Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

The idea of Growing Room Child Development Centers began in my heart in 1988. We're a local company with deep roots in our community and a strong belief in traditional family values.

Growing Room
CHILD DEVELOPMENT CENTERS

Children deserve a literacy-based education, strong with language, reading, writing, and hands-on math and science experiences. Children deserve to be treated with dignity and respect and enjoy a clean, safe school environment. They deserve well-trained, nurturing teachers who encourage strong thinking skills and practice positive reinforcement with strong parent-teacher-school partnerships.

Give your child the best start in life...the Growing Room.

Sheree Mitchell R.N., President and CEO

For information, call 596-1510 or stop by either Center from 8:00am–5:30pm.
No appointment is necessary. Both Centers are open 6:30am–6:30pm Monday through Friday!

Some Unique Aspects of Our Programs:

- On-site Early Childhood "Growing Up On Our Block" curriculum specialist
- Monthly Saturday night babysitting service
- Computer Labs / In classroom computers
- Spanish Classes
- Dance Classes (ballet and tap)
- Video Security
- Video displays of classroom events for parents
- Continental Parent Breakfast served daily
- Family Days, Grandparent Tea Parties, Book Fairs

Our Infant Program

Primary care offers individualized developmental lesson plans and a personalized, stable relationship with our dedicated, loving teachers. Outdoor play, varied music experiences that stimulate brain growth, daily sensory experiences, and the beginning of language are all a part of our program designed just for your baby.

Toddlers and K-2

"Growing Up On Our Block," our early childhood curriculum, teaches themes, colors, letters, skills, and concepts to your 18 month to 2 year old learner. Family-style dining and other specific self-help skills such as potty training are included.

K-3

The "Growing Up On Our Block" 3 year old curriculum is enhanced with more detailed learning experiences with classic children's literature, poetry, word walls, writing centers, pre-reading, listening centers, multicultural music, science, math, and family- style dining.

K-3/4

Because many children just miss the September 1st birthday requirement for Pre-K, Growing Room offers a challenging program designed for them. In-class computers, and the introductory phonics-based reading and writing program, A-BEKA is provided, along with all the components listed above in our "Growing Up On Our Block" program.

K-4

This program is for all children (regardless of residency) who are 4 years old on September 1, 2004. It is the extension of the K-3 program with the phonics-based A-BEKA reading and writing program added.

Before and After School Program

School transportation is available for 20 schools in the Columbus-Phenix City area.

School-age Transportation includes the following schools: Achievement Academy (pm only), Allen, Blanchard, Britt David, Clubview, Double Churches, Edgewood, Gentian, Johnson, Mathews, Midland, Reese Road, River Road, Smiths Station Primary, Smiths Station Elementary, St. Annes (pm only), Waddell, Wynnton

Army's top NCO talks transformation

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Kenneth Preston toured Fort Benning last week. The Army's highest-ranking NCO, fresh from visits with U.S. troops in Europe and the Middle East, delivered a message of encouragement to the families of Sand Hill's newest Soldiers.

"Aside from what you see on CNN and Fox, there are thousands and thousands of good things our Soldiers are doing over there that never make the news," Preston said during an Infantry Training Brigade graduation ceremony on Kanell Field Aug. 27.

Preston gave a snapshot of what he's seen in the eight months since he was sworn in as the Army's 13th sergeant major. He spoke of "bridge building" in Bulgaria, where U.S. troops are working hand-in-hand with Bulgarian troops to vitalize our alliance there.

He spoke of burgeoning relationships between U.S.

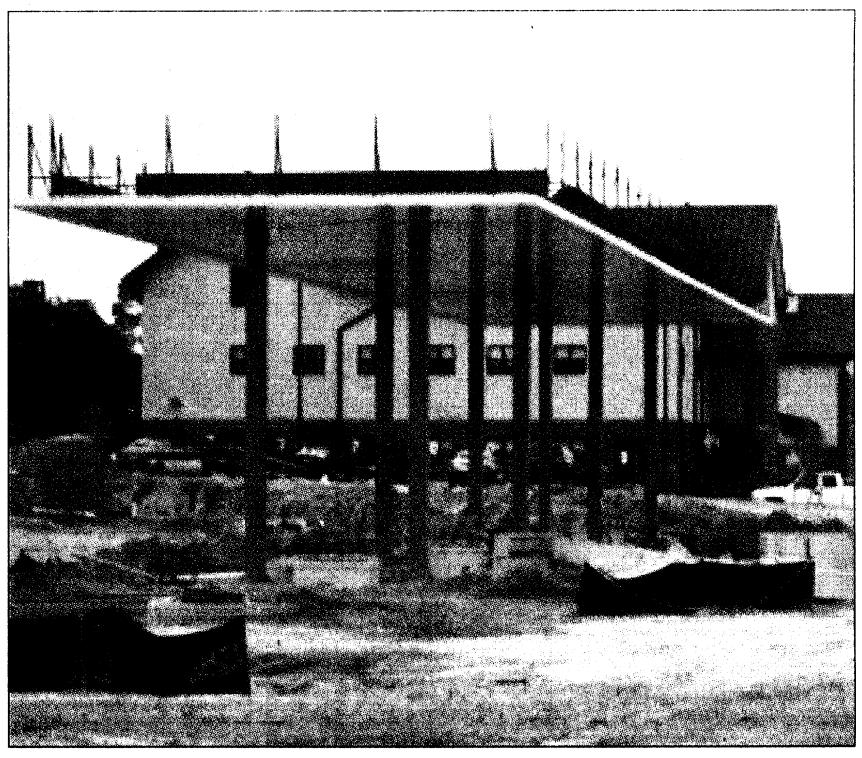
Kelley Hill mini-mall on track

Complex currently set to open in March

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Construction on the Kelley Hill mini-mall is right on track.

The mini-mall, which is being built next to the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, is currently set to open in March 2005, said Glenn Schubert, Army and Air Force Exchange Service general manager for Fort Benning.



The $4.3 million complex will include a shoppette, a gas station with four dispensers, a Burger King with a drive-through, a barber shop, a laundry and dry cleaners, an amusement center and three roving concession stands.

Schubert said the need for a bigger shoppette became apparent in 1998, when construction on Kelley Hill barracks began.

"We determined that the shoppette already there wouldn't be adequate — there's not enough space to take care of all the troops up there," he said.

The current shoppette is only 2,000 square feet; the new mini-mall will be 17,000 square feet all together, 8,000 square feet of which will be the new

Post Rangers set world record

Troops first to complete 267.5-mile relay race

Spc. David Foley

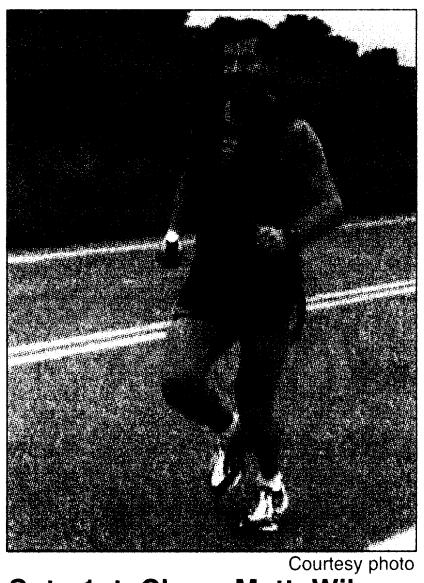
Since their conception, Army Rangers have led the way through places most would avoid, and have made the impossible possible.

Now, some local Soldiers have continued that tradition in their sports endeavors.

Call it motivation, grit or determination, but three Rangers and a Georgia Tech graduate joined forces to set a world record in the Volunteer State 267.5-Miler last month.



The race, which started in Dorena, Mo., and ended in Mount Eagle, Tenn., can be run by individuals or with relay teams, and until this year, the relay race has never been completed.

Sgt. 1st Class Matt Wilson, Staff Sgt. John Sheaffer and Staff Sgt. Norm Shaver, all from the 75th Ranger Regiment, and Carl Laniak, of Atlanta, not only became the first team to complete the race, they tackled the grueling 267.5-mile course in 41:38:20, surpassing their goal of 48 hours.

"We figured that if we went non-stop, we could finish in two days, but nobody thought we could do it so we wanted to prove them wrong," Wilson said.

"We heard of other relay teams who failed in the past and we decided we weren't going to be those guys," Sheaffer said.

NSPS to alter civilian jobs

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The upcoming changes to the civilian personnel system prompted a town-hall meeting in Infantry Hall Aug. 27 with David Snyder, the assistant G-1 for Civilian Personnel Policy.

In November, President George W. Bush authorized the National Security Personnel System when he signed the National Defense Authorization Act. This allows the Department of Defense to establish new rules for hiring, assignment, compensation, promotion and disciplinary actions.

Snyder came to post to update civilians and the military who employ them about the progress of the system that was co-authored by the secretary of Defense and the director of the Office of Personnel Management.

"The current system is inadequate," Snyder said. "Hiring is too slow, outstanding performers get the same pay as poor performers, there is limited flexibility to reassign and limited accountability."

The focus of NSPS, he said, is to fix these four areas while preserving the core and values of the civil service.

The big picture is there is no change in the Title V merit system principles, he said.

"One change will be how we classify people — GS to wage grade and staffing. Direct hire authority will simplify the appointment procedures," he

Make your own 'grand' relationship

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Perhaps it's true that blood is thicker than water, but the Army's "watered down" version of family is anything but. Ask a combat veteran or his "veteran" wife — they'll tell you those who've shared their experiences, at home or abroad, are "just like family," sometimes closer.

The one familial relationship that tends to suffer is the grandest of all — the grandparent-grandchild relationship — which by God's great design is typically the most instantaneously rewarding for children.

Siblings are a nuisance and a constant source of rivalry, and their value isn't often recognized until adulthood. Mom and Dad are way too concerned about schoolwork and junk food.

Ah, but Grandma and Grandpa! She bakes cookies — eat all you want. He has a pocketful of change and a need to spend.

Despite the bifocals, she never seems to notice sticky hands or messy walls. He wears his belt closer to his shoulders than his waist, but he doesn't seem to mind that Junior's knickers sag to his knees.

They're always loving, seldom critical and never too busy.

They're Grandma and Grandpa.

And if they're like the millions of other military grandparents, they're hundreds of miles away.

E-mail and phone calls are wonderful. I highly recommend them. But there's something to be said with frequent face-to-face interaction between children and seniors — loving, patient, enthusiastic, curious, vibrant seniors.

And if there's one thing we've learned from this nomadic life, it's this: That loving, patient, enthusiastic, curious, vibrant senior does not have to be related.

In all the places we've been stationed, we've sought and nurtured "grandparently" relationships with our senior friends — typically friends we meet at church. And in all the places we've lived, we've met seniors who need us as much as we need them.

Alton and Creamonia Ford are just such a couple. He's a retired Soldier, she a spunky little lady who never lets her feeble legs slow her down. They have no children; it's just the three of them — Mr. and Mrs. Ford and her walker. They go everywhere together, and they never miss a church service. That's where we met them.

We enjoy them for their unconditional love and acceptance — they've seen it all and nothing we can do or say surprises them. We enjoy his stories, and he enjoys telling them.

We love his silly jokes. We love that they hug with abandon.

In return for the gift of their companionship, we help them with the lawn work and give them a ride to and from church when he's not up for the drive. It's a fair trade, I think.

We genuinely love our surrogate grandparents, but I admit I have ulterior motives for the relationship. I like "what's in it" for the children.

My boys have experienced the rewards of "helping out" for the sake of "helping out."

The girls dote on Mrs. Ford, carrying her afghan and pillow for her and making crayon cards.

I like that they've all learned not to be intimidated by Mrs. Ford's disabilities. They've learned that a smile and a hug says all that really matters when her hearing's not so good.

Yep, there's much to be gained from "grand" relationships, whether or not they're blood-born.

This Grandparents Day, Sept. 12, be sure to send your love to the old folks back home. Then find one or two a little closer — at church, at a local nursing home, at VistaCare or down at the VFW — and foster a relationship your children will cherish for the rest of their lives.

Happy Grandparents Day, Mr. and Mrs. Ford. We love you.

Alzheimer's taking Pops from family

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The only grandfather I've ever known is slowly slipping away. A drunken driver took the other before I was even born. Now, Alzheimer's is taking Pops.

Theoretically, I suppose, I ought to take comfort in the fact that Pops has lived a full life. He saw his three children grow to adulthood, marry and have children.

Last October, I took my boys to Pops' 90th birthday party at his favorite restaurant. My aunt insisted that it be a surprise, naturally prompting us all to fear for Pops' physical health.

The party went off without a hitch. Six of his grandchildren were there — the youngest called from Iraq — and seven great-grandchildren were there, as well. I saw Pops cry, and it was wonderful. I'm glad my boys were there to see it.

Earlier this year, Pops was reminiscing about his Army service. He mentioned he'd like to take another train ride to San Francisco, like the one he took when he shipped off to Hawaii for his three-year enlistment.

So my father blocked off a week, arranged flights in Baltimore, and booked train passage from Chicago westward.

Pops had the itinerary tucked in his pocket and read it over while we were visiting in July. He reminisced about getting to Portland with around $100 in his pocket while the rest of his buddies were broke. It was 1940.

But before my boys even got the postcard from Colorado, the trip was over.

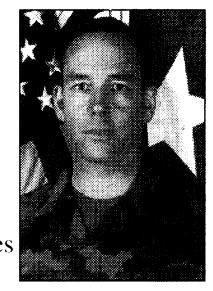
Alzheimer's patients need daily routines, and Pops couldn't handle the unfamiliar surroundings or schedule. When they left the train to spend the night with my cousin in San Jose, Calif., Pops announced he was not, under any circumstances, getting back on the train. Portland be damned.

So Dad changed gears and bought airline tickets for three. My uncle, who had flown from Texas, was going to accompany them on the train leg east. But for all the inconvenience, the most sobering and depressing thing happened. Pops didn't recognize my uncle. For the remainder of the trip, he kept asking who the "ghost" was, and why the ghost kept ordering him around.

This may mean the beginning of the end. The medication, meant to slow down the disease's progression, may not be helping any longer. Dad is looking for care options for Pops, because he's becoming more and more difficult for my grandmother to care for alone.

So, this year, I'm looking to Grandparents Day with mixed emotions.

It was founded by Marian McQuade in 1970 to champion the cause of lonely elderly in nursing homes. The mother of 15 and grandmother of 40 wanted to persuade grandchildren to tap into their grandparents' wisdom and heritage. And in 1978, she saw her efforts rewarded when President Jimmy Carter proclaimed Grandparents Day as the first Sunday after Labor Day.



I've observed Grandparents Day for many years, and make every effort to talk with my grandparents often.

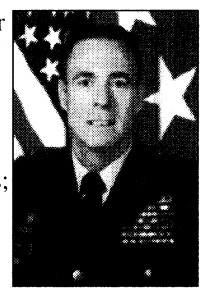
McQuade chose September to signify the "autumn years of life." And Pops and Grams, at almost 91 and 86 respectively, are certainly in their autumn years.

I know they will not be around forever. We'll send cards and call and hope Pops knows who we are, even if for just a brief moment.

BE SAFE!

Preparation key for prevention

Every Labor Day weekend the highways are crowded with people enjoying the year's last summer holiday. Many families plan extended weekends and travel great distances. Traffic accidents reach their peak during this holiday.



Our goal is for Fort Benning to be accident-free. This can only be achieved if everyone is involved in the effort. Each of you must do the following:

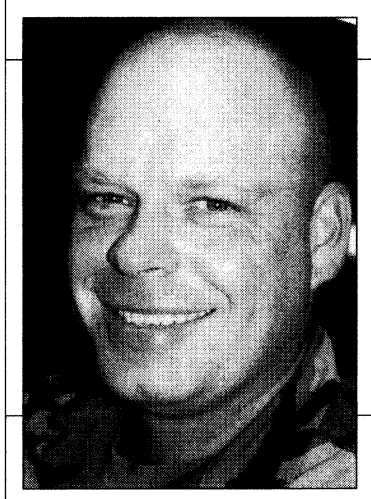
- Drive and boat defensively. Stay alert and sober.
- Always wear seat belts in vehicles and personal flotation devices on the water.
- Swim only with lifeguards present.

Commanders will ensure all personnel view the Be Safe video and take the ASMIS-1 POV Risk Assessment Tool at the Army Safety Web site. Take the time to think and act safely during this holiday. Have fun and enjoy a safe holiday.

— Brig. Gen. Benjamin C. Freakley
Commanding General

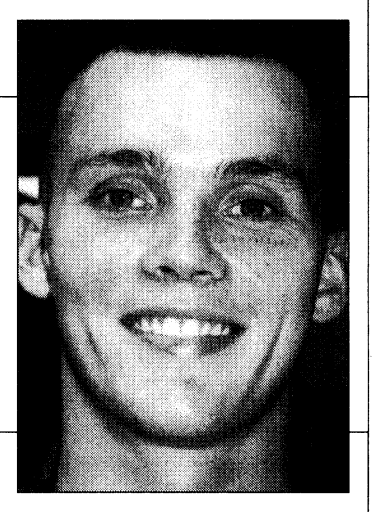
Let's emphasize safety, end accident trend

During the past 90 days, TRADOC has lost eight Soldiers to accidents. Our accidental death toll to date for the fiscal year is 17 Soldiers, 14 were killed in POV accidents. In almost all cases these losses were preventable.



I expect leadership to ensure this trend does not continue. Increase emphasis on POV accident prevention. Review internal procedures to ensure all leaders use the U.S. Army Safety Center POV Accident Toolbox; the automated risk assessment for travel is used; Soldiers know the causes of POV accidents; leave and pass policies don't put personnel at risk; and first-line intervention measures are in place. Finally, ensure all accidents are investigated, fatality after-action review boards are conducted and lessons learned are publicized.

As we near the end of the summer season, let's focus on safety. Command involvement and participation of first-line leaders and supervisors in accident prevention and safety awareness efforts do make a difference.



— Gen. Kevin Byrnes
TRADOC commander

Post lauds women's equality

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Members of the tricommunity gathered Aug. 26 to celebrate Women's Equality Day during a luncheon at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The program, centered on this year's theme "Continuing the Struggle for Equal Rights," was sponsored by the 36th Engineer Group and featured guest speaker Vivian C. Bishop, clerk of the Muscogee Municipal Court.

"By observing this celebration, we ensure the fight for equality continues," said Staff Sgt. Lisa Billingslea, the event's coordinator.

Women's Equality Day commemorates the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the Constitution, which specifically guaranteed women the right to vote. Originally ratified by the Tennessee legislature on Aug. 18, 1920, the amendment was declared part of the Constitution on Aug. 26, 1920.

"It is important to pause today and think what we're all about," said Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley. "We retain the right to vote and practice the right to vote."

He shared a story of a sergeant major he met who had spent 10 years in Ranger units, who told him he never thought women should be in the Army.

The senior NCO said he changed his mind after he went to Afghanistan and saw the female military police and the hard work they were doing.

"The sad part," Freakley said, "is that it took 25 years for him to have that epiphany. If you don't get it, you shouldn't be in the Army."

Bishop

Freakley said it is "unbelievable" that it took an amendment to give women the right to vote — to have an "equal chance to be all they can be" — and urged the audience to focus on continuing the struggle.

He introduced Bishop, born at Fort Benning to a career Soldier, as "one who has lived the (military) life."

"She is the epitome of servant leadership," Freakley said. "It's just like the Army value of selfless service."

Bishop is an active participant in a number of civic and political organizations and has earned numerous awards for her public service and community involvement.

Bishop said the ratification of the 19th Amendment was the culmination of a massive and peaceful civil rights struggle — one that isn't completely over.

She illustrated her point with a personal example from her 16 years working in the Georgia State Department of Corrections.

After 12 years working as the account technician for a local corrections institution, Bishop said the business manager position came open. She applied, and was one of five selected to interview.

"They eliminated two," Bishop said, "and I knew I had the job."

Bishop had been the acting manager for the facility with 200 employees, 400 inmates and a $20 million budget.

"I was counting my chickens," she said. "I did not get that job because I was a female."

When she asked why she wasn't hired, she was told it was "really a man's job." She then spent the next few months training the new male hire. Shortly after that, she resigned and started her own business.

Bishop likened women and their struggle for equality to runners in a marathon. Notable women "racers," she said, include Eleanor Roosevelt and less well-known women like Gertrude Lerner, who led an underground resistance movement against the Nazis.

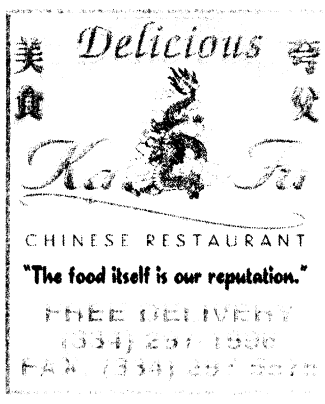
One of her personal mentors, she said, is "marathon runner" Dorothy Hite, now 93.

"Dorothy Hite fearlessly expressed herself at a young age," Bishop said. "And she joined the quest for women's full employment and educational advancement."

Through her involvement with the Young Women's Christian Association, Bishop said Hite opened national dialogue between women of all nationalities about the civil rights movement.

Although there are new opportunities for women today, Bishop said there are still challenges.

"It is our responsibility to continue the race — to re-energize, reconnect and refocus," she said. "The race requires heart, commitment and a focus on the finish. We can't be distracted.



"I challenge everyone to continue the marathon and go for the gold," she said.

Freakley urged the audience to carry Bishop's message forward.

"We'll never change a thing if we don't act," he said. "We should never settle for complacency, but move toward excellence."

POW/MIAs to be honored

Tricommunity plans activities for Sept. 17-18

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

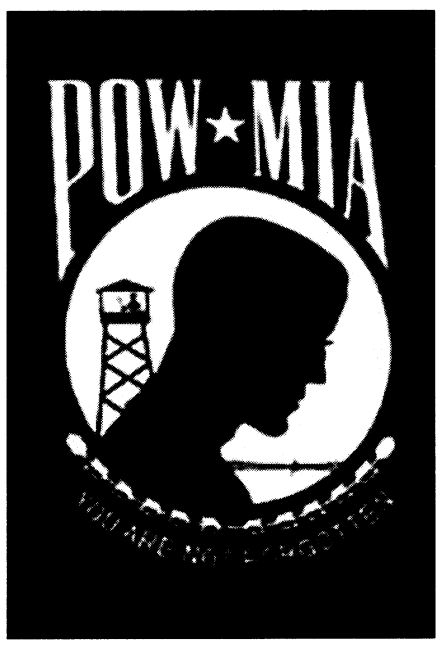
Retired Air Force Brig. Gen. James E. Sehorn spent 63 months as a prisoner of war in North Vietnam.

Now, 31 years later, he will share his experiences as the keynote speaker at Fort Benning's annual POW/MIA Recognition Day Ceremony.

The ceremony will begin at 4 p.m. Sept. 17 at the Follow Me statue in front of Infantry Hall.

Sehorn began his Air Force career in 1963 as a pilot. After serving in England, Sehorn volunteered for duty in Southeast Asia. Sehorn was shot down and captured in North Vietnam on Dec. 14, 1967. He was released on March 14, 1973, more than five years later.

After his return to the states, he served in a variety of staff and command assignments. The general retired in January 1994, after more than 30 years of service.



Sehorn, an accomplished pilot, has clocked more than 6,200 flying hours in various aircraft, including fighters, helicopters and air lifters. His military awards and decorations include the Silver Star, Legion of Merit, Distinguished Flying Cross, Bronze Star and Purple Heart.

The general came out of retirement in January 2003 to become Georgia's first Inspector General.

His duties are to improve ethics, integrity and accountability within the government.

Cliff Davis, one of the organizers of the event, said there will be an honor bayonet ceremony preceding the speaker.

"We do this every year and usually between 200 to 250 people, sometimes more, attend," Davis said. "(The ceremony) is to recognize our Soldiers, the POWs and those still missing in action."

Along with the Fort Benning ceremony, the Fort Benning Sergeant Major Association will also host an event to honor POW/MIAs.

The first Tricommunity POW/MIA Freedom Ride and the unveiling of a POW/MIA monument, as well as a wreath laying ceremony, will be Sept. 18.

Sgt. Maj. Jan Stegeman, president of the SGMA, said members of the organization suggested doing something in the tricommunity area to honor POW/MIAs.

"We wanted a monument with an eagle, which symbolizes America and our freedom," Stegeman said.

The monument will be made of black granite, 3 feet wide and 8 feet tall. It will be engraved with the POW/MIA emblem and with the words, "You are not forgotten, from the Fort Benning Sergeant Major Association."

A bronze eagle is offset from the monument with a chain attached from one talon to the top of the monument, symbolic of Soldiers trying to break free from their captors.

The back of the monument will bear a list of the wars America has been involved in, each conflict, what it was, the years engaged and number of POWs and MIAs.

There will be three identical monuments erected throughout the tricommunity area.

The first monument, which will be dedicated at 11 a.m. Sept. 18, will be on the 10th Street side of the Columbus Government Center. In 2005, the SGMA will dedicate a monument on Fort Benning at the Infantry Museum, across from Sacrifice Field.

Phenix City's monument will be dedicated in 2006; however, exactly where the monument will be located is still up in the air, said Jim Fowler, an organizer and member of SGMA.

Besides the monument dedication, there will also be a motorcycle Freedom Ride and festivities at Golden Park, beside the Columbus Civic Center Sept. 18.

Gates open at 6:30 a.m. and beginning at 8 a.m. the Rangers will perform hand-to-hand combat demonstrations, the Silver Wings Parachute Team will jump into Golden Park and there will be a Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the new Stryker on hand.

The actual ride will begin at 9 a.m., and the route will take the riders past each future monument location in Phenix City and Fort Benning before ending at the monument site in Columbus.

Following the monument dedication there will be free hamburgers and hotdogs.

"This is way more than just a biker thing. We want the public to come and climb around on the military vehicles," Fowler said. "We want people to see a different side of bikers; many of them are vets."

Money raised from the annual event will go toward building, maintaining and enhancing all three monuments.

The cost of the ride is $15 per person for pre-registration or $18 at the gate.

For more information, or to pre-register, go to www.fbgsma.com or call Stegeman at 575-8023.

Event pays tribute to victims of 9-11

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

In honor of the men and women who lost their lives during the 9-11 terrorist attacks, the Fort Benning chaplains have organized a Day of Remembrance.

The program will begin at 10 a.m. Sept. 10 in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. The public is welcome to attend.

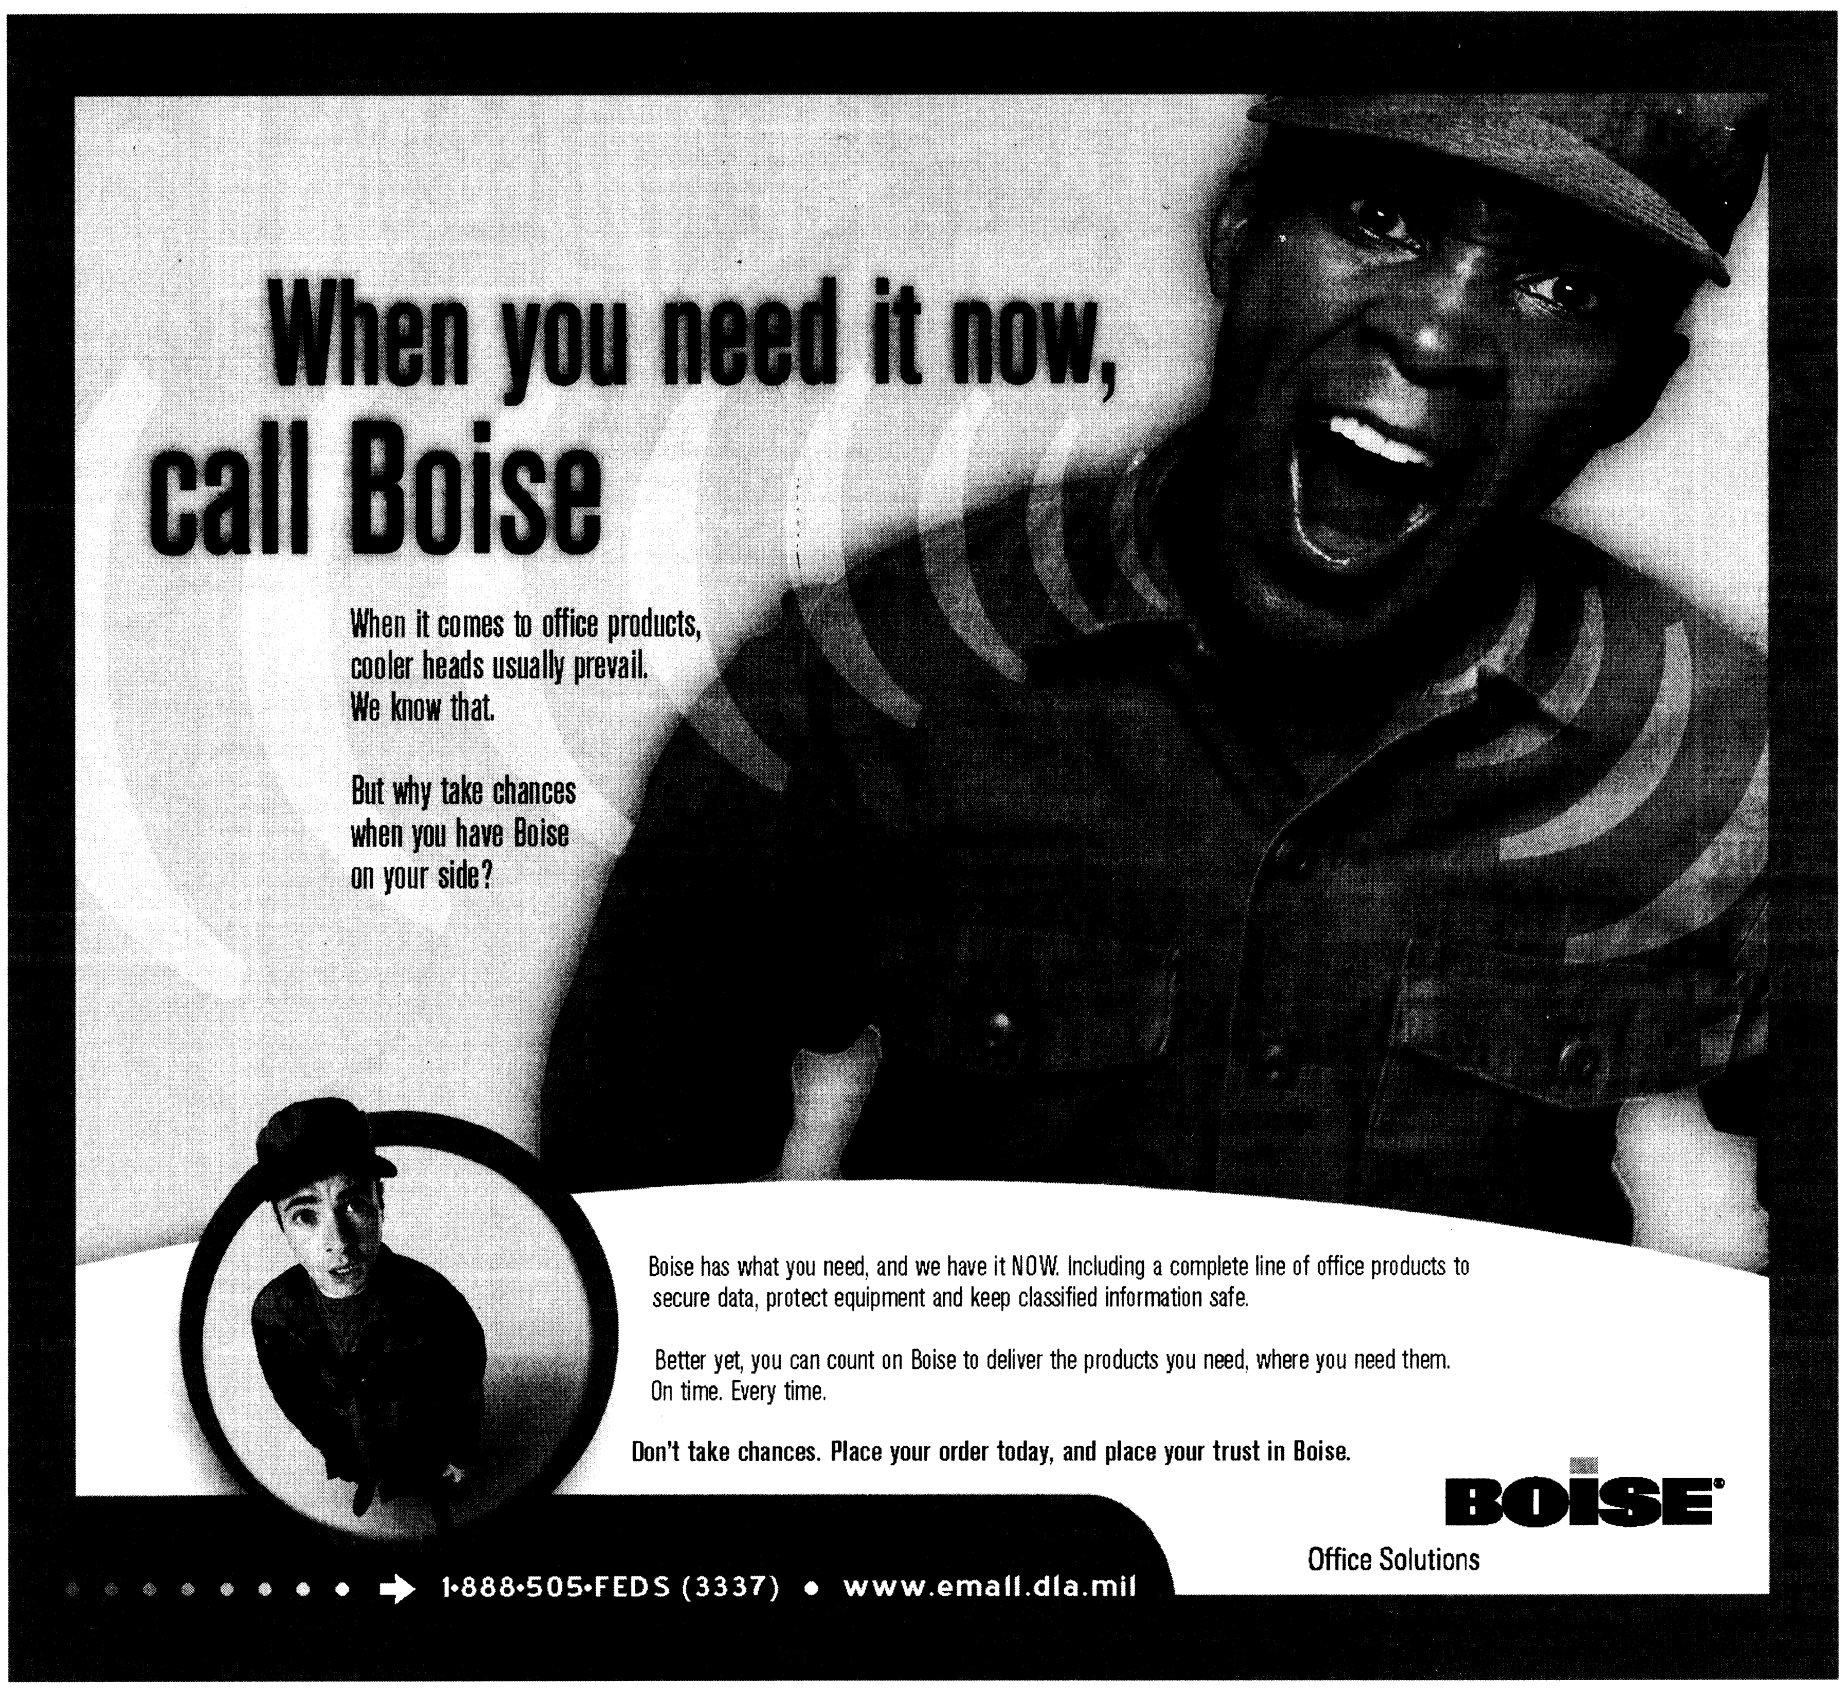
The highlight of the ceremony will be brief talks by uniformed personnel who assisted in the clean-up and recovery work at Ground Zero, said Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin.

The program will also include remarks by Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, commanding general, piano music, the singing of The Battle Hymn of the Republic, scripture reading, a memorial prayer, a vocal musical selection, a moment of silence and the playing of Taps.

"It is a time for remembrance for those who were lost in the three locations that day," Cocklin said. "It's a time to renew our commitment to the war on terrorism, a result of those attacks."

Due to the theme of the program — "Why We Must Remember," — Chaplain (Maj.) Sandy McLean, the organizer of the event, felt it was important to have speakers who had physically been involved with 9-11.

"I tried to get firemen from New York City to come, but that fell through. Instead, I found police from Columbus who had volunteered," McLean said.



"We want people to understand why we need to remember 9-11. It is significant in history, and hopefully, the speakers will mention why it has changed the way we think about our nation forever and how we go about business. We can no longer think of ourselves as invulnerable and untouchable."

Even though most of the world watched the tragic events of 9-11 unfold before their eyes on television, McLean said only those who were actually there at Ground Zero have a full understanding of what really went on.

To McLean, this program is more than just a way to remember those who lost their lives in the attacks; it is a way to remember our duty as Americans.

"It is our duty to remember the fallen and honor them," he said. "It is the duty of every citizen of this country to remember, in some way, what happened on 9-11 and conduct themselves accordingly.

"Remembering helps us keep in focus the idea that we have enemies, that they don't necessarily like the way we do things, who we are, or what we stand for. Because of that, we have to be on our guard. If we forget, we wind up back where we were before 9-11, and it could happen again."

Air ambulance Soldiers support post mission

NG unit at Benning in support of OIF

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Their mission was to engage and destroy enemy armor; now it's to engage the target and save its life.

The 249th Medical Company is a National Guard unit with Soldiers from New York and Rhode Island currently assigned to Fort Benning while the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) is deployed to Iraq.

"We were a newly organized medevac unit when we were mobilized," said Sgt. 1st Class Duane Dobson, aviation operation NCOIC. "We didn't have all the training or the equipment we required to fulfill our mission."

The unit was mobilized in November 2003 and was initially stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., to support the 812th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) during its deployment.

But the 249th had only been a medevac unit for 13 months. Its mission before was as part of the 1st Battalion, 142nd Aviation Regiment.

"We flew Cobras, but once the Army got rid of them, we were reorganized as a medevac unit," Dobson said.

With the help of the 812th Medical Co. at Fort Bragg, the 249th Soldiers were trained and ready to fulfill the mission by the time the 812th deployed.

In late January 2004, they began to support Fort Benning as the 498th Medical Co. was getting ready to deploy. All 128 Soldiers from the 249th arrived at Fort Benning in August. Their mission is to provide aeromedical evacuation and support to Fort Benning; Fort Stewart, Ga.; Fort Bragg; Fort Knox, Ky.; and the Ranger camps in Dahlonega, Ga.; and Florida, said 1st Sgt. Dave Bimber, company first sergeant.

1st Sgt. Dave Bimber

The 249th Medical Company is a National Guard unit assigned to Fort Benning while the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) is deployed. Here, they train for a medevac mission.

"The areas we cover are usually covered by three medevac units. At any given time, we'll have 40 people out on missions," Bimber said. "Since January 12th, we've flown 96 dust-off missions and at least 2,300 hours, all this while still maintaining pilots training requirements."

Real missions are referred to as dust-off missions, as opposed to training exercises such as the mass casualty training exercise at Camp Rudder, Fla., they participated in Aug. 25.

"It's a 24-7 operation, 365 days a year," Dobson said. "When we first got here, the maintenance team and the flight platoon were working seven days a week. They worked around the clock to replace six tail bones on the aircraft. There's always various maintenance jobs to do on our 15 Hueys. These guys are always busy."

The unit includes 36 pilots, 35 crew chiefs, an aircraft maintenance team, a ground maintenance team and support Soldiers, including two cooks, Dobson said.

"The make-up of our unit is very unique," said Maj. Marc Boies, commander. "We have about 10 Vietnam-era pilots and most of our pilots are prior service, which makes our job easier."

The 249th's original orders were for one year, but there's possibilities of an extension, Boies said.

"We don't know when we're going home or where we're going tomorrow," Bimber said.

"But this is the mission and we know it's important. We save lives. That alone helps the guys realize that why we are here is good."

Benning, CRC prepared to train involuntarily mobilized IRR Soldiers

When the Army announced its plans to order 5,600 Soldier in the Individual Ready Reserve to active duty for possible deployment with the next Operations Iraqi Freedom and Enduring Freedom rotations on July 1, Fort Benning units were already working out ways to train those Soldiers.

Several months ago, post officials pulled out the rapid train-up memorandum of instruction to get ready to accept involuntarily mobilized Soldiers. The first of those Soldiers arrived at Fort Benning Aug. 31, some diverted from Fort Jackson, S.C. and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. The diversion eases the burden on those installations, which expect to process anywhere from 600-800 IRR Soldiers per month.

Currently, all 11-series Soldiers process through the post's CONUS Replacement Center, where they receive refresher training in common tasks and MOS-specific refreshers, said CRC commander, Lt. Col. Gary Spry. With the added mission, Fort Benning will now process IRR Soldiers with other job specialties as well. They'll receive seven days of common task training, then receive a set of temporary change of station orders sending them to their MOS school for refresher.

Spry said the CRC normally processes Soldiers already on active duty, but has been training IRR Soldiers who voluntarily activated since June. Since the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) is full because of the increase in the Infantry Training Brigade's mission, the CRC will now assess the involuntarily mobilized IRR Soldiers onto active duty.

"We'll house, feed and clothe them," Spry said. "We're lined up with the initial issue point to issue clothing if they need it."

Soldiers will also receive their CTA-50 and OCIE items. Female Soldiers, he said, will go to the Military Clothing Sales Store for their clothing issue.

In order to help train the extra Soldiers, the CRC will be augmented by Detachment 1, 330th Battalion, 1st Brigade, 84th Division — an 18-man one station unit training company that will mobilize Sept. 7, said Maj. Al Lugo, with the Installation Operation Center. The company will conduct all of the CTT for the rapid train-up.

"It's 70-plus hours of training," Lugo said.

In the meantime, the Basic Combat Training Brigade is providing six drill sergeants to train those who arrive before the OSUT company mobilizes.

Spry said the CRC has had a good relationship with the ITB since they began training the voluntary mobilizations in June. The IRR Soldiers they process will eventually join a CONUS-based unit in enough time to train with that unit before it deploys into theater.

Lugo said a mobilization assistance team from the Human Resources Command at St. Louis is on the ground to manage issues that may arise with the involuntarily mobilized Soldiers. Post agencies, like Army Community Services, will work with the Soldiers to help provide them with information for their families.

Although Spry said the number of extra Soldiers Fort Benning is being asked to train is relatively small, they are prepared to accept more if the Army needs to redirect more Soldiers from the other installations.

"We've got it together," Spry said. "We have a good plan."

Company conducts 'Operation Crucible' exercise

1st Lt. Carlton Arrington
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

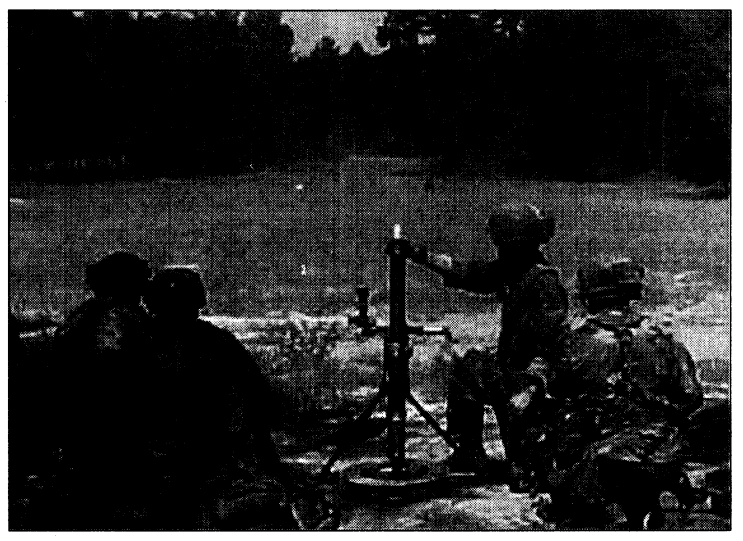
The D Company FTX, also known as "Operation Crucible," is a trainee's hands-on final exam.

Over the past few months, Soldiers of D Co., 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, had a broad spectrum of instructions and lessons on how to live and fight like an infantryman.

The true test of their skills surfaced where they were given a culmination of tasks to accomplish in six days. These tasks are the pinnacle of what they have learned in the last 12 weeks.

Within moments of arriving at the FTX site, perimeters were established, security was emplaced and each platoon started to work on defensive fighting positions. Once completed, the positions are improved upon, checked out by the drill sergeants and then camouflaged.

During the day, Soldiers trained on squad battle drills, first aid and NBC exercises. They were also given further instructions on tactics and operations. Improvised explosive devices and the task of establishing a roadblock and checkpoint were also incorporated into the culmination exercise.



"The IED training and roadblock/ checkpoint operations are exactly what they will be doing when they are deployed to operations Iraqi Freedom, Enduring Freedom or any theater of operations," said Staff Sgt. Brian Waller, a D Co. drill sergeant.

At night, they conducted security and reconnaissance in their areas and destroyed any possible threat. To aid them in guarding the perimeter, trainees were issued night vision devices such as the PVS-7Ds and PVS-14s.

"By having the Soldiers use the night vision goggles, they are more confident in their abilities to operate in a field environment," said Sgt. 1st Class John Cervenka, D Co. senior drill sergeant. "We want to make them comfortable with their equipment in an extended field training exercise."

Part of the training included, "bayonet lanes" which tests each platoon's strength, teamwork and tenacity. They are called "bayonet lanes" to represent the seven Army values that 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt. (nicknamed, The Bayonet Battalion) exemplifies.

After each lane was completed, a drill sergeant read a Medal of Honor citation. The purpose of this is to provide the Soldiers a correlation and appreciation of past Soldiers who lived the Army values with what they have just completed that evening.

D Co. Soldiers hang a 60 mm mortar during training.

One lane consisted of a water re-supply, where the platoon carried more than 25 5-gallon water cans for 2.5 miles. Another lane was a log carry, in which the platoon must carry four 10-foot logs 2.5 miles. The third lane was the litter carry or CASEVAC, in which the platoon simulates carrying casualties 2.5 miles. The number of casualties can range anywhere from two to eight.

Each lane, which can be considered equally challenging, can also include portions of the training the Soldiers worked on during the day.

For example, during the water re-supply, the platoon may have to perform battle drills such as reacting to contact or reacting to indirect fire.

Throughout this experience, Soldiers are training to be indirect fire infantryman.

The majority of the 11Cs, who are National Guardsmen, used the FTX to hone their skills on the 60 mm and 81 mm mortar systems.

During the FTX, the mortarmen were able to fire the 60 mm short-range training round and gain confidence in their equipment.

The finale of the FTX ended when D Company finished up the long, arduous foot march in from the training area.

As Soldiers neared the finish of the foot march a strong sense of pride and accomplishment began to emerge from within, for they knew that they have been tested and passed.

Air Force support squad considers Fort Benning home

AF units support Fort Benning's infantry

Spc. Natalie P. Loucks
3rd Brigade PAO

A misconception connected to Army installations is that they are specific to one branch of service. In addition to Soldiers, Fort Benning is home to Airmen as well.

The Air Force units at Fort Benning provide support in assault missions, weather reporting and forecasting, and to Fort Benning's military training schools.

"The Air Force has been supporting Fort Benning since the 70s," said Master Sgt. Mark Ericson, 17th Air Support Operation Squad superintendent.

The primary mission of the 17th Air Support Operation Squad is to provide support for the 75th Ranger Regiment, including 3rd Ranger Battalion and 1st Ranger Battalion located at Hunter Army Airfield in Savannah, Ga.

The 17th ASOS is one of the most deployed units in the Air Force, deploying to Iraq and Afghanistan with the supported Army units, said Tech. Sgt. Eric Brandenburg, terminal attack controller for the 17th ASOS.

During battle, when one of the supported units is in close proximity with friendly troops, and they require additional assistance, the 17th ASOS assists with requesting, planning, advising and controlling the attack from the air, Ericson said.

"From the planning phase all the way down to the execution phase, we are responsible for all close air support," Ericson said.

"We provide terminal guidance, basically, directing them where to drop their bombs," Brandenburg said.

During down time when the unit is not deployed, the Airmen train with the 75th Ranger Regiment.

They also maintain their proficiency in controlling their aircraft, Brandenburg said.

As a squadron, the 17th ASOS recently acquired management over Special Forces, tactical control air parties they had not managed before.

Fort Bragg, N.C., special forces and Fort Campbell, Ky., special forces, have been recently acquired by the unit. The 17th ASOS trains with these units and provides close air support for them as well.

Prior to the change in unit support management to the 17th ASOS, they managed the tactical air control party that supported the 3rd Brigade Combat Team.

Even though they don't fall under the 17th ASOS, they still perform the same missions and work from the same building.

The 17th ASOS also provides oversight, support and management for the Lawson Army Airfield weather team. The team is now a contracted civilian agency that provides weather reporting and forecasting for all of Fort Benning.

The 342nd Training Squad is another Air Force unit located at Fort Benning.

Its primary mission is to support the post's training schools by providing Air Force instructors and facilitators to the schools.

Within the group of four, there are two airborne instructors, also known as "black hats," one Ranger instructor and one facilitator who is in charge of monitoring the student's progress, said Master Sgt. Sean O'Neill, Ranger instructor in the 342nd Training Squad.

The reason for the Air Force instructors at Airborne and Ranger schools is to support the integration of students from different services of the military who are attending the schools, said Staff Sgt. Gregory Oglesby, Air Force airborne instructor.

"The Army has slots that each sister service (to the Army) needs to fill with instructors," Oglesby said.

Oglesby, who served in the Army, said the transition from Air Force to Army is not difficult.

"Fort Benning takes very good care of us," Ericson said. "I have been on this post for about 12 years of my career, and I've never had any problems with Fort Benning. They have been a great host."

SKILLED TO BUILD

Engineers construct roads, Army futures

Soldier's job brings feeling of accomplishment

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Spc. David Jackson, 3rd Platoon, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group, is a 21E, heavy equipment construction equipment operator. In training, all engineers learn the basics of all equipment they may have to work with. Here he's operating a bulldozer.

"I was a certified nurse's assistant but I wanted to do something different," said Sgt. Jaime Vargas, 3rd Platoon squad leader, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group. "So I joined the Army as a 21F — a crane operator. It's been a whole new experience."

At Fort Leonard Wood, engineers go through six to eight weeks of training, depending on their specific trade, Vargas said. They learn the basics and the capabilities of all the equipment they may have to use.

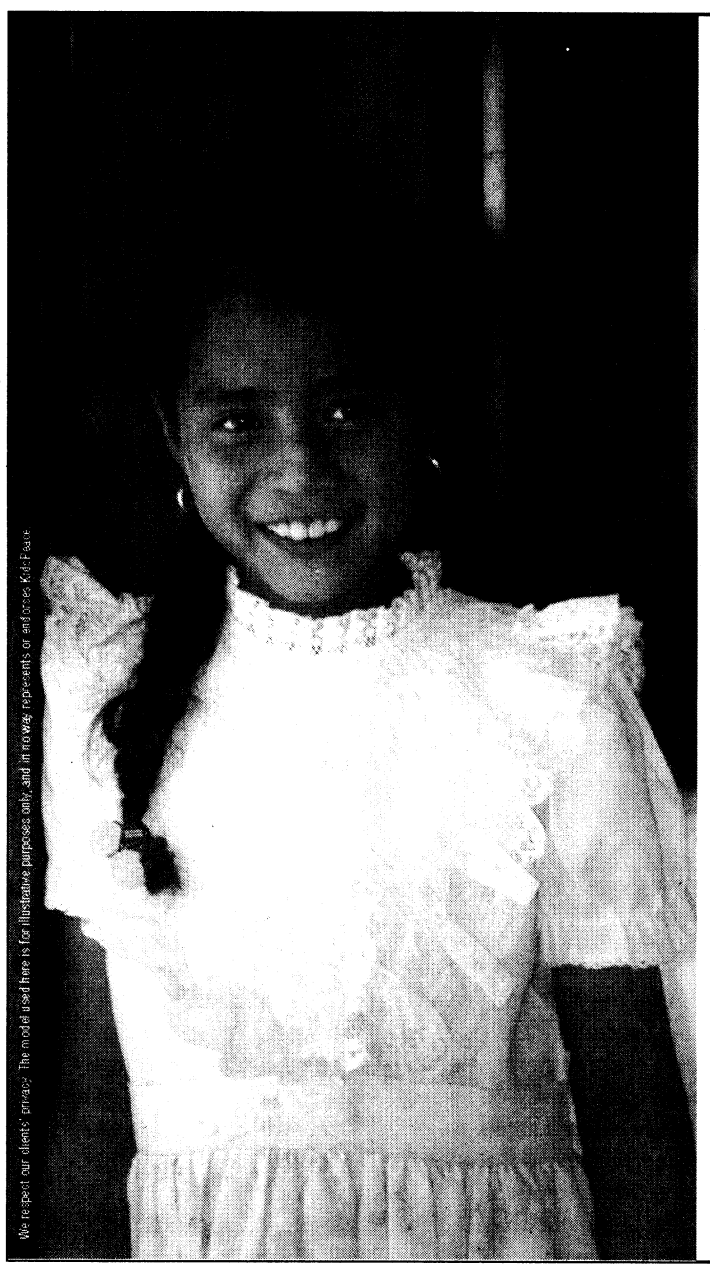
"I like what I do," Vargas said. "I've been in for six years and plan on doing 20, all as an engineer. The feeling of accomplishment when we finish a project is great."

Vargas' platoon has worked on the construction of the parking lot at Martin Army Community Hospital, the CONUS Replacement Center and the Red Diamond Road tank trails, he said.

During a deployment to Virginia in 2002, his company helped build a test driver course for the state police. The project took four months and consisted of clearing woodlands and creating the trails for the course.

"At first it was slow and very frustrating, but everybody worked together to accomplish the mission," he said. "Everybody thinks that our job isn't hard because we just sit there and operate our equipment but it's not like that. If there's a place the equipment can be moved into, we move it ourselves. The hours we work are sometimes long, depending on the mission. It's not easy, but it's very rewarding."

During a six-month deployment to Iraq in 2003, the 63rd was responsible for building the base camp for new rotations that were coming in, Vargas said.



"Each platoon had a different job, ours was to upgrade roads and remove debris," he said. "It wasn't hard, it was just a lot of work. What makes our job hard is that so much of what we do depends on the weather. If it rains, we can't accomplish all we wanted to."

"Engineers work hard! Skilled to build," said Pfc. Justin Stanton, 3rd platoon. "We always work hard."

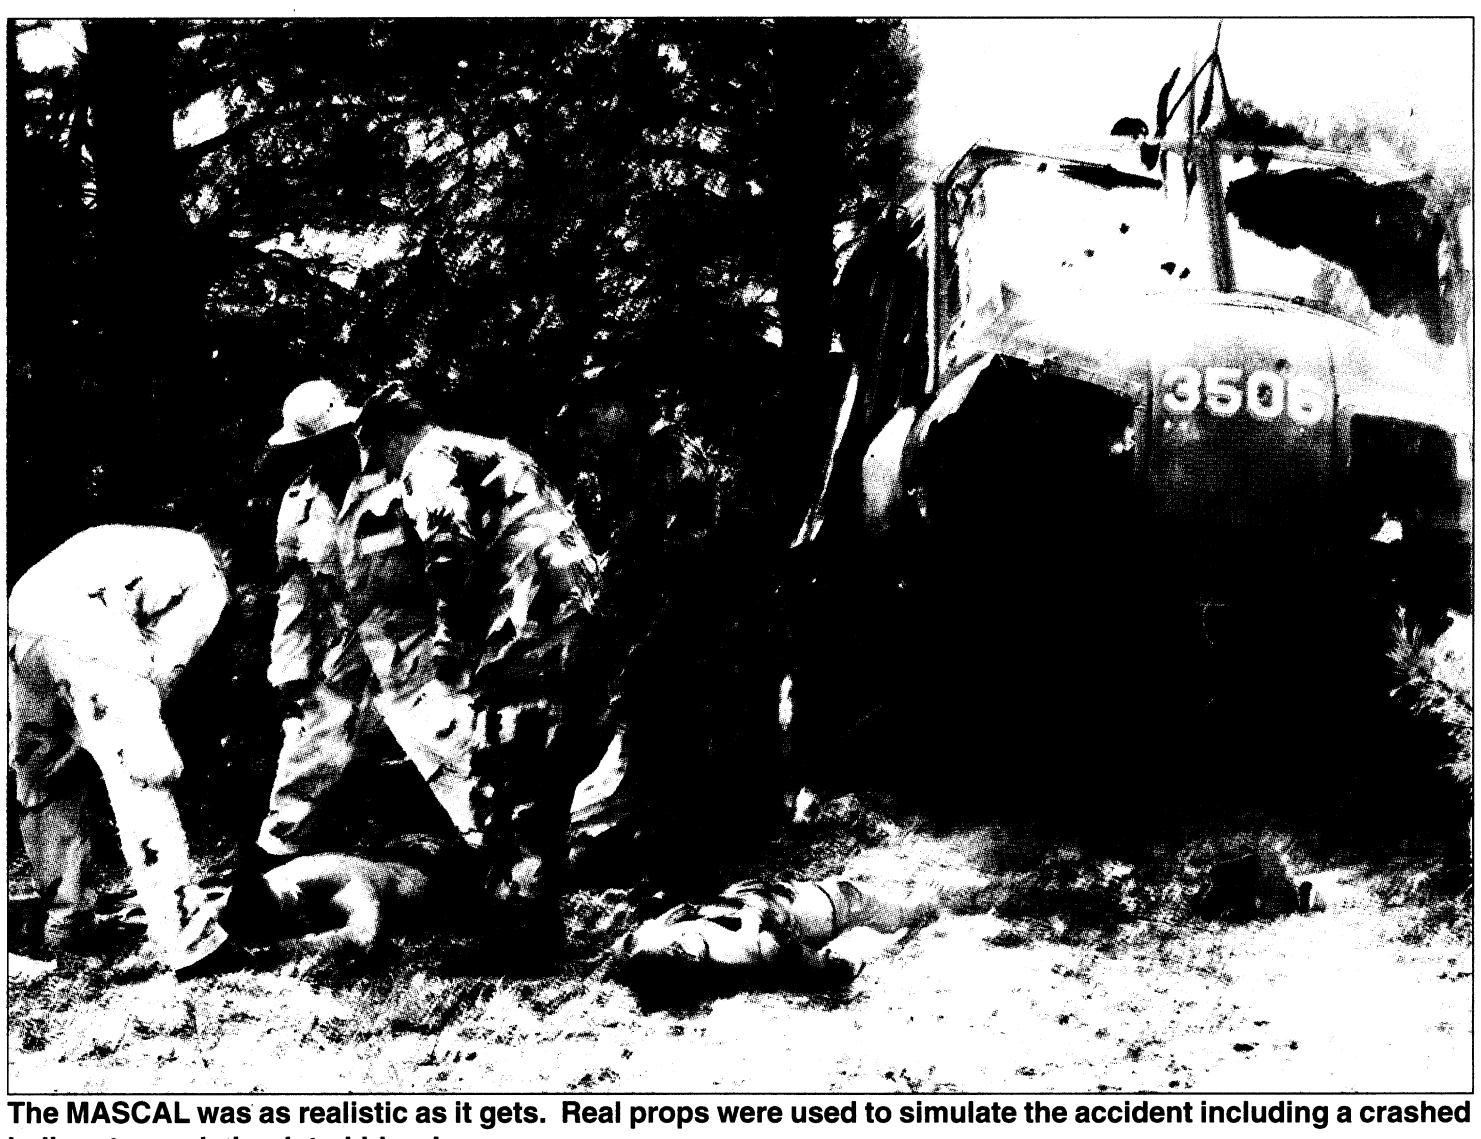
Mass casualty accident tests unit readiness

Training keeps Rangers on toes

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff



Day 13 of phase three of Ranger School at the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Camp Rudder, Fla. — swamp phase.

Mission — air assault over Auxiliary Field 7.

Two Blackhawks flown by student pilots from Fort Rucker, Ala., drop off the first load of Rangers. They go back to pick up the second load. They are seen over the field as they return for the second drop. That's when it happened.

The blades of both "hawks" collided with each other in midair. The birds go down.

The final bloody count, two deaths — a crew member and a Ranger student — 29 wounded.

The MASCAL was as realistic as it gets. Real props were used to simulate the accident including a crashed helicopter and simulated blood.

Relax, it's only a training exercise. There are no injuries, deaths or Blackhawks down. The Mass Casualty event, or MASCAL, is an annual training requirement held at each Ranger Training Battalion to assess the readiness of the battalion as well as the emergency support groups in the surrounding areas, said Lt. Col. Darcy Brewer, 6th RTBn. commander. "We receive the accident report and we try to respond and record accordingly. We involve everybody from the Ranger instructors all the way up to the Eglin Disaster Control Center."

"We take the most (realistic) thing that can happen and go with it," said Capt. Matt Kuhn, battalion adjutant. "We try not to stage it and we make it as real as possible."

The casualties were covered in simulated blood, had very realistic burns and some had to fake having broken bones. Each victim was given a specific injury on a note card that had to be identified by the medics who assessed them. The surviving casualties were laid out around the field and suffered everything from minor burns to open chest wounds and major head trauma.

"The role players were the best I've ever seen," said Col. K.K. Chin, Ranger Training Brigade commander. "They really knew how to act."

Spc. Jonathan Hoggat participated in three MASCAL's as a Ranger and said they get better every year.

"Each year it's a different scenario and different outside agencies come in to help," Hoggat said. "It gets really intense. Everybody is being torn in different directions trying to help wherever they can. If a real accident of this magnitude happened, we'd be able to handle it."

The airfield was over-run by Rangers, personnel from the Eglin Air Force Base fire department, the EMS team from Okaloosa County, the 249th MEDEVAC team and 6th RTBn. medics, running to aid any survivors.

The Rangers who were already on the ground rushed to the site and began training the casualties for the medics. As soon as the medics arrived they began treating the survivors' injuries and setting them up, according to their injuries, to be either medevaced or taken by ambulance.

All the victims were medevaced to the Fort Walton Beach Hospital where they were treated as real victims in the emergency room. The hospital requested a certain number of victims to meet their annual training requirement, Kuhn said. The exercise was not complete until all the victims were properly cared for.

"It's as real as is gets," Kuhn said.

A Disaster Control Group Command post was set up at the crash site to command and control the various assets, the situation and the casualty evacuation. On the scene, an Exercise Evaluation Team from Eglin Air Force Base was evaluating the performance of the different emergency support groups. Each evaluator observed a specific area and ensured the appropriate steps were being taken with each casualty, said Air Force Master Sgt. Brian Ward, EET chief.

The training exercise enhanced the battalion's ability to react to a MASCAL situation by solidifying the cohesion of both military and civilian response assets.

"We take the most realistic thing that can happen and go with it. We try not to stage it and we make it as real as possible."

Capt. Matt Kuhn
6th Ranger Training Battalion adjutant shoppette.

"It will be a significant improvement in what we can offer the Soldiers out there," Schubert said.

The mini-mall will add a measure of convenience to life on Kelley Hill.

"For Soldiers who don't have cars, they'll be able to walk (to the mini-mall) easily, and obviously, it's always better for the troops to have these services where they live," Schubert said.

The inclusion of a gas station will benefit the entire post, he said.

The complex's station is one of three AAFES is building on Fort Benning to ease congestion at the existing gas stations — the other two will be built on Dixie Road and Custer Road.

So far, construction has stayed on track, with the exception of some delays caused by unexploded ordnance and uncharted utility lines found in the construction area, Schubert said.

"Right now, we're just keeping our fingers crossed," he said, explaining that weather conditions could potentially cause delays.

If all goes well, construction crews will wrap up work near the end of January, and doors will open to the public in the third week of March.

The mini-mall's first few months open may come with reduced hours, considering the majority of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team is expected to be deployed by that time, Schubert said, but the store will aim to meet the needs of those who stay behind.

troops and Iraqi citizens. Eighty percent of that country's school-age children are back in school, he said, and all the universities are up and running once again — "That's a fingerprint left by American Soldiers."

In Afghanistan, more than 9 million citizens have registered to vote, thanks to a U.S.-led initiative.

And back here in the States, National Guardsmen are patrolling the border between the U.S. and Mexico, making what he called "unprecedented contributions to homeland security."

"The Soldiers you see here on the ground will populate those units, active-duty and reserve, around the world," Preston told the families of the ITB graduates.

"They will be part of the next greatest generation."

Preston's visit, Aug. 25 to 27, included meetings with representatives from various Fort Benning units, including the Ranger Training Brigade, the 36th Engineer Group, Airborne School cadre, basic trainees and members of the Sergeant Major Association. As the Army chief of staff's personal advisor on all enlisted-related matters, Preston said it's "important to see where they live and work and play — what their issues are."

And one of the issues foremost on the minds of Fort Benning enlisted troops is transformation, and specifically, what it will mean to their careers.

"From a strategic perspective, it's very important to the Army mission, but for the first sergeant and below, it'll be fairly transparent," he said. "What (transformation) means to the PFC or the platoon leader … it means predictability and stability. It means families can stay in one place. They won't be moving every couple of years.

"It means spouses can have careers. And it'll have a bigger impact on older kids, in athletics and academics. When they're packing up and moving every couple of years, they lose out."

What transformation won't mean is stagnancy, Preston said. With the "life cycle" of a brigade combat team about 36 months, and Soldiers guaranteed stability for that period, it's conceivable that a Soldier could transfer if he or she desires, Preston said, though Army officials hope to see Soldiers doing at least two cycles with the unit.

"So certainly, it could be six or seven years in one place, maybe more, maybe less. A lot depends on the desires of the Soldier," he said.

"But that should have no negative impact on the rate at which our Soldiers are promoting. Not at all."

Preston expressed confidence in the ability of today's youngest NCOs to lead tomorrow's "transformed" Army.

Testament to that confidence is the current emphasis on younger drill sergeants and recruiters.

"It's all about getting the right Soldier in the right position at the right time in his career," he said.

"When a 20-year-old corporal talks to the parents of a potential recruit, and he's just about their kid's age, they like what they see, they're impressed, and they want their son or daughter to be like that."

Younger-ranking Soldiers in positions of leadership can have a great impact on young recruits, Preston said. But their responsibilities in these positions will have a far-reaching impact on their careers and, ultimately, the Army.

"The level of maturity we'll see as they continue to progress in their careers — that's going to make our Army that much better," he said.

And transformation, he said, "is all about making our Army better."

Rangers: First to complete marathon

He said they relied on their Ranger training and camaraderie to give them the mental advantage necessary to complete the race.

To achieve their goal, the team worked out a schedule which let the runners pass the baton every 10 miles, giving them a chance to rest and prepare for the next leg of the race.

"The stop-and-go 10 miles had your legs feeling like they had rigor mortis for a mile or so, but we enjoyed every minute of it," Wilson said.

The idea to trade off runners every 10 miles was very successful during the first half of the race, he said.

The team completed the first 100 miles in 13 hours and had such a strong lead over their competitors, the race officials couldn't locate them until the next morning.

With the exception of a few alterations, the team continued to trade off every 10 miles until they reached the 210-mile mark, where they started passing the baton every five miles.

"Some of the guys were starting to hurt a little bit and it was getting dark, so I decided to cut it back to five miles to give them a mental boost," Wilson said.

Wilson said his team could have finished sooner but they encountered several dogs along the way that made the trek a bit more daunting.

"There is a sign in rural Tennessee that says, 'Beware of dogs next 40 miles,'" he said.

"We even had a few that attacked the van and started biting the tires."

By the end of the race, Wilson ran 78.6 miles at a 7:50 pace, Sheaffer ran 70 miles at an 8:20 pace, Shaver ran 55 miles at a 10:00 pace and Laniak ran 73 miles at an 8:50 pace.

For Shaver, completing the race was a personal triumph.

Shaver is a 210-pound "muscle Ranger" who doesn't have the typical build of a long distance runner, but he is "extremely mentally tough" and "game for anything," Wilson said.

Shaver said running has never been his strong suit, but he decided a couple of years ago to overcome his weakness.

He said it felt great to complete the race, and he and his comrades plan to run more ultra-marathons in the near future.

"We're going to just keep on running," he said.

said.

"Timelines were adjusted to reflect a more cautious, deliberative approach," Snyder said, "because we need to be event driven, not date driven.

"There is a notional schedule."

Key milestones for the NSPS include listing the labor relations and human relations draft in the Federal Register by the end of the year. The Federal Register process allows for a comment period.

Full implementation of the NSPS should take place by July 2007/2008, because in November 2008, the law expires and changes to the personnel system need to be in place, Snyder said.

Benning's Backstage needs aspiring thespians

Post theater needs help for The Foreigner

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Benning's Backstage is looking for five men and one woman to act in its production of The Foreigner by Larry Shue.

Auditions are scheduled for 7 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. The play will show Oct. 22, 23, 29 and 30 at Benning's Backstage..

The play is about two British men who visit Tillman County, Ga., a town 100 miles south of Atlanta.

One of the men convinces an innkeeper that his friend can't speak English, so he hears conversations that other patrons think he can't understand.

By listening in on the conversations, the man uncovers some "interesting" information about the other patrons and their deeds — or rather, their misdeeds.

"There are some really bad guys in this play," said Peggy Cornwell, producer and director. "And one of them is really evil.

"If I were a man, I would want to play the the really evil guy because those roles are always fun to play," she said.

> "You spend two months together and you get cramped up in a little dressing room all the time so you get to know each other pretty well."

Cornwell is looking for four men between the ages of 20 and 50, one man age 20 to 30 and one woman age 20 to 30.

"Two men will need a British accent and everyone else will need a Southern accent," Cornwell said. "But we have dialect coaches so they shouldn't be discouraged because of that."

She said accents can be learned, but she wants people who can act and are willing to work.

Actors will be required to attend rehearsals four nights a week and are expected to study their lines during their own time, Cornwell said.

She said as long as everyone is doing what they should do, the rehearsals are relaxing and can be a great bonding experience.

"Because we are a small group and we're all volunteers, we spend a lot of time together and we get really close," Cornwell said.

Heroes attack damage to widow's home

Fort Benning fields 20 teams in annual House of Heroes blitz

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"Am I dreaming?" Ruby Davis is having a hard time believing her ears.

House of Heroes volunteers are going to build her a wheelchair ramp. They're going to trim her shrubs, paint her house and clean her carpets. They're going to undo the damage years of neglect has wrought on her 40-year-old Columbus home.

"In my whole life, I never heard of anything like this," said Davis, 77, the widow of a World War II veteran. "I'm just so thankful. I think it's wonderful what the hero people are doing."

The "hero people" are a team of volunteers — one of 20 teams from Fort Benning — who will participate in the annual House of Heroes blitz Sept. 11 to 23. The local nonprofit organization, now in its fifth year, repairs the homes of aging veterans or their widows. More than 100 have been honored since the project began.

Here's how it works: Volunteers, including Soldiers, family members, civic groups and local citizens, meet with the homeowners to determine what repairs or maintenance is needed. Using funds and materials donated by local businesses, they spend up to a week doing minor repairs, yard work, painting and such.

Most of the homeowners, like Davis, are disabled. She's arthritic and, for the most part, confined to a wheelchair or scooter.

"I was a hard-working person. I had my kids and two or three jobs. There's nothing much I can do anymore," said Davis, who raised five children and had a fair hand in the raising of her 21 grandchildren.

Her home, just off St. Mary's Road, is chock full of photos of the kids, the grandkids and the great grands. There's one over the sofa with her husband, Alonzo, the year before he died.

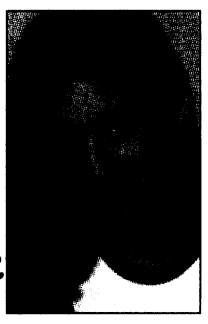
"He didn't like his picture taken, but he knew he wasn't going to live," she said. "So he let me talk him into it."

Alonzo, who spent more than 20 years in the Army, died of cancer in 1983. His widow moved into the house shortly after.

It has its original carpeting and cabinetry, both in need of a good cleaning. And the azalea bushes she planted are spindly and overgrown, but she's still mighty proud of them.

"They were so pretty. Just beautiful. But I can't do the work anymore," Davis said, shaking her head. "I'm not complaining. I'm thankful I can do what I can do."

To learn more about House of Heroes or to volunteer with a team, e-mail Janie Pearson at janie.pearson@benning.army.mil.



No experience is necessary, but professional craftsmen and carpenters are needed.

Ruby Davis, widow of WWII veteran Alonzo Davis, will get help from House of Heroes in the coming weeks. The "heroes" work to fix years of neglect at her home.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

When I was younger — and the most pleasant of teenage girls, thank you very much — I made relentless fun of my mother when she suggested that a day together at a hot air balloon festival constituted fun.

Partly because she expected me, being the sugar-and-spice 15-year-old I was, to actually enjoy spending time with my arch nemesis. And partly because she actually thought for one second that I'd think that type of thing would be cool.

Well, I guess she gets the last laugh. Because now, with the four-day in sight, I am actually anxious to go to the fifth annual Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival at Callaway Gardens this weekend.

I know — I feel slightly geekish just saying it. But I can't lie to you. I think it will make for a fun time.

The three-day affair kicks off tonight at 5 p.m. with a barbecue on the beach, followed up with a "balloon glow" from 8 to 9:30 p.m. (Think enormous, colorful luminaries along the shoreline.)

And after that, you can hang around to watch Shrek.

Nothing terribly exciting so far, I realize. But I'm getting there, don't worry.

Saturday — that's the kicker. Saturday's schedule is chock full of fun things to do.

There'll be a classic car show, tethered balloon rides, a rock climbing wall, sand castle building (no judging, though), a tractor pull, swimming, mini-golf, table tennis, shuffleboard, paddle boats ... you name it.

Ooh — and I almost forgot the $20 helicopter rides from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. I'm sure that's not exactly peak excitement for those of you who are used to that sort of thing. But for desk-bound people like me, it's kinda neat.

And if you manage to drag yourself out of bed before noon (translation: EARLY!) and get up there between 6 and 9 a.m., you get to Volunteers needed to tutor 'at risk' kids in community

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Every year Soldiers from Fort Benning's Infantry Officer Basic Course take time out of their Saturdays to go to school elementary school.

These Soldiers, along with college and high school students, parents and others, dedicate two hours every Saturday to tutor "at-risk" elementary through high-school-age students — and they want you.

The Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus is recruiting volunteers for the 2004-05 school year tutorial program.

The program, in its 22nd year, averages about 60 students each weekend, said Daisy Honor, a retired school teacher and tutorial principal at Eastway Elementary School. The program is designed to offer one-on-one tutoring to students at risk of failing classes or falling behind their peers.

It was only eight years ago when Fort Benning Soldiers got involved in the tutorial program.

Program chairman and founder Lonnie Jackson, a retired sergeant first class, started the program after organizing a community clean-up drive.

"That worked so well, I thought I should do an educational program," Jackson said. "These at-risk students really need one-on-one attention. They need closeness, more motivation and people who are enthusiastic.

"Those are things I learned in the Army. You use that and it will almost always stimulate the learning process," he said.

"(Students) see that uniform, and then the Soldiers sit down and help out. It especially leaves an impression on them. Everybody looks up to the Army anyway, and it makes a lot of difference."

Jackson said students gain a sense of pride working with the officers.

"One time this guy said 'Momma, momma, a lieutenant helped me today.' It's a role model thing. They bring great credit to the Army and the whole community."

Tutors aren't limited to the military. Members of the National Honor Society, sororities, fraternities and school teachers are just a handful of the volunteers.

The program, which has helped more than 22,300 students, will likely help more than 400 students this year.

"The program is designed to help

Young artist paints mural at Sniper School

Used paint-by-number technique

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Don't mess with the artist. That's the message Elizabeth "Libby" Penix printed on the back of her T-shirt as a not-so-subtle warning to Sniper School cadre.

The 15-year-old Spencer High School sophomore agreed to paint a sniper mural on one of the school's buildings as a favor to her father, Sgt. 1st Class Steve Penix, a senior instructor at the school. But she didn't sign on for the harassment.

"They teased me constantly," said Libby, who didn't look like she minded it at all.

Steve was impressed with what he saw in his daughter's sketch portfolio last spring. "Could you do something big — a mural for the school?" he asked.

Using a former sniper student's drawing, Libby designed a large woodland scene with snipers hidden amid the foliage, rocks and tall grass. She drew it late last spring and finished painting mid-summer. With vacation breaks and an extremely rainy summer, the whole process took more than two months.

But Libby thinks it was worth it.

"I get compliments every time I come out here," she said. "There's things about it I look at and I think I would've done differently, but overall, I love it. I really do."

Libby, who's loved art since kindergarten, drew inspiration from her favorite paint-by-number sets.

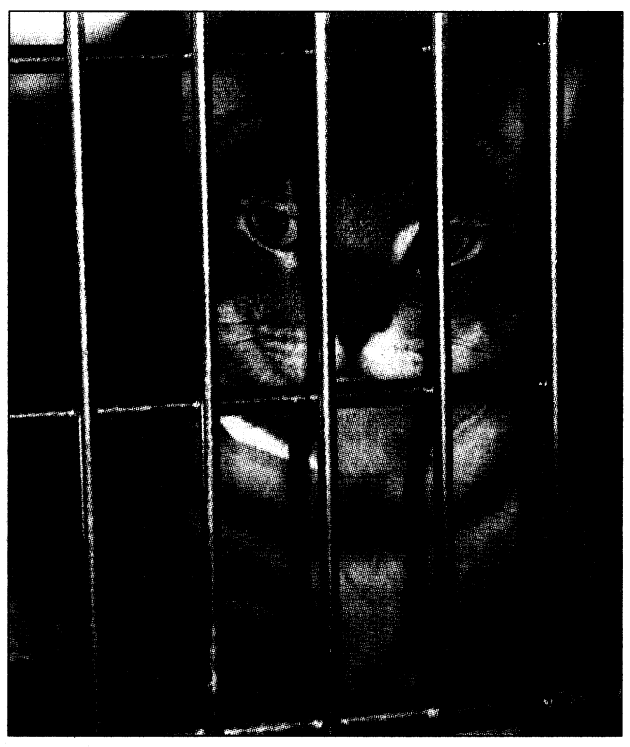
"I love paint-by-numbers. I love the way they're shaded," she said. "I used some of that (technique) on the mural for a 3D effect."

The cadre's teasing wasn't the only distraction Libby had to deal with.

At 5-feet-even, she was too short to reach the top of the mural.

Sometimes, she said, she perched on her "tippy toes" on top of a ladder. And an old swimming injury to her right shoulder occasionally slowed the process.

"But the worst part for her, I think, was putting up with these guys," said her mom, Karen.



Libby plans to study art or veterinary medicine in college.

Elizabeth Penix spent more than two months designing and painting the Sniper School mural.

Commissary to field focus group

Defense Commissary Agency

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. — Fort Benning Commissary customers can participate in an annual focus group, scheduled for 12:30 p.m. Sept. 22 in the store training room.

"We need volunteers to share their ideas on how to improve their commissary," said Len Langford, Fort Benning Commissary store administrator. "This is your opportunity to play an active role in improving and protecting your commissary benefit — savings you've earned."

Focus groups help commissary directors around the world to gauge customer satisfaction and improve their stores. In these open forums, customers offer opinions about the commissary.

A variety of customers who reflect the store's patron demographics, normally seven to 12 people, compose a good focus group. There are no permanent members — patron participation changes with each meeting, so volunteering to participate is a one-time opportunity.

The meeting lasts approximately an hour, with refreshments and tokens of appreciation provided.

Often, focus group participants discuss product selection in the commissary. They may question a policy. They might have great ideas to make shopping more convenient, efficient or enjoyable. Some customers want to keep things exactly as they are.

With this input, store directors develop plans to improve store operations.

Ultimately, focus groups and other outlets for customer feedback — speaking directly to store personnel, filling out customer comment cards and accessing the "Contact DeCA" section of www.commissaries.com — help store directors determine what works and what doesn't for their patrons.

Any military member — active duty or reserve forces, military spouse or retiree — who shops at the Fort Benning Commissary is welcome to take part in the annual focus group.

For more information or to volunteer, call Myrtle Gore or Langford at 544-3965 or 544-3966.

Backstage's regular actors, agrees.

Cranford came to Fort Benning about one year ago and immediately auditioned for Dearly Departed, the second play at Benning's Backstage since the program was started. Since then, he has been in two productions and is trying to find the time to get involved in this one.

"It is a great atmosphere," he said.

"I try to get involved as much as I can."

Cranford said being a part of a Benning's Backstage productions takes a lot of work but has definite rewards.

"You don't just put on a costume and strut your stuff on stage," he said. "It is a lot of work because you are involved in all aspects of it.

"You have to work at it and it pretty much turns into a little part-time job," he said.

"You spend two months together and you get cramped up in a little dressing room all the time so you get to know each other pretty well," Cranford said. "You turn into a little family by the time it's all over with."

students keep pace with their specific classes," Honor said. "They don't come just to be tutored in English. One week they may be tutored in English and the next in math."

Each week, the students are assigned to a tutor who is most familiar with a particular subject, Honor said. Volunteers are asked to tutor within their areas of expertise.

"Students come from everywhere; some come from Alabama, some Harris County," Honor said. "A lot of students who are failing don't know about the program and they don't know there is help."

Tutors can be high school age or older and do not need experience, only a desire to help give students the motivation to stay in school. By sacrificing time to tutor, volunteers help create a more educated society, and therefore, less need for government assistance programs, Jackson said.

The tutor program will start Sept. 11 and run through May 7 from 10 a.m. to noon at Rothschild/Eastway Schools, 4601 Buena Vista Road.

For more information, call Jackson at 687-5357, Honor at 687-8808 or the CCSC office at 321-9596.

enjoy all this for half-price. And regular admission is $13, so I would set that alarm.

If you can't make it up Saturday, don't worry — the festival continues into Sunday. And Sunday will feature the Hughston Sports Medical Center's annual 5K Fitness Series and a triathlon, which kick off at 7:50 a.m. and 8 a.m. respectively. Not my cup of tea, mind you. But if you're into that sort of thing, I'm sure you'll get a kick out of running the 5K or torturing your body with a 1K swim, followed by a 30K bike ride, followed by a 8K run. And you'll have Monday (Labor Day) to recover.

So, if you're going to be around this weekend, grab a few friends, pack a cooler and head out to Callaway.

It's a short drive and a decent price for a chance to get off post do something different and have a little fun.

PUBLIC NOTICE
FORT BENNING DRINKING WATER FILTRATION OF TURBIDITY

On Thursday, July 1, the filtered water at the Fort Benning surface water treatment plant had elevated levels of turbidity for several hours. The turbidity levels returned to the normal range within one to 12 hours depending on the filter, and six filters were taken off-line and backwashed before returning to use.

Upon returning these filters to use, the filtered water was tested and found to be within normal turbidity levels. The cause of higher turbidity values on July 1, was a temporary loss of operational control which was immediately corrected by noon the same day. The incident and its associated circumstances were reported to the Georgia Environmental Protection Division Drinking Water Program within 24 hours as required. This Public Notice is also required by the Georgia Rules for Safe Drinking Water.

Turbidity has no health effects. However, turbidity can interfere with disinfection and provide a medium for microbial growth. Turbidity may indicate the presence of disease-causing organisms. These organisms include bacteria, viruses, and parasites that can cause symptoms such as nausea, cramps, diarrhea, and associated headaches.

Please share this information with family members, neighbors, and guests who drink this water, especially those who may not have received this notice directly.

If a family member, neighbor, or guest does not speak or read English, you may obtain a translated copy of this Public Notice from Joseph Wilkins, Environmental Management Division, telephone number 545-2400.

For additional information, please contact Mark Fincher at 545-7928, or Joseph Wilkins at 545-2400.

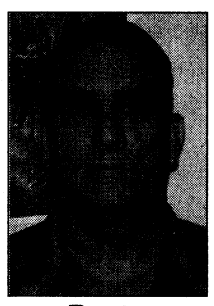
Celebrate Labor Day with appreciation

Chaplain (Maj.) Jose Resto
Basic Combat Training Brigade

REFLECTIONS

On Monday, we celebrate Labor Day, and many of us will have a three- or four-day weekend.

What a blessing that we have a day to remember that we work hard for our salary.



As we know, every holiday has a purpose, including Mother's and Father's Day, Memorial Day, Columbus Day, Independence Day, Thanksgiving, New Year's Day and dozens more.

Almost everyone in the United States works at least five days a week to earn their salary, meet their responsibilities and support their families.

On Labor Day we should stop working and rest, knowing that work is a blessing.

There are millions of people without jobs, looking and hoping to gain a salary to help them meet their needs.

I believe the concept of Labor Day comes from the beginning of creation by God.

Resto

The Bible says, "And God blessed the seventh day and made it holy, because on it he rested from all the work of creating that he had done."

After the end of the first six days, God ceased from all works of creation.

God took satisfaction in the work of his own hands.

He did not rest as one weary, but as one well-pleased with the manifestations of his own glory.

He rested on that day and took satisfaction in his creatures. Then he sanctified the seventh day and appointed us, on that day, to rest a holy rest.

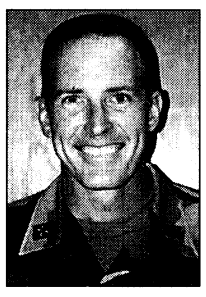
I believe that Labor Day is an opportunity for us to recognize God as the creator and the one that supplies everything — our health, our jobs, our homes and our families.

Some of us have been working many, many years, and we'll continue until our last day on earth.

Today, we should recognize the work we do to help make the world a better place, the hard work we do to maintain our family.

Happy Labor Day weekend. Remember, "Therefore, my dear brothers, stand firm. Let nothing move you. Always give yourself fully to the work of the Lord, because you know that your labor in the Lord is not in vain." (I Corinthians 15:58)

Follow the process to ensure your relationship is divine



Five steps complete, find true love for lifetjime of bliss

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

The jumpmaster belted out, "Who needs to be JMPd?" The young, strapping, airborne paratrooper struggled to his feet beneath the weight of his parachute rigging and sounded off with a vigorous, "Here, Jumpmaster!"

Any jumper knows that to experience the thrill of a great jump, you've got to follow a process (JMPI — it's a meticulous safety inspection) to make certain you don't overlook any "major malfunctions."

Similarly, it makes a whole lot of sense in our romantic pursuits to make sure we do a "relationship JMPI" before we take a lover's leap, doesn't it?

Hawkins

If we want the thrill of a great relationship, we're wise to follow a process that ensures we've checked and double-checked that this relationship is going to be divine and not a disaster!

And that's what we've been talking about for the last four weeks, reminding ourselves that this is what every parent ought to teach and every single has to know ...

Step No. 1 — Get to know him or her. Check out the fun factor, the family factor and the faith factor. (Knowing takes the three T's: Time, Talk and Togetherness.)

Step No. 2 — Earn, learn to trust him or her. Did you remember the formula for trust? TRST=P^2C^2/T=(Proven Performance in Character and Competence "over" Time.)

Step No. 3 — Test your reliance on him or her. This is all about the "Love Bank." Is your love interest actually making more deposits than withdrawals in your love bank?

How about you with him or her?

Step No. 4 — Commit. In the military, we call it a PNR (point of no return.) It is when we decide, "no matter what," we're absolutely, irrevocably comitted to "mission complete."

After you've gone the first three steps, you're able to make that sort of spiritual promise in marriage. And there's no power like the power of commitment!

Step No. 5 — Sexual touch. Why, in a culture that wants so often to put this first in a relationship, would I list it last?

Well, it's for the same reason you don't head straight for the thrill of a jump, diving out the aircraft door without first going through a few other steps! It can be disastrous!

God wants what is absolutely best for you.

And he knows the greatest thrill and the best sex go hand-in-hand with a relationship that's been well JMPd (knowing, trusting, relying, fully committed, i.e., married, and then you get the icing on the cake!)

In fact, current secular research is showing that the "best sex" that's going on out there is not the myth and the mirage of Hollywood's Sex and the City lifestyle.

Instead, the most frequent and the most satisfying sexual experiences are being had by deeply committed and deeply spiritual married couples.

That's what the research shows. Surprised? God isn't!

He's interested in giving you the best in all the areas of your life, and your designer's got a wonderful blueprint for "How to Avoid Marrying a Jerk" — as well as finding the love of your life!

SPORTS

Photos by Sgt. Kim Dooley

Cruise-a-Matics forward Roy Krueger, center, narrowly evades a tackle during a rugby tournament hosted at the Cruiser Dome during the summer. The team is looking for new and experienced players to join their ranks for this year's 15s seasons (fall and spring).

Cruiser scrum half Sean Schaefer takes down an opponent.

LOOKING FOR A FEW GOOD MEN

Ruggers wanted

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Dig out those cleats and grab a mouth guard — the Columbus/Fort Benning Cruise-a-Matics want you.

The tricommunity's only rugby club, the Cruisers, are entering a new season and are looking for seasoned veterans and new players to join the team, said Roy MacDonald, club president.

The club is a "half-and-half mix" of military and civilian players, MacDonald said. Recently, the club has experienced a large turn-over on the military side. Since the beginning of the summer season, the team has lost several of its players to deployments, PCS moves and ETS moves.

"This is a great time to come out and test your feet on the field, because we're kind of in a rebuilding stage right now," he said. "We've got a lot of newer players, so we'll be starting with the basics and building from there."

The Cruisers started their new season — called 15s — last week, but it's never too late to join a practice or get into a game.

"We're always looking for players who want to learn a great sport, have some fun and make lifelong friends," MacDonald said.

The Cruisers practice from 7 to 9 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday at the Cruiser Dome behind Dolly Madison Bakery.

Games are on Saturdays and are most often in Columbus or nearby cities, like Macon, Ga., Atlanta and Birmingham, Ala.

"We're just out to have a good time and play a good game," MacDonald said. "And anyone who wants to be a part of that is more than welcome with us."

To get to the Cruiser Dome from Interstate 185, take Exit 1-A onto Victory Drive. Drive until you come to 22nd Avenue and take a right (you should be at a stoplight and see Dolly Madison Bakery on your right side). Follow this road across the dirt road and straight through the gate.

For more information, call MacDonald at 221-1941 or Roy Krueger at 545-7162.

Benning paintball course grand opening Thursday

Facility to offer 'speedball' play, tourneys

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Organized paintball is finally a reality for Fort Benning. The paintball park, contracted by the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, will hold its grand opening at 4 p.m. Thursday.

The opening will feature paintball demonstrations and activities and music provided by local radio station Rock 103.

"Flying Colors," a company run by father-and-son team Rory Sr. and Rory Calhoun built the course. The Calhouns also run a park at Fort Gordon, Ga., which was where they found out about the interest in having one at Fort Benning.

"We had a booth at a festival at Fort Gordon with a paintball shoot," Rory said, "and a gentleman mentioned the program here. We inquired, got lucky and got the contract."

Richard Martin, chief of DMWR's Community Recreation Division, said DMWR wanted to "plug into" the Calhoun's expertise and safety knowledge in designing and managing the park.

Although still developing the layout for the course on Tuesday, Calhoun said he would be open for business this weekend.

The park's office and equipment are housed in an old concession-style trailer sitting on a newly poured concrete pad behind the Afterhours Club and Subway on Anderson Street. The trailer was repainted OD green, and Martin said several of the post's younger paintball enthusiasts have offered to help "decorate" the outside by shooting it with paintballs.

Calhoun said the park is 150 by 300 feet, enclosed by 30-foot–high netting to keep the paintballs inside the park. He's ordered the inflatable red and yellow barriers that he calls "tacos" for the course. The bunkers and barriers will support two teams of five players playing "speedball."

Melissa House

Rory Calhoun Jr. will operate the post's paintball course.

Speedball is a fast-paced version of paintball similar to capture-the-flag, Calhoun said, where teams try to eliminate all targets (players) on the field and capture their opponent's flag.

"It makes you feel alive," Calhoun said. "But you know you're out when you get hit by a paintball."

Calhoun has several experienced players who have played in tournaments who will referee matches in the park. The referees will be able to answer questions players have about the game and their equipment.

The park has some hard and fast safety rules players must follow, but Calhoun says teams will be able to make their own "game rules."

"I want the customers to have fun and bring their friends," Calhoun said. "The rules will be by majority vote before the teams begin play. We want their input — what they like, don't like."

Martin said there is a circle of paintball players who may have been driving to Auburn, Ala., to play.

"Auburn's the closest established course," Martin said. "I think this facility is going to be good."

Hours of operation for the course are from 2 p.m. until dark Wednesday to Friday and from 9 a.m. until dark Saturday and Sunday.

Paintball enthusiasts:

- Must be at least 48 inches tall and 10 years old to play.
- Must wear long-sleeved shirt, long pants and close-toed shoes.
- May bring own equipment, but must pay a field fee and use field paint purchased at the park.

Midnight Express makes 24th run

More than 3,500 join for good cause

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"It's not about the race; it's about the community."

That's the philosophy Country's Barbecue owners Scott Ressmeyer, Jim Morpeth and Griff Morpeth put to use each year when they host the Midnight Express.

In its 24th year, the race is an annual event that benefits the visually impaired, raising money for college scholarships, school equipment, training guide dogs and special athletic teams.

But it does more than that, if you ask Rochelle Ressmeyer, who helps organize the event. It unites the tricommunity behind a common cause.

This year, around 3,500 people from Columbus, Fort Benning and Phenix City came together for the cause.

"We're so grateful every time we start to see this take shape," Rochelle said. "It's so wonderful to be able to put this together for all these people, and benefit someone at the same time."

Rochelle said the owners of Country's inherited the race from the shoe store that previously occupied the restaurant's building and, recognizing the significance of the midnight run, thought they ought to keep it going.

"This is one of the biggest events in Columbus, and we've always been very pro-Columbus," she said. "We love to see the Tri-City out here. We love to see the Fort Benning Soldiers here. All these people behind (this) cause, having that common thread."

David Bill can attest to that. The Columbus Technical College teacher has participated in the race "since day one."

"I love running, and it's for such a charitable cause," Bill said. "I enjoy giving back to the community, to people who really need the help."

Although the Columbus native usually places well, he maintains that the Midnight Express is one race that isn't about competition for him.

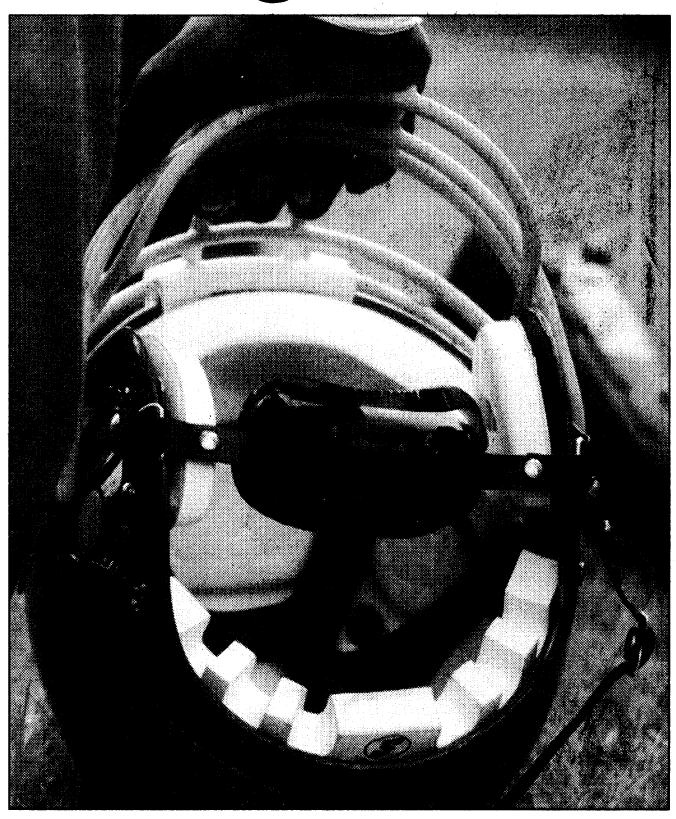
"I'm here to run for a cause," he said, adding that he generally tries to find race events that benefit a charitable organization, like the Arthritis Foundation. "It just adds depth to it."

For Bill, that depth is only furthered by the memories of his father, a 30-year veteran who suffered from diabetes and lost his sight during the terminal stages of his illness.

He said he's also had several friends affected by sight impairment. Participating in the run gives him a chance to help people outside of his realm who suffer from the same challenges as those who have been close to him.

"I'm the kind of person who would do anything to help someone, to support people (who need it)," he said.

Chase Betack appreciates the cause, but was most looking forward to putting his cross-country skills to the test along the 5K route.



The 17-year-old Carver High School student said he's run in the race since his freshman year of high school, when he first began running.

Betack took first place in the 15-to-19 age category Saturday night with a finish of just over 17 minutes. He placed ninth overall.

Although he doesn't get to collect the cash prize older competitors receive — "high school and college runners don't get the money" — Betack said it felt good to perform as well as he did.

The high school senior plans to attend Georgia Tech next year to study building engineering.

What do you get when you mix Christianity, Judaism and Islam? In many parts of the world, it's a recipe for disaster. Yet in America, it's a formula that has peacefully endured for over 200 years. In fact, not only has it endured, it's flourished.

The pundits may say that the ability for different faiths to coexist here comes from a lack of intensity and passion for any religion in America. But nothing could be further from the truth. Because we are free to choose which religion, if any, we'd like to follow, it enables us to have a deeper, more personal relationship with our faith than would otherwise be possible.

And because no one religion needs to feel threatened by another, we can look to the similarities that unite us, instead of focusing on the differences. Two hundred million Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus agree. To learn more about freedom of religion, visit rememberfreedom.org. Or, feel free to ask the spiritual leader of your choice.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

Post expands off-limits list

Military banned from four more establishments

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Four new establishments were added Sept. 2 to the list of local businesses off-limits to all service members.

The Firehouse, a nightclub, Drive 1, a used car dealership that caters to Soldiers, and two Chinese restaurants, China King Express and China Inn Express, have temporarily been placed on the list by Fort Benning's Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley until they come before the region's disciplinary control board for review, said Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, provost marshal and president of the disciplinary control board.

Finnegan said the establishments come before the board when there are reports of illegal or "questionable" practices, like drug dealing, violence, prostitution or unethical business practices, like inflated interest rates. Finnegan declined to comment on reasons for the four newest additions.

The businesses on the original off-limits list, which was released in June, included:

- Gold Lounge, 3613 Victory Drive
- Traffic Light Inn, 2210 Fort Benning Road
- Cellar's Lounge, 3456 Victory Drive
- Candlelight Motel, 3456 Victory Drive
- Coach's Corner, 3709 Gentian Boulevard

Sgt. 1st Class Jeff Lewis, of 4th RTBn.'s dive team, was promoted underwater last week.

Dive team promotes scuba

So what's it mean? His career is washed up? It's taken a dive? He's in over his head?

What's it mean that Staff Sgt. Jeff Lewis chose to become Sgt. 1st Class Jeff Lewis under 11 feet of water?

"It means we're a small group of guys, we're close, and we like to do things differently," said Lewis, a member of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's dive team.

Lewis is hoping his underwater promotion ceremony Sept. 1 at the Kelley Hill pool will serve another purpose. He's hoping it'll draw attention to the cohesive nine-man unit. In a word, he's hoping to recruit.

"We're always looking for divers," said Lewis, who was "pinned" by his dive buddy, Capt. Corbett McCallum. The two placed third in this year's Best Ranger Competition.

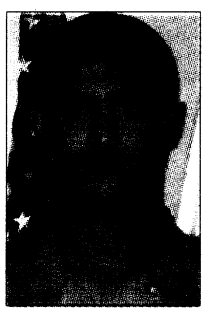
Five Rangers wearing oxygen tanks stood on the bottom of the pool for the brief ceremony, then posed for underwater photos. Lewis's orders were read from poolside using a Divers Recall System, a device used during the 4th RTBn.'s pre-scuba course to project voices underwater.

Lewis's wife, Melissa, watched from dry ground.

"I don't know how he came up with this idea," she said with a shrug and a laugh. "Who knows? I'm sure they came up with it together. They like to do things differently."

Potential dive team members must pass pre-scuba to qualify for scuba school.

For information about pre-scuba, call 544-6086.



Iraqi officers make post history

It's not exactly the same as walking on the moon, but two soldiers from the new Iraqi army have earned a spot in the history books by attending classes on Fort Benning.

Capts. Arkan Alousee and Sami Aziz arrived at Fort Benning's International Student Training Detachment Sept. 2 to attend the Infantry Captains' Career Course.

Alousee said he is excited to be in America and is honored to be one of the first Iraqis to attend the course.

Alousee served as a training officer in the Iraqi army under Saddam Hussein's regime and said he has already seen some dramatic changes and looks forward to the changes to come.

"If you were given an order and you thought it was wrong, you couldn't say anything about it because they may kill you or put you in jail forever," he said. "But now

Benning retiree killed

Sergeant major victim of hit-and-run

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Robert McCord was killed by a hit-and-run driver while running along Whitesville Road in Columbus. The driver has not been found.

The 48-year-old McCord, who served as the garrison sergeant major before retiring in January, was doing PT Saturday shortly after 7 a.m. to prepare for the Army 10-Miler in Washington, D.C., next month. He was struck from behind as he crossed the bridge over J.R. Allen Parkway.

Monique Frushon said her mother, Gisela, and her stepfather settled in Columbus after his retirement because he was active in local organizations, like House of Heroes and the Sergeant Major Association. The couple had developed a support system here.

"This was a comfortable place for them," Frushon said. "They thought it was a safe place."

Frushon said the family is struggling to deal with the loss of a man devoted to his family and always ready and willing to help wherever help was needed.

"He was there for us," Frushon said. "He was there for anyone who needed him."

McCord, a 30-year Army veteran, was a senior program analyst with SYColeman in the Directorate of Combat Development. Before that, as Fort Benning's garrison sergeant major, he worked closely with Chuck Walls, the garrison manager.

"I'm still not sure I've accepted the fact he's not going to pop in any minute with a big smile on his face. He was always smiling," Walls said, and he recalled McCord's involvement two years ago with the House of Heroes program.

"That's the kind of person he was," Walls said.

"He made life so much better for other people. I realize I was just lucky to work with a guy like him."

McCord was working toward a master's degree in business administration.

"It's still so unbelievable to us. He had so many plans. He was always busy," Frushon said.

LEARNING THE HARD WAY

The difference a year can make

Sgt. 1st Class Brian Arabinko
HHC, USAIC

Burrr THUP; burrr THUP. It's a sound that I'll never forget. A year ago today, I was sitting there, watching an artificial respirator go up and down, up and down. It displayed one of three words with each breath; "mandatory" — meaning the machine was breathing for the patient; "assist" — meaning it was helping; and "spontaneous" — which meant the patient was breathing for himself.

If the machine paused any longer than it normally did, you could watch a Green Beret and a Ranger panic.

Let's start at the beginning. Last year, while I was in Afghanistan with a random selection of Fort Benning Soldiers teaching the Afghan National Army, I received an e-mail saying my twin brother had been shot in Iraq.

The initial reports weren't bad. They said he had been shot in the head, but his modular integrated communications helmet had caught the round. (Heck, I know a cat who's caught rounds on three different occasions in the helmet — it couldn't be that bad.) I took emergency leave to go to Germany to see him. A kiss on the head, a bottle of bourbon, and I'd be right back.

Upon my arrival at Landstuhl, that little fantasy changed. The words "train wreck" immediately came to mind. Dave had taken three 7.62 x 39 mm rounds to the body armor — which stopped them cold — and one to the head, no helmet. That wasn't the worst of it. During the ambush, he went through the windshield at 90 mph, the vehicle rolled over him and blew up.

It's a shock to the system when you show up with a bottle of "turkey" in one hand, a box of good Cuban cigars in the other, and you find your twin brother in the "expectant pile." (That is, expected to die.) Life changes real quick at that point.

Some people will tell you Ranger School was hard. Some will tell you multiple long-term deployments are hard.

For me, I learned what hard was. Let me tell you, sitting there watching that respirator was the hardest thing I've ever done. Sitting there, wanting to kill somebody — anybody — and there was nothing I could do about it. If my brother's Green Beret buddy, Bill, hadn't been there, I probably would've killed someone.

Thanks, Bill.

When the doctors thought he could survive the trip, we moved Dave to Walter Reed in Washington, D.C. He survived. We're not talking about a first timer here folks.

In 1990, Dave broke everything south of his sternum while in the "Q" course. The doctors told him he would never walk again. He was back to work in six months.

In 1997, he broke his back, again, in a jump accident. Once more, the doctors said he'd never walk. He was skydiving in three months. Three times, he was shot down in an aircraft.

This time, they told me he'd never wake up. On Sept. 7, 2003, Dave came out of the coma.

On Sept. 11, 2003, the president awarded Dave the Purple Heart and the Bronze Star. He doesn't remember it at all. I do. It was the hardest two weeks of my life, but it was just the beginning for Dave. Months of rehabilitation, unable to do things he once loved, unable to do much of anything. But he pushed himself past every limit the therapists set for him.

On Jan. 14, Dave returned to active duty. He'll never be on an "A" or a "B" Team again. He still can't feel the right side of his body. The once proud Green Beret now works in the battalion's civil affairs detachment.

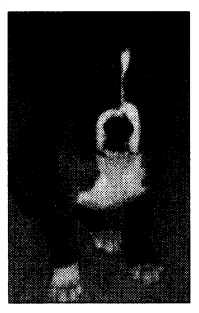
The amazing part is he's still the proud, motivated Soldier he's always been. He's had to sell his Harley, and he'll never skydive again, but he still goes to work every day. I'm sure it's been a longer year for him than it's been for me.

Thanks for letting me share with you fine people. I needed to talk it out on this anniversary. And, Dave, thanks for still being here.

So, do you wanna get Lucky?

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Wanted: Caring individual, married or single, male or female, for important relationship. Must be reliable and love dogs.



No, I'm not looking to replace my husband. I'm trying get Lucky ... adopted.

Lucky is, well, lucky. My neighbor and I were biking on the Riverwalk a few weeks ago, enjoying a sunny Sunday afternoon. Even though the path was bending to the left, something made me look to the right.

That's when I saw the most pitiful looking animal.

It took every ounce of energy she had to walk away from me as I hobbled up to her in bike shoes that weren't made for walking.

But I caught her, since there really wasn't much to catch. I've never seen an animal skinny enough you could put a pencil in the hollows of the ribs. I could count her ribs, every last one of them.

So we gave her water out of the lids of our water bottles, and out of desperation, I tucked in my bike shirt and stowed her inside for the ride home.

She did little for the remainder of the day. She laid on a blanket outside on the grass and ate a scrambled egg, all the while surrounded by most of the neighborhood children and a handful of adults.

The next day, Lucky went to the vet, who decided the 4-pound, 9-week-old puppy was, indeed, lucky.

Two trips to the vet, four weeks and about $150 later, Lucky is thriving. She's 10 pounds of pure puppy. And that's why I'm writing this.

I'm not going to get on a soapbox about people who abandon animals. I'm just going to put in a plug for Lucky.

The pup, affectionately called the "mini-mutt" at my house, just can't stay with us. Our "major mutt," Dixie, is feeling a bit squeezed out.

I'm guessing Lucky is a Boxer and Pit Bull mix, and even with that combination, I'm sure there's someone out there who will be perfect for her. She's cute, she likes to crawl up in your lap, and she's accustomed to other dogs and young children. She's crate trained at night and making pretty good progress with the housebreaking.

If you take her home, she'll love you unconditionally. All I'll make you do is spay her, so more puppies don't wind up in the same condition she was in. You won't believe the "before" photos when you see her "after."

Send me a note at fbbayonet@mindspring.com.

This could be your, and her, lucky day.

Don't get me wrong, but voting isn't a right

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Exercise your right to vote? Voting is a privilege? Wrong.

That's right. Wrong.

Rights and privileges are benefits, advantages … favors. It's true. I looked the words up in the dictionary.

And while being able to cast a vote for the candidates of your choice to represent you is certainly more advantageous than living in a country presided over by a despot-of-the-month, voting isn't just a "perk" because we're Americans.

Voting is every citizen's responsibility. Responsible, as in accountable, answerable, liable. An obligation. Something you do because it's the right thing to do.

If voting was a right, it would be available if and when we wanted, or needed, to take advantage of it.

We all have the right to worship freely, but does everyone you know show up at church every Sunday?

If voting was just a privilege, only "special" people would be allowed to do it. And that wouldn't be right.

Besides, privileges can be earned or given and just as easily taken away. Ask my daughter.

Nope. Voting is more than something we do every few years because we are lucky enough to live in a free country and we can.

Casting an educated vote is every responsible adult American's responsibility.

And for some of us more, um, shall we say "experienced" citizens, here's some extra motivation. Young people are registering to vote in droves thanks to programs like MTV's "Get Out the Vote" campaign.

You really want your tax dollars spent by candidates elected by kids who are voting thanks to MTV?

I didn't think so.

So get out there and vote.

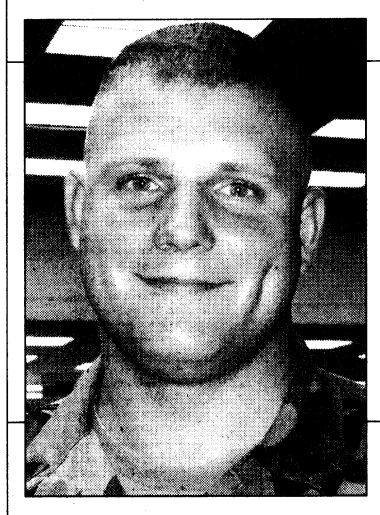
It's not a right; it's the right thing to do.

It's not a privilege; because it's more than a "perk" for being American.

It's a responsibility.

And it's yours.

Mine.



Ours.

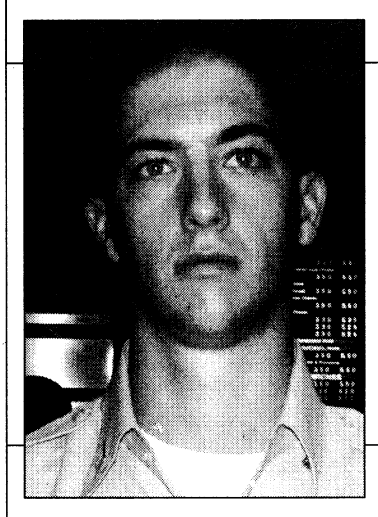
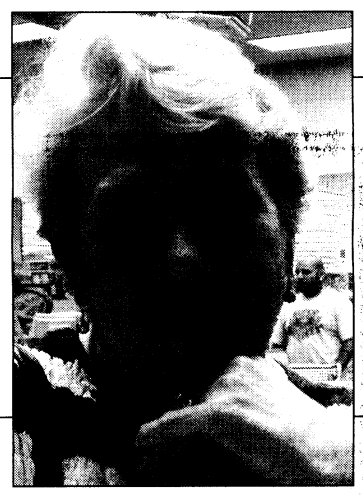
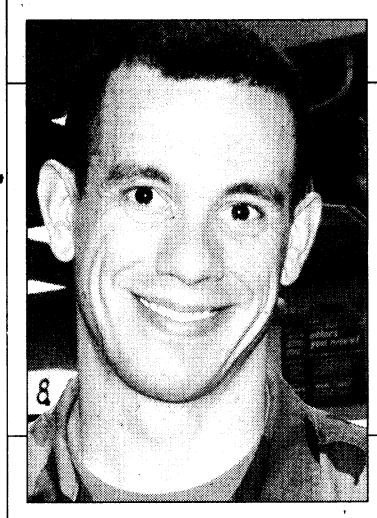
VARIOUS VOICES



What are some ways to deal with loss and grief?



Sgt. Kirk Holcombe, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I turned an extra bedroom into my own room and covered the walls with newspaper clippings and photos from 9-11, and now every time I go in there, I think about it."



Mari Barnett, family member — "You get the support of family, and discussing everything out in the open makes it a little bit easier. You shouldn't forget the lessons you learn from things like September 11."

Pfc. Chris Ham, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment — "I would pray a lot and pray for the best."

Mary Moore, family member — "The way I deal with grief is I pray about it and ask God to help me. He hasn't failed me yet."

Capt. John Boger, MEDDAC — "I would try to get my mind off of it the best I could by doing work, watching movies or playing games."

Officer Candidate Suzanne Bailey, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It's easier for me to handle grief by focusing on the positives in my life. Drawing strength from my faith and the good people in my life makes all tough things endurable."

Benning sergeant major to trade in greens

All things excellent are as difficult as they are rare.

Benedict de Spinoza
16th century philosopher

Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmy Pickering has been pondering that quote since he was in college. And he's been pursuing — and achieving — excellence throughout his more than 24 years in the Army.

Pickering, who spent more than half his career in Ranger units, will trade in his camo stick for chalk. He'll officially retire Jan. 1 and concentrate on finishing his master's degree in education — the second master's degree he's started.

The Pine Bluff, Ark., native had already earned a degree from Hendrix College in Conway, Ark., and was only a thesis short of a master's in English from Baylor University, when he decided to pursue excellence in the military.

"It was 1980 and all you heard was that the Army was a bunch of Category 4 Soldiers who couldn't read and write," Pickering said. "I decided the Army would not get better unless some of us in the middle class got off our butts."

Grad school wasn't what Pickering thought it would be. His instructors, for the most part, weren't motivating and he didn't think they seemed to care. So he joined the Army, only intending to stay his initial, four-year enlistment.

Although he acknowledges the Army isn't for everyone — "it's a lifestyle and a mindset that doesn't appeal to everyone" — he said it's a great place to be.

Spc. David Foley

Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmy Pickering, 11th Infantry Regiment, leads Soldiers through the Main Post obstacle course Thursday morning.

"You can tell every day you've done something important and you'll find out what a team effort it is," he said, "how people support each other and look out for each other and hold each other accountable."

After basic and advanced individual training and Airborne School at Fort Benning, Pickering spent the next seven years at Fort Lewis, Wash., in the 2nd Ranger Battalion, training and leading Soldiers.

Before the 75th Ranger Regiment activated, Pickering said each Ranger battalion ran its own Ranger Indoctrination Progam. He was one of the instructors and said teaching those new Rangers was probably the most fun he had.

He made a combat jump into Grenada with the Rangers he trained, taught at the Army Physical Fitness School, then returned to Fort Benning for eight years with the 3rd Ranger Bn.

Combat patch and star aside, Pickering's a man who's devoted to his wife and fiercely loyal to whatever unit he's assigned to.

And while he's enrolled in three classes at Columbus State University this semester, he's "trying to keep everything moving along" in the 11th Infantry Regiment until his successor takes over.

Pickering has been the top NCO in the 11th since November 2002, monitoring and mentoring a large chunk of Fort Benning's instructors.

The 11th Regiment includes Airborne, Jumpmaster and Pathfinder schools and the combatives course, as well as the Infantry Basic and Captains' Career courses, the Officer Candidate School and the International Student Training Detachment.

"What's neat about this job," Pickering said, "is that everything we do is a life-transforming event for these students. Airborne, OBC, OCS — the people who graduate are not the same people who started."

Pickering briefs the NCOs as they arrive in the regiment and gives each of them a single sheet of paper — on one side, his welcome letter, the other, his thoughts on professionalism. Pickering's a Soldier who takes his job seriously.

"I tell them, 'You will make a difference in the Army,'" he said. "Their affect on the Army will touch thousands of Soldiers."

Pickering believes it's an awesome responsibility to be an instructor and fulfilling to see the end result of the training they receive.

At the end of 24 years, Pickering said he's well-satisfied with the way his career has worked out, but regrets the fact that his current position doesn't allow as much interaction with the younger Soldiers as he'd like in order to have a direct influence on what they are doing and thinking.

He's been rigorous about holding people to standard, and said he's going to miss being in such a highly professional organization as he heads out to teach English in Columbus.

"Education is a profession, but I'll be surprised if it has the same level of dedication," Pickering said. "The Army's about being dedicated to something beyond self-interest and the readiness of self-sacrifice to accomplish that goal. Education is an extremely important part of what we do and I look forward to being able to contribute more to keep our country moving in the direction it's going."

Pickering will continue to strive for excellence in his new profession, saying it, too, will be hard to achieve, but well worth the effort.

Platoon tests Land Warrior at Fort Benning

EXFOR demonstrates equipment

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

One of the 29th Infantry Regiment's EXFOR Platoons is wrapping up the final week of a seven-week experiment that will help Army officials determine the effectiveness of the experimental Land Warrior equipment.

Land Warrior is a modular system consisting of computers, global positioning systems, radios, lasers, daylight cameras and thermal weapons sights networked together.

The system was designed to give Soldiers an advantage on the battlefield by increasing their situational awareness.

The system features a heads up display and wireless communication function that keeps all the Soldiers on the battlefield connected through digital and analog technology.

It can also relay information to all echelon for operational reports.

Because the actual equipment is not yet available, the experiment is taking place in a virtual reality simulator run by the Soldier Battle Lab, and the platoon is fighting between two flanks of virtual Soldiers to simulate company and battalion movements.

Lt. Col. Larry Larimer, Training and Doctorate Command director for the Land Warrior analysis of alternatives, said the experiment tests the Soldiers' ability to use the system for situational awareness, direct and indirect fire, reacting to orders, and planning and processing orders in field and urban environments.

"We are trying to see if Land Warrior helps us in areas that we could use some help in," Larimer said.

"The simulation has worked well," he said. "The information we are getting will be used to help inform the system designers of gaps in small unit capabilities."

One of the major benefits of testing the equipment on a virtual battlefield is the economic aspect, said Maj. Will Rodriguez, Simulations Operations officer, Soldier Battle Lab.

"By using (virtual reality), we can can run numerous systems, but in 'real life,' we would have to cut down the number of vehicles and weapons," he said. "An artillery round, for example, is really expensive.

"But I can fire 15 rounds during each scenario and all we are using is electricity. We don't need to buy bullets, batteries, chow or fuel," he said.

While the experiment is still underway, some of the Soldiers who are testing the equipment have already developed opinions about its effectiveness.

"This equipment is much better (than what we have). You can do a leader recon without sending anyone out anywhere," said Staff Sgt. Donald Washington, a EXFOR Platoon squad leader. "You can just click on the Land Warrior and see exactly where everyone is."

You can even conduct an operation order from 100 miles away," he said.

Washington said his biggest concern about the system is how much it will weigh when the Soldiers are actually carrying it in the field.

"I feel privileged to be fielding this system," he said. "This is good training too, especially on MOUT with scopes that let you look around corners."

Coalition passes control of airport to Iraqis

Spc. Crista M. Birmingham
Army News Service

BAGHDAD INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, Iraq — The Bradley armored fighting vehicles rolled away from the gate Aug. 25, signifying a final transition of control from Coalition forces to the government of Iraq at Baghdad International Airport.

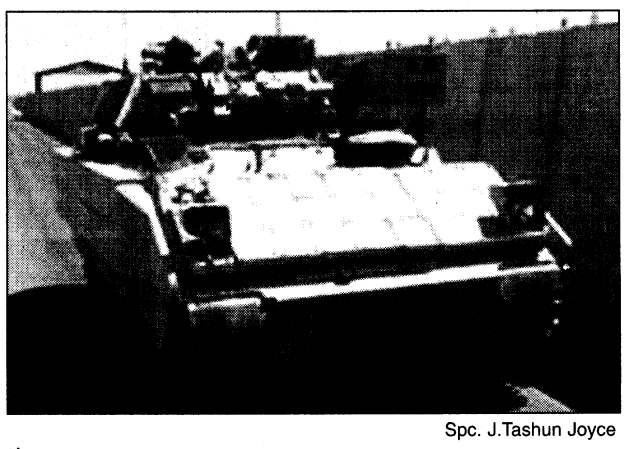
"Once the tanks roll away, the airport belongs to the government of Iraq," said Col. Chuck Betack, chief of maneuvers, Multi-National Force – Iraq, and formerly the Training and Doctrine Command System Manager-Stryker/Bradley on Fort Benning.

Betack was on site to witness the final changeover.

"The transfer is done. The airport now belongs to the Iraqi government, with the exception of the small pieces of the airport they are allowing us to occupy."

The three-month process started June 15, with a turnover of the air traffic control tower, and checkpoints, to a final exchange of the main gate. Prior to the exchange, the airport was controlled completely by the Coalition, Betack said, and therefore, very limited in commercial traffic. The only flights at BIAP were military and charter.

"This turnover is the first step towards re-establishing an air international hub back into Iraq," Betack said.



"Now the airport belongs to the Iraqis, so you'll see more forms of transportation, with the Iraqis trying to set up their own commercial airlines at this time, so it will be a great morale boost for the entire economy, as well as for its people."

"This allows them to become a prominent nation once again, to get back into the proper levels of commerce, trade, and international travel," he said.

Gate security is being run by Global Security, an Iraqi-hired company that does not train with the Coalition.

"The training of Global Security employees is separate by that organization," Betack said. "There was a security assessment made however, and all security recommendations have been addressed."

Deployed military need not worry about getting home, officials said, since a small portion of the airport has been held for military flights.

Spc. J.Tashun Joyce

A Bradley rolls out of the main entrance to Baghdad International Airport, marking the official turnover of force protection duties to Global Security forces.

"We have an agreement with the Ministry of Transportation to allow us to occupy a portion of the airport to allow us to bring in military aircraft," Betack said.

"We have a security perimeter around the airport by coalition forces, and the Iraqi government has hired a private security firm to put checkpoints and security on the airport."

