For the first time ever, a mortar has been destroyed in mid-flight. Northrop Grumman congratulates the Army for its recent successful demonstration of the Tactical High-Energy Laser (THEL). During the test, THEL successfully destroyed both single- and salvo-fired mortar rounds. It is the only weapon to effectively engage these ubiquitous and highly dangerous offensive threats. With more than 30 years of laser weapons experience, Northrop Grumman is proud to introduce the speed and precision of THEL, a system that will cast the battlefield in a whole new light and protect warfighters for years to come.

Sgt. Chad Shier, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group NBC NCO, checks for a proper fit on Sgt. Charles Ramsey's protective mask in the NBC room Nov. 2.

MOS 74D replaced the 54 NBC MOS series last year.

Soldiers receive 19 weeks of Advanced Individual Training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

They are primarily responsible for:
- operating, maintaining or supervising the use of NBC detection and decontamination equipment
- providing training advice and assisting in establishing and applying NBC defense measures

Soldiers can be assigned to chemical decontamination or smoke generator companies.

Chemical MOS not just NBC room ops

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Sgt. Chad Shier has found his niche in an MOS known jokingly as "bugs and gas" or "nobody cares.

Shier is the nuclear, biological and chemical NCO for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group and is working hard to prepare the unit's Soldiers for deployment to Iraq. He's been there once already and he knows the stress associated with the uncertainty of NBC warfare.

But what makes Shier unique, is he's really an 88M, a truck driver, with two years in the Army and eight years in the Marine Corps under his belt. He's in the process of reclassifying to become a bona fide 74D, chemical operations specialist. He's been filling the 74D position in HHC since he arrived at Fort Benning.

As a company NBC NCO, Shier is working in the least glamorous and most misunderstood positions in his adopted specialty.

"Until I came into this job, I knew nothing about the NBC world," Shier said. "It's definitely under appreciated."

After graduating from the post's two-week NBC school, Shier felt he had learned enough to do his job well.

Before the 36th's deployment for Operation Iraqi Freedom last year, Shier was busy making sure the Soldiers in his company had the equipment and the training they needed.

"There was a great, big emphasis on NBC," he said. "Everything else took a back seat." And since no one knew whether Saddam Hussein possessed the capability or intended to use weapons of mass destruction, NBC preparations were important. Although Hussein didn't use any chemical or biological weapons during the deployment, Shier said the threat is still hanging over their heads.

"NBC is still a concern," Shier said, "but now the threat to convoys is greater than the NBC threat. That threat is real."

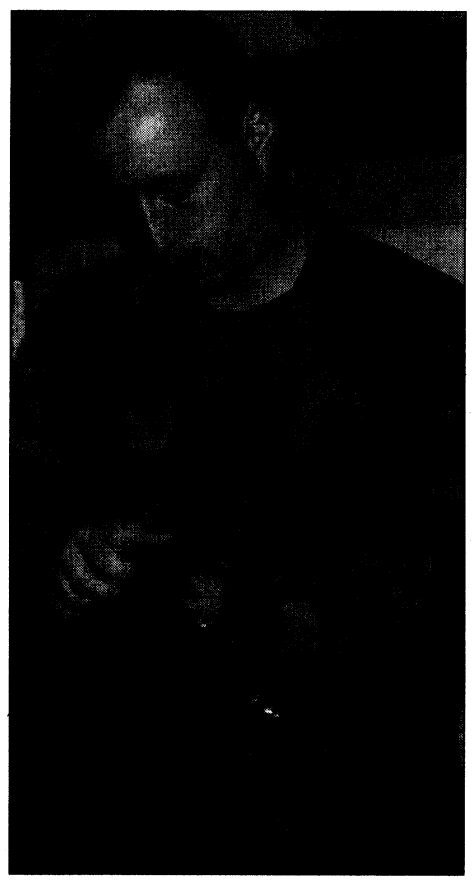
Shier manages the company's more than $300,000 of NBC equipment, making sure everything is maintained properly — from having Soldiers perform required maintenance on their protective masks, to checking key pieces of NBC detection equipment. He also serves as the company commander's primary resource on all matters NBC in the event the unit came under an NBC attack.

"My biggest focus right now is issuing masks and making sure everyone has their individual equipment," he said, "and on company training, both individual and equipment."

Shier's mentor in the unit is Master Sgt. Kerrethel Avery, the Group NBC NCO, a chemical Soldier with 18 years in the Army. When she arrived in the unit in August, she was impressed with the job Shier was doing, even though he's not a U.S. Army Chemical School-trained NCO.

"For the last few months he's been conducting all the mandatory skill level 1 training," Avery said. "Those are the (NBC) tasks that are going to save your life."

She said the non-74D Soldiers, like Shier, are doing excellent jobs.



"They are so into their jobs," she said, "and they try hard."

Shier leads the HHC Soldiers through training on MOPP exchange and use of pieces of NBC equipment, like the M-22 Advanced Chemical Agent Detection Apparatus.

And when Shier finally is able to attend the 74D Basic NCO Course after he returns from the deployment, Avery said he'll get one piece of training unique to the Chemical Corps — a trip into the Chemical Decontamination Training Facility — a live-agent training event. There, Shier will perform chemical agent testing and decontamination in a environment contaminated with live nerve and mustard gas agents.

Shier's next assignment will most likely be in one of the few chemical units in the Army. He'll see the other side of the MOS, the part Avery likes the best, and can serve in a decontamination company, an NBC reconnaissance company, a smoke generating company or in a Technical Escort Unit.

Avery is a graduate of both the J5 TEU and L5 NBC reconnaissance courses, and has served in decontamination platoons, as a unit NBC NCO and as a drill sergeant for 74D Soldiers.

Sgt. Chad Shier, reassembles an M-40 protective mask after cleaning it. One of Shier's jobs is to ensure Soldiers are properly caring for their NBC equipment.

In the TEU course, she learned about chemical agent sampling and received extensive training on packaging munitions. Some of that training included more live agent training in Canada. While deployed to Israel during OIF, she served as an advisor to a Patriot missile unit, leaving only after the SCUD threat was over. She deployed again with the TEU to support the Solders in Afghanistan.

"The best part about (about being a 74D) is we're allowed to do different jobs all within one MOS," Avery said. "Women couldn't always serve in TEU or in smoke platoons. But now, I get to work around live chemicals. Our MOS is so versatile. You can take this experience (with you) once you retire."

Soldiers from E Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, don't hide their war faces during a day of obstacles. The Soldiers took on two courses on Sand Hill to learn teamwork, discipline and the importance of motivation.

E Co. puts on its game face

Pvt. Franklin Porter has a war face like no one else. At the age of 19, he can scare his toughest adversaries with only a look.

Actually, if you check out any of the Soldiers at E Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, you'd be surprised at how much they look like infantrymen, although they are only in their second week of training.

The Soldiers spent all day Monday testing their abilities to face fear and work together as a team to take on the Confidence Course and the Obstacle Course on Sand Hill.

"The purpose of these obstacle courses is to instill team building and confidence in the Soldiers," said Staff Sgt. Fernando Perez, 3rd Platoon drill sergeant.

"They're still in the learning phase — the total control phase. These Soldiers are still trying to figure out how to work together as a team to accomplish the mission. After three weeks, they'll figure out what to do to help each other out."

The Soldiers were faced with monkey bars, rope climbs, crab and bear crawls, log runs, low crawling through a pit of war under barb wire and the constant yelling from the drill sergeants to "wait for your buddy, you!"

"The obstacles aren't hard," said Staff Sgt. John Ingoldsby, 4th Platoon drill sergeant. "The hardest part for the Soldiers is remembering to wait for their buddies and completing the obstacles as teams."

"C'mon Porter! C'mon Stuckey! C'mon man!" Encouraging words from Soldiers trying to get through the courses together and trying to accomplish the missions as a team.

The Soldiers who couldn't finish an obstacle correctly dropped for 25 push-ups, while some of their buddies dropped and pushed with them to show their support.

"These are good people," said Pvt. Martin Griffin, 1st Platoon Soldier.

"It can be stressful and challenging, but there's a lot of good people in my platoon, and we keep each other going."

The 24 year-old from Oakland, Calif., joined the Army in search of better opportunities for himself and his family.

"The hardest part of all of this is being away from my two little girls," he said.

"But we're all going through the same thing, and we all have families we miss.

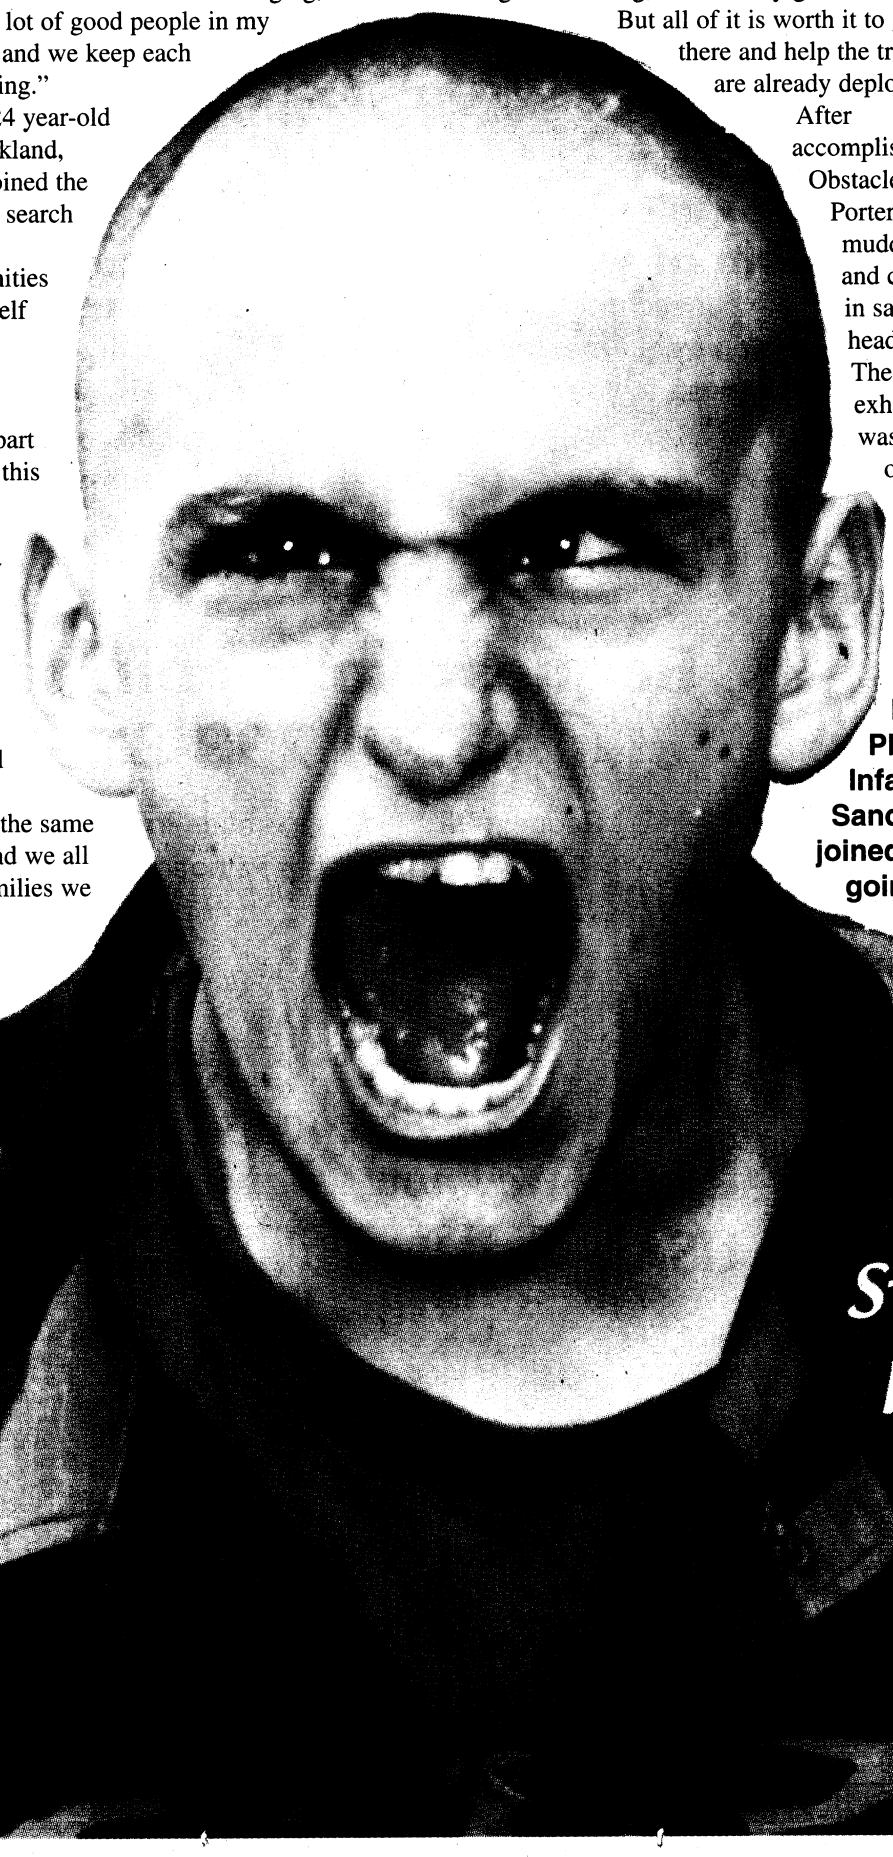
"My father is a Vietnam and Korean War veteran, and he told me it would be this way," Griffin said. "It's not as hard as I thought it would be, but don't get me wrong, it can really get hard at times.

But all of it is worth it to go out there and help the troops that are already deployed."

After accomplishing the Obstacle Course, Porter was muddy, wet and covered in sand from head to toe. The exhaustion was visible on his face as well as his battle buddies, but his motivation never wavered.

"I joined the Army to serve my country," he said.

"This is a lot harder than I expected it to be, both physically and mentally. I have to make it through though. I'm going to give the military a hundred and ten percent."



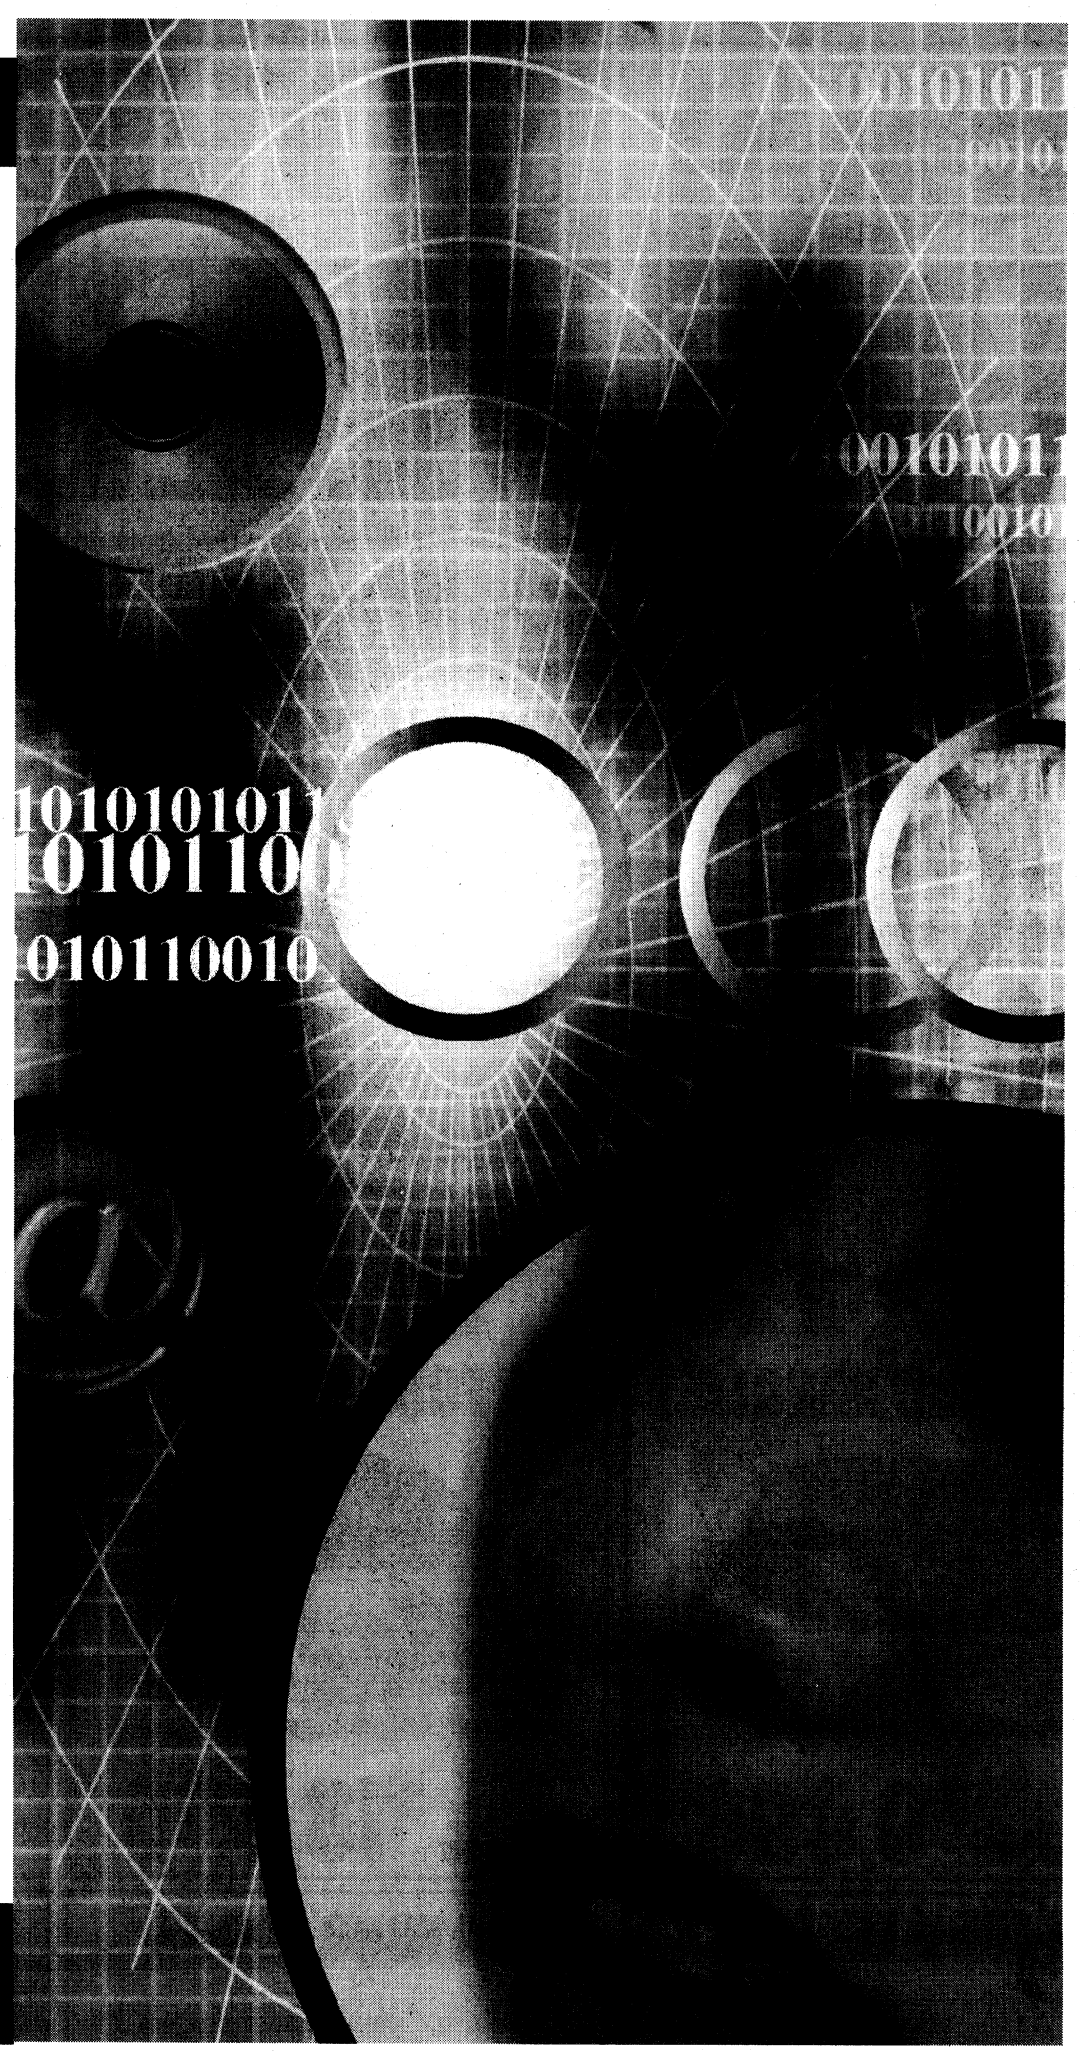
Perez said every cycle of Soldiers is different, so it's difficult to compare them. But the fact that these new Soldiers joined an Army at war is never forgotten during each training cycle.

"The fact that we're a country at war is stressed constantly during the cycle," Perez said.

"Even the National Guard and Reserve Soldiers get deployed now, so no one can take this training lightly.

"By the time these Soldiers graduate they'll fully understand the importance of situational and battle focus awareness."

E Co. graduates at 9 a.m. Feb. 11 on Sand Hill's Kanell Field.



Pvt. Franklin Porter, 2nd Platoon, E Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, shows his "war face" at the Sand Hill Obstacle Course Nov. 1. Porter said he joined the Army to serve his country and he's going to give the military 110 percent. E Co. will graduate from basic training Feb. 11.

COMMUNITY

On the 15th anniversary of freedom in East Berlin, local residents reflect on their thoughts about the day

the Wall came tumbling down

Local resident reunites with sister in Berlin

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"In 1961 ... John Kennedy was president of the United States. Nikita Kruschev was premier of the Soviet Union. Jet passenger planes were still a marvel. Skyjacking was a threat. The Soviets had just orbited Cosmonaut Titov. To Kill a Mockingbird was at the top of the moviegoer's list. Short haircuts and beehive hairdos were in style; so were pegged pants. Campus protests were in the news. Southern states still had segregated "colored" drinking fountains and toilets. And the Berlin Wall was erected."

— The Writings on the Wall,* Terry Tillman

Tillman, recalling his first visit to the Wall in 1988, described Berlin as "a broken heart, two halves split ... a feeling of hurt." That from an American who admitted to feelings of ambivalence that left him unable to relate to the plight of Germans who suffered on either side of the wall. He simply wasn't interested in politics.

That much he had in common with Anna Davis. She wasn't interested in the politics of division either. But the wall that divided Germany divided her family. Davis knows more about the brokenhearted Germany than most.

Davis's mother, Frieda, was a war widow with three babies to raise, when she left East Germany in search of a better life. She traveled west, leaving her children with her mother until she could find a job and a home.

But the German Democratic Republic erected a barrier 800 miles long, seemingly overnight, dividing East and West Germany and effectively making West Berlin an island.

The young widow was stranded — or perhaps it was her mother and children who were stranded — afloat in a sea of despair and loneliness in a city, or half a city, of more than 4 million residents.

Frieda settled north of Frankfurt, married and had six more children. Anna was born in 1948.

When Anna was 5, she traveled by train to meet her siblings. Her memories are vague, or "fuzzy," as anyone's would be after half a century. She remembers her grandmother's goat. She barely remembers her older sister, who died from epilepsy as a teenager. Frieda was not allowed to attend the funeral.

Anna moved to the United States in 1966, five years after Berlin's "wall" became the Wall, 105 miles long, encircling the city.

She never returned to the East, and her mother died without her first-born children.

Now a resident of Columbus, with a family of her own, Anna remembers the day the Wall came down only as the leading story on the evening news, though she's hard-pressed to recall the actual date, Nov. 9, 1989. It was good news from abroad, but nothing personal.

"It never registered that something would change, that it would make a difference in my family," she said. "That was such a long time ago. We'd learned to live with it. We didn't even know if any of them were still alive."

But Anna's older sister, Brigette, wanted to find her family in the west. Her grandmother was dead and so was her mother, though she didn't know it at the time. All she had to go on was her stepfather's name, but that was enough to launch a successful Internet search.

Anna met Brigette at the train station in 1991. She remembers that well, because the U.S. was at war and plane fares were low, making it possible for Anna to travel to Germany with her husband, Burt, and their daughter Nicki, who's now 18, about the same age Anna was when she left her homeland.

The sisters' reunion was a bit awkward, remarkable only for its utter lack of emotion.

"We were total strangers," she said. "I wouldn't have known her if I passed her on the street. It wasn't like seeing a long-lost sister. It was more like making a new friend."

Anna admits she was skeptical about meeting Brigette — even doubted her motives at first. But the stranger at the station bore a resemblance to their mother, and Anna soon warmed to her sister.

They stay in touch, though they've never again visited. Anna has yet to meet her nephew or reunite with her older brother. Like Anna, he apparently feels no ties to siblings he can't remember.

That, more than anything, is the personal legacy of the Wall, Anna said.

"It's such a shame. We learned to live with it, but it's strange, you know, that (a wall) could do that to people," she said.

"It bothers me that we can never get back what was lost. She's my sister, but she's a stranger."

American remembers joy as Berlin chipped away at its Wall

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It's strange really, when you think about the emotions and lack thereof elicited by the Wall and its demise.

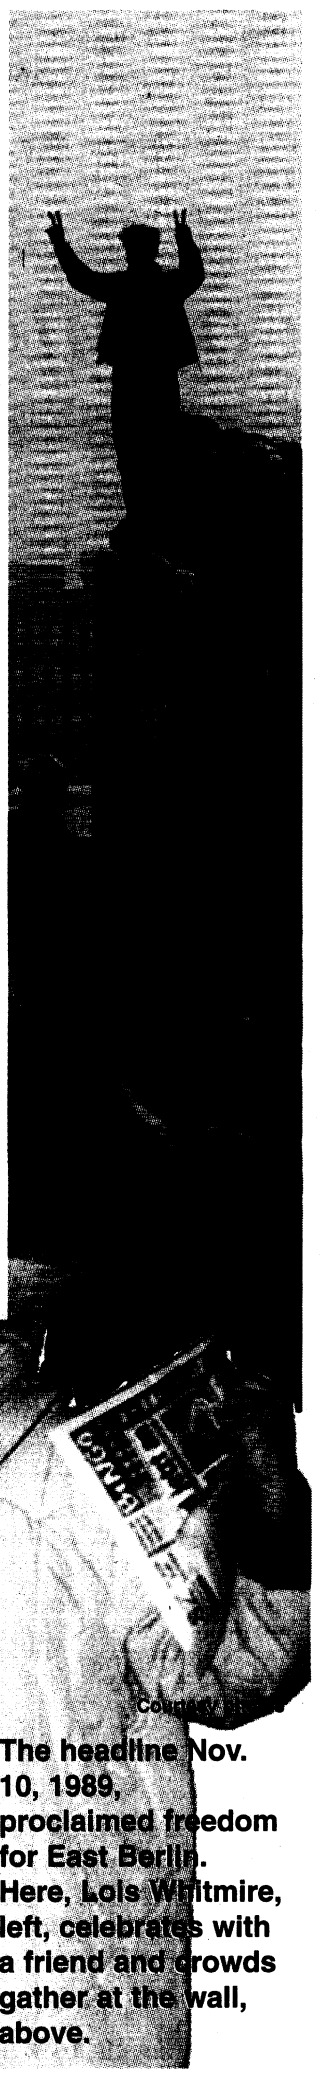
More than anything, Anna Davis is struck by the utter lack of enthusiasm she felt watching the event on the news. She was happy for her countrymen, but the effect the Wall had on her family could not be reversed. She couldn't get back what was lost.

Lois Whitmire, on the other hand, watched the Wall come down with a great sense of joy. She joined the celebration at the Brandenburg Gate with visitors from around the world.

Whitmire is an administrative assistant for Fort Benning's Directorate of Operations and Training, but in 1989, she was living in West Berlin with her three daughters and her husband, whose job with the Defense Commissary Agency took them to various parts of Germany for six years.

Whitmire, who grew up hearing stories about the Wall from a Sunday School teacher whose family had escaped from the communist regime, loved living in Germany. She frequently rode the duty train to East Berlin. At an exchange rate of about 5,000 marks for 50 American dollars, shopping in the east was a big attraction. And a five-course meal, including caviar and champagne, cost less than $5.

That's how Whitmire and her friends happened to be in East Berlin Nov. 9, 1989. Though the news that morning hinted at the Wall coming down, no one paid it much mind. No one dared take it seriously, save for a few East Berliners who tentatively stepped across the line and waited for the repercussions. No shots were fired, no one died, and as the day wore on, citizens dared to hope freedom was a reality.



By nightfall, the streets leading to the checkpoints were jam-packed with motorists and pedestrians hoping to get a firsthand look at the free world.

Whitmire and her friends were caught up in the flood, enjoying being part of what they knew to be a historical moment. But as the clock edged toward midnight, the hour all Americans were required to be out of East Berlin, guards led them out. The next day, Whitmire returned and watched as Berliners from the East and West chipped away at the Wall and wept tears of joy.

"There was one man I'll never forget, he was hammering away as if he could get it to come down all by himself," Whitmire said. "There was that kind of passion everywhere. You couldn't help but be a part of it."

Whitmire, who keeps various mementos of her time in Germany, including pieces of the Wall, returned to take part in the ceremonial opening of the Brandenburg Gate in December of that year. Atop the gate, she met well-wishers from around the world who'd flown to Germany to take part in the event. More than ever, Whitmire appreciated her good fortune to be "in the right place at the right time."

"Before, when we'd visit the East, nobody smiles — ever. Nobody ever smiled," she said. "That all changed. It was so exciting to see them celebrate and sing and dance. They were shouting, 'The Wall is down! The Wall is down!' It was very emotional."

Cold War's powder keg historically divided

Berlin's history one of walls, division

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Berlin has always been a "walled" city. The 800-year-old town has roots steeped in war and division. It grew from two merchant settlements, Berlin and Coelln, along the Spree River. The towns, plural, surrounded themselves with fortifications — a small section of which can still be seen in East Berlin's Littenstrasse.

In 1307, they merged and entered a very long period of turbulence. With the 30 Years War and a series of epidemics, Berlin's population was halved, from 12,000 to 6,000 in the mid-1600s. A campaign to encourage immigration and the merging of Berlin with four other towns increased its population to 400,000 during the next 150 years.

During the 18th century, the town became an important center of politics, business and culture — one of Europe's most important cities. Even today, Berlin's elaborate architecture speak of a 50-year period of renaissance.

The Brandenburg Gate was completed in 1786 and incorporated into the city wall, which was built in 1935.

Napoleon's troops occupied Berlin in October 1806, leading to a patriotic movement and a successful war of liberation. But when victory over France was secure, the Prussian King Frederick William III failed to keep his promise of emancipation, and the city once again knew conflict as revolution divided the nation.

The Prussian prime minister united Germany in 1871 "with iron and blood," and Berlin became the capital of the German Reich.

After the defeat of World War I, the Berlin we know emerged. In 1920, as a result of "territorial reform," the city's burgeoning population was divided into 20 governable boroughs. With more than 700 square miles, Berlin continued to flourish as the largest industrial city on the continent.

Economic crisis hit Berlin in the early 1930s, partly due to Europe's political upheaval. President von Hindenburg appointed Adolf Hitler chancellor in 1933, and the Nazis began their rise to power and soon, their reign of terror.

Hitler's henchmen began a full-scale campaign to oust communist, social-democrat and trade union party leaders. Many were murdered. In 1938, Hitler's furor was unleashed on the Jews, and paved the way for Nazi Germany's involvement in World War II.

The German army surrendered in Berlin in 1945, with the city on the verge of total destruction.

The Allies divided the city, the Soviet sector on the east, the west occupied by the U.S., Great Britain, and later, France. It wasn't long before the communist party controlled East Berlin and tensions rose.

In many cases, the individual sectors adopted governing policies inconsistent with one another.

Political differences that once paled in light of shared interest in the demise of the Nazis now became fuel for division.

Step by step, the Soviets disengaged from the Allies, refusing to recognize policies or the power of officials elected under their administration.

By 1948, relations were so strained, the U.S., Great Britain and France began to withhold information on resolutions taken in conference, disagreements over currency reform escalated, and the Soviet Union imposed a blockade of Berlin, prohibiting supplies to pass through its zone to reach the Western Allies by road, rail or water.

East Berlin, of course, continued to receive freight from the surrounding Soviet zones. The four powers entered the Cold War, and Berlin was the powder keg.

The blockade backfired on the Soviets. West Berlin received sufficient supplies via airlift, and what's more, the blockade caused the residents of Berlin to march in protest and shift their allegiances to the Allies. It forged a bond between the citizens of both sectors — a bond so strong it couldn't be severed by the wall.

The Berlin Wall was erected in 1961 under the guise of keeping the "Western Imperialists" out, though in truth, it was designed to keep East Berliners in.

Socialism had failed, and more than 2 million residents had fled to the west, despite efforts to control their movement through "identity cards" and travel papers.

On an August night in 1961, thousands of workers and units from East Berlin's People's Police marched to the sector boundary and hastily erected a barricade using barbed wire.

Construction of the Wall followed shortly after.

ASK THE JUDGE

Check your bank statements for unknown charges

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What would you do if you saw a $10 charge on your monthly bank statement you couldn't explain?

A: The starting point should be to contact your bank, and find out who the charge was paid to. It may be a company you are familiar with, but the charge itself is unclear. In such a case, you should contact the company and ask for an explanation, and dispute the charge through the company if you disagree.

But what if you've never heard of the company the charge was paid to? If the charge is relatively recent, usually within 30-90 days, then the bank may refund the money while the charge is being disputed. If the charge is older than that, then it is usually the individual's responsibility to dispute the debt and try to recollect the money.

Debts should be disputed in writing, not by telephone. The person should state the dollar amount in dispute, and why it is being disputed. The company then has the responsibility of justifying the debt.

Disputing bills and charges can be a long process, sometimes taking months to resolve. Create a file and save all correspondence, even after the case is closed. For more information, call the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Communication is key to healthy relationship between parents, kids

Sydney Hess
Faith Middle School

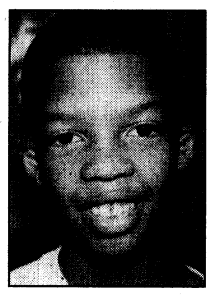
We were supposed to write about the one thing we argue with our parents about, but my parents and I couldn't think of a thing. We get upset with one another, but I think my parents and I have the best relationship ever.

I love that I can go to them whenever I need something, and they'll listen. Even if it's the worst of things, they always try to help me, even if they're upset.

We never argue because we communicate with each other. Whenever one of us has a problem, we call the family to the dining room table, and we talk about our problems together.

When we talk, everyone has an opportunity to say everything they want to say before another person talks.

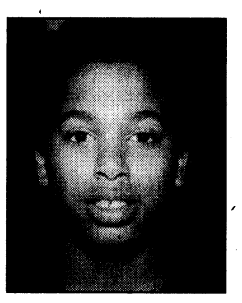
We've found that when we talk things over, we see different sides of an issue that we may have missed initially.



Sometimes, my parents tell my brother and me to leave the room and they talk. Then they call us back and we talk some more.

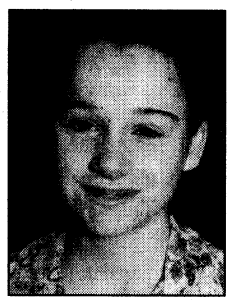
What I like is that my parents don't argue. Well, everyone has times when they get mad or need to have their say, but if my parents argue, it lasts no more than five minutes, and they never use angry words.

My brother and I understand that our parents need to talk and discuss things with each other as well, but like I said, I can't even remember a time they've argued in front of us for an extended period of time.



It makes me happy when my family sits and talks together. I think of those families that always argue, and I feel sad for them. When I think about my family, I can't help but feel joyful about how lucky I am to have the family I do.

Faith Middle School's Lisa Madler asked her seventh-graders to write about the issues they argue with their parents about. Here are some of their responses:



Jackie Bradford

"Our number one conflict is homework. I usually start right after school, but sometimes I can't concentrate so I take a break. Sometimes my break is so long that I don't finish my homework. My parents call it procrastinating. On weekends I wait till the very last minute on Sunday night, and my parents get mad, and I get in trouble."

Shon Neyland

"My dad and I argue a lot. We argue about me wanting to get my ears pierced and grow out my hair into a ponytail like the young men in Hawaii. We also argue about chores. We argue about silly nonsense — junk I can't even remember because it's all for nothing. I know my parents love me, even though we have blow-ups now and then."

Tiffany Wilson

"We argue about how I act. They say I act younger than someone who's just turned 14. They say I should be the role model for my younger sister. We always start off talking calmly, then the conversation gets louder and louder. My parents yell because they say I'm too loud and I can't hear what they're saying. For the record, I can hear them perfectly."

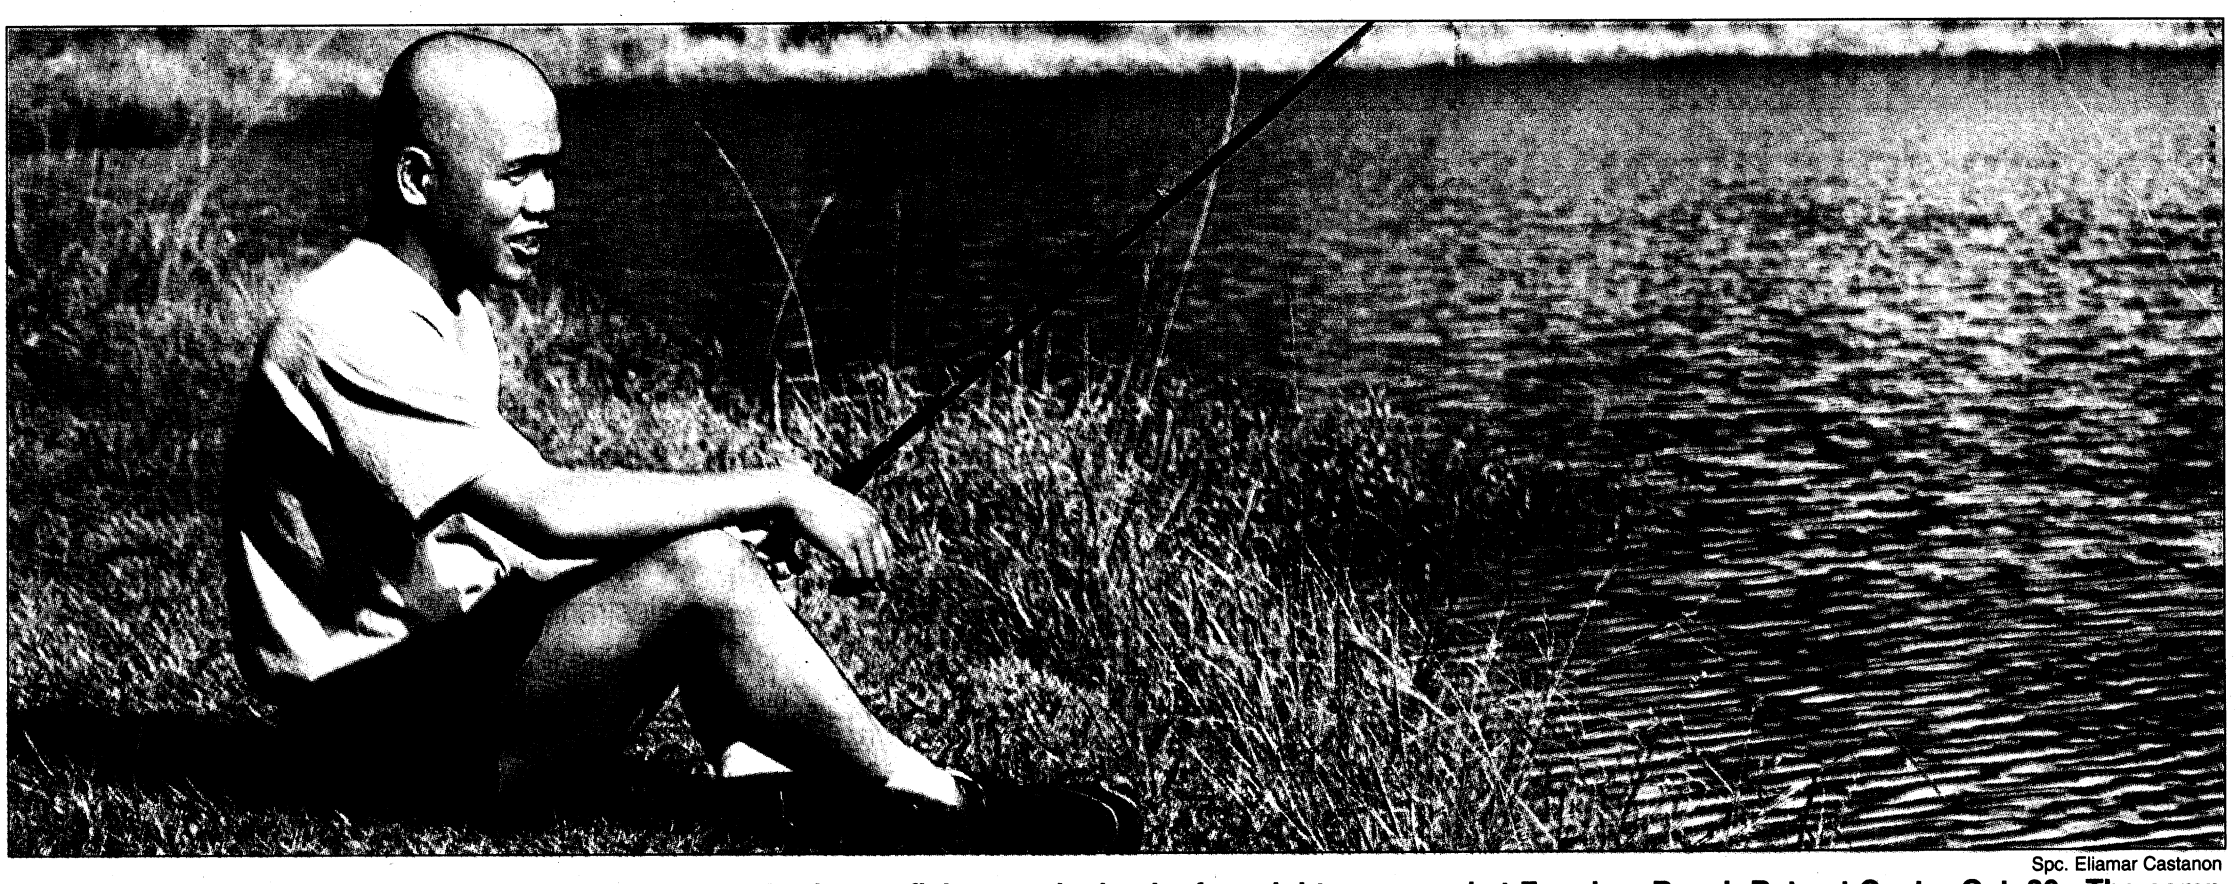
Now through February 28, 2005, students, sponsors, and teachers will be asked to respond to questions about Department of Defense schools. Survey results will allow schools, districts and areas to make improvements in the educational services provided to DoD students.

The surveys should take less than 20 minutes to complete. Schools will administer these surveys using the Internet, via a link on the DoDEA Web site, www.dodea.edu/. Those who do not have access to the Internet can complete the survey at school or request a copy from the school.

Sponsors are asked to complete a survey for each child enrolled in a DoD school in grades pre-kindergarten through grade 12. Students in grades 4-12 will be asked to complete the survey at school. All certified teachers and education support staff will also complete the survey.



Survey results will be tabulated and reported to the DoD schools and communities. The survey is based on the "Phi Delta Kappan/Gallup Poll of the Public's Attitude toward Schools," so a comparison can be made between the DoD schools and public schools in the states. Besides having a national comparison, the results will also help school personnel identify areas that need improvement.

BCTB Soldiers find escape from training stress

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Pvt. Christopher Tubbali sat on the bank of an eight-acre pond fishing for the first time in his life Oct. 30. Although he had no luck catching any fish, he didn't care. He was simply enjoying the short time away from what he just left and from what he will be returning to in less than 48 hours.

Tubbali is one of the Soldiers going through one station unit training at Fort Benning. He's part of 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, and just got the mid-cycle pass all Soldiers look forward to. Instead of hanging out in Columbus like most Soldiers do, Tubbali decided to go to the Freedom Ranch Retreat Center along with 17 other Soldiers in his battalion.

The Freedom Ranch Retreat Center is part of the Christian Servicemember's Center, an organization designed to be a home-away-from-home for service members providing a Christian fellowship in a relaxing environment, said Bob Ingram, Freedom House director.

Ingram, an Army veteran, learned about the Christian Servicemember's Center while at Fort Campbell, Ky.

"We make no bones about it," Ingram said. "We are evangelistic. We are very patriotic and pro-military as well. We work at reinforcing the core values of the military and are very aware of the influence we have on Soldiers as we seek to develop their pride as they serve our nation."

Ingram first began ministering to Fort Benning with the opening of The Freedom House, located next to the stone gate on Benning Road in July 2002.

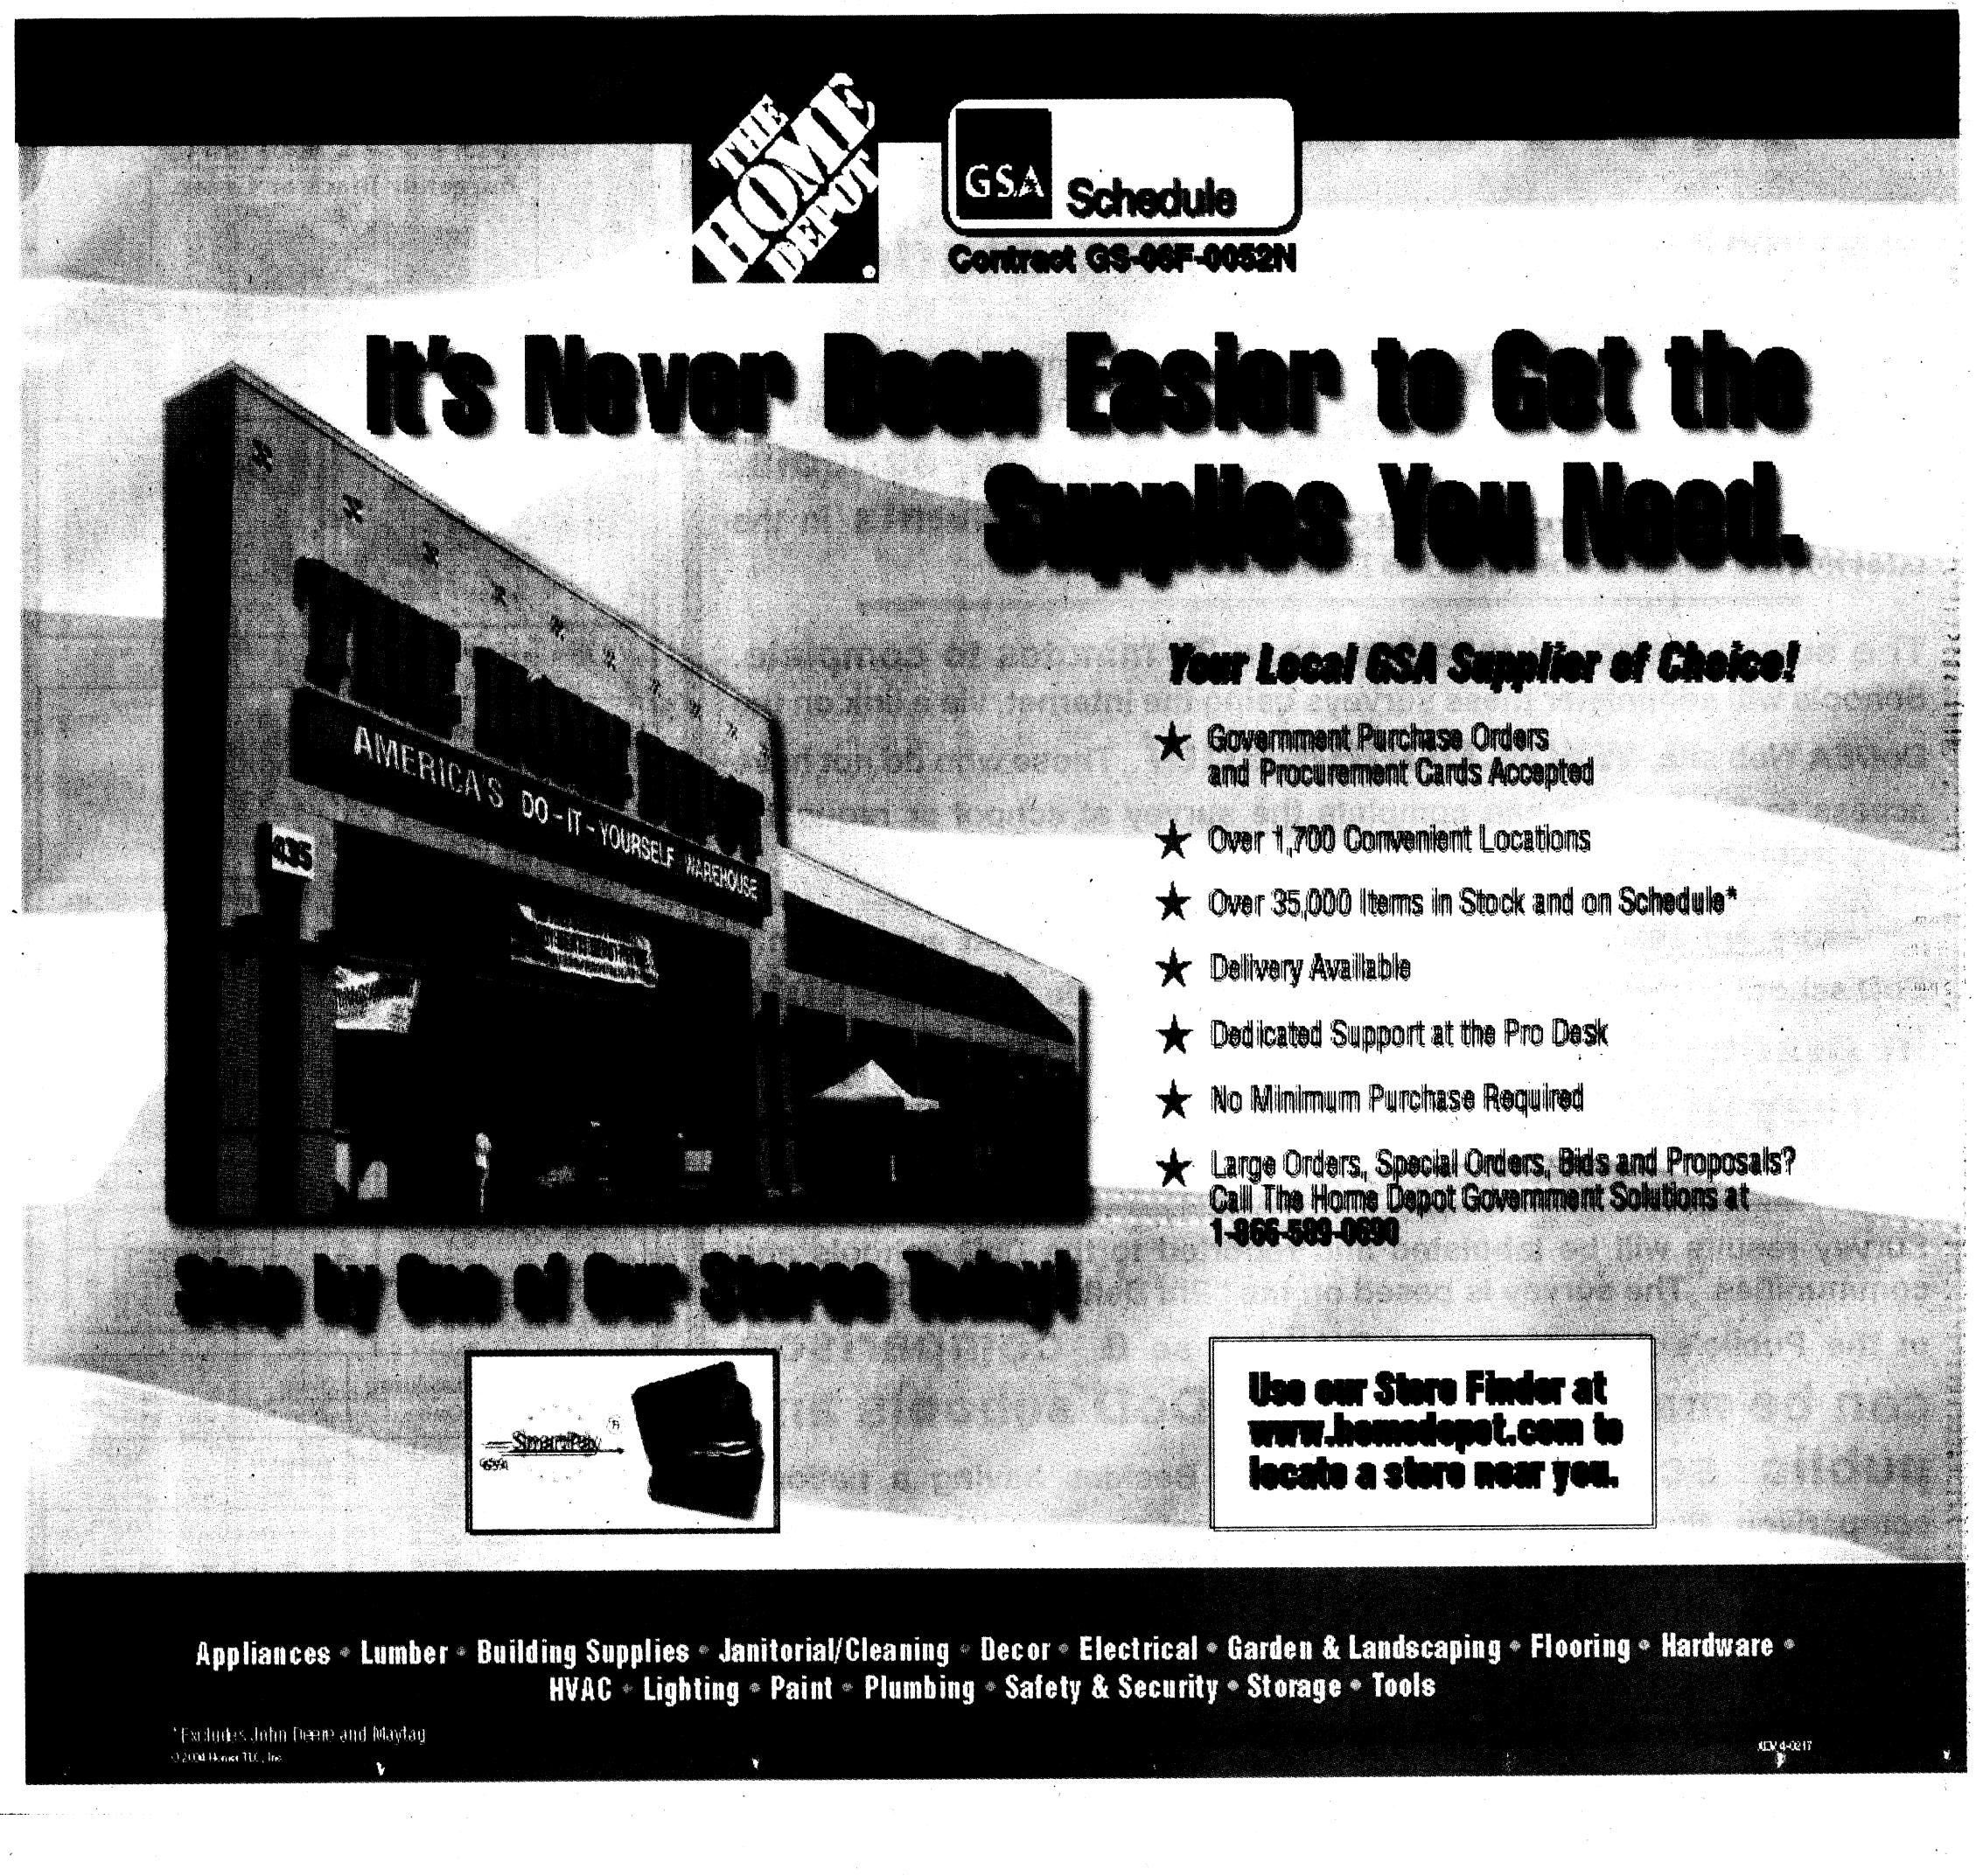
Since then, the Freedom House has shared the Gospel with more than 3,000 people and has had more than 500 people respond to the Gospel message, Ingram said. Freedom House offers Bible studies for Soldiers in different units around post.

Searching for another way to reach more Soldiers, Ingram started another facility to benefit the Soldiers in basic training. In April, Ingram held the first Freedom Ranch Retreat on the land owned and provided by Grace Baptist Church. The retreat gives Soldiers a place to go during their midcycle passes or day passes with all expenses paid. Oct. 30, the Soldiers were picked up at Fort Benning and headed out to the 48-acre property with the lake and a cabin for them to bunk in.

Throughout the day, Soldiers could fish, play basketball or just relax. There were cell phones available so Soldiers could call home. As part of the outreach program, the Soldiers sat through various Bible studies throughout the weekend, one of which was premarital counseling.

"A lot of the Soldiers know they are going to be deployed soon after they are out of training, so we adjusted the premarital counseling class in order to offer it to the Soldiers since their girlfriends or fiancés aren't here," Ingram said. "Another lesson we offer is focused on salvation. Many of these Soldiers are going to be at war and we want to them to go into battle feeling confident about where they're going to go if something happens."

The Soldiers find out about the retreat through their chaplains who work in conjunction with Freedom House.



"We don't force anyone to do anything," Ingram said. "If a Soldier doesn't feel comfortable about a lesson he doesn't have to sit through it."

Pvt. Khang Phi, C Company, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., and his buddies who were at the ranch on a day pass didn't seem to mind the Bible lessons at all.

"This is great!" Phi said. "They talk about a positive way of life. Plus, coming here helps us save money too."

"All the services provided by the Freedom House and the Freedom Ranch Retreat Center are free," Ingram said.

"We don't even ask the Soldiers for donations. Everything we have is donated to us. We will continue to do this as long as we have the funds to do so," he said.

Commit your heart to trust in God

Chaplain (Capt.) Eddie Kinley
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

REFLECTIONS

"Trust in the Lord with all your heart and lean not to thy own understanding in all thy ways acknowledge him and he shall direct your path." (Proverbs 3:5,6)

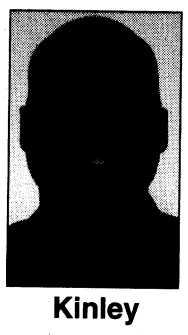
Have you noticed how convenient our world has suddenly become? Technology is making life easy and comfortable. Everything is literally at your fingertips.

Who needs a map when GPSs are readily available on vehicles and even portable?

Why waste time with stereo systems when MP3s can store more than 8,000 songs on a device the size of a deck of playing cards?

Satellite phones are doing what cellular phones could never do. Get a signal anywhere on Earth!

Can you imagine the possibilities of technological advancements five years from now? I'm afraid to even ponder the thought.



In the scriptures David makes a bold statement of faith.

He tells us to "Trust in the Lord with all your heart and lean not to your own understanding."

This is not an easy task.

Whenever I need to know something I usually turn the computer on and surf the World Wide Web. Within minutes, answers appear on the screen from a myriad of sources.

Trusting in God without understanding is difficult. Just about every task we undertake is motivated by knowledge and understanding.

Kinley

David's request seems almost primitive.

"Why should I trust in God and not rely on understanding? What if his ways are not making sense to me? What if I disagree?"

The truth of the matter is that each of us has questioned God's movement in our lives at one time or another.

I must admit there are days when God does not make sense in my life.

Yet I have learned from experience to trust him in spite of my present circumstance and situation. I have learned to depend on him when my desires and plans are derailed. Learning to trust God implicitly is the work of a lifetime.

The Bible is filled with examples of men and women, prophets and disciples who failed to exercise faith in critical moments. Why? Because learning to trust God without wavering is the work of a lifetime. Yet how many wrongs have we experienced because we have relied upon reason and intuition instead of trusting God with our heart?

Today, let us commit our lives and hearts to trusting God in the good days and leaning upon him during the complicated days.

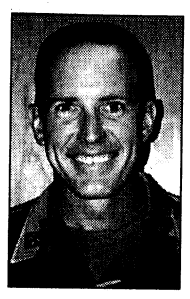
Love can beat separation

Language of love offers final tip

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Love will make you do some crazy things, won't it? My wife, Lori, and I got a good laugh this Halloween as we thumbed through a photo album and stumbled across a picture from 15 years ago where she dressed us both up for a Halloween party as Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum.



Do I even need to tell you who got to wear the Tweedle Dum outfit?

More poems have been penned, more songs sung, more things done in the name of love than for any other cause I suppose.

There's nothing as powerful as love. Yet keeping your love together, especially when the Army is taking you apart, is no small task.

That's why I've spent the last four weeks talking about a key skill that no military couple can be without.

I may not know much, but I do know these three things:

Hawkins

No. 1 — If you stick around the military long enough, you're going to be taken apart;

No. 2 — That being the case, we have to be better at our relationships than our civilian counterparts;

No. 3 — Tough times either bring us closer together ... or they blow us apart.

So how do we keep our love together?

We have to learn each other's language of love, because the amount of fulfillment in a relationship is always in direct proportion to your ability to speak your mate's LOL fluently.

There are at least five languages that Dr. Gary Chapman has identified.

Can you see which one is your LOL, your mate's?

During the past weeks, I mentioned that the first LOL is affirmation — kind, complimenting cheerleading words.

The second LOL is quality time — investing in quality conversation and quality activities with each other.

The third LOL is receiving gifts — thoughtfully, regularly, creatively sharing your love tangibly.

The fourth LOL is acts of service — doing something out of love for the one you love.

And that brings us to our fifth and final LOL — physical touch.

When it comes to touch being a language of love, there are typically three dialects you or your mate may speak — teasing, squeezing or pleasing.

"Teasing touch" is playful touch that enjoys just joking around together — kind of like Pop Rocks candy.

"Squeezing touch" is warm and affectionate touch that doesn't demand — a lot like fresh-baked chocolate chip cookies.

"Pleasing touch" is passionate and intimate touch — it's the red-hots of candy!

If you have the LOL of physical touch, which dialect do you most enjoy speaking ... how about your mate?

You can join me and the hundreds of others who've discovered just how helpful The Chaplain Family Life Center's team of trained life coaches can be.

The CFLC is located in Soldiers' Plaza.

You can also join me at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill.

Josie Carver takes 6-year-old paso fino Hurricane "Hutch" over a training jump during practice Nov. 1 for Saturday's Steeplechase at Callaway pony race.

Young jockey gives second chance to heart-winning paso fino

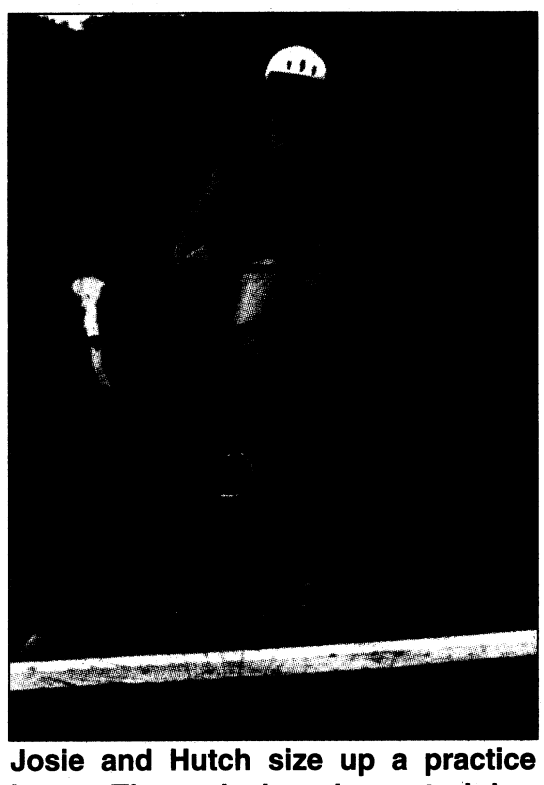
In the corner of his stall trembling in fear, stood a horse broken in spirit and almost beyond salvation.

And then horse enthusiast Erica Franklin, whose mother owns Roosevelt Stables in Pine Mountain, Ga., fell in love with the dark chocolate paso fino and bought him on the spot as a project horse.

LEFT: Josie soothes a nervous Hutch during a pre-training warm-up session. The two have formed a special bond.

Paso finos were originally bred in Spain for cattle work. They are known for their speed, agility and smooth gait.



"This horse was so afraid," Franklin said. "He was so abused and would bury his head in the corner of his stall. But he just had this look in his eyes as if he was asking for a chance. I fell in love with him."

Now, eight months later, the horse that was unapproachable and almost beyond use, has come into his own. Hurricane, or Hutch as he is called by friends, will run at the Steeplechase at Callaway Gardens Saturday.

And who better to ride an underdog Seabiscuit of sorts, with the odds stacked against him, than a 12-year-old girl with only a year's riding experience?

Josie Carver, whose mom works at Roosevelt Stables and whose dad is an Airborne instructor with the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, will take Hutch's reins, betting against those odds that the six months they have been training together will pay off in the pony race. The event is for horses 14.2 hands and smaller with riders 16 or younger.

Headhunters decapitate MPA in flag football squeaker

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

With two minutes left in the game, the Headhunters of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Batallion, 30th Infantry Regiment, scored on a conversion to put away the Military Police Activity in flag football game Nov. 2 at Engineer Field.

The game started out great for the MPA when Richard Fleming made an interception and claimed control of the field. Two minutes into the game, MPA's Patrick Bowser caught a five-yard pass to put the MPA on the board.

The Headhunters blocked the conversion, leaving the MPAs with a 6-0 lead.

The Headhunters' quarterback, Felipe Blanding, wasn't going to let the touchdown go unanswered. After a 12-yard gain on a quarterback scramble, Blanding called a lineman screen pass with a fourth down and goal.

Michael Sedlak came wide open in the end zone and caught an easy five-yard pass from Blanding to tie the game with 45 seconds left in the first half.

The MPA got off to another good start in the second half, scoring big on their first play. Fleming caught a 50-yard pass from Dion Weaver and ran 10 yards to put the MPs up 12-6.

"(The turning point) was when Jeremy Kreuger sacked the quarterback on the fourth down with fifteen yards to go, and a minute twenty five left in the game," Blanding said. "The game was over after that. We got the ball and that was it."

After Krueger's sack, the Headhunters gained possession of the ball and Blanding threw a beautiful pass to Steven Fuller, who cruised unopposed into the end zone on the 60-yard play to tie the score at 12-12.

The team gained their final point, and ultimately the win, with a successful one-point conversion, when Blanding broke through the line in a quarterback sneak.

The MPAs had another chance to score with Jay Repollet sacking the Headhunter's quarterback, but they couldn't get past the tough defense to score again.

"Our guys just played as a team," Blanding said. "If we keep practicing and playing as a team, we will make it far in the season."

The Headhunters are 3-2 and the MPAs are now 2-3 in the season.

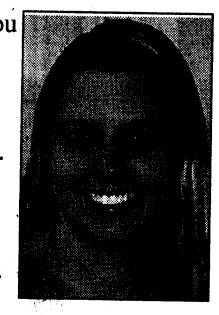
Pennants and pigs fly



Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I went outside Oct. 27 to get a glimpse of the lunar eclipse. What I didn't expect to see were pigs flying. And then a monkey flew out of ... a tree. Less than an hour later, the Boston Red Sox, yes, I said the Boston Red Sox, won the World Series.

As I wrote in a commentary in July, I am a diehard Red Sox fan. It has been a lifetime of heartache and disappointment, loyalty and entertainment.

The Red Sox hadn't won a World Series since 1918. New York Yankee fans say the Red Sox had a curse on them, since the owner of the Sox sold Babe "The Bambino" Ruth to the Yankees to finance his Broadway show in 1918. Well, we reversed the curse.

While reading various articles about the Red Sox victory, I came across a Web posting by a guy named Dan Smith, a Yankees fan. In an open message to Red Sox fans, he said, "You have stuck with your team no matter what. One cannot help but admire and respect your loyalty and devotion."

That's exactly who we Red Sox fans are. Loyal. Devoted. Even though our team hadn't won a World Series in 86 years, we still believed.

OK, I have to admit, I didn't have much of the "faith" we were told to keep when we were down three games in the American League Championship Series — to the Yankees, no less.

I knew it was possible, as did the rest of Red Sox Nation, and the Sox, in true Sox fashion, "cowboyed up."

While I was elated to come back and win four straight games, the last two in Yankee Stadium, I then had the World Series to worry about. I knew I had at least four games to chew my nails and fold a lot of laundry (which I do when I'm nervous).

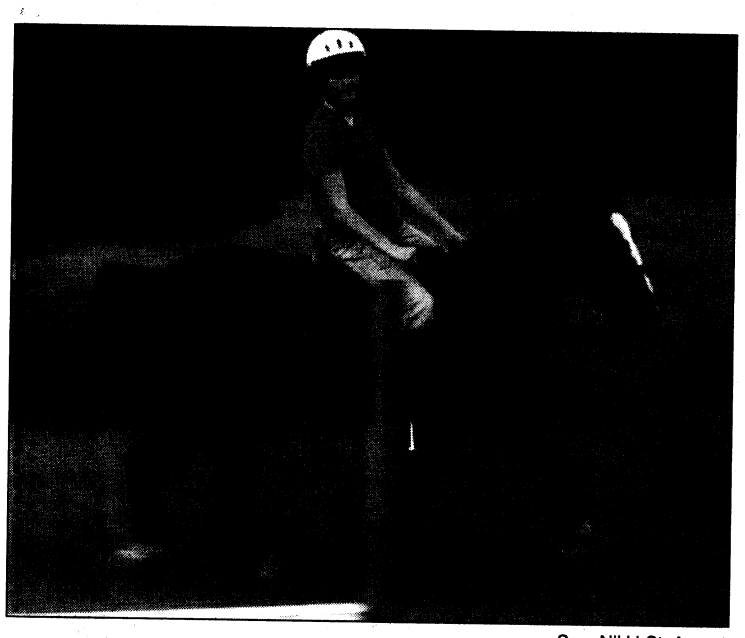
But the Red Sox won. We swept the best team in the National League, the St. Louis Cardinals. We proved that we are the world champions, the best team in baseball.

So, fellow Red Sox fans, rejoice. The curse is gone.

While our team may be a bunch of ragtag men who really need a good barber, they have heart and soul.

They believed in themselves when they were written off as losers again. The determination and motivation was there — they knew the fans couldn't take another year of disappointment (especially me).

And next year, at opening day at Fenway Park, the Yankees will have to stand and watch while the World Series pennant is raised over our park, and our team gets the World Series ring.



Whoever said revenge is sweet sure got it right.

Holy cow!

Race: Fear factor

In the pair's first competition, a local, bi-state open horse show, Hutch's fear almost overcame him. But Josie maintained her composure, helping the rookie show horse work through his stage fright.

The dynamic duo pulled off an impressive first showing, placing in several events.

"The judge even commended Josie on her patience," Franklin said. "It was the first event for both of them and I was very proud of their performance.

"Josie is a spectacular kid," she said. "Not many have the patience to train with horses like she does, much less one like Hutch who went through God knows what.

"She took the time and really bonded with him," Franklin said.

"She soothes him, talks to him and doesn't get upset and jump the gun when he doesn't do exactly what she asks him to. Most kids want to whack the horse now and talk about it later."

The Parelli Natural Horsemanship Association preaches a brand of horse training geared to the way horses think and learn, not the way people do. Franklin said the method has been tremendously helpful in forging the bond between the wary horse and the soft-handed rider.

"This horse came to us with no trust, expecting to be smacked around," Franklin said.

"It takes so much time to build that trust back. On top of coming out here during the week, Josie sometimes spends 15 to 20 hours on the weekends riding. She's unique among young riders."

"When I first started, all I knew was how to sit on a horse and not fall off," Carver said. "Now, I am learning how to really ride."

The young jockey has found her passion riding horses and said she is committed to sticking with an undertaking that for many kids becomes a passing hobby.

"I want my own horse someday, and I want to stick with this," she said.

For now, Carver is free to ride Hutch or any of Franklin's horses whenever she likes, whether or not she wins or loses Saturday.

"Josie is one in a million, and she is welcome here forever," said Franklin.

After numerous delays, the I-185 access control point is scheduled to open at 3 p.m. Monday. Benning Boulevard will close Nov. 19 before the annual protest outside the Main Gate Nov. 20-21 and remain closed for the ACP construction.

I-185 access point to open finally

Life in fast lane for those with DoD decals

Melissa House

The highly anticipated opening of the I-185 access control point should take place Monday at 3 p.m. after months of delay.

The $4 million project, begun in December 2003, is the first of six ACPs to be completed. Studies conducted two years ago during the project's planning phase indicated that more than 30,000 vehicles use the I-185 entrance daily.

Drivers entering through the new ACP will notice a few improvements made during the past 11 months. Several new buildings went up and water, sewage and electricity were added. The road expands from two lanes to four lanes south of the Victory Drive overpass. Two lanes take inbound trucks through an inspection point.

The left hand lane leads vehicles without post decals into the parking lot of the visitors center, which was built in the median between the inbound and outbound lanes. Drivers will show identification and obtain authorization to enter Fort Benning, said Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, provost marshal.

Drivers leaving the visitors center can turn around and leave Fort Benning or proceed through one of five entry lanes.

Finnegan said this system will keep traffic flowing through the checkpoints, since drivers will not get held up by visitors needing passes or asking for directions.

The toll-booth style checkpoints provide each gate guard with heating and air-conditioning. The booths also have interior and exterior lights.

"This is much better," Finnegan said.

During peak hours, there will be

Fort Benning Soldiers and their families are invited to the third annual God Bless Fort Benning Rally beginning at 11:30 a.m. Nov. 20.

The idea for the rally originated in 2002 when Columbus resident Miriam Tidwell overheard protestors talking about the former School of the Americas. She asked a Soldier sitting nearby with his family how he felt about the protestors.

"He said it bothered him that no one stood up for the Soldiers," Tidwell said.

And so, less than 10 days before the protest, Tidwell sprang into action. She called the Columbus police department and notified them of her intent to stage a counter-protest.

"They tried to discourage me," Tidwell said, "but I was so annoyed by the reports in the paper that the protestors were good for the Columbus economy."

Tidwell said the majority of the protestors know nothing about the school, now called the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, and she felt compelled to educate the community and show support for the Soldiers.

The first event had few participants — about 200, Tidwell said — but raised more than $4,000 for Fort Benning's Santa's Castle. Last year, the rally landed in the parking lot of the Columbus Civic Center, where it will be this year

The rally kicks off with a free lunch for Soldiers, followed by a series of free concerts by the local band Cornbread and singer Lee Greenwood.

The rally will feature a motorcycle rally, and it will end with the home-opener of the Columbus Riverdragons basketball season.

Tidwell said the event will go on, rain or shine, and encourages those who attend to bring their own chairs.

Sniper competition incorporates lessons learned

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Snipers ran from rooftop to rooftop, fired out of helicopters, ran through obstacle courses and fired from inside vehicles during the fourth annual International Sniper Competition at Fort Benning Nov. 1-5.

This year's competition was different than previous competitions. The Fort Benning Sniper School cadre incorporated events from lessons learned in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"This year's scenarios put the competitors in situations many of them will find themselves in or have already been in," said Sgt. 1st Class Frank Velez, Sniper School NCOIC.

Twenty two-man teams from Canada, the U.S. Air Force and Army units competed in this year's competition.

Some of the lesson learned scenarios included shooting from a helicopter, moving onto a target with the support of a Bradley, and various urban assault scenarios, including running from building to building while engaging targets.

On the last day of the competition, the teams started with a stress fire, which led them through a timed obstacle course that ended with a pistol shoot and a distance shoot.

The stress fire was designed to test the snipers' ability to engage a target after they've been under physical stress, Velez said.

The last event was the offset shoot, in which the sniper teams had to

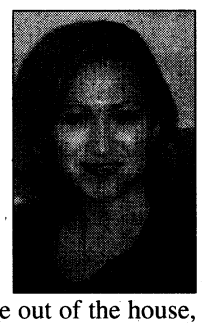
GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT

Right time to quit?

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff



In the late 1950s, my father was doing his best to be a 14-year-old rebel. He sported a Fonzie hairstyle, leather jacket and motorcycle boots. A cigarette dangled from his mouth.

Over the years, his haircut went the way of saddle shoes, and he switched to polyester suit coats and loafers, but the smoking never did go out of fashion for him.

Growing up in a house with my dad smoking unfiltered Pall Mall Reds in the living room, I got used to the smell of cigarette smoke clinging to clothes, hair, furniture, the cat. Although he knew it was bad for him and worse for his kids, it was never quite the right time to kick the habit.

My mom finally got tired of overflowing ashtrays and burn marks on the sofa. When one of my sisters developed asthma, mom put her foot down, and dad and the nicotine started the slow journey out of the recliner and onto the porch.

First Dad had to sit next to an open window when he smoked. It wasn't so bad around summer, but by December, the rest of the household would shiver while freezing winds blew the smoke right back into the house.

Then he tried puffing next to the fireplace, trying to blow the smoke up the chimney. He developed a "system" of burning a newspaper while smoking, insisting that it created "a sucking draft" that would pull the smoke out of the house, while we watched it waft through the air behind him.

He would line up the smoked butts in a long row on the hearth, an army of stubby, burnt, white tubes perched atop a mountain of ash. Finally Mom got sick of the smell. Dad and the cigarettes got sent to the front porch.

After suffering a heart attack in February 2003, the advice from his doctors was predictable: change your diet, and give up the smokes.

He managed to quit cold turkey, for a couple of weeks. He had more energy, he no longer had a hacking cough in the morning, and we felt optimistic about his lifestyle changes. But the cigarettes crept back in, bit by bit.

He'd hide them in the car so Mom wouldn't know he was buying them, or smoke while she was at work. Then it was just one after dinner, or one before bed.

Almost a year after the heart attack, Dad is back to a pack a day. My dad has a great belly laugh that you can't help but join in with, but after almost half a century of smoking, his laughter inevitably turns to coughing.

He's tried all the quitting fads. First he pasted on patches and then switched to nicotine gum. He chomped on pretzel sticks, played with toothpicks and chewed straws to keep something in his mouth.

He tried inhalers that mimicked the smooth white stick and gave him puffs of nicotine. Most recently it was antismoking hypnosis and listening to optimistic lectures on tape. Mom insisted. Dad rolled his eyes.

The doctors suggested that he cut down by smoking a few less per week. He still polishes off a pack before the evening news.

I don't want to harass him every time he lights up, because only he can make the decision to stop. But I'm afraid he'll be back for another bypass (or worse) before another year is gone.

With National Smoke Out day approaching, please take a minute to question if the addiction is worth the risk. Think of the people who love you, and ponder if maybe today isn't the right day to stomp out the habit for good.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Last week a child left alone at home on post died. The circumstances are under investigation. For the record, I am not a perfect parent. I have two little ones and there are times that the responsibilities, inconveniences, headaches and costs of being a parent to them absolutely make me lose my mind. But when it comes down to it, I love them with every fiber of my being and do the best I can to do right by them, because they are the innocent by-products of my choices in life.

To me, there is no more horrible crime in the world than the abuse and neglect of children. There is not a single, credible excuse, reason or justification for it. Work comes second. Money comes second. Personal freedom comes second.

Don't get me wrong, I know it is horrible when your job suffers because the kids have appointments or the babysitter falls through. People don't want to feel like they are in trouble or looked down upon for letting their personal life cut into their time on the job. But there are services on post that can help in most situations.

Child and Youth Services has lists of on-post, in-home daycare providers — many of whom are available in an emergency situation when other arrangements fall through.

If paying for daycare is an issue, the Financial Readiness office can help you work out a budget that includes making sure your children are taken care of.

Many local daycare centers offer discounts to military personnel. And most neighbors, if they are worth anything at all — and remember that we are all one big Army family — will help out and watch your kids if you are in a bind.

And in the worst case scenario, when you just can't find someone to watch your kids, you call your chain of command and tell them you are staying home. You take the Article 15 for not having a fail-proof family care plan, you take the chapter out of the Army because your dependents are interfering with your service, but you don't leave little kids at home alone for 10 minutes or 10 hours!

They love you unconditionally. They depend on you, their creators, to provide for them. They are innocent, fragile little people who deserve every ounce of their parents' love, attention and care.

The legal system is pockmarked with loopholes and technicalities for criminals to slip through, but I hope that, when it comes to parents who violate the instinctual trust their children place in them, the guilty are weighed and measured and, if found wanting, are punished swiftly and severely.

Teen Challenge offers hope

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Rock on Pam!

Pamela Parker was a Partyer, with a capital P. She partied with the "in" crowd, the doctors and lawyers and developers of Jacksonville Beach, Fla. She shared their cocaine for nearly 18 years.

For a time, Pamela managed to juggle two lives. She got high on Saturday night and took her children to church Sunday morning. She learned to hate the habit, but despite three visits to a rehab center, she couldn't give it up.

Eventually, it cost her her career in civil engineering, her marriage, her money and her peace of mind. It very nearly cost her her life.

Now, at 44, Pamela is finally a quitter. Not a loser, mind you, a quitter. With the help of Teen Challenge of Columbus, she's free of cocaine, and for the first time in her life, she's feeling fulfilled.

"I had a great family, friends, money, boats ... you name it. But there was always something missing," Pamela said, when I met her and 10 of her friends at the Cracker Barrel in Columbus.

They were rocking, quite literally, on the porch. (Cracker Barrel has the best rockers, don't you think?) Pamela and 10 other Teen Challenge residents shared their stories with me, mostly stories of substance abuse and its consequences. Many of them have children somewhere "back home" hoping Teen Challenge is the answer they've been praying for. According to the statistics, it probably is.

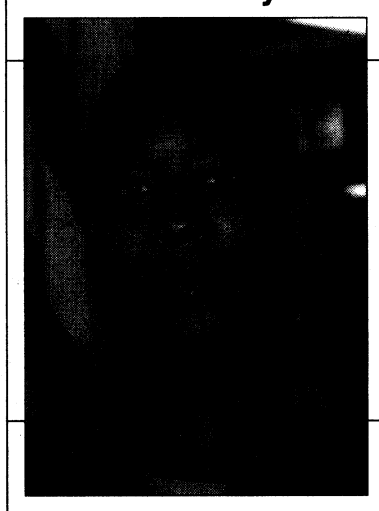
You see, Teen Challenge, an interdenominational faith-based discipleship program with facilities in 83 nations, has the highest long-term success rate of any substance-abuse program — any one you can name. More than 80 percents of their "graduates" will never return to the lifestyle that brought them there and more than half go into some sort of ministry.

Claude Mooneyhan and his wife Berita have been the directors of the Teen Challenge women's facility in Columbus for 15 years. There's also a home for younger girls in Phenix City. Boys and men also have facilities of their own, but not locally.

Mooneyhan believes Teen Challenge's success stems from its commitment to discipleship. The women in his home study the Bible and pray daily. They meet with Christian mentors and counselors. They teach deliverance through faith in God, unabashedly and unapologetically.

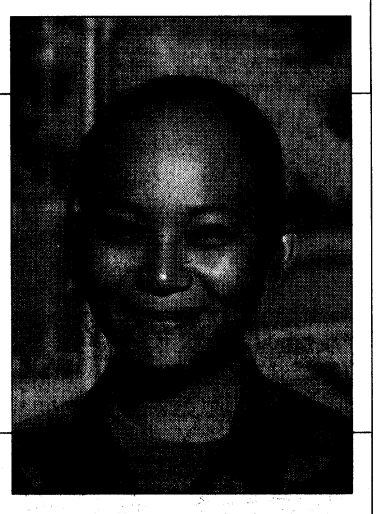
"We specialize in the spiritual," Mooneyhan said. "We offer Christ as the answer and we won't compromise our beliefs."

Whether or not you agree with Mooneyhan's beliefs, you can't argue with success. Teen Challenge works.



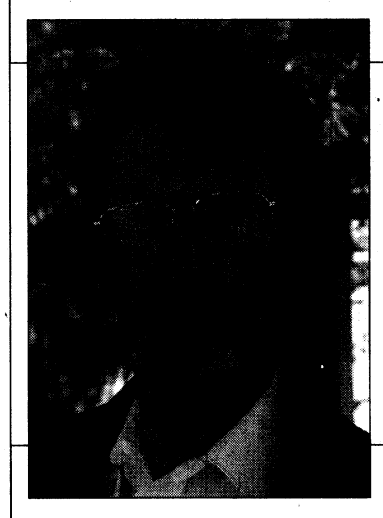
In fact, the residents of the Columbus Teen Challenge were at work when I met them, studying the Bible and memorizing scriptures. They were taking part in a rock-a-thon designed to call attention to their program by introducing Teen Challenge to the community.

Teen Challenge depends of the support of faithful donors, because they don't qualify for funds from federal faith-based initiatives, which would require them to make worship services and Bible instruction optional. That, Mooneyhan said, would strike at the core of their success. I'll buy that.



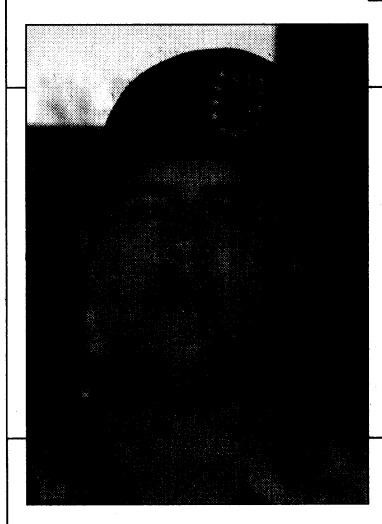
So when you're looking for a place to volunteer your time or donate your money this holiday season, keep them in mind. They're located at 2021 6th Ave. in Columbus, or you can call them at 323-5822.

VARIOUS VOICES

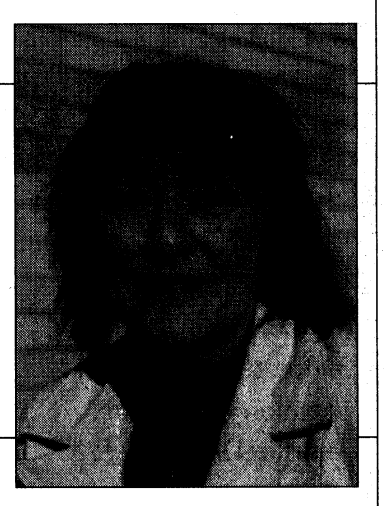


Thursday is the Great American Smokeout. Why did you start smoking and have you ever tried to quit?

Spc. Shawn Love, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "I started because it seemed like a stress reliever. I tried to quit because it's just nasty. I put a toothpick in my mouth, and it stops me from smoking."



Spc. Stephanie Faulkner, 3rd Brigade Troops Battalion — "I started smoking out of boredom. I want to quit because I would like to able to run better in physical training."



Mike Tyler, Commissary employee — "I started smoking because everyone else around me was doing it. I'm not trying to quit, but when I run out, I just see how long I can go without buying more."

Celeste Lee, Directorate of Training — "I started smoking in college, because I thought it was cool, sophisticated, and made me look grown. I'd buy some with little flowers and hold it all cute. I have quit several times. I just stop buying them."

Spc. Francisco Ramos, 461st Personnel Support Battalion — "I started in high school because my friends smoked. I did quit, but I picked it back up because of stress."

Karen Ferris, Directorate of Combat Development — "I started smoking because of peer pressure. I tried to quit using the gum. I urge children never to pick up a cigarette because it's so addictive."

Snipers: Share techniques, skills critical on battlefield approach their target — two United Nation's vehicles taken by the enemy with hostages — using a Bradley.

The spotter stayed in the Bradley and used the thermal system to identify the enemy, while his partner moved closer to the target on foot and communicated with his spotter by radio.

"The teams came into this competition not knowing what the events were going to be," Velez said. "If they had competed before, they had an idea, but this year we changed it all around. Every year we try to change the events to keep it challenging."

Although the sniper competition is just that, a competition, Velez said it's not just about winning a trophy.

"We're trying to have a friendly competition but we also want everybody to exchange ideas and techniques," he said. "This is about sharing the knowledge that you learn in combat and passing it on to others. The foreign competitors do things differently but the end result is always the same. This competition gives us the opportunity to learn the techniques that other countries use and share the techniques that we use. It's an information exchange, a learning experience."

Velez said the event also identifies weaknesses and gives snipers the techniques and practice they need to improve their firing skills.

For first-time competitors Cpl. Eugenio Mendoza and Cpl. Nicholas Romero, from Fort Campbell, Ky., it was definitely a learning experience.

"We came out here to see what kind of weapon systems the other guys are using and to see if we could use them back at our unit," Mendoza said. "We learned a lot of different techniques here, and the cadre and other snipers have been really good at giving us pointers and telling us about different techniques we could use."

Mendoza said the hardest part of the competition was the pistol shoot.

"It's not something we do a lot back at our unit. I guess now we know that we really need to work on it. All in all, we came here to learn," he said.

The winners were announced at a banquet at the Four Point Sheraton in Columbus Nov. 5. First place was awarded to 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment, in Alaska; second place to C Company, 3rd Battalion, 502nd Reconnaissance Surveillance Target Acquisition Squadron, from Fort Campbell, Ky.; and a Canadian team took third place.

Native American fest set for Nov. 16

Traditional food, dance mark heritage month

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will celebrate Native American Heritage Month with traditional dancing, sampling of Native American foods and a guest speaker Nov. 16 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The event is free and open to the public. It will begin with a presentation by a dance troupe from the Chickasaw Nation, who will dance in cultural costumes from 11 a.m. to noon.

From noon to 1 p.m., attendees can sample traditional foods from various Native American nations. The menu includes smoked chicken from the Cherokee nation, the Chippewa's wild rice casserole, pork-stuffed fry bread from the Mohawk culture, wild rice from the Passamaquoddy nation, and broccoli and wild rice casserole from the Saxon, Ojibway and Lesh traditions.

Guest speaker Tim Harjo, from Oklahoma's Chickasaw Nation, will speak about Native American culture and representation in the military before the food tasting.

"Our foremost objective with this program is to educate Soldiers and our Fort Benning and Columbus communities about Native American culture," said Master Sgt. Paul Archangel, Equal Opportunity advisor. "The Army is becoming more diverse and there are lots of Native Americans serving."

In the past, between 250-300 people have usually attended the event. This year, EO is hoping that upwards of 400 people will turnout.

"We want to keep building until we can reach the entire Fort Benning community," Archangel said.

This year will be the first time the event's menu has included traditional ethnic cuisine. EO selected the food and guest speaker after consulting with people of Native American descent to ensure they chose appropriately, Archangel said.

"I hope people will come for the education, not just for free food," Archangel said. "It's a chance to open people's minds and for people to expand their vision. It's going to be a wonderful event."

83 post E-7s get bump to E-8

Annette Fournier

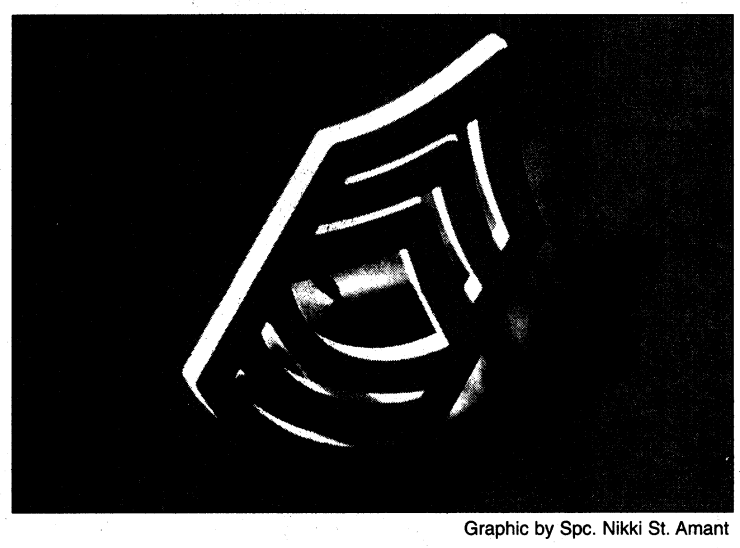
From Infantry units throughout the Army, 400 sergeants first class were selected for promotion to master sergeant. Of the 400, 83 Fort Benning Infantry NCOs and 37 NCOs from non-Infantry units were selected.

