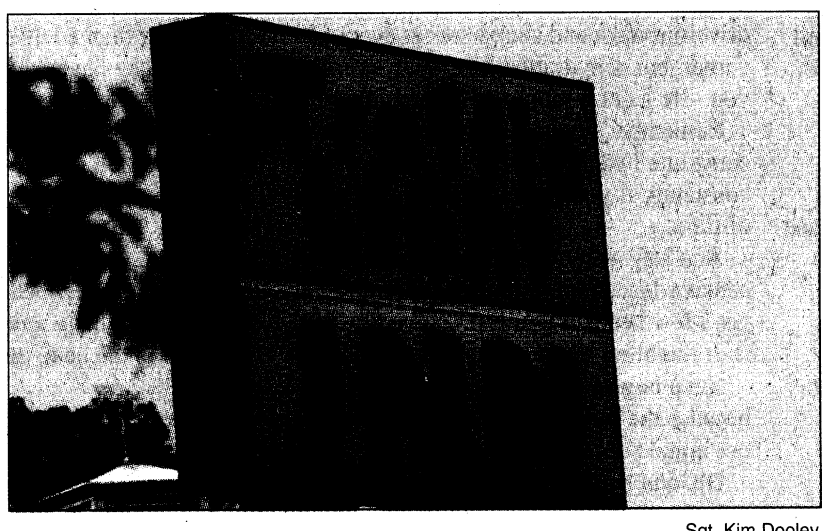
Businesses now off-limits



Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning's commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, ordered that eight Columbus establishments be placed off-limits to service members last week.

The CG issued the order after five of the establishments' business practices were reviewed by the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board.

The off-limits establishments are:

- Gold Lounge, 3613 Victory Drive
- Traffic Light Inn, 2210 Fort Benning Road
- Cellar's Lounge, 3456 Victory Drive
- Candlelight Motel, 3456 Victory Drive
- Coach's Corner, 3709 Gentian Boulevard
- Memory Lane, 1812 Midtown Drive

Sgt. Kim Dooley

The Traffic Light Inn is one of eight Columbus establishments declared off-limits to Soldiers last week.

- Ponderosa Motel, 3668 Victory Drive
- G&C Boom Boom Room, 2102 Cussetta Road.

The Ponderosa Motel, Boom Boom Room and Memory Lane are temporarily off-limits, pending review by the AFDCB, said Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, Fort Benning's provost marshal and president of the region's disciplinary control board.

These businesses have been placed off-limits in response to reports of criminal activity in and around them, including drug trafficking, prostitution and violence, he said.

The AFDCB advises the commanding general and provides recommendations for "eliminating conditions which adversely affect the health, safety, morals, welfare, morale and discipline" of service members, according to Army Regulation 190-24, Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Boards and Off-Installation Liaison and Operations.

The board for this region includes service members from Fort Benning, Maxwell Air Force Base, the Marine Logistics Base and the Columbus Naval Reserve Center.

It also includes representatives from a number of military and civilian agencies, including law enforcement, legal counsel, equal opportunity, consumer affairs organizations and alcohol and drug abuse agencies. Fort Benning's board also includes advisors from

Forces hand over Saddam

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, — The coalition officially transferred legal custody of Saddam Hussein and 11 other high-profile detainees to Iraq Wednesday.

Iraqi Prime Minister Iyad Allawi requested the transfer Tuesday, calling it an important step as Iraq takes control of its affairs after gaining sovereignty from the Coalition Provisional Authority Monday.

"We Iraqis believe that to truly be in control of our affairs and our own future, we must be in control of the destiny of the people we believe most responsible for so much of the suffering the Iraqi people endured over the past 35 years," Allawi said.

Saddam was expected to be charged by an Iraqi investigative judge Thursday. Salem Chalabi, head of the Special Iraqi Tribunal, said Saddam and the other detainees will physically remain in U.S. hands until the Iraqi correctional service is ready to accept them.

"The multinational force has agreed to this, and they will keep them for the Iraqis, but Iraq

Spouses create informal support group

Group designed for 2nd Inf. Div. spouses, parents

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's like a bad dream that just got worse.

Picture this. You've been stationed at Fort Benning for a few years. Your spouse goes to the Advanced NCO Course, and he and 35 others get orders for Korea. So you put him on a plane April 20, and on May 19, the 2nd Infantry Division receives a deployment order for Iraq.

What do you do?

If you're Marsha DeFelice and Lauren Huston, you get right to work.

DeFelice raised a red flag to her husband when she found out about the deployment. That red flag — no family readiness group.

Normally, the spouse would continue to be part of the FRG of the unit her husband just left, but the two ladies say that's not going to be good enough for them. They're trying to get the word out about an informal FRG they're starting to help 2nd Inf. Div. spouses in the tricommunity.

DeFelice spent more than eight years on active duty and said past experience in a rear detachment showed her just how important the FRG is.

> "I don't care if they're in Timbuktu. I just want them to be able to contact someone."
> Lauren Huston
> 2nd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division spouse

But for her, it's a lot different dealing with the emotions of having her husband leave for Korea, and now preparing to deploy.

She's guessing that there could be several hundred 2nd Inf. Div. families in the area and wants to try to gather them up and build their own support group.

Huston said they're also looking to help the single Soldiers.

"Their parents have no lines of communication with anyone," Huston said. "They won't be on a list to get information."

Huston has been through only one deployment in her husband's 17-year career. She weathered his deployment to Operation Desert Storm in 1990 with the 197th Brigade at Kelley Hill. The

Some like it hot

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I've been in the South so long, I consider myself a Southerner, and as such, I have little patience with complaints about the food, the language or the weather. The road runs both ways, you know.

Oh, I've been known to bellyache, "Boy Howdy, it's hot," but that's a far cry from maligning the entire Peach State as I heard the other day -- "I haaate Georgia, it's so hot." This from a Yankee who vacations every year in Florida. Go figure.

And those who try to explain why the heat here is so much worse than the heat where they come from really get on my last nerve. You know what I'm talking about — "It's a different kind of heat. It's drier (or muggy, or humid or toxic, etc.)."

Word to the wise, newcomers, it's hot down here. Get used to it, get over it and get a handle on it. Try to remember that six months ago, you envied us and six months from now, you will be one of us, drawl and all.

In the meantime, keep your cool. Complaining won't help a bit, but drinking lots of water will.

I strongly suggest you keep a case of bottled water in your car. It'll get real warm, sure, and chances are you won't need it, what with drive-throughs and shoppettes at every corner, but dehydration can sneak up on you. Be a good scout and be prepared.

Remember, soaking in a pool does not constitute hydration. It's best to sip water constantly if you're outdoors for any length of time.

And stay away from the alcohol, which actually leads to dehydration. Besides, you get a few beers in you and you're likely to start rambling about where you came from.

Keep bug spray and sunblock handy, because the bugs and the sun like to hang out in the South. They were here first.

Oh, and by the way, keep your clothes on. A half-naked body is not necessarily a cooler body. In fact, the opposite is often true.

You'll notice many of the locals wear hats and light-colored, loose-fitting cotton pants and long-sleeved shirts. They're protecting themselves from sunburn and the cotton actually absorbs heat and perspiration.

Keep a good eye on your kids, too. It may be true that the little ones handle the heat better than adults, but it's only because they have better attitudes about it. They waste very little time complaining when it's play time.

It's your job to keep them slathered in sunblock and make sure they drink plenty of water. Ditto for pets — lots of water and shade.

Well, gee, I feel better. Sorry to unload. I hope you'll hang around long enough to get used to the heat, the language and the food.

Welcome to the South, it's a wonderful place to be.

We're glad to have you.

It's your time, why not share it?

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

There was a time — not all that long ago, actually — that I was unselfish … well, less selfish, anyway. I lived my life in gratitude, aware that many of the blessings in my life came from the good works of other people. Some strangers, some friends.

And I repaid those blessings — at least, I tried.

For the anonymous donors who funded my scholarship my last two years of high school, I tutored kids and helped out at the library.

For the parents who gave up their freedom to raise my sister and me when they were still only teenagers themselves, I offered free child care for young couples without much money or time together.

For the grandmother who inspires me so much and taught me long ago to pursue learning and experience and knowledge, I volunteered at veterans and nursing homes and cared for a woman with Alzheimer's.

For the Soldiers doing the "tough stuff" overseas while I enjoy the relative safety and freedoms of my homeland, I baked cookies and raised money and wrapped care packages for deployed Soldiers and families of deployed Soldiers.

It was a sense of duty, a need to feel like I'd earned the things that had been given to me, that first got me started volunteering. And I loved it — the people I met, the people I helped, no matter how miniscule my contribution, the feeling that I'd actually done something for someone else.

I felt good about myself — not smug or self-satisfied, mind you. Just … good. The good that comes from doing something for no reason other than that you can and you want to.

And then, one day, I was too busy. I found excuses — I was too tired, I had too much work to do, I couldn't miss rugby practice again, I wanted to see my friends, I had a date, and so on.

It wasn't so much that I didn't care anymore — I felt guilty and promised myself I would get back on the right track. But then, my calendar stayed full, and my world stayed in its tiny orbit — right around me.

Of course, the good things didn't stop coming just because I stopped giving them. Nope. I didn't get off that easy.

The "old boys" in the rugby club kept right on helping out the club every way they could — from organizing its tournaments to keeping up its grounds to managing its finances — whether I showed up to help on grounds maintenance days or not.

The shelves stayed stocked by volunteers at the Sayers Library where I borrow books and movies even after I failed to follow through on my vow to read during Sayers' weekly story hour.

Thousands of people went to all kinds of trouble to raise money for cancer — a disease that has and will again affect my family — while I scribbled off a check instead of taking my fund-raising for Relay for Life seriously.

The list goes on. Some of you may have added to it. Some of you may not. But every single person on this post benefits in some way or other from the hard work and good intentions of the volunteers in our community.

And after a shameful hiatus, I, too, will make the time to be one of those people.

Even if it's just an hour a week or one day a month, I'm going to expand my orbit.

If you want to do the same, there are plenty of opportunities to make a difference both on Fort Benning and in the tricommunity.

Whatever your passion or interests, there's something out there you can do that won't feel like a chore.

For more details, see B-1. It's by no means a complete list, but it could give you a place to get started.

One holiday that never loses its flavor

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

There are holidays you love, and those you can do without. Take Halloween, for instance. You loved it as a kid because you got lots of candy as you traipsed around the neighborhood in your little bunny outfit. But it's one of those holidays you dread as a parent, isn't it?

And then there's Christmas — getting lost under the broad backside of that jolly old elf, Santa.

But for me, the Fourth of July is one holiday that just hasn't lost any of its bang through the years. If anything, it serves as a gentle reminder of just how fortunate we are to be Americans. It's a holiday I just don't skip, because no Independence Day celebration is better than one on a military installation, whether it be Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine or Coast Guard. Make no mistake, those whose serve in our armed forces are the most patriotic people in the country, and I'm certainly thankful for their service.

Although it may seem a little quirky that we celebrate the Fourth before the Fourth at Fort Benning, I'm going to take advantage of that. It actually gives me a chance to hear one of my favorite pieces of patriotic music — all 16 minutes of it — again on Sunday.

You know it, you love it, but you probably hated it as a kid. You may have been embarrassed by your parents whistling it or waving their arms, wildly conducting that "air" orchestra in front of your picnic blanket. It's a classic. It's Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture.

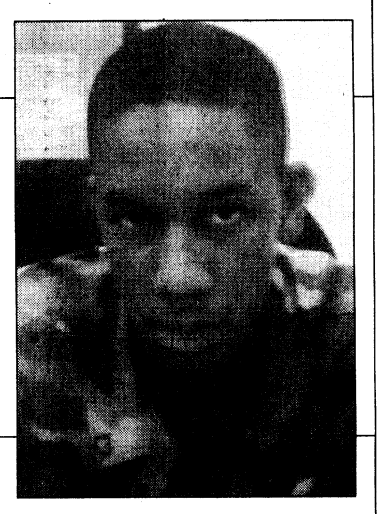
I have it playing in the background right now — mood music of a sort. I'm ready to hear it again and again.

But ironically, this piece, although patriotic, has nothing to do with our War of 1812, sometimes called the Second War of Independence. No, indeed. Tchaikovsky wrote it for the dedication of the Church of Christ the Savior in Moscow, a church erected by public donations to commemorate the Russian victory over Napoleon in their War of 1812. It has parts of the Russian and French national anthems, Russian chants, and themes of marching armies. If you listen closely, you can identify them if you're not hypnotized by the conductor's wand like I usually am.

So how did it become the crowning piece in American Independence Day celebrations and fireworks displays? Well, some guys in Boston were trying to find a way to revitalize the Boston Pops summer concert series. In 1974, they threw in the 1812 Overture and, as they say, the rest is history.

Concert goers apparently liked the new format, complete with cannons, church bells, patriotic songs and fireworks. Boston was the first to incorporate the overture into its Fourth of July celebration, and cities across the country followed suit.

Yes, America has great patriotic composers. We'll hear their songs on post, and we'll hear them again on Sunday. And there's nothing wrong with borrowing a patriotic song from another country. I can picture the Russian people celebrating in the streets of Moscow more than 100 years ago to the strains of Tchaikovsky. They must have felt so free, so empowered and so grateful to their army.



You've seen me on York Field, even if you didn't know it. I was that shadowy figure on the picnic blanket, waving my arms, wildly conducting the band while my family tried to act like I didn't belong to them. I'm an American, I'm free, and I have hundreds of Soldiers to thank.

BOSS conference to be at Benning for first time

Program betters life for single troops

Pvt. James E. Lewis
3rd Brigade Public Affairs

Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers will hold its annual conference July 13 to 15 at Uchee Creek. This will be the first year Fort Benning has hosted the annual Armywide conference.

At last year's conference, Fort Benning won second place for Best Event and first place for Best Installation in the large installation category.

The purpose of the conference is "basically to put a name out there for BOSS," said Spc. Matthew Gobble, BOSS president.

It's a way to let single Soldiers know about the program and to find out what they want to get out of the program, he said.

Discussions at the conference will include problems Soldiers might have with BOSS, quality of life for single Soldiers, Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation activities and facilities, and suggestions for activities and trips Soldiers would like to submit for consideration, Gobble said.

BOSS, in existence since the early 1990s, was formed to ensure that single Soldiers are given the same treatment as married Soldiers.

It has since expanded to include the "three pillars": community service, recreation and leisure, and quality of life.

"BOSS is there to look out for the well-being of single Soldiers," Gobble said.

"Besides morale, it's just a good way to keep the Fort Benning community together," said Spc. Anita Masihenazare, the newly-elected BOSS president.

If a single Soldier is pulling more duty than a married Soldier, BOSS tries to resolve that issue, Gobble said.

BOSS also organizes trips for single Soldiers to various locations, such as Disney World and white-water rafting in Tennessee.

It helps Soldiers save money and gives them a chance to get out of the barracks, Gobble said.

"BOSS has been helping out a lot with getting new things for Soldiers on Kelley Hill," said Spc. Patrick Morgia, a Soldier assigned to 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment.

BOSS has taken an active role in helping Soldiers on Kelley Hill acquire new barracks, said Morgia, who is also a volunteer for BOSS.

The costs for those new barracks have been approved as part of the millions of dollars the post received for military construction

In addition, BOSS takes an active role in the community.

Events such as the Easter Eggstravaganza, an Easter egg hunt held at the commanding general's house for on- and off-post families, and organizations like Habitat for Humanity, a non-profit volunteer program that helps build houses for the less fortunate, are just a few of the ways BOSS interacts with the community.

BOSS members also took part in last year's Lee Ann Womack concert, at Wetherby Field.

The group supervised the VIP tent where distinguished guests, such as the winners of a meet-and-greet contest, watched the show.

Upcoming BOSS events include the Special Olympics Master Bowling Tournament at AMF Peach Lanes July 17 and 18 and the Muscular Dystrophy Association Camp July 24 through 30.

"Our volunteers will spend a week straight at the camp being buddies with the kids there 24 hours a day," said Sgt. 1st Class Katheren Quinn, vice president of BOSS.

Masihenazare emphasized that BOSS is all about volunteers.

"We are a volunteer organization," agreed Gobble. "We're always looking for volunteers. The number of trips we take and events we take part in depends on the number of volunteers (we get)."

If Soldiers have any suggestions or questions, they should attend the conference, Gobble advised.

For more information about BOSS, the conference or volunteering for the program, please call 545-6800.

Benning chaplains to host Clergy Day

Spc. Brian Trapp

Norman Drummond, Valley Rescue Mission, takes his turn on a 34-foot tower during last year's Clergy Day.

Civilians to glimpse military life

Pvt. James E. Lewis
3rd Brigade Public Affairs

Fort Benning will hold its second annual Clergy Day July 15.

Clergy Day is an event exclusive to Fort Benning, during which civilian clergy from around the area are invited to come on post to get a sense of what their military counterparts do.

"The purpose of Clergy Day is twofold, really," said Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin, chief of chaplains at Fort Benning. "Number one is to help our local clergy in the civilian community understand what our mission is as military chaplains. Number two is this is a type of recruiting tool — a modified tool, if you will. Once they're aware of what military chaplains do, they may take an interest in joining the military. It's really more of the first than the second."

"This is an important event that helps build communication with the community," Cocklin said.

The day will start at 8:30 a.m. with a gathering and reception at The Infantry Center Chapel for the civilian clergy and staff members from churches around the Columbus and Phenix City area.

The clerics will then receive a welcome and recruiting briefing from Cocklin before heading off to the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, where they will receive an orientation and briefing.

After that, they will depart for the 29th Infantry Regiment, where they will view a Stryker and a Bradley Fighting Vehicle display and receive a brief.

They will get a chance to get inside the Bradley and take a look around, Cocklin said.

From there, the civilian clergy will head to Sand Hill, where they will eat lunch at the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment Dining Facility and talk with Soldiers attending basic training.

"They should leave Sand Hill thinking, 'Hey, I've got a pretty good handle on what goes through a Soldier's mind now,'" Cocklin said.

After lunch, the group will head to the Chaplain Family Life Center. There, they will receive another briefing before returning to TIC Chapel.

"Last year, we had about 40 civilian clergy participate," Cocklin said. "We expect around the same number this year."

Civilian clergy will walk away from this event with a more profound understanding of what a Soldier and military chaplain does, said Chaplain (Maj.) Kenneth Revell, the project officer for Clergy Day.

A Soldier does not control his schedule and can be deployed at any time, Revell said. Hopefully, this event will help local clergy understand and be more sensitive to Soldiers and their families needs, he said.

"I like to compare it to drinking from a fire hose," Revell said. "They will definitely get a taste of what it is like to be a Soldier, what it is like to be a military chaplain. The faucet will be turned on full force."

Soldiers help rebuild Iraqi universities

Spc. Bryan Kinkade
Army News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Completed renovations on Baghdad University and al-Nahrain University were celebrated during ribbon-cutting ceremonies June 24 by the 1st Battalion, 9th Cavalry Regiment.

The $600,000 projects were completed by Iraqi contractors hired by the battalion's Company A, attached to an Arkansas National Guard unit, 1st Battalion, 153rd Infantry Regiment.

"It feels good," said 2nd Lt. Robert Kotecki, the company's civil affairs and information operations officer. "It's a sense of accomplishment."

The Baghdad University renovations focused on the front entrance of the campus. They included a parking lot for 80 buses, plumbing and gardening improvements, and new walkways and lighting.

Before the lot was constructed, buses would park on the side of the road, the head engineer for the Karada District, said. Traffic jams would occur frequently, so the university's president made a plan to fix it.

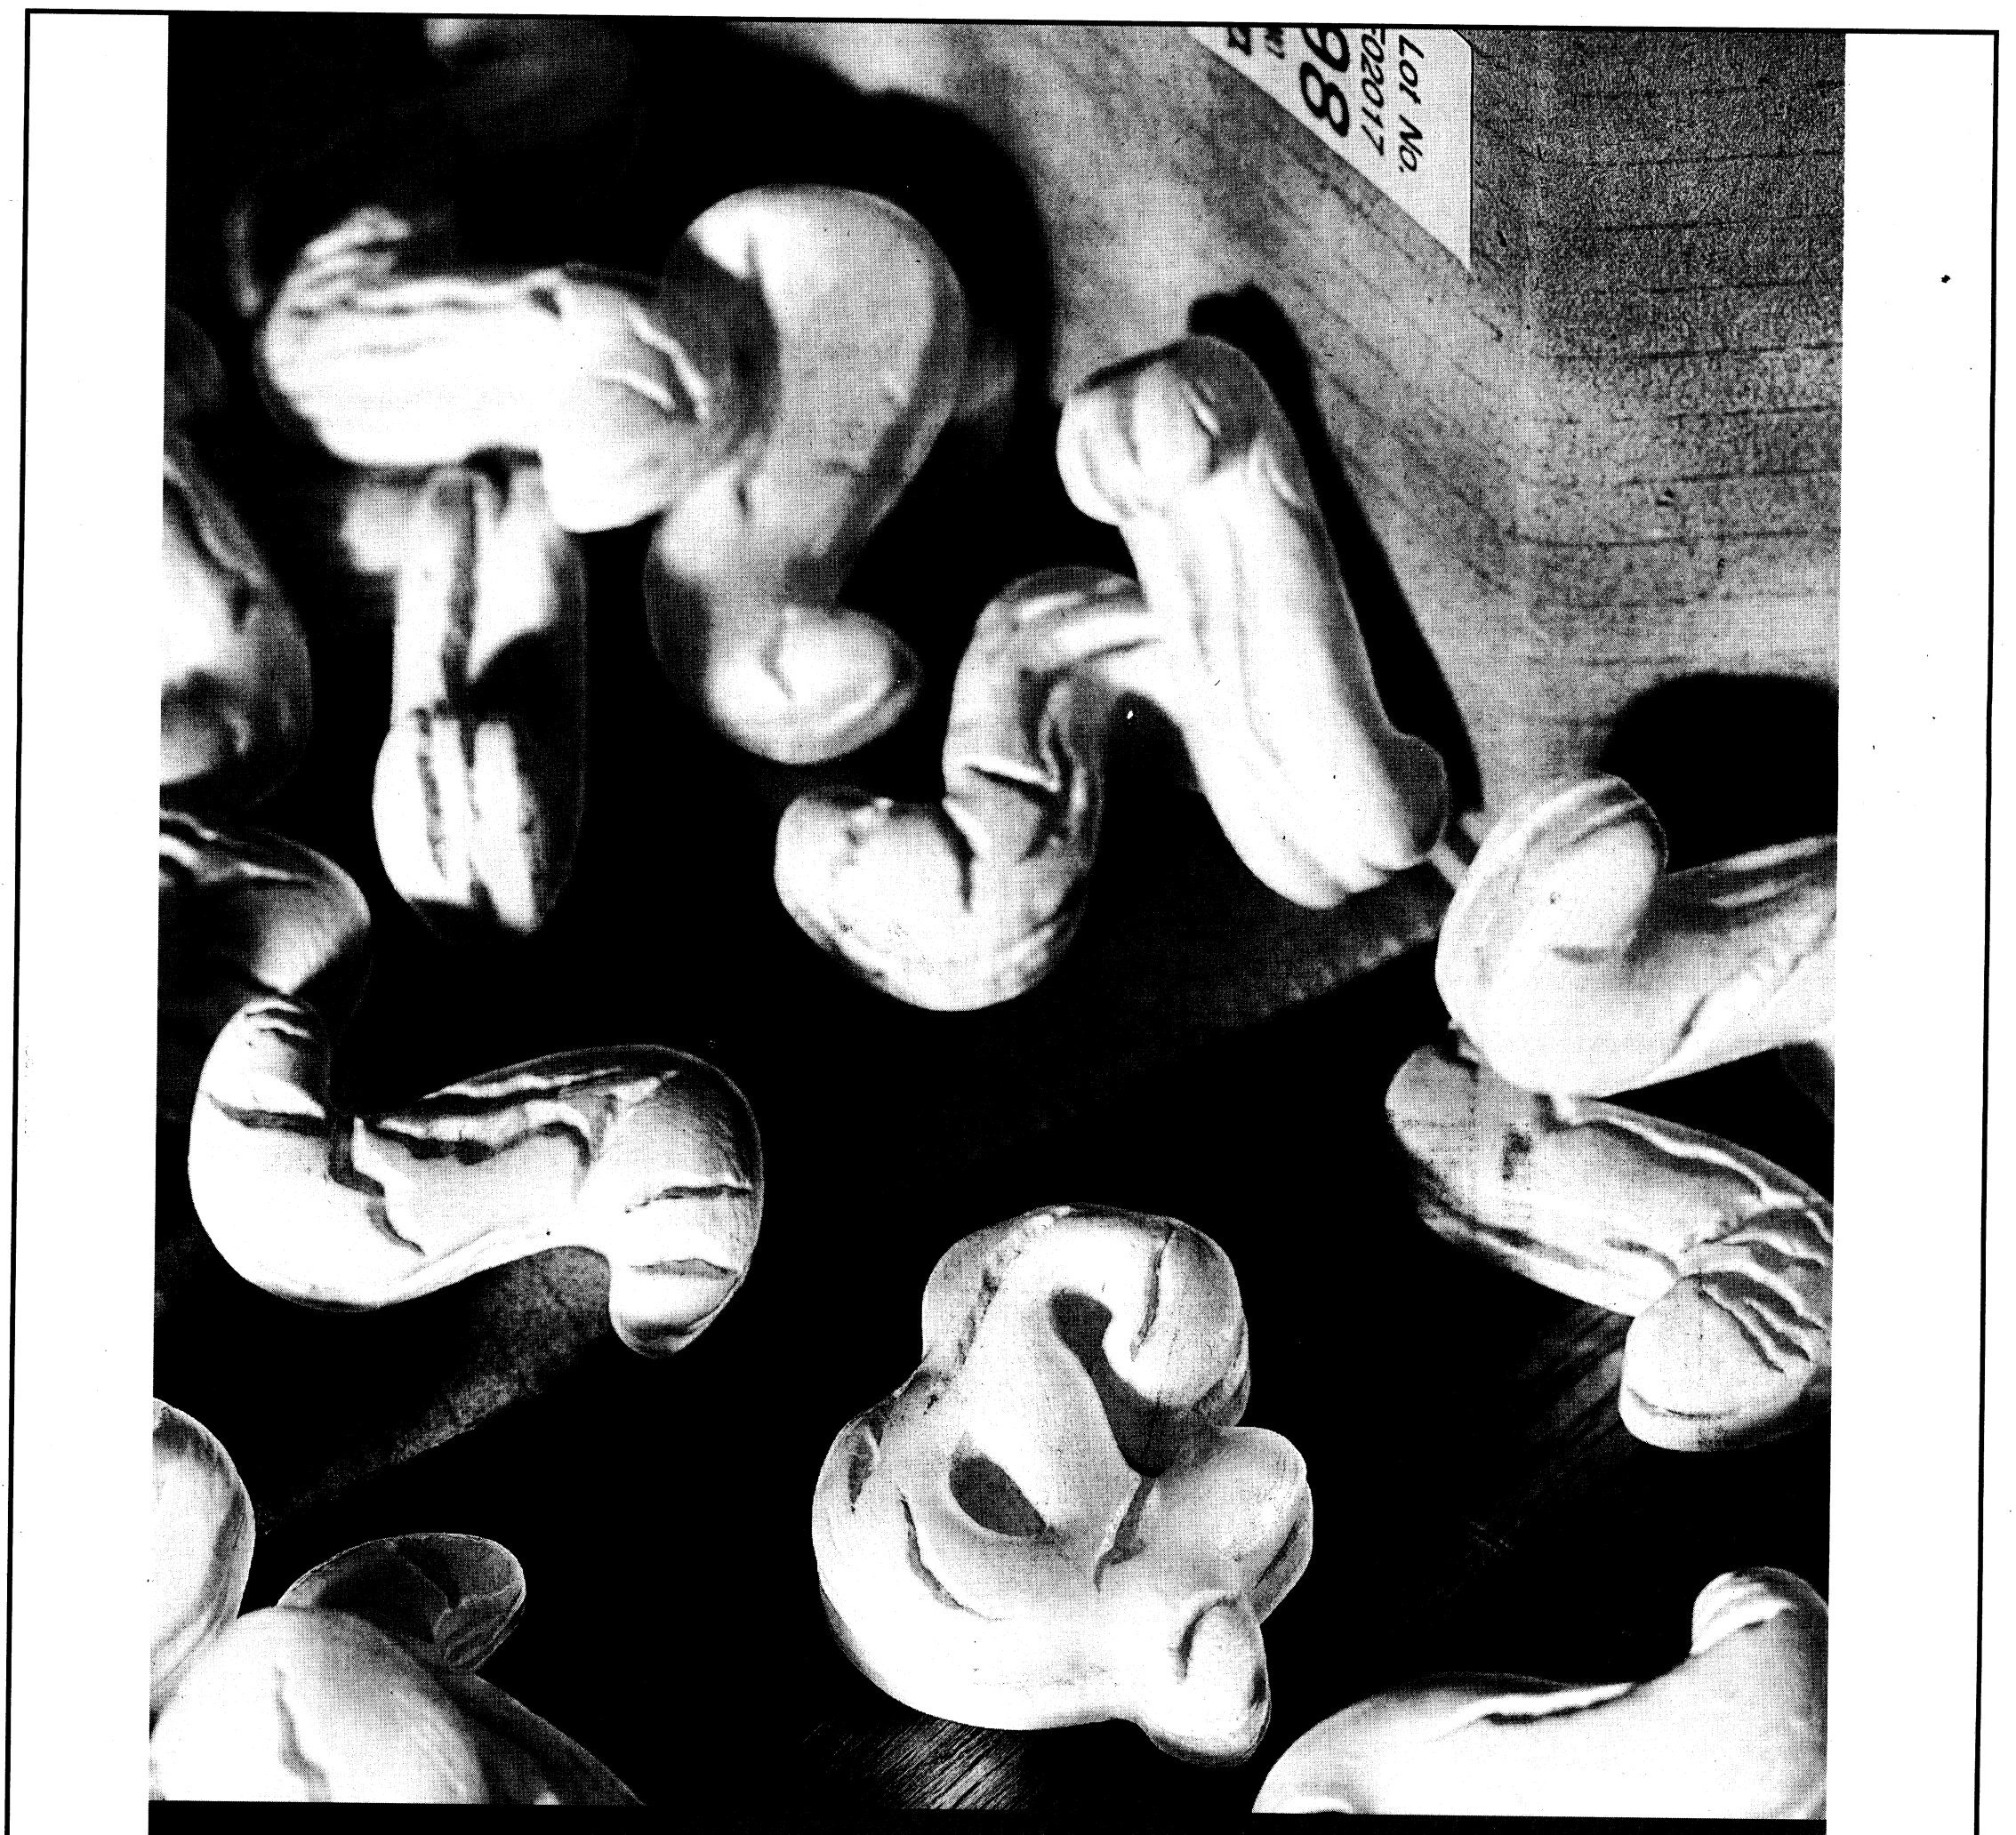
The fountains at the campus entrance were also fixed, after not working for 14 years.

Baghdad University is considered the most prestigious university in Iraq, with more than 70,000 students attending the satellite campuses.

After the first ceremony, the unit took off to the al-Nahrain University. The university received a new political science building, complete with air conditioning, fluorescent lighting, bathrooms, and an amphitheater for lectures.

"The building was started before the war, but it was pretty much a skeleton structure," Kotecki said. "The floor was littered with anti-aircraft rounds when we first got here."

The al-Nahrain University, formerly the Saddam University, was an elite school for Ba'ath Party children, Kotecki said.



At each university, Lt. Col. Kendall Penn, the 1-153 INF commander, cut the ribbon for the ceremonies. After the al-Nahrain University ribbon cutting, the Soldiers were treated to a feast of Arabic food and sodas.

All good things must come to an end: DOT chief retires to 'drive Miss Daisy'

Brown says goodbye to green suit

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

"Eventually, the Army is going to tell you you have to leave. And as you walk out the gate, and the gate closes behind you, know that you will be replaced by somebody else."

And so Col. Robert W. Brown, born an Army brat in Chateaureaux, France, in 1956, summed up a 26-year career on the eve of his final day as an infantry officer and the director of the Directorate of Operations and Training.

Brown said he feels he owes it to his wife, Sheila, to settle down.

"I don't think she knew what she was getting herself into," he said.

The two met in May 1978, right here at Fort Benning in the old Custer Terrace Officers' Club

Sheila blew off his offers to dance claiming, "I'm here with my friends."

Brown, who is accustomed to getting what he sets his sights on, rounded up a male friend for each of Sheila's companions, so she would have no excuse not to cut the rug with the 6-foot-tall lieutenant.

A year later, the two were married and the Columbus native, who swore she'd never marry a Soldier, was off on a journey that would span a quarter of a century and more than 20 household moves.

Finally, the couple is back at Fort Benning and putting down roots — at least for a while.

"I promised her I will not move her for a minimum of 10 years," Brown said. "And then we'll consider a move, or maybe not."

Moving, pulling up roots, separations from loved ones — such are the sacrifices of service, but the former Army brat said there were some great moments in his more than two decades as a Soldier.

Brown, a Virginia Military Institute grad, said everything that came after his dream assignment as the commander of the 1st Battalion, 16th Infantry Division, Fort Riley, Kan., was gravy.

"I had 1,000 Soldiers and was surrounded by great leaders," he said. "It felt like such a close family. The best assignment is battalion command — loving your Soldiers and training your Soldiers hard."

After aspiring only to become a lieutenant colonel and battalion commander by the 20-year mark, Brown said his tenure as the director of DOT was special in that it afforded him the unique opportunity to impact the entire Army.

But even as the nation struggles through a difficult period of conflict and turmoil around the globe, Brown said he doesn't really feel guilty for making the choice to retire.

"I've got two sons in uniform," he said. "It wasn't planned that way, but I feel like a piece of me is still (in the Army) in a different form."

Brown's oldest son, Josh, 23, graduated from Ranger School in May and is currently an armor lieutenant stationed along the demilitarized zone in South Korea.

Twenty-year-old Jacob decided he wanted to be an airborne Ranger and left the University of Florida after his first year to have Brown enlist him in the Army. He is currently assigned to a Special Forces group.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Col. Robert Brown, director of the Directorate of Operations and Training, pulls mementos off the wall of his Infantry Hall office Tuesday, before retiring Wednesday.

Brown takes being a good father to his two Soldiers and youngest son, 11-year-old John Robert, seriously.

He said he doesn't fill his scarce free time with golf or hunting like so many of his colleagues.

Instead, he fills Saturday mornings with soccer games, many days with Boy Scout activities and his evenings with rough-and-tumble wrestling sessions as a bedtime wind-down.

Any time left over after parenting John Robert goes to Sheila, who makes sure that when the work week is over, family becomes number one.

"It's whatever Sheila wants to do," Brown said. "She likes to go antiquing and I'm the driver. I'm driving Miss Daisy."

And so Brown has brought Sheila home at last, where the E.A. White Elementary School teacher can be close to the family she has missed all these years.

That same urge to feel connected carries over into even Brown's taste in movies, he said.

"We Were Soldiers is probably my favorite movie," he said. "It is filled with little pieces of Fort Benning. From the towers to the houses — my house looks just like that — to the hangar scene; all over Fort Benning you see little things that are in the movie and that, I guess, gives me a comfortable feeling of connectedness. And, of course, the main character in the story is a battalion commander. I can really associate with everything he went through, because, like I said before, there's nothing like being a battalion commander."

And what will Brown do now that he has shed his green suit and combat boots?

He will stay in Infantry Hall, working as a liaison between the infantry, the Army and Boeing Corporation on military technology.

"I'm not really leaving," he said. "I'm just changing uniforms. This new job lets me keep my hands in things and still impact the Army. So, I'll be around."

Infantry troops rally with Marine unit in Afghanistan for Task Force Linebacker

Capt. Eric Dent
Army News Service

FORWARD OPERATING BASE RIPLEY, Afghanistan — Army infantrymen recently joined the 22nd Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable) in its continuing combat operations in central Afghanistan.

The 22nd MEU (SOC) is operating under the moniker Task Force Linebacker, and its mission is to disrupt Taliban and anti-coalition militia networks in southern and central Afghanistan. There they have operated for nearly three months, recently gaining notoriety for their success in what is considered the traditional heartland of the Taliban.

Lt. Col. Terry L. Sellers, the battalion commander of the 2nd Battalion, 5th Infantry Regiment, said his Soldiers are ready to join the fight.

"Our guys have been wanting a piece of the action," said Sellers, referring to the recent weeks of fighting in which the 22nd MEU (SOC), along with the Afghan National Army and provincial Afghan Militia Forces, have killed or captured nearly 100 enemy fighters. "I think they'll do a good job for the 22nd MEU."

Sellers' battalion is part of the 25th Infantry Division (Light), which deployed from Hawaii and has worked extensively in the Ghazni province prior to joining the MEU.

While in Ghazni, the battalion worked with the Provincial Reconstruction Team to help bring legitimacy to the coalition and central government. The PRTs implement civil-military operations to help rebuild the war-torn nation.

"We are excited about joining Linebacker and it's been an easy fit so far," said Sellers.

With the addition of the Army battalion, Task Force Linebacker has more combat power and will be able to operate deeper into regions where coalition forces have not had a substantial and lasting impact, officials said.

Task Force Linebacker, under the command of Marine Col. Kenneth F. McKenzie Jr., has operated extensively in Oruzgan and northern Kandahar Provinces since late April.

McKenzie welcomed the additional rifle battalion. He stressed that while election efforts are growing exponentially in Linebacker's area of operations, there is much work remaining in both the combat and the civil-military arenas.

"I believe conditions are ripe for NGOs [non-governmental organizations] to come in and help the people of the Tarin Kowt bowl," said McKenzie. Tarin Kowt is the provincial capital of Oruzgan.

He also stressed that it will take continued aggressive efforts to keep the region safe.

That sounds good to Sellers.

According to him, "We have several great missions and look forward to executing them to a high standard."

In addition to the Army's 2nd Bn., 5th Regiment, Task Force Linebacker consists of not only the 22nd MEU (SOC)'s command element, Battalion Landing Team 1st Bn., 6th Marines, Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 266 (Reinforced) and MEU Service Support Group 22.

For more information on the 22nd MEU (SOC) and Task Force Linebacker, visit the unit's Web page, located at www.22meu.usmc.mil.

'Mailed Foot' welcomes new leader

Lt. Col. Scott Hickenbottom, left, accepts the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment guidon from Col. Brian Baldy, Infantry Training Brigade commander as outgoing commander, Ltc. Col. Allen Smith looks on.

ITB battalion changes command

Melissa House

The guidon of the only battalion of the 54th Infantry Regiment changed hands in a ceremony at Sand Hill Tuesday.

Lt. Col. Allen Smith relinquished command to Lt. Col. Scott Hickenbottom on Kanell Field, marking another chapter in the history of the "Mailed Foot" battalion.

The battalion's motto commemorates the march from the Voges Mountains to the battle in the Argonne Forest and back to Southern France during World War I.

Col. Brian Baldy, commander of the Infantry Training Brigade, led the traditional transfer-of-power ceremony, calling it a great day for the Smith family and a significant and momentous day for the Hickenbottoms.

Baldy said he imagined what was going through Smith's mind as he passed the guidon, reflecting on both the good and bad days and the "vital institution he contributed to so enthusiastically."

"The Mailed Foot battalion is better in every respect and undertaking," Baldy said. "It has shown great improvement and better capability. (Smith's) vision, perseverance and hard work ensured that."

Baldy described Smith as a "pre-eminent team-builder" and said the ceremony was made easier knowing Smith and his wife, Donna, would continue to be part of the ITB. Smith will become the deputy brigade commander.

Baldy said the unit is fortunate to have Hickenbottom, a proven infantryman, ready to accept the challenges of battalion command.

"There in front of you — the Soldiers — the rewards of the job," Baldy said. "Enjoy the five companies out there. They'll be six by October. Our country needs your leadership."

Smith said he thought he'd be nervous for the ceremony, but hearing a formation of Soldiers singing cadence pass by the field put him at ease.

Smith gave special thanks to his three command sergeants major for their lessons on caring for and leading Soldiers, saying they were all "nothing less than 100 percent supportive." Smith's 16 company commanders and 12 first sergeants during the two years of command, he said, were exceptional.

But after attending his last crossed rifle ceremony with the newest infantrymen Monday night, Smith made special notice of the drill sergeants.

"None do a better job of teaching and training the men of the battalion to become Soldiers," Smith said. "Perhaps one of the most rewarding aspects of command was to watch drill sergeants ply their trade."

He told the Soldiers to stand tall, look proud and remember their training as he left the battalion in Hickenbottom's hands.

Hickenbottom, a native of Texas, enlisted in the Army National Guard in 1984 and received his commission from the Officer Candidate School in 1986. He has served with the 8th Infantry Division in Germany, the 82nd Airborne Div., and the 11th Armored Cavalry Regt. His most recent assignment was with U.S. Pacific Command in Hawaii.

Hickenbottom said although Tom Brokaw described the World War II Soldiers as "the greatest generation," each generation has the opportunity to answer (the nation's) call.

"You are answering the call with the same bravery, dedication and distinction as generations past," he said, and describing command, "I can think of no job more important or more rewarding."

ITB drill sergeant spills secret of success

NCO builds Army one-by-one

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

What is it that makes a Soldier a drill sergeant?

Some say it's the hat. Others say it's an attitude.

Capt. Darren T. Spears, E Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, commander said it takes a physically fit, dedicated, motivated and competent NCO to be a drill sergeant.

Maybe they are all right, but one drill sergeant said the secret to success lies in compassion, understanding and a higher purpose.

"It's not about the hat for me; it's about the Soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class Walter W. Meeks, 2nd Platoon senior drill sergeant.

"Turning civilians into Soldiers is probably the greatest responsibility in the Army," he said. (A responsibility best left in God's hands, according to Meeks, who is also an ordained minister.)

He said the reason the responsibility is so great is because, with the way things are going right now, most Soldiers are leaving here and going directly into harm's way.

"Before I am anything, I am a man of God," he said. "So I try to look at everything in a spiritual sense."

While the E Co. Soldiers are still in red phase, which means they are under complete control of the drill sergeants, Meeks and his comrades emphasize the importance of performance and attention to detail with what Meeks calls "retraining."

Others may know this method of training as "scuffing-up" or "smoking," which essentially means the Soldiers do exercises while the drill sergeants yell at them.

This may seem like a conflict of interest for a man of the cloth, but Meeks said his faith helps him stay focused and grounded when dealing with stressful situations — such as the first steps of turning civilians into Soldiers.

"Nothing (the privates) do will make me upset with them," Meeks said. "I understand they are going to make mistakes, but I don't tell them that."

Meeks said he doesn't let the Soldiers know much about himself during the first few weeks, because they may try to gain sympathy from him.

He compared his drill sergeant facade to acting, saying he plays a role when he has to, but when the scene is over, he leaves the attitude behind.

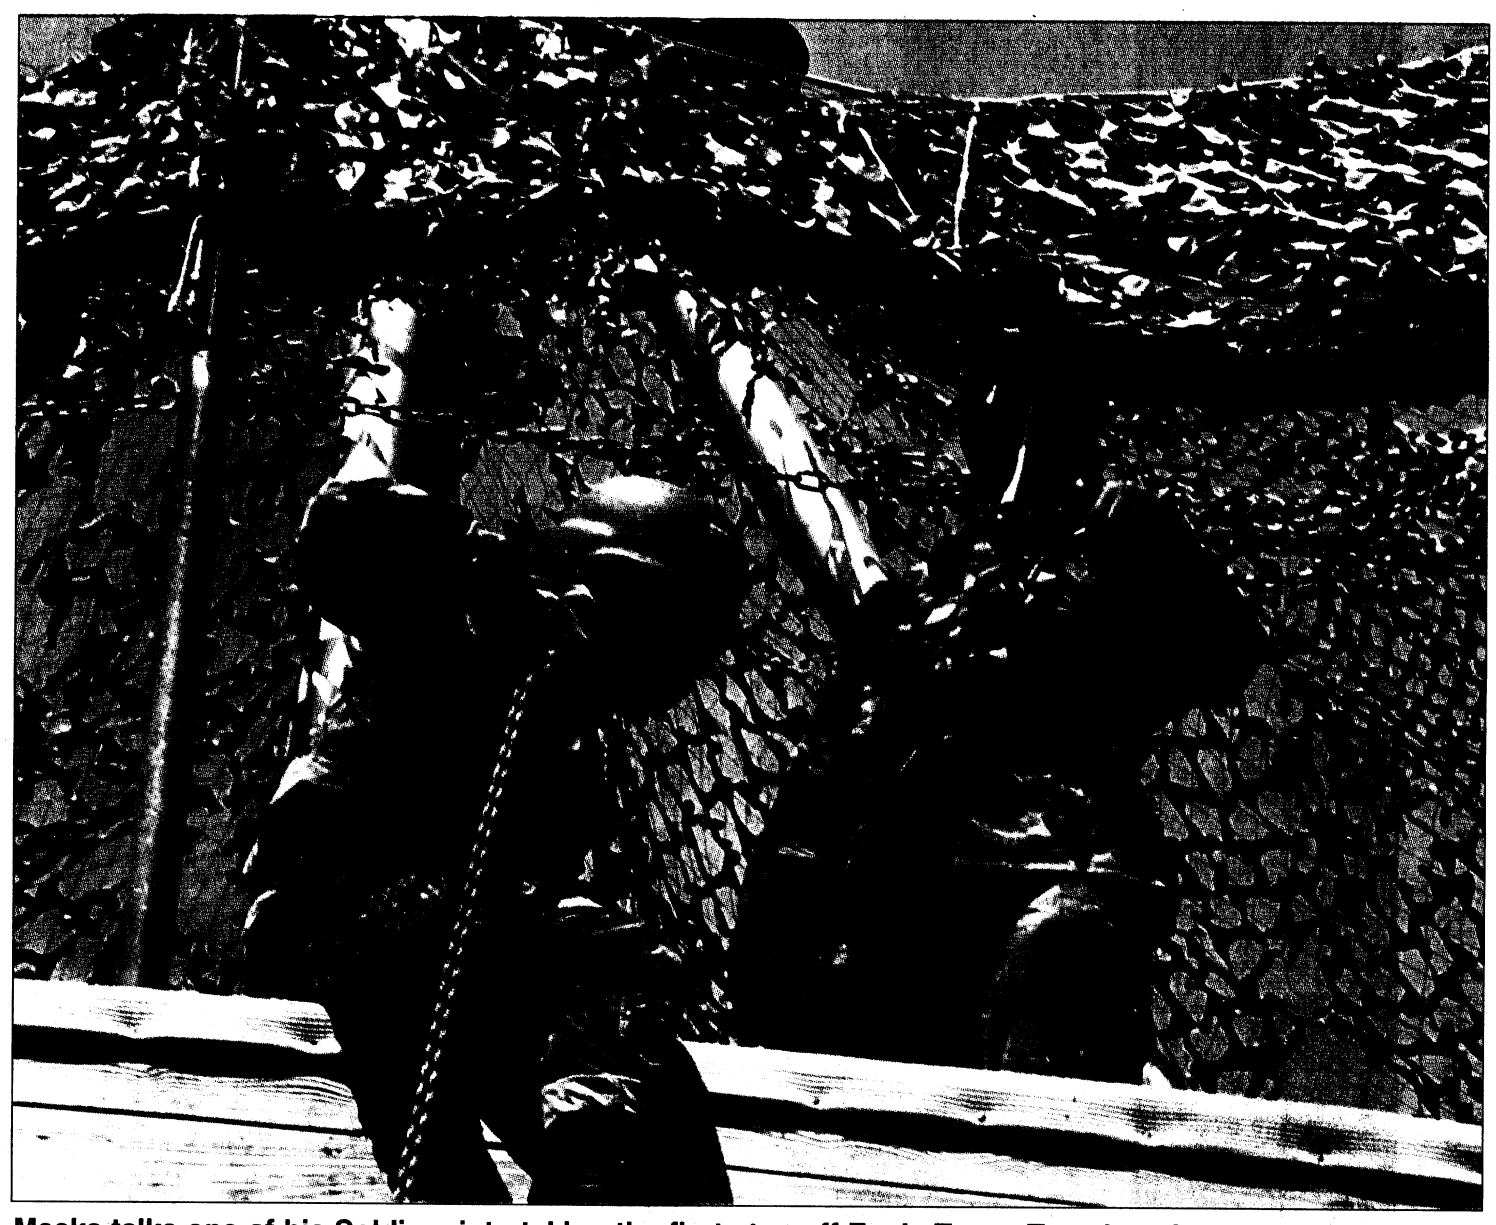
"I just flip the switch and forget about it," he said.

Being able to forget about the stress at work and separate it from family life is a necessity as a drill sergeant, Spears said.

"They have to take advantage of their time off, because they work such long hours," he said.

As the sixth of 10 kids, Meeks has a strong sense of family and said he uses that to his advantage, both at home with his three children, and at work.

After training a couple cycles of Soldiers, Meeks said he was about to give up being a drill sergeant because he felt he should be fighting alongside the Soldiers he served with in the 1st Cavalry Division. Then one day, he got a letter from the brother of one of the Soldiers he trained.



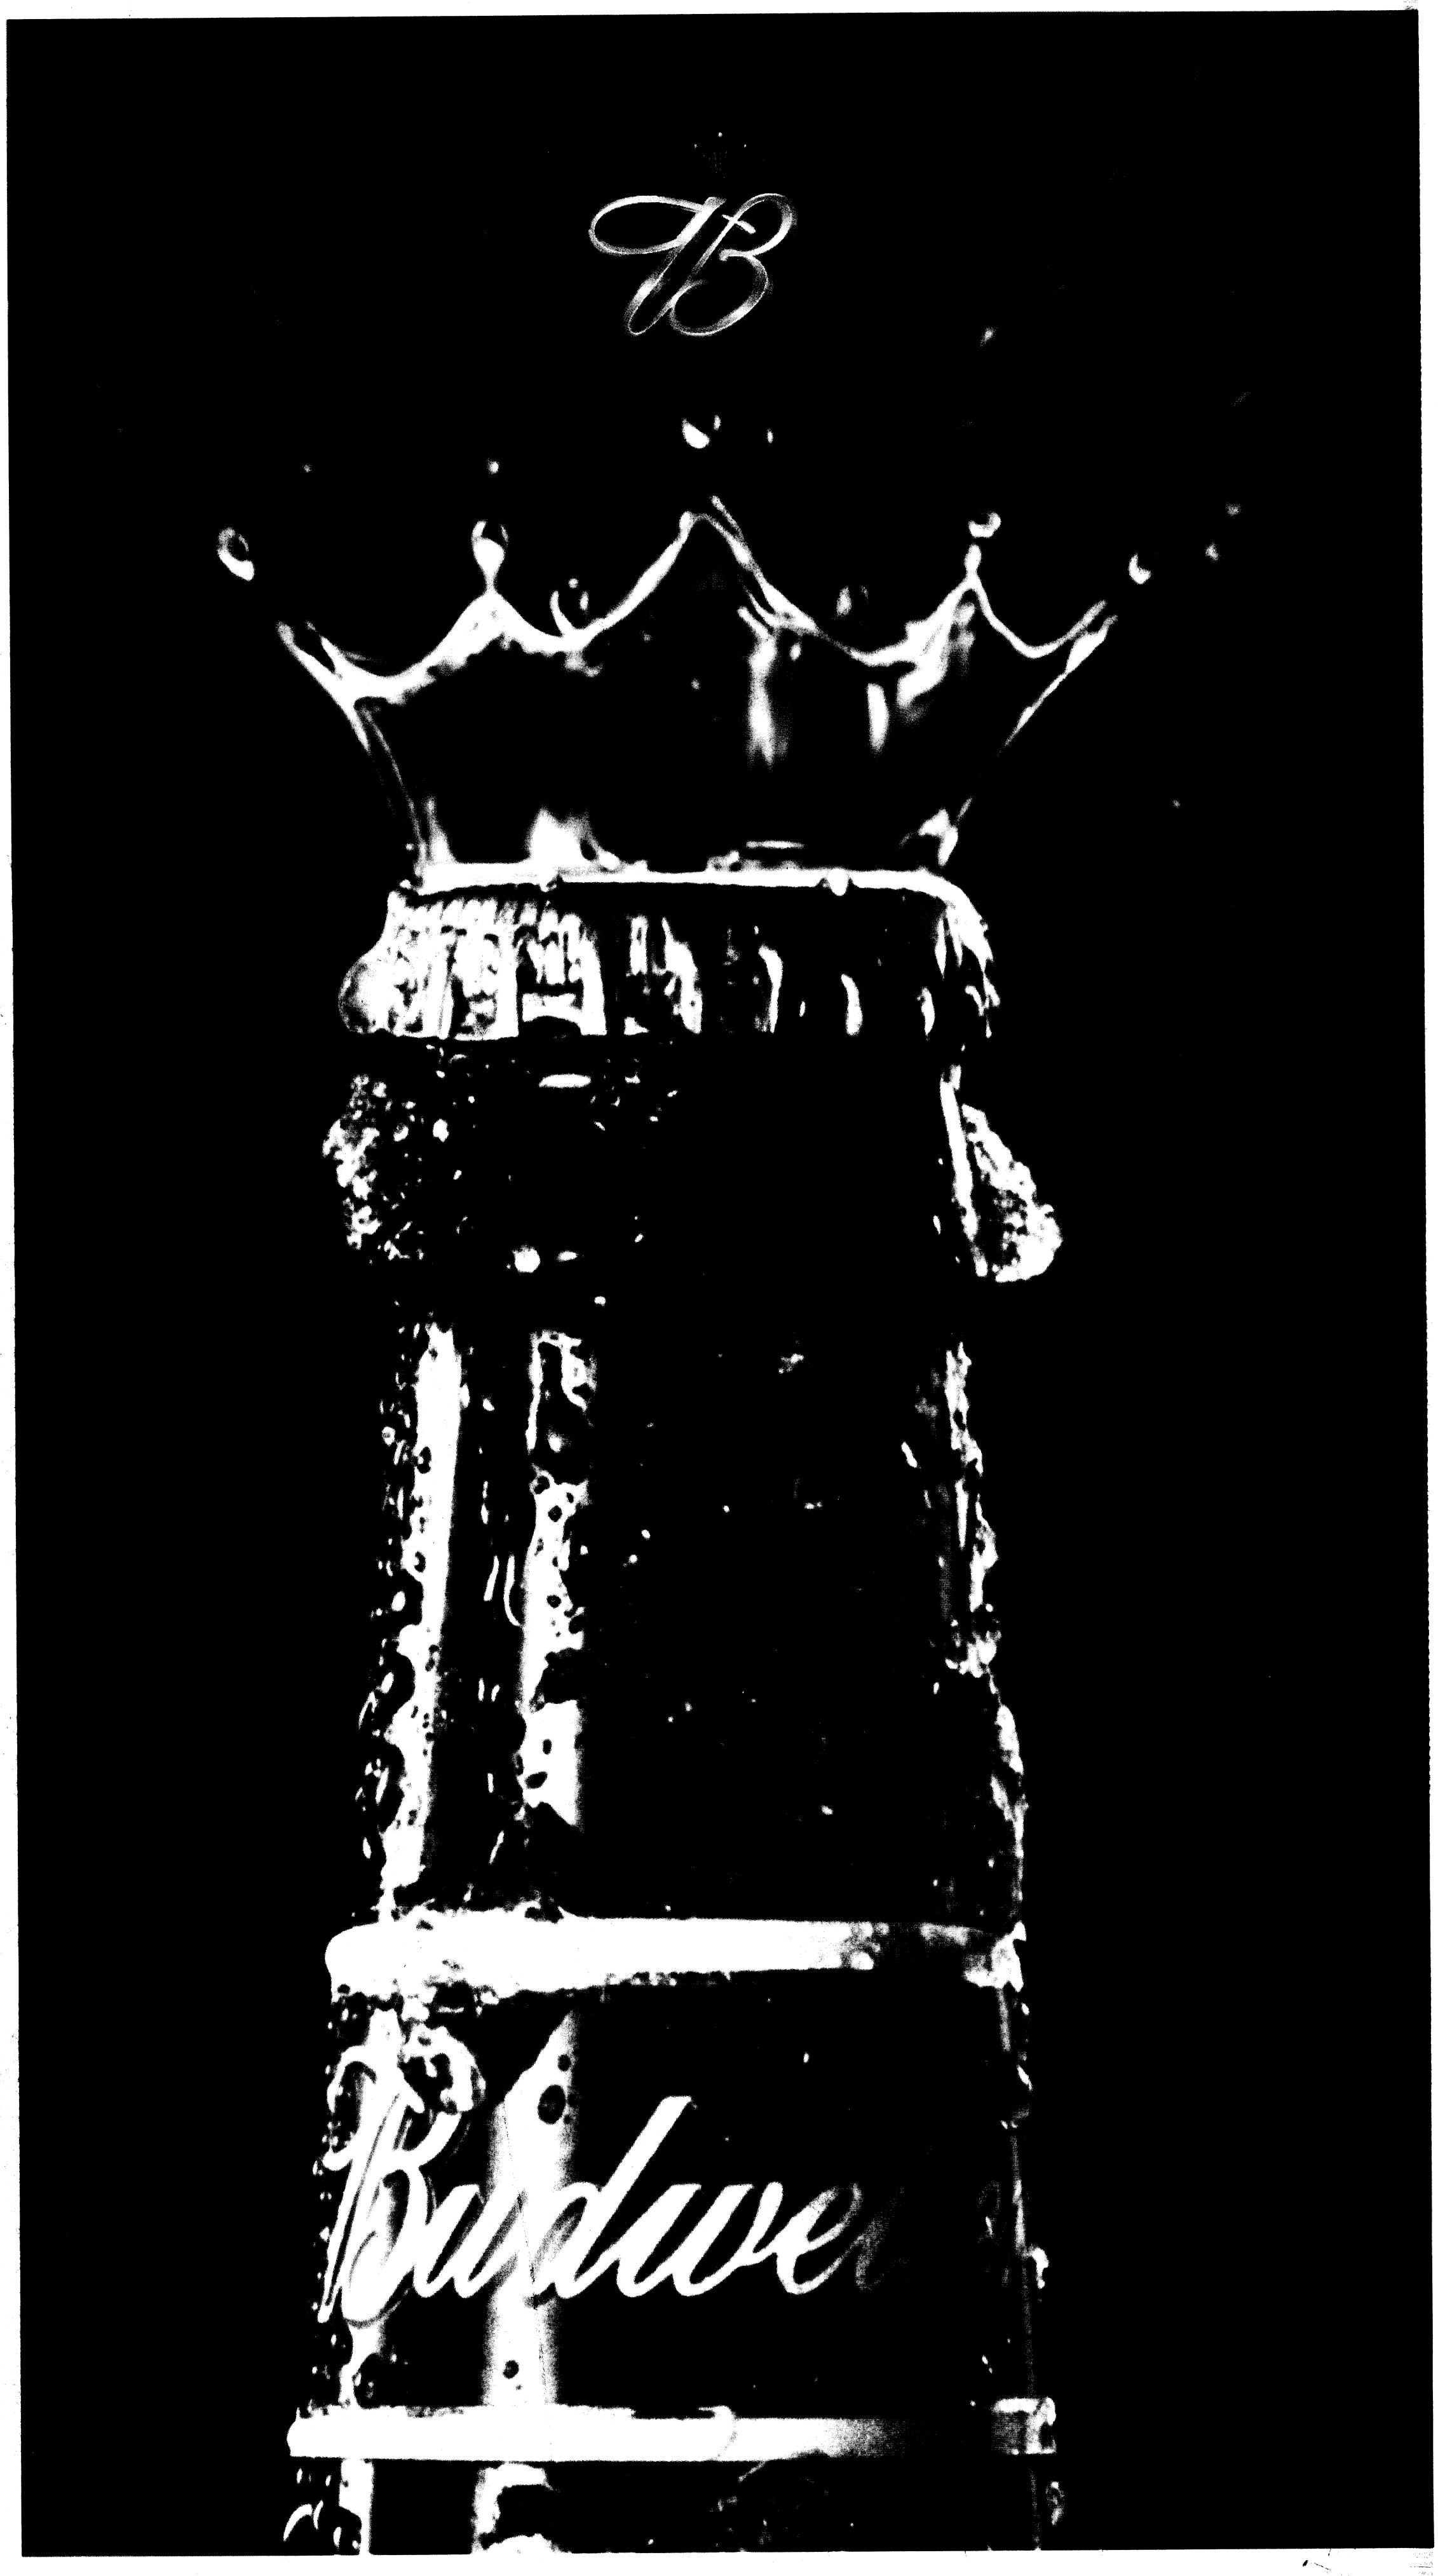
The Soldier's family was dead set against him joining the Army because they had strong Christian beliefs and were afraid of what type of people he would be mixed up with in the Army.

The reason for the letter was that the Soldier went home after graduation and talked about Meeks in a spiritual way, rather than just as a drill sergeant.

The Soldier's brother said it was comforting for the family to know that a man with Meeks' values was training their loved one and that they were all praying for him.

Meeks said the letter showed him there was a need for people like him on the drill sergeant trail, and told him his orders were coming from a higher power.

"Part of me still wanted to be over there (in Iraq), but 'the trail' was the will of God," he said. "I know now that I can make the greatest difference in the war on terrorism by being a drill sergeant."



Meeks talks one of his Soldiers into taking the first step off Eagle Tower Tuesday afternoon.

Meeks holds a Soldier's feet to correct his form while doing sit-ups.

Meeks checks a connection after attaching a Soldier's rappelling harness.

Intel briefs to give Soldiers 'cutting-edge' look at enemy

Info to reach troops at all levels

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning Soldiers are getting up-to-the-minute insights into the enemy's tactics against American troops in Afghanistan and Iraq from the post's Directorate of Intelligence and Security.

Geoff Wollin and Staff Sgt. James Drummond, military intelligence analysts, have developed a briefing that will reach Soldiers at all levels – from advanced individual training to students in NCO Education System courses.

A separate briefing is offered to the officer pre-command course.

The two-part briefings address the contemporary operational environment and the tactics, techniques and procedures, or TTPs, of enemy forces many Soldiers are likely to encounter on the battlefield or experience in the near future.

Each briefing contains constantly updated "lessons learned" from the troops already on the ground in both theaters and the most current intelligence available.

"What we learn this week will be in next week's briefing," Wollin said. "This isn't a stovepipe analysis from the rear echelon – we're receiving this information straight from the field."

> "What we learn this week will be in next week's briefing. This isn't a stovepipe analysis from the rear echelon — we're receiving this information straight from the field."
> Geoff Wollin
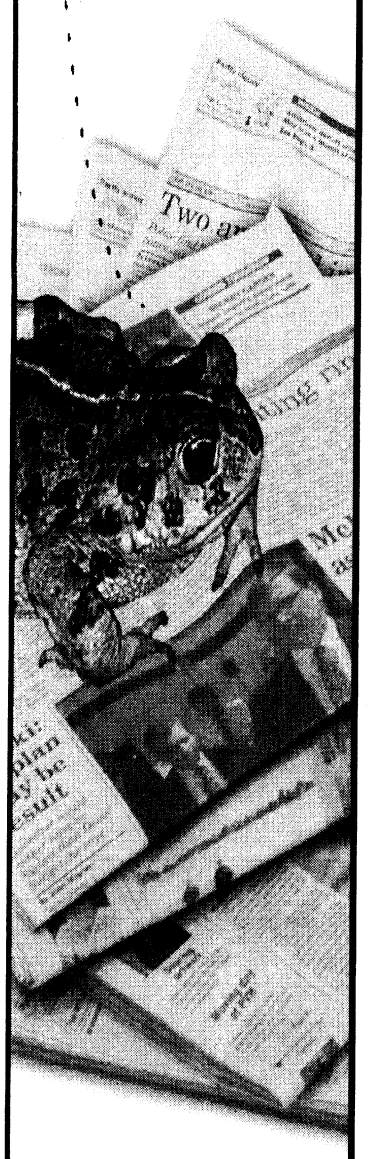
> Military Intelligence analyst

From teaching Soldiers how to avoid improvised explosive device ambushes to detecting possible suicide bombers, the information is geared to help Soldiers at all levels.

"We're taking the brief and morphing it for the audience," Wollin explained. "We're making it relevant to the level of the Soldier. There's a big difference between a sergeant first class and a Soldier who's been in the Army for two weeks."

Regardless of rank or experience, though, the intent is the same, Wollin said.

"Soldiers need to be proactive, not reactive," he said.



"We need them to survive," Drummond added, "to come back home alive."

The analysts have already given the brief to one Advanced NCO Course class and one Basic NCO Course class. They're scheduled to implement the brief into the Primary Leadership Development Course around August and will soon make their way out to Sand Hill to brief Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade Soldiers, as well.

"This information is very important," Drummond said. "A lot of these Soldiers will leave basic, go to their units and go straight to Afghanistan or Iraq."

For a new Soldier on the ground with very little training, he said, it will help to have the information in the briefings in the back his mind.

Businesses: Ruled off-limits to Fort Benning Soldiers

the Chamber of Commerce.

The board meets monthly to evaluate businesses with illegal or "questionable" practices, Finnegan said, examining "a laundry list of things" when deciding whether or not to recommend placing an establishment off-limits.

The overall concern is to help maintain the discipline and welfare of service members, while also preventing them from being exposed to or victimized by crime-conducive conditions.

The board opens an investigation concerning a business following either a complaint lodged by a service member or based upon civilian and military crime reports. The board conducts the investigation and decides whether a recommendation to the CG is warranted. If so, the business comes before the board to present reasons why it should not be recommended to the CG to be placed off-limits and what measures it intends to take to rectify the board's concerns.

"These practices don't have to be outside the law," Finnegan explained. "For instance, a car dealership could sell a car worth $3,000 for $6,000 with an interest rate of 28 percent. It's legal, but it's not a good practice."

Businesses reviewed by the board are given the opportunity to meet with post officials and correct their practices, Finnegan said.

If they opt not to appear, or fail to change their practices, the board places them off-limits to service members.

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Coach's Corner is one of eight Columbus establishments declared off-limits.

"This is for the protection of Soldiers, to keep them from putting themselves in an environment where they can get into trouble and to keep them from becoming victims," he said. "And it's not a voluntary participation."

The CG's order is a lawful order under the Manual for Courts-Martial.

"Service members are prohibited from entering establishments or areas declared off-limits ..." according to AR 190-24. "Family members of service members and others associated with the service or installation should be made aware of off-limits restrictions."

Finnegan said Fort Benning and tricommunity law enforcement officials will conduct a joint patrol of the establishments, starting as early as this weekend.

Service members caught at the establishments will be turned over to their units, and commanders will determine appropriate punishment, he said.

Soldiers should be aware, he added, that disregarding the order is disobeying a lawful order.

Consumers may report businesses with illegal or unethical practices.

To report such a business, members of the Fort Benning community can make a formal complaint with Army Community Service, Finnegan said.

They can also seek legal advice through the Legal Assistance Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, located in Building 5, or go to the military police station and talk with an MP investigator.

Saddam: To face prosecution by independent judiciary will keep the legal custody," Allawi said. The agreement is formalized in a memorandum of understanding between Iraq's Ministry of Justice and Multinational Force Iraq.

Allawi said the accused will be "afforded rights that were denied by the former regime" as their cases are heard by an independent judiciary.

"The accused will have access to legal counsel, and they will have the right to appoint legal counsel," he said.

If unable to pay for their legal counsel, it will be free of charge, he said.

Saddam and the other detainees "may not be compelled to testify against themselves and may remain silent" during the proceedings, Allawi said.

Although legal proceedings are underway, Allawi acknowledged that the judicial process "will take some time," likely not beginning "for a number of months." But he assured reporters that the process will be fair and open.

"Justice will be done, however, and the process of these cases will be open for all to see," he said.

Allawi said transfer of legal custody of Saddam and others of the "most notorious and high-profile detainees" to Iraq represents a big step as Iraq enters "a new era" — its second within the past 14 months.

"Last April, Iraq began an era free from Saddam Hussein," he said. "We Iraqis are grateful for the coalition action that liberated us from the former dictator's tyrannical grip."

With the sovereignty transfer, Allawi said, Iraq has entered yet another new era that includes bringing those responsible for past atrocities to justice.

"More than 1 million Iraqis are missing as a result of events that occurred during the former regime. Hundreds of thousands of Iraqis of all religions and ethnic groups are believed to be buried in mass graves," he said.

"Those we believe most responsible for Iraq's suffering will face Iraqi justice," Allawi continued. "I know I speak for my fellow countrymen when I say I look forward to the day former regime leaders face justice, God willing."

FRG: To help family members of Soldiers in Korea

difference, she said, is the FRG was here for them.

According to the 2nd Inf. Div. Web site, "Family support groups and services will increase to help family members in the Republic of Korea and the U.S. by providing support, information and liaison with organizations who can help families while their sponsors are deployed."

Right now, the women say they aren't getting much in the way of support from the unit in Korea, but Huston said she understands that the training their husbands are doing in Korea right now is most important.

Sgts. First Class Joe Huston and Steve DeFelice are assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Brigade, 2nd Inf. Div., and both work in the operations section.

So Huston decided it was her job to help. She's given her contact information to the Soldiers in the operations section and given them permission to pass it on to anyone else in the company. And DeFelice is developing a "Strike Force" Web site to help pass information.

"We're just missing one thing," Huston said. "Wives. We're trying to find people and a link where we can get information from.

"I don't care if they're in Timbuktu. I just want them to be able to contact someone," she said.

The women have gotten a van-load of FRG information from Army Community Service and have the Chaplain Family Life Center's on board to help set up a support group for spouses in the area. DeFelice has a meeting next week with the Officers Candidate School leadership, her husband's former unit, to see what the can do.

"We're behind the power curve," DeFelice said noting that this is the first time in more than 50 years that the division has deployed anywhere. "Usually the FRG is up and running long before deployment.

"We have 2nd ID pins with hearts and yellow ribbons," she said, "and everywhere we go, someone tells us that someone whose spouse just deployed to Korea was just there."

Spouses of deploying 2nd Inf. Div. Soldiers interested in joining the informal FRG can contact Huston and DeFelice at 681-9477 or e-mail them at strikeforce6_wife@yahoo.com.

CRACKING THE CASE

The inside scoop on CID

Spc. Nikki [illegible]
Bayonet staff

He co[illegible] be th[illegible] Soldi[illegible] standing next to you in formation. He goes deep undercover into units to catch unsuspecting Soldiers at the worst. He has long hair, earrings and wears street clothes to look like a civilian and trap Soldiers doing the wrong thing off-post. He is swathed in mystery and shrouded by legends and rumors.

The special agents of the Army Criminal Investigation Command, commonly known as CID, have one of the most misunderstood jobs in the Department of Defense.

"I always find the urban legends about CID amusing," said Special Agent Mark Jackson, 86th Military Police Detachment (CID). "The unit infiltration one is one of my favorites. I remember my drill sergeants years ago telling me about CID agents in units. I'm not saying it never happens, but it's not common, and we do so much more than that. Even if we do go undercover into a unit, it's not to wait for someone to mess up; it's because there is a possibility of criminality. I have a list of active investigations that grows every day and a wife and family at home who would appreciate it none-too-much if I were to spend all of my time waiting for a crime to occur.

Jackson said the foremost CID mission is to investigate all serious crimes that have an Army interest. These crimes include, but are not limited to, homicide, suicide, accidental and undetermined causes of death, larceny of government and personal property valued at more than $1,000, sexual assaults, like rape and indecent assault, child abuse, arson, forgery, fraud — basically, felony level crime.

But the list of duties doesn't stop there.

CID also performs Secret Service-type protective services for many Department of Defense and senior Army leadership, Jackson said.

He said these security missions are carried out by the Protective Services Unit, based in Fort Belvoir, Va.

And to handle new-fangled crime in cyberspace, CID has a computer crimes unit, which specializes in catching computer crooks and criminals — both military and civilian — who use the Web for illegal purposes.

The Major Procurement Fraud Unit, staffed by both civilian and military agents, many of whom are former active-duty agents, has offices worldwide investigating fraud involving the billions of dollars the Army invests in procurement and contracting, Jackson added.

And just as any other major law enforcement agency, CID has a full-service forensic laboratory, which is the only such crime lab in the DoD and provides service to all branches of the military and other DoD agencies.

There are a lot of differences between CID agents and your run-of-the-mill gumshoes, though.

"At CID, we do it all," Jackson said. "From the moment we are notified of a crime, we do everything. We identify the victims, process the crime scene, collect evidence, apprehend subjects, conduct all interviews, attend all autopsies, write all reports, testify in courts, both military and civilian, coordinate with other law enforcement agencies, participate in multi-agency task forces and the list goes on.

"We cover so many things other agencies delegate to specific units. We are our own CSI. We are the detectives. We are the interviewers and interrogators. We are the evidence custodians, and we are also Soldiers."

Soldiers who deploy just as any other would. When the country is at war, as now, they don the same sand-colored BDUs as everyone else.

"Our mission doesn't just change in combat — it grows," Jackson said. "I spent 10 months in Afghanistan and, along with four other agents, investigated terrorist incidents, fatal traffic and training incidents, provided protective services and processed crime scenes in the middle of hostile areas. We were rocketed, sniped, ambushed and chased — all in the support of the CID mission — and we were placed in the same dangerous situations experienced by all Soldiers who have served there."

And like so many Soldiers before them, CID agents invest countless hours into accomplishing their mission with little appreciation in return.

"I wish I could tell you my hours," Jackson said. "I never know when I will be working."

Jackson said he is the duty agent, on average, twice a week and at least one full weekend a month. He routinely spends between 60 and 100 hours a week handling cases.

And contrary to popular belief, the sleepless nights of slaving over crime scenes and endless days of paperwork and interrogations aren't to put away just anyone an agent can get his hands on.

"It's inevitable I'll be called a 'blue falcon'," he said. "That's fine. The work I do as a CID agent transcends the accusations that CID somehow doesn't support Soldiers, but ultimately, that's exactly what we do. The only people who will disagree with that are those who have run into us on the wrong side of the law."

Jackson said he wishes Soldiers would understand that CID agents are on their side.

"I would ask Soldiers who read this to ask themselves if they really want a murderer, child molester, drug dealer or thief in their units; whether they want to depend on a criminal to protect them in combat," he said. "That is why we are here — to weed those few bad Soldiers out of the massive majority of good Soldiers. My job is to seek the truth."

And for those who wonder what kind of person it takes to sign up for a job as a CID agent, it takes a special one.

"This job is not for everyone," Jackson said. "The hours are erratic. The crimes we investigate are the most heinous things people can do to one another. We are universally misunderstood and the myths surrounding us are as untrue as they are entertaining.

"You need to be able to to take criticism and hostility and turn the other cheek. You must be able to be hated and show no hatred in return," he said. "You must be able to deal with death and horrible injuries. You must be intuitive, self-motivated, educated and willing to carry a firearm at all times. You must be willing to drop your personal life the moment the phone rings and go to work and your integrity must be beyond reproach."

> "I would ask Soldiers who read this to ask themselves if they really want a murderer, child molester, drug dealer or thief in their units; whether they want to depend on a criminal to protect them in combat. That is why we are here — to weed those few bad Soldiers out of the massive majority of good Soldiers."
> Special Agent Mark Jackson
> Criminal Investigator

And that's not all.

If you want to be a CID agent, you have to have, or be able to get, a top secret clearance, have 60 hours of college credits, have one year of civilian law enforcement experience, six months of military police experience or serve a six-month internship at a CID office, graduate the Apprentice Special Agent Course at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., make it through a one-year probationary period and be either an E-4 or E-5 non-promotable, among other requirements according to the Criminal Investigation Command's Web site.

So after you wade through the smoke screen, CID isn't Army Enemy Number One. CID agents aren't out to get you. These super sleuths are hard-working, dedicated Soldiers who go above and beyond the average call of duty to protect from crime the Soldiers, family members and civilians who serve the nation and bring justice to those guilty of criminal activity.

"This is a rewarding job, but it can be frustrating and emotionally devastating," Jackson said. "We deal with people at their absolute worst and must maintain a face of absolute objectivity and professionalism. We have a responsibility to the victims of crime, their families, the Army, the government and our nation to do at least that much. I am sworn by solemn oath to do so. I carry a gold badge in my pocket that means nothing if it does not remind me of my commitment to truth and justice."

Miracle Workers

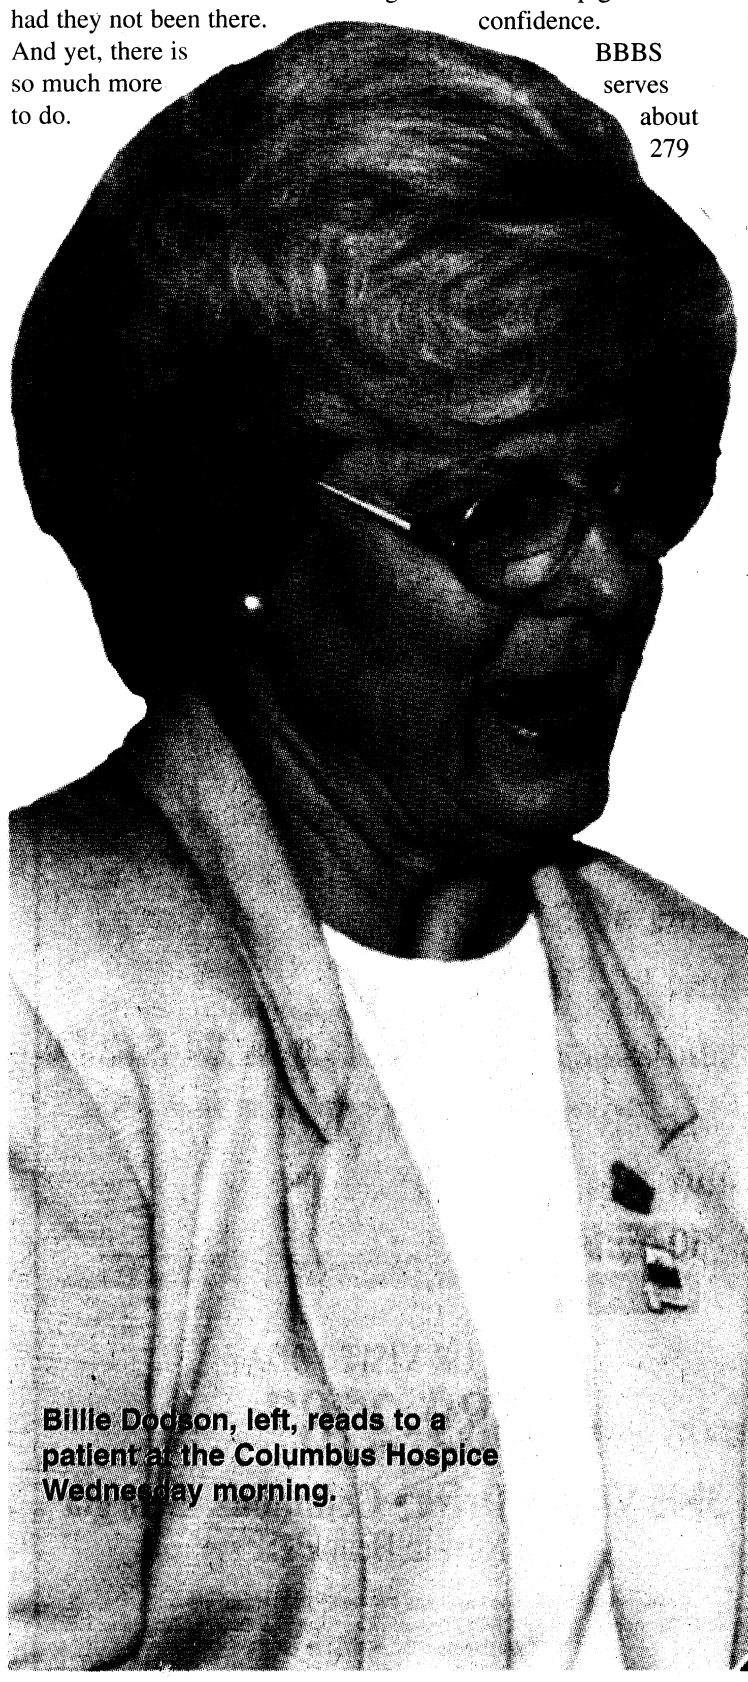
Volunteers shape the world

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"You make a living by what you get, but you make a life by what you give."
- Winston Churchill

Take a look around you. Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley once called Fort Benning a place where miracles happen. Can you see it?

It's at the hospital, where no matter what the weather — thundershowers, heat waves, even snow — drivers shuttle passengers back and forth from the far reaches of the parking lot to the shelter of the entrances. In the Intensive Care Unit, where an ambitious, young girl — not even out of high school yet — does whatever she is asked to do to help patients and staff alike.



It's at the new skate park, the hard work of a post youth who had a vision. A teenager who wanted to do more than complain about what was "wrong" with Fort Benning. Instead, he set out to fix it. He started a petition and collected more than 300 signatures, so that kids would have a safe, legal place to skateboard.

The miracles are everywhere you look on this post — in schools and libraries, at the Vet Clinic, in Soldiers' Plaza, at the museum and the golf course and the fitness centers.

And they're out there, too, in the surrounding communities mentoring children, building homes, improving the community.

And just how do those miracles happen? In a word, volunteers.

Each one makes a difference with their hard work, a difference that would be missed had they not been there. And yet, there is so much more to do.

Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus

The oldest and largest youth mentoring organization in the U.S., BBBS matches volunteers with children who need positive role models — "at-risk" kids, said Derric Jackson, the Columbus program's director.

"They're children from low-income families, single-parent families and high-crime areas," Jackson explained. "Some of them are being raised by their siblings or have a parent incarcerated or are very transient … any combination of the above."

Volunteers become a big brother or sister — a buddy — for the children, he said, "hanging out" with them on a weekly basis just playing games or watching movies or everyday things, like walking the dog or washing the car.

"It gives them a normalcy, a consistency they don't have in their everyday lives," Jackson said. "You just share with them a positive influence."

That positive influence makes little brothers and sisters 52 percent less likely to skip school and 46 percent less likely to start using drugs. It also motivates children in the program to improve their school performance and attendance, achieve better grades and develop greater self-confidence.

BBBS serves about 279 children locally, but even so, the program still has more than 40 children on its waiting list, Jackson said.

Then Capt. Douglas McBride, left, befriended Ryan Cozbey through Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus. Children in BBBS are 52 percent less likely to skip school and 46 percent less likely to start using drugs. Columbus' program currently has more than 40 children on its waiting list.

Volunteers — especially big brothers — are desperately needed.

To volunteer, you must be at least 16 for the on-site mentoring in schools, and at least 18 for the community-based, one-on-one program. Volunteers must own their own vehicles,pass a state and federal background checks and a home inspection, spend at least three hours a week with the child and intend to spend at least a year with the same child.

But most importantly, Jackson said, "volunteers must love children, care and want to make an impact on a child's life."

For more information or to become a big brother or sister, call 327-3760.

Army Community Service

If you think they've got all the help they need, just ask Megan Foley, president of Fort Benning's ACS Volunteer Support Association. She'll tell you differently.

"We can always use more help," she said.

ACS volunteers support the Financial Readiness Program, the Food Locker, Army Family Team Building and the office in general, Foley said. Much of it is clerical work, but work that the agency depends on.

But why volunteer with ACS?

"ACS has so many programs that help so many people on Fort Benning," Foley said. "It helps Soldiers and their family members. It teaches you how to make Fort Benning a home — like it did for me."

To lend a hand at ACS, call 545-4043.

Columbus Hospice

"You get more out of it than you give," said Terri Roberts.

She should know. Now the volunteer coordinator for Columbus Hospice, Roberts was a volunteer before she took the position and knows firsthand what a positive experience volunteering with hospice patients can be.

"A lot of people are scared away at first," Roberts said, explaining that all of the hospice's patients are terminally ill and have been given around six months to live — although many of them live beyond that prognosis.

But the relationships you form with the patients and their families when you volunteer with the hospice is too rewarding to pass up, she said. And contrary to what many might think, it's not depressing.

"Not all of our patients are bed bound," she said. "In fact, some of them are agile and all over the place."

Hospice patients are anywhere from 3 months to 102 years old, Roberts said, and most of them just need a friend, someone to listen and spend time with.

The patients are spread across the community — some in their own homes, some at the hospice and some in nursing homes. Some of the patients have no one else to come visit with them. Roberts said volunteers sit with the patients, read to them, visit with them and provide them with companionship.

Volunteers are required to undergo background checks and drug screening and to participate in eight-hour training. After that, they're required to attend three in-service classes a year, continuing education classes that last about an hour. The hospice also asks that volunteers make a one-year commitment.

The next eight-hour training will be from 5 to 9 p.m. Sept. 10 and from 8 a.m. to noon Sept. 11 at the Columbus Hospice. Dinner and breakfast will be provided. Volunteers must pre-register.

For more information about the hospice or to volunteer, call Roberts at 243-0044.

Court Appointed Special Advocates

CASA isn't your typical volunteer opportunity, and it isn't for those pressed for time. But it is an opportunity to make a difference for children at what may be the most crucial time in their lives.

CASA volunteers work as court-appointed advocates for children in state custody, or foster care, said Mattie Hall, program director.

Volunteers conduct research on one to two cases at a time, interviewing the children, their teachers, families, friends — anyone who can shed light on what's best for the child. They then use this research to make a recommendation to the judge as to the best placement for the children.

Volunteers must be at least 21 and commit for a year. They must complete an application, submit two business and one personal recommendation, and undergo a background check. They must participate in 40 hours of training – 30 hours in the classroom (once a week for 10 weeks) and 10 hours of court time — and they must be sworn in by a judge. Volunteers then take 12 hours of training per year.

"This is for people with a passion, a sincere caring, for the well-being of children," Hall said. "And you see it through from the beginning to the end. It's so wonderful, because they know you're not looking for any payment. You're just looking out for the welfare of a child."

A large percentage of the children in state's custody are males, Hall said, so male volunteers are sorely needed to become a positive influence in the children's lives.

To volunteer with CASA, call 323-3687.

"The well is deep — we haven't had a volunteer we couldn't find a position for."

So says Darla Gibbs, a Red Cross volunteer for more than two years now.

If you're not quite sure what you can do to make a difference, or even what there is to do, Red Cross is the place for you.

Volunteers attend a mandatory Red Cross orientation, which is held at 9:30 a.m. the first Thursday of each month.

Once they've completed the orientation, "they say where, and we work on it," Gibbs said, explaining that the Red Cross tries to get volunteers where they want to be.

"Their time is theirs," she said. "They pick and choose where and when they volunteer. All we ask is that they go when they say they will and call if they can't make it."

Volunteers are placed all over post, she said, from the hospital to the Veterinary Clinic to Golf Course.

To volunteer with the Red Cross, call 545-5194.

Get Outta Here

Sick of sitting around in that barracks room looking at the walls? Need to get the family out of the house or just take a break? We've got the answer for you. 'Get Outta Here' appears in The Bayonet each week to highlight recreation and leisure venues right here in the tricommunity. If you would like to suggest a hot spot for the column, call Sgt. Kim Dooley at 545-3367.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

I won't lie — I wasn't exactly excited to find myself in Columbus for the four-day.

I was looking forward to getting out of town, just getting away for a few days, but the powers that be had other plans.

After a little research, though, I realized maybe being "stuck" in Columbus this holiday weekend won't be such a bad thing.

There are all sorts of Independence Day festivities scheduled in the tricommunity and surrounding areas.

I'm sure you've heard of Thunder on the Hooch — we'll just call it Thunder (for brevity's sake, of course). Despite its name, Thunder has gotten nothing but rave reviews from the people who've been (the ones I know, anyway).

Thunder has everything from free rides and face painting for the kids to a watermelon-eating contest, an All-American Pie Contest and the Great American Duck Race. There will also be live music, food, the whole works.

And, of course, no Fourth of July celebration is complete without fireworks.

Thunder kicks off at 1 p.m. Word to the wise — no alcohol is allowed at this event.

Of course, if you are looking to get out of town, but not too far, there are plenty of semi-nearby places offering some celebration or another.

Callaway Gardens will host its annual Surf and Sand Spectacular. With circus performances, beach games, music, miniature golf, picnicking, shuffleboard and swimming are just the beginning.

There will also be helicopter rides and Callaway's newest feature, the Iceberg Island Floating Playground. And don't miss the music and dance of the Swingin' Medallions ... or the fireworks over Robin Lake.

Meanwhile, Westville — Georgia's 1850s town, will "explode with excitement" as visitors enjoy an old-fashioned Independence Day Celebration Saturday and Sunday.

Westville will serve up an old-fashioned barbecue Sunday, complete with entertainment.

Celebration games such as the sack and three-legged races, greased pole climb and watermelon seed spitting contest and vintage baseball games begin at 1:30 p.m.

And in keeping with tradition, an anvil will be blown into the sky with black powder every hour on the hour.

It's only $10 for adults, $8 for seniors, college students and military and $4 for children in grades K-12.

For more info, call (888) SEE-1850 or visit www.westville.org.

And if you're looking for some heavy-duty adrenaline rushes and don't mind standing in line most of the day, head up to Six Flags over Georgia in Atlanta.

The park is offering "military apprecation" through Sunday with half-price tickets for service members.

There will be fireworks every night through Sunday, too, so it will still feel like the Fourth of July.

If you're just not feeling in the mood for the crowds, gather up a grill and some friends and have a barbecue.

But no matter where you are, don't forget to appreciate your freedom to do whatever it is you feel like to mark the Fourth of July.

Wednesdays are wonderful at Columbus Museum

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Photos by Sgt. Kim Dooley

A member of The African Dance Connection demonstrates a dance from Africa's Koma Village at Columbus Museum's Wonderful Wednesday program.

They sing, they dance, they travel and chant. Yep, Columbus kids do it all — with a little help from the Columbus Museum and its annual summer program, Wonderful Wednesdays.

Never one to shy away from a chance to "culture" children, the museum has a line-up sure to appease every artistic bone in the body with weekly presentations through the end of July.

This week's program, Koma Village, featured The African Dance Connection, a "charismatic group of dancers and drummers."

Amidst the deafening cries of "JUMBO!" — the word for hello in Koma Village — children learned about Koma's language and lifestyle.

"We're an educational museum, and this is a great way for the children to be introduced to culture," said Jennifer Sillitto, the museum's public relations coordinator.

The upcoming programs cover the gamut, Sillitto said, including music, dance and story-telling. It's all there. The children even learn a bit of geography during their "travels" to different times and places.

"The programs just help to make the kids aware of (what else is out there)," Sillitto said.

Offered free of charge, the programs are offered at 10 and 11:15 a.m. each Wednesday in the museum's Patrick Theater. Even with seating for 300, both performances are almost always filled to capacity. Seating is limited and available on a first-come, first-served basis. Reservations are required for groups of five or more children and are limited to a maximum of 25 guests, including adults.

Call the museum's Education Department at 649-0713 ext. 39 for reservations.

This summer's schedule is:

Wednesday — A.R.T. Station Children's Theater presents "How the Skunk Got His Stink."

July 14 — Cathy Kaemmerlen-Gotcha! presents "Trickster Tales From Around the World."

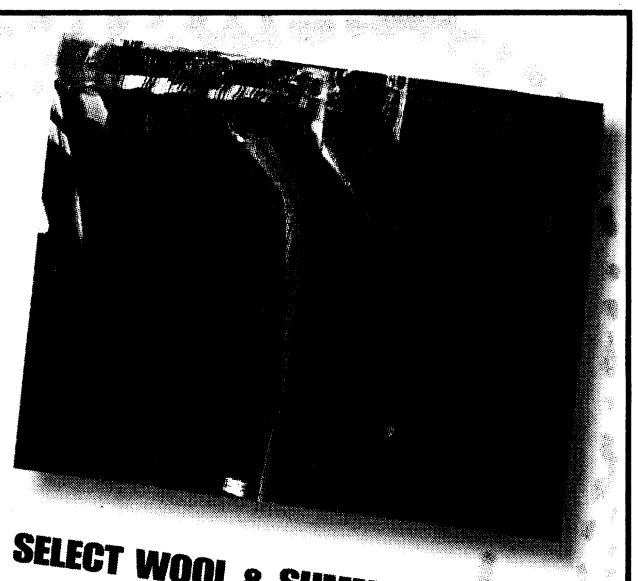
July 21 — Piccadilly Puppets Company presents "Garden Party."

July 28 — Will Moreau Goins presents "Georgia's Ancient Past: American History through Native American Eyes."

Wonderful Wednesdays will be an "educational delight" for children, Sillitto said, but it will also get them in the door at the museum, where there is plenty to see every day of the week.

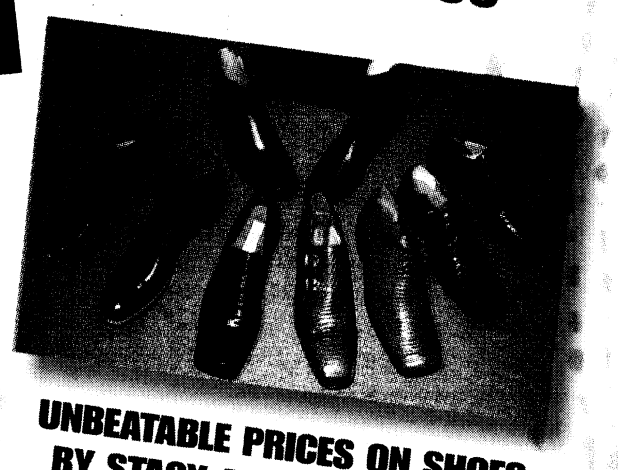
Complete with a special exhibit called Transformations, Columbus Museum aims to be child-friendly.

"So many times, when they go to a museum, they aren't allowed to touch anything," Sillitto said. "But we have a hands-on area just for them."



Transformations is a place they can explore things like sketching and color wheels.

And best of all, Sillitto said, "it's always there, and it's always free."



For more information, call 649-0713 or visit www.columbusmuseum.com.

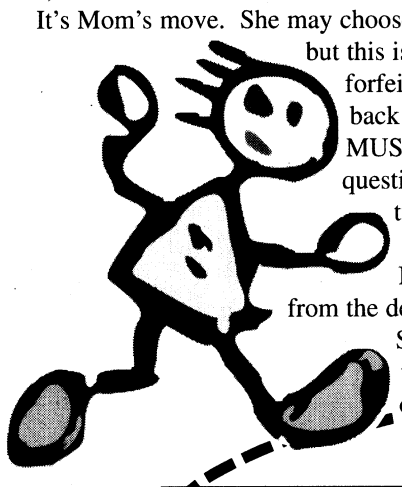
Bored games*



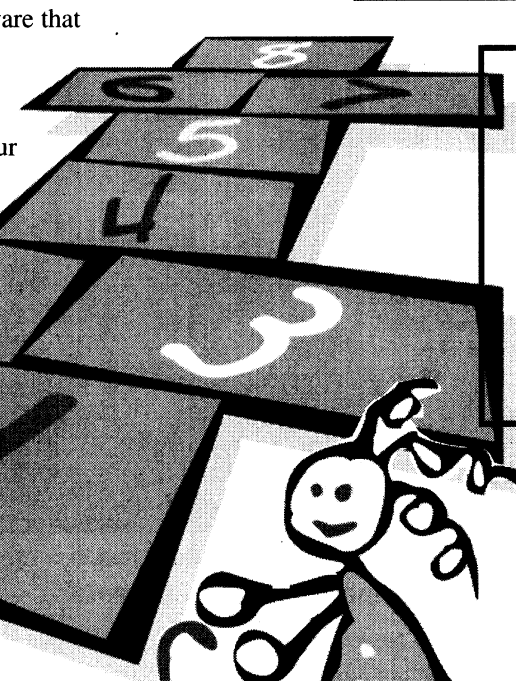
Hey, if you play your cards right, the rest of the summer will be a breeze.

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Welcome to the ultimate bored game. The rules are simple. Two or more players are required, and one, usually the oldest, will be called the Mom (pronounced Mooooooooom.) Sorry, there are no players designated "Dad" in this game, but dads are welcome to watch, smile and divert any questions/complaints/observations to Mom.

Any player other than the Mom can start the game with a question, which must begin like this: "Mom, why can't I .....?" or a statement, which must begin like this: "Mom, I'm so ....." (bored, hot, tired, about to throw up, etc.)

It's Mom's move. She may choose to pass (read: ignore) but this is not recommended, as forfeiting a turn diverts play back to Player One, who MUST repeat the question/statement twice and twice as loud.



At this point, the Mom selects one card from the deck marked "Parental Strategy" and follows the instructions printed on the card (i.e. hide, call grandma, feign sleep). The Mom should be aware that none of these strategies will work for more than 30 minutes.

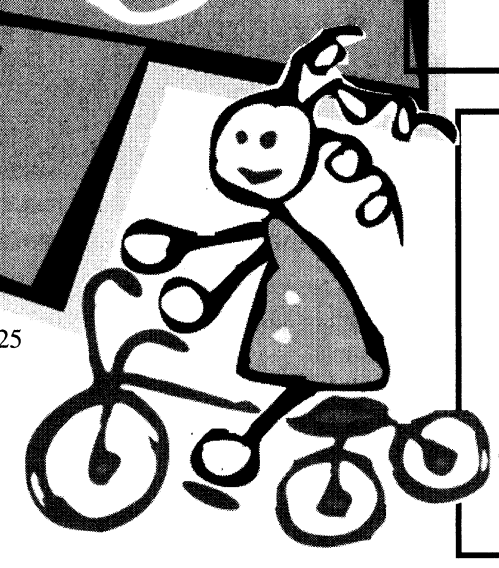
At this point, Player One will select an accomplice, Player Two, Player Three or Player Four or Players Two, Three and Four. Players Accompli will repeat Move One in unison, or if so inclined, in round (think Row, Row, Row Your Boat).

At this point, the Mom must quickly select a card from the deck marked "Diversionary Tactics." Read the instructions on the card (i.e. divvy up chores, turn on TV) and shred it, because any half-wit knows those tactics never work.

At this point, Players Accompli may employ any number of strategies listed in the Children's Universal Book of Vices, Volume 1, copyright 525 B.C., including, but not limited to, sulking, sighing, moaning, crying and flailing.

The Mom may now select from the deck marked "Summer Countdown" and choose any one of these activities to drive away the doldrums and put a hasty end to the bored game. Play ends when school starts, and everybody wins.

START



the rest of your summer off right by planning day trips and activities sure to keep the kids happy till school starts again. Here are a number of suggestions to get you started.

Hit the trail — the McBride Nature Trail, that is. It's a one and a half-mile walking trail that begins and ends at McBride Elementary School on Custer Road. Pack a picnic, a camera, bug spray and plenty of water.

Visit Oxbow Meadows, just outside Fort Benning on Lumpkin Road. Oxbow is an environmental learning center, but hey, the kids will love it anyway. Explore the wetlands and woodlands of the Chattahoochee flood plain, touch a turtle, visit a beaver habitat or take a nature walk. For more information, call 687-4090.

Amuse 'em with a museum. The National Infantry Museum, on Baltzell Avenue, is a treasure trove of relics from the infantry archives. Sound terribly unappealing to the kids? Take them on a scavenger hunt to see if they can find Calculator the Dog on the first floor, jump towers on the second, and a Raiders of the Lost Ark jeep on the third.

Still bellyaching? Tell them to take a hike! Hike the Historic Trail, which encompasses 26 sites around Fort Benning's Main Post, starting at the National Infantry Museum, where you can pick up a map for your self-guided tour.

Tour the White House — FDR's Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga., 45 miles north of Fort Benning on Alternate 27 (Manchester Exit off Interstate185) in Meriweather County. The whole family will enjoy walking through the home Roosevelt loved so dearly. Pack a lunch and stop by the president's favorite picnic spot atop Pine Mountain.

Head inside to the air conditioning. Wile away a few hours with a good book while the kids explore the hands-on activity room at the Columbus Museum on Wynnton Road. Explore Columbus history — free — as you and the family tour the museum's Chattahoochee Legacy. The Columbus Museum also showcases great artists of local and national distinction.

Callaway Gardens, in Pine Mountain, offers a new attraction this summer at Robin Lake Beach — Iceberg Island, a floating playground for children 6 and older. While you're there, be sure to see the garden's butterfly sanctuary, the Victory Garden, the Sibley Horticulture Center and the Virginia Hand Callaway Discovery Center. For more information, call (800)282-8181.

The Coca-Cola Space Science Center, 701 Front Ave., offers out-of-this-world fun for the whole family. The center hosts an ever-changing array of activities designed to intrigue your star-struck child's imagination and feed his curiosity about space travel. To see what's happening today at the space center, call 649-1470.

Plains, Ga., is a great place to spend a day, and the cost is peanuts! This tiny town is home to former President Jimmy Carter. You can go inside his boyhood home, walk the halls of the school he and Rosalynn attended and tour various sites along this free eight-mile, self-guided tour. Pick up a guide at the Plains Welcome Center before you start your day. And be sure to stop by The Peanut Emporium to sample the other export Plains is famous for — peanuts.

10

Picnic at any one of the area's scenic, family-friendly parks. Cooper Creek, on Milgen Road, has walking trails, playgrounds, bike trails, fishing ponds and ducks. Lakebottom Park, on 17th Avenue, has playgrounds, walking trails and a concession stand. Flat Rock Park, on Warm Springs Road, is a great place to picnic. The kids will love climbing the rock formations. Be sure to take a camera.

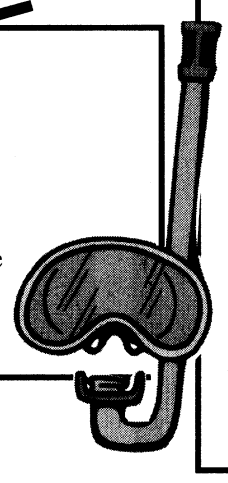
11

Take the troops to lunch at the area's most unusual fast food restaurant, Burger King, on Wynnton Road. Housed in a rambling old renovated home, this BK is tastefully decorated with vintage photos and relics from Columbus' early days. It's classy dining with fast food fare and a painless lesson in local history.

12

Mann, oh Mann. The Mann Museum in Opelika, Ala., boasts 35,000 square feet of North American wildlife exhibits, including record-setting Polar Bears and grizzlies, and many hands-on displays. Ever rub a wolf the wrong way? Now you can. Mann Museum is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday — except Wednesdays, when it's closed — and Sundays 1 to 5 p.m. Alabama time is one hour behind Georgia time, so plan accordingly. Admission is $7.50 for adults, $5 for kindergartners through high school, and $6 for seniors. For more information, call (334)741-7776.

13



For a "reel" good time, take them fishing at Fort Benning's Russ Pond. Pack a picnic and a good book, so you can relax while the kids feed the fish.

14

Go west. Westville, "where it's always 1850," in Lumpkin, Ga., is a living history village, reconstructed from original homes, shops and offices, and populated by curators dressed in period costumes who do a bang-up job of portraying merchants, teachers, farmers and shop-keepers from the 19th century. Westville is open Tuesday through Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m. Free tickets are often available at the O'Club, the NCO Club or Afterhours.

15

Take a stroll along the Chattahoochee. The River Walk meanders 10 miles from Fort Benning to downtown Columbus. Cyclists are welcome.

16

Make a big splash before school puts an end to summer fun. Take a short drive to SurfSide Water Park in Opelika, Ala., and spend the day floating down the lazy river or sailing in the 640,000 gallon wave pool. Or brave one of the four water slides — two flumes and two 70-foot curly-Qs. Cost of admission at SurfSide ranges from $14.95 to $16.95, $14.99 with your military I.D. For more information, call (334)821-7873.

17

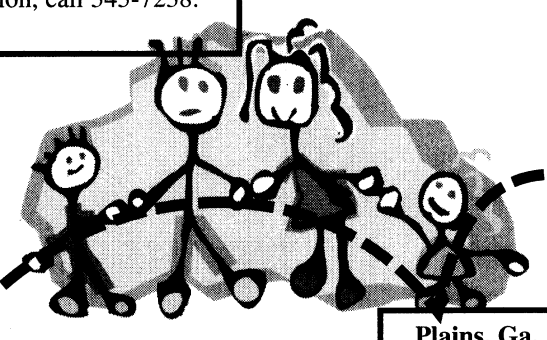
Plan a return trip — or two or three. That's how long it takes to hike the 23-mile Pine Mountain Trail. Stop by the visitor's center in the village of Pine Mountain for a trail guide, and spend a few hours traipsing through forests beneath cool Georgia pines.

18

Spend the day at Hollywood Connection on Whittlesey Road in Columbus. "The connection" offers fun for all ages, from movies to games, putt-putt golf, indoor amusement rides for young children and a game room for the older crowd. For more information, call 571-3456.

19

Have a ball. Take the kids bowling at one of Fort Benning's two bowling centers. Weekdays are the best time to get a lane. It costs $1.25 per person per game between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. — a bargain in anybody's book. For more information, call 682-7777.



20

Visit Providence Canyon, "Georgia's Little Grand Canyon," seven miles west of Lumpkin on State Road 39C. Hike a scenic three-mile trail around the canyon rim or take the more challenging seven-miler, which will lead through a maze of canyon floors. Or just stand on the edge of the canyon, throw your arms in the air and yell "Summer's almost over!" at the top of your lungs. That's no echo you'll hear. That's other parents.

21

Fort Benning's own Uchee Creek offers lots of fun for the whole family. Rent a cabin or pitch a tent, rent a boat or fish from the bank, but save time for the swimming pool, which features a mushroom fountain. For more information, call 545-7238.

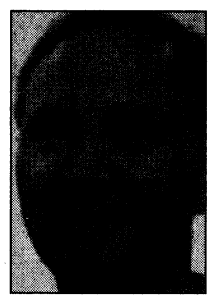
Freedom is a gift from God to be celebrated

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Stanley E. Puckett
641st Area Support Group



July 4th is a time for celebrating our nation and the rich history and traditions of freedom and faith. Americans routinely celebrate these traditions together. Indeed, many Americans see freedom as necessary to true faith, and faith as necessary for the true exercise of freedom.

As our nation celebrates the Fourth of July, many Soldiers will attend, and in some cases, will be recognized in holiday celebrations. Many of our Soldiers have made great sacrifices for our freedoms, and certainly all of our Soldiers have done their duty to our nation and it's traditions of freedom. For those who are people of faith, I would like to challenge you with Jesus' words about duty and faith in Luke 17, verses 7-10.

In Luke 17:7-10, Jesus tells a parable of a master and his servants. The servants work all day in the field, and then serve the master his meal before they are fed. The servants then observe that they are "unprofitable servants because they have done only their duty."

Many of us would see this as a harsh observation, even for the servants to make of themselves. Many of us like and even expect recognition for our accomplishments, even in the arena of our faith. Jesus' words lead us to several conclusions about how we as people of faith should look at our duties and our faith.

REFLECTIONS

First, Jesus made sure to put a master and servants in the parable. Implied in the parable is the fact that the master provided all of the servants' needs, including the opportunity to "do their duty" in serving him. Employment was a precious thing in Jesus' day; having a master to provide you with work was a great blessing and a gift from God.

The opportunity to "do our duty" to a free nation is a great gift from a loving God and should color our view of our duty to our country. No matter how small or how great our sacrifice and our service has been this last year, the very opportunity to do that duty is a gift from God, and an event that should move us to exercise our faith in recognition of God's goodness.

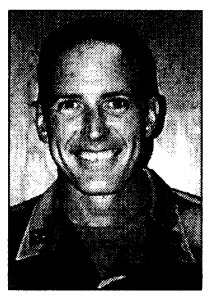
Second, the very freedoms we celebrate as a people and protect as individuals doing our duty are a gift from God.

There are people of faith all over the world that live in societies where there are few personal freedoms; many of them who do not even have the freedom to openly worship and express their faith.

Even though Americans for 250 years have fought for and protected the freedoms we enjoy, these freedoms are still a very precious gift from a loving God.

As we celebrate July 4th and the freedoms associated with our independence, let's be sure we stop and thank God for his love and provision, and especially for our nation and our freedoms.

As people of faith we will celebrate the freedoms we enjoy this July 4th. As people of faith we will recognize those who have sacrificed for those freedoms.



Beat the boredom monster, have some laughs this summer

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Now that it's full-fledged summer, you know there are no three words that can strike fear in the heart of any parent as quickly as a well-whined, "Mom, I'm booooorrrreeeddd." What's a parent to do? Well, in addition to the latest copy of The Bayonet and all the suggestions and help that Youth Services and MWR provide, here are a few suggestions to help get your son's brain and rapid-eye movement disengaged from a case of severe X-Box and your daughter extracted from her third viewing of the Brady Bunch's 24-hour marathon!

Michael Ross, in Focus on the Family's Breakaway magazine, recommends the following steps for the teenage terminally bored:

No. 1 — Turn off the tube. You can do it. Punch "off" on the TV remote, crawl out of the recliner and plunge into a summer of outrageous possibilities. Once you've taken this step, you're ready for bigger challenges.

Hawkins

No. 2 — Vary your routine. Rearrange your bedroom. Rearrange your parent's bedroom. Rearrange every room in the house! Listen to a different radio station. Start your own radio station. Call radio station request lines and dedicate songs to "Stella Gigglebomb" or "Polly Esther Pants."

No. 3 — Be spontaneous. Aim to do something on the spur of the moment at least once a day for a week. Try this: Go to a mall hair salon and get a totally different haircut. Take a "cash-free eating" tour with a group of friends. All you need is a car and an appetite. Vow to spend the afternoon munching all kinds of stuff — without spending a dime. Visit grocery stores, shopping centers and those mega bulk-food warehouse places, sampling every free item in sight.

No. 4 — Get involved. Open a world of opportunity by donating your time and talents. Become a volunteer. Where? Serve as a member at your church's vacation Bible school or day camp. Volunteer to help the elderly or shut-ins. Check out ACS, Red Cross ... you name it!

No. 5 — Set goals. Make a list. Jot down things you want to accomplish over the summer. Memorize scripture. Maybe even read some books of the Bible that you've possibly never heard of. (You know, the ones with the pages stuck together.)

Learn a new sport. Try soccer or handball or swimming. Also, prepare now to make the school chess team or marching band in the fall.

Chart your family tree. Dig out some old family photos from that chest in the attic. Learn more about your family's history. Do you have any famous ancestors? Did anyone immigrate from another country? (Another planet, maybe?!)

Let books lead you on new adventures. Read Thoreau's Walden and spend a night alone in the woods. Read The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, then build a raft. Read Julius Caesar. Afterward, make plans to conquer the world.

No. 6 — Do something crazy. Don't make the whole summer a constructive experience. Be wacko .. go a little crazy ... do something silly. Pick a few ideas from Breakaway's "Lunatic List." Warning: The suggestions that follow are strictly reserved for our card-carrying, certifiably "bored-outta-my-skull" members (Er, ah — that's you!)

- Have a picnic in a laundromat.
- Put up a fake Christmas tree in the living room.
- Eat lunch at McDonald's in your little brother's Halloween costume.

Want more coaching on how you and your family can beat the boredom monster? Give me a call at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760 or come see me at 11 a.m. Sundays at the CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill. I look forward to meeting you.

Anthony Obaner, Bulldogs' coach, gives his team a pep talk after the third period of Tuesday's YS basketball game.

Bulldogs, Timberwolves face off

Jacoby Cannon deflects a two-point attempt by Christian Manzo early in the second period.

Both teams prove worthy on defense

The Bulldogs and Timberwolves met in an 8-8 deadlock during Youth Sports Basketball action Tuesday night.

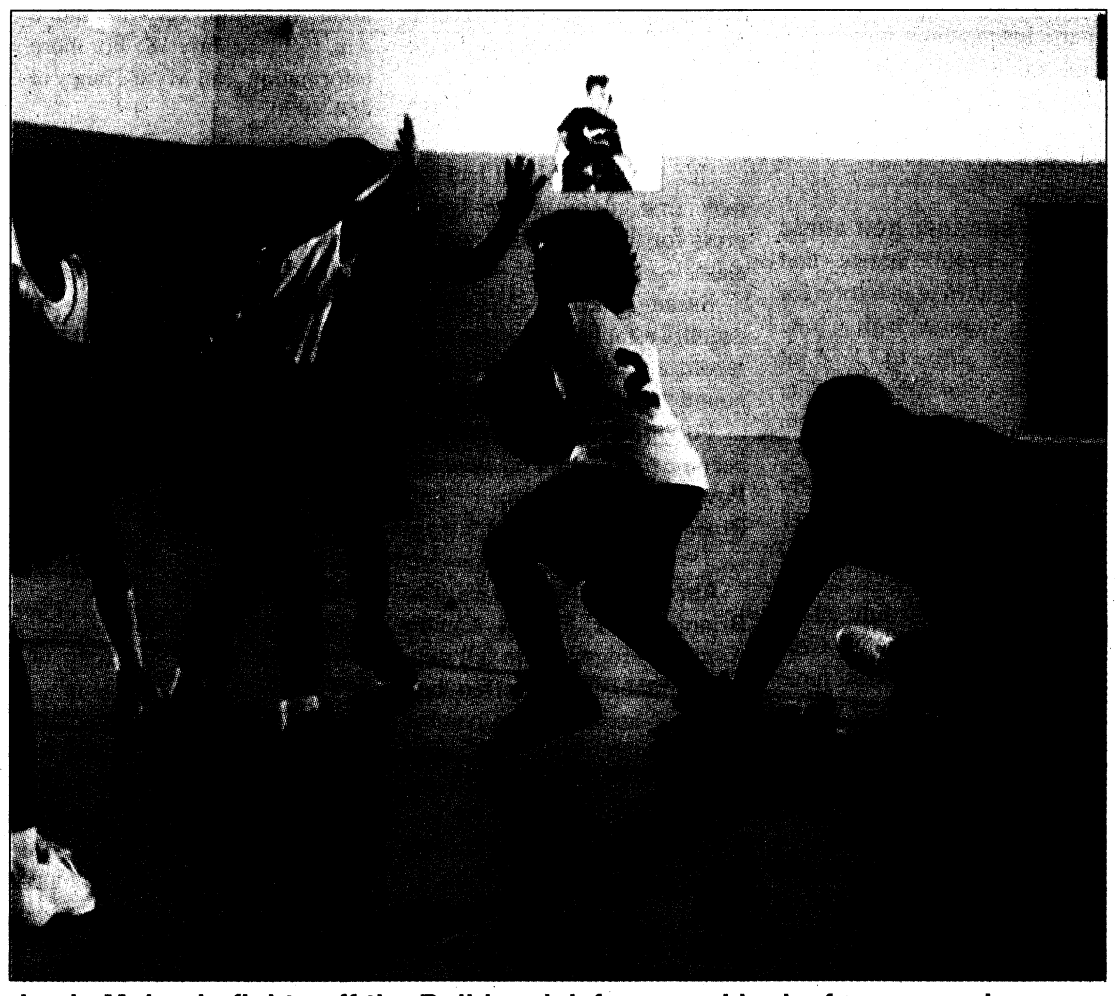
The Timberwolves took an early lead, scoring half their points in the first quarter, allowing the Bulldogs only one basket.

But the Bulldogs weren't about to roll over and let the Timberwolves keep the lead, they came back strong in the second quarter and returned the favor as Anthony Obaner and Brandon Nash each dropped one in the bucket.

Timberwolves' Christian Manzo kept his team above water, sinking one off the backboard to tie the game at six with three minutes left in the half.

The Bulldogs weren't able to break the tie until late in the third quarter with a lay-up from Jordan Jennings, gaining a two-point lead. The Bulldogs' defense held off several attacks by the Timberwolves, allowing them to hold on to the lead for most of the fourth quarter. But just when it was looking like the game was over and the Bulldogs were going to walk away with a victory, Jose Molando slipped one in the hoop and tied the game with 15 seconds to go.

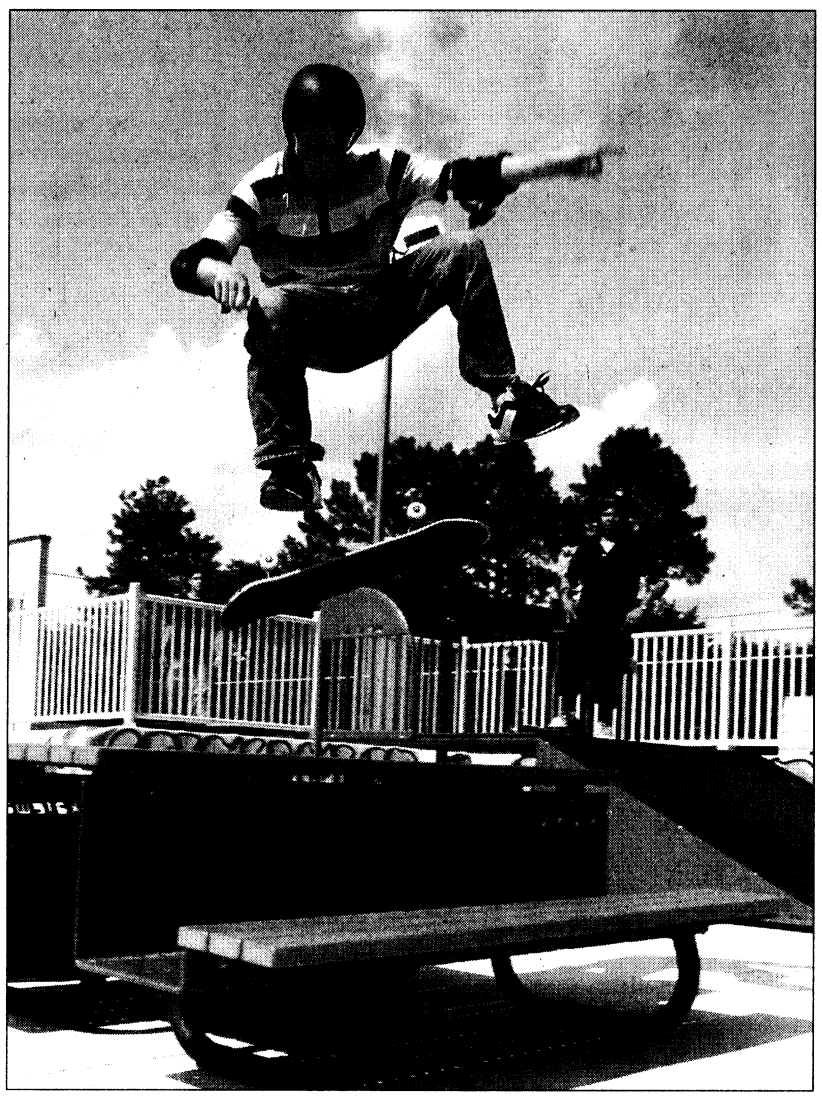
Anthony Obaner slips past Jose Molando for a layup attempt.



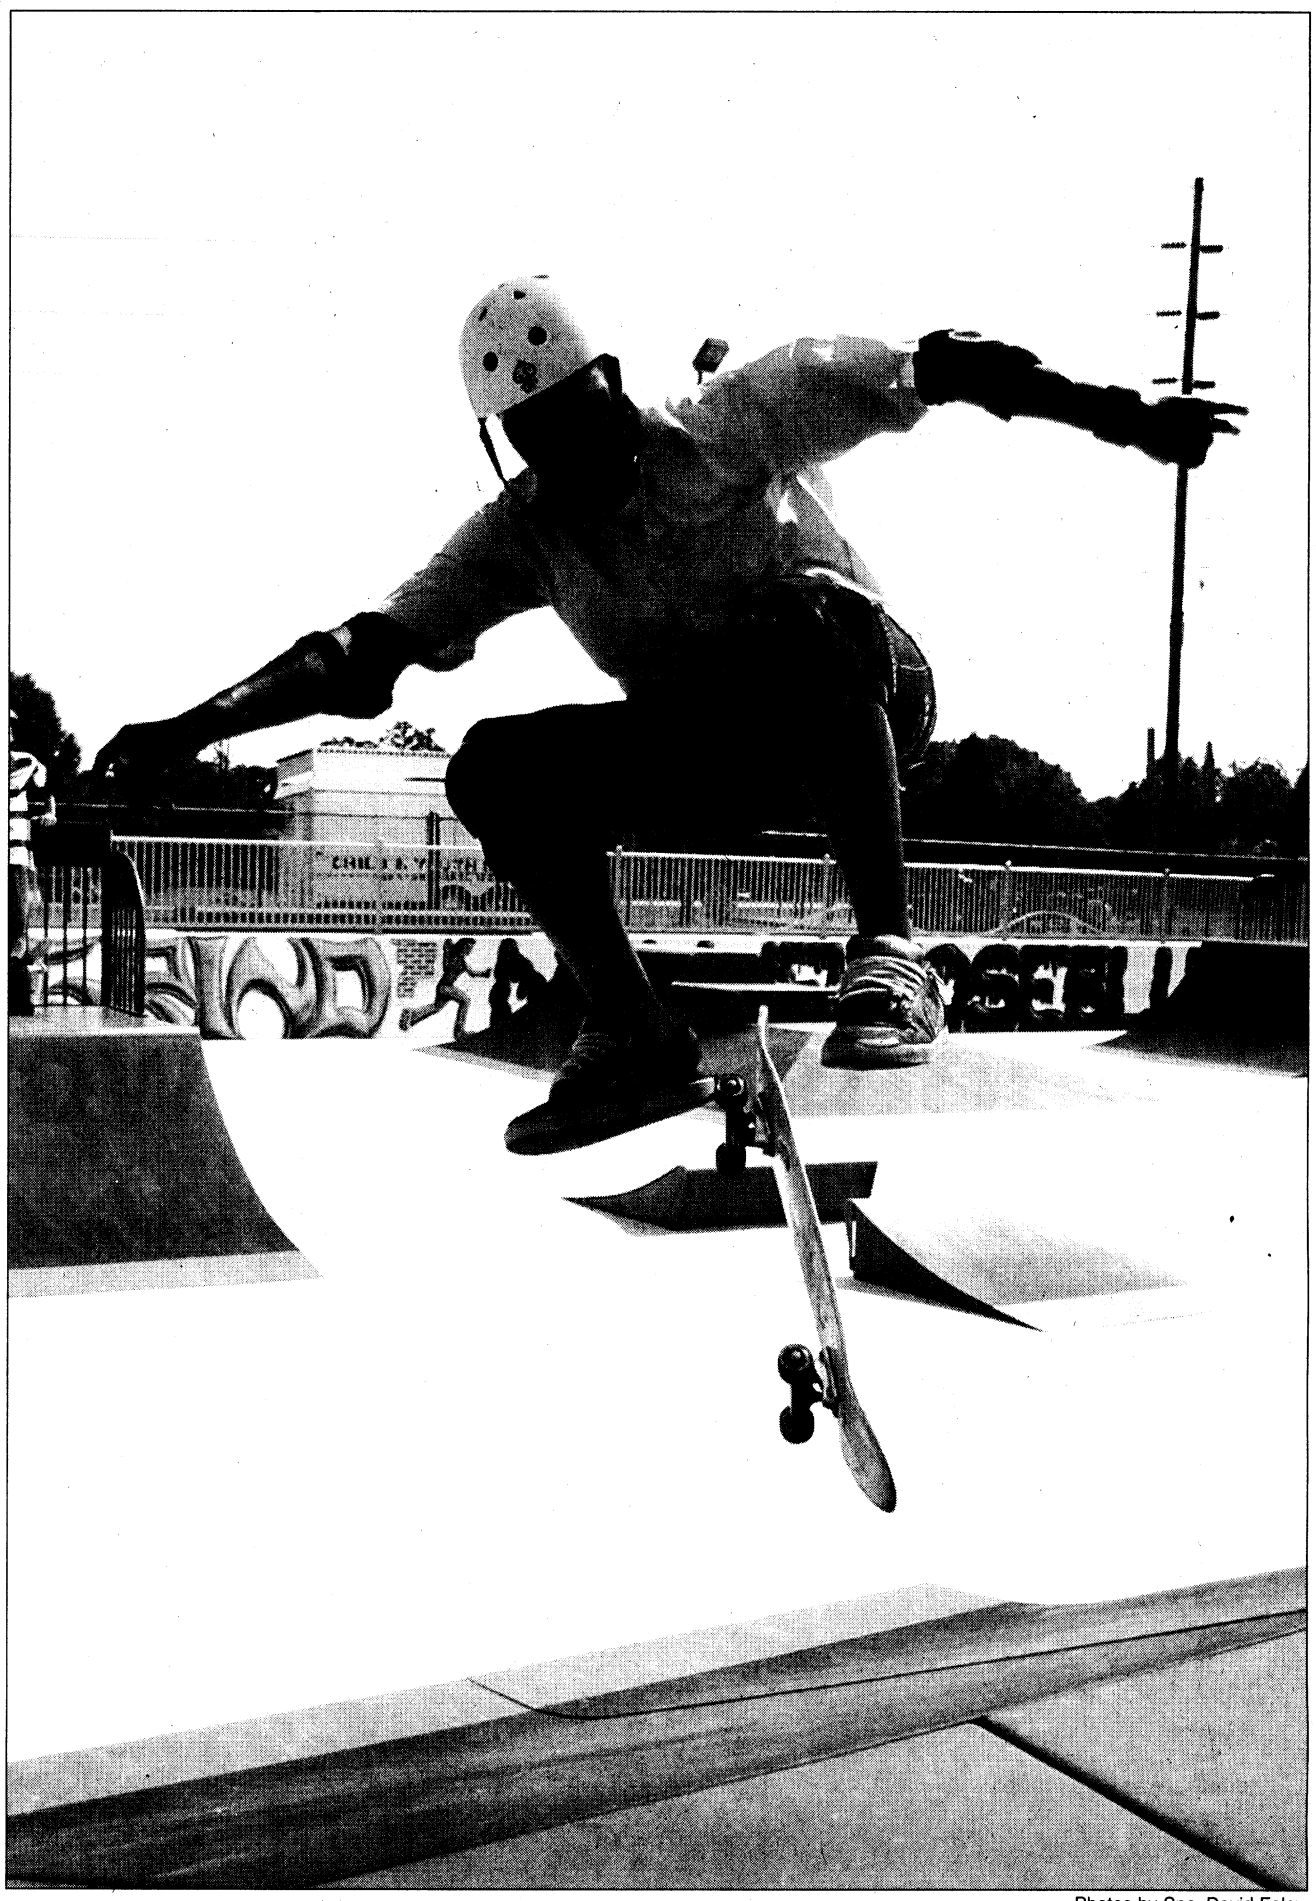
Even though neither team was able to walk away with bragging rights, both coaches said the game was a success.