Pfc. Brian Thompson, Scout Platoon, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, pushes fellow scout Spc. Lucas Moore off during combatives training Wednesday.

Soldiers spur into action in field, home

Scouts pave way for battles, leave unnoticed

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Before a battle, there are those who are sent out to measure up the enemy, see what the enemy territory is like and what some of the possible dangers may be.

"We are the eyes and the ears of our commanders," said Sgt. Patrick Smith, a squad leader with Scout Platoon, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment. "We're the jack of all trades and the masters of none. We're scouts."

Patrick became a scout after 16 weeks of one station unit training at Fort Knox, Ky.

"We learned to see what others miss — how to pay attention to detail," said Spc. Damon Hutton. "Our object is to get in and get out without being noticed."

Hutton, a native of Rapid City, N.D., joined the Army two years ago after working "24 hours a day, seven days a week" to try and make a living as a flight instructor.

"I did research before I chose to be a scout," he said. "I took into consideration two things. One, I didn't want a desk job — I like being outdoors. And two, I wanted to be able to work with a small team of people."

Scout teams can go into a mission with as little as two men, said Staff Sgt. Andrew Sagas, Scout Platoon section leader.

> "We're the jack of all trades and the masters of none. We're scouts."
> Sgt. Patrick Smith
> Scout Platoon, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

"The size of the teams we send out depends on the type of mission," Sagas said.

"For the most part, teams consist of two vehicles with three scouts each," he said.

Scouts movements are done in either a humvee or a Bradley. The scouts at 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., have humvees.

"To survive, we have to rely on our team," Hutton said. "I know that chances of survivability are greater if we rely on each other."

Camaraderie is not the only thing that holds these guys together.

"We take more pride in our job than most. We take pride in the history of the cavalry," Sagas said.

One piece of that history is the scout tradition of wearing spurs, and even though there are different stories as to why spurs are so important, every scout wants to earn his pair.

Spur rides — the tests that allow scouts to earn their spurs — are what all scouts look forward to, said Staff Sgt. Clinton Gibson, a Soldier with Scout Platoon.

The trick is, you have to be nominated by another spur-owning scout to participate in a Spur ride.

Spur rides can last from 24 hours to 72 hours and test the scouts on their scouting and soldiering skills.

They consist of a day — or three — of nothing but tactical, physical, mental and technical events.

"You may be given a box with eight weapon parts and a glow stick inside a pitch black tent and have to put a weapon together," Smith said.

Once the scout completes all the events, he will be spurred by his sponsor, sometimes on top of a pile of manure.

From then on, scouts will wear their spurs every chance they get.

Frances blows in

Hurricane Frances was downgraded to a tropical depression by the time it blew through post Monday. The winds were still strong enough to topple trees, like the one that fell in this yard along Lumpkin Road.

List: Grows by four places

• G&C Boom Boom Room, 2102 Cusseta Road.

Memory Lane was taken off the list and is open to patronization by Soldiers.

The Ponderosa Motel, G&C Boom Boom Room and the four establishments named last week, are off-limits on a temporary basis, Finnegan said.

These businesses will have the opportunity to address concerns brought to their attention by the board and change practices deemed to "adversely affect the health, safety, morals, welfare, morale and discipline" of Soldiers, according to Army Regulation 190-24, Access to Off-Post Businesses.

"We are asking these businesses to clean up and become places that aren't a threat to our Soldiers' health and welfare," said garrison manager Chuck Walls.

"Public opinion is something we heed," he said, "but when you are dealing with some of these establishments based on facts from law enforcement and other agencies that show them to be dangerous or unethical, that is a responsibility we can't shirk."

"This is for the protection of Soldiers, to keep them from putting themselves in an environment where they can get into trouble and to keep them from becoming victims," Finnegan said.

"And it's not a voluntary participation."

Military police and tricommunity law enforcement personnel have conducted sweeps of off-limits establishments.

They will continue that mission to ensure the policy is enforced, he said.

Those who violate the policy are detained and turned over to their commands for appropriate Uniform Code of Military Justice action, Finnegan said.

Businesses placed on the board's off-limits list are offered every opportunity to correct the deficiencies, Walls said, and when they have satisfied the board that conditions have changed, they are removed, like Memory Lane.

"When you are faced with overwhelming evidence, you have to take action," Walls said. "And while it may be unpopular, it's the right thing to do."

Iraqis: Make post history

we don't have that problem. We are truly free."

Both of the officers said they have many things they want to learn while attending the course, including ways to maintain security in their country.

One of the many differences between Iraq and America is the level of security, Alousee said.

"The U.S. is safer, not like Iraq," he said. "We have problems with security in Iraq."

Alousee said it is very difficult to train soldiers in Iraq because of the lack of security.

He said they need a lot of soldiers outside of the training areas to ensure safety, and they have a very short training cycle, which compounds the difficulty — something he hopes ICCC will help him overcome.

While the school focuses on military training, it also fosters relationships that can pay off in the future.

Aziz is from Northern Iraq and served in the Kurdish army alongside coalition forces during the beginning of Operation Iraqi Freedom, which put him and Alousee on different sides.

Aziz joined the new Iraqi army after Saddam was removed from power and said he is glad to be a part of his country's transition and will use the knowledge he gains at Fort Benning to improve his country.

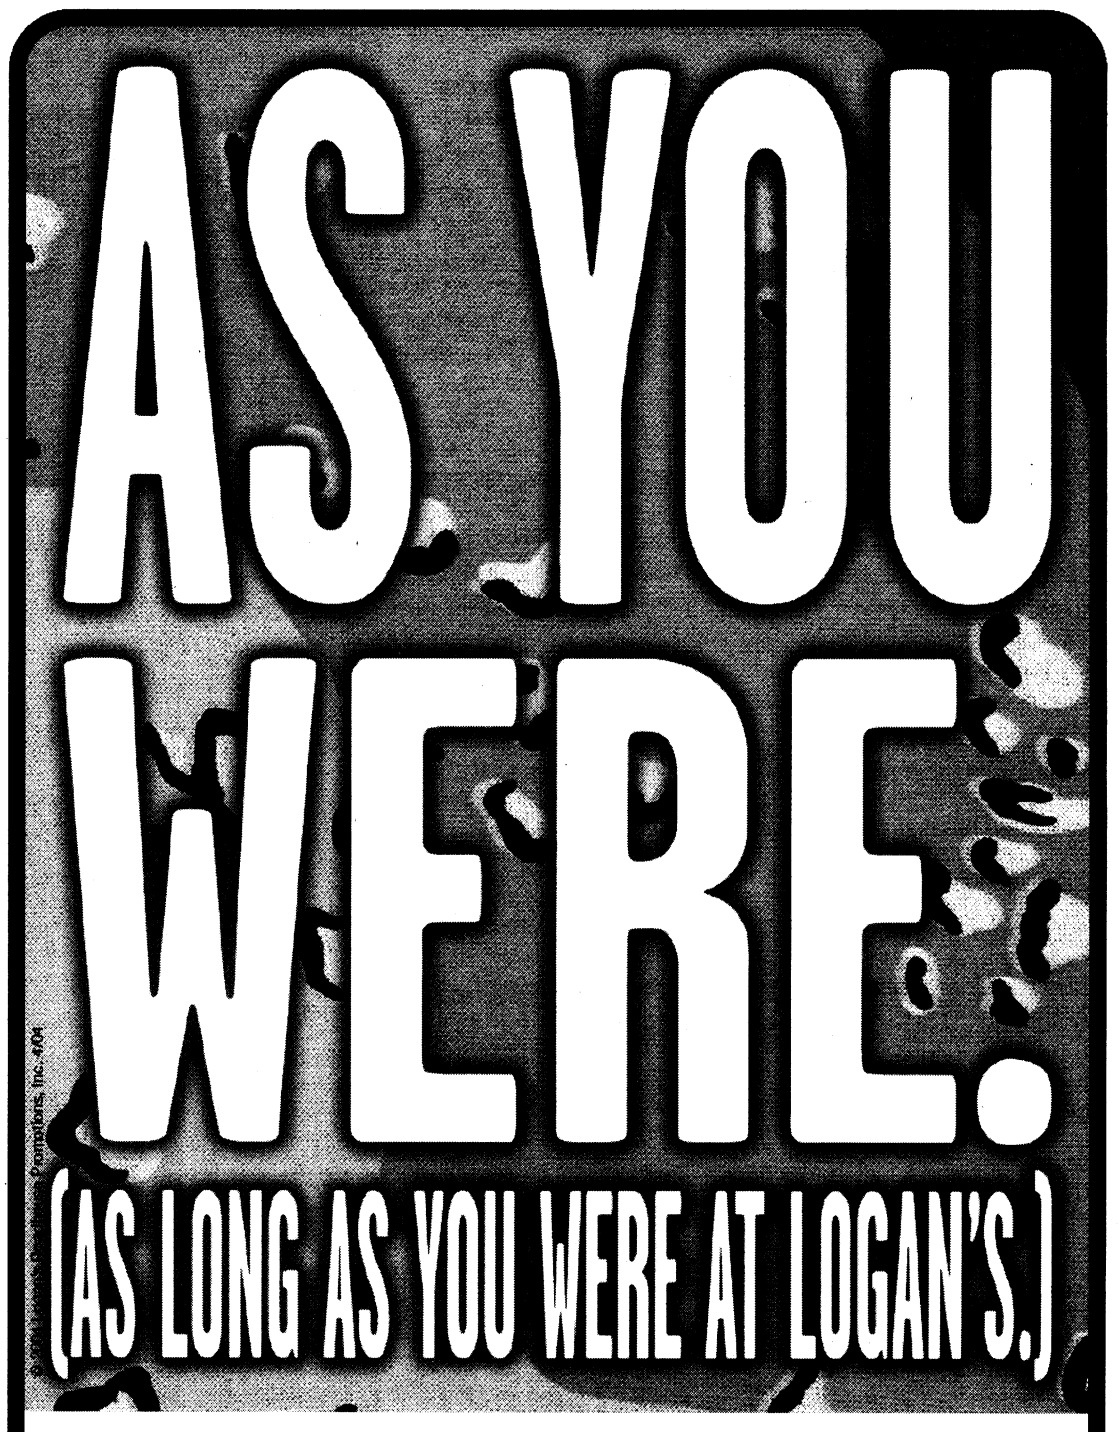
"If we want Iraq to be good, we need to work together ... like a team," Aziz said.

Alousee agreed.

"In the past, Kurdish and Arabic people didn't work together," Alousee said. "But now, (Aziz) is my friend and we work together side-by-side. I can trust him and he can trust me."

That trust being something that is very important in a combat environment, he said.

Both Iraqi soldiers said their country is finally on the right track and believe they will have a solid foundation within the next five to six years to be productive members of the global system. With only a few soldiers from select countries attending the class, the International Student Training Detachment's efforts may seem like a drop in the bucket in the grand scheme of things, but Capt. Guillermo Santiago, detachment commander, said he has seen the benefits of the program on a global scale.



Santiago said one of the unique relationships built at the ISTD was the case of a Pakistani captain and an Indian major.

The Pakistani had finished the course and was carrying his bags out to the van when the Indian picked up the Pakistani's largest suitcase and carried it for him.

As the two passed by Santiago, the Indian said, "You should take a picture because you don't get to see an Indian major carry a Pakistani captain's luggage every day."

"These are people from countries that are constantly shooting at each other, and now they are friends," Santiago said.

"This (program) takes them out of their 'habitat' and puts them in a situation where they have to build better relationships," Santiago said. "They get to come and see how we do business and how Americans live. And the relationships they build can make a big difference in the future. This is the future leadership of these countries and the relationships they build could literally mean the difference between war and peace."

New French LNO settles in

Corsican says U.S., France not so different after all

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

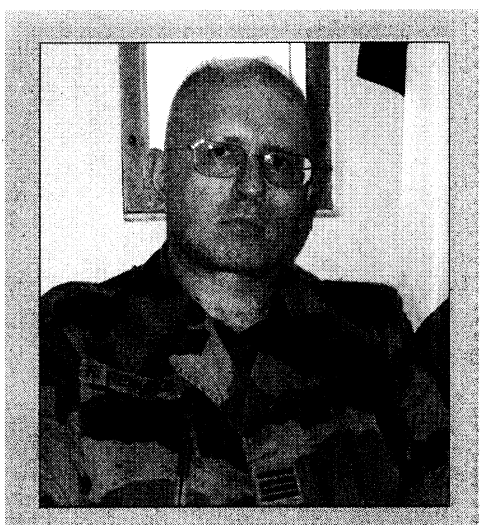
With 23 years of active-duty service with the French army, multiple commands and a strong background in instruction and logistics, one would think that Corsica native Maj. René Renucci knows the ins and outs of war like he knows the back of his hand.

But the 44-year-old mechanized infantry officer and veteran of the Balkans and Desert Storm looks on his new position as the French liaison officer with the wisdom of experience and the open mind of a leader who has seen fault in complacency.

"Whatever some people may think or believe," Renucci said, "France and America are doing joint operations now and will in the future. Interoperability is so important. Regardless of the difference in size, capabilities and equipment, we have to be able to work together as we did in Haiti, the Balkans and Afghanistan."

His mission during the next three years is to focus on interoperability between American and French forces, a combining and exchanging of tactics and procedures.

"Sometimes, a very small detail can destroy what we thought was functional interoperability," Renucci said. "But even as I learn from American strengths in planning, Brigadier General Freakley has asked (the foreign liaison officers) to take an active role and teach American infantry officers our own tactics and techniques."



He said he is excited to have this opportunity for military and cultural exchange.

Renucci said that, although relations between the two countries have had their ups and downs, he believes the French and Americans are not so different in their beliefs as some might believe.

"This is a great opportunity for me," Renucci said. "America is not as so many people say it is. To some extent, the trans-Atlantic gap is irrelevant. Despite superficial differences, life is very much the same here as it is in Europe. We read the same books, watch the same movies and enjoy many of the same hobbies.

"If we can enjoy the same cultural products, it means our brains are wired essentially the same," he said. "I would go as far as to say that me coming here is much like a Texan visiting New England."

And reinforcing his "it's a small world" outlook, the new French representative looks forward to taking up his lifelong hobbies of hiking and deer and boar hunting in the local area as soon as possible.

The 13th Corps Support Battalion recently returned from the Joint Readiness Training Center in Fort Polk, La.

The 13th CSB provides combat service support to non-divisional units on an area basis.

"The battalion is responsible for providing logistical support to its customer units," said Maj. Marc Thoreson, 13th CSB executive officer.

In wartime, this translates in the issue of rations, water, bulk fuel, general supplies, barrier material, ammunition and repair parts, as well as providing maintenance and transportation support to units operating or passing through the battalion's assigned area.

At Fort Benning, the 13th CSB has five garrison companies that support 14 customer units assigned primarily to the 36th Engineer Group and the 14th Combat Support Hospital, Thoreson said.

The five garrison companies are the 598th Maintenance Company, the 104th Transportation Company, the 608th Ordnance Company, the 63rd Engineer Company and Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment.

"When deployed, the organizational structure of the CSB changes since we support on an area basis," Thoreson said. "We support whatever unit is present in our area. We often gain some units and lose some units to another CSB in order to best support the customer base present in our assigned area of operations."

All of the companies that fall under the 13th CSB have been deployed in support of Operations Iraqi Freedom and Enduring Freedom, with the 608th Ordnance Company redeploying last in April.

However, some time between November and January, the HHD, the 598th Maintenance Co., and the 233rd Heavy Equipment Transport Platoon will deploy once again in support of OIF III, Thoreson said.

In preparation for the upcoming deployments, 300-plus Soldiers deployed for a 30-day mission rehearsal exercise at JRTC.

JRTC is one of three combat training centers in the Army that provide training resources to units so they can train under the conditions that they will face in a theater of operations.

"It's a step above home-station training," Thoreson said.

When the units arrived at Fort Polk, there was nothing but an empty strip of land for them to set up a tactical operations center. Thoreson said it took three days to set up the Forward Operating Base.

During the training exercise, Soldiers were faced with the challenges of operating amidst Arabic-speaking local nationals, relief workers and other governmental agencies to replicate the environment the Soldier will face in theater. There's also an opposing force that also represents the current threat in theater.

"As part of the exercise, Soldiers had to react to roadside improvised explosive devices, mortar fire, sniper fire, car bombs, civilian riots, and displaced civilians while conducting their daily support missions, whether on the FOB or out on convoys, " Thoreson said.

"The exercise helped the Soldiers gain confidence in their ability to react to unexpected situations," he said.

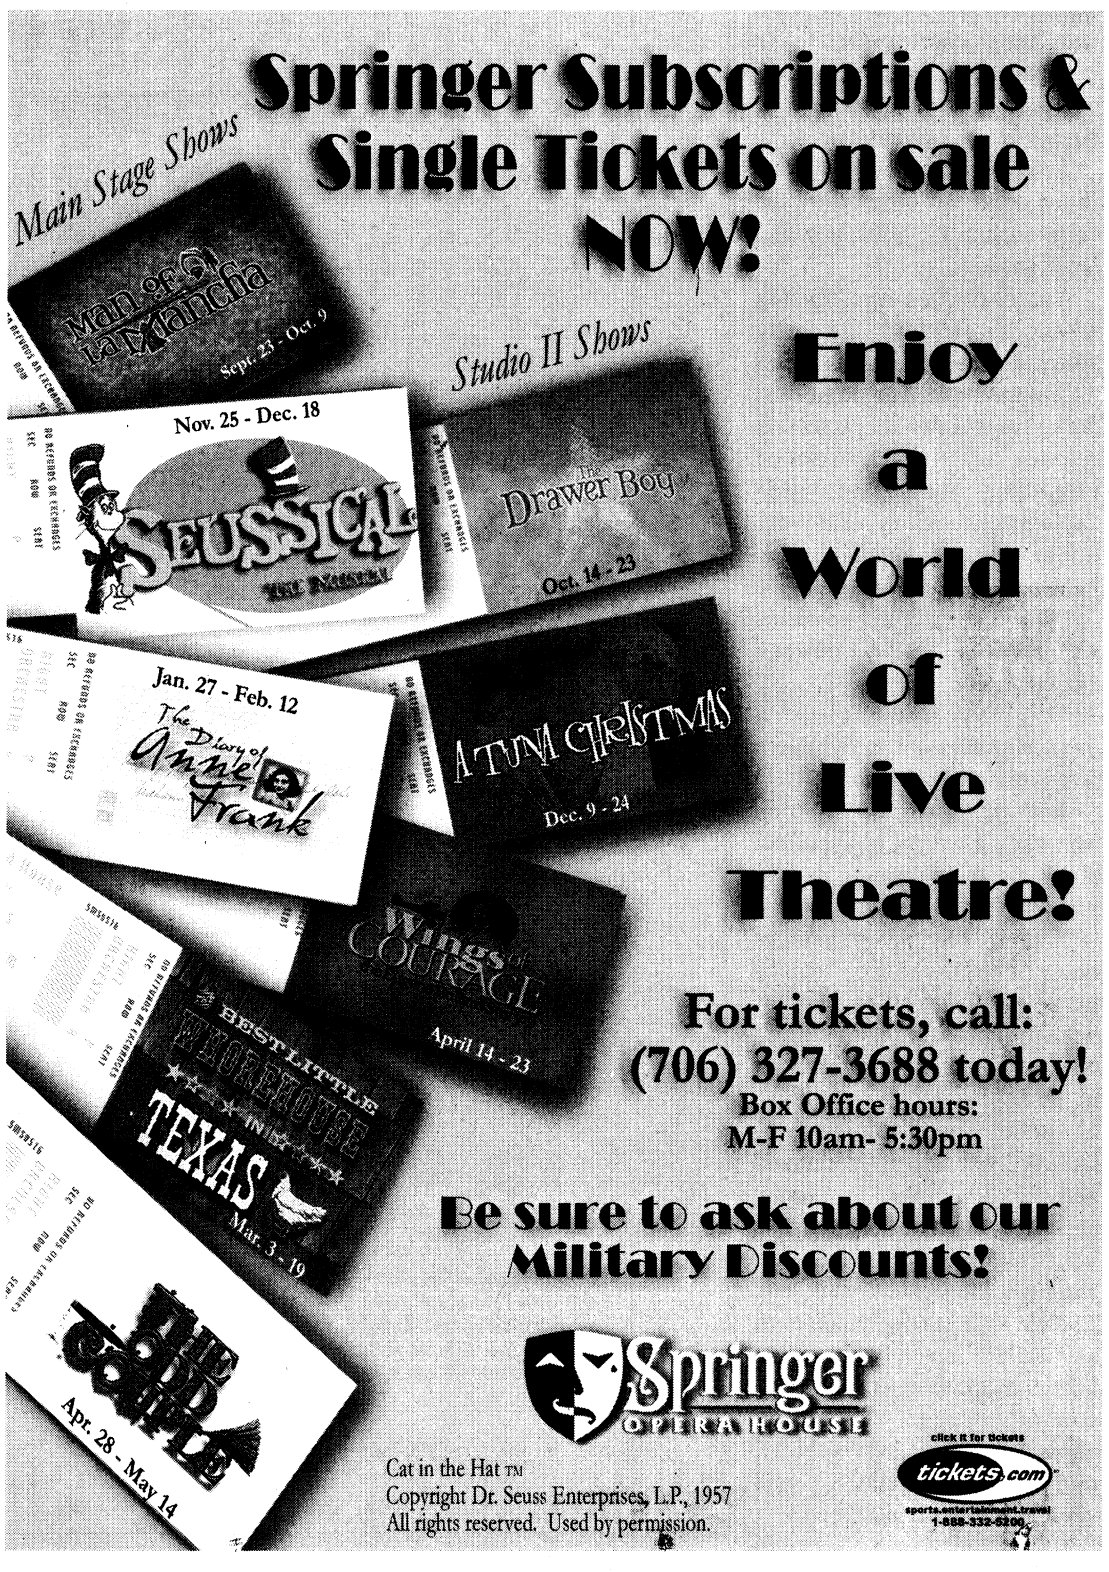
This exercise, however, was not a regular rotation, but a mission rehearsal exercise.

"In addition to supporting 3rd Brigade Combat Team, the 13th CSB units earmarked to deploy to OIF were the primary focus," Thoreson said.

The units are scheduled to deploy as early as November and as late as January.

Sgt. Monica Nowell is a supply NCO for Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment. While she was at JRTC, she was assigned as the NCOIC of a gun truck.

"I'd pull a team of Soldiers together and we'd pull security as we escorted convoys," Nowell said.



"Combat convoy operations are a critical part of our mission, as our support mission's main purpose is to move supplies from one location to another," Thoreson said.

Nowell said the hardest part of the training was going out on mission not knowing what to expect.

Pfc. Michael Towner, another HHD Soldier, was a driver and a gunner with Nowell at JRTC and said the exercise is a good way to prepare Soldiers for what they are going to face in deployments.

"The situational training exercises were the best and will help us while deployed," Towner said.

Lab Day could better Army

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Fort Benning's U.S. Army Infantry Center hosted the second annual Lab Day Aug. 18. More than 130 representatives from laboratories across the United States came to Fort Benning for the event.

"The purpose of Lab Day is to get together with all the Army Research Labs to discuss possible solutions to identified capability gaps," said Lt. Col. Dan Evans, chief of Concept Analysis and Integration Division with the Directorate of Combat Development.

Capability gaps are problems in the current technology, which need to be corrected to support the Soldiers in the field.

This year, Army Research Labs received a list of 40 capability gaps a month before Lab Day to review and come up with ideas for, said Guy Nadeau, science and technology objective manager for the Infantry Center.

Lab reps briefed their ideas during Lab Day.

"If they were good, then we told them to continue with the development in hopes of the project being fielded," he said.

Nadeau said this year's event was purposely held before the beginning of fiscal 2005 to allow labs to get funding for approved System and Technology Objectives — projects being developed by any research labs for Soldiers.

"It's a good opportunity for us to sit down with the lab representatives and discuss their ideas and say 'yes, that's a good thing' or 'no, that's a bad thing,'" Evans said.

"We try to get together with them very early in the development cycle to ensure the projects they are trying to get funded meets the Army's need, and therefore, are worth further development."

One of the projects discussed during this year's Lab Day is the body armor improvement.

"The body armor that we have in the vests works great, but it's heavy," Evans said.

Soldiers are being wounded in the areas not covered by the vests, such as the arms, legs and head, he said.

The dilemma now is finding a way to improve the body armor without making it heavier.

Another important topic was the active and passive protection against rocket-propelled grenades and improvised explosive devices for the Stryker, the Bradley and humvees, Evans said.

"One of the biggest problems we have is Soldier power," Nadeau said.

"It's pretty hard to sustain a brigade or division in fighting a five-day fight on batteries."

Batteries are not only becoming a weight problem but also a money and supply problem for the Army, he said.

Among the power sources being considered to replace batteries is fuel cell technology, something both Evans and Nadeau said was very important in the field.

Other topics of concern included the battle command network, blunt trauma, enhanced night vision goggles, lightweight laser designators and nightline sights, Evans said.

"We look out for Soldiers of all MOSs, so anything that affects them, such as command, control and computer equipment, survivability, mobility, lethality and sustainment were discussed."

Class brings agencies online with antiterrorism

Representatives learn to evaluate specific threats

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

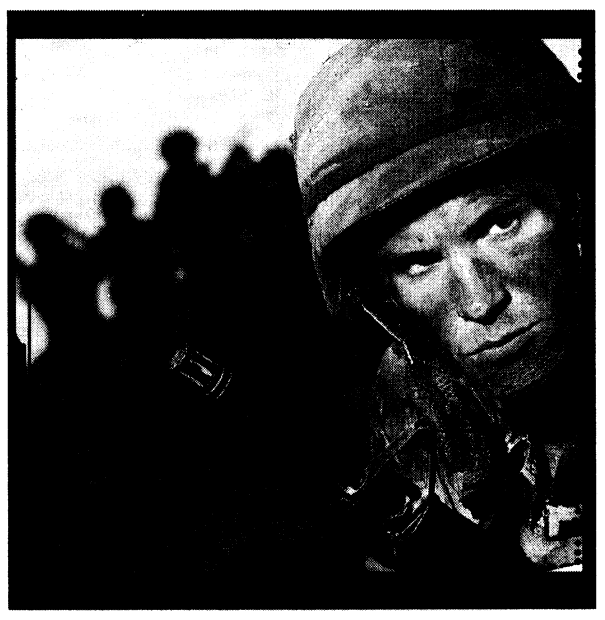
A recent security engineer class will protect Fort Benning in the long run.

The class was taught Aug. 16 to 20 to familiarize key personnel involved in Fort Benning's security and construction projects with the regulations and guidance regarding antiterrorism measures in design and construction of post facilities and the modification of existing structures to meet Department of Defense standards.

Representatives from the installation operations center, Directorate of Public Works, Martin Army Community Hospital, the Directorate of Logistics, Shaw Infrastructure Inc., engineers and first responders attended the class.

Class attendee Ramiro MontesDeOca, with DPW, said the information covered by U.S. Army Corps of Engineers instructors Eric Johansen and Daniel Kurmel was important because it allows agencies to objectively address specific threats and plan against the possibility of attack.

"The real value of the course is that it was taught so that it allows for the team development of force protection designs," MontesDeOca said. "Force protection design is not a single-source issue. It is the combination of requirements and available resources to achieve a safe and compliant design."



Some of the factors that contribute to the safe and compliant design of new structures and the remodeling of existing structures are blast resistant designs and materials, stand-off space between buildings, proper asset placement inside the building versus outside the building and the strategical placement of mail rooms, loading docks and other access areas, said class attendee Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Price, installation operations center antiterrorism and force protection NCOIC.

New construction poses the smallest problem because all the new DoD mandated antiterrorism standards can be written into blueprints. The majority of problems and funding expenditures, Price said, come in the retrofitting of older structures.

The existing structures must have plate glass replaced with laminated glass or covered with fragmentation resistance film. Those modifications come at a cost, but are essential because 85 percent of all bomb-related fatalities are attributed to flying shards of glass.

While existing structures can rarely be moved to achieve the proper safe distance from parking lots and other structures, there are alternative measures, like bollards, which barricade routes that would allow a vehicle borne explosive close proximity to a target.

"The class was very informative," Price said. "A lot of information was presented and there were sample problems requiring students to program security upgrades including building design, layout and projected budget increases.

Detachment works as eyes, ears of Marines

They are the few, the proud, the Marines. The slogan seems a good fit for the Marines at Fort Benning. They are few in number — only about 40 on post at any given time — and they are proud, serving as instructors and students at many of the schools located on Fort Benning.

The first part of their mission is to work as the administrative arm for Marines and Sailors stationed at Fort Benning.

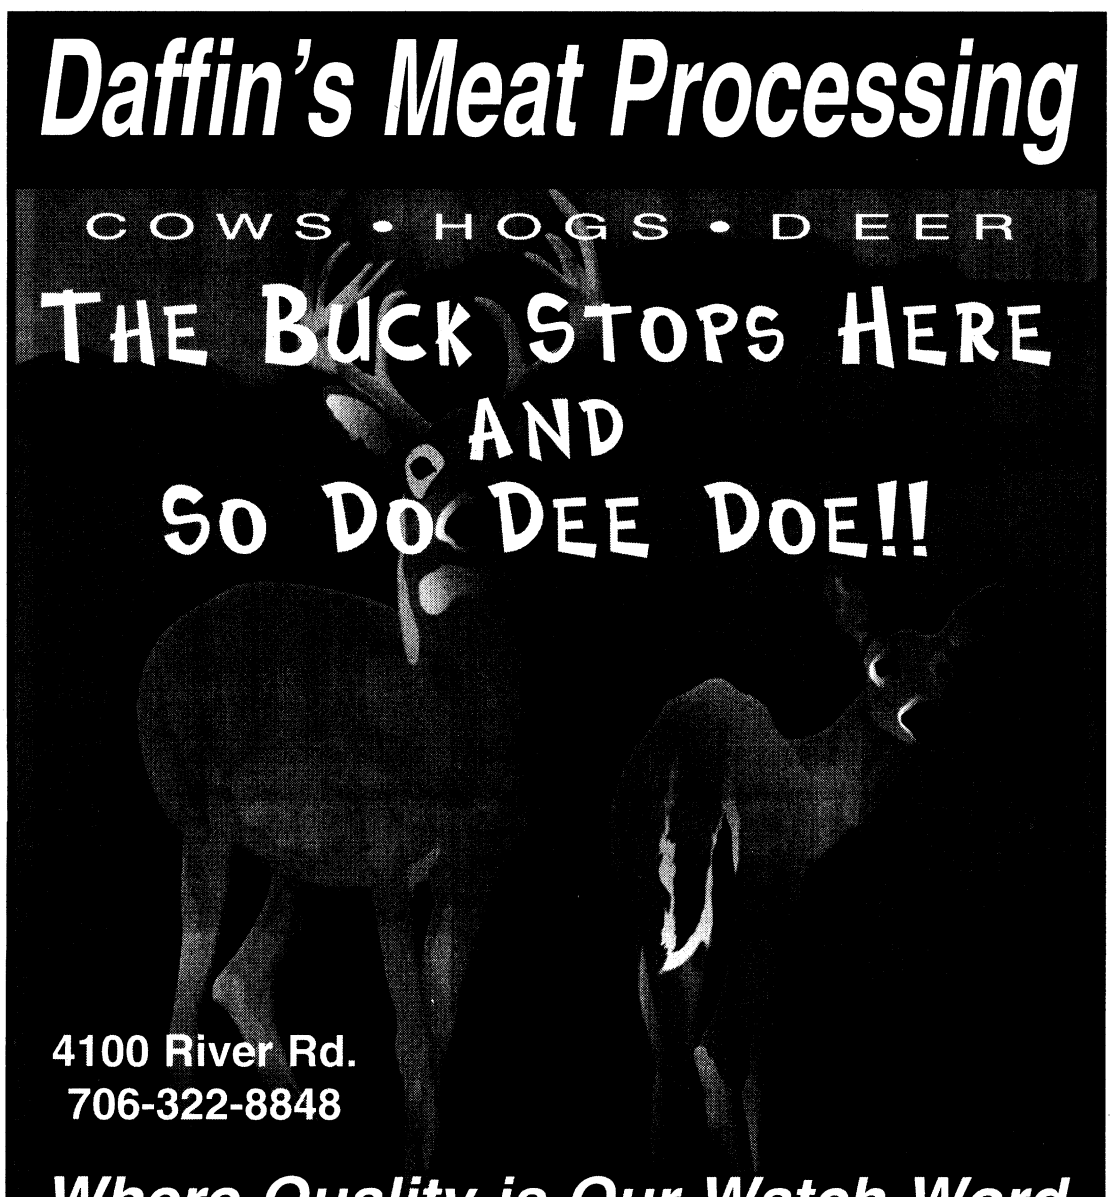
The permanent party Marines include one Infantry Captains Career Course instructor, four airborne and two Ranger instructors, one liaison with the 75th Ranger Regiment, a section chief with Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, and five Marines serving with the Marine Corps Detachment.

"Above all, we are here to make sure Marines and Sailors know what to do and make sure they do not embarrass the naval service," said Capt. Michael Reinke, Fort Benning Marine Detachment. "We take care of all their administrative needs, like pay, leave, changes of address, births, deaths, marriages, orders coming and going, things like that."

One of the Marine instructors working alongside Soldiers is Sgt. Duke Duplessis, an Airborne instructor.

"This gives me an opportunity to mentor Marines," Duplessis said. "We get to build interservice camaraderie and see what other services are strong in and bring that back to our service, or they can take from the Marines and give to their service."

Duplessis admits to being a little out of place at Fort Benning, but says it only makes him stronger.



"It requires that I be that much more professional and on top of my game," he said.

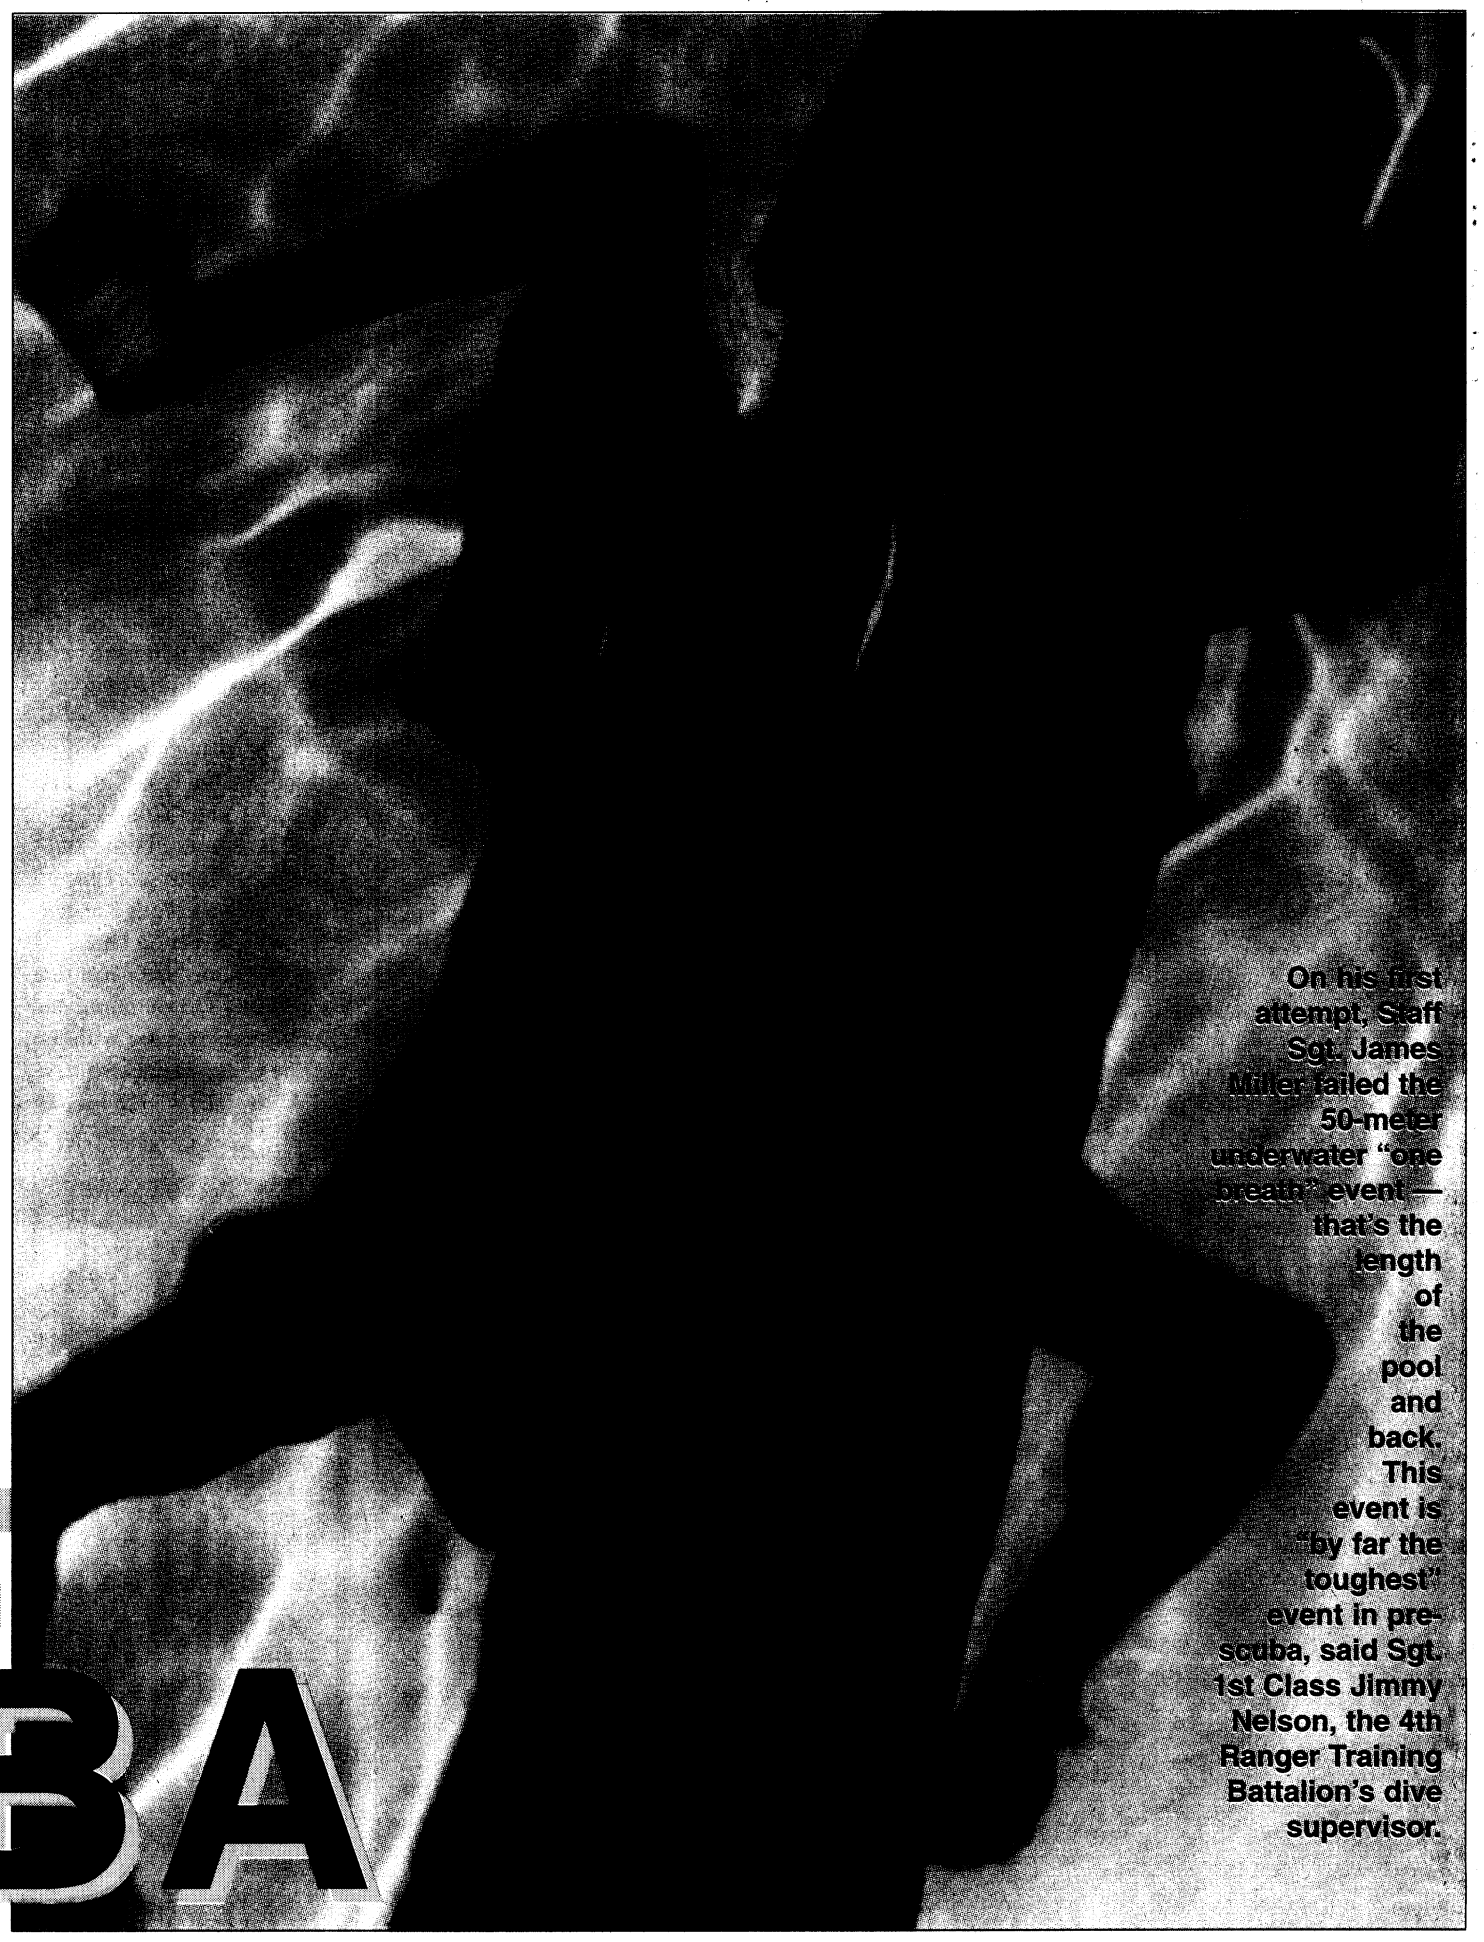
The second part of the Marines' mission is to serve as representatives to the U.S. Army Infantry Center.

"Basically, much of what the Army (Combat Development) does is look at computer systems and laser systems and then develops the capabilities to fight future wars, primarily weapons development," Reinke said.

"A lot of the time, they come through our office to see what the Marines are doing. The colonel likes to call us 'the eyes and ears' for the Marine Corps. We are the middle man," he said.



Sgt. 1st Class Jimmy Nelson, dive supervisor, gives instructions to pre-scuba students Wednesday at the Briant Wells pool.

On his first attempt, Staff Sgt. James Miller failed the 50-meter underwater "one breath" event — that's the length of the pool and back. This event is "by far the toughest" event in pre-scuba, said Sgt. 1st Class Jimmy Nelson, the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's dive supervisor.

PRE-PRE-SCUBA

"It's mind over matter," said Sgt. 1st Class Jimmy Nelson, dive supervisor for the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's dive team. But what if the "mind" is submerged in 11 feet of liquid "matter?"

"It's tough — there's no doubt about it. That's why we have such a high failure rate," said Nelson, referring to the battalion's pre-scuba course, or the Pre-Combat Divers Qualifications Course, a prerequisite for the main course in Key West, Fla.

Only five students passed the battalion's last pre-scuba. That's five out of 23. And nearly 40 percent of those who make it to Key West get sent home without their "bubble," the scuba insignia worn by less than 1 percent of the Army.

"I think one of the biggest reasons for failure is they don't know what to expect," Nelson said. "That's why we do this."

"This" is pre-pre-scuba, a refresher course for those who've had their bubble burst, but are ready to try again. And for first-timers, it's a "techniques training," Nelson said.

"We spend three days getting them ready for pre-scuba," he said. "Then three weeks in pre-scuba getting them ready for the real thing."

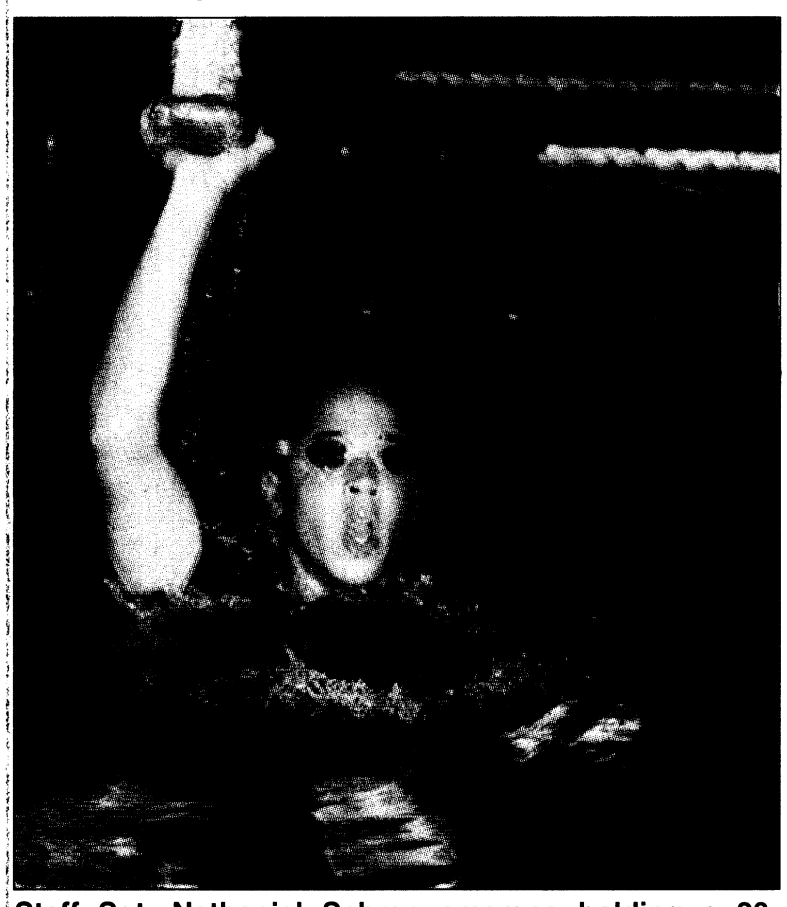
The real thing is a four-week course offered five times a year. It's intensive and strenuous, Nelson said, designed to test potential divers on their mastery of 10 skills, including a 50-meter underwater "one breath" swim, dive-and-retrieve tasks, and a weighted water-tread exercise.

To prepare for scuba school, Nelson puts his students through a rigorous regimen daily, beginning with PT at 5:30 a.m. and ending with at least four hours in the pool each evening. Sandwiched somewhere in there is a surface swim at Victory Pond, for a total of 3,000 meters per day.

"My goal is to get as many divers as possible, not to run the hardest pre-scuba," Nelson said.

The 4th RTBn. has 12 dive slots, but only half of those are filled right now, and three Soldiers will be leaving soon.

"There's a real need. There's a real need everywhere," Nelson said.



He's hoping the challenge of scuba will appeal to more Soldiers — that and the $215 extra in each month's paycheck.

But it's not the money that's drawn Staff Sgt. James Parke back for a second go at pre-scuba.

"It's the bubble. Less than one percent of the Army has it," he said. "And I want it."

Staff Sgt. James Miller tries to clear his ears after emerging from the deep end of the pool during the 50-meter event. He was instructed to submerge again to alleviate the pain. It worked.

Staff Sgt. Nathaniel Sebren emerges holding a 20-pound weight. He held the weight aloft long enough to state his name and social security number before returning it to the floor of the pool.

"I feel fine," says Staff Sgt. Nathaniel Sebren, after completing an event. A student must make eye contact with the instructor to signify he's OK after each event.

Schools have yet to complete UAV mission

First level includes aerial vehicles

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

For the second year in a row, Fort Benning hosted the International Aerial Robotics Competition. Though many teams competed in the four-level competition, no one has yet to complete the mission.

Mike Kennedy, of the Mobility Branch of the Soldier Battle Lab, said an invitation was extended to "any school in the world" to participate in the event, which was held at the McKenna MOUT site.

This year, 10 teams from colleges and universities in Canada and the U.S. entered machines in the competition. Georgia Tech, last year's leader, didn't participate this time.

The University of Arizona was the leader, successfully completing levels one and two.

The other nine schools only attempted level one.

"This is the first year in fourteen years that all participating schools actually flew an unmanned aerial vehicle in the competition," said Mike Barnes, also with the Mobility Branch.

To win the competition, participants must accomplish several tasks rated in levels, Barnes said. The first level includes an autonomous flight over three kilometers.

To achieve level two, a team must identify a target from an autonomously flying aerial robot. Also, the robot must identify at least one entry into the structure without human assistance.

"The purpose (of the competition) is to tackle the toughest missions and applications in aerial robotics," Kennedy said. "When this is accomplished, another mission will be thought up and schools will attempt that."

Courtesy photo

University of Arizona students led this year's competition, completing levels one and two. The first level was to fly an unmanned aerial vehicle. UA was the only school to attempt level two.

Kennedy suspects it will be another two to three years before this mission is successfully completed. There are still two levels yet to be attempted.

To achieve level three, a team must relay reconnaissance data from an autonomous aerial robot, or sub vehicle, operating from within the target structure, back to the starting point.

Level four is the successful execution of the first three levels in less than 15 minutes.

Each team and vehicle is judged in several categories, including elegance of design and craftsmanship, innovation in air vehicle or sub vehicle design, safety of design to bystanders, a paper documenting its project and best team T-shirt.

Fort Benning will host the event for the next two years and may see more levels completed in the mission.

The Mobility Branch has been grateful to take part in such a technologically-advanced competition, Kennedy said.

"What we get out of it is continued involvement with academia," Kennedy said.

"It helps us build relationships with these schools. These college students will eventually be program managers, some with military programs, and we want to have a good rapport with them."

Since no team has completed all four levels of the competition another $10,000 will be added to this year's $20,000 pot.

Each subsequent year $10,000 more dollars will be added until one team can successfully accomplish all four levels of the mission.

This year, the University of Waterloo in Ontario, Canada, won Best Paper, and Letourneau University out of Texas, was given an honorable mention. Best T-shirt went to Southern Polytechnic State University, and honorable mentions were awarded to the University of Arizona and South Dakota School of Mines and Technology.

The University of Arizona won Best Presentation and Best Air Vehicle, while South Dakota School of Mines and Technology took honorable mention in both categories. The Best System award went to Southern Polytechnic State University and honorable mention went to the University of Arizona.

Officers test simulator

2nd Lt. Jeffrey Johnson
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

For the past five years, Fort Benning's Simulation Lab officials have experimented with an individual Soldier simulator called the Squad Synthetic Environment.

The SSE can put two networked platoons on a virtual battlefield, much like the Combined Arms Tactical Trainer does for the Army's mounted forces. The SSE has "call for fire" capability far more advanced than other simulations.

The officers of Sand Hill's 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, tested this advanced simulation during an Aug. 27 professional development session, one designed to hone their skills on calling for and adjusting fire while moving dismounted in urban terrain.

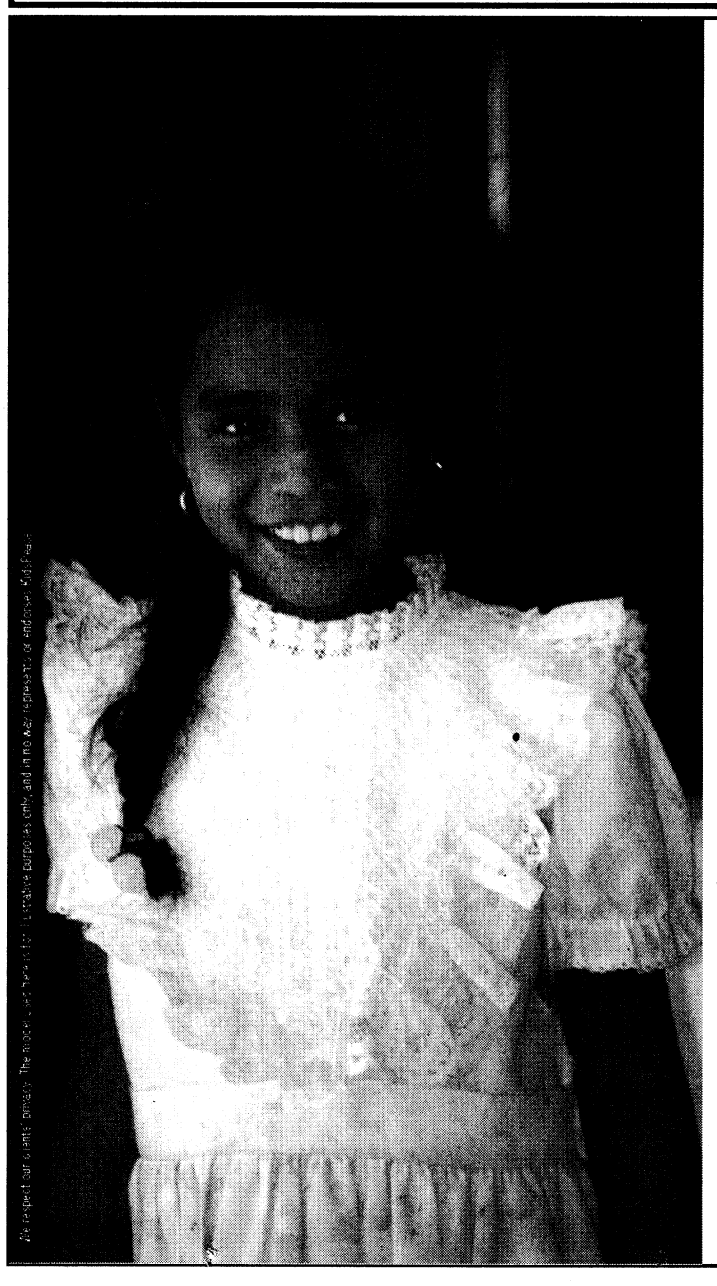
The simulation is operated and controlled by a staff of engineers. In this case, the "lead battle master" was retired 1st Sgt. William Guest. Simulation engineers like Guest have conducted experiments at the Sim Center for the past eight years.

Before the exercise, an engineer briefed the leaders on how to call for fire, how to use instrumented weapons and the function of the simulator. These engineers "are the backbone of the simulation lab," Guest said. They build, control and run the software.

The simulation split the 12 officers who participated in the two-hour exercise into three teams.

The teams started in different buildings, all in the simulated town of Shughart-Gordon. The training objective was to call for and adjust fire on each team using a preplanned target work list.

The mission of each team was to destroy the other two teams by dismounted movement and calling for fire. By the end of the training, the officers gained a greater understanding of how to call for fire, combined fighting and establishing urban observation posts.



The Simulation Lab is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

After staring at the images of a jazillion indie film festivals on the pages of People and adding their graduates to the list of my most-loved movies, I've always kinda wanted to check one out for myself.

Unfortunately, I'm not rich and famous, nor do I have a celebrity "uncle" to get me into the Sundance or the Cannes. But that's OK. After all, Columbus is home to its own independent film festival, and lucky me, it's this weekend.

The Chattahoochee Film and Video Festival will kick off at 6 p.m. Saturday in the Patrick Theater at the Columbus Museum.

The whole affair is supposed to open with a screening of film director Roger Nygard's new documentary, Trekkies 2.

Now, I know it's tricky, but I'll give you two guesses what this little video expose's about. Stumped? Don't feel bad; it's a challenge. The documentary will take an in-depth look at Star Trek fans from around the world.

Of course, Nygards' isn't the only film that will be screened at the event. Student films will be screened starting at 8:30 p.m. These films promise to be insightful and imaginative. If not, you're only out $10. Unless you happen to be a member of The Film Society of the Columbus Museum, in which case you'd only be out $8.

So don't be shy. Give your inner director a little inspiration and share in the works of others at the Chattahoochee Film and Video Festival at 6 p.m. Saturday at the Columbus Museum.

Grounds work final phase of beautification

More than $250,000 was spent restoring The Infantry Center Chapel inside and out, but no one seemed to notice because the trees blocked the view.

Now a $68,000 landscaping project is changing all of that, said Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin.

The project includes the removal of several trees and the addition of concrete and brick work, congregating areas, benches and flowers.

"We have a historic chapel built in 1934, and it's a very beautiful chapel," said Cocklin, Chief of the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Chaplains Office.

"The vegetation that was there had really grown, so you couldn't really see or appreciate the beauty of it from any direction. The chapel was virtually barricaded by overgrown trees."

Cocklin said the new landscaping is designed to "bring the chapel to the forefront and the landscaping to the background."

Situated across from the old Infantry School and parade field, the 70-year-old chapel was the center of the old post, Cocklin said.

"You can imagine in those days everything was right here," he said.

"This was the post. This was the hub of buildings and activities before Fort Benning expanded," Cocklin said. "It has a rich history in the lives of many folks."

Last year, more than $350,000 went into renovating the interior and exterior of TIC Chapel.

Cocklin said most of the funds for the renovation and beautification projects came from the Army Community of Excellence money awarded to Fort Benning.

Additional money needed to complete the beautification project came from the Directorate of Public Works.

Even though the grounds are under construction, the chapel is still being used for church services and weddings.

"We coordinated with the contractors, so at all times — no matter what phase they were in — there was an entrance or appropriate walking areas to have access to all doors," Cocklin said.

The construction, which began July 13, is scheduled to be complete within three months.

Volunteers make CASA work for abused children

50 needed to make program a success

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Imagine what it would be like if you lost your parents — not because of something you did or didn't do, but because they couldn't or wouldn't take care of you.

Court appointed special advocates, known as CASA volunteers, see situations like this every day. Children are taken from their homes and placed with strangers while therapists, social workers, police, judges and lawyers try to determine their fate.

Many times, a CASA volunteer is the only voice that child has, said Mattie Hall, Columbus CASA director.

Volunteers advocate for abused and neglected children by gathering information about the child's situation, attending court hearings and making recommendations to help the judge make an informed decision about the child's future.

Cynthia Walker, a CASA volunteer, said the program began in Columbus in 1997. Ten volunteers graduated from the first certification course.

Volunteers must be at least 21 years old, complete an application, agree to a background check, be fingerprinted, have four personal or professional references and have an interview before they begin the training process.

Training is 10 weeks long, with three-hour classes once a week. Volunteers examine cases of child abuse and neglect, learn how to conduct a home assessment, develop interview skills and observe at least 10 hours of court proceedings.

Upon graduation, volunteers wait to be assigned to a case, Walker said.

"The best case scenario is that you are given a case at shelter care," Hall said. "That is when a child is first picked up from home and put into the care system. The judge then assigns them to CASA."

The volunteer assigned to the case visits the child, explains his or her role in the case and keeps the child up-to-date on court proceedings. The volunteer is required to gather information about the child and his or her home situation and make recommendations to the court to ensure the child is placed in a safe, permanent home as soon as possible.

"We go into the home to see if it is safe," Walker said. "If the child plans to go back home or to a relative's house, it doesn't matter — wherever they are going we need it to be safe and clean."

Walker said the home the child is going into needs to meet a sufficient level of care, as determined by the CASA volunteer and the Department of Child and Family Services. Does the home have electricity, water, windows and doors? Is there a refrigerator and food? Do children have their own beds, and do infants have a safe crib? Hall said many times these basic needs are not met.

CASA has a responsibility to listen to the child and make assessments that serve in the child's best interest. If the home is not safe, the child can't reside there until changes are made.

Deb Manning, an education prevention coordinator with the Army Substance Abuse Program, is one of seven volunteers in the CASA training course. She hopes to make a difference in the community by providing a voice to children.

"Children are our greatest resource," Manning said. "Sometimes life takes a U-turn, and there has to be someone there to look after that child.

Chaplains offer free festival, food, fun for families

Offers chapel program info, fun for kids

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

For the second year, the Fort Benning Chaplains' Office will present the religious education Fall Festival.

The festival is scheduled for 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sept. 18 at Gordon Field. In case of rain, the event will be from 1 to 5 p.m. Sept. 19.

Tom Taylor, director of religious education for the Protestant chapels, said this year's location is different than last year's, because construction has begun on the new chapel. Gordon Field, next to the Wynnsong Theater, is at the corner of Burr and Ingersoll streets.

"We wanted to have (the festival) in the same area so people could see construction has started," Taylor said.

Drawings of the new, non-denominational chapel will be displayed.

Taylor said the festival is the big, religious event for the year, providing newcomers to Fort Benning with a wealth of information about what the post has to offer.

"It's also a good opportunity for families to bring their children out and have fun for four hours," he said.

Activities at the festival include the "Rock and Roller," a "Whirly Bird," a castle moonwalk and a giant inflatable slide.

All the activities are free, paid for by the Chaplains' Fund.

Last year's event drew nearly 300 children, and Taylor said they are prepared for the same number this year.

While the children are enjoying rides and free popcorn, cotton candy and sno-cones, parents can browse the information tables set up under tents.

Chaplains and volunteers from every denominational service on post will be at the festival to answer questions and provide information about the variety of religious education and fellowship activities.

Taylor said one of the additions this year is entertainment by the CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel praise team.

Family Life Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins said the group, known as C3PT, is made up of Soldiers and family members.

"Our drummer is a Soldier originally from South Africa," Hawkins said, " and our lead guitar is an Infantry Officer

Don't be victim of e-mail fraud

1st Lt. Paul J. Lloyd
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Imagine if your bank sent you an e-mail saying that it has taken steps to protect your account because individuals with a history of money laundering, terrorism and illegal drug activity have accessed your account. According to the e-mail, the bank detected the suspicious activity and has frozen your account until you reply. That would be a good thing, right? Maybe not, because such an e-mail is probably not from your bank. Most likely, it is from the very type of people that the e-mail warns you about — identity thieves.

Identity theft is the fastest growing crime in the country, and e-mail scams are a popular way for criminals to obtain the information they need to access your bank and credit accounts. E-mail scams recently have been sent to Army Knowledge Online e-mail accounts. Recognizing these e-mails is important for the protection and safeguarding of your personal information.

E-mail scams often claim to come from reputable companies. Citibank and U.S. Bank, along with numerous others, have been the subject of e-mail scams. False e-mails use the names, logos and graphics of the real company, and a sense of urgency is often conveyed, claiming for example that unauthorized activity has been detected or your account has been frozen in error.

Whatever the problem, the e-mail directs you to follow a link to a legitimate-looking Web site. Once there, the Web site asks for personal or account information.

However, you don't even have to enter any information for the damage to be done. Web site links in e-mail scams often contain "key logging" software. By clicking on the link, software will secretly be installed on your computer, recording everything you type and providing a way for identify thieves to access your information.

Fortunately, it is not difficult to identify e-mail scams. Once an online account has been opened, reputable banks and companies are extremely unlikely to send e-mails requesting verification of account information.

Be suspicious of any e-mail referring to an online account. Under no circumstance should you click on any recommended Web site addresses. Consumers should use a known company Web site address or simply pick up the telephone and call the company.

Following a few simple rules will help prevent becoming a victim of identity theft:

• Do not reply to or follow links in unsolicited e-mail.

• Passwords should be hard to guess — don't use common information, such as your spouse's or pet's name. Passwords should be at least six characters long, with a mix of numbers and letters. Use a different password for each account.

• Personal identification numbers should be changed frequently; the recommended time is every 30-60 days.

If you receive an e-mail as part of a scam, contact the legitimate company immediately. The company may request that you forward the e-mail scam to them, as many companies aggressively pursue this type of online fraud. You can also forward the scam e-mail directly to the Federal Trade Commission at uce@ftc.gov . After forwarding the scam e-mails, delete them from your computer.

For more information about identify theft, visit the Web site for the Federal Trade Commission at www.ftc.gov.

COUNT UP TO WEALTH

Army Community Service

Been to the pump lately? If you have, you know that gas prices can make your head spin faster than the digits on the dial. It used to take $10 to fill your tank; now it takes $20.

According to Delane Chappell, of the Business Resource Center at the Pastoral Institute, one of our partners in the Count Up to Wealth project, here are 11 ways to help you cut fuel consumption:

• Keep tires properly inflated. Not only is this simple, but it can also be a lifesaver. Under-inflated tires waste fuel and wear out tire tread.

• Get regular tune-ups and follow through with routine maintenance.

• Get the junk out of your trunk. A weighed-down car uses more fuel.

• Buy the lowest octane gas that is appropriate for your car. As long as your car doesn't ping, the fuel you are using is fine.

• Don't top off the gas tank. Too much gas will slosh out.

• Lighten up on the accelerator. The faster you drive, the more fuel you use.

• Drive intelligently. Don't make fast starts or sudden stops. You are just wasting fuel. Revving the engine wastes gas too.

• Keep your foot off the brake while you drive. The slightest pressure could cause you to use additional gas.

• Tighten the gas cap. Gas evaporates from the tank if it has an escape route.

• Buy a fuel-efficient vehicle. Factor in long-term fuel costs when shopping for a vehicle. Sunroofs add wind resistance and lower the number of miles per gallon.

• Be smart with the air-conditioning. On the highway, closed windows decrease air resistance, so use the air conditioner. In stop-and-go traffic, turn off the air conditioner and open the windows to reduce your fuel usage.

Remember to report your savings each week on the Web at www.columbusga.org or call 225-3859. Be sure to type or say B before your phone number so we can figure the total Fort Benning savings.

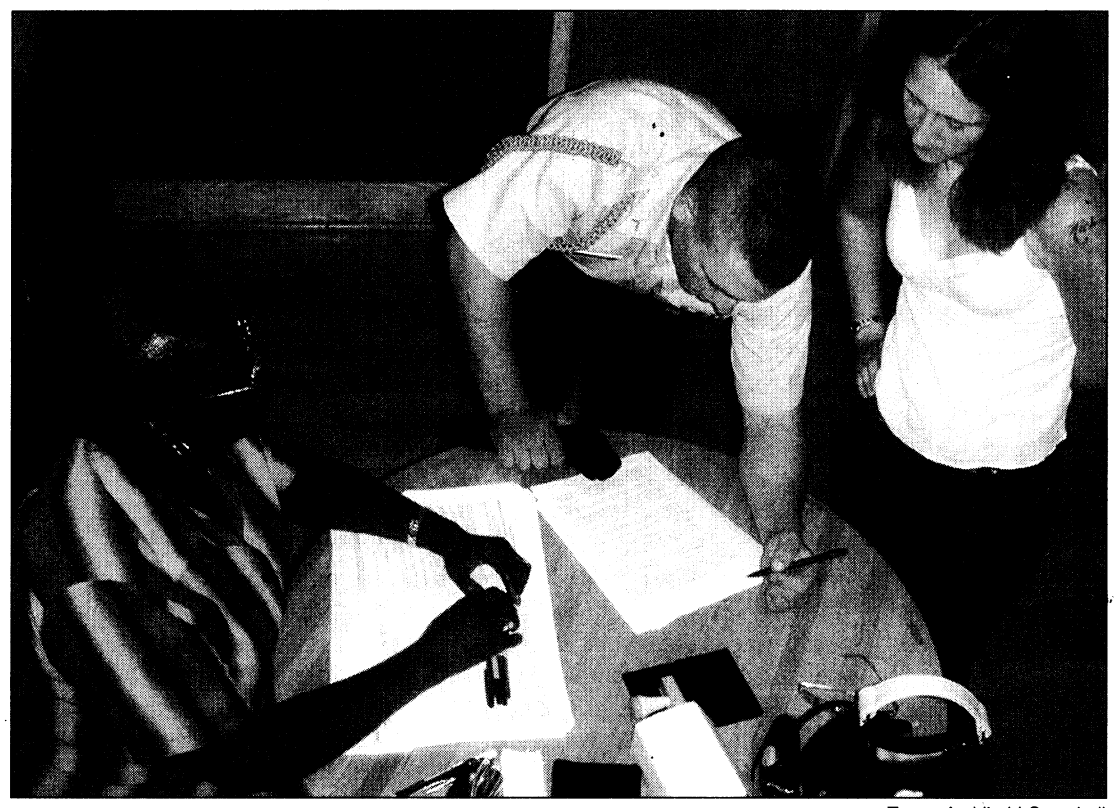
Briefing gives OSUT Soldiers, spouses 'one-stop' shopping for information

ITB briefs new Army families on programs

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Married Infantry Training Brigade graduates are getting help understanding the programs available to Army families.



Students graduating from one station unit training at Sand Hill attended a brigade spouses briefing designed to provide new Soldiers and their families with information about Army benefits and programs Sept. 2.

The briefing, held the day before graduation, gives new Soldiers information to assist them as they move to their next duty station, said Capt. Anthony Oliveras, the ITB's personnel officer.

In the past, each battalion organized its own briefings, but this was the first time the brigade consolidated them, Oliveras said.

Representatives from Tricare, DEERS, legal and relocation services provided each family information about dental, finance, housing, I.D. cards, wills, powers of attorney and travel.

"We want Soldiers and their families to understand that there are people here to help," Oliveras said. "We wanted to bring information together so Soldiers and their spouses would know about the Army, moves and benefits."

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Rosa Jackson, left, a legal clerk with the Infantry Training Brigade, helps Pvt. Nicholas LaBare and his wife, Sonya, with a power of attorney during the spouses briefing on Sand Hill Sept. 2.

As Soldiers embark on their careers, they face a high likelihood of deployment, Oliveras said.

"There is a sense of uncertainty, and it is hard to turn to your spouse when you are transferring. Many times the opportunities (to share information) get lost," Oliveras said.

"This (briefing) offers an opportunity to minimize that uncertainty and build confidence in the family.

"When a Soldier is confident in his spouse, he is more confident in his deployment, and he is not so worried about how his family is being taken care of back home," he said.

Pvt. James Bayer, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, is getting married today and then leaving for a two year unaccompanied tour to Korea.

"We're trying to figure out what to do, how to set up insurance and get situated with housing," Bayer said.

"This is worth it, just to know where to go and what we can get."

Ariel Carpenter is grateful to be armed with so much information, as she and her husband, Pvt. Jason Carpenter, head to their first duty station in Fort Polk, La.

"You think you know (everything)," she said, "then you find out what more is out there."

sometimes not heard. My understanding is that we are that voice," Manning said.

Hall said the need for volunteers is almost overwhelming.

There are only 16 active CASA volunteers in the Columbus area. At least 50 are needed.

As of Aug. 31, there were 127 open "CASA cases" in Chattahoochee County.

"The goal of a judge is to have a CASA assigned to every child who comes through their court," Walker said. "We just have to say, 'Stop!' sometimes."

Roderick Branscomb, a Reserve Soldiers just back from Iraq, is helping increase the chances a child will be assigned a CASA volunteer.

"I believe I can help a family become more stable," Branscomb said.

"I want to be able to help (a child) who doesn't necessarily know what to say. Maybe I can be a role model. Maybe they don't have a lot of people they can talk to. There are a lot of juveniles out there, but families, parents, need someone too."

To find out more about CASA or to volunteer, call 323-3687, visit the CASA office at 806 First Street, or go to www.gacasa.org.

Rollinson earns highest Scouting award

Clears, marks Riverwalk to earn honor

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"My name is Sam Rollinson, and I'm a Boy Scout."

So begins the autobiography of a 17-year-old who admits he was reluctant to tell his friends he's a Scout.

"You know, you get made fun of," said Rollinson, the son of retired Lt. Col. Selby Rollinson, Fort Benning's chief of Protocol.

Who's laughing now?

With his induction into the National Eagle Court of Honor Sunday, the Columbus High School senior is proud of his accomplishment and he's not ashamed to admit it.

"It's cool now, because this is a really big honor," said Rollinson, one of three local Scouts honored Sunday at St. Matthew Evangelical Lutheran Church in Columbus.

Rollinson racked up nearly 150 hours of labor on the Chattahoochee Riverwalk to earn the Eagle Scout award. He cleared weeds and overgrowth and measured and erected mile markers along a five-mile stretch that once left Riverwalk*ers* wondering if they were coming or going.

"You could run for like a mile, and it would say five miles. Then you'd go another miles and it would say two miles. It was messed up," Rollinson said.

> "It taught me to be a leader, not a follower. I'm a better person for it."
> Sam Rollinson
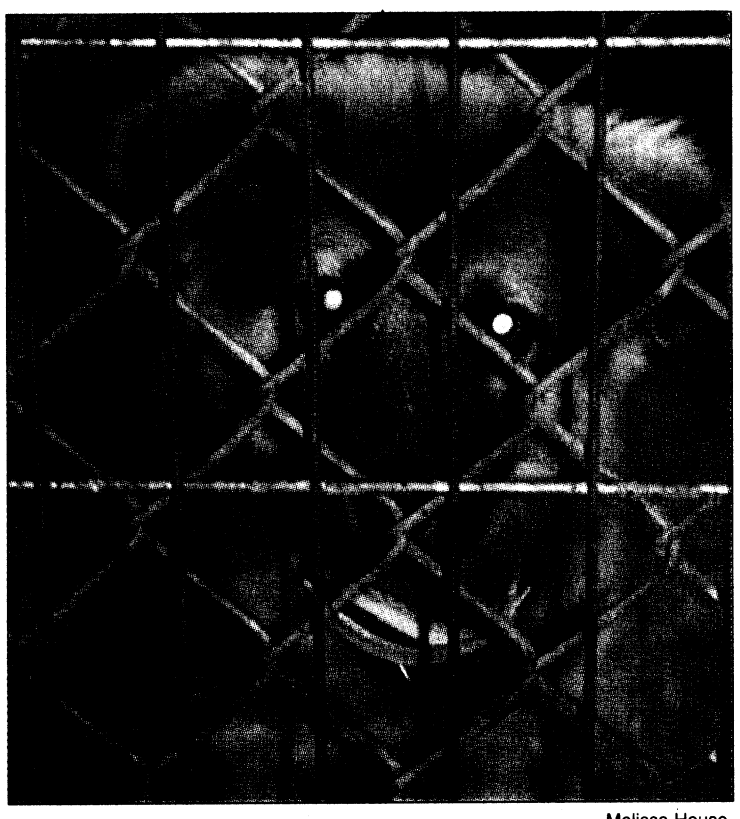
> Eagle Scout

The Eagle Scout project was challenging, Rollinson said, but his 10 years as a Scout have been full of challenges. There was the time he nearly fell off a mountain in Seoul, Korea, while hiking with his dad.

"Neither of us told Mom about that for a long time," he said.



Rollinson credits Scouting for his success as an athlete. He's lettered in swimming, wrestling and football.

And, he said, a decade with the Boy Scouts has taught him to be a man.

"It's taught me to be a leader, not a follower. I'm a better person for it," he said.

Scouting is a Rollinson family tradition. The senior Rollinson and his four brothers were Eagle Scouts, and two of Sam's cousins are working toward it.

"AFTER A TERRORIST ATTACK YOUR FIRST INSTINCT MAY BE TO RUN. THAT MAY BE THE WORST THING YOU COULD DO."
- Marie Pain, Firefighter, Ladder 206, FDNY

Knowing what you should do in a terrorist attack isn't just a matter of common sense. It takes some reading, some learning and some planning. That goes for people who live in small communities too. Readiness is for every American family, business and school. The terrorist threat is real and we can't afford to go unprepared.

Learn to put together an emergency supply kit, how to make a family communication plan, and how you should respond to an act of terror. All of that information is clearly explained at www.ready.gov. Well, it's that time of year again. The tax-free sale is over, and brand new erasers are squeaking their way across wide-ruled paper all over Fort Benning and Columbus.

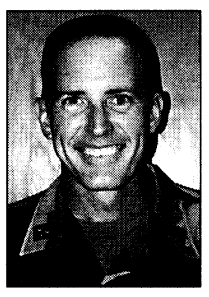
School is once again in session.

As kids, we couldn't wait for school to end — for good!

Yet, just about the time you get out of high school or college, for many of us, it's not all that long before school starts up again with the children God gives us.



Now hang in there with me, I'm not talking about you taking your children to school, I'm talking about your children taking you to school!

The most learning I've ever done, the greatest education I've ever received, the most demanding school I've ever attended, and the most prestigious degree I've ever been awarded is the PhD.

That stands for ... the Parenthood Degree!

Just last week, my wife Lori and I drove 16 hours (1,000 miles) with my firstborn little girl in a loaded-down minivan.

The next day, we decorated a shoebox, disguised as a college dorm room, kissed our collegian good-bye, and then drove back down the same road we had just come up — you guessed it — for 16 hours.

Hawkins

At any rate, these are just a few of the lessons I've learned from fatherhood:

• An extended giggle — I mean a real bubbling belly laugh from a toddler — is about the best noise there is in life.

• Both corn and peas can be stuffed up each nostril simultaneously — and produce a very curious whistle thereafter.

• My anger was just as often self-directed as it was directed toward her.

• Parenting is a team sport. Divide and conquer was discovered long before Napoleon.

• Values are more caught than taught.

• The reason I hate college boys so much is because I used to be one.

• Parents' love for their children is the strongest force known to humankind.

Jews celebrate new year, Yom Kippur

Retired Capt. Neil Block, USNR
USAIC Jewish Lay Leader

Sundown on Wednesday evening marks the start of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, which initiates the Jewish High Holy Days.

Jews all around the world will join in family and community groups to mark the beginning of the year 5765 of the Jewish calendar and to present themselves to God for judgment.

Rosh Hashanah is the biblical "holy convocation" associated with the anniversary of the birth of the world and, according to ancient tradition, the day on which God renders judgment on all the world. It is a time when each and every man is judged by God. The righteous are immediately inscribed in The Book of Life.

The wicked are consigned to indeterminate sad fates, while those whom God deems neither righteous or wicked have 10 days to repent and acknowledge their errant ways. They must then pledge to amend their shortcomings before the Book of Life is sealed. The last day for repentance is Yom Kippur.

REFLECTIONS

In the Jewish tradition, God commands every man to live a righteous and moral life, to be responsible and to make the world a better place.

Every man is responsible to ensure the hungry are fed, the naked are clothed, the widow and orphan are cared for and his community and extended community conduct life with morality within the teaching of the law, starting with the Ten Commandments.

It is the conduct of their lives within this guideline that God judges.

On Rosh Hashanah, Jews everywhere gather to pray that God judge them kindly, to acknowledge and ask for forgiveness of their transgressions, and to ask God to grant them continued life in a good and a sweet year to come.

The gathering and prayers are punctuated by the sounding of the ram's horn, the shofar, an ancient instrument.

Rosh Hashanah is also known as Yom Teruah, the Day of the Blowing of the Shofar.

Yom Kippur means Day of Atonement. It is a solemn day observed by prayers, fasting, repentance and of an awareness of God's readiness to pardon. It is considered the holiest day of the Jewish calendar and dates back to biblical times.

In three separate passages of the Torah, the Five Books of Moses — the word of God transcribed by Moses — the Jewish people are told that "...the tenth day of the seventh month is the Day of Atonement. It shall be a sacred occasion for you. You shall practice self-denial ..."

It was on this day that Moses, after having received the first tablets of the law (The Ten Commandments) and smashing them because of the incident of the golden calf, and after returning to Sinai to receive a second set of tablets, descended to find the Jewish people fasting and repenting.

The High Holy Days are days of introspection, self-examination and re-dedication to God's law and principles.

On Rosh Hashanah people are greeted with wishes that they be "inscribed" in The Book of Life.

On Yom Kippur we hope that one has been "sealed" in The Book of Life.

Where there's a will, there's a way

Photos by Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Spencer High School starting quarterback Antonio Denson leans on his helmet, as he practices being calm, cool and collected. The 11th-grader's goal is to improve his performance in high-pressure games and situations before he hits his senior year.

There is no shortage of young athletes who are convinced they will one day play in the "big game." To play in college or the pros is the epitome of making it.

"The difference is, I work harder than everyone else who thinks they are going to play in the pros," said Spencer High School starting quarterback Antonio Denson.

The son of Master Sgt. Clayton Denson, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, and Christine Denson, the 16-year-old has already set his sights on college football heavyweights University of Georgia and Florida State University.

If pure desire alone doesn't get Antonio to his promised land, it will be his dedication and hard work.

The 11th-grader juggles his honor roll academics, blossoming football career, and positions on the track and wrestling teams, as well.

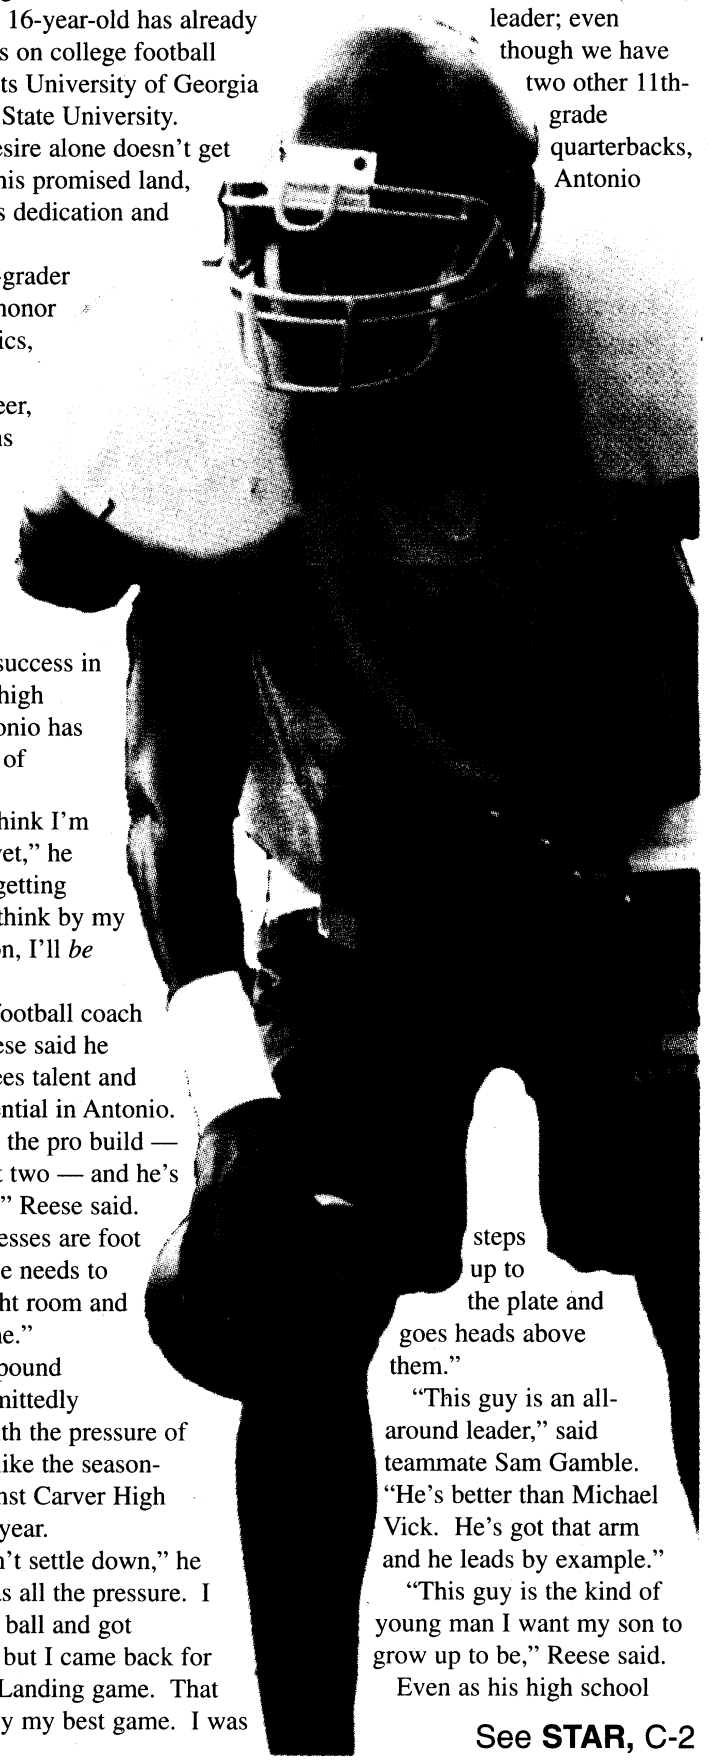
Despite impressive success in all areas of high school, Antonio has no illusions of grandeur.

"I don't think I'm at my best yet," he said. "I'm getting there, but I think by my senior season, I'll be there."

Spencer football coach Richard Reese said he definitely sees talent and college potential in Antonio.

"He's got the pro build — he's six foot two — and he's got the arm," Reese said. "His weaknesses are foot skills, and he needs to hit the weight room and beef up some."

The 160-pound Antonio admittedly struggles with the pressure of big games, like the season-opener against Carver High School this year.



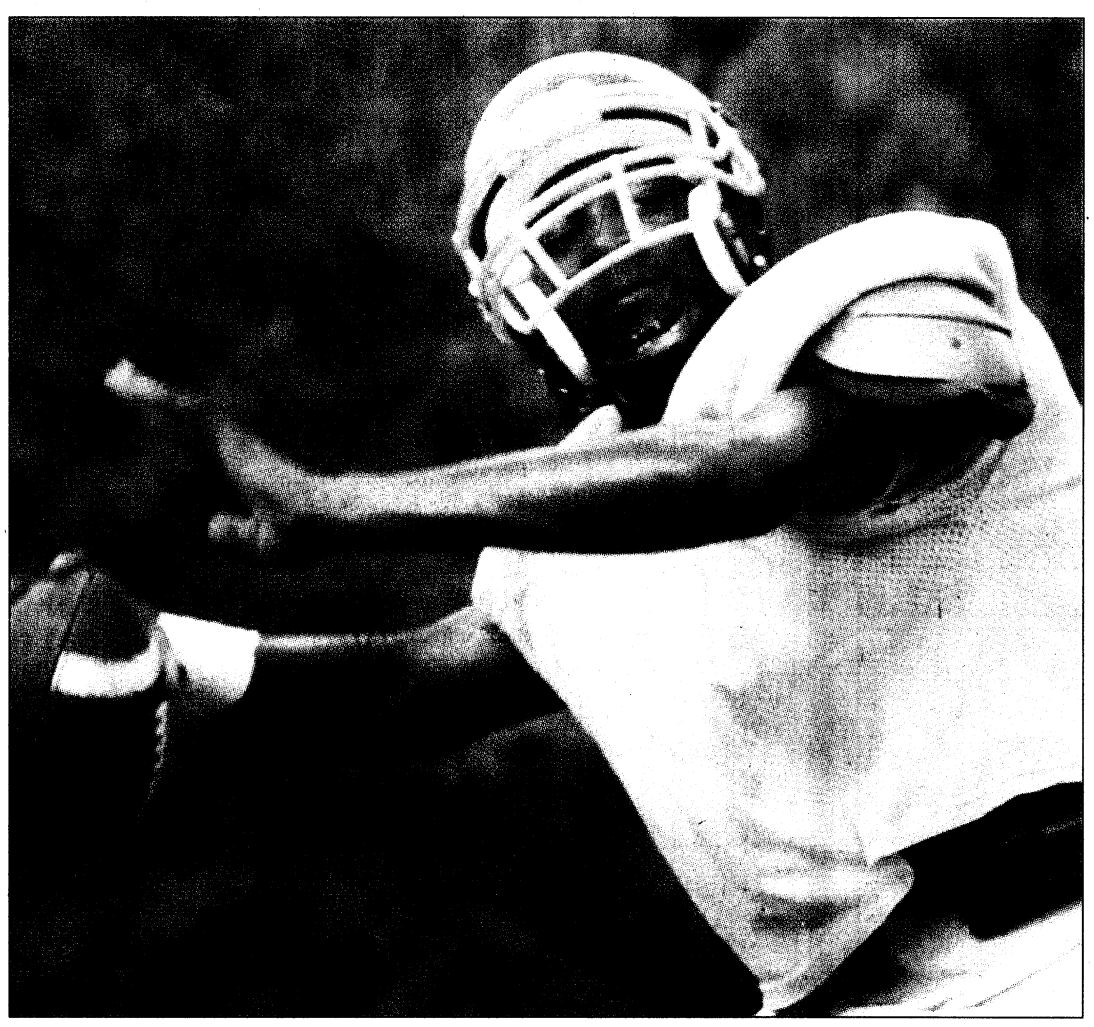
"I wouldn't settle down," he said. "It was all the pressure. I dropped the ball and got intercepted, but I came back for the Eagle's Landing game. That was probably my best game. I was completing good passes, kept the ball out of the other team's hands and handled the pressure."

And the challenge of making it academically and devoting much of his free time to three-hour practices every day wears on him.

"It's pretty tough," he said. "There's nothing easy about it."

If, behind the self-confidence, he has any doubts about his prospects for the future, his teammates and coach stand behind their quarterback.

"Athletics aside, Antonio is a great young man," Reese said. "He's a hard worker and outstanding leader; even though we have two other 11th-grade quarterbacks, Antonio steps up to the plate and goes heads above them."



"This guy is an all-around leader," said teammate Sam Gamble. "He's better than Michael Vick. He's got that arm and he leads by example."

"This guy is the kind of young man I want my son to grow up to be," Reese said.

Denson believes he has the arm and the frame to make it in college and professional football arenas, but Spencer coach Richard Reese noted areas the rising star needs to work on: foot skills and his weight. "At 160 pounds, the first time he gets hit in a college game, he will shatter. We are encouraging him to hit the weight room and beef up," Reese said.

"One of the important things I learned from my dad being in the Army is you work really hard for something, and then as soon as you've got it, you turn around and leave and start all over again."

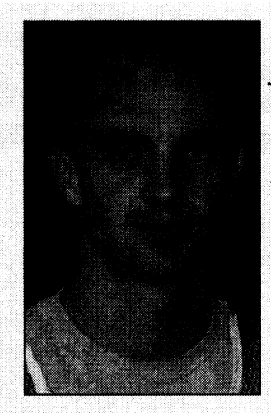
Denson focuses on the basics during a team practice. Teammates say the 17-year-old is a motivated player, leader and role model.



Post Ten-Milers in profile

The Army Ten-Miler is fast approaching and eight Fort Benning Soldiers are training to compete in the Oct. 24 race. Three were profiled in the Aug. 27 edition of The Bayonet, and the rest will be profiled before the race.
The team said they have a good chance to win, even in a field of 20,000 runners.
Check future editions of The Bayonet for updates on the team and the race.

the challenges that lie ahead of him once he moves on to college.

"One of the important things I learned from my dad being in the Army is you work really hard for something, and then as soon as you've got it, you turn around and leave and start all over again," he said.

"I am so proud of him," said Denson. "I am happy to see the good things he is doing; I just want him to keep a straight, level head so he can fly high and be successful."

Hurricane Ivan caused the evacuation of Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., personnel to Fort Benning and the closure of post.

Hurricane Ivan closes post

Benning home for Eglin AFB evacuees

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Fort Benning officials closed the post today except for key and essential personnel because of Hurricane Ivan. Fort Benning Schools will be closed also.

With 68 deaths in the Ivan's wake, post officials considered safety when making the decision to shut down post yesterday.

On Tuesday the Home of the Infantry became home to hundreds of evacuees from Eglin Air Force Base Tuesday when the mandatory evacuation order for Hurricane Ivan was given.

Fort Benning is prepared to temporarily house more than 2,000 people in barracks, gyms and rec centers, said Brandon Cockrell with the Garrison Office.

However, that doesn't mean the post will. For Airmen stationed at Eglin, Fort Benning was just one evacuation center. Another was Warner Robins Air Force Base near Macon, Ga.

An advance team from Eglin arrived Tuesday to help coordinate the arrival of the evacuees.

Air Force Col. Greg Williams, the Eglin Air Force Base liaison, said the concern is to take care of the evacuees.

As of Wednesday, Hurricane Ivan was still a category four storm in the Gulf of Mexico about 180 miles from the coast. The forecast has the storm making landfall this morning. According to the National Weather Service advisory, hurricane force winds could spread inland up to 100 miles near the path of the center and tropical storm force winds extending outward up to 260 miles.

Initiative gives Soldiers comfort, survival items

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The Rapid Fielding Initiative became a tangible reality for Fort Benning Soldiers this week as units from around post cycled through a warehouse to collect a variety of newly fielded items for deployment.

RFI provides troops with improved protective and lethality equipment and commercial off-the-shelf "comfort" items that will ultimately improve Soldiers' capabilities once in theater, said David Barton, a senior program analyst with Soldier as a System, a division of Fort Benning's Directorate of Combat Development.

The initiative was developed in late 2002 as a result of lessons learned from combat units in Afghanistan, one of which was that Soldiers and units required field equipment that they could not attain through normal supply channels, Barton said. In some cases, Soldiers were buying the items they needed with their own money.

PEO Soldier conducted visits with Soldiers and leaders from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y.; 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C.; and the 101st Air Assault Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.

The visits helped produce a list of "required items" — everything from creature comforts to improved body

Benning to host Infantry Conference

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The U.S. Army Infantry Center will host the annual Infantry Conference Monday through Thursday. This year's theme theme is "Fighting the Global War on Terrorism ... With an Eye on the Future."

The purpose of the conference is to help guide the infantry for the future in the right direction and to share knowledge, said Cliff Davis, chief of ceremonies and conferences for the Infantry Center.

The conference begins with a golf scramble sponsored by the National Infantry Association, followed by an icebreaker social at Riverside, home of Fort Benning's commanding general.

Tuesday morning, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley will open the conference by delivering the State of the Infantry, followed by a Senior Leaders Session.

The ground-breaking ceremony for the National Infantry Museum is at 4:30 p.m. at the future site of the museum off South Lumpkin Road. The ceremony is open to the public, Davis said.

The same night, Freakley will host a steak night in the Infantry Bar at the Officers' Club, which is also open to the public.

Wednesday's highlights include recent operational lessons learned presentations by the 82nd Infantry Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., the 4th Inf. Div., Fort Hood, Texas, and 101st Airborne Div., Fort Campbell, Ky.

There will also be a live-fire training exercise by the EXFOR Platoon at Red Cloud Range.

GET OUT THE VOTE

Excuses won't work

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

I don't want to hear any excuses. We all have them, but they mean nothing. There's no excuse. Especially if you're wearing a uniform, and even more so if someone you care about wears one.

You have to vote.

As my friend, Elsie, said, "It's not just our right; it's our responsibility."

I wrote a commentary about voting a few months ago, but even then, I wasn't really sure I was going to vote. I had many pitiful excuses of my own until I remembered something a good friend of mine once told me.

"If you don't vote, you should never complain about how bad things are going with our country," my friend said.

My friend was Pfc. Joe Casanova. I say was because Joe was killed in action Oct. 13, 2003, in Baghdad, Iraq.

While Joe was deployed, he told me that it is important to vote for the person who's going to decide where we're going to be and what we're going to be doing for the next four years.

You know what? He was right.

I joined the Army with four of my guy friends from high school, including Joe, and they have all been deployed. Two are still overseas. One of them came home two months ago and called me to tell me I had to vote. If not for me, then for Joe.

You know what? I'm doing it for the both of us and for all the Soldiers who are still overseas fighting for this country.

If you don't vote, then, with all due respect, just sit down and shut up.

I filled out my voter's registration form last week and put it in the mail.

Everyone has something that they are interested in this election year. Mine is the military.

I will have a say in my future.

It's still not too late to register to vote. Don't put it off any longer. It only takes a few minutes to do something that will benefit you for the next four years. If you log on to your AKO account, you will find a link to the Web site to register to vote.

If you're thinking that it doesn't matter and your candidate may not win … just stop. You're making excuses again, and I already told you there's no excuse.

And now for the line you've heard a thousand times: Every vote counts.

Event was tragic, not date

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I'm still fuming about the New York couple whose Sept. 11 wedding drew ire from an anonymous guest to their online bridal registry. "May all bad luck be bestowed upon you for this," read the e-mail.

So let me get this right. An anonymous, cowardly someone is terrorizing a couple who chose to wed on the anniversary of the day terrorists struck America and launched us into this Global War on Terrorism.

Hmmm. You know, I can't think of a better way of showing our American resolve than consciously choosing to redeem the date, Sept. 11.

Friends of mine spent the day cleaning and fixing and scrubbing and painting the homes of some of our local aging veterans or their widows.

What a beautiful, loving gesture, and right on track, I think.

Rather than fall prostrate and paralyzed each year on this date, let's do something AMERICAN.

Let's get busy.

Let's pause for a moment before a flag at half staff, then raise our star spangled banner a little bit higher than before.

Let's, dare I say, pull a Toby Keith.

I'm thinking here of a Christmas analogy. What good does it do to celebrate one day a year, if you don't keep at least a flicker of the Christmas spirit burning all year long? Dec. 25 is highly over-rated. Christmas is not.

Such can be said of 9-11 if it becomes an annual day of mourning instead of a day of renewed resolve.

Go ahead, get married. Help a neighbor. Thumb your nose at those who surely thought they'd knocked us to our knees.

One day — though no time soon — Sept. 11 will become synonymous with D-Day and Pearl Harbor. It'll be recognized as the day that launched the war that put evil to rest in one part of the world.

That's cause for celebration.

CONFERENCE

Much to do

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley
Commanding General

Fort Benning, Home of the Infantry, welcomes you to the 2004 Infantry Conference, with our theme of Supporting the Global War on Terror with an Eye on the Future.

The turn-out of our key general officers, colonels, command sergeants major and the worldwide infantry team is a clear indicator as to just how important this conference is.

We are also delighted to have our alumni, retired general officers who contributed so much to our Army during their service, many of whom are former Fort Benning commanders.

Industry is well represented, too, and we hope we can take advantage of their presence to generate solutions to some of the many challenges facing our Army — from identifying the enemy defending buildings, to reliable lines of communication, to producing one, long-lived battery that will power all of our equipment.

This is a great opportunity to renew acquaintances and meet new people, but most importantly, a way to exchange ideas.

There are a lot of lessons learned out there and we want to capture as many as we can. What you tell us during the conference will be shared with our commanders and incorporated into our training.

The conference is also a good time to see how we are supporting Army transformation. Modularity will be another of the key subjects we discuss.

Finally, we have a historic event Tuesday afternoon. It will be the groundbreaking for the National Infantry Museum. This is a national project and it's being undertaken to tell the story of the infantryman, the story of valor and sacrifice. We hope all of you will join us as eyewitnesses to history.

Enjoy yourselves, revisit old haunts and take advantage of being here to meet our Soldiers, civilians and leaders.

Thank you again for attending! Follow me!

POW/MIA not just names but family, friends

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Dear Mike,

I hope it's OK to call you Mike. Since we've never met, I don't know what your friends call you, but I hope to be your friend.

I had more than 2,000 names to choose from, but I picked yours because we have a few things in common. I'm from Michigan, too, or at least, I was born there after my dad came home from Vietnam.

I hope my mentioning Vietnam doesn't upset you. It seems to be one of those places people have very strong feelings about. Dad doesn't talk much about his time there, except to say his helicopter almost crashed once. I thought my mother was going to fall out of her chair. She had never heard that story, or any others from Vietnam, for that matter.

When I got your name and home state, I did a little research. I know your birthday is Nov. 21, 1939, so it makes you a month older than my dad. You were assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division as a CH-47 crew chief. I have a few friends in the 1st Cav. One is an infantryman and the other is a miliary policeman. I've heard that it's a great unit.

If this letter finds you, I hope you'll be able to tell me where you are and what you are doing. You can use all the military jargon you need to — I spent a few years in the Army myself. I'm sure my experience was nothing compared to yours.

Melissa

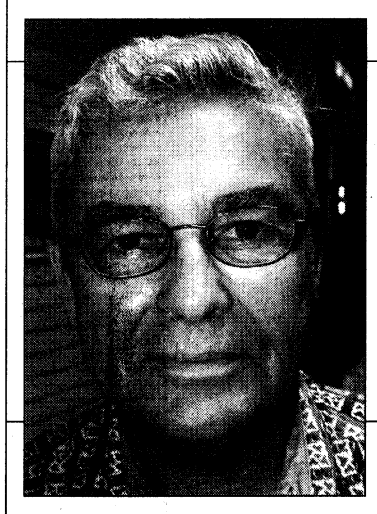
I've written a dozen letters to Mike through the years, though I've never actually mailed one, or even put pen to paper.

Sgt. 1st Class Michael John Wallace is my friend, whose red POW/MIA bracelet sits on my nightstand. He's been missing since a few months before I was born, and that bracelet serves as a constant reminder that he, and far too many others, never made it back from Vietnam.

In April 1968, his helicopter was shot down in South Vietnam while making supply runs to the Soldiers near Landing Zone Tiger. According to witnesses, Mike and the flight engineer jumped from the chopper — more than 50 feet above the jungle canopy. His remains have never been recovered.

I check the Internet every so often to see if there's any news, and just stumbled on an article written two years ago. It was about a teacher who wore Mike's POW/MIA bracelet and later taught his niece.

Mike has been officially declared killed in action, so the teacher, in keeping with tradition, broke her bracelet in half and sent it to the family.

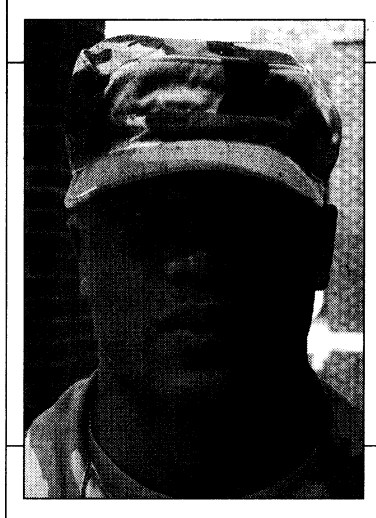


I'm not ready to jump on that bandwagon. I'm keeping his bracelet until he comes home, but I'm realistic enough to know he won't come home alive. The Joint Task Force Full Accounting is slowly, but surely, returning the remains of our missing from Southeast Asia.

I just hope I'll still be around when they finally bring Mike home.

In the meantime, I'll be thinking of him, especially Friday. If you don't know, it's POW/MIA Day, and there are still more than 1,800 of them we need to find.

VARIOUS VOICES



What is the issue you're most interested in this election?

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Donald Jaworski, Phenix City — "Homeland security — that covers a broad area."

Capt. Gwendolyn Wheeler, MEDDAC — "I'm a physician's assistant, so I guess medical issues like social security and medicare."

Pfc. Antwan Sorrells, Ranger Training Detachment, 75th Ranger Regiment — "What is going to be the next step in Iraq is the issue."

Pfc. Bobby Reuter, 14th Combat Support Hospital — "The war on terrorism, of course."

Pfc. Rosa Sanchez, 3rd Brigade Combat Team — "I really don't know what to say about the election. I've never voted."

Arianna Lay, family member — "Honesty. We need an honest person in the White House. I don't care what political party they are from."

New barracks going up at Benning

Construction to be completed by Nov. 2005

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Spc. David Foley

Construction of the new barracks on Dixie Road is well underway. Another single-room design building is being built near the Martin Army Community Hospital. Both barracks are designed to conserve resources.

Hundreds of Fort Benning Soldiers will be living in the best barracks in the Southeast region within the next year.

The Army Corps of Engineers is overseeing a construction project on post that will give single Soldiers an improved quality of life.

The first construction site is located off of Dixie Road near Infantry Hall and will house 368 soldiers from 11th Infantry Regiment, military police and the Army Marksmanship Unit.

The project also includes a barracks building near Martin Army Community Hospital that will house 121 Medical Department Activity and Dental Activity Soldiers. That site will also include a central command building.

The difference between these barracks and others in the area is that each Soldier will have his own room with a kitchenette, private bath and refrigerator.

Every building will also have a laundry facility and the rooms will have internal access.

"It'll be just like a little Days Inn," said Danny R. Gray Sr., Clark Construction Group, Inc. senior superintendent.

The barracks on Fort Benning will continue to be unique because of shifting Army policies.

The Army created a policy that enabled installations to erect barracks with the single-room design, but shortly after the project began, the policy was discontinued, said Greg Zinberg, project manager, Clark Design/Build LLC.

The third site will be a headquarters building located on Sightseeing Road near Afterhours.

The entire project, which is expected to be completed by November 2005, is a major leap forward for the Savannah region, said Bill Coon, project engineer, Army Corps of Engineers.

"All of the buildings are a showcase for sustained design," Coon said.

Sustained design is a modern approach to construction where the design reduces the effect it has on the environment by using special materials such as precast autoclave aerated concrete.

Precast autoclave aerated concrete is a porous concrete mixture with pockets of air inside, similar to that found in volcanic rocks such as pumice.

The air pockets act as an excellent insulator and they reduce the weight of the material by about 70 percent, Zinberg said.

"There are four categories of sustainable designs, said Rhonda Bright," assistant project engineer, "bronze, silver, gold and platinum."

"This is expected to be a gold project," Zinberg said. "But, it is very hard to determine what rating you will achieve until you put it all together and send the packets to the Corps of Engineers in Savannah Ga."

Once the project is complete, the buildings will be rated based on how well the buildings conserve energy and resources.

Blum awards medals to two-time volunteers

NG Soldiers' service recognized

WASHINGTON — Twice they volunteered. That's why Lt. Gen. H. Steven Blum gathered 45 Army and Air National Guardsmen in Washington, D.C., Sept. 10 — to honor the men and women who answered the call to serve not once, but twice.

"No one's ever been drafted into the Guard," said Blum, chief of the National Guard and former commander of the 29th Infantry Division.

"These are double volunteers. They volunteered to serve on the home team. Then they volunteered to go into harm's way."

The Soldiers and Airmen present were among the 76 Guardsmen awarded the Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary Medal, an award reserved for Guardsmen who left their stateside active-duty assignments to serve "singularly" in a combat zone, meaning they didn't deploy with a unit.

In most cases, they requested an assignment in Afghanistan or Iraq.

Blum presented the medals, but addressed his comments to the Guard at large, the 230,000 "weekend warriors" who've been called to active duty since 9-11.

> "Make no mistake about it, you're in the battle space of this war on terrorism wherever you serve. Get your head in the game and keep it there, because ... we no longer question if we're relevant. We've become essential as long as there is someone out there challenging our way of life."

> Lt. Gen. H. Steven Blum
> Chief of the National Guard

"Forty percent of the troops on the ground in Iraq and Afghanistan are Guard and Reserve," he said.

"The most powerful thing they bring to the fight is the commitment and resolve of the American people, because when you call out the Guard, you call out America."

On the "day before the anniversary of the day ... that started us on this campaign," Blum lauded the legacy of the "citizen militia that made it possible for the United States to exist, and the citizen militia that has preserved this nation from the start."

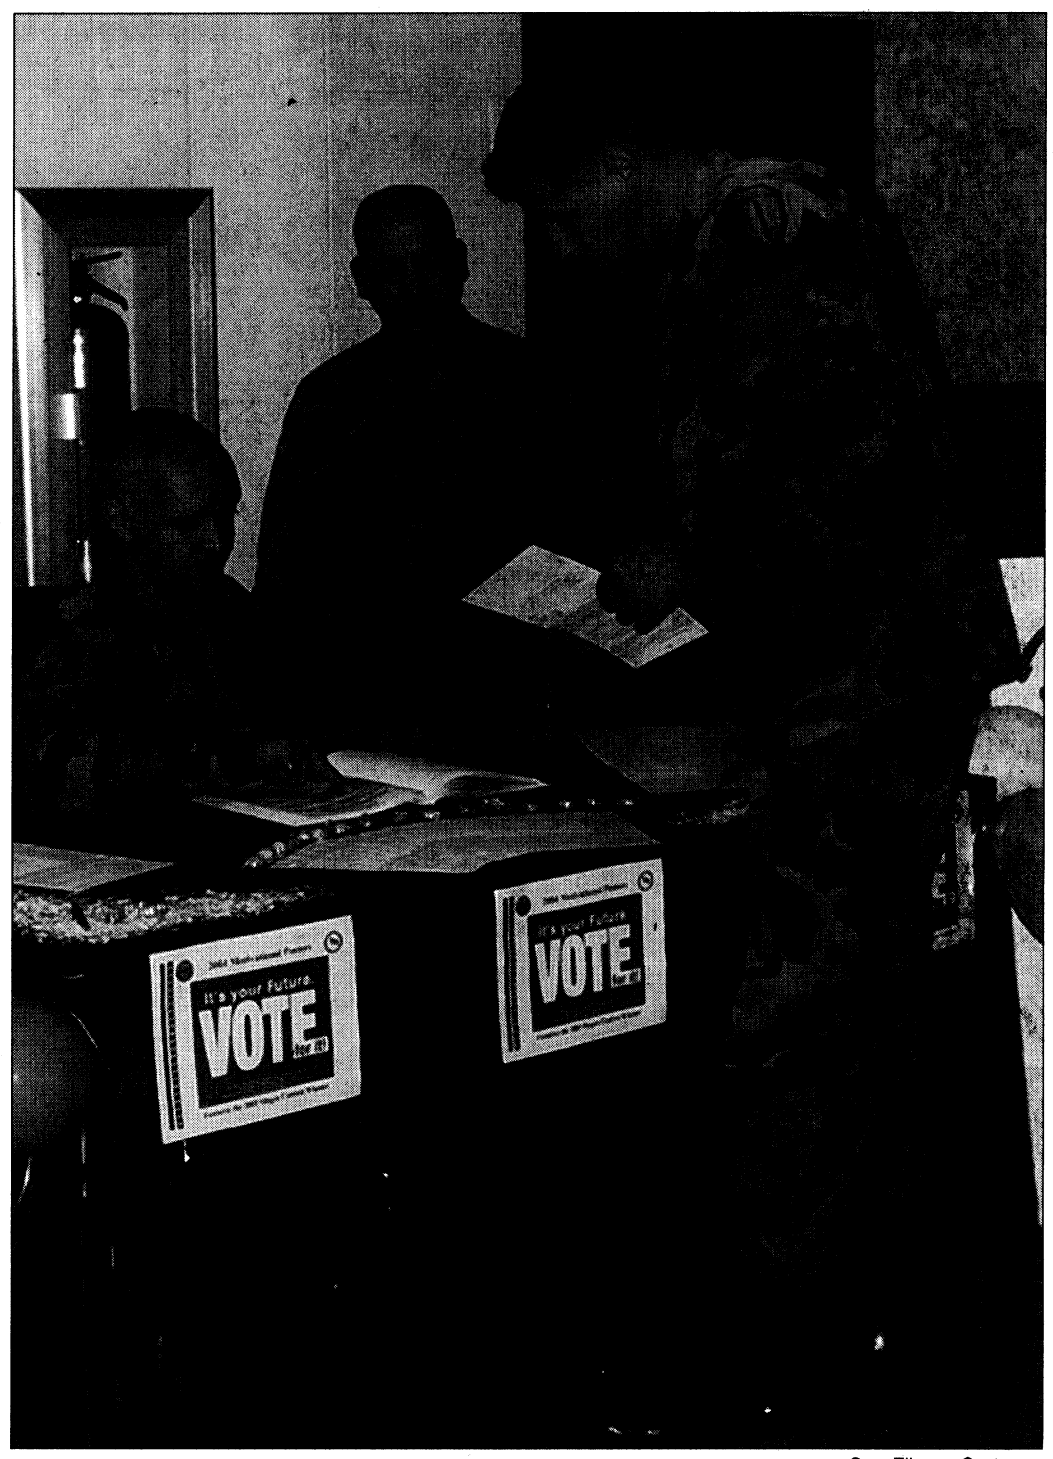
"You stand on the shoulders of many patriots before you," Blum told the audience.

"When they were needed, they were there," he said. "And when you were needed, you were there."

More than 25 percent of the Guardsmen in Iraq are more than 40 years old, Blum said.

They bring to the fight "military and life experience unmatched."

From their civilian careers, they've acquired skills as electricians, stockbrokers, teachers, plumbers and farmers — skills that are "extremely valuable when you're trying to rebuild a nation," he said.



But perhaps more importantly, "they're presence sends a frightening message to the enemy," Blum said.

"It says this is a force supported by hundreds of millions of resolute Americans," he said.

Blum cautioned the Guardsmen against devaluing their contributions stateside.

"Make no mistake about it, you're in the battle space of this war on terrorism wherever you serve," he said. "Get your head in the game and keep it there, because ... we no longer question if we're relevant. We've become essential, and we'll stay essential as long as there is someone out there challenging our way of life."

RFI: Gives post troops needed items

armor and optics.

Currently, three PEO Soldier teams are traveling the U.S., stopping by each installation to issue active-duty, National Guard and Reserve Soldiers their RFI items, said Chuck Cooley, team leader for PEO Soldier Team 3. There are also teams in Kuwait and Iraq.

So far, the teams have completed issue at Fort Drum, Fort Bragg, Fort Lewis, Wash.; Schofield Barracks, Hawaii; Fort Carson, Colo., Fort Hood, Texas; and Fort Bliss, Texas.

The teams will continue to hit each CONUS installation during the next few years with the goal of completing Armywide RFI by 2007.

RFI fielding is based on deployment timelines.

Team 3 arrived at Fort Benning Monday and began its first RFI issue Tuesday morning to Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, which is scheduled to deploy between November and February.

Several other units around post will pick up their issues through Wednesday, including units from the 36th Engineer Group, the 209th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment and the 789th Explosive Ordnance Disposal Detachment.

Fort Benning Soldiers picked up around 35 items, including:

• The advanced combat helmet. The ACH provides a better, more stable fit and allows for better hearing. The helmet also features pads lining the inside of the helmet in place of the sweatbands in old helmets.

• Improved desert boots. The improved 390 Desert Boot features a thicker sole than the boots Soldiers are currently wearing and "feels like wearing a pair of Nikes," Cooley said. Meanwhile, the AF 790 Gortex boots feature improved comfort and a fire-resistant sole.

Sgt. Kim Dooley

The Rapid Fielding Initiative brings protective equipment and several "creature comfort" clothing items to Fort Benning's deploying troops.

• Assault pack. Part of the MOLLE system, the assault packs have enough room for Soldiers to put one or two Camelbak hydration systems in, along with other gear.

"We won't be issuing these to everyone," Cooley said. "These are more for the guys on the front line."

• New clothing items. The list includes moisture-wicking T-shirts, socks and underwear, as well as cold weather gear, like gloves, and fleece jackets and pants.

"These are definitely things I wish I'd had when I was in the Army," Cooley said.

Although Cooley won't be able to reap the benefits of the new issue, Soldiers on the receiving end of RFI are more than pleased.

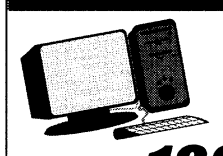
Spc. Ryan Labar, a radio telephone operator in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, has shelled out more than a few dollars to purchase cold weather gear and comfort items during his deployments to Kosovo and Kuwait and Iraq.

The 22-year-old California native was spending $50 to $60 a pop on personal gear just to keep warm.

"When you compare the cold weather gear we got for Kosovo — just basic cold weather boots and polypro — to the new fleece system ... it works a lot better and it's a lot more comfortable," Labar said. "And you can actually shoot in the gloves they gave us."

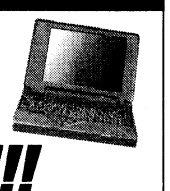
Overall, he said, the RFI items are more comfortable and durable than what he's been issued in the past.

During the RFI issue, NCOs from each unit were selected for "train-the-trainer" sessions, detailing the proper use of the new equipment.



"As we rotate the units through the stations, we'll take around 12 men in for these classes so the units will walk away with the equipment and Soldiers who are subject matter experts on the new equipment," said Terry Boddie, team leader for the New Equipment Training Team.

The trainers will ensure the troops in their units know how to properly fit, wear and use their new equipment. The NET team also provides the trainers with lesson plans "so they can give proper, military standard instruction, Boddie said.



The RFI item list will continue to be modified as the Army refines its operational requirements and integrates current RFI items into Soldiers' initial equipment issue, Barton said.

Soldier as a System's Integrated Concepts Team, which is chaired by the commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, reviews and provides recommendations regarding the items on the list.

HURRICANE IVAN

Preparedness prevents problems

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Hurricane Ivan is terrorizing the Gulf Coast and residents are traveling north to escape his wrath. Therefore The Bayonet is repeating portions of an article on hurricane preparedness which ran Aug. 27.

10 Points of Preparedness in an Evacuation

PEOPLE:

Have a plan for getting out of the house and make sure everyone knows it. Have an emergency bag of food and water for your family with wholesome snacks for the children — dried fruit, nuts, peanut butter, crackers and granola bars.

PETS:

Keep pet carriers and leashes available to lead pets to safety. Take pet food with you.

PICTURES:

Keep negatives or CDs of pictures in a lock box or at a family member's home. Have picture albums in one place ready to grab and go at a moment's notice.

PAPERS:

Have all your important papers in a lock box at a bank and keep only copies at the house. This keeps you from panicking. If you have them at home, put them in a folder that you can grab if you have to move fast. Color code it so you can find it!

PRESCRIPTIONS:

Take your medications with you. Don't forget the ones that have to be refrigerated, such as insulin. Have a small ice chest and cold packs readily accessible to pack and go. If you have babies, remember their formula or medications.

PURSES:

This is where you keep your identification, credit cards and cash. Keep a stash of cash for emergencies. You may not be able to use an ATM in the event of a power outage.

PROPER CLOTHES and COMFORT ITEMS:

According to the weather conditions; gather up a change of clothes along with outer clothing — coats, rain gear, boots, gloves and hats. If you have babies, remember diapers. Remember to grab your children's favorite blankets, stuffed animals or toys. A game or a deck of cards will help keep them occupied and calm.

PLANNER or CALENDAR:

These should have all the information you will need, such as phone numbers, insurance numbers and important dates. They are small and filled with things you don't have to try to remember.

PHONES and RADIOS:

Always keep cell phones charged and have a charger in the car or an extra battery. They may not work in the event of power outages, but then they might.

Know which local radio station has emergency bulletins. Keep your battery-powered radio tuned to that station and have plenty of batteries handy. Also keep a "corded" phone that does not operate with electricity.

PATIENCE:

This is one of the most important things to pack. Keep it inside you, so you can keep a clear, calm head.

Having your P's to Preparedness list to guide you will keep you patient. In the event of an evacuation, there will be lots of displaced people. Being patient will make things less stressful. Your children need to see you calm and collected. This will help keep them calm, too.

Copy this list and put it in your planner or calendar. As you are packing, physically touch each item.

Don't wait till you are being asked to evacuate. Everyone thinks that it could not happen to them. Well it could, and it is up to you to make sure you are prepared.

Don't wait! DO IT NOW!!

For more information, visit www.noaa.gov or www.flylady.net. www.fema.gov/kids has information and activities for children. www.nws.noaa.gov has current weather watches, warnings and advisories issued by the agencies within the National Weather Service. These are listed by state and county.

a Fort Benning home.

Chief Warrant Officer Don Kite and his wife, Dee, opened their home to their sister-in-law.

Traffic was at a standstill, Wendy said. It took an hour to drive 15 miles on Interstate 65.

Don's father lives on the water and chose not to evacuate; however, his mother and a brother went to an evacuation center. Wendy's husband, who works for the county sheriff, stayed in Pensacola because of work.

Authorities advise those who can't evacuate to stay indoors during the hurricane and away from windows and glass doors. Keep curtains and blinds closed.

Turn the refrigerator to its coldest setting and keep closed. Turn off propane tanks. Fill the bathtubs full of water.

In strong winds, follow these rules:

- Take refuge in a small interior room, closet or hallway.
- Close all interior doors. Secure and brace external doors.
- In a two-story home, go to an interior first-floor room, such as a bathroom or closet.

Avoid using the phone except for emergencies. Local authorities need the first priority on telephone lines.

After the hurricane, drive only when necessary because streets could be filled with debris. Don't drive on flooded roads or bridges.

Don't drink or prepare food with tap water until notified by officials that it is safe to do so.

The post exchange and the commissary are scheduled to be open to provide support.

DA chief names October Security Awareness Month

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Department of the Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Security Lt. Gen. Keith Alexander named October the first Security Awareness Month in response to the raised challenges of informational security in the recent past.

The observance is all the more important in light of the Global War on Terrorism, Alexander said. Sensitive information, both classified and unclassified, has recently been compromised by improper posting on Web sites and unclassified government systems, as well.

He called for major commands to intitiate security awareness briefings and events during October and to foster year-round awareness of the preservation of security.

"We're not just talking operational security or automation security," said Al Harvey, acting Chief of Intelligence and Security. "We are talking what information is classified and what is not, what info shouldn't be sent via e-mail."

> "I liken this to a Tom Clancy novel; there is a clear and present danger."
> Al Harvey
> Chief of Intelligence and Security

The renewed concern comes in response to what Harvey called "heightened" threats of attack, breaches in information security from the highest military echelons down and intensified "probing" by hackers.

"Some of it is just people seeing what they can do, pinging the system to see if they can get in," he said. "But I liken this to a Tom Clancy novel; there is a clear and present danger.

"We know al Qaeda and its supporters use the Internet like it drinks water. I have heard they get up to 80 percent of their operational information from the Internet."

Alexander said the move toward a more secure system is crucial and the establishment of an annual security awareness month is only part of a robust security program.

"It is imperative that each Army organization establish a continuous security awareness, education and training program," he said.

Fort Benning formed an Information Security Task Force after DA guidance required that the Directorate of Intelligence and Security take control of information being posted on both Inter- and intranet sites.

Debbie Kearns, a security specialist with DIS and the task force chief, said that some problems stem from failure to recognize that just because something isn't labeled classified, doesn't mean it needs to be posted on the Internet or saved on a network without password protection.

"When we started checking Internet and intranet postings and files, we found information that fit the bill and that needed to be removed immediately," she said. "While the problems on the Internet have gotten better, there are still issues with intranet files.