"I'm very excited about the number of NCOs selected," Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso said. "It says a lot about the quality of NCOs at Fort Benning."

The Army's Infantry promotion board was made up of colonels, lieutenant colonels, and sergeants major. The board determined the criteria applicants were judged on, with guidance provided by Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley.

To narrow down the applicants, the promotion board evaluated them based on several items, including previous assignments, military and civilian education, functional courses, assignments within TRADOC, performance of duty as reflected in an NCO's evaluation report, and scores on PT tests.



NCOs taking classes and pursuing their college education had an edge on those who were not.

> "I'm proud of all the NCOs who were eligible. Those who were selected and those who were not. We're an Army at war, so they'll be selected eventually."
> Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso
> Post command sergeant major

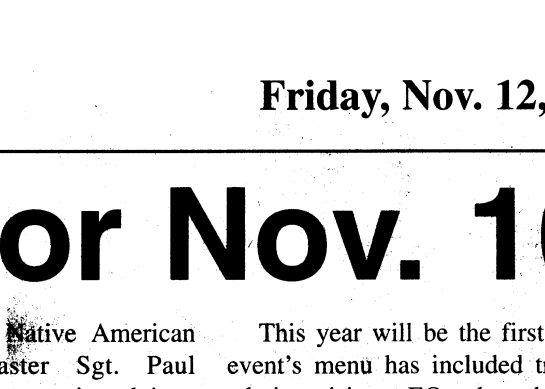
"The panel wants to see that you are making an effort to improve yourself," Kelso said.

Certain duty assignments add significant points. NCOs with the best chances for promotion are those with experience as observers and controllers at training centers, drill sergeants and teachers at Ranger school.

From Ranger Training Brigade, 35 NCOs were selected. All cadre at Ranger School have at least two years experience as a platoon sergeant, and most have combat experience, which makes them ideal candidates for promotion, Ranger Training Brigade's Command Sgt. Maj. Douglas Greenway said.

Graphic by Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Other units also had significant numbers of NCOs chosen, with 13 Soldiers from 11th Inf. Regt., and 12 from the 29th Inf. Regt.



The majority of the Fort Benning NCOs selected, 62, are assigned to TRADOC.

"There's a myth that those assigned to TRADOC are not competitive," Kelso said.

"But these numbers indicate that TRADOC NCOs are getting the experience and the training they need to be competitive. It points to the quality of NCOs who are instructors in the Infantry school.

"We try to bring in NCOs who have already been deployed. They bring war experience into TRADOC and give Soldiers a good foundation in battle.

"I'm proud of all the NCOs who were eligible. Those who were selected and those who were not. We're an Army at war, so they'll be selected eventually."

Navy officer jumps ship to join Army

Ready to put boots on ground at Fort Bragg

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Navy's loss became the Army's gain, when 2nd Lt. Alex Katauskas began training at Fort Benning in late October.

Katauskas was sworn into the Army Oct. 23 after transferring from the Navy when an injury prevented him from finishing SEAL training.

"The best advice I've heard so far is to come willing to learn and be prepared to take a lot of criticism so I can improve," Katauskas said.

Katauskas grew up in Wallingford, Pa., a suburb outside Philadelphia. He chose to attend his father's alma mater, the Naval Academy, in Annapolis, Md., and graduated with honors in 2002. He majored in economics and was recognized on the Superintendent's List several times.

"I went to the Academy, because I wanted to serve my country, and I wanted the camaraderie I grew up hearing my dad talk about," Katauskas said.

The second lieutenant found more than an education at the Academy. In February he will marry Lyndsay Fredericksen, whom he met when they were in the Academy together.

Following graduation, Katauskas was commissioned and selected for the SEAL special warfare program after placing 10th out of 50 midshipmen in his class who took the physical fitness test and orientation.

But the SEAL program would not be smooth sailing for him.

Two months into the six-month program, a stress fracture in his leg forced Katauskas to drop out, and high officer end strength prevented him from re-enrolling.

He was stationed at Coronado Island, Calif., where he worked with marine mammals trained to detect underwater explosives and enemy divers.

"I enjoyed swimming with the dolphins, but the sea lions are ornery. They bite. The dolphins are really strong and fast, and you don't realize how big they are until you get into the water with them," the 5-foot-10-inch officer said.

But Katauskas really wanted to do "boots on the ground" kind of work, so he hung up his flippers and started looking for other options.

"I considered trying to be a Naval pilot, but my heart wouldn't have been in it."

He considered both the Army and Marines but chose the Army because of leadership opportunities for officers. He had attended Airborne school at Fort Benning, so he was familiar with the Army.

He sought an interservice transfer, trading in his two-year Navy commitment for four years in the Army.

This week, the 24-year-old finished his fourth week of Infantry Officer Basic training with 11th Infantry Regiment's 2nd Battalion.

"Katauskas is doing great, and physically he's probably in better shape than anyone in his platoon," said company commander, Capt. Joshua Gilliam.

Katauskas is enjoying training and camaraderie with officers in his unit.

Annette Fournier

2nd Lt. Alex Katauskas aims at becoming an Infantry officer in his training at Fort Benning.

"You find the same type of people in all branches of the military, and the people I'm working with are professional and well versed. The guys are ribbing me a little bit about being in the Navy, but I would be disappointed if they didn't," Katauskas said.

"It should be interesting watching the Army versus Navy game," said Katauskas, who'll root for Navy.

Men training with him praised his work ethic and positive attitude.

"I was skeptical at first when I heard he was a Navy guy, but he's one of the most high speed, squared-away guys in the unit," 2nd Lt. Lucas Wright said.

"At the end of the day, he's just a good guy, except he runs goofy," 2nd Lt. Luke Fedlam joked.

Katauskas is still trying to get used to small differences between the branches.

"In the Navy, the latrine is called the head, and the chow hall is the galley. The guys in my unit just laugh at me when I ask what time we're going to the galley. Old habits die hard.

"(And) in the Navy we don't salute when we're in PT gear. Every time someone salutes me wearing PT clothes I think, 'what are they doing'?

"There's a lot to learn, so I'm just trying to soak it all in," the new Soldier said.

After training, Katauskas will go to 82nd Airborne at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Airborne musician strumming along

Cooper hopes to make it big for family

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Growing up on the mean streets of one of the toughest neighborhoods in Anniston, Ala., Spc. Steven Cooper found a pool of positivity in music.

His father and sister are musicians, and they helped teach the parachute rigger to play acoustic guitar when he was bitten by the music bug in 1999.

Inspired by bands like Default and soloists like Ryan Cabrera and Edwin McCain, Cooper said his material is "alternativish."

"Everything I write is something I am either going through or have been through," he said. "It's personal."

Aside from composing and playing his own music, Cooper plays a smattering of music from different bands, like Matchbox 20, Good Charlotte and classic Eagles tunes.

Cooper says music comes second to his family.

> "No matter how you play or how you sing, someone, somewhere is going to like you."
> Spc. Steven Cooper
> 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment

He has a grassroots publicity strategy. He plays for private parties whenever he can to get his name out.

"A good friend of mine is about to open a studio, and I'll be able to get some free studio time," Cooper said. "Once I cut a demo, I think I'll really start to take off. I'll make it one day."

The amicable crooner with the southern drawl swears the drive for the top isn't so much about money and fame as it is chicken soup for his soul.

"The money's not really a big thing to me," he promised. "I wanna affect somebody with the things I write and my music. That is the biggest rush in the world — to hear a group of people respond to the lyrics you write and the music you are playing," he said. "There is no way to explain it."

Cooper admitted the money a contract could bring wouldn't be a burden. After all, he has a wife, Heather, and 20-month-old daughter, Malaya.

"If the money did come my way, I guess it wouldn't hurt," he said. "I would put it all into a college fund for my daughter and investments. I wouldn't spend too much."

Making a way for Malaya and Heather is the driving force behind everything he does — from the Army and his job, to his music.

"Sometimes I play Malaya to sleep, and it's awesome because those are the two best things in my life — my family and my music," he said.

Spc. Steven Cooper, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, strums his guitar outside work.

With the mountain of challenges that face any unknown artist, Cooper said a tough road lies ahead on the way to his dream, but he won't give up.

"I think the beauty of music is, no matter what anybody does to you or tries to take away from you, it is the one thing they can't take," he said. "It's always in your head and heart. No matter what you play or how you sing, someone somewhere will like you."

Cell phone towers to improve reception on post

Expect better service around first of year

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

In the next few months, cell phone users should see more bars on their displays and experience fewer dropped calls.

In August, a 193-foot cellular tower, built by Yarborough and Paradise Towers, was stacked behind Building 84 on Main Post. In the next few months, wireless communication carriers will install antennas on the tower, increasing coverage on the installation, said Peggy Mealing, Wireless Communications planner for Fort Benning.

Public Service Cellular, Verizon, Sprint and Cingular will be on the tower.

"These carriers haven't had towers on Fort Benning before, just to the borders of the post," Mealing said. "Before, they could only have antennas on telephone poles or have portable cows — a cell on wheels — but it just wasn't enough."

Besides the tower on Main Post, Mealing said two 250-foot towers will be erected by Tower Economics, one in the Harmony Church area and the other off Marne and Cusseta roads.

"The coverage should be great, awesome," said Jim Kernaghan, account manager of Tower Economics. "We did a triangulation study, and when you put the three towers together it will provide more coverage on post. Each area of the post will be covered by one of the towers."

The towers are erected through a contract with the Corps of Engineers. A private company owns the towers, but it leases the ground from the government. The owner is responsible for contracts with cellular companies.

> "The coverage should be great, awesome. ... when you put the three towers together it will provide more coverage on post."
> Jim Kernaghan
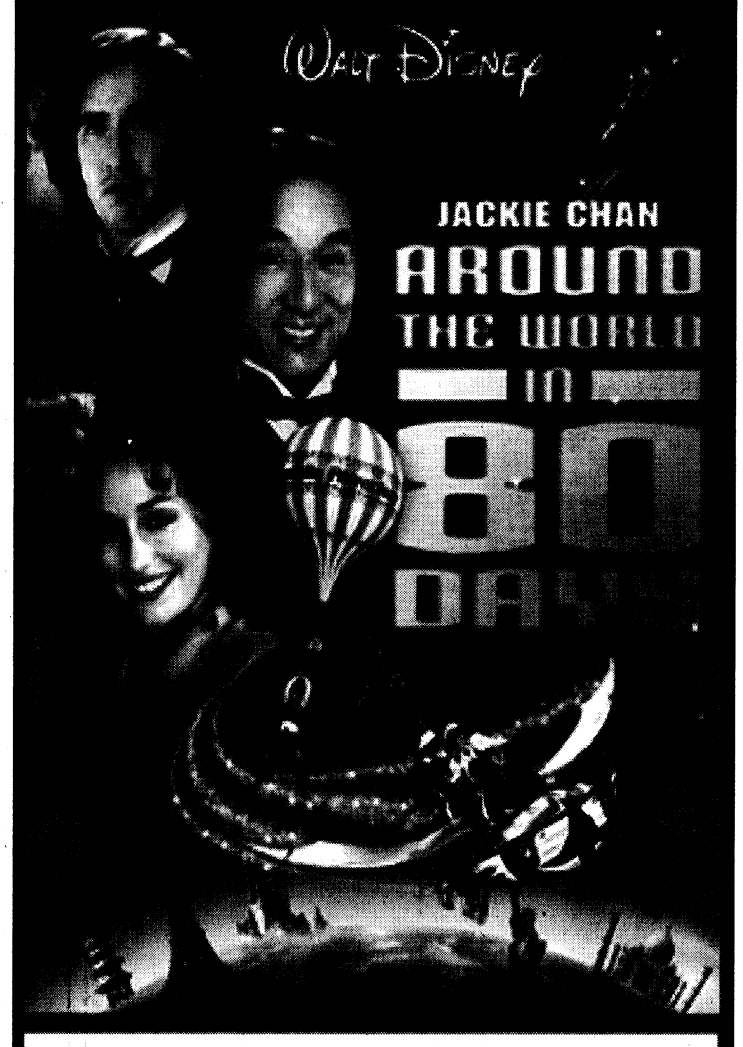
> Tower Economics

Mealing said Fort Benning has been trying to get towers erected for three years. Now, she's waiting to hear when the antennas will be put up.



Kernaghan said his company will start stacking towers next week, and antennas should begin going up in January and February. They will carry PSC, Verizon, Sprint and Cingular.

Mealing said cell phone coverage on Kelley Hill, Sand Hill, McKenna MOUT Site, Highway 27 and Cusseta will increase greatly. Customers should see a noticeable difference in coverage by the first of the year.

Soldiers stretch out final steps to crossed rifles

Pvt. Michael Haan never saw the Army as an option after high school. Tuesday, the 19-year-old found himself in the prone position with a squad automatic weapon, role-playing the opposing force for his final field training exercise of one station unit training.

Haan, from C Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, is one of the thousands of Soldiers who volunteered to join the Army after 9/11.

"It's a sense of duty," Haan said. "I never thought about the Army before (9/11). But now I'm here, and I've got only two weeks to go."

The Soldiers headed out to their final FTX Monday afternoon and will be in the field until tonight, when they begin a 12- to 16-mile road march to Honor Hill. There they will receive their crossed rifle pins and become Army Infantrymen.

During the weeklong FTX, the Soldiers will use all the training they received during their 14 weeks at Fort Benning in five days of battle drills.

Monday night, the Soldiers dug hasty firing positions through the night.

Tuesday, the Infantry Soldiers and the mortarmen used their skills to do a direct lay, which is a call for fire.

"The Infantry Soldiers move down the lanes and then give the mortar guys the coordinates for them to fire," said Sgt. 1st Class Clyde Harris, 1st Platoon drill sergeant.

Harris said C Co. has 43 mortarmen this cycle who were split up for advanced individual training with the 29th Infantry Regiment.

During the week, the Soldiers completed various lanes to assess their Soldier skills.

Some of the lanes included a squad ambush lane, movement to contact, enter and clear a trench, various night reconnaissance and surveillance missions and patrols.

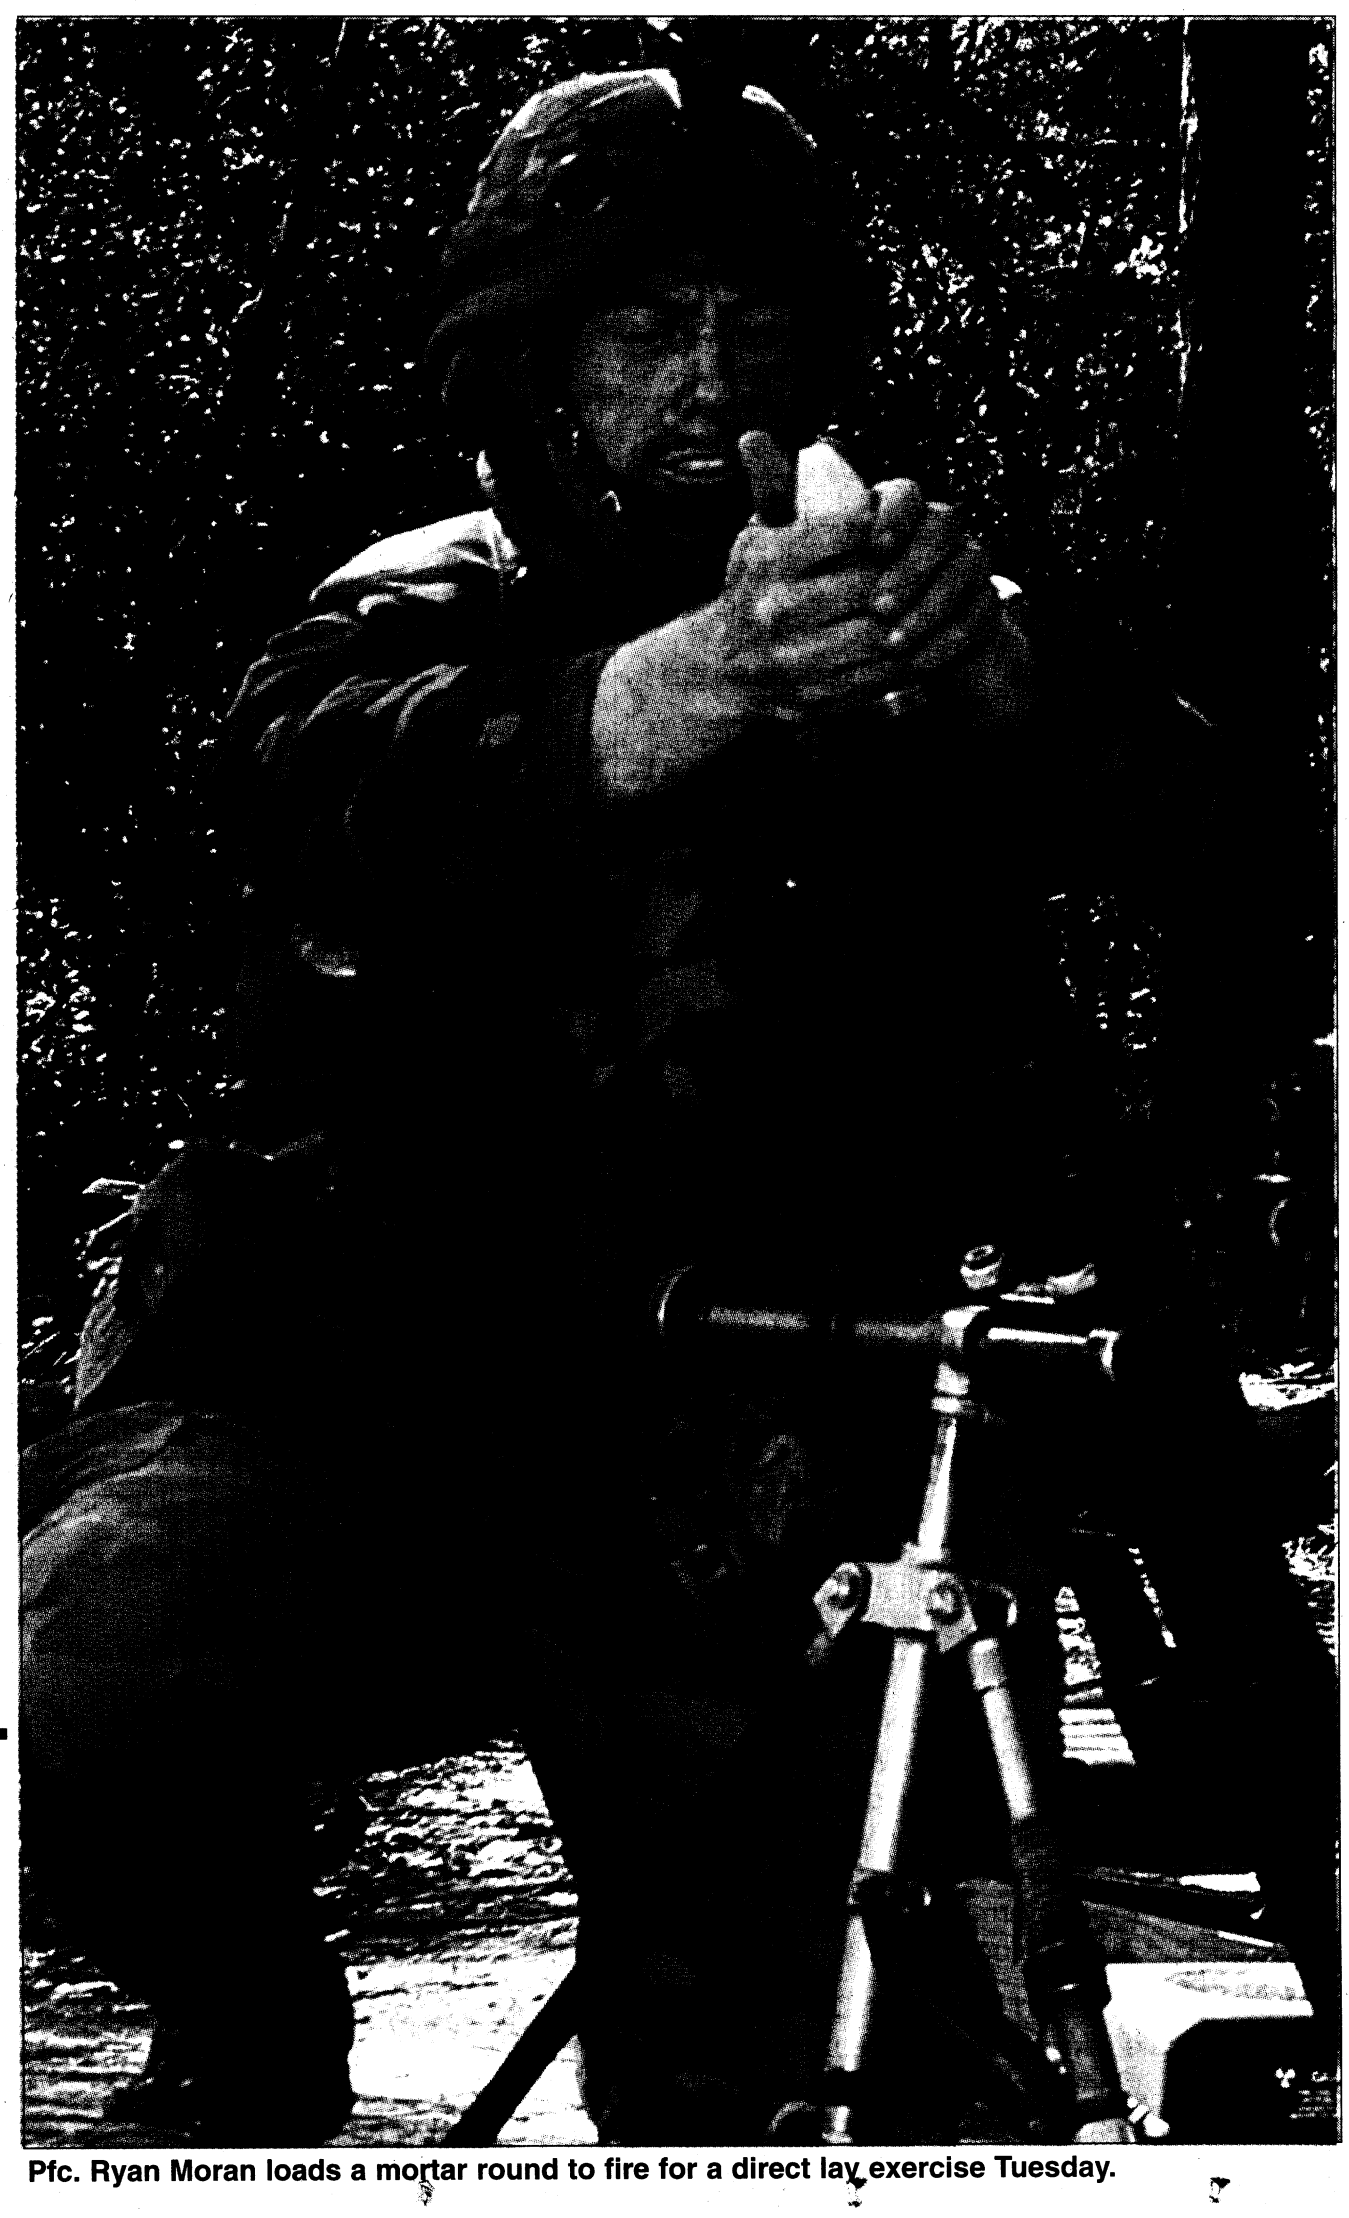
Harris said because of the current Global War on Terrorism and the type of war being fought overseas, there has been an increase in the importance of military operations in urban terrain training.

"The Soldiers will enter and clear an objective on their road march to Honor Hill," Harris said. "That's something that hasn't been done before."

Another aspect stressed during training is the drill sergeants act as platoon and squad leaders during the final FTX.

"Many of these drill sergeants will be coming off the trail soon, and they need to be fighting the same fight," said Capt. Keith Madere, C Co. commander. "We're helping them 'stay blue.' In other words, they're training on what they will be doing as squad leaders and platoon sergeants once they leave here."

To incorporate the drill sergeants into the Soldiers' training, the drill sergeants executed every event with the Soldiers as their squad leaders.



"Having the drill sergeants out there gave us an example of what our leadership is supposed to be like once we get to our units," Haan said. "It also gave us an example of how we need to act once we're in their position."

During tonight's road march, the Soldiers will carry a ruck load of 35-45 pounds as well as their weapons.

Once C Co. reaches Honor Hill Saturday morning, the Soldiers will have earned their crossed rifles and the right to be called Infantrymen. C Co. will graduate Nov. 24 on Kanell Field on Sand Hill.

"Many of these drill sergeants will be coming off the trail soon, and they need to be fighting the same fight. We're helping them 'stay blue.' In other words, they're training on what they will be doing as squad leaders and platoon sergeants once they leave here."

NCO's drug, weapon charges nets jail time

75th Ranger gets boot, 42 months in pen

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet assistant editor

Sgt. Antonio Barrientes, Ranger Training Detachment, 75th Ranger Regiment, was court-martialed for and convicted of the wrongful acquisition and distribution of MDMA, also known as Ecstasy, the use of marijuana, improper relationships between an NCO and his Soldiers and wrongful transportation of a weapon Sept. 20.

Barrientes was sentenced to 42 months of confinement, reduction to private, forfeiture of five hundred dollars a month for 42 months, and a bad conduct discharge.

Between January and March, Barrientes entered into a partnership with a junior Soldier to have the drugs mailed to him, and he distributed those drugs to his subordinates free and for profit.

On more than one occasion, he used both Ecstasy and marijuana with his Soldiers and threatened to harm them if they told anyone of the illegal activities.

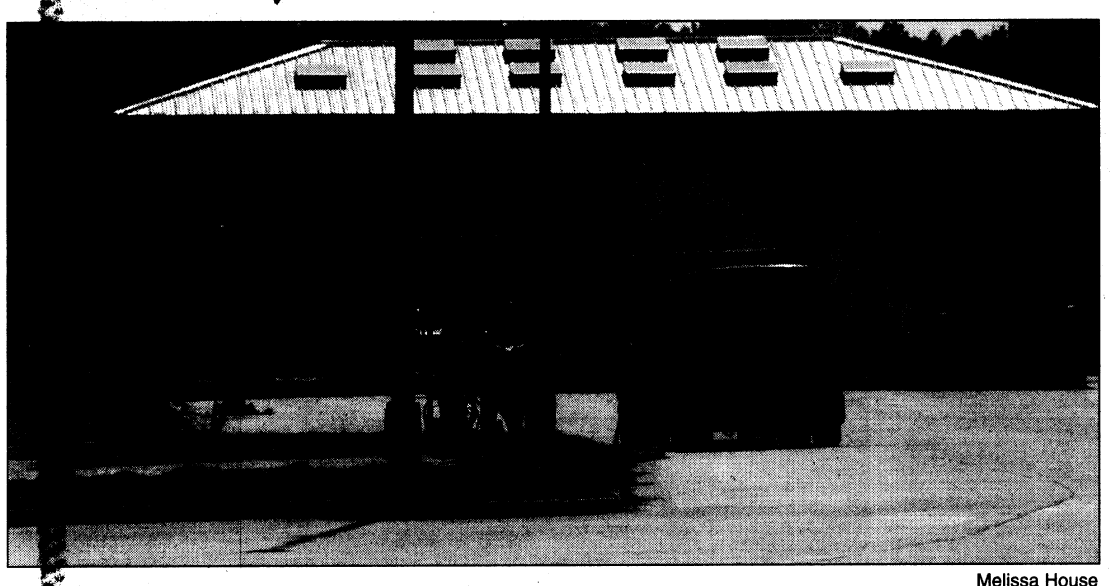
"This NCO violated quite possibly all the values we are taught to live by as Soldiers," said post command sergeant major Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso.

"What's even worse is that as an NCO, he brought his junior Soldiers into this. The trust his commander placed in him he deviated into something unfathomable."

Barrientes' lawyer, Capt. Michael McGlinchey, Trial Defense Service, said that while his client is sincerely remorseful for the mistakes he made, it is important to remember that the matters at issue in the court-martial took place during a two-month span.

McGlinchey said that during the vast majority of Barrientes' 10 years in uniform, he demonstrated patriotism, duty and selfless service.

Kelso said even though the nation is at war, the Army's standards of conduct can not be compromised, even if that means losing Soldiers with significant time in service.



"If we fail to uphold the standards and values we live and Soldier by, then we are no better than the enemy we are fighting against today," he said. "There is not a Soldier in the Army who doesn't know this kind of behavior is wrong.

"It doesn't matter if you have eight, ten, twelve years of service — if you play with fire, you are going to get burned," said Kelso.

"I think he got off light. I'd have thrown him in jail for 20 years."

The Uniform Code of Military Justice provides for automatic appeal to the Army Court of Criminal Appeals for any Soldier who is sentenced to a punitive discharge or confinement for one year or more," said McGlinchey.

"So Barrientes' case will be appealed and he will also have a right to petition the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces and the Supreme Court of the United States for review."

more than 20 guards at the gate, manning all 10 booths, truck inspection, visitors center and the random inspection stations.

Finnegan said random inspections will be conducted at stations on either side of the road after the vehicles pass through the booths. The stations have overhead light and cover.

"Once this gate and the Benning Road gate are open, (the contracted guards) will be employed full-time at the ACPs," Finnegan said.

One change already in place is 100 percent picture ID checks of each adult in a vehicle.

Col. Charles Cornwell, Fort Benning chief of staff, said this increased force protection measure would remain in effect until further notice.

Even with this added measure, Finnegan said drivers with decals will not have to wait long to get onto post.

"There will be times when it will take a few minutes," he said. "But not thirty to forty minutes. The ACP was designed so if we need to become more vigilant, we can still do it without a huge impact."

Finnegan said the new ACP will be tested by the increased traffic caused when the Benning Road gate closes.

The Benning Boulevard and South Lumpkin gates will close at 11 p.m. Nov. 19 because of the protest against the now closed School of the Americas. The Benning Boulevard gate will not re-open until construction is complete, but the South Lumpkin gate will reopen at 11 p.m. Nov. 21.

He said there is a possibility the Benning Road outbound lanes would be opened to help the flow of traffic off post during the peak evening hours, but the decision would not be made until the safety office makes an assessment.

"Fort Campbell (Ky.) had a serious head-on collision at night with someone coming in through the outbound lanes," Finnegan said. "We don't want that to happen here."

Rally: Features big names

at the Tidwell Cancer Treatment Center, where Miriam works alongside her husband, cancer specialist Dr. Jack Tidwell.

But seating is a problem Pease and Tidwell seem fairly comfortable with.

"There are a lot of positive things going on," Pease said. "This is a tricommunity effort."

A local VFW post donated 20,000 flags for the rally.

Notable guests include Medal of Honor recipient, retired Col. Robert Nett, retired Col. Ralph Puckett, and authors Robin Moore and John Given.

Nextel will offer free phone calls for Soldiers, Barnes and Noble Booksellers will provide free refreshments throughout the afternoon, and 100 military children can get complimentary tickets for a basketball clinic with the Harlem Globetrotters at 2 p.m.

Soldiers can get free tickets for the Riverdragons game and discounted tickets for their families at the Civic Center Box office.

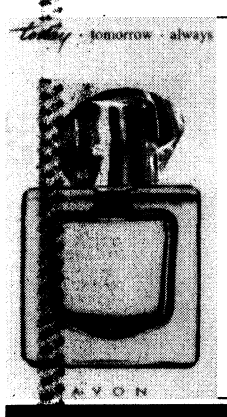
Tidwell said the motorcycle rally will be a large event this year, drawing more than 500 bikes and riders.

Thirty police officers will be on hand during the rally to ensure everyone's safety.

Tidwell, who grew up as a Navy daughter and married a retired Soldier, said she is proud of Fort Benning and all of the sacrifices the Soldiers make for the country.

"The God Bless Fort Benning events are a way the community can thank the Soldiers and families for their sacrifices," Tidwell said.

"This started because I was angry at the protestors. Then I was sad. Now I'm indifferent," she said.



"This rally is not against the protestors, but against the message the protestors are sending to the world about our base.

"We're going to represent WHINSEC, along with the rest of Benning, in a positive way," she said.

Cannon crews rain fire from on high

Photos by Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Staff Sgt. Terrance Sutton, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, a cannon crew member since 1991, uses the sights on the M-109 A5 howitzer.

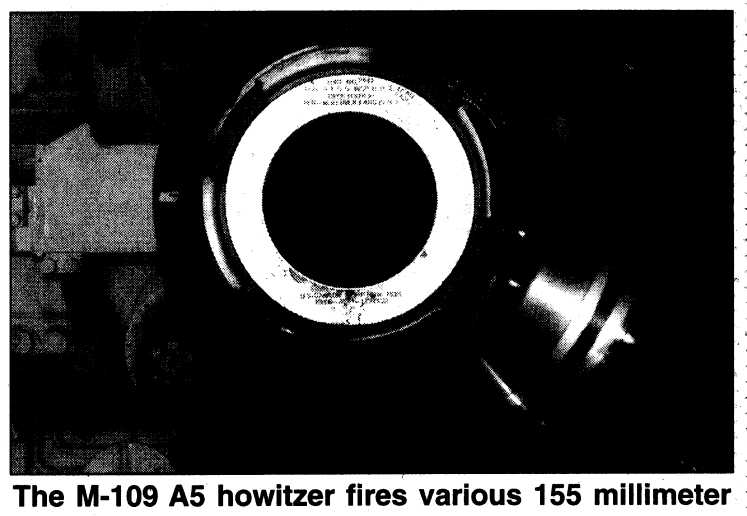
Team bonds like family to survive battle

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Staff Sgt. Terrance Sutton has been a cannon crew member for a long time. Three deployments. Thirteen years. Countless crews and cannons.

The number one thing that sticks out for him in a career filled with an endless barrage of exploding ordnance and high-pressure, adrenaline-riddled experiences, is his family.

By family, he means his crew. The team is assigned to the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment.



He equates it to a bond and common understanding between blood relations because, inside the back of a multi-ton killing machine, things have to move like clockwork. Life and death hang in the balance.

"We are talking big bullets here," said Sutton. "155 millimeter shells that can go up to 30,000 meters and put very big holes in very big things.

"These guys in my section are like my family. We train together for the real deal. We are going to war together."

The M-109 A5 howitzer the crew calls "Judy" weighs 55,000 pounds when combat loaded, can move at about 38 mph, is mounted with a 50 caliber machine gun and fires a variety of different shells with deadly accuracy.

"I could blow up a car from miles and miles away and this is built so that no matter what happens you always have a backup," said Sutton. "All the electronics have manual counterparts so that you are never left hanging."

The M-109 A5 howitzer fires various 155 millimeter shells with a range of up to 30,000 meters.

Sutton said it takes a team of four highly trained crew members to employ the M-109 safely and effectively on the battlefield. Each member has very specific responsibilities from driving, verifying and loading the rounds and charges, fire control and manning the gun.

"When you are firing, things move very fast in here," he said. "Everybody has to be on point. Each person is verifying every aspect of the mission — the target data, the size of the charge, the type of round and the time to target. If you make a mistake you can miss the target, kill yourself or hit friendlies."

The enormous pressure of combat duty as a cannon crew member isn't generated only by the enormous responsibilities of the missions. The imminent danger crews face as virtual sitting ducks on the battlefield can turn steely-eyed warriors' guts inside out.

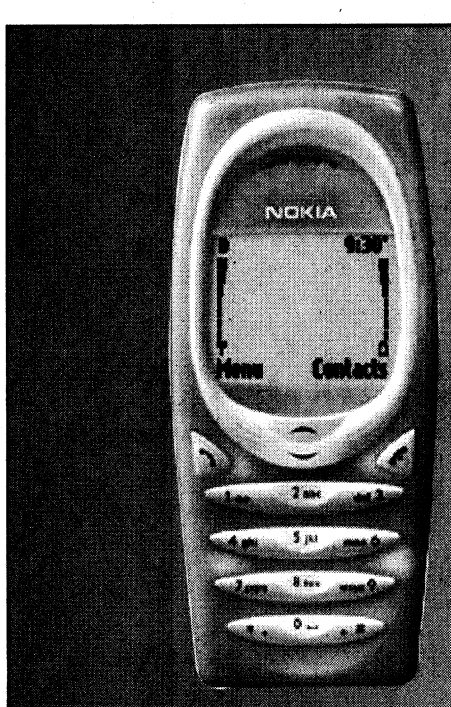
"It isn't all fun and games in here," said Sutton. "This thing isn't armored at all.

"It is hard when you go to war and this track is home to you day-in and day-out and all of sudden you are hearing the rattle of rounds pinging off the side and you look over into the eyes of an 18-year-old. Those eyes are saying 'I read about this. I watched it on television, but when I signed up, I never thought this would be me getting shot at.' They are saying, 'Sergeant Sutton, I don't wanna die.'"

But the NCO has faith in his Soldiers even though most of his team for the upcoming deployment will be rookies.

"They are as ready as they are going to be," he said. "They go through eight weeks of AIT and then they come here and train hard.

"We are tight. None of my guys would rather go with anyone else," he said. "They don't want to go unless they can go together."



Sutton's perception was mirrored by his Soldiers on all points.

"We've got a great hard-working crew," said Spc. Santiago Soto. "I've been on three or four crews before this one and I could have gone Special Forces but I trained with these guys for awhile and now I am staying."

For the first time ever, a mortar has been destroyed in mid-flight. Northrop Grumman congratulates the Army for its recent successful demonstration of the Tactical High-Energy Laser (THEL). During the test, THEL successfully destroyed both single- and salvo-fired mortar rounds. It is the only weapon to effectively engage these ubiquitous and highly dangerous offensive threats. With more than 30 years of laser weapons experience, Northrop Grumman is proud to introduce the speed and precision of THEL, a system that will cast the battlefield in a whole new light and protect warfighters for years to come.

Habitat for Humanity needs volunteers

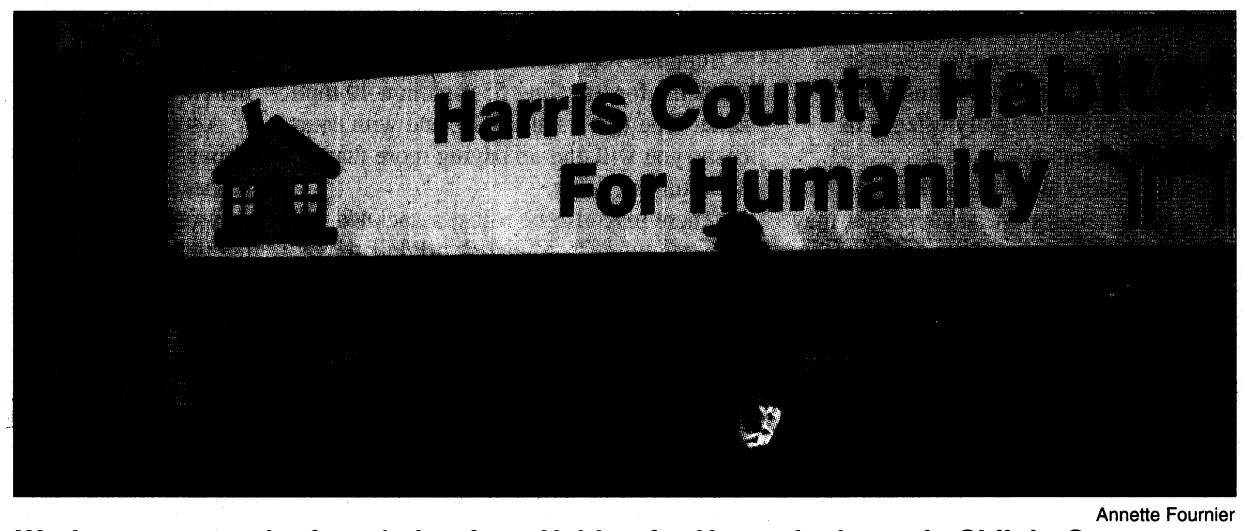
Harris County plans three-day building blitz

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Harris County Habitat for Humanity needs volunteers for a three-day home-building blitz in Shiloh, Ga., Nov. 18 to 20.

The pre-framed house will be the first of its type built in Georgia by Habitat for Humanity.

Workers will complete the foundation and floor this week in preparation for the blitz, when volunteers will put up the walls, the trusses and the roof. The walls are pre-wired, so once they're standing, the wiring will need only to be connected.



The three-bedroom, two-bath ranch-style home is being built for Curtis and Sonja Johnson and their two young children, Javianete and Precious. This will the Johnson's first home.

Habitat for Humanity builds modest homes and sells them for no profit.

Homebuyers are required to invest 500 hours of "sweat equity" in their home and pay the no-interest mortgage.

The nonprofit organization is asking for volunteers of all ages and abilities.

Fall clean up

ITB Soldiers 'bushwhack' McGraw Manor

Basic trainees participate in annual event

Capt. Anthony Oliveras
Infantry Training Brigade

What do you get when you cross a fork lift, a wood chipper, a cherry picker and dump trucks with the Infantry Training Brigade? A successful fall cleanup in McGraw Manor.

The Custer Road neighborhood was divided into six zones Saturday, and each basic training battalion tackled a zone, cleaned it, trimmed it, edged, cut and cleared it as part of the annual McGraw Manor event.

Pvt. Andrew Barto from Scottsdale, Ariz., was one of the Soldiers who spent the day tackling the common areas along the streets, wooded areas and playgrounds. The Army is about helping others, Barto said, and he was proud to help the community.

Sgt. Preston Yates, a McGraw resident, said the Soldiers cleared areas the residents couldn't get to.

Another resident, Rebecca Oaks, was equally impressed with the efforts.

"I think it's awesome," she said. "They did a really good job last time, and the Soldiers are really polite."

Installation officials have twice recognized the ITB for its cleanup efforts. The brigade received the Commander's Cup for Spring and Fall Clean Up Large Category in November 2003 and April of this year.

"The ITB is serious in its partnership with McGraw Manor to make it a better place to live," said Command Sgt. Maj. Stephen Warnock, the brigade's command sergeant major. "And we hope the residents appreciate the efforts of our Soldiers and will continue to do their part to help make McGraw Manor the best community on Fort Benning."

Golden Corral to feed vets Monday

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Military members and veterans can receive a free meal at Golden Corral restaurants across the country during the annual Military Appreciation Monday from 5-9 p.m.

"We do this to show our appreciation to men and women in uniform who do so much for this country," said Chris Murphy, associate manager of the Columbus Golden Corral.

Last year, the Columbus restaurant served 1,800 veterans.

This year, Murphy said, they will feed as many as they can fit in the doors.

To eat free, military members must tell the cashier they are, or were, in the military.

The event will start at 4:30 p.m. with an opening ceremony and ribbon cutting, followed by entertainment in the parking lot.

"Last time, the line was around the building and down the fence," said Johnny Wells, associate manager. "So we decided to provide entertainment while people wait."

Performers include bands and drill teams from local schools.

Throughout the weekend, Disabled American Veterans will be collecting donations at the restaurant.

While active duty and veterans eat free, family members will pay for their meal. The cost for non-military is $8.39 for the dinner and $1.39 for a drink.

The Golden Corral is located at 1505 Manchester Expressway.

For more information, call 320-0300.

Fort Benning students honor veteran's widow

Students in Carroll Thebaud's gifted class at Dexter Elementary School received House of Heroes hats last week when Pat Riccinto visited the school to thank the students for making cards for a local widow.

When Pat Riccinto tried to convince a nervous and skeptical Vera Ruehle to allow strangers into her home, he knew success was in the cards.

Riccinto, an employee at Total Systems, was the captain of a House of Heroes team of volunteers assigned to make minor repairs and spruce up Ruehle's Columbus home in September. The elderly widow of retired Staff Sgt. Henry John Ruehle was reluctant to participate, so Riccinto called on a group of Fort Benning students to ease the way.

Nearly 30 students from Carroll Thebaud's Dexter Elementary gifted class created greeting cards for Ruehle to thank her for her service — and her husband's — to the country. Staff Sgt. Ruehle was a veteran of Korea and Vietnam.

"While we were working on the outside, she sat inside reading your letters," Riccinto told the students Friday. "You sort of brought Mr. Ruehle back to her for a while. It was tremendous."

Riccinto and House of Heroes representatives visited Dexter to show the students pictures of the event and to give them House of Heroes hats as tokens of appreciation.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Is a traffic ticket a misdemeanor?

A: The answer depends on both the offense and the state. Many states consider minor tickets to be a "petty offense." A petty offense is less than a misdemeanor, and punishment is usually a small fine. Improper backing is a petty offense in Alabama, for example.

Misdemeanors are more serious, but not as severe as felonies. A misdemeanor may result in a larger fine or short jail sentence, usually one year or less. Reckless driving is a misdemeanor in Georgia, for example. A felony is usually an offense for which a jail sentence of more than one year is authorized. First degree vehicular homicide is a felony in Georgia.

Tickets for exceeding the speed limit are quite common. Drivers should know, however, that speeding can cost them in more ways than one — and for years to come.

Suppose you received a traffic ticket in Alabama for traveling 55 mph in a 40 mph zone. The fine itself is $20, and with court costs, you will end up paying more than $100 for the ticket.

There may also be a cost associated with "points." In Alabama, driving above the posted speed limit will result in a minimum of two points being assessed against your driver's license. These points will remain on your record for two years and can cost you down the line0.

When points are assessed against a driver, insurance companies will probably raise the premium on the driver's insurance. This increased rate will usually not be reduced until the points are removed, meaning you will pay more for your insurance for two years after the ticket.

Also, if you get a certain number of points, your driver's license may be suspended.

Speeding can result in higher costs than the ticket itself. The best advice is to stay within the speed limit.

Fort Benning youth in the news

Lisa Madler asked her Faith Middle School seventh-graders to write about "What My Family Means to Me." Here's what they had to say about being part of a military family:

Darius Czerny

"What does my family mean to me? That's not a question I can give a simple answer to. My family and I do many things together. We argue and kid around with each other. My parents are usually embarrassing and my brothers are, of course, dumb and different. Joseph and Jaylin, my two younger brothers, are bossy, touchy, dirty and obnoxious. My dad is strict, athletic and fun to be around. My mom is wonderful, and she means the world to me. She's caring and funny and has a heart of gold."

Desireay Anthony

"My family is always there for me when I am feeling down. Family, to me, is a group of people who love each other no matter what happens. My family is very special, because we stick together no matter what happens to us. When my dad goes overseas, we pray that he will come home safe. My mom works hard to keep us together during these separations. When she was working and the hurricane was moving this way and the rain started to get heavy, we were afraid that she wouldn't be able to get home that night. But she came, and we all kissed and held each other, and I knew everything would be all right. This is what my family means to me: love, hope, happiness and togetherness."

Lionel Wilson

"My family is kind of like a movie to me. We're always moving from one place to another, like on a movie set. Usually, we don't stay in one place very long. The place I've really liked the most is Fort Benning, because we've got to stay here and get to know each other again before we have to move on. I hate that part — when you're just getting settled and then it's time to leave again. My stepdad is in the Navy, and he's a lot of fun to be around. My mom is a caring and concerned person who helps me with my grades and problems. My sister is all right, but at times she can be annoying. I think my parents like her better, but I'm sure she'd say the same thing about me. Isn't that how it always seems?"

Ferrenzo Bren

"My family means the world to me. When I need to talk, my family is there to listen and they're the first ones I speak to. When I make bad grades, my family encourages me to do better, and they help me. The usual speech I get sounds like this: 'Ferrenzo, if you do not make good grades, you will not make it anywhere in your life.' This speech gets old, but I'm very appreciative about the things my parents tell me. Family is a big deal to me, and I will always love them no matter what."

Ashley Ballesteros

"My family is the most important thing to me in the world. They made me who I am. My family includes Stacy, my mom, Victor, my dad, Alexis, my sister, Victor Jr., my little brother, and Jake, my doggy. They help me through my problems by listening and making suggestions. My dog helps me practice being responsible with my chores. My parents and sometimes my brother and sister help me with my homework and chores. Sometimes they can get really annoying, but I still love them. This sharing with each other and participating in each other's lives is what family means to me."

Kendra Marshall

"My family means love. The definition of love is trust and honesty and other things you share only with your family. My family is the greatest family anyone could ever have. Even though my brother and sister talk about me and argue with me, I still love them and would do anything for them. Even though my mom doesn't understand my life, she is a swell 42-year-old, and she's been in the Army all her life. She's cool, and I would take care of her all my life if she needed me to. I love my mom and all the fantastic things she does for me and my brother and sister. Thank you, Mom."

Xaimarie Rodriguez

"My family means a lot to me. They're always there when I need them. They're so special that words cannot describe them. We always have our ups and downs and imperfections just like every other family. Whenever I'm feeling sad or mad, I know that my family is always there for me. I can talk to them about my problems and I know they care and they're listening. My brothers are sometimes trying and mean to me, and sometimes I wish they never existed, but most of the time I feel lucky to have them by my side. No matter what, I know they'll always love me."

Amanda Perez

"My family is always there when I need them. They're supportive when I'm down. I love my family very much, and they mean the world to me. My parents help me solve problems at school and home. My mother is a hard working woman, and she also goes to school. I look up to her, because she takes care of us all. My father also works hard. He works long hours, even Saturdays. My father is like a teddy bear — he looks mean on the outside, but he's he's sweet and lovable. My brother is 16 and good looking. He's usually mean to me, but I still love him. My sister is 15, very intelligent, and usually very nice to me. I guess you could conclude that I have one of the best families in the world."

Kelley Hill Soldier delivers baby

Spc. Natalie Loucks
3rd Brigade Combat Team PAO

A 3rd Brigade Soldier helped bring a baby into the world Oct. 28 at the Winn Dixie grocery store on South Lumpkin Road in Columbus.

Pfc. Brandi Fontenot, a truck driver with 203rd Forward Support Battalion, was shopping, when she heard cries for help shortly after 2 p.m.

"It didn't look like anyone was rushing over to help, so I walked over to see what was going on," said the 23-year-old Louisiana native.

Fontenot, who has been in the Army for a year, found a woman about to give birth in the back seat of an SUV.

"I've delivered babies before, but never like this," said Fontenot, a former medic with the Acadian Ambulance Service of Louisiana. "I still feel like it's my job."

After Fontenot delivered the baby, she wrapped it in her battle dress uniform top. She hasn't been able to contact the mother since the delivery, but she hopes to talk to her soon.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT YOUR DRINKING WATER

Fort Benning Did Not Meet Treatment Requirements

We routinely monitor your water for turbidity (cloudiness). This tells us whether we are effectively filtering the water supply. Water samples taken on June 28, June 29, July 1, September 8, and September 9 of 2004 showed turbidity levels of 1.5, 2.2, 5.6, 1.96, and 2.2 turbidity units, respectively. This is above the standard of 1 turbidity unit. Because of these high levels of turbidity, there is an increased chance that the water may contain disease-causing organisms.

What should I do?

You do not need to boil your water or take other action. We do not know of any contamination, and none of our testing has shown disease-causing organisms in the drinking water.

Turbidity has no health effects. However, turbidity can interfere with disinfection and provide a medium for microbial growth. Turbidity may indicate the presence of disease-causing organisms. These organisms include bacteria, viruses, and parasites, which can cause symptoms such as nausea, cramps, diarrhea and associated headaches.

The symptoms above are not caused only by organisms in drinking water. If you experience any of these symptoms and they persist, you may want to seek medical advice.

People with severely compromised immune systems, infants and some elderly may be at an increased risk. These people should seek advice about drinking water from their health care providers. General guidelines on ways to lessen the risk of infection by microbes are available from EPAS Safe Drinking Water Hotline at (800) 426-4791.

What happened? What was done?

A problem occurred with the treatment system at the water plant. The reason for the higher turbidity values on these days was at temporary loss of operational control. The system returned to compliance levels of turbidity within 6 to 12 hours after the initial high turbidity levels when the filters were backwashed.

Building supervisor Cindy Dimmitt said there will be jobs for all volunteers, even if they have no building experience or have physical limitations.

Following the three-day event, volunteers will be needed on Saturdays to hang drywall and paint.

Volunteers are asked to:

• arrive between 8-8:30 a.m. and stay until 5 p.m., or as long as possible,

• bring hand tools, such as hammers, power drills or tool belts,

• wear comfortable work clothes, sturdy shoes, a hat, gloves and sunscreen.

Habitat for Humanity will provide lunch and beverages.

"Volunteers can expect to meet lots of nice folks, and have a pleasant experience," Dimmitt said. "We'll work hard, but have fun.

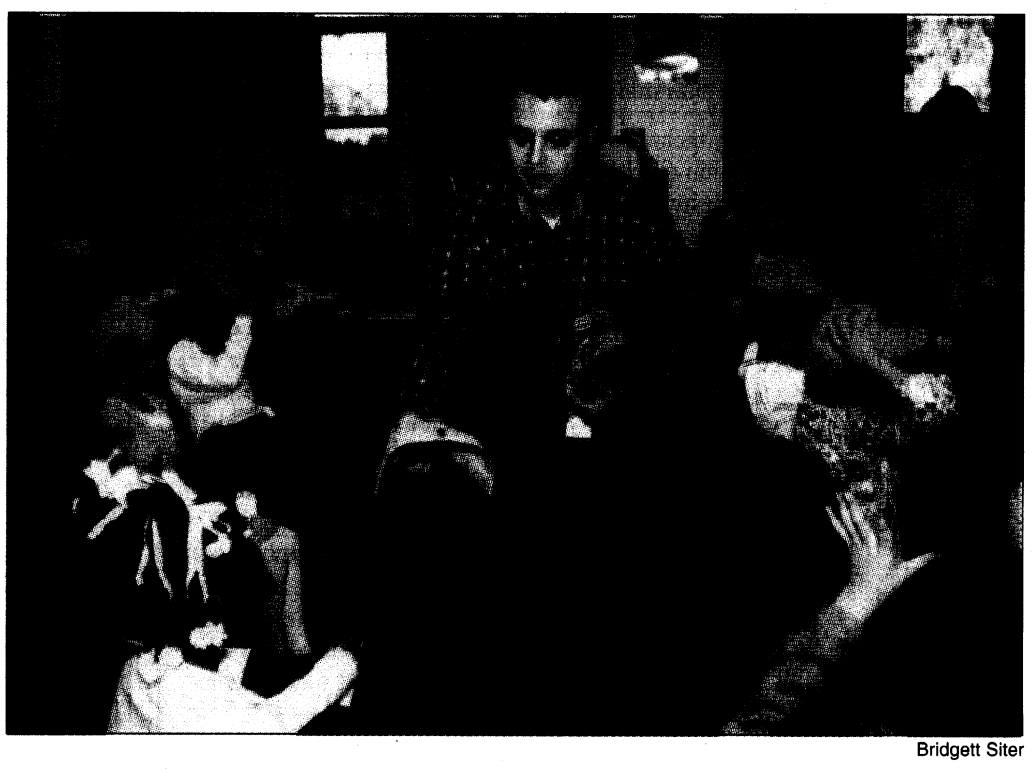
made them."

"They did make me cry — not sad tears, but happy years, tears of happy memories," she said.

Riccinto, whose father was a career Soldier, was a student at Dexter more than 25 years ago. Thebaud was his favorite teacher. So when faced with the dilemma of Ruehle's reluctance, he turned to Thebaud for help.

Her students put a lot of time and creativity into designing the cards, Thebaud said.



"They were honored to have a little part in this — the best part, I think," she said.

The students learned about the House of Heroes program, which was started five years ago to honor local veterans, public servants and their widows.

"Through House of Heroes, we can express in action what can never be said with words," Riccinto told the class.

The students' words, however, must have come pretty close. Riccinto said he and his wife cried as they pored over the cards before presenting them to Ruehle.

"I can't tell you what an impact you had on a family you've never even met," he said. "Through House of Heroes, we're making a difference."

Remember those who gave much for freedom

Veterans Day honors all those who defend America's freedoms

Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe
Garrison chaplain

REFLECTIONS

Eighty-six years ago, World War I ended. At the 11th hour, on the 11th day, of the 11th month in 1918, the guns on the Western Front fell silent and the war to end all wars between Germany and the Allies was over.

To commemorate that date, Americans began celebrating Armistice Day. Later, after World War II and Korea, the name was changed to Veterans Day.

Veterans Day honors all those who served in our armed forces, in peace and war — those who have stood guard at Freedom Bridge in the DMZ of Korea, at Check Point Charlie in Berlin, or along the fence in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

O'Keeffe

It also honors all prisoners of war and those who gave their lives in defense of freedom.

So, who is a veteran, and why do we have a federal holiday to honor veterans?

A veteran is a man or woman who raised his or her right arm and swore an oath to "protect and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic."

A veteran is a member of the military who realizes there are values, so noble and so right, more important than life itself.

These precious values of freedom, liberty, justice and equality are guaranteed in the American Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

For more than 200 years, veterans have been willing to leave home and family to defend these values, often at great price in terms of life, health and finances.

And so it is just, right, proper and fitting that a grateful nation pauses each November to honor those heroes whose service enables us to enjoy the rights, privileges and opportunities of this great country.

For us who are in the military, Veterans Day is a time to reflect on our oath of allegiance and what it means to us personally.

We remind ourselves that what is "big enough to live for is important enough to die for."

I think of the example of Pat Tillman, the NFL player who gave up a multimillion dollar football contract to serve his country in Afghanistan He lost his life there.

I am reminded of a song, The Rose, in which Bette Midler sings, "It's the one afraid of dying who never learns to live." Tillman knew what was really important in his life and wasn't afraid to live life to the fullest with courage and honor.

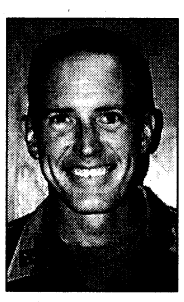
What makes America great is that there are countless unnamed men and women like him, who have given up a lot in order to protect and defend America.

On this Veterans Day weekend, let us all give thanks to God for the commitment of all American veterans and renew our commitment to protect and defend this nation of ours.

Owner's manual can provide direction, knowledge

Trust creator to give purpose to his complex creation

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



"Hand me the tension overdrive resecting bi-level attenuator," the mechanic said.

To which I replied, "The what?"

Do you know what a tension overdrive resecting bi-level attenuator is? Do you know what it's purpose is? Me neither.

In fact, when it comes to discovering the purpose of a complex invention like a tension overdrive resecting bi-level attenuator, it's always great to: (a) know the inventor, or (b) have the owner's manual nearby.

This past week the Army sent me to southern California, and on a whim I drove about 12 miles from where I was at a conference to the famed Laguna Beach.

Hawkins

It was about 15 minutes before sunset. The surf was crashing, the air was crisp, and it was shaping up to be a stunning sunset.

As I walked the beach, I decided to ask the folks I came across one simple question — "What on earth are you here for?"

Interestingly, folks were much more open than I feared they might be, as they rattled off a litany of answers.

Some folks thought it was a geographical question:

"I'm here from Portland,"

"We came to town because of a business conference."

"I live here and walk the beach every day."

But some folks caught the deeper meaning in the question and were bold enough to offer an opinion:

"I'm here to enjoy the relationship with my wife."

"I'm here to promote peace and harmony (hey, I was in California, right.)"

"I'm here to share what God has done for me with others."

What would you say to that question? If I met you on the beach and asked, "What on earth are you here for?" what would you say?

You might be tempted to look inside and ask yourself, "Well, what do I think that I'm here for?"

Let me toss you a crazy idea — perhaps we've got it backwards.

Maybe the best way to know our purpose, just like the tension overdrive resecting bi-level attenuator, is to ask the inventor, or at least turn to the owner's manual.

Doesn't it make sense if there's a complex invention, there's got to be a competent inventor? Isn't it simply rational thinking that if there is a marvelously complex creation, there's just got to be a marvelously competent creator?

Creations only find their purpose in the intention of their creator, don't you think?

So, what on earth are you here for?

Don't ask yourself that question, ask your creator, or at least dive into his owner's manual, the Bible, where it's all laid out for us.

I'll be talking about how you can discover your purpose in life in the weeks to come.

Can't wait until then?

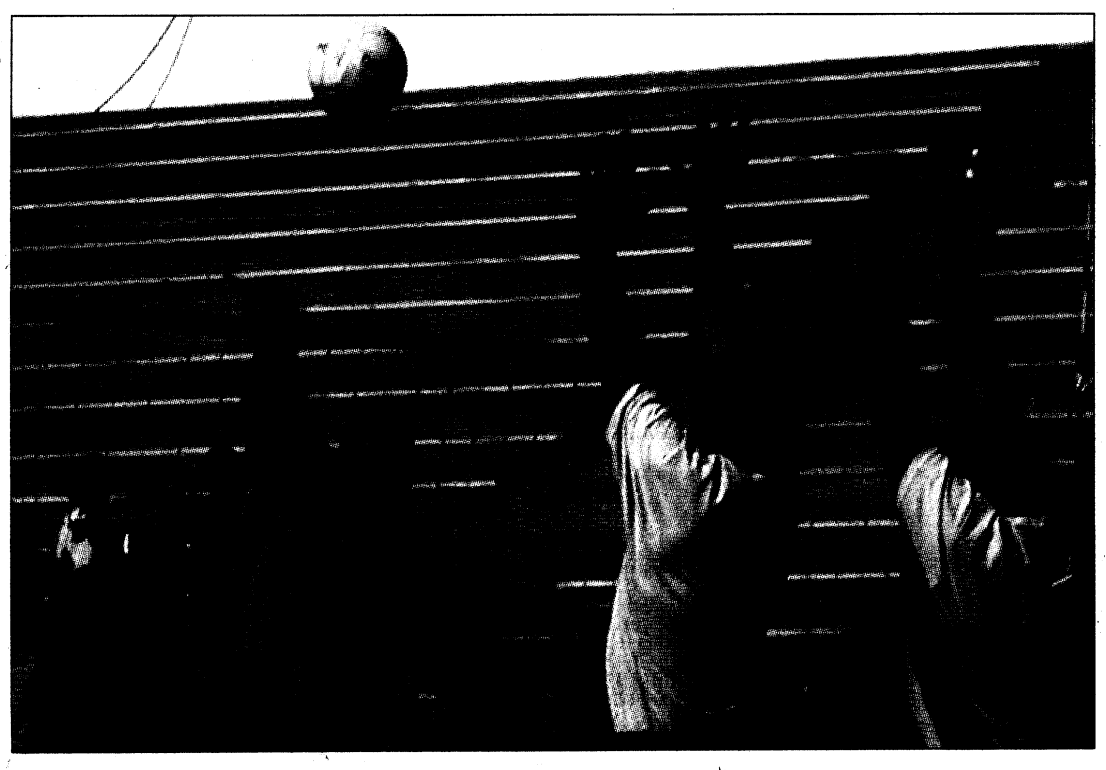
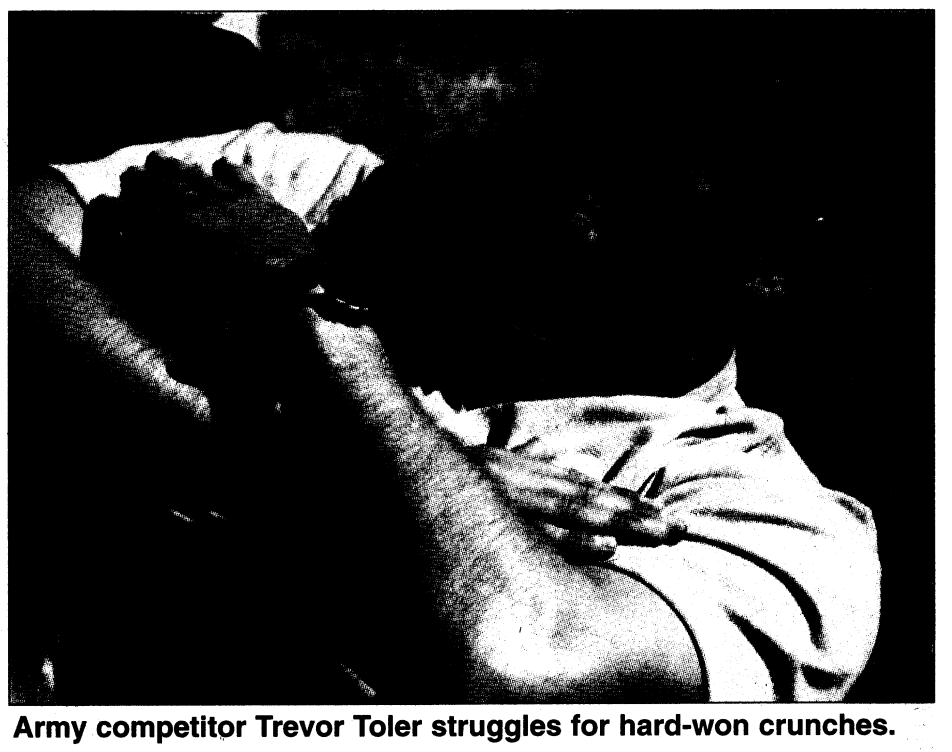
Teamwork forged in the heat of competition. Camaraderie given wings in the throes of each small victory. Determination wrought by pride, cast in the warriors' garb of discipline, dedication and devotion. Such were the weapons brandished on the field of battle during the 2004 Joint Military Athletic Competition at Doughboy Stadium Nov. 6.

In the quest for the highly sought after trophy, the "Bomb," the winning team carries home, officer candidates from the Army, Navy and Air Force faced each other in events like the 400-meter relay, a super physical fitness test, three-mile run, volleyball tournament and the battle of brawn tug-of-war.



Last year's champion Navy team was dashed upon the rocks of defeat by an Army force bound and determined to claim victory at home, and fell to an Air Force arsenal unwilling to finish in last place yet again.



With Army seizing control of the Bomb, Fort Benning officer candidates secured themselves a place to sleep for the duration of their stay on post. Post Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley jokingly told them in his opening ceremony speech they would be "kicked to the curb" if they failed to bring home the coveted trophy. But it wasn't all about winning at this year's multiservice games.

Post offers Tae Kwon Do

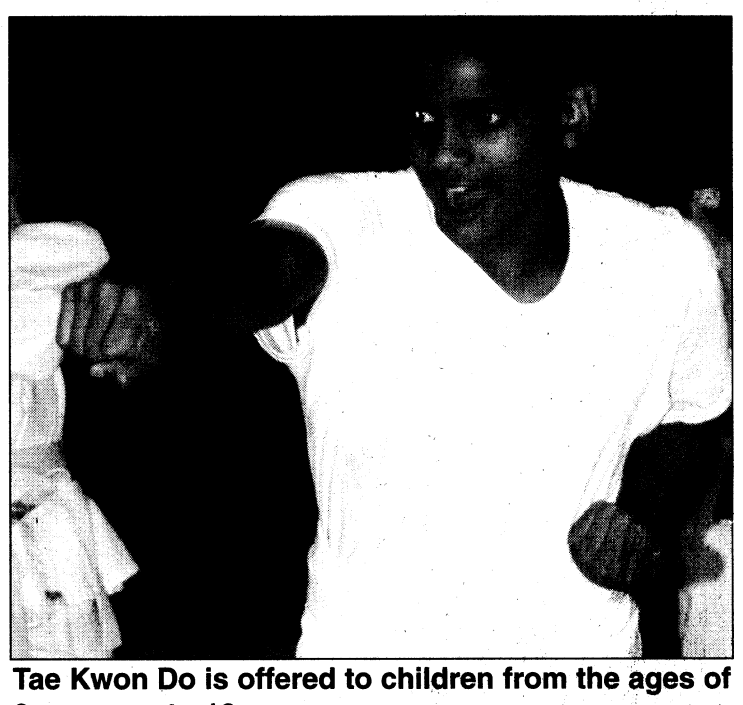
Michelle Furney sat on the side of the basketball courts at the CYS building Monday evening watching her kids, AJ, 12, and Marissa, 9, kicking in every direction.

No, they weren't throwing a tantrum. The Furneys are studying Tae Kwon Do — the art of hand and foot. The class is available through CYS to children from the ages of 6 to 18.

"A small desire to begin taking the class always helps," said Capt. Clayton Coleman, one of the two Tae Kwon Do instructors. "Discipline and technique is something they will continue to learn as they progress through the class."

Coleman has been studying Tae Kwon Do since 1989 and has his entire family involved. His sons, Mathew, 9, and Chance, 8, are already Tae Kwon Do black belts. His wife, Barbara, is also a CYS Tae Kwon Do instructor and a second degree black belt.



"Martial arts help promote physical and mental well being," Coleman said. "Kids get their own self being. Their confidence level grows so much that it doesn't matter what other kids are doing, because they know what they can do themselves. They can be made fun of by their peers and simply walk away, where other kids would get angry and turn confrontational."

Furney said she realized AJ needed discipline and Marissa needed self assurance when they began Tae Kwon Do in April of 2003. Now, she said, "they're getting there."

"No martial art is better than any other," Coleman said. "They all promote the same things. I will say we're better than any martial art that teaches aggression without a cause. Everybody teaches something a little different. Everything is always beneficial, if it's positive and brings out the best in people."

At CYS, the Colemans teach traditional Tae Kwon Do by splitting the kids into groups according to their abilities, so both instructors can concentrate on each students' strengths and weaknesses.

There are various levels or "belts." First belts are white, yellow and green. Secondary and more advanced are senior green, blue, senior blue, purple, senior purple, red, senior red and black.

Tae Kwon Do is offered to children from the ages of 6 years up to 18.

If students test successfully on their skills, it may take two years to become a black belt, Coleman said.

When the students get to be red belts, they begin breaking boards. But they don't break the same boards as adults do.

"The boards are catered to the age specific weight," Coleman said, "meaning they are not the same type of boards that grown men break."

The Colemans are still taking registrations for those interested in participating. The CYS monthly fee is $35, plus a one time registration fee of $35 which includes the uniform and the admission into the International Tae Kwon Do Alliance. Classes are Monday and Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. with an opportunity to train once a week at Monika Bishops Taekwondo Plus in Columbus.

For more information, call 545-2079.

JMAC: Not just about win

"I don't know anything about the Army or the Navy," said Air Force Officer Candidate Maria Cicio. "It's good because we get to meet people from other branches. They are our peers — we are going through the same type of training. "This is a glimpse of our future when we will be working together and at the same time I'm having great fun," she said. "The Army has been a really outstanding host."

Hospitality may have been the Army's forte for the day, but performance was a hair behind in second.

The Army team fell just one event short of sweeping the tournament and beat second place Navy by a solid 10 points.

And though Army lost that particular battle, the war itself was won.

At the day's rugged end, upon the glorious field of athletic conflict, within the hallowed walls of Doughboy Stadium, stood Soldiers victorious, as the Bomb was handed over for another year.

"Yeah, we won the whole thing overall, but we lost in tug-of-war to the Air Force and the regimental commander's gonna have my butt for that," said Sgt. 1st Class Ron Quinn, the Army team coach this year.

13th CSB deploys

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

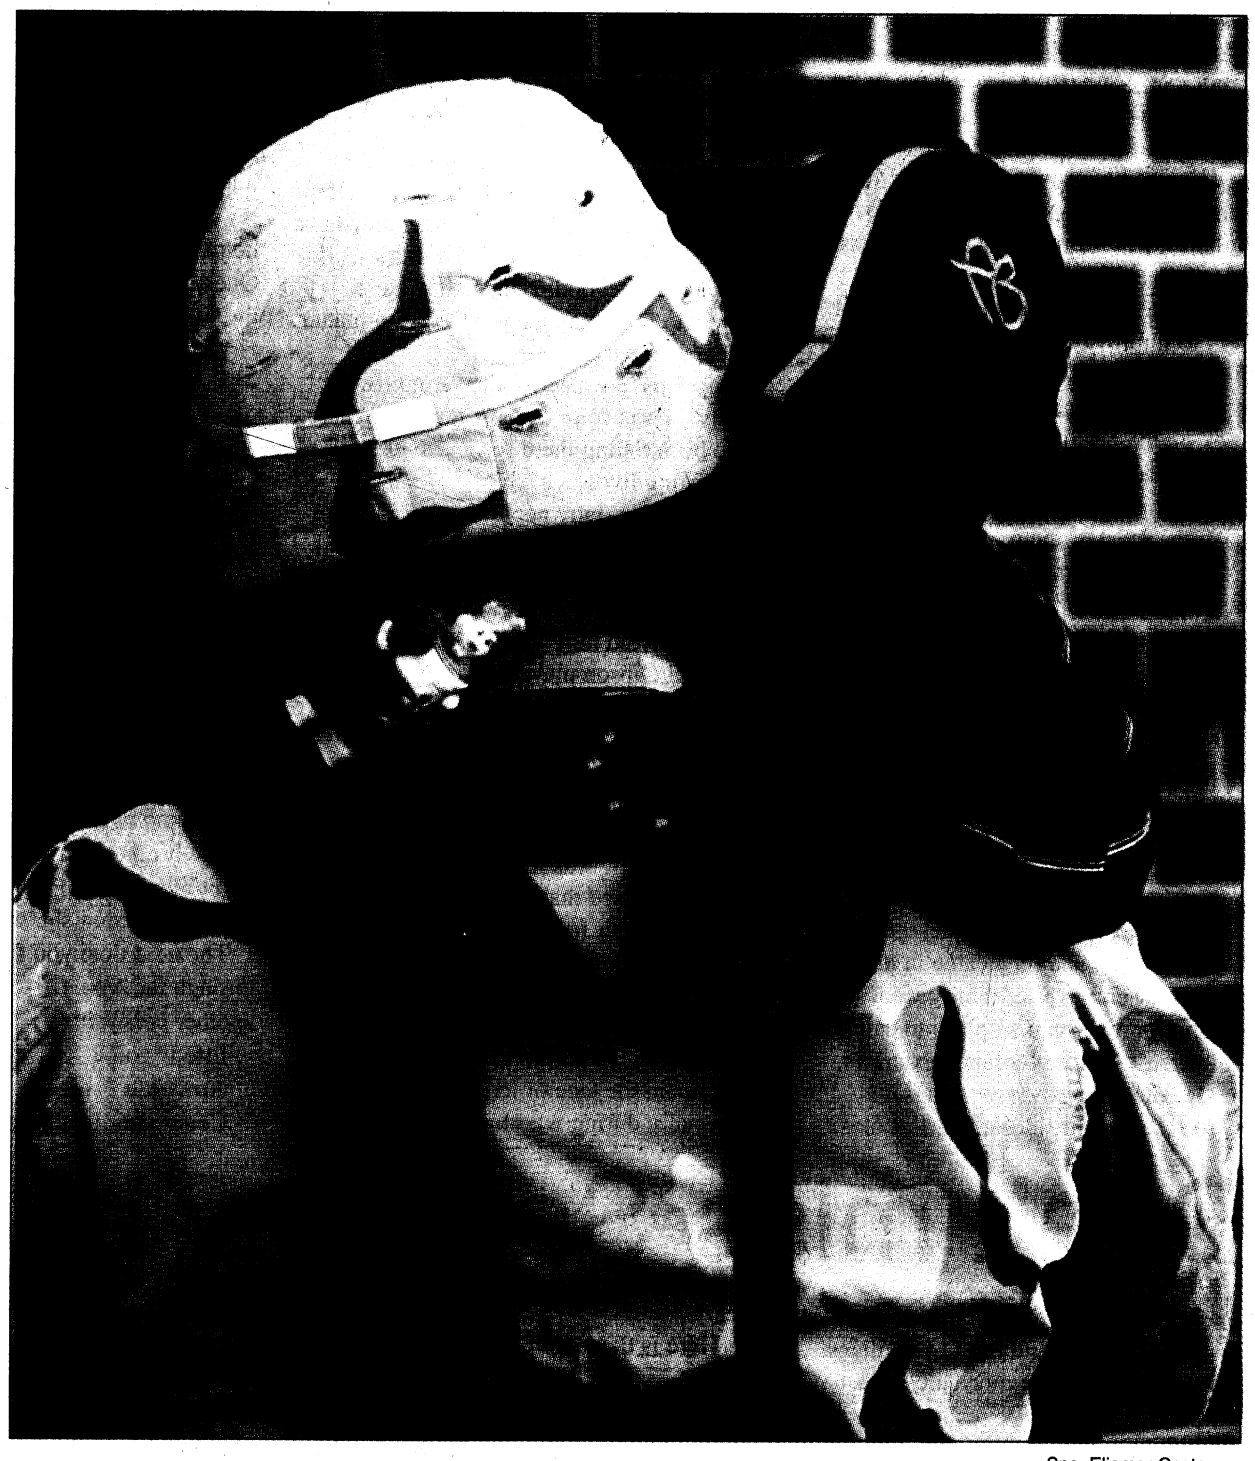
Sonnet Pichardo stood on the sidewalk holding her 3-year-old son Anthony as she watched her husband, Sgt. Ricardo Pichardo, deploy for the second time. Ricardo lefy Wednesday with the 13th Corps Support Battalion.

More than 70 Soldiers from the unit's Headquarters and Headquarters Company and the 233rd Heavy Equipment Transportation Detachment left Fort Benning for Iraq and Kuwait.



"The Soldiers over there are tired. It's time for them to come home and for us to go back," said Lt. Col. Matthew Higginbotham, 13th CSB commander, to the deploying Soldiers. "That's what we came in the Army to do, and we're proud to do it."

Sonnet and her husband deployed together in 2002 with the 233rd and were married after their return to the states. In January 2003 Pichardo deployed again for six months, leaving her husband and son at home. Pichardo is no longer in the Army. This time she watched as her husband and many of her friends departed.

"We knew he was going to be deploying since I got back from my last deployment," Pichardo said. "It's easier for me this time around to see him go, but when (Anthony) notices his dad isn't coming home tonight, it's going to be hard."

Although the families may have a hard time dealing with the absence of loved ones, the Soldiers will concentrate on the job ahead.

"The 233rd HET mission is to transport heavy equipment such as tanks, containers and oversized items from Kuwait into Iraq, while the 13th CSB Headquarters will provide command and control of logistics support operations, as required in Iraq," Higginbotham said. "We train constantly. There's never a time we're not training. We're always preparing to deploy, deploying or redeploying. That's our cycle."

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

At 3, Anthony Pichardo is a "veteran" at good-byes. Both of his parents have been deployed. Wednesday, he said good-bye again to his father, Sgt. Ricardo Pichardo.

Historically, the 13th CSB has deployed Soldiers year-round.

This rotation in no different. The 233rd HET Detachment will be deployed for six months and the 13th CSB Headquarters will be deployed for a year.

Move over, please

Between Nov. 13 to Dec. 7, almost 3,000 National Guardsmen, Reservists and and Airmen will arrive at Fort Benning from New York, Florida, Connecticut, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Wisconsin, Tennessee and Puerto Rico.

The Soldiers will process for deployment to Kuwait, Afghanistan and Iraq.

"This is the last home these Soldiers will know before going into battle," said Col. Robert W. Kenyon, commander of Mobilization Troop Command, the unit responsible for administration and logistics for the troops' billeting and other needs.

> Receiving almost 3,000 Soldiers in a short period of time is unusual, even for a post the size of Fort Benning. These Soldiers were diverted from other installations.

Receiving almost 3,000 Soldiers in a short period of time is unusual, even for a post Fort Benning's size. The post is handling these Soldiers because of training diversions from other installations, such as Fort McCoy, Wis., Fort Dix, N.J., and Fort Bragg, N.C.

The Soldiers will train in common tasks, weapons qualification, nuclear, biological, chemical threats, convoy training and combat life saver.

"Fort Benning becomes their home, albeit briefly, and serves as the last reminder of why it's so important to live in a free society," Kenyon said.

Soldiers who mobilized through Fort Benning last year are beginning to return.

Howard

A Fort Benning Soldier was killed on South Lumpkin Road Tuesday when the motorcycle he was riding collided with a car.

According to a police report, Spc. Michael L. Howard Jr., B Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, was pronounced dead at 8:09 p.m. after sustaining massive blunt force trauma to his head and body.

Howard was traveling north on South Lumpkin Road when a Plymouth Neon attempted to cross the road at its intersection with Wise Street.

Howard's Suzuki GSXR 750 hit the passenger side of the Neon and he was ejected from the motorcycle.

The accident is under investigation.

Howard was assigned to Fort Benning in July 2002. Upon return from Operation Iraqi Celebration marks Native American Month

Traditional dance, food part of event

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

Native American Heritage Month was celebrated with traditional dancing, guest speaker Tim Harjo of the Chickasaw Nation, and a sampling of Native American foods Tuesday in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

Nearly 200 people watched the Chickasaw Nation Dance Troupe from Oklahoma perform a spiritual dance symbolizing the passage of a day, "from sun-up to the next sun-up."

The dancers held hands and shuffled in a circle, stomping their feet, while the men chanted and sang. A gourd filled with pebbles and the women's decorative anklets rattled, providing the musical accompaniment.

To symbolize fanning a fire and praying in a tobacco ceremony, the dancers bent forward and raised their arms upwards, their gestures sending prayers to the Creator, Harjo said.

Other highlights included an invocation by Lee Frazier, Chickasaw elder and Harjo playing on the flute.

Harjo talked about the "Unconquered and unconquerable" Chickasaw people's historical struggle to maintain their culture, respect their ancestors, and still adapt to the American society.

> "Today we join hands to keep this land and this country strong, as it is."

> Speaker, Native American Heritage celebration

"Our ancestors fought to keep their land. It gives us strength to know where we came from. Today we join hands to keep this land and this country strong, as it is" he said.

WEEK OF THE MILITARY FAMILY

I love my (Army) family

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Forget your self-help books and Dr. Phil. I know the secret to happiness and success for the military family. Count your blessings.

That's the one thing you must learn to do — and teach your children to do — if you want to have a happy home wherever the Army sends you.

For every "negative," you have to find two "positives."

Now you don't need me to preach about the finer points of Fort Benning or the Army in general. Nor should you feel guilty for not appreciating every aspect of it.

And we should all continue the good fight to improve what we call "quality of life" for those who follow. But in the meantime, don't get mired in pessimism. Look on the bright side.

If you don't like your quarters, hey, it's OK not to like your quarters. But learn to make the most of them. I like to think the 13 houses my family has lived in has taught me exactly what I need in a home.

I love deep, dark-colored walls, but about mid-winter, I begin to feel claustrophobic and depressed. No more dark walls for me. Four or five bedrooms are nice, but ample storage is more important. Old houses are charming, but they're noisy. And hardwood floors are beautiful, but with four kids and two dogs, the upkeep isn't worth it.

These are all lessons I've learned in Army housing, and they came in handy just recently when the Siter family went looking for a permanent place to call home. We weren't swayed by fancy exteriors, trendy colors or crown moldings.

No sir, show me closets, lots of closets.

And big windows for natural lighting. We know what we like in a house, thanks to Uncle Sam.

I know the constant moving from post to post presents a challenge to even the most optimistic person. You can choose to let it get you down, or you can look for adventure along the way. Every duty station has its good points, even Fort Drum, N.Y., though I can't think of any right now.

I've taught my kids to anticipate new friendships and to keep count of the states where their friends live. To date, they have friends in 42 states and five countries. If they're really good friends, they have power to influence the world. It's a matter of perspective.

My kids' perspectives have improved lately. Visits from cousins reaffirm what I've been telling them for years — we lead interesting lives.

"Cool," said my nephew, when we had to stop the car to let a tank cross the road during a short tour of post.

"It's like living in a movie," he said.

We showed him where Eisenhower lived and Mel Gibson played. We stopped to watch Rangers fall from the sky. We introduced him to desert-clad Soldiers just back from Iraq who described some unimaginable creature called a camel spider. Very kid cool.

My nephew was impressed, and my kids were impressed that he was impressed. They saw their lives through someone else's eyes, and they liked what they saw. Being part of a military family is pretty darn cool.

Granted, it's a little harder to stay chipper in the face of lengthy separations, especially during wartime.

But if your Soldier is alive and well and that's the only thing you can be grateful for today, run with it. It's no small thing.

Encourage the kids to keep a list of all the good things they want to tell your Soldier when he calls or returns. (The one with the longest list gets to talk to him first?) Teach them to cloak their conversation in sunshine, literally. "Did the sun shine today where you're at?" sure beats, "Let me tell you about the lousy weather here."

I admit I'm guilty of feeling sorry for myself too often. Of my four children, two have a mild learning disability. Just the other evening, as I was struggling to help my little one, who was struggling with her homework, I thought, "Why me, God? One child, OK, but two? Why must I go through this again?"

Wednesday I met a woman with two young sons diagnosed with a terminal illness. "Every now and then I get mad at God," she said. "I think, 'Why me? One child, OK, I can get through it. But two? Why us?"

I asked her how she copes. It seems she knows of another mom who lost four children to the same disease.

"When I think I've got it bad, I think about her. Things really could be worse," she replied. "Every morning, I thank God they made it through another night."

Talk about perspective.

She knows how important it is to look on the bright side. She's my hero, a word I don't take lightly.

Did I mention she's an Army wife?

The next time you find yourself wading through the woe, try to look at things from another perspective.

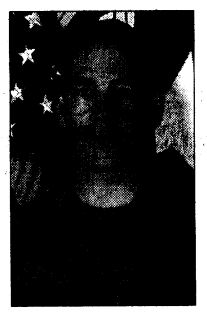
Life is good.

Army life is great.

Count your blessings.

Don't miss Saturday event

Sometimes Soldiers, their family members and our DA civilians wonder if anyone cares about them and if anyone else realizes how we are serving our nation during the fight on the Global War on Terrorism.



Well, Saturday you can see just how much you're appreciated, as Columbus leaders and the tricommunity salute our Soldiers, civilians and family members during the third annual God Bless Fort Benning Day.

God Bless Fort Benning Day is going to be a major event at the Columbus Civic Center.

We can thank Jack and Miriam Tidwell, the organizers, for what promises to be a day of fun and good old patriotism.

The Tidwells, with help from the Columbus community, are going to put on a party to thank all who work and serve at Fort Benning.

If you leave the event without feeling a surge of patriotism and appreciation for what the local community does for Soldiers and their families, then you don't have a heart.

Here is the gist of the day:

A free picnic runs from noon to 4 p.m. Soldiers will eat free. Civilians will be asked for a donation.

It will feature free concerts, by Lee Greenwood and Cornbread, and a red, white and blue motorcycle convoy.

Children will be treated to Moon Walk bounces, inflatable games, clowns and magicians.

The Legends of the Harlem Globetrotters will play at the Civic Center from 2 to 3 p.m. Again, Soldiers are admitted free. Cost for family members is $7. Those tickets are also good for the Riverdragons basketball game which begins at 6 p.m.

A Veterans Den honoring veterans from WWII, Vietnam, Korea, Desert Storm and Iraq and Afghanistan will be on hand for people wanting to talk to these warriors.

Our basic training Soldiers will be bused to the event by Fort Benning, and the Tidwells will provide buses for the rest of the installation.

Everyone who serves at Fort Benning is encouraged to attend with family and friends.

There are several good reasons to be there.

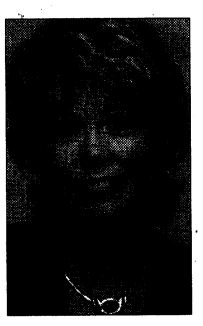
First, you'll have a good time.

Second, you can donate to Santa's Castle to help our young military families have a great Christmas.

Third, it's a great time to thank the community for putting this event on just for us.

So go see for yourself, and discover just how much other Americans care about the sacrifices made by Soldiers, their families and our DA civilians.

See you there. Follow Me!



— Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley,
Commanding General

Thanks to all in the family

The Family Advocacy Program of the Army Community Service Center wants to remind everyone that Military Family Week is celebrated during the Thanksgiving holiday.

We would like to take this time to express our appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices made by service members and their families in our community.

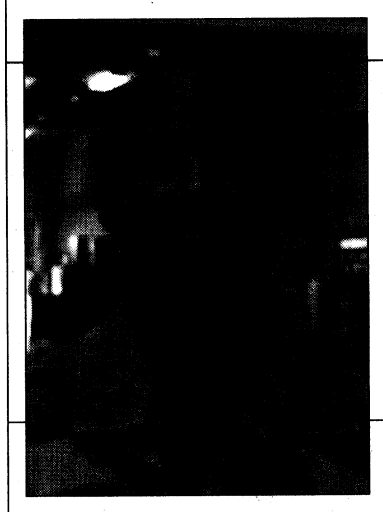
In the daily press of activities that characterize our modern lives, we often overlook opportunities to express our appreciation to those who make a special contribution. To amend that oversight, we take this opportunity to salute military families.

Military families in our community, on post and off, are separated from their own hometowns and friends.

They are also frequently separated from each other because of military duties.

We, as civilians, should value and commend every Soldier's contribution during this week.

To show our appreciation, the ACS Center Family Advocacy Program will have a display set up at Building 2624 from Monday through Nov. 24 with educational materials for Soldiers, spouses and children.



All Soldiers and family members who stop by the ACS Center on Wednesday will receive a free canvas tote bag.

For additional information on Military Family Week, call me at 545-7517.

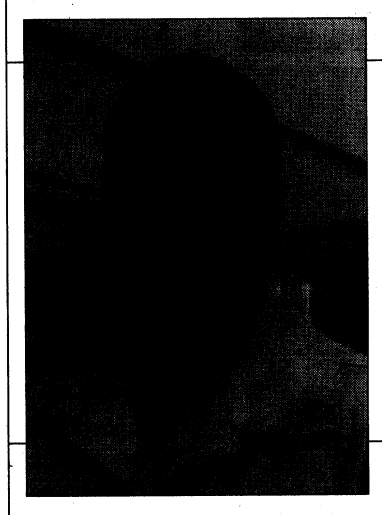
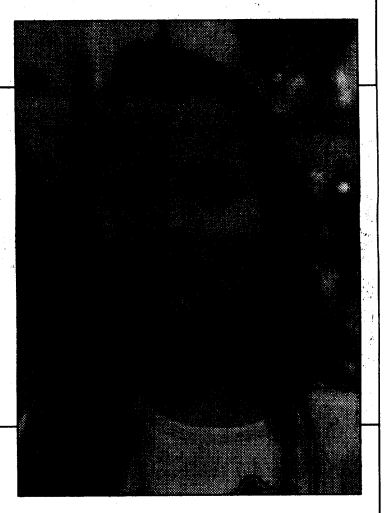
Family Advocacy Program manager

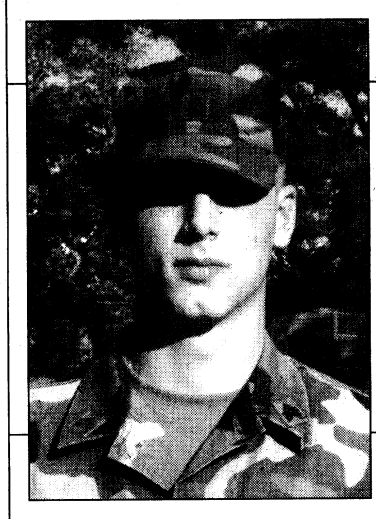
VARIOUS VOICES



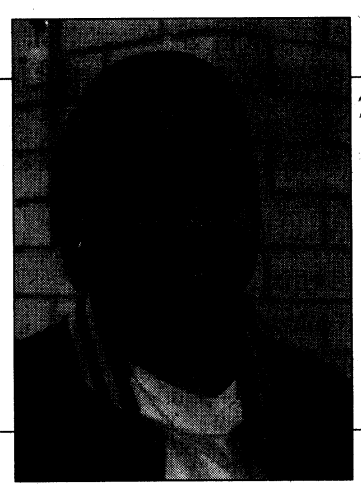
How do you deal with the challenges of being a military family?



Sgt. Eric Preston, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "My wife and I communicate well, and we work together hand in hand prior to deployment so it's an easier transition. We are a little older, so we can handle the separation better than some younger couples."



Spc. Sandra Jimenez, 1065th ASMC Medical Company — "My family is sad when I have to leave them, but they know it's my career. We keep in touch with letters and by phone. I keep myself busy with my studies and learning."



Sgt. 1st Class Efrim Larry, 233rd HET Detachment — "After being in so long you get used to the challenges. The younger the kids are the harder it is for them to adjust. You need to have a solid family foundation."

Sierra Baker, family member — "My dad was in Iraq and right now he's gone. Sometimes I write letters to him. And my mom bought a cat to keep my brother and me company. We named it Liberty."

Sgt. Craig Dalen, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment — "We just take it day by day. Being able to call and use e-mail to keep in touch with my wife and kids helps a lot when I'm gone."

Leatisha Fletcher, family member — "I feel sad that my dad is leaving. It's hard on my family not knowing when he's coming back. I write to him when he is gone."

