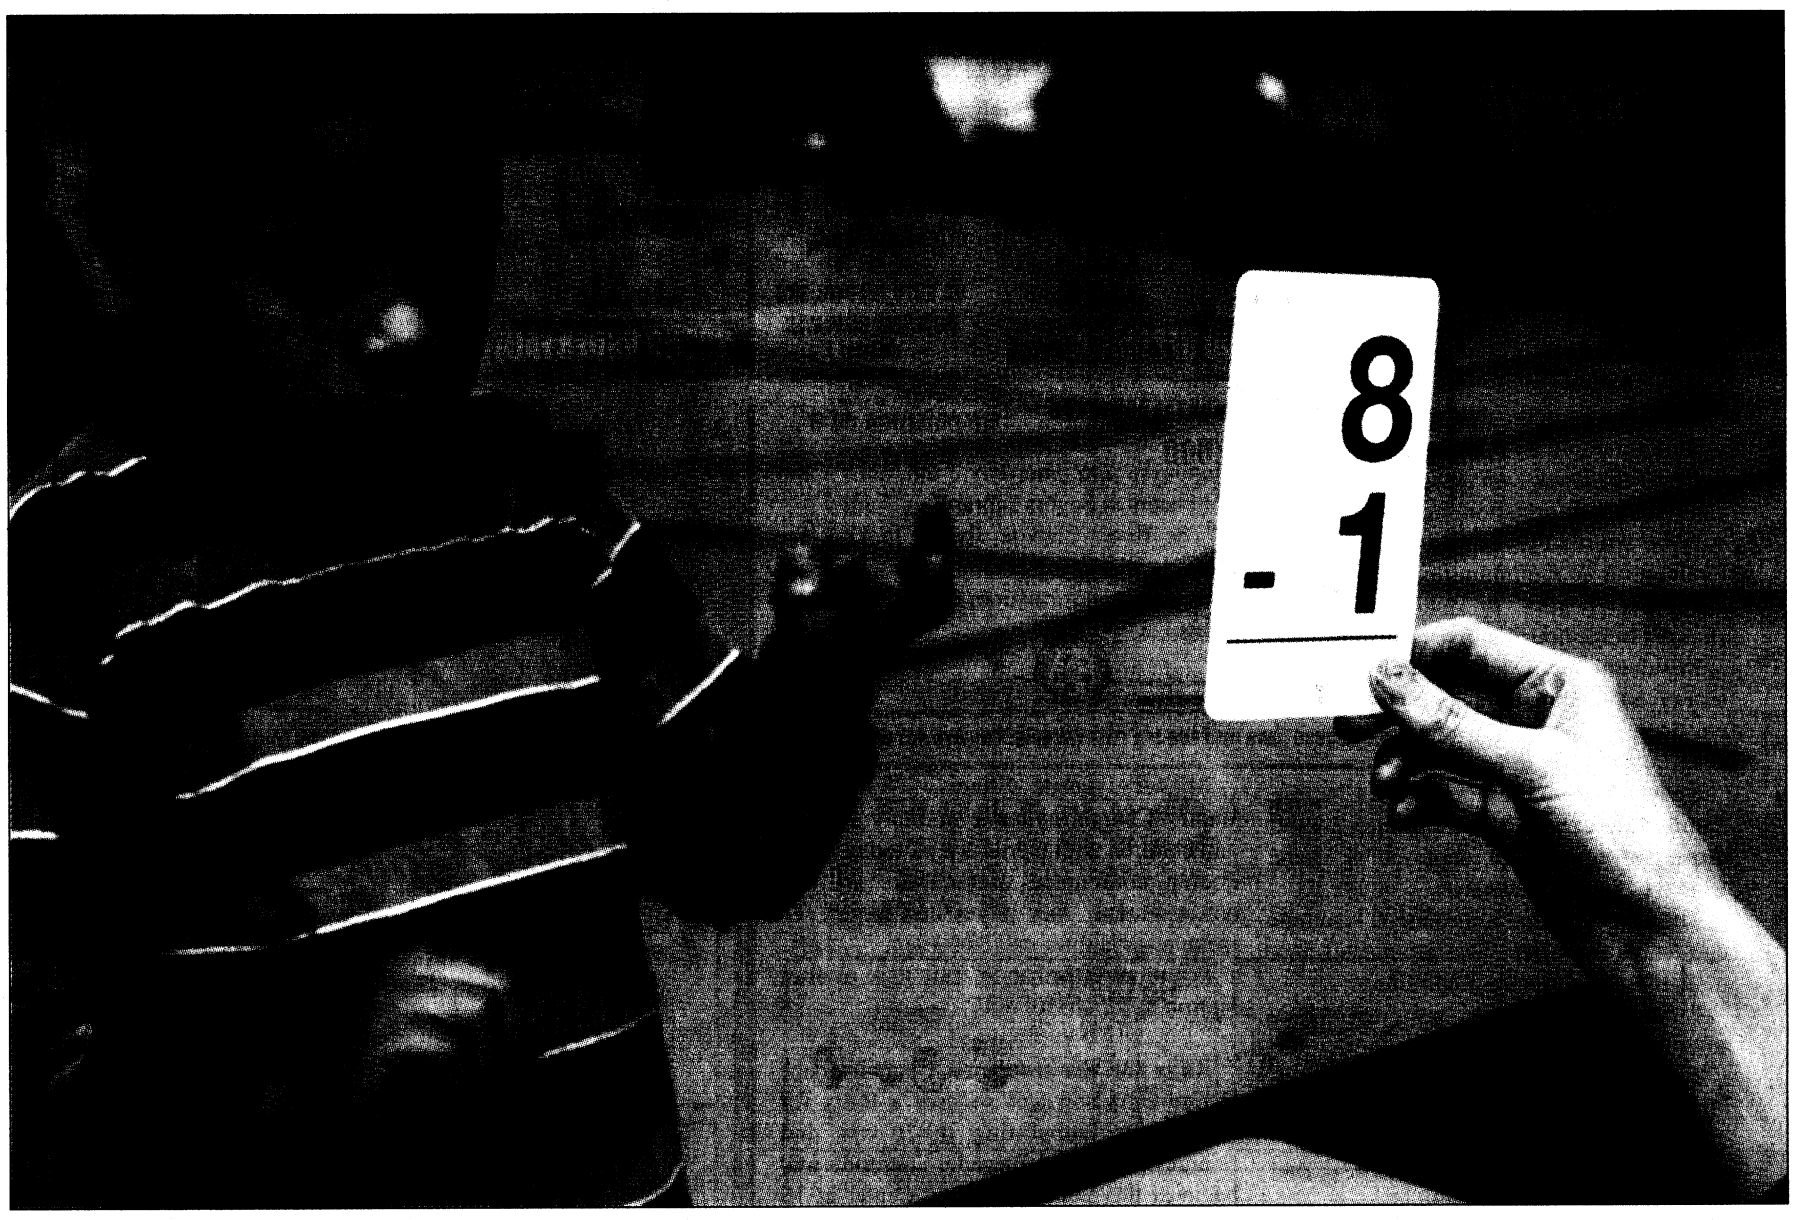
Three first-grade classes at Loyd Elementary tried being Sam-I-am for a day Tuesday in honor of Dr. Seuss's birthday, Wednesday. Teacher Barbara Culwell wanted to try new activities with the kids this year so she organized "MREs" for the students — magnificent, ridiculous, educational, standards-based learning.

"When kids learn in a fun way, it sticks with them longer," Culwell said.

To make learning fun, the first-grade teachers, Culwell, Cathy Tuggle, and Sheila Cousin, read Dr. Seuss stories to the kids and taught math, science, art and reading skills in hands-on activities that related to the books. Children rotated into the different classes for different activities.

In one classroom, the children measured and mixed ingredients and to make a green sludge called "oobleck," a goo that fell from the sky in a Seuss story. In another class, they talked about nutrition while making green eggs and ham. They also colored "truffula trees" while learning about the environment.

Some of the children dressed as Pvt. Snafu, a character created by Theodor Geisel during WWII, before he took the pen name Dr. Seuss. Geisel was too old to fight but wanted to help the war effort. He created posters and cartoons about Snafu, a Soldier who seemed to mess everything up. Watching the entertaining bits, Soldiers learned what not to do.



"We wanted to honor Dr. Seuss's commitment to the Soldiers," Culwell said. "And we knew the kids would have fun dressing up as Soldiers."

The rest of the school celebrated the birthday with Wonderful Wacky Wednesday. The kids dressed as characters from Seuss books, read their favorite stories and ate birthday cake.

The first-graders were split about their favorite activity, but there was no doubt for 6-year-old David Wallace.

"I loved making the oobleck,' he said. "It was so gooey!"

Jaden Parker, 9, a second-grader at Stowers Elementary School, ponders the age-old question of eight minus one during the school's math competition Monday afternoon. Medals were given to first, second and third place winners. Post schools are gearing up for the Terra Nova Test March 7 to 10 and Stowers is using tools like the math competition to drill students in basic math skills to prepare for the standardized testing. Parents can reinforce these skills by using quizzes and flash cards at home.

Benning's Backstage is back

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

Benning's Backstage is once again looking for aspiring actors for the upcoming play production of Woody Allen's Don't Drink the Water.

Auditions will be at 7 p.m. March 7 and 8 at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. Auditioners will read from the script.

The comedy, staged in an American Embassy in Russia, tells the tale of two American tourists who are at the wrong place at the wrong time.

After being accused of espionage by the Russians for taking photos in a restricted area, the couple seek asylum at the embassy. The play tells the funny events that happen in the embassy.

Peggy Cornwell, director, producer and actor, said she's looking for enthusiastic, creative and energetic performers.

"You need to be enthusiastic to be on a stage," she said. "You need to have an imagination to act, and you need to be energetic for some of the roles in this play as they are definitely physical."

Cornwell is also looking for people who can imitate accents — French, Russian and Jersey.

The auditions are open for people 20 years and older.

For more information, call 689-4342.

Burger king gives students recipe for success

Encourages education, character

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

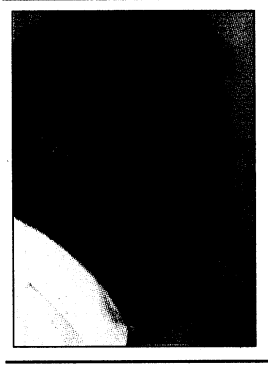
Growing up on a small farm in Missouri taught Marvin Schuster a lot about hard work and the importance of following his dreams.

While speaking to students in Faith Middle School's Advancement Via Individual Determination program, Schuster shared the keys that helped him become an owner of 61 Burger King franchises.

"I'm trying to teach them basic things that can nearly guarantee prosperity," Schuster said.

"What (they) do today could effect what (they) do the rest of (their) lives."

No matter how humble their beginnings, said Schuster, who was not college educated, the students can succeed in life if they focus on their dreams.



"Let me tell you what success is," Schuster said.

"It's getting the most out of your life with the tools God gave you."

He told the students to work hard in school.

"Be scared of getting Cs or Ds," he said. "Good jobs follow good grades."

Schuster encouraged the students to set career goals, earn a college degree, and "read, read, read." He told them three tools they'll need in the "real world."

"Start practicing being a 'FAT' person — be faithful, available to friends and teachable. When people ask what you are doing, tell them you are just being fat."

Marvin Schuster
Owner of 61 Burger King franchises

"You need to be smart to make it in life; it all goes back to success," he said. "Second, is personality. Developing a positive personality will make people want to be around you."

The third tool was character.

"Good character will move you forward," he said, and "bad character will hold you back, without exception."

Schuster told the students to make good friends, be kind to everyone, avoid filthy words and pictures, be neat and clean and keep themselves healthy.

"I beg you to hold onto this acronym — FAT," he said. "Start practicing being a 'FAT' person — be faithful, available to friends and teachable. When people ask what you're doing, tell them you are being fat."

Sergio Rolon, an eighth-grader in the AVID program, said Schuster helped him realize the importance of what he is doing now.

"Decisions I make now can determine my future," said Rolon, who wants to run his own business some day, like Schuster, whose speech gave him hope.

"He helped me believe in myself," Rolon said. "He taught that character is important. If you are a bad person, people won't want to be around you. The way you act is the way people will respond to you."

Rolon said Schuster is an excellent role model because he encourages people to follow their dreams.

"If you have faith and play your cards right, you can be successful," he said. "My dreams seem much closer now."

Car seats: one size does not fit all

Carmen Luciano
Community Health Nursing

Traffic crashes are the leading cause of death for children 6 to 14 years of age. Most parents believe that their children are buckled in correctly. Surprisingly, most of the time they are not.

Now is a perfect time for parents or guardians to educate themselves and become familiar with the issues concerning their children's safety.

One issue of concern is traffic crashes and child restraint use.

This is due, in part, to the fact that most kids are unbuckled or improperly restrained in vehicles. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), after age 4, restraint use falls from 91 percent to 68.7 percent. More than 47 percent of children of 4 to 7 years of age who were killed were completely unrestrained. An estimated 6.1 percent of booster-size children use booster car seats.

NHTSA recommends that all children ages 12 and younger ride in the back seat of a vehicle and be properly restrained at all times.

Parents should use boosters for children once they have outgrown forward facing child safety seats at about 40 pounds and around 4 years old.

Children should continue to use booster seats until they are 40 to 80 pounds and less than 4 feet 9 inches.

Children, who cannot sit with their backs straight against the vehicle seat back cushion, with knees bent over the edge of the vehicle seat without slouching, are not big enough for adult seat belts.