"Sometimes I find huge caches of personal information, like names and social security numbers."

Intranet files are folders saved on a local network outside of the Internet. Those files are available to everyone in the network unless they are password protected.

Scott Phillips, chief of security, DIS, said the concern isn't limited to personal information. Operational information, troop movements, general officer information and mission details are all sensitive assets.

"We are trying to protect all of these things," Kearns said. "We're not trying to be hard-liners, but we have guidelines to follow. We are the overseers and it is our job to make sure each individual thinks about information security."

Event honors heroes of 9-11

Images of smoke and flames, firemen turned black with soot, a flag waving in the hollowed carcass of a once towering office building — these images flashed across the screen while George W. Bush's voice proclaimed a resolve to "never forget."

A video remembering the sights and sounds of Sept. 11, 2001, was part of a ceremony held Sept. 10 on Fort Benning. The remembrance ceremony at Marshall Auditorium, organized by the post chaplains, offered members of the community an opportunity to pay respect to the fallen and strengthen their resolve to support the cause of freedom.

"We are brought together, in this place, by our love of country, by our admiration of exalted character, by our gratitude for signal services and patriotic devotion," said Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin, chief of the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Chaplains Office.

"These were the words spoken by Daniel Webster two centuries ago at the dedication of the monument at Bunker Hill. And they are words that capture the spirit that brings us here today," Cocklin said.

During his welcome, Cocklin reminded the audience of the men and women of exalted character whose lives were lost and whose families still live with the grief and pain.

He spoke of the services of citizen heroes who risked their lives so others might live and of the patriotic devotion of all those who have answered their country's call and have given the last full measure of their devotion.

"But we must do more than simply remember them. We must honor them by building a future, a world, a nation worthy of their sacrifice," Cocklin said.

"And so in their name, we pledge again (to be) united as a country and seek out and hold responsible those who attacked us three years ago," he said. "United as a country, we will continue the Global War on Terrorism because we will not, and can not live in fear."

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, commanding general, said 9-11 is a day to reflect on how life has changed in the past three years as we now face a worldwide terrorist threat.

"We honor those who lost their lives, those who occupied those workplaces and those first responders," Freakley said. "We remember the more than one thousand men and women who have lost their lives in the war on terrorism."

Freakley said 10 Soldiers from Fort Benning and four from the surrounding areas have died in the war on terrorism, 96 people from Fort Benning and 96 more from the surrounding areas have been wounded.

"All of us at Fort Benning need to rededicate ourselves to stay the course," Freakley said. "Let me assure you, we will win. We must maintain our drive and support in the war. We must strengthen our resolve."

Supply center opens next to CIF

One-stop shopping at Fort Benning has taken on a whole new look.

The LCI Self Service Supply Center, located on Indianhead Road, next to the Central Issue Facility, is changing the way the military shops for its supplies.

The store, which opened Tuesday, offers a selection of more than 4,200 items from general office supplies to cleaning supplies and hydration systems to gun cleaning kits.

"We allow (the military) to do one-stop shopping instead of going into town and going to four to five different vendors for supplies," said Todd Gilman, manager for LCI-SSSC. "We have the means to purchase anything you want or need and because we are a private contractor we can always keep the store in stock and in supply."

Shopping at this new store is much like going to Office Depot or Staples, Gilman said; however, the customer base is limited to persons with government-wide purchase cards known as IMPAC cards and authorized military, federal and some state personnel.

The SSSC offers uniform insignia, cooking utensils, computer supplies, paper products, pens, airborne items, coolers, janitorial supplies, garden tools, and much more.

"If we can find a source for it, we will buy it, bring it in and sell it," Gilman said. "For the most part we are actually cheaper than places like Staples and Office Max. But, if we're not, we'll price match nine out of ten times."

Sgt. Elwood Brown of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 11th Infantry Regiment, sees the new SSSC as a much needed time saver.

"It is an excellent idea and will save a lot of running around," Brown said. "I can't put down exactly how much time it will save, but having it right here is going to save me a lot of time (by not) running downtown."

Brown also sees the store as a great mixture of both military and office supplies.

"We usually just set aside a day or two to run downtown and then we run all over," Brown said. "We won't have to do that now."

The new SSSC does more than just provide bulk supplies for its customer. It also works as a nonprofit organization, which employs the blind and visually impaired.

"The SSSC was run by the civil service, but what has happened now is it has be contracted to blind, nonprofit agencies who now man the stores," Gilman said. "Three of our eleven employees are legally blind and one is visually impaired, but you can't tell who."

According to Gilman, this is the first SSSC to be on Fort Benning in eight years.

The LCI-SSSC will be open from 8 a.m to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information contact them at 687-3007 or 687-1817.

Conference tackles Army's special needs

Addresses air assault, airborne modularity

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Representatives from the Army's airborne and air assault communities met with force developers from the Directorate of Combat Developments Sept. 1.

The first session of its kind, the conference allowed attendees to work together to identify enablers to help airborne and air assault units meet the chief of staff of the Army's intent for modularity.

"We're doing this to ensure the airborne and air assault operational force has what's necessary," said Alan Farr, chief of Force Development in the DCD's Concepts, Analysis, Integration Division.

Planners and executors from the 18th Airborne Corps and 82nd Airborne Division from Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 101st Airborne Div. (Air Assault) from Fort Campbell, Ky., were able to speak with representatives from the Department of the Army and Training and Doctrine Command.

"We were really fortunate to get all those guys in the same room," said Lt. Col. Dan Evans, CAID chief. "It was really beneficial for us."

Ensuring the infantry's airborne and air assault forces have what they need may include staffing a battle management cell, and looking at pathfinder, rigger, long range surveillance company and light airfield repair capabilities. Because the Army will now be based around a brigade combat team design instead of a division, those assets are necessary, Evans said. Enablers, like the battle management cell, would help a traditionally heavy unit conduct operations with an airborne brigade.

"We are reviewing and making changes for the modular design all the time," Farr said. He said the force developers work with the entire table of organization and equipment design — not only equipment, but manning, too.

"Selected expertise," Farr said, "ensures you don't have a mech guy going out there to do airborne operations. However, the process allows a heavy BCT to be augmented with the necessary skills and equipment to do the mission."

The DCD sent a proposed battle management cell design to the field for review. This started the design process and brought the communities together. After receiving feedback, DCD pulled the enabler conference together.

"I thought the conference went well," Farr said. "We talked and got guidance. We won't have a 100 percent solution, but we'll be another mile closer."

Farr said the intent of the enablers conference was to lay issues on the table so they could encapsulate and refine them. Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley will mention them in his "state of the infantry" speech at the kick-off of the Infantry Conference Tuesday morning.

"This is still a work in progress," Evans said. "The units still owe some info to us and we'll discuss more at break-out sessions at the conference."

Another big topic the CAID team is tackling is motorization — a new concept giving the Infantry the right blend of mobility to meet the modular design. Although infantry Soldiers primarily fight dismounted, units need additional trucks in order to achieve 100 percent tactical mobility.

"We'll work continuously with all the field units to get input," Farr said. "They have the smarts. They know what they need."

DENTAC works to make post Soldiers tobacco-free

Cessation class to visit Soldiers' units

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

In 2001, Fort Benning's Dental Activity initiated its Tobacco Use and Cessation Program at Love Dental Clinic, which allows dentists to prescribe medication to help Soldiers kick the nicotine habit.

DENTAC has now taken the program to a different level — they are taking the program to the Soldier.

"The plan is to visit as many units as would like us to and offer prescriptions to help Soldiers who would like to quit," said Col. Lawrence Breault, chief of Periodontics at Love Dental Clinic. "We know most Soldiers are very busy, so we figured we'd bring the program to them."

Tobacco-using Soldiers are also offered the program during their dental clinic appointments.

The first Soldiers to receive the class Friday afternoon were the Soldiers of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, (Airborne), 507th Parachute Regiment.

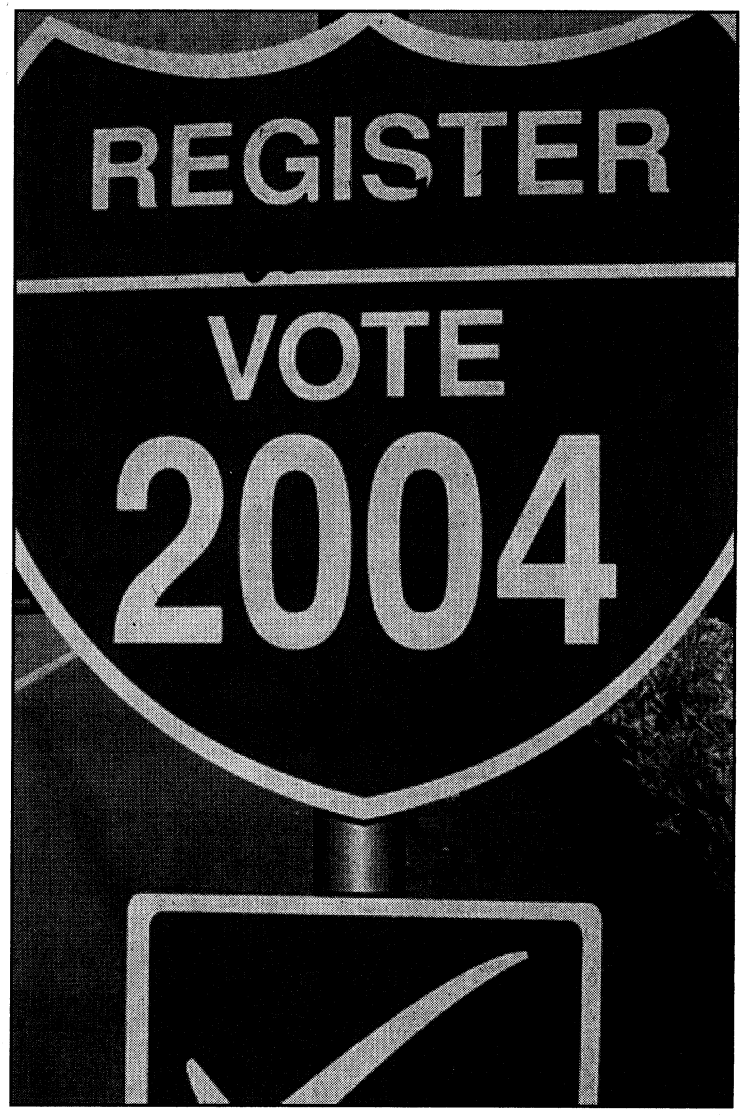
Capt. Todd Ballou, HHC commander, was one of the 12 Soldiers who signed up for the program. Ballou is now wearing the patch that was prescribed to him Friday.

"It's more convenient if they come to us," he said. "It's definitely helpful for Soldiers."

Soldiers are required to watch a 15-minute video that encourages them to kick the habit before they are given a prescription, Breault said.

There are three types of prescriptions Soldiers may receive at the dental clinics:

- Zyban pill: An antidepressant found to help control cravings for Soldiers who smoke less than half of a pack a day and for those who use chewing tobacco.
- Nicotine patches: For Soldiers who smoke more than half of a pack a day.
- Nicotine gum: Helps fight nicotine cravings by providing small amounts of nicotine.



This program has helped approximately 500 Soldiers since it began in 2001, Breault said. It's user-friendly and allows Soldiers to walk in to their dental clinic without an appointment and see a provider to renew their prescription.

To better serve Soldiers, DENTAC has increased the number of providers who are authorized to write prescriptions.

Love Dental Clinic now has 10 providers and Bernheim Dental Clinic has two providers and is waiting for more.

ADVERTISE IN THE BAYONET

New leaders prep for war with scenarios

The Infantry Officer Basic Course conducted stability and support operations earlier this week at the McKenna MOUT site as part of its cycle culmination training.

Those operations included securing a village wracked by warring gangs mixed in with pro-American civilians, search and cordon missions, intelligence gathering, presence patrols and checkpoint procedures.

"This kind of training shows us how well the students handle a civilian presence on the battlefield," said Sgt. 1st Class Darren Johnson, senior NCO platoon trainer and 3rd Platoon platoon sergeant. "This portion is one of the most important parts of their training, because they will actually conduct missions like this when they deploy to Iraq and it will prepare them for whatever can happen in a hostile urban environment."

Platoons that were not conducting missions stood in as the opposing forces and civilians, Johnson said.

Several times, the patrols were confronted with multiple situations at the same time, like street fights, rock throwing, small children interfering with operations and suspicious behavior.

While trying to manage the operation and developing incidents, the platoon had to handle media interference — something they have very little training in, but viewed as something IOBC cadre want to focus more strongly on in the future.

"We definitely want to start incorporating a stronger media presence in our training," said platoon trainer Capt. Palmer Phillips. "We want to try to make these scenarios as realistic as possible."

2nd Lt. Samuel Hone, IOBC, said he thought the stability and support operations training was realistic and intense, demanding the training platoons to react to multiple situations of varying danger.

"It was a pretty fluid environment last night," Hone said. "This is the kind of stuff that will help integrate the military with the civilian community. It reduces the threat to the Soldier and builds rapport with the local community."

The current IOBC training is derived from relevant scenarios Soldiers are experiencing while deployed overseas in Iraq and Afghanistan, said IOBC student 2nd Lt. Gary Carty.

"This training is so relevant," he said. "We are concentrating on current, real-world missions. No more Cold War, Russian tactics."

He said the training platoon was hit with multiple challenges, like media scenarios, improvised explosive devices and ambushes.

The imminent reality of he and many of his battle buddies becoming platoon leaders responsible for the lives of 30 or more Soldiers deployed in support of the Global War on Terrorism is one Carty feels he is prepared for after the IOBC course. "The cadre are extremely professional," he said. "They take what they do seriously. People's lives will be in our hands in a little while and that is nothing to be taken lightly. The cadre expect the best out of us."

Students prepare a Soldier injured by an improvised explosive device for evacuation from the area.

Warring gang members within the town create a volatile situation as the unit moves into the area.

91P Radiology Specialist

X-ray technicians bone up on skills

MOS provides Soldiers with plans for future

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

"If anyone cracks or breaks a bone, we take a picture of it," said Sgt. Sean Kelly, an X-ray technician with Fort Benning's Medical Department Activity.

An X-ray technician, aka radiology specialist, aka 91P, is the person who first positions patients then takes pictures of the bones inside their bodies.

And at Martin Army Community Hospital, they really have their work cut out for them.

"Between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m. we will see 200 to 300 patients with just nine or 10 technicians in six rooms," Kelly said. "And that doesn't even include CAT scans, ultrasounds or fluoroscopy ... that's just basic X-rays."

But, as one MEDDAC Soldier said, basic X-rays are anything but basic.

Sgt. Patrick Winn, a Reserve Soldier who recently reclassed to 91P and is completing a six-month on-the-job-training requirement at MACH, said the job can be quite demanding.

"Going from mannequins to real people is a big difference," he said of the transition from AIT to the workplace. "Mannequins don't move, don't scream and don't fuss, and people come in all shapes and sizes."

Winn said he knows he made the right decision to reclass, it took a little getting used to, caring for the patients and handling the workload. He said sometimes he will show up to work and see a box full of medical charts. He used to get stressed out trying to get everyone in and out too quickly, which resulted in mistakes that in turn compounded the problem.

"You have to take it one patient at a time and not let it stress you out," he said. "Because if you let it stress you out you make mistakes, and then things get really backed up."

Spc. David Foley

Sgt. Sean Kelly, an X-ray technician at Martin Army Community Hospital, positions a patient for an X-ray.

> "You have to take it one patient at a time and not let it stress you out."
> Sgt. Patrick Winn
> X-ray technician, Martin Army Community Hospital

In spite of the heavy workloads and stressful situations, both Soldiers said they love the field they are in.

"It's a lot of fun," Kelly said. "And if you have good people, it can make a day go by a lot faster."

Kelly said it is a good job for someone who is looking for something to do for the rest of their life whether they are planning to stay in the military or not.

Kelly said X-ray technicians can build a career in the Army, but if they decide to get out, they can find a job without any problems.

He said the 91P course teaches Soldiers to the same standards in six months as civilian institutions teach their students in two years, minus some of the basic classes.

Once a Soldier gets certified by the American Registry of Radiologic Technicians they are certified to work in any hospital in America.

Flint Energies

Open Letter to Our Members

September 17, 2004

To the Members of Flint Energies:

As I reflect back over last week's power restorations after Hurricane Frances, I began to check the history of this type event at Flint Energies. We keep a permanent record on the wall in our main dispatch center. There are dozens of major outages in Flint's 67-year history: ice and snow storms, the flood, heavy summer storms, tropical storms, freak thundershowers and high winds. But we've never seen the kind of restoration process which took place in middle Georgia this week.

But our line crewmen have seen this destruction. Over our history, Flint employees have worked in many other states after hurricanes and ice storms. We're part of the national Touchstone Energy cooperative system where mutual aid agreements allow us help out neighbors when we can. Cooperative employees from northeast Georgia and from Mississippi were here helping us after Frances.

Our men have seen restoration processes which lasted two and three weeks. We had crews in central Florida after Hurricane Charley several weeks back. It took two weeks and two days to restore everyone's power there. As a side note, I think that's why the rumor started that Flint's line technicians were in Florida helping when Frances arrived. That was not correct; all of our men had been back for a week before Frances came to Georgia.

In the mind of a line tech, any outage is a bad outage. They hate to go home if someone is still off. Last week, we pressed our men to take 6-hour rest breaks for their own safety and well-being. While some men slept, others turned on the spotlights and continued the nighttime battle on behalf of our members.

The battle was waged all day on Labor Day. There were 4,000 out that day and we had gotten it down to 2,000 by 10 pm Monday night, but the worst was yet to come. Tuesday morning, we counted more than 26,000 out of power. Some of our members were disappointed that we didn't do storm restoration from midnight Monday to daybreak Tuesday, but the high winds made it impossible to safely raise a bucket truck into the air.

Our damage evaluations first told us it would take six days to restore power to everyone. Broken poles were scattered everywhere. Trees impacted our ability to serve and drive around, even when they did not impact power lines. My power was out at home, most of the staff's power was out...even most of the Flint Board of Directors lost power. One employee had serious damage to her home, but she's worked the 7 pm to 7 am shift each night last week answering member calls.

With 26,000 members with power out, all of them tried to call Flint to report their outage. At our 1-888-354-6836 number, the automated system can answer 1800 simultaneous calls. Most members would like to talk to an employee, but there are not enough of us to speak with 26,000 at one time. So the automated system is a highly accurate way to find out where the outages are located. Flint's regular phone numbers were overwhelmed pretty quickly Tuesday morning. The fast busy sound that members received was the key that "all circuits were busy," though every available office employee was answering phones.

Tuesday, the men restored power to nearly 19,000 members while it rained on them all day and the winds gusted to 30 miles per hour. We kept every office open in an attempt to maintain some normalcy, even when life for our members without power was far from normal. As the days passed, members began to lose food in their refrigerators and then in their freezers. Some in the rural areas had lost water service at the time of power loss, because their well pumps couldn't work. When the sun came out, the heat and the pain grew for them. We knew it, and we pressed on. On Wednesday, we tried to let our members know where to get dry ice to try and save the fruits of their summer harvests in the freezers.

Those without power began to see neighbors with their power restored. They questioned us about our restoration procedures. In a tried and true process of 100 years of power restoration, Flint restores power to its substations first, then to the three-phase circuits, then to the single phase taps off of those circuits, and finally to the individual outages. This process restores power to the greatest number of people in the quickest time.

But when your power is out and the neighbors are back on, it's easy to think you've been overlooked, or slighted, or singled out, or discriminated against. None of these are true. Following the process, we keep coming back until everyone is restored. As more members suffered, nerves were frayed and tempers sometimes flared. Flint's men still pressed on.

More recently, the phones have become busy again...calls of thanks, emails, visits to the office saying: "thank you." The men are telling us that most everyone they see waves, and says thanks. It took us four days this time. In the weather forecast, there is another Hurricane named Ivan. We talked over breakfast last Friday, hoping that Frances wasn't just a warm-up for a larger storm. We planned for Frances Thursday before Labor Day. We planned for Ivan last Thursday. With a good plan, we had enough fuel, lots of extra workers, all the poles and transformers we needed. We're just thankful not to have the repeated damage that our Florida neighbors have received.

I want to say personally that we appreciate your patience and understanding during this trying time. Get your personal disaster plan out and be prepared. More and more folks in middle Georgia are saying that a hurricane can impact us now...even if it never had before.

Sincerely,

Joe B. Cade

NOTE TO THE READER (i.e. shameless plug for another article appearing in this week's paper by yours truly): Be sure not to miss the book review on D-5. Believe me — anyone with a halfway decent sense of humor will want to share in the literary masterpiece I'm recommending.

Theater, that untamed art that will leave you feeling cultured, aesthetically pleased and in mighty high society.

And this weekend, you have a chance to witness firsthand the "masterpiece" that is The Amen Corner, a play by James Baldwin.

Here's the storyline: Margaret is the charismatic and much-loved pastor of a "corner" church in Harlem. Luke is the husband she left in the dust 10 years earlier, citing "holier than thou" religious convictions as good cause. David is the son who has been told for the past decade that his father is the one who left without a backward glance. Then there's Margaret's congregation — all of whom believe her husband abandoned her with their only surviving child.

The plot? After 10 years, Luke makes a sudden and unexpected appearance. Now a trombone-toting, woman-chasing, drunken, dying, old man, he's here to set the record straight. And that he does.

The aftermath is a series of confrontations between Margaret and her son, her estranged husband and her congregation (who question the hypocritical nature of her religious convictions).

Now, I've never seen or even heard of this play until Monday morning. But after sitting down with Fort Benning's own Sgt. Maurice Bell, who will portray Luke in the play, I have no doubt that I'll be clearing a little time in my schedule for this one.

It's a play that focuses on the African-American family and church, highlighting issues of racial injustice, the challenges in relationships between black couples and between black parents and their children, and the impact of poverty born of racial prejudice.

House of Heroes volunteers work on Columbus resident Ruby Davis' home Sunday afternoon. This year, there are 52 homes that will be improved as part of the annual event, which began in 2001. Eighteen of the participating teams are from Fort Benning.

Heroes take on task to save home

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The music was playing on a small, battery-operated radio as 14 heroes took on the task of fixing Ruby Davis' home Saturday and Sunday on a small street off Saint Mary's Road in Columbus.

Davis, 77, is the widow of a World War II veteran.

The project was part of House of Heroes, a program which recruits volunteers to fix homes of retired vets, public safety officers, and their spouses and widows.

In 1999, Wayne Anthony noticed a lot of funerals for WWII vets and came up with the idea for the HOH project, said Susan Gerkin, HOH coordinator.

"It was his way of officially saying 'thank you' to all the WWII veterans," she said.

In 2000, the first HOH event took place. Since its development, more than 100 recipients have benefited from the program.

"You don't know how much the little things that we do make these people feel," Gerkin said, as she recalled one occasion when a widow shed tears of joy after someone placed a handicapped bar in her shower.

This year, there are 52 teams working on homes, 18 of which are from Fort Benning.

"We are thrilled to have so many Fort Benning teams helping us out," Gerkin said. "We would not have been able to do so many homes without them."

Five Fort Benning teams worked in various homes in the Columbus area during the first weekend of the HOH kick-off.

Gerkin said that after each year's HOH event, the organization begins fund-raising for the next year.

Various organizations donate food, drinks and money for the HOH cause. Each team is given $1,500 to spend on each home.

Chuck Walls, Fort Benning's garrison manager and a HOH volunteer, trims hedges at Davis' home Sunday afternoon.

Most of the materials and supplies needed for the repairs are purchased from Lowe's, which sells the supplies at cost, plus 10 percent to all the HOH teams, she said.

Recipients of the HOH program may request an application or may be nominated by someone they know, Gerkin said.

"The only requirements are that they own their own home and are in need of repairs," she said.

At Davis' home, volunteers began by dismantling a shed in the back yard, getting rid of debris around the house, scraping the paint off the outside window trim, repainting and working in the kitchen, living room and bedrooms. Jordan High School will help out by building a handicapped ramp for the front of the house.

Command Sgt. Maj. Gregory Watlington, Basic Combat Training Brigade sergeant major, was one of the HOH volunteers at Davis' home and said it's very important to participate in programs like HOH.

"The way I look at life, it's not about what you achieve or gain; it's about how much of yourself you give to others," he said. "It's about sharing and giving."

The team had a good laugh Sunday evening after noticing they had painted all the windows and trim around the house with white primer instead of outdoor paint. But there's always this weekend.

This year's HOH event will end Sept. 24, with a ceremony at the Columbus Trade Center, which recipients, volunteers, friends, family, sponsors, and local and state dignitaries will attend, Gerkin said.

"All the recipients will receive a flag in a wooden case that has been flown over the nation's capitol," she said.

For more information about helping out this weekend with HOH teams, making a donation or nominating someone for next year's HOH event, call 569-7011.

Soldier Show takes 'The Heart of a Soldier'

Theme reflects current military family dynamic

Tim Hipps
U.S. Army Community Family Support Command Public Affairs

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — Communication between deployed Soldiers and their loved ones is the driving force behind "The Heart of a Soldier," theme of the 2004 U.S. Army Soldier Show, which is at 7 p.m. Oct. 2 on Wetherby Field. The gates open at 5:30 p.m.

Although every edition of the Army Soldier Show has a theme, few have woven a storyline throughout quite like this year's emotional rendition, said Victor Hurtado, Soldier Show director.

From letters to cellular telephone calls to e-mails, this is a song-and-dance display of how Soldiers touch base with home from the Global War on Terrorism — communications from the front lines and beyond.

The show touches on the realities of mothers away from their children, fathers who've yet to see their kids, couples who've put marriage on hold, brothers who long to hug their sisters and vice versa, and mothers and fathers, too.

"I hate to give too much of it away," Hurtado said. "It's still going to be a fun and energetic show, but I don't want to give away much more than the gist of the story — it does put a lot of focus on deployments."

Prepare to have your heartstrings tested, Hurtado warns. The show uses a lot of telepathic energy that exists between Soldiers and their loved ones experiencing sleepless nights at home, pondering if and when their hero will return. Songs originate from both sides of the issue, focusing on the significance one life can project upon so many.

"Part of what makes the show is the emotional impact of it," Hurtado said. "Parts are really happy, but there are going to be some emotions, definitely."

Eighteen performers, including a drummer, were selected from 138 Soldiers who auditioned for the show. Seven technicians and four drivers are also part of the cast that will conduct 110 performances during a six-month tour to 21 states, Germany, Italy, Washington, D.C., and Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Country, rock, pop, gospel, rhythm and blues, Latin and "'80s hair band rock," as Hurtado calls it, are intertwined throughout the show, including the works of Prince, ABBA and Outkast. Hurtado said the show "moves really quickly" and won't exceed 90 minutes.

The cast includes active-duty, National Guard and Reserve Component Soldiers, who vary in rank from private first class to first lieutenant, including a chemical operations specialist, a multi-channel transmission systems operator and a light-wheel vehicle mechanic.

Hurtado said military members and families can easily relate to the plot of this year's show while the general public should be entertained and educated.

"I think it's important to humanize our Soldiers to the American public, and what it takes to fight for America," said Hurtado, who performed in the Army Soldier Show while on active duty from 1986 through '89 and served 1990-92 as tour manager and assistant director. "I don't know that my mentality would've been the same if I hadn't been a Soldier myself. I don't think I would have had the sensibility to put this kind of show together."

Hurtado expresses great confidence in the cast.

COUNT UP TO WEALTH

Army Community Service

Pay more than the minimum on credit cards. Paying the minimum payment on your credit card can keep you in debt forever, especially if you continue to charge on it.

The minimum payment is normally only 2 to 2.5 percent of the balance. You could end up owing more after paying only the minimum balance than you did before you made the payment, depending on your interest rate and your balance.

When does it take 42 years to pay off $5,000? When your interest rate is 18 percent and you make only the minimum payment, even if you never add another charge to the balance. You could end up paying over limit and late fees. If your minimum payment is less than the finance charge, you could exceed your credit limit. Once you exceed your credit limit, late fees could be added because the excess is not paid. It's not too late to participate in Count Up to Wealth. There are three weeks left to get into the savings habit!

Prostate awareness may save lives

Danielle Wong
MCG Health

Prostate cancer.

The very words send a chill through most men. Yet too few really understand the disease and what can be done to diagnose, prevent and treat it.

"Prostate cancer begins in the cells of the prostate gland and can spread to other parts of the body, including the bladder, rectum and bone," said Dr. James Brown, a urologic oncologist at MCG Health System in Augusta, Ga.

Some of the leading risk factors for prostate cancer include:

• Age. The risk of prostate cancer increases with age.

• Diet. Some studies have found that a diet high in animal fat may increase a man's risk for developing prostate cancer, while a diet high in fruits and vegetables may decrease the risk.

• Heredity. If a man's father or an older sibling has had prostate cancer, he is at increased risk. Also, African-American men are at increased risk.

There is no clear cause for prostate cancer.

However, experts believe that you can reduce your risk for many types of cancer by taking health precautions, including:

• Not smoking.

• Eating a low-fat, high-fiber diet.

• Getting plenty of exercise.

Prostate cancer may initially be present with no symptoms. In fact, by the time symptoms occur, the cancer is often advanced.

This is why an annual digital rectal exam and a Prostate Specific Antigen test are recommended for men 50 and older to check for signs of prostate cancer.

African-American men and those with a family history of prostate cancer are recommended to begin prostate cancer checks at age 40.

Thanks to advances in treatment techniques, a cure is possible for a large percentage of men with the disease.

Treatments include:

• Prostate removal, via traditional or laparoscopic methods,

• Radiation therapy,

• Chemotherapy,

• Investigational therapies such as cryotherapy,

• Hormone therapy.

Remember, awareness of the risk factors and the importance of annual checkups can help lower your risk of developing prostate cancer and increase the chance it is caught sooner.

Show: To come to Benning Oct. 2

"This group has a fairly phenomenal set of instruments — of raw voices, of tongue, of intensity, of character, of attitude," he said. "They have the ability to have fun, but then lock into seriousness and focus. There are a lot of characters in the show, and I'm using their character.

"If I had one word for this cast, they're fearless — completely and utterly trusting of me, and fearless. And that, more than any kind of talent, is an incredible asset for a director to have."

The Soldiers are attached to the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center's Army Entertainment Detachment while on tour. They operate as a deployable military unit under the leadership of a detachment commander, first sergeant and a Soldier Show NCOIC who also hits the road in their 44-passenger bus, 18-wheel tractor-trailer and 15-passenger van.

Hurtado, a voting member of the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences' Grammy Awards who recently completed the directing course of study at Harvard University, is in his fourth year as artistic director.

Dennis Buck will be the show's musical director. Spc. Joey Beebe, Hurtado's right-hand man, is the associate producer in his fourth season. Broadway performer and acclaimed choreographer Tanya Gibson-Clark also returns.

Spc. Kevin Foreman, who has worked six years with Army Entertainment, is the technical director. Sgt. Randy Batarao, another former performer, serves as assistant director.

The cast continues the tradition of "entertainment for the Soldier, by the Soldier" established during World War I by Irving Berlin, the founding father of today's Army Entertainment program. Berlin, best known for "White Christmas" and "God Bless America," wrote the first U.S. Army Soldier Show while on active duty in 1918 at Camp Upton, Long Island, N.Y.

During World War II, he created another Soldier Show for Broadway: "This is the Army," which became a 1943 film featuring a military cast with stars Ronald Reagan and Joe Louis. At the request of General Dwight D. Eisenhower, the show toured for three years, performing for troops stationed in Europe and the Pacific.

GOH: Amen Corner a treat for all

That said, Bell maintains this is a play for EVERYONE. No matter what your skin color, no matter what your own religious convictions, there are themes that affect any number of people from all walks of life in the scenes of this play.

Take your pick:

• Confronting your past and owning up to loved ones about mistakes you've made.

• Matching your religious beliefs to the choices you make in your life.

• Uncovering and facing family secrets that have caused a divide or separation between husbands and wives, parents and their children.

• Reuniting with an estranged parent after years of believing they've abandoned you.

• Watching someone you have respected and looked up to for years take a facefirst nosedive from that pedestal you placed them on.

And although the subject matter is pretty heavy, Bell calls it "a spiritual drama with comical overtones."

I'll take his word for it and leave my tissues at home. Although, I'm going to be very upset if I end up sobbing like a baby in the back row.

Hopefully, you'll be there to make fun of me on the way out (look for a chick with smeared mascara, point and laugh), all the while appreciating that it was me who got you to go witness one of the finest productions on the modern American stage.

The Amen Corner will grace the stage at The Liberty Theater tonight through Sunday and Sept. 24 to 26. Shows are 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday nights, and 3 p.m. both Sundays. Tickets are $15; $12 for military, seniors and students; and $8 for kids 11 and younger.

National Pollution Prevention Week

What is pollution prevention? Pollution prevention is reducing pollutants or waste at their source and minimizing waste through recycling. National Pollution Prevention Week is observed during the third full week of September.

This year, pollution prevention week is Monday through Sept. 24. During this time, businesses, schools, and individuals can work together to reduce pollution and conserve the environment. The following "helpful hints" to reduce waste have been offered by the National Pollution Prevention Roundtable. There are many ways to reduce waste in our homes. Each individual has a part to play.

At home:

• Turn down the heat or air condition at night. Turn off lights and appliances not in use.
• Replace incandescent light bulbs with energy efficient fluorescent ones.
• Minimize water use by purchasing efficient toilets, faucets, and shower heads.
• Purchase rechargeable batteries, reducing the amount of trash going into land fills.
• Use little or no fertilizer or pesticides, especially near lakes and streams.
• Recycle plastics, glass, aluminum, newspaper, used motor oil, transmission fluid, and brake fluid.

At our jobs and businesses we can:

• Carpool, bicycle, walk, or take mass transportation to work.
• Use reusable lunch containers instead of paper and plastic bags.
• Use a copier that prints on both sides of the paper to reduce paper use.
• Use reusable cups for coffee and other beverages.
• Install energy saving lights.
• Seek business opportunities with environmentally sound companies.

Schools can also help the environment by:

• Reducing materials and recycling what is used.
• Performing a waste audit in the school.
• Installing energy efficient lighting in the school.
• Printing copies on both sides of each sheet of paper.
• Use washable dishes in the cafeteria.
• Use non-mercury-containing thermometers.

Let's work together to sustain the environment for the future!

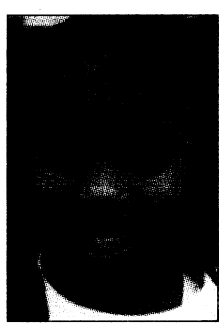
Being a 'successful' military brat means looking on the bright side

Andrea Hart
Faith Middle School



One of my greatest setbacks was when my family moved from Germany to Texas.

We were in Germany for four years, and I made as many friends as memories there.

Germany is where I learned to ski. It's where I played my first soccer championship. My friends and I visited every amusement park you could imagine — Euro Disney, Holiday Park, and Geiselwind Water Park ... . The list goes on and on.

My friends and I were so upset when we found out I would be moving. Of course, being familiar with the military, we knew this day would eventually come. Moving is such a big part of the whole military experience.

Somehow, this time was different.

It was hard to imagine leaving my friends and all the wonderful things centered in Germany. I did not know what to do.

My friends and I responded by trying to keep our minds on other things.

One day we decided to have a going away party at my house.

We played Twister, we talked and we hugged each other. We even walked to our favorite ice cream parlor for the last time to get a cone of German ice cream.

These last couple of days were really hard, and when it was time for everyone to go home, all you could hear were sniffles and tears and good-byes.

We all promised never to forget each other.

We haven't.

I still remember them and how much they meant to me.

Although leaving Germany and moving to Texas was difficult, I will never forget the good times I had there and the many friendships I shared.

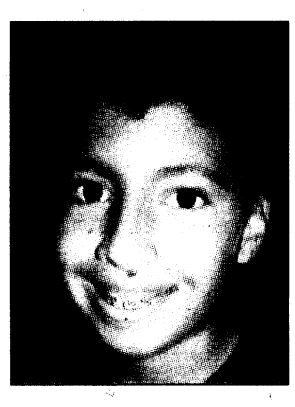
By letting go and moving forward, I learned to live with life's ups and downs and was able to overcome any fears of the unknown.

I have learned to be confident and more outgoing. Now, I do not hesitate to meet new people and challenges with an open mind.

After all, one must learn to accept and embrace what is military life.

We are doing an important job, and although it can be difficult and sad at times, it also opens the door to new friendships, experiences, and memories.

How have you dealt with a setback in your life?

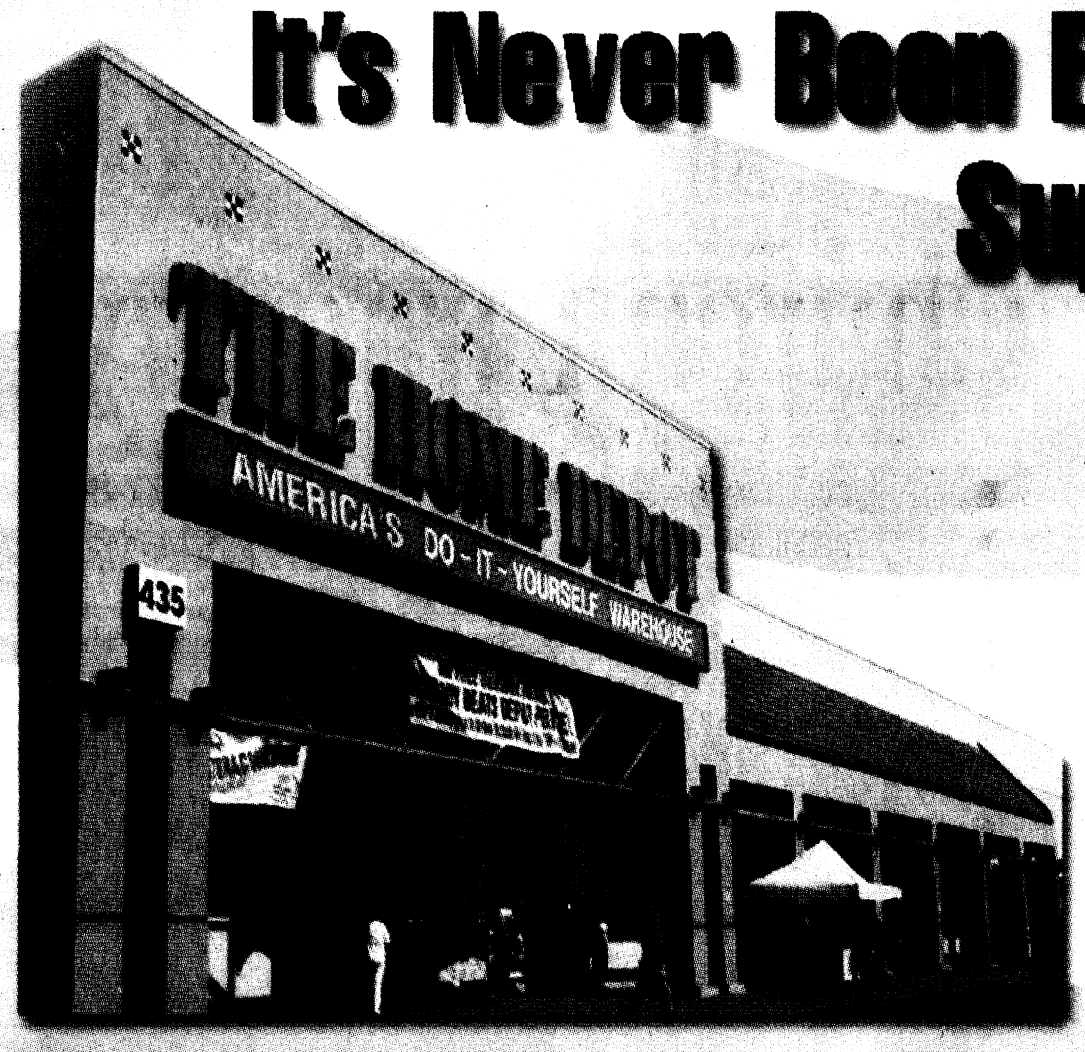


Jasmine Raw, 12, seventh grade

"When I left my friends in Germany, I felt sad. My attitude changed for the better when I realized I was moving to America — a chance of a lifetime. I feel lucky to have the opportunity to live in so many different countries, but I still wish my friends were with me. Hopefully, I'll see them again when I move back to Germany."

Kanieceya Brown, 12, seventh grade

"One of my biggest setbacks was when I moved to a new school. I felt really uncomfortable. I decided I would not talk to anyone and I'd be really quiet. For me, this was hard, because "talk" is my middle name. I also didn't go outside when I was home. All I did was drive my family crazy by complaining. After about a month, I finally opened up to people. I'll never do the silent thing again."



Alex Melendez, 12, seventh grade

"My setback was when I made a C on my report card. I was so angry with my teachers and blamed them for my grade. I had to learn it wasn't the teacher's fault that I got a C. It was all mine. I learned I needed to focus more on my work no matter what else comes up. My next report card was great. I made the A-B honor roll, and it was all because of my hard work."

Be a positive parent

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Ever feel like the parents in the Steve Martin comedy Cheaper By The Dozen?

Hopefully, none of your children have soaked anybody's underwear in raw meat lately and unleashed your neighborhood's dogs on them! But you may have experienced the same tug-of-war on the inside that this movie's mother and father did trying to balance life dreams, career aspirations and dedicated parenting.

When that perfect "opportunity" comes along, or a great career PCS comes knocking, and your internal buzzer goes off warning that each of those may come at a price, it sometimes seems as if all of life's expectations can't quite fit into the jar, can they?

What do you do when your expectations seem to run at cross-purposes to raising healthy, happy kids who love their mom and dad?

Gary Smalley, in a great book entitled The Key To Your Child's Heart, offers some proven steps that can help you raise motivated, obedient and loving children — and what parent doesn't want that?

Run down this checklist and see where you're doing great and where you hope to move forward some in expressing loving support:

Hawkins

• Unconditional commitment. I express to my child that I don't just love them because of what they do ... I love them because of whose they are ... mine!

• Scheduled times. Do my children know that I set aside life's demands regularly to just "be with them?"

• Am I emotionally available?

If my child needs emotional first aid, will he come to my ER? Is it attractive and accessible to her?

• Frequent eye contact. Do I look at my children, really look at them, when they are talking to me?

• Focused listening. On a scale of one to five, how well would my child say I listen?

• Tender touch. What's the most reassuring, nurturing touch my child enjoys? Is it gentle wrestling with the boys; is it holding and reading with girls; is it vice versa at your home?

Join me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sunday as we continue our series Cheaper By The Dozen — Building a 7th Heaven Family in a Jerry Springer World.

I'll also be giving away a free trip to Disney World this month.

Religious education vital to families

Tom Taylor
Protestant Director of Religious Education

This month, we focus on religious education. When you hear these words, what comes to your mind? Do these words have any special meaning to us?

Let me share with you a very personal experience I had as a small boy living in a small town in Kentucky.

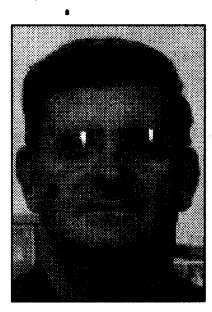
I had just finished the first grade, and my parents were trying to find some activity I could become involved in for the summer.

They looked in the newspaper, and found the local church was having a vacation bible school. They thought this would be good for me.

This was my first introduction to what we today call religious education. I thoroughly enjoyed my time there. I still remember my vacation bible school teacher, Mrs. Ray.

She shared some of the great Bible stories and made them come to life for me. I would go home each day and share my experience with my parents. I was sad to see that week come to an end.

But my teacher also shared with me that I could come to Sunday School each week and hear more great stories of the Bible.



I went home and asked my parents if they would take me to Sunday School, and they did not seem to be very excited.

Sunday came around, and when I got out of bed, I went into my parents' bedroom, woke them up and asked them to take me to Sunday School.

My father is a pharmacist, and he worked late on Saturday evenings, so he told me to go back to bed.

I waited until the next Sunday came, got up out of bed, and again went into my parents' bedroom asking them to take me to Sunday School.

REFLECTIONS

Taylor

Again I was told to go back to bed because they were tired.

The next Sunday came around. I got up from my bed, and went into my parents' room. I guess I was a little more vocal in asking them to take me to Sunday School because they finally got up out of bed and not only took me to Sunday School, but went with me.

This was the beginning of my faith foundation, and my parents, who at one time were active in the church, made religious education a priority in their lives.

I believe deep down my parents were always concerned about my spiritual welfare, but when they became involved, it made a very big difference in our family.

It brought us all closer to God and each other.

So, we can ask ourselves the question, "What can we do?"

Unfortunately, there is no easy, foolproof recipe that can be followed to guarantee results. However, by looking in the Bible, we can gain some insight into the role of the family.

The entire Old Testament is the story of the preparation of the family into which Christ was born. Their faithfulness and trust in God are virtues our families must imitate and encourage.

A good example of this legacy of the "family dynamic" is in the Old Testament book of Proverbs. Proverbs, though unfortunately overlooked as a "resource guide" by most modern families, is a highly valuable collection of sayings that have been used by parents in order to "train up the child in the way he should go ..." (Proverbs 22:6)

A close look at Proverbs shows the whole idea of religious instruction as a process in and of itself was foreign to the Old Testament mind.

Religious instruction was not something understood as an optional addition to a secular education as it is in today's society; rather, the entire process was seen as something intrinsically divine because it dealt with all dimensions of life in an integral way:

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge, but fools despise wisdom and instruction." (Prov. 1:7).

Moreover, Proverbs deals with not only the subjects of faith and morality, it also embraces the practical aspects of life: Marriage, business and even politics (See Prov. 11:1; 20:28).

Religious education is very important to our families. When we become involved in religious education and instruction, we will grow stronger in our faith and practice.

We have a lot to offer you in religious education and worship services at Fort Benning.

We will have a Religious Education Fall Festival from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at Gordon Field (next to the post movie theater). In the case of rain, the festival will be 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

There will be rides and activities for all ages, and there will be the opportunity to sign up for religious education programs to include Sunday School, Catholic Religious Education, Faith Formation, youth groups, Bible studies and women's groups.

I hope you will join us for a time of fun and fellowship.

If you would like more information concerning religious education opportunities, call 545-5508 or 545-4715 and we will be glad to assist you.

Bulls gore Devils

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment's Bulls trampled the 14th Combat Support Hospital's Red Devils, 17-5, for the post championship in intramural softball action Monday evening.

The Red Devils pounded CRC's softball team, 15 to 5, leaving them to pick up the third-place trophy just before running with the Bulls.

The Devils were able to keep their momentum throughout the first inning, scoring three runs to the Bulls two. But they ran out of steam in the second, letting the Bulls trot away with 11 runs unchallenged, bringing the score to 14-2 and the Devils were unable to close the gap.

"They just out hit us," said Chris Harris, Devils' coach. "They gave a super effort."

Clay Coleman, Bull's coach, said he was glad to see the team's hard work pay off with a championship title.

"We just came out, played hard and played together," he said. "It's a hitter's game."

Pacelli finds defensive end in 'Jelly'

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

At 5 feet, 10 inches tall and 230 pounds, Pacelli High School freshman Jervelous "Jelly" Drisdom is well on his way to being a force to be reckoned with as a defensive end on the varsity football team.

But the 14-year-old is learning the value of patience.

"My weakness is not knowing the mental aspect of the game," he said. "Not knowing the defensive formations, since this is my first year."

That's right. Jelly has never played organized football before. And yet Pacelli's head football coach Kevin Pettis recruited the untested player.

"I saw him when he came to watch a game at Doughboy Stadium while he was still at Faith Middle School," Pettis said. "I thought 'Wow, there is a big kid!'

"We talked to him and we thought we could make him into a great football player. So far, he hasn't let us down."

What made Jelly decide at 14 that he wanted to be a football player?

"I've always wanted to play football, but basketball always got in the way," he said. "Then when I couldn't get the position I wanted, I decided to finally go try football."

So football may not be number one for the young player, but he doesn't cut corners in football or in anything else he puts his mind to.

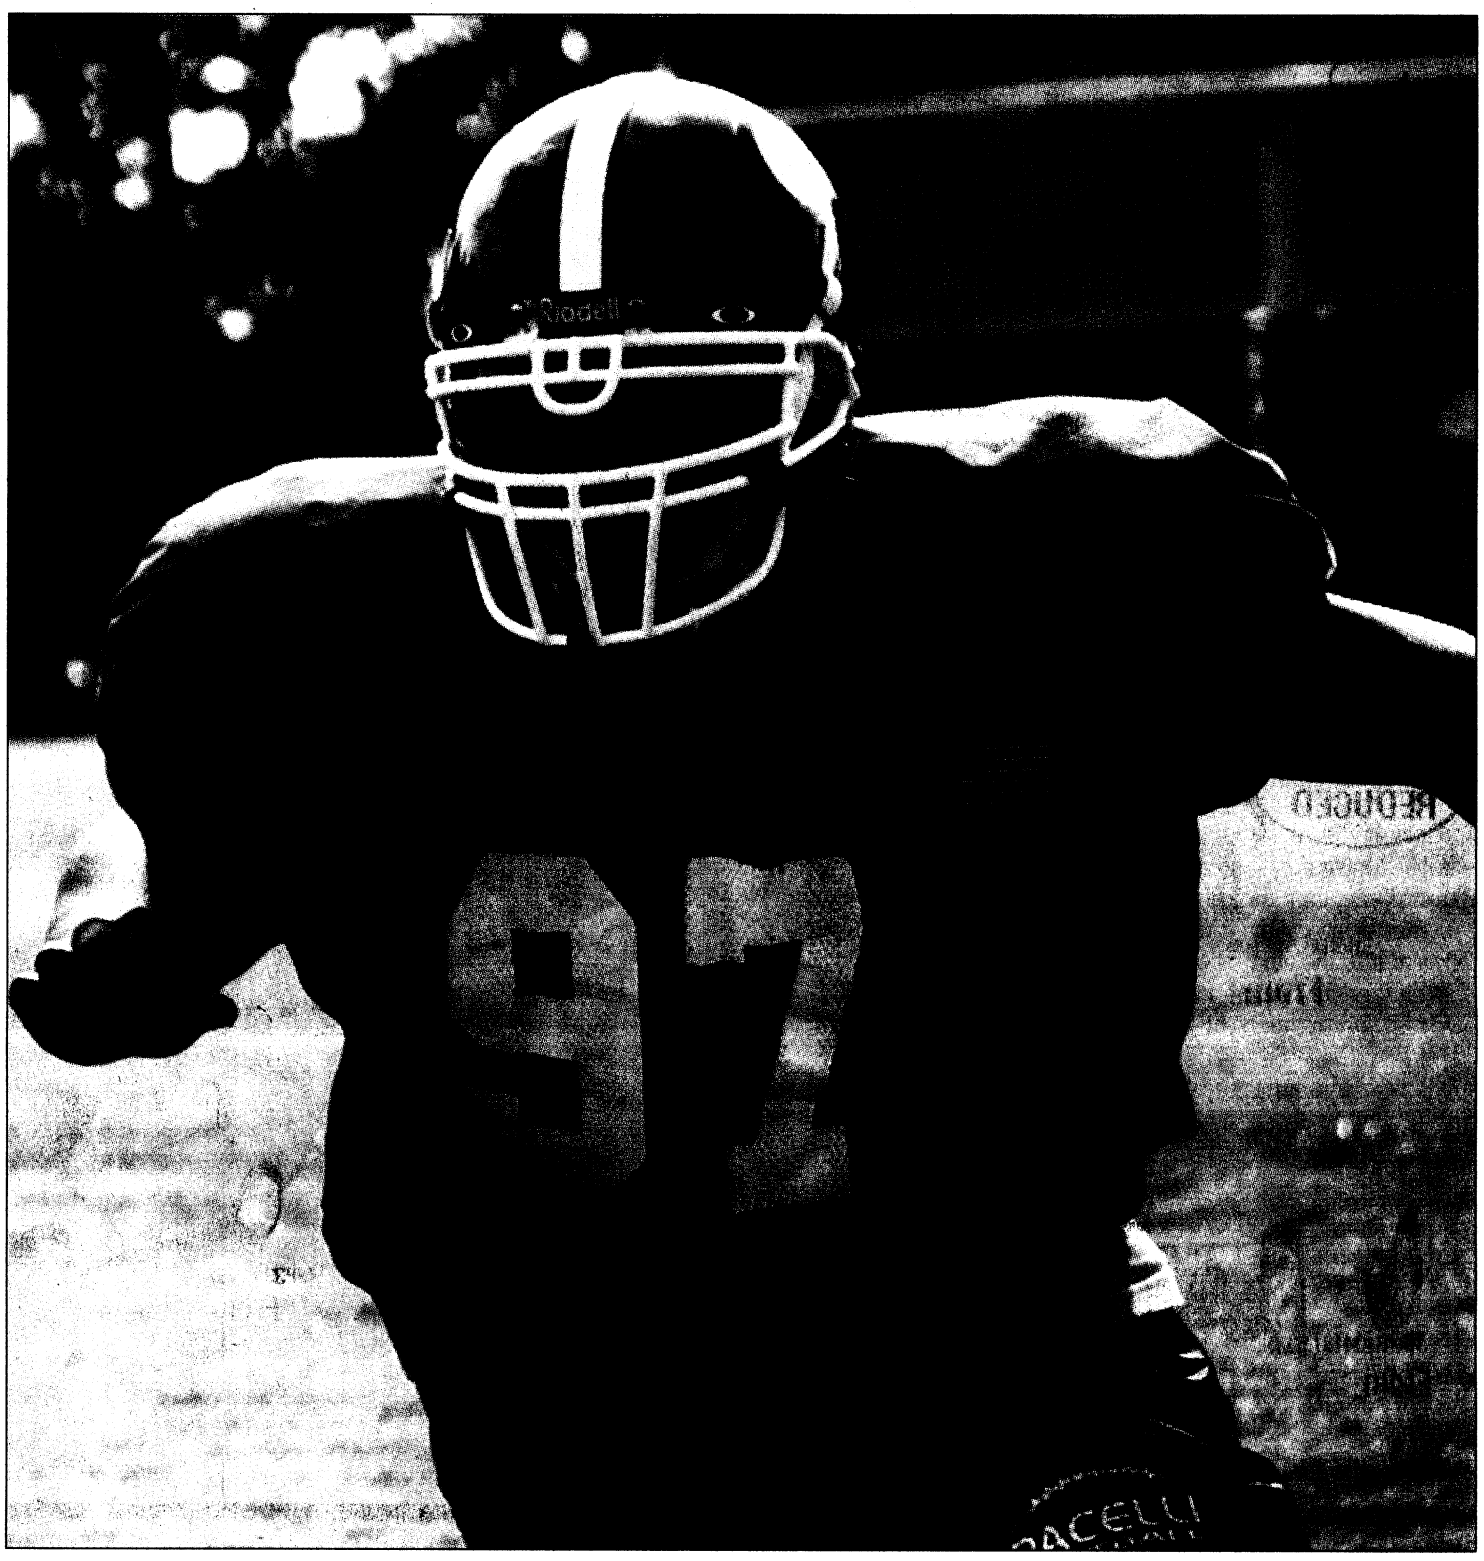
Academically, he is an honor roll student and his essay on the importance of attending college was published in a major national magazine.

He works to better himself and his peers in other ways too.

He is currently the president of the 100 Black Men Mentoring Program, which consists of about 30 middle and high school students from the local area.

While involved in that program for the last two years, Jelly has completed workshops in interpersonal skills, citizenship, drug awareness, gang awareness, career planning, personal finance, public speaking and thinking outside the box.

"Jervelous has been involved with 100 Black Men for nearly two years and has matured tremendously," said Columbus deputy city manager Isaiah Hugley. "He is smart, athletic, assertive and a leader — an outstanding young man with a bright future."



Juggling daily practices, football games, homework, church and 100 Black Men isn't as much of a challenge for him as for others because of some valuable lessons Jelly said he has learned.

"Over the years, my mom always taught me to manage my time and put what's important first," he said.

Jelly's mom, Shirlonda Lewis, works for the Directorate of Combat Developments here.

Grand opening attracts Soldiers from other posts

Paintball isn't just for kids.

Judging from the number of adult enthusiasts who attended the grand opening festivities Sept. 9, Fort Benning's paintball facility appeals to kids of all ages.

The Infantry Center's assistant commandant, Col. James Yarbrough, cut the ribbon outside the course, and within a few minutes, the first speedball round was underway.

Hector Arroyo stood outside the netting, preferring to watch as a fellow Soldier tested his newest paintball marker, the Angel WDP, a tournament gun able to launch up to 13 paintballs per second.

Arroyo, who arrived at Fort Benning last year, is looking forward to getting out on the course himself. He started playing paintball at age 16, in Puerto Rico, completely by accident.

"Some of my friends were playing," Arroyo said, "and I got hit by mistake. So I asked for a gun and started shooting at them. That was it for me."

Arroyo left his markers behind when he left for a tour in Korea. He found, to his surprise, a lot of people were playing. He called his wife, had her send his guns, and was out playing two weeks later.

When he finally gets out on the speedball course here, Arroyo said he'll be shooting paintballs that reflect his personality — red.

Paintball is a family affair of sorts for Deb McVey, a nurse with the 1207th U.S. Army Hospital, who was at the grand opening despite having an injured wrist that kept her sidelined. She and her daughter, Erica Perfetto, started playing more than a year ago with McVey's fiancé, Tim Tarr.

"Paintball is good practice," McVey said. Since she's assigned to a hospital, she said doesn't have the same requirements for weapons qualification as other Soldiers.

Perfetto, who works on Fort Benning, was the lone female outfitted and armed at the grand opening. She held her own and took some of the guys to task at the end of one round for continuing to shoot at her after she indicated she had been hit.

Although he's enjoyed the sport since he purchased his first marker in 1989, Tarr said he's looking forward to getting into the paintball industry in a few years when he hangs up his Army boots. The military policeman with the 561st Military Police Company at Fort Campbell, Ky., has played paintball all over the country and in Europe.

"I couldn't play in the tournament in Iraq," Tarr said, "because it was in Baghdad and I was in Mosul."

He said the speedball format at Fort Benning will be a money-maker. Because the field is twice as big as most, it is ideal for teams of up to 10, and would allow games to run longer than a few minutes.

Tarr owns nine markers and his own carbon dioxide tank with multiple fill stations.

"I have 15 years invested," he said. One of his more recent purchases is a $1,500 Angel Speed marker, in which the brochure calls "the fastest gun on Earth."

Hauling his gear, he said, requires a sport-utility vehicle, because some paintball fields don't have roads leading to them.

Tarr also needed his SUV to haul his gear to Fort Benning. He was on leave for the grand opening ceremony.

"I've been waiting patiently for this sanctioned field to open," he said. "I got status reports regularly."

MWR hosts Hunting Open House

Fishing, camping also covered

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's second annual Hunting Open House is scheduled for 6 to 10 p.m. Sept. 28 at the Officers' Club.

The Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation will host the open house to inform the community about outdoor recreation opportunities on Fort Benning.

Topics include hunting and fishing policies and procedures and DMWR rental equipment and sale items, such as licenses, permits and merchandise.

"We do this to try and encourage people to share the experience and take advantage of the open house to learn about the laws and regulations," said Col. Mike Beasock, event coordinator. "We also introduce new hunters to experienced hunters and show them what clubs are available, like the Rifle and Pistol Club and the BASS Club.

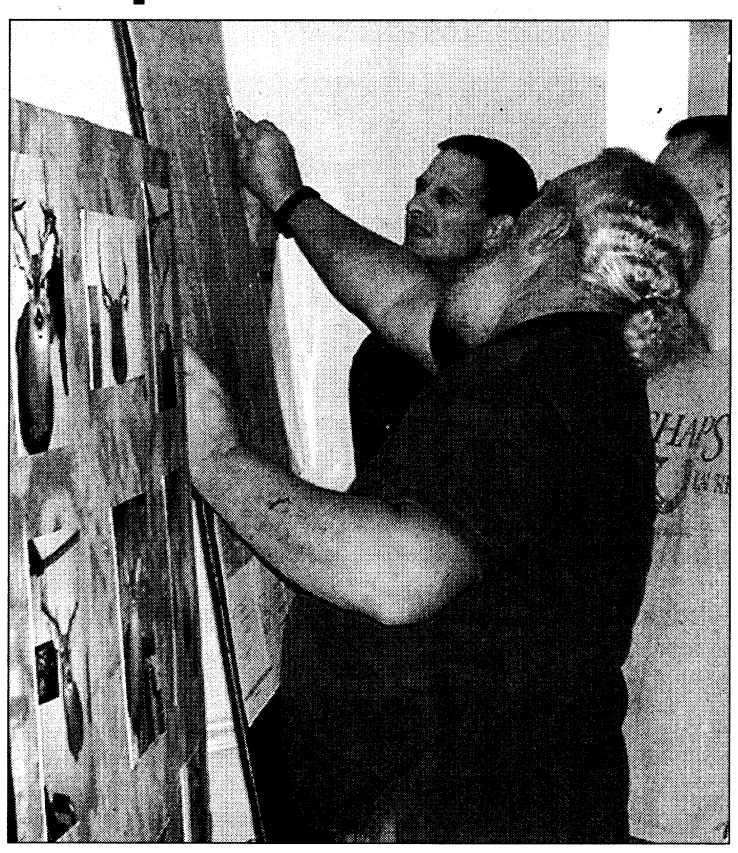
"We will also highlight the weapons policy on Fort Benning so hunters won't get in trouble," he said.

There will also be several important announcements during the open house, including plans for archery hunting on the Follow Me Golf Course and days that hunters can use English Range to zero their rifles for free, Beasock said.

Hunters will also be able to register their weapons and vehicles with post agencies during the open house.

"The open house is great for everybody whether you're a hunter or not," said Bill Brickner, one of last year's event coordinators. "They discuss camping and fishing regulations also."

"Last year's open house was outstanding," said Beasock. "Much better than expected."



Beasock said more than 500 people attended last year's event, which is a 10-fold increase from previous years. They also received an outpouring of support from the local community.

That support, he said, is one of the reasons for the increased attendance.

Vendors donated various items and services as door prizes for last year's open house, and Beasock said he has already seen similar support from the community for the upcoming open house.

The prizes for this year's event include free meat processing, restaurant and food coupons, cameras, scents and lures, and the list goes on, Beasock said.

For more information about the open house call Tabitha Smith, DMWR Marketing, at 545-3328.

Jelly: Football isn't only egg in basket

a good attitude and a humble spirit will take him a long way. If he acknowledges God in all ways, he will direct his path."

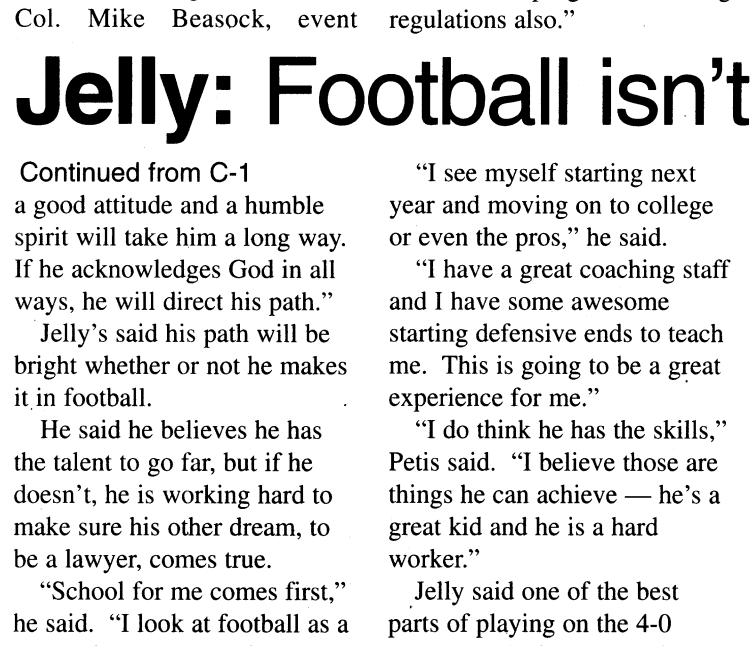
Jelly's said his path will be bright whether or not he makes it in football.

He said he believes he has the talent to go far, but if he doesn't, he is working hard to make sure his other dream, to be a lawyer, comes true.

"School for me comes first," he said. "I look at football as a way to keep me out of trouble and stay involved with the school. I have great speed and I know I can learn the game, so I do think I have what it takes to make it to the next level."

With football coming in second behind school, Jelly has big expectations for his sophomore season.

"I see myself starting next year and moving on to college or even the pros," he said.



"I have a great coaching staff and I have some awesome starting defensive ends to teach me. This is going to be a great experience for me."

"I do think he has the skills," Petis said. "I believe those are things he can achieve — he's a great kid and he is a hard worker."

Jelly said one of the best parts of playing on the 4-0 team, wasn't the necessarily the winning, but the guys he is playing next to.

"I couldn't ask for a better bunch of guys for teammates; they're like brothers," he said.

"I think we win because these guys don't play with talent alone, they play with heart."

Jelly talks shop with defensive coach Calvin Baker.

Jelly weighs in at about 230 pounds, and at 5 feet, 10 inches and only 14 years old, there is plenty of time to grow into a quick-footed wall of solid defense.

CG: Benning has new priorities

Spc. David Foley

Pvt. Christian Hurt, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, scales a rope at Eagle Tower on Sand Hill Monday afternoon. Dodge is one of about 11,000 basic training Soldiers on Fort Benning this week. Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley said basic training Soldiers are the post's top priority in light of the fact that the average time between graduation and deployment to a combat zone is just 27 days. See page A-12 for story.

IET Soldiers, modularity take focus

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning's focus has shifted during the past year — the new priorities are training initial entry Soldiers and getting modular, said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley during his State of the Infantry speech Tuesday morning.

About 1,500 people turned out for the annual update, during which Freakley addressed everything infantry, from training and equipment to the future fighting force.

But the most important focus right now, Freakley said, is the young infantryman filtering through the ranks on Sand Hill.

"Our infantry Soldiers joining the Army today, they know that, in all likelihood, they will be in close combat and kill the enemy," Freakley said.

Unlike some Soldiers, who enlist with the hopes that they'll never see combat, today's infantrymen sign up ready to serve their country on the frontlines of freedom, he said.

"Pat Tillman is the face of the infantry Ranger, who gave up a life in the NFL to come into the Army," he said. "But I'm telling you, there's thousands of them. There are thousands of Pat Tillmans."

And many of those Soldiers who gave up their lives on the outside for the chance to defend the principles which made their country free will get the chance to do just that within weeks of graduation.

"At one time, we trained Soldiers to join their units," Freakley said. "Today, we train Soldiers to go to combat.

"The average time between graduating from basic training at Fort Benning and going to combat is 27 days," he said. "We have to ensure that our Soldiers trained at Fort Benning are trained to join their units in

Groundbreaking makes history

National Infantry Museum building kicks off

History was made on a small patch of grass off of South Lumpkin Road Tuesday afternoon, as the groundbreaking ceremony for the National Infantry Museum took place after eight years.

"This ceremony is significant for many reasons," said Columbus Mayor Bob Poydasheff. "We believe that, when completed, this is going to be a signature facility for our community."

Poydasheff said the museum is vital in revitalizing the economy in Columbus South because it is expected to bring more than 300,000 visitors to the area every year.

"Visitors will come here from all over the country and all over the world to pay tribute to the great infantry Soldier who has made this country the great country that it is today," he said.

Retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White, chairman of the National Infantry Foundation, said this was a special day for Columbus, Fort Benning and all those who have sacrificed so much to protect the freedom of this nation.

"Building this museum sounds like it started 50 years ago, but really it was only about eight years ago, when Frank Lumpkin offered us funds to restore seven historic buildings from from the World War II era," he said.

The buildings include barracks that were saved from demolition in 1994. Once Lumpkin donated the Fort Benning will host its annual Hispanic Heritage Month celebration at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday at Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

The theme for this year's event is "Hispanic Americans: Making a Difference in Our Communities and Our Nation" and is being sponsored by the Equal Opportunity Office.

Master Sgt. Vincent McNeill, EOO NCOIC, said the main purpose for the free event is to educate the Fort Benning community.

"Education is the bottom line," McNeill said. "It's important that we recognize the diversity in the Army. We are all part of the same Army."

COMBINED FEDERAL CAMPAIGN

Charity begins at home

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Hair falling out? Itchy skin condition? Concerned about how horses past their prime are cared for? Want to bring to justice smugglers of orangutans? Lack self-esteem? Or how about a compulsive disorder, like my mother-in-law, who gets upset if the toilet paper isn't hung the right way.

Guess what — the Combined Federal Campaign addresses all these issues, in addition to the more familiar ones, such as cancer and heart disease research, care of poor children and proselytizing one's favorite religion.

I firmly believe everyone can afford to give a couple of dollars a pay period to some organization. And if you'll look over the book, you'll find some charity that affects you.

You can also increase your vocabulary if you study the descriptions. For instance, alopecia areata (al-oh-PEE-shah air-ee-AH-tah) is a highly unpredictable, autoimmune skin disease resulting in the loss of hair on the scalp and elsewhere on the body. This common, but very challenging and capricious disease affects approximately 1.7 percent of the population overall, including more than 4.7 million people in the United States alone. Due to the fact that much of the public is still not familiar with alopecia areata, the disease can have a profound impact on one's life and functional status, both at work and at school.

Sjögren's ("SHOW-grins") syndrome is a chronic disease in which white blood cells attack the moisture-producing glands. The hallmark symptoms are dry eyes and dry mouth, but it is a systemic disease, affecting many and may cause fatigue. It is one of the most prevalent autoimmune disorders, striking as many as 4 million Americans.

Like I said, I donate, but I'm very particular about who I donate to.

If an organization has administrative costs in the double digit figures, I skip over it.

I won't donate if they don't have a Web site so I can learn more about them and I really turn and run if they have a Web site advertised, but I can't pull it up. Something fishy there.

My double digit policy keeps me from donating to some organizations that I would otherwise donate to, but hey, you've got to draw the line somewhere.

I used to not donate to the Fort Benning and Columbus charities because their admin costs were double digits.

They are now in the single digit category, so I donate. After all, charity begins at home and 9001, Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association (even though they don't have a Web site) is top on my list. They do great things for our Soldiers and their families.

I think the United Way of Chattahoochee Valley should get some of my bucks, too, since they're going to help my neighbors. I also like what the USO does for Soldiers. I don't give to the national — their admin costs are 30 percent, but the local is only 3 percent.

And I also toss some money at the Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center.

They have a great little facility right off post that you can visit and on certain weekends they offer programs on local flora and fauna.

So, whether you're inclined to donate to Dystrophic Epidermolysis Bullosa Research Association or Alley Cat Allies, it doesn't matter.

Those of us who have, need to give.

When its more than just being moody

Lt. Col Virginia D. Yates
Fort Stewart, Ga.

Depression is very common. Some doctors say nearly 20 million Americans experience depression and that only one in 10 will seek medical attention for it. Depression is more than just being moody or feeling "the blues."

Depression is marked by long periods of feeling very sad and losing interest in everyday events that once were rewarding. Depression affects how one behaves, speaks and thinks. Depression can make people not feel like themselves. Every little thing may be bothersome. There may be nagging aches and pains that don't seem to go away.

The causes of depression are not always clear. Depression can run in families. Scientists believe the brain may not be getting a balance of the naturally occurring chemicals serotonin and norepinephrine. Depression may appear to be caused by an event or for no apparent reason at all.

The symptoms of depression may differ from person to person. Some symptoms may include a persistent sad mood, lack of pleasure in activities, change in sleep or eating habits, or a feeling of worthlessness. There are several signs and symptoms that help a healthcare professional or doctor determine if a person has depression. These include:

- Depressed or irritable mood most of the day — nearly every day
- Loss of interest or pleasure in activities (such as hobbies, work, sex or being with friends) most of the day — nearly every day
- A sudden change in weight or appetite
- Inability to sleep or sleeping too much
- Agitation or restlessness (observed by others)
- Constant fatigue or loss of energy
- Frequent feelings of worthlessness or guilt
- Difficulty concentrating or making decisions
- Frequent thoughts of death or suicide

National Depression Screening Day is Oct. 7. There will be five locations on Fort Benning for screening — Infantry Hall's Classroom 7, the Main Mall Post Exchange, and Troop Medical Clinics 1, 2 and 3.

Soldiers or family members who feel too inhibited to use these on-post services, can call the confidential Army-One-Source free, 24-hour, seven-day-per-week service at (800) 464-8107 or www.armyonesource.com (user ID: army, password: onesource)

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Parent upset about Stowers' traffic

I'm upset about the way things are going at Stowers. Last year, the parents had such a good relationship with the teachers and the principal. That's no longer the case. We're no longer made to feel welcome.

The new principal changed the rules without anything in writing to enforce what she says is post policy. We have to sign in and show ID when we drop them off in the morning. That's crazy. After 8:30, I understand, but there are more than 600 students in that school.

We as parents want to be treated as if the school is "ours."

One more thing: last year, the youngest grades were dismissed 15 minutes early to alleviate pick-up congestion. That policy was changed this year, and all the students were released at the same time. The resulting traffic jam required as many as five MPs at one time, and pick-up took nearly an hour. Some kids gave up and started walking home.

When that didn't work, rather than revert to the system that worked last year, all the students are being released 15 minutes early. So there's still a traffic mess, but it's cleaned up before the teachers go home.

I realize change isn't always easy, but it doesn't have to be this hard. Please take a good look at how successful things worked last year. Don't change what wasn't broke.

— Evelyn Livermore
Fort Benning

Principal's response:

First and foremost, let me tell you how happy I am to be at Stowers Elementary School.

Change is often uncomfortable because, "the way things used to be," is no longer the case, and believe me, when I first arrived at Stowers, I was out of my comfort zone.

I know that some of the changes this year have taken parents out of their comfort zone, as well.

Let me explain why these changes are necessary.

Signing in — Department of Defense Education Activity Safe Schools Policy states that all visitors must sign in. This is done to provide a record of the identity of the visitor, the time and duration of the visit, and other pertinent control data. It further states that issuance of a visitor badge must be provided and worn during the duration of the visit. As you can see, this is not an arbitrary change.

Identification Check — The regulation mentioned also gives principals the authority to request proof of identity. I chose to require all visitors to show a valid picture ID during the first month of school due to new faces in the office and parents new to Stowers.

Now that the office staff and administrators are able to recognize familiar faces, we will begin to use personal recognition as a means of identification; however, this may mean that while one person recognizes you, another person may not, and as a result, you could still be asked to show proof of identity.

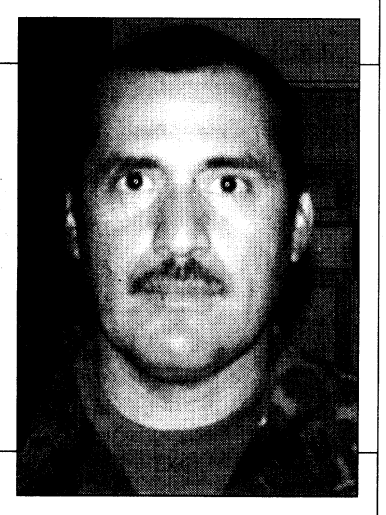
Getting more than 650 students and adults (consisting of 39 classrooms) out of the building in an orderly, safe, and quick manner has been a challenge!

Please accept our apologies for the confusion that occurred while we tried different dismissal procedures until we found the one that works best. While the current plan isn't perfect, it definitely works better, and is faster than anything else we have tried.

We will continue to monitor the traffic situation closely. I encourage parents to share any ideas they might have for improvement in this area.

Please know that the education of Stowers' students, as well as their safety and security, are my utmost priorities.

We have a dedicated faculty and staff who are committed to doing their best so that your children can do their best. If you have questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to ask for a conference with your child's teacher. If Clint. Wise, assistant principal, or I can be of assistance to you, please call upon us.



Angie McPherson
Stowers' Elementary School principal

Operation Ivan Recovery ruled success

Post officials take action after Hurricane Ivan

Spc. David Foley

As Hurricane Ivan made its way through the Bahamas, leaving a path of devastation in its wake, Fort Benning officials hoped for the best and prepared for the worst.

Ivan passed within 110 miles of Fort Benning, pouring 3.21 inches of rain on post and whipping the trees with 49 mph wind gusts.

"We definitely didn't get the wind speed we were expecting," said Jeff Gould, 17th Air Support Operations Squad 3-D Research Corporation. "It was a category three when it made landfall. It could have been a lot worse, especially with the possibility of tornadoes."

While most post residents didn't experience anything other than a rainy day away from the office, there was a lot going on behind the scenes.

The Directorate of Operations and Training saw the possibility of a devastating storm and developed a plan to ensure the safety of the Fort Benning community and accommodate evacuees from Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

Fort Benning staff pulled together under a new system called the National Incident Management System to prepare for the storm.

The NIMS requires all government agencies at the local, state and federal level to incorporate an Incident Command System.

The ICS is based on the military system of grouping functional areas into staff sections, and the system was incorporated for the Fort Benning staff for Hurricane Ivan.

"It worked well," said Jeff Shuck, chief, G-3 Plans and Operations. "We have some work to do yet for full incorporation. However, the staff was very flexible and functioned very well in their respective sections."

The Fort Benning staff teamed up with Evacuation Control personnel from Eglin and worked split operations between the Evacuation Control Center and the Installation Operations Center.

Fort Benning and its partners from the Air Force provided shelter to more than 200 evacuees from the local area and Eglin Air Force Base.

Col. Greg Williams, of Eglin's team, said he was very pleased with the support that his team and the evacuees received from Fort Benning.

"Installation staff members should be proud," Shuck said. "Not only were we able to support Hurricane Ivan evacuees, but we retained the ability to perform the Infantry Conference as well.

"The Infantry Conference will be critical in sharing those lessons learned from recent combat in Afghanistan and Iraq," he said. "From this perspective, our staff was not only doing its part for the domestic emergency of Hurricane Ivan, but it was supporting the Global War on Terror, as well."

The Fort Benning Commissary had its hands full ensuring that Soldiers and their families had enough of the necessities to ride out the storm.

One of the Commissary's main suppliers, Grocery Supply Company, is located in Pensacola, Fla., and was unable to deliver goods.

Commissary managers searched for other venues where they could make one-time buys to ensure that post residents had the supplies they needed.

The Commissary made several purchases from Super Valu and was able to keep most of the regularly stocked items on the shelves.

Shortages were limited to Spam, sugar, pork, water, batteries, frozen chicken and one type of beans, most of which were only out of stock for one day.

"If you can't get it in, you can't put it on the shelves," said Len Langford, store administrator. "You may not have been able to get the type of green beans you wanted, but you got green beans.

Spc. Nikki St.Amant

Several of Fort Benning's trees were unable to withstand the high winds and rain brought on by Hurricane Ivan, which created minimal problems on post, but required machinery to clean up.

"We had no complaints from any of the patrons, and we appreciate their understanding," he said.

In spite of the storm, the Commissary ran normally during the storm and stayed open until 7 p.m. to let Soldiers stock up on last-minute items after work, Langford said.

"We owe a lot to the installation staff, as well," he said. "(Lieutenant) Colonel (Sean) Finnigan, (director of Public Safety), sent over some people to check on us during the storm and the garrison sergeant major sent Soldiers over to help clean up afterward."

The clean-up effort was coordinated by Fort Benning garrison and DOT, and was headed up by garrison Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Fortson.

Fortson and the installation staff saw a need for a postwide clean-up effort before the Infantry Conference and worked with Col. Rick Riera, garrison commander, to initiate Operation Ivan Recovery.

Once the plan was developed, post officials pulled together a detail of about 200 Soldiers, who worked Saturday and Sunday picking up broken branches and debris that were scattered across post by the winds.

"This has been a tremendous effort," Fortson said. "I had an opportunity to work with a lot of great Soldiers from all over Fort Benning, and it went tremendously well."

One of the few casualties of the storm was the Fall Festival, a carnival-type event that brings together all the religious services on Fort Benning.

The festival was scheduled for 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at Gordon Field, but was rescheduled for 2 to 6 p.m. Oct. 3.

"We originally canceled because the ground was too soggy and it created safety issues," said Tom Taylor, Protestant director of religious education. "But nothing has changed except the time and date."

Another team that jumped into action after the hurricane was the Staff Judge Advocate's Claims Division.

"We didn't have a lot of claims because of Ivan, but we had a few from Frances," said Cassandra Burnett, claims assistant. "Frances caused more claims because of the power outages and a lot of people lost food.

"A lot of people didn't realize they could claim food," she said. "But once the word got out, we had several people file claims."

Burnett encouraged those who think they may have a claim to visit the Claims Office in Building 5 to see if their claims are valid.

See page A-10 for information about evacuees.

Benning pays tribute to new 'Doughboys'

Friends, infantry Soldiers honor new inductees

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's a good thing the creators of the infantry's Doughboy Award didn't stipulate that their awardees could only be straight leg infantry. If they had, the selection committee would have had to pass right over this year's nominees.

Friends and members of the infantry recognized retired Sgt. Maj. of the Army William A. Connelly and retired Lt. Gen. John Norton for their more than 65 years of combined active military service and their efforts on behalf of infantrymen stationed across the globe.

Connelly and Norton join a list of recipients that includes Bob Hope, the first recipient in 1980, Secretary of State Colin Powell, and retired Gen. Matthew Ridgway. In 1996, the chief of infantry began selecting two awardees each year, one officer and one enlisted.

The term "doughboy" was originally used during border conflicts in Texas prior to World War I, when Soldiers training along the Rio Grande became covered in the white dust of the adobe soil. Mounted troops called them "adobes." Over time, it was shortened to "dobies," which became "doughboys." The raw recruits being rushed to Europe in World War I became known as doughboys.

But when the Army got Connelly and Norton, neither of them were raw recruits.

Connelly had four years under his belt as a tank crewman in the Georgia National Guard before entering active duty. He rose through the enlisted ranks to become the sixth Sergeant Major of the Army in 1979.

He was stationed once at Fort Benning in the late '50s as an operations sergeant and platoon sergeant in B Company, 826th Tank Battalion, in the Harmony Church area.

"They didn't allow us on Main Post," Connelly said. "And because I didn't spend much time here, that's one of the reasons I'm very honored with this Doughboy Award."

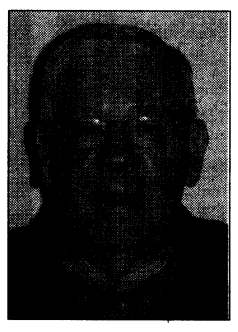
Connelly did have the opportunity to work more closely with infantry Soldiers during his tour in Vietnam with B Troop, 1st Squadron, 9th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Cav., Division. As a troop first sergeant, Connelly had platoons coded "red, white and blue." His "blue" platoon — infantry, of course.

"I decided if I was going to 'talk the talk,'" Connelly said, "I was going to have to 'walk the walk.'"

So he began learning what his Soldiers did, working with his fires platoon and even shooting the 40 mm gun from the front seat of one of his Cobra gunships.

"But my love turned out to be the blue platoon," he said. "And I always said, if you lose your tank, you become infantry."

So Connelly went on patrol with his infantrymen, made contact with the enemy and had himself quite a firefight.



"I'm not going to talk about exactly what happened," he said, "but the Soldiers said we did great."

Before the next mission, a young Soldier found Connelly in his command post bunker, wanting to know if he'd be going out on patrol with them again. Connelly had become their "lucky charm," because when he went with them, they made contact with the enemy.

"I thought, I'm 39. I'm not looking for a firefight," Connelly said.

Although he's been retired for 22 years and isn't completely up-to-date with all the ins and outs of transformation, Connelly is very much in touch with what Soldiers are experiencing.

He spent several years with a tank company in the Dominican Republic as a show of force with the 82nd Airborne Division. He was a first sergeant and thought that was the end of his career.

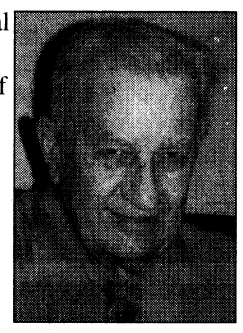
Connelly

"I loved that job," he said, "and I haven't been fully in charge of anything since then, but I know what the Soldiers are going through in the streets of Iraq."

He said his work in the Dominican Republic was much the same, operating in towns, not knowing who was going to shoot at them. Sitting on a street intersection one day watching a "hot spot," Connelly said he watched an allied unit kill an elderly woman who had been in the area.

He said the petite woman was carrying about twice her weight in guns and ammunition under her loose dress.

"The Soldiers in Iraq are doing this on a much larger scale," he said, "and for much higher stakes. I didn't like that type of war then, either."



As sergeant major of the Army, Connelly spent four years improving the quality of the Army's Soldiers, by education and by discipline, and sponsored initiatives to improve the quality of life for Soldiers and families.

Even with his impressive resume and tireless efforts on behalf of the infantry and all Soldiers, Connelly said he was surprised to be chosen for the award.

"I truly appreciate this award," he said. "It's one I cherish because I cherish my Combat Infantryman Badge. I wear it more than any other medal. A lot of people, I'm surprised, don't know what (the CIB) is … and that's a good way to start a speech."

By the time Connelly began his Army career, Norton was already a veteran of one war with 13 years of experience.

An "Army brat," Norton was born at Fort Monroe, Va., after his father shipped out to fight in World War I. Now 85, the retired three-star general said he loves school, Boy Scouting, and still gets "real sentimental" when he thinks of his third-grade teacher.

Norton

He grew up playing capture-the-flag like it was real, signed up to go to the Citizens Military Training Camp when he was in the 11th grade, and suffered through 60 days and several thousand pieces of dirty dishes.

"But I liked it so much, I joined the Virginia National Guard," Norton said, "and I applied for West Point and the Naval Academy." Although first accepted at Navy, Norton wisely surrendered that appointment and enlisted in the Army until he could get an appointment for West Point. And while at West Point, the young cadet "came under the influence" of then Capt. Jim Gavin.

"Gavin was my mentor," Norton said. "He galvanized all of us — set us on fire."

And on fire Norton was, through his entire career. From his days with the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment during World War II to his final Army duty as the deputy commander for NATO's Allied Forces Southern Command, he gave every job his best effort.

In 1956, Norton added to his skills and qualifications by completing the Army's Aviation School at Fort Rucker, Ala., eventually logging more than 3,100 hours of flight time, in and out of combat.

Although no longer a "straight leg" infantryman, Norton commanded a battle group in the 1st Cav. Div. in Korea, before returning for more duty in aviation as the Army's top aviator.

"We had thousands of aircraft coming off the production line," Norton said, "but we didn't know really what to do with them."

He spent the next few years testing, developing tactics organizational structures and budgets for airmobile organizations — units designed to cover large combat areas.

But the infantry wasn't finished with Norton, assigning him as the assistant commandant of the Infantry School from 1963 to 1965, where he said he had the distinction of being a part of the move from the old headquarters into Infantry Hall, and worked to revolutionize infantry tactics.

"We had to transfer all instruction from how to fight a World War II enemy to how to fight the Viet Cong and the NVA," he said.

Norton keeps abreast of current operations, saying his main concern is what he learned from Gavin — the importance of intelligence.

"It drives everything else," he said. "I tell everybody, beginning with young platoon leaders, to make their own intelligence. They have to work with the local population now more than ever and work overtime anticipating what the enemy will do."

Norton attended several of the Infantry Conference seminars, pleased with what he called the "tremendous amount of talent at all levels of command."

But Norton perhaps had the biggest impact on the current generations of infantrymen during his 10 years as honorary colonel of the 505th.

Brig. Gen. Ken Keen, assistant division commander for the 7th Infantry Division at Fort Carson, Colo., was the battalion commander for 1st Bn., 505th PIR, in 1994 and invited Norton to be part of the unit's officer professional development program. Norton made three combat jumps with the 505th — two into Italy and the third on D-Day.

"My lieutenants and captains got up to brief what the unit did, based on what they had read," Keen said, "and Norton and the others said, 'Wait, that's not what happened. I was over there.' He is living history."

Norton and Connelly received their awards, presented on behalf of all infantrymen, at a dinner Wednesday at the Officers' Club. The award is a chrome replica of the helmet worn by early American expeditionary forces.

Changing enemy contributes to transformation

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The current transformation of the Army to a modular, brigade-centric structure was a hot topic at the Infantry Conference Sept. 21.

Maj. Gen. Robert Mixon, chief of staff and deputy director of the Training and Doctrine Command's Futures Group, brought the latest information to Soldiers of all ranks, retired and on active duty, gathered in Marshall Auditorium. At issue, Mixon said, was a changing enemy and the need for the Army's framework to change.

Mixon said the chief of staff of the Army used a $100 bill analogy to talk about transformation, where the current structure is a series of $100 bills that get broken every time someone wants to buy a stick of gum.

"The premise of modularity is the concept of packaging," Mixon said, "making a full-spectrum force of $5s, $10s, and $20s."

During the past year, Mixon said a large number of stakeholders were brought in and involved in the modularity discussions — everyone from Soldiers to professional critics. The combatant commanders gave input into the type of forces they wanted through face-to-face discussions with the modularity team and their operational needs assessments.

"We've learned a lot from the 3rd Infantry Division," Mixon said, "and we've refined our design from what they taught us. Not just from combat operations, but also how (a unit) fights as part of a joint task force in stability and support operations."

While the core of transformation happens at the brigade level, Army leadership also identified the need to reorganize and create two functional, war fighting headquarters above the brigade. The UEx is the division-level, war fighting headquarters and the UEy will function at the Army and joint, theaterwide support level. Both, Mixon said, will have "tailorable" command and control packages.

The UEx will have four command posts — two tactical, one mobile and one main — and will contain its own life-support and security elements. He said they will also be joint task force, army force capable as well as have a robust liaison capability.

"The UEx will have a lot of qualities that a lot of us have been looking for, already in the TOE," Mixon said.

From the outset, he said, the UEy will have a complete joint-focused capability with intelligence, sustainment, network, civil affairs and civil-military operations assets. The size of each of those assets will depend on the theater the headquarters is operating in. Mixon said the projection ability of the higher headquarters gives the national leadership a broad range of options. And, he said, it's important to have that structure in place because "you can't build at the eleventh hour and be successful."

Mixon said all units are currently on a "glide path toward transformation," showing the audience the timeline "in case anyone didn't know they were transforming." He said the Army's 33 active-duty brigades have to convert to 43 in the next two years. Including National Guard and Reserves, there will eventually be 77 brigades

Those brigades, he said, will fall into one of four types — infantry, heavy, Stryker and future combat systems — and the Infantry school is the link between the modular force and the FCS.

"We're on a glide path to bring FCS strategic technology to the (other three brigades) within the next 10 years," Mixon said.

He said the Stryker brigades are being left as originally built, but the infantry and heavy brigades would see the most changes to ensure they were no longer built on the "$100 bill framework."

Support brigades, like aviation, fires and sustainment are also being organized so their battalions are assigned depending on the mission.

Mixon said the first issue with transformation involves educating the force so all Soldiers understand what is happening. Resourcing, he said, is a big challenge, but a bill that must be paid, not only by getting the additional equipment and technology into the units, but also by getting the personnel at every level.

The transformation has training and leader development implications which Mixon said the team is aggressively pursuing solutions for.

"The Soldiers are ready to handle the span of complexity of the new force," he said. "We have the most experienced force we've had in three decades."

He said the team continues to assess and refine the modularity designs, learning as they go by following units, like the 3rd Inf. Div., on their rotation to the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif. There they identified the need for about 20 more staff positions to handle the new brigade troops battalion organization.

"Truth has a date-time group," Mixon said. "But, by golly, we are going to continue to learn and grow, but we've built a force we think is relevant and capable."

He said the one constant of the transformation process is the Soldier, the centerpiece of the unit.

"Everything we do is designed to support the Soldier," he said.

Infantry Futures aligns missions of directorates

Agencies' goals combine to better Army

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

When the U.S. Army Infantry Center reorganized at commanding general Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley's direction in January, a new directorate was created.

In the vast network of Army entities responsible for managing personnel, developing Soldiers and equipment and planning for the future of the world's greatest fighting force, this new directorate aligns several agencies on a common path toward developing the infantry force on current and future battlefields.

Infantry Futures, under the direction of Col. Kevin Wilkerson, encompasses the Soldier Battle Lab, Infantry Futures Group, Office of Infantry Proponency and the Directorate of Combat Developments — all agencies that previously stood alone.

IFG chief Lt. Col. Scott Power said the main reason for the reorganization was to ensure that all those agencies were working toward the same goals without duplication of effort.

Within IF, each of those subordinate directorates has its own large-scale mission to execute.

The Soldier Battle Lab is responsible for experimentation with equipment and tactics, including robotics, Unmanned Arial Vehicles, MOUT training, weapons systems, vehicles, joint operations training and dozens of others.

"Since we've had Futures, I've seen a change in that there has been an increased focus on experimenting for the current and future force," said Ed Davis, SBL deputy director.

DCD tackles the job of determining how the infantry is and will be organized and equipped and how it will fight. It ensures materiel requirements are met and develops concepts for future force efforts.

"As combat developers, it's our job to determine the Army requirements for future systems to enable the units in the field to better fight in war now and in the future," said Frank Stone, deputy director of Combat Developments.

Stone said the DCD mission hasn't really changed, but said the assortment of directorates responsible for the infantry fighting force did need the organization and structure that has come with IF.

> "The Futures Group has the ability to pull up directorates it needs to do what is best for the Infantry School and the Soldiers in the field."
> Frank Stone
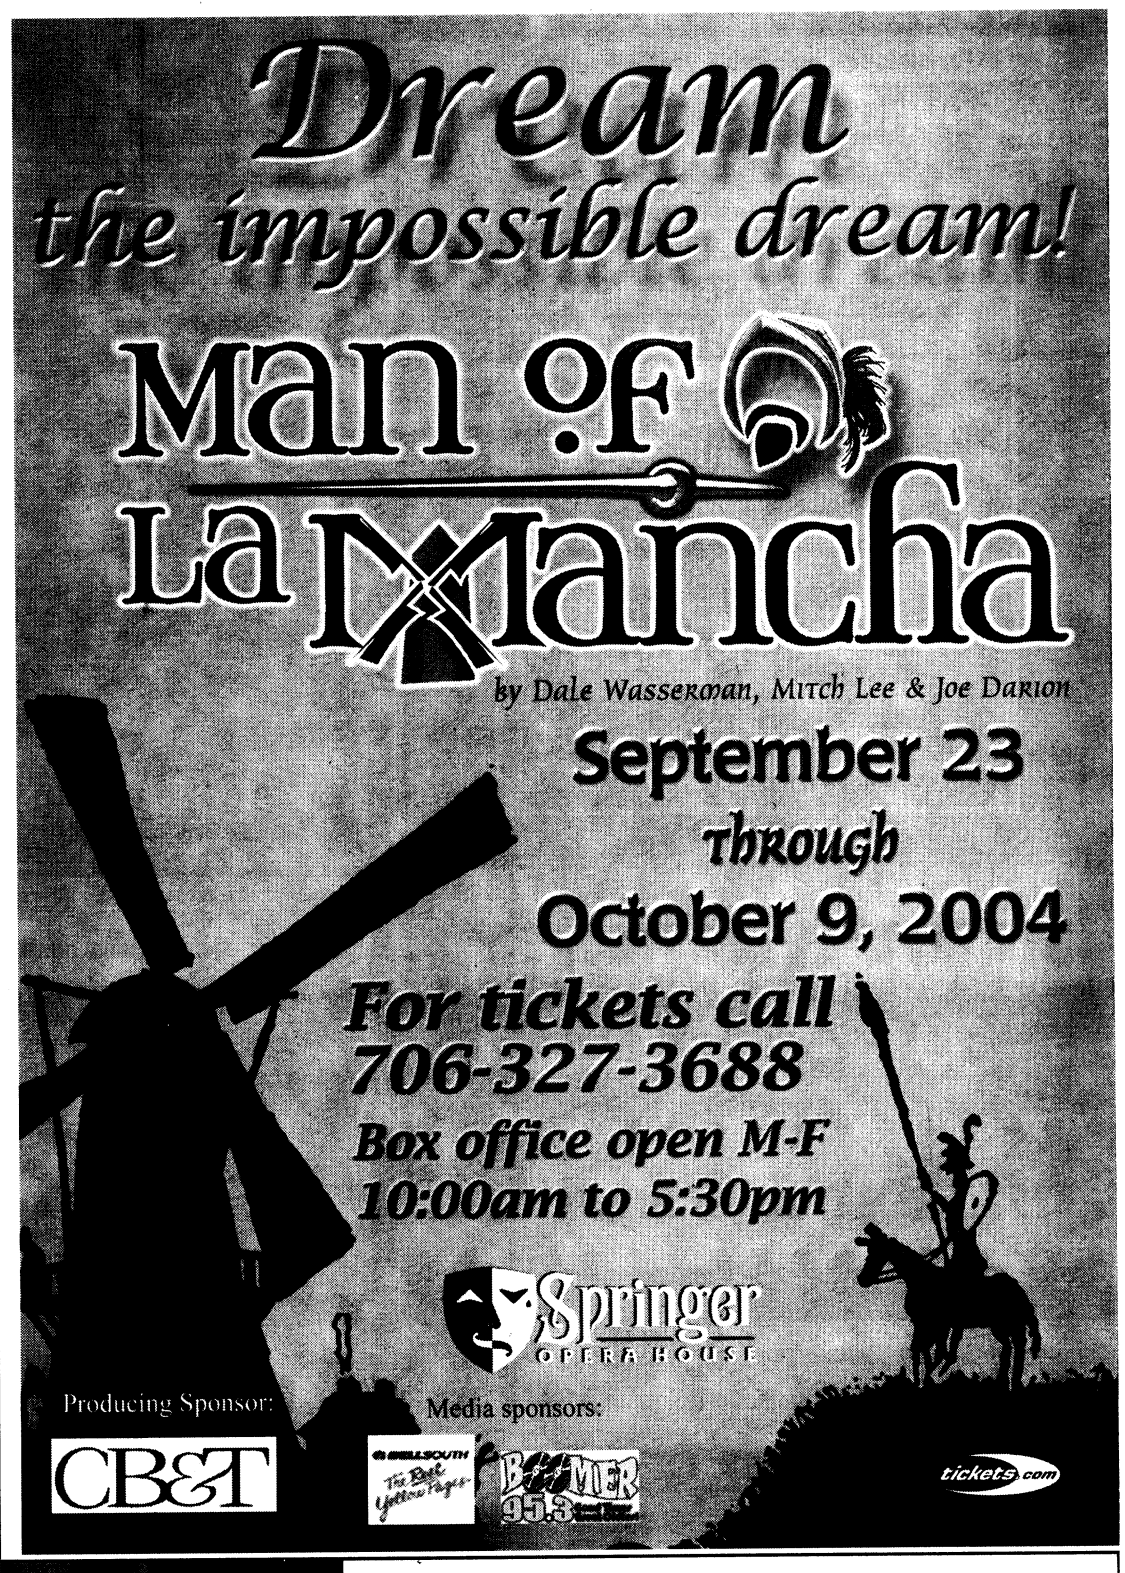
> Deputy director, Combat Development

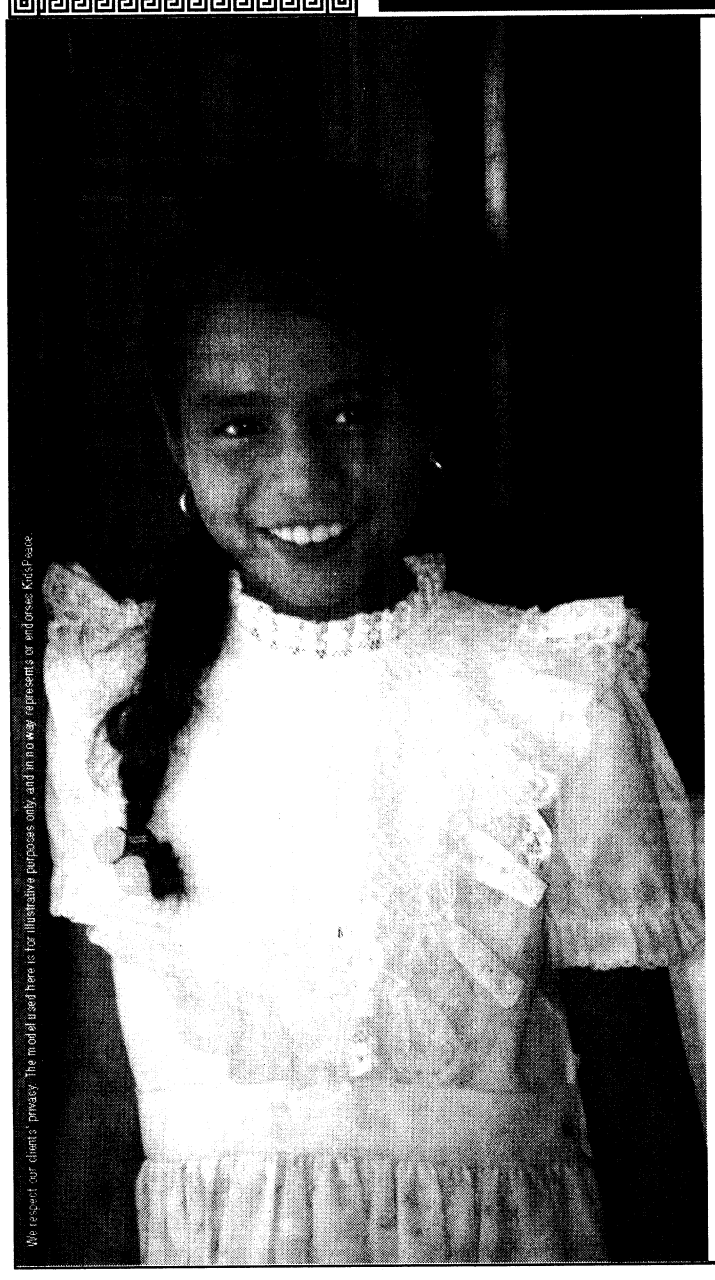
"The potential for improved communication is good with this structure," he said. "The Futures Group has the ability to pull up the directorates it needs to do what is best for the Infantry School and the Soldiers in the field."

The IFG uses that authority under IF to bring directorates and major subordinate commands together to discuss priorities, challenges and initiatives, communicate needs and issues to the commanding general, coordinate joint efforts and ensure a common azimuth of purpose, Power said.

The IFG also fields the Infantry Traveling Team, which connects with leaders in the field and relays current USAIC initiatives while collecting input for future USAIC, joint and combined arms team actions, he said.



The team works to acquire consistent feedback from the field, attends local forums, like the Infantry Conference, and travels to major commands to ensure the infantry as a whole is moving in the right direction, he said.



OIP, which previously stood alone, falls under Power's command and IFG now.

The office develops personnel policies for the total infantry force, provides a liaison to the Human Resources Command, provides career counseling to Soldiers, monitors infantry force integration, and designs and documents infantry units in order to maintain the health and effectiveness of the Infantry, said Sgt. 1st Class Gary Fox, Office of Infantry Proponency.

The reorganization of the Infantry Center and creation of IF has streamlined the agencies' efforts toward a common, joint objective — the support of the infantry on the battlefield.

combat."

Preparing Soldiers for battle takes more than training, though — it takes the right equipment, the right leaders and up-to-the-minute feedback from the field, all of which Freakley discussed during his speech.

From the rapid fielding initiative, which has equipped thousands of Fort Benning Soldiers preparing to deploy with improved survivability equipment and creature comfort items, to incorporating lessons learned into every area of training, the Army is rapidly adjusting to its ever-changing mission requirements, Freakley said.

> "At one time, we trained Soldiers to join their units. Today, we train Soldiers to go to combat ... We have to ensure that our Soldiers trained at Fort Benning are trained to join their units in combat."
> Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley
> Commanding general

Among those changes is modularity — reorganizing units to be more self-sufficient on the battlefield by bringing together frontline units and the non-infantry units that support them.

This transformation will allow smaller units — brigade combat teams — to deploy for missions that are currently handled by entire divisions. Eventually, it will mean fewer deployments and more stabilization for the individual Soldier, and better-trained and more capable units for the Army.

But the key in all of this, Freakley said, is working together.

Whether it's between MOSs, units, branches or armies, Soldiers must be ready to work together to make the joint expeditionary force and the coalition successful in the Global War on Terrorism.

Museum: Breaks ground

funds to renovate these buildings, the concept of a National Infantry Museum was born.

The $70 million campaign has raised about one-third of its goal, said Cyndy Cerbin, director of communications for the National Infantry Foundation.

Both Fort Benning and Columbus donated the 200 acres of land for the new museum and Heritage Park.

Heritage Park will include a parade field for all infantry Soldier graduations.

The site will include a WWII Company Street where the restored buildings will be located; a Walk of Honor where the monuments from outside the current Infantry Museum will be moved; and vignettes honoring the legacy of all those who have served our nation, said Frank Hanner, Infantry Museum curator.

The museum will occupy an area of 150,000 square feet, where "we can tell the story of the infantry, and educate, honor and preserve the sacred legacy of valor and sacrifice that is displayed by all infantrymen and Medal of Honor recipients," White said.

More than 1,000 guests were present during the groundbreaking ceremony, including three Medal of Honor recipients from the WWII, Vietnam and Korean wars.

The three Medal Of Honor recipients, along with the youngest infantry Soldier at Fort Benning, Pvt. Richard S. Williams, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regt., Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, Bill Turner, former chairman of W.C. Bradley Company, Medal of Honor recipient retired Col. Bob Nett, Mike Gaymon, president of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, Poydasheff and White participated in the groundbreaking.

Freakley emphasized that the museum was not only going to be a place to keep war memorabilia, but a place to tell the stories of those who have sacrificed themselves for this country.

"Today, this is all about preserving the legacy of sacrifice, valor and honor for those who have gone before us," Freakley said. "Our infantry is the boots on the ground — ultimately armed with a rifle and a bayonet, taking the last 100 yards and closing with and destroying the enemy.

"I can say that this project will happen. It will stand and the stories of our brave men and women will be told forever," he said. "One who stands out in making this happen is Bill Turner."

Turner was a Sailor in WW II. Freakley referred to him as "a veteran and a member of America's greatest generation." But he also reminded Turner that America's greatest generation is currently in training.

Turner said he was honored to be present during such a historic moment and told the story about how, as a young Sailor on his ship, he always knew the importance of the mission of infantrymen.

"No matter how much we bombed those beaches, it's always the infantrymen who finished the drill. They are the ones who deserve the credit for the freedom we've all come to love," Turner said.

"The Infantry Museum is a great way to express our appreciation for the sacrifices they have made to preserve our freedom both here and abroad."

Hanner said the museum is for all Soldiers.

"This is for any Soldier who has worn the infantry uniform, whether they are National Guard, Army Reserve or those who have come before them," he said.

He said the museum will bring thousands of visitors to Columbus and Fort Benning every year.

"This museum is not only going to tell the stories of the infantry Soldier," he said.

"It will have a great effect in joining our community, creating jobs for our community and will be a world class attraction, which will, in essence, help the American people and the world to know the epic story of the United States infantryman and his sacrifice."

The museum will open in 2006.

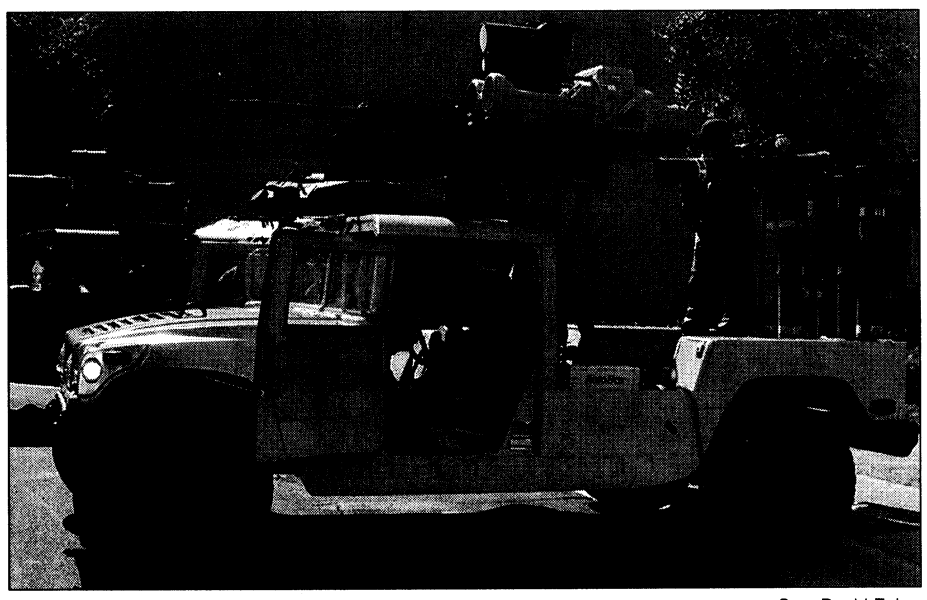
In order to demonstrate the variety in Hispanic cultures, this year's event will feature a free food sampling hour for the first time in the event's history at 1 p.m. in Classroom 2-A in Infantry Hall.



"Food sampling is more meaningful when it comes to representing various cultures," McNeill said.

White Elementary School will participate in the event by singing the national anthem. During the celebration, there will also be a multicultural Hispanic dance performance by a local group, Son Tropical, which will include merengue, cumbia, chiapaneco and plena.

The guest speaker is retired Navy Rear Adm. Alberto Diaz who will speak of the Hispanic-American life in the military.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley will also be present. Marshall Auditorium seats 1,500 people and all seats are open.

The Assault Weapon System, shown here, was one of many prototype weapon systems on display at the Infantry Conference at Infantry Hall last week.

Prototype vehicle may change future battlefield

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Army has developed a prototype of a vehicle that may change the future battlefield.

The Assault Weapon System, an experimental turret-mounted, multifunctional weapon system attached to a humvee, may put the firepower of an entire heavy weapons platoon into one vehicle.

The system is the brainchild of Training and Doctrine Command, Raytheon and TRADOC System Manager-Close Combat Weapon Systems, and features an MK-19 grenade launcher, .50 caliber machine gun and two TOW missile firing platforms.

All three of the weapon systems are connected to a central Improved Target Acquisition System that gives the gunner the option of firing each weapon with the flick of a switch and automatically gauges the range of the target by using an eye-safe laser range finder.

When the gunner flips a switch on the control panel and charges the weapon of choice, the display will change for particular weapon and will show the sights for that weapon.

In older systems, the gunner would have to "walk in" the grenades when firing the MK-19, which means it would take several shots to hit the target. However, the ballistics for each weapon are already integrated into the ITAS, which gives the gunner better accuracy.

"This is probably the most flexible fire support system to the day," said Sgt. 1st Class Charles McCartney, A Company, 511th Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C., who was showing the vehicle during the Infantry Conference. "The best part about it is its flexibility, the fact you can select the weapon you want to use."

The system also features a networked, persistent, all-weather, extended range surveillance and target acquisition capabilities for increased survivability and situational awareness.

The key to the improved communication is a system called Force XXI Command Battalion/Brigade and Below, which provides a connection between all the elements on the battlefield. FBCB^2 combines global positioning system technology with a long-range laser targeting system that keeps everyone on the battlefield connected using real-time audio video and text messages.

In essence, the unit's operations center can watch the battle through the gunner's sights and if air support is needed, the position of the target will already be narrowed down to within 10 meters.

McCartney said it currently takes several vehicles and nearly a whole platoon to match the versatility of the Assault Weapons System, and if the system is approved, it can greatly increase the Army's fighting capabilities.

"We can have one vehicle doing the job of three, or we can have three vehicles doing three times as much," he said.

The vehicle on display was a watered down version of the tactical vehicle that is still in the construction phase.

Plans for the tactical version include a smaller, collapsible turret, removable composite armor plating, undercarriage protection from mines, a smaller targeting screen, and the gunner's seat may be moved to the rear of the vehicle to allow for another team member and lower the distractions for both the gunner and the commander, said Wayne Spate, Assault Weapon System program manager.

"We are already working on the tactical version because, if it gets approved, we will already have it and we can put it on the battlefield quicker," he said.

Post takes in evacuees

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Evacuees Frank Newcomb and Air Force Master Sgt. Michael Jacobs wait out Hurricane Ivan at Sand Hill.

Evacuees from Florida's Eglin Air Force Base flocked to Fort Benning to find shelter from the brutal winds and rains of Hurricane Ivan.

"On Monday, at 0600 hours, we were given a total of 19 hours to be off base," said Air Force Col. Greg Williams. "Things went pretty fast after that."

Williams, who is assigned to the Air Armament Center at Eglin and deals with direct financial management, was one of a small advanced party sent out Sept. 13 to help prepare Fort Benning for 20 to 2,000 hurricane refugees.

The group from Eglin set up a command center at Infantry Hall and, with the help of personnel from Fort Benning, began welcoming Airmen and their families.

"Everyone was told to just get the heck out (of Eglin) and they could go anywhere within 550 miles," Williams said. "Robins Air Force Base and Fort Benning were the designated evacuation military installations, but we didn't know how many people they would get. We were told to prepare for the extremes."

In the end, only 186 people evacuated to Fort Benning. When they arrived, they were put up in barracks, given information about religious, financial and medical support, assisted with the care of any pets, offered free bowling and movie passes and given kits that included maps and basic information about Fort Benning.

"It has been very much appreciated to have a safe haven to go to," Williams said. "When home is not a safe place to be, it is nice to have a place to go."

Besides having to worry about evacuating their homes, some Airmen had other problems to deal with.

Seven families stayed on Fort Benning, including three pregnant women, two of whom were seen at Martin Army Community Hospital during their stay.

"The medical folks have done an outstanding job monitoring and taking care of our people," Williams said. "They have made extraordinary efforts to make sure the medical teams were more robust sending out field ambulances to Kelley Hill in case anyone needed immediate attention."

"Kindhearted" and "bighearted" were two words Williams used to describe the people at Fort Benning, who were "ready and willing to give to the max."

"You've made us feel very welcome in our time of need," Williams said. "This is the first time I have ever been to Fort Benning and the personal relationships we've built have been phenomenal.

"This has also helped establish a stronger relationship between the Army and the Air Force as professional partners," he said.

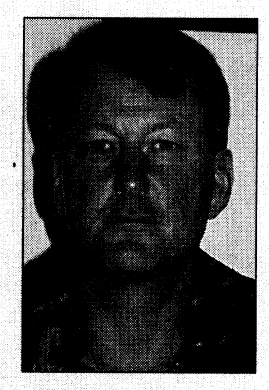
"If we could reciprocate, that would be great. We owe a huge debt of gratitude to Fort Benning."

Air Force Tech. Sgt. Ken Gaydos, his wife, Ute, and their four children found their stay at Fort Benning pleasant, but would prefer to have visited under more favorable circumstances.

Ken said he was on leave when they called him off at 10 p.m. Monday, and told him to be in formation Tuesday morning because they had to get the radar off the tower and do some last-minute sandbagging.

The Gaydos were told to be out by noon on Wednesday, so they went to the airport, rented a van and left Tuesday afternoon.

Ute said they only had time to tape up a few windows and move their most valuable items into an interior room without windows.



"Material things you can buy, but a human life — you can't buy this," Ute said. "I think this is all very scary."

The family was holed up in two barrack rooms. They spent their time at the mall and movies, waiting for the all clear sign to go back home.

"The good thing, I guess, is that, without being at home, this has brought us closer together as a family," Ken said.

British liaison officer helps post mission

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Lt. Col. Brian de la Haye, British liaison officer, is married and has three kids. His hobbies include golf, music and theater.

In a joint press conference Sunday with Iraqi interim prime minister Ayad Allawi, British prime minister Tony Blair said Iraq has become the "crucible" in which the future of the Global War on Terrorism will be determined.

Fort Benning British liaison officer Lt. Col. Brian de la Haye agrees and said the unique nature of the situation in Iraq is the number one reason why the relationship between U.S. and British forces is so important right now.

"The main problem in Iraq is the insurgency threat," he said. "Our experience is a little more recent than the Americans. We have deployed constantly for counter-insurgency operations in Ireland since 1969, dealing with snipers, bombers and IEDs."

De la Haye said there is a wealth of experience to be exchanged between the United Kingdom and the U.S.

"We work very well together," he said. "That has been proven time and time again for generations. The key to that working relationship is to understand we're not the same.

"My role is to facilitate the exchange of information, knowledge and thoughts on a whole raft of common interests between the British infantry and the American infantry."

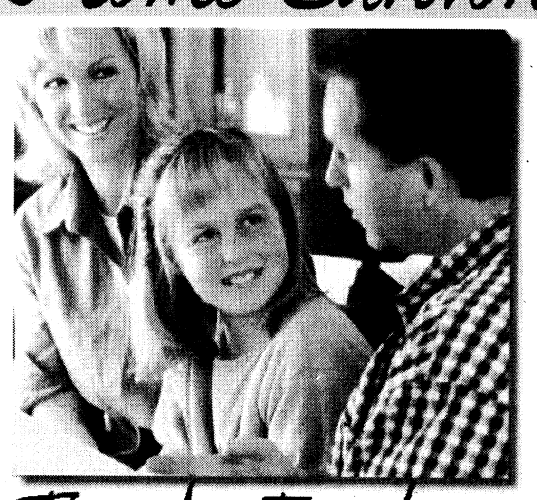
His duties also include looking out for British exchange officers at Fort Benning; Fort Campbell, Ky.; Fort Drum, N.Y.; Fort Bragg, N.C.; and the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La.

Having arrived at Fort Benning in September 2003, de la Haye faces two more challenging years in this position while both the American and British armies transform and reorganize and the GWOT progresses.

But it isn't all business for the infantry officer, who has spent 30 years serving in a diverse range of positions in a diverse range of locations.

De la Haye said coming to America was a great opportunity for him and his wife, Deb, to spread their wings a little after spending six years stationed in Scotland.

"I love it in the U.S.," he said. "After a long career of traveling around, when the opportunity arose to come overseas to the United States, my wife and I leapt at it. I think the chance to live in another country and not just visit it is great."



The two love to travel and try to find time to see as much as they can when de la Haye makes his frequent trips to check on his Soldiers.

He said being in the South has been a special opportunity, because it is so different than the North and such a change from the same metropolitan areas that seem to mirror one another in most ways, like New York, London and Washington, D.C.

"We bought a pop-up (trailer) and we try to do and see as much as we can," he said. "I had to leave my horse behind because she is raised for the mountains in Scotland and the heat here would be absolutely tortuous, so I would like to go to a big ranch up in Montana and spend a few days."

The father of three also enjoys golf, music and theater.

President addresses Army, Air National Guard

'We must remain steadfast,' Bush tells Guard

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

LAS VEGAS — President Bush saluted thousands of Army and Air National Guardsmen here during the 126th annual conference of the National Guard Association of the United States Sept. 14.

"I'm here to say thank you for your service," he said, likening today's Guard to the nation's earliest citizen Soldiers, who defended our freedom with muskets. "The weapons may have changed, but one thing remains the same. The men and women of the Guard stand ready."

Bush noted the Guard's role in the aftermath of Hurricane Frances earlier this month, its immediate response to terrorist attacks three years ago, and its huge presence in Afghanistan and Iraq.

"You took an oath to support America in times of crisis, war and emergency. You're fulfilling that oath in many ways," he said. "When tragedy strikes, Americans can always count on the Guard."

Bush said he believes the world is slowly changing for the better, and he laid the credit squarely on the shoulders of U.S. military forces here and abroad.

"I'm proud of all our forces — active, Guard and Reserve. You're a vital part of our strategy to defend America," he said. "You're serving across the globe, fighting terrorists in Afghanistan and Iraq, so we do not have to face them here at home."

> "I had a choice to make. It was not for pride or power, but because lives were at stake. My most solemn duty as president is to defend the American people. We must remain steadfast. We cannot show uncertainty, or America will drift toward tragedy, and this is not going to happen on my watch."

Bush told his audience the decision to wage war in Iraq was the most difficult decision he's made.

"I had a choice to make. It was not for pride or power, but because lives were at stake," he said. "My most solemn duty as president is to defend the American people. We must remain steadfast. We cannot show uncertainty, or America will drift toward tragedy, and this is not going to happen on my watch."

More than 4,500 full-time Guardsmen, representing 54 U.S. states and territories, attended the conference, which — much like Fort Benning's National Infantry Conference — brings together vendors and service organizations relevant to the military mission. Bush was the event's keynote speaker.

Soldiers from D Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, tackle Eagle Tower on Sand Hill. The tower is designed to boost the Soldiers' confidence.

ITB Soldiers confront fear of heights

Eagle Tower teaches troops confidence

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

For some Soldiers, it's a walk in the park, but for others, it is a towering wall of fear and self-doubt.

It is Eagle Tower, and it's one of the many challenges that Soldiers face during their basic training experience.

"It gives the Soldiers confidence," said Lt. Col. Scott Hickenbottom, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment commander, as he watched the Soldiers of D Company attack the tower Monday morning. "It challenges them physically, but mostly it builds their confidence."

Hickenbottom said many of the Soldiers are scared of heights to some degree before they climb the tower, but once they rappel down the side, they want to do it again.

"It is still relatively early in the cycle," Hickenbottom said of the Soldiers, who are in their third week. "So they are starting to get their first taste of, 'Hey, I can do this,' and now we just have to sustain that."