"This was a great game," said Hugo Manzo, Timberwolves coach. "The kids put a lot of effort into it, and it really shows. Both teams played great defense — the score shows that."

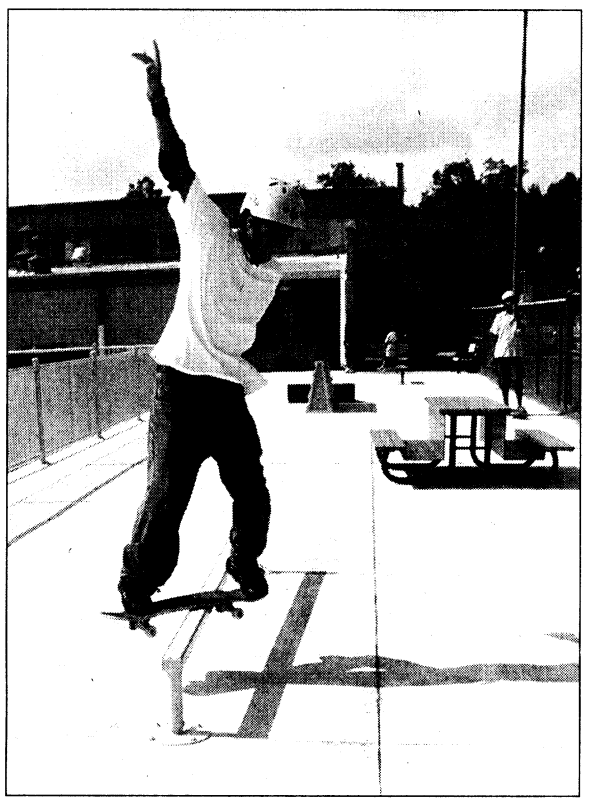
Manzo said he was happy about the comeback, but he was happier that the children were focusing on the fundamentals and playing good basketball.



Anthony Obaner, Bulldogs' coach, agreed with Manzo.



"That was a good game," Obaner said. "These kids are at an age where they really want to play hard. But the biggest thing is that they get something out of it."



Jamie Molando fights off the Bulldogs' defense and looks for an opening.

THE COOL PLACE TO BUY YOUR NEXT VEHICLE!

You've just found a way to protect your money from inflation for the next 30 years.

(Almost qualifies you as a visionary.)

Finding a way to protect your money from inflation for the next 30 years doesn't require a degree in economics. Or even a crystal ball. You just need to visit your local bank, check out the new U.S. Savings Bonds EasySaver Plan, or talk to your employer. Not only do I Bonds earn a real return over and above inflation, they're also exempt from state and local income taxes. And you can get started with as little as $50. To find out more about I Bonds, go to www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to U.S. Savings Bonds Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.

Then relax. Because we predict a more secure future for your money.

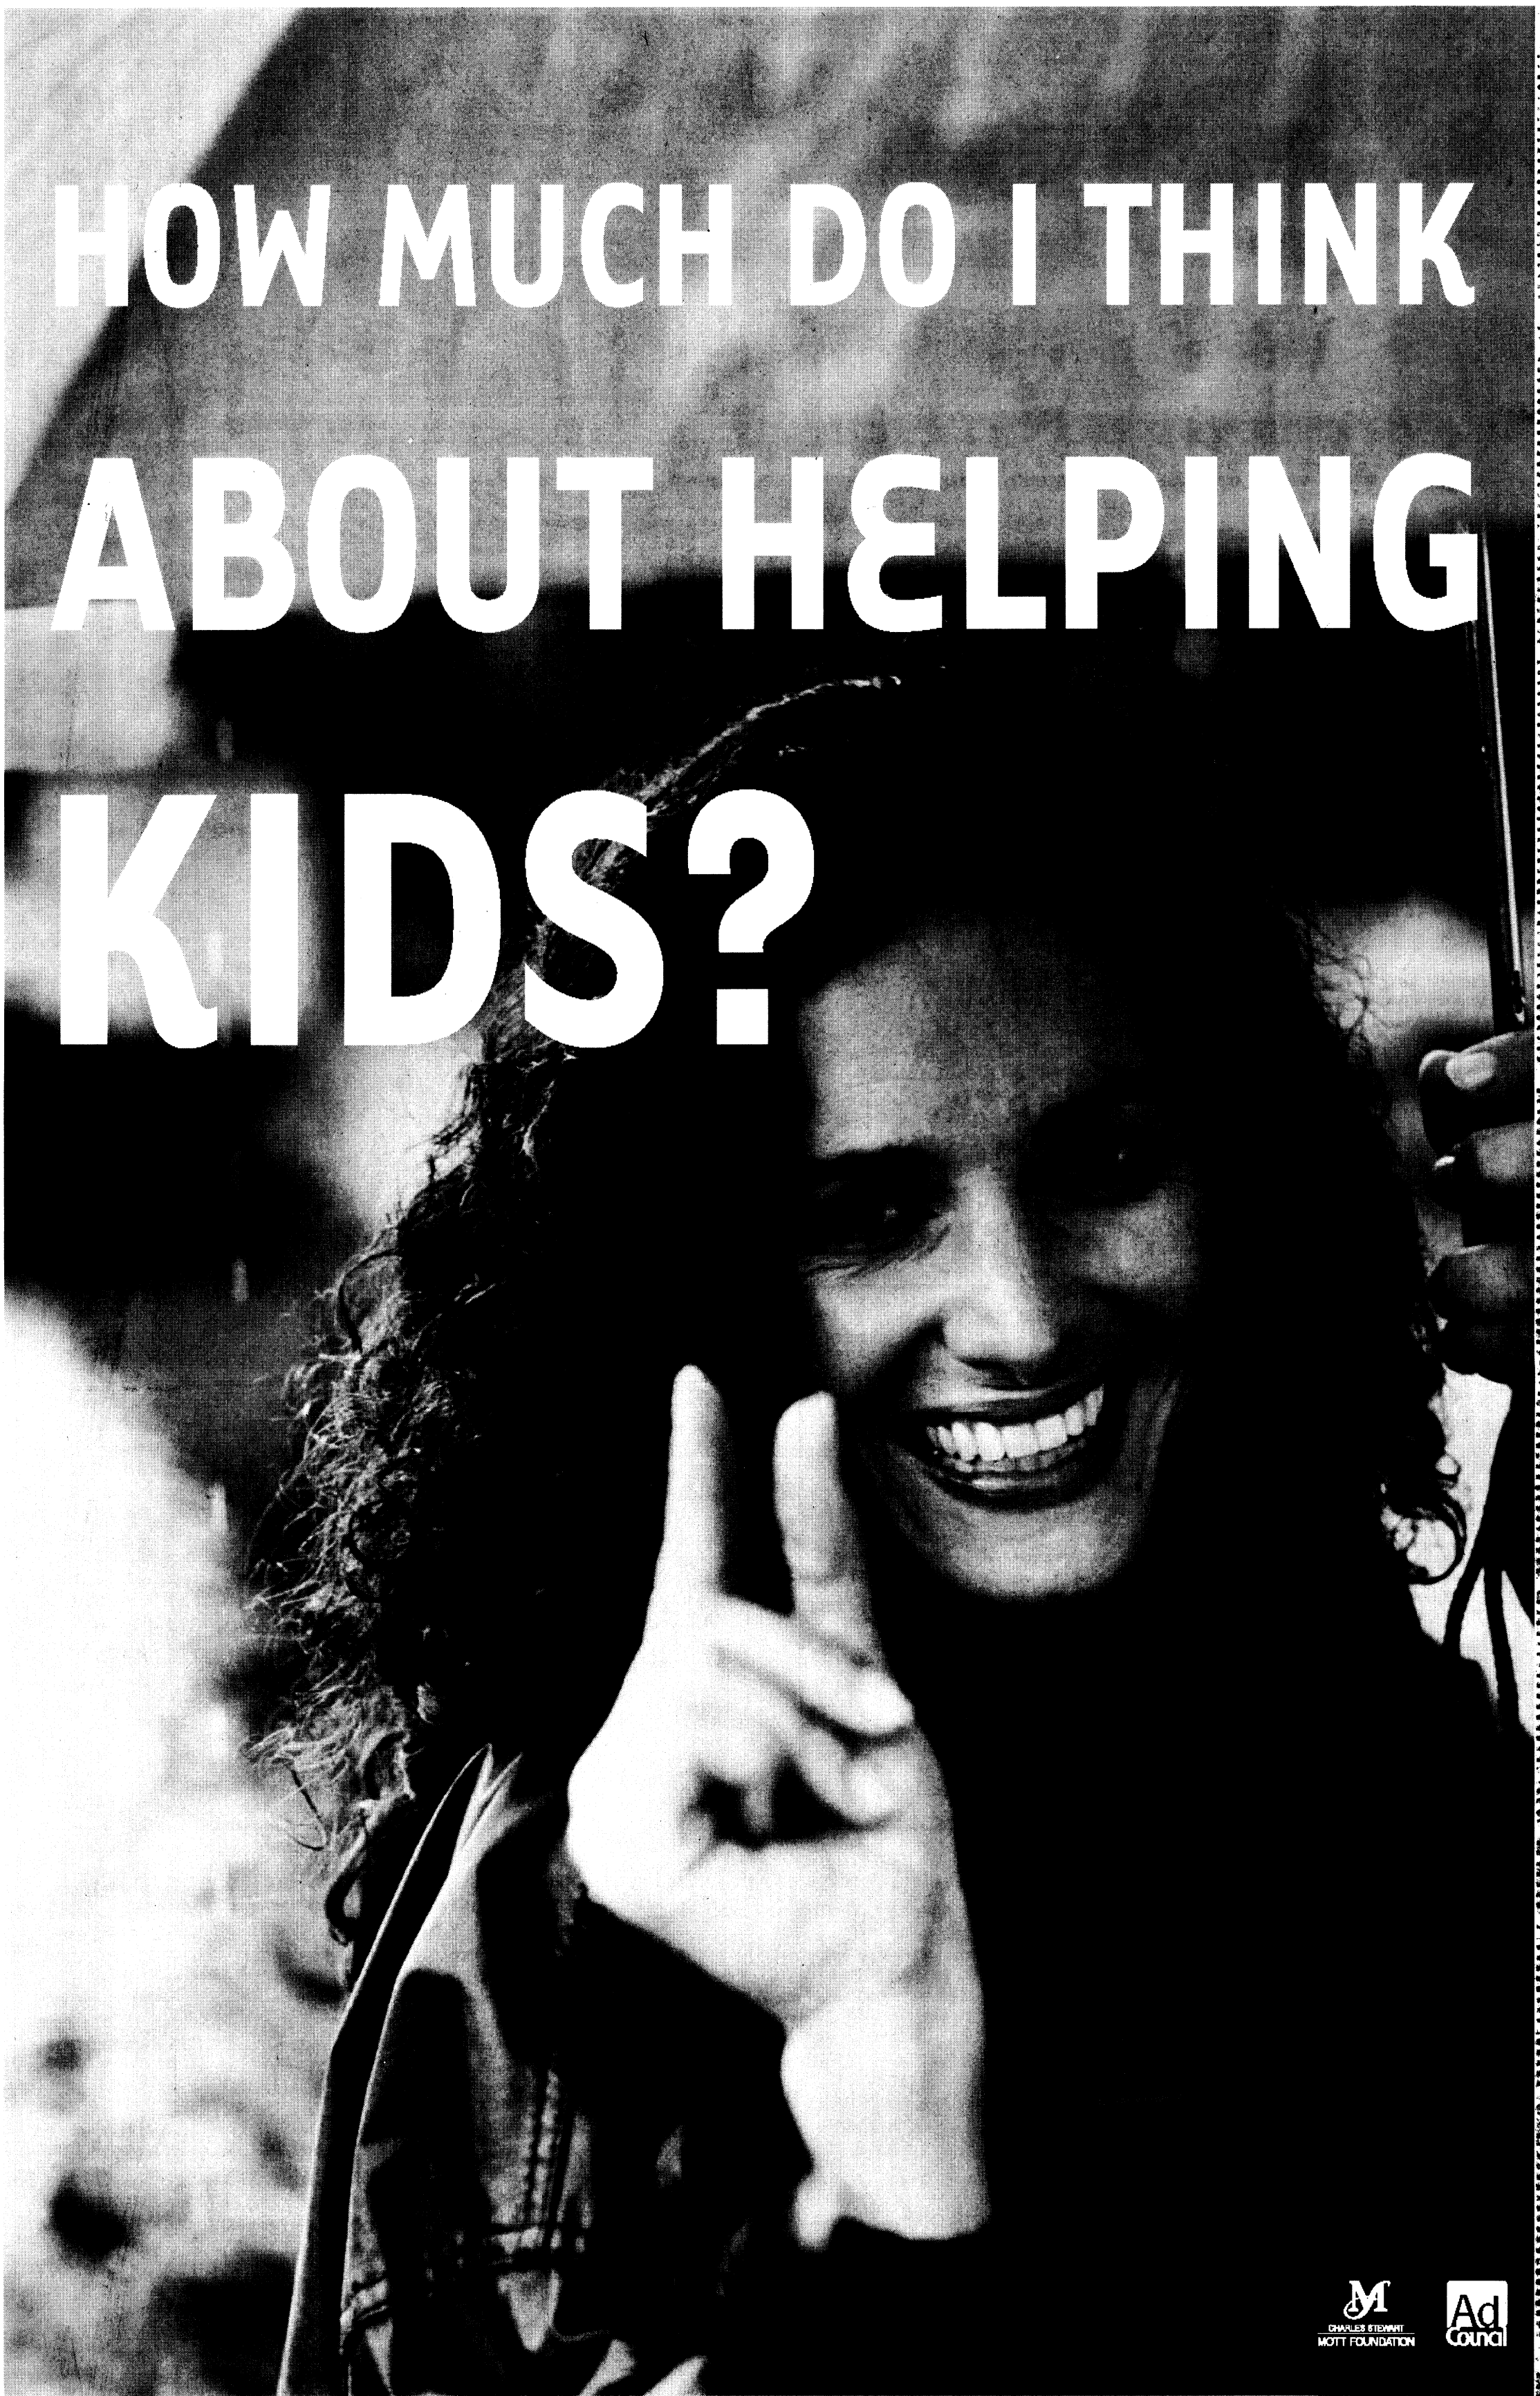
WE KICK 400 KIDS OUT OF SCHOOL EVERY DAY.

We have to. They just don't want to leave. They go to an extraordinary new kind of public school. It's called a Community School for Excellence.

It's open up to 15 hours a day, 6 days a week, 52 weeks a year. Like many schools in this program, it has medical and dental services and a social worker on site. Its extended hours are filled with unique academic and recreational activities.



It's a school where teachers have more time to teach. And students are physically and emotionally better prepared to learn.

So, if you have trouble getting your kids to go to school, find out how you can make it a place they won't want to leave.

How "WE HAVE NOTHING TO EAT" became "DAD, CAN I BORROW THE CONVERTIBLE?"

Millions of Americans can trace their roots back to an ancestor who came to the new world with a hunger. Metaphorically speaking, it was a desire for freedom. But more often than not, this noble goal was directly tied to a powerful physical need for a good, hot meal.

They came from countries around the globe, yet their stories were remarkably similar. They had left behind hard times, oppression and just about everyone they knew and loved to seek out a better life in the land of opportunity. And while it wasn't necessarily easy, they found that with a little hard work, perseverance and good old-fashioned gumption, they could achieve a quality of life far beyond what they had known before. They were free to live their own lives and prosper by their own hands. In fact, perhaps the greatest testament to the power of freedom is that, simply by working hard and educating their children, the world's tired, poor and hungry have become the nation with the highest standard of living on earth. To learn more, visit rememberfreedom.org.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

Drill sergeants come home

BCTB NCOs return from deployment

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The foyer of Hanson Barracks at Sand Hill was decked out in red, white and blue July 1 as families waited to start their Independence Day weekend with a bang.

Eight drill sergeants from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, returned from a six-month deployment to Iraq, where they plied their trade training Iraqi soldiers.

The men missed birthdays, anniversaries, and crises. And many of the wives had to deal with a deployment for the first time.

Tiffany Cox kept in touch with her husband, Sgt. 1st Class Antonio Cox, by phone and e-mail and said a close group of wives helped her get through the deployment.

"We prayed for each other," Tiffany said. "And when we heard from one husband, we'd call each

Ranger Soldier of Year chosen

75th Ranger Regiment Public Affairs

The 75th Ranger Regiment named Spc. James K. Campbell, B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, the regiment's Soldier of the Year recently.

Campbell

"This award was established to recognize the very best of a unit," said Sgt. Maj. Hu Rhodes, president of the Soldier of the Year board. "Specialist Campbell has identified himself as the very best Soldier in the 75th Ranger Regiment."

The annual competition is a two-day event, which includes a physical fitness test, a written exam, a written essay event, day and night land navigation courses, hands-on common task tests and an oral board.

The regiment conducts the competition annually to foster a spirit of competitiveness.

Campbell, 20, was also 3rd Battalion's Soldier of the Month, Quarter and Year. He has deployed once in support of Operation Enduring Freedom and twice in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom. His awards include the Army Commendation Medal, two Army Achievement Medals, the Good Conduct Medal, the National Defense Service Ribbon and the Army Service Ribbon.

Rangers induct 17 into Hall of Fame

Annual event honors Rangers, Ranger supporter

Seventeen people were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame Thursday, including the first American Soldier executed in Vietnam, the man who introduced the Army to pugil stick training, the Japanese-American Soldier who discovered the Japanese were developing an atomic bomb, and one who never wore a uniform.

"Their stories are amazing, every one," said retired Staff Sgt. Maj. Emmett Hiltibrand, a member of the 75th Ranger Regiment Association, who has served on the Ranger Hall of Fame selection committee for the past four years.

"Every time, I say, 'This is it. I'm not doing it anymore.' When you have 21 or 22 or 23 packets of guys who are absolute heroes, it's too hard to narrow it down," he said. "But it's an honor to see them get their due, and that's what keeps me coming back."

Every year since 1992, members of the various military units and associations, including the Merrill's Marauders Association, the Ranger Training Brigade and the Ranger Regiment Association, consider a number of nominations and select three to submit to the selection board. For the most part, inductees are former Rangers who have been separated or retired from the service for at least three years. There are exceptions.

"It's humbling. I look around and I wonder, 'Do I measure up?'"

Take, for instance, Paul Vorhees, who became only the second honorary inductee in Hall of Fame history who has never actually served in the armed forces. Vorhees is best known for his contributions to the Army and Fort Benning through Ranger Joe's, the supply store he started in Columbus with his father more than 40 years ago.

Vet's 'model' service doesn't end with career

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Retired Maj. Eugene Wyles is a bona fide hero, but it has little to do with the fact that he modeled for the Follow Me Statue back in 1959.

That may be his claim to fame around here, but in Olla, La., Wyles has long been considered a hero larger than life, certainly larger than his 4,000-pound bronzed likeness.

"He's always out front, leading the way. That's not just a saying to him; he lives it. He always has. I'd follow him anywhere," said Wes Platt, a long-time friend of Wyles.

Platt and a number of others traveled a great distance to help their friend celebrate the July 1 unveiling of the refurbished Follow Me Statue.

Wyles was 17 years old, the son of a crippled sharecropper, when he joined the Army in 1950 and shipped off to Korea. He enjoyed the challenge of Army life and made rank right on schedule. When he hit a glass ceiling in his MOS some eight or nine years later, he decided to attend Officer Candidate School. That's where Maj. Gen. Paul Freeman recruited him to model.

The rest is history, they say, but the truth is, history is a natural editor, and much of Wyles military record remains obscure. I found it in faded news accounts and a dog-eared scrapbook put together by one of Wyles' fans.

Wyles served two tours in Vietnam, including a stint as an advisor to a remote village. There he received a call from his commander one night. A nearby village was surrounded by Viet Cong, in danger of being overrun.

Wyles was ordered to lead a contingent of Soldiers into the village and stave off the attack, which he did. He called in firepower all night long, and come dawn, reinforcements arrived. Success came with a heavy price.

"I was feeling quite proud of myself," he recalled.

"Then they started bringing in the dead children. It changed me. We did what we had to do, but nobody wants to see innocent children die."

Wyles remained in the village for six months, during which he spearheaded a toy drive back in the states. Weekly shipments of toys and clothes were delivered to the Vietnamese children.

When he returned to the states, Wyles started a youth camp for orphaned Native Americans on a reservation in Montana. He raised three of his own and nearly half a dozen foster children.

"Why did I worry so much about the kids? I guess it all started that day in the village," Wyles said with a shake of his head.

At 71, often crippled with arthritis, Wyles is past the age of child-rearing. These days, he focuses his efforts on raising money for local charities and people in need.

He's a gifted songwriter and musician and some of his early work, mostly war-related Vietnam-era ballads, garnered national attention — even an invitation to appear on the Ed Sullivan Show.

These days he performs with The Swamp Gang, a regional country-western band that frequently performs benefits. Right now, he's making plans to help a local retired police officer who lost his leg to diabetes.

I dare say, Freeman could not have known how appropriate his choice was when he selected young Wyles to model for the Follow Me Statue.

But the battle-scarred, grizzly infantryman epitomized — continues to epitomize — the kind of up-front, selfless service characteristic of a model American Soldier.

You could learn from an alcoholic

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

If the whole world was made up of alcoholics, maybe it would be a better place.

Before everyone gets upset, I don't mean practicing alcoholics — I mean members of Alcoholics Anonymous. Bear with me, ladies and gents, bear with me!

So much of the conflict in the world, between nations and individuals, centers around religion, money and plain egocentricity. Imagine a world where people aren't perfect, but stop to take an honest look at themselves on a day-to-day basis. They not only admit to themselves they are wrong, but admit it to others and actively pursue making amends for wrongs done as if their lives depend on it!

Imagine a world where no one cares what religion you are as long as you believe or are willing to believe in something, anything greater than you!

Imagine if everyone decided to just let it be, if you will. No more trying desperately to control every minute detail of our lives. Imagine the freedom of trusting and accepting that there are reasons and purposes behind all the things that happen to you in life, even though you can't always see it!

That is how the members of AA live for the most part. They have 12 steps they live by that demand self-inventory, amendment of wrongs done, tolerance and humility.

Those steps not only do for alcoholics what no other treatment center, medication, doctor or clergyman in the world could do by getting them sober and keeping them that way, they ask for a complete change in attitude and lifestyle.

I have heard recovering alcoholics say a hundred times, "Alcohol isn't the problem, I am the problem."

If only we could all learn to look at ourselves and fix ourselves instead of trying to fix symptoms of our own creation.

If only we could all learn tolerance, honesty, both with self and others, and personal improvement.

I bet if we all spent as much time working on bettering ourselves and improving how we treat each other and the way we look at life, all the things in life that we let drag us down or control us, like money, jealousy, stress and our perceptions of others, would all become not quite as important.

So maybe one of these Saturdays, I'll go catch one of AA's open meetings and try to learn a thing or two from those who know far more about change than I do.

Care to join me?

Hello? Hello? Can you hear me now?

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

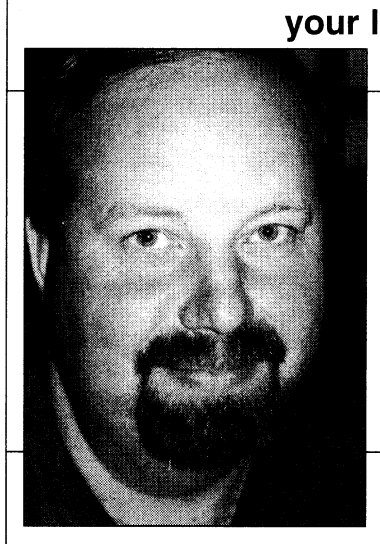
I finally did it. The bane of my existence, and I bought not one, but two. Everyone has one, and you can't go five minutes in any store without hearing one. Think of Fur Elise or The Mexican Hat Dance. Ahh, now you get it. Cell phones.

Why do I hate cell phones? Many, many reasons. First, there are some trends I like to buck — mullets and ruffled 80s skirts, to name a couple. Second, I find cell phones extremely annoying, although not as much as the people who use them anywhere and everywhere.

You know, you've seen these people, those who are apparently talking to someone on Mars because they have to shout, and they are usually the person sitting next to you on an airplane, in front of you in a line or just somewhere you can't escape.

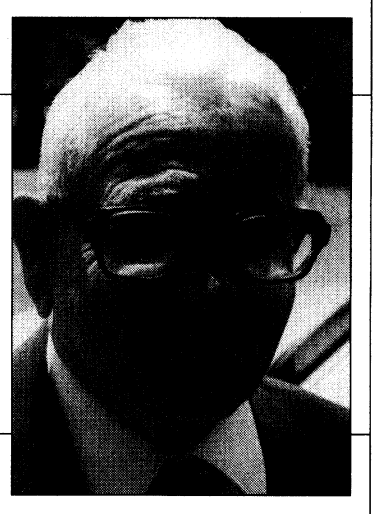
But the absolute worst case of cell phone abuse is drivers talking on their phones. I've been behind people I'm sure have just left the bar, swerving, not using turn signals, usually doing about 20 miles under the speed limit. Just as I'm about to race home to call the police, they turn a corner and I see the culprit — a cell phone. Duh, of course.

Come on now, people! They make these handy things called headsets, and they plug right into your phone, so your hands are free to drive! How innovative.



I also recommend a good ol' rubberband; wrap it around your head and secure your cell phone under it. Several states have implemented a law that requires drivers to use headsets. It's about time, and I hope more states follow suit.

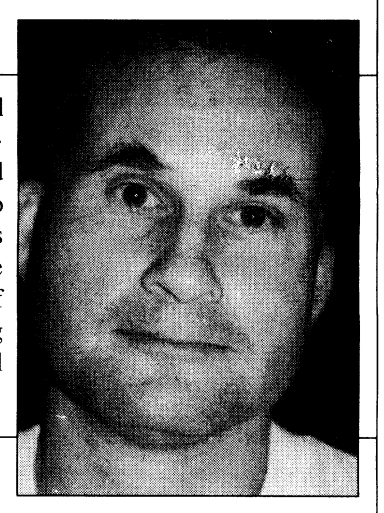
Cell phones aren't all bad. I don't have mine so I can call everyone I know while I'm driving so I'm not bored. I have it for convenience and peace of mind. I mostly drive around post, but if something should happen and my car breaks down, I have a lifeline to help. If I'm out shopping and my husband needs something, he can call me. But — and this is a big but — I keep my ringer low or put it on vibrate so as not to announce to everyone I have a call.



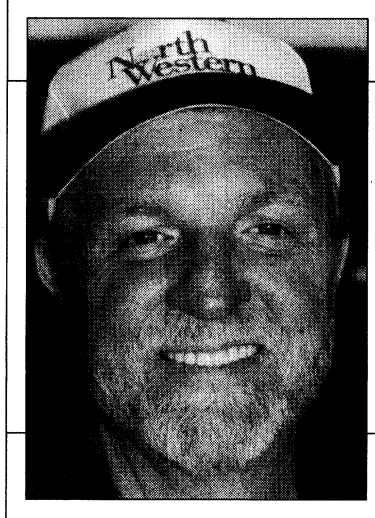
Cell phones are here to stay, and will be doing our taxes for us before long. If we all just use a little courtesy, as in any area of life, they will become less of a nuisance and I can stop yelling at the guy in front of me to put the phone down and drive.

VARIOUS VOICES

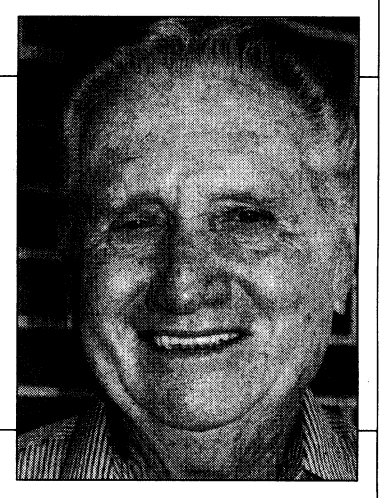
How did your military service or the service of someone you know affect your life?



Scott Crousore, veteran of Desert Storm, Air Force — "Obviously, I have a greater sense of pride in my country than if I'd never served. But the skills I learned and the experiences I went through set me up for where I am today — the job skills, of course, but the discipline, too."



Retired Master Sgt. Alton Ford, Columbus — "I was headed down a bad path, and coming into the military straightened me out. It gave me discipline. It was beneficial in every way."



Aerika Lewis, Navy veteran — "The major thing it did was help me pay for school, but I wouldn't have had the discipline to succeed and the sense of responsibility I have now if I hadn't served. I also think I have a much greater sense of pride in America."

Retired Staff Sgt. Michael Westbrook, Columbus — "My father served in World War II, so it was an honor to follow in his footsteps. It was a privilege to serve, and there will always be a sense of connection to something greater than myself. I'll always be a part of the Army."

Keith Davis, son of a retired Soldier — "My dad was a hard-core first sergeant. He taught me right from wrong. There was no gray area. He gave me discipline, and I wouldn't trade that for anything in the world."

Will Turrentine, former Soldier — "Back in 1947, there wasn't nothing going on. I was 17 and looking for something to do. I went to Germany with an ordnance unit, and I thoroughly enjoyed it. I'd go in tomorrow if they let me. Those were good memories."

Climbing out of the bottle

Alcoholics succeed one step at a time

NCO stays sober 19 years using AA's "Big Book"

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

When retired 1st Sgt. "John E. Smith" was still a "drunk" on active duty in 1985, he woke up in a pool of vomit and blood on the floor of a barracks room.

His commander was about to relieve him of his responsibilities, his wife was about to divorce him and his children were afraid of him.

For the six-time Purple Heart recipient, that was the bottom.

"Alcohol did for me what nothing else in the world could do," Smith said. "It made me stronger than, faster than, smarter than, sexier than, you name it, better than anything and anybody.

"If I hadn't sobered up when I did, I probably would have ended up dishonorably discharged, homeless, divorced, involved in someone's murder and, most likely, I would have been dead within five or six months."

Smith said his journey through alcoholism started at 15 and carried him through young adulthood, three tours in Vietnam and most of his military career before that day in April when, for just a moment, the fog lifted, and he realized he needed help.

That morning, Smith got up, washed up, walked downstairs and told his commander he wanted help.

He went to the Alcohol and Drug Counseling Office, the Army's alcohol and substance abuse program at the time, met Yvonne Wilbanks, a counselor there. During Smith's initial counseling session she told him, "I think you need a miracle."

That night, he went to his first Alcoholics Anonymous meeting, and more than 19 years later, he's still sober and working the steps.

Millions of members of AA have been privately battling addiction to alcohol since 1935, when founder Bill W. began secretly meeting with other alcoholics in an effort to succeed where all other remedies had failed.

Committed to maintaining the privacy of its members, the group has no membership rosters or registration — the only requirement is a desire to stop drinking, according to the Alcoholics Anonymous manual, better known as the "Big Book" to its members.

This devotion to anonymity is a welcome safe haven for Soldiers concerned about the impact alcoholism may have on their careers.

And just as any task in the military has manuals directing the accomplishment of the mission, the Big Book is AA's.

It outlines the path AA members take on their road to and through sobriety, offers members' stories and tackles hard issues, like atheism in a secret society that is based on spirituality.

In this manual, the 12 steps to sobriety are laid out and examined. These steps provide not only the blueprint to get to sobriety, but to living the rest of life sober, as well.

Those 12 steps are what saved Smith's life.

"I had never surrendered in my life at all," Smith said. "Surrender was not in my vocabulary. And giving my will over to someone and something else was very difficult for me."

With that surrender, he said, he began a new life based on self-honesty, humility, making amends for wrongs done and helping other alcoholics as laid out in the 12 steps.

The journey through life as an alcoholic trying to live by the steps in AA is never made alone, Smith said. He was surrounded by other alcoholics who helped guide him down his path to living sober.

Sponsors like those Smith had are an important part of AA. They are individuals who can walk newcomers through their difficult early times and help keep old-timers on the wagon. Their service to other alcoholics is part of their own recovery as laid out by the twelfth step.

Once a recovering alcoholic reaches that twelfth step, it isn't a magical cure for the lifelong disease.

Sobriety is a constant reflection on all of the steps. They are constantly reaffirmed, reworked and re-examined throughout the course of an alcoholic's life, Smith said.

"I am always only one drink away from a drunk," he said.

For those who aren't sure whether they need help or not, as Smith once was, he offered blunt advice.

"Stop the (lies). (Lie to) me, (lie to) your friends, but don't (lie to) yourself. Get right with your innermost self and get right with God," he said. "Go out and try some more drinking and see where that gets you. Get honest with yourself. See if you have control."

Smith's reference to getting right with God may prove daunting for those who have conflicts with religion and the existence of God.

AA recognizes that conflict and actually has an entire chapter in the Big Book dedicated to agnostics and atheists.

"When, therefore, we speak to you of God, we mean your own conception of God," it reads.

The second step is the first to confront those who have conflicts in the realm of religion and spirituality.

By saying they "came to believe that a power greater than ourselves could restore us to sanity," it describes the mere willingness to believe that something, anything, a doorknob even, has the power to do what most alcoholics can not do with just will power alone.

It is this flexibility for each person to somewhat shape their own recovery which helps so many accept what at first may seem to be an attempt to "save" or religionize someone who may not believe in a traditional "God," Smith said.

He said those looking for help don't have to believe in God, they only have to be willing to believe in something greater than themselves and the rest will come.

"If you work the steps and you learn how to live them properly, you'll stay sober one day at a time," Smith said.

Wilbanks, who still works in the Army Alcohol and Substance Abuse Program here, said Soldiers, family members and civilian employees can attend AA meetings on post Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays at 7 p.m.

"AA is completely anonymous and has no cost," she said. "AA is not associated with any program and the only requirement for membership is a desire to stop drinking."

For those who recognize they have a problem, AA has a huge network of members who are available to help. Meetings happen worldwide, several times a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year.

"I would encourage anyone who has problems with alcohol to attend an AA meeting and see what it has to offer in their road to recovery," Wilbanks said.

Non-members are permitted to attend open meetings to determine if AA is appropriate for them.

For a local schedule of meetings or for more information, call the AA district office at 327-6078 or AA's referral service, 24 hours a day, at (800) 207-1264.

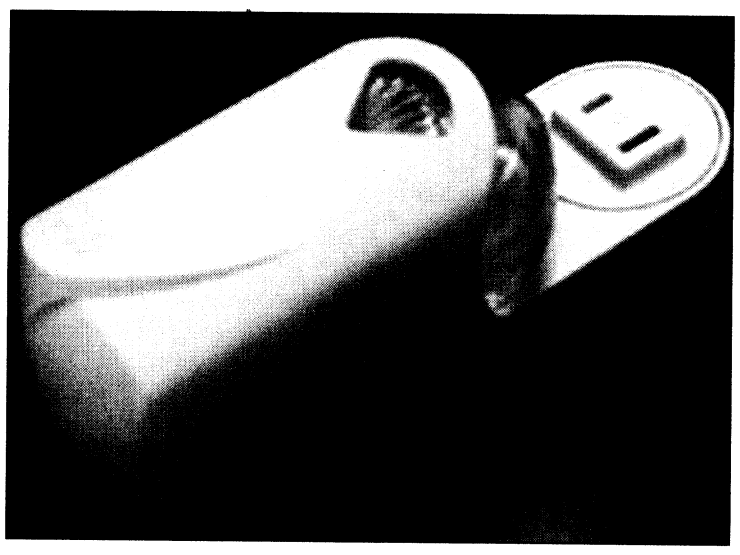
Plug-in air fresheners could cause house fires

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Army Safety Office has issued a warning to Soldiers and their family members to be on the look-out for possible fire hazards in their homes.

One major concern is that Soldiers may still be using plug-in air fresheners that have been recalled.

In cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, the S.C. Johnson Company has recalled 2.5 million Glade Extra Outlet Scented Oil Air Fresheners.



According to a press release from the CPSC, two types of the plug-in style air fresheners were determined to have manufacturers' defects, which may have contributed to a number of house fires.

The press release states that the Sky Breeze and Mystical Garden scented air fresheners have a unique rotating plug-through outlet that allows other electrical devices to be plugged into the same outlet.

The rotating outlet reads, "15 Amps Max" on the front and has a yellow disk on the back. The Model number for the units is "SCJ079" and will be printed on the back.

"If you think you have one of these, take it out immediately and call the company to see if it is one of the (products) that has been recalled," said Scott Wolfson, CPSC spokesman.

Wolfson said the products were sold to grocery and retail stores nationwide between January and April of 2002, but the threat is still there.

Courtesy photo

The S.C. Johnson Company has recalled 2.5 million Glade Extra Outlet Scented Oil Air Fresheners.

"This is the type of product that can linger on shelves and in homes for several years before they get used," he said. "We are still hearing reports of fires that may have been caused by these devices, but the way they are made, they are completely destroyed, so it is hard to prove the product caused it."

Wolfson said he wanted it to be clear that the defect is limited to two specific models, and the rest of the products are considered safe.

Regis Beighley, Fort Benning's safety manager, said most household fires can be easily prevented by keeping an eye on what gets plugged into the wall.

"Twenty-five percent of all fires in the U.S. have to do with electrical shorts," Beighley said. "Electricity is essentially bottled lightening and can be very deadly.

"We get complacent," he said. "We are around electricity all the time, so we don't really think about it."

Beighley said any kind of appliance will eventually wear out and can be a hazard, so people should keep an eye on everything they have plugged in.

"Any electric appliance that is malfunctioning, getting dim or blinking should be un-plugged immediately," he said.

To find out more about the recalled air fresheners, call S.C. Johnson at (800) 571-0920 or visit its Web site at www.scjohnson.com.

New commander promises to keep 'Pioneer' standards 'tough as always'

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment colors were passed in a change of command ceremony at York Field Wednesday morning.

Outgoing commander and West Point graduate Lt. Col. Gregory C. Kane will head to the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., where he will be the chief observer/controller for light and airborne infantry operations.

"As I leave, keep this in mind — we are a nation at war. We are facing a dedicated and ruthless enemy," Kane said. "Our resolve, our standards our never-ending, critical self analysis to get better and our unsurpassed American spirit can, and will, defeat our foes.

"As members of the Pioneer Battalion, you produce the most formidable weapon on today's battlefield — the American infantryman. You are taking the fight for freedom to the enemy, and you will win this war. Never lower your standards. Our Soldiers and the American people are depending on you."

Incoming commander Lt. Col. Mark L. Edmonds arrived from service with Joint Task Force Six, counter drug and homeland security operations, and said he will continue Kane's policies of taking care of Soldiers and expecting only the best out of his unit.

"Command is the ultimate responsibility bestowed upon a leader in our Army, because of the commander's duty to Soldiers and families," Edmonds said.

Affirmative claims recoup Army cash

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

When four service members were hospitalized following an accident near Atlanta June 15, an Army program facilitated by the U.S. Army Claims Service and authorized by federal laws and statutes stepped in to ensure their medical bills will be paid by the person or company responsible for the accident instead of the government.

The Department of Defense spent $27.2 billion on health care in 2003, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

One of the USACS' affirmative claims program's missions aims to reduce those costs as much as possible by working to have parties responsible for injuries to Soldiers pay for needed medical attention.

According to the USACS Web site, affirmative claims have recovered more than $34 million for the Army.

Since 1992, Fort Benning has recovered almost $5 million, said Connie Lalka, a paralegal with the Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Lalka has been processing affirmative claims for 15 years.

Walt Parker, the supervisor for affirmative claims at the USACS headquarters at Fort Belvoir, Va., said the program is a good thing for the Army, even though the claims can be time-consuming.

"Funds reclaimed through affirmative claims are returned to the unit affected or the installation and used for repairing damaged property or improving the quality of living on post," he said.

Lalka said any active-duty Soldiers, family members or retired military personnel who are injured or involved in an accident that results in damage to government property are required to cooperate fully with the local affirmative claims office.

"If you are injured in an accident, you will likely receive a report of injury form from the affirmative claims office to determine if a claim will be made for the reasonable cost of hospital care, including ambulance service, provided to you," she said.

Lost wages, resulting from the injury of a service member caused by a non-military party through wrongful or negligent acts, are returned to the installation operation and management account supporting local commands and activities, Lalka said.

Although medical bills are the largest percentage of the funds affirmative claims works to recover, damages to government property by third parties are also a significant factor.

"The Army likes to think of itself as a business," Parker said. "Any business works to recover as much money as possible when losses are caused by outside establishments or individuals."

While reports of survey are used to collect on losses and damages to government property caused by service members and government civilian employees, Lalka said that when the damage or loss occurs outside the scope of employment, the claim is treated as an affirmative claim.

Lalka said the affirmative claims program is important to the Army because it returns much needed funds to the installations affected by the injury of service members and their families and the damage of government assets by outside parties.

"Affirmative claims is taking care of your own people," she said.

For more information, or if you are in an accident that results in medical treatment or damage to government property, call Capt. Claudine Andola at 545-2285.

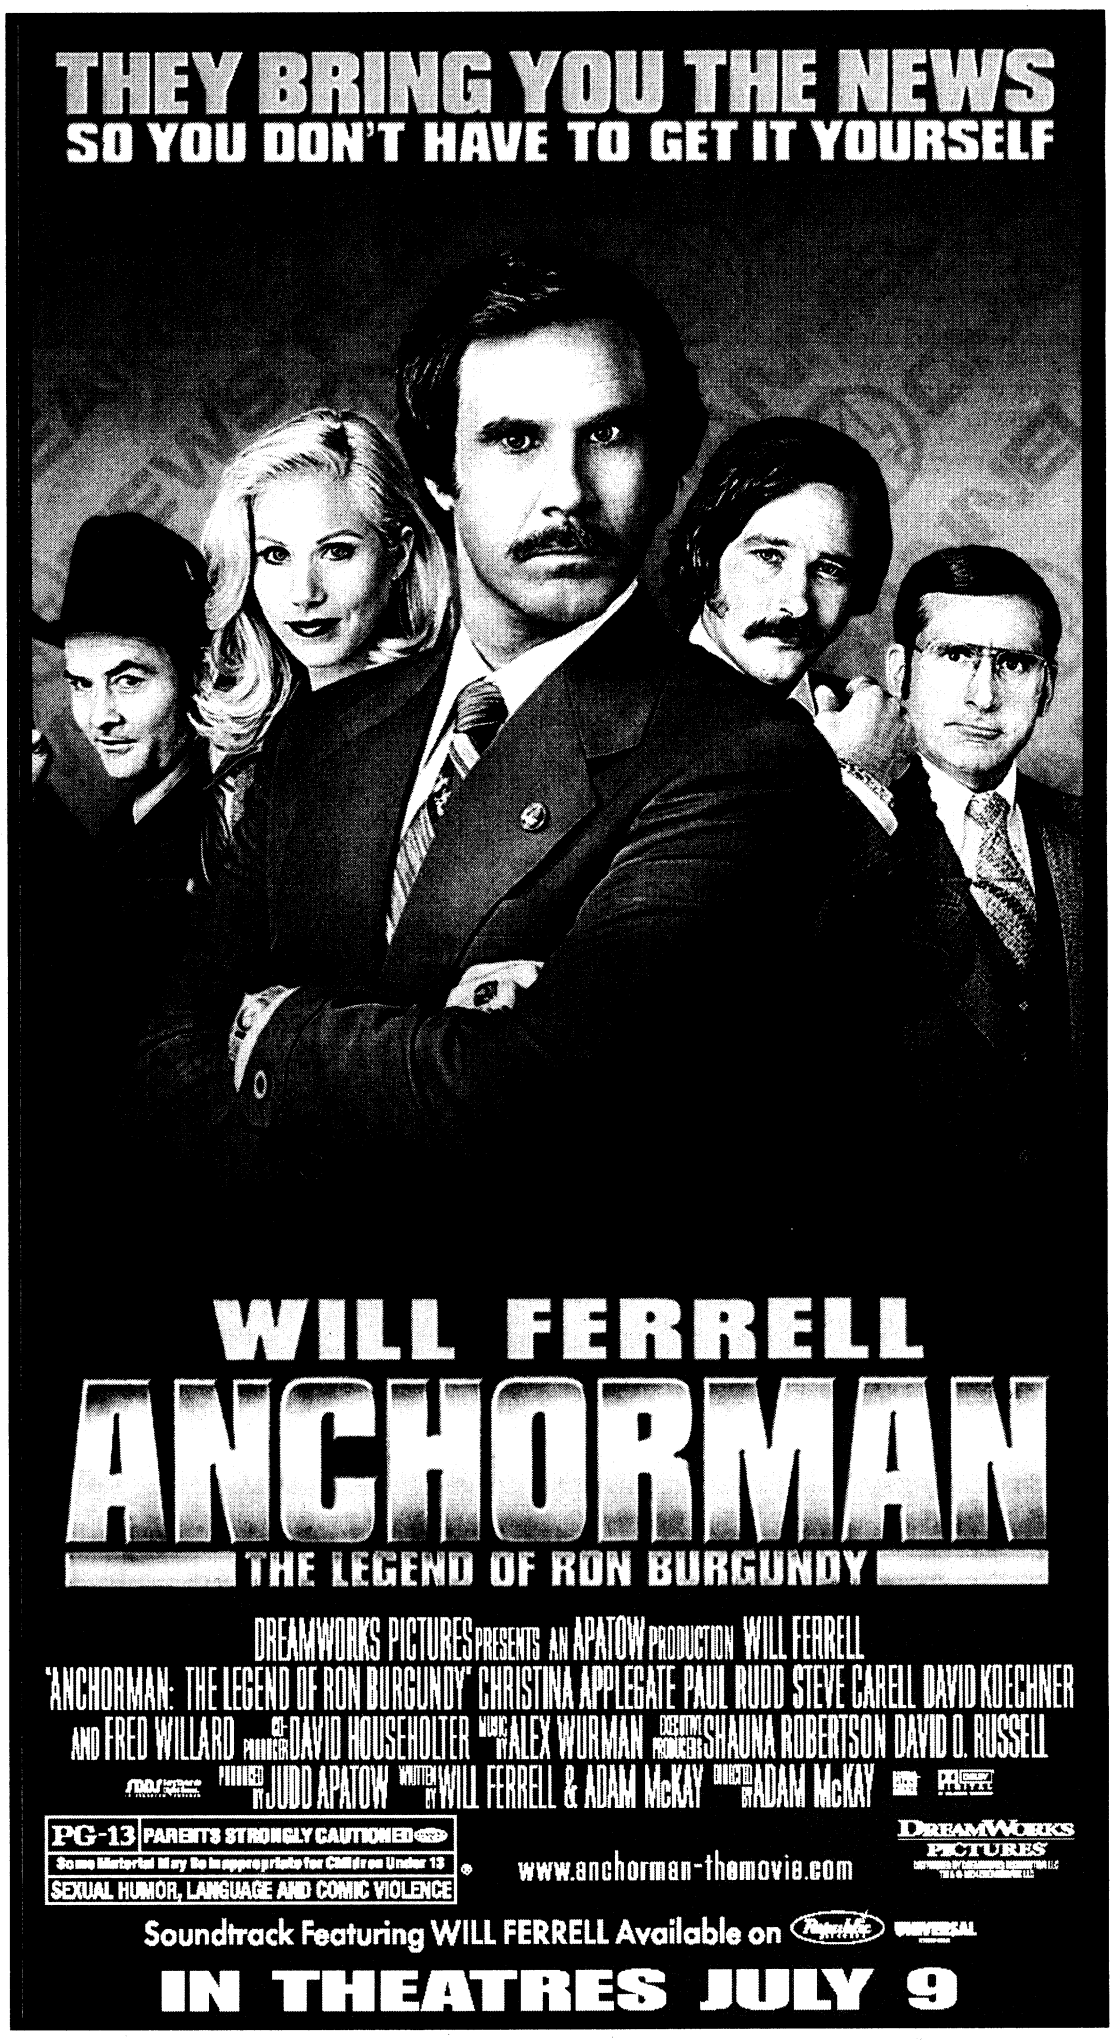
The Power Wrap - Body Wrap

Following the long awaited launch of the Anti-Aging Wrap, just months ago Victoria surprised us again with another breakthrough formulation of The Body Wrap.

Further investigative work at Suddenly Slender's Research Group has yielded a new formula that not only rejuvenates the body in the same fashion as the Anti-Aging Wrap, it also obtains better inch-loss through the torso, smoothes the skin in a silky satin finish, AND leaves behind a dynamic reservoir of ENERGY!

In fact, this powerful energy is so noticeable that our test subjects practically named the nine solution for us...they call it The Power Wrap!

Here's what a couple of them had to say:



"Wonderful! I felt full of PEP the entire day!"
- Sue B.

"I felt the energy surge, but my SKIN'S the best part, it's velvety!"

Model present for statue unveiling

New bronze Infantryman dedicated at ceremony

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It's not that 71-year-old retired Maj. Eugene Wyles doesn't recognize himself in the bronze figure of the Infantryman perched atop the statue in front of Infantry Hall.

That's him, all right, at 26, a Korean War vet with nine years of service under his belt. As an officer candidate, he posed for hours on end several days a week for six months and took a lot of grief for it from the Officer Candidate School cadre.

Nonetheless, when Wyles was plucked out of Ranger School and brought back to Fort Benning for the dedication of the statue back in 1960, it wasn't his face he saw when the Infantryman was unveiled.

And that hasn't changed.

"I don't even think of it as me. I never did," said Wyles, after a newly-cast bronze statue was unveiled July 1 during the annual Fort Benning Independence Day celebration on York Field.

"When I look at it, I see everyone who's ever given their lives for this country," he said. "I see my buddies who didn't make it back alive, and the older I get, the more that haunts me."

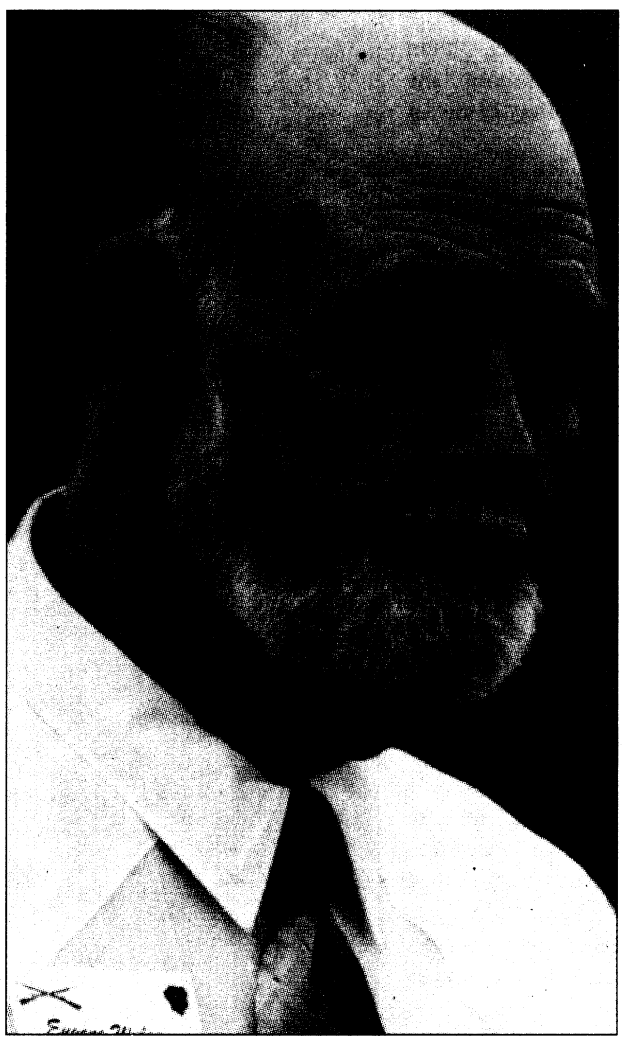
Maj. Gen. Paul Freeman, then the post commander, commissioned the statue in 1959. Two Soldiers, Spc. Karl Von Krog and Spc. Manfred Bass, designed and sculpted the figure. Bass has since earned international recognition for his work, including designs for Macy's in New York.

The statue, dubbed The Infantryman, originally stood near OCS. It was relocated to its present location in 1964 and became known as the Follow Me Statue when President Gerald Ford referred to it as such during a visit to post to celebrate the Army's 200th birthday in 1973.

The statue was made of fiberglass and a bronze-impregnated epoxy, which eventually showed signs of age. About five months ago, it was shipped off to Loveland, Colo., to be recast in bronze.

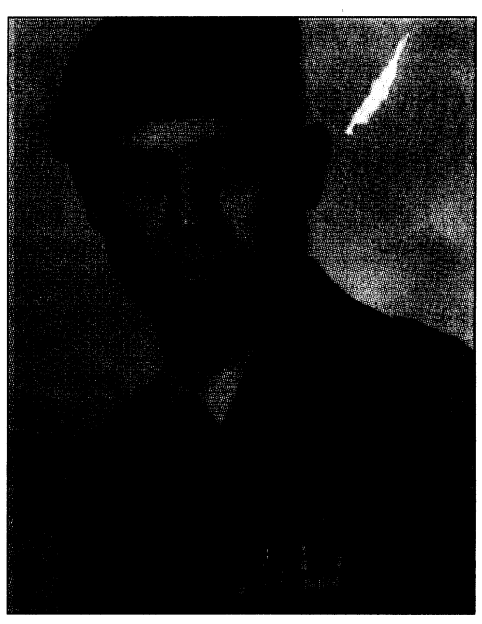
The "vintage" statue will likely be displayed at the new National Infantry Museum when it's completed.

More than 10,000 people, including former Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh and Wyles, who served two tours in Vietnam and received two Purple Hearts, were on hand for the unveiling of the new statue last week. In the sea of faces, Wyles saw the faces of his comrades long ago and the Soldiers serving today in Iraq and Afghanistan.



"It was chilling. I don't have words to describe how I felt," Wyles said of the ceremony, which included a fireworks display emanating from behind the statue.

"I stood up there with those distinguished men and I looked up into all those faces … It shook me to the core. I thought about all those Soldiers. I want them to know I'm praying for them. I'd be with them in a minute if the general would sign me up."



Wyles said he was "honored but mostly surprised" when a Fort Benning official contacted him to invite him to the ceremony. After all, the Army had given him up for dead back in October.

"My pension payments stopped, and when I called to ask why, they said, 'Mr. Wyles, it says here you're dead,'" Wyles laughed.

"Well, I'm not dead, and I'm sure glad I've hung around long enough to see this. This has been the grandest experience of my life."

Retired Maj. Eugene Wyles, model for Follow Me Statue in 1959

Whatever the name, statue depicts 'ultimate weapon'

There's been much confusion about the correct name of the 12-foot-tall, bronze fellow standing sentry in front of Infantry Hall. The statue in its entirety is officially called the Follow Me Statue, and the figure perched on top is the Infantryman. It isn't — never has been — Iron Mike, though often as not, that's what he's called. Iron Mike resides at Fort Bragg, N.C.

The statue's name has actually evolved. "Follow Me" stuck after President Gerald Ford used the phrase while visiting Fort Benning in 1973.

But retired Maj. Eugene Wyles is quite likely the only person alive who can attest to the title Maj. Gen. Paul Freeman figured to use when he commissioned the sculpture in 1959. Freeman studied a number of possible models before choosing the likeness of 26-year-old Officer Candidate Eugene Wyles from Louisiana.

Wyles can't be certain why he was chosen, but he speculates: "I'd been in nine years. I'd served in the Korean War. I was old and ugly."

More than likely, it had something to do with Wyles' rugged good looks. At 71, Wyles' Native American heritage is still evident in his broad shoulders and chiseled jaw.

Shortly before the July 1 unveiling of the new-and-improved Infantryman, Wyles clearly recalled Freeman's desire to immortalize what he called "The Ultimate Weapon."

"That's what he called it," Wyles said. "He told me, 'Candidate Wyles, no matter how advanced we get with technology and all, we'll always rely on the infantryman. He is our ultimate weapon."

ITB Plus-up officially underway

Reservists activated to train troops

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

In efforts to support the global war on terrorism, the Army plans to add 37 new infantry battalions by the end of fiscal 2007 — a feat that will require training 30,000 new Soldiers.

To accommodate the surge of new Soldiers, the 1st Brigade, 84th Infantry Division (Institutional Training), which is composed of U.S. Army Reserve drill sergeants, was activated in May for a 365-day tour at Fort Benning.

Two companies from the 84th were tasked out to 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, and 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, where they stood up F Companies for both battalions.

The other two reserve companies rotated eight of their 24 drill sergeants with eight active-duty drill sergeants to enhance efficiencies within the reserve component companies. The eight reserve drill sergeants were assigned throughout the Infantry Training Brigade in other battalions.

The new unit, which took over Building 3105, (former home of 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.) is now 1st Bn., 329th Inf. Regt., complete with 12 drill sergeants, a commander, a first sergeant, an executive officer, a training NCO, supply sergeant and an armorer for each company.

The Reserve Soldiers spent two weeks in a drill sergeant certification program that familiarizes them with Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade's procedures, then moved on to prepare the building for the first cycle of Soldiers.

Capt. William Similo, A Co., 1st Bn., 329th Inf. Regt., commander, said creating a new battalion from scratch was quite a challenge.

"Even our active-duty counterparts usually get assigned to a unit that is already up-and-running — a working machine, if you will," Similo said. "We started a battalion 'cold,' which is a whole different thing."

Maj. Kevin Rushing, 1st Bn., 329th Inf. Regt. executive officer, said the unit is about to pick up its third company of new Soldiers and there have been no major problems.

"The biggest challenge was setting up the building," he said.

The building was renovated and brought up to standard, then had to be sterilized before any Soldiers could move in. So far, the new battalion is training about 400 Soldiers and is on track to train more than 1,000 by January 2005.

The Soldiers are getting the same training as any other battalion in ITB, Rushing said. In fact, they don't even know their drill sergeants are Reserve Soldiers.

"They are all wearing the 'Follow Me' patch and are active duty Soldiers," he said.

Behind the scenes, however, all of the cadre are still adapting to the active-duty lifestyle, Similo said.

"We are still learning how to pace ourselves," he said. "Before, we were used to two-to-three-week missions, running at full throttle. So we had to adjust for the long haul."

Similo said one of the good things about his company being activated for the year is that he is learning a lot about his Soldiers and how they flow.

"Theoretically, I've seen the entire cycle, just pieces at a time," he said. "Now we are looking at the big picture and dealing with things we haven't had to deal with before when we were only here for a few weeks at a time."

Similo said he plans to remember the challenges he and his Soldiers faced so he can help the next wave of Reserve Soldiers know what to expect.

Spc. David Foley

Sgt. 1st Class Dale Kessler, a 1st Platoon drill sergeant, checks a Soldier's weapon to ensure it is not loaded as he leaves the firing line. Kessler is one of the Reserve Soldiers who were activated to increase training on Fort Benning. He and his comrades started a new ITB battalion on Sand Hill.

Telling the Army story...

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Yes, it's true, photojournalism is a job in the Army, a 46Q to be exact. There aren't very many of us, but you'll see evidence of our existence on every installation Armywide, almost anywhere American Soldiers are deployed and in the civilian media, as well.

Depending on where an Army journalist is stationed, their duties will change, but the mission is always the same — to tell the Army's story.

Whether it's Soldiers, veterans, family members, government employees or the civilians who help keep the Army rolling along — they're all part of the Army's ongoing story.

And it's our job to share that story with the Army community and the outside world.

• Army newspaper staff

Wouldn't you know it — the staff of The Bayonet is a perfect example of an Army newspaper staff.

As of now, we don't deploy. Our mission is to write, photograph, edit, build and publish information important to Fort Benning and its surrounding communities.

The paper is the commander's "mouthpiece," so to speak — his main command information channel to communicate with an audience of literally tens of thousands of people.

Our job is to address issues that affect the members of those communities within certain limits. Safety issues, policy changes, technological developments, deployments and redeployments, and social issues, like alcohol and drug abuse, family violence, date rape and racism — they all make an appearance in the pages of The Bayonet from time to time.

And in almost every issue, you'll find Soldiers and civilians who've gone above and beyond and earned a name for themselves as volunteers or Soldiers of the Year or by earning awards and decorations. We also spotlight community events — sports games, clubs and social activities.

The Bayonet has a distribution of 17,000, reaching across the country. Many Soldiers' families access the Web site to learn more about their troop's environment and maybe even catch a glimpse of him while he's in basic training or while he's getting ready to head out overseas.

On some installations, Army journalists also help coordinate Army participation in major events, like parades and festivals, in surrounding civilian communities.

Today, the word is that during the next few years, photojournalists will be "phased out" of garrison positions and replaced with civilian contractors.

Instead of working on post publications, most of them will be assigned to mobile public affairs detachments.

• Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

I've met many Soldiers who were skeptical of the idea that journalists deploy in the Army, but it's actually quite common.

In fact, pretty much anywhere you'll find American troops on the ground, you'll find journalists.

Members of small units — usually around 8 or 10 troops, including a commander — MPAD journalists' duties usually include news production or release activities, media relations activities and command information programs.

They produce newspapers, newsletters, daily news sheets and photographs for the troops on the ground and the American public back home.

MPAD Soldiers usually produce some sort of publication to detail what other Soldiers in the area are doing with their days.

They also produce publications for the troops with news from back home — especially sports. This can be a significant morale boost for Soldiers who aren't able to access the Internet or call home to their families regularly.

Their coverage of Soldier activities is also sent back to the states where it is published in several different military news outlets.

This coverage gives families back home a clearer picture of what their loved ones are up to and allows them to get a better understanding. And who knows? Maybe they'll see their Soldier smiling back at them.

Of course, you can't tell the story of the Soldiers on the front lines without visiting them for yourself. Journalists overseas are in as much danger as most of their fellow Soldiers, and all to bring their stories home.

Deployed journalists are also heavily involved in escorting the civilian media and protecting the security of Soldiers by laying out ground rules for non-military journalists.

One of their main missions is to help the civilian media get the story. From issuing them protective gear and training them how to protect themselves while in a "hot zone," MPADs get civilian journalists prepared for the harsh realities that await them on their assignments.

They also teach embeds (journalists embedded, or assigned, to accompany units on missions) about security issues related to the release of information that could jeopardize the welfare of Soldiers. Think Geraldo Rivera.

The Army's journalists are responsible for communicating the commander's messages, boosting morale among the troops they serve and sharing with the world the stories of our Soldiers' and civilians' good works and successes.

NCOs: Return from deployment training new Iraqi troops

other to share the news."

She admitted the hardest part was not knowing when the men would come home, and she preferred not to know exactly what her husband was doing.

Her friend, Cheryl Harstad, took a different approach. She wanted to know exactly what the drill sergeants were doing.

"At times, there was stuff they were in that really scared me," Cheryl said," but I just had a feeling they would all come home."

And Cheryl has learned to trust those gut feelings. Her son, Eric, 8, has beaten cancer, like she knew he would, and Sgt. 1st Class Lars Harstad walked up the sidewalk, just as she planned.

Sixth-grader Rylleigh Harstad said her father's deployment went by faster than she anticipated, although she really missed having him throw her around their pool. She saved pictures from art class to show him, and played games with her three younger siblings to take their minds off missing their dad.

Almost 10 minutes after hugging her dad for the first time, Rylleigh was crying in Cheryl's arms as her dad gave an interview.

"She didn't realize how hard it was until now," Cheryl said.

Brandon, Thomas and Josh Wright were a little more stoic, but no less excited. The teens waited patiently for their dad, Sgt. 1st Class Hubert Wright, who had been deployed to Iraq several times before. The boys said this deployment was easier than the first, but they had a few anxious days when they were told their dad was missing.

Melissa House

Sgt. 1st Class Antonio Cox is reunited with his wife, Tiffany, and daughter, Taylor, July 1.

"Their communication satellite got blown up," Brandon said, "and they moved to a new place so he wasn't able to tell us that he was moving."

Thomas, 15, admitted that he was worried about his father the whole time he was in Iraq. Now that he's home, the boys have a few plans for him.

"We'll let him relax for a few days," Thomas said, "and then we're looking forward to beating him down."

Lt. Col. Jesse Ward, battalion commander, stepped in a few minutes after his Soldiers had been reunited with their families.

"There'll be no speech," Ward said. "I'm glad to see you home."

Antonio Cox said it was wonderful to be home and was ready to get reacquainted with his wife and 4-year-old daughter, Taylor. He said morale for the drill sergeants was high during the deployment.

"We knew we would be able to help the Iraqis learn to defend their own country," Antonio said.

Lars Harstad said he was confident the Iraqis would do well with the training they had given them. One man they trained, he said, had fought in the Iran-Iraq War.

"He told us he no longer fought for one man (Saddam Hussein)," Lars said. "Now he fought for all men."

Company commander, Capt. Chris Colster, said the Soldiers would have several weeks of leave before returning to work. Those who stay on at Sand Hill, he said, would be spread throughout the battalion.

long been a major supporter of Fort Benning Soldiers and their families and a major financial contributor to the annual Best Ranger Competition.

In 2003, he traveled to Iraq at his own expense to visit the troops.

Staff Sgt. Harold Bennett's oldest sister and youngest brother attended the ceremony. The Communist National Liberation Front claimed Bennett's execution in 1965 was a retaliatory move against the South Vietnamese government. More than likely, his brother said, Bennett was killed because he couldn't be beaten down.

"He was a man of faith, and when he believed something, he didn't back down. He gave them a real hard time," said Dick, the youngest of nine Bennett children.

All four boys joined the military and all five girls married servicemen. Dick, who emulated his older brother, joined the Rangers and served twice in Vietnam.

"We were an Army family, but (Harold) was a Soldier's Soldier," he said.

Indeed, the elder Bennett volunteered on Christmas Day of 1964 to lead a seven-man Ranger expedition to rescue American captives. Four days later, Bennett was captured.

He quickly developed a reputation as a troublemaker, berating his guards and refusing to cooperate. He tried three times to escape.

"The enemy could not break him," Bennett's biography read.

Retired Lt. Col. Christopher Gooch often put his career before his family. He admitted as much and tried to make amends before his death a decade ago. The eight family members who attended the Hall of Fame ceremony bore no grudges.

"He put his life's blood into the Rangers. He loved it," Maj. Damon Gooch said of his father, the man for whom Camp Darby was once called "Gooch's Gulch." There he designed and developed the Darby Queen confidence course.

Gooch was also responsible for much of the development of the Ranger's Camp Merrill in the North Georgia mountains, and he introduced pugil stick training while serving as chief of the Combat Conditioning Committee at Fort Benning.

"He never told us all he did. He never talked about it," his son said.

"His work is seen everywhere, but he tried to stay behind the scenes. He gave all the credit to the Rangers."

Tech. Sgt. Grant Hirabayashi enlisted as a military intelligence specialist with Merrill's Marauders before Pearl Harbor, when Japanese-Americans were suspect in the eyes of the American government. His family was forced from their home in Washington into a relocation center in Missouri.

Still, Hirabayashi volunteered for hazardous duty and intercepted and interpreted Japanese orders, making it possible for the Marauders to anticipate enemy activity and tactics.

It was Hirabayashi who learned of plans for an atomic bomb while interrogating Japanese prisoners.

Hirabayashi is only the third Japanese-American to be inducted into the Hall of Fame, a roster that numbers nearly 200 and includes the likes of Abraham Lincoln, Robert Rogers and Nathan Hale.

The 2004 Ranger Hall of Fame inductees are:
Tech. Sgt. John A. Acker
Tech. Sgt. Grant Hirabayashi
Retired Lt. Col. Robert Bayne
Chief Warrant Officer Charles Caruth
Retired Brig. Gen. James Herbert
Capt. Roger Brown
Retired Lt. Col. Walt Sanders
Retired Lt. Col. Christopher M. Gooch Jr.
Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie W. Spencer
Retired Maj. James Gavin Storter
Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Francisco G. Magana
FBI Director Robert S. Mueller, III
Retired Gen. Carl W. Stiner
Staff Sgt. Harold G. Bennett
Capt. George Massey Gividen
Retired Command Sgt. Maj. George Horvath
Paul E. Vorhees, honorary

"There's a legacy in this room that just won't quit," said retired Gen. Carl Stiner, himself an inductee.

"It's humbling," said another, retired Command Sgt. Maj. George Horvath.

"I look around and I wonder, 'Do I measure up?'"

"I was in the Outback Steakhouse with my wife and kids," remembered Capt. Patrick McCarthy, commander, B Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Regiment, "when this civilian contractor who had just returned from Iraq began choking.

"I performed the Heimlich maneuver and mouth-to-mouth on him until the paramedics arrived," he said. "It kept him alive long enough for him to reach the hospital where, unfortunately, he died later. The really sad part was that nobody else in the restaurant did anything."

Maybe if they had taken part in the first-aid training that McCarthy's company participated in this week, that wouldn't have been the case.

B Company got some hands-on, first-aid training Tuesday and Wednesday, learning everything from how to evaluate a casualty to how to correctly perform a variety of carries, such as the saddlebag, litter carry, fireman's carry and the two-man carry.

Day one of the training was all classes, said Staff Sgt. Prince Zawolo, a B Company drill sergeant.

After that, it was all about hands-on training and practical application, he said.

"This training is important for so many reasons," Zawolo said. "It's something that Soldiers need to know when they're on the battlefield. It's the first (medical) aid a Soldier will receive before medical help arrives. It can literally save a Soldier's life."

This training is vital for every Soldier to know, McCarthy said.

Should a Soldier ever become a casualty, he needs to know that his buddy will be able to take care of him properly, he said.

"This training's been very interesting, and I can definitely see it having practical applications in the field," said Spc. Ryan Duffy, a B Company Soldier.

"I'm glad to be learning this because it could potentially save my life or my buddy's life one day in the field," he said.

Duffy, who had no previous experience with first aid, said his favorite part of the training was learning all the different carries, though he didn't exactly love the "I love you" carry.

"I was carrying my partner in the 'I love you' carry, and there was a lot of weight positioned on the front of my body," Duffy said. "It was too difficult to hold him and I dropped him."

"First aid is essential for Soldiers to know," said Staff Sgt. Eugene Broadus, a B Company drill sergeant. "When I was in Iraq, Soldiers used this training every day. Soldiers had the knowledge to keep wounded comrades alive until medical help arrived."

These Soldiers are doing stuff that Soldiers in the field are doing, Broadus said.

"Unfortunately, the only true test for first aid happens when an incident occurs," McCarthy said. "Memory kicks in and the Soldier either remembers what to do or not."

"If these Soldiers take this training they're receiving seriously, they will be able to save someone's life," Zawolo added.

Benning celebrates Independence Day in style

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning's Independence Day celebration was every inch the soiree it promised to be — complete with celebrities, crowds, music, entertainment, a little history in the making and a fireworks demonstration of epic proportions. In fact, about the only thing missing was the red carpet.

The festivities drew thousands of visitors from the tricommunity to York Field July 1.

Jag Star, a rock band, helped kick off the event with rousing renditions of some of today's most popular songs and some originals.

The act was followed by a Korean martial arts demonstration, featuring a host of pint-sized fighters.

Not much later, the crowd was wowed by the Ranger Training Brigade's FRIES and SPIES demonstration on Stewart Field.

"Are those people falling out of the helicopter, Daddy?" an awestruck little boy asked his father during the Ranger's daring demo.

"No, son," he answered with a chuckle. "They're just showing us how they do their job."

"Ooh ... so that's what they do all day."

Maybe not all day. But the Rangers definitely practiced enough to pull it off to precision and set the tone for another aerial expo.

One junior martial artist gives another encouragement before their demo July 1.

Fort Benning's Silver Wings performed a spot jump, landing right on target on York Field in front of the yet-to-be-unveiled Follow Me Statue.

And of course, no Benning bruhaha is complete without the Infantry Center Band. Iron Mike, the band's rock group, played crowd-pleasing favorites as the skies darkened over Fort Benning, leading up to the evening's main event — the unveiling of the Follow Me Statue. Well, its fraternal twin.

The new statue — a bronzed replica of the original, which has graced the entrance to Infantry Hall since 1964 — was revealed after a five-month hiatus.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, the commanding general, former Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh, and retired Maj. Eugene Wyles, the model for the original statue, joined forces to remove the cover from the statue. They were aided by the youngest Soldier at the event, Pvt. Siles Evans, of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Regiment.

And just as the statue came in to full view, fireworks exploded in the background.

Bayonet assistant editor

Ever miss the days when your biggest worry in life was getting that stubborn straw into your Capri Sun without ripping a hole in it? I know I do. I long to relive my childhood.

Time being the cruel thing it is, I can't really do that. But I can take pleasure in the simple things that used to delight me. And if you're looking to leapfrog back in time, there's plenty to do …

Bug out. There's nothing like playing with bugs to take you back to "the old days." And Oxbow Meadows will be more than helpful in this endeavor with its Insectival Sunday afternoon. Entomologists will show tarantulas, emperor scorpions and other bugs. And to top it off, chocolate-coated crickets will be available to munch on. It's from noon to 4 p.m., and it's only two bucks. Why not?

Chuck E. Cheese! I've heard a wicked rumor that Columbus' Chuck E. Cheese only allows adults in if they are accompanied by a child (isn't that ironic)? But I'm not positive. Even if that's the rule, you can stalk down someone with kids, and I'm sure they'll be more than willing to let you adopt them for an hour or two. Chow down on pizza, play skee-ball (my favorite!), beat out all the little kids for tickets and just enjoy playing games for a while. And if Chuck E. Cheese won't work out, there's always …

Dave and Buster's. The closest one I know of is in Atlanta, but it's so worth the drive. This place is an arcade to beat all others. And best of all, it's for adults. They serve food and alcohol. And they have more games than I could ever list. From video games to basketball to virtual reality — they've got it. It would be an awesome place to start your night before heading out to Buckhead. WARNING: Hefty price tag. Last time I went to Dave and Buster's, I spent almost $100. Granted I was there for hours, but still …

Read into it. If getting out of town isn't going to happen for you, don't sweat it. There's still plenty to do around here. Raid Barnes & Noble or any other book store's children's book section. My sister and I had a blast a few years back going through all the story books we used to love when we were little. It's nostalgic. If you're a guy, that probably doesn't appeal to you. But what about all those comic books you used to read? Have you really gotten over that?

Mini-golf. I don't know about you, but mini-golf was pretty much a staple in my monetarily-challenged family when I was growing up. It was guaranteed that at least once a month, we were going to end up at the nearest putt-putt. True, it would be better if you could drive around in one of those golf carts. But hey, it's still fun.

Toys "R" Us. I'm sure most of you remember the Tom Hanks movie Big. And you probably know exactly which part I'm thinking of right now. He wanders into the toy store and ends up playing an animated game of laser tag with some kid, running around the store, and then he hops on that huge piano on the floor and plays Heart and Soul. Remember that?

Toy stores are awesome. They have video games and bouncie things and board games and action figures and dolls and all the toys you had when you were little revamped and reworked and repackaged. It's such a trip down memory lane to walk into that place. And you'll be more than likely to find a pint-size playmate to share the fun.

Go for a walk. Take off in any given direction with no destination in mind. Preferably with a large animal that will half-drag you through your little adventure walk. (Of course, being the grown up that you are, you'll bring a baggie, too).

And while you're out there, climb a tree or two. I completely forgot how much I used to love that as a kid until a strange urge overtook me, and I shimmied up a tree for the first time in probably 10 years.

'Young professionals' get fun, art, culture through group

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Band members play at a Young Contemporaries event. The group consists of "young professionals" ages 21 to 40, seeking art, culture and new friends.

Getting bored with restaurants, movies and the bar scene? Looking for something a little more refined? Never fear. The Columbus Museum has a fun and exciting solution — the Young Contemporaries.

The Contemporaries are a group of "young professionals" interested in learning more about the arts, said Jennifer Sillitto, the museum's public relations coordinator. Members are anywhere from 21 to 40 years old.

The group is intended to involve young adults in the museum's programs by organizing educational activities and hosting fun parties, said Susan Lawhorn, the museum's director of institutional advancement.

For instance, in April, Lawhorn said, the Contemporaries held Metal Mania, a "lively and entertaining event that allowed members ... to enjoy cocktails and snacks as they engaged in a hands-on learning session" with a Columbus State University metal and jewelry instructor.

And on July 22, the group will celebrate with a summer fiesta. The event will focus on the museum's exhibition Redefining Georgia: Perspectivas en Arte Contemporáneo.

Erica Mohar, the museum's assistant curator of art, will lead the Contemporaries on a guided tour of the "fascinating" exhibit, which will feature the work of six Latino artists who now reside in Georgia, Sillitto said.

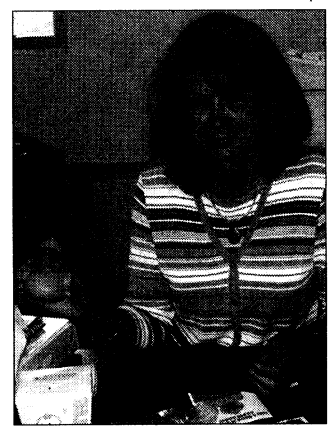
"(The exhibit) will include paintings, installations, photo-documented performance and drawings by some of the most respected living artists," Lawhorn said.

Not to mention the "fabulous food" provided by El Zapata.

The fiesta is a great opportunity for new members to join in on the fun and "enjoy margaritas, Coronas and culture" at the Columbus Museum, Lawhorn said.

The event will be from 7 to 10 p.m. July 22 at the museum. The cost is $10 for members and $15 for non-members.

To become a member of the Contemporaries, you must be a member of the Columbus Museum, Sillitto said. Museum memberships start at $35 per year. Yearly Contemporaries dues are $10 per person or $15 per couple.



The Columbus Museum is located at 1251 Wynnton Road.

Post employee wins duck race

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Janie Pearson shows off the duck that won her $9,999 at the Great American Duck Race Sunday.

Janie Pearson had plenty of reasons to keep celebrating this week — even after the Fourth of July fireworks had long since faded.

The Fort Benning quality specialist arrived at work Tuesday morning, checked her voicemail and discovered she was the grand prize winner of Sunday's Great American Duck Race.

Her prize? $9,999.

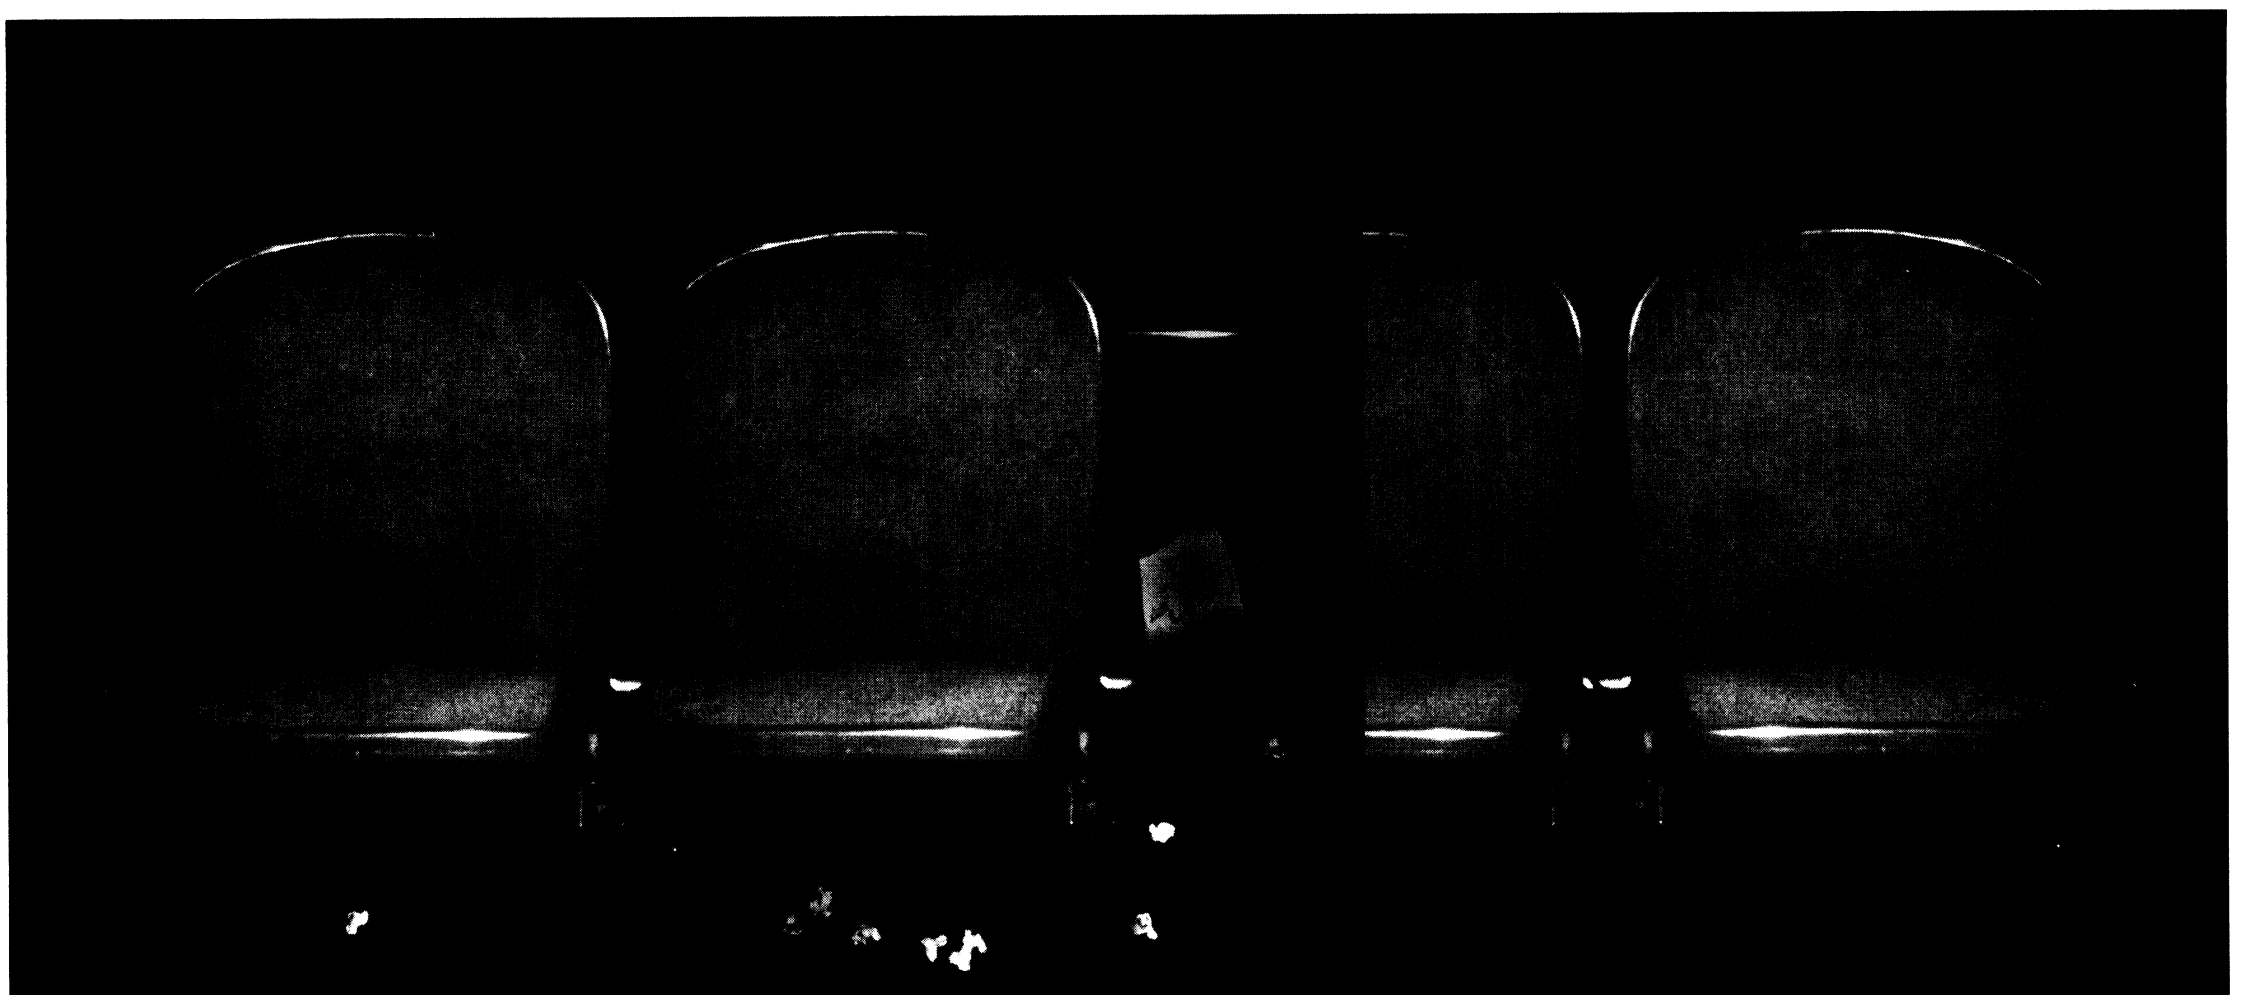
"I've never won anything like this in my life, so I really wasn't expecting to win," Pearson said Wednesday morning, still in shock.

The duck race is an event at Columbus' annual Thunder on the Hooch Independence Day celebration that benefits the lifesaving services of the American Red Cross.

Tricommunity members can "adopt" a rubber ducky for $5 in the weeks leading up to the race. The ducks are then launched on the banks of the Chattahoochee, and the duck that wins the race wins its owner the prize money.

When Pearson bought a "quack pack" with five ducks for $25, she wasn't planning to see a return. Instead, she was just helping out the Red Cross.

After all, there are at least 10,000 ducks in the race each year.



"When I watched the news (after the race), I saw the name Jamie Pearson, and I just thought, 'No, that couldn't be me,'" Pearson said.

So she put it out of her mind and thought nothing more of it ... until the voicemail, that is.

Now, the grand prize winner is almost $10,000 richer, and she knows where part of the money will go.

"I recently adopted my sister's cocker spaniel, and she required surgery to remove a cancerous tumor" she said. "So part of that money will go to pay the vet bill."

Be cool when it's hot, drink water!!!

Benning to host Army Concert Tour July 31

Honky Tonk Tailgate Party to headline

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will host a country music concert at 6 p.m. July 31 on Wetherby Field. The Miller Light Army Concert Tour, the second to hit Fort Benning in the last few years, will be open to the public.

There will be no checkpoints or parking fees.

This year, Honky Tonk Tailgate Party will headline, with special guest Cowboy Crush.

Honky Tonk Tailgate Party consists of four country music stars — Rhett Atkins, Darryl Singletary, Chad Brock and David Kersch — all of whom have had individual hits.

Cowboy Crush is an all-female country band boasting such hits as "Cry Baby" and "He's Coming Home" — something that should be a big hit with the basic training Soldiers, said Jim Shoemaker, program coordinator.

Refreshments will be available throughout the concert at prices well below what they would cost at a civilian concert, Shoemaker said. The Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation keeps prices down, because they can cut about $30,000 off the top of their expenses since the Army already owns a "top notch" stage that can be set up by Soldiers, he said.

"That's what MWR does," Shoemaker said. "We make it so Soldiers get a good show at a good price."

Last year's concert, which featured Lee Ann Womack, "was a complete success," said Brian Smith, chief, Marketing Division, DMWR, . "I think everyone there thoroughly enjoyed it."

More than 5,000 people attended the Womack concert, and this year's show is expected to have an even larger turn-out, including Soldiers from Main Post, Kelley Hill and Sand Hill, as well as civilians from the local community.

"We encourage everyone to attend," Smith said. "Bring blankets or lawn chairs, and make it a family event. This will really be a lot of fun for everyone."

Tickets can be purchased at Omega World Travel, Bill Heard Chevrolet, and online at www.benningmwr.com. Individual tickets are $15 in advance, $20 the day of the show. Family and group rate tickets are available.

For more information, call 545-3328 or visit DMWR's Web site.

Selfless sacrifice

Freedom doesn't come free for all

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Hawkins

"When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another" ... so begins one of the most novel and striking documents in the entire political history of the human race: the Declaration of Independence.

But you know what? The uniqueness of this monumentally historic document's beginning is eclipsed only by the impact of the declaration's ending.

It's a fact not frequently pointed out these days that, in making a declaration of independence from an earthly king, our nation's founders made a declaration of dependence upon their heavenly father.

These are the words with which they closed that revolutionary document:

"For it is with firm reliance on the protection of divine providence (God), we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor."

I'm always moved by stories of selfless sacrifice — stories in which people "lay it all on the line" and risk all they have for the sake of the cause.

Did you know that our national birthright is saga of selfless service?

The 56 selfless men who signed the Declaration of Independence weren't mere politicians, bloated with their own rhetoric — they were statesman who knew that if they succeeded, the best they could expect would be years of uncertainty, hardship and struggle in a fragile union of colonies learning to become states. And if they failed, they faced the stark reality that each would dangle at the end of a hangman's noose as traitors to the king.

Of the 56, few were long-lived. Five were captured, tortured and executed by the British. Twelve had homes and land from Rhode Island to South Carolina sacked, looted, burned or occupied by the British.

Sons of the rich died alongside sons of the poor, and even nine signers of the Declaration of Independence — 25 percent of those who remained at that point, 25 percent of the most powerful and influential men in the New World — not wild-eyed pirates with little to lose, but substantially secure men of means, persons of affluence and influence, paid the highest price they could, leaving behind widows and children in the War of Freedom.

They died young, fighting adversity, so that we might grow old in prosperity.

Let's pass on what our ancestors in Lexington and Concord knew then, and what our Soldiers in Iraq and Afghanistan are fighting for now: Freedom is never free.

Say thanks while you can

Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe
Garrison Chaplain

Last Saturday, I flew to Washington, D.C., for the ordination of two retiring military chaplains as Auxiliary Bishops for the Archdiocese for the Military Services.

A former parishioner from my parish at Fort McNair, D.C., picked me up at Dulles Airport, and we adjourned to a local hotel for a wonderful breakfast and had a chance to catch up on the comings and goings of mutual friends.

As we still had some free time, he suggested a short stop at the World War II Memorial.

"You only have five to 10 minutes to look around," he said, "but that will give you a good first experience and you will be able to say you have been there."

I jumped out of the car and started to walk down the right side of the entrance toward the Lincoln Memorial.

Along both walkways are magnificent murals of military scenes and war industries. I was particularly impressed by the mural showing airborne troops about to jump. The exquisite detail in each mural is breathtaking. You feel like you are there waiting to follow the last jumper in the stick.

I passed by many of the murals with just a quick glance, as my time was short and I wanted to take in as much as possible.

When I reached the pool with the shoots of water rising from various positions, I could still see the Lincoln Memorial in the distance and marveled at how the architect achieved harmony with the surrounding memorials by designing the pool below ground. I saw the names of the states and territories on columns with the wreaths of victory. And then I saw the wall with the 4,000 golden stars, each representing 1,000 American military personnel who gave their lives during the conflict.

The memorial site was overwhelming. I knew I would have to return someday soon to slowly absorb the impact of the quotes about significant battles that truly changed the course of history ... and our lives today.

REFLECTIONS

But so far, I have only described the stone and mortar of this memorial. As I stood there trying to take it all in, one of maybe 2,000 people moving around the pool, I noticed some people in wheelchairs, wearing black caps with gold writing. Each cap simply said "World War II Veteran." As I watched them look at the murals, their faces grew tight, and heads slowly nodded as their minds matched the realities and horrors of long ago to the images on the wall. Yes, their courage and heroism had been recognized and honored by a grateful nation, speaking to each individual who experienced that war.

But the best was yet to come. As I watched with admiration and respect, one or two strangers would slowly approach and, having made eye contact, introduce themselves with a handshake and a few words, to express their thanks and appreciation for what these men and women had done for our country.

The faces of the WWII vets softened and turned to smiles as younger Americans paused to honor members of "The Greatest Generation" with a word of gratitude and respect.

As I looked closer, I am sure I saw tears of joy and humble satisfaction for the part these WWII vets played in defeating the evil designs of Nazi Germany and Imperial Japan.

The Veterans Administration notes that 1,000 WWII vets die each day. In the not too distant future, Taps will sound for the last member of "The Greatest Generation."

But their deeds will live on forever.

In the meantime, if you get to visit the World War II Memorial, and spot any WWII black hats, take a moment to stop and thank them for a job well done.

If you know elderly family members or friends who served in WWII, drop them a note to express your appreciation for their service to their country in its time of need.

Take the time to call them. We owe it to these WWII vets to say thanks while we still can.

"A soft answer turns away wrath, but a harsh word stirs up anger."

Nation's best archery pros to attend

Spc. David Foley

Thousands of people are expected to converge on Fort Benning to watch some of the best archers in the country compete in a national archery tournament Aug. 3 through 8.

The Cabela's Archery Challenge Pro/Am Tournament will be held at Uchee Creek, and will be one of the largest events on Fort Benning, said Cliff Hughes, Uchee Creek manger.

"This is right up there with the Soldier Show," Hughes said.

"This is a very professional, high-end, high caliber event," said Brian Smith, DMWR marketing division chief.

"Anyone with any interest in archery whatsoever should attend," Smith said. "They will get a chance to see the premiere archery tournament in the country for free."

More than 2,000 archers are expected to compete, and the Directorate of Morale Welfare and Recreation is preparing to accommodate about 5,000 people, including a variety of hunting supply vendors, Hughes said.

"The competition is designed to test the archers' hunting skills," Hughes said. "But it has other advantages, too."

The 3D style contest has four classes, including women's and children's events.

The archers will move down "lanes" through the woods until they come across a shooting point marked by a stake.

Once the archers reach each stake, they will locate one of the foam targets, which will be hidden in the woods. They will then try to hit the bull's-eye.

After they shoot their arrow, they mark their score on a card like a golfer would and move to the next stake.

Hughes said the targets can resemble any animal, like turkey, deer, alligators, bears or even gorillas and dinosaurs; Based on the animal, the 10-ring (bull's-eye) can be as small as a dime or a quarter, and the target can be up to 50 yards away.

Just to make things a little more difficult, Hughes said some of the targets will be positioned in such a way the archers can only see small parts of the animal and will be forced to shoot at it through thick brush or branches.

There will also be long-range and indoor competitions which will provide spectators with a lot more visibility than the "lane" competitions, Hughes said.

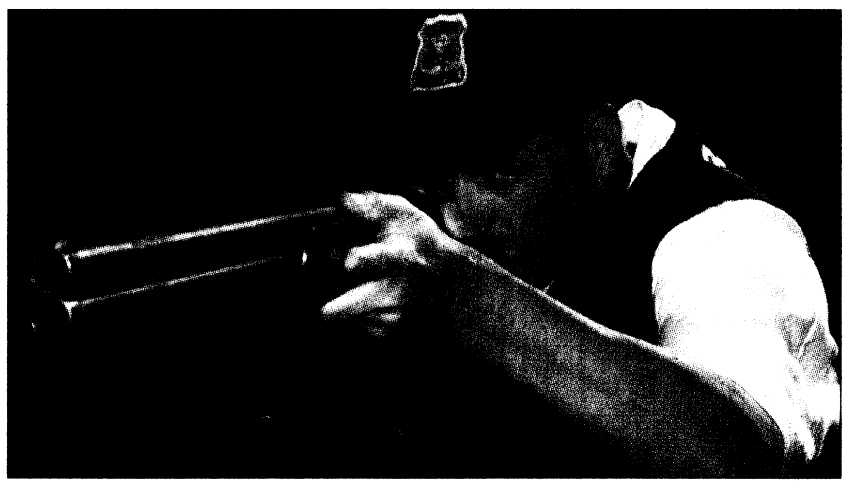
The event will be free and open to the public.

For more information, call 545-1248.

One of the most visible events at this year's competition will be the long range target contest.

Benning marksman goes back to Olympics

Three-time competitor aims for gold



Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Sgt. 1st Class James Todd Graves aims to bring home the gold from the Olympic skeet competition in Athens, Greece, Aug. 21 and 22. The 41-year-old career infantryman already has a bronze medal lying somewhere around the house.

"It's not put up on the mantel or anything like that," said Graves, who earned the medal in 2000. "It's looking pretty rough right now. I let the kids handle it, let them wear it."

Given the opportunity, Graves would let them wear his gold one, too. It's not that he wouldn't cherish it, mind you, but the medal, in and of itself, isn't nearly as important as what it represents.

"If a kid wants to hold it and touch it and put it around his neck, and it inspires him or her to dream and maybe go on to do great things — that's what it's all about," Graves said. "It doesn't do anybody any good tucked away in a drawer some place."

Graves

It was a ribbon that inspired Graves more than 30 years ago. The Laurel, Miss., native was on his way to town with his dad when he spotted a crowd in a field. Curiosity led him to watch, then join the trap shoot competition. He went home with the third-place prize and a new passion.

"What is it they say — the rest is history? It lit a fire in me. I knew what I wanted to do," Graves said.

Graves was well on his way to success as a professional trap shooter in 1984 when he enlisted in the Army and joined the marksmanship unit.

He's never regretted the unconventional route he's taken to get to the top of his field.

"The Army has the best facilities, the best equipment and the best coaches. I owe everything to the Army," he said. "I'll stay as long as they'll let me, and you'll never hear me complain."

No, Graves isn't complaining, but he isn't satisfied either. The three-time Olympian, who won gold at the 2002 World Cup Finals, won't be satisfied with anything less than gold.

"I left the last time pleased with the bronze, but then you sit around and ponder about it and you're not so pleased any more," he said. "It's not the same as gold. I'm not going to be happy with just making the finals."

Graves said he'll go to Athens with the same mentality he maintains whenever he competes. He'll hope for "a little bit of luck," and he'll keep everything in proper perspective.

"I've got a neighbor who's about to deploy for the third or fourth time," he said. "I know I'm doing my job and he's doing his, but let's face it, we're at war. That pretty much puts all this in perspective. I'm no prima donna, but I'm here and they're there, and I try to keep that in mind. Everything I do, I dedicate to them, and if I win a gold medal, it's for the Soldiers."

CLOSER LOOK

Skeet shooters move through a semicircular range with eight stations. Targets are thrown at least 65 meters on either side of the range at 55 mph. Competitors hold their 12-gauge shotguns at hip level until the targets appear and can fire one shot per target.

The gun: Skeet guns have open chokes, which spread shot pellets at a wider radius. The barrels measure 26 to 30 inches.

Course of fire: Men shoot 125 targets in five rounds of 25 over two days. Three rounds are fired on day one, two plus the final on day two.

Perfect match score: For men, 125 is perfect. For women, 75.

Finals: After the 125-target match, the top six shooters advance to a 25-target round. Medals are awarded based on match plus final scores.

Bowling for Columbus

Volunteers needed to help athletes

Pvt. James E. Lewis
3rd Brigade Public Affairs

The annual Special Olympics Master's Bowling Tournament is scheduled for July 17 and 18 at the AMF Peach Bowl Lanes in Columbus.

This will be Columbus' fourth year hosting the tournament for special-needs athletes 22 and older.

The tournament expects to draw anywhere from 800 to 900 participants this year, said Myra Tinney, the event's volunteer coordinator.

And with so many athletes volunteers are badly needed, she said.

"We need around 300 volunteers to help out," Tinney said. "This is a statewide event, so we'll have athletes coming from all over Georgia.

"Right now, we only have roughly 100 to 150 volunteers," she said.

Volunteers can expect to perform numerous duties at the tournament, Tinney said. They're needed for everything from making sure athletes are bowling in the correct order to helping keep score.

There are three shifts available for volunteers to help out during the tournament: from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from noon to 6 p.m. on July 17 from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. and on July 18.

Tinney said she believes that volunteering for the tournament is a great way to give back to the community and also help provide the special-needs athletes involved in the tournament a chance to achieve their goals.

"Personally, it makes me feel good," said Candace Olesin, a tournament volunteer.

"I feel like I'm truly part of the community when I'm helping out like this and volunteering my time for a good cause," she said.

Olesin, who was a volunteer at last year's tournament, believes the tournament is a good way "for me and other people to see people with a disability in a new light," she said.

"It gives you a chance to learn more about different people," Olesin said. "I wouldn't say that I had preconceived notions coming into this, but I had no idea they were such good bowlers.

"The athletes were really sweet, really excited and really good bowlers," Olesin said.

"It's a great opportunity to come out and help these athletes have a fun day," Tinney said. "It's very important to help these athletes to participate in their capacity.

"We encourage everyone to come out and show their support and cheer them on," she said.

"Don't be afraid to volunteer," Olesin said. "I was leery at first. I walked in alone and I didn't know anyone, but all the other volunteers were really nice and, of course, the athletes were great.

"I would tell everyone to just try it once," she said, "whether by yourself or with someone else, whether this event or another."

For more information about the Special Olympics Master's Bowling Tournament or to become a volunteer, call Myra Tinney at 464–4950 or send her an e–mail at myrastinney@yahoo.com.

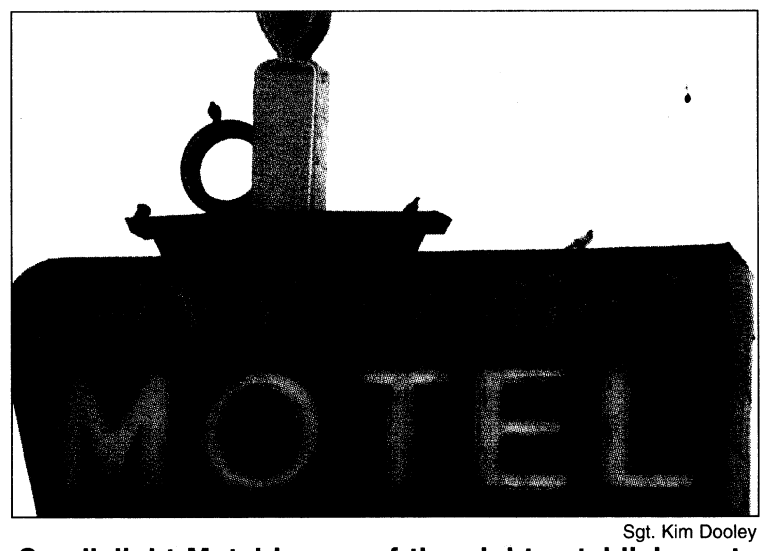
Patrols round up troops in off-limits businesses

11 Soldiers apprehended during weekend

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Eleven Fort Benning Soldiers were apprehended at off-limits establishments last weekend.



The Soldiers were charged with violating a lawful order under Article 92 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, said Capt. Kevin Pelley, provost operations officer. They were later turned over to their commands for further action.

There are currently eight off-post establishments officially restricted in a memorandum signed by the commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley.

Those establishments are:

- Gold Lounge, 3613 Victory Drive
- Traffic Light Inn, 2210 Fort Benning Road
- Cellar's Lounge, 3456 Victory Drive
- Candlelight Motel, 3456 Victory Drive
- Coach's Corner, 3709 Gentian Boulevard
- Memory Lane, 1812 Midtown Drive

The Fort Benning family will get a little bigger with the addition of a new deputy commanding general today.

"This feels like a homecoming, even though I've never been stationed here as permanent party," said Col. James C. Yarbrough.

Yarbrough

"This is more special than you realize," Yarbrough said. "My dad commanded a unit here when I was about 13, my grandfather retired here and my first child was born in Martin Army (Community Hospital)."

Yarbrough who was born in Columbus, Ga., in 1957, said he always wanted to be a Soldier and he is living his dream.

"Every day for the last 25-plus years has been great," he said.

"I joined the Army because I wanted to be around and lead Soldiers," he said. "I enjoyed watching my father, and I wanted to do it myself.

Army hires FRG assistants for units

Assistants to lighten load for leaders

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Overworked family readiness group leaders have help on the way with the creation of two family readiness group assistant positions with 3rd Brigade and the 36th Engineer Group.

Forces Command FRG assistant positions are paid positions filled through Resource Consultants Incorporated, a FORSCOM contractor, said Cheryl Goliday, the post mobilization and deployment outreach coordinator.

"This was a way to allow for some continuity within FRGs," she said. "I want to emphasize these positions are not intended to take the place of FRG leaders, but to assist them."

The positions will be filled by people who are not affiliated with the unit to provide greater continuity for the FRGs, she said.

Livermore

Evelyn Livermore is resigning from her position as president of the Community Life Mayors to become the FRG assistant to 36th Engineer Group. She is also the FRG site manager and said the two new positions will alleviate some of the overwhelming stress FRG leaders face while juggling homes, children, jobs and the families of Soldiers in their units.

"The positions were created per the request of FRG leaders who needed someone who has direct access to resources on post," she said. "Part of my job is to attend town-hall meetings, Enlisted Spouses' Club meetings, and to coordinate with the Red Cross and other agencies on post to gather information."

THAT'S THE TICKET

Don't I deserve a jackpot?

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Almost every night, as I'm drifting off to sleep, I play a little fantasy in my mind. Not that kind, mind you. Uh-uh, my fantasy is about winning the lottery — a real stretch for someone who's never bought a ticket, but a sweet dream, nonetheless.

And just what would I do with millions of dollars at my disposal?

Well, I can tell you what I wouldn't do. I wouldn't waste it on the excessive mansions or ridiculously expensive cars or overpriced handbags I see in People magazine every week. That kind of excess doesn't sit well with me.

But there are things I would love to do and see that a multi-figure allowance would allow me to.

I would travel. Everywhere. Maybe a year or two on the road in the U.S., exploring every big city and notable town on the map. Then, off to the Eurorail, stopping off all over Europe. Then, maybe hop a flight to Asia and wrap it all up with a trip to Egypt — my dream destination, whether I'm wealthy or not.

And I'm not talking lying around on the beach, either. I'm talking the full tour — every ruin and fountain and festival ...

I would learn. Not that I can't do that now, but God knows I would be a happy girl if I had unlimited funds to take every college course and culturing class that interested me on a whim, whether I needed it or not. Languages (I want to learn Spanish, Italian, French and American Sign Language and actually use them at some point before I die), arts, cooking, photography, exercise, sewing, you name it.

I would buy a home near my family and a home near my honey's. Just nice, normal houses. Oh, and I would decorate them to the hilt — but I'd do it myself. (Well, let's be honest, he'd do all the hanging and hammering and hard labor, but you get my drift.)

And I would share my riches. Because, really, when you're spending $3,000 on a shirt or a pair of shoes, are you not really crying out for help, because you have so much money you don't know what to do with it all? (Ahem, celebrities.)

I'd shower gifts on my loved ones, people who love me just as much on my meager salary now as they would if it suddenly exploded into an endless series of zeroes.

I would give something even more significant than my time (not that that's not enough) to the community — free day care centers for single parents or low-income families, maybe an employment agency for women who find themselves on their own after years spent raising kids and taking care of the home. Things of that nature.

I would send kids to college and pay for them to spend a semester overseas. I know how badly I wanted to do both, and how long it's taken me with college costs and time constraints what they are.

Ooh, and I'd buy our local rugby team their own hang-out, complete with a sound-proof room for considerate singing of rugby songs, a self-cleaning floor for all those messy beer spills, a room for playing rugby video games, a mechanical bull, a pool for cannonball contests ...

See ... don't I deserve to win the lottery? How about buying me a ticket?

Much ado about mutton

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Dear Big Daddy,
I hope this letter finds you well. It's long overdue, and for that I apologize. I've meant to write sooner, but what with the kids and the job and all — you know how it is.

I suppose I should introduce myself. I work with your granddaughter, Erin. She calls you Big Daddy. She calls me Bridgett. I hope you'll do the same.

Erin wrote a very touching tribute to her grandparents some time ago, and in it she attributed these words to you: "The world is 99 percent ignorant." I keep your quote taped to my computer and reference it frequently.

Lately, Big D — may I call you Big D? — I've been reading a lot about (and from) the 99 percent. They get a lot of press, you know.

Just the other day, I got a phone call from a friend, a former Soldier, who recently settled in a village in the Blue Ridge Mountains — a tiny town known for its history, its hospitality and its art. It's a college town. It's also what we right-wing conservative types call a pocket of extreme liberalism, borderline hostile and filled with blatant Bush-bashers.

My friend meets with sneers and jeers when she reveals her former occupation. "You were a sheep," she's been told, and "I really don't think you should tell people you were in the Army."

My friend, who served with the engineers in Iraq, recently went to the theater to watch the latest Michael Moore flick. (Have you seen it? Me neither.) She was disturbed by the behavior of the audience, which hissed at the on-screen Soldiers and applauded the Marine who used his 15 minutes of fame to lambaste the president and swear he'd never go back to Iraq.

The audience bought it all — hook, line and sinker — never questioning the inconsistencies, unsubstantiated "facts" or Moore's motives. (Did I mention they called her a sheep?)

I thought about you, Big Daddy, when I hung up the phone. What do you think? It sure looks like we're losing ground, doesn't it?

I can't give an unbiased opinion about a movie I've never watched. Nor do I feel the need to see it. I'll read the papers and watch the news with skepticism and make up my own mind about the war. I admit, sheepishly, I've occasionally allowed "Hollywood" to tell me how to wear my hair and how long my skirt should be, but I'll be dipped and sheared (and sold for mutton) if I let it tell me how to vote.

There are an awful lot of open minds with empty heads out there, Big D. I imagine you from time to time, shaking your head at this epidemic of ignorance. Somehow it makes me feel better.

Well, that's all for now, Big Daddy. Thanks for letting me bend your ear. Erin tells me you've been under the weather lately, so I'll keep you in my prayers. You hang in there, hear? We can't afford to lose even one of the 1 percent.

Parental guidance suggested

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Remember how I used to throw a fit when you kicked off your tennis shoes without untying them? I do it every night now. Just thought you'd want to know.

Love, Mom.

That four-line e-mail put a smile on my face for the rest of the day.

My mom is the greatest. She always finds some way to brighten the world around her.

Sure, she's a little eccentric — she can be downright weird at times, but I wouldn't change her for the world.

She always finds a way to make me smile, whether she is adding strange names she finds in the obituaries to the list she has been compiling for the last 10 years, making up hilarious fake headlines for every unusual situation that happens to her or those around her, or sending me newspaper clippings any time an animal larger than a rabbit gets loose on the streets of my hometown. You'd be surprised how many rhinoceroses, bulls and monkeys break free to run wild through Lafayette, La.

Through my years of wild teenage rebellion, she never gave up on me, even when everyone else did.

She was the greatest soccer mom ever, with her enormous sun hat, cooler of drinks and oranges, and an outfit that included a soccer logo on every piece of clothing — even her socks.

In her eyes, I was the greatest soccer player ever, and she never let me think otherwise.

My dad and I didn't get to spend a whole lot of time together when I was growing up, but he is and always will be the best dad ever.

I hated his incessant tirades about the importance of finishing everything on my plate, picking up dirty laundry, separating the utensils in the dishwasher by type and size and, of course, the importance of frugality.

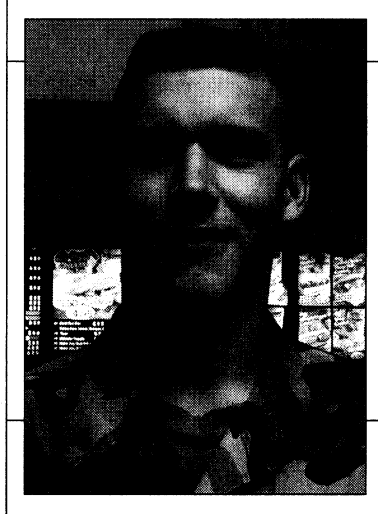
Now, I just look at him and smile when he stands at the sink mumbling to himself about the laziness of the generations who followed him, because now that I have two ankle-biters of my own, I find myself standing on that same soapbox, lecturing until I am blue in the face. I miss riding in his truck, which always smelled like coffee and an old greasy toolbox. It was a work truck and my dad is the epitome of a worker.

He always finds time in his life to help everyone he knows. He builds decks, puts in windows, installs tile floors and garage doors, digs ponds and anything else he can do to keep his hands busy.

He used to let me ride along with him when I was little, and as I handed him tools, he'd preach to me about the importance of doing things the right way — never cutting corners.

At 60 years old, he can still wrestle me to the ground and he never minds hunkering down with me to look for the elusive frogs and goldfish in his pond.

He is my gentle Superman.

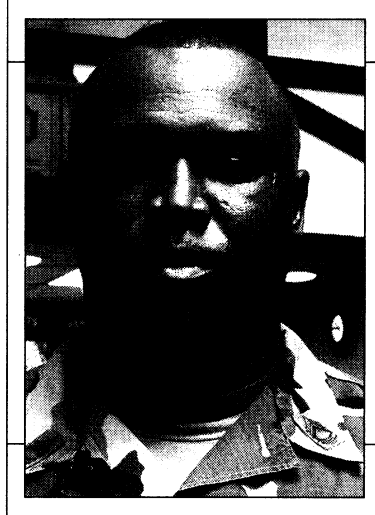


I miss my mom and dad so much, and wish I hadn't spent most of my life pulling away from them, so eager to be my own master.

Life is so short. Don't let it slip by. Cherish every moment you have with the ones you love.

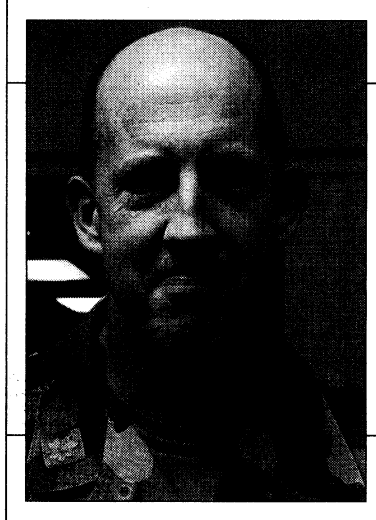
CORRECTION: The July 2 edition of The Bayonet incorrectly reported that Alcoholics Anonymous meets on Fort Benning on Wednesdays. Meetings are Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

VARIOUS VOICES

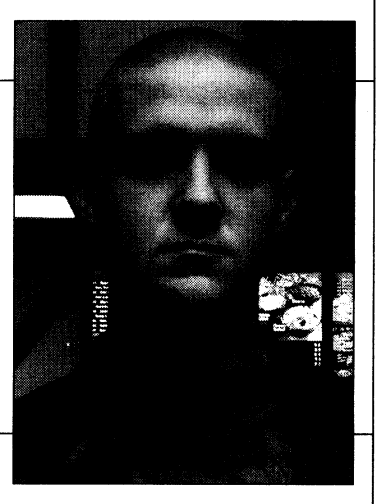


What would you do with the money if you won the lottery?

Cpl. Matthew Bohling, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I'd probably buy a cabin on Big Lake in Alaska and get that 458 Lott rifle I have been wanting — after I pay off all my bills. I'd put whatever's left over in stocks and bonds."



Maj. Cecilia Glover, MEDDAC — "I'd probably contribute a large portion to World Vision and my family and buy a big house in San Diego."



Sgt. 1st Class Douglas Johnson, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment— "I really don't know. I'd give some to the church, help people out; and I would retire for sure. I'd put my son through school, but I wouldn't go buy a Rolls Royce or million-dollar house."

Tammy Lozano, family member — "I would buy my mom a new house and set up a trust fund for my kids."

Chaplain (Maj.) Harry Rauch, 3rd Brigade — "I'd take what I needed and spend the rest on my family and friends."

Pvt. Brian Turner, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I would invest and travel."

Benning to host aerial robotics competition

Post selected as event site for second year

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning will host the 14th annual International Aerial Robotics Competition at the McKenna MOUT site Sunday through July 23.

This is the fourth mission, or challenge. Each "mission" challenges the competitors to tackle some of the most demanding applications of aerial robots.

Fort Benning was chosen as the site for the competition after submitting a proposal to the event's organizers and being selected over several other world-renowned scientific organizations. It will be the second year the competition has been held here.

Officials expect 10 teams from colleges, universities and institutes from the U.S. and Canada to try their hands at this year's mission. The competition is open to all members of academia.

To win the competition, participants' machines must accomplish a demanding mission, broken down into four levels, said Mike Barnes, of the Robotics Branch, Soldier Battle Lab.

In the first level, the teams' robots must fly over a distance of three kilometers, beginning at a designated starting point and ending in a hover or orbit around a designated final way point — all without human intervention. The machine must hit up to four other way points visited along its path.

During Level II, the robots must identify a target structure within McKenna, then find an entrance into the structure. The machines must use their sensors to find the open portal without human intervention.

Teams proceeding to Level III will relay reconnaissance data derived from their robots operating within the target structure back to the starting point. This mission may be accomplished by sending the robot into the target building or by deploying a sub-vehicle from the robot.

Level IV requires teams to successfully complete Levels I through III in less than 15 minutes.

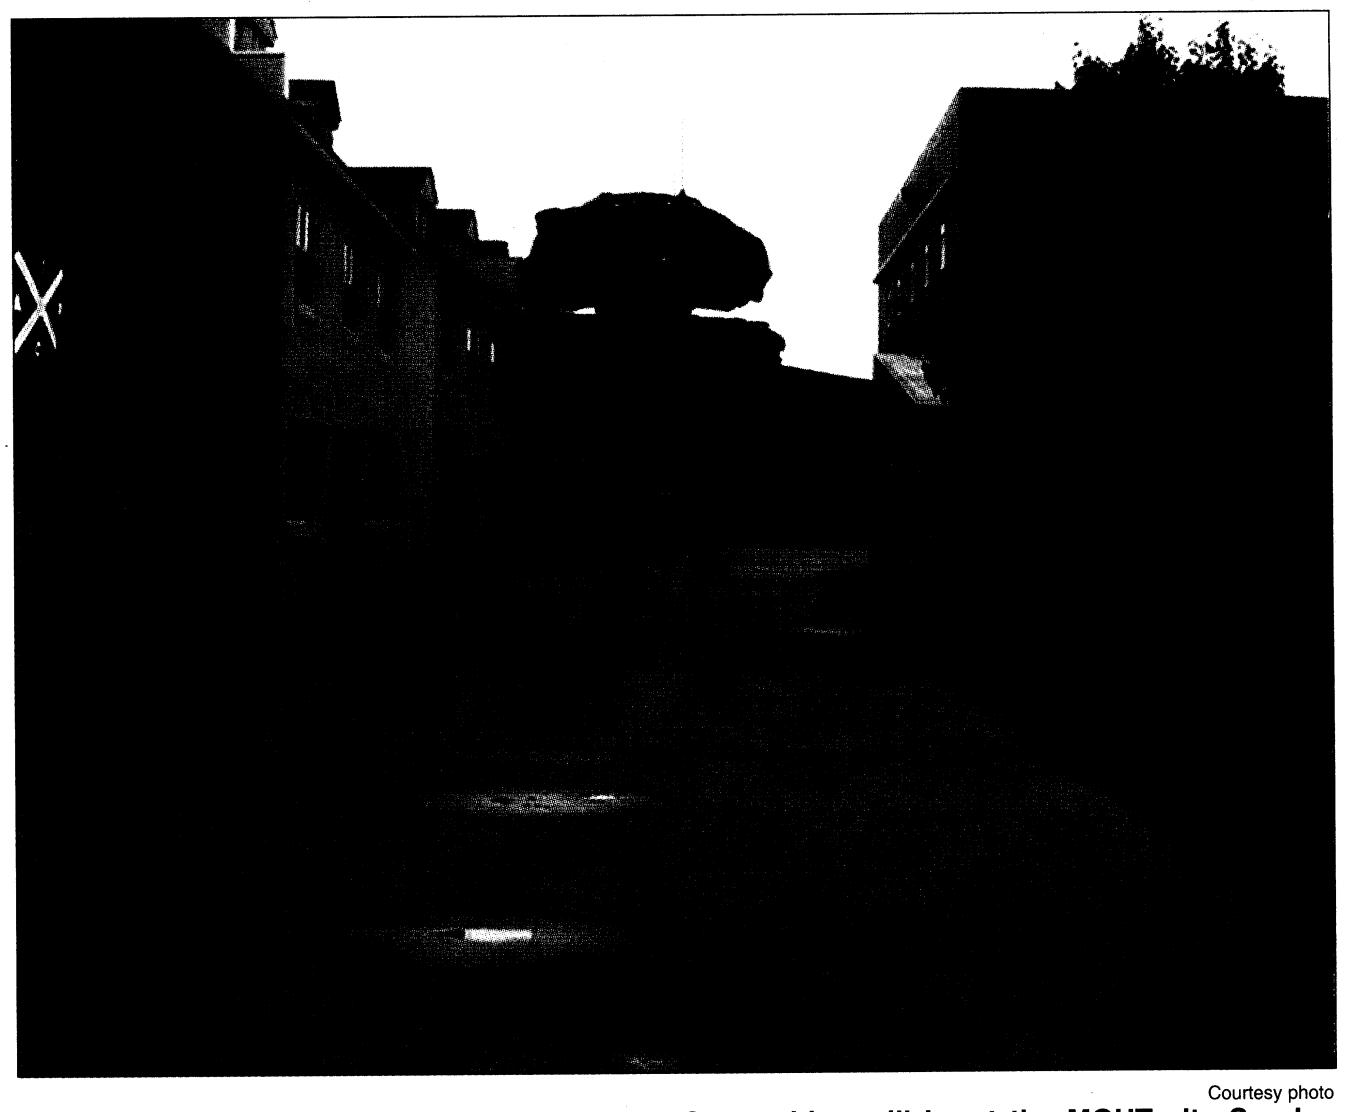
This will be the second year students have attempted to accomplish the four levels of the mission, Barnes said. But this isn't unusual.

"It normally takes about three or four years for participants to accomplish a given mission," he said. "Some teams are still attempting just to fly. One or two have been able to do that, as well as to identify the building. But no one has actually gotten in the building and conducted the reconnaissance to find a specified target."

Barnes said Fort Benning's selection as the site for the competition is fitting.

"The goals of this program mirror ... what the Army is trying to do to increase its force capability," he said. "These students are supporting the global war on terrorism by helping to identify cutting edge technology that may very well fulfill infantry requirements (in the future)."

And the relationships created with these students through the competition are equally important, he said.



"This competition helps build ties with the present and future members of industry, academic and scientific communities," he said. "The competition helps them understand the importance of what they do from a Soldier's perspective — how important it is to the evolution of the future force.

"Hosting this prestigious event also helps to establish Fort Benning, the Infantry Center and the Soldier Battle Lab as the focal point for cutting-edge robotic experimentation, demonstration and competitions."

