THINGS TO DO

Movies Under the Stars
Saturday

Knology of Columbus, sponsor of Movies Under the Stars, will present Spider-man 2 Saturday.

The movie will be projected onto a 45-foot by 45-foot movie screen at the Columbus Public Library.

The movie will start at dusk. Bring a chair or a blanket.

The library is located at 3000 Macon Road.

Canoe clinic
Saturday

F.D. Roosevelt State Park will offer a canoe clinic from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

This clinic is designed as an introductory experience for the novice canoer. Participants should bring plenty of water, a sack lunch and sunscreen. Appropriate clothing and footwear should be worn — you will get wet.

Children must be at least 10 years old and an adult must accompany those 16 years old and younger.

The clinic costs $25 with includes the rental of canoes, paddles and life jackets. A $3 park pass is required on all vehicles.

To register, call 663-4858.

Bebo Norman
Saturday

Bebo Norman will perform at the RiverCenter's Bill Heard Theatre at 7:30 p.m. Saturday.

Tickets are $18. To purchase tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or visit the RiverCenter box office from noon to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Discounts are available for groups, students and military at the RiverCenter box office.

Family Art Affair
Sunday

Kids of all ages are invited to the Columbus Museum at 3 p.m. Sunday to explore the King Bridge Biennial exhibition in the gallery and create a sculptural bridge using recycled materials.

Children must be accompanied by an adult. The event is free.

For more information, call the Columbus Museum at 649-0713.

An Evening with George Guidall
Tuesday

George Guidall, the premier narrator for recorded books, will share some favorite stories from the more than 140 audio books he has narrated.

Join the Columbus Public Library at 7 p.m. Tuesday to meet and listen to this remarkable man. Information on audiobooks will also be available.

For more information, call Patty Chamberlain at 243-2697.

Walk of Flags and Stones Tour
Wednesday

Take a guided tour at the Little White House Historic Site of this walkway lined with 51 state flags and stones.

Many diverse colors and formation make up these stones, making this an educational tour for those interested in geology as well as history.

Tickets are $4-$7.

The Little White House Historic Site is located at 401 Little White Road, one-quarter mile south of Warm Springs, Ga. on Hwy. 85 Alt-U.S. Hwy. 27 Alt.

For more information, call 655-5870.

Aug. 25, 29

Columbus State University's Schwob School of Music will present a faculty recital by vocalist Earl Coleman at 7:30 p.m. Thursday and guitarist Andrew Zohn at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 29. Both recitals will be in the RiverCenter's Legacy Hall.

For ticket information, call (888) 332-5200.

Radical Reptiles
Aug. 27

From scales to shells and jaws to claws, participants will learn what makes a reptile a reptile and which ones you are likely to encounter in your neighborhood.

The event will be at 7 p.m. Aug. 27 at FDR State Park.

For more information, call 663-4858.

Labor Day weekend celebration
Sept. 2-4

Florence Marina State Park invites the public to the annual Labor Day weekend celebration Sept. 2-4.

There will be boat rides down the Chattahoochee River in the park's pontoon boat. Due to high fuel costs, a $1 donation is requested for boat rides, but crafts and games are free.

The park's pool will be open, so bring a picnic and spend the day.

Visitors are reminded that a $3 park fee will be required for each vehicle.

Florence Marina State Park is located 16 miles west of Lumpkin, Ga. on Hwy. 39C.

For more information, call Trena Evans, interpretative ranger, at (229) 838-4706.

Labor Day Fiddlers Contest
Sept. 5

Westville's Fiddlers Contest offers the perfect 1850s setting for musicians and music lovers to show off their talents or to sit back and enjoy listening to skilled performers compete.

The youth fiddling begins at 11 a.m., and adult fiddling begins at 2 p.m.

Westville is located one mile south of Lumpkin, Ga.

Admission is $10 for adults, $8 for seniors, college students and military, $4 for students in kindergarten through 12th grade and $35 for a family membership.

For more information, call (888) 733-1850.

Callaway Kids Workshop
Sept. 10

Join Callaway Gardens Education Department and learn how to make your own trough garden filled with all the herbs you need to make a tasty pizza. Kids will discover the herbs used in our everyday meals and be sent home with all the ingredients to make their own pizza herb trough.