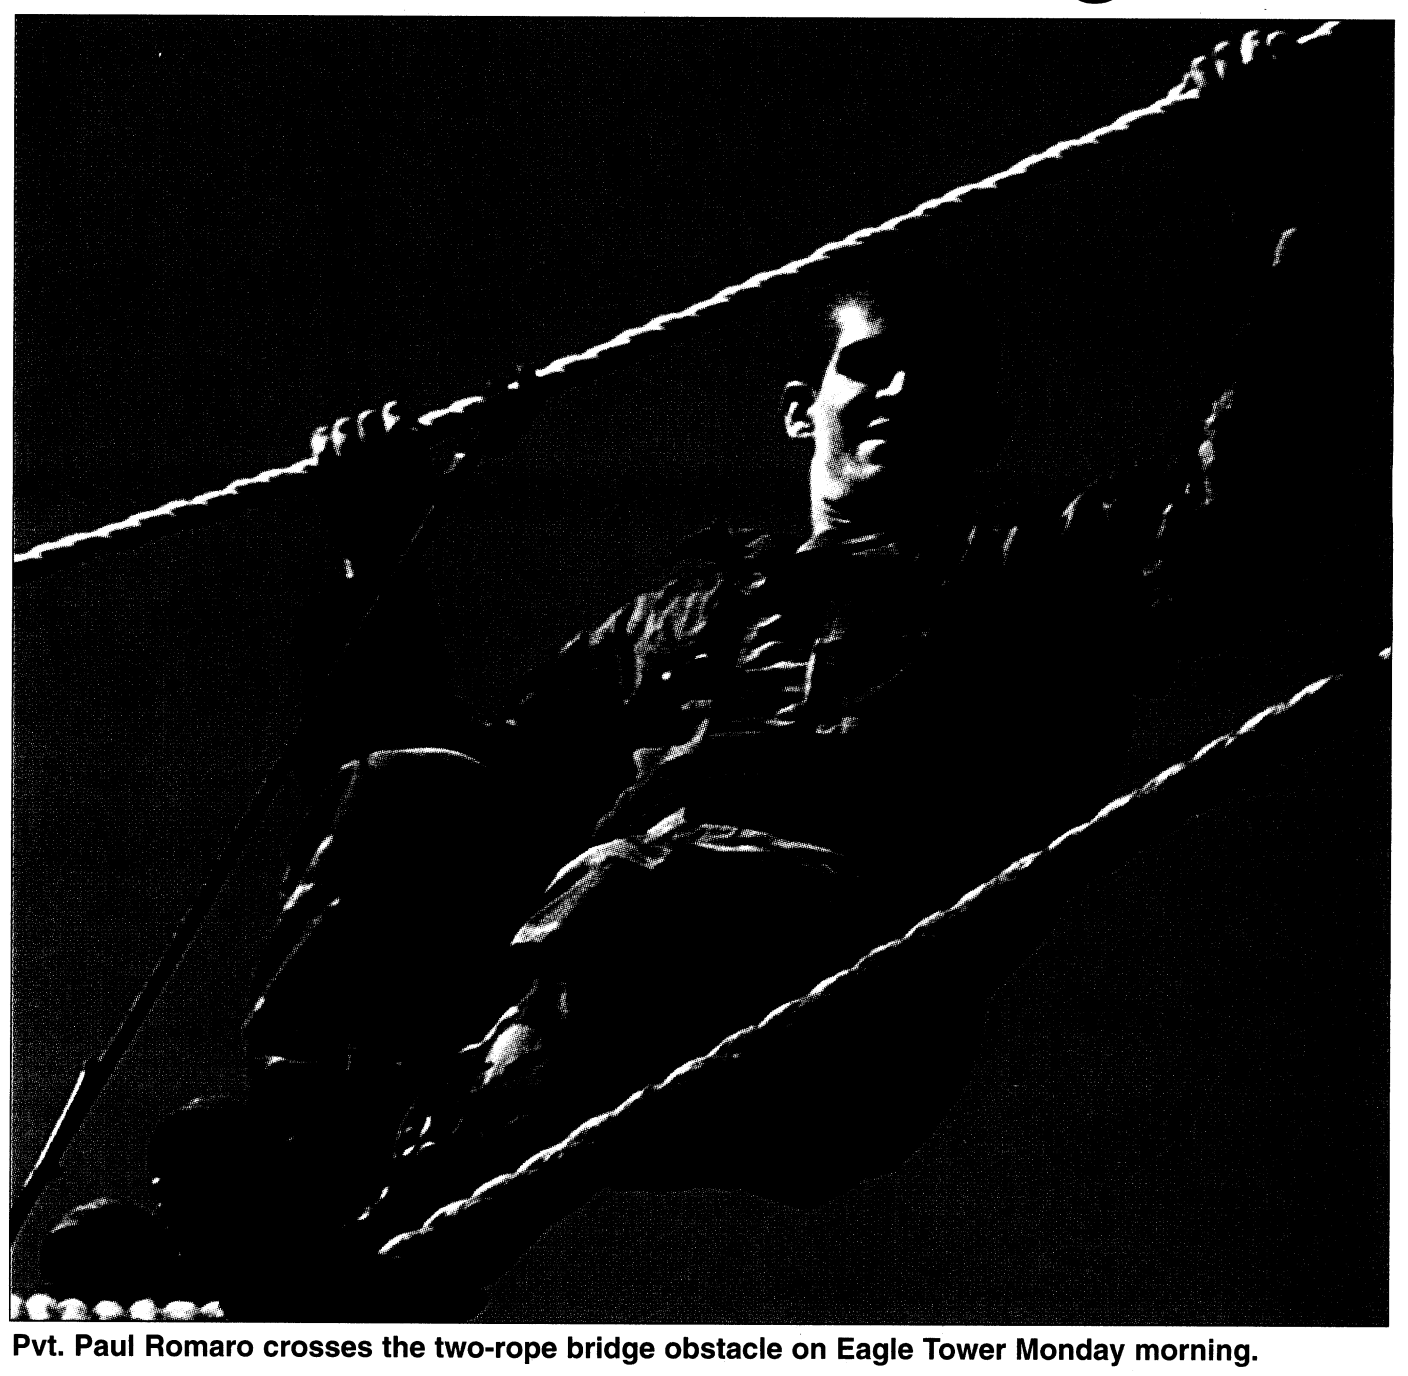
Pvt. Robert Hand knows exactly what Hickenbottom was talking about.

"I'm just hoping to overcome my fear of heights," Hand said as he looked at the tower before climbing to the top.

Once Hand made it to the top of the tower and the drill sergeants hooked up his harness, he stepped over the edge and began to rappel. At first, he moved slowly and wasn't in the right position, but with a little coaching, he gained his composure and moved down the wall with relative ease.

"It was easier than I thought," he said. "I guess my fear of heights wasn't as bad as I thought it would be."

Pvt. Joshua Bowlin also benefited from the training.



"I was a little nervous when they told me to step over the edge," he said. "But I would definitely do it again. The tight harness was the worst part."

The harness, known as a Swiss seat, is a 6-foot long rope that is tied around the Soldiers' legs and waist and operates in the same way as a commercial rappelling harness, but it's not quite as comfortable.

Staff Sgt. Marty Belanger, a 1st Platoon drill sergeant who was teaching the Soldiers to tie their Swiss seats, said it is a valuable skill for Soldiers to learn.

"The knots will come in useful elsewhere in their careers," he said. "And if they go to a mountain unit or an air assault unit it will be a vital skill.

"Like they say, 'You tied it, you ride it.' And if you don't know how, you're in trouble."

Pvt. Paul Romaro crosses the two-rope bridge obstacle on Eagle Tower Monday morning.

Pvt. Tommy Dodge pulls himself across the single rope bridge obstacle on Eagle Tower. Netting is in place to keep the Soldiers from being injured if they fall.

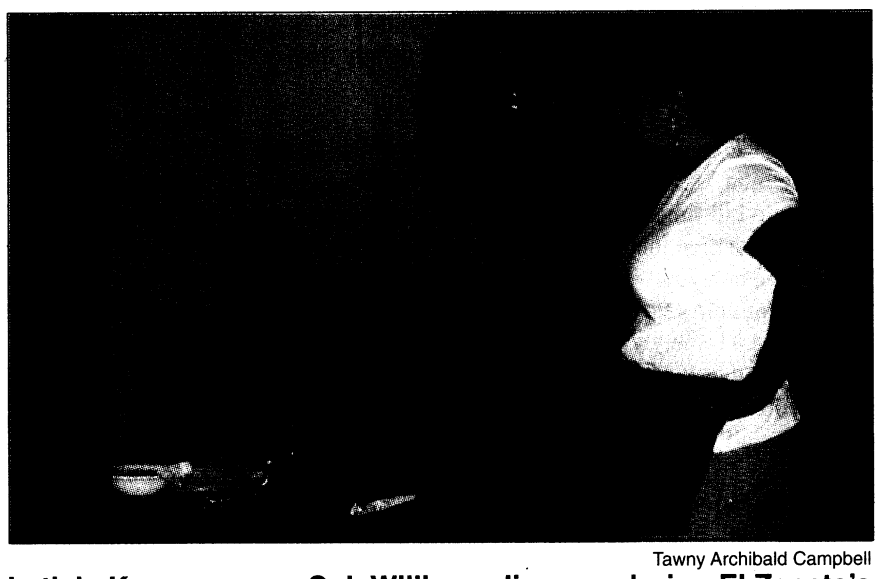
El Zapata opens in Benning Brew Pub

Restaurant brings measure of convenience

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

If you are craving a taste from south of the border, El Zapata has the food for you.

The new restaurant, located inside the Benning Brew Pub at the north end of Building 2784, opened Sept. 15 to a large dining crowd.



Leticia Knapp, the owner, said this is the third El Zapata to open in the Columbus area. The restaurant, named after Emiliano Zapata, a Mexican revolutionary, prides itself on its authentic Mexican taste and freshness of the ingredients it uses.

"You can expect the same great Mexican food and the same service as you get from any of our other Mexican restaurants in Columbus, without having to drive off Fort Benning," Knapp said. "We bring a different choice of food for Soldiers and family members here on post."

El Zapata offers a variety of dining choices, including seafood dishes and traditional Mexican dinners, like fajitas, chimichangas, camaron rancheros, chicken milanessas, ropa viejas, margaritas and Mexican beers.

"We get a lot of comments because we are the only Mexican restaurant (in Columbus) that offers pictures of all our dinner specials on the menu," Knapp said. "There is not one plate that I can tell you that sells more than others."

Knapp said because some of their dishes are so authentic, many people are hesitant to try them; however, the restaurant staff is flexible and, if you try a dish and do not like it, they will be willing to replace it with something more to your liking.

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Leticia Knapp serves Col. Williams Jimenez during El Zapata's grand opening Sept. 15, in the Benning Brew Pub.

"We want our customers to be happy," Knapp said. "We've been in business for 15 years, and for a small business owned by one female, minority owner, that speaks for itself. Our food and service have to be competitive."

Col. Williams Jimenez, a member of the Army Republica Dominicanic serving at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, has been a long-time fan of El Zapata. Three years ago, when he was stationed at Fort Benning for the first time, he began eating at the El Zapata on Wynnton Road in Columbus.

"The food is excellent," said Jimenez. "The service is very important for all the Soldiers inside the post. It is a new option (for dining) especially for Latino Soldiers who come to Fort Benning."

El Zapata is open Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.and 5 to10 p.m., and Saturday from noon to 10 p.m. Lunch specials start at $4.50.

Alzheimer's affects growing numbers

Disease still without known cause or cure

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It's a disease that affects 4.5 million Americans — nearly 10 percent of all people 65 and older and nearly 50 percent of all people 85 and older. It has no cure; it has no defined cause.

Alzheimer's disease is one of several disorders that cause the gradual loss of brain cells, according to the Alzheimer's Association. And although it was once considered rare, it is now the leading cause of dementia, or memory loss.

The onset of Alzheimer's generally has two effects on the brain, said Dr. Karen Sawabini, a neurologist at Martin Army Community Hospital.

"The first is the loss of synapses, which connect one nerve cell to another," Sawabini said. "The second is the loss of the neurotransmitter, acetylcholine, the chemical used to help with memory."

As the level of acetylcholine is reduced in certain areas of the brain, she said, patients begin to have a decline in thinking skills.

Eventually, a variety of symptoms will surface, including memory loss, problems with reasoning or judgment, disorientation, difficulty learning, loss of language skills and decline in the ability perform routine tasks.

"Typically, people will have early, short-term memory loss — they'll forget recent conversations or new names," Sawabini said. "But their remote memory — when they got married, etcetera — will stay intact.

"As the disease progresses, it will start to affect judgment, decision making and problem solving," she said. "It will impair driving ability — (patients) might forget where they are or get lost. It will also make it hard to recognize family members and objects."

Courtesy graphic

Alzheimer's affects 4.5 million Americans, nearly 10 percent of those older than 65 and 50 percent of those older than 85.

The greatest known risk for developing Alzheimer's is increasing age.

A family history is also a known risk. Patients who have familial Alzheimer's disease tend to experience early onset, sometimes as early as in their late 30s or 40s, which can be more devastating than when you're in your 60s, Sawabini said.

There is also evidence that vascular disorders, like high cholestorol and high blood pressure, may increase the risk. People who have suffered a heart attack are at a higher risk for developing Alzheimer's.

Anyone who has suffered head trauma, like a serious concussion, is also at increased risk.

One study also found that people who are more educated are less likely to develop the disease, Sawabini said, though experts aren't sure why.

'Ranger Joe' visits troops in Iraq

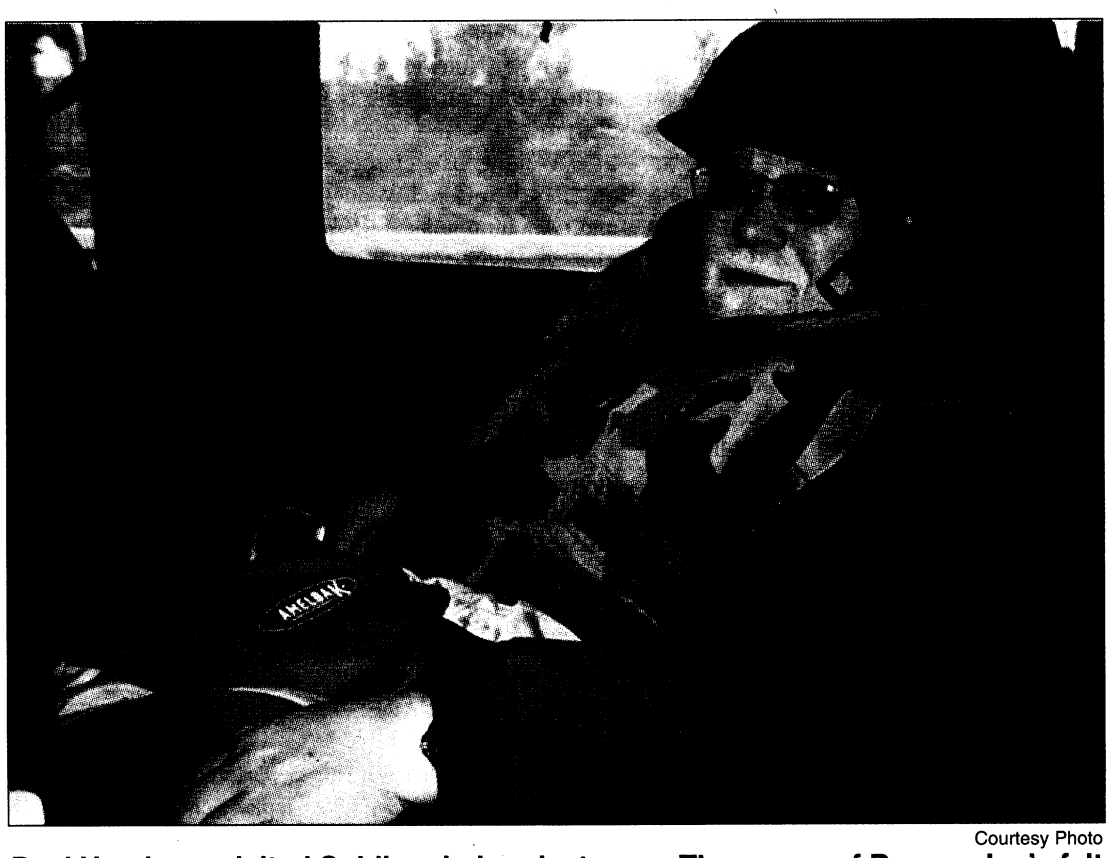
Voorhees commits to post families

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Paul Voorhees traveled halfway around the world to minister to Soldiers, only to discover his true ministry lies right here at home.

Voorhees, the owner of Ranger Joe's, a Columbus-based company that ships military and law enforcement gear around the world, and the Victory Drive store by the same name, spent a week with Soldiers in Iraq in November. He shared a Thanksgiving meal with MPs, led prayer services throughout Baghdad, and accompanied Soldiers on patrol. And he did it all on his own dime.

"It goes all the way back to Mogadishu," Voorhees explained. "I don't know why, but I personally felt horrible. There was no reason for it, but I was driven to my knees over it, and I promised the Lord, if we ever went to war again, I'd do everything in my power to support our military."



Voorhees' continuous financial support for Fort Benning — support that earned him the Army Commander's Award for Public Service last fall — leaves no doubt about his commitment to Soldiers. He's a businessman, an ordained Southern Baptist minister, a certified chaplain for Georgia police officers, and — get this — a member of the National Story Tellers Association. But he's always ranked Soldiers among his top priorities.

As a young boy growing up in Columbus, Voorhees assumed he'd be a paratrooper like his father. But when an accident on horseback rendered him "unfit for service," he and his father opened Ranger Joe's, a military surplus store, in 1963.

When it came to stocking shelves and pricing merchandise, they relied on Fort Benning Soldiers to lead the way.

"If they needed something, and I didn't have it, they told me to get it," Voorhees said. "If I priced something too high,

I'm Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

As I'm sure you'll all be crushed to discover (ahem), I am soon leaving The Bayonet. I depart next week for a rewarding six weeks of Recruiting School at Fort Jackson, S.C., and then it's on to God (and Recruiting Command) knows where. Hopefully, not the backwoods of Wyoming. (Pray for me.) So it is that I write my last Get Outta Here, appropriately titled I'm Outta Here.

It's taken two years, but I've reached the end of my list of fun places to go in Columbus, and have thus been forced to search my imagination (and the Web) for inspiration. So it is that I have a new and improved list of ways to wile away my hours of free time. Most of them are inexpensive and guaranteed to pass at least an hour or two.

1. Get a tattoo. My godmother calls them "idiot marks," but it's my theory that we should all have at least one. I have a few, and they've all been acquired during moments of complete and utter boredom.

I was fortunate enough to know a budding tattoo artist and thus got mine for free in the comfort of my own home. But if you don't have that luxury, this is one you save for when you clean out your change jar or have another source of extra cash.

Of course, being the stellar troops that you are, you'll know better than to get a tattoo anywhere it can be seen while wearing your Class As. And you won't run off and get anything offensive.

2. Go four-wheelin'. If you don't like bugs and hate to feel dirty, this is not the activity for you. But for all others (specifically those who enjoy a good romp in the mud), this is an awesome way to kill time.

True, you chance a nice long hike in the woods when your (or your friend's) vehicle gets stuck in the mud. And true, you face the daunting task of getting the darn thing unstuck at some point. But all's well that ends well.

I hadn't been since I was 8 until a few weeks ago. It had totally escaped me how much fun it is. And as I learned, if you don't get dirty enough in the truck, you can always get out and mud wrestle — also an effective (but atrociously smelly) way to have fun.

3. Paintball. I hope you still enjoy running around in the woods, playing Soldier. Fortunately, Fort Benning just opened a paintball course, so you don't have to journey far or worry about scouting a good place to play. They have all the equipment for rent on site, and it's not that expensive.

Sometimes even cheap can be expensive, though (you know — those last few days before payday, when you're living off your canned food selection). In that case ...

4. Water balloons can be just as fun. I'm sorry for ya if you can't even afford balloons and the gas to get back home from the store. In that case, you should probably proceed directly to the Financial Readiness Program in Soldiers' Plaza. Otherwise, venture back to your grade school days with a rousing water balloon war. The only rule? Just pray no innocent bystanders who outrank you are caught in the crossfire.

5. Have a scavenger hunt. Is it wrong that MTV gave me this idea? Oh, well. For those of you who've ever caught the scavenger hunt episode of Viva La Bam that aired last Christmas and is probably still showing, you know we're not talking about the scavenger hunts you used to have as a kid.

Think up the most off-the-wall tasks to accomplish and items to acquire that you can (within reason and legal limits), assign each a point value, make up your teams and go.

6. Make a movie. Hey, if Blair Witch can end up a blockbuster ... Spend a few hours generating ideas, come up with an outrageous script, cast your friends, and go forth and prosper. Just make sure you save the tape and break it out at your next party.

7. Try to break a world record. Unoriginal? Untalented? Too easily frightened to attempt daring feats? Never fear, here are just a few of the world records that even you could attempt to beat:

• Furthest cricket spit. Only in Wisconsin. Apparently, the record to beat is held by Madison's own Danny Capps, who spit a dead cricket 30 feet, 1.2 inches in June 1998.

• Most (self) kicks to the head. Preferably wearing a Kevlar, attempt to beat Midland, Texas' Michael Loyd, who kicked himself in the head 42 times in one minute. No wonder Texans are proud. (Kidding! I was only kidding!)

• Farthest spaghetti nasal ejection. Kevin Cole of Carlsbad, N.M., holds the current title with a 19-centimeter ejection in December 1998. Don't be daunted, though. The pro recommends starting out with Ramen noodles (never in short supply in the barracks), then moving on to spaghetti. If these don't strike your fancy, check out www.guiness worldrecords.com for more ideas.

8. Be creative (or just really weird). Answer life's really annoying questions — How many licks does it take to get to the center of a Tootsie Roll Pop?

Call a wrong number and trap whoever answers in an engaging conversation. You could end up calling your soulmate (or making a name for yourself as a stalker).

With the help of the books at the library or Barnes & Noble, figure out how to analyze your own handwriting and find out who you really are.

And while you're at Barnes & Noble, peruse the joke books — or just visit the checkout aisle of your nearest super-market and pick up a tabloid. They're equally entertaining.

9. Throw a party. But not just any party. A costume party. Random or themed, you can't go wrong. Break out the adult board games, get the grill going and start taking pictures.

Disease: Becoming more common

Sawabini said the process of diagnosing Alzheimer's includes ruling out other possible causes of demential, like multiple small strokes, metabolic disease or an infection.

Once Alzheimer's is identified as the definite cause, the patients will be followed "clinically," she said, with quarterly check-ups to evaluate their memory loss with standardized memory tests.

Although there is no known cure for the disease, there are several medications that can help slow the process, Sawabini said, most of which work to replace lost acetylcholine.

"They tend to work very well," she said. "They slow the rate of progression of memory lost over time."

There's also a new medicine on the market that tries to prevent further cell loss, she said. It appears to work well in slowing the process and can be taken in conjunction with other medications.

And although it's not technically a medication, Sawabini said she recommends Alzheimers patients take Vitamin E.

"There was a study done that shows that Vitamin E may help slow the time it takes for a patient to enter a care facility," she said. "It didn't improve memory, but for some reason, it did slow the progression. It won't harm you, but it might help you."

According to the Alzheimer's Association, those who suffer Alzheimer's exhibit memory loss and personality changes beyond what is normal during the aging process.

And catching the disease as early as possible is key to getting appropriate treatment, care and support services.

Early diagnosis gives the patient and his or her family time to make choices about the future, lessens anxieties about unknown problems, and gives patients a better chance of benefiting from treatment.

To help family members recognize warning signs of the disease, the Alzheimer's Association developed a checklist of symptoms:

• Memory loss. One of the most common early signs of dementia is forgetting recently learned information. While it's normal to forget appointments, names and telephone numbers, those with dementia will forget such things more often and not remember them later.

• Difficulty performing familiar tasks. People with dementia will often find it hard to complete everyday tasks that are so familiar we usually don't think about how to do them. A person with Alzheimer's may not know the steps for preparing a meal, using a household appliance or participating in a lifelong hobby.

• Problems with language. Everyone has trouble finding the right word sometimes, but a person with Alzheimer's often forgets simple words or substitutes words, making his or her speech or writing hard to understand. If a person with Alzheimer's is unable to find his or her toothbrush, for example, the individual might ask for "that thing for my mouth."

• Disorientation to time and place. It's normal to forget the day of the week or where you're going. But people with Alzheimer's disease can become lost on their own street. They may forget where they are and how they got there, and may not know how to get back home.

• Poor or decreased judgment. No one has perfect judgment all the time. Those with Alzheimer's may dress without regard to the weather, wearing several shirts on a warm day or very little clothing in cold weather. Those with dementia often show poor judgment about money, giving away large sums to telemarketers or paying for home repairs or products they don't need.

• Problems with abstract thinking. Balancing a checkbook is a task that can be challenging for some. But a person with Alzheimer's may forget what the numbers represent and what needs to be done with them.

• Misplacing things. Anyone can temporarily misplace a wallet or key. A person with Alzheimer's disease may put things in unusual places, like an iron in the freezer or a wristwatch in the sugar bowl.

• Changes in mood or behavior. Everyone can become sad and moody from time to time. Someone with Alzheimer's can show rapid mood swings — from calm to tears to anger — for no apparent reason.

• Changes in personality. Personalities ordinarily change somewhat with age. But a person with Alzheimer's can change dramatically, becoming extremely confused, suspicious, fearful or dependent on a family member.

• Loss of initiative. It's normal to tire of housework, business activities or social obligations at times. The person with Alzheimer's disease may become very passive, sitting in front of the television for hours, sleeping more than usual or not wanting to do usual activities.

Voorhees: Pledges support to troops

they let me know it real fast. I owe them a tremendous debt. They took us under their wings and allowed us to serve them. I support them because they've supported me for years."

That support took on a new dimension last fall, during Voorhees' trip to Iraq. He went, he said, to minister to the troops. He came home to minister to their families.

Time and time again, Voorhees asked the troops their greatest needs and concerns. Time and time again, he heard the same response.

"I learned this: When a Soldier leaves home with problems, he goes (to war) with problems," Voorhees said. "It's one of the biggest distractions and worries a Soldier can have — his family.

"If his marriage wasn't good when he left, it sure isn't getting any better while he's away," he said. "If his teenager was running the streets before he left, his teenager's probably still running the streets. The only difference is, the Soldier's too far away to do anything about it but worry.

"If there's one thing I learned from all this, it's the best way I can help is to get involved with helping their families."

Voorhees isn't quite sure just how he'll do that yet. Once again, he's relying on Fort Benning Soldiers — and their families — to guide him. With the 3rd Brigade's impending deployment, he's seeking help from chaplains and soliciting ideas from post officials and family members.

And he's issuing a challenge to Columbus and Phenix City communities.

"I need to impress upon the people in this community that we need to take care of our families," he said. "I don't know how we're going to do it yet — what programs, or whatever — but I know we'll do it. It's the very least we can do. I believe God has made us stewards of these families."

Long ago, Voorhees made peace with the fact he'd never be a paratrooper. He figures he's been called to serve with both feet planted firmly on the ground.

"I can't be a Soldier, but I can serve the Soldier," he said. "And I'm going to be more of a servant to the Soldiers than I've ever been before."

To learn more about Paul Voorhees' trip to Iraq, see next week's Bayonet.

Carmen Flores showcases her Puerto Rican heritage by dancing the Plena and wearing a dress fashioned with the commonwealth's colors during the Festival of the Hemisphere "Cena Tipica" at the Columbus Iron Works Sept. 10. This presentation was part of a night of performances by 18 different nations. The event was sponsored by the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, where Flores works.

Performances showcase festival

A night of dancing, dining and international performances awaited Fort Benning-area residents before doors opened at the Columbus Iron Works for the annual Festival of the Hemisphere "Cena Típica" Sept. 10.

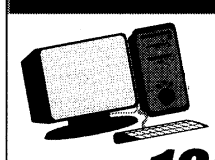
The event was sponsored by the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and featured a night full of performances by 18 different nations represented at the Institute.

Students, family members and faculty starred in each presentation, which varied from folkloric song and dance to poetry showcasing the cultural aspects of each respective country.

WHINSEC Commandant Col. Gilberto Pérez mentioned to the audience that the night was meant to connect the local community with the much larger international community by sharing in the "traditions and culture of our neighbors."

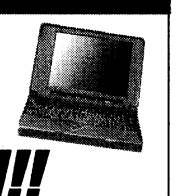
"We did not bring professional dancers or singers for you tonight," Pérez said. "We brought people with heart. People with love for what not only their countries represent, but with a desire to show that our hemisphere has been blessed by a rich and diverse history that strengthens us all."

"They really did a great job," said Mora Alexander, a Colombian police officer.



"It's hard to be impartial when I say this, but the performance I liked best tonight was Colombia. The dancing and the music really took me home," said Alexander, who's enrolled in the institute's 12-week Counterdrug-Operations Course.

Performances aside, he said he felt the chance to interact with students from other courses, as well as the community, helped him and his classmates make lasting connections.



"As a student, you are here for such a short time. You are moved from one task to the next so quickly and intensively that you might miss out on what's beyond the classroom. It's nice to have social events like this, where you can talk to people from other courses and countries, all with different ideas and cultures, and see for yourself the strange unity that comes from diversity. It is something very special, unique to our half of the world," Alexander said.

> "We brought people with heart. People with love for what not only their countries represent, but with a desire to show that our hemisphere has been blessed by a rich and diverse history that strengthens us all."

Practice faith lessons

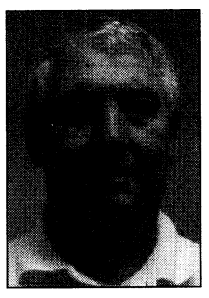
REFLECTIONS

When we hear the words "religious education," nemories return of classroom ectures along with the xpectation to recall times, laces, prayers, names and vents.

But contrary to most ducational programs that equire tests and papers and omework, religious education ery rarely mandates such ractices, and this is not the nemory the religious education rocess was intended to foster.



Religious education is not ust the transfer of specific nowledge; it is much more han that.

A different term, a different erspective, such as "faith levelopment," will help us to ealize that our religious ducation is a process of transformation — the need to grow in our faith and understanding, an ongoing process.

Pursuing our growth in faith and understanding provides the foundation for our growth as a whole person.

As we mature, we need to not only expand our knowledge, but also to mature in our spiritual relationship.

The many challenges we face on a daily basis, whether as a child or as an adult, are the opportunities presented to us to put into practice what we have been taught.

Snow

Yes, of course, the purpose of our faith formation is not solely a display of our knowledge of facts, but the actual implementation of the teachings we have been provided into our daily interactions.

How many of us do not prepare for the day's activities or demands? Our experience tells us that if we don't, we are creating our own limits and boundaries.

If we do not continue to grow in our faith, how well are we prepared to meet the everyday challenges we face in our human relationships?

End this year with the willingness and openness to grow, as an adult and as a child.

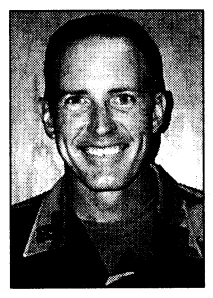
It is not unusual to come to the realization that, as we develop in our faith, new "doors" are opened and we discover how little we understand and how much more we need to grow.

Become transformed as a person in the spiritual and human relationships that are continually present in life by putting into practice the teachings and values we are given in our faith.

Survive hurricanes of everyday life

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

As I write this article, all of us on Fort Benning are picking up the pieces of yet another hurricane.



"Delta Flight 486 to Atlanta with follow-up to Columbus, Georgia, has been cancelled." That's the way my day at Reagan International Airport in Washington, D.C., began last week. And before the day was done, I would be bumped up, bumped back, delayed, paused, rerouted, shut-out, diverted, inserted and transloaded — all in an effort to make it home.

Hurricanes are powerful things, aren't they?

Since I had plenty of time to reflect (all across the Eastern seaboard), I began to think about the "emotional hurricanes" that hit us. Often unexpected — often more powerful than we could imagine — often wreaking far more damage than we thought possible. How is it at your house, at your unit?

Are you often the victim of the emotional hurricanes swirling around you — or are you the precipitator of those violent forces of nature?

Just as the Federal Emergency Management Agency is doing after-action reports on what they learned from this latest hurricane, maybe we, too, can learn a few emotional hurricane lessons from what we've just witnessed. So, when it comes to hurricanes that blow through your home or unit, you may want to:

Hawkins

• Use your emotional radar to spot approaching storms. Are there things that you say or do that "set the conditions" for the perfect storm? Maybe, maybe not?

The unleashing of an emotional hurricane is never the "fault" of a victim, but we want to make sure we don't contribute by turning a squall into the perfect storm.

Preparedness is the key to surviving the storms of life, and that's just as true for the emotional hurricanes that pop up on the horizon and seek to make landfall in our lives. Get good at using your emotional radar to spot those storms "way out."

• Have an evacuation plan. We like to think we can handle just about any storm.

But the truth is, some "blows" are just too big, too volatile, too potentially catastrophic to stick around for.

Do you know where you draw the line when it comes to anger being unleashed on you?

Do you have a plan for where you can go and what you can do to protect yourself when a storm that you didn't want heads your way?

• When in doubt, seek shelter! People are dead today because they thought they could "weather the storm" and "ride it out," even though there were special places designated to help folks in their predicament.

If you're unsure as to just how big a storm is when it's coming at you, or whether you can weather another battering, our "advisory" is to seek shelter so you are not hurt, harmed or killed as the eye of the storm passes through.

Call 911 if things are blowing out of control, and (800) 650-6522 (Alabama) and (800) 334-2826 (Georgia), the Domestic Abuse Hotlines, are great numbers to keep close by as part of your evacuation kit should you need them.

If we can help you "batten down the hatches," give us a call at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760.

The Chaplains' Office will host a Fall Festival

2 to 6 p.m. Oct. 3 at Gordon Field, next to Wynnsong Theater

Attendees will have the opportunity to sign up for a variety of chapel and religious education programs. There will be a castle moonwalk and a giant inflatable slide, along with free popcorn, cotton candy and sno cones.
All activities are free.

Benning home to next Tiger

Bridgett Siter

Zach Caggins, 9, placed 20th in the U.S. Kids Golf World Championship last summer and won the Pacific Northwest Regional Golf Channel's Drive, Chip and Putt Competition. Zach is the son of Capt. Elliott and Chan Caggins.

Fourth-grader places 20th in world tourney

At 9-years-old, Zach Caggins is already being compared to Tiger Woods. The Fort Benning fourth-grader began competing four years ago, and his resume reads like a miniature master.

He placed 20th, out of more than 1,200 competitors, in the U.S. Kids Golf World Championship last summer. He won the Pacific Northwest Regional Golf Channel's Drive, Chip and Putt Competition last year in Canada. He was selected to compete in the Callaway Junior World Golf Tournament and became a member of the 2004 Tiger Woods National Golf Team.

Zach's not one to brag. That honor belongs to his dad, Capt. Elliott Caggins, the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's A Company commander. The senior Caggins is tickled pink over his son's most recent accomplishment.

"He beat two of my (Ranger) instructors. Crushed 'em," said Elliott, who hasn't won a golf game against his son in two years.

Zach's interest in golfing precedes his earliest memory. But his mother paints a picture of a determined toddler who cried for hours when his dad left for the golf course. He couldn't be placated with ice cream or fruit roll-ups, Chan Caggins said.

Finally, when he was 3, Zach was allowed to accompany his dad to the putting green. He showed immediate promise.

It was when he was 7, during a tournament in Washington state, his parents realized that Zach's talent had exceeded his dad's ability to coach.

"That's when it was," Chan said. "I said, 'Elliott, are you going to be able to teach him, or are we going to need a professional?"

Zach's first professional tutor recognized a prodigy.

"That young man's going places," he told the family.

And indeed he has.

The Caggins, mom, dad, Zach and 4-year-old Kailei, spent their summer traveling from one tournament to the next. In December, they'll watch Zach compete in Miami.

Zach, a sports trivia buff who plays basketball when he's not golfing, aspires to be a professional golfer. He collects autographs from his "golf heroes," like Kenny Perry and Vijay Singh, and has a personal letter from Tiger Woods.

But it's not Perry or Singh or Woods that Zach admires the most.

"My role model is my dad," he said.

Dojo offers kids discipline, growth

Fallen coach inspires kids to victory

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Respect, hònor, courage, loyalty, discipline. Sound familiar?

Those traits are right along the line of the Army values and are taught to young minds long before the age of enlistment at a small karate dojo on South Lumpkin Road called Fiama's Martial Arts.

"We teach karate, not Tae Kwon Do," said coach David Bauzo.

"Karate is more of a way of life, a form of discipline."

Bauzo said modern Tae Kwon Do is based on the theatrics and athletics of the art, rather than the total body and mind of the Yoshukai Karate taught at Fiama's

"We teach (the kids) self-discipline," he said. "They know what to do in the absence of authority and are taught to be well-mannered and respectable."

Willie Robinson, a Fiama student whose father retired from the Army in 1992, said that focus was apparent the first day he walked in the dojo door.

"They teach you how to be a good person, to treat people right and show respect," he said.

"The training can be very hard at times, but that is just something you have to go through like anything else in life."

> "She would have wanted them to learn that life does go on. You can and will succeed, even though one of your comrades has fallen."
> David Bauzo
> Fiama's Martial Arts coach, > of his wife and fellow coach,
> who died of cancer Aug. 26

Bauzo said the hours of practice students endure enhance their school and home lives rather than detract from them.

"They learn to pay attention, focus and show dedication," he said. "This training can last a lifetime."

The 34 or so students who attend the school, many of whom are in Army families, work hard to set and achieve goals, Bauzo said. Then they move on and establish further goals. This desire for constant improvement is something the black belt says will guide them through real life.

"They focus on the skills needed for one belt, work hard and train to earn that belt and then start it all over again with the next belt," Bauzo said. "It's just like in school — getting from one grade to the next."

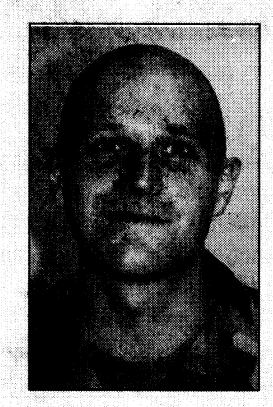
The training has already begun to pay off for the Fiama students.

A team of five students competed in the world championships in Atlanta Sept. 10 and 11, sweeping the forms event and placing well in both sparring and weapons.

Winning graciously wasn't the most important lesson learned that day for the five students, all of whom have parents affiliated with the military.

"This was for Cathy," said Bauzo, referring to his wife and fellow coach, who passed away Aug. 26 after a long battle with cancer. "She was their coach. It was her hard work that helped get them here.

"When we won, we knew she was watching over us and we were happy, so we knew she was happy," Robinson said.



"I have been going there for three years this month, and Mrs. Cathy was like a mother figure to me since my mom moved away," he said. "She was someone to lean on."

"She was with them until the very end, rolling out onto the mat in her wheelchair to show them moves and correct their form. She would have wanted them to learn that life does go on," Bauzo said.

"You can and will succeed, even though one of your comrades has fallen. What these kids did was amazing, and I know in heaven she was jumping up and down saying, 'We did it!'"

Main Post areas to open for deer hunting

Officials to use lottery for deer harvest

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

As deer hunting season gets under way, Fort Benning residents are urged to use caution, particularly on Main Post, where one might not expect to encounter hunters.

Areas in and around the post's cantonment area will be opened for hunting periodically this fall to alleviate the over-population of deer.

These areas include the Follow Me Golf Course and the Water Treatment Plant on Marne Road near the Fort Benning Hunt Club.

Bow hunters in these areas may present a hazard to residents who wander off the beaten path, but the presence of hunters may also drive deer out of the woods and into high-traffic areas — always a hazard.

The hunts are designed to control the deer population and stop the growing number of deer-related accidents each year on post.

"These (hunts) are really for the good of our residents," said Harley Chase, post safety specialist. "Even at 30 miles per hour, a deer can cause thousands of dollars worth of damage. At this time of year, the (MP) blotter is full of these kinds of accidents."

Last year, a select number of hunters, chosen by lottery, were allowed to hunt on the golf course, where deer were wreaking havoc on the greens and nearby neighborhoods.

"We learned that the nuisance deer on the golf course were actually living in the area around the Water Treatment Plant," said Capt. Bobby Toon, who'll serve as assistant hunt master for this year's lottery hunts.

The hunts will take place in three-day increments. Four hunters will be allowed on the golf course, six at the treatment plant. All hunters will be supervised by a hunt master or his assistant.

And all hunters must have a Hunters Safety Card, a post access pass and a state hunting license. They must pass a basic archery skills test, and they must have a tree stand, since all hunts are "still" hunts.

Hunters selected to participate in the lottery hunts must pay $50, and golf course hunters will pay an extra $5 golf cart fee.

Information and hunt dates will be available at the Fort Benning Hunting Open House Tuesday from 6-10 p.m. at the Officers' Club.

For information, call Toon at 536-6021 or Ed House at 536-8200.

THE BAYONET

Vol. 62, No. 39 | Published in the interest of the Fort Benning community | Friday, Oct. 1, 2004

RCI contractor announced

Clark Pinnacle selected to build communities

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning officials revealed the name of the company selected to build new houses on post — a company with a history of developing successful Army communities and partnerships.

Col. Rick Riera announced Wednesday that Clark Pinnacle Family Communities LLC was awarded the contract to build 3,667 homes and rehabilitate 493 existing homes on Fort Benning over the next eight years.

"We're happy with our new partner and really anxious to get started," said Riera, Fort Benning's garrison commander. "This is the best thing that could happen to our housing."

Clark Pinnacle was chosen from a pool of applicants to partner with Fort Benning under the DoD's Residential Communities Initiative, which calls for the military to pull out of the housing business "and leave it to the professionals," Riera said.

"It's no secret that housing has never been a core Army competence," he said.

"Right now, people see Fort Benning 'housing areas.' This will change the way people look at us. They'll see communities."

Clark Pinnacle is already developing communities at Fort Irwin, Calif., the Presidio of Monterey Calif., and Fort Belvoir, Va. The Fort Benning contract will add the maintenance of more than 4,000 units to the 8,000 they're already charged with. The company is also responsible for community centers, parks and walking trails.

Representatives from Clark Pinnacle will visit Fort Benning later this month to begin formulating a plan to "rebuild Fort Benning over he next eight years," Riera said. The plan must be presented to Congress in six months.

Clark Pinnacle will take full responsibility for housing in January, 2006.

For more information about Clark Pinnacle and to view their progress at other installations, visit their Web site at www.clarkpinnacle.com.

CLOSER LOOK

Highlights from the Clark Pinnacle offer include:

- Build 3667 new three- and four-bedroom, single-family and duplex homes
- In the first 18 months, build community centers, walking trails, parks and playgrounds
- In the first eight years, rehabilitate 493 historic homes
- The project is valued at approximately $2.3 billion over 50 years
- RCI will improve the quality of life for 15,500 service members and their families.

The descent wasn't smooth, but with a little coaching, Lili Bonilla reached the bottom of the 34-foot rappel tower.

"I've done it before on the taller (tower) at Victory Pond," Bonilla said. "You just feel so heavy, but slowly you get the hang of it."

Bonilla was one of 48 women who woke early, donned BDUs and a pair of sturdy shoes and headed to the Ranger Training Brigade for a taste of Ranger life.

Jane Wayne Day was Sept. 25. The daylong event was open to the wives of Soldiers assigned to the RTB and their guests.

"It's is a chance to build teamwork among the wives in the Family Readiness Group," said Lt. Col. Terry McKenrick, 4th Ranger Training Battalion commander. "The wives get excited to do the same events the Rangers do."

The day started with a welcome, and the women were divided into squads and assigned a team leader. Then they headed to Eubanks Field, donned parachute harnesses and jumped from the airborne tower.

"I was really nervous to go first out of the airborne tower, but I loved it," said Amber Weaber. "I think everyone should try this. It's great to see what your husband does."

From there, it was on to Todd Field to toss a tomahawk and shoot a bow and arrow. After an MRE

Live fire compares M-4, XM8

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

More than 400 spectators filled the bleachers at Red Cloud Range Sept. 22 to watch a side-by-side demonstration of modern rifle technology.

The demonstration was designed to showcase the capabilities of the XM8 weapon system in a comparison with its counterpart, the M-4 carbine.

After a brief introduction to each weapon and the roles of the squad members, Soldiers loaded the Stryker armored vehicles and sped away.

As the sounds of classic rock poured out of the loudspeakers, the Strykers bounded into position and lowered their hatches.

Then a squad of Soldiers armed with traditional Army weapons sprang into action and laid down a steady stream of fire, kicking up a cloud of dust as they knocked over green targets on a hillside about 150 meters away.

Soldier dies in crash

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

A Fort Benning Soldier was killed last week.

Sgt. Frank Crayton, 21, of A Company, 3rd Brigade Troops Battalion, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, was killed in a single car accident on post at about 6:30 p.m. Sept. 21.

According to a Training and Doctrine Command operations report released Sept. 22, Crayton was traveling at a high rate of speed on Interstate 185 near Custer Road when he lost control of his vehicle. The car flipped over, hit an embankment, skidded along a drainage ditch and crashed into a tree.

He was pronounced dead at 6:50 p.m.

A memorial service for Crayton, who had only been at Fort Benning for a few weeks when he was killed, was held Monday on Kelley Hill.

Water contract signed

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Today, Fort Benning will officially be out of the water and wastewater business.

"This has been a very long haul," said Dr. Osman Khan, Resources Efficiency manager, Directorate of Public Works. "This constitutes the final privatization of post utilities.

As part of a 50-year contract, Columbus Water Works will now provide Fort Benning with water and wastewater services and will completely own and maintain the facilities.

Osman said Fort Benning has been producing it's own water by drawing it from the Upatoi since World War II.

Experience with out-sourcing utilities has been beneficial to the post, he said.

"It behooves us to promote privatization," Khan said. "Reliability, improvement in

SOLDIER SHOW

I'm not talented, I'm motivated

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It took me 15 years to discover that I had no talent for writing, but I couldn't give it up because by that time I was too famous."
— Robert Benchley
actor, author and humorist

Well, let me just say that I will never have Mr. Benchley's particular problem. I won't ever be famous for anything I've written. But, believe it or not, I've been "googled."

For those of you unfamiliar with the term, as I was, it means a Google search of your name will actually return something. I've apparently "hit the big time" with the article I wrote about the CONUS Replacement Center training the involuntarily mobilized Reservists. Wahoo. Move over, I have arrived.

Now back to reality. I just wish I had some talent. Don't we all.

When I was much younger, I was bitten by the horse bug. My parents kindly paid for riding lessons and sent me off to horsey camps in the summer. Before long, I had visions of being an Olympic equestrienne, looking elegant and polished as I competed in dressage and fearlessly and flawlessly jumping my horse over impossibly tall fences.

I played the clarinet for seven years, tried my hand at piano, trumpet and even flute.

Then came high school in Texas, where people thought an English saddle belonged in another country, and riding gave way to swimming.

But my hopes of Olympic swimming medals were dashed the first time I swam the 500-yard freestyle. As I hauled myself out of the pool, my coach said she needed to trade in her stopwatch for a calendar. I was, obviously, a bit slow. I kept at it, improving my times and eventually competing in the same event in college — with far better results.

Swimming gave way once more to riding, which gave way to the Army and running, which eventually led to more running, then to crochet and quilting and racquetball and guitar and triathlons. These days, I'm back into riding.

What I've discovered, through many trials and more tribulations than I ever imagined, is that I'm never going to be talented in any one thing. I've decided that my talent is for mediocrity — but a good sort — I'm a jack-of-all-trades, master of none.

I also realize it's becoming harder and harder for kids to be happy with being average. Even the youngest are bombarded with the likes of child stars gone amok. There seems to be a lot of pressure on kids to pick a sport or an instrument or even a subject at school and focus all their energy on becoming "the best" at it by the time they are 10.

I found another quote I like, this one anonymous. "Motivation will almost always beat mere talent." I'm subscribing to that philosophy and letting my kids flit in and out of whatever sport or activity they want to try.

For those of you who want to see talent in action, check out the Soldier Show at 7 p.m. Saturday at Wetherby Field. Like the name implies, they're Soldiers first and foremost, but with enough talent to entertain the masses. And unlike big-name civilian talent, these guys and gals aren't lining their pockets. Admission is free and the show is bound to be good.

See you there!

Heroes, food make for good time

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

I love it when I don't have to cook. Any opportunity not to cook is wonderful — but Friday I was treated to one of the best lunches in a long time — not because of the food but because of the company. It was the Honor Ceremony for the House of Heroes.

House of Heroes gives the community an opportunity to thank military and public service veterans for their contributions to our well-being. The way to say thanks — painting, mowing, weeding and minor home repairs. (Students from Jordan High School built the handicapped ramp for the house my team worked on, because we had more enthusiasm than building expertise. Thanks Jordan!)

Anyway, back to lunch — the Columbus Trade Center Ballroom was packed with nearly 700 people; 52 of those were the homeowners. Out of the 52 homes that were repaired, Fort Benning teams worked on 21. That's an amazing community effort to honor the sacrifices of others.

And their sacrifices? During World War II, Pfc. Louis Sidre was assigned to the 3rd Infantry Division in Northern Africa when orders came to take the war to the Germans in Italy. At Anzio, Sidre was injured, but as the 3rd Inf. Div. moved inland, he and two other Soldiers were sent on a recon patrol. He was the only one to return.

While he was cut off behind enemy lines for a week, the passwords changed and he had to get back to American lines without knowing them.

He was listed missing in action, and his family received a telegram and his personal possessions. Later, an officer visited his family to tell them he'd returned to his unit.

Sidre retired as a master sergeant. His career highlights included a hospital visit from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

In 1939, Frederick Malner was assigned to the 25th Inf. Div. at Schofield Barracks. He was on Oahu when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. Malner served in both the Pacific and European theaters during World War II. He landed on Omaha Beach in Normandy on D-Day plus three. There he earned the Combat Infantryman Badge. He was part of the occupation.

During the Korean War, Malner was assigned to the 8th Engineer Battalion, 1st Cavalry Div. In 1965, he was assigned to the 174th Combat Aviation Battalion based at An Som where he worked on Hueys.

Hearing the biographies of the heroes emphasized to one volunteer that these guys have done things many people wouldn't want to. It hammers home George Orwell's quote, "People sleep peaceably in their beds at night only because rough men stand ready to do violence on their behalf."

Thank you veterans.

Call me 'Soldier,' call me 'Jane,' but call me proud

Spc. Natalie Loucks
3rd Brigade Public Affairs Office

"Oh by the way," my husband said, "I signed you up for Jane Wayne Day."

I must admit, my initial reaction to the news wasn't the same as if he had told me he signed me up for a vacation to the Bahamas.

Jane Wayne Day, as it was described to me, was designed to give the wives of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion a taste of what their husbands do.

I'm in the Army, so what my husband really did was sign me up for an extra day of work.

Rappelling (been there), obstacle course (done that), road march (would rather not … again).

I arrived at the briefing not knowing any of the other wives. They all seemed to have their own circle of friends.

When I heard "A Company, Natalie Loucks," I paid close attention to the other names called for A Company. These women were going to be my circle of friends. At least for the day.

I was referred to as "Mrs. Loucks" on more than one occasion. That just sounded strange. All day, every day, I answer to "Specialist" or "Loucks." I wasn't a Soldier on Jane Wayne Day — I was a Ranger wife.

The day's events were challenging, something I didn't expect. I was pushed beyond fear and pain. I learned new things and literally got down and dirty. And right there next to me — not the company or platoon or squad I see everyday at work — but wives and children who have never had this kind of experience before. And they were good — no, they were great — at what they were doing.

Throughout the day, I really got to know my "temporary circle of friends." They are incredible people.

Every woman out there on the "battle field" demonstrated extraordinary skill, heart and determination. I am proud to be a part of that … I am a Ranger wife.

CG: 'Infantry Conference successful'

This year's Infantry Conference was a resounding success. It was received well because of the great work by the U.S. Army Infantry Center Team!

Recent combat veterans provided invaluable lessons for fighting the Global War on Terrorism. The Fort Benning staff facilitated working groups discussing ways to transform our Army from Urban Operations to Stryker Operations and to form and fight our brigade combat teams with the modularity initiatives.

We presented the Doughboy Award to two great Soldiers, retired Sgt. Maj. of the Army William Connelly and retired Lt. Gen. John Norton.

We broke ground for the new National Infantry Museum, where Soldiers from the Basic Combat Training Brigade and 11th Infantry Regiment brought the ceremony to life, portraying the American fighting man through the ages.

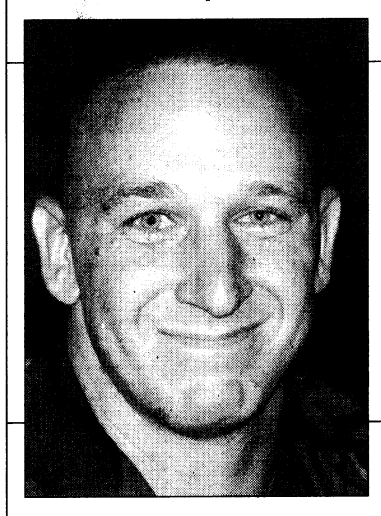
The 29th Infantry Regiment's EXFOR demonstrated the capabilities of a rapid fielding initiative equipped squad and an XM8 equipped squad.

More than 650 guests and 200 vendors from throughout the U.S. praised the conference, praised Fort Benning and our Soldiers.

This was a great team effort.

While it started months ago with the establishment of the Infantry Conference Operations cell, it kicked into high gear last weekend as our Soldiers spent Saturday and Sunday cleaning up Fort Benning in the wake of Hurricane Ivan. They worked side by side with the crews from Shaw Industries.

Never have I been more proud of the men and women, Soldiers and civilians, of Fort Benning.



They demonstrated what team work is all about.

Well done! FOLLOW ME!

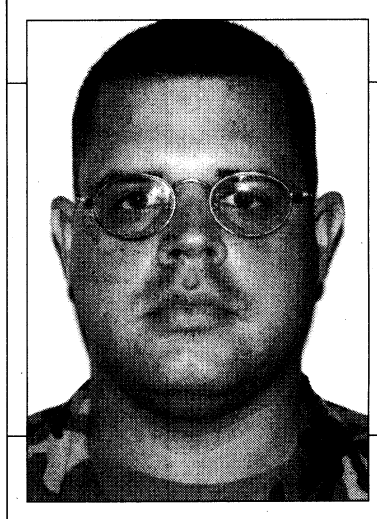
If you were in a talent show, what would you do? (Watch talented Soldiers in the Soldier Show at 7 p.m. Saturday on Wetherby Field.)

Capt. Neil Myres, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "If I were in a talent show, I'd perform dual roles in the re-enactments of Romeo and Juliet as a one man stage act."



Staff Sgt. China Oteghile, 14th Combat Support Hospital — "I would dance in a talent show. It would have to be something uptempo like salsa."

Pfc. Roberto Torres, 3rd Brigade Troop Battalion — "If I were to be in a talent show, I would dance reggaeton. It's a combination of Spanish rap and reggae."

Officer Candidate Marie Presley, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment — "If I were in a talent show, I would talk. Talking is the only thing I'm good at."

Spc. Nelson Gracia-Cruz, 203rd Forward Support Battalion — "In a talent show I would be the lead singer in my band. I'd represent Puerto Rico by singing merengue."

Sgt. 1st Class Joyce Garrett, 3rd Brigade — "When I was in Germany, I was a praise dancer. So if I were in a talent show now, I'd dance something rhythmic."

Donation nets Infantry Museum 90 Iraqi items

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Frank Hanner, Infantry Museum director, looks at the recent donations.

Ninety items were donated to the National Infantry Museum on behalf of Lt. Col. Steve Russell of the 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, 4th Division of Fort Hood, Texas, on Sept. 21.

The items included an M-79 grenade launcher, rocket propelled grenade launcher, Saracm-53 7.92 machine gun, a uniform from an Iraqi coalition soldier, a ceremonial sword of Saddam Hussein, one of his pistols, a large metal sign of Hussein's head, a uniform of an American Soldier killed in action, and many other war items.

Frank Hanner, director and curator of the museum, said the most important item brought back was the uniform of 1st Lt. Osbaldo Orozco, 2nd platoon leader of C Company, 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, 4th Infantry Division.

Orozco was the first member of the 4th Inf. Div. killed in action in Iraq.

"I will get the uniform on display before anything else," Hanner said. "Many people will not be as excited about the uniform as they are about the sword or sign, but the uniform is the most important.

"So many young men and women died for our freedom and will continue to die. We need to remember them."

Hussein's ceremonial sword will also be one of the first items on display, Hanner said.

Hussein gave the sword to members of the Baath Party he felt were worthy of special recognition. One of Hussein's .357 magnum pistols, found in one of his palaces, will also be on display. .

Russell was able to bring the weapons back because he was appointed as an artifact officer with the Military Center of History, Hanner said.

Ed Annable, weapons curator for the museum, said the items brought from Iraq show the diversity of the weapons used on coalition forces.

"We have an M-79 grenade launcher manufactured by the United States during the Vietnam era that somehow made it to Iraq," Annable said.

"There is a machine gun that is a copy of a World War II machine gun manufactured in Yugoslavia. We have a Sterling Mark-4 from the United Kingdom. You could say they are using our weapons against us," he said.

Annable was most intrigued by the auxiliary equipment that the museum didn't have in its possession prior to this.

"We didn't have a silencer for an AKM assault rifle, and they had one on one of the weapons," he said. "There was an RPG night sight, too. These types of items we didn't have in our collection before. It indicates that Iraqi soldiers and insurgents have the capabilities of night combat."

Son Tropical provided musical entertainment by performing a variety of dances from Mexico, Puerto Rico and Colombia.

A slide show presentation played as the attendees of the Hispanic Heritage month celebration found seats in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

The slides pointed out the accomplishments of all Hispanic Americans throughout the nation's history, including the military:

- 38 Hispanic Americans have been awarded the Medal of Honor,
- More than 88,000 Hispanic Americans have served in the U.S. Armed Forces,
- 80,000 Hispanics served in Vietnam; 13 of them were awarded Medals of Honor.

"This year's National Hispanic Heritage month's theme, 'Hispanic Americans Making a Difference in Our Communities and Our Nation,' is certainly appropriate for the United States Army as we reflect on the great contributions of Hispanic Americans," said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general.

The guest speaker for the event was Retired Navy Rear Admiral Alberto Diaz Jr. Diaz was born in San Juan, Puerto Rico and was commissioned as a lieutenant in the Medical Corps, U.S. Navy in April 1976. He retired from active duty in June 2003.

Diaz began his speech by reminding the audience that there's something special about the military today.

"You are now part of a very elite and dedicated group of individuals with a great future ahead of you," Diaz said. "Hispanics have contributed immensely to the development of this country as a separate and distinct culture from the East and the West."

He continued on to say it was time for parents to teach their children the beauty of diversity early on in their childhoods so they may grow to appreciate it, as diversity makes for a rich atmosphere.

"Maintain your culture but do not isolate yourself from the rest of the world," he said. "Derive strength from your heritage, don't seek refuge in it and try to follow the road less traveled. It's okay to make mistakes."

The event also featured students from White Elementary School singing the national anthem, and musical entertainment from Son Tropical who danced and performed a variety of songs from Mexico, Puerto Rico and Colombia.

To end the celebration, food was provided to all the guests.

Home of the Infantry now Home of the Energy Efficient

Improvements save post $2.1 million

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's no longer just the "Home of the Infantry" — it's now the Home of Energy Efficiency.

The post beat 18 other installations in the southeast region and others nationwide to earn first-place recognition from the Department of the Army.

Since Executive Order 12123 was signed in June 1999, Fort Benning has exceeded the energy efficiency goals, said Dr. Osman Khan, the post's resources efficiency manager, Directorate of Public Works. In fact, energy consumption is down by 37 percent from fiscal 1985 to 2003.

For 2003, which the award is based on, Khan said the post saved $2.1 million, or 6 percent from fiscal 2002.

"We've not only met, but beaten the records of all installations," Khan said, "and we're still trying to beat them further."

Fort Benning has 14 million square feet of office space and 6 million square feet of family housing.

Meeting and exceeding the goals required the combined efforts of several agencies on post, Khan said, including the Environmental Management Division, and contracts with Atmos Energy.

"Rather than focus on energy alone," Khan said, "we are global in our approach."

The team worked in areas of common interest and with new environmentally friendly technology. Waterless urinals add to the energy conservation and efficiency efforts.

The post implemented decentralization of the ancient steam system on post, which Khan said has saved the post more than $2 million annually since 1999.

The system, he said, was abandoned in part because it was problematic to supply the customers with the energy. By completely "moth-balling" the old system and building three new facilities on Main Post, Sand Hill and Kelley Hill, the post avoided the large cost associated with renovating boilers and rusted pipes.

Another energy-efficient move was negotiating an anti-bypass agreement with Atmos Energy, whose natural gas lines are convenient for post. "This was very novel in support of our savings," Khan said.

The "novel" approach netted more than $600,000 in natural gas savings in fiscal 2003. If Fort Benning continues on its current energy reduction "glide path," natural gas consumption alone will be reduced another 5 percent in the next few years. "I think post can improve by another 10 to 15 percent overall," Khan said, "despite the fact we are well below the path."

He said he would be keeping an eye on the interface with the new construction projects on post and remotely monitor them. The projects will add 1 million square feet of office and living space. Although he said there is still a substantial amount of construction ahead, his team is already working to improve the energy efficiency.

Khan said the post can keep two-thirds of its energy savings money and use it to improve the quality of life on post.

"Our efforts mean recognition for post that, indeed, nationwide, we are top-of-the-line in achieving goals," Khan said.

Warrior University to give Soldiers jump on courses

Online courses cut time, money

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

As more and more Soldiers join the Army with basic computer knowledge, the Army is finding new ways to train them on warrior tasks and Army knowledge.

Army Knowledge Online and eArmyu are just two examples of how the Army is working to build smarter Soldiers and better trained leaders.

Now the Army has a new program that will take e-learning to a new level — Warrior University.

Warrior University is a Web-based lifelong learning center developed by the U.S. Army Infantry School as a result of Training and Doctorine's lifelong learning initiative, to give infantry Soldiers a place to hone their skills and find answers to their questions.

According to the Web site, the mission of Warrior University is to synchronize and integrate all infantry training so that the right Soldiers receive the right training at the right time, regardless of their physical location.

It will be the center of gravity for warrior learning and will serve as the Infantry School's executive agent for use of technology to enhance resident instruction, to meet the training needs of field units, and to quickly disseminate information on new systems and lessons learned in today's operating environment.

USAIS began building Warrior University three months ago and is still improving the system.

Plans for the site include a host of learning products for the Officer Education System, NCO Education System and other skills.

Even though Soldiers can take portions of these classes online from their duty stations, the program will not get them out of going to the actual schools.

"It will be a prerequisite before coming to the resident portion," said Dan Duval, U.S. Army Infantry School training developer, Lifelong Learning Branch.

"In the current environment, there are more things we need to train with less time.

We can't get funding to extend the residencies, but we can get a lot of the training done while they are still at their units."

While the site will cut training costs and make learning more convenient for the Soldiers, it will also serve as a professional home for infantrymen, Duval said.

"Throughout history, people have gone back to their colleges and talked with their professors to answer questions throughout their careers," he said.

"This will do that for the Soldiers."

Duval said that part of the program will give leaders an obvious advantage.

"I would have loved to have had this when I was a squad leader," he said.

"To have a place to go and get information and know that I am teaching my Soldiers the right things."

Depression screening available this week

Five sites set up on post Thursday

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning community health professionals are interested in your mental health.

They are urging everyone to participate in National Depression Screening Day Thursday.

The annual event was introduced nationwide in 1991 by Screening for Mental Health, Inc., a non-profit organization.

The SMH programs include in-person and online screenings for depression, bipolar and generalized anxiety disorders and post-traumatic stress disorder.

This is the fifth year for screenings on Fort Benning, said Yvonne Wilbanks, chief of the post's Army Substance Abuse Prevention program.

Screenings will take place at the three Troop Medical Clinics, the Main Mall Post Exchange and in Classroom 7 in Infantry Hall.

Deb Manning, the ASAP education and prevention coordinator will be presenting the hourlong classes in Infantry Hall.

The class, which will focus on the four major screening areas, was developed by Oscar Schlomer, the installation biochemical test coordinator.

Manning said the class is open to all units and individuals, and will count toward the annual suicide prevention education requirement for Soldiers.

While walk-ins are welcome, Manning encourages units to call and schedule one or more of the six sessions to avoid having more Soldiers than the room can accommodate.

Chaplains and clinicians will be available at all classes and screening sites as well.

"You can talk about it and hear about it, but sometimes when you admit it on paper, it brings up a trigger of some kind," Manning said.

"And you may need to talk to someone, or just need to find out where to go for more information."

Last year, Manning said, more than 2,800 anonymous screening forms were forwarded to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to be used in their studies.

"The timing last year was perfect with 3rd Brigade just returning from Iraq," she said. "Locally, we used the forms to identify what type of additional training and information Soldiers needed."

But, Manning said, the screenings aren't just for Soldiers returning from deployment or preparing to deploy again.

"PTSD can be brought on by all sorts of trauma," she said.

Manning will give the class at 7:30, 9 and 10:30 a.m., noon, 1:30 and 3 p.m. To schedule a class, or for more information, call Manning at 545-7027.

Weapon: Testing to be completed by March 2005

position, the second moved in. This time, the Soldiers were armed with variations of the XM8 that fulfill the same purpose as the M-16 and its counterparts.

The Soldiers armed with the XM8s performed the same mission, laying down a steady line of fire, but appeared to be much more accurate.

When all was said and done, the spectators, most of whom were at Fort Benning attending the Infantry Conference, had a good idea of what the XM8 is and why the Army is looking at it so closely.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, took the microphone as the Soldiers were clearing their weapons and voiced his opinion on why prototype weapon systems like the XM8 are so important.

He said America has the best-equipped Army in the world, and its weapon systems need to be sustained and modernized to maintain that advantage.

Many of the Soldiers who took part in the demonstration had the same point of view.

Spc. Ian Mason, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was one of the nine Soldiers who fired the XM8 and was probably the weapon's most outspoken advocate.

Mason spent several months firing the rifle during testing and said "It blows the M-4 out of the water ... It's an all-around better design."

Mason said his squad had the opportunity to qualify on the basic rifle marksmanship test using the weapon and they all reaped the benefits.

"When I qualified with it, it was the best I ever did, and I zeroed with half as many rounds," he said. "Some of the guys shot 40 out of 40 and had never done that before."

Mason said the rifle is also lighter, easier to use, more comfortable, and most importantly, none of the members of his squad have had a single malfunction.

All that aside, Mason said what he likes most about the weapon is how easy it is to clean.

"It takes about two minutes to wipe down and that is a lot better than the three hours it takes to clean an M-16," he said.

"There is no gas tube to clean, and the lip on the magazine seals up the weapon," he said. "I have never had any sand inside."

"The M-4 is a good weapon. The M-16 is a good weapon. If they weren't, we wouldn't have fielded them in the first place," said Lt. Col. Matt Clarke, product manager for the XM8. "As for the XM8, we will prove one way or another if it is a better system.

"If (the Army) wants something, they want a significant improvement," he said. "We are looking at modularity, reliability and sustainability."

As for modularity, one advantage the XM8 has over the M-16 is that its barrels are interchangeable, so the armorer can stock extra parts to keep them 100 percent operational, Clarke said.

The Soldier can even change out the barrels himself while in the field, if necessary.

In the reliability department, Clarke said the XM8 was designed and constructed using high-quality steel and the manufacturers developed a trade secret for the barrel and bolt assembly that prolongs the life of the weapon.

"The barrel on the M-4 can typically fire about 6,000 to 9,000 rounds before it needs repair, and the XM8 can fire 15,000 to 20,000," he said.

Clarke said sustainability is one of the best features of the XM8 because it gives the armorer the ability to maintain the weapons himself and cuts down on the amount of parts they have to store.

Clarke said armorers need to stock many specialty parts to maintain the M-9, M-16 and the M-249, whereas the XM8 has many interchangeable parts that will work on the different variations, cutting down on the need for storing extra parts.

"It's like working on a computer," Clarke said. "If one part goes out, you can just open it up and replace it with another."

Something that can cut maintenance costs dramatically, Clarke said.

Clarke said testing for the XM8 should be completed in March 2005 and the final decision for fielding the weapon will be up to the Department of the Army.

WATER: Contract signed

service — it allows us to concentrate on our mission and frees up funds for other projects."

The water privatization project was the 96th project funded this year by the Installation Management Agency as part of a concerted effort by the Department of Defense, he said.

"The post is not in the business of making water or electricity," Khan said. "We are consumers, and the production and maintenance of age-old facilities is a distractor."

Columbus Water Works has two major plants in Columbus with the latest in water and wastewater technology. Their current capacity, Khan said, is eight times more than Fort Benning needs. Workers shadowed their counterparts on post since the beginning of September in an effort to make today's transition as smooth as possible. CWW officials do not expect any problems.

For the first several years, CWW will operate the existing facilities including the water mains and distribution laterals right up to the walls of the buildings, Khan said. Because the old facilities are difficult to maintain, CWW expects to tie Fort Benning into the CWW system and abort the existing operation within a few years. Fort Benning has two sewage treatment facilities, one on Marne Road and one at Lawson Army Airfield.

The contract, worth about $6 million annually from the Department of Defense, also allows for facility and infrastructure improvements.

The contract allows CWW to use some of its excess plant capacity, generate additional revenue and allow Fort Benning to reduce costs.

CWW anticipates providing post with an average of 6 million gallons of drinking water daily, with peaks of up to 12 million gallons daily. Waste water service is expected to be between 4 and 16 million gallons daily.

Bob Tant, CWW executive vice president, said the contract provides a "win win" situation for CWW and Fort Benning.

The support of the post's infrastructure will help ensure it's continued success.

"Fort Benning is a vital part of the community and we are honored t be able to support our men and women in uniform," Tant said.

Wives: Tackle course

lunch break, the ladies tackled the 34-foot rappel tower.

"Today I was a chicken," said Heather Schwankhaus. "You get up there and realize just how high you are. But the thing I'm most worried about is the obstacle course."

Next the squads drew weapons and marched to Malvesti Field for the confidence course, which included pull-ups, low crawling through a sawdust pit, scaling a cargo net, completing the log ladder, getting "smoked" in a mud pit and low crawling under barbed wire.

"This has been a lot of fun and is a whole new perspective on what (my husband) does," Kim Williams said. "Now it'll be fun to say, 'Quit whining, I've done it too.'"

The final challenge was paddling Zodiac boats across Victory Pond to the finish line and a cook-out.

"It's motivating to see (my wife) go through this," said Capt. Rick Storm, B Company, 4th RTB. "The family gets a chance to see what dad does, on a watered-down scale."

"Now (the Rangers) will give us respect because we tried everything," Bonilla said. "It really makes you appreciate what they do and it makes you proud."

McKenrick hopes the experience will build relationships among the participants.

"I think this is a great way to build friendship," he said. "For the Rangers, it's fun for them to bring their wives and kids and show them what they do and give them a chance to experience it. It helps the family to understand the camaraderie among the Rangers."

1st Bn., 50th Inf., Soldiers take aim at BRM

1st Lt. Matthew Berg
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

1st Lt. Matthew Berg

Pvt. Keith Fender, E Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, learns how to shoot properly during the 11 periods of basic rifle marksmanship.

Basic rifle marksmanship is a critical event in Soldier training.

If he can shoot 23 out of 40 targets on qualification day, he gets to advance and continue training with the friends he has made over the previous five weeks.

However, if he fails to qualify, it could mean a restart with another company. With 11 periods of instruction, and the expertise of the drill sergeants, this rarely occurs.

BRM consists of a two-week, 11-period block of instruction to teach young Soldiers how to shoot properly and build their confidence as they begin the soldierization process.

Training a young Soldier how to shoot consists of much more than aiming and firing the weapon. Soldiers learn about the weapon, and how to maintain it. The early parts of instruction also focus on techniques like breathing and trigger squeeze.

Grouping and zeroing can be two of the most stressful and disheartening blocks of instruction for both the Soldiers and the drill sergeants. Soldiers must group six out of six shots, given two magazines with three rounds in each. And to zero, Soldiers must hit five out of six shots within a four centimeter circle.

These are the two most important BRM periods because this is where the foundation is set for all weapons qualification and where the four fundamentals of marksmanship — steady position, proper sight picture, breathing and trigger squeeze — are applied.

There are also days when the drill sergeants' patience wears thin, and Soldier confidence begins to ebb. With drill sergeant dedication and hard work, Soldiers will zero before qualification week.

Qualification week begins with Soldiers firing at targets from 75 meters out to 300 meters, and progressing to shooting timed, pop-up targets. Malone 2, the location of miss and hit range, uses computer technology to show Soldiers the location of the hits and misses.

McAndrews Range, on the other hand, is an older range where Soldiers sit behind a wall and raise a target to be fired at. When the firing is complete, the target is lowered and white dots are placed where the rounds hit, so the Soldier can see where his rounds are going. Both ranges serve to boost a Soldier's confidence in his ability to accurately fire a rifle, and help prepare him to qualify.

The two days preceding qualification day are for practice qualification. BRM 9 is the last event where the Soldiers have a coach to assist them with corrections when firing.

The Army emphasizes the buddy system in training and BRM 1 thru 9 are no different. The buddy system gives Soldiers a coach at all times so mistakes can be immediately pointed out.

BRM 10 is the final day before qualification and the first time Soldiers shoot without having a coach. Soldiers shoot at the same target array (computer controlled system that determines which targets pop up in which order) that he will see during qualification, allowing Soldiers to gauge readiness.

Qualification day finally arrives with BRM 11, when Soldiers put the training they received during the previous two weeks to work. The majority of Soldiers will get a first time go.

It is a proud moment for a Soldier when he can stand before his company commander and receive a BRM Badge which means he has qualified with his M-16 A4 rifle.

OSUT Soldiers learn bayonet skills, prepare for close combat

1st Lt. Steven D. Atwood
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers of B Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, continued their education in becoming infantrymen by learning how to fight with a bayonet in close combat.

After drawing their bayonets, the platoons moved to Upper Gammon Field, where the Soldiers started learning rifle bayonet fighting techniques. This encompasses the basic stances and movement techniques.

First the Soldiers are taught the fighting stance followed by the whirl. The main focus is teach the Soldiers proper posture and how to maintain their balance while engaging with the enemy at close combat.

Next the Soldiers learned offensive techniques. Historically, this section of training is more difficult for the Soldiers because they are not used to using the weapon in this manner. If done properly, it is both physically and mentally demanding.

The Soldiers learn the slash, smash and butt strokes to the head, kidney and groin. They begin with doing each movement by the numbers, one step at a time. Once the drill sergeant is satisfied that the Soldiers have a basic understanding of the technique, each technique is practiced at full speed. After the Soldiers master the individual movements, they are introduced to combinations at full speed.

Finally, defensive techniques are taught. Soldiers learn the parry, high block, low block and side block. The defensive movements are taught with the same crawl-walk-run method as the offensive movements. The culmination of these periods of instruction is the defensive and offensive combinations.

Later in the cycle, the Soldiers demonstrate the skills they have learned at the Kaufman Bayonet Assault Course.

Eagle Tower heightens confidence, skills

Capt. Christopher Lane
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Training comes in many forms and serves many purposes. The underlying purpose of training exercises is to build confidence in individual skills, and to cultivate the ability to overcome fear or adversity.

A Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, in its third week of one station unit training, is currently training individual skills, and building a base for learning and improving, in both the physical and mental aspects of soldiering.

Individual skills are the focus of the training at Sand Hill's Eagle Tower.

Instruction on how to properly tie a Swiss seat, how to use a figure-eight harness, how to properly climb the tower, proper rappelling and belay techniques, and how to conduct single rope, one-rope bridge, and two-rope bridge crossings is taught at Eagle Tower.

Soldiers practiced on a smaller tower as well, to provide them a chance to properly execute the training.

Overall, the training gives the Soldiers other tools to use in their future training.

It gives them confidence in their abilities and demonstrates that, as a Soldier, each can accomplish numerous tasks that previously would have seemed extremely difficult or impossible.

Change of plans:

Combat Leaders Course prepares all Soldiers to be infantrymen

Program likely prototype for course Armywide

During his 10 months in Iraq, Staff Sgt. Robert Bailey saw it time and time again: supply convoys under attack, engineers in danger and field medics fired upon.

"When you go to war, no matter what your primary job is, at some point you're going to be an infantryman. The Army wants everybody — every Soldier — to be a fighter first," said Bailey, one of 16 instructors in the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's Combat Leaders Course.

The 29th's course, in its third two-week phase, is a pilot program designed to "train the trainers" — to instruct "soft skill" leaders, in this case drill sergeants and PLDC instructors, in 40 warrior skills they'll pass on to their Soldiers.

Courses like this will soon be offered at training installations Armywide, each one designed to teach infantry skills to Soldiers who typically support the infantry — engineers, cooks, medics and the like.

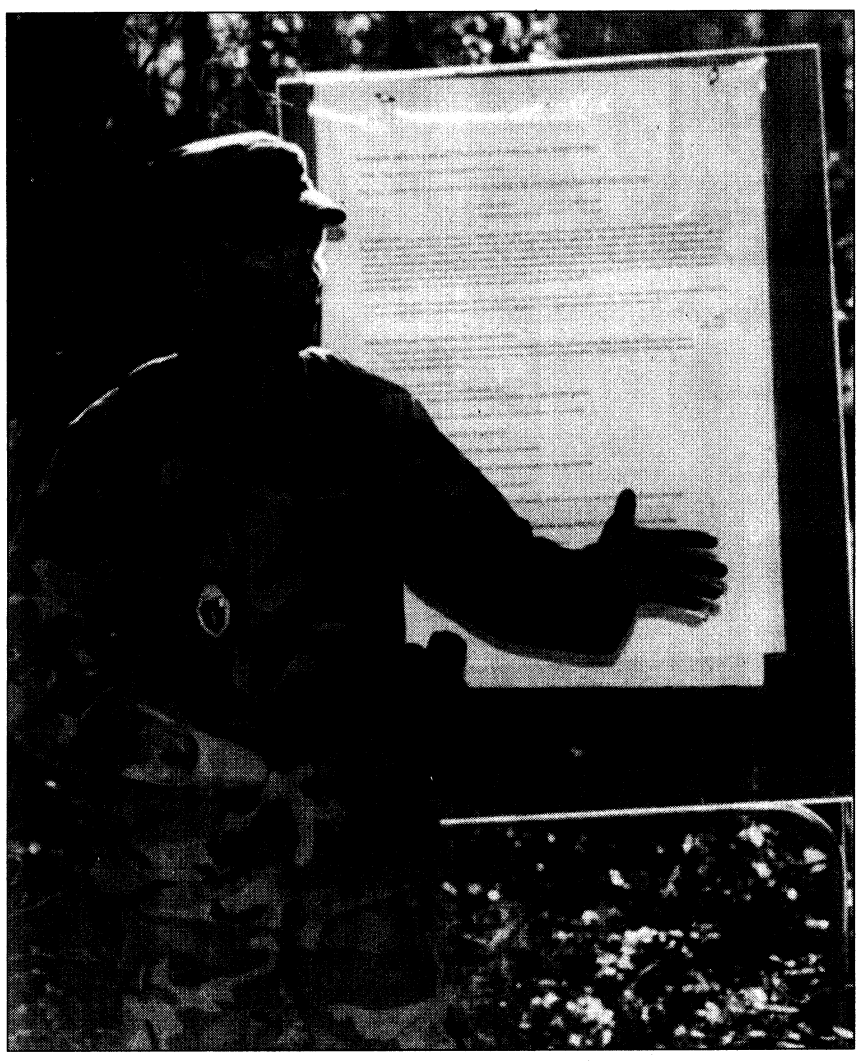
Nearly all of the CLC instructors at Fort Benning's course recently returned from Iraq. Therefore they understand the relevance of the program.

"I saw it all the time: the support units running supplies to base camps were key targets for roadside ambushes," Bailey said.

Sgt. 1st Class Antonio Cox was sent to Iraq as a drill sergeant with the 1st Infantry Division to help train the Iraqi forces. Now, as a student in the second week of CLC, Cox is convinced the course is invaluable.

"Our job was to train the Iraqi National Guard, but once we got there, there was a shift in the mission. We ended up doing patrols," he said. "That's the way it is over there. Things change constantly. You have to be ready for anything."

The 29th's CLC took place on Sand Hill in the sandy, wooded area near Lee Field Drop Zone. Thirty-five students spent two weeks, around the clock, learning about convoy operations, improvised explosive devices, chemical attacks, how to anticipate and repel an ambush, and the like. They rotated between "lanes" and took turns leading their peers. After each exercise, they conducted an after action review to evaluate their performance and get feedback from their instructors.



Staff Sgt. Michael Smith is an instructor at the Drill Sergeant School at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. He attended the CLC with an eye toward implementing a similar program in the school's next cycle.

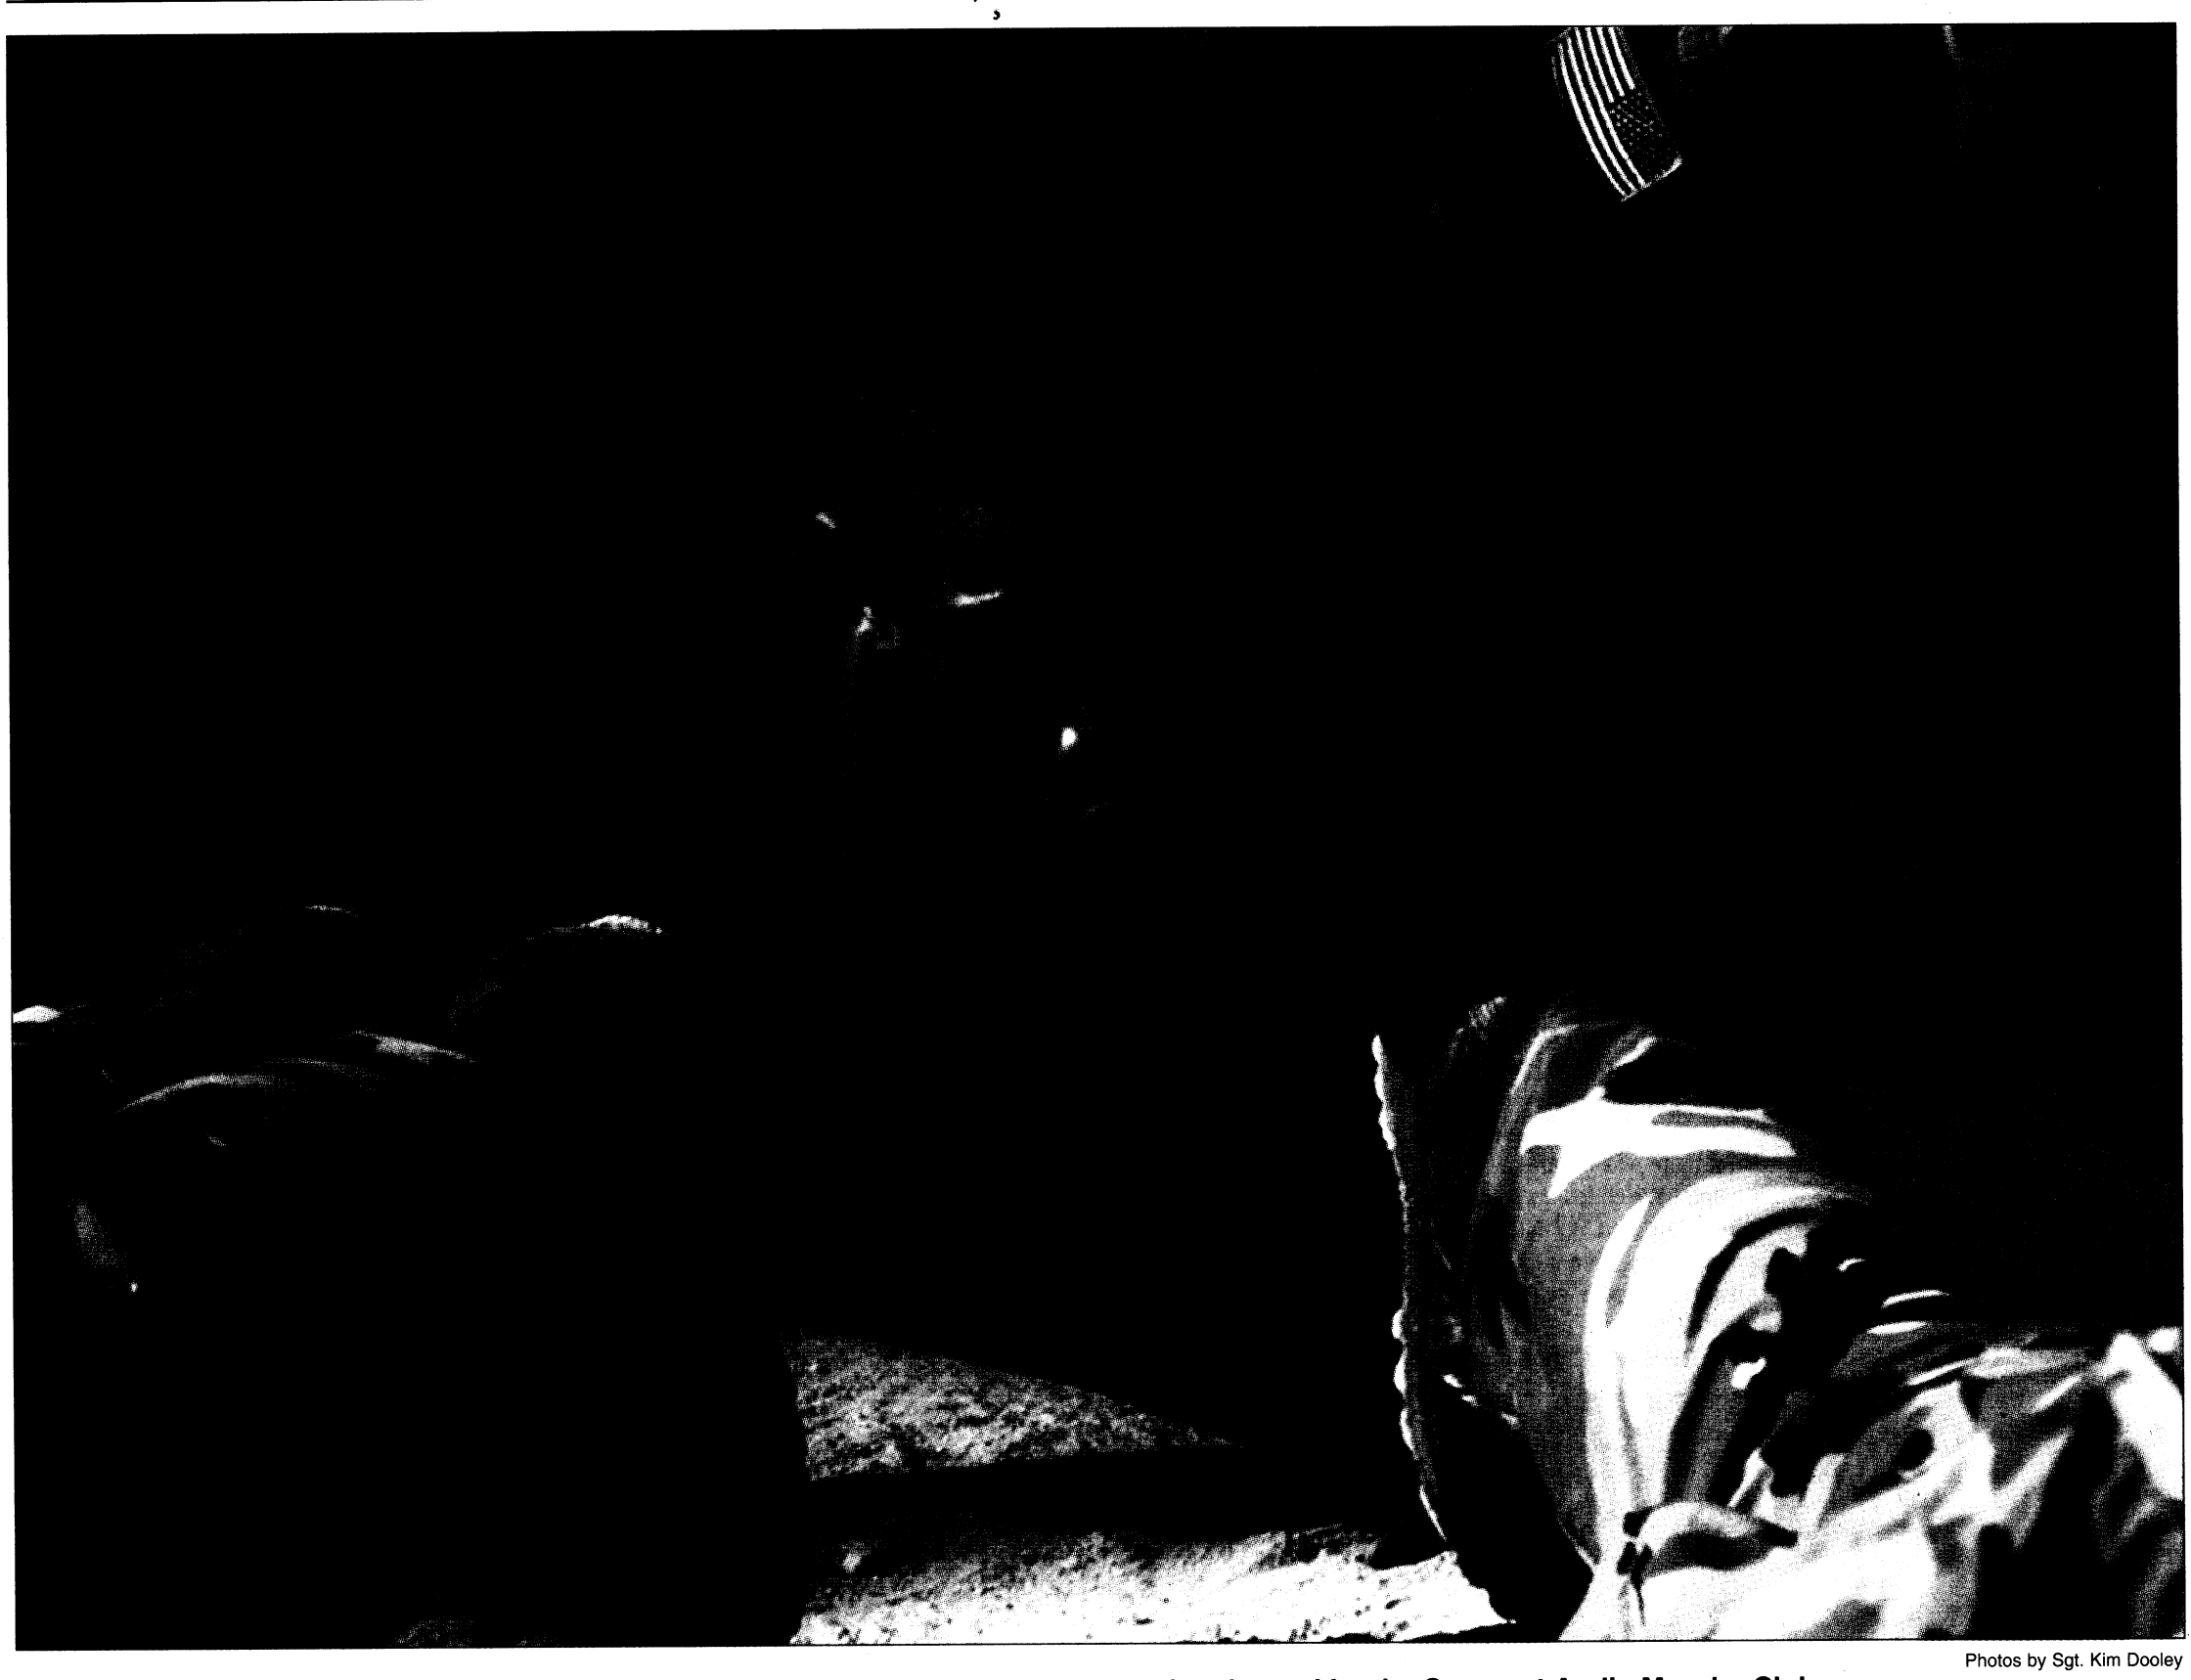
Smith, who's been "on the trail" two years, believes the course will benefit Soldiers, like him, who haven't been to Iraq.

"The thing is, the experience these (instructors) gained in Iraq will help those of us who weren't there," Smith said.

"I can take what I've learned here and go back and train my drill sergeants to train their basic trainees."

The 29th will conduct monthly courses, each designed to accommodate more than 40 students. The curriculum will be based on the feedback the instructors receive from the pilot program, Bailey said.

Staff Sgt. Douglas Gallagher, a CLC instructor, leads an after action review following a field exercise Sept. 22. Nearly all of the course instructors recently returned from Iraq and volunteered to take part in the pilot program.



"When you go to war, no matter what your primary job is, at some point you're going to be an infantryman. The Army wants everybody — every Soldier — to be a fighter first."

Instructor, Combat Leaders Course

CLC students participate in an after action review after an ambush. The students spent two weeks in the woods with an average of four hours sleep each night.

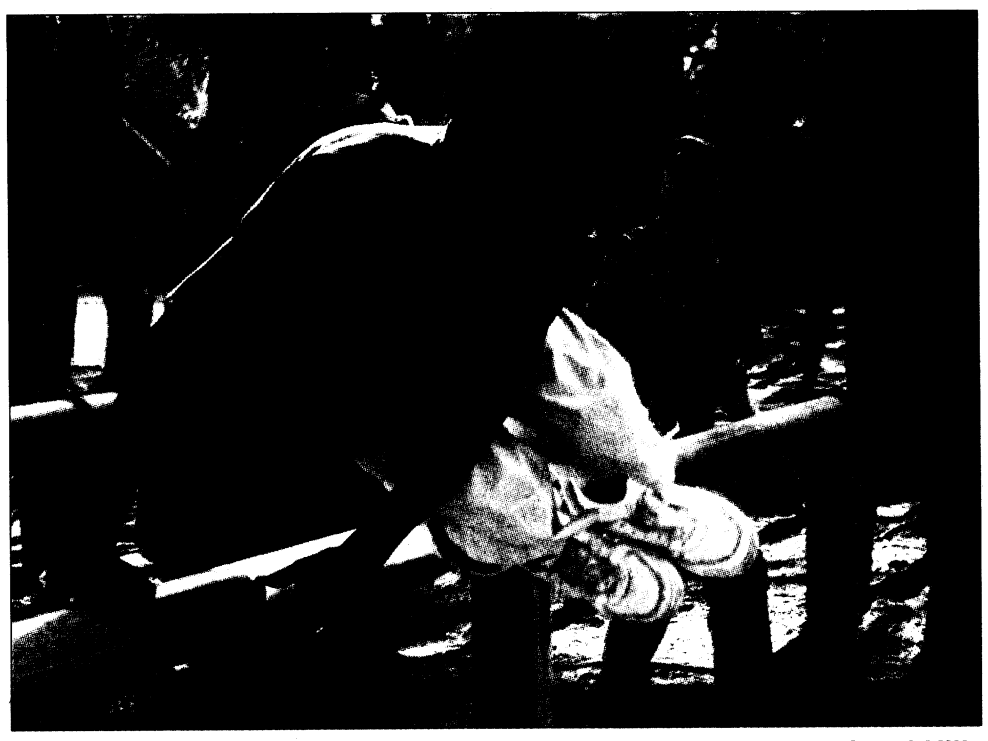
Deonté Giles gets a taste of the Soldier life during a visit to Sand Hill Saturday morning, hosted by the Sergeant Audie Murphy Club.

START 'EM YOUNG

SAMC gives kids taste of Army

NCOs host Eagle's Trace youngsters for day on Sand Hill



Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Early Saturday morning, Sand Hill echoed with a resounding "HOOAH!" The troops fell into formation, marched to the obstacle course and prepared to tackle it.

But these weren't your average Soldiers. Ranging in age from 4 to 17, these troopers were special guests of Fort Benning's Sergeant Audie Murphy Club.

About 16 youngsters left their homes in Eagle's Trace apartments, outside Fort Benning's main gate, and joined SAMC members, helpers from the club and several basic training Soldiers to take on the hill's obstacle and confidence courses.

Organized through Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus, the event gave the club a chance to do something positive for the community, while giving the kids something different and exciting to do, said Staff Sgt. Salina Hernandez, SAMC vice president.

Deonté Giles jumps poles during the confidence course on Sand Hill.

"It was just an opportunity to show the kids that people do care about them," Hernandez said, adding that the club members benefited just as much as their visitors.

"For lack of better words, it was a chance to share the love," she said.

The children are part of the Eagle's Trace Breakout program, a youth group for kids in the apartment complex.

In its second year, the group is directed by Cathy Brinson, who said the 75 children enrolled in the program do "a little of everything," including field trips, cooking classes, tutoring, Bible studies, crafts, computers and a 4-H program.

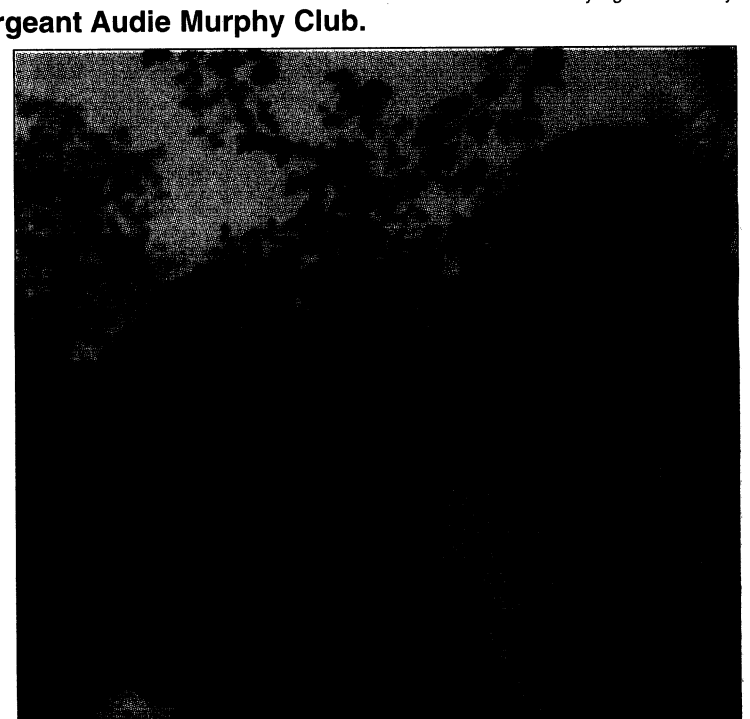
Roy Bailey said his favorite activities are swimming and playing pool. However, Saturday was a special treat for the 11-year-old, who said he thinks "being a Soldier would be fun."

"I want to do all of it — any job in the military," he said, adding that his "grandaddy and three aunties" have military ties.

Although Bailey's not exactly sure he wants to be a Soldier just yet, he had fun during his brief encounter with troop training, working hard to master the bear crawl and the rope climbing at the obstacle course.

That's just what the club was hoping for, Hernandez said.

"These kids looked like they were having so much fun, and they all said they wanted to do it again," she said. "They don't have a lot of things to do (like this), so it was great just to be able to give them a place to go have fun and enjoy just being themselves."



Meanwhile, the message it sends to the community is equally important.

"Doing things like this shows that we care," Hernandez said. "It shows that we're not just military–minded, that we care about the community and the people in it. Because we're all the same — we're them and they're us."

Beyond that, Hernandez said, it was a positive experience for everyone.

"I think it's the best thing we've done so far," she said of the SAMC.

"And it's one of the greatest experiences I've had since I've been at Fort Benning."

Roy Bailey, 11, works his way up a ladder during the confidence course on Sand Hill.

Amanda Brinson-Stringer, 2, shows her excitement over a treat on Sand Hill Saturday.

COMMUNITY

SECTION B

'Hooch to get help Oct. 8,9

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Volunteers are needed for the sixth annual Help the 'Hooch from 8 a.m. to noon Oct. 8.

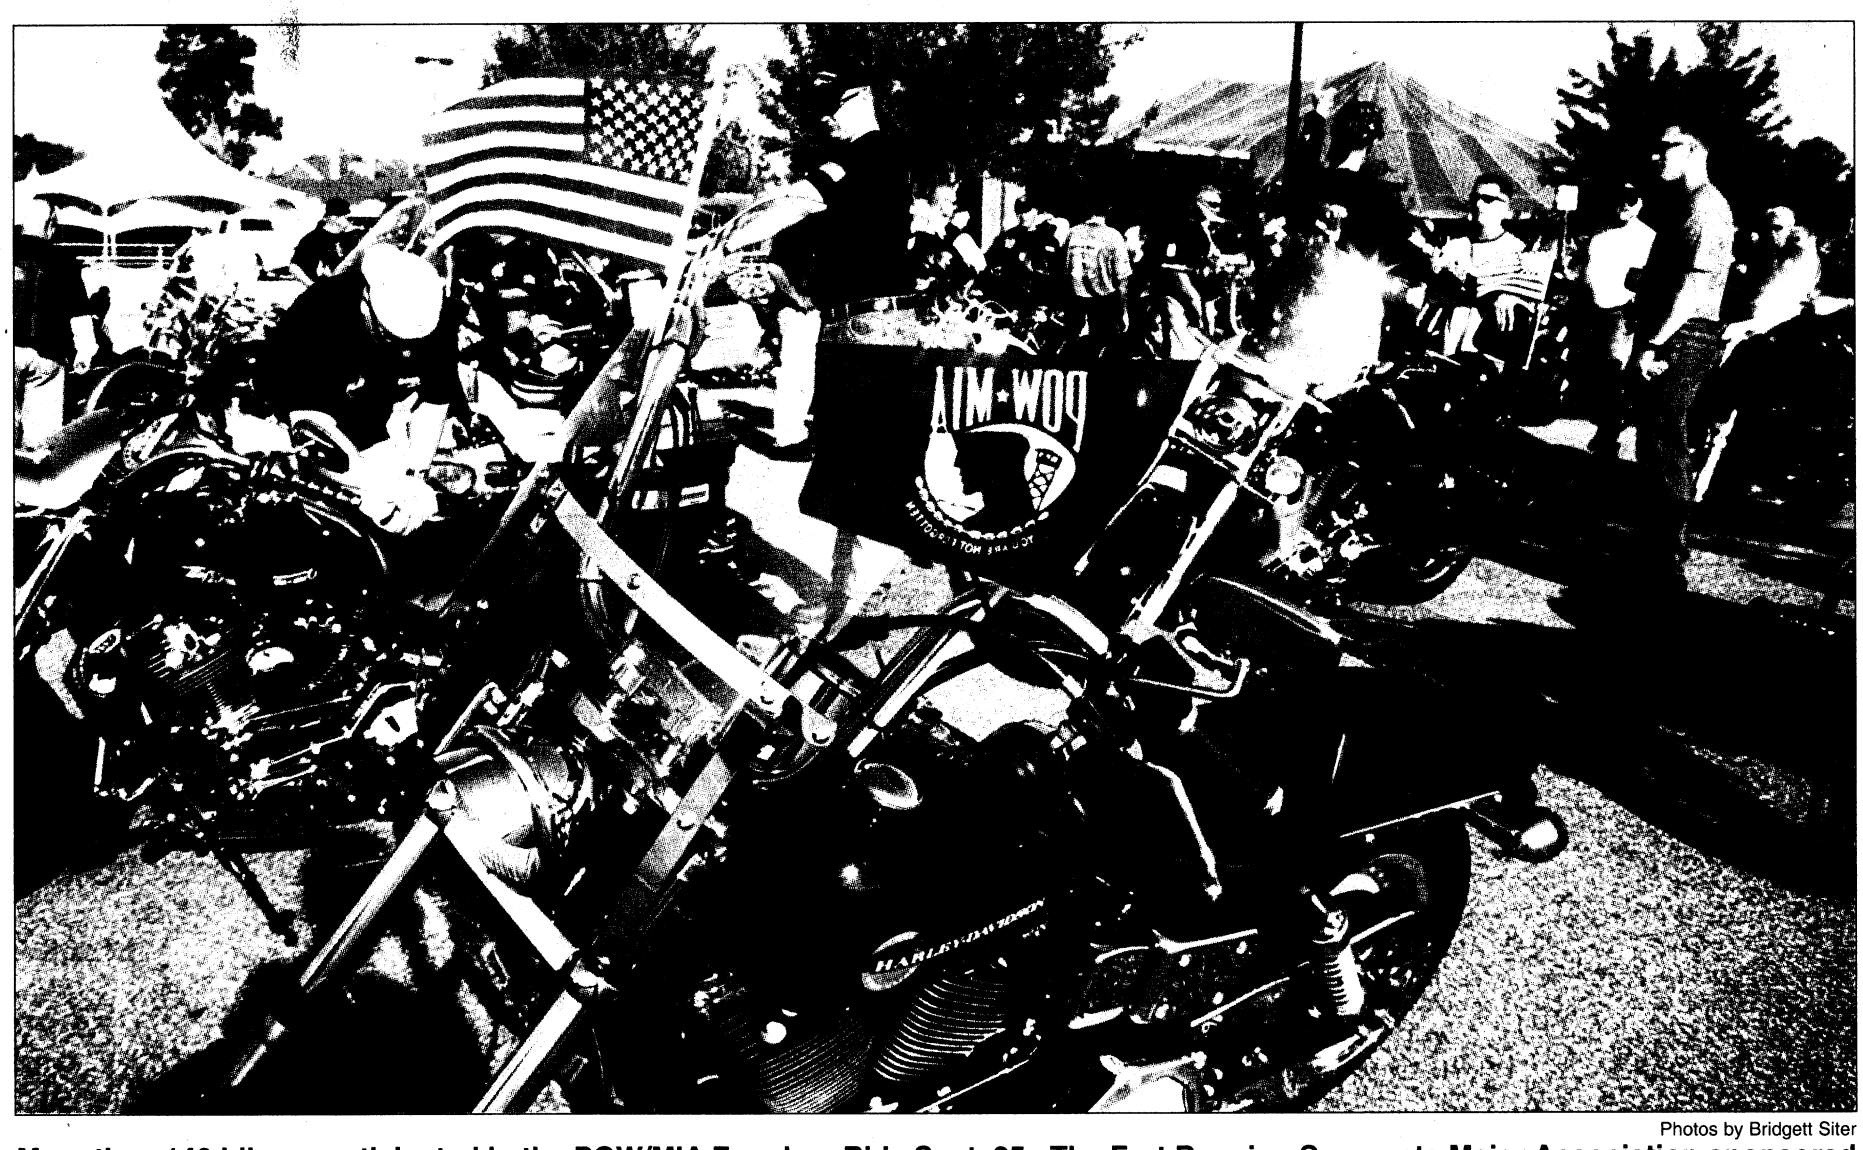
Help the 'Hooch is an initiative of the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission and Keep America Beautiful, a national nonprofit public service organization dedicated to litter prevention, recycling and beautification efforts, said Chris Slembarski, environmental awareness trainer with the Fort Benning Directorate of Public Works.

"This is a community service project designed to help keep the riverside clean and attractive for recreational activities," Slembarski said.

Last year, 200 Fort Benning volunteers collected 350 bags of trash from the banks of the Chattahoochee River.

Volunteers will cover as much of the riverbank that runs through Fort Benning as possible.

"We won't be able to cover all 17 miles, but we will try and get into most of the areas that we can get our cars into," he said.



Volunteers can expect to pick up "lots of dirty, muddy trash," Slembarski said.

Linda Turner, a counselor at Dexter Elementary, has been taking her students to Help the 'Hooch for 11 years now.

She said the program gives the kids an opportunity to see what people throw away and how it affects nature.

Those who would like to volunteer but cannot participate Oct. 8 can still help out Oct. 9, Slembarski said.

For more information, call Slembarski at 545-4766.

More than 140 bikers participated in the POW/MIA Freedom Ride Sept. 25. The Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association sponsored the ride and the dedication of a POW/MIA monument.

POW/MIAs remembered

First monument dedicated after Freedom Ride

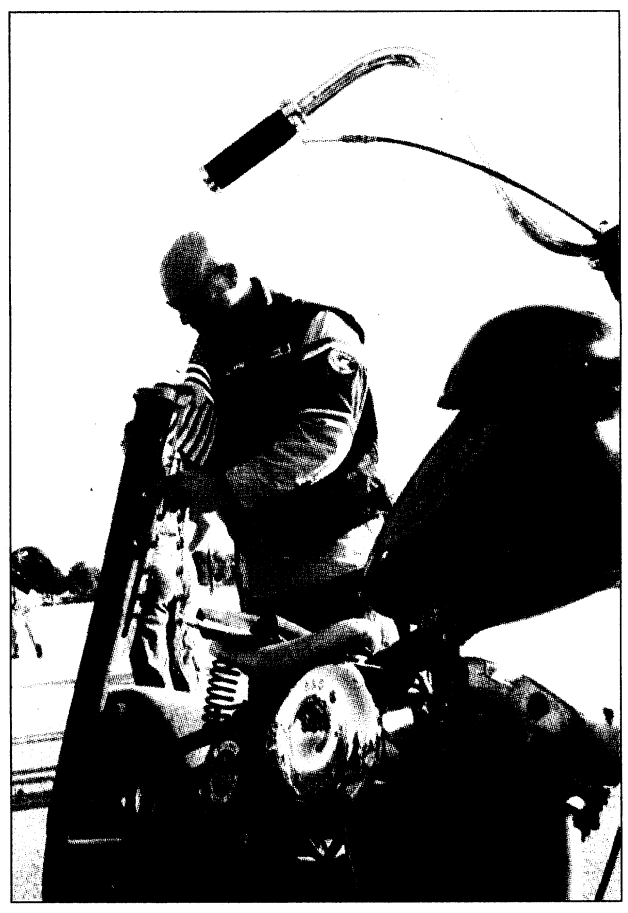
The first of three POW/MIA monuments was dedicated Saturday at the Columbus Government Center following a 20-mile Freedom Ride.

More than 140 bikers participated in the ride after an early morning rally at Golden Park, which included a Rangers In Action demonstration.

Fort Benning's commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, and the Columbus city manager and former commanding general, Carmen Cavezza, were the morning's guest speakers. Freakley and Columbus Mayor Bob Poydasheff spoke later at the dedication ceremony, which was attended by nearly 400 tricommunity residents.



Freakley recalled the moment he first became aware of the plight of our nation's prisoners of war, when, as an 8-year-old boy, he saw the scar-riddled back of a Korean POW.

"He started singing God Bless America or America the Beautiful, and they would beat him with a board with nails in it," Freakley told the crowd gathered shortly before noon on the north side of the Government Center. "We can't imagine things like that."

The unimaginable is once again making headlines every day, said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Jim Fowler, the man whose dream inspired Saturday's event. With atrocities like the most recent beheading of American contractors making headlines, the American people are "ready to remember" our forgotten war heroes, he said.

"The time is right," said Fowler, a Vietnam vet and a member of Fort Benning's Sergeants Major Association, which spearheaded the project and raised more than $45,000 for two monuments. The second monument will be dedicated on Fort Benning next year. Nearly $20,000 is needed to complete the third monument, which will be

Heroes make widow's dream reality

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Ratha Walker stood amazed as she looked around her bedroom.

"Look at my ceiling," said the 72-year-old widow. "Oh, thank the Lord."

Walker was a candidate for House of Heroes, a program that partners local businesses and civic groups to provide improvement and repairs to the homes of aging veterans or their widows.

For Walker, having Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade there to paint her ceilings, walls, kitchen cabinets and the exterior of her house was a blessing.

"I'm diabetic and have stomach and nerve problems and I needed the help," she said.

Two years ago Walker applied for the assistance, but received no response.

This year, she tried again and prayed, "Lord, let me be the chosen one."

When Walker was selected, she was pleased to know ITB and Ryan's Steakhouse were her sponsors.

Her husband was a combat firefighter during World War II and her daughter had once been employed at Ryan's.

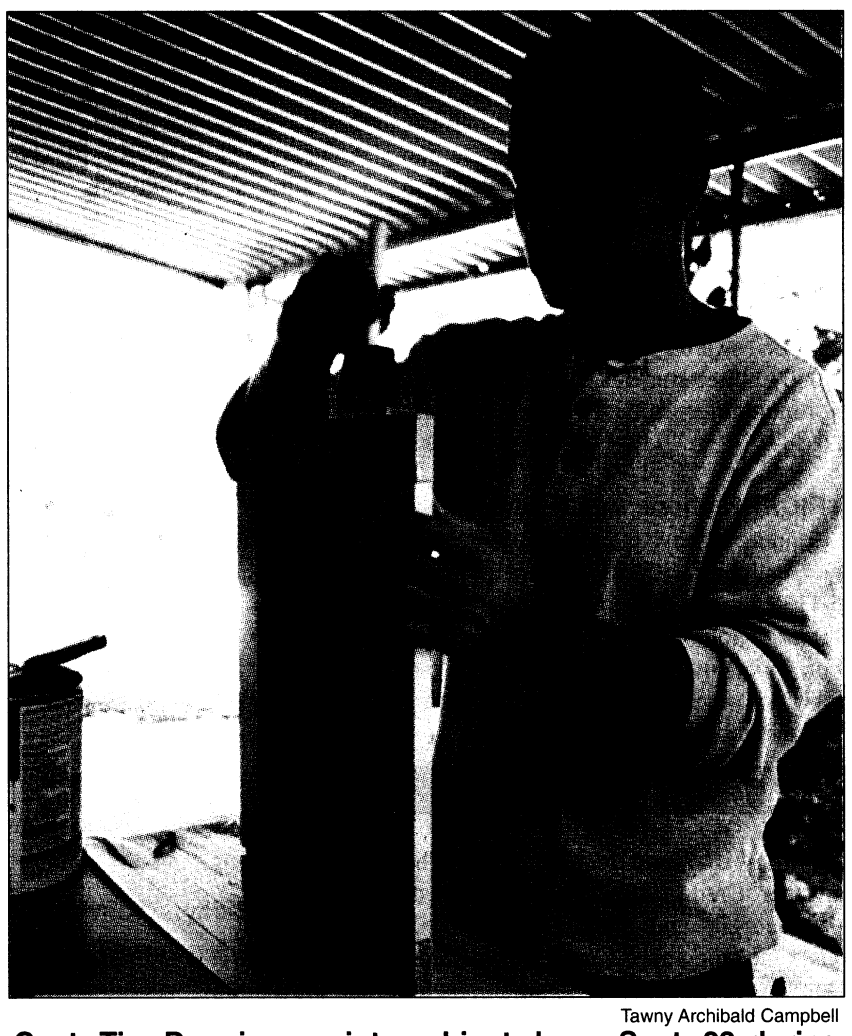
"My children don't even know they're doing something, and I'm not going to tell them," Walker said with a laugh. "My daughter called today to see how I was, and I just told her I had a hot date."

That "hot date" included 21 Soldiers from ITB's Headquarters Service Company and representatives from the six battalions.

"This is wonderful," said Sgt. 1st Class Dollie Wood, with ITB's HSC. "People usually tell us all the don'ts, but we didn't get that from Mrs. Walker. She met us with open arms and an embrace and was so grateful for anything we can do."

As for repairs, the first thing on Walker's list was her ceilings, which hadn't been painted since her husband died 28 years ago. She was thrilled with the results.

"It's making a world of difference in this house," she said.



"That is something I could never do by myself. This will lighten up the room and lighten me up, too."

Volunteers said they benefited from the program as well. It builds camaraderie and helps them give back to the community.

"It's good to give back to a military family for the sacrifice they made," said Sgt. Rich Maryon, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. "She has a good attitude and is real energetic to have us here and help her get her house in order."

Walker said the feelings of the day will last long after the paint dries and the Soldiers have packed up and left.

"I'm mostly in a dream," she said. "I see it, but it just don't seem like it is happening to me. It's real though. I'm still dreaming. I just know I'm still dreaming."

Ranger Joe visits troops

Bridgett Siter

The guest speaker at the Oct. 25 Red Ribbon Day ceremony knows a thing or two about making the right choice when the right choice is the hard choice.

Paul Voorhees, the owner of Ranger Joe's International, a mail order military supply business, and the Victory Drive store by the same name, will be the featured speaker at the annual event, part of the national "just say no" campaign.

It wasn't saying "no" to peer pressure that gave Voorhees pause recently. On the contrary, it was saying "yes" and knowing it could cost him his life.

Voorhees calls it his "Peter experience," Peter being the disciple who denied Christ three times. It was in a taxi last year, during a visit with U.S. Soldiers in Baghdad — a city primarily populated with Muslims, many intolerant and violent toward other religions (three Baptist missionaries were executed shortly after Voorhees returned) — that he was faced with Peter's dilemma; deny his faith and live or admit his Christianity and, perhaps, die.

"The driver turned to me and asked, 'Are

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What is a "debt consolidation loan?" Is it a good idea?

A: A "debt consolidation loan" combines two or more smaller debts into one larger debt. Debt consolidation loans are usually targeted toward people with problems paying their bills.

One "advantage" of a debt consolidation loan is that instead of having to write several checks each month to many creditors, you can borrow from one lender, pay off all creditors, then write one check a month to repay the larger loan. It sounds easier than writing all those checks.

Another "advantage" is that you may end up with a smaller monthly payment. For example, instead of having six creditors, each demanding $100 a month, you may have one $350 payment to the new lender. That sounds like a savings of $250 a month.

Most debt consolidation loans are not a good idea, however. They usually charge a higher rate of interest than the original debts. It is generally unwise, for example, to borrow money at 28 percent interest to pay off an 18 percent interest loan.

Lower monthly payments mean the debt will take longer to repay and a larger amount of interest will be charged. Be sure to read the fine print before taking out such a loan.

Many states have "usury" laws, which set a legal limit on the amount of interest a lender can charge on a loan. In those states there are usually exceptions however for pawnbrokers and companies that cash checks.

Some states do not have a usury law, so you can be charged any amount of interest you agree to pay. So, be very careful what you sign.

PIE program partners students, Soldiers

Wilson, BCTB celebrate partnership

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

With a flurry of high fives and cheers, Wilson Elementary and the Basic Combat Training Brigade kicked off their fifth year as partners in the Partners in Education program Sept. 21.

The school hosted members of the brigade in an assembly which included singing, a presentation of the Army values and greetings from Myron Douglas, with the PIE board of directors, Lt. Col. Bryan Dyer, commander of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, and Margaret Koger, of Wilson Elementary.

"This is the fifth year with the Basic Combat Training Brigade and it gets better every year," said Phyllis Parker, Wilson Elementary principal.

"Partners in Education is a big part of what the brigade does every year," Dyer said. "We not only help children of Soldiers, but we give back to the Fort Benning community. Last year was outstanding and we got awards, but the real results showed in the students."

Dyer said standardized test scores have been better and the students have been more motivated due to PIE.

"Each partner (in education) raises the bar for all the others," said Douglas. "Here on Fort Benning you have really raised the bar, and you are the best in the state. A chain is no stronger that its weakest link and, I haven't seen a weak link with the teachers, administrators or students here."

Following the speeches, Wilson Elementary administrators and students presented a plaque to Dyer and the brigade as a sign of their appreciation. The plaque was designed by fifth grade student Andrea Takemoto.

"Throughout this next year you will see members of the brigade here throughout the school," Parker told the students. "(The program) is so strong because of the commitment of the brigade to the school."

Following Parker's closing remarks, students paraded past the brigade holding signs welcoming the Soldiers and thanking them for their participation in the school program.

As part of the PIE program, Soldiers from the brigade participate in four specialty programs, said Lt. Col. Kelvin Scott, deputy commander for the BCTB and executive agent for PIE.

The programs include a leadership academy, designed to coach and develop potential leaders and a mentorship program which offers one-on-one mentoring to students.

"The test results from standardized testing indicate an improvement," Scott said, "and the school attributes that to direct contact with the mentors."

Partners Adopted Learning, or PALs, is a program that assigns a Soldier to a classroom to serve as a teacher's aide. The Soldier meets with the students once a month and gives each student attention throughout the course of the year.

The fourth program is the values video. Various BCTB Soldiers record a closed-circuit video featuring different army values. The students view the videos, then try to incorporate these values into their lives.

Scott estimates soldiers spend about 75 hours in the school each month.

"Just being around the students is so positive," Scott said. "It is a stress breaker and the Soldiers feel good contributing to the military community.

"This (kick-off) has been very positive. For the new soldiers it shows the school has a lot of pride and is very receptive to us," he said.

Voorhees: To speak at Red Ribbon ceremony

you a Christian?' and I hesitated," Voorhees said. "I used to think, 'Man, I can't believe Peter could turn his back on Jesus after all he'd seen.' But there I was, scared to death to say yes. I didn't know if this guy would kill me."

The Iraqi driver smiled at Voorhees and said, "I am a Christian."

Then he drove Voorhees and his companion, an American missionary from Jordan, through the streets of Baghdad to show them the secret locations Christians meet to worship.

Though Voorhees' "Peter experience" was the most personally profound, he and his friends faced danger constantly during his visit, a visit Voorhees bankrolled because he felt a call to minister to the troops.

"The things we take for granted — the things we do without a second thought ... it's different over there," he said. "You don't even walk out a door without peeking around the corner to see if it's safe. Nothing's safe."

He slept in a safe house, huddled behind a flak vest and wandered the halls at night, awakened by gunfire.

He toured the city under constant guard, and feared for the safety of the young Soldiers assigned that duty.

He visited an MP station that was being rebuilt to honor the young Soldier who was killed when it was bombed.

He visited a hospital, where he met Iraqi brothers shot for delivering American food to their village.

His car was stopped by the secret police who thought he might be harboring Saddam Hussein.