Teams will be judged on their innovative concepts, the effectiveness of their machines, as well as the elegance of their design and craftsmanship of the air vehicle and sub-vehicle design and the safety of the design to bystanders.

Any team that accomplishes all four levels of the competition will win a jackpot. Each year of the mission, $10,000 is added to the prize, bringing this year's total to $20,000.

For more information about the competition, call Barnes at 545-5989.

Medal of Honor recipient speaks to Soldiers

Bucha is 'epitome of warrior ethos'

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Bucha recounted the story of one of his Soldiers, Pfc. Calvin Heath. Bucha told him to feign death and promised he'd return for him in the morning. Heath laid across his lieutenant so the enemy wouldn't know the leader was still alive, and in the morning, the North Vietnamese sat on them and ate breakfast.

Medal of Honor recipient Paul Bucha shared his thoughts on leadership Tuesday with Soldiers and guests gathered in Marshall Auditorium.

Bucha, a 1965 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, earned a master's in business administration from Stanford University before reporting to Fort Campbell, Ky., and departing for service in Vietnam with D Company, 3rd Battalion, 187th Infantry Regiment.

"Paul 'Bud' Bucha epitomizes what we're all about — warrior ethos and the Soldier's Creed," said Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, as he introduced Bucha and described the events of March 18, 1968, near Phuoc Vinh.

Bucha and his company were conducting a reconnaissance when they came under fire from an enemy battalion. Bucha crawled forward and destroyed the enemy bunker with grenades.

Through the night, he consolidated his company into a defensive position, directed his men to feign death, and called in close air support. Exposed to sniper fire, he used flashlights to direct the evacuation of three helicopters full of severely wounded Soldiers and led recovery efforts for the dead and wounded after daybreak — all while wounded himself.

"He exhibited the leadership traits we hold dear," Freakley said.

Bucha began his remarks by offering thanks to the Soldiers in the audience — thanks from his children, the man who sat next to him on the plane and the people of the three charitable foundations he works with — the Intrepid Air and Space Museum, the Fisher House and the Fallen Heroes Fund.

"This country owes you," he said.

Bucha said he knew he was invited to speak because of his medal, then took it from his pocket and unrolled it. He told the audience that, if he lined up all of the Medal of Honor recipients on the stage, they would look like anybody and everybody.

"They look like us," he said. "They are. They are you."

He said it was merely a confluence of time and events that earned his medal — "a time when a person finds himself in a position to say, 'No — I refuse to accept that which destiny has in store for me, and then do something about it.'"

Before the medal, Bucha said, there was no distinction between him and any of the other Medal of Honor recipients, just that which was within them.

"Within each of us resides the potential to change the world," he said.

He said his personal hero is Rosa Parks, who had the guts to say no as she sat in row nine of the bus.

"The world has changed since then," he said. "She reached for her potential. The mistake is that it takes a medal to respect it."

Bucha offered five elements he said are the fundamentals of leadership — absolute integrity, confidence, competence, compassion and awe.

Absolute integrity

"It's no accident that military schools have honor codes," Bucha said.

"An essential element for leadership is trust. Without trust no one follows, and without followers, there is nothing to lead."

He cautioned the Soldiers that which is legal is not always right and challenged them to aspire to what is right.

Confidence

No leader, Bucha said, wins by himself. Sometimes he has to say "put it on my shoulders."

Whether the Global Positioning System or calculator is working or not, leaders need to have the confidence that they are right, that they are at the place on the map where they think they are.

Later in the program, Bucha said he told his Soldiers to trust in him and he would bring them home.

"I went to Vietnam not to liberate a country, but because I thought 164 kids had a better chance at coming home if I was their company commander."

Competence

About competence, Bucha said schooling is important.

Leaders need to know "everything they can about everything they can," from their organic equipment to equipment they might someday touch.

"Know it. Study it," he said. "That takes work, but when you're competent, you have the luxury of the fourth element — compassion."

Compassion

Bucha said every life lost in combat is cause for tears. Out of compassion, comes teamwork, and out of teamwork, a unit.

Compassion, he said, means being available to listen to the shortcomings of others and not weeding out people when they crack.

The night of March 18, 1968, Bucha remembered thinking that the place he was in — a place with no name, just coordinates — was a "hell of a place to die." He was beginning to crack. Then his radio telephone operator told him the unit was kicking the hell out of the enemy, and the "crack" disappeared.

He told the Soldiers he had his low moment and they will have theirs.

Awe

The last element, awe, Bucha said, is more appropriate to the audience than any other group.

"There will soon be people whose lives will be entrusted to your competence and your hands," he said. "You are responsible for someone who others feel is the most important person on earth.

"Once they're yours, they're yours for life."

He recounted the story of one of his Soldiers, Pfc. Calvin Heath. Bucha told him to feign death and promised he'd return for him in the morning. Heath laid across his lieutenant so the enemy wouldn't know the leader was still alive, and in the morning, the North Vietnamese sat on them and ate breakfast.

Later, Heath went AWOL, and his actions that night went unrecognized.

Heath came to Bucha 30 years later asking for help. Bucha said he took care of Heath then, and Heath received the Silver Star he deserved, the Purple Heart and his veterans benefits.

"He was mine in the beginning," Bucha said, "and mine today."

But Bucha said not a day goes by that he doesn't question what happened those few days in Vietnam when his company of 164 became 89. Sixty-four of those 89 were wounded, and he lost 10.

"I have 10 names on the wall," he said. "I question my decisions. Could I have done something better?"

Bucha fielded questions from the audience about training and motivating Soldiers and developing subordinate leaders, telling both serious and humorous stories.

He learned appearance had a lot to do with leadership when he signed in to Fort Campbell with his uniform wrong. His battalion commander asked him "what" he was and sent him outside to stand by a tree all day, saluting everyone who walked by.

"I was the silly guy in low quarters with his rank and branch on the wrong collars," he said.

He reminded the Soldiers that being a leader is a 24-hour-a-day job.

"Take the time to do even the smallest things right," he said. "Know what you do and be careful doing it, and be willing to do it yourself."

Bucha said he speaks to a variety of groups during the course of a year, but the most meaningful are Soldiers like the ones in the audience Tuesday.

"They're the kids who will (deploy) or who have done it," he said. "I see in them what I saw in my guys."

Hawaii gets approval for Stryker

Vehicle key to 25th ID SBCT transformation

Staff Sgt. Bradley Rhen
Army News Service

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS, Hawaii — U.S. Army Pacific officially approved a Stryker Brigade Combat Team for Hawaii.

When it returns from its current deployment in Iraq, the 2nd Brigade Combat Team of the 25th Infantry Division (Light) will begin the transformation into an SBCT.

"We owe (Soldiers) the best possible training, the best possible equipment and the best possible technology not only to do their jobs for their country, but to protect their lives, and the Stryker Brigade does exactly that," said Lt. Gen. James Campbell, commander of U.S. Army Pacific. Hawaii's SBCT will be the fifth of six planned SBCTs.

The first two are based at Fort Lewis, Wash., and there will be one each in Louisiana, Alaska and Pennsylvania. Only one is currently operational — 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, based at Fort Lewis — and it is currently deployed to Iraq.

The Army's second SBCT — 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division — recently underwent its operational capabilities evaluation. It is expected to be certified by the Department of Defense as operationally ready sometime this summer, and will eventually replace 3rd Bde., 2nd Inf. Div., in Iraq, officials said.

Why a Stryker

When Iraq invaded Kuwait in 1990, the U.S. and coalition partners responded by sending thousands of troops to the region.

However, many units sent to the region were heavy armored units based on Cold War strategy and took weeks, if not months, to get to the Middle East.

As one of his first actions after taking office in 1999, former Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki announced that the Army would transform so that would never happen again.

Based around the 19-ton, eight-wheeled Stryker vehicle, SBCTs are designed to bridge the gap between the Army's heavy and light units.

The Stryker can be deployed by C-130, C-17 or C-5 aircraft, and be combat capable upon arrival in any contingency area.

Lt. Col. Gerald Schmitz, 25th Inf. Div. deputy chief of staff for transformation, said the SBCTs are designed to give the Army a capability it doesn't currently have.

"It's a force that's more rapidly deployable, more tactically mobile, more tactically lethal and has significantly increased visibility of what's going on on the battlefield," he said.

Before this transformation process, the Army was based on the World War II model, with heavy divisions and light divisions, Schmitz said.

"We needed something that was a little more strategic and mobile," he said.

The vehicles have robust armor protection, can reach speeds in excess of 60 miles per hour, have common parts and self-recovery capabilities, and also have a central tire inflation system, which means the tires can be shot out and the vehicle can still run on them.

SBCTs have about 3,600 personnel and include three infantry battalions, a cavalry squadron, an artillery battalion, a support battalion, a military intelligence company, an engineer company, a signal company and an anti-tank company.

The Stryker vehicle has 10 variants including the Infantry Carrier Vehicle, Mobile Gun System, Anti-tank Guided Missile Vehicle, Reconnaissance Vehicle, Fire Support Vehicle, Engineer Squad Vehicle, Mortar Carrier Vehicle, Commander's Vehicle, Medical Evacuation Vehicle, and an NBC Reconnaissance Vehicle.

Impact on Hawaii

The Hawaii SBCT will have a significant impact on both Oahu and the Big Island, bringing about 800 additional Soldiers and about 300 more tactical vehicles to the state.

There are 28 construction projects tied to the SBCT, including several range complexes at Schofield Barracks and Pohakuloa Training Area on the Big Island.

There are also plans to construct roads that link Schofield Barracks to both Helemano Military Reservation and Dillingham Military Reservation. Drum Road, which connects HMR to the Kahuku Training Area, will also be improved. On the Big Island, the road from the port at Kawaihae to PTA will be improved so vehicles that are transported to the island on ships can easily make it to PTA.

"The purpose of those road projects is to get a majority of our military traffic — tactical wheeled vehicle traffic — off the civilian highways and give us access to these training areas so we don't disrupt the traffic flow," Schmitz said.

The Army is also looking to purchase about 1,400 acres of land next to Schofield Barracks and about 23,000 acres on the west side of PTA.

As far as concerns that the SBCT will damage the environment, Schmitz said the study that was developed during the last couple years to address the SBCT coming to Hawaii has taken into consideration all the environmental impacts.

As a result, the Army has developed a number of measures that will mitigate the areas that might be impacted.

Campbell said the Army has spent more than $50 million in Hawaii in the past five years on environmental and cultural mitigation.

"In the same spirit of commitment to this environment ... we are prepared to spend up to $40 million over the next five years to mitigate any environmental impact in the fielding and training of the Stryker Brigade Combat Team," Campbell said.

Despite all the precautions, Schmitz believes there is a misunderstanding of what the Stryker actually is.

He said a lot of people have the perception that the Stryker is similar to a tank or Bradley, which are track vehicles.

"They have this image of tanks and Bradleys rolling across the open terrain and tearing up roads," Schmitz said. "In fact, really, the Stryker is a troop transport vehicle more than anything. It's another form of moving Soldiers on the battlefield, offering greater protection than what they have right now."

Schmitz believes that once people actually see a Stryker and understand its mission, they will have a different impression.

Proven in combat

Two Soldiers from the SBCT that is currently deployed to Iraq were on hand at last week's announcement. Sgt. Benjamin Herman, a team leader from C Company, 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry Regiment, and Spc. Christopher Hegyes, a scout from Troop C, 1st Squadron, 14th Cavalry Regiment, spoke with reporters to help dispel some myths and give firsthand accounts of the Stryker's performance in combat.

Herman, who was accustomed to the life of a light infantryman, said the best thing about the Stryker is the transportation it provides.

"You get to the fight fresh and ready to fight," he said. "You're not humping 25 or 30 miles and getting worn out."

Both Soldiers also touted the vehicles' ability to move to a conflict quickly, and most importantly, quietly.

They said Iraqis call them "ghost riders" and "ghost Soldiers" because they show up and deploy their Soldiers with little noise or warning.

"We would show up and kick in their door and that's when they would know we were there," Herman said.

In addition to the armor, the Strykers in Iraq have been fitted with a cage that protects it from rocket-propelled grenades.

Hegyes can attest to the protection afforded by the Strykers. His vehicle was hit by an IED, and he was the only Soldier to be injured, a wound to his leg.

Stability in a time of uncertainty

Once the 2nd SBCT returns from Iraq next year, it will move quickly into transformation, officials said.

After recovery from the current deployment, the Soldiers will go through nearly two years of training on the new equipment and tactics.

Stryker vehicles will start arriving in the summer of 2006, and the SBCT should be operational in 2007.

There are a number of options and bonuses being offered for Soldiers to re-enlist to be a part of the SBCT, Schmitz said.

One of the biggest incentives, he said, is stabilization for about two years.

While the rest of the Army will continue to deploy to support operations around the world, Soldiers of Hawaii's SBCT will be stabilized until the new unit becomes operational.

"Those Soldiers who come back will either get out of the Army, or they'll PCS to another organization," Schmitz said.

"If they PCS to another organization, say the 10th Mountain Division or the 101st Airborne Division or any one of our other Army divisions," he said, "there's no guarantee that six months later, they won't be back in theater somewhere."

Those who are part of the SBCT will be stabilized in Hawaii for about two years and most likely will not deploy anywhere other than training exercises.

Warrant officers shed 'Rising Eagle' for insignia

Change to better integrate troops into Army ranks

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

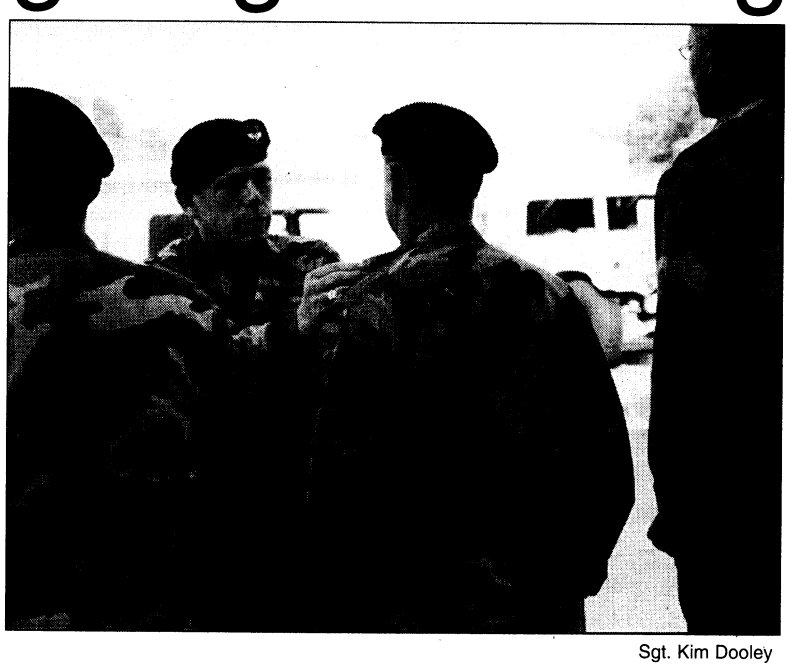
The Army's Warrant Officer Corps marked its 86th birthday with a historical step July 9, trading in the "rising eagle" insignia it has borne since 1921 for individual branch insignia.

Fort Benning's 36th Engineer Group marked the change with a ceremony Monday morning.

Col. James Brooks, group commander, pinned the new insignia on six of the unit's 13 warrant officers and "inducted" them into the Army's ordnance and quartermaster corps.

The change is necessary as the Army moves toward a modular and more joint and expeditionary design and was recommended by a warrant officer leadership study.

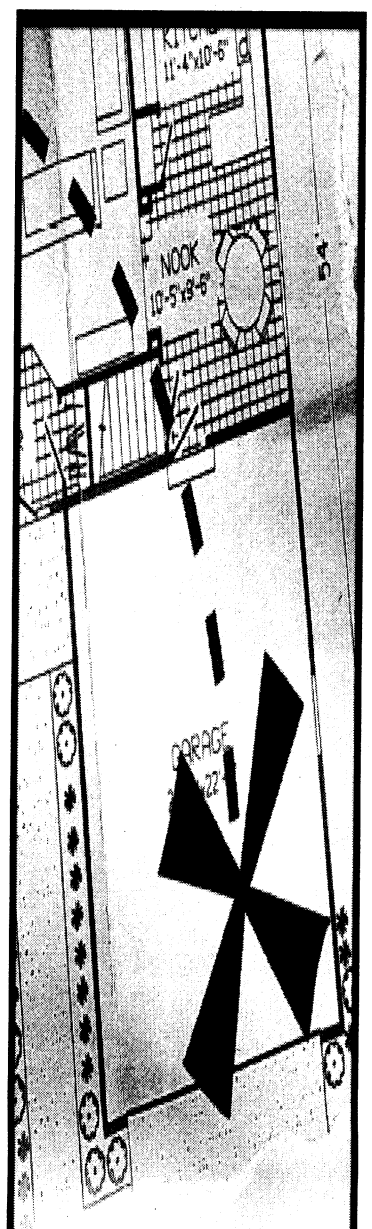
Symbolism is important — so much so that changing the insignia warrant officers wear should reflect a better integration of warrant officers into the Army, Army G1 Lt. Gen. F. L. Hagenbeck told an Army News Service reporter last week.



The old warrant officer insignia — a brass eagle standing on a bundle of arrows, enclosed in a wreath — will still be worn by warrant officer candidates and junior warrant officers who have not yet completed their branch training as a means to honor the lineage of the Warrant Officer Corps, according to personnel officials.

"The Army is transforming, and as you can see, it is transforming in everything we do," Brooks told his formation at the ceremony.

"But no matter what they wear on their collars," he continued, "we can't do without our warrant officers."



Brooks said warrant officers are the key to maintaining technical proficiency.

"There is no doubt in my mind that these gentlemen add great value ... to the combat readiness of our Army," he said.

A group of soldiers exit the NBC chamber after experiencing the effects of CS gas (tear gas) during NBC training Wednesday morning.

BCTB Soldiers get first taste of gas

Trainees learn importance of protective gear

Hundreds of Basic Combat Training Brigade Soldiers got their first taste of CS gas (tear gas) Wednesday during the second day of NBC agent training.

On the first day of training, the Soldiers learned the right way to carry, don, wear, and clear their protective masks, and what to do in chemical environments.

However, no amount of classroom training can teach the Soldiers what it is like to inhale CS gas and show them the effectiveness of the M-40 protective mask.

The troops looked a little uneasy as they lined up in front of the door, but most of them said they were looking forward to the experience.

"I'm excited because I want to see how it is, but I'm also dreading it," said Pvt. Orlando Naraine, B Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment. "I heard a lot of people throw up and others pass out."

After an initial briefing, the Soldiers approached the NBC chamber and one of the cadre simulated a chemical attack and gave the gas alarm signal which tells the Soldiers to don their protective masks.

Once they were wearing their masks, the Soldiers lined up at the chamber door and filed in. Once inside, they stood shoulder to shoulder along the walls while drill sergeants instructed them to move their heads up and down and side to side.

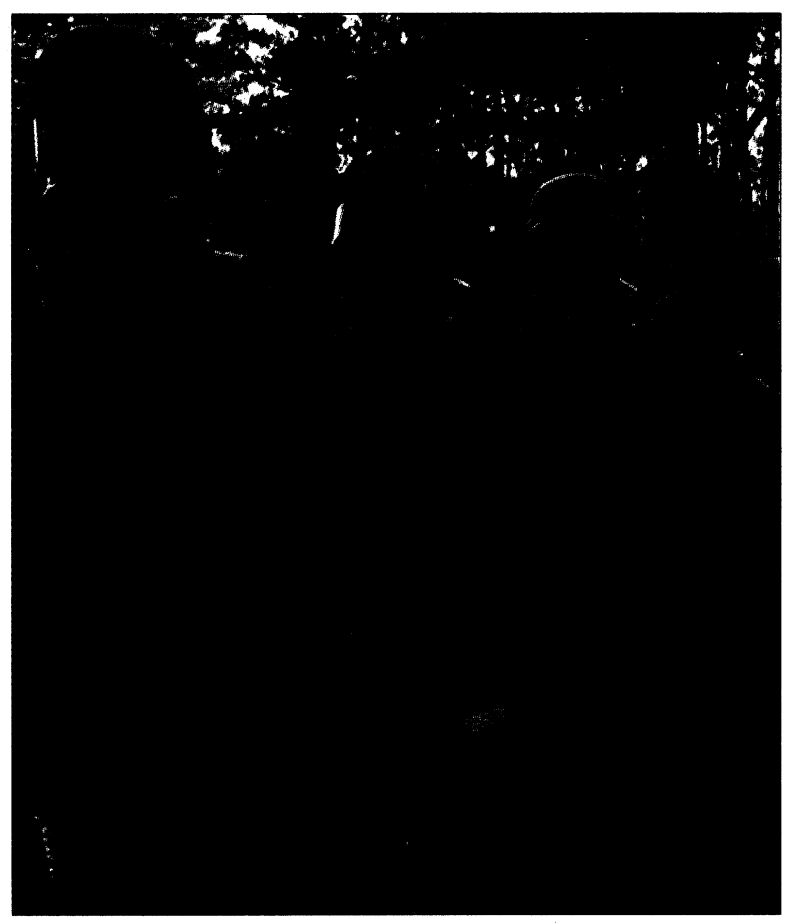
"We have them do simple exercises inside the chamber, such as turning their heads right and left, so they can see that they are still able to function with the masks on," said Staff Sgt. Eugene Broadus, a drill sergeant with 3rd Platoon. "If a Soldier is not confident in his equipment, he is not going to be effective on the battlefield."

Once the Soldiers started to get comfortable with their masks, the drill sergeants told them to pull the masks away from their faces to break the seal.

After breaking the seal, each Soldier had to reseal his mask and clear it to get the CS out.

Then, after all the Soldiers had cleared their masks, they lined up facing the door and removed their masks before they could leave.

Broadus said they make the Soldiers take off their protective masks before leaving the chamber so they can see what they were missing with the masks on.



Pvt. Timothy Prevo said the gas wasn't as bad as he thought it would be, but he wasn't ready to run right back in.

"I thought I might throw up or choke on (the gas) but I didn't," Prevo said. "My skin was burning but that wasn't that bad.

"What got me was the burning in my eyes. That was a real shock," he said.

Capt. Patrick McCarthy, B Company commander, knows the importance of this training for new Soldiers in today's battlefield environment.

"The probability that terrorists will use biological and chemical weapons is high," he said. "This stresses the importance that Soldiers are trained in chemical defense and, more importantly, it builds confidence in their equipment."

Pvt. Jason McCord takes in some fresh air after getting acquainted with the effects of CS gas.

Soldiers from B Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, wait their turn to enter the chamber.

Fire in the hole!

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers of the 789th Explosive Ordnance Disposal Detachment, on the job in Iraq. The unit deployed from April to September and is on orders to deploy again in the spring.

"This is the safest job in the Army," insisted Sgt. Jason Wojnar, or "Wojo the Great," as he is known to his teammates. "You know exactly what you have to do, and you know exactly how the ordnance functions. There aren't any questions. You know if you do it right, everything will be fine. And you know if you do it wrong, well …"

Well, then it will be a different story — and not one with a happy ending. In fact, in Wojnar's field, mistakes can be explosive … literally.

Wojnar is one of 19 Soldiers in Fort Benning's 789th Explosive Ordnance Disposal Detachment and one of only 700 enlisted EOD troops Armywide, a number that is only getting smaller, if you ask 1st Sgt. Larry Cushing, the unit's first sergeant.

Split up into about 41 "conventional EOD companies" — 37 stateside and four overseas units — EOD Soldiers do a lot with a little wherever they go.

"We eliminate possible (unexploded ordnance) hazards that could affect troops, so they can stay focused on their mission," said 789th team leader Staff Sgt. Richard Lundmark, summing up the EOD mission. "We protect public safety and Soldiers, and we save lives and property."

What the former infantryman fails to mention, is that in order to do this, EOD troops work grueling hours, investigating possible explosive hazards, determining the method of disposal for valid devices, disarming or detonating devices, all while maintaining the safety of anyone in their working area.

And that isn't just when they're deployed. Even when they're "resting and recouping" at their home stations, EOD units are responsible for a designated "geographic response area," Cushing said. And with the current optempo, EOD companies often find themselves covering each other's areas while their sister units are deployed.

Right now, the 789th is responsible for supporting military and civilian agencies in 56 counties across Georgia, Alabama and the Florida panhandle. The company's Soldiers are spread across the region.

That is nothing new, Cushing said. In fact, it's rather unusual for the first sergeant to have all his Soldiers together — even on deployment.

"We don't sit around together back at base camp," Cushing said. "We're fragmented out — I'm at one location, and the teams are located elsewhere out there, operating independently, working on their own in support of that specific command."

During the 789th's recent deployment to Iraq, from September to April, Cushing dispatched two-man teams to support designated units for the duration of the deployment. Once his teams left to cover those units, he only saw them during frequent visits to the field with his commander.

Each team consists of a staff sergeant and a junior Soldier who support an entire brigade. Because of the shortage of EOD personnel, the teams spent seven months on a three days on, three days "off" schedule, Cushing said — that's three days responding to possible improvised explosive devices (IEDs are considered the most strenuous calls) and three days responding to unexploded ordnance, or UXO, a less threatening task.

"There was no day of those seven months when these guys could say they didn't have anything to do," Cushing said.

Staff Sgt. Melissa Kennedy and Spc. Josh Deverse covered 1st Brigade, 101st Airborne Division, for the first three months, switched over to the division's 2nd Brigade in the "green zone," then moved to support the 82nd Airborne Division in Fallujah, Iraq, after an EOD Soldier from a sister unit was killed.

Kennedy said she worked, on average, 12- to 16-hour days. And even when she wasn't on mission, she was on call for IED reports 24 hours a day.

Her fellow Soldiers shared similar schedules.

The Soldiers of the 789th performed 2,469 successful missions during their tenure in Iraq. They stopped counting a month before coming home, Cushing said.

All this, he said, and he was the unit's only injury. The 16-year EOD veteran took a 13-foot nose dive off the top of a CONEX, but aside from a gash on his forehead and some injured pride, he fared just fine.

Despite the success of the unit, it comes at a price, a price the Soldiers pay.

"For a full seven months, you're tense, you're on edge — you sleep but you don't rest," Kennedy said.

As if the pressure of dealing with a potentially fatal device isn't enough, the EOD teams must contend with other stressors, as well.

While they're working, the Soldiers "getting shot at" by enemy troops and dealing with civilians and Soldiers in their operational areas — many of whom often are "naive or just won't listen," ignoring the EOD Soldiers' instructions and requests, Lundmark said.

The stress and lack of rest can take a toll on the troops, Kennedy said, and that physical and mental exhaustion adds to the danger an EOD Soldier faces on a mission.

"That's why an EOD unit can't stay (deployed) for longer than seven months," she said.

But even while they confess the tough aspects of their chosen profession, the Soldiers of the 789th laugh and joke and light up as they share some of the highlights of their deployment.

"I was blowing up 3,000 pounds of 122 millimeter rockets on Christmas Eve," said Staff Sgt. Brad Borgelt, grinning. "In what other job can you do that?"

The troops also get the opportunity to rub shoulders with "VIPs," both overseas and at home, providing EOD support for high-ranking officials, like the president and the vice president. Sometimes it's just another last-minute mission ("Four days is really good notice," Kennedy said.), and sometimes it's an exciting opportunity.

Cushing escorted President George W. Bush during one of his visits to Iraq, and a team was sent to support President Ronald Reagan's funeral.

Whatever their mission, EOD Soldiers deal in a dangerous profession.

Despite that, Kennedy quickly dismissed the question of fear.

"You just don't think about it. Period," she said firmly.

Lundmark agreed.

"You respect it, but you don't fear it," he said. "You just get to the point where you get confident in what you're doing."

NCO finds love, bride on Sand Hill

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

There was no fanfare or excess. No flower girls or ushers. No huge reception and no church.

Just a man, a woman, a battalion chaplain and love, sweet love.

When Sgt. 1st Class Jim Warren took Anna Marie Stanger's hand in marriage July 9, all that mattered were the vows and the fact they solidified their commitment only feet from the very place they met.

Oddly enough, that place was outside Albanese Barracks on Sand Hill.

Even odder than the location of their wedding are the circumstances of the couple's introduction.

Warren, a Reserve Soldier with the 84th Infantry Division in Michigan, was activated in February 2003, and was working as the training NCO for D Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, when a basic training Soldier by the name of Corey Stanger needed help getting his mom from Kansas to Fort Benning for a family day visit in October.

Warren offered his assistance, and when Stanger produced his mother's business card, which bore a picture of the free-lance model, he said, "Wow, she's right up my alley. If she lived around here, I'd date her."

Warren helped with the travel arrangements, including loaning Anna his car, and the rest was history, the two said.

"We had our first date on my second trip to Fort Benning and decided to stay in touch," Anna said.

After several visits here and in Kansas, Warren proposed to Anna March 12.

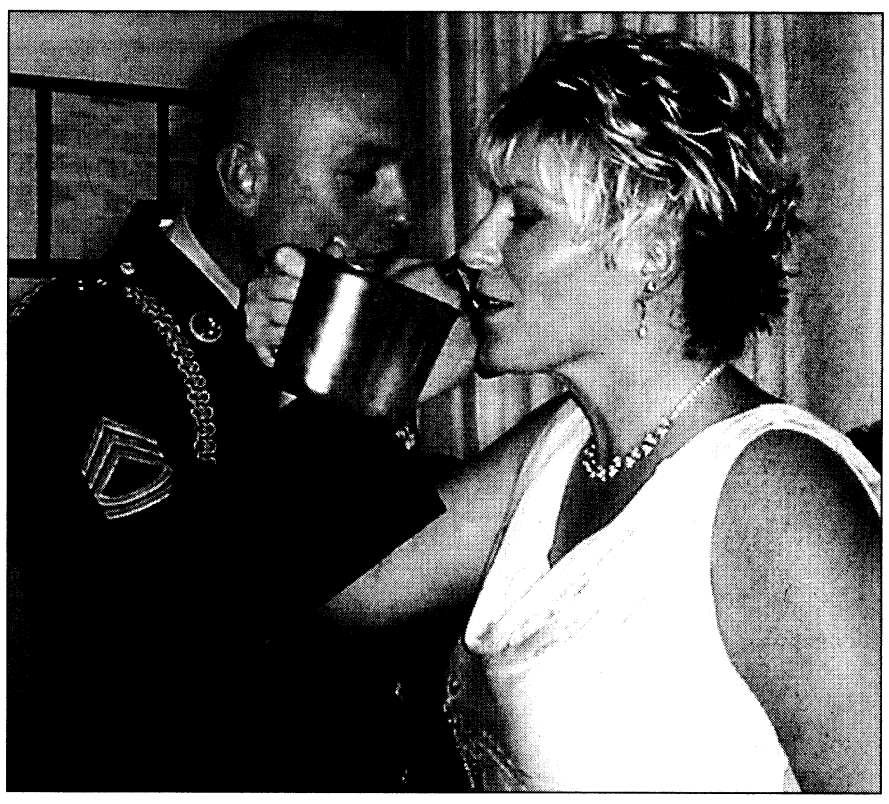
By the time the couple got around to arranging the details, all the churches on post were booked.

Anna said even though she would have been happy to have the ceremony just about anywhere, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., holds a special place in her heart. The cadre's help during Corey's time in the unit and their friendship with Warren endeared them to her.

"The military has always been such a big part of (Warren's) life and who he is," Anna said. "I thought it would only be fitting, guests or not, to get married right there at the barracks."

"We just had a little ceremony with the cadre and families I got to know during my year working there and followed it up with a small reception in the dayroom," Warren said.

"The air conditioning was on in the dayroom, and that was all I cared about," Anna said, laughing.



"Everything was last minute with this wedding," she said. "Nothing was finalized until the week of the ceremony, and even the toast was unplanned."

The two spontaneously decided to use canteen cups for their couple's toast — another symbol of the role of the military in their relationship, Anna said.

The hastily arranged wedding had its glitches. The musical scores started at all the wrong times. Only two of the seven children Anna and Warren have between them could attend. And because Warren, who deactivated in February, recently started a new job, the couple didn't have a long Hawaiian honeymoon awaiting them after their impromptu nuptials.

Despite all that, the couple is happy and has no regrets about their decision to drive on with the ceremony.

"With all the difficulties, all the stress and anxiety with everything that is going on with the war, this is a nice story to be a part of," Anna said.

Fort Benning bids farewell to 2145th GSU

Unit mobilized more than 10,000 troops

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning bid farewell to the 2145th Garrison Support Unit July 7 in a ceremony in Marshall Auditorium. The 2145th GSU provided support for deploying units on post since Jan. 21, 2003.

During the past 18 months, the unit, headquartered in Nashville, Tenn., mobilized more than 10,000 Soldiers and demobilized more than 3,000.

Garrison Commander Col. Rick Riera led the ceremony.

"I bet you guys didn't think this moment would ever come," Riera said. "But this is a bittersweet moment, because when I got here, you were here, in the fray, preparing Soldiers to go fight."

Approximately 250 Soldiers left Fort Benning Tuesday with the thanks of the installation's many agencies.

"You came through when Fort Benning needed you," Riera said. "The strength of your unit is the people with exceptional talent who are dedicated and hard working."

Riera said the unit earned recognition for the post as the best in both mobilization and demobilization, moving more Soldiers with less overhead.

"You are quality people and did the best with what you had," Riera said. "And since we are a nation at war, I fully expect to see the 2145th at Fort Benning, coming back home to once again train Soldiers to deploy and do our nation's bidding."

Col. Daniel Schultz, 2145th GSU commander, said the unit considers itself part of Fort Benning because their mission is to support the post and function as a troop command. As long as the unit remains organized as a GSU, he said, it will continue to support in whatever way it can.

"It's been a long eighteen months," Schultz said. "But through hard work and cooperation, it's been successful."

Units that mobilized through the 2145th spent 30 or more days at Fort Benning and completing all of the training requirements.

Schultz said morale in his unit was high, as they were close to home and able to easily stay in touch with their families.

Their biggest challenge, he said, was making the transition from a civilian to a military mentality and helping the units who processed through here make the transition to active duty as well.

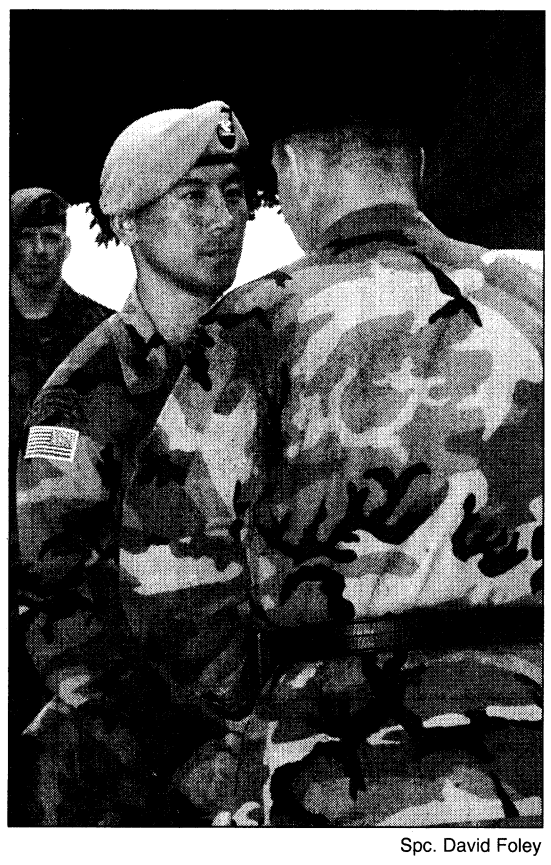
The Soldiers will now make the transition back to their civilian careers, Schultz said.

"We're in the Reserves because we like the climate and the environment of the military," he said. "Going back to the civilian side — you miss that."

The 2145th took the opportunity to show their thanks to the Fort Benning agencies that worked closely with them, presenting plaques and certificates. At the end of the ceremony, Maj. Kenneth Carter, the 2145th personnel officer, expressed his thanks to the members of his unit for their job well-done.

"We may not have deployed outside the country," Carter said. "But we came under fire every day."

The 641st Area Support Group from St. Petersburg, Fla., took over from the 2145th and expect to be at Fort Benning for a year.



The unit has 31 Soldiers and will provide command and control for the mob/demob effort.

Many jobs done by 2145th Soldiers have been turned over to post agencies.

RTB changes command

Rangers welcome new commander

Spc. David Foley

Col. William G. Kidd, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, bid farewell to Fort Benning Tuesday during a ceremony at the Ranger Memorial, as he handed over the reins to Col. K.K. Chinn.

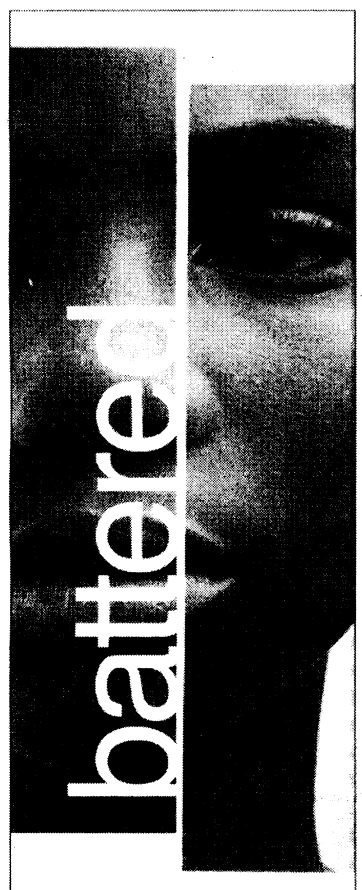
"I am the luckiest man at Fort Benning," Kidd said. "Lucky to have been in an environment with such great leadership ... Lucky to have been in the company of these great Rangers ... and lucky to live in a country that has such great men defending her."

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commander, said Kidd is everything one could want in a leader, and "hats off to the Ranger Training Brigade for what you've done and what you represent."

Freakley said Kidd will be missed, but the RTB will be in good hands with Chinn, a proven combat leader who knows what it takes to train rangers who can lead in combat.

1st Sgt. David Kachel, RTB Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, knew Chinn when he was assigned to 4th Ranger Training Battalion from 1999 to 2001, and said he is going to be an outstanding commander.

"He has a huge experience base and will be a tremendous asset," Kachel said.

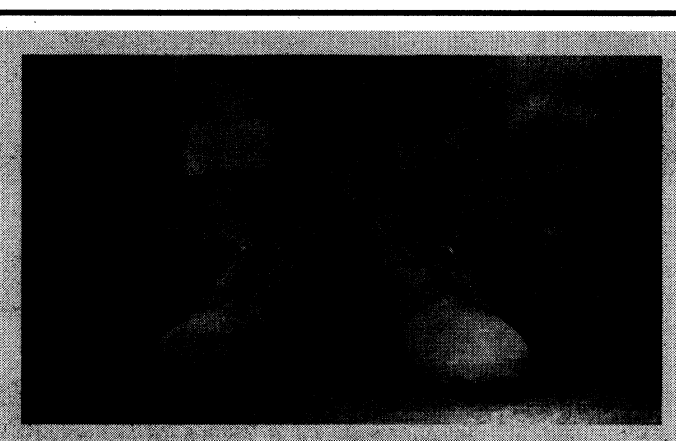


Chinn said it is a great honor to be given the opportunity to lead the RTB, but it comes with great responsibility.

Chinn, whose last assignment was as the deputy commanding officer of the 75th Ranger Regiment, is returning to Camp Rogers with his wife, Val, and two children.

He is a graduate of West Point, the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses Command and General Staff College and the Army War College.

He is also a graduate of the Airborne School, Jumpmaster School, Infantry Mortar Platoon Course, Air Assault School, and the Jungle Warfare Training Course.



Chinn deployed in support of Operation Urgent Fury, Operation Just Cause, Operation Iraqi Freedom, and Operation Enduring Freedom.

507th welcomes new leader

Lt. Col. Sean McCaffrey salutes the reviewing party after assuming command of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, Tuesday.

Command of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, passed from Lt. Col. Aidis Zunde to Lt. Col. Sean McCaffrey Wednesday.

Three jumpers from the Silver Wings parachute team led the ceremony, landing on target in front of the reviewing stand.

"This is a great day to celebrate the accomplishments of a great battalion while standing on the hallowed grounds of Airborne Walk," said Col. Mark Ritter, commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment.

Ritter said the Soldiers on the field represent all those throughout Zunde's command who trained more than 32,000 paratroopers, jumpmasters and pathfinders and the riggers who packed more than 160,000 parachutes.

"They did this all safely," Ritter said. "While producing flat-bellied, steely-eyed Soldiers our nation needs."

He said the simple but powerful change of command ceremony served as a reminder to both officers that command is a privilege to be cherished.

Ritter praised Zunde as a commander of leaders who led from the front, a man who took the battalion back to Normandy for the first time in 60 years, re-instituted the Silver Wings and injected rigor back into airborne training.

"The effect of his efforts will be felt by all of the armed forces," Ritter said, "long after he leaves for his new job in Washington, D.C."

Zunde said his change of command marked "another great day to be a paratrooper" as he spoke about Eubanks Field and the Airborne Walk with its aircraft, memorials and monuments to past and present airborne units.

"They tie us to our heritage," Zunde said. "They're a legacy of courage, sacrifice and great deeds of honor of those before us."

Zunde thanked the staunch supporters of the airborne community — the veterans and members of the test platoon.

"They have been our inspiration and our conscience," he said. "We strive every day not to disappoint them. They are true heroes."

Zunde said his team trains a division worth of paratroopers each year, in a tough "zero-defect environment."

"Each time they exit, they affirm their faith in the riggers, the black hats and the jumpmasters," he said.

The unit, he said, is fortunate to have McCaffrey on board to take the battalion and its colors to new heights.

"It has been a privilege and honor to lead this battalion and stand with its Soldiers," Zunde said.

McCaffrey, who last stood on Eubanks Field 20 years ago as an airborne student and a third generation paratrooper, said he is humbled and pleased to take command of the battalion.

"I will work to prepare the greatest paratroopers, jumpmasters and pathfinders. Our country surely needs these Soldiers now," he said.

Venues: In Columbus area remain off-limits to troops

Sgt. Kim Dooley

The Traffic Light Inn is one of eight local venues Post Commander Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley ruled off-limits recently, per recommendation by the regional Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board.

• Ponderosa Motel, 3668 Victory Drive

• G&C Boom Boom Room, 2102 Cussetta Road.

Three of the eight establishments are temporarily off-limits, said Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, Fort Benning's provost marshal and president of the region's Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board.

These businesses have been placed off-limits in response to reports of criminal activity in and around them, including drug trafficking, prostitution or violence, he said.

The Soldiers caught at these establishments during the weekend were apprehended by a joint patrol of military and Columbus policemen, Pelley said.

Those patrols will continue and will be expanded in the future, he said, to occur at random hours throughout the week.

Soldiers picked up at these establishments will be searched, cuffed, taken to Fort Benning's MP station for processing and held until they are picked up by their first sergeants or commanders, Pelley said.

Their names will also appear in the blotter report, which goes to the garrison commander, the deputy chief of staff and the commanding general.

The standard response among the Soldiers rounded up this weekend was, "I didn't know," Pelley said.

"Commanders absolutely have to get the word out to their Soldiers," he said. "It's very important to ensure the Soldiers are informed and understand the importance of avoiding these establishments.

"This isn't to punish Soldiers; it's to protect them."

gratifying than being around infantry Soldiers," Yarbrough said.

Yarbrough won't be formally welcomed as Deputy CG and Assistant Commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School until 4 p.m. today, but he's been running at full steam since his boots hit the ground at Fort Benning July 6. He has spent most of his time meeting with commanders and post officials, learning the role each plays in the big picture.

He said he is chomping at the bit to jump right in and support the team effort.

"I've had great discussions with the CG, commanders and staff during the few days I've been on Fort Benning," he said. "And the CG has given me an azimuth."

Yarbrough said he hit the ground running to support the CG's top priorities of training to standard and supporting the Army's transformation.

Yarbrough brings with him experience from both combat and garrison environments, including a recent deployment to Afghanistan.

"The most valuable attribute any senior leader can bring back to Fort Benning is the recent experience of being assigned to field units," he said.

"The infantry and the Army are both going through incredible transitions to adapt to what the country expects of them in the future."

Yarbrough said Fort Benning is clearly the most exciting place to work in the Army right now because of the critical importance of ensuring we continue to provide the world's best infantry Soldiers and leaders to do our nation's work.

Although Yarbrough is focused on the future of the Army, the past is not lost with him.

"The tradition of excellence at Fort Benning has existed for decades," he said. "It has been providing the best Soldiers and leaders in the world.

"Just like the sign out front says, 'It all starts here.'"

FRG: Assistants to aid unit readiness group leaders

That information is firepower for beleaguered FRG leaders, who often haven't been on post long enough to develop a network of contacts and can't always be everywhere all the time, Livermore said.

And it isn't only the families that benefit from effective FRGs, Livermore said.

"If the Soldiers are happy, they are going to support the unit a lot more," she said.

Even though the two assistants are assigned to specific units, Livermore said she doesn't want other FRGs or units to feel as if the FRG assistants are unavailable to help with problems.

"Anyone who has questions or needs help can call me," she said. "I am always available to help."

FRG assistants will coordinate with rear detachments and civilian enterprises that have services available to military families and will coordinate formal training for volunteers and command personnel.develop a network of contacts and can't always be everywhere all the time, Livermore said.

Book fund to reach Columbus kids

Parents honor fallen son by continuing dream

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Five months ago, retired Marine Sgt. Maj. David Tainsh and his wife Deborah's worst fears were realized. David's son, Sgt. Patrick Tainsh, was killed in Iraq Feb. 11 when a homemade bomb detonated near his patrol. He was 33.

Determined to keep Patrick's dreams and passion alive in the wake of his death, his parents founded the Sgt. Patrick Tainsh Memorial Books for Children Fund in his name. The goal is to help promote early childhood literacy in Muscogee County by providing books monthly to children up to 5 years old, David said.

"Patrick loved reading and children," Deborah said. "(He) died contributing to the dream of a better life for the children of Iraq."

Patrick deployed to Iraq with "Eagle Troop," 2nd Squadron, 2nd Armored Cavalry Division, from Fort Polk, La. The humvee machine gunner and scout was due to return home in just over a month when he died.

Deborah remembered an e-mail she received from her stepson before his death.

"He mentioned his disbelief at the poverty that the 'monster' Saddam had caused the children," she said.

It disturbed him to see innocent youngsters suffering, and it was that concern that inspired his parents to start the book foundation.

"We cannot think of a better way to honor Patrick's wonderful, caring spirit."

Deborah Tainsh
stepmother of Sgt. Patrick Tainsh, killed in Iraq Feb. 11

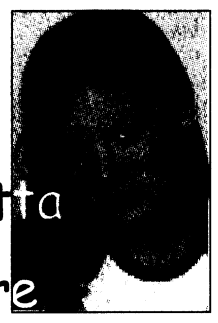
"We cannot think of a better way to honor Patrick's wonderful, caring spirit than to take steps to enhance the lives of our own community's children," Deborah said.

The foundation focuses on early childhood literacy and preparing children for kindergarten and academic success.

Statistics show that the number of words in the vocabulary and language skills developed by a child between infancy and 5 years will affect his academic and life skills for the rest of his life, Deborah explained. A child who can't read at grade level by the end of third grade will likely remain behind, and statistics show nearly 70 percent of people in jail can't read beyond a fourth-grade level.

"We want to be champions and recruit more champions in efforts to help our children before they get left behind," she said. "And local early childhood educators ... believe that getting books into children's hands on a regular basis at pre-school age is a must to begin building their curiosity and love for books."

In partnership with a program called Dolly Parton's Imagination Library, Patrick's fund will provide one book a month to local children until their fifth birthday.



Although the program is currently only available to children who reside in the 31903 zip code, David said they hope to expand the fund to reach children in other areas.

"Having a book mailed to a child's home each month will create excitement for the child and the parent," Deborah said. "And further, we believe that providing books at no cost to families will confirm to them how much their child is valued by the community."

Families can sign their children up for the program — and enjoy a children's book party — at the Benning Park Supercenter from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. July 24. They can register for free books and a library card for the Chattahoochee Valley Regional Library System, enjoy free refreshments, meet Curious George and the Red Hat Lady

The circus is coming to town, and despite a lifelong aversion to clowns, I am stoked to go see these performers in action.

I think I've been to the circus once in my entire life and was entirely too young to remember anything except the overheated tent and picking peanut shells off the bottom of my sandals. Needless to say, I don't think it was "The Greatest Show on Earth," or rather Ringling Bros. Barnum and Bailey, as I'm sure it's better known.

Bad memories aside, this year's circus — which is coming to the Columbus Civic Center Wednesday through July 25 — promises to be everything my first and last one wasn't.

After doing a little homework on the Internet, I finally got the line-up for next week's show, and I've gotta tell you — you don't want to miss it.

Crazy Wilson, a rather bold daredevil even by daredevil standards, will master the Pendulum of Pandemonium, a whirling wheel that will carry Wilson 42 feet in the air. On top of that — well, OK, not on top of the pendulum, silly — he'll hop inside a steel sphere that holds a bunch of speeding motorcycles to perform some daring (or downright crazy) feat in Motorcycle Mania.

He has another act in there, too — something about jumping from a trampoline to the high wire ... I don't know. But it sounds almost dull compared to the first two.

Then, of course, there's the Farfans, "thrilling" trapeze artists who promise to execute dual triple somersaults in the air (madness!), which has never been done at the circus before, apparently.

The China Acrobatic Troupe will thrill you and make you crane your neck to figure out how in the h-e-double-hockey-sticks they do that. Hailing from the Beijing International Arts School, the troupe is complete with 13 acrobats,

Insect mania strikes Oxbow Meadows

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Things got a little "buggy" at Oxbow Meadows Sunday afternoon during the nature discovery center's sixth annual Insectival.

Part of Oxbow's Second Sunday Series, the Insectival gave community parents, children and nature lovers alike the chance to get up close and personal with their creepy, crawly counterparts.

The event featured an array of insects and "insect relatives," like spiders, ticks and scorpions; exhibits courtesy of Auburn University students and Callaway Gardens; an informational presentation by the college's Department of Entomology and Plant Pathology professor, Dr. Wayne Clark; arts and crafts, face painting and more.

All in all, the bug bash was a fun way to educate the public, said Jill Whitling, Oxbow's public outreach coordinator.

"A lot of kids have only heard about or read about these (creatures) in books," Whitling said. "But here, they're able to see them in person and touch them. And the parents get into it when their children get excited, so we offer something for both children and adults."

And indeed, it was a fun family outing. Take, for instance, 7-year-old Cody Stafford and his dad, Russell.

Brigitte Toon paints a butterfly on 3-year-old Katherine Scifers' face at Oxbow Meadows' Insectival Sunday.

The pair perused the outdoor insect displays, pointing out bugs of interest and asking questions of the staff ... until they came to the African millipede.

Cody stood back while his father handled the long, black insect and watched fearfully as it crawled along his hand.

"You want to hold it?" Russell offered, but Cody shook his head adamantly and backed away.

But curiosity got the best of the grade schooler after a bit.

"He was scared to hold him at first — I had to talk him into it," Russell said after Cody returned the millipede to its home. "But he was brave."

The African millipede was one of many insects on display.

And it's a good thing. Aside from his own backyard, Oxbow Meadows is pretty much the only educational exposure Cody is going to get to the great outdoors in the local area.

"We're the only nature-based center in Columbus, period," Whitling said. "And pretty much the only one south of Atlanta that does public programs."

Those programs include the Second Sunday Series, which offers demonstrations, presentations and hands-on education on a variety of nature-related topics, including upcoming programs on Native American skills, falconry and fur-bearing animals.

During the Native American skills demo, primitive skills specialist Ben Kirkland will explain and demonstrate the survival techniques used by different groups of Native Americans across North America.

The falconry expo will detail the art and science behind the sport of falconry in a slide-illustrated program by local falconer Ricky Schomburg. Event-goers will be introduced to the birds, their equipment, training methods and the history behind this ancient hunting technique.

And in October, Greg Waters, a wildlife biologist with the Department of Natural Resources, will give Oxbow visitors a little insight into fur-bearers, like bobcats, coyotes, foxes, raccoons, beavers, river otters and other furry friends.

Sunday Series programs are offered on the second Sunday of each month, usually from 2 to 3 p.m. The programs are generally free or $1-2.

For more information about the series or the variety of other programs and tours Oxbow offers, call 687-4090.

ASK THE JUDGE

Capt. Claudine M. Andola
Office of Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am an active-duty Soldier residing on post. During a recent thunderstorm, the electric power was fluctuating on and off, which caused damage to my television, DVD, VCR and computer. The wind was blowing really hard and blew a tree onto my car . Is there any way I can be reimbursed for the cost of repair to my television, DVD, VCR, computer and car? Can I file a claim?

A: According to Army Regulation 27-20, Chapter 11, damage to, or loss of property by fire, flood, hurricane, or other unusual occurrence, or by theft or vandalism may be considered when it occurs at your quarters.

Department of the Army Pamphlet 27-162, paragraph 11-5c(3)(a) states that storms, power surges and power outages are not unusual occurrences, and damage caused by such incidents is usually not compensable.

However, claims that electrical or electronic devises were damaged by a power surge may be paid when lightning has actually struck the claimant's residence or objects outside it, such as a transformer box, or when power company records or similar evidence show that a particular residence or group of residences were subjected to an unusually intense power surge.

It is virtually impossible to distinguish damage caused by a mechanical defect from damage caused by a power surge merely by inspecting the item.

Therefore, a repair firm's statement or a claimant's honest belief that the loss occurred as a result of a power surge during a storm may not be sufficient to show what caused the damage.

Moreover, in areas such as Columbus, subject to frequent thunderstorm or power fluctuations, claimants are expected to use a surge suppressor to protect delicate items, such as computers, VCR, DVD players and televisions.

While falling trees limbs are not an unusual occurrence, it is unusual for a large, healthy tree or a significant portion of one, to fall. If a tree limb should fall onto your car or any other personal property at your residence, take a picture of the tree on your item and call the military police to file a report of the incident.

You may come in to the Claims Office and obtain the requisite forms to file a claim for your damaged items.

For answers to similar questions, call the Claims Division at 545-2285 or refer to our Web site at http://www-benning.army.mil/SJA.

New state laws require child booster seats

Children younger than 6 must be in booster seat

Carol Ball
Children's Healthcare of Atlanta and SAFE KIDS of Georgia

Effective July 1, Georgia parents are required by law to take an extra step to ensure the safety of their children.

The new law requires children younger than 6 to be restrained in a car seat or booster seat when in a motor vehicle.

The seat should be appropriate for their weight and height and used according to the manufacturer's instruction.

The law was signed by Gov. Sonny Perdue in May.

Children should graduate from a standard car seat to a belt-positioning booster seat when they weigh more than 40 pounds or are more than 40 inches tall. Booster seats can be affordably purchased at many discount retail stores.

Booster seats can reduce a child's risk of serious injury or death from motor vehicle crashes by 59 percent. In fact, children who only use seat belts are four times more likely to suffer serious head and brain injuries than those who use belt-positioning booster seats.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, only 10 to 20 percent of children who should use a booster seat actually do, accounting for a large number of preventable injuries and deaths.;

Vehicle safety does not end when the booster seat is removed. Children of any age should always be properly restrained.

More than 60 percent of children killed in motor vehicle crashes are completely unrestrained.

Children do not fit an adult lap and shoulder belt until they are about 4 feet 9 inches tall. Your child is ready for a safety belt when:

- He is tall enough to sit without slouching and can keep his back against the vehicle seat with his knees completely bent over the seat edge
- His feet rest flat on the floor
- The lap belt is low and snug across his upper thighs and the shoulder belt crosses the center of his chest and collar bone.

Childrens Healthcare of Atlanta and SAFE KIDS also recommend that parents frequently double-check that all restraint devices are installed and used correctly.

According to a survey by Children's, 96 percent of parents believe their child safety and booster seats are installed properly. However, nearly 82 percent are not.

Always refer to the car seat and booster seat instructions and the vehicle owner's manual for correct use and installation information.

CLOSER LOOK

The new law, which went into effect July 1, requires extra safety measures to protect children in motor vehicles. To keep child passengers safe:

- Children younger than 6 must be restrained in a car seat or booster seat when in a motor vehicle.
- Children should not graduate from a standard car seat to a belt-positioning seat until they weigh more than 40 pounds or are more than 40 inches tall.
- Children should not graduate to an adult lap and shoulder belt until they are about 4 feet 9 inches tall.
- Your child is not ready for a safety belt until the is tall enough to sit without slouching and can keep his back against the vehicle seat with his knees completely bent over the seat edge; his feet rest flat on the floor; and the lap belt is low and snug across his upper thighs and the shoulder belt crosses the center of his chest and collar bone.

A parent whose child rejects booster seats should set an example by buckling up. Children are less likely to resist using safety precautions if their parents use them.

For more information about child passenger safety and the new law, call Children's Healthcare of Atlanta at (404) 250-KIDS or visit www.choa.org or www.safekids.org.

Protect pets from dog days of summer

Dogs need adequate shelter, water

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Spc. David Foley

Protect your four-legged friends from the summer heat by ensuring they have shelter and shaded water, which should be changed regularly.

The dog days of summer are here, literally.

With temperatures constantly in the 90s and heat indices in the 100s, pet owners should take precautions to keep their pets safe.

Fort Benning regulations state that in warm weather, pets should not be left unattended in cars.

Veterinary technician Megan Tompkins, of the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic, recommends not taking pets in the car if they don't need to go with you.

"Dogs don't have glands to secrete sweat. They pant and their skin temperature goes up. Short-nosed dogs, like bulldogs and pugs, are more susceptible to heatstroke," Tompkins said.

Pet owners who keep their animals outside need to ensure they take proper safety precautions, especially in the sun and heat.

According to USAIC Regulation 40-18, animals kept outside need to have adequate food, water and shelter. Sgt. 1st Class Patricia Thomas, Bouton Heights and Davis Hill Community Life NCO, said animals need to have a shaded area and fresh water daily.

Tompkins also recommended that animals have a sheltered area in the yard, especially where the water is kept.

"Watch your backyard, how the sun rises and sets, and move the water accordingly. A doghouse provides shade and does keep the animal cooler than being in direct sunlight."

Tompkins said the easiest and most inexpensive way to keep dogs hydrated is to buy a small kiddie pool and fill it with water daily. Pet owners who suspect their dogs may be overheated can check by feeling inside the ear flap or the pads of the feet.

"Although dogs don't have sweat glands, they do secrete moisture through the pads of their feet. A dog that has a dry nose does not necessarily have a fever — it's a myth," she said. "Dogs that are panting excessively, are lethargic or collapse need to be hydrated and taken to a vet immediately. Also, rubbing alcohol can be applied to the ear flap and pads of feet to cool off a dog," Thompkins said.

Owners should also refrain from taking dogs for long walks during the day.

"Dogs should get limited exercise during the heat of the day," Thompkins stated. "Walk them early in the morning or late at night, when the humidity isn't as bad."

People who see an animal without adequate necessities should take action.

"Call Animal Control. Call someone," said Sgt. 1st Class Caesar Harris, Bouton Heights and Davis Hill Community Life NCO. "Don't let these animals be abused. It's not fair to the animal."

Residents of Fort Benning who see abused or neglected animals can call the Community Life Office at 545-3069 or the military police at 545-5222.

Show God thankfulness for mercies and graces

Be grateful for independence, blessings

Chaplain (Capt.) Patrick R. Basal
U.S. Army Garrison

If you have had occasion to read any business magazines in recent years, you have undoubtedly seen an ad that goes something like this: "In business you don't get what you deserve; you get what you negotiate."

That may be true in the business realm, but it is not true in the spiritual realm. If we got what we deserved, we would be far worse off then the proverbial "man up the creek without a paddle." As the poor wretched sinners we are, we would be eternally separated from our heavenly father.

Moreover, if we got what we negotiated, we would have to find stronger words than "bankrupt," "destitute" or "pauper" to describe our condition. The reality is that we have nothing with which to successfully negotiate with God.

In Mercy, God withholds from us the judgment we so justly deserve.

In Grace, God bestows upon us blessings so rich and abundant that eternity itself will not provide time to exhaust the telling of them.

Let others negotiate with God based on their good works. Their end will be disastrous.

Wise men fall prostrate before a holy God who is a consuming fire and appropriate the grace of God, which comes through faith in our Lord and savior Christ Jesus.

REFLECTIONS

The month of July when we celebrate our nation's declaration of its independence is upon us.

Above all of those things for which we should celebrate, we should give thanks not for what we deserve or what we have negotiated for, but for God's unmerited favor bestowed upon our nation and upon us.

In 1840 Alexis de Tocqueville wrote The Democracy of the United States about the reason for America's greatness.

"I sought for the greatness of the United States in her commodious harbors, her ample rivers, her fertile fields, and boundless forests — and it was not there," he wrote.

"I sought for it in her rich mines, her vast world commerce, her public schools systems and in her institutions of higher learning — and it was not there. I looked for it in her democratic Congress and her matchless Constitution — and it was not there.

"Not until I went into the churches of America and heard her pulpits aflame with righteousness did I understand the secret of her genius and power. America is great because America is good, and if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great!"

Our pulpits have proclaimed righteousness and goodness, while seeking God's unmerited favor until now, but that does not negate our responsibility of appropriating the grace of God.

As President Andrew Jackson lay dying, he pointed to the Bible on the table by his bed and said to his companion, "That book, sir, is the rock on which our republic rests."

Not only does our republic rest on the Bible, but our lives rest on it as well. For God waits to hear from us, and if we show our thankfulness for his mercies and grace, he will gladly see us through all our troubles, and bestow abundant blessings upon our nation and us.

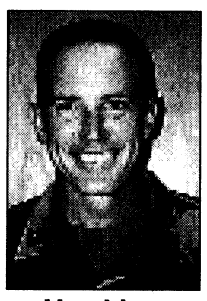
What better way is there for us to walk through life then by giving thanks and glory to our Lord who loves us and cares for us.

We must never forget that saying thank you is comely. It may be a little thing but it is never a small thing.

So while we still celebrate our independence this month let us say, "Thank you, Lord," for his abundant grace and mercy toward our nation.

Make moving a memorable experience for the whole family

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



"But Mom, Dad .. I don't want to move!" If you're part of a family in the military, then it's just about this time of year that you may have fingernail scratches on your front porch from children who may not be as excited about moving as you are!

Fortunately, precious few moves prove terminal for our children, but there's no denying that departing for, or arriving from, a PCS can be some of the choppiest waters your family may face.

In a book titled But Mom ... I Don't Want to Move, Susan Miller gives some great tips to help calm the waters at your quarters and bring about smoother sailing:

Have a good good-bye

• Have your children make a list of everyone they want to say goodbye to.

Hawkins

Then, you can either buy or make an address book (this can be a special project) for names, addresses, phone numbers, birthdays and other things to remember about each friend.

Don't forget that some friends might have e-mail addresses, too.

They can send "e-hugs" to stay in touch!

• Gather to celebrate good friends and good times.

This could be anything from a pizza party, a sleepover, a "build your own ice cream sundae" party, or an open house. It might be easier if you don't call it a farewell party.

• Remember your child's friends with a small gift of friendship or have a picture taken for remembrance. One of our moving friends made a picture magnet of their children for our refrigerator.

• A handmade gift from your child is especially meaningful. Make a bookmark with a special handwritten message and a picture as a keepsake. You can have it laminated at a printing store.

Come together while you drive away

• Be a focused listener. Go easy on asking a lot of questions as you drive. Turn off your cell phone. Make calls when you stop for a break. This is the time to focus on your kids.

• Tune in their music. Take this opportunity to discuss the songs and lyrics. Designate a time for personal electronics.

• Point out things of interest along the way. They can be great conversation starters.

Celebrate!

• Buy some helium balloons and tie them on the mailbox.

• Open a bottle of sparkling cider and let everyone "toast" to the family's arrival, new home and new beginnings.

• As you walk from room to room in your house, pray God's blessings over each room.

Specifically pray for the activities, family and friends that will become a part of your home. This can be a meaningful time for everyone in the family.

Want more ideas on how you and your family can make the most of your move?

Give me a ring at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760 or come see me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill.

I look forward to meeting you.

CYS to host free board competition

Event open to post, community

Fort Benning's Child and Youth Services will host a free skateboard competition at the new CYS skatepark July 31.

The competition will be open to all children between the ages of 10 and 18, whether or not they're affiliated with Fort Benning.

Christi Miller, CYS sports specialist, said, "Opening the competition to the public gives everybody a chance to see what we have to offer, and it lets the outside world know we are here.

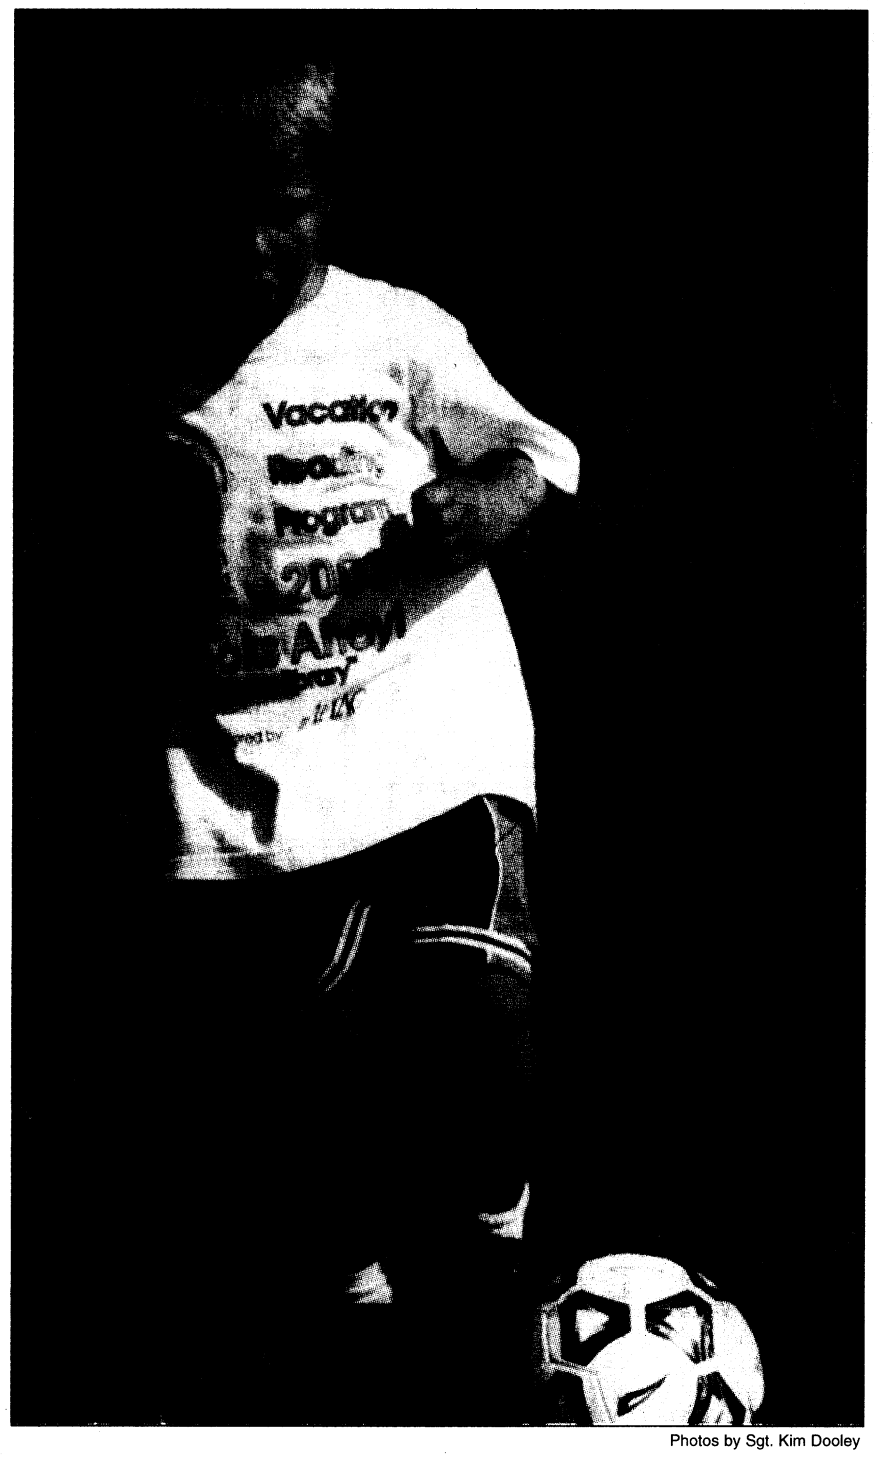
"I am looking forward to this competition," she said. "I think it's going to be big."

Dorrie Wagner, child and youth program assistant, said she expects the competition to be a success because it will be free for spectators and competitors.

"In fact," she said, "they can show up with nothing but the shirts on their backs and still compete."

CYS has skateboards, knee and elbow pads, helmets and inline skates to loan competitors.

The competition will be divided into three age groups, 10-12, 13-15 and 16-18. Each skater will make three runs and be judged in three categories — overall, sickest trick and consistency.



While the "sickest trick" category is basically self explanatory, Miller said the "overall" category is based on the skater's variety of tricks and the use of the park as a whole.

The "consistency" rating is based on the skater's ability to make tricks flow smoothly and appear effortless.

"A lot of kids are excited about this," Miller said. "And we have quite a few good skaters here. I've seen what some of them can do, and they are really good."

There will also be a competition Aug 14. Competitors must register by July 28 for the July 31 competition, and by Aug. 11 for the Aug. 14 competition.

For more information or to register for the competitions, call Miller at 545-3540.

Noah Miller, 5, braves the heat during practice at the Child and Youth Services Soccer Camp Tuesday morning. About 11 children participated in the weeklong camp, which took place on French Field.

Brandon Orloff, 5, gets a running start before kicking the ball back into bounds during a game at soccer camp Tuesday morning.

Post kids step out for soccer

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

If there's one thing Chloe Hoffman knows, it's that she loooves soccer. Maybe not as much as school, but it's close.

Her feet fresh to the field, Chloe's only been playing for about a month now, but to hear her talk, you'd think the Child and Youth Services Soccer Camp she attended this week was the highlight of the 6-year-old's summer.

"We do drills and run and warm up and play games and kick the ball around!" she exclaimed during Tuesday's practice.

"I'm not a very good goalie," she said, "but I'm good at running and having fun."

Chloe and about 10 other post youths between the ages of 4 and 15 turned out for the weeklong camp, which was held on French Field.

There, the campers learned technique, rules of the game and a little bit of teamwork, too.

Mason Trimble — who's 7 and a half, by the way — loved the practices. But he was really excited about the memorabilia he took home at the end of the week.

"I like soccer, because I like to score goals and win trophies," he said.

And the one-month soccer veteran got just that.

"We get a trophy and a medal and a certificate for coming and doing soccer all day!" he said.

Meanwhile, 5-year-old Noah Miller was happy just to play.

"The best part is rolling the ball," he proclaimed. "But it's so hot!"

Shooter brings character to Olympic team

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Sgt. 1st Class Shawn Dulohery is a man of character. Lots of character.

"Isn't that what they say — failure builds character? I've got lots of character built up," said Dulohery, who's toted around baggage filled with near-misses and lost opportunities since 1992, when he missed his first shot at the Olympics. Barely.

"By one target — one shot," he said, with a shake of his head. "I've come so close so many times."

Indeed, Dulohery suffered the same fate in 1996, missing by one target. And he missed his chance at the 2000 Olympics because his father was critically ill.

Now the 39-year old shotgun shooter is packing his bags for Athens, Greece, where he'll represent the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit next month at the 2004 Olympics.

"This is it, finally. The big show. It's kind of a release of all the failure," he said, then abruptly checked himself. "I hate to use the word failure. It felt that way, but there were a lot of successes along the way."

Like the bronze medal he earned at the World Cup finals in Italy last year, the silver he brought home from the World Championship skeet competition, and the golds he won at the Golden Bear, Maple Leaf and Mighty Missouri matches. The list goes on and on.

The tale of Dulohery's career reads much like his road to the Olympics. Lot's of ups and downs.

He was a sophomore at Central Missouri State University in 1985, when a soccer injury altered his course in a big way. Dulohery took up shooting again, a skill he learned as a child from his father, a competitive shooter.

When he placed well in his first collegiate competition with a gun he borrowed from a teammate, the AMU coach offered him a slot on the team. But the business major had other plans.

Sgt. 1st Class Shawn Dulohery will head to Athens, Greece, to represent the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in the Olympics.

"I envisioned a company car and a fat expense account," he said. "It didn't work that way."

Dulohery tended bar after college and racked up a hefty balance on his credit cards. His auto insurance lapsed right before he was involved in an accident, one that caused more than $20,000 worth of damage.

"I like to share this story with kids who don't have any direction in their life, kids who think they can't make it," he said.

"I was despondent. My dad pretty much told me to take responsibility and grow up. I had no idea what I was going to do. Then I remembered that AMU coach."

The rest, as they say, is history. The debts — they're history, too. What remains is a deep appreciation for his dad's tough love and the opportunities the Army has afforded him.

"I love what I do, and I'm one of the most fortunate people on the face of the earth to do what I do," he said.

The prospect of competing in the Olympics has Dulohery nearly "jumping out of his skin," but it's tempered by a small sense of guilt.

"In light of what's going on in the world and everything that's happened since 9-11, yeah, I feel a little bit guilty having it so good," he said. "I just hope that I can do my job, that I can perform half as good as they've done over there."

Kleenex, anyone? I'm a Red Sox fan

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I love sports. Football and baseball are my favorites, and, having grown up in Massachusetts, I follow the Boston Red Sox and the New England Patriots.

Being a Patriots fan has been easy — they've won two Super Bowls in the past three years. Being a Red Sox fan, on the other hand, is like being a glutton for punishment, year after year after year.

So why do I torture myself so? Good question. I remember being a little girl, going to my grandparents' house on the weekend, and watching the Red Sox with my grandfather. I figured if my grandfather liked the Red Sox, then I should, too. The rest of my family are Red Sox fanatics, so it just fit.

We fans know that one day, hopefully in our lifetime, we will see the Sox win the World Series. It's been a long time since 1918, the last time they won. We were this close last year. Game 7 of the American League Championship Series, and Yankee Aaron Boone dashed our hopes for yet another year with an out-of-nowhere home run. Which brings me to another point, obviously one I can't not talk about — the New York Yankees.

I won't speak for all Red Sox fans, but the majority of Sox fans hate the Yankees. Hate is a strong word, but here it is fitting. Why do we hate the Yankees? Just like most of us learned to love the Red Sox, it was ingrained in us from birth, we were taught to hate the Yankees. It goes hand in hand. Love the Sox, hate the Yankees. And most Yankees fans hate the Red Sox, love to rub salt in the wound of not winning as many championships as they have. I have one thing to say about that — money. It makes sense that if you have more money, you can buy better players.

And then there's that silly curse. I refuse to believe that just because Babe Ruth left the Red Sox to play for the Yankees we're "cursed."

So why do I and countless other Sox fans continue to follow the proverbial underdogs? Loyalty.

We know we can win the World Series; we just don't know when. We know we have the talent — Manny Ramirez, David Ortiz and Curt Schilling were just picked for the All-Star team and have continually performed well.

So while it is not easy being a Red Sox fan, it is rewarding in its own way.

I don't jump on and off the bandwagon of whatever team wins. I follow the highs and lows and wear my Red Sox gear with great pride and even have the Red Sox logo on my checks.

Hey, we've always got the Pats.

Which means they won't qualify for most future jobs. That's why parents have to keep their interest alive, in every way we can.

It's her future. Do the math.℠

Army hits retention mark

All divisions at 100 percent in spite of war

Courtney Hickson
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The active Army is at 100 percent mission accomplished for its retention rate for the third quarter.

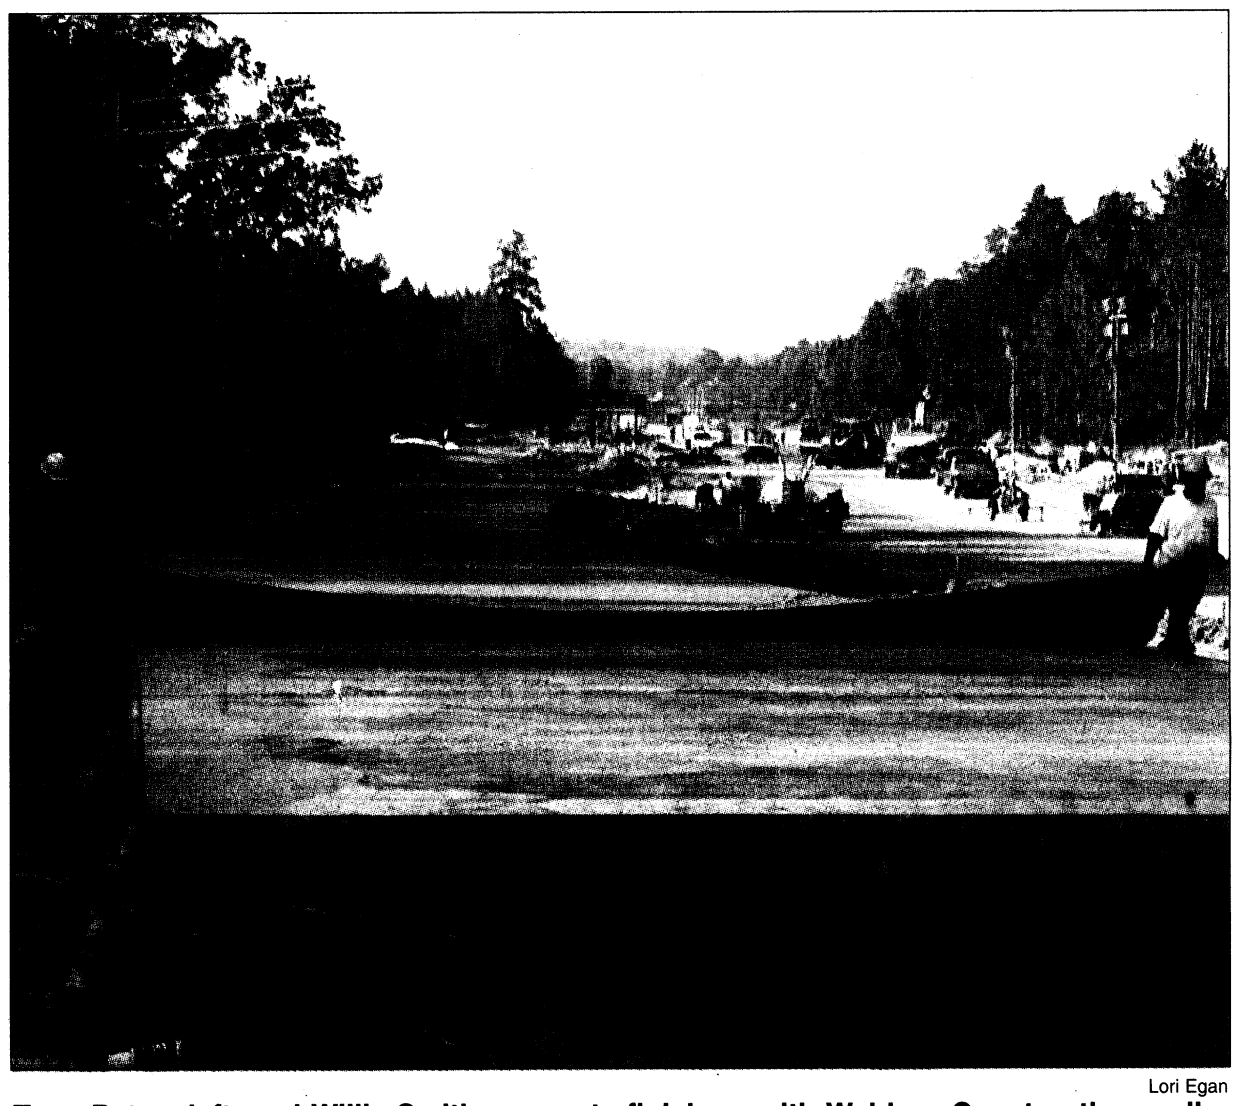
In addition, said Brig. Gen. Sean Byrne, chief of Military Policy, G1, in a media round table July 16, all 10 divisions are at or above 100-percent retention. He also said the aggregate number of the Army is 100 percent.

When units have Soldiers deployed, those units often have lower retention rates, but when Soldiers return to the post, those numbers rebound.

Byrne said some of the reasons for the increase are the Soldiers are getting re-involved in the post and discussing their situations with their families.

When Soldiers from the 82nd Airborne returned home, their retention numbers increased 9 to 10 percent, he said. Additionally, the Army surveys Soldiers as they return from deployment and Byrne said they have been getting good feedback.

"There may be some talking, but Soldiers aren't walking," Byrne said.



The Soldiers impacted by the Stop-Loss are counted as eligible for re-enlistment and the Army is actively pursuing them to re-enlist. There were about 9,500 Soldiers impacted by Stop-Loss, Byrne said.

In order to compete with the civilian sector, the Army offers bonuses and competitive wages. A

Rain delays construction

I-185 ACP to open in September

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

If June had normal rain conditions, Fort Benning commuters would be using I-185 with its five new incoming lanes in late August.

But the 14 inches of rain on the construction site has hampered the construction efforts, said Capt. Mindy Rosito, project officer for the access control point construction.

"We can't pour concrete in the rain," said Tammy Johnson, quality control chief for Conner Brothers, one of the companies working on the project. "If we keep the rain away, we'll be all right."

If it rains more than half an inch, sub-grade work can't be done. The dirt has to dry out first, Johnson said.

"We can't control the weather ... but the construction is progressing as planned," said Billy Birdwell, chief of the Public Affairs Office for the Savannah District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

And according to the contract, construction is currently on schedule, Birdwell said.

Johnson, who has been working on the site since February, said they've been working weekends since March. And this week, they've been pouring concrete as early as 4 a.m.

"We need the cooler temperatures to place the concrete," Rosito said.

Command suspends local shuttle

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The Columbus Shuttle, a van service that provides service locally and to and from the Atlanta airport, has been suspended by the Army Surface Deployment and the Distribution Command as an authorized carrier for Department of Defense travelers traveling on official orders for one year as of July 14.

During a random inspection, the SDDC found that Columbus Shuttle did not comply with SDDC regulations.

Its suspension was put into effect because of its failure to meet the SDDC regulations, including not properly drug testing its drivers and not conducting the required safety training, said Ron Johnson, installation transportation officer.

"This suspension does not affect the concession contract with Morale Welfare and Recreation or any (un)official leisure travel," Johnson said.

Soldiers may use the shuttle for leisure travel. The suspension only prohibits official travel.

Although the suspension notice was sent to all installation transportation officers and travel offices Armywide, there is no way of letting all Soldiers know, Johnson said.

"Soldiers will not be penalized for unknowingly using the carrier during official travel," Johnson said. "Those Soldiers will still be reimbursed as part of their travel voucher."

Dog handler receives Purple Heart, ARCOM

Retired Soldier, dog, honored 37 years later

It was the dog's day of summer. As the temperature on Sacrifice Field inched toward 90 degrees July 16, a crowd gathered to pay tribute to a man and his dog, retired Sgt. 1st Class Harry Wilson and Duke, the German shepherd that routed a platoon of Viet Cong soldiers during a search and destroy mission near Phan Thiet, Vietnam, in 1967.

Both Duke and Wilson, a dog handler with the 25th Infantry Platoon (Scout Dog), were injured in the fray. Wilson was shot in the leg and medevaced to a hospital in Japan, where he was told he would receive a Purple Heart.

He never saw the medal, and he never saw his dog again. Duke was one of 248 dogs killed in action during the Vietnam War.

The loss of his companion haunted Wilson for years. The loss of paperwork needed for Wilson to receive his Purple Heart haunted his wife, Kathy.

Three years ago, she took on the big dogs, hounding Pentagon officials monthly. Finally, last week, in a ceremony in the shadow of the War Dog Memorial, Kathy's efforts paid off.

Sit, stay, unload dishes

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Kids are a lot like dogs. Seriously. Just hear me out. It all boils down to one word. Training. We potty-train, crate-train, obedience-train and job-train, don't we?

I came across a few simple principles for successful training.

• Show exactly what to do, help do it.

• Consistency is important.

• Correction should be forceful enough to stop unwanted behavior.

• You don't need to yell, scream or shout.

• You have to mean what you say.

Of course, this list came from my guide to raising a puppy, but I'm sure I've heard these same principles spouted by the likes of child-rearing experts like Dr. Spock and T. Berry Brazelton.

And as I deal with the unscheduled and unconstructed days of summer leading up to another deployment, my kids and my dog are back in training.

You've heard the saying "idle hands are the devil's tools." It's true.

And as dog trainers say, dogs, especially working breeds like my Australian and German shepherd mix, need to have a job, or two, or three.

There aren't any cattle or sheep here for her to herd, so we've substituted obedience training and tennis ball and squirrel chasing, as her "jobs." She's happier when she's out doing them, and I don't have to listen to her doggie sighs or deal with destructive behavior, like chewing. She's well-trained, and I've established myself as the alpha female and leader of the pack.

Now, with more than half of the summer over, I'm in trouble. I've followed the principles with the dog, but not with the kids. I'm yelling and making empty threats as I try to deal with misbehavior rooted in boredom because I've let their training slide.

While my husband was deployed, we had a great chore chart. We followed it and there was minimal weeping, wailing or gnashing of teeth.

Just as a well-trained dog is happier and less likely to misbehave, so too, are children. So we're back in training. Our habits will be like the proverb says – "like cobwebs at first, cables at last."

And as noted author Steven Covey said, "Habits are consistent patterns which reveal our character and determine our effectiveness in life."

It will only take a few, hard-working weeks to get back in the chore habits. After that, there should be smooth sailing.

We'll be making beds, loading and unloading the dishwasher, vacuuming, hauling trash, caring for pets. I'll have to show them what I want done, help them do it and leave them to excel. I'll be consistent, concise, soft-spoken and quick to praise.

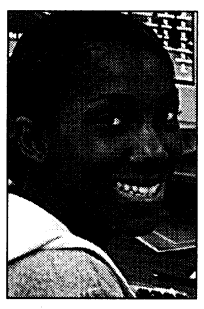
Practice will make permanent. And just like the dog brings the ball over for one more throw, I'll eventually hope to hear the kids say, "Mom, I've finished my jobs. Is there anything else I can do?"

Chores — who needs 'em?

Cayce Shannon
Bayonet volunteer

One of the main goals for parents to teach their children is the art of running a household, or more precisely, how to complete chores.

A task I sometimes have trouble with.



Wash the dishes, wash the clothes, fold the clothes, cook, clean my room, take out the trash, feed the dog, clean the bathroom. Pretty simple tasks right? Wrong.

OK, OK, I don't have to strain to get my chores done, but I always seem to miss something.

Take this scenario: My friend calls to ask if I want to go to a party. I say yes, slam the phone down and get ready for a fun night.

The time goes by fast, but I am dressed and ready to go when my friend arrives. As I try to say goodbye to my parents and head out the door, I hear, "Have you folded the clothes yet?"

My friend leaves for a night out with friends while I fold clothes.

Why do I need to fold clothes?

I want them to be messy. It's easier to pick out something to wear without rummaging through the clothes.

I am again foiled by the great power of responsibility.

Another problem — I don't know why I need to know how to cook. That's why the microwave was invented, wasn't it? The microwave can heat up anything. (Well, almost anything. I've had a few explosi ... I mean accidents, but I'm more careful now.)

Doing chores around the house is not all bad. I love the warm tingling (although it might be the state of exhaustion) produced in my soul after cleaning the house, knowing I took the time and completed the task.

Plus, it also makes family life easier. I can't even count how many times my parents have scolded or grounded me about forgetting to do simple chores.

I can hear them now — "How do you expect to live on your own if you can't even do something as simple as taking out the trash or washing the dishes?"

Even if my parents are teaching me responsibility, it doesn't mean I have to like it.

I still have two more years before I'm 18 and hiking out into the real world. Therefore, I can still make mistakes and learn from them.

As much as I dislike chores, they'll surround me for the rest of my life. I might as well listen to my parents and get what needs to be taken care of finished.

Then, I can have time to accomplish other goals, such as becoming a journalist and working for a major magazine or newspaper.

Hey, who knows, maybe by that time I'll have enough money to hire a maid. Problem solved.

Time to get ready for school

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Sharpen your pencils and break in those new shoes — the new school year is just around the corner.

While most kids don't want the summer to end, my 5-year-old is counting down the days. When we found out the first day of school is Aug. 10, he took his calendar off his wall and circled the date, then asked me how to spell school. Every day, we count how many days left until school starts.

While he's excited about school starting, I have mixed feelings. He's my only child, my baby, and I have a certain amount of trepidation knowing he'll be in school all day. We had great practice last year with preK, which prepared both of us, but the idea of dropping him off in the morning and picking him up in the afternoon makes me sad. I'm not sure if it's that my baby's growing up or because this is the start of his school career. Either way, I'm sad.

But Fort Benning is making things a little easier for parents with several Sneak-A-Peeks and various other programs before school starts. Here is a schedule from the schools:

• Dexter Elementary — Meet and greet, 2 to 3:30 p.m. Aug. 9

• Faith Middle School — New student orientation, 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Aug. 2; Class schedules for sixth grade will be available from 4 to 6 p.m. Aug. 9, schedules for seventh and eighth grade will be available from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 3:30 p.m. Aug. 6

• Loyd Elementary — Parent and student orientation Aug. 9. Call 545-7276.

• McBride Elementary — For preK students, a Sneak-A-Peek is 10 to 11:30 a.m. Aug. 9, and students in kindergarten through third grade can attend Right Start, a chance for parents to meet Principal Del Hicks, then meet with teachers afterward.

• Stowers Elementary — Pre-K students will have a Sneak-A-Peek from 9 to 11 a.m. Aug. 9

• White Elementary — Students will have a Sneak-A-Peek from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. Aug. 9

• Wilson Elementary — Students will have a Sneak-A-Peek from 2 to 3 p.m. Aug. 9.

CORRECTIONS

The July 9 edition of The Bayonet incorrectly reported Anna Marie Stangle Warren's and her son Corey's last name as Stanger. Sgt. 1st Class Jim Warren worked as the training NCO for C Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment. The date of the proposal was March 27 not March 12, and only three of the seven children in their family were able to attend the wedding.

In another story, Evelyn Livermore is stepping down as a Community Life mayor for the Bouton Heights-Davis Hill Housing area. She will remain the president of the Community Life Mayors Association.

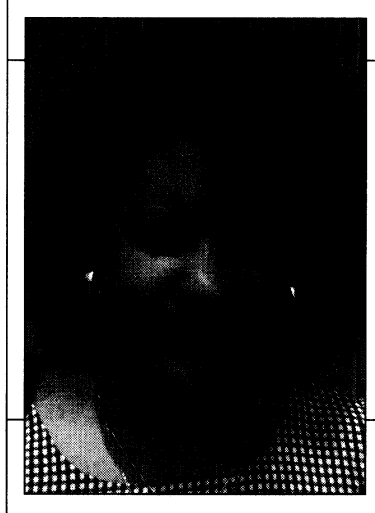
LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Reader thanks military for protection, liberty

I am writing to relay my heartfelt gratitude and love to all those stationed at Fort Benning.

I am not a diplomat or government official. I do not hold membership in any important organization. I am just a college student.

I am the son of a Vietnam veteran formerly stationed at Fort Benning (rest his soul).



I am an American that has grown tired of those in this country who don't understand your mission. I don't just mean Iraq, I mean from one end of the earth to the other. I mean the missions and directives that the general public have no idea about.

Preserving freedom and the American view of the world is very important to the way all Americans live their lives. I think sometimes those who don't understand the U.S. military's role in the world are not quite as intellectual as they think they are.

Al-Anon: Offers hope for friends, family of alcoholics

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Driving down the road today, I realized I was feeling pretty good. I'm working on my recovery program, going through the 12 steps. I'm growing all the time, and I'm really starting to like the person I am becoming.

The thought that one day I'll emerge from this journey as a positive, optimistic and peaceful person is all the motivation I need to keep me focused on my recovery. I finally realize that it's not up to me to keep my alcoholic sober, safe or anything else. It's up to him and his higher power. It is such a relief to have this responsibility lifted from my shoulders, where I never should have placed it to begin with.

Sachel P.
Al-Anon member

Sachel is one of millions of friends and family members affected by alcoholism in the U.S. and one of the uncounted ranks that turn to Al-Anon for help.

Alcoholics have Alcoholics Anonymous to turn to when they are ready to start working their way toward sobriety.

Family and friends who struggle through years of devastation because of the disease often go to Al-Anon looking for help in recovery, whether or not the alcoholic gets or stays sober.

"We believe alcoholism is a family illness and that changed attitudes can aid in recovery," said Buddy T., the About Alcoholism Web site guide and an Al-Anon member since 1987.

"Al-Anon has but one purpose — to help families of alcoholics. We do this by practicing the 12 steps, by welcoming and giving comfort to families of alcoholics and by giving understanding and encouragement to the alcoholic.

"The Al-Anon family groups are a fellowship of relatives and friends of alcoholics who share their experience, strength and hope in order to solve their common problems," Buddy said.

He said Alcoholics Anonymous founder Bill W. was amazed aat the number of wives' groups that had formed alongside AA groups as he toured the country in 1950. His wife, Lois, and her friend, Anne, organized the framework of Al-Anon based on those groups in 1951.

"The only requirement for membership is that there be a problem of alcoholism in a relative or friend," he said. "There are no dues for membership, and we are not allied with any sect, denomination, political entity, organization or institution."

It is this self-reliance and an absolute commitment to the anonymity of its members that lets Al-Anon function as a globally effective tool for managing alcoholism as a relationship problem, he said.

Membership rosters are not maintained and only first names are used to preserve anonymity, he said.

"We guard, with special care, the anonymity of all Al-Anon and AA members," he said. "Anonymity is the spiritual foundation of all our traditions, ever reminding us to place principles above personalities."

The basics of the Al-Anon program mirror those of AA, he said.

"Al-Anon uses the same 12 steps as AA," Buddy explained.

"Study of these steps is essential to progress in the Al-Anon program. The principles the steps embody are universal and applicable to anyone, whatever his or her personal creed may be. In Al-Anon, we strive for an ever-deeper understanding of these steps and pray for the wisdom to apply them to our lives."

Al-Anon hosts meetings, some closed to the public and others open, holds conferences and publishes literature aimed at helping the family and friends of alcoholics learn to cope with the situation and help with recovery for both themselves and their alcoholics.

The 12 steps Buddy refers to challenge members to come out of denial, admit there is a problem and follow a difficult course of self-honesty, courage and spiritual growth.

If you or someone you know might be one of the 37.2 million people suffering with the second-hand affects of alcoholism, you aren't alone and Al-Anon can help.

For more information about Al-Anon in the local area, call 327-7630, or visit http://alcoholism.about.com.

Shaw sets safety standard

Agency logs 1 million man-hours with no accidents

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

As the Army is working toward a 50 percent reduction in accidents, it may be able to take notes from one of Fort Benning's contractors.

Shaw Environmental and Infrastructure Incorporated was presented an award at the Officers' Club July 14 for logging 1 million man-hours without a single accident that resulted in lost time.

"(This) is a significant accomplishment," said Patrick D. J. Kenny, Shaw project manager. "In the last year, our overall incident rate has been reduced 50 percent."

With more than 1,000 employees, including three sub-contractors, Kenny said that is no small task.

"We have very few jobs sitting behind a desk," he said "There are so many places there can be accidents."

Kenny said almost every job at Shaw can have a high risk factor, since their employees work with electricity, operate motor vehicles and heavy equipment and use power tools.

Even when an employee contracts a rash from poison ivy or sumac, that is considered an accident, he said.

With that taken into consideration, Shaw hasn't been totally accident free, but there haven't been any accidents that were so severe the employee needed to miss work.

Kenny said the most serious accident Shaw has had since they've been on Fort Benning happened as a result of an employee tripping over the leg of a picnic table, injuring her arm while on lunch break.

Kenny said he owes the success to Shaw's intensive training program.

Bruce Bundt, Shaw health and safety coordinator, said Shaw is firmly committed to executing the Fort Benning support services contract in a safe, efficient manner and in compliance with all applicable safety, health and environmental regulations.

Derrick Cason, a Shaw employee, cleans a wall at the Fort Benning cemetery using diluted muriatic acid.

"The most valuable resource we have is our people," he said. "While quality and productivity are critical to our operations, they will never take precedence over the safety of personnel or protection of the environment.

"Our goal is to provide an injury-free work environment where facilities and projects are free of recognized hazards, and people, equipment and the environment are not placed at unreasonable risk of injury or damage," he said.

"Our mission is to be the industry leader in safety performance.

"We will accomplish this through continuous improvement to prevent or reduce the potential risk of harm to personnel, property and the environment," he said.

To accomplish this goal, every employee receives the appropriate training, equipment and other resources necessary to complete assigned tasks in a safe and efficient manner.

It is a condition of employment with Shaw that our employees work safely and follow established safety rules and procedures, anything else is unacceptable.

608th Soldiers help man Benning ammo points

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The 608th Ordnance Company is currently performing an inventory of Fort Benning's ammunition supply points before its Soldiers join ranks with the civilians who ran the ASP during their yearlong deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

While the 608th was overseas manning the only Corps ASP in Iraq, Department of Defense civilians were hired to carry out the tasks of the ASP until the Soldiers returned.

This transition from civilians to Soldiers is off-setting the current Army trend, which involves taking Soldiers out of garrison environments and replacing them with civilians, said Sgt. 1st Class Luis Perez, 3rd Platoon platoon sergeant.

Keeping the 608th in the ASP, a garrison environment, ensures Soldiers maintain a standard of proficiency in their jobs and will help ensure an outstanding performance the next time they deploy, Perez said.

"Now that we've returned from our deployment, we have more experience in both combat and garrison environments," Perez said.

"We're stronger now as a unit, and we'll offer more to the ASP than before our deployment," he said.

The 608th ran the ASP for the larger part of the past 25 years, said Jerry Gaylor, ASP manager.

"Currently, we're trying to reintegrate them into the fold of the ASP so the Soldiers continue to get the training at the ASP level," Gaylor said.

> "This is a partnership, military working with civilians. It's one team, one fight at the ASP."
> Capt. Gerardo Pulido
> Commander, 608th Ordnance Company

While run by civilians, the Directorate of Logistics managed all civilian employees.

Now that Soldiers will be working with civilians communication becomes very important.

"This is a partnership, military working with civilians," said Capt. Gerardo Pulido, 608th Ordnance Company commander. "It's one team, one fight at the ASP."

By Aug. 1, the 608th will be fully integrated into the ASP.

By Aug. 6, there will only be 12 civilians working at the ASP.

"The civilians who have worked at the ASP since we've been gone have done an excellent job," Pulido said.

The ASP will retain 12 of the temporary employees, along with the nine permanent employees at the ASP to provide experience and manpower needed when the 608th deploys again.

DENTAC welcomes new commander

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Col. Robert Lutka passed the Fort Benning Army Dental Activity guidon to Col. Conrad Bodai during a change of command ceremony in front of Love Dental Clinic Wednesday morning.

Lutka has been assigned to the Army Medical Department Center and School at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

During the ceremony, Lutka complimented his staff of Soldiers and civilians for their outstanding accomplishments during his command, including processing thousands of Soldiers who needed dental work to meet deployment standards.

"You made more dentures and partials, and performed more procedures in one week than is usually done in a year," Lutka said.

Lutka gave his best wishes to the Bodais, urging them to take good care of "the world's best dental activity" during their time in command.

Col. David Carr, Southeast Regional dental commander, said that won't be an issue, as Bodai comes highly qualified.

"These are two exceptional leaders," Carr said of Lutka and Bodai. "They represent the very best that DENTAC has to offer."

Carr complimented Lutka for his achievements while in command of the Fort Benning DENTAC, saying, "Bob, as we say in Indiana, 'ya done good.'"

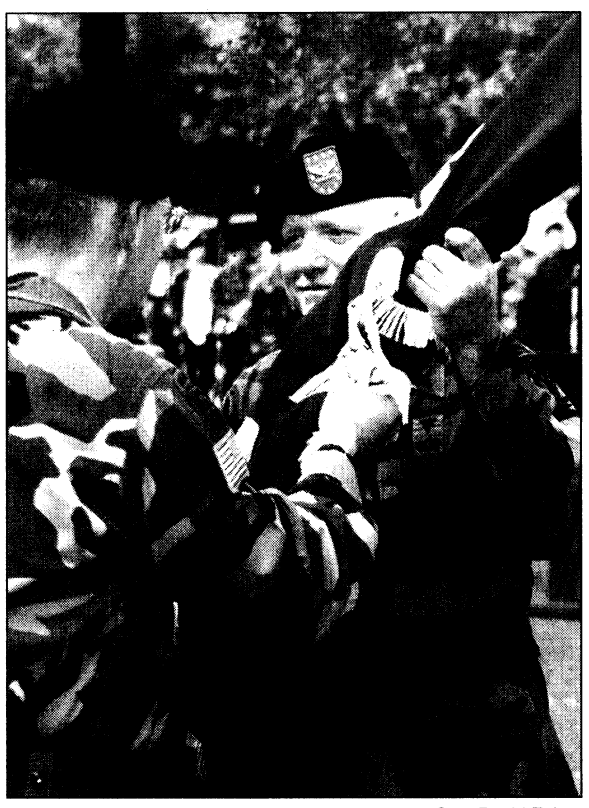
He also said Bodai has an excellent track record and has made great strides while in command of the Europe Regional Dental Command.

"He and Brenda are a perfect fit for this command at Fort Benning," Carr said.

Bodai said he has two core commitments to fulfill while in command of the Fort Benning DENTAC.

His first commitment is to ensure that Soldiers continue to get the same "world-class" dental care that Fort Benning has been providing so they will be dentally fit to perform their duties.

His second commitment is to ensure that the Soldiers in his command become proficient and maintain proficiency in their warrior skills.

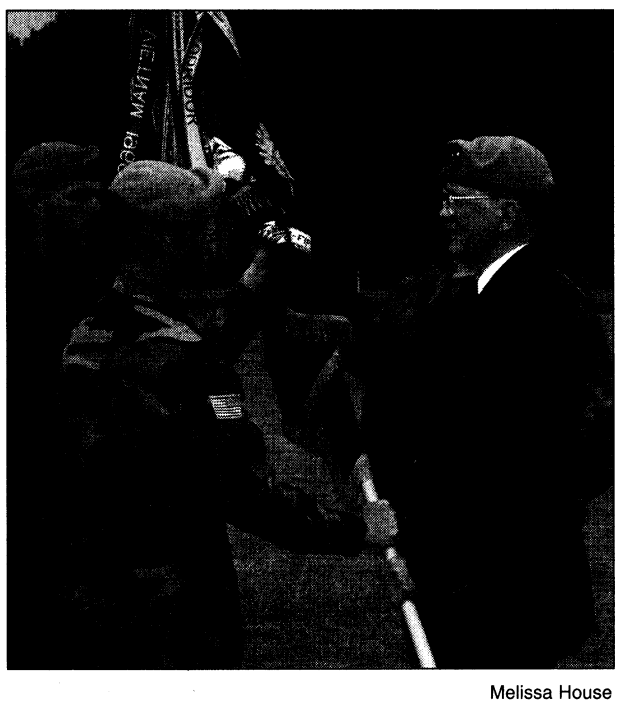


Bodai said he plans to fulfill both by being "people-oriented and mission-focused," in his command.

Bodai, who was born in Budapest, Hungary, immigrated to the United States with his family in 1956.

He earned his doctor of Dental Surgery degree in 1977, entered active duty and completed general practice residency at Brooke Army Medical Center, San Antonio, Texas. Since then, Bodai has been stationed at various installations spanning the globe from Central America to South Korea.

His awards include the Legion of Merit with one oak leaf cluster, the Meritorious Service Medal with five oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, the Army Achievement Medal with four oak leaf clusters and the Order of Military Medical Merit.



Bodai and his wife Brenda have three children, Alyson, David and Sean.

Col. David L. Carr, Southeast Regional dental commander, passes the Fort Benning DENTAC guidon to Col. Conrad Bodai, the incoming commander, during a change of command ceremony at Love Dental Clinic Wednesday.

3rd Ranger battalion guidon changes hands

Incoming commander, Lt. Col. John Castles takes the guidon from retired Col. Ralph Puckett, honorary colonel of the regiment.

Melissa House

Friends of 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, gathered at York Field July 16 as Lt. Col. Paul LaCamera relinquished command to Lt. Col. John Castles.

The battalion draws its lineage from the famed Darby's Rangers and Merrill's Marauders.

Retired Col. Ralph Puckett, the honorary colonel of the regiment, delivered remarks for the regimental commander, Col. Craig Nixon, who was at Martin Army Community Hospital awaiting the birth of his fourth child.

The formal passing of responsibility from commander to commander, Puckett said, acknowledged the LaCameras contributions and welcomed the Castles back to the Ranger community and Fort Benning.

"The global war on terror is a close-in fight for the Ranger Regiment involving sustained combat operations in multiple countries,' he said, "something I believe is unprecedented.

"From the mountains of Afghanistan to the urban sprawl of Baghdad, the Rangers before you have captured and killed some of the world's worst terrorists," Puckett said. "They have paid the price of loss and injury of their most precious resource — our young Rangers."

LaCamera led the battalion during three combat deployments to Afghanistan and Iraq, including three combat jumps and a number of complex, joint operations and more than 1,000 raids.

"He has demonstrated unparalleled operational competence," Puckett said. "He is a Soldier's Soldier and peerless as a warrior."

Puckett said LaCamera's wife, Theresa, represents the strongest part of the Ranger community — the wives and families.

"We are disappointed that (the LaCameras) must go," Puckett said, "but we look forward to seeing them again."

LaCamera will return next summer to take command of the 75th Ranger Regiment after completing the Naval War College in Newport, R.I.

LaCamera said it was difficult to write his speech, trying first to enlist the help of his family.

"The great Americans in front of you have been writing it for me, and have been forging it into history with pride, pain, sacrifice, loss, joy and honor," he said. "Their faces have changed over the two years, but their motivation and mission remain the same."

LaCamera counted himself lucky to have served as their commander and thanked the Soldiers for all they have done and all they will do in the future.

His words of advice to Castles were, "try not to blink or it will pass you by."

Castles, a graduate of the University of Virginia, comes to the battalion after commanding the 3rd Bn., 325th Airborne Infantry Regt., Fort Bragg, N.C. He has served in 2nd Battalion, Fort Lewis, Wash., and with 75th Ranger Regiment, HHC, as the regimental supply and executive officers.

"It is a great honor to be partners now with you," Castles said. "My service to this unit will be inspired by those who have served through the years. I assure you and your families will get my best as we meet future challenges."

ANIMAL INSTINCTS

Vet techs care for vital service members

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Spc. Jill Barrierre, an animal care specialist at the Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility, gives a patient its saline injection Tuesday morning.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Amidst the racket of yelps, barks, growls and howls, a young Soldier sweats in the Georgia humidity, nose scrunched against the assault of a night's worth of potty breaks by 20 or more dogs as she tackles the daunting task of cleaning the kennels and feeding and watering the raucous bunch.

So begins the day for Spc. Jill Barriere, an animal care specialist assigned to Fort Benning's Veterinary Treatment Facility.

"Sometimes all the noise bothers me, but you get used to it after a while," Barriere said.

"Our number one mission is the medical support of military working dogs," said Sgt. Martin Garcia, also an animal care specialist at the Vet Clinic.

He said the dogs, valued at $40,000 each, get top-notch medical care that rivals that of their human counterparts.

"We recently had a dog that got a consult to Auburn University to see a specialist," he said.

How many Soldiers do you know who get referrals like that?

Garcia said the 91T mission is important.

"We are supporting bomb dogs right now that are working in Iraq, and there are 91Ts deployed with Special Forces units helping to control the spread of zoonotic diseases in the livestock populations of several needy countries," he said.

He said most veterinary technicians don't deploy, but the stateside mission is valuable, as well.

Military working dogs are expensive, highly trained Army assets that depend on exceptional fitness and health to perform their mission in law enforcement and protective services, he said.

Despite the importance of the mission, the animal care specialist field is small. Garcia said most posts have civilian contractors that handle veterinary treatment facilities.

Fort Benning is one of those that is assigned military animal care specialists, because the treatment facility here is responsible for not only the working dogs assigned here and the pets of Soldiers, but for several Army installations, Air Force bases and Marine detachments in the Gulf Coast area, he said.

The Army is the only branch that has animal care specialists. These specialists bear the responsibility of providing care across the board for all Department of Defense working animals and lab animals.

The DoD uses animals for experimentation in several capacities following federal guidelines.

Barriere's messy morning task was part of the animal care specialist's secondary mission to provide routine care to Soldiers' personal pets on a space-available basis.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility has hundreds of active patient files at any given time.

These furry friends require immunizations, preventive medications for parasitic infections, minor surgeries, like spayings and neuterings, and care for minor injuries and illnesses.

The post Vet Clinic also provides boarding and initial medical care for all strays captured on installation property.

The animals are given immunizations, spayed or neutered and placed for adoption, whenever possible.

Veterinary techs have their hands in a wide variety of activities, Barriere said.

"I do something different every day," she said. "I may be working a clinic and giving shots one day and then spend the next day taking care of all the strays."

Though military animal care specialists are not currently certified, Garcia said that is something the Army is working to change.

"In nine weeks, we learn everything a civilian tech learns in a two-year course to get certified," he said.

During training in the Animal Care Specialist Course at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, techs are flooded with lessons in animal anatomy, basic diagnostic laboratory services, pharmacology, anesthesiology, surgical procedures and veterinary pathology and disease.

Barriere said she plans to capitalize on the training the Army has already given her.

"This is what both of my parents do," she said.

"I thought the training was interesting, and even though the actual job isn't exactly what I thought it would be, I'll probably stay in the field."

ON THE BRAIN

ADHD can cause trouble for adults

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Everyone locks their keys in the car. Everyone goes on a shopping spree now and then or forgets to pay a bill on time. Everyone falls short of their goals sometimes. Everyone daydreams or zones out every now and then. But not everyone experiences these things on a day-to-day basis.

Chronic absentmindedness, impulsiveness, poor attention span, racing thoughts, daydreaming and a pattern of unachieved goals and potentials may be a sign of a valid, treatable medical condition.

Better known as ADD or ADHD, attention deficit and hyperactive disorder is a childhood-onset disorder affecting between 3 and 5 percent, or roughly 2 million, children in the United States, according to the National Institute of Mental Health.

But what many people don't know is between 3 and 5 million adults are affected by ADHD, and many of them have never been diagnosed, according to the NIMH.

So, how is it that so many adults are stumbling through life not knowing what about them is different from other people or how to fix it?

Dr. Santo Triolo, a local expert on both child and adult ADHD, said that many children grow to adulthood without ever being diagnosed because accurate diagnostic services for a condition like ADHD are, typically, not available to lower-class and some middle-class families.

He said many individuals who develop ADHD as children and are not treated end up in the penal system or on the fringe of society and may go untreated throughout their lives.

Triolo also said there is no such thing as adult-onset ADHD.

The symptoms of child and adult ADHD are almost exactly alike.

The only difference is adults internalize the hyperactivity symptom as they mature and are able to better control the physical aberrations of the disorder.

"Adults tend to lean more toward hyperactivity between the ears," Triolo said.

The hyper running around and uncontrollable physical effects of the disorder in children can manifest itself in adults as an unending stream of disordered thoughts and daydreams, often affecting sleep and focus.

The NIMH lists other symptoms like distractibility, failure to meet potential, lack of attention to detail, forgetfulness, impulsiveness, thrill-seeking through high-intensity activities, procrastination and a pattern of starting projects vigorously but never finishing them.

Triolo said the effects of untreated ADHD can be disastrous.

"Many of my patients are extremely bright, but never fulfill their potential," he said. "They fall short in performance at work and in their relationships. Spouses and family have a very hard time dealing with the untreated symptoms of the disorder."

Triolo said families can be destroyed over time by impulsive spending, reckless behavior and absent-mindedness.

There is hope, though, he said.

Once a person has been diagnosed, Triolo said, current treatments are effective and address not only the pathology of the disorder, but the whole person.

Triolo's approach is three-pronged and begins with education, which he said is the most important aspect.

"Education in this sense doesn't mean college," he said. "It means learning about yourself and the affects this disorder has on you. It is about learning to anticipate problems the disorder will cause in day-to-day life, and it is about teaching those around you, as well, so they can learn to help you."

The second part of treatment is psychotherapy and treatment of secondary symptoms, Triolo said.

"Psychotherapy is where we get down to the nuts and bolts of cognitive functioning," he said. "It is where we develop techniques to counter ADHD symptoms, such as forgetfulness and impulsivity. Every person's lifestyle is different, so it is always tailor-made for the individual.

"The affects of ADHD can often cause secondary problems, like depression and anxiety, which should be addressed as part of an ADHD treatment plan," he said.

The third part of Triolo's treatment is medication.

"Medication, with education and psychotherapy, is effective in the treatment of ADHD," he said.

"These aren't new, designer drugs; they have been around for a long time," he continued. "Some have been modified for slow-release to increase their effectiveness, but for the most part, these are time-tested treatments."

If you exhibit symptoms of ADHD and think you may have it, get help. And if you think you know someone who has it, help them help themselves.

For more information, go to the NIMH's Web site at www.nimh.nih.org, or schedule an appointment at Martin Army Community Hospital and talk to a doctor.

Progress evident in war on terror, Rumsfeld says

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press service

WASHINGTON — The United States and its coalition partner nations are making progress in the war against global terrorism, said Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld.

"We are unquestionably putting a lot of pressure on the extremists who are conducting these terrorist acts around the world," Rumsfeld told National Public Radio's Juan Williams during a July 16 interview.

The U.S.-led, anti-terror coalition of 80 to 90 nations, he said, is sharing intelligence and making it harder for the terrorists to move money. The coalition is also making it harder for the terrorists to recruit and retain people.

"We're making it harder for them to communicate with each other, harder for them to move between countries," Rumsfeld said.

The coalition has also brought down the Abdul Qadeer Khan network that was trading in nuclear materials and technologies, the secretary said. Khan, the father of Pakistan's gas centrifuge program, was removed from his post as advisor to Pakistan's prime minister for providing nuclear technology, components, and equipment to Iran, Libya and North Korea.

Rumsfeld said that "Libya has come forward and decided to forego weapons of mass destruction."

America is safer today, he said, than it was on Sept. 11, 2001, when terrorists hijacked four jetliners and attacked the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. Many terrorists have been captured or killed, and more information about their activities has been gleaned.

The United States has focused significant resources on protection.

"We have a much better protection system, for example, at our airports," Rumsfeld said. "We have a much higher level of vigilance and awareness on the part of the American people."

The United States is safer today because of the steps that have been taken, but there is no "perfect safety" when people are determined to kill other people, he warned.

"Now, the reality is that a terrorist can attack at any time, at any place, using any technique," Rumsfeld said. "And it is physically impossible to protect every location against every conceivable type of attack, and it's particularly difficult for free people."

If terrorists cause Americans to give up the freedoms and benefits of a free society, he stressed, "then the terrorists have won."

USAMU hosts CG's M-9 pistol training

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit hosted an M-9 shooting clinic and qualification for 17 officers and NCOs of the U.S. Army Infantry Center July 12 at Phillips Range.

The Soldiers' instruction included proper grip and stance, aiming and draw mechanics and stressed the importance of preparation.

"The most important thing they got out of the clinic was a better understanding of the amount of training it takes to be proficient with a weapon, not just be able to qualify with it," said Sgt. 1st Class Aaron L. Hampton, NCOIC of the USAMU Action Shooting Team.

"They also found out that the way that your kit (load-bearing equipment) is set up is very important in a hostile environment," he said.

After the clinic, the participants headed to Parks Range for hands-on instruction and live-fire drills with the M-9 pistol, followed by an M-9 qualification course.

The participants included the post commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley. After the qualification, the shooters competed in the Commanding General's Top Gun Challenge Match, which was won by Lt. Col. Tom Desrosier, 11th Regiment deputy commander, who also won the award for having the highest score in the qualification.

Lt. Col. Alan Neyland, commander of 1st Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt., who coordinated the event with the USAMU, said the 11th Infantry Regiment plans to make this an annual event and hopes to get more participation next year from throughout Fort Benning.

The participants agreed the training was very beneficial to them and said they would like to attend future clinics and competitions.

Freakley commended the USAMU for the clinic, calling it "tremendous"" and thanked the unit "for what you're doing for our Army."

USAMU Commander Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag invited the commanders and sergeants major to the All-Army Small Arms Competition in March, which he said will provide excellent training on both the M-16 and the M-9.

WASHINGTON — "We do not need a draft," Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said in a July 16 interview with National Public Radio.

The all-volunteer force "has worked brilliantly for our country," he said.

Asked if he would rule out the idea of reinstituting a draft, Rumsfeld replied, "I'm not the government of the United States. I am just one person. But if you ask me personally would I rule it out, the answer is 'absolutely.'"

Noting that there are a lot of inequities in any draft, he said, "I would argue vigorously against reinstituting a draft."

The secretary pointed out that in the 1960s, he was one of the first members of Congress to introduce legislation to create an all-volunteer force.

Rumsfeld

The military's current recruiting and retention efforts are working well, Rumsfeld said.

"The Air Force is way above where it should be and is in the process of trying to reduce some of (its) numbers," he said. "The Navy's about where it wants to be, and the Marines are where they want to be."

There are one or two areas in the Army where retention "has not been as good as one would have anticipated," he said, and defense officials are carefully watching these areas. If necessary, he added, military officials can "increase incentives and reduce disincentives."

At present, Rumsfeld said, the armed forces have nearly 2.5 million men and women: 1.4 million in the active force and the remainder in the National Guard and Reserves. He predicted that any recruiting and retention shortfall would be "in the low few thousands."

The secretary noted that the number of Individual Ready Reserve members called to active duty "is a very modest number."

Letters went out July 6 to 5,674 members of the IRR, Soldiers who have completed an active-duty enlistment but still are within eight years of when they entered the military. All enlistees agree to an eight-year commitment, usually served in a combination of active, reserve-component and IRR service.

Of those who received the letters, Army officials said, roughly 4,000 will be brought to active duty.

Most of those will be in the specialties of military intelligence, engineers, truck drivers, and other combat service support forces.

Soldiers learn vital transport skills

When something absolutely, positively has to be there right away, the Army has ways to make it happen.

Soldiers with the 13th Combat Support Battalion spent Tuesday working with Flight Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, practicing one of the key methods of getting supplies to the front lines quickly and safely.

Soldiers from both units worked together to secure several pieces of equipment to a Blackhawk helicopter during the sling-load exercise.

Soldiers from the 598th Maintenance Company and the 104th Transportation Company fastened harnesses to a humvee, a pallet of MREs and a storage container and called in the aircraft for pick-up, cycling through each item three times throughout the day.

"Sling loading is a faster way of getting supplies from one destination to another," said Spc. Alberto Newcomb, who has participated in the training several times before. "As a 92A (warehouse specialist), this is an important part of my job."

"When we are deployed in Iraq, we need to do a lot of sling loading to get supplies from Southern Iraq to places in Central Iraq, like Baghdad," he said.

Newcomb said most of the supplies his unit ships out are transported by truck, and there is a big difference when it comes to sling loading supplies — a difference that gets the Soldiers' hearts pumping.

"This is a rush," said Pfc. Michael Davis, who was getting his first taste of sling-load training.

"This is going to go under the list of crazy things I've done in the Army," Davis said. "But I am looking forward to more of this."

"The main thing here is that we want the Soldiers to be confident, and this helps them build their confidence," said Lt. Col. Matthew Higginbotham, 13th CSB commander.

Higginbotham said the training the Soldiers receive on Fort Benning will help them with missions during their upcoming rotation at the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La., and help them maintain proficiency for future combat deployments.

The 13th CSB wasn't the only unit to benefit from the training. Warrant Officer Eric Barnett, a new pilot with Flight Company, said by helping the 13th CSB conduct sling-load operations, he and his comrades also had the opportunity to expand their experience.

Warrant Officer Richard Payton and Barnett both needed to perform sling-load training before they could be qualified at readiness level 1, which basically makes them combat-ready.

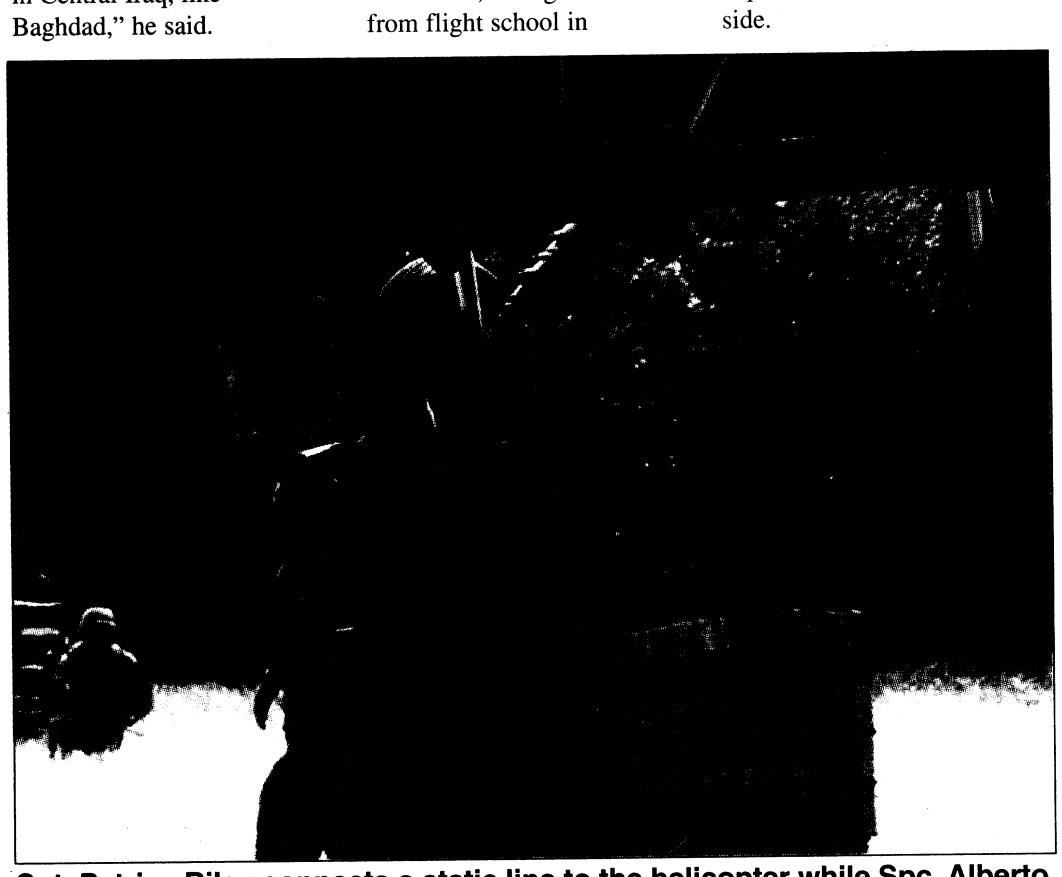
Barnett, who graduated from flight school in February, said most of the missions he and the other pilots fly are in support of the Rangers' training missions and involve transporting Soldiers for exercises like SPIES and FRIES, which doesn't require much sling loading.

Barnett said the exercise was a win-win situation, because the pilots and the Soldiers on the ground were able to get qualified at the same time.

One thing Barnett stressed was the amount of trust involved in sling-load operations.

"We have to trust they are rigging the equipment properly, because if one rope is too long, it can throw the load off balance, and we have to trust they are honest with the weight of the equipment," he said.

The Soldiers on the ground also have to trust the pilots and the crew because they are standing directly under the aircraft as they hook up the harnesses.



Master Sgt. Charles Lowe, NCOIC of the exercise, said safety was the most important issue during the training.

"I stress safety over and over to the Soldiers," he said. "We incorporate safety into everything we do out here."

The Soldiers trained all day Monday preparing for the hands-on training they received Tuesday, which let everyone know where they needed to be and what they needed to do.