Tricommunity honors veterans

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The tricommunity gathered Nov. 11 to honor the nation's veterans in ceremonies in Columbus and at Fort Benning.

Columbus Mayor Bob Poydasheff led the ceremony at historic Linwood Cemetery at the grave of Gen. Henry Benning.

Poydasheff thanked Fort Benning's commander, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, for starting the tradition in the tricommunity.

"(Soldiers) come off post to demonstrate love, honor and respect not only for the city, but for the Soldier Benning — a great statesman who lived in contentious times," Poydasheff said.

Having read Benning's history, the mayor is convinced Gen. Benning would be proud of the nation for taking a course to allow democracy to flourish throughout the world.

Freakley said the ceremony at Linwood more than honored Gen. Benning — it honored all veterans, beginning with those from Columbus.

"Our city has been giving up its sons and daughters for years," Freakley said. "When you walk among the headstones, they tell a story of service to the nation in almost every war.

"Today is about veterans, not about causes," he said. "And we want to honor our namesake. This was a man with no military training, who exemplified not only service in uniform, but a lifelong dedication of service to others."

Freakley and Poydasheff placed a wreath at Benning's grave, and then headed to post for the ceremony in Marshall Auditorium.

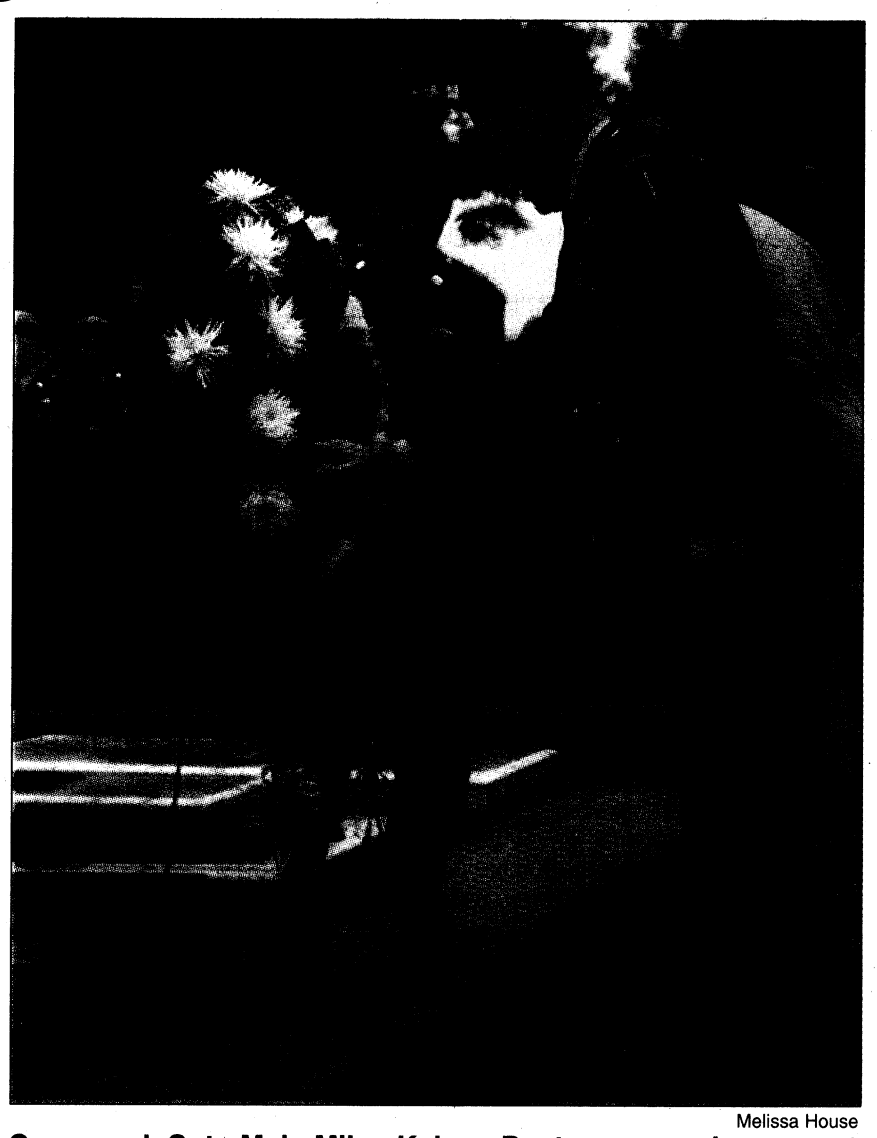
Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin opened the ceremony at 11 a.m., quoting Gen. Omar Bradley. Bradley once said America was running on the "momentum of a godly ancestry, and when that momentum runs down, God help America."

Cocklin prayed that the Soldiers of today would have "a sincere level of commitment to ever keep the torch we have been handed lit brightly."

Freakley welcomed visitors from the tricommunity who came to pause and reflect on Veterans Day with the Soldiers at Fort Benning.

Veterans Day was originally called Armistice Day — with celebration held at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month — and served as a day to honor those who fought in "the war to end all wars."

"Only the dead have seen the end of war," Freakley said. "And today we are a nation at war, fighting for our very survival and for our liberties."



All those great things, he said, are at risk today as Soldiers fight an evil foe with no face and no country.

"The fifty-five million people who have been liberated, have been given God's greatest gifts — freedom and liberty," he said. "And, our veterans serving today will fight this fight."

Freakley thanked the community for supporting Fort Benning's Soldiers, because Soldiers have not always known community support. Those who fought in Korea returned to a country that appeared indifferent, he said, and after Vietnam, the Soldiers were scorned.

"Scorn and indifference have no place in our heroes' homecoming," he said. "And you are there to greet them. When they are deployed, you support them, pray for them and hold their families hands."

Freakley said the veterans — any Soldier who served honorably — also include Soldiers currently in uniform. The more than 100,000 Reserve and National Guard Soldiers patrolling the streets of Iraq or stabilizing the Balkans, he said, are "citizen Soldiers who serve our country well."

Melissa House

Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, Post command sergeant major, left, and commanding general Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley place a wreath at the grave of Gen. Henry Benning Nov. 11. Benning is buried at the historic Linwood Cemetery in Columbus.

In a separate ceremony on Sand Hill, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment Soldiers took a break from basic training to honor and pay respect to all veterans past, present and future.

Lt. Col. Frank Burns, battalion commander, and battalion Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kauffman presided over the event.

Highlights of the ceremony included the performances of Christine Spaulding, who sang the national anthem, and Jennifer Robinson, who performed Taps on a bugle while her friend played the trumpet. Both girls are the daughters of battalion cadre members.

E Company was the honor company for the ceremony. Most of its Soldiers had never participated in a Veterans Day ceremony before.

3rd Brigade remembers veterans

Spc. Natalie Loucks
3rd Brigade Combat Team

Threatening rain clouds cast shadows over the Infantry Museum Veterans Day as members of the Society of the 3rd Infantry Division, liaison officers of foreign countries, 3rd Brigade Soldiers, friends and family gathered.

This year's ceremony was to give special recognition to veterans of the Korean War.

"Our motto is not fancy — just tough," said Col. Steven Salazar, commander of the 3rd Brigade, the first of two key speakers of the day.

In his speech, Salazar addressed the current situation in Iraq.

"At every turn, American Soldiers demonstrate their firm resolve, just as the 3rd ID has done for nearly a century," he said.

The Soldiers of the 3rd Inf. Div. have trained hard and are prepared for this upcoming deployment, Salazar said, giving assurance to the retired Dog-Face Soldiers.

Salazar also spoke of the history of the 3rd Inf. Div. bringing to light the division's wartime involvement.

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Gordon Saint, former 3rd Inf. Div. Soldier who served in Korea, stood in front of the audience as the second speaker of the morning.

"Twice in my life I have felt helpless," Saint said. "Once was last April, when my wife was given two weeks to live. The other," he said "when I see this patch going where you're going, and I'm too old to go help you."

When both speakers were finished, a wreath was laid at the base of the 3rd Inf. Div. memorial and dog tags were placed on the fallen Soldier display.

Former Infantry chief shares hard lessons

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

A man known for speaking his mind and telling hard truths — units not combat ready, units not manned or funded for training — spoke to future combat leaders Nov. 5 in Marshall Auditorium.

Retired Gen. Jay Hendrix, former commanding general of the U.S. Army Infantry Center, 3rd Infantry Division, 5th Corps, and Forces Command, talked about battlefield leadership.

He shared lessons he learned the hard way — never wait, always dig in, and call in fire support, because if an Infantry unit is not attacking, it's defending.

He said combat leaders must:

• Maintain focus, individually and as a unit. When the unit is least prepared, the enemy will strike. Focus is key.

• Train and maintain — every piece of equipment must be 100 percent ready all the time. Clean weapons at every stop.

There is time to train in a combat environment, to prepare for engagement, to train on combat skills, Hendrix said.

• Set core standards — in combat standards can erode. It's important that the basics are fortified, he said. Professionalism matters.

An example he used was a Soldier who carried 87 rounds of high explosive rounds in his ruck, versus the mandatory 40. Leaders need to enforce the standards.

• Build teamwork — a team is better than the sum of parts. In combat, using subordinate leaders grows Soldiers into more capable leaders who will accomplish the mission and save lives.

• Build confidence, trust and respect.

"The last thing a Soldier wants is a leader who comes down to his level," Hendrix said. "Soldiers want leaders they trust, who will do the right thing ... treat them with respect."

• Share hardships and danger, he said, but don't be reckless — one of the worst things to happen to a combat company is to lose their leader; yet leaders can't follow the rules all the time — sometimes the commander can't be a platoon back all of the time.

• Use every Soldier regardless of rank.

"It's an effectiveness issue," Hendrix said. "All Soldiers are an asset, but some you need to tell to shut up. The goal is to succeed and live."

• Don't dehumanize the enemy. If Soldiers start doing that, war crimes will occur. It's not OK to brutalize captives.

• Have a positive attitude, a leader's most effective tool. People respond better to a positive attitude than a negative one.

Hendrix also told the audience what Soldiers want from leaders in combat:

• Good judgment. Soldiers are committed to the mission but they want to live through it, he said.

• Competence — leaders who know how to fight.

• Leaders with good nerves, cool under fire, who won't fall apart in combat.

• Moral courage — a leader who'll speak on their behalf. But it's important to know the difference between moral courage and stupidity.

• Fair treatment. "If 1st Squad is up front every time, pretty soon there won't be a 1st Squad," he said.

• Genuine respect for Soldiers.

• Selfless commitment. "Selflessness in combat is evident," Hendrix said. "Do you expose yourself or do you take cover?"

• Personal courage. Soldiers will recognize it — it's overcoming fear in the presence of danger, quickly, he said.

• Honesty. An organization like the Army can't be run without integrity.

"War brings out the best and worst in people," Hendrix said. "Combat leaders need to watch their own people for weaknesses ... they need to keep buddies safe and keep the perimeter firm."

No One Special strikes chord

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

"For me it's all about what I call the 'triple H factor'," said J.R. Browning, lead guitarist for the punk rock band No One Special. "When I am up there playing for a crowd, everything I do comes from my head, through my heart and out my hands."

The fourth "H" factor is home — something Browning and three other 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, Soldiers who play in the band with him will sorely miss when 3rd Brigade deploys in the coming months.

Browning and his band aren't looking forward to a year without their instruments.

"We are going to do our best to stay together and not miss out on opportunities that have come our way lately."

Though the fledgling band has been together only a year, he said, it has made its presence known in Columbus and larger markets nearby.

Clubs in Atlanta, like The Masquerade, are offering gigs to the up-and-coming group. And a Pennsylvania label is considering a contract.

The band, which likens itself to big names like Finch, Pennywise and Story of the Year, has come a long way in a short time. Singer Scott Stasny met Browning on a previous deployment in Iraq and, when they came home, teamed up with fellow unit members Seth Dix, a bassist with musical inclinations going back to his elementary school days, and guitarist John McBride, who has been playing about four years, and a drummer from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment.

After the drummer exited stage left about six months ago, No One Special was left hanging without a reliable, talented anchor in the beats section.

The group soon found the right match in drummer Wes Barron, who was introduced to the band through his girlfriend Michelle Little, who works in one of the barber shops on post.

Since then, it has been tough balancing band practice at the Kelley Hill recreation center or Barron's house with the demands of an intense train up for the pending deployment to Iraq.

Working around a military schedule is hard, Browning said. The band practices two times a week.

"It would be a lot easier if my neighbors didn't call the cops all the time," Barron said.

Even as the preparations for deployment intensify, the band's successes have grown.

After an impressive showing at a local Battle of the Bands final competition Nov. 11, No One Special earned themselves a paid second appearance at the 4th Quarter Bar. And the interest from the Pennsylvania label packs a lot of punch, considering Tooth and Nail is one of the nation's largest punk record labels.

While the band's mouth is definitely watering for the sweet success that would come with a contract and tour, all the players agreed the music, not the money, is what it is really all about.

Guitarist for No One Special, John McBride, jams at the Battle of the Bands Nov. 11 at the 4th Quarter Bar. No One Special will perform there Dec. 2.

"It's about all those people I've never met going crazy over us tonight," McBride said after the Nov. 11 show.

"Playing live on stage — you get lost in it."

"It's truly amazing the five of us can get together and write songs that people will really listen to," Browning said. "It's the greatest feeling in the world to have that kind of power."

No One Special is available for booking at commercial locations or private parties.

The annual Native American Heritage celebration drew nearly 200 people to Marshall Auditorium Tuesday.

Event: Highlights Native Americans

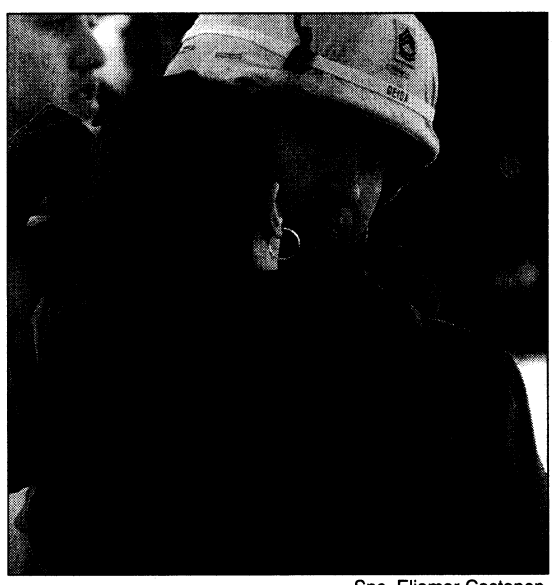
Cornwell said Native American Soldiers have served in the Army for more than 200 years and continue to support the military.

"In the French and Indian War, the Chickasaw people fought against the French. Some people say that their participation is why we're speaking English today," Cornwell said. He thanked Harjo and presented him a Follow Me statuette.

Faith Middle School's Choral Ensemble, directed by Lorri Blanchard, sang the national anthem.



"I think this is a good opportunity to learn about Native Americans and I'm honored to sing the National Anthem," seventh-grader Tiara Wallace said.

"I am excited to learn about their heritage," sixth-grader Qwaonna Pendleton said.

Chaplain's assistant Sgt. Jason Sewell enjoyed the program and the food tasting.

"The flute was beautiful. Tranquility came to mind and made me feel good and calm," he said. "The event was wonderful."

will deploy within the next few days. The equipment the Soldiers will need while deployed was shipped a month ago, so it will be in theater once the Soldiers arrive.

"The Soldier's reaction to this deployment is interesting, because this is what a lot of them came in the Army to do," Higginbotham said.

"Some of them have been a little apprehensive, but it's only because they're new to the unit and have never deployed. Some of these Soldiers are excited to go back. But they all know the importance of the job."

Higginbotham said the hardest part of every deployment is being apart from families.

"The first thing the Soldiers worry about is disconnecting from their families, especially the Soldiers who are new to the unit and have families with young children. We have a superb family readiness group so the Soldiers can now break away knowing their families are taken care of."

Spc. Paul Regan, with the 233rd HET, said he is confident of his second deployment because of his NCOs.

"Our NCOs have made sure that we're all squared away," Regan said. "It's easier because now I know what to expect."

Death: Soldier to be missed by all

Freedom, he was assigned as a command group driver and guidon bearer for the battalion.

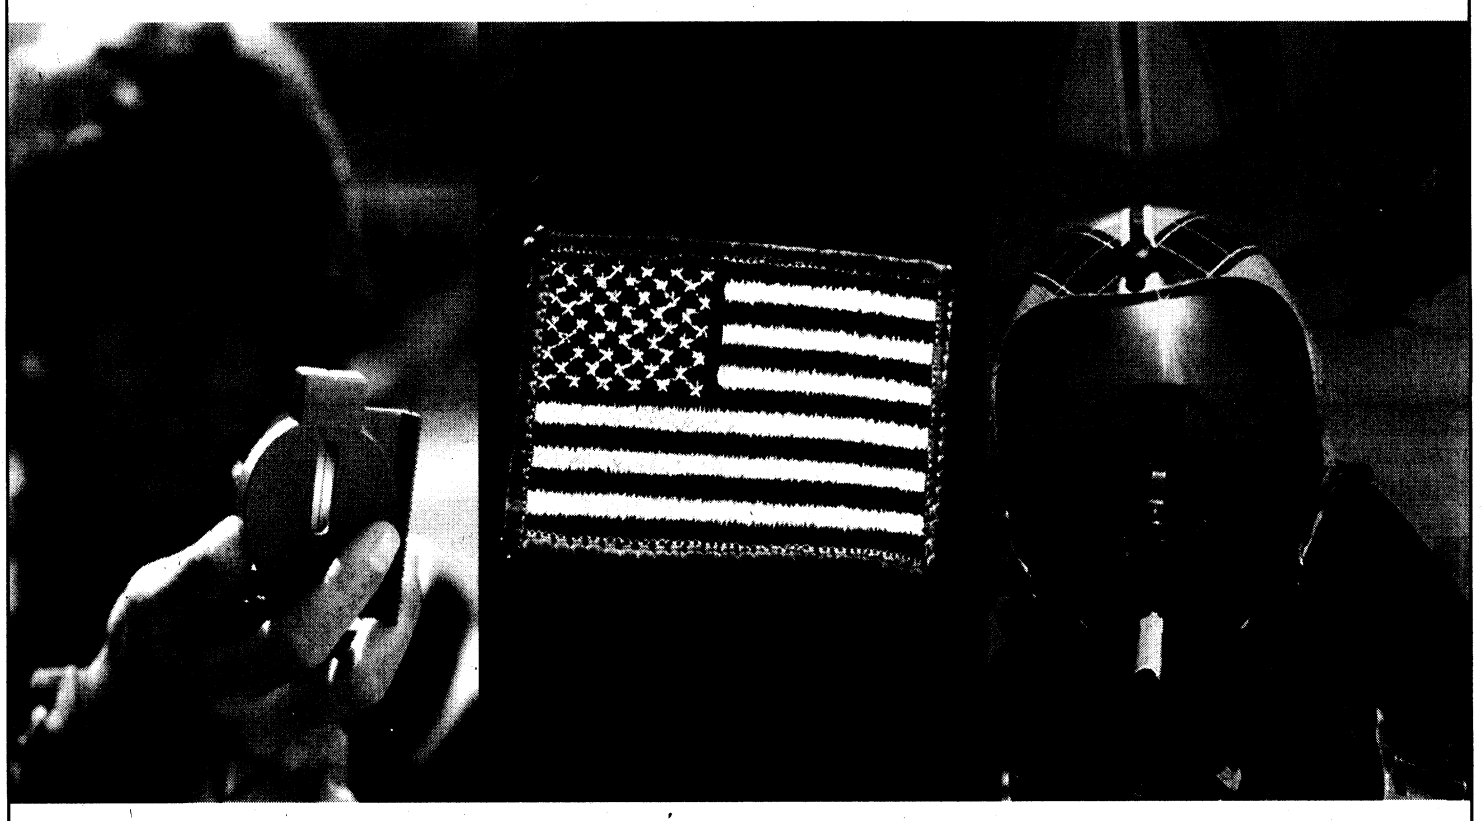
"He was the best Soldier I've ever had," said Sgt. Scott Anderson, Howard's first-line supervisor. "I never had to worry that something wouldn't get done with him."

Howard was well-liked in the unit and known for his perpetual smile, Anderson said.

"He had this roaring loud laugh," he said. "Everybody loved him. I don't think there is a single person in the battalion who didn't like him. He will be missed."

While deployed during OIF, he met Sgt. Christopher Williams and the two quickly became riding buddies and best friends.

"(Howard) was the type of person who would help out anybody if he could and never expect anything back," Williams said.



"He was a silly comic who no one could hate. I'll always remember him calling me Sunday morning and saying 'Hey, you riding today?'"

During the five years Howard served in the Army, he earned numerous awards and ribbons that include two Army Commendation Medals, three Army Achievement Medals, the Good Conduct Medal, the National Defense Service Medal, the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal, the Kosovo Campaign Medal, the Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary Medal, the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Ribbon and the NATO Service Medal.

A memorial service is scheduled at 10 a.m. today in the Kelley Hill Chapel.

Gunsmith Sgt. Tom Grieve replaces an M-16 A2 on the cart of 30 he is cleaning and gauging.

Building Olympic quality rifles, cutting new trigger locks and barrels out of rough chunks of metal and improving the accuracy of state-of-the-art competition weapons are all in a day's work for the Soldiers working in the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's firearms shop. In small arms and artillery repair, MOS 45B or 45K, a Soldier learns to perform direct and general support maintenance on small arms and other infantry weapons and towed artillery.

But the Soldiers in the firearms shop are highly educated craftsmen who do much more than general support maintenance, said Paula J. Randall Pagán, Public Affairs officer for AMU. They service and alter 50 makes and models of pistols, rifles and automatic weapons, and every weapon is field tested for accuracy and safety.

The 45B and 45K Soldiers in the shop can modify or repair M-4s, M-16s, designated marksman and match rifles, among others. The shop's two missions are modifying weapons for competition, and building weapons for combat.

To modify them for competition, the gunsmiths make the guns lighter and easier to handle, improve the accuracy of firing and add special features so both competitors and their weapons are in peak condition for matches.

The lessons learned from adaptations on competition guns are used to improve combat weapons. The Soldiers from the 3rd Infantry Division will take just under 250 specially built weapons from the marksmanship shop with them when they deploy.

More than half of the Soldiers in AMU's shop have a degree in gunsmithing. Graduates from good gunsmithing programs can be hired directly out of college for the express purpose of working in the shop.

The AMU recruited Sgt. Tom Grieve two years ago, after he served eight years as a gunsmith in the Marine Corps.

Grieve completed AIT at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., and trained for a year with the Precision Weapons Section at Quantico, Va., before joining the Army in February 2003.

He said the long hours can be taxing, but he enjoys his job.

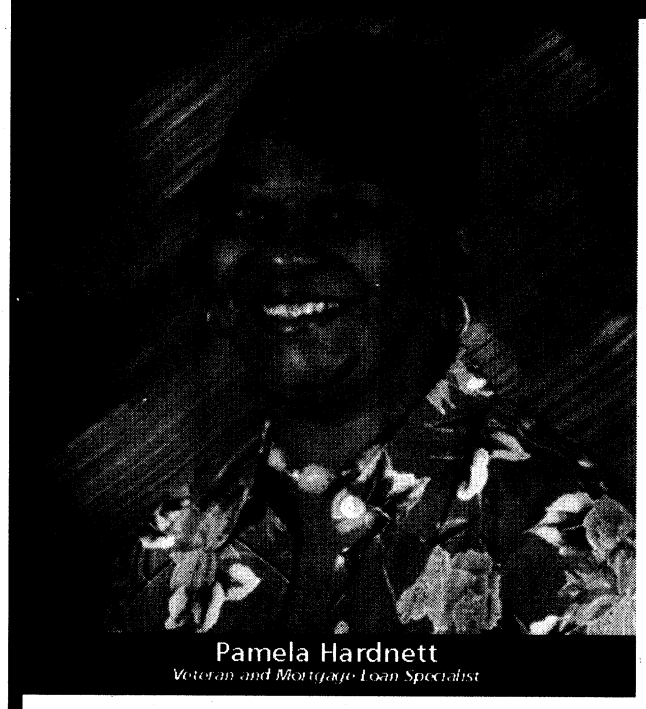
"Its satisfying to work with your hands. It's great to take a rifle, build it, and then see someone win a championship with it," Grieve said.

After 10 years as a gunsmith, Grieve said he still learns something new every day.

"You have to be a person who pays attention to detail. If you lose your focus and screw up, you could kill someone," Grieve said.

Sgt. 1st Class Charles Gartland graduated with a gunsmith degree from the Colorado School of Trades, and was the only gunsmith to accompany the AMU team to the Olympics in Athens.

"It made me pretty proud to be picked to go with the team. Working (on the weapons) pays off when you get someone who wins a medal," Gartland said.



"For the Olympics, I brought a big toolbox with everything under the sun, from hand tools to grinders to drills. Most of the work was done in advance. I was just waiting around for something to break. Everything was checked by the officials, so mostly I just made small trigger adjustments," Gartland said.

During his 13 years at AMU, Gartland has been the official gunsmith for three Conseil International du Sport Military Shooting Championships and for the Pan-American Games in Winnipeg, Canada.

"It's hard to find someone who can do this job on the level we need to be able to. There's a lot to learn, so experience is valuable when coming into this job," Gartland said.

Initial entry training Soldiers of B Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, conducted their first training with grenades at Malone Range 1 Nov. 16.

The troops only had one day to conduct a wide range of training. Through the course of the day, they learned three different throwing positions and five different types of grenades. They also qualified throwing simulation grenades at different ranges with varying levels of accuracy and employed two live hand grenades each.

Range cadre of the 29th Infantry Regiment conducted a mass briefing for the company, going over the basics of different throwing styles and types of grenades the Soldiers would be tested on before the unit conducted drills to reinforce the training.

"We don't expect you to give us the specific name or use nomenclature when you test on identification," said a range cadre member to the company. "Just be able to tell us what each of these grenades are and what they do."

A Soldier pulls the pin on a simulation grenade.

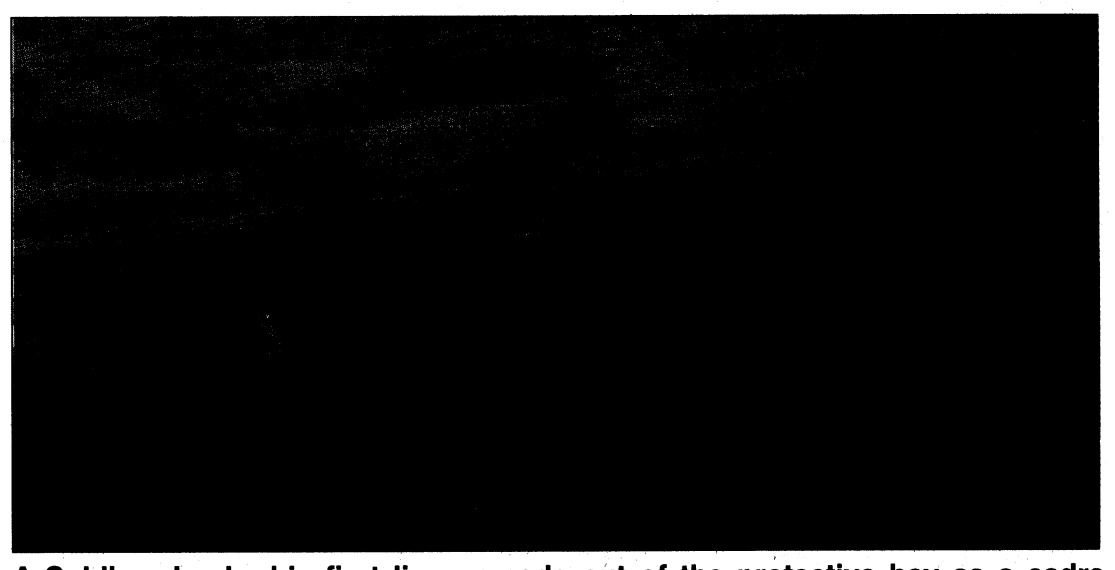
The five types of grenades the troops trained on were the M-67 fragmentation grenade, the M-18 colored smoke grenade, the AN-M8 white smoke grenade, the AN-M14 TH3 incendiary grenade and the AB M52A2 CS grenade.

The troops practiced the prone standing, prone kneeling and alternate prone throwing stances using simulation grenades.

After training runs on the throwing stances and live fire procedures, the unit moved to the live bay and each Soldier attempted to qualify by successfully employing two fragmentation grenades.

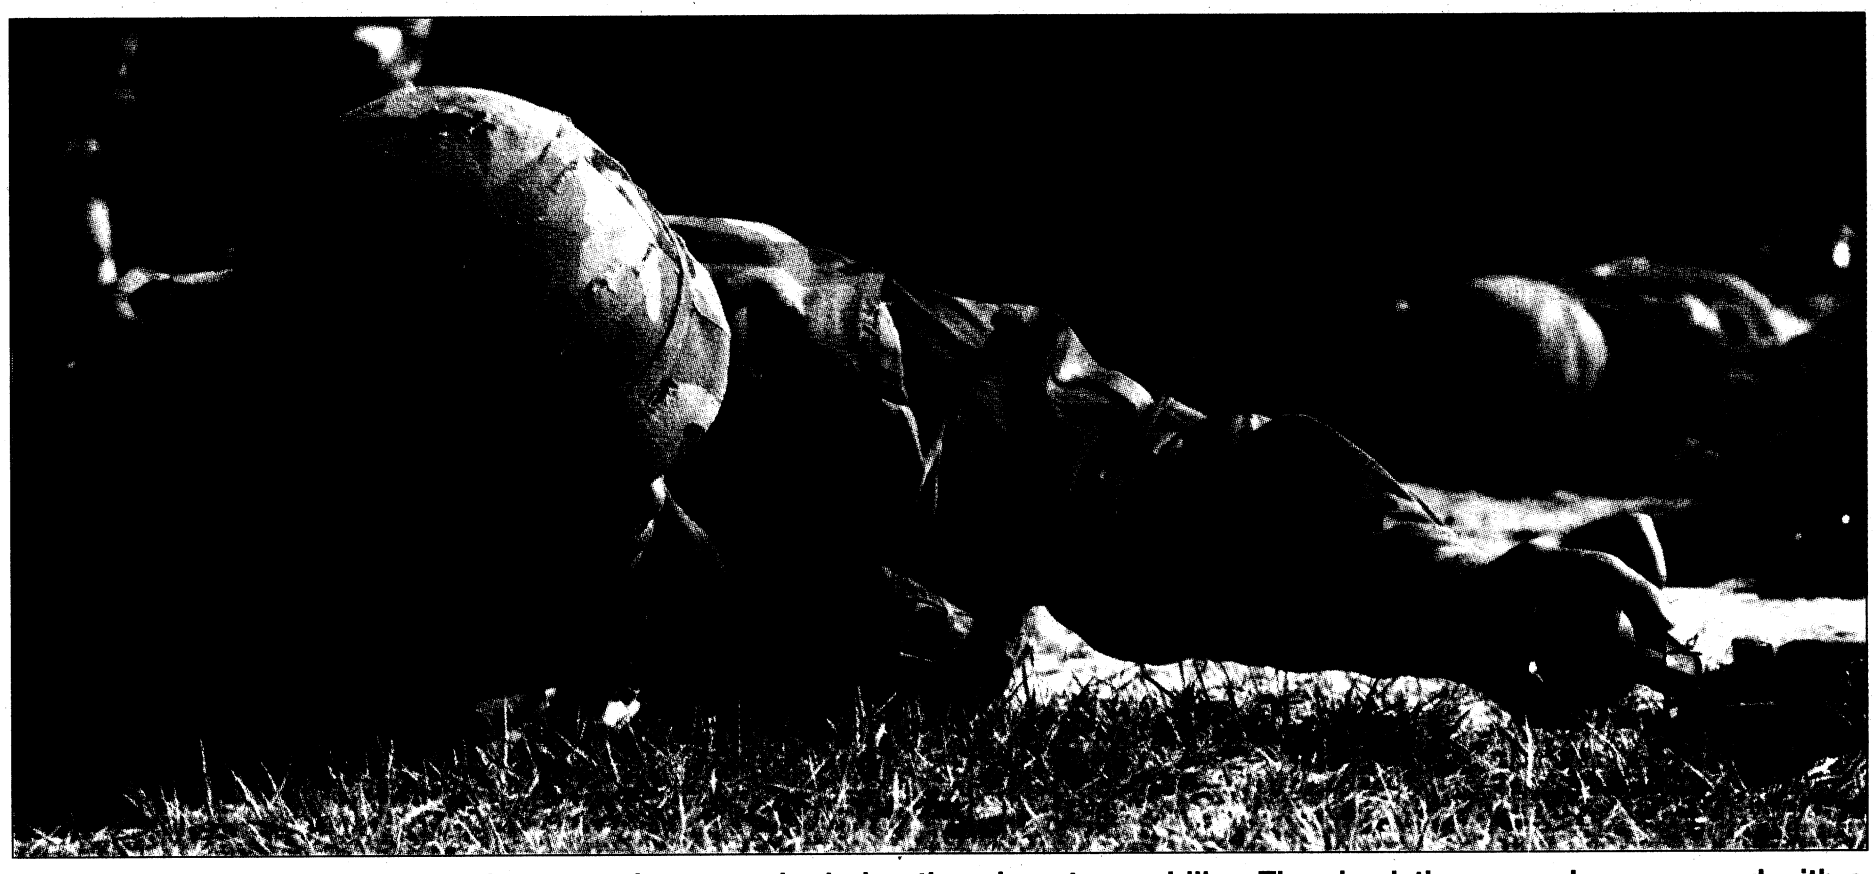
"This isn't something you get the chance to do as a civilian," said Pvt. Justin Bretz.

"I'm excited. It's making a pretty big thud in my chest."



After qualifying on the live range, the Soldiers were allowed to watch one grenade explode through protective windows before moving off the range to continue qualifying at other stations.

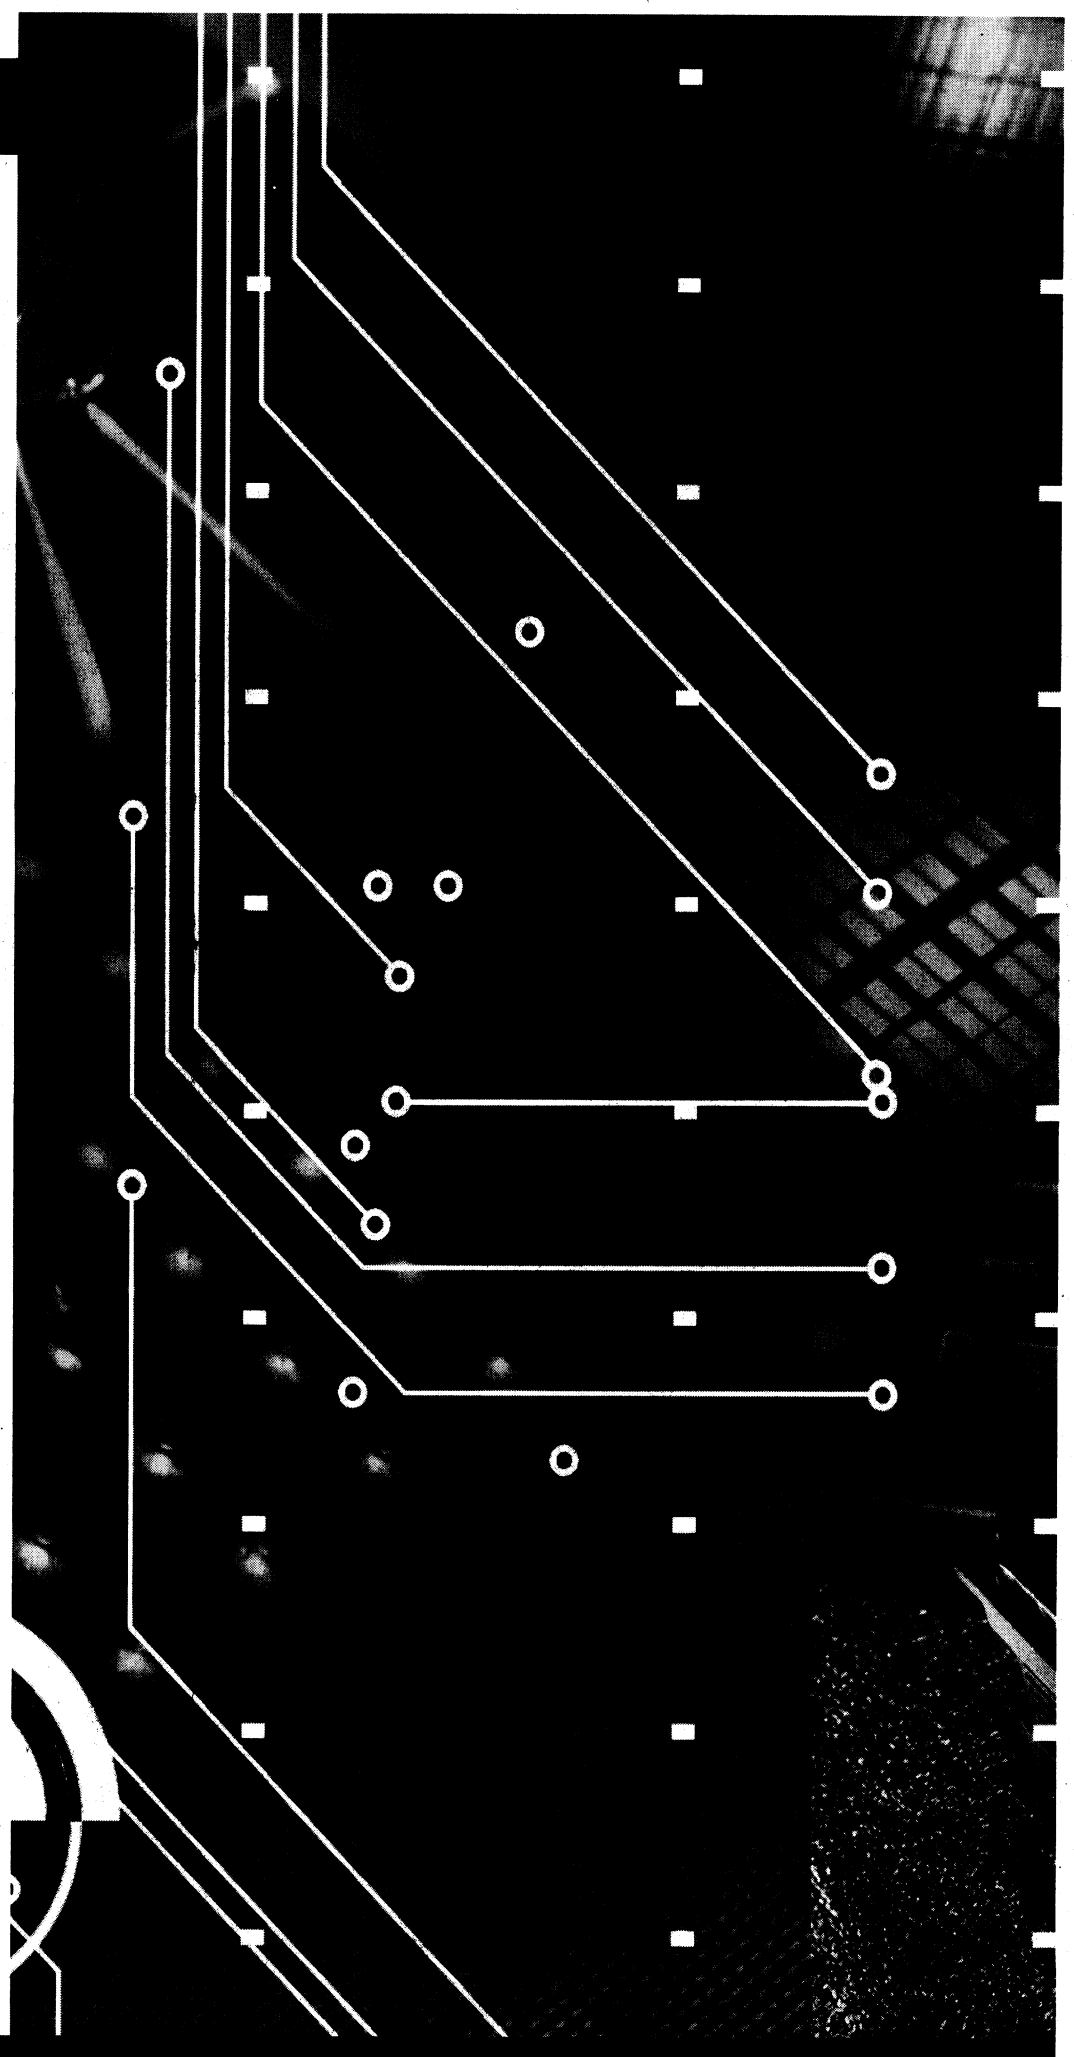
"That was pretty cool," Bretz said, after throwing his live grenades.



"The concussion was a lot harder and the sound a lot louder than I thought it would be. The simulated rounds were anything but similar."

An incendiary grenade finishes up its destruction of an ammunition can during a familiarization demonstration for the basic trainees.

A Soldier chucks his first live grenade out of the protective bay as a cadre member signals the tower that a round is going downrange.



A Soldier picks up a simulation fragmentation grenade during throwing stance drills. The simulation grenades are armed with a training fuse that will produce a small bang and spread small shrapnel capable of taking a finger off and causing burns without risking a fatality. The Soldiers later qualified with two live grenades.

Shop to replace, repair barracks furniture

Warehouse, repair shop now open

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Barracks rooms will be having a new look, a less dilapidated look, thanks to the Furniture and Repair Exchange Activity.

The new warehouse and repair shop is designed to replace or repair furniture not up to the new military standards, said Craig Taylor, acting public works director.

The standards for trainees include metal beds, metal wardrobes, trunk lockers, three-drawer chests with padlock hasp, mattresses and vinyl bed connectors. Permanent party standard issue includes a single bed, wood foot and head boards for a single captain's bed with drawers, three-drawer chests, wood desks, bookcases, desks, chairs, wooden wardrobes, mattresses, refrigerators and microwaves: The dayroom issues include lamps, tables, sofas and lounge chairs

However, Taylor is quick to say this is not an office furniture business.

"A unit can schedule an appointment to turn in any broken or damaged furniture for a direct exchange," said Roy Bannerman, manager of the Furniture and Repair Exchange Activity.

"If we can repair it, we will and then return it to inventory."

The repair shop will work on tables, chairs, foot lockers, beds, mattresses, and pretty much anything metal or wood, Bannerman said.

"If a footlocker is broken, or a shelf or a hinge — instead of hauling it down, they can call us and we can schedule to fix it on site," Bannerman said.

Taylor said the goal is to improve furniture management and accounting of furniture, which in the end should save Fort Benning money. In an average year, Ken Strumpler, Director of Logistics for Fort Benning, said they plan on seeing about 10 to 15 percent replacement rate on the furniture.

"Mostly, mattresses need to be repaired or replaced," Taylor said. "There are hundreds out there that we know of. If a soldier doesn't sleep well, he doesn't train well."

Other items that will need to be routinely replaced are components, like drawers and hinges.

With 25,000 barracks spaces, which include Kelley Hill, Sand Hill, Main Post, Harmony Church and Dahlonega Ranger Camps, there is a demand for the service the new facility offers.

"We want to make the process as customer service friendly as possible," said Bannerman.

> "I'd encourage all the S-4's to come in and visit me and let me show them what I have to offer. I'd gladly give them a walking tour and discuss the process (to turn in furniture) and answer all their questions."
> Craig Taylor
> Acting director of public works

Between the repair shop and the warehouse there are 10 employees working in 32,000 square feet of space. Bannerman also said he has about 1,500 items in stock, and will replenish them as needed.

"I'd encourage all the S-4's to come in and visit me and let me show them what I have to offer," Bannerman said. "I'd gladly give them a walking tour and discuss the process (to turn in furniture) and answer all their questions."

Taylor said he has already talked with many of the supply NCOs to get their input on how to better provide for the soldiers and run the new facility.

"We want to provide a better quality of life with a net decrease in cost over time," Strumpler said.

The Furniture and Repair Exchange Activity is located in Buildings 259 and 260, off Upton and Edwards streets. The hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, closed holidays.
To schedule an appointment call 545-6636 or 6643.

Gretchen Wilson

Wilson, now 'big' and rich, stays true to red-neck roots

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"Now honey, I'm a Christian, but if you don't knock it off, I'ma gonna kick your pretty little butt ..."

— Homewrecker

If you've had it up to here already with untangling those confounded Christmas lights, take a break tonight and see Gretchen Wilson perform at the Columbus Civic Center. If you never bothered to take them down last year, you probably already have tickets. Just a hunch.

Wilson, a 30-year-old single mom from Pocahontas, Ill., population 727, is the granddaughter of a World War II veteran, and Soldiers hold a special place in her heart.

"In this industry, talking war and politics can come back at you," she said Wednesday, via telephone, during a tour break at a Walmart somewhere in Texas.

"But I believe, and I think everybody I know in the industry believes, we're so fortunate to have young men and women so willing to put their lives on the line to keep us safe and free."

Wilson is best known for her in-your-face Redneck Woman, the anthem of barefoot, beer-guzzling broads nationwide. She's country music's female answer to Toby Keith.

She's got attitude, rooted in her trailer park past, and talent, honed at Big O's, where she started tending bar and singing at 15. It's hard to say whether the attitude or talent landed her at the top of the Billboard charts, but the combination is obviously working well for her. Here for The Party, her debut album, sold 100,000 more copies in its first week than any other country debut.

American Country Countdown calls her, "earthy, raucous, passionate ...," which is just another way to say "red-neck." It's all the same in her book.

She chews tobacco and admits it, for Pete's sake. She's over-the-top redneck and proud.

But don't take my word for it. Tonight, Wilson's taking her attitude center stage at 8 p.m. She'll join her friends Big&Rich, of Save a Horse, Ride a Cowboy fame.

All three are members of the Muzik Mafia, a smattering of Nashville musicians who fancy themselves kin to the old school outlaws of country music (think Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings.)

Theirs is a love-it-or-leave-it attitude, so plan on loving it or save yourself the $28.50.

For more information, call the Civic Center at 653-4472.

Jersey town donates to Kelley Hill troops

Army mom gathers goods to show support

Bridgett Siter

Summit, N.J., is a tiny town, smaller than Fort Benning. It's 30 miles from the site of the World Trade Center. Summit residents saw smoke that day.

One saw fire.

Michael Truhe planned to join the Army right after high school, but his mother coaxed him into college. After 9-11, there was no stopping him.

"Something in him shifted that day," said Dr. Christine Truhe, a business psychologist who struggled to deal with the business of war.

Michael, 23, joined the 3rd Brigade's Troops Battalion as an MP six months ago. In the wake of the Abu Ghraib scandal, his mother worried about the morale and morals of her son and the Soldiers he serves with, and she revealed her misgivings in a "generic" e-mail she sent to Fort Benning.

In essence, she asked, how do you train them to do the right thing in the midst of evil and chaos?

Christine received a response from Capt. Aimee Bateman, who will be the rear detachment commander when the 3rd Brigade returns to Iraq in January. Bateman assured Christine that "U.S. Soldiers are the most professional Soldiers in the world. They live by the Army values."

The two began to correspond fairly regularly, and when Christine went searching for a way to channel a worried mother's energies, she decided to "adopt" her son's unit.

She enlisted the help of her neighbors and launched Summit Supports Our Troops, a drive to collect sundry items for the troops here and abroad.

Monday, she visited Kelley Hill with another Summit mother, Dorothy Burgur, whose son is also serving with the Troops Battalion. The two delivered 1,000 pounds of snacks and toiletries to be distributed when the Soldiers deploy.

Three generations, two services, five wars

Three veterans share lessons of war with local school children

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"What kind of ship do you drive?" the little boy asked the Soldier.

"I call it a tank," he replied.

Twinnette Pope's fifth-graders at Mulberry Creek Elementary School near Pine Mountain, Ga., tried hard to digest the differences between the Army and the Navy, officer and enlisted, World War II and Iraq.

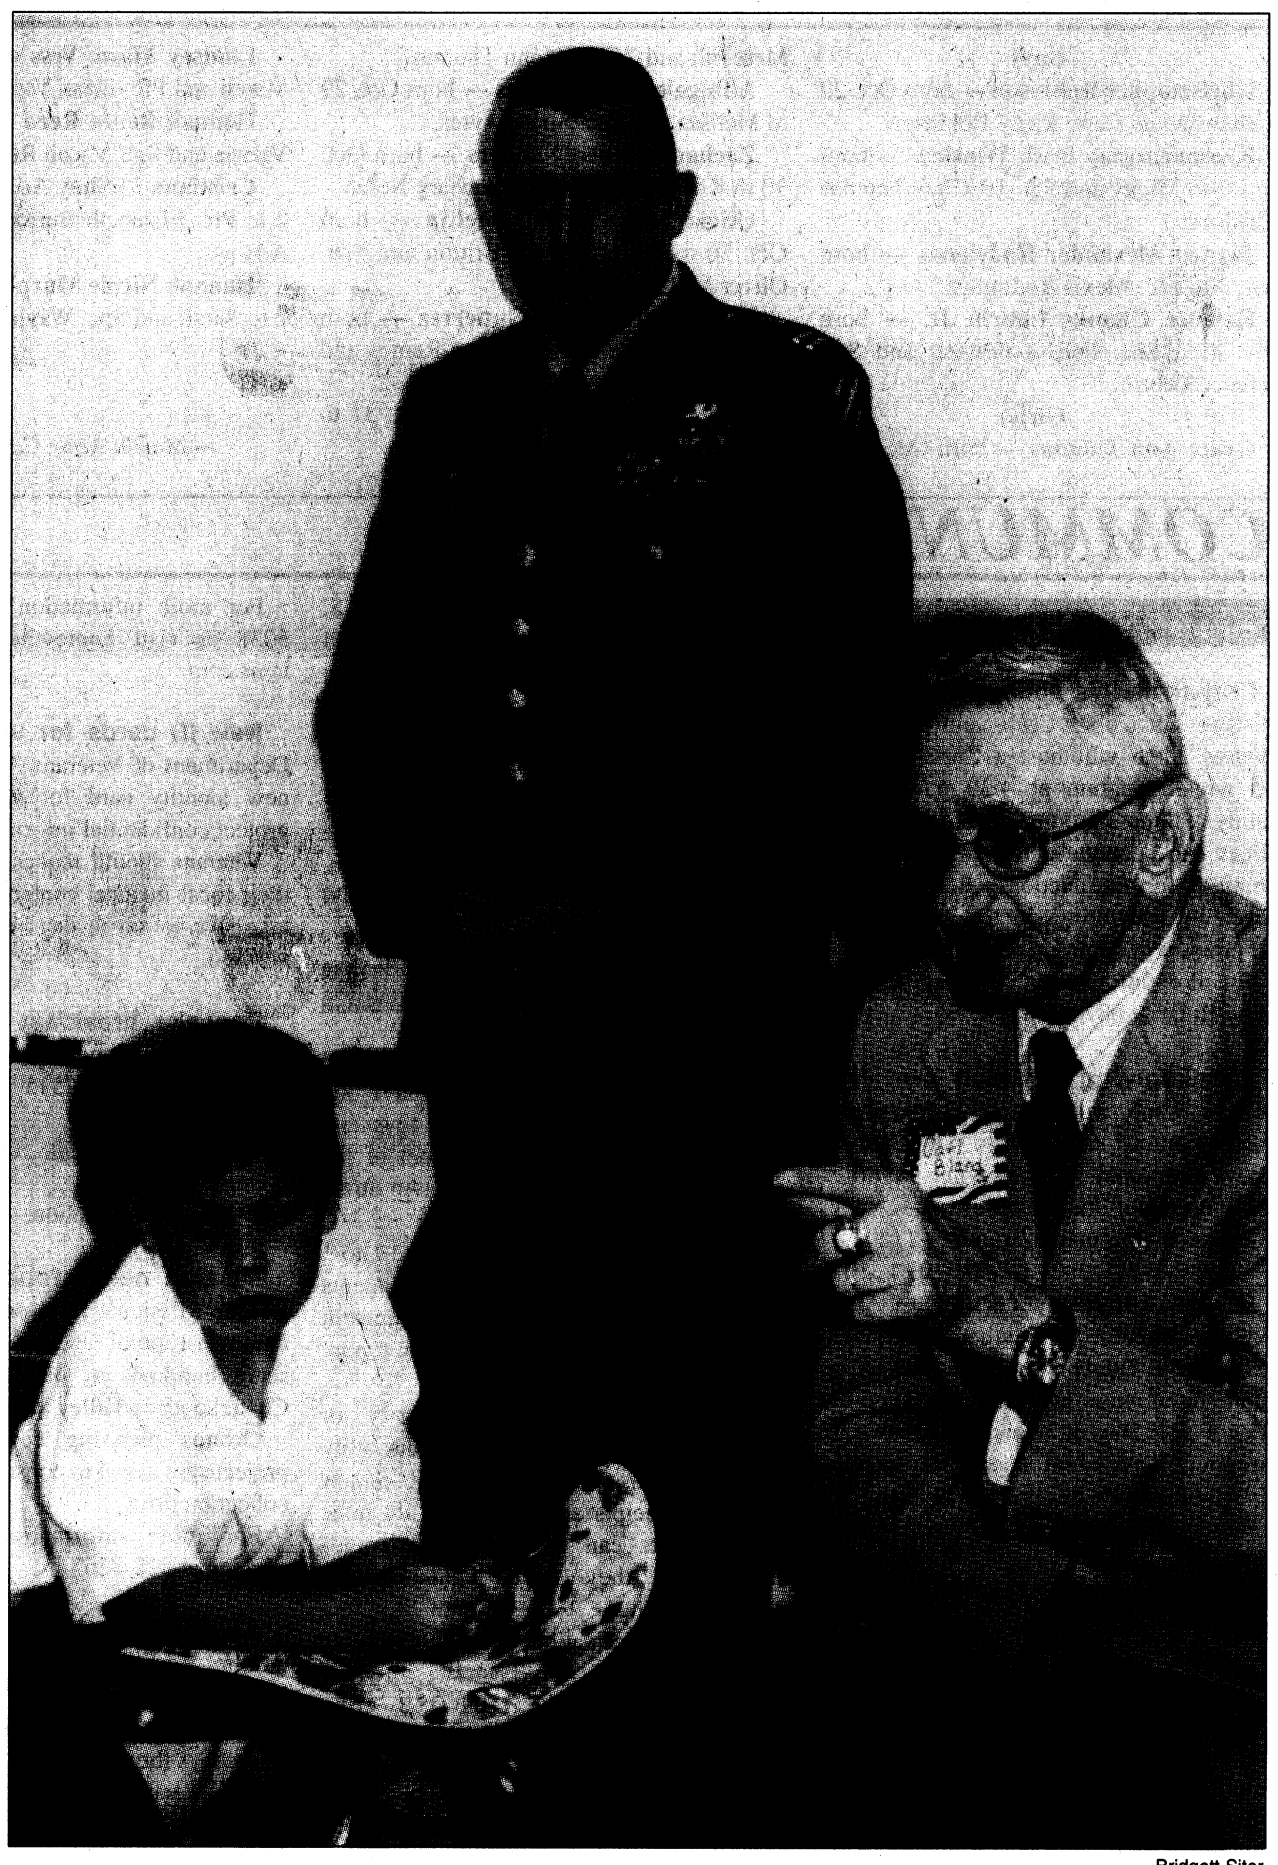
Carl Bland III — Trey to his friends — introduced his father, his grandfather and a family friend, Capt. Roy Bolar, to his classmates during the school's annual Veterans Day ceremony Nov. 11.

Bolar, the commander of D Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, served in Desert Storm and Operation Iraqi Freedom. He described conditions in the desert and recruited pen pals for his Soldiers, who'll return to Iraq early next year. And he regaled them with bathroom humor — he once used Saddam Hussein's bathroom and has pictures to prove it, a detail that drew snickers and a "cool" or two.

A tough act to follow, but Carl Bland Sr., a three-war veteran, was equal to the task. During combat in Korea, he went weeks and weeks without a shower.

"But I really didn't mind so much, because everybody stunk," he said. The students loooved that one.

Which war was the worst, the students asked.



"During World War II, I had a place to sleep," said the senior Bland, a retired Soldier who served in the Navy aboard a minesweeper during that war.

"In Vietnam, you didn't know who you could trust, and Korea — I've never been so cold in my life. I guess there's no such thing as a good war. They were all bad."

The students asked the veterans to name their heroes.

"My Soldiers," Bolar replied.

"You are my heroes," said the senior Bland, who served first in the Navy aboard a minesweeper during World War II, and later in the Army. "The young people I see are my heroes, because you will lead us into the future."

Veteran opens farm to deploying Soldiers

Box Spring man hosts barbecue

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Russell Merritt was a man on a mission when he drove to Fort Benning and walked through the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment company areas.

At each company, he issued the same invitation — bring your Soldiers and their families out to my farm. Merritt didn't have any takers until his flyer landed in B Company.

"I said, 'Wow, are you serious,'" said 1st Sgt. John Gaston, B Co. first sergeant, "and he told me he just wanted to do something for the Soldiers before they left."

Merritt's 180 acre farm backs up to the northeast corner of post in Box Springs, Ga., with a stocked pond just waiting to be fished.

So Gaston told Merritt he'd talk to the Soldiers and let him know how many would be going. That's when Merritt told him he'd like to know the numbers so he'd have enough food ready.

More than 70 B Co. Soldiers and their families went to Merritt's farm Nov. 6.

"It was awesome," Gaston said. "We had pig barbecue, beans, chips and sodas. It was a great opportunity for the company to get together and have a good time."

There was a method to Merritt's madness in inviting armor Soldiers to the farm.

AAFES offers way to send gifts to service members overseas

Programs allow presents without security concerns

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — With the holidays quickly approaching, many Americans are searching for ways to reach out to troops overseas. The Department of Defense announced, due to security concerns and transportation constraints, it will no longer accepts items mailed to 'Any Service Member.'

Those wishing to send support to troops overseas have another option. The Army and Air Force Exchange Service's "Gifts from the Homefront" and "Help Our Troops Call Home" programs allow anyone to make a direct contribution towards the morale of deployed troops without compromising security or increasing the strain on the military mail system.

DoD reported that some people have tried to avoid this prohibition by sending large numbers of packages to an individual service member overseas, which, according to the DoD, clogs the mail system and causes unnecessary delays in delivery. Military APO cannot guarantee delivery by a specific date due to processing constraints.

"Gifts from the Homefront" certificates, which can be purchased by any individual, business or civic organization, allow troops to purchase items at PX and BX facilities around the world including 51 exchanges in Operations Iraqi and Enduring Freedom. The gift certificates may also be personalized with a message to troops.

Service members can purchase exactly what they need with the certificates. Reports from Iraq and Afghanistan indicate that the certificates are being used for the latest CDs and DVDs, comfort items such as snacks, beverages and phone cards.

AAFES' Commander Maj. Gen. Kathryn Frost said that "Gifts from the Homefront" and "Help our Troops Call Home" are excellent ways for all to show they care.

"I encourage every American who is concerned about the welfare of deployed troops to buy a gift certificate or a phone card," she said.

"While these troops are doing superhuman tasks in countries halfway around the world, we must remember that, after all, they too are human and the holidays can be a tough time to be away from friends and family. Something as simple as a gift certificate or phone card can deliver the much-needed 'connection home' troops crave during the holiday season."

Those wishing to send "Gifts from the Homefront" can log on to aafes.com or call (877) 770-4438.

"Help Our Troops Call Home" phone cards are also available at aafes.com or by calling (800) 527-2345.

From there, the gift certificates and phone cards may be sent to an individual service member (designated by the purchaser) or distributed to "any service member" through the USO, American Red Cross, Air Force Aid Society or Fisher House.

"Gifts from the Homefront" and "Help Our Troops Call Home" phone cards can be addressed to "any service member" or individual service members.

The gift certificates can be redeemed at any AAFES facility in the world including 51 locations in Operations Iraqi and Enduring Freedom, including 29 in Iraq, 10 in Kuwait, five in Afghanistan, one each in Pakistan, Kyrgyzstan, Uzbekistan, and four in Qatar/United Arab Emerites/Djibouti.

The phone cards can be used at any AAFES call center throughout Operations Iraqi and Enduring Freedom.

National program funds teacher certification for troops, spouses

Program can ease financial burden

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Troops and spouses throughout the military can receive funding to become teachers.

Troops to Teachers and Spouses to Teachers are national, federally funded programs designed to assist military members getting out of the service, and spouses who want to become teachers.

"This is not a certification program," said Bill Kirkland, program director for TTT in Georgia.

Troops to Teachers can help pay up to $5,000 dollars to help meet certification requirements. Spouses to Teachers will reimburse spouses up to $250 to pay for exams.

The TTT program also offers up to a $10,000 bonus if the military members choose to teach in a high needs school, where 50 percent of the students receive free or reduced lunches.

The STT program is being tested in six states, including Georgia.

Currently, it provides spouses with a limited reimbursement for exam fees, information about completing degrees, taking state exams, becoming certified and offering placement help once the spouse is certified.

The programs for troops and spouses have different criteria for enrollment and funds qualification.

Military members receive what Kirkland calls "free money," but they must be willing to teach three years in a public school in the U.S.

"We won't tell you what subject to teach, what to certify in or what age to teach," Kirkland said.

Participants in Troops to Teachers must have served a minimum of six years active duty, and if they haven't retired, must commit to a three year reserve enlistment.

They can also have 10 years as a drilling reservist or have been medically separated after January 2002.

Participants must also have a four year degree from an accredited university or one year of college and at least six years experience in a vocational area taught in high schools.

> "School systems need good male role models and mentors. That's why I'm interested in the program. It gives me another option."
> Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Knox
> Retiring Soldier

Spouses qualify for the program if they're married to an active-duty military member or a reservist or individual ready reserve Soldier called to active duty.

"Basically if they have an active-duty ID card and a four year degree, or are working on a four year degree in education, they qualify," Kirkland said.

Spouses receive a voucher after they take the tests to become certified.

They'll be reimbursed for the cost of tests.

Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Knox, of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Infantry Center, will retire in June.

He's looking at the opportunities available in the civilian world.

"School systems need good male role models and mentors," he said.

"That's why I'm interested in the program. It gives me another option."

Those Soldiers and spouses interested in state-specific information about teacher certification, can log on to www.proud toserveagain.com or www.tttga. net.

There are links on both sites to program applications and eligibility requirements.

Kirkland will make another presentation about the program at 10 a.m. Nov. 30 in the Learning Resource Center, Room 32A, Infantry Hall.

Healthy choices can help prevent flu

Use over-the-counter aids for symptoms

Bonnie Powell
Defense Commissary Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — Lines have been long, the wait unbearable and the news has been making headlines everywhere. Flu shots are in short supply this year.

Although deploying service members and high-risk beneficiaries will get flu shots, those who catch the flu will find help at the Commissary.

The Commissary offers significant savings on over-the-counter medications that can help lessen the discomfort of flu and cold symptoms.

Over the last year, Commissary shoppers have purchased more than $18 million in analgesics such as aspirin and acetaminophen, nearly $13 million in cold, allergy and sinus medications and more than $5 million in cough remedies and nasal products.

"Commissaries exist to help military personnel, retirees, Guard and Reserve personnel and their families save money no matter what they need," said Patrick B. Nixon, chief executive officer for the Defense Commissary Agency.

"We also stock an impressive assortment of products to relieve the symptoms of colds and the flu; name brand products sold at cost."

There's merit to the expression 'an apple a day keeps the doctor away.' Eating nutritious meals, with plenty of fruit and vegetables, can help prevent illness, but there are other common-sense guidelines, said Col. Mark Wolken, chief of public health, safety and security for DeCA.

"Avoid close contact with people who are sick, get plenty of sleep and drink plenty of water, exercise and manage your stress," said Wolken.

One important step in preventing infectious illnesses is keeping hands germ free.

"It's a good idea to carry a hand sanitizer for those occasions when you come in contact with someone who is ill and you aren't near a washroom," Wolken said.

In a recent interview on the Pentagon Channel, Dr. William Winkenwerder, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, said prevention measures are important in avoiding illness, but he also recommended avoiding practices that put others at risk.

"Cover your mouth when you cough or sneeze," he said. "Then stay away from other people if you're sick. Don't spread an illness."

The military health care system, Tricare, will have tips on treating and avoiding the flu at http://www.tri care.osd.mil.

Connections Count: Helps celebrate family

Activities planned for annual event

Terry D. Sybrant
The Family Center

Celebrated for more than 30 years, National Family Week is the week of Thanksgiving.

It provides everyone a chance to honor the connections that support and strengthen families. That's why the theme is "Connections Count."

Who are some of the special people and organizations that help your family?

Perhaps it's a grandmother or neighbor who watches the kids during the workweek, a placement center that helped you find a new job, or a community leader who made sure a new park was built in your neighborhood.

Perhaps it's that special someone in the family who is always ready to listen and give you a big hug.

One Columbus, working with many organizations, is planning special activities for the Columbus area, including two contests your children may wish to enter.

WRBL Television is sponsoring a drawing and essay contest. To enter the drawing contest, a child must draw a picture of his or her family and send to or deliver it to WRBL. There will be several categories and the winners will be presented savings bonds.

To enter the essay contest, a child needs to write a short essay on, "What my family means to me."

There will be several categories and the winners will also receive a savings bond. Entrants are encouraged to e-mail the essays to WRBL's web site.

Tune in to the WRBL for the details of the contests.

The winners will be presented their prizes at a televised breakfast Tuesday.

Also, you are invited to join families in our community for a family appreciation walk Tuesday. It will be held on the Riverwalk.

There will be no sign-in, no registration, no sales or solicitations.

Just come with your family and walk together as long as you wish. We encourage families to walk between 6 and 8 p.m.

There will be a unified, community-wide church service Wednesday. It will be held at First Baptist Church, 212 12th Street, at 7 p.m.

Here are some easy ways to celebrate National Family Week and enjoy your family:

- Write a letter to thank someone who made a difference in the life of your family.
- Discover different ways to spend quality time together, such as volunteering.
- Hold a "family supper" with your neighbors or the families of your kids' friends.
- Select an issue in your community that's important to your family and get involved
- Visit a local community center and learn what kinds of family activities are available.

Summit: Supports Kelley Hill troops

left to come here, people stopped me on the street. They pointed their fingers at me and said, 'You tell them we're behind them one hundred percent.'"

Since May 31, when the mayor of Summit gave the program his official endorsement, Summit Supports Our Troops has taken on a life of its own, Christine said. Schools, churches, Scout troops and businesses offered their assistance. More than $5,000 was raised without so much as a formal fund-raiser.

Burgur said the town is proud of its 27 young men and women in uniform.

"This is an outpouring of love from everyone who watched them grow up," she said.

Christine said Summit's support program will continue. For more information, visit www.ssot.org.

Farm: Chance for fun before combat

Before retiring, he served as the first sergeant in C Co., 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., from 1974 to 1978 in the old Harmony Church area.

About seven years ago, he stocked the three-acre pond with more than 6,000 fish he feeds daily. He has occasionally opened the pond to the public.

"But I wanted to do something for the troops," Merritt said, "so I put out a flyer (on Kelley Hill) and no one came."

Not to be deterred, he made another flyer, with a map, directions, his name and phone number, inviting any armor Soldiers to come out one day in October. Again, no one came.

Then Gaston called him. They set a date, and Merritt got up early in the morning to throw two pigs in the fire pit.

B Co. commander, Capt. Bobby Toon, said he thought Merritt enjoyed seeing the Soldiers and their families enjoy his land.

"It's a beautiful farm," Toon said. "He's a great American. He didn't want anything from us, just wanted us to have a good time."

Toon said he knew Merritt came "looking for tankers" and wondered how he'd take the news the B Co. Soldiers were actually infantrymen as a result of the new 3rd Brigade structure. But Merritt didn't mind. He said he thought something was different when he saw the A Co. guidon in an infantry battalion.

"They're all Soldiers and they all go to the same place and face the same dangers and some may not come back," he said.

As a Vietnam veteran, he knows that first-hand. Although Merritt has been retired for 26 years, he's in tune with what the Soldiers face. He reads a lot to help him understand the enemy they're fighting today.

"Before combat, you're in competition, but once you get in combat, you're all brothers."

He said the Soldiers were all "good guys" who helped him at the barbecue and gave as much as they got. The whole point of inviting them, he said, was to give them an opportunity to enjoy themselves in the short time left before they deploy.

"It's nice to have them out here," he said. "I have the place and the time. But it's not really mine. God just gave it to me to use while I'm here and then someone else gets it."

Make the home team champions

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

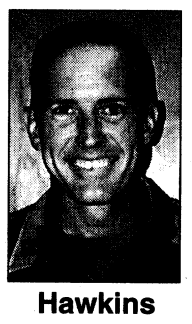
"I've lived all my life to see my team pull together like that!"

That's what the 80-year-old Boston Red Sox fan said when his team did the impossible this fall.

They came from three games back in the playoffs to beat the New York Yankees and become the first team ever to overcome such a deficit and win the World Series. Folks everywhere pointed to the Red Sox as the epitome of teamwork.

So what do the Red Sox and your family have in common?

Ever felt like you're in the biggest game of your life parenting your children and leading your family, only to discover you're three games down, bottom of the ninth, with two outs against you?



Let's see what the Red Sox can teach us about building a championship team right under their own roofs.

• Lesson No. 1 — You gotta have a championship vision. Major league baseball teams don't win by accident.

They don't stumble into victory.

They focus on their objective, on their dream, on their vision.

Families live up to, or down to, visions they set for themselves. What's your vision for your family?

Hawkins

• Lesson No. 2 — You gotta have a training plan. The Sox were known for their diligence and work ethic. They knew when to take a break and when to have fun together.

It's the same with your club.

When you've got a vision of for your family, the next step is to get specific in terms of what your family is training to be and do.

• Lesson No. 3 — You gotta get the right player in the right position.

Would it make sense to put a first baseman in center field? How about swapping the pitcher and catcher?

Championship teams know there's a place for everybody and everybody has a place.

What's your child best at? How do his or her differences in interests or temperament qualify them to play a different position on the team?

Want more ideas on how to build a championship family team?

Call the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760 or come see me at 11 a.m. Sundays at the CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel.

Thankfulness requires humility

Chaplain (Maj.) Luis R. Scott
Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation

REFLECTIONS

Thankfulness seems to be a lost art. Warren Wiersby illustrated this problem in his commentary on Colossians.

He told the story of a ministerial student in Evanston, Ill., who was part of a life-saving squad. In 1860, a ship went aground on the shore of Lake Michigan, and Edward Spencer waded again and again into the frigid waters to rescue 17 passengers.

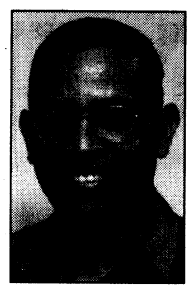
In the process, his health was permanently damaged.

Some years later, at his funeral, it was noted that not one of the people he rescued ever thanked him. (Our Daily Bread, Feb. 20, 1994)

A story is told about 10 lepers who approached Jesus seeking relief for their pain.

Anyone who is dying would want healing, and these men were no different. I do not blame them for coming to Jesus.

He sent them to the priest who could declare them clean and restore them to the community. Jesus performed a great act of grace for these men.



When Jesus sent them away, he put their gratitude to the test. Only one leper returned to give thanks.

Jesus was disappointed the other nine chose to ignore the source of such a great act of grace.

This story shows that men can be very ungrateful, even when their lives have been spared.

"Were not all ten cleansed? Where are the other nine?"

The one who returned was the Samaritan, the most unlikely person to be grateful. Yet he was the only one ready to show his appreciation for his healing.

Scott

Isn't this ironic?

Those who have all the reasons in the world to be thankful are not. And those who, on the surface, appear ungrateful, are thankful.

Whenever I read the 10 lepers story, I'm stunned at the nine men who did not return to thank Jesus for the miracle.

These men were not suffering from a mild headache. They were decaying while they were alive, with sores all over their bodies. They had begun to rot and smell.

And yet, after seeing themselves clean for the first time in years, only one had enough gratitude to acknowledge the man who had blessed them so.

Have you ever come across an ungrateful person? Sometimes this is the person who receives a blessing, a gift or a favor but is unable to recognize the grace shown to him.

Other times, he knows he's blessed but he feels entitled to the blessing. It's infuriating. Our instinct is to say, "I'll never share with him again."

God wants us to pay attention to the little things that take place around us. God wants us to look at our neighbor and say, "I am going to be a blessing to him today."

What attitude do I need to be thankful? I need a humble attitude. I need to accept that I am not the center of the universe. This means I am not entitled to have other people's possessions, their time or their lives.

Whenever someone gives me his time, I should be thankful.

Whenever someone meets one of my needs, I should be thankful.

Whenever someone goes out of his way to assist me, I should be thankful. Whenever someone goes the extra mile for me, I should be thankful. Going the extra mile means he overlooks my flaws and stays with me.

Someone suggested the following excuses for the nine lepers who did not return to be thankful:

One waited to see if the cure was real.

One waited to see if it would last.

One said he would see Jesus later.

One decided he never had leprosy.

One said he would have gotten well anyway.

One gave the glory to the priests.

One said, "O, well, Jesus didn't really do anything."

One said, "Any rabbi could have done it."

One said, "I was already much improved." (Charles L. Brown, Content The Newsletter, June 1990, p.3)

Thankfulness demands I share grace with others.

Thankfulness does not come easy for many people because it requires the acknowledgement that we owe something to someone.

Ultimately thankfulness proceeds from a humble heart that not only acknowledges God, but rejoices that God has accepted us.

For that, I am thankful.

Be thankful today for your blessings.

Columbus bowler scores perfect game

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Carole Brown bowled a perfect 300 game at Fort Benning's Mall Bowling Center Nov. 9.

It wasn't until the ninth frame that Carole Brown pried herself away from the DVD player to realize she was one frame away from a perfect game — all strikes.

Bettie Eddy, secretary of the Women's International Bowling Conference of Columbus, said it is a feat accomplished by only four women in Columbus.

"Honestly I wasn't paying much attention to what I was doing," said Brown, 24, of Columbus. "I was watching a movie with my sister on a portable DVD player. I just wanted to hurry up and bowl so I could get back to the movie."

Brown, who coaches a youth bowling team, didn't realize she could bowl a 300 until one of her young bowlers mentioned, in the ninth frame, that "you're going to do it before I do."

"I just started shaking," Brown said. "I double dribbled the ball, and then the ten pin tried to stand up, but then it finally fell over. I didn't know what to do. I was just shaking so bad."

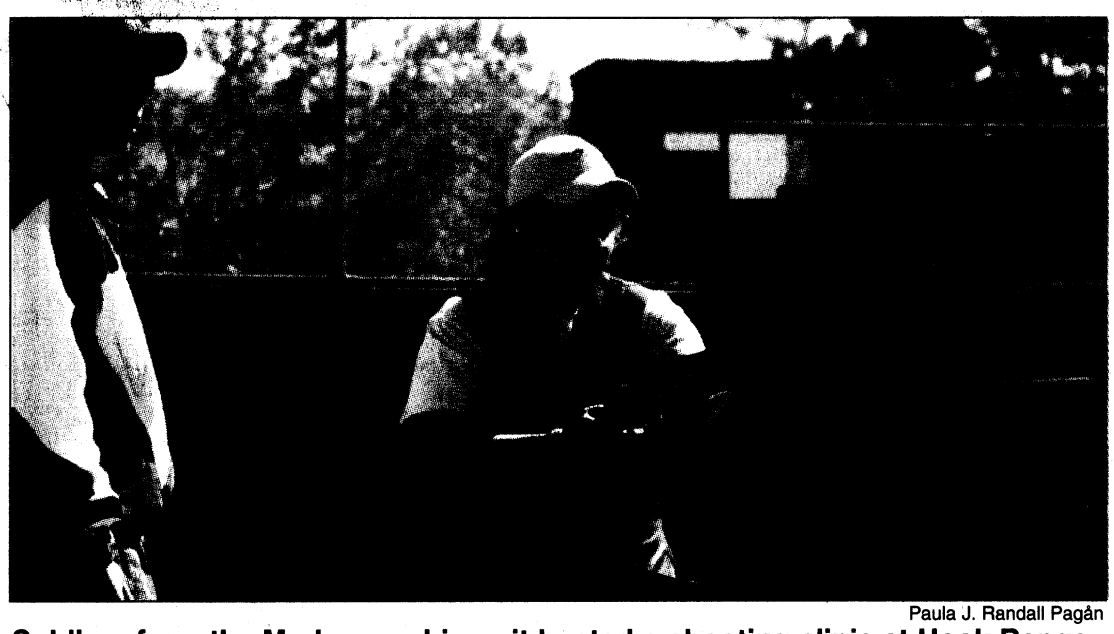
By the time the final ball rolled down the lane, Brown had the attention of most everyone in the building. Her mother, Gail Holston, was in lanes one and two while Brown was bowling lanes 23-24.

As soon as the last pin fell, Holston came running.

"She was screaming. When I finally made it through the people to her, she was just screaming and crying. I was crying," Brown said. "She literally held me for about 10 minutes."

Brown, who has been bowling since 1994, has the bowling gene.

"I guess I just wanted to be like my mom," said Brown.



Her mother, who retired from the Army, was a regional pro while they were living in California.

Jim Cantrell, business manager for the Mall Bowling Center, said in his 42 years at the center, this is the first sanctioned 300. There have been a few other 300s, but they have been in league play, not open play.

"I was called at home immediately after it happened," Cantrell said.

"It is a big event, for a man or a woman."

Brown has been awarded a watch, pin and patch by the sanctioning organization of Columbus for her 700 plus three game score and a ring for her perfect game. Her name has been put up on a plaque in the bowling center.

USAMU trains Olympic hopefuls

The Olympic shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit passed along their expertise in shotgun shooting to nearly three dozen college and high school students who have dreams of someday becoming Olympic champions.

The Soldier athletes of the USAMU Shotgun Team, along with former USAMU Shotgun Team Coach Burl Branham, put on a shooting clinic for more than 30 teenagers from colleges and high schools around the country Nov. 3 to 7 at Hook Range, concluding with a 100 percent target competition Nov. 7.

Eighteen of the students were from Lindenwood University of St. Charles, Mo. Others were from high schools in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia and New Jersey.

The USAMU has not hosted a collegiate clinic at Fort Benning for several years, said Master Sgt. Rodney G. Pinkston, USAMU Shotgun Team noncommissioned officer in charge.

"We used to run these shooting clinics every year," Branham said. "This is good for the students and good for the sport of Olympic-style shotgun shooting."

Branham and his friend Jack Harwick got the idea for the clinic and said they chose Lindenwood College because it is one of the few, if not the only, college that promotes the international shotgun sports.

"A lot of these students are on shooting scholarships, so they're pretty good," Harwick said.

Lindenwood University is the only college in the country that offers shotgun scholarships,

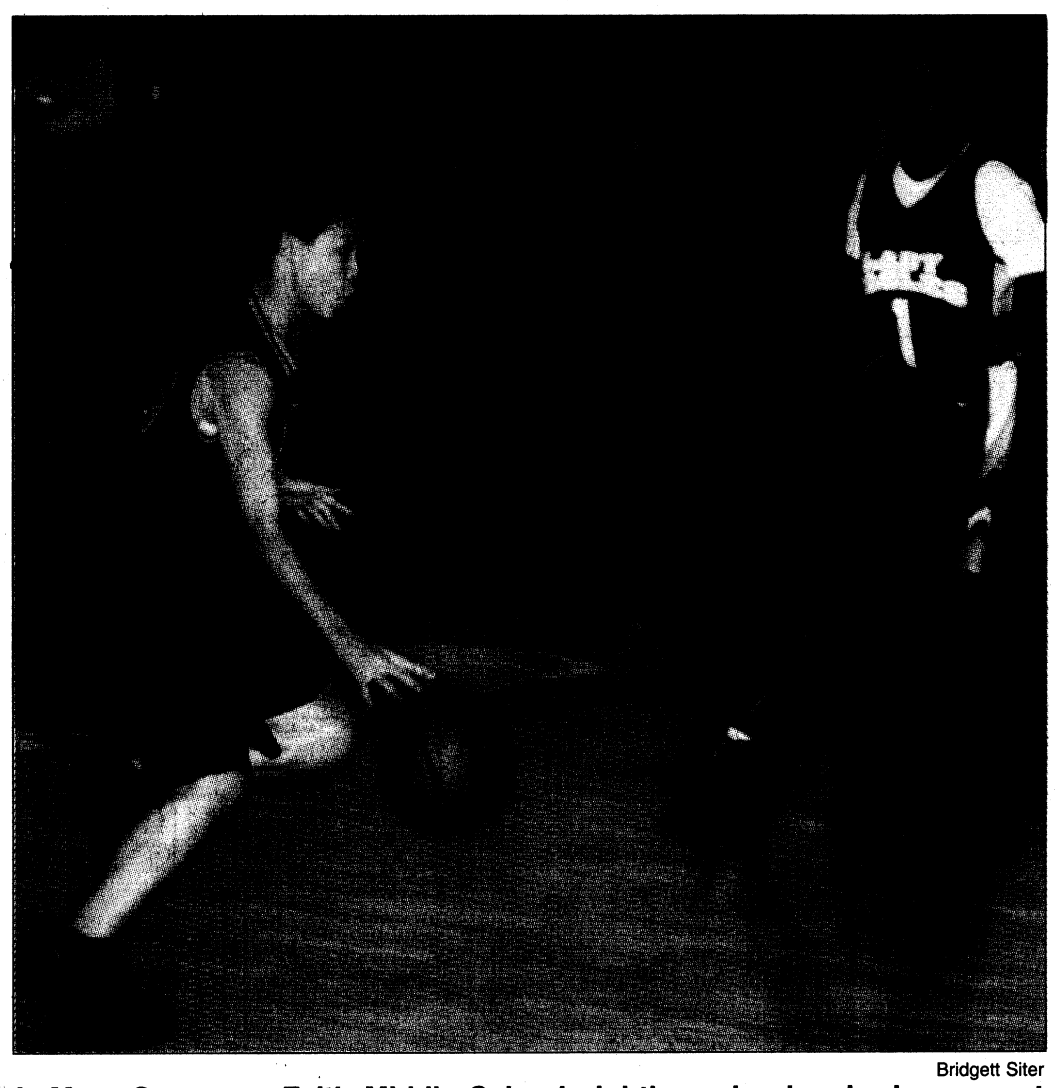
Lt. Col. Bill Green grew up with skeet shooters, which may account for his title as a Skeet Shooting World Champion.

Since he was 8, Green competed with some of the best skeet shooters in the sport. As a kid, he was part of Fred Misseldine's squad.

"Fred used to have a shooting school," Green said. "I never went to it formally because seeing him at the shoots, he would pull me aside and work with me. I learned all of my basics from my dad and Fred."

Green left the sport during college. He joined the Georgia National Guard and, at the age of 23, enlisted in the Army as a Ranger. A year later, he went to the Officer Candidate School.



Green was stationed at Fort Ord, Calif.; Italy; and in the early '90s, Fort Bragg, N.C., where he joined the 1st Special Forces Operational Detachment-Delta.

While at Fort Bragg, a friend, Wade Herrington, challenged Green to compete again. In a two-day competition, Green beat Herrington, 200 to 199. After that, they began shooting together.

In 1998, back in the game less than four years, Green won the Skeet Shooting World Championship. He also took

Volleyball ace plays cool as college creeps closer

When your dad is a battalion commander in the Army, you learn a lot about stepping up to the plate and making things happen. Hardaway High School senior Jessica Dill knows all about that.

She spent three years in South Korea learning to play volleyball at a different level than most American teenagers. She trained at Korean volleyball camps, played in leagues on post and competed in the annual Far East Volleyball Tournament in Japan.

Dill returned to the states after her sophomore year and found herself practically coaching a volleyball team through its infancy.

The 2003 season was the first year Muscogee County high schools fielded volleyball teams, and Dill was teamed with Hardaway coach, Michael Fowler, in the struggle to build a program from the ground up.

"Jessica was basically like an assistant coach," Fowler said. "She's the ideal player, person and student."

Dill's foreign training helped build the team's skills and improved upon the 2003 9-16 record, taking them all the way to the state tournament this year.

Her volleyball skills and leadership attributes aren't all the senior has going for her. With a 3.9 GPA, she is in the top 5 percent of her class. Her academic performance, coupled with her athletic prowess, should guarantee her a scholarship just about anywhere she is interested in going, Fowler said.

"I'm sure she'll sign," he said. "She's what every teacher wishes they had 30 of in a class and every coach wishes they had 20 of on a team."

Dill misses Korea, which she said she loved, but, as an Army brat, she's used to change.

"I have learned to adjust to changing around," she said. "Especially living in Korea, I have been exposed to a lot of different cultures. It's been difficult, but I've enjoyed it because I get to travel a lot."

Growing up a military kid has taught Dill other things like determination, commitment and strong discipline.

"My dad is strict, but it is bearable," said Dill. "He pushes me hard, but he is fair just like he is with his Soldiers."

That drive helped Dill's success with the newly formed Hardaway team and is one of the things Fowler said he will miss the most when she graduates.

"She is a natural-born leader," he said. "She always did what she was asked and always kept driving on — even when I came down on her. A lot of kids aren't mature enough to handle that kind of pressure."

"The team was starting from scratch when I got here," said Dill. "I was able to step in, bring my drills and formations and teach them, and this year we were able to really start competing."

As Dill finishes up a chapter of her life, she will go forward with far more experiences under her belt and with much more confidence than many of her peers. Her personality, talents and Army upbringing leave her well-prepared for whatever the future may hold.

"High school is almost over now," she said. "I can't wait — it's exciting."

said Joe Steenbergen, the school's shooting sports director. Lindenwood is home to the 2004 Collegiate National Championship Team and the 2004 Skeet Junior World Championship Team.

Branham volunteered to teach the classroom portion of the clinic and Harwick, with help from the Military Marksmanship Association, funded all the prizes and food for the students. Pinkston and USAMU Shotgun Team Coach Dean Clark organized the clinic.

USAMU shooters, including 2000 Olympic Skeet Bronze Medalist Sgt. 1st Class James Todd Graves, a four-time Olympian, coached the students out on the line to help them increase their shooting skills. Other Soldiers participating included 2004 Olympians Sgts. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery and Bret E. Erickson, 2000 Olympian Staff Sgt. William H. Keever, 1996 Olympian Sgt. 1st Class Theresa E. DeWitt and 2004 Olympic Alternate Staff Sgt. Joetta R. Dement.

"This is a great opportunity for my students. They got a lot of one-on-one training," Steenbergen said. "If I wanted to hire someone of Todd Graves' caliber to coach my kids for a week, it would cost me about three thousand dollars."

"I think it's awesome; I learned a lot," said Samantha Olsen, a junior at Battlefield High School of Virginia.

the Armed Forces World Championship twice, in 1999 and 2003. He's the first military shooter to shoot 400 and 500 straight.

"It was like riding a bicycle," Green said.

"Once you learn how to do it right, it doesn't take much to remember how to do it again."

Green said his Army leaders encouraged his participation in the sport.

"My chain of command understood the importance of the sport and encouraged me to continue," he said.

"Skeet shooting is one of the best eye-hand coordination training methods there are. We used it for close quarter battle shooting training. It improves the rapid acquisition and shooting of targets when found in CQBs."

Green said many of his subordinates and peers found skeet shooting great as a sport and a training exercise.

After more than 11 years with Delta Forces at Fort Bragg, Green was stationed at Fort Benning with the Training and Doctrine Command System Manager Close Combat Missile System Office.

He left his wife, Becky, his son; William, 12, and his daughter, Blakely, 13, back at Fort Bragg, where Becky works in the county school system. Both kids go to school in the same system.

Green said his wife and daughter shoot a little for fun but they'd rather pull for him. His son is a little more interested.

"I know William is going to be pretty good," Green said.

Air Force Master Sgt. Stuart Brown has been a friend of Green for more than seven years.

He was behind Green on the field when he won the World Championship in 1998.

"Bill is probably one of the most professional shooters on and off the field," Brown said. "Not only does he like the sport, but he likes to promote it. He's always been the one to help shooters by teaching them better techniques or giving them pointers to improve their shooting."

Since his arrival at Fort Benning, Green spends whatever free time he gets shooting. He's also become a good friend with Soldiers in the Army Marksmanship Unit, shooting with them every once in a while.

"Those guys have a great coach and they are really good," he said.

When asked about the downfall of being a world champion, Green said nothing bothers him more than bad sportsmanship.

"There's always going to be someone that doesn't like it that you're better than them," Green said. "I think that's petty. I believe its more important to learn from others instead of disliking them for being better than me. Whenever a person achieves world champion status, there's jealousy," he said.

Brown said he considers Green and himself "old school" shooters because they shoot with the tradition and history of the sport in mind.

"It's a very respectful sport, and not many shooters now-a-days shoot knowing it," Brown said. "(Green) and I are proud of the sport and of shooting. He's very respected when he's on the field. In many ways he's intimidating to those who know he will be competing against them. Intimidation is good in this and any sport."

Thanksliving

"More than once I've asked myself, where does this come from — this undefeatable optimism, the capacity to count your blessings, not because of circumstances, but in spite of circumstances?" said Chaplain (Maj.) Jeff Hawkins. "At this point in my journey, I've picked up two lessons: It's not what happens to you that makes the difference, it's what happens in you. And Thanksgiving isn't a day, it's a decision."

Bridgett Siter

Some days it would be easier to stay in bed, and for quite some time, Amy Riley did just that.

These days she rises early, wakes her three children, and helps 9-year-old Austin into his wheelchair. Then she whispers a prayer.

"Thank you Lord for giving him another day."

It would be a stretch to say Amy's "made peace" with her sons' condition — Austin and his 5-year-old brother have a rare and aggressive form of Muscular Dystrophy. She still gets angry with God from time to time.

But she no longer allows herself to wallow in the fear and depression that consumed her several years ago when the boys were diagnosed with the same disease that claimed the life of Amy's 20-year-old brother. Doctors say Joshua and Austin will not live to be as old as the uncle they never knew.

"Sometimes I still get mad," Amy said last week, as she sat in her Bouton Heights home watching her youngest son play with Sally, the abused dog the Riley's rescued last Christmas. "Sometimes I think, 'Why us God? One child, it hurts, but two is unbearable. Why us?'"

But, Amy said, every day she thanks God for her children "just the way they are." And when the going gets rough, she counts her blessings. She knows of another mother who lost four children to the same disease.

"I can't imagine what she's gone through," Amy said. "I think about her, and I realize there are people worse off than me."

Lately, things have gotten rougher. Austin has trouble eating and he struggles to breathe at night. He needs a special mattress designed for a hospital bed, something the family is saving for.

Last year, he was walking. Now he's confined to a wheelchair — a wheelchair that somehow got lost in a red tape shuffle between the insurance company and the wheelchair manufacturer for nearly a year. It recently arrived, defective. It'll have to be returned. Amy and her husband Lonny, an Airborne School instructor, dumped a hefty part of their savings into the co-pay for the chair.

They spent hundreds more on a special chair that allows Austin to bathe — the insurance company considered it a luxury.

"I'm just thankful we had the money to get it. We'll make do," she said. "It won't be a big Christmas, not the way we'd like it to be anyway, but they'll get something. I worry about Kristena. She's going through a lot, but she seems to understand."

> "It's just money. As long as we're all together, we'll make do. That's all that matters. I'm just thankful we're all together."
> Amy Riley
> Fort Benning mom

Amy is the only mom 13-year-old Kristena's ever known. Her birth mom, Lonny's first wife, abandoned her when she was 5-months old, when he was preparing to deploy to the Middle East. Lonny got out of the Army to care for his baby.

He married Amy more than a decade ago, and re-enlisted in 2000 just about the time Kristena's birth mother put in an appearance. She's kept the family in legal limbo ever since.

They've spent thousands of dollars on attorney fees and travel back and forth to Mississippi for court appearances. Kristena wants nothing to do with her birth mom, and the Rileys are hoping the next trip they make to court in January will put the custody problem to rest.

But the financial problems that have resulted from the case and the boys' illnesses won't go away soon.

"It's just money," Amy said. "As long as we're all together, we'll make due. That's all that matters. I'm just thankful we're all together."

Amy's made a conscious decision, a choice Chaplain (Maj.) Jeff Hawkins calls "thanks*living*." She's chosen the hard optimism over the easy — and most would say justifiable — pessimism.

"Optimism is a decision," said Hawkins, the Fort Benning's Family Life chaplain. "It's a great skill to have."