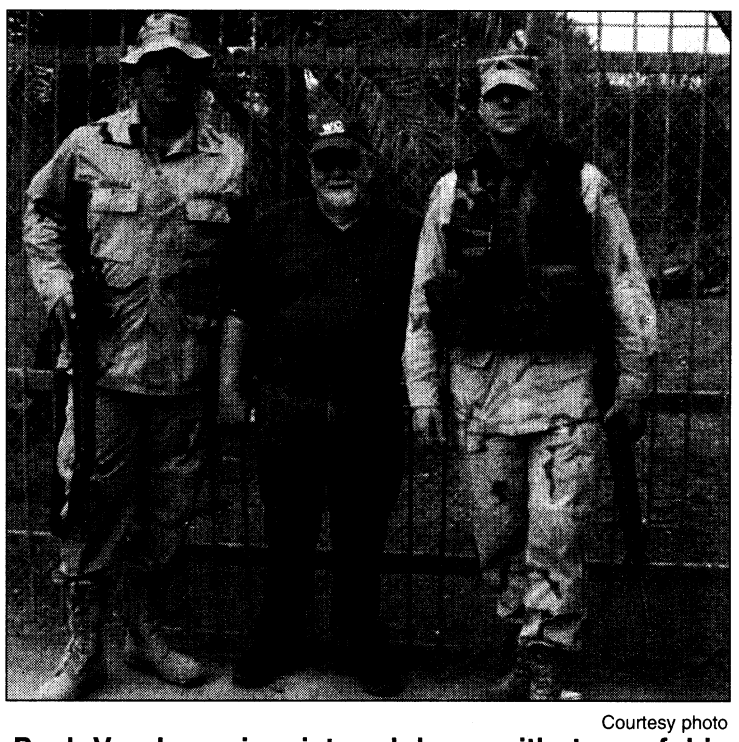
He spent his days with the Soldiers. At night he met with townspeople who welcomed him wholeheartedly once they established he was not with the media.

"They talked a lot about their problems — water problems, electric problems, sewage problems. They never before had the power to do anything. Now they can meet and talk and take action," he said. "But they haven't quite figured how to do that yet. They don't understand what democracy or freedom is, how it works, and that it comes with laws and rules. They're still figuring it all out, but they're excited about it."

Voorhees went to Iraq to deliver a message to the troops.

"Eighty percent of the American people are behind you all the way," he said.

"The other twenty percent are nitwits, and they'll always be nitwits, but we appreciate the fact that you're here protecting them, too."



But he came home with a message for the families of the Soldiers.

"They should be awfully proud of them. I was amazed at the level of professionalism I saw," he said.

"I could tell they were tired, but they never let down for a minute."

To hear more from Voorhees, attend the Red Ribbon Celebration at 1 p.m. at Fort Benning's Marshall Auditorium Oct. 25.

erected in Phenix City in 2006, though city officials have not decided upon a location.

The three identical black granite monuments are crowned with American eagles, each breaking free from its chain tether and poised, not for flight, but for attack.

"Its symbolism is powerful," said Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, post command sergeant major. "He's not so much trying to escape as trying to fight back. That says a lot about our POWs and the stories we hear about the things they go through. They never give up."

Sgt. Maj. Jan Stegeman, the president of the Sergeants Major Association, is also a Vietnam vet. He said the association was eager to call Fowler's dream its own, but for him, "it was personal."

"For every Vietnam veteran who wasn't welcomed home — for those who are prisoners to their memories — this is our way of saying, 'Welcome back,'" Stegeman said.

The Freedom Ride will be an annual event the third Saturday of September, the day after National POW/MIA Day.

Fowler said he expects it to get bigger and bigger as more people learn about the ride and the cause. Although this year's ride was a "resounding success," he believes it would've been twice as large if it hadn't been delayed a week because of Hurricane Ivan. Among others, the Florida Chapter of Rolling Thunder had to back out.

"Bikers, you know, are a conservative, dedicated bunch," Fowler said. "When they get behind something, they give it a hundred and ten percent. I imagine this thing will just keep getting bigger."

Do things differently

Capt. Se W. Park
2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment

REFLECTIONS

A man came into the kitchen just in time to see his wife slice off the end of a roast and put it in the roasting pan.

He asked her, "Honey, why did you cut off the end of the roast?"

She said, "I don't know, I've just always done it."

"Well, why?" he asked.

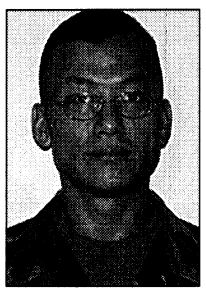
"I don't know. We'll have to call Mom."

So she called her mother and said, "Mom, why did you always cut off the end of the roast?"

There was a pregnant pause. Mom laughed a little and said, "That's a good question. I do it because Grandma did."

"Why?"

"I don't know. Ask Grandma."



So they called Grandma and asked, "Grandma, why do you cut off the end of the roast?"

And she said, "Because my roaster is too small."

Well, that's how many of us live. We don't do things because of a sense of direction and vision, but because we've always done it that way.

This story was introduced by Ron Jenson:

There was a man blind from birth. Seeing the blind man, Jesus' disciples asked, "Who sinned, this man or his parents, that he should be born blind?"

Park

This question is probably one the blind man asked himself.

It is about his identity.

He probably kept the question in his mind from birth, and hadn't got the answer yet.

So he was eagerly waiting for Jesus' answer. Jesus said, "... The work of God should be revealed in him."

You may have also wondered about your identity and as to what the purpose of your life is.

Who am I? Why was I born to this particular family?

From a military standpoint you may ask: Why are we going to JRTC? Why do we have to go to Iraq?

The obvious answer may be, "For the peace of the world."

But what about peace in my heart? What about peace in my family? What about peace in my country?

We would rather go there for the work of God.

Why?

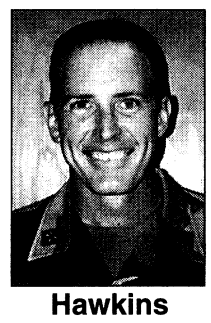
Because we were sent by God here and there.

And then we can fulfill the work of God.

Set rules, nourish relationships

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Since I've always been convinced only two people actually read this weekly column (my mother and my wife — well, OK, maybe only I read it regularly!), I'm always surprised when people stop me on post or write and say, "I really enjoyed that!"



Probably no column I've written received the response I got when I wrote about us losing our "Baxter, The Wonderdog" to a tragic accident the Fourth of July.

No joke, I've even had hard-core, battle-hardened, camo-colored men walk up to me with tears in their eyes and say, "That was a powerful one."

Well, part of our healing in losing "man's best friend" has been the courage to try and "love again."

After much debate, fear of getting our hearts emotionally pierced again, and a PSYOPS campaign mounted by a relentless 13-year-old boy-child that would rival anything going on in North Korea, we caved — Team Hawkins came home last night with a 5-week-old Labrador retriever, newly named "Bailey."

To say I got very little sleep last night amidst the whines and howls of our new infant would be an understatement. It's been a long time since I've had to get up and do feedings, change diapers and rock the little ones back to sleep.

Hawkins

Now, at 42, I'm doing it all over again for a black furball named Bailey — and it all seems strangely familiar!

What Bailey needs (I've been reading lots of books to refresh myself) in these early days of puppyhood is similar to what other little ones of the human kind need: Rules and relationships.

• Rules — One of my first tasks with Bailey will be to lovingly, but fairly and firmly, establish that "I'm the alpha male, and I'm in charge — I make the rules, you follow them."

That's pretty much what parents need to be reminded of, too, when it comes to our little ones.

Just as it's dangerous to let a 100-pound doberman simply "do his thing" and "rule the roost" because he wasn't trained well as a puppy, it can be equally disastrous to let a 135-pound, 15-year-old sophomore hold an entire family hostage behaviorally because he or she never got clear on what his or her "order in the pack" was supposed to be.

It's our job to set the rules; parents lead, children follow. It works best that way.

• Relationships — Just as important, and an absolute critical balance in the equation (one too often forgotten by we Army types who are good with the rules part) is to love lavishly.

This morning I set the rules: I caged a dog. I walked a dog. I took a dog on his scheduled potty run to his appointed place — but then we played — and played some more. Why? Because dogs, just like kids, need rules balanced with relationship! In fact, rules without relationship will lead to rebellion.

So this week, whether with canines or kids, I encourage you to set rules and stick by your guns. And then we can also balance those rules with a relationship — love lavishly and have some fun!

If we can help you with any "obedience training" just give us a call at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760 or come introduce yourself to me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel.

The service is at 11 a.m. Sundays at Kelley Hill, and it's postwide for everyone.

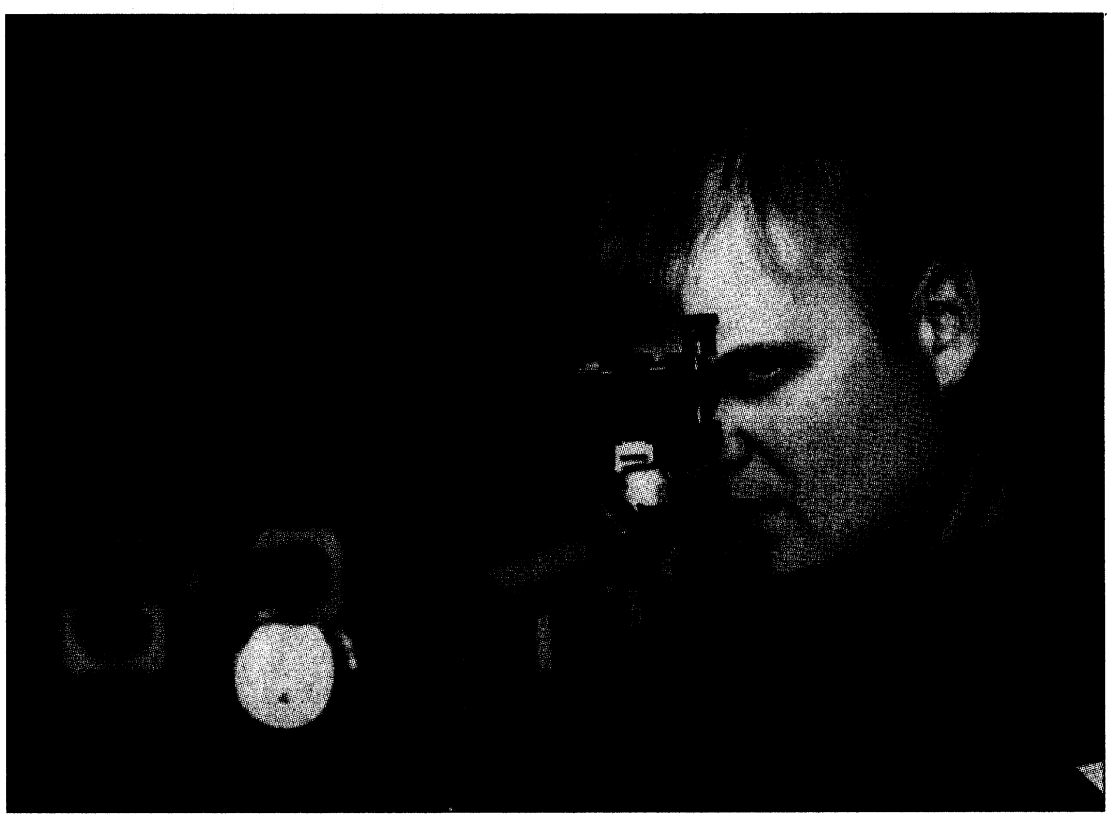
AMU shoots, wins

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Soldiers with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories recently. The following results are some of their accomplishments:



• USA Shooting 300-Meter National Championships, Fort Benning, Sept. 2 to 26 — USAMU international rifle shooter Spc. Trevor D. Gathman won the Gold Medal in the 300-Meter Prone Rifle National Championship as well as the Prone Rifle Interservice Championship; Gathman also took the Silver Medal in the 300-Meter Three Position Rifle National Championship and won the Three Position Rifle Interservice Championship. Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas took the Silver Medal and the Interservice Championship Title in the 3x20 Championship. Spc. Shane M. Barnhart got the Bronze Medals in the Prone, Three Position and 3x20 National Championships.

• U.S. Practical Shooting Association National Championships, Barry, Ill., Sept. 8 to 13 — Action shooter Sgt. Maxient J. Michel beat 560 of the country's top shooters to win the U.S. Open National Championship; Michel also won the Military Division and the 2004 Men's Shoot Off Championship. Because of his victories, Michel made the 2005 U.S. World Championship Team and will be the youngest men's team captain in U.S. history. Pfc. Travis E. Tomasie took second place overall in the Limited National Championship and won the Military Division and Staff Sgt. Gregory S. Wilson won the B Class.

• Georgia State Skeet Championships, Eaton, Ga., Aug. 26 to 29 — Shotgun shooter Spc. Mark L. Weeks took second place and Pfc. Clay L. Hart finished third.

• National Wild Turkey Federation 11th Annual Sporting Clays Tournament, Forsyth, Ga., Aug. 20 to 22 — Shotgun shooter Master Sgt. Rodney G. Pinkston beat more than 600 competitors to win the tournament.

• U.S. Practical Shooting Association Area 3 Championships, Columbia, Mo., Aug. 6 to 8 — Michel beat 232 of the country's top shooters to win the Overall Championship; he now holds the Area 3, 4, 6, 7 and 8 championship titles. Tomasie not only won the Limited Division, but in winning five of the 11 stages, he beat all the competition by nearly 15 percent — the biggest point spread in USPSA history.

Walkers to raise money to cure juvenile diabetes

Ray Lakes
Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation

A thousand walkers are expected to turn out for the Columbus Chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation International's ninth annual Walk to Cure Diabetes Oct. 9 at Rotary Park.

JDRF, the leading charitable contributor and advocate of juvenile (type 1) diabetes research worldwide, was founded in 1970 by the parents of children with juvenile diabetes — a disease that strikes children suddenly, making them insulin-dependent for life, and carries the constant threat of devastating complications.

The Columbus Walk to Cure Diabetes is one of the many walks held in more than 200 cities worldwide.

More than 500,000 people worldwide walked to cure diabetes last year and more are expected this year. Nationally, JDRF Walks raised almost $75 million last year, and this year the goal is to raise $80 million.

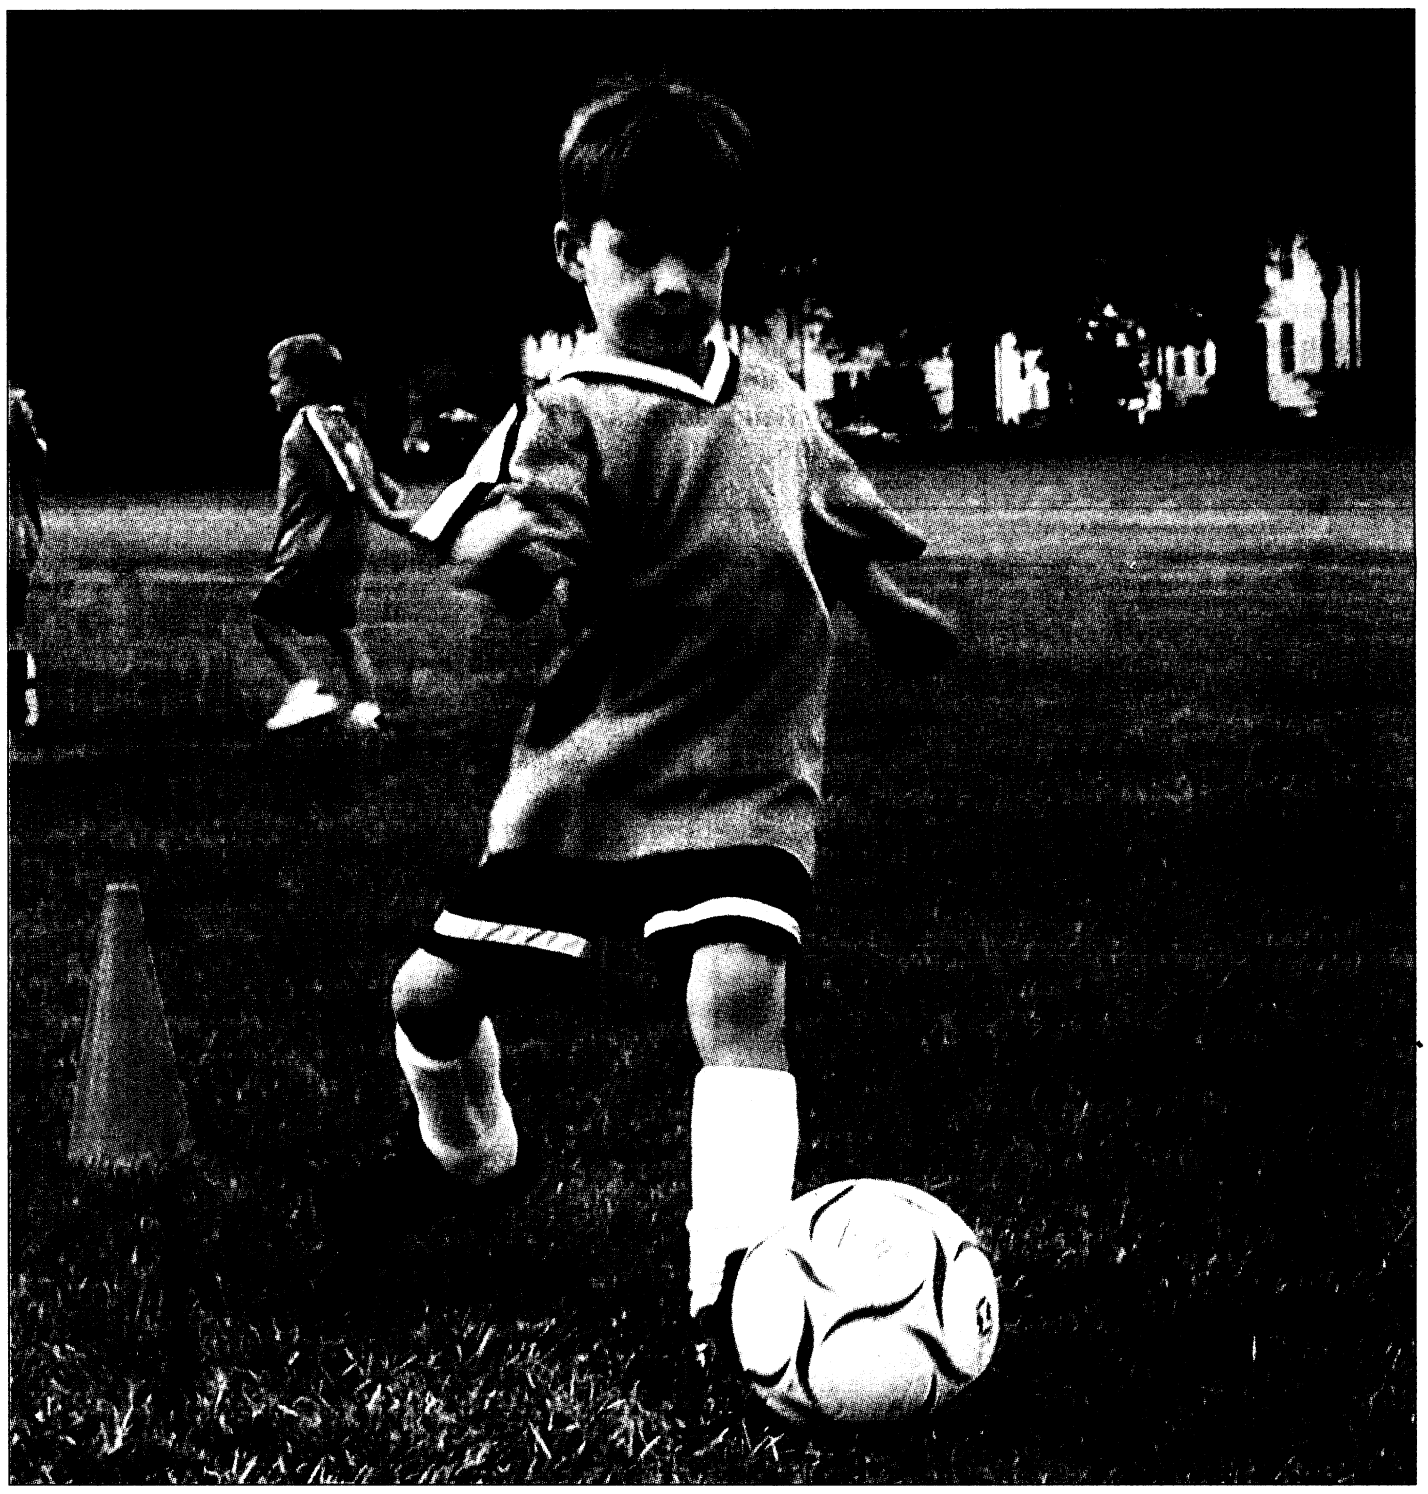
Rotary Park is located off Victory Drive near the Columbus Civic Center. The walk starts at 9:30 a.m. and lasts until noon. The chapter's goal is to raise $130,000 for research to find a cure for diabetes and its complications.

The Walk to Cure Diabetes is an event in which all ages can participate. There will be family friendly entertainment, snacks and hot dogs, face-painting and other special activities for kids.

Walkers are encouraged to register early by contacting a local JDRF volunteer at many larger work sites and schools, or they can register online at www.jdrf.org. On-site registration the day of the walk will begin at 8:30 a.m.

"I am excited to be working with JDRF and the families and friends of children with diabetes on their single goal — finding a cure for a disease which kills one American every three minutes and costs our nation more than $130 billion last year in health care costs," said Janet Davis, president and CEO of TIC Federal Credit Union and Columbus Corporate Walk chair.

"Money contributed to JDRF supports cutting-edge research which one day soon will lead to a cure for this disease. Working together, we can and are making a difference in the lives of so many children who suffer from juvenile diabetes," Davis said.



Since inception, JDRF has provided more than $800 million in direct funding of diabetes research.

In a typical year, more than 80 percent of JDRF's expenditures directly support research and research-related education.

JDRF's mission is constant: To find a cure for diabetes through the support of research.

For more information, visit the JDRF Web site at www.jdrf.org or call (888) 533-walk.

36th prepares to deploy

NCOs beef up common task training

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Several elements of 36th Engineer Group are preparing to deploy sometime between November and January.

A "beefed up" training schedule went into effect last week for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 598th Maintenance Company and 233rd Heavy Equipment Transportation Company.

The training included a convoy live fire, suicide prevention classes, pre-deployment classes, first-aid training, NBC training, improvised explosive device training and several other common tasks.

"It's basic stuff, but it's knowledge that is perishable," Staff Sgt. Eric Burns, the 13th Combat Support Battalion's NBC NCO, said Monday, as he was teaching the Soldiers about dealing with NBC threats.

"It's really important because Soldiers need to feel comfortable with their equipment," Burns said. "And they need to be able to evaluate another Soldier if something goes wrong."

The Soldiers seemed to

Kelley Hill prepares to rotate

OIF-3 will be different, says commander

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The Kelley Hill troops slated to return to Iraq early next year spent 10 days in the field making sure they're ready.

"In 90 days, plus or minus, you'll be on the ground doing this for real," said Lt. Col. Roger Cloutier. "This is our last collective training opportunity."

The commander of the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, met with Soldiers fresh off the "battlefield," where they encountered enemy insurgents in a mock Iraqi village. He urged them to prepare themselves for a deployment much different than when the 3rd Brigade led the assault on Baghdad that launched Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"Every morning when you look at yourself in the mirror, I want you to ask yourself, 'Have I done everything I could do to make sure I'm ready? Have I done everything I can do to make sure my Soldiers are ready?'" Cloutier said. "Because OIF-3 is going to be much different than what you remember. One minute you're shooting, and the next minute you're passing out MREs and helping a pregnant woman give birth."

Cloutier was referring to one of several problems Soldiers encountered as they rotated through various battlefield scenarios. Each platoon was forced to establish a hasty traffic control point just outside the town of "Balad," where insurgents had fled after detonating a car bomb at an Iraqi National Guard recruiting station.

An angry crowd met the Soldiers at the control point. They were temporarily placated with MREs, and the platoon medic earned the crowd's approval for a short time when he helped deliver an Iraqi baby.

That scenario, like all the others, replicated situations U.S. forces have encountered in Iraq since the liberation mission became a rebuilding mission, said 1st Lt. David Suttles, the battalion's public affairs officer. Suttles said Soldiers and civilians role-played Iraqi merchants, insurgents, informants and American reporters.

"The whole thing is designed to prepare the Soldiers for any number of things they're going to see over there," Suttles said. "Basically, they have to figure it out. They have to figure out the best way to handle a mob, the best way to clear a building under fire, who's friend and who's foe … The role-players make it more realistic, and the more

Check 21 to take effect

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

A federal law taking effect Oct. 28 will end the age of check floating and likely cause problems for Soldiers and family members who spend their pay two days before they get it.

Ann Pratcher, a financial manager with Army Community Services, conducts financial readiness classes and financial counseling.

"This act isn't something that will be generally good," she said. "We see people that are six, seven, eight hundred dollars or more overdrawn. Now, they'll bounce more checks and rack up even more fees."

Under the old system, if a person wrote a check on Monday, he could expect it to take four to five business days to clear his account. Under Check 21, clearance time can be reduced to one day.

"The banks have all the power," Pratcher said. "They can destroy your original checks, and they don't have to provide a substitute check unless you request one. And your rights to dispute a payment problem can be reduced, depending on how your transaction was handled. This is a huge problem."

The Federal Reserve Board, which governs the implementation of Check 21, noted that members expressed concerns over several aspects of the act including:

- Consumer rights in payment disputes.
- Additional fees for the documentation needed to resolve payment disputes.
- Increased volume of NSF charges.

For more information on Check 21, see A-9.

Benning BOSS wins first place for fourth time

Program to continue improvements

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Keeping with tradition, Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers representatives went to Washington, D.C., for the annual BOSS conference and came back with a first-place trophy for the fourth time in a row.

Fort Benning competed in the "large installation" category, and beat out seven others to win the trophy for best BOSS Installation Program in the world.

"The BOSS program is very powerful for Fort Benning," said Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Fortson, garrison CSM.

"We are very proud to go to the world wide conference as the sixth largest installation and win. It's powerful."

The conference, which celebrated BOSS's 15th anniversary, brought Soldiers and Marines together from Sept. 19 to 24 in the National Conference Center in Lansdowne, Va.

It was a "target rich environment" that let Soldiers compare ideas with advisors from Morale, Welfare and Recreation, sergeants major and BOSS representatives from installations all over the world, said Spc. Matthew Gobble, Fort Benning's BOSS president.

"The best part of the conference was meeting everyone and learning what they did, so I can come back here and do it," he said.

During the conference, a panel of judges selected by the Department of the Army graded video and static displays that represented the activities from each installation's BOSS program. Each display was divided into three categories: community service, recreation and leisure and well being.

Gobble said Fort Benning stood out in the community service category, because the Soldiers are always willing to help the community.

"I think (volunteering) is a great thing," Gobble said. "I've been doing it since I was 13. But for Soldiers to volunteer at the age they are now, when they have the option to do other things, reflects well on Fort Benning and shows the compassion our Soldiers have for their community."

Gobble said the events BOSS has sponsored off post, such as Habitat For Humanity, MDA and Franciscan Woods, drew a lot of attention from the conference attendees, but the judges were only looking at the

Cancer cure: It's 'jean'etic

Get up, get dressed, and put on your favorite pair of jeans for the ninth annual Lee National Denim Day.

No, National Denim Day isn't one of those kooky holidays. It's a serious one, one designed to raise $7.5 million this year for a worthwhile cause — breast cancer.

You know I'm not shy about getting on a soapbox or letting you know what's important to me. October is important. It's Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

In 1967, Mary Irene Sloan Munson lost her husband, a strapping Pennsylvania State trooper, cut down in the prime of life by a drunken driver.

Years later, she was diagnosed with breast cancer. But it didn't beat her — not at first. Thanks to a mastectomy and the newest cancer drugs, she was cancer free — or so she thought.

Then, in 1996, she stopped taking the drugs in order to have cataract surgery. Her back began to hurt, and the MRI showed the cancer cells, held at bay by the drugs all those years, had returned. She had tumors on her spine, pelvis, skull and ribs.

She was diagnosed the day I found out I was pregnant with her third great-grandson. Grammy was the first one I told. She held on just long enough for his birth.

As if breast cancer taking her life wasn't bad enough, her daughter's diagnosis sounded like another death sentence. My aunt is now cancer-free, but my mother's mammograms are of constant concern.

So why wear denim? Be comfy. And if you wear your jeans to work, give a $5 donation to the Susan G. Komen Foundation. For the past 21 years, they've raised millions of dollars "Racing for the Cure."

Every year, almost 200,000 women are diagnosed with breast cancer — that's one in eight. More than 43,000 will die.

If you're a man and still reading this, you should know breast cancer could strike you too. More than 16,000 men will get the awful news, and 400 will die.

With early detection, the survival rate is an awesome 95 percent. I like numbers like that. They comfort me. Since mammograms are among the best early detection methods, I suffered through one last year on my 35th birthday.

For those of you who'd like to do your part by surfing the web, visit www.the-breastcancersite.com.

If you're a sports enthusiast, sign up for one of the "Race for the Cure" 5K runs and fitness walks across the country. There's one in Birmingham, Ala., Saturday and in Charleston, S.C., Oct. 23.

Maybe you're stumped on who to give your Combined Federal Campaign pledge to. I'd be honored if you'd support the American Cancer Society — if not for me and Grammy, then for someone you know.

Make sure you can bank on it

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Few things strike fear in the heart of this law-abiding citizen like a blue light flashing in the rearview or an overdraft statement from the bank. Not that I've been subject to either on a regular basis, mind you. Once or twice, as I recall. Maybe three times.

I liken one to the other because both induce a sense of profound panic. My stomach churns, my heart races, my head pounds. I sweat.

Now my bank has adopted a fairly new practice, periodically sending offers for reduced rates or pre-approved loans — the kind of "extras" they used to pack into my monthly bank statement. These separate mailings make for much, much thinner envelopes, and a thin envelope from the bank used to mean only ONE THING. So, like Pavlov's dog, I churn and sweat and pound and race every time I find a thin envelope from my bank. I'm obviously hypersensitive.

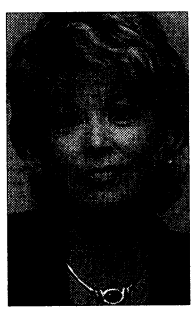
With that in mind, I'd better be on my toes from here on out, what with the new federal law that takes effect Oct. 28, whereby checks will clear the bank much faster than we've become accustomed. With the institution of the Check Clearing for the 21st Century Act, or Check 21, as it's called, those who've grown used to writing a check at the Commissary or Wal-mart three days before payday may find themselves in a fiscal fiasco real soon.

As I understand it, Check 21 allows banks to use "substitute checks," which appears to be an electronic facsimile of the original, to process your purchases and payments. This works much like the "e-check" system, which allows merchants to clear your check before you leave the store. You can expect a similar process with Check 21.

The bottom line? Make sure you have the funds before you have the fun. All financial institutes must comply with the new law, so it'll do absolutely no good to point fingers at anyone else. Fair warning.

The truth is, we Americans have become quite adept at working the system, timing our shopping trips a couple of days before payday to avoid the crowds. I'm guilty. Though there's nothing wrong with that as long as the money's there when the check arrives, you and I know it's a dangerous game to play.

The last time I checked, bouncing checks is still illegal, just like speeding. So we'd better put the brakes on this particular spending habit before the blue light in the rearview means you've ran afoul of Check 21 too many times.



Domestic violence preventable

Rebecca S. Welch
Family Advocacy Program

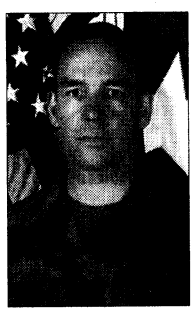
With the passing of the third anniversary of the terrorist attack on Sept. 11, I believe it is more important than ever to acknowledge the strength and hope that comes from joining with friends and allies to end violence and promote peace.

October marks the Army's Domestic Violence Prevention Month. However, the campaign to prevent violence must be a year-round concern. Without a communitywide commitment to end violence in our homes, we'll only find ourselves back here a year from now measuring the hurt. Violence must stop.

Not only are our families threatened, but the fundamental mission of readiness is being undermined. Batterers who fail to come forward for assistance are causing a great burden on families and the military.

We know prevention is the key. First, we need to prevent violence. Second, we need to recognize that every military couple lives with risks that can, if not addressed, put them at higher risk for battering. Finally, prevention will be successful when the entire community understands violence is unacceptable, and positive support for couples and families is needed.

Prevention of this kind takes partnerships between leadership, the helping system, the media, military and civilian personnel and their families.



As the Family Advocacy Program manager at Fort Benning, I am calling on everyone to take the lead. Get involved in the move to prevent domestic violence. If you want this campaign to work, call the Family Advocacy Office at 545-7517 to get information from the victim advocate.

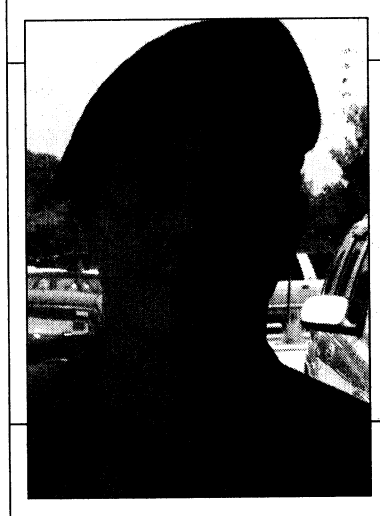
Free information for military families; including how to improve your marriage and treatment programs and classes offered through Social Work Service is available at the Army Community Service Center, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza. Resources are out there. We have the services and information right here at Fort Benning, so please do not wait. Use them today. Help make the changes that strengthen families and relationships!

Join efforts to prevent domestic violence

Our Army-based campaign to prevent domestic violence is ongoing. But each year, along with others across the United States, we declare the month of October Domestic Violence Prevention Month to call attention to the problem, and recommit ourselves to our goal.

Our campaign against domestic violence will succeed. Several years ago, all military services stepped up their efforts to end domestic violence, and the Army led the way. We are beginning to see results: The numbers of cases have been declining since the mid-1990's. There are good signs in the civilian population as well, but the numbers remain terribly high. Every 15 seconds a woman in this country is beaten by her husband, ex-husband or intimate partner. Studies report between 2 and 4 million women are abused annually. Children and men are also victims. Family violence costs the nation from $5 to $10 billion annually in medical costs, police and court costs, shelter and foster care, sick leave, absenteeism and non-productivity.

Our leadership is important. What we accomplish in the military can have positive results in the civilian community. Everyone must model what is right when it comes to domestic violence. We must continue to build strong partnerships, so we can use teamwork in our prevention efforts.



Our command commitment to domestic violence prevention is total. Violence that occurs in our military families undermines our military objectives. Children in 43 percent of all reported cases witness such violence. Children who witness violence against their mothers are 10 times more likely to abuse their partners as adults than children raised in nonviolent homes — one more reason our campaign against violence must succeed.

Our campaign for 2004, therefore, declares, "Domestic Violence Prevention: It takes a community to prevent domestic violence!" I hereby proclaim October 2004 as Domestic Violence Prevention Month at Fort Benning and call on every member of this community to join in the campaign.

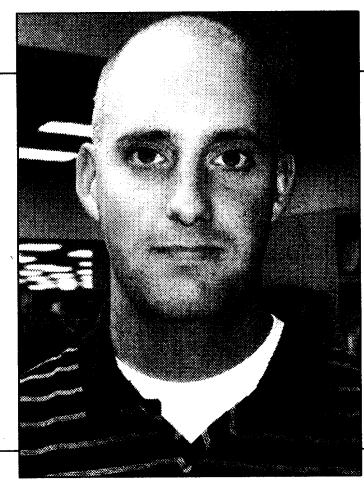
Banks are saving money through Check 21 – how do you think they should pass those savings down to you?

Spc. Shawn Larson, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "I think banks should pass those savings down by lowering overdraft fees and doing away with ATM fees."

Sgt. Jessica Williams, 203rd Forward Support Battalion — "I don't think we would be able to benefit from the banks' savings. People who write bad checks, on the other hand, are going to be losing more money."



Staff Sgt. Robert Graves, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "They should decline all ATM fees. My bank is at Fort Campbell, Kentucky, so I have to pay two fees every time I use an ATM — one for the ATM here and one because I didn't use an ATM from my bank."

Spc. Dugan Fauth, 104th Transportation Company — "They should raise interests in savings accounts, make checkbook purchasing cheaper, lower yearly finance rates on checking accounts and lower ATM fees."

Sheila Patton, family member — "Banks should not charge for checking accounts or for the service and maintenance of accounts. They shouldn't be making a profit, they should be giving it back to the community."

Marine Gunnery Sgt. Larry Grimes, Marine Logistic Base, Albany, Ga. — "I don't see where banks can give anything back to us. But banks have to provide accountability to their customers — it's not right to not return cleared checks to their customers."

Soldiers from WHINSEC's Medical Assistance Course try to maneuver a patient over a high wall obstacle at the J-4 Litter Carry Course Sept. 24.

In the midst of thick, green, smoke, WHINSEC's TAC-7 students struggle to keep a simulated patient level at the J-4 Litter Carry Course Sept. 24.

Institute's training exercise reinforces medical skills

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

The word "Medic!" is more than just an empty word shouted by a dying soldier in some cheesy Hollywood war flick.

In reality, it's a cry for one of the world's most well-trained and highly skilled health professionals who, in minutes, can apply urgent, life-saving, treatment and evacuate a wounded patient to safety; often at great, personal risk.

On Sept. 24, 30 such professionals from various countries across the Americas beefed up their treatment and evac skills by tackling the Litter Carry Obstacle Course at the J-4 training area on Fort Benning.

The training exercise was part of the Medical Assistance Course (TAC-7) taught at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

The TAC-7 course was designed to train NCOs and civilian officials to perform lifesaving measures and apply advanced field medical care in support of combat or counter-narcotics operations.

It's goal was to reinforce the medical skills required of military or police by going beyond the basic personnel lifesaving measures, to teach the proper treatment of complicated injuries, intravenous fluid replacement, splinting, and suturing, water purification, emergency childbirth, and a few minor surgical procedures.

Sgt. 1st Class Jorge Borboa, a TAC-7 instructor, helped run the day's training.

"With this training, we are trying to simulate the actual stress levels a medic might face in a combat environment," he said. "It's easy to learn and do things in a calm, quiet classroom setting but try keeping your cool when artillery is going off around you and obstacles are all along your way."

The winding obstacle course is about a mile long with five different obstacles.

But, before they even stepped foot on the litter course, these TAC-7 students had a slightly more brain-challenging test scenario to undergo, Borboa said.

The opening exercise had six groups of five-man litter teams find and evaluate three combat casualties in which only one was the urgent patient.

The challenge was in treating all casualties (role-players from WHINSEC), properly strapping one to a litter and evacuating the patient while maneuvering through obstacles in less than 20 minutes.

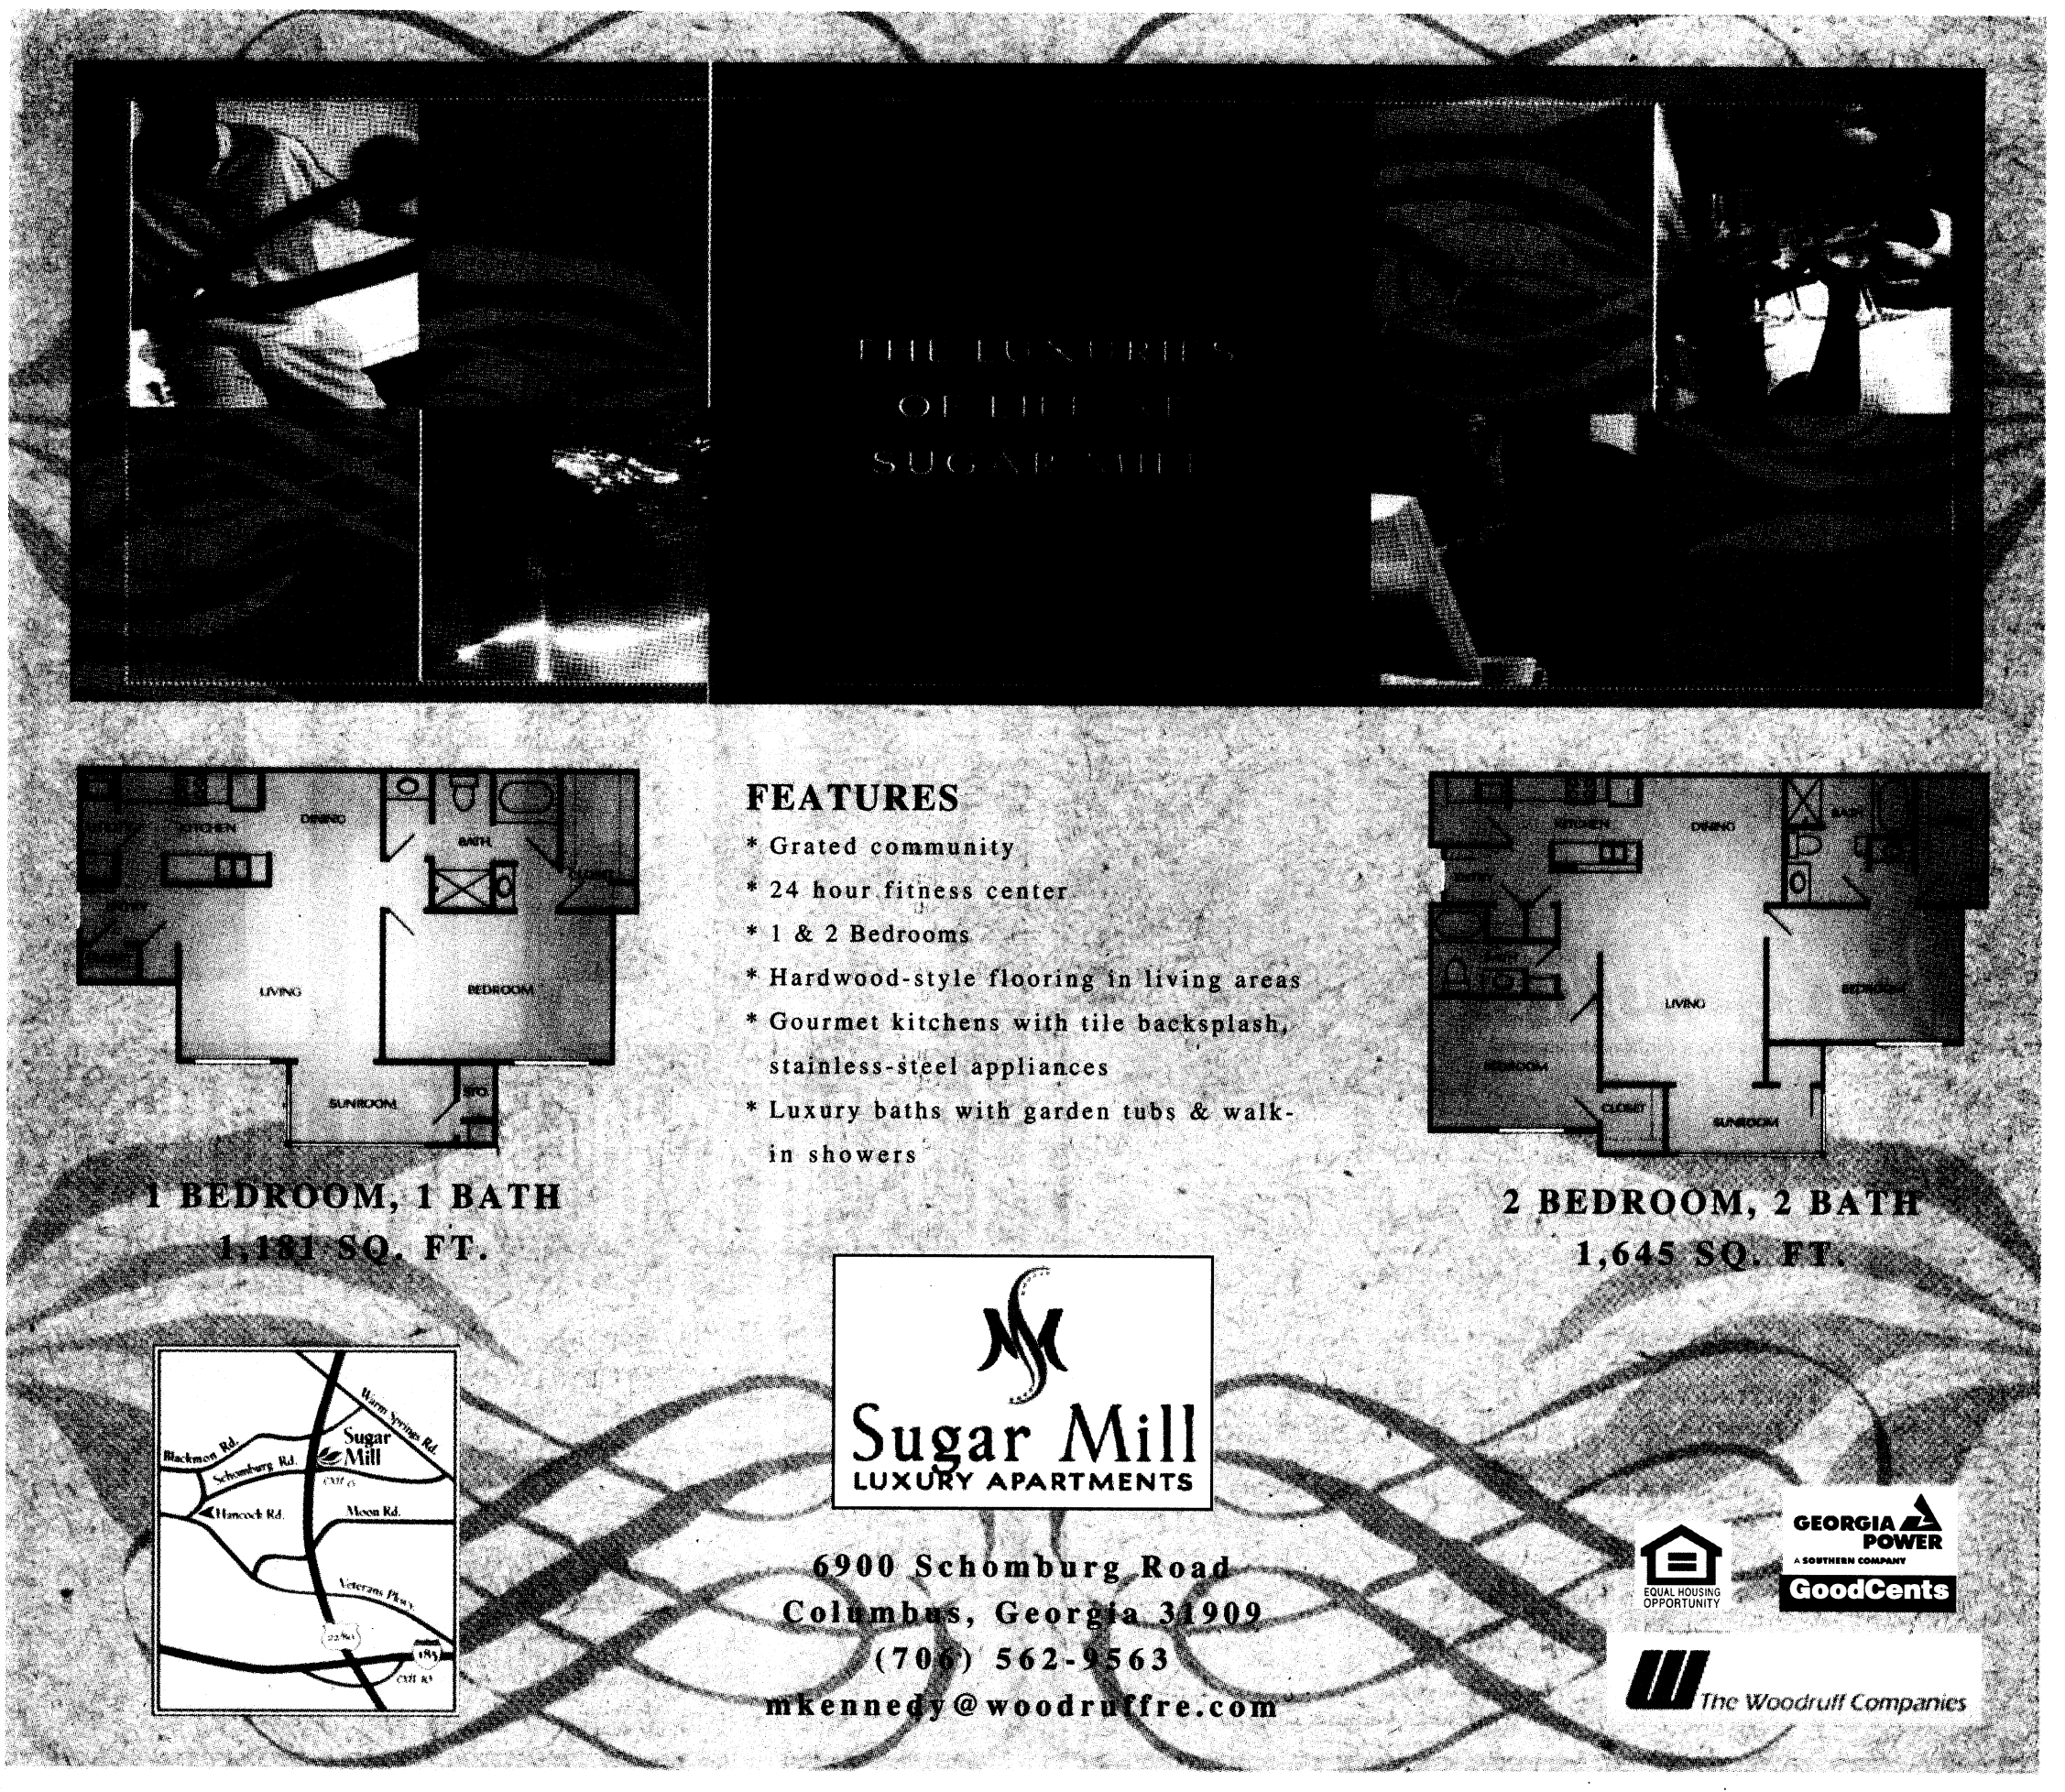
"It's important for them to accurately evaluate who is more in need of care and evacuation, regardless of a casualty's rank or sex," said Sgt. Heddy Ortiz, also a TAC-7 instructor.

"It really is life or death training here. If they don't get a grasp of this concept now, it might end up meaning the real, senseless loss of one of their buddy's lives in the future," he said.

While some students are war veterans and kept a level head, others with little or no combat experience seemed visibly shaken during the exercise.

"Some of these guys look so nervous. They need to put it in their heads that the (simulated) patient might be dying, but they aren't," Ortiz said.

Comments of a long, exhausting, yet successful mission were backed up by comments from some of the students.



"Good. Tough, very tough, but like I said good training," said Honduran Naval Petty Officer Martir Amaya.

"This is the first time I've ever done something like this. I hope I never have to deal with anything like that in real combat, but if I do, at least I know I can handle myself," Amaya said.

For Colombian army Cpl. Diaz Camargo Edinson, some of the obstacles seemed eerily similar to past experiences fighting drug-funded guerrillas in his country.

"Today is exactly six months and four days from when I last remember carrying a (Soldier) brother to safety through watery trenches," he said.

"What I got from this exercise, and what I hope all of my classmates get, is the need to be accurate, safe and fast when dealing with a patient. Because, here these patients are strangers, but in combat it could be your friend next to you," Camargo Edinson said.

Leadership Benning tour showcases area

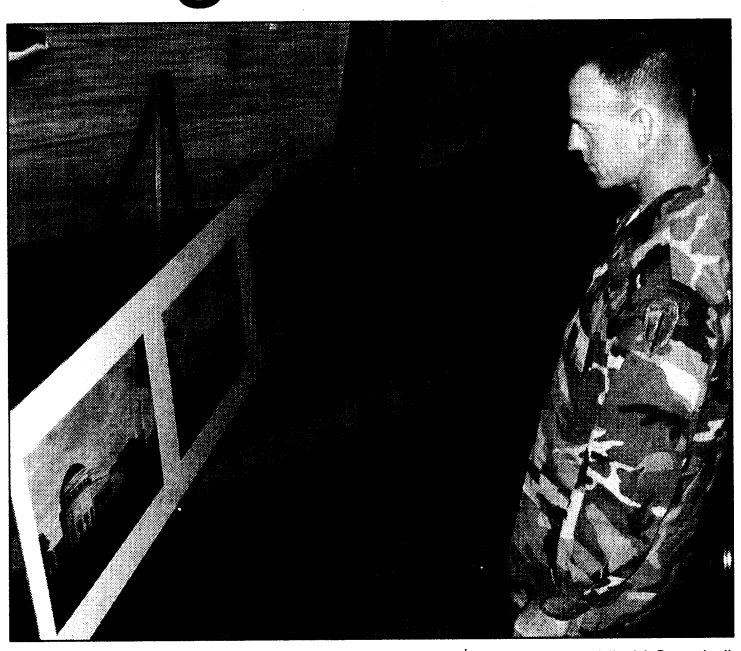
The Columbus Chamber of Commerce, along with leadership at Fort Benning, presented the Leadership Benning tour Monday to members of the Fort Benning executive staff.



The tour, presented once a year, was an opportunity for the leadership at Fort Benning, both new and old, to see the sites and visit the attractions Columbus and the surrounding area have to offer.

"The Leadership Benning tour was developed a few years ago to educate the command, both enlisted and officers, to Columbus, Georgia," said Dayton Preston, senior vice president of economic development and property management with the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

"For so many years Columbus was known to the military as Victory Drive and the Peachtree Mall. We felt the need to educate the military to the real Columbus."

The tour began at 7:30 with a group social followed by a trip to the Columbus Government Center, Chamber of Commerce, River Center, Coca Cola Space Challenge Center, Downtown Magnet Academy and Naval Museum for lunch.

"We want to show the quality of life we have here and felt it was important to show the military the same thing we would show prospects who come to Columbus," Preston said.

Lt. Col. Mark Edmonds, commander of 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, looks at the sketches for the new National Infantry Museum during the Leadership Benning tour Monday.

"We want to show them the educational opportunities, businesses and the arts. That's the reason we set the itinerary as we do."

During lunch was a presentation on the National Infantry Museum followed by a trip to Springer Opera House, the Columbus Museum, a corporate and educational tour through the industrial district and then to Phenix City, South Commons and past Oxbow Meadows, the CSU Learning Center, and the site for the new National Infantry Museum on the way back to post.

"I like it and am impressed with how everyone on the civilian side is so proud of their city, how fired up they are and how they love their military," said Col. Conrad Bodai, DENTAC commander.

"I'm really proud to be here."

Bodai said he was impressed a city the size of Columbus would attract off-Broadway shows, have a symphony and such high class museums.

"I think it is a great tour," said Rochanda Power.

"It gives you an opportunity to see what the city has to offer and to see things you might not have seen otherwise.

"It also helps foster relationships with the Soldiers and the community of Columbus."

Maj. Angelo Del Lungo, Italian liaison, and his wife Paola, said the tour is helping them understand America more.

"We live on post and we know about the military," Angelo said, "but we don't know about your social systems. This helps us with the organization of your social systems."

Preston hopes the tour will helpful for people like the Del Lungos and Bodais, who are new to Fort Benning, by providing them with the resources, information and tools they need to make their stay in the Columbus area more pleasurable and help them become more involved.

ANCOC change to provide better training

New POI cuts length of senior NCO training

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

ANCOC kicked off a new program of instruction Sept. 13 with class number 01-04. The new POI cut the first phase of training and reduced the length of the course to a six-week, one phase course, said 1st Sgt. Michael Hibbs, ANCOC branch chief.

"We have taken out the common core portions of the course that Soldiers have already covered in PLDC and BNCOC — reducing the duration of the course," Hibbs said.

Hibbs said there are always different levels of experience within the NCOs who attend ANCOC, and hopefully the new POI will benefit the majority of Soldiers.

"It's time management. This way we can focus on subjects they need to be exposed to instead of outdated material," Hibbs said.

The shorter course means more classes each year too — instead of four classes, there will be six. During the break between cycles, instructors will be able to obtain necessary certifications and training to ensure that they stay current with mandated requirements.

The shorter course, however, does not mean the Soldiers spend fewer hours in the field.

"It's going to be a very intense and robust course, especially if there are holidays in the middle of cycles," Hibbs said. "The Soldiers will have to train six days a week in order to make up for the training holidays. Instead of 72 hours of field training they are now going to be out there for 96."

"Constant attention to one's surroundings is going to be a major point of instruction," said Sgt. Maj. Tony Winterfeld, NCOA assistant commandant.

Reacting to the unknown will become second nature to these NCOs, he said.

"IEDs will be implemented into every portion of the training. We're going to get the students to think outside of the box in order for them to see that everything and anything can be harmful," he said. He added that all NCOA courses will receive instruction on IEDs, but only ANCOC will receive advanced training.

Hibbs said posters showing different types of IEDs will be placed in all the classrooms this week and the students will have kits to show how easily IEDs are made in the near future. Once they become familiar with IEDs, the students will be put in situations where they have to respond to the IEDs accordingly.

Another subject included in the new POI is 16 hours of futures training.

"Futures will cover anything that's up and coming in the Army from doctrine changes to stability, lessons learned, modularity to information on the new Stryker," Hibbs said. "It'll be a continuing and revolving subject, which will benefit these senior NCOs."

Lt. Col. Roy Krueger, chief of Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate chief, and Lt. Col. Jeffrey Sanderson, Stryker Transition Team chief, started off with the first futures classes which were well received from the ANCOC students, Hibbs said.

Another change is the concurrent training in ANCOC and the Infantry Officers Basic Course.

"It's the first time ANCOC students conduct training with IOBC," Hibbs said. "The students will develop situational training exercise packets and the ten best NCOs will be chosen for the weeklong exchange training."

The ANCOC and IOBC training begins Tuesday at McKenna MOUT Site.

"The new POI ensures current and future NCOs receive the training and information they need instead of just meeting the time requirement," Hibbs said. "It's a good, but challenging change that will continue to receive updates when needed."

Vioxx withdrawn from shelves for heart risk

U.S. Food and Drug Administration

The Food and Drug Administration acknowledged the voluntary withdrawal from the market of Vioxx (chemical name rofecoxib), a non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID) manufactured by Merck & Co. The FDA issued a public health advisory to inform patients of this action and to advise them to consult with a physician about alternative medications.

Merck is withdrawing Vioxx from the market after the data safety monitoring board overseeing a long-term study of the drug recommended that the study be halted because of an increased risk of serious cardiovascular complications, including heart attacks and strokes, among study patients taking Vioxx compared to patients receiving placebo. The study was being done in patients at risk of developing recurrent colon polyps.

"Merck did the right thing by promptly reporting these findings to FDA and voluntarily withdrawing the product from the market," said Acting FDA Commissioner Dr. Lester M. Crawford. "Although the risk that an individual patient would have a heart attack or stroke related to Vioxx is very small, the study that was halted suggests that, overall, patients taking the drug chronically face twice the risk of a heart attack compared to patients receiving a placebo."

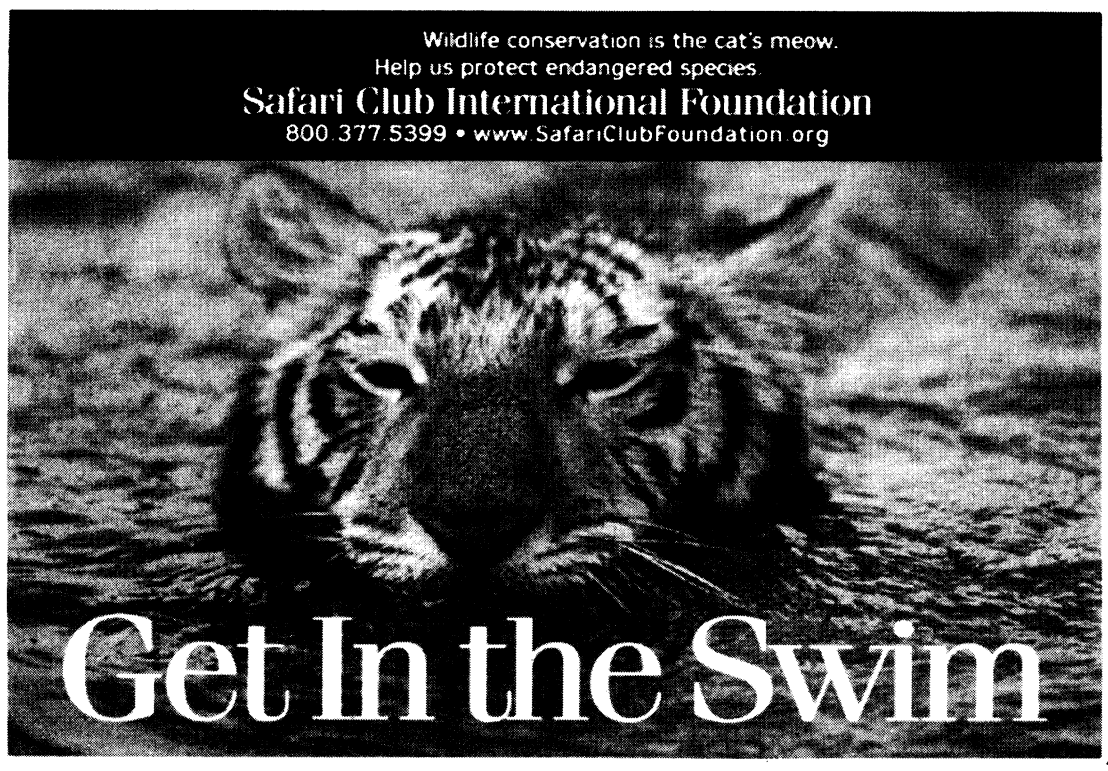
Crawford said that FDA will closely monitor other drugs in this class for similar side effects.

"All of the NSAID drugs have risks when taken chronically, especially of gastrointestinal bleeding, but also liver and kidney toxicity. They should only be used continuously under the supervision of a physician."

FDA approved Vioxx in 1999 for the reduction of pain and inflammation caused by osteoarthritis, as well as for acute pain in adults and for the treatment of menstrual pain. It was the second of a new kind of NSAID (Cox-2 selective) approved by FDA. Subsequently, FDA approved Vioxx to treat the signs and symptoms of rheumatoid arthritis in adults and children.

At the time that Vioxx and other Cox-2 selective NSAIDs were approved, it was hoped that they would have a lower risk of gastrointestinal ulcers and bleeding than other NSAIDs (such as ibuprofen and naproxen). Vioxx is the only NSAID demonstrated to have a lower rate of these side effects.

Merck contacted FDA on Sept. 27 to request a meeting and to advise the agency that the long-term study of Vioxx in patients at increased risk of colon polyps had been halted. Merck and FDA officials met Sept. 28, and during that meeting the company informed FDA of its decision to remove Vioxx from the market voluntarily.



In June 2000, Merck submitted to FDA a safety study called VIGOR (Vioxx Gastrointestinal Outcomes Research) that found an increased risk of serious cardiovascular events, including heart attacks and strokes, in patients taking Vioxx compared to patients taking naproxen. After reviewing the results of the VIGOR study and other available data from controlled clinical trials, FDA consulted with its Arthritis Advisory Committee in February 2001 regarding the clinical interpretation of this new safety information. In April 2002, FDA implemented labeling changes to reflect the findings from the VIGOR study. The labeling changes included information about the increase in risk of cardiovascular events, including heart attack and stroke.

Recently other studies in patients taking Vioxx have also suggested an increased risk of cardiovascular events. FDA was in the process of carefully reviewing these results, to determine whether further labeling changes were warranted, when Merck informed the agency of the results of the new trial and its decision to withdraw Vioxx from the market.

Additional information about this withdrawal of Vioxx, as well as questions and answers for patients, is available online at http://www.fda.gov/cder/drug/infopage/vioxx/default.htm.

Training: Mission increased appreciate the importance of the training and the reality of the situations they may find themselves in.

Spc. Jason Lauterbach, 598th Maintenance Co. said he has seen how the training is helping him and his comrades.

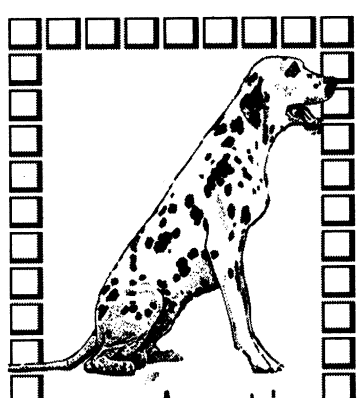
"The live fires are helping, and the chemical and first aid are always good for refreshers," Lauterbach said.

"It prepares you mentally and physically." said Spc. Brandon Koutalids, 598th Maintenance Co. "It gets your mind ready for situations situations you may find yourself in in Iraq and other locations."

Master Sgt. Kerrethel Avery, 36th Engineer Group's NBC NCO said this training can literally mean the difference between life and death.

"This training is very important," she said. "The skill level one tasks are the ones that save lives, and they are not only getting a refresher, but they are getting hands-on experience. Given the present situation, it is more likely than ever they will need to use both the live fire and CTT.

Avery said the improvised explosive device training was so in-depth, she learned more about IEDs than she did when she was assigned to an explosive ordnance disposal unit.



"The threat of (improvised explosive devices) is out there, so the training we received monday was very informative," she said. "I learned things I didn't know and I worked with (explosive ordnance disposal.)"

Avery said the Soldiers are taking the training a lot more seriously now because of the heightened threat level and that can be seen in their motivation.

"We've had 0400 formations, 12-mile road march, live fire and CTT," she said. "It's been nonstop.

"They have definitely been pushed, but morale has been pretty good," she said. "Before, there would be a lot of moaning and groaning, but now you can see they are tired in their faces, but they are sticking with it. Soldiers are being a lot more attentive during the classes, because it's not something that might happen it's something that could happen.

The training is expected to continue, and will include family members and family readiness groups so spouses and children have an easier time dealing with the deployment, Avery said.

Tank battalion reunites

Spc. Natalie Loucks
3rd Brigade Combat Team PAO

The past was revisited and war stories were shared as 10 retirees of the 709th Tanker Battalion from World War II, along with friends and family, spent Friday touring Fort Benning as part of their 22nd annual reunion.

The day began at 2nd Battalion, 69th Armored Regiment's motor pool where today's tankers met yesterday's tankers to discuss their commonalities.

For the first time Al Henderson, whose late father was a tank commander for the 709th Tank Battalion, saw a Sherman Tank outside of pictures and displays.

Retired Lt. Col. Perry Cox, 709th commander, said he was very impressed with the current tankers of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division.

The final attraction on the tour was Fort Benning's Infantry Museum. The museum is home to a monument to the 709th Tank Battalion where the visiting tankers laid a wreath in remembrance of their fellow comrades who fell on foreign soil. A moment of silence was observed.

This year's reunion is the last scheduled reunion of the battalion. If interest is shown, Henderson, who organized this year's reunion, said he would like the tradition to continue.

Henderson compared the bond between the men to the series Band of Brothers.

Cox explained the bond as respect and appreciation. "These boys did a good job for me. I had a good company," he said.

Henderson is currently working on a project to retrieve pieces of uniform and artifacts from the 709th Tanker Battalion in hopes of expanding the awareness of the battalion.

For more information on the 709th Tanker Battalion from World War II, visit Henderson's Web site http://www.angelfire.com/oh4/709th/.

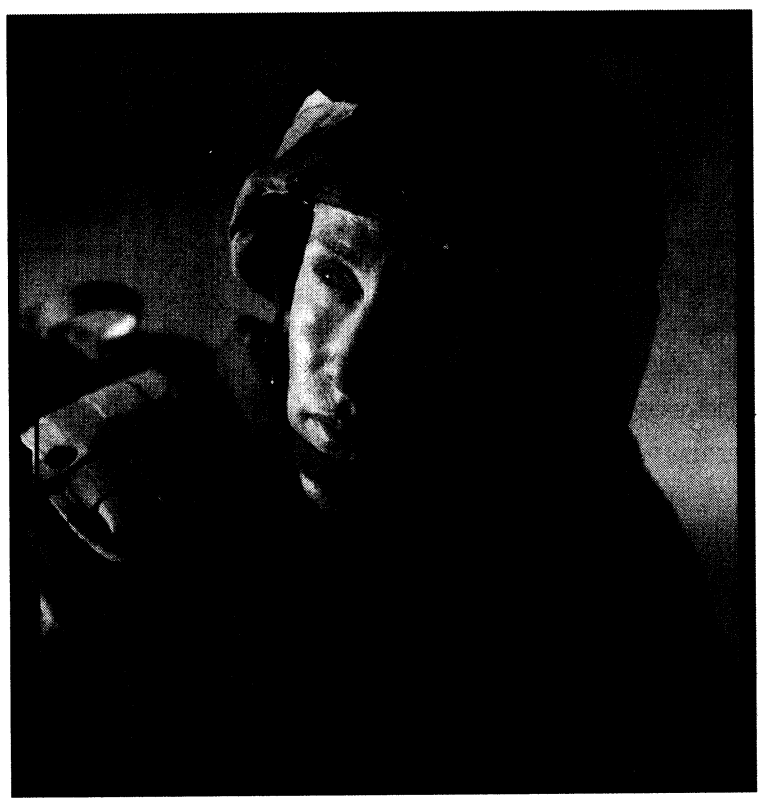
"All prospective candidates should request a pre-candidate questionnaire from all four military academies, the U.S. Coast Guard Academy and the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy," Collins said. "Our staff in the district offices are ready to help.

"It is great to assist young people who want to serve in our armed forces. They are performing a great duty for all of us who live here in the United States of America," Collins said.



Completed application submissions must be received by Oct. 15. Files not completed by the 15th will not be considered by the Eighth Congressional District Academy Selection Committee. A candidate must also satisfy the SAT and ACT requirements.

Consumer advocates question new check policy

Law boosts bank earnings not clients'

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The Check 21 Act scheduled to go into effect Oct. 28 brings with it several issues that are raising the eyebrows and blood pressure of many consumer rights organizations.

A nonprofit watchdog organization called Consumers Union has compiled an online petition of consumer concerns and drafted letters that were mailed to major banking institutions in August.

The letters address several concerns for consumer rights that include:

• Currently, funds deposited by consumers via checks can be held for up to 10 business days by law to allow time for the check to clear. With Check 21, many checks will clear significantly faster, but banks don't have to make those funds available to consumers until the mandated 10 day period has expired.

• Original paper checks will be electronically reproduced at banks participating in Check 21 and the originals destroyed at the bank's discretion.

That "substitute check" is the only legal reproduction of the original and may not be automatically provided to the consumer, which can reduce the consumer's rights to recourse in the event of a payment dispute.

If the substitute check is requested by the consumer and it is even available, banks may charge for that service.

• The decreased check clearing time will probably lead to a significant increase in the volume of insufficient fund charges — a significant increase in revenue for banks, which are not required to be passed on to consumers.

• The costly handling charges of processing a check, transporting paper checks across the country and archiving the cancelled documents will be significantly decreased, saving the banking industry billions of dollars. Savings that, once again, the banks are not required to pass on to their consumers either in full or in part.

The letters lobby the banking institutions to modify current industry practices and safeguard the rights and interests of their consumers.

The Consumers Union suggested offering substitute checks for a nominal fee or free of charge, making deposited funds available to consumers as soon as they are clear and waiving NSF charges for the first 60 days to allow consumers to adjust to the new system.

Jean Ann Fox, director of Consumer Protection for the Consumers Federation of America, urged banks to keep their customers in mind.

"Banks shouldn't use this new law as an excuse to bounce more checks, charge more fees or provide customers with unequal protection depending on how their checks have been processed," she said. "We urge banks to adopt these reforms to make Check 21 less disruptive and onerous for consumers."

With just shy of three weeks before Check 21 becomes effective and legal, now may be the time to call your bank and find out what their policies will be with the new system. Decide if they are standing behind you or their own profits.

For more information on what Check 21 means for you, visit www.consumersunion.org or call post financial readiness manager Ann Pratcher at 545-1977.

Soldiers: Ready for different mission in Iraq realistic the better."

The 3rd Infantry Division commander visited Fort Benning Tuesday to observe some of the training exercise.

He reiterated Cloutier's warning; operations in Iraq will be very different than what they were a year ago.

Nearly half of the Soldier's who'll deploy with the battalion have already served in Iraq.

"Most of you were there for the initial invasion," Maj. Gen. William Webster said.

"It's a very different place now. It's a different war. Our mission now is to stop those who want to stop the forward progress of the great nation of Iraq."

Bridgett Siter

Maj. Gen. William Webster, commander of the 3rd Infantry Division, tours a mock Iraqi village Tuesday.

And to prepare for that mission, Webster said, the Soldiers should take advantage of training opportunities like this one.

"This is your chance to fine tune — to take it up a notch," he said. "We must make sure everything is on an even keel, and we've done everything we can to prepare.

"We have to make our training as tough as possible and as realistic as possible," Webster said.

BOSS: Plans to tackle single Soldiers' concerns events that took place on post, like the Easter Eggstravaganza and Help the 'Hooch.

Gobble credited the program's success to his predecessor, Sgt. Jessica Pisa, who secured the first two trophies.

"I think I was quoted as saying everything is working like clockwork when I took the job," Gobble said.

"Since then, we've found a few little glitches that had to be worked out, but we fixed them and we've recognized a few more that we will fix in the future."

One of the major issues BOSS tackles is single Soldiers' well being.

There are several issues single Soldiers have brought up, and BOSS plans to help correct them as soon as possible.

"We want to make it a lot better," Gobble said. "There's always room for improvement."

> "BOSS does a lot here on Fort Benning. For us to win for the fourth time in a row is a huge recognition."
> Sgt. Maj. Jennifer Pearson
> Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation

And BOSS has big plans for the future of Fort Benning.

"With the new brigade they are planning to add, we will be considered an extra large installation because we'll have more than 10,000 single Soldiers," he said. "In 20 years, I see BOSS being as big as any other Army program. When someone says 'BOSS' everyone will know exactly what it means."

Sgt. Maj. Jennifer Pearson, Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation sergeant major, said this award is an outstanding accomplishment for Fort Benning.

"BOSS does a lot here at Fort Benning," she said. "For us to win for the fourth time in a row is a huge recognition."

Pearson credited the program's success to the Soldiers.

"No matter what rank you are, you need to support them," she said. "We were all single once. Some of us may have forgotten our roots, but we shouldn't."

Pearson also said Gobble is a vital member of the program, and she can see him moving up within the program.

"He'll make a good leader," she said. "Because he started at the bottom and he knows all the ins and outs."

Pvt. Frederick Busch works his way down the cargo net at the Eagle Tower complex on Sand Hill Monday morning. The cargo net was only one of several physical challenges, including three rope bridges, a rope swing and the 40-foot rappel down the face of the tower.

IET Soldiers learn pain, train

Rescuers and cadre lower Pvt. Nick Rushing, F Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, off Eagle Tower after a training injury Monday. Rushing fell off the one rope bridge, possibly breaking his left ankle.

Monday was all work and no play for Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

Eagle Tower posed multiple challenges for the recruits of F Company, with a trio of rope bridges, a cargo net descent, rope swing, ladder climb and the 40-foot rappel.

Though cadre said serious injuries are relatively uncommon, the tower claimed one for the day, when Pvt. Nick Rushing suffered an ankle injury while attempting to shimmy down the one-rope bridge.

He lost his balance, and his left foot became tangled in the safety nets as he fell. F Co. cadre reacted quickly and splinted his leg with belts.

Because Rushing could not be brought down from the tower, Staff Sgts. Steven Rainey and Dave Barron, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Infantry Training Brigade, were called in. They used a rescue basket hooked to a rappelling system to lower Rushing to the ground.

Rushing was transported to Martin Army Community Hospital.

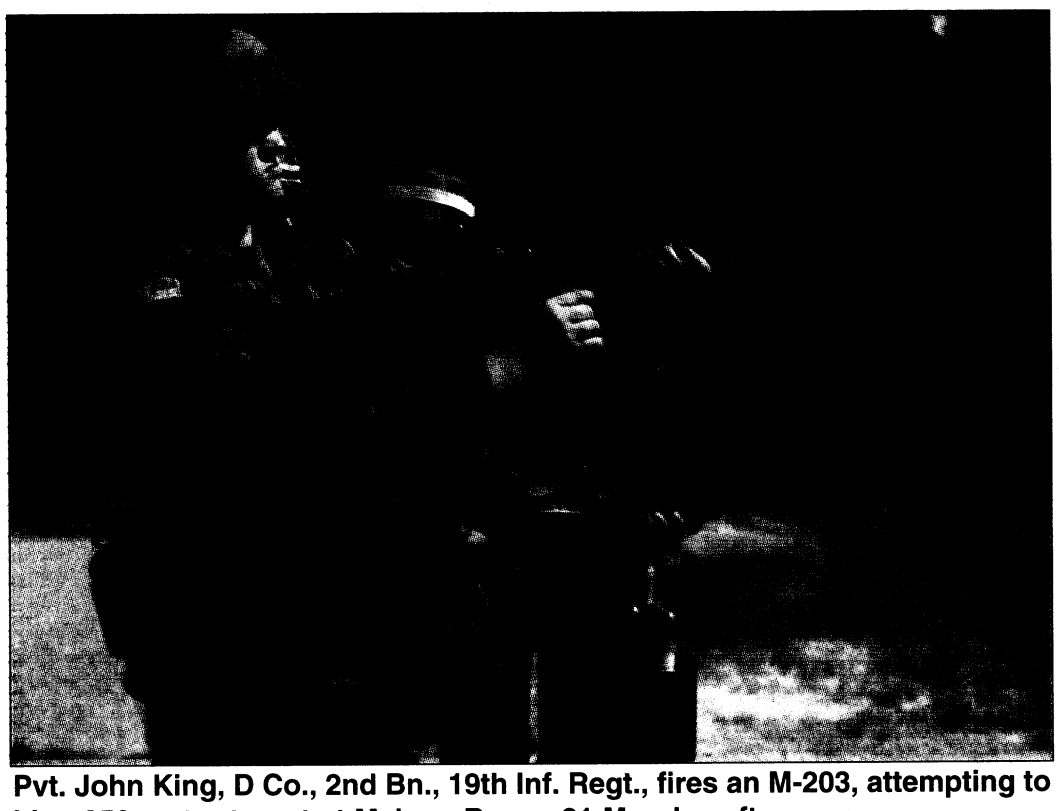
"It's a rarity when something like this happens," Rainey said.

After the unexpected training in first aid and casualty evacuation, the tower training continued.

"Eagle Tower is designed to teach physical skills, to improve conditioning and instill self-confidence into Soldiers," said 1st Sgt. Eric Levos. "The challenge helps develop and test the basic Soldier abilities. Success in combat may depend on Soldiers' ability to perform these skills."

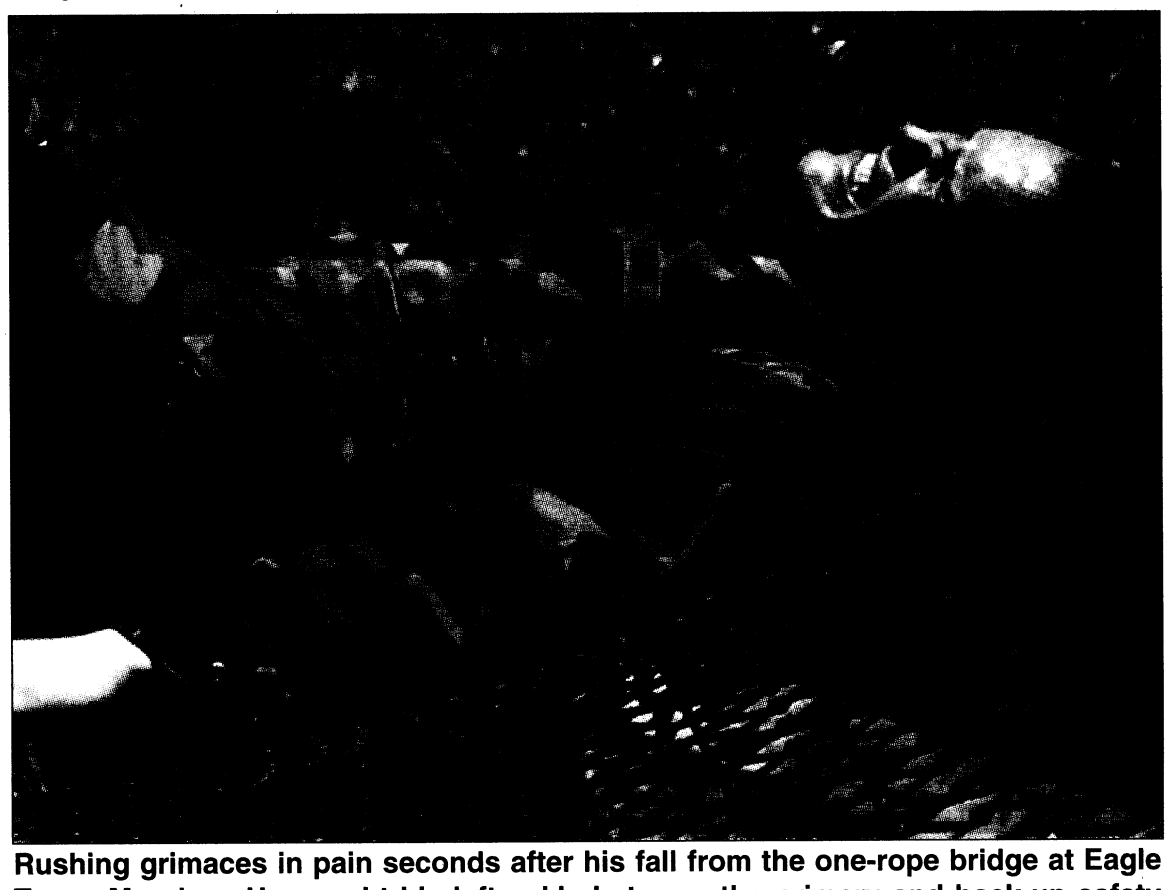
Meanwhile, D Company Soldiers at Malone Range spent most of the day conducting M-203 training. The M-203 is a lightweight, breech-loading, pump-action, single-shot, 40-millimeter grenade launcher attached to the M-16.

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Harris, a drill sergeant with D Co., helped conduct Monday's training.



"This is mandatory training for every Soldier entering the Army, so if they put their hands on an M-203, they know how to put steel on target," he said.

Though the training is crucial to prepare them for possible deployment after graduation, Harris said most Soldiers look forward to it.



"They love it," he said. "They get to fire between 10 and 15 rounds each, in three positions — standing, kneeling and prone."

A handful of Soldiers are selected to fire a live round at the conclusion of the training.

"Those are the lucky ones," Harris said. "It makes a pretty big boom."

Pvt. John King, D Co., 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., fires an M-203, attempting to hit a 250-meter target at Malone Range 21 Monday afternoon.

Rushing grimaces in pain seconds after his fall from the one-rope bridge at Eagle Tower Monday. He caught his left ankle between the primary and back-up safety nets.

212 WAYS TO BE A SOLDIER

DENTAL ASSISTANT

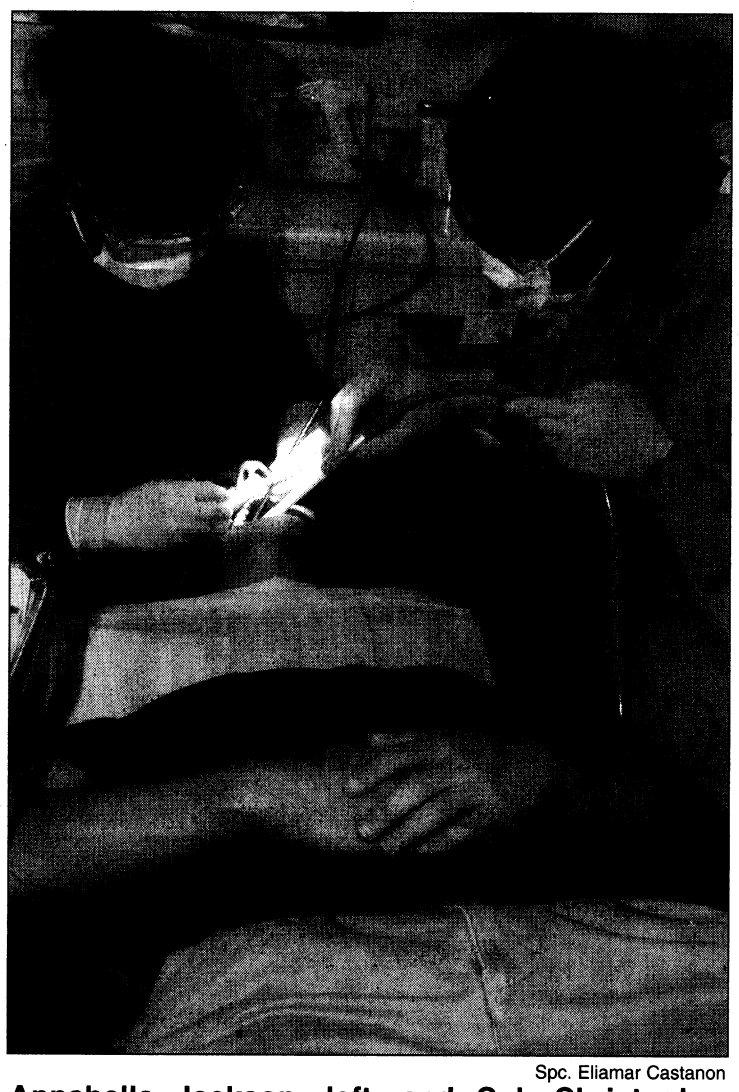
Dentist's right hand man

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

How would you like to stick your hand in peoples mouths all day?

Cpl. Christopher Moffett has done it just about every day for the past three years.

A dental assistant and assistant NCOIC at Bernheim Dental Clinic, Moffett says it's not that bad.



"I like my job, it's not a breeze, but it's not hard either," he said. "I wanted to be a dental assistant because it's a job I knew I could use outside the Army."

Dental assistants train for seven weeks at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. There, they learn basic dental procedures, how to take X-rays, proper safety measures, and the names of all the dental instruments.

Dental assistants help dentists in every type of procedure, including cavity fillings, teeth cleanings, root canals and oral surgeries. They do not perform the procedures, Moffett said.

"In training, they teach you the basics of all oral procedures and what order to hand your doctor the tools to work with," he said. "But every dentist is different, so you have to learn how to work with the particular doctor you're assigned to — it's teamwork."

Every morning, assistants set up their room for their doctor's patients. At Bernheim, Moffett said, they see at least 15 patients a day — a new patient every 30 minutes. That's a normal day.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Annabelle Jackson, left, and Cpl. Christopher Moffett, filled a cavity for 2nd Lt. Erich Feige at Bernheim Dental Clinic. Jackson is an expanded function dental assistant. EFADs are advanced civilian dental assistants that can perform some dental procedures.

Moffett said the best part about his job is knowing he can assist his doctor efficiently and is always prepared to provide his doctor with what he needs when he needs it.

"The worst part is when patients come in here, and I see they don't take oral hygiene seriously," he said.

Moffett said he plans to stay in the Army until he retires, but he wouldn't mind becoming a dentist.

Soldiers have to earn a degree to become dentists. If time permits, Moffett said, that's what he plans to do.

SAMC seeks active members

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

> "You need to have the drive to improve the community and the Army."
>
> Staff Sgt. Salina Hernandez
> Fort Benning's Sergeant Audie Murphy Club vice president

There are few honors in the NCO corps that compare to being inducted into the Sergeant Audie Murphy Club.

Staff Sgt. Salina Hernandez's induction in February 2003 was one of the most distinguishing moments of her nearly 13-year career.

Hernandez, deployed to Kuwait twice, participated in Operation Uphold Democracy in Haiti, and experienced a number of other distinctive moments in the past decade; but, the 29th Infantry Regiment medic said she still felt "undeserving to be inducted into a such a prestigious club."

The SAMC is "an elite organization of NCOs who have demonstrated performance and inherent leadership qualities and abilities" characterized by Staff Sgt. Audie Murphy, the most decorated Soldier of World War II and an American legend, according to Training and Doctrine Command Regulation 600-14.

Brazen on the battlefield and long recognized as one who "leads from the front," Murphy is considered to be the epitome of love for country, ideals and leadership traits.

He had a reputation of not asking his Soldiers to do anything he wasn't willing to do, always putting his Soldiers first, and leading by example.

Those selected for membership in the SAMC are expected to exemplify his leadership characteristics and set the standard for excellence and professionalism among their fellow NCOs.

Hernandez saw the club as an opportunity to learn more about the Army and to challenge herself.

"I'm constantly striving to improve," she said.

"And just the prestige of being part of something so much greater ..."

That something is a group of sergeants hand-picked by their chain of command and approved for induction through a grueling board process.

Once inducted, SAMC members are expected to continue "earning" their membership in the club, Hernandez said.

They must exhibit stellar leadership, participate in community improvement efforts and represent the SAMC and the NCO corps in the military and civilian communities.

Club events run the gamut, from bowling with Special Olympics athletes and reading at schools and libraries to hosting field trips to Sand Hill for kids enrolled in the Big Brother Big Sister program — activities that benefit the community and the Soldier image.

Meanwhile, the members gain valuable knowledge, she said, by working closely with NCOs from all corners of the Army with varied experiences and lessons learned.

Now the vice president of Fort Benning's TRADOC SAMC, Hernandez said there are about 40 known members on post, excluding Kelley Hill Soldiers, who fall under Forces Command.

She suspects there are more members out there, NCOs who may not be aware that Fort Benning has an active club, or who may have forgotten their responsibilities as club members.

With a host of activities planned, the club will need maximum participation, Hernandez said.

"We want to get to the point where we're holding a club event once a month," she said. "Right now, though, we're shooting for at least once a quarter."

While Hernandez said she knows it's unrealistic to expect members to participate in every club event, the goal is to get as many members active and committed to the club's success.

"I believe that each member should feel they've obligated themselves to (stay involved)," she said.

"I understand people's jobs are demanding, but the SAMC is not a personal thing — it's becoming part of something bigger, and you need to act on that.

"You need to have the drive to improve the community and the Army," she said. "And if you don't have that drive, you need to question your motivation for being in the club."

Housing survey helps RCI's progress

Clark Pinnacle to use surveys for improvements

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning residents who completed the housing survey in April took the first step toward making the Residential Communities Initiatives a success.

The survey, sent out to all 3,109 family housing residents in April, gave RCI important data about how families felt about the size of their quarters, the helpfulness of the housing office staff, quality and responsiveness of maintenance staff and what factors influenced their decision to live in a particular housing area.

"The results of the survey are critical at this point," said Lillian Salazar, RCI housing management specialist, "because RCI wants to be of service to the customer.

"The survey tells us a lot about what's going on with post housing and helps us compare Fort Benning to other military installations or the private sector."

Although RCI won't officially take over family housing units until January 2006, officials are being proactive in finding out what their customers want.

The Army announced Sept. 29 Clark Pinnacle Family Communities, LLC as the firm that will develop the Community Development and Management Plan for Fort Benning and Camp Frank D. Merrill, Ga.

The CDMP is the blueprint for the new residential communities and is due to Department of the Army April 1.

Although only 36 percent of housing residents returned the survey, Salazar said the data will be used by RCI and Clark Pinnacle.

"My focus and concern is exceeding current customer service," Salazar said. "Our Soldiers deserve it."

Clark Pinnacle will eventually take control of the assignment of family housing.

News that an additional brigade worth of Soldiers will soon be assigned to Fort Benning can be factored into the CDMP, said Scott Orrantia, Clark Pinnacle's managing director of military housing.

Based on their analysis, he said there are lands available for housing that his company didn't use in the plan.

"We can expand the scope of work to include new housing requirements," he said.

Since Clark Pinnacle has already completed three CDMPs for the Army, Orrantia said the April 1 deadline is realistic.

One of the key parts of the CDMP is an environmental baseline study that usually causes the most "headaches." But Fort Benning's RCI program manager, Ron Smith, said the draft environmental baseline and environmental assessments are already complete.

Smith and Salazar agree that a collaborative effort between RCI and the contractor and a good relationship with the customer — the Soldier — will lead to a successful project.

BETHANY CHRISTIAN SERVICES

Organization brings hope to children, families

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Bethany Christian Services placed 1,645 nationwide children with adoptive families in 2003 — 326 had special needs, and 597 of them were from 13 countries.

Bethany Christian is celebrating its 60th year of service. The second largest adoption agency in the country, Bethany Christian opened an office in Columbus more than three years ago because it's the second largest city in Georgia, and it's close to Fort Benning, said Mary Boston, director of the Columbus office.

"There are many families in Fort Benning who have gone through us to either adopt a child or become foster families," she said.

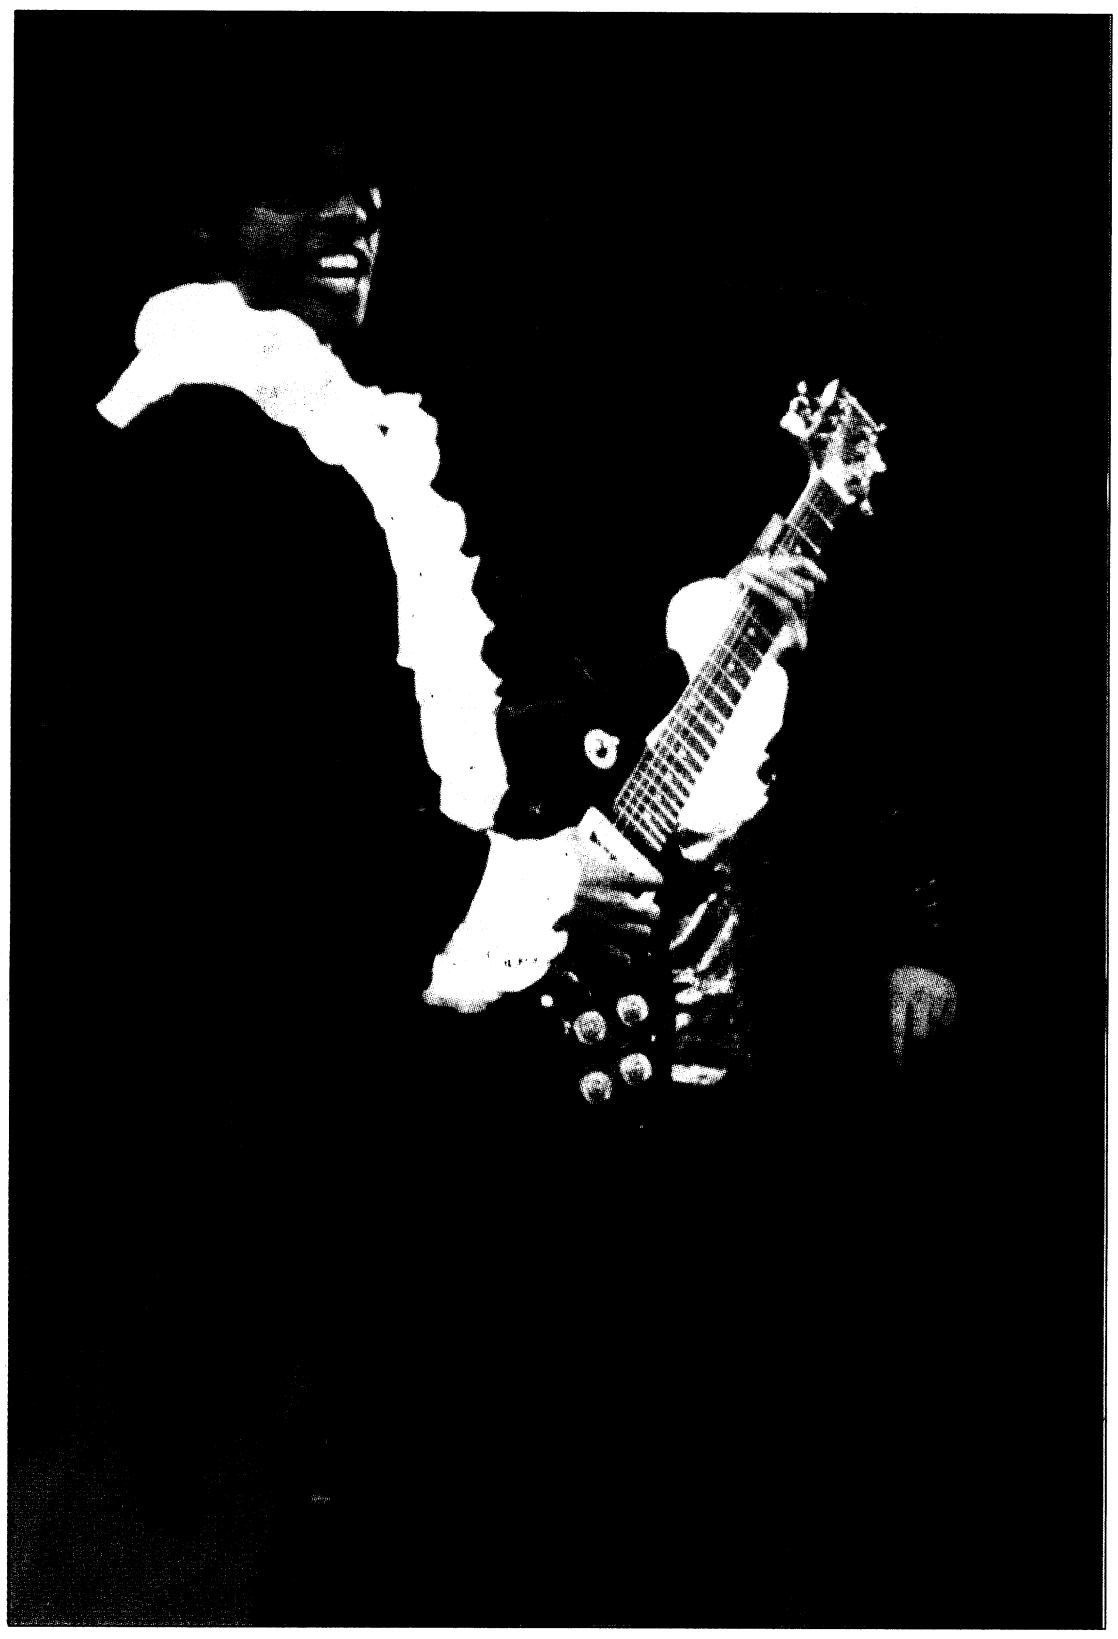
Fort Benning families who wish to foster must receive a waiver through the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Adoption and foster care opportunities are only two of the services offered by Bethany Christian, Boston said. They also offer pregnancy counseling and birthparent counseling.

"Currently, our big concern is finding families who are looking to adopt or foster children," Boston said.

The staff at Bethany Christian counsels pregnant women who are in crisis pregnancies — those who are not able to, or are not ready to become mothers.

"When women come here looking to place their baby up for adoption, we usually counsel them on the options of raising the child on their own before we go through with designing an adoption plan," Boston said. "If the woman decides adoption is the best thing for the child, then we go through with the adoption process."



Women in crisis pregnancies can help choose the family to raise their baby. It's a confidential process, which allows the birthparent to meet with the family and opt to choose another. They also receive counseling after the baby has been adopted to deal with grief.

"Birth mothers feel more comfortable with the adoption process if they are in control of what's going to happen to their child," she said.

Since it is a Christian organization, Boston said one of the requirements for the adoptive family is signing a statement of faith.

Soldier Show touches heart of every Soldier

In a moment, ordinary Soldiers became larger than life as they danced and sang their way through emotions designed to mimic those found in the heart of every Soldier.

The 2004 Soldier Show, "The Heart of a Soldier," spun a story of love, loss, adventure, excitement and pride to the beat of every type of music.

The production included a singing and dancing drill sergeant, rhythmic ballet, renditions of songs from Outkast, Alicia Keyes, Martina McBride, Ozzy Osborne and many others.

"The best way to describe the show is it's a variety show full of song and dance designed to lift the morale of the Soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class Tarron Pierce, NCOIC with the U.S. Army Soldier Show.

"It's also for the Soldiers and their families. Many have loved ones deployed, and we want to bring a sense of military pride to them."

The Soldier Show began in 1918 with Sgt. Isreal Beilin, better known as Irving Berlin. Since its conception, the show has been produced by the Soldier for the Soldier.

This year's show includes 18 performers from across the globe, in a variety of military occupational specialties. The performers come from Reserve, National Guard and active-duty units.

"Talk to the Soldiers, and they will tell you this is their tribute to the Iraq crisis," Pierce said. "Not being able to be in Iraq themselves, this is a way to give back to those Soldiers."

Aspiring performers sent in audition tapes in December, then were called for an audition in February.

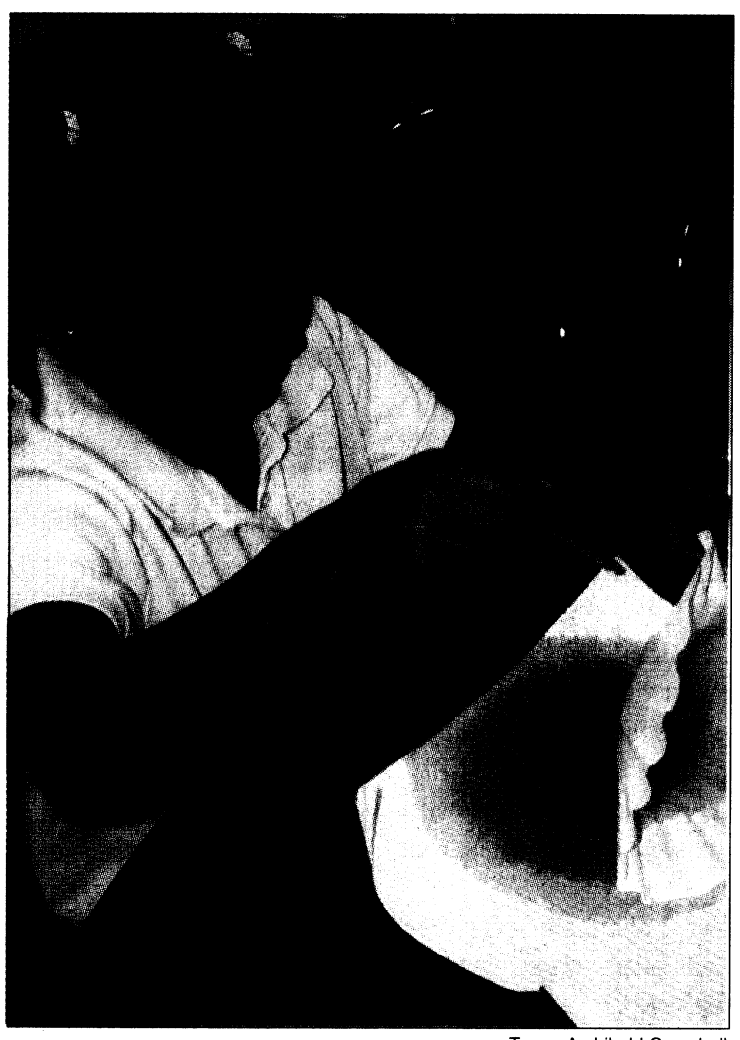
The final group was cast and the first show was performed May 1.

This year's schedule involved 110 performances in Germany, Italy, Guantanamo Bay and across the United States.

"This show is about the heart of the Soldier, and we bring together civilians and military through the music we do," said Sgt. Kevin Cherry, a saxophone player with the 392nd Army Band, Fort Lee, Va. "This brings everything into perspective, inside and out, both sides of a Soldier's story."

The mix of singing, dancing, lighting, special effects and costuming takes the viewer on a 90-minute MTV-style journey from enlistment to homecoming, Pierce said.

For 2nd Lt. Keith McCarty, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, the show "helped keep things in perspective, Soldiers doing things for Soldiers."



"I loved it. It was great," said Shelly Smith. "It had a great affect on the crowd, especially the military crowd. People respect the military so much, and this enforced that."

Smith said some of her favorite parts of the show were the old school rock and the way the songs told a story about being a Soldier.

"To people who didn't see it, they missed one heck of a show," Smith said. "For the basic and AIT Soldiers, I hope this gives them a little more pride in their job and makes them more proud to serve their country."

Lab brings science to life

Volunteer creates program

One by one, the children took droppers and swirled colors together on a coffee filter.

"You see, we can make lots of colors with these three colors," said Sandy Risberg. "Do you remember what the primary colors are? That's right — red, yellow and blue."

Risberg is a parent volunteer who designs and teaches a science lab at Dexter Elementary School. She volunteers about 65-70 hours a month.

"We had an extra room, and all the teachers had science kits in their classrooms, so we consolidated," Risberg said. "Science is magic to kids, and this is an opportunity to do hands-on projects that makes it come alive for them."

Risberg, a certified science teacher with a master's degree in education, said the teachers don't have the time to set up and clean up messy projects, like the primary colors project the preK students were doing.

"This project took me half an hour to set up," Risberg said. "Teachers just can't dedicate that much time to one project."

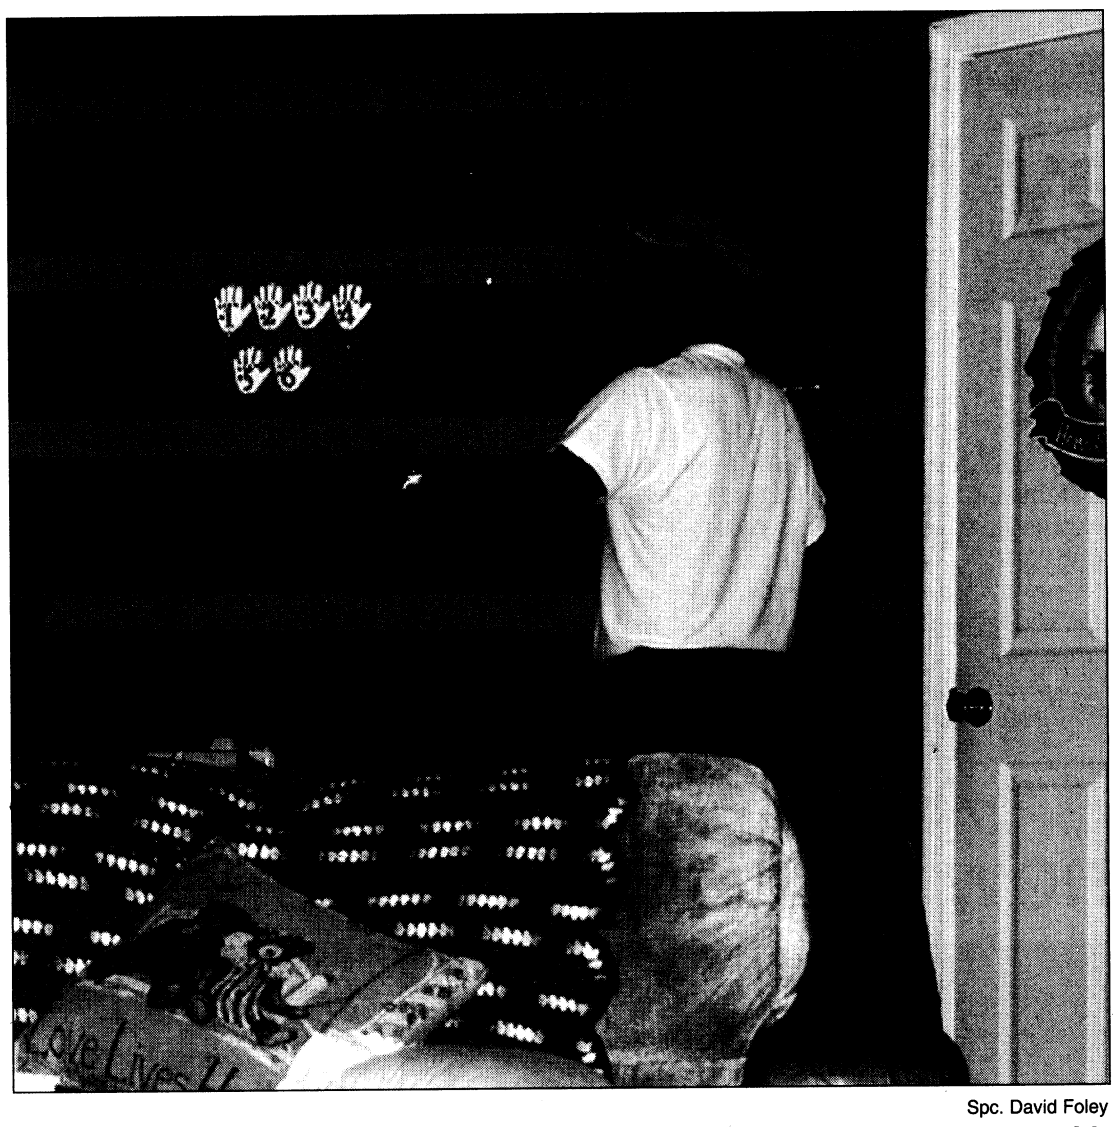
Each class, from preK to fifth grade, comes to the science lab twice a week. The lab lasts from 15-45 minutes, depending on the grade.

Risberg offers all sorts of labs, from mixing things to see the reactions, to creating circuits to make motors turn and bulbs light up. They've also melted crayons to create candles.

"She is absolutely marvelous," said Peggy Gindville, preK teacher. "She makes science come alive, and (the students) are able to experience science like never before."

Kailei Caggins, 4, and Ryan Fitzmorris, 5, giggled as they held up their colorful creations.

"I made colors all by myself," Kailei said. "I'm going to try and find some of these things (droppers) and get my watercolors and show my dog what I did. And he'll say 'woof, woof.'"



Ryan said he wants to show his parents how he made a "circle rainbow by squirting and squirting around and around with the colors."

Risberg follows the Defense Department Educational School System standards for the labs and makes sure the projects coincide with the curriculum of the class by working with the teachers.

"Hands-on learning in science really locks in knowledge," Risberg said. "When they see it, hear it or touch it, it completes the circuit and makes their own light bulbs go on."

Foreigner to visit Benning's Backstage

During rehearsals for The Foreigner, Froggy (Eugene Dixon), right, talks with Charlie (Jonathan Perkins) about a plan to convince people he can't speak English which creates the foundation for the storyline of the play.

Benning's Backstage is preparing to do it again.

Since its opening nearly two years ago, the theater has put on several plays — each staffed completely with volunteers.

The latest addition to the Benning's Backstage legacy is The Foreigner, a British/Southern comedy written by Larry Shue.

The Foreigner is about two British men who visit Tillman County, Ga., 100 miles south of Atlanta.

Gentleman one is the friend of the innkeeper, and he tells her his friend, gentleman two, can't speak English, which sets him — gentleman two — up to hear conversations that the other patrons think he can't understand.

Thus the second gentleman uncovers interesting information about the other patrons and their deeds — or rather, their misdeeds.

The play, which director Peggy Cornwell calls "a lighthearted look at the darker side of the Southern culture," is scheduled for Oct. 22, 23, 29 and 30 at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

Rehearsals are going well, Cornwell said, and everyone is working hard to master their roles, though "for some of them, it's been a stretch, because they had to learn a new dialect."

Carolyn Hernandez has taken the roles of stage manager and Camille Owens has who devoted herself to painting.

"All of the volunteers are top-quality people," Cornwell said. "I just wish we were able to pay them.

Teresa McCall, marketing specialist, Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation, said the program offers an opportunity usually only found in urban areas

"I've heard past performances received rave reviews," she said.

As if the play weren't enough entertainment, patrons will also be treated to dinner with and musical entertainment.

The Rhythm Ninjas will perform Oct. 22. Lindy Johnson will play the harp Oct. 23. The Singing Sisters, Lori Hawkins and Rhonda Carpenter, will perform Oct. 29. And Mike Stoner will play the piano for the Oct. 30 show.

Tickets are $19 for adults and $12 for children under 12.

Benning supports Army efforts to make smart energy choices

Activities set to increase awareness

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

October is Energy Awareness Month, and to keep Fort Benning's current status as the Army's leader in energy efficiency, there's information and activities for everyone.

Dr. Osman Khan, the resource efficiency manager, developed the program of events, targeted for everyone from schoolchildren to adults.

He's taking his energy message across post through the USAIC TV channel, marquees along Dixie and Lumpkin Roads, a display in Infantry Hall and programs for children at Faith Middle School — all supporting this year's theme "Smart Energy Choices."

Since the Army is the largest energy consumer in the Department of Defense, Fort Benning consumers are charged to improve energy management.

Khan feels it's important to take the energy conservation message to the children, who can talk to their parents about ways to save energy at home.

"It's an opportunity for children to interact with their parents and demonstrate their knowledge of energy awareness," Khan said. "With the children, we focus on the home side."

Khan and representatives from Flint Energies will visit students at Faith later in the month an give them tips on saving energy and money at home. Among the topics to be discussed are water conservation, fixing leaky faucets, smart lawn care tips, gas and electricity conservation, using energy efficient light bulbs and keeping thermostats at the right settings.

He said it's important for children to understand the energy efficiency of household appliances can be even more important than the item's cost.

For example, Khan said, a refrigerator uses the most energy of any appliance — about one-tenth of an annual energy bill.

"Don't just look at the item's price," Khan said. "Look for energy efficient appliances with low annual operating costs."

Another of the month's highlights is the kick off of the Flint Energies Fuel cell project, supported by the Department of Defense.

The fuel cell will be installed at Sand Hill and will provide back-up power for essential services. The cell runs using liquid propane gas and water.

Khan said two military engineers from the 36th Engineer Group, two local college students and a military student will be involved in the project.

"There are benefits of this fuel cell technology," Khan said. "It is important, and we can use this technology for future projects."

Khan has a display set up in the main entrance to Infantry Hall and he'll have handouts for passersby and an energy awareness quiz he developed up and running on a laptop.

"Energy Awareness Month is about reducing consumption, reducing utility bills and saving the environment," he said. "Some of the money we save here can be used to advance the quality of life."

Oktoberfest to offer family fun

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Dust off your lederhosen, pull out the oompah music and shine up that stein, it's Oktoberfest.

Fort Benning will host Oktoberfest from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Oct. 16 at the Uchee Creek Activity Center.

"This is a German-American celebration," said Teresa McCall, marketing specialist with the Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation.

"We will have both German and American cuisine for purchase and there will be music and many activities going on throughout the day."

The event will kick-off at 11 a.m. with a Volksmarch.

"This is a scenic 10K hike through the Uchee Creek walking trails," McCall said.

The first 5K will be stroller-friendly and pets on leashes are welcome. The event is $10 per person for ages 13 and up, those under 12 are free.

"Each paying runner or walker will get free ceramic Fort Benning Oktoberfest mug and the children will get a ribbon," McCall said.

DMWR will donate $1 per soldier to the unit of each military participant in the Volksmarch.

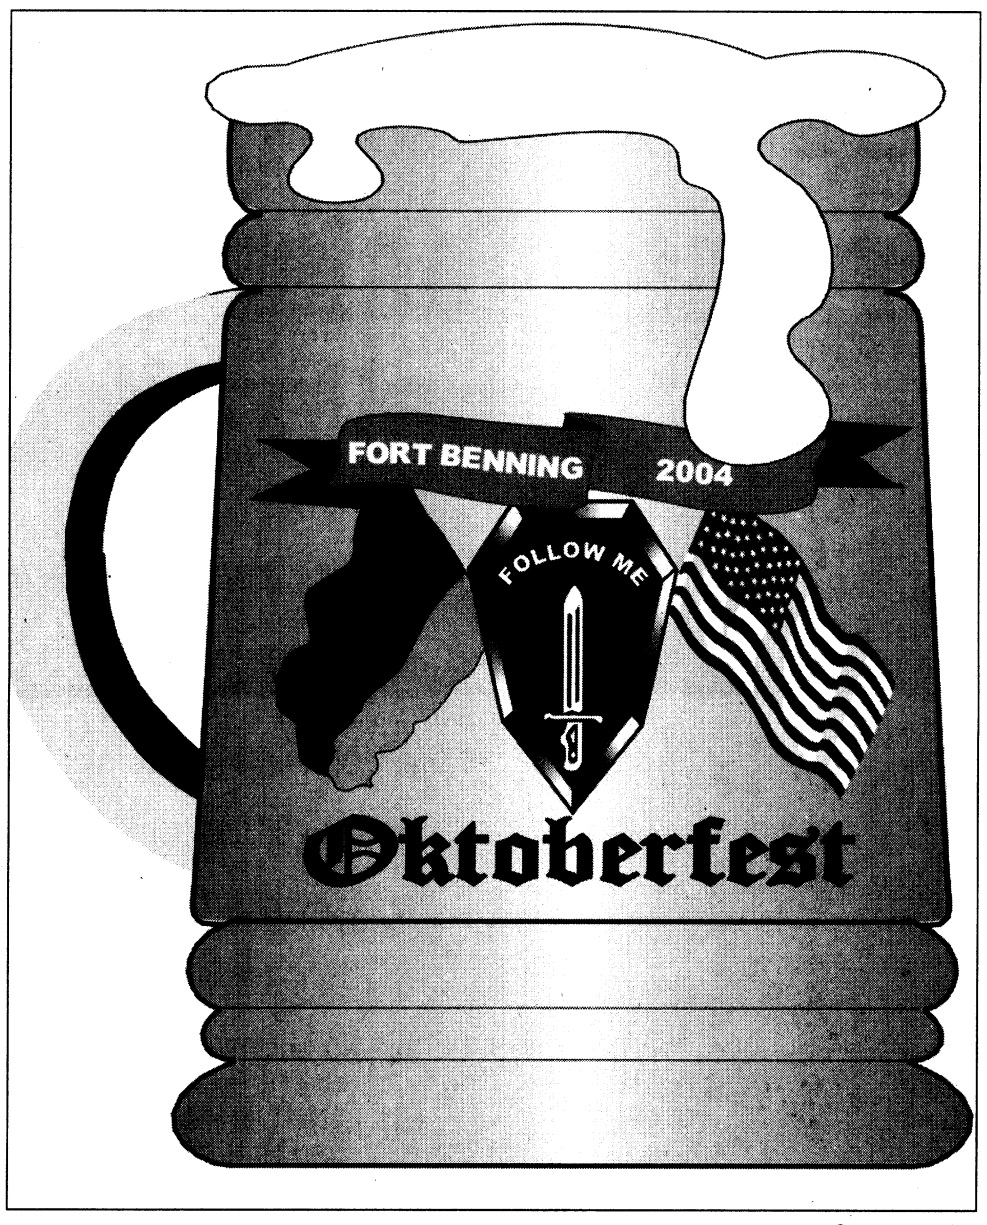
"There will be a ton of food vendors who will start serving food at noon and people can eat in our traditional beer garden, an outside area with picnic tables."

McCall also said there are plenty of things for children to do.

"We will have a kiddie corner with fun activities like dancing, arts and crafts, pumpkin decorating, wall climbing and story time," McCall said. "It is all free."

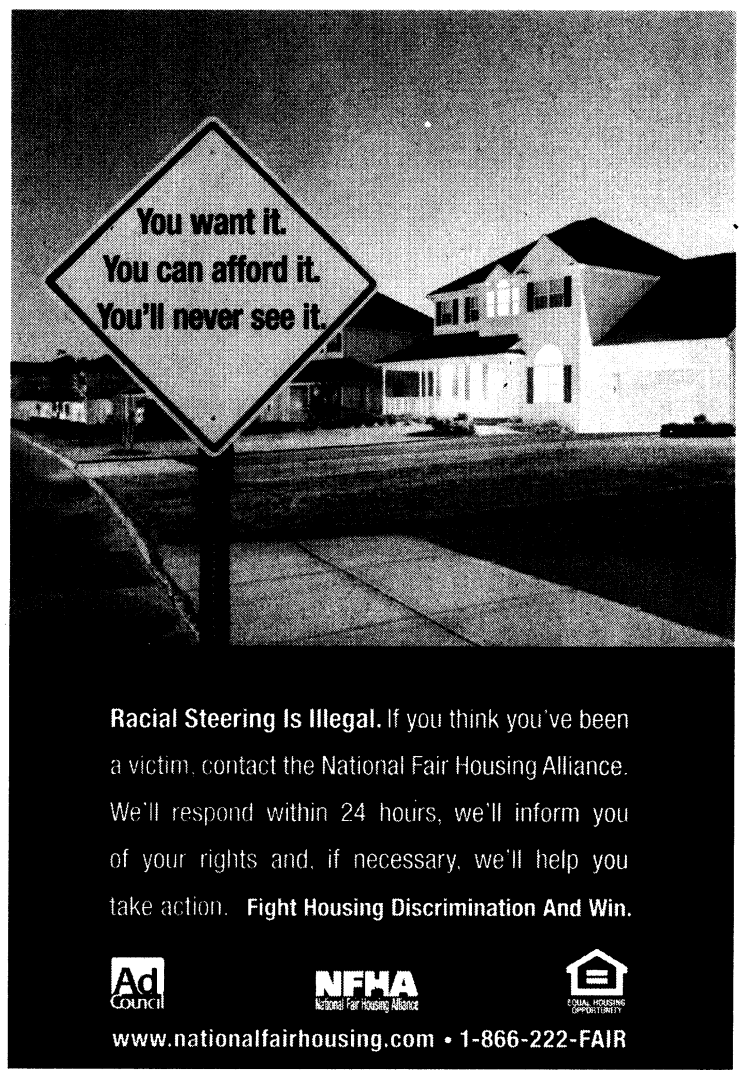
There will also be eight inflatables. The cost for the inflatables is $5 per child to enjoy unlimited play, all day long.

There will be an official keg tapping in the Oktoberfest tent at 3:30 p.m., Fort Benning's Infantry Band will perform at 4 p.m. and the Gootman Sauerkraut Band and Dance Troupe will be on stage from 6 to 11 p.m.