Lowe also made sure each soldier who was sling-loading for the first time had an experienced Soldier at his side.

Warrant Officer Richard Payton flies over the "Bone Yard" with a humvee.

Retention: Army calls up IRR Soldiers for deployments little more than half of the military occupational specialties qualify for bonuses at re-enlistment time.

The average bonus is $4,200 for someone who re-ups for three years and $8,300 for six years and the Army also offers various programs with enlistment.

"You are not going to find a more patriotic group of young Americans," Byrne said.

About 5,600 Inactive Ready Reserve Soldiers were recently notified they were being called to active duty to fill around 4,400 requirements. There may be the need for more Soldiers in the future, Byrne said.

The IRR Soldiers received a mailgram telling them they are being called to active duty and another packet would arrive with their orders 30 days later.

At that point, they will be told where to report, go through an intensive screening and then receive common task training.

If IRR Soldiers have been out of the Army for a while, they will get current military occupational specialty training.

They will then report to an installation to join their units, 60 to 90 days before deployment.

The Army is also trying to provide predictability for Soldiers.

"We try to get the Soldiers together 90 to 100 days before so they are doing things collectively," Byrne said. "They deploy as a unit and come back together. The focus is on the unit."

This predictability will allow Soldiers to have full knowledge of when they are going to deploy so they can be with their unit before deployment. This will also allow for greater unit stability.

The effort to create predictability is to allow Reserve Soldiers and National Guardsmen called to active duty enough time to work with their employers.

Byrne also spoke briefly about the Reservist and National Guardsmen having employee rights, full benefits and job security.

Lt. Col. Richard Guzzetta, a National Guardsmen, said as members return from Iraq, they are working very closely with the communities to welcome them home properly.

He also said there are more than 400 family assistance centers to aid families of National Guard Soldiers while they are deployed.

ACP: Construction hampered by rain

The concrete pour is usually completed by 8 a.m.

But before the concrete could be placed, the ground needed to dry in order to compact the dirt so that the GAB, graded aggregate base, could be laid.

The GAB helps support the concrete road, Rosito said.

When the old concrete was pulled up, there were places that the concrete was actually floating, she said.

During the first three months of construction, most of the work done was underground, Rosito said.

Storm drain pipes were installed, drainage ponds were built and the road widened.

"It looked like nothing was going on, if you're not in the construction business," Johnson said. "But day to day, progress was being made."

CLOSER LOOK

As of Wednesday, the contractor is ahead of the revised schedule for completion of the I-185 site and remains ahead of schedule for overall contract completion, according to Jack Bartholet, area engineer. The entire access control point contract is on a very aggressive and tight schedule for completion of all sites. The contractor's early completion date for I-185 was Aug. 23. That date became impossible because of the rain in June and first week of July. Reassessment of the completion dates at all sites are:

- I-185 — Sept. 28. This date allows for one more week of unusually severe weather and one week of unforeseen problems in construction.
- Sand Hill — Aug. 27. This date doesn't allow for bad weather or construction problems.
- Eddy Bridge — Sept. 28. No allowances.
- Benning Road — Will start construction one week after I-185 completed. Complete Feb. 21, 2005. No allowances.
- 1st Division road — Will start construction one week after I-185 completed. Complete Feb. 5, 2005. No allowances.
- Custer Road— Start construction after completion of Benning Road. Complete June 20, 2005. No allowances.

Passersby should see evidence of the progress when the checkpoint canopy is placed within the next couple of weeks, Rosito said.

And commuters can look forward to using the I-185 access control point by late September.

If the weather holds.

straight," said Col. James Yarbrough, Fort Benning's assistant commandant.

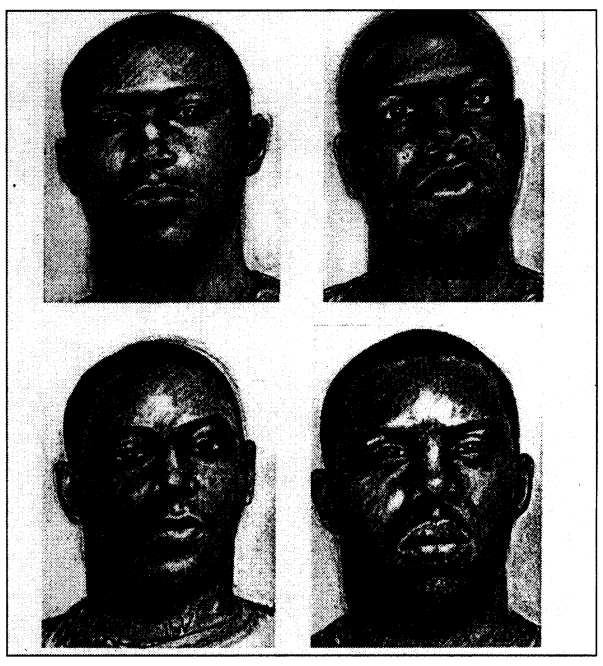
Moments later, Wilson was awarded the Purple Heart and an Army Commendation Medal with a V Device for valor.

The second award came as a surprise to Wilson, who said he bears no grudge for the long wait.

"I'm not bitter, no," he said, as he addressed the small crowd of friends and fellow former Soldiers. "I was in the military 21 years — I know we lose paperwork.

"I've never really been worried about the Purple Heart. The real reason I'm here is for the dog. I wanted him to get the recognition he deserved," said Wilson, who retired in 1982. "Duke's going to be with me until the day I die. I think about him every day. That's how important he was to me. This is for Duke."

Yarbrough said it was fitting to honor Duke and his handler at a time when working dogs are once again proving invaluable on the battlefield. Lloyds of London, he noted, insures scout dogs in Afghanistan for $50,000 each.



"Scout dogs are a very small population ... a scarce commodity ... but they're always on point, always in the operation," he said. "When it comes to detection, they're better than any battlefield technology, bar none."

Post chaplains host Clergy Day

Clergy from the tri-community area get a look at the inside of a Stryker during this year's clergy day, July 15.

Event promotes military, civilian teamwork

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

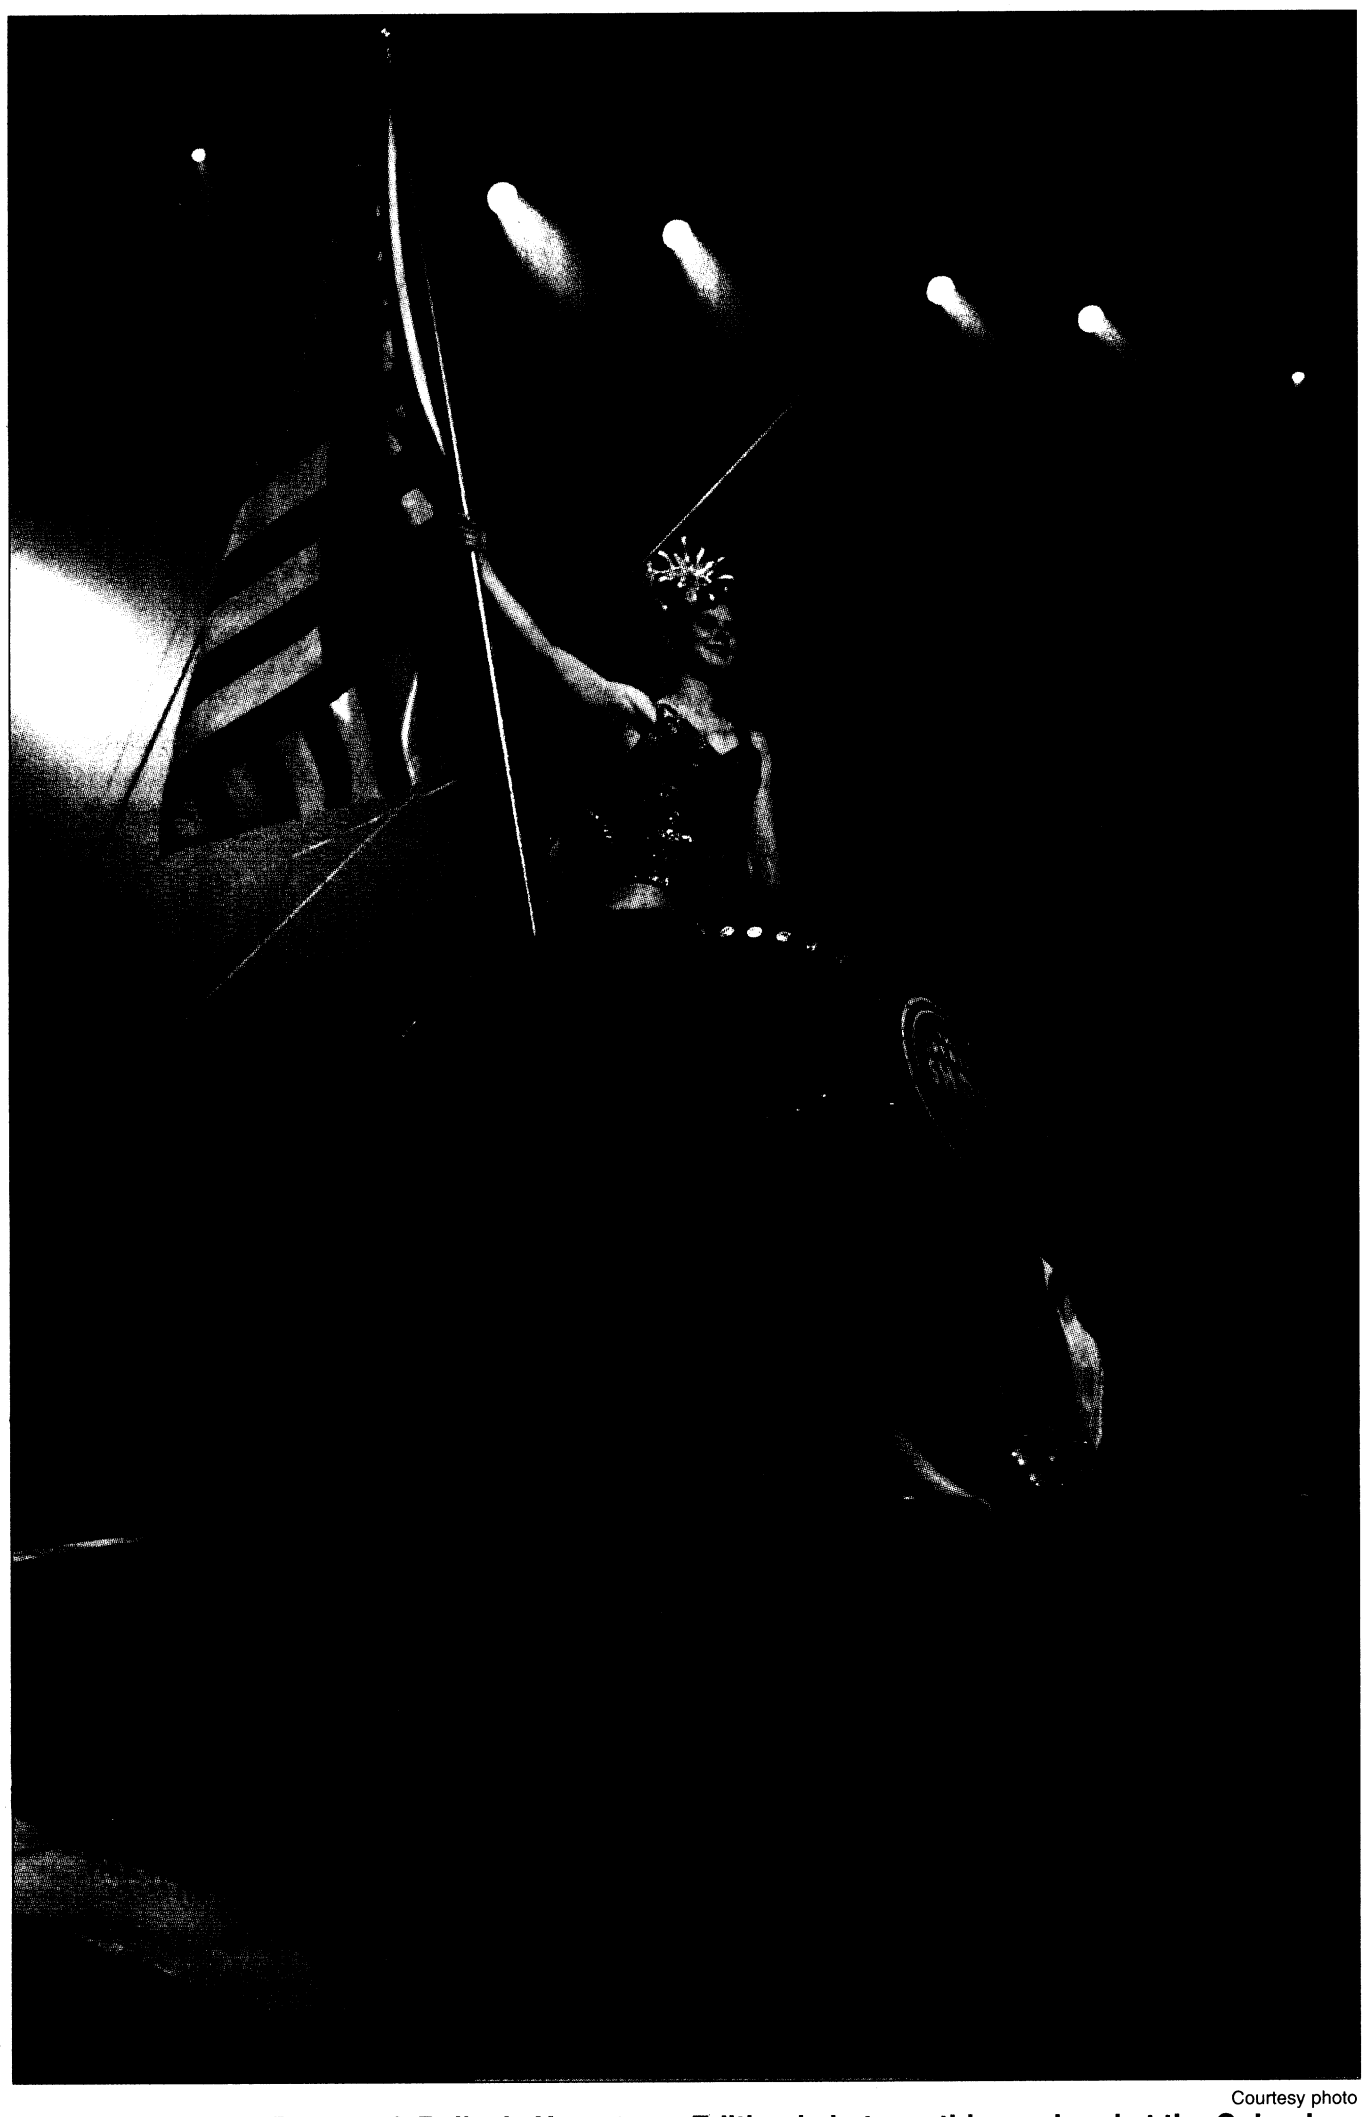
More than 30 years ago, the Rev. Orville Whitacre Jr. took the physical required of all young men and women joining the Army at the time and waited for the call to active duty.

After 38 years, Whitacre, along with many other clergymen and women, finally got "the call" — an invitation to Fort Benning to promote camaraderie between the civilian clergy and the Army chaplaincy.

More than 30 men and women from the tricommunity attended Fort Benning's annual Clergy Day July 15 at The Infantry Center Chapel.

"The event is uniquely designed to foster relationships between civilian and military clergy," said Chaplain (Maj.) Kenneth Revell, 11th Infantry Regiment chaplain. "We both minister to the same constituency, and this event also gives us the opportunity to tell the Fort Benning story and familiarize the civilian clergy with the military."

Revell said there is a profound interest in the military chaplaincy from the civilian side as to what chaplains do and how the military works.



To help eliminate the mystique, Clergy Day exposes, educates and recruits civilian clergy.

The guests began their visit with an introduction to Fort Benning by Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ruben Colon, deputy post chaplain.

The presentation covered Fort Benning's history, mission, units, training, the importance of the installation's mission as a power

Ringling Bros. circus comes to town

Ringling Brothers Barnum & Bailey's Hometown Edition is in town this weekend at the Columbus Civic Center. The venue is offering a military discount to ID card holders.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Prepare for the ultimate in fun and entertainment this weekend.

Ringling Brothers Barnum & Bailey's Hometown Edition began performing at the Columbus Civic Center Wednesday and will continue through Sunday.

The Hometown Edition, which just began this year, is a condensed version of Ringling Bros.' renowned three-ring circus, said Brian Newman, production manager for the Hometown Edition.

The smaller size of the circus allows it to visit smaller venues and towns that have been skipped over in the past, because their venues and amenities couldn't accomodate the size of the three-ring edition, he said.

"We've basically taken all three rings and squeezed them down into one," Newman said. "But we definitely haven't scrimped on the quality of our acts."

Steeped in the 134-year Ringling Bros. tradition, the Hometown Edition features performers who walk the high wires, swing from trapezes and perform with elephants, horses, you name it.

The Extreme Espanas will demonstrate their sky-wheel act, performing tricks and feats inside, outside and atop a hamster wheel of sorts, Newman said.

Then there's the Thunderdome act, during which three motorcyclists race their bikes inside a globe less than 14 feet across, reaching speeds of up to 70 mph.

The Flying Tabares will perform their award-winning, high-flying trapeze act, as well.

"The Tabares are the winners of the Golden Clown in Monte Carlo — that's the circus equivalent of the Academy Award," Newman explained.

And you won't want to miss Hercules, the circus' strong man, who will catch a cannonball fired from a cannon and hold a 75-pound weight over a running chain saw, drop it, then catch it again before it hits the chain saw, all with one hand.

Meanwhile, clown Jon Weiss will wow the audience with his daring feats, balancing anything from a running chain saw to a 12-foot A-frame ladder on his chin.

Newman said the reduced size of

WARNING: ESTROGEN-CHARGED RECOMMENDATION TO FOLLOW.

Right, so, I love rock music. Not so much the flaky, peppy, I'm-30-but-I-think-I'm-still-in-high-school genre. More the heavy, loud, frightfully angry, bang-your-head-against-the-wall rock music.

All that aggression, energy and just complete frustration channeled into something I can listen to and sing (translate: scream) along with ... I know, I sound nuts. But it's kind of a relief to hear a song that speaks to you and lets you know you're not alone out there.

Unfortunately, there are very few female rock artists that I would consider respectable. Not every girl can scream till her throat is raw and still appease my ears.

But every now and then, the bitter, sarcastic, jaded girl in me likes to hear herself and all her daunting female experiences in those songs.

So, I allow for the occasional "soft" or "pop" rock artists to creep into my CD collection.

And one that will soon join those few is a somewhat new release from Jen Foster.

She's no stranger to the Columbus scene, so you may have heard of her. But if you haven't, she's definitely worth checking out.

And you'll have that chance next week, when she visits The Loft on Broadway.

I haven't heard many of her songs — actually, just a few clips here and there. But her lyrics are pretty impressive, if you ask me.

Think sedated, pre-I'm-so-in-love-with-Van-Wilder Alanis Morrissette.

Terminally ill boy's wish to come true at Benning

Child 'star' to open in post Army concert tour

Paulette Brown
Make-A-Wish Foundation

ATLANTA — Frankie Pickard, an 11-year-old from Coweta County whose wish to be a country music star was granted by the Make-A-Wish Foundation, is continuing to live his dream.

His highest-profile performance is approaching: A concert at Fort Benning July 31.

The boy will perform alongside current country music stars and in front of thousands of military personnel and civilians.

Frankie will open for country music star David Kersh at Wetherby Field as part of the Miller Lite Army Concert Tour's Honky Tonk Tailgate Party. Kersh was so inspired by Frankie's story that he volunteered to sing back-up for the young star when he performs.

Frankie

Frankie's original CD, Open Heart with a Country Beat, hit the Atlanta airwaves last June, and he has spent the past year recording more songs and performing nationally.

The Make-A-Wish Foundation, a nonprofit organization dedicated to granting the wishes of children with life-threatening medical conditions, made Frankie's wish come true by allowing him to collaborate with professional songwriters and musicians on his first single, Eva, a tune written about his "then" girlfriend.

After producing the CD, Make-A-Wish surprised Frankie with a CD release party at the Hard Rock Café in downtown Atlanta, where he walked the red carpet along with his bodyguards, stopping to sign autographs for fans and posing for the paparazzi.

Make-A-Wish made sure his rise to "stardom" was as true to life as possible and provided him with a personal stylist, photographer, publicist and even an entertainment lawyer. Frankie's wish experience culminated with an honorary induction into the Georgia Music Hall of Fame.

Since his three-day wish experience officially ended, Frankie has become a local celebrity and received national exposure and media attention.

He has performed at Make-A-Wish

Fort Benning EFMP offers info, resources

Seminars, referrals help families

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Since 2000, Marsha Collins has worked to make Fort Benning's Exceptional Family Member Program the best it can be. And she has the program's accreditation certificate hanging above her desk as proof that the program is set up to provide what families need.

The EFMP has been around since the late 1970s, but enrollment in the program wasn't made mandatory until 1986. The program is designed to provide a comprehensive and coordinated approach to services for families with special needs with medical, educational, community, housing and personnel services. Collins is able to provide families with a variety of services, including information, referral, resources, and respite care.

Although Collins said she doesn't see all of the more than 1,300 Fort Benning families enrolled in the program, she establishes and maintains their files.

"Many Soldiers don't understand what (EFMP) is and what it means," Collins said. "But enrollment is important for children or spouses with asthma, food allergies, or (medical conditions) needing specialists."

Collins said she is part of a committee of representatives of post agencies that meets quarterly to talk about problems, ensure that Soldiers are in-processed correctly and that the programs standards are met. Her special needs resource team meets weekly with representatives from the Early Intervention Program and Child and Youth Services to discuss needs of family members going into child-care services. There, the team discusses plans that need to be implemented.

For example, Collins said, the community health nurse would identify any training needed to help workers care for a child with a seizure disorder. The staff would learn what might trigger the seizure, so they could try to keep the child away from the triggers.

She also has a database of off-post services she can refer families to, and has a memorandum of agreement with the Chaplains' Family Life Center for help with support groups.

As the parent of a special needs child, Collins recognizes the importance of support groups.

"When the doctor says you should seek support and counseling," Collins said, "it's a good idea. You have to get yourself strong. The problem won't go away."

So Collins has developed the EFMP information and support resource exchange session held the second Wednesday of every month.

In June, the exchange addressed new ideas for special education and gave information about understanding the special education system and new law. July's session was devoted to educating preschoolers with special needs and the Aug. 11 topic is Asperger Syndrome, a higher-end neurological syndrome that affects social and sensory skills.

Collins has mapped out topics through May 2005, covering everything from attention deficit disorder and asthma to straight talk about autism.

The exchange is important, but Collins said the best support groups are actually parent-driven, even with as few as three people. She also has a library of print and video resources available for parents.

Collins holds a master's in educational counseling and worked for many years as a drug and alcohol counselor before returning to Fort Benning from Germany. She said she wanted to "homestead" here because of her own special needs child, working at first as a relocation specialist until she felt the need to do something different. She got into the EFMP program because of her counseling experience and her desire to help families.

Collins thought her job change in 2000 was "timed just right," coming on board just as the Army Community Service accreditation process was coming into play, helping her learn a lot about the EFMP and its many standards.

The current accreditation is valid until 2006, at which time Collins said they will complete the process again.

"The accreditation has helped improve access for those with disabilities," Collins said. "Gyms, bowling alleys – everyone should have access to services. It's a good thing for Fort Benning."

Collins also refers families to off-post recreational programs for their special-needs children like Challenger baseball and TOPSoccer. Collins has been personally involved in Challenger baseball in Columbus for many years and considers it a good, inexpensive program.

This year, at the request of many parents and from the commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, the EFMP will offer Camp Follow Me, a day camp for special needs children held on post.

The 18 volunteers for the camp and five Fort Benning staff members went through orientation on July 14, where they received an overview of working with the children and learned about behavior management, CPR and first aid. Although Collins said enrollment for this, the camp's first year, was low, she expects it will grow.

Wish: To come true for child at Benning DMWR concert events across the country, been a guest conductor for the Gwinnett Philharmonic, and opened for performers Glen Campbell and Joe Nichols. He is scheduled to perform at the NFL Hall of Fame induction ceremony this fall.

"The past year has just been incredible for me," said Frankie, who suffers from a life-threatening heart condition and has endured multiple heart surgeries.

Frankie's family believes that his wish has had a positive affect on his health.

"Frankie was supposed to have another transplant a few months after his wish," his mother said, "but his doctors said he was doing so well that they have postponed the surgery indefinitely."

Although there is no data to prove a connection, many doctors believe the emotional impact of a wish does have a positive effect on a child's medical condition.

"When Frankie is on stage, he is at his happiest and he is in an entirely different world," his father said. "He lives off the energy he gets from the audience."

To download Frankie's song and video or to e-mail him, visit www.wish.org/Frankie.

Gates at the Army concert tour open at 6 p.m., and the concert will begin at 7. Tickets are on sale at Bill Heard Chevrolet, online at www.benningmwr.com, or on post at Omega World Travel, the Officers' Club, or DMWR office in Building 2783.

Tickets are $15 in advance or $20 at the gate. A limited number of family four pack ticket packages are available for $50 and must be purchased in advance. The concert is open to the public.

Fans are welcome to bring lawn chairs or blankets, but no pets or outside coolers. Parking at Wetherby field is free.

the circus will allow the audience to more thoroughly enjoy the performances.

"It really focuses the attention of the audience and lets them pay attention to what's going on in the ring," he said. "At (the three-ring circus), you sometimes feel like you've missed something if you look away for a moment to see something else."

The Hometown Edition is also Ringling Bros.' most interactive show, he said.

The edition includes an opportunity for ticket-holders to get up close and personal with the performers an hour before the event during a pre-show and involves the audience right up to the end of the show.

"This is a great chance to get out, relax and just have a good time," Newman said. "I see the show every night, and I still love it. I promise you, you'll leave smiling."

Shows will be at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday through July 24, 11:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. July 24 and 2 p.m. July 25.

Tickets are $12 for the last six rows in the upper level, $17 for lower and upper level, $22 for VIP and Telescopics and $27 for VIP floor seats. Children ages 2 and older must have a ticket.

There is also a military discount available — $5 off $12 and $15 tickets for any performance. For the discount, tickets can be purchased at Omega World Travel or at the Columbus Civic Center with military I.D. Tickets are on sale now. Visit ticketmaster.com.

GOH: Jen Foster at The Loft

acoustic, and there are definite messages there. There are the same feelings that I and probably every other chick on Earth who's ever been in a relationship or just simply existed can identify with.

All those inner struggles girls go through — finding your self-worth; being torn between being free to do your own thing and being grounded in a relationship; getting over a break-up; sacrificing all these things about yourself to become this domestic goddess for whoever and seeing it blow up in your face; trying to live up to other people's expectations ...

Not to say that guys don't go through some of this stuff, too, but I think it's fair to say the sexes deal with it differently. And it's nice, it's a relief, to hear a woman put those experiences into something as tangible as music.

Now, I'm not touting her as the perfect female artist or anything. Like I said, I've never actually seen her perform. And there are a few times in her songs, that I've heard, when she almost sounds like she's whining (her voice, not her lyrics).

But I'm going to see her at The Loft Wednesday night. And you should check her out, too. It's free, so you've got nothing to lose.

And on a scale of one to 10, I think she'll be awesome.

Doors open at 8 p.m. Wednesday. Show starts at 9 p.m. And in case I didn't mention this, IT'S FREE.

Clergy: Visit Benning chaplains, see Army life projection platform and the mission of the chaplaincy.

"The Soldiers are trained to kill; that's their job," Colon said during the briefing. "They get up every day to do their job just like you do. They're trained to kill, but they are also human beings. We're here to link arms during this time of war."

Whitacre, now a reverend at the White Rock Assembly of God in Phenix City, said 5 percent of his congregation is military retirees.

"We're here to help one another," Whitacre said. "They can use all the help they can get. I am very proud of the military and am willing to do whatever (I can) to support them."

Disappointed at not being called up to serve his country 38 years ago, Whitacre said he would love to be a part of the chaplaincy — it's his patriotic duty.

During the visit, the clergy members visited the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and the 29th Infantry Regiment, where they got an up close look at the Stryker and Bradley vehicles.

The clergy then traveled to Sand Hill, where they dined with Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers asked them questions about their experiences in the Army.

Their final stop included the Soldier's Chapel and the Chaplains' Family Life Center.

"The high tempo of Soldiers give civilian ministries the opportunity to fill the void of religious support for them and their families," Revell said.

"The chaplaincy has to consolidate everything because of its resources," he said.

"People want to hold on to what home looks like, so they sometimes go outside the military chaplaincy to find it. The better civilian clergy understands the unique transitional needs of military families, the better they can address those needs," he said.

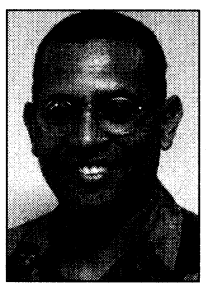
May we all live honorable and memorable lives

Chaplain (Maj.) Luis R. Scott
Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation

The movie Saving Private Ryan begins with an older gentleman walking in a cemetery looking for a particular tomb. He looks wobbly. He looks frail and tears begin to roll down his cheeks.



All of a sudden, the audience is sent to the beaches of Normandy in the middle of one of the most vicious and deadliest battles of World War II. As the images shock and sadden us, several names flash on the screen. The name Ryan appears a couple of times. Many good men died that day.

But Pvt. Ryan was not among them. However, the Army decided that since Pvt. Ryan's brothers had died in battle, it was time for Ryan to come home.

A squad was sent to find him. A courageous school teacher, Capt. Miller, led the men to find Ryan. After much search and sacrifice, they found Ryan.

One more battle had to be fought. Miller was mortally wounded, and as he fired his .45 at an oncoming tank, Ryan reached the man who had given so much to save him.

REFLECTIONS

Scott

Miller whispered on Ryan's ears the words that would mark him for the rest of his life — "Earn this."

We do not know how Ryan lived his life. We do not know what kind of husband and father he was. But we know that he lived with a heavy burden.

He had to honor the lives of those who paid the ultimate sacrifice to save him.

For Ryan, living recklessly was not an option. For him, the only alternative was to be a man of honor, a man of integrity and a man with dignity — a good man.

Ryan approached Miller's tomb and as he faced the white cross that adorned the grave, he turned with tears in his eyes and pleads with his wife, "Please tell me that I have been a good man."

He did the best he could, but he could not accept anything less. His entire life had been lived to honor a man he only knew for several hours, but anything less would not be enough.

All of us have experienced a gracious act from someone else. Most of us do not know what it means to have someone die on our behalf. But like Ryan, who found himself before the cross of the dead man, all of us will one day give an account to God for our lives before a different cross.

Would we find a witness who can say to us the words Ryan's wife said to him, "You have been a good man?"

Have we lived in such a way that we carry the burden of honoring those who have preceded us? Are we worthy of their memories?

Everyone needs to know what their purpose in life is

The four 'C's' can benefit both you and your family

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Do you remember the comedy classic City Slickers, with Billy Crystal? How about Crystal's rough-and-tumble-trail-boss-mentor Curly?

Right before he dies, Curly has a heart-to-heart with Crystal's character about the meaning of life.

He holds up his weathered, darkly tanned finger in Crystal's face and tells him "there's one thing that worth living for."

Crystal, exhausted by the pounding of his trail ride and anxious for an answer, sidles up next to the dying man and pleads, "What is that one thing?"

"That's for you to figure out!" Curly slyly replies — and then comically kicks the bucket!

Hawkins

Have you found that "one thing?" Curly knew that everyone lives best for a purpose, and that everyone needs to know what that purpose is.

I heard from one of our Fort Benning wives this week, Heidi Hovan, who had great things to say about "the benefits of believing." You see, she found out what was worth living for in her faith — her relationship with God.

What are the benefits of believing for you and your family? Heidi reminds us, they are "the four C's":

• Confidence. Confidence says we can walk tall, proud of who we are and what we stand for. When we have faith, we have confidence because the one we believe in has already won that confidence. Colossians 1:15 says that Jesus is the "image of the invisible God." He has already merited our confidence just because he's God!

• Connection. We all desire connection with either someone or something, don't we? When we yield our lives to Jesus, then we're able to have a real, vibrant connection with God. And when we're connected with God, we get the power to connect with others around us (our mate, our family, our friends, etc.). How's your power?

• Continuity. In Jeremiah 29:11, God promises to give our lives a purpose if we have faith. This is exactly what Crystal's character craved! We have direction and a purpose. We can then give our lives continuity. Our thoughts, our actions, decisions and relationships "stay on azimuth" when God is "magnetic North" in our lives.

• Conviction. When we have faith in God, his presence helps guide us. We begin to realize that we have convictions, and going against God disrupts his plans for us and hurts us in the process. This conviction acts like a rudder to keep us on path and help us achieve the purposes God has for us.

Believing is good — believing together is even better!

Chapel is a time to celebrate the "one thing" you believe in with others who are all tracking the same direction. Life isn't a solo sport!

So enjoy the benefits of believing and circle up with other members of the team this week at a chapel or a church of your choice. It'll do your family good.

And if you're looking for a casual, contemporary service that targets the real day-to-day needs of young Soldiers and families, then come out and see me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill — it's open to everyone!

We at the Chaplain Family Life Center, 545-1760, look forward to serving you!

Paintball enthusiast Travis Higginbotham shows required gear. The new Fort Benning paintball course is currently under construction.

DMWR paintball course opens soon

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

The opening of a post recreational paintball course by the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation is scheduled for mid-August.

Once opened, the course, which is located behind the Afterhours Club on Anderson, will be open from 4 to 8 p.m. on weekdays and 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on weekends.

Safety equipment is required, including long-sleeved shirts, long pants and closed-toe shoes. Masks will be provided by the facility, as well as all other equipment necessary for participation, said Richard Martin, the director of community activities.

Costs are expected to run about $30 for an all-day session, Martin said. That fee includes equipment, field use charges and 500 rounds of paintballs.

Players must be at least 4 feet tall and 10 years old, he said, and all players must receive a mandatory safety briefing.

Martin said the playing area is approximately the size of two football fields and will be netted off.

Blow-up barriers and other gaming structures will be installed in the next few weeks.

The facility comes at the request of the Fort Benning community, Martin said.

"People were already playing on their own," said Cliff Hughes, recreation program manager. "They were paying too much for materials, driving too far for them. There was no designated area and no safety measures."

Martin said the paintball facility will be another way for residents to enjoy the outdoors and encouraged those interested to attend the grand opening when it is scheduled.

"A portion of the proceeds from paintball fees will be returned to the MWR fund for reinvestment in Soldier and community programs," he said.

For more information, call 545-7978.

CYS to host skateboard competition on post

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Child and Youth Services will host a free skateboard competition at the CYS skatepark July 31.

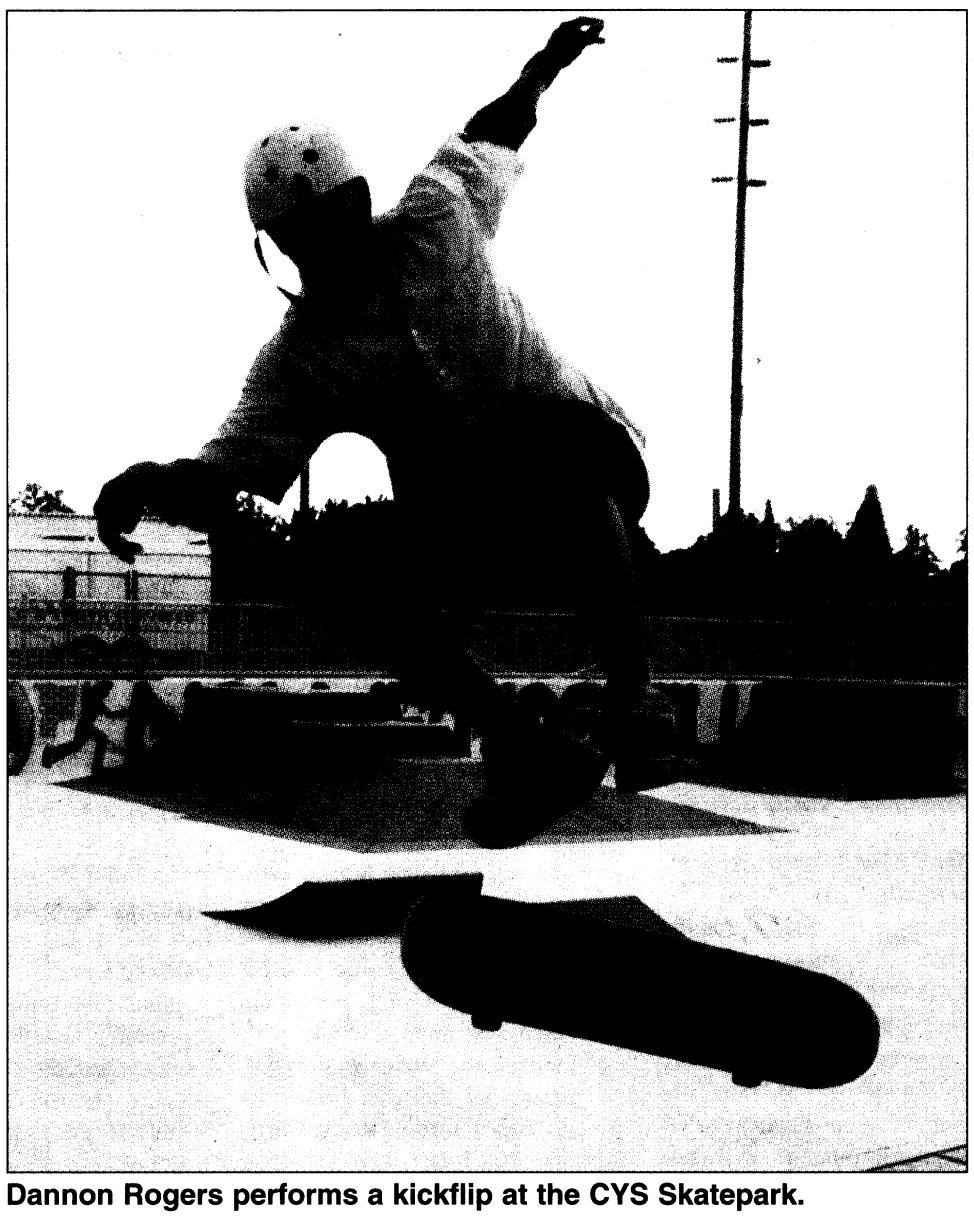
The competition will be open to all children between the ages of 10 and 18, whether they're affiliated with Fort Benning or not.

"Opening the competition to the public gives everybody a chance to see what we have to offer, and it lets the outside world know we are here," said Khristi Miller, child and youth program assistant.

"I am looking forward to this competition," she said. "I think it's going to be big."

Chelsea Beyer, 13, an avid skateboarder, said the skatepark is a really good place for people to skate and compete, even if they're just beginners.

"I go to the skatepark all the time, and I'm surprised it's not as crowded as I'd expect it to be," she said.



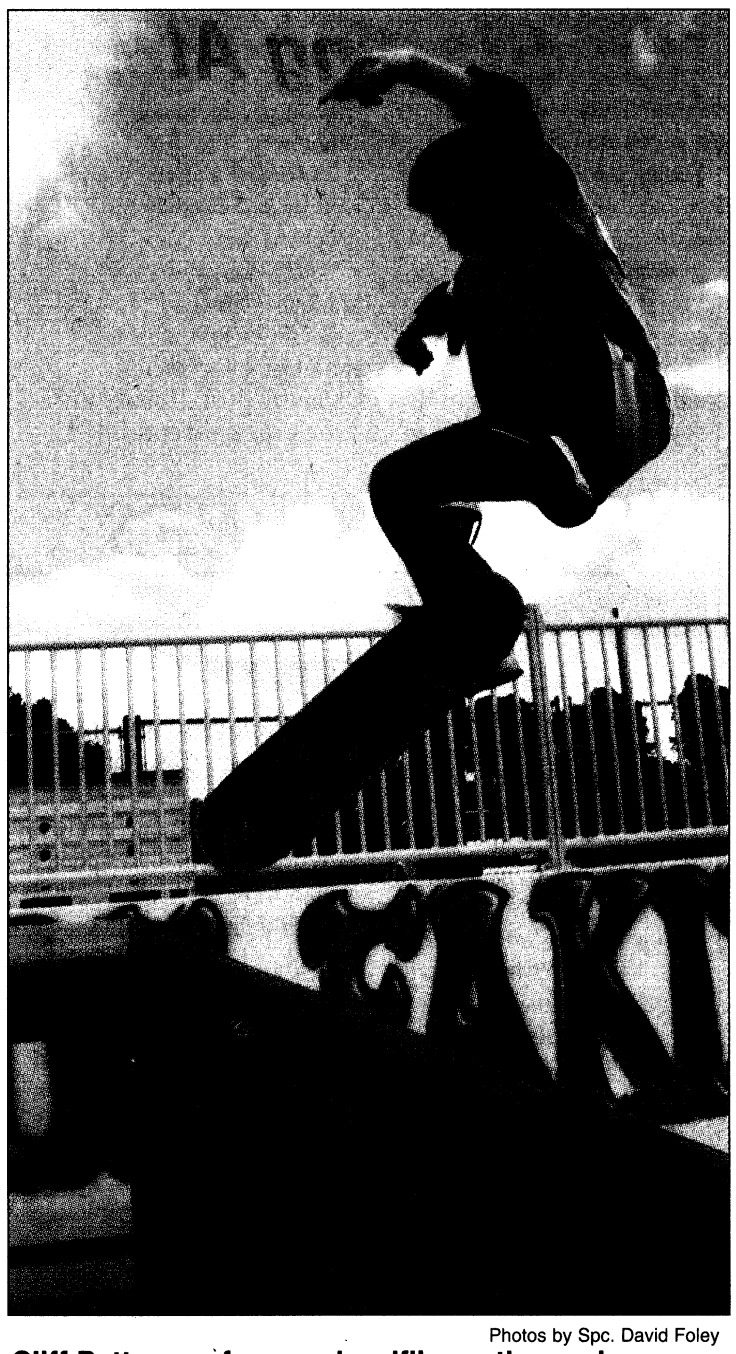
For skaters who don't frequent the skatepark and do not have the required equipment, CYS has skateboards, knee and elbow pads, helmets and inline skates to loan competitors.

The competition will be divided into three age groups, 10-12, 13-15 and 16-18. Each skater will make three runs and be judged in three categories — overall, sickest trick and consistency.

While the "sickest trick" category looks for the coolest trick, Miller said. The "overall" category is based on the skater's variety of tricks and the use of the park as a whole.

The "consistency" rating is based on the skater's ability to make tricks flow smoothly and appear effortless.

"A lot of kids are excited about this," Miller said. "And we have quite a few good skaters here. I've seen what some of them can do, and they are really good."

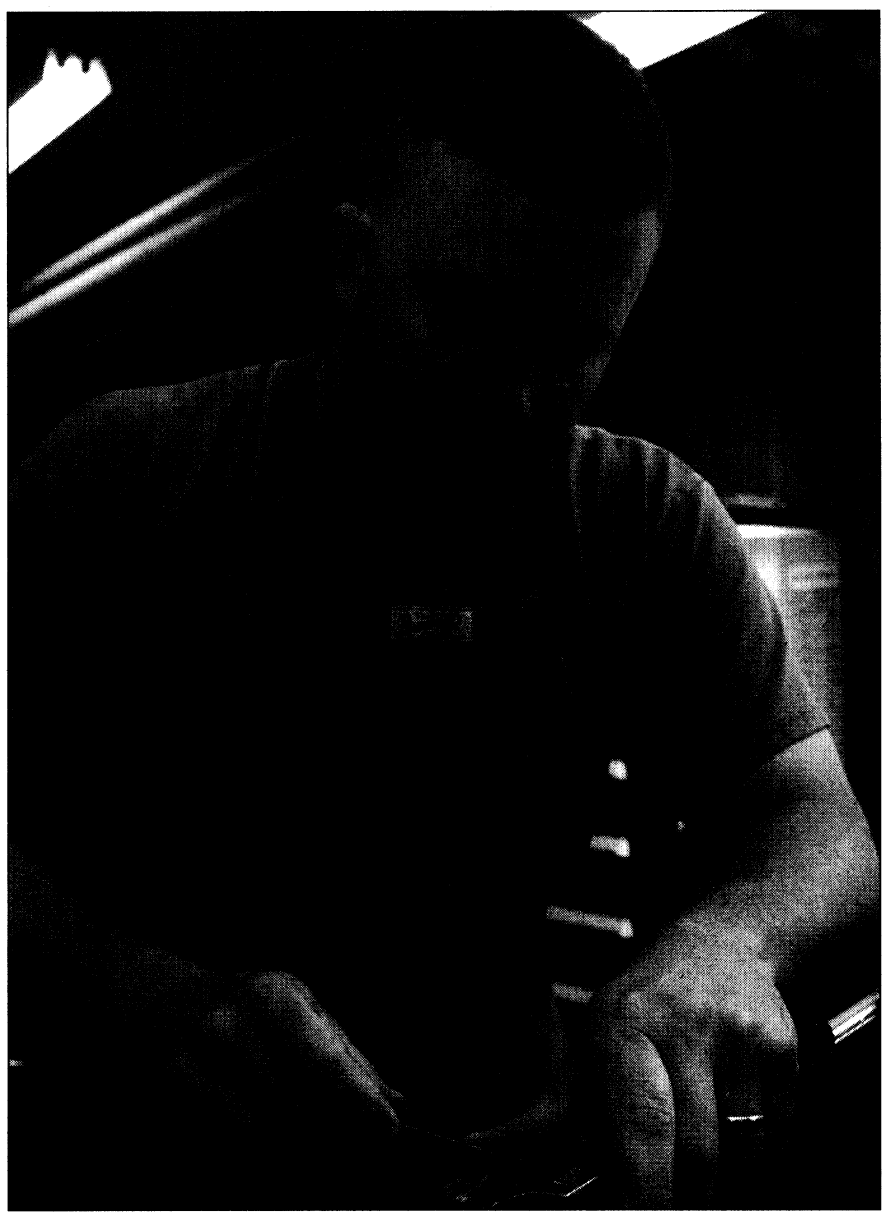


Dannon Rogers performs a kickflip at the CYS Skatepark.

"I've competed in competitions before," Beyer said. "They can be nerve-racking but mostly they are really fun."

Beyer will not be able to make it to the July 31 competition, but there's still a chance for her to show off her tricks at the next competition Aug. 14.

Competitors must register by July 28 for the July 31 competition, and by Aug. 11 for the Aug. 14 competition.



For more information or to register for the competitions, call Miller at 545-3540.

Gunsmith finds peace in quiet

Courtesy photo

Sgt. 1st Class Charles Gartland, a gunsmith with Fort Benning's U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will accompany the unit's shooters to the Olympics in Athens, Greece, next month.

Skilled Soldier earns trip to Olympics

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

He who gets the gold gets the glory. But he who gets the glory knows who to credit.

"The gunsmiths are the real unsung heroes," said Sgt. 1st Class Daryl Szarenski, who'll represent the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in the International Pistol Shoot at the Olympics in Athens, Greece, next month.

When Szarenski's pistol broke at the World Championship two years ago, one of the team's nine gunsmiths came to the rescue.

"They don't get a lot of press, but we're really thankful for them," he said.

Sgt. 1st Class Charles Gartland doesn't care much about getting press. The 39-year-old international gunsmith said he's not "the front page type." He's more the hunting and fishing type. The farming type. The quiet, outdoor type.

"I don't get real excited. I don't jump up and down about anything," Gartland said of his impending trip to Greece, where he'll stand ready to make any necessary repairs for the AMU's seven Olympians. "But I'm glad to be selected. That says a lot."

Gartland, who lives on a farm in Buena Vista, Ga., with his wife, Gennie, took a two-year hiatus from the Army after his first enlistment to study gunsmithing at the Colorado School of Trades in 1989. Gunsmithing was a natural fit for the Kentucky native who grew up hunting and learned early how to modify and improve his own guns.

And the AMU was a natural fit for a gunsmith who recognized quality weapons when he saw them.

"The Army has the best, the highest level, top-of-the line equipment and facilities," he said. "If you want to work with the best, this is the place to be."

Gartland was selected to accompany the team to Greece because he's among the most senior gunsmiths in the shop, the basement warehouse where thousands of guns are repaired, modified and improved for the AMU's 75 marksmen.

"There are a lot of guys just as deserving as me who never got to go," he said. "The timing's just right for me."

> "There are a lot of guys just as deserving as me who never got to go. The timing's just right for me."

Gartland shirks praise, but his skill has not gone unnoticed. He's often selected to accompany the team to international competitions, his work with the M-9 pistol earned him recognition with the Department of Defense, and his modifications are credited for helping the Army's Service Pistol Team win the Interservice and National Service Pistol championships.

But Gartland's hoping his work will not be recognized at the Olympics, where everything goes right if nothing goes wrong.

"I'll be there if I'm needed," he said. "But hopefully I won't be needed."

Bowling tourney success

Volunteers make difference for athletes

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Peach Bowl Lanes became a deafening cross between a bowling alley and a pep rally this weekend.

The Columbus venue was home to the Special Olympics Masters Bowling Tournament Saturday and Sunday.

More than 730 mentally retarded athletes from around Georgia competed in the annual tournament, helped and cheered on by coaches, friends and volunteers.

And about 370 volunteers turned out to help at the event, said Myra Tinney, volunteer coordinator for the tournament.

Their hard work paid off.

"The event was a total success," Tinney said. "The best we've ever had."

Tinney said the tournament allows the athletes not only to compete against their peers, but to get a feeling of satisfaction that they're able to participate in normal activities and that they're supported by the community.

And it's volunteers who give the athletes the support and encouragement they need, she said.

Staff Sgt. Salina Hernandez, vice president of Fort Benning's Sergeant Audie Murphy Club, said she and several other members of the club volunteered to show their support for the community.

"It was to show that we're Soldiers 24-7, that we're able to help out when and where we're needed," she said.

Hernandez said the tournament ended up being a "wonderful experience."

"I was glad I went," she said. "Just being able to help out with people who just need a little bit of encouragement ... It was a great thing to be a part of."

Spc. Jason Alvarado and a few other troops from Fort Benning's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers spent their Saturday afternoon assisting wheelchair-bound competitors with ramp bowling and cheering on more able-bodied athletes.

"It's such a great program — everyone just has fun," Alvarado said.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit ammunition specialist has participated in Special Olympics events before, when he was stationed at Fort Carson, Colo., and said he thoroughly enjoys each event he helps out at.

"I enjoy giving me to this program," he said. "It just gives me that great feeling of knowing that I'm going out and doing something good."

Alvarado said a defining moment for him was when Jerrick, a ramp bowler he assisted, won a Silver Medal.

"When he got that medal, it felt good to know I had helped him," Alvarado said. "I felt like I did something good with my weekend."

But more importantly, he said, he learned something this weekend.

"Spending time with Special Olympics athletes is a good learning experience," he said. "They have no worries, and they're happy — they show us that we can all come together as a team and just have a great day."

Special Olympics hosts several events throughout the year.

In November, there will be another bowling tournament, this one local and for mentally retarded children.

In December, Columbus will host a Special Olympics basketball tournament.

NCO makes Olympic team, will race walk in Athens

Tim Hipps
ASACFSC Public Affairs

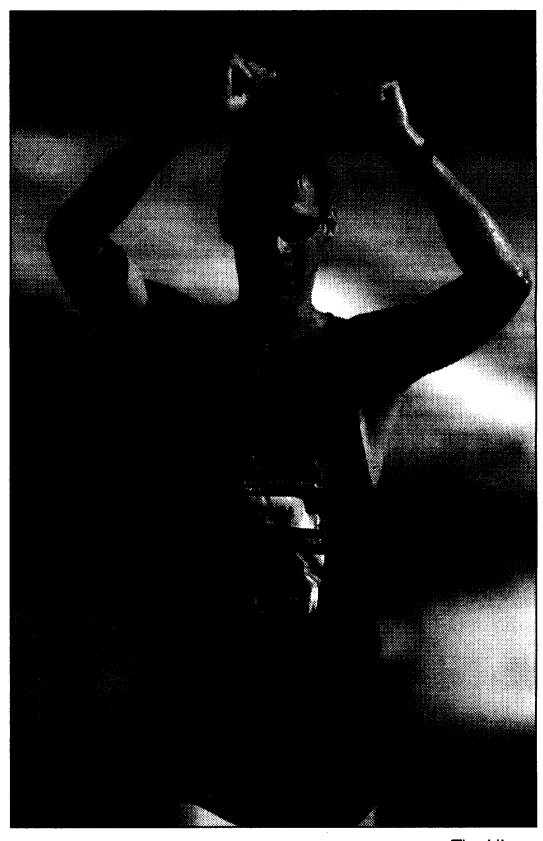
SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Sgt. John Nunn earned an Olympic berth Saturday with a second-place finish in the 20-kilometer race walk in the 2004 U.S. Olympic Track and Field Team Trials at Sacramento State University.

Nunn, a member of the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program stationed at Fort Carson, Colo., completed the early-morning trek in 1 hour, 26 minutes and 23 seconds.

U.S. Air Force Capt. Kevin Eastler, a missile combat crew commander stationed at F.E. Warren Air Force Base in Cheyenne, Wyo., also made Team USA for the Athens Games by finishing third in 1:28.49.

New York Athletic Club's Tim Seaman, a three-time national champion and U.S. record-holder in the event, won the race in 1:25:40.

Around the 11-kilometer mark, Nunn pulled away from fourth-place finisher Curt Clausen of NYAC.



"I sensed when Curt fell off of me that if I could just hold this pace, there was a good chance that I could finish in the top three," said Nunn, who later passed Eastler. "When I went by Kevin, he said: 'I just don't have it today. It's just not working.' At that point, I said to myself, 'I've got it.'

"It doesn't actually hit you until you've finished the race," Nunn said of earning a trip to Athens.

"I was getting a little excited with less than two kilometers to go, and with one kilometer left, my arms started to cramp up. I just tried to relax," he said.

Nunn said he tried everything in his power to catch Seaman. When he realized the leader was out of reach, his thoughts turned to his family waiting at the finish line. His father, Les, a retired Air Force captain, and mother, Jeanie, were there, along with his wife, Leah, and their 5-month-old daughter, Ella.

"I definitely couldn't have done this without my wife," said Nunn, 26, of Evansville, Ind. "She's my biggest supporter, and she's made a lot of sacrifices over the last four years. She's been the ultimate team player."

Tim Hipps

Sgt. John Nunn, a member of the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program, reacts to earning an Olympic berth with a second-place finish in the 20-kilometer race walk in the 2004 U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials in California.

Nunn also applauded his extended family in the Army World Class Athlete Program.

"WCAP has bent over backwards with giving me the opportunity to chase my dream and to help make it a reality," he said.

Nunn said representing the Army will make the trip to Greece extra meaningful.

"It gives me a bigger sense of pride than just representing the country," he said. "I went to sergeant's school and met guys who had either come back from Iraq or were going over to Iraq. That kind of put some things in real perspective about the opportunity that I've been given within the Army, and that I am obviously still a Soldier first and at any point in time could go when called."

Nunn also senses a need to represent race walkers, a misunderstood group of athletes who use different sets of muscle groups than runners, with one foot always touching the ground.

"It's an oxymoron," said Nunn, who never has drawn more than one red flag in a race. "You're trying to keep one foot on the ground at all times and landing the foot with a straight leg. With running, you're working your quads and calves by pushing and pumping. With walking, it's all reverse, it's your hamstrings and shins.

"All the while, you're trying to walk as fast as you can, getting down well under seven minutes a mile. It takes a long time to get used to it."

Nunn began race walking as a youngster with his family but said he "despised" the sport. He eventually rediscovered race walking and earned a scholarship to the University of Wisconsin-Parkside.

Nunn's appreciation for race walking skyrocketed when he began beating runners on a regular basis.

"Some of the road runners get upset and some of them realize it's really not a joke," he said.

Nunn predicted that he'll need outside help to reach the Olympic podium Aug. 20 when he competes.

"I think it would have to be on my best day and everyone else's worst day," he said. "It's going to be extremely tough with my personal-best of 1:22:31; the top person in the world is walking 1:17, so they are going well under four-minute [per mile] pace."

Nunn trains with Seaman and Clausen at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in Chula Vista, Calif.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker talks with a group of lieutenants during his visit to Fort Benning.

CSA visits Benning troops

Schoomaker shares wisdom with post Soldiers

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker took a break from the Army Training and Leadership Development Conference and spent Wednesday morning observing training and talking with Soldiers.

Along with Sgt. Maj. of the Army Ken Preston, post Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley and post Command Sergeant Major Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, Schoomaker visited Simpson Range and spent time with Infantry Officer Basic Course lieutenants.

The lieutenants were conducting basic rifle marksmanship training in preparation for qualification Thursday.

In an impromptu talk with about 20 lieutenants, Schoomaker asked about hometowns, alma maters and units the students will be assigned to upon graduation.

Schoomaker takes a break from the Army Training and Leadership Development Conference to fire an M-4.

He then discussed the importance of the training they will receive in the course.

"The training you will get here will stick with you if you pay attention," he said. "Open your eyes and focus. This is a great Army you have joined, with great officers and noncommissioned officers, but the nation has a big job for you to do."

He talked about the units the students will be joining in the field and discussed some of the schools the students will attend.

"All the units I've heard today are some great outfits and you will be teamed up with some great Soldiers, but I am sure you are a little worried about what it will be like," Schoomaker said. "You are probably wondering how it's gonna be the first time you step in front of your platoon or what your first platoon sergeant and Soldiers will be like. I think you will be happy."

He said it won't be easy for young officers in times like these, but if they work hard and train hard, they will succeed.

"Your Soldiers and NCOs are going to expect you to come in and step up to the plate," he said. "They will expect you to fulfill your responsibility to lead and command, and they will expect you to do what is right.

"Now understand, they won't expect that you know everything, but they will not want to feel like

Post to get new BCT

Addition to bring 3,800 more Soldiers

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

As the Army goes through one of the largest transformations in history, the days of big divisions are numbered.

According to a Department of Army press release, modular, multifunctional, self-supporting brigade combat teams, previously known as units of action, are the way of the future.

The maneuver teams will be classified into two categories: heavy and light.

Fort Benning has already seen changes in the 3rd Brigade as the 3rd Infantry Division transformed into a heavy brigade combat team last year.

Plans are now underway to stand up an infantry brigade combat team on Fort Benning.

This means the post will house an additional 3,800 Soldiers.

The 5th BCT, 25th ID, will be a part of the 25th ID for the next few years, and will wear the 25th ID patch indefinitely, but the division will eventually be split up into BCTs and will fall under one of six to eight "units of execution," which are as of yet unnamed.

"Fort Benning is honored to be selected as one of 10 installations to receive a new infantry brigade combat team," said Col. Charles Cornwell, Fort Benning chief of staff. "This is a clear indication that the Army recognizes Fort Benning as an installation that knows well how to lead, train and care for Soldiers and their families.

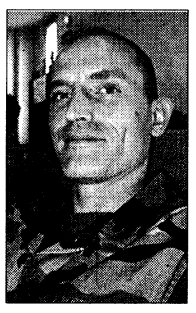
The "Sledgehammer" is heading back to Iraq.

The 3rd Brigade will deploy to Iraq in the coming months, but the exact date is not certain, Col. Steven Salazar, 3rd Brigade commander, said during a press conference July 23.

"We will be going sometime between November and February," Salazar said. "The mission analysis process and the requirements in the theater will determine the exact times."

The brigade is currently gearing up for a rotation at the Joint Readiness Training Center in Fort Polk, La., from Aug. 2 to 28 in preparation for its time in Iraq.



"The brigade expects to be deployed for approximately one year," according to a press release issued by Salazar on July 23. "However, there are no guarantees. The situation on the ground and the needs of the theater commander will ultimately determine

HALL MONITOR

It's a dirty job, but I'll do it

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

When I heard about Courtesy Patrol starting up on Fort Benning, I was ecstatic. Well, until I found out what it really was.

Don't get me wrong — I think it is a great idea to have Soldiers enforcing general guidelines on post, because I can't stand to see a Soldier in uniform with his hat on backwards or wearing his PT uniform with one leg pulled up to the knee.

And nobody wants to hear the latest pop album mixed with the rattle coming out of the trunk of some guy's '72 Pinto.

But my pain goes a lot deeper than that. Where is the courtesy patrol in everyday life? There used to be one that followed everyone around and guided them to do the right thing.

You may know it as a conscience, or Jiminy Cricket for the younger ones. I know it as my mother's voice in that tone that only a drill sergeant can rival.

I say used to be because, with the exception of a few good Samaritans, I don't see anyone listening to their conscience.

I know I'm not the only one, because my wife got a call the other day from an elderly lady trying to get in touch with her grandson. My wife, being the good Samaritan she is, was polite with her and even offered the suggestion that she may have misdialed.

Presumably, the woman was too shocked to speak at the time, but she called back about 15 minutes later to say how nice it was that my wife was polite to her.

Hearing the sincerity in that lady's voice told me there is something wrong with the world today.

I wish everybody could be on courtesy patrol all day every day, on- or off-post.

So while I'm on my soapbox, I'll give you my top 10 ideas of rules that my courtesy patrol would enforce.

1. Don't drive slower than the guy behind you in the left lane.

2. Don't make the rest of the world wait behind you as you are waiting for someone to leave their parking spot.

3. Hold the door open for the person five steps behind you.

4. If someone held the door for you, say thank you.

5. Let people get off the elevator before you get on.

6. Don't leave your car at the gas pump while you are inside shopping.

7. Don't stop to talk with your buddy in the middle of a busy walkway.

8. Don't litter.

9. Don't talk through the movies.

10. Don't blow your nose in the middle of a restaurant.

Are these really so much to ask?

Thank a vet, young and old

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

We see them and walk right by. If we stop and chat, we only say hello and thank you and good bye. But how many of us actually stop and listen to their stories?

I'm talking about our veterans. To be more specific, a D-Day veteran I just met.

"Harley, like the bike, Reynolds, like Burt," is how he introduces himself.

This man changed history. History that had already been written, published and distributed.

He's been in several books and a PBS documentary, retelling his accounts of what happened during the D-Day invasion on Omaha Beach.

He knows the story well and he sets it straight — after all, he was the first man to cross the barbed wire on Omaha Beach 60 years ago, the first man to cross to the German side. And he's got his buddies to prove it.

Harley was at Fort Benning to visit an old friend of his. Not another D-Day vet, but a Desert Storm vet, Sgt. 1st Class Kip Reitz, with 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The two met in France a few years ago and have kept in touch ever since.

"There's an unbreakable bond between two men who have been to combat," Harley said.

With the changes the Army is currently undergoing, many of us will eventually see combat — young Soldiers and old.

Like Harley, we'll have stories — about our buddies who were hurt or of those who were braver than the rest or of those who never made it home.

Harley is a man with a story. A good story, at that. He'll tell it to anyone who'll listen and, as Soldiers (and possibly future combat vets), many of us should.

During my two hours with him, he showed more love for this country and the Soldiers who are now defending it than anyone else I've ever met.

It's nice to hear that there are people out there who still have faith in Soldiers and believe what Soldiers do has to be done.

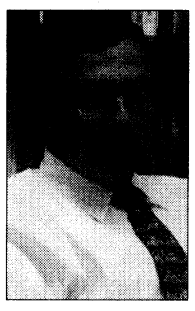
"I hold Soldiers in the highest esteem of all the people I know. Fighting Germans is nothing compared to being in Iraq," he said.

He watches the news, he reads the papers, but he still believes that Soldiers are good country-lovin' folks, just doing a job that needs to be done.

So all of you who are out there and need a little boost on your morale, just sit down and talk to men like Harley.

One thing I admired about Harley was his constant appreciation for his fellow veterans, especially those who were in battle with him at some time or another throughout his military career. He knew he couldn't have made it home without them.

He's told his story to several reporters and he said no one ever acknowledged them the way they should have been acknowledged — by name. He's never been able to properly thank them for everything they did.



So for Harley and myself, I will say thank you:

Jim Haughey, Frank "Chip" Ciarparelli, Steve Cicon, Lawrence Makler, Arthur Schintzel and Richard Swanger. Thank you for everything you've done.

And to Harley, it was a pleasure to meet you and feel free to stop by any time you're in town.

Off-limits status business as usual

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When the command placed eight off-post business establishments off-limits earlier this month, there were two reactions: "It's about time," and "Soldiers are adults and should be allowed to go where they want to when they're not on duty."

First, placing businesses off-limits is nothing new. It's been around about as long as there's been an Army.

Commanders place businesses off-limits because it's their duty to maintain good order and discipline and look out for the welfare of their Soldiers.

If a Soldier is being ripped off by some loan company or an automotive shop, he's not going to have his head in the game when he's training for combat.

If a Soldier is hanging out where drug use is rampant and prostitutes freely ply their wares, what kind of condition is he going to be in when he returns to post?

Yes, Soldiers are adults. Yes, they can make their own decisions when they have their wits about them, but after a couple of beers, things might not be what they seem.

I wonder if those who are in favor of allowing Soldiers to frequent clubs where there is regular violence, drug use and prostitution would try and dissuade their adult sons or daughters from going to places like that.

Fort Benning is not trying to put establishments out of business. It is trying to get businesses to clean up their acts, to make their establishments vice free and safe.

Then there are those business owners who complain that their businesses are crime-free, that all the criminal activity is taking place in the parking lot. Well, hello, who owns the parking lot?

If these establishments take such actions, they are removed from the off-limits list. And everyone benefits — not only do Soldiers have a reputable place to go, but so do members of the community.

And as for their charge, "It's the Soldier who causes all the trouble," then the commanding general's response — "I guess we solved their problem for them, didn't we?" —suffices.

Also, the command doesn't take placing businesses off-limits lightly. There is a process. The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board advises the commander on such matters.

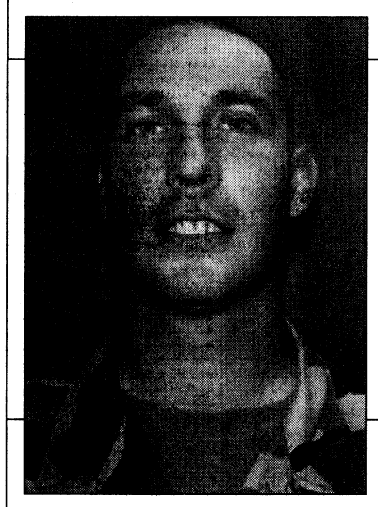
The one at Fort Benning consists of representatives from post and other military installations — the Albany Marine Corps Logistics Base, Warner Robbins Air Force Base and Maxwell Air Force Base. Representatives from surrounding law enforcement agencies sit on the board, as does a representative from the Better Business Bureau.

When the board receives a complaint from a Soldier — a landlord took advantage of him, a transmission shop charged him twice the estimate — an investigator is sent out to get both sides of the story.

If the board determines that a business is systematically taking advantage of Soldiers, that business will be invited to appear before the board and show why it shouldn't be placed on the list.

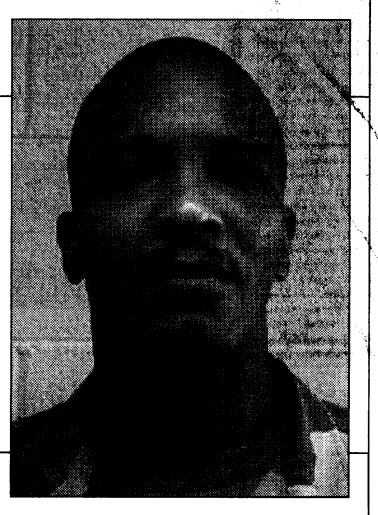
Also, the command can place a business temporarily off-limits without a board hearing if it learns of flagrant misdeeds or safety concerns.

Motels and bars are not being singled out.



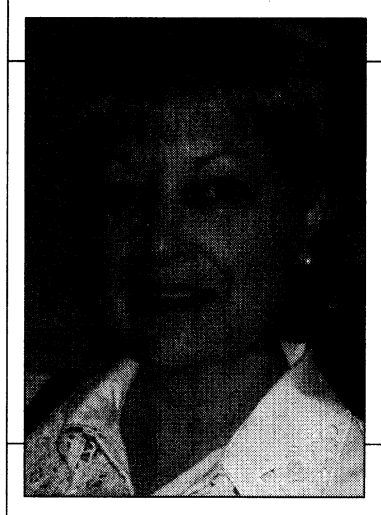
Car dealers have been placed on notice when they are found to be charging excess interest on car loans or when it's been discovered that their repair shops are doing shoddy work or charging for work that doesn't need to be done.

A slum landlord was warned when he began charging Soldiers for preexisting damage. A dog trainer was placed off-limits because he abused his animals.

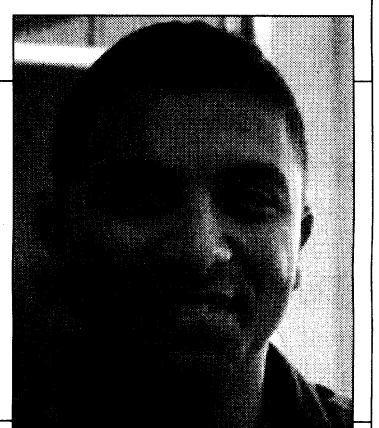


The tricommunity is a great place to live and raise a family. But as in all communities, there are folks and businesses who don't play by the rules. If putting those establishments off limits turns things around, who can argue with the results?

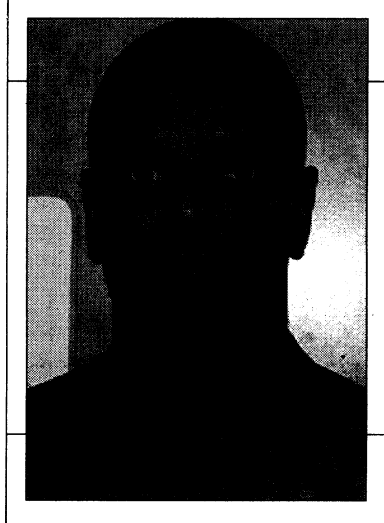
VARIOUS VOICES



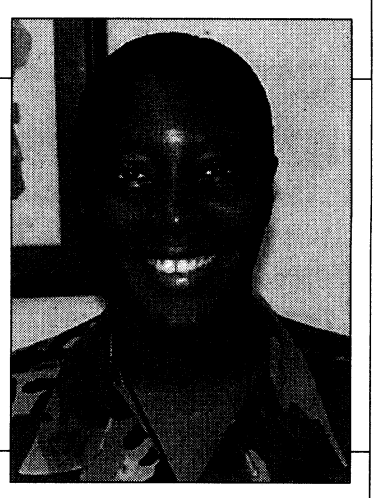
What was your first summer job and what did you learn from it?



Sgt. Eric Nettle, U.S. Army Infantry Center — "My first summer job was at a Christian summer day camp. I built playgrounds and played with the kids. It was like being a big brother. I learned that kids love being around you and will imitate everything you do."



Staff Sgt. Rodney Dortch, U.S. Army Garrison — "My first summer job was doing maintenance in an apartment complex. I learned to be responsible and to manage my money well. To this day, those are two good habits I keep."



Deborah Quick, Fort Benning — "My first summer job was with a supply unit in Germany. I learned patience. Also that it's best to do a job right the first time."

Capt. Manuel Martinez, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "My first summer job was landscaping with my uncle. I learned that if I didn't want to be out in 100-degree weather, I'd better go to school and get an education."

Marine Master Sgt. Lonnie Lewis, Marine Corps Detachment — "My first summer job was a paper route. I learned responsibility."

Staff Sgt. Stephanie Brooks, U.S. Army Garrison — "My first summer job was at a YMCA. I learned that it can be hard to take care of kids, especially when you're trying to coordinate things for them to do. But it was really fun."

they have to pull you around by your nose, so take what you are learning now seriously."

Schoomaker discussed the certainty of war and danger and commended the Soldiers on their sacrifices.

"All of these units we have talked about have either seen combat in the last two years or will shortly after you arrive," he said. "Believe it or not, this is a great opportunity for you. Thank you for your service, and we are very, very proud of you."

Schoomaker and several other officials spent part of the morning conducting familiarization training and a live-fire exercise with the prototype XM-8 weapon on Easley Range.

They also visited the Combatives Course where they were briefed on tactics and instruction methods by the course instructors.

Schoomaker unveils new professional reading list

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker released a new Professional Reading List July 23.

The list, which can be found at the Center of Military History Web page, www.army.mil/cmh, is broken down into four sub groups based on a leader's responsibilities, whether enlisted or commissioned.

"The Professional Reading List is a way for leaders at all levels to increase their depth of understanding of our Army's history, the global strategic context, and the enduring lessons of war," Schoomaker said.

"The topics and time periods included in the books on this list are expansive and are intended to broaden each leader's knowledge and confidence. I challenge all leaders to make a focused, personal commitment to read, reflect, and learn about our profession, and our world," he said. "Through the exercise of our minds, our Army will grow stronger."

Books range in timeframe from the Peloponnesian War to the hunt for al Qaeda and in context from personal memoirs of command to commentaries on the impact of centuries of armed conflict.

Among the books included are John Keegan's The Face of Battle, the Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant, Stephen E. Ambrose's Band of Brothers, Lt. Gen. Insurance agents, investment advisers use Army functions as means to end

Solicitors prey on Soldiers at military events

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

In her 14 and a half years with Fort Benning's Financial Readiness Program, Ann Pratcher has heard the "rumblings" before.

But when CNN called her last week for a comment on The New York Times articles alleging that Soldiers are being tipped off by insurance agents and investment advisers through military briefings and functions, it was the first time the FRP manager had ever learned of a specific company.

The article, one in a four-part series written by Diana Henriques that ran July 20 to 24, featured Spc. Nicholas Stachler, who as a 19-year-old basic training Soldier on Sand Hill, unknowingly purchased life insurance during what was supposed to be a personal financial classroom briefing.

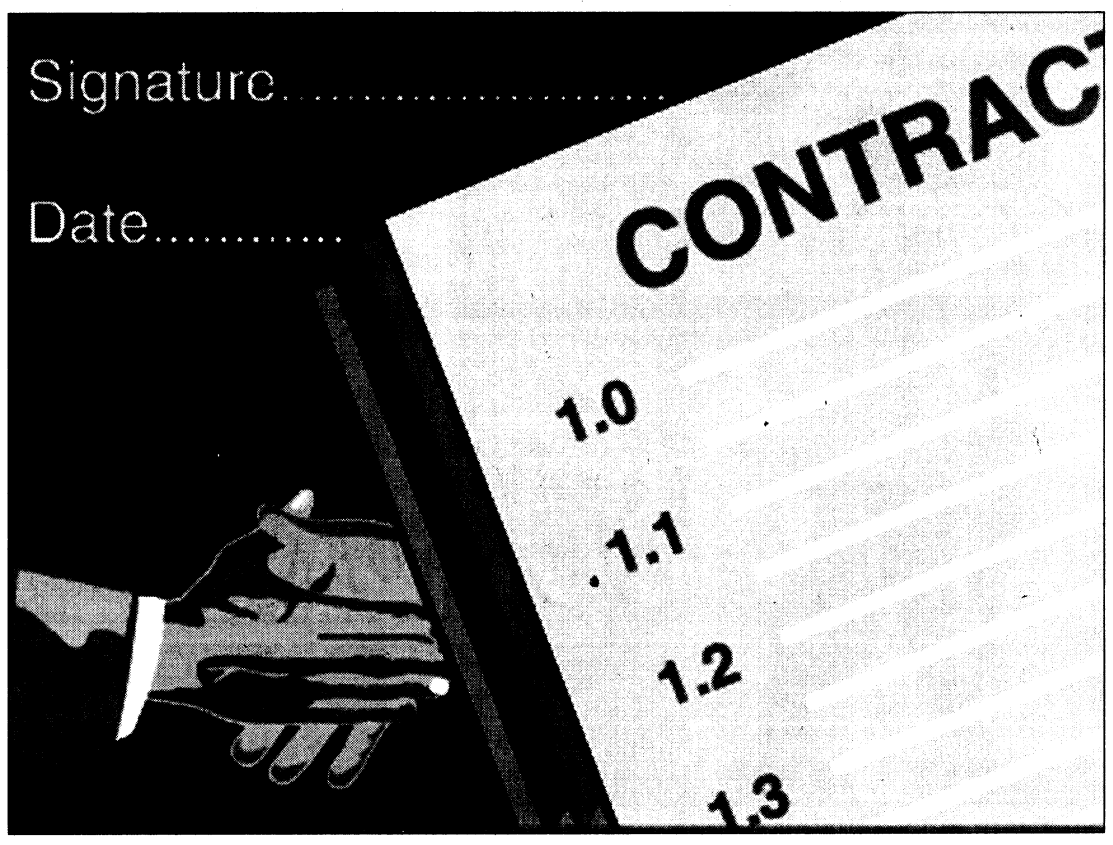
"As he remembers the class and as base investigative records show, two insurance agents quick-stepped him and his classmates through a stack of paperwork, pointing out where they should sign their names, where to scribble their initials. They were given no time to read the documents and no copies to keep," according to the first article, "Basic training doesn't guard against insurance pitch to G.I.'s."

Shortly after graduating basic training, Stachler deployed to Iraq for 11 months, thinking he had arranged to have $100 a month allotted to an Army-endorsed savings plan or mutual fund. In fact, he was paying premiums for an insurance policy.

According to the article, Fort Benning authorities first learned of the improper briefings early last year when a Soldier requested help in canceling his policy.

And although Fort Benning is part of a coordinated investigation to follow up and make sure this doesn't happen again, Pratcher said, she is still confused about how this could have happened in the first place.

For one, she said, off-post professionals shouldn't be conducting any kind of financial briefing anywhere on post. Fort Benning has specific people designated for that duty.



Secondly, the military has very specific rules prohibiting agents from soliciting any basic training Soldier in a "mass" or "captive" audience.

But perhaps most importantly, "you should never sign anything you haven't read and fully understood," Pratcher said, adding that no Soldier can be forced to sign anything without being allowed to read it first.

"Anyone not willing to allow you to do that isn't someone you want to do business with," she said.

Another problem with illegal solicitation at military briefings or functions is the impression it gives Soldiers, Pratcher said.

"It's a great influence. When they see something advertised in The Bayonet or in a (Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation) newsletter, they think it's sanctioned by the military," she said. "And it's the same thing here. Even allowing these (agents) into our classrooms and functions influences the Soldiers."

Although the Army's strict solicitation guidelines don't allow for handing out business cards at military functions — even by event sponsors — agents' presence and involvement can be an influence, she said.

Adding to that influence, a large number of agents who deal with Soldiers are former military themselves or approach the Soldiers through the troops' leaders, which can also sway them.

And it's the leadership's responsibility to protect the troops from these situations, she said. But Soldiers can do their part to avoid the trouble Stachler and many others have run into with scheming insurance agents.

In fact, Pratcher said, the key to fighting these incidents and to stopping the problem is education, period. Educating leaders about how to prevent these situations and what to do should they occur and educating Soldiers about how to protect themselves.

"My recommendation is to determine what your needs really are, and if you feel like you have a need for more insurance (than you have through the Army), you really need to do some research," Pratcher said.

Pratcher has spent years preaching the importance of researching into commercial life insurance, agents and companies. Every first-term Soldier receives the brief upon arrival at Fort Benning. She gives classes to units and organizations. And she distributes fliers that are supposed to be handed out to "every student on Fort Benning, from basic training on up."

But many Soldiers fail to get the message.

"We get into this quick-fix approach, and it always leads to problems," she said.

"The faster you try to do something, the more likely you are to not end up with something good for you."

Anyone purchasing insurance should take the time to investigate first. And there are plenty of avenues to do this, she said — the state insurance commissioner, insurance company rating services, the state attorney general's office and especially the Better Business Bureau.

Pratcher offered several other tips for insurance shopping:

- Ask for an insurance buyer's guide.
- Ask for a policy illustration. Better yet, get several and compare.
- Ask about the "cooling off" or "free look" period.
- Ask about licensure, company affiliations, professional designations and professional organization membership.
- Contact the BBB to see if complaints have been filed against the agent or the company.
- When buying a policy, make the check out to the insurance company and get a receipt.
- Review your policy application carefully and correct any errors immediately.
- Review your policy at least annually, or when major life changes occur (marriage, children, etc.)
- Don't be rushed into a decision, but don't continue to put it off.

Institute's BoV plans spring meeting in D.C.

Members also discuss two new courses

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's Board of Visitors held its first of two meetings scheduled for the '04 calendar year at the Institute July 16.

This meeting by the federal advisory committee served as a housekeeping session during which the board, composed of members of Congress, religious leaders and military regional command representatives, elected official positions, discussed fiscal and curriculum issues, as well as assessed the progress of recommendations made during previous visits.

Though, at first, the meeting seemed to steer toward the mundane functions similar to that of a suburban school board, there was some contention regarding the proposal to hold future organizational meetings in Washington, D.C.

Foremost opposition to this proposal came from the Rev. Denis St. Marie, BoV member and mission director for the Cleveland Diocese.

"We are a Board of Visitors to WHINSEC, not to Washington," St. Marie said.

That statement seemed to imply the same concern that others on the board voiced — that the BoV could lose its effectiveness if legislating institute actions from afar.

Countering that point was Ann Norris, a representative for Rep. Loretta Sanchez (D-Calif.), who is a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

Norris said that she agreed with the proposal because it would lend greater accessibility for members of Congress to personally attend meetings.

With a vote, the proposal to conduct the Spring 2005 session in Washington, D.C., while keeping the annual session at WHINSEC passed.

The annual session is a three-day event in which the BoV drafts its annually mandated report to the Department of Defense and Congress.

The next session will be between Nov. 15 and Dec. 15.

Other key points of the meeting included the re-election of Dr. Steven Schneebaum, partner, Patton Boggs LLP, and human rights liaison, as BoV chairman and Dr. Charles Risher as the vice chair.

In regard to the progress of previous recommendations, WHINSEC's Executive Liaison Officer Ken LaPlante updated the board on curriculum translation from Spanish to English and the transformation of the Command and General Staff Officer Course to the Intermediate Level Education, which he said were making "steady progress."

The cost for the ILE transformation and its first iteration is estimated at $6 million, said WHINSEC Commandant Col. Gilberto Pérez.

Pérez, who also addressed the board, spoke about the addition of more English-language iterations of current courses and the addition of two new courses: the Peace-Keeping Planners Course (CMS-11) aimed at producing qualified planners for peacekeeping operations in cooperation with U.S. counterparts, and the Counter Narco-Terrorism Planners Course (TAC-12) with an emphasis on interagency and multilateral planning.

Another issue planned for debate at the annual meeting is the proposal to draft a recommendation along with the Board's Annual Report to Congress to unlink the American Service Members Protection Act (Article 98) and the International Military Education and Training (IMET) grant funds because of the negative effect it is having on foreign enrollment to the institute and, in general, the negative effect on U.S. foreign policy toward the promotion of human rights and democracy.

Since the linking of Article 98 and IMET, enrollment to the Institute has dropped 17 percent, according to LaPlante.

This prompted a remark from U.S. Southern Command representative designee Brig. Gen. Wendell Griffin about the "unintended consequences of handcuffing (Article 98 and IMET) together."

"We need to be able to continue to reach out to countries like Venezuela, Peru and Ecuador to ensure security cooperation in our region," said Griffin.

The discussion is slated for further debate at the annual BoV meeting.

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo

Fort Benning Commander Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley discusses enrollment concerns with members of WHINSEC's Board of Visitors at Ridgway Hall July 16. The general was appointed to represent the Training and Doctrine Command's Commander, Gen. Kevin Byrnes.

Pershing's Own Hero for Today tops classical charts, sales to build museum

Courtney Hickson
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army Band (Pershing's Own) has a chart-topping CD; Hero for Today has reached number nine on the Billboard Top Classical Albums.

For the week of July 8, the CD by the Army Band and Chorus was ranked number nine, but this is not the first time this CD has been on the charts.

When it debuted, Hero for Today came onto the charts at number 15 the week of June 26.

There have been 7,500 CDs sold so far, said David A. Sellers, director of marketing at Altissimo! Records.

Hero for Today is a joint effort between Altissimo! Records and the Army Historical Foundation, a non-profit organization dedicated to preserving the history and heritage of the American Soldier.

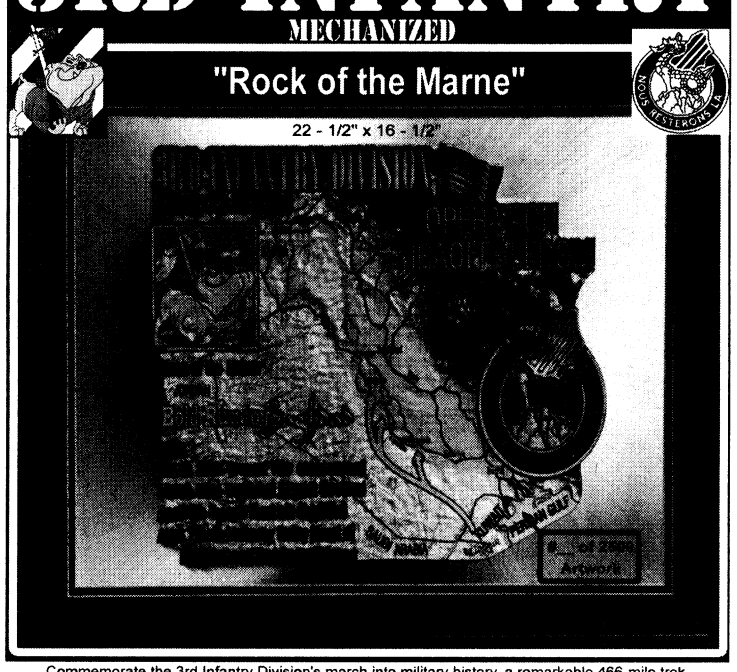
A part of the proceeds from Hero for Today will be donated to the Army Historical Foundation.

Director of Marketing for the Army Historical Foundation David Lewis said the foundation began talks with the Army Band Alumni Association to look at a way to bring Army Band music to the market.

The Army Historical Foundation licensed its name and logo to Altissimo! Records and will receive a part of the royalties.

The money will go to building the National Museum of the U.S. Army.

Lewis said this project is a "win-win" situation for all parties involved because it allows the foundation to get its name and purpose out to the public.



In order for the museum to be built, the foundation needs to raise more than $200 million.

The Army has already budgeted for $90 million in addition to land and infrastructure support, Lewis said.

The museum is on schedule to be completed in 2009, Lewis said.

The CD has a mix of patriot songs, including: Heroic Fanfare, Hymn To The Fallen (From Saving Private Ryan), A Hero For Today, Battle Hymn Of The Republic, America The Beautiful, God Bless The U.S.A., Here's To America, The Last Full Measure Of Devotion, We Were There, This Is My Country, Ragged Old Flag, The Flag Still Flies High, God Bless America, The Armed Service Medley, The Stars And Stripes Forever and the song Duty, Honor, Country.

Sniper School takes invaluable training to troops in Korea

Courtesy photo

Sniper School instructors oversee about one-third of a 36-man class as they train in Korea. Eight instructors traveled to Korea last month and conducted mobile training for Soldiers from 2nd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, before the unit deploy to Iraq. Sixteen of the students graduated.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It was supposed to be a cycle break. But as the cadre of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — better known as Sniper School — wrapped up classes at the end of June, it was anything but.

Eight of the unit's instructors were on a monthlong mission to Korea, taking Sniper School to Soldiers of 2nd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division.

Despite the long hours and missed reprieve, the mobile training was essential to 2nd Brigade, which is scheduled to deploy to Iraq in the coming months.

The unit had a large number of Soldiers it wanted to send through, said Staff Sgt. Brian Brink, one of the instructors who traveled to Korea. But in the midst of deployment preparation, it wouldn't have been possible.

Bringing Sniper School to them, instead, allows more Soldiers to attend and saves the unit money, Brink said.

"They paid to bring us out there, but the expense is much less for them to bring eight of us to Korea than to send 40 of their guys here," he said.

And the training is invaluable to troops bound for the battlefield. From weapons familiarization to range estimation, target and stalking exercises, and tactics training, Sniper School students hone a host of skills that will help them in theater, whether they graduate or not, Brink said.

Of the 36 Soldiers who began the course, only 16 graduated with the actual skill identifier, he said, but even Soldiers who failed out continued to train for the duration of the class.

"Whether it's mobile training or here at Fort Benning, you still finish the course," he said.

This allows the students to continue to receive vital training and improve their skills.

"They'll still be more lethal in their jobs and in Iraq," he said.

With only three weeks to finish a five-week course, the training in Korea was all day, seven days a week, but that was actually a benefit for the students, Brink said.

"There were no distractors — their sole focus was sniper training," he said.

Although it was the first mobile training for Brink, who has only been at the Sniper School since March, he said traveling to train isn't exactly unusual.

Instructors went to Iraq last year and will conduct mobile training for 3rd Infantry Division later this year.

National Infantry Foundation selects designer for exhibits

Cyndy Cerbin
National Infantry Foundation

The National Infantry Foundation selected Christopher Chadbourne and Associates of Boston to design and develop the exhibits at the new National Infantry Museum and Heritage Park.

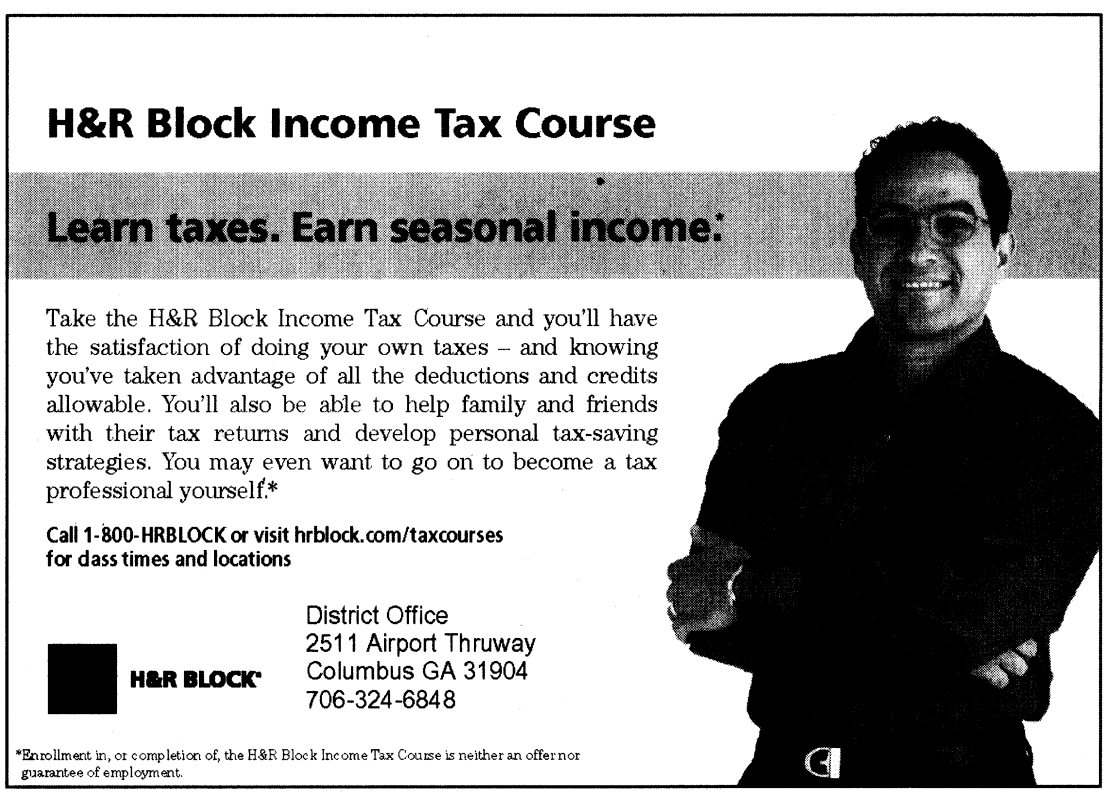
The new facility, which is to be located on a 200-acre site connecting Fort Benning and the City of Columbus, will be a national place to remember, honor and preserve the legacy of the U.S. Infantryman.

"The sheer grandeur and import of the stories the museum will tell is both infectious and sobering," Chadbourne said. "We're honored to play a part in this noble mission."

The National Infantry Foundation selected CCA from a field of 10 candidates from across the country and Canada.

"Each of the firms was highly qualified," said National Infantry Foundation Executive Director Ben Williams. "But we really connected with Christopher Chadbourne. His firm excels in scripting compelling stories and supporting those stories with creative media and meaningful artifacts. Chadbourne understands we want a museum of people, not things."

CCA's team will begin work immediately, in close collaboration with the architect hired to design the building, E. Verner Johnson and Associates.



Christopher Chadbourne and Associates' work can be found in museums, visitor centers, themed attractions and educational environments throughout the world. Some of its projects include the "Americans at War" exhibit at the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History, the German U-Boat U-505 exhibit for the Chicago Museum of Science and Industry, the National Law Enforcement Museum in Washington, D.C., the visitor centers at the Grand Canyon and Old Faithful at Yellowstone National Park, and the Great Platte River Road Archway over Interstate 80 in Kearney, Neb., which was featured in the Jack Nicholson movie About Schmidt.

Troops learn value of teamwork

Leader Reaction Course builds cohesion

Hundreds of Soldiers got their first test in teamwork at the Leader Reaction Course Wednesday.

The Soldiers of E Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, tackled the obstacles at the LRC in their second week of Infantry training.

"The course is the Leader Reaction Course, but we are not looking so much for leadership skills at this point because these are new privates," said Staff Sgt. Jerome Colon, a 2nd Platoon drill sergeant. "We are just focusing on teamwork."

The company was divided into groups of 18 Soldiers and each group had to work together to work through the obstacles.

Each obstacle has a scenario that forces the Soldiers to devise a plan and act on it to achieve certain goals while avoiding certain parts of the course and staying out of the water.

"Ultimately, this is a training exercise designed to foster teamwork and espirit de corps," he said.

Most of the obstacles required Soldiers to use boards and ropes to traverse the water, and each scenario only had one right answer.

For added motivation, cadre hooked up a stereo system and played music and battlefield sounds while the Soldiers worked on their tasks.

Pvt. Stephen Klein said he loved the hands-on training.

"It's the best way to learn," he said. "The sounds help keep us motivated and remind us that we need to rush to get things accomplished, and the water makes it more realistic and gives more of a sense of urgency.

"This has been the most intense and most fun training we've had so far," he said. "We did the confidence course already and it was more physical, but this is more mental, which makes it more challenging."

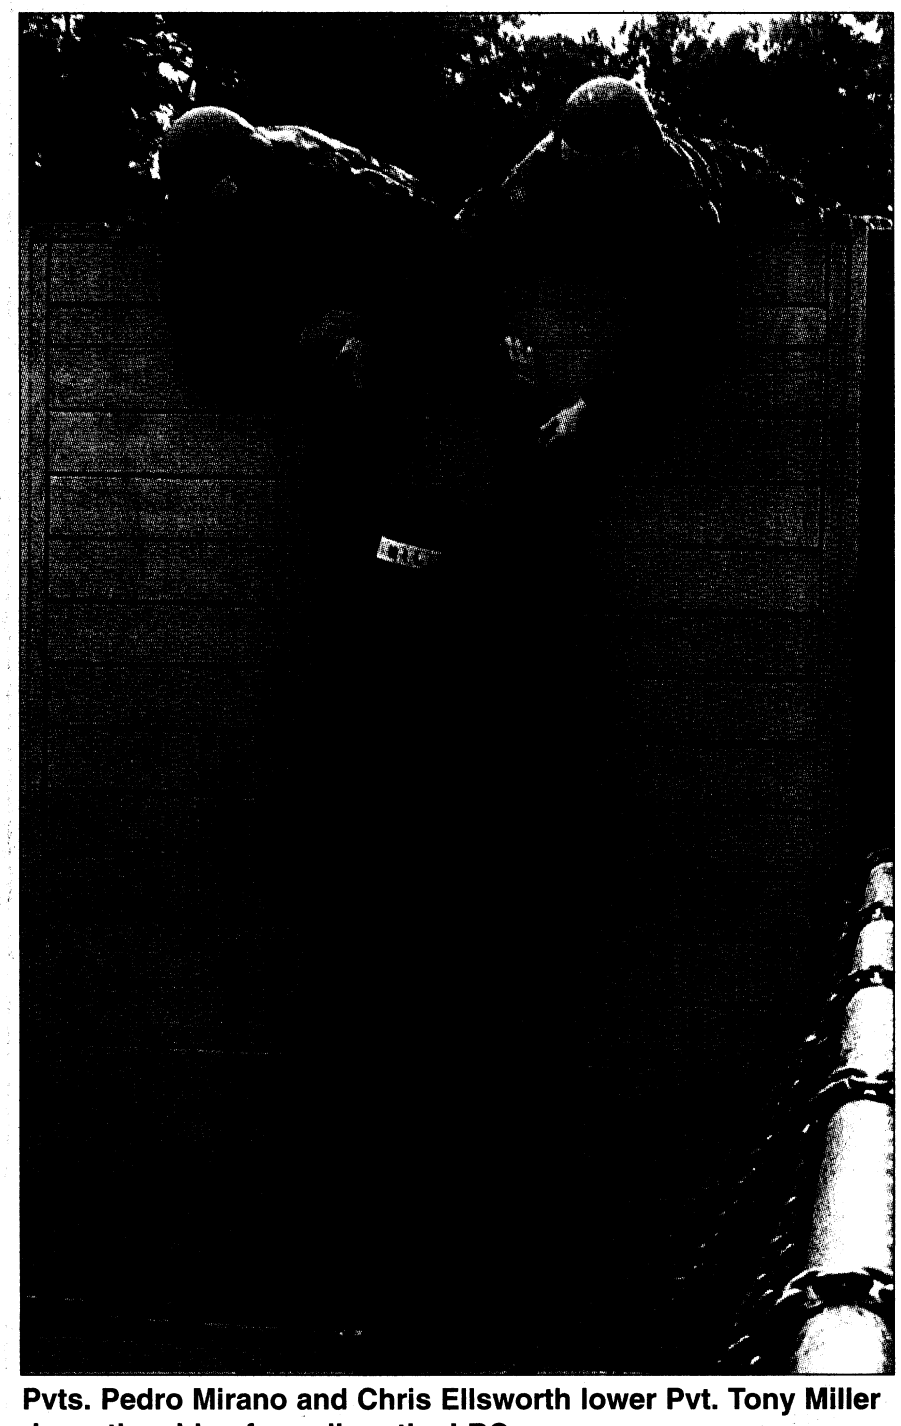
Some of the teams picked up the clues and traversed the obstacles with little effort while others struggled to succeed.

By the end of the day, nearly all the Soldiers had plunged into the water at least once, but they still got a moderate thumbs-up from their first sergeant.

"They are doing real good," said 1st Sgt. Maurice Jackson, "a lot better than the last group.

"Once they figure out who is in charge, they can negotiate the obstacles," he said. "The problem is they all want to take charge."

Wet or not, all the Soldiers seemed to have a good time at the course, and Jackson said he could already see the changes taking place.



"They will have more confidence and teamwork after the training they receive today," he said.

Pvt. Brian Wick tries to float his way across one of the obstacles with a little help from his comrades.

Center counsels, trains, betters Army life

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

"The batter is up at the plate swinging, and the team is in the dug-out making and taking notes and giving him suggestions."

For Chaplain (Maj.) Mike Strohm, going through the Chaplain Family Life Center's training for Family Life Chaplains is like baseball. "It's a quality experience and a great benefit for families and Soldiers," Strohm said.

Fort Benning is home to one of two Chaplain Family Life Training Centers in the Army and will graduate a class of chaplains Thursday.

Through the program, chaplains earn a master's degree in counseling, learn to integrate their counseling skills with their theology and learn the skills to teach, coach and mentor other chaplains on pre-marriage, marriage and family wellness counseling, said Chap. (Maj.) Tom Waynick, supervisor in training at the Chaplain Family Life Training Center.

The 15-month program is a three-way effort between the Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Training Center, Columbus State University and the Pastoral Institute.

"The chaplains who come here for this program are in mid-career and already have experience in counseling," Waynick said. "Our job is to make a good thing better and help the overall Army family."

Chaplains who train in this program, mostly majors, attend CSU to earn their master's in professional counseling. They receive training from the Pastoral Institute, where they learn to integrate their school training with theology — that is, they bring God into the mix.

Part of their course requirement is to perform 300 hours of supervised counseling. That is where the Chaplain Family Life Training Center comes into play.

The students earn their 300 hours of counseling at the Family Life Center by counseling family members and Soldiers.

"The exciting thing for Fort Benning Soldiers and families is that all these chaplains receiving advanced degrees in counseling practice counseling and the family health training on post, said Chaplain (Maj.) Peter Frederich, director of Chaplain Family Life Training Center. "The net result is that there are up to fifteen additional counselors working here than on most Army installations."

> "This is a great program for those who feel called and have even the slightest interest. It's one of the diamonds in the Army that nobody knows about."
> Chaplain (Maj.) Carl Rosenberg
> Family Life Chaplain in Training

Waynick said most of the time Soldiers may get an appointment the next day.

Families grant permission to have the team assist in their treatment. The team approach means there are some interesting dynamics to counseling sessions, including two-way mirrors and taped counseling.

Soldiers who are worried about confidentiality should not be concerned, Waynick said. Everything said in the center absolutely stays in the center.

"We don't care if you've robbed a bank, smoked dope or gone AWOL," Frederich said. "We're here to help, not report."

All counseling is strictly confidential. In fact, a Soldier's mere presence at the center is not released unless it's authorized by the Soldier.

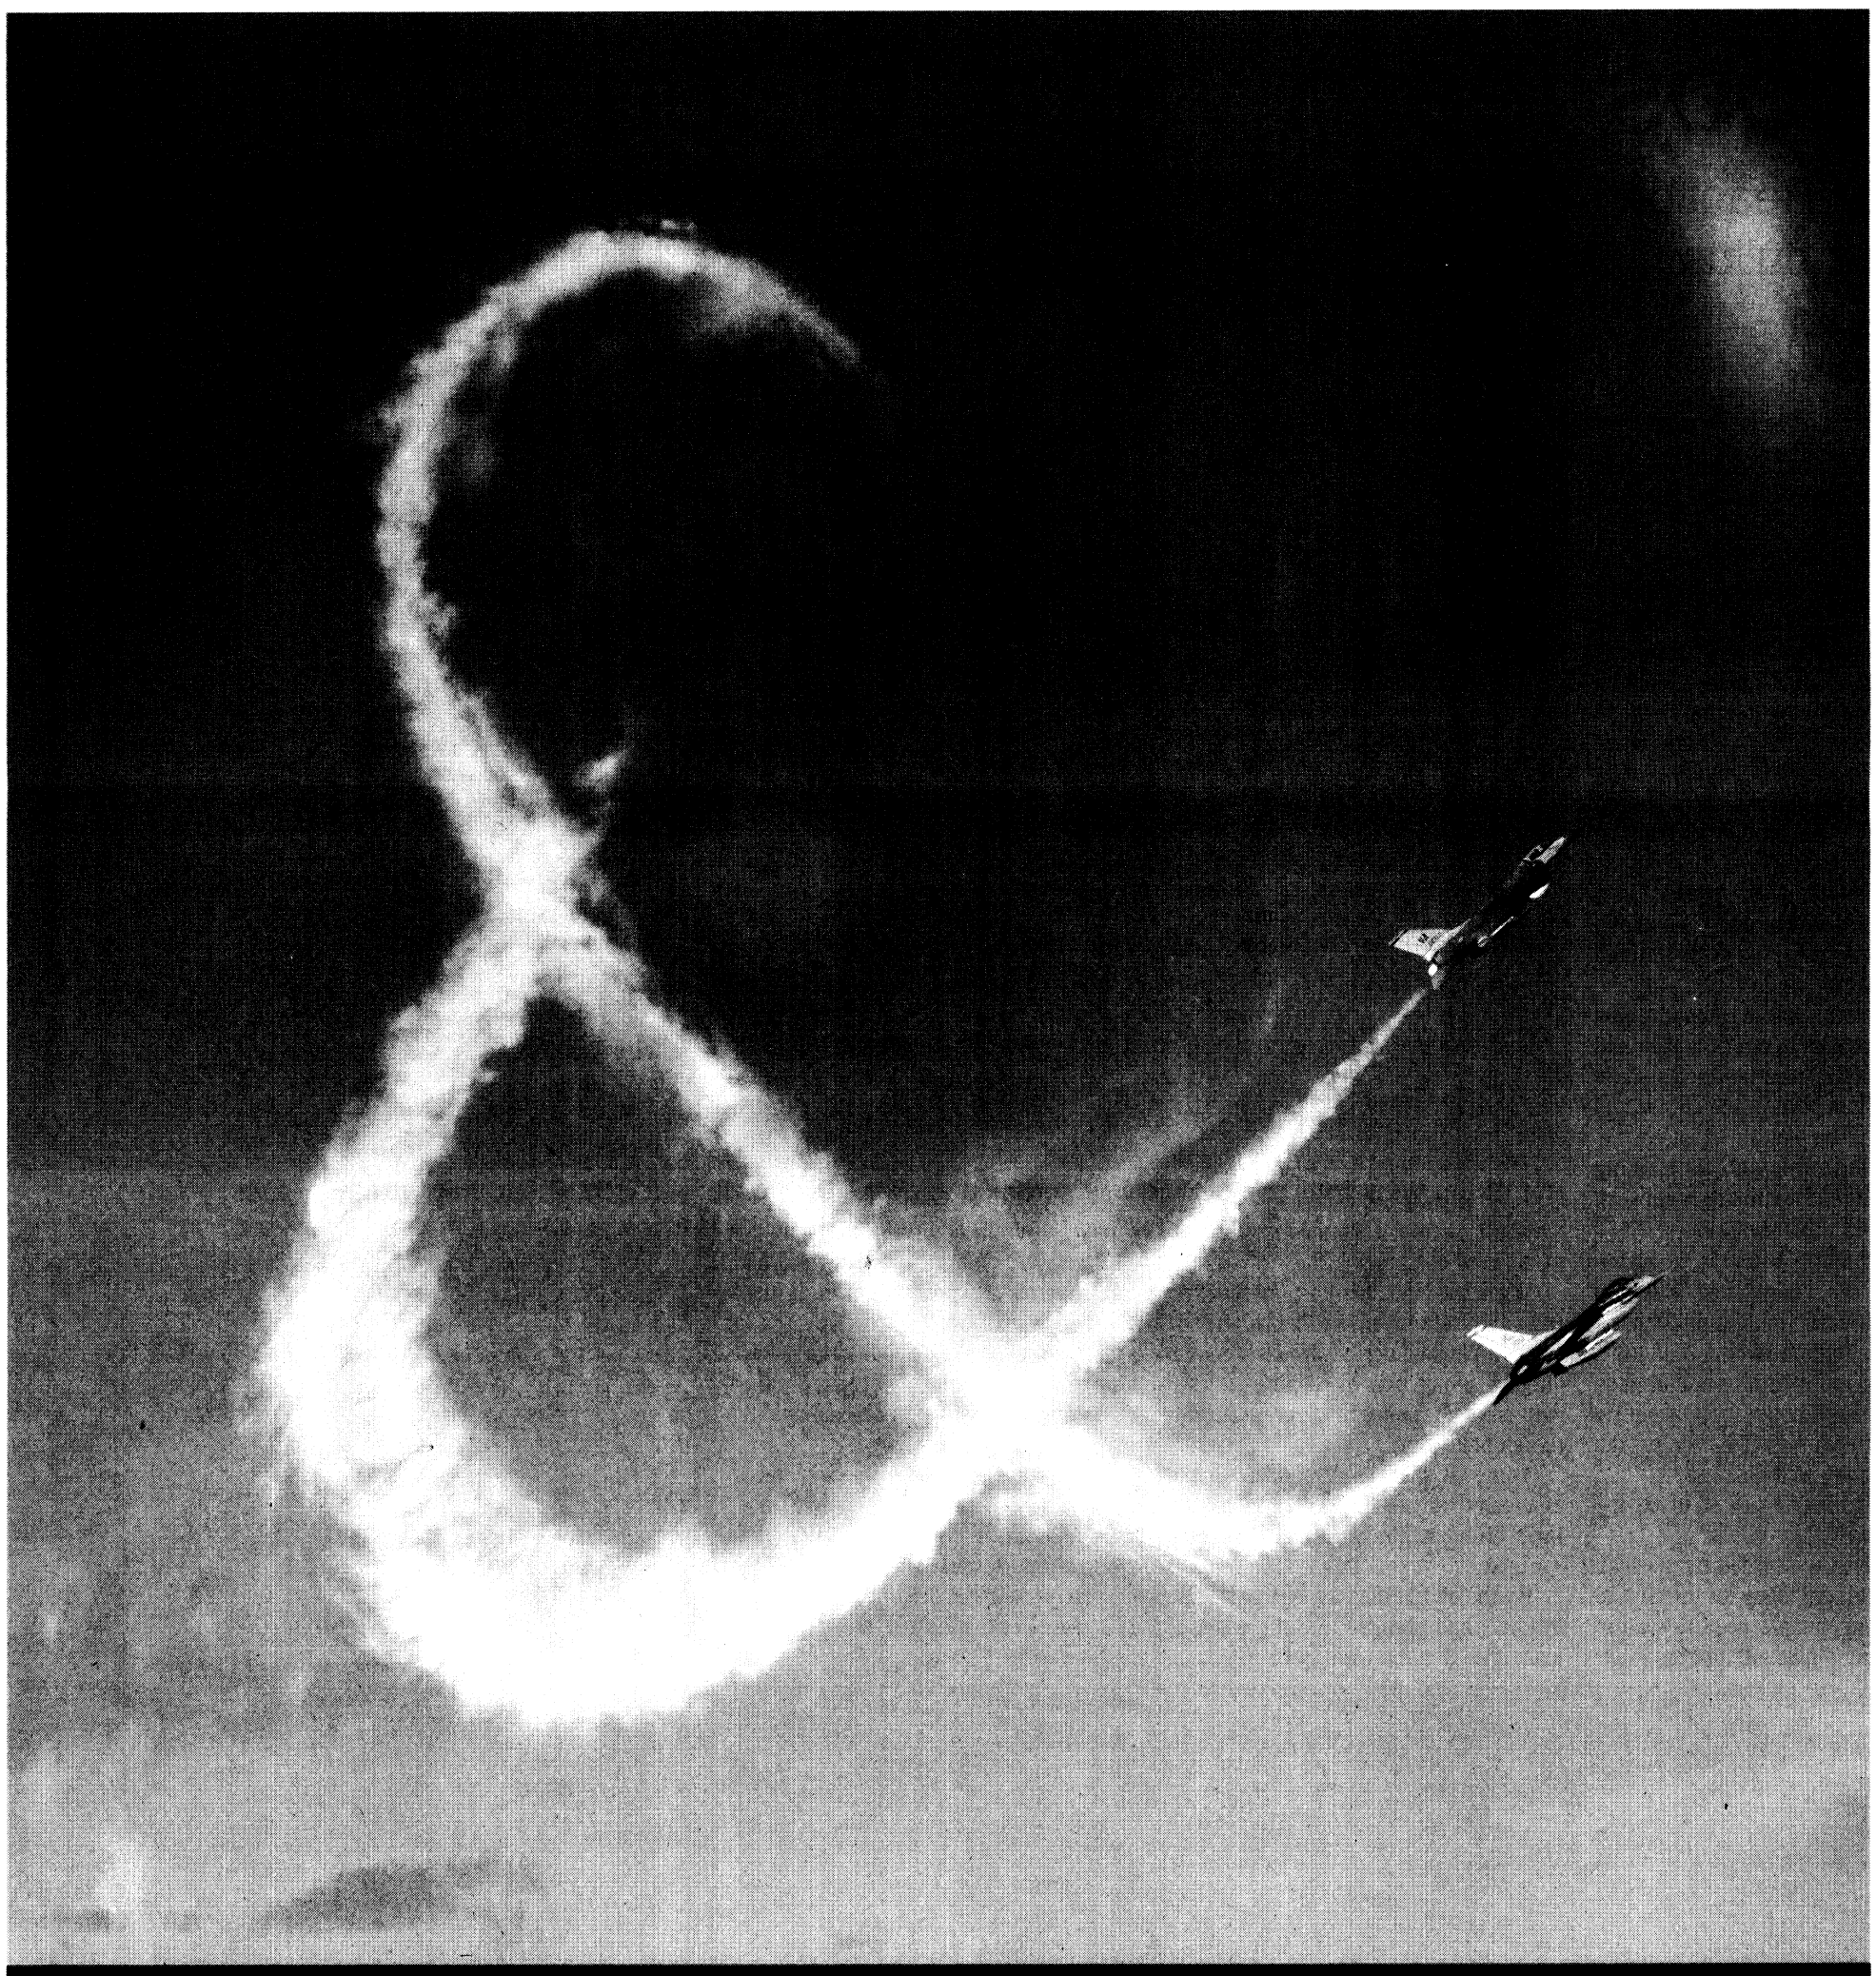
Strohm is one of three chaplains graduating Tuesday, along with Chaplain (Maj.) Carl Rosenberg and Air Force Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Widow.

The program isn't only for Army service members, Waynick said. There are also civilians who do internships at the center and the Navy has shown interest in the program as there are only two schools that offer it.

"This is a great program for those who feel called and have even the slightest interest," Rosenberg said. "It's one of the diamonds in the Army that nobody knows about," he said.

After the completion of the course, the chaplains will go to other installations to be in charge of Chaplain Family Life Centers and help enrich unit chaplain pastoral capabilities, Waynick said.

The Chaplain Family Life Training Center offers more than counseling for families.



The center is helping chaplains across post to present a new program for single Soldiers called How to Avoid Marrying a Jerk.

"It's called Family Life, but singles aren't left out," Waynick said.

The Chaplains Family Life Training Center offers pre-marital, marriage, divorce recovery, blended family, communication, conflict resolution, parenting, anger and stress management, and spiritual counseling.

Although it's recommended that Soldiers go to their unit chaplain before calling the Family Life Center, Waynick said Soldiers may call and make an appointment themselves.

For more information on the Chaplain Family Life Center's programs, call 545-1760.

Patriots change commanders during Tuesday ceremony

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

During the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, change of command ceremony, Lt. Col. Robert Freehill said goodbye to Sand Hill as he handed over command of the battalion to Lt. Col. Randolph White Tuesday.

Col. Brian Baldy, Infantry Training Brigade commander, spoke to the Soldiers of 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., about Freehill's dedication to the Infantry Training Brigade.

"Over the past two years, Freehill provided thousands of skilled and confident Soldiers for every infantry and Special Forces unit in our Army," Baldy said.

"Robert made a positive impact in every area possible in the Patriot Battalion. In every endeavor, he guided the unit to vast improvement and better capabilities."

With a resounding HOOAH! the Soldiers of 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., motivated Freehill before he said goodbye to his Soldiers.

"That's what I came here for — that's exactly what it's all about," Freehill said. "I've been humbled by the privilege of leading and commanding this battalion for the past two years. A battalion whose sole purpose is to transform civilians into Soldiers."

Freehill thanked all the drill sergeants and the battalion cadre for their hard work in training the infantrymen of the future.

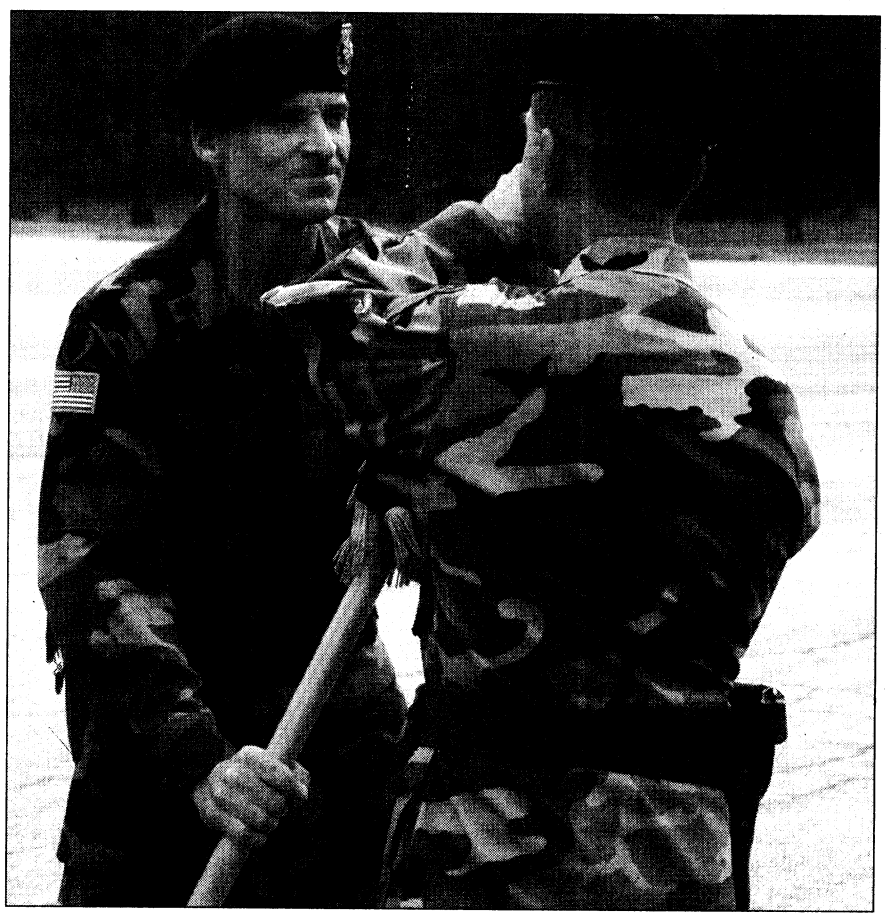
"Training is what it's all about," Freehill said. "You truly have the best job in the Army. Thank you."

He also thanked his wife, Mary Elizabeth, and their five sons, Robert, Thomas, Jonathan, Charles and Timothy, for their support.

For White and his wife, Freehill had few, but strong words.

"It's awesome; training awaits," Freehill said.

Speaking of his new Soldiers, White said they had "common names, but uncommon characters."

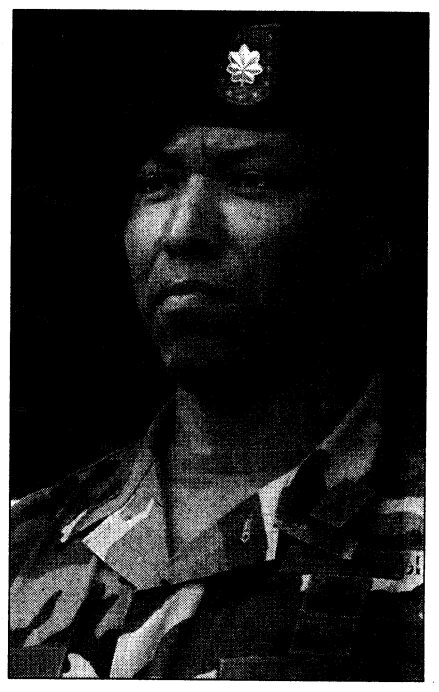


"These men before you will soon go forward and carry out a time-honored infantry mission," White said. "They will go forward and successfully execute national policy for the final 300 to 500 meters — the essence of the infantry mission."

Freehill's next assignment is with Southern Command in Miami.

White's last duty station was at the National Military Command Center in Washington, D.C. His military education includes the Infantry Officer Basic Course, the Infantry Officer Advanced Course and the U.S. Naval War College Command and General Staff School.

His awards and decorations include the Joint Meritorious Unit Award, the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, an Army Commendation Medal with three oak leaf clusters, a UN Medal-Haiti, Overseas Service Medal, Ranger Tab, Master Parachutist Badge, Pathfinder Badge, Air Assault Badge and the Expert Infantryman's Badge.



He is married to Velma Elena, and they have one son, Randolph III.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Lt. Col. Robert Freehill, outgoing commander of 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, hands the guidon to Col. Brian Baldy, Infantry Training Brigade commander, during the change of command on Kanell Field Tuesday.

Incoming commander

Lt. Col. Randolph White was born August 1963, in Pittsburgh.

He was the distinguished military graduate of Campbell University in Buies Creek, N.C., in 1986 and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the infantry.

He plans to do his best in preparing Soldiers to serve in the infantry.

Students to see changes in TDY pay

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers visiting Fort Benning to attend military schools may be in for a bit of "culture shock."

The post implemented a Department of the Army initiative July 11, which provides students traveling from other installations meals, lodging and limited transportation for the duration of their stay in place of the per diem they once received.

"The bottom line here is that when someone comes here TDY to train, we'll provide them room and all their meals — there will be no money transaction," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

Instead, the installation will keep track of how many students they house and feed and for how long; then it will be reimbursed by DA, Walls said.

Currently, the Soldiers' home stations provide students $63 for lodging, $36 for meals, and $3 for incidentals each day. The students also receive $2 per day for laundry and dry-cleaning services after seven consecutive nights.

The Soldiers pay for lodging, meals and transportation requirements with their government travel card, then file a settlement voucher when they return home. They are then responsible for ensuring that funds from their settlement are appropriated to pay off their travel card debt.

Under the new program, students will only be reimbursed for meal costs incurred on weekends and federal holidays, Walls said. They will also receive limited in-and-around mileage and taxi reimbursements.

Students without privately owned vehicles will also be allowed $42 for taxi fare each week.

The students will be housed in on-post lodging or, in some cases, a contracted hotel outside of Fort Benning. Their weekday meals will be taken at post dining facilities.

The Soldiers will still file settlement vouchers when they return home, but only for reimbursement of weekend and holiday meals, incidentals and vehicle mileage as appropriate.

The Armywide initiative, which was successfully piloted at Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Lee, Va., will be invisible to the majority of Fort Benning's schools, where students are already provided lodging and meals, Walls said.

The majority of Soldiers who will be impacted will be infantry lieutenants who come to post for back-to-back courses, Walls said. They can spend as long as nine months TDY at Fort Benning, training and working in "blackbird status" while waiting for their next course to begin.

Although he admits this program "may not be popular" initially with those affected, Walls said it will ultimately save the Army millions of dollars, reduce credit card charges and improve student management.

Program developers hope to reduce the cost of housing, feeding and transporting the students.

It will also reduce the number of individual government travel card transactions, which is expected to "drastically" reduce credit card misuse and delinquent accounts.

That said, the transition will not be without its challenges.

"We're giving scrutiny to this to make sure that it doesn't negatively affect the quality of life for students here and that it won't interfere with their training," Walls said.

Another concern is ensuring that the installation doesn't end up losing money from its budget to implement the new program.

"But our primary concern here is the Soldiers and their training," Walls said. "We don't want either to suffer."

Thanks to the soldiers of the A/511 the Line-Of-Sight Anti Tank Weapon System has proven itself to be as accurate, deployable and lethal as the Army needs it to be. BCT: To bring 3,800 additional Soldiers to Benning

"It also shows confidence in the support our Soldiers, civilians and families receive from the Chattahoochee Valley," he said. "This will be a significant impact on the area as we bring in 3,800 Soldiers over the next two years."

An environmental impact team is working with the Directorate of Public Works to determine the impact the additional Soldiers will have on Fort Benning, and find ways to accommodate their needs.

"We are looking at family housing, community support, transportation (roads), utilities, training facilities, recreational facilities and even chapels," said Patrick Chauvey, chief of environmental programs management.

"All that should be taken into consideration when you are adding roughly 4,000 troops," he said.

So far, BCTs have stood up at Fort Benning, Fort Stewart, Ga., Fort Campbell, Ky., and Fort Drum, N.Y., Several more will be stood up throughout 2005 and 2006, including the 5th BCT, 25th ID.

The goal of the transformation is to have brigade-sized units stationed all over the globe that can deploy as a piece or as a whole to any theater in the world, said Alan Farr, Directorate of Concepts, Analysis, Integration Division Combat Developments.

The Army has been sending divisions into theaters of war, which sometimes creates an overkill effect, Farr said.

By using brigade combat teams, the Army can send self-contained elements wherever needed.