Parents should have child safety seats inspected by one of a number of certified and trained technicians in their community to make sure they are installed correctly.

For more information on booster seats or other traffic safety issues, contact NHTSA at (800) 424-9393 or click on www.nhtsa.dot.gov.

COMMUNITY NEWS

ON POST

Walk with Heroes — The staff, students, families and friends of Loyd Elementary School will conduct a two-mile walk at 9:30 a.m. today on Santa Fe Road as part of an all-school effort to honor and support military families and integrate DoDEA educational standards.

The goal is to reach approximately 6,500 miles — the distance between the children at Loyd and their deployed parents in Iraq.

To participate, call Julia Martinez at 544-3432 or join the staff on Santa Fe Road at 9:30 a.m. today.

Women's Conference — The 2005 Women's Conference will be April 27 at the Officers' Club. Registration has begun. Child care will be provided.

For more information, call Michelle Furney at 689-6537.

Benning's Backstage auditions — DMWR and Benning's Backstage will conduct auditions at 7 p.m. Monday and Tuesday at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

The auditions are for a dinner theater production of Woody Allen's Don't Drink the Water, which will be May 6 to 7 and 13 to 14.

The producer is looking for men and women ages 20 to elderly.

For more information, call 689-4342.

ESC meeting — The Enlisted Spouses' Club will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday. It's banana split day — come and enjoy the ice cream and bring a friend. All enlisted spouses are invited.

Meetings are held the second Tuesday of the month at the ESC clubhouse, Building 241, next to the Infantry Museum, on the second floor.

Free child care will be provided. Notification in advance is required.

For more information, call Holly Andela at (334) 298-2999.

Grand opening — The LC Industries, formerly Self Services Supply Center, will have a grand opening at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday at Building 2385, next to CIF.

Free refreshments and a tour will be provided. The facility will offer products of interest to Soldiers and government employees who normally purchase items with credit cards.

Volunteer opportunities — The Medical Department Activity and Martin Army Community Hospital have volunteer opportunities of all types.

Positions include public affairs intern, patient shuttle transport drivers, clerks, nurses and doctors and more.

Child care is provided.

For more information, call the American Red Cross at 545-5194 or the Public Affairs Office at 544-4276.

Afterschool program — Sayers Memorial Library will present an afterschool program at 4:30 p.m. Thursday. The theme is "Birds and Bird feeders." There will be stories about birds, bird trivia questions and children can make pine cone bird feeders.

March 13 is Family Fun Time at the library. "Clifford" will be the theme. Families can read and learn a new craft.

For more information, call 545-7141.

Red Cross volunteer positions — The American Red Cross has the following volunteer positions available: station chairman, chairman of volunteers, records chairman, hospital volunteer coordinator, office assistant, shuttle drivers and others at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Days and times are negotiable.

For more information, call 545-5194 or stop by Building 2626 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Resident survey — Family Housing residents will receive an official Army resident survey in the mail this month.

This survey is an opportunity to provide honest feedback on current housing conditions. Information from this survey will be invaluable in the future as the Residential Communities Initiative developer begins to make important changes to the housing inventory.

Residents are asked to complete the survey and return it in the self-addressed envelope.

Spouse Support Group — The Chaplain Family Life Center offers a spouse support group for spouses of deployed Soldiers, from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursdays.

The support group has changed locations due to the response. The group will now meet at the Sightseeing Road Chapel.

Child care will be provided. Pre-registration is required.

For information or registration, call 545-9014.

Red Cross classes — The American Red Cross will offer the following classes:

• Lifeguard training: 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. March 19-20, 26-27; $125 with ID card; Briant Wells pool, ARC office.

• Water safety instructor training: 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, March 12-13; $150 for ID card holders; Briant Wells pool, ARC office.

• Community first aid and safety: 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. March 12; $42 for ID card holders; ARC office.

• Baby-sitting training: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. March 26; $32; ARC Building.

All attendees must register and pay in advance. For more information, call 545-5194.

Diabetes Support Group meetings — A Diabetes Support Group will meet in the Family Practice's Connelly Conference Room for a series of two-hour sessions from 5 to 7 p.m. on the following days: Monday, March 14, 21, 28, April 4 and 11.

For more information, call 544-3139.

CPR Saturday — The American Red Cross will offer CPR Saturday, certification in adult, child and infant CPR, March 19.

There are three sessions to choose from: 9 to 11 a.m., 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 1 to 3 p.m.

The sessions are free. Classes will be in Building 2626, Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information and to register, call 545-5194.

OSC scholarship — The Officers' Spouses' Club is offering scholarships for traditional and continuing education students who are family members of active duty or retired Soldiers.

Applications must be postmarked by March 19. Guidelines are available at the OSC Thrift Shop, Bit of Benning, Sayers Library and area high school guidance counselor's offices.

To receive an application by e-mail, send a request to hallows@earthlink.net.

For more information, call Heather Hallows at 687-2662.

Reading/Book Club — The Faith Middle School Reading/Book Club meets Mondays and Thursdays of every month. The club reads and discusses books on Mondays. On Thursdays, the Book Club volunteers at Sayers Library.

The Book Club is always looking for students who enjoy reading.

For more information, call Faith Middle School at 545-5524.

Cyber LANding is gamer's dream

Cafe offers safe, fun environment

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

His kids were growing up, and Ron Harris realized there weren't very many places around Columbus where they could hang out in a fun, safe environment.

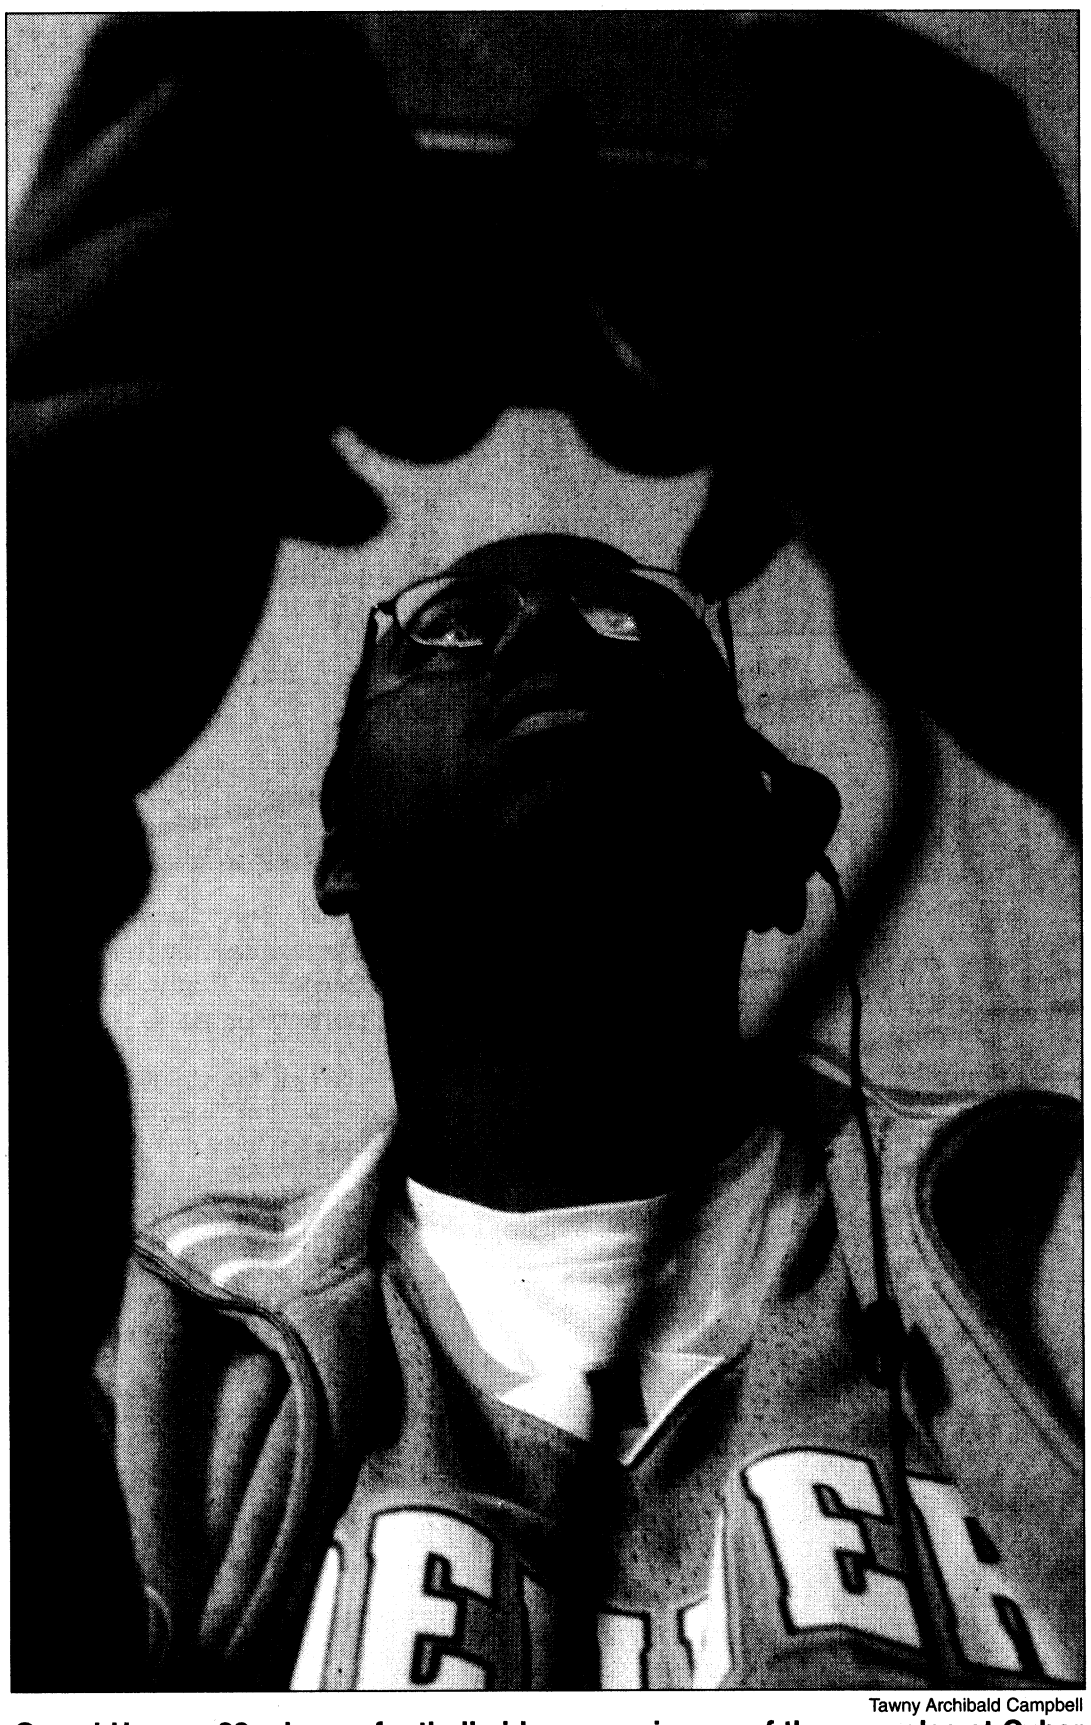
After doing a little research, Harris, his wife and brother decided to partner up and open Cyber LANding — a LAN and Internet gaming center and cyber cafe in North Columbus.

"It was designed to replace the old video arcades where kids could go and hang out with their friends and play in a safe atmosphere," Harris said. "I had seen an article about (a game center) in a gaming magazine, and it said they were real big in Asia and on the West Coast."

Cyber LANding opened its doors in August 2004 with 20 computers with T1 Internet connections, six X-Boxes and five Playstation 2s.

The center caters to gamers of all ages, and is frequented by Soldiers who want a place to relax and escape work for a few hours, Harris said.

"Everyone who comes has a great time," Harris said, "and they usually bring someone back with them to play."



Cyndy Cerbin, director of Communications, National Infantry Foundation, said her son regularly visits Cyber LANding. She describes the business as a place that "offers kids, teens and playful adults a place to play video games, either on the computer or on game systems.

"It's sort of a new age arcade," Cerbin said. "My teenage son enjoys going there … and I frequently see Soldiers in there. It's not close for them, but it's apparently worth it for those who enjoy gaming."

Tracy Lovette, 27, said he started coming to Cyber LANding a week after it opened.

"A couple of my friends told me about it," Lovette said. "Now I come back a couple of times a week to socialize and play the stuff I don't have a home."

The gaming center offers 23 computer games, 17 games for the X-Box and 13 for the Playstation 2. Gamers can choose to play at a computer or a console. Each console is in a mini-living room setting, complete with a sofa, to offer privacy and comfort.

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Gamal Harper, 22, plays a football video game in one of the consoles at Cyber LANding.

All gamers are monitored and the ratings on the games are strictly enforced, Lovette said.

"It gives people a safe place to get together and play games," Lovette said. "It's a great addition (to Columbus). It's a place to have fun. It's family run, family oriented, a friendly atmosphere and (the owners) know almost everyone by name."

Gamal Harper, 22, also found out about the center through a friend who knew gaming was one of his hobbies.

"The people who work here are very friendly," said Harper, who spends upwards of 10 hours a week at the center. "They are like a second family.," he said. "This gives you a place to hang out so you are not in the streets doing something bad. It's a positive place."

Cyber LANding isn't only for gamers, said Harris. People can come to do research, make printouts, or just come for a snack from the café.

Harris said the store usually doesn't require parental supervision for students 12 and older, so parents should "feel free to drop them off and go out to a movie or have a date night."