"There will be three big screen TV's showing college football in the activity center," McCall said. "That way mom and her friends can be in the beer garden, dad and his buddies can be watching football and the kids can play in the kiddie corner."

DMWR is promoting safety by offering a shuttle service to and from Uchee Creek, McCall said.



The shuttle will run from 11 a.m. to midnight. Pick up times are as follows: Top of every hour at the PX Mall buss stop, 15 minutes past the hour at Main Post bus stop, then 35 minutes past the hour at Uchee Creek. The shuttle will be clearly marked as the Oktoberfest Shuttle.

"Basically we are offering good family fun day," McCall said. "There is something for every member of the family to come out and enjoy. It is just a beautiful October day to celebrate fall and the festivities."

For more information on Oktoberfest, or to preregister for the Volksmarch, call 687-8021.

Services: Help families in need

"The women who come to us come here because they know we're a Christian organization and hope to have their child raised in a good Christian environment," Boston said.

International adoptions are also an important part of Bethany Christian's work.

"We help families adopt children from 13 different countries each year," she said. "The only problem with international adoptions is that parents sometimes have to travel to the country a number of times before they can bring the child home. This may cause the adoption process to be drawn. The only country to which parents don't have to travel to is Korea."

Bethany Christian not only finds families for children who need permanent homes, but they also find temporary families for foster children.

"We work with the county Department of Family Child Services in providing foster homes for children while their birth parents go through the requirements to get their children back. In some cases, the foster family decides to adopt the child if its birth family cannot have them back," she said. "A lot of families become foster families with the intent of adopting."

Boston said 80 percent of adoptions are by foster parents.

At any given time, there are more than 250 children available for adoption in Georgia and an even larger number in need of foster homes.

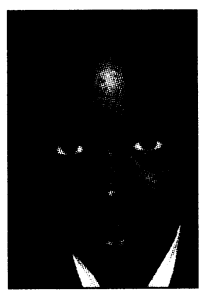
Fostering families must be flexible, nurturing, stable and able to meet their own needs, Boston said. Those families are constantly supported by a Bethany Christian supervisor for the duration a child stays under foster care, she said.

If a family is looking to adopt a child with no specific characteristics, such as a particular race or sex, the adoption process may take up to two months, Boston said.

For parents willing to adopt a child with special needs, the adoption process can go by very quickly, she said. Children with special needs are those who have been abused or neglected and need a little more help adapting to new environments, Boston said.

"We are currently in need of families who want to adopt young African-American children and siblings," she said.

Bethany Christian offers IMPACT classes for families looking to adopt children with special needs. The class includes 20 hours of training, a home study which is basically a health, criminal and family background check, and three meetings with a social worker.



For questions on how to adopt or foster a child or to begin an adoption plan, call 576-5766. Review the Bethany Christian Web site to learn more about the different services provided by visiting www.bethany.org.

A uniform policy? The verdict will have to wait

Stefon Hollis
Faith Middle School

I am neither for nor against a school uniform or a uniform dress code.

I think students should be able to do their own thing, but at the same time, I know that many students will try to take advantage of the system.

I also want to withhold my final opinion until I can see what the uniform would include, how comfortable it would be, the colors, etc.

I also think that if the majority of us do not want to have a uniform policy, than why do it?

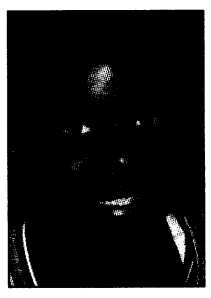
We shouldn't force people — even young people — to wear something against his or her will.

On the other hand, if we did have uniforms or a uniform dress code at Faith, it would show the community and other schools that we are well coordinated and we cooperate with each other.

People would no longer feel the need to single someone out by talking about his or her clothing.

I think if a uniform policy is established, it would be nice to have "free days" once in a while when we could wear our regular clothes to break up the daily grind.

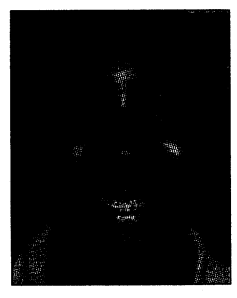
I am not definitely for or against a uniform policy until I have more information.



I realize that sometimes a change can be good, and sometimes it can be not so good. Sometimes a change can be for the best, but not always.

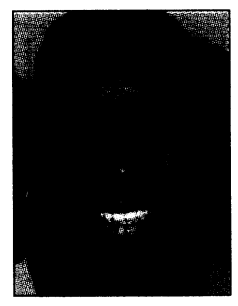
It's not my place to say whether or not we should or shouldn't wear uniforms, but if we do, I hope the policy will be thought out carefully and set straight from the beginning so there are no misunderstandings among the staff or students.

Please think wisely before you take this kind of action. Whatever you do, do it for all the best reasons.



Keep our best interests in mind, because we do have minds of our own.

How do you feel about school uniforms?



Kendra Marshall

"I don't even like to say the word uniform. Just the thought of having to wear one drives me nuts. I can't imagine having to wear the very same thing every day. I feel sorry for students in other schools who have to forfeit their freedom by wearing a uniform. We have a dress code at Faith, and I think that's enough."

Tony Hobbs

"I personally do not like the idea of school uniforms in any form. Some students may find it cool, because their parents can afford brand-name khakis, polo shirts and shoes. I know uniforms make things easier for administrators, but I like dressing the way I want. Uniforms look girlie to me — nerdy. No thank you. Uniforms are just ugly."

Megan Sanders

"I think it's a good idea for students to wear uniforms. One reason is that some students refuse to follow the dress code. They insist on dressing inappropriately — they sag or wear their skirts too short. If they had to wear a uniform, that wouldn't happen. I also think uniforms would protect the students, because administrators would know who belongs and who doesn't."

REFLECTIONS

I am sure that most of you have heard of "Murphy's Law." I would like to share with you the following article about this so-called law. It was excerpted from the Desert Wings, March 3, 1978.

Murphy's Law ("If anything can go wrong, it will") was born at Edwards Air Force Base in 1949 at North Base. It was named after Capt. Edward A. Murphy, an engineer working on Air Force Project MX981, (a project) designed to see how much sudden deceleration a person can stand in a crash.

One day, after finding that a transducer was wired wrong, he cursed the technician responsible and said, "If there is any way to do it wrong, he'll find it."

The contractor's project manager kept a list of "laws" and added this one, which he called Murphy's Law.

For more information, you can access this Internet site: http://www.murphys-laws.com/murphy/murphy.true.html.

There are people who seem to live by this law. Nothing seems to go right for them. They become easily discouraged.

It is important to understand that discouragement is not limited to race, color or religious background. It is a universal malady.

Discouragement can be contagious. We can be discouraged because others are discouraged.

People around the world get discouraged when their goals are not met. But there are many who continue to go forward until they reach that goal.

They are encouraged, rather than discouraged, when things don't go exactly as planned.

I believe God can help us whenever we are down and need guidance. He works in many ways. He gives us direction in life.

Remember, we have to do our part.

The Bible talks about faith and work:

"What does it profit, my brethren, if someone says he has faith but does not have works?

"Can faith save him?

"If a brother or sister is naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you says to them, 'Depart in peace, be warmed and be filled,' but you do not give them the things which are needed for the body, what does it profit?

"Thus also faith by itself, if it does not have works, is dead.

"But someone will say, 'You have faith, and I have works.' Show me your faith without works, and I will show you my faith by my works." (James 2:14-18)

It is important to have faith and know that God cares about how we feel, and he knows just what we need in life.

According to the book of James, we need to exercise our faith.

Let us encourage each other.

Let us try to lead those who have a genuine need on the right path.

Please continue to pray for our military forces and civilians around the world.

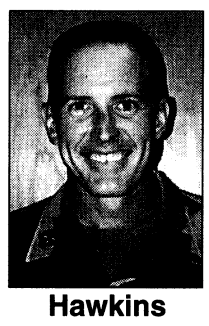
Keep our family members in your prayers as well.

God bless you.

Speak each other's language of love

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

I had a problem. In fact, it was a big problem. After finishing a 30-day mission in Germany, our A-Team was extracted, brought back to the Special Forces Operational Base in Spain and given the much sought after "post-mission pass."



Well, being close to the sun and fun of the Mediterranean, it didn't take but about three minutes for this group of 12 guys to load up and head south to the sandy beaches of Spain's Gold Coast.

That's where the problem comes in. You see, I had been trained in a couple of languages, but none of them happened to be Spanish.

And I wasn't at the beach very long when I discovered that Montezuma not only vacations in Mexico, he's quite fond of Spain, too!

When I said I had a need — I really, really had a need. And the more I talked to the guy at the cabana on the beach, the more frustrated I got and the more agitated he got.

Why?

Hawkins

Well, you guessed it — we weren't speaking the same language. It's pretty much a principle of life (and of relationships) that when you don't speak the same language all you get is frustration and agitation.

The good news is if we can learn to speak each other's "language of love" in our relationships then we can replace the frustration and agitation with harmony and happiness.

Wanna know how? Well, let me take the five weeks in October and share with you the "Five Love Languages" as set forth by Dr. Gary Chapman in his million-seller by the same title.

If you want to keep your love together when the Army is taking you apart, you have to learn how to best meet your spouse's love needs.

The number one way you can meet those needs is to become absolutely fluent in his or her primary language of love.

What's the first language of love we'll take a look at this week? It's the language of affirmation.

Most folks' respond best to one of these three dialects:

• Verbal compliments — Proverbs 25:11 says, "A word well spoken is like apples of gold in a setting of silver." Translation: It's great stuff. Do it!

• Encouraging words — Hebrews 3:13 says, "Encourage one another daily." If your mate's language of love is affirmation, he or she needs a daily fill of encouraging words.

• Kind words — Ephesians 4:29-32 says, "Be kind and compassionate toward one another." Remember, far more important than what we say is how we say it, right?

Wanna know what the second Language of Love is?

Then come join me for our series, Lord of the Rings: Keeping Your Love Together When the Army's Taking You Apart at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel.

It's at 11 a.m. Sundays at Kelley Hill, and it's for everyone. Or give me a call or stop in the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760. I look forward to serving you.

The Bulldogs' defense envelopes the Bulldozers' Teran Wilson, number 20, during Fort Benning intramural football action Tuesday night.

Bulldogs chomp at Bulldozers, win 8-6

B Company takes first intramural football win

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Bulldogs put the Bulldozers in a hole, taking their first win 8-6 during intramural flag football action Tuesday night.

The B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's Bulldogs proved they were a force to be reckoned with right out of the gate.

The 63rd Engineer Company's Bulldozers won the first possession. But the Bulldogs' defense kept them in place long enough for B Company's Desmond Williams to score the first two points of the game with a safety.

The Bulldogs pushed their way to mid field with a series of short passes and handoffs, but were unable to complete any long passes or reach the goal line.

The Bulldozers weren't about to throw in the towel, as they turned up the volume on their next possession, pushing their way across the field but also came up short on the touchdown.

Both teams showed the need for more practice, with an inability to connect with any long passes, but showed commanding performances on the ground.

Bulldozers' Steven Showers took advantage of a bomb that Bulldogs' quarterback, Jake Lepper, sent to Williams. Showers caught the interception on the Dozers' 20-yard line.

Despite the turnover, the Bulldozers were still unable to put any points on the board.

Just before half time, the Bulldogs put the ball in Williams' hands and he plowed his way across the field, getting shut down a few feet from the goal line.

Lepper tied up the loose ends just before the whistle with a 10-yard pass to Jason Feist, who caught a pass in the end zone, setting the score at 8-0 for half time.

Even though the Bulldozers were down, they weren't going to go out. The second half was their redemption.

The Bulldozers held off the Bulldogs for the rest of the game.

They pushed their way across the field several times but the Bulldogs wouldn't let them get any points on the board until the last few minutes of the game.

Bulldozers' Teran Wilson finally made it to the end zone during their last possession, bringing the score to 8-6, opening the door for a 3-point conversion and a possible win.

With victory only one play away, the Bulldozers tried a 20-yard pass to the corner of the end zone but it was smacked down and they were unable to recover.

Once the game was over, the Bulldogs started celebrating, but they didn't want to get ahead of themselves for the season.

"With only two weeks of practice, this feels good, especially when they have been practicing for about a month," said Robert Smith, Bulldogs team manager.

"It always feels good to win the first game of the season."

Despite Tuesday's victory, the Bulldogs have no intentions of taking a break.

"We are still going to practice every day," Smith said.

"And none of this could be possible without the commander and first sergeant supporting us 100 percent."

Siter puts winning attitude above winning games

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

When starting senior offensive guard Tom Siter moved from Columbus High School to Jordan High School for his last year, it wasn't because he is a guy who is always worried about being on the winning team.

Coach Leo Ellerby said the 6-foot-1-inch, 200-plus pounder was a welcome addition to the Jordan squad.

"We had a lot of guys playing on both sides of the line," he said. "It was great we got Tom this year. He filled a big hole on the line and freed up someone I can now commit to defense."

Jordan is currently 1-6 for the season, but that doesn't seem to bother Siter, who opted to transfer to Jordan's Magnet Academy to join his brother Jacob, who is also on the team.

"I think we've got a lot of talent, some good leadership, and I think it just all needs to come together," he said. "I didn't come over for the athletics, but I love football, so, no matter what, I'd be playing."

Siter said he thinks highly of his teammates' dedication, something he has learned to appreciate from his dad, a full-time National Guardsman assigned to Fort Benning.

"I think being able to lose graciously shows character and I think all these guys still out here after four years really shows people what kind of character they have," he said.

The appreciation of dedication, hard work and respect that usually comes with being an Army brat is something Siter said he is thankful his father has ground into him.

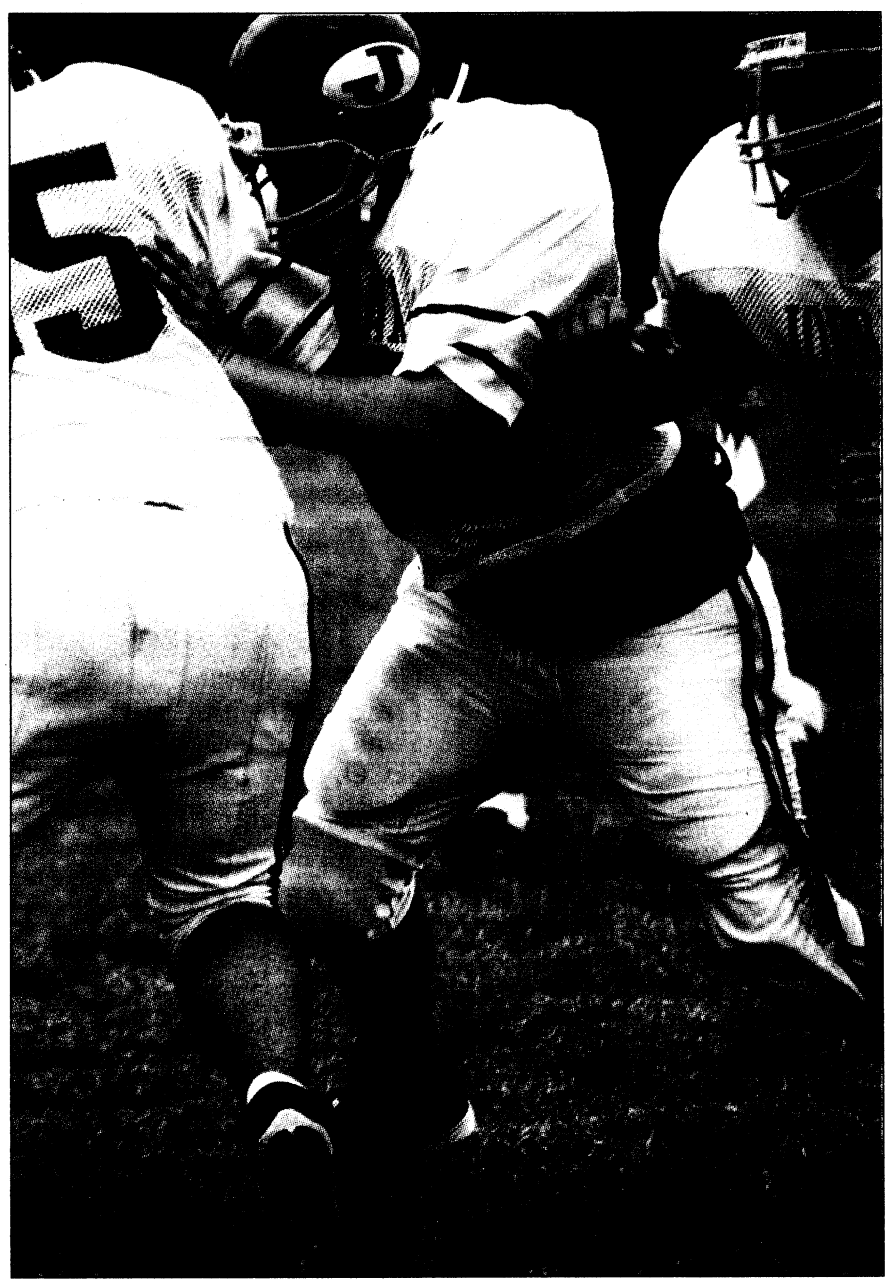
The 18-year-old Siter said giving up now, even though the team has little hope of finishing the season well, isn't in his blood.

"My dad has always pushed me and my brother, and he pushes this don't-quit attitude hard," he said. "He's probably the main reason I'm still doing it — he taught me that once you start something, you see it through and never quit."

A "fairly average" A-B student his first three years, Siter has come into his own both on the field as a starting varsity player and as an academic. He's now a straight-A student.

"I guess I finally got my head on straight," he said.



Things are coming together, it seems, for the young man. He said college is an absolute certainty for him, though he isn't quite sure where he wants to go.

The University of Florida, Georgia Military College and Columbus State University are all possibilities, with GMC being number one on his list.

Siter said he knows he won't have any football recruiters knocking on his door, but he doesn't rule out the possibility of walking on wherever he ends up.

"I want to play, but I haven't decided if I want to play for four more years or concentrate on school," he said.

With eight months left in the school year, Siter still has time to decide if football is still in his future, how important school is to him, and where exactly he wants to go when its time to take it to the next level, but no matter what, he says he is ready for the change.

Siter uses his 6-foot-1-inch, more than 200-pound frame to block a defensive lineman. The senior moved from Columbus High School to Jordan this year.

"The thought of being out on my own is exciting," he said. "I'm ready to spread my wings a little — I just don't know if my mom is. I think she's buying a house here to get me to stay and go to CSU."

Happy hunting and thanks

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Unless you've been exposed to the whole hunting dynamic, you may not truly understand the giving, caring, fair-minded nature of true outdoor sportsmen.

Every year they put food on the tables of thousands of hungry families in Georgia and Alabama through the Hunters for the Hungry Program.

They teach street kids the difference between violence and sportsmanship.

They teach gun safety.

They raise funds and sponsor hunts for the handicapped.

They bring families together for wholesome, outdoor fun.

And that doesn't begin to cover the many ways our hunters help the community.

Hunters are simply good people. If you have any doubt, you should've attended the Fort Benning Hunting Open House last week at the Officers' Club.

It was jam-packed, literally, with good people doing good things for the community.

There's Bill Brickner, Burt Davis and Tommy Garnett, the go-to boys who drummed up thousands of dollars worth of donations for door prizes, food and give-aways. They also worked relentlessly to generate interest in what's sure to be an annual event, if the 400 attendees were any indication.

And there's the good folks who keep the Commanding General's Hunting and Fishing Advisory Counsel up and running to make sure post hunters understand their rights and responsibilities. Col. Mike Beasock leads a very fine team of volunteers who lobby for the changes our sportsmen clamor for year after year — like periodic hunts in densely populated areas.

There were representatives from the various on-post organizations that influence or are influenced by outdoor activities. These folks gave up a few hours of their time to bring our sportsmen the latest news on what's in, what's out, what's coming and what's legal and illegal this season.

Last but not least, there were nearly 100 vendors and organizations who donated their time and wares to make the evening — and the whole hunting season — a success. The list includes the usual suspects — Bill Heard, First Command, Burris Optics, Surefire, Hunter's View, Ace Pawn, Fort Benning's DMWR, Commissary and AAFES, Omega Travel, Meineke and Daffin's Meat Processing. The list goes on and on.

This is simply my way of saying thanks to all of you who help make hunting here on Fort Benning the best in the state.

Three cheers for safety on the sidelines

Children's Healthcare of Atlanta

ATLANTA — Cheerleading has evolved from standing on the sidelines and cheering for the football or basketball team to a very competitive sport in and of itself.

Stephanie Martin, M.D., pediatric orthopedic surgeon at the Sports Medicine Program at Children's Healthcare of Atlanta, offers this advice to parents, coaches and athletes to help cheerleaders stay safe:

Parents

• Have your child see a physician for a pre-participation sports physical to rule out any musculoskeletal problems. The doctor should also take a family history to help rule out any potential risk factors.

• Understand what is involved in the sport of cheerleading. Cheerleaders are expected to have a great deal of agility and stamina, and have the ability to tumble and perform gymnastic-type moves.

• Understand each cheerleaders role in a squad. Some cheerleaders are more suited to perform rolls, tumbles and aerial moves, while others may play a vital roll in providing strong bases and mounts during high-skill stunts.

Coaches

• Encourage athletes to take dance and tumbling classes.

• Know and understand the rules and guidelines provided by the National Federation of State High School Associations.

• Make sure athletes have proper shoes and a safe surface on which to train.

• Know and understand the signs and symptoms of heat exhaustion and heat stroke. Practice during cooler times of the day. Avoid practicing during mid-day when temperatures are highest. Have water breaks every 15 minutes, and allow them to drink freely between breaks.

• Know basic first aid. Keep a first-aid kit available for minor injuries. Always have a cooler of ice handy to treat any injuries. Take a CPR class. Athletes who suffer head and neck injuries should not be moved.

Cheerleaders

• Get in shape. Strength and agility are needed to perform cheerleading moves safely. Make sure joints and muscles are flexible with a good stretching routine.

• Learn the rules and regulations of cheerleading. A spotter must be present for each stunt performed. Stunts can be dangerous if performed incorrectly.

• Warm up and cool down. Give yourself plenty of time before practices and events to warm up. When practices and events are over, it is a good idea to allow your body to cool down by performing long, slow stretches.

• Proper nutrition is essential for developing stronger muscles and preventing injuries to overworked bodies. Drink plenty of fluids. Muscles need to remain hydrated to perform at their max.

DPW gets funds for barracks

Renovations to make life easier for Rangers

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The Directorate of Public Works has secured more than $2 million to renovate two 75th Ranger Regiment buildings through an Installation Management Agency funding program called Installations As Flagships.

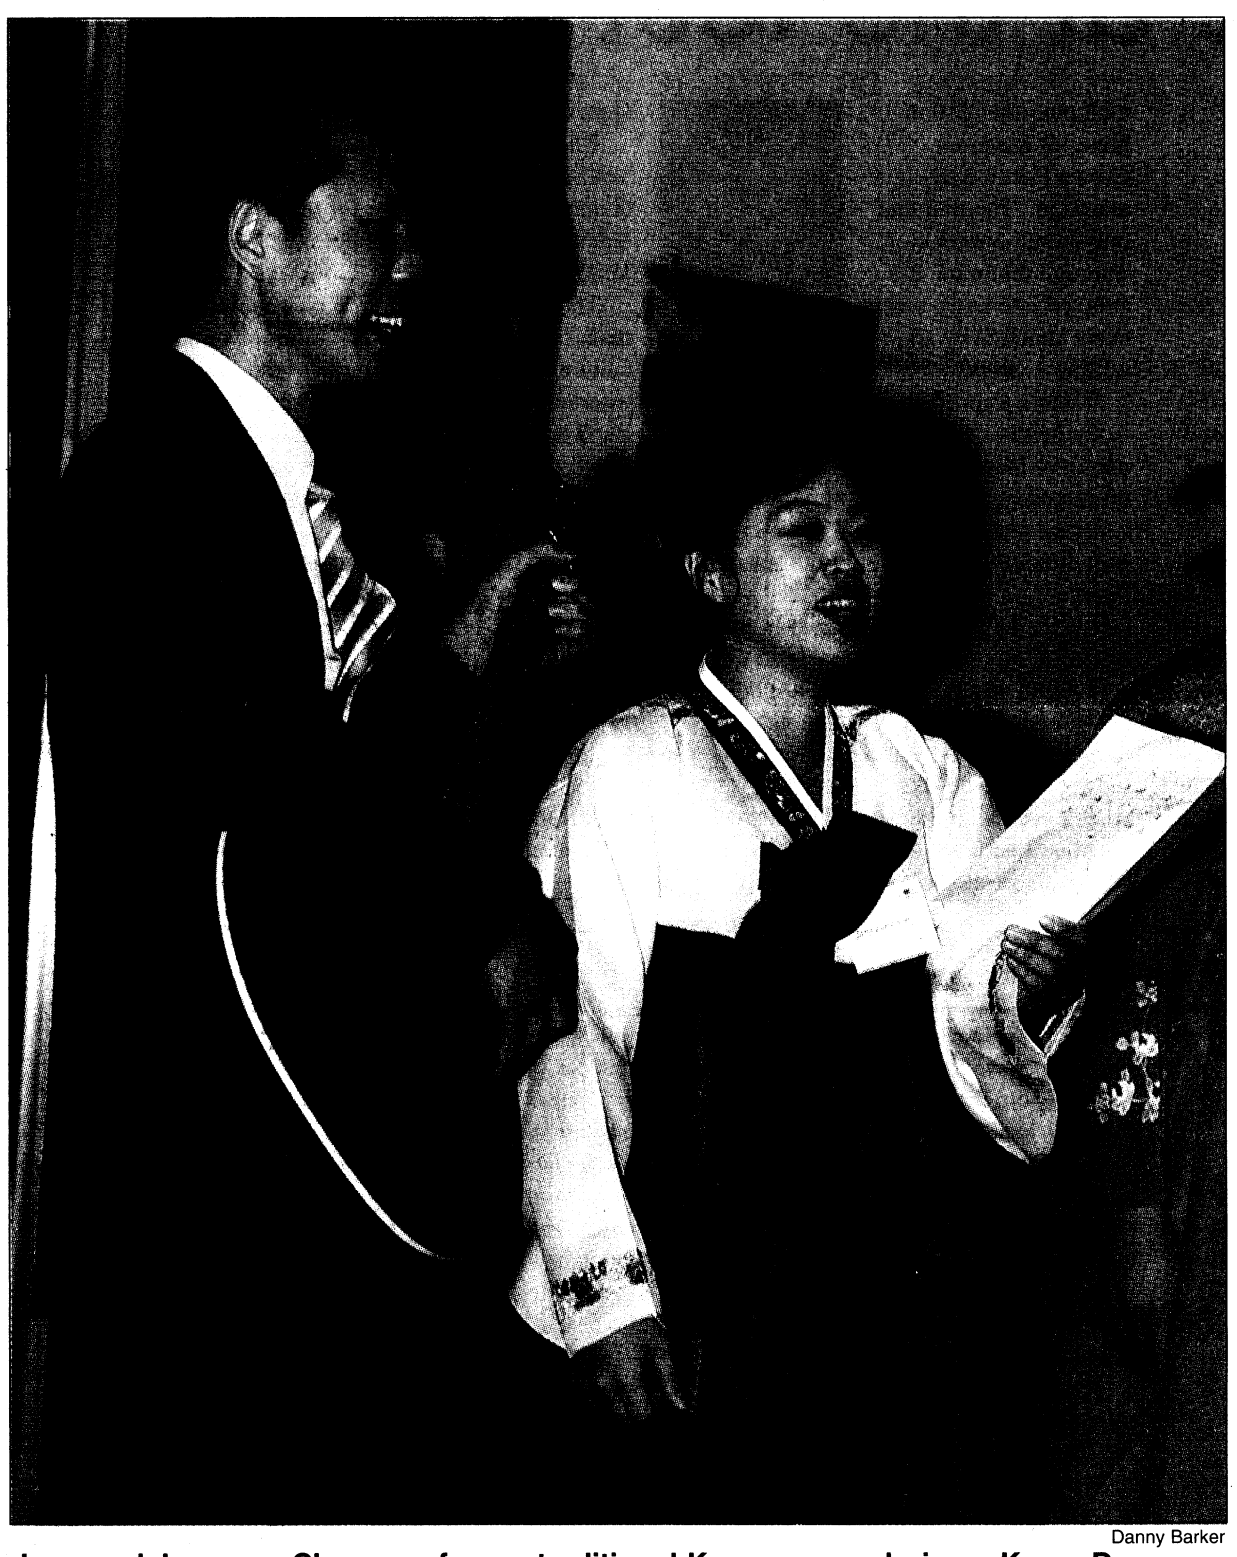
The program offers supplemental funding for projects which support deploying units.

"We get a limited amount of sustainment, restoration and modernization funds each year, and it's never enough," said acting DPW director Craig Taylor. "We have more than a $200,000 SRM funding backlog right this second. So when we have the opportunity to tap into different fund streams to supplement SRM money, we capitalize on that as much as possible."

Buildings 2832 and 2833 on 1st Infantry Brigade Loop, off of Sightseeing Road, house Ranger Indoctrination and Orientation Program students.

"The commanding general places a huge emphasis on three things: where Soldiers live, where they worship and where they eat — in that order," Taylor said. "We do whatever we can to improve conditions in support of that emphasis."

The two buildings date from the Korean War-era and are in dire need of improvement to meet minimum standards until they are replaced — a replacement not scheduled for at least another 10 years, Taylor said.



The project is scheduled to start around Nov. 1 and normally takes at least six months said Folke Ahlquist, installation support manager for the Savannah District Corps of Engineers.

While the two buildings are under construction, the Soldiers living in them will be relocated to other barracks, he said.

"The renovation period will not change the way we are currently conducting business," said Ranger Training Detachment 1st Sgt. John Brady. "The post has provided us with temporary barracks right next to our present location for the duration of the renovation period.

"In my opinion," he said, "the renovation of the barracks will greatly improve the morale of the students, which will positively impact the Ranger Training Detachment's mission to train, assess and select the Soldiers that meet the standards of the 75th Ranger Regiment."

Post plans for new troops

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

As the Army transforms into a modular fighting force, thousands of Soldiers will move to Fort Benning and live in modular barracks.

Plans are underway to stand up an infantry brigade combat team on post, which means Fort Benning will house an additional 3,800 Soldiers by 2006.

An environmental planning team is working with the Directorate of Public Works to determine the impact the additional Soldiers will have on Fort Benning and find ways to accommodate them.

Plans for the barracks and operations buildings place them in the Harmony Church area, said Patrick Chauvey, chief of Environmental Management, Directorate of Public Works.

"It will be easiest for us to build there, because the land has basically been prepped," he said.

"Ten years ago, there were literally hundreds of World War II barracks in that area, which means the land has already been disturbed."

Although Chauvey feels the project site has been nailed down, he knows everything is still subject to change.

Post retention office exceed retention goal

Nearly half re-ups remained on Fort Benning

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

At 5:30 a.m., Oct. 8, friends and family of Staff Sgt. James Binion, a drill sergeant in F Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, gathered in front of the Ranger Memorial for Binion's indefinite reenlistment to serve the Army.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, swore in and signed Binion's reenlistment contract that morning.

Freakley thanked Binion for choosing to reenlist indefinitely and said that the Army does not just reenlist Soldiers but their families too.

"We not only met the retention goal, we exceeded it in every category," said Sgt. Maj. Lyle Hogue, command career counselor for Fort Benning's Retention Office. "We have one of the best retention programs in the Training and Doctrine Command," Hogue said. "We have a lot of retention officers and a lot of good infantry leaders.

"The retention success is due to a three-pronged recipe," Hogue said. "It includes outstanding installation leadership, outstanding community leadership and an excellent retention team.

"Leaders on Fort Benning are totally focused on Soldiers. Soldiers can have some of the best equipment out there, but if they know the focus is on them and their families, it improves retention."

Hogue also said the leadership in the Columbus community improves the quality of life of Soldiers.

"If Soldiers don't feel safe living off post, they are going to want to leave the area," he said. "But if Soldiers feel safe and appreciated on and off post, it also improves retention."

Fort Benning's retention team is also a great part of the fiscal year's success. There are more than 50 retention NCOs in various Fort Benning units. If the Retention Office cannot place a career retention officer at a unit, it assigns a permanent retention NCO in the unit. Career retention NCOs have the sole job of counseling Soldiers on the different career options in the Army.

According to fiscal 2004 retention records, 45 percent of Soldiers who reenlisted, reenlisted for Fort Benning.

In fiscal 2004, the retention objective numbers went up from the numbers in fiscal 2003, largely in part because of the Global War on Terrorism and the decrease in the number of Soldiers being recruited into the Army, Hogue said.

"Retention deals with recruiting," he said. "If recruiters are struggling, the Army tries to retain more Soldiers. If recruiting is doing good, then retention is doing good."

Fort Benning's retention goal success was instrumental to TRADOC meeting its retention goal, Hogue said. "All retention offices fit into the next larger piece— in this case TRADOC. We've been told by TRADOC that if Fort Benning missed its goal, TRADOC loses, since Fort Benning plays such a large role in TRADOC."

STAY AT HOME FOR A

Fantasy vacation

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

In the span of a year, I've toured Hollywood with a team of 10-year-olds, skied Gatlinburg with 10 teenagers, climbed a mountain with my son who's a senior, traveled to D.C. with 40 seniors who are World War II vets, flew to Vegas with Whitney Houston and reacquainted with classmates at my 20th high school reunion. Next week I'm off to Chicago.

For the record, it's been a benchmark year. I've probably traveled more in the last year than in all the years preceding, and I've had a great time.

But what's my fantasy vacation? That was the question posed by Lisa Madler, the Faith Middle School teacher who regularly submits her students' work to The Bayonet's Fort Benning Youth in the News column. She tasked her students to describe their fantasy vacations within these parameters; they couldn't leave home, and they couldn't spend a dime — not even for a bottle of Calgon.

The more I read and the more I thought about it, the more it appealed to me — this idea of vacationing at home. It is my favorite place to be, and I never have to worry about the dress code, the water or how much to tip the waitress (though I can state emphatically, she never gets tipped enough.) I kinda like the people who hang out there — most of the time. And we all speak the same language — most of the time.

As for the spending restriction, that's no problem around here, where five faces with braces and the aforementioned travel portfolio has brought our budget to a screeching halt. It's not "budging" a bit.

So, yeah, I'd love to vacation at home for a week or two. But I have a few parameters of my own — no telephone, no housework, no TV and no whining.

Without TV, the kids would naturally whine, so off they go to Grandma's house — no, better yet, my editor's house. It's my fantasy, after all.

My husband could probably survive without TV, but his cell phone rings incessantly. And no, he can't turn it off, because it might be an emergency. So he'll have to go TDY. Somewhere sunny and warm, with good cell phone reception and an endless choice of barbeque restaurants, where he will naturally tip the waitresses quite generously.

With Tom TDY, and the kids working on my raise, there's hardly any housework at all. No laundry (because I'm living in pajamas,) no dishes (because I'm living off pizza,) no pesky telemarketers (because I've unplugged the phones,) and no pesky pets (since Rosie and Gunny are vacationing at the kennel — no, no, my editor's house.)

I'll work my way through that stack of books I've been planning to read. I'll sleep till 10 a.m., eat cold pizza, and go back to bed. I may break my "no TV" rule and watch FOX News all night long. I'll peek in the bathroom every now and then to make sure — yep! — the toilet seat is down, just like I left it.

I suppose my fantasy vacation is less likely to become a reality than my dream home (where the toilets come equipped with spring-loaded seats and canned applause), but it's sure been fun playing along with the kids from Faith, who came up with some mighty appealing ads for their fantasy vacations. Check them out on B-4.

Join me at the fest tent

I'll admit it. My German is limited to counting from one to 100. But this year, I'm not going to let that keep me from heading to Uchee Creek for the Oktoberfest Saturday.

Now's the time for me to come clean. I have never been to an Oktoberfest — at least not that I can remember. If I went, I would have only been 6 or 7.

So I decided to go downstairs to the experts to learn all I could about Oktoberfest. What I got was a quick lesson in German geography from German Sgt. Maj. Peter O'Grady, a native of the Black Forest region of Germany. O'Grady admitted he was not the man to talk with.

As it turns out, Oktoberfest is a Bavarian-type of celebration. That's not to say no one else in Germany celebrates, but the Bavarians are the ones who celebrate professionally."

Why? Because the first Oktoberfest took place in 1810 in honor of Bavarian Crown Prince Ludwig's marriage. The first fest only lasted a week. Through the years, it's evolved into a two week event attended by six million visitors.

There's a special park in the heart of Munich where the lord mayor of Munich taps the first keg to kick off the party. Ultimately, party-goers consume more than five million liters of beer and 200,000 pairs of pork sausages. Wow.

It's the largest public festival in the world. It's even bigger than Mardi Gras.

Then, it stands to reason, we should take advantage of our own Oktoberfest, featuring authentic German food — and for those of you who like it — beer.

But even with the beer, Uchee Creek's event will be family-friendly, with children's games, a Volksmarch and German entertainment.

I'll try to get my kids out for the Volksmarch at 11 a.m. It's free for anyone under 12 and the $10 fee for those 13 and older includes an official Follow Me Volksmarch mug.

Those wanting a glimpse of what really makes Oktoberfest special — the Bavarian culture — need look no further than the entertainment. The Gootman Sauerkraut Band and Dance Troupe offer music and dancing in traditional Bavarian costumes.

I'll be very interested in seeing the Gootman ladies in their dirndls whirling their full skirts across the stage. For some reason, there's a photo in my parents' living room of me and my brother in lederhosen. I'm not sure why I had the pants and not the skirt ....

So if you can't make it to Germany for the authentic celebration, come with us to Uchee Creek Saturday for the next best and closest thing.

Remember — Volksmarch at 11 a.m. and keg-tapping at 3:30 p.m.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Pick up after yourself, plain and simple

I don't have kids, but when I am teaching, babysitting, or have the wonderful niece and nephew down from Virginia, one of my top five rules is "Pick up after yourself."

When our nephew was visiting, we took him fishing at Russ Pond. I, of course, noticed the collection of trash around the water, and apparently he did too because he tossed his bottle cap in to join the collection.

Immediately I corrected him, but his response was, "Everyone else did." So, of course my response was "What if everyone throws their bottle cap, or whole bottle in, where would there be room to fish?" He hung his head and said "Nowhere."

In addition to Russ Pond, on our adventures, my husband and I have noticed a few other places in desperate need of cleaning.

I can't help but take note of the burnt beer cans, empty junk food bags, empty worm containers.

The real kicker was the sofa and mattress dumped at the fishing spot behind the fire station (on Custer Road).

When I had to get rid of my old sofa, I picked up the phone and called to see who would come and pick it up for me. Yes, fellow citizens of Fort Benning, they do that for you.

I guess I could just be blowing hot air, but just in case this sinks in to someone — the Soldiers who like to have a bonfire party on the 'Hooch, the husband who just needs to get away from the family, or the unattended minors (which is a whole other story), please, whatever you take with you, take it back.

Let the people who go for the scenery enjoy the scenery. (And before I get called a hippie, which I may be, I happen to like this planet and it will only last so long.)

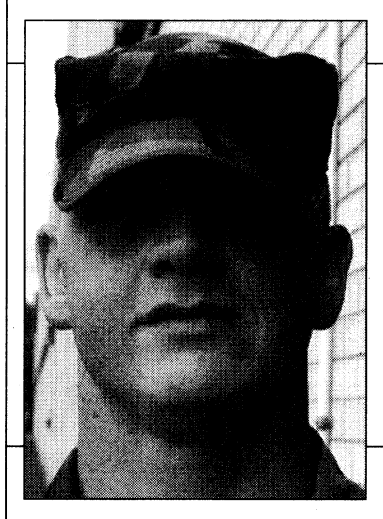
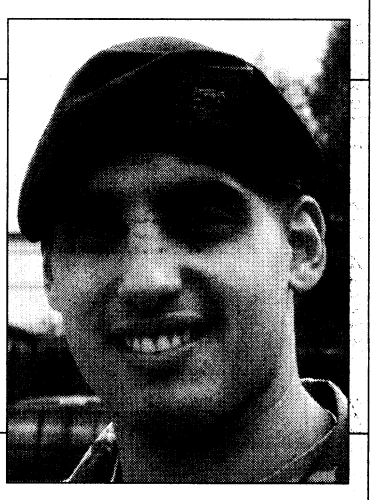
VARIOUS VOICES



What would it take to turn your home into a fantasy vacation spot?

Cpt. Eldridge Singleton, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I'd have a whirlpool, some tiki torches and a shag carpet."

Yvonne Wright, AAFES employee — "I just had a porch added to my house, and I would want to put a jacuzzi on that. I'd get a man servant to wait on me hand and foot, serve me tropical drinks and give me massages."



Staff Sgt. Frank Bartoe, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment — "I'd want about 2,000 more square feet of housing, a study fully furnished with books and computers, some nice new landscaping and a 2005, 745 BMW parked in the garage."

Spc. Melinda Bejarano, 14th Combat Support Hospital — "I'd like to change two of my bedrooms into game rooms, with a dart board and pool table, add a big hot tub to my bathroom and have a horse outside. And, I'd want my husband here — he's in Iraq."

Gillian Raw, family member — "My house would have to have shops in it, so I could browse at my leisure without having to drive to Exit 10. I would also like a really nice gymnasium with everything, minus the roaches and bugs they have here."

Spc. Shay Barlev, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "I would want a big screen TV, a good entertainment center and a comfortable couch."

Red Ribbon Week promotes drug awareness

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Positive choices and an awareness of the dangers of substance abuse will be at the forefront next week during Red Ribbon Week.

Activities throughout the week are designed to educate Soldiers and their families about the impact drugs have on individuals and their community and promote positive alternatives to substance use.

"I am so excited about this program," said Yvonne Wilbanks, Fort Benning's alcohol and drug control officer. "Drugs destroy the hopes and dreams of our Soldiers and impact mission readiness.

"Great leaders go beyond what is normally expected to provide their Soldiers with the education and motivation to stay drug free."

Wilbanks said the most effective tool, in the fight against substance abuse, is information.

"The Army, realizing the impact to the Soldier, family and mission, requires four hours of substance abuse education for every Soldier, every year, as part of a systematic plan to eliminate illegal drugs from our military community," Wilbanks said.

As part of that education, there will be a Red Ribbon Celebration at 1 p.m. Oct. 25 in Marshall Auditorium at Infantry Hall.

Paul Voorhees, owner of Ranger Joe's, and NFL football player, Jeremiah Castille, are the two keynote speakers who will share their experiences and methods of using positive choices to guide their decisions.

"Units sending their Soldiers to this program can document two hours of substance abuse prevention education with sign-in rosters," Wilbanks said.

The week's activities are not just for Soldiers, said Deborah Manning, education prevention coordinator for the Army Substance Abuse Program.

"We support (Red Ribbon Week) and try to have a program, every year, focused toward soldiers and civilian family members," Manning said. "We also try to have a program at every school,"

This year's school programs include Mr. (Magic) Mel Chaffee presenting "Positive Choices are Magical" at 9:30 a.m., Oct. 22, at McBride Elementary School.

Paul Voorhees will speak at 9:30 a.m., Oct. 25, to students at Wilson Elementary and Jeremy Castille will speak at 9:30 a.m., Oct. 27, at Faith Middle School.

"We want to draw the interest of the Soldiers and students, and Paul is one of the Soldiers' greatest friends," Manning said.

"As far as Jeremiah is concerned, there is someone here who was a friend of his family and we approached him. He does an awful lot of public speaking and we thought he would be interesting," she said.

Castille also has a local connection. He is a native of Phenix City and a graduate of the University of Alabama.

His background includes playing football in two Cotton Bowls, one Sugar Bowl and was named MVP in the 1982 Liberty Bowl.

He was inducted into the SEC Hall of Fame and the Senior Bowl Hall of Fame. Castille continued his career in the NFL, playing for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers from 1983-86 and the Denver Broncos from 1987-88.

He ended his NFL career after playing in Superbowl XXII with the Denver Broncos.

"This program will be a life-changing event for many individuals who are ready to hear the message that positive choices lead to a positive, productive life," Wilbanks said. "Drugs destroy the life and dreams of their victims."

For more information on Red Ribbon Week activities, contact the Army Substance Abuse Program at 545-1138 or 545-7462.

VA spouses face deadline

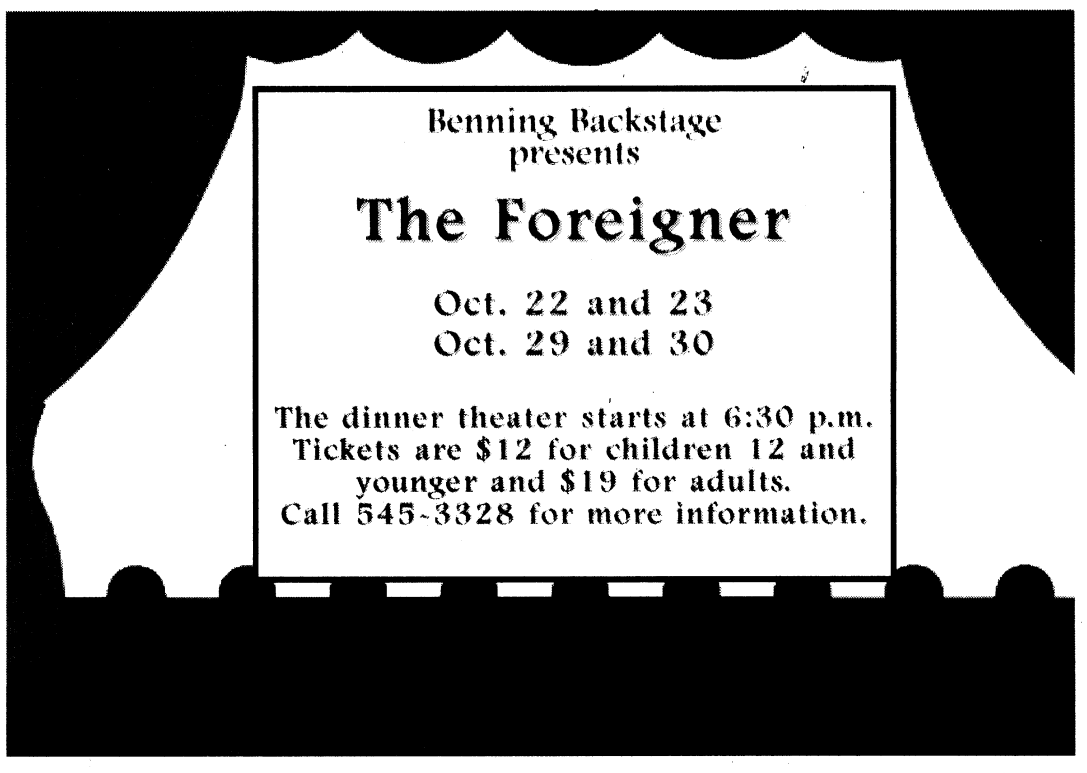
Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

A deadline is looming for surviving spouses of deceased veterans to have their dependency and indemnity compensation benefits reinstated.

Last year, President George W. Bush signed the "Veterans Benefits Act of 2003" which restores DIC entitlements, home loans and education benefits to surviving military spouses who remarry on or after their 57th birthdays.

The basic monthly rate of $967 and is increased if the surviving spouse is housebound or meets criteria common to those who need a home aide.

Before this most recent law was enacted, surviving spouses of soldiers who died because of a service-connected cause lost their DIC benefits from the Department of Veterans Affairs once they remarried. However, the benefits could be renewed if that marriage ended due to death, divorce or annulment.



Under the new law, surviving spouses who remarried after age 57 and before Dec. 16, 2003, have a limited time to apply for restoration of DIC.

Qualifying spouses have until Dec. 15 to apply for restoration of benefits. The one-year application period does not apply to other surviving spouses whose remarriage, on or after turning 57, followed enactment of the law.

Surviving spouses can submit a written request for restoration of DIC along with a statement of dependence, VA form 21-686c. The form is available online at www.vba.va.gov/pubs/forms/21-686c.pdf.

Applications should be mailed to the nearest VA office. To find the appropriate office go to www.va.gov and click on the facility locator.

For more information, call the VA at 1-800-827-1000. The address for the regional office is: 1700 Clairmont Road, Decatur, GA 30033

Shaw provides on-line customer service

New Web site offers more service options

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

As of Oct. 1, Shaw implemented a Web-based customer service link to make service order placement more convenient for customers, said Steve Dudley, Shaw resource manager.

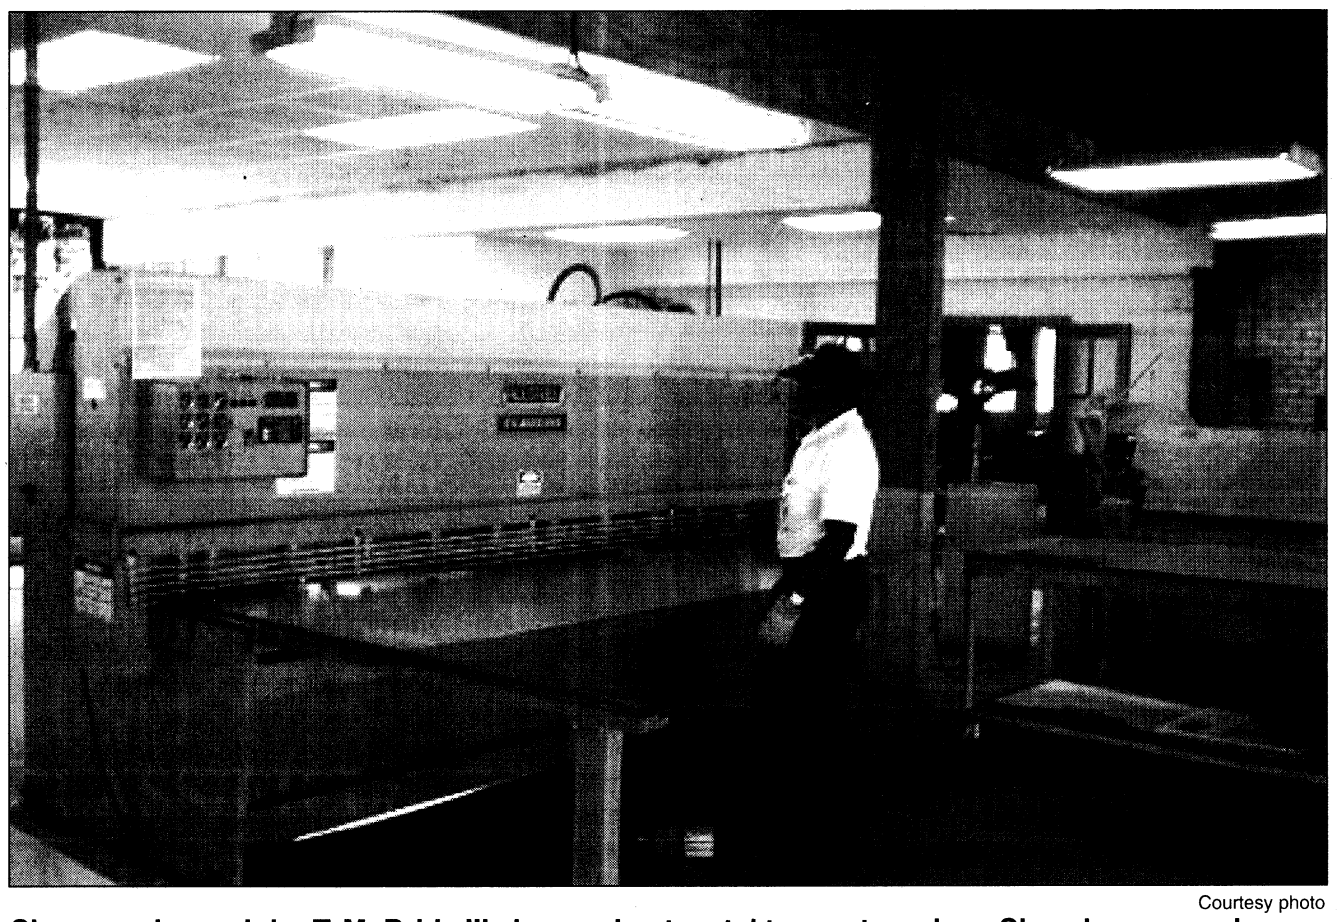
"This is going to be something that benefits Fort Benning families in housing areas that fall under Shaw and the Soldiers who live in the barracks," he said. "It will make it easier for the modern-day Soldier."

Although the Web site does not speed up the work order process, it does offer various sources of customer service information the entire Fort Benning community may use, Dudley said.

Among the services offered is the ability for Shaw customers to place service orders through the Web site.

"If you get home from work at 7 p.m., and your shower doesn't work, you don't have to wait until the following morning to place a service order," Dudley said. "All you have to do is get online, fill out a service order and submit it. You will get an e-mail notifying you of your service order number."

Every morning, Shaw downloads all service orders placed during non-business hours and assigns them service order numbers so customers may check the status of their order on the Web site. Customers who place orders over the phone, may also check for the status of their service orders on-line.



"This is a living document. We're adding more as we go," Dudley said. "We will continue to improve as we get more input from customers. One of the things we're going to add is the Self Help book which is given to Soldiers who move into housing."

The new Web site will also help Shaw with quality control. There's a survey customers may fill out if they have problems with the contractors, or if they think the contractors are doing a good job.

"The benefit of feedback is that it helps raise flags in areas we should be looking at," Dudley said. "We are a customer service oriented business. Our main concern is to meet the needs of our customers," he said.

Some of the Web site services include:

- Authorized Government Representatives — Authorized personnel may quickly and easily submit service orders and 4283 forms or check the statuses on-line.
- Quality control customer feedback — Submit a quality control customer feedback form on-line.
- Service order request status — Request a service order and or check the status of a current service order.
- Family Self-Help Services – Submit a family Self-Help class evaluation form, look up family Self-Help class telephone information and read the family housing handbook.
- New Residential Survey — Submit a new residential survey form.

Program helps families handle post deployment stress

Finances, intimacy big issues for Soldiers just back from combat

Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Money, intimacy and re-establishing family relationships are some of the issues facing families when servicemembers return after months away on the battlefields of Iraq and Afghanistan.

A team of mental health professionals from the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences' Center for the Study of Traumatic Stress has been looking at these issues through interviews and site visits to Defense Department communities as part of a health education campaign, "Courage to Care."

How spouses spent combat pay was raised as a major concern according to Col. Molly Hall of the psychiatry department at the university. This issue was raised by servicemembers and their spouses.

Center team member, Dr. Nancy Vineburgh, sat in on a reintegration class for spouses and soldiers at Fort Polk, La. Nearly 75 percent of the servicemembers brought their spouses. The topic came up in an interactive exercise in which two servicemen role-played a couple discussing an important issue.

"What have you done with my money? You spent it on the house? I wanted a car!" said one serviceman to the other.

Vineburgh, an assistant professor of psychiatry at the university, said such an issue becomes part of a larger issue of re-establishing a relationship of trust and mutual respect.

Vineburgh said the purpose of the reintegration class was to discuss the challenges of getting back into the family life and reconnecting with spouses.

Other issues voiced by returning war veterans centered on the tremendous transition from the regimented intense routine of war back into an environment that's quiet and safe.

"It's a transition back to life in the states with the family and all the demands that spouses and children present," Hall said. "Life is in some ways more ambiguous, less structured and less clear here, as opposed to life in Iraq and Afghanistan."

Hall said people don't typically think about potential problems associated with transitioning back into the family after being in combat.

"You kind of key on, 'It's wonderful to be back together again' the first day," she said. "But, about a week out, all of a sudden, you might have an issue where parents coming back encounter a family structure that's become very self-sufficient in that member's absence.

"Maybe the discipline has changed, maybe the roles have changed," Hall said.

"So there has to be kind of a reassembly of the unit."

Another problem arises when the spouse returns to work during the military member's absence, which leads to more independence, Hall said.

While the servicemember is off fighting a war, the parent left alone with children may have established different disciplinary styles, different bed times and different ideas of what children can and can't do, she said.

When the combatant returns home and reverts to the old way of doing things, the child might rebel and say, "That's not the way we're used to doing it," or "That's not the way Mom does it," Hall said.

Sleep disruption was also discussed as a problem in the reintegration class. Intimacy can become a big issue, Hall said.

"This is particularly true for combat veterans who are accustomed to being vigilant and constantly looking out for harm," she said. "When you're in that kind of state, if somebody comes up behind you and touches you casually, you can really have a difficult time with that. So one issue is just getting comfortable again with physical affection, just touching."

One of the most difficult issues expressed in the reintegration class was closeness. Many servicemen who recently returned faced the possibility of another deployment, and the uncertainty affected couples trying to re-establish their relationships, Vineburgh said.

Roadside bomb kills four Soldiers in Iraq

Unexploded ordinance poses problems for convoys

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Improvised explosive devices killed four Task Force Baghdad soldiers Oct. 12 and 13, and an operation in Mosul netted 23 suspects and foiled another bomb attack, according to 1st Cavalry Division news releases.

Three soldiers died in eastern Baghdad the night of Oct. 12 as the convoy they were riding in passed by an improvised explosive device. An IED killed a fourth soldier the following morning in western Baghdad. Both incidents are under investigation.

Improvised explosive devices are the biggest killer in Iraq. They range from relatively unsophisticated trip-wire trigger mines to elaborate radio-controlled devices.

Complicating the situation is the fact that insurgents are making devices from the hundreds of thousands of pieces of ordnance left over from the Saddam Hussein regime.

"There is no one solution to the problem," said a DoD official.

DoD is researching ways to counter the devices, both in country and in the United States. Officials said when a promising technology or procedure is developed, it is shared immediately among coalition forces in Iraq.

Soldiers and Marines in Iraq are developing tactics, techniques and procedures to combat the threat. Again, commanders share any ideas that work with all members of the coalition.

But good intelligence is the best defense against the threat. Officials in Iraq said that Iraqi citizens are turning in IED makers. Other Iraqis are telling coalition forces where the IEDs are being planted.

Near Mosul, Iraqi security forces detected an IED in a trash bag. An Iraqi explosive ordnance demolition team destroyed the device in place. There were no casualties.

Also in Mosul, Iraqi National Guardsmen and soldiers of the Stryker Brigade Combat Team detained 23 people wanted for anti-Iraqi activities during Oct. 12 raids.

A release from Iraq said that members of the 109th Iraqi National Guard Battalion conducted a cordon-and-search operation in Tal Afar and detained 18 people wanted for planning and conducting attacks against Iraqi security forces and multinational forces.

Members of the 101st Iraqi National Guard Battalion and Stryker Brigade troopers also conducted a joint cordon-and-search operation in the Mosul neighborhood of Sudeek. They detained five people wanted for planning and conducting mortar attacks against military bases and intimidating local civilians.

In Ramadi, Iraqi security forces – supported by U.S. Marines and soldiers – searched seven mosques Oct. 12.

The Iraqis found bomb-making materials and insurgent propaganda. They detained four suspects. "Our participation in these raids was limited to supporting Iraqi Security Forces," said Brig. Gen. Joseph F. Dunford Jr, 1st Marine Division assistant division commander in a press release.

Ramadi is in the Sunni Triangle and insurgents in the area have used the mosques as warehouses for weapons and explosives.

The insurgents use mosques to plan attacks and harbor terrorists. "These raids sent a clear message to the insurgents that they can no longer use mosques as safe havens," said Dunford.

Under the rules of war, mosques are granted protective status because of their religious and cultural significance.

However, once they are used for military purposes, they lose their protected status as places of religious worship.

Barracks: Will likely be in Harmony Church area

"The planning is still pretty generic, because of what we don't know yet," he said. "We know it's going to be a light infantry unit, but all that means is there won't be any armor or tracked vehicles. There is still a lot we don't know about the unit's equipment."

Another problem the team faces is the Department of the Army's changing guidelines.

"We are constantly shooting at a moving target," said John Brown, program manager, National Environmental Policy Act, Fort Benning.

Brown said plans for the project change about once a week on average, but they are always working toward the same goal of limiting the impact on natural resources and wildlife.

The project faced a major setback a few weeks ago.

"Two weeks ago, they told us the rules had changed," Chauvey said. "We were planning to build two-story buildings and (the Installation Management Agency) told us we had to make them one-story."

That will cause the project to spread, which creates a bit of competition for space between the 29th Infantry Regiment, which also wants to build in the area, and the new brigade combat team, Chauvey said. There is plenty of land available in the area, but they will have to work out an agreement between the units.

One of the other problems the team is faces is how to prepare for the possibility of permanent buildings in the area.

"We are supposed to plan for temporary buildings, because there is a (Base Realignment and Closure) study going on, so it's strictly temporary," he said.

He said the plans include provisions that will accomodate permanent buildings, which will save money in the event the unit is made permanent, but that is still up for question.

Another issue the team is tackling is support for the extra Soldiers.

Plans for the barracks project include a troop medical clinic and operations buildings, Chauvey said, but, the office spaces will be smaller than what is found on main post.

"For example, if a first sergeant is normally given 100 square feet of office space, he will only have about 50 in the modular buildings," he said.

AAFES and the Fort Benning Fire Department are also planning to accommodate the Soldiers.

There was a firehouse at Harmony church several years ago, and the fire department said they can put a modern facility in the same place as the old one, Chauvey said.

AAFES already has a shoppette in the area that may be expanded to accommodate the Soldiers who will be living in there, he said.

Chauvey said the unit could start sending Soldiers to Fort Benning by October 2005, which means a lot of people will be working overtime to get things ready.

"We are doing our best, but this is something new, not just for us but for the entire Army," Chauvey said. "We need to have the environmental decision by the first of the year."

The modular barracks that will be built on Fort Benning will likely resemble the ones recently constructed at Fort Stewart, shown here.

Retention: Keeps trained Soldiers

Hogue said the success in this year's retention initiative was crucial considering the situation the nation is in.

"We're a nation at war," he said. "Retention is essential in maintaining an adequate number of Soldiers for the Global War on Terrorism."

Retention also plays a large role in the success of Army transformation.

"The Army is working really hard at moving forward into transformation," Hogue said.

"That's going to improve retention even more."

The Army's transformation guarantees less back-to-back deployments for Soldiers, shorter and more spaced-out deployments, Hogue said.

"We have to retain the amount of Soldiers in the force to do this, but it will be easier once we get it going. It's going to be a positive thing."

Hogue also stressed the importance of the Soldiers who joined the Army after the terrorist attack on 9-11 and the Soldiers who have been in combat since 9-11.

"The Army now is the most experienced Army we've had in years as far as deployments and combats," he said. "Our credentials now are sky high, and it all goes back to the leadership. It's incredible how many well-trained Soldiers are still in the Army and that has to do with retention efforts."

The results for the fiscal 2004 retention mission are as follows:

- Initial-term Soldiers — Accomplished 110 percent
- Mid-career Soldiers, (second term Soldiers to 10 years of active service) — Accomplished 117 percent
- Career Soldiers with more than 10 years of active service — Accomplished 127 percent
- Reserve and National Guard Soldiers — 140 percent
- Fiscal year (Soldiers about to ETS from the Army) — Accomplished 111 percent.

The villagers were unable to say who was responsible for the attack, and some speculated there were snipers in the area.

Story and photos by Bridgett Siter

They say the pen is mightier than the sword, but I'm about to find out how it stacks up against an M-16. Armed with a reporter's notepad, a pen and a camera, I'm headed to Cactus Range, somewhere in the hinterlands of Fort Benning, to try my wits against a platoon of Kelley Hill Soldiers.

Their job is to establish a traffic control point at an intersection near the town of Balad, where Iraqi insurgents have gained a stronghold. Along the way, they'll encounter a mass casualty situation — an Iraqi National Guard recruiting station has been bombed.

And along the way, they'll encounter me. I'm a reporter. I've been tasked to interfere with the Soldiers' mission, or at the very least, coax them into revealing more than they should. My goal is to frustrate and confuse them till they divulge information they're not supposed to share.

This is a job I can sink my teeth into.

You see, in the real world, I'm a staff writer for The Bayonet, which is affiliated with Fort Benning's Public Affairs Office. That means we're on the home team. So role-playing the kind of reporter one loves to hate (think Geraldo) sounds like fun for a day.

The village, the insurgents, the bombing and the bloody victims — they're all fake, too. They're part of a massive training exercise for the Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment. They'll head back to Iraq early next year. I say "back," because nearly half of them were there with the 3rd Brigade when it led the initial assault on Baghdad.

But the Iraq these troops will see will be vastly different than the Iraq they knew, according to all accounts. Their mission is to rebuild and keep the peace, what there is of it. But they'll have to keep a sharp eye out for insurgents and their signature IEDs — improvised explosive devices — the kind you read about every day in the newspapers.

As Lt. Col. Roger Cloutier, the battalion commander, put it, on any given day, they may find themselves distributing food to hungry villagers one minute and warding off an angry mob the next.

That's the reality of it, and reality is what this training exercise is all about. Let's find out how these Soldiers perform under stress. Let's throw in a few surprises, like a pregnant Iraqi in distress and a conniving reporter hell-bent on making the front page even if she has to twist th

Loose lips still sink ships, even in the desert. Here are the Hammer Brigade standards for dealing with the media:

Releasable Information:

- Approximate friendly force strength figures.
- Friendly casualty figures, once confirmed.
- Information about targets already attacked.
- Generic description of air operations.
- Number of aerial missions flown.
- Operation code names.
- Service member's names, hometowns.

Non-releasable Information:

- Specific numbers of troops, aircraft, units, etc.
- Information regarding future, ongoing or cancelled operations.
- Technological breakthroughs. Classified remains classified.
- Force protection measures at the installation.
- Photography showing level of security on post.
- Rules of engagement.
- Information of intelligence collection activities, techniques or procedures.
- No photographs showing POWs or identifying item.
- Still or video imagery of custody operations.

The 10-day field exercise culminated in a mass-casualty drill last week. Here, a platoon responds to a car-bombing at an Iraqi National Guard recruiting station. Their job was to stabilize the scene, evacuate casualties and move on to the nearby town of Balad, where insurgents had gained a stronghold. Each platoon followed suit, rotating through the three LFX scenarios, which included the establishment of a traffic control point at a nearby intersection. There the Soldiers were met by a hostile crowd.

So I direct my questions at anyone and everyone.

"What happened here?" I ask louder. "Who did this? Was it friendly fire?"

Naturally, this catches the attention of the Soldiers working on my victim.

"Ma'am, you'll have to back away," they tell me firmly. "We're working here. Step back now."

Good job, guys. I move on.

I spy a Soldier walking across the field, and I approach him like one might approach an old friend on the street.

"Can you believe this? It's crazy," I say. "What happened?"

"Umm, a car bomb, I think. I'm not sure," he says, and he eyes me uncertainly.

"Who did it?" I asked, trying to keep pace. My escort is on my heels.

"Who are you?" the Soldier asks.

"I'm a reporter. I'm, uh, embedded with your unit. What's your name?"

"Are you with The Bayonet?" he asks.

Hmm. I wasn't prepared for that one. I wing it.

"Yep, The Bayonet. I'm covering this," I say, waving my hand for effect. "This" could mean the LFX, or it could mean the bombing. I can see his confusion. I could be a "real" reporter, covering the training exercise for the post newspaper, or I could be part of the drill. In which case, I'll report back to his superiors if he says something he shouldn't.

I'll encounter this same confused reaction over and over today, but I figure it's not necessarily a bad thing. I can see immediately that the Soldiers — those through the training and those role-playing — aren't quite sure how to handle me. Many of them know me as a Bayonet reporter; they assume it's safe to talk, but they're cautious. They've been trained to be wary of reporters, after all, and this is a training exercise. Most, like this fellow, opt to err on the side of caution.

"I can't talk right now. I have to work," he says, and he leaves me in the dust.

This time, I'm approached by a platoon spokesman. He pulls me to the side, and offers to answer my questions as best he can. I've been effectively taken out of play, I suppose, but I've got nothing to lose, so I reverse tactics. No more mister nice guy.

"What unit are you with?" I ask him. "How many Soldiers are here?"

"We're with the U.S. Army, ma'am, and I can't give you an exact figure."

"Who did this?"

"I can't say for sure, but we're trying to determine that right now."

"So it could've been friendly fire?"

"No ma'am, it was most definitely a car bomb planted by an insurgent. Americans did not do this."

This continues for several minutes, until the area has been secured and cleared. I keep trying to elicit "non-releasable information," based on a list of "media dos and don'ts" distributed to all 3rd Infantry Division Soldiers.

Occasionally, I get lucky. But for the most part, I'm proud to say, the Kelley Hill troops know the standards. They seldom said anything that could get them in trouble or compromise the mission.

The rest of the exercise — the dealing with casualties and insurgents and maintaining crowd control — I can't say just how they did. But from my limited perspective, they succeeded in a big way at blocking my efforts to ferret information.

Obviously, I failed. I didn't make the front page.

Staff Sgt. Kris Lovingood was responsible for the moulage. "Smith, do you want a head wound?" he was heard to say. And: "I think I could break your leg. I mean break it off completely." Here's proof he could do just that. The Soldier's leg is bent at the knee and buried. His shoe and sock were put on a fake leg.

Troops find time for a little horsin' around

Staff Sgt. Susan German
122nd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Trading computers and badges for saddles and spurs provided a welcome break for troopers of the 1st Cavalry Division's Horse Cavalry Detachment working with Saddam Hussein's former horses at the Baghdad Zoo.

After months of guarding the division headquarters building, the Soldiers recently had the opportunity to get back in the saddle while educating Iraqi horse handlers on care and training techniques.

Before their deployment to Iraq, detachment Soldiers performed at parades, rodeos and fairs throughout the United States. Daily duties included maintaining their horses and mules and equipment.

Some of the Soldiers are also trained saddle makers, farriers, boot makers and veterinary technicians.

Staff Sgt. Robert Bussell, Headquarters deputy commandant, 1st Cavalry Division, is a saddle maker. The experience he gained while growing up around horses on his grandparents' farm in eastern Texas, and his time at Fort Hood, lends credence to the advice he passes on to Iraqi veterinarians and caretakers. Because the horses belong to the state, it's up to the Iraqis to make the decisions on their care and handling, Bussell said.

"There's a lack of knowledge on some of the modern equine skills, such as medications, training techniques and doctrine that can be used for the animals," Bussell said. "We're trying to get them as much information as we can to make a better future for the animals and the people here."

At one time, the horses numbered nearly 100, but after the war, only 19 were housed at the zoo.

Veterinarian Wasseem Wali has worked at the zoo for a year and with the Americans for the past six or seven months. Although his specialty is caring for the lions, he's learning about horses. He's even pitches in to assist the stable help when necessary.

The horses were originally stabled at Camp Victory, with subsequent moves to Abu Ghraib, the University of Baghdad and their most recent home, the zoo.

While a horse is not a typical zoo animal, Saddam's horses are biding their time until more appropriate facilities can be built. Long term plans include a 100-stall stable, an exercise area and an equine education center in Baghdad.

"After these stables are built, the situation will be better," Wali said. "The future will be good."

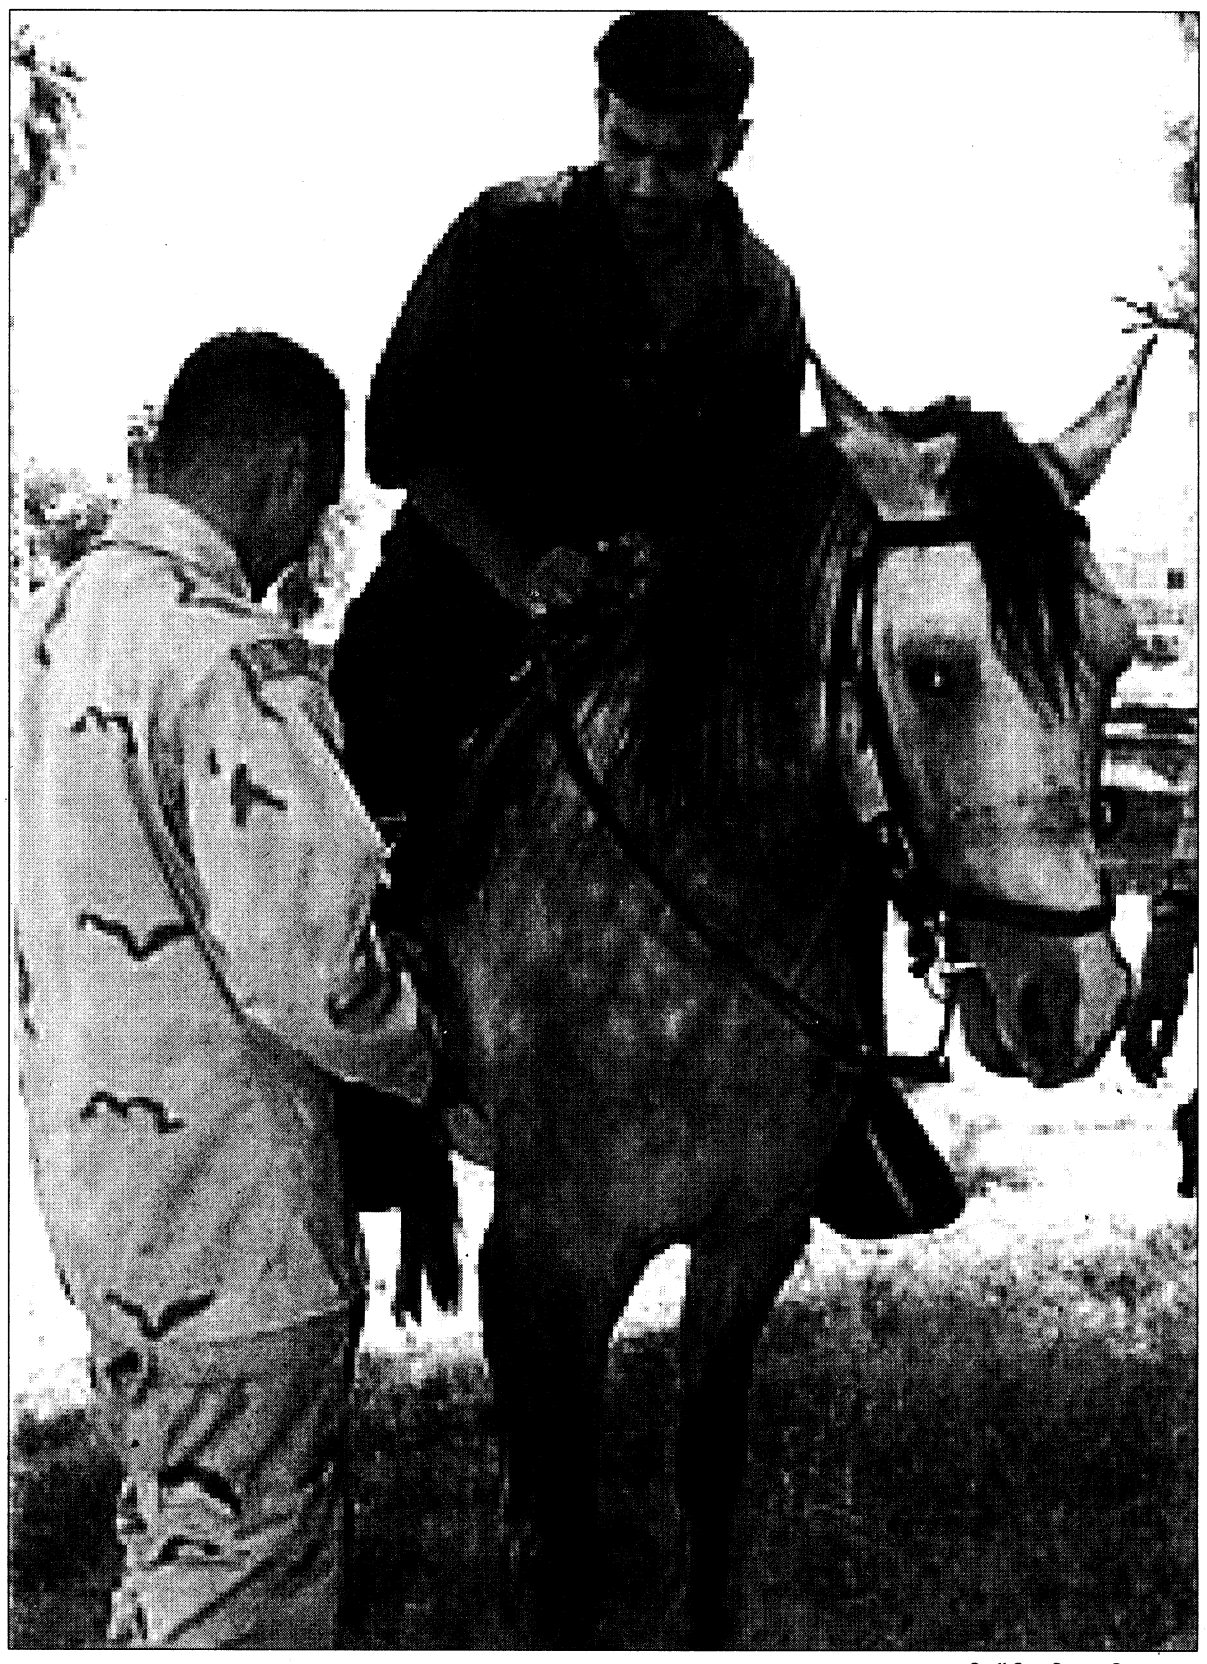
The Iraqis pored over horse-themed magazines Bussell brought with him, pointing at pictures of horses and equipment that interested them. Pictures are good when a language barrier impedes communication.

Detachment Soldiers make the trip to the zoo several times a week and are getting to know the horses better.

"Because there is a language barrier, it's best sometimes that we just get hands on for ourselves — throw a saddle on them, get on and find out what level they've been put through," Bussell said.

On this trip, they brought along a saddle and bridle. Riding the horses was a bonus, an activity they hadn't enjoyed since deploying earlier this year.

The Soldiers built pens for two stallions that were previously tied to trees.



Maad Amer Mohammad, manager of the original Genetic Arab Horses Generating Center, has worked in the center for more than 10 years and wants to see more horses.

"By doing that, we can help other animal educators have horses with original Arab characteristics, especially the male horses," Mohammad said.

The Soldiers voiced their praise for a dappled gray stallion named Al-Adul, describing him as beautiful, strong and magnificent — a good horse for breeding purposes.

For breeding horses with traditional Arab features, the Iraqis preferred a smaller stallion with a narrow dished face.

"The horses are important to the Iraqi people, especially Arabic horses," Wali said. "Their history is with the Arabic people."

Sgt. Scott Woodbury, farrier for the 1st Cavalry Division's Horse Cavalry Detachment, adjusts the stirrup straps before veterinarian Wasseem Wali rides 7-year-old stallion Al-Adul.

Conference to benefit military students

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Military students have special needs. That's what a study by the Military Child Education Coalition found several years ago.

And to increase awareness of the problems facing military students, Fort Benning's school liaison officer has set up a training conference for Oct. 20 and 21.

"The schools need training — ongoing training on the military lifestyle and military issues," said Dewayne Baldwin.

Baldwin said the training conference is coming at a critical time because of the upcoming deployment and the activation of a new brigade on post.

"The training is geared for schools off post to get them up-to-date on what to expect," he said. The conference's objective is to empower primarily middle and high school guidance professionals with different tools and strategies to help ease the transition problems faced by military students.

The conference represents the first of a three-phase Transition Counselor Institute program. In this training phase, Baldwin said counselors from off-post schools will get an introduction to the MCEC and TCI programs and how to share them with their school district. But, more importantly, counselors will learn about Fort Benning's military lifestyle and culture, transition programs and transition challenges.

The post commander, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley will deliver the opening remarks at the professional conference and Fort Benning Schools superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen will be the keynote speaker during the working lunch.Baldwin said the majority of the conference's attendees are counselors from Columbus area schools. Five Fort Benning educators, who have already had the training, will also attend. If the conference goes well, Baldwin would like to hold another phase one training in the spring, as well as a phase two course. In phase two, counselors will get more training on the military lifestyle and delve deeper into understanding the social and emotional needs of military schoolchildren. Because military children attend anywhere from six to nine schools by the time they graduate from high school, Baldwin has set up a parent workshop on Oct. 20 from 6 to 8 p.m. at Faith Middle School.

The workshop is entitled School Transitions: The Essential Ingredients. MCEC professionals will talk to parents about moving to new schools, testing and assessment, preparing for college and social and emotional support.

Afghanistan presidential elections make history

Combined Forces Command Afghanistan

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The presidential elections in Afghanistan Oct. 9, were a "milestone" in the history of the troubled country, said coalition spokesman Maj. Scott Nelson in Kabul today.

Nelson said Afghans "demonstrated to all on Saturday their powerful courage and resolve in the face of terrorist propaganda and threats of intimidation and violence."

He said the success of the election is a testament to the will and perseverance of the individual Afghan citizen.

"We can all be nothing if not hugely impressed by the enthusiasm the Afghan people displayed," he said. "Terrorists suffered a resounding defeat at the hands of millions of Afghans voting for freedom," the Nelson.

United Nations officials estimate about eight million Afghans voted in the election. More than 10 million had registered. About 80 percent of the ballots have been collected, and others are in transit. The counting process has begun.

Nelson said the Afghan police and Afghan National Army deserve much of the credit for the election going off as smoothly as it did. While Taliban and al Qaeda sympathizers wanted to disrupt voting, they were unsuccessful, thanks in part to the effectiveness of the security forces and coalition troops.

A Joint Electoral Management Body employee explains how to properly fill out a voting ballot.

"The government of Afghanistan, the Joint Electoral Management Body, the International Security and Assistance Force and coalition forces all contributed to this successful day," Nelson said.

"There are so many election day anecdotes demonstrating the Afghan people's commitment to peace, whether it was people across the country wearing their best clothes to vote, or the women of Konduz who refused to move when a rocket landed 200 meters from where they were waiting to vote," Nelson said during a briefing. "To leave, they said, would mean the rockets, and the people who fired them, would win. These women would defeat them by staying and voting."

There were reports of voter lines stretching 2.5 kilometers in the Maruf district of Kandahar — once a Taliban stronghold.

"Witnesses saw elderly people walking and being ferried in goat carts, amputees on crutches in droves moving towards the polling booths and then, late in the evening, more elderly adults running to beat the poll closing deadline to cast their vote," he said.

In Central Afghanistan, voters began arriving at a polling station at 3 a.m., in cold temperatures and a foot of snow, and waited for almost four hours for the station to open, Nelson said.

"The overwhelming success of this election is a strategic defeat for the Taliban and al Qaeda, and is a turning point for Afghanistan and the Afghan people," he said.

"This election confirmed that a peaceful political process based on democracy and freedom will always trump terrorist threats and intimidation," he said.

Internet provides 30,000 ways to connect with deployed Soldiers

Mark Hooter
Army News Services

WASHINGTON — Every day in cities, towns and rural outposts throughout America and around the world, hundreds of people sit down at their computers to carry out one mission: they head to the "To Our Soldiers" Web site.

"This site represents a viable communication tool for the general public to reach Soldiers while deployed or at their home station assignment," said Lt. Col. Todd Livick, community relations team chief with the Office Chief of Public Affairs, Community Relations and Outreach Division.

The Army.mil Web team first envisioned "To Our Soldiers" a week after the ground war started in Iraq, said Donnie Steele, Army.mil technical director.

"Department of Defense and all the services were getting calls from the public about how individuals could show support for our troops — a Web-based letter writing capability immediately accessible from link on the Army Homepage just made sense," Steele said.

The site, which has been accepting well wishes for 18 months, receives about 35,000 visitors per month. On Oct.1, the 30,000th message was posted to the Web site, addressed to a Soldier with the 4th Infantry Division.

"Perhaps the best part about the site is that it provides the opportunity to thank today's Soldiers in real-time measurements. It enables the general public to reach out to Soldiers and provides them the capability to voice their opinion," Livick said.

The Army community relations team posts several dozen messages per day, from supporters in countries from Iceland to Australia, and from Iraq to Afghanistan. In many cases, the screening staff has attempted to connect friends and family members with deployed loved ones, considering the restriction on posting senders' e-mail and mailing addresses.

Initially, there was some concern about the site being used as a means to lash out at Soldiers or the administration, Steele said. However, there were only about 30 negative messages out of thousands sent the first year, he said, and those were mainly wives venting their frustration at their Soldiers being deployed.

The site went live in April 2003 to meet a demand for ways to support Soldiers, according to an officer who was involved in the development.

"There were several reasons we wanted to have this site, but primarily we were overwhelmed with the requests from the hundreds and thousands of calls we received just prior to and after the start of the ground war in Iraq," said Lt. Col. Dan Williams, who was the community relations chief at the time.

Several months after overseeing the site's implementation, Williams was able to see and use the site himself, as a deployed Soldier on the receiving end of these messages.

"Overall, the tone of the messages being posted have been overwhelmingly supportive of the Soldiers' role in the Global War on Terrorism," Livick said.

Earlier this year, Tammi Ketteman of Ohio, whose son was deployed, wrote a tribute and submitted "A Letter from Mom" to the site. The community relations staff turned the composition over to the U.S. Army Field Band and Soldiers Chorus, whose arrangers set the letter to music and performed a dramatic reading at a concert near Ketteman's hometown.

"The Soldiers appreciate the notes and words of encouragement. Many times I have read the entry and am delighted to see the sender is from Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, and other parts of the world. Overwhelmingly these notes are messages of support, appreciation, and encouragement," Williams wrote.

Those wishing to show their support for Soldiers deployed around the world are encouraged to log on to www.army.mil/toursoldiers/ and submit a message.

Aspiring teachers flock to Fort Benning

Hone skills with military students

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Melissa House

Columbus State University senior Cathrein Sexton goes over a rubric with Dexter kindergartner Jonathan Fish in class Oct. 13. Sexton is a student intern who works with Amy Childers' class two days a week. While at Dexter, Sexton has the opportunity to practice lesson planning and teaching before entering the student teaching program next semester.

There are some new faces in the classrooms at Fort Benning's schools these days — lots of them.

The faces belong to the future of education, and this semester, they belong to a crop of student teachers and students doing field work from Columbus State University and Troy University.

Jaynie Nesmith, director of curriculum for Fort Benning Schools, said post schools usually host 10 to 12 student teachers and even more who spend only a few hours in classrooms each week gaining field experience.

Nesmith said the post has agreements with area universities to place students in classrooms with military children.

"They want to come here because of the diversity of our students," Nesmith said, "and because our test scores show that our students are getting a good education."

And while the college students gain valuable teaching experience, Nesmith said the schools benefit as well, learning what's new in the education field and what's coming.

Many of the students who request to do their student teaching at Fort Benning, apply for teaching positions once they've graduated.

"It's exciting to find people who want to come back to us," Nesmith said. "Some of our best teachers did their undergraduate training here and then came back."

One of those teachers is Amy Childers, a third-year Kindergarten teacher at Dexter, who now teaches in the same classroom she did her student teaching in. This semester, she's serving as a mentor for a student intern from CSU.

Dexter has nine student interns, all from two of CSU professor Dr. Vikky Collins' courses — Language Arts and Reading Content in Social Studies.

Collins likes the partnership with Dexter and the excellent reputation the Department of Defense schools have. Her students are at Dexter on Monday and Wednesday mornings, and bring their experiences into her CSU class on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

"This is their final block before student teaching," Collins said. "It's a really critical time for them."

CSU senior Cathrein Sexton is interning for Childers and hoping to return to Dexter next semester as a student teacher.

"I love it here," Sexton said after presenting a lesson Oct. 13 and receiving her evaluation from Collins, who visited Dexter to see her students in action. Sexton's lesson involved making glyphs of Christopher Columbus' ships with the Kindergarteners, tying social studies together with language arts. When the children finished, they used a rubric to make sure they had everything included in their finished product.

Childers said she wished she had had the same field experience opportunity before she did her student teaching.

"Having a student intern has enabled me to ensure all students are learning new and effective strategies for language arts and social studies development," she said.

That fits right in with the program's goal of high student achievement, said Dexter principal Vicki Rogers.

The reciprocal partnership benefits both military students and their student teachers, student interns and regular classroom teachers.

"We are learning from them," Rogers said, "in a collaborative effort in the teacher preparation process." In turn, post schools get help with their school improvement plans.

Dexter gave the student interns a "real life teaching experience" when the fire alarm rang. Intern Cindy Green was in the middle of her supervised lesson with her CSU professor.

"Although it was scary," Green said, "the children were excellent in completing the drill and returning to the lesson I was being graded on."

For the first time in several years, Troy University placed student teachers on post at Wilson elementary. The Troy program works differently from CSU's — there's no intern program and student teachers split their semester in half.

Wilson's two student teachers started the semester in first-grade classes and move soon to fifth-grade classes.

"This gives them a wide spectrum of what to expect in the elementary grades," Wilson principal Phyllis Parker said. Student teachers are placed in classrooms with teachers who have volunteered to be mentors and have completed a mentor/teacher training program. Parker said she's noticed a lot more is expected of student teachers now than in the past, especially with technology.

"I like that," Parker said. "It really helps our (military) students."

New option for high school kids

Post students can attend next year

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning students have another school to add to the roster of "choice" high schools.

Upcoming freshmen and sophomores can opt to attend Chattahoochee County High School next year.

Already, 50 freshmen from Cusseta have started the school year as CCHS Cougars, though they share a campus with the elementary and middle school students until the new high school is completed.

Classes are expected to start in the new facility, on Highway 26, when the 2005 school year begins in July.

Chattahoochee students will be on a modified schedule. Each session will be six weeks long, with optional remediation in between for students at risk of failing.

"We're excited about the new school, about the year-round schedule — about the whole picture," said Dewayne Baldwin, Fort Benning's school liaison officer, who has been working closely with Chattahoochee County school officials to develop a program and curriculum he feels is ideally suited for the military student.

"The whole concept is geared toward the Fort Benning child," Baldwin said.

"They've worked hard to make it competitive with Muscogee County Schools, and we're confident it'll stack up against any of them."

That wasn't always the case. Chattahoochee County hasn't had a high school in more than 30 years.

But with elementary and middle school test scores as good as and better than most local schools, Chattahoochee County school officials decided nearly four years ago to get back in the business of educating high schoolers.

They've developed a program "rich in technology, with student needs as the top priority," said Abdur Hassan, assistant superintendent of Chattahoochee County Schools.

Currently, all freshmen have a desk-top computer in every classroom, and Hassan expects the new school will soon be without textbooks completely. All work will be done on computers. Advanced placement classes will be offered.

The majority of Fort Benning high schoolers actually live in Chattahoochee County. The Muscogee/Chattahoochee county line runs along the Upatoi River, so housing areas south of the Upatoi are zoned for Chattahoochee.

But under the agreement worked out between the two school systems, all Fort Benning students will have a choice, regardless of which side of the river they live on.

"We want to be a team player," Hassan said. "We know our program will be the choice once parents understand what we're all about."

The school will offer a full athletic program, though that may take a few years to develop, Baldwin said.

"Fort Benning has offered them the use of all our athletic facilities — everything — so they'll get their sports programs up and running soon," he said. "Obviously, for the next couple years, it'll only be JV."

Fort Benning students can register for the new school at the school administration office in Cusseta.

Students and parents interested in learning more about the school can speak to Baldwin and Hassan at a Town Hall meeting Tuesday, at 7 p.m. at White Elementary School.

The postwide yard sale is scheduled for 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Oct. 23.

The biannual event is the only time Fort Benning residents can host a yard sale at their quarters without a sale permit from the Community Life Office.

Yard sale signs may be posted at intersections, but they should not be attached to telephone poles or traffic signs. All signs must be removed immediately after the sale.

Yardsale leftovers can be dropped off at the Thrift Shop between 2 and 4 p.m., said Rhonda Smith, manager.

Donations — clean, undamaged and in "saleable" condition — should be taken to the back of the shop on Ingersoll Street.

Many of these items will be donated to the Red Cross for families in the tricommunity who find themselves in dire straits, including those who suffer fire or flood damage, Smith said.

The postwide yard sale typically draws crowds of hundreds from the tricommunity, so shoppers are asked to drive with extra care in housing areas, and they should expect to walk a great deal in congested areas.

Housing policies and regulations, such as parking restrictions, remain in effect during the sale.

The next postwide yardsale is tentatively scheduled for May.

Post gathers to Help the 'Hooch

Volunteers work together, clean up river

It was chilly, early and the Friday morning of a four-day weekend. Yet more than 120 volunteers gathered Oct. 8 at 8 a.m. in front of Meloy Hall to Help the 'Hooch.

Help the 'Hooch is a program sponsored by the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission and Keep America Beautiful, a national nonprofit public service organization dedicated to litter prevention, recycling and beautification efforts, said Chris Slembarski, environmental awareness trainer with the Fort Benning Directorate of Public Works.

"This is a community project designed to help keep the riverside clean and attractive," Slembarski said.

Trash bags and gloves were handed out to volunteers, before they set out in caravans to destinations along the banks of the Chattahoochee River.

The volunteers split up into teams and covered different areas of the river.

More than 30 Soldiers and the command group from the 36th Engineer Group participated as a team.

"This is a good unit, post and community cohesion project," said Spc. Jazmine Brewington, from the 36th Engineer Group's 63rd Engineer Company. "It's good to clean up the environment, but it would be better if people just cleaned up after

More than 120 volunteers gathered for the event, including a group of more than 30 Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group. The clean-up began at 8:30 a.m. and ended with a picnic for all the volunteers at Uchee Creek.

Community Life reps are liaisons, not 'lawn police'

NCOs make big changes, lead from front

Tawny Archibald Campbell

It has been months since Arianna Lay could open her hall closet without having to cover her nose.

Mold, caused by moisture from a leak in her roof, has flourished in the dark, damp space. It's covering the ceiling and moving down a wall.

"It started in July," Lay said.

"That was when the mold showed up, and it has progressively gotten worse."

Lay, who lives in Indianhead Terrace, filed a work order with the contractor in her area. The repairman came out, fixed the leak and told her he would be back later to fix the mold. He never came.

"I put in three to four work orders since then," said Lay, who is seven months pregnant with her sixth child. "Last time I called, in the beginning of September, they told me there was no funding to fix the mold until November."

On Tuesday, Lay contacted her Community Life representative. He immediately came to her home and assessed the situation.

"They said there was a problem that needed to be taken care of right away, and it would be done by the end of the week," Lay said.

"I knew I could go to my husband's chain of command with the problem, but I didn't know about the Community Life people.

I thought they were the yard patrol and dealt with neighborhood disputes. I didn't know they would help with housing problems," she said.

"I didn't know there was a third party who could say, 'There's a problem, fix it.'"

That's a misconception many people have about the Community Life program, said Master Sgt. Kelvin Boyett, Fort Benning's Community Life OIC.

"A lot of people think we are the lawn police, and that's a myth," he said. "We are are liaisons for the residents."

Master Sgt. Donald Brown, Community Life NCOIC, said residents are supposed to do all they can, through the proper channels, to resolve any issues they have, but when they still can't fix a problem they can go to Community Life for assistance.

"A misconception is that we handle any and all situations," Brown said. "Some are outside our realm. We are not family counselors, therapists or MP's, but we can tell you where to get help."

Community Life is responsible for providing the six Fort Benning communities with a forum to voice opinions and talk about community issues.

Town Hall meetings are hosted each quarter with the garrison commander and command sergeant major, director of the Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation, military police, housing representatives, Army Community Services, recycling representatives, contractors and others on hand to answer questions and address specific issues.

ASK THE JUDGE

Capt. Claudine Andola
Chief of Claims

Question: I live on post and suffered some damage to my personal property as a result of hurricane Ivan. What can I do to recover losses I incurred, and what losses will be covered?

Answer: If you have either automobile insurance or renter's insurance, you need to call your insurance company and file a claim with them as soon as possible.

If you do not have insurance, or if your insurance carrier does not cover the entire amount of your loss, then your claim may be covered under the United States Army Claims Services. You may file a claim in the Claims Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate (OSJA), Building 5, Vibbert Ave, which is located in between Doughboy Stadium and the Commanding General's residence.

Claims submitted for damage incurred to personal property on a military installation may be paid under Army Regulation 27-20.

Chapter 11 provides for damage to or loss of property due to hurricanes. The following is a step-by-step list of things you should do in order to get your claim paid as soon as possible.

Assess the Damage

The first thing you need to do is assess the damage to your property. Are there tree branches on your car? Did your lawn furniture blow into something? Did you lose power? Are your electrical appliances working? Did a power outage result in food spoilage? Did you suffer water damage inside your quarters? Once you have determined what your losses are, you will need to document them as specifically as you can. One of the best ways to document your damage is to take photographs of the damage.

Even if the damage is not evident in the photo, a picture will show the item to which your claim refers.

Obtain Estimates of Repair

Then you will need to obtain an estimate of repair for the item(s) damaged. Estimates will probably be required by your private insurance carrier, and they are also required if you submit a claim in the Claims Division. In the case of electrical items, a repair firm's statement should be obtained to show the loss occurred as a result of a power surge during a storm. In areas subject to frequent thunderstorm or power fluctuations, such as Columbus, claimants are expected to use a surge suppressor, to protect delicate items such as computers, VCR, DVD players and televisions.

File Insurance Claims

Then you need to consider whether you have any personal insurance that will cover the loss. Renter's insurance, automobile insurance or any other similar policy may cover your losses. If you have insurance, you should file a claim with the company as soon as possible, and include a copy of the estimates for repair that you have already obtained. If you do not have outside insurance then you may initiate a claim with the OJSA Claims Division.

Complete Claims Forms

To file a claim in the OSJA Claims Division for your loss you will need to complete DD Forms 1842 and 1844. This claim will be the cost of your deductible, and/or whatever part of the claim your private insurance carrier fails to cover.

Once your claim is filed with the Fort Benning Claims Division, and it is determined that your claim meets the requirements of the Army Regulation, the claims office will adjudicate your claim.

You may receive payment either for full replacement or partial replacement, depending upon a number of factors, including the month and year when the item was purchased, the cost of repair, and the current cost of replacement.

You may obtain DD Forms 1842 and 1844, at our office or on our website at http://www-benning.army.mil/SJA.

The claim forms will ask you to itemize each item of personal property you are claiming was damaged by the hurricane; briefly describe the type of damage incurred, and list the replacement or repair cost.

For example, if you are claiming that food spoiled in your refrigerator as a result of the power outage, you will need to list each item that spoiled and the replacement cost.

If you have furniture that suffered water damage, then you would list the furniture, and submit photos of the items, along with an estimate of repair.

Once you have the claims forms, estimates of repair, and photos of your damaged items, you may file your claim in the Claims Division located within the OSJA in Building 5 on Vibbert Ave.

Claims for damages incurred to off-post housing that are not leased or owned by the government cannot be paid.

We are open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. For answers to similar questions, you may call the Claims Division at 545-2285, or refer to our Web site at http://www-benning.army.mil/SJA.

Housing: NCOs improve services

Every resident is given notice of the upcoming meetings, but Boyett said attendance is greatly lacking.

Less than 10 people attended the the last meeting, in Bouton Heights/Davis Hill, where 814 units house between 1500-1800 residents.

"On average, we have between two to five percent of the residents attend," Boyett said.

Boyett and Brown are new to their positions, having taken over in August and September. However, they have already started to make changes in the structure of the program.

"We've brought structure and discipline back into Community Life," Boyett said.

"We've put a standard operating procedure in place, established training schedules and physical training for NCOs. Basically we've made NCOs do NCO business again."

Boyett and Brown hope people will notice the visibility of their community NCOs.

"We want to be very visible to assist residents, so Soldiers and spouses will feel welcome at Fort Benning and want to live in on-post housing," Brown said.

Boyett also wants the brigade sponsoring units to become more involved.

"If I could get one or two words across, it's that here at Community Life, it would help us tremendously if the squad leaders, platoon leaders, first sergeants and commanders would drive through the Soldiers' neighborhoods on some type of rotation and see how the Soldiers live," Boyett said.

"Generally speaking, I don't think this is taking place, and it would help to beautify the area and just help them see how the families live."

With the Residential Communities Initiative coming on board in January of 2006, Boyett and Brown aren't sure how the Community Life program will change, but they plan to work hard over the next year to make Fort Benning's housing areas attractive.

"When they gave me this position, they said it would be a lot of responsibility to bear, and it's living up to that," Boyett said.

"It's hard, but we want people to know that above all, we care — not only Community Life, but post commanders care."

'HOOCH: Project cleans-up river

themselves."

Col. James Brooks, 36th Engineer Group commander, said it's important for Soldiers to participate in events like Help the 'Hooch.

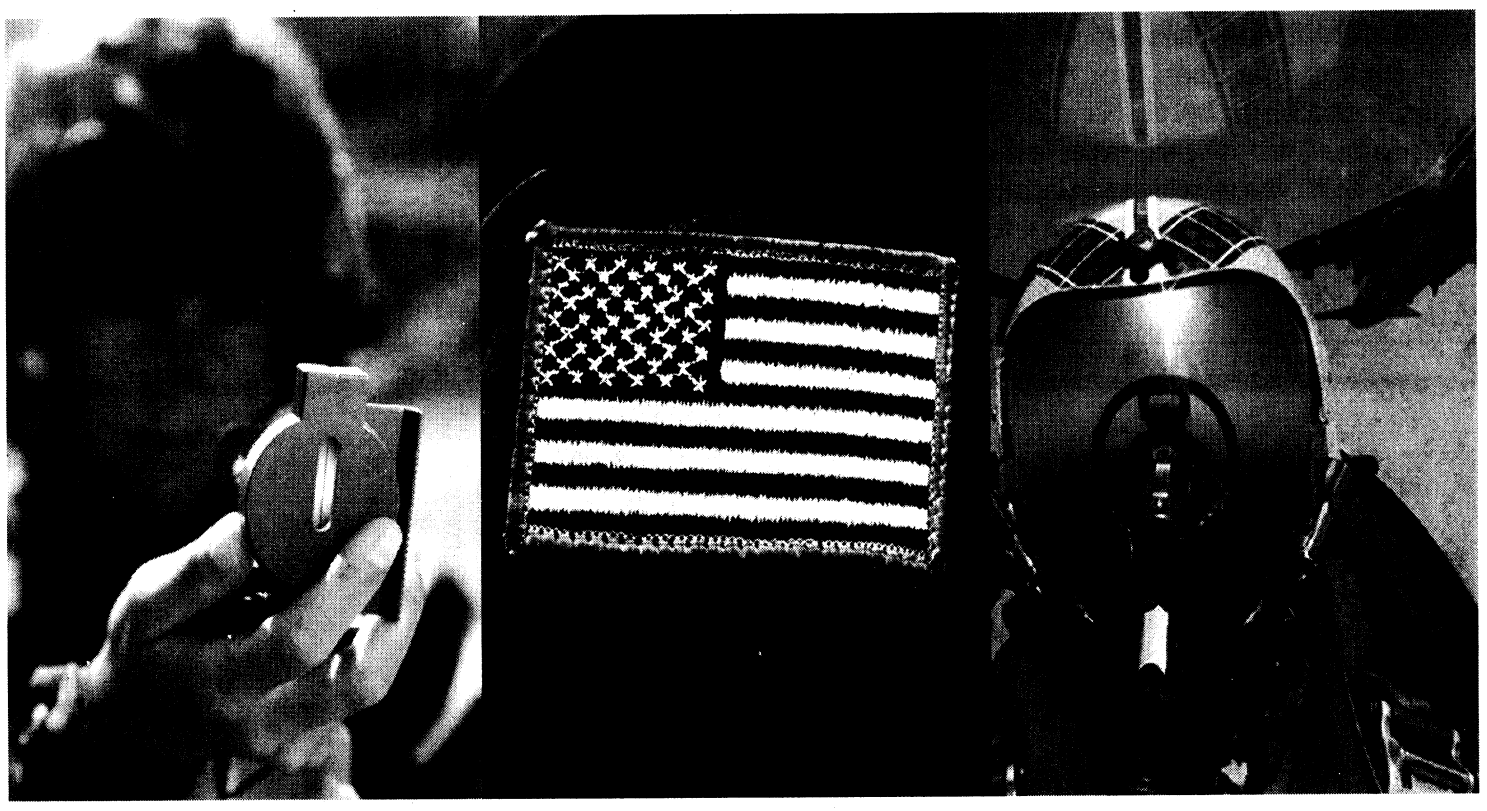
"This is our community and it's our responsibility to help clean and maintain it," he said.

The 36th Engineer Group took care of the Pet Cemetery area along the river, which Brooks said is known to be one of the worst.

"My troops are good about trying to help the installation and the community," Brooks said. "Whether it's clean up, self-help construction projects or House of Heroes, these troops are proud to use the skills they have as engineers and logistitians to help improve the community."

Other units participating in the event were the 13th Corps Support Group, the Infantry Training Brigade, the CONUS Replacement Center and the 249th Medical Company (Air Ambulance).

As Slembarski predicted, volunteers gathered a lot of dirty, muddy trash as well as piles of sheet metal, old chairs, tables and pipes of all shapes and sizes. Fort Benning Material Recovery Facility employees volunteered their time to pick up all the trash and recyclables collected during the day.



Last year, 200 Fort Benning volunteers collected more than 350 bags of trash from the banks of the Chattahoochee River. This year the volunteers gathered more than 200 bags of trash.

The volunteers ended the day with a picnic at Uchee Creek sponsored by the Commissary, a local Subway sandwich shop and the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission.

"There were lot's of good people out there both civilian and military," Slembarski said. "Everyone reported they had a good day and a lot of fun."

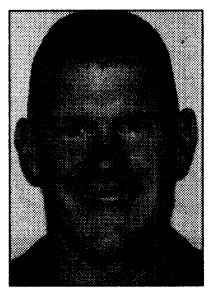
SUZUKI MAKE THE SMART MOVE



WORDS OF GOD

Speak them and life will have purpose

Live for God and find direction

Chaplain (Capt.) Brad Baumann
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

REFLECTIONS

Baumann

Have you ever known somebody who just really had his act together, someone who always seemed to know where he was going and how he was going to get there? Are you envious of people like that?

Don't you wish you could live with a sense of purpose and direction so you could lead others to do the same?

You can! Take a few minutes today to read 1 Peter 4:1-11.

The fact that you are reading this article suggests you are interested in improving yourself.

I would encourage you to spend some time in God's word.

If you already have a personal relationship with God through Christ, then this passage is your recipe for living a life of meaning.

This scripture simply says we should have the same attitude as Christ and be willing to suffer for God's sake.

Be clear-minded and self-controlled so you can pray for guidance and make wise decisions in life.

The scripture tells us to love and serve others as instruments of God's grace.

Speak the words of God with the strength of God and your life will have purpose.

Are you living for yourself, or for others? Why not try living for God, your creator, and see if you can find that sense of direction so many are searching for?

Trust me, because I believe there is no better way to live. Jesus said, "You are either for me or you are against me." Isn't it time to submit to God's will for your life, so that you can start really living?

Wouldn't it be great to adopt this attitude and mature in your faith to the point where you could be finished with sin?

This passage tells us that this is possible!

What do you do at home when you are having trouble programming your new cell phone?

Don't you consult the instruction book from the manufacturer?

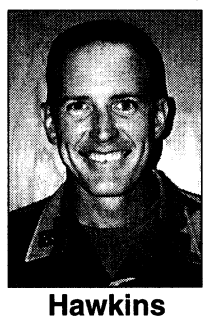
Our creator has also given you an instruction book — the Bible.

If you are interested in exploring the topic of living a life of purpose further, I encourage you to read The Purpose Driven Life by Rick Warren.

You will not regret it!

Quality time, conversation essential

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



I was sitting in the back seat of the cab with several of my sidekicks. The snow was falling, we were in the Alps, and we'd just been cut loose for a weekend pass from the German Special Operations Winter Warfare School — life was good and we were rip-roaring and ready for some fun.

The only trouble was, the more I tried to tell the cab driver where we wanted to go, the more confused he looked. In the best German accent I could muster, I kept repeating a plea to get us where we were trying to go.

Finally, with a look of exasperation on his face, the cabbie, in excellent English, just broke down and said, "So, tell me in English, where do you want to go?"

For a while, we were "stuck" because "we no spoka the same language." And you know what? That happens in relationships all the time, doesn't it?

Last week I mentioned that I'm taking the five weeks in October and sharing with you the "5 Love Languages" as set forth by Dr. Gary Chapman in his million-seller by the same title. We said if you want to keep your love together when the Army is taking you apart, then you have to learn how best to fill your spouse's love needs.

Hawkins

What was the first language of love we talked about? It was the language of affirmation (verbal compliments, encouraging words and kind words).

The second language of love we want to talk about today is quality time.

As Chaplain Chuck Wood related this past weekend at CrossRoads, quality time is primarily made up of two investments on our part:

• Quality conversation — Now, I've been guilty more than once of not having a quality conversation with my wife. Usually a TV, a computer, a paper or a task becomes more important to me for the moment than she is. It took me several years into our marriage, a few relational "boards upside the head," and a little less arrogance before I discovered I was really just dishonoring her with my lack of focus (kinda learned the same thing with my children, too).

Fortunately, I "got it" that if I'm going to honor her, then I've got to give her my undivided attention — that's the foundation a quality conversation is built on.

• Quality activity — Once we get the conversation piece down, then we can begin to focus on what we're doing with each other, not just what we're saying to each other.

Ladies, many times this is where you can be especially helpful to your man if this is his language of love, by engaging in something that he enjoys doing.

Guys, many times this is where you can help fill her "emotional tank" by doing things highly meaningful to her (date night, playing with the kids, talking over financial issues that need your attention, etc.).

Whatever is meaningful or fun to the other is a great place to start — especially if this is their language of love.

Is "QT" (quality time) your language of love ... your mate's?

Does it meet your love needs and his or her love needs more than anything else?

If so, hit these two targets this week and see if it doesn't warm up your relationship in a new and exciting way.

Want some language tutoring?

Then come join me for our series, Lord of the Rings: Keeping Your Love Together When the Army's Taking You Apart at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel.

Columbus High School tackle Frank Harman IV, right, goes head-to-head in a battle of brawn with a fellow teammate during practice Tuesday afternoon.

CHS tackle eyes West Point

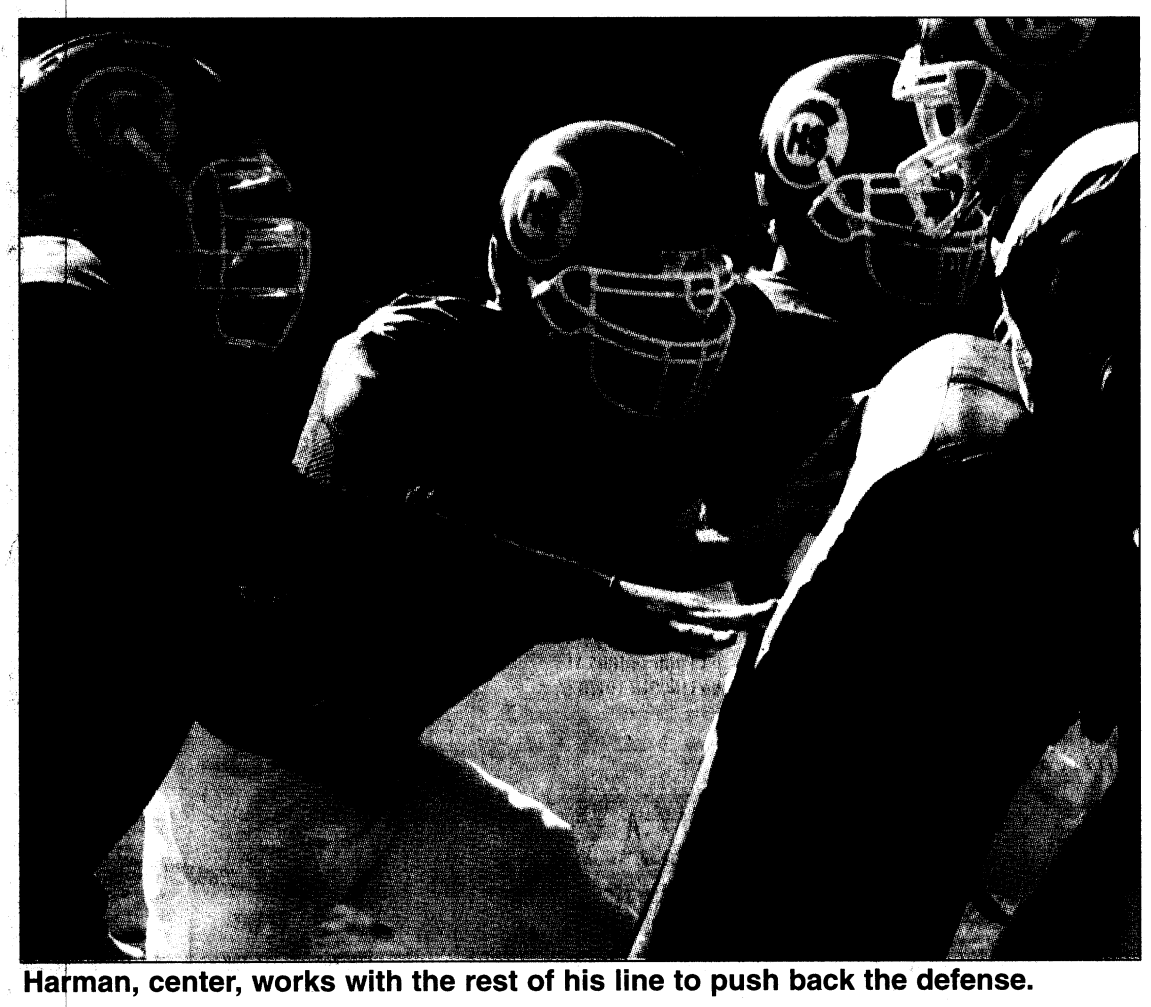
"I'm not as big as most linemen, but I can count on the rest of the line, and together we usually get the job done."

At 175 pounds, Columbus High School tackle Frank Harman IV may not have a professional career in front of him as a football player, but the 11th-grader is taking a lot he has learned from football into his future.

He said he has learned the values of teamwork, cohesion, communication and continuity. Those are all important lessons for an aspiring officer.

At 16 years old, his young mind is already looking toward the future and a commission like his father.

Harman said college is a big priority in his future and West Point is his number one pick, but in the event that dream isn't realized, he will aim for a Reserve Officer Training Corps scholarship elsewhere and major in either political science or business administration.



Part of that drive to excel and be part of something bigger and more important than just himself comes from being the son of a man who has spent his life serving his country and leading Soldiers.

"My dad expects more of me than the average high school student," the honor roll student said. "I wouldn't change that though. I have learned more responsibility and instead of settling for average, I try to go above and beyond what is expected of me."

Faced with Columbus' shaky 3-5 record and only two more games to go, he knows he can't turn the tide alone.

"Teamwork in football is just like teamwork in the Army," Harman said. "Without it, you won't get very far.

"I'm optimistic about these last two games. I'm confident in the team, in our cohesion," he said. "We don't have any one-man superstars on this team. We work together to accomplish our goals on offense and defense."

Harman, center, works with the rest of his line to push back the defense.

Harman practices laying solid hits at practice Tuesday afternoon.

Ammo Dogs dispose of Bravo Bulls

Ordnance Co. takes first win of season 13-0

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Ammo Dogs closed out the Bravo Bulls during their first game of the season and took a 13-0 win in intramural flag football action Tuesday.

During the first half, it looked like neither team was going to reach the goal line. Each put on a show with their defensive lines, holding the other team at bay.

Just before the half-time whistle, the 608th Ammo Dogs' quarterback, Keiyon Carpenter, found Quavis Thurman in the end zone with a 40-yard pass.

But the Ammo Dogs would have to settle for a 6-0 lead during half-time, because the B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment's Bravo Bulls stopped their attempt for the extra point.

After the break, both teams took the field with fire in their eyes but seemed a little over zealous. The Bravo Bulls got ahead of themselves and got nailed with several off-sides penalties, which gave the Ammo Dogs the ball on the Bulls' 20 yard line.

With another touchdown at their fingertips, Carpenter tried to hit his receivers in the corners of the end zone several times, but was unable to make a completion. Bravo Bulls' Kevin Jennings took advantage of the Ammo Dogs' passing plays and snagged an interception but only found his way back to the line of scrimmage.

The Ammo Dogs weren't about to give the Bravo Bulls an inch of field as they held them down on the 20 yard line and even sacked the Bulls quarterback Leon Johnson.

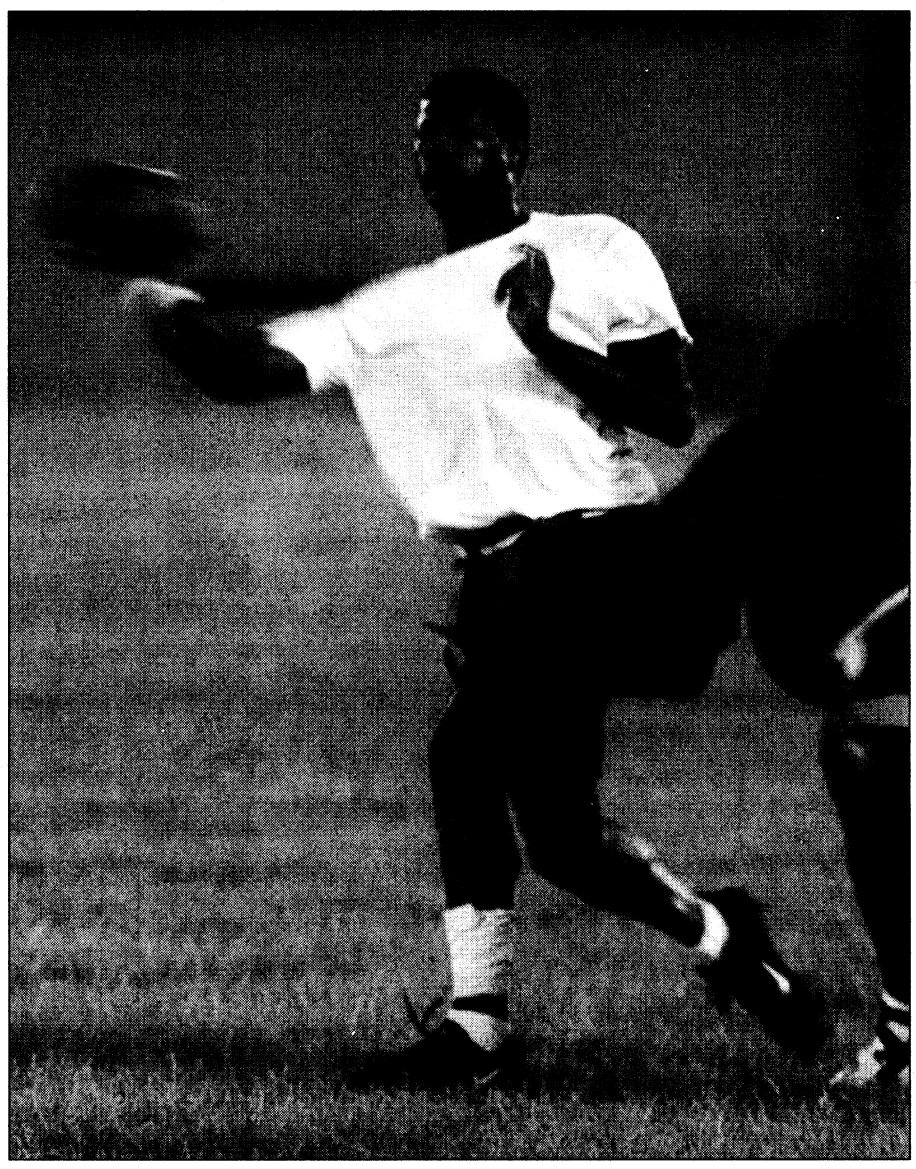
The Bulls were forced to kick on the fourth down, and the Dogs recovered on their own 30 yard line.

When the Dogs got possession of the ball, they wasted no time, reaching the Bulls 20 yard line again in three plays.

Once they were back within reach of the goal line, the Ammo Dogs didn't make the same mistakes as before. Carpenter personally delivered the ball to the end zone for a 12-0 lead.

He then shot a 10-yard pass to Ralph Hines for the extra point.

With less than four minutes left in the game, the Bravo Bulls scrambled to get points on the scoreboard, but Thurman caught his second interception of the night shutting down the Bulls for good.



Bravo Bulls' Clay Coleman said he was a little disappointed with the loss, but said his team has been training for war for the past month and was unable to get in any quality football practice.

However, he said they played well considering the lack of practice, and now that they have the opportunity, they will get their game together.

Sidney Waller, Ammo Dogs' coach, said he was happy with the win and it was truly a team effort.

"Basically we knew we were outnumbered, because we only have 10 men and they have about 25, so we wanted to hold on to the ball and used running plays," he said. "But once they got aggressive on our runs, we started throwing more."

Waller said his offensive line can still use some work, but everyone put forth a tremendous effort.

André Weiss/Nonstock/Picture Quest

Contrary to rumors you may have heard, the transplant waiting list is completely blind to wealth or celebrity status. Once you're on the list for a donor organ, what really counts is the severity of your illness, time spent waiting, blood type and other important medical information. Call 1-800-355-SHARE or visit www.shareyourlife.org for honest information on organ donation. And remember, if you want to be a donor, you must tell your family or it may not happen.

WE KICK 400 KIDS OUT OF SCHOOL EVERY DAY.

We have to. They just don't want to leave. They go to an extraordinary new kind of public school. It's called a Community School for Excellence.

It's open up to 15 hours a day, 6 days a week, 52 weeks a year. Like many schools in this program, it has medical and dental services and a social worker on site. Its extended hours are filled with unique academic and recreational activities.

It's a school where teachers have more time to teach. And students are physically and emotionally better prepared to learn.

So, if you have trouble getting your kids to go to school, find out how you can make it a place they won't want to leave.

(There's no punch line.)