They can simply add another brigade or take one away, depending on the operational situation, he said.

> "We are looking at family housing, community support, transportation (roads), utilities, training facilities, recreational facilities and even chapels. All that should be taken into consideration when you are adding roughly 4,000 troops."
> Patrick Chauvey
> Chief of Environmental Programs Management

One of the benefits to BCTs is they are self-contained, which makes the units much more effective on the battlefield, Farr said.

"This will increase their communication and intelligence gathering, logistical support and required operational capabilities because they don't have to wait for higher headquarters to send them the information or operational assets they need," he said. "They will contain the necessary capabilities, such as engineers, support, signal, military intelligence, MPs and indirect fire as organic assets within the BCT, allowing the commander to react to a multitude of situations and take action."

The transitional process for the active component is scheduled for completion by the end of fiscal 2007, and the Reserve and National Guard components should be transformed by 2010.

As the first unit of action, 3rd Infantry Division has paved the way for the rest of the Army. The unit is still feeling some growing pains because of the changes, Farr said. The whole unit has had to learn a new way of functioning, while preparing for impending deployment.

"For the ground-pounding infantryman, nothing has really changed," he said. "But on an operational level everything will change."

Brigade: Receives orders to deploy in support of OIF

the length of our deployment."

Two of the 3rd Infantry Divisions's brigades will be attached to the 42nd ID, a New York National Guard unit that will be assigned to North-Central Iraq. The remaining brigades under 3rd ID command will be stationed in or around Baghdad.

There has been no decision yet as to which brigade will fall under which command, Salazar said.

The order came as no surprise to the Soldiers of 3rd Brigade.

At the end of February, they received a written warning order for the division to prepare for deployment to Iraq as part of Operation Iraqi Freedom 3.

But even with the advanced warning, it is still hard for some family members knowing their loved ones will be gone for an extended period of time.

Chante Hughley said she's nervous for her husband, Spc. Freddie Hughley, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, going to Iraq.

'We watch the news constantly, and there's some really scary stuff going on over there," Chante said. "I wish he could just stay home.

> "I'm not necessarily excited to be going, but we have a job to do. I trust my command. If they tell me that deploying is what's best for our country, then I'll do what they think is best and not complain about it."
> Pvt. Johan Echaniz
> 3rd Brigade

"I'm trying to get a grasp on the situation. I don't think I'll ever be fully prepared for him to go, but I know he has to. It's his job," she said.

Freddie, who will deploy to Iraq for a second time, agreed.

"Basically, it is a job," Freddie said. "But it's a job that's not finished yet in Iraq, and we have to finish it."

When it comes to his family, Freddie said he is trying hard to put their minds at ease about his leaving.

"I'm trying to spend as much time as possible with them and give them everything they want," he said.

"My family are the ones who are paying the ultimate price for this deployment. The way I look at it is, if they can take it then I can take it," he said.

Some Soldiers, however, are looking forward to the deployment, or at least the money that comes along with it.

"The money for going over there is going to be great," said Pvt. Johan Echaniz, 3rd Brigade. "It's tax free, and you get paid more for hazard pay and all that.

"That's huge for a single 21-year-old Soldier," he said. "The money I'll come home to after the deployment will be nice."

But Echaniz does have his worries.

"I'm worried about the length of time we'll be over there," he said.

"Also, the stress of the situation worries me," he said. "It's going to be pretty rough having to work seven days a week sometimes with no days off.

"I'm not necessarily excited to be going, but we have a job to do," he said. "I trust my command. If they tell me that deploying is what's best for our country, then I'll do what they think is best and not complain about it."

"Everyone in our Army is determined to accomplish this mission," Salazar said. "Now it's our turn."

We are properly trained, properly equipped and we will be successfull," he said.

Cookin' up careers in the Army

Army cooks mix it up for Soldiers

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Spc. David Foley

Spc. Angela Davis, 63rd Engineer Co., restocks the shelves at the Warrior Inn Dining Facility Wednesday afternoon.

"We do more before 9 a.m. than most people do all day."

This former Army catch phrase may not mean much to some Soldiers, but for an Army cook, it is the recipe for success.

While most Soldiers are showing up for their morning PT formation, the Army cooks at dining facilities have been hard at work for more than an hour.

These mess-hall mechanics are on the job at 5 a.m. preparing to feed an army — literally.

They pull out all their equipment, turn on the flames, put out the fruit and spread the smell of freshly cooked bacon by 6:30 a.m.

All this before most Soldiers are ready for breakfast.

The Soldiers who staff the Warrior Inn Dining Facility, for example, prepare three meals a day for about 450 to 500 Soldiers.

"It is long and tiring and can be stressful if you let it get to you, but you can still have a good time and enjoy your job," said Spc. Angela Davis, 63rd Engineer Company. "The best part about it is the camaraderie.

"We work with people from a lot of different companies," she said. "So you learn to work together."

In spite of the long hours and hard work, cooking does have its benefits, said Sgt. Roddrick Burns, 104th Transportation Company.

"I love being an Army cook," he said. "It's a passion of mine. It helps you learn good skills, and when you get out of the military, it sets you on a good foundation.

"It also gives you a chance to be creative and come up with new dishes," Burns said. "If you put something into it, you get something out of it."

Cooking in the Army isn't always the steady grind of the work week.

Each year, installations from all over the world send teams of Soldiers to the Culinary Arts Competition, where they represent their posts by preparing gourmet foods, carving ice and chocolate sculptures, and creating all sorts of tasty treats.

Just as every coin has two sides, so does the life of an Army cook.

Cooks don't get to shun their duties as Soldiers.

"We are Soldiers like everyone else," Davis said. "We still train and go to the motorpools to take care of our equipment.

"You have to be trained in garrison, and you need a totally different type of training for the field, too," she said.

Davis said the job of actually cooking the food is a little easier when deployed because the food in the field is usually partially prepared when they get it, but there is a lot to know about working as a cook in a field environment.

"The equipment is definitely different," she said. "And when we went to Iraq, it was at least 120 degrees in the (mobile kitchen trailer)."

Regardless of the situation or the landscape, these Soldiers have one continuous overarching mission.

"We feed Soldiers and make sure they have healthy, nutritious food and a good variety," Davis said.

SECTION B

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

So, I have a confession to make. After years of boycotting country and making fun of all my friends and family who actually listen to it, I did the unthinkable. I programmed two country stations in my car. And I listen to them. I even sing along.

I know ... shocking. Well, it would be if you knew me and my death metal ways.

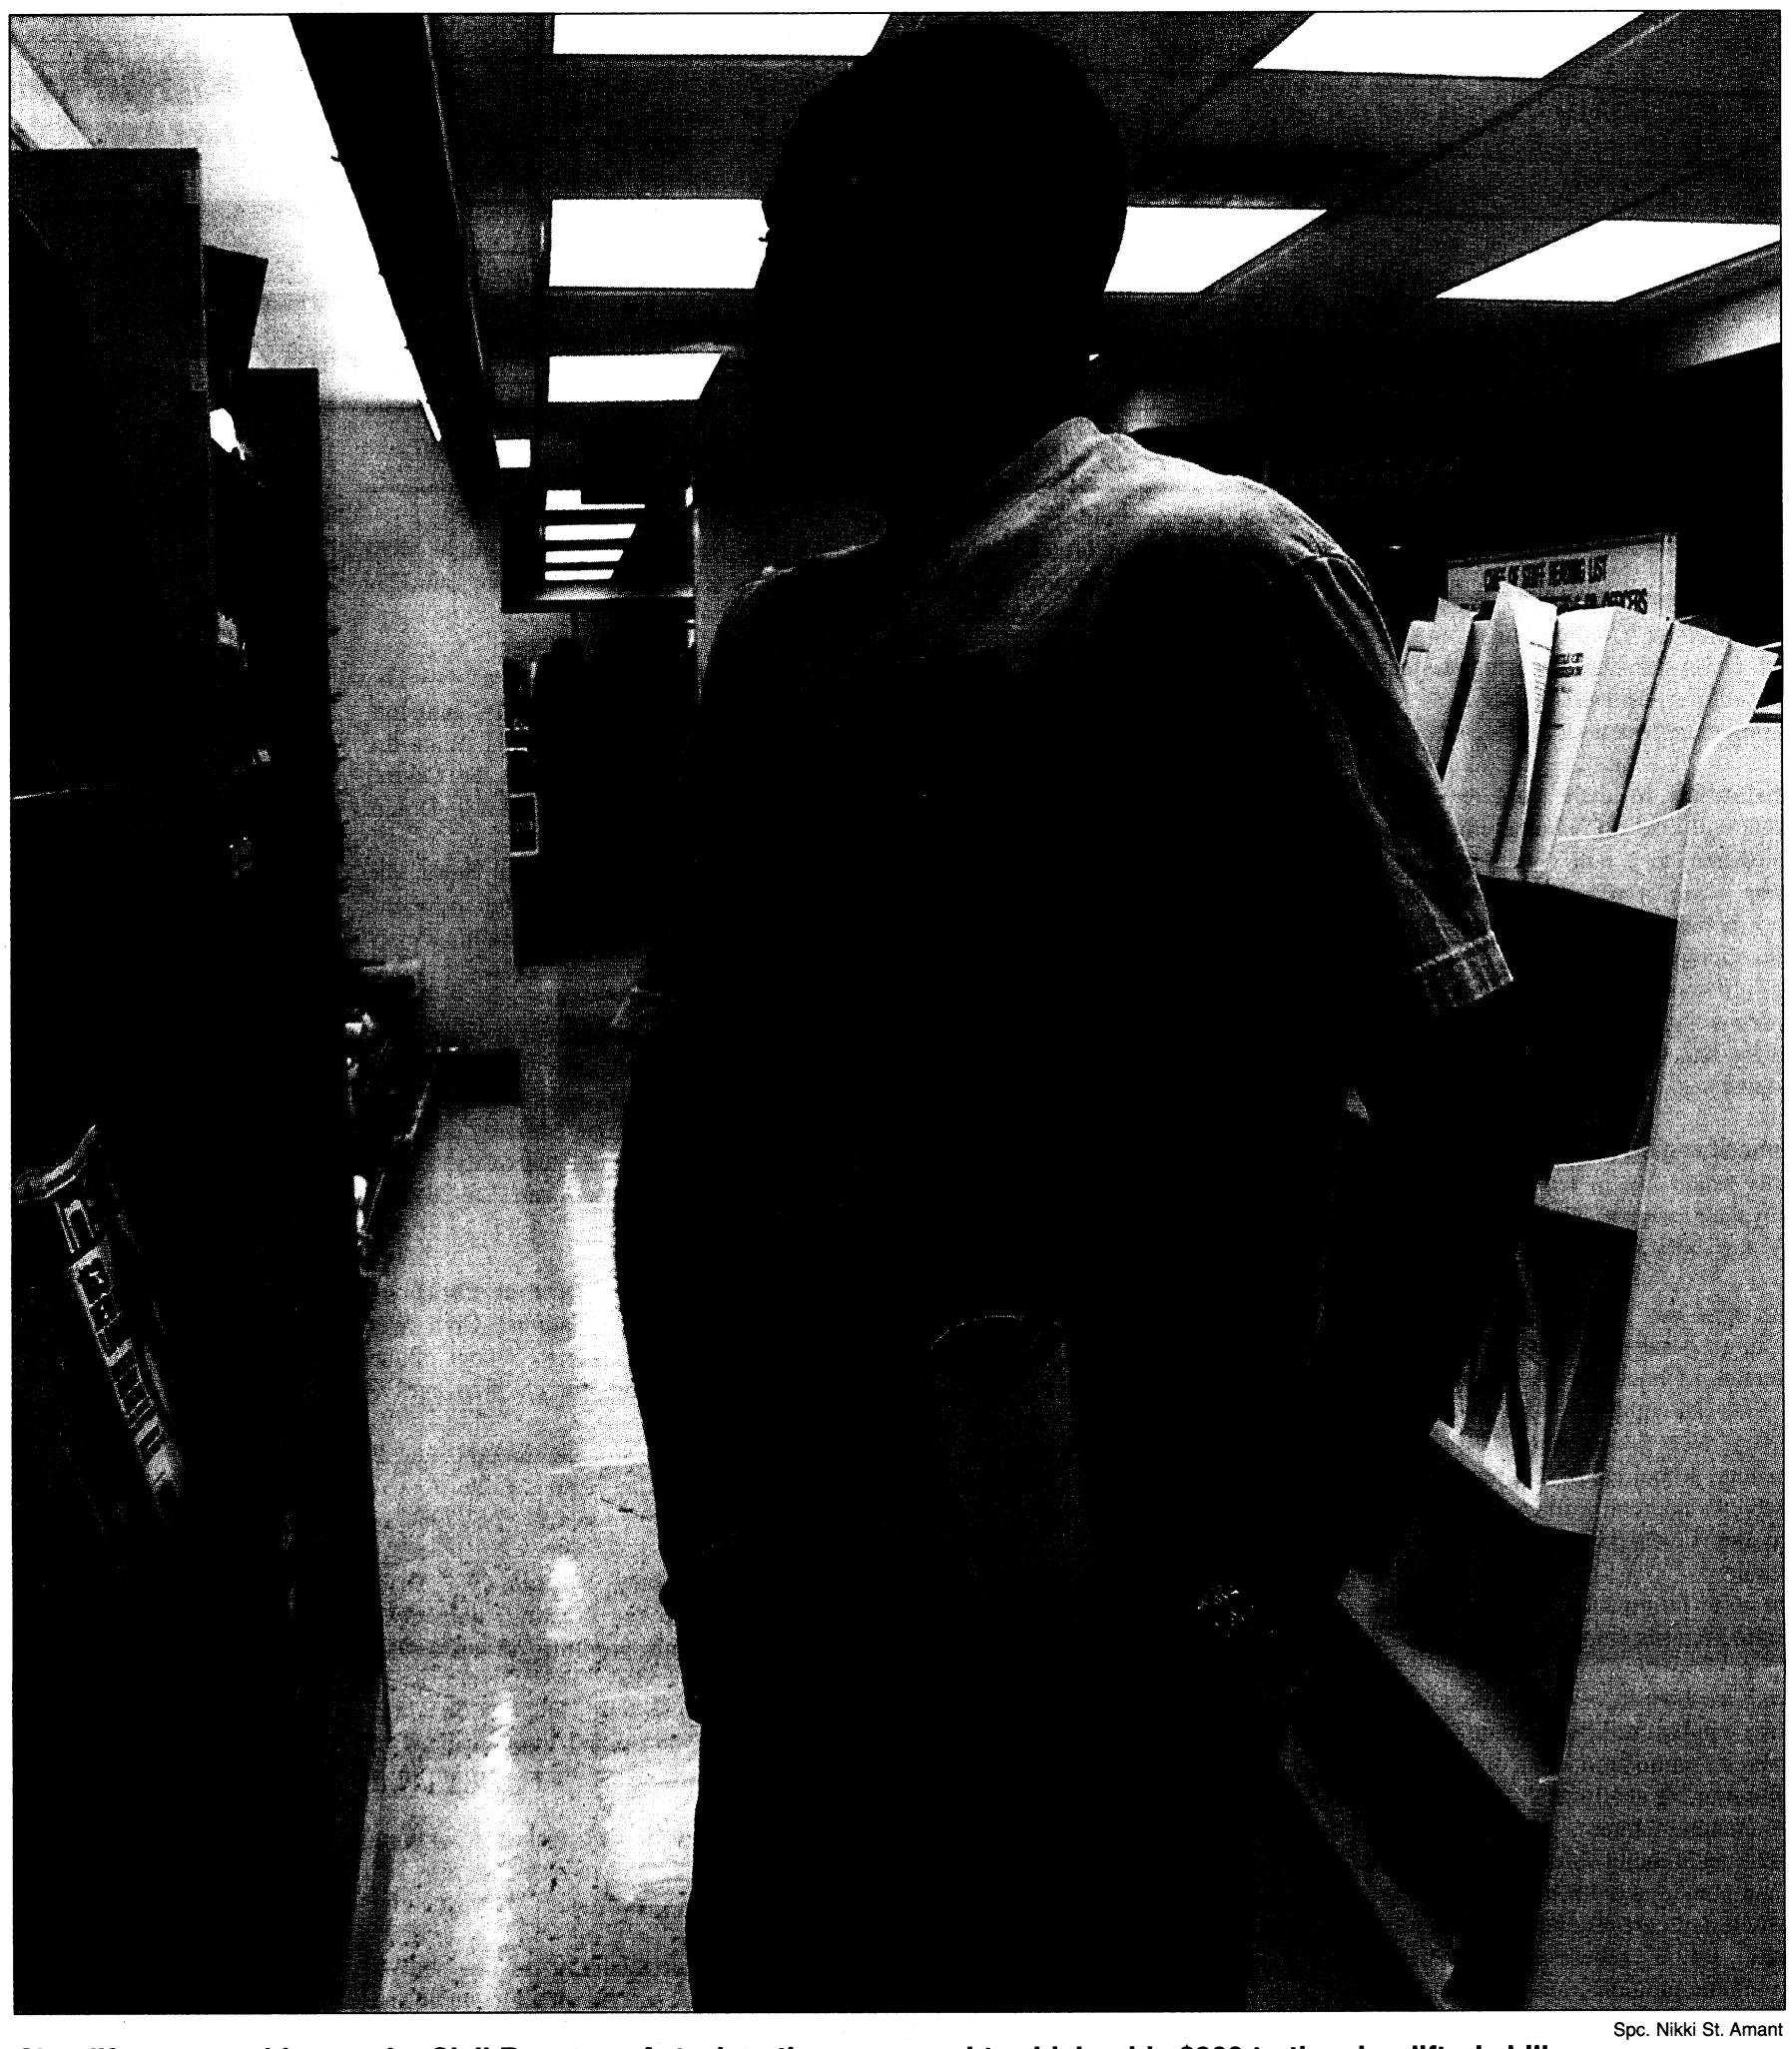
But it's not really my fault. I gave a friend a ride and actually let him touch my stereo, and after about 15 minutes, I was hooked. It's actually kind of a contagious disease, because another friend suffered a similar fate in his truck at my hand.

See, I always thought country was horribly depressing. Enduring road trips with my parents, listening to old-school, my-wife-left-me-my-dog-got-run-over-by-a-truck songs during my childhood left me in serious need of some Prozac.

But I was wrong about country music. It's actually kind of ... fun. Driving down the road (going the speed limit, of course), windows down, hair whipping all over the place, sun's out, not a care in the world. Singing along with Dierks Bentley about "that little white tank top sittin' right in the middle by me" ... With Big and Rich and their parody (at least, I hope it's a parody) Save a Horse, Ride a Cowboy.

I can't help but smile. Kind of a switch from screaming along with Rage or Three Days Grace.

Not that I've given up my rock roots by any means, mind you.



But the point is, country is actually not quite as horrendous as I once thought it to be.

And I think you might agree if you were exposed to it, say, this weekend at Fort Benning's Miller Lite Army Concert Tour at Wetherby Field.

This year's concert will open up with an all-female band called Cowboy Crush — sure to be a big hit with all you male types. You might know their most recent hits, Cry Baby and He's Coming Home.

Then comes the headliners, Honky Tonk Tailgate Party. Now this is no ordinary band ... in fact, it's not really a band at all. It's four country stars who got together just for the sake of this tour. You can look forward

Shoplifters are subject to the Civil Recovery Act when they are caught, which adds $200 to the shoplifter's bill.

Shoplifters pay heavy price at AAFES

Arrest, fine just part of process

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

It may seem innocent enough, maybe it's a dare from a friend, and hey, it's just a pack of cigarettes. But what a shoplifter at the Main Mall Post Exchange might not see is the extensive surveillance, the subsequent apprehension and being led away in handcuffs.

This is what will happen to anyone discovered to be shoplifting at the Main Mall PX, said acting manager Barbara Beaudin.

"There's no secret when you're arrested for shoplifting," she said. "You exit the PX in handcuffs in full view of everyone."

What shoplifters might also not know is that the Civil Recovery Act was instituted in Army Air Force Exchange Services stores in March 2002. To recover damages, the Civil Recovery Act adds another $200 to the shoplifter's bill.

"It's not worth it," Beaudin said. "Say you steal a can of Copenhagen snuff. Instead of just paying the $3.35 for it, you end up paying $203.35. In addition, it ties up a lot of people, including the military police and our employees."

AAFES gives a portion of its funds to the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, and shoplifting is detrimental to that fund.

Shoplifters are given notice of the Civil Recovery Act. If it's not paid, they receive a second notice, and if the shoplifter still fails to pay, their privileges — including check cashing and using their STAR card — are revoked.

Parents should also be aware that they are responsible for their children and whatever crimes they may commit, no matter how small they may seem.

"We had two boys whose parents trusted them to walk around the PX by themselves, and they proceeded to start opening packs of baseball cards, trying to find a particular player. The parents were disappointed in their kids, and on top of that, had to pay for every single pack opened," Beaudin said.

Linda Wright, loss prevention officer, said ID card-holders are responsible for their guests.

"The ID card-holder is ultimately responsible for who they bring in the store with them," Wright said. "Whoever gets caught shoplifting will be arrested and given notice of the Civil Recovery Act."

Beaudin also pointed out that there are various forms of shoplifting.

"If someone blatantly defaces a product, they will pay for it. Ticket switching (where someone takes a lower priced ticket and replaces it on a higher priced item) is stealing, and that person will be detained for shoplifting," she said.

Georgia church gives back to Benning Soldiers

Parishioners adopt 3rd Brigade troops

Pvt. James E. Lewis

It was February 2003, and Angie Doerlich couldn't take it anymore.

"I would sit in front of the television and just cry," said Doerlich of her feelings of helplessness during the first days of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"It was heartbreaking watching the men and women in our military leave their families to deploy," she said.

Doerlich went to a local strip mall, walked into a recruiting station there, stopped at the first desk she came to and said to Staff Sgt. Chris Long, "I want to help."

And help she has.

Soon after, Long helped Doerlich get in contact with Theresa Sanderson, wife of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment's commander at the time, Lt. Col. Jeffrey R. Sanderson, and Doerlich began the process of giving back to Soldiers she sees as giving their all for their country.

"I just wanted to show my appreciation for Soldiers serving our country," Doerlich said.

Together with her church, Duluth First United Methodist Church, located two hours from Columbus, Doerlich touched the lives of many Soldiers, both deployed and at home, through fund-raisers and an adopt-a-Soldier program.

"While I was in the desert during Operation Iraqi Freedom, the church would send me care packages and write me letters," said Sgt. Mitchel Schultz, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

"The coolest thing was that they didn't even know me and were still looking out for me. It was a real morale booster," he said.

When Schultz returned from Iraq, members of Duluth treated him to a dinner at a local restaurant, he said.

"They've continued to stay in touch with me," Schultz said. "They'll call just to make sure I'm doing OK.

"The members of Duluth are really caring people. They're doing it for the Soldiers, not for publicity or anything like that," he said.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Is it possible to get married without ever saying "I do?"

A: It may be, under the rules of a "common law marriage."

Common law marriage is currently recognized in 11 states and the District of Columbia. In Alabama, for example, where common law marriage is recognized, a couple must meet four requirements: Parties must have the capacity to enter into marriage, agreement or consent to be married, public recognition of the marriage, and "consummation" (having intimate relations).

If all four are met, the parties are legally married.

Common law marriage can be confusing, because the parties may not know all of the requirements and when they have met them. Because there is no marriage license or certificate for a common law marriage, Soldiers may have difficulty in proving they are married under common law.

Common law marriage may seem less formal, but it is just as binding as a regular marriage. It is not like "living together," where the parties can simply "break up" and go their separate ways. Once married under common law, the parties remain married until divorce or death. There is no such thing as a "common law divorce."

Suppose that after meeting the requirements for a common law marriage in Alabama, you move to New Jersey, which does not permit common law marriages. Are you still married?

The answer is yes. A state will honor a common law marriage from another state, even if the new state does not permit them. Moving to another state does not "unmarry" you.

Anyone with further questions on this subject should call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

CrossRoads chapel offers contemporary message

1st Lt. Kevin Hovan
Chaplain's Office

We all probably think of something a little bit different when we think of going to chapel or church.

Some of us may think of a very reverent atmosphere in a chapel adorned with stained glass windows and regal chords being played on a grand pipe organ.

Others may equate a chapel service to a simple room with piano music playing the songs of the "ole time religion that's good enough for me."

Still others may consider a good chapel service one in which people "jump a pew" while others are more for quiet reflection. Since we don't all think of chapel the same way, Fort Benning wants to make sure that it provides many different chapels for many different types of people

I recently attended a new service that's started on Kelley Hill (but it's open to everyone on post). It's called CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel, and it is specifically designed to meet the needs of young Soldiers and young families.

When I walked in last Sunday, though I walked in to a standard chapel with regular hardwood pews, there was an "energy" that pleasantly surprised me. People were milling about and chatting, greeting friends and neighbors — and there were lots of guests checking it out, just like me.

The folks at CrossRoads made me feel welcome and comfortable — they were nice, but not too pushy. Another thing that caught my attention was the music playing over the sound system. It wasn't centuries-old hymns or decades-old gospel music ... it was contemporary Christian music, with a beat and rhythm much like you'd hear on a pop radio station.

I couldn't believe it — the chapel service began with a funny video clip from VeggieTales, from the story of David and Goliath. Seeing young David, an asparagus, wearing Saul's armor and preparing to meet Goliath, a pickle, was a funny way to engage the audience over the serious topic of "body armor."

Chaplain (Maj.) Stephen Hawkins, the CrossRoads team leader, (dressed in jean shorts and a polo shirt) then welcomed everyone and announced that they were in Part Two of a message series entitled "Don't Date Naked," (referring to how we are to wear the "armor of God" to protect and enjoy our relationships).

Needless to say, I knew it was a different kind of chapel!

As we worshiped, we sang songs just like those that were playing before the service. They used acoustic guitars and drums and even mentioned they were looking for electric guitarists, keyboardists and other band members.

Right before Chaplain (Capt.) Derek Murray got up for his talk on how to build a successful relationships, we watched a multi-media show of an Operation Iraqi Freedom Soldier telling his story of how body armor saved his life. It was more of a talk and an interesting conversation than a "sermon," and Chaplain Murray closed with some practical tips on winning in your dating life.

I've gotta admit, his talk kept my attention, gave me some practical tools and challenged me at the same time.

When asked about why CrossRoads was started, Chaplain Hawkins replied, "Well, we discovered young Soldiers and families were staying out of chapel in droves, so we asked them why they didn't enjoy coming. They told us that they couldn't relate to what was being said, the messages and the music were boring, they didn't want to or have clothes to dress up, and they thought we were hypocrites and money hungry. So we listened to them and tried to build a chapel for young Soldiers and families who don't normally go to chapel — we've been amazed at the response! I'd say we're just trying to meet the needs of non-churched folks by providing timeless truth in a way that is casual, contemporary and relevant."

Based on what I saw, I'll be back. And I'd encourage anyone who'd like to connect with God and connect with a great circle of friends to check out CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel, too!

Their services are at the Kelley Hill Chapel and open to everyone postwide at 11 a.m. on Sundays.

Count, save your pennies

ACS Financial Readiness Program

Count Up to Wealth is a 10-week campaign to promote saving as the first step in building wealth.

It starts with a kick-off rally from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at the Macon Road K-Mart.

The idea is to save something every day by putting change or dollars into a container. At the end of the 10 weeks, take the money saved to a financial institution and put it into a savings instrument (savings account, CD, savings bond, money market, etc.)

The hope is to get every child, youth and adult who lives or works in the greater Columbus area involved. This is a special opportunity for individuals who live or work on Fort Benning to identify themselves, so they may break out the amount of money we save.

The Count Up to Wealth Campaign begins with the kick-off rally and runs through the week of Oct. 10.

Sign up at the rally Saturday, or, beginning the week of Aug. 1, by phone or on the Web.

The phone number to sign up is 225-3859. The Web site is www.columbusga.org; you will be directed to the Count Up to Wealth link.

To sign up either by phone or on the Web, you will give your name and phone number; be sure to say or type B in front of your phone number (B 555-5555, for example) so we can keep track of how much Fort Benning folks save. You will then be asked how much you will save in the 10 weeks. If you save $1 every week, you will save $10, and if you save $1 every day, that $70. Each week you will log in or call in the amount you have saved that particular week. Be sure to put the B in front of your phone number when you report your savings each week.

There will also be workshops throughout the city each week. One of these will be the "How to Buy a Car Without Being Taken for a Ride" seminar on post Sept. 28.

Church: Gives back to Soldiers

"I am glad to be able to help these Soldiers and glad to be a part of this," she said. I can't sign up for the Army, but I can do this."

Duluth sent more than 800 boxes of Girl Scout cookies to Soldiers in 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., held food drives that helped fill the Kelley Hill Chapel's pantry with food — not once, but several times — and even filled a pick-up truck's bed with diapers for families of less-fortunate Soldiers.

Duluth's current fund-raiser is aimed at helping furnish the family readiness group deployment center room at Kelley Hill's Recreation Center. They hope to collect tables, board games, art supplies, a toy cash register, and G- and PG- rated movies for children.

The fund-raiser is going well, having already supplied a television, VCR and movies for the children to use, Doerlich said.

Duluth's future plans include food drives in November and December to help support 40 Soldiers' families during Thanksgiving and Christmas, Doerlich said.

> "At the end of the day, I feel great doing this. It's something I can give back to the Soldiers who've given so much for our country. If there's any kind of comfort Duluth can give troops, especially when they're deployed, we'll do that. Anything to show our appreciation for what these Soldiers do for us."
> Angie Doerlich
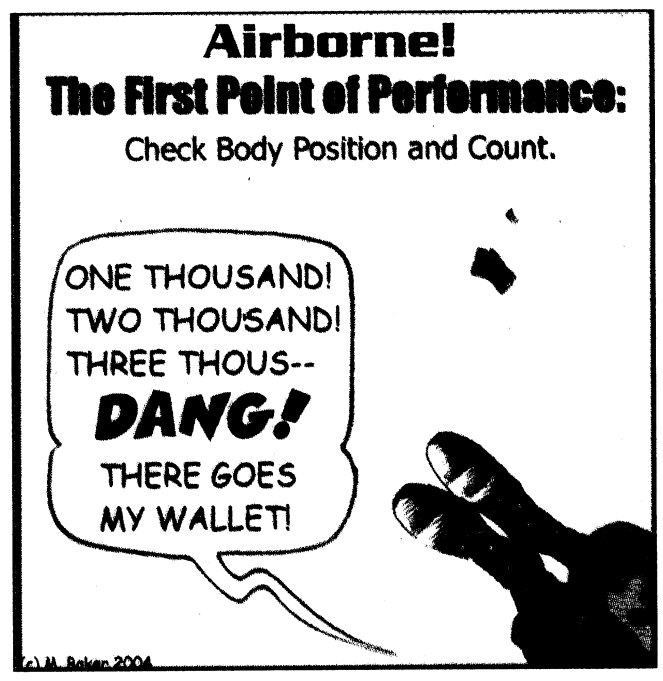
> Member of First United Methodist Church in Duluth, Ga.

"The Duluth First United Methodist Church has made a real difference in Soldiers' lives here at Fort Benning," said Col. Steven Salazar, 3rd Brigade commander.

Originally, Duluth was focused on helping the Soldiers of 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., but as evidenced by the current FRG fund-raiser, that's changing.



Doerlich said the church wants to expand efforts to help as many units and Soldiers as it can.

"At the end of the day, I feel great doing this," Doerlich said. "It's something I can give back to the Soldiers who've given so much for our country.

If there's any kind of comfort Duluth can give troops, especially when they're deployed, we'll do that. Anything to show our appreciation for what these Soldiers do for us," she said.

People interested in helping the Duluth First United Methodist Church's efforts can call Doerlich at (770) 476-8754 or (404) 316-8183.

Chaplain Corps offers rich, decorated history

Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe
Garrison Chaplain

REFLECTIONS

Thursday was the 229th anniversary of the creation of the Army chaplaincy by the Second Continental Congress.

The same Congress authorized chaplains for the Navy on Nov. 28, 1775. The Air Force received authorization for chaplains July 26, 1949.

The Army Chaplain Corps comprises the largest military chaplaincy in the world. As of January, there were 1,369 Army chaplains on active duty, of which 112 were Roman Catholic, eight Jewish, seven Muslim, six Orthodox Christian and 1,236 Protestant.

The basic motto of the chaplaincy is, "For God and country."

World War II marked the greatest transformation of the Chaplain Corps in two centuries. From 140 regular Army chaplains on active duty in December 1941, the Corps expanded to include 8,141 chaplains on active duty in December 1945.

At the direction of Gen. George C. Marshall, the Army constructed 1,532 cantonment chapels during the war, created the rank of major general for the chief of chaplains and brigadier general for the deputy chief of chaplains, relieved chaplains of duties not directly related to their profession as clergy and included chaplains in airborne units.

Chaplains jumped with their fellow paratroopers into Sicily, Normandy, Holland and Germany. Between 1861 and 1975, six chaplains received the Medal of Honor.

More than 3,400 other chaplains received combat decorations, including 27 Distinguished Service Crosses, 44 Silver Stars, 67 Legions of Merit, 719 Bronze Stars and 109 Purple Hearts.

Chaplains have traditionally provided noteworthy leadership for the government and for their religious denominations after their military service.

One chaplain, Andrew Hunter, who served in both the American Revolution and the War of 1812, became one of the founders of the U.S. Naval Academy. Another, Abraham Baldwin, was a signer of the Constitution of the United States. Chaplain Edward Neill was a private secretary to Presidents Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson and later U.S. consul to Dublin. Chaplain William Pile became governor of New Mexico, a U.S. congressman and, later, minister to Venezuela. Dr. Isaac Tichenor was a college president in Alabama and later secretary of the Baptist Home Mission Board in Atlanta. He was credited with helping to organize 10,000 churches in his lifetime.

Some 24 former Army chaplains have been consecrated bishops in their denominations since 1865. One of these became the first Roman Catholic Archbishop of Saint Paul, Minn.

Chaplain Ignacio Ramirez, post chaplain at Monterey, Calif., in 1850, was the first Hispanic chaplain to be commissioned.

Chaplain Henry M. Turner, 1st U.S. Colored Troops, 1864, was the first black chaplain to be commissioned.

Chaplain (Capt.) Alice Henderson Harris, 1974, was the first female chaplain to be commissioned as an Army chaplain.

At Fort Benning, in the field next to The Infantry Center Chapel, we honor the memory of four Army chaplains who gave their life jackets to Soldiers and sailors after the U.S. troop transport Dorchester was torpedoed off Greenland in 1943.

Many of the survivors witnessed the calm bravery of the four chaplains: Rev. George Lansing, a Methodist minister; Rabbi Alexander Goode; Rev. Clark Poling, a Dutch Reformed minister; and Father John Washington, a Catholic priest. The men helped others to safety and then prayed together, arm in arm as the ship went down. These four men came to symbolize interfaith and understanding, selflessness and heroism.

On a commemorative postage stamp issued shortly after their death was the citation "These immortal chaplains: Interfaith in action."

And so for 229 years, in peacetime and in war, Army chaplains have sought to bring worship, sacraments, spiritual counseling and pastoral ministry to military service members and their families.

May our nation continue to honor that "freedom of worship" clause in the Bill of Rights by continuing to support a robust Army chaplaincy to meet the spiritual needs of all in the years to come.

Family dog teaches new tricks, unconditional love

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

It was the evening of July 4, and the Hawkins family enjoyed a wonderful time at the fantastic "Thunder on the Hooch." When we returned to our house, our lovable and docile 105-pound Baxter-the-Wonderdog (a handsome jet-black, oversized Labrador Retriever) must have gotten spooked by the neighborhood fireworks' cracks and pops, because he had knocked a picket out of the fence and was gone for what we figured was "a night out on the town."

We weren't overly concerned because our gentle giant of a dog was known to roam in the 50 acres of woods right behind our house, always plopping right down next to his food bowl by daybreak. Always — except that night.

Hawkins

It was about 9 a.m. the next morning when my wife found him, thrown to the curb on Macon Road, still and silent, and very much gone.

She wept. I wept. Dalton wept. Lauren wept. And then we dug a hole behind our house next to the stream he loved and the shade he enjoyed, and buried a mutt who was very much part of our family for eight years and brought us incalculable joy.

What is it about a dog that can make a Green Beret bawl and a family grieve so deeply? What is it this cordial canine taught me about how to love? Four things:

• Nuzzle daily. Wouldn't love grow more easily at your house and mine if we didn't let the events of the day infect our ability to just nuzzle when we walk through the door and spot each other?

• Forgive quickly. Dogs have short memories. They get mad, I suppose, but they get over it, don't they? No matter how out of sorts I might have been, I could always count on the unconditional forgiveness of Baxter.

• Play often. Baxter never got dulled to the excitement of a good "fetch," a good ball toss or a good walk. Do you still "play" with your spouse the way you used to? Are you having fun with your children the way you used to?

• Remain loyal. I've had some doubts in my life, but I've never doubted that Baxter held more affection for me than anyone else in the world.

It's been said, "To hurt deeply means that you have loved deeply." Well, let me sign off with a smile, saying that the Hawkins family loved a dog named Baxter very deeply. Baxter, thanks

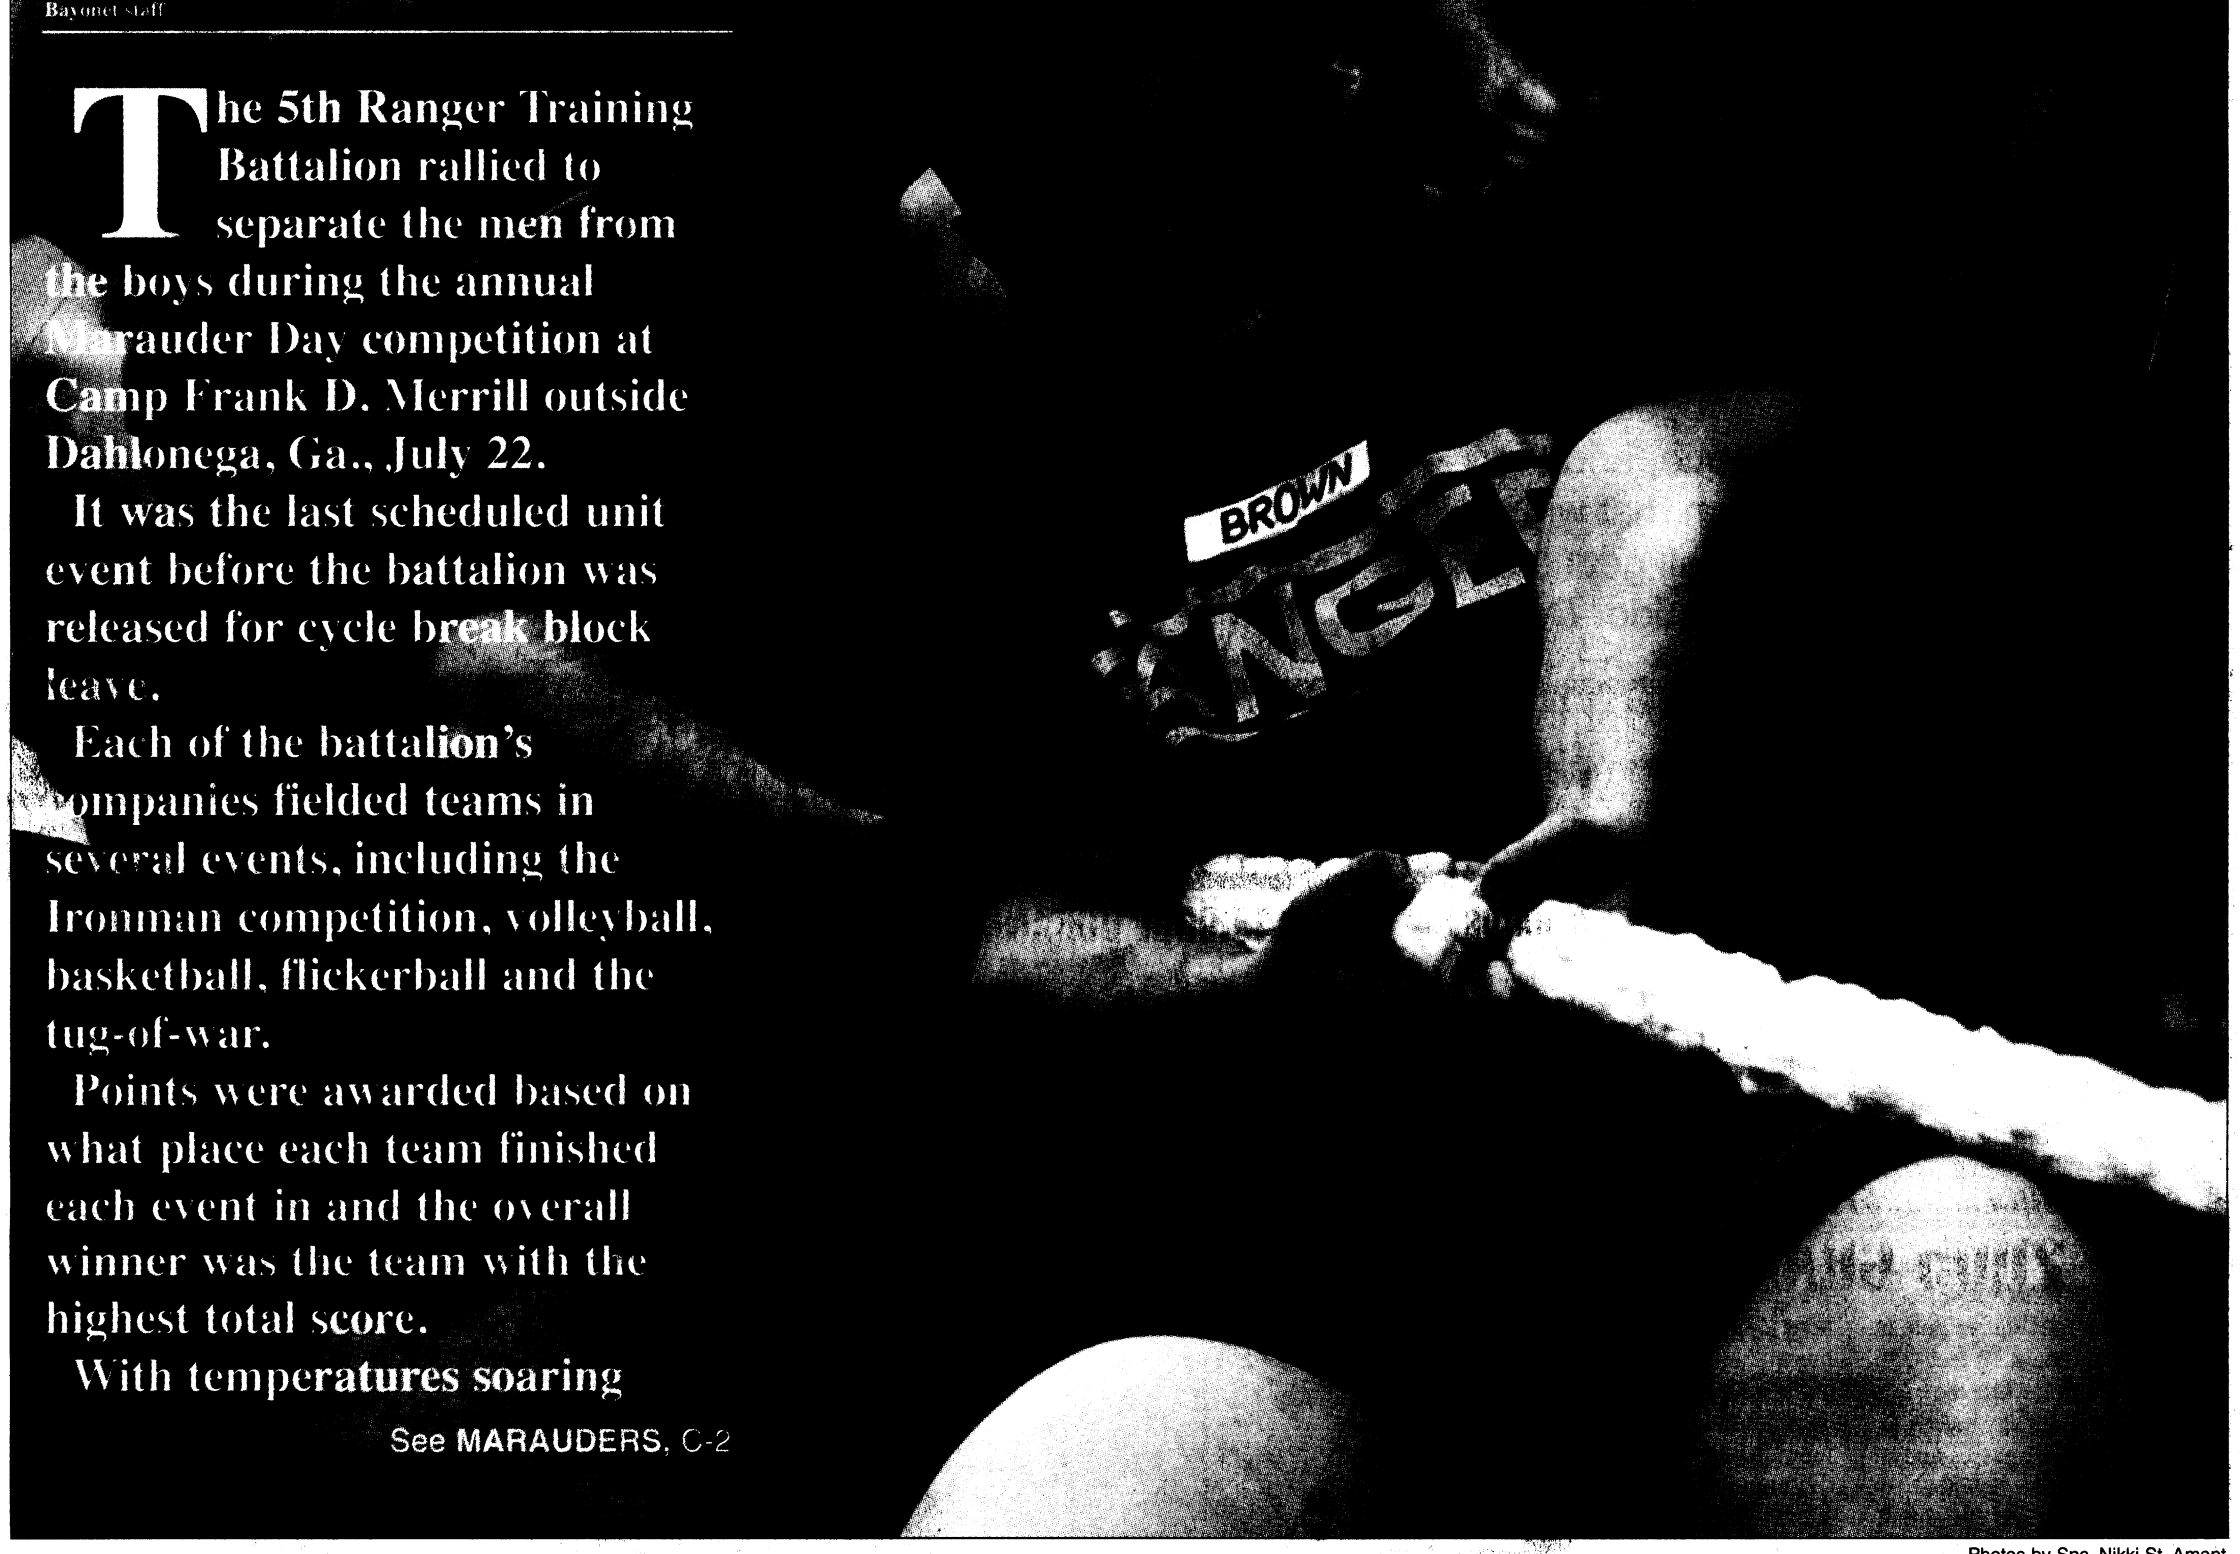
MARAUDER DAY

5th RTBn. tourney takes gut check to new level

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The 5th Ranger Training Battalion rallied to separate the men from the boys during the annual Marauder Day competition at Camp Frank D. Merrill outside Dahlonega, Ga., July 22.



It was the last scheduled unit event before the battalion was released for cycle break block leave.

Each of the battalion's companies fielded teams in several events, including the Ironman competition, volleyball, basketball, flickerball and the tug-of-war.

Points were awarded based on what place each team finished each event in and the overall winner was the team with the highest total score.

With temperatures soaring

Spc. Brian "Tiny" Brown, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, puts his back into it during the final Marauder Day event July 22, the tug-of-war. A fellow Ranger, Sgt. 1st Class Jay Howell, B Company, offers encouragement as the more than 200-pound Soldier heaves on the rope.

Staff Sgt. Beau Stecklein, B Co., tries to gain control of the ball as Staff Sgt. Juan Trevino, A Co., zeroes in on him for a tackle.

A B Co. Ranger looks for an escape route as A Co. closes in around him during the first flickerball match of the day.

Staff Sgt. Santiago Dyson, HHC, gets primal as he digs in his heels during the tug-of-war event. HHC lost this event to A Co., but won the overall Marauder Day competition. HHC's guidon will bear the Marauder Day streamer until next year's competition.

Olympic shooter relying on skills, some luck

Repeat contender represents AMU, family in Athens

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Try this: from a standing position, raise your right arm straight out, chest high, and hold it steady for two hours without moving.

Now tell me competitive shooting isn't a sport.

"A lot of people say what we do doesn't qualify (as a sport), but it's incredibly hard," said Sgt. 1st Class Daryl Szarenski, an international pistol shooter who'll represent the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at the Olympics in Athens, Greece, next month.

Szarenski will shoot one-handed for nearly two hours at a time in two events, air pistol and free pistol.

"It's all about patience and technique and consistency," said the 36-year-old Michigan native, who came in 25th in the 2000 Olympics.

Like other athletes, shooters have to train constantly, and like other Soldiers, AMU shooters must do PT daily. Still, they can suffer through slumps.

"Sure, sometimes it comes down to a little bit of luck — whose day it is — but when you're running with the big dogs, you can't have a mediocre day. You can't have a mental glitch," said Szarenski, who joined the AMU in 1992. "You've gotta stay confident."

Szarenski believes his confidence was shaken by the "hype and hoopla" surrounding the Olympics in 2000.

This time around, he's feeling a little more sure of himself.

"I'm less intimidated. I haven't changed anything really, my technique or anything, but I've competed a lot more," he said. "I've trained with these weapons since 2001, and my execution is more consistent."

With all that training and experience — and the confidence that comes with it — Szarenski relies much less on "crutches" he once used.

"Oh, I was real bad. I was superstitious. I wore my Popeye T-shirt under my shooting clothes every time I competed," he said. "I wouldn't leave the house without petting my dog. And when I was a rifle shooter, I never — never — washed my sweatshirts. They were so bad they could walk by themselves."

Szarenski no longer believes "in all that nonsense." It's all about the training, he said, and focus. When he gets to Athens, he'll concentrate on "what a good shot feels like."

"You have to visualize it, feel it and think about it every waking moment."

Szarenski, who earned a gold medal in the Pan-American Games last year and is a three-time member of the World Championship team, is the youngest of five boys. The oldest competed on the West Point team and another was a gunsmith for AMU. His father shot competitively in the '60s. And Szarenski met his wife, Amy, at AMU, where she was once a shooter.

"It's a family thing, I guess. It's addictive," he said. "It's all I ever wanted to do, and even when I was a kid, I knew the Army was the way to go. Nothing else compares."

Marauders: Competition crowns champ til next year

quickly into the upper 90s, heat exhaustion and dehydration were big concerns in performance as many players competed in multiple events.

Ironman competitors tackled tough challenges, facing a grueling series of tasks, including canoeing, ruck runs, rappelling, the Prusik climb, a physical fitness test, qualification ranges, a written test and a road march.

"Ironman is like a one-day Best Ranger Competition," said Sgt. 1st Class Dan Barnes, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 5th RTBn.. "It's meant to be fun, but it is really, really tough."

Many Ironman competitors completed the event and hit the field in time for a game of flickerball.

Flickerball is a mixture of football, rugby and basketball, Barnes said.

During two 15-minute halves, two nine-player teams attempt to move a football down the field by continuously passing the ball without taking more than three forward steps and holding possession to less than 10 seconds.

Once the ball is in the scoring area, players have to throw it through a two-foot square hole in a wooden backboard 10 feet above the ground, while the opposite team uses any means to strip the ball, block passes and take the ball handler down.

"Marauder Day and flickerball are all about having a chance to take out some NCOs and officers," said Spc. Jason Yoder, HHC. "It's the one day rank doesn't matter."

1st Sgt. George Henry, B Co. first sergeant, was taken out in the company's first flickerball match of the day with a knee injury, but said Marauder Day is a day for winding down and strengthening bonds within the unit.

"It's about building team cohesion within the battalion," he said. "We work hard, we play hard and, in the end, it's all fun."

Barnes said fun is what the Ranger cadre need as they wrap up another cycle and prepare to go on block leave, before returning to a record five back-to-back cycles.

Each cycle is three weeks long and is based around rigorous mountain training and tactics.

> "These guys aren't playing for prizes really. The company that wins each individual event gets a little plaque, and the team that wins overall gets the Marauder Day plaque, but it's mostly for the bragging rights."
> Sgt. 1st Class Dan Barnes
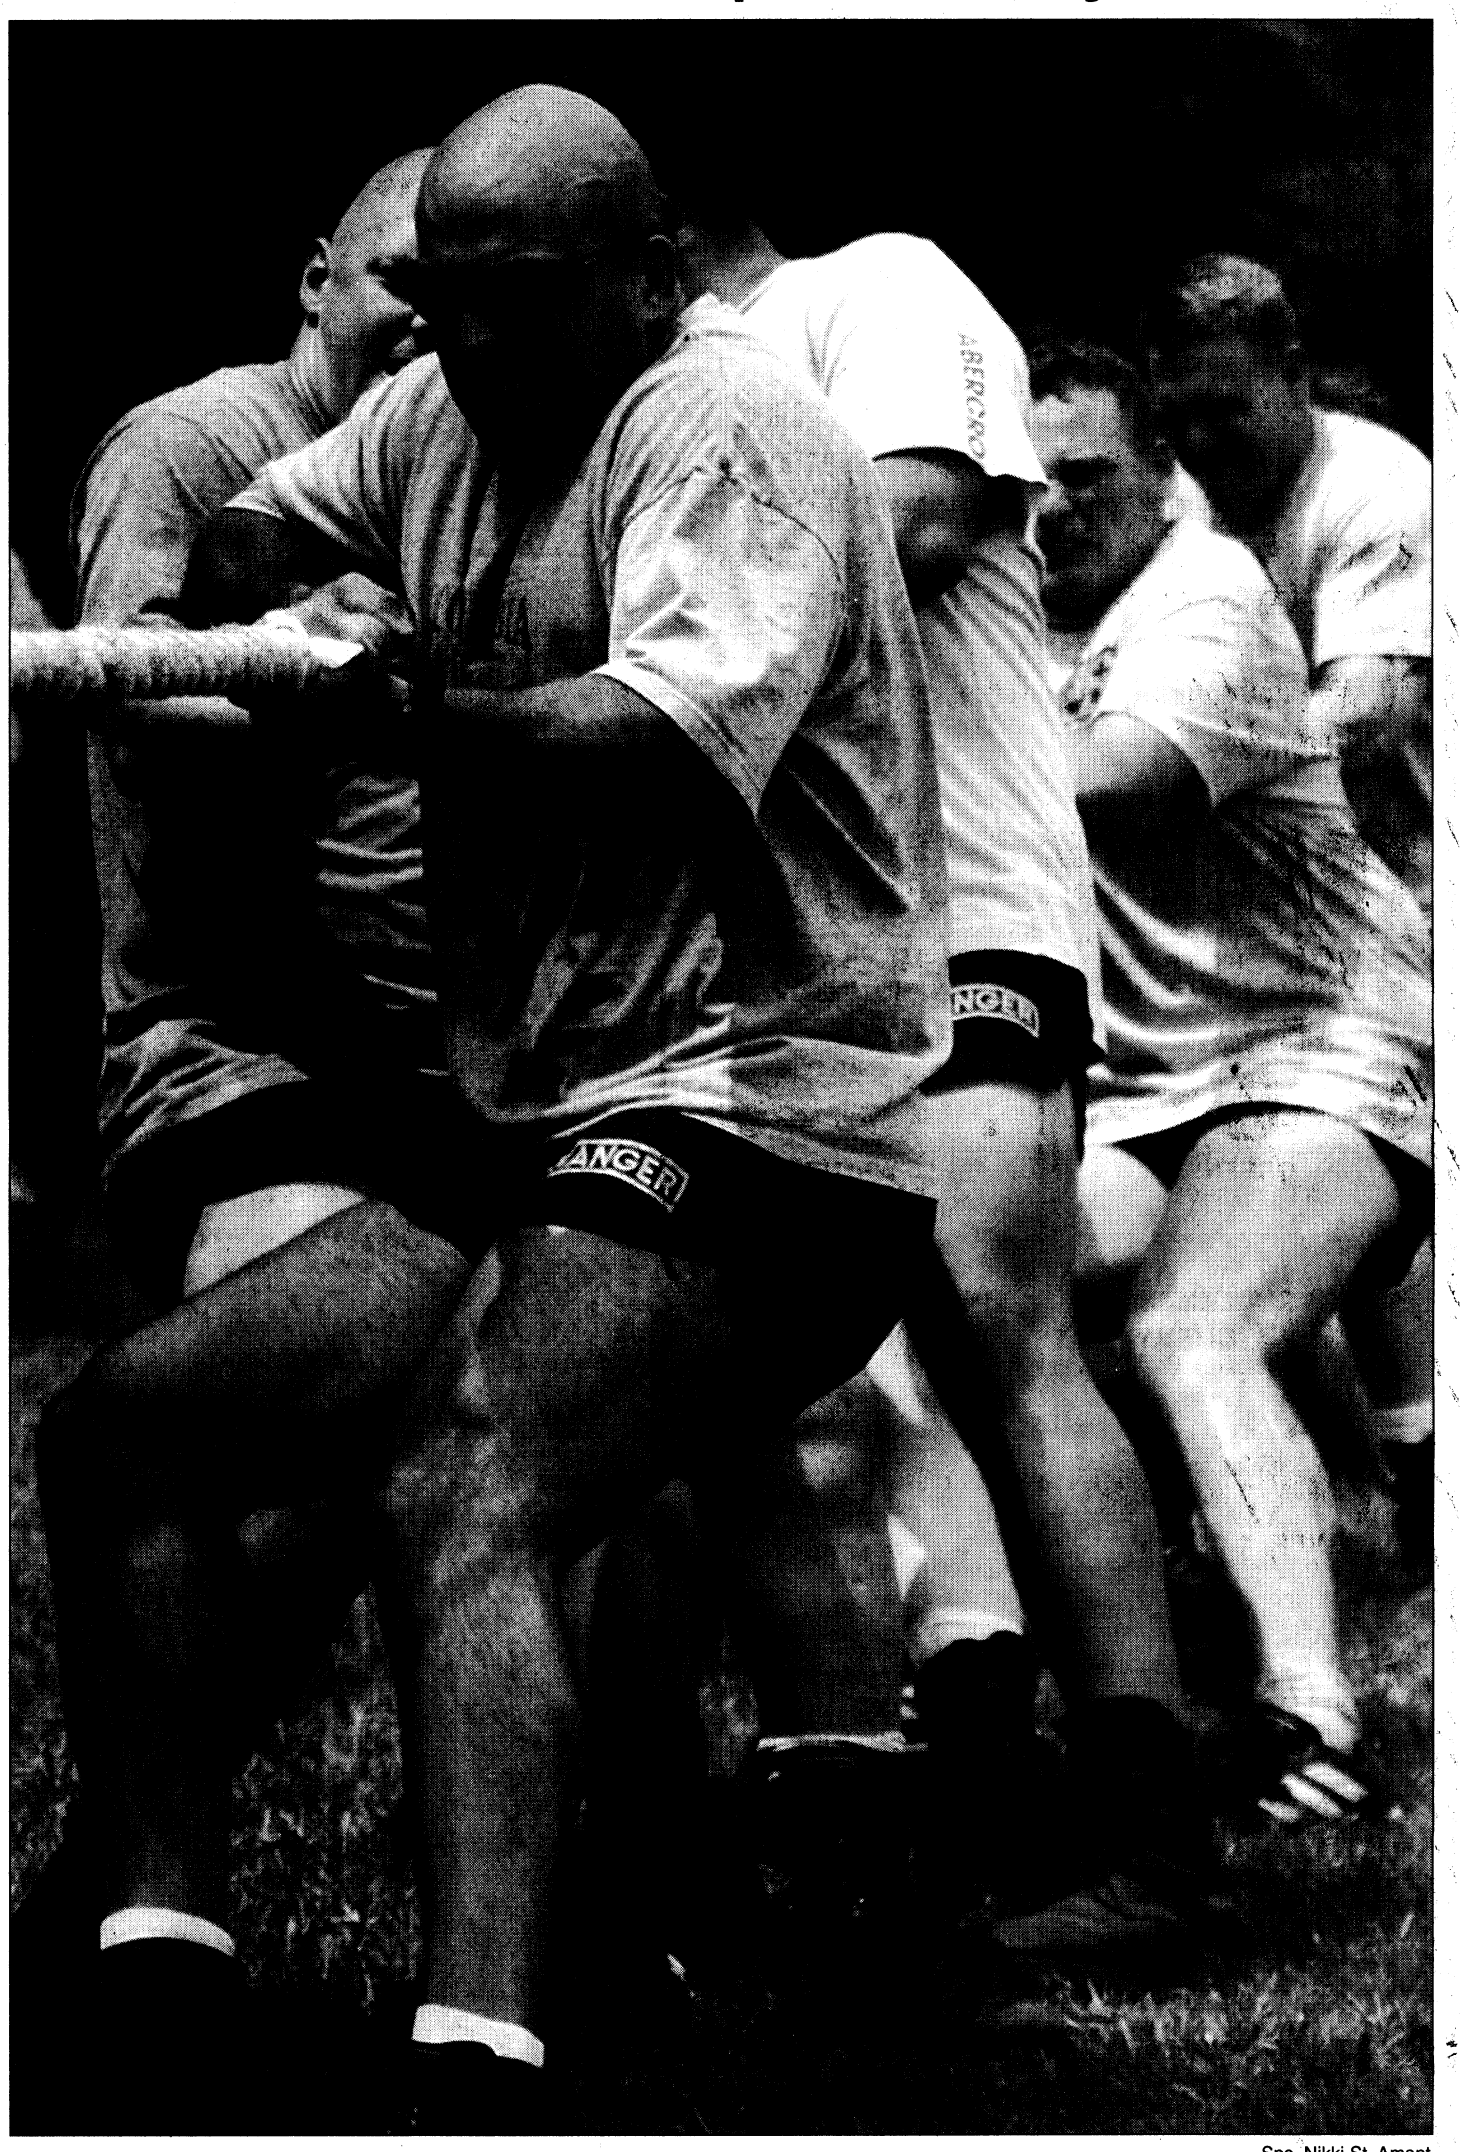
> 5th RTBn.

For the unit to be returning to fifteen weeks of training with no break between cycles is almost unheard of, Ranger Training Brigade commander Col. K.K. Chinn said.

"It is fun and it's good for raising morale," said Spc. Brian Kirby, HHC. "During cycles, we work all the time supporting Ranger students, but I love it up here. This is a pretty close-knit bunch."

"I feel like this is family, even though I haven't been here that long," Yoder said.



Barnes said Marauder Day is a tribute to the unit's namesake — Merrill's Marauders.

Maj. Gen. Frank D. Merrill commanded a unit composed strictly of volunteers during operations in Burma during World War II. His Marauders took on only the toughest missions, facing a daunting 90 percent chance they would return home in body bags.

And while the stakes may have changed for the modern-day Marauders, the competition remains fierce, fast and furious.

"These guys aren't playing for prizes really," Barnes said. "The company that wins each individual event gets a little plaque, and the team that wins overall gets the Marauder Day plaque, but it's mostly for the bragging rights."

HHC, triumphant in the end, took home the chest-thumping rights in this year's competition.

A PRIEST, a RABBI and an IMAM ARE WALKING DOWN THE STREET.

(There's no punch line.)

What do you get when you mix Christianity, Judaism and Islam? In many parts of the world, it's a recipe for disaster. Yet in America, it's a formula that has peacefully endured for over 200 years. In fact, not only has it endured, it's flourished.

The pundits may say that the ability for different faiths to coexist here comes from a lack of intensity and passion for any religion in America. But nothing could be further from the truth. Because we are free to choose which religion, if any, we'd like to follow, it enables us to have a deeper, more personal relationship with our faith than would otherwise be possible.

And because no one religion needs to feel threatened by another, we can look to the similarities that unite us, instead of focusing on the differences. Two hundred million Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus agree. To learn more about freedom of religion, visit rememberfreedom.org. Or, feel free to ask the spiritual leader of your choice.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

Stabilization now in effect

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Stabilization is now the watchword for personnel managers as they match Army manpower requirements with where Soldiers are stationed.

A recommendation from an Army chief of staff focus area task force a year ago, stabilization went into effect Sunday.

Specifically, stabilization means Soldiers will stay at duty stations for longer periods than before.

When first proposed, stabilization was focused on initial-entry Soldiers staying at their first duty stations for five to seven years after assignment, rather than the older personnel management system of moving Soldiers from post to post every two to three years. Today, stabilization applies to all U.S.-based Soldiers — though it is not fixed to a specific time period, said Lt. Col. Dave Goehring, assistant to the deputy chief of staff for Plans, Human Resources Command.

"This is about slowing the movement of Soldiers and their families from post to post — allowing them to grow roots in the community," Goehring said. "Of course, Operation Iraqi Freedom will continue to cause turbulence."

> "This is about slowing the movement of Soldiers and their families from post to post — allowing them to grow roots in the community."
> Lt. Col. Dave Goehring

Goehring warned that stabilization is not a means of avoiding deployment. If the Soldier's unit gets selected for deployment, the Soldier goes with the unit, but the Soldier can expect to return for duty at the same installation following deployment.

Dreams do come true ...

Frankie Pickard, 11, lives out his life's dream at the Army Concert Tour on Wetherby Field Saturday night. Pickard has suffered from a heart condition since he was an infant, but has always wanted to be a country music star. The youngster took the stage at the concert to perform 9/11, and later sang back-up for country superstar David Kersch. Kersch was one of the four country stars who performed together as Honky Tonk Tailgate Party at the concert. For more on Saturday's event, see A-3.

Plan aims to save $1M

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

As the Weigh Down Columbus campaign asked the community to lose something (fat), a new campaign has sprouted in the area that asks the community to gain something (money).

The Columbus Saves, Count up to Wealth campaign, part of the Georgia Saves campaign, asks the community to set aside pocket change and invest it into savings for 10 weeks.

"All of us should be involved in this," said Ann Pratcher, Army Community Service, Financial Readiness Program manager, "Because it gets us started toward saving and changes our habits."

The campaign, led by the University of Georgia, was developed to change people's habits and help them save money for the future.

"If you do something for 10 weeks, you've normally made it a habit," Pratcher said.

Pratcher said the most important thing is to change people's perception of saving.

"A lot of people say, 'I can't save because I don't have $100 to open an account,'" she said. "But they can save money in a coffee can or a piggy bank or even a pencil holder."

Pratcher said some of the local banks are working out deals with those who enroll in the campaign, which can also help them get started.

Pratcher said Weigh Down Columbus was a huge success,

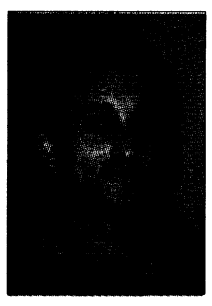
608th Soldiers earn Bronze Stars in Iraq

Deployed troops get recognized for actions

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"Some people will argue over what's the most important supply on the battlefield — food, water — but everyone knows you can't survive without ammunition."



And if you ask Chief Warrant Officer Pennie Garich, she'll tell you, "Ammo is hands-down the most important supply."

Garich

Of course, the ammunition specialist would say that. But after spending a year in Iraq as the accountable officer for her platoon, she has a little something to back it up.

During that year, Garich, Sgt. 1st Class Luis Perez (her "right-hand man" and the platoon's operations sergeant) and the Soldiers of 3rd Magazine "Hellraisers" Platoon, 608th Ordnance Company, distributed ammunition to all 10 of the Army's divisions, including 2nd and 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiments.

Perez

In fact, the platoon was so successful that Garich and Perez received Bronze Stars during a ceremony July 30.

The platoon arrived in Iraq in April 2003, operating independently of the 608th. It integrated with another ordnance company to issue a basic ammunition load to 1st Armored Division and 2nd ACR while conducting initial turn-in for 3rd Infantry Division as it moved out of Iraq.

They then assumed responsibility for establishing a corps storage area which would eventually serve the entire theater.

And they accomplished the mission with more than a few challenges to overcome.

"We did a mission that required three platoons with only 27 people," Perez said. "That's all we had when we began to build the CSA."

All the while, the unit was "issuing ammo to pretty much anyone in Iraq who needed it," Garich said, including multi-

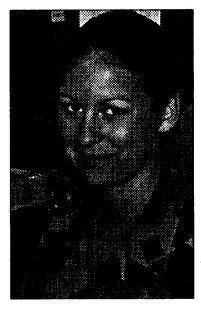
Live like you were dyin'

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

If you missed Saturday's Army Concert Tour, you missed more than a concert. You missed a life lesson.



One that came from an 11-year-old boy, criss-crossing a stage in front of thousands of people, giving every inch of his soul to fulfill his life's dream.

Frankie Pickard doesn't have the easy life so many of us take for granted. He hasn't been able to play sports or go to parties or enjoy school outings like other kids his age.

Instead, he's been fighting for his life since he first went into cardiac arrest when he was 2 weeks old. He's undergone three heart surgeries and long recoveries. Still today, he lives with basically half a heart. But that half a heart is bigger than you can believe.You see, more than anything in this world, Frankie wanted to be a country music star. He wanted to record a country album, and he wanted to perform on stage.

Well, he recorded that album, and he got the chance to take the stage Saturday night.

Our commanding general once called Fort Benning "a place where miracles happen," and after this weekend, I have to say I believe that, because I was there, at the foot of that stage, when Frankie's dream came true. I was there when he first opened his mouth to sing 9/11 and gave the most incredible, heartfelt performance I've ever seen.

He was a mix of fear and determination, wide eyes, a little tremble in the knees. But he was good. He was talented. And there was a light in his eyes that you honestly couldn't describe with mere words.

I don't even know this kid, and when the crowd exploded in cheers and hollering and applause and he smiled with such pure joy, I had tears in my eyes and a smile all over my face. It was inspiring.

And Monday morning, driving into work, within the first few notes of Tim McGraw's Live like you were dyin', I thought of Frankie again.

If you've never heard it, the song is about a man who's discovered he's dying, and he's talking about all the things he finally did after he got the news that he was on borrowed time. How he took a good hard look at himself and what he'd done with his life and what he'd do differently if he could do it all again. And then, he did.

The song always gets to me, but listening to it and thinking of Frankie, I felt such a chill and almost cried.

Because it seems so unfair, so unreal, that someone with the courage and the passion to actually follow his dreams should face such an uncertain future.

And yet here I am, 22 years old, sitting around, waiting for my life to happen. Waiting for the "right time" to chase down all my dreams or even figure out what they are.

Frankie taught me how much time I'm wasting. Maybe because I take it for granted that I'll have all the time in the world. Maybe because I'm too afraid of failing to ever even try.

And I ask myself what I would do if I faced Frankie's threat. If I knew that these years, these days, might be my last, what would I do with them?

If tomorrow was my last gift, and time would suspend long enough for me to say goodbye to my family and loved ones, and then I could do anything I wanted with it — go anywhere, see anything, do anything — what would I do?

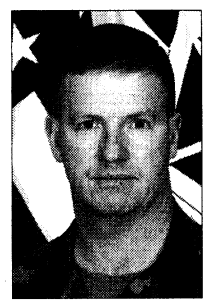
I thought about this, and the truly sad thing is, I don't even really know. Do you?

Corporal recruiters tell Army story

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Kenneth Preston
Sergeant Major of the Army

On a recent visit to the U.S. Army Accessions Command, I learned about the great strides being undertaken by young corporals in the Corporal Recruiter Program. The Corporal Recruiter Program began in 1999 on a trial basis, and has since allowed more than 300 privates first class and specialists to serve one-year recruiting tours.

The program goal is to bring young, spirited Soldiers into recruiting to tell the Army story to their civilian peers.



The professional corporal recruiter has become an important combat multiplier to the recruiting force. Corporal recruiters stand toe-to-toe with other detailed recruiters in exceeding standards of excellence.

Serving as a recruiter is a real-world mission that gives the recruiters a sense of self satisfaction and achievement knowing they are part of the Army's success.

Many of the corporal recruiters have only recently left their hometowns and going back has provided many Soldiers opportunities they never imagined.

The experiences these young NCOs are gaining go hand-in-hand with the impact they're making to fill the ranks of our great Army.

They'll not only return to the inventory better and more experienced leaders, they'll have replenished the ranks with qualified, eager future warriors.

To participate or volunteer for the Corporal Recruiter Program, Soldiers must be in their first term of enlistment, meet the basic recruiter qualifications and be single with no dependents. There is a second program, though, for married specialists and corporals, which gives them the opportunity to join the recruiting force.

The Corporal Detailed Recruiter Program is designed to allow specialists and corporals who are married with no more than two dependents to serve a two-year tour in recruiting. As with the Corporal Recruiter Program, Soldiers interested in the Corporal Detailed Recruiter Program must also meet the basic recruiter qualifications.

I urge leaders at every level to identify exceptional privates first class and specialists and counsel them on the great aspects of the Corporal Recruiter Program and the Corporal Detailed Recruiter Program.

We do ourselves, and our Army, a tremendous service when we send these young Soldiers out to the civilian population to represent us and identify those who would wear the uniform of an American Soldier. Especially identifiable would be Soldiers returning from Operations Iraqi and Enduring Freedom rotations who can help tell the Army story. We need these young warriors to tell of their experiences in combat and specifically, talk about the good things Soldiers are accomplishing in the global war on terrorism.

The volunteer Corporal Recruiting Program and Corporal Detailed Recruiter Program are open to interested privates first class and specialists who meet recruiter qualifications as outlined in Army Regulation 601-1.

The qualification criteria can be accessed via the Internet at the USAPA Web page. The U.S. Army Human Resources Command will make the final selections. Once selected, applicants will be scheduled for a six-week recruiting course at Fort Jackson, S.C.

Corporal recruiters are assigned to recruiting areas near their hometowns. Other incentives include 38 promotion points for completing the recruiting course, $450 a month in special-duty pay and the opportunity to select their next overseas assignment or assignment to any U.S.-based installation with a corps or division.

For more information, contact the Retention NCO or call Sgt. 1st Class Sammy Payne at DSN 221-5818 or commercial (703) 325-5818.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Model appreciates post personnel

It is with my deepest appreciation that I am writing to tell you how much my trip to Fort Benning (for the Fourth of July) has meant to me.

While at Fort Benning, the staff and people on the post treated my family and me with the utmost respect and courtesy. Our visit to the commanding general's home was an honor, but to meet his lovely wife and family, who were so open and friendly, was a pleasure in itself.

Being at Fort Benning again brought back many memories, and for three short days, a 71-year-old man was taken back to the wonderful years of his youth, when being in the Army not only meant you were serving your country, but that you were part of a glorious family all working together toward the same goal: FREEDOM.

As you know, there are still many Americans who are unaware of how much God truly blesses us and allows us the freedom that we enjoy, or of the heavy price that has been paid by our loved ones to enjoy this freedom.

I thank the commanding general for the highlight of my life and for strengthening my resolve to do everything in my power to assist in helping our troops in any way possible.

As I am sure you are aware, The Bayonet newspaper has a wonderful staff, and I feel so honored to be the subject of the wonderful articles they have written about me and the Follow Me statue.

I would be remiss if I did not mention a young lady by the name of Bridgett Siter, who was a pleasure to work with. Her desire to aid the military is very evident, and I know she worked very hard on the stories about me and the statue.

I was also greatly impressed with Selby Rollinson and the Protocol staff, the Public Affairs Office, the V.O.Q. and all the personnel who were so helpful to us all.

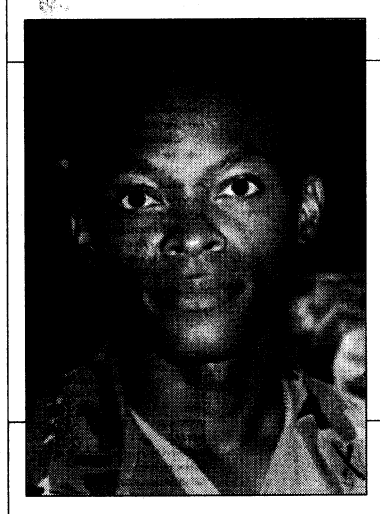
It would take a book to tell what feelings I have in this old heart for those three days.

If you would, please pass on to all your staff, the young Soldiers in training, the cadre and the skydiving team, how impressed and pleased I was to see them all standing so tall and proud.

There is no way to express all the thanks, appreciation and pride I feel in my heart for what you have all done for me.

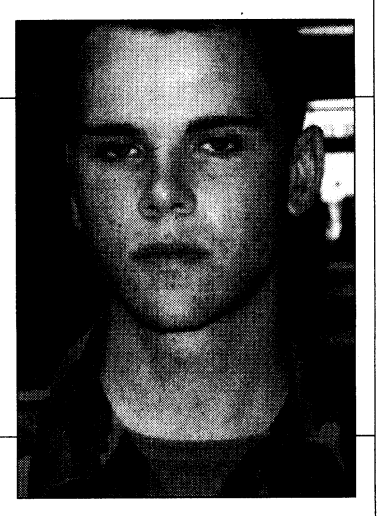
I feel so honored to have been there, and if the good Lord permits, I will return some day.

The commanding general is an honorable man and a worthy general, and I know Fort Benning will thrive under his leadership.



My heart and prayers will always be with you, Fort Benning and my fellow brothers and sisters and their families, as you stand together to protect this great country of ours.

With all my heart, I thank you all.



- Retired Maj. Eugene J. Wyles

Concert draws more than 4,500 to post

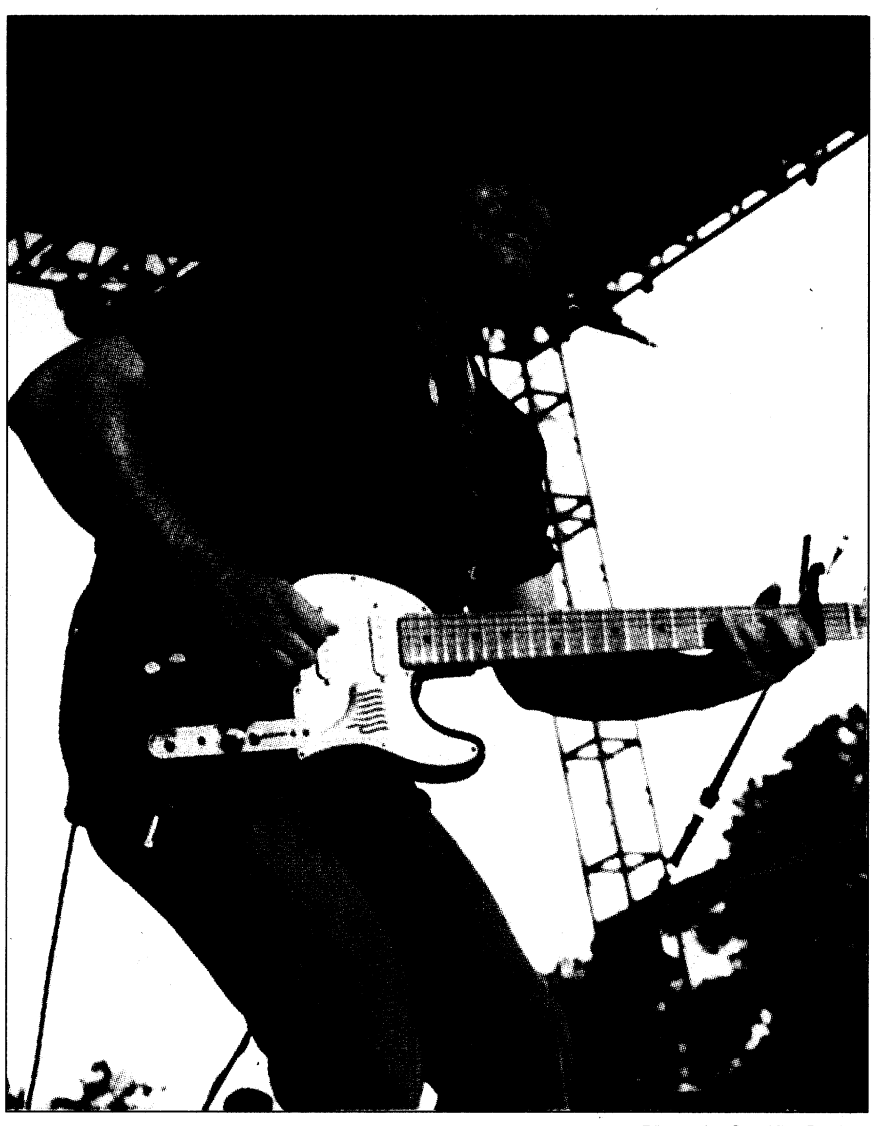
Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It was a honky tonk all right. More than 4,500 people turned out to boot-scoot and boogy at the Miller Lite Army Concert Tour on Wetherby Field Saturday night, topping last year's 3,000 attendance record.

Featuring girl band Cowboy Crush and Honky Tonk Tailgate Party — a gang of four country superstars, including Rhett Atkins, Darryl Singletary, Chad Brock and David Kersch — the concert was a total success, said Teresa McCall, a marketing specialist with the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

"Overall, everyone had a good time," she said. "It was a relaxed atmosphere, and the bands were fabulous."

Cowboy Crush opened the show, much to the excitement of thousands of basic training Soldiers, who gave an enthusiastic response to lead vocalist Trenna Barnes' declaration, "I don't think I've ever seen this many good-looking men in one place."



The band played an hourlong set, then turned the stage over to the industry's newest child prodigy, Frankie Pickard.

At 11, Pickard has been fighting for his life since he first went into cardiac arrest when he was 2 weeks old. He's undergone three heart surgeries lives with basically half a heart.

But that hasn't stopped the avid country music fan from chasing his life's dream — to record his own country album.

The Make-a-Wish Foundation helped him realize that dream Saturday, as he took the stage to sing 9/11.

"My notes say that Frankie suffers from a heart condition," said post commanding general Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley as he introduced Pickard. "But I've met this man, and let me tell you, he doesn't suffer from anything."

John Carroll, lead guitarist for country superstar David Kersch, shows off his solo skills during the concert Saturday

Frankie's performance only enforced Freakley's introduction. Animated and delivering a tough message to Osama bin Laden, Pickard inspired deafening cheering and resounding "hooahs" several times throughout his performance, especially among the basic training population.

"Frankie just stole the show," McCall said. "He was precious."

But the dream-come-true performance was more than just entertainment to Spc. Matthew Gobble.

"Frankie was just a true inspiration," he said. "For him to be able to go on stage, especially for someone as young as he is ... it just showed me that, without a doubt, if there's something you want to do, you can do it."

Next up was David Kersch, followed by the other members of the Tailgate Party, a show McCall said was awesome.

In fact, she said, all the artists went above and beyond to make sure the audience had a good time.

Sand Hill Soldiers took a break from the training environment to enjoy the Army Concert Tour Saturday evening.

Cowboy Crush spent almost two and a half hours signing autographs for basic training troops — considerably more time than the average 30 to 45 minutes bands usually spend on that sort of thing, McCall said.

Meanwhile, all four members of Honky Tonk Tailgate Party played longer sets than they had originally agreed to.

"They just really went the extra mile for us," McCall said.

But then again, that shouldn't come as a surprise.

"Army entertainment (organizers) work with our promoter to get top quality entertainment for our Soldiers and their families," McCall said.

But top quality comes with a hefty price tag, so the challenge is to find top-quality acts who will offer the Army a discount so that it, in turn, can offer the Soldiers discounted tickets.

The willingness to give the Soldiers a full-fledged performance at a lower cost shows a commitment to the troops, McCall said.

"It's a direct relationship — any time we talk about an artist coming here, we only want them if they're dedicated, if they believe in the Army and in Soldiers," she said.

And many times, the artists who will offer the best show for the best rate are country singers, McCall said.

"I get asked (why we often feature country artists) all the time," she said. "They are often the least expensive, and the audience actually responds better to country concerts."

Whatever genre the music, the concert is no easy feat, and it required the efforts of a lot people around Fort Benning, including DMWR and Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers.

Gobble, who is Fort Benning's BOSS president, joined several fellow BOSS troops to coordinate parking — no easy task — and set up, decorate and work the front of the event's VIP tent.

The concert was a chance to relax and enjoy the performances, but it was also a chance to help out the community and just get out, he said.

"The concert really gave us the chance to interact with people from off post, to meet people outside the gates," he said. "And I thought it was great. Cowboy Crush was an excellent cover band, and (Honky Tonk Tailgate Party) played all my favorite hits."

Infantry Bar opens at Officers' Club

Benning troops remodel, open historic bar

Spc. David Foley

A time honored tradition has returned to post after a year of absence.

When Bradley's at the Officers' Club closed down because of flood damage last year, a Fort Benning pastime fell to the wayside.

But, because of the hard work and dedication of several Soldiers, the club is open again under a new name.

The sign now reads I-Bar, and the interior has seen some dramatic changes, but the custom remains the same.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, said a lot has changed since he frequented the bar as a lieutenant in 1975, "when it didn't exactly conform to the Army values of today," but the idea hasn't changed.

"This bar is about lieutenants, and it was built by lieutenants," Freakley said at the grand opening ceremony. "This should be a place where the band of brothers congregates over a bit of ale."

Mark Smith, the Officers' Club manager, said, "The fact the tradition is back is huge for us.

"It's where a lot of officers started their careers," he said. "Now, these Soldiers can re-establish the traditions of their fellow leaders."

Smith said one of the reasons it is so important to have a place like the I-Bar is because a lot of the junior officers feel uncomfortable in the Concord Lounge with Fort Benning's top brass.

"It's better down here, because it's a more relaxed atmosphere than the Concord Lounge," said 2nd Lt. Jonathan Martin, one of the Soldiers who helped renovate the bar. "It is definitely a privilege to be able to work on it. It is just great to be a part of the whole thing."

2nd Lt. Tim Page, who also helped with renovations, said he couldn't be prouder of the job he and his comrades did.

"I am giving something back to all the Soldiers here on post so we have somewhere to go and congregate," he said. "Like the general said, 'like a band of brothers.'"

"It feels good to see all these Soldiers, and to know that all the hard work we put into it is paying off," Page said. "To see all these people having a good time is worth it for us."

Sapper tab now authorized for uniform wear

Sapper Leader Course grads can wear new tab

Bernard Tate
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A new Sapper tab for combat engineers is now authorized for wear by qualified Soldiers on their left shoulder.

Until this summer, only the Special Forces tab and the Ranger tab were authorized for wear above the unit patch on the left shoulder.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker approved the Sapper tab June 28 for award and wear by engineer Soldiers who complete the Sapper Leader Course. The course is part of the U.S. Army Engineer School at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. This award is retroactive back to the graduates of the first SLC on June 14, 1985.

The tab will be worn below the Special Forces or Ranger tab, if a Soldier has either of those. Other details concerning the wear of the Sapper tab will be released through official Human Resources Command channels sometime in the next 90 days, officials said.

Sappers are combat engineers who advance with the front-line infantry, and they have fought in every war in American history. For example, they played a vital role in securing Omaha Beach on D-Day, and that incident is faithfully re-created in Saving Private Ryan.

The invading Soldiers were unable to advance through the beach obstacles, and were pinned down by the German machine guns. A group of combat engineers crawled forward under heavy fire. Despite their casualties, they assembled a bangalore torpedo (a long tube filled with explosives), slid it under a barbed wire obstacle, and blew the obstacle apart. The Soldiers behind the engineers then fought their way through the gap, took the German defenses, and won the battle.

The Sapper Leader Course is a fast-paced 28-day course designed to train joint-service leaders in small unit tactics, leadership skills, and warfighter tactics required to perform as part of a combined arms team in a contemporary operating environment. The SLC is open to enlisted Soldiers in the grades of specialist (promotable) and above, and engineer officers captain and below.

Phase I of the course lasts 14 days and covers general subjects including medical techniques, land navigation, demolitions (conventional and expedient), air and water operations, mountaineering, expedient antennas, knots and rigging, and land mines used by enemy forces.

Phase II is also 14 days. It covers basic patrolling techniques and battle drills that emphasize leadership. The subjects include urban operations, breaching, patrol organization and movement, and recon/raid/ambush tactics.

The second phase of the SLC concludes with a three-day situational training exercise, and five-day field training exercise. Training missions conducted during the STX/FTX are a 60/40 mix of engineer and infantry missions. Engineer missions include bridge reconnaissance and demolition, covert obstacle breaching, road cratering, minefields, and field expedient demolition.

Leadership is emphasized throughout the SLC, engineer officials said. During Phase I the leadership positions are rotated daily. During Phase II, the position of squad leader is rotated daily, and the patrol leader and assistant patrol leader after each phase of the mission. Each Soldier will be evaluated at least twice on leadership during patrolling.

The results of the Sapper Leader Course are Soldiers who are worthy to wear the new Sapper tab, officials said, adding that they are hardened combat engineers who are qualified to fight and lead on today's battlefields.

ITB commander says farewell to Sand Hill

New leader pledges best efforts

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Col. Brian Baldy said farewell to Sand Hill Tuesday as he handed the brigade over to Col. Scott Henry during a change of command ceremony on Kanell Field.

In what was the last change of command ceremony for ITB this year, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, spoke about Baldy's dedication to ITB.

"These warriors reflect Colonel Baldy's commitment to his Soldiers and his brigade over the past (few) years," Freakley said. "He produced (more than) 35,000 infantry men to fight in the war on terror."

Freakley also endorsed the focus on excellence and training Baldy carried during his command and the efforts to upgrade facilities, providing Soldiers with the best equipment and ensuring the drill sergeants had "the best of men to train the best of men."

"Brian Baldy is a consummate team player and embodiment of the Soldier values — a selfless leader, a warrior demonstrating personal courage, duty and loyalty at every turn," he said.

Baldy's next assignment is J8, the Joint Staff in Washington, D.C. He said goodbye to his Soldiers with a quote from George L. Steinstack, which he believes defines what all Soldiers do.

"I was that which others dared not to be, I went where others feared to go and did what others failed to do. I asked nothing from those who gave nothing," Baldy read.

"It's an emotional day for me and it's very hard knowing I will leave such a professional and special organization with so many pros at company and battalion level," he said. "When I took command of this brigade three years ago, this brigade consisted of five battalions and 27 companies. Today, there are six battalions and 31 companies that will grow to 37 companies by the end of the year.

"Each of these new companies is filled with the same qualities of young Soldiers," he said.

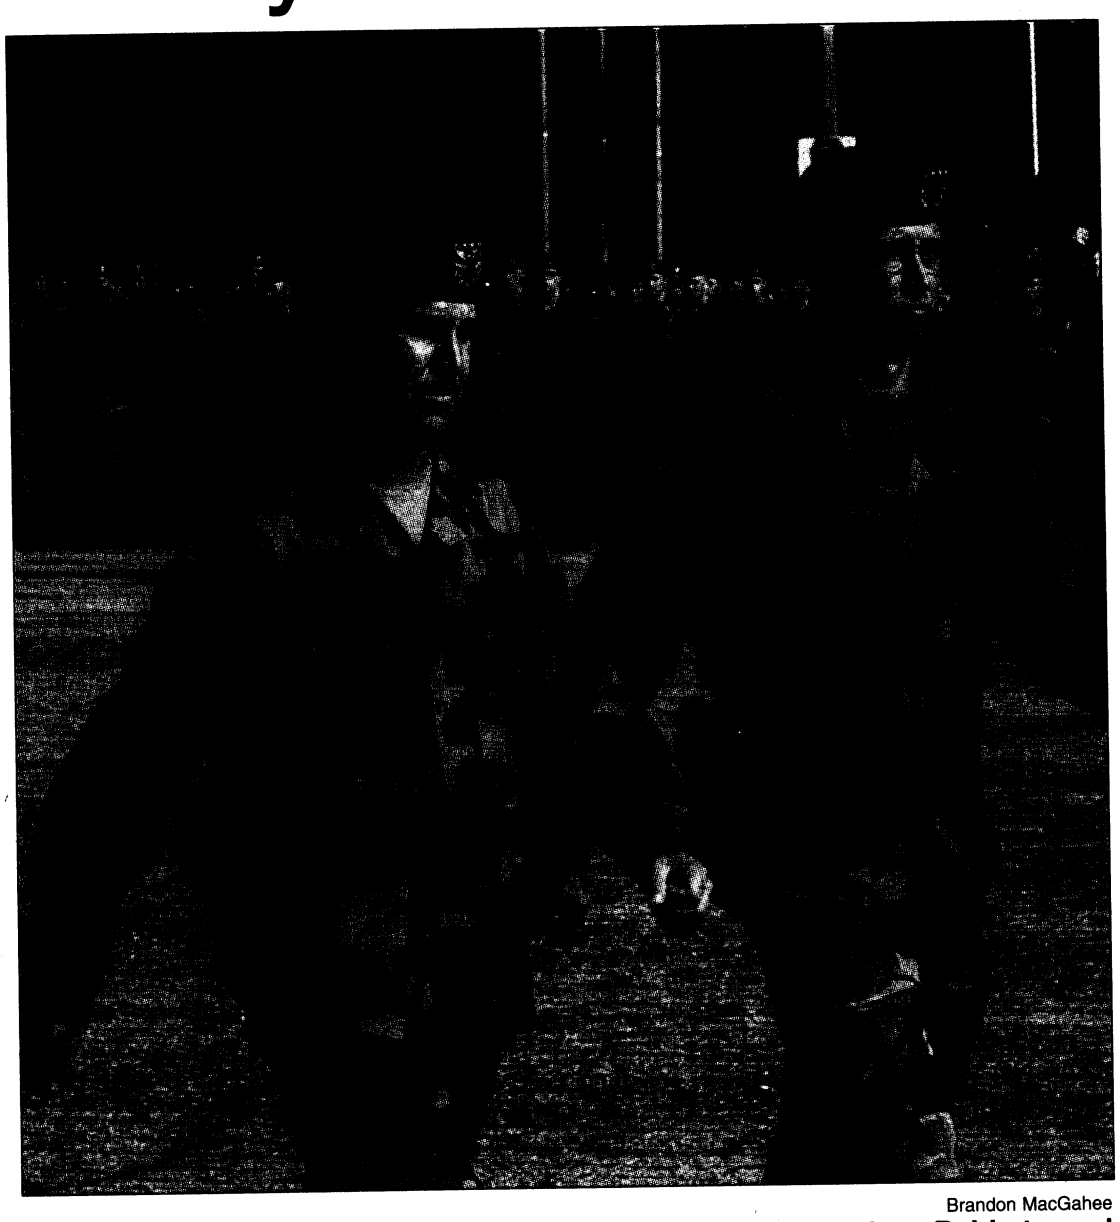
Henry comes to Fort Benning from his last assignment as the chief of Infantry Branch (Enlisted), U.S. Army Personnel Command.

"The Army knows how to pick great commanders," Freakley said. "(Henry) comes in as a proven leader, warrior and trainer. He understands what our business in training Soldiers is all about."

Henry thanked Baldy for his "establishment of a can-do environment and a superb command transition."

"I know every Soldier, civilian and family member within this command stands ready to meet the future with the same intensity, commitment and professionalism as in the past. I pledge to you our very best efforts," Henry said.

Henry graduated from the U.S. Military Academy and was commissioned as an infantry officer in 1982. His military education includes the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, Combined Arms Services Staff School, Army Logistics and Management College and the National War College. He has masters of science degrees in operations research, systems engineering from George Mason University and national security strategy from the National Defense University.



His awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal with six oak leaf clusters, Army Commendation Medal with three oak leaf clusters and the Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters.

He has earned the Expert Infantryman's Badge, Master Parachutist's Badge, Air Assault Badge, Canadian Jump Wings, Army Staff Identification Badge and the Ranger Tab.

Newest frequent flier arrives at TSM-Stryker/Bradley

Spc. David Foley

Col. Don Sandoo is responsible for all aspects of the TSM-Stryker/Bradley program.

Takes off same day for Pentagon TDY

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Col. Don Sando assumed the charter for Training and Doctrine Command System Manager-Stryker/Bradley from Col. Charles Betack in a ceremony in front of the Follow Me statue Monday.

Betack, now the multinational force director of Maneuver, was unable to attend the ceremony because he is in Iraq.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, talked about Betack's nearly four years at the helm of TSM-Stryker/Bradley, during which he supervised not only the equipping of the Bradley, but the employment of the Stryker.

An interesting aspect of the Army is that it equips the man — the infantry, Freakley said, not like the other services, in which the equipment is manned.

Betack spent so much time at Fort Lewis, Wash., making sure the Soldiers had the necessary equipment for the Stryker, Freakley said, that Lynn (Betack's wife) must have thought he PCSed.

"Chuck Betack made sure infantry Soldiers had the best equipment to do the job," he said.

Betack left Fort Benning in April for the six-month deployment. He and his wife, a reading recovery teacher at Wilson Elementary School, have two children.

Sando is no stranger to Fort Benning, Freakley said when he introduced him. He worked in the Directorate of Combat Development, was a battalion commander on Sand Hill, the executive officer for the Infantry Training Brigade and the deputy chief of staff for the post.

Sando brings a wealth of infantry experience to the job — he was a mechanized platoon leader in Korea, a rifle platoon leader with the Ranger Regiment, and an operations officer and XO with the 82nd Airborne Division.

As the TSM-Stryker/Bradley, Sando is responsible for all aspects of the program, Freakley said, including the mobile gun system and reducing weight while improving survivability for the Stryker and the renovation program of the Bradley.

The good news, Freakley said, is that Sando has a great team working with him with a proven track record for success.

Sando said he was the newest member of Fort Benning's frequent flier program because he was going TDY in two hours but would continue the tradition of ensuring Infantry Soldiers had the best equipment possible to do the job.

BOLC battalion farewells outgoing commander

NATO job in Spain awaits Neyland

Spc. David Foley

Lt. Col. Alan W. Neyland passed the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, guidon to Lt. Col. Marlon D. Blocker during a change of command ceremony on York Field Wednesday morning.

Neyland has been assigned to Joint Headquarters, Southwest, NATO in Madrid, Spain.

During the ceremony, Neyland complimented his staff of Soldiers and civilians for their outstanding accomplishments during his command, saying, "I couldn't have done it without you."

Neyland said the spirit of camaraderie on Fort Benning is one of the things he will miss the most.

"Thank you for your ability to cooperate and not compete," he said to his fellow commanders. "I think that is the spirit of Fort Benning."

Neyland gave his best wishes to Blocker and his family, but refused to say goodbye to Fort Benning.

"I won't say farewell, because I'll probably be back," he said.

Neyland said he is so sure he will return to Benning, he bought a personalized mug that hangs over the register in the recently renovated I-Bar and joked that his friends can use it while he is away.

Col. Mark Ritter, 11th Infantry Regiment commander, said it was an honor to pass the guidon from one great leader to another.

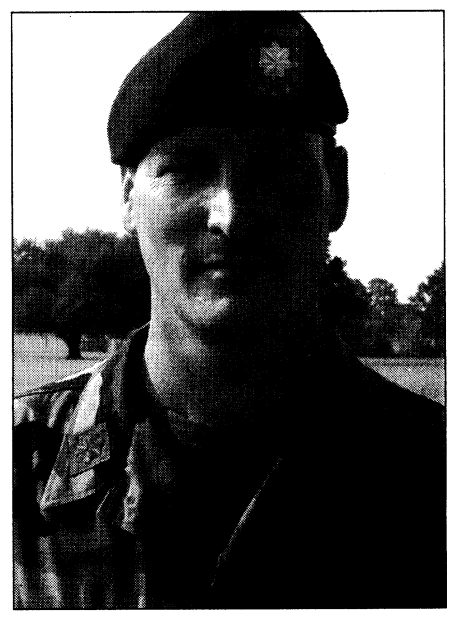
Ritter said Neyland took on a difficult task as the 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., commander, and accomplished the mission.

"We could have picked no better officer to develop the (Basic Officer Leaders Course program of instruction)," commenting on Neyland's ability to turn complicated issues into something everyone can understand, Rittter said.

While Ritter had plenty to say about Neyland's achievements, he also had good things to say about Blocker.

"Marlin Blocker is a proven leader ... and all of us at Fort Benning welcome you," Ritter said.

Blocker said he and his family are excited to be back at Fort Benning, and he is looking forward to his mission.



"I can't imagine a better mission than commanding troops who prepare Soldiers for combat," he said.

Spc. David Foley

Lt. Col. Marlin Blocker accepts the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, guidon from Col. Mark Ritter, 11th Inf. Regt., commander. The outgoing commander was Lt. Col. Alan Neyland.

Incoming commander

Lt. Col. Marlon D. Blocker was commissioned into the Army as an infantryman at Kansas State University in 1985.

Donations to help Army rebuild Iraq

Home Depot gives tools for reconstruction

John Runyan
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — As part of their "Project Homefront," Home Depot stores donated $1 million in tools and materials to help the U.S. military reconstruction in Iraq.

The materials were scheduled to be shipped overseas Aug. 2.

The Army will receive $500,000 of that total via the Defense Distribution Depot Susquehanna, Pa.

The tools and materials, expected to arrive in the theater of operations by late September or early October, will aid Army civil affairs, engineers and other units in their work to rebuild Iraq.

The materials arrived about a month ago in New Cumberland, Pa. They included shovels, table saws, concrete mixers, safety scaffolding, power generators, light bulbs and jackhammers and needed to be repacked for shipment.

Some hazardous materials like aerosol cans and caulking tubes, known as HAZMAT, required special packing.

A donation ceremony was held June 24 at a Home Depot store in San Diego, Calif. The ceremony featured remarks from Col. Rick Powell of the 63rd Regional Readiness Command.

Eight Operation Iraqi Freedom veterans from the 478th Transportation Company, an Army Reserve unit in California, were also on hand for the ceremony.

Soldiers and Marines help load a truck with tools and materials donated by Home Depot that will help the rebuilding effort in Iraq.

One Soldier commented on the frustration of not having the proper materials out in the field and how the donations would certainly help.

Afterward, the materials were loaded onto nine tractor-trailers and shipped across the country to the depot.

"This donation is part of Home Depot's long-standing commitment to the U.S. troops currently serving in Iraq," said Bob Nardelli, chairman, president and CEO of Home Depot.

> "... we have a special interest in making sure all of the U.S. troops know that we appreciate and support them."

Patrols provide gridiron security for post residents

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Military police companies at Fort Benning rotate on multi-week cycles through training and patrol duties, ensuring that the mission of protecting the safety of residents, employees and government property on the installation is accomplished. At the same time, they conduct critical training to prepare the units for deployment and their wartime mission.

Spc. Jonathan Floyd, 209th Military Police Detachment, said being on patrol is one of the best parts of his job.

"When you are on patrol, you are out there making contact with people, talking to them, helping them as much as you can," he said. "It is great to feel needed."

The training all MPs receive — eight weeks at the Military Police School in Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. — prepares them for the technical aspects of their job, like laws, regulations and standard operating procedures, but it doesn't necessarily prepare every Soldier for the hardest part of the mission, Floyd said.

"Knowing how to do this job isn't hard, but to know how to do it well is," he said. "It's more mental and public relations skills. You have to be able to work with people in tense situations without passing judgement. You have to stay in the middle and play devil's advocate."

Floyd said patrols can go from monotonous to overwhelming in a matter of minutes, and that is one of the reasons he loves his job.

"We'll get calls for everything from stray dogs to murder," he said. "People will call us for anything and everything, and if we can help, we will.

"This job changes every single day and stays exciting, and patrol brings an MP a lot of opportunities throughout the course of the day to break things up," Floyd said.

He said despite the occasional big cases, like a murder or other serious incident, Fort Benning is relatively quiet.

Larcenies and domestic disturbances are some of the most common calls in the course of a shift.

Floyd said that the domestic calls are some of the hardest, because emotions run high and the situation can be explosive at times, but said danger to himself isn't usually a concern.

"If there is ever a chance a situation may be dangerous, there are always two or three other MPs there to help," he said. "We don't let MPs go into a dangerous situation alone. We look out for one another."

And while help is always just a radio call away, for the most part, MPs are entrusted to provide security for the post on roaming, single-man patrols.

"There's always anxiety that you will mess up and not do something right, but if we need help, there are always senior MPs who will come out to a scene to help if they are needed," he said. "But for the most part, you have to be the kind of person who doesn't need to be supervised all the time, and you have to be able to make strong decisions on your own and maintain your integrity."

All MPs who in-process at Fort Benning must go through a one-week police academy to familiarize them with post policies and procedures and the nature of the MP mission here.

Their second week is spent riding along with another officer to build confidence and skills with Fort Benning protocols, Floyd said.

Pfc. Stephanie Thompson, 209th Military Police Detachment, secures a stray dog July 31.

Spc. Jonathan Floyd, 209th MP Det., on patrol in Area 4 July 31. Floyd said he enjoys helping those in need.

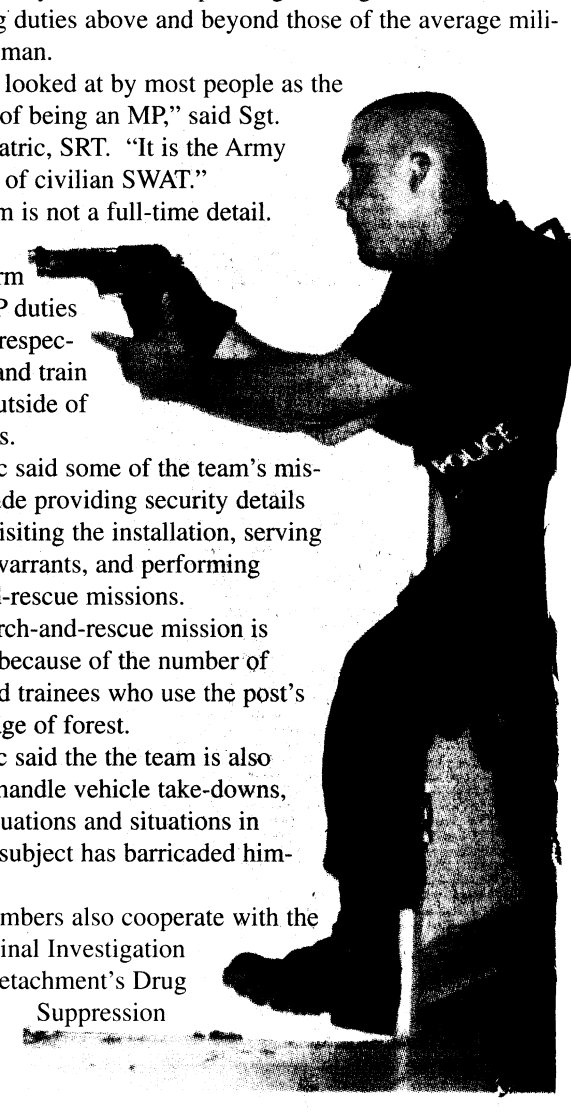
Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety fields a highly-trained squad to respond to high-risk or specialized situations requiring military police action of a higher caliber.

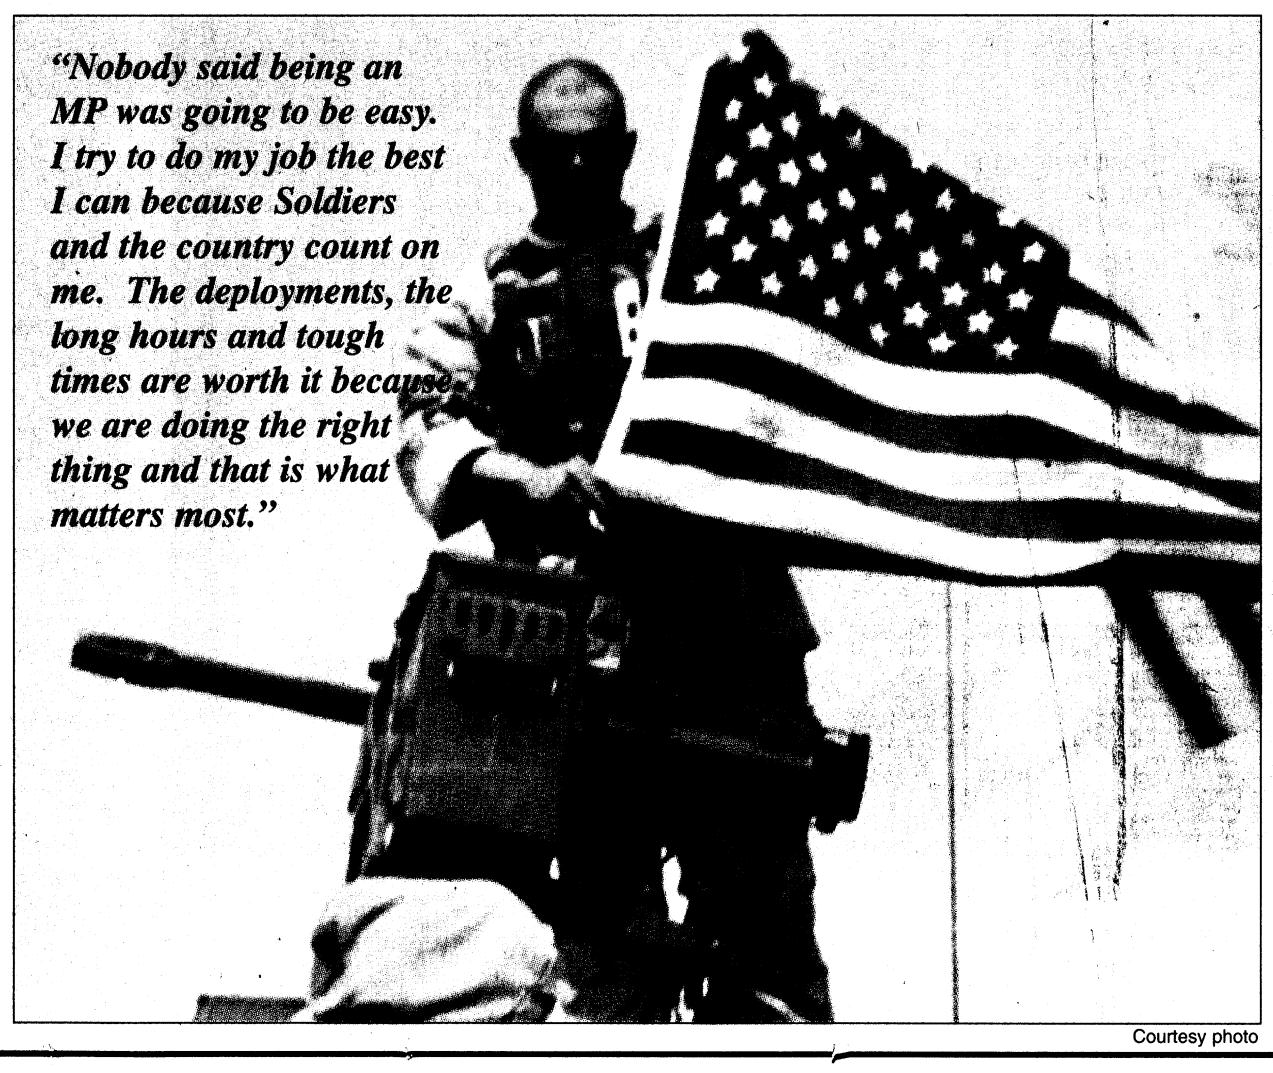
The Special Reaction Team currently consists of a nine-man squad specially trained in responding to dangerous situations and performing duties above and beyond those of the average military policeman.

"SRT is looked at by most people as the next level of being an MP," said Sgt. Trent Kilpatric, SRT. "It is the Army equivalent of civilian SWAT."



The team is not a full-time detail. The members perform regular MP duties with their respective units and train together outside of those hours.

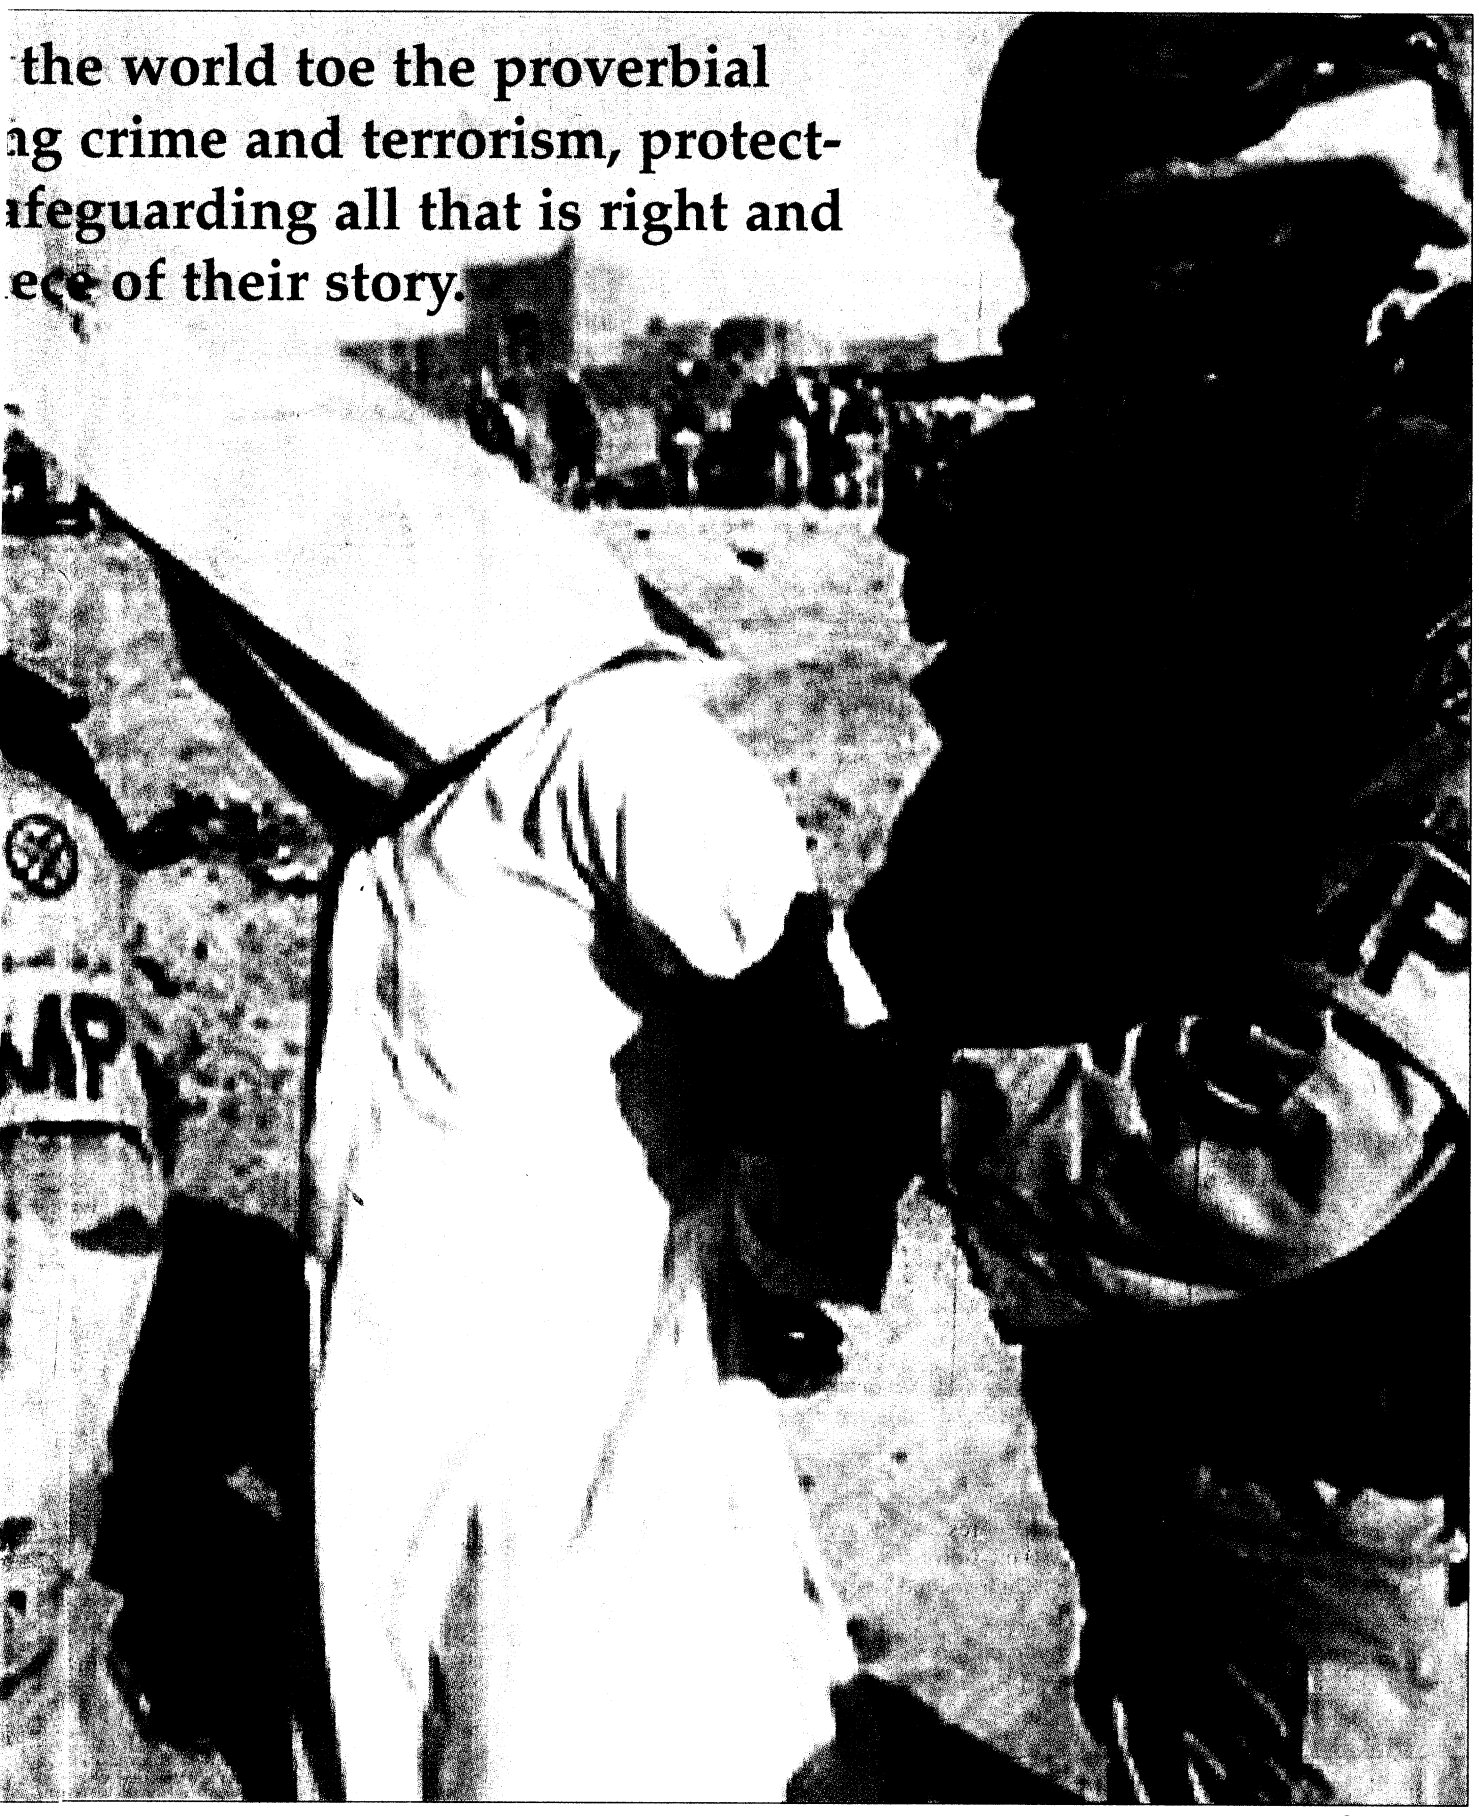
Kilpatric said some of the team's missions include providing security details for VIPs visiting the installation, serving high-risk warrants, and performing search-and-rescue missions.



The search-and-rescue mission is important because of the number of hunters and trainees who use the post's huge acreage of forest.

Kilpatric said the the team is also trained to handle vehicle take-downs, hostage situations and situations in which the subject has barricaded himself in.

SRT members also cooperate with the local Criminal Investigation Division detachment's Drug Suppression



"Nobody said being an MP was going to be easy. I try to do my job the best I can because Soldiers and the country count on me. The deployments, the long hours and tough times are worth it because we are doing the right thing and that is what matters most."

Handler Staff [illegible] Stammeyer said he and his dog, Rocky, have been partners for two years and the trust level and bond between them is about as strong and close as it can be.

"We deploy together and will spend literally every moment together until we come home," he said. "We will eat together, play together, train together and he will even sleep right next to me."

The Army has instituted a policy of adopting out those dogs found suitable for civilian life.

The Army screens all adopting persons to assure they are prepared for the heightened responsibility of owning a trained and potentially dangerous dog, Redican said.

Not all dogs make it to pasture, he said. And though it is rare to lose a dog in the line of duty, Redican said it is not something that equates to losing a piece of equipment — the dog is the handler's battle buddy.

"The loss of a dog in the line of duty would be a tremendous blow to the handler just because they have learned to depend on each other so much," he said. "You could compare it to the death of an immediate family member."

Team to carry out raids.

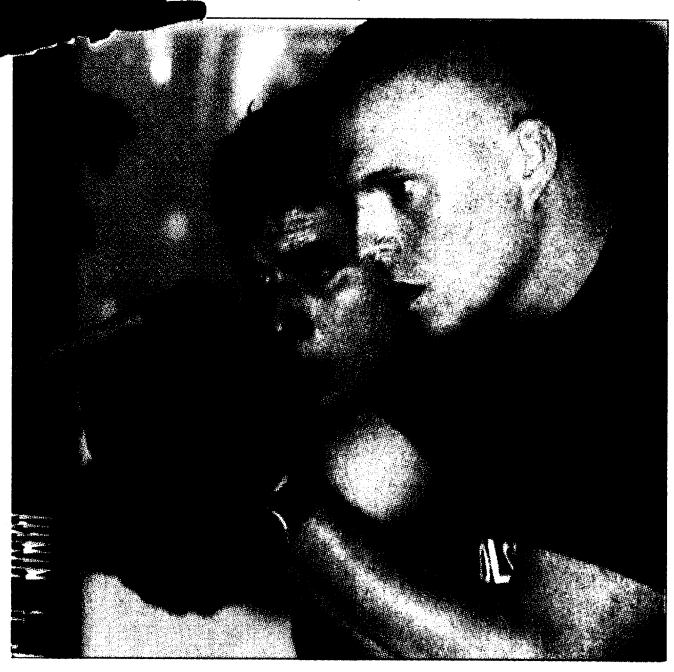
In some situations, subjects attempt to end a stand-off by committing what is known as "suicide by cop," Kilpatric said. The team uses its training to end situations like those without loss of life.

"A lot of people think we are here to take people out, but really, we are here to conserve life," Kilpatric said.

Members of the team attend the Air Force's Urban Sniper School and receive Department of Homeland Security federal firearms training from U.S. Customs' Special Response Team, he said.

The group is adaptable and skilled in both counter-terrorism and antisniper tactics, as well, he said.

The nine-man team is effective. However, Kilpatric said, plans are in the making for expanding the team to a full-time unit composed of two 15-man squads.



Assignment to the team is based on selection after a qualification event.

The event consists of physical fitness tests, obstacle courses, written tests, water qualifications, buddy and team trials, and other tasks.