It's not a matter of "why are bad things happening to good people," Hawkins said. It's a given: bad things will happen to good people. They'll happen to everybody. How one chooses to deal with them is what sets people like Amy Riley apart, people who possess what Hawkins calls "undefeatable optimism."

"We all know 'the rain falls on the just and the unjust,'" he said. "It's not so much what happens to you that makes the difference, but what happens in you. That's (the difference) between despair and hope, tragedy and triumph."

God Bless Fort Benning

Dennis Jacques is an angry man. He's outraged when he hears about Soldiers and their families being hemmed in, threatened or derided by the very people they protect.

"I'm all in favor of free speech, but if you don't like what's happening, go to Washington and do what you have to," Jacques said Saturday, as he suited up to ride with nearly 400 bikers "to the edge of reason and back," a eight-mile circuit from Victory Drive to the site of the SOA-Watch protest and back to the Columbus Civic Center parking lot, where an estimated 8,000 people gathered for the third annual God Bless Fort Benning Day.

I gotta lotta thankfulness

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It was truly a dark and rainy night. As we sat at the red light, I was trying to explain the SOA-Watch protest to my children. They wanted to know why we couldn't just turn right and go our normal route.

In the middle of my explanation, I looked across the intersection, catching a glimpse of a car hurtling down the hill. A quick glance at the light showed it was still red, and I wondered what the driver was going to do. In the next second, I heard the answer in the sickening crunch of metal. The speeding car plowed into the rear end of a blue car waiting at the light, sending it flying through the intersection. The second car came to rest not far from me.

I pulled around the corner, scrambled for my cell phone and dialed 911. Then I went to see if anyone needed an ambulance so I could tell the dispatcher.

People stopped to help — right there in the middle of Victory Drive — people late to get places and, thankfully, people who could offer more help than I could. One man limped over to the blue car and said he was an Army medic. I held the trunk down while he climbed in through the rear window. He sat inside the back seat, in shorts, in the middle of the broken glass, offering his help to an injured driver who had no idea what hit him.

Across the intersection, a grandmother from Pennsylvania had been sideswiped by the speeding car just before it slammed into the other. She had just arrived in the area to attend her grandson's basic training graduation.

In the back seat of her car — her granddaughter's two small boys, teary-eyed, but safe in their car seats.

It was in that moment, I realized how fortunate they had been.

I originally thought I'd write about how thankful I am to call Fort Benning home right now. But I can't be thankful about Fort Benning without being thankful for Columbus as well.

The Columbus police officers who arrived at the scene were the same ones I had just seen in McDonald's, their late dinner interrupted by the accident call. They were probably working overtime as part of the city's response to the same protest I was trying to explain to my boys. Although I'm sure they're compensated with additional pay, the money won't ever replace the time they lost with their families.

And being thankful just can't stop there. We live in the greatest of nations, where our forefathers crafted a document establishing justice, providing for our common defense, our general welfare and securing the blessings of liberty. Ours is a nation where we can honor protesters' First Amendment rights to speak freely and peaceably assemble. A nation where all citizens have the right to vote in elections where the results aren't going to spark violent uprisings.

And our community, with its own challenges, is still a place where people will come to the aid of total strangers. I didn't get the name of the Soldier who crawled into the car and sat in the broken glass, so I can't thank him personally.

But he and the man who directed traffic earned my heartfelt thanks that night for being in the right place at a difficult time. One black, one white — to me they represented the essence of our community and our country — working together for someone other than themselves.

Show thanks with service

I was in a hurry leaving the post exchange a couple of weeks ago and felt slightly annoyed to see a woman peddling something that I knew, no matter what it was, I didn't want.

As I scanned the parking lot looking for my husband, I could hear her approaching.

"Would you like to buy a Girl Scout calendar?" she said.

"No thank you," I quickly muttered, turning back to the parking lot.

Two young privates, all dressed up in their crisp, new Class As, waiting for a cab, turned as the woman said, "Well, thank you anyway."

"How much do they cost?" one of the Soldiers asked.

The woman, looking a little startled, told him the cost and he started to reach for his wallet.

"You want one, too?" he asked his buddy.

I stopped looking for the car and started paying attention to their conversation.

"What are you boys doing here all dressed up?" the woman asked.

"It's family day and our families couldn't come out," they responded.

I was awed as one of the Soldiers explained that he would send the calender home. He wanted to help the Scouts and the community.

I've thought of that exchange several times this week.

Those Soldiers took the time to not only buy a calendar, but to teach me a valuable lesson.

They didn't need a calendar. They bought it to help someone else.

On the way home, I started thinking about how I could help others. As a family, we decided we'd provide Thanksgiving dinner for those who would like to be in a family environment but are too far from home to do so.

A friend of mine offered to let us use his house for the meal. Saturday, at the Turkey Trot, the first-place winner handed us his turkey gift certificate, knowing we had a lot of mouths to feed.

Another Soldier who works with my husband offered to help too.

As Thanksgiving falls upon us yet again, let's take the time to think of those who may need a little extra love and assistance this holiday.

Maybe it's the single father with young children. The mother of five whose husband is serving in Iraq.

The newlyweds who are spending the holidays away from their families for the first time.

Or the young Soldiers living in the barracks, some of them still teenagers, who are alone — many spending their first holiday away from family and home.

Instead of sitting around the dinner table giving thanks and counting your blessings (which, by the way, is a very good idea), take the time to see how you and your family can bring blessings to others.

I have heard it said that the best way to show your thanks is to serve those around you, like they do in the movie Pay it Forward.

So, as you are preparing the yams, potatoes, turkey, stuffing and pumpkin pie, look around. See if there's someone you can help.

Let's do what we can to put the "thanks" in Thanksgiving this year.

Remember, the best way to show gratitude is with service.

God bless us, every one

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It's time to say thanks. I'll start with the Tidwells, Jack and Miriam, the Columbus residents who organized the God Bless Fort Benning rally.

I met Miriam two years ago at a debate between officials from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and SOA Watch. Miriam had enough of the protesters' diatribe, the false accusations, half truths and exaggerations. When the audience was given the chance to speak, she made an impassioned plea for support from the tricommunity.

Besides the fact she is a Columbus resident and a patriotic American, Miriam had no dog in the fight, so to speak. But she was concerned enough about the allegations to do her homework. She read past the slick rhetoric, did some online research and met with the institute's commandant, at that time, Col. Richard Downie. In the end, she cast her lot with the folks at Fort Benning.

In tears and righteously indignant, she stood before an audience evenly divided and, in essence, drew a line in the sand. I suspect that was the moment God Bless Fort Benning was born.

Less than two weeks later, a couple hundred supporters gathered at a business on Benning Road. While the protesters chanted and marched, the Benning supporters carried on a counter rally. Miriam, who owned Miriam's Café at that time, fed the crowd. Supporters brought toys for Santa's Castle.

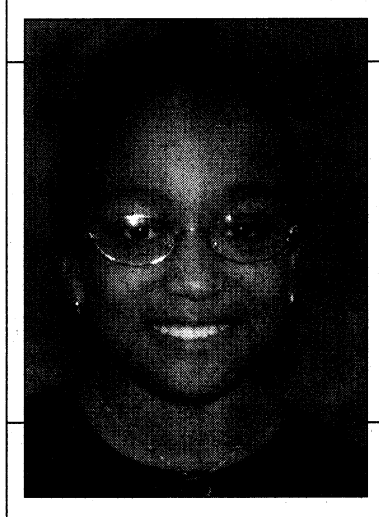
It was a beautiful start, though things got a bit tense at times. While no one was looking, someone stole a "B" from the God Bless Fort Benning sign, effectively making it a Godless Fort Benning. That was also the year the mayor's car was vandalized.

So last year, the Tidwell's moved their show down the road to the Civic Center parking lot, where they had a tidy little turnout and no trouble at all.

This year, it exploded. Local businesses, organizations, scout troops, churches and entertainers joined the effort to make God Bless Fort Benning Day a success. Nearly 400 leather-clad bikers showed up to make sure no one crashed the party, and law enforcement turned out in case they did.

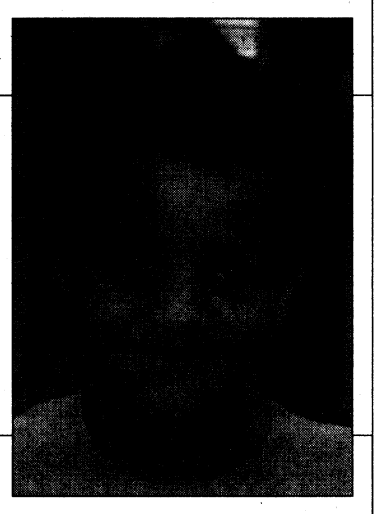
Nearly 5,000 basic trainees were bused in from Sand Hill and nearly that many Soldiers, family members and civilians showed up. Some came to bless, others came to be blessed. In the end, I think everybody got blessed.

I'm not talking about the free food and fun, though my daughter would certainly classify the candy she toted home as a sweet blessing. And the weather was most definitely a divine blessing.



But no, it was the incredible sense of community that made the day special. I think I speak for the Fort Benning community when I say we felt truly appreciated.

So thank you, Jack and Miriam, your "right arm," Jan Pease, and all the wonderful people who worked so hard to make God Bless Fort Benning a success.



And thank you, neighbors, for showing up. It would've been a real bummer to see all Miriam's hard work go to waste. The rally was the community saying thank you. Your presence was Fort Benning's way of saying "you're welcome."

Thanksgiving: A choice, not a day

Amy has made a decision to count her blessings, not because of her circumstances, but in spite of them, Hawkins said.

"When I look around and see how much I've been blessed, and then I see others whose road in life seems so much steeper and their load so much heavier, it teaches me something," he said.

"Some of the most positive and mature people that I've had the privilege of knowing have also been folks that you'd think would have the least to be thankful for."

At 83, Ann Benson is mature and positive. The widow from Pensacola, Fla., who lost the home she'd lived in nearly 50 years during Hurricane Ivan, said her faith makes her strong.

"There were times I cried. It was very odd, you know, to look at the things you had acquired all your life ... ," she said. "It's hard to put it in words. I knew I'd have to leave my home one day, but I never dreamed it would be like this. It wasn't what I had planned at this age."

Benson didn't have flood insurance. She's living in a rented, furnished apartment. Still, she says, she's "more blessed than most people."

"I've been inconvenienced, but there are people out there with children," she said. "They suffered the most."

Benson said her positive outlook on life, her decision to remain optimistic, stems from years of helping others. For nearly 20 years, she's volunteered in a local hospital, where she meets people whose needs are far greater than hers.

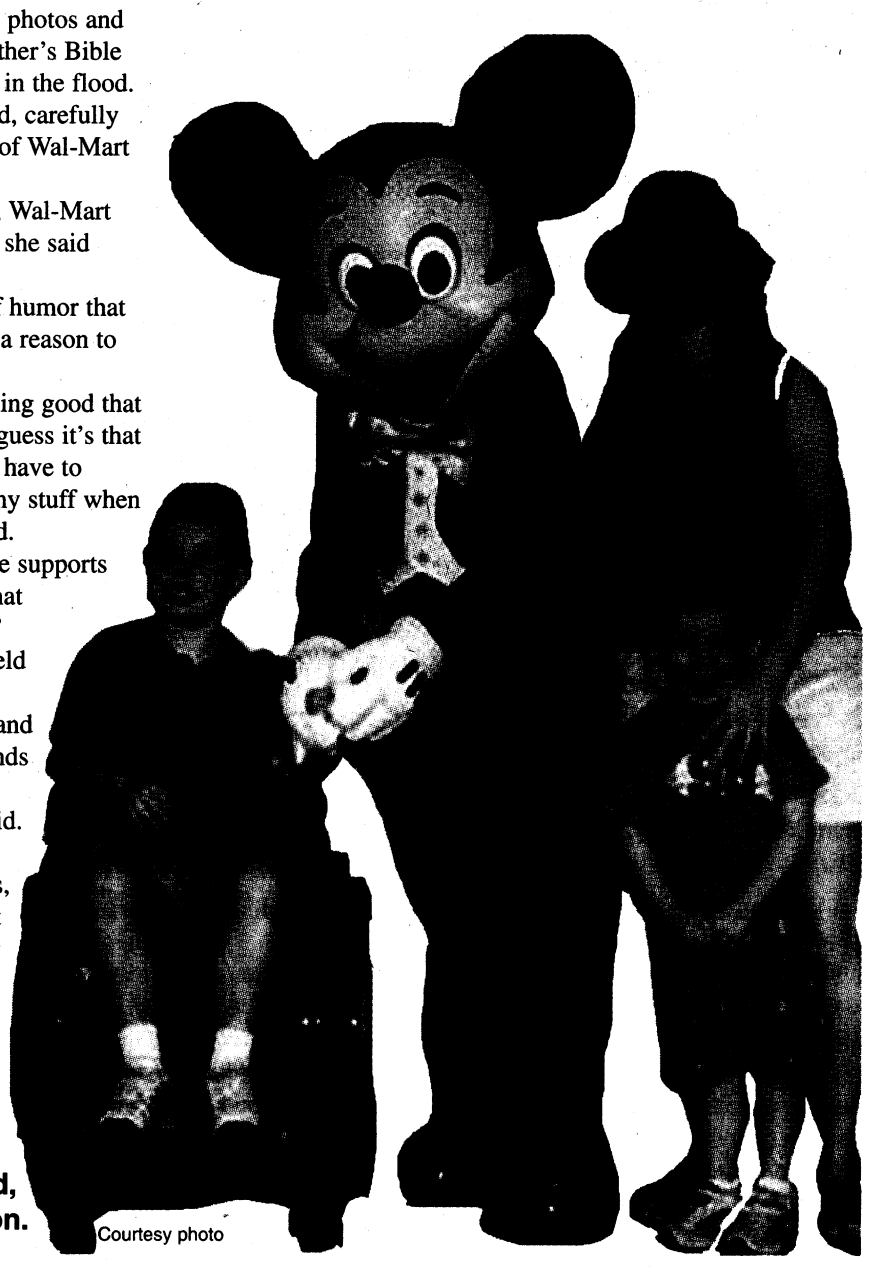
"It's the most rewarding thing I do. It makes you so thankful," she said. "When I leave there, if I've not helped but one person that day, it was worth my time."

Benson believes "God had his hand in everything" she went through. She gives him — and Walmart — credit for her optimism.

Boxes of family photos and her great grandmother's Bible were not damaged in the flood. In fact, they floated, carefully wrapped in layers of Wal-Mart bags.

"I tell you what, Wal-Mart bags are the best," she said with a laugh.

It's that sense of humor that helps Benson find a reason to smile.



"If there's anything good that came out of this I guess it's that my children won't have to clean through all my stuff when I'm gone," she said.

Benson's attitude supports Hawkins' theory that "optimism works."

"The medical field tells us we'll live longer, live better and die with more friends if we give thanks more often," he said. We can't change what happens to us, life's surprises, but we can determine what happens in us. That's life's spirit.

"It's (a) choice ... thanksgiving and thanks*living*."

> "We all know 'the rain falls on the just and the unjust.' It's not so much what happens to you that makes the difference, but what happens in you."

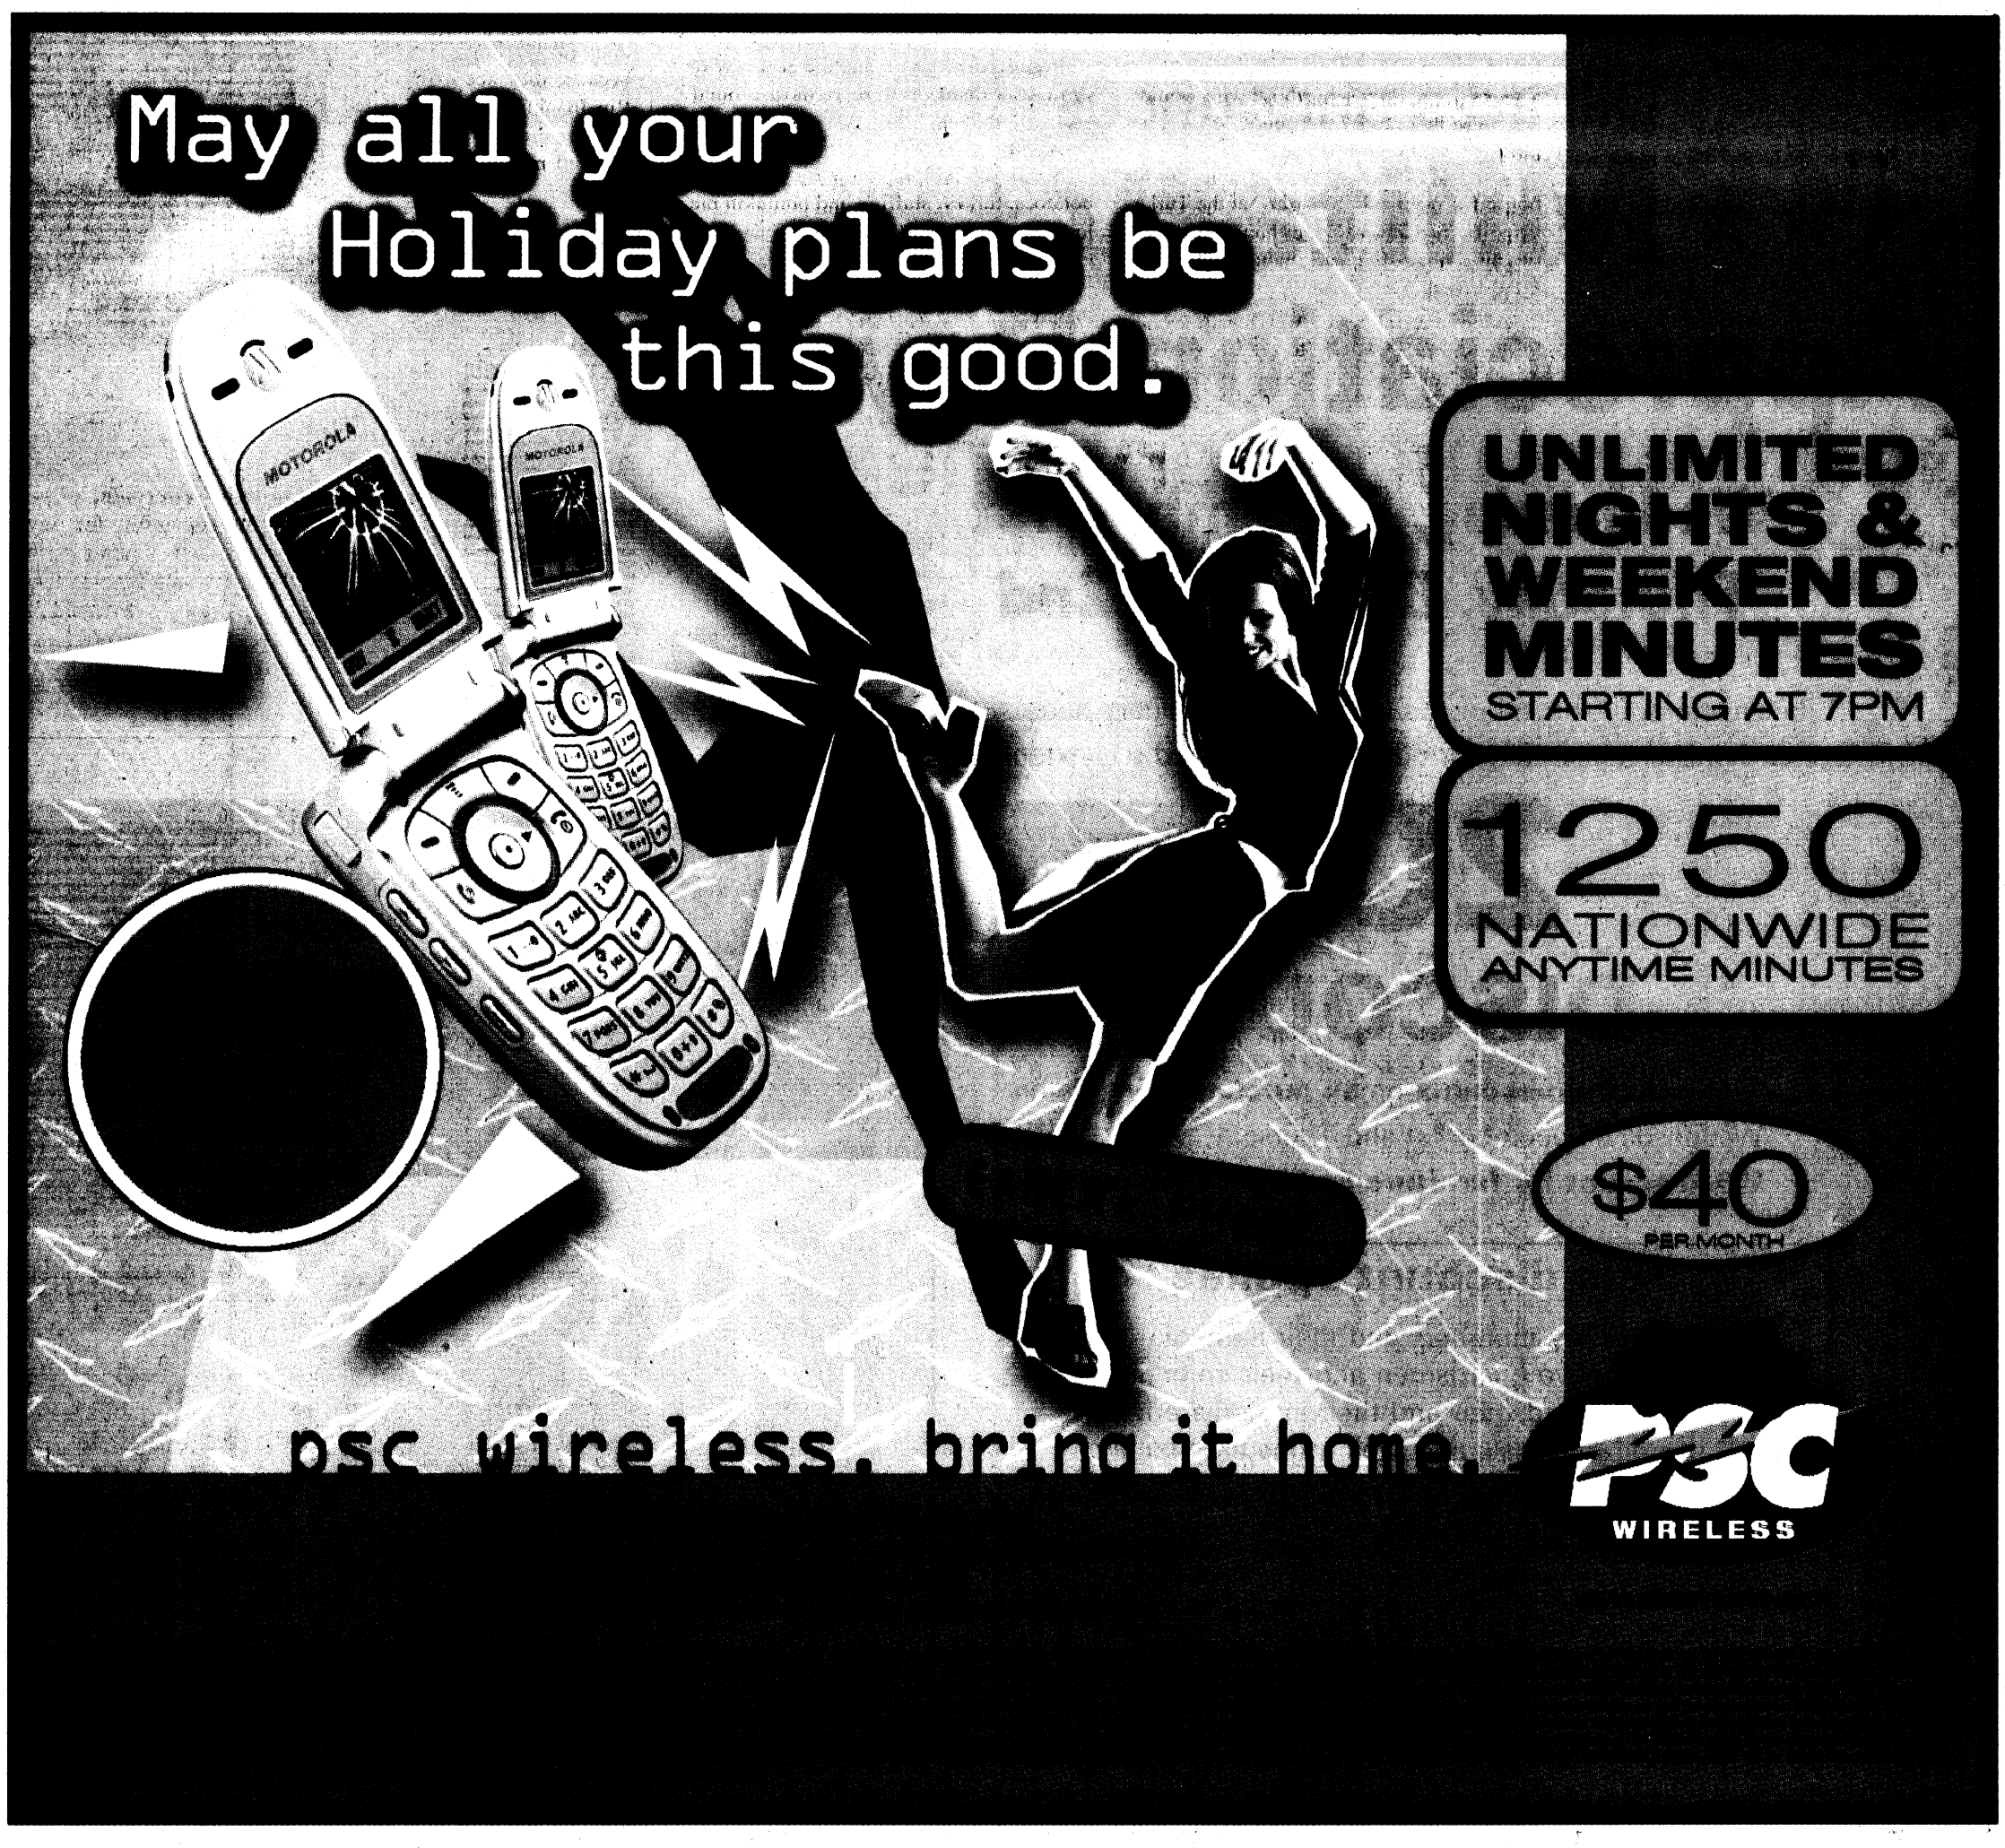
Soldier dies in motorcycle crash

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

A second Fort Benning Soldier in less than a week was killed in a motorcycle accident off post Sunday.

Capt. Curtis J. Agee, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, lost control of his motorcycle and crashed on Buena Vista Road.



Initial police reports could not identify what caused Agee to lose control of the motorcycle but ruled out the involvement of other vehicles and said there was no evidence Agee was under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

Six Soldiers have died in motorcycle accidents Army-wide since Oct. 1, according to the Army's Safety Center.

Last week, Spc. Michael Howard Jr.., 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, died in a motorcycle accident on South Lumpkin Road.

According to Training and Doctrine Command Regulation 385-2 all persons operating a motorcycle on any Army installation or on official business must wear all appropriate safety gear and complete an Army-approved motorcycle operator's course.

WHINSEC opens doors for informational tours

Tours inform visitors about mission

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

An eight-bus convoy lined the South Lumpkin Gate entrance early Saturday morning, ready to transport their first round of passengers to the Department of Defense's Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

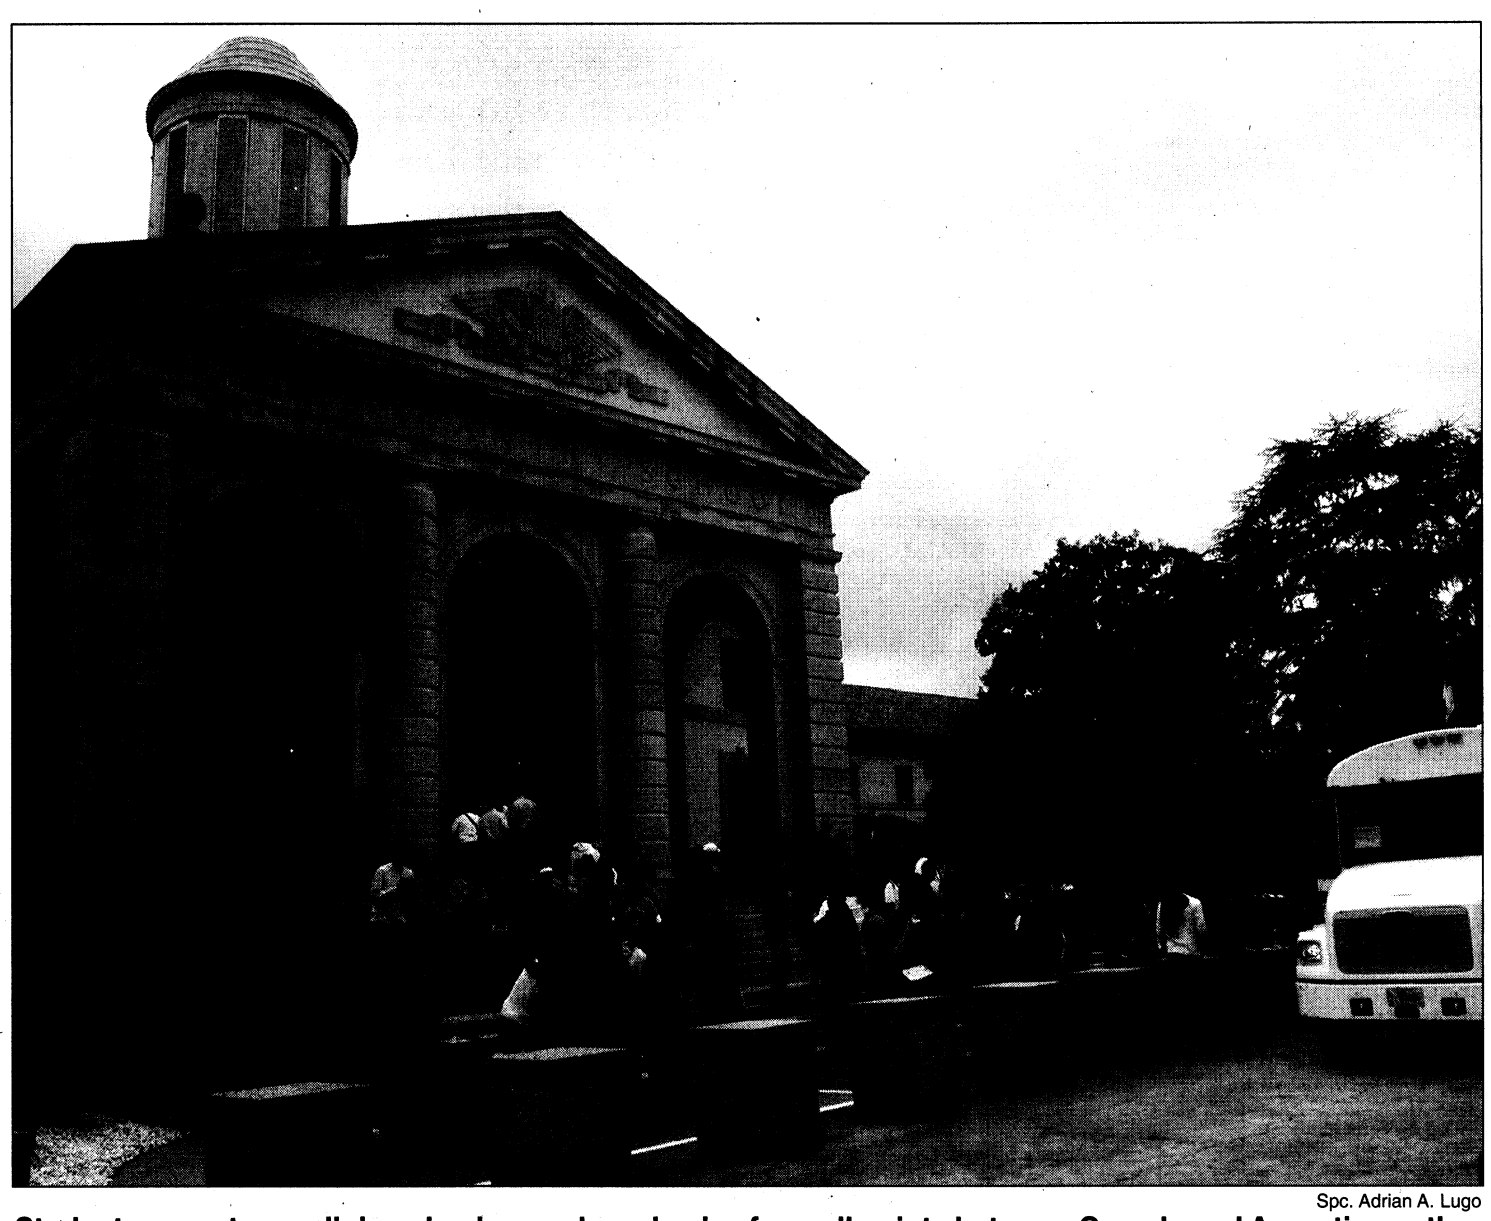
This would mark the first of three trips made throughout the day to the institute, which hosted its third annual open house.

An estimated 450 high school and college students, reporters, religious leaders and academics from Canada to Argentina and all points in between came en masse for a tour of the facility.

Lasting more than two hours, the visit featured a walk-through tour of the Mediterranean-styled building's three floors, highlighting its atrium, public library and Gallery of Liberators — a collection of donated oil paintings and artifacts regarding the founding fathers of each hemispheric ally nation.

The tour wound down in Pratt Hall auditorium, beginning the question and answer session for the institute's guests.

Attendees were invited to engage military and civilian panelists in questions and comments regarding WHINSEC, U.S. foreign policy, the closed School of the Americas and general information about the military.



Lt. Col. Jose Pizarro, WHINSEC chief of staff, opened the session by providing the command brief and emphasizing the institute's mission.

"It's important to note that, regardless of how many green suits you see here today, this institute, its mission and curriculum is ultimately civilian run," Pizarro said.

Reading the mission word for word from the Defense Authorization Act of 2001, Pizarro placed further emphasis on the fact that, along with "providing professional education and training to military, law enforcement, and civilian personnel of the Western Hemisphere within the context of the democratic principles of the Organization of the American States (OAS)," the institute is charged with "promoting democratic values and respect for human rights."

"These very principles promoted here daily are the same ones protesters outside the gate are calling for," said State Department representative and panelist Paul Trevelli, answering questions regarding foreign policy.

Other panelists included WHINSEC's Commandant Col. Gilberto Perez; Lt. Col. Linda Gould, chief of the LATAM Branch for the deputy chief of Staff of the Army, who fielded questions regarding the closed School of the Americas; Steven Schneebaum, partner, Patton Boggs LLP, Board of Visitors chairman and Human Rights liaison; Donald Harrington, WHINSEC dean of Academics; and Maj. Tony Raimondo, director of Human Rights Instruction at WHINSEC. Though a few questions posed seemed slanted or one-sided, the session appeared to be an even intellectual exchange.

Students, reporters, religious leaders and academics from all points between Canada and Argentina gather at the front steps of Ridgway Hall, the annual open house tour of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. Nearly 450 visitors toured the institute.

Many questions and comments from the audience focused more on the theme of human rights and its depth of instruction.

"Is eight hours of instruction really enough?" questioned one Jesuit educator.

"Eight hours is a minimum," Raimondo said.

"We often go above and beyond that," he said, listing examples of courses such as the Command and General Staff Officer Course that has a mandatory 40 hours.

Answering further, Perez explained that at WHINSEC "human rights training doesn't just stop in the classroom. It's performed in practical exercises, and explored outside in the community in our Field Studies Program where students continue to be exposed to democratic and humanitarian principles.

"You came here with an open mind. That's all we ask of our guests. We were not here to persuade or change your minds. We are here to inform the public about the operation of one of their interests, and to engage in good dialogue as to how we might improve. ... You should be applauded for coming here for yourselves, and doing something that many outside the gate for years have yet to do," Perez said.

Ceremony remembers German POWs

With red, yellow and black flags waving in the breeze, Sgt. Maj. Peter O'Grady, German liaison sergeant major, read the names of POWs who were laid to rest at Fort Benning.

"Today, as we have done in the past," said Lt. Col. Herbert Sladek, the German liaison officer, "we would like to remove (the POWs) from the anonymity of numbers on headstones, and instead remember them by their ranks and names and thus give them for one moment in time their identity again."

The recognition, which included a wreath laying ceremony, was part of Volkstrauertag — National Day of Mourning in Germany. The commemoration is a combination of Memorial Day and Veterans Day, Sladek said.

"The message of this Memorial Day must be clear," Sladek said. "Let us not forget them. They deserve to be remembered and honored for their selfless service, their contributions and for their sacrifice and courage."

Forty-four German POW Soldiers, from private to lieutenant general, who died between 1944 and 1946 were laid to rest in a place far from their homeland, on foreign soil, here at Fort Benning.

"These memorial days cannot change the world," said Andreas Zimmer, deputy consulate general for the Federal Republic of Germany in Atlanta. "But they influence our vision of the past and our interpretation of the present."

Zimmer said there is a duty to engage people in the cause of peace, freedom, justice and decent living for all, in memory of the suffering and sacrifices made by those Soldiers and civilians who have gone before.

"We honor all Soldiers, all victims of war and those who lost their lives because of their race, religion, ideology or their political convictions," Zimmer said.

15 protesters arrested during annual SOA-Watch protest

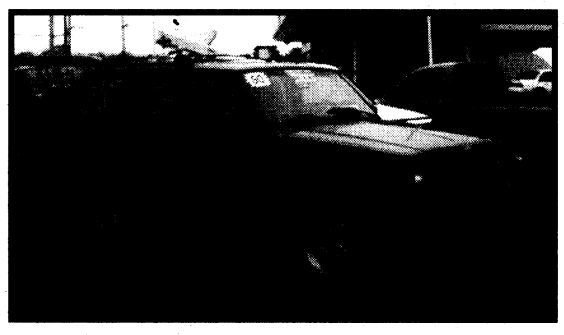
Several thousand people gathered outside the main gate on Benning Boulevard to protest the School of Americas Sunday.

The crowd, composed of college groups, human rights watchdog organizations, religious organizations, anti-war groups and individuals, protested the School of the Americas, which closed in December 2001.

The Department of Defense opened the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation in January 2002 with oversight from a Board of Visitors.

The Defense Authorization Bill, which created the WHINSEC, called for a federal advisory committee to maintain independent review, observation and recommendation regarding operations of the institute.

The 13-member board includes members of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees, representatives from the State Department, U.S. Southern Command and the Training and Doctrine Command; and six members designated by the Secretary of Defense. These six include representatives from the human rights, religious, academic and business communities.



The board reviews and advises on areas such as curriculum, academic instruction and fiscal affairs of the institute. Their reviews ensure relevance and consistency with U.S. policy, laws, regulation and doctrine.

Military and local police supervised the protest, which closed both the Benning Boulevard and South Lumpkin gates for the weekend.

Military police apprehended 15 individuals for entering or attempting to enter the installation. They were transported to the Muscogee County jail by U.S. marshals.

Operating room techs are a part of a close-knit team of medical professionals responsible for the lives of Soldiers and family members around the globe.

Operating room techs get hands in it all

91D opens up avenues of opportunity

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

"I love the guts and blood," said Spc. Marji Simmons, an operating room technician at Martin Army Community Hospital, when asked if what she sees in the course of her day bothers her.

Indifference to blood is just one of the characteristics that sets operating room techs apart from other jobs in the Army, she said.

"You have to be really good working with people," Simmons said. "As a tech, you are usually the first person to greet the patient when they come in for surgery and it is your job to reassure them that everything is going to be OK. A lot of people are scared when they come in. When you have surgery, you are putting your life in someone else's hands."

People skills are one aspect of the job Simmons said she's always had. Everything else is learned in the crash course phase one training at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. The first phase of the advanced individual training course for operating room techs is an intense study of human anatomy and physiology, operating room and instrument sterilization procedures, basic laboratory procedures, diagnostic tools and basic medical procedures.

The second phase consists of an internship at a military treatment facility, where students put their training into action and become comfortable in their MOS.

"AIT was tough," Simmons said. "It takes a lot of studying and memorization. You either have it or you don't."

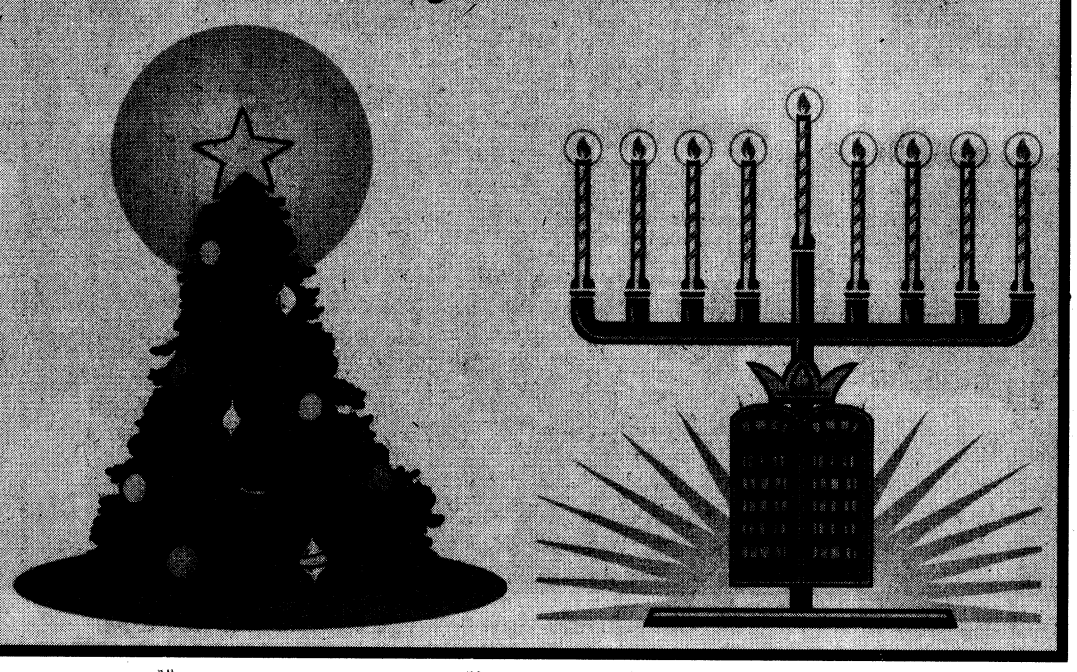
Once operating room techs reach their first permanent duty station, they are proficient in several tasks.

In the course of a duty day, techs are responsible for initial patient contact, sterilization and organization of the operating room equipment, preoperative and postoperative procedures, maintaining the cleanliness of the operating room and creating sterile fields for procedures to be performed in. Techs also assist medical staff with procedures and can triage and provide initial treatment for emergency and battlefield patients.

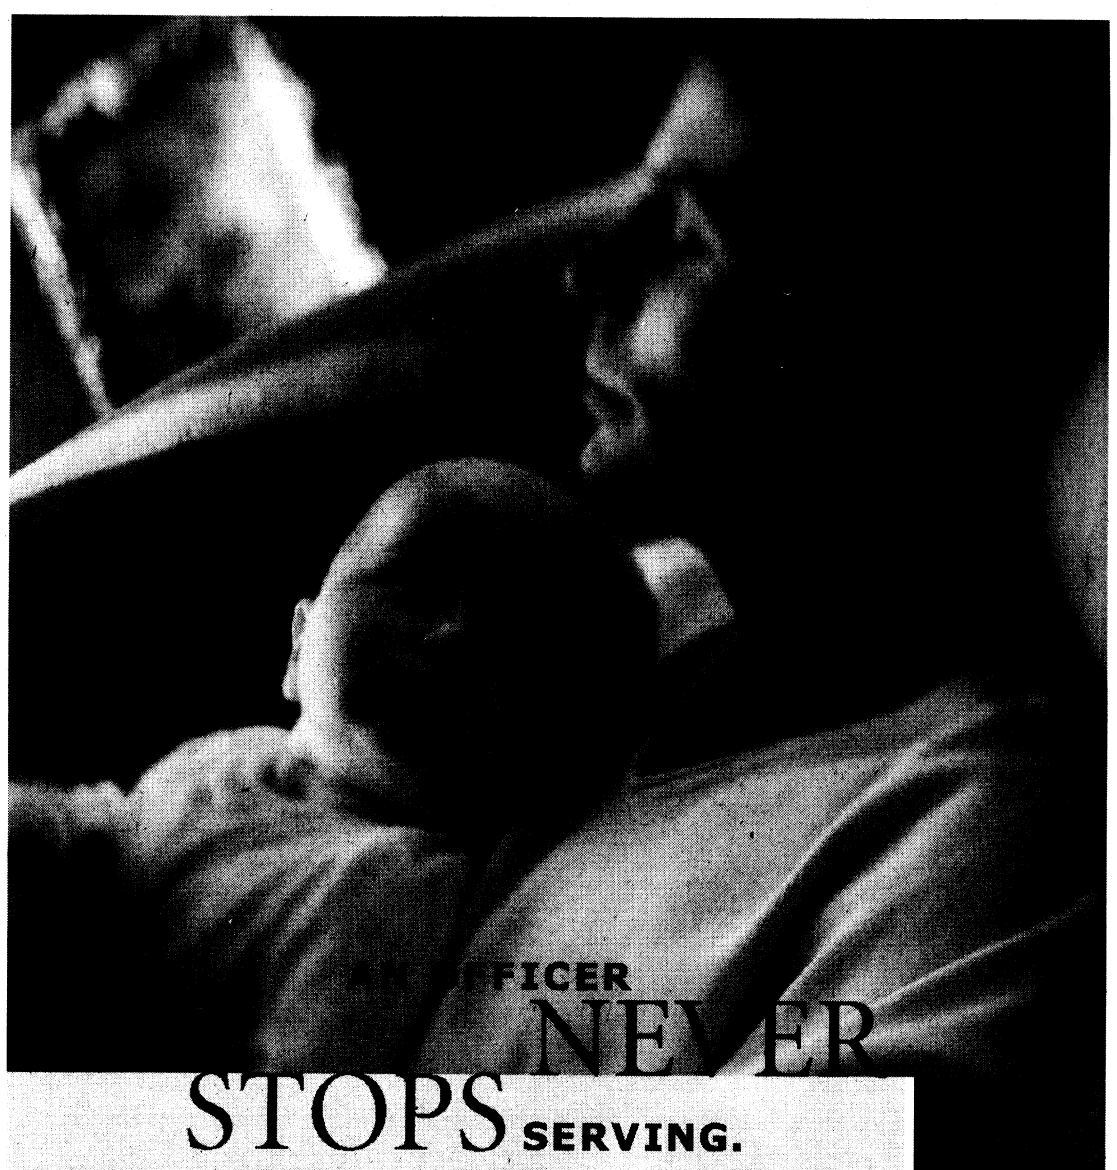
"I have learned so much through this job," Simmons said. "I decided to go into this field after I had surgery, not really knowing what it was about, and it has given me so much."

Teamwork in a high stress environment, like an operating room, is something Simmons said is critical to things running smoothly.

"Everything comes back to the staff of people you work with," she said. "They can either make your job fun and easy or a real challenge. We have a great team here. It's almost like we are a big family."



The close-knit relationships fostered by the working environment aren't the only perks of the job.



"Being in the medical field and especially stationed here, there are a whole lot of avenues that are open if you are squared away," Simmons said. "MEDDAC will send you to RN school, PA school and all kinds of medical training courses — all paid for by the Army."

With three years under her belt, she is happy with her Army experience and plans to stay in the medical field even after her remaining three years are over.

"The long hours are tough sometimes, but I like my job. It's never the same," she said. "You meet all kinds of people — the good, the bad and the crazy. And sometimes it's really cool, like when I work a C-section and get to see a baby brought into the world. It's a joy."

The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, conducted a machine gunner course last week to prepare its Soldiers for an upcoming deployment to Iraq.

The class of 92 Soldiers was composed of mostly junior enlisted Soldiers, about half of whom have never deployed.

The course covered the use of the M-240 and M-249 squad automatic weapons.

"This is essential training," said Staff Sgt. Michael Byers, an instructor. "There are a lot of new gunners and a lot of guys not used to being in a unit of action."

Throughout the week, the students learned a variety of skills relating to their mission as machine gunners.

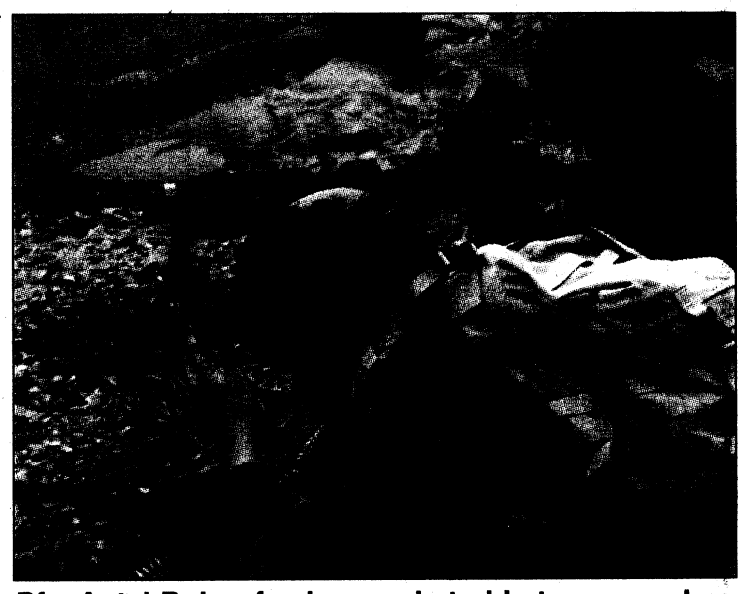
Familiarization with both weapon systems included classes in maintenance, loading, clearing and malfunction correction procedures.

Classes were also taught covering the role of the automatic weapon in a squad and on the battlefield. An important part of the classroom training was range card procedures, said Sgt. 1st Class Eric Bloom, a course instructor.

"A range card tells each person and squad what section they are responsible for," he said. "If it is set up correctly, when you move out, the platoon that moves in after you can effectively set up."

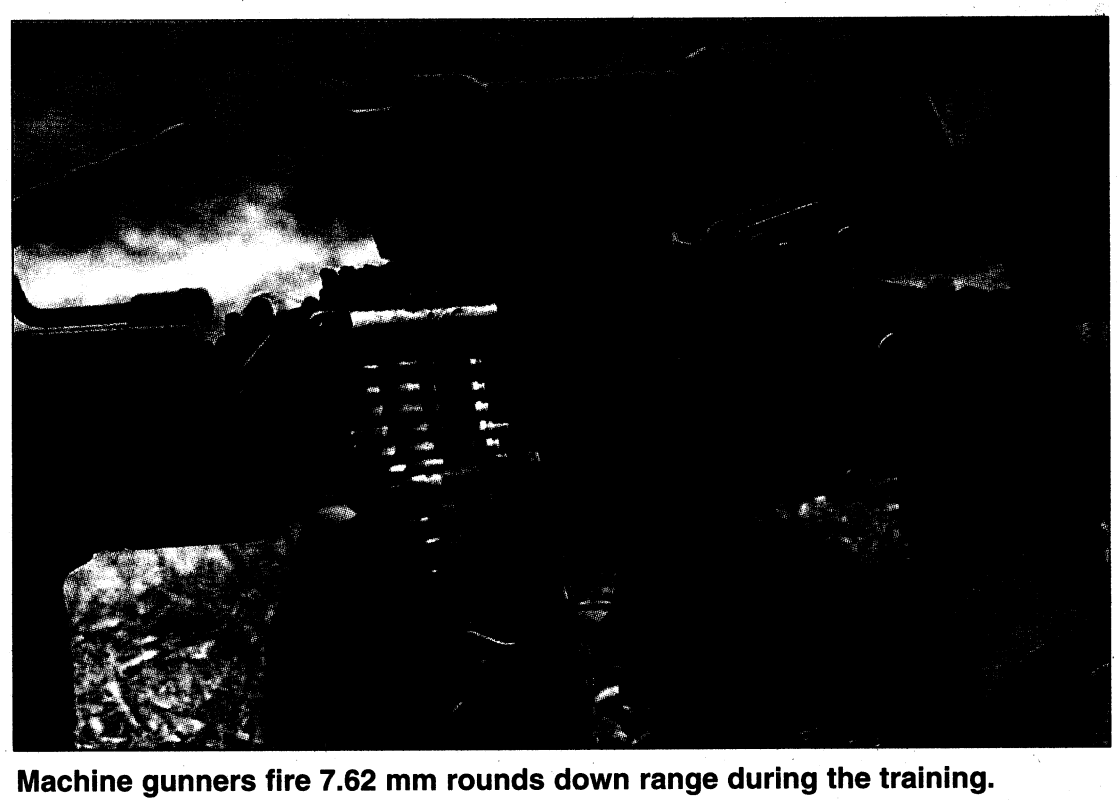
The students conducted crew and battle drills to reinforce their comfort level with the weapons and the tactics used to employ them before conducting several days of live-fire practice.

During the last day of training, Bloom said the class fired more than 70,000 7.62 mm rounds and 60,000 5.56 mm rounds.



A six-mile road march in patrol gear accustomed the new machine gunners to carrying the weight of the heavier weapons. No one fell out.

"The purpose of the SAW is to provide small arms suppression on the battlefield," Bloom said.



"I feel confident in their abilities to carry out that mission."

Pfc. David Grove deployed with the unit for the first rotation to Operation Iraqi Freedom and is gearing up for his second combat experience.

"The first time, I was brand new, right out of AIT," he said. "But after going to NTC, JRTC, training with the unit and courses like these, I feel strongly about my ability to handle different situations. It was a good course. I learned a lot."

Pfc. Antal Bokor feeds rounds to his team member, Pfc. Carlos Solis, as he fires down range.

AAEF experiments new technology, gadgetry

Unmanned vehicles, gold mines of info

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Air Assault Expeditionary Force finished the second spiral in the Future Combat System experiments at McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain area Friday.

The purpose of the experiment was to take 17 cutting-edge technologies, developed and tested in a controlled environment and tested in hundreds of simulations, and observe how that technology would work on the battlefield, said Bob Kruger, project lead with Fort Benning's Soldier Battle Lab.

All of this is being developed to protect the lives of Soldiers in combat and increase their lethal affect on the enemy. A team of 210 people worked full time to plan and carry out the experiment, at a cost of $20.5 million.

The Soldier Battle Lab, in conjunction with other agencies, focused on developing new communication systems. The technology will enable commanders to develop intelligence before Soldiers ever reach an objective and evaluate the best possible course of action.

The equipment being developed includes unmanned aerial vehicles and satellite feed that will provide commanders and troops a birds-eye-view of the battlefield, and unmanned ground vehicles that gather information in potentially dangerous areas.

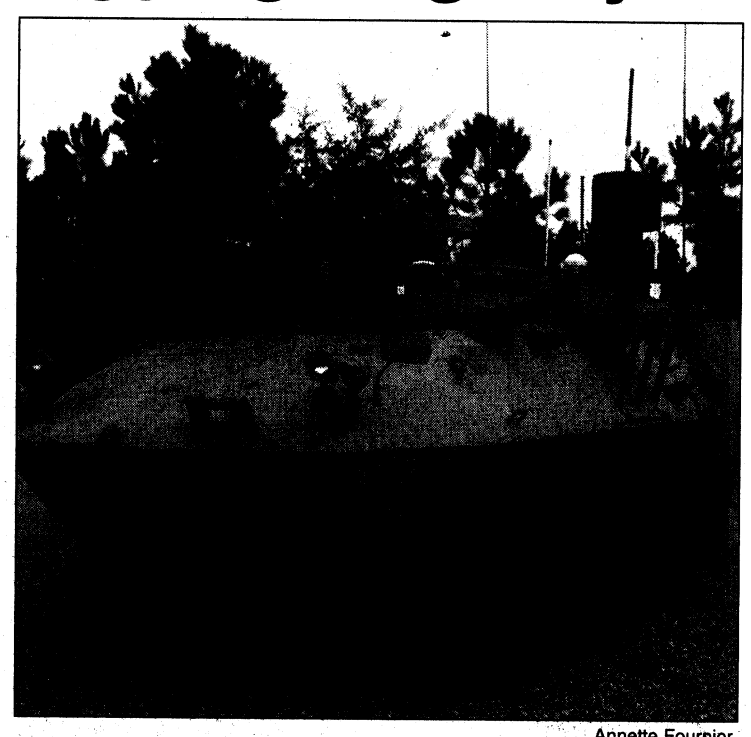
Communications between Soldiers and commanders would be improved by giving both access to a "system of databases," with an enormous amount of information, Kruger said. A commander could query the system to learn more about the battlefield situation, communicate objectives to Soldiers, and track every single troop on the ground. A Soldier could see photographic images of the layout of a mission objective before ever approaching it.

One of the unmanned ground vehicles, the prototype STTW, is a robotic tracked vehicle with a high powered camera can roll up to a building and detect movement through the walls. The robot can detect potential enemies hidden within buildings before a Soldier steps foot in the vicinity.

At this point, the technology is still in the early stages, Kruger said. The development team must figure out how to make the equipment impenetrable to moisture, dust, sand, bugs, wear and tear, and extreme heat or cold.

Right now the equipment has multiple antennas must be condensed down to one.

For the purposes of this experiment, much of the equipment was mounted on Strykers and humvees, but in the future it will be on robotic unmanned vehicles, in command stations, or compact and light enough for Soldiers to carry.



Soldiers from the EXFOR Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, participated in the 10 missions

"As a platoon leader, it gave me a better situational awareness of both mounted and dismounted troops," said 1st Lt. Dave Fischer of EXFOR Company. "I could shape how the objective would go, not let the enemy determine it. It increased the survivability of my men."

The goals and ideas behind the the project are promising, although the experimental technology was challenging to work with, Staff Sgt Christopher Merz said.

"Right now the equipment is really big, but that's because they're just prototypes. It was helpful to have near-real time information, and be able to narrow down the focus of an objective."

Insights from EXFOR Soldiers will be used to plan and improve the system for the next experiment, which will be split between Fort Benning and Fort Rucker, Ala., and is tentatively scheduled for next year.

Ground zero fireman joins Infantry

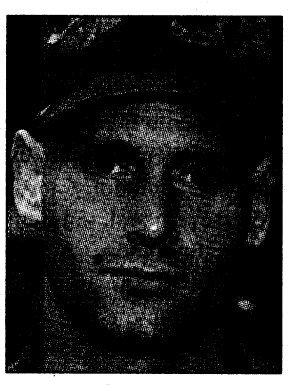
Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

As the rain poured down on Pfc. Galen Lélusché's patrol cap Friday afternoon, he said he didn't mind. He isn't made of sugar, he's seen worst days than this and that's not a lie.

Lélusché was one of the firefighters called to help with rescue efforts for 9-11 at ground zero in New York City.

A firefighter and paramedic, Lélusché was a lieutenant in a Phoenix, Ariz., fire department and a member of a National Task Force Emergency Response Rescue Team.

"I was driving to work when I got the call," Lélusché said. "Nine hours later, I was in New York. We worked for 63 hours straight before we went home. I have never seen so much devastation in my life."



He never really thought about what had happened until after he got home.

"When I was there, I just went straight to work," he said. "I didn't let myself get caught up in it. In my job, you see so much that if you let it get to you, you'll fall apart and won't be able to do your job."

After eight years on the Emergency Task Force and working with the fire department, Lélusché finally had enough. He helped with the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995 and during various earthquakes in California. A father of two, he was getting burnt out.

"The worst part was having to go respond to calls where children were involved in the accidents," Lélusché said. "Being a father I hated seeing that stuff. I wanted a change in pace."

A patriotic man, Lélusché said he has always had the upmost respect for anyone in the military.

Lélusché

"The way I saw it, if you're wearing a uniform you're doing something good," he said.

It took Lélusché two years to convince his wife, Laura, to let him join the Army.

A couple months ago, at 34, Lélusché left his family and a job that paid more than $100,000 a year in Phoenix to be a part of 4th platoon, E Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, and become an Infantryman.

"I'm not worried about the money," he said. "Money doesn't buy everything. I want to be part of a Special Forces team as a medic some time down the line, and I know that coming in as an Infantryman would better prepare me for it."

Staff Sgt. Tony Ingoldsby, Lélusché's platoon drill sergeant, knows a little about giving up a good paying job to serve his country. Ingoldsby is one of the many Reserve Soldiers who were activated in the summer to come to Fort Benning and train the plus up of the Infantry.

"What this Soldier is doing is a noble thing," Ingoldsby said. "The concept of him willingly giving up what he did to fight for us and our freedom says a lot."

Ingoldsby said Lélusché is a squared away Soldier.

"Being older and more mature, he's got experience behind him," Ingoldsby said. "He holds a leadership position in the platoon, and I know that if I need something done, all I have to do is go to him."

Lélusché graduates training Feb. 11 on Sand Hill's Kanell Field. After that he will head to Airborne School and then Fort Bragg, N.C.

He said he knows that he'll have to deploy but that doesn't bother him. He would like to go to Afghanistan when he does deploy.

"The mission there is as important as the one in Iraq and it doesn't get the same attention," he said.

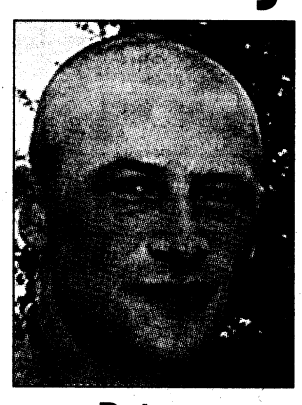
Lélusché said there have been two things he's had a problem with during his training, one of them is missing his family.

"The other is rank. I have 34 years of calling everyone sir and ma'am against me. One of these days I'm going to get smoked for it.

EXFOR Soldier saves injured trucker's life

Getting lost puts Soldier in right place to help

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff



Never did Spc. Jonathan Dotson think that getting lost would possibly earn him a Soldiers Medal.

Dotson, a grenadier with the Expeditionary Force Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was driving back to Fort Benning from Atlanta July 31 when he realized he was lost on Highway 16.

As he drove behind an 18-wheeler he noticed the semi was driving straight for a T-intersection without getting ready for the upcoming turn. At the last moment, the driver noticed he was driving straight into a field and tried to turn but it was too late and the semi flipped over onto it's side and continued to slide into a field.

Dotson immediately pulled over into the median and ran straight for the semi as he dialed 911. As he approached the semi, Dotson saw the fuel tank had busted and was spilling fuel everywhere.

"I could feel the fuel spraying my face when I got closer, but to be honest at that moment I didn't even think about it," Dotson said. "I just ran for the cabin to get the driver out."

Dotson

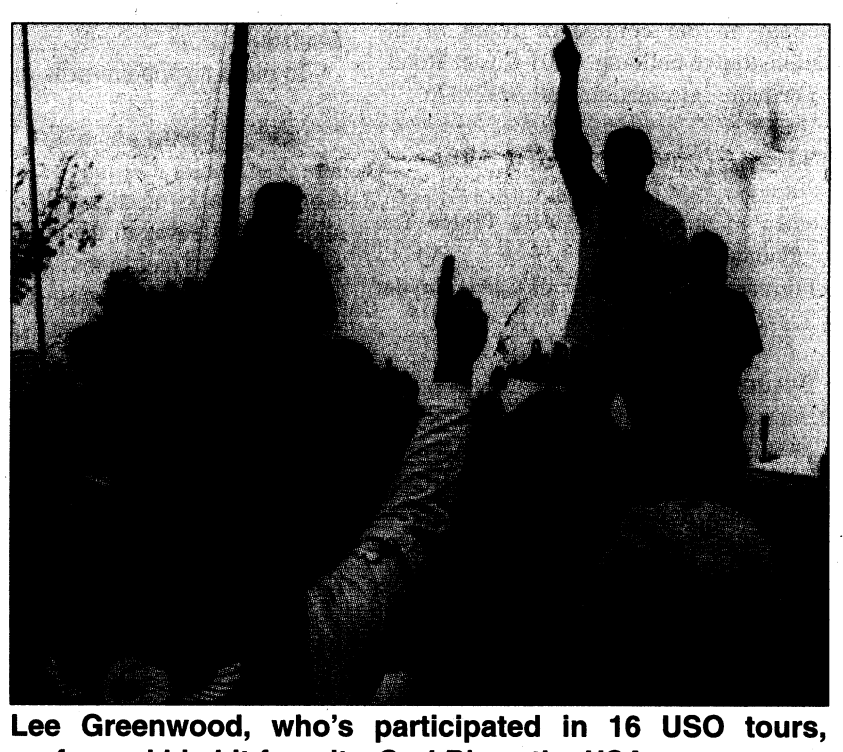
When he reached the door Dotson found the door jammed. He kicked in the window and climbed inside to find the driver still conscious but pinned to the seat by the steering wheel.

"I patted him down to see if he had any broken bones, that's when he told me he couldn't feel anything," Dotson said. "I patted different parts of his body and he kept telling me he couldn't feel anything. I just tried to keep him calm and asked him his name and to tell me about his family."

Dotson stayed in the cabin until the EMTs showed up and took over rescuing the driver. Dotson was treated at the spot for hand injuries he obtained while breaking into the cabin.

"I did the same thing anyone else would do," Dotson said. "I don't think anymore of myself for it."

His chain of command, on the other hand, thinks differently.



"He's an outstanding Soldier and our 'go to' guy," said Sgt. Kyle Sisco, Dotson's team leader.

"There's many awards we've wanted to put him in for but this gives us the chance to put him in for a Soldiers Medal."

"I don't think I deserve a Soldiers Medal," Dotson said. "Guys in Iraq and Afghanistan do greater thing and they don't get the recognition they deserve."

Currently an EXFOR Soldier, Dotson hopes to get orders to go to a unit he can deploy with soon. As an infantryman he said he wants the combat experience.

More than 5,000 Soldiers attended the rally. Here, basic trainees make free phone calls home, courtesy of Nextel. The Soldiers waited in line for hours to make calls, and individuals offered their cell phones to those waiting.

responsible for planning the motorcycle rally at the behest of Dr. Jack and Miriam Tidwell, who organized the God Bless Fort Benning event in response to ever increasing misinformation disseminated by SOA Watch.

"We're here staging our own rightful protest, if you will," Jack said during the opening ceremony shortly after noon. He recited It is the Soldier, and drew rousing applause from the crowd when he said, "It is the Soldier who gives us the freedom to protest."

The crowd, which began to trickle in before noon, paused from the dozens and dozens of free activities, including rides and games and military static displays, for the unveiling of a flag, 25 feet tall and 35 feet wide, created by area school children.

Fort Benning Scout troops presented the colors, and the mayor of Columbus, retired Col. Bob Poydasheff, addressed the crowd after greetings from Fort Benning's commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, and the mayor pro tem of Phenix City, Ray Bush.

Poydasheff made no pretense of political correctness when he chided SOA Watch as a propaganda machine "dishonest and uniformed ... with absolutely no interest in the facts."

But, he said, U.S. troops defend the rights of those protesters to express their views, and "that's the beauty of America."

More than 5,000 Soldiers attended Saturday's event, which included a concert by Lee Greenwood, best known for his anthem God Bless the USA, a clinic by the Harlem Globetrotters and the opening game of the Columbus Riverdragons basketball season.

Fourteen thousands meals were served to Soldiers and their families, and basic trainees were allowed to make a free phone call home, courtesy of Nextel.

Individuals also offered their personal cell phones to the hundreds of basic trainees who waited in line for hours to make a call.

All in all, Jacques said, the turnout and the generally festive atmosphere of the rally "sent a resounding message" to the community and the thousands of protesters visiting this weekend.

"We won't mix their negativity with our positivity," said Jacques, whose brother is a Soldier.

"In this case, might makes right."

Greenwood echoed that message when he took the stage wearing a Fort Benning T-shirt and shouted, "Peace through strength."

"It breaks my heart when I hear people saying we shouldn't be at war in the Middle East," said the Grammy Award-winning country singer, who has entertained U.S. troops in 16 USO tours.

"I say, if we fight it there, we won't have to fight it here. A free Afghanistan and Iraq is one less place terrorists can hide."

Awareness important in protection of prostate health

Danielle Wong
MCG Health System

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Prostate cancer. The very words send a chill through most men. Yet too few really understand the disease and what can be done to diagnose, prevent and treat it.

"Prostate cancer begins in the cells of the prostate gland and can spread to other parts of the body, including the bladder, rectum and bone," said Dr. James Brown, a urologic oncologist at MCG Health System.

Some of the leading risk factors for prostate cancer include:

• Age. The risk of prostate cancer increases with age.

• Diet. Some studies have found that a diet high in animal fat may increase a man's risk for developing prostate cancer, while a diet high in fruits and vegetables may decrease the risk.

• Heredity. If a man's father or an older sibling has had prostate cancer, he is at increased risk. Also, Black men are at increased risk.

There is no clear cause for prostate cancer. However, experts believe that you can reduce your risk for many types of cancer by:

• Not smoking

• Eating a low-fat, high-fiber diet

• Getting plenty of exercise

Prostate cancer may initially present with no symptoms. In fact, by the time symptoms occur, the cancer is often advanced. This is why an annual digital rectal exam and a prostate specific antigen test are recommended for men 50 and older to check for signs of prostate cancer.

Black men and those with a family history of prostate cancer are recommended to begin prostate cancer checks at age 40.

Thanks to advances in treatment techniques, a cure is possible for a large percentage of men with the disease.

Treatments include:

• Prostate removal, via traditional or laparoscopic methods,

• Radiation therapy,

• Chemotherapy,

• Investigational therapies such as cryotherapy,

• Hormone therapy.

Remember, awareness of the risk factors and the importance of annual checkups can help decrease the risk of developing prostate cancer.

Big and Rich honor troops at concert

Benning Soldiers up stage with Gretchen Wilson

Bridgett Siter

The Redneck Woman, Gretchen Wilson, and her friends Big and Rich were a no-show Friday at Fort Benning, where Soldiers waited in the rain for nearly three hours.

They hoped to make amends by offering free passes to their 8 p.m. show at the Civic Center, and those who took them up on it were ready to let bygones be bygones by the end of the night.

"That was the best concert ever, I mean ever, hands down," said one Soldier, who gathered on stage with a handful of other Soldiers and their families for the final number of the evening. The "unplugged" session with Wilson, Big and Rich, their Muzik Mafia friends and on occasion, any Soldier's child who wandered close enough to a microphone to contribute was a definite hit with the crowd.

Wilson, the evening's headliner, wowed the audience with her personal favorite, a happy-ending cheating song called When I Think About Cheating, and then paid homage to Loretta Lynn (who was redneck proud long before the term needed defending), with You Ain't Woman Enough (To Take My Man).

Sandwiched between the Muzik Mafia and Wilson, Kenny Big and John Rich carried the evening with a mixed bag of rock-heavy country and a little Sunday preaching.

The irreverent reverend Big, the duo's showman (or shaman?), encouraged his audience to "greet your neighbor" with a handshake, and ever so often, he did a little spin number with his guitar, revealing a "Love Everybody" message on the backside.

"We want you to know there are people who care," he told the Fort Benning families.

"And we want to thank you out of respect for all you do."

Delta gets slice of PIE from school

Capt. Brett Brown
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

"Half-right, face!" — words we all dread to hear, knowing the pain that is sure to follow.

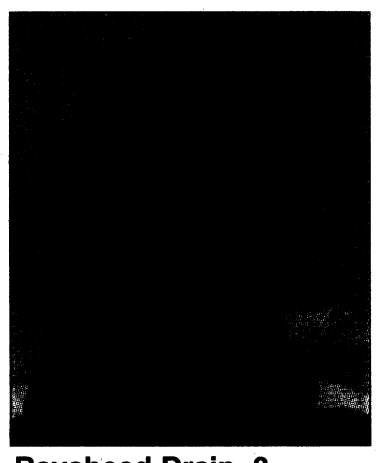
However, at Saint Mary's Magnet School, students perform the facing movement with giggles and smiles. They love doing the same things as their heroes — U.S. Army Soldiers.

Drill sergeants and cadre from the Infantry Training Brigade have spent time with local school children through Partners in Education.

The goal is to mentor the kids through reading, playing sports and introducing them to the seven Army Values. The experience has been rewarding for everyone involved.

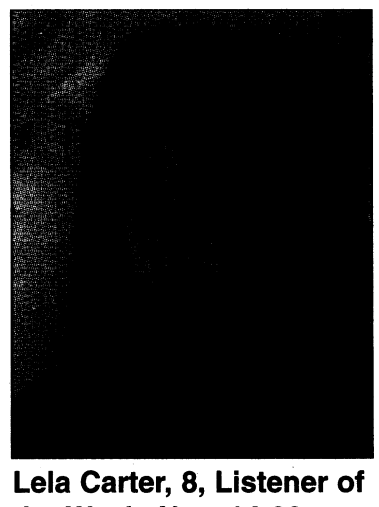
"The children can't wait to see you guys!" said Debbie McMillan, a third-grade teacher at Saint Mary's.

D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, was assigned the entire third grade at Saint Mary's Magnet School. Each month, as training dictates, the company gathers NCOs and officers to make the trip to the school. Kickball, simple drill and ceremony, and cadence calling are some of the favorite children's favorite activities.



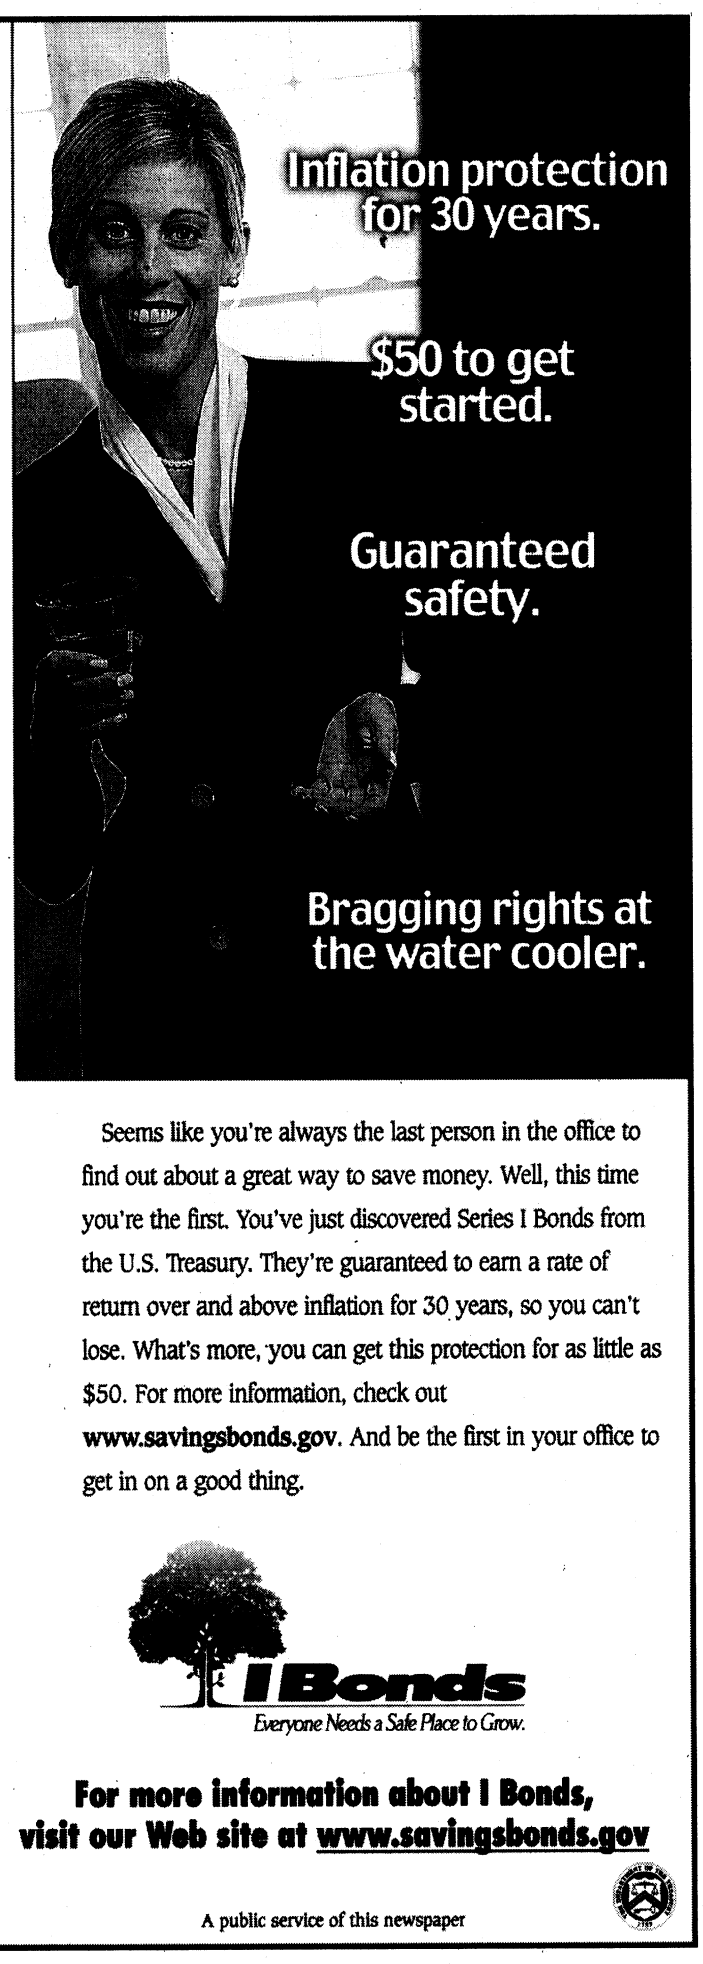
Every visit is tied into an Army value — November's value is integrity. October's value was respect, which was demonstrated by listening to the teacher, and treating other students as you want to be treated.

D Company is considering an award system to reward students who best display the Army values. Students like the "Citizen of the Month" and "Listener of the Week" could receive a badge or ribbon to symbolize their achievement.



"Who remembers what integrity is?" asked Staff Sgt. Dave Davis, at the end of another hour of PIE.

"We don't lie, cheat or steal!" the children yelled, standing rigidly at the position of attention with smiles on their faces.



Mission accomplished.

PREPARING CHILDREN FOR DEPLOYMENT

Conference offers tips

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Senior leader spouses from 3rd Brigade gathered for a conference, Nov. 16 through Thursday, to discuss topics affecting their families. Nov. 17 was dedicated to family relationships and preparing children for deployment.

Boyce Fields, a licensed clinical social worker and retired Army officer, presented a class on children and deployments to kick off the day.

Fields said the Army first recognized a Soldier's job performance was directly related to the health of his or her family — physical, emotional and even spiritual health — and conducted a study in 1983. Within two years, he said, the Army began spending money on programs for families.

Fields was invited to speak at the conference by Kimberly Coe, who had been reading articles about children and deployment and thought it would make a good class for the spouses. Staff with the Army Community Service office put her in touch with Fields, who works at the Troop Medical Clinic at Kelley Hill.

"I was just reading for myself," Coe said, "because my husband hasn't been deployed for this kind of conflict since we've had kids."

Field's presentation included information about the different variables affecting children during deployments.

"Everything affects them," he said. "Their age and stage of development, sex, emotional make-up, length of the parent's absence and the family relationships prior to the deployment all play a role."

He said parents should be aware their children can, indeed, be under stress while a parent is deployed. Children who become depressed will act differently from an adult who is depressed.

"Your child is watching you and how you respond to stress," Fields said, "and they will take their cues from you."

A spouse's ability to adjust to their Soldier's absence and expand their role at home, he said, affects how the children will cope.

He presented some of the stress-related behavior patterns parents might see with their children that should "raise a red flag."

Infants and toddlers may experience sleep and appetite changes along with increased tantrums; pre-schoolers may become irritable, whiny, distracted or begin blaming themselves for their parent's absence; school-age children may exhibit open suffering, difficulties at school, and guilt and worry; and adolescents may show open hostility, mood swings and act out.

Fields shared strategies deploying Soldiers could use to prepare their children for their absence — involving them in packing, talking openly and honestly with them and spending quality time alone with each child.

Positive physical contact, he said, was something the Soldiers shouldn't overlook.

"Boys need hugs and kisses, too," he said. "And keep the connection with your Soldier by sharing letters, tapes and photos."

Journals, he said, may be an excellent tool to help children clarify their feelings.

Fields said the at-home parent should try to cope with the Soldier's absence by maintaining routines and giving children responsibilities. Setting limits, giving clear directions and learning to say "no" will help the parent deal with the discipline issues that will inevitably arise during the deployment.

Coe said she was pleased with the information Fields presented and thought it was a great start to hopefully continuing dialogue between Fields and the brigade's spouses.

"I'm interested in having a healthy mindset," she said. "My boys are 4, 3 and 1. A year is a long time."

Fields and his colleague, Bill Sweeny, also a licensed clinical social worker, are available to the spouses and children for counseling through the care management program. Coe wants word to get out about their confidential counseling services, so spouses having difficulties don't feel as if they have to find help off-post to maintain anonymity.

In the afternoon session, Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins, family life chaplain, and the 3rd Brigade chaplain, Chaplain (Maj.) Harry Rauch talked the spouses through classes on parents as leaders and healthy families, giving them what they called "survival skills" for military families.

"What I've discovered," Hawkins said, "is that successful military families can communicate to their child that they are unique and valued and they belong in the family."

Hawkins said ideally, the strongest families look to each other and to God for support and have learned to speak, listen and cooperate with each other. The quality time the families have, he said, is always a product of the quantity of time they spend together, but sometimes the best "teachable" moments parents have with their children aren't even planned.

The healthy families, he said, have adults in charge and leave room for family members to be close or apart. Planning for change, he said, is especially important for military families.

"Give your children the gift of encouragement," Hawkins said. "That will take them a long way in meeting the challenges of life as a military family."

REFLECTIONS

Isn't it strange that, despite the tremendous achievements of modern civilization, we are more worried about our lives than ever before? Medically, we have more knowledge and technology than ever, which allows us to live healthier and longer lives. Or take security devices such as smoke detectors, food inspections, catastrophic insurance, airport safety and checking account overdraft protection all of these things are designed to allow us to live worry-free lives.

Yet, the 20th century has been dubbed the "age of anxiety" because people in the Western Hemisphere, including you and me, tend to worry about our present and future lives more than ever. Perhaps that's why

Cocklin

Bobby McFerrin's song, Don't Worry, Be Happy, was such a big hit. Remember the song? I figure it must have been the words. Certainly couldn't have been the music that made it successful. People just realize that they need some remedy, some way to deal with their worries.

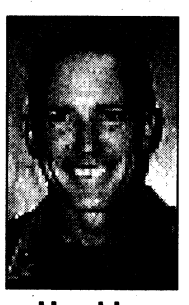
But does this message really bring a remedy? "Don't worry — be happy." That sounds easy, but how exactly do we do that? Try using that on the fellow who just fell out of the window of the 87th story of the Empire State Building: "Hey, don't worry, be happyyyyyy... " It seems to me that our worries need to be addressed at a deeper level.

A Day of National Thanksgiving was set aside in the first year of the presidency of George Washington in 1789 to remember all the blessings God had poured down upon our nation and its citizens. Just as our Pilgrim ancestors more than 100 years before that presidential proclamation, we too recognize we are only where we are because of God's goodness. So we express our thanks to God for providing us, for caring for us, for getting us through hard times. We need this remembrance as a nation. But how many of us really want to give thanks individually when we are worried about marital problems, difficulties at work, death of a loved one, health issues, challenges of raising children or deployment separation?

Thanksgiving begs us to give thanks to a loving and caring God. And we believe that it is the right thing to do on a Day of Thanksgiving. The amazing phenomenon is that even in the midst of a storm, our worries subside when we stop to say "thank you" to God. Perhaps this is because we may remember how God has helped us in times past or it may be that thanking God allows us to focus beyond ourselves and to see the bigger picture of what is going on around us.

This is one of the teaching points Jesus had in mind when one day he saw a couple of birds in a nearby tree. Jesus says, don't worry. Nothing has ever been gained by worrying. Instead, "Look at the birds of the air; they neither sow nor reap nor gather into barns, and yet your heavenly father feeds them. Are you not of more value than they?" He wanted us to say to ourselves, "Yes, if God takes such good care of a bird, he will certainly take better care of me."

Our focus can be so narrowly limited to our own circumstances that we truly believe we have nothing for which to be thankful. Thankfulness is an attitude formulated in the mind and only has a chance of surviving when we force ourselves to get beyond ourselves to see the bigger picture.



There are always those better off than us and those who are worse off than us — we are somewhere in the middle. And God loves all of us the same and extends his love and mercy unconditionally. May our state of mind be one of thanksgiving, not only on this fourth Thursday in November, but each day of the year. Truly the attitude of gratitude is in our control, for it is a state of mind!

What's your list of thanksgiving look like this year?

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

It's a great month to be in the military, isn't it? Just about the time that you recover from the benefits of a Veterans Day four-day weekend you run smack into another four-day holiday with Thanksgiving. So for all the overtime you never got paid, all the birthdays and anniversaries you missed, all the late nights and early mornings you endured, and for many of you, all the bullets you've dodged ... kick back if you can, and enjoy a well-deserved round of football, food and fun. And should you choose to do what the Pilgrims did 400 years ago, so much the better!

You realize that the Pilgrims were ahead of their time, don't you? When they paused to give thanks in the midst of some perilous times, there were no Ph.D.'s in their midst. There were no mental health counselors. Dr. Phil hadn't even been syndicated yet. But somehow they knew that to stop and give thanks to their creator, and to stop and celebrate divine blessings with friends, were the most important things they could do on that first Thanksgiving Day.

Hawkins

Our history lesson is clear: "Tough times don't last, but tough people do ... when they turn to God and count their blessings."

This Thanksgiving Day, what will your prayers of thanksgiving be? What blessings will you choose to count? Where will you exercise the power of optimism in your life? Each year, I recount what I'm most thankful for in life, and the list tends to look the same. It's not because I'm boring — I like to think that I enjoy a good bit of variety in my life.

The list looks the same because I'm most appreciative of things that are timeless, unchanging and enduringly important! This is my list:

First of all I'm thankful for my freedom. There is no substitute for being in the Army, traveling the world, seeing the good, the bad and the ugly and then coming home to realize, truly, "there is no place like home."

Freedom is never free, and I'm grateful for all giving some, and some giving all, to make this the land of the free and the home oF the brave.

Second, I'm thankful for my family. There is no greater joy than slipping into my children's bedroom at night, their eyes closed, chest rising and falling silently with each breath, knowing that they have everything they truly need: love, laughter, food and a roof. To be married to my best friend, to have healthy children, to have the means to support them, I know what the writer of the country song meant when he sang, "And the view I like the best ... is from my front porch looking in ..."

Last, I'm thankful for my faith. Freedom is wonderful. Family is priceless. But faith lasts forever.

That's what I'm thankful for: freedom, family and faith ... how about you, "pilgrim?"

Turkey trot lands gobblin' good time

10K race tough haul through turkey terrain

It was a warm and humid morning as runners took their mark, ready to give all they had in a challenging 10K race Saturday at Kelley Hill.

The annual Turkey Trot, sponsored by the 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, was designed to provide an environment where battalion members could enjoy time together in a relaxing and fun environment, said Michelle Culliver, one of the event's organizers.

The event started at 10 a.m. with a 100-meter children's run. Ribbons were awarded to the top three finishers in each age division.

About 15 children participated in the event.

"We wanted to build cohesion in the battalion for families, Soldiers and everyone else," said Kemberly Brantley, another race organizer.

"We work all day and this is a time to relax and get to know the families before we deploy."

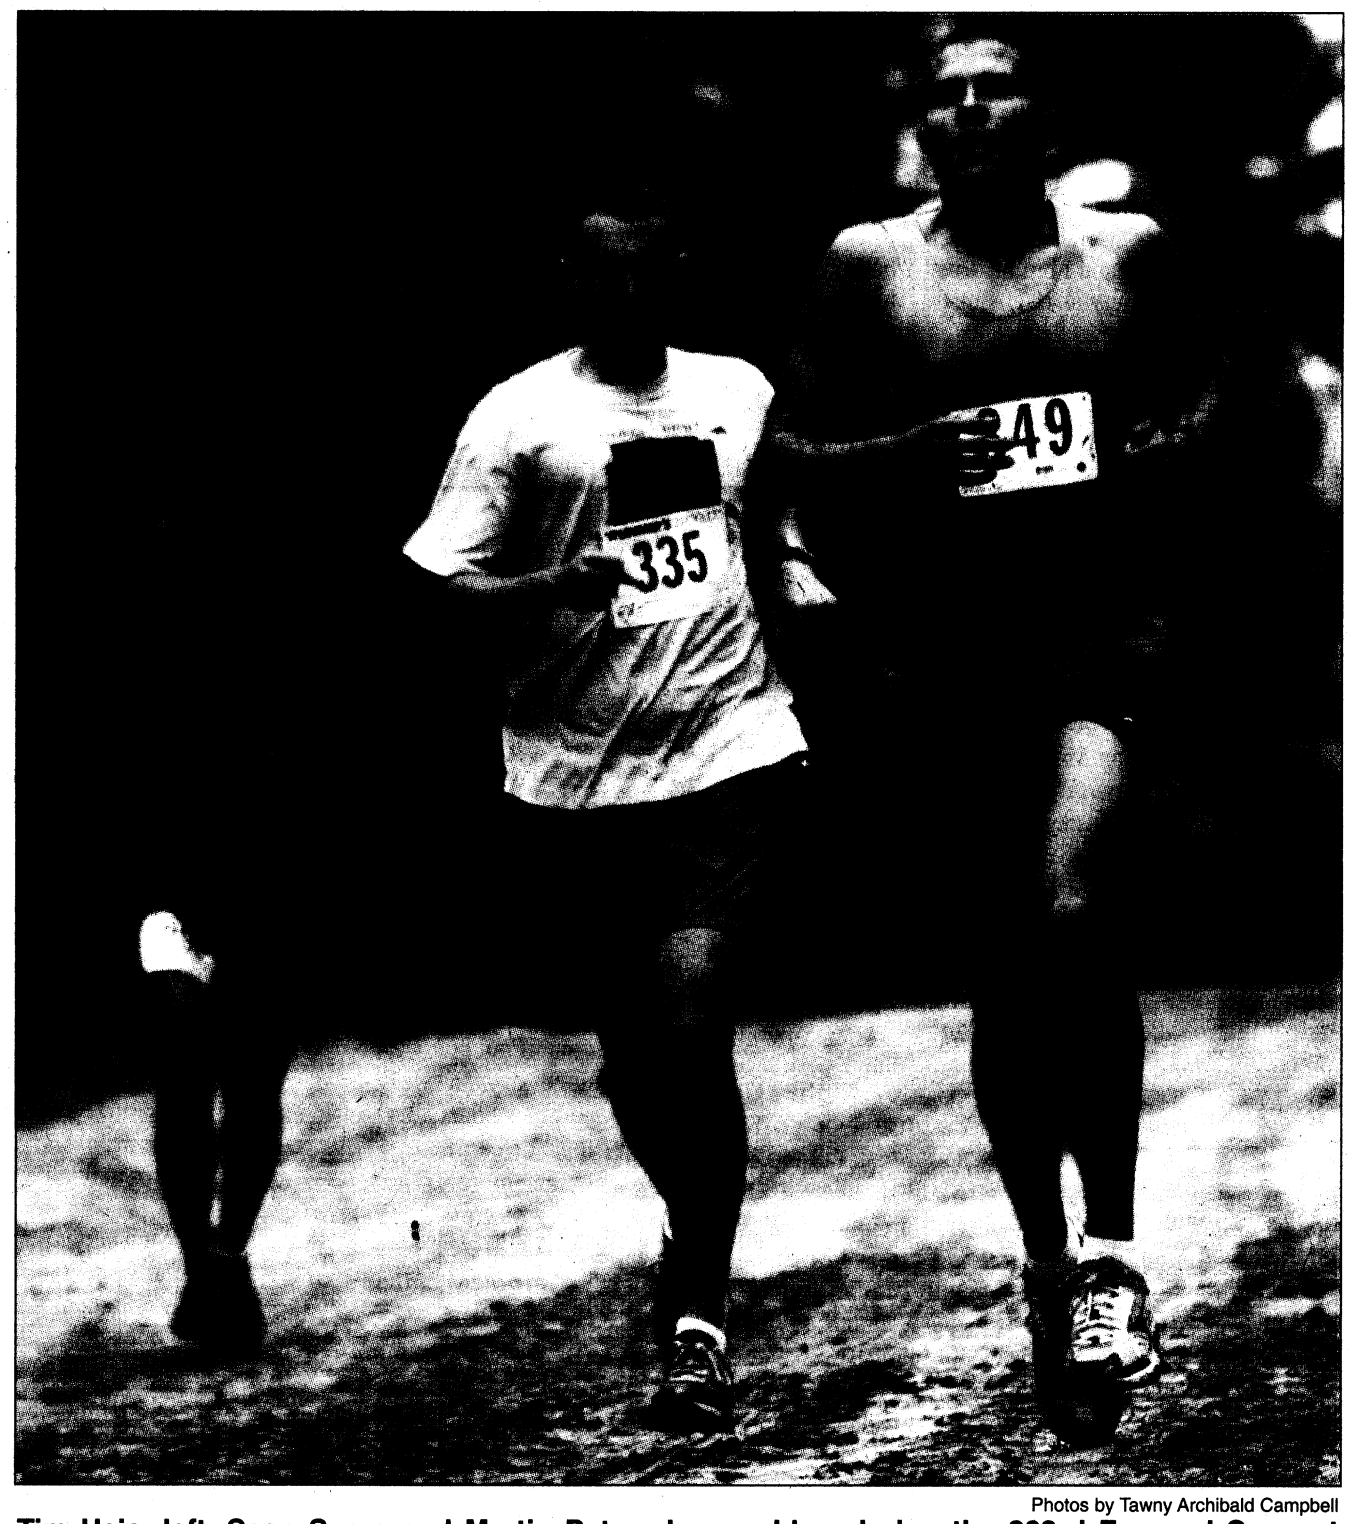
At 10:30 a.m., 69 runners began a course that was described as muddy, sandy, hilly and extremely challenging.