What do you get when you mix Christianity, Judaism and Islam? In many parts of the world, it's a recipe for disaster. Yet in America, it's a formula that has peacefully endured for over 200 years. In fact, not only has it endured, it's flourished.

The pundits may say that the ability for different faiths to coexist here comes from a lack of intensity and passion for any religion in America. But nothing could be further from the truth. Because we are free to choose which religion, if any, we'd like to follow, it enables us to have a deeper, more personal relationship with our faith than would otherwise be possible.

And because no one religion needs to feel threatened by another, we can look to the similarities that unite us, instead of focusing on the differences. Two hundred million Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus agree. To learn more about freedom of religion, visit rememberfreedom.org. Or, feel free to ask the spiritual leader of your choice.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

Terrorists attack in exercise

Two bombings, hostage incident test post

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

A sequence of training scenarios starting Oct. 9 culminated Friday with a three-prong terrorist attack exercise on Fort Benning.

The exercise, called Bayonet Fury, was designed to test the post's ability to transition to a higher force protection condition in a timely, orderly manner and to respond appropriately in the event of an actual terrorist attack.

The attack started with a mock car bombing in the parking lot at Wilson Elementary School, which, because it was detonated far enough away from the school, caused the death of the terrorists involved, but did not damage the building or cause any civilian injuries or fatalities.

Military police, fire department, Emergency Medical Services, Explosive Ordnance Disposal and Criminal Investigation Division personnel responded to the scene, established perimeters, cleared the area, swept the building and secured the crime scene.

The second attack began at 10:40 a.m., while the incident at Wilson was ongoing.

A car bomb went off at Gavin Hall, leaving a Soldier and three terrorists wounded.

The second attack forced first responders to balance their assets between two active incidents in two separate areas of post while continuing security and support to the rest of the installation.

As the scene at Gavin Hall was concluding, a report came in

Clark Pinnacle tours post

Developer to build new post housing units

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Representatives from Clark Pinnacle, LLC, Inc., the firm selected to build Fort Benning's new housing as part of the Residential Communities Initiative, visited the post Oct. 15.

Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley gave the Clark Pinnacle staff an in-depth briefing about Fort Benning and what makes it and the greater Columbus area unique.

"We have a lot of opportunities to gather as a community," Freakley said, "and we want to keep that going with your help."

Freakley talked about the post's population profile — the more than 105,000 people who do business on post each day. That number represents 31,000 Soldiers; 49,000 family members; 11,000 retirees and 6,000 civilians, but does not include the more than 100,000 visitors who come to Fort Benning to attend graduations.

Of the Soldiers, Freakley said, 10,000 live on post and another 20,000 live off-post.

"But the Soldiers — Staff Sergeants through captains — would rather live on post if the right quarters were available, and that's where you come in. We just can't get to January 2006 fast enough."

Freakley said the post, with more than 184,000 acres, is roughly one-fourth the size of Rhode Island and is the sixth largest installation. Benning has the third largest Soldier density and is growing.

"We are an expanding post and preparing for more expansion," he said. Any increase in the number of Soldiers training here translates into an increased need for instructors and an increased need for housing on post: The Infantry Training Brigade will increased their training load by 92 percent, and the airborne, Officer Candidate and Infantry Officers Courses are increasing by up to 38 percent. He said Fort Benning has a $1.9 million impact on the local economy.

"We want you to be part of our growth," he said. "And we are serious about access. Fort Benning is now your post."

Freakley told the representatives about community outreach programs like Habitat for Humanity and House of Heroes, and said he hoped Clark Pinnacle would join in on those projects.

Clark Pinnacles' managing director Scott Orrentia said the company did not use all of the land made available to them for the RCI project.

"There will be an opportunity for future expansion to meet any additional needs," Orrentia said.

MEDDAC rations flu vaccination

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

MEDDAC will not have a mass immunization program this flu season because of the severe shortage of vaccines, said Terry Beckwith, MEDDAC Public Affairs Officer.

In order to ensure the available vaccines are used efficiently, MEDDAC will screen Tricare patients to ensure only high risk patients receive the vaccine, Beckwith said.

High-risk patients include:

- Soldiers who are deploying overseas in support of the Global War on Terrorism.
- Patients with chronic, debilitating conditions such as moderate or severe asthma, emphysema, significant cardiovascular disease, diabetes mellitus and renal failure.
- Patients with weakened immune systems because of cancer, HIV or AIDS, immunodeficiencies, use of long term immunosuppressive medications.
- Pregnant women in their second or third trimester.
- Patients 65 or older have a lower priority unless they have chronic, debilitating conditions.
- Health-care workers with direct patient care responsibilities.

According to an Oct. 5, press release from the Department of Health and Human Services, the shortage of flu vaccines is due to the three-month suspension of Chiron's operating license. The England-based manufacturer was scheduled to supply more

TSP open season kicks off

Higher maxes in 2005 mean bigger returns

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The federal government's Thrift Savings Plan kicked off its 2004 "open season" Oct. 15 with slogans to remind members of the uniformed services and civilian government employees that they can increase their retirement coffers substantially by investing in TSP.

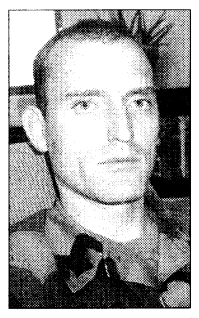
Open season — the period when people can enroll in the program or change their options — runs through Dec. 31. "Let It Flow" is this open season's slogan aimed at federal civilian employees, while "Save For Later. Start Now" targets military personnel and other members of the uniformed services. Brochures are being distributed to eligible participants.

"A lot of people don't even think about (TSP) but it's a great deal," said Ann Pratcher, financial manager with the Army Community Service.

More than 85 percent of workers covered by the Federal Employees Retirement System and about 67 percent of employees covered by the Civil Service Retirement System contribute to TSP, a 401K-type savings program.

Pratcher said TSP is one of the cornerstones of FERS retirement.

"As of the end of September, we have more than 1.8 million FERS participants, 475,000 CSRS contributors and 435,000 military participants," said Tom Trabucco, director of external affairs for TSP's overseer, the Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board. "All of the money goes into the common fund and is invested by fund, which is more than $141 billion for military and civilian investors.



Most contributions are invested in five different funds. As of Sept. 30, the Government Securities Investment, or "G" Fund had $58.8 billion in it; the Common Stock Index

RED RIBBON WEEK

Anti-drugs — they work

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

What is your anti-drug? Just about anyone who has a television has seen the commercials.

Usually they feature an athlete who talks about how drugs are capable of destroying people's lives and crushing their chances for success. And I'm here to say that's true.

Drugs make it nearly impossible to succeed, because when people get addicted, they lose sight of their dreams and fall into a cycle of searching for the "next big high."

I have seen several of my friends fall into that cycle, and I can say from experience, it isn't pretty. Three of them are dead now, and one is infected with HIV.

If you are looking for a life of poverty, and loneliness, follow their example, but if you want to make it in this world and be able to live your dreams, find a good role model and follow their lead.

That's why drug awareness programs like Red Ribbon Week are so important.

In today's environment, kids are being tempted with all sorts of drugs, from tobacco and alcohol to crack and heroine.

And contrary to popular belief, it's not just in the inner cities. It is happening in rural America, the suburbs, and yes, even on military installations.

It is more important now than ever to let these kids know the dangers of drug use, so they can make the right decisions before they fall victim to the dealers.

The problem is, most parents don't talk to their kids about drugs because they don't want to face the truth, or they think their child already knows about the dangers of drug use.

Well, here's a newsflash. Your children are learning about drug use, and they are learning from the few bad apples who think drugs are fun or cool.

Fort Benning's Red Ribbon Week is like a weapon of mass destruction to eradicate drug use in the community.

During Red Ribbon Week, post officials and community members will join together to educate young and old alike on the dangers of drug use. The highlight of the week will be a celebration at 1 p.m. Monday in Marshall Auditorium.

Paul Voorhees, owner of Ranger Joes, and NFL football player Jeremiah Castille will speak during the program.

Red Ribbon Week is a great opportunity to start a discussion with your child or anyone who may be involved with drugs, but it is not a beat-all, cure-all. Ensuring your friend or family member stays off drugs should be an ongoing process that focuses on positive reinforcement.

I can tell you until I am blue in the face how bad drugs can be, and how important it is to talk with your kids about them, but I am no professional. Fortunately, the Army provides trained professionals who know how to get people off drugs and keep them off.

To speak with one of those professionals, call the Army Substance Abuse Program at 545-1138. They can also tell you more about Red Ribbon Week.

Benning has fiscal year fun

Melissa House
Bayonet Staff

Forget New Year's resolutions. I have something better — fiscal year resolutions.

For those of you who may be unfamiliar with the fiscal year — it started Oct. 1 and, naturally, will end Sept. 30. I think it's the answer ... to everything.

Just like the experts don't recommend starting a new diet on a Monday, I don't suggest waiting until Jan. 1 to turn over a new leaf. Start fresh right now.

In the few short weeks since the year started, I've made a number of improvements, including giving up my million-Diet-Coke-a-day habit. Those of you up at the crack of dawn may have felt the earth shake a few times. Not to fear, it's just me hopping back on the fitness bandwagon and killing two birds with one stone.

I've, gasp, laced up my brand-new running shoes and am out pounding the pavement in an attempt to get back into shape. I have a son running cross country and would like to be able to run with him. But for now, I'm running with the dog and it's working well. I get my exercise and she gets hers.

And to get my house into shape, I've joined a Web based group. They send daily tips, reminders and cleaning missions. Since I'm cleaning up after a husband, three boys and a furry dog, I need all the help I can get.

But one of my biggest fiscal year missions was to start taking advantage of all the great things to see and do on and around Fort Benning. I started with the Infantry Band's concert series at Riverside, even before the fiscal year began. Let me say, if you live on post and you haven't gone, you're missing a great opportunity to hear a variety of wonderful music performed by talented musicians. Best of all, you don't have to dress up. You can go in sweats and mismatched running shoes like I did once. Once it got dark, no one noticed. Get out there Oct. 24 for the jazz band. It's your last chance for the season.

Then it was on to Oktoberfest. I said I would go and I did. The kids had a blast knocking each other around with pugil sticks — the best $15 investment for hours of entertainment.

I was free to enjoy the sights and sounds of the "oompah" band and the folks in German costume performing traditional dances.

Anyone with a keen eye and the patience to hunt down a good bargain shouldn't miss the postwide yard sale on Saturday. I've always been on the selling side, but this year, it's time to go see what treasures are out there.

For dinner theater that's not too stuffy-formal, look for me at Benning Backstage's The Foreigner starring some of the post's Soldiers and family members. It's another great deal, and a great way to have a night out with your spouse or your friends.

The play runs tonight and Saturday, and on Oct. 29 and 30 at Kelley Hill Recreation Center. Doors open at 6:30 p.m., dinner starts at 7 p.m. and the show at 8 p.m.

Tickets are $19 for adults and $12 for kids 12 and younger. Ticket prices include dinner and the show and is open to the public. Why not take advantage of all the activities Benning has to offer? I'm considering it my fiscal responsibility. Care to join me?

Sand Hill building boom

Capt. Trent Powell
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

If you haven't been to Sand Hill recently, then you would be surprised to see new buildings and a flurry of activity throughout the Infantry Training Brigade.

An increase in Army strength means an increase for the initial entry training units. 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, will add to its role another company which will bring the battalion's total to six.

The last time the 50th Inf. Regt. included an F company was during the Vietnam War. It was then known as Co. F (Long-range Reconnaissance Patrol), 50th Infantry, serving the 25th Infantry Division from December 1967 to January 1969.

Forming a new company is no small feat.

Just ask 1st Sgt. David Robinson, the new first sergeant of F Company.

A few short weeks ago, his company consisted of a grass field — no drill sergeants, no Soldiers, nothing.

Now, the company leadership and cadre of nine drill sergeants are developing systems and gathering resources to ensure the future infantry warrior is set for success during his 14 weeks of demanding training.

All tasks must be completed and every detail accounted for; furniture needs to be moved, equipment drawn, training schedules developed, logistics coordinated, and SOPs established.

What an already established company takes for granted must be created for the new company.

So how does a new commander and first sergeant make it all happen? Lots and lots of questions, that's how.

"I think I have sat on more first sergeant's couches getting feedback and ideas for success in the last few weeks than I ever had in my career," Robinson said. "Everyone does things a bit differently, so I was able to hear all the good and bad and then come up with a Foxtrot way. We will learn as we go, but I feel we have a great solid start to build on.

"Making infantry warriors is nothing new; it comes down to building the foundation using the Warrior Ethos and instilling it through their training. We have an awesome responsibility training the infantry warrior to join the war fighting units throughout the Army."

Special Reaction Team members plot possible avenues of assault on the hostage takers' lair.

FPX: Are we ready for action?

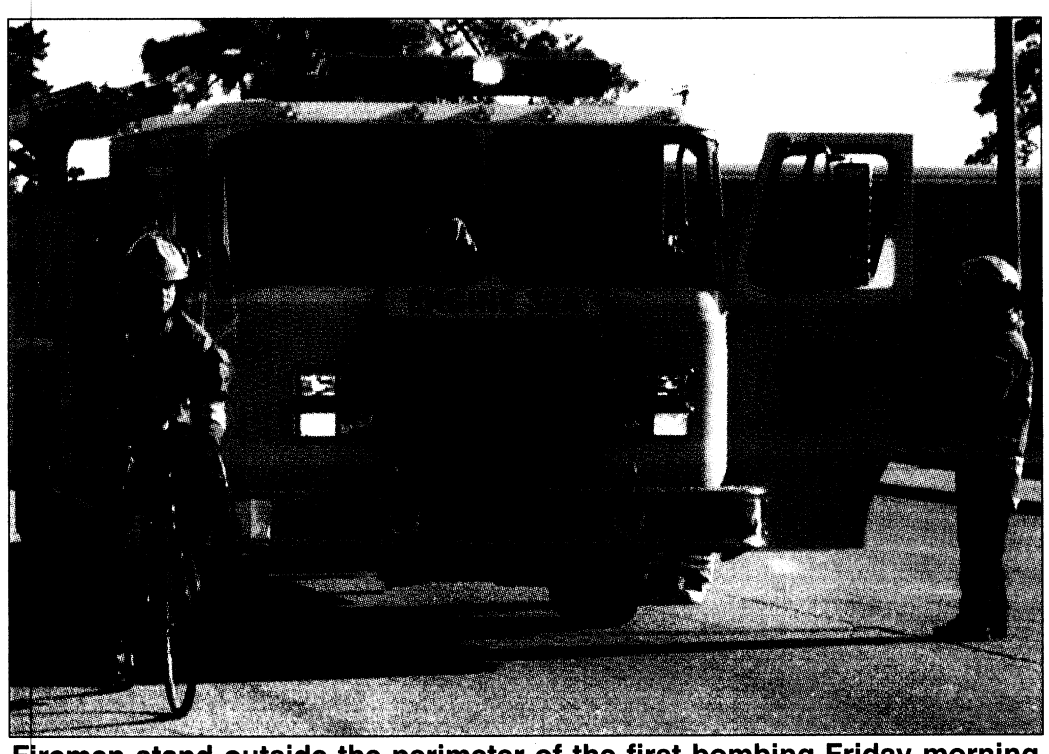
that hostages had been taken at Building 239.

Being the only personnel trained to handle hostage negotiations, CID agents responded to the scene and established an operations center for the negotiations.

"Once hostage takers establish contact, the military police will turn it over to us as soon as possible," said Special Agent Mark Jackson, 86th MP Detachment (CID).



Once communication began between the negotiator and the hostage takers, the agents worked with the post's Special Response Team to get food and a reliable phone into the building.

After securing the release of one hostage and several hours of negotiations, the SRT team entered the building, killing both of the hostage takers and ending the exercise.

Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Bonham, the Directorate of Intelligence and Security NCOIC, said great effort was put into making the exercise as effective as possible within parameters designed to minimize the effects on those not in the exercise.

"We tried hard to make it as realistic as we could by integrating true terrorist techniques, tactics and procedures," he said.

The exercise will help post officials improve readiness.

Bayonet Fury FPX train up for next year's larger exercise

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

In an FPX after action review Monday afternoon, the post chief of staff Col. Charles Cornwell expressed appreciation for the effort put into Bayonet Fury, but advised that Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley's vision of the major FPX next year is "exponentially bigger" than the scope of Friday's exercise.

Officials representing each of the agencies that took part in the past week's force protection and antiterrorism training events rallied to discuss not only what went right and wrong, but how the installation force protection plan implementation will adapt, train and be ready for Freakley's massive training event next year.

The path to meeting that goal will include the establishment of specific protocols for specific scenarios, networking a viable communications system for first responders, supporting agencies and personnel, clarifying responsibilities and executing multiple training events both on the directorate and post level, said Bob Robertson, installation antiterrorism officer, and Jeff Shuck, chief of plans and operations.

Monthly, quarterly and semiannual training will become the standard, across the board, for all activities both on an individual and collective level, he said.

A working group will be formed to organize, formalize and review the training progress.

The next challenge on the path to meeting Freakley's expectations?

The annual TRADOC Antiterrorism Operational Assessment in April. The goal? Score in the top 10 percent.

AMU's Roundhouse needs repairs

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

What do John Wayne, Gen. George S. Patton, Capt. Hook, and the pilot of the Enola Gay all have in common?

The Roundhouse.

The Roundhouse is located in the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's range complex, and it's history is as unique as its architecture.

The only one like it on Fort Benning, and quite possibly in the world, the Roundhouse, built sometime between the late 1930s and the early 1940s, is wood-frame with a two-story rotunda connected to a one-story semicircular building below.

While there has been much speculation as to the building's original function, no one has been able to provide any proof.

In a quest for information about Hook Range and the man it was named after, Capt. Alfred J. Hook, who died in WWI, the AMU deputy commander, Robert Aylward, found out more than he bargained for about the building that rests on the range.

The Roundhouse, which has conveniently been dubbed the Trap and Skeet Building, because of it's location on Hook Shotgun Range, is presumed to have been built as a classroom for officer training.

It later became an extension of the Officers' Club, providing some of the military's top leaders a place to gather, tell stories and play cards, Aylward said.

Aylward found proof that Patton, Gen. Omar Bradley and Air Force Brig. Gen. Paul W. Tibbets, pilot of the Enola Gay, all spent time in the building.

He also puts "The Duke" at the range and says he was inside the building numerous times.

"John Wayne was at the range filming part of the movie The Green Berets, and since the Roundhouse was used as a preparation area for the movie, he was in there a lot," Aylward said.

The Roundhouse has fallen into a state of disrepair, and AMU doesn't have enough funding to restore it.

At one time, Aylward actually diverted the demolition crew that came to tear down an old pump house, but nearly destroyed the Roundhouse because of an error in the numbers on the buildings.

Rumor has it the numbers from the Roundhouse and the pump house were switched so someone could get a telephone line run into the pump house, Aylward said.

The building is no longer at risk of being demolished, but those who use the range say it is imperative it be renovated.

"As far as having a piece of history on the range, it's great," said Master Sgt. Rod Pinkston. "But right now, it's an eyesore. I'd like to get it remodeled, so it looks as good as the rest of the buildings on the range."

To say it is in need of remodeling may be an understatement. The paint on the wood siding is peeling off in silver dollar-size flakes, the floor-to-ceiling windows are boarded up, the floor sags in places, the stairwell to the rotunda was removed, and the list goes on.

Even in its decrepit state, the building has a certain ambiance.

The walls are lined with pictures of some of the greatest shooters in the world, dating back to 1964. Pictures of "The Duke" and other dignitaries who visited the site are pinned on a wall of fame.

And, to add to the building's hunting cabin charm, a boar's head from Russia, a turkey-like bird from Germany and water buffalo horns from Australia mounted on the walls.

What may be the building's saving grace is the Military Marksmanship Association, a group of retired veterans who have volunteered to fund the restoration efforts with no strings attached, Aylward said.

The possibility of the building's full restoration is still in the process of being approved by a group of military lawyers.

"I know there is a way to do it," Aylward said. "We just need to find it."

The Roundhouse on Hook Range is one of the most unique buildings on Fort Benning and was used as a recreation facility by some of the military's top leaders and "The Duke". The Military Marksman's Association and AMU are trying to have it restored.

Open house to show appreciation for retirees

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Retired Army Col. John Radke will be the guest speaker at the Retiree Appreciation Day luncheon, at 11:30 a.m. Nov. 5 at the Officers' Club.

Radke, Chief of the Army Retirement Services with the Department of the Army, will update retirees on new legislation, rules and services that affect them.

There will also be time for questions, said Verna Clemons, Fort Benning's retirement service officer.

"Appreciation Day is a time for all the retirees to come together to get information," Clemons said. "Last year we had a total of about 500 retirees and family members come out."

The day begins at 6:30 a.m. with breakfast registration at the Officers' Club.

Participants will load a bus at 7 a.m. and head to the ITB dining facility for breakfast.

"The Soldiers, trainees and the drill sergeants are there, and the retirees will have a chance to talk to them about their service in the military," Clemons said.

At 9:30 a.m. the buses will travel to Victory Pond for a Rangers in Action graduation ceremony.

"The retirees haven't been to one of these graduations before," Clemons said.

"Normally we go to graduation for the training Soldiers, so this should be new and fun."

After the graduation, the participants will go back to Officers' Club for the 11:30 a.m. luncheon, Radke's presentation and door prizes.

Following lunch, from 1 to 3:30 p.m., will be the County Benefit Health Fair.

Clemons said they plan on having about 30 vendors present, from places such as commissary, PX, veteran's affairs and local banks.

MEDDAC will be on hand to give out a limited number of flu shots, check people's vital signs and provide cholesterol tests.

The cost for the breakfast is $1.60, lunch is $12.50 and the health fair is free.

Retirees can pre-register through a form in this month's retirement newsletter, at Building 2635 in Soldiers' Plaza or by calling the Retirement Services office at 545-3019 or 545-2715.

TSP: Sign up during open season

Investment, or "C" Fund had $59.6 billion; the Fixed Income Index Investment, or "F" Fund had $10.3 billion; the Small Capitalization Stock Index Investment, or "S" Fund had $7.6 billion; and the International Stock Index Investment, or "I" Fund had $4.5 billion.

"This brings the total up to $141 billion," Trabucco said.

"Open season is a good time make the initial decision on whether or not you will contribute to TSP if you're not currently contributing," Trabucco said. "It's also the time to increase your contributions to take advantage of the increased amounts that you're allowed to contribute this year. If you're not contributing the maximum, now is your time to take a look and see if you can or should."

The primary difference between the 2003 and 2004 TSP open season is "you can contribute more this open season," he said.

Pratcher said service members can contribute from special pay as well as basic pay. Civilians can contribute only from basic pay.

In the 2003 open season, which was really for calendar year 2004, the contribution limits were 9 percent of pay, up to a maximum of $14,000 a year, Trabucco said. "For the current open season, which will cover 2005, eligible employees who are members of the uniformed services may contribute up to 10 percent of pay, to a maximum of $15,000.

FERS people may contribute up to 15 percent of basic pay each pay period, but only up to the elective deferral limit of $15,000 that's set by the Internal Revenue Service.

Those who make more than $93,333 per year should be concerned about exceeding the $15,000 limit. Anyone in that category can get a fact sheet from the Web site, along with a worksheet that will help FERS people be sure to put in the maximum amount allowed and pick up the maximum matching contributions from the government.

As soon as employees are covered by FERS they are eligible for agency contributions, the agency will automatically contribute an amount equal to 1 percent of the employee's basic pay each pay period, whether or not they contribute.

If employees contribute their own money, the agency will match the employee's contributions dollar-for-dollar on the first 3 percent the employee contributes each pay period and 50 cents on the dollar for the next 2 percent the employee contributes.

Trabucco said that this may be the last TSP open season, because legislation has passed the U.S. Senate and is in the House of Representatives that would eliminate open seasons in the future.

The congressional measure would allow people to make their contribution elections at any time.

Trabucco said the board is looking into creating "Lifecycle Funds" beginning next year. These funds provide the benefits of professional asset management to participants.

"That means Lifecycle Funds will be set up based on years when you would plan on drawing down your account balance," Trabucco said. "We don't know what those years will be established at yet. That's part of the procurement process, and we're collecting bids from industry now on how to structure them."

ACS has a TSP class scheduled from 10 a.m to noon Nov. 22.

For more information, or to make a reservation for an upcoming class, call 545-5485.

Colorado extends absentee deadline

Federal Voting Assistance Program

There has been a delay in the mailing of absentee ballots to Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act citizens from Colorado for the Nov. 2 general election. Because of the delay, the Secretary of State of Colorado has extended the deadline for the receipt of absentee ballots from UOCAVA voters by 10 days up to and including Nov. 12.

Ballots must be cast by 7 p.m. mountain standard time on Nov. 2 and received by 5 p.m. on Nov. 12. Overseas voters who have not yet received their state absentee ballot can use the Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot (Standard Form 186) to vote for candidates for federal office.

FWABs are available from the voting assistance officer in their unit or at their embassy or consulate.

Colorado also allows return of the voted ballot by fax. Information on faxing is available in Appendix C of the Voting Assistance Guide at http://www.fvap.gov/services/faxing.html.

than 100 million flu vaccines for the U.S. this flu season.

The U.S. has had to find ways to replace the vaccines ordered through Chiron, Beckwith said. A U.S. manufacturer of the vaccine is Aventis Pasteur located in Swiftwater, Pa. Aventis is supplying 54 million vaccinations for this season, leaving the U.S. in search of other means, Beckwith said.

"Department of Defense only received forty percent of the anticipated vaccine," Beckwith said.

"Tricare primary care managers will decide which of their patients is a high risk patient based on their medical condition. So if you're healthy you won't need to get the vaccine. We want to stress to everyone that hand washing, proper rest, a balanced diet, exercise and limiting contact with sick people greatly reduces the risk of catching a cold or the flu."

According to Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates, between 5 to 20 percent of Americans get the flu each year.

For more information about the flu shots, call the Tricare Primary Care manager at 544-2273.

Future expansion may be necessary to meet the housing needs of the 5th Brigade, 25th Infantry Division, which was not included in the planning when the contract awarded, and any other brigade Fort Benning may receive.

Garrison Commander Col. Rick Riera said Clark Pinnacle would become an integral part of one of 95 daily services — providing quality housing.

RCI staff accompanied the Clark representatives on the tour, which included the post's major training areas and all of the housing areas.

"We highlighted the historic areas and housing the Soldiers want — areas like the single-family homes in McDonald Manor," said Doug Ledford, RCI engineer. "And Clark's Mission Spanish designs will fit in well with a lot of the existing buildings."

Benning to use Web for customer feedback

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A snowstorm is not a likely part of Fort Benning's immediate future, but garrison officials are hoping that the Interactive Customer Evaluation, or ICE, will take Fort Benning by storm and soon become a permanent asset to its customer service.

"The Army believes in the after-action review process as a way to improve itself," said Col. Rick Riera, garrison commander. "I believe that Interactive Customer Evaluation or ICE will provide us with accurate, timely feedback, which we can use as a learning and growing organization to make our services more effective and our delivery more timely."

A key part of the process is receiving feedback from customers, but that may be where the first part of the problem lies.

Typically, customers who receive either really poor or great customer service are the most likely to take the time to fill out a customer service card, said Brandon Cockrell, chief of the Plans, Analysis and Integration office. Most customers don't bother to respond for reasons ranging from being in a hurry to they may think their comments won't make a difference.

ICE solves the convenience problem, by being Web based. ICE can be accessed through the Internet day or night. Fort Benning's ICE Web site is http://www.ice.disa.mil. From there, customers should choose the "Army CONUS" link, then the "Fort Benning" link. On the Fort Benning page, there are links divided by related service category, such as housing. Customers may also choose the "show all" link for a complete alphabetical listing of Fort Benning service providers.

For customer convenience, ICE computer terminals are also being installed throughout the installation. Web site results are easily viewed, compiled and tracked by the garrison commander. Each directorate will also have the ability to view and track its own results, said Ginny Basl, plans specialist with the PAIO.

Customers can keep the ICE comments anonymous or they may supply their name and contact information to receive direct feedback.

Customers will still have the option of completing a hard-copy customer service card, which will then get input to the ICE Web site. Customers may also view the service provider's statistics by choosing the "report" link on the right hand side of the service providers ICE page.

All comments are greatly appreciated and encouraged, Cockrell said. However, the more specific the comment, the easier it will be to address the issue. Problems can be resolved and those providing notable customer service can be recognized.

"The big thing with customer satisfaction is that everything is from the customer's viewpoint. If we are not understanding our customers, then we are living in a dream world."

Customer comments are something the Adjutant General, Directorate of Human Resources has been collecting and analyzing for years, said Al Thrower, chief of Quality Support Division.

"We've been measuring customer service for 10 years and converted to ICE within the past 40 to 60 days."

The directorate has seen a dramatic increase in customer comments since converting to ICE. AG has processed more cards and ICE comments than all the other service providers on Fort Benning combined, Thrower said.

ICE has actually made it easier for the directorate, he said. With ICE, results can be easily tallied and converted to reports that show the directorate how they are doing across a number of fields.

The directorate, which enjoys a high satisfaction rate, did see a small dip in results with the switch to ICE, Thrower said. With ICE, two new questions were added, including satisfaction with the appearance of the facility and the facility's hours, both of which the employees have limited control.

"Soldiers in-processing were comparing the facility to one of the many brand new facilities throughout the Army and as a result, were giving the AG low marks for appearance. But with responses such as these we can now better see the appearance of facilities through the eyes of the customer and work to improve them," Throwler said.

The question "Did you have an appointment?" was also added recently, said Thrower, after noting long wait times in the ID card section. It was quickly determined the long wait times were attributed to customers without appointments. The AG then began a push for customers to get appointments for ID cards so that they could all receive the same timely service.

IOBC, ANCOC team up, tighten up

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

When 2nd Lt. Rob Smith watches the news and sees the coverage flowing from war-torn cities and villages in Iraq and Afghanistan, he knows it's a snapshot of his future.

That future is a large-scale urban operation against faceless enemies who blend into crowded city streets, hide in the homes of the innocent and shift seamlessly among non-combatants, as they wage war using bombs, RPGs, IEDs and chaos as their weapons.

Smith, an Infantry Officer Basic Course student, is gearing up to face that as he nears completion of IOBC.

"When I watch the news, I feel that is the kind of stuff I know we are going to be getting into," he said. "So I've been looking forward to this week with the ANCOC students, because the majority of them have combat experience — both in Iraq and in Afghanistan."

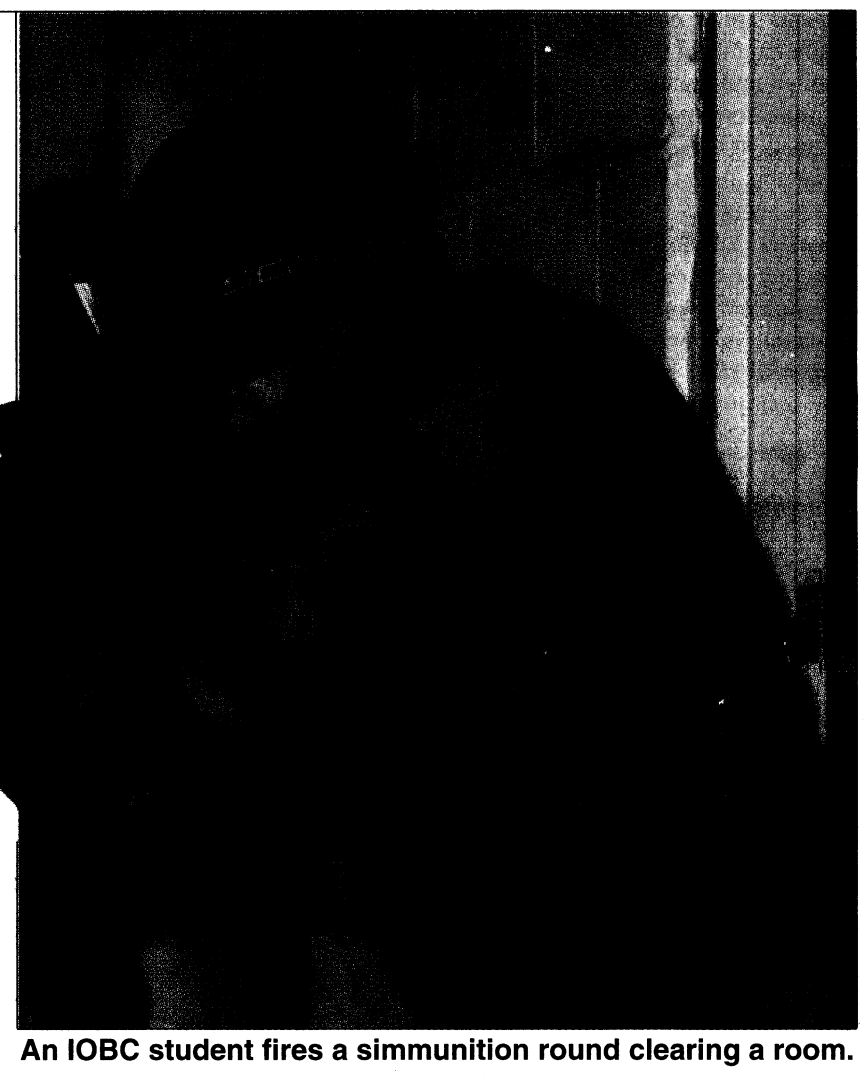
Training has stepped into high gear Armywide, and ANCOC is working with IOBC, tapping the experience of senior NCOs to help prepare young officers for the realities of war.

During the senior IOBC classes' training at McKenna MOUT site last week, ANCOC students manned stations with IOBC cadre and gave instruction and insight in areas like breaching methods; individual, squad and platoon movements; clearing procedures in rooms, halls and stairways; and patrols. A question and answer session followed each class.

The ANCOC students affirmed for the IOBC students the doctrine and tactics they have been taught and offer insight on what works and what doesn't.

"I think it's great," said IOBC instructor Sgt. 1st Class Derrick Allard. "Here at the school we teach doctrine in a classroom for 13 weeks or so, but this is giving them a firsthand look and chance to talk with the guys who are doing it on the ground. It more or less validates the points we bring up as instructors."

Senior NCOs have the experience and knowledge to teach young leaders who will be tested in a combat environment, said ANCOC student Sgt. 1st Class Benjamin Carpenter, 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

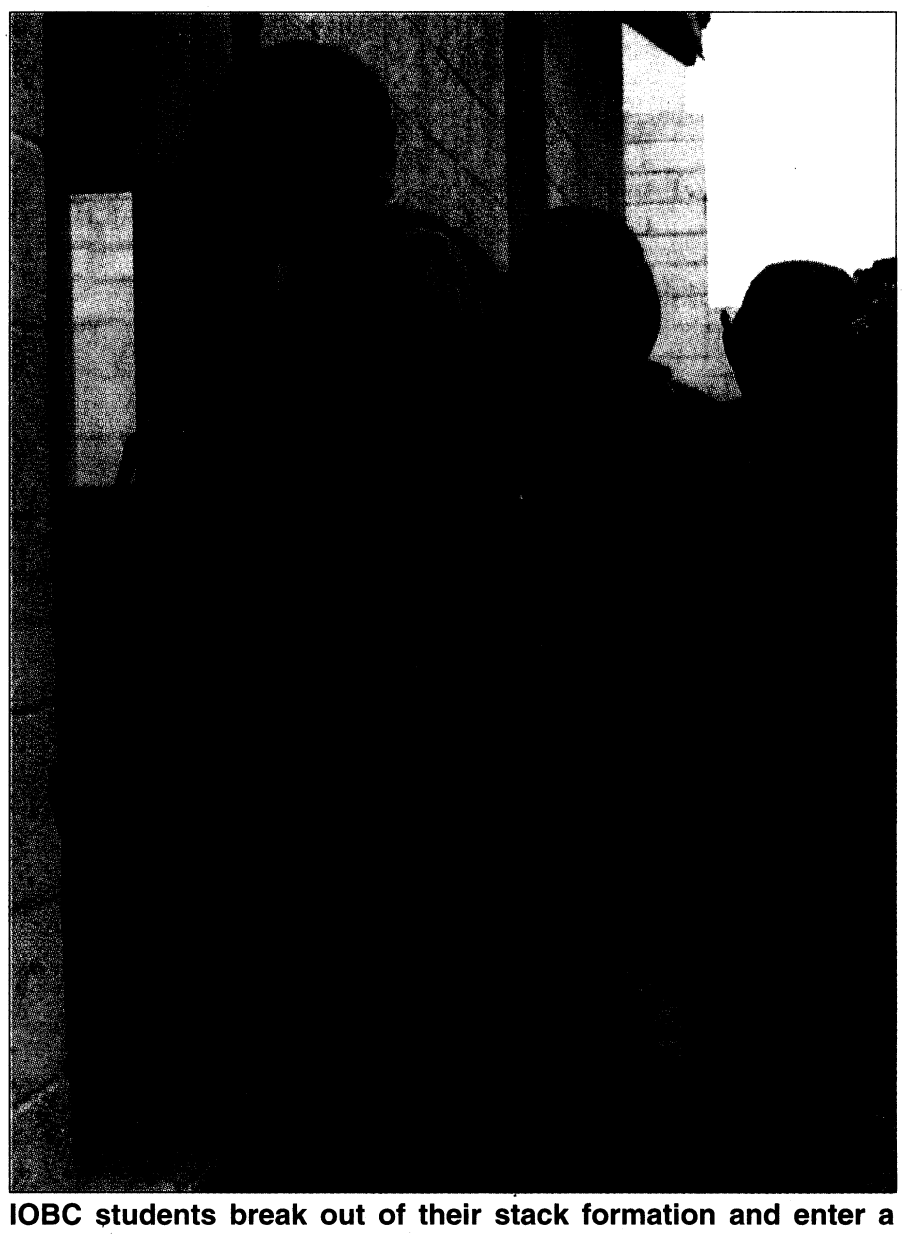


"I think what's being used on the battlefield is right on point with what's being taught in the classroom," Carpenter said. "These are viable techniques and doctrines these guys can use over there."

IOBC is taking this tightening up of training seriously and incorporated much more this cycle than ever before, said Maj. William Bestermann, B Company commander with IOBC.

While personnel from 3rd Brigade's Public Affairs Detachment role-play as civilian media, Bradley fighting vehicles were used to teach the integration of light and mechanized infantry in urban operations and, on Friday, a Stryker static display familiarized the IOBC students with the Army's newest fighting vehicle.

"I feel as prepared for war as I think I can be at this point," Smith said.



"You can never have enough training, and you never really know what to expect the first time you go to war. You just hope the guy to your right and left do the right thing and you come out all right."

An IOBC student fires a simmunition round clearing a room.

Sgt. 1st Class Benjamin Carpenter, a Ranger with the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, currently in ANCOC, gives a class on breaching methods to IOBC students at McKenna MOUT site Oct. 13. Carpenter used experience gained during five combat deployments — four in Afghanistan and one in Iraq — to field questions about the real-world execution of doctrine taught in both ANCOC and IOBC.

IOBC students break out of their stack formation and enter a building to face some of their classmates in a clearing exercise at McKenna MOUT site Oct. 13.

A plane arrives at Lawson Army Air Field Tuesday afternoon under the surveillance of the air traffic controllers who operate the LAAF tower.

Air traffic controllers monitor, control skies

Lawson Army Air Field is home to many of Fort Benning's Soldiers who, day in and day out, perform jobs that are instrumental to the installation's training and nontraining missions. Some of those Soldiers are Soldiers like Sgt. 1st Class Walter Tisdale, an air traffic controller.

"People don't realize what we deal with on a daily basis," Tisdale said. "We have a lot of responsibilities as air traffic controllers, monitoring the air traffic that comes in and out the Fort Benning air space which covers an area of 4.2 miles and 2,700 feet."

A 15Q for 20 years, Tisdale has served in various countries around the world, including two tours in Korea and two tours in Germany.

On a bad weather day, Tisdale said his Soldiers may see one to two aircraft in a span of eight hours.

"We've had days with eight planes waiting either at the runway or waiting to land," he said.

During 18 weeks of training at Fort Rucker, Ala., Soldiers learn the basics of working in a tower, radar room and working in a tactical platoon, how to take into account the difference in size, aircraft speed and flight path of aircraft — all the basic rules and regulations that must be followed by tower personnel.

Tactical platoons are platoons that deploy with a humvee or five-ton vehicle and mobile air traffic control equipment performing the same duties minus the tower.

The regulations followed by air traffic controllers are the same followed by civilian personnel with the same job.

"All of our tower certifications are approved through the Federal Aviation Administration," Tisdale said. "We receive the same tower certifications that all air traffic controllers receive in the civilian sector."

The guarantee of good job training and certifications is what interested Tisdale in the MOS 20 years ago.

"After three years I realized that it's one of the better jobs in the Army," he said. "The training is useful outside of the Army and there are so many certifications that Soldiers may receive. There's also a lot of parts to this job, which makes it challenging.

"You may have been good at working in the tower, but once you go to another station you might have to work in a tactical platoon and you have to be able to adapt. It's a good job."

Because of the difference in installations, air field space, equipment and job positions, all air traffic controllers must recertify every time they move from one installation to another.

The Control Tower Operator Certificate is the first certification Soldiers can earn within the first seven months at an installation, Tisdale said. Upon arrival to Fort Benning, a Soldier is assigned a trainer who makes sure the Soldier both studies and receives performance training and critiques to ensure they meet the FAA standards. If Soldiers do not get a CTO certification they may be reclassed.

"This job requires discipline," Tisdale said. "These Soldiers have to constantly study, take tests, receive new certifications and still maintain a good mental health. You don't have to be a PT guru, but mentally you have to be sharp.

"We control the movements of the aircraft so we have to be alert at all times," Tisdale said. "If you aren't paying attention you can cause an accident. Pilots rely on us. We get at least one physical per year to ensure that we are in good health both physically and mentally."

Cpl. Scott Rector is an air traffic controller at Lawson Army Airfield. One of his duties is to man the local control point in the tower. The position includes reading the radar and talking to aircraft pilots while they are in Fort Benning air space.

Currently Tisdale has 11 air traffic controllers working under him at LAAF.

"Not a lot of people get to do this job," Tisdale said. "There's a lot of prestige in this job because there are so few of us. It's feels even better to be able to talk to pilots in their aircraft and know that I can do the same thing that civilians do on the outside."

Teachers talk military kid issues

Learn how best to meet kids' needs

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

What do military families and educator "families" have in common? Far more than the educators attending the first day of the Military Child Education Coalition's Transition Counselor Institute initially thought.

Seventy educators from Fort Benning and the greater Columbus area met Oct. 20-21 at the Officers' Club for training, designed to help them address issues faced by mobile military students.

Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley welcomed the educators and gave them personal perspective on the issue.

"I am a military child," Freakley said. "And I have five military children. Our kids need you."

Because the annual turnover rate in the Fort Benning schools is above 50 percent — 54 percent rotated in 2003 — Freakley said the classrooms and the schools need to be the sanctuary for the students.

He said the educators need to start planning for the influx of military children who will arrive to begin the 2005 school year. They will be part of the 5th Brigade, 25th Infantry Division, which stands up in October 2005.

"You have to let the parent and child know you'll take care of them and their needs," Freakley said. "There's nothing better than that triangle of parent, teacher and child working together."

He mentioned four elements of the Soldiers Creed he felt related to the educators — placing the mission first, never accepting defeat, never quitting and never leaving a fallen comrade.

"Any child we do not do our best for is a fallen comrade," he said. "All the potential rests in your hands, to turn that potential into capability."

Dr. Mary Keller, the executive director of MCEC, led the educators through the Oct. 20 training, focusing on finding common ground and sharing ideas, perspectives and programs to help military children.

Keller spent 21 years as a public school educator and several years as an administrator before helping found MCEC in 1997. Shelly Campos and Meg Wilkins, who help Keller facilitate the training, bring their experiences as military children and military spouses with them.

The private, nonprofit organization serves all branches of the military, school districts and individuals, spreads information about the educational needs of military children and shares solutions. Since 1997, the coalition has trained more than 2,000 teachers and counselors.

Keller handed the educators their first set of missions. First, she asked them to identify core values of educators and any public myths and biases. Then the groups repeated the process using military families as the subject. In each group of 10 was at least one educator who had been a military child, military spouse or an active-duty Soldier.

"I was moved by what General Freakley said," Keller said. "And educators serve too, just like the military."

Keller had the groups find the common ground between

CrossRoads a 'come as you are' kind of place

Pvt. James E. Lewis
3rd Brigade PAO

Casual, contemporary and relevant. If those words sound familiar, chances are you've seen the hundreds of signs around post promoting the CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel.

The chaplains of CrossRoads, with services at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill, are hoping to attract new members with a modern style of worship; and so far, it seems to be working.

Chaplain (Maj.) Harry Rauch, one of several chaplains who preach at CrossRoads, said the congregation averaged about 15 when the contemporary program was launched last summer. That number increased dramatically, with nearly 200 in attendance at its peak. Rauch credits the new approach to worship.

"The key words are casual, contemporary and relevant," he said. "It's a non-suit environment with a relaxed atmosphere. The music we play is non-traditional — we have a band — and we preach relevant biblical topics, relevant in the sense that they focus on issues young people experience every day."

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins, Fort Benning's Family Life chaplain, said CrossRoads has adopted a "come as you are" approach.

"If you want to show up in jeans and a T-shirt, that's just fine," said Hawkins, the CrossRoads team leader. "The main thing we want to get across is that we offer real solutions to the real problems that real people face."

Last month's series, Cheaper by the Dozen, focused on what Rauch described as "bringing up a Seventh Heaven family in a Jerry Springer world."

This month's series is called Lord of the Rings.

"It's focusing on marriage and offers good ideas on how to keep your love growing when the Army may be taking you apart," Rauch said. "It applies to Soldiers who are deploying and even the everyday stress Soldiers experience from their jobs, and how couples can improve their marriage as they go through that together."

Just so people know this is not their garden-variety church, CrossRoads takes its modern approach one step further by giving away prizes at the end of each series. So far, they've given away a motorcycle and a trip to Disney World.

At the end of Lord of the Rings, CrossRoads plans to give Chaplain to retire with 39 years service, sacrifice

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Two rings, placed on opposite hands, seem to represent the essence of all Joe O'Keeffe is.

On his left hand is a simple, silver ring with a cross. This represents his devotion to his religion, his God, his savior and his country.

A Black Hills Gold ring, placed on his right hand, declares "Dad." For a Catholic Jesuit priest, being a dad is not only uncommon, but a unique blessing for a man who has devoted his life to Christ.

Chaplain (Col.) Joe O'Keeffe, Garrison Catholic pastor, has spent more than half of his life in the service of God and country. On Nov. 24 he will take terminal leave, retiring officially Jan. 31.

Raised in an Irish Catholic family in upstate New York, in a town Life magazine once labeled as "Hometown USA" during World War II, O'Keeffe had the all-American childhood.

He was the only child of a school teacher and pharmacist and went to Catholic schools.

"My mother was very religious and every Sunday, without fail, we went to church," O'Keeffe said. "It was standard operating practice. After graduation from high school, that's when I felt a call to the ministry. It was a gentle, persistent voice saying 'Come, follow me.'"

At 18, O'Keeffe enrolled in ROTC as he attended Fordham College in New York. He was a Distinguished Military Graduate and commissioned in June of 1965 in an armor division.

"I dated through my senior year of college," O'Keeffe said. "I even had someone who could have been my wife."

With the choice of a family of his own or serving in the ministry, he made a decision that he admits to sometimes looking back on with pains of regret.

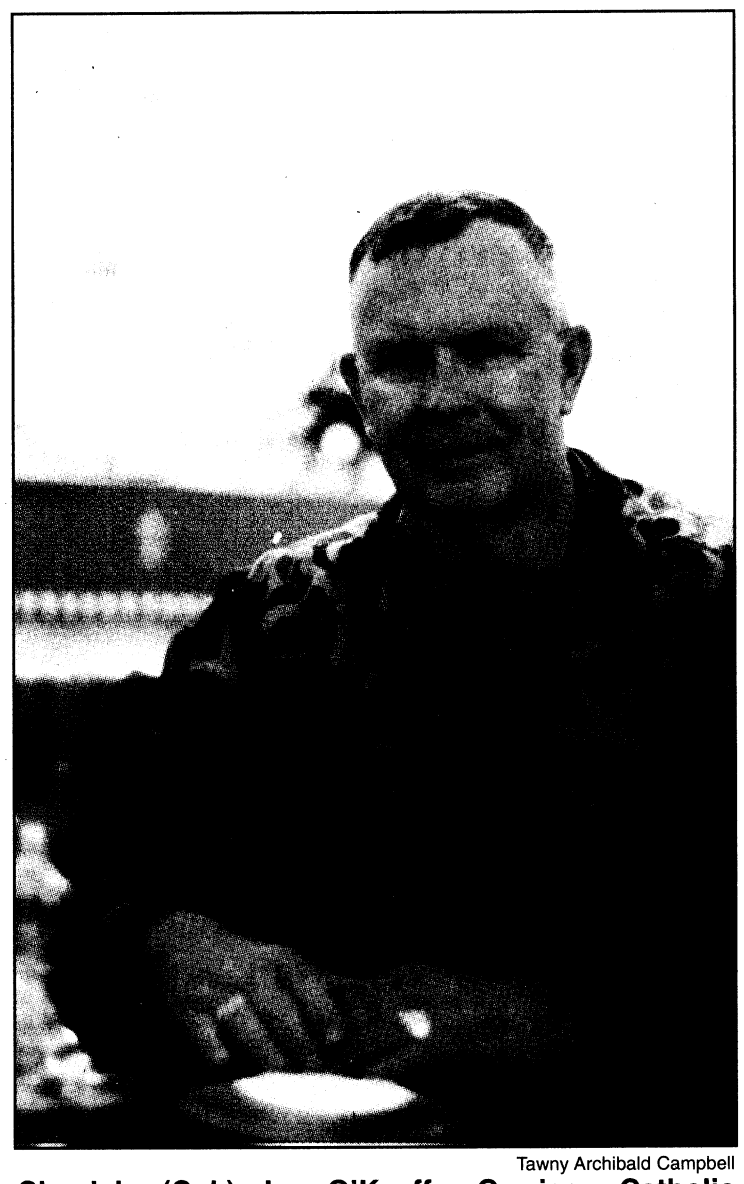
"It is a very difficult thing to live a single committed life in giving, sharing and supporting others," O'Keeffe said, "and yet the walls don't talk to you when you go into the rectory."

After 10 years in seminary, O'Keeffe was ordained as a Jesuit priest, and after two more years with his reserve unit, he entered active duty, serving as the garrison Catholic pastor at Fort Sam Houston.

While in Texas, O'Keeffe became acquainted with a divorced mother of three who had developed cancer. He became a good family friend and kept in touch once he moved to Georgia.

"In January of 1983, while I was at Fort Benning, she had a flare-up," O'Keeffe said. "Jimmy had just completed the eighth grade and I said, 'Why don't you let me be his legal guardian. She agreed, we went to court and made it legal."

Realizing he had no health insurance for Jimmy, O'Keeffe went back to the boy's mother with a proposition. Let him adopt Jimmy so he could offer him military benefits. Both parents agreed and O'Keeffe became a "father."



"About six months later, it appeared that there was some sibling rivalry, so I said, 'Why not adopt the two girls,'" O'Keeffe said.

The girls were adopted, but continued to live with their mother in Texas while his son lived with him. All of his children are now married and he has six grandchildren.

"It is really nice to be a father," O'Keeffe said. "My daughter came to Fort Myers when I was promoted to colonel and pinned my eagle on me. I consider it a huge blessing in my life (to have children) and it has given me a greater respect for parents with teenagers."

Becoming a dad and a Catholic father was something O'Keeffe never thought could be possible, but throughout his life he has seen many dreams come true.

"Ever since I had gone to a six-week ROTC summer camp and watched Soldiers jump out of planes, I wanted to become a Jesuit priest, airborne chaplain and see the world," he said.

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Chaplain (Col.) Joe O'Keeffe, Garrison Catholic Pastor, will retire in November after an illustrious military career.

That is precisely what happened. O'Keeffe has served in Korea, Panama, Somalia, Alaska, Texas, North Carolina, Washington, D.C., and Georgia. O'Keeffe said every place

Stopping cycle of violence is key

Family Advocacy Program

Violence is passed on from one generation to the next in homes where abuse takes place. Children first learn about the adult world in their families. What are your children learning if you are a battered woman? They could be learning violence in the home is a way to deal with conflict.

What effects does domestic violence have on children?

In homes where domestic violence occurs, children are at high risk of suffering physical abuse themselves. Regardless of whether children are physically abused, the emotional effects of witnessing domestic violence are very similar to the psychological trauma associated with being a victim of child abuse.

Children in homes where domestic violence occurs are physically abused or seriously neglected at a rate 1,500 percent higher than the national average of cases reported in the general population.

Children may "indirectly" receive injuries when household items are thrown or weapons are used.

Infants may be injured if being held by their mother when the abuser strikes out.

Children from violent homes have higher risks of alcohol and drug abuse and juvenile delinquency.

Possible signs of an abuser:

• An abuser is often extremely jealous and possessive.

• An abuser's anger is frequently disproportionate to the problem that arises.

• The abuser's anger is often displaced and exaggerated, with the objects of violence often being small animals and property as well as family members.

• The abuser often describes the alcohol abuse as the cause of the battering.

• The abuser blames the battered woman for the violence and the alcohol and other drug abuse.

• The abuser has ineffectively or not dealt with his abuse as a child.

• The abuser has hit or been abusive with a partner in the past.

Possible signs of a battered woman:

• She is frightened of her partner's temper.

• She is often compliant in order not to excite the batterer.

• She apologizes for her partner's behavior.

• She drinks heavily or uses other drugs to cope with the violent situation.

• She has visible bruises, or other temporary or permanent injuries without appropriate explanation.

If you, or someone you know, is involved in a domestic violence situation, call for help. The violence rarely stops without outside intervention.

For more information, call Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager, or Theresa Sanchez, Victim Advocate, at 545-4013 or 545-7517.

Post observes Family Violence Awareness month

Post program to bring together professionals

Spc. David Foley

Bayonet staff

The Family Advocacy Program has invited the community to attend two events that will be the culmination of the observance of Family Violence Awareness Month.

"Our main focus is to educate the community about domestic violence," said Theresa Sanchez, a victim advocate with the Family Advocacy Program. "We want Fort Benning to attend because we have a code that says family violence is everyone's business."

Sanchez said domestic violence education is important because it affects everyone in one way or another.

"Family violence can and does happen to anyone," she said. "It doesn't just affect the rich or the poor, and it doesn't differentiate certain races, cultures or ages.

"Even if they aren't directly affected by violence, people have an obligation to know about the programs so they can pass on the information to those who need it."

There will be a candlelight vigil in the Government Center at 7 p.m. Tuesday that will be a memorial for the 42 Georgians who died this year because of domestic violence.

Sanchez said the vigil will also be a celebration of sorts for victims who have left abusive situations.

The second event will be at 11:30 a.m. Thursday in the Officers' Club and will feature two guest speakers from the local community.

Muscogee County State Court Judge Maureen Gottfried and Phenix City Chief of Police Preston Robinson will give their perspective on violence. The event will be a good opportunity for professionals from the community who work with couples or children to get together with other professionals and discuss ways to work together, said Rebecca Welch, FAP manager.

"We all need to constantly work together to combat violence," Welch said. "One person can't do it alone. The more people who know about the resources out there the better chance we have at stopping it."

For more information, call FAP at 545-4013.

away a cruise to the Caribbean.

"The giveaways are a good starter to get folks to say, 'Hey, there's something new, let's check it out,'" Rauch said.

"It's kind of a hook to get them to come in, and once they're here, we feel like they'll like what they see. Whether or not we'll continue the giveaways in the future, we'll have to wait and see."

Hawkins pointed out that the Kelley Hill services are open to everyone.

"This is a postwide ministry," he said. "There's a certain energy that Main Post brings to Kelley Hill.

"We've made it postwide so that once Soldiers from 3rd Brigade deploy to Iraq, there'll be a vibrant congregation left behind to minister to the families."

Like the congregation, CrossRoads' clergy team is comprised of chaplains from various units.

"We use a team approach to the service," Hawkins said. "Certain chaplains are best at certain things.

"Those who are best at speaking and administering — that's what we have them do. There's a place for everybody, and everybody has a place."

Hawkins said CrossRoads contemporary approach has received a phenomenal response from the Soldiers and community.

"It's just amazing," he said. "People are coming up and telling me this is exactly what they've been looking for.

"We are definitely meeting a need."

With attendance increasing steadily, Hawkins advises early arrival for those who hope to get a seat.

What will happen if the church runs out of room?

"The mission will be accomplished," Hawkins said. "We will make room. We'll never turn anybody away."

Teachers: Tackle tough issues with parents, kids

the educators and the military families, and present their findings. Common threads were the respect for authority, resilience and high level of community involvement found in both military families and educators. One working group said as the military's role was to "defend and protect," their role was to "educate and prepare."

"All together, we serve in different ways," Keller said, "even military children."

Faith Middle School sent three representatives to the training, including assistant principal Jimmy Cochrane and eighth-grade teachers Becky Willoughby and Lee Strickland.

Both teachers were attending the training for the first time and were looking forward to learning things that would make them better able to help their students and help make their transition to high school more successful.

"We love our students," Willoughby said. "We believe in these students and they know it."

Strickland said they, as team leaders at Faith, would be responsible for going back and briefing the teachers in their teams.

"We'll be giving them all the information we get from this training," Strickland said. Educators who attended the training are eligible to receive continuing education credits.

Robert Pitts was among the contingent from Muscogee County hoping to walk out of the training with a better understanding of what the military student goes through.

"You don't realize the differences, or what you (as educators) have in common with the students until you sit down and talk," Pitts said.

Pitts is a part-time guidance counselor and part-time teacher at the Academic Success Center, and has several students each year from military families.

"I hope we can do a better job of serving the new influx of students," Pitts said.

O' Keeffe: To retire soon

he has lived has taught him things about people, religion and himself. In Fort Sam Houston, O'Keeffe remembers watching a cardinal visit 40 Marines who had been severely burned in a barracks fire.

"It was an awesome, wonderful learning experience to watch how he related and connected to those Marines, as a 60-year-old man with 20-year-old Marines," O'Keeffe said. "I saw that age doesn't have to be a barrier if you know how to relate."

In 1998 Washington, D.C., O'Keeffe offered a prayer for the nation at the disinterment of the body in the tomb of the unknown Vietnam Soldier. That same year, when terrorists attacked the embassy in East Africa, he again offered up the prayer for the nation as the United States received the bodies of those military and state department employees who lost their lives in the incident.

"On my 50th birthday, I made my 50th airborne jump on the 50th anniversary of the combat jump into Sicily, at Fort Bragg with the regiment who originally jumped into Sicily," O'Keeffe said. "I have been truly blessed and honored with great positions. For me there are public highlights, but the most important things are the baptisms and weddings I perform.

"Doing a baptism for a family or getting a couple off on the right track with a spiritual emphasis on their wedding day — that is what it is all about. That is joy."

O'Keeffe will be conducting his last mass on Nov. 21. After retiring from the Army he will be moving to New Hampshire where he hopes to work at a VA Hospital.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Someone just named me as the father of her child. What should I do?

A: If paternity is asserted against you, the first thing you should do is speak to an attorney. This topic is too complex to give guidance to fit all circumstances in a newspaper article, but some basics can be covered.

The process normally works as follows: The mother of a child born outside of marriage contacts a state agency and applies for public assistance and help in requiring the alleged father to pay child support.

The state agency will then contact the alleged father, and inform him that he has been alleged to be the father. If he is willing to admit to paternity, he can sign some papers and a monthly child support obligation will be computed.

If he does not admit to paternity, then a blood or DNA test will be court-ordered.

If the test excludes the man from being the father, the action against him is closed. If he is determined to be the father, then a child support obligation will be established, and he will have to repay the costs of the test.

If he does not participate in the test, then he will be named to be the father.

Anyone involved in a paternity action should seek specific advice from an attorney.

Housing chief sets goals

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

With his feet propped up on an open desk drawer, Jim Wiggins reclined in his office chair with a phone tucked under one ear.

He shook his head as he placed the phone back on the receiver.

"I just don't know what to do in this case," said Wiggins, Fort Benning's housing division chief. "I can't help them if they won't help themselves."

At first glance it would be hard to believe this easy-going man is responsible for all the housing on Fort Benning, the unaccompanied person housing and off-post housing for Soldiers.

"My goal is not to make the Soldier happy," Wiggins said. "It's to make the spouse happy. Ninety-nine percent of the time if the spouse is happy the Soldier will be too."

As a husband, father and grandfather who has worked in military housing for more than 20 years, Wiggins knows military housing needs to be a home — someplace where a family can feel safe and comfortable.

"My goal is to bring up the on-post use rate by making the houses more appealing," Wiggins said. "(Off-post housing) is my competition for your BAQ. We have a commissary, PX, hospital and schools and that is all good, but if we offer you a piece of crap house and off post is a really nice house, what would you pick?"

Since coming to Fort Benning in September, Wiggins has come up with some ideas to improve the housing situation.

These improvements include providing more appealing residences through painting and landscaping, rewriting the housing handbook, enforcing housing rules already in place, increasing morale among housing staff and answering every question presented to him or his staff.

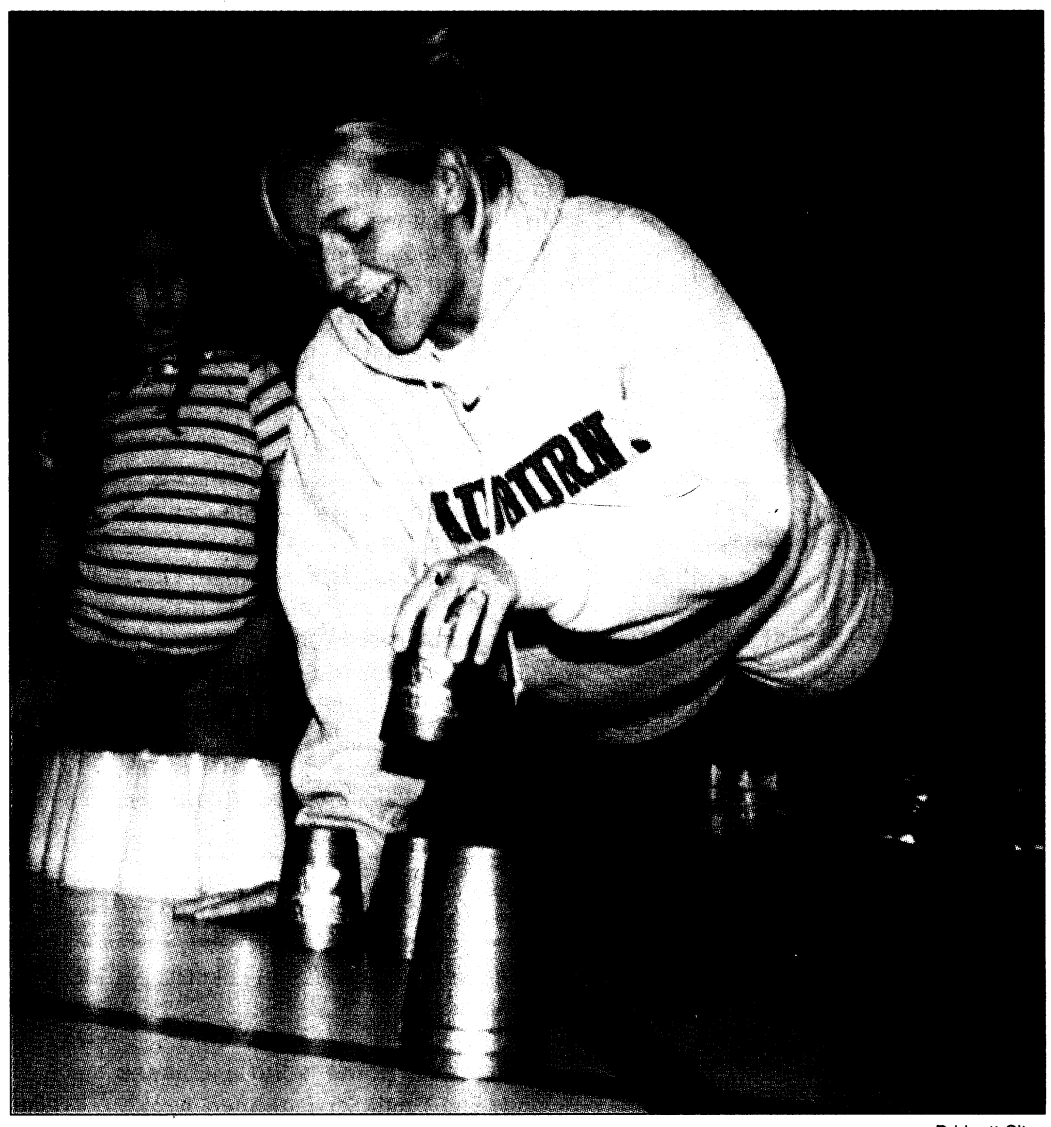
"When people talk to me, I will get them an answer," Wiggins said. "Will I guarantee them the answer they want to hear? No, but I will guarantee them an answer."

Wiggins said there are two main ideas he hopes to get across to his employees, which in turn should help increase their effectiveness and interaction with Soldiers and families.

"Number one is the KISS theory — keep it simple stupid," Wiggins said.

"The other one, which is directed more toward our inspectors, is if you wouldn't move your family into that house, it's not good enough for the Soldier."

Knowing what is good for the Soldier is something this Vietnam veteran is very familiar with.



Since 1982 Wiggins has worked in the housing divisions in Fort Polk, La.; Fort Clayton, Panama; Hanau, Germany; Fort Buchanan, Puerto Rico; Fort Sam Houston, Texas and other installations.

Even with his experience, Wiggins knows changing the housing division is a huge undertaking; however, he thinks within the next few months people should see a noticeable difference in their communities.

"I'm not saying it will happen November 1st, but starting in January there will be an increase in the quality of housing on Fort Benning," Wiggins said.

"At least once a week I will be checking out the housing areas. So, if you see a fat boy with gray hair in the neighborhood, it's just me."

REFLECTIONS

The 19th century philosopher and theologian Soren Kierkegaard told a story about some wild geese that teaches a powerful lesson.

The geese came and went with the seasons as they had done for centuries.

One day, some of the geese, on their annual journey, landed in a farmer's barnyard.

He adopted them and saw to it that they had plenty of grain to eat.

Life was easy for these geese and they decided they had found the perfect place to live out the rest of their days.

But as time went along, the easy life took its toll.

The geese became fat and lazy, and their ambition to soar again in the high places faded away.

When they heard the familiar honks of their friends high above, the fat, lazy barnyard geese could only casually look up.

Once in a while, one of them would have an old stirring deep inside to join their friends and soar again where the air was pure, sweet and clear.

One day, one of the geese couldn't resist the urge, so it started its courageous run across the pasture, opened its wings, became airborne for only a few feet, and then plopped shamefully back to the ground.

Before long the call to the high places was all but gone in the barnyard geese.

Their friends would fly over, honking their call to the higher, nobler life, but the grounded geese pretty much ignored the call as they contently pecked away at the farmer's corn.

It wasn't long before the desire to return to the sky and long flights to freedom disappeared altogether.

They were made for high places but the soft life had ruined them.

In Philippians 3:4b-14, the apostle Paul tells us that we too were made for "high places," spiritually high places.

Epaphroditus had come from Philippi to Rome, where Paul was a prisoner, with news the Philippian church was not doing too well.

Pride had invaded the church, and some of the believers, giving in to self-centered desires, were living in the low spiritual swamp of pride, where the air was heavy and foul.

The once-pure fellowship of the Philippian church had been poisoned by the noxious fumes of selfishness.

Paul wrote to tell them that God made them for better things, and that they were to press on with holy determination to Christ-like character.

There is a divine call for them to a higher life.

The same is true for us today.

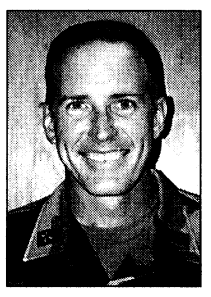
We can take the high road or the low road. We can live in the foul swamp of self-centeredness or reach for the high places of spiritual maturity.

John Oxenham wrote this about the choice we make:

To every man there openeth
A way, and Ways, and a Way
The High Soul climbs the High Way,
And the Low Soul groups the Low,
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A High Way, and a Low
And every man decideth
The Way his soul shall go.

For the Christian who would like to live on the high plane of spiritual maturity and Christ likeness, there are some encouragements given in these verses of Philippians.

Paul said Jesus "took hold" of him. These words literally mean to lay hold of something as if to make it your own.



Jesus encourages us by making us his very own and pointing us upward toward life's high places for which we were made.

The second thing to remember, in this upward call to excellence, is the prize that awaits us.

That final, glorious thing that the father is working toward in redemption is to develop within us the character of Jesus Christ, because by it his name will be glorified.

Little gifts can mean a lot

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Hawkins

At the CrossRoads chapel this Sunday, a lean lieutenant came up to me and rattled off a sentence I didn't quite catch, so I said, "I'm sorry?" He then proceeded to say the exact same thing — which, again, in the exact same way I didn't understand!

Becoming a little bit perturbed I leaned closer and I had him try one more time when I realized that amidst the drone of noise and people around me he was literally speaking a language I didn't understand — he was speaking German!

Ever been a bit confused, perplexed or perturbed when somebody doesn't speak your language? Well, that can happen in relationships all the time, can't it? Did you know we each have a primary "Language of Love" (LOL ... it's the Army, you gotta love those acronyms.) And when you don't have somebody speaking your LOL, I can guarantee you you'll either feel confused, perplexed, perturbed or even hurt.

That's why for this month, I'm introducing you to the The Five Love Languages as set forth by Dr. Gary Chapman in his million-seller book by the same title.

So far, we've said that if you want to keep your love together when the Army is taking you apart you have to learn how to best fill your mate's love needs.

The first language of love we talked about was affirmation (verbal compliments, encouraging and kind words).

Last week we learned that for some folks the language they understand best is quality time (quality conversation and quality activity). This week we move to the third LOL, which is receiving gifts.

Now if this is your LOL, you won't need any help in understanding how to speak it. However, for the rest of us whose language isn't receiving gifts, here are a few tips to remember for that special person who's yearning for you to speak their LOL.

• It's not about the gift, but it is about the thought. The good news is your gift doesn't have to be pricey; it just has to be thoughtful. Just last week I gave my wife Lori the "gift" of a little silly note, kind of a homemade valentine, scratched on a memo pad in our kitchen. It now sits on the Hawkins wall of fame, the family place of honor — you guessed it, the refrigerator. It didn't cost me much, but to her that little note obviously meant a lot.

Get creative! Again, the good news is that creativity doesn't have to cost you anything but a few moments of strategic thinking. What's one way this week you could "ambush" your lover with a creative gift that demonstrates your love and is a tangible reminder of your commitment to him or her?

Make sure to give a gift that speaks to your mate and not to you. A new set of Craftsman wrenches may be the quickest way to your heart, but it may leave her a bit unimpressed.

Perhaps he'd get a bit more excited over dinner served to him in a way you've never served it before (minus the kids!), more than he would a gift subscription to the Harlequin Reading Club. Focus on giving a gift that's more meaningful to your mate than it is to you.

Want some more language tutoring? Then come join me for our series, Lord of the Rings: Keeping Your Love Together When the Army's Taking You Apart at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel. It's postwide for everyone.

You can also give me a call at 545-1760 or stop in at the Chaplain Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

I look forward to serving you!

Daquin Cheek, a second string strong safety on Shaw High School's football team, says the winning feeling drives him and his teammates to do the right thing.

Shaw junior tackles hard work

Good attitude makes star player

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

While most teenagers are at home surfing the Internet or chatting on the phone, one Shaw High School junior is busy with other things.

Daquin Cheek, a second string strong safety on Shaw's football team, keeps himself occupied with ambitions of playing college ball.

Cheek also plays baseball and is the captain of the wrestling team, but said football is his passion.

"I love football, and I love it here because we win all the time," he said. "It's that winning feeling that drives me on."

Drive is definitely something Cheek has, balancing three sports and maintaining a 3.0 grade point average.

"It doesn't leave a lot of free time," he said. "I go home, get my work done, take a shower and go to bed. There is no time to talk on the phone to my friends. If I were to do that, I would be on the wrong path."

Cheek said he owes a lot of his success to his father, Sgt. 1st Class Tarrol Preston, who was his coach while he played Youth Sports football on post.

"He's the one who gives me the kick in the butt when I'm down," Cheek said.

Cheek said his fathers' military service has also helped him become a more well-rounded person.

After attending seven schools during his academic career, Cheek said he has been around the world and had the opportunity to meet people from all walks of life and can see things from all angles.

Jason Quinley, who is an assistant coach on the wrestling and football teams, said Cheek has a lot of potential and is making a name for himself as a leader.

Quinley said it is hard for anyone to break out of the second string line up on the football team, mainly because the starting line is so good; however, that doesn't discourage Cheek.

"He has been in several positions, and he is a quick learner," Quinley said.

"He always keeps himself with a partner who can push him."

Cheek also attends the summer work-outs when he is not involved in other sports.

Quinley said Cheek is usually seen with the seniors on the team because he wants to be associated with the "guys who get things done."

Cheek said the seniors provide great leadership to the younger members of the team which affects everyone involved.

"We always set the example," Cheek said.

"We want to make sure everyone knows that."

Road Dawgs beat 30th AG

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

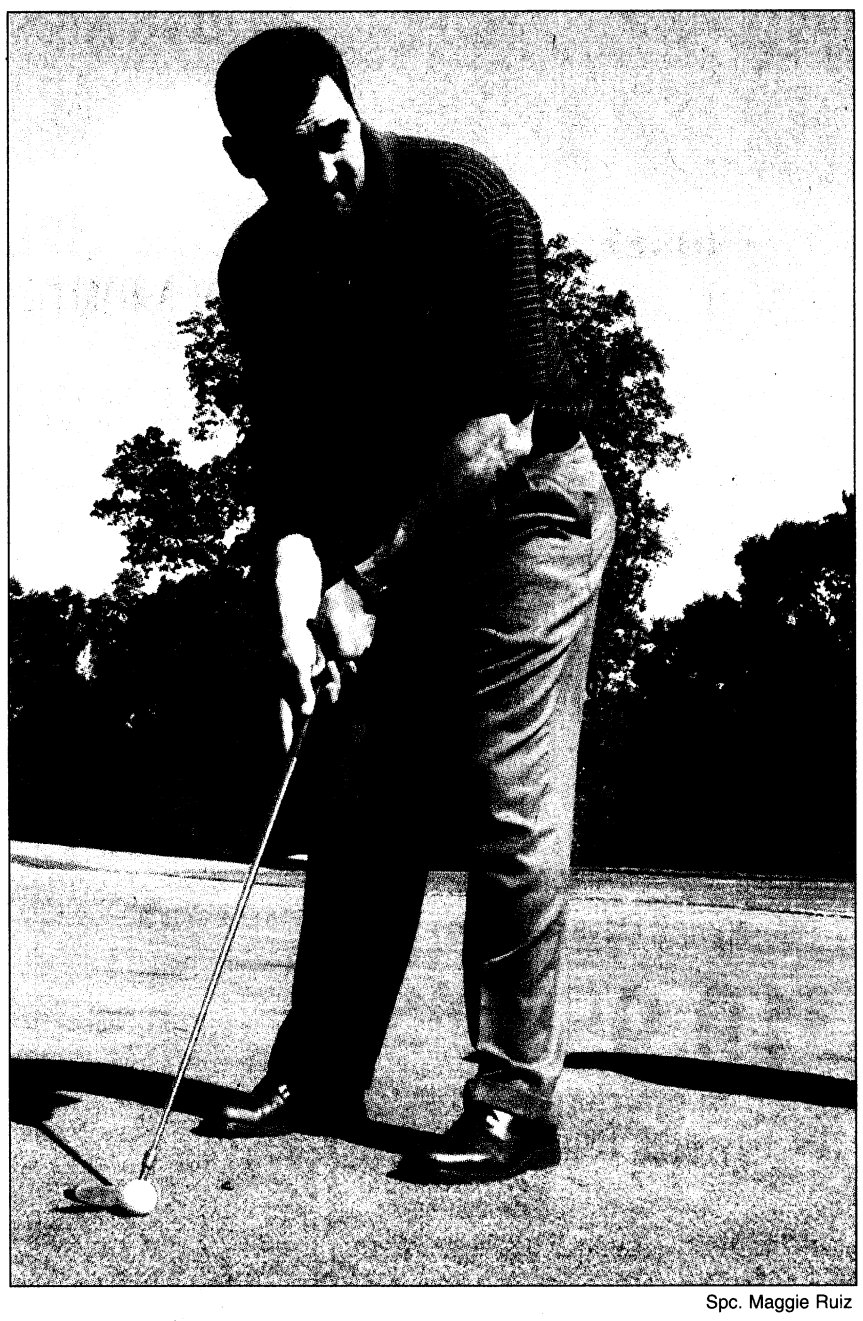
The 104th Transportation Company "Road Dawgs" put the 30th AG in a kennel Oct. 19 during a flag football game at Engineer Field.

During the second play of the game, Road Dawg Jonathan Richards intercepted the first pass of the game from a shaky 30th AG offense.



Martez Richmond was quick to capitalize, scoring a touchdown on the next play, putting the Road Dawgs up to an early 6-0 lead.

After an easy 1 point conversion by Kevin Smith bringing the score to 7-0, 30th AG's offense took the field to try again. After a few quick first downs taking 30th AG to their own 45 yard line, the Road Dawg defense turned up the heat.

Road Dawg Christopher Williams took to the air to block a nice floater from 30th AG quarterback Todd Powers and on the next play Derrick Adams went ahead and finished the 30th AG push up the field with an interception. But the Road Dawgs day arrived on the first play of that hard-won offensive possession when 30th AG defensive player Keith Rodgers picked off the Road Dawg quarterback. The play was called back on a technicality, but the Dawgs were out of steam and failed to

Wrestling grapples its way onto post

Youth Services to offer wrestling

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

When John Wright came to Fort Benning with his family, he realized they might have to give up one of their favorite sports — wrestling.

Since there aren't community wrestling programs in the area, and his son wasn't old enough for a high school team, the family had to find some way to keep their favorite sport alive.

"(Wrestling) was something we had been thinking about for quite some time as another program for the youth to get into," said Linda Laine, Child and Youth Services sports and fitness director. "We were approached by John Wright, and since we were already thinking of doing something like this, it was a stroke of luck. We will probably be one of the only (wrestling teams) around."

Wright, who will be the coach, said the team is open to boys and girls ages 4 to 14. It will be a traveling team, which will travel to weekend tournaments across Georgia.

There will be an organizational meeting for parents of interested youth at 7 p.m. Monday at the FUN Center, Building 359.

Wright, who has participated in, coached and refereed wrestling, decided to approach CYS about creating team after his 7-year-old son, who wrestled in Kansas, wanted to find a place to wrestle.

"Wrestling is a whole family affair," Wright said, "and there was nothing here on Fort Benning or in Columbus."

So far, Wright has eight other assistant coaches organized to help with the new team and already has the first tournament set up.

The folk-style wrestling team will be chartered by USA Wrestling.

"There is a myth out there that wrestling is only for boys," Wright said. "It is for both boys and girls, and as far as I know, tournaments have both boys' and girls' brackets.

"Wrestling is a confidence builder and it teaches discipline and hard work. Those attributes are not gender specific. You want those same disciplines built in your daughter as in your son.

"This past year was the first time women's wrestling was an Olympic sport, so there is a lot of visibility, too."

Wright feels that wrestling, as a sport, builds so much confidence in athletes because you don't have to be a champion to be a success at it.

"As long as you give 100 percent and learn, you are a success," Wright said. "You're a winner at the end of the season if you say you gave 100 percent."

Laine hopes this sport will be another success and that the athletes will enjoy having another sporting option.

She also said she is looking into starting up a youth track and field team.

The first practice for the wrestlers will be Nov. 16. Practices will be on Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

The first tournament will be Nov. 27 in Park View, Ga.

There will be a registration fee of $40 for the season for each participant.

"I think in Coach Wright they will have an excellent coach and will be able to enjoy this program," Laine said.

"This is a team event where people can really enjoy the sport."

Dawgs: Put 30th AG in kennel

convert the third down.

30th AG took over again on offense, but quickly sputtered out in four short plays against the Road Dawgs oppressive defense.

Back on the drive for points, the Road Dawgs tried the run and met a wall of 30th AG linemen.

They turned to the air only to be foiled by Rodgers' second interception of the night.

The 30th AG took over at the Road Dawg's 15-yard line and wasted no time capitalizing on good field position.

A lofty end zone floater tipped off the hands of 30th AG receiver Mario Washington and landed in the hands of teammate Mark Rodriguez, pulling 30th AG to within one point of the Road Dawgs.

The extra point conversion failed, leaving 30th AG down as the game went into half time.

The Road Dawg offense started the second half with a long, drive up the field.

The players were stonewalled at the 30th AG 35-yard line when they failed to convert a third down.

30th AG's offense hit the ground running. A 40-yard run by Powers brought them within 20 yards of the end zone, but a pass caught by Rodgers was called back for pass interference.

Things only got worse for 30th AG's troubled offense when Road Dawg Williams came through for the second time that night and picked the ball off and running it back 70 yards to put the Dawgs ahead 13-6.

After going back and forth for several possessions without scoring, 30th AG took over with 19 seconds to go in the game.

A quick first down stopped the clock at 12 seconds and a second down run that made it out of bounds left 30th AG with 8 seconds to try a desperation last play.

As the last seconds of the game ticked off, a dropped pass ended the game, leaving 30th AG victim to the Road Dawgs, 13-6.

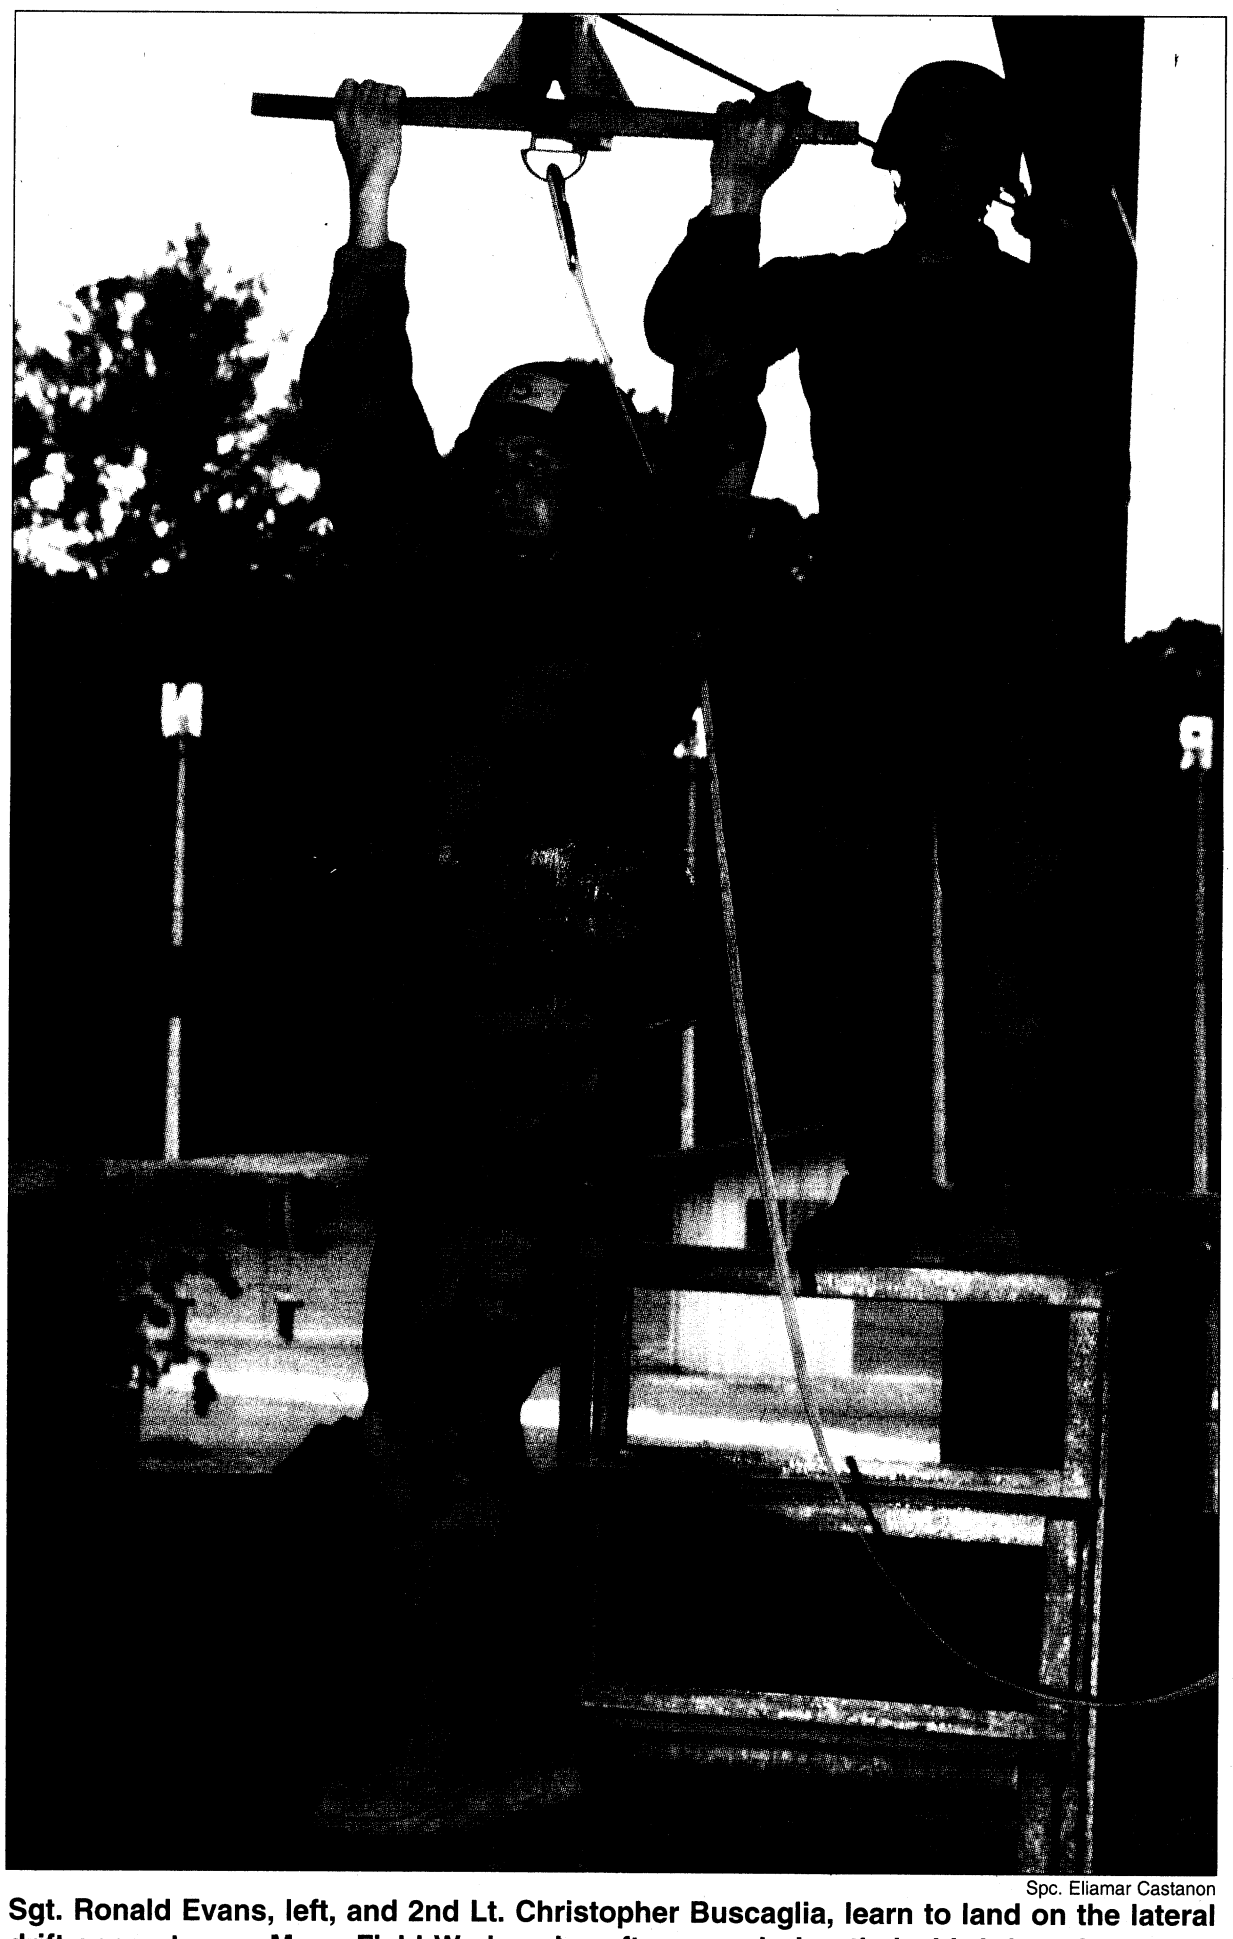
2005 BRAC to zero in on combat multipliers, joint training assets

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service



WASHINGTON — The 2005 base realignment and closure initiative will be different from previous rounds in that it will directly contribute to DoD's transformation efforts, a DoD official said Monday.

BRACs conducted between 1988 and 1995 closed 97 military bases and realigned 57, Raymond DuBois, deputy under-secretary of defense for installations and environment, told attendees at the Association of the U.S. Army's annual meeting. Officials today estimate the department still carries about 23 percent excess infrastructure. The 2005 BRAC will be unique in that besides paring no-longer-needed facilities, it will also support transformation goals, thereby making DoD better prepared for combating 21st century threats like global terrorism, DuBois said.

A key component of 2005 BRAC consideration, he said, involves weighing an installation's military value in view of how it contributes to and accommodates joint operations. Joint warfighting has proven to be the coin of the realm when confronting terrorists in Afghanistan and Iraq, he said. In the post-Cold War world, "the U.S. Army must own speed and surprise," DuBois said, noting that multiservice cooperation in the transportation field in recent years has greatly

Ranger killed on Afghan mission

Bridgett Siter

A 75th Ranger Regiment Soldier was killed Oct. 18 when his vehicle rolled over during a combat operation in eastern Afghanistan.

Cpl. William M. Amundson, 21, a native of The Woodlands, Texas, was on his fourth deployment with the regiment's 3rd Battalion, headquartered at Fort Benning. He was a 60 mm mortar gunner.

During the three years he served with the Rangers, Amundson received several awards, including the Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary medal, for his support of Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom. He was posthumously awarded a Bronze Star, Purple Heart and Meritorious Service Medal.

Amundson's family was unavailable for comment at press time. An online guest book was filled with notes of sympathy from friends, family and members of the Ranger community.

"My husband served side-by-side with Cpl. Amundson," wrote one wife. "God smiles down on those who selflessly

Woodpeckers picked to repopulate parks

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Wildlife specialists at Fort Benning will trap and send 16 endangered red-cockaded woodpeckers to national parks in Florida, Alabama and Mississippi in the next few weeks.

Eight male and eight female fledglings will be moved to three national parks, where there are fewer than 30 breeding pairs of birds, to supplement the small populations,

In the last four years, Fort Benning has moved 87 birds. Relocating birds increases small populations by introducing birds of breeding age. It prevents inbreeding so new generations will be healthy and genetically viable.

Fort Benning is one of four sites donating birds this year. A breeding pair of red-cockaded woodpeckers usually have only two offspring per year, which makes it difficult to increase their population.

The woodpeckers need open forest with mature long leaf pines to make cavities for roosting and nesting. The Directorate of Public Works has helped the red-cockaded woodpecker population grow by drilling into trees to place artificial nests and by banding and tracking the population.

As a result of DPW's efforts, Fort Benning's bird population is growing steadily. In 2002, DPW recorded 199 nests and located 222 nests this year.

There are 90,000 acres of habitat suitable for the birds at Fort Benning, and the Directorate of Public Works has a goal of 350

HAPPY HALLOWEEN

No tricks, just treats

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

There's something about October, specifically Halloween, which always excites me.

It may be that Halloween is the kick-off of the holiday season. Or maybe it's because when Halloween rolls around we all get to be little kids again and play dress-up. I don't know exactly what it is, but I love it.

I'm a Halloween freak. That's right, I'm one of those people who blankets her house with orange and black on Oct. 1. I decorate the bedrooms, bathroom, kitchen, living room and every room in between. I have pumpkins, ghosts, witches, scarecrows, black cats, skull and crossbones, spiders, cobwebs and grim reapers.

But here is the real kicker — I hate scary things.

You got that right. I can't stand to be scared. Not even for a minute.

Don't believe me?

My husband begged me to go into the Scooby Doo Haunted House at Six Flags, and I couldn't do it.

You know those haunted house rides at amusement parks? I've been in one, and I had my head in my lap, with my eyes closed and my hands over my ears the entire time.

You see, not everyone wants to be scared on Halloween.

My favorite part of Halloween is making treats and dressing up. And now that I have a daughter, Halloween is getting to be more and more fun.

It seems, however, that the older I get, the more I see the "other" side of Halloween.

When I was a kid, I didn't worry about having reflectors on my costume, X-raying candy or carrying a security light. All I knew was the more houses I went to, the more candy I got.

Growing up in a small town in Idaho, you don't worry if your candy is safe or if you've planned a safe trick-or-treating route. I just tried to avoid the houses that required giving you a "trick" before you could have your "treat."

My three sisters and I would just take off, walking about five miles or more. We went alone, and if we were lucky, one of us might have remembered to bring a light. If not, we went in the dark.

Things have sure changed.

Here are a few things I've learned from co-workers, neighbors and the Internet about Halloween safety and etiquette:

First is safety.

Children need to have safe costumes that are easy to put on and take off. They need to fit properly, so the child can move easily without tripping.

Parents need to make sure their little angels and monsters are properly supervised. Sending a 5-year-old out alone with a pillowcase is not a bright idea.

Speaking of bright ideas, make sure your child wears a reflector or carries a flashlight or glow stick. Again, sending your child out with a lit pumpkin won't cut it.

Use common sense.

When it comes to those who stay at home, be mindful of Halloween etiquette. If you're through giving out candy, turn off the porch light and maybe even the living room or kitchen light.

Clear off your sidewalk. Having a child trip over a garden hose or pumpkin and being taken to the hospital because of your negligence is not fun for you or them.

Finally, don't assume that everyone who is out on Halloween night wants to be scared. I've heard stories of children running in front of cars because someone scared them.

Scaring me, on the other hand, might give me a mild heart attack and a trip to the E.R.

Let's all use a little common sense this Halloween and make it safe and fun for everyone.

I'll be out and about this weekend, and I hope to see a few of you at my door. I promise not to scare you.

But, my husband is a different story.

Forget Halloween, I'm thinking Christmas

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

I made a huge, tactical error last year, and I'm bound and determined not to make it again.

By lack of planning, I didn't make it over to the Officers' Club for the Benning Bazaar until 30 minutes before it ended. That meant that I only had time to make a quick trip around to see everything before dashing back to make what I call "desperation" purchases.

This year, I won't do it. I'm clearing my calendar from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 6. Don't call me, don't e-mail, don't drop by my house. I won't be there. I'll be shopping.

The annual bazaar offers a great selection of gift items by local vendors. Not only do you support the local economy, but you also support our Fort Benning Soldiers and their families.

The Benning Bazaar is one of the major fund-raisers for the Officers' Spouses' Club.

Most of the money raised goes right back into Fort Benning to our schools and Santa's Castle, among others.

Some of that money goes off to college as scholarships in the hands of military children and spouses.

There's lots to see according to Sandy Risberg, the OSC Bazaar chairman. There are more than 70 vendors offering everything from A (art) to Z (zippered purses). You'll need to come on out on Nov. 6 to see just what falls in between. I promise, you won't be disappointed.

Looking for a gift for someone who has everything? I bet you'll find it here, in a one-of-a-kind Christmas ornament, a handmade card or a battle bag. I'm not going to tell you exactly what a battle bag is — you'll have to come find out for yourself.

And you won't spend a fortune to get in the door. Admission is $3 for shoppers 13 and older — and that goes right back into Welfare and Scholarship programs, too. They raised more than $7,000 last year. With your admission comes an opportunity to win door prizes donated by vendors.

When you get there — look for me. (I know, I've been telling everyone to look for me everywhere around post lately.) I'll probably be standing right inside the front door at the quilt table, oohing and aahing over every stitch in the queen-sized quilt made by OSC members.

It's a simple pattern made with a beautiful combination of fabrics and it's being auctioned off to the highest bidder. I've heard the bidding is somewhere around $250 already. You'll just have to see it to believe it.

Fort Benning trick-or-treats Sunday

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Sunday. This is the only day trick-or-treating is permitted.

This fun time for children can be tragic if common sense precautions are ignored.

Parents can ensure their child's safety with the following actions:

• Children younger than 13 are allowed to trick-or-treat.

• Preschool children must be accompanied by someone 14 or older.

• Limit trick-or-treating to the housing area in which the participants live and only visit homes with lighted entryways.

• Children should wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes that are short enough to prevent tripping. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or glow spray paint.

• Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks. Do not cut through yards. Look in all directions before crossing the street.

• Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision or substitute face paint or makeup instead.

• Pet owners should take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children.

• Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism.

• Children should carry flashlights.

• Never let your child eat anything until you have inspected the treats.

The time it takes to protect our children is small compared to the lifetime of regret a mishap can cause.

Enjoy the occasion, but make sure your child is well prepared to avoid accidents and injuries.

— Col. Charles D. Cornwell
Chief of Staff

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

I wanted to share an experience I've had here at Fort Benning that the "welcome packet" doesn't address.

Occasionally, I need the POV, whether it's for vocation or volunteering, dropping off dry-cleaning, getting groceries or executing errands. Since my husband is with the 3rd Brigade, that means a "fun run" to Kelley Hill at O'dark thirty.

Let me enlighten those who have never had this experience. There are no lights on the hill, except for oncoming traffic.

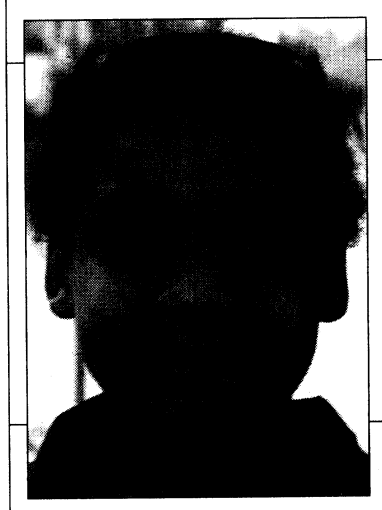
For those who have enjoyed this early morning diversion, I hope I can describe this mis-adventure in a manner you can relate to and laugh about later.

From 4:30-5 a.m., it's Fort Benning at its best. But at 5:05 a.m., the tranquility is replaced by the Kelley Hill 500.

Forget everything you've ever learned in your defensive driving classes. Be prepared to reach deep inside and draw out survival skills usually reserved for the wilds of Africa.

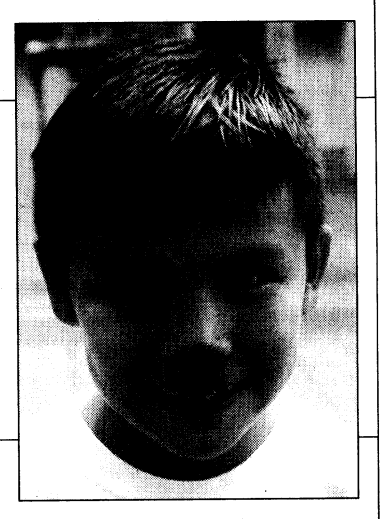
Drink a cup O' Joe while on the road? Not unless you're wearing a coffee-colored outfit.

Between those attempting to get to formation on time and those trying to leave the hill before it closes for PT — Halloween holds no horrors like the Kelley Hill 500.



Don't get me wrong, it has increased my metabolism and decreased my caffeine intake, and so far, I am enjoying Fort Benning.

I'm chuckling as I write this. I just had to share the trip with those around me.



— Kathleen Thornton

Fallen troops remembered at unveiling

Annette Fournier

Pvt. George S. Peters saved the lives of fellow Soldiers at the cost of his own, after the 17th Airborne Division's 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment landed near Fluren, Germany on March 24, 1945.

Peters, a radio operator, and 10 others were pinned down when they landed 75 yards from an enemy machine gun supported by riflemen. Trapped by their parachutes and under heavy fire, the men couldn't get to the equipment bundles nearby.

According to his Medal of Honor citation, Peters leapt to his feet and charged the machine gun, armed only with a rifle and grenades. He was torn from his feet by machine gun fire but rose again to run toward the machine gun. Once again, bullets tore into his body.

Lacking the strength to rise, Peters crawled through mud to reach the enemy. He threw his grenades, knocked out the machine gun, killed two of its operators, and pushed the riflemen back into the cover of the woods. The rest of the men in Peter's unit managed to secure their supplies and fight successfully.

Peters was one of only four men from the 17th Airborne Division to earn the Medal of Honor. The others were Sgt. Clinton M. Hendrick, Sgt. Isadore S. Jackman and Pfc. Stuart S. Stryker.

Fort Benning's own 1st Battalion, 507th Airborne Infantry Regiment fought in many battles while assigned to the 17th Abn. Div. in 1944 and 1945.

The unit, "Thunder from Heaven," was activated in April 1943 and entered WWII in December 1944. In 65 days of combat leading up to the end of the war, the division fought in three Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe.

In 15 months of combat duty, 1,191 of the unit's Soldiers were killed in action, 4,904 were wounded in action and 191 later died from their wounds.

A monument to the service of the 17th Abn. Div. was unveiled Oct. 21 on Sacrifice Field. Retired Col. John Korman, former state department diplomat and paratrooper, said the monument mean the division will not be forgotten.

"A nation honors itself not only in the men it produces, not only in the men it honors, but also in the men it remembers" Korman said.

The ceremony was attended by more than 200 veterans from the 17th Abn. Div., 11 Gold Star relatives, and 16 WWII widows wearing yellow roses.

The monument cost $250,000 and was funded primarily through contributions from family members and veterans of the 17th Abn. Div. Retired Technician 5th Grade Ralph Grooten spearheaded the fund-raising drive with the support of the division's memorial committee, an effort that took seven years.

The monument is made of black granite with the names of Soldiers who died in combat etched in bronze, and a brick walkway with the names of donors. Benches surround a pedestal with a bronze statue of a Soldier kneeling at the grave of a fallen Soldier. Dog tags and a helmet hang over a rifle.

The statue was designed by Grooten, and the name written on the dog tags is that of Howard Dowlan, Grooten's friend who was killed in the initial landing at the Rhine.

The rest of the memorial was designed by Donald Shirreffs, who completed this as his final project after a 45-year career.

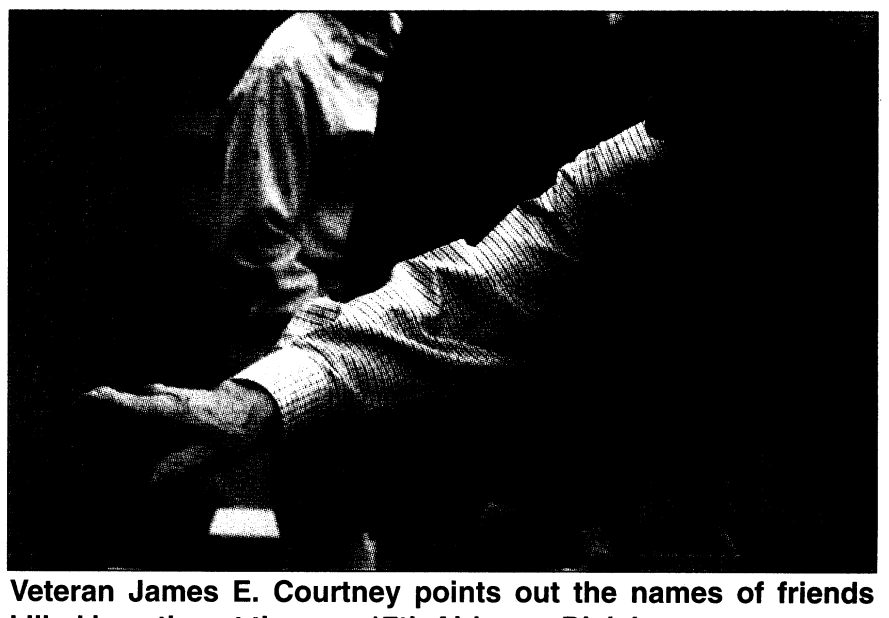
Sixty years after the unit's deactivation, the ceremony was still very emotional for many. As Taps played, one widow wiped away tears and was comforted by family.

Veteran Joseph Hamorsky pointed out the names of friends killed in action to his daughter and son-in-law.

"This memorial is long overdue. I'm glad people will know what the feeling was for us during the war," he said. "My daughter and son-in-law are very supportive because they think it's important that my service is remembered. We're going to come back again next year."

Another veteran of the division, Clyde W. Priester drove from Pennsylvania with his daughter to see the dedication.

"I'm glad that we got (the monument). It should have been done a long time ago," he said, as his daughter snapped a photo of him in front of the statue.



Grooten asked the veterans and family members in the crowd to tell their children and grandchildren about their experiences during the war and the sacrifices of the men killed in action.

"Close your eyes and you can hear them laughing, speaking," he said. "They're waiting around the corner for us to join them."

Benning names Career Counselor of Year

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Loving your job is one thing; being given an award for doing that job well is a bonus.

Sgt. 1st Class Edward Johnson was named Career Counselor of the Year for Fort Benning Oct. 12, for doing a job he considers "the best in the Army."

Johnson joined the Army 13 years ago as a cannon crew member in a field artillery unit. After seven years, he became the retention NCO on a company level, and in 2000 he put in his packet to become a career counselor. After being retrained at Fort Campbell, Ky., serving time in Kosovo and Korea, Johnson came to Fort Benning.

He was one of about five who volunteered to go before the board that would select the Career Counselor of the Year.

"It was set up to see how much we knew about retention by giving us real-world situations to see how we would solve them," Johnson said. "For instance, they would say we had a private or a specialist who had a $40,000 per year offer outside the Army, and they say, 'Keep me in.'

"We have to come up with the scenario for them. They want to see how well we respond under pressure."

Sgt. Maj. Lyle Hogue, post command career counselor, sat on the board that selected Johnson.

"He did very well on the board," Hogue said. "A lot of it was his composure and knowledge of subject matter. Those two things worked well for him."

One of the reasons Johnson said he loves his job is because people are so different, and every day there is a new type of person with a new story to tell.

"Most of the time Soldiers will come to the retention NCO before they go to their S-1," Johnson said. "We take care of legal, finance and personal issues and are psychiatrists and chaplains for the Soldiers. We are the eyes and ears of the unit."

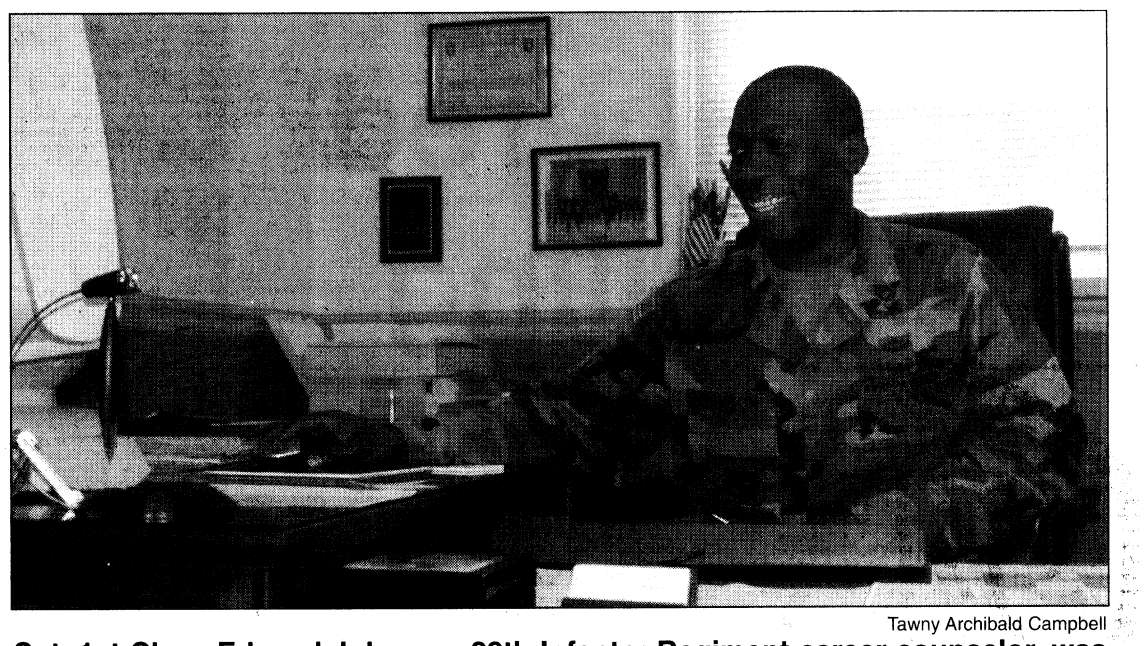
Johnson says the difference between retention and recruiting is that a recruiter is the Army to whoever he or she talks to.

"For us, we're the advisor," Johnson said. "Our job is not to convince you to stay in the Army. We're here to give you all the information you need to make an informed decision. We do less selling and more informing."

One misconception Soldiers have about retention NCOs, Johnson said, is that they only need to see them when they are getting ready to re-enlist.

"The ideal situation is to come see us when you get into your unit," Johnson said, "because you are not in your (re-enlistment) window and you can prepare yourself so when you get into that window you know what to do."

The best advice Johnson has is to ask questions and find as much information as you can about your options, remembering that the Army uses Soldiers on an as need basis — if there is no need, there is no option.



"The help they get from us is so important because we help Soldiers on an individual and personal level," Johnson said. "We will still see these people, so if anything goes wrong we will fix it. You have to be honest and integrity is the key."

Career counselors understand their job is a privilege. If they don't perform well, they can be reclassified to their previous MOS.

"This is an all-volunteer field," Johnson said. "We can't afford to have people in this job who don't enjoy doing it."

Johnson is currently working as the NCO for the 29th Infantry Regiment.

He will represent the U.S. Army Infantry Counselors at the TRADOC competition Nov. 15 in Phoenix.

Post preps for fall cleanup Nov. 1-6

Housing areas, recycling get new focus

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's fall. And that means it's time for the postwide fall cleanup.

Nov. 1 to 6 is set aside for all units, directorates and family housing residents to do a "clean sweep" of their areas.

Sgt. Maj. Jennifer Pearson, of the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, is in charge of the cleanup and said the focus would be the same as in the spring and with a "big push in the housing areas."

"The housing areas are now our weak areas," Pearson said. "There was a lot of rotation over the summer, and now we want to make sure we're cleaned up."

Although residents are primarily responsible for their houses, Soldiers from the neighborhood's sponsor unit will help in common areas.

Pearson said the fall cleanup week is the perfect time to throw away or recycle any large or bulk materials.

"We want everyone to recycle," Pearson said.

And while Pearson isn't responsible for any housing areas, she does oversee all of the activities on post that affect quality of life.

The gyms, bowling alleys and other DMWR activities directly benefit from money earned by the recycling program.

Dorinda Morpeth, the solid waste program manager for the Directorate of Public Works, said the Fort Benning recycling program is "about average" for Army installations, so there's room for improvement.

The recycling collected on post is processed by a "bare-bones minimum" recycling staff, Morpeth said. Not only does the staff handle what the contractor picks up in housing ares, but also that which is collected from offices and other workplaces.

"I want the Soldiers to please continue to recycle," she said, "but just remember to crush the cardboard boxes before placing them in the recycling dumpsters."

Morpeth said cardboard recycled from dining facilities and other supply points accounts for the majority of the cardboard collected on post.

In order to get the most out of recycling, family housing residents should ensure the recyclables are clean and not contaminated by soiled items.

Both Morpeth and Pearson said work is being done to ensure the contractor is picking up recyclables.

Residents can report any problems with recycling pick-up through their neighborhood Community Life NCO, and can replace broken or missing recycling bins at the self-help store.

RED RIBBON WEEK

Speakers share messages of dreams

Melissa House

Jeremiah Castille, left, former professional football player, and Paul Voorhees, owner of Ranger Joe's, were guest speakers during the Red Ribbon Week program in Marshall Auditorium Monday.

Event marks anniversary of agent's death

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians gathered in Marshall Auditorium Monday to kick off Red Ribbon Week, pledging to "say no to drugs, become educated on the dangers of drugs and provide information to the community."

That pledge echoed one first signed by high school students in Calexico, Calif., the hometown of undercover Drug Enforcement Agency Enrique "Kiki" Camerena, who was kidnapped, tortured and murdered by a Mexican drug gang in February 1985. More than 500 DEA agents searched for his body.

The celebration, sponsored by several units on post, served as a symbol of unity in the ongoing fight against the use of illegal drugs in the United States.

Col. Rick Riera, garrison commander, rallied the audience before introducing the guest speakers.

"The war on drugs is fought at home and in your families," said Riera, who lost a friend to drugs. "This is a life and death struggle."

Guest speakers Jeremiah Castille, of Phenix City, and Paul Voorhees, of Columbus, shared their stories and positive messages.

Castille played football with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Denver Broncos before establishing Jeremiah Castille Ministries, which reaches out to inner-city youths through sports and faith-based activities.

The eighth child of nine, Castille grew up surrounded by drugs and alcohol. He now tries to use his story to help children reach for their dreams.

"We all grew up with heroes," Castille said, "and some people even tell me I'm their hero. It's flattering. The Soldiers defending this country — you're my heroes. I wouldn't have been able to play a great game of football if it weren't for men and women serving our country."

Castille said he felt there was a reason he didn't succumb to the temptation of drugs and alcohol while growing up in Phenix City.

"It all starts with a dream," he said, "and the first step is to make a decision that life is worth living."

He said he saw the consequences of drug and alcohol abuse firsthand. His mother, Mary, was an alcoholic for 25 years and has been sober now for 20 years.

Castille knew going to college and getting an education was the key to his success, so he worked hard and didn't let others' opinions or attitudes affect him.

Those opinions, he said, "added fuel to the fire that was my dream."

"If you want to know what your tomorrow's like, look at the decisions you're making today," he said.

"What's your dream? Does it get you up in the morning?"

Starting college at 5' 9" and 150 pounds, Castille pursued his dream and played for Paul "Bear" Bryant.

"He believed in me, and he was in the business of coaching people, not players," he said.

But playing for the "Bear" meant passing physical tests, like a seemingly impossible 1-mile run in around five minutes. Castille saw guys get cut — some ran too slowly, and some simply couldn't finish.

"I knew I had to run that mile," Castille said. "I had someone counting on me — my mom. If I was going to help her, I was going to run that mile."

And helping his mother overcome her alcoholism was part of the "big, burly dream" God placed in Castille's heart.

Columbus businessman Paul Voorhees, better known to Fort Benning Soldiers as "Ranger Joe" shared his list of 21 suggestion for extreme happiness.

"Drugs have nothing to do with extreme happiness," said Voorhees, who had the crowd laughing at a series of jokes before taking them into the heart of his message.

The three most important elements of happiness are integrity, hard work and family, he said, "and drugs have nothing to do with those things."

Voorhees said there are also three important decisions everyone must make — who to live your life with, what to live life in and what to live for.

"Most of you are living life for our government and for your families," he said, "and you can't do it with drugs. But in our society today, there is a pill for everything."

Voorhees shared the story of a family member who has "been picked up from the bowels four times," but who continued to be involved with drugs. His family took such good care of the addict, they actually enabled him to continue down his path of destruction.

"When you abuse drugs, you hurt the people who love you," he said. "And when you don't allow them to pay the price, you haven't helped."

Voorhees said his family is now hoping and praying that their "tough love" will help their loved one turn his life around.

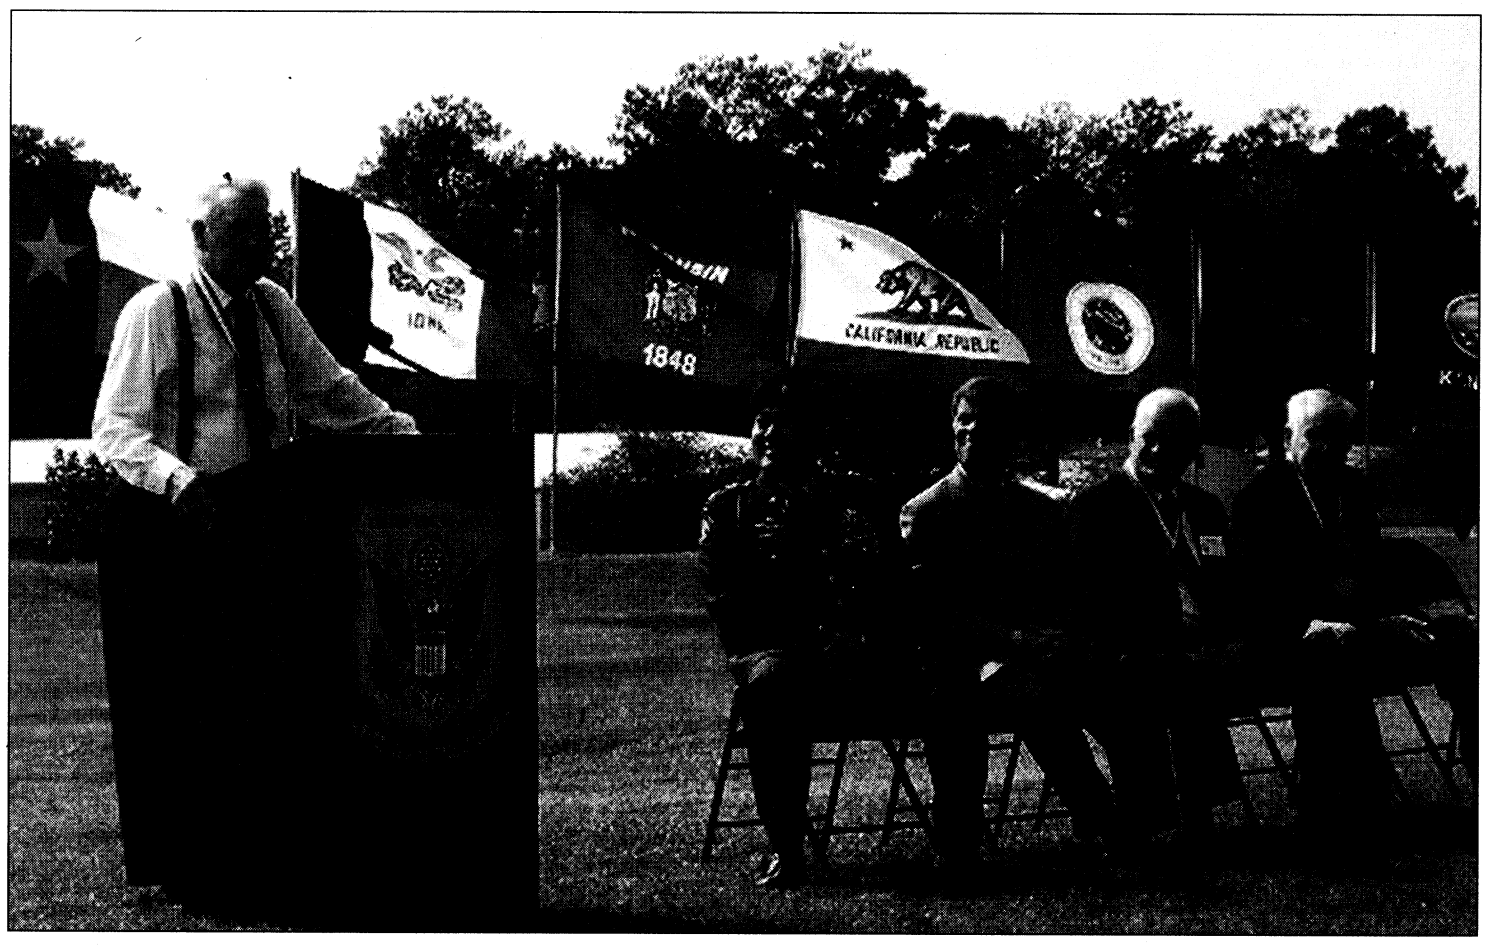
Retired Soldiers inducted in USAMU Hall of Fame

Olympians demonstrate trick shooting

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

More than 300 members, past and present, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, gathered Oct. 22 and 23 to celebrate the 48th anniversary of the unit's formation.



The Military Marksmanship Association, USAMU's alumni association, conducted the festivities, which started with a picnic at the Pecan Grove on Phillips Range the afternoon of Oct. 22.

The MMA reunion honored the shooters and staff of the AMU and provided an opportunity for the shooters of the past to meet the new shooters.

The morning of Oct. 23, MMA members gathered at Sharpe Hall, USAMU headquarters, for a ceremony inducting four retired Soldiers into the USAMU Support Hall of Fame.

The inductees were: Sgt. 1st Class Gerald J. "Hook" Boutin, service rifle shooter, armorer and sniper instructor; Sgt. Maj. Roy Combs, Service Rifle Team coach and former USAMU sergeant major; Sgt. 1st Class Leslie "Pappy" Drake, Service Rifle Team coach and shooting champion; and Master Sgt. William "W.O." Harden, service rifle shooter, gunsmith and chief of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop.