Stabilization: Improves Army life for troops, families

There are three officially approved reasons why a Soldier may move to another military post:

- The needs of the Army require the Soldier to move.
- Leader development, formerly referred to as professional development, requirements. This includes education requirements that may last a year or longer, and duty positions not readily available at the Soldier's current post.
- The Soldier requests a different duty station.

"We think by stabilizing the Army, where we don't move the Army every two to three years on an individual basis, but we keep people in place, develop cohesive, stable units, where spouses can work, where kids can go to school, where people can invest in homes and develop equity, stabilizes forces," Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker told members of the House Armed Services Committee Jan. 28. "It's better for the fighting forces. It's better for the families. And it will increase our retention."

There still remains some work to be done under a second part of stabilization — unit lifecycle management. Currently, only the Stryker brigade standing up at Fort Richardson, Alaska, is being managed under the ULM initiative.

ULM means having a unit manned with its full complement of Soldiers at one point in time. Those Soldiers are then stabilized in the unit together for a three-year period.

Unit readiness is increased with ULM as Soldiers have the stability of working with the same team members and leaders, rather than losing people due to a Cold War-era individual replacement system, said Sgt. Maj. of the Army Kenneth Preston.

The Army plans to use UML with 3rd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, and 4th Brigade, 101st Airborne (Air Assault) Division, in the near future, Goehring said. Eventually, all units of action will fall under ULM, but the synchronization plan for those units has not been finalized, he said.

Change: To build savings for tricommunity residents and she wants this campaign to achieve the same success.

The goal for the 10-week period is $1 million, a goal that can be reached easily, according to a Columbus Saves press release.

The release states there are 180,000 people in the Columbus/Fort Benning area, and if each person can save $1 per week, the outcome would be $1.8 million.

Pratcher said reaching the goal is "too easy."

"Saving $1 a week takes less than $.15 a day, and since sodas on post cost $.60, giving up two a week would put them over the mark," she said.

Pratcher said the campaign is a great idea for children, too, because it helps them develop good saving habits early on which they will cary through adulthood.

To get started in the campaign, call 225-3859 or log on to www.columbusga.com and enter your phone number and the amount you plan to save.

Those who live or work on post should enter the letter "B" after their phone number to give officials an idea of how much money was saved by the Fort Benning community.

Once registered, contact the campaign weekly to give an update on your savings.

To learn more about the program, call Pratcher at 545-5485.

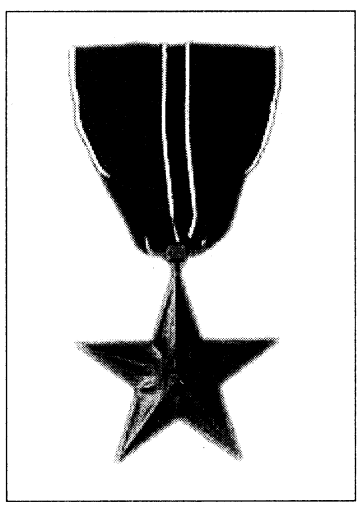
national coalition soldiers, and providing other munitions-related support to outside agencies, like the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Air Force.



"Equipment-wise, we had to depend on different units — we didn't have the support we have here in garrison," Perez said. "And the leadership challenge ... you have to fall under a new (chain of command) quick and fast."

Not to mention the long hours.

"There were days we clocked 20 hours," he said. "But we did what we had to do to make sure the warfighters had bullets to shoot down-range."

Although Garich and Perez will wear the awards, both troops said the credit for their success belongs to the Soldiers.

"The distinction and awards that we got are a credit to the hard work and long, long hours that they put in," Garich said. "The Soldiers were well-trained, they knew what they were doing and they performed outstandingly.

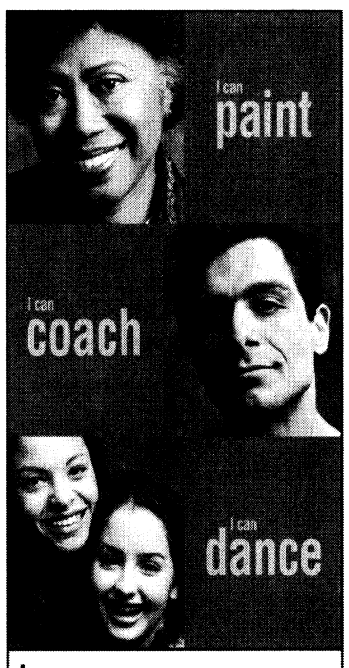
"And our NCOs," she continued, shaking her head, "they were tremendously reliable. Their hard work made us look good."

"The credit should all go to the platoon," Perez agreed. "They did it all; they worked 24-7. There were days we supported two divisions at the same time, and they sucked it up and got it done."

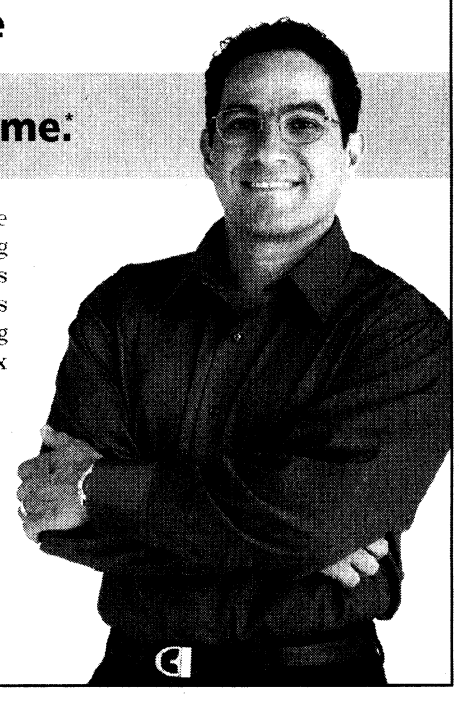


Garich said there were also two other Soldiers who played a key role in the accomplishment of the mission.

1st Lt. Jennifer Malone, then the platoon leader, was a "real go-getter, who fought hard to make the connections to get us what we needed," Garich said.

"We did the operations, and she took care of all the administrative stuff," she said.

And then, there was Warrant Officer Christopher Haynes, a storage officer, who helped the unit establish the CSA.



"They both really deserved a Bronze Star for what they did for us," Garich said.

Training Warriors: Army Combatives Course

Soldiers from around the Army travel to Fort Benning for Level 3 combatives at the U.S. Army Combatives Course.

Course NCOIC Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larsen said Level 3 training is designed to build combatives instructor cadre who can return to a unit and teach basic combatives skills to Soldiers in support of warrior ethos.

During the 30-day course, students become proficient in six battle drills consisting of about 50 moves, Larsen said.

Those moves include take-downs, striking skills and weapons fighting.

The students also learn how to conduct scenario training, which demonstrates for Soldiers how combatives is actually used in a combat environment.

"The guy who wins in hand-to-hand combat in an actual engagement is the guy whose buddy shows up first with a gun," Larsen said.

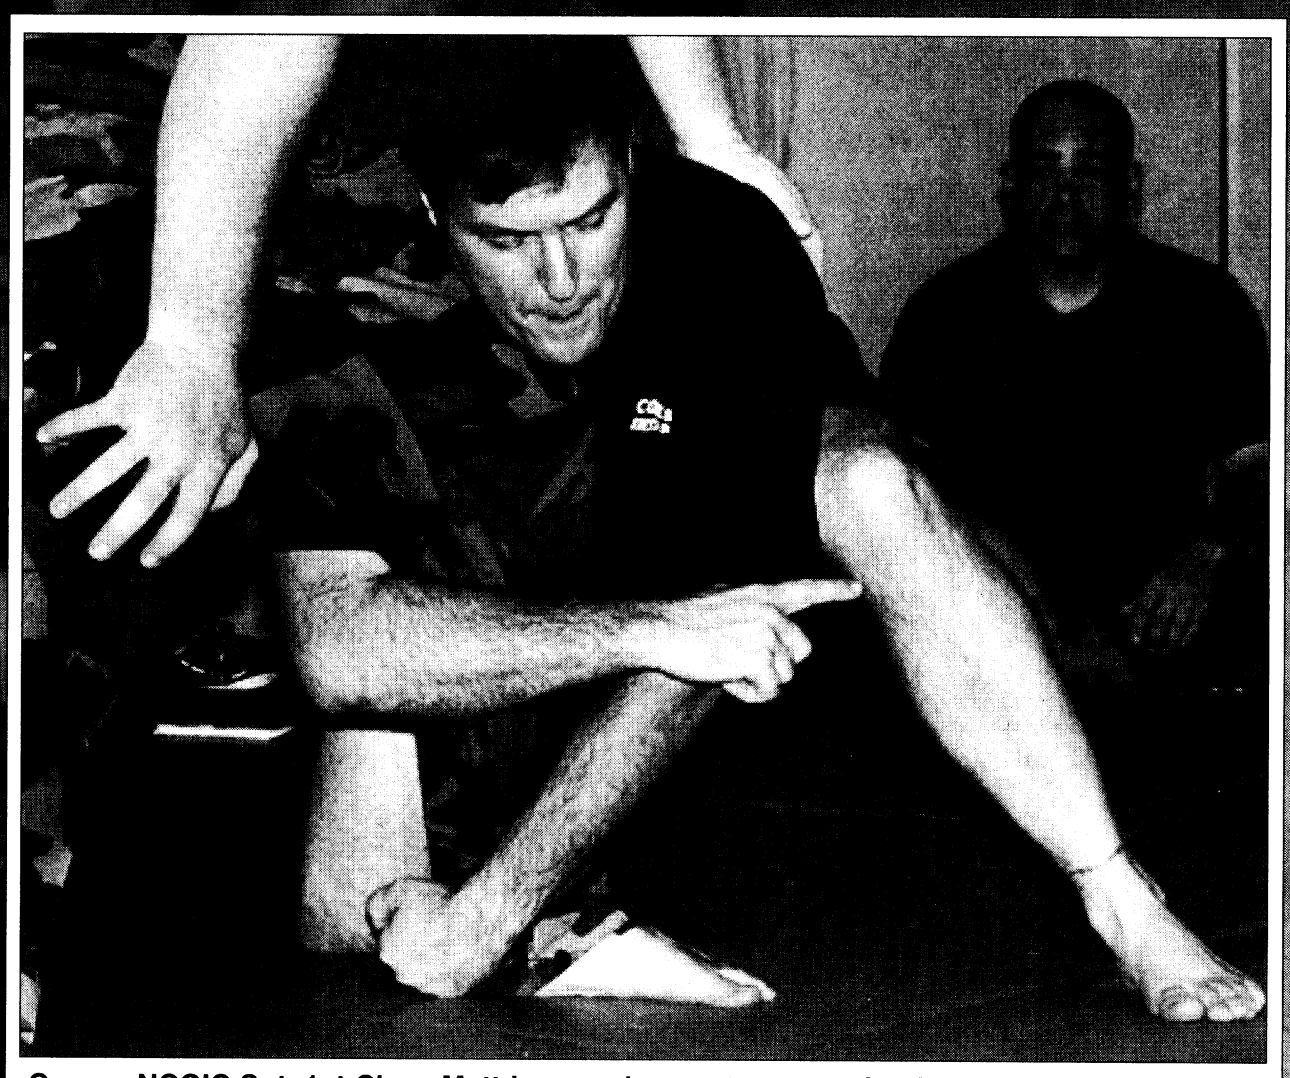
He said the training is about being able to close with and incapacitate the enemy and protect yourself in close quarters.

Fort Benning is the only installation where Level 3 training is available.

The Army combatives program pulls from Brazilian Jujitsu, Judo and Muay Thai kickboxing, Larsen said.

"We look at different sources, weave them together and feel out what isn't needed," he said.

"We pull what we need from each of those disciplines."

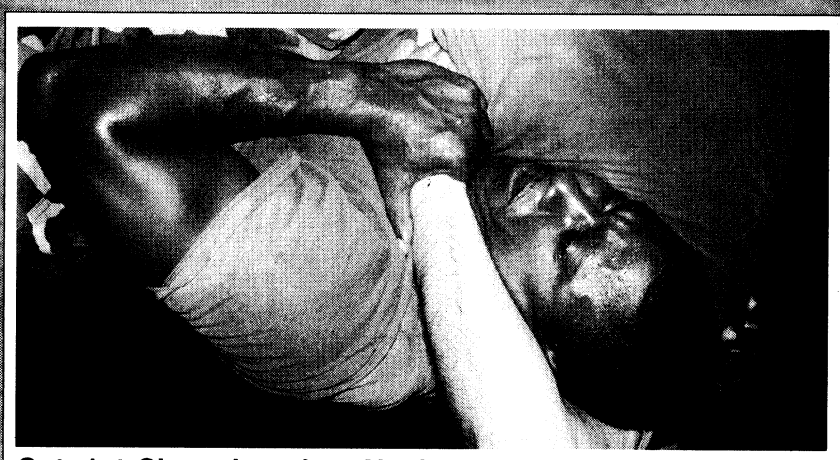


Normal Level 3 classes have about 36 students, who are already qualified at Levels 1 and 2.

Larsen said the top students pair up at the end of th... for a full-conta...ch, using protective gear that prevents broken bones, but allows for pain.

"Competition is what motivates normal Soldiers who probably wouldn't focus and develop their skills to push beyond the standards," Larsen said.

Spc. Mitchell Panati, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry ... he thinks ... rigorous and effective and he feels comfortable returning to his unit to train others.



"This is the kind of stuff that helps us support the Warrior Ethos," he said. "It's all about being a Soldier, taking a punch and preparing for what could happen to us in combat if it ever came to hand-to hand."

Course NCOIC Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larsen demonstrates a take-down technique.

Swamp walk boosts confidence ... this time

High schoolers venture into 6th RTBn. world

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

"I wouldn't ever want to do it again," said Amanda Olivas, team member of Choctawhatchee High School's girls soccer team.

The high schoolers participated in a swamp walk July 14 at the home of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Camp Rudder, Fla.

Twenty-three girls and three coaches were invited to the camp by Lt. Col. Darcy Brewer, 6th RTBn. commander. Brewer's daughter, Elizabeth, is a senior on the soccer team.

Brewer said this is not the first time they've invited civilians to walk the swamp. Every year, they invite Ranger wives to come out for a day and participate in similar events.

This visit, however, pulled a group of high school girls out to perform tasks way out of their norm, including building a rope bridge and crossing it onto a small island in the middle of the Yellow River.

"We forgot one of the girls on the island, so we just threw the rope and dragged her across the water," Olivas said.

After the bridge exercise, the girls paddled eight-person Zodiac inflatable boats down the Yellow River for about a mile and a half. Olivas said this was pretty fun, the swamp walk, on the other hand, had the girls screeching and wanting to go home.

> "It's like playing soccer — it's all mental. If you don't have your game on, then you won't be able to do it."

"I was nervous to get into the swamp, but it was just something I had to do. All of us did. It's like playing soccer — it's all mental. If you don't have your game on, then you won't be able to do it," Olivas said.

"At first, the girls were screaming and saying it was cold, but after they got used to the water and learned to walk in it, they started to help each other out," said Michelle Sullivan, team coach.

After the swamp walk, the team had the chance to jump out of a 60-foot rapelling tower.

"We did have a few tears shed, but the girls did very well," said Sgt. 1st Class Richard Kelly, a platoon sergeant with A Company, 6th RTBn. "All jumped but one. Now they'll have war stories to tell."

"It was a big confidence booster; it helps them overcome their fears of the wild life, heights and they get dirty," Kelly said.

The girls also received a class from the snake team, which taught them how to tell the difference between a venomous snake and a nonvenomous snake.

After lunch, the Ranger officers and the girls decided to play a little game of soccer, with a twist.

The game was played with two soccer balls. The first half of the game was played with normal soccer rules, but the second half of the game was played with Ranger rules.

Needless to say, the Rangers won.

"This was a good way for the girls to develop teamwork and to get over some of their fears," Sullivan said. "Next year's coach is already planning on doing it again."

"It was a great opportunity and although I wouldn't do it again, I wouldn't change the fact that I did," Olivas said.

'We're getting with it.'

CG reaffirms support for post schools

600 gather to kick off new school year

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Freakley spoke frankly. Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, Fort Benning's commander, spoke candidly about his expectations for the school year at a Thursday morning gathering of more than 600 Fort Benning teachers, support staff and administrators.

"It's going to be a great year, but it's going to be a tough one. We have (units) preparing to deploy," said Freakley, a father of five, who's known as a passionate supporter of post schools.

"It's very important to be sensitive to our Soldiers' children. They're smart. They know their parents live in peril," he said. "You've got to be more than teachers. You've got to console them ... and encourage them to trust you."

Freakley traveled to Peachtree City, Ga., last fall to meet with the head of the Department of Defense Eduction Activity. He urged Dr. Joe Tafoya to reject the idea of transferring Fort Benning's seven on-post schools to local education systems. Though information on the transfer will not be available until February, Freakley reaffirmed his commitment Thursday.

"They're going to have to bury me before they hand over our schools," he said. "No one can care for our children like we can."

Dr. Dell McMullen, Fort Benning schools superintendent, added, "and nowhere do schools get the kind of support we receive here on Fort Benning."

Schools can expect to see an increase in support and Soldier presence this year, Freakley said, committing to 35 "partnerships" with post and local schools through the statewide Partners in Education program. That's an increase of 13 partnerships from last year.

"We're getting with it," Freakley said. "We're more determined than ever to do everything we can to ensure our students and our schools have the very best resources available to them."

> "We're getting with it. We're more determined than ever to to do everything we can to ensure our students and our schools have the very best resources available to them."
> Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley
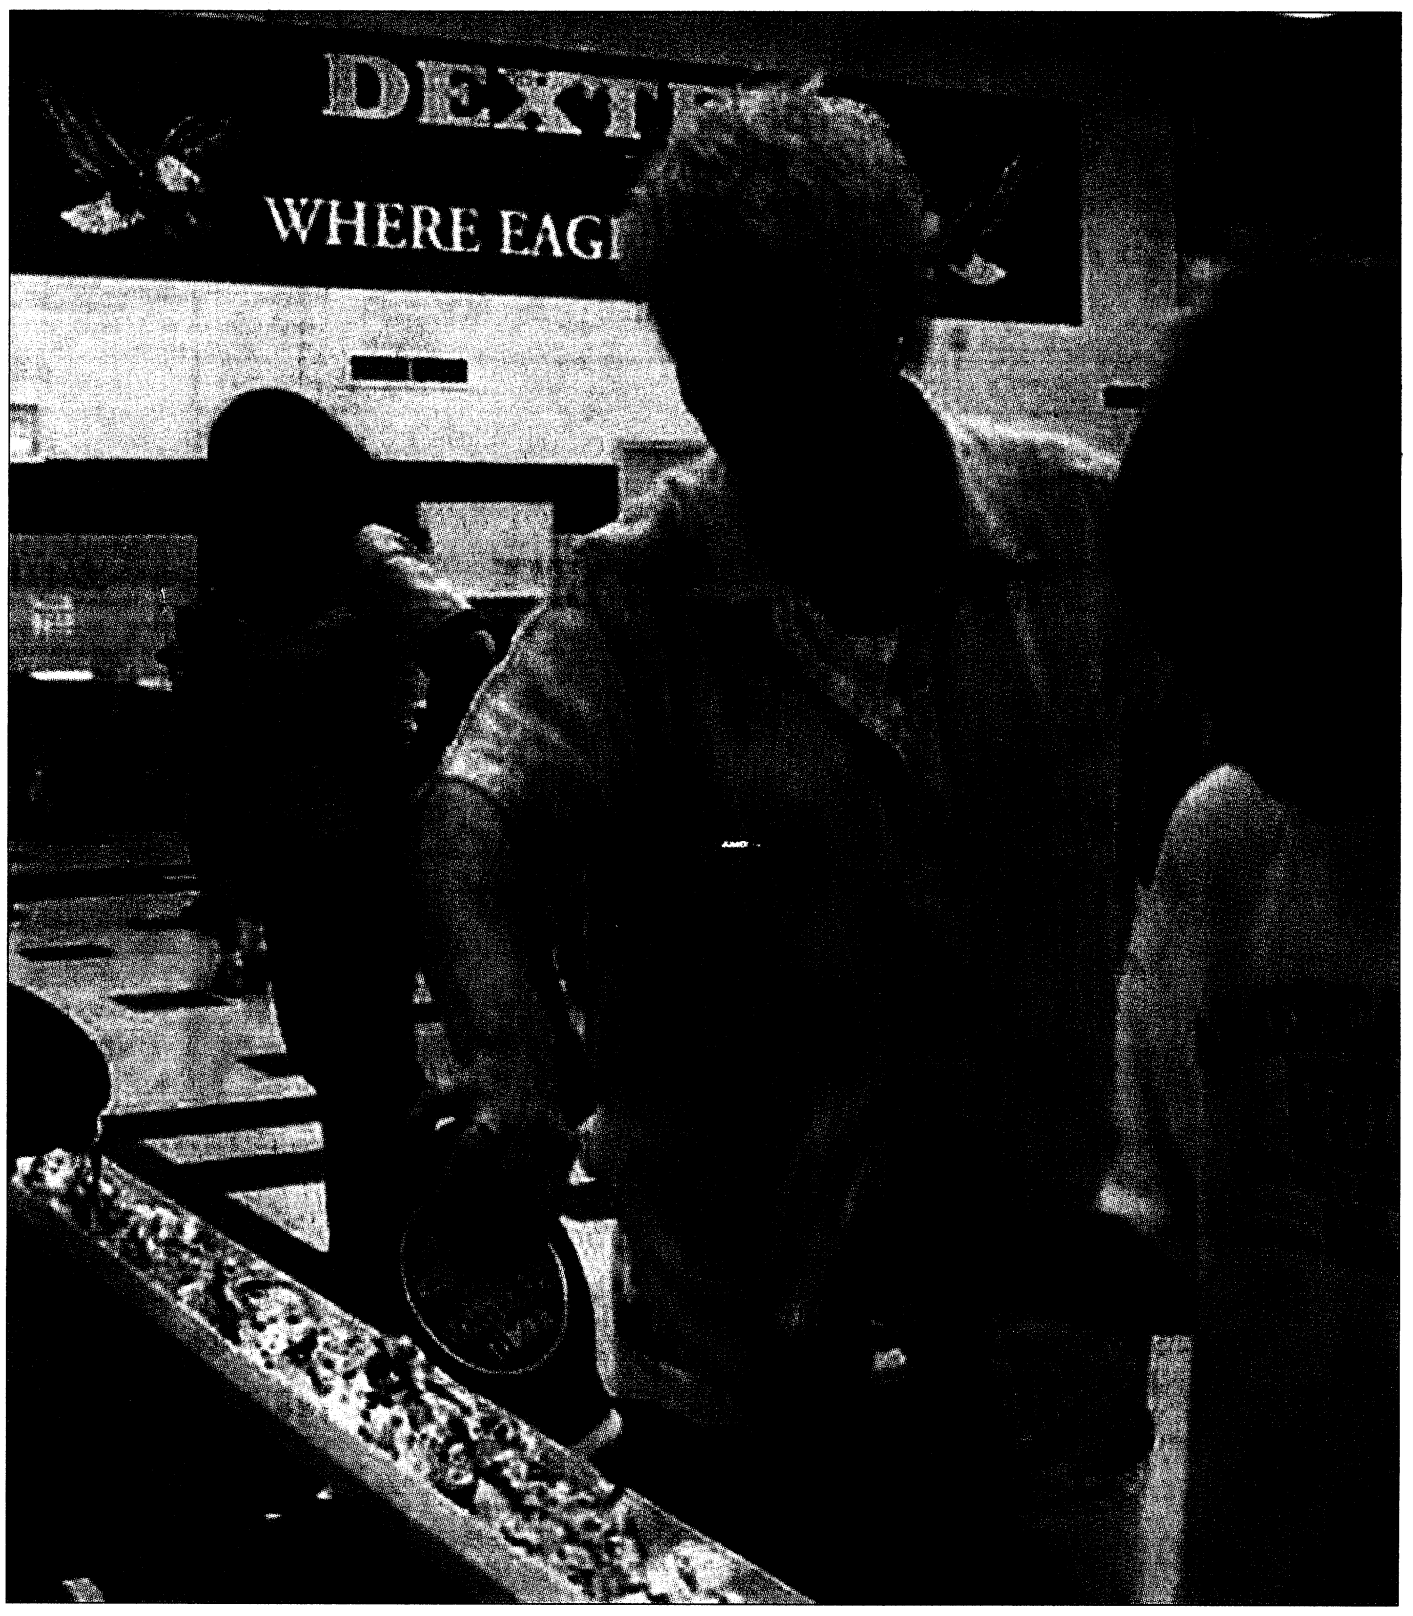
> Fort Benning commander

Freakley said he expects to see a greater "BDU presence" in post schools.

"We'll have a lot of kids with one or both parents deployed," he said. "We want there to be someone the kids can talk to who looks a little like mom or dad. Someone familiar, someone they can trust."

The Partners in Education will also be a "valuable and powerful resource" for administrators, Freakley said. With a stepped-up focus on discipline — something Faith Middle School students clamored for at the Army Family Action Plan Symposium last spring — school partners will be called upon to act as liaison with the chain of command when all other avenues of discipline have been exhausted.

"We're not going to have anything going on in the classroom that would interfere with learning," Freakley said. "Our teachers are not going to be frustrated because they think they're alone and no one supports them. We're with you on this."



Freakley praised the teachers for their "success in the classroom" based on last year's standardized test scores.

"Thanks to you, our students out-performed anyone in the region," he said.

"Education is power, and you are influencing the future of our country. Thank you for what you do."

Campers read aloud, a lot

Schools' summer camp targets at-risk readers

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Seventy campers read aloud and read a lot at Fort Benning's Camp Read-a-lot June 14 through July 9 at Dexter Elementary School.

Melissa Hayes, director of Reading Recovery for Fort Benning Schools, spearheaded the four-week camp for students from all six elementary schools, kindergarten through third grade, who were identified as struggling readers. The 17 teachers who served as camp directors emphasized the "camp" in Camp Read-a-lot, Hayes said.

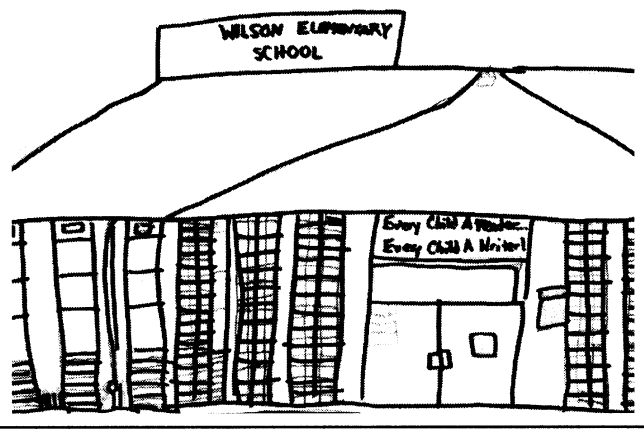
"Our goal was to target struggling readers, but as far as they were concerned, they were here for camp," she said.

Activities included campfire-style sing-alongs, cheers and crafts. The camp ended with a party and a 20-foot ice cream sundae.

"It was huge. My brother and my other brother joined me, and we were eating it, and I looked up, and my brother was finished," said Nicholas Tremaglio, a second-grader at Dexter. "I was like, whoa, how did he eat that so fast?"

Though the sundae left a lasting impression on Nicholas, his mother Monica, was most impressed with the approach Hayes used to recruit campers.

"When we talked about summer school, Nicholas had a fit," she said. "Then we got a letter saying he'd been selected to attend camp. That changed his whole perspective. He never complained once about going."



Using what Hayes called the Goldilocks approach to reading — not too hard and not too easy — the students logged more than 1,300 books during camp. They wrote journals and worked in groups of four or five.

"It's about as close to individualized instruction as you can get," said Hayes, noting that the majority of campers improved two reading levels.

BACK TO SCHOOL JITTERS?

School's cool when you're an upperclassman

Cayce Shannon
Bayonet volunteer

As I stood in the ridiculously long line at Columbus High School to register Tuesday, a shock of reality hit me. Starting Monday, I will no longer be sitting in front of the tube, watching MTV and pigging out on pizza while my mind slowly disintegrates into oblivion.

Instead, I'll be waking up at 4:30 in the morning, leaving at 5:55 and going to a place where I'm on my own, where I make my own choices.

High school.

But you know what — I'm actually happy about it. It seems like only yesterday I ventured in to high school. My freshman and sophomore year went by so fast, I don't even remember half of what I accomplished.

Speaking of freshmen, my brother registered at Shaw High School.

Pride was plastered on my face, while I stood among these young teenagers enrolling in the ninth grade.

Some tried to look tough, like they knew everything there is to know about high school, but I could see right through them. Others looked downright frightened.

Maybe I should be frightened, too. I hear all the babble about junior year being the hardest and most stressful, but the negative thoughts don't phase me one bit.

Why?

Because after I make it through this year I will be an official, bona fide, card-carrying member of the senior class.

Then, COLLEGE! Woo-hoo! No more boundaries! Set free from the cage-of-confinement adults call high school!

OK, I'm back. My moment of liberty is over.

Don't get me wrong, I haven't forgotten the boring teachers, annoying ID tags, crowded hallways, stacks of homework and stubborn lockers (OK, must remember I like school, think nice, happy thoughts).

However, since I am now an upperclassman, (I love to say that! It makes me feel slightly powerful.) and I know how to deal with these obstacles, they don't even matter. Not really.

Hey, I know what your thinking — "Sure, she's saying this now, but once she gets back into the swing of things, the monotony will slowly and relentlessly eat away her happiness."

That may happen from time to time, but ultimately, the decision is up to me on whether or not I have a bad year.

As Monday nears, instead of the usual moans and groans from me, you will see me beam with excitement and anticipation.

I even made up a new chant, "All hail the new school year!"

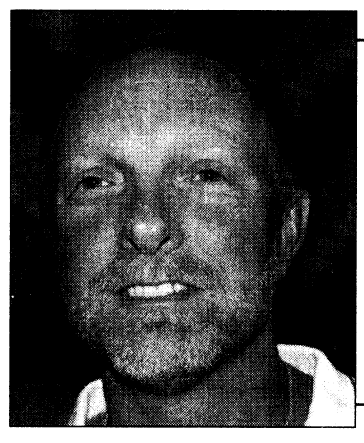
Ha, I actually believe that.

BACK TO SCHOOL

Fort Benning Schools staff had this to say about the 2004-2005 school year during the Thursday morning kick-off ceremony at Stowers Elementary:

"I love the excitement of seeing new children in the classroom. I love the family atmosphere."
— Rhonda Scott, paraprofessional

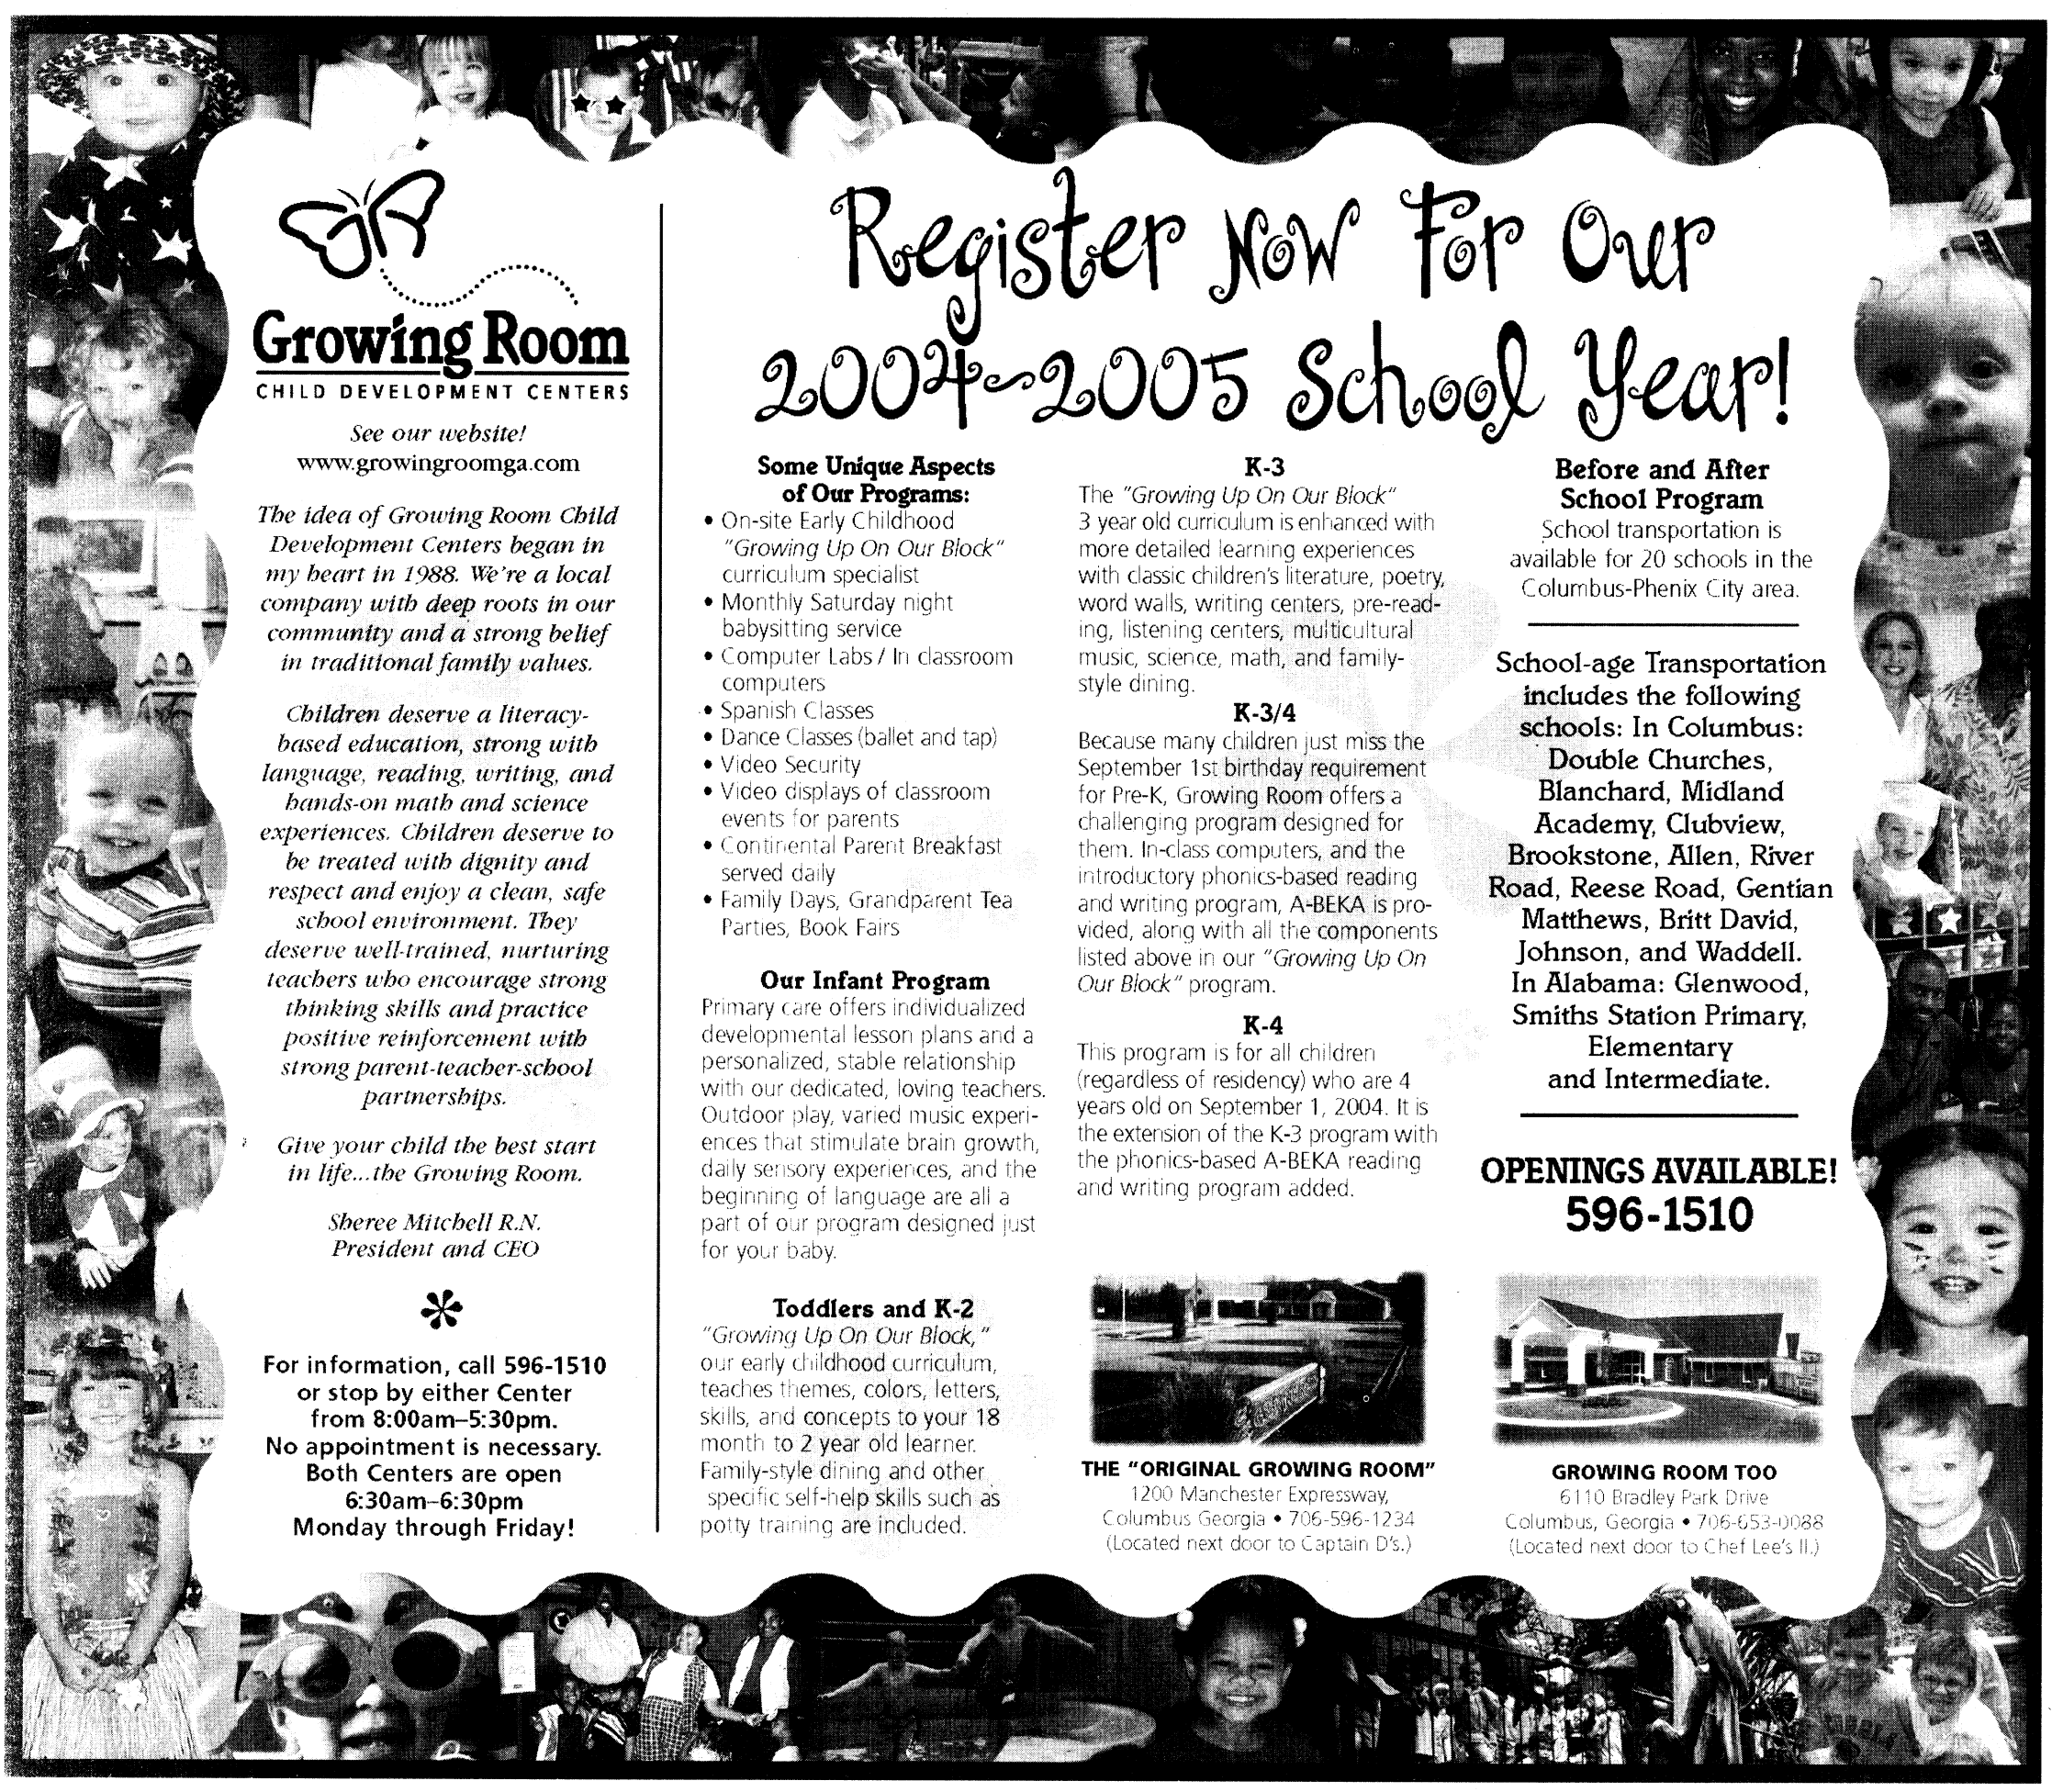


"I'm excited to be at Dexter. That's where my girls used to go, and it was Dexter that inspired me to become a teacher."
— Jackie Mumpower, Dexter Elementary School teacher

"I'm sad to leave my friends, but I'm looking forward to meeting new people."
— Carmen Cruz, comes to Wilson Elementary from Puerto Rico

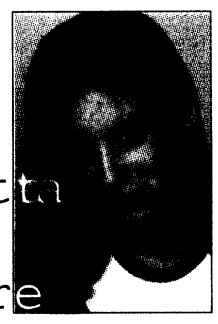
"I'm excited about our focus on math. We're bringing in professionals to tell about why math is important to their careers."
— Vicki Rogers, Dexter Elementary School principal

"It's like starting a new job every year — a fresh start. Not many people can say that about their job."
— Scott Denney, PE teacher at Faith Middle School



"I look forward to what I can learn. The kids teach me so much each year. They've been so many places I've never been. They have neat lives."
— Lisa Madler, Faith Middle School teacher

"Every year, it's exciting to see who's here, how they've grown. It's refreshing. I love the newness of it all."
— Cindy Givens, Faith Middle School media specialist



"Oh, my goodness, I look forward to getting my new bunch, but I miss the last ones. I'm going to try to give them a sense of trust. Military children need that."
— Miriam Aiken, Stowers Elementary

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

NOTE: Right, so my sources tell me (sources being a couple of guys I met downtown) that a couple of weeks ago, my column turned out to be a farce. Apparently, Jen Foster never made it to The Loft. Now, this isn't confirmed. But if they actually went on the right day, and she wasn't there, I apologize. Especially to all the guys who, like my new friends, took my estrogen-overload warning as a hint on a hot spot to meet women. But don't lose heart, guys. I'll keep my eyes peeled for another chick fest.

That said, this week, I can't give you bad information. I looked it all up on the Internet, and you know everything you read on the Internet must be true. Right?

Anyway, if you like the outdoors, if you're into cutesy historic towns and shopping, if you're hungry and sick of the restaurants in Columbus ... Pine Mountain is the place for you.

Just a short jaunt up the road (OK, so it's a 45-minute drive, but it's worth it), the Pine Mountain area has a little something for everyone.

It's a quaint place with all the traditional charm of a small, Southern town. Its streets are lined with antique and collectibles shops, historic buildings and restaurants to satisfy your cravings for a little old-fashioned Southern cookin'.

For the outdoorsmen (and women), there's plenty to keep you busy.

There are about 40 miles of nature trails, including abbreviated paths for those who get enough "hiking" (a.k.a. road marching) in their day jobs. And then, of course, there's the 23-mile Pine Mountain Trail for the real hiking enthusiasts. Whichever trail you pick, you're sure to be aesthetically pleased.

The area is full of impressive rock outcrops, waterfalls and spectacular views.

The trail wanders the 9,049-acre F. D. Roosevelt State Park, which also has year-round fishing and boating on Lake Delano.

If you're just out for the day, bring along a picnic and enjoy the scenery, and if you're up for an overnighter, it's a great place to set up camp. Camping sites range from primitive to luxurious.

If animals are more your thing, check out the 500-acre Wild Animal Safari and roam free (i.e. in your car) among camels, giraffes, rhinos, water buffalos, antelopes and zebras. The animals are uncaged and apparently aren't shy.

WARNING: Beware the rolled down window. More than one person has regaled me with stories of animals coming up to their cars and sticking their heads right in the window.

After that, you can always saddle up at the Roosevelt Stables. You should call ahead and make reservations if you include this on your agenda, and this may not be for you if you're on a budget. But if you've got dollar bills falling out of your pockets, you should check it out.

The stables have more than 25 miles of marked trails for riders and offer several guided tours that range from an hour to overnight for you adventurous types. A one-hour ride isn't bad at just $30. But the two-hour rides are $60, the three-hour rides are $80 to $90, the four-hour rides are $120, and the overnight rides are $200. So, yeah, you might want to plan ahead for this one.

As long as you're in the area, you should venture over to Warm Springs, which is practically in Pine Mountain, anyway.

Warm Springs' most well-known attraction is the Little White House, F.D.R.'s modest, six-room abode. It's exactly as it was the day he died, and with the addition of a memorial fountain, the Walk of the States and a museum. It's only $7.

And while you're in town, you won't want to miss the Bulloch House.

Heartily recommended by our own commanding general, the Bulloch House is within walking distance of downtown Warm Springs (which is actually a village of cute little shops).

You'll want to loosen up your belt and get down to business at this country buffet, which features a variety of meats and Southern-style, home-cooked vegetables.

The Bulloch House's specialties are fried chicken and "mouth-watering" fried green tomatoes.

It's open daily for lunch from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and for dinner on Fridays and Saturdays from 5 to 8:30 p.m.

Once you've added a few inches to your waist at the Bulloch House, take a short drive to the neighboring town of Woodbury for a great photograph opportunity.

One of the few covered bridges in Georgia — Red Oak Covered Bridge — is in Woodbury. I can just imagine the black and white prints you could take away from that place with all the shadows. But I guess that's only exciting if you're into photography.

But hey, like I said, there's something for everyone.

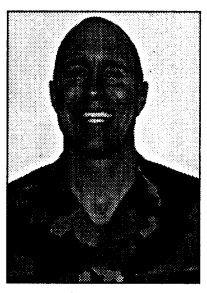
Reuniting in Army families can take time

Chaplain (Capt.) Bryan T. Smith
2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

REFLECTIONS

Back in 1979, a song called Reunited was number one on the charts for four weeks. It was by a duo called Peaches and Herb. Now, unless you are older than 40 you may not remember when this song came out, but still you may have heard it sometime over the years because of the amount of air play it had. The chorus goes like this:



Reunited, and it feels so good
Reunited 'cause we understood
There's one perfect fit
And, sugar, this one is it
We both are so excited 'cause we're reunited,
Hey hey

Well, I thought that was a great song and I wish all reunions, especially those after long military deployments, went as smoothly as in this song, but sometimes reunions don't go so smoothly and what we thought was a perfect fit suddenly comes apart at the seams.

Here are some suggestions to help keep the marriage and family tightly knit together.

• The returning service member should re-enter slowly — don't disturb the family set-up that has been working without you.

• Expect changes. Some changes will have taken place in your spouse, children and in yourself. This is normal and can mean that growth and maturity have occurred. Some of the changes may be negative, but there will be plenty of time to work things out. So don't go bursting onto the scene like a bull in a china shop — something more valuable than china may get broken.

Smith

• Spend maximum time with your family. Postpone reunions with relatives until normal routines have been established at home.

• Don't try to alter the finances. Chances are your spouse has been handling them just fine.

• Take it easy on the kids. Don't be stern with discipline — concentrate first on re-establishing the relationship.

• Don't expect your sex life to be the same as it was before you left. It might take a while to get things back to normal.

Also, the spouse should expect that the service member changed.

The service member may not want to participate in pre-planned events and more than likely will want to get away from the daily routine for a while. Expect spontaneity.

The service member may feel surprise or hurt over the fact that the spouse coped so well without them being there.

Make sure you reassure the service member that he or she is still loved and needed. Expect it to take about six weeks to readjust.

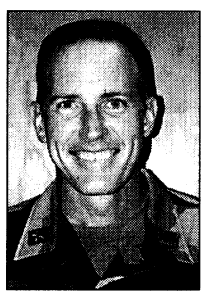
Expect the service member may have trouble sleeping for a while — after all, if it's day here, it's night over there.

Finally, don't bring up problems too quickly. Give everyone time to readjust, and then you can together face any problems that may arise.

Reuniting can be an experience that feels good, and it can be a perfect fit, but only if you take the time to mold together again.

Do relationship JMPI before taking the plunge into marriage

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



How many of you would ever think of climbing into a parachute with all its buckles, bulges, cords and pulls, simply looking in the mirror, then say, "Well, I guess it looks OK — let's jump!"

The Army has a much better plan, doesn't it? When you go through Airborne School, you learn the value of having somebody check you and your parachute "rigging" from head to toe meticulously.

The Army figures that what you're about to do, though stunningly beautiful and exhilarating, can also (if improperly rigged) be disastrous and tragic.

The Army figures that it's just as important that everything be checked and re-checked to ensure that you have a great ride. This is called a JMPI — Jumpmaster Personnel Inspection.

Dating and relationships can be a lot like that parachute jump. Getting into a relationship, and a marriage that follows, can be an incredible "high" and one of the most gratifying and ecstatic things any person can know — if everything is rigged right!

Hawkins

If not, you know as well as I do that a bad relationship can be just as devastatingly painful and tragic as any jump gone bad.

So, doesn't it make sense, just like in parachuting, that we do a "Relationship JMPI" in our relationships before we take a flying leap of faith into love and marriage?

During the next several weeks, I want to share with you the five key "majors" that need to be checked and double checked to make sure that you'll fly high and not fall fast in your dating relationships. I like to say, it's what "every parent oughta teach, and what every single's gotta know!"

The first "bonding area," the first thing that has to happen, is that we have to get to know each other. Knowing each other always takes the 3 Ts: it takes time, it takes togetherness, it takes talking. (Interestingly, if that's what it takes to begin a relationship, isn't it pretty true that it also takes the 3 Ts to keep a relationship? How ya doing, married folks?) As we spend time together talking, what is it we need to know:

• I need to know what fun is and isn't for me and for the person I'm getting interested in. Do I cause them pain? Do they cause me pain? Danger Will Robinson! Am I a more fun and loving person for being with them ... them with me? The only right answer is a definitive yes — anything less is a danger sign.

• I need to know about his or her family. Just like on Everybody Loves Raymond, you can't marry Raymond without getting his mother, Marie.

People don't just marry people — families marry families! (Can I get an amen!) How did his or her family express love growing up ... how did they express anger? What roles did your parents play versus what roles his or her parents played? Great questions to make sure you don't "burn in" in your relationship.

• I need to know about his or her faith. Where are they spiritually? Are they building me up or bringing me down in my relationship with God?

The best marriage insurance you'll ever have is a real, vibrant relationship with the God who made you, love and marriage.

That's Step 1 — more next week.

Meanwhile, join me for our series on "How to Avoid Marrying a Jerk — What Every Parent Ought To Teach and What Every Single's Gotta Know" at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill.

Also, you can give me a ring at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760.

I look forward to meeting you!

Fort Benning hosts first skate contest

Fort Benning's top skaters converged on the Child and Youth Services skatepark Saturday for Fort Benning's first skateboard competition.

The competition had a slow start, with only one competitor, Kevin Gregory, in the 10- to 12-years-old age group. Gregory took home the first-place prize pack by default, which included a new skateboard and clothing items.

The skateboarders in the other age groups didn't get by so easily.

Five skaters turned out for the 13- to 15-years-old age group contest and the competition got fierce.

Tyrell Payne came out strong early on in the contest, landing a clean 180 kickflip over the corner of the pyramid. Payne showed a commanding ability to use the ramps in the park, but wasn't able to squeeze out the competition and finished third in his age group with a 30.6 point average.

Cliff Patton, the favorite for the 13- to 15-years old age group, showed his abilities with an airborne performance. Patton landed several big launches over the pyramid and demonstrated his skills with a variety of kickflips and grinds, but wasn't able to match Kurt Gregory's skill on technical tricks, and finished second with a 33.36 point average.

Kurt kept his wheels on the ground and his feet on the board for the majority of the competition, sticking to the street course through most of his first two runs with a variety of grinds, railslides and kickflips.

He seemed to wear down by the end of his third run and was unable to land a few of his tricks, but persistence paid off, and he took home the prize with a 1.24-point lead over Patton, finishing out with a 34.6 average.

Kurt, who was planning to watch the competition and signed up just for fun, said he never expected to win.

"This feels great, but I really thought Cliff was going to win," he said.

Marcus Wilson pops a 360-kickflip during the CYS skateboard competition.

Kurt said he will definitely enter the Aug. 14 competition.

The competition heated up even more with the 16 to 18 category.

All four of the competitors put on a high flying show using the whole park.

James Rodriguez may have cost himself the competition with a rocky start. He seemed to let his nerves get to him and had difficulties landing some of the basics, but came out of the gates strong on his final two runs looking like a whole new skater, landing almost every trick flawlessly.

Zach Bowling, one of the favorites for his age group, looked like a madman storming out of the gates with a fast-paced high-flying routine that circled the park, but just like Kurt, he fell in a rut trying to land the same trick three times before finding success.

Despite outstanding performances by Rodriguez and Bowling, Andrew Paulina stole the show with his ability to mix old-school tricks with new, technical tricks.

Paulina blasted airs over the pyramid and the park bench, then slipped over to the street course where he pulled several grind variations and laid out a one-footed manual for about 50 feet.

Paulina finished first with a 31.6 point average, while Bowling and Rodriguez finished out the top three with 29.6 and 29.3.

Linda Laine, CYS sports director, said the competition was a learning experience, and future contests will benefit from it.

"One thing we learned is that the next one will be at night when it is cooler," she said.

The next skateboard competition is scheduled for Aug. 14 and registrations are due by Aug. 10.

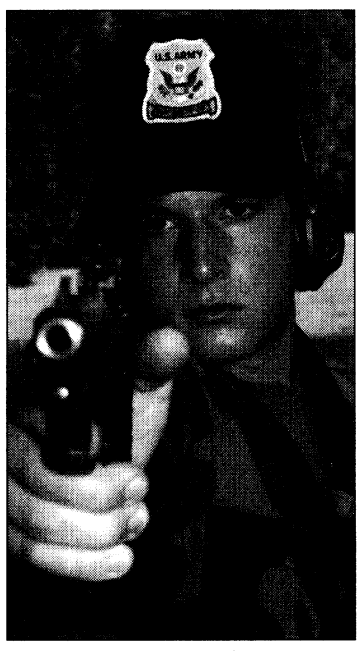
USAMU wins Colt Trophy at National Pistol Matches

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

CAMP PERRY, Ohio — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol Team, which returned from a monthlong training mission in Iraq recently, brought several national titles back with them to Fort Benning from the 2004 National Pistol Matches this year.

The National Pistol Matches were conducted July 13 to 18 at this historic Ohio National Guard training site on the banks of Lake Erie. More than 100 teams with more than 700 shooters from all over the country competed in the championships.



The USAMU Service Pistol Team won the .45-Caliber Pistol Team National Championship and brought home the Colt Trophy. The USAMU Team, coached by Ray Arredondo, is made up of Sgt. 1st Class Roger C. Jacobson, Staff Sgt. Thomas A. Rose, Sgt. Adam E. Sokolowski and Spc. Sean P. Watson.

The USAMU Team also conducted the Small Arms Firing School for more than 300 people July 12 at Camp Perry .

Out of 101 military and civilian teams competing, the men of the USAMU Service Pistol Team brought home the Silver Medal by finishing in second place overall in the National Pistol Team Championship.

The Army Team won the Gold Medal in the .45-Caliber Team Championship, took the Silver Medal in the Center Fire Team Championship and got the Bronze Medal in the .22-Caliber Team Championship.

Sgt. Adam E. Sokolowski won the .22-Caliber National Match Course, won the Preliminary Pistol Championship Trophy, took second place overall in the .22-Caliber Pistol Championship and fourth place overall in the National Pistol Championship.

Marksmanship Unit Team, posted a team-high 1,147 points with 45 Xs to win the Colt Trophy; an X is a bull's eye used for tie breaking.

The USAMU Service Pistol Team still holds the national record in this event with a score of 1,185 points and 57 Xs set in 1977.

Sokolowski beat 716 shooters to win the .22-Caliber National Match Course and also won the Preliminary Pistol Championship Trophy.

He also took second place overall in the .22-Caliber Pistol Championship and fourth place overall in the National Pistol Championship out of 735 competitors.

Sokolowski's shooting was good enough for him to be chosen to the U.S. Mayleigh Cup Team that will represent the United States in a World Postal Match held between English speaking countries.

Out of 686 competitors, Rose took first place to win the .45-Caliber Rapid Fire Match. In the President's Pistol Match, Jacobson, Rose, Sokolowski, Watson and Staff Sgts. Robert M. Mango and Nathaniel S.D. Seltenreich won the coveted President's Hundred Badge, with Jacobson finishing the highest in seventh place out of 566 shooters.

"We went into competition with high hopes because our team had been shooting very well this summer," Jacobson said. "Winning the .45-Caliber National Team Championship makes it eight years in a row of our winning at least one national title. Individually, Sgt. Sokolowski did a fantastic job this year; he shot steady and consistent throughout the week."

In June, for the fourth consecutive year, the USAMU Service Pistol Team won the Overall Service Pistol Interservice Team Championship at the Interservice Championships at Camp Robinson, Ark. The team also won the .22-Caliber Team Championship, the Center Fire Team Championship, the Service Pistol Team Championship and took third place in the .45-Caliber Team Championship. Rose finished in third place in the Service Pistol Individual Match and Seltenreich won the Excellence in Competition Match.

COMMENTARY

Olympic athletes set to entertain in Greece

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I'm still mad at myself for not going out and watching the 1996 softball Olympic games, held at Golden Park in Columbus. I had the chance to see actual Olympic competition, but I blew it. So, from then on, I've made it a point to watch any and all Olympic competitions.

I've been following the Olympic contenders, watching various trials, including swimming, gymnastics and track and field, and I'm very impressed with some of these athletes.

What I've done is compiled a user-friendly guide to who to watch this summer, when the Olympics returns to it's birthplace, Athens, Greece.

NBC and it's affiliates are offering 1,200 hours of viewing pleasure for the Olympic watcher, so be sure to watch for these athletes who are sure to make a name for themselves.

Tennis

Sure, you can turn on ESPN and usually catch a tennis match, but something about watching Andy Roddick, Serena and Venus Williams, Jennifer Capriati and even legend Martina Navratilova compete in the Olympics is gratifying. They are all household names — but now they want to win a gold medal.

Track and Field

•Tom Pappas, a 28-year-old born in Oregon, will compete in the decathlon. Pappas won the 2003 World Championships and finished fifth in Sydney. In 2003, Pappas won the Outdoor Nationals with a meet record 8,784 points, the second highest total in U.S. history.

• Maurice Greene — Greene is seeking to become the first repeat champion since Carl Lewis in '84 and '88. He's the defending gold medalist in the 100-meter. Greene became the world's top sprinter on May 31 by running a 9.78 — the second fastest time in history under any conditions — at the U.S. Open.

Gymnastics

Mohini Bhardwaj, a 25-year-old gymnast, was the favorite underdog at the Olympic trials. Why? Probably because at the age of 25, she's well past her "prime" as a gymnast, as most of her teammates are teenagers. Or maybe because Pamela Anderson, the blonde bombshell of Baywatch (yes, Baywatch) fame, helps fund Mohini's training.

Paul Hamm and his twin brother Morgan Hamm are forces to be reckoned with in male gymnastics. Should Paul win an all-around medal, he'll be only the second American to do so.

Swimming

If you haven't heard of 19-year-old Michael Phelps, make sure to watch the Olympics. At the trials for the games, Phelps broke five world records. And that was just the trials! Phelps is drawing comparisons to Mark Spitz, who won seven gold medals in 1972. Speedo, Phelps' sponsor, will give him $1 million if he matches Spitz's record in Athens or even in Beijing in 2008.

Of course, this just scrapes the surface of all the truly talented athletes the United States is sending to Athens to compete.

There are famous names and not-so-famous names, who will probably become famous after the Olympics. Who can forget Mary Lou Retton, or gymnast Kerri Strugg, winning the gold for the U.S. with a hurt ankle? Or the "Dream Team?" History will definitely be made this year, so don't miss it!

Dog Day Afternoon
The Rifle and Pistol Club will present Dog Day Afternoon, a pistol, CQB, shotgun and d-marks rifle match at 3 p.m. Saturday.

A Soldier spent his weekend at the lake fishing, grilling and having a few beers with his family. Come Monday morning, he was feeling a little tired. He went to his company formation and geared up for a long, slow run in 70-degree weather.

Halfway through the run, he started to feel a little dizzy and began to see spots. Still, he didn't slow down — he didn't want to be a "fall-out." But a few steps later, he just couldn't go on anymore. His heart began beating rapidly, his

Schools adopt partners

Classrooms to expect more BDU presence

Fort Benning's evolving partnership with local schools has all the characteristics of Army modularity. The CG calls it "niche capabilities."

"There's a lot going on on post that we can use to reach out to students," said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley during a Partners in Education planning session Aug. 4 at Spencer High School.

"Our involvement does not have to be restricted to our partnerships," he said, using the International Student Training Detachment as an example. "These are foreign Soldiers who can share their culture, their language, their country's history with students all over," not just at the school they're partnered with.

Last year, the Department of the Army initiated a marked emphasis on Soldier involvement in schools. On many installations, that translates into an "adopt-a-school" program, similar to PIE.

On Fort Benning, where frequent deployments left several schools without partners, officials began to develop a plan that would provide "fall-back" units, or dual partnerships, said Dewayne Baldwin, Fort Benning's school liaison officer.

In this, Fort Benning's fifth year participating in the statewide PIE program, the seven on-post schools and 26 off post can expect to see a "stepped-up BDU presence,"

CG's press conference addresses post issues

Freakley gives media 'big picture' of changes to affect community

Sgt. Kim Dooley

The Home of the Infantry is gearing up for significant changes in the next few years.

During an Aug. 5 press conference in Infantry Hall, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, touched on several adjustments that will greatly impact the installation and its surrounding communities.

Freakley talked about the considerably increased load of basic training Soldiers in both the Infantry Training and Basic Combat Training brigades.

"There's been a lot of story coverage about the brigade that's going to come to Fort Benning … but what's been missed is the increase in Soldiers we're training this summer," the general said.

"And that we already have units that have arrived above what we had before, who are buying homes, living in our community, buying downtown, participating in both on-post and off-post activities, registering their children for school," he said.

"They are here. Those units are here, and they've been largely missed."

One of those units is 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, a Reserve unit from Wilmington, Ind., which has been up and running on Sand Hill for the past few months, "making huge contributions."

Stork didn't drop that dog in your lap

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Here's the deal. I am an animal lover and I can't stand people who don't take care of their pets. If the shoe fits, wear it.

Dogs are around because of us. We domesticated wolves and other canine wildlife and bred them to suit our whims. Our manipulation of Mother Nature gives us power and with that power, responsibility.

Dogs depend on us, they work for us diligently, they love us no matter what our breath smells like in the morning, and we repay them by failing to protect and provide for them.

The fact that the kennel on post is so full of strays that no more animals can be accepted is the wrong answer.

Dogs are like kids. They are not forced upon us at gunpoint.

People choose to buy them. People breed them. People respond to those free-to-good-home ads in the paper because they think how great it will be to have a cute, furry little friend around.

And then they lose interest or just get lazy and decide to not take care of them.

They don't make them wear tags, or they don't get them tags at all. They don't have them microchipped. They don't ensure they are properly caged, tied, chained or housed.

So they get out (sometimes through no fault of the owner) and run the streets as moving targets for cars. If they are lucky, some good Samaritan catches them and brings them to the stray facility, or the military police pick them up.

But then, because the owner didn't do his part to make sure his dog has identification, it sits in lock-up until it finds a new home or gets euthanized — another innocent animal put down because of user error.

And not only do these culprits waste another of man's best friends, they waste taxpayer dollars as well.

Those strays have to be fed, watered, vaccinated and housed until they are farmed out to new owners or put down. Those things cost money and take up the time of the staff at the veterinary clinic, whose real mission is to provide care for the pets of responsible owners.

Maybe I am being too much of a finger-wagger, but it just isn't right.

If you can't handle the responsibilities of owning a dog, don't get one.

Be realistic and think it through before you bring another life into your family that you aren't ready for.

TRANSFORMATION

'Complex and potentially dangerous'

Brownlee

Schoomaker

The last few weeks there's been a lot of discussion — much of it confusing or inaccurate — about the condition and future readiness of the U.S. Army. We owe it to our men and women in uniform, their families and our country to get the facts right.

No one disputes that there are currently strains on segments of our armed forces. A solution some offer is to increase the permanent end strength of our Army. But simply adding to the total number of people in uniform does not really get to the heart of the problem.

Let us explain. Today, our Army has a total force of more than 1 million Soldiers. Yet the vast majority of our Army is not currently deployed. Approximately 123,000 — or less than 12 percent of the total force — support operations in Iraq or Afghanistan. In fact, 123,000 members of the 350,000-strong Army National Guard have not been called up.

Overall, 270,000 Soldiers are forward deployed in more than 120 countries, but with a total force in excess of 1 million, this should not stretch the force. Yet, it does. The strain is caused by a force structure that was built for the Cold War. The solution to the problem is to create the right number of deployable Soldiers with the right skills in the right component.

This is why Army transformation is so critical. And so today, our Army is in the midst of the most sweeping transformation since World War II to significantly increase the number of deployable Soldiers and units available around the world.

Army transformation is proceeding along three main avenues.

First, we are restructuring the force into modular formations with the right capabilities for our current and future security environment. This restructuring increases the number of active-duty combat brigades from 33 to 43 or more, using a combination of new recruits and Soldiers drawn from other parts of our Army. Our goal is an Army with more cohesive and combat-ready formations.

Second, we are stabilizing the force with initiatives that will eventually allow most Soldiers to remain based at a single installation for longer periods of time. Stabilization will yield a more predictable lifestyle for our Soldiers and their families.

Third, we are rebalancing our force between the active component of the Army, the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve. This initiative will give our Army more troops available with the skills we need to fight the global war on terrorism.

The Department of Defense is expanding our active Army rapidly without sacrificing standards or quality. And we plan to grow the active component of the Army by a total of 30,000 troops during the next three years. It is important to note the difference between growing our Army — a temporary measure granted under the Global War on Terrorism authorities and paid for with supplemental dollars — and increasing permanent end strength.

A mandated increase in permanent end strength means that the U.S. Army would be required by law to maintain tens of thousands of additional troops on the payrolls, regardless of the need or the cost, and pay for them out of the Army's core budget. A mandated increase in permanent end strength would take away dollars needed for programs, and threaten our transformation.

We are already growing our Army as fast as we can. Our Soldiers are highly skilled and well-trained, and it takes time and a significant training base to develop them. This deliberate growth will allow us to transform our Army in a way that gets at the heart of the problem, relieves the stress on the force, and does not sacrifice our Army's future.

We are able to grow our Army today because retention and recruiting remain very strong. Despite the obvious dangers, hardships and sacrifices, tens of thousands of qualified Soldiers choose to join or stay in the U.S. Army every year. In the active Army, Reserves and National Guard, we are meeting our retention goals for this fiscal year. We are also close to meeting our recruitment targets, even as our Army increased those targets by several thousand this year.

Transforming the force while fighting in Iraq, Afghanistan and other theaters in the war on terror is a tough management and leadership challenge. It is not unlike tuning an engine while the car is moving — complex and potentially dangerous.

But when large organizations face demanding new circumstances, they must change to meet those challenges. Our circumstances today, as an Army serving our nation at war, are providing a tremendous strategic opportunity. The convergence of our current momentum, our focus and the increased resources provided by Congress, over our core budget, in this time of war provide an opportunity for change that we cannot afford to miss.

We have an ambitious task ahead, but with the continued support of the American people, we will get it done. As we overcome these challenges, our all-volunteer Army of active, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers are serving with tremendous skill and courage around the world. We are honored to serve with each and every one of them.

Rest assured that our Army is not only taking actions to be successful today, but we are seizing an opportunity to remain relevant and ready tomorrow.

Current POV fatality trend unacceptable

This year, throughout the Army, on average, nine Army Soldiers die every month in a POV accident. Thus far, in fiscal 2004, 92 Soldiers died in POV accidents, a 21-percent increase over last year. Four Fort Benning Soldiers were killed this year in POV accidents. The causes of these deaths are not new: speeding, alcohol, fatigue and not wearing a seat belt.

Your involvement is paramount in influencing how our Soldiers operate their POVs, and in stopping this tragic and needless loss of life. Positive, hands-on leadership is imperative, particularly at the squad leader or first-line supervisor level.

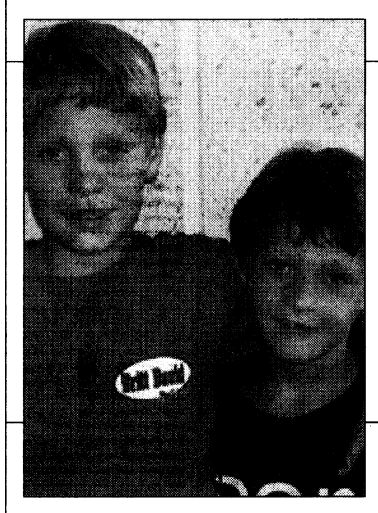
TRADOC has developed a model Highway Safety Program, which can be found in the Safety Public Folder on Outlook.

The HSP requires the following:

• All newly assigned personnel receive an orientation briefing and complete personal information and individual driving history. Schedule a commander's interview within 30 days of arrival.

• Apply the "Next Accident Assessment" techniques from the USA Safety Center POV Risk Management Tool Box.

• Follow the Six Point Model POV Safety Program published by the USA Safety Center.



I want every leader to clearly understand the depth of my commitment to ending these tragic and needless POV fatalities. We cannot accept the current POV fatality trend.

Leadership will make a difference. This is leaders' business. Let's protect the force! Follow Me!

Soldiers put construction skills to work

A Soldier sands old, donated furniture, readying it for new stain and a home in Building 2826.

Photos by Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Spc. Eric Goody, front, and Staff Sgt. Gabriel Cortes, both Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Infantry Center, align a chair rail in one of the rooms they constructed as part of the renovation of the unit's new home, Building 2826. Both Soldiers have spent the last three weeks working from 6 a.m. until sometimes 7 p.m. to prepare the building for its dedication Monday.

The doorway is clogged with furniture. The smells of lumber, adhesives and paint permeate the air, and the floor is littered with the refuse of construction. But the empty shell that once was known only as Building 2826 is quickly evolving.

In years past, it has been home to Airborne School headquarters, the Tax Center, a learning center, and Reserve units have used it during their tenure here. Monday, it will be dedicated as the permanent location of the recently formed Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Infantry Center.

"We stood up the company in January," said 1st Sgt. Steven D'Ostroph. "But we never really had a home until now."

It hasn't been easy for D'Ostroph to orchestrate the renovation of an outdated building in disrepair into what he calls home.

"We don't have much of a budget," he said. "So everything we get for this project, we have to beg, borrow or steal. Well, we don't steal."

It has been through the generosity of multiple directorates, the support of the garrison commander and command sergeant major, Col. Rick Riera and Command Sgt. Maj. Fortson, help with painting from the Infantry Training Brigade's Retraining and Holding Unit, and the work of the HHC's staff that the renovations have been possible, D'Ostroph said.

"We only had ten thousand dollars to complete this," he said. "There wasn't money for furniture or much carpet, and we have stretched every dollar to get the most out of this as far as building materials go."

But D'Ostroph said all the donated furniture and purchased material would have been useless without the dedication of his cadre.

"These guys did all the work," he said. "When we started this three weeks ago, they had zero knowledge. They could partially drive a nail, but not even really straight. But now, they are doing quality work, installing drywall, painting, cutting angles and putting in molding on their own."

Over the course of three weeks, the staff has painted the inside and outside of the building, installed flooring, dry wall, doors, paneling and molding, and built rooms and a central service desk — much like the one at the provost marshal's office.

"We transformed an old, open-bay building into a multi-room, functional office with a logical flow to it," D'Ostroph said.

"We put in long hours," said Staff Sgt. Gabriels Cortes, HHC, USAIC. "I am talking from 0600 to 1900 every day, but we can say it is all us."

The going hasn't been easy with schedule hold-ups, mistakes by suppliers, and juggling the project while continuing the unit's support mission, but the end product will be worth the headaches and long hours, Cortes said.

"It builds pride when you make a place your own, and we can always say we did it ourselves," he said.

Guard Soldiers develop, test advanced Bradley simulator

Trainer to increase readiness

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The Army National Guard has taken the initiative and developed the Advanced Bradley Full Crew Interactive Skills Trainer, the highest fidelity training system of a family of simulators that are being developed, said 1st Sgt. Doug Gilliam, lead subject matter expert.

The ABFIST is an appended trainer for the M-2A2, or the Operation Desert Storm Bradley Fighting Vehicle, that provides crew training, including individual skills, crew proficiency, full crew precision gunnery, and networked section and platoon gunnery training.

The ABFIST is a flexible system that can be hooked up to a Bradley. Whether a unit is deployed or at its home station, this allows training for the entire crew.

"The ABFIST offers much better targeting and engaging techniques and is portable," said Sgt. 1st Class Butch Cady, senior master gunner for the Fort Benning ARNG liaison. The ABFIST is built with modern technology which is more reliable than previous systems.

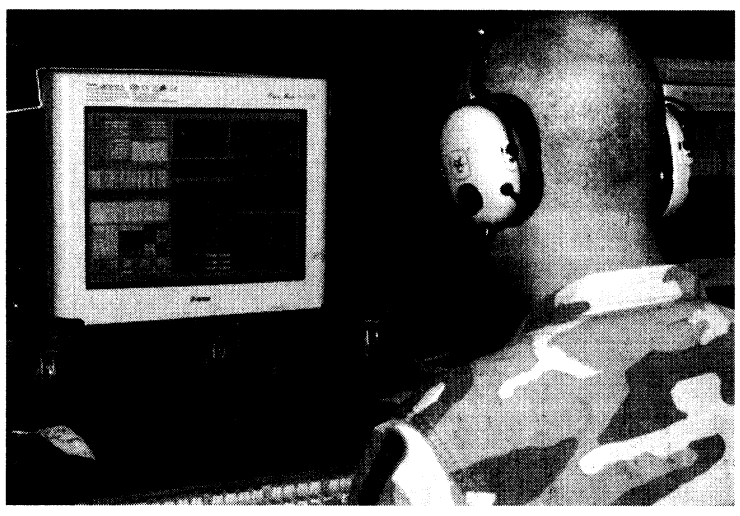
"We needed a system that didn't go down as often and was easily portable," Cady said.

All Bradley units have the same training objective, to train and sustain lethal and efficient Bradley crews, sections and platoons.

The development of the system has been a "for the Soldier, by the Soldier project," said Don Ariel, president of Raydon, the contracted company designing the system.

Soldiers have been involved in every aspect of the development of the system.

"Who better to build a new training system for a Bradley than the Soldiers who use them?" he said.



One of the advantages the ABFIST provides is that it is made up from commercial off-the-shelf equipment, Cady said.

"If part of the system breaks or needs to be replaced, all one would have to do is go to Best Buy or any electronics store and purchase a new part," Cady said. "The Army is veering towards commercial, off-the-shelf purchasing of equipment because parts are easier to replace and more affordable."

Ariel said the ABFIST production cost is $220,000, a much lower cost when compared to the original acquisition cost of the Conduct of Fire Trainer, which ran at about $1.3 million.

The COFT was the only other simulation training system master gunners had. The system was developed in the 70s and fielded in the 80s and was designed to enhance basic turret crew gunnery skills. This system, however, only focused training on the gunner and the Bradley commander.

The COFT became outdated, the parts cost too much to replace because they had to be special ordered — they are no longer made — and it was too large of a system to move as often as needed to provide ARNG units the same amount of training required of all Bradley crews.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

1st Sgt. Doug Gilliam observes the screen as a Soldier trains on the ABFIST simulator.

Another advantage of the ABFIST system is that it takes less time start up. Although it takes about 2 hours and 40 minutes to hook up to a vehicle and about the same time to disassemble, once assembled, the start up time — a few minutes — is no comparison to the half hour to 45 minutes of the COFT.

The ABFIST instructor interface is Windows based and runs on software developed by Raydon specifically for ABFIST. The instructor has many various options that enable him to select training to target areas that need improvement or prepare for live-fire crew qualification, said Brad Baker, ABFIST program manager.

With this training system, Soldiers may select from a list of exercises and exercise content to design their own scenario in whatever area the Soldier needs training, Baker said.

The development of the ABFIST does not cancel out the use of the COFT.

The Mobile COFT-XXI, is an advanced version of the old COFT, which has been updated with modern software including urban operations training with a geospecific Baghdad training exercise.

Although the MCOFT-XXI still does not a driver position, it has the basic Microsoft based instructor interface and Raydon software with the same advantages of the ABFIST.

"We've had Soldiers who have been to Iraq use the ABFIST and they say the streets are the same they drove by in Iraq," Cady said.

The ABFIST is currently undergoing government acceptance testing which will end in the last week in August. The basis of issue is one trainer per mechanized infantry company or cavalry troop of which 39 trainers are funded and under production.

August proves fatal on road

Fatigue, alcohol main causes

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

August has the highest number of automobile accident-related deaths, making it the most dangerous driving month of the year, according to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety.

Between 1986 and 2002, the institute calculated an average of 69,731 people die in automobile accidents in August.

Part of the reason for that high average is the fact that, in that month, motorists travel almost 3.7 trillion miles — also the highest average of any month.

The Army's "Be Safe Campaign" launched earlier this year, calls for a reduction of accidents by 50 percent by 2006, and August is a time to focus on driving safety to help achieve that goal.

Some of the biggest factors in automobile accident deaths are speed, not wearing seat belts and alcohol, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

More than half of all traffic-related deaths are either speeding or alcohol-related, and if a person is involved in any kind of an accident, the risk of death goes up by 50 percent when seat belts are not in use, said Regis Beighley, post safety manager.

"About 40 percent of Americans don't wear their seat belt on a regular basis," he said. "It only takes three seconds to put it on."

Some other big factors are driver fatigue, mechanical malfunction and inattention, he said.

Driver fatigue is particularly dangerous, because most of the time, the driver doesn't even realize how unalert and tired he has become, Beighley said.

He said by following these simple rules, drivers and passengers can lower the chance they will be involved in a motor vehicle accident:

- Don't drink and drive.
- Always wear a seat belt.
- Drive within posted speed limits.
- Drive defensively.
- Ensure you have adequate rest before hitting the road and take frequent breaks.
- Don't use cell phones while driving.
- Avoid distractions like kids horseplaying and arguing.
- Properly maintain your car and check it anyway before you leave on road trips.
- Drive during the day — most fatal crashes happen

Heat: Steps in place to keep Soldiers training, safe ears were ringing and his head was throbbing.

Crouched down on the curb trying to figure out what was wrong with him he heard the faint words "dehydration" and "heat injury" from one of the platoon sergeants.

It's a common scenario, especially in Georgia, where the heat can reach up to 100 degrees and humidity levels up to 80 percent.

But heat injuries can be prevented no matter what the environment, said Capt. Shawn Bowman, environmental science officer, U. S. Army MEDDAC, Fort Benning.

"The bottom line to prevention is direct observation and evaluation by leaders," Bowman said. "Everyone's body reacts differently to the environment, so it's a leader's responsibility to be constantly aware of (his) Soldiers."

At Fort Benning, home to many high-speed schools, Bowman said that a high-speed student is more in danger of becoming a heat casualty than anyone else.

"(Motivated) Soldiers will not stop until they drop. They will keep going unless someone pulls them aside and says it's time to take a break," he said. "That's where leader observation comes into play."

Martin Army Community Hospital reports any heat injury to him as soon as it happens.

Since the end of July, he said, there have been about 32 cases of heat exhaustion and 24 cases of heat strokes reported on Fort Benning.

"It's a challenge to prevent heat injuries, but it's not one we can't overcome," Bowman said. "We have the know-how; we just need to put in the effort."

Heat injuries, however, are not necessarily a one-day-in-the-heat problem.

Cumulative heat takes its toll on the body.

"If Soldiers are out training in the heat constantly over a couple of days, by the end of the week, their body is bound to give up," Bowman said. "Leaders need to assess what the Soldiers have done before they go out and do more training in the heat."

"The biggest problem with (Soldiers) who suffer from heat injuries is that they don't always have the time to become acclimated to the Georgia weather," said Staff Sgt. Dave Rowan, an Airborne School instructor and operations NCOIC, D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Regiment.

Rowan said D Co. is always prepared and stresses the importance of prevention rather than reaction.

"Before every event, we cover a risk management check list to ensure we've taken all the measures necessary to help prevent injuries," he said. "Each training area has outdoor showers where we take the Soldiers and have them cool off."

There are lister bags with water and ice in the training areas so Soldiers may refill their canteens, and ice blankets — sheets in ice coolers — are placed in every training area to help cool off Soldiers who suffer from heat injuries.

In weather exceeding 90 degrees, airborne instructors have the Soldiers roll up and unbutton their uniform pants and tops.

Instructors also give the Soldiers a 10-minute rest period every hour on the hour.

In the current training cycle, D Co. has only reported one heat injury.

"We are very careful about observing our Soldiers and making sure that those who are potential heat casualties are taken care of properly," Rowan said.

There's a fluid replacement and work-rest cycle guide that should be followed depending on the heat category — every hour requires a specific rest period depending on the heat category Soldiers are training in, Bowman said.

Low water intake, bad eating habits and lack of sleep are also important contributors to heat injuries.

"It's important to maintain hydration throughout the day, regardless of the physical activity," Bowman said.

However, too much water can also lead to over hydration or water intoxication. Symptoms of over hydration include confusion, weakness and vomiting.

There are three types of heat injuries — heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

Heat cramps are usually felt in the abdomen, arms and legs.

Heat exhaustion and heat stroke have similar symptoms. Mild symptoms include dizziness, headaches, nausea and weakness. Severe symptoms include no perspiration, unconsciousness, confusion, cool, clammy skin and vomiting.

Bowman offers classes about heat prevention to units across post.

For more information about heat injury prevention or to schedule a class for a unit heat injury prevention class, call 545-1445.

Fallen Soldiers remembered by area artists

Local artists offer families portraits of sons

A Columbus artist has made it her mission to honor the Fort Benning Soldiers killed in Iraq.

Rebecca Rich Kissel, who specializes in oil and pastel portraits, began seeking out the families of lost Soldiers late last year. She offered to paint portraits of their sons and husbands using photographs taken in the months before they died.

"A memorial portrait means a lot to the family," said Kissel, whose work is on display at the Joseph House Art Gallery in Columbus. "I have a portrait of my father, and I know how much it means to me. So I wanted to do this to say thanks for what these men did for me."

The paintings will be gifts to the families, tokens of appreciation for their sons' service, Kissel said.

Retired Lt. Col. Joe Rippetoe plans to offer a copy of the portrait of his son, Capt. Russell Rippetoe, to the Smithsonian Institute. Along with Russell's uniform and combat gear, it will hang in the museum's newest exhibit, "The Price of Freedom," in November.

"People like her make America strong. You want others to know about it," said Rippetoe, who lost his only son to a car bomb in Iraq last year.

Russell's portrait was the first one completed, and the process was slow and often heart wrenching.

"You can't stare at a face for days and days and not learn to love it," Kissel said. "He was the age of my children, and when I looked at him, I saw someone's son. I had some tearful moments."

Bridgett Siter

Columbus artist Rebecca Rich Kissel has offered to paint portraits for the families of Fort Benning Soldiers killed in Iraq. The oil painting of Capt. Russell Rippetoe, pictured here, was the first completed.

The portrait stands ready to be shipped to his family in Washington, D.C. But therein lies the rub.

Kissel worries about how the portraits can best be presented to the families, and mail, she said, isn't the answer.

Russell's mother, Rita Rippetoe, was recently shocked to find two of her son's medals in the mail, and the experience left her shaken.

"That's not the way these things should happen," Kissel said. "I just don't want someone to come home and find a package in their garage or propped against their back door. These portraits should be hand-delivered, and I think there are people out there who would like to do it."

As Kissel and a fellow artist, Karen Stewart, continue to work on the paintings, they're hoping friends or family of the Soldiers can offer some assistance here.

"There has to be some way to get these delivered without sending them through the mail," Kissel said.

In the meantime, she's continuing her efforts to contact some of the families who've not responded to her offer, and she's seeking donations for frames.

"I wish I could do it all — the painting, the framing, the delivery. It's just not possible," Kissel said.

And should the number of local Soldiers killed in Iraq continue to grow, Kissel said she'll enlist the aid of several local artists who've volunteered to help.

"I sure wish I could do a portrait for every single Soldier who's died since the war started," she said. "I wish I could. But the worst thing I could do is make an offer I can't fulfill to people who are already hurting."

The wife of a retired Army major, Kissel knows a little something about "hurting." Her first husband served in Vietnam, and the reception veterans of that war received when they returned to the States still leaves her troubled.

"I've always been real tender about how we treat our military," she said. "My husband and I feel like they're our boys. I expect most people feel that way.

"I'm just grateful I have something to offer, something to give. I'm the lucky one," she said.

Anyone with information about the families of Soldiers killed in Iraq, ideas for delivering the portraits or donations for the framing can call Kissel at 464-2269.

House of Heroes needs team captains

Volunteers help out retired vets

Help wanted: 10 heroes needed to lead teams of heroes to help retired heroes. Must be motivated. Call 545-5607.

Fort Benning is looking for 10 team captains and 200 volunteers for next month's annual House of Heroes blitz.

House of Heroes, now in its fifth year, is a local nonprofit organization which annually repairs the homes of aging veterans or their widows. More than 100 veterans have been honored since the project began.

Fort Benning volunteers will field 10 teams this year — more if enough volunteers and funds are available — between Sept. 11 and 23.

Each year, volunteers help a number of local veterans who can no longer keep up with the demands of maintaining their homes — minor repairs, painting, lawn work and such.

House of Heroes is looking for volunteers to help repair and beautify the homes of retired veterans.

A team captain typically meets with the veteran or his family several days before the event to tour the home and compile a list of repairs needed. The team comes in during the citywide House of Heroes campaign in the third week of September. Some teams work week days, some weekends. No experience is necessary, but professional craftsmen and carpenters are also needed.

Fort Benning units are encouraged to participate. School, church and civic groups are also invited.

Janie Pearson, a Fort Benning quality specialist, said there's an urgent need for team captains as the countdown begins for this year's event. A meeting for prospective captains will be held Aug. 17.

For information, call Pearson at 545-5607 or e-mail her at janie.pearson@benning.army.mil.

Pentagon Channel debuts on Fort Benning cable

Programming to bring DoD news to post

Billy Holbrook
Bayonet correspondent

The Fort Benning Public Affairs Office recently introduced the Pentagon Channel to the current programming schedule of Channel 4, USAIC-TV.

Fort Benning residents who subscribe to cable will benefit from this new medium, said Monica Manganaro, deputy public affairs officer:

"Having access to the Pentagon Channel will really expand our programming, and it brings military news to its intended audience," she said.

The Pentagon Channel reaches more than 2 million members of the U.S. armed forces with relevant and up-to-date information.

While tuned in to this programming, the viewer has direct access to broadcasts like live Department of Defense news briefings, military newscasts, interviews with top Defense officials and short stories about the overall work of the military.

Programs include:

Around the Services — A 30-minute daily program that features military news from top Defense officials and the military services from around the world.

Army Newswatch — A bi-weekly, in-depth report on the men and women in the Army.

Studio Five — Weekly interviews and conversations with members of Defense Department leadership about today's top issues.

Army Healthwatch — Health issues concerning military personnel and family members.

"There are so many other channels for viewers to watch, but USAIC TV is the only channel with military news anytime viewers tune in," Manganaro said.

The Pentagon Channel's contribution to the line up offers the viewer a deeper understanding of the workings of all branches of the military, she said. This broad outreach falls right in line with the commitment of the PAO to continue to bring the post the most accurate news pertaining to the Army here and worldwide.

CG: Speaks to media about upcoming changes year. The growth comes in anticipation of a heavy influx of Soldiers — many part of the 30,000-Soldier plus-up the Army approved earlier this year. About 23,000 of those troops will be infantrymen, Freakley said.

"By the first of October, we will be training 2,300 Soldiers above what we were slotted to train at the beginning of this year," he said. "Next year, 7,100 additional Soldiers will be trained here."

But the numbers aren't the only things getting a boost on Sand Hill. The training itself has changed dramatically to meet current, real-world demands.

"Of (the Soldiers trained here), 8,100 brand new Soldiers ... will go off and join infantry units — some of them 27 days from graduation at Sand Hill — will go and join infantry units in combat," Freakley said. "They are trained by our superb drill sergeants who give their all to make sure our Soldiers are the best. They are instilling the Soldier's Creed, written here at Fort Benning but proliferated across the Army, with the notion of always placing the mission first, never accepting defeat, never quitting, never leaving behind a fallen comrade."

The troops are also getting valuable feedback from the units they will soon join, Freakley said.

"If there's an attack in Iraq or Afganistan today, within 48 hours, we have the information here as to what happened, how that attack was perpetrated, and what countermeasures we can take in training to make sure Soldiers are aware on the battlefield for how the enemy is adapting to the U.S. Army's fight," he said.

"The shift that we've made is that Soldiers were once trained at Fort Benning to join their unit. Today, Soldiers at Fort Benning are trained to go to combat and to join their unit in combat."

So, what does all this mean for the tricommunity?

"It means (Soldiers') mothers and fathers and grandparents will come here, they'll participate in our graduations, they'll live in our hotels downtown, they'll probably go out to eat in our restaurants," Freakley said.

And those families may soon be followed by the loved ones of another group of Soldiers new to the Army — lieutenants who will come to Fort Benning to attend the new Basic Officer Leadership Course.

One of only four BOLC sites Armywide, Fort Benning will be the "lead installation" in fielding the new six-week course, which all incoming lieutenants will attend before moving on to their branch-specific courses.

"This is to give all branches a greater insight into leading Soldiers in combat," Freakley said, explaining that Fort Benning is the chief of proponency for the new course.

Meanwhile, the Department of the Army has announced a new brigade combat team will come to Fort Benning.

Freakley acknowledged the BCT is coming, but cautioned the community not to jump to conclusions about whether or not it will stay.

"I will say that, just to set the record completely straight, that brigade is coming," he confirmed. "But its permanent station here is predicated on two things — the outcome of the Base Realignment and Closure Commission, which we have, as an Army, no say in, we just give them information; we don't make the decision. And also, it's predicated on the Department of Defense's stance on the global repositioning of forces."

After World War II, Freakley said, the DoD positioned forces around the world to deal with communism and totalitarianism, to make sure that our forces were in the right places in the Pacific and Europe to respond to a threat.

"As we look to the strategic environment of the next 50 years," he said, "we're doing studies now to make sure that we're strategically postured to respond to the threats to the United States. So, pending the outcomes of those two studies, the final decisions on where brigades are will be made. That means that we could have the brigade, we could not have the brigade, we could have more brigades come to Fort Benning."

But for right now, by October 2006, Fort Benning will be home to about 3,400 additional Soldiers.

The troops will initially be housed in modular barracks on post — most likely in the Harmony Church area, Freakley said.

But the economical gain will be evident for the local communities when the new BCT's Soldiers begin searching for homes, patronizing local businesses and enrolling their children in area schools.

The BCT will also bring construction requirements for local contractors, as well as a growth in the civilian ranks to match those on the military side of the house, another positive opportunity for Columbus residents, Freakley said.

Overall, the financial impact on the tricommunity will be hard to ignore.

"We truly believe that we have about a $1.9 billion impact when all things are rolled up in the community," Freakley said. "We think we'll break $2 billion next year, and by 2006, we could be at about $2.5 billion that we add to the community."

Another benefit to the local economy could come in the next few years to the businesses involved with the fielding of the XM8 rifle. Currently being tested by an "experimental force" of about 150 Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment, Freakley said that, despite errant reports, the XM8's possibilities look promising.

> "As we look to the strategic environment of the next 50 years ... we're doing studies now to make sure that we're postured to respond to the threats to the United States."
> Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley
> Fort Benning commanding general

"We just completed a proponent assessment of the XM8 rifle. It was reported that the XM8 rifle was cancelled — that's not fact," he said. "The money exists in the XM8 program to continue to experiment with the XM8 rifle."

During the next year or so, Freakley said, the unit will continue to refine the rifle to "exactly what Soldiers need."

And if all goes well, several brigades in the Army will one day be issued that rifle.

"We're optimistic about the rifle," he said, "and the money stands behind the rifle to continue experimental development. And the money could be placed behind it to go ahead and purchase that rifle, which is good news for Columbus and the companies involved in that."

The upcoming Air Assault Expeditionary Force Experiment, a "major Army experiment," will also take place at Fort Benning. Freakley didn't go into much detail about the projected experiment, saying only that it will span several years, will involve a partnership with Fort Rucker, Ala., to conduct air assaults between the two installations and will also bring millions of dollars with it.

Despite the whirlwind of activity approaching in the near future, there continue to be murmurs in the community about the July announcement of eight off-limits establishments in Columbus.

"There's been lots of press about off-limits, and I just want to restate that, as the commanding general here, it's my duty, my obligation, to make sure that Soldiers who serve at Fort Benning and their families are not subject to criminal activity that they are unaware of," he said. "We have a due process of law here ... with the Armed Forces Disciplinary Board ... that listens to the data collected about the negative impact of a business off-post — it could be a hotel, a bar, a car dealership ... It's a fairly broad-cast net."

While defending the board's recommendation to place the designated businesses off-limits, Freakley said he was pleased to announce the removal of one venue — Memory Lane — from the list after a July 27 board meeting.

"Memory Lane came in and presented their facts before the board and they have been taken off the off-limits list," he said. "We will continue to allow businesses to have due process; we will also continue to protect Soldiers from criminal activity."

PIE: To help kids with schoolwork

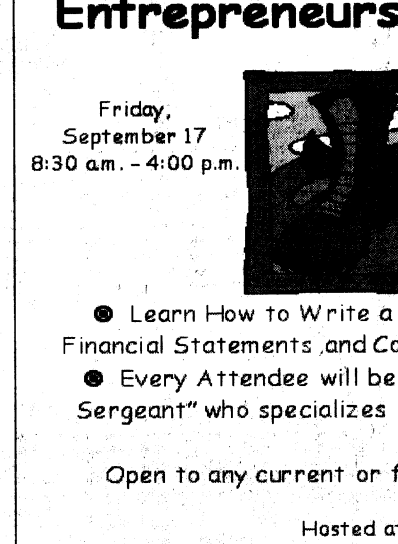
Freakley said.

"Investing in our nation's future," by increasing our involvement in schools, has become part of the "Army culture," he said.

"You know, I was initially mad when I first got involved with an adopt-a-school program back in 1992," Freakley said. "That was at Fort Hood. I didn't think, as an infantryman, I should get involved in schools. I quickly learned the significant impact Soldiers can have as role models in our schools, and I was sold. This is a great program and a great plan for the future of our country."

The Aug. 4 meeting was a long-range planning session between representatives from local schools, Fort Benning units and the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, the program's oversight agent for the state.

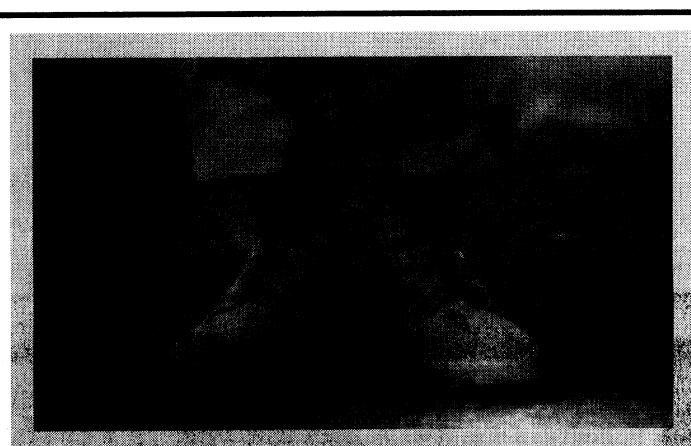
They compared calendars and formulated blueprints for the school year, blueprints that include what Freakley called "steady state contributions" — consistent involvement with mentoring and tutorial programs — with "periodic surges" — field trips, field day and the like.



"What we're not going to do is discipline students. That's not the Soldier's job," he said. "And we're not going to do details, like mowing or painting, unless it's a schoolwide project.

"We're going into our schools to serve as role models, to model the Army values," he said. "We're going in there to serve as tutors and educators, to provide moral support when its needed. We're going there to partner with our children."

Mike Gaymon, president for the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, said the increased partnerships between Fort Benning and Muscogee County schools is a "natural progression."



"We've been joined at the hip from the very beginning," said Gaymon, noting that it was the chamber of commerce that requested a military installation be located here in 1917.

"And look what we got — the best military installation in the world — the best of the best," he said. "And we've got a good PIE program. Our challenge now is to take it from good to great, and I think today may be the beginning."

Pfc. Andrew MacGregor prepares to take a leap of faith during parachute landing fall training Wednesday.

"For me, coming to Airborne School was about getting paid to do what other people pay to do," said Spc. Eugene Watson, A Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment.

For others, like Pfc. Andrew MacGregor and Spc. Eugene Watson, it was about time-honored family tradition.

"I always wanted to be in the 82nd Airborne Division, like my cousin and uncle," Watson said.

Whatever the reasons, from personal pride at having something on their uniform or as a prerequisite for Ranger School, they come to Airborne School in droves.

Many classes start with more than 400 students, said Staff Sgt. James Adkins, school cadre.

But the path to paratrooper pride is lined by those who don't make the cut, he said.

"My first class started with about 410 and we lost twenty in ground week, the first week of training," Adkins said.

A Co. lost between 60 and 70 students on the first day because of physical fitness test failures.

All airborne students must pass the APFT in the 18- to 21-year-old bracket with a score of 60 percent or more in each event and pass additional upper-body strength tests to start the course.

"We lose about half the females over the three-week course," Adkins said.

But for those who meet the standards to begin training, the three weeks they spend learning the ropes of static parachuting Army-style can be overwhelming and exhausting.

Ground week is a fast-paced week providing orientation for the new students and an onslaught of basic skills training, said cadre member Staff Sgt. Joseph Rhone.

The students are familiarized with the harness and other equipment, conduct mock door training, learn static line control and practice parachute landing falls designed to minimize the risk of injury upon impact, Rhone said.

During ground week, students conduct individual jumps from the 34-foot towers, use a lateral drift apparatus to learn how to deal with wind gusts and are taught how to recover their gear after completing a jump.

The second week of school, tower week, is composed of more advanced training and practice in PLFs to maintain the focus on safety, Adkins said.

"Around 90 percent of our casualties are because of improper technique in landing," he said.

"Safety is a big priority for us and we constantly tell them to keep their feet and knees together."

Along with fall training, the students practice mass exits in four-man teams, combat equipment jumps and corrective measures for parachute malfunctions, Adkins said.

If the weather cooperates, the students get to try a drop from the 250-foot towers, which offers a reality check for students eager to move into jump week.

"On the towers, you get a feel for what it is like to land," Rhone said. "It is more realistic than the LDA, but it is nothing like a real jump."

If the students survive the training to this point and haven't fallen out of more than one mandatory run, they move into the final phase of training, jump week.

The students conduct a total of five jumps to earn their parachutist badge.

At least one of those jumps is a night jump, if the weather permits, Adkins said.

Pvt. Patrick Vitagliano said all the sweat poured in south Georgia heat, knee-pounding running and fear factor gut checks are worth it.

"I'm doing this so I get a good duty station," he said. "A good station being anywhere an airborne unit is stationed."

Pvt. Robert Hamilton hangs tough during one of his mass exit jumps from the 34-foot tower at the Airborne School Wednesday.

An airborne student takes a plunge out of the mock door on the 34-foot tower Wednesday morning as part of tower week training. This mass exit exercise prepares students for a tactical jump in which hundreds of paratroopers deploy in rapid succession.

Pfc. Andrew MacGregor learns how sudden impact with the ground feels during parachute fall training Wednesday. PFT is designed to teach airborne students different ways to control their falls to minimize the risk of injury. Cadre said PFT is one of the most important things the students learn. Improper landings cause the most common jump injuries.

Hand-held digital assistance hits battlefield

Device helps cut through 'fog of war'

Jennifer Sowell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Technology that has been available on Soldiers' vehicles since the early '90s is now being designed into a portable device.

The Force XXI Battle Command Brigade and Below Commander's Digital Assistant, known as the FBCB2-CDA, can be used all over the battlefield to track Soldiers, map the battlefield and send digital messages.

"A unit with the 18th Airborne Corps is currently training with the latest generation of the device," said Lt. Col. David Gallop, product manager for Land Warrior.

"They will deploy in the fall with about a thousand devices to gather information on insurgents."

User evaluations will be used to make adjustments and develop the next generation of the device, which will become common software for all land forces within the Department of Defense.

"Until recently there was no powerful, affordable and portable processing abilities available," Gallop said.

"This new technology puts battle command in the Soldier's hand."

The device is a portable, digital information system designed to give commanders, leaders and Soldiers across the battlefield improved command and control capabilities, data sharing and enhanced situational awareness.

The lightweight, hand-held device operates on an Intel X-scale 500+ MHz processor and uses satellites for over-the-horizon communications, an integrated global positioning system and Blue Force Tracking to map the battlefield.

Each device is networked so all Soldiers are working with the same information.

Soldiers use drop-down menus on a color, LCD touch screen operating on a Microsoft Windows system for compact devices to use the many features of the device.

These features include sending digital and voice messages and reports, requesting support at specific locations, mapping the area with locations of friendly forces, and using information provided by other Soldiers in the system to plan movements and operations.

> "Until recently, there was no powerful, affordable and portable processing abilities available. This new technology puts battle command in the Soldier's hand ... The device allows Soldiers to get messages across with speed and precision. It cuts the fog of war."
> Lt. Col. David Gallop
> Land Warrior product manager

The device can be cleared quickly by the Soldier or remotely in case it falls into enemy hands.

The FBCB2-CDA is being incorporated onto the battlefield through a spiral development process.

A handful of systems were developed from the original idea in September 2002, and through feedback from testing and field use, changes were made over the course of the last two years, Gallop said.

The process allows an improved product to be developed at less cost, in less time and with higher levels of satisfaction from the Soldiers who use the device because their feedback prompted changes and improvements along the way, he said.

"Every Soldier is a sensor," said Lt. Col. Steve Iwicki, deputy director for Actionable Intelligence, G2. "Those who observe first and see first on the ground must pass information up quickly for analysis."

"The device allows Soldiers to get messages across with speed and precision. It helps cut through the fog of war," Gallop said.

The FBCB2-CDA helps Soldiers on the battlefield share information and construct an overall picture of the battlefield.

For example, a Soldier spots a sniper in his area. The location of the enemy can be entered into the CDA, immediately accessible to all Soldiers with the device. Other Soldiers are now aware of the enemy and can avoid the area or eliminate the threat.

"The Soldier will be connected to a network for the first time, with the ability to turn local knowledge into global knowledge," Iwicki said.

"This helps commanders visualize how people and events are linked."

All applications of the device serve to gather intelligence and save Soldiers' lives, Gallop said.

"We want to get information out, but we want to get it right, so it doesn't put Soldiers at risk," Gallop said.

"This device does the job, and does it safely for the Soldiers."

Careers take flight in Army

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Attention to detail is a necessity for nearly every job in the Army, but for some Soldiers, it is a life-or-death matter.

A prime example of one military specialty that requires Soldiers to be absolutely sure they don't make any mistakes is a 15T.

A 15T is designated as a helicopter mechanic, but for some troops, like Pfc. Brandon Marchesseault, of Flight Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, their duties expand and they take on the added responsibilities of crew chiefs.

Marchesseault said he usually works 12-hour shifts and spends 75 percent of the day maintaining the aircraft to ensure it is up to par. On days when the helicopters don't fly, his entire shift is devoted to maintenance.

He said there are literally hundreds of parts on a helicopter that need to be checked and rechecked every day.

Spc. Julio Manso, Marchesseault's team leader, said they inspect the helicopters two or three times a day, with each inspection lasting from three to six hours.

Marchesseault said everything has to be perfect on a helicopter before it takes off because, "We don't have air brakes."

"As we say ... it better be right because we can't pull over," he said.

"There is no screwing up in this," Manso said. "If you screw up, (people die)."

Once the helicopter has been inspected, repaired, reinspected and inspected again, the team leader performs a foreign object inspection, looking for tools or other objects that may have been left behind.

If everything checks out, they fuel it, and it's ready to fly.

That's when a helicopter mechanic makes the transition to crew chief.

Marchesseault, who just logged 300 hours of flight time, said the primary job of a crew chief is to watch the helicopter and make sure it doesn't hit anything while in flight.

"A perfect crew chief can talk a blind pilot through flying the aircraft," Marchesseault said. "We can do everything but fly it."

But when there are passengers on the aircraft, they become the priority of the crew chief.

It is the crew chief's job to make sure each passenger is strapped in and everybody is safe, even if that means telling someone of senior rank what to do.

"On the hangar floor, rank is an issue, but when we are in the air ... a PFC has as much authority as a general," Marchesseault said.

Another way crew chiefs take care of their passengers and pilots is by maintaining lifesaving skills. Each person in the crew must be a certified combat lifesaver.

"This is really fast-paced," Manso said. "The maintenance mission is huge, but we also support the Rangers, WHINSEC and Airborne School."

Despite the hard work, these Soldiers really seem to enjoy their jobs and take great pride in their work.

"We get kind of a bond with the aircraft," Marchesseault said as he looked over at the helicopter with his name painted on the door.

"We take a lot of pride in them, and I try to keep mine a little cleaner than the others. But it's not about who has the cleanest, or whose is better. We just fly together and take care of each other," he said.

Although Marchesseault did get a certain gleam in his eye when he mentioned his helicopter has the most powerful engine of all the Blackhawks in the hangar.

Policy: To save water

planted sod and ornamental shrubs and flowers.

"The increased competition for water from the Chattahoochee River and its tributaries is causing a strain on the watershed," he said. "You have to be aware that there are other communities downstream that depend on the water system and have just as much right to its resources."

Atlanta is one of the biggest drains on the system's supply and Wilkins said there is no end in sight.

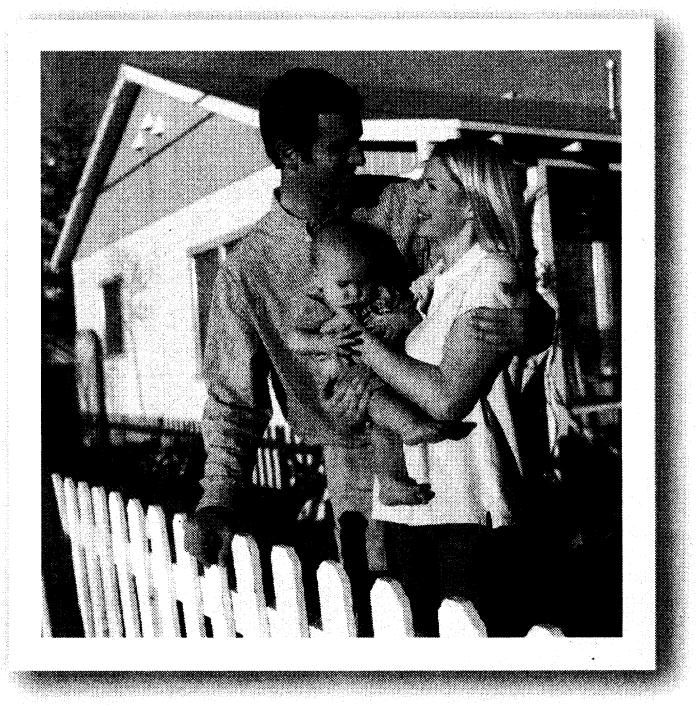
"Atlanta keeps on growing, but the river doesn't," he said.

Fort Benning draws its water from Upatoi Creek, a tributary of the Chattahoochee River.

The average flow of the creek is about 300 million gallons per day and the post is permitted to draw an average of 10 million gallons a day.

The actual use averages out to about 8 to 9 million gallons per day, but Wilkins said the policy applies regardless.

The Federal Safe Drinking Water Act requires all federal agencies, including military installations, to comply with state water conservation guidelines.



Wilkins said that even though there is not a drought currently, the state and post has a drought contingency plan which imposes even stricter water conservation guidelines, if necessary.

Locally, a drought is declared if the waterflow of Upatoi Creek drops below 96 million gallons per day.

For more information about the policy, visit the Georgia Department of Natural Resources water conservation Web site at www.conservewatergeorgia.net.

National Security Personnel System Update

Fort Benning commanders, directors, and supervisors of civilian employees should attend the NSPS update at 1:30 p.m. Aug. 27 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 6. The briefing covers the most important change to the civilian personnel system in decades.

AVID instructor named Teacher of the Year

Teacher, program touts individual effort

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Faith Middle School AVID teacher Angie Cotton was named Teacher of the Year for the Georgia-Alabama School District.

The Colorado native, who taught the highly acclaimed Advancement Via Individual Determination program last year in its maiden year at Faith, is a relative newcomer to the school, now in her third year. But her fresh approach to teaching and her dogged determination to see her students succeed caught the eye of Lorri Blanchard early on. Blanchard, last year's Teacher of the Year, nominated Cotton for the title.

"Her work ethic is phenomenal," Blanchard said. "She works untold hours to accommodate her students. It's awesome."

The AVID program targets "middle" students, those who show potential and want to attend college but need additional support and skills to get there. The students are typically the first in their families to attend college.

Cotton

That's something Cotton can relate to. The youngest of four children of a retired Air Force master sergeant, Cotton was the first in her family to earn a degree. The challenges she faced getting there make her a poster child for "individual determination," though Cotton credits her parents with her success.

"My dad taught me to be reflective, to look back and evaluate and learn from my mistakes," she said. "My mom taught me never to quit."

In fact, Cotton had every excuse to fail. As a single, teenage mom, she could've given up her dream of teaching, but that, she said, was never an option.

"I gave swimming lessons in high school, and I was successful with this kid who didn't want to learn," she said. "That was it. I knew I wanted to teach."

Cotton earned her teaching degree and became a day care director for a while. A decade ago, with a master's degree in education, she began teaching in Colorado, where she was stationed with her husband, Sgt. 1st Class David Cotton, and her four children.

Cotton doesn't talk about her early pregnancy with her students, but she believes she's "very open" with them, and it's important they realize she's made mistakes and moved on.

"I do share a lot about my personal experiences. I try to be real," she said. "They know when my own children are having a rough go of it, and they know when I've made not-so-great decisions. In AVID, and with any students, I think it's important that they know they can get past their mistakes — they can take responsibility and fix them."

A profound experience her freshman year in high school taught Cotton the value of honesty and communication in the classroom. A strong student, she tried in vain to get along with a disagreeable English teacher who seemed

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Assistant Editor's Note (that's me, by the way): Although this column is supposed to suggest fun places to go and neat things to do, I reserve the right to exploit my weekly space in the paper to peddle movies that I like so that I am not completely alone in rehashing them after the fact. That said ...

I'm no stranger to telling jokes no one else gets. In fact, I'm pretty proficient at it by now. But the past few weeks, it's become too much.

And so it has come to this — I must take up 20 inches in our weekly paper to highly encourage (i.e. beg) you to go see Napoleon Dynamite.

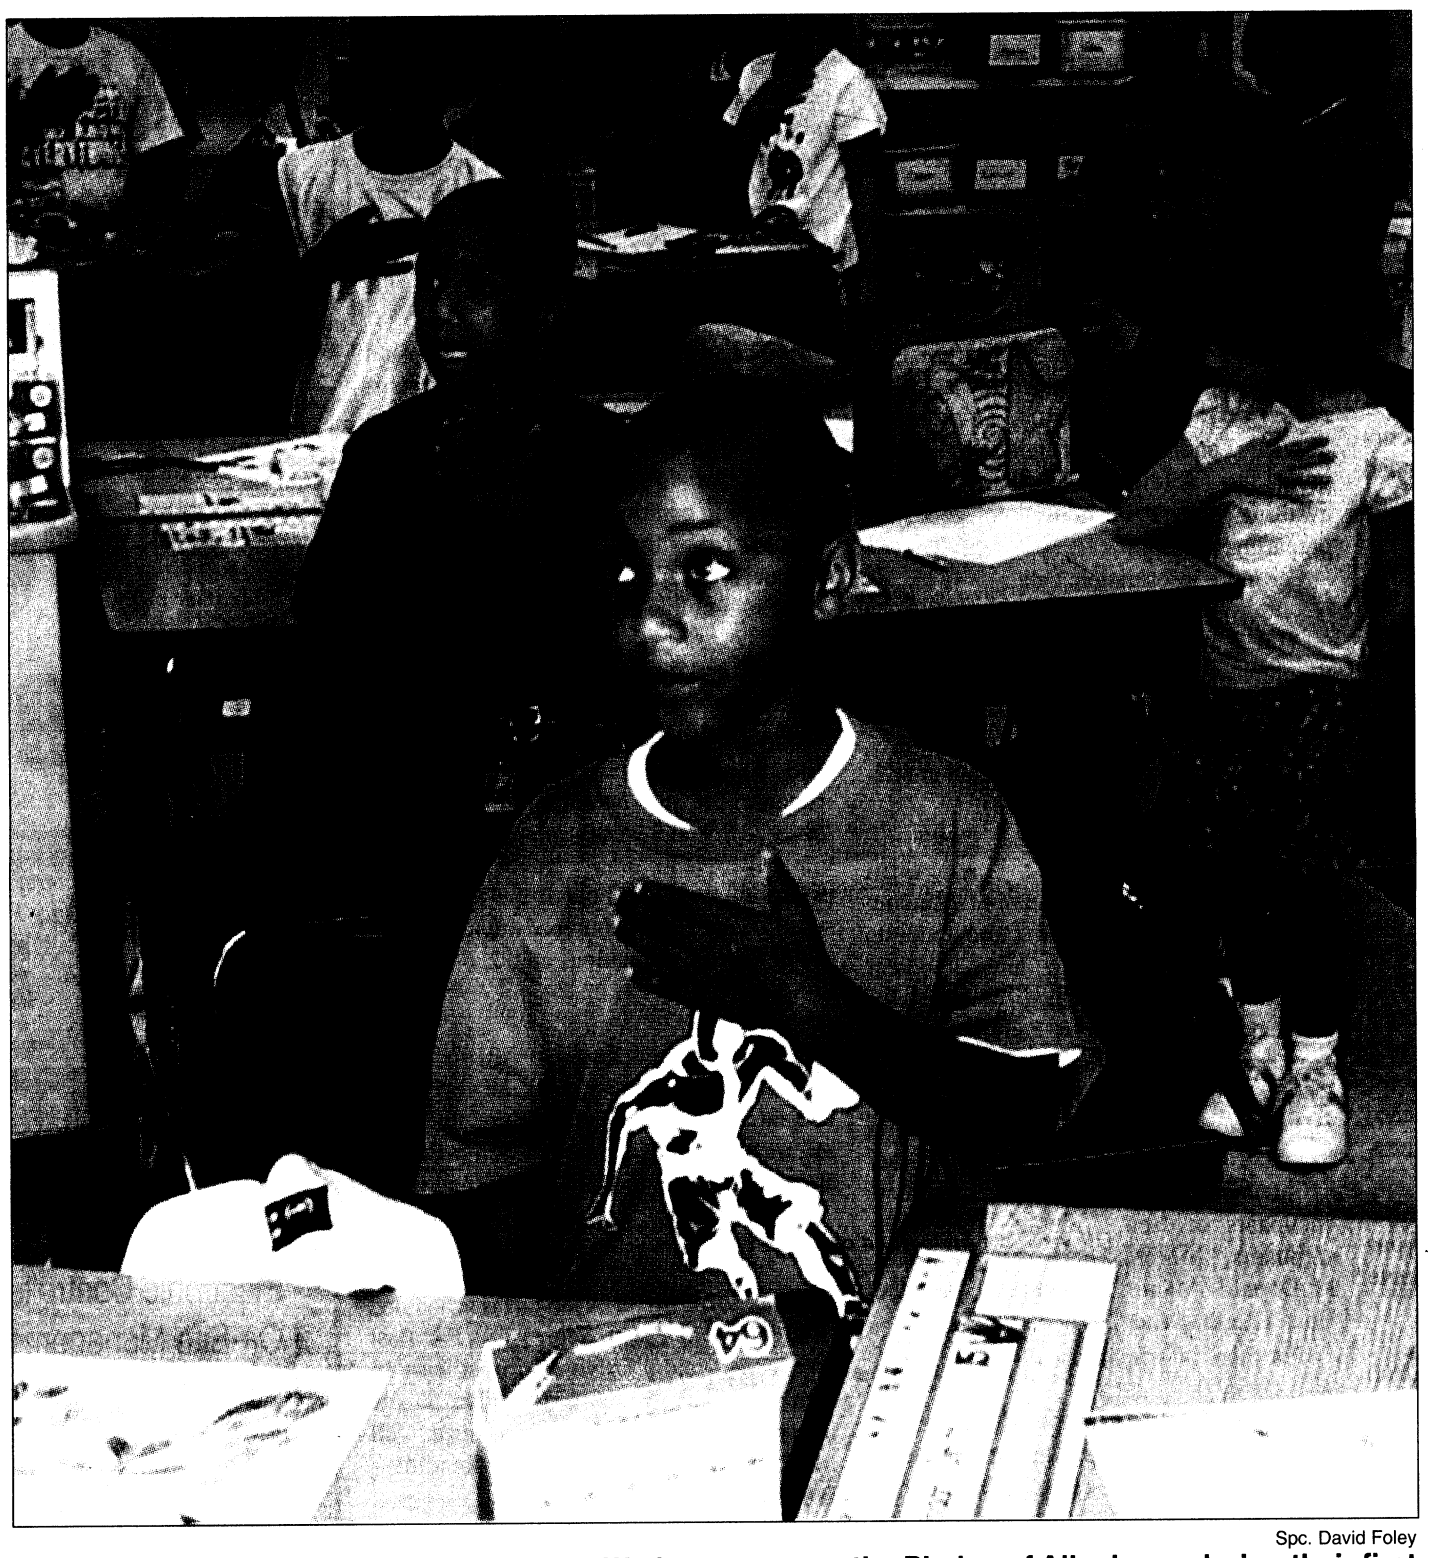
If just one person reads this and goes to see this movie, and it saves me just one blank stare when I borrow a hilarious one-liner from this most classic of films, my life's work will be complete.

OK, so maybe it's not that dramatic, but still — I can't believe how hard it is to find someone who's heard of, let alone seen this movie.

I went to see it about three weeks ago with a friend of mine, and we both laughed the entire way through, taking turns bursting out in that really embarrassing guffaw not meant for public places. (Thank God theaters are dark, right?)

We were in stitches from the opening scene all the way through the credits. And it's not your typical, Van Wilder, Scary Movie, Not Another Teen Movie brand of funny either.

In fact, I have no idea why I found it so amusing, but hey, who cares?! I haven't laughed that hard at a movie ... ever.



In case you are one of the clueless masses out there, Napoleon Dynamite centers on our hero, an uber geek and the movie's namesake.

Napoleon, a true connassieur of nerdom, is Preston, Idaho's most eccentric citizen. Complete with "sweet" moon boots, a notebook full of mythical beast drawings and a Pegasus Xing sign on his bedroom door, it's hard not to love and yet laugh at this wholly entertaining character.

And his costars are just as classic. There's Kip, his 30-something brother — a cage fighter in training, mind you, who spends his days roaming Internet chat rooms in search of his true love. And Uncle Rico, a sadly sleazy man, who wants nothing more in life than to

498th FRG sends summer fun

Hold 'fun'd raiser for hot Soldiers

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

They're gone, but they're certainly not forgotten.

Soldiers of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) have been deployed to Iraq since March 4, braving the heat and sand as they perform their MEDEVAC mission.

So their families decided to do something for them, and the "Just Add Sand" project was born.

To inject a bit of fun for the Soldiers, the family readiness group decided to collect summer fun items for the troops to enjoy in their off-duty time.

"The guys in the Blackhawks have no (air conditioning)," said Leslie McDowell, wife of company commander Maj. Terrance McDowell.

"It's 140 degrees in the cockpit."

When McDowell contacted Toys R Us to see if the store might donate items, she was offered an even better deal.

The FRG set up a table in the Columbus Park Crossing store Aug. 7 and accepted donations for the Soldiers.

McDowell created a "gift" registry of items for the Soldiers and had fun in the process.

"I went through the store thinking, 'This would be neat,'" she said. "And before I knew it, I had 198 things on the list."

And there was something on that list to appeal to any Soldier, no matter what age. McDowell's registry included everything from water guns and DVDs to baby wipes and video games.

The store gave them everything they needed to set up outside, including a tent so the children could sit in the shade, and soon, the fund-raising effort was a competition between the kids and the adults.

"We made a deal for whoever raises the most money," said Brent McDowell, 6.

"The winners get ice cream and the losers have to watch."

Brent, his sister Lauren, 10, and Keaki Bryant, 11, ended up the winners after overcoming their initial shyness at approaching strangers for donations to support their dads.

The kids out-raised their moms by a good bit, helped by one-month-old Janessa Williams, daughter of Staff Sgt. Bryant A. Williams, a flight medic. Janessa served as a reminder of what the Soldiers are missing as they serve overseas.

At the end of the day, the kids went shopping in the store to add to the pile of items already donated by shoppers.

McDowell said the Fort Benning UPS store offered to help with the shipping. With an early donation of several sno-cone makers, the packages headed to Iraq were going to be big.

Santa's Castle seeks toys

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Christmas may be a few months off yet, but the folks at Santa's Castle are wasting no time getting into the holiday spirit.

In fact, chairman Chris Ryan and her "helpers" have been shopping for toys to fill their shelves since January.

Santa's Castle provides toys to Fort Benning parents whose financial difficulties make it hard for them to buy Christmas gifts for their children.

Last year, the nonprofit organization helped 478 Fort Benning families, Ryan said, providing gifts for 1,249 children who otherwise might not have had gifts waiting for them Christmas morning.

The volunteer program provides parents approved through an application process an appointment to "shop" for their children. They select a stocking stuffer, two medium-sized gifts and a large gift for each child — all completely free, she said.

Although Ryan and her eight fellow board members have been shopping toy stores, loading their carts, she said the organization still needs help to reach its goal for this year — to help 500 families.

And with a gift list that covers infants to 18-year-old dependents — everything from bouncers and baby monitors to Barbies, action figures, stereos and games — now is the time to pitch in.

The organization accepts monetary donations, as well as toys — new toys, that is.

"This is a wonderful way for the families of Fort Benning to give back to each other," Ryan said.

Not to mention that certain something you get when you know you're doing something to help someone else.

"When I'm out shopping (for toys), I just get so happy — it's just overwhelming to know that we're helping families who don't have the means (to buy gifts for their children)."

Meanwhile, unit first sergeants and command sergeants major can do their part to help Soldiers in their units take advantage of Santa's Castle.