The race course left the company area and traveled along the main road down to a tank trail that wound around Twilight Pond.

After circling the pond, runners came back out on to the main road, turned right and ran down beyond the underpass to the old Cusseta Highway, where they turned around and ran back to the company area.

Jasmine Davis is awarded a first-place ribbon after winning the 100-meter run in her age group.

"The course was tough and muddy, and hilly and it was humid and muggy and anything else," said Shannon Swords, the overall winner, with a time of 37 minutes flat.



"The hills were the toughest part. That last hill was a bear."

Swords, a seasoned runner who ran for four years with the All-Army Track Team and then ran for four more years with the All-Army Cross Country Team, held a controlled lead throughout the race and finished strong.

"That was the toughest 10K course I have ever raced," said Sharon Kircher, who finished second in the women's division with a time of 50:49. "It was just hills, trails and hills."

While the adults were running, the children participated in kid activities, such as making festive Thanksgiving

Class VI makes Bulls see red

14th CSH boosts record to 7-1 in post football league

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

A couple of long bombs to the hands of a readied receiver was all it took for Class VI to wound the Bulls' ego and walk away with the victory.

The 14th Combat Support Hospital's Class VI team beat the Bulls of the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 21-6 in flag football action Nov. 17th at Engineer Field.

The fast-paced, physical game started out with a great play for the Bulls when D.J. Wood made an interception within the first minute of the game to gain possession of the ball and control of the field. Leon Johnson took the pigskin and ran a four-yard quarterback sneak for the first touchdown of the game and the lead.

Class VI's Chris Harris made a 40-yard run on the next play to get to their own five-yard line. The team was able to push forward only one yard before the Bull's Kevin Jernigan made another interception at the one-yard line and pushed for a 14-yard gain toward the Bull's goal line.

The ball changed hands several times as teams sweated and strained to make any headway. Class VI grabbed the ball, and Ross Seidel pressed his luck by keeping it in a quarterback sneak, which paid off in a big way — a 15-yard gain.

With the confidence that comes from a first and 10, Seidel threw a long bomb to Harris for a 50-yard touchdown.

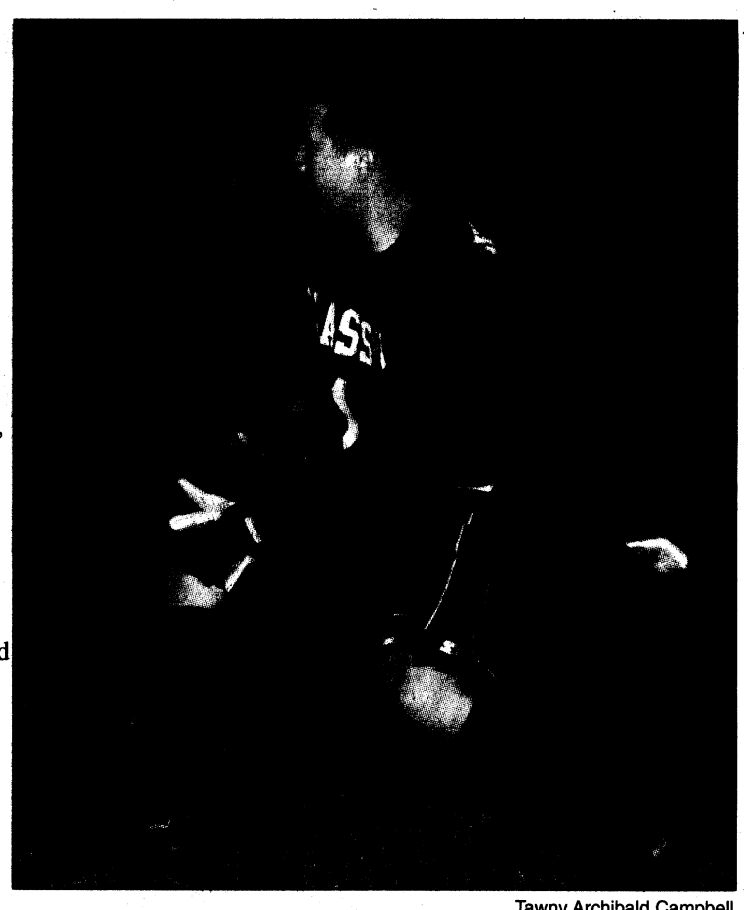
The first half ended with the score tied, 6-6.

After the half, Class VI had the Bulls penned.

A Seidel to Dewey Williams pass resulted in a 15-yard run toward the goal line minutes into the second half; however, Williams' flags were pulled one yard before he could claim the touchdown.

Class VI could smell the points, and with a pitch from Seidel to Thomas Tucker the score grew to 12-6.

After a 60-yard pass from Seidel to Harris, the Bulls were unable to push Class VI past the 20-yard line as flags flew and penalties abounded.



A technical on the Bulls, for pass interference, handed Class VI two more points on a safety. Moments later, Cornell Williams took the ball in for a touchdown, and after a successful one-point conversion, the score was 21-6 and the fate of the Bulls was sealed.

"We got the lead in the beginning and got an interception to accomplish a touchdown in the first half," Johnson said. "They just came back and scored after the half. They played a better game than us and had two deep throws for touchdowns."

Anthony Clark, Class VI's coach, said his team started out slow, throwing three interceptions on consecutive possessions, which put them down 6-0, but the throwing power and speed of his team was what helped them capture the win.

"Ross Seidel, our quarterback, threw a

AMU wants Soldiers for pistol team

Quality shots to compete in major matches

Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. AMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is looking for a few good shooters.

The highly competitive unit is putting out its annual call for Soldiers who are interested in competing in pistol competitions in the summer of 2005.

"We do this every year," said Sgt. 1st Class Roger C. Jacobson, NCOIC of the USAMU Service Pistol Team.

"Soldiers who wish to represent the U.S. Army in pistol competition, marksmanship instruction and recruiting assistance are welcome to apply. This is a highly visible, fast-paced mission."

Formed in 1956 by President Dwight D. Eisenhower to raise the standards of marksmanship throughout the U.S. Army, the Army Marksmanship Unit is assigned to the Accessions Support Brigade, U.S. Army Accessions Command, of Fort Monroe, Va.

The Army Marksmanship Unit trains its Soldiers to win competitions and enhances combat readiness through train-the-trainer clinics, research and development.

The world-class Soldier-athletes of the USAMU also promote the Army and assist recruiters in attracting young Americans to enlist in the Army.

The Army Pistol Team is always looking for active Army Soldiers who are highly motivated, disciplined and competitive by nature, Jacobson said, adding that no previous competitive shooting experience is required.

Soldiers in the rank of staff sergeant and below with fewer than 15 years of service, who obtain approval from their commanders can travel to Fort Benning in April, at the expense of the Army Marksmanship Unit, to participate in the initial training.

The Soldiers are then trained in advanced pistol marksmanship skills.

Once that is complete, pistol team officials will select shooters to participate in the Interservice Championships in June and the National Matches in July.

After the three-month tour, Soldiers return to their units with invaluable marksmanship training that can be harvested by unit trainers to improve the marksmanship skills of their Soldiers, Jacobson said.

Soldiers who are interested in the developmental pistol shooter program, can call Jacobson at 545-7022 or 545-3893 or DSN 835-7022 or e-mail Roger.Jacobson@usaac.army.mil.

For more information on the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, contact the USAMU's Public Affairs Officer Paula J. Randall Pagán at 545-5436, paula.pagan@usaac.army.mil or visit the USAMU Web site at www.usarec.army.mil/hq/amu/.

Sports stars role models, like it or not

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

"I am not a role model," said NBA star Charles Barkley years ago in a Nike commercial. I beg to differ, Sir Charles. Unfortunately, you are a role model, whether you like it or not.

As my 5-year-old son becomes more interested in sports, I've come to realize there is a dearth of athletes who I really want him to admire, to model himself after. Common sense tells me my husband and I are his true role models, but society also tells me athletes are role models.

While there are many athletes to admire, there are also many who aren't quite living up to their media-imposed "role model" titles.

Take Ricky Williams, for example. A star tailback for the Miami Dolphins, Williams tested positive three times for marijuana. So, Williams abruptly retired in July, saying he was quitting football so he could smoke pot. Um, hello? I really don't know if Williams knew what he was doing when he made this statement, when the kids who admire him were listening.

Anyone who follows football knows Ricky Williams. Any kid who is a Dolphins fan knows the name Ricky Williams like they know the name Dan Marino. Those same kids know why Williams left football. And unfortunately, those kids who looked up to Williams, maybe imagined themselves like him someday.

Now Williams is trying to get reinstated in the NFL. I'm against it, but if he undergoes a drug treatment program and speaks about the mistake he made, he can right a lot of wrongs he made.

What shocked me the most was Olympic gold medalist swimmer Michael Phelps' drunken driving arrest recently. The Olympics was centered around 19-year-old Phelps. Kids everywhere knew Michael Phelps. They cheered him on to victories. He was the poster boy for success, with endorsements flying in and magazine covers galore.

He made a mistake. What athletes need to realize is when they do screw up, everyone is going to know. Phelps has since issued an apology on his Web site and is speaking about it to kids. He said in a visit to a Boys and Girls Club, "It was extremely hard to stand in front of kids who I let down, who looked up to me."

And he wasn't only talking his height. At least Phelps is owning up to his mistake, and maybe he can make a difference to kids.

The one athlete I will make sure my son looks up to is Pat Tillman. Tillman turned down a $3.6 million contract with the Arizona Cardinals to enlist in the Army in May 2002. Most people would not do this — but Tillman was not like most people. He felt a need to serve his country, to make a difference. Tillman made the ultimate sacrifice for his country. He is a true athlete, one who could walk away from the money and glory.

All athletes should model themselves after Tillman, for there is no better example of a role model in athletics.

MEGA $88 USED CAR! SALE!

Used cars to be sold for as low as $88 TOTAL PRICE!

Ex: 1986 Ford Escort. Stk#4286244, Sale Price $88.

Dealer swamped with fresh trades! Must take immediate action to reduce inventory before Monday 9 pm!

COLUMBUS, GA–Don Wood, Used Car Manager of Bill Heard Chevrolet, just announced plans to hold a eighty-eight dollar used car and truck sales event this Monday! Tons of trades from the last few months have resulted in an overstock of trade-ins. "Due to an increase in our sales, trades have increased at a tremendous rate," Wood said. "Now, we must reduce the number of cars and trucks on our used lot or face the consequences."

During this eighty-eight dollar sale every used car and truck will be sold for below anything we have ever offered. Wood said, "Our customers should find these prices so low they may sell out in one day."

Every car is on sale, first come first served, and no bidding necessary! So get here early to get a shot at cars for only eighty-eight dollars. All cars will be on display at Bill Heard Chevrolet, located at 3615 Bill Heard Parkway, Columbus. Sale will begin at 8:00am each morning. All vehicles will be opened so that buyers may inspect the vehicles for one hour before the sale begins. Whoever is sitting behind the wheel at 9:00am when the prices are posted on the windshield will be given first opportunity to purchase the vehicle at the sale price. This innovative approach to selling used vehicles will make it easy and quick for anybody in the market for a good used vehicle to get a great car or truck at a very low price with no hassle.

"Bill Heard will take over your old trade-in loan balance and pay it off once a deal is made! Regardless of condition" Wood said. "We also have several finance managers who will help buyers arrange low-cost financing. We've got tons in inventory to choose from. You're invited regardless of your credit history. We want to remind everyone that it is a one-time sale only. When our inventory has been reduced, we will remove the sale prices and return to normal operations, and at eighty-eight dollars you can imagine the demand." You can preview the cars at Bill Heard Chevrolet. Any questions can be directed to 1-866-686-2326 at Bill Heard Chevrolet in Columbus.

"We're Selling Cars for $88!"

CG stresses safety

Motorcycle deaths cause officials to emphasize safety equipment, training

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

After two Fort Benning Soldiers died in motorcycle accidents in a one-week period in November, post officials are pushing a strong safety message and enforcing post regulations governing safety equipment and rider training.

Starting today, Soldiers operating motorcycles without a valid license, equipment and documentation of completion of an approved safety course, will be turned over to their chain of command immediately, ticketed and the motorcycle will be impounded.

Family members and civilians with a valid license and equipment but no safety card will be escorted to post boundaries and informed they have to attend the safety course before operating a motorcycle on post. If they are not licensed or are not wearing proper safety gear, the motorcycle will be impounded and they will be ticketed.

Properly licensed and attired riders will be allowed on post the day of the safety course provided they have a

It's safe to say, he has more heart than most 9-year-olds. Evan Schneider, the California boy who underwent heart transplant surgery at 1 month, put his whole heart into the pursuit of his dream to become an Army Ranger.

Last week, Pfc. Schneider attended basic training, breezed through jump school and earned his Ranger tab faster than you can say hooah. Almost.

"It's a blessing, an incredible blessing," said Cristy Schneider of her family's five-day stay at Fort Benning, the fulfillment of Evan's request to the Make-A-Wish Foundation of San Diego.

Despite "one small rejection incident," the third-grader from Murrieta, Calif., is in excellent health, his father said.

Indeed, it takes stamina and a healthy heart to endure the fast-paced training schedule Evan and his 14-year-old brother, Austin, endured last week. The boys and their parents, Cristy and Steve, spent Nov. 22-25 with Soldiers in various Fort Benning units.

Before 8 a.m. Monday, Evan was issued BDUs and combat boots on Sand Hill, where he completed a condensed basic training and tried his hand at being a drill sergeant. By lunchtime, he'd earned his jump wings.

Benning Soldier dies

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

A Fort Benning Soldier died Nov. 21 at Landstuhl Regional Medical Center in Germany from injuries he suffered while preparing for combat operations in Afghanistan Nov. 17.

Sgt. Michael C. O'Neill, 22, of Mansfield, Ohio, was assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, as an automatic rifleman. He was wounded when a grenade he was carrying was accidentally detonated.

It was O'Neill's third deployment in support of Operation Enduring Freedom since 2002. He also served in Iraq last year.

"He was the type of man that, no matter what, if you needed help or just to talk, he'd be there for you," said Sgt. James Campbell, who served in B Company with O'Neill.

Campbell and O'Neill attended Ranger School and Primary Leadership Development Course together, and Campbell said "it's tough to imagine never seeing him again.

"In my eyes, Mike was everything a man and a Ranger should be," he said.

O'Neill, who enlisted in June 2001, is survived by his parents, George and Holly O'Neill, and a brother, George K. O'Neill.

He was awarded the Bronze Star Medal and the Meritorious Service Medal.

A memorial service was conducted Monday at the Ressurection Parish in Mansfield.

O'Neill will be buried at Arlington National Cemetery in Arlington, Va.

Wisconsin Soldiers send vehicles to port

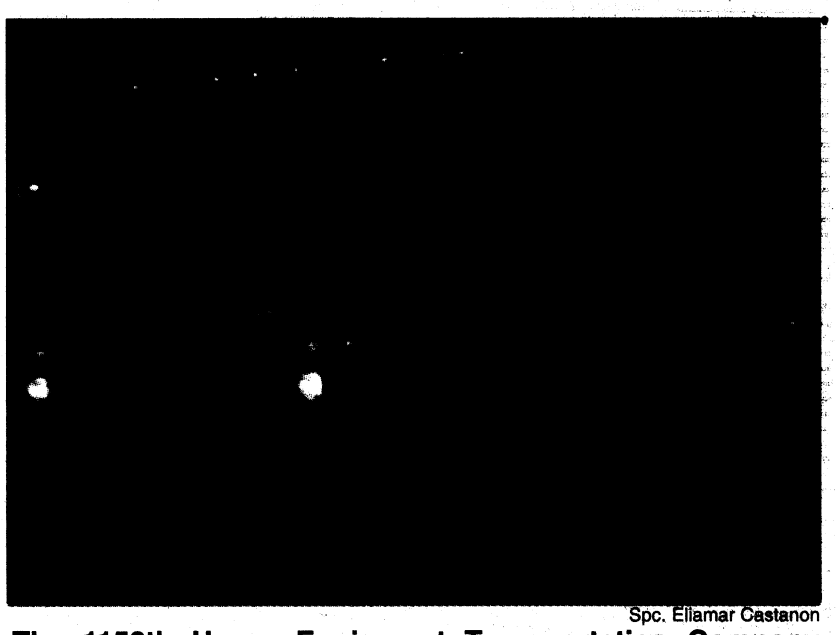
The 1158th Heavy Transportation Company began loading 96 heavy equipment transporters Monday to drive to Charleston, S.C., where they'll be loaded on boats and shipped overseas for the company's support to Operation Iraqi Freedom.

The 1158th, Wisconsin's largest National Guard unit, mobilized in October. They'll deploy just in time for unit rotations in Iraq.



"We'll be transporting Abrams tanks and all other heavy equipment for units moving out of Iraq to Kuwait and from Kuwait into Iraq," said 1st Sgt. Richard Bergemann. "Our orders say we'll have boots on the ground for (a year) but there's a possibility of an extension."

The 1158th consists of four platoons of drivers and one maintenance platoon. Soldiers from the Alabama National Guard will join the 1158th before it deploys.

This is not the first mobilization for the 1158th Soldiers. Many of them returned less than a year ago from a mobilization that supported other deployed transportation units. Nearly 300 were mobilized in January 2003 and sent to Fort McCoy, Fort Knox, Ky., and Fort Irwin, Calif.

"Many Soldiers had to volunteer for this mobilization because they are only allowed to deploy for 24

Avoid Christmas crime

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The frenzy of the holiday season is upon us. The day after Thanksgiving, dubbed Black Friday, is the beginning of packed parking lots, cranky shoppers in lengthy lines, and the often repeated phrase, "credit or debit?"

As you race frantically from store to store to find the perfect gift, it would be wise to remember that criminals are out for Christmas, too.

Here are some important tips to remember when you're out shopping:

Don't carry a large amount of cash, and never show that you have a lot of cash on you.

Be conscious of your personal space and keep your wallet or purse close to your body and securely closed, and check it occasionally to make sure everything is still there.

In the jostling of crowded stores, pickpockets can sneak away with more than you bargained for.

When you park, find a spot in a well-lighted area, preferably with the driver's side door facing the entrance to the store. Keep your purchases out of sight in the trunk.

When approaching your car, be aware of the people around you, and women especially should look in the back seat and under the vehicle before unlocking it.

Once home with your purchases, there are other tips to keep your home safe. The peak time for home burglaries is the month of December, according to www.crimeprevention.org.

While it looks festive to leave curtains open to show off a beautiful tree, seeing valuables wrapped in pretty paper can be tempting for burglars. Keep the curtains closed and don't put presents under the tree until you're ready to open them. When hiding presents, its not just from the kids.

When leaving your house during the holidays, keep your lights on or install a timer to turn them on when no one is home.

Leaving the TV or a radio on also helps an empty home appear occupied.

After the wrapping paper is in the trash and the eggnog is gone, there are still steps you can take to avoid theft. If you set the box for your new DVD player on the curb for the trash, it sends a message about the type and value of electronics in your home. Break down boxes and put them inside a trash bag before setting them out.

Also copy the serial numbers of electronics and write identifying information such as your name or driver's license number on the back or bottom of valuable gifts.

Let's face it. Most of us will spend entirely too much on presents anyway. After all that, take extra effort to protect your belongings. With a little caution, awareness and common sense you can have a theft-free holiday.

Finding perfect gift challenging

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Have you ever noticed how hard it is to shop for Christmas presents? Especially when the list is longer than the Snake River that runs through my home state. I have a HUGE family. I have 30 nieces and nephews, 22 in-laws, four siblings (two who are pregnant), two parents, my husband, a daughter and a partridge in a pear tree.

The strategy I decided to use this year began last Dec. 26. The day after Christmas I put into place a plan I hoped would alleviate any problems. The plan was simple and can be boiled down to one word — clearance.

My plan was to spend the year looking through clearance racks, and when I found a gift screaming the name of someone on my list, I would fork over the meager amount, cross that person's name off the list and move on. The idea has worked — kind of.

As I started to wrap my Christmas purchases, I realized I had gifts for all but two of the kids, but only one adult was marked off. Obviously, my perfect plan is still lacking. We are now in December, and my list is fairly long.

When I ask my family what they want for Christmas, I always get the answer, "I don't know."

When I press them, they give outrageous wish lists, and when I tell them to think reasonably, they just shrug and say anything is good. It wasn't until my sister asked me what I wanted that I realized my gift-giving dilemma was also a gift-getting dilemma.

Personally, I think I should stop trying so hard. I can't remember what I got last year. What makes me think they are going to remember either? Sometimes I think the gift you give is more important to you than the person receiving it. They say it is the thought that counts. I know I like the thought more than the gift.

I know. Maybe I'll just send everyone a portrait of me and my family, who are 1,700 miles away, so they won't forget me. That, or I can always stress out, wait till the last minute and give them a gift card. Or, I can get nice popcorn tins at the store and plan a new strategy for next year.

Benning makes wish come true

They say you're never so tall as when you stoop to help a child. That being the case, there are a lot of very tall Soldiers on post.

I know because over the past few weeks I had the pleasure and privilege of planning an itinerary for Evan Schneider, a 9-year-old boy sponsored by the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

When I began sketching out a schedule for Evan's visit, I started with 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, a unit that hosted a similar visit earlier this year.

"Well, SURE! We'd be glad to put him in a Bradley," they said. "And a Stryker too."

Not wanting to be outdone, the 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Parachute Inf. Regt., volunteered their 34-foot towers. After all, there was already a class scheduled for training there. What's one more jumper? And from the riggers?

"Come on down!" they said.

Next, the "Army Ranger" part of the wish. "Hello? Ranger School?"

"You've got what on the schedule? He asked to do what? We're light ... we don't have Bradleys and tanks. We've got rappel towers though … AND night observation devices."

Next on the wish list was a tank. Enter 3rd Brigade.

"Yeah, we've got tanks, but I don't think we can take him for a ride," they said. "Airborne School is letting him do what? 29th is doing what? Um. Let me call you back."

A half hour later, a ride down a tank trail was penciled into Evan's agenda, compliments of 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt.

On the day of his visit, to his delight, the tank even had Evan's name stenciled on it.

Evan set a record at 30th Adjutant General Bn. (Reception) by inprocessing and getting promoted to corporal in two hours.

The cast of characters went on, including AAFES, the 75th Ranger Regt. and Thanksgiving dinner at 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

People who weren't even in the e-mail string took up a collection so Evan would have a pair of boots.

USAMU hosted a visit. Evan and his brother got to try on an Olympic bronze medal and took pictures with some of the best shooters in the world.

The 14th Combat Support Hospital brought out their moulage kits and the boys "treated" some very realistic looking victims.

In the end, one wide-eyed little boy who dreams about being an Army chaplain, an Army Ranger and an Army medic while riding in a tank and looking through NODs got his wish, and a lot more.

Evan's dream came true thanks to a lot of people, Soldiers and civilians, who stooped to help him.

You were considerate enough to see his brother standing in the background and got him involved in the action.

You took the time to show the Schneiders what you work with and while doing so showed what you're made of.

You know who you are.

It may not show in a mirror, but you're ten feet tall.

And rest assured in the eyes of one very special little boy and his family, you are.

LETTER

Mom says thanks

My son is in the Basic Combat Training Brigade at Fort Benning.

I wanted to take this opportunity to thank Nextel and the people letting the trainees use their phones. No contact during basic training is hard, especially during a holiday. The phone call on Thanksgiving was a very special blessing and I truly thank you.

I enjoy reading The Bayonet online and have learned a great deal from your newspaper.

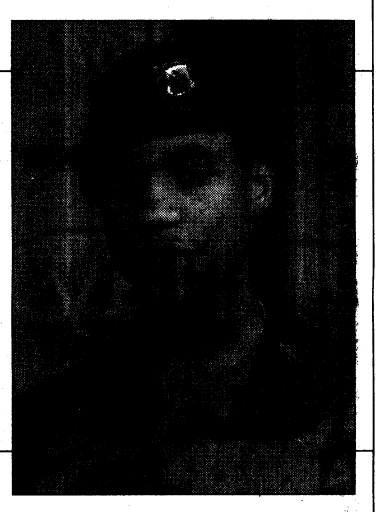
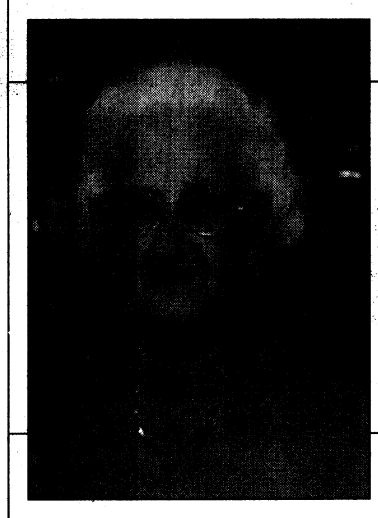
VARIOUS VOICES

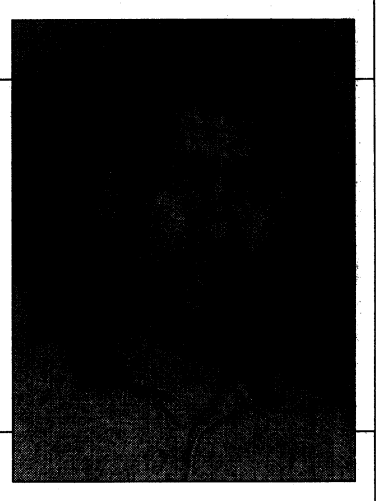
Who is the hardest person to buy Christmas gifts for, and why?



Suella Davis, family member — "My father-in-law is the hardest person to shop for because he's a grumpy old man, and he's never satisfied. He gets upset if you ask him what he wants, but then he never likes what you do get him. Either way he's fussing."



Spc. Joseph Minzak, 36th Engineer Group — "My sister is impossible to shop for. I can't nail down what she likes because she has a million different styles. If you pick something, she'd prefer something else. But she's nice and doesn't return anything I get her."



Myrtle Berklite, family member — "I have teenage grandsons and a granddaughter who are the hardest to shop for. They want to see what they're getting before I buy it. So this year, I will give them all money and forget about it."

Spc. Elroy Willridge, 209th Forward Support Company — "My 4-year-old daughter is difficult to shop for. No matter what I get her she wants something else. She likes a present for about one minute and then it's like, 'I want this, I want that.' I have no idea what to get her."

Ida Max, family member — "My teenage grandkids are the hardest to shop for. They're too big for toys and too little for anything else. The things I want to get them, they don't like."

Sgt. 1st Class Juan Vendrell, 306th Field Artillery — "My wife is hard to shop for because she's kind of picky on what she likes. It's tricky to guess what she wants, so I still haven't bought anything for her yet."

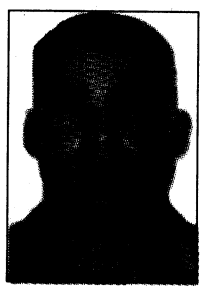
Instructors compete for Black Hat of the Year

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

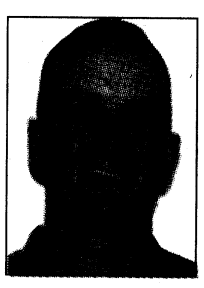


The 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment's Black Hat of the Year ceremony will be Dec. 10.

"They're the NCOs who stand out," said Sgt. 1st Class James Dennis, the 507th assistant operations sergeant. "These are the ones the students look up to."

Nine black hats are competing for money, prizes and military recognition, which includes an Army Commendation Medal and a chance to attend the military's freefall school.

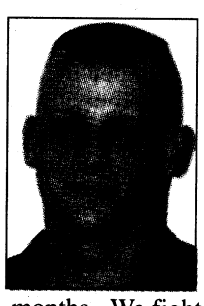
Dennis said the events include a modified physical fitness test, a jumpmaster pre-inspection test, a test on procedures used before and during the exiting of an aircraft and a general written exam.



This year's candidates are:

Staff Sgt. Avel Marte, 32
Hometown: Port Charlotte, Fla.
Family: Wife, Patricia, children, Alliah, 6, and Nathan, 2.
Army service: 10 years
Career highlight: "Serving as a team leader with the 82nd Airborne Division. It was cool, because you meet face to face with Soldiers every day and teach them the basics — from shining boots to maneuvering; you get to make a big difference."

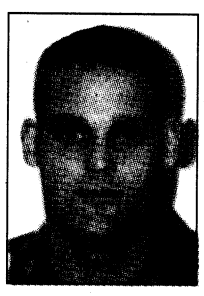
Why black hat?: "I got orders to come to Fort Benning, went to battalion and asked for this job. I didn't want to work in any other job but here."



Favorite part of Airborne: "I like jumping, but I also like when I get an individual who has never flown in a plane. They begin the course totally petrified and when jump day comes, they are so confident."

Staff Sgt. Eric Doss, 40
Hometown: Birmingham, Ala.
Family: Wife, Parish, and children, Ivy, 17 and Laney, 14.
Army service: 10 years
Career highlight: "From Fort Bragg, I went to England for a month to train with British paratroopers on a program called the Reciprocal Unit Exchange. Another (highlight) was when I graduated from Ranger School."

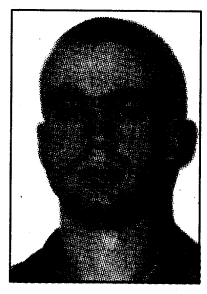
Why black hat?: "To get some instructor time after spending nine rough years in line units. I wanted to get a break."



Favorite part of Airborne: "My favorite thing about being an instructor is making a positive impression on new Soldiers."

Staff Sgt. William Barrett, 30
Hometown: Moberly, Mo.
Family: Wife, Tonia, and son, Jacob, 16 months.
Army service: 9 years
Career highlight: "I led a squad in Iraq in March 2003 and was there for eight months. We fight our nation's battles and being able to lead Soldiers, accomplish real missions and keep them alive was great."

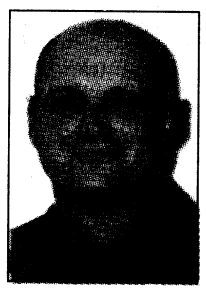
Why black hat?: "My son was 4 months old and I wanted to be able to get home to him and my wife every night."



Favorite part of Airborne: "Taking a Soldier who knows nothing and teaching him to do (the training) without getting hurt. I like taking someone who is scared to death and give him the confidence to do things."

Staff Sgt. Travis Pheanis, 26
Hometown: Franklin, Ohio.
Family: Single
Army service: 8 years
Career highlight: "Serving in Alaska, because the people there were so awesome."

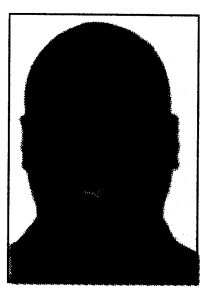
Why black hat?: "The recruit command (I was at) had civilians take over, and we were told we could go anywhere. I wanted to go to Italy, but a buddy here told me how great it was. So I came here. Then he left last December."



Favorite part of Airborne: "In jump week, I like to see (the Soldier's) faces in the aircraft. Through the program you see them crawl, walk and run. I like watching how they perform. You see everything from day one. When they jump, it's 90 percent what you taught and 10 percent them."

Staff Sgt. Joseph Hissong, 28
Hometown: Dayton, Ohio.
Family: Wife, Christine, children, Joseph, 9, and Logan, 2.
Army service: 9 years
Career highlight: "I jumped in Thailand and got my Thai wings."

Why black hat?: "It was the lesser of all evils. I had to get instructor time and I wanted to stay on jump status."

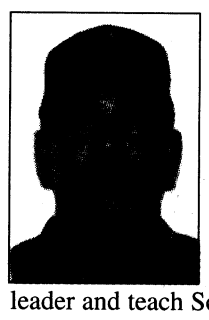


Favorite part of Airborne: "It's the students and working with people who make this enjoyable and bearable."

Staff Sgt. Zachary Armstrong, 38
Hometown: Madison, Wis.
Family: Wife, Tami, children, Alec, 8, and Ian, 6.
Army service: 12 years
Career highlight: "A highlight was being OPFOR for the Special Forces Qualifying Course. You get to run around in the forest without a ballistic helmet."

Why black hat?: "I had admiration for the black hats when I went through Airborne School. There are very few people in the Army who get to be airborne on a regular basis, let alone be an airborne instructor."

Favorite part of Airborne: "You get in ground week and the Soldiers are all bright-eyed and bushy-tailed, and then you see the fear start to set in. It is neat to see them overcome that fear in the end."



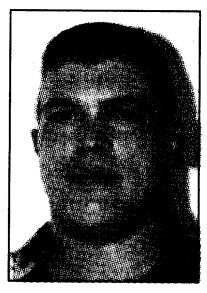
Staff Sgt. Jarrell Williams, 32
Hometown: Columbus
Family: Single
Army service: 12 years
Career highlight: "My first three years in the 82nd Airborne Division.

"It was a different time back then.

"Life was good and training was more realistic."

Why black hat?: "I put in my drill sergeant packet and got orders, but I was sent to the 507th Airborne because they were in need of a jumpmaster."

Favorite part of Airborne: "There is always a rush that initial four seconds out of the plane. The rest is just 'Oh, well.'"



Staff Sgt. Ari Abenojar, 27
Hometown: Stockton, Calif.
Family: Wife, Lisa, and child, Ariston, 2.
Army service: 7 years
Career highlight: "When I became an NCO. Basically, it was a big change because I actually got to become a leader and teach Soldiers everything they need to know."

Why black hat?: "I wanted to pass on skills to other Soldiers who wanted to become paratroopers."

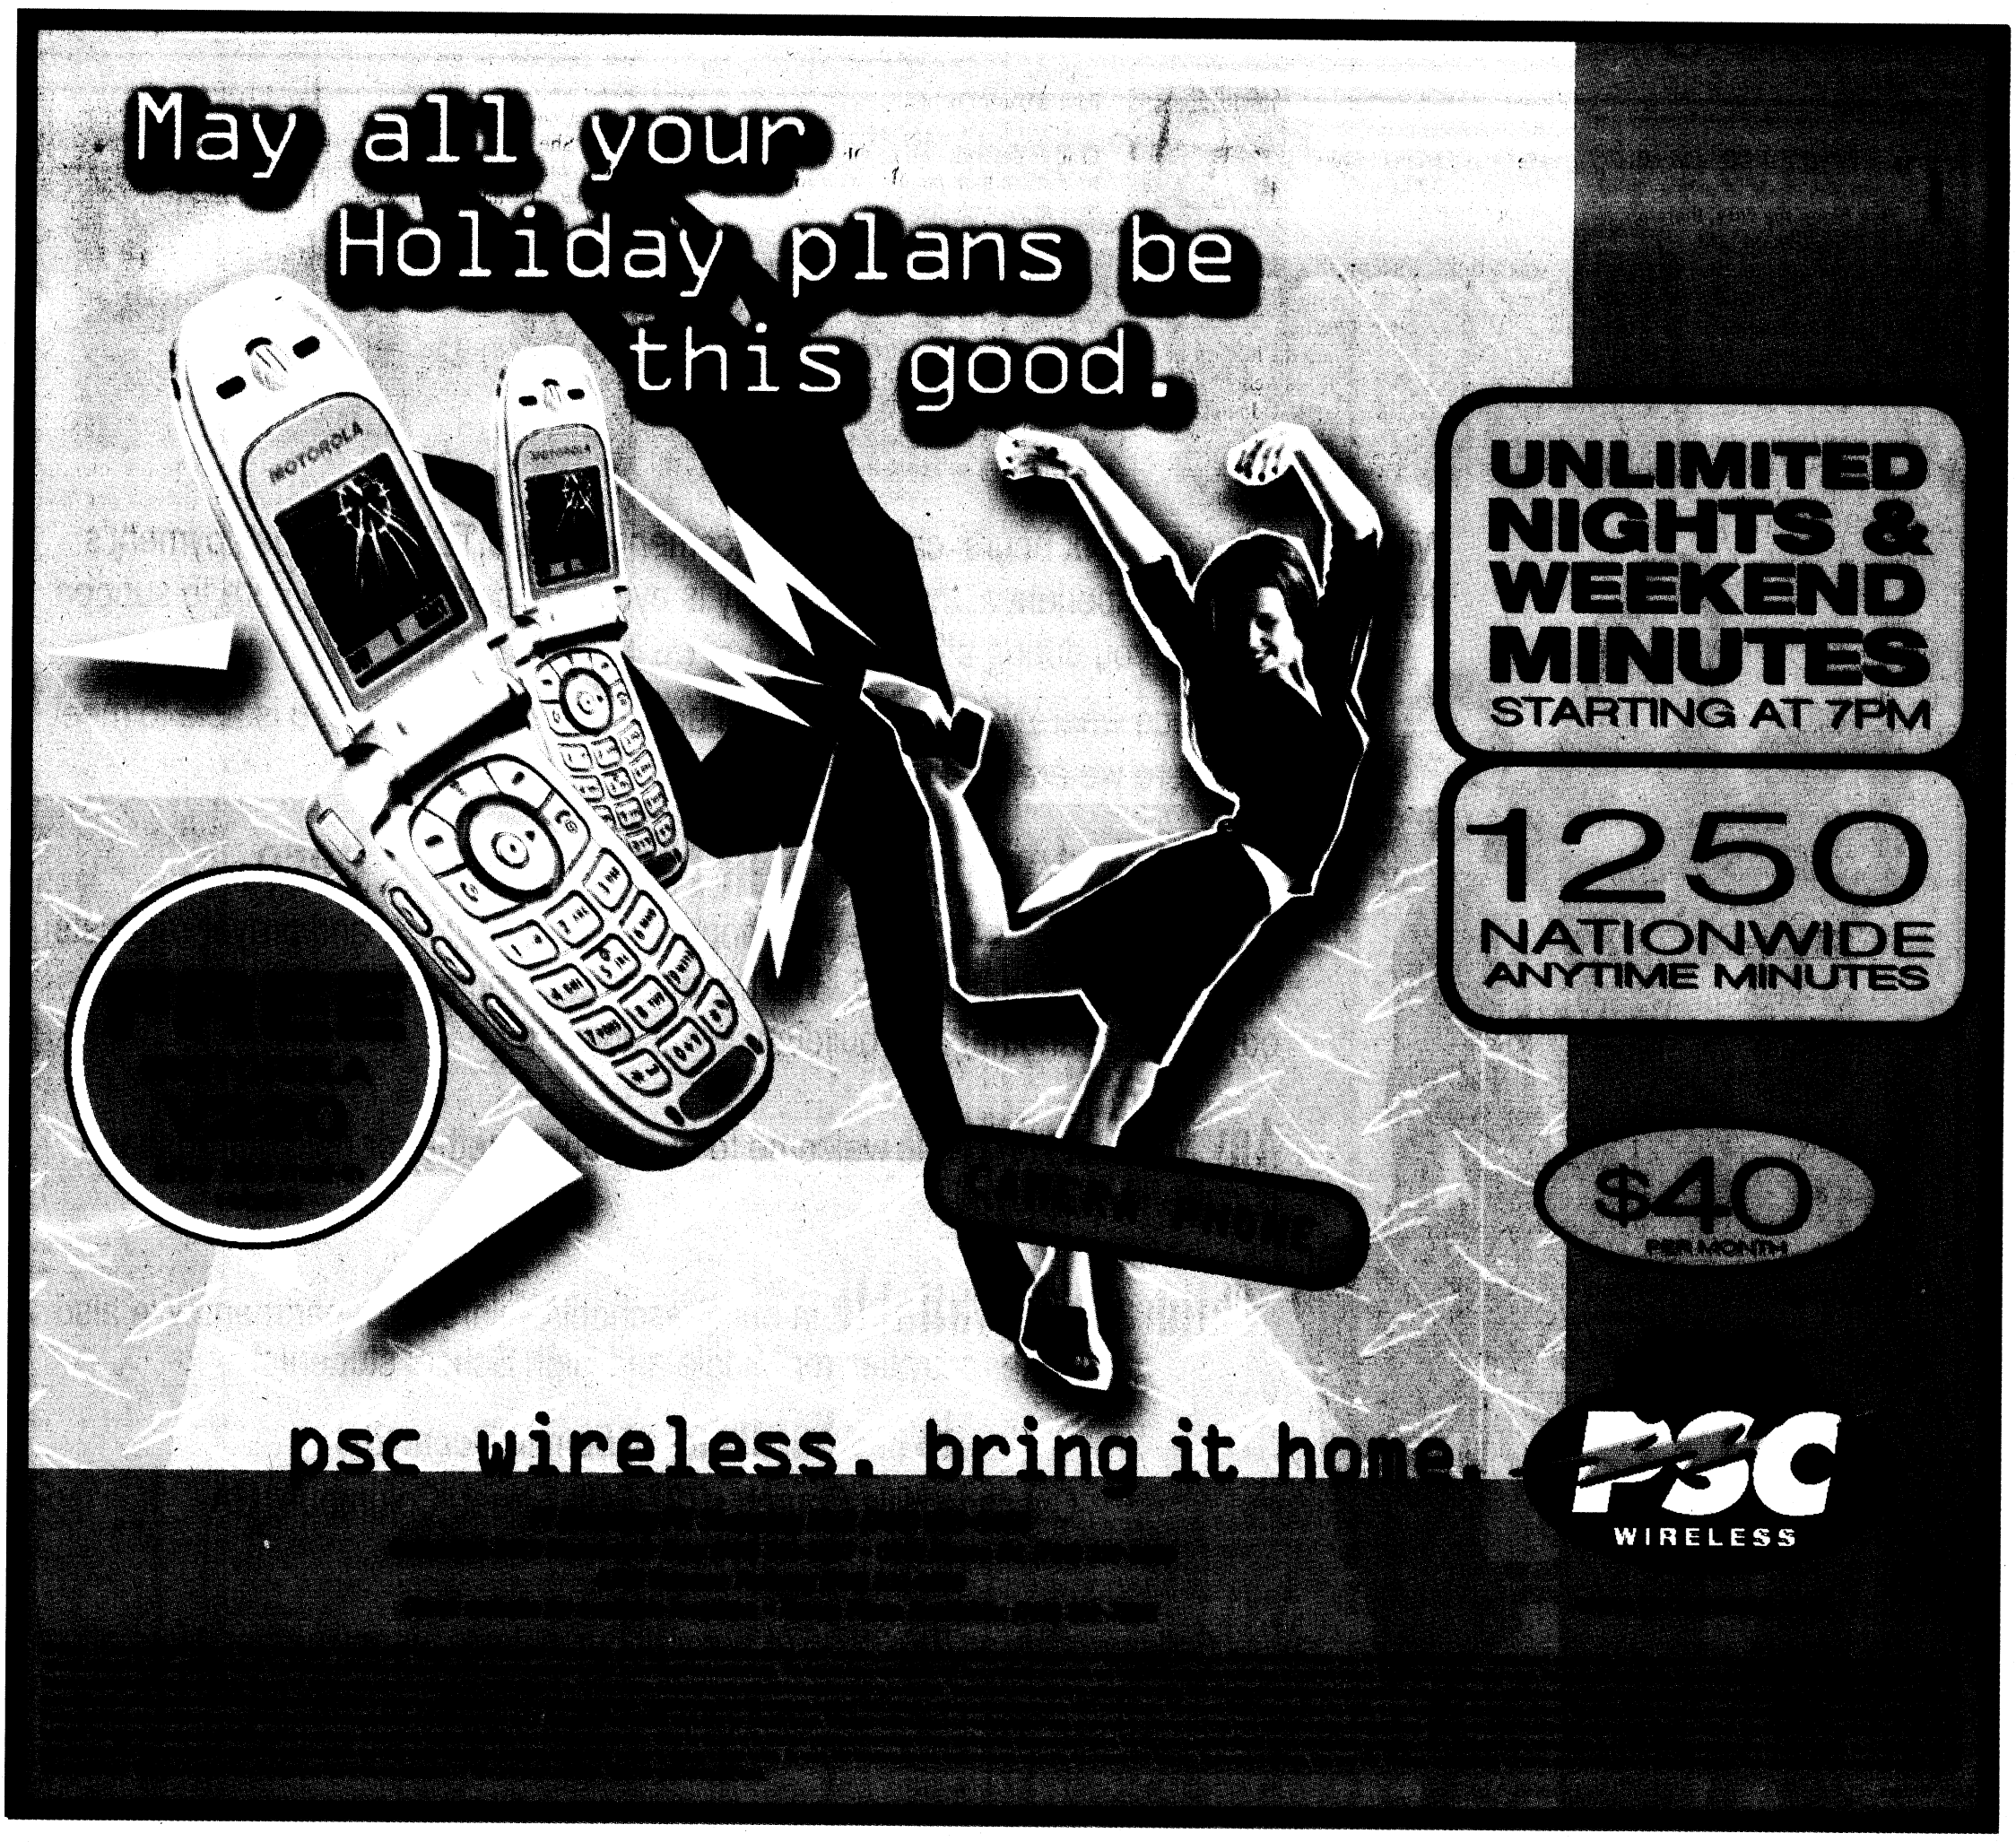
Favorite part of Airborne: "I love all of it, from training on day one all the way through graduation.

"It is fun to see Soldiers become excited to be airborne.

"It's something different from everything else in the Army."

Staff Sgt. David Rowan, 30
Hometown: Watertown, Conn.
Family: Wife, Michelle.
Army service: 12 years
Career highlights: "The Ranger Regiment was the best training.

"It's a good place to grow up from a private to an E-6.



"Being a young jumpmaster has to be up there, too.

"On my Panama deployment at the Jungle Operation Training Center, we crossed the Sagris River in a Zodiac at night and hit the enemy in the middle of the night."

Why black hat?: "There's really only one way to excel as a black hat — you have to learn. You can learn (to teach) as many classes as you want here."

Favorite part of Airborne: "If I have to do instruction time while war is going on, at least I am training people for that war.

"And, I can do a Hollywood jump with a dash one in the daytime if I want."

Fort Benning Exodus to begin Dec. 17

More than 3,500 trainees to leave post

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Robert Theis was a 20-year-old private going through advanced individual training in 1965 when he experienced his first "Exodus," the mass departure of training Soldiers headed home for the holidays.

Theis and a buddy headed south to sunny Florida, where they hung out on the beach and ate pizza for two weeks. It was a welcome break after the rigor of basic training, said Theis, now a civilian operations employee with the Infantry Training Brigade and one of those responsible for executing the annual Sand Hill Exodus.

Theis has "experienced" Exodus from all the angles. In 1976, when Fort Benning's basic training was located at Harmony Church, he was a drill sergeant. As such, he warned his basic trainees headed home for the holidays about the perils of alcohol, laziness and gluttony.

Not much has changed, Theis said. As Sand Hill prepares to "deploy" more than 3,500 trainees to the "four corners of the world," they'll receive a safety briefing on what will be expected of them during their holiday break, Dec. 17 through Jan. 3.

"They're told to stay away from the things they know they shouldn't touch," he said. "They know there'll be a hundred percent urinalysis when they return."

Surprisingly few don't return, Theis said. By and large, the AWOL problem is not a issue. And maybe there's a reason for that.

All of the trainees will have at least three weeks of basic training under their belts before they leave. The first three weeks are the hardest — that's typically when basic training units lose the most Soldiers.

Monday, Sand Hill filled its last company this year. The C Company Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment will have just reached the three-week mark when the Infantry Training Brigade and the Basic Combat Training Brigade begin the Exodus.

As many as 200 buses will pick up Soldiers on Kannell Field and transport them to the local bus station and the airport in Atlanta. The process will reverse when the Soldiers return in January.

Omega Travel will temporarily set up shop on Sand Hill to help trainees plan and purchase tickets home. Those who live within 200 miles of Fort Benning can take a bus or ride with a family member.

Nearly 200 December AIT graduates will return to Fort Benning in January for Airborne School.

The school typically experiences a 10 percent "drop rate." Last year, 364 students started Airborne School after Exodus. One hundred failed.

The graduates returning in January are urged not to make the same mistake their predecessors did, said Staff Sgt. Dennis Campbell, the NCOIC of student accountability for Airborne School.

"When they're on break, they should definitely continue PT," he said. "Do something every day to keep your heart rate up."

Soldiers leaving Fort Benning will also be briefed on receiving medical assistance when needed. They must contact their Military Medical Support Office, at (888) 647-6676, or (800) 444-5445, before seeking non-emergent health care off post.

In the event of an emergency, they're told to seek immediate help at the nearest hospital, then contact their unit and the MMS office.

Those few who don't go home — they live too far or don't have a home to go to — will stay in the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment barracks.

They'll be treated to local ball games and bused to The Sign of the Dove Bed and Breakfast in Buena Vista, Ga., for Christmas dinner.

Soldier, son find missing Columbus man

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

When Staff Sgt. Daniel Fox took his 10-year-old son Tyler hunting Saturday, the last thing he expected to find on the way home was a man hobbling down the middle of Wildcat Road in the rain with no shoes or jacket at 6:30 at night.

"I had to swerve to avoid hitting the poor guy," Fox said. "I rolled down my window to talk to him, and as soon as he started talking, I knew something was really wrong."

Fox, a drill sergeant with 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, and his son had stumbled upon 34-year-old William Hardin.

The mentally disabled man walked out of his mother's house on 19th Avenue at about 5 p.m. Thanksgiving Day and, for unknown reasons, walked the 25 miles to the backwoods of Fort Benning.

"He was shivering so bad, so between his disability and that, I couldn't understand a word he was saying," Fox said. "He was really, really confused and really scared."

Fox managed to get Hardin's wallet and called the military police. During the wait, he tried to get Hardin warm using a poncho liner and gave him water to drink.

"He could hardly walk and he was covered in mud," Fox said. "At the time, I didn't know this guy had been out there for three days alone."

Hardin, whose core body temperature was only 93 degrees, was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital for treatment for hypothermia.

"He's lucky, because he probably wouldn't have made it if he'd been out there much longer," Fox said.

Hardin's stroke of luck was even more fortunate, given that so many others had passed by without stopping to help him. Fox wasn't the only hunter prowling the area during the holiday weekend.

"I couldn't believe that there were people just driving right by," he said. "If you see a guy walking down the road in the middle of the woods that far out, you stop.

"I just did the right thing," he said. "I don't think I did anything out of the ordinary. It's what any other person should have done."

DMWR helps fund units

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Soldiers who spend money at any of the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation facilities get their money back through the DMWR Unit Fund Allocation Process.

Out of the money made at the DMWR facilities each unit receives $6.25 per Soldier for unit organizational days, activities or to purchase items to improve morale, welfare and recreation of Soldiers, said Maggie Pope, chief of the Non-appropriated Fund Resource Management Division.

"The Army and DMWR realize that recreation is valuable to Soldiers and their morale," Pope said.

"We feel it's very important for Soldiers to get a time to relax. This year's budget includes $145,000 for unit funding," Pope said.

The money is given to brigades and the brigade commanders assign a person to disperse the money to all battalions and below.

Sgt. 1st Class Toni Hopkins, with the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, is the Comptroller NCOIC.

Her job is to help disperse and approve all requests to use units funds for events and activities.

"The DMWR unit funding program is a good way to help improve Soldier morale," Hopkins said.

"The best thing about the program is that the money isn't just for one group of Soldiers. We try to give it to all Soldiers so everyone benefits."

For fiscal 2005, Hopkins said 3rd Brigade was allotted $28,300 for unit activities. With the money allotted, different units can request funding for special events or projects as they see fit.

Hopkins said a lot of units use the money to purchase T-shirts for unit runs to promote cohesion or use the money to have drinks and snacks during redeployments.

Nov. 23, the 203rd Forward Support Battalion had an organizational day and requested $1,800 to help purchase the food, drinks and activities.

"The units can use the funds to purchase items to benefit all Soldiers," Pope said.

"If you're watching cable in your day room, unit funds paid for it."

Post hiring for heroes' hotline

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

The Hotline for Heroes is seeking part-time employees to transfer calls from overseas Soldiers beginning Dec. 15 in Building 1792 on Main Post.

The Hotline for Heroes began last year as a way for overseas Soldiers to talk with loved ones free or for a nominal fee on their calling cards. By calling through the Fort Benning hotline, Soldiers making local calls can be transferred without charges, and Soldiers calling locations throughout the United States get charged American long-distance rates rather than overseas rates.

Last year the call center was staffed by volunteers, and was open from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m., but this year, it will be staffed 24-hours a day, 7 days a week, to serve deployed Soldiers. The call center will be staffed until 36th Engineer Group and 3rd Brigade Combat Team return, said Paul Yates director of Information Management.

"Last year, the call center became a social center where volunteers could support deployed Soldiers, meet other people from the community and have a good time," Yates said.

Family members are encouraged to apply for the 20 to 30 positions, Yates said. An applicant must be at least 18 years old to be eligible. The positions will be with the contractor, TEL-TEC, and are not government service positions. People interested in applying should have a flexible schedule and be able to work on a rotational basis. No experience is necessary.

After the call center is established, family readiness groups and other organizations will be encouraged to volunteer.

Brothers stationed together for third time

Fort Benning rendezvous point during service

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

"My brother and I always had the normal brother rivalries when it came to sports and board games," said 1st Sgt. Patrick Durr, former Primary Leadership Development Course branch chief.

"But he was the one with the straight As in school and I was more into the social aspect."

Durr is talking about his big brother, Col. Chuck Durr, director of Combat Development.

The brothers, sons of an Air Force officer, joined the Army more than 21 years ago and have been stationed together three times, each time at Fort Benning.

"It started when I came here for basic training," Patrick said.

"He was going through Ranger School at the time, so we would meet at Mass on Harmony Church every Sunday."

They were together a second time when Patrick was a first sergeant at the Infantry Training Brigade from 1999 to 2001.

In high school, Chuck began JROTC and continued ROTC in college. A Gator, he was commissioned in Gainesville, Fla., August 1983.

The following December, Patrick enlisted.

Both chose the Infantry.

"When I enlisted, my intention wasn't to stay in for a long time," Patrick said.

"I only signed up for three years. After that, I never pursued becoming an officer, because I knew I would be more successful as an NCO." Though Chuck is an officer and Patrick a senior NCO, there is no longer rivalry between the two.

"We have never competed against each other when it comes to our careers," Patrick said. "We're both close professionally and have the same desire to mold our fighting force into the most efficient force in the world. We'll do anything in our power to do that."

The Durrs have two siblings, all born in January. Chuck was born in 1961, Julia in 1962, and Patrick and his twin brother, Timothy, in 1963.

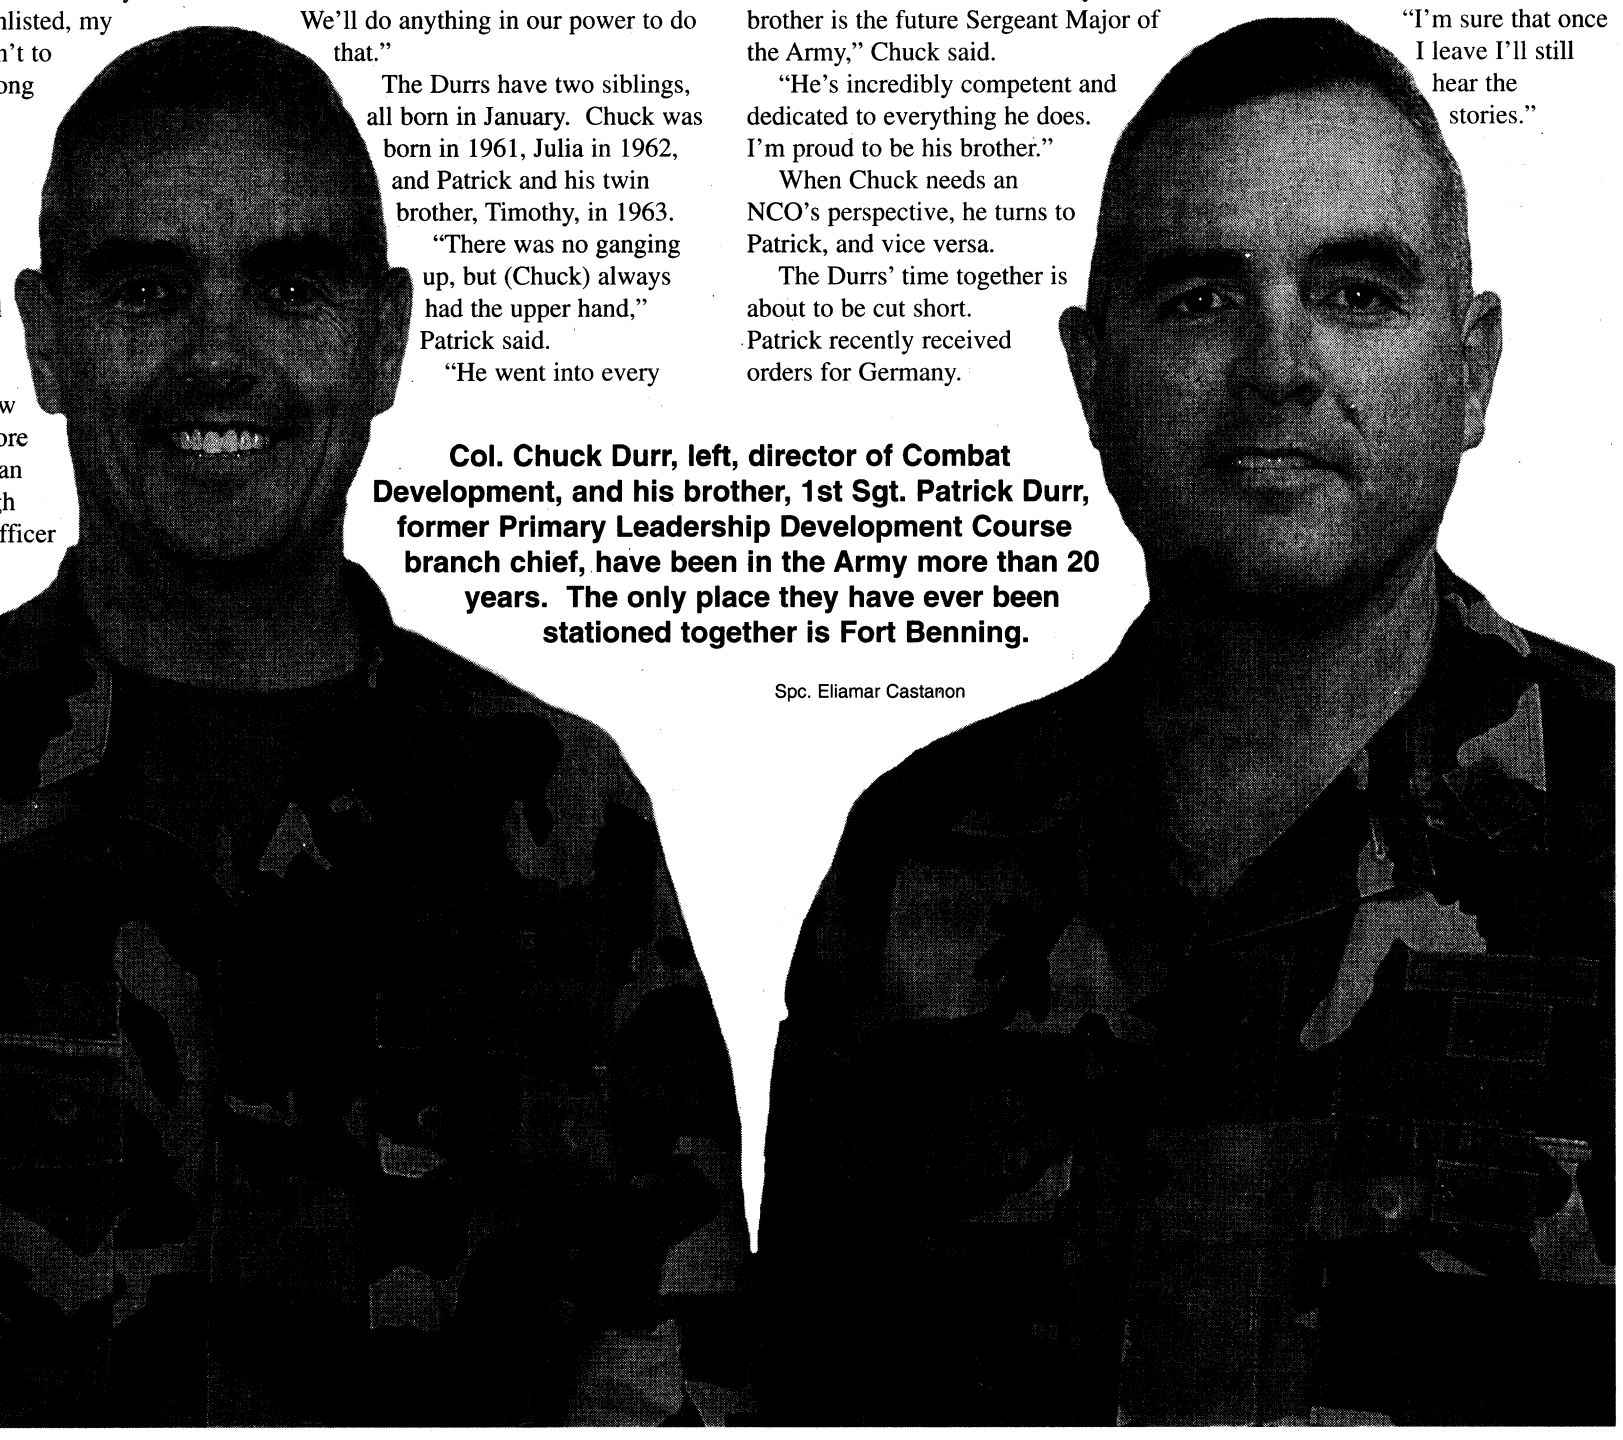
"There was no ganging up, but (Chuck) always had the upper hand," Patrick said.

"He went into every confrontation well-planned, and he always got what he wanted. He always won."

Chuck and Patrick agree they enjoy having the same reason to get up in the morning — "our nation and our profession."

"As far as I'm concerned, my brother is the future Sergeant Major of the Army," Chuck said.

"He's incredibly competent and dedicated to everything he does. I'm proud to be his brother."



When Chuck needs an NCO's perspective, he turns to Patrick, and vice versa.

The Durrs' time together is about to be cut short. Patrick recently received orders for Germany.

Chuck will be taking command of the Basic Combat Training Brigade in the summer.

"We've both done the best in our fields and I've always enjoyed hearing good stories from NCOs who have worked with (Chuck) through his time and vice versa," Patrick said.

"I'm sure that once I leave I'll still hear the stories."

Col. Chuck Durr, left, director of Combat Development, and his brother, 1st Sgt. Patrick Durr, former Primary Leadership Development Course branch chief, have been in the Army more than 20 years. The only place they have ever been stationed together is Fort Benning.

For the musically inclined, the Army offers lots of ways to be a Soldier. Even before day one, those who decide to join the ranks of the Army band march to a very different tune than the rest of the force.

The Army band MOS falls under the Army's Civilian Acquired Skill program. To join as a musician, prospective enlistees must already be proficient with an instrument and must pass an audition before an Army band commander.

Not many recruiters know much about musical instruments, chords, scales or keys. So, for each region, there is a band liaison who assists recruiters and prospective enlistees with the process and answer any questions that arise, said Staff Sgt. Stephen Spohn, a trombone player with the Infantry Center Band.

Once an enlistee is accepted and has completed basic training, he or she attends advanced individual training at Little Creek Naval Amphibian Base, Little Creek, Va., the site of a joint training center for Navy, Marine and Army musicians. While there, blossoming musical masters fine tune and refine their skills, ever mindful of the strict four-point grading system.

Students are graded on sight reading and four scales — major, minor, harmonic minor and melodic minor. Students must achieve a 2.75 grade point average to graduate. Musical training continues for band members just like any other MOS. BNCOC students must achieve a 2.8 to graduate and ANCOC 2.9.

The few and proud who master their instruments and earn a 3.0 or above receive a C1 identifier and are eligible for assignment to bands in Italy, Belgium, Heidelberg, Germany, and other locations, Spohn said.

Special bands conduct more public performances outside installation gates than division-level bands and provide support for high-ranking or VIP government officials, such as the president.

When the major military mission is to maintain proficiency with an instrument and constantly rehearse pieces for various ceremonies and performances, musicians spend an enormous amount of time playing, Spohn said. But a lot of time is still spent Soldiering, despite what most people think.

Spohn said the Infantry Center Band conducts physical training every day that a performance doesn't interfere and many afternoons are devoted to common task training. The unit conducted a live-fire convoy exercise in March — training many garrison units never see.

"We do have a war-time mission that is different than what we do here," Spohn said.

"When the war kicked off, the 3rd Infantry Division Band and the 101st Airborne Division's band were over there. Our role then was to provide security for the TOC. Our job was to augment the military police.

"We aren't just civilians who put on BDUs," he said. "We train, we deploy just as much as anyone else. We take PT tests. We are Soldiers too."

Band members routinely work nights and weekends supporting functions like official dinners, unit dining-ins and concerts both on- and off-post. Days are filled with countless graduations and other ceremonies.

"We have to remember that even though we see the same graduation week after week, for parents and trainees, it is their first time and it has to be a spectacular performance," Spohn said.

BEHIND ENEMY LINES

Recon students learn how to get home

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

A four-man reconnaissance team comes under fire behind enemy lines. Communication with higher echelons is compromised. There are double-digit kilometers between the current location and the likely extraction point and a team member is wounded. The team is on its own and running hard.

That situation is one of many students in D Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion's Reconnaissance Surveillance Leaders Course are trained to handle during their 33-day stay at Camp Rogers.

The current class spent Wednesday reviewing three critical evasion and recovery tasks designed to facilitate an effective escape from enemy contact, said Maj. Eric Flesch, company commander.

The first of those tasks established a team standard operating procedure. Students learned how to plot corridors of escape, plan waypoints, and predetermine signal protocol in case a rally with another nation's forces or a partisan is necessary.

Partisans are local nationals, in whatever country a recon team is operating, who are hired by the American government to provide aid in the event a team can not be evacuated by other, safer means.

At the second station they rotated to, students participated in a mock rendezvous with a partisan agent. Contact with friendly forces and host nation forces is preferred over partisan contact because of the inherent risk they may double-cross the stranded team, Flesch said.

The students practiced providing cover for the Soldier designated to make initial contact with the partisan, challenge and password protocols and handling partisan demands after contact has been established.

The students were well-versed in the ins and outs of constructing a recovery activation signal.

The third station of the day's training covered the RAS in detail. The symbol used is almost always the letter of the day determined in a team's air tasking order special instructions, said instructor Sgt. 1st Class Mark Herlick.

When a RAS is built, it is dug or built either one meter deep or one meter high. It must measure 14 feet by 14 feet, the legs of the letter must be one meter wide and the symbol must be easily seen from the air, but not easily found by enemies on the ground.

At that point, the team could use additional symbols to let searchers know how many Soldiers are at that particular point, how many are wounded or other important information.

Satellites or aircraft relay images of the symbol through the chain of command, providing data on the isolated team's movements and status until it reaches the selected area for evasion, where an extraction or rally with a rescuing force is possible.

Wednesday's training was almost the halfway mark for the class. And as the group prepared to move into the most intense phase of the course, they felt the pressure.

"There's a whole lot of information they throw at you from the very first day," said Sgt. Thomas Worley, a student team leader. "You have to be able to process it and immediately turn around and apply it.

"But the instructors here really know their stuff. They are all subject matter experts and I feel I'll be ready to hit the ground running."

New unit, commander 'ready to execute'

Tawny Archibald Campbell

He started late, according to military standards. First he studied architecture, but decided to teach instead. Then he tried his hand at medical sales. When that didn't satisfy, at age 29, Jeffery Haun decided to give the military a go.

"I fell in love with it," said Haun, now Col. Haun, commander of the 14th Combat Support Hospital. "I have never been happier in my life than being around Soldiers, training Soldiers and doing missions."

Haun joined the 3rd Armored Calvary Division as a hospital administrator, wanting to "stay with the medical side, but (still) be in a field environment." Two years and two hospital jobs later, he found a way to "have it all." He became a medevac pilot.

Haun now faces the daunting task of standing up a unit, the 14th CSH, a unit that's converted from a field hospital to a combat support hospital. It's grown from 84 Soldiers to more than 200 in a month.

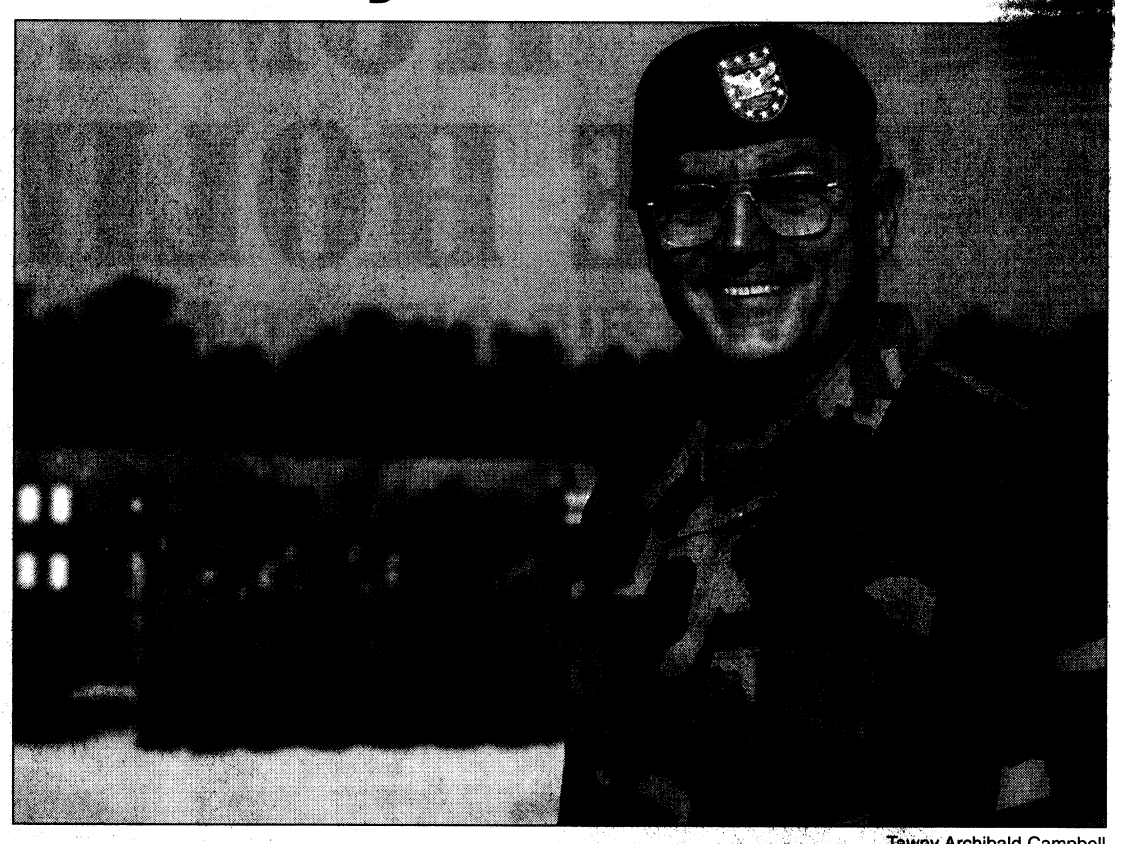
"Our goal is to get ready to execute a mission if and when we are called to do so," Haun said.

The unit will conduct field training exercises in January. It's gearing up to perform surgeries out of a mobile operating room alongside Martin Army Community Hospital in the spring. And 14th CSH Soldiers will attend the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk in September.

Haun has experience with deployed medical units. He commanded an area support medical battalion in Iraq from March to August of 2002.

The unit was set up in five locations from Tikrit to an area south of Baghdad. In the initial six months of the tour, Haun said, they treated 22,000 patients.

"We had two companies who were in direct support of the 3rd Infantry Division when they crossed the berm into Iraq," he said.



The battalion treated U.S., coalition and Iraqi forces, enemy prisoners of war and Iraqi civilians. The detainees were among those pictured on the "America's Most Wanted" playing cards handed out to the Soldiers.

Haun enjoyed serving alongside the Soldiers in Iraq. He sees himself as an involved leader who wants to be with the Soldiers, because, "a lot of what the Soldiers are asked to do is fun."

He won't ask the Soldiers to do anything he won't do, his wife said.

"He feels his job is to make sure they meet their potential and exceed it," Mary Ann said. "He wants them to go as far as they can."

After 29 years of marriage, Mary Ann knows more about the colonel than anyone else. She sees the kind side, the loving side, the worried and concerned side.

Col. Jeffery Haun is commander of the 14th Combat Support Hospital.

"He sees the best in people," she said. "It's not just a job for him. He cares about everyone and their welfare."

The Hauns have three sons, one serving in Iraq with the 1st Calvary Division and the other two in school in Texas.

Dream: Comes true for 9-year-old

Tuesday was the highlight of his trip, Evan said. He spent the morning with Soldiers on Kelley Hill and the afternoon at the 4th Ranger Training Battalion. His favorite part?

"Rappelling. I did it three times," he said.

Evan was honored at Wednesday's Rangers In Action demonstration, and later that day, he met Olympians from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

The Schneiders ate Thanksgiving dinner with Soldiers at the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment Dining Facility. The meaning of the day wasn't lost on Evan.

"I'm thankful that I could come here and be with them," he said.

Though the Schneider family has always had a "great deal of admiration for the military," Evan's interest in the Army, and the Rangers in particular, stems from a library book he brought home last year, his dad said.

"It grew from there," Steve said. "And of course, with the war in the news, we talked about it a lot. We have a lot of respect for the men and women who choose to serve our country. So when we heard from the Make-A-Wish people, that's the first thing that came to mind."

> "It was far above what we expected, more than we could've dreamed it would be."
> Steve Schneider
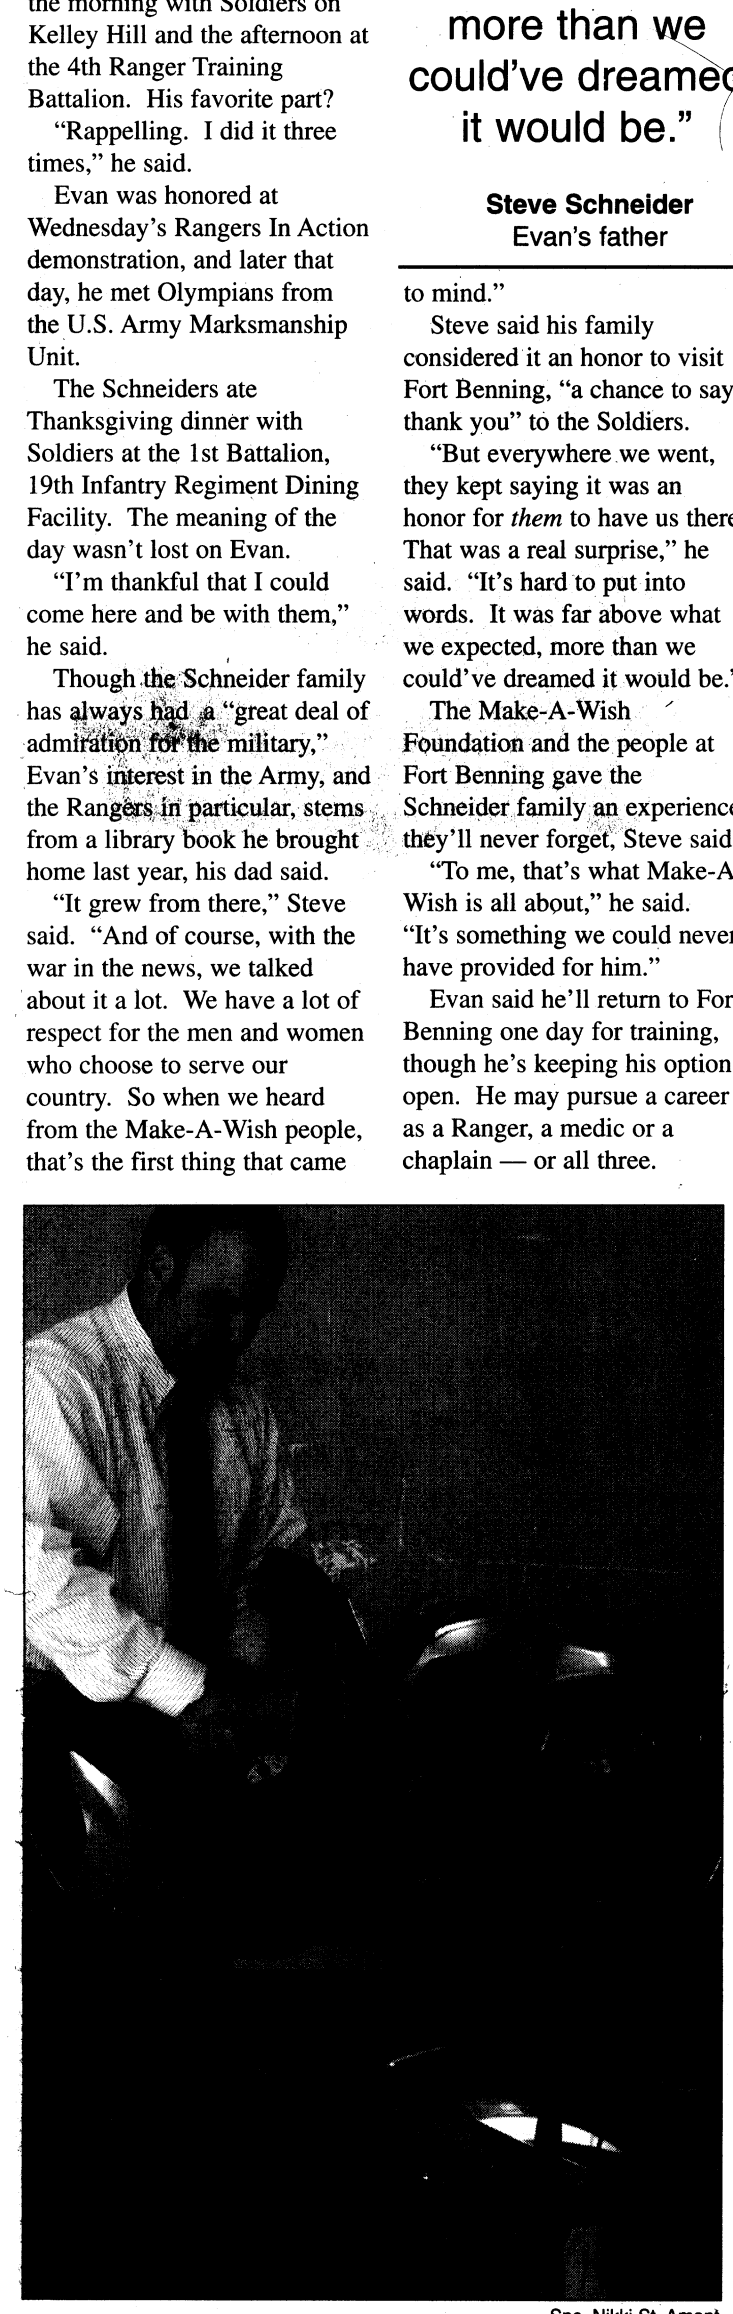
> Evan's father

Steve said his family considered it an honor to visit Fort Benning, "a chance to say thank you" to the Soldiers.

"But everywhere we went, they kept saying it was an honor for them to have us there. That was a real surprise," he said. "It's hard to put into words. It was far above what we expected, more than we could've dreamed it would be."

The Make-A-Wish Foundation and the people at Fort Benning gave the Schneider family an experience they'll never forget, Steve said.

"To me, that's what Make-A-Wish is all about," he said. "It's something we could never have provided for him."



Evan said he'll return to Fort Benning one day for training, though he's keeping his options open. He may pursue a career as a Ranger, a medic or a chaplain — or all three.

Equipment: Required on post

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Geoff Wollin recommends full-body protection for all motorcyclists. He recently lost control and flipped his bike multiple times. He walked away from the accident because he had the right gear.

letter from the safety office verifying enrollment.

The towing fee for motorcycles is $50 and must be paid before a bike will be released from the post impound lot.

Army and post regulations require motorcycle riders on post to have certification showing they have completed the post motorcycle operator's course and must be wearing all required safety equipment.

That equipment includes, at a minimum, a Department of Transportation-approved helmet, eye protection, long sleeves and long pants, over-the-ankle shoes, full-fingered gloves and a high-visibility reflector vest at all times, according to Army Regulation 385-55, Prevention of Motor Vehicle Accidents.

The Motorcycle Safety Association said the proper use of helmets is the most important factor in saving lives in a motorcycle crash.

Helmeted riders are three times more likely to survive head injuries in a crash than those who do not, according to MSA statistics.

That is a statistic motorcycle riders should keep in mind, since the MSA also calculates that 20 percent of crashes result in serious head and neck trauma.

"A car is built around safety," 21-year riding veteran Geoff Wollin said.

"It has crash cages, air bags and seat belts. On a motorcycle, all that is wrapped up into the gear you put on your body."

Seatless chaps and fingerless gloves aren't the kind of gear Wollin, an intelligence analyst with the Directorate of Intelligence and Security, is talking about.

"You should always wear full gear," he said. "Head-to-toe armor, full leathers, full-face helmet. There's a saying that goes 'dress for the wreck, not for the ride'"

Not all wrecks are avoidable, but inexperienced riders and car drivers not seeing motorcycles are two of the biggest factors in avoidable collisions, Wollin said.

According to the AMA, a motorcycle is roughly a fifth the size of most passenger vehicles making it much harder to see in traffic, especially at night.

Young riders hitting the road often make irresponsible choices and put themselves in even greater danger than the inherent risk of riding a motorcycle, Wollin said.

> "You should always wear full gear. Head-to-toe armor, full leathers, full-face helmet. There's a saying that goes 'dress for the wreck, not for the ride.'"

> Veteran motorcyclist

"The street isn't the place for tricks and speed," he said.

"I go to the track down in Florida and can slide a bike around a corner at high speeds, but I don't try it on the streets."

One of the biggest factors in becoming safer on the road as a biker is education, Wollin said. He recommends the motorcycle safety course here on post.

The course is usually held once a month and is mandatory for all Soldiers, whether they plan to ride on or off post, and civilians who wish to ride on the installation, said Staff Sgt. Robert Johns, motorcycle safety course instructor.

"Motorcycle riding is serious, and this is a serious course," he said.

"We don't want riders to blow it off as something they just have to do to be able to ride. We want them to take it seriously. The stats prove over and over again that this course works."

The two-day class includes five to seven hours of classroom instruction and eight to 10 hours of intensive riding instruction .

"We emphasize a lot of risk management in the course," Johns said. "We teach street strategies for staying safe, maneuvering, swerving safely, avoiding collisions, changing lanes and awareness of other drivers' blind spots."

The next course is scheduled for Jan. 20 and 21.

Deployment: Soldiers 'confident in leadership'

months under one executive order," Bergemann said. "We were very happy to have more than 100 volunteer. Their dedication is impressive.

"The only ones who didn't volunteer were the ones who had to attend basic training or AIT.

"We also had Soldiers from other Wisconsin National Guard units volunteer to deploy with us," he said.

Since their arrival at Fort Benning, the Soldiers have been training for their deployment scheduled for mid to late December.

The training includes common tasks, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare, reactions to improvised explosive devices, live-fire exercise and convoy operations.

"The hardest part of this deployment will be handling tactical convoys with the enemy using guerilla-warfare techniques," Bergemann said. "But between the last mobilization and this one, the troops are more ready, they've been training harder and taking this seriously."

"I just want to get out there so I can hurry up and come home," said Sgt. Sarah Pelikan, a 24-year-old from Jefferson, Wis., who is leaving behind a worried family and fiance. "I'm taking a pillow my little sister made for me so I can remember home."

For her, the hardest part is deploying during the holiday season.

Spc. Mikkel Dunnum, a 27-year-old from La Crosse, Wis., finds it easier to deploy after serving in the active Army for three years at Fort Bragg, N.C., with an air defense unit. He was mobilized in 2003 and was sent to Fort Knox to help the training brigade there.

"I feel confident in this deployment and our leadership," Dunnum said.

"I think we worked out all the bugs last year in preparation for this deployment. Everybody knows what they're doing."

The morale and closeness among the Soldiers was notable as they stood around and joked with each other awaiting their turn to depart.

"I've been in this unit for 16 years," Bergemann said. "I know most of these kids' parents. We're like a family. If worse comes to worse and any of them gives me problems, I'll threaten to call their mothers."

Program: Tries to keep roads safe during holidays

the increase in part to the higher number of drivers hitting the road under the influence of drugs and alcohol.

Volumes of shoppers in a rush, tired travelers and bad weather are also major contributing factors.

The Army dubs the season between Thanksgiving and early January the "Loaded 45."

In that 45-day period last year, 11 Soldiers were killed in POV accidents.

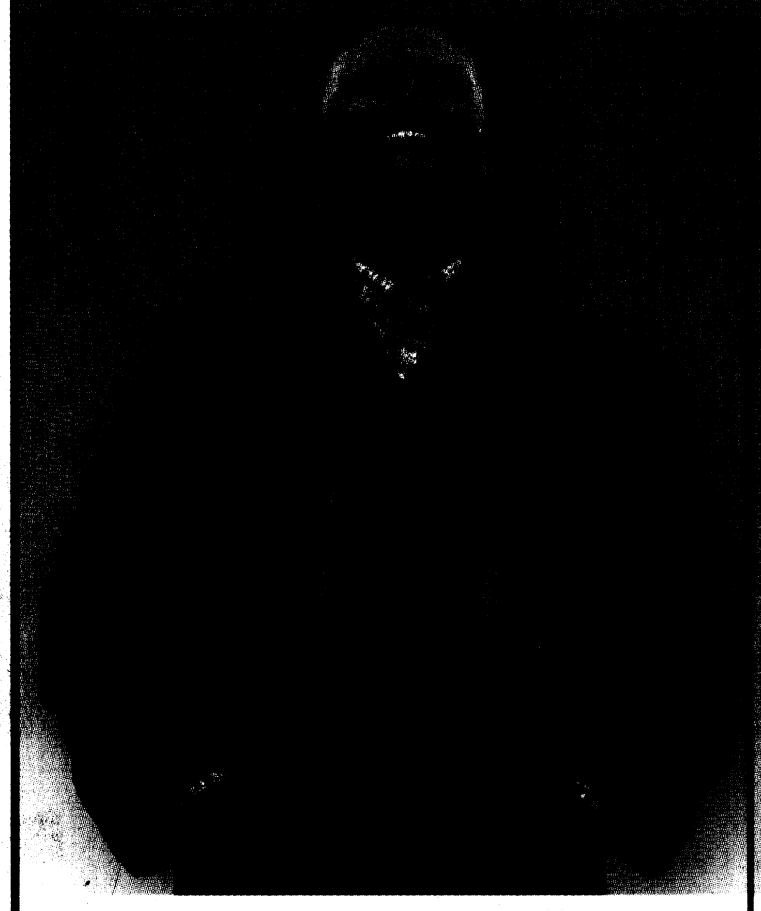
Fiscal 2005 is off to bad start. POV accidents account for 75 percent of accidental deaths this fiscal year, which equates to one Soldier dying every other day on the road, said Regis Beighley, post safety manager.

Soldiers and commanders are urged by Beighley and the post commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, to take POV inspections, safety briefings and driver training requirements seriously.

"This is a time when you have a lot of Soldiers on the road traveling, partying and just trying to have a good time," said Harley Chase, safety specialist. "This is a time of danger when, more than ever, commanders need to use the tools available to them."

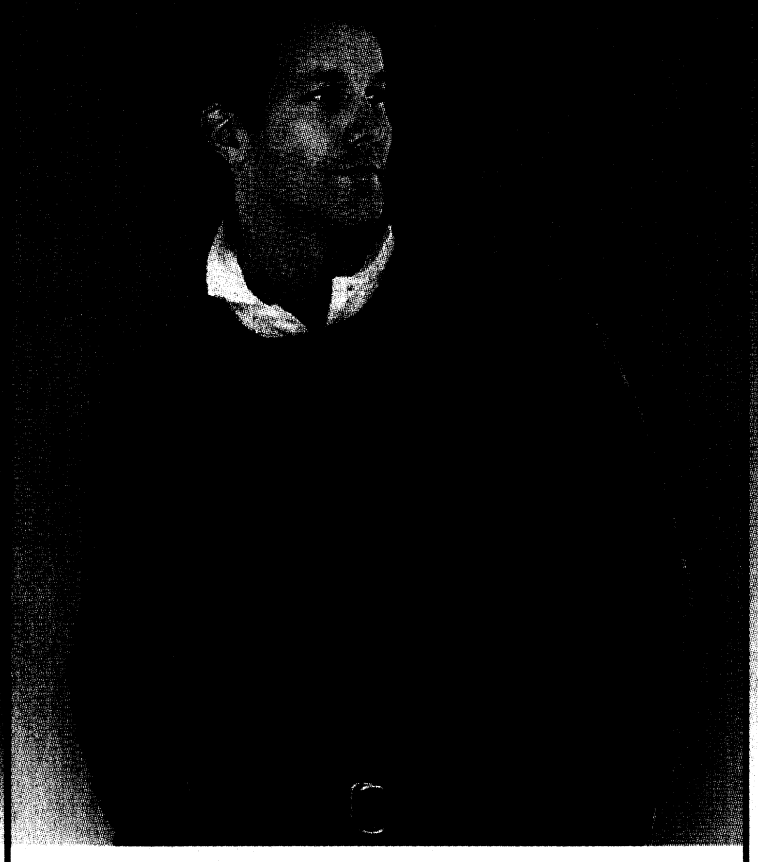
In a memorandum dated Nov. 19, Freakley reminds post personnel that drunken driving is especially dangerous and there are options available to avoid getting behind the wheel while intoxicated.

Always have a sober, reliable, designated driver available or take a cab. The Safety Cab program runs from Dec. 10 to Jan. 1 and offers free taxi rides home for those who call 660-6069.



Seatbelts are also an important part of staying safe. Post, city and state laws require the use of seatbelts to minimize the risk of injury and death in the event of accidents.

The Army Substance Abuse Program is available to assist units in providing an effective substance abuse prevention program, including DUI prevention.



And the military police traffic section can assist by providing traffic safety classes.

For information, call ASAP, at 545-4993, and the MP traffic section, at 545-7241.

Chaplain writes book on digital evangelism

Merges ministry with love of computers

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

When Michael White went to talk with the Army recruiter in 1981, he knew exactly what he wanted.

"I asked him if there was something religious," White said, "and if there wasn't, I was walking out." White spent three years as a chaplain assistant and eight years in the National Guard. After graduating from the Candler School of Theology at Emory University in Atlanta, he entered active duty in 1996.

And now, with 23 years of service, Chaplain (Capt.) Michael White has found a way to merge his love for God with a love for computers.

In October, White became a published author. His book Digital Evangelism: You Can Do It, Too! came off the presses in a limited print of 500 copies.

"I love to write, I love computers, and I love to minister," he said. "But I may have attention deficit disorder, because I move from project to project."