"I'd like to thank them for their extraordinary service to the Army and this nation," said former USAMU Commander retired Col. Arch Arnold, the guest speaker at the ceremony.

Ray Carter

USAMU Commander Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag told the crowd that the work of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop in producing more accurate weapons for the Army is "important in our global war on terror."

"Every unit has its standout," Liwanag said. "For the Army, that's the Marksmanship Unit. In the unit, our most precious assets are our shooters, gunsmiths and support people who make and issue the guns, ammo and equipment that make it possible for us to excel and dominate over challenges."

The USAMU Support Hall of Fame ceremony was followed by a trick-shooting demonstration by 2004 Olympians Sgts. 1st Class James "Todd" Graves, Bret E. Erickson and Shawn C. Dulohery at Hook Range.

The highlight of the 48th anniversary reunion was the Hall of Fame induction. Retired USAMU members Lt. Col. William C. Pullum and Master Sgts. William R. Lee and Robert D. Whitacre joined 20 former members of the USAMU who are honored in the Hall of Fame.

Pullum was the former coach of the USAMU Service Rifle, International Rifle and U.S. Olympic Rifle teams. He also competed as a service pistol and service rifle shooter and served as the USAMU shop officer.

"I've had a very enjoyable life with the Army Marksmanship Unit, and I've met some wonderful people. I want to thank you all very kindly," Pullum said.

Lee, a service rifle shooter, won the President's Hundred Match in 1976 and numerous other championships. He thanked the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop for his victories, stating that the work the AMU gunsmiths did on the M-16 rifles was a miracle performance.

Whitacre was a national indoor pistol champion who earned the Distinguished Pistol Shot Badge, the International Distinguished Shooters Badge and the President's Hundred Tab. He thanked the gunsmiths, coaches and support staff for the part they play in developing champions.

"I served with the best Soldiers in the best unit in the U.S. Army," Whitacre said.

Liwanag introduced retired Col. Gregory C. Camp, former Fort Benning chief of staff, who was the guest speaker at the Hall of Fame ceremony.

"Americans really like winners and these three inductees — and the entire Army Marksmanship Unit — are champions," Camp said. "The Army Marksmanship Unit has far exceeded the expectations of President Eisenhower when he formed the unit 48 years ago.

"There is no peer in marksmanship to the Army Marksmanship Unit. The unit has lived the vision of Eisenhower. The unit has the greatest small arms capability in the Army."

DEFINING THE FUTURE™

Business between DoD employees regulated

Solicitation of juniors can be coercive

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

A NCO calls his junior enlisted Soldiers into his office for a meeting during duty hours. During that meeting he pitches a pyramid scheme to them, solicits them each for a $798 contribution and promises them a $10,000 return.

"That was a bad situation. Nothing about that is right from start to end," Bernard Pfeiffer, chief of administrative law, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said.

The gray area of ethics is given definition by several publications including the Joint Ethics Regulation and U.S. Army Infantry Center policy memorandum 600-3, he said.

Those regulations define what kind of business relationships are appropriate with and between Department of Defense employees.

For instance, the one-time sale of a piece of personal property like a car or television between two service members, regardless of rank, is OK. But when the business is of a recurring type, like real estate sales on the side, insurance policies and stocks, the line is crossed, Pfeiffer said.

"The regulations clearly define what is OK and what is not," he said. "The problem is that no one takes the time to read them."

Other situations that may be questionable are business relationships involving organizations like AMWAY and Mary Kay cosmetics.

"A DoD employee shall not knowingly solicit or make solicited sales to DoD personnel who are junior in rank, grade or position, or to family members of such personnel, on or off duty," reads Chapter 5, Subsection 409 of the JER. "The posting of an advertisement in accordance with Federal Government building management policies does not constitute solicitation for purposes in this subsection."

Pfeiffer said the biggest problem is the situation where it appears that rank may have been used coercively.

Anytime a group is called together under the pretense of an official or unofficial function at the behest of a higher ranking individual and then is solicited inappropriately, there can be the appearance of coercion.

But not all solicitations on post are illegal, Pfeiffer said.

> "The regulations clearly define what is OK and what is not. The problem is that no one takes the time to read them"
> Bernard Pfeiffer
> Administrative Law chief
> Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Companies and individuals may apply for a license through the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation. Those individuals are given permission to sell goods or services only if they follow the terms laid out in the JER and local regulations regarding ethics and solicitation.

There can be repercussions for those who ignore the regulations and choose to peddle their wares outside the scope of the law, he said.

"Some areas of the JER are punitive," Pfeiffer said. "Many violations are at least enough to initiate an Article 92."

While the problem is not overly common on post, he said it does come in spurts and varies in level of severity.

Some information regarding solicitation is covered in SJA's ethics briefing held the second Wednesday of the month at 1 p.m. in Classroom 7, Infantry Hall, through December.

give themselves for the sake of country."

Amundson is the eighth Ranger killed in combat since the war on terrorism began. He is survived by his parents, Michele Sanderson, of Montgomery, Texas, and William Amundson, of Plano, Texas. The senior Amundson remembered his son as a confident Soldier.

"He knew what he was doing, and he was trained very well," Amundson's father told a reporter last week. "The only thing that has kept me going is his training and faith in God since he was in the service. My hat's off to the Army and the Ranger training."

A wake for Amundson was held Monday in Conroe, Texas, and Tuesday at Lakeside Bible Church in Montgomery, Texas.

No date has been set for a memorial locally or for burial at Arlington National Cemetery in Arlington, Va.

BRAC: To consider 'surge'

leveraged the Army's combat projection power.

DuBois said the 2005 BRAC is aimed at combining that kind of power, including joint training, at installations that best offer it.

Also, he said, duplication can be reduced by merging military research and laboratory facilities.

Any new base closures would take into account the need to maintain a military "surge" capacity to deal with potential future threats, Dubois said.

Previous BRACs have provided $7 billion in annual savings to DoD since 2001, DuBois said. But, DoD still has $660 billion tied up in property inventory.

The Defense Department needs "to free up that kind of investment capital to support our troops in areas where those resources are needed," he said.

"We have a responsibility to provide the people defending our country with the highest quality training, technology, weapons systems, information and resources available," he said, "to include a well-maintained infrastructure by eliminating the unnecessary capacity."

Final 2005 BRAC recommendations will be presented in the spring.

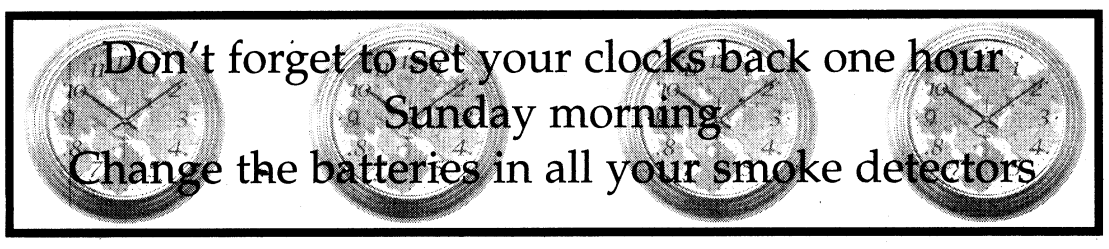
breeding pairs. Currently there are 250 pairs.

"Some people wonder why we're 'giving away birds' if we haven't reached our goals yet. But just because we reach our goals at Fort Benning, it doesn't ensure the survival of the species as a whole," wildlife biologist Michael Barron said. "We need to think of the well-being of the species throughout the entire Southeast."

Helping smaller populations grow is also important to Fort Benning, Barron said. In 1989, Hurricane Hugo destroyed 70 percent of the red-cockaded woodpecker's habitat in South Carolina's Francis Marion National Park.

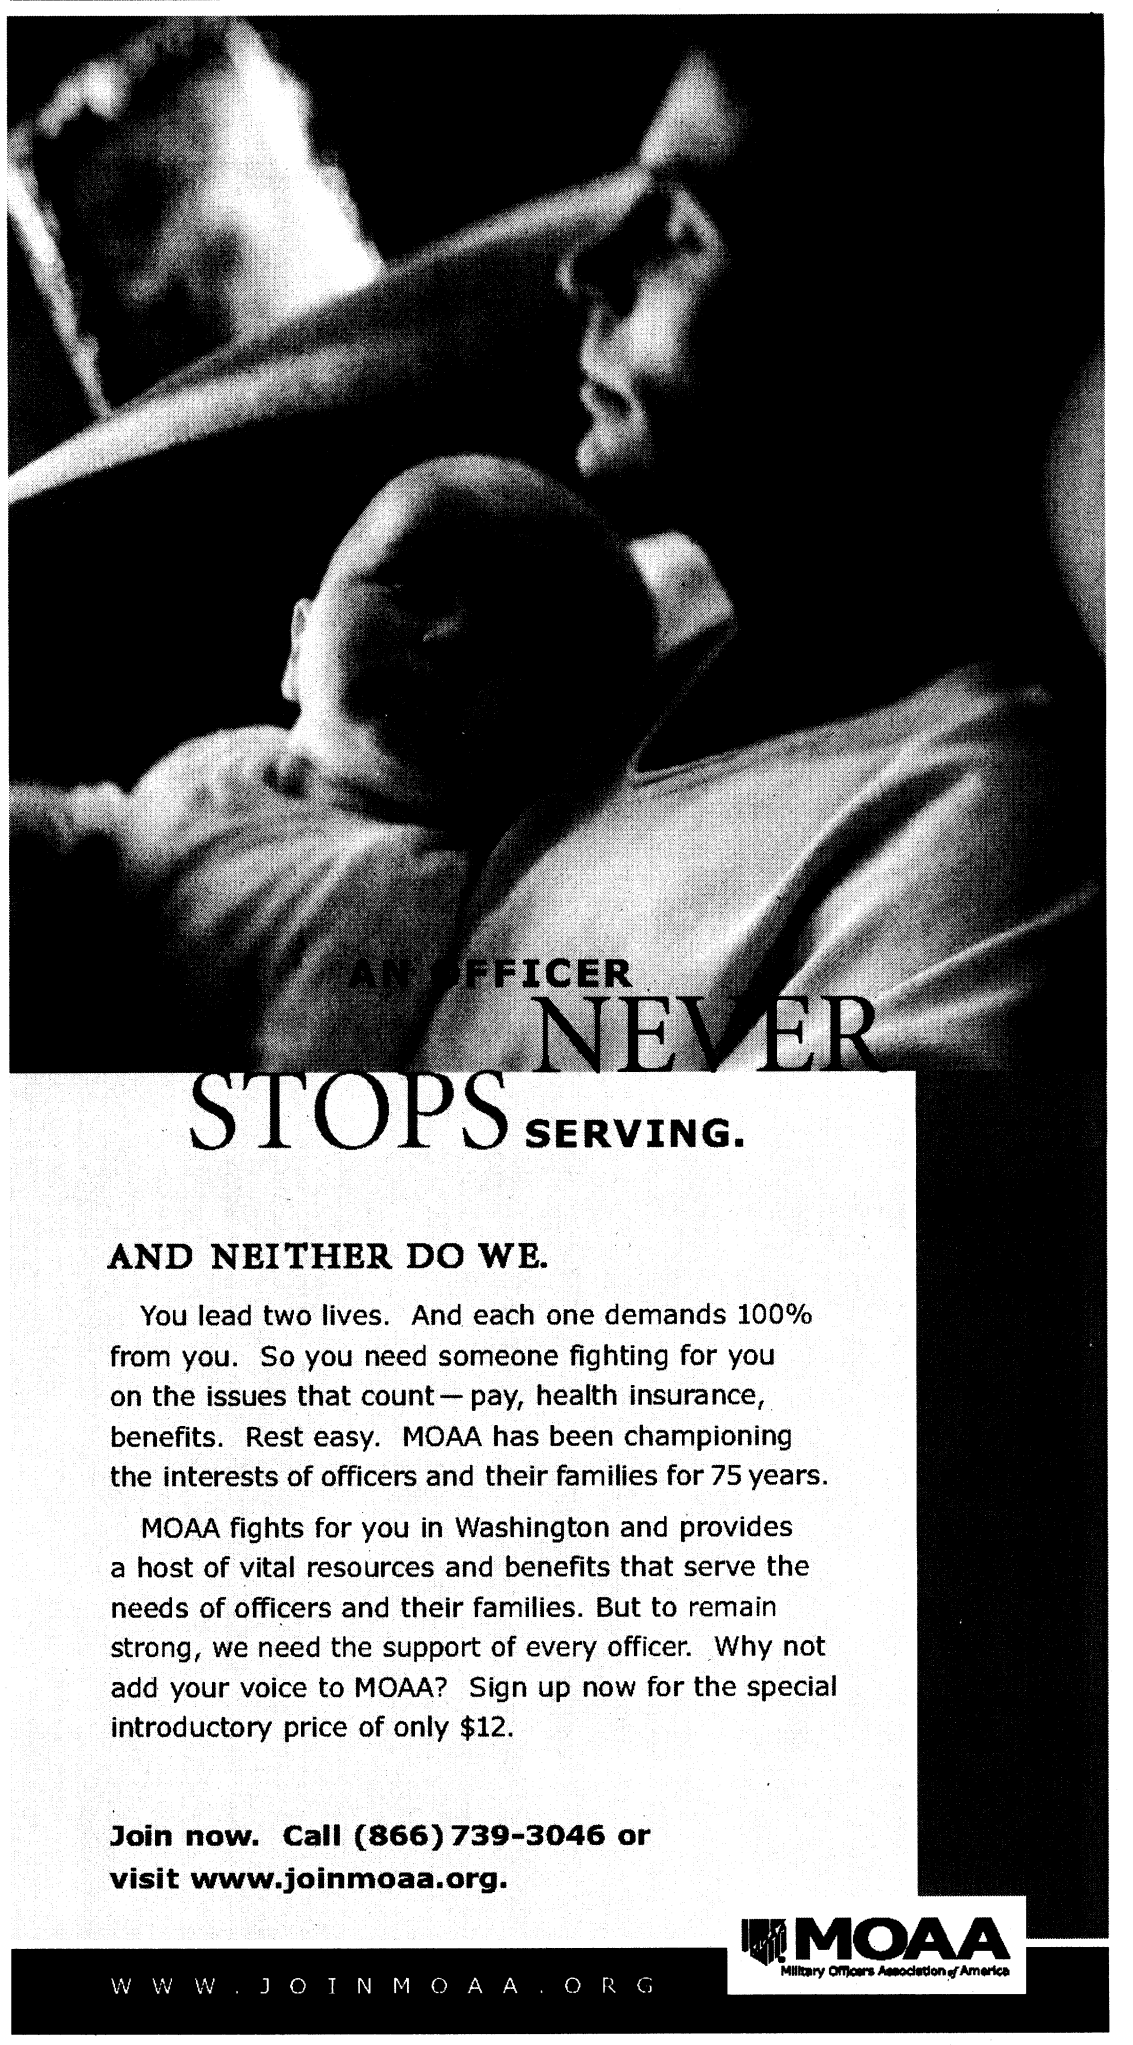
If something similar occurred at Fort Benning, other areas could donate birds to help Benning's woodpecker population recover.

Old-growth pine forests once covered much of the South, but the number of trees has sharply declined due to agriculture, development and logging. Today there are fewer than 300 million acres of long leaf pine forests left, 3 percent of the acreage present at the onset of European colonization.



The only birds relocated are yearlings not yet attached to a particular territory. Before the birds can be moved, potential transfers must be identified by age and sex.

DPW locates a bird's roosting tree and sets up a net on an extendable pole directly in front of the hole into the nesting cavity. In the morning, when the bird leaves the nest, it becomes trapped in the net, and is moved into a wooden box where it will be shipped to its new habitat.



They will be released into the new habitat that has been prepared for them, and about 40 percent of the birds will stay in the new area. The most difficult part of moving the birds is catching them, Barron said.

"The birds don't always cooperate. We are very careful with them, and no birds have ever died in transport."

There are fewer than 10,000 red-cockaded woodpeckers in the Southeastern United States. Most live on Department of Defense preservation areas.

Under the supervision of a drill sergeant, IRR soldiers practice their three-to-five second rushes as part of common task training outside Building 2825.

IRR trains at Benning

Reservists pass through Benning on way to war

Her husband, a member of the National Guard, was called up for seven months last year, but as a member of the Individual Ready Reserves, Spc. Maria Gregg never expected to get the same call.

Going to Iraq was unthinkable. She felt safe, knowing she was in a part of the military rarely called into activity.

"I got my orders before I got the mailgram, and they said I had one month to report," said Gregg, of Florida. "I didn't expect it. I was IRR and didn't think I could be called up."

Leaving behind her husband and 4-year-old daughter, Gregg reported to Fort Jackson, S.C., for an MOS refresher course and then to Fort Benning for common task training.

"I don't think my daughter is dealing with things very well," Gregg said. "I've never left her before. I told her I would come home, but I have to do my job first, and when I go home I will never leave her again."

For Gregg, it's not the training that's hard, it's missing her family. But the training she's receiving at Fort Benning is appreciated.

"I think it's good to prepare like this before we go overseas," Gregg said. "The better trained we are, the better we do. We don't know what we'll be doing when we get over there, so you can't be over prepared."

Two types of IRR Soldiers come to Fort Benning, said Capt. Ron DeWeese, commander of D Company, CONUS Replacement Center, an infantry one station unit training site. One "type" comes here for common task certification, he said. That includes infantry, special forces and aviation.

The others have already been certified at another post, but they come here to be "married up" with a unit deploying.

There are 21 IRR Soldiers on Fort Benning and more arrive each week, said DeWeese, who expects to have about 100 Soldiers by the end of the month.

The cadre and leadership are part of a mobilized reserve unit from the 1st Division, 330th Infantry Regimen, Fort Wayne, Ind.

They've been here since September.

"I think we are all proud to serve and are very conscientious in our training," said Lt. Col. Janet Kai, a Florida IRR Soldier.

"We are hungry for training, and the training here is superb. I can't say enough about how well D Company and CRC are doing."

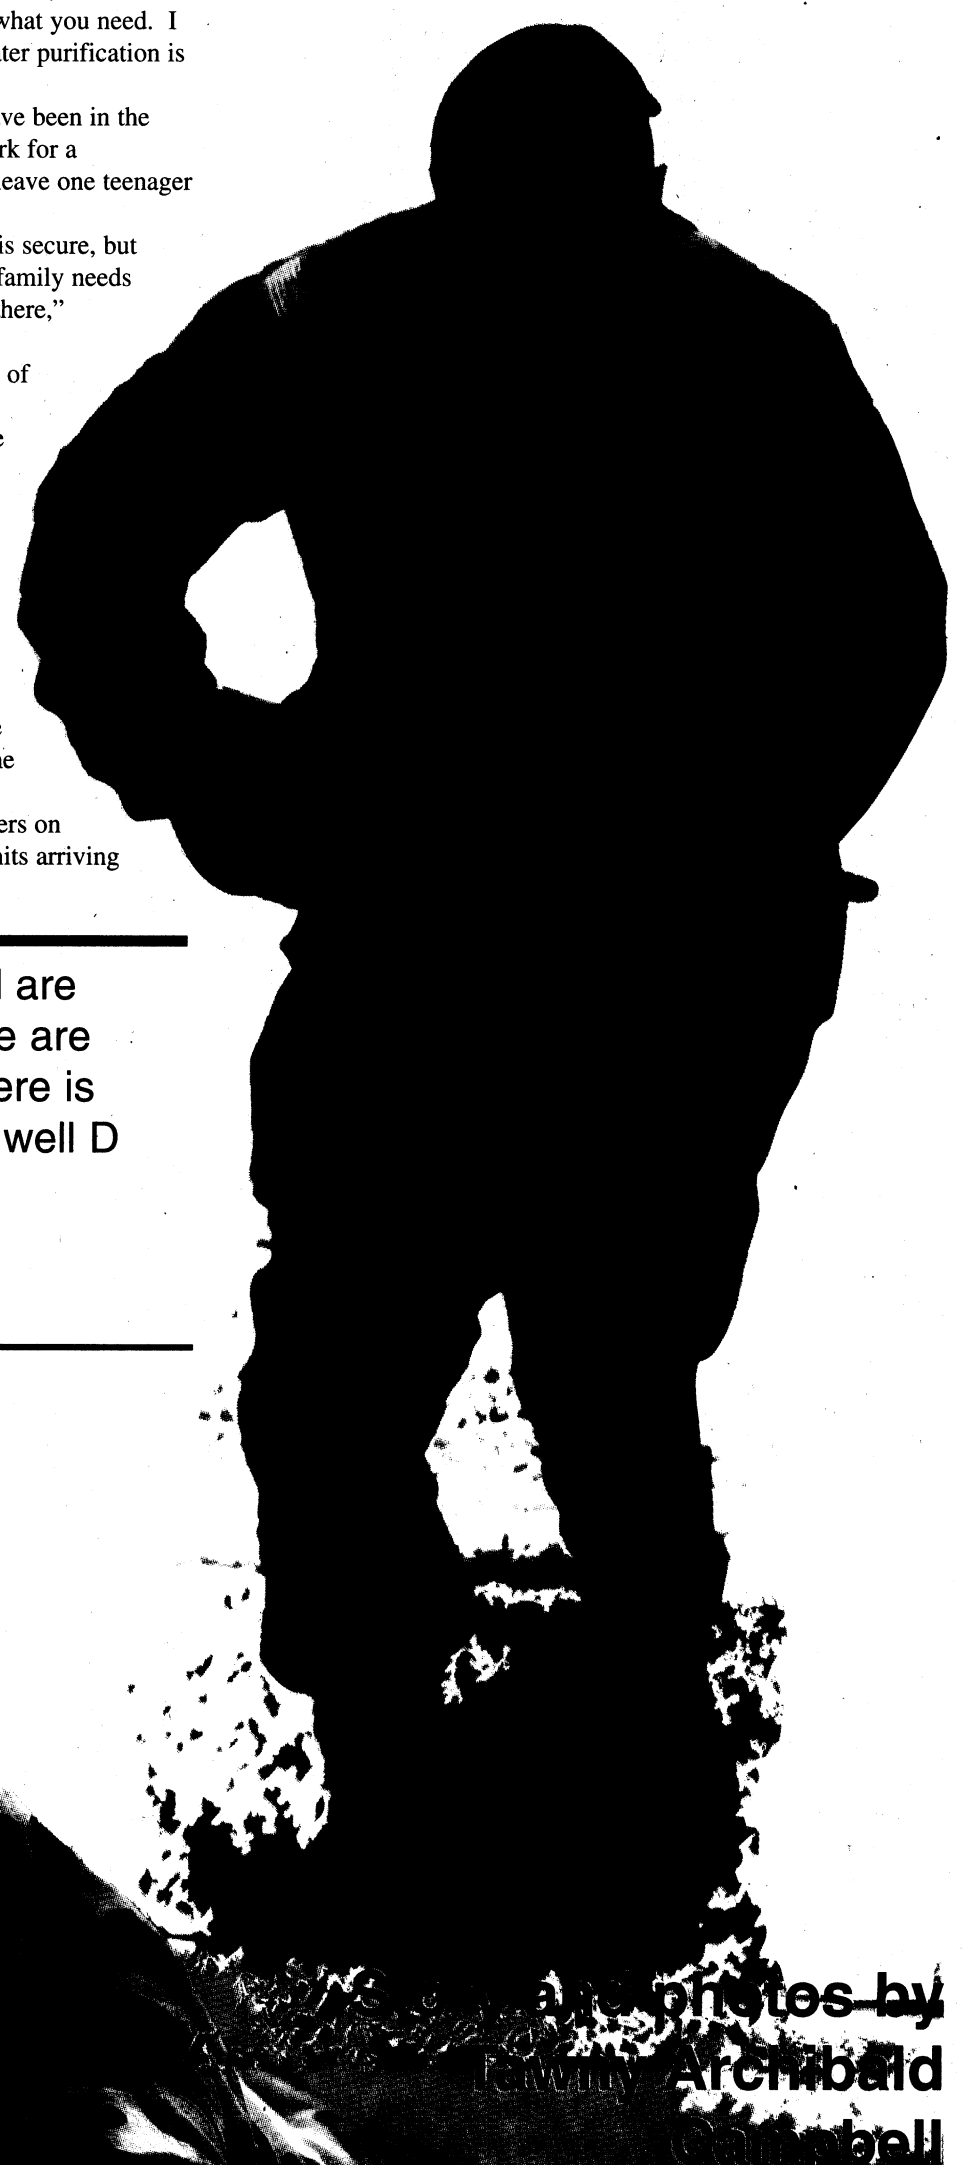
The training the Soldiers receive includes weapons familiarization, movement under direct fire, land navigation, interaction with the media, reacting to unexploded ordnance, driving, vehicle searches, casualty care and evacuations, riot control, first aid and nuclear, biological and chemical warfare.

"I'm getting training here I've never had before," said Sgt. 1st Class William Dunn, of Tennessee.

"I'm in water purification, but on the battlefield you don't know if your convoy is going to come under attack, so this training may be exactly what you need. I am a Soldier first and water purification is second."

Both Dunn and Kai have been in the military for 21 years, work for a government agency and leave one teenager at home.

"My job (back home) is secure, but my big concern is if my family needs me, I'm not going to be there," Dunn said.

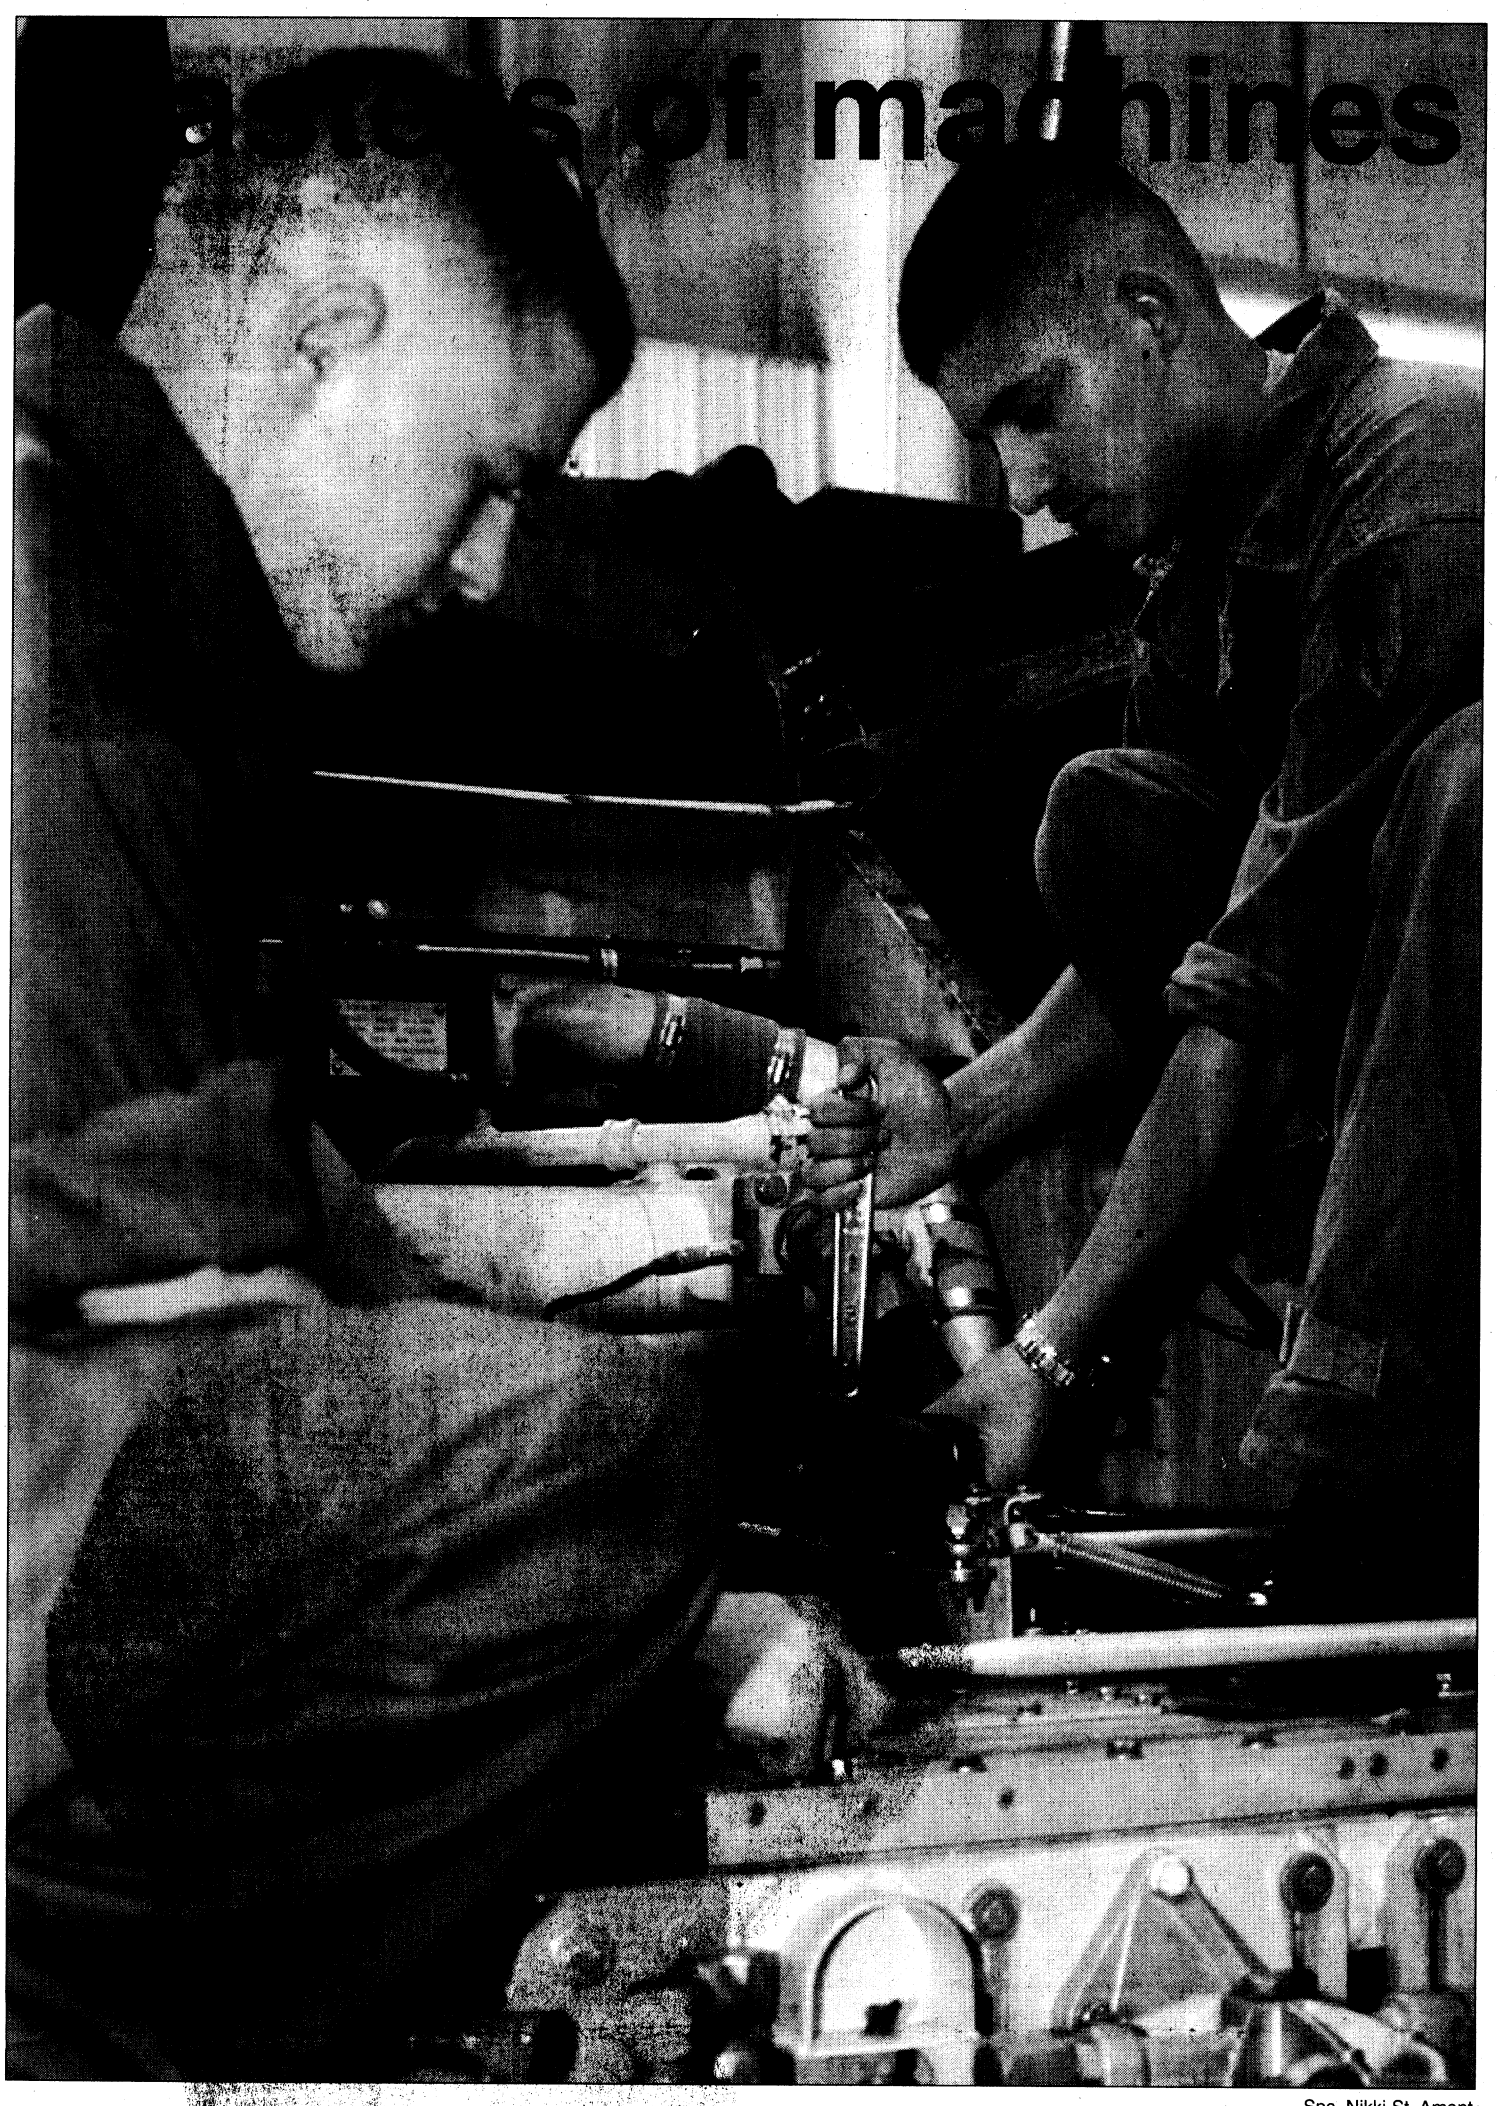


"The Army is the least of my problems."

The IRR Soldiers were all activated Aug. 31 and were the first group of reservists to be called up on presidential orders.

"Once a Soldier, always a Soldier," Dunn said.

"You do what you need to do when the time comes, and for us the time came on August 31."



Most of the IRR Soldiers on Fort Benning will join units arriving Nov. 4 and Dec. 10.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Pfc. Evan Yoss, left, and Spc. Caesar Rios, mechanics with the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, put in some hard work on the engine of a Bradley Fighting Vehicle Oct. 26.

Mechanics in overdrive make missions

Long hours governed by stacks of safety and Environmental Protection Agency regulations, pressing deadlines, life or death responsibility and — oh yeah — there's grease involved.

Pfc. Evan Yoss wasn't exactly sure what he wanted to do when he joined the Army in July 2003, but he knew he liked to work on vehicles. Yoss has found his "happy place" in the cavernous bays of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's motor pool, maintaining and repairing Bradleys used in training all over post.

"I knew I wanted to improve my mechanic skills, but I didn't know if I wanted to work track or wheeled vehicles. Then I decided to go with something different," he said.

The 21-foot long, 50,000 lb. Bradley Fighting Vehicle Yoss works on is definitely not your garden-variety driveway project car.

"Our AIT and basic was six months long," he said. "We're required to fix anything that doesn't work on that vehicle, except the electronics.

"We are trained on the schematics and can identify those problems, but the repair work is sent on to the depot level, which is mostly civilians."

But making sure the U.S. Army's battle horses are in tip-top shape when they hit the ground running, here or overseas, isn't something a Soldier ever does alone — regardless of rank, experience or training. "Even though each of us knows the others can do the job, we always ask someone to check our work," said Spc. Caesar Rios, a teammate of Yoss'.

"The battle buddy system still applies," said Yoss. "Rank doesn't matter when there are lives on the line. We always have to be 100 percent up and up."

Rios said attention to detail is the number one priority in the shop because the equipment is expensive and lives are at stake.

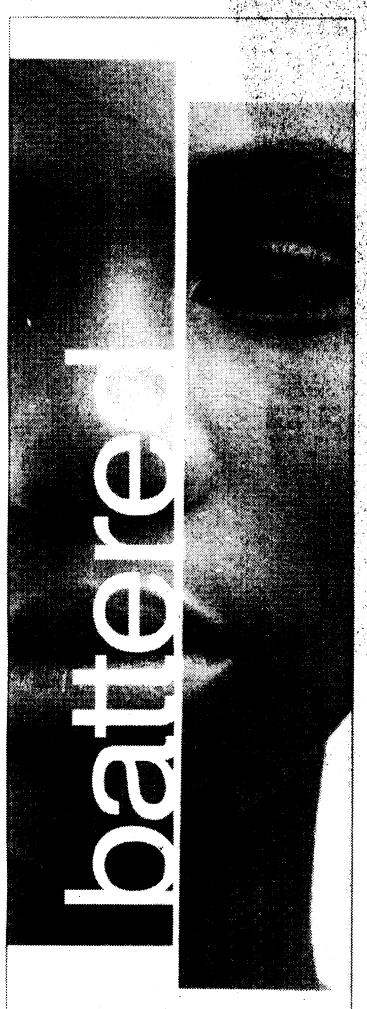
But getting the equipment back to a "go" status as quickly as possible is also important.

"Every unit that does any kind of training on post with these vehicles depends on us," Rios said. "Without us, their mission doesn't happen."

Through the MOS course at Fort Knox, Ky., students train on the Bradley from top to bottom and front to rear.

"The course is taught in two phases," said Rios.

"The whole phase and the turret phase."



The two mechanics said the course was challenging when instructors placed "bugs" in the Bradley and students were required to identify, locate and correct the deficiency.

With Yoss out of school for nearly a year and Rios with about two and a half years on the job, they both feel comfortable with their work and their unit.

And even though the 29th Inf. Regt. is a nondeployable unit, the mechanics feel they are challenged and helping the war effort every day in every way.

"I'm still doing my job even though I'm not in Iraq," Yoss said.

"We help all those guys train up and get ready to go over there. They use our vehicles, our maintenance and our training."

It could happen to any one of us. And if it did, wouldn't you pray for someone to help you put your life back together. We're here for Donna for as long as it takes.

THE BAYONET
Friday, Oct. 29, 2004

For the WBET crew, the trip to Chicago was a busman's holiday. Though they went to receive an award, they were required to film the highlights of their trip to show their classmates at Faith. Here, Lorri Blanchard coaches Maite Aponte as Jocelyn Amaker films.

Faith media team members find CHICAGO their kind of town

Rangers: No Pain, No Gain earns international award

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Jocelyn Amaker is going places. Some she'd rather not. The 12-year-old former Faith Middle School student was a member of the school's award-winning media team last year, when she joined four of her classmates on a trek up a north Georgia mountain to film a seven-minute documentary on Ranger School. That was scary, Amaker said. She's afraid of heights.

The Association for Educational Communications and Technology recognized Amaker and her teammates last week by awarding Rangers: No Pain, No Gain first place in the 30th annual International Student Media Festival in Chicago.

The trip included a whirlwind tour of the Windy City, including a "trek" to the top of the Sears Tower, one of the world's tallest buildings with 110 stories.

"Whoa," said Amaker, daunted by the prospect of "climbing" a building that's height is equal to the length of five and a half football fields.

"I really don't like high places," she said to no one in particular, as she and her teammates stood gazing upward at the tower's entrance.

It's no surprise Amaker and her friends made it to the top of the tower and the competition. Their coach, Lorri Blanchard, Faith's multi-media teacher, insists her students overcome their fears, whether it's learning to interview strangers, operate a video camera or speak in front of an audience.

Every member of the media team, which is responsible for the production of the Warrior Bear Educational Television, the school's closed-circuit news station, is required to learn every aspect of video production — writing, filming, anchoring and editing. Cross-training, Blanchard calls it.

And those who had a hand in producing the team's Web site, Influential Native American Tribes in Georgia, which also placed first at the festival in Web site design, worked together every step of the way.

"If they work only on one area, on what they know or what comes easy, they'll never develop strengths in other areas," Blanchard said. "Some of these kids already know this is what they want to do as a career, so now's the time to learn every aspect of it."

Blanchard's applied this same "do-it-all" philosophy to her students' Chicago itinerary. She packed the trip full of educational and recreational opportunities, besides the ones afforded by the AECT — the awards ceremony, a film festival and various workshops.

The Fort Benning students, all seventh-graders at Faith, except for Amaker, who now attends school off post, visited a number of museums and historic sites besides the Sears Tower. Along the way, they documented their discoveries on film.

It was during filming at the Museum of Natural History that the team ran into another news team, the crew of CNN's American Morning, including Soledad O'Brien, who invited the students to be part of the show.

The students served as "extras" in some shots and were asked to prepare to speak on camera. They were disappointed when O'Brien's interview with Amy Dickinson, "the new Ann Landers," ran longer than expected, effectively reducing their on-camera time to a quick wave as the credits rolled.

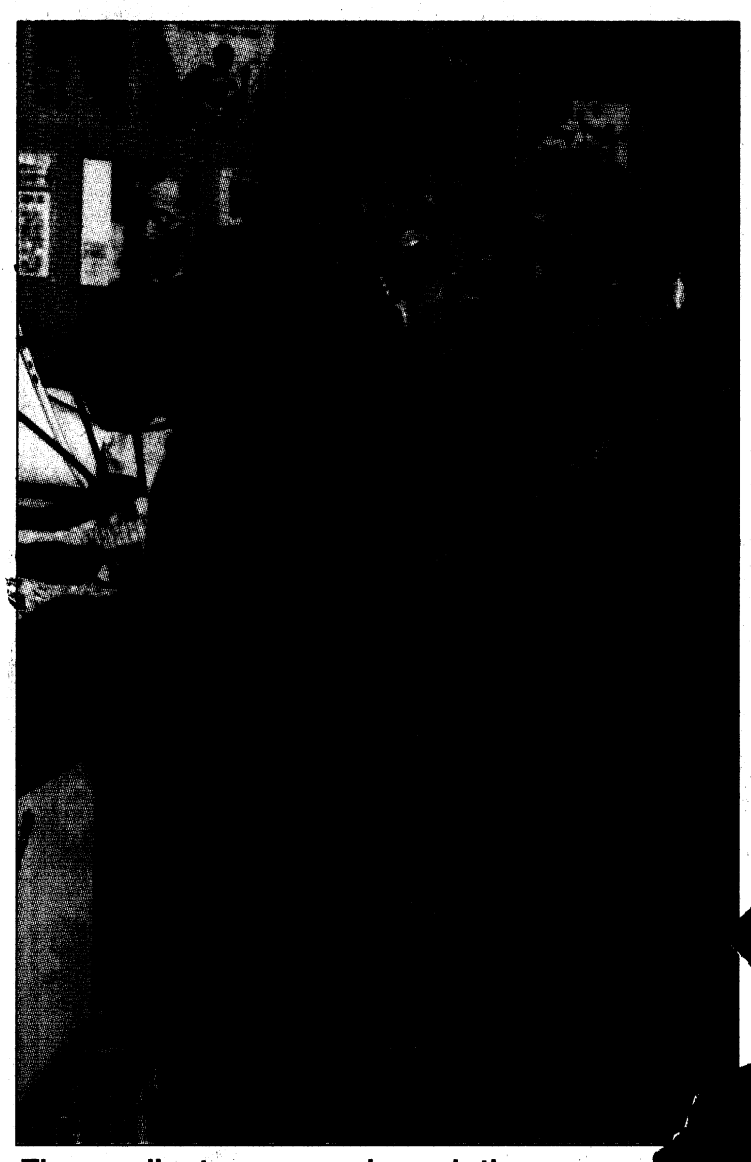
But there was no time for self-pity. The team's jam-packed schedule called for a fast cross-town commute to the Chicago Tribune, for a behind-the-scenes tour and an interview with writers and editors.

When they arrived, the students were corralled into an office — Ann Lander's former office, at that.

When Dickinson walked in moments later, even the students appreciated the irony of the situation. Dickinson, who authors the Tribune's Ask Amy column, apologized for "stealing the show" earlier and offered advice — her specialty — on what to see and do in Chicago.

The media team's meeting with Dickinson was one of several chance opportunities in the five-day adventure.

On the last evening of their trip, as the students and their chaperones waited for the bus to take them back to their hotel after a long, tiring day, (which included an excursion on a haunted ship), someone spotted a sign in a shop window. "Introduce your children to the blues," it read.



"No trip to Chicago would be complete without visiting a blues club," said Blanchard, who's 18-year tenure on Fort Benning included teaching music to elementary and middle schoolers. "But who would've thought we'd find one for kids?"

In the basement of the Blue Chicago Store, the group listened to Gloria Shannon and her blues band pay tribute to the late Ray Charles.

"It's mighty fine to have you all here. No offense to you people from other places, but we're gonna do a little Georgia," she said.

The song sounded good to Shannon's audience, particularly the tired group of middle-schoolers for whom the prospect of "doing a little Georgia" sounded mighty fine.

"It was awesome. The whole trip was awesome," said Kiana Loeak. "We were lucky. We noticed a lot of teachers here who didn't bring their students. Mrs. Blanchard didn't have to do all this for us. We should tell her how much we appreciate it."

MORE ABOUT THE ISMF

In 1974, members of the Association for Educational Communication and Technology created a "Super 8 Film Festival" to encourage student produced media. In 30 years, the festival has evolved, and the competition includes Web site design, PowerPoint, interactive games and electronic books, still photography, photo essays and more. Each year, the festival coincides with the AECT's annual conference and the event includes an award ceremony, workshops and a film festival, which allows competitors from elementary to high school to view the work of other winners. In 1992, 13 states submitted entries. Georgia submitted three. In 2004, with nearly 600 entries from 20 states and three countries, Georgia winners submitted 402 entries and dominated the Chicago show. Local winners included students from Blanchard Elementary, Edgewood Elementary and Columbus High School. More than 3,000 students participated this year. For more information about the festival, or to view the winning productions, log on to www.ismf.net.

Dentist offers tricks to beat tooth problems for trick-or-treaters

Delta Dental

The warnings about Halloween and the effects of too much candy on trick-or-treaters' teeth have begun.

But it's not all doom and gloom this season. There are some simple solutions to help ward off the effects of some of the worst candy offenders to oral health, and all it takes is a little parental supervision, common-sense and moderation.

"Halloween can be fun, but there are things parents should do to prevent tooth decay in their children," said Max Anderson, DDS, a national oral health advisor for Delta Dental Plans Association.

Anderson said hard or sticky candies and bubble gum create the most problems. They simply stay in the mouth longer than other candies, exposing the teeth to the number one cause of tooth decay: sugar.

Hard candy, such as suckers and jawbreakers, dissolve slowly, coating the teeth with sugar for prolonged periods of time.

Have your child drink water or milk after eating hard candy.

Both liquids help rinse sugar until there is time for proper brushing.

Milk also contains anti-cavity properties that help counteract the harmful effects of sugar on teeth.

Also, consider serving your child a piece of cheese afterward. Cheese has been shown to protect teeth against cavity-causing acids.

Sticky candy like caramels and taffy can be harmful to dental work, especially braces, retainers, and fillings.

These sticky sweets adhere to teeth and can get trapped between dental work, making it harder to brush the sugar away.

Encourage eating treats that melt quickly in the mouth, such as plain chocolate pieces. They aren't as hazardous to dental work and are easier to brush away.

Also, munching on crisp fruits and vegetables after consuming sticky candy helps clean the teeth of sugary residue.

Regular bubble gum circulates cavity-causing sugars throughout the mouth and teeth and, like sticky candy, can be harmful to dental work.

If your child insists on chewing gum, give him or her sugar-free gum. Research shows that sugar-free bubble gum, particularly those containing the sugar substitute xylitol, can be better for teeth and help reduce tooth decay by weakening acid made from sugars.

Chewing gum also increases the amount of saliva you produce, which reduces the build-up of plaque.

"There's nothing wrong with having a little Halloween fun, as long as parents are mindful of the amount of sugar their children are consuming," Anderson said.

"If kids are on a regular schedule of brushing twice daily, flossing once a day, and visiting the dentist for regular checkups, (Halloween) probably won't set them back much."

Trick-or-treating is 6 to 8 p.m. Sunday on Fort Benning

AAFES helps deployed Soldiers with holiday gifts

Flyers, phone and Internet assist troops

Capt. Diane Weed
HQ AAFES Public Affairs

The holidays are right around the corner and deployed troops have enough on their minds without having to worry about how to get the perfect gifts for their loved ones.

The Army & Air Force Exchange Service takes the stress out of holiday shopping with Operations Forward Thanksgiving and Forward Santa.

"The goal of this program is to assist those serving downrange with their holiday shopping and, hopefully, make them feel a little closer to their family and friends during the holidays," said Patty Dromey, AAFES' catalog and e-commerce manager.

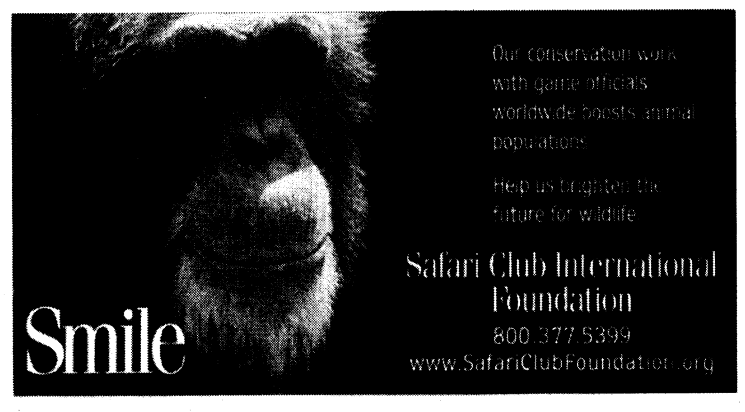
Forward Thanksgiving and Forward Santa programs are specifically designed for deployed troops.

Flyers listing various gift items will be available at downrange AAFES stores for troops to pick up.

All the deployed person would need to do is check off which items they want and take the completed flyer to an AAFES associate no later than Nov. 10.

Deployed service members can also call (214) 583-5614, mention that they're deployed to OIF or OEF, and get specialized assistance placing holiday orders.

Calls and orders must be placed no later than Nov. 17.



The third option for deployed troops wanting to take care of their holiday shopping from downrange is to log on to www.AAFES.com and browse through the vast assortment of products available through the eX Online store, Centric Mall and virtual vendors..

Dromey said that all items listed specifically for either operation are specially priced. Also, "when putting together the assortment, we tried to make sure we have something for everyone — mom, dad, kids, teens, wife, husband, girlfriend, etc.," she said.

Free gift-wrapping on all holiday items is available where applicable and Christmas packages are marked "Do not open until 25 December."

Take the guesswork out of gift giving by checking out your base or post exchange or eX Online this year.

Because of a nationwide shortage, the flu vaccination will not be available during the Retiree Open House.
The Retiree Open House is Nov. 5 at the Officers' Club.

Sgt. 1st Class Raul Muñoz, NCO Academy training NCOIC, far right, makes the JROTC students at Hardaway High School run sprints during a visit that is part of the Partners in Education program.

NCOA takes part in PIE at Hardaway

As Sgt. 1st Class Raul Muñoz walked into the cafeteria at Hardaway High School, a few students jumped to parade rest while others approached him to say hello.

Muñoz, NCO Academy Training NCOIC, just smiled and was as friendly as he could be.

"Relax kid, you don't have to do that for me," he said. "The kids here really like it when we come around. They always get excited because they know that if we're here we're going to do something interesting."

The "we" Muñoz is talking about refers to the NCOA staff who are Hardaway High School's Partners in Education since the beginning of this school year.

"There's nothing more important than kids and making sure they have good role models," Muñoz said. "We are here to present a positive example for all of these kids. But in the end we all benefit from this partnership."

The NCOA staff has spent as much time as possible with the students at Hardaway, from football games and Help the 'Hooch to JROTC training. Muñoz and Sgt. Wayne Crawley conducted physical training for the Hardaway JROTC students Oct. 15.

"I like it better when they do PT with us," said Chris McCracken, a JROTC student at Hardaway. "They have us do all the stuff they do for PT everyday."

McCracken, 15, first met Muñoz and Crawley while cleaning up the creek behind the school Oct. 9 for the Help the 'Hooch project.

"He's a bright kid with so much potential," Muñoz said. "All of these kids are like that. Not just the JROTC kids, but all of them. All you have to do is talk to them for a little while and they open up to you.

"When I was their age, I always asked a lot of questions and that's what I want to get through to them. It's OK to ask for help. That's what we're here for. Whenever I see them ask for help and succeed, I get excited for them and I know what we're doing here is a good thing," he said.

The NCOA will officially become the third PIE for Hardaway during an adoption ceremony Nov. 10. The NCOA will combine efforts with Richs'-Macy's and Ray Underwood in the PIE program for Hardaway students, said Karan Brown, Hardaway's PIE coordinator.

"The Soldiers being involved with school activities revved up the students," Brown said.

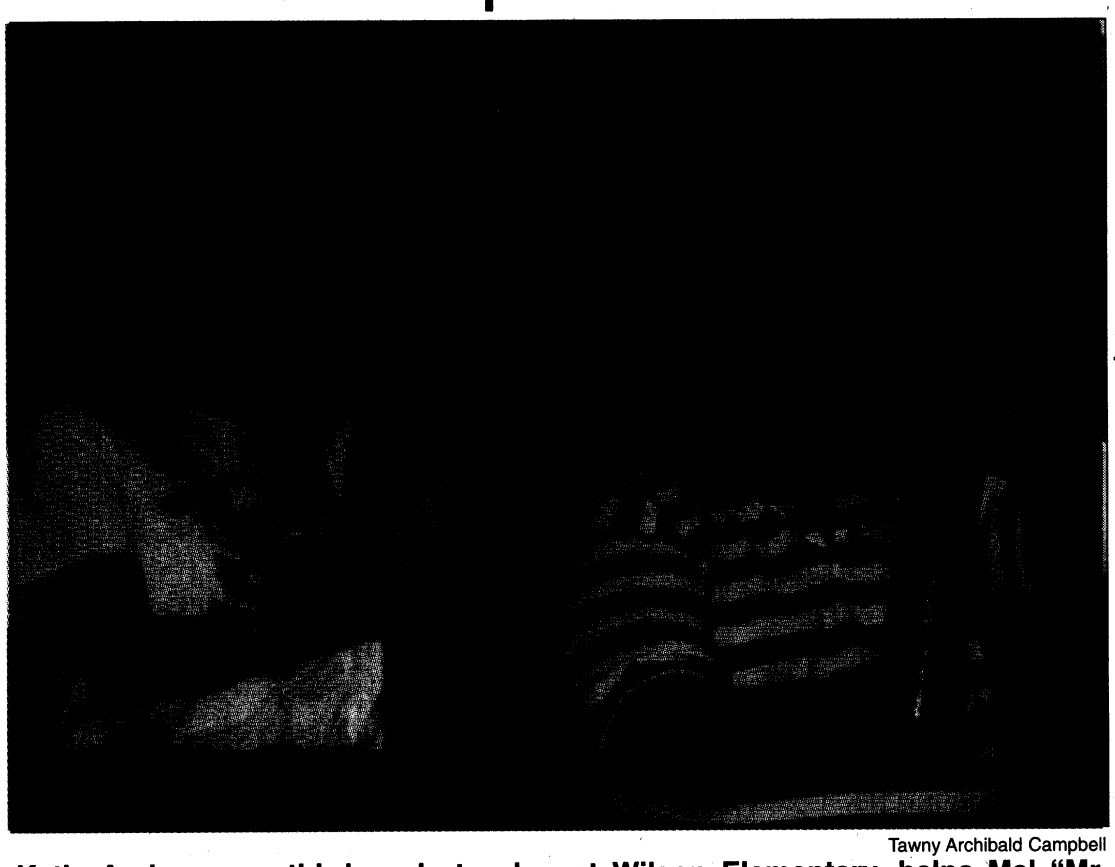
"They get a lot more excited in participating in school activities with the Soldiers' presence."

Brown said that this year alone the students gathered more trash during the Help the 'Hooch project than they ever had before.

"They were more brave about getting into ditches and getting dirty," she said. As partners, the NCOA will work with Rich's-Macy's and Underwood to enrich life experiences for the students, help improve their academic performance, as well as their career opportunities.

Muñoz and Crawley said that they are looking forward to bringing the students to Fort Benning and have them participate in different events.

"There's a lot to do still and we're in this for the long run," Muñoz said.



The next step for the NCOA is to design a tutoring program where they'll go to the school and work closely with students having difficulties.

"I can relate to some of the stuff these kids go through so I know that we'll be able to help them out," Crawley said.

Mr. Magic: Teacher of power of choice

Assembly part of Red Ribbon Week

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Katie Anderson, a third-grade teacher at Wilson Elementary, helps Mel "Mr. Magic" Chaffee perform a trick during the "Positive Choices are Magical" Red Ribbon Week assembly at McBride Elementary Oct. 22.

The audience gasped as the magician turned the card deck around, revealing face cards that had been blank moments before.

For third-graders, and many of the teachers, this is the first magic show they had ever seen live, and Mel "Mr. Magic" Chaffee hoped they'll remember the tricks as well as the message presented.

"Positive Choices are Magical" was the title of the Red Ribbon Week assembly Oct. 22 at McBride Elementary. The assembly was for all third-graders in Fort Benning schools.

Chaffee entertained the crowd with a variety of magic tricks, all the while reminding the students to just say no to drugs.

"This is an important time in your life where you can easily be influenced by older kids," Chaffee told students. "You need to say no to drugs."

For Katie Anderson, a third-grade teacher at Wilson Elementary, the assembly helped reinforce values the teachers try to instill in the children.

"I think this gives (students) an opportunity to hear from somebody else, besides a teacher, that there is an alternative to doing drugs — another outlet," Anderson said. "This is a really good idea and a great way to get the attention of a lot of children at one time, especially at this grade level."

Anderson said the lessons learned in the assembly will be brought back into the classroom, then into the home.

"At school we have lots of discussions about things students should do when someone bullies them or offers them drugs," Anderson said. "We have discussions and we give them suggestions — like instead of drugs, talk to the person and say it's not a good idea. If they smoke, tell them to stop and that it is harmful for both of you."

Mady Binion, a student at Wilson Elementary, said the magic show reminded her of a promise she already made.

"I'm going to just say no to drugs," Binion said, "because my dad used to smoke, but he stopped so me and my brother wouldn't do drugs."

Chris Shiller, a McBride Elementary student, is an amateur magician with books full of tricks.

Now, after the assembly, he may have found a new reason to do magic.

"Maybe, I could do magic and make the drugs disappear," Shiller said.

"I think I would be trying so much new magic that I wouldn't have time to even try drugs."

Chaffee said comments like Binion's and Shiller's are the reason he puts on assemblies like this one.

"It's got to be fun, and at the same time have subliminal messages," Chaffee said.

"If they remember the trick, they'll remember the message."

Chaffee said he tries to teach the students that to be a good magician they can't do drugs or alcohol, and they need to be polite.

"Basically I teach the children how to not be bad," Chaffee said.

"I do the show and put the message out, and then I leave. (The teachers) are here long after me to enforce the message."

Debra Manning, of the Army Substance Abuse Program, said the goal is for the student to go home and tell their parents about what they saw and learned.

"The Soldiers, in turn, come in and talk to me," Manning said. "We see residual effects."

Along with watching the magic show, students were also given a drug awareness activity book that can be used in the classroom, and Chaffee handed out drug awareness red ribbons.

Red Ribbon week commemorates the death of Federal Drug Enforcement Administration Agent Enrique "Kiki" Camarena.

Camarena was killed during a drug investigation in Mexico in 1985.

According to Manning, activities throughout the week-long celebration are designed to help promote drug awareness and present positive alternatives to drug and alcohol use for youths and adults.

REFLECTIONS

On Sunday, Oct. 31, 1517, the people gathered at the Castle Church in Wittenburg, Germany, didn't know the full effect of the piece of paper nailed to the door.

Most of them probably didn't think anything of it; since the church door was equivalent to the weekly bulletin churches hand out today. They probably thought it was an announcement regarding worship times, office hours or some other innocuous event.

They thought wrong.

On that date, Martin Luther put forth 95 theses regarding the key tenet of theology, namely how a sinful person receives forgiveness. Luther sought to reform the theology of the church. What he didn't intend to do was to change the Western world.

On that date, Reformation began — a Reformation that would eventually lead to the political, theological and intellectual explosion we called the Renaissance.

But, this was not Luther's intent. The key theological teaching of the Reformation is this: God's love is unconditional and complete. God's love does not depend on what you have done or not done.

God's love does not depend on what you give or don't give. God's love cannot be earned in any way; it is freely given through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

God's love for you in Christ is free and undeserved.

Yes, you. This is God's love for you.

Romans 3:23-24 puts it very plainly: "For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, and are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that came by Christ Jesus."

All of us have fallen short of the glory of God. The good news is that Jesus Christ has made up the shortfall.

He does this freely, without any expectation. He just gives it away with no strings attached.

As Mike Yaconelli puts it in his book Dangerous Wonder, "The grace of God is dangerous. It's lavish, excessive, outrageous and scandalous. God's grace is ridiculously inclusive.

"Apparently, God doesn't care who he loves. He is not very careful about the people he calls his friends or the people he calls his church."

It's true. God doesn't care who he loves, which is to say, there are not any minimum standards for his forgiveness.

Everyone is forgiven and free in the grace of Christ. Even today, some 487 years later, this message still needs to be heard.

Each of us falls short of God's expectations and are in need of some forgiveness.

But all these years later, the message is still the same: God's forgiveness is available to everyone in Christ Jesus.

Sex Begins In The Kitchen. That was the title of the book. At the age of 13, when I spotted that book on the shelf, my curiosity far outweighed my comprehension.

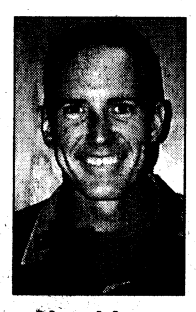
I had absolutely no idea what they were talking about.

Fast forward a few years. Army sergeant, ring on my finger, first duty assignment and first year of marriage.

I still had no idea what that book was about!

It's been 20 plus years now since Lori and I tied the knot, and though I wouldn't lay claim to being a know-it-all (by the way, I saw a bumper sticker this week in Infantry Hall's parking lot that said, "Yes, I do know it all ... I just can't remember it all at once!"), I now understand exactly what that book was trying to say.

That book was all about the fourth Language of Love.



You'll remember that this month we've been walking through the Five Languages of Love, by Dr. Gary Chapman.

So far we've discovered a few principles that undergird how we best communicate with each other:

- We all have a primary Language of Love (LOL).
- When that LOL is well-spoken by the ones who are dear to us, our heart feels full, life feels good and love feels great
- God has a great sense of humor, so rarely does he put two people together who speak the same language.

Marriage, children, work relationship, etc., usually mean that if you want a great relationship you'll likely have to learn to speak a new LOL to get it.

The first LOL was affirmation — the ability to fill your mate's love tank with positive, encouraging, "cheerleading" words.

Hawkins

The second LOL was quality time — the gift of being present and engaged in quality conversation and quality activities that fill your mate's love needs.

The third LOL was gifts — some people "feel" your love best through items you give them that reflect your thoughtfulness and affection.

The fourth LOL that we'll focus on this week gets us back to the title of that book, Sex Begins In The Kitchen — the fourth LOL is acts of service.

How could doing a simple chore like helping prepare dinner, setting the table or washing dishes possibly be the path to an amorous evening?

Well, what I didn't know then, I get now! Too many acts of service speak their language of love powerfully.

For these, what will fill their needs far more than saying I love you (affirmation) will be doing I love you, i.e., acts of loving service.

If you're married to someone who speaks this language, rest assured that great things will happen in the bedroom, as well as everywhere else, as his or her needs are filled through your acts of service.

This week, figure out a way to "ambush" them with unexpected and unrequested kindnesses and watch the temperature of your relationship begin to warm.

If you need any tutoring in speaking a new language, come see me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill.

It's our last week in the series Lord of the Rings: Keeping Your Love Together When The Army Is Taking You Apart.

You can register for a free cruise to be given away this Sunday after chapel.

You can also visit me at the Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606 in Soldiers' Plaza or call me at 545-1760.

Teachers and workers are needed for the Fort Benning Protestant Sunday School. The school meets at 9 a.m. Sundays at Custer Terrace Chapel. Child care is provided. For more information, call 545-4715.

Absolute Airborne third baseman Steven Cooper skirts past the Leaders' catcher to score one of the winning runs in the final game of the 11th Infantry Regiment's softball tournament Oct. 22. Absolute Airborne was down 4-2 in the final inning and an impressive second comeback on the day to win.

The 1st Battalion, 507th Airborne Infantry Regiment's softball team, Absolute Airborne, managed to pull out not one but two late-game, come-from-behind wins to stake their claim as the champion of the 11th Infantry Regiment's softball tournament Oct. 22.

The team came back from a seven-run deficit in their first game against the 3rd Battalion (OCS) and barely caught their breath before taking the field in the final game against the 2nd Battalion Leaders.

Down 4-2 in the top of the fifth and final inning, it seemed the champions of the post intramural softball league would be dethroned as the reigning softball superforce. But Absolute Airborne leadoff pinch hitter William Bennett unleashed an offensive onslaught against a quickly disintegrating Leader defense.

The barrage of airborne batting knocked in six runs in the first six at-bats and took the lead.

Absolute Airborne third baseman Steven Cooper took a trip around the bags to bring the score to 7-4 before two quick outs by left fielder Rafael Castañeda and pitcher Marvin Tom closed out the team's offensive showing for the day.

The Leaders, who came on strong in the first inning with runs scored by left center Steve Terrell, right center Reggie Hart and third baseman Ronald Wetherington, lost all steam with the championship on the line. Down 7-4 in the top of the fifth, the lagging Leaders lineup failed to produce and racked up three quick outs and leaving Absolute Airborne on top of the softball scene yet again.

"We like to give them a little encouragement, let them think they're on top of us, and then we pull it together and come out on top," Castañeda said.

The day wasn't all about softball though.

The regiment sprung for hot dogs, hamburgers, chips, soda and beer for all the Soldiers and family members who turned out for the rare Friday afternoon off.

"There are a lot of cadre in this unit who work hard every day to train the load, and it is good to carve out some time for them to enjoy themselves," said 11th Inf. Regt. commander Col. Mark Ritter. "Athletic competition is a great way to bring Soldiers together."

This was the first regimental level softball tourney for the 11th that Ritter knows about, but he said he plans to make it a permanent fixture as one way to keep unit morale up in increasingly challenging times.

"This is one of the highest student loads I've ever seen," he said.

"There are increases in OCS, Airborne and IOBC. Competition helps build up the esprit de corps for these guys."

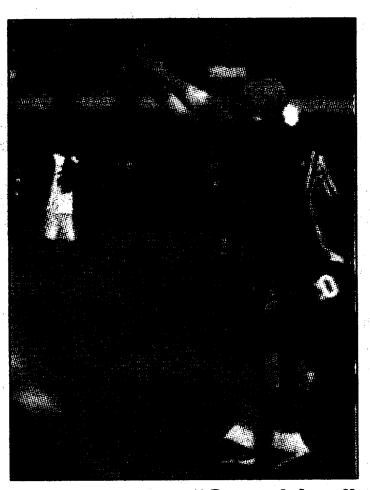
The Bulldogs remain undefeated at 4-0 after taking on the Panthers Wednesday at a flag football game at Engineer Field.



During the first few plays of the game, the 2nd Battalion, 69th FSC Panthers showed a great defense by gaining 15 yards on the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Bulldogs.

Panther's quarterback, Edward Rahming, evaded the Bulldogs offense, gaining the second down of the first half. This was taken to the next level with Panther Willie Cason scoring a touchdown a few plays later, putting the Panthers at a 6-0 lead a few minutes before the end of the first half. After missing a 1-point conversion, things got tough.

The Panthers started the second half with a false start. A few downs later they were penalized 10 yards for a foul play by linebacker Brian Dewitt.

The Bulldogs took their chance and brought out their best defensive and offensive plays, gaining 25 yards on the Panthers in the first five minutes of the second half. Soon after, a touchdown and a 1-point conversion brought the Bulldogs to a 1-point lead, 7-6.

Northside defensive end wraps up senior season

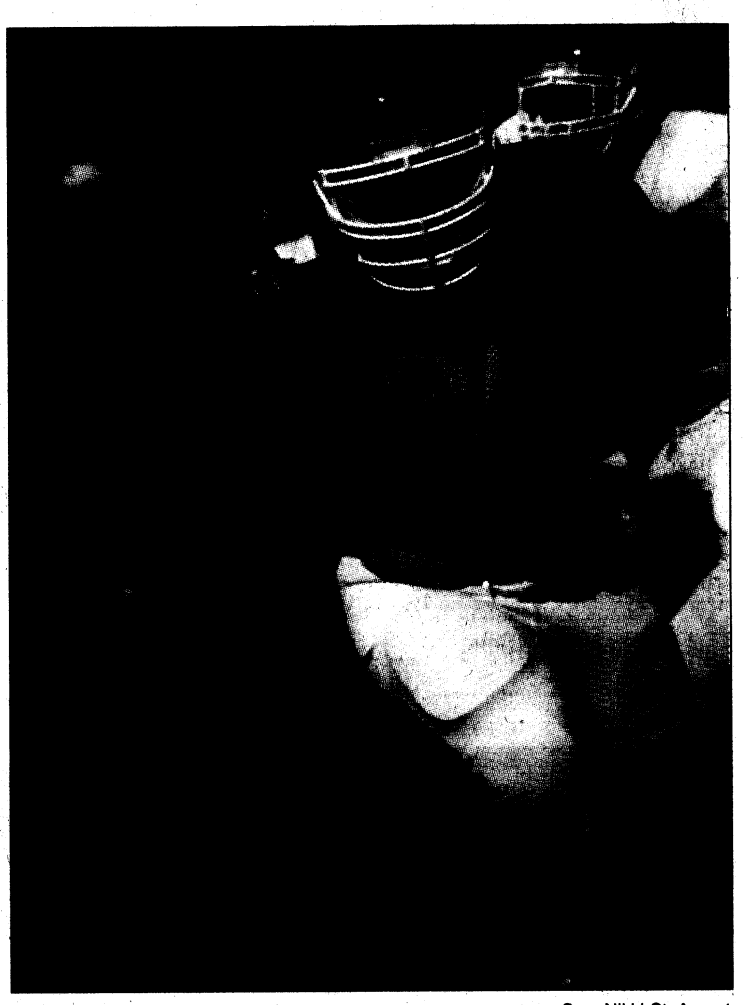
Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The Northside High School Patriot football team goes into tonight's final game of the season with a dismal 2-7 record, but senior defensive end Xavier Amaker isn't letting the odds bring him down.

"It is my last game, and since the playoffs are obviously out of my hands, I want to go out on that field, win one more game and leave with a good taste in my mouth," he said.

The 17-year-old hasn't been daunted by the challenges the young team has faced. This is the first year Northside has fielded a varsity team.

"I learned from watching my dad in the military that things aren't going to come easy," he said. "I don't let that or anything bring me down."



Bringing down everyone else is the number one thing on Amaker's mind.

With 35 tackles, seven assists, two tackles for a loss, one caused fumble, one recovered fumble and a sack he's a force to be reckoned with on the far side of the ball, Northside head coach Dwight Jones said.

"Xavier's a guy who works hard, plays hard and has never given up," he said. "He's been with us for three years and even though he isn't the biggest guy, he's got the desire, he's versatile and he's quick off the ball."

No matter what happens in tonight's game against Spencer, this will be the last time he will hit the field with the Northside Patriots. Does the little guy

Frisby comes back around

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I've been inspired by a few people in my life. Christa McAuliffe, the teacher-astronaut of the ill-fated Challenger space shuttle, and Father Mychal Judge, New York City fire chaplain killed while administering last rites on Sept. 11, 2001, are just two.

Being a sports nut, I've also been inspired by teams, namely the 1980 U.S. Olympic hockey team and the 2004 Boston Red Sox. But never have I been inspired by an individual player — until now.

The person I'm talking about is Tim Frisby, a wide receiver for the University of South Carolina Gamecocks. Not yet quite a household name, but he rightfully should be.

Frisby is a 39-year-old retired sergeant first class.

He is Ranger-qualified and spent time with the 82nd Airborne Division. He is a veteran of Desert Storm and Kosovo. He also has six children younger than 16.

And, oh yeah, he carries a 3.8 grade point average in his major of broadcast journalism.

Frisby retired from the Army and decided he wanted to live his lifelong dream of playing football. Because of his military service, he was exempt from the NCAA age rules.

Though the NCAA says it doesn't keep records of ages, he is believed to be the oldest player ever in NCAA history.

Frisby was declared eligible to play Sept. 23. In a Sept. 25 game against Troy, which the Gamecocks won, "Pops," as he's called by his teammates, was in the game for four plays.

In days reminiscent of Rudy and Notre Dame, the crowd went crazy, shouting "Fris-by, Fris-by."

How many 39-year-olds these days, inspire college kids? For that matter, how many 39-year-olds inspire people of any age? Frisby certainly inspires me. He shows that age is not a factor, and that you can serve your country and still live your dreams.

He is a shining example of pursuing your dream, no matter what the circumstances.

Bulldogs: Stay undefeated

During the last few seconds of the game, Bulldog wide receiver Manfred Malone, intercepted a pass and scored the second touchdown for the Bulldogs, bringing them to 13-6.

After an easy 1-point conversion the Bulldogs took the game 14-6.

"Although the Panthers started off strong, the win says it all," said Ruben Garza, Panthers coach. "These guys are very dedicated to this game. We began practicing three months before the season started and we practice on Sundays. It's about dedication and team work."

Amaker: It's all about respect with the big heart have aspirations for college or the pros?

Hamilton said he isn't holding any false hopes for a scholarship even though he and the coaching staff at Northside continue the search.

If the he doesn't win a n athletic scholarship, he will probably land an academic scholarship with impressive grades and multiple school activities.

Walking onto a college team is still a possibility in his mind, but only a remote one.

"My dad keeps telling me not to give up," he said. "We'll see."

For now, Hamilton is focusing on what he hopes will be a night of redemption for the Patriots.

"If you look at our schedule and record, all of our games were close except one," he said. "It's just the little things we need to work on. The biggest thing for me against Spencer is I want for us to get some respect."

The departing senior played through the difficult times of a young team struggling to make a place for itself against seasoned competition and now sees hope in the next few years for the teammates he leaves behind.

"I definitely see these guys making it to the playoffs soon. We have a great coaching staff that will develop the players they have and bring the best out of them," he said. "All I can do is try to be a role model for the younger guys, like a parent to a kid. Try to show them things like it feels good to me to lay a hit on someone. The other team tries to make you mad, but you can't let it get to you. It's about going out there and giving all you've got to be better than your opponent."

That's the experience Northside High will lose as the seconds roll out on the clock tonight and Xavier Hamilton's time as a Patriot becomes the past.

"He's been there for us," said Jones. "He's been one that won't be easy to replace."

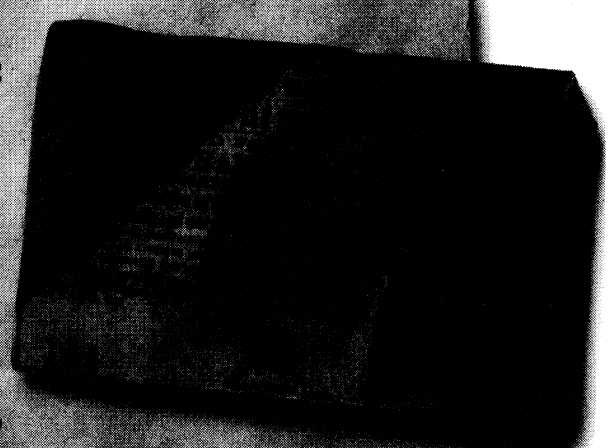
How "WE HAVE NOTHING TO EAT"



became "DAD, CAN I BORROW THE CONVERTIBLE?"

Millions of Americans can trace their roots back to an ancestor who came to the new world with a hunger. Metaphorically speaking, it was a desire for freedom. But more often than not, this noble goal was directly tied to a powerful physical need for a good, hot meal.

They came from countries around the globe, yet their stories were remarkably similar. They had left behind hard times, oppression and just about everyone they knew and loved to seek out a better life in the land of opportunity. And while it wasn't necessarily easy, they found that with a little hard work, perseverance and good old-fashioned gumption, they could achieve a quality of life far beyond what they had known before. They were free to live their own lives and prosper by their own hands. In fact, perhaps the greatest testament to the power of freedom is that, simply by working hard and educating their children, the world's tired, poor and hungry have become the nation with the highest standard of living on earth. Infantry tests survivability of lighter force

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

The Army is beginning the live "force on force" experimentation process for what is being called the Future Combat System — the future force of the Army.

The current Legacy Force will be replaced by the FCS and Fort Benning is the platform for the experimentation and training of the new force, said Bob Kruger, Fort Benning's project lead with Soldier Battle Lab.

"In the future, there will be a radical change as to how information is made available to units by various commands. The Air Assault Expeditionary Force spirals are a series of experiments to help us get there," he said. "The AAEF experiments will help transition the current force into the future force. The focus of the first experiment is to test how a force networked with a variety of new technologies can increase the survivability and lethality of a small, modular combat unit.

"The idea is for the size of mounted forces to be smaller and lighter to facilitate air transport," Kruger said. "With smaller units and less weight, there is less vehicle protection, meaning less armor to protect the Soldiers. To offset the reduction of vehicle protection, the experiment will test the concept that physical protection can be replaced with information overmatch."

Because of the advancements made in technology, how the Army handles information is going to change radically.

Kruger said in the future, there will be what's called information fusion — information will be populated and made available so units can pull from an information fusion cell the information they need to plan and execute missions.

The AAEF experiments are scheduled to range over the next four years. Each year there will be four to six weeks of live experimentation.

From Nov. 1 through 19, the EXFOR Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, is conducting a series of missions consisting of attacks and raids as part of the first set of live experiments.

The testing includes a variety of equipment developed by industry, Defense Advance

Force protection fencing project nearing completion

Congress OKd $5.5M for post security

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning is sporting a new feature, 34 miles of guardrail and chain link fencing.

The $5.5 million anti-terrorism, force protection cantonment fencing project was approved by Congress in fiscal 2003. The fencing improves the security of post's cantonment areas.

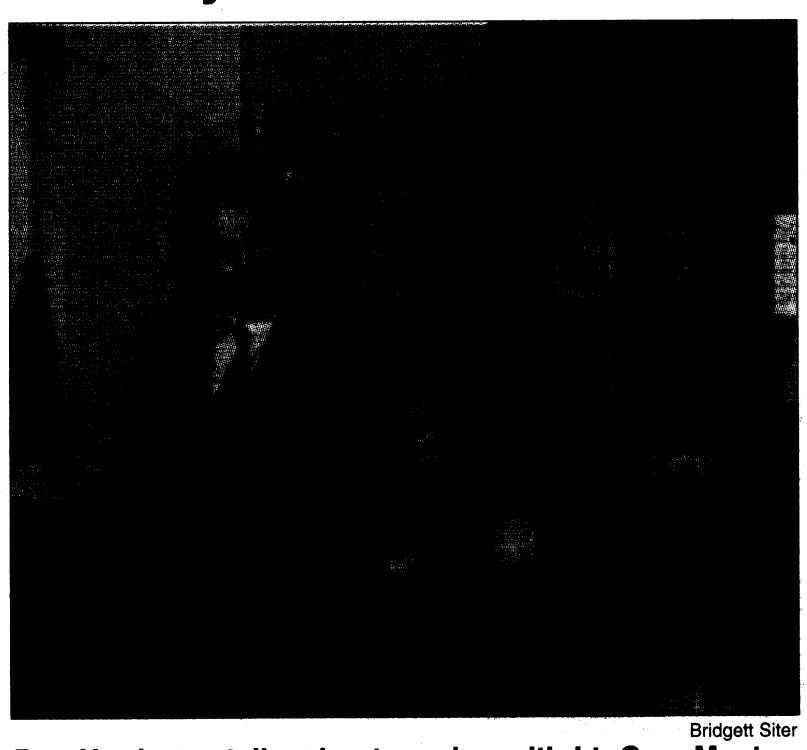
The Savannah District Corps of Engineers awarded the contract to The Clement Group, LLC, under a minority contractor program, said Folke Ahlquist, Installation Support manager for the Savannah COE.

Ahlquist said the contractor received the notice to proceed with the three-part contract in November 2003. The three contracts included installation of fencing and guardrail along the post's north boundary and Sand Hill, along U.S. Highway 27/280 on the eastern side of the reservation and along Lumpkin and Riverbend.

The fencing protects the main cantonment areas from unauthorized entry.

"The project is proceeding very well and on schedule," Ahlquist said.

The speed with which the contractor has installed the fencing has not escaped the notice of the post commander, either.



Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley mentioned the fencing in a briefing Oct. 15 to the contractor taking over post housing areas.

"I wish we could take a blood transfusion from the fencing guys and stick it into (some of the other construction contractors)," Freakley said. "They're working incredibly fast."

Clement Group Project manager, Randy Sterenberg, said the work is about 95 percent complete and should be finished in January 2005. In order to complete one section of the project along south Lumpkin Road, the Savannah COE and Fort Benning Real Estate office had to obtain a permanent easement from the city of Columbus. That easement, Alquist said, made it possible for the contractor to connect the South Lumpkin Road fencing with the Benning Boulevard fencing. The piece of Columbus city property is part of the National Infantry Museum site, Ahlquist said, and connecting the fences makes it

Family donates $1 million for infantry museum

World War II hero honored in new museum

Bridgett Siter

"He ran a hell of a mess."

That's how Ben Hardaway remembered Lt. Gen. Manton Eddy Friday during a ceremony at the National Infantry Museum in which the Hardaway family donated $1 million in Eddy's honor to the National Infantry Foundation for the construction of a new museum complex.

Hardaway, a name synonymous locally with construction, industry and education (think Hardaway High School), is the nephew of the late Manton Sprague Eddy, for whom Fort Benning's Eddy Bridge and Muscogee County's Eddy Middle School are named.

Eddy served in World War I and led the 9th Infantry Division through North Africa, Sicily and France during World War II.

Eddy married Hardaway's aunt, a Columbus native, but the two men barely knew each other when they met in France during the second world war.

"I ran into him — I mean literally. I almost ran him over with my jeep," Hardaway, 85, told his audience. "He said, 'Hardaway, what are you doing?' I said, 'General Eddy, I'm just trying to stay alive.'

"He chuckled and invited me to dine at his mess hall that night," Hardaway said. "He ran a hell of a mess."

Shortly thereafter, Hardaway became Eddy's aide-de-camp, and he learned to love the man who "never,

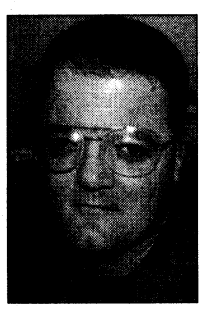
NCOS

Not just for breakfast



Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There was an ad campaign a few years ago. It seems people believed orange juice could only be consumed at breakfast in small glasses. This was becoming a problem for the orange growers and orange juice producers, so they came up with a campaign, the slogan of which was "Orange juice, it's not just for breakfast anymore."

I assume it was a successful campaign because the orange juice industry didn't go belly up.

Borrowing from their success, I'd like to start another campaign. The slogan of which will be, "NCOs — they're not just for breakfast anymore."

I'm starting this campaign because it seems there are Soldiers out there who believe NCOs can only help them with Soldier business and only during the duty day.

Just like those hapless OJ drinkers of years' past, they are mistaken. NCOs are, and should be, available to help Soldiers with issues including everything from personal problems to major purchases. NCOs don't want to make Soldiers' decisions for them, but they do want to make sure they have the information needed to make an informed decision.

Are NCOs experts on everything? No. But what we do have is an arsenal of expertise at our disposal.

I'd be the last one to give car-buying advice to my Soldiers, but I would tell them, if not direct them, to go to Army Community Services and take advantage of their car-buying seminar. Buying a car for thousands of dollars over its book value with thousands of dollars of other miscellaneous and unnecessary charges and an outrageous finance rate that costs thousands of dollars more is something ACS can help any Soldier avoid. And any NCO should be able to point any Soldier in that direction.

As a Soldier, if it feels like NCOs might be twisting your arm to get the information needed to make the right decision, think of the many Soldiers who don't get good information and make decisions on their own based on bad information. Who do they go see to fix the problem? That's right, their NCO, but now the NCO's hands are tied.

My message? If you are going to end up at your NCO's desk anyway, wouldn't it be better to ask for help to avoid a problem rather than deal with one? And, before you go, enjoy a glass of orange juice — no matter what time of day it is.

WWII vets continue to teach patriotism

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

I couldn't believe my ears at first. But unbelievably and unmistakably there it was.

Singing. Instead of just standing there quietly, they were singing.

And not just any song. The audience, most of them World War II veterans of the 17th Airborne, was singing The Star-Spangled Banner.

I couldn't remember the last time I'd heard an audience sing the national anthem. I couldn't remember the last time I'd sung the national anthem. But there it was … "Oh say! Can you see…"

Make no mistake, they weren't going to win any prizes. They weren't always in tune, weren't even close on the high notes, and the judges on American Idol would accuse them of being "pitchy," but it was spontaneous and the most heartfelt rendition I have heard in a very long time.

I considered kicking the power cable at my feet to silence the tape the veterans were singing to. The tape had perfect harmony, but the veterans had heart.

We are now losing what has been called "the Greatest Generation" at the rate of 1,500 a day.

We owe them much. And now I owe them for teaching me a lesson in what patriotism and honor really look and sound like.

Service members of what may very well be the next greatest generation are fighting a global war on terrorism today. Will they have to wait 60 years before we recognize the sacrifices they are making today? I hope not.

But I'll bet that in 60 years, when the opening bars of the national anthem play, it will be the veterans leading the singing.

At the end of the 17th Airborne's ceremony, the canned band struck up God Bless America.

The veterans creaked to their feet. Not as straight as they once were, but just as tall and as proudly as ever, they raised once hearty voices in song … "God Bless America! Land that I love …"

This time, I joined in. It would have been un-American not to.

You know what they say. "If you can read this, thank a teacher. If you're reading this in English, thank a veteran." Thanks, guys. I owe you. Again.

Like a good neighbor, WHINSEC's there

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

"Fostering mutual knowledge, transparency, confidence, and cooperation by promoting democratic values; respect for human rights; and an understanding of U.S. customs and traditions," seems like a pretty agreeable and relevant mission for any professional military institution focusing on any hemisphere of our globe.

Why then do we have thousands of people stand outside Fort Benning's Main Gate every year (Nov. 20 this year) demanding the closure of such an institution as ours?

With wars being fought half-way around the world, following a Wilsonian-like plan to spread democracy while crushing terrorism and tyranny abroad, one would think these protesters would take a moment to reflect positively on the stability and cooperation we have in our own hemisphere.

This, I believe, advanced by institutes such as the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, is evident in more open and supportive relations with our neighbors.

Our professional staff and faculty continue to train some of the most civic-minded and knowledgeable civilian, law enforcement and military personnel in the world.

No doubt a valuable asset to any democratic society, their value is multiplied exponentially when they impart the ideals of freedom and the course-specific knowledge they learned here on to others.

This, one hopes, would eventually result in a freer, more stable group of hemispheric allies who wish the same globally.

A great example is found in a relatively recent Washington Times article about six El Salvadorans who were awarded the Bronze Star for their heroic actions in Iraq.

Mind you, their situation was the first reported incident of hand-to-hand combat in the entire war.

Why would a country such as El Salvador support us in such a war when other nations shy away?

I would say, by way of a rather simple analogy of our hemisphere, it's because we act as good neighbors and have developed a good neighborhood watch program.

For example, if a family in your apartment complex had a child who started up a meth-lab, would you shrug it off and say "not my problem" as some might have us do with the drug crisis on an international level?

Would you stand by and watch as a family fell apart because of internal problems, and as criminal activity increased in your community?

Or would you take action and intervene before the situation exploded and consumed not just the family's lives and property, but yours and the entire community's?

When I hear arguments for the closure of our Institute, I question why a group would advocate taking such a valuable tool away from the American people?

In order to secure and maintain the freedom and peace we enjoy in our hemisphere, we must continue to engage our neighbors.

An environment for intellectual exchange, which WHINSEC provides daily, is keystone to keeping our neighborhood free, safe and stable for many generations to come.

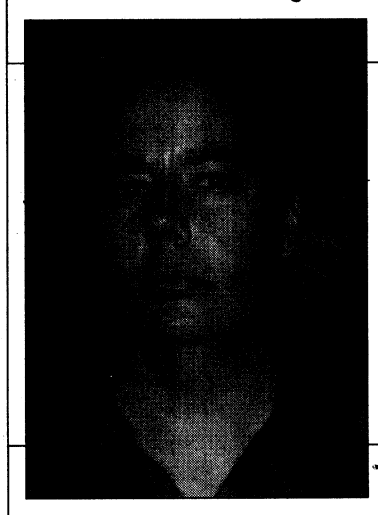
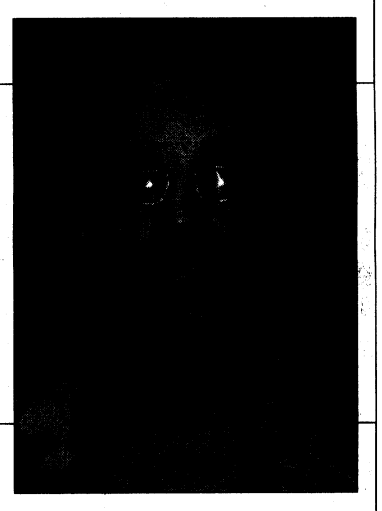
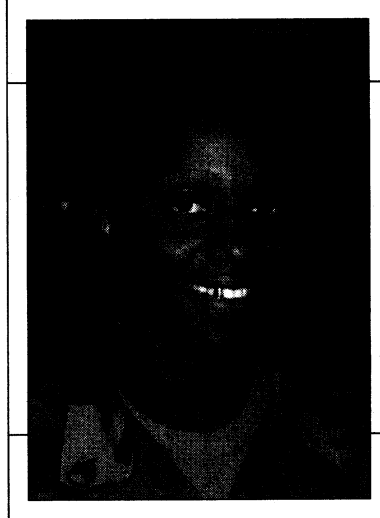
VARIOUS VOICES



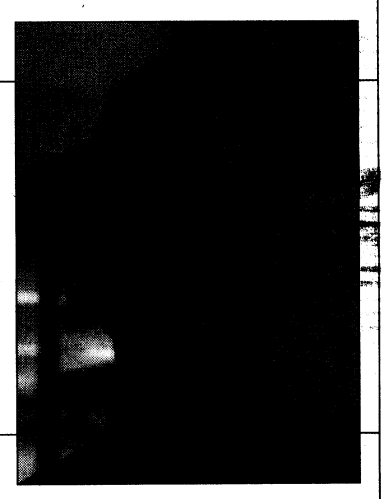
What is the best advice an NCO gave you that influenced your career?



Spc. Eiesha Moton, 598th Maintenance Company — "I'm a welder and being a female in a male profession, the best advice I heard was don't give up and don't be intimidated. And because of that I'm willing to work extra hard and go the extra mile to prove myself."



Maj. Jorge Roman, Detachment 4, 87th Division — "The best advice I ever received was to always be on time. It's something NCOs enforce. Also keep up with your vocation by going to all of the schools you are able to."



Spc. Cheryl Sherman, 249th Medical Company (Medevac) — "I only have three years left until I can retire, so the best advice I've heard is to just to stay in and finish the years I have left."

Staff Sgt. Jimmy Chambers, MEDDAC — "The best advice I ever heard was 'don't expect, inspect.' When you expect that Soldiers you're supervising will have something done, you need to actually go out and make sure it gets done."

Staff Sgt. Monique Bates, A Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion — "When I was a private, an NCO told me to take military correspondence courses because it would help me get promotions."

Sgt. Peter Flynn, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "Be willing and able to do anything you would tell your subordinates to do. And if you're not supervising, go help out. Your Soldiers will respect you because you work a lot harder."

Warrior tasks, battle drills designed, refined to produce capable, battle-ready Soldiers in all components regardless of rank, MOS

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Task Force Soldier was initiated by Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker, Army Chief of Staff, in September 2003 for the purpose of equipping, training, and instilling the Warrior Ethos in Soldiers.

Schoomaker wanted to focus the Army's efforts on winning the Global War on Terrorism and ensure that training is relevant and Soldiers are prepared for combat. Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley seized the opportunity to assemble the Warrior Task Site Selection Board, an advising team focused on defining the goals of Task Force Soldier.

One of the goals was compiling a list of essential tasks and drills that all Soldiers should be proficient in.

The tasks and drills are important because many Soldiers finish basic training and are sent almost immediately into combat, and some skills are important enough to warrant frequent review for more experienced Soldiers.

"I thought it was right on track for what we needed to do," Maj. John Williamson of TRADOC System Management Soldier, said.

The Warrior Task Site Selection Board included subject matter experts, including senior NCOs and officers from active duty, the Reserve component and National Guard, government employees and contractors, as well as "gray-beard advisors," retired senior officers and NCOs who lent their unique perspective.

From a list of 400 tasks with skill level 1-3 from 97 MOS task lists, the panel initially recommended integration of 174 tasks, a 45 percent increase over the previously existing task list.

Upon further review, the panel cut it down to 40 tasks and nine drills that every Soldier must be proficient in. The extensive process took from September to November 2003.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Infantry Officer Basic Course students practice moving as a squad in an urban environment. Urban operations is one of the new warrior tasks all Soldiers are required to be proficient in.

The panel submitted their recommendations to Freakley, who approved it, and sent it to Gen Kevin P. Byrnes, TRADOC commanding general. From Byrnes, it went to Schoomaker, who added one task, bringing the list to its current standing.

Currently all incoming Soldiers are trained in the tasks and drills in basic training, and they are expected to gain some proficiency in them.

The usefulness and relevance of the selected tasks and drills was evaluated and refined in initial entry training studies at Fort Benning, Fort Knox, Ky. and Fort Jackson, S.C.

The purpose was to integrate the list, and evaluate any improvements that could be made, with the goal of successfully training battle-ready Soldiers.

"The Warrior Task Site Selection Board and Freakley deserve a great deal of credit for creating the task and drill list. This will enable Soldiers to be combat-ready, regardless of experience or MOS," Williamson said.

Soldiers evaluate weapons, optics for program

Marksmen test fundamentals of firing

Spc. Natalie Loucks
3rd Brigade Combat Team PAO

Spc. Natalie Loucks

Pfc. Gene Kemper, B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, fires the M-4 carbine at Griswold Range Oct. 27.

Soldiers fighting the Global War on Terrorism have stressed the need for a squad designated marksman — a rifleman whose marksmanship skill is higher than the average squad member.

To meet this need, Fort Benning's Soldier Battle Lab and Directorate of Combat Development teamed with Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, Oct. 18 to 29 to evaluate various weapons and ammunitions in support of the Squad Designated Marksman Program as outlined in Field Manual 3-22.9 Rifle Marksmanship.

The four evaluation weapons were the M-16 A4 rifle, the M-4 carbine, the M-14 rifle and an M-16 A4 rifle modified by the Army Marksmanship Unit. All weapons were mounted with the advanced combat optic gunsight for magnified and accurate target engagement, said Dutch Waldheim, project officer for Soldier Battle Lab's Lethality Branch.

At Griswold Range, 25 Soldiers fired each weapon at targets ranging from 100 to 600 meters. The hits and misses were recorded and sent for analysis of the percentage of hits for each weapon.

The Squad Designated Marksman Program has five phases to assess the Soldiers' ability to apply the fundamentals of marksmanship.

Phase I evaluates the Soldiers' firing position. Soldiers must be able to demonstrate the proper position and be able to consistently execute and maintain each position, as indicated by FM 3-22.9.

Phase II consists of dry-fire exercises to demonstrate the Soldiers' fundamentals of marksmanship including aiming, proper breathing techniques, correct trigger squeeze and relaxation.

In Phase III, Soldiers must demonstrate range estimation methods to determine the distance between their position and the target. Three factors that affect the range estimation of target distance are the nature of the target, the nature of the terrain and light conditions.

Phase IV consists of shifting the point of aim to achieve the desired point of impact.

This technique is used at varied distances ranging from 100 to 500 meters when the Squad Designated Marksman does not have time to change his sight setting.

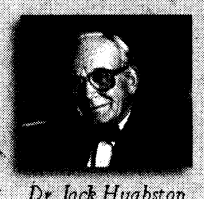
The final phase of the program is a live-fire exercise where Soldiers must demonstrate, by using all of the fundamentals and techniques that he has learned through the program, that he can hit at least 14 of 20 targets each at 100 to 600 meters.

Once the firer has completed the Squad Designated Marksmanship Program, he is identified as a squad designated marksman.

"If the squad leader spots an enemy up in a window 400 or 600 meters away, he can rely on the Squad Designated Marksman to get him with one shot," said Staff Sgt. Robert Jones, with DCD.

Pfc. Gene Kemper, B Company, 1st Bn., 30 Inf. Regt., shot 20 out of 20 targets using the M-4 rifle the first time on the firing line Oct. 27.

"When I got up on the line, I concentrated on breathing and I focused on the targets," he said. "I tried to clear my mind of everything else."



Waldheim said the Soldiers chosen are gaining more firing time and will be able to bring back to their companies the fundamentals and techniques they learned while out on the range.

Soldier rapes child, sentenced to 45 years at Leavenworth

Staff sergeant reduced in rank, will forfeit pay

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

A Fort Benning staff sergeant was sentenced to 45 years in prison for the rape of a child under the age of 16 at a general court martial Oct. 15.

The staff sergeant was convicted of four counts of rape of a child, sodomy and indecent acts upon that and another child younger than 16.

The Soldier was stripped of his rank, will forfeit pay and allowances, receive a dishonorable discharge and was sent to Fort Leavenworth to serve his term.

He will attend counseling and be obligated to register as a sex offender.

He was also convicted of a number of other charges: fleeing from police and driving recklessly, violating the Fort Benning garrison regulation by not registering weapons and transporting them incorrectly, violating orders by contacting the victim and family members of the victim, threatening a neighbor and escaping from pre-trial confinement.

One of the escape charges occurred when the Soldier managed to remove his restraints, jump out of the vehicle he was being transported in and ran. He was pursued by 26 sheriff's deputies and finally caught by a canine unit. On a previous occasion, he led the MPs on a high-speed chase across post.

The Staff Judge Advocate's Capt. Rebecca K. Connally prosecuted the case.

"The verdict was a success in that the offender was punished and the victims feel a sense of justice and a sense of closure," said Connally.

In May 2004, a Fort Benning sergeant first class pleaded guilty to sexual abuse on a child younger than 16. He was sentenced to jail time and had his rank reduced.

The Army takes sexual abuse and molestation charges very seriously, and will prosecute, Connally said. If an alleged offender is found guilty, besides jail time, they can be barred from carrying a weapon, removed to a non-deployable unit, or administratively or punitively discharged, limiting their employment opportunities in the civilian world.

"We try these cases not only for a just result, but so victims will know that someone will stand up for them and support them, and the accused will receive his day in court."

The Staff Judge Advocate's Victim and Witness liaisons, Cenneta Gunn and Laura Grant, assisted the victims and their families during and after the trial process.

> The Army takes sexual abuse and molestation charges very seriously, and will prosecute. If an alleged offender is found guilty, besides jail time, they can be barred from carrying a weapon ... and dishonorably discharged.
> Capt. Rebecca K. Connally

Grant and Gunn provided counseling, assisted the families in filing the correct paperwork to receive transitional compensation, and helped them find the services needed to deal with the traumatic events. They worked with the victims and their families from the time the accusations came to the attention of OSJA until after the case concluded.

"In cases like these, it's not just the victims who receive the abuse. Everyone in the family, and everyone who loves the family suffers," Connally said.

"That's why the Victim and Witness liaisons are so important. The trial is just one piece of the battle, and we couldn't do it without them."

"If we provide timely and relevant information to the warfighters, they will be able to maneuver, position and employ effects to make them more lethal, suggesting they can be more agile and mobile because they are lighter," said Douglas Wong, deputy director for the Command Control Communication Computing Intelligence Surveillance and Reconnaissance On-the-Move Testbed, based at the Communications Electronics Research, Development and Engineering Center, Fort Monmouth, N.J.

"Soldiers will be able to trade the weight of armor for ammunition and lethality. The idea is that if you have enough information you can avoid having to need more armor.

The AAEF experimentation process strives to determine the effectiveness of the C4ISR and its effectiveness in supporting smaller and less armored units.

AAEF will experiment with technologies the Army can and does use now, as well as technologies that are in early development and not expected to be fielded until 2012.

"We would like to take the technologies that work and integrate them into the field as they become available," Wong said. "Some of the technologies are still very raw in terms of development. The reason we're doing this experimentation early is to try to catch insights on them as soon as possible. We are not however, the final approval of for any of the experiments."

The next three spirals will take place in 2005, 2006 and 2007.

possible to provide protection to the new museum site during periods of increased threat level.

Fort Benning's garrison manager, Chuck Walls, said the massive project was a good undertaking, helping bring the post in line with other installations.

"Benning has always had people encroaching," Walls said, "either for illegal hunting or illegal dumping."

He said it was not uncommon to find "industrial-sized dump sites" with loads of shingles or other large items, and the fencing would go a long way in keeping the post from becoming responsible for cleaning the sites.

"We started talking about this project in 2000," Walls said. "This fencing represents three years worth of funding and planning finally coming to fruition."

He said Fort Benning would not become a "closed post" because of the fencing, but one with "controlled access."

"If you want to do something legal on Fort Benning, you can come through one of our controlled access points," he said. "People will now have to make a conscious effort to come onto post illegally."

ever, lost sight of the plight of the Soldiers."

Eddy, who died in 1962, was remembered as a "Soldiers' Soldier," a forward-thinking leader who believed every Soldier should be a warrior long before the Army adopted such a policy.

He told his cooks and medics to take up the fight when American troops encountered a mass of German forces on France's Cherbourg Peninsula.

It worked, and Eddy earned a spot in history as "one of the greatest war fighters of the second world war," said Fort Benning's commander, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley.

It was entirely fitting, Freakley said, that the ceremony took place on the National Infantry Museum's third floor before a display case filled with photographs, uniforms and articles from Eddy's career. It was here, when the building was the new post hospital, that Eddy's daughter, Martha, was born — one of the first babies delivered there. Martha slept in a dresser drawer, because cribs had not arrived yet.

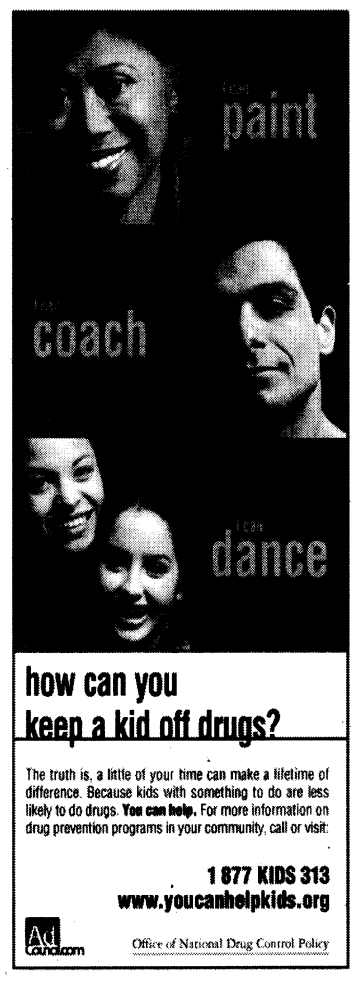
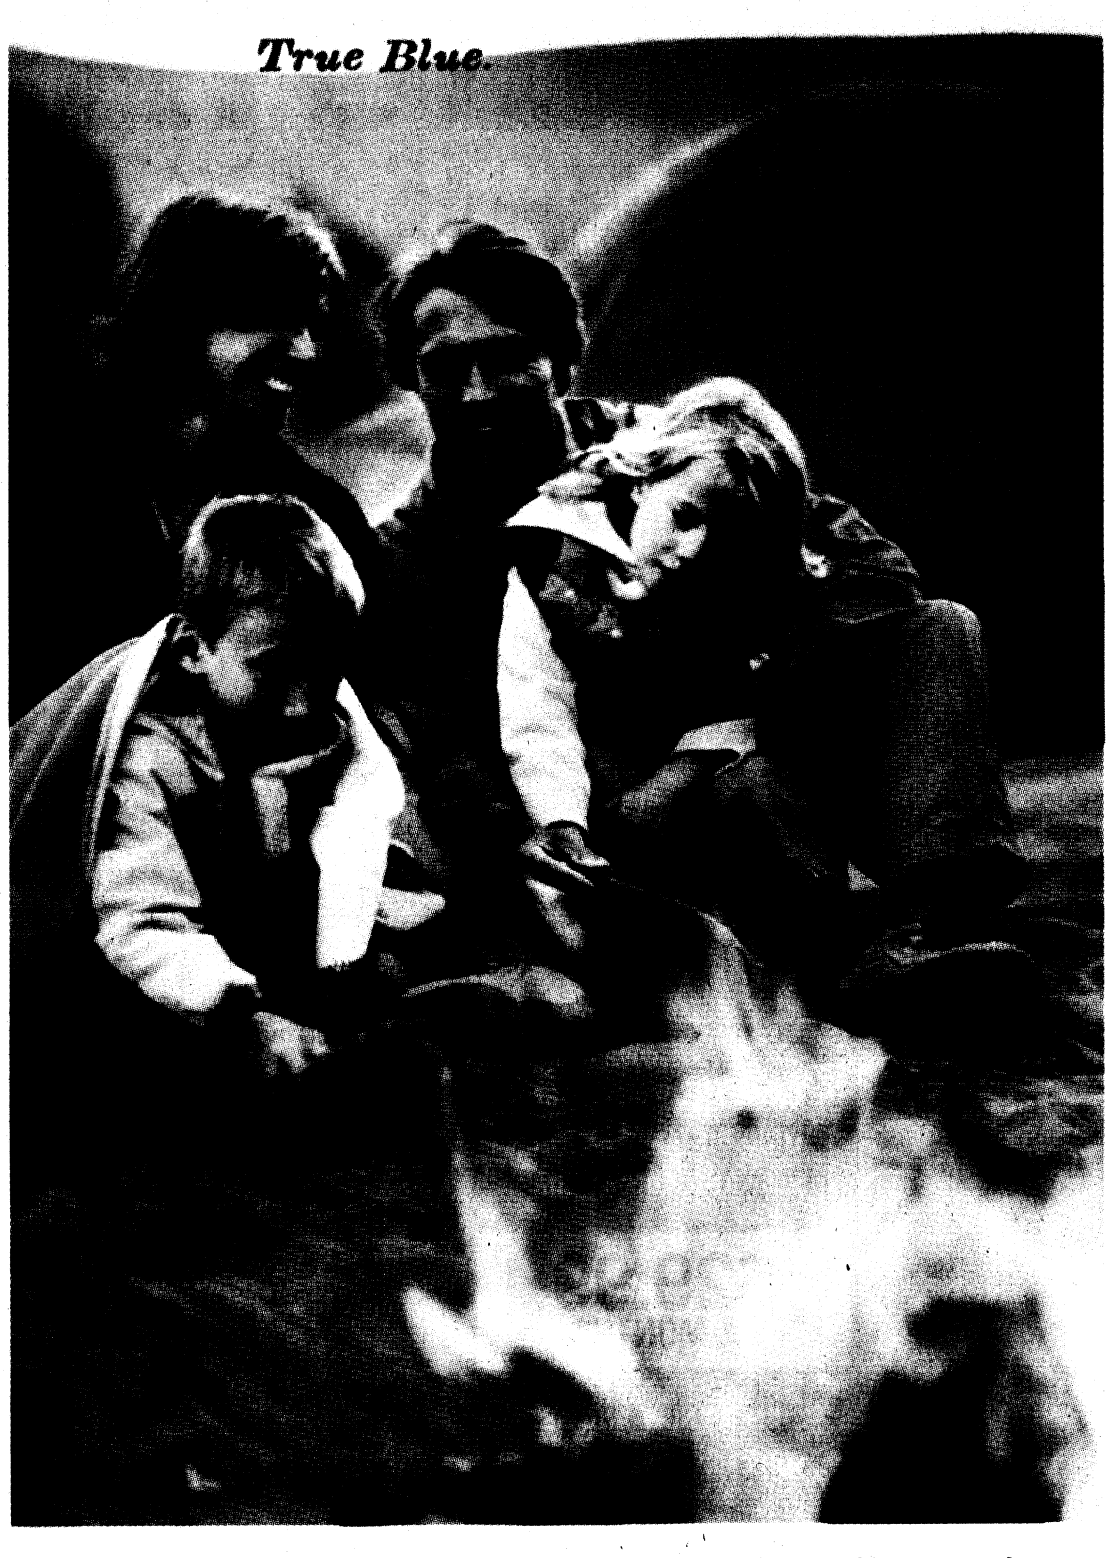
Eddy's story is the story of the military family, the story of the "marriage" of Fort Benning and Columbus, and the story of many, many brave infantrymen, Freakley said.



"All these stories will be told in the new museum. That's what this project is all about," he said.

The museum complex is scheduled to open in 2006 with a gallery devoted to the European Theater of World War II. That gallery will likely bear Eddy's name.



"This is the perfect way to honor those who've gone before us," said Hardaway. "I can't think of a more deserving person than General Eddy."

The foundation reached one-third of its $70 million goal with Friday's donation, said Cyndy Cerbin, the foundation's director of communications.

The new museum and Heritage Park will be built on 200 acres between South Lumpkin Road and Benning Boulevard.

Fort Benning CFC nears $900,000 mark

Fort Benning's Combined Federal Campaign has surpassed any goal it has ever set by nearly hitting the $900,000 mark since the campaign kicked off in August.

Usually, the CFC would have ended by this time of year, but because of the continued support from Fort Benning, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, has not yet closed the campaign.

"The way the money is coming in, I predict we will hit the $900,000 mark by Monday," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

"Our initial goal was $800,000, which is a pretty hefty goal. I was really pleased with everybody's participation."

Walls credits the success of this year's campaign to the leadership at Fort Benning and communicating the sense of giving to the community.

"If you don't explain what (CFC) is all about to people, they have a tendency to not want to participate," Walls said. "I'm a believer that everyone has a sense to want to help others, you just have to touch that nerve. A lot of that has played a role in almost reaching $900,000."

Last year, Fort Benning won a Presidential Award as the most improved campaign out of the Department of Defense installations for exceeding it's goal of $770,000.

"Each year I see where Soldiers' hearts are," said Cindy Cain, tricommunity CFC director.

"The agencies that Soldiers give to indicate it."

Cain works with CFC all year to ensure all the money is going to the appropriate agencies.

"It's good to donate to CFC because it's the only campaign in the country that all nonprofit agencies fall under and donors are not being constantly hassled to give money to," Cain said. "Also, when people donate their money they can feel safe that it is going where they want it to go."

Since not all of Fort Benning's units have submitted their CFC packets, Walls said the campaign will remain open to garnish a little more success before shutting down.

Once the campaign is finally closed, Cain will insure all pledges are sent through finance for the payroll allotments to be set up.

She will also make sure the rest of the donations are sent to the appropriate agencies.

"It's been a very successful campaign and it's largely in part of the great support from Soldiers," Cain said.

Airborne Black Hat convicted of fraternizing, adultery

Offenses violated Army, unit policies

Staff Sgt. James Agan, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, was convicted of fraternization, adultery, failure to follow a lawful order, filing a false statement and interfering with an investigation in a special court-martial held Sept. 21.

Agan was sentenced to 90 days hard labor without confinement, rank reduction to private, forfeiture of $500 a month for three months and a bad conduct discharge.

"The incident with Staff Sgt. Agan is indeed a blight on our regiment," Lt. Col. Sean McCaffrey, battalion commander, said, "We are entrusted with the sons and daughters of America — Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen, Marines and Coast Guardsmen. Failure to discharge that trust by any NCO or officer is intolerable."

Between Feb. 1 and March 31, Agan, an Airborne instructor, had sexual relations with two airborne students on several occasions, violating both an Army Regulation, 600-20, and a 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf. Regt., policy letter outlining standards of conduct for cadre. At the time, Agan was legally separated from his wife, but still married.

"If you aren't divorced, you are married in the Army," said Capt. Matthew Nieman, trial counsel for the government in the court martial. "It doesn't matter if you are separated or not, it's still adultery."

State laws do not apply in military legal proceedings.

When Agan learned an investigation of his relationships was pending, he contacted both of the females and told them to lie in the event they were questioned. In a sworn statement, dated May 11, he denied the relationships existed and then recanted in a second statement.

"I believe the appropriate actions have been taken regarding his blatant lack of regard for the policies all the leaders in this organization espouse," McCaffrey said. "We'll continue to train the finest paratroopers, jump masters and pathfinders and fulfill our obligations to the Department of Defense."

Benning's water safe to drink

Discolorations due to repairs, construction

Melissa House

The post's water treatment plant filters about 4 million gallons of water a day.

Fort Benning residents can rest assured that the water they drink and use daily is safe — even if it occasionally looks a little brown.

Shaw and Columbus Water Works workers fielded several inquiries about the quality of the water last week after residents in Olson Hall and Davis Hill housing noticed their water was off-color.

"Historically, this happens because of old water supply lines," said Joe Wilkins, an environmental specialist with the Directorate of Public Works. "The old lines have accumulations of sediment and scale." And whenever there is a major change in the water pressure running through the lines, it stirs the sediment.

Wilkins said the normal pressure in the lines is about 75 psi, but drops to about 10 psi when segments of the lines are shut down for maintenance. When the line is opened, the pressure jumps instantly, stirring the sediment, which should settle within a day or two.

The water coming from the water treatment plant is "pretty clear stuff," Wilkins said, and should look clear. So, the discolored water is not coming from the plant, but from the pipes.

"It's a nuisance concern, not a public health concern," Wilkins said, "but we still have a responsibility to stop it." He said there is no bacteria or viruses associated with the turbidity caused by stirring up the sediment.

Turbidity is the measurement of the cloudiness of the water, and something the CWW Works workers measure hourly at the water treatment facility.

The turbidity is measured by shining a light through a water sample and taking the readings of the light transmitted all of the way through the sample as well as the light scattered as it passes through.

"A reading of under one is good. The closer to zero the better," said John Cooper, CWW's manager of water quality monitoring.

Cooper said the Environmental Protection Agency recommends periodically flushing water lines to get fresh water into the system and flush out the sediment.

Since the CWW has only had responsibility for the Fort Benning system for a little over a month, he said they are still assessing what needs to be done. By visiting different sites in the lines quarterly and testing samples, the CWW will be able to use the results in setting up a flushing schedule.

The CWW does test the water's iron levels when red water complaints come in to ensure the water doesn't have more than the .3 mg per liter limit set by the EPA.

"Increased iron levels are noticeable well below that limit," Cooper said, "but most of the time we can trace the cause of the red water back to construction activity or the fire department drawing water to extinguish a fire."

The CWW draws more than 4 million gallons of water daily from the Upatoi. That water spends several hours processing through the treatment plant off Marne Road before heading out through the distribution system to Fort Benning customers.

Fort Benning currently uses 4 to 6 million gallons daily and the plant is capable of providing 12 to 18 million gallons, if needed.

Robert Lee Barron, a class 2 water treatment plant operator, has been working at the plant since he retired from the Marine Corps in 1994.

During his shift, Barron tests the turbidity of four water samples every hour and records the results in the permanent log. He said a system of checks and balances ensures the customers are getting the best quality water from the plant.

Turbidity testing on Thursday showed a reading of 9 NTU — Nephelometric Turbidity Units, named for the inventor of the process — for the raw water entering the plant from the Upatoi. The raw water is then pumped into settling tanks, where the large sediment is removed.

The water then moves through a series of 12 filters where alum and lime are added to help remove clay and sand particles. The filtered water's .05 NTU reading is a big improvement from the quality of the raw water, Barron said.

Barron's final test is the finished water sent out to the customer.

While the turbidity reading of .13 NTU was higher than that of the filtered water, Barron said it reflects the added turbidity caused by adding lime, chlorine fluoride and phosphates to bring the pH of the water back up.

Family advocacy targets prevention, solutions

The Second Annual Family Violence Awareness Program brought together a few of the various agencies who fight domestic violence on Oct. 28 as Domestic Violence Awareness month drew to a close.

Speakers included Judge Maureen Gottfried of the Muscogee County State Court, Chief Preston Robinson of the Phenix City Police Department and social worker Debra F. Howell with Fort Benning's Family Advocacy Center.

The event, sponsored by the Family Advocacy Program, Social Work Services, Directorate of Public Safety, Chaplain Family Life Center and Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, focused on social work and intervention, law enforcement and the legal penalties for abuse.

Working together, the agencies can more effectively combat abuse, Col. Lyle W. Cayce, Staff Judge Advocate, said.

"I hope we understand that we are not alone in the fight."

Gottfried said the biggest challenge she faces is that most abuse victims try to drop the charges when legal penalties are possible, but it is often not their choice.

If physical abuse occurs, the state pursues charges, sometimes without the victim's testimony.

"It's a tough stance to take, but it's a tough situation. We have a duty to the victims and the community at large," Gottfried said.

Many people who are in abusive relationships grew up seeing abuse in their home and teach it to their children, perpetuating the cycle, Robinson said.

"We do what we saw our parents do," he said.

Domestic violence prevention programs need to focus on educating children and families that abuse is wrong, "starting from the beginning," Robinson said.

Robinson said 1,927 instances of domestic violence were reported in 2003 in Alabama.

Of 297 homicides, 80 percent were caused by domestic abuse.

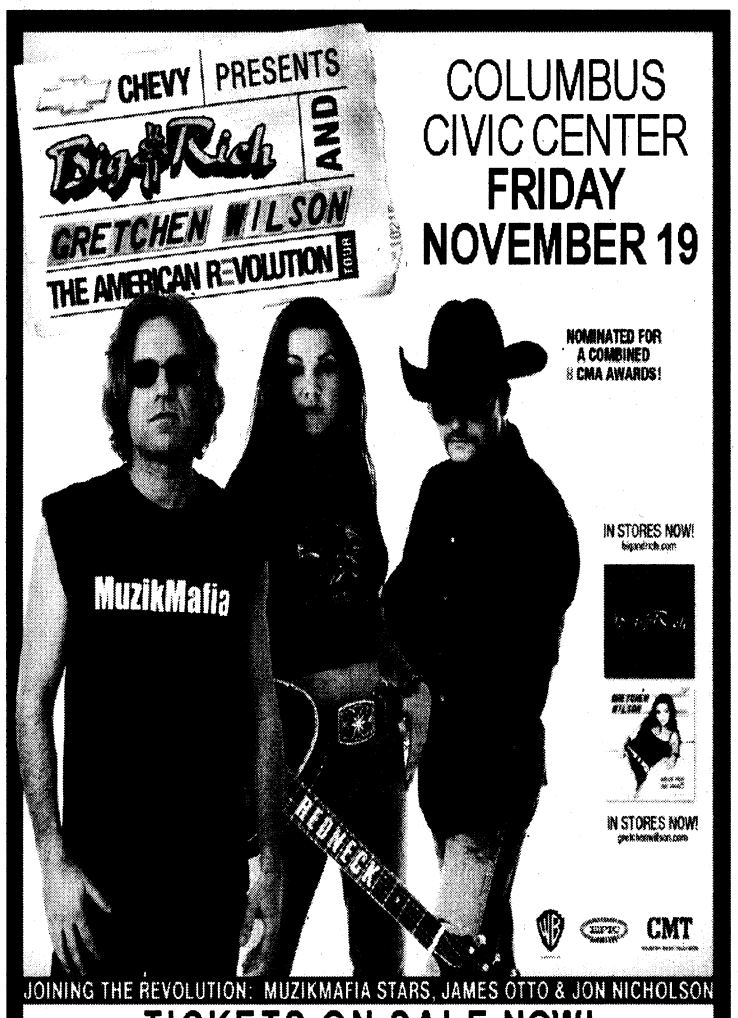
Raymond Tillery of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate helped organize the event.

"We want to get the word out to people at Fort Benning. You're not isolated. There are people here who want to help you," said Tillery.

The Family Advocacy Center offers education, anger management classes, counseling and intervention for Soldiers, family members and civilians who are in abusive situations.

When a violent event comes to the attention of Family Advocacy, the first thing that happens is a 72-hour "cooling off" time, in which the abuser and victim are separated.

Family Advocacy works with the family to find solutions, and evaluates progress at least every 12 weeks.



They also work with Phenix City and Columbus on programs such as the semiannual child abuse conference and off-post shelters for victims of abuse.