Computer gaming costs $5 for the first hour, $4 for the second and $3 for each additional hour. Costs are $1 lower for console play. Those with a military or student I.D. can get $1 off their first hour of play.

Cyber LANding is located at 5870 Veteran's Parkway, Suite L.

For more information, call the center at 320-0500 or visit www.cyberlanding.net.

Chattahoochee County ask the judge

Judge Kenneth Van Horn
Chattahoochee County

Q. Why don't you accept credit card payments?

A. What most people don't know about credit cards is that they cost the retailer money out of every purchase.

If, for example, Bo and Luke Duke were finally caught in Operation Leadfoot a.k.a. the local speed trap, and the fine was $125, the cost of accepting a credit card payment might be $3.93. That doesn't sound like much but Operation Leadfoot writes 1,000 citations a month and if half were paid by credit card, the cost of offering credit cards as a method of payment would be $23,580 a year and Boss Hogg wouldn't go along with that.

If they acted out with the deputy and he kept writing, that single speeding ticket could have additions ... Loud Music $125, Laying Drag $685, Broken Taillight $125 … you get the idea. The cost of processing the fine just climbed considerably.

Now this is for a convenience. Businesses are sold credit card services on the basis that it increases the average purchase through impulse buying but government is not really sold by that logic.

After all, do we really want you to say, "Wow, it was so easy and convenient to pay that speeding ticket that I'm going to speed through town again!" or "While I'm here go ahead and add another $125 fine to prepay my next fine!"

If you think it might increase collections, well, that doesn't really work either.

If Luke doesn't pay his citation he gets this fun little letter from the state advising him that his driver's license is being suspended. If he gets caught driving after that, the charge is Driving on a Suspended License. That charge carries minimum penalties of a $500 fine and two days in jail. "Say hey to Cooter while you're in there Luke!"

So … when most government agencies do provide credit card processing it comes with a small convenience fee included so that only those who want to pay for the convenience have to pay extra.

We are adding that service to our Web site. I hope you never have to use that service but if you do, then you know why we charge extra for the privilege of paying your fine that way.

Kids celebrate Black History

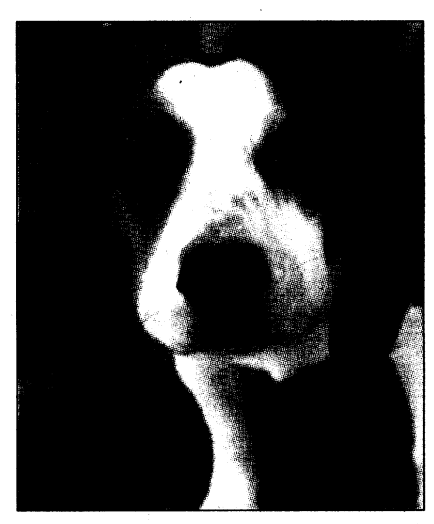
Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Main Post Child Development Center invited parents to watch their children perform in their Black History Celebration Feb. 25.

The children sang songs, did an African dance, wore peanut costumes in honor of George Washington Carver and dressed as traffic lights for a skit about Garrett Morgan, inventor of the traffic light.

Pre-toddler teacher Mollie Floyd has organized the event with other staff for 16 years. "This event is important for the children. We need to challenge ourselves and each other to to have this focus everyday, not just for Black History Month."

Diane Belfield, program coordinator and lead education technician liked doing the program because it brought black history and culture down to a child's level.



"We've been using creative ways to teach the children about Black History," she said. "It's especially important for children in Army families to have these kind of programs, because the Army is so diverse. This encourages them to understand and appreciate their differences."

Practices change

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Hawkins

In the military, very early we learn the difference between principles and practices. Principles are things that never change — they are timeless. Practices, on the other hand, come and go according to those principles — they can change and change again.

Let me give you an example. A simple military principle is firepower. A military practice associated with that principle was once the musket. The practice of the musket, though, has changed and given way to more modern practices like the squad assault weapon and laser-sighted sniper rifles.

Now what on earth do SAWs and sniper rifles have to do with your financial success? Last week I focused on giving you four financial principles: Principle one, God owns it all; Principle two, We are in a growth process; Principle three, The amount is not important; and Principle four, Faith requires action.

This week, I want to give you six financial practices, that may change over time, which flow from the above four principles that will never change over time.

Practice One — Determine your net worth. It's kind of like traveling in a new town after a PCS — to find out how to get to a new location, you have to first know where you are starting from. Net worth is simple what's left over, if anything, after you subtract the value of everything you owe from everything you own. First, you have to know where you are!

Practice Two — Stop the bleeding (confront the dangers of debt). Just like in the Martin Army emergency room, one of the first things the paramedics do is to "control the bleeding." You see, it doesn't matter how many pints of blood they give you (income) if you're hemorrhaging all over the floor (debt). You're going to code (bankruptcy).

Practice Three — Where do I want to go. If you don't have a plan and very specific goals for your money, someone else (retailers) will.

Practice Four — Avoid the most common financial mistakes. We'll take all next week's articles and look just at these. But just like in Iraq, when you're committed to getting your convoy from point A to point B, it's essential to know what the land mines and hazards look like so that you can steer clear of them.

Practice Five — Put together a plan. You've heard it before: failing to plan is really planning to fail. That's absolutely true when it comes to your financial success.

Practice Six — Discover the joy of giving. There is no package so small as someone wrapped up in himself or herself. You can't out-give God. Give it a try.

If we can help you here at the Family Life Center with some financial coaching or referrals to our money experts at Army Community Service, give us a call at 545-1760 or introduce yourself to me at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel.

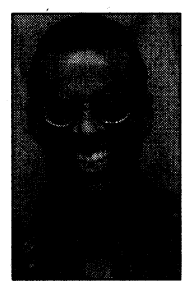
Four stages can make or break a marriage

Relationship can proceed in two different directions

Chaplain (Maj.) Kenneth Revell
11th Infantry Regiment

Marriages tend to evolve through several stages. In each stage the relationship between the spouses is continually being redefined.



The first stage of married life is the "romantic stage." The newly married couple is governed by the illusion that feelings of love will last forever. Differences and difficulties are easily negotiated, because each spouse is putting forth his or her best foot.

The belief that couples have in this stage is that one's spouse can do no wrong and that love heals everything, even imperfections.

The second stage of the marital relationship can be rightfully called the "reality stage."

The reality stage has to do with the encroachment of life's pressures upon the relationship.

These pressures pertain to such things as the birthing and rearing of children, the chore of trying to make ends meet, the struggle with in-laws and outlaws (adolescents gone awry), the attempt to cope with each other's differences, the battle with fatigue and exhaustion and aging.

Revell

From the reality stage the couple moves to the "resentment stage." This stage is often marked by disappointment, disillusionment and discouragement.

Resentment here does not necessarily mean that the couple has fallen out of love. But it does mean that the couple may have had some of their expectations dashed.

The husband who was once romantic is now tied up in "climbing the career ladder" so that he has little or no time for his family.

On the other hand, the wife is now investing an enormous amount of energy into the needs of her children, and sometimes a career so that she has little energy or time left to nurture her relationship with her husband.

The marital relationship at this point, depending on the level of pain and the emotional and spiritual maturity of the couple, can proceed in one of two directions. It can move in the direction of resignation or resolution.

If the relationship moves toward resignation, one or both spouses will find ways to sabotage the relationship or pull a new relationship into the picture, sometimes both.

If the relationship moves toward resolution, then the couple will find ways to make their differences and difficulties work for them.

This requires a mature understanding of love, a compromising of differences, an accommodating of needs, a communicating of feelings and a mutual willingness to make the relationship more important than the struggle.

For couples seeking to strengthen their marital bonds, the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760 offers a host of programs designed to make bad marriages good and good marriages better.

Keep in mind, however, that good marriages are not accidents; if they are to happen, they happen on purpose.

May the Lord bless our military marriages.

Did you know?

William Webb-Ellis, a student at Rugby School in Rugby, England is credited with creating the game of rugby in 1923. Webb-Ellis "with fine disregard for the rules of football (soccer) as played in his time, took the ball in his arms and ran with it, thus originating the distinctive feature of the rugby game." Rugby is played in more than 100 countries worldwide.

Bench notes

Erin Nash

• Trade talk

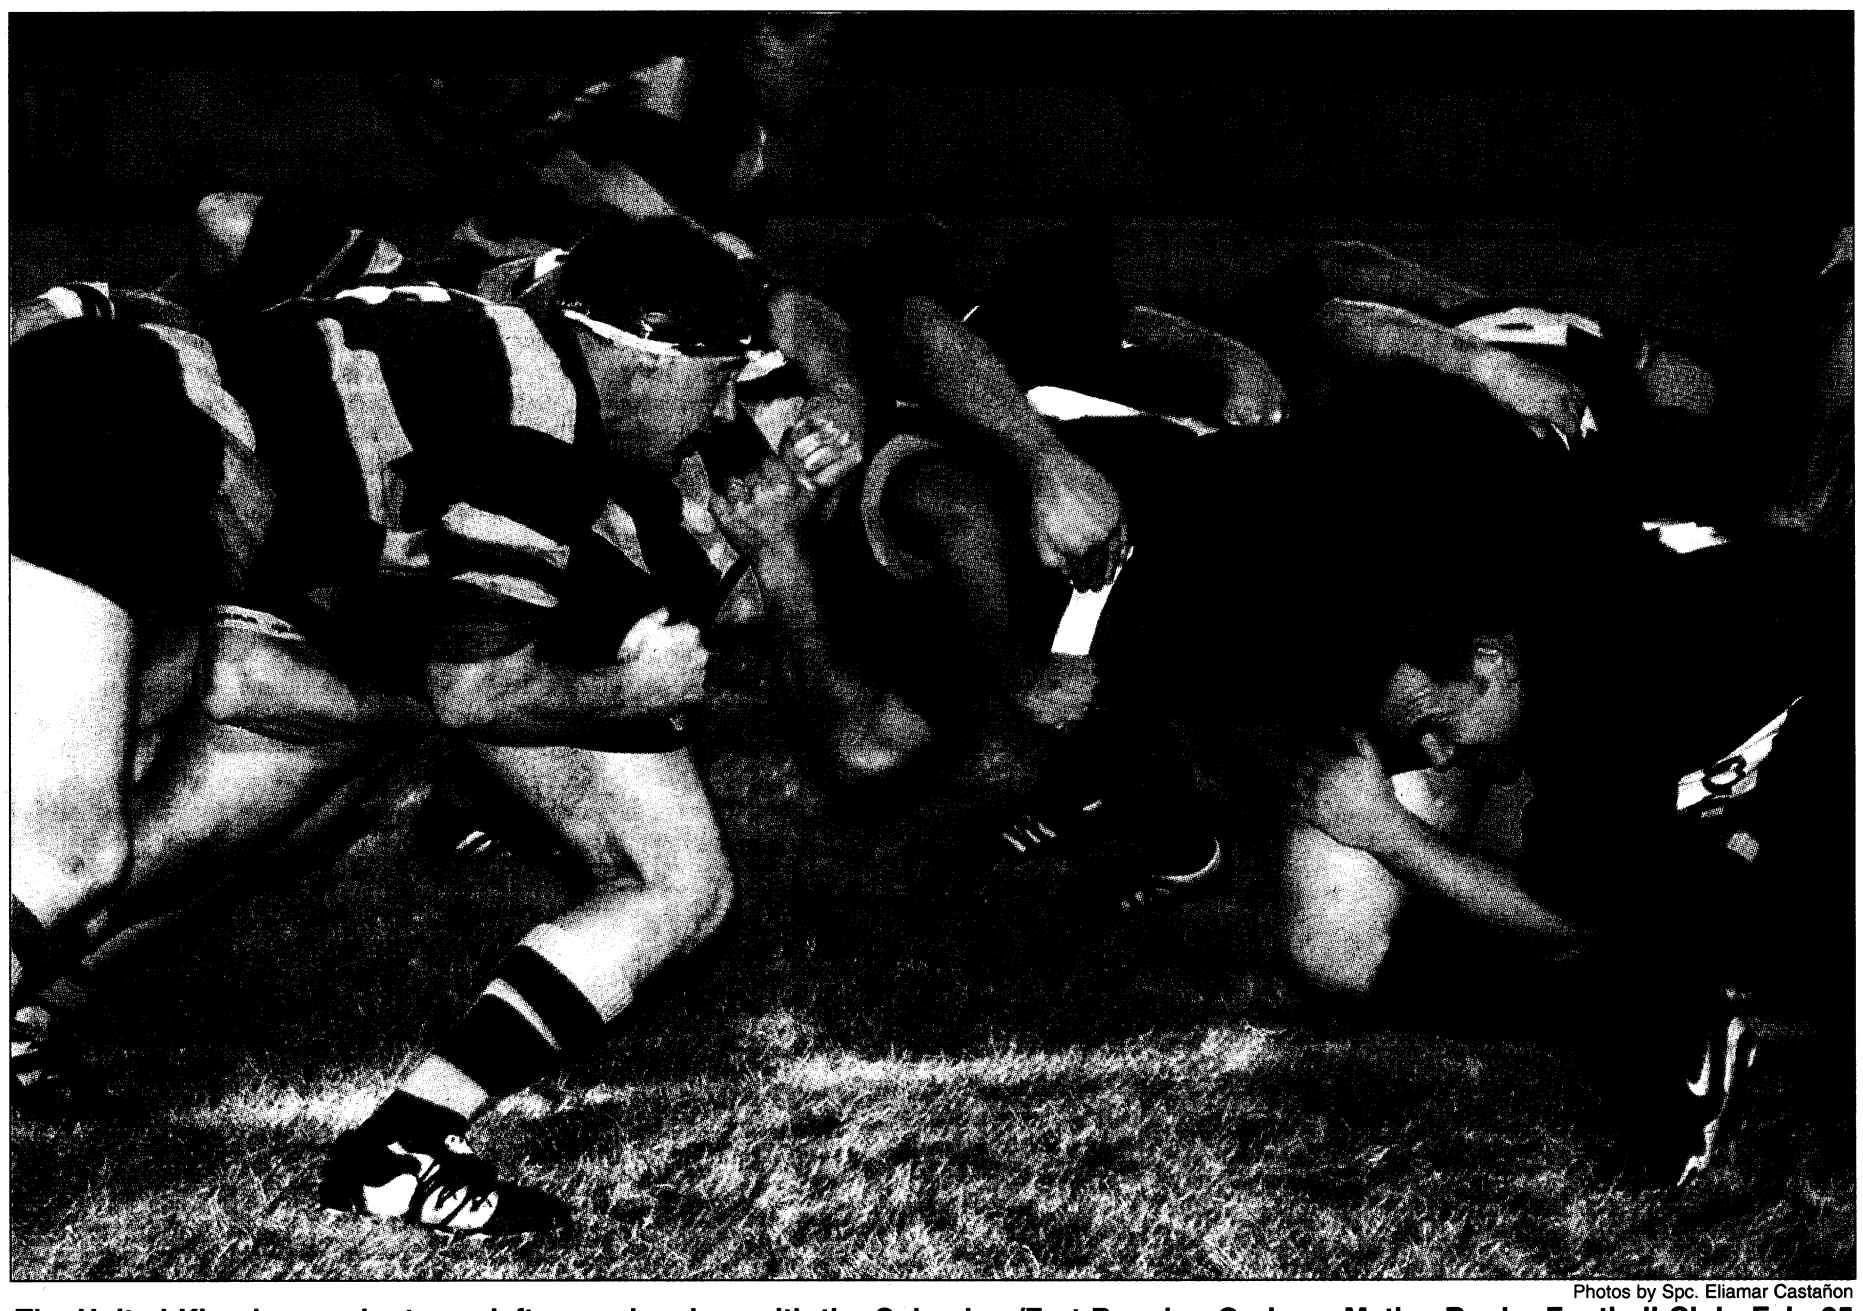
NBA — The Sacramento Kings traded Chris Webber to the Philadelphia 76ers. Looks like Philly might have a championship team after all.