White, a Methodist pastor, said he always wanted to be a writer and has book ideas, both fiction and nonfiction, running through his head.

"The hard part is making the time and being disciplined enough to sit down and actually write," he said.

That's truly the case. Not only does White provide spiritual services to the Soldiers at the CONUS Replacement Center, he also hosts his own Web site, www.parsonplace.com — quite a bit to keep him occupied.

The book, he said, represents a "natural outgrowth" of his hobbies. He writes a number of devotional and self-help articles for his site and for publications like Christian Focus Magazine. And since he's been on active duty, he's created Web sites for the chapel communities at Fort Sill, Okla., Korea and one for Fort Benning while he worked at Sand Hill.

His evangelist Web site has more than 340 regular subscribers and nearly 2,000 visitors monthly. People drop in to the site for everything from spiritual enlightenment to learning how to create batch files.

So, last summer, he decided to get serious about writing his book — what he calls "a collection of great ideas for using computers and the Internet to share the Gospel" — hoping to have it published in time for an annual Christian booksellers convention in Atlanta.

Although he didn't quite meet that deadline, he met his goal of publishing a book that was straightforward, simple and easy to understand, White said.

"I like to be brief, so I took a cue from Hemingway and I met my goal," he said.

The book's 14 chapters are all short, quick reading for anyone who is into computers.

"If not," he said, "it may be dry and boring." The book is written in White's style — conversational — another thing he strove to do and feels good about the end result.

White's goal was to bolster confidence in the reader and get them excited about using computers to minister to their own church, community and people around the world.

His Parson Place newsletter has subscribers around the world, from Argentina to Singapore, Croatia, Ethiopia, India, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe.

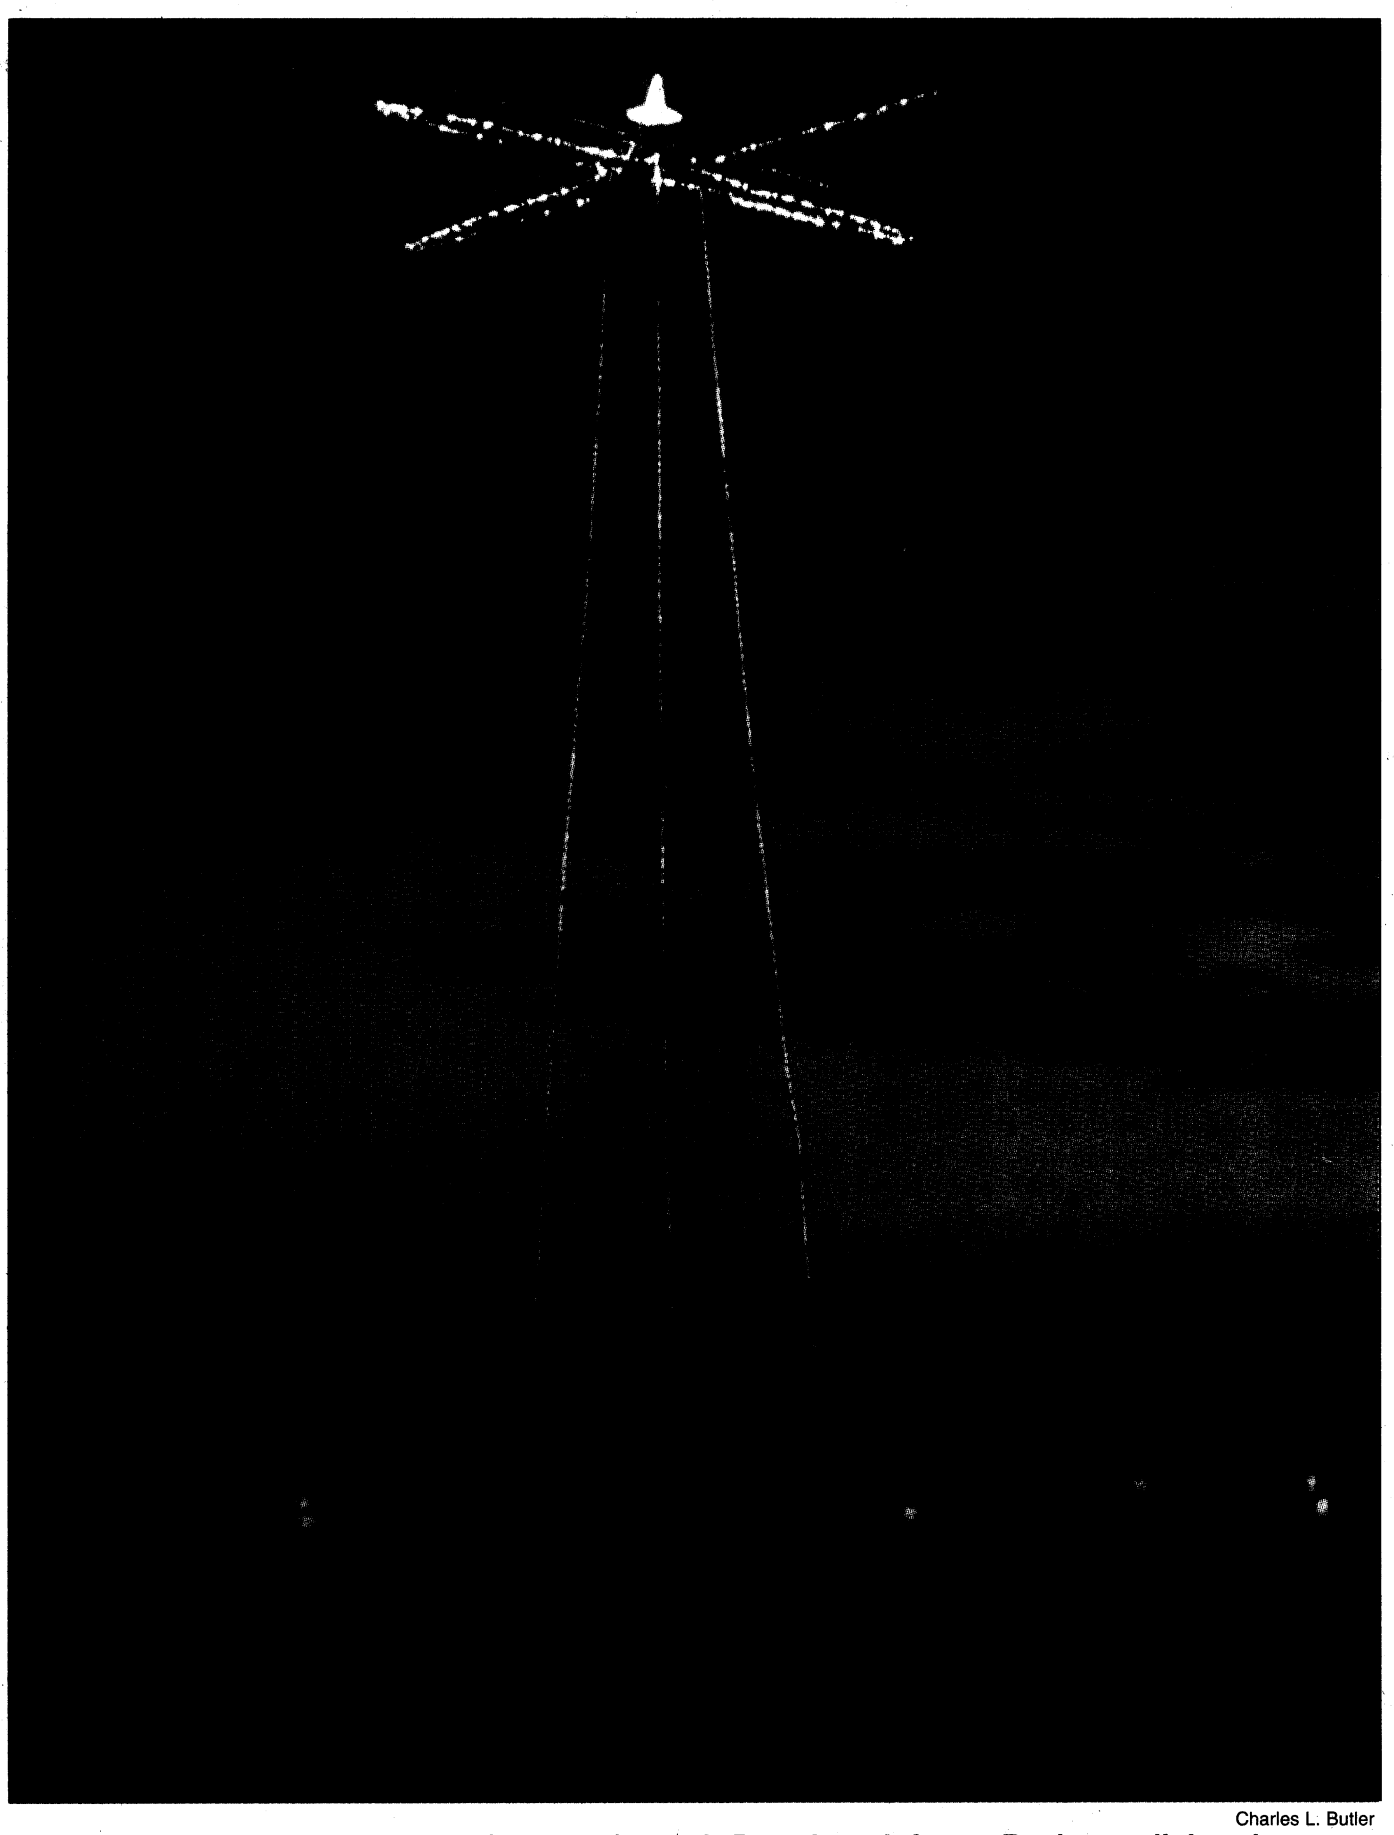
The information in the book, ideas he thought were good for any church or military chapel program, is targeted at the intermediate computer user.

"But every congregation has someone with computer savvy who could set a program up," he said. "And I tried to make it simple and exciting for a lay person as well as a professional."

Although the military ministry is more supervisory than civilian churches, White thinks the information in the book can still be useful if modified to fit the unique style of the military ministry.

He takes readers through creating Web sites, creating e-mail newsletter and prayer lists, offering computer, public literacy and education classes and creating mission support programs.

White said he didn't do any market research to see what was already published on the subject and knows there are bound to be other books out there on the same subject.



"This book is unique because I wrote it," he said, "and I still want to write other books. My head is swimming with ideas."

'Right' cabbage could win scholarship

Bonnie Plant Farm

Gardening can be an enjoyable activity for the entire family and thanks to a scholarship program, it can be rewarding as well.

Bonnie Plant Farm, the nation's largest grower of vegetable and herb plants is sponsoring a Third Grade Cabbage Scholarship Program.

Cabbage plants can grow in small spaces or even a large container. They need plenty of sunlight, as well as some ongoing care including watering, fertilizer, and pest control.

Within 10 to 12 weeks, a cabbage head will be ready for harvesting.

While many associate gardening with the warm, summer season, crops such as cabbage thrive in cooler weather.

Throughout 2005, third-grade students from across the country, including Georgia, may participate in Bonnie Plant Farm's Third Grade Cabbage Program, with the opportunity to win a $1,000 scholarship for his or her college education.

Each student participating in the program will receive a free O-S Cross cabbage plant. The name O-S Cross is short for "Oversize."

This type of cabbage plant can grow heads that are bigger than a basketball, often up to 40 pounds.

"This is our way of sharing our love of gardening," said Dennis Thomas, general manager of Bonnie Plant Farm.

Approximately 1 million third-graders from 54,000 schools across the country are expected to participate in the program. Representatives from Bonnie Plant Farm's 31 growing stations will deliver cabbage plants and educational literature to schools.

Teachers from each third-grade class will select the student who has grown the heaviest cabbage, and that student's name will then be included in a statewide drawing to receive a $1,000 scholarship. Bonnie Plant Farm will award a total of $42,000 in scholarships, and each state's winner will be selected during summer 2005.

The program is not offered in Alaska, California, Florida, Hawaii, Maine, Montana, North Dakota or South Dakota.

Both third-grade teachers and students in participating states are encouraged to visit the company's Web site to obtain registration information and details about the program.

The site also offers tips on gardening and plant care for more than 50 types of vegetables, herbs, and flowers. To learn more or to register, visit www.bonnieplants.com.

Enjoying, protecting age-old holiday

Eberly Public Relations

In the seventh century, a monk in Germany became a missionary to teach the word of God. Legend has it that he used the triangular shape of the fir tree to describe the Holy Trinity of God —the father, son and Holy Spirit. The converted people began to revere the fir tree as God's Tree. By the 12th century, people hung the trees upside-down from ceilings at Christmas time in Central Europe, as a symbol of Christianity.

The story that has been passed down from generation to generation is that the first decorated tree was at Riga in Latvia in 1510. In the early 16th century, Martin Luther is said to have decorated a small Christmas tree with candles to show his children how the stars twinkled through the dark night.

The Christmas tree took on many forms as the custom passed from century to century and country to country. Eventually, they became popular in America.

Original decorations were primarily plucked from Mother Nature, such as pine cones, dried fruit and other things gathered in the countryside and small towns.

Candles and even flowers were affixed to early trees, and presents were put under them for Christmas Day.

Trees were cut down wherever they could be found and used in the homes of pioneers across the young and growing nation.

Today, however, cutting down a Christmas tree any old place might land you a hefty fine or a nice cozy seat in the local jailhouse. But there are places where perfect trees, and advice on how to pick and care for them, can be found — like Callaway Enterprises' Rocky Branch Garden Center.

Caring for a cut Christmas tree…

Proper care of a Christmas tree is the best assurance against a short life due to loss of moisture, loss of color and needle drop. Here are some tips from Helen Phillips of Rocky Branch Garden Center to keep your tree fresh and beautiful so it can be enjoyed throughout the holiday season:

• Before picking a tree, break a needle or two and hold it to your nose. It should smell fresh. It shouldn't break in half very easily. Otherwise, it might be dry.

• If you are buying a tree, and going straight home and putting the tree up and in water within two hours, the cut on the base of tree should be sufficient. If you are not putting the tree up within two hours, the tree should be stored in a cool, shady place in a bucket full of water.

• You can also sprinkle the foliage and bark daily with water to protect it from the drying winds. A tree will not recover once it has dried out, so make sure it gets plenty of water.

• When you are ready to decorate, make a fresh cut on the bottom of the tree and immediately place it in the stand and fill with water. Keep this filled each day since the warm temperature and dry air in the home from heat will cause the tree to absorb water very quickly.

• There are several formulas that claim to fireproof or increase the life of the tree, but there are no guaranteed statistics. It is most important to obtain a fresh tree, give the trunk a fresh cut, water it daily, and remove the tree when the needles become brittle and fall off.

• Be sure the tree is well supported and is away from the source of heat such as radiators and air ducts. This will keep the loss of moisture to a minimum.

• Open flames should never be used on or near a Christmas tree.

• Check electric lights and connections. Worn or frayed wires on electric cords must not be used.

• Do not use combustible decorations or flammable reflectors. Be certain to keep metal foil or tinsel out of all bulb sockets.

• Keep wrapping paper and other flammable material from accumulating under the tree.

• Turn off the tree's lights whenever no one will be in the room for any length of time.

Caring for Christmas plants

Christmas plants provide color during the winter holidays and make wonderful gifts. With proper care, their flowers and fruits will often live through the whole winter. Several general rules apply to all indoor plants during the winter.

• Water less than you would during the summer.

• No need to fertilize them this time of year.

• Empty water from drain saucers after an hour to avoid over-saturation.

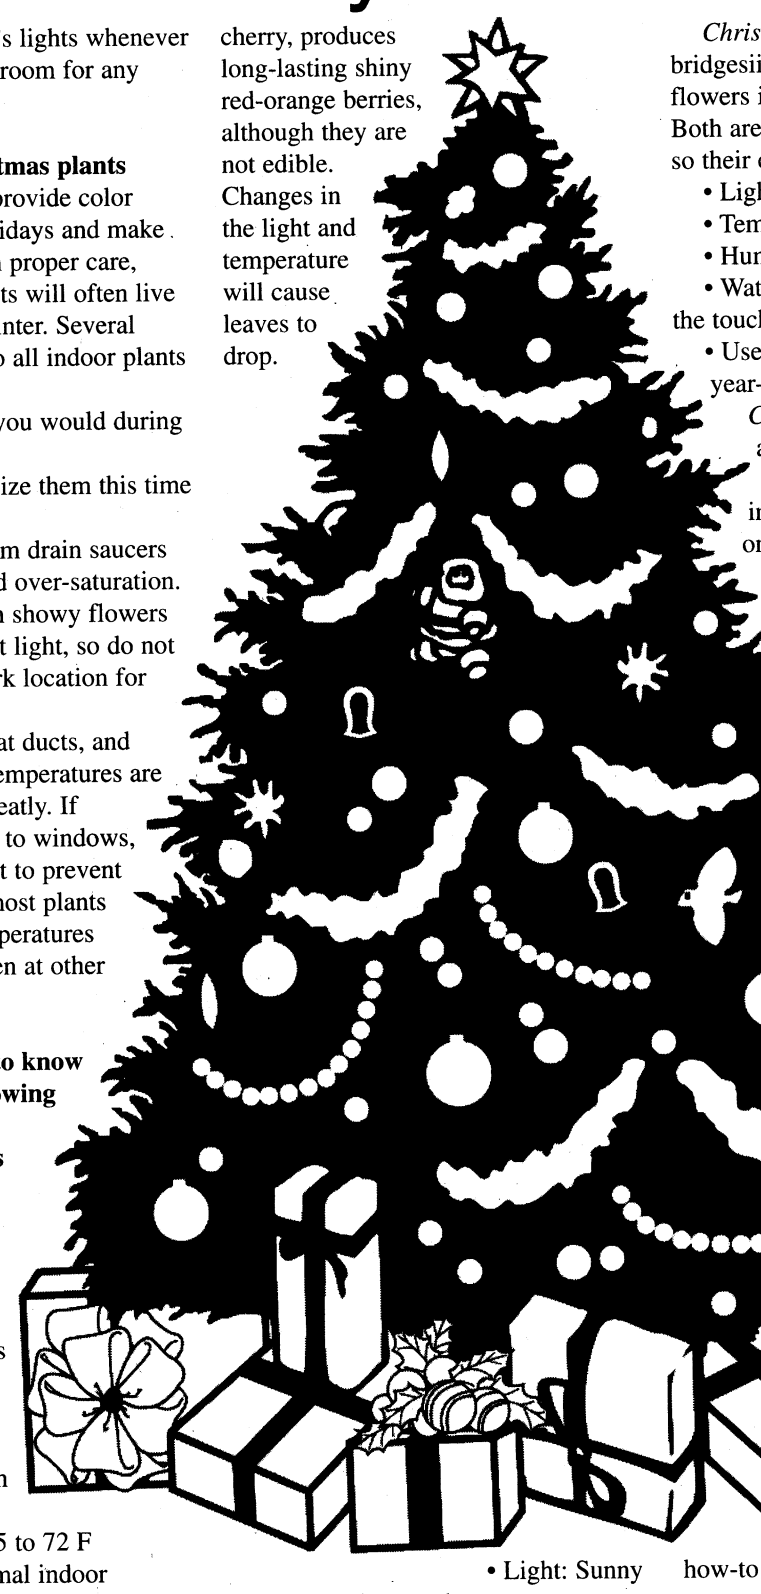
• Most plants with showy flowers and fruits need bright light, so do not display them in a dark location for long periods of time.

• Avoid drafts, heat ducts, and other places where temperatures are likely to fluctuate greatly. If plants are very close to windows, remove them at night to prevent chilling. However, most plants do prefer cooler temperatures during the winter then at other times of the year.

What you need to know about optimum growing conditions for four common Christmas plants

Poinsettia — Euphorbia pulcherrima is the traditional Christmas plant. It is showy and may be red, pink or white.

• Light: Sunny window facing south or east



• Temperature: 65 to 72 F

• Humidity: Normal indoor

• Water: Water thoroughly when soil is almost dry one inch from surface

• Uses: Can be used as an indoor plant all year and with proper care, can be forced to bloom again.

Jerusalem cherry — Solanum preudocapricum or the Jerusalem cherry, produces long-lasting shiny red-orange berries, although they are not edible. Changes in the light and temperature will cause leaves to drop.

• Light: Sunny window facing south or east

• Temp: 60 to 70 F

• Humidity: Stand on gravel tray with water below top of gravel.

• Water: Keep soil fairly moist to the touch.

• Uses: Decorative specimen plant that will fruit each year.

Christmas cactus — Schlumbergera bridgesii produce red or lavender flowers in November and December. Both are originally from rain forests, so their care differs from other cacti.

• Light: Bright, but not direct sun

• Temp: 60 to 70 F

• Humidity: Normal house

• Water: Keep soil slightly moist to the touch one inch below the surface.

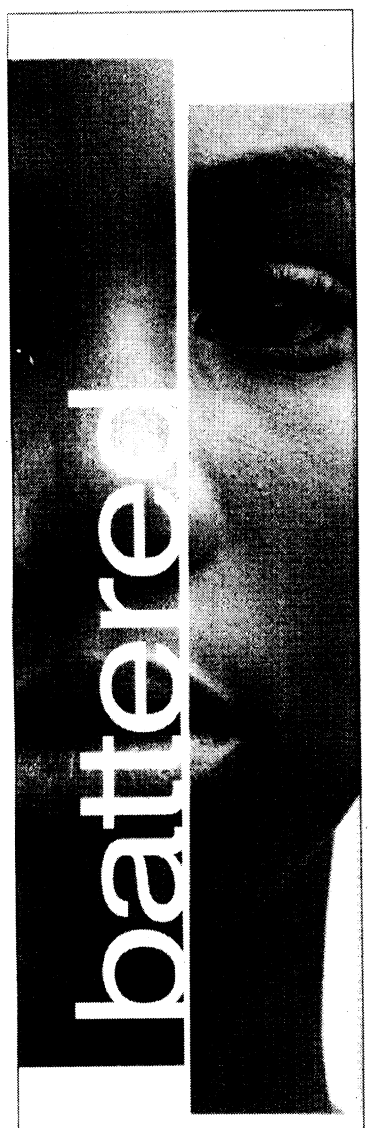
• Uses: Hanging basket or pot plant year-round.

Christmas pepper — Capricum annum bears oblong red and yellow fruits. As its name indicates, this plant lives only one year.

• Light: Sunny window facing south or east

• Temp: 65 to 75 F

• Humidity: Normal house



• Water: Keep soil evenly moist

• Uses: Some cultivars produce edible fruits.

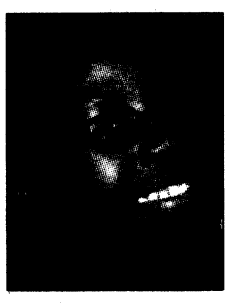
Fort Benning youth in the news

Who decides the meaning of what I choose to wear?

Aissa French
Faith Middle School

Yes, I've had clothing that sent a message, and it caused a really big problem. When I was in the sixth grade, I came dressed in a khaki Dickies jumpsuit with white and navy blue shoes. I had no idea my outfit was inappropriate or considered "gang apparel" until it was too late.

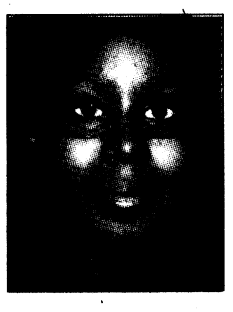
I was sent to the principal's office right off the bat. I mean, first thing in the morning before homeroom was even over.



This is really frightening, because I was only 10 and had never been in trouble at school before.

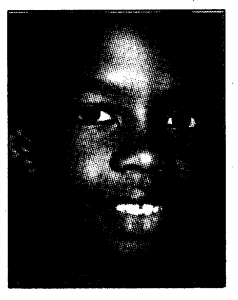
When I was in the office, I thought about how people judge others by the clothes they wear. They make judgments about what people are like based on their clothes.

My mom was not happy, because I was suspended for the day and she wasted $140 on this outfit that I am now too afraid to wear. I didn't get in trouble with her, because I didn't know anything about gangs or gang colors.



So yes, I've had clothes that sent a message (people thought I was in a gang), and it was a problem. I was mad people would think the worst of me because of that outfit. The message I got was that they were judging me without getting to know me.

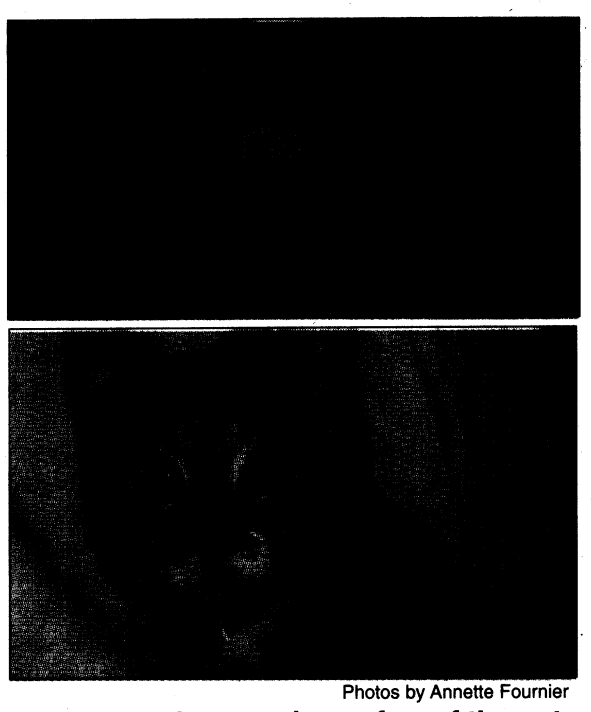
Faith Middle School's Lisa Madler asked her seventh-graders to respond to the question: Do the clothes you wear carry a message, and has this ever been a problem? Here are some of their responses:



Brianna Mosby

"Sometimes it's a problem because I'm teased for wearing skirts. I'm a quiet, conservative dresser. My clothes are me. When I dress differently than how people think I should dress, I try not to get mad when they talk about me. I feel everyone has different styles and standards which should all be respected. Although this may cause a conflict, I don't think this right should be taken away. I believe the clothes we wear can be a very optimistic way to express your personality."

Ta'keyah Royal



"The clothes I wear send a message of comfort. People at my school dress up, but I don't see why. I like the way I dress. I see my clothes as comfortable and unique. I like to stand out from the crowd. If I don't, my friends will think I'm just like everyone else, which I'm not. The bottom line is, if I dress like everyone else, I would let myself down. My clothes represent my inner self, my personality, beliefs and sense of style."

Jackie Bradford

"Do teens wear clothes with a message? Yes, I think the way you dress tells others something about you. When I'm at home, I put on a T-shirt and jeans. That's so I can relax. When I go to school, I want to dress for success. If I dress in a nice outfit and have a positive attitude, it sends a message that I want to learn. I've noticed that many of my peers dress differently when they are away from home. As such, they're judged by what they wear instead of who they are."

Be watchers, not waiters, this season

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ruben D. Colon
USAIC Chaplains Office

REFLECTIONS

"Be on guard! Be alert! You do not know when the time will come. It's like a man going away, he leaves his house and puts his servants in charge, each with his assigned task, and tells the one at the door to keep watch.

Therefore keep watch because you do not know when the owner will come back — whether in the evening or at midnight or in the morning, or at dawn if he comes suddenly, do not let him find you sleeping, what I say to you, I say to everyone, Watch!"

(Mark 13:32-37)

We were on a flight home after months of deployment.

The plane was filled to capacity, and all the military personnel on board sat back for a 36-hour flight.

After about an hour, I noticed one troop who kept looking out the window and glancing at his watch.

Every so often, I dozed off and awoke to find this same man with his nose to the window. I don't know if he ever slept during the long flight.

But then it occurred to me, there were two ways to deal with the agonizing anticipation of our return home. While he was watching, I was merely waiting.

Advent is the period just before Christmas which begs an active response. Do we watch, or merely wait for Christmas?

Advent calls us to be courageous and gives us true hope. The Gospel of Mark 13:33 calls us to a vigilant watch. The key word is "watch." Watching brings more rewards than waiting.

Going back to my illustration, that Soldier was actively watching for his return home, whereas I was merely waiting.

In Advent, "watching" implies a readiness, whereas waiting implies passivity. Waiting implies a sense of doubt — maybe we would be diverted to another conflict and never get home?

To make Advent simply a time of pleasure is wrong and superficial. To do so is like giving up on all the hopes and promises the Christ child brings at Christmas.

In other words, Advent, which begins the year for the Christian, is a reminder to all believers that God has come into our world through the Christ child. It is a reminder that we need to be on the alert for his appearance in our lives.

The joyous experience of his salvation for all people is like counting on someone who will always be with you. That Soldier on the plane knew his family was there watching and waiting for him.

He anticipated the passion and desire of his arrival much like we anticipate the arrival of the Lord.

We may be forgotten by the people and the things of this world, but we are not abandoned.

Once again, God has come to us. He continues to come. We are not on an endless or fruitless search. We are actively watching for the appearance of God in our world and in our lives.

Be an active watcher rather than a passive waiter.

This is a season of vigil, during which Christians actively anticipate the coming of the Messiah.

Just as the shepherds, wise men and all those who were lead to the manger could declare "Blessed be the Lord, and Glory to God in the highest and peace and good will toward men."

Remember reason for season this holiday time

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

So, now that you've worked your way through a dozen-and-one ways to slice, dice, spread and dread the Thanksgiving bird and you've begun to come out from under the food and football coma of last week, it's time to turn your attention to the Christmas season.

I don't know how the season of goodwill and cheer looks from your front porch, but let me tell you what I saw in an Indianapolis parking garage last Saturday afternoon ...

"'Twas the month before Christmas and all through the lot, tempers were flaring; I was about to get shot!"

No joke, Thanksgiving had no sooner come and gone than I found myself in holiday gridlock, because one individual in her Chevy Trailblazer would not budge.

The problem was, the first Christmas gift she wanted was the parking spot to her right, which happened to be occupied by someone trying to leave the mall.

However, the Trailblazer had pulled too far forward to let the Lexus back out.

Now, at any other time of the year, the driver of the Trailblazer would have simply said, "Shoot, I missed that spot, I'll have to keep circling until I find another parking space."

Hawkins

This being the season of good cheer, though, she refused to move an inch, fearing the vehicle behind her would swoop in and steal the parking space for which she was filibustering.

So there we sat, about a dozen or so cars lined up behind her, wondering what was going through her mind.

"Did she hear the bell ringers?"

"Was she interested at all in the 'peace and goodwill toward men'" part of the Christmas story?

"How about the season of giving bit — like give up your claim to the parking spot already!"

At any rate, much to my amazement, despite repeated horn honks and visits to her window by drivers stuck in the queue, this dear child of God did not budge.

Consequently, the Lexus had to inch back and forth, back and forth ...

Finally, it went over a parking block and curb and found the open road.

We were all amazed at the holiday spirit the driver of the Trailblazer demonstrated.

When it was my turn to pass the driver, I was certainly not going to miss my opportunity to join the others in giving her a piece of my holiday mind.

It was at that point my wife of 22 years, sensing I was about to say something I, as a minister, chaplain and Soldier, ought not to say, valiantly fought for control of the electric window button.

Showing great tenacity, valor and mission focus far above and beyond the call of duty, she succeeded in selflessly placing herself (and the window) between me and my target.

The storm passed; sanity was regained.

Here's the wisdom I gained as I reflected:

Insight 1: Let's be nice this Christmas season.

Insight 2: Let's be nice this Christmas season.

Insight 3: Let's be nice this Christmas season.

Want to work on your parking skills or anything else to help make this Christmas a time of peace on Earth and goodwill toward men at your house?

Stay fit, active during cold season

Post offers variety of activities for all

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

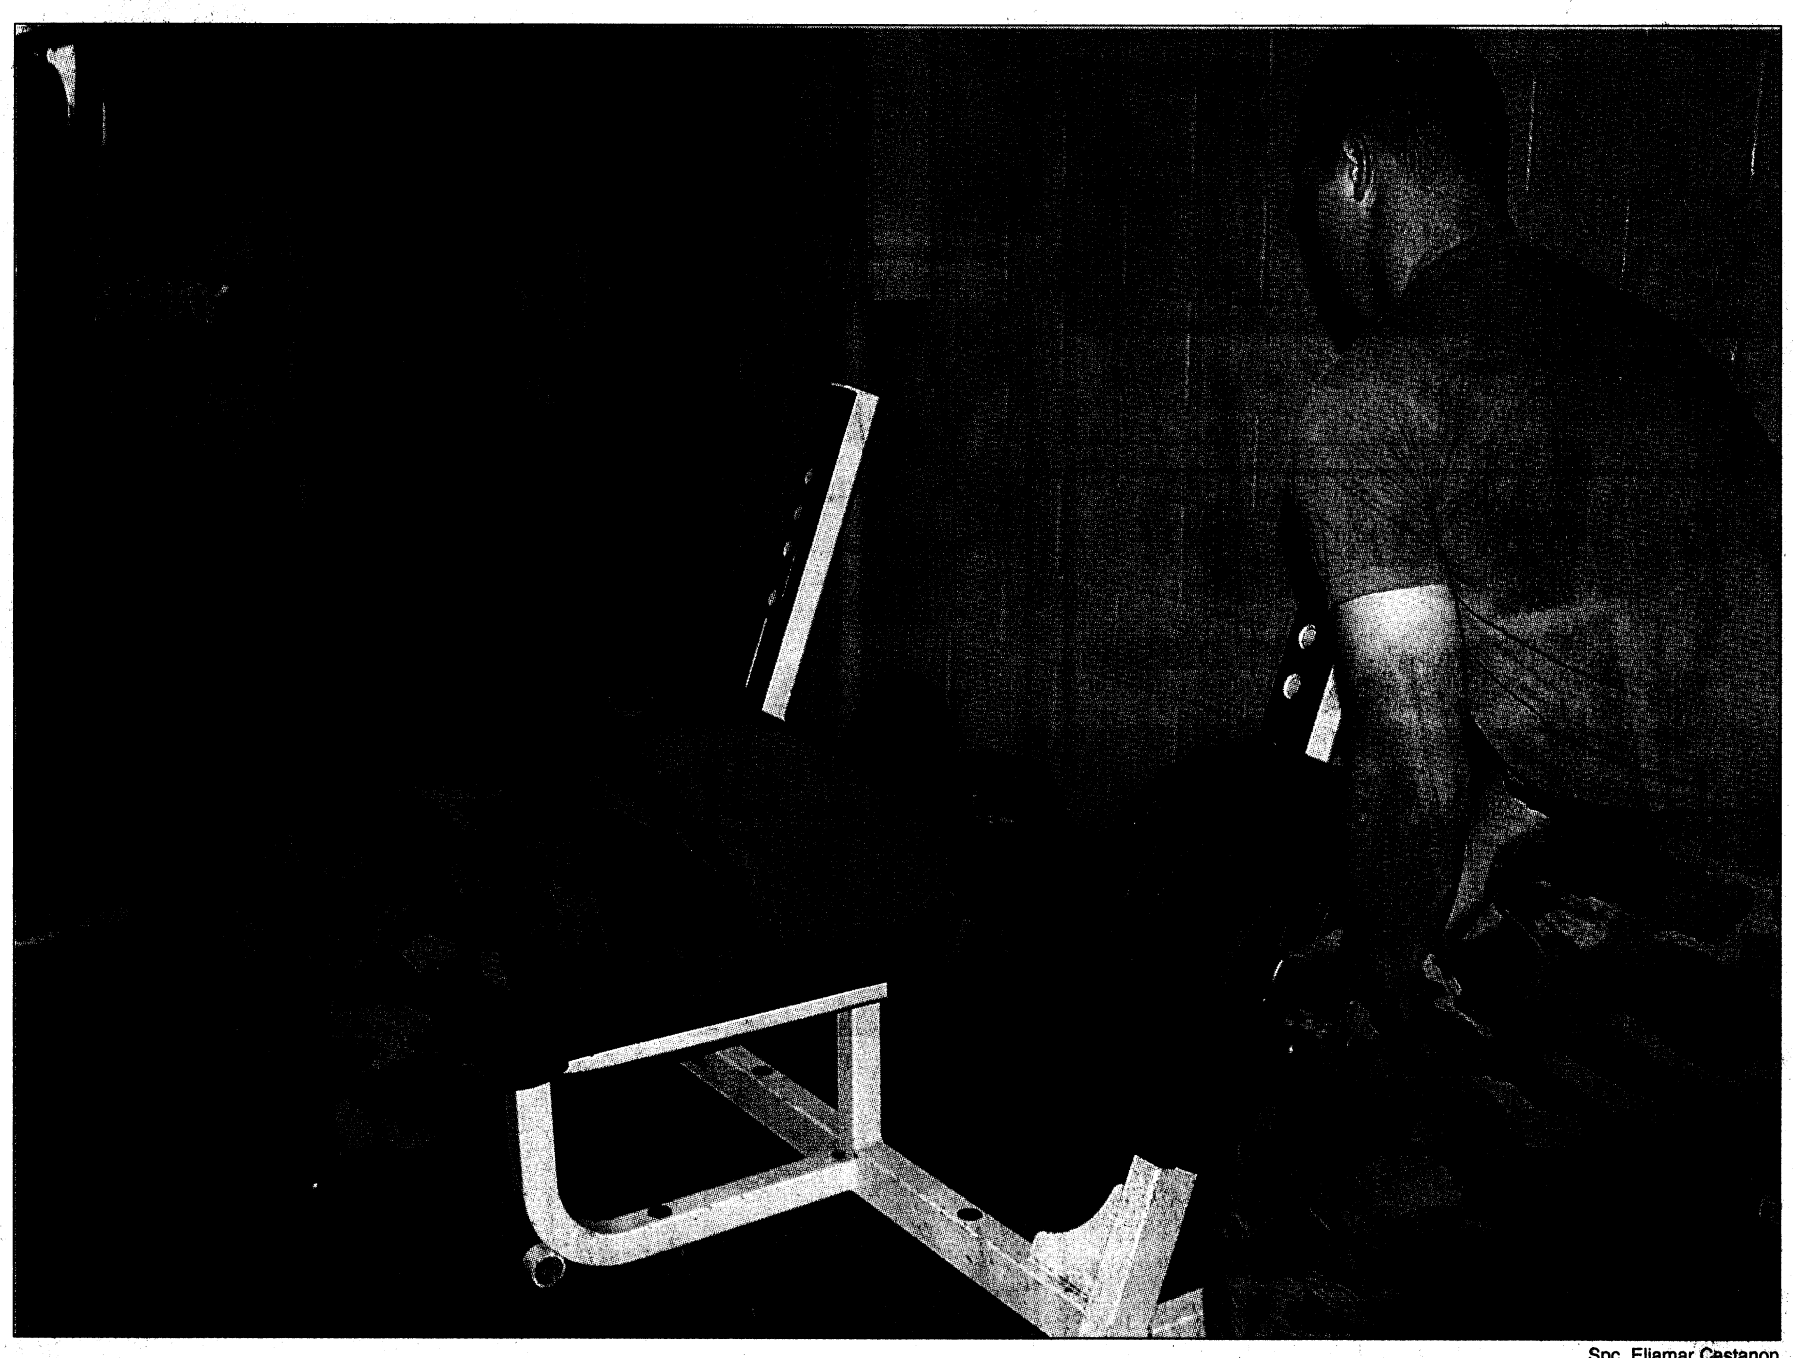
It's natural to shun the cold and embrace the warmth of, say, the couch, as winter begins to creep in. But, naturally, the weight-gain follows.

It's important to stay active during the holiday season one way or the other.

According to a study by the National Institutes of Health in 2000, a typical weight-gain during the holidays is 1 pound, but 1 pound here and there accumulates through the years and contributes to obesity later in life.

Fort Benning's Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation offers a variety of activities throughout the year to help people stay fit and keep the weight off this winter.

• In the spirit of basketball and Christmas, the Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill will host the annual Christmas Basketball Tournament from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Dec. 13 through 17.



The event is a single-elimination tournament, so the more teams that sign up, the longer the tournament will last, said Fred Woods, sports specialist with the Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The tournament is open to all active-duty Soldiers with a military ID, Woods said.

Today is the last day to turn in rosters for teams who want to participate. Teams can include up to 12 players from the same unit.

There will be a tournament organization meeting at 1 p.m. Wednesday at Gowdy Field on Main Post.

For more information on the tournament or to sign up, call Woods at 545-1940 or 545-9220.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Cpl. Johnathan Galloway, B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, pumps 325 pounds during a weight-lifting competition Nov. 23 at his unit. Galloway was just one of more than 30 Soldiers who participated in the event. A good way to maintain body muscle during the winter season is by lifting weights. The fitness centers around post offer free weights and other weight-lifting equipment as well as treadmills to help stay in shape.

• A post flag football tournament will be held from 6:30 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. Dec. 6 through 10 at Engineer Field on Main Post. Elimination games will be Dec. 6 through 9. Championship games will be Dec. 10.

For those who aren't football or basketball afficionados, the fitness centers offer a variety of aerobics, aquatic aerobics, box aerobics, Pilates and spinning classes, said Nancy Hadley, acting sports director.

The classes are offered at the Bryant Wells Fitness Center and the Wellness Center. Cost is $3 per class or an unlimited amount of classes for $25 a month.

For more information, call 545-1940 or 545-9220.

DNR to OK limited hunting to cull deer herds in 3 state parks

Georgia Department of Natural Resources

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources will host a public meeting in Covington Dec. 14 to announce the deer management plan for three Georgia state parks: Hard Labor Creek in Rutledge, Red Top Mountain in Cartersville and Richard B. Russell in Elberton. Wildlife biologists and parks staff will present research on current deer populations, discuss goals of the deer herd reduction and answer questions from participants.

A combination of limited hunting opportunities and professional marksmen will be used to reduce the over-populated deer herds at these parks. DNR is working with University of Georgia wildlife biologists to study the environmental impact of the deer management plan.

"As with many other park systems throughout the country, some of Georgia's state parks have such large deer populations that their ecosystems have become damaged, and there is an increased possibility of deer-car collisions on state park roadways," said State Parks Director Becky Kelley. "Legal hunting is the preferred method to thin the deer herds, but in areas where hunting is not feasible due to safety concerns or other issues, DNR also will use professional marksmen to help reduce populations."

Earlier this year, professional marksmen significantly reduced the deer population at Red Top Mountain State Park, and the same approach will be used on the golf course at Hard Labor Creek State Park this winter. To help maintain a healthy deer herd, DNR will offer limited quota hunting opportunities at these parks during the next hunting season. Richard B. Russell State Park has hosted hunts for handicapped sportsmen for the past several years.

Specific regulations will be imposed to ensure the state park hunts are a safe and practicable reduction method that will allow the ecosystem to repair itself and provide improved habitat for a wide range of species. One of these regulations will require hunters to take at least one doe before harvesting a buck.

Detailed hunting regulations and quota application information for each park will be included in the "2005-2006 Hunting Seasons and Regulations" booklet produced by DNR's Wildlife Resources Division.

Any participant at the meeting may present data, make a statement or comment, or offer a viewpoint or argument, either orally or in writing. Statements should be concise to permit everyone an opportunity to speak. Participants are required to register upon arrival and to notify the registering official of their intent to make a statement. Those unable to attend the meeting may submit written statements, prior to close of business on December 17. Statements should be mailed to:

Chuck Gregory, Resource Management and Interpretation
Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites
2 Martin Luther King, Jr. Drive, Suite 1352 East
Atlanta, GA 30334

The public meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. Dec. 14 at the Turner Lake Recreation Complex in Newton County. From Conyers, take I-20 east to exit 90. Keep right and yield onto Turner Lake Road. At the next light, turn right into the Turner Lake Complex. From Madison, take I-20 west to exit 90. Go straight at the traffic light crossing over Hwy. 278 onto Turner Lake Road. At the next light, turn right into the Turner Lake Complex.

MPs deploy to Afghanistan

Annette Fournier
Bayonet Staff

Soldiers from the 209th and 71st MP Detachments and the 988th MP Company deployed Dec. 9 for training at Fort Campbell, Ky. before deploying to man a confinement facility in Kandahar, Afghanistan.

The group of Soldiers will become the 716th A Detachment upon arriving in Afghanistan in early 2005, and were selected from a list of MPs who volunteered to deploy.

Company Commander Capt. Wendy Brinson was impressed with the number of MPs who volunteered.

"About a month ago we called for volunteers and we had more people than we needed volunteer," Brinson said. "The MPs know that they're needed for a mission, and they're ready and willing to do their part."

"We assembled an excellent team of Soldiers, with strong leadership. Our NCOs are strong, motivated, dedicated and care about the Soldiers," Brinson said.

The MPs selected had many reasons for volunteering, and for many it will be their first deployment.

"I get to be a part of something larger than myself," said Pvt. Michael Soon of the 209th MP Detachment. "I will get to to do something for others and support the Army's mission in the Global War on Terrorism."

AUSA speaker visits post

Sylvia E. J. Kidd, director of Family Programs for AUSA, talked about programs supporting Soldiers and their families Dec. 8, during a meeting of the the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army at the Officers' Club.

Kidd's presentation, "Meeting the Family Needs of an Army at War," focused on the Disabled Soldier Support Program, the Rest and Recuperation Programs, Deployment Cycle Support, and Franklin Covey's "Smart Marriages" program.

"We really want to get the message out that AUSA is a resource for families, and we support the Army's missions and needs,"

Kidd has a history with the Army as the wife of retired Sgt. Major of the Army Richard A. Kidd.

The daughter of and mother to a Soldier, she's deeply concerned for the welfare of military families, said Stephen R. Hesler, chapter president.

Sgt. Jose Acevedo of the 498th Medical Company, presented Loyd Elementary an American flag that flew in 36 missions in Iraq.

Acevedo presented the flag to Principal Julita Martinez in a ceremony at the school Monday to say thanks for watching over his children while he was deployed.

Acevedo had been at Fort Benning for two months when he deployed, leaving his wife, Betzaida, to care for Jose, 7, Isaack, 5 and Ashley, 4. Their family readiness group and Loyd staff helped ease the transition and make the family feel welcome at Fort Benning, Acevedo said.

"The school really reached out to my children," he said. "This is the first time I've been separated from

Ho, ho, hum: Families face Christmas without dad

Wives share concerns at holidays

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

In her book, Hero Mama, Karen Spears Zacharias pays tribute to her mother's Southern-bred grit during her husband's Army career and after his death in Vietnam.

"It was our Mama — not just Daddy — who paid the tab for freedom's sake," she wrote. "She paid it in one broken dream, one searing heartache, one belated bill at a time."

Hero Mama gives voice to "all of the families who hunker at the home front anxiously waiting." It's the heartbreaking story of a Columbus family's struggle to deal without dad.

Like the Spears family and the countless others who waited through every war ever fought for our nation's freedom, Fort Benning families wait today. Some will wait tomorrow. Some will wait for months, some for a year or more.

Four wives met at a local restaurant Monday night to talk about the waiting. Saying good-bye is oh-so-hard, they said. Homecomings mean tension and readjustment — they're seldom picture-perfect as "outsiders" would believe.

But waiting, they all agree, is the hardest part.

Laura is a veteran "waiter." She married her high school sweetheart soon after he enlisted 19 years ago. They have a teenage daughter and son. This is the first Christmas they'll spend apart.

Erin and her husband of eight years have a 5-year-old son who wonders if Santa will leave daddy's presents "here or over there." This will be Erin's first Christmas without her husband. He's missed more anniversaries and birthdays than she cares to count, but this is much more difficult. Families, she said, shouldn't be separated at Christmas.

Kristin is spending her second Christmas without her husband of five years. This time is worse than the first, since the couple's daughter will celebrate her second birthday on Christmas.

> "It was our Mama — not just Daddy — who paid the tab for freedom's sake."
> Karen Spears Zacharias
> Hero Mama

Morgan is a young newlywed who came into the marriage with her eyes wide open. During their courtship, the couple spent more time apart than together. She knew what to expect, but that doesn't make it easier.

Here, Laura, Erin, Kristin and Morgan talk about the ways they cope. They confess emotions they seldom share with their husbands. They talk about their predecessors — those who had it harder than these women care to imagine. And they say what they wish other people knew about the problems shared by Army wives everywhere.

Laura's story

It was a bad day. The kids' pet rat died suddenly, and Laura suspects she's to blame. The Web site she searched in a desperate attempt to save the ailing rodent said rats can catch strep throat from adults. It's usually fatal.

Laura's been battling a sore throat for weeks. Today, she had an appointment with a doctor. But first, she had to bury a rat.

"I cried. It was pitiful, me crying over a rodent," she said. "Then I thought about my dog. If I carry on like this over a rat, can you imagine ..."

Then, she said, she thought about her husband.

"You know, sometimes I think I'm prepared for the worst. I can handle it if I have to," she said. "But after today, I know there's no way. You can't be prepared for anything bad."

In spite of the rat incident, it's easy to see that Laura is an optimist. Maybe "overcomer" is a better word. She's making the best of a bad situation.

"It's not going to be a bad Christmas," she said softly but adamantly. "It'll be different."

Laura makes sure her kids are aware of others in need. She focuses on "the giving aspect" of Christmas.

"They need to know there are folks in nursing homes who don't have anyone to visit," she said. "There are so many people who have it worse, and there are so many right around us who are in the same boat we are.

"Everybody wants their husband home, their dad home. But you can't mope about it — not for long. It just makes it harder."

Laura doesn't let her kids dwell on dad's absence. They keep busy with schoolwork and extra-curricular activities, though she's careful to make sure they're not overloaded. That would only compound the stress.

"I think it's a little easier for me than for some of the

HOLIDAY CHEER

Family brightens season

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It was definitely a Christmas to remember. There were 20 of us, spanning four generations of Benchoffs, Munsons and Sloans.

That was the year my brother brought his fiancee and we were introduced to one of her family's customs — the sweater. It was red and black striped, and looked, at first glance, like a normal sweater. But once you held it up, you realized it was a sweater made for two.

We laughed all night at the two of them in the sweater, playing cards. She had the right armhole, he had the left and both their heads came out of one oversized neck.

And that card game lasted all night, too. There were at least 10 of us playing a game of Aggravation with five decks of cards.

And we didn't take our turns fast enough for Grammy, who was one impatient cardplayer. She could never remember which hand went with which level, so the table was littered with her handwritten reminder cards.

My great uncles didn't play, but sat close enough to the table so we could still listen to their stories of life growing up on the farm in the tiny town of Soldier, Pa. They were important to us and we soaked up every word, every story they told of their brother, the grandfather I never had the chance to meet.

That Christmas has become the prototype Christmas for me, and every year since, I hope to have that same feeling of peace, joy and utter contentment — even as we tripped over each other and waited in line for the bathrooms in my parents' house.

Another thing I remember, when we sat down to that big family dinner for 20, I was sure that it was finally my year to move beyond the kids' table, to the "grown-up" table. I hovered on the fringe, waiting to take my seat.

Those of you wondering how old you have to be to finally leave the kids' table won't like the answer. A few moments later, there I was, presiding over the kids' table like I had for so many years as the eldest of the six cousins.

That meal was just a little different. My husband was there with me and we took turns entertaining our son, who was a little over one year old. I guess it proves you're still a kid when you go home, no matter how old you are.

This Christmas is going to be bittersweet.

On one hand, I'm counting my blessings that my husband is home to celebrate with us. On the other, counting the days left before my husband leaves. It won't be a loud and jovial Christmas. No extended family, no card game. Just us.

So this year, I'll be presiding over the kids' table again — my dining room table with my kids — hoping to create some good memories that will carry us through next Christmas.

I will survive, make it through

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

The Christmas season is in full swing. This year I am lacking in any type of holiday spirit. I am going through the motions but just not feeling it. I think I have pretty good reasons, and I really do wish I could feel one iota of Christmas cheer, but it just isn't happening.

I first knew Christmas was going to be different this year a few months back. My husband, who we knew was being deployed, told me he wouldn't be home for Christmas. After nine years in the military and eight years of marriage, this is the first Christmas holiday we will not be together.

The double whammy came two weeks ago when I found out my 18-year-old brother, fresh out of basic training, was deploying to Kuwait, and then Iraq. This does not make for a very merry Christmas for me. But I've been trying to make the best out of it, the best a born pessimist can possibly get.

I unearthed all our Christmas decorations, and got to work. It took me hours to decorate outside. Usually my very tall husband, a full 13 inches taller than me, can just walk the length of the house and string up the icicle lights. Being 5 feet, 2 inches tall, I had to drag my kitchen chair from nail to nail.

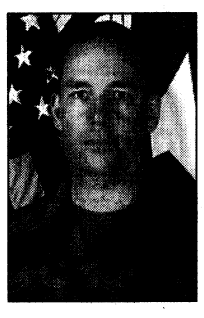
I have all the decorations up, 95 percent of my presents bought and wrapped and the ones for family sent.

I sit on the couch and watch the Christmas specials with my son, while visions of Frosty melting and Rudolph's nose blowing a fuse runs through my head.

Yes, I may be not be happy, but I am thankful. I am thankful my husband and brother are alive. There are many families who will have their first Christmas without their loved one, because their loved one is never coming home. That helps put everything in perspective for me.

We will celebrate Christmas with my husband when he does come home, a luxury some families will not have. And next year there will be many families without their loved one for the first time. But they will cope, just like me and countless other families.

While I'm feeling sorry for myself, there are still bright spots to this holiday. I have a 5-year-old son who believes wholeheartedly in Santa Claus and a best friend I wouldn't trade for the world.



We plan on indulging ourselves, relaxing and giving my son the best possible Christmas he can have without his hero around. The thought of waking up Christmas morning and watching my son open his presents without my husband around makes me want to curl up in the fetal position, alternately seeing how many marshmallows I can cram in my mouth and washing it down with spiked eggnog. But I won't. I will put on my game face and take pictures to send to my husband and the rest of the family. And I will be eternally grateful to my friend for being there and sharing the day with us.

So, while I may be lacking in the merriness of the season, and rather enjoy feeling like the Grinch, I do have plenty of reasons to be grateful.

CG's holiday greeting to all

Happy holidays! My family and I wish you a blessed and happy holiday season. During this time of year, we pause to celebrate many wonderful events and traditions. With the Christian celebration of Christmas and the Jewish festival of Hanukkah, this season is accented with hope, peace and joy. I trust each of you will use this time to strengthen your family and your traditions.

Here at Fort Benning, we play an extremely important role in the Global War on Terrorism. Each day we train thousands of Soldiers and in recent months, we have trained Fort Benning units to deploy, as they bring peace and goodwill to troubled spots around the world.

We should be very proud of the role we play in training and molding superb Soldiers.

Our diversity, varying backgrounds and traditions make us a strong nation. I am encouraged by the spirit and dedication of our Soldiers, family members and civilians who work at Fort Benning. Let us enter the new year with renewed vigor to face the challenges and opportunities that await us. I look forward to serving with you and pray God's richest blessings will be yours.

Have a wonderful holiday season. May God bless you and your families.

Really support our troops, buy phone card

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

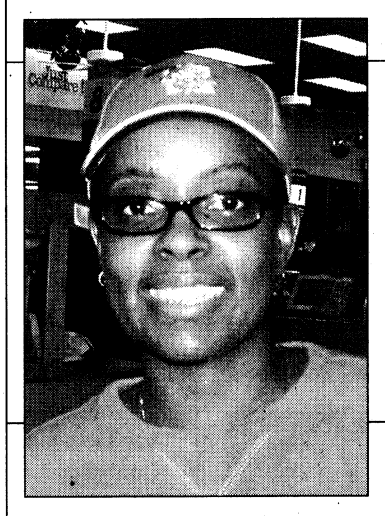
An e-mail was forwarded to me that really caught my attention. I don't usually forward anything to anyone but this one is important — it's about really supporting our troops — especially those who are wounded and recovering at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C.

The number one request at Walter Reed from Soldiers is phone cards. The government doesn't pay for long distance phone charges, so wounded Soldiers are rationing their calls home.

Many of these Soldiers will be there through the holidays and will want to call home.

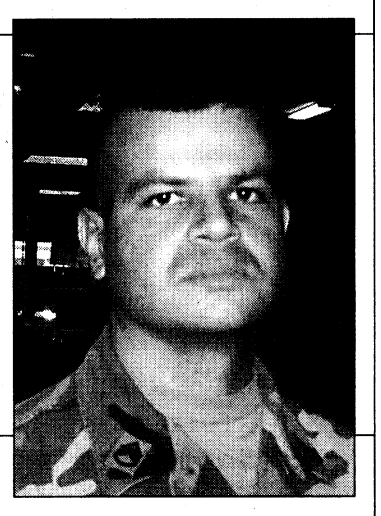
So if you really want to "Support our Troops," buy a phone card or two and send them to:

Medical Family Assistance Center
Walter Reed Medical Center
6900 Georgia Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20307-5001



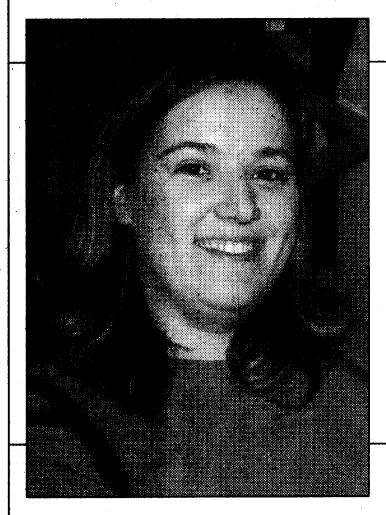
We all have the yellow ribbons and the "Support our Troops" bumper stickers, but if you really want to support the troops, send a calling card or two.

When I was in Maryland two years ago, I visited a couple of friends at Walter Reed and met a lot of Soldiers who were there being treated for injuries they received overseas. A few of them had their families send them cell phones, but not all of them were that lucky.

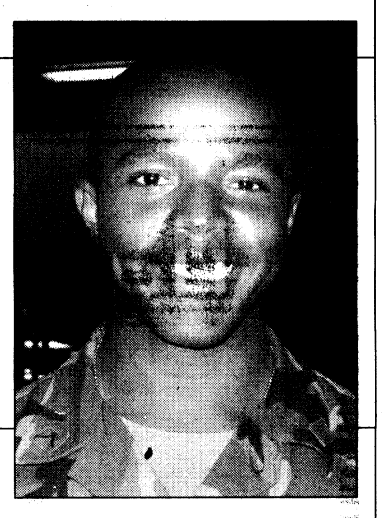


So this holiday season, remember the wounded troops waiting to go home and send them a gift. As the e-mail read, "I am sure you will feel better about doing that, than to buy something for a third cousin, who will find it on a closet shelf six months later, and wonder where it came from."

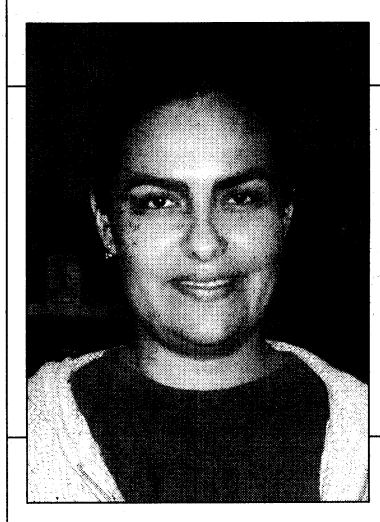
VARIOUS VOICES



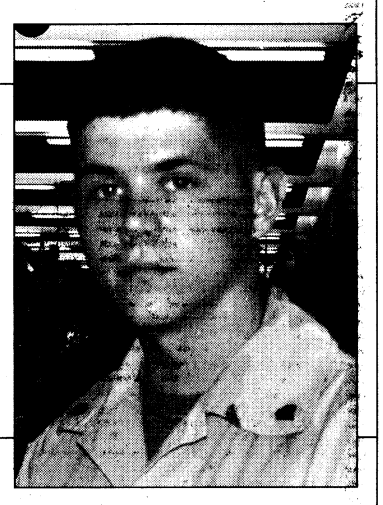
How are the deployments affecting your holidays?



Karen Larry, family member — "This year is harder because my husband is deploying, and I have to be both mom and dad to our two girls. I respect single parents because they always do it by themselves. This is the third time he's been deployed in two years, so I'm used to it."



Staff Sgt. Felix Diaz, 30th Adjutant General Bn.— "I'm not deploying this time, but I have friends going. Sometimes I reflect that it could have been me, and how tough it will be on them and their families. I'm thankful that I'll be home for Christmas but I know I'll be going again soon."



Piper Allen, family member — "It's stressful to have my husband leave around the holidays. We're going to visit family before he leaves, and it will help the transition for our son to see his grandparents. We'll deal with it as it comes."

Pvt. Matthew Winder, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment — "This Christmas I will spend a lot more time with my family, because I will deploy in a few weeks. I'm going home to California for Christmas and I really want to make the most of my time with them."

Laura Sanchez, family member — "I'm trying not to think about my husband deploying, and I'm just trying to reassure our kids. I'm telling them everything will be OK, and dad will be home soon."

Spc. Cory Burke, 598th Maintenance Company — "My family is going to miss me during Christmas, and I'll miss spending time with my family and friends. I leave this week, but at least I got to have Thanksgiving here."

Who doesn't own a DVD player? When you make $120,000 a year, you're expected to own one, but Spc. Michael Brown does not have a DVD player.

"As long as I can still rent movies on VHS at Blockbuster, I don't need a DVD player," Brown said.

Nevermind the DVD. Why — or how — does a specialist earn $120,000? Brown was a lawyer. Now he's an Infantry Soldier in B Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

The 26-year-old Mississippi native graduated law school from the University of North Carolina in 2003, passed the bar began working as a civil defense lawyer, earning nearly $120,000 a year. But a year later, he knew something was missing. So he joined the Army.

"People kept asking me why I gave up my career to join the Army," Brown said. "The way I see it, you really have to determine what's the greatest joy in your life. For me it is adventure and camaraderie.

"I learned that in football. We have a mission, and it's to win the game. That's the adventure. The camaraderie comes from going into a game knowing your teammates are watching your back. The only other place I knew I could find that was in the military."

Brown began seriously considering the change of career on a mission trip to Peru, when the topic of 'what if' situations arose. The only 'what if' situation he could think of was, "what if I had joined the military?"

Brown was in college when terrorists attacked the U.S. in 2001. He remembers feeling he had to do something, maybe join the military. But his father always told him never to quit anything, so he finished college and became a lawyer. Soon after, the thought of the military started creeping in.

While doing research on the different military branches Brown learned about Rangers and Special Forces.

"That's what did it," he said. "When I saw how tightly knit those units are and their mission, I just had to do it. I saw a recruiter."

Brown has been with B Company for three weeks and is expected to graduate March 4.

Having barely completed the total control phase of infantry one station unit training, Brown has earned the respect of his fellow Soldiers.

"He's the type of guy that, even as a peer, you look up to him," said Pfc. Joshua Gibson, one of Brown's battle buddies. "He's a very accomplished, very focused, loyal, motivational, faithful and responsible kind of guy. Everything about him is what you look for in a Soldier and a friend."

Gibson said that Brown has started to teach the Bible to Soldiers in their bay.

"(Brown) is very religious and faithful to the Lord," Gibson said. "In basic, you're around stuff you typically aren't used to. Even though it gets tough sometimes, Brown hasn't cursed once. That's just the type of guy he is. He's never picked on anyone here. If anything, he's very supportive to all the Soldiers, regardless of what they are like. I wish that all the guys in the Army were like him."

> "The pride I feel every time I put on a uniform makes the few hairs I have left on the back of my head stand up. I'm just proud to know that the next time someone asks me what I do, I'll be able to say that I'm a Soldier."

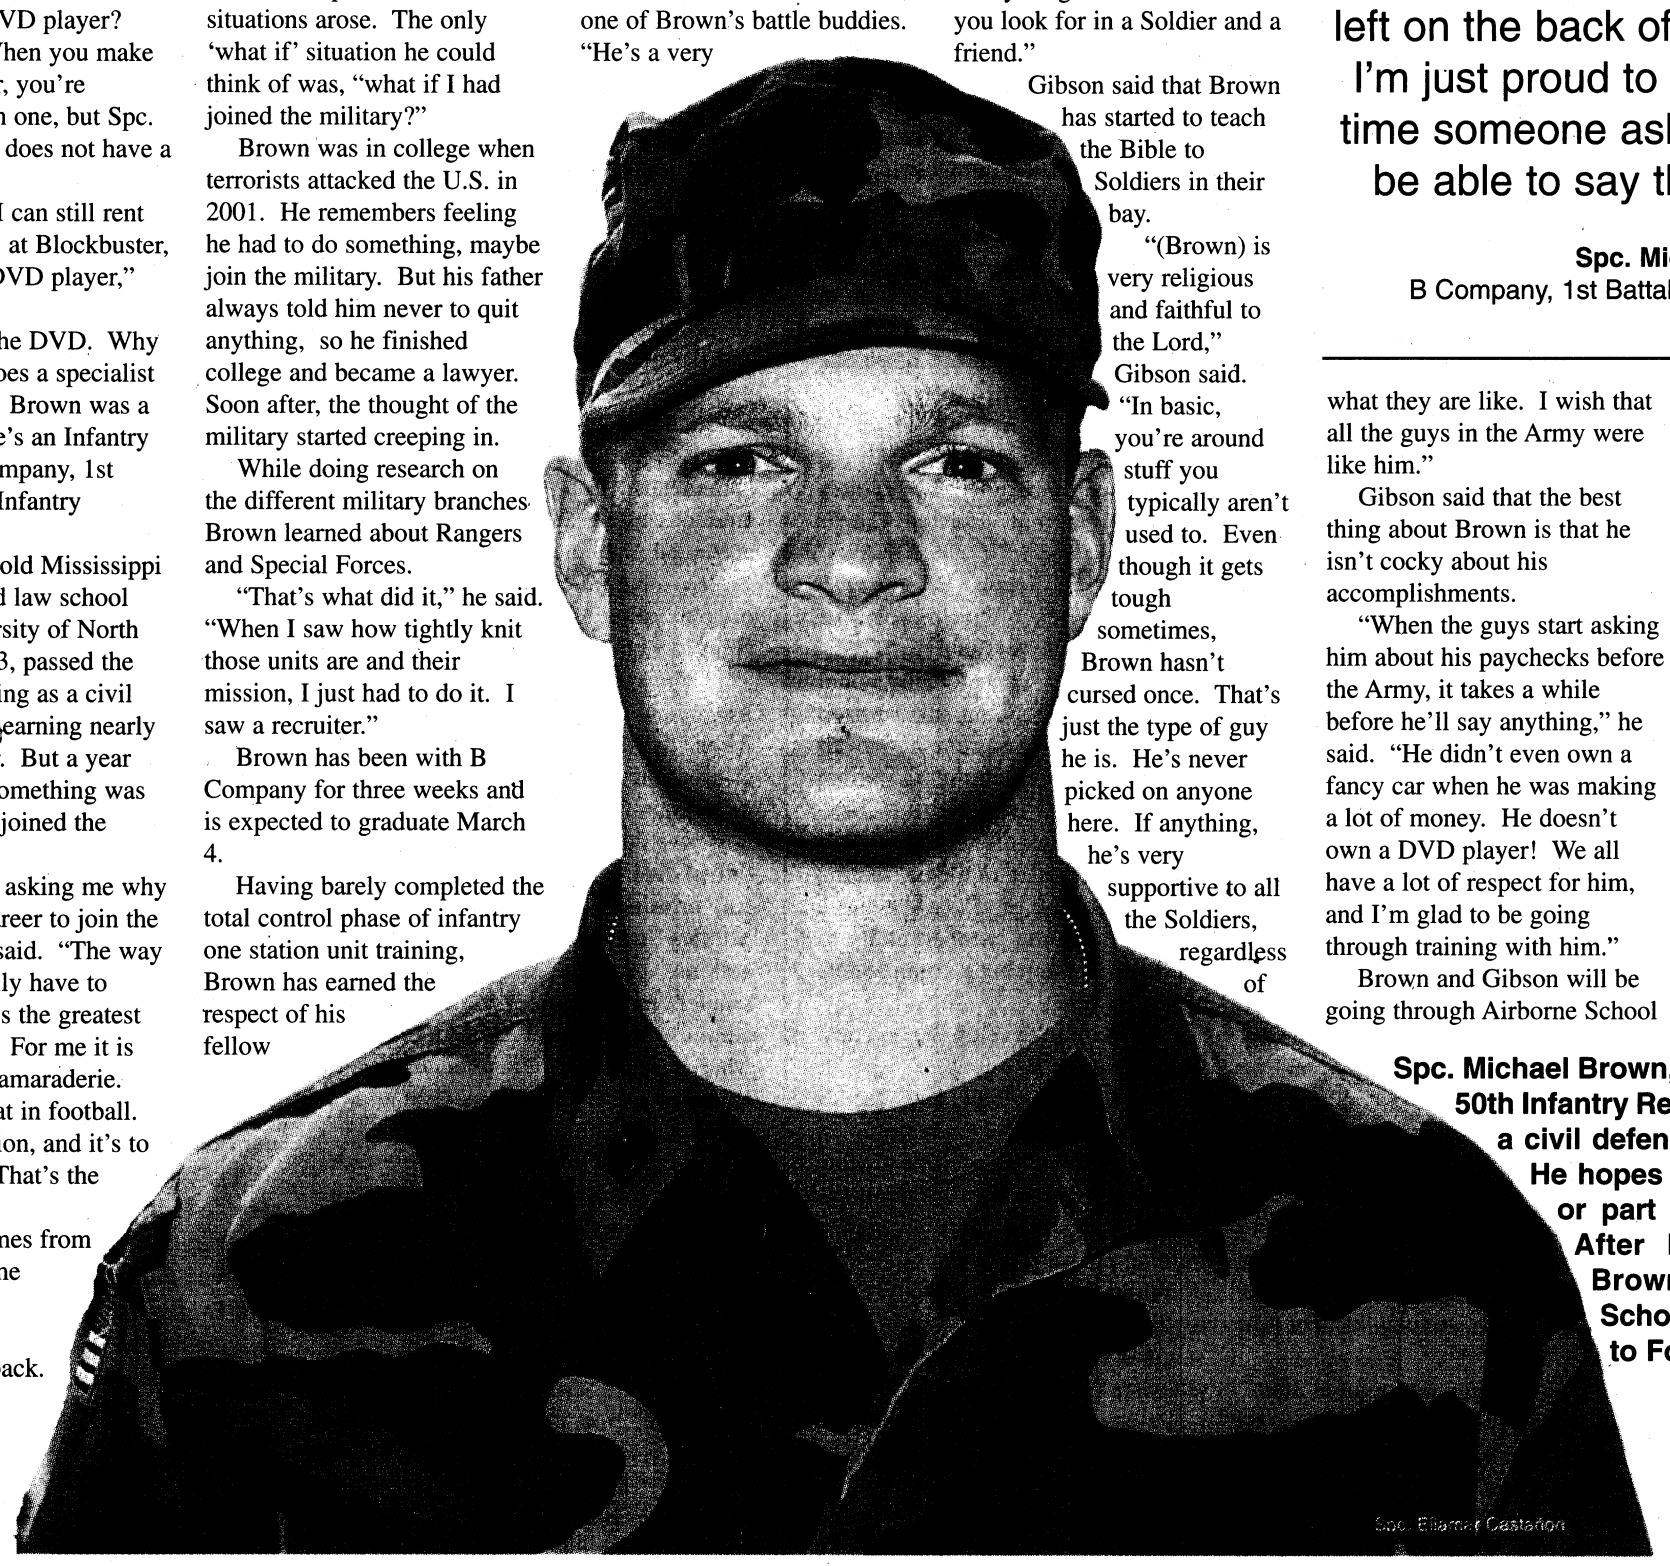
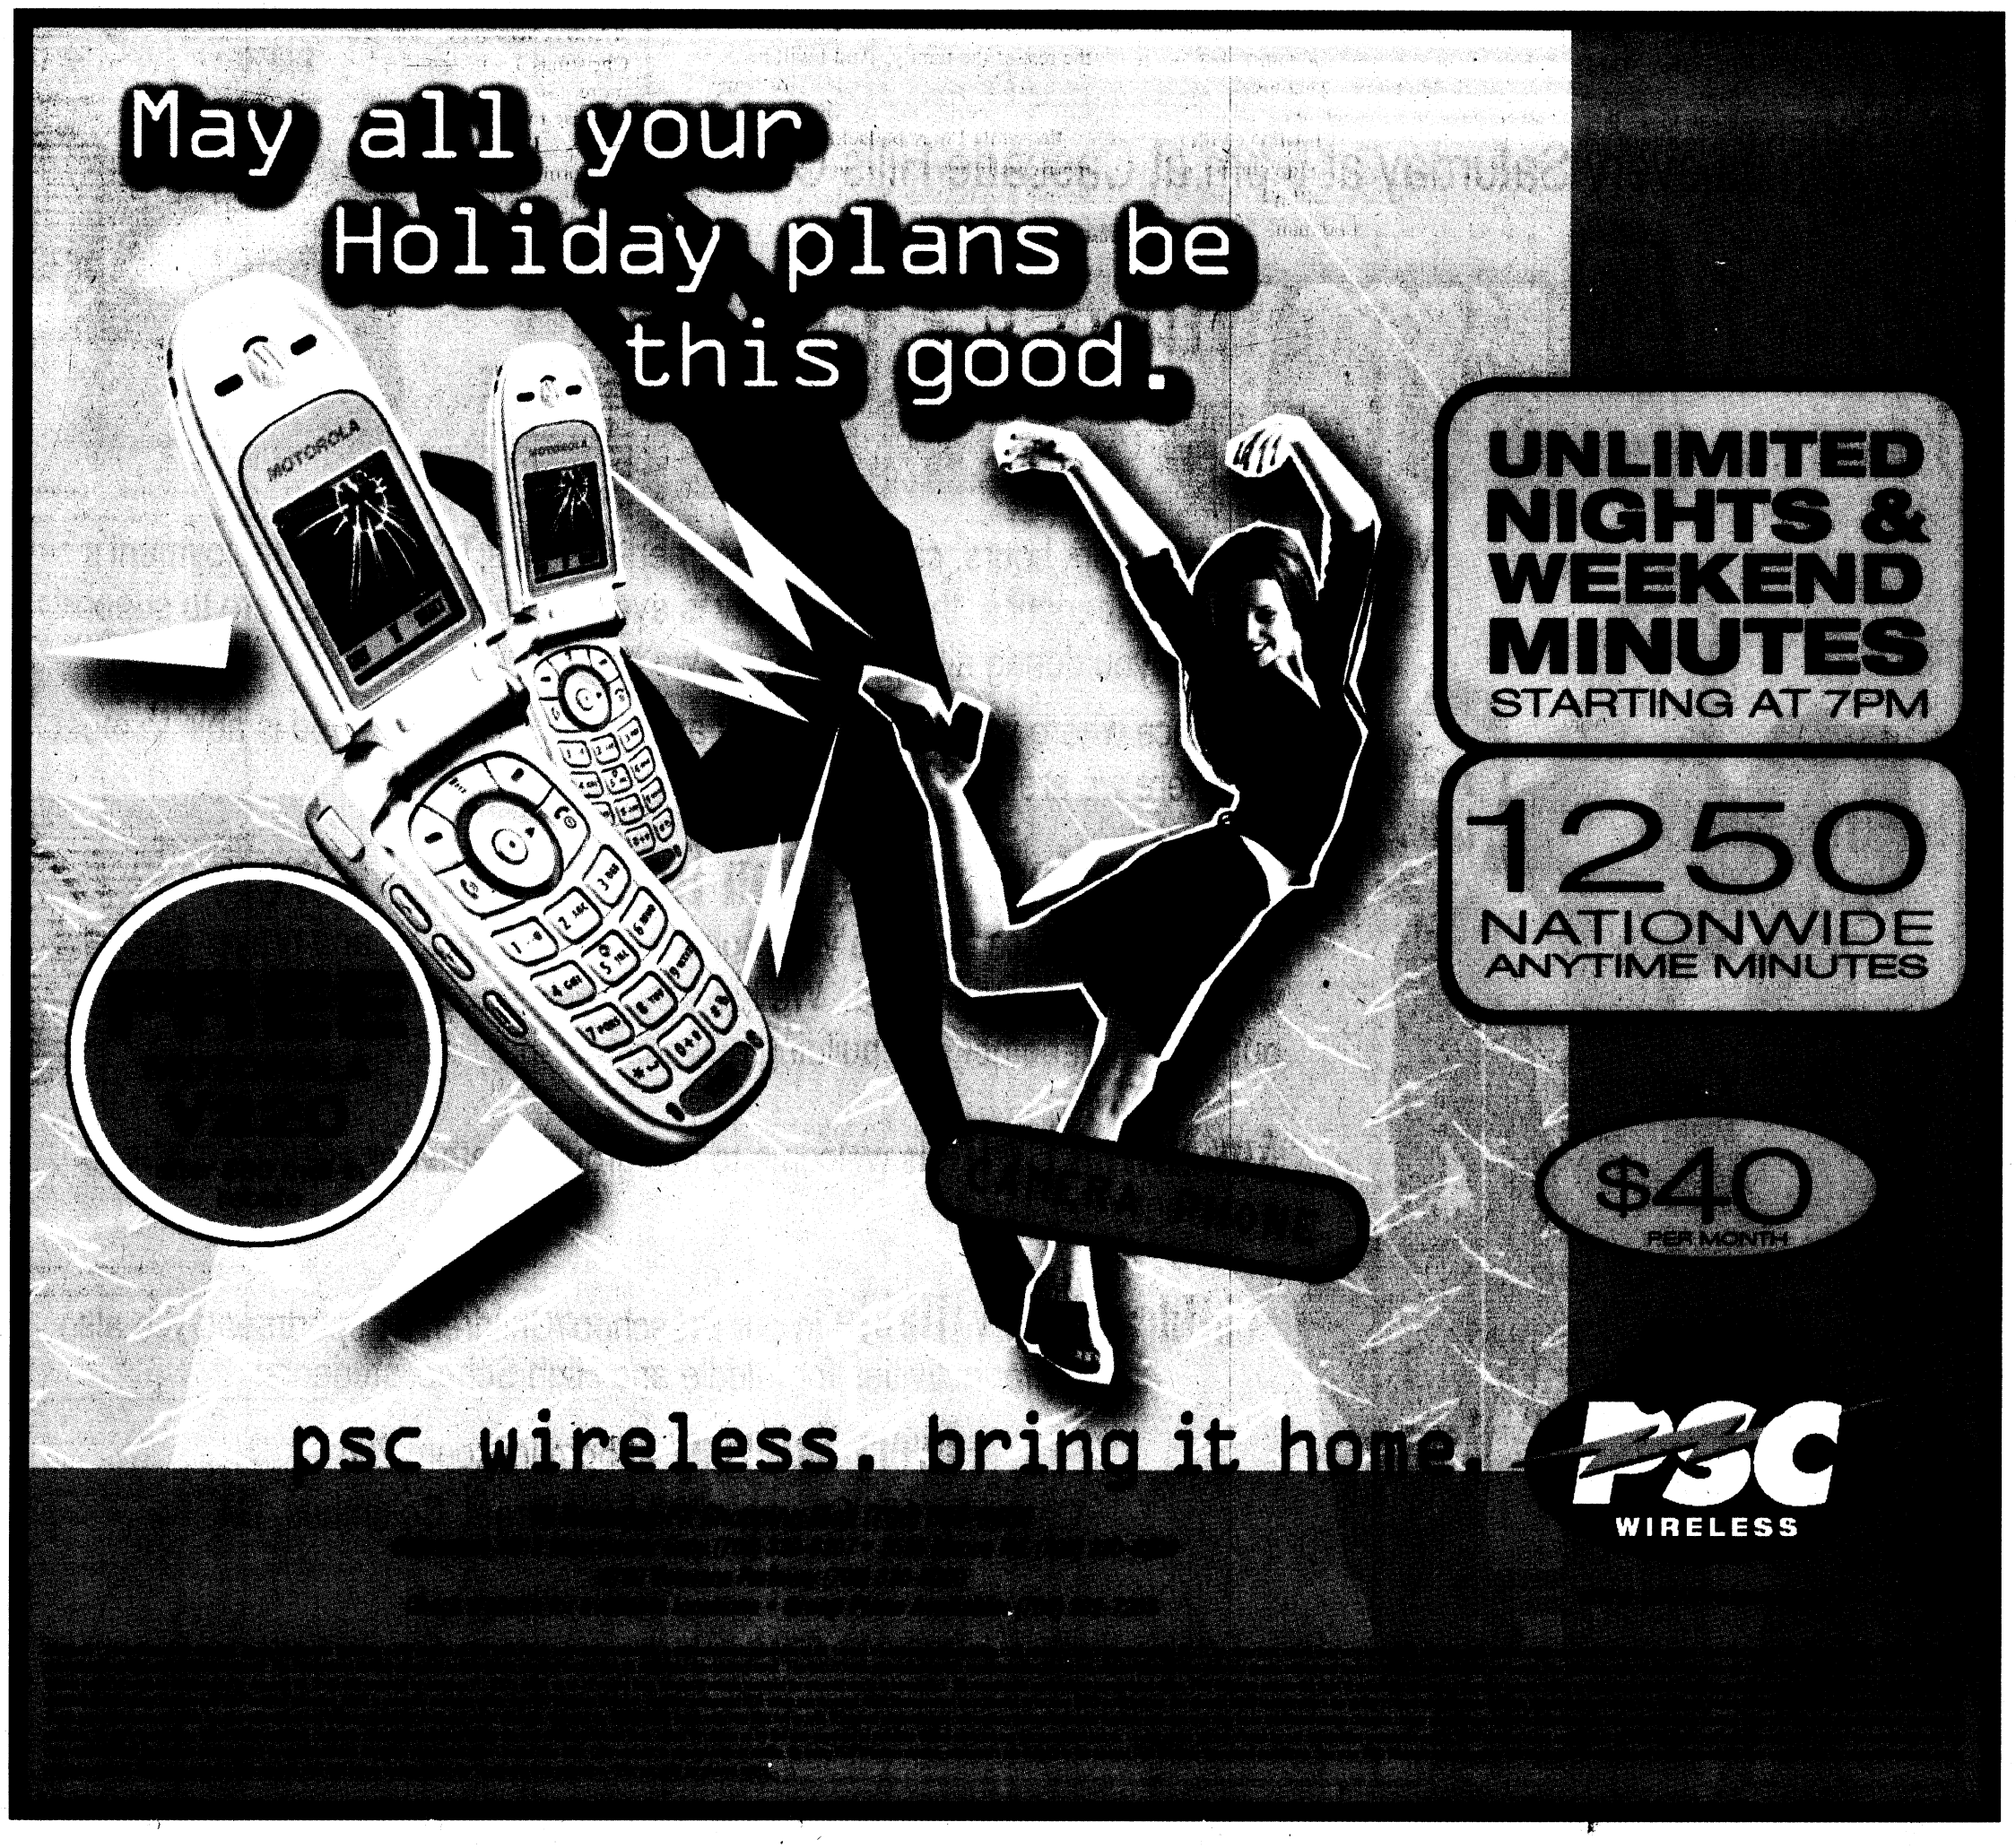
Gibson said that the best thing about Brown is that he isn't cocky about his accomplishments.



"When the guys start asking him about his paychecks before the Army, it takes a while before he'll say anything," he said. "He didn't even own a fancy car when he was making a lot of money. He doesn't own a DVD player! We all have a lot of respect for him, and I'm glad to be going through training with him."

Brown and Gibson will be going through Airborne School together when they graduate. Gibson, who has a Ranger contract, is trying to convince Brown to become a Ranger instead of joining Special Forces.

"I'm just excited I have the opportunity to experience either of them," Brown said.



Brown has orders to go to Fort Bragg, N.C., after completing Airborne School.

"I'm not afraid of deployment," Brown said. "I'm expecting it to happen soon. That's why I'm here. The pride I feel every time I put on a uniform makes the few hair I have left on the back of my head stand up. I'm just

Spc. Michael Brown, B Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, gave up a career as a civil defense lawyer to join the Army. He hopes to become either a Ranger or part of a Special Forces team. ICCC learns about media

Training 'force multiplier' for Army PAOs

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Students in the Infantry Captain Career Course Class 03-04 received a new block of instruction on media awareness Dec. 3.

The class, although not part of the formal program of instruction, is something most instructors cover at some time, said Maj. Campbell Paine, an Australian army exchange officer who teaches the course.

Paine, who said he has a "fair bit of experience" through the media training he's received in his courses in Australia, thought he could do a bit more to help the students.

"The media is a powerful tool," he said, "and they are with the Soldiers on the battlefield. It's an ever-present thing you consider when you analyze problems."

He made a few phone calls and set up the one-hour block of instruction with Monica Manganaro, Public Affairs officer, to give the students information on who the media are, and the whys and hows of engaging the media.

During their coursework, the students cover the military decision making process at the company level.

In addition to conducting terrain and weather, enemy, troop, and time analysis in the mission analysis phase, they also must take civilian consideration into account. That's where Paine sees the media awareness training fitting in.

He said 70 percent of the students in Class 03-04 are combat veterans with good stories to tell, and a surprising number of them had experience with the media.

"But there's a perception that the media are the enemy and (the students) feel helpless to a degree," Paine said.

"As company commanders, they can generate large amounts of media coverage, and 95 percent is good."

He said he wanted to "tool up the guys a little bit better" so they would be able to generate good stories about their Soldiers and what they do.

Paine also saw the opportunity to give the captains a chance to get in front of a camera, giving live interviews based on experiences in their military careers.

"Getting in front of the camera changes everything," he said, "and people out there are influenced by how you look on camera."

Photo and broadcast journalists from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team added realism to the training, conducting the interviews on camera. Then the students saw their interviews on a big screen TV.

Capt. Jeremy Secrest, a field artillery officer who did two on-camera interviews, said he had few dealings with the media during his tour in Korea.

"Most things were handled by the PAO," Secrest said, adding that he, personally, would prefer not to talk with the media. He said it was helpful to see the tapes and get critiqued.

"It was good for us to see how we looked on camera and see potential ways the things you say can be distorted," he said.

"Your words might be right, but your body may be saying something different."

Secrest said he thought the company-level training would be good to share with his Soldiers once he gets to his next assignment at Fort Drum, N.Y.

"The training was a good start," he said, "and applicable because on any deployment, you're more than likely to have reporters and have to deal with the media and public perceptions. There are always ways to integrate the media into your training."

Manganaro sees the training as a force multiplier for PAOs Armywide.

"PAO can't be everywhere," she said, "and if we can incorporate media training here, Infantrymen everywhere can influence the coverage the public sees."

She said she was encouraged by working with the captains, who seemed hungry for answers on how to work with the media.

"They were interested in understanding what they could do to influence others," she said. "They asked good, hard, pointed questions and we only scratched the surface in one hour."

Capt. Patrick Malone said the training would be good for Soldiers at all levels, not just the Career Course captains.

"It could always be longer," Malone said. "The more time invested, the higher the payoff."

Both Manganaro and Paine would like to see the training standardized across the entire course so all students can receive the maximum benefit from the training.

For Manganaro, it represents a natural progression of media training efforts already in place in basic training units and an opportunity to set the future company commanders up for success.

"We want to develop the practical side," Paine said.

The Combat Arms and Tactics Directorate is exploring a partnership with Columbus State University journalism students as they develop the media awareness training program.

While all instructors cover the media in discussions with their seminar students, some, like Paine, put more focus on it.

Paine said the ICCC students need to consider how their stories or pictures could be modified or misinterpreted.

"With media awareness training, they now have the ability to modify perceptions," he said.

Shoplifting not way to give gifts

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

As Christmas draws closer, money gets tighter, shopping lists get longer and shoplifting becomes more and more of a problem.

Fort Benning sees shoplifting as a very real problem, said Nick Nguyen, manager of the post exchange. Last month, about 15 people were arrested for shoplifting, and the numbers are bound to grow this month.

Eric Doss, the operation's manager at the PX, said 224 shoplifters were apprehended last year. The total dollar amount was $22,000; $3,000 of that was attributed to employee thefts.

"It is a big problem, and the awareness of our other shoppers would help," Nguyen said.

"The earnings we make go to help the Army and Air Force community, and when there is shoplifting it directly affects our earnings and takes money away from the military community."

Active duty members who shoplift are turned over to base security and their unit for criminal and Uniform Code of Military Justice action. On top of those actions, AAFES and other federal retailers are authorized to collect a $200 administrative fee on top of the value of what was stolen. This fee offsets the expenses AAFES incurs because of shoplifting.

With a 100 percent prosecution rate, shoplifting not only affects the active duty member's career, but can cost them a lot of out-of-pocket money. And, family members are not immune to the repercussions of shoplifting, Nguyen said.

Sponsors are also financially responsible for their family members' actions, under the terms of the AAFES program. Parents of minors caught shoplifting will be billed for the costs. These administrative charges are separate from any criminal prosecution or military disciplinary action, said Glenn Schubert, Fort Benning Post Exchange general manager.

"At one time juveniles were more likely to shoplift than anybody else," Doss said. "Now, it has about evened out. Active duty thefts have grown a little more this year."

Doss said nearly 60 percent of all thefts are committed by active duty service members.

"Whatever excuses people come up with to justify their actions, the fact remains that none of them are good enough reasons to risk a career over," Shubert said.

Military exchanges spend millions of dollars each year to foil shoplifters, including measures to deter and detect thefts, Schubert said. As a result, AAFES worldwide apprehends more than 10,000 shoplifters each year.

"I hate to see someone's career negatively impacted by shoplifting," Nguyen said. "Shoplifting is across the board, but this time of year we see it happen more with younger kids and teenagers. They lift trading cards, computer and video games."

Doss said they tell all of their employees to be aware of any suspicious activity, and if they see it to report to their supervisors immediately. He would suggest customers do the same. If they see anything suspicious, tell an employee immediately.

"Unfortunately, when individuals steal, they commit a crime against themselves, their family members, other Soldiers and Airmen, and the military community," said Brig. Gen. Toreaser Steele, AAFES vice commander.

"It's a real shame since they are taking money out of the hands of commanders who use the AAFES dividends to improve their quality of life."

Veterans remember Pearl Harbor

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"I remember Pearl Harbor like it was yesterday," said Jim Coppeler, one of nearly 30 World War II veterans who participated in Tuesday's remembrance ceremony at the Veterans Center on Victory Drive.

It was Dec. 7, 1941. Coppeler, then a sophomore in high school, was having breakfast with his sister, scheming to get out of attending Sunday school that morning. His mom was at the stove, and his father was in the living room listening to the Philco radio.

"My dad never cussed in his life," Coppeler said. "All of a sudden, he said, 'Son of a b----, the Japs have bombed Pearl Harbor.' I thought, 'What the heck is a Pearl Harbor?'"

What was Pearl Harbor? A tactical disaster, according to retired Col. Russ Eno, editor of Infantry Magazine and the guest speaker at the event. Pearl Harbor was a tactical disaster for Japan.

"(They) had no concept of the will of the American people or the unimaginable industrial might of this country," Eno said.

Then, as now, following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, the "sleeping giant" responded swiftly and with relentless determination.

"The September 11 attacks are sometimes compared to Pearl Harbor, and in many ways, it's a valid comparison," Eno said. "Both were launched in hopes of breaking America's will to fight. And in both cases, they were wrong."

Eno, a veteran of Vietnam and Desert Storm, thanked the veterans for their service and said "countless and nameless" men and women in uniform who have "accepted the torch you offered."

America, Eno said, continues to be "the hope of the world in troubled times," as President Roosevelt said in a fireside chat shortly after the attack.

> "America is slow to anger, but we tend to settle the score in ways our enemy will never forget."
> Retired Col. Russ Eno
> Editor of the Infantry Magazine

But from Sgt. Lewis McIlvain's perspective as a "pelican" on the forward mast of the USS Nevada, there was little reason for hope, as Japanese fighter planes peppered the deck 80 feet below him.

The Nevada, moored alongside the ill-fated Arizona, lost 2,000 Sailors that day. McIlvain was one of the 800 survivors, and he cried Tuesday as he recounted the horror of watching his shipmates die around him.

"From up where I was, you could see 'em — the planes coming in," he said. "There wasn't nothing we could do. Fifteen bombs hit us .. That was a mess."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Robert Sellers is a three-war veteran. His friends call him "the survivor."

He was wounded in the Phillipines during World War II, left part of his hip on Korea's Pork Chop Hill, and was medevaced out of Vietnam's bloody Ia Drang with malaria. At 82, Pearl Harbor remains among his worst memories.

Sellers manned a 9 mm gun in a foxhole on a hill overlooking the harbor. For nearly four months, his unit of artillerymen anticipated some sort of attack. But when it came, they were without ammo.