There will be a briefing for sergeants major and first sergeants at 10 and 11 a.m. Sept. 9 at Santa's Castle to review guidelines and

Preschool under new management

Day care provides classes beginning Sept. 7

Spc. Natalie P. Loucks
3rd Brigade PAO

Fort Benning's Patch Preschool is under new management.

The school now falls under Child and Youth Services, said Jennifer Williams, program operations specialist at CYS.

The school's change from a privately owned organization to Army operation is due to the difference in funding for the school, Williams said.

The school will be financed through CYS with enrollment fees paid by the parents, depending on how many children are enrolling.

The 37-year-old preschool completed its last day as a privately owned organization in May 2004. Classes will start under new ownership Sept. 7.

Parents who have already enrolled their children in Patch Preschool under the old program are guaranteed a slot for the upcoming school year, Williams said.

Changes to the school will include more school supplies and equipment, Williams said. There will also be a furnished playground.

"We are not taking anything away from what was there. Hopefully, we'll be able to add (items) like supplies and materials," she said.

Patch Preschool is a part-day child-care facility geared toward parents who do not require full-day care, Williams said. The school operates from 9 a.m to noon.

Parents have the option to enroll their children in a two-day, three-day or five-day program, depending on their child-care needs.

Children who are eligible for the program must be 3 years old by Sept. 1 and not older than 4.

Parents who have already enrolled their children in the preschool will be contacted by CYS within two weeks concerning school orientation dates, said Judy Cobb, Outreach Services Director for CYS.

Parents need to bring proof of their income to the orientation where they will also sign a contract for the program.

To register with Patch Preschool, the child's shot records and an emergency point of contact telephone number must be provided.

Enrollment fees for the program are $15 for one child, $30 for two children and $35 for three or more children.

There are spots available for enrollment; however, positions are filling up quickly, Williams said.

For more information about enrollment and orientation, call the CYS Central Registration Office at 545-2079 or Williams at 545-6811, or visit the registration office in Building 359.

Pet care in regulations

Infractions jeopardize housing rights

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

A single Soldier living in family quarters recently went on leave and left her pet dog in the care of another Soldier. That Soldier failed to provide adequate care for the animal and the owner returned to find it dead.

"Here at Fort Benning, we have a lot of tenants who own a lot of animals," said acting Community Life NCOIC Master Sgt. Vidal Rivera. "The caring for of these pets is crucial."

Community Life personnel routinely respond to calls regarding the neglect, abuse or irresponsible care of animals all over post, he said. And owners don't realize they can get in serious trouble for those infractions.

For minor violations, a Fort Benning Form 7 is left at the home documenting the nature of the offense and dictating how much time the occupant has to correct the problem before a re-inspection is conducted, Rivera said.

With the second offense, the Soldier's chain of command is notified, and if the corrections are still not made or the infraction is repeated, the Soldier and commander appear before either the garrison command sergeant major or garrison commander, who then decide upon a course of action.

"A lot of Soldiers don't realize that this is a big deal and they can be kicked out of housing for not maintaining the standards," Rivera said.

U. S. Army Infantry Center regulation 210-5 governs the conduct of personnel in government quarters and the care of animals.

It also authorizes the garrison commander to evict residents for failure to meet the standards set forth in that regulation and the family housing handbook.

Animals must be properly secured to a permanent fixture in such a way that they do not pose a danger to passers-by when outside, he said. And they must be provided shelter, adequate food and water and humane living conditions.

"Some tenants think they can do whatever they want," Rivera said. "We put out information regarding the regulations on this and other subjects at the newcomer's briefing, and they turn around and ignore it."

Veterinary technician T.J. Martin said some of the biggest reasons so many animals end up in the stray kennels at the post veterinary treatment facility are the failure of owners to have their animals microchipped, which is directed by post regulations, the constant reproduction of animals whose owner's haven't had them spayed or neutered and instances where the owner moved and just left an animal behind.

For information about housing regulations and pet complaints, call Community Life at 545-2910.

Tour arms newcomers with knowledge

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet correspondent

Coming to a new place can be difficult. Just finding your way from point A to point B can be a daunting task. But, for newcomers to Fort Benning, there's help.

The Newcomer Orientation and Tour, sponsored by the Relocation Readiness Program, is a daylong orientation designed to welcome new arrivals, especially spouses, to Fort Benning.

It includes a tour and information to ease the transition and familiarize newcomers with the area, said Jenny Sposato, Relocation Readiness Program manager.

Representatives from the post's dental and medical clinics, Child and Youth Services, Chaplains Office, Non-Appropriated Funds employment and Relocation Readiness Program brief the participants.

"After the briefings, we take them on a bus around Fort Benning and show them the points of interest, like the Infantry School, the theater and the library. Then we go to the Commissary for lunch," Sposato said.

The meal is free and is provided courtesy of the Commissary. During the lunch, goodie bags, filled with items donated from the various vendors, and door prizes are given out.

After lunch, the Columbus downtown area is next on the tour.

"We do the historic district and the Naval Museum," Sposato said. "Then we go to the Columbus Museum and head back home. We get back at 2:30 p.m."

The orientation not only offers newcomers an opportunity to see the area, but also allows them a chance to talk to others new to the area and find out ways to get involved in the community.

Shannon Brennon attended the orientation in October and has been volunteering and attending every meeting since.

"I had been here about two months," Brennon said. "I just wanted to get more information about the post, where everything was located and the services available. They covered a lot of topics and did a good overview."

Brennon, who came with her husband from Fort Lewis, Wash., had been to a similar briefing there. She said was a little intimidated by Fort Benning's size and thought the tour of post, given during the orientation, was beneficial.

"If you are brand new to the area I think it is helpful because Fort Benning is a little more spread out and the tour helps you get oriented with the installation," she said.

Regardless of living on- or off-post, the tour helps newcomers become familiar with the area, Brennon said.

The next Newcomer Orientation is at 8:30 a.m. today in the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359. There will also be an orientation and tour on Sept. 10.

OSC sponsors Super Sign-Up Aug. 19

Event provides all-ranks community resource

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Come one, come all — and don't let the fact that it's at the Officers' Club put you off. The Officers' Spouses' Club Super Sign-Up scheduled for 6 to 8 p.m. Aug. 19 will have something for everyone.

"It's a total community resource," said Pam Brummett, event coordinator. "Everyone on post should use it. If you're new, it's great. If not, you may find that you've missed something."

This particular community resource is nothing new. It's been held for at least the past six years, providing a wealth of information for anyone who attends.

This year, as before, has much to offer, Brummett said, whether officer or enlisted. And her committee has been working on the event all summer, reserving spaces in the Supper Club for the 80 organizations and vendors who have committed to attend. That's up from 62 from last year.

While both the Officers' and Enlisted Spouses' Clubs will be taking membership applications at the event, Brummett is most enthusiastic about everything else represented at the Super Sign-up.

Among those are the Directorate of Community Activities, Army Community Service, Child and Youth Services, the Follow Me Golf Course, Boy and Girl Scouts, Santa's Castle and Protestant and Catholic Women of the Chapel groups.

The tricommunity is also represented by Columbus State University, the Springer Opera House, Columbus Museum, Columbus Symphony, Habitat for Humanity and Lowe's, Michael's and A.C. Moore.

Brummett said anyone looking for local consultants for a number of home-based businesses can find what they need at the sign-up as well.

But the one thing she's most excited about, besides the Tahitian Noni Juice table, is the Self Defense America booth.

"I've taken their seminars once before," she said. "They're geared mostly toward women and teach you the things you need to know to defend yourself."

And those who attend the event may not walk away empty-handed.

"We have a lot of things to give away — some wonderful door prizes," Brummett said.

The prizes range from some deluxe annual Callaway Gardens memberships to gift certificates from restaurants and dry cleaners.

For more information, call Brummett at 682-8822.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What is a promissory note?

A: A promissory note is simply a written promise to pay.

There are times when two people want to do business together, but they don't want to draft a formal contract between them. A "promissory note" may be an alternative in such cases.

Let's use an example: If Alex wanted to sell his used motorcycle to Brad, a promissory note might be used to spell out the terms of the agreement.

In the promissory note, Brad might promise to pay Alex $2,000 as follows: $500 down, and $250 a month for the next six months.

Through a promissory note, the item to be sold, the amount to be paid, and the terms for payment can be set out. It can be as simple as writing out a paragraph or two, then having the person promising to pay sign it.

Although a promissory note is less formal than a contract, it cannot be too informal. It is not sufficient to say something like "I will pay as much as I can afford" or "I will make payments once I graduate and find a job." As in all legal documents, the terms of a promissory note should be clear and complete.

A signed and notarized promissory note does not guarantee payment, however. Under current Army regulations, if a Soldier disputes a debt (even with a promissory note), the only action that can be taken to enforce the debt is through civilian court. If the party who promised to pay is a civilian, taking the matter to court is the only real option.

Promissory notes work well when they work, but they are not always trouble-free.

The best preventive law advice is to transfer as much money as the purchaser can afford upon sale, and rely as little as possible on a promissory note.

For more information on this subject, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Sergeants major raise funds for POW/MIA memorials

Monuments will be placed in three spots

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Has the tricommunity forgotten about our nation's prisoners of war and those missing in action?

Harley.

I mean hardly.

When the folks at Chattahochee Harley-Davidson heard about the Sergeants Major Association's plans to erect three POW/MIA monuments locally, they offered to host a kick-off fundraiser.

"We do a lot of business with Soldiers," said Jennifer Miller, the store's events coordinator. "In fact, a lot of our (staff) is former military or their parents were. We've always tried to have a good relationship with Fort Benning to show we care about our Soldiers."

Saturday's bike show netted more than $200, said Sgt. Maj. Jan Stegeman, president of the Sergeants Major Association and operations sergeant major for the 11th Infantry Regiment.

That's a long way from the $54,000 it'll take to erect the three identical 8-foot black marble monuments, each topped with a bronze eagle, but it's a fair start when added to the $30,000 donated by Jay Auto Group and the Science Applications International Corporation, Stegeman said.

"We've got a great start. The show generated a lot of interest. A lot of people came out and stopped to ask questions and sign up for the ride," he said.

The ride is the Sept. 18 tricommunity POW/MIA Freedom Motorcycle Ride. Proceeds from the ride will help pay for the monuments, which will be placed at three sites — Fort Benning, Phenix City and Columbus, near the Government Center.

The event will begin at 6:30 a.m. with a kick-off ceremony at Golden Park. The ride, which begins at 9 a.m., will take motorcyclists from the park to Fort Benning, to Phenix City and on to the Government Center for the dedication of the first monument.

Stegeman said the second monument will likely be dedicated next year. The ride, he said, will be an annual event the third Saturday of September.

"Columbus and Phenix City have always supported (Fort Benning) in everything, and this is no different," Stegeman said, "Except we're giving something back to them. It's our way of showing our appreciation and remembering the men and women who went missing or were imprisoned while serving in the (military.)"

The fee for pre-registration is $15, $18 on the morning of the event.

determined to flunk her.

"Oh, she was a bear. It was an awful experience," Cotton said. "Then, come to find out, she'd been diagnosed with cancer. Once we talked about it, and she realized how she was treating us, and I realized what she was going through, it was a whole different world.

"I use that story to make a point: sometimes there are things going on in someone's life you don't know about," Cotton said. "You don't know where people come from or where they're going, but you can make a difference — you can make them or break them."

And Cotton was obviously talking about her students here.

"It's all about them, being here for the kids," she said.

"We're just facilitators. We have to take them from where they are to what they can become, and that's a very individual thing."

GOH: Napoleon flick is 'dy-no-mite'

relive his 1982 football glory days, when he warmed the bench, but "could have gone pro."

And who could forget Pedro, whose "skills" include being the only kid in Preston's high school who can grow a mustache, which, of course, makes him a prime candidate to run against the most popular girl in school for class president.

Then, there's Deb, who is beyond adorable with a pony-tail sticking out the side of her head and fashion sense comparable to our good friend, Napoleon's.

I won't lie. The movie doesn't have much in the way of a plot. And don't hold your breath for the climax — there isn't one.

But it didn't seem to matter. For whatever reason, the movie fared just fine without all that jazz.

And its blending of period culture — bad 60s furnishings, 70s thrift store finds, 80s fashion sense and 90s technology — creates the sense that the struggle to fit in transcends time.

Come to think of it, maybe that's why it's so easy to enjoy Napoleon — because even if you weren't that kid in high school, you've been the oddball at least once in your life. (Or the guy slamming him into the locker, but whatever ...)

So, this weekend, while you're sitting around, pondering how to make the most of your valuable time, give it up and go see this movie.

And when you get to the scene with Napoleon, a steak and a bicycle, think of me and say a little thank you (to me, of course) for talking you into going to see this cult classic-in-the-making.

Napoleon is gracing the screen at the Carmike 15 up in Columbus Park Crossing (you know, off exit 10, by the Barnes & Noble, Toys R Us and all that) and is rated PG.

And please, people, don't be scared during the previews, which are all for children's movies a guy probably wouldn't (at least, shouldn't) be caught dead at without the excuse of a child or a girl he's trying to date. Just sink in your chair a little until they're over, make sure no one saw you, and then enjoy the show.

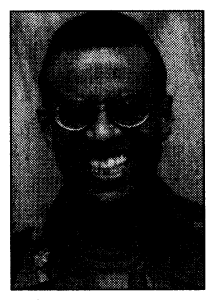
Army culture one of warriorism, ethics

Doing what's right more than just theory

Chaplain (Maj.) Ken Revell
11th Infantry Regiment

The Army engages in an all-important and complex task. That task is twofold.

The first is to raise up a fighting machine willing to defend this country against all enemies foreign and domestic.



The second task is connected with the first to instill in the fighting machine the necessary checks and balances to do what is right.

Our role as public servants, our commitment to ultimate citizenship and the fact that we have been entrusted with the charge of defending this nation implies that we must not only be warriors but men and women of principle. These principles can rightly be called ethics.

Doing what is morally and legally right is more than a theory. The entire command climate and operational tempo depends on it.

Trustworthy people building trusting environments is essential not only to mission accomplishment but also to take care of people who have been charged with accomplishing that mission.

REFLECTIONS

Revell

When the checks and balances are out of step, the regimented society becomes the "oppressive society." Communication lines become strangled and clogged. Rules and rank become tools of manipulation and entrapment. Morale degenerates into festering resentment, and the spirit of the corps becomes a show-and-tell statement rather than an integrated reality.

When the warrior says, "I am a warrior and ethical considerations are of no concern to me," he or she is actually saying that his or her pattern of behavior, no matter how out of step it is with Army values, has little impact upon those who look to him or her for leadership.

This person obviously lives under the illusion they can have true loyalty without manifest personal integrity.

When the ethicist says, "I am into ethics and warriorism does not concern me," what he is saying is that battlefield mentality is unimportant. This position can be deadly.

The failure to train a person how to survive on the battlefield is itself unethical.

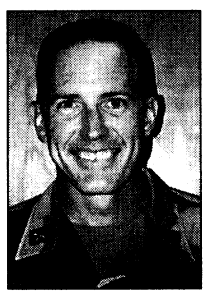
What is the solution? The solution is that the powerful person must also become the ethical person. The leaders who shape the hearts and mind of Soldiers must also have that Soldier's best interest at heart.

If we are to maintain a great Army, there must be a marriage between power and ethics, belief and practice, discipline and fairness, control and flexibility and sensitivity and firmness.

Only in this context can we have the spirit of the corps. When we fail to combine warriorism and ethics in Army life, nothing else makes much sense.

Step two in 'Relationship JMPI' involves developing trust

Avoid malfunctions when beginning relationships



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

"Diagonal backstrap improperly routed!" I shouted to the blackhat as he glared over my shoulder.

"Correct, Sergeant Hawkins," the jumpmaster instructor said. "You have successfully identified a major malfunction!"

Thanks to exceptional Army training, I was able to catch what could have turned an exhilarating and fun parachute jump into a disastrous and fatal endeavor.

Last week I talked about how getting into a relationship can be a lot like parachuting — it pays to "check out" your rigging before you decide to take the big jump.

Hawkins

In fact, knowing a few key pieces of information can very well be the difference between an ecstatic, wonderful ride and a tragic, fatal "burn-in."

So doesn't it make sense (just like the Army jumpmaster does a good JMPI) for you to do a "relationship JMPI" as you begin to "put on" a new relationship?

That's why we say the five steps we're talking about for these five weeks in August are, "what every parent ought to teach their child and what every single's gotta know!"

Step One — Get to know him or her. The first step we discussed last week in the "relationship JMPI," and the first of the five dimensions you must get "inspected" is to make sure that you are truly getting to know the person with whom you're thinking of taking a leap.

What do you need to know? How about what fun is and is not for that person, what his or her family background is like and what his or her faith factor is?

Step Two — Begin to trust him or her. Trust only develops with somebody you know, right? The more you know them, the more you can trust them, correct?

Do you see how "dangerous" it could be in a relationship to begin to trust someone deeply that you know only shallowly? Happens all the time, doesn't it — and that's when "malfunctions" occur.

Well, what do you need to look for when you are developing trust in someone? I think there are two things that are worth keeping your eye on if you really want to develop and measure your level of trust with a potential partner.

First, you want to focus on that individual's character. Trust only happens as you see a person's true character revealed.

Watch closely when the chips are down in the day-to-day interactions you have. Is this a person of character, or do they come up short?

The second thing you need to see to develop trust is competence. Do you not only like and believe in who this person is, but how they do what they do, too?

Character is about being the right person; competence is about doing the right things. You need both to make sure a relationship flies and not dies!

That's Step Two — more next week! Meanwhile, join me for our series on "How to Avoid Marrying a Jerk — What Every Parent Ought To Teach and What Every Single's Gotta Know" at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel, at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill.

Archery shoot visits Uchee Creek

ASA Classic features adult, youth events

Melissa House

Melissa House

Jerry Watters, Matthews Bow pro staff, gives pointers to Kelcie Atwell, center, and Chelsea Nolan at the Family Fun Shoot Aug. 7. The Fort Smith, Ark., girls were in Columbus for a softball tournament, but spent a few minutes learning to shoot between games.

The woods at Uchee Creek were full of bears, wolves, turkeys and deer Aug. 5 to Sunday — 3-D targets, that is — as more than 1,300 archers converged for the Archery Shooters Association Classic.

The ASA runs a series of seven 3-D archery events between February and August. The 2004 season started with a Pro-Am event in Florida and ended with the Classic.

And among the 1,300 were the future of competitive archery — 51 boys and girls ages 6 to 11 competing in the Eagle and Junior Eagle categories.

Ginger Hopwood, ASA's youth director, manages the events for youths 15 and younger. She said she's seen steady growth in the program each year.

"ASA's goal is to provide a family environment," Hopwood said. "We want to offer archery events conducive to families, and children in particular."

And a family event it is.

Gavin Huff, 6, came from Atlanta to shoot in the Junior Eagle competition. His mom, Elaine, said he began shooting when he was 3.

Gavin's a third-generation archer. His grandparents, Charles and Linda Huff, were competing in the Classic, and Elaine plans to pick it up again now that she's graduated from nursing school.

She got started when her brothers did because she said she didn't let the boys do anything she didn't do.

"And Mom (Linda) got into it because she got tired of carrying all of our stuff between events," Elaine said. "She said if she was going to carry a bow, it might as well be her own."

Linda competed in the senior women's event. She shoots the most, she said, because archery actually helps with her job as the church organist.

"We didn't do any sports, because we were doing archery," Elaine said. "Most of the time it's a family event."

Gavin isn't completely dedicated to the sport, but said he likes shooting with his grandpa and likes the 3-D targets.

One of Gavin's Junior Eagle partners was 8-year-old Damon Summer, who traveled from Owatonna, Minn., for the Classic with his parents, Dean and Dena, and sister, Danielle, 11. All but Dena were competing.

Dean started shooting less than two years ago, and soon had both his children tagging along.

Although her husband bought her a bow when the rest of the family started shooting, Dena's job as a restaurant manager makes it hard for her to put it to use.

"During the week, Dean shoots with the kids so we can do family things when I'm off," Dena said. "But I'm going to try to start shooting with them in the fall."

When the family isn't shooting, they're taking walks through the woods to practice range-finding. Dean and Danielle have been concentrating on that, because not all of the competitions are from known distances, and they have to be able to judge how far away the target is.

"But it's fun for all of us," Dena said.

During the winter months, the Summers practice indoors at a local 3-D range, then move outside when the weather gets warmer.

Indoor archery is Damon's favorite, and he practices in his basement, making Dena thankful they have paneling on the walls.

"I like to shoot spots and at the paper animal targets," Damon said, but he admitted that the 3-D range at Uchee Creek was nice, especially because the bugs weren't out.

Dena said archery is hit or miss with Damon right now.

"Some weeks he really wants to practice," she said, "and sometimes he just doesn't care."

And Danielle, who plays soccer year-round, sometimes has to choose between sports.

Hopwood sees children like Damon and Danielle as the future of the sport and said she's always looking for ways to get children involved.

The Classic moved from Uchee Creek to the Columbus Civic Center for a few events Aug. 7, including a Family Fun Shoot. Hopwood said two bow-hunter fathers brought their daughters in to see what was happening. The girls were in Columbus for a softball tournament right across the parking lot.

"They just stood back and watched," Hopwood said. "But I sensed interest."

Hopwood had a small indoor range set up in the lobby where kids could shoot at balloons attached to the 3-D targets. So she encouraged the girls to shoot.

"I put them with pros and left them alone," she said. "And then they were both shooting. It was a wonderful transformation to watch."

Hopwood said everyone she talked with enjoyed the Classic and had good things to say about Uchee Creek.

"It was a wonderful facility," she said. "The ranges were awesome, challenging and accessible to everyone. Everyone treated us so well."

Competition translates to sharper shooting skills

Rifle, pistol club hosts shooting tournament

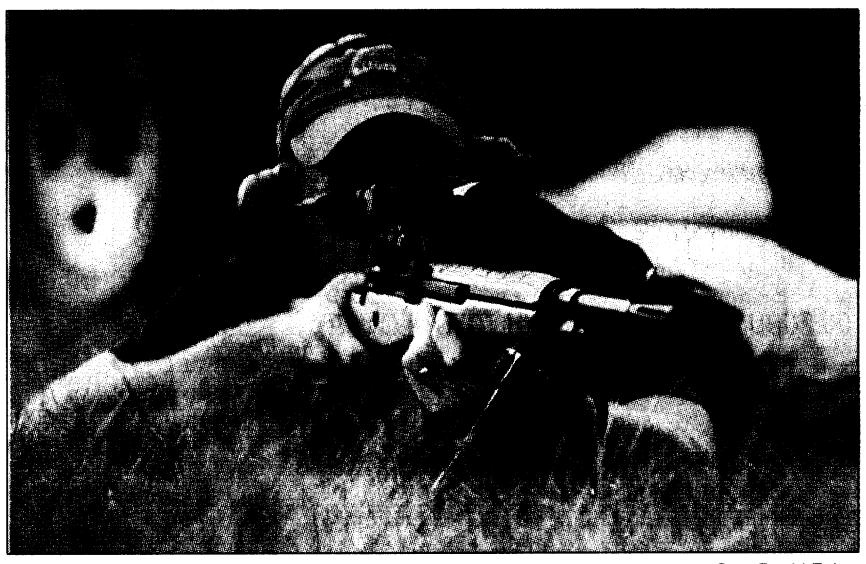
The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club held its August shooting competition, Dog Day Afternoon, Saturday at English Range.

Twenty-four people competed in the event, which was divided into four categories: pistol, shotgun, close quarter battle, and designated marksman.

Each category tests the shooters' speed and accuracy. The competition is designed to mimic some of the training Army Special Operations units use to prepare for combat, and the scenarios change each month to keep the shooters on their toes, said Jim Graham, match director.



"This is a thinking game," Graham said. "There is a problem involved with each event that the shooter has to solve."

The shotgun competition was probably the most demanding mental challenge in the contest.

Shooters had to reload several times, switching from birdshot, buckshot and slugs, while moving from point to point, using cover to engage several targets.

Points were added to the shooters' times for missing targets, with one point for hitting the ring just outside the bullseye, three points for hitting the outside ring and five points for a complete miss.

Once the points were recorded, they were worked into the shooters' time. The competitor with the lowest score won.

Spc. David Foley

Donn Hill takes aim during the designated marksman event at the Dog Day Afternoon shooting competition.

All the competitors wanted to win, but most had other reasons for competing.

Keith Hedger, a network engineer for the Department of the Air Force, said he shows up for every competition because he enjoys shooting, and the club has a lot of "good folks to hang out with."

Two second lieutenants from the Infantry Officer Basic Course turned out for more tactical reasons.

2nd Lts. Richard Roe and Craig Coppock were members of the shooting team at the United States Military Academy, and they signed up for the competition to keep their skills sharp.

"Competition is the fastest learning curve for shooting," Coppock said. "Under the stress of competition, you can learn a lot more."

"This is great for learning to manipulate your weapon and ammunition and build your technical skills," Roe said. "It is about technical skills, not tactical skills, but it is still better than most of the Army ranges."

Graham said he has seen how competitions like the one Saturday can help people in the military or on the police force.

"When people are competing against the clock, it creates a certain element of stress, and when something goes wrong, they get anxious and mess up," he said. "Combat stress is the same thing, but the difference is, here you get to come back next time. In combat you don't."

Heart problems not hampering marksman's Olympic dreams

Sara Greenlee
USA Shooting

Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson, the self-proclaimed "old man" of the 2004 Olympic Shotgun Team, may have tempted fate one too many times.

With less than two months before his trip to Athens, Erickson suffered what doctors called a bifisicular block.

"I was running on our track during PT, and the last thing I remember was running toward the grass trying to get out of everyone's way," said Erickson, 43. "The next thing I know, I was being lifted into the ambulance."

Erickson's teammate, Spc. Mark L. Weeks, a certified emergency medical technician, revived Erickson's stopped heart just moments after he collapsed. It was Weeks' second lifesaving rescue in two months — the first was at the Dulles International Airport, where he saved a passenger who collapsed while boarding a plane.

This time Weeks directed Staff Sgt. William H. Keever, another teammate, to administer cardiopulmonary resuscitation, while Weeks gave Erickson mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

> "I definitely expect to be back in full swing by Athens. I need to step it up a little and get back on track to where I should be."
> Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson
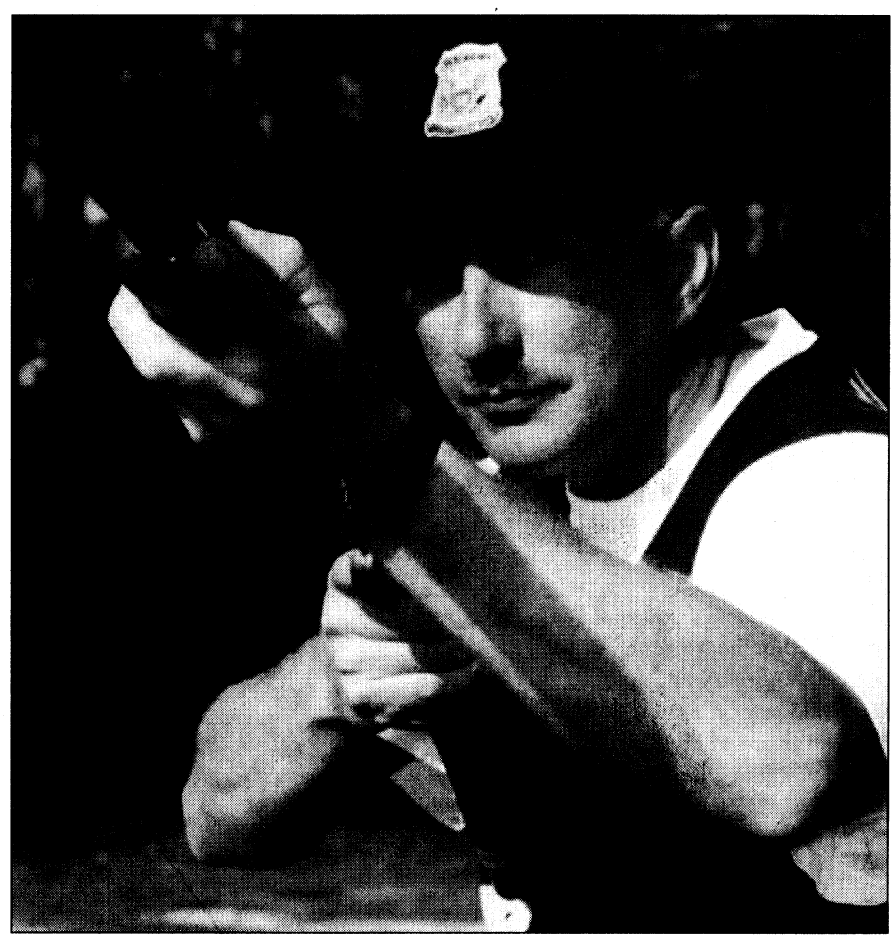
> U.S. Army marksman

Erickson was breathing and in an ambulance within minutes of the rescue.

But for Erickson, the ordeal was far from over. With only three weeks before the official roster had to be in for the Olympics, he knew he'd have to be sure this would not happen again. Doctors at Walter Reed Army Medical Center implanted a pacemaker.



"How the doctors explained it," Erickson said, "is that your heart has an internal pacemaker. The brain sends signals to this pacemaker through three lines into your heart. Two of my three lines have malfunctioned. But with the new pacemaker, if my lines ever get blocked again, it will kick in and keep my heart beating.

"And except for being completely out of shape from lying in the hospital for the last few weeks, I am better than ever," Erickson said. "Well, I guess I'm still a little sore from the surgery, but it doesn't seem to be affecting my shooting."

Erickson is already back on the Army Marksmanship Unit's shotgun ranges, planning a trip to Texas for training.

"I definitely expect to be back in full swing by Athens," Erickson said. "I just need to step it up a little and get back on track to where I should be."

Erickson double qualified for this year's Olympic Games in Men's Trap and Double Trap.

Eat to ride, ride to eat at Columbus In-Motion

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

You know what they say — eat to ride, ride to eat. And I'm not talking about motorcycles. Don't kid yourself boys and girls, those are choppers, not bikes. Only bikes are bikes.

And on Aug. 21, bikes — real bikes — will rule Uptown and the Riverwalk during Columbus In-Motion. This year, anyone who can turn a pedal can participate in the event. Everyday spinners and weekend joyriders alike are invited to support this event. What you ride or how fast you ride doesn't matter.

Your $15 entry fee will get you a T-shirt and access to the support stops and post-ride feed zone. At the inaugural ride two years ago, more than one of us "ate" our entry fee in bagels, bananas and Clif bars.

This family-oriented ride starts at 9 a.m. with a "show-and-go" start. For the record, it's about a 16 mile round trip, but if you or your budding bicyclist aren't up to the challenge, sign up anyway. I've checked the fine print, and you can turn around any time you want and still keep the T-shirt and hit the feed zone. Ride to eat, remember?

You can register by mail, on-line at www.columbusinmotion.com, or on ride day at the Rivercenter starting line, with no late entry penalty.

More motivated cyclists can also sign up for a ride Aug. 22 — the return of the Pine Mountain Challenge, they call it, all 100 miles of it.

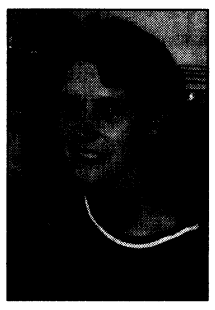
The entry fee for Aug. 22's century is $30.

Don't bother looking for me Aug. 22. I'm not up to challenging anything with "mountain" for a last name. But I'll be rolling down the Riverwalk for the family ride on the 21st. I may even do an extra lap.

Make sure you say hi when you ride past me. I'll be the one with the pink socks.

Archery hits spot, gives mother olympic dreams

Melissa House
Bayonet staff



I'm ready. The Olympic opening ceremonies are tonight. I'll be glued to the set for as much swimming as I can watch and combing the schedule for any of the "horsey" events — dressage, show jumping and cross-country.

And, believe it or not, I think I'm growing a future Olympian of my own.

My youngest, who I thought would be a girl because my pregnancy was so miserable, has turned into a real "manly" boy — at the tender age of 7. Nick has logged more hours in the woods chasing deer, turkeys and hogs than I have on my bike trainer. He's learning to hunt the hard way — with a bow.

It started off innocently enough, I guess, with the purchase of a kid-sized bow for our oldest son some years ago. He didn't do much with it, and then Nick got his hands on it. He'd trot outside, watch my husband shoot and wait his turn. But since that little bow didn't have much to it, the arrows didn't always make it to the target.

Then, last month, Nick went to the "hunting store" with Dad and became the proud owner of a high-speed, child-sized compound bow in a Realtree camouflaged pattern, just like his dad's. He's been slinging arrows across the back yard regularly ever since, and it has cost his dad a pretty penny, to boot.

To encourage Nick to shoot (which was quite unnecessary), Ed offered to pay him for hitting the target. Oops. By day two, Nick was hitting inside the circles just about every time. So the payment plan got adjusted.

So, last weekend, Nick had the opportunity to step his archery up a notch. He zipped his bow into a case big enough to hold him, and we drove to Uchee Creek at the crack of dawn to check out the Archery Shooters Association Pro/Am 3D archery tournament.

Now the first shooter in the family registered with the ASA, Nick displayed none of the nerves I thought I'd see from someone in his first real competition. But then, the competitors in the Jr. Eagle category are 6-to 9-year-olds and not really fear producing.

Without even firing a practice round, Nick amazed me with his accuracy from around 10 yards.

He shot those bear, deer, turkey and bobcats well enough to kill, or at least wound them pretty badly. He didn't miss a target, and scored a respectable 75 of a possible 120 points.

But the best part of the whole thing was the kids and the parents. The two boys and their moms in our group were great, teaching us everything we needed to know about shooting etiquette and scoring. Nick made two new friends, and we'll look for them at the next ASA event next year.

If you're looking for a sport the whole family can participate in, archery just might be the thing. It doesn't require a lot of muscle, just enough to hold the bow up and steady. Heck, even I might be able to do that.

Bush announces military changes in next decade

Thousands of troops, families to come home

John D. Banusiewicz
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The United States will redistribute forces now stationed at overseas locations "where the wars of the last century ended," President George W. Bush announced in Cincinnati Monday.

The president's announcement came during an address to the national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

"The world has changed a great deal," Bush said, "and our posture must change with it for the sake of our military families, for the sake of our taxpayers, and so we can be more effective at projecting our strength and spreading freedom and

National Airborne Day

The Silver Wings will be part of the National Airborne Day celebration today. The celebration will pay homage to the Army's airborne roots. In April 1940, the War Department approved plans to form a test platoon of airborne infantry Soldiers. Forty-eight men were selected from a pool of 200 volunteers, and less than 45 days after organization, members of the Test Platoon completed their first jumps over Lawson Army Airfield on Aug. 16, 1940. Today's celebration marks that anniversary.

CFC to kick off

This year's magic number is $800,000. That's the official amount government employees in the tricommunity will be asked to help meet for this year's Combined Federal Campaign, which will run from Aug. 24 to Oct. 5.

And since last year's collection surpassed the goal of $650,000, tricommunity CFC director Cindy Cain and garrison manager Chuck Walls said they'll be trying to push for $1 million.

"Stay tuned," Walls said. We may be raising the bar."

Only 34 percent of eligible donors gave last year, and with an increase to 50 to 60 percent, Cain said the million is within reach — it just involves changing the mindset of some folks.

Because the tricommunity did so well last year, the local CFC campaign was recognized

Fort Benning will celebrate women with a Women's Equality Day Luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday. The luncheon will be held at the Officers' Club.

"It's not about the food; it's about the education," said Master Sgt. Vincent McNeill, NCOIC, Equal Opportunity Office. "The education is for military and civilians alike. Education is the first priority."

The guest speaker is Vivian Bishop, wife of Georgia Congressman Sanford Bishop. Vivian is a municipal court clerk for Muscogee County.

"It's important (for the community) to get educated about the struggles women went through to achieve the opportunities we have today,"

Shelley Gittins has always believed in giving of herself. But the wife and mother of two took that ideal to new heights last year, when she "gave" a kidney to her 4-year-old nephew.

When Gittins' sister, Leslie Godwin, gave birth to her son in 1999, it quickly became apparent that the baby was not well.

Ethan was born with only one kidney — a kidney that functioned at only 30 percent.

Late last year, the kidney began to fail. Doctors told Godwin her son would need a kidney transplant to survive.

"When the doctors became aware that Ethan would need a kidney, they told my sister to start looking for family and friends who might be a match for him," Gittins recalled. "I knew I was the same blood type, so I might be able to help him."

So Gittins went to see a transplant coordinator and underwent numerous tests to determine whether or not she'd be a "good match."

She was.

With that, it was off to Iowa City, Iowa, where doctors shoveled

WORD TO THE WISE

Speak your mind, mind your speech

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

There were 365 graduates in the Haworth High School class of 1984. One for every day of the year.

That being the case, my "day" would've been April 1, because the single most memorable moment of my senior year still leaves me feeling foolish.

In a split second — the time it took to utter one ugly word — I embarrassed myself and hurt someone's feelings, someone I considered a friend. I still cringe when I think of it, and I think of it way too often.

I went home to Indiana last month for my 20th high school reunion with every intention of apologizing to my friend again. She wasn't there.

But Alice was.

Alice and I went through school together, from grade school on. We were friendly, but not really close, if you know what I mean.

Alice said to me, during the reunion, "Bridgett, I always wanted to tell you that I had a lot of respect for you in high school."

I was stunned. Maybe stunned is too strong a word. I was really surprised. Alice admired me in high school and I didn't know it? Could it be there were others (aforementioned "friend" aside) who thought I was a fairly squared-away kid, while I was beating myself up for not being smart enough, popular enough, pretty enough, talented or athletic enough?

Hmmm. I left my reunion thinking about that thing I wish I'd never said, and that thing I wish Alice had said 20 years ago. I wish I'd kept my mouth shut and she hadn't.

Just the other day, during a back-to-school event, an acquaintance made her way through the crowd to pay me a compliment, a really nice compliment. It made my day.

Now coming on the heels of my introspection, I thought about the little bit of effort it took for this gal to seek me out and give me this "gift" — this woman whom I've never heard say a bad word about anyone.

She's obviously practicing the proverb which says, "A wise man's heart guides his tongue."

A wise man knows when to bite his tongue and when to speak his mind. Everybody likes a wise guy.

With that in mind, I'm encouraging my son, as he enters his senior year in high school, to watch his words, to think twice before he speaks, to spare himself years of regret.

But, hey, if his thoughts pass the kindness test, he shouldn't hesitate to share, no matter how trivial it seems.

It's a lesson I wish someone had taught me — and Alice — 20 years ago.

Every vote counts — even yours

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

"Every vote counts," is a common saying heard around election time. Never has it been so true. This year may be the most hotly contested presidential race this nation has ever seen.

The debacle in Florida in 2000 has shown even the biggest skeptics that, yes, even one vote does make a difference.

I would love to tell you who to vote for. I make quite clear to anyone who knows me who I'll be casting my vote for. But what I would like even more would be for us all to vote with both our hearts and our heads.

What issue is nearest and dearest to your heart? For a lot of us, it's the military. I urge every former and current military member and their families also to thoroughly research each candidate and what he stands for. Which candidate, John Kerry or George W. Bush, will do the most for you?

Check out the issues and find out each candidate's stance, not only in the presidential race, but locally, also. Sure, the presidential race is important, but so is what happens right in your own backyard.

So this year, vote. It may be the most important vote you'll ever cast in your life. If you're not registered, there are tons of Web sites that offer voter registration — mtv.com is just one.

Use your voice now, not later, when you're complaining that so-and-so didn't win and you didn't even vote. At least you can say you did vote, and who knows, it may be your vote that does make a difference.

Elevator etiquette, an uplifting guide

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Recently, I was diagnosed with a somewhat disturbing disorder — EOD. Never heard of it? Well, don't worry; it's not contagious. It's Elevator Ownership Disorder.

And here in the lift grand central that is Infantry Hall, there are a few things that really aggravate my condition. I see these little elevator etiquette taboos, I get that involuntary twitch and my EOD starts acting up something terrible.

Now, I know I am less patient with these elevator faux-paus than most — it's my condition, really. But I think all of us here in Infantry Hall would greatly benefit from cleaning up our elevator etiquette.

So being the genuinely sweet person that I am (cough ... clearing of the throat), I've compiled a list of helpful tips for my fellow riders:

• In the lobby. As you approach the lobby where you will wait for your elevator, you may see that glowing button that summons the elevator and be tempted to push it ... repeatedly.

Hint to the user: If the button is lit up, someone else has already pushed it. Probably someone standing right there in the waiting area with you. And pushing it again doesn't make the car come faster.

Then, there are those special individuals who, once the elevator arrives, express their level of importance by attempting to board the elevator before letting anyone off.

I'm not exactly sure where in the world of common sense standing in front of the doors as they open and blocking the exit for people trying to get off the elevator is an efficient way to get on the elevator. But here at Infantry Hall, it's more sensible and socially acceptable to politely stand aside and allow riders to exit without incident before you hop on.

• On the elevator. Of course, good elevator manners don't cease once you're actually on the lift.

Don't let that blind spot get the best of you — there are panels on either side to select your floor of choice. And you, too, can master their use. Simply locate the number of the floor you would like to go to, and push the button — a better option than making it the job of your fellow riders even when you happen to be standing right next to a panel.

And if you're not next to the panel, trust in the good nature of your fellow man, and ask them to push the button for you, rather than leaning across them, nearly elbowing them in the face, to push it yourself.

Once you are proceeding up or down, a good rule of thumb is not to crowd your fellow passengers, standing so close as to back them into the wall.

Perhaps it would be better if you simply waited for one of the three other elevators to come pick you up, or at least stood in the middle of the elevator instead of penetrating someone else's space bubble. Let's use our field sanitation guidelines here and leave a foot or two between bodies.

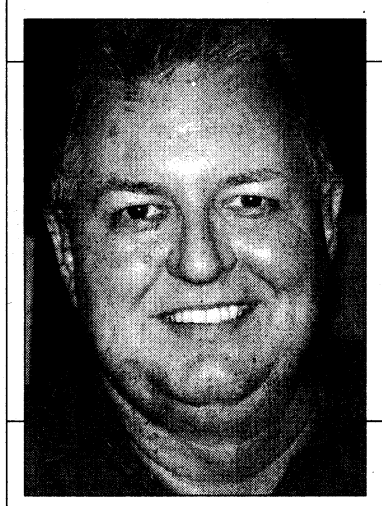
And if you happen to board the elevator with just one other person — a stranger, that is — my recommendation is to either start a conversation or busy yourself with whatever you're carrying in your hands.

Don't feel obligated to permeate the air with uncomfortable tension, looking all over the elevator except at the other person. There really is no way to pretend that you are not in a small, enclosed space with the person you are sharing it with. Believe me, I and many of my fellow riders have tried — none of us successfully, mind you.

And if you do board the elevator with a friend, and you're having a conversation of a highly private nature (i.e. your rash/open, festering sores are acting up again or some other ailment-related diatribe), please wait for the next car, or continue the conversation after you've reached your floor.

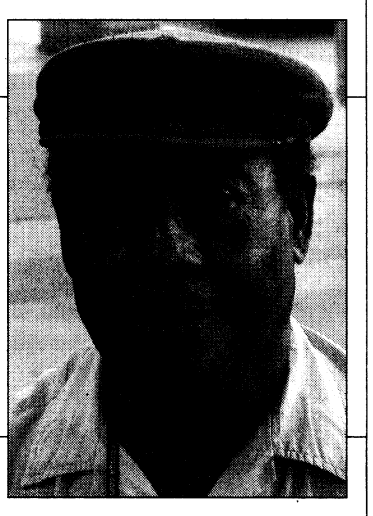
Even a hushed whisper and conspiratorial tone isn't going protect your subject matter from spreading to the ears of innocent bystanders.

And finally, a personal message for my favorite people EVER. You know the ones — you see them when your elevator's ascent from or descent to the first floor is interrupted on the second floor.



Those healthy, fit individuals who are either too lazy or navigationally challenged to locate the stairs (which, by the way, are just right around the corners from the elevators).

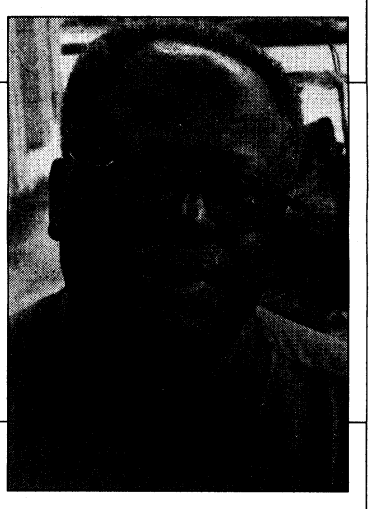
Climbing the stairs to the second floor is probably quicker and definitely more considerate than needlessly stopping an elevator full of people who are probably running late as it is.



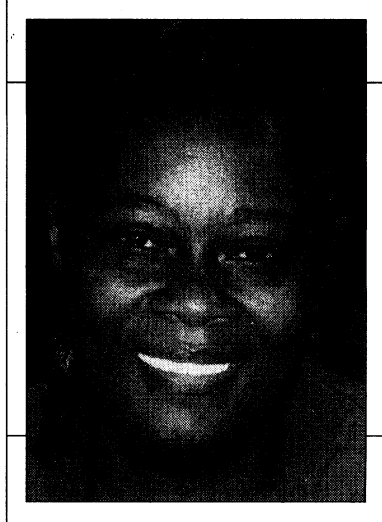
Well, folks, that about sums it up. Let's keep these tips in mind and make our elevator experiences enjoyable for everyone.

VARIOUS VOICES

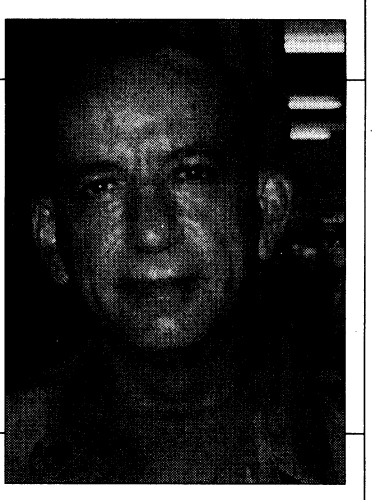
If you went back to high school, what would you do differently?



Steve Thiele, 'The Voice of the Infantry'— "I would have studied more and paid more attention. I also would have improved on baseball, because I always wanted to play on the varsity team."



Retired Staff Sgt. Fred Pierce — "Back in my day, if you didn't know your times tables, you got slapped on the hand with a ruler. I wouldn't play close-contact sports because you could lose your focus."



Jacqueline Merine- "My high school years were pretty good. I had good teachers. I probably would have studied a little bit harder."

Rev. Billy Prather, retiree — "I didn't let anything get in the way of my education. I would do the same thing if I were to go back. I was taught discipline and how to treat people. Those lessons I learned paid off."

Sharon Gant, AAFES Employee — "I would have studied more because I would have learned a little bit more. Knowing what I know now, that's exactly what I would have done."

Staff Sgt. Tom Kirchgessner, 249th Medical Co.— "I probably would have devoted less time at my job outside of school and focused more on school. I probably would have taken it more seriously."

Maj. Steve Coker poses in front of his 1962 Corvette outside of Infantry Hall. Coker has donated his car to be raffled Oct. 24. Proceeds from the raffle will help build a church for his congregation.

Soldier donates car for raffle

'62 Corvette to help build church for congregation

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Imagine driving down the road in a 1962 convertible Corvette. A gorgeous, red, classic beauty worth at least $35,000. Not in a million years right? Well, maybe yes.

Maj. Steve Coker, Fort Benning's mobilization branch chief, has the privilege of driving the aforementioned classic beauty everyday.

But eight months ago, he decided to give that privilege up, not to buy another car, or for home improvements or because his wife didn't like his car.

He decided to give his car to God — to buy a church.

Coker has always been a man of God, then he had a vision. A vision that changed his life. Coker had to do something for God, to thank him for everything he's been blessed with.

Every Sunday, Coker joins a group of family and friends for church. Not at church, however, but at the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge.

"We have people who come in and set it up before the service and then break everything down after the service," Coker said.

A man who always has a plan, Coker went to his pastor and asked him what was needed for them to buy a church to worship at every Sunday. The answer, of course, money.

So Coker decided to raffle off his car to buy a church. For $25 a ticket, anyone can buy a shot at owning the 1962 Corvette.

"It's a testimony, a witness to people," Coker said. "You give and God will be in debt to no man. When it's all said and done, monetary things won't get you salvation.

"God put us all here to find one another, help one another and love one another. That's what the church is going to do. It's going to help bring everyone together," Coker said.

From the raffle of the Corvette, Coker hopes his congregation makes enough money to purchase either an existing church location or property to build a church.

Currently, his congregation is about 80 members strong, but the long term goal is to build a church that will seat at least 200 people.

"We want to get to a position where our church body can grow and we can provide various community service activities such as missionary work, and minister to those near and far," Coker said.

"I ask for no credit for this. This is my obedience and his will. The glory is to God. I can't do it without him, because I would mess it up," he said.

Coker purchased the 1962 Corvette in Michigan two years ago and has put more than $10,000 into restoring it. It can be viewed every fair weather Sunday at The River of Columbus Church in Columbus.

The raffle will be Oct. 24, following church services at The River of Columbus Church.

To purchase a ticket or for more information, call Coker at 536-6630.

"This is the beginning of some great work. This is just one task but there's many more to come," Coker said.

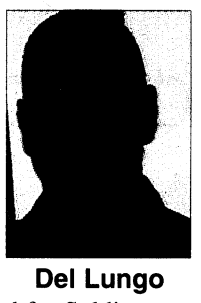
Fort Benning welcomed its newest foreign liaison officer Aug. 5.

Maj. Angelo Del Lungo is the first Italian liaison officer in the post's history.



"It will be difficult to be the first in this position," Del Lungo said. "But it will be nice, too, because there is no set path to follow and I can make my own way."

He said his main responsibility will be to act as a communication channel of ideas and experience between the Infantry School and the Italian army.

"I'm expected to exchange a lot of experience and information," he said. "I know the Infantry School will teach me many lessons regarding current combat tactics, like in Iraq. I will be able to compare that with what my army is doing. This is a very important moment for me and my country."

This three-year assignment as liaison officer will be the first time Del Lungo will spend extended time in the United States.

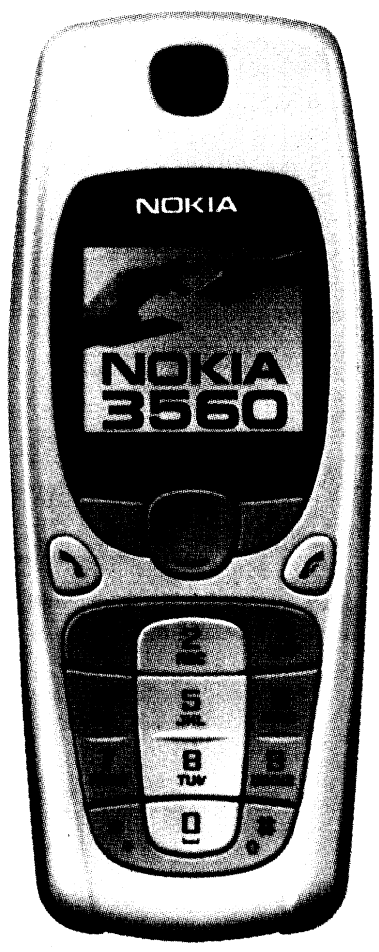
"This is a challenging moment for both me and my family from a professional point of view," he said. "We are starting a new life in a new country, but this army is different from many.

Del Lungo

"Here it is more like an extended family and there are many opportunities for them to make social connections and for Soldiers to not only be Soldiers, but to be a part of a community."

Prior to his assignment here, Del Lungo attended the Italian staff college in Rome, but lived in a small town outside of the metro area.

"I prefer to live in a smaller town," he said. "I worked in Rome, but it is much too chaotic to live there. This city is very similar to the size of the city where I lived and I finally get to see the real America. All we know of America is what we see in films — the big cities, skyscrapers and such, but this is small-town America. People are so friendly, and we are looking forward to traveling and making new friends."



Del Lungo's assignments include platoon commander, company commander, and logistics section chief within the 2nd Granatieri Regiment, an elite unit organized in 1659, long before Italy was the nation recognized today. He also served as a training and doctrine section chief at the Italian army's NCO academy.

He has served tours in Somalia in 1993 and several tours in Bosnia and throughout the Balkan Region.

"I think this assignment will be a great opportunity to grow both professionally and culturally," Del Lungo said.

1st Infantry Division Soldiers conduct Cajun Mousetrap III

TF Danger Soldiers raid comes to end

Sgt. 1st Class Chuck Joseph
Army News Service

Task Force Danger Soldiers, in an operation dubbed "Cajun Mousetrap III," conducted an overnight raid into the City of Samarra that started late August 13 and ended early the next morning.

The mission objectives were to assess the capabilities of the Anti-Iraqi Forces in the city and clear roads, said Capt. William Rockefeller, commander of B Company, 1st Battalion, 26th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Brigade Combat Team.

He stressed that the operation was a "limited attack mission." His Soldiers were to clear roads blocked by AIF and fire at enemy positions if fired upon.

Pfc. Ryan Howell, a Bradley Fighting Vehicle gunner from B Company and a Toledo, Ohio native, was pumped up for the mission.

He emerged from the unit's weight room in a building on his patrol base sweating from a workout.

"I like to lift before a mission," Howell said. "It's been too long since we've been in the city. I'm ready to go."

1st Lt. Warren Wessling, platoon leader of B Company's 2nd Platoon echoed those sentiments.

"We're always ready to go," he said.

Sgt. Nicholas J. Roha, a gunner on an M-1 A1 Abrams tank from 1st Battalion, 77th Armor Regiment, attached to B Company, spent his down time before the mission relaxing.

"I feel pretty good," Roha said. "All of us have already been through a lot of combat, so we know how we react."

He and his counterparts double checked their weapons, night vision equipment and other battle gear, and filed out of the building into the dark and onto their vehicles.

The unit was going into Samarra, where the troops hadn't been in a while.

Patrol Base Razor sits on the banks of the Tigris River, directly across from Samarra. On the roof of the command post, radio traffic gave a play-by-play of the battle.

Rockefeller's company maneuvered across a bridge from the west side of the Tigris using heavy machine gun fire and several vehicle-launched wire-guided missiles to clear roadways of obstacles, according to reports.

Once in the city, the company received fire from enemy positions and met the fire with overwhelming force. Tracers converged on each other. Gunfights were in progress. As fire from one location ceased, radio traffic indicated that an A or B Company unit was past the objective and was moving to the next.

Tracer rounds and explosions lit the city and reflected on the Tigris River during the early stages of the operation. Approximately one hour into the battle, the city lights went dark and the only light came from sporadic firefights on the city streets.

The peak of the resistance came from an old former regime element headquarters building, said an unidentified voice monitoring the radio.

Another voice over the radio told the listeners to take cover behind the rooftop bunkers. A white flash and orange fireball preceded the loudest explosion of the night. The thump of the report jarred the building situated more than 1,500 meters away.

"A 500-pound bomb from an Air Force jet just finished off that enemy position," a voice over the radio announced.

Apache gun ships from the 1st Battalion, 1st Aviation Regiment, 4th Brigade Combat Team aided the counter attacks with 30 mm cannon fire, Rockefeller later said.

A Company completed the sweep from the north and exited the city by the route cleared by B Company, said 1st Lt. Scott Gilman, executive officer from A Company.

A Company met an equal amount of resistance and success. The unit fought its way through as B Company pulled out. Like its sister company, the unit took no casualties, Capt. Michael Jurick, liaison officer from Task Force 1-26 said.

Of significance, Jurick said, A Company took out two rocket propelled grenade teams.

At least one was destroyed by an Abrams tank attached to the unit from the 1-77 Armor.

"We met our objectives and everybody came back," Rockefeller said. "That's excellent."

'62 Corvette to help build church for congregation

Imagine driving down the road in a 1962 convertible Corvette. A gorgeous, red, classic beauty worth at least $35,000. Not in a million years right? Well, maybe yes.

Maj. Steve Coker, Fort Benning's mobilization branch chief, has the privilege of driving the aforementioned classic beauty everyday.

But eight months ago, he decided to give that privilege up, not to buy another car, or for home improvements or because his wife didn't like his car.

He decided to give his car to God — to buy a church.

Coker has always been a man of God, then he had a vision. A vision that changed his life. Coker had to do something for God, to thank him for everything he's been blessed with.

Every Sunday, Coker joins a group of family and friends for church. Not at church, however, but at the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge.

"We have people who come in and set it up before the service and then break everything down after the service," Coker said.

A man who always has a plan, Coker went to his pastor and asked him what was needed for them to buy a church to worship at every Sunday. The answer, of course, money.

So Coker decided to raffle off his car to buy a church. For $25 a ticket, anyone can buy a shot at owning the 1962 Corvette.

"It's a testimony, a witness to people," Coker said. "You give and God will be in debt to no man. When it's all said and done, monetary things won't get you salvation.

"God put us all here to find one another, help one another and love one another. That's what the church is going to do. It's going to help bring everyone together," Coker said.

From the raffle of the Corvette, Coker hopes his congregation makes enough money to purchase either an existing church location or property to build a church.

Currently, his congregation is about 80 members strong, but the long term goal is to build a church that will seat at least 200 people.

"We want to get to a position where our church body can grow and we can provide various community service activities such as missionary work, and minister to those near and far," Coker said.

"I ask for no credit for this. This is my obedience and his will. The glory is to God. I can't do it without him, because I would mess it up," he said.

Coker purchased the 1962 Corvette in Michigan two years ago and has put more than $10,000 into restoring it. It can be viewed every fair weather Sunday at The River of Columbus Church in Columbus.

The raffle will be Oct. 24, following church services at The River of Columbus Church.

To purchase a ticket or for more information, call Coker at 536-6630.

"This is the beginning of some great work. This is just one task but there's many more to come," Coker said.

August begins peak hurricane season

Gulf, Atlantic states should be prepared

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Hurricane Charley was just the beginning.

In May, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, a branch of the Department of Homeland Security, issued its prediction for the 2004 hurricane season.

Forecasters said there will be an "above-normal" season in the Atlantic, with 12 to 15 tropical storms. Six to eight will likely become hurricanes and two to four may become major hurricanes. Major hurricanes are Category 3 and higher, as measured by the Saffir-Simpson scale, defined by air pressure, wind speed and storm surge.

So the Federal Emergency Management Agency urged residents of Gulf and Atlantic states to prepare for the season, which runs from June 1 to Nov. 30. Peak months are August, September and October.

According to the NOAA Web site, the increased storm activity is a continuation of activity that began in 1995.

And although Charley is still a horrible, fresh memory for many Florida residents, Hurricane Danielle is brewing southwest of the Azores, and Earl is now classified as a tropical wave off the coast of Central America. The NOAA Web site has satellite images, warnings and advisories for both.

The NOAA staff has also compiled a list of the deadliest, most costly and intense hurricanes from 1900 to 2000. During that time, there have only been 19 years when no hurricane has struck the U.S. mainland, and only twice has the country gone two years in a row without land strikes.

Georgia has had its share of the 165 hurricanes in the past century, including one Category 1 hurricane and four in Category 2. Those storms caused minimal to moderate damage with winds between 74 and 110 mph, according to a NOAA compilation.

The National Hurricane Center has a Hurricane Preparedness Week in May to inform the public about hurricane hazards and provide information individuals and families can use to take action in the event of a hurricane.

And organizational guru FlyLady, aka Marla Cilley, compiled her Points of Preparedness in an Evacuation for subscribers to her mentoring group. These tips are applicable to any evacuation, whether hurricane, flood, or fire:

10 Points of Preparedness in an Evacuation

1. PEOPLE: Have a plan for getting out of the house and make sure everyone knows it. Have an emergency bag of food and water for your family with wholesome snacks for the children — dried fruit, nuts, peanut butter, crackers and granola bars.

2. PETS: Keep pet carriers and leashes available to lead pets to safety. Take pet food with you.

3. PICTURES: Keep negatives or CDs of pictures in a lock box or at a family member's home. Have picture albums in one place ready to grab and go at a moment's notice.

4. PAPERS: Have all your important papers in a lock box at a bank and keep only copies at the house. This keeps you from panicking. If you have them at home, put them in a folder that you can grab if you have to move fast. Color code it so you can find it!

5. PRESCRIPTIONS: Take your medications with you. Don't forget the ones that have to be refrigerated, such as insulin. Have a small ice chest and cold packs readily accessible to pack and go. If you have babies, remember their formula or medications.

6. PURSES: This is where you keep your identification, credit cards and cash. Keep a stash of cash for emergencies. You may not be able to use an ATM in the event of a power outage.

7. PROPER CLOTHES and COMFORT ITEMS: According to the weather conditions; gather up a change of clothes along with outer clothing — coats, rain gear, boots, gloves and hats. If you have babies, remember diapers. Remember to grab your children's favorite blankets, stuffed animals or toys. A game or a deck of cards will help keep them occupied and calm.

8. PLANNER or CALENDAR: These should have all the information you will need, such as phone numbers, insurance numbers and important dates. They are small and filled with things you don't have to try to remember.

9. PHONES and RADIOS: Always keep cell phones charged and have a charger in the car or an extra battery. They may not work in the event of power outages, but then they might.

Know which local radio station has emergency bulletins. Keep your battery-powered radio tuned to that station and have plenty of batteries handy. Also keep a "corded" phone that does not operate with electricity.

10. PATIENCE: This is one of the most important things to pack. Keep it inside you, so you can keep a clear, calm head.

Having your P's to Preparedness list to guide you will keep you patient. In the event of an evacuation, there will be lots of displaced people. Being patient will make things less stressful. Your children need to see you calm and collected. This will help keep them calm, too.

Copy this list and put it in your planner or calendar.

Don't wait till you are being asked to evacuate. Everyone thinks that it could not happen to them. Well it could, and it is up to you to make sure you are prepared. Don't wait! DO IT NOW!!

For more information, visit www.noaa.gov or www.flylady.net.

www.fema.gov/kids has information and activities for children. www.nws.noaa.gov has current weather watches, warnings and advisories issued by the agencies within the National Weather Service. These are listed by state and county.

Benning Ranger named TRADOC's top NCO

Dahlonega troop hopes to tackle Armywide board

Sgt. 1st Class Reginald P. Rogers
TRADOC News Service

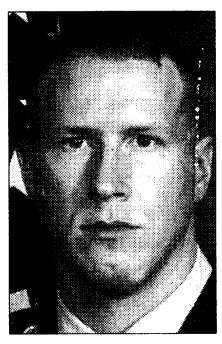
FORT MONROE, Va. — Staff Sgt. Andrew Bullock, representing the Army's Combined Arms Command and 5th Ranger Training Battalion, was named the Training and Doctrine Command's NCO of the Year Aug. 6 at Fort Monroe.

Bullock — who works in Dahlonega, Ga., instructing Ranger mountain training in the North Georgia mountains — joined the Army in 1996 after spending a year at Brigham Young University in Utah.

"I tried college for a year and didn't get as much out of it as I had hoped, so I decided to serve my country for a while," Bullock explained. "I got hooked on it and re-enlisted and stayed on in."

He said he initially joined the Army as an airborne infantryman assigned to 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

"I enjoyed being in the 82nd," he said. "I went on a lot of good deployments. I went to Kosovo and Egypt as part of the Multinational Force and Observers and enjoyed my time there. When it was done, five and a half years later, I was ready to go. I got assigned to the 5th Ranger Battalion in North Georgia, and I've been training there since."



It was these deployments that Bullock said have been his most rewarding experience in the Army.

"My most rewarding experiences in the Army have definitely been my overseas deployments," he said. "Especially Kosovo in 1999. Going into those countries where the people have been persecuted and being able to assist them, (and seeing) the look on their faces, is probably one of the most rewarding feelings I've ever experienced.

"The second most rewarding thing was graduating from Ranger School, also in 1999," he added.

Bullock said it was his assignment to the 82nd that influenced his decision to become a Ranger.

"My first leaders while in the 82nd were the best," he said. "They were who I aspired to be. They shined above all the other leaders in the unit, and so I knew that was who I wanted to be, and I set my sights on it."

Bulloch

He said his career aspirations include becoming a "Green Beret."

"I'm kinda undecided right now; I'd like to go into Special Forces and experience that," Bullock said. "I'm not yet sure if I want to do a 20- or 30-year Army career. There are a lot of factors there. But I definitely have a few more good years left in the Army. At least one more re-enlistment."

He said the TRADOC NCO of the Year competition was tough. He pointed out that it was close all the way to the finish.

"It was very challenging because my competitors were outstanding," Bullock said. "Sgt. (1st Class Jon) Williams and Sgt. (1st Class Shane) Wentz were, by far and away, the best competitors I've had to go against on any board level. I knew that if I had a chance of winning, I'd have to be on top of everything at all times. There was no slack whatsoever.

"It was showing in our first event, the APFT, during the two-mile run at the one-mile mark – the turnaround," he added. "I was there, Wentz was there and Williams. We were abreast of each other at the turnaround. That was just how it was for the whole competition."

Bullock said the hardest events in the competition were the essay and sitting through the board.

"The written essay was hard because in the Army, you get away from just writing essays," he explained. "I haven't written an essay in a few years, so that was a little interesting. In the actual oral board, (TRADOC) Command Sgt. Maj. (Anthony) Williams and the other board members did an outstanding job making all the competitors feel at ease. The board members were outstanding, and they provided some really good questions that required you to think."

The question the competitors were required to write an essay on was, "What sentence in the NCO Creed is the most important to you, and why?"

For Bullock, it was competence. "Competence is my watchword," he said. "My two basic responsibilities will always be uppermost in my mind — accomplishment of my mission and the welfare of my Soldiers.

"That's important to me because, just like the Soldier's Creed and part of the Warrior Ethos, the most important thing we do in the Army is mission accomplishment," he said. "If we can't accomplish our mission, is there any point in having an Army? Americans wouldn't even need us if we can't accomplish our mission.

"The second most important is Soldier welfare," he added. "You have to take care of your Soldiers if you want to be able to accomplish the mission."

Bullock said his command was instrumental in helping him become the NCO of the Year.

"My entire company-level chain of command: my sponsor, Sgt. 1st Class Prather, who was there if I needed anything," he said. "My platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Livingston, was always there, making sure there was a good balance of time between working and ensuring I had time to study and prepare. My first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Raymond Nieto, who is one of those people I aspire to be like, had me straightened out for success also."

Post Guardsmen perform full-time missions

Warrior Training Center spotlights efforts, missions

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

They're everywhere, and they look just like you. The 14 full-time National Guardsmen assigned to Fort Benning fight a common misconception about their Active Guard assignments. They're active, not activated, and yes, there's a difference.

They're assigned to Sand Hill, Infantry Hall, Officer Candidate School, CONUS Replacement Center, the Warrior Training Center — the list goes on and on. And most of them, or at least their positions, have been here for years, long before the war on terrorism and the subsequent call-up of more than 200,000 "part-time" Soldiers.

"Our job is basically to support Guard endeavors," said Col. Matthew Nagasako, special assistant to the commanding general for Army National Guard and Army Reserve Affairs.

"Somewhere along the line, we decided to intermingle," he said. "Even though our goal is to have a seamless Army, Guard and regular Army Soldiers don't always speak the same language."

The National Guard Bureau funds positions for full-time Guardsmen who are "tenants" in units where they're needed to assist National Guard Soldiers — units like the 30th AG Battalion (Reception) on Sand Hill, where Guardsmen serve as full-time liaisons for the 6,000 National Guard Soldiers who go through basic training each year and hundreds who attend other schools on post.

There are 41 such positions available on Fort Benning, though only 14 are filled at this time, Nagasako said. That makes his a "medium-sized" force. Every Army installation has Active Guard positions, some with more than a hundred. In fact, many installations also have active Army Reserve Soldiers.

But since the Reserves have basically "pulled out of the infantry business," they're presence is missed here on Fort Benning, where the Guard liaisons on Sand Hill make it a point to take care of Reservists also, Nagasako said.

Though their primary mission is to train and care for National Guard Soldiers, whether they're in Basic Training, Ranger School or OCS, it's not limited there. Only half of the students who attend the Guard's pre-ranger course are Guardsmen. With a success rate to rival and even surpass most pre-ranger courses — between 63 and 68 percent of the National Guard pre-ranger course graduates pass Ranger School — the course has been filled to capacity annually for each of its eight two-week cycles.

The success of the pre-ranger course has caught the eye of post officials, who would like to see an increase in the number of classes offered. The increased optempo, coupled with the addition of a National Guard Air Assault Course, resulted in a name change in April.

The pre-ranger site, near Harmony Church, has been named the Warrior Training Center, and it's the headquarters of pre-ranger, air assault and the mobile training teams that deploy regularly to teach courses around the globe.

It's also the site of the post's largest contingent of full-time National Guard Soldiers, with nearly 20 cadre. This figure can be misleading, since most of those are on "active-duty special work" assignments of 90 days to a year.

Plain and simple, Nagasako said, it takes a slew of full-time Soldiers to man and train a ready "part-time" Army, even during peace time.

But that "part-time" Army is proving critical to the success of American forces in the Global War on Terrorism.

Only half of the students who attend the Guard's pre-ranger course are Guardsmen. With a success rate to rival and even surpass most pore-rangers courses — between 63 and 68 percent of the National Guard pre-ranger course graduates pass Ranger School — the course has been filled to capacity annually for each of its eight two-week cycles.

Troops practice tactics at JRTC

Pvt. James E. Lewis
3rd Brigade Combat Team PAO

The day's first light shines on a convoy Saturday; its destination is the small town of Jabar Nahr.

Intelligence has pinpointed the village as the location of a high-ranking terrorist in the al Qaeda network.

The orders for 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment's 3rd Platoon Bravehearts are clear — cordon off the area, search the village for the suspect and bring him in, alive if possible.

Traveling in the convoy are two Bradleys, two 113s and a Light Mobile Tactical Vehicle.

Soldiers fill the LMTV's large truck bed with two Soldiers in the cab. While the convoy travels down a dirt road, the Soldiers in the back of the LMTV scan the surroundings, ready for any enemy movement. The convoy comes to an abrupt halt when a beat-up truck rounds a bend in the road.

Soldiers jump out of the LMTV, their weapons sighted on the truck.

It's full of old farmers, but the Soldiers had to take precautions, said 1st Lt. Mani A. Wurie, 3rd Platoon leader, because the platoon didn't know who the men were or what they could have been doing.

The Soldiers return to the LMTV, preparing for possibly a more serious threat in Jabar Nahr.

At Jabar Nahr, the Soldiers are greeted with angry shouts and jeers from the locals.

But the platoon's mission hasn't changed.

Wurie walks to the nearby police station to see if they know where the terrorist is. After a short conversation with the police, made possible with the help of the translator, Wurie and a squad of his men head to a house nearby where the terrorist is supposedly hiding.

While Wurie is talking with the owner of the house, the Soldiers stop a truck at gunpoint, order the three occupants out and search the truck.

Wurie is still talking with the owner of the house, when a local walks up to second squad leader, Sgt. Jodie Miller, and tells him where the terrorist is hiding — the house across the street.

Miller tells Wurie.

"The police at the town had given us bogus information," Wurie said. "They were either afraid of the terrorist or they were sympathetic to him."

Wurie orders Miller's squad to secure the perimeter of the house until he gets there with another squad, but faulty communication equipment gives Miller the wrong impression of what Wurie wants.

Instead of holding its position, Miller's squad approaches the front of the house and is met with gunfire.

One of Miller's men, Sgt. James Browning, is shot fatally, while another, Pvt. Shane Plunkert, is injured. A local man who was standing on the porch is killed by the insurgent in the gunfight.

Miller opens fire, putting the insurgent out of commission. Miller and his squad go into the house and find the terrorist, unarmed, in the house.

Wurie, now on the front porch, seeks cover behind an outside-corner wall as he tries to find out what is going on on the radio.

Shouts of "we got him" come from inside the house. Then, more gunshots ring out.

"LT's down!" Spc. Jorge Torres shouts and Soldiers rush to help.

Shot in the arm, Wurie receives medical attention as the terrorist is led out of the house.

Photos by Pvt. James E. Lewis

Spc. Anthony Stickney mans a 240B machine gun during the cordon and search.

Spc. Jorge Torres, left, Sgt. Jodie Miller and Spc. Darrell Ambos secure the perimeter of a house.

A sniper at a nearby gas station shot Wurie, and that first platoon took the man out of action.

A group of mourners stand over the body of the innocent civilian who was caught in the crossfire.

Wurie, able to continue with the mission, apologizes to the owner of the house where the terrorist was hiding, who was an innocent civilian.

It is not clear why the terrorist was hiding in the man's house.

The Soldiers all climb back into their respective vehicles, leaving the town of Jabar Nahr behind them, their mission completed.

This Joint Readiness Training Center exercise mirrors actual operations in Iraq and is designed to give Soldiers the training they'll need when they arrive in Iraq in a few months.

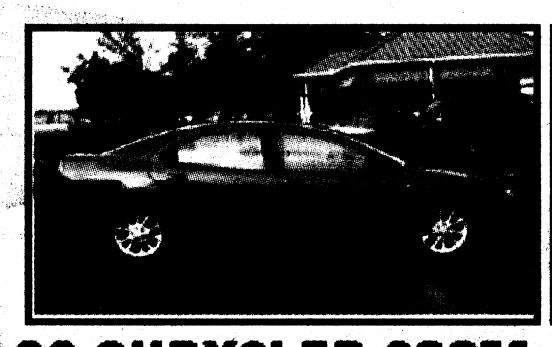
"This is real similar to what we encountered when I was in Iraq," Spc. Darrell Ambos said. "It's really close to reality."

In the after action review, Torres, the radio transmitter operator for the mission, said communication equipment was a big problem on this mission.

Torres, who has never been to Iraq, said he thinks this exercise is good training for what he might see while in country.

"This exercise will definitely give you an idea of what you might encounter in Iraq and how to deal with it," he said. "Especially in dealing with the people, the locals, I think this exercise will help a lot."

"Overall, we met the mission objectives," Wurie said.



"We definitely have learned some lessons so the next time we are involved with something like this, we'll be better prepared," he said.

3rd Brigade practices crowd control tactics at JRTC

Sgt. Raymond Piper
The Frontline, Fort Stewart

There are many situations the Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team are going through at the Joint Readiness Training Center.

In one, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, Soldiers provided security during a liquid-propane gas distribution Saturday.

Role-players acted as two Iraqi police and a crowd of Iraqis who waited five hours to buy fuel.

"The JRTC role-player cast is outstanding. They speak Arabic and we have an Arabic translator," said 1st Lt. Joseph Godwin, HHC's executive officer.

The Iraqi police checked for the proper paperwork and lead people into the gate, where Soldiers searched them for weapons.

Three or four Soldiers set up a perimeter to maintain order. Others performed roving guard duty in the propane factory, watching for anything out of place.

"We try to control the crowd and get them moving through a central location," Godwin said.

Role-players pretending to be families trying to buy propane, which is one of the main sources for heating and cooking in Iraq.

There was one vendor who could only sell one canister of propane to each family. Some of the families wanted two and tried to argue with the vendor. This was where the Soldiers stepped in.

Courtsey photo

The Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team try keep a rowdy crowd under control during a mock demonstration Saturday at the Joint Readiness Training Center. The exercise was designed to test the Soldiers' ability to work under pressure.

"We try to reason with them and explain why they can only get one canister," Godwin said. "As a last resort, we throw them out. It's not a good option because it can make the crowd angry."

At one point, the trickle of role-players flowing through the Iraqi police's security point grew to a crowd of 20 or 30 people.

Soldiers moved to block their entrance into the area as they started chanting and yelling for gas. The crowd became more aggressive as the Soldiers denied them access.

"The scenario tests the military decision-making process as we decide what to do in a situation and what resources we can use," Godwin said.

The Soldiers were put to the test as role-players clogged the entrance and forced them to react.

Concertina wire was pulled across the entrance to force people to flow through the entrance point.

The crowd became angrier as the Soldiers stopped them from overrunning the vendor.

The Soldiers had to use simulated smoke grenades to force the crowd to disperse.

"I did this job in Iraq and (the role players) do a good job of replicating (the situations). The stress level is similar," Godwin said.

"One thing that is hard to replicate is the fear factor. The force we can use here is less."

He said that he felt this is one of the best simulations he's been through.

Spc. Kenneth Grosser, a light-wheel mechanic with 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regiment, agreed.

"It's not as realistic as being in Iraq, but it is pretty close. If they showed more aggression it would be more realistic," he said.

There is a definite benefit for the Soldiers who haven't been to Iraq, he said.

"It gives them experience on how to control a crowd and the proper way to do things, such as searching people and vehicle inspections," Grosser said.

Respect key to cultural awareness

Class gives Soldiers understanding

Pvt. James E. Lewis
3rd Brigade Combat Team

Numerous officers and senior NCOs from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team filled two theaters of the After Action Report building to learn about cultural awareness Aug. 10.

The class, which was presented by Islamic cultural experts Dr. Rashad Winas and Anis Said at the Defense Language Institute out of the Presidio of Monterey, Calif., featured slide shows and group discussion.

"This class is really beneficial to Soldiers because we're no longer in Iraq to wage war. We're there to help out and promote peace," said Staff Sgt. Maurice Valentine, psychological operations specialist for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd BCT.

To know a little bit about the people we're helping helps us facilitate that process."

Topics such as Islamic beliefs and the Soldiers' handling of building searches were discussed.

For example, a common Islamic belief holds that if someone compliments a child, he or she must immediately follow it by saying "ma sha Allah" or, "May God protect you."

Iraqis believe that if you compliment someone, you must say this or you will alert the "evil eye" and it will harm the person you complimented, Winas said.

Winas also warns about complimenting an Iraqi on his possessions.

If you admire something an Iraqi has, he will try to give it to you. He will offer you the item three times, and you must politely decline all three times.

Winas also warns against shaking an Iraqi's hand with your left hand.

"The left hand is considered unclean," Winas said.

The quickest way to offend an Iraqi is to shake hands, wave hello or goodbye, or anything of that nature, using your left hand, he said.

Valentine said he has already used some of what he learned in the class at the Joint Readiness Training Center.

"I was talking with a translator at one of the exercises and he showed me a picture of his family," he said. "I retained what they taught us in the class about complimenting people and the 'evil eye,' so I told him he had a nice-looking family and followed that with 'may Allah protect them.'"

Airborne riggers will 'be sure always'

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Without parachute riggers, there wouldn't be airborne. After 11 weeks of training as a 92R at Fort Lee, Va., and Airborne School — you have to be airborne to be a rigger — Pfc. Donald Mikesell, E Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Regiment, arrived at Fort Benning eight months ago to be a parachute rigger.

A rigger's final test while in training gives them an hour to properly pack a chute. Once the Soldier has passed the test, they jump using the chute they packed — it's a confidence booster.

Mikesell is now packing a chute every 10 minutes — he does this all day long.

"It's a strenuous job. You always have to make sure your work is done up to standards," Mikesell said. "It usually doesn't become a stressful job until a malfunction happens."

Every chute Mikesell packs has a record book attached to the risers, which both Mikesell and his inprocessing inspector have to sign and date when the chute is packed. An inprocessing inspector makes sure riggers go over the seven rigger checks needed to make sure the chute is packed correctly.

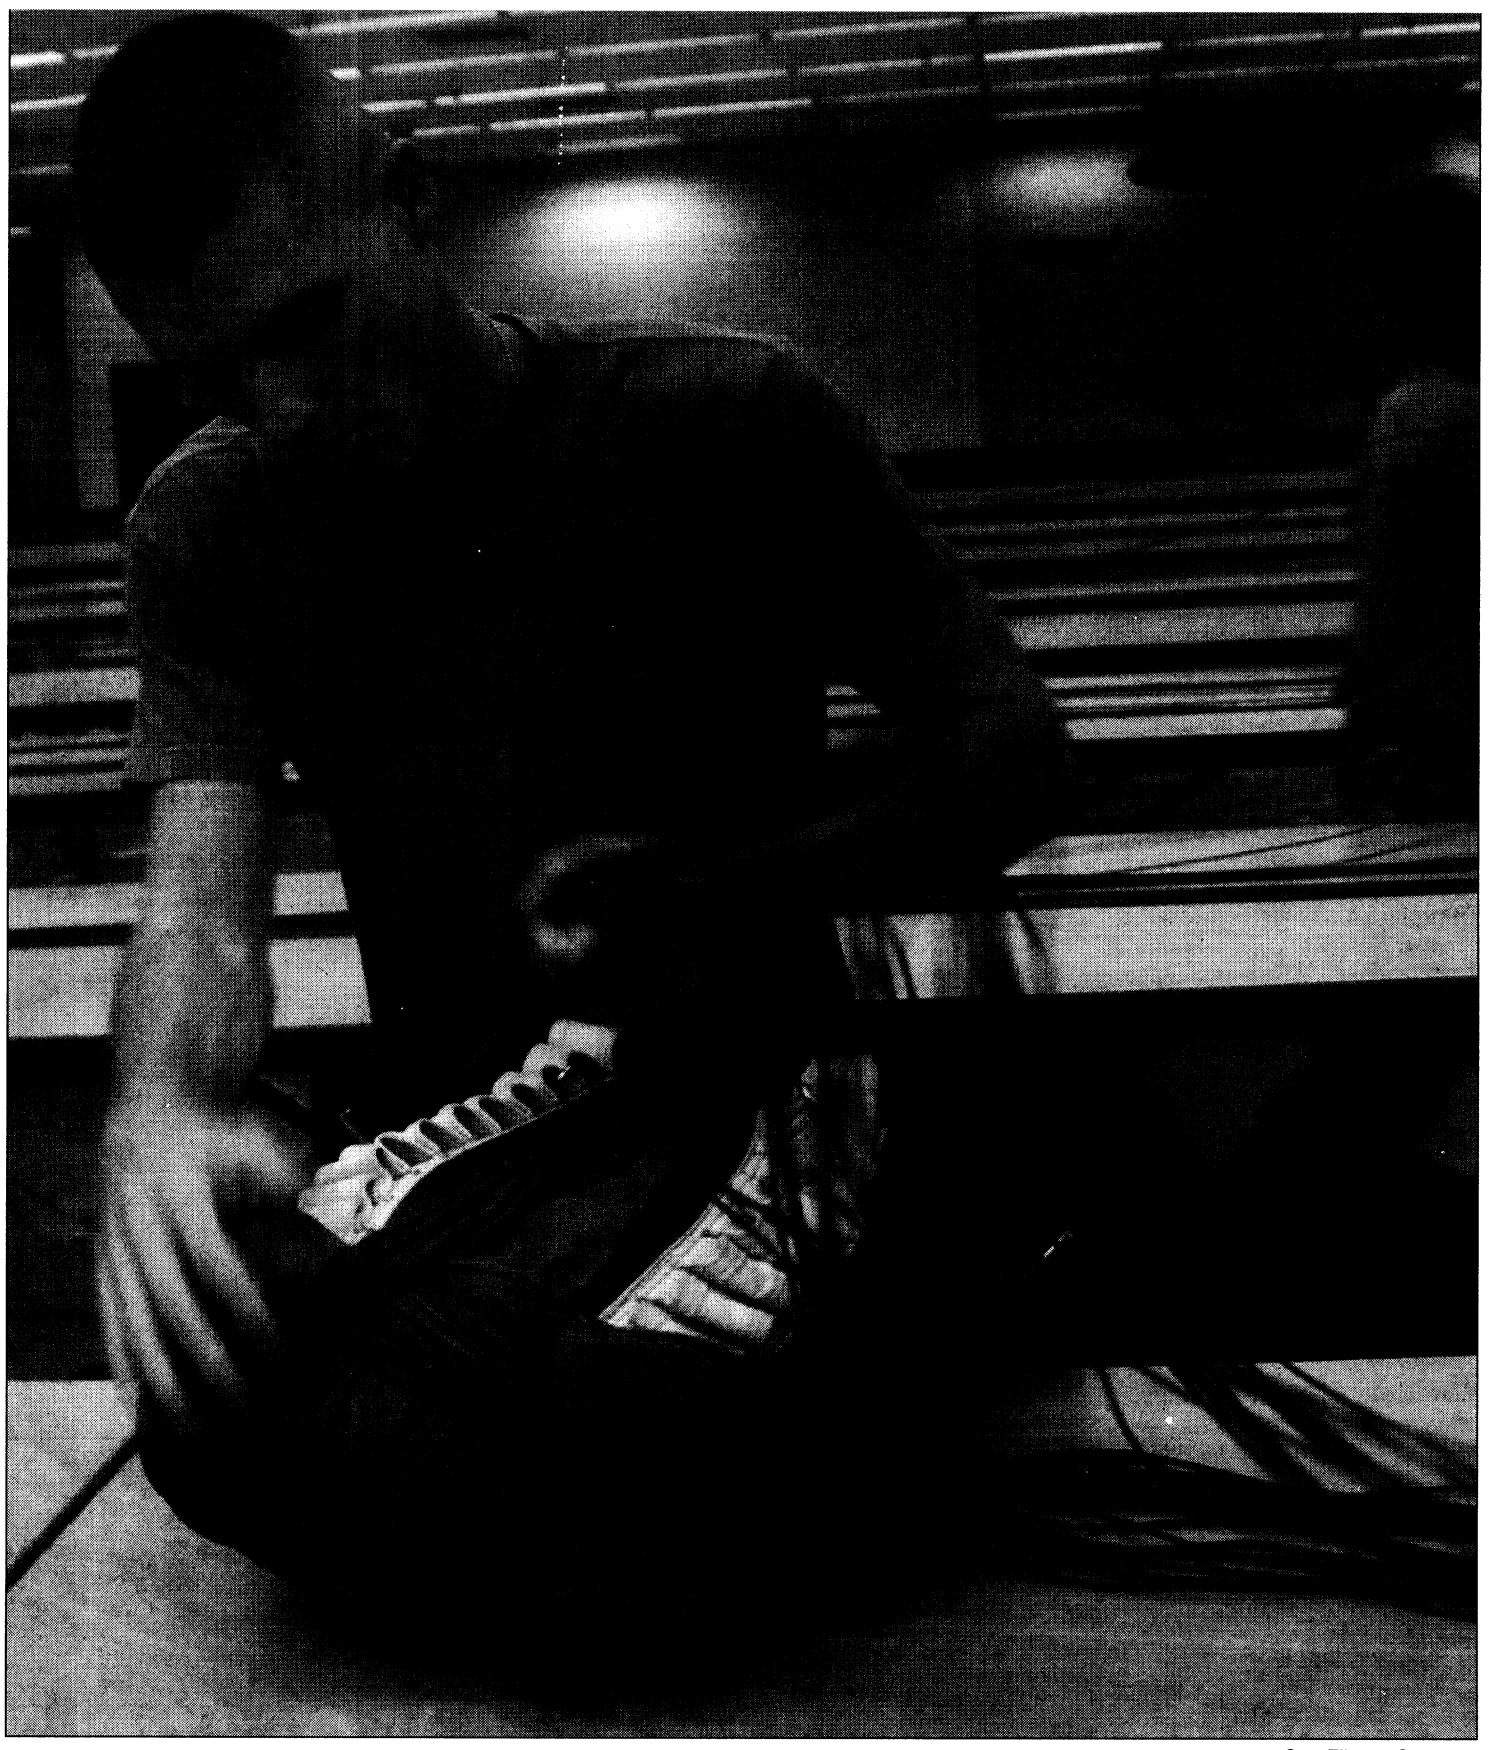
Each rigger packs up to 25 chutes a day, totaling 600 T-10 parachutes a day and 2,400 a week. E Company riggers pack the T-10 and the Modified Improved Reserve Parachute System used at airborne school.

"Anything more than 25 parachutes is a fatigue factor and chutes don't get packed right," said Chief Warrant Officer Dave Alecca, airdrop system technician. "We deal with lives; we have to make sure we do things up to standard always. Our malfunction rate is less than one percent."

Alecca said his facility is the most intense packing facility in the Army. Its mission includes the support of Airborne School, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, three Ranger training battalions, Jump Master and Pathfinder schools and some reserve units.

With all the schools, Alecca said he can have approximately 1,200 Soldiers jump per week.

"Constant work is the hardest part," Mikesell said. "There isn't a break in between packing. But it's kind of laid back. We try to keep the stress level down and maintain military discipline at the same time."



"We check, recheck and balance," Alecca said. "We take things seriously here because we're dealing with lives. We have to be thorough about everything. Our motto is 'I will be sure always."

Alecca said he goes around twice a week, randomly grabbing parachutes and checking them to see if they're packed to standard.

"It keeps them on their toes. The majority of the time they (pass). I know we're good when we meet the mission and don't fall behind," he said. "These guys work on a 25-and-go quota. They have all day to pack 25 chutes and then go home. Sometimes they go early, sometimes they stay late."

"The work becomes monotonous, but not boring," said Sgt. Frederick House, squad leader. "The mission pertains to packing for airborne. It's a good job."

Riggers are always sure!

Ranger Indoctrination Program

Students learn more than just knots in RIP

Spc. Natalie P. Loucks
3rd Brigade Combat Team PAO

Drenched with sweat and steaming from the cool, morning air on their overheated bodies, the students of the Ranger Indoctrination Program at Regimental Training Detachment, 75th Ranger Regiment, limp around their rucksacks digging for dry clothes.

Soldiers, private through specialist who have graduated basic training, advanced individual training and Airborne School, can volunteer for RIP, where they are introduced to the concepts of being a Ranger.

Beginning at 3 a.m., the students are required to complete a 12-mile road march with their weapon and 35-pound rucksack in three hours. This is only one of the many tasks required before graduating RIP.

Throughout the four-week course, students are tested on various physical and mental tasks.

The 5-mile run must be completed in 40 minutes or less. A student must score 70 percent or better in each event of the Army Physical Fitness Test, the Ranger First Response exam and a critical skills test.

The test covers areas of training, such as land navigation, marksmanship and the 12-page "blue book" of Ranger standards, Army policy and Ranger history.

Students eat chow during a brief rest period between missions.

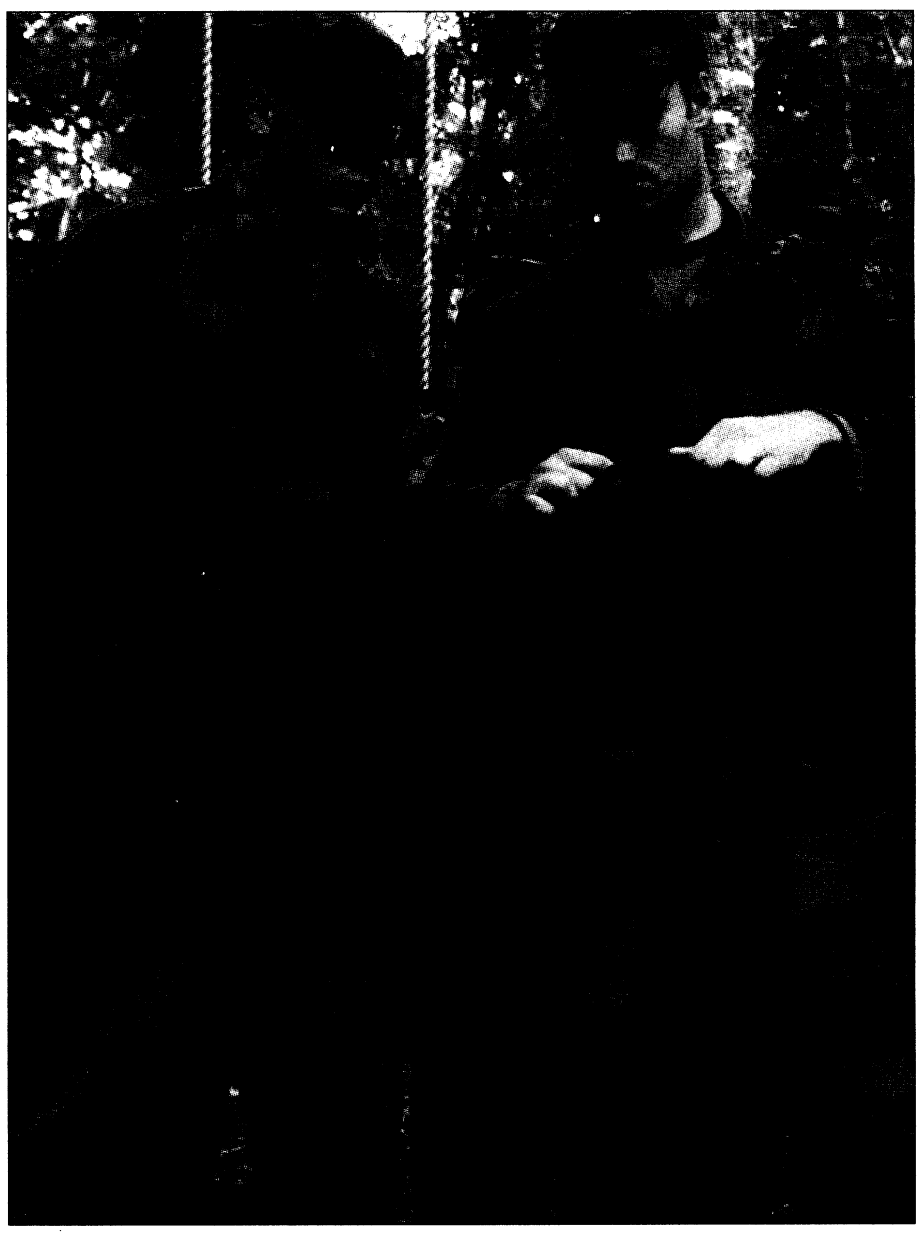
The Combat Water Survival Test includes underwater equipment removal, a 15-meter swim and a "blind drop" during which students fall backwards and blindfolded into the water.

"RIP is not intended for everyone," said 1st Sgt. John Brady, RTD commandant.

The PT test and the Combat Water Survival Test produce the most fall outs, he said.

Although a class begins with 200 students, almost half won't graduate, said Sgt. 1st Class Chad Campbell, NCOIC at RIP. Heat casualties and injuries like sprained ankles and broken bones contribute to the attrition rate. Others simply do not want to be there and quit.

Heat is a major safety issue in all intense military training, Campbell said. RIP students are told to loosen the sleeves on their BDU tops and to pull their pants out of their boots to allow the air to flow.



Students are also encouraged to stay hydrated. Instructors conduct "forced hydration," during which each student must drink a full canteen of water at one time.

During the winter months, heating tents are used to prevent cold weather injuries, which are not as common, but still a risk.

Instructors make sure the students are eating enough of the healthier main courses that are provided in the MREs, instead of just the candy and crackers only.

RIP Soldiers get a minimum of six hours of sleep on regular training nights, so they are well-rested and alert for the next day's events. On nights before high-risk training, such as airborne jumps, students are required to get eight hours of sleep.

Although safety measures are taken, accidents can happen. The average RIP class has about three to five serious heat casualties, said Brady.

A student watches carefully as Staff Sgt. James Ruff, RIP instructor, teaches proper knot tying techniques.

Ranger buddies are the ultimate in safety, Brady said.

"They go everywhere with you. They're another set of eyes, another way of thinking," he said.

Ranger buddies ensure there is always someone watching out. They prevent you from doing the wrong thing, he said.

Why would anyone want to go through something so tough?

"I want a meaningful career, something I can be proud of," said 25-year-old Pfc. Brandon Deckerd, standing a little taller and smiling.

He said he's worked hard all his life.

"I would wake up at 4 a.m., just like I do in the Army, and I would work my hands to the bone all day (before I joined the Army)," he said. "I wanted something both physically and mentally challenging."

The student who shows up to formation the first day wide-eyed with excitement and fear is not the same graduate who leaves RIP wearing the tan beret.

RIP does more than just train troops. Campbell said it builds confidence and teamwork. It's a humbling experience that helps Soldiers look further into themselves than they have ever before, finding fears, strength and above all pride.

President: Announces changes in force distribution peace."

America's current force posture in Europe, Bush said, was designed to guard against Soviet aggression.

"The threat no longer exists," he said.

The decision to redistribute forces comes after three years of study and consultations, Bush said.

"We've consulted closely with our allies and with Congress. We've examined the challenges posed by today's threats and emerging threats."

The result, he said, will be "a more agile and flexible force."

As the new global posture takes shape during the next 10 years, Bush said, more U.S. troops will be stationed at, and deployed from, home bases in the United States.

"We'll move some of our troops and capabilities to new locations so they can surge quickly to deal with unexpected threats," Bush said. "We'll take advantage of 21st century military technologies to rapidly deploy increased combat power."

The new plan, the president said, will strengthen U.S. alliances and build new partnerships around the world, and will reduce stress on military people and their families.

"Although we'll still have a significant presence overseas, under the plan I'm announcing today, over the next 10 years we will bring home about 60,000 to 70,000 uniformed personnel and about 100,000 family members and civilian employees," Bush said.

This, he explained, would give service members more time on the home front, as well as more predictability and fewer moves over a career.

"Our military spouses will have fewer job changes, greater stability, more time for their kids and to spend time with their families at home," he added.

Taxpayers will benefit from cost savings realized by closing obsolete overseas bases and facilities, the president said.

CFC: To begin

at a ceremony in Washington, D.C., in May. Cain attended that ceremony with former Infantry Training Brigade commander Col. Brian Baldy, whose Soldiers contributed the lion's share of the money last year.

Cain said this year's kick-off comes almost a month earlier than last, allowing the campaign to finish before the 3rd Brigade deployment and giving agencies, like Santa's Castle, a chance to get up and running and get their holiday fund-raising done.

The CFC offices will move back into the Wachovia building on Wold Street and will open next week and have the campaign materials. More than 150 Soldiers and civilians are trained for the campaign each year and the final training will be held at 9 a.m. Thursday in Classroom 6, Infantry Hall.

Among the materials is the booklet listing nearly 1,600 agencies people cam donate to. Those agencies, Cain said, have to have low administrative costs —less than 25 percent — or they can't be included in the brochure. In some instances, an agency with higher costs may be included, but must commit to lowering those costs.

"We hold to that," Cain said, "and we turn down agencies that haven't gotten those costs down, so people can be assured that what they're giving is going where they want it to go."

Cain admits to feeling "so Pollyanna" when she talks about the CFC campaign and is sincere in her desire to go back to Washington, D.C., for another award. Fort Benning, she said, did an excellent job compared to other post of the same size.

"I wish people would step up to the plate," she said, "because (everyone) is touched by something in a lifetime and it's represented in that booklet."

And stepping up to the plate doesn't mean anyone has to give their life savings. Just a few dollars a pay period can make a huge difference, she said, not only in the campaign, but for the agencies. And giving through payroll deduction is the most painless way she can think of.

Cain said the local campaign raised less than $500,000 when she began working here five years ago and no one donated at the $1,000 "Leadership" level. Now there are eight. One of last year's donors, a lieutenant, gave his $1,000 anonymously. When Cain saw where the money was going, she said it tugged at her heartstrings

That, she said, is only one of the good stories from Fort Benning's efforts.

Since Cain personally inputs all of the data, she looks at the charity codes, especially for the ITB Soldiers. Those codes, she said, say a lot about who the Soldiers are and what they're all about.

"To be so young and start to instill this (giving)," she said, "I just want to go out and hug them all and say 'thank you.'"

All leaders and key persons should attend the kickoff. Tickets are $7 and can be obtained by calling Janie Pearson at 545-5607.

"enormous" amounts of medication into little Ethan in the fervent attempt to control his blood levels.

Once there, it took doctors two hours to remove Gittins' left kidney, which they rushed to Ethan where he lay waiting in another room.

The surgeries were successful, Gittins said, and a year later, "Ethan's gained 10 pounds, he's grown a few inches ... He has more energy than he's ever had in his life."

Meanwhile, Gittins has recovered fully and said giving up a kidney hasn't changed her quality of life in the least.

"Of course, there's risk involved," she said, explaining that undergoing surgery could be more dangerous for her now, and car accidents and extreme sports could now cause more damage than they would've before.

"But I would avoid those things anyway," she said. "And the benefits outweigh the cost. Definitely."

Gittins said the experience was made easier through the support of her husband, Capt. Timothy Gittins, company commander for B Company, 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga.

"He was concerned, as any spouse would be, but he totally backed me," she said.

And his unit was just as supportive — his command granted him leave to accompany Gittins to Iowa for the transplant and to stay with her while she recovered.

As much as the experience means to her, Gittins said helping others doesn't need to be dramatic; it just needs to be done.

"I really believe in giving everything you can for the needs of other people," she said. "Whether you give a body part or money or time, you're helping others in their time of need."

House of Heroes to fix needy homes

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

"I ask all Americans to consider how you can give someone in need a reason to be thankful ... Every act of love and generosity, however small it may seem, is significant. Every time you reach out to a neighbor in need, you touch a life, you improve your community and you strengthen our nation."

—President George Bush, Radio Address, Nov. 30, 2002

Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians met Aug. 17 for Team Captain Training for the fifth annual House of Heroes.

The House of Heroes is a nonprofit organization serving the nation's military and public safety veterans and their spouses who may be disabled or living on a fixed income. Teams of volunteers perform minor repairs and make improvements using supplies and equipment donated to the effort.

Last year, teams in the tricommunity worked on 30 homes. This year's goal is 50, even though there is no significant increase in funding, said HOH community volunteer Carl Hopp.

> "You don't have to be skilled in home repair. The best volunteers aren't. They just have a willingness to work and a desire to do a good job."
> Carl Hopp
> House of Heroes community volunteer

Hopp said the HOH projects will be more limited in scope than those in the past, and each house has a budget of $500. Typical work includes cleaning, painting, rescreening doors and windows, basic carpentry and gardening and landscaping.

"You don't have to be skilled in home repair," Hopp told the team captains. "The best volunteers aren't. They just have a willingness to work and a desire to do a good job."

HOH volunteers began with one house in 2000, and have assisted 69 homeowners in the tricommunity since then.

As part of the training, Hopp talked the captains through the key points of the program, offering advice and emphasizing certain aspects.

Faith media team to visit Chicago

You'll remember them as the team of junior journalists who received international recognition last year for their documentary on The Making of an Airborne Soldier.

The team of 10 filmed and produced the video during their fifth-grade year at Stowers and traveled to Hollywood last year, as sixth-graders at Faith, to receive their award.

They're back, now seventh-graders. Some have come and gone, and the team has grown to include 12 students. Under the direction of Lorri Blanchard, they produce Faith's Warrior Bear Educational Television and a Web site, www.am.dodea.edu/benning/faith.

It was the team's video, Rangers: No Pain, No Gain, and Web page, Influential Native American Tribes of Georgia, both produced last year, that earned the team a return trip to the International Student Media Festival, this time in Chicago, Oct. 19 to 23.

The festival, which features film, editing and computer workshops, is sponsored by the Association for Educational Communications and Technology.

Wilson, BCTB team up for school partnership

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

It's back to school time for Basic Combat Training Brigade Soldiers as well as Wilson Elementary School students.

Unit representatives met with school faculty for a planning meeting last week to organize this year's Partnership in Education between the two.

Wilson principal Phyllis Parker said the school's P.I.E. program with BCTB is a blessing for both the students and faculty and the cadre and Soldiers of BCTB as well.

"Every time BCTB gets a new commander, we think it just can't get any better," she said. "But it always does."

Last year, the partnership was selected as the best in the state of Georgia, said partnership coordinator and gifted and talented teacher Margaret Koger.

The school has four main programs that are implemented with BCTB, Koger said.

Geared to enhance the quality of education, character development and life experiences for students, the programs demand commitment from BCTB and flexibility from the school faculty.

The school's Partners and Adopted Learners program brings Soldiers to every classroom on a regular basis to help with instruction. And a mentoring program geared towards selected third- through fifth-graders teams Soldiers up with struggling students for a one-on-one session once a week.

BCTB's contributions don't stop there, Parker said.

The unit sends cadre to instruct a Leadership Academy for a core group of selected fourth- and fifth-graders. The program works to build a foundation of skills in tomorrow's leaders, she said.

And another important mission of the partnership is to instill values in the students at a young age, Parker said.

This is accomplished through Army values instruction.

Every month a drill sergeant gives a class on a selected Army value via the school's close-circuit television network. The faculty works to incorporate that value into their curriculum for the month, always reinforcing the initial session with the Soldier.

"There are usually Soldiers in the building every day." Koger said. "We are absolutely thrilled with our partners."

Instruction and school work aren't all the BCTB Soldiers are about though.

School media specialist Wanda Person said the Soldiers know how to take it down a notch and have fun with the kids, too.

"Our Incredibly Terrific Kid Day is the day when each student gets a letter from a parent or significant adult in their lives telling them why they are awesome," she said. "The Soldiers play mailman by distributing the letters and then spend time helping the kids read and share them with their classes.

ASK THE JUDGE

Capt. Julie Heumphreus
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Got your eye on that shiny new car parked on the dealer's lot?

A: Beware! Buying a car too quickly could leave you in debt — with bad credit and no car. Here are a few tips to consider before you jump behind the wheel.

Find out what the car is worth before you buy. Many dealers hike prices to take advantage of you.

They can tell if you haven't done your research on the price of a particular car, and they may use this knowledge to their advantage and raise the price of the vehicle to make a bigger profit.

Look at the "blue book" value of the kind of car you want to buy. It costs nothing online at www.edmunds.com or www.kbb.com. Remember, the manufacturer's suggested retail price is a suggested price.

The dealer sticker price, usually on a supplemental sticker, is the MSRP plus additional dealer mark-ups or options, like dealer preparation and undercoating.

The invoice price is usually thousands of dollars lower than the sticker price.

Many dealers will negotiate for less than the MSRP, even going to the invoice price, to gain your business. Start your negotiations low and settle on a price you think is fair. Be suspicious of any price over MSRP.

Get financing before you buy.

If you think you're getting a fair price on the car, be careful. Car dealerships can also take advantage of you when you apply for financing through the dealer. They may offer a fair price, then charge upwards of 20 percent interest on the loan. You will end up paying thousands of dollars more than the car is worth.

Check with reputable banks and credit unions, as they may offer a loan with a lower percentage rate.

Dealerships make a huge profit by offering high interest loans. They are betting you won't be able to make the payments. If so, they can repossess the car, and you will still owe on the debt.

Think twice about all the "extras." Dealers will hit you up for "gap insurance" or "extended warranty services." New cars and trucks come with warranties, so you usually don't need to purchase extra.

Additional service contracts offered by the dealership may or may not provide coverage beyond the manufacturer's warranty.

Remember that a warranty is included in the price of the car, while a service contract costs extra.

Before deciding to purchase a service contract, read it carefully and consider the following questions: What is the difference between the coverage under the warranty and the coverage under the service contract? What repairs are covered? Is routine maintenance included? Who pays for the labor? Who pays for the parts? Who performs the repairs? Can repairs be made elsewhere? How long does the service contract last? What are the cancellation and refund policies?

Beware of "gap" insurance offered by the dealership. Obtaining insurance from a legitimate insurance agency is a better option.

Other options, like rust protection and fabric protection, are also tack-on extras that are generally unnecessary. Don't fall for these offers.

The salesperson is not your best friend. Salespeople usually work on commission, and they want to sell you a car for the highest price possible.

They may be friendly.

They may smile and offer you a soda.

They may make you think they have your best interest in mind, but be careful.

Be a cautious buyer.

Bring copies of the MSRP and invoice price of the car you wish to buy. Negotiate a price. Don't feel pressured to buy. Always be willing to walk away. Remember, the same or similar car will still be there tomorrow.

Come to the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate before you sign the contract. You can have the contract and financing reviewed by a legal assistance attorney to make sure the dealership isn't taking you for a ride.

Make an appointment with us before you sign on the dotted line — we can help you save money free of charge.

The Legal Assistance number is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

of the Chicago Tribune," said Blanchard, who transferred from Stowers to Faith the same year the members of the award-winning Stowers News Network made their leap to sixth-grade.

"We submitted three entries, and two of them won," she said. "You can't beat those odds."

The trip will not be all work and no play, Blanchard said. The students will have the opportunity to spend a day at Six Flags.

Team members will be visiting local businesses and hosting a yard sale to raise money for the trip.

For more information, call Blanchard at 545-5524.

Heroes: Make vets feel at home

In the next week, captains will receive a packet of information from the HOH detailing the scope of work for their team's house. They'll then need to meet the homeowner and get a look at the site, Hopp said. This enables the team to prioritize work and assemble tools and materials before the Sept. 10 start date.

Teams will have resources and help available to them should they encounter more extensive repairs or damage than they anticipated, he said, and reminded the captains that not all of their volunteers needed to be skilled.

"Do work to the best of your ability," Hopp said. "When you do that, quality springs out."

The most important thing, he said, is it's not about the house; it's about the people inside.

And to take care of the people in the house while work is in progress — the end date is Sept. 24 — team captains should be looking for that special volunteer to serve as the homeowners' companion. That person, Hopp said, is the homeowners "cheerleader," keeping them on a "steady keel" during the repairs.

"For some (homeowners), this causes considerable stress," Hopp said. "For others, it is a moment of great joy. And workers could be the first visitors to the house in years."

The formal ceremony marking the end of the project will be held at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center on Sept. 24. Homeowners receive a flag that has been flown over the Capitol. Workers must be at least 16 years old, and all volunteers must complete and sign a consent form before any work can begin.

For more information, call Janie Pearson, the Fort Benning representative at 545-5607 or the HOH office at 494-1111.

P.I.E.: Upper for kids, troops, faculty

"Just watching those children read the letters is really moving."

Koger, Parker and Person said the sharing is a two-way street.

The school puts together goodie bags for trainees on holidays like Christmas and Valentine's Day to help with morale.

"We try to get a battalion that is about to graduate so they actually get to eat the goodies instead of just looking at them for a few minutes before the drill sergeants take them away," Person said.

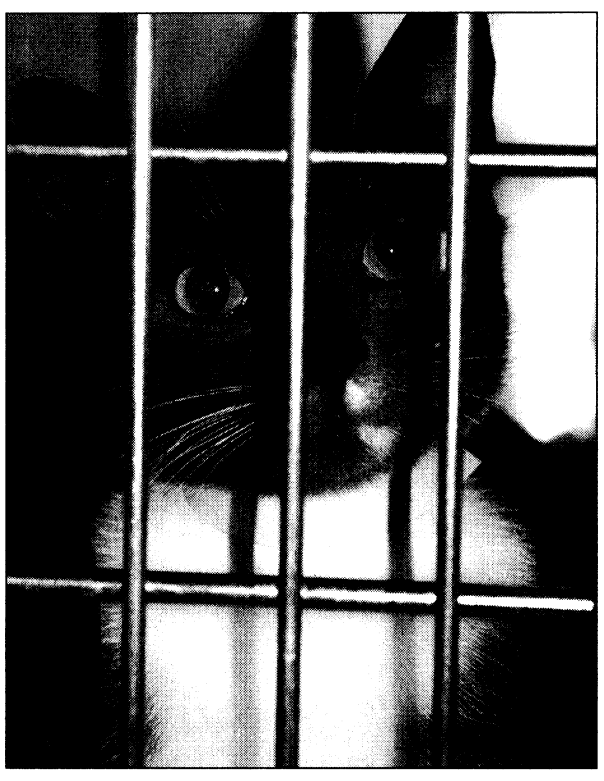
On Thanksgiving, classes make table decorations for BCTB dining facilities, and kindergartners usually do some Christmas caroling and graduation singing performances to help out.

Students frequently go to Sand Hill to view training and, when it is possible, trainees get a break from the rigors of training to come to the school and help with field days.

The two-way partnership is one BCTB deputy commander Lt. Col. Kelvin Scott said is important to the well-being of his Soldiers and the students at Wilson.

"The BCTB Soldiers are rewarded by the opportunity to share in the development of the character of our youth," he said. "The cadre always return to duty feeling refreshed and positive about their contributions."

The balance of mission requirements and selfless service isn't a difficult one for his Soldiers to maintain, Scott said.



"Our mission is very challenging," he said. "However, we have many Soldiers who choose to volunteer to support our partnership with Wilson."

He said that the juggling act is a small sacrifice for the rewards of the youth development.

Students who are exposed to the benefits of the partnership have improved academic scores, better values and a greater sense that Soldiers are part of their extended family, Scott said.

"We are looking forward to another exciting year," Scott said. "The experience is priceless!"

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

One might expect that I like to shop. After all, I'm a girl, I'm young, and aside from a growing collection of bar tabs, I have no real expenses in life.

But I am one of the few girls out there to whom a trip to the mall is absolute torture, to be hurried and done with as quickly as possible.

In fact, I try to limit the punishment that is shopping to a few "special" times throughout the year — two days before Christmas, when I'm too lazy to do laundry, when the canned goods have run out and the Chinese delivery guy absolutely refuses to visit my house again ...

This weekend, though, I just might make an exception.

It wasn't until Wednesday morning that I heard about the Junior League's 50th annual Attic Sale Saturday, but I knew as soon as I heard it, I'm meant to be there.

Why else would I have come home to a $207 check in my mailbox Saturday morning? It's fate.

And it will be the best $200 I ever spent.

By all accounts, the attic sale — which, by the way, is actually at the Columbus Civic Center — is the sale of the year.

You'll find anything and everything — clothes, boots, electronics, car seats and baby clothes, knick knacks and cookware ... the list is long, believe me.

And the prices are purported to be the best you'll find anywhere.

In fact, last year, one lucky patron left with a whopping 100 items, having spent a measly $65.

Did she need all that stuff? I highly doubt it. But if you're going to shop, you may as well do it right.

Ladies, this is definitely the kind of place where you can come home with a carload of stuff, grab the truck, go pick the rest up, come back home and say, "But, honey, look how much I saved."

Of course, if it were a perfect world, you alone would be reading this, conjuring up all the great deals you're going to steal this Saturday. But this thing is no secret.

You're going to be neck-and-neck with people who've been going to the attic sale since they were kids and women who know what they're doing.

They'll be the ones camped out in front of the Civic Center with sleeping bags and a cooler at 2:30 a.m. They'll be the ones who make it through the door first and make a beeline for where they know the steals will be. (Piece of advice: Follow them!)

So, if you're really serious about your bargain-shopping endeavors, you just might want to join them, because this sale is supposed to be huge.

It kicks off at 8 a.m. and will run til noon, then will pick up again from 1 to 3 p.m. But don't be a late-comer — I've heard the "good stuff" is usually gone by 10.

It will cost you a dollar to get in (I know, I know — prices are steep this days, aren't they?), but it's all for a good cause.

All proceeds from this sale go to the "many community agencies and programs the league supports."

So don't be shy. Pack a thermos and some sandwiches, grab a few friends to keep you company, and stake out a good spot in line in the wee hours of the morning Saturday. Heck, it's right there by Broadway — may as well make a night of it and hit up Fountain City or grab a slice at Picasso's or a beer at Scruffy's, then head over.

Ooh, and you might want to wear a mouthpiece — I heard the shopping gets a little competitive.

Complacency eats away at marriage foundation

Pray for marriages — yours and theirs

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) James R. Foxworth
Infantry Training Brigade

More than half of the marriages in the United States end in divorce. This has been the trend for many years.

What can we as friends or chaplains do to help reverse this trend?

The more we educate our Soldiers and families on positive methods of communicating, the more positive impact we will make.

We need to make certain our marriages are divorce-proof. Pastor and author Chuck Swindoll asks a great question: "Are there any termites in your troth (betrothal)?"

One of those termites could be complacency.

1st Corinthians 10:12 offers a formidable warning to the one who thinks this infestation of termites can't reach into his marriage.

How many have fallen into affairs and divorce after allowing their marriages to settle into romantic complacency?

We need to resurrect the true meaning of commitment. In this age of lite beer, lite syrup and lite salad dressing, it's no wonder we exhibit lite commitment, too.

REFLECTIONS

But for a Christian, commitment is a sacred vow and promise to God. It's two people who hang in there during the best and worst of times and who won't quit.

It's a husband and wife who find working through problems much more rewarding than walking out.

We need to pass to our children the real definition of commitment while continually exposing the lies that their peers and the media propagate.

A person who does not understand his or her ultimate accountability to God has little reason to fulfill a vow or commitment to another human being.

There's another type of complacency we need to address: We need to fight for other marriages besides our own.

A growing number of Christians, upon hearing of the hurt and anguish of their friends, do not reach for their Bibles, but, instead, hastily offer a parachute and say, "Bail out!"

Or they simply sit by, saying and doing nothing. They just let it happen.

Hey, I understand. When there's only a slim thread of hope, what are you going to do?

You and I have got to go to the guy who just left his family and tell him, it isn't going to be that easy. He can't just walk out on them.

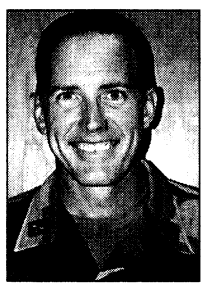
And that woman in our Sunday School class? She can't leave her husband for this other guy and think things will be business as usual. Plead, beg and pray with them. And get them some help.

Be prayer-encouragers with people to form a "till death do us part" bond with their mate. And keep praying that God will purge our land of divorce.

Do you know any couples who are struggling in their marriages?

Be an encourager and help them.

Dating 'practice' prevents major malfunction later



Time is test of true reliability, compatibility in relationships

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

I was a "buck sergeant" in Special Forces at Fort Devens, Mass., no more than a month out of Jumpmaster School when it happened.

On a bitingly cold March morning, standing next to the rigger shed to get out of the hawk that was blowing, I started to JMPI (parachute inspect) the major suited up in front of me. To this day, I can remember not believing what I was seeing.

Dozens of times — no, hundreds of times — I'd practiced tracing the static line from my upstretched arm down to the initial loop on the pack tray. I'd pull the static line away from that pack loop, checking the rubber band holding it there, and move on to the next step in the sequence. This time, however, I paused, and I repeated the previous step — and then I did see it again a third time — and then I stopped the sequence altogether.

Hawkins

You see, upon inspection, something was very wrong — the static line was routed through the pack opening loop, not simply attached via a rubber band. Now that may mean nothing to you, but I guarantee it will get the rapt attention of any jumper or jumpmaster! It's what's called a major malfunction, and it can get somebody seriously hurt. I was never so thankful that the Army had given me superb training — a jumper had been saved a whole lot of heartache.

This week we are on step three of How To Avoid Marrying A Jerk. And just like parachuting, relationships demand that we "check things out" before we take a leap, less we wind up in a big hurt!

So far we've talked about two of the areas that we've got to eyeball closely:

Step One — Get to know him or her. Make sure that you are truly getting to know the person with whom you're thinking of taking a leap. What do you need to know? How about what fun is, and is not, for that person; what his or her family background is like; and what his or her faith factor is? Take at least four seasons (one year) to get to know somebody!

Step Two — Earn, learn to trust him or her. The formula for trust is $K+P^2/T=TRUST$ (Knowing + Proven Performance "over" Time=Trust.) Trust is all about a demonstrated track record. To avoid a malfunction, you have to watch for consistency in someone's character and competence over time. Now, on to the next step:

Step Three — Test your reliance on him or her. When you know someone well, then you can begin to trust someone well, then you can begin to rely on someone well, right? What happens if you rely on someone you don't really know — or can't really trust? Doesn't make sense, does it?

Reliance is the ability to have your primary needs (nobody gets all their needs) met by your mate-to-be. Do they limit withdrawals in your life and multiply deposits in your love bank? If so, great — if not, "Danger, Will Robinson!"

That's Step Three — more next week! Meanwhile, join me for our series on How To Avoid Marrying a Jerk — What Every Parent Ought To Teach and What Every Single's Gotta Know" at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill. Or give me a ring at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760.

I look forward to meeting you!

AMU troops tough it out at Olympics

U.S. Army photos

Sgt. 1st Class Bret Erickson from the Army Marksmanship Unit, Fort. Benning, Ga., competes in Trap shotgun shooting in the 2004 Olympics in Athens, Greece. SFC Ericksons' competition heat was one of the first ever at the newly built facility at Markopoulo, just outside Athens.

AMU troops miss Olympic shooting finals

Erickson enters finals in third place, but doesn't close deal

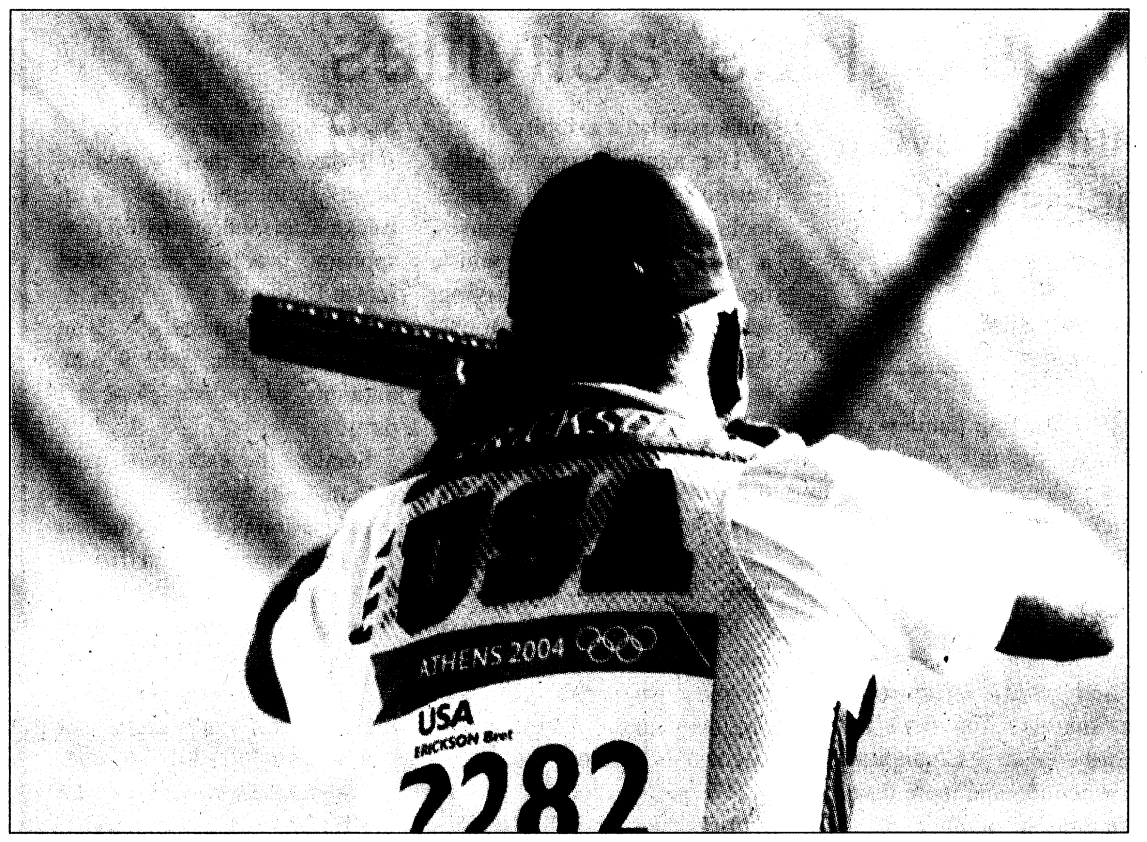
ATHENS — Two Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit failed to reach the finals of their events in the 2004 Summer Olympic Games Aug. 17 at Markopoulo Olympic Shooting Centre.

Three-time Olympian Sgt. 1st Class Bret Erickson, 43, of Bennington, Neb., finished in a two-way tie for 13th place in men's double trap shotgun shooting. He scored 130 points in three qualifying rounds. The cutoff to make the six-shooter final was 135 points.

Ahmed Almaktoum of United Arab Emirates won the gold medal by equaling the Olympic final record of 189 points. He qualified for the anticlimactic final with 144 points, another Olympic standard. India's Rajyavardhan Rathore took the silver medal with 179 points. China's Zheng Wang won the bronze medal with 178.

Two-time Olympian Sgt. 1st Class Daryl Szarenski, 36, of Saginaw, Mich., finished in a three-way tie for 15th place in men's 50-meter pistol shooting. He finished the qualification round with 554 points. The cutoff to make the eight-shooter final was 562 points.