NFL — Wide receiver Randy Moss was traded to the Oakland Raiders from the Minnesota Vikings. Vikings fans are NOT happy.

MLB — Phenix City native, pitcher Tim Hudson, was traded from the Oakland A's to the Atlanta Braves and got a contract extension.

• Canseco threatened

Jose Canseco, on tour promoting his book Juiced, about steroids in major league baseball, had to cancel several book signings due to a death threat via his Web site.



Someone's not happy, although it takes a lot of guts to threaten a guy who is proud of his steroid use.

Roush races on

Roush Racing had a great weekend at the Auto Club 500. Greg Biffle won, Kurt Busch finished third and currently holds the season points lead. Carl Edwards came in fifth and Mark Martin cruised to seventh.

Chaney imposes self-suspension

John Chaney, head coach of Temple University's men's basketball team, removed himself from the Atlantic 10 tournament as a coach. He ordered rough play in a recent game against Saint Joseph's, and Temple player Nehemiah Ingram broke the arm of John Bryant, a senior, that ended his season and possibly his career.

British invade Fort Benning

The British invaded Fort Benning and nearly overtook the U.S. Army Soldiers during the 2005 United Kingdom/U.S.A. Sports Special Event Feb. 25.

The British soldiers competed with the Fort Benning Soldiers in soccer, baseball and rugby.

The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation put together a soccer team that included 14 countries, said Col. Rick Riera, post garrison commander, during the opening ceremony of the games.

The WHINSEC team definitely posed a tough match. During the two 30-minute-halves both teams battled fiercely. But, in the end, the British took the game, 1-0 on a penalty kick.

The 14th Combat Support Hospital gathered last season's intramural softball team to play against the British. The British didn't have as good of luck in the sport, as the 14th CSH Soldiers took them, 9-8.

To show good sportsmanship after a good game, the 14th CSH Soldiers signed a baseball glove and gave it to the British soldiers. To reciprocate the gift, the British soldiers signed a baseball and gave it to the 14th CSH Soldiers.

Rugby, however, was the game of the night. The Columbus/Fort Benning Cruise-a-Matics Rugby Football Club, a local rugby team which is made up mostly of Soldiers, put up a fight against the British, but were defeated, 26-0.

"The British side was technically superior to us, and it showed in their quality team play," said Roy A. Krueger, team captain of the Cruise-a-Matics.

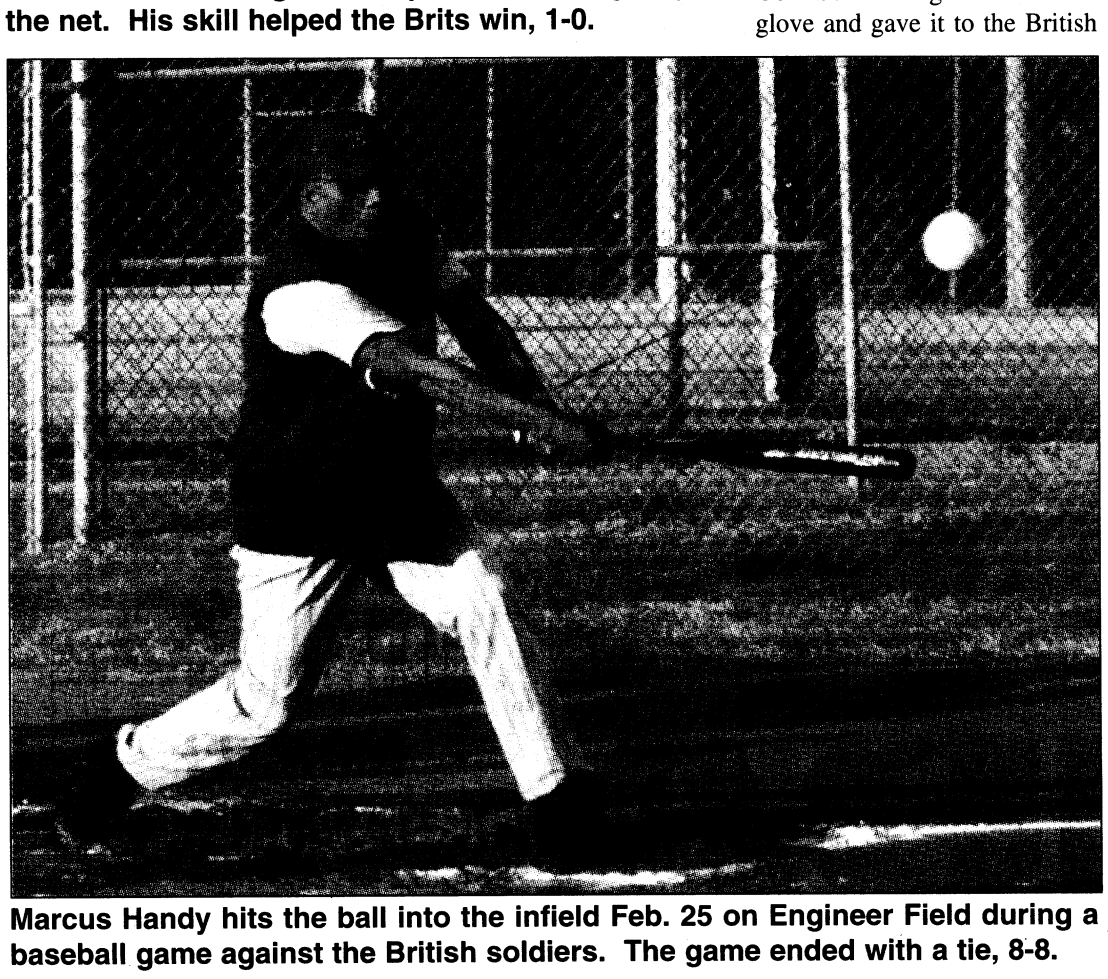
"That's to be expected, considering they have been playing rugby since they were little kids and our side had a range of rugby experience from twenty-six years to two guys playing their second game ever."

Krueger said he was proud of his ruggers — considering their opponents — as they played a different game during the second half.

"All their points were scored in the first half and we let them clearly know that we were contenders to the last minute of the match," he said.

Browne admitted the Cruise-a-Matics were at a disadvantage during the game.

"We have an England International player on our team," he said. "So I guess this game really wasn't fair. But all in all, this was a fantastic event."

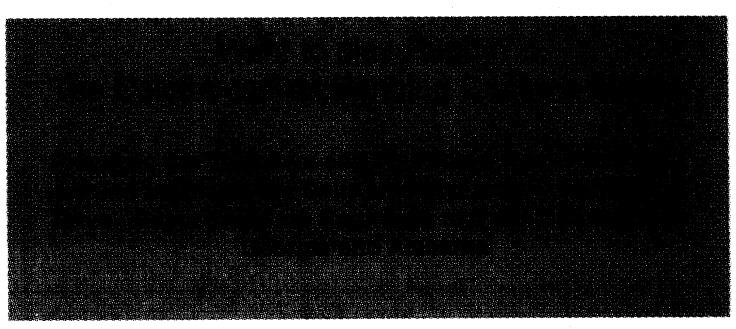


The sports function ended with a social at the Officers' Club sponsored by the U.K.

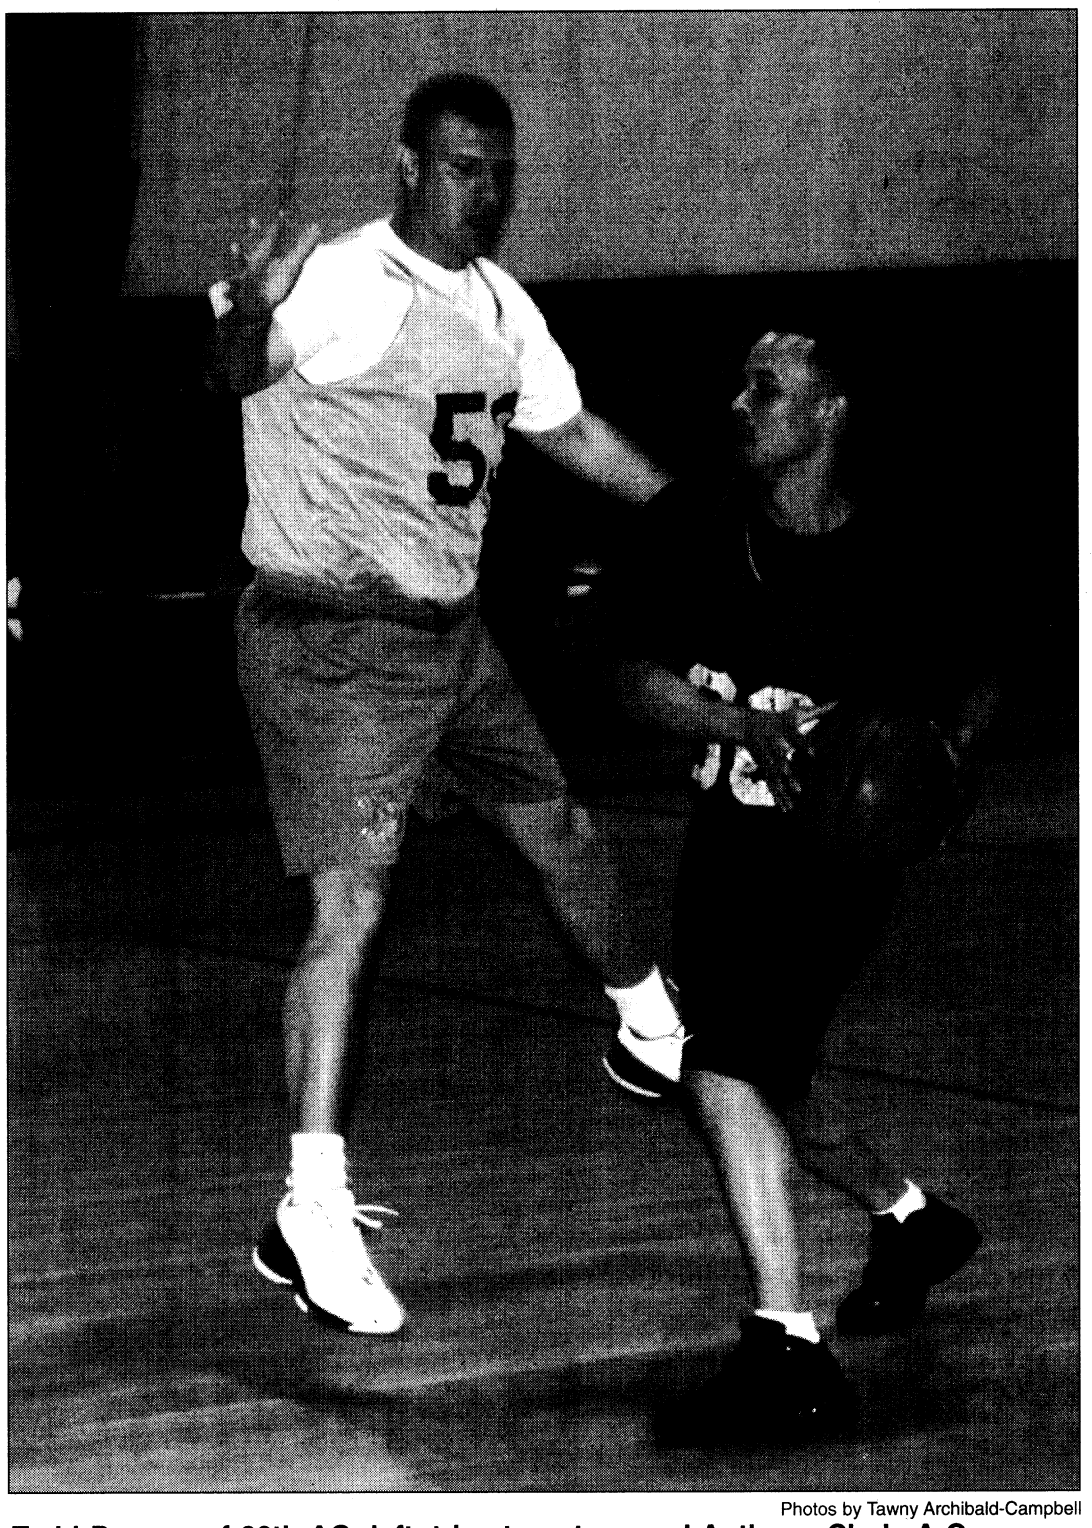
Krueger said the social allowed both teams to share "stories, exaggerations and generally prove that rugby players, the world over, look at life from mostly the same perspective."