"If we'd had ammunition, we could've shot a lot of them down," he said. But then, he said, the Japanese would've spotted his unit and destroyed them in short order. "If we'd had ammunition, I wouldn't be here today."

Sellers' voice remained steady until he recalled trying to help two injured Sailors out of the bloody waters of Pearl Harbor.

"I got the first one out, but ... This is bad," he sobbed. "When I tried to pull the other one out, his skin came off."

The attack on Pearl Harbor 63 years ago cost America 2,400 lives, five battleships and 188 planes. It was the costliest attack on the American homefront until Sept. 11, 2001, when 2,973 people died, mostly civilians.

"They failed to consider the consequences of that attack," Eno said, and they failed to consider the consequences of this one.

"America is slow to anger," he said, "but we tend to settle the score in ways our enemy will never forget."

Wives: Discuss worries, woes, coping strategies

ones with younger children, because mine have more experience under their belt," she said. "They know our tradition and what a typical Christmas is at our house. And obviously, this one won't be the same. But they handle it well."

Laura's mom died six years ago at Christmastime, and the holidays haven't been the same since. This year was going to be a turning point, Laura thought. She could feel it.

"I could actually see myself enjoying Christmas again," she said.

Then came word that her husband wouldn't be home. How is Laura coping?

"I made up my mind that we'll do all the things (my husband) doesn't really enjoy — the things I love to do," she said. "He doesn't like to travel at Christmas, and I do. So the kids and I are going to (the mountains) for a few days.

"I'm going to indulge my Christmas ideals," she said. "If I could get my kids to go carolling, I would."

Erin's turn

It's been a bad week, and Erin's frustrated. Her son has cried more in the past week than the last two months.

"He's daddy's boy. Daddy's it," she said. "Mom's OK, but it's all about Dad."

Erin's said she's a pessimist by nature, "a realist." She's witty, but frank. She says what she feels, and lately, she feels angry a lot. And she definitely doesn't feel like celebrating Christmas.

"I'm forcing myself for (my son's) sake," she said. "If it was just me, forget it. I'm angry inside, but I have to put on a happy face for him."

Fortunately, Erin's son is too young to wrap his Christmas expectations around traditions.

"I don't think he realizes it will be different," she said. "He's focused on what Santa's bringing him. He misses his dad, but he won't let it ruin his Christmas."

In spite of her natural pessimism, Erin forces herself to "look on the bright side." She knows wives who will say goodbye to their husbands soon after Christmas. They have it worse, she believes. She's staring at the "tail-end" of her husband's deployment.

She's careful to surround herself with friends who are "bringer uppers," so she doesn't wallow in anger and self-pity. Her friends see her true emotions, she said. Her husband doesn't.

"I have to stay positive when I'm on the phone with him," she said. "I tell him about our day, what we did, where we went. If I start talking about how I feel, how I really feel, I'll break down and lose it."

When Erin's husband comes home, whenever, he'll find a real Christmas waiting — the lights, the tree, the gifts, the whole kit and caboodle.

"I think it's important for all of us," she said. "It'll help us get through (Christmas) knowing we'll have it with him. I think just watching (my son) give his dad the presents he's been waiting to give him will help me get over the anger."

Indeed, it's a misconception that the problems created by lengthy separations end the instant a Soldier returns.

"It takes a while to readjust," Erin said. "We have to get back in the groove of having him around and change the routine we've gotten into without him."

Kristin copes

It's only fair. That's what Kristin tells herself when she starts to feel self-pity. She and her husband were Army brats, and their grandfathers served in Korea.

"Being without him at Christmas — it isn't what I'd choose," she said. "But I think about all the others who have gone through it. I listened to our grandmothers talk, and I think, 'How did they do it?'

"They didn't get phone calls or e-mails. They went months without knowing where their husbands were. I think about them, and I think we don't have it so bad. We do what we have to. It's only fair."

The phone calls and e-mails — they can be a two-edged sword, Kristin said. Just recently she shot her husband an e-mail she regretted.

"I had a 'poor-me' last week," she said. "I wrote him and said 'I'm tired of doing it all myself. I'm tired of changing all the diapers. I'm tired of making all the plans, the packing, the lawn care.'

"I laid it all out — everything," she laughed. "Then he wrote me back, 'Do you need to see a chaplain?'

"I just needed to get it off my chest," she said. "It's hard work, what we do. You don't get thanked for it. Sometimes you really want someone to say 'How are you doing?'"

Morgan waits

It wouldn't be the same back home. That's why Morgan stayed here when her husband deployed.

"I'm surrounded by memories of him — when I came to visit before we got married, the places we went. Somehow it helps," she said. "I guess I prefer to be here with people who are going through the same thing."

Morgan will go home for Christmas, and it'll be a good one, she said. Her faith helps her focus on the holiday's spiritual meaning, and that's something she and her husband will share, no matter how great the distance between them.

"We don't have a shared Christmas to compare it to, so that probably makes it easier," she said. "I'll be busy, and I'll be with my family and his, so it will be good."

When the going gets tough — and it does — Morgan and her husband pray together over the phone.

"We believe whatever happens is for the best," she said. "But yeah, I get scared. The biggest thing for me was having to give him up and say, 'OK God, he's in your hands.'"

Morgan's husband will likely leave the Army when his enlistment is up. He wants to go to school. But memories of the time they've spent "married to the Army" will last forever.

"I'd never been around anybody military until him," she said. "It's pretty amazing. I have so much respect for what (Army families) go through.

"If it's this hard on me and him, imagine what it's like for people with children. It's tough to be alone."

In Hero Mama, Zacharias shares a letter her mother sent to her father in Vietnam.

"I (went) to the doctor," she wrote. "He said I was pushing myself too far and was headed for trouble if I don't slow down and rest. He was talking about the worry and upset of moving here, finding a place and trying to get settled, plus trying to work and take care of the family, also worrying about you over there."

Hero Mama clearly illustrates the unchanging nature of waiting. Nearly four decades ago, Fort Benning wives were plagued with the same worries our Soldiers' spouses face today.

Laura, Erin, Kristin and Morgan do, however, believe Family Readiness Groups and a nation that learned from the mistakes it made 40 years ago have made life a little easier for spouses today.

"We have come a long way," Erin said. "I think we have more support from the community than the wives of Vietnam and Korea, and we have e-mail.

"Deployments will always be hard, but we have it better than they did. It helps to remember that."

Hero Mama

Sometimes classmates at school would ask me about my father. The only comments I remember any of them making were hurtful things. Like the time one of my friends said, "It really bothers me that you don't have a daddy. I don't like being around you because of that."

"I'm sorry," I said. — Hero Mama

There are lessons to glean from Hero Mama, Karen Spears Zacharias' memoirs of a life spent trying to cope without dad. Lessons for everyone — spouses, parents, children and friends of anyone who's ever served.

Because the experiences of military children shape their future and color their view of the world. It affects their relationships with family, neighbors and co-workers. For some it will be an overwhelmingly positive experience. For others, negative. But for most, it will be both.

Zacharias' experience was more extreme than most. She lost her father in Vietnam. Her mother raised three children alone in a Columbus trailer park and put herself through nursing college.

Zacharias' book is beautifully written. She's gifted with words. Unfortunately, her mother wasn't. Zacharias tells of a childhood spent longing for her mother to share her grief, to talk about her father, to acknowledge her children's pain.

But Shelby Spears couldn't express or surmount her own grief long enough to deal with her children's. For a time, she buried her feelings in alcohol and men. Hero Mama is the story of a war widow's struggle to overcome and her children's journey through the turbulent teens, the wrong choices they made, and the long road back to self-respect and acceptance.

Readers will enjoy Zacharias' wit and style. But they'll have to wait a little while more for the book to hit the shelves. It's still in the editing process, but it'll be worth the wait.

MPs: Volunteer for year deployment

"I'm anxious to get over there and get started on our mission," said Spc. Jon Cotton with the 71st MP Detachment. "All the predeployment stuff can be frustrating. I've been at Fort Benning for two years and haven't been deployed. It's my time and I'm ready for the challenge."

Pfc. Doug Chapman with the 209th volunteered partly because he wanted to experience combat, and to get the chance for training that could further his Army career.

"I also decided to volunteer because if single Soldiers like me volunteer, it prevents troops who are married or have kids from having to be away from their families for a long time. I think its worth it to keep families together."

For their own families, the Soldiers agreed that their parents are concerned for their safety while they are overseas.

"I don't think any parent wants their kid to go to war, but they understand that it's our job," Soon said.

"My parents taught me strong faith, which helped me get through Basic Training and difficult times I've had in the Army, so I'm counting on my faith to sustain me while we're deployed," Soon said.

"Knowing that we're going, I feel like I'm having all emotions at once," Chapman said. "One minute I'll be excited that we're going, then sad because I have to leave my family, and nervous about going into a combat environment. Anything could happen, and you feel all emotions at once."

All three Soldiers feel confident that the unit will be a strong team.

"When we first got picked, we hardly knew each other," Soon said. "But now we're starting to band together with each other. It's a great group of guys going, and I know we can get the job done."

Thanks: Soldier appreciates Loyd

my family for such a long time, and I'm so thankful to the school for taking care of them. My kids have excelled here, and the teachers and staff have provided so much support."

The flag was Acevedo's way of saying thank you for all the deployed Soldiers who have to leave their kids.

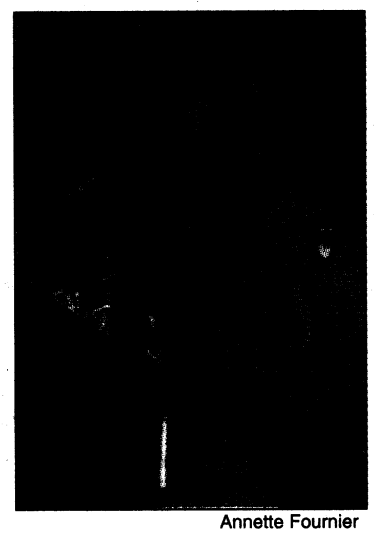
"I'm sure the support my kids have gotten is not unique," he said. "I'm sure it's this way with all the DoD schools."

After the presentation, children and teachers tied yellow ribbons on a "Deployment Tree" bedecked with lights and American flags. Acevedo gave the tree its crowning touch, a large yellow bow on top.

The Acevedo children, in second grade, kindergarten, and preK, watched their father being honored.

"I feel proud that my dad is a Soldier," said Jose. "I'm so happy he came home for Thanksgiving, but I'm going to feel sad when he (leaves.) He's a medic and he needs to go back, because he saves people when they're hurt."

Acevedo will return to Iraq Dec 11. He's not sure when he will be home again.



The flag that Acevedo presented the school flew during missions in Kirkuk, Tallafar, Mosul, Baghdad, Balad and Tikrit. The school reciprocated by giving Acevedo a stuffed panther, the Loyd mascot.

Martinez was pleased to accept the flag from Acevedo.

"We will treasure this flag and honor the men and women who are fighting for our country," she said. "They are heroes protecting our freedom."

Martinez also acknowledged all the children in the school who are waiting for family members to come home.

"It's not easy. It takes a lot of courage to have family members deploy."

AUSA: Visits post to educate Soldiers

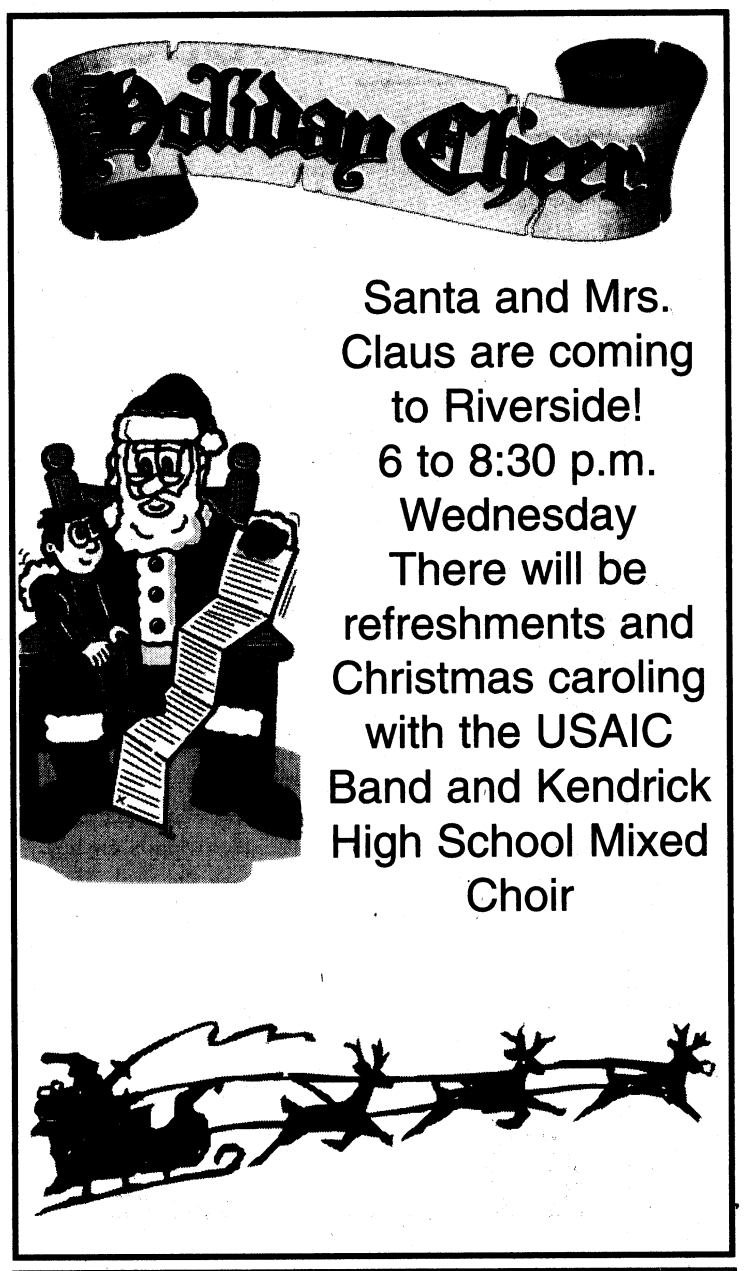
AUSA members questioned Kidd about the Military Child Education Coalition and ongoing studies focusing on the continuation of DoD school systems.

One member expressed concern on behalf of 3rd Brigade families, saying Soldiers feel uncomfortable with the possibility their children won't be able to attend DoD schools.

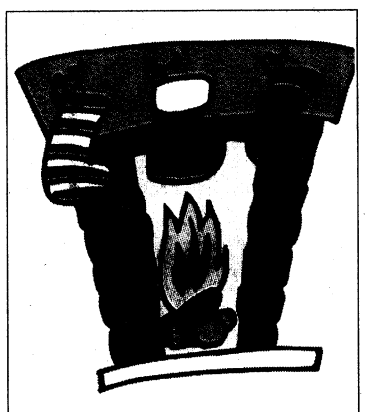
Kidd assured members that maintaining the school system is a priority of AUSA.

"It would be a slap in the face to ask our Soldiers to go to war but take away the schools they think so highly of," she said.



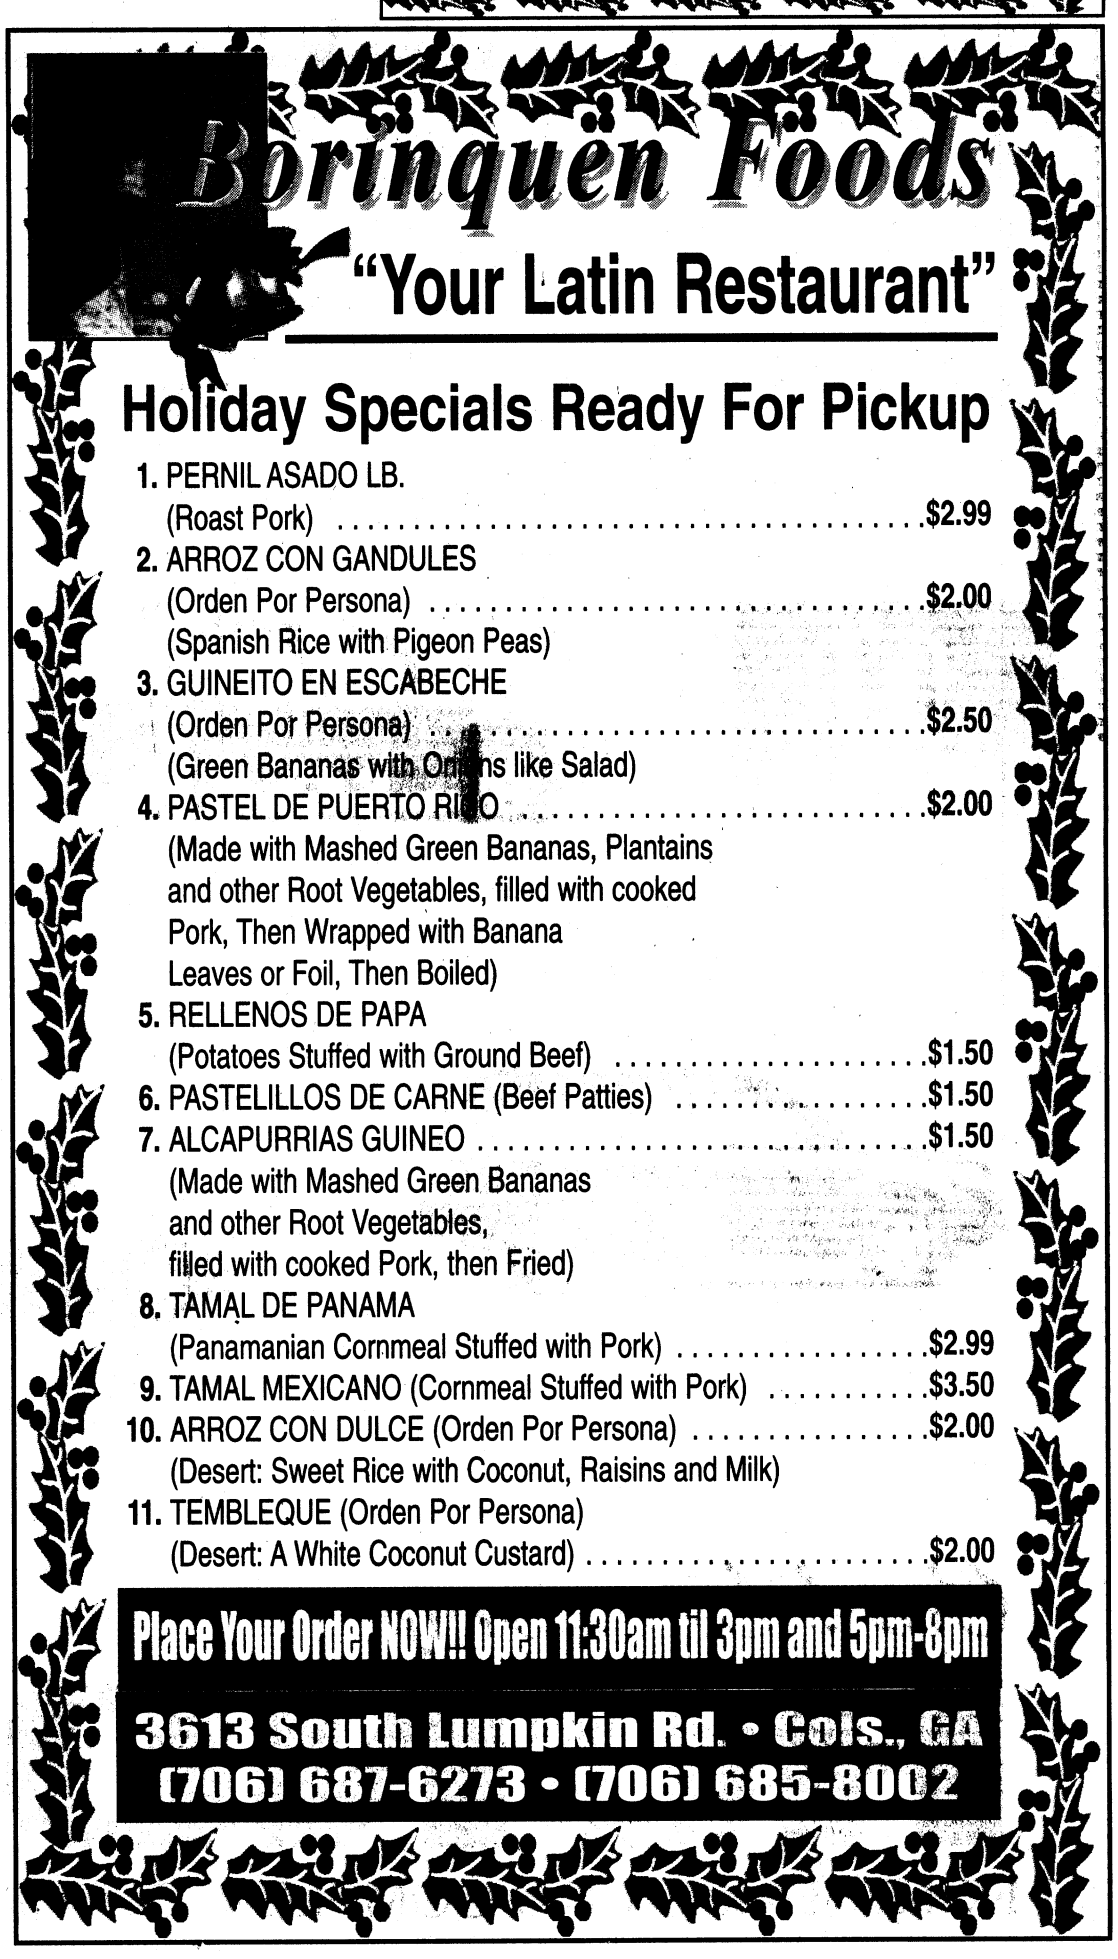
Among other issues, members brainstormed ways to better serve injured Soldiers and their families during their stint at Walter Reed Medical Center and afterwards, when Soldiers return to Fort Benning.

Hesler said AUSA needs to ensure that injured Soldiers feel welcomed home, so they know their sacrifices are appreciated.



Kidd wants to see improved services for National Guard and Reserve Soldiers who return from combat and re-enter the civilian world, citing the shock that some Soldiers experience in returning to civilian life.

"These Soldiers do not have the same support network active duty Soldiers have," she said.



"When they go back to their lives, the civilians around them are not going to understand their experiences in combat. Many emotional responses don't emerge until much later, and we need ongoing support for these men and women, so they have someone to talk to when they need to."

NCOA to administer wireless tests in courses

NCO Academy automates classroom test taking

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

The NCO Academy will incorporate the Classroom Performance System into its Advanced NCO course beginning Thursday. The system will reduce the use of mark-sensored tests.

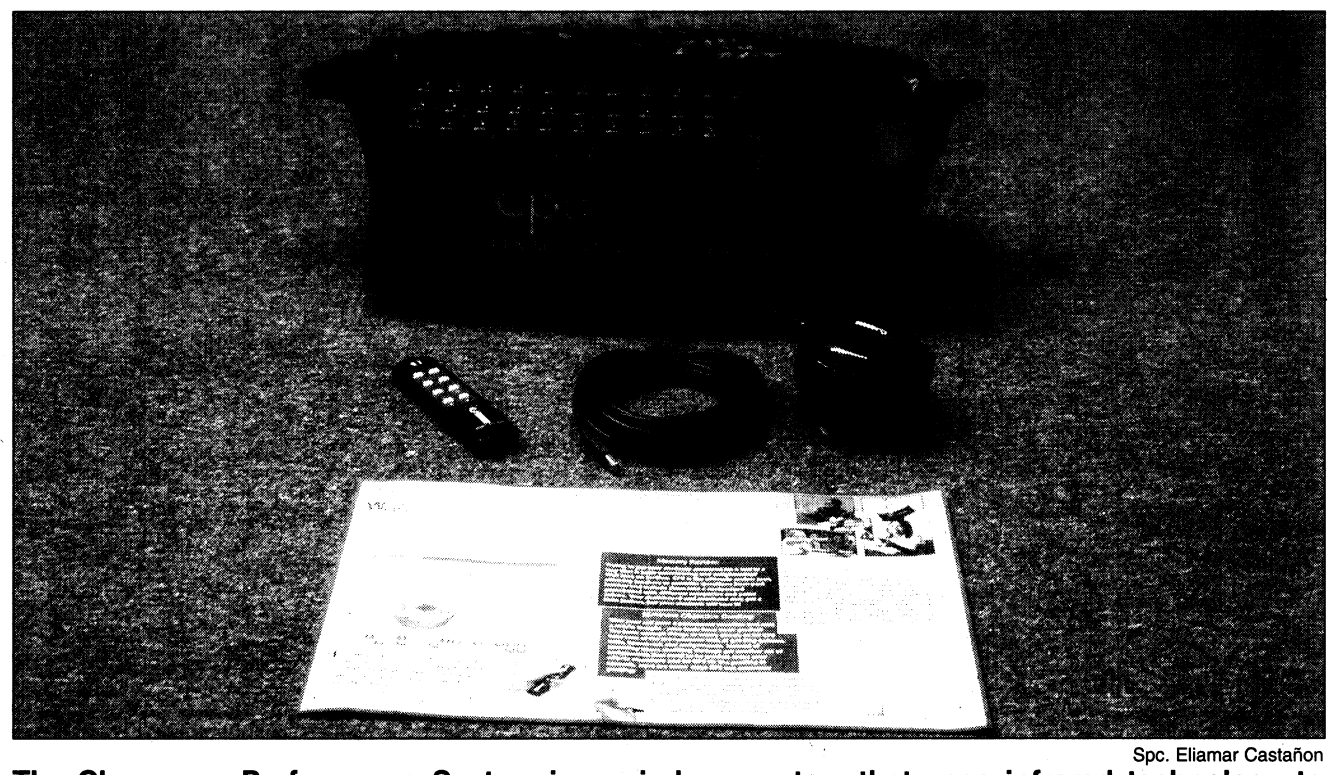
The wireless system uses infrared technology to communicate between handheld response pads and a receiving unit during course exams, said 1st Sgt. Patrick Durr, PLDC branch chief.

The new system allows instructors to administer tests on a big screen that will provide immediate results and reduce the time spent on grading.

"The students will be given test booklets, but will answer each question on a big screen with the use of a remote control," Durr said.

The way the system is set up, students will be assigned a number at the beginning of each class and will use that number throughout the course. When taking a test, the student will have the remote that corresponds to a specific box on the big screen.

The instructors will be able to see which students have answered which questions and if they were answered correctly.



The system allows each question to have at least eight possible answers and allows the test administrators to put time limits on every question.

"Unlike mark-sensored tests, students will not be able to continue answering questions once the time limit is up or go back to change answers" said Sgt. 1st Class Raul Muñoz, NCOA chief of training.

The new system also reduces the possibility of cheating.

"Each test question has to be entered manually into the central computer in the test control center," Durr said. "This means only the test administrator has access to the tests, no one else can save or print.

Once the students are ready to take the test, the control center will send the test to the receiving unit which will then project the answer boxes onto the big screen."

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

The Classroom Performance System is a wireless system that uses infrared technology to communicate between handheld response pads and a receiving unit. The NCO Academy will use the system to administer tests to the different branches in the academy.

Durr said the NCOA has administered simulated runs with the CPS to ensure it works correctly. Once the system is incorporated into ANCOC course tests, he said it may be used later on for team projects in PLDC.

Former vice CSA to speak to leaders

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

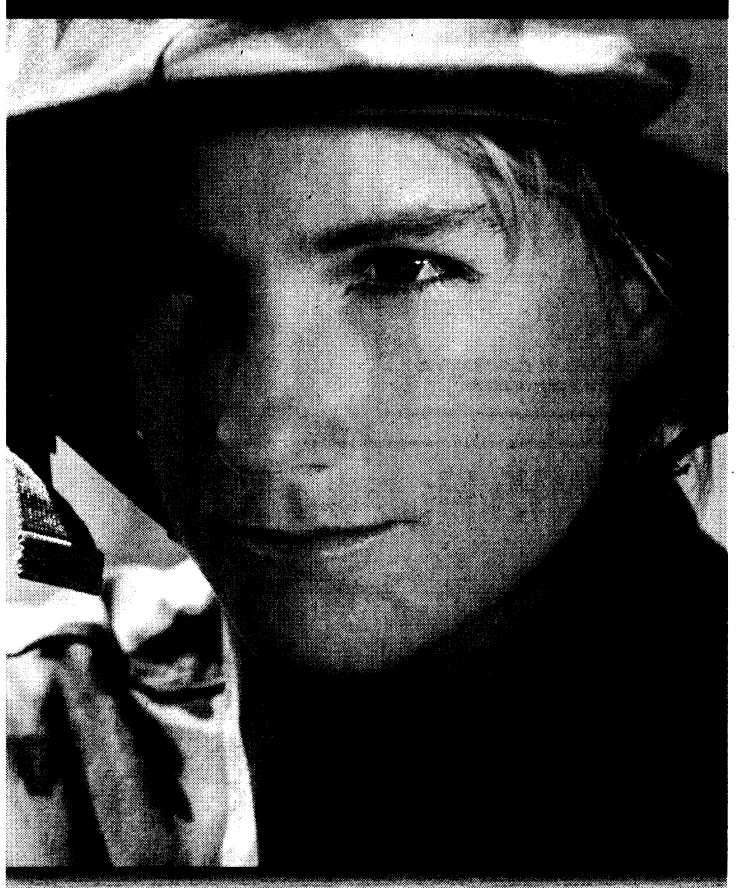
The eighth Combat Leadership Speaker Program is scheduled for 4 p.m. Wednesday at Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. This month's lecturer is retired Gen. John Keane.

Keane retired from the Army in 2003. Prior to his retirement he served as the vice chief of staff of the Army.

Guest speakers are chosen based on their name recognition and past performance, said Lt. Col. Doug Harding, deputy director of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

He said Keane will speak about combat leadership at the small unit level.

With 37 years of service in the Army and having commanded at every level through corps commander, Harding said speakers like Keane are important because they have years of experience and have had the opportunity to reflect on it.



"The guest speakers are Vietnam veterans," said Lt. Col. Jim Riley, CATD Tactics division chief, "because they are the last guys before this current crop who have had sustained combat experience."

Riley said the commanding general and command sergeant major's program is geared for students — Officer Candidate School, Infantry Officer Basic and Career Courses, and Basic and Advanced NCO courses — and for company commanders and first sergeants on post.

"It equates to the commanding general's monthly officer professional development program," Riley said, "and anyone is welcome to attend."

Retired Lt. Gen. George Crocker, a former commander of the 82nd Airborne Division who also served two tours in Vietnam, will be the speaker at next month's CLSP Jan. 12.

21Ws hammer out work

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Spc. Isaiah Hall, Pfc. Brandon Richardson and Sgt. Richard Hennessey repair the mock aircraft on Eubanks Field. The trio of carpenter/masons are responsible for safety and repair of apparatus used by the Airborne School.

Few people know who puts the Christmas lights up on the 250-foot airborne tower. Many would be surprised to find out it is three carpenter/masons.

Assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, maintenance section, these 21Ws do everything from bricklaying, roofing, new construction, cement work, metal work, ceiling work, shingles, dry wall, electrical and welding — to yes, even stringing Christmas lights.

"We do pretty much anything to do with the Airborne School," said Sgt. Richard Hennessey. "We even spent three days putting 1,800 feet of Christmas lights up on one of the airborne towers and put the star we redesigned last year on top."

The trio, consisting of Hennessey, Spc. Isaiah Hall and Pfc. Brandon Richardson, are the only three 21Ws assigned to Fort Benning.

Their primary job is to perform safety inspections each week on the airborne apparatus and fix anything that breaks, Hennessey said. They also reorder supplies, do minor repair work in the airborne barracks, make specialty items for units and run the 250-foot towers.

These engineers are responsible for Eubanks Field, Mann Field, the drop zone, ground branch, jump branch and the airborne barracks.

"This is different from what I expected after AIT," Hall said. "I wanted to build houses and lay concrete."

Hennessey, who has been in this MOS since 1986, said he loves his job and decided to become a carpenter in the Army after taking vo-tech classes in high school.

"In other units you get to deploy and go out and help people," Hennessey said. "You get to see the people you are helping firsthand, you meet the children."

Hennessey has worked in the Middle East, Korea, the Dominican Republic, Honduras and Guatemala. He has spent most of his deployments building schools and helping with hurricane relief efforts. He helped build the original Camp Doha, Tap Line Road in Saudi Arabia and 300 miles of six-inch fuel line, laid 25 feet at a time, through the Middle East.

All three chose this MOS for the same reasons. They all liked working with their hands, and wanted an MOS that would transfer over to the civilian world when they leave the Army.

"I want to be able to build my own house," Hall said. "And, once you have a house, you're going to have kids and there are going to be holes in walls. You need to know how to fix those walls."

This particular MOS also allows the carpenters a chance to use their creativity. They are currently making batons for the Silver Wings to pass to each other when they jump. Because of a lack of wood, they are using pieces of old barracks furniture, sanding them down and staining them.

Even though they do have special projects, most of their time is spent running the airborne towers.

"They call us 'Buttons' because we push the buttons in the tower," Hall said. "We run the towers every day but Tuesdays, and on Thursdays we drop the students."

Hennessey said no matter how mundane their work may be seem some days, he still thinks his job is the best in the Army.

"It all goes back to seeing the people," Hennessey said. "In this job you see those you help. You don't get to do that in (other military jobs)."

Trainees get down, dirty at live fire

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Eyes dart from side to side and with weapons at the ready, Soldiers begin to move forward with cautious, steady steps.

A target pops up and a drill sergeant yells for the trainees to drop behind a pile of sandbags.

Bang. Bang. Bang.

The sound of gunfire resounds over the range from one Soldier while his buddy moves forward.

This is the eighth week for the Soldiers of Bravo Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, and the Soldiers are learning to move under fire.

The individual tactical training, live fire and individual movement techniques teaches the Soldiers how to close with and destroy the enemy, said Capt. Herman Blancaflor, company commander.

"Two Soldiers move in tandem," Blancaflor said in describing the exercise. "One Soldier shoots at the enemy while the other Soldier moves closer to the enemy. This allows them to alternate bounds."

More than 175 Soldiers tackled the 100-meter qualifying range and the neighboring practice range. The trainees ended up getting a little bloody and muddy as they clawed their way, on their stomachs, to their next objective.

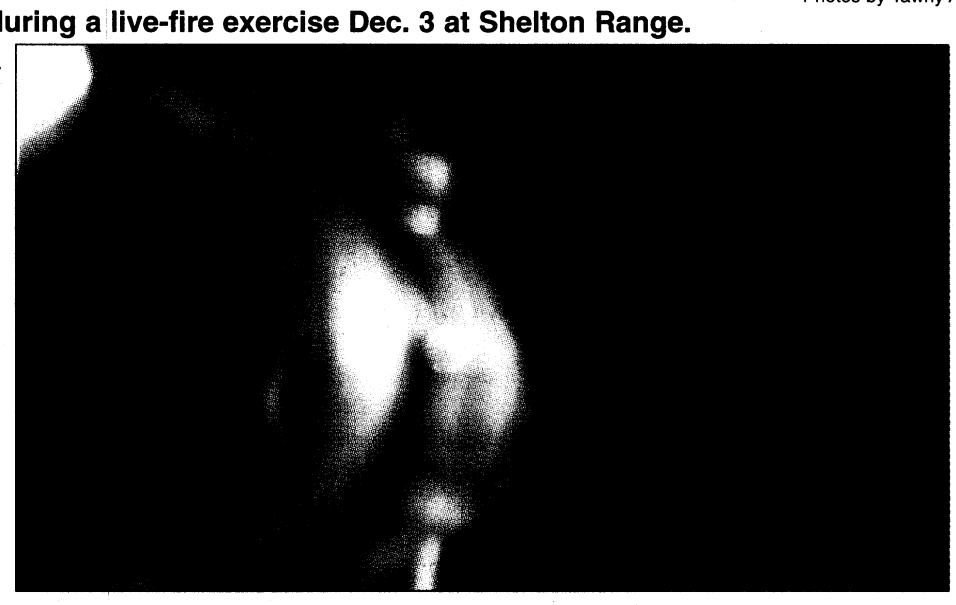
"They have one shot, and if they receive a no go, they are required to do it all over again after everyone has gone through," Blancaflor said.

There are five targets that pop up for the Soldiers to shoot; however, Soldiers do not pass or fail based on how many of the targets they hit. They are graded on their movement techniques and the ability to suppress the enemy.

There is one drill sergeant for each Soldier and after they complete their lanes they are given an after-action review where they are critiqued on their performance. Blancaflor said typically only five to 10 Soldiers have to repeat the exercise.

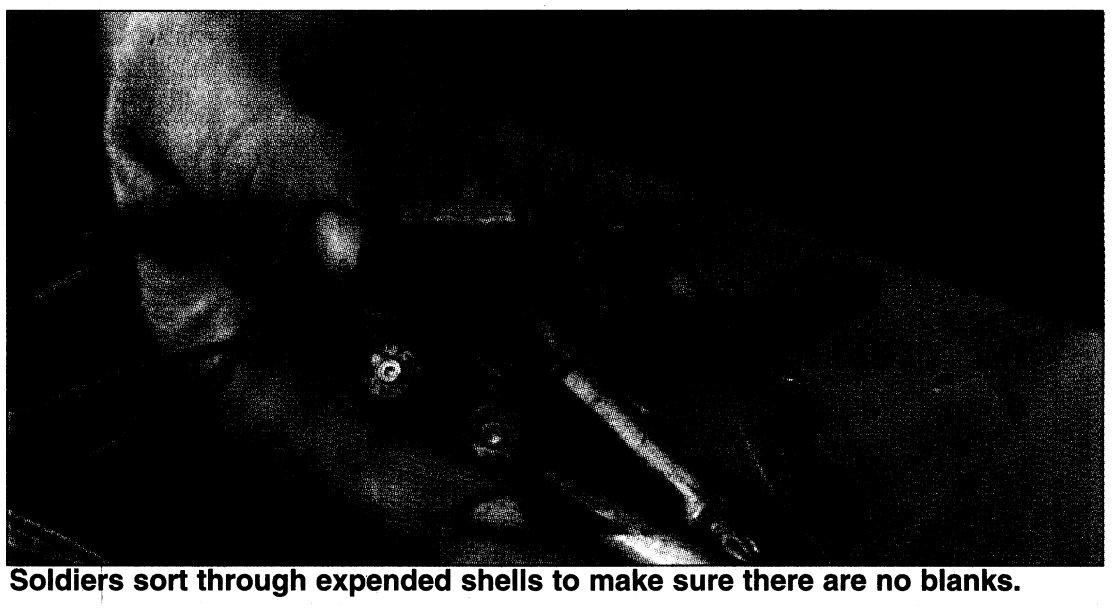
"We do a prep day with blanks the day before," Blancaflor said. "It is like a dress rehearsal."

On the practice range Soldiers do three-to-five second buddy rushes, high crawls, buddy team movements and engage a target with a hand grenade.



"This helps them to be able to survive in combat," said Staff Sgt. Brian Law, one of the drill sergeants.

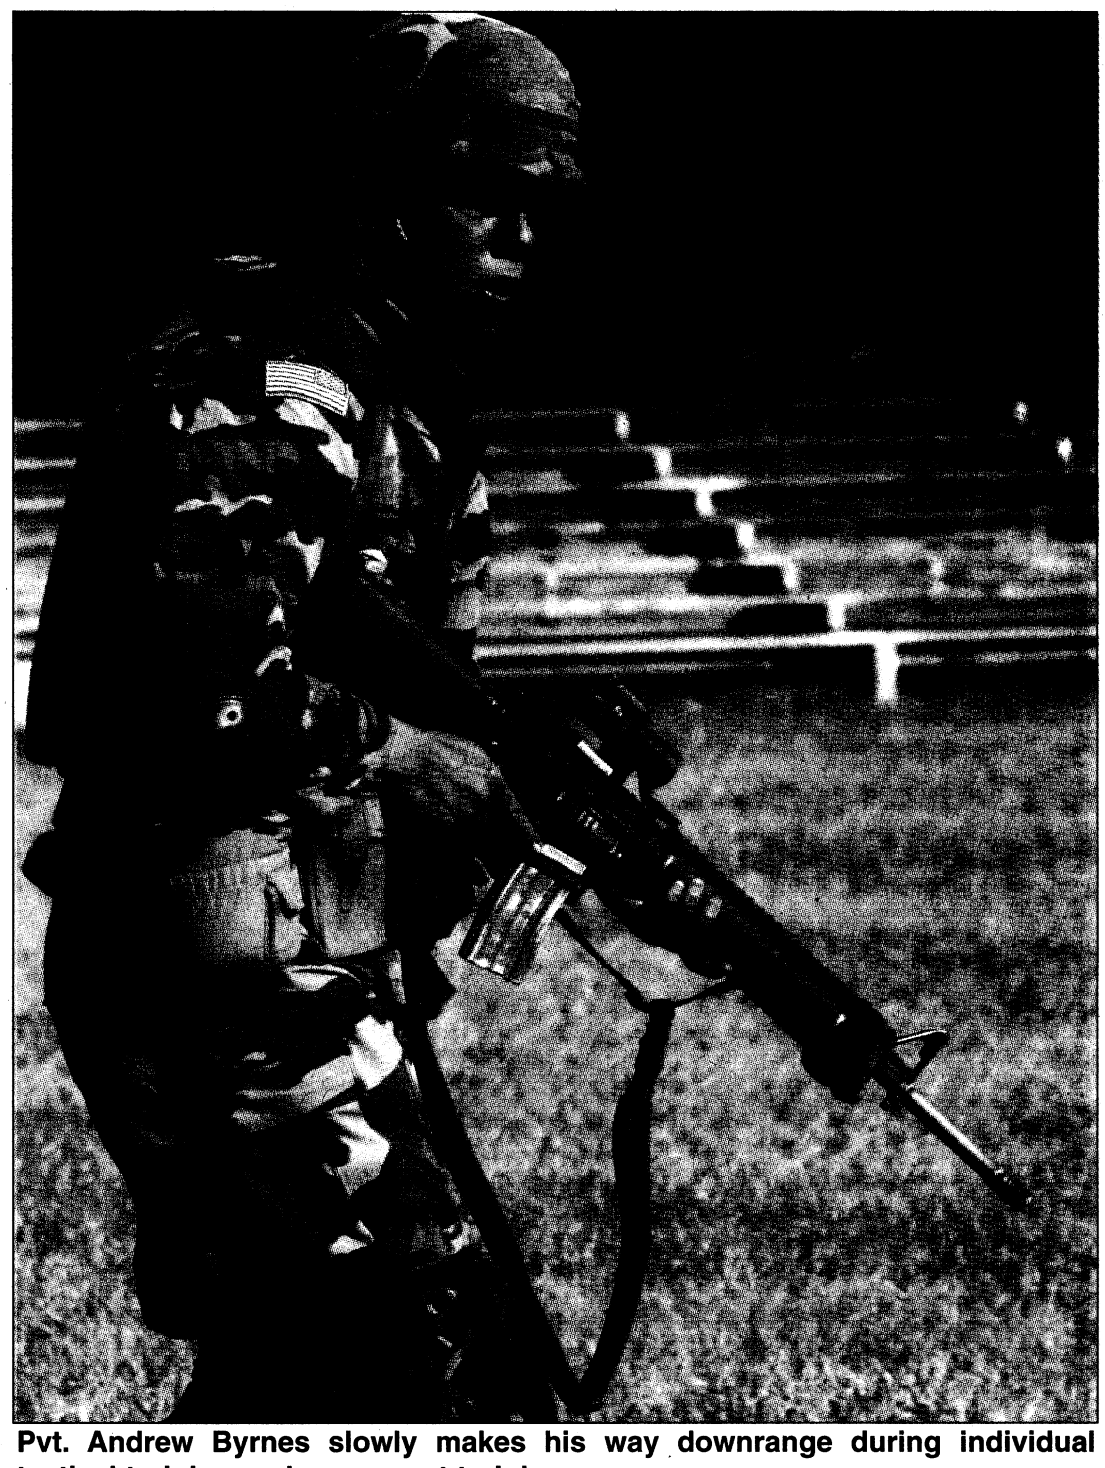
"In a very short time, some of these Soldiers can be in harm's way, depending on if they are sent to a light or mechanized Infantry unit. If they were in the streets on a foot patrol, they would most likely use this to find cover."



Law said on a scale of one to 10 he would consider this skill an eight or higher in importance.

"They have to learn to master moving as a buddy team before they can learn to work as a fire team," Law said. "This is one of the more fun and more physical tasks they will learn while they are in training here."

The Soldiers spent 16-18 hours over two days perfecting their movement skills.



Pfc. Jesus Esquivel looks down the scope of his M-16 during practice training at Simpson Range.

Soldiers sort through expended shells to make sure there are no blanks.

Pfc. Nicholas Salazar sprints from one barricade to another, moving farther up range while his buddy suppresses "enemy" fire.

Pvt. Andrew Byrnes slowly makes his way downrange during individual tactical training and movement training.

Increase terror awareness

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

During the holiday season, Army leadership is emphasizing that Soldiers, family members and civilians must remember we are a nation at war and are at risk for new terrorist attacks.

Throughout the holidays, individuals and facilities are a softer target for terrorism, said Lt. Col. Trese Bannister.

"Recent audio-taped threats and recent terrorist activity throughout the world show al-Qaeda's, and those sympathetic to their cause's, continued interest and efforts in attacking within the United States," Bannister said.

To emphasize the need for increased awareness, the Directorate of Intelligence and Security is offering specific terrorism awareness training to all Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade Soldiers, as well as Soldiers going overseas, taking stateside leave, and units that will deploy to support the Global War on Terrorism.

Soldiers leaving Fort Benning during the holidays and and especially those going outside the continental United States are warned to be especially diligent in their awareness of their surroundings, Bannister said.

"Soldiers stick out, and could be a target for potential terrorists or terrorist groups," said Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Bonham, NCOIC of Directorate of Intelligence and Security.

"Basic training Soldiers especially need to realize they are now Soldiers, and this makes them have more value as a terrorism target then when they were a civilian."

Soldiers stand out because of their appearance and demeanor, Bonham said.

"Soldiers have access to information, locations and facilities the common civilian doesn't even know exists."

Soldiers also need to remember sensitive information should not be shared with people who do not have a need to know, Bonham said.

Right now there is no specific indication Fort Benning is at risk for an attack, but Bannister said that is no reason for personnel to let their guard down.

"With what's going on in the world, we want to keep an eye on our piece of the world and make sure we're safe."

To ensure the security of Fort Benning, the Directorate of Security and Intelligence assesses the risks at all high-profile events.

They also work closely with the military police and Columbus officials to communicate and act on possible risks.

"There are very few coincidences. If something doesn't seem right, it's probably not," Bonham said.

Bonham said anyone noticing suspicious activity or anything that seems out of place should contact the MPs with their suspicions.

If intelligence analysts get enough indicators a risk may exist, they can take the proper precautions to protect the safety of the Fort Benning community.

"We don't want to make people feel paranoid, Bannister said. "We just want to remind everyone to be aware of their surroundings,"

Flat Stanley

Story and photos by Melissa House

Dear Aunt Melissa,

I really miss you and your family. My teacher read me a book called Flat Stanley. You have to send stuff back. I hope you send good stuff.

love,
Page

I was in a panic. Who is Flat Stanley and what, exactly, was I supposed to do?

Luckily, the note from Page's teacher at Walden Lake Elementary School in Plant City, Fla., Sandy Van Oosten, had more information.

The book's title character, Stanley Lambchop, was flattened one day by a falling blackboard. As a result, he can now visit his friends anywhere in the world by traveling in an envelope.

The author, Jeff Brown, created Flat Stanley after a bedtime conversation with his two sons, now grown. Brown said one son was stalling at bedtime, thinking of things he was afraid of, in order to keep his father in the room. One of those fears was that the bulletin board over his bed would fall on him during the night.

Brown, who died of a heart attack in December 2003, posted the story on the project's site and said his response, "You'll probably be flat," had his boys laughing and thinking of adventures.

Not long after Stanley's accident, Brown put pen to paper and wrote the children's book. In 1995, the Flat Stanley project was born in Ontario. A group of teachers saw Flat Stanley as a way to provide their students with another reason to write.

According to the project's Web site, Stanley has been around the world, seen at the Eiffel Tower and hobnobbing with famous folks. He even orbited the Earth 217 times with the Discovery astronauts.

More than 7,300 teachers around the world are registered with the project. Fifty-two are from Georgia, and more are found in Australia, Cameroon, Kenya and Thailand, among others.

Only teachers from accredited institutions register to participate in the formal project, a rule the project administrator Dale Hubert said is for the safety of the children.

Some teachers, like Van Oosten and E.A White Elementary School fourth-grade teacher, Joyce King, use Flat Stanley in a slightly different way. Instead of participating in the formal project, they have their students send Flat Stanley to visit relatives and friends.

Van Oosten said the project is an educational experience for her students, enriching their reading, writing, geography and history skills.

So Page, bless her heart, sent Stanley to vacation at Fort Benning, and it was my job to take him to see interesting things here.

I have to admit, I needed a little inspiration; so, I went to King's class asking for help. Her students had sent their Flat Stanleys around the world and were already enjoying hearing about some of his adventures.

King said she's been using Flat Stanley in the classroom off and on for the past 10 years.

"It's an incredible project," King said. "The students learn so much about their world."

When Flat Stanley comes back, the student who sent him gets to give the class a report on what he's done and seen.

"Most of the time they say, 'I didn't know that," King said. "It's great when they send him to relatives because it gives grandparents an opportunity to be involved. And the kids learn things they'll never learn from a social studies book."

King said they've received PowerPoint presentations from Stanley's visit to NASA, shared fortune cookies from his visit to a Chinese restaurant, and seen his photo album that included his picture with the governor of Texas.

Although they, and Page, sent Stanley out with a curfew, he's still trickling back in from his many adventures.

"The kids are so excited to get him back," King said, "but we don't mind waiting."

So with my own Flat Stanley project a little overdue, I knew King's class would give me a jumpstart in finding some neat places here to share with Page's class.

"We would have a nice relaxing fish at Russ Pond," said Chad Middleton, "and take a look at the tanks at the Infantry Museum."

In fact, everyone in King's class recommended the museum as a must-see on Stanley's itinerary, which also included "the general's house," the Riverwalk and the jump towers. And those of you looking for ways to entertain young visitors over the holidays, the kids also recommended Columbus attractions like the Columbus Museum, Coca Cola Space Science Center, Callaway Gardens and Hollywood Connection.

To make this an educational experience for everyone, I thought I'd enlist the help of Infantry Museum curator, Frank Hanner, to help plan some stops on post slightly off the beaten path as well.

Hanner, who first came to Fort Benning in 1981, recommended I find a copy of the Fort Benning Historic Trail pamphlet and go see the Campbell King Horse Bowl, the pet cemetery and a few other notable sites. The pamphlet has interesting facts about the sites along the trail.

So, with Flat Stanley in tow, off I went, armed with my list from Hanner and the children.

Stanley took some photos and posed for some photos during our whirlwind, one-day tour of post. He selected his favorites.

Can you tell where he went? The Drive safely, avoid accidents

Precision Tune Auto Care

Throughout this holiday season and for all of 2005, Precision Tune Auto Care's driving ambition is to keep Americans safe on the roads with the annual holiday safe driving tips:

• Don't drive under the influence of alcohol and never permit someone else who has been drinking to drive. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, alcohol was involved in 52 percent of the 2,126 traffic fatalities that occurred between Thanksgiving and Christmas and New Year's 2002.

• Wear a seat belt. It's more than a law; it's proven to reduce fatalities. Research by NHTSA has found that lap and shoulder safety belts, when used, reduce the risk of fatal injury to front-seat passenger car occupants by 45 percent and the risk of moderate-to-critical injury by 50 percent. For light truck occupants, safety belts reduce the risk of fatal injury by 60 percent and moderate-to-critical injury by 65 percent.

• Avoid driving while you are fatigued or taking medication that will make you drowsy. According to the U.S. Department of Transportation, in 2000, there were 1,773 traffic fatalities attributed to fatigue and drowsiness.

• Drive defensively and maintain the speed limit. According to the NHTSA, the economic cost to society of speeding-related crashes is estimated to be $27.4 billion per year. In 2000, speeding was a contributing factor in 29 percent of all fatal crashes, and 12,350 lives were lost in speeding-related crashes.

• Anticipate problems before they happen. On the highway, be alert to potential acts that may cause crashes and adjust driving and speed accordingly.

• Keep an emergency kit in your car, including a call-for-help sign, a flare and a first-aid kit.

• Practice routine car maintenance to avoid highway breakdowns, including a check on brakes, hoses, belts, horn, windshield solvent, wipers and headlights. Keep your vehicle properly lubricated, tuned and oiled. Never mix radial tires with other types of tires, and make sure your tires, including your spare, are properly inflated as recommended in your owner's manual.

• Emergencies occur. Be ready with a charged operable cellular phone, but don't use the phone while you are driving. According to the Harvard Center for Risk Analysis, drivers talking on their phones are responsible for about 6 percent of U.S. auto accidents each year, killing an estimated 2,600 people and injuring 330,000.

• For front-wheel skids, wait for the front wheels to grip the road before straightening the car; for rear-wheel skids, just before the rear wheels stop skidding, counter steer until you regain the desired direction.

• Maintain safe following distance in relation to existing weather conditions. Drive defensively and reduce speed to a safe pace.

Prospective Santas vie for jolly, jewel of a job

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Even the president gets booted after eight years, if he's lucky. So why does Santa Claus (aka Kris Kringle, St. Nick, Father Christmas) get to wear the suit year after year after year?

A number of local candidates think it's high time Santa gets a new schtick.

Here they list the reasons they believe they're qualified to replace him. We'll let you decide.

Foxy Santa

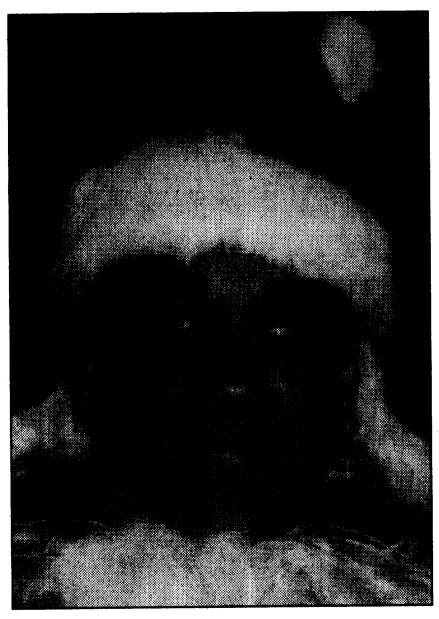
Sgt. 1st Class Gary Fox, Office of Infantry Proponency

Do you like children? "Not particularly. I like mine. I'm less tolerant of other people's. You're not going to put that in there are you?"

Do you have any food issues? "Do you mean am I lactose intolerant? No, but I prefer 2 percent. And no peanut butter cookies. You can't say 'ho, ho, ho' with your tongue stuck to the roof of your mouth."

No personal biases against fruitcakes? "You don't ask, I won't tell."

How do you explain Santa to an alien? "Well, he is the spirit of Christmas that lives in the dreams of children."



How do you convince a child who doubts? "Have you ever noticed when you quit believing, you get fewer presents?"

When children go before the Santa board, should their award be based on performance or potential? "Definitely performance. Christmas is designed to encourage their continued good performance."

Sounds like you're dancing all around the word 'bribery.' "You say that like it's a bad thing."

Can you name Santa's reindeer? "Donner, Dasher, Darnit, Huey, Duey and Luey. And Rudolph."

In 'Twas the Night Before Christmas, what was Ma wearing and what was she doing? "Hmmm. Ma ... was ... wearing, umm, a nightgown, I think. She had an upset stomach, because she threw up the sash."

Mexican Mullet-wearing Santa

Sgt. 1st Class Michael Ramirez, Office of Infantry Proponency

Santa experience: "I coached little league, and I've had a lot of immature co-workers."

Do you like children? "Is it a job requirement? I mean, do I have to like Soldiers to do my job now?

"I think we both know the answer to that."

Do you have any food issues? "I prefer Mexican cookies and whole, homogenized, past-your-eyes milk.

"That low fat crap will get you nothing but coal in your stocking."

What would you do to update Santa's image? "A goatee, definitely. And I'd cut the whole Grateful Dead, ZZ Top beard thing.

"I'd go with a Ben Wallace 70s 'fro. Plus, I'd institute a cash only, gift-giving policy and cut back on the overhead."

Is the world ready for a Mexican Santa? "It's time. Way past time. Cheech and Chong had my vote twenty years ago."

How does Santa do it all in one night? "It's a time zone thing. That and nitrous oxide."

What do you do if you're caught in the act? "What act?"

Can you name Santa's reindeer? "Of course ... Donner, Dancer, Rudolph ... Blitzen, Vixen, Rudolph ... uh ... Chewy, Paco ... and Rudolph."

In 'Twas the Night Before Christmas, what was Ma wearing and what was she doing? "Fishnet stockings? I don't know. What the (heck) kind of question is that?"

Do you have a campaign slogan? "Oh, geez, are we getting away from that whole 'ho, ho, ho' thing?

"How about, 'South of the border Santa!'?

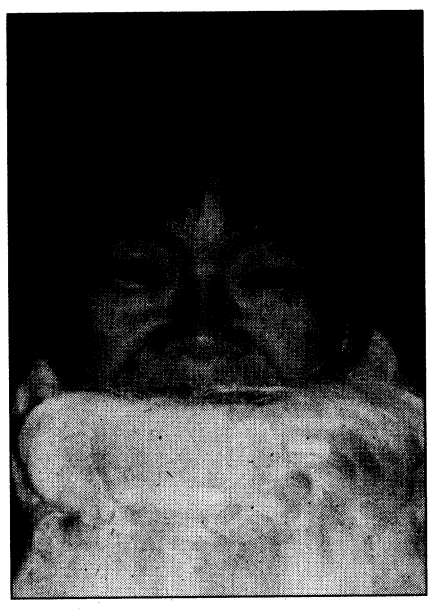
Santa, sir

Lt. Col. Gary Daniel, deputy chief of staff

Experience: "I'm trained to operate in cold weather at night."

Do you like children? "I could learn to if it meant job security."

How would you update Santa's image? "Santa's timeless, like pork-chop sideburns and polyester pants."



What toy would you like to see make a comeback? "The little airplane with the rubber band propeller. Now that's timeless."

OK, what would you say if you were caught in the act? "Admit nothing, deny everything, make counter-accusations."

Do you have any food issues? "My standards are pretty low — I'm a Soldier. I'll eat anything that'll be still long enough."

Do you have a campaign slogan? "I'm thinking just a great big S, One initial, that's it. Worked for the president."

How does Santa do it all in one night? "That's classified information — trade secret. But he doesn't use performance-enhancing drugs."

Short, Latte-drinking, Asian, Female Santa

Elsie Jackson, Public Affairs Office

Experience: "I'm a mom, therefore I am a multitasker. All moms are multitaskers. And since Santa's gotta be the ultimate multitasker, I'm more qualified than anyone here to be Santa."

Do you like children? "Mine, or other people's?"

How would you update his image? "I'd put him on a diet and exercise program. Obviously, he gets plenty of strength training, but he definitely needs some cardio. Maybe a stationary bike.

"As it is, he's setting a pretty poor example for kids, don't you think?"

Do you have any food issues? "I never met a cookie I didn't like. But no milk. I prefer a latte, skinny, hold the whipped cream."

And if little Johnny catches you delivering the goods? "Not an issue. Who's gonna believe a story about a short, latte-drinking Asian woman putting presents under the tree?"

What's the job appeal? "The elves. I'm 5 feet, 1 inch tall. I just wanna tower over everyone else for a change."

Can you name Santa's reindeer? "Why bother? It's not like they'll come when you call. I'm thinking I'd prefer a dog sled."

In 'Twas the Night Before Christmas, what was Ma wearing and what was she doing? "That depends. Was she being naughty or nice?"

Santa, Father Christmas, Kris Kringle, St. Nick. Do I detect an identity crisis? "No, that's public relations. He's appealing to various markets around the world. It makes good business sense."

Is the world ready for a female Santa? "Look, you and I know Mrs. Claus has been running the show for years.

"It's way past time to put a woman in his place, but we've been too busy running the world."

A Santa of One

Master Sgt. Paul Ebner, Public Affairs NCOIC

Job appeal? "I'm getting ready to retire, and I'm set in my ways. I'm way too old to start having to choose something different to wear everyday. That whole one-uniform thing works for me."

Do you like children? "As long as they're not mine."

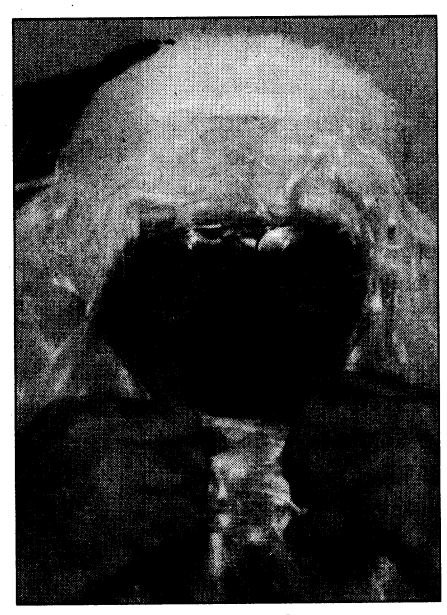
How would you update his image? "He needs a new name, definitely. Maybe a symbol. We could call him 'the jolly guy formerly known as Santa.'"

Do you have any food issues? "No, I want soft oatmeal raisin cookies with diet soda."

How old were you when you stopped believing in Santa? "There's no Santa?"

Can you name Santa's reindeer? "No, I can't, but I don't think they'll be around much longer, anyway. It's a matter of time before PETA puts 'em all in the unemployment line."

In 'Twas the Night Before Christmas, what was Ma wearing and what was she doing? "Long, thick nightgown. Stockings. She had a headache."



What would you do if you were caught in the act? "There would definitely be some spin involved. I mean, I am in public relations."

When children go before the Santa board, should their award be based on performance or potential? "Good question. I think we should rethink the whole naughty-list, nice-list format. I was a naughty kid. I know naughty. I set the standard. And I think most of the kids on the naughty list today don't really qualify. They're misunderstood, maybe, but not naughty."

What toy from your childhood would you like to see on today's most wanted list? "The big, dangerous, metal TONKA trucks."

Is the world ready for a Soldier Santa? "American Soldiers give the most valuable gift in all the world — the gift of freedom. So yes, I'd say a Soldier has a lot in common with Santa. They'd make a good team."

What would his motto be? "How about, 'A Santa of One?'"

Redneck Santa

Bill Brickner, retired Soldier, local hunting legend, owner of Sushiko restaurant in Columbus

Experience: "I have the suit. I am Santa."

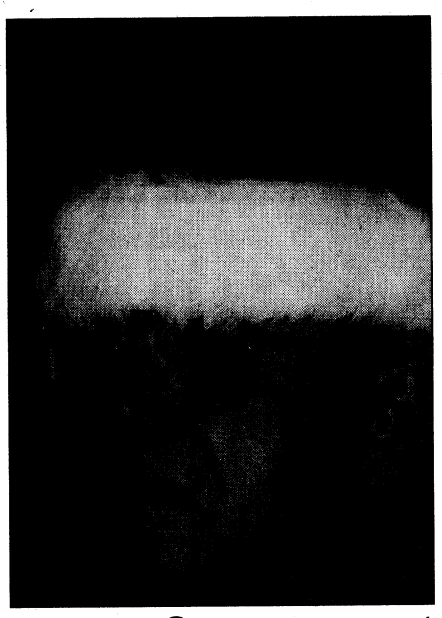
Do you have any food issues? "I was in food service in the Army for nearly 30 years. I own a restaurant. Do I look like I have food issues?"

Let me rephrase that. Do you like milk and cookies? "Cookies are good, but I prefer a glass of wine."

How about fruitcake? "Heavy on the rum."



What would you do to update his image? "Camouflage coveralls and a pick-up truck."

Whoa, what about the reindeer? "Reindeer?! In Alabama?! During hunting season?! Are you crazy?!"

Do you like children? "Love 'em. I was one myself once. Kids are the greatest thing ever invented. Next to scent-block."

What do you do if you're caught in the act? "First of all, you better have done your homework. You better know the kid's name. Then you say, 'You seem like a nice enough kid. I have some goodies for you, but maybe I better check my list again to see how good you've been. Unless, of course, you're on your way back to bed."

Do you have a campaign slogan? "Vote for Sushi Santa."

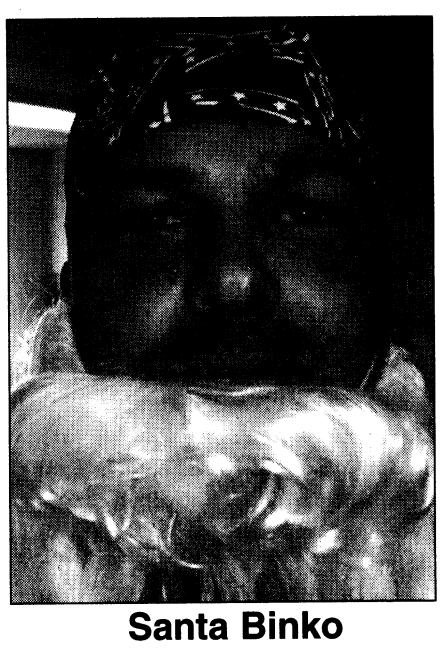
Scrooge

Charlie Butler, retired Soldier and motorcycle afficionado

Experience: "I worked with explosives. Fireworks. I guess that's the wrong holiday, huh."

Do you like children? "Oh yeah. Deep fried."

How would you update Santa's image? "He should ride a motorcycle — a real bike, not a Harley. Maybe a vintage Vincent Black Shadow with a sidecar. He should probably wear red leather."



How would you explain Santa to an alien? "Aliens are so thick. It's hard to explain anything to 'em. I wouldn't bother."

OK, what would you say if you were caught in the act? "This isn't what it looks like, officer."

Can you name Santa's reindeer? "Ummm, Matchless, Norton, Indian, Vincent ... ummm. I guess you could put Harley in there, if you don't mind lowering your standards."

What's the job appeal? Why do you want to be Santa Claus? "I don't want to be Santa. I thought this was the line for Scrooge."

If you did want to be Santa, what would your campaign slogan be? "Santa — he should cycle!"

Santa Binko

Sgt. 1st Class Brian Arabinko, Staff Duty

Job appeal? "Staff duty's pretty great. You only work seven days a month. Imagine working once a year. How cool is that?"

Experience: "I can drop door bundles with pretty fair accuracy. Plus I've done fast-rope roof assaults, so I'd never actually have to land the sleigh.

"And if there's no chimney, I'm pretty handy with a breach kit."

Do you like children? "I'm trying to get a restraining order against my own. We tried to lose them in the Commissary a couple of times, but they know our address."

Are you OK with the cookies and milk thing? "I'm more of a brown liquor and red meat kinda guy. Leave me a steak and a match."

How would you update Santa's image? "Did we learn nothing from that whole Coke debacle? Why mess with success? Why fix what ain't broken? Santa's a classic."

What would you do if you were caught in the act? "Don't leave witnesses."

In 'Twas the Night Before Christmas, what was Ma wearing and what was she doing? "A kerchief and not much else."

Can you name Santa's reindeer? "Rump Roast, Shoulder Roast, Ground Beef ... Steak.

"This sounds like a good place to plug Daffin's Meat Processing. They're good people. They'll treat you right."

Santa, Father Christmas, Kris Kringle, St. Nick. Do I detect an identity crisis? "Absolutely not. We all go through life with different names.

"Look at me, I'm Brian, Sgt. Arabinko, Bink, Binko, that d--- Arabinko kid ..."

How do you convince a child who doubts? "Bribery. It works for federal judges."

How do you explain Santa to an alien? "Why would I? If he doesn't know about Santa's he's not expecting a visit from Santa.

"Why make more work for myself?"

What toy from your childhood would you like to see on today's most wanted list? "See, there's the problem — everybody wants to relive their childhood Christmas fantasies. I say there's too much emphasis on the kids, who, let's face it, have way too many toys to start with.

"I'd make my target audience adults. Give them lots and lots of novelties. Ho, ho, ho, you know what I mean?"

Editor's note: For the record, Santa's reindeer are Donner, Dancer, Cupid, Blitzen, Dasher, Vixen, Prancer and Comet. And Rudolph.

And 'Twas the Night Before Christmas reads, "And Ma in her kerchief, and I in my cap, had just settled in for a long winter's nap." Duh.

Thanks to all our good-natured, delusional, self-deprecating candidates.

Don't quit your day jobs.

Lighting spreads holiday cheer

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

Families from Fort Benning and the surrounding communities bundled up in coats, gloves and hats to attend the annual Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting ceremony sponsored by the 30th Adjutant General chaplain staff on the Field of Four Chaplains at Fort Benning Dec. 9.

The Infantry Center Band performed a selection of Christmas music and the Faith Middle School choir sang Christmas carols. Two students from Faith dressed up as Rudolph the Red Nosed Reindeer and Frosty the Snowman and gave out candy to the crowd.

Laughter broke out from the crowd as Frosty's belly — a pillow — came out of his costume when he left the area.

Col. James Yarbrough, deputy commanding general, was the guest speaker.

"We're in one of the busiest times of the year, but it's great to stop and say it is the holiday season," Yarbrough said.

"This helps get us a step closer to the holidays and it helps us recognize the beginning of the Christmas holy season and Hanukkah. It gives us a chance to reflect on the true meaning of the season, rejoice, take time out to be thankful and spend some family time together."

Yarbrough said the tree and Menorah were placed at the Field of Four Chaplains for everyone and relayed an important message.

"This tree is our collective tree," he said. "This tree is for the 30,000 Soldiers and civilians that are here at Fort Benning. We are a tight-knit family of hard workers with good senses of humor who come together in the tough times."

For the lighting portion of the ceremony, Yarbrough asked all the children in the audience to get into a line and hit the switch at the same time.

Soon after, Santa Claus rode up in a fire engine and the children chased after him into the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. In the annex, chaplain assistants dressed up as elves took photos of all the children with Santa.

After Benjamin Johnson, 4, got his picture taken with Santa, he went outside with his parents and looked at the Nativity set up next to the Christmas trees.

"Mommy, I really liked seeing Santa," Johnson said. "But where was Santa's sleigh?"

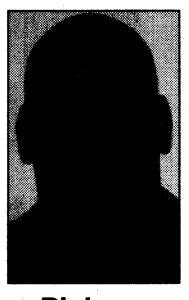
Advent starts holiday season celebration



Chaplain (Capt.) Tommie Pickens
203rd Forward Support Battalion

REFLECTIONS

Long ago, before our celebration of the birth of Jesus Christ became so intimately associated with elves, flying reindeer, jolly fat men in red suits and riotous shopping at the mall, the Christmas season was ushered in by an ancient tradition called Advent.

Let's not lose sight that the celebration of Advent and Christmas once appropriately focused on the sacrifice God made for us, and through that sacrifice, we can be assured the sacrifices we make here are not in vain.

The word "advent" has its roots in Latin, and means "a coming or an arrival." Specifically, Advent celebrates the time God chose to come down from glory and live among men.

Pickens

The arrival of Christ on earth is exciting, life-changing news that unfortunately gets eclipsed annually by a collective fit of unbridled consumerism.

Today, Advent is observed mostly by Catholics and some Protestant denominations. The Catholic church designates the four weeks prior to Christmas Day as Advent, which began Nov. 28.

The exact date of the first Advent celebration has been lost in the dark corners of antiquity.

We do know Advent then was different from the way it's celebrated today. Originally, Advent was a time of introspective prayer and fasting.

Around the fourth century, two major events occurred in the early church that irrevocably changed modern western thought about Advent and Christmas.

First, the emperor Constantine of Rome, who eased much of the earlier persecution against Christians, declared the birth of Jesus a national holiday. Also, Julius, bishop of Rome, set the date of that celebration to be Dec. 25.

To this day, the celebration of the Christ's birth turned from a time of solemn reflection and physical self-denial into a festive, celebratory season of feasting and revelry.

Where red and green are the colors associated with Christmas, Advent typically is adorned with purple.

As this season celebrating the first coming of Christ fast approaches, don't neglect to remember the promise of his second.

Tomorrow is not promised. The Bible reads, "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." (Thessalonians 5:2)

If there is anything you want to do for God or ask of God, seize the day, the hour, this very moment, to do it.

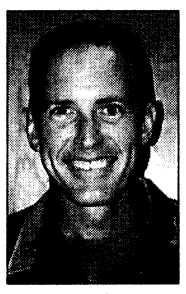
Jesus came as a lamb, and was slain as the perfect sacrifice so our sins and iniquity could be blotted out before God.

Know that our savior understands the sacrifices that we all make — both in our personal and professional lives, to keep our nation safe.

Don't let that sacrifice be in vain. Don't let it be too late. In these uncertain times of war, why not take the opportunity to stand solidly on the promise of his return?

Heed the call given in the Gospel of Matthew 24:44; "Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

Turn frenzy of 'holidaze' into calm, spiritual 'holidays'



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

I was in the PX last night, and it was frightening. There he stood, trance-like, halfway between the discounted DVDs and the plastic singing Santa. He had a 5-year-old man-child attached at the end of his pinkie pulling valiantly toward a set of SpongeBob underwear and an infant girl squirming in his other arm crying loudly just because she could.

He was confused; he was perplexed. He had forgotten why he was there, what the season was all about and what his first name was.

There was no doubt about it — he had a bad case of the "holidaze."

Each year this seasonal reaction seems to strike an increasing number of unsuspecting Soldiers and their families.

Hawkins

Perhaps you've already experienced this tragedy yourself — if so, for you and the ones you love, there's hope.

If you're caught somewhere between school plays, church programs, Christmas card lists, cookie clubs and the ever expanding Christmas list, then grab a cup of cider, take a seat and prepare to deprogram your "holidaze" into genuine "holidays."

"Come to me, all you who are weary and burdened, and I will give you rest." (Matthew 11:28)

Sounds like Jesus (You remember him, right? The one who the whole Christ-mas thing got named after) has a soft spot in his heart for people caught in a holidaze (or any other tough spot for that matter).

As Karen O'Connor wrote, "Merchants don't want you to rest. They want you to buy their goods. Bankers want to loan you money for shopping. Friends want you to come to their party. And family? If you rest, who'll prepare the meals and shop for gifts, organize the family get-together and pay for it all when the bills arrive?"

This holiday season, if you want something different in terms of your pace and your peace, then try something different.

What would it be like if you put others on notice that you, your spouse and your children are taking care of each other this year — giving the gift of each other to each other this year?

In the military, we refer to things that get in the way of the most important things as "training distractors."

What's getting in the way of the most important thing this Christmas season (focusing on the gift God gave Christ and the peace and hope that can bring to us all)?

Whatever it is, try this — write down every item or obligation this holiday season. With your spouse, read the list aloud together, then give it to God and let it go. He'll show you what's important and what isn't.

As invitations to social events and the like come in, compile them, talk them over with each other and then determine which enhance your main mission for the holidays and which are "training distractors."

Being honest with yourself and each other will help you make choices that work for both of you.

No one can do everything, and that's OK.

Need some personal coaching on turning the "holidaze" into the "holidays?" Come see me at the Chaplain Family Life Center in Soldier's Plaza or at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill or call 545-1760.

Capt. Christopher Curley, coach of the Punishers, leads drills before the Dec. 4 game. The team of 11- to 12-year olds finished the season, 8-0.

Coach makes Punishers undefeated

Spc. Eliamar Castañon

If you saw this coach at a game, you'd want to tell him to chill out, it's only a game. But Capt. Christopher Curley's strict attitude and sometimes over-the-top character is the reason the Punishers were undefeated this football season. The team of 11- to 12-year olds took the title Saturday against the Blazers, 48-18. They ended the season, 8-0.

"When the season started, I told the parents I was going to be hard on the kids, and I would yell if I needed to get their attention," Curley said.

Sgt. Demetria Peoples was initially surprised by Curley's methods.

"When I first saw him at practice, I was thrown off a little by the way he was with the kids, but my husband told me that it was football and that's what good coaches are supposed to be like," she said.

Peoples' husband, Alex, was impressed by Curley's emphasis on his players grades.

"He was very concerned with the kids having good grades while they were playing football," Alex said. "He told them grades come before football. He even gave an incentive — the kids who kept straight As would get to throw a pie in his face."

Curley began coaching youth basketball as a specialist stationed at Fort Polk, La., in 1989. Since then, he's coached football, basketball, baseball and softball. He's also refereed high school basketball games.

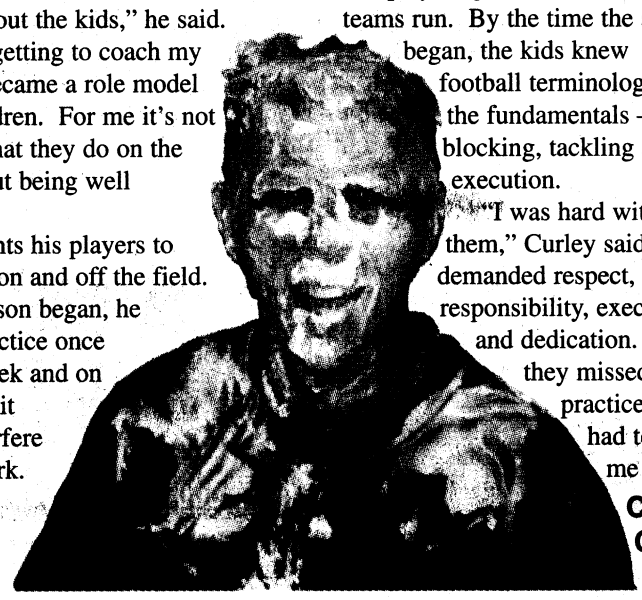
Curley said it's been a great experience. He's coached his own kids and grown closer to them in the process.

"It's all about the kids," he said. "Aside from getting to coach my own kids, I became a role model for other children. For me it's not only about what they do on the field, it's about being well rounded."

Curley wants his players to perform well on and off the field. When the season began, he scheduled practice once during the week and on weekends, so it wouldn't interfere with homework.

Practices began three weeks before the season, which was good considering Curley taught the kids to execute plays high school football teams run. By the time the season began, the kids knew football terminology and the fundamentals — blocking, tackling and execution.

"I was hard with them," Curley said. "I demanded respect, responsibility, execution and dedication. If they missed practice, they had to call me instead of their parents."



But, he said, he also gives them hugs, high fives and nicknames.

For the end of season banquet, Curley didn't ask parents for money to purchase the trophies or the food, said Christine Camden, team mom.

"He put everything together himself by gathering donations," Camden said. "He's been a great leader and teacher to the kids."

Cornelius Donald, running back for the Punishers, had straight As during the football season and got to throw a pie in Curley's face.

"He was tough but he was good," Donald said. "I don't think I'll ever have another coach like him again."

Cornelius Donald tossed a pie at Capt. Christopher Curley as a reward for earning all As.

Steroids plague athletes, tarnish sports records

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

New York Yankee Jason Giambi admitted last year that he used steroids.

You didn't have to hit me over the head with a corked bat to make me realize that. His gaunt appearance in the few games he played this year (80, and he only batted .208) was not the Giambi we've seen in the past.

In other words, he was a regular player.

Now slugger Barry Bonds, who broke 700 lifetime home runs this year, is saying he "unknowingly" took steroids.

Uh-huh.

Victor Conte, founder of BALCO, who distributed these steroids, recently said he watched Olympic five-time gold medalist Marion Jones inject herself with human growth hormone. He taught her how to do it correctly. Jones denies these charges.

Maybe I'm just a skeptic or a realist, but Conte has nothing to lose, so why lie?

Of course Jones and others are protecting themselves, because although they were granted immunity for their testimony, they can still be brought up on other charges.

That leaves the question as to why. I liken these athletes who have taken illegal steroids to the actors, actresses, models and Hollywood types who get Botox, implants and such to stay at the top of their game. There's always someone waiting in the wings to steal a role or break a record.

That doesn't make it right. Whatever happened to the good old days, when men played baseball because they loved the sport? When did it get so intense that athletes had to resort to illegal steroids?

In one word: money. Top players bring in the top bucks. Giambi signed a seven-year deal with the Yankees in 2002 for $120 million, the sixth-highest deal in baseball history. Athletes know the better they are, the more money they get.

Is money worth the irreparable damage caused by steroids?

Giambi was out most of the season this year with various ailments, including a benign tumor in his pituitary gland.

He testified that he might have used the drug Clomid, a female fertility drug. Medical experts say Clomid can aggravate a pituitary tumor.

Testing for drugs, including steroids, needs to be rigorous for all athletes, and not just during the season. Stiff penalties should be handed to those caught using.

Athletes are not above the law.

Sure, records are made to be broken, but not with performance-enhancing steroids. Any record broken, any milestone set, should be taken with a grain of salt.

The next time I watch a baseball game (hurry up April!) I'll be wondering, along with the rest of the nation, "Is that a legitimate homerun?"

Undefeated Dawgs leave Bulls seeing red

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

One touchdown was all it took to drive the Road Dawgs to the next round of the playoffs and put an end to the Bulls championship dreams.

The 104th Transportation Company's Road Dawgs beat the Bravo Bulls of the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 8-0, in flag football, Dec. 7 at Engineer Field.

The only touchdown of the night happened in the first few minutes of play.

The Bulls made the first three runs but were stopped short by a strong Dawg defense.

In an attempt to put space between the Dawgs and their goal, the Bulls chose to punt. It landed in the able hands of the Dawgs defensive back, Marcus Williams, who sugar-stepped his way past the Bulls for a 50-yard run and a goal.

To pour salt on the wound, Curtis Simmons slipped the ball to Kevin Smith for the conversion, putting the Dawgs on the board, 8-0.

"We just blocked well and opened up holes, and Williams just ran straight through," said the Dawgs coach, Antonio Miller.

"(The Bulls) had a few guys who could have stopped the play, but (Williams) just shook them and kept on going."

The Bulls coach agreed the punt return was the play that made the game.

"We had two dropped passes in the end zone, and they returned a punt on us," Clayton Coleman said. "It was a defensive game the whole time."

Both teams had several chances to score, but the defense turned up the heat each time.

The Bull's Leon Johnson had the best chance to score after the half, when he made a 24-yard run to put the ball within 15 yards of the goal line. Two attempts to run the ball and a failed pass led to a turnover and a Dawg possession.

The Dawgs pushed their way to within four yards of their line, with the help of a 10-yard run from Simmons. They were stopped cold on a quarter-back sack.

The Bull's Dustin Boyette dashed down the field, gaining about 20 yards, but the Dawgs defense was impenetrable.

With four seconds left in the game, the Dawgs took a knee and waited for the Bulls season to slip away.

At 11-0, the Dawgs are the only undefeated team in league. The Bulls season ended 9-4.

Championship games start at 1:30 p.m. today at Doughboy Stadium.

598th mounts up, rolls out

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

There were many hugs and tears Dec. 10 when the Soldiers of the 598th Maintenance Company left Fort Benning for Iraq with orders for 365 days or until the mission is completed.

"(Saying goodbye) is the hardest part of what you have to do," said Col. James Brooks, commander of the 36th Engineer Group. "The Army has given you the best equipment it has available. To all the family members present, just so you know, that's the newest improved body armor, protective eyewear, and desert clothing. The job these Soldiers will be executing is an important job."

Brooks said the 598th will provide direct and general level maintenance support to units working in the Baghdad area. One of their missions may be to help with the add-on armor program for vehicles already in theater.

"They did it for our own vehicles, they're going to do it for themselves, and they're going to do it for the vehicles overseas," Brooks said.

Brooks said the Soldiers of the 598th have been preparing for this deployment for the past six months. They focused their maintenance efforts on getting their equipment in good shape and building ring mounts for their Humvees. Also, the Soldiers trained on individual and crew-served weapons proficiency, convoy live fires, first aid, land navigation, and other basic soldier skills.

The MOS part of the Soldiers training is done on an everyday basis, Brooks said. The Soldiers

'Boar' house offers sanctuary

Melissa House

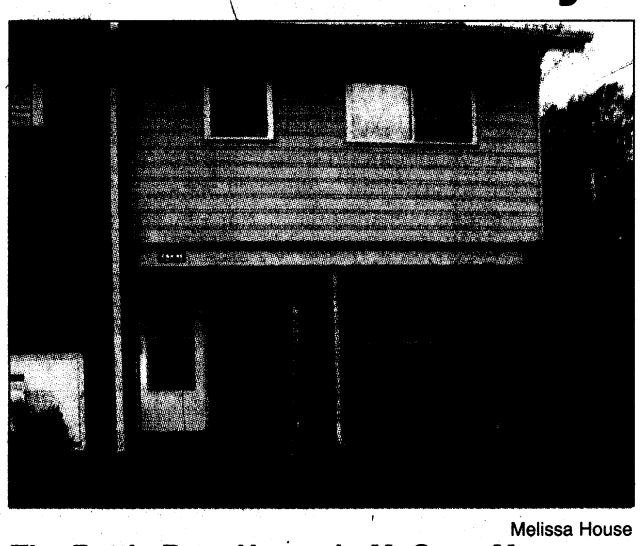
Necessity is the mother of invention, at least, it was for "Battle Boar" Soldiers of 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.



The Battle Boar House, a guest house of sorts, is located on Baker Street in the McGraw Manor housing area, and is one of three houses "belonging" to units in the 3rd Brigade Combat Team.

Its purpose — to provide free lodging for the families of Soldiers who may need to come to Fort Benning while the unit is deployed next year.

1st Lt. Virgil Dwyer, the 1st Bn., 30th Regt. rear detachment commander, said the idea for the house originated in July during the rotation to the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La. During the rotation, a Battle Boar Soldier sustained a serious head injury and required round-the-clock observation. The Soldier, Dwyer said, was not married, so his mother came from Florida to care for him.

"She didn't have the financial means to stay in guest housing or in a hotel for an extended period of time," Dwyer said. "And we weren't going to put her in the barracks with him."

So the battalion went to the post's garrison commander, Col. Rick Riera, asking for permission to sign for an empty set of quarters to use for emergencies. Riera agreed, and the Battle Boar House was underway.

During the past months, the battalion's Soldiers and spouses have put a many man-hours into completely renovating, refurbishing, and decorating the house. Dwyer estimates there are a good 400-500 volunteer hours in the project.

"The house did not look like this when we started," Dwyer told visitors. "Everything in here was donated by businesses in the community and the work on the house was done by Soldiers." A photo collage in the foyer shows what the house looked like when

Post to farewell 3rd BCT

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

A send-off ceremony for 3rd Brigade Combat Team will be held Jan. 7 at 4:00 p.m. in Doughboy Stadium, in preparation for their return to Iraq in mid-January.

The ceremony will feature up-and-coming country singer, David Staton, who will perform his song, "Godspeed" in a free concert to thank troops for their service.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley and special guests will deliver remarks, and the Command Parachute Jump Team, the Silver Wings, will jump carrying to the U.S. flag and 3rd Brigade's colors. They will present the colors and flag to 3rd Brigade commander, Col. Steven L. Salazar.

"This ceremony is very important to our community so we can acknowledge and thank our Soldiers and their families," said Chuck Walls, the garrison manager.

"It's important to the families of the Soldiers leaving. The spouses and kids can look around at the other families there and remember that they're not alone. We want to tell our Soldiers, we will be here when you get back and we will take

Mist snuffs out student sniffles

With the shortage of flu vaccines this year, the only people eligible are high risk patients, including the very young, the elderly, and those with weakened immune systems due to certain medical conditions.

But Soldiers at Sand Hill and Officer Candidate School will receive the FluMist vaccination between now and June.

The Soldiers are receiving the vaccine because they live communally and could be contagious for several days before exhibiting symptoms, spreading the virus to other trainees and cadre, said Maj. Darlene Burns, chief of Preventive Medicine with MEDDAC. Soldiers are also under stress both physically and mentally, endure rigorous training and adverse conditions that weaken the immune system making them more susceptible to illness, Burns said.

The nasal-spray flu vaccine, called LAIV, for live attenuated influenza vaccine, was licensed in 2003. Commercially sold as FluMist, it's different from other vaccines because it is administered by nasal spray rather than injection.

The LAIV contains three different live, weakened live influenza viruses, according to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention. When the body

Raise the regifting bar

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Regifting. Taking that lurid chartreuse scarf that Aunt Martha sent you for your birthday, rewrapping it and passing it on to your sister-in-law for a birthday gift.

Or maybe it's a set of kitchen towels from your cousin that end up at the office Christmas party as your contribution to the "Secret Santa" gift exchange.

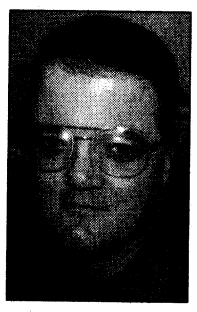
Whatever. You know what I'm talking about and you know who you are.

Personally, I have no issues with regifting. I do think that unless the item is an antique and supposed to be old, you should only be passing on new things — something you would have liked to have if you could stand the color, aroma, taste or whatever. Hopefully the person you are passing the gift to likes the color, aroma or taste.

But maybe it's time we raised the regifting bar.

We are fortunate enough to live in a country where excess is almost the norm. So this year, when you are opening your gifts and are blessed with more underwear and pajamas, and your stocking has yet another manicure kit in it, think about this.

Soldiers recovering from injuries they sustained fighting to keep the bad guys "over there" could put your extra stuff to good use.



Save one of the shipping boxes arriving on your doorstep this week. On Dec. 26, let's bring back Boxing Day. The stuff you got as gifts that you don't really need? The underwear, sweatpants, stationery, hard candy, nail clippers, crossword puzzle books?. Box it up. Add a book of stamps and a phone card or two to the lot and regift the stuff.

Send it to the heroes at Medical Family Assistance Center, Walter Reed Medical Center, 6900 Georgia Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. 20307-5001.

Done right, regifting doesn't have to be your dirty little secret any more.

Help wanted: Wife shopper

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For most of the world, there is only one week of shopping left before Christmas. For most men, the shopping season doesn't open for another week. For my fellow shoppers who will be slugging it out in the trenches on Christmas Eve — good luck, keep your head down and may God have mercy on your soul Christmas Day when the woman in your life opens the gifts from you.

It does sound hopeless, and it is. But, I offer this advice in an effort to keep your stay in the doghouse as short as possible. After all, have you checked the temperature out there lately?

First, no clothes! And, in case you're considering it, no clothes! Women's clothes are just way too complicated a purchase to even consider. There are thousands of designers, sizes, colors, and styles that will not look good on your lady or will have her accuse you of thinking she is fat. You'd have better luck winning the Mega Millions lottery. I'm sorry. I didn't make the rules. It's just the way it is. Lingerie is good, but like all good things, there has to be some moderation.

Anything advertised with "as seen on TV" is also a bad choice, as well as household appliances or anything for the house. No. The homemade coupons are also a bad idea. And, there is no way you will be able to convince her that power tool you've been wanting is actually a great gift for her.

I know that doesn't leave a whole lot. So you are going to need some help. If you have an older daughter or know a friend of your lady, pump her for information and enlist her help. Bribe her if you must. We are not playing anymore.

Money is always safe, though not very thoughtful. Gift cards are better. And for goodness sake, keep the receipts! Your lady is going to need them to get full credit when she returns everything.

Offer to drive her around the day after Christmas to make those returns. You'll get out of the doghouse and into a warm vehicle with your lady and may even score some lunch. For extra credit, buy her something expensive she sees.

You'll be in my prayers. And if you find yourself in my neighborhood, how about bringing me a blanket.

Tips erase holiday stresses

Dr. Bernard Davidson
MCG Health System

The holidays are meant to be a fun, special time enjoyed and shared with family and friends. But all too often, the pressures of gift-giving, entertaining and travel can take a toll, causing unneeded stress and marring the pleasure of the holiday season.

So how can you keep stress at bay? The following steps can help you manage holiday stress.

• Recognize the facts. If you know you are prone to depression and anxiety, recognize that holiday stresses could cause these feelings to escalate. Be sure to take appropriate measures to ease stress, such as setting aside "me" time for enjoying a relaxing bath, a soothing cup of tea or reading a book. It's also important to maintain a regular exercise regimen, and moderate eating and drinking during the holidays. You will feel much better for it once the holidays are over.

• Stay organized. Procrastination — whether related to shopping or party planning — makes tasks seem even tougher. Try to make a plan to accomplish what you need to do during the holidays and stick to it.