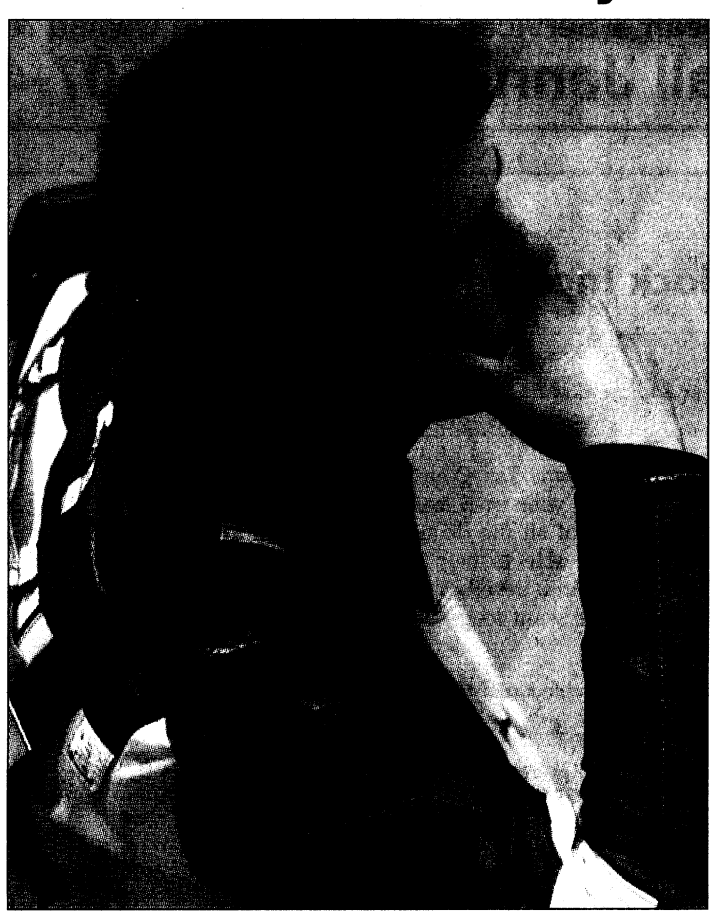
Russia's Mikhail Nestruev won the gold medal with 663.3 points. Korea's Jong Oh Jin won the silver medal with a 661.5 total. Democratic People's Republic of Korea's Jong Su Kim took the bronze medal with 657.7 points.



In earlier competition, Erickson finished 13th in Olympic men's trap shooting Aug. 14 through 15.

"I got a bad bird early in the first round," said Erickson, who was troubled by the wind. "It got up in the air and when I shot it jumped about six feet up. And when I went up after it to shoot with the second shot, it dropped about 10 feet.

"It got in my head and I couldn't get it out. It was just one of those deals with the added pressure of being the Olympics, once it got in there, I couldn't get it out."



Erickson entered the finals in third place but failed to close the deal.

Team USA's other entry, Lance Bade, 34, of Vancouver, Wash., finished fifth in the trap final.

Shooter overcomes tricky trigger to finish eight in Olympic air rifle

Tim Hipps

Sgt. 1st Class Jason Parker, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, studies the scoreboard to learn that he is the final shooter to advance to the final round of the 10-meter air rifle competition in the 2004 Summer Olympics at Markopoulo Olympic Shooting Center.

Parker loses hold on 2003 world record

Tim Hipps
Army News Service

ATHENS, Greece — Sgt. 1st Class Jason Parker watched his world record fall Aug. 16 while shooting to an eighth-place finish in the men's 10-meter air rifle event in the Summer Olympic Games.

China's Qinan Zhu won the gold medal with a final world record of 702.7 points, eclipsing Parker's world mark of 702.5 established at the 2003 Munich World Cup.

"The scores keep going up," Parker said. "It seems like a world record is set about every year or two. It just gives you another goal to shoot for. You just have to do it on the day that counts."

China's Jie Li won the silver medal with 701.3 points. Slovakia's Josef Gonci took the bronze medal with a 697.4 total at Markopoulo Olympic Shooting Centre.

Parker, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning, Ga., quickly shot a perfect sixth series score of 100 points in the qualification round.

"That's the only way to make the final when it's that close because that's how they break the tie," said Parker's coach, Army Reserve Maj. David Johnson of the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program. "That gave him a chance."

Parker studied the scoreboard to see his name land in the final spot of the eight-marksman final.

He then notched 100.5 points in the final round to finish with a 694.5 total.

"I got in the final and didn't take advantage of it, just shot a couple of bad shots," Parker said. "But the guy who won it shot a world record so I would've had to been on it the whole match."

Parker overcame a tricky trigger that contributed to two costly 98-point series in his qualification round. He managed 99 or 100 points in his other four stanzas.

"I had a little technical problem with my rifle," explained Parker, 30, of Omaha, Neb. "The trigger wasn't functioning quite right, but I got it fixed."

"The gun broke," said Johnson, 40, a native of Mount Holly, N.J., who lives in Colorado Springs, Colo. "I took it and ran it down the hall to the gunsmith, had it repaired, and came back. It affected him for several shots, but he did a real good job of dealing with it."

Parker already is looking forward to the 2008 Beijing Games.

"There were certain parts I thought I shot very, very good, and there were other parts that I didn't handle too good," he said. "I'm going to take those parts that I didn't handle too well, learn from them, and come back in four more years a stronger shooter.

Johnson performs well, but fails to reach final event

Tim Hipps

ATHENS — Spc. Hattie Johnson opened and closed her Olympic 10-meter air rifle competition with a bang Saturday, but she failed to reach the final of the first medal event in the Athens Games.

"My hardest shots were my first shot and my last shot," said Johnson, who finished in a five-way tie for 14th among 44 competitors. "My hand was shaking and I put the gun up and down a few times, but I thought to myself: 'This isn't going to happen to me because I'm nervous. I'm going to hold it all together and I'm going to shoot a 10.'"

Johnson did just that on her first and final of 40 shots and scored 394 of 400 possible points in the qualification round at Markopoulo Olympic Shooting Centre.

"After I shot my first shot, it was like a huge weight was lifted right off of me, and I was like, 'OK, let's shoot,'" Johnson said. "Of course I would've loved to make the final, but overall I had a very good performance for me. This is the highest international score that I have shot. For me, I succeeded."

China's Li Du, who tallied 398 points in the qualification round, won the first Gold Medal of Olympiad XXVIII with a final Olympic record of 502 points.

Russia's Lioubov Galkina, who shot an Olympic record 399 in qualifications, won the silver medal with 501.5 points. Czech Republic's Katerina Kurkova took the bronze.

Johnson, 22, a medic with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, said she left all she had on the range.

"When I finished shooting I was exhausted," she said. "Every body part felt like it was sore and hurt. I had a great performance for myself mentally and physically."

Johnson was a beneficiary of competing in the opening event by getting to spend the remainder of her stay in Greece with her No. 1 fan, father Jeff Ponti, who came from her hometown, Athol, Idaho, to watch her compete abroad for the first time.

"You have no idea how proud I am. It's just incredible," Ponti said. "How she finished is irrelevant to me. Just her getting here is absolutely unbelievable."

AMU shooter finishes 13th, but doesn't reach finals

ATHENS – Sgt. 1st Class Daryl Szarenski finished in a four-way tie for 13th place in the men's 10-meter air pistol event Saturday at Markopoulo Olympic Shooting Centre in the Athens Olympic Games.

Szarenski, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, came within three points of reaching the final round of eight competitors.

"It didn't really go wrong at all, I just didn't have a high enough score," said Szarenski, 36, of Saginaw, Mich. "I finished and it was like, 'Well, it wasn't a smoker but nothing really went bad.'"

China's Yifu Wang won the gold medal with a final Olympic record of 690 points. Russia's Mikhail Nestruev, who set an Olympic qualifying record with 591 points, won the silver medal with 689.8 points. Russian Vladimir Isakov took the bronze medal with a 684.3 total.

The other American entry, Jason Turner of Rochester, N.Y., shot a score of 571 to finish in a tie for 36th place.

Szarenski shot well early in the match but he was off on just enough shots to finish with a qualifying score of 579 points. The cutoff for the final round was 582.

> "It didn't really go wrong at all; I just didn't have a high enough score. I finished and it was like, 'Well, it wasn't a smoker, but nothing really went bad.'"
> Sgt. 1st Class Daryl Szarenski
> U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooter

"I shot pretty much like I always do," he said. "There was some nervousness at the beginning, but nothing more than any other match. These are the same guys we shoot against in the World Cups and World Championships. It's not like I tried harder here than I would at a World Cup, it was just kind of a medium day and you needed a good day.

"If a couple 9.9s would've been 10.0s, look at how many points I would've picked up. To get into the medal round was well within reach. It just takes a little bit of luck sometimes and it wasn't here today."

Szarenski had another Olympic shot in 50-meter free pistol Tuesday.

"I'm probably going to kick myself around today a little bit and get back into it tomorrow at nine o'clock and start working," he said. "There's not any big thing I have to do. I really don't know anything that I can change because it was right there."

Szarenski finished 25th in 50-meter free pistol in the 2000 Sydney Games. He feels fortunate to have another shot in Greece.

"I'll just see if I can get my game a little bit better," he said. "I've still got another day so it's not over yet. My only desire is to win a medal. That's the only reason I came here. I have plenty of time to regroup; I'll be alright."

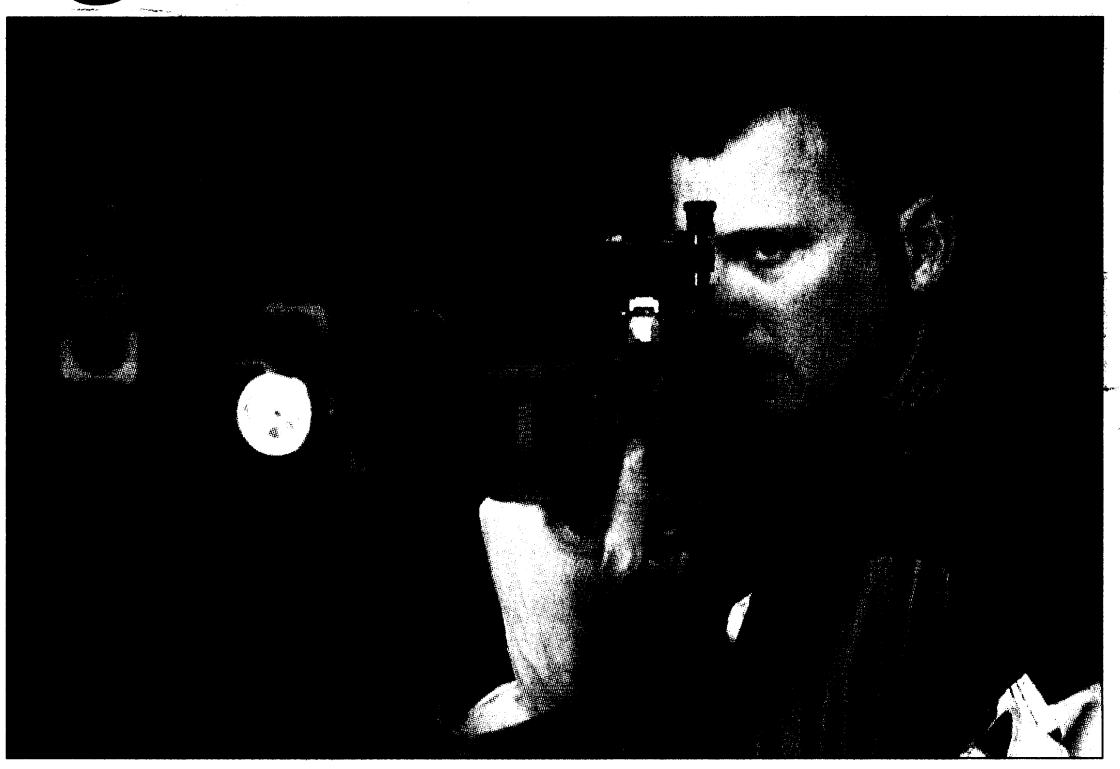
ATHENS, Greece — Maj. Michael Anti, a marksman in the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program, won a Silver Medal Sunday in men's 50-meter three-position rifle shooting in the 2004 Summer Olympic Games.

"I wish I had the gold but I'm just excited to have a medal," said Anti, 40, of Winterville, N.C., assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning.

"We have such a great unit and such a great Army for them to allow me to do this," he said. "There are people overseas risking their lives to allow me to compete here, so it's a big deal."

China's Zhanbo Jia won the Gold Medal with 1,264.5 points. Anti took the Silver Medal with 1,263.1 points. Austria's Christian Planer claimed the Bronze Medal with a 1,262.8 total.

Anti entered the final round in seventh place. After shooting marks of 10.4, 8.8, 9.3 and 10.6, he moved into fourth place with a 10.8 on his fifth of 10 shots in the finale. An 8.5 on his ensuing shot, however, cost him dearly.



He quickly rebounded with marks of 10.4 and 10.8 to move into third place. Then an 8.1 dropped him back to fourth. He capped the performance with a 10.4 as drama intensified at the other end of the shooting line.

Matthew Emmons, 23, of Browns Mills, N.J., had the Gold Medal firmly in his grasp until he shot the wrong target on his last of 10 shots. The mark of zero dropped him to eighth place with 1,257.4 points, stunning the crowd at Markopoulo Olympic Shooting Centre.

Had Emmons closed with a respectable mark, Team USA would have won the Gold and Bronze Medals.

"For me, it was kind of up and down," Anti said of his final round. "I'd shoot a good 10 and then I'd shoot an 8. Then shoot a good 10 and shoot an 8. None of the shots were really bad shots; I just was late on the trigger," he said.

"If I caught it a millisecond before, it could've been a 10. I'm just thrilled to death that I won the silver with my final."

Maj. Michael Anti, of Fort Benning's U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, brought home a Silver Medal from the Olympics in Athens, Greece, this weekend.

MACH, Tricare undergo changes

Clinics, service adjust to wartime mission

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Fort Benning U.S.Army Medical Department Activity and Martin Army Community Hospital treats about 1,500 outpatients a day, 50 inpatients with at least 10 daily admissions and a pharmacy that fills at least 1,500 to 2,000 prescriptions a day — all the while undergoing changes in business contracts and supporting the needs of the Global War on Terrorism and changes in business contracts.

MEDDAC and the Tricare system are currently undergoing changes that may cause temporary confusion, but will improve patient care in the long run, said Col. Donald Bradshaw, MEDDAC commander.

As of Aug. 1, Tricare transitioned to a new contract that will make Tricare benefits easier to access with improved customer service and better responsiveness to patient needs.

The change in contracts, however, does not change the way Tricare provides service to its members.

"What this means to the majority of people is that there's no change," Bradshaw said. "It's a change in the way we do business, and it simplifies some processes at the

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, BABY

And a (not-so) little child shall lead them

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

This is not a commentary about sex or religion. It is, however, about politics, or more specifically, voting. But I'm guessing I'd lose half my readers if I used the word "vote" in the first sentence. Sex sells and religion divides, but voting commentaries definitely sedate.

It's really hard to get excited about the November elections, what with the war going on — the war between the candidates, I mean. Remember the war that preceded the last election? It was all about sex and religion, so it was somewhat more interesting.

And who can forget the outcome of the last election, with pregnant chads and aborted recounts?

Me, I wish I could forget the last election, because I didn't vote. That's right, I didn't vote. I'm not proud of it, and I'm not about to make excuses, though I have completely recovered from the coma, thanks for asking. But I've lived with the guilt only a Florida resident can truly appreciate ever since.

Which is why I'm really excited that my son is excited about voting. Thomas will turn 18 next week. He's all set to register with the Selective Service, and he's prepared to take on a few more adult responsibilities around the house. But he's looking forward to voting. Key words: looking forward.

Whereas I dreaded what I thought would be a complicated and time-consuming process — registering out-of-state — he's actually looking forward to it.

He's not yet jaded by all the back-stabbing banter and political poison he sees on the nightly news. He's keeping an eye on the issues relevant to him — hunting and conservation, since he's an outdoorsman; the military, since he's considering it as a career; and of course taxation, since he's forking over a chunk of his paycheck each week.

Thomas believes his vote will make a difference. I love that about him.

Me, I'm following his lead. I've already registered to vote absentee, which was blessedly simple. I logged on to florida.gov and within minutes, I was a bona fide long-distance voter with a clear conscience. You can do the same on your state's government Web site. Or you can log on to MTV.com. It's that easy.

So thanks, Thomas, and happy birthday. I'm proud of you. But you shouldn't be reading anything that has sex in the first sentence.

'Back to school' readies student for world

Billy Holbrook
Bayonet correspondent

Back to school. Does anyone ever look forward to that? With the mention of one little "s" word, all the kids within earshot who love summer run and hide. They run not for fear, but for lamenting their impending losses.

All that is good in their world is suddenly threatened by an uninvited reality. Summer is going away.

No longer can the children frolic and play in the neighborhood until the distant cry of Mom calling, "Johnny ... come to dinner!" The days of lounging on the beach during summer vacation vanished like the sun setting in an old western movie. Or for a more realistic, less June and Ward Cleaver example: Johnny has to stop sleeping until 2 p.m., playing XBox for six hours straight, and watching TV until his eyes go bad.

Then there are those who never did care for summer but have a great affection for academics. These students would gladly trade a game of backyard wiffle ball or Madden NFL 2005 for a nice, neat book or algebraic equation. The very idea that schools even take a summer break is absurd to some. For many kids, the best day of the year is the first day of school. (At least it was for Nemo.)

We all have seasons of choice. And at the end of each season, we are confronted with new realities, for seasons bring about change. Like it or not, the school year is upon us, and summer is fading into a memory.

Many students will begin the end of their academic careers this fall. I can say with sincere thankfulness that I am one of those eager to finish. I'm eager to say good-bye to late-night cramming sessions, last-minute writings of term papers, and the dreaded lectures that just seem to have no tangible applications in life whatsoever.

According to societal norms, however, a college degree is a necessity in the job market today. College professors, for obvious reasons I think, find it to be in their best interests to uphold this expectation placed on our society.

They practice their sales pitch with every class by saying things like, "You'll have a very hard time finding a job you love if you don't have a degree. Who wants to buy another semester of classes?" I raise my hand, and shout out, "I do!" and proceed to the tuition check-out counter.

Facing the end of college is exhilarating and frightening all at the same time. I'll be relieved to complete my bachelor's degree in January, and am quite anxious about what the future holds. I'll stand in line and collect my reward along with my classmates. That is what has sustained me after all: the hope of finishing. I guess I am honestly looking forward to going back to school. Not because I have a desire to turn into a scholar, but because the end is now in sight. And after years of looking for that end, it sure is a pretty sight.

Violence, substance abuse:

Casual connection or something more serious?

Lt. Col. Dave Thomas
Army Substance Abuse Program

Is there a relationship between violent behavior and substance abuse? Does substance abuse justify violence, or is it just a handy excuse?

If you answered yes to both questions, you're probably right. While there are many reasons proposed by researchers, the overwhelming majority firmly believe there is a link between the two. Substance abuse does not justify violence, but there is definitely a connection. What link, you might ask? Good! Now you're thinking. Just because someone drinks doesn't mean they're violent. Conversely, just because someone is violent doesn't mean they have a problem with alcohol.

Confusing? Sure, because human behavior, influenced by experiences, values, mores, upbringing, culture, and other factors, such as alcohol consumption or drug abuse (both illegal and prescription) are difficult to predict. Let's take a look at this relationship.

The following information is based on a study by J. Roizen on incidents of alcohol-related violence:

The percentages of violent offenders who consumed alcohol at the time of the "incident" are as follows:

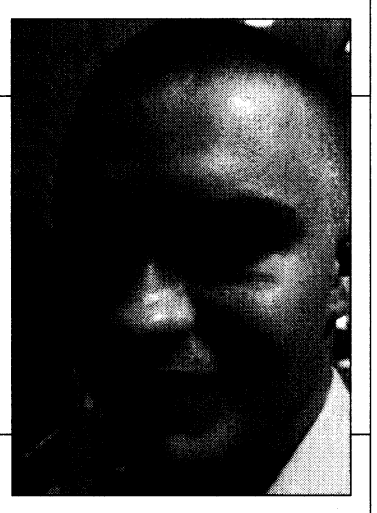
- Up to 86 percent of homicide offenders had been drinking
- 37 percent of assault offenders had been drinking
- 60 percent of sexual offenders had been drinking
- Up to 57 percent of men and 27 percent of women involved in marital violence had been drinking
- 13 percent of child abusers had been drinking

Pretty startling statistics, don't you think? Why are the numbers so high? There might even be higher percentages if drug abuse was added to the study. Would all those offenses have been committed if the person had not been drinking? Maybe, maybe not! The statistics seem to justify the connection.

Alcohol abuse causes people to lose their inhibitions. It may make a person more likely to do things he or she would not do when sober. Drug abuse also causes people to act differently and in some cases, violently. Losing one's inhibitions can be dangerous. Losing one's inhibitions from alcohol or drug abuse can:

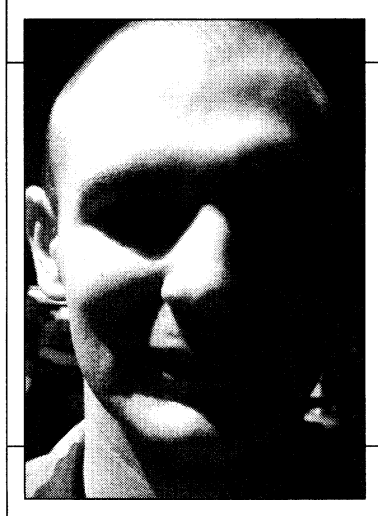
- Make you less inhibited around members of the opposite sex. Just because you've been drinking doesn't mean you magically transformed into a movie star between that 7th and 8th drink. When a person says no, they mean no! People that are drunk or high don't seem to understand that, proving that their good judgment has indeed been suspended. Sexual assaults involving alcohol are quite high. Victims of sexual assaults are starting to press charges, so don't think you can get away with it. When you stand before a judge and jury and face jail time and fines, do you think the "I didn't know what I was doing, because I was drunk" excuse will work?"
- Make you overconfident. Your good judgment is suspended and you are operating on a different set of values. Operating a motor vehicle is a prime example. Another is picking a fight with someone you think you can "take" who happens to be a black belt in karate.
- Make you more aggressive. When you're drunk, you may think it's OK to hit or shove your spouse or children. Many "batterers" use drug and alcohol abuse to justify their behavior. They say they did it because they were high or intoxicated, and it wouldn't have happened otherwise. That excuse won't work in domestic violence situations. Research shows many batterers' abuse even when not intoxicated.
- Put you at greater risk for sexually transmitted diseases. Studies show that when people are intoxicated or under the influence of drugs, they seldom practice safe sex. This puts both individuals at higher risk of contracting HIV/AIDS or another STD. Some victims of sexual assaults have had so much to drink they can't remember the events of the previous night and may have been sexually assaulted. They may have had unwilling and unprotected sex without their knowledge.

People think they can get away with bad behavior because they've been drinking, but this is an unjustifiable excuse. It isn't going to work. You need to take personal responsibility for your actions.

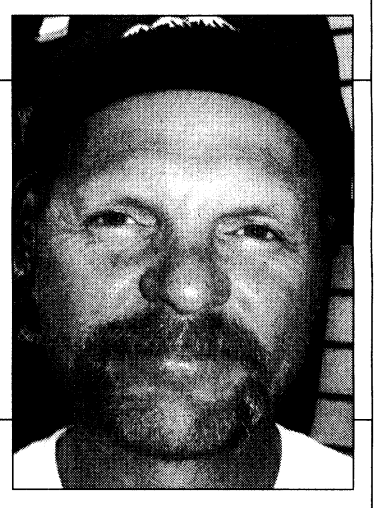


If you or someone you know has a substance problem, contact the Army Substance Abuse Program at 545-1138 or 545-4415. Counselors will help you overcome your problem. Alcoholics Anonymous meets Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays at 7 p,m. in the basement of Building 241, Miller Hall. Call or come by and see us. Remember, only you have the "Power of Choice."

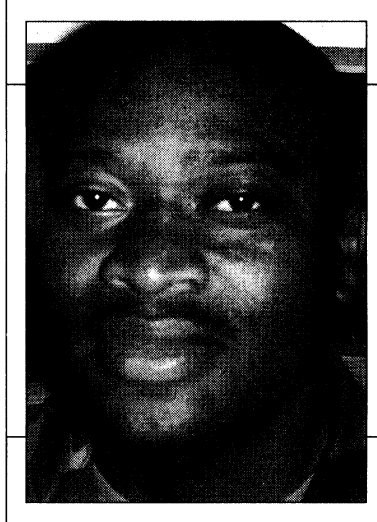
VARIOUS VOICES



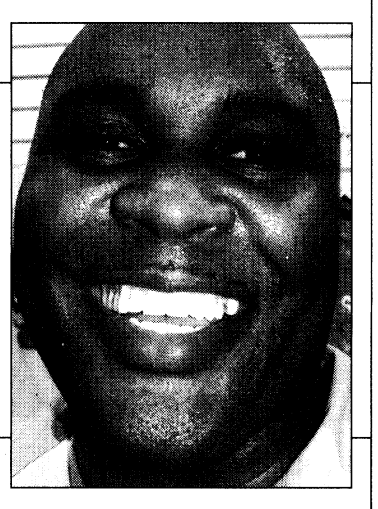
How important is your vote?



Taronda Bailey, AAFES employee — "If you don't vote, you have no say in the government. Our voting system is only so-so, because not enough people vote. If everybody participated, it would be a lot more successful."



Pvt. Michael Crees, 1st Battalion, 43rd Infantry Regiment — "I'm 20, so I've never voted before, but I'll definitely be voting this year. We registered in basic training. I think my vote will have an impact on where I'll spend the next four years."



2nd Lt. Jake Jeffers, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Voting is incredibly important. If you don't do it, you have absolutely no right to complain about the outcome."

Lloyd Neff, father of a new Soldier — "Having the right to vote means we're still a free country. It means more to me now because (my son) is a Soldier. My vote may help determine where he could be down the road."

Staff Sgt. Richard Smith, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Every vote counts. If you don't vote and the person you wanted to win doesn't win, it's as much your fault as everyone else's."

Sgt. William Altman, 185th Aviation, on medical leave from Iraq — "Being over there makes you appreciate the rights we have, like voting. Voting gives people an equal say in how our country will be run. They don't have that (in Iraq.)"

Vet fights leukemia, seeks marrow donor

Transplant best chance at good life for Soldier

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Returning from Iraq with the 608th Ordnance Company earlier this year, Staff Sgt. Michael Herring felt fine.

Sure, he'd lost some weight — 34 pounds in the 13 months he'd been deployed — but who hadn't?

"It was the environment," he said. "I just didn't think anything of it."

In fact, looking back now, there were quite a few signs and symptoms he dismissed as par for the course.

But a few weeks after Herring's homecoming in April, it was clear something wasn't right. His bloodwork at the hospital — standard redeployment procedure — came back "messed up" and he was retested, this time for everything from parasites to cancers, specifically leukemia.

A few days later, he landed in the emergency room, running a fever. The doctor gave him a grim prognosis — "all signs pointed toward leukemia."

Herring was transferred to St. Francis in Columbus, where he underwent a bone marrow biopsy. Doctors withdrew marrow from his hip and detected the Philadelphia Chromosome, confirming the doctor's early diagnosis.

Herring has chronic myeloid leukemia, a slow-progressing form of the cancer.

Within days, he began taking Gleevac — a relatively new drug that inhibits the Philadelphia Chromosome and breaks it up. But with only four years on the market and mounting evidence that patients build a resistance to the drug, Gleevac might provide only a temporary solution.

And for Herring, who turns 38 today, that's not good enough. His only option now is to undergo a bone marrow transplant, which is tentatively scheduled for next summer.

"If I want any chance of growing old and going RVing, I have to have this transplant," he said.

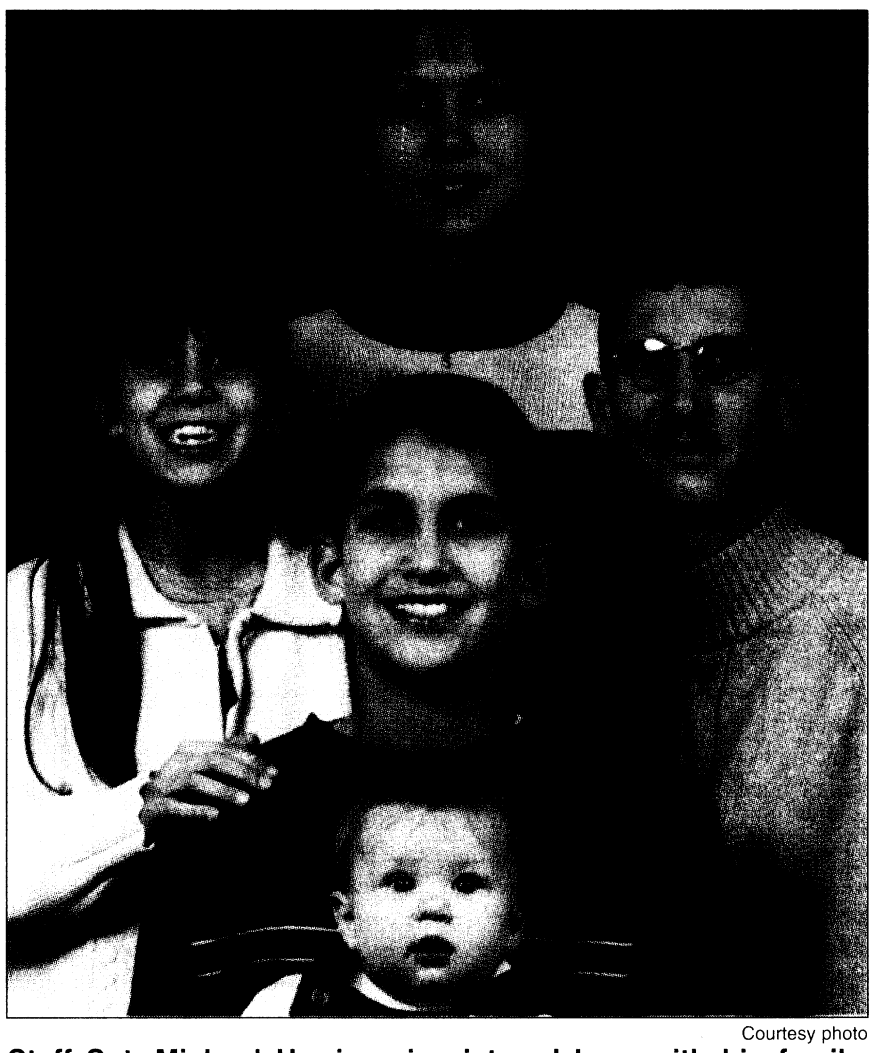
While the odds are in his favor — the survival rate is 85 percent — the experience won't be a pleasant one.

Herring has already scheduled meetings with teams of specialists at two medical centers to discuss the transplant and will likely choose one in the coming months.

Once he settles on a team, he will undergo a series of physical and psychological tests to make sure he can withstand the trauma of the procedure.

And once he's cleared, the search is on. The search for a donor, that is.

There's a one in four chance that his brother will be a good match, Herring said. Siblings are usually considered the "cream of the crop, the best match for your body."



If his brother can't provide a good match, Herring's name will be entered into a registry. It will be a waiting game of sorts, while a register of donors from around the country and across the world is searched for a match.

"They could call up somebody in Seattle and say, 'You're a match,' and they'll go to the nearest hospital, have the bone marrow taken out, and they'll ship it to me," Herring said.

Meanwhile, Herring will be going through high-dose chemotherapy and total body irradiation, a process that kills all the cells in the body, good and bad.

"After that, your immune system is zero," he said, explaining that he will live in isolation to protect him from bacteria and viruses.

This process takes five to seven days. The transplant takes about three hours, he said, and within two weeks, new cells start to grow.

The next 90 to 100 days will be spent in the hospital or a "hospitality house," where he can be monitored daily for infection. Following his release, he'll report for periodic check-ups and take precautions to avoid anything that could make him sick. The entire transplant process will take about a year.

But for a donor, the process is much less time-consuming, and donors are direly needed. According to the Puget Sound Blood Center, about 70 percent of patients who need a bone marrow transplant will not find a match in their families.

Donors can register at a donor center or registration drive by giving about two to three tablespoons of blood and consenting to be listed in the main donor registry. A lab determines tissue type, and the results are entered into the registry, which doctors search regularly.

If the computer registry indicates a donor's tissue type is close to a patient's, it's considered a preliminary match and additional testing will identify "perfect matches."

Donors, too, are required to undergo counseling, physical exams and tests before donating marrow. Once cleared, about a liter of bone marrow will be collected from the hips.

Anesthesia is used during the procedure, and some hospitals require an overnight stay. Marrow replenishes itself naturally within a matter of weeks, with the only side effects being some mild soreness in the hips.

In the end, enduring a little bit of pain and discomfort could save someone's life, someone like Herring — a husband and father of three, a Soldier with 15 years of service, and a man with plans for the future.

Donors listed on the bone marrow registry, known as the National Marrow Donor Program, must meet the following eligibility requirements:

- Donors must be between 18 and 60 and in good health.
- If you have or are at risk for HIV or AIDS, you cannot become a marrow donor.
- If you have serious asthma that is poorly controlled or has required hospitalization, you cannot donate.
- Elevated blood pressure, or hypertension, is acceptable if controlled by medicine.
- Cured local skin cancer (only simple basal cell or squamous cell) and cervical cancer is acceptable. All other forms of cancer disqualify donors.
- Medication-dependent diabetics may not donate. Diet-controlled diabetics can.
- Epilepsy controlled with medication, when there has been no more than one seizure in the past year, is acceptable.
- If you've had a heart attack, bypass surgery or heart disease, you cannot donate.
- Hepatitis B surface antigen and Hepatitis C antibody disqualify prospective donors.
- Chronic Lyme disease is not acceptable.
- Marrow cannot be collected at any time during pregnancy.
- Some immunizations require a waiting period before joining the registry.

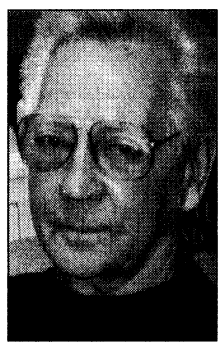
Longtime friend to infantry retires

Continues mission work, travels

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Who would've thought the silver-haired gentleman with the blue eyes and quick smile spent 30 years ensuring the American infantryman is the most lethal Soldier in the world?



Bill Fielder, the Communications and Electronics Research, Development and Engineering Center project coordinator to the Infantry Center, is known for his hard work and dedication to the infantry Soldier. After 30 years of service, however, the Thomasville, Ga., native is retiring.

"My grandparents and great-grandparents lived on what is now Fort Benning in the early 1900s, and I worked at Sand Hill and Harmony Church as a teenager," he said. "But I never dreamed I would spend my career here."

Fielder came to Fort Benning in the late '60s as a member of the three-man team that planned, resourced and conducted the Infantry Board's TOW (Tube-launched, Optically-tracked, Wire-guided weapon) Service Test.

The event trained infantry Soldiers to fire 50 missiles in 13 months, which led to the Army's approval for the type classification and full production of the TOW weapon, Fielder said.

Since then, he's been involved with the testing and fielding of many well-known infantry systems, such as the PVS-7 night vision goggles, the MELIOS range finder, thermal weapon sight and the second generation forward looking infrared upgrade to the Bradley and Abrams vehicles.

Another of Fielder's successes was the designation of Lab Day, when representatives from all the Army Research, Development and Engineering Centers come to Fort Benning to focus on experimentation and research efforts.

"The government employees who work here in the Infantry Center are sometimes referred to as 'professional civilians,'" Fielder said. "I believe, as General Freakley said recently, the work we do here is a profession — it's a calling, not a job.

"Young men and women entrust us with their lives, and it is up to us to equip and train them to survive and win on the battlefield," he said. "To make sure they return safely from Iraq or Afghanistan, or wherever they may have to go. I believe that 'what have you done for today's Soldier, today?' should be the uppermost thought in our minds as we do this important business and I'm proud to have been a part of a very large team that works hard at that every day."

Never an Army Soldier, Fielder enjoyed living and working with the 10th Mountain Division during the Warrior Focus Advanced Warfighter Experimentation at Fort Polk, La., in 1995.

"It's the closest I ever came to living like a Soldier," he said.

"Fielder was never bound by the clock," said Jim Stone, deputy director of DCD. "He worked Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. He was continuously working on making things better. We're going to miss him."

Charles Barton, combat developer for infantry vehicles, has been a friend and colleague of Fielder's for the past 10 years.

Barton said Fielder is a hard worker who always puts a Soldier's interest first.

"He puts his best efforts forward in order to provide the best for Soldiers. He's always the one who pulls everybody together to do the very best of whatever experiment it is to benefit Soldiers," Barton said. "He also never took 'no' for an answer. If needed, he would call the general at home to ensure he got what he needed to accomplish a mission."

But Fielder isn't all work and no play. His hobbies include dabbling in the stock market. And for several years, he's traveled to Central America on missionary trips to help establish churches in under-developed countries. Later this year, he'll travel to Honduras, where he and his friends are trying to resurrect a hospital.

"I also like to golf, but those who've golfed with me will laugh when they read this. I'm not very good," Fielder said.

During Lab Day, Aug. 18, Fielder was honored with the Order of Saint Maurice, Civis, for exceptional meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service to the infantry.

> "We as human beings don't often acknowledge that God has a plan for our lives, and we should wind up where he put us. Since I didn't plan this career, I have to believe he put me here."
> Bill Fielder
> Communications and Electronics Research, Development and Engineering Center project coordinator to the Infantry Center

When Fielder retires Sept. 2, he plans to settle in North Georgia with his wife, Dolores.

"We as human beings don't often acknowledge that God has a plan for our lives, and we should wind up where he put us," he said.

"Since I didn't plan this career, I have to believe he put me here. And I know that doing this business, and working with some wonderful people here has been a blessing to my life and my family's life. It's been a privilege and an honor and I'm truly thankful for having had the opportunity. I'll never forget it."

National Security Personnel System Update

Fort Benning commanders, directors, and supervisors of civilian employees should attend the NSPS update at 1:30 p.m. today in Infantry Hall, Classroom 6. The briefing covers the most important change to the civilian personnel system in decades.

Patrons at Infantry Hall's Donovan Library can now see one of James Dietz' newest prints commemorating the Battle of An Najaf.

Fort Benning's director of the Directorate of Training, Col. John Carmichael, accepted the print from Maj. Shawn Phillips, executive officer for the 1st Brigade Combat Team, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) at Fort Campbell, Ky., in a ceremony Aug. 20 in the library.

"This is an important occasion," Carmichael said. "It's the first opportunity for the Infantry School to receive a print of the most recent war."

The 1st BCT attacked the city of An Najaf on March 29, 2003. During the 11-day battle, Soldiers from the 101st liberated the city's residents and destroyed Saddam Hussein's Fedayeen fighters, effectively protecting the supply lines for the 3rd Infantry Div. and V Corps.

Phillips said it was an honor for him to present the print of the 101st's first major battle.

He and Staff Sgt. Mel Sanchez traveled to Fort Benning to represent their brigade commander, Col. David Gray.

"We present this to the Infantry School for the hard work and help to Soldiers," Phillips said, "especially those of the 327th Inf. Regiment.

"It is the commitment here and the support for Soldiers and the value of training and doctrine that allows the Soldiers to do great things."

Matted below the print are the distinctive club-shaped insignia worn on the Soldiers' helmets and a unit coin, also shaped like a club, designed by Soldiers while the unit was still in Iraq.

> Maj. Shawn Phillips
> Executive officer, 1st Brigade Combat Team, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault)

Phillips said the club marker was brought back about two years ago as a legacy for the unit. During the D-Day invasion, units became so dispersed that the only way to tell the members of brigades apart was by their helmet markings, like the club for the 327th Inf. Regt., and the heart for the 502nd Inf. Regt.

"There's a lot to be said for remembering these events," Phillips said. "And the club represents the link between the past and the present."

He said the larger original work hangs at the BCT headquarters and when Dietz visited the unit, he signed prints for Soldiers. Only 1,000 copies of the print were made and sold for $101 each.

Library technician Genoa Stanford said the library appreciates the donation. The library staff had been looking for historic prints. The new work will hang in a prominent place where it can be seen and enjoyed.

Chaplain's assistants 'Soldiers first'

More than three years ago, a recruiter asked Cpl. Michelle Cox what she did every day. She said she went to church.

Not long after, Cox enlisted as a chaplain's assistant in the U.S. Army.

But she's quick to correct a popular misconception.

"We're not chaplains; we're their assistants. We're Soldiers first," Cox said. "Our main focus is to take care of the chaplain to whom we are assigned, whether it be in a garrison environment or in combat. Having experienced both, I know that both are difficult and take patience."

After joining the Army, Cox went through seven weeks of MOS-specific training at Fort Jackson, S.C. From there, she went to her first duty station in Weisbaden, Germany, and was attached to a transportation company.

She deployed with th e unit to Kuwait and Iraq.

She's currently assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Garrison, and spends her duty hours assisting chaplains at The Infantry Center Chapel on Main Post.

Chaplain's assistants are responsible for the upkeep of the chapels, including supplies and maintenance. Anything chaplains are involved in, their assistants are aware of and responsible for coordinating.

Chaplain's assistants are taught the basics of specific religions — Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, Buddhist and Muslim. Although they do not perform services — unless they are ordained — they learn to be sensitive to all denominations and how to set up a chapel for each specific service.

"Every day is different, so events, such as welcoming ceremonies and visitations, are most memorable," said Spc. Bernina Blackwater, chaplain's assistant at the CONUS Replacement Center Chapel.

This is Blackwater's first duty station and she is the only chaplain's assistant at the CRC. Her responsibilities include supporting her chaplain in serving four companies and the cadre of the CRC.

"As a team, we support deployments or re-deployments of all service members, contract personnel and civilian service support personnel who deploy from Fort Benning," she said.

"Our motto is 'For God and country.' That's why I serve — for God and my country."

Spc. Bernina Blackwater

In addition, the CRC Chapel also supports the medical hold-overs who return from deployments and are temporarily stationed at Fort Benning.

Her daily routine consists of coordinating the chaplain's counseling sessions and classes and distributing specific religious material, she said.

"We give various religious articles that Soldiers may want to take with them on their deployments, including Bibles, the Qur'an and other religious literature," Blackwater said. "What we do here is provide moral and positive support. These Soldiers are getting deployed, most of them for a year. If I were deploying, I'd want to have these types of services available to me."

Blackwater and Cox both said the most fulfilling part of their job is knowing that Soldiers' religious needs are being taken care of.

"Our motto is 'For God and Country,'" Blackwater said. "That's why I serve — for God and my country."

Changes: At MACH, Tricare result of GWOT demands

command and Department of Defense Health Affairs level. For patients, standards will stay the same. Benefits will also stay the same in terms of Tricare Prime, Tricare Standard, Tricare Extra and Tricare for life."

In some cases, he said, the benefits will be better.

For example, there will be more civilian pharmacies that accept Tricare with the new contracts.

Bottom line is that there is no change to the Tricare benefit packages for those currently enrolled including active-duty Soldiers.

In order to maintain quality, safe and appropriate care, MEDDAC has made a few changes in service.

"Beginning Wednesday, new Tricare Prime enrollees who are not active duty will be enrolled with a network service provider; the Tricare service center has a list of network providers. Their primary care manager will not be here at Martin Army, but with a provider downtown," Bradshaw said.

All beneficiaries still have access to radiology, the lab and the pharmacy at MACH.

"It's important for people to understand that we are not forcing anyone to disenroll from any of the programs," Bradshaw said. "We are only giving new enrollees alternate locations to receive care."

However, if there are current enrollees who would rather receive care from a provider downtown, they may request to be transferred. There is no cost for active-duty Soldiers and their family members if they are referred to a downtown provider. Retirees and their family members do have to pay a $12 co-pay fee whenever they go see a provider downtown, Bradshaw said.

Also, in order to maintain quality, safe and appropriate care, MEDDAC has made a few changes in service. As of Aug. 16, the Monday through Thursday Family Practice and Pediatrics evening clinics are closed; limited Saturday appointments are still available.

The Adult Primary Care Clinic will continue evening and Saturday clinics.

The goal is to have these clinics running again by mid-November, Bradshaw said.

Also, beginning Oct. 1, Winder Clinic on Sand Hill will be open an extra eight hours a day to help alleviate the active-duty workload.

"This is purely a staffing issue. We can't appropriately staff the clinics to provide the quality of care that we need them to, so we are shifting some of those assets to our normal duty hours to provide more support and better care," he said.

Currently, the challenge of getting patient appointments at MACH is due to an increase in workload directly related to the GWOT.

There's an increase in the population of basic trainees and other students, a new electronic medical record information system and the support to the deployments of the 3rd Brigade, as well as the 249th Field Hospital to the Joint Readiness Training Center in Fort Polk, La. and will also support the upcoming deployments of 3rd Bde., the 249th Field Hospital and 86th Combat Support Hospital.

"The emergency room continues to be a huge concern for everybody," Bradshaw said. "We are recently working on several things that were set back by the increase in workload. One of the things patients can do to help us and themselves is log onto the Tricare online."

Tricare online is a service that provides beneficiaries with millions of pages of screened information on how to care for different injuries or illnesses, appointment scheduling and specific information on specific Tricare health plans.

After a five-minute registration process, beneficiaries can find answers to questions, schedule appointments and research health care providers at www.tricareonline.com.

The current delays will continue through the end of September, Bradshaw said. However, MEDDAC and Tricare are working to provide a better service to their beneficiaries.

For more information on the recent changes in the Tricare contracts, Martin Army Community Hospital and clinic hours, visit www.martin.amedd.army.mil or www.tricareonline.com.

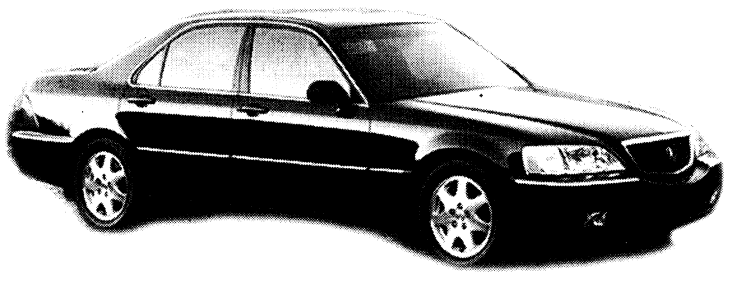
For specific questions call the MEDDAC Information Desk at 544-2041 or Public Affairs at 544-4276 or log on to the MEDDAC web site at www.martin.amedd.army.mil.

CLOSER LOOK

Martin Army Community Hospital and Tricare are undergoing significant changes because of mission demands arising from the Global War on Terrorism. Some of the changes already in effect or set to start soon are:

☐ New non active-duty enrollees at Fort Benning will be enrolled with a network service provider, meaning their primary care provider will not be at MACH, but with a civilian provider in the local area.

☐ Monday through Thursday Family Practice and Pediatric evening clinics are closed with limited Saturday appointments. The Adult Primary Care Clinic will continue evening and Saturday clinics.



☐ Winder Clinic on Sand Hill will be open an extra eight hours a day starting Oct. 1 to help alleviate the active-duty work load.

☐ Current Fort Benning Tricare enrollees will not be forced to change their primary care provider to an off-post civilian; however they may request to do so.

☐ More civilian pharmacies will accept Tricare under new contracts.

DoD to pilot Spouses to Teachers

Program's future based on interest

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The Department of Defense recently announced the piloting of its new program, Spouses to Teachers.

Modeled after DoD's Troops to Teachers program, STT will provide military spouses interested in teaching information, counseling, guidance and financial aid to meet their teaching goals, said John Gantz, director of TTT and soon-to-be director of STT.

The pilot program will be activated in six states, including Georgia, Florida, California, Colorado, Texas and Virginia.

The primary focus of the program, Gantz said, will be to help interested spouses understand:

- Requirements for state teacher certification
- Routes to certification
- Most critical teacher needs in the state
- Financial assistance for degree completion and certification programs
- State-specific programs leading to certification
- Transfer of certification from state to state and
- Assistance with location employment opportunities.

The program will be a great benefit to spouses who already have a degree, as well as undergraduates, Gantz said.

"This is primarily an information resource," he said. "Spouses with a degree can find out what the requirements are for that particular state and how to meet those requirements.

"And we can at least give guidance to people without a degree," he said. "We can help them determine what colleges have education programs and where the real job opportunities are in education."

Areas of need vary dramatically from state to state, Gantz said. Some states desperately need special education teachers; others may need bilingual teachers. And researching those critical areas can help direct a spouse's studies in the right direction.

"This can be very valuable," he said. "Spouses will know where the opportunities are, and more importantly, where they're not."

STT will also offer teachers limited financial assistance to fulfill state-to-state requirements for certification.

Financial assistance will be available in the form of reimbursement to help cover the cost of tests required in the certification process, Gantz said. Eligible spouses can be reimbursed up to $250.

Eligible spouses include spouses of active-duty personnel, members of the National Guard and Reserve and members of the Individual Ready Reserve called up to active duty.

The program is currently scheduled to be piloted for one year. Its future will be dependent on the level of interest shown during this trial period.

So far, so good, Gantz said — the program hasn't even officially kicked off, and the states' offices are already fielding phone calls from spouses anxious to get enrolled.

Bill Kirkland, who will temporarily oversee Georgia's STT program until a permanent director can be hired, said he has already received around 30 phone calls.

"And I haven't even pushed this very hard," he said. "It's a new program, and there hasn't been a lot of information out. So, this is a significant response for a program people don't yet know about."

He hasn't been able to enroll anyone yet — and he won't be able to until probably mid-September — but he is ready to answer spouses' questions.

The best way to get information right now, Kirkland said, is to visit the TTT Web site at www.tttga.net.

STT's Web site may be up and running by early September, but even then, the contact information will remain the same, he said.

Spouses who would prefer a face-to-face with Kirkland can catch him during his twice-monthly visits to Fort Benning.

Kirkland's next visit to the installation will be at 10 a.m. Sept. 21. To find out when he is scheduled to visit again, call the Learning Resource Center at 545-2911 or visit the LRC in Room 30 at Infantry Hall.

For more information about the STT in Georgia, visit the TTT Web site and use its contact information.

Sayers Library set for renovations

New books, better seating, more to come

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

You can't judge a book by its cover. And you certainly shouldn't judge Sayers Library by its rather plain exterior either.

Beginning next month, the library will undergo the first of two phases of a remodeling effort designed to help meet the needs of its patrons and provide a more inviting environment.

"We've all known that the library has needed some attention," said Sayers librarian Sherrie Floyd.

Floyd, who's has been at the library for 11 months, developed the plan to reorganize the library's layout and create a more functional plan for the 13,000-square-foot floor space.

The plan will definitely attract some attention. Floyd said the new carpet should arrive mid-September. Boxes of new shelving now line the walls of the Media Room.

The old circulation desk has already been removed to make way for a new desk Floyd said is beautiful.

"People will see something nice and inviting when they walk in," she said.

Behind the desk, the computer kiosks will also get a new look with new furniture. Floyd hopes to add three more computers and has requested a PC program that will help manage computer use. The program will make the computer area "self-service," by scheduling appointments for patrons to use the computers.

Other renovations include removing five of the mobile book shelf sections. The mobile shelving, Floyd said, was not designed for regular use libraries.

"We're going to open the shelves up," Floyd said.

The media area will be relocated and the room will be turned into a "homework center" with the library's reference materials and two non-Internet computers. Although patrons can't browse the Internet, they will be able to access commercial reference databases.

Floyd said the databases are a result of the Department of the Army's push for more mobile library programs for Soldiers.

Accessed through AKO, the Army library has 10 databases where Soldiers can do research. Floyd said there are E-books and journals, novels, biographies and even cookbooks — any area a Soldier may need for research or recreational information.

Customer comment cards indicated that patrons thought the children's section books were too old and out-of-date. That became Floyd's first mission. She hopes the improvements in the children's area will help attract more family members and children to the library.

The library, staffed by three librarians and three technicians, is open six days a week. Floyd calls that "a lot of bang for the buck. We have 600 to 800 (patrons) a day," she said.

And the library will remain open during the renovation, except for periods when they may need to close for safety, she said.

"We want to keep disruptions to a minimum," she said. "We don't want it to have a huge impact, but we want to make a more inviting environment."

Along with a more inviting environment, Floyd said they will fine-tune library services to make the best use of their resources and staff.

Misa Whiteford, the public service librarian since May 30, will work marketing and library program and collection development.

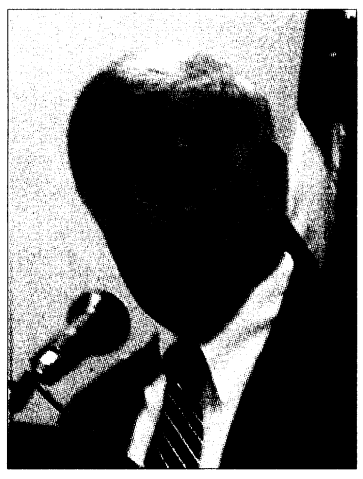
She's maintaining a list of things that can be done in the library, so anyone with a few hours to volunteer will be welcome.

Floyd expects the first phase to be completed in time to have a holiday open house for the community.

Melissa House

Sayers Library is about to begin some serious renovations. Improvements include better reading selections and computer areas.

Phase II involves turning one storage room into a functioning conference room, and another into a coffee shop.



Floyd said the overall condition of the library and the desire for a coffee shop on post were issues brought up during the Army Family Action Plan conference in February.

"What came out at AFAP backed up what we already had in motion," Floyd said. "The current trend in new libraries is coffee shops and reading; meeting and coffee all go together."

Former mayor speaks to grads

Peters stresses cooperation

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Peters

Before crossing the stage and receiving their diplomas, students of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation listened to words of encouragement from former Columbus mayor and Chattahoochee Circuit Superior Court Judge-elect Bobby Peters in Pratt Hall Aug. 18.

"Columbus and Fort Benning are very proud of your accomplishments. Your respective countries selected who they thought were their very best Soldiers to come here, and your graduation today has proven it," Peters said to the 13 students from Bolivia, Colombia and Guatemala.

The students were part of the Institute's Democratic Sustainment Course, which teaches theory and practice of military and civilian leadership in a constitutional nation-state, said Colombian guest instructor Capt. Wilmer Mora.

This six-week course also explores the role of the military within a civilian-controlled democratic country.

Peters addressed the idea that effective governing comes from cooperation at "all levels."

"Something I learned as mayor is that the key to sustaining an effective government lies in cooperation. Columbus and Fort Benning have been around a long time. Time enough to develop a fairly close relationship … and it's in times like these that cooperation between people is vital, such as sharing information, resources and power," he said.

"The world is steadily becoming a small place — with mass communication, the Internet and many other innovations — and it's these types of programs, which reach out to other countries, to each other, that have to continue," Peters said.

"We all have the same (universal) needs, desires and issues … and its through cooperation at local and international levels that we might someday meet them all," he said.

The 55-year-old attorney also discussed his stance on the annual protest against the now-closed U.S. Army School of the Americas, and against WHINSEC.

"Every year, our community gets inundated by misguided individuals who come in protest of the school, but the community, myself included, always stands in support of the CG and the (WHINSEC) commandant.

"Though these protesters may be misguided in that they do not fully comprehend the institute's role in securing cooperation between democratically elected governments, at the same time we never try to stifle their rights as citizens to free speech — the most basic of democratic freedoms you can find taught at this institute."

Peters closed by expressing the importance of sustaining and instilling democratic values for future generations.

"Our children only make up about 20 percent of the population, but they make up one hundred percent of our future," he said. "The values we hold and the decisions we make will ultimately be reflected and affect our children … which is why teaching these values of freedom and cooperation is so important."

Report details more findings in Abu Ghraib case

Scandal traced to lack of training

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army senior leaders say the latest findings on detainee abuse in Iraq's Abu Ghraib prison trace the abuse to issues that stem from command and control and the level of training for Solders operating in a dangerous environment.

Gen. Paul Kern, Army Materiel Command commanding general and the officer responsible for the investigation into military intelligence personnel involvement in the alleged abuse at Abu Ghraib, briefed the press at the Pentagon Wednesday.

The investigation is commonly known as the Fay-Jones investigation, referring to its top two investigators, Maj. Gen. George R. Fay and Lt. Gen. Anthony J. Jones. It is one of several investigations into various aspects of the abuse. The results of an independent panel that reviewed Department of Defense detention operations, headed by former Defense Secretary James Schlesinger, were made public Tuesday.

"This was clearly a deviation from everything we've taught people on how to behave," Kern said. "There are values that we treasure in the U.S. Army and in the United States that were not upheld (according to) the report we turned in — that in itself is extremely troubling.

"There were failures of leadership of people seeing these things and not correcting them," he said. "There were failures of discipline — hallmarks against what we believe are the values and creed by which we live in the military. That is very troubling."

In addition to seven identified previously, the investigation identified 23 MI Soldiers assigned to the 205th MI Brigade in Iraq, four civilian contractors and three military police who may have been involved. Investigators also found that other Soldiers and civilians knew about the abuse and failed to report it.

The names of the Soldiers have been forwarded with the investigation results to each Soldier's commander to determine whether the alleged abuser should be court-martialed under the Uniform Code of Military Justice or if other action is appropriate.

The names of the contractors have been forwarded to the U.S. Justice Department for possible criminal charges.

"Our primary focus was to look at the 205th MI Brigade and how its Soldiers might have been involved in detainee abuse," said Maj. Maricela Alvarado, one of the Jones-Fay investigators and executive officer to Fay.

Alvarado said they found MI involvement in abusive techniques, unauthorized use of guard dogs and failure to report abuse.

No one in the chain of command above the 205th MI Brigade was directly involved in incidents, according to the report, but organizations and personnel above the 205th were indirectly involved through lack of oversight, failure to react to warnings (such as the International Committee of the Red Cross report that warned of abuse,) and policy memos that failed to provide clear, consistent guidance for execution at the tactical level.

The investigation defined detainee abuse as treatment of a detainee that violates U.S. law or international law, or inhumane treatment without legal justification.

The last part of the definition, Alvarado said, is in accordance with the Geneva Convention, which allows different types of treatment for different categories of prisoners or detainees.

For example, it forbids forcing officer prisoners of war to do manual labor, while allowing enlisted service members to do manual labor as long as it doesn't support the enemy war effort.

This investigation identified 44 alleged instances of abuse committed by MP and MI Soldiers and civilian contractors.

In 16 cases, MI personnel allegedly requested, encouraged, condoned or solicited MP Soldiers to abuse detainees.

The abuse, however, was directed individually and never officially sanctioned or approved. In 11 instances, MI personnel were directly involved in the abuse.

These individuals chose to do the wrong thing in violation of their training and established polices, Alvarado said.

"There was no gray area — they knew they were doing wrong," she said.

In about half of the new cases, the report found the Soldiers believed they were doing the right thing — because the interrogation technique they used was allowed in other theaters at other times, or because they believed the technique was authorized by the chain of command, Alvarado said.

"We have MI operations going on in Bosnia, Kosovo, Afghanistan, GITMO (Guantanamo Bay, Cuba) and Iraq — all with different sets of rules for what is authorized and what is not in the interrogation process," she said.

The report said multiple deployments of MI units with little train-up time prior to new deployments was part of the problem.

Soldiers didn't know that what may have been an approved technique in Kosovo should not be used in Iraq. That problem was exacerbated in the 205th MI Brigade, Alvarado said. Investigators found no evidence that the brigade or its subordinate units conducted any refresher training once they arrived in Iraq.

Investigators also looked into reports of "ghost detainees" — detainees not logged into the military system.

Alvarado said it was difficult to get an accurate number of ghost detainees at Abu Ghraib since they weren't in-processed, but investigators found evidence of seven or eight cases in which government agencies handed over detainees and told Army personnel to keep them off the books.

"The Army has rules to abide by, and one is to document every detainee that comes into custody," Alvarado said. "We clearly failed to follow our own policy."

Based on the report's recommendations, the Army will train MI officers in interrogation operations, something currently not included in officer qualification courses.

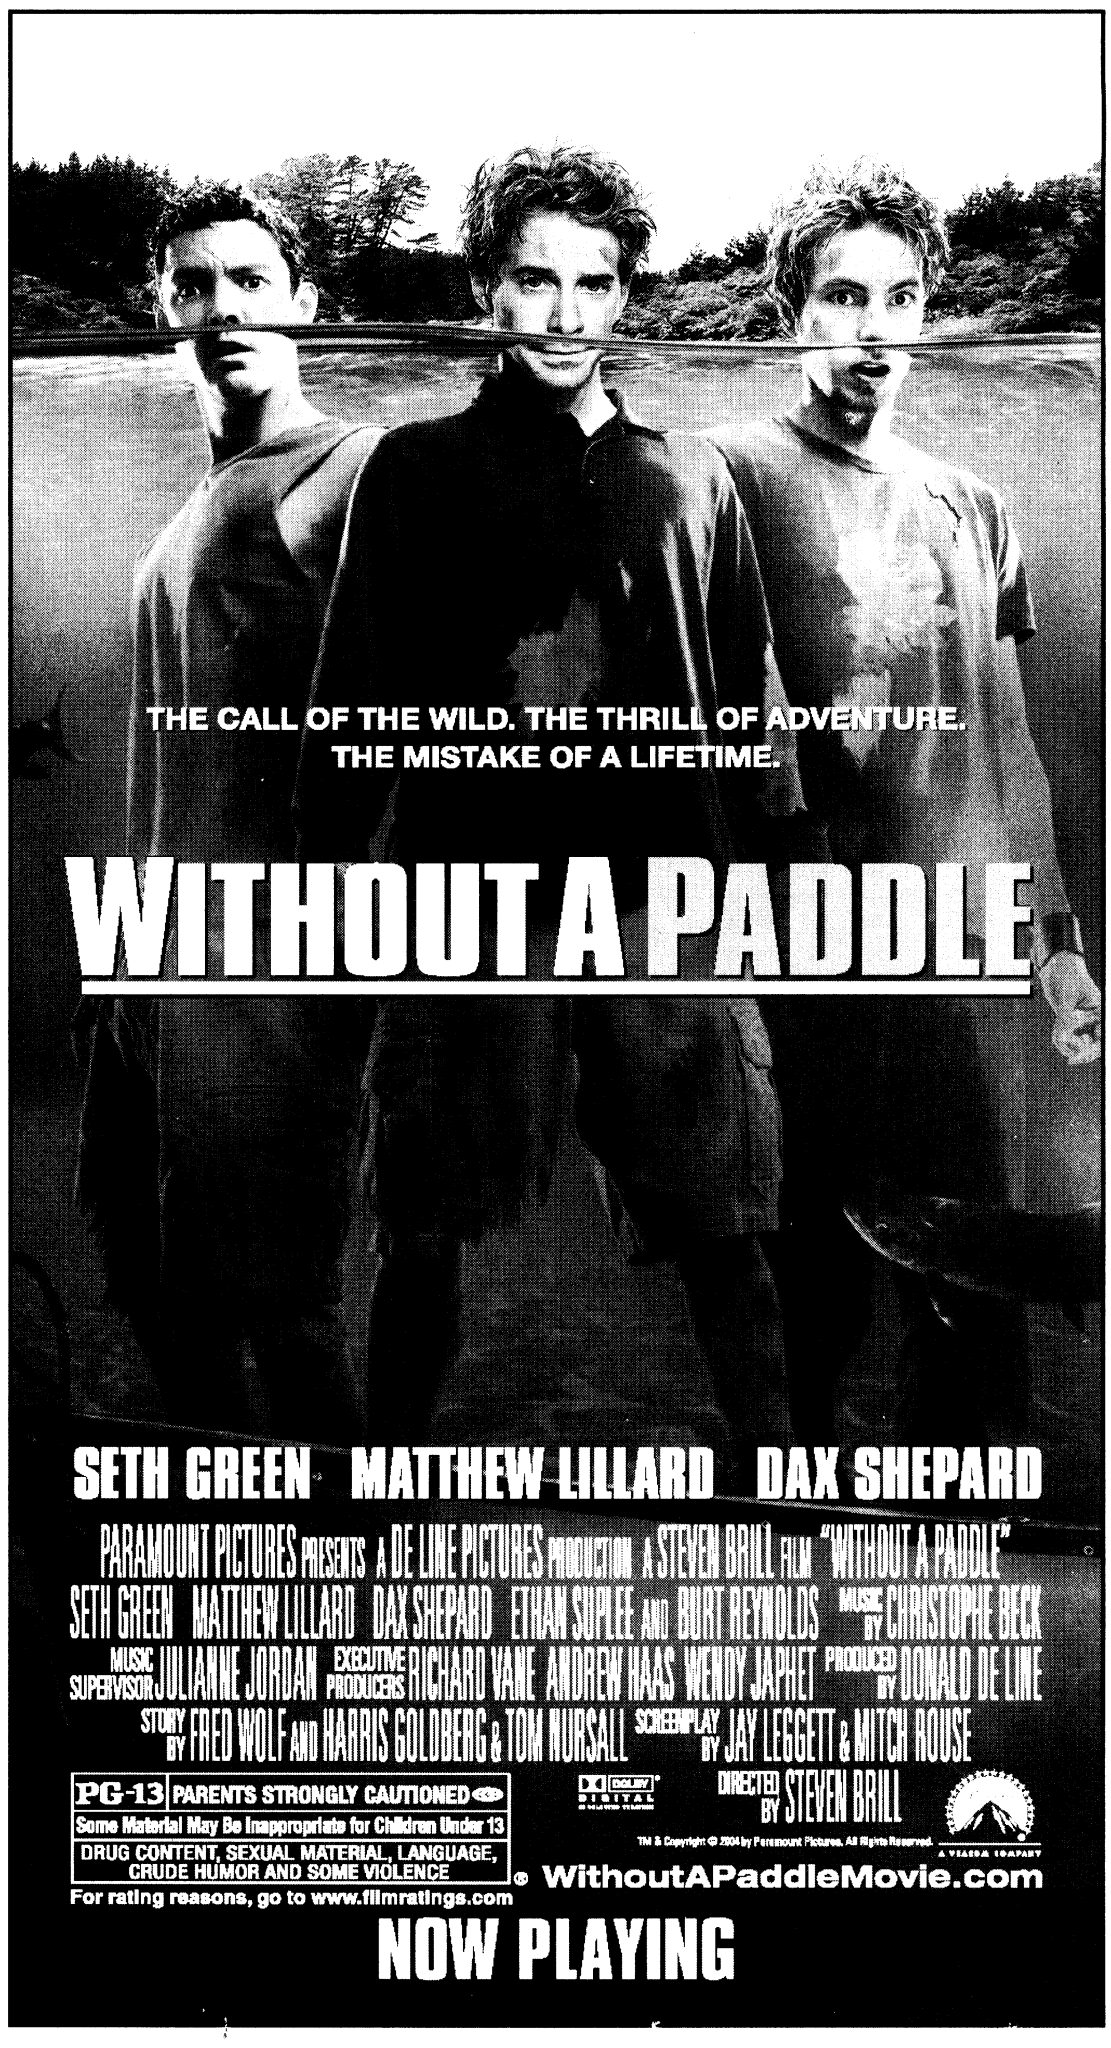
"The good news is that the vast majority of MI Soldiers know what is right and what is wrong, and they are choosing to do the right thing in a very difficult environment," Alvarado said.

The investigation report is about 10,000 pages long. Investigators conducted 172 interviews with privates through general officers, civilian contractors and detainees. The investigation started in late April and wrapped up in late July.

"We are recommending actions be taken to fix all these things," Kern said. "We have just returned from Afghanistan and Iraq, (and) you will not find those conditions there today. We are doing a very thorough certification process with the people involved with detention and interrogations.

"There are people who are very clearly in charge of Abu Ghraib — Major General Geoff Miller — who has brought organization, discipline and leadership to that prison facility," he said.

"There are actions being taken in our schools to change doctrine, to improve training. We are training in theater for those who may have missed the school training. So the circumstances today, notwithstanding actions still to be taken on our report, are much improved."



An executive summary of the report can be viewed at www.army.mil/ocpa/reports.

> "This was clearly a deviation from everything we've taught people on how to behave. There are values that we treasure in the U.S. Army and in the United States that were not upheld (according to) the report we turned in — that in itself is extremely troubling."

Sgt. 1st Class Art Alaniz briefs Pre-Ranger students on what will be expected of them during the combat water survival test during the first week of the National Guard Pre-Ranger Course. The Guard conducts eight two-week courses a year, but that number is expected to increase to 11.

IT'S A SET-UP

PRE-Ranger means PREpared to nearly two-thirds

Guard course noted for high grad rate

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

2nd Lt. Scott Lathrop just improved his chance of earning a Ranger tab. He showed up for Pre-Ranger.

Lathrop, an Alaskan Guardsman with a long-range surveillance unit, knows the numbers: Nearly 70 percent of the students who pass the National Guard Pre-Ranger Course will graduate Ranger School.

"This is a set-up for success," Lathrop said Monday, three days into the 14-day course. "They model this (Pre-Ranger Course) after the Darby phase of Ranger School. That's the first phase, and in my mind, the toughest. Everything after that is a gut-check."

If he can make it through the Darby phase, he can make it through Ranger School, Lathrop said. And if he can make it through Pre-Ranger, he can make it through the Darby phase.

Simply put, "this is necessary," Lathrop said, referring to Pre-Ranger.

The 12-man cadre of the National Guard Pre-Ranger Course, housed at the Warrior Training Center near Harmony Church, conduct eight two-week classes of Pre-Ranger each year. They've been doing that in one form or another and in various locations since the course was developed a decade ago.

Prior to its inception, National Guard Soldiers were failing Ranger School at a rate of 70 percent. That number's flip-flopped in 10 years, with Ranger School graduation rates hovering between 63 and 68 percent for students who pass the Guard's Pre-Ranger Course.

And notice the use of the word "students" as opposed to Guardsmen. That's because half the students who attend the Guard's course are not Guardsmen. The 3rd Infantry Division frequently sends Kelley Hill Soldiers, and the Marine Corps and the International Student Training Detachment each account for 10 percent of the population.

Most major commands — the 101st, the 82nd, 75th Ranger Regiment and 10th Mountain — conduct their own Pre-Ranger classes, each with moderate success. But it's the Guard's program that's caught the eye of Fort Benning's commanding general, who tasked school cadre to increase the number of classes each year and double the number of students — from 30 to 60. Eight new instructors will be assigned to the Warrior Training Center in October to help bear the load.

"We're excited about that," said Capt. Shawn Gardner, the Pre-Ranger company commander. "Any time someone says 'we want more of what you're offering,' we take that as a compliment."

And the Guard's success has not gone unnoticed by the cadre of other Pre-Ranger courses. Instructors from Fort Benning will travel to another post to evaluate and offer insight into a course curriculum that's struggling with a flagging graduation rate. Officials at that course have asked not to be named.

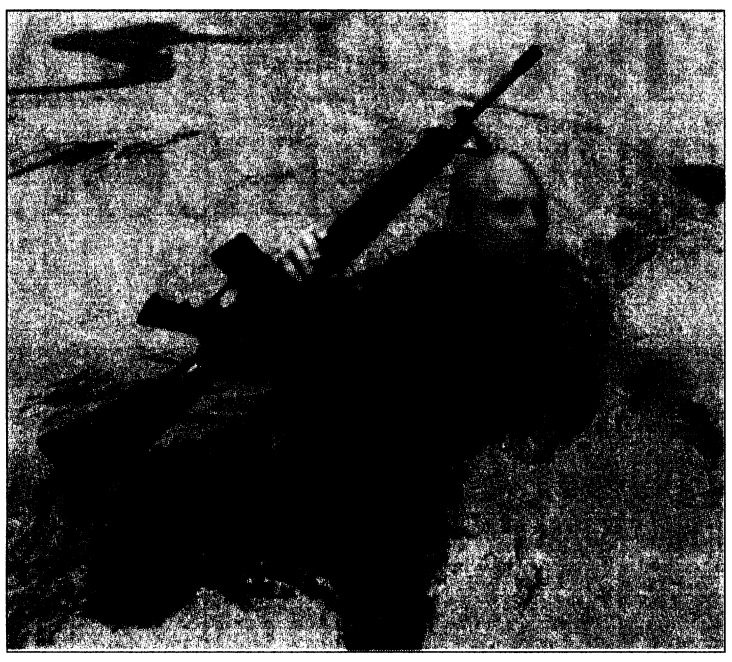
"We sent 15 to the last class, and only one graduated," said a senior instructor from that course. "I want someone from (the National Guard Pre-Ranger) to look at our program and see how we're doing and what we can do better. We need a better turn-out ratio."

Proof of the Guard's success can be found in statistics from 2002, when the Pre-Ranger Course was cancelled temporarily. Of the 27 National Guard Soldiers who were sent to Ranger School during that time, only two passed.

"That says to me we're setting our Soldiers up for success at Ranger School," Gardner said. "Weeding them out is not our goal. We focus a lot on mentoring and coaching.

"We teach the same classes they'll get in Ranger School," he said. "We want to make sure our students are physically and mentally prepared for what's ahead, so they're not wasting their time or someone's money."

Though it varies from unit to unit and state to state, it costs about $500 — minimum — to send a Soldier to the National Guard Pre-Ranger Course. That's why some units conduct their own and some Soldiers opt to skip it completely.



But that's a drop in the bucket compared to the cost of Ranger School, though no one can say just how much that is. Gardner figures the cost of Pre-Ranger is money well spent. It's a wise investment, even if a student fails.

Better to lose the lesser amount if a Soldier can't make it through Pre-Ranger. And if he does, he's "set up for success," said Gardner.

"We're in the business of building warriors for the National Guard and active duty," he said.

"That's what we do. Other schools build professional Soldiers, and that's all well and good. We need professional Soldiers.

"But at a time like this, right now, we need warriors. That's what they do at Ranger School, and that's what we do here," he said.

A Pre-Ranger student keeps his weapon aloft during the water survival test last week at the Kelley Hill pool. Kelley Hill Soldiers account for about 10 percent of the National Guard Pre-Ranger population each year.

"That says to me we're setting our Soldiers up for success at Ranger School. Weeding them out is not our goal. We focus a lot on mentoring and coaching."

Sgt. 1st Class Art Alaniz, an instructor at the National Guard Pre-Ranger Course, hoses down a student before the combat water survival test. The students are hosed down to keep the pool clean. They enter the pool in full dress and must complete several tasks to pass the test.

Pre-Ranger students "lay out" their bags on the first day of the course, the "assessment phase." Students must have every item on their supply list, but no extras.

NCOA implements changes

Includes more classes, but shorter

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning NCOA is changing to provide better training for the Soldier.

With the change comes the welcoming of a new assistant commandant Aug. 1. Sgt. Maj. Tony Winterfeld is the first sergeant major to occupy the position as the NCOA's assistant commandant.

"In the past, the position had always been occupied by a first sergeant," said Command Sgt. Maj. Charles Raper, NCOA commandant. "However, as the second largest NCOA academy in the Army, the duties of the assistant commandant are far above the level of responsibilities a first sergeant should handle."

As the second in command of the NCOA, Winterfeld is also the headquarters commander, the executive officer, and the person responsible for the budgeting, supply and disciplinary actions of the NCOA.

Another change to the NCOA, and possibly the most important, involves the program of instruction of the Advanced NCO Course. ANCOC was an eight-week course made up of two phases, common corps training and individual MOS training.

The new POI for ANCOC reduces the length of the course to six weeks and one phase course, said 1st Sgt. Michael Hibbs, ANCOC branch chief.

The reduction of the course length allows for ANCOC to instruct six cycles per year instead of four. Instructors will have longer breaks between cycles to obtain necessary certifications and training.

Each ANCOC class will include between 120 to 265 NCOs. ANCOC has 13 instructors for the first class beginning Sept. 13. That brings the instructor to student ratio up to one instructor for 20 students.

"This new POI will ensure a better instructor to student ratio resulting in more qualified NCOs in the force," Hibbs said.

The reduction of the course, however, does not mean the Soldiers will train less.

"It's going to be a very intense and robust course, especially if there are holidays in the middle of cycles," Hibbs said, "The Soldiers will have to train six days a week in order to make up for the training holidays.

"Also, we have added training from lessons learned during Operations Iraqi Freedom and Enduring Freedom. Constant attention to ones' surroundings is going to be a major point of instruction," he said.

Reacting to the unknown will become second nature to these NCO, Winterfeld said.

"IEDs will be implemented into every portion of the training. We're going to get the students to think outside of the box in order for them to see that everything and anything can be harmful," he said.

Approximately 80 percent of instructors and students who go through the NCOA course are combat veterans and will find some of the training similar to recent combat experience, Raper said.

Another change that may take place down the road is a combined training exercise between ANCOC and BNCOC, Raper said. The plan is to put the courses together during various training exercises to give them first hand experience working together in the field.

Some of the new training elements added to the course to improve the networking between platoons are the MCS Light and the FBCB2.

The MCS Light is a tracking system that allows platoon leaders to track their Soldiers, other friendly troops and the enemy, Hibbs said.

"The systems were developed to help cut back on the amounts of fratricide the Army experienced during OIF and OEF," he said.

Both ANCOC and BNCOC will also receive further instruction on staff operations between the S-1 through the S-5 positions. Providing such instruction to Soldiers during BNCOC and ANCOC guarantees they know what to do when they need to be in charge of any of the positions, Winterfeld said.

"It's a better product today than it has ever been before," Hibbs said. "They are going to be working from the minute they come in every morning to the minute they go home every night."

ANCOC graduation

Advanced NCO Course Class 3-04 will graduate at 10 a.m. Thursday in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. The public is invited to attend.

Surgeon clears up misconception

Army has only 12 'plastic surgeons'

Michael E. Dukes
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army is not offering free face-lifts, tummy tucks and breast enhancements to everyone in uniform.

Recent articles in national publications may be misleading.

"The spectrum of plastic surgery most people see are the shows on TV, extreme makeover shows, and they think that's plastic surgery," said Lt. Col. Joseph Kolb, Walter Reed Army Medical Center's Plastic Surgery Service chief.

"We are primarily a reconstructive service."

Less than 20 percent of the plastic surgery cases at Walter Reed are for elective cosmetic procedures, Kolb said.

The Army has only about a dozen plastic surgeons, Kolb said, and plastic surgery is not a luxury service offered to military beneficiaries.

"The Army keeps us around for reconstructive procedures," Kolb said.

"In addition, we operate on children with congenital defects like cleft lip, cleft palate and other defects to the head and neck."

Kolb said Walter Reed's four plastic surgeons are actively involved in treating wounded from the war in Iraq.

One, Lt. Col. Andrew Friedman, is currently deployed to Iraq as a general surgeon, where he frequently treats acute hand injuries .

"Hand function is really very dependent on the timeliness of repair," Kolb explained.

"So having a hand surgeon in Iraq can make a difference in having a functional hand after an injury or not having a functional hand. It's that important.

"And we've all been involved in some very difficult head and neck traumas with Iraq going on.

"Those are always very difficult to do because of the complexity," he said.

and hook into a different artery and vein. This is something Walter Reed plastic surgeons perform regularly.

Despite supporting deployments and spending long hours in the operating room to treat the war wounded, the surgeons have maintained their support of the Breast Center and of cleft lip, cleft pallet and cancer surgery in general, Kolb said.

"We've been in a little bit of a squeeze and our ability to do cosmetic surgery has been compromised a certain bit," Kolb said.

"But, we're still offering most every service we've always offered — certainly the waiting times have increased though."

Walter Reed plastic surgeons also find time for research.

"We are on a (Food and Drug Administration) protocol for using silicone-gel implants for breast reconstructive work," Kolb said.

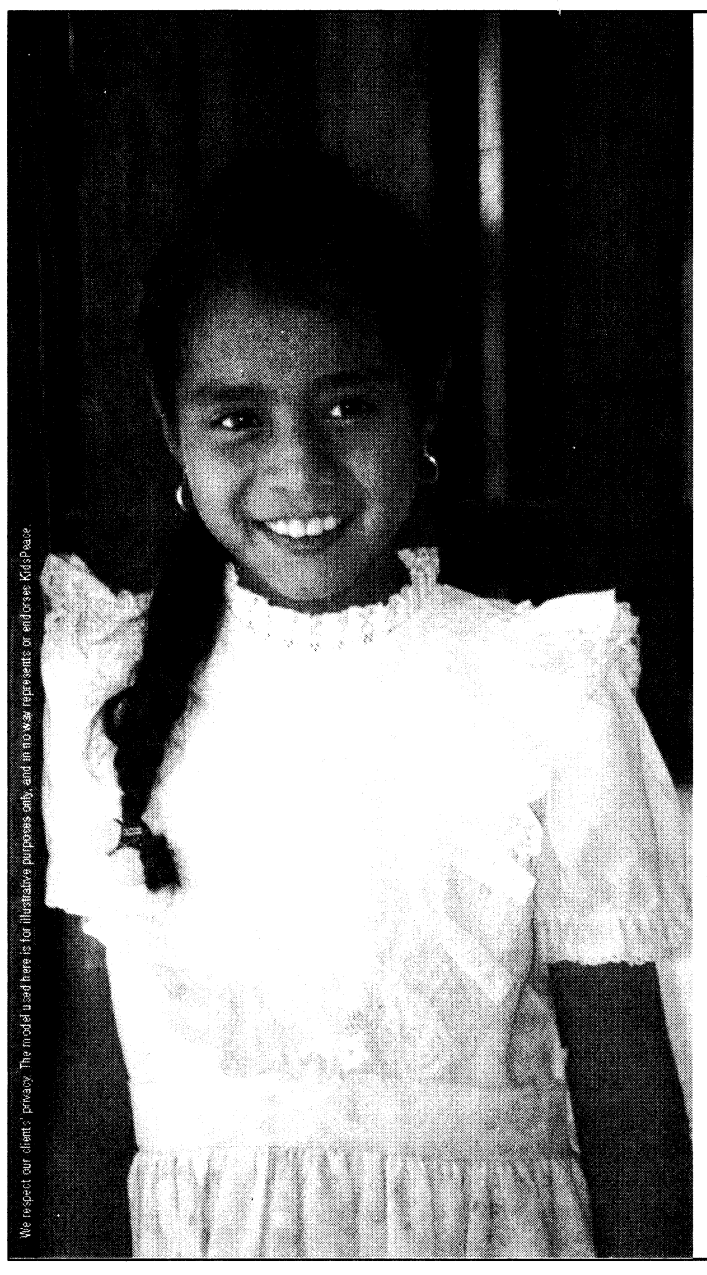
This allows doctors in the Walter Reed Comprehensive Breast Center to send their breast cancer patients to plastic surgery for a consult for breast implantation.

To help maintain the surgeons' skills in all areas of plastic surgery, Kolb said services are sometimes provided in other areas.

Walter Reed gets thousands of plastic surgery consults for beneficiaries wanting some type of cosmetic surgery.

"The demand is tremendous and we don't have the time to devote to all of them," he said. "Because of that, I personally have to go through all of the consults, that go to the service, and prioritize them."

Kids and patients with cancer who need reconstructive surgery come first.



Because of Walter Reed's vast expertise in plastic surgery, medical students from the Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences come to the hospital's Plastic Surgery Service to conduct research.

The service also offers a unique opportunity for the USUHS residents.

"We're also restarting humanitarian trips down to Central and South America in fiscal year '05," Kolb said.

COMMUNITY

Story and photos by Lori Egan

Hunt Club activities make good HORSE SENSE

The name confuses some — the Fort Benning Hunt Club is not a place to hunt, although there are plenty of deer in the neighborhood. It's a place on post for the Fort Benning community to stable horses.

Kristy and Cheryl Wilkes stable two horses at the club, and Kristy would live there if she could, said their mother, Cynthia Wilkes.

Kristy, a Hardaway junior, said the convenience of the club lets her spend more time with her horse, Silly, a 16-year-old Arabian.

Before the family moved to Fort Benning, the horse was kept on a pasture and Kristy could only see her every couple of days.

At the Fort Benning Hunt Club, owners are responsible for the feed and care of their horses.

That means morning and evening feeds, which allows for adequate interaction between the owners and their animals, said Mikki Johansen, stable officer. Neglect isn't tolerated.

Club members pay a monthly $15 membership fee and rent the paddocks where their horses are boarded. They're responsible for the upkeep of their horses' areas and also for the stables in general, Johansen said. Members are required to work four hours during "work call" each month to maintain the common areas.

Saturday, Sgt. 1st Class Mark Griffith and Ricky Hawkins took weed eaters to the quarantine area by the post Veterinary Clinic and at the club near the trailer parking lot and picnic area.

The Wilkes girls did a police call, emptying trash and cleaning the eight-stall barn, and Staff Sgt. David Haage and Spc. Louis Atchison worked on a new paddock fence.

Some of the paddocks were unsafe for the horses, Johansen said.

"It's been a slow process but we're trying to get the horses out of the condemned paddocks into nice new ones," she said.

Griffith's two horses benefited from the construction.

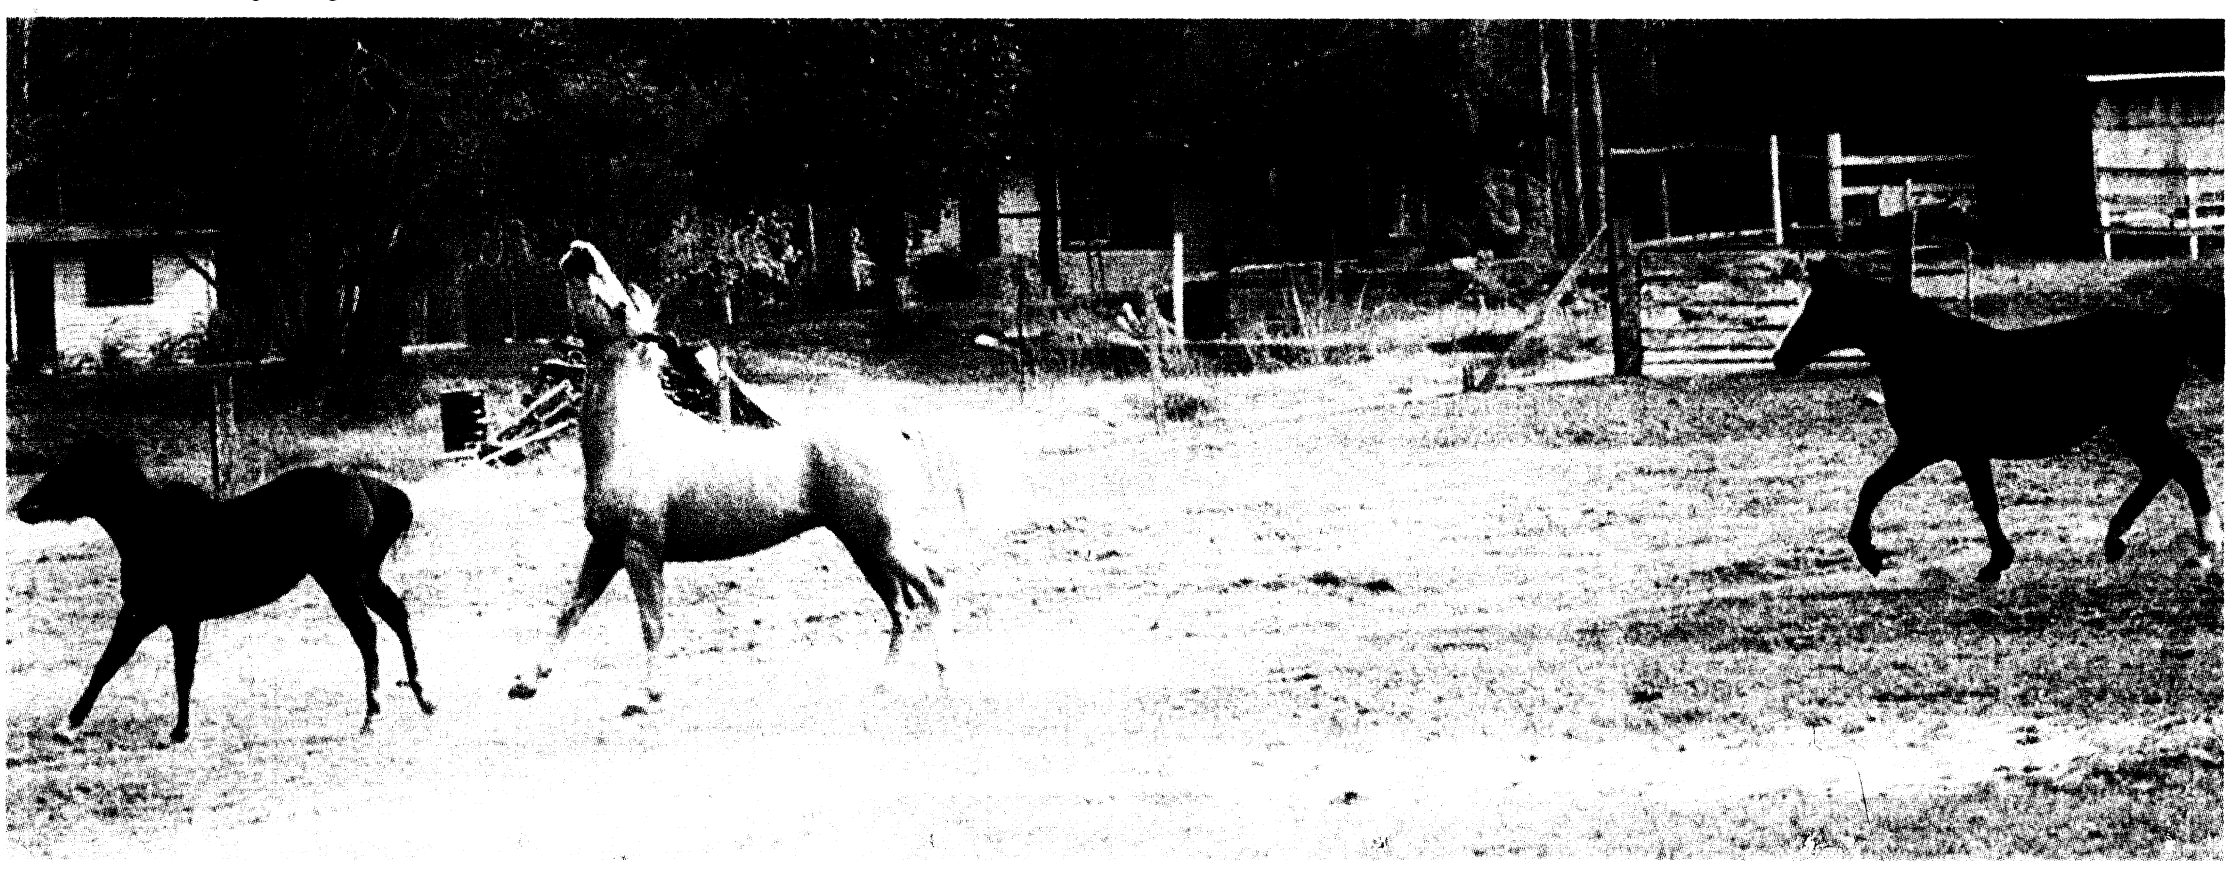
During the summer, Griffith, with the help of family, friends and a few club members, built a two-horse paddock to replace two paddocks that were demolished last October during work call.

Another project completed recently was the renovation of the office, now used as the club house because the original club house was deemed unsafe and uninhabitable according to the post vet's inspection report.

The next project for club members is to remove the condemned paddocks and salvage the useable materials to continue improving the stables, Johansen said.

"We also want to increase the pasture areas we have for turn out," she said, "and build a quarantine area for sick horses at the Hunt Club."

Currently, the club is home to 38 horses and there is a waiting list. The facilities include: 49 paddocks, (six of which have been condemned and are unusable), four arenas — western, jump, dressage and lesson — a round pen for ground work, and riding trails.



Lisa Atchison trailered her two appaloosas from Wyoming to Fort Benning at the end of July.

"I was really excited about the jump arena," she said. "It's a good facility and there is a definite camaraderie here."

Hunt Club member Cathy Levesque rides Angel.

The Fort Benning Hunt Club houses 38 horses and there is a waiting list. The facilities include: 49 paddocks (six are condemned), four arenas — western, jump, dressage and lesson — a round pen for ground work, and riding trails. Riding lessons are available.

*Q: Are online auctions a safe way to do business?

A: Doing business online doesn't always mean buying goods; sometimes you can bid for them.

Even though online auctions are increasing in popularity, does this mean they are safe?

Bidding on an online auction requires that you trust the seller, as well as the auction site. Some sites are well-established and monitor against seller abuses, while other sites have few safeguards in place to protect the online bidder.

When looking at the auction site, see if it has a policy to identify seller fraud, and if it has a claim process. Some online auctioneers have a procedure to recover for claims more than a certain amount.

Fraud by the seller is very easy online, as there is almost no way to guarantee the item being sold is actually owned by the seller, or that the same item is not being offered for sale to multiple bidders.

Some auction sites have an escrow service, which, for a fee, will hold the bidder's money until the item is transferred and is found to be satisfactory.

Seller fraud can also occur when the item is not in the condition claimed. Third-party verification can help you avoid this problem, but it can be costly.

There's always a risk when you bid online, but the risks can be reduced if you deal with a reputable auctioneer and keep your bids low with an unknown seller.

If you get cheated in an online auction, can you sue?

It may be possible, but before looking to sue, you should see if the auctioneer has a claim process. Lawsuits can be expensive, so anyone thinking of suing should balance the cost of litigation against the amount of money being sought.

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

If anyone knows that nagging, dragging sensation of lugging yourself out of bed to go for a run at o-dark-thirty, believe me, it's me. I am not, repeat not, a morning person. And running for the heck of it ... well, that's not exactly my thing either.

But this weekend may prove a little different.

Maybe because I'll be going for a midnight run instead of a crack-of-dawn run. Or maybe because it will be in support of a cause a little more important than scoring well on my next PT test or fitting into my old jeans.

Whatever the reason, I'll be one of the more than 1,500 runners expected to turn out for this year's Midnight Express.

Never heard of it? Don't sweat it. I'm a newbie, too.

Apparently, Country's Barbecue has hosted this all-night shindig for 24 years running now.

Runners and spectators gather by the thousands — last year, 5,000 people turned out — to enjoy live music, tasty food and good company.

Then, right about midnight, the runners gather at the start line and take off down a 5K, candle-illuminated course, which begins and ends at Country's.

Now, I have to tell you — I was more than a little baffled when I first heard about this event.

Why on Earth would anyone in their right mind want to go for a run in the middle of the night? And on a Saturday night, for that matter! You're kidding, right?

But this event truly is for a great cause. You see, all proceeds will benefit Columbus' visually impaired community.

The money raised at the Midnight Express has been used to buy computers and other software specifically for blind students at Muscogee County schools. It's funded scholarships for visually impaired students at Columbus State University and the Association for Education and Rehabilitation of the Blind and Visually Impaired. It's contributed to the purchase of special equipment for the Children's Miracle Network.

Last year, the race garnered $22,000 from runners and sponsors. This year, it could be even more — and just think, you could be part of that.

It really doesn't matter who you are, what your fitness level, whether you're into 5Ks or not. People of all ages from all walks of life show up with their running shoes in hand. From families pushing strollers to high school runners to some of the nation's best visually impaired athletes ... anyone and everyone can come out and participate.

Runners can register at www.countrysbarbecue.com for $18 before the race or $20 the day of.

Each runner will be the lucky recipient of a Midnight Express T-shirt, a barbecue sandwich and Country's "famous" ice tea. Winners in each division get trophies.

But here's the real kicker — runners can take advantage of FREE massages from professional masseuses! I don't know about you, but I could really use that right about now.

So, I've amended my earlier rule — the one that states that I must be absolutely miserable during any athletic event that takes place before the sun comes up — and I have registered for the Midnight Express this Saturday evening.

Join me at Country's Barbecue at 3137 Mercury Drive at 8 p.m. Saturday, which is when the live music will kick off.

And look for popular local band Cornbread to take the stage later in the evening.

Check out Country's Web site, www.countrysbarbecue.com for more information.

And if you're looking for a little something to get you in the spirit, check out the sixth annual Beep Ball Competition tonight at Columbus State University. Beep ball is basically baseball for the visually impaired. The players hit and field the ball by listening to the sound of beeps.

Can't imagine it? You might just get a chance to test out your own beep ball skills. Some sighted players will be thrown in the mix, blindfolded.

The competition will kick off at 7 p.m. tonight at CSU's Fast Pitch Softball Field.

Seminar to teach women 'all there is to know' about football

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"I have seen women walk right past a TV set with a football game on and — this always amazes me — not stop to watch, even if the TV is showing replays of what we call a 'good hit,' which is a tackle that causes at least one major internal organ to actually fly out a player's body."

— Dave Barry
Miami Herald* columnist

Dave Barry may just have to eat those words after this weekend — well, if he's referring to Columbus women, anyway.

Women in the tricommunity will have the opportunity to get a little schooling in America's favorite sport Saturday — whether they're football moms or couch companions to their husbands or boyfriends.

Columbus Regional Sports Care will offer "What Women Need to Know About Football" from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at the Columbus Regional Conference Center at The Medical Center.

"This is everything you need to know about football," said DeNae Lacy, senior field manager for Sports Care. "The helmets, the pads, the plays, what they're saying in the huddle ... the basics."

Geared toward women with little or no knowledge of football, the seminar is a chance to learn about the sport that so fascinates others.

"We want to save as many marriages as we can this football season," Lacy joked.

"Women will be able to hold good conversations with their spouses or boyfriends about football and not be clueless," she said. "And there's a lot of good information for mothers with sons playing this season."

The event will touch on everything from referee signals and penalties to basic rules, from injury prevention to proper hydration, Lacy said.

Charles Flowers, coach of Shaw High School's football team, will bring 22 of his players — both offensive and defensive lines — to demonstrate plays for the women, who will each receive a play book to take home with them.

Then, the women will take to the field and run the plays.

"They won't be out there hurting each other or anything," Lacy said. "They'll just get an idea of what the plays are."

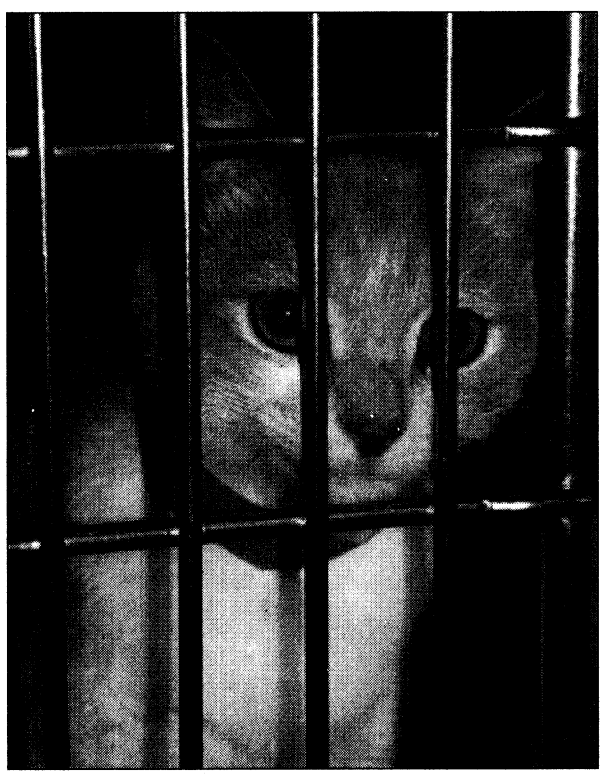
Columbus referee Kent Flemming will make an appearance, complete with uniform, flags and whistle, to demonstrate calls for the attendees.

Dr. Dan Kosobucki will "calm" anxious football mothers with a crash course on football injures, trauma and visits to the ER.

"He'll help to set their minds at ease," Lacy said.

Athletic trainer Ashley Abbott will provide a host of helpful hints for proper hydration and will lay to rest that heated debate — is water or Gatorade better for your child athlete?

And what football game would be complete without the tailgate party to kick it off? No future female football fanatic will be confused about what to bring to a pre-game party after a "tailgate spread" demonstration, including a quick dip recipe sure to please, Lacy said.



The event is completely free, and lunch will be provided, she said.

Women can pre-register at www.columbusregional.com — the preferred method — or show up the day of.

There's only room for 200 participants, and as of right now, 80 women are signed up, Lacy said.

"All you need is a smiling face," she said.

Fort Benning youth in the news

Youth should be allowed to vote, but they should take it seriously

Brianna Mosby
Faith Middle School

I think it would be a good idea for the legal voting age to be lowered, because more people could be involved in the voting process.

We as American children should have a say in who is chosen to govern our country, and we should be allowed to help choose who becomes our president.

Having said this, I also think that problems could occur if we lower the voting age, because we don't have as much wisdom as our parents.

Most families have young teenage children who would like to vote but don't even know or understand the process they have to go through to cast their vote.

Some people don't vote seriously or they vote just so they can tell others they voted. These people need to realize their "joke" vote counts and could make the final decisions affecting us as a country.

Before voting, you should make sure you have a reasonable idea as to why you're voting for a particular person.

Before making a final decision, ask yourself: Does this person have what it takes to make a good leader? Does he or she seem like a good role model? According to given proof or facts, does he or she appear to be a man or woman who will stick to his or her word?

When you vote, remember to take it seriously. Voting is a privilege, and it can easily be taken away.

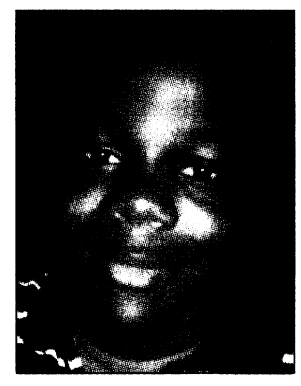
We often forget that people fought and died for us to have the right to vote, and this right should not be taken lightly.

Also, no one should take voting for granted, because we could lose the right.

Voting is very important, and everyone who is eligible to vote should vote.

If you chose not to, don't get upset if the person you wanted to win the election doesn't get elected.

You never know — you're vote may have made all the difference.



Shantil Ferguson, 12, seventh grade

"Lowering the voting age is not a good idea because it will increase the state's and nation's problems. The government has more concerns than it can handle with the war in Iraq, literacy, homelessness, etc., without adding to it. If anything, I think the age should be raised because many 18-year-olds are more concerned with partying than voting."

Paula Vail, 12, seventh grade

"I think it's a great idea. I want to have a say in where my hard-earned paycheck taxes are going. When I'm 16, I want to have a voice and be able to vote for whom I want for president. I also want a voice in the local politics because I want my money going toward something that will benefit me and not for some worthless landfill in another city."

Anthony Montgomery, 12, seventh grade,

"I think 16-year-olds should be allowed to vote because many of them have jobs, and they pay taxes. The right to vote will help them learn more about the presidential election as well as local ones. It would also give teenagers more reasons to get a job and get involved."

School Board Meeting

US & THEM

Where exactly is the difference?

Chaplain (Maj.) David Acuff
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

As a child, I often took a certain book off the shelf and thumbed through the pictures, studying them in detail, and burning the images into my mind.

The images I gazed upon are now American icons, and as I have come to realize, they formed a fair part of my perception of right and wrong.

The book was Life Goes to War — a photo collection of all of those famous pictures from World War II. From these pictures many of us learned the difference between Us and Them.

Us is the picture of the smiling, boyish Audie Murphy in his Class A's and Medal of Honor.

Us is the picture of Eisenhower standing with the tall paratroopers of the 101st Airborne the day before they jumped into France.

Us is the picture of the sailor kissing the nurse on VE Day.

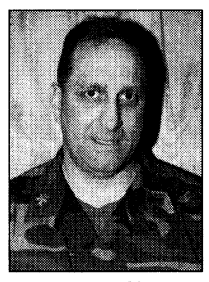
Us wore an Ike jacket like the one that hung in my father's closet.

Us wore the uniform I would one day wear.

Us was me.

Then there was Them.

Them is the picture of the Japanese Soldier with a samurai sword poised over the neck of a blindfolded and helpless American prisoner.



Them is the picture of the jackbooted legions in Nuremberg worshipping at the pagan altar of Hitler.

Them is the gray picture of box cars stacked high with starved corpses at Auschwitz.

Them is the skull and crossbones pin on a foreign black hat.

Them is the picture of dozens of sullen men in the Nuremberg courtroom dock, wearing headphones, guarded by MPs standing behind them.

REFLECTIONS

Acuff

Them had foreign names like Adolf, Rudolf, Yamamoto and Tojo.

A few months ago I studied a new set of pictures, and the wiring in my mind began to cross and burn. Circuits shorted. Us and Them slammed together and merged.

The people in these pictures were wearing the uniform of Us, and they had names like Us, but the things they were doing couldn't have been Us. They were doing the things of Them.

Since seeing those pictures, I've been pondering the question: "Could I do that?"

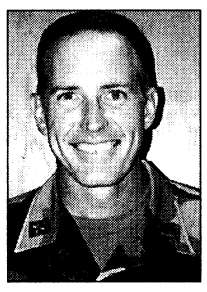
I've always known that I do not fully embody the Army value of selfless service. Nevertheless I thought of myself as being incapable of doing the things I was seeing. I was above that. Them did those things. I was Us. But now I wondered. Was I, too, capable of deliberately inflicting pain and relishing it, as those in the pictures had done?

Is there not in everyone a seed, mostly hidden, that flourishes when watered and nourished by power? Few ever have that degree of power; thus few ever realize the dark potential that lies in us all. We all see brief flashes of it.

Remember that sweetheart from high school or college who dumped you? Remember how you felt when that sweetheart got dumped just like you got dumped? This schadenfreud, this guilty pleasure at another's misfortune, this feeling that we all, on occasion, find within ourselves, is the source of the atrocities that astound us once they achieve full growth. Could all people do such things? I believe that a fearless self-inventory will reveal that all of us have that potential.

Classical Christianity has always asserted that the core of our being has been fractured and thus atrocities such as Abu Ghraib happen. Modern theories of human nature tend to be much more positive and optimistic.

A cursory survey of history, especially 20th century history, causes us to ask why basically good people have murdered more than 100 million of their neighbors in the past century.



If anything good can come of the horror house of Abu Ghraib, it is the opening of the dark cellars in our own souls to the light of God.

Know it's all OK before leaping into loved one's arms

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Imagine getting ready to jump out of a perfectly good airplane, and right before the green "go" light pops on, and you're ready to exit the aircraft in mid-flight, a reporter reaches around you, sticks his microphone in your face and asks, "What would it be worth to you to know that you're going to have a beautiful jump and not a disastrous dive?"

Sounds crazy, doesn't it? But that's exactly why the Army invests so much energy and expertise in making sure each and every jumper is checked and re-checked to make sure "All's OK, Jumpmaster!" That's a valuable lesson for our relationships too.

Hawkins

What would it be worth, relationship wise, to know you, or your child, was "All-OK" before taking a flying leap into the arms of another? Just like parachuting, it can either be an exhilarating, ecstatic ride, or it can be disastrous. It pays to know you are "All-OK" in that relationship before you jump, doesn't it?

This week we are on Step 4 of How to Avoid Marrying a Jerk. So far we've talked about the three areas that we've got to eyeball closely:

- Step 1 — Get to know him or her.
- Step 2 — Earn, learn to trust him or her.
- Step 3 — Test your reliance on him or her.
- Step 4 — Commit. First comes knowing someone. Then from knowing comes trusting. After we trust, we can begin to rely. And once his or her reliance has been tested and proven over time, then, and only then, are we ready to commit.

Do you see how it's a progression? What happens if I commit to someone that I haven't relied on much — or just haven't known well — or can't trust? It's like getting the cart before the horse — just like being mis-rigged for a jump, it can spell disaster!

There's one more step to go. What is it? Join me here next week as I wrap up this series on "How to Avoid Marrying a Jerk — What Every Parent Ought to Teach and What Every Single's Gotta Know" or join me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel where we're having fun with the same topic at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill. Or give me a ring at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760. I look forward to meeting you.

PVA donates lift for disabled hunters

Chair-bound vet gets a shot at hunting

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Richard May thought his hunting days were over. The 60-year-old Vietnam vet lost both legs to vascular disease — the first in 2000, the second last year — the result of land mine wounds that festered for more than 30 years. The scooter he drives takes him just about anywhere his legs used to go, except the woods. Deer hunting was out of the question.

All that changed last week when Fort Benning received a Huntmaster Bud-lift, a top-of-the-line, solar-powered "tree stand" of sorts — only no tree is needed.

The two-man lift, valued at nearly $13,000, is a gift from the Paralyzed Veterans Association.

"I'm excited. I didn't figure I'd ever get to do this again," said May, who bought a new shotgun in anticipation of his first hunting trip in more than five years.

That's about how long he's been listening to hunting stories down at the VFW Lodge on Victory Drive, where the retired recon specialist serves as quartermaster.

Now, thanks to the lift and the help of a good friend, he'll be the one telling the stories.

The Bud-lift will accommodate May, his scooter and his buddy Bill Brickner, a retired Soldier who's been helping disabled hunters for more than 10 years.

"Unless you've been there, you don't really understand what something like this means to someone who loves to hunt but thinks he can't do it anymore," said Brickner, who used to fashion a hunting blind for the disabled by draping camouflage netting around a converted wheel chair. Quite often, he had to carry the disabled hunter through the woods to get to the blind.

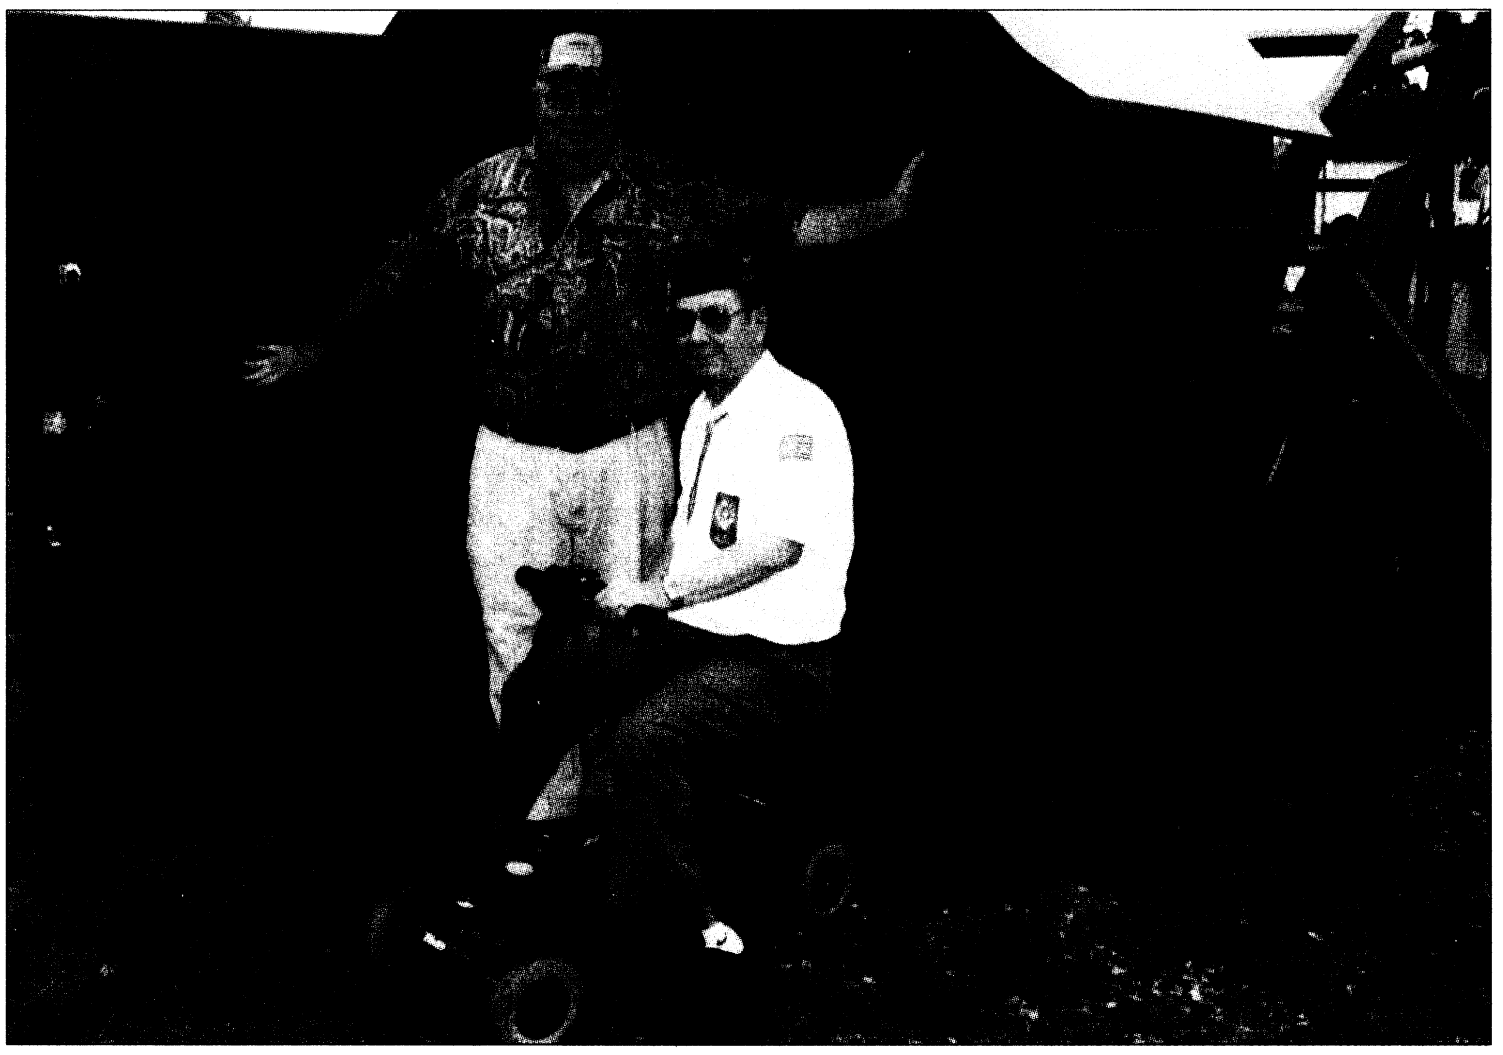
Now, if all goes as planned, the new Bud-lift will be easily accessible for Brickner, his disabled friends, and anyone with a physical handicap — young or old — interested in using it.

To put it in terms Soldiers and their families can relate to, the lift resembles a metal guard shack. It's dark green with narrow horizontal windows for a clear view, a wide door for easy access, and a bench seat. It's attached to a trailer by an arm, which extends 30 feet into the air.

The trailer has braces, which extend like tentacles to stabilize and support the lift during use. The lift can be raised and lowered from within.

And it folds back up into a tidy, compact unit for transport to and from Uchee Creek.

Uchee Creek?



That's right. The staff at Uchee Creek is responsible for the lift, because Cliff Hughes, business manager for Uchee Creek Camp Ground and Marina, was the only one from Fort Benning to step up to the plate when the PVA offered the lift — an offer the association made to several installations across the U.S.

The amount of paperwork it took to receive the lift was daunting, Hughes admitted. It took more than six months to navigate the trail of red tape the Army requires for "gifts" of this value.

But as an avid outdoorsman and a retired Soldier, Hughes recognized the value of the lift from the start. And it's not in dollars, he said.

"I can't even imagine what it's like not to be able to hunt," he said.

"This could open up doors they thought were closed forever, and for some, I guess, it could open up a door to a world they've never seen before."

Bridgett Siter

Richard May gets his first look at Fort Benning's new Huntmaster Bud-lift Monday. May, who lost both legs to wounds he suffered in Vietnam, and his friend Bill Brickner, pictured here, hope to use the lift to hunt deer next month. The lift will be available for disabled hunters of all ages, said Cliff Hughes, business manager for Uchee Creek Campground and Marina, where the lift is stored.

Hughes said he's still "working out the bugs," trying to formulate a plan for the transportation and use of the lift.

Obviously, it'll have to be reserved, and by design, it requires someone to accompany and assist the hunter.

Those are details he's working on, but Hughes believes the Fort Benning's Conservation Branch can help answer the most obvious question — where the lift will go.

He's hoping conservation officials will designate two sites for the lift — one on the Georgia side of the Chattahoochee River and one on the Alabama side.

Use of the machine won't be restricted to those sites, he said, but use of those sites should be off-limits to other hunters when the lift was in use.

"We'll figure all that out by the time hunting season starts," Hughes said.

"The important thing is we got it here in time."

Just in time for May, who hopes to be on board the machine for its first lift-off.

"I think it's great," he said. "It's going to be good for a lot of veterans, but I wanna be the first."

For more information about the Huntmaster Bud-lift, to reserve it or find a hunter to assist a disabled hunter, call Hughes at 681-6995 or Brickner at 681-4549 or 563-0189.

Bill Brickner has a hunter's heart, and anyone who knows hunters can tell you their hearts are always in the right place, even if their tree stands aren't.

You can't always measure the success of a hunt by the size of a rack, Brickner says. Sometimes you see it in the eyes of a child who's never held a bow before. Sometimes you hear it in the "thanks" of a mother who wondered how she'd feed her hungry child.

Now Brickner's hunting for hunters with hearts like his own — hunters who would like to help the hungry and disabled. He's on the committee for the Valley Buckmasters Chapter Banquet from 6 to 10 p.m. Oct. 9 at the Lynch Road Fire Department Lodge in Columbus.

Brickner and his buddies are selling tickets and soliciting donations for the event, which will feature a steak dinner, door prizes, an auction and a gun raffle. Proceeds from the event will go to Project Venison, a local program to provide food for the hungry, and a hunting program for disabled children. Tickets are $35 for a single ticket, $15 for the second. One child 11 or younger can accompany an adult for free. Tickets for children between 12 and 17 cost $15. For more information about the Valley Buckmasters Chapter Banquet, to request tickets or become a sponsor, call Brickner at 681-4549.

Fort Benning selects Ten-Miler team

Eight compete in mixed team category

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Eight Soldiers will represent Fort Benning at the Army 10-Miler race Oct. 24 in Washington, D.C.

Twenty-eight runners competed in three pre-qualifying races in April, May and June.

The runs were conducted by Fort Benning's Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation Division's Sports Branch.

The eight team members were selected by their best qualifying times on a hilly course that started at the Santiago Fitness Center at Sand Hill.

This is the 20th anniversary of the run, which winds through the nation's capital.

The first race in 1985 had 1,379 finishers. This year's field — limited to 20,000 — is already full.

The Fort Benning team, composed of men and women, will compete in the active-duty open mixed category.

Fort Benning's "Team Follow Me" won the Commanders Cup in 1991. Garza thinks this year's team has a great shot at placing in the mixed division.

"Our time may not look too fast," Garza said, "but the course we ran is hilly. The last half-mile is all uphill, and after you've run nine-and-a-half, it's not fun."

Since the actual race course is flat, Garza is certain the team's times will be quite a bit faster.

With team members scattered across post and on varied schedules, getting the team together for training is difficult. One runner is at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La., another at the Primary Leadership Development Course.

"We're trying to get together to run as a team," said 1st lt. Stephanie Feagin, "so anyone who can come and run — we'll start at Briant Wells at 6:30 a.m. Sunday mornings."

The runners on Fort Benning Ten-Miler team are :

Sgt. 1st Class Carlos Garza, 71st Military Police Detachment

Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Mobley, 2nd Battalion, 19th Inf. Regt.

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Pumphrey, 14th Field Hospital

Catfish have whale of night with military

BCTB, ITB troops live it up despite 4-3 loss

Columbus Catfish mascot Hook leads as Dexter Elementary School second-grader Tommy Lindsey tries to beat him around the bases.

Soldiers from both the Basic Combat Training Brigade and the Infantry Training Brigade entertain the crowd between innings with tug-of-war bouts.

The Columbus Catfish's military appreciation night at Golden Park started off well Saturday.

The upper tier seats were filled with Soldiers from the Infantry and Basic Combat Training Brigades. The lower tiers were full of military and civilian fans alike.

Early in the first inning, Pvt. Greg Sbaldigi caught a foul ball tipped into the stands behind the Catfish dugout. Sbaldigi, who played baseball for 11 years growing up in Atlanta, is now in his fifth week of training in C Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment.

Although the high foul ball stung when he caught it, he said just being at the game was "the best feeling ever."

The outing was made possible by the combined efforts of Fort Benning officials and the Catfish staff.

Retired Col. Dick Meriaux, director of military affairs for the Catfish said he worked with Al Gelineau, director of Morale,Welfare and Recreation to get the 2,100 Soldiers to the game.

"We try to do what's best for Soldiers and the Catfish," Meriaux said, "so training won't be interrupted."

Meriaux, who retired in 1986 after 26 years in the Army, said having the Soldiers at the game was important.

"This is the American pastime," Meriaux said. "They're defending our country so we can participate in our pastime."

Steve Thiele, the "voice of the infantry," was the announcer for the game against the Capital City Bombers.

Soldiers entertained the crowd between innings in a series of tug-of-war events pitting ITB Soldiers against their BCTB counterparts.

One encouraging drill sergeant offered some words of wisdom to his team before they took to the field

"You do wrong," he said, "and I wouldn't come back if I were you."

His team, all 1,500 pounds of them, handily defeated their first-round opponents.

Pvt. David Sheets, 1st. Bn., 329th Inf. Regt., said the round was "going to be a little harder than digging a foxhole."

After their loss, he compared the tug-of-war to trying to hold on to a ski rope.

Dexter Elementary second-grader Tommy Lindsey was chosen to run bases against Hook, the Catfish mascot.

Lindsey, who plays Youth Services baseball, said he was "lucky today," but worried about his competition.

"He'll probably try to cheat," Lindsey said.

Hook cheated, but Lindsey prevailed, crossing home plate well ahead of the furry, blue thing chasing him.

Hook had the Soldiers doing the "wave" back and forth across the upper stands, until BCTB Soldiers signaled a cease fire from their corner of the ballpark.

And by the middle of the fifth inning, the Catfish ran into a small technical problem.

Thiele announced the beginning of a "pizza scream" contest, only to find the concession stands had been wiped out by hungry Soldiers.

Rounding out the evening's entertainment was a seventh inning stretch sumo match between ITB Soldier Pfc. Oscar Idrogo and BCTB's Pfc. Robert Perry.

Perry won the match, providing a little levity in the Catfish's eventual 4-3 loss to the Bombers as they tried to wrestle each other while wearing large, padded sumo suits.

CYS gears up for new season

Football, soccer, cheerleading fast approaching

Billy Holbrook
Bayonet correspondent

The Child and Youth Services of Fort Benning have put out the call for athletes and coaches alike.

The season of football, soccer, and cheerleading is fast approaching, offering youths and adults a chance to participate.

Dorrie Wagner, a CYS sports specialist, said the leagues have a lot to offer.

"Sports can really help kids, because they learn how to work as a team," Wagner said. "Being a team player is very important in life."

Retired Staff Sgt. James Rorer is a regular face among the coaches for Youth Services. He said his desire to see kids grow keeps him coming back year after year.

"It's not all about winning. It's about watching them have fun and learn more about their game," Rorer said.

Throughout his years of coaching football, basketball and soccer, he has reaped the benefits of getting involved in the sports community.

"I had a kid one year who knew nothing about soccer at the beginning of the season. By the end of the year, he was so proud of himself for learning a new game. I would say that if you had the time to volunteer, it is a worthwhile thing. You will really enjoy watching these kids grow," he said.

Wagner said there are benefits of getting involved in sports.

"Sports offer a healthy outlet for kids," she said. "A lot of them have parents who are deployed. Sports can help them get through the tough times."

In addition to the competitive nature of the games, there is a transcending objective that Wagner focuses on every year.

"You have to deal with winning and losing, but as long as they are having fun — that is the most important part," she said.

The need for assistant and head coaches to volunteer is the most immediate concern for Youth Services this season.

Soccer coaches are in especially high demand. Volunteers can come by Building 359, Room 2 to fill out a form.

Coaches should plan on spending about four hours a week with their teams.

Athlete registration for this season has been extended. Prospective athletes have a chance to sign up for the sport of their choosing until Thursday.

CYS hopes for a season of cheerleaders leading their crowds in shouts of encouragement as they cheer their football team on to the end zone.

CYS encourages soccer moms and dads to join in the fray and shout "GOAL" as the ball rolls past the keeper for one more score. And to borrow from the old adage, let's play ball.