The U.K. soldiers were at Fort Benning for the second phase of the Initial Command and Staff Course, a course required for British officers to take upon a promotion from a captain to a major, said British Maj. Simon Browne, a course staff member.

The soldiers completed training last week and what better way to celebrate the end of training than with some friendly competition?



The Cruise-a-Matics practice from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays behind (north of) the Dolly Madison factory on Victory Drive. Game times are Saturdays at 2 p.m. at locations throughout Georgia and Alabama.



Marcus Handy hits the ball into the infield Feb. 25 on Engineer Field during a baseball game against the British soldiers. The game ended with a tie, 8-8.

"The British side was technically superior to us, and it showed in their quality team play. That's to be expected, considering they have been playing rugby since they were little kids and our side had a range of rugby experience from twenty-six years to two guys playing their second game ever."

30th AG scrapes up win against 14th CSH

Players from the 30th AG capitalized on sloppy dribbling and missed shots to run up the score and beat A Company, 14th Combat Support Hospital, 55-44, Tuesday night at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The 30th AG played a fast game, running the ball up and down the court without giving A Co. time to rest or set up an offense or defense.

"It was an action-oriented game, and rebounds were a big factor," said Jamal Reid, 30th AG. "On defense we noticed (A Company) didn't have a good handle on the ball, so we trapped them a lot, which really helped out."

A Co. led the first couple minutes of the game, and then it was all 30th AG. By the first half, A Co. had been outplayed, 24-15, a deficit they couldn't come back from.

"The first half, we shot really well and gave the ball to our point guard, (Mario) Washington, who had four three-pointers in the first half," Reid said. "That really helped, and we pushed the ball."

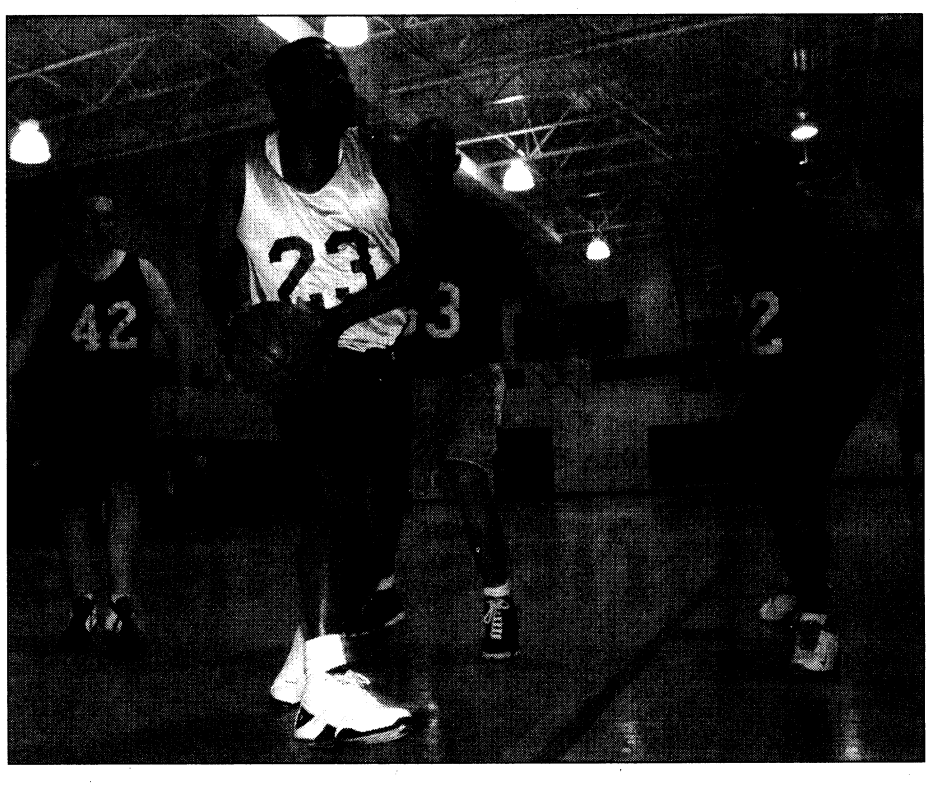
A Co. was getting some open shots, but nothing was falling through the hoop and with the absence of two of their rebounders under the net, they missed a lot of opportunities on the board.

"We got started late and had no real offense in the first half," said Marcus Bell, A Co. "When we finally started to play, in the last ten minutes of the game, it was too late."

The 30th AG was up 42-22 with 10:25 left on the clock when Anthony McWilliams of A Co. let loose with a three-pointer.

The 30th AG pressured A Co. with a full-court press, which lead to a series of turnovers, but no points.

With 6:23 left in the game, Bell stepped up to the pressure inside the key and started letting shots fly outside the arc.



"We just started shooting and stopped passing so much," Bell said. "When we had the open shots we took them. The last ten minutes of the game, I decided to just shoot."

And he did.

Bell sunk five three-pointers in six minutes.

As each ball fell, the score tightened a little, but the 30th AG never let A Co. come closer than 11 points.

Mario Washington was the only member of the 30th AG to score in double digits, racking up 16 points. He was followed by A Co.'s Bell, with 15 and McWilliams with 11.

William Hargrove, of the 30th AG, looks for an opening around Soldiers of the 14th CSH during the game Tuesday.

Amaker hopes to wrestle collegiately

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

When senior Xavier Amaker transferred from Spencer to Northside High School at the start of his sophomore year, the Patriot's wrestling program wasn't the big draw.

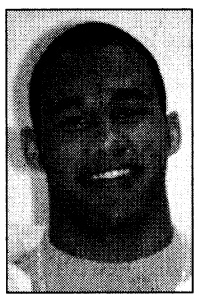
"It was a new school," Amaker said. "It was about setting goals, and educationwise, Northside was supposed to have the best teachers."

He said he also wanted to continue to play football, a sport he'd been playing since he was in elementary school. He played defensive end, weighing in at about 200 pounds on his 5 foot, 9 inch frame.

His defensive coach was also the head wrestling coach.

"We try to get the football guys to wrestle," said Coach Paul Carroll. "The sport helps them and makes them tougher for football. Wrestling is a controlled fight for six minutes."

So Amaker started wrestling and said he couldn't say which sport was harder.



"They're both tough in their own ways," he said. "They each have different conditioning, but wrestling was a new experience. I just wish I had done it longer."

In his second year wrestling, Amaker posted a 36-4 record in the 189-pound weight class. He pinned his opponent in all 36 wins, but because of an injury, he said he wasn't able to qualify for the state tournament.

This year, Carroll said Amaker's record was 32-12, with around 20 wins by pins.

"He was going against guys who've wrestled eight or nine years," Carroll said. "He's a hard-working young man. He gives a good effort every time he goes out on the mat or the field."

On the road to this year's state tournament, Amaker took second place medals in tournaments in Auburn, Ala., and Pacelli High School, wrestling in the 215 pound class.

Amaker

Carroll didn't think Amaker was as comfortable, mentally, wrestling in the heavier weight class, although his finishes were better. For the city and area tournaments in January and February, Amaker went back to his original weight, finishing third in the city and fourth in the area.

The top 16 wrestlers in each weight qualified for the state meet, and Amaker finished fourth in the state.

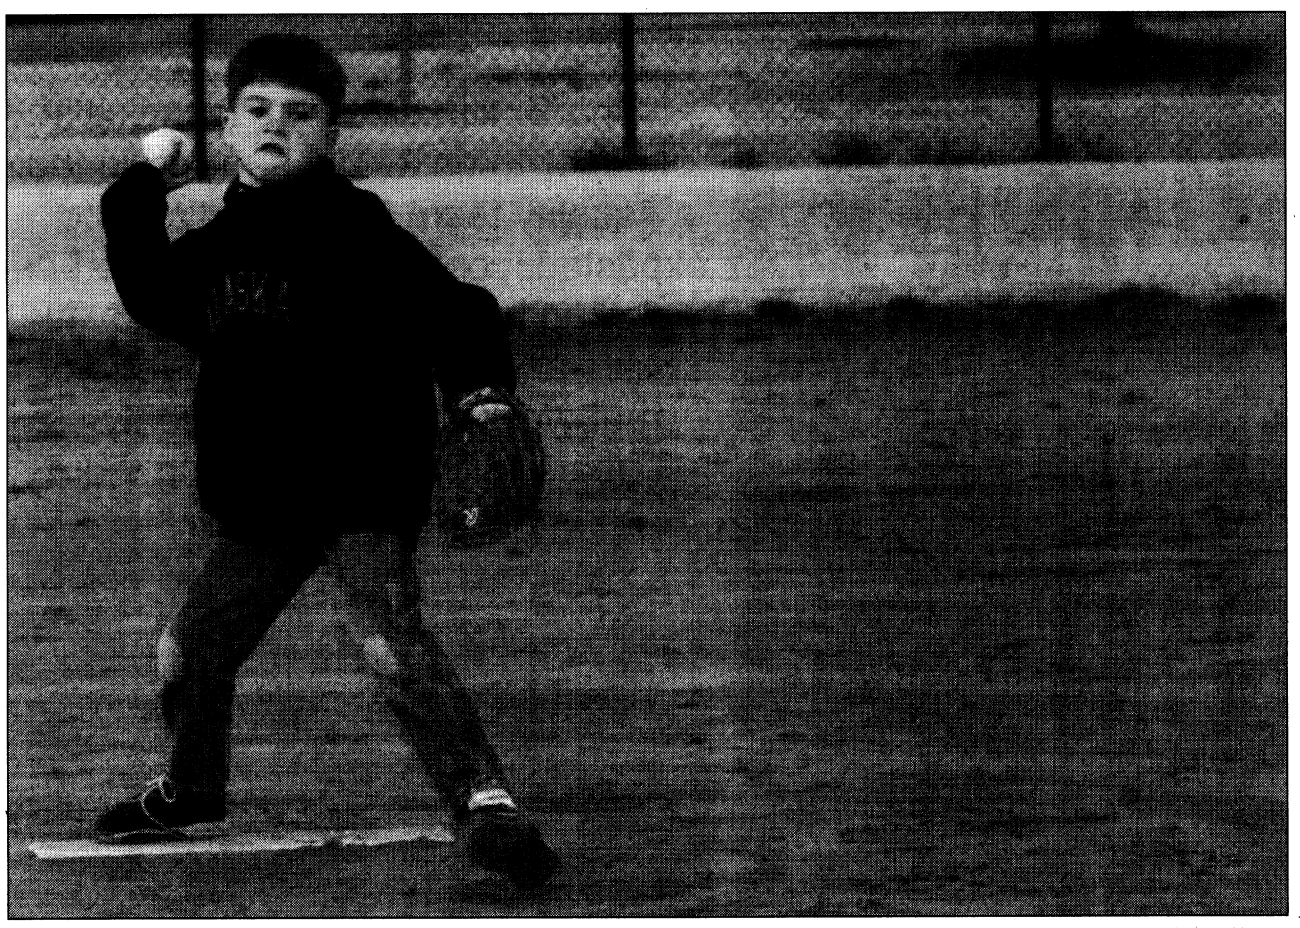
"We preach all year that it's not how they start, but how they finish," Carroll said. "He started out slow, but he finished better. Fourth in the state is pretty dang good."

Amaker was one of the team captains this year, Carroll said, and someone the team looked up to.

"He's not real talkative, but he led by example," he said.

Amaker said wrestling this year was emotional.

"The guys are real close," he said. "If one goes down, the team could go down."



Amaker hopes to continue wrestling in college, preferably on a scholarship. But he's trying to be realistic about his chances.

"We're a new school, and only one girl has gotten an athletic scholarship for softball," he said. "I'll be all right in college. Maybe I can walk on somewhere in Georgia."

Although he hasn't decided exactly what he'll study, he said college is definitely in his future. He's not planning to follow in his father's footsteps in the military.

"When I was younger, he always had to go somewhere," Amaker said. "Now he's always there (for me)."

NASCAR not redneck sport

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I admit it — I'm a Yankee — born and bred in New England. I moved here to be with my husband in April 1996. I clung to my Yankee roots, denouncing everything Southern. Now, almost nine years later, most of that has changed. I now like country music and barbecue.