• Get the timing right. Battling crowds in stores and on the roads can lead to frustration, anger and stress. Instead, take advantage of early hours at malls and other stores to get shopping done before work, and benefit from no crowds and no lines. If you are traveling, try to leave as early as possible to avoid holiday traffic jams and make sure you carry food, water, CDs and an emergency kit.

• Remember the holidays are not about everything being perfect. Think about past holidays. Weren't the most memorable moments the ones that were not perfectly scripted or posed? So relax and focus on the real meaning of the season-cherished moments with family and friends.

Editor's note: Some of the agencies available to help with holiday stress and problems are Chaplain Services, Army Community Services, Behavioral Health, Social Work Services and the Financial Readiness Programs.

Undersecretary says farewell

It has been a great honor and privilege for me to serve as the Undersecretary of the Army for the past three years and concurrently, for the past 18 months, as the Acting Secretary of the Army.

Our nation's greatness was achieved by generations of Americans who have served their country with honor. From your grandparents who fought and won the Second World War and assured freedom for South Korea, to your parents who served our nation in Vietnam and in the Cold War, in Panama and Desert Storm, to today's conflicts, the courage and sacrifices demonstrated by American Soldiers remain the foundation of our Army.

Soldiering is an affair of the heart, and it is that spirit, that fundamental commitment to volunteer, to place the nation's needs above one's own, that makes our Soldiers the best in the world today. Your professionalism, dedication, and valor are the hallmarks of the values our Army has upheld for over 229 years of service to our nation.

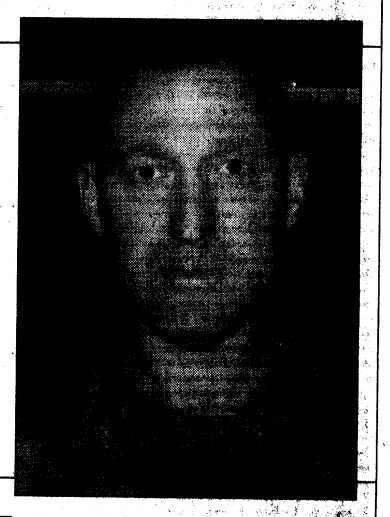
I am immensely proud of what our Army has accomplished during the past three years. Our Army has carried the heaviest burden in fighting this Global War on Terror. Soldiers have set two nations — Iraq and Afghanistan — on the path to democracy and economic recovery. Less than 12 months since we first rotated our combat formations in Iraq, the Army, for the second time, is executing the most massive movement of troops and equipment seen since WWII. And, even as we continue to take the fight to our nation's enemies and improve the quality of life for our Soldiers' families, our Army continues transforming its training, organization, and equipment.

Our Army is far more than people and equipment — it is made of men and women with hopes and dreams, a passionate commitment to the ideals of freedom and the willingness to fight for those ideals. But freedom is not free! And in today's War on Terror, some of our Soldiers have lost their lives, and many have been wounded. I have had the honor of visiting many of these wounded Soldiers, and I am always moved by their unanimous expressions of dedication, their commitment to service, and their desire to return to their units and comrades-in-arms. I'm equally touched by the tremendous commitment displayed by their families, and the support that they provide.

When we talk of service and sacrifice, we must never forget the wives, husbands, sons, daughters, mothers, fathers, and other loved ones who stand behind our Soldiers. Their unconditional love and their steadfast loyalty to our Soldiers are invaluable in every aspect of what our Army does. The devotion and support of our Army families represent all that we fight for and all that we hold dear.

It has been my honor to represent the wonderful men and women who volunteer to be a part of the Army — and their families as well. The nation will be eternally indebted to you for your service and sacrifice.

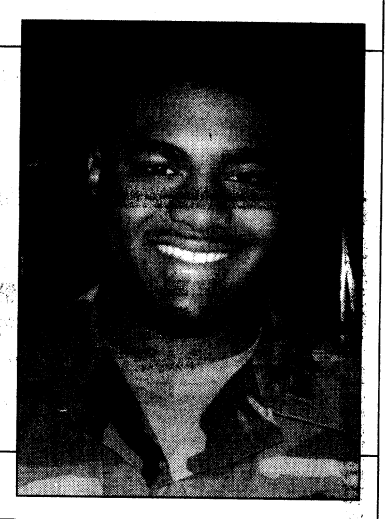
God bless each of you, God bless the United States Army, and God bless this wonderful nation we all love and so proudly serve.



— Les Brownlee
Undersecretary of the Army

VARIOUS VOICES

What is your favorite holiday tradition?



Joyce Hudson, family member — "My favorite tradition is cooking Christmas dinner for my family. I make a turkey and a ham with pineapple on it, collard greens, macaroni and cheese, pies and fruitcake. It's special because I make it for the people I love."

Staff Sgt. Michael Petsch, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "When I was a kid, my favorite traditions were the presents and the tree. But now I go to Mass to celebrate the birth of Jesus, because Christmas for my family isn't about Frosty or Santa. It's about the birth of Christ."

Danielle Westlake, family member — "My favorite tradition is when we open the presents. You get to see everyone's happy faces when they see what they got. It's fun to give presents to my sisters and parents, but I love getting them too!"

2nd Lt. Quincy Manzey, 36th Engineer Group — "When I was a kid, my family and all my aunts, uncles and cousins went to my grandmother's house for Christmas. The whole house would be full of presents and food. Now my family doesn't get together like we used to."

Patricia Medeiros, family member — "Decorating the tree is my favorite tradition, because my kids, husband and I do it together. My daughter always puts the angel on top."

Pfc. Angel Lopez, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "I love the food my family makes at Christmas. We have a Puerto Rican dish, candied rice. And we wait for the whole family to open gifts. It's not the same if someone is not there."

Staff Sgt. Ari Abenojar didn't want to compete in the Airborne School's Black Hat of the Year competition. He didn't think he had a chance to win when he was ordered to go ahead and represent his company anyway. So when he was notified that he was selected as the Sergeant Airborne of Sergeants Airborne for the year, he was shocked.

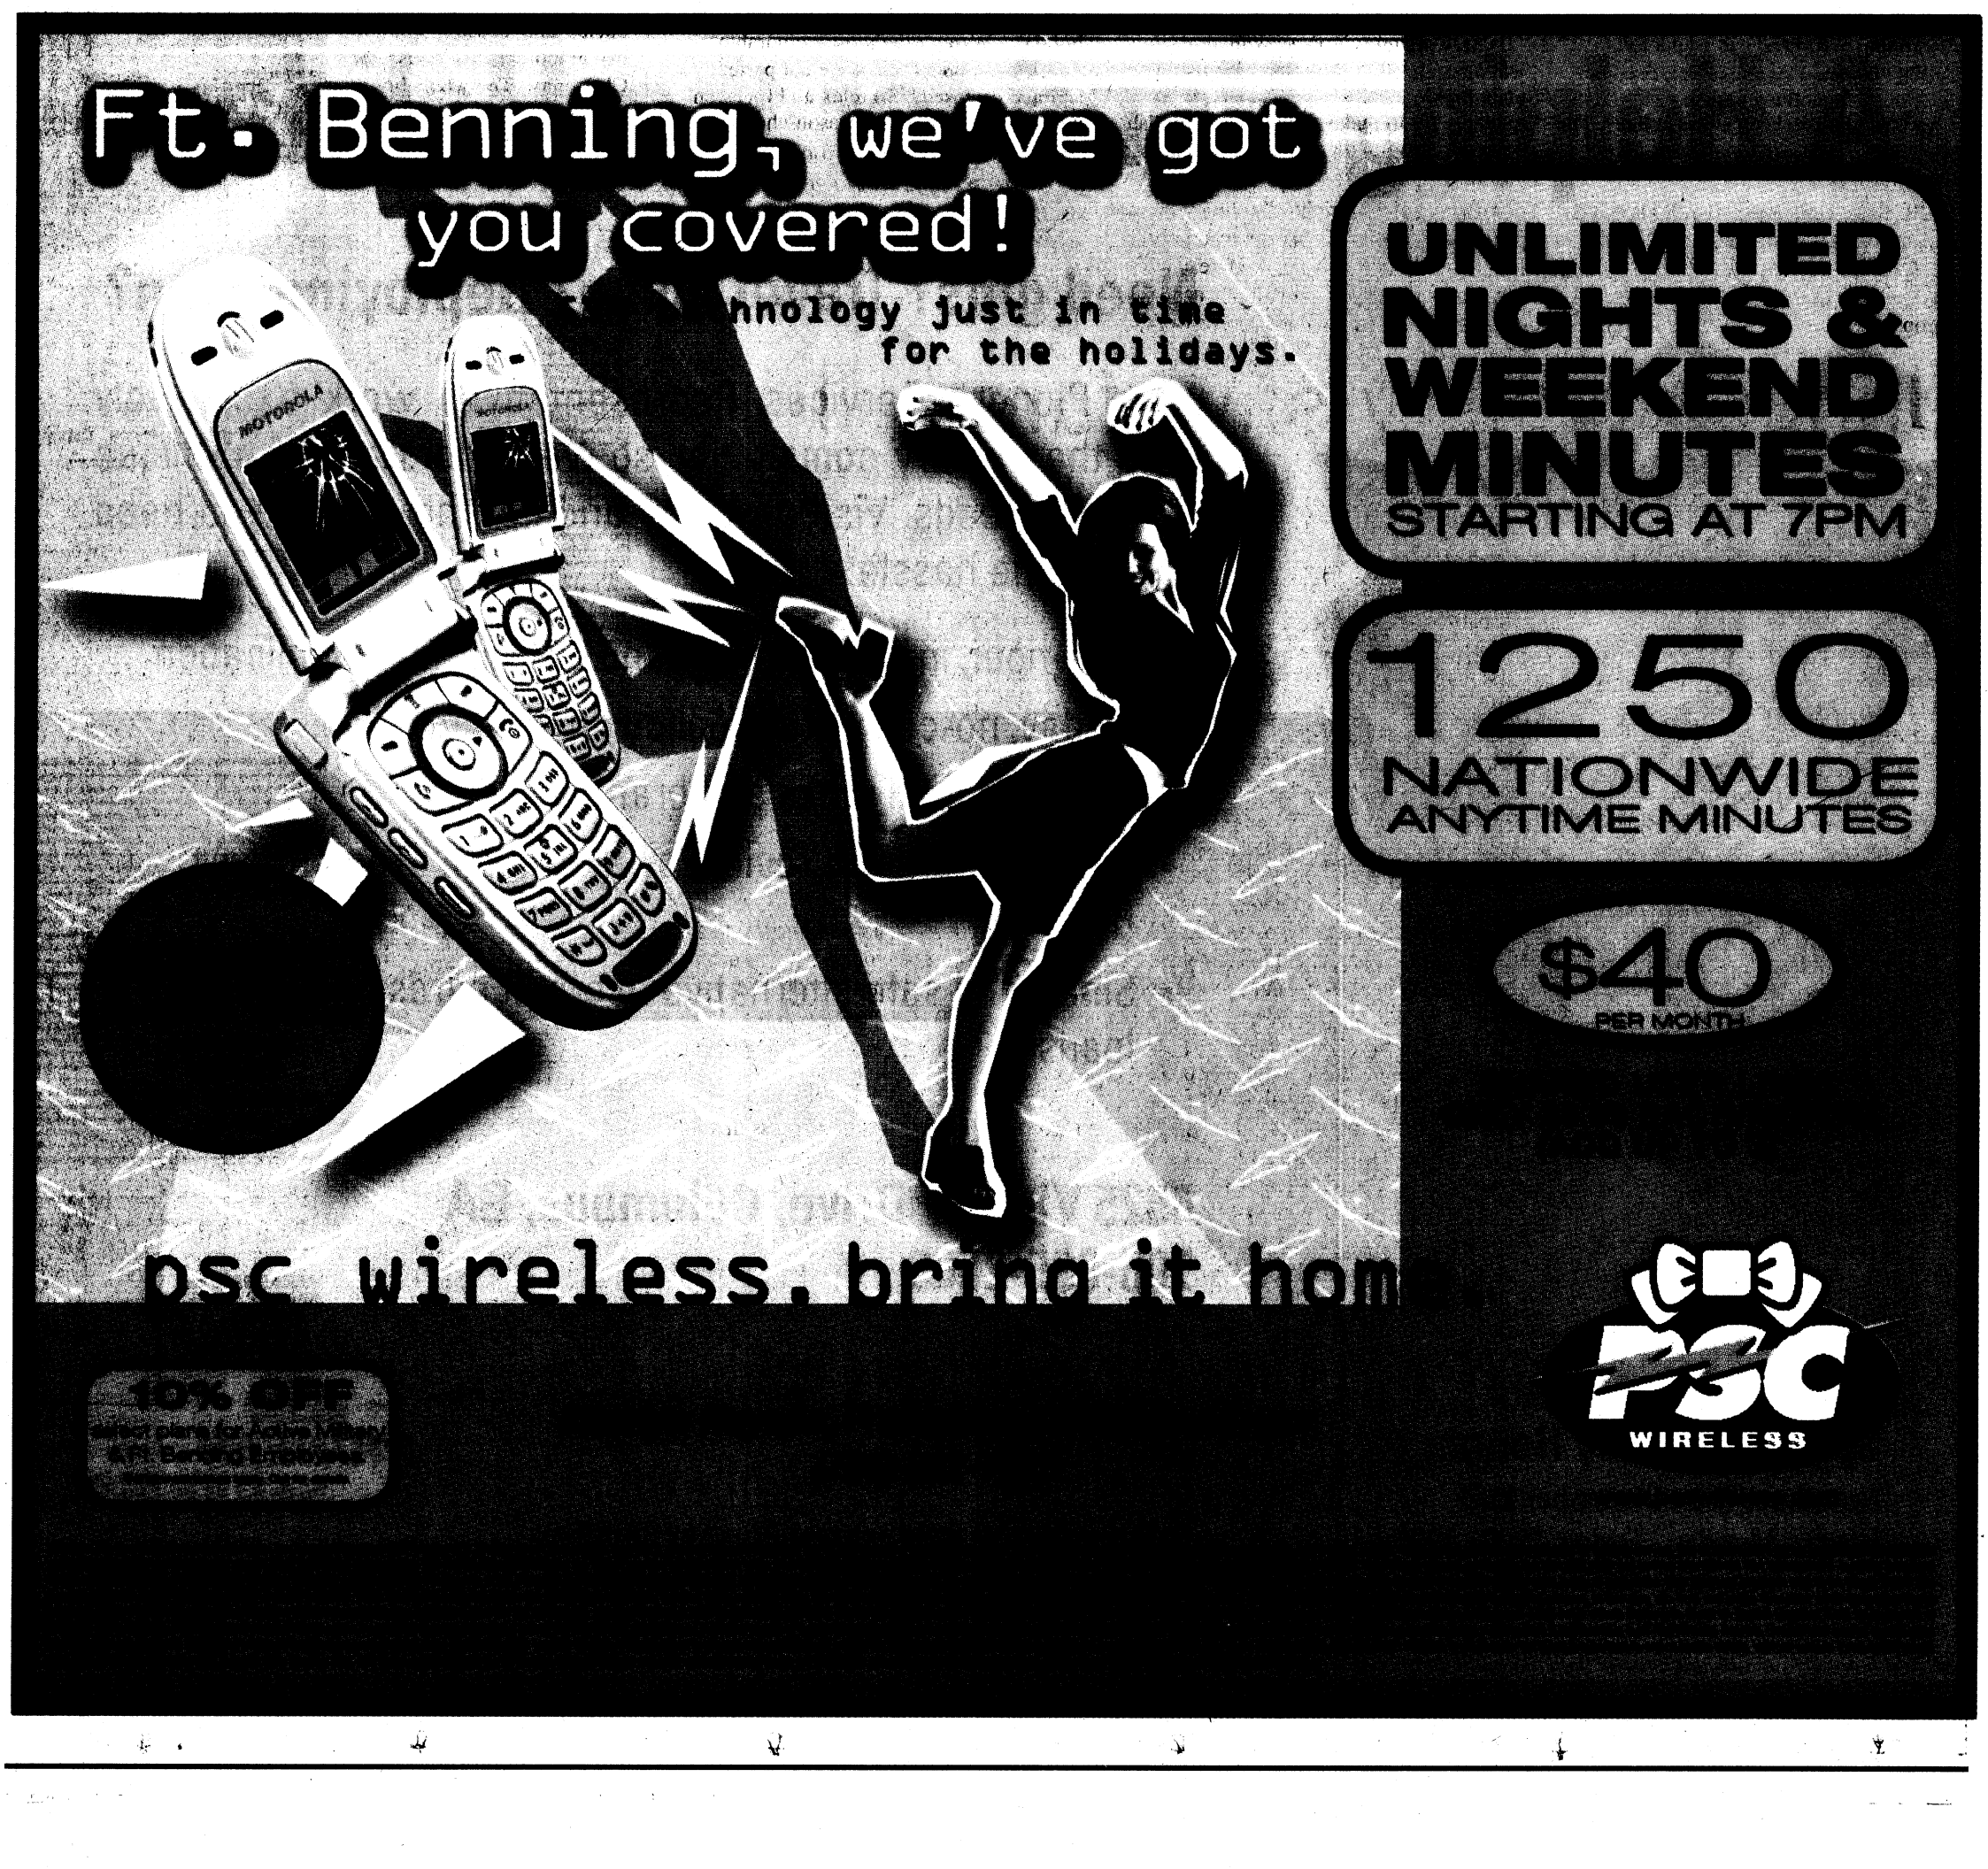
"From day one, I never thought I was going to win," the Stockton, Calif., native said. "I didn't want to do it, was told to do it, but I went out there and gave it my best."

So why would A Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, pick a guy who wasn't interested in competing to represent the unit in the Superbowl of Airborne School? Because the Black Hat of the Year from last year dropped Abenojar's name in the first sergeant's lap.

"I work with him day in and day out, so I see his work ethic," said fellow black hat Staff Sgt. Shawn Nevius. "And, honestly, I felt he was professional enough and intelligent enough to put the level of effort into it that it requires to come out the winner."

Nevius didn't volunteer Abenojar for the job and then walk away. The outgoing champ mentored the champ-to-be through the whole competition, turned over his personal study guides and gave an insider's view of the events that make up the challenge.

"It paid off," Nevius said. "Alpha has won three out of the last four years."



Winning the competition and continuing the trend set by his unit brought more than just bragging rights, said Abenojar. The gift certificates, cash and plaques awarded to the winner were nice, but coming out on top was about a lot more.

"You really put a lot of time and effort into it and you go up against the best black hats in Airborne School," he said. "When you win, you represent the whole instructor base."

The title also assures the seven-year veteran something he has only dreamed of until now — a slot at the Army's High Altitude Low Opening school.

The course is usually available only to Special Forces and Rangers.

"HALO is what anybody who is anybody and airborne qualified ever wants," Abenojar said. "To experience that free-fall feeling."

Involved leadership can decrease AWOL offenses

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate has prosecuted more than 60 Soldiers for going AWOL and desertion since Jan. 1.

General and special courts-martial for AWOLs of 30 days or longer were held for 15 Soldiers. Each of these Soldiers received confinement and a bad conduct or dishonorable discharge. Confinement in some cases was up to two years. Another 25 Soldiers received 30 days confinement and an other than honorable discharge. In lieu of courts martial, 12 Soldiers received adverse administrative discharges. Many more received punishments at Article 15 proceedings.

AWOL offenses during time of war are taken very seriously, said Maj. Josh Shuey, chief of Criminal Law with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Soldiers often tell the court that stress, substance abuse, relationship problems and financial problems were their reasons for going AWOL, Shuey said. Most Soldiers do not understand that going AWOL will not solve any problems, Shuey said.

"A lot of these Soldiers are dealing with problems and they made bad choices because they didn't know what else to do," Shuey said.

"Many Soldiers don't take advantage of the support outlets that can help them deal with their problems," said Staff Judge Advocate Col. Lyle Cayce. "Using the open door policy to let your chain of command know about the problem is a great first step."

Also available to help are Army Substance Abuse Program education and counseling, chaplain services, Army Family Advocacy Program, Community Mental Health Services Social Work Service and Budget counseling through the Financial Readiness Program.

"Units that have active, involved leaders who know about the problems of their Soldiers have lower AWOL rates," Cayce said.

"Obviously when a Soldier goes AWOL during war, whatever the reason, he subjects himself to increased punishments," Cayce said. "Commanders are rightly concerned of the impact that AWOL has on the unit's mission and its ability to perform in combat."

"We will continue to prosecute Soldiers who go AWOL because it serves to reduce the number of Soldiers who commit this offense. Going AWOL doesn't solve any problems." Cayce said. "It only creates more."

DoD announces next Iraq, Afghanistan rotations

Officials say rotations could be tailored as situation changes

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Stryker Brigade in Alaska and a brigade of the Georgia National Guard are scheduled to begin deploying to Iraq in mid-2005, along with the returning 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) and 4th Infantry Division, a brigade of the 10th Mountain Division and a brigade of the 1st Infantry Division from Fort Riley, Kan.

Two other brigades of the 10th Mountain division from Fort Drum, N.Y., will deploy to Afghanistan next year along with the headquarters of the Florida National Guard's 53rd Infantry Brigade, Defense officials announced.

Department of Defense released a partial rotation list Dec. 14 of units scheduled for deployment to Afghanistan and Iraq in support of Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom. As other units are identified and alerted, officials said subsequent announcements will be made.

OIF Rotation

For Operation Iraqi Freedom, the rotation is consistent with the current force structure in Iraq of 17 brigades and three division headquarters, DoD officials said. The partial troop deployment list includes:

- 48th Infantry Brigade (Separate), Georgia Army National Guard
- 172nd Stryker Brigade Combat Team, Fort Wainwright, Alaska
- 1st Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y.
- 101st Airborne Division, Air Assault (division headquarters and four brigades), Fort Campbell, Ky.
- 4th Infantry Division (division headquarters and four brigades), Fort Hood, Texas
- 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division, Fort Riley, Kan.

The 101st Airborne Division went into Iraq in March 2003 as part of the initial assault and began redeploying to Fort Campbell this past February. The 4th Infantry Division entered Iraq in April 2003 and returned to Fort Hood this past April.

The first units deploying to Iraq in the next rotation are scheduled to arrive in mid-2005, officials said, and successive units will deploy at various times through mid-2006.

OEF Rotation

For Operation Enduring Freedom, the 3rd and 4th Brigades and headquarters elements of the Army's 10th Mountain Division from Fort Drum, N.Y., will deploy to Afghanistan next year along with the headquarters of the Florida National Guard's 53rd Infantry Brigade.

This OEF rotation is consistent with the current force structure of three brigades and a division headquarters in Afghanistan, DoD officials said. They said the first units deploying to Afghanistan are scheduled to arrive in mid-2005, and successive units will deploy at various points through mid-2006.

DoD's goal is to increasingly pass responsibility for security and governance of Iraq and Afghanistan to the security forces of those nations, officials said. They added that U.S. force rotations may be tailored based upon changes in the security situation in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Army seeks boost in up-armored Humvee production

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — An additional 100 up-armored Humvees per month could soon be heading to Iraq, Army officials said.

Secretary of the Army Francis J. Harvey is looking to modify the Army's contract with Armor Holdings, Inc. of Jacksonville, Fla., which currently produces 450 of the specialty vehicles, known as UAHs, per month, . Robert Mecredy, president of Aerospace and Defense Group for Armor Holdings, told Harvey the company may be able to put out as many as 100 more a month.

"Once I was informed of the additional production capacity, I wanted to ensure those additional vehicles were going directly to our forces in Iraq," Harvey said.

An up-armored Humvee has steel-plated doors, ballistic-resistant windows and steel plating underneath the vehicle that offers better protection against bullets, rocket-propelled grenades and improvised explosive devises. The UAH weighs about 3,000 pounds more than the regular version.

The Army, which provides the UAHs to all U.S. forces in Iraq, aims to have 8,105 of the vehicles in its inventory by March 2005, officials said.

The Bayonet
will not be published Dec. 24 or Dec. 31.
The first paper of the new year is Jan. 7.

598th: Unit fit, ready for tasks of the 598th routinely provided direct support maintenance to the rest of the 36th Engineer Group and other FORSCOM units on Fort Benning.

Brooks tried to put the minds of the family members at ease the by reassuring them of the good quality of life and leadership of his troops.

"(The Soldiers) will have access to phones or the Internet at least once a week," he said. "If they don't call you or don't write to you, don't be afraid to call me. They will be at a driving distance from me and I will go over there and check on them for you every once in a while. The leadership there has two jobs. First, they have a mission to get accomplished; second — to make sure our Soldiers are safe and as well-prepared for the missions as they can be.

"This is one of the few times in the country's history that we're doing this fighting for the security of our own country, not just for freedom in somebody elses country. We want to stop terrorism so that our sons, daughters and grandkids have a safe place to live. That's what our Soldiers are doing today.

"Soldiers — you're trained and you're prepared. I have confidence in you that you're going to go over there and get our mission done and come home. Let's get out there and do this."

As Spc. Alberto Newcomb hugged his wife and 7-month-old baby goodbye, he said the hardest part of deployments is always separation.

"This is the second deployment for us," Newcomb said. "This one, however, is tougher because now we have a baby, but I'm confident of this deployment. Everyone and their families will be in my prayers."

House: Refuge for families

they signed for it in July before the renovation began.

He said the unit was able to purchase items at greatly reduced cost using money they generated through fund-raisers. Guests will find a stocked pantry, linens, towels and even laundry detergent.

Although the unit would prefer not to have to use the house, Dwyer said it will be available for families for any emergency that arises during the extended deployment. The house has five beds and a crib in the upstairs bedrooms, but Dwyer said the main effort went in to the living space on the first floor.

"That's the area where the family will gather to talk and take care of paperwork and other things," he said. "That's where they will spend the majority of their time when they are in the house."

Soldiers built a gazebo and fencing around the back patio to provide a space where families could sit outdoors away from prying eyes.

Photos in the stairwell are of 3rd Brigade Soldiers during Operation Iraqi Freedom 1. Dwyer asked the staff of the Training Support Center for help with those, and they responded. When Sissy Hines, the TSC chief, initially couldn't envision what Dwyer wanted, he took her out and showed her the house.

Bobby Jones, the TSC visual media lead, said Hines is an interior designer who took her cues from the colors of the slate-topped coffee table in the living room.

"The colors are repeated in the frames of the pictures you see going up the stairs," Jones said, "so when you see it, it all goes together." The photos, he said are ones they have collected since OIF. His shop matted and framed the photos in less than a day, then delivered them to the house and spent the evening hanging them on the walls.

"We chose photos that touch you," he said. "They show happy times and bring a happy feeling.

"The house is a great place," Jones said. "It felt good when we were finished."

Dwyer said the house has an impact on the neighborhood as well. The neighbors are watching out for the house as it sits empty.

"And they'll be watching out for our families, our Soldiers," he said, "and they've done a great job. They understand why it's there."

The house was featured on the Officers' Spouses' Club Tour of Homes Dec. 14 and as the tour wound down, Dwyer answered a cell phone call.

"It was the staff duty," he said. "Someone called to report there were people in the Battle Boar House and wanted to make sure we knew."

The LAIV is approved for use on healthy people between 5 and 49 years old, with the exception of those with certain medical conditions, pregnant women and people with allergic reactions to LAIV's ingredients or eggs.

"We are administering FluMist to trainees because they are the best candidates to receive it. They are all between the age limits, and most likely do not have any of the conditions that would prevent them from receiving it," Burns said. "But all of the trainees will still be screened before vaccination.

"We want to get all the trainees and cadre immunized, and then if we have an excess, we will ask our chain of command to start administering the vaccine to others," Burns said.

New POI changes BCTB

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command has changed the program of instruction for initial entry training by incorporating the M-16 into all parts of training and using the Engagement Skills Trainer 2000 to enhance marksmanship techniques learned on ranges.

Originally, Soldiers in IET received instruction on the M-16 during the basic rifle marksmanship phase of training. The new POI has Soldiers being issued an M-16 and a magazine with five blank rounds of ammunition one week into training.

"The idea is for Soldiers to become more familiar with their weapons and are comfortable using it," said Capt. Cecil Henry, commander of D Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment.

The EST 2000 is an emerging training simulator using virtual reality to project a variety of scenario possibilities and allows for immediate feedback of shooting techniques without ever having to go to the field.

Henry said an EST 2000 will be brought to Sand Hill in January for BCTB and Soldiers will use the simulator at least three days in conjunction with time spent at the range.

D Company is not the only cycle of basic training Soldiers that has converted to the new POI.

Three other cycles have completed basic and the feedback from the commanders was positive, said Capt. Alina Martinez, Basic Combat Training Brigade adjutant.

"The BRM scores for the Soldiers who carried the weapons the entire time in basic improved immensely," Martinez said. "The first time go's for the different companies have improved immensely."

Henry agreed with Martinez and said 91 percent of his Soldiers received first time go's on the practice range for their BRM qualifications.

Pfc. Matthew Bacon, with 3rd Platoon, guaranteed an expert score shooting Wednesday at the range.

"I've been shooting rifles for more than 20 years now, but never an M-16," Bacon said. "Having it with me all the time really makes me more comfortable now that I'm firing it."

Bacon and other Soldiers in his company said they carry their weapon everywhere and sleep with it hanging on a rack next to their bunk.

"We have it with us at all times even when we sleep," said Pvt. Joshua Cronk. "It doesn't matter what your MOS is, you have to be familiar with your weapon because you never know when you'll have to use it. You have to be prepared for anything at all times."

Pvt. James Tolman said they all received instruction on how to properly carry an M-16 the first weekend they were in training.

"I can take it apart and put it back together in two to three minutes," Tolman said. He also expected to get an expert shooting score to beat his brother, Samuel Tolman, who is currently in one station unit training unit.

Officials sign RCI partnership

"Christmas has come early to Fort Benning. Santa has delivered all the goods," said Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley before he signed partnership documents formalizing the relationship between Fort Benning and Clark Pinnacle Family Communities Dec. 15.

Freakley, who has been in the Army long enough to have seen the change from green uniforms to BDUs and C rations give way to MREs, said nothing he's seen is of greater significance than what the Army is doing through the Residential Communities Initiative. The RCI program was enacted by Congress in 1996, allowing the military to obtain private sector capital and expertise to develop, manage and improve military family housing.

"We're putting Soldiers in the houses they deserve," he said. "We're excited. This is a volunteer Army and we enlist Soldiers, but re-enlist families. We'll be able to put Soldiers in homes with adequate square footage that are protected and secure."

Freakley said the homes in the Main Post area were built in the 1930s with Depression-era laborers working for the Works Progress Act. Seventy years later, families will wait up to a year to live in the historic homes.

"The challenge 50 years from now is will Soldiers wait a year for a Clark Pinnacle house because of the care and workmanship?" he asked.

Bill Armbruster, the deputy assistant secretary of the Army for privatization and partnerships, attended the ceremony, bringing news that the new secretary of the Army, Dr. Francis J. Harvey, is making quality of life issues and taking care of Soldiers the top priority during his tenure.

Armbruster said the Army's ambitious and bold program through RCI would take care of the large inventory of neglected and inadequate housing.

"Congress initially put a cap on this program," he said. 'This year we reached the cap, but we got congressional relief and the program is alive and well."

The Army plans to renovate more than 80,000 homes — 50,000 of which had been transferred to the private sector by last week.

Clark Pinnacle, he said, has proven itself in projects at the former Fort Ord and Presidio of Monterey in California.

"You guys are in for a great program here," he said. "This is a 50-year commitment. They'll be here for you."

Clark's managing director of military housing, Scott Orrantia, said his company is looking forward to taking the lessons learned from the previous projects and putting them into place at Fort Benning.

The $600 million project, Orrantia said, represents a partnership with the post and with Columbus and Phenix City.

"We look forward to tapping into your resources," he said. "We cannot make this a successful venture without the support of the local community."

Approximately 75 percent of the subcontracting work will be given to local companies.

Orrantia mentioned a sign he saw outside the 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment area the first day he toured post.

"It said 'Standards, no compromise,' and it struck me as being what this partnership is all about," he said. "Brigadier General Freakley has set the standard and Clark Pinnacle will not compromise to meet it."

"They need to take a lot of photos of the old housing before they tear it down," said Command Sgt. Maj. Douglas Greenway of the Ranger Training Brigade, "so when Soldiers start to complain about something like this, they can break out the old pictures. And if they build good, quality houses, it can get Soldiers motivated to stay in the military. This will be great for retention and for the Army overall."

Infantry School partners with Webster University

Agreement grants credits for grad degrees

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Representatives from the Infantry School and Webster University signed an agreement Dec. 8 designed to help level the playing field between captains and their civilian counterparts.

The agreement establishes a cooperative master's degree program and provides Infantry Captains Career Course graduates the opportunity to complete a degree with the university through shared academic credits.

Students can pursue a master of business administration, master of arts in human resources development or a master of arts in management and leadership.

After evaluating both the ICCC and Webster University curricula to ensure educational quality and comparability, administrators at both institutions determined ICCC graduates could receive nine credits toward the MBA and 12 credits toward the two MA degrees.

The credit hours awarded are from qualitative analysis and decision making, organizational behavior and leadership.

The process began in early September, said Skip Rey, an instructional systems specialist in the DOT, when he contacted the university and got information.

Less than six weeks later, Webster representative Ralph Southard, the senior director for cooperative degree programs, met with Col. John Carmichael, the director of Operations and Training to present the program.

Rey said Southard sent a draft memorandum of agreement two weeks later.

Rey then sent the ICCC program of instruction to Southard so he could convert it and award Webster credit hours.

ICCC students will get information on the cooperative program during their in-brief, Rey said. Graduates can complete their degree by enrolling at a Webster University campus at their subsequent duty assignment or by enrolling in their distance learning program. Webster has seven international campuses and 68 campuses in 21 states and the District of Columbia.

And the agreement applies to graduates of the previous Infantry Officer Advanced Course and past graduates of ICCC, said Joe Staudenraus, chief of the DOT's Training Development Branch.

Staudenraus had worked on a similar agreement for the U.S. Army Soldier Support Institute at Fort Jackson, S.C., in 2001.

At the Dec. 8 signing ceremony, Randy Wright, Webster's associate vice president for academic affairs and director of military programs told Infantry Center assistant commandant Col. James Yarbrough he had a phone call to make as soon as he walked out the door. He had captains at Fort Bragg who were waiting for the news that the agreement had been signed so they could enroll.

"This program gives the captains a head start on earning their master's degree," Rey said.

"It's all about helping Soldiers."

Night lanes nightmare for troops

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Soldiers from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, braved mud, water and cold temperatures under clear skies and a sliver of a moon when they tackled the Night Infiltration Course Monday evening.

The course challenged the Soldiers to employ some of the basic tasks they learned during the previous nine weeks of training.

"These guys use a lot of different skills during the course," said Staff Sgt. Scott Huffman, a drill sergeant with the unit. "They high crawl, low crawl, back crawl under wire obstacles and react to flares. They know how to freeze when the flare goes up and keep a low profile to avoid detection by the enemy when moving through the woods."

Most of the Soldiers didn't look forward to the course because of the mud and long crawl, said Huffman. But after completing it, most said they enjoyed it.

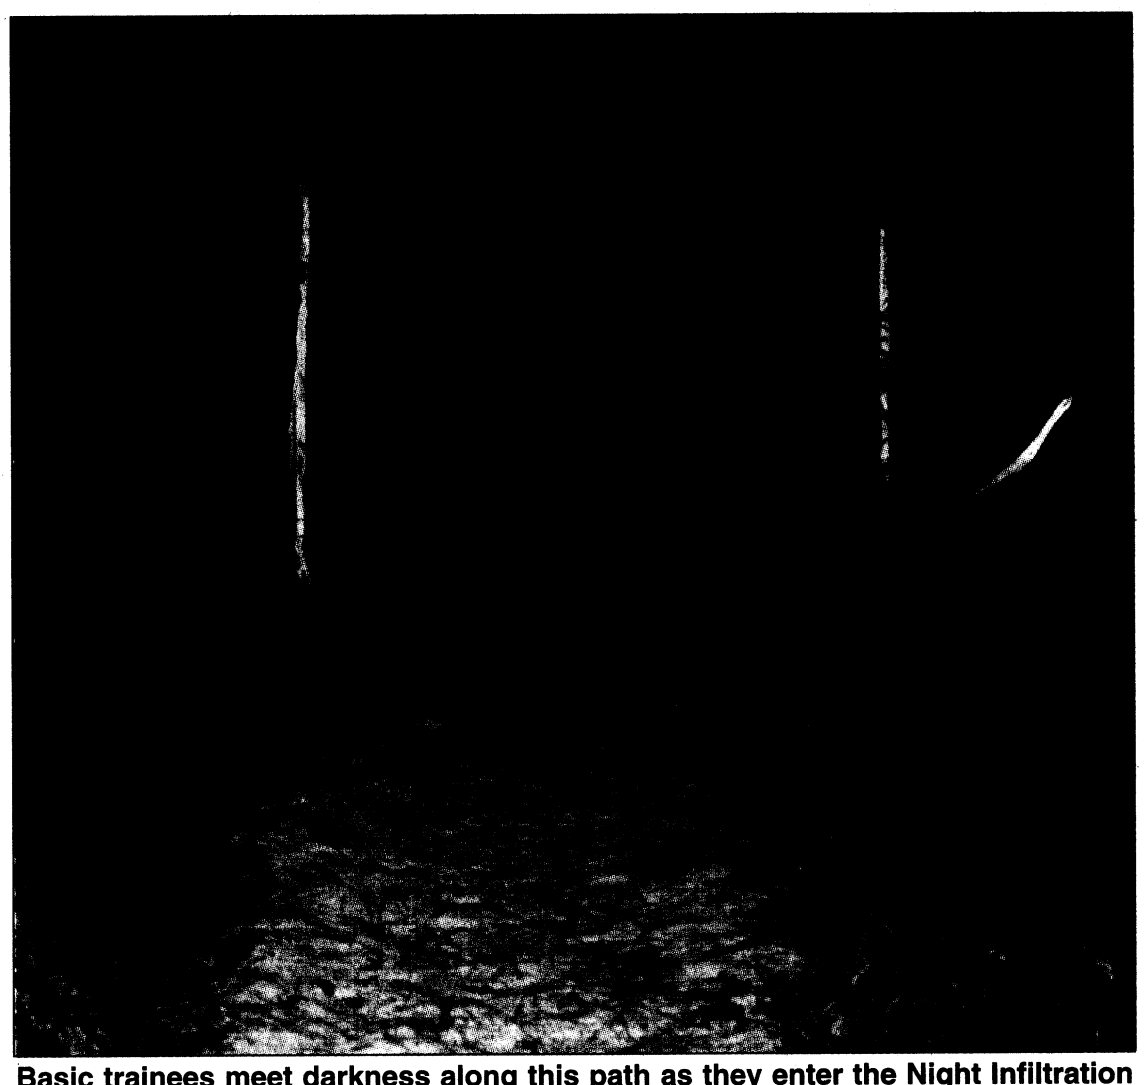
"If you don't know what it feels like to have bullets shot over your head, what are you going to do in combat?" asked Pvt. Danny Priest, a 20-year-old from Bainbridge, Ga.

Priest said he joined the Army for the discipline and chose the Infantry because he wanted to see some combat.

He said the night infiltration course is important because it's a taste of what war is really like.

The course is a fixture at all basic training installations and is one of the tools the Army is using to get Soldiers ready for what faces many of them soon after graduation — deployment in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

Many aspects of basic training are now directly applicable to the ongoing war on terrorism, Huffman said. The Center for Army Lessons Learned plays a strong role in the rapidly changing basic training doctrine units are following. New battle tasks and drills reflect challenges troops are facing in Iraq and Afghanistan.



More advanced, Ranger-quality first aid, IED training, mounted training and urban operations all play a part in getting Soldiers ready to move on to their units to prepared to be part of a combat team.

A drill sergeant talks to a mud-covered Soldier as he flounders through the last 15 meters of the timed course.

Stryker performance scores high with Army leaders

'Perfect vehicle in urban environment,' users say

Sgt. 1st Class Tammy M. Jarrett
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Speed, protection and mobility are just a few reasons Army leaders are praising the Stryker's survivability in urban combat and arctic environments.

"The Stryker is the system that is providing our Soldiers with battlefield speed, situational awareness and protection that is unmatched with any other Army system that we have," Brig. Gen. Jeffrey Sorenson, director of Management and Horizontal Technology Integration, said during a Stryker media roundtable at the Pentagon Dec. 9.

Sorenson and other Department of the Army leaders held a video tele-conference with Stryker Brigade Combat Team commanders from 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash., and 172nd Infantry Brigade, Fort Wainwright, Alaska, discussing the system's operational successes and lessons learned from the field.

"It's fast and quiet and tracks very well in the snow," said 172nd Commander Col. Michael Shields, via VTC from the brigade's tactical operations center. "The Soldiers have complete confidence in the weapon system. It's incredibly accurate and lethal, and it works well in the arctic environment."

The 172nd was in day seven of a war fighting exercise, using lessons learned from 3rd Bde., 2nd Inf. Div., which returned from Iraq in October, to shape its training as it undergoes transformation as the Army's third SBCT.

Stryker proves its worth

"The Soldiers have complete confidence with the survivability based on the dialogue with their counterparts in Iraq," Shields said. He said they are also impressed with the overall digital equipment capabilities.

Lt. Col. Gordie Flowers, commander of 2nd Battalion, 3rd Infantry Regiment, said the Stryker vehicles have proven their worth in protecting Soldiers from rocket-propelled grenades and car bombs. He said while in Iraq, more than 50 percent of his Strykers were hit with RPGs and IEDs.

"No Soldiers in my battalion have been killed from either attacks in the Stryker vehicle," Flowers said. "It has provided unprecedented protection of our infantry as we moved on the battlefield. It's the perfect vehicle in an urban environment."

Lt. Col. William "Buck" James, commander of 3rd Brigade, 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry Regiment, said the Stryker system has unmatched mobility both mechanically and tactically.

"It gives you armor protection to deliver an infantry squad to the point of attack — rapidly issue orders — to be able to maneuver and gain the advantage over the enemy," James said.

Lessons learned improve Stryker capability

Although the Soldiers like the Stryker and are confident in it, officials said it isn't the perfect weapon.

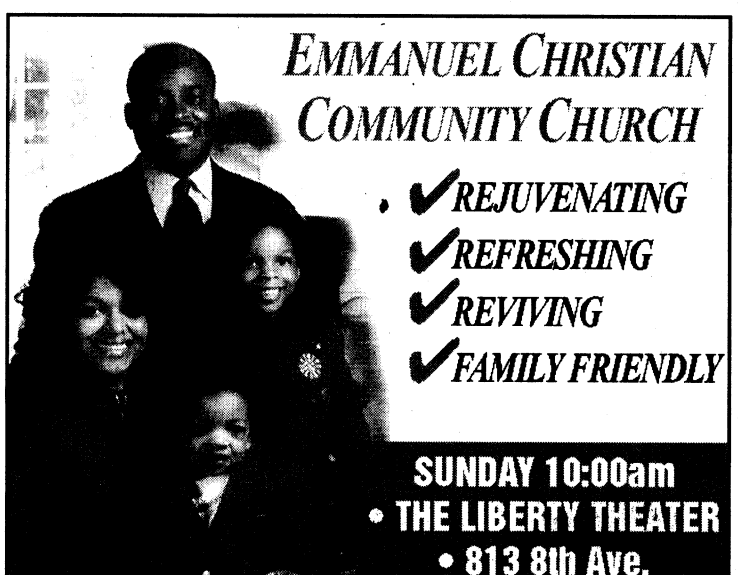
Army procurement officials have taken lessons learned from Iraq and are making changes to be implemented in the near future to provide the most combat effective equipment to support Soldiers on the battlefield.

Col. Don Sando, Training and Doctrine Command system manager, said some of the midterm improvements include changes to the remote weapon station, day and night optics, laser range finder on the Infantry carrier vehicle and some of the other variants. Platforms will be stabilized so that new and improved weapons can be introduced.

They are also looking at weight initiatives to reduce the overall weight of the vehicle with the add-on slat armor to prevent it from getting stuck in the soft terrain in Iraq.

Other changes have already been applied to the vehicles, for example the anti-tank guided missile carrier.

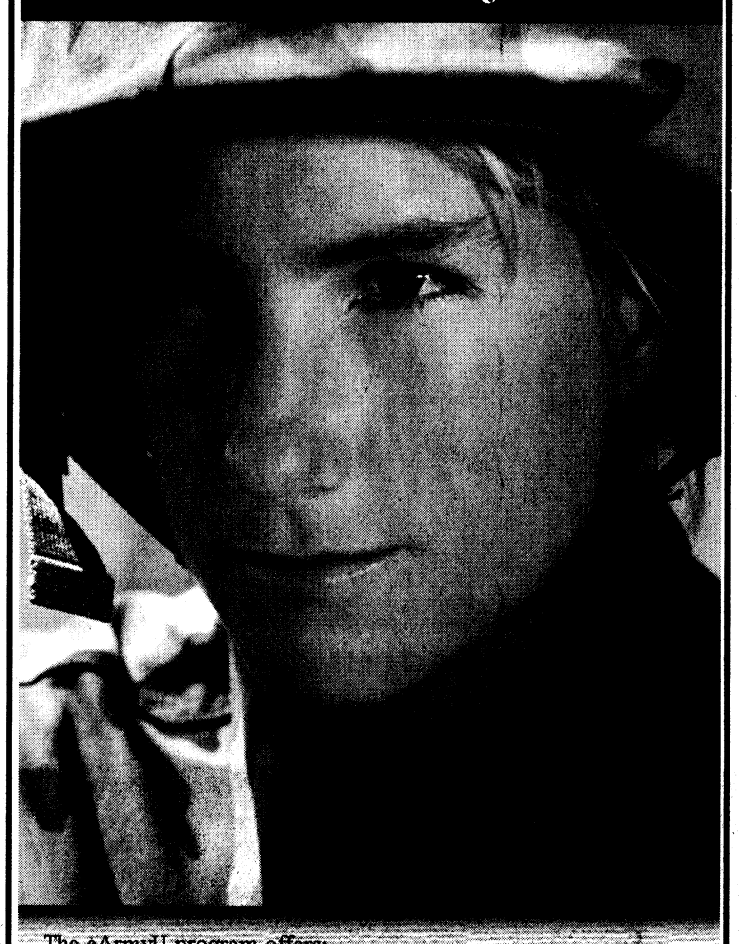
Col. Peter Fuller, Stryker project manager, said the carrier's hatch only opened to a 45-degree angle. This didn't allow the Soldiers the room to add weapons to the system or stand behind the weapons.



"We immediately modified the hatch to open all the way back to allow the Soldiers to put crew-served weapons on the back of the weapon and have people standing in the back, providing security," Fuller said.

Fuller said they have also added a swing, mounted on the vehicle, so Soldiers hang their crew-served weapons in the back and are experimenting with a shield to go on the hatch to give Soldiers more protection.

Lt. Col. Steven Townsend, 3rd Bde., 2nd Inf. Div. commander, said he is convinced that the Stryker is ahead of its game and is exceeding the Army's expectation.



"The Soldiers know this vehicle is not perfect, but they do know and believe it's the best vehicle available and they have it to use today," Townsend said. "Our Soldiers have the confidence in the Stryker that it will provide, and get there fast and quiet."

Combat engineers clear way for troops

Spc. Eliamar Castañon
Bayonet staff

"When I signed up, I thought I was going to build things, not blow them up," said Staff Sgt. Charles Warner, a combat engineer with E Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment. "This job, though, is a lot more fun."

As a combat engineer, Warner went through 13 weeks of one station unit training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. While in training, combat engineers learn about explosives and demolition, landmine warfare, rigging, bridging, and how to negotiate water obstacles.

The water obstacle training came in handy Tuesday morning when the Soldiers took on the Leaders Reaction Course on Main Post. But the water obstacle training the Soldiers received during basic did not save some of them from taking a dive into the freezing water.

Sgt. Joseph Terrell, has been a combat engineer for more than two years now, and much like Warner, thought he was going to be building things instead of blowing them up.

"My favorite part of my job is the camaraderie that there is in our unit," Terrell said. Which he saw a lot of Tuesday when the only equipment the Soldiers had to use to complete the obstacles were ropes, a couple of wooden boards, aluminum barrels and plenty of teamwork.

A 21B for more than 10 years, Warner has deployed with different combat engineer units five times — four times to Kuwait and once to Iraq.

"In theater, the mission of combat engineers varies depending upon mission requirements," said 1st Sgt. Roy Ward, E Company first sergeant. "For the most part, combat engineers will be conduct sustainment operations and support operations, route clearance operations, and IED reductions,"Ward said.

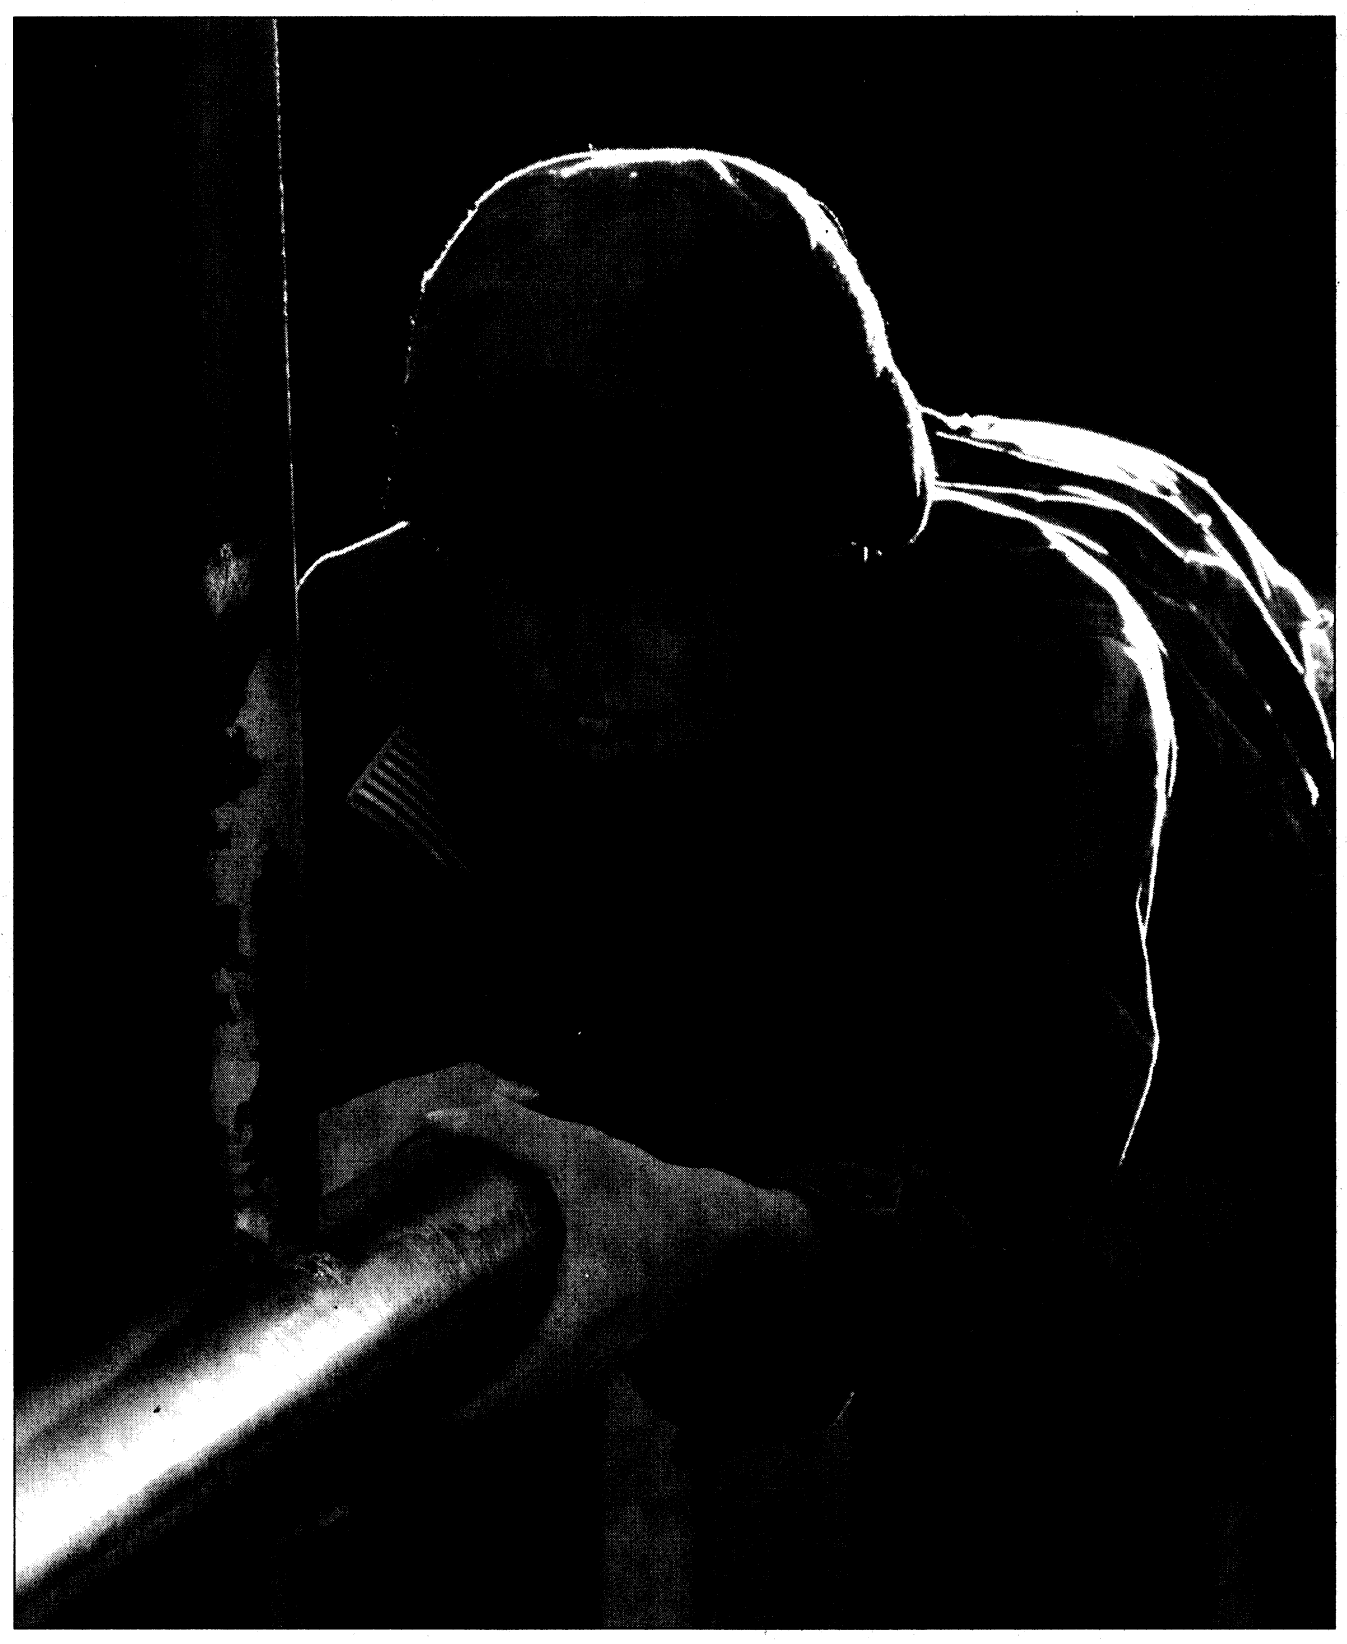
Thus the combat engineer motto came to be, "Advance and Overcome," for their fundamental role in providing mobility for advancing troops by overcoming all obstacles.

Before brigade combat teams came to be, Warner said combat engineers deployed as battalion-sized elements and were tasked to support other units. Now, each battalion has its own company of combat engineers.

"Instead of units waiting for us to get to them and clear the way, we have become part of their battalion so we are available when needed," Warner said. "We're going to be taking a bigger role as Infantrymen."

An engineer's role differs according to his unit. Since combat engineers have different techniques for accomplishing the mission, and the number of Soldiers is few, their tasks are split into five different categories.

There are field engineers, armored engineers, bridging engineers, plant engineers and explosive ordnance disposal engineers.



Field engineers clear obstacles in the paths of advancing troops to ensure mobility. They build obstacles in the paths of the enemy troops to counter their mobility and erect field fortifications to ensure the survivability of friendly forces.

Armored engineers work together to pave the way, removing all obstacles by means of heavy lifting and dozing protected by thick armor.

Bridging engineers provide the means to project combat troops and vehicles across rivers and water obstacles to engage the enemy. Their equipment includes float bridges, rafts and assault boats.

Plant engineers are the backbone of the engineers as they can turn any terrain into something that will result in their units' safety or advantage as well as help maintenance of Army supply routes.

Explosive ordnance disposal engineers are the experts in explosive handling and disposal. They remove explosive threats and clear unexploded munitions. The combat engineers of E Company will deploy for a year in January with the 3rd Brigade Combat Team.

What is your New Year's resolution? How about learning to save a life.

"Knowing how to properly provide CPR during an emergency is essential," said Michele Walton, Red Cross health and safety director. "You never know when the life you save will be that of a loved one."

Walton has been working with Red Cross since she was 15 years old and is a CPR instructor for the class offered by the Red Cross. In her lifetime, she has had to provide CPR for three different people.

"I was a lifeguard at a swimming pool when we noticed a little girl at the bottom of the pool," Walton recalled. "She had a seizure under water and by the time we pulled her out she was already gone. We conducted CPR until the paramedics came and took her to the emergency room. Today that little girl is playing for the Women's National Basketball Association Lakers."

The second time Walton had to administer CPR was at a football game, when a 4-year-old girl began choking on popcorn and no one else knew what to do. Walton ran up the bleachers and helped the little girl.

The last time Walton used her CPR training wasn't as successful. When a man suddenly dropped in a YMCA weight room, Walton tried to help but he had previous cardiac problems and died on the way to the hospital.

In those days, Walton had no children. Now, the mother of a 7 month-old, Megan, Walton sees that the importance of everyone knowing CPR, especially parents.

"Children are notorious for choking on things like formula or small pieces of food," Walton said. "Everyone should take a CPR class because they never know when they'll need it."

Would you be prepared to correctly administer CPR if you were faced with an emergency?

According to the Palmetto Health Web site, CPR performed promptly and properly with a rapid arrival of paramedical personnel can save the lives of 43 percent of cardiac arrest victims. About two-thirds of deaths from heart attacks occur before the victim reaches the hospital. Many of those deaths can be prevented if the victims get prompt help from someone trained in CPR.

Fort Benning Red Cross will offer CPR classes from Jan. 8 to Feb. 26 at a discounted price of $25. Normally the class costs $42. It consists of adult, child and infant CPR as well as basic first aid instruction.

Classes are Saturdays 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Red Cross office on post. Although there is no age limits, CPR students must be old enough to read and write.

For more information on the CPR course offered by the Red Cross or any other Red Cross program, call 545-5194.

CG spins holiday tales for Wilson kids

Annette Fournier
Bayonet staff

"If you can hear my silver bell ringing, then you must really believe in Santa," said Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley from a wooden rocking chair in front of a crowd of kindergartners.

Freakley was ringing a bell he claimed was from Santa's sleigh, imitating the boy in Chris Van Allsburg's award winning book, the Polar Express, which he read to three Kindergarten classes at Wilson Elementary School Dec. 13.

"The holidays are a great time to share a warm story like the Polar Express with kids," Freakley said. "My wife and I had five sons, and it was one of our favorite stories to read to the boys."

Freakley was not the only guest reader entertaining children at Wilson Elementary. Chief of Staff Col. Charles Cornwell, Peggy Cornwell, and USAIC Command Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin also read holiday stories to the kids. Freakley said that reading to and staying involved with children is very important.

"It's important to reinforce reading to kids," Freakley said. "If you can read, you can do anything. It's important that parents stay actively engaged in their child's education, and reading is a great way to teach kids to like learning."

Cocklin also emphasized the significance of reading to kids.

"Taking the time to read to kids lets them know that they're important and special people," Cocklin said. "I would encourage parents to make reading to their kids a daily practice. Parents need to keep in mind that children are aspiring to be adults, and kids will model their behavior after what they see adults do."

> "Taking the time to read to kids lets them know they're important and special people. I would encourage parents to make reading to their kids a daily practice."
> Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin
> USAIC Command Chaplain

Freakley said that he would like to encourage parents and community members of Fort Benning to get involved with the schools.

"We have such wonderful role models here in the black hats, the drill sergeants, the Ranger instructors and the Soldiers. By volunteering, they can demonstrate Army values, like emphasis on education and family."

Cocklin said volunteering in the schools is important and fulfilling.

"I find it rewarding and very energizing. It's a great break from the pressures and routines of the day."

Fort Benning has 34 units that volunteer with local schools, both on and off post, through the Partners in Education program, said school liaison officer, Dwayne Baldwin.

"Fort Benning has a strong volunteer base and we give a lot of time to our students. It goes back to our commitment to education, and that begins with top-down leadership."

To learn more about volunteering in Fort Benning schools, call Dwayne Baldwin at 545-6811.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Can my child's parent and I agree to reduce my monthly child support payments?

A: If a Soldier's income is reduced for some reason, such as loss of a part-time job or a decrease in rank, can the Soldier simply lower his monthly child support payments? Suppose the other parent agrees to the change, would it then be OK?

If the parties have not gone to court, and all they have between them is an agreement on the monthly amount of child support, then such an agreement can be changed if both parties agree.

To prevent disputes, child support agreements and any changes to the agreement should always be in writing.

If there is a court order for child support, the Soldier must pay the court-ordered amount until a court changes that amount.

Even if both parents agree on lowering the amount, a Soldier should not reduce his monthly child support payment unless the court has modified the court order.

Soldiers who reduce their child support payments below the court-ordered amount are in technical violation of the court order, and subject themselves not only to punishment under the UCMJ, but also wage garnishment and offset of their income tax refund.

While it can be time-consuming and expensive to go back to court, court orders can only be modified by a court.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Keep holiday decorations safe

Directorate of Public Works

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their residence in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation.

Family Housing

No decorations, lighted or unlighted, are allowed on roofs because the installation can be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

Decorations may be affixed to walls, the underside of eaves and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations, use the smallest possible fasteners like staples. Use only Underwriter's Laboratory electrical decorations.

Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Barracks

Exterior lighting is not permitted in the barracks. Inside do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Offices

Non-electric decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the installation.

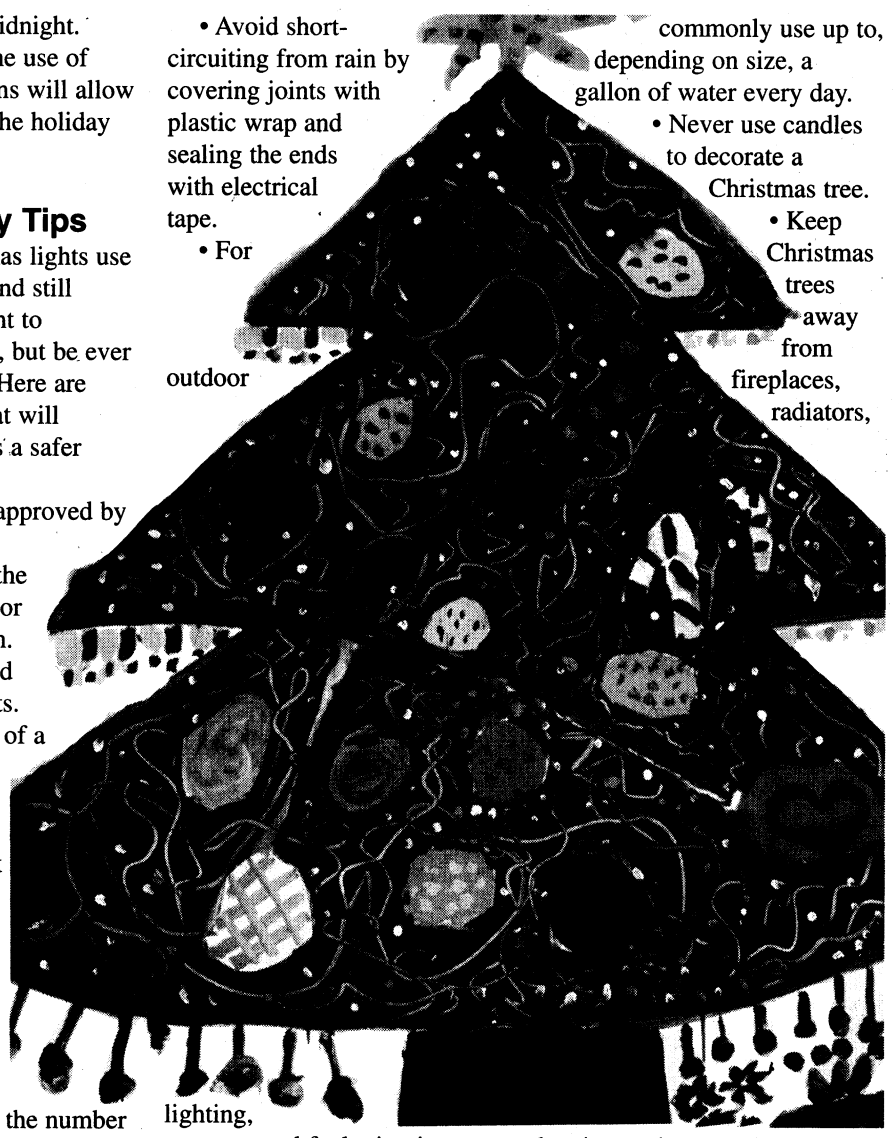
Given the ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important. Be judicious in family housing and barrack areas when using electrical decorations. Do not turn on outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight.

Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

Holiday Safety Tips

Today's Christmas lights use energy efficiently and still provide enough light to brighten the season, but be ever mindful of safety. Here are some safety tips that will hopefully make this a safer holiday period:

• Buy light sets approved by the Underwriters Laboratories. Use the right lights for indoor use, outdoor or both.



• Do not overload the electrical circuits. Maximum capacity of a 15 amp circuit is 1,800 watts and a 20 amp circuit is 2,400 watts. Check the breaker or fuse controlling the circuit to determine the amperage. To compute the holiday lighting load, multiply the number of bulbs by the number of watts per bulb. Be sure to include house lamps, appliances and other electrical equipment on the same circuit.

• Before decorating, check lights for frayed wires, damaged sockets or cracked insulation. If there are defects replace the entire set.

• Hot bulbs can ignite dry branches. Avoid fire by keeping natural trees well watered and keeping extension cords and light sets away from the water.

Light the tree when at home and awake to enjoy it. Always unplug the Christmas tree when not at home.

• Keep a fire extinguisher handy.

• Avoid short-circuiting from rain by covering joints with plastic wrap and sealing the ends with electrical tape.

• For outdoor lighting, use a ground fault circuit interrupter on each circuit. If current leaks through frayed or damaged wires, the interrupter shuts it off. Interrupters cost about $7 to $10.

• Don't use more than one extension cord per outlet, and never hide cords under carpets or rugs.

• Buy a tree that is fresh. If the needles are already falling off, the tree is too dry and it should not be purchased. Leave the tree outside until time to decorate. It is a good idea to trim at least a one-inch piece from the bottom of the tree. This increases the tree's ability to absorb water. Keep a live tree watered. Trees commonly use up to, depending on size, a gallon of water every day.

• Never use candles to decorate a Christmas tree.

• Keep Christmas trees away from fireplaces, radiators, heating registers and space heaters.

• Keep a working smoke detector in the room above the Christmas tree. Consider purchasing a "tree-detector." This is a smoke and heat detector that looks like a Christmas ornament that actually hangs in the tree.

• Remember holly, mistletoe and poinsettias are all poisonous plants to people and pets.

• Be careful of ornaments and decorations that include ribbons or garlands that can easily become snagged on a passing child. This alone could cause a full-sized tree to fall on a child.

A man warms his hands over a burning yule log.

Christmas lights up Westville

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

Girls in red caps topped with bells, and flickering candles and lanterns all contributed to the ambiance that surrounded the traditional burning of the yule log at the 1850s living history village of Westville.

Under a rustic wooden arbor, set deep in the woodline, three local reverends led a crowd of about fifty in a ceremony that reflected the romanticism of an age long gone.

My family and I were there to experience our first ever yule log ceremony and to step back in time to see how Christmas was celebrated 150 years ago.

The more than 30 authentically furnished pre-Civil War buildings were decorated in festive red bows, holly berries and fresh fir boughs.

A horse-drawn wagon wound its way through the dirt streets, giving tired visitors a way to rest their legs as they enjoyed the holiday atmosphere.

Throughout the month of December, Patty Cannington, public relations director for Westville, said there would be special activities each weekend.

At 2 p.m. Saturday there will be a tree-lighting ceremony at the Singer House. At 2 p.m. on Dec. 26 there will be the burning of the greens to close out the year.

There is only one tree set up in Westville each year. Early Christmas trees were a German tradition, so the only home to have a tree is the Singer home, built by Johann Singer of Germany.

The tree will be lit with homemade candles and will be gaily decorated with gingerbread men, popcorn strings, cranberries and yarn dolls. Authentically dressed interpreters will present the story of Santa Claus followed by the biblical Christmas story and The Night Before Christmas.

All visitors will be treated to homemade yule log cake and wassail.

In the potter's shop, Steven Hawkes talked to a handful of visitors as he meticulously formed the wet clay in his hands into a beautiful vase. Farther up the road, a group of costumed girl scouts were rehearsing Christmas carols for the yule log ceremony while a woman worked in her kitchen rolling out dough to make biscuits and group of volunteers hung fir boughs above a doorway.

Westville is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, except Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, and 1 to 5 p.m. Sundays.

General adult admission is $10; seniors, college students and military are $8; students are $4. Free tickets for all military are available at the Sand Hill Recreation Center. Westville is located 40 miles south of Fort Benning in Lumpkin, Ga.

For more information on Westville, call (888) SEE-1850.

REFLECTIONS

It is amazing how our ideas, impressions and even beliefs about Christmas are influenced by stories, music and art. Hallmark cards would have us believe that Bethlehem was a quiet, serene, underpopulated village the night Jesus was born. The carol writers formulate our views by giving such impressions as "All is calm, all is bright" the night Mary went into labor in "O little town of Bethlehem, how still we see thee lie!" Still, quiet, calm — Bethlehem was the exact opposite that night and the days following.

I feel certain that not a word was mentioned at the innkeeper's breakfast table the next morning about the young pregnant girl and the older man with her who had to be turned away. It was anything but quiet and calm.

People were tired and cranky and angry that the government had once more interfered in their lives with an inconvenience caused by an unnecessary census. It is doubtful that anyone mentioned the couple's arrival or wondered about the girl's condition. They were too busy.

There was too much to do to ever comprehend that the impossible had occurred — God had entered the world as a baby. At this point in history, the human being who best understands who God is and what he is doing, is a teenage girl in a smelly stable. She looks at him and remembers the words of the angel, "His kingdom will never end."

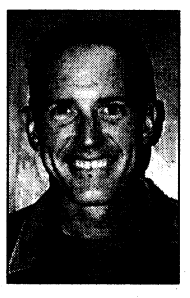
Cocklin

He does not look like a king, but he is majesty in the midst of the mundane, holiness in the filth of sheep manure and sweat, and divinity entering the world on the floor of a stable in front of kind, but bewildered shepherds.

Meanwhile, the village hums. The merchants are unaware that God has visited their planet. The innkeeper would never believe he had just turned God out into the cold.

And the people would be outraged if anyone told them that the Messiah lay in the arms of a teenager in a stable just outside of town. You see, they were all too busy to consider the possibility. Those who missed his majesty's arrival that night missed it not because of evil acts or malice; no, they missed it simply because they weren't looking.

Little has changed in the last 2,000 years, has it?



See Christmas through Mary's eyes

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Since block leave is right around the corner (I can hear the engines running in the barracks' parking lot already), I thought it might be worthwhile to write this week on "How to Have the Best Christmas Ever."

Whether you're traveling all the way to Bumfuzzle, Idaho, or sitting in your own living room this holiday season, everyone I know is interested in having a great Christmas.

Ever have one of those Christmases where you had big plans, but reality just didn't seem to pan out like you thought it would? You had hopes of something that looked like it was straight off a Norman Rockwell painting or a Currier and Ives postcard. And lo and behold, your Christmas wound up looking like something off a Simpson's rerun! Well, Christmas is loaded with expectations — ones that frequently just can't be delivered upon. But this Christmas, I'm going to ask you to join me in committing to the best Christmas ever. How can we do that? At our house we're going to do it by looking through a different set of eyes: the eyes of a woman, a man and a child.

Hawkins

Here I'm going to do it through the eyes of a woman. What better woman could we turn to than the young lady who was there at the start of it all? What lessons could we learn from Mary's first Christmas? If Mary were here right now, what might she tell you and me about how to have the best Christmas ever? Well, there are a lot of things she could say, and based on what we know of her story in the Bible in Luke 1:26-38, I think these might be three early Christmas presents of insight she'd give us:

• Be open to divine disasters. What appears to be disastrous may actually be divine. It just could be that things don't go exactly according to plan this Christmas. Guess what? They didn't for Mary, either. Being told by an angel that you're going to be pregnant before marriage in a culture where she could have been killed for that was not exactly her idea, initially, of Good News. But, it wound up being the greatest blessing of her life. You never know — what appears to be a disaster may actually be something divine coming your way.

• God's working a plan ... You're part of it, but it's bigger than you. Mary was amazed that God would use her to bring to the world someone so incredibly special. She began to realize over time that God was "working a plan." And she was privileged to be a part of it — but she wasn't all of it — it was much larger than she. Keep that in mind this holiday.

• Testing + Trusting = Blessing. Faithfulness gets rewarded!

God blessed Mary because she said, "OK, I don't quite understand all this, but I'll trust you, God." It works the same in our life. If you're looking to have the best Christmas ever, then be open to some "testing" over the holidays, turn to God with some "trusting," and then enjoy the "blessings."

Need some personal coaching on turning the "holidaze" into the "holidays?" Come see me at the Chaplain Family Life Center in Soldier's Plaza or at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill or call 545-1760.

Class VI number one

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

The number one Road Dawgs fell to number two Class VI in the winner takes all flag football championships.

The unbeaten Road Dawgs of the 104th Transportation Company experienced defeat at the hands of the Class VI medics from the 14th Combat Support Hospital Dec. 10 at Doughboy Stadium.

The Road Dawgs started paving their way to the top when the first ball was snapped. Melvin McCollum ran the ball down the sideline to put the Dawgs within scoring range. Quarterback Darrin Simmons threw to Markus Williams who made his way into the end zone and on the scoreboard. A failed conversion left the score at 6-0 Road Dawgs.

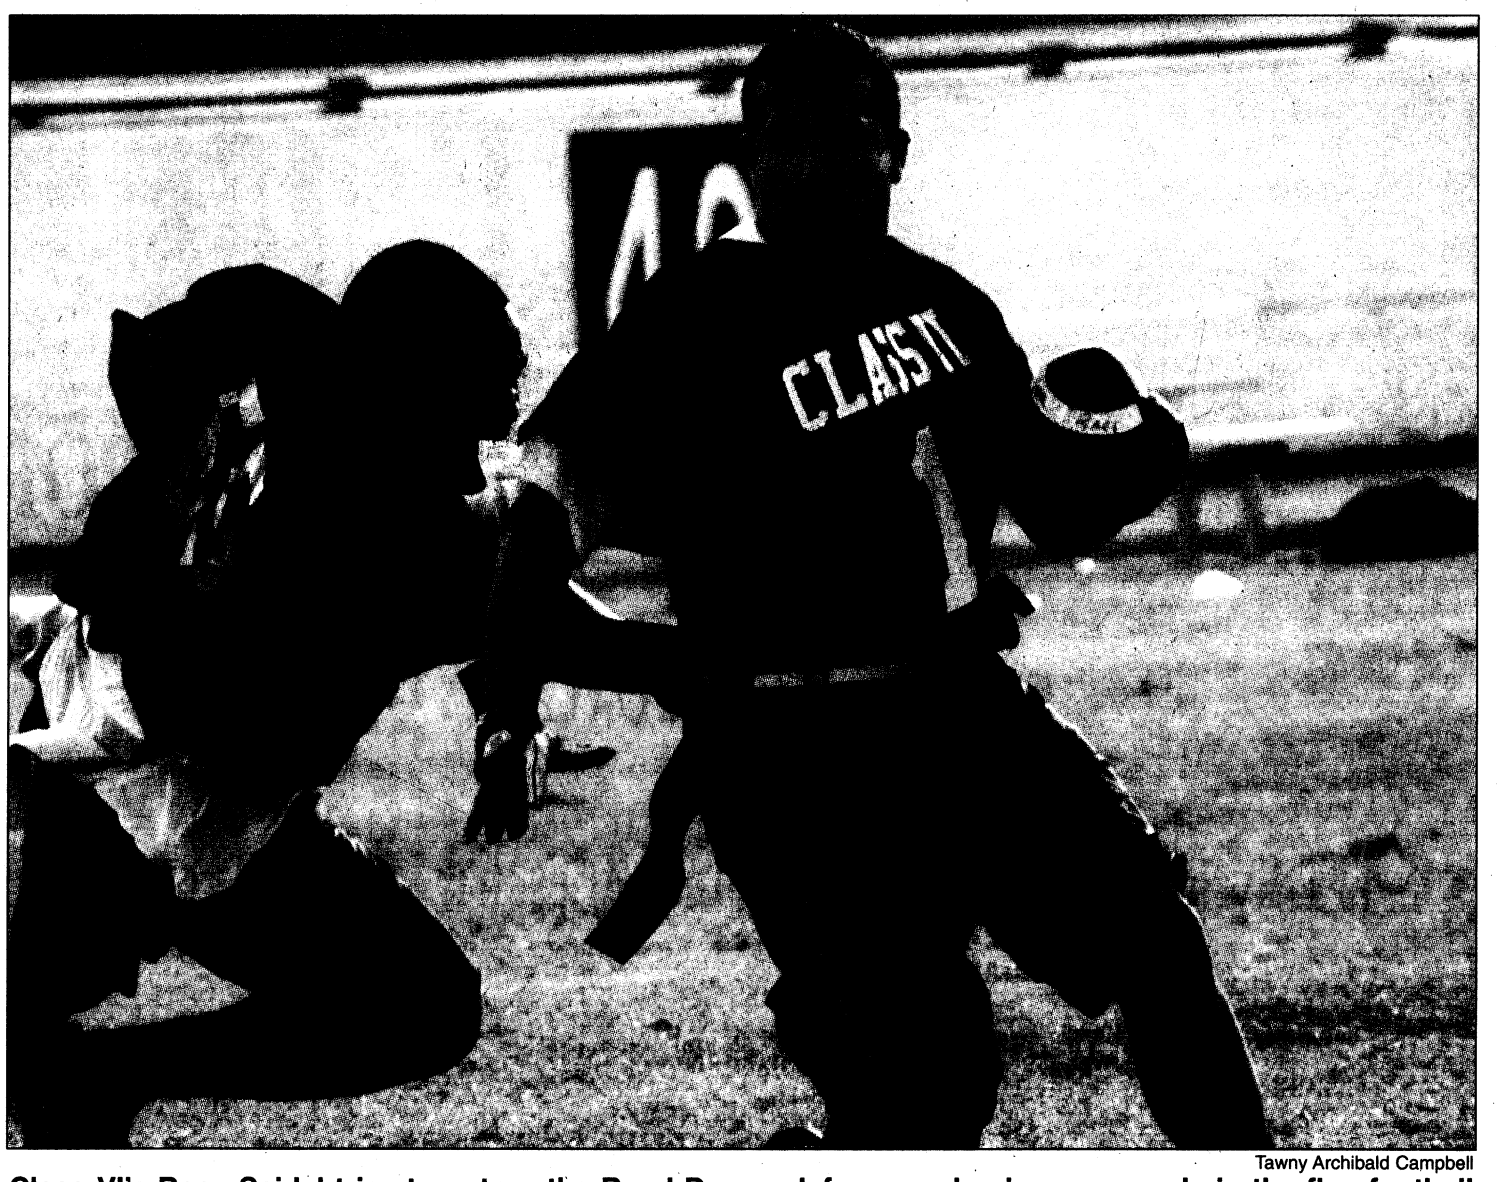
Class VI pushed down field with a combination of passes and runs. A quarterback keeper by Ross Seidel moved the ball 10 yards up the center for a first down, but a sack and a few incomplete passes resulted in a turnover and Dawg control.

Williams had an eight-yard run with two minutes left in the half, but several penalties resulted in time running out.

The first half ended with only the Road Dawgs lighting up the scoreboard.

Three minutes into the second half Seidel threw a 20-yard bomb to Dewy Williams which resulted in a touchdown for Class VI. The failed conversion tied the game.

The Dawgs were stopped cold by a tough defense and were unable to gain any yardage on the next possession.



An unsportsmanlike call on the Dawgs moved Class VI 10 yards closer to their goal and then a 10-yard run by Seidel put them within scoring distance.

With the ball on the five-yard line, Seidel ran a quarterback keeper and put Class VI in the lead. Seidel then threw a pass to Thomas Tucker for the one point conversion. The score was 13-6 Class VI with nine minutes, 32 seconds left.

Tony Abraham sacked the Dawgs quarterback,,resulting in a six-yard loss which forced the Road Dawgs to punt the ball.

With just over five minutes left in the game Class VI decided to let the clock run out, and they grabbed the flag football championship title.

"We stopped the first two drives and got the ball and moved down the field for a quick touchdown," said Antonio Miller, Road Dawgs coach. "The defense held up through the half, and after that we made some silly plays and gave up some interceptions. We just didn't click, and they ran away with (the game)."

Tawny Archibald Campbell

Class VI's Ross Seidel tries to outrun the Road Dawgs defense and gain some yards in the flag football championship Dec. 10 at Doughboy Stadium. Class VI went on to take home the trophy.

Miller said Class VI's defense wasn't the best they have seen all year, but his team seemed to lose heart.

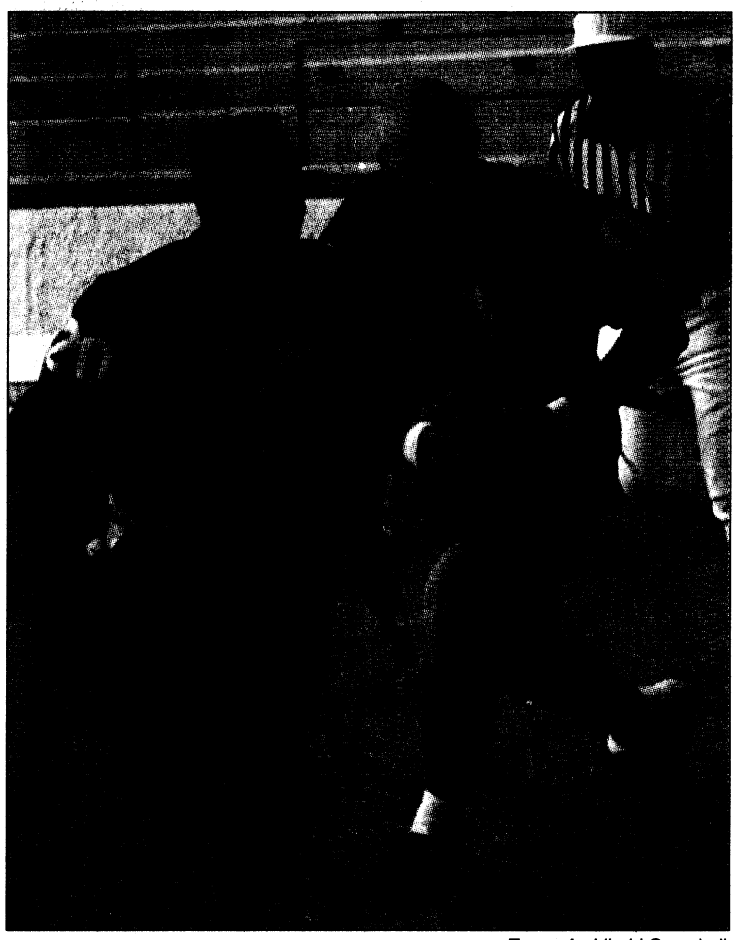
"They gave up too soon and got down," Miller said. "We had a flawless season and then to lose on the last game … They capitalized on our mistakes."

Seidel said the wind was a deciding factor.

"We were against it in the first half and with it in the second," he said. "We had a good defense and defense wins games."

The turning point in the game, Seidel said, was in the second half when he captured an interception and two plays later scored a touchdown.

"From that moment, I knew we would win," Seidel said.



Anthony Clark, Class VI coach, agreed with Seidel, saying the energy of his team picked up after that play.

"We started off sluggish in the first half and had to regroup for the second," Clark said. "We executed better on offense, got up 13-6 and never looked back."

The one word Clark would use to describe this season is perseverance.

"We went through some adversity and lost an early game, but it made us stronger," Clark said. "Even though we had tough games, instead of putting each other down we picked each other up. It was a great season."

The 14th CHS, formerly the 14th Field Hospital, won the championship title last year also.

The Bravo Bulldog's Larance Washington blocks for Brian Turner during the flag football third place game at Doughboy Stadium Dec 10.

Bulldogs beat Finance

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

With a third place trophy on the line, the Bravo Bulldogs chewed their way though the Finance defense to take a commanding lead and walk away with all the change.

The Bulldogs of the Bravo Company 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, beat the Defensive Military Pay Office (Finance) 20-6 in the flag football playoffs Dec. 10 at Doughboy Stadium.

The game started off with a punt and an interception in the first two minutes of the game.

A short-handed Finance team was sent reeling when Bulldog Richard Clifton intercepted the ball which resulted in 26-yard pass from quarterback Brian Turner to Wayne Rice. With the ball on the Bulldogs one-yard line, Finance turned up the heat, and the defense. Not wanting to be scored on so soon, Finance forced the Bulldogs to a fourth and goal.

Turner dished the pigskin off to Larance Washington who ran around the side of the line for a touchdown. With a successful one-point conversion, the Bulldogs were up 7-0 eight minutes into the first half.

Finance tried their hand at passing, in a successful effort to pass the Bulldog defense.

Demetrius Crittenden caught a pass from LaNorris Crumby which resulted in a 10-yard gain. That was immediately followed three plays later by another Crumby to Crittenden pass for 25 more yards and a touchdown.

"The biggest drive was the 25-yard pass and an 18-yard pass from Crumby to Crittenden," said Finance coach, Joey Wilcoxson. "They passed well, but we have a team that has been roughed up a bit and not everyone was here. Three to four guys were out hurt."

The battle-worn Finance team seemed to run out of steam after the half, and the scoreboard showed it.

Once the Bulldogs gained control of the field, Turner took over. A quarterback keeper put the Bulldogs on their own 20-yard line. An incomplete pass from Turner to Rice was quickly forgotten when Turner sent a long bomb down field into the arms of Manfred Malone, who landed in the end zone to put the Bulldogs up 13-6.

Richard Clifton intercepted a Finance pass and ran up field eight yards. With a flag pulled on the three-yard line, it was just a waiting game.

Finance managed to deflect two passes and got control of the game once again, but threw an interception, caught by Malone.

With the game once again in Bulldog hands, Turner handed the ball off to Washington who made an easy dash to the end zone. With a successful one-point conversion, the Bulldogs sealed Finance's fate with the 20-6 victory.

"The first half we started to run the ball, and then threw a few key passes caught by Rice," said Ruben Garza, Bulldog coach.

"They scored, but we came out in the second half and had a few good passes and runs from Washington, the best halfback out here."

Another key to the win, Garza said, was the interceptions made by Clifton and Williams.

"We all played a good game, "Wilcoxson said. Finance was just glad to have been in the final four. "Overall we just came out to have fun on this last day of football," he said. "Unfortunately we lost; but we had a fun season."

Opening today

Lemony Snicket's A Series of Unfortunate Events — This is the story of the Baudelaires, three young orphans, Violet (Emily Browning), Klaus (Liam Aiken) and Sunny. They're looking for a new home, and are taken in by a series of odd relatives and other people, including Lemony Snicket, who narrates the film. Count Olaf (Jim Carrey), hopes to snatch their inheritance from them.

Violet is the oldest of the Baudelaires at 14, and is their brave and fast-thinking leader. The only boy is middle child Klaus, 12, who is intensely intelligent and obsessed with words. The youngest is infant Sunny, who speaks in a language only her siblings can understand and she has a tendency to ... bite.

Lemony Snicket's A Series of Unfortunate Events is rated PG for thematic elements, scary situations and language.

Spanglish — Cultures collide when Flor (Paz Vega), a beautiful Mexican woman, and her 12-year-old daughter move in with an affluent Los Angeles family (Adam Sandler, Tea Leoni and Cloris Leachman).

Of all the horrors Flor imagined about this new culture, she never fathomed the peril of being truly embraced by an upscale American family.

Spanglish is rated PG-13 for sexual content and language.

Flight of the Phoenix — When a C-119 cargo plane full of oil workers crashes in Mongolia's Gobi Desert during a sandstorm, the survivors attempt to build a new plane from the parts they find in the wreckage to escape.

The plane was piloted by Capt. Frank Towns, an employee of oil company Geodel, whose job it is to go to remote oil rigs and shut them down when their productivity has decreased.

Having accomplished his job with one such rig, his plane crashes with all of the employees aboard on the way back to Beijing.

The movie stars Dennis Quaid, Giovanni Ribisi, Miranda Otto and Hugh Laurie.

Flight of the Phoenix is rated PG-13 for language, action and violence.

Opening Wednesday

Meet the Fockers — Having given permission to male nurse Greg Focker (Ben Stiller) to wed his daughter (Teri Polo), ex-CIA man Jack Byrnes (Robert De Niro) and his wife (Blythe Danner) travel to Detroit to "meet the parents," who this time around are Mr. and Mrs. Focker (Dustin Hoffman and Barbra Streisand), who are as different from them as can be.

Meet the Fockers is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, language and a brief drug reference.

Opening Christmas Day

The Aviator — Directed by Martin Scorsese and written by John Logan, The Aviator tells the story of aviation pioneer Howard Hughes (Leonardo DiCaprio), the eccentric billionaire industrialist and Hollywood film mogul, famous for romancing some of the world's most beautiful women.

The drama recounts the years of his life from the late 1920s through the 1940s, an epoch when Hughes was directing and producing Hollywood movies and test flying innovative aircraft he designed and created.

Also starring Alan Alda, Alec Baldwin, Kate Beckinsale and Cate Blanchett.

The Aviator is rated PG-13 for thematic elements, sexual content, nudity, language and a crash sequence.

Darkness — A teenage girl (Anna Paquin) moves into a remote countryside house with her family, only to discover that their gloomy new home has a horrifying past that threatens to destroy the family.

Darkness is rated R for terror, violence and language.

Fat Albert — Bill Cosby's character, "Fat Albert," comes to the big screen as a live-action, animated feature film.

The movie is based on Cosby's stand-up comedy monologues about his childhood, centered around a group of urban adolescents growing up in a Philadelphia neighborhood.

Fat Albert is rated PG for language.

In Good Company — Dan Foreman (Dennis Quaid) is headed for a shakeup. He is demoted from head of ad sales for a major magazine when the company he works for is acquired in a corporate takeover.

His new boss, Carter Duryea (Topher Grace) is half his age — a business school prodigy who preaches corporate synergy. While Dan develops clients through handshake details and relationships, Carter cross-promotes the magazine with a cell phone division and "Krispity Krunch," an indeterminate snack food under the same corporate umbrella.

Dan and Carter's uneasy friendship is thrown into jeopardy when Carter falls for, and begins an affair with, Dan's 18-year-old daughter Alex (Scarlett Johansson).

In Good Company is rated PG-13 for sexual content and drug references.

The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou — Internationally famous oceanographer Steve Zissou (Bill Murray) and his crew — Team Zissou — set sail on a expedition to hunt down the mysterious, elusive, possibly nonexistent Jaguar shark that killed Zissou's partner during the documentary filming of their latest adventure.

They are joined on their voyage by a young airline co-pilot who may or may not be Zissou's son (Owen Wilson), a beautiful journalist (Cate Blanchett) assigned to write a profile of Zissou and Zissou's estranged wife and co-producer, Eleanor (Anjelica Huston). They face overwhelming complications including pirates, kidnapping and bankruptcy.

The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou is rated R for language, drug use, violence and partial nudity.

Also playing

Ocean's Twelve — Danny Ocean's (George Clooney), reignited flame Tess (Julia Roberts) and the rest of the band of thieves and con men team up for another three huge heists.

Ocean's Twelve is rated PG-13 for language.