But the one thing I am a huge fan of is NASCAR. When I first moved here, I kept wondering why people had numbers on their cars. My husband explained that it was the NASCAR driver's car number. Ooooh, o.k., but that still left me wondering — what the heck was the appeal of watching cars go round and round?

My brother-in-law has always been a racing fan. He and my husband would go to Speedway 95 in Maine and watch the races when they were growing up, and he eventually started following NASCAR.

Rick would tell us about the races and we would just laugh and say, yeah, whatever, that's great Rick. Then, one Sunday, I sat down and watched a race. I was hooked.

I quickly realized that these guys weren't just driving around — it was a real competition at speeds even I would never dare. I also figured out it was even more fun if I picked a driver to root for, like any other sport. I liked the driving of Dale Earnhardt Jr. (his good looks didn't hurt either) and have since become a huge fan.

NASCAR is like any other sport — the more you watch the more you learn. I'm now learning about restrictor plates and engines and peel-away windshields. I despise some drivers and cheer for others.

What bothers me is that NASCAR has gotten tagged a "redneck" sport. I'm in no way a redneck. NASCAR is slowly, but surely, catching on in all parts of America, and will soon be as commonplace as apple pie and baseball.

If a Yankee like myself can watch and appreciate it, anyone can — y'all.

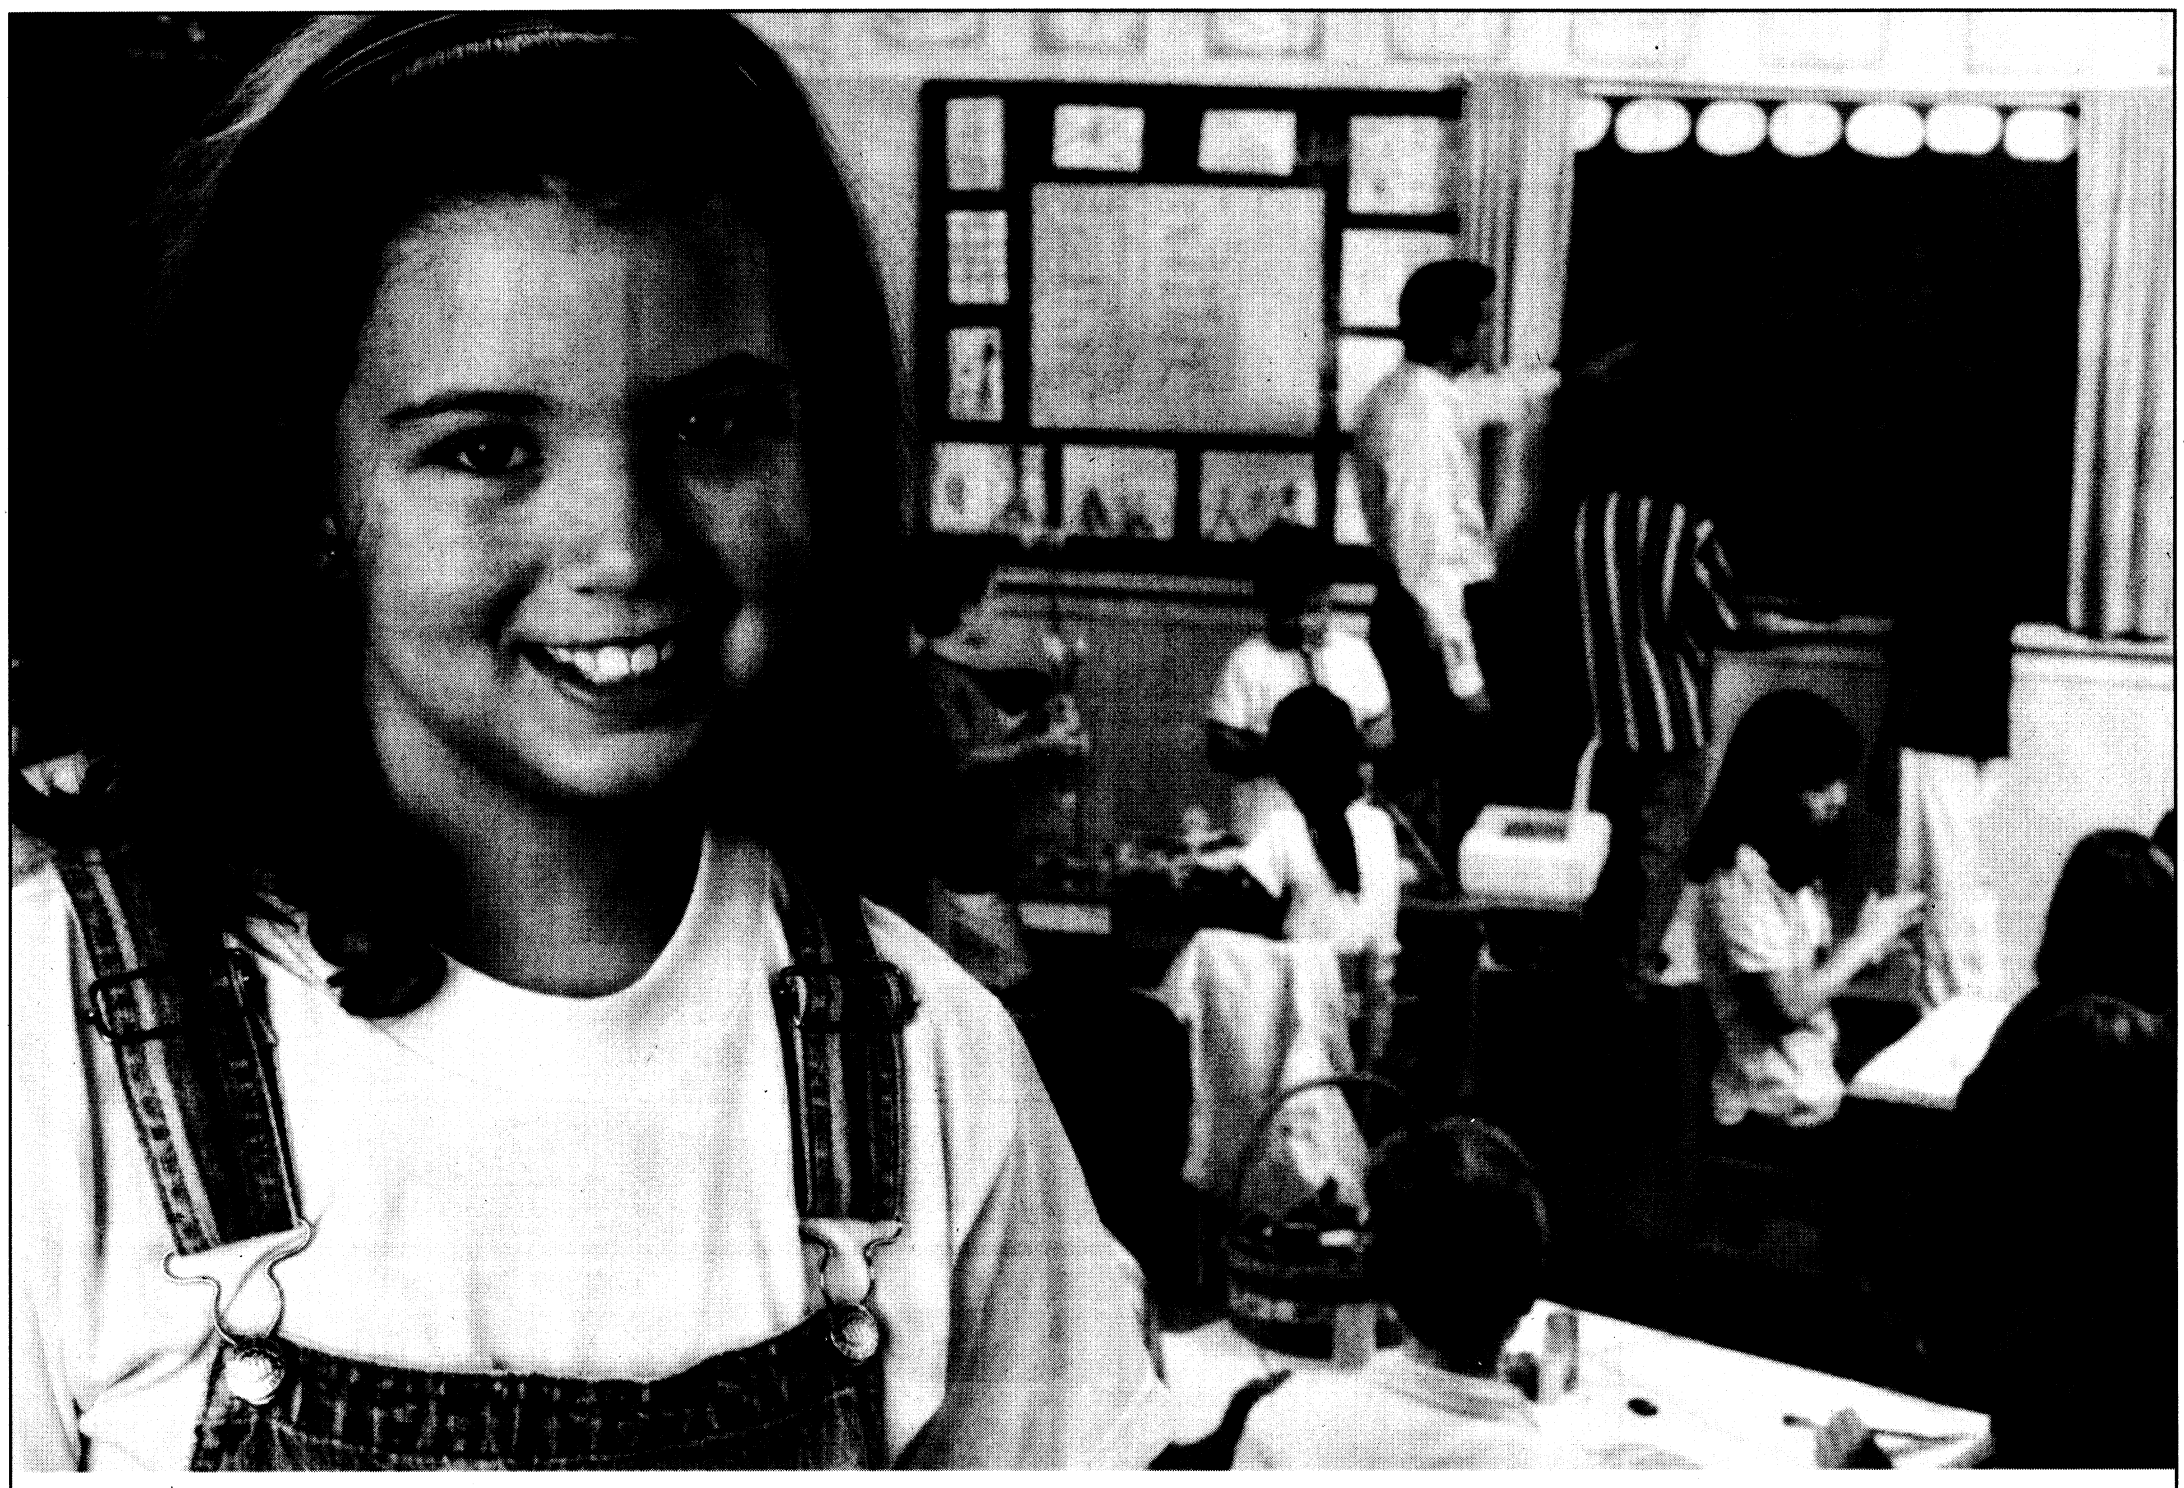
(There's no punch line.)



What do you get when you mix Christianity, Judaism and Islam? In many parts of the world, it's a recipe for disaster. Yet in America, it's a formula that has peacefully endured for over 200 years. In fact, not only has it endured, it's flourished.

The pundits may say that the ability for different faiths to coexist here comes from a lack of intensity and passion for any religion in America. But nothing could be further from the truth. Because we are free to choose which religion, if any, we'd like to follow, it enables us to have a deeper, more personal relationship with our faith than would otherwise be possible.

And because no one religion needs to feel threatened by another, we can look to the similarities that unite us, instead of focusing on the differences. Two hundred million Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus agree. To learn more about freedom of religion, visit rememberfreedom.org. Or, feel free to ask the spiritual leader of your choice.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

The noise was thunderous as the terminal doors opened and the first pair of tan boots crossed the threshold. That pair was followed by 141 others, each set showing obvious signs of wear after a year in the Iraqi desert.

Members of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) returned home March 3 after completing their second combat tour in two years.

"To the families, thanks for the love, care and support you've given to these Soldiers," said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commander. "Now, do not try to do everything in the next twenty-four hours you haven't done in the past year."

Freakley said the year has been quite busy for the 498th. They racked up remarkable numbers during the tour. Soldiers completed 1,248 medevac

"I told our guys that a lot of Soldiers leaving (Iraq) see it as a year lost in their lives. Over time, they will look back and see their accomplishments over there."

Identity crisis

ID theft becoming national epidemic

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Neill Monhof

Remember when an identity crisis meant the need to reassess your values, your goals and plans? When "I need a little time to find myself" heralded the first step in a journey to self-discovery that usually ended where it began?

Those days are over. Today, the identity crisis is a national epidemic, and there's nothing hip about it. More and more people are navigating the uphill road to fiscal recovery after their identity turns up in someone else's hip pocket.

Identity theft, by definition, is the use of someone's personal information without consent for personal gain. It's a crime of opportunity, and the number of opportunists has grown exponentially the last few years, according to the Federal Trade Commission. Identity theft was the number one fraud complaint every year for the past five years.

It's been Melissa Hayes' number one complaint since October 2003, when someone intercepted her mail and stole a check loaded with personal information. Since then, she's lost countless hours of sleep and missed more work hours than she cares to count trying to find herself. She knows creditors on a first-name basis and can recite the names of all the major credit bureaus. She now keeps a regular check on her credit and has taken steps to protect herself from identity theft. Still she looks over her shoulder.

"Because you never know, no matter what you do or how careful you are, you never know what can happen," said Hayes, Fort Benning Schools Reading Recovery teacher leader. "I never thought it would happen to me."

Post to celebrate Women's Month

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Assistant editor

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office is hosting the annual Women's History Month Luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

This year's theme is Women Change America, said Sgt. 1st Class David Pickett, event chairman.

"This event gives us an opportunity to bring awareness to the community on how women have contributed to this society through history and how they continue to contribute today," he said.

Sgt. Maj. Jennifer Pearson, sergeant major of the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, is the guest speaker for the event.

"When I came into the Army I didn't see any females above sergeant E-5," Pearson said. "I told myself that I would someday become a role model to someone, since I didn't have one back then. I'd like to say I've accomplished that."

A mother, a wife and a working woman, Pearson will talk about the advancements of women in the work force — government, military and in everyday life.

The Dexter Girls, students from Dexter Elementary School, will sing and sign a song during the luncheon, and Celeste Lee, with the Directorate of Operations and Training, will also sing.

To purchase $7 tickets, see unit EO advisor or call 545-3196 or 545-6665.

EXFOR commander receives award

It took Capt. Clint Cox almost five years to graduate from college, but the fact he couldn't decide on a major hasn't had an impact on his career in the Army.

March 1, the Army named Cox as one of the recipients of the General Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award, designed to recognize company-grade officers who demonstrate the ideals for which MacArthur stood — duty, honor and country. Nominees must first meet height and weight standards and pass an Army Physical Fitness Test.

Cox

A panel then evaluates each nominee's file and considers overall leadership performance, technical and tactical competence and commitment to Army values.

Cox has been living with the Army and its values since he was born. An Army brat whose father was a signal corps officer, he said his decision to become and Infantryman was an easy one.

"Generally, everyone works for the Infantry," he said. "So if I wanted to be a leader, the best way to have the most impact was in the Infantry."

The panel selected Cox as the Army's Training and Doctrine Command recipient,

FUN AND FITNESS

Take a nice, long walk

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

This much we know: Today's kids are too sedentary, they learn best in motion, and their parents are their first teachers.

That's why I like Loyd Elementary School's Walk with Heroes activity. You can read about it on B-1, but the gist of it is this: Students will calculate the number of miles they walk each day or week and add them to the school's running tally in an effort to reach 6,500 miles, or the distance to Iraq, where so many of their parents are deployed.

Parents, grandparents and the folks who live in the community around Loyd are invited to participate.

Walk with Heroes will help the kids feel connected to their parents in Iraq. It will help them hone their math skills as they add today's mileage to tomorrow's and next weeks and so on and so on. It'll help them master geography as they track their progress on a world map.

And best of all, it'll help the students and their parents deal with the deployment, because medical studies show regular exercise reduces stress.

I'm so taken with the idea behind Walk with Heroes that I decided to institute a similar activity for my daughters and me.

We've decided to walk to Indiana to see Grandma and Grandpa.

Together we did the math and figured it'll take about six months if we walk at a reasonable weekly rate. So naturally we set our goal at three months. We love a challenge.

We kicked off our own event with a photograph of the three of us at our starting point, our driveway. We'll take pictures along the way of the various parks, tracks and trails we'll use to rack up the 600 and some odd miles. And we'll send them to Grandma and Grandpa so they can track our progress, too.

If you're not already a part of the Loyd community, call the school, at 544-8964, and join them as they 'track' to Iraq. Or think about starting a similar program with family or friends.

The kids will be enthused about walking if you buy them each a pedometer, a water bottle with a waist clip, and a disposable camera.

Set a goal (maybe Disneyworld) and a reward (maybe Disneyworld).

Collect souvenirs along the way — leaves if it's a nature trail, postcards if it's a state park. Scrapbook them or send them ahead to your destination.

Maybe those waiting on the other end, like Grandma and Grandpa in our case, would like to join in the fun and meet you halfway.

Somewhere along the way, drop us a line at The Bayonet and tell us how you're doing. We'd love a photograph of you and your walking partners at your favorite track or trail.

Keep us abreast of your progress, and we'll keep you abreast of the progress Loyd students are making on their journey to Iraq.

Send your pictures and letter to fbbayonet@mindspring.com.

Founder's Day: Band of brothers

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

At the end of the summer before my senior year in high school, I made a decision that, without a doubt, changed my life forever.

Knowing I didn't want my parents to fork over thousands of dollars for my college education, I decided to apply for a Reserve Officer Training Corps Scholarship. That decision went smoothly.

But when I walked into the house one day and announced that I was going to apply for admission to West Point — more formally known as the U.S. Military Academy — my mother's jaw hit the floor. I can still picture the look of utter disbelief on her face.

She never expected to hear those words from me.

And with that monumental decision, I charted the course of the rest of my life.

I survived four years at West Point, at times by the skin of my teeth. Chemistry and physics nearly pulled me down, but a lovely course called mechanics of statics and dynamics did. Instead of having three weeks of leave after my junior year, I found myself in summer school.

What kept me going was my very own band of brothers, the 30-plus guys who started our cadet basic training with me, who dwindled through the years to 20. I have special memories of each and every one of them.

They're scattered across the globe now, in the Army and out, but they had a huge impact on my life.

A few months ago, I became one of the 5,700 Soldiers in the Individual Ready Reserve to receive activation orders. There wasn't a job I could do at Fort Benning, so I ended up leaving the reserves after nearly 15 years.

It was a bittersweet day. I had outlived my usefulness to the Army I love so much. I'm not a formally trained journalist, I'm still a Soldier, even if only at heart these days.

I want to go back to school some day, but I don't know what I'd study. I studied English literature in college, because I knew it would have no bearing on my career in the Army.

So, I think the reason I enjoy events like Founder's Day is because I still don't know what I want to be when I grow up, other than a Soldier. Fort Benning's Founder's Day celebration was March 5, and old and young graduates gathered to celebrate West Point's birthday.

Every year it's a chance for me, wherever I am, to reconnect with others who've had the same experiences. And, in the process, get to listen to interesting people, like Bo Callaway of Callaway Gardens, who graduated from West Point in 1949. What I found out, was the soft-spoken, white-haired gentleman served as the secretary of the Army from May 1973 to July 1975.

Because only 10 percent of my class was women, and only 15 West Point classes have had women, some of my friends joke I belong to one of the biggest fraternities. What I've learned from the grads before me, while some of the experiences may have changed, the feeling of camaraderie doesn't.

That camaraderie exists throughout the Army as well. Hope you're enjoying it as much as I am.

CG recognizes women's contributions

In recognition of Women's History Month, the month of March is dedicated to observing the contributions and sacrifices women have made throughout American history.

The theme for this year's observation is "Women Change America." This theme emphasizes the limitless of women's accomplishments, past, present and future.

Throughout history, women, have displayed the pioneering spirit and the leadership in a variety of diverse arenas from home, to business, to human rights, to schools, to the military and into space.

Absolutely no part of American history is complete without addressing and recognizing the contributions of women. American women fought in their homes to secure a safe, healthy, place for their families. Later, they had to fight for the right to be teachers, healers, and caregivers outside the home. From these beginnings, women have soared to the heights of business, government, entertainment, literature, art, science and space.

Women have served proudly within the American military. From Molly Pitcher in the Revolutionary War, to Dr. Mary Walker in the Civil War, women have fought to have a place in the military.

Women served during World War I, World War II, the Korean War, Vietnam, Grenada, Panama and Desert Storm. Women continue to serve today in Kosovo, Bosnia, Afghanistan, Iraq and around the world.

Today, women both military and civilian, are propelling our country to new heights. Tens of thousands of women have served and continue to serve our nation throughout the world. In recognition of their accomplishments yet to come, this month we are honoring "Women Change America."

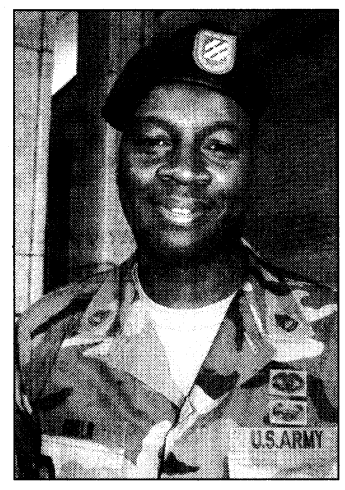
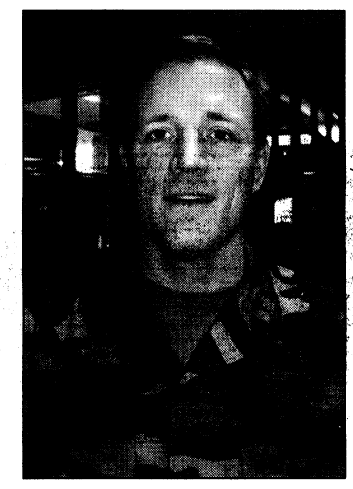
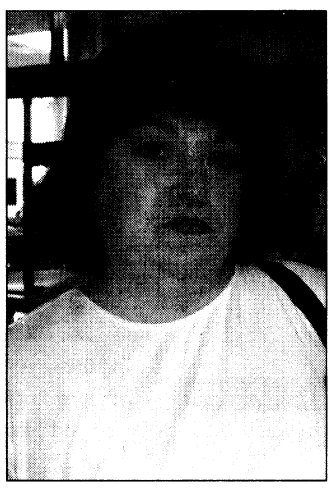
VARIOUS VOICES



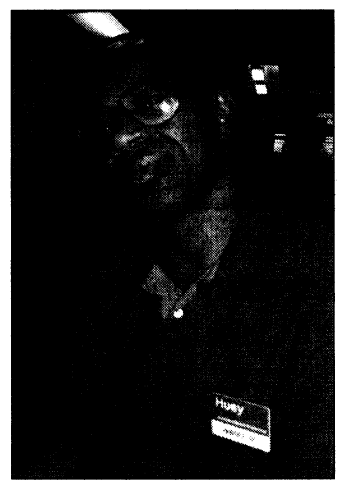
How do you keep your children active?



Pvt. Kenneth Messenger, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment — "Instead of computer and video games, I would get them involved in sports. When I was a kid, there weren't a lot of video games, so I was in soccer and baseball among other sports. Kids should spend more time outside."



Jennifer Turner, family member — "I know that some parents bring a lot of junk food home and allow the kids to eat it all the time. Instead, they should moderate the use of video games and get them more active outdoors."



Sgt. 1st Class Dennis Gould, 203rd Forward Support Battalion — "I give my kids yard work and house chores to do. If they're laying around the house watching television, I find something for them to do. That's the best way to keep them active."

Maj. John McNally, Martin Army Community Hospital — "I have a 2 and a 3 year old. We encourage them to play outside to keep them active. We take them to the playgrounds on post and ration television watching hours to about two hours a day. Being outside, of course, involves us being out there with them as well."

Susanna Vigil-Shuck, family member — "I have four daughters who are full or energy. They take dance lessons and play softball. It's a way for them to try new things and see what they like to do.

Hugh Wright, AAFES employee — "I took care of my grandchildren while my daughter was deployed. To keep them active, we would all do the chores. I would take them outside and play ball with them or take them to the park and play on swings. When they watched television or played on the computer games, it was always in moderation.

Julie Ivester, family member — "I turn the television off and send them outside, just like we had to do when we were kids. My girls also do sports."

It's all in the way you word it, according to 24 Hour Fitness USA. Instead of encouraging kids to "exercise more," "work out," "get fit" or "get off the couch," give them a do*able* but challenging goal. Establish milestones, or short-term goals, in advance and plan to celebrate them. Depending on your child's personality, he or she may respond well to competitive goals.

Courtney Pierce makes a video of her daughters, Abby and Avery, to send to HomeMovie.Com. The video will be encoded and put on the Internet for her husband, 2nd Lt. Chris Pierce, to see while deployed to Iraq with the 36th Engineer Group.

"I'm going to talk to daddy," said Avery Pierce, 2, as her mother, Courtney, pulled out a video camera.

"She misses him," Courtney said. "She cries for him a lot now, especially at night when she's really tired."

Courtney, Avery and baby sister Abby are about to make a video for 2nd Lt. Chris Pierce, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group. He deployed Jan. 7 from Doughboy Stadium for a yearlong deployment to Iraq.

"He'll be really excited to get this, because he keeps bugging me to send him short videos over the Web cam, but I can't get it to work," Courtney said. "Since my kids can't write, they can show off for their dad on the video."

The video is part of Operation Enduring Love, a project began by HomeMovie.Com to connect Soldiers to family members via StreamingDVD.

HomeMovie.Com, located in Winthrop, Wash., wanted to show their appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices of the armed forces by providing an opportunity for families of every service member currently deployed in support of Operation Enduring Freedom and Iraqi Freedom a free 30-minute StreamingDVD video from their loved ones back home, said Chris Jenkins, of HomeMovie.Com.

"We will encode the videotape into Hollywood-quality digital data and create an interactive, StreamingDVD that the service-members can access online in a password-protected interface," Jenkins said. "They can see the smiles and hear the laughter from across the globe. They can still connect with home."

Jennifer Allen-Tate, marketing director for HomeMovie.Com said the idea came from the Air show coming

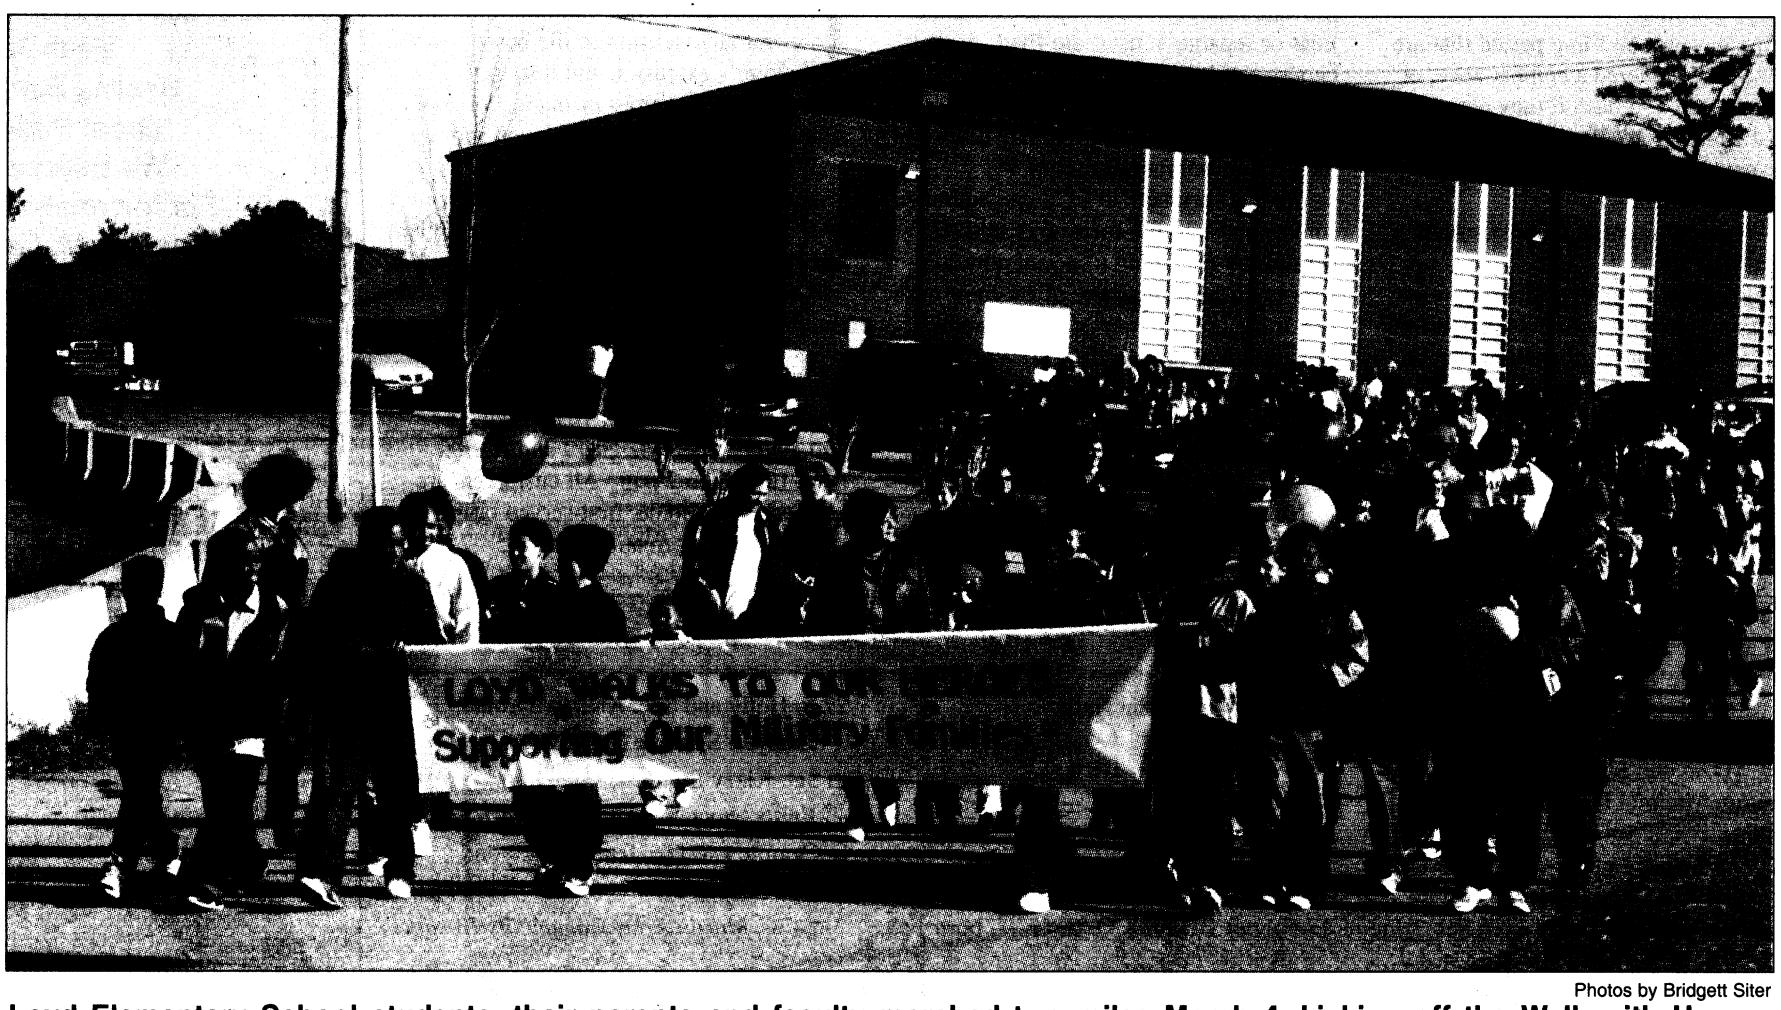
Thunder in the Valley Air Show, featuring aerial performers, giant robots, the Silver Wings and more, will come to the Columbus Metropolitan Airport March 19 to 20.

This is the seventh year of the show, said Chuck Hunsaker, the air show's military affairs committee chairman. The show was originally organized as a Boy Scout fund-raiser. However, because of privatization rules, moneys raised are now turned over to the Thunder in the Valley Charities, LLC, which disperses contributions to local charities.

The show kicks off at 1 p.m. with the Silver Wings jumping in and the Rangers doing a fast rope demo, Hunsaker said. There will be a series of aerobatic routines performed throughout the rest of the day.

"There is something for everybody out there," he said.



The #99 Aaron's Dream Machine Busch Series Car will be on display, along with several Fort Benning displays, including both a Stryker and Bradley fighting vehicle. There will be static displays of various aircraft.

Tickets are $10 at the gate or $8 if pre-purchased. Special military tickets are available at the Omega Travel Office in the Main Mall Post Exchange for $5.50. Free tickets have been donated to the family readiness groups of the 3rd Infantry Division and the 36th Engineer Group.

Tickets are available from area Boy Scout troops, PSC Wireless, Columbus-area Piggly Wiggly stores, McDonalds, SouthTrust Bank and Wachovia Bank branches.

More than 300 Loyd Elementary School students, their parents and teachers set out on a journey March 4.

Walk with Heroes is a "distance-tracking activity" designed to incorporate math, language arts, geography and fitness skills as the students track the number of miles they walk in an attempt to reach 6,500 miles — the distance to Iraq, where so many Loyd parents are deployed.

Over the next few months, the students and their parents will use pedometers to count their steps each day.

They'll convert steps into miles and keep a running tally.

Community members are invited to join the activity. For more information, call 544-8964.

Video on impact of news earns Faith team CNN award

How has around-the-clock news changed our lives?

That's the question CNN posed to Faith Middle School students, and their answer earned them first place in a national competition.

Fifteen members of Faith's Media Team toured CNN studios in Atlanta Feb. 23. They got a behind-the-scenes look at operations on the news floor, and met with Renay San Miguel, CNN's Headline News anchor. It was all part of the prize for filming and producing a five-minute video on the importance of 24-hour access to news.

"The point of (the competition) was to get students to think about how news impacts our lives," said Lisa Crawford, CNN's tour manager.

Lorri Blanchard's students thought about it long and hard. They watched the news, watched their parents watch the news, and shared ideas with their teammates — nothing new for the team that's won first place in the International Media Festival two years in a row.

"I don't want to beat them to death with competition. I gave them the option, and they wanted to do it," said Blanchard, Faith's multimedia teacher and the team's "coach." "They're creative and very competitive, and when it comes to this kind of thing, they all step up to the plate."

Meaning, Blanchard said, they cooperate on scripts, editing, acting, anchoring, filming and producing.

> "These are Soldiers' kids who watch the news hoping to catch a glimpse of their dads or moms in Iraq. Yes, they know the value of around-the-clock news."

They all "do it all," she said, and that's important during the middle school years, when students still like to be challenged with new skills.

In response to CNN's question about news 24-7, the students said they've come to depend on news programs for instant weather updates, research on current events, and

ASK THE JUDGE

Capt. Luis A. Morales
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Please explain the tax options for Soldiers in a combat zone?

A: Members of the armed forces who served in a combat zone are allowed additional time to take care of tax matters. The deadline for filing tax returns, paying taxes, filing claims for refund and taking other actions with the IRS is automatically extended for members of the armed forces who:

• Served in a combat zone or qualified hazardous duty area, or

• Performed qualifying service outside of a combat zone or qualified hazardous duty area.

The deadline for taking action with the IRS is extended for at least 180 days after the later of:

• The last day a member performed the qualifying combat duty, or

• The last day of any continuous qualified hospitalization for injury from the qualifying combat duty.

Time in a missing status (missing in action or prisoner of war) counts as time in a combat zone. Qualified hospitalization means any hospitalization outside the U.S. and any hospitalization in the U.S. of not more than five years. The hospitalization must be a result of wounds, disease or injury incurred while serving in the combat zone.

To determine the last day combat zone participants can file their tax return, add 180 days to either:

• Any days of the filing period that are left when they entered a combat zone, or

• The entire 105 days if they entered the combat zone before Jan. 1.

Taxpayer actions covered by the deadline extension:

• Filing any return of income, estate or gift tax

• Paying any income, estate or gift tax

• Filing a petition with the tax court for either redetermination of a deficiency or review of a tax court decision

• Filing a claim for credit or refund of any tax

• Bringing suit for any claim for credit or refund

• Making a qualified retirement contribution to an IRA.

IRS and government actions covered by the deadline extension:

• Allowing a credit or refund of any tax

• Assessment of any tax

• Giving or making any notice or demand for the payment of any tax or for any liability for any tax

• Collection of any tax due

• Bringing suit by the U.S. for any tax due.

If the IRS takes any actions covered by these provisions, or sends a notice of examination before learning that the taxpayer is entitled to an extension of the deadline, the taxpayer should contact a military legal assistance officer. No penalties or interest will be imposed on a combat zone participant who fails to file a return or pay taxes during the extension period.

Spouses

Spouses of individuals who served in a combat zone are entitled to the same deadline extension with two exceptions:

No. 1 The extension does not apply to a spouse for any tax year beginning more than two years after the date the area ceases to be a combat zone.

No. 2 The extension does not apply to a spouse for any period the qualifying individual is hospitalized in the U.S. for injuries incurred in a combat zone. In other words, the clock starts ticking for the spouse when the injured service member is hospitalized in the U.S.

Otherwise, the deadline extension provisions apply to both spouses whether joint or separate returns are filed. If they choose to file separate returns, the service member's spouse will have the same extension of time to file and pay taxes that the service member has.

Service members in a CZ can authorize someone else to file their taxes in their absence by executing a special power of attorney, a general power of attorney, or the IRS form 2848 (power of attorney and declaration of representative). When someone will act on behalf of a service member to file a tax return using a power of attorney, the form, or a copy of the power of attorney must be attached.

Noncombat service

Reserve Soldiers called to active duty or regular military members who are not in a combat zone may still qualify to defer the payment of taxes that are due before or during military service. To qualify, these individuals must:

• Have received a notice requesting payment or of tax due, or have a current payment agreement

• Apply for the deferment

• Prove that their inability to pay the tax resulted from their military service

• Be serving their initial period of service.

When applying for the deferment, Reserve Soldiers must show their income dropped as a result of military service.

Initial Period of Service

For Reserve Soldiers, the initial period of service is the period of active duty following recall to active duty from an inactive reserve or National Guard unit.

For regular military personnel, it is the:

• Period following induction or first enlistment in the armed forces, or

• First period of re-enlistment for someone who has been out of the service for a year or more.

For an officer, the initial period of service is limited to two years of active service after one of the above occurrences.

State treatments

State treatments of the extensions vary. Not every state uses the same rules in granting extensions, if any, to Soldiers and their spouses. State rules should be checked on an individual basis. For example, while Alabama grants a full extension to joint-filing spouses, Georgia allows for an extension to file based upon the Soldier's extension, but does not toll the accrual of penalties or interest on any amount owed by the nondeployed spouse.

If you would like to consult with someone regarding your taxes, please come by the Fort Benning Installation Tax Center and speak to a tax advisor. The Tax Center will be open until April 15 and is located at Building 1678 (formerly Building 880, across from the post movie theater). Normal hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Wednesday and will also be open March 19 and April 2 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. All customers are seen on a first-come, first-served basis.