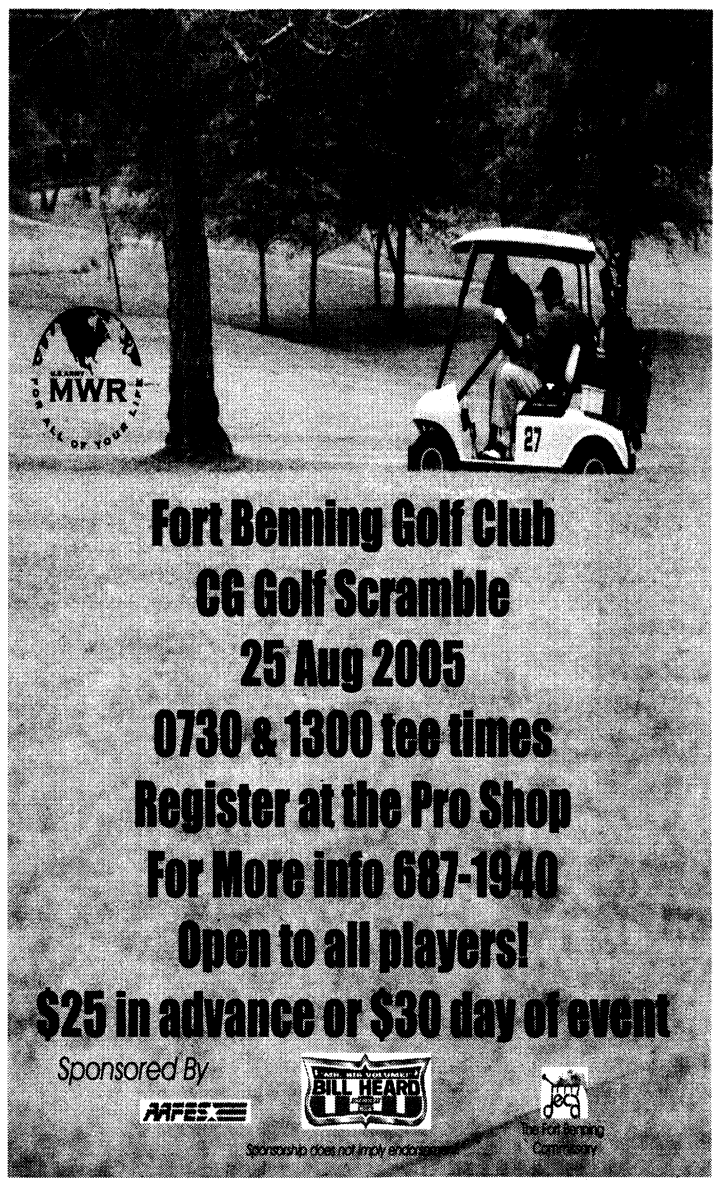
The workshop, Make An Italian Herb Garden Trough, is open to children ages 7 to 18.

The workshop is from 9:30 a.m. to noon Sept. 10. The fee is $13.

Parents or adults are welcome, but the activity is only for children.

Callaway Gardens is in Pine Mountain, Ga., about 30 minutes north of Columbus.

Enrollment is limited and preregistration is required. To register, call the Education Department at (800) 225-5292 ext. 5153, 663-5153 or e-mail education@callawaygardens.com.



Al Jarreau
Sept. 17

Little Blessings Nurturing Center and Star Productions proudly present an evening with jazz legend Al Jarreau at 8 p.m. Sept. 17 at the RiverCenter.

From his musical beginnings, singing in a church choir, Jarreau has built an amazing career, entertaining audiences around the world.

Jarreau's hits include All Fly Home and Breakin' Away (We're in This Love Together).

Tickets are on sale now and are $40-$55. To purchase tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or at the RiverCenter box office from noon to 5 p.m. weekdays.

Bench notes

Erin Nash

• Tony Tony Tony has done it again

Tony Stewart retained the points lead and won the Sirius Satellite Radio at the Glen NASCAR race Aug. 14.

Tony has won the last five of seven races. Looks like he's on to a stellar end-of-season before the race begins.

• Double ouch!

Mets' players Mike Cameron and Carlos Beltran collided while both diving for a ball last week.

Cameron recently underwent successful surgery on two broken cheekbones and a broken nose.

• PGA Championship results

Phil Mickelson swung to his second major title Aug. 15 at Baltusrol Golf Club in Springfield, N.J. Play was cut short Aug. 14 because of rain.

Lefty retained his lead and shot a 4-under. Way to go Phil!

• T.O. in a huff

Looks like Philadelphia Eagles' Terrell Owens' mouth got him into trouble again Aug. 10.

Coach Andy Reid and T.O. had a "difference of opinion" and T.O. was asked to leave training camp for a week.

• Preseason football

The NFL regular season doesn't start until Sept. 8, but you can catch preseason football if you're jonesing like me. Tonight the N.Y. Jets take on the Minnesota Vikings at 8 p.m. on CBS and Dallas at Seattle at 8 p.m. Monday on ABC.

• This week's race

Can Tony make it six out of eight this weekend at Michigan International Speedway? Coverage of the GFS Marketplace 400 begins at 1:30 p.m. on TNT.

World-class archers from all over the country zero in on their targets during the opening day of a four-day shooting extravaganza.

Archers descend on Uchee Creek

Made with some of the most high-tech materials and precision parts available today, competition compound bows weigh just a few pounds and can cost thousands of dollars.

Soldiers win first ever Fort Benning Cup

About 1,300 archers descended upon Uchee Creek Campground Activity Center Aug. 11-14 for four days of world-class competition.

Hosted by the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation and sponsored by the Archery Shooters Association, archers came from all over the country to compete in the events.

Teams and individuals competed to be the first winners of the Fort Benning Cup.

The Fort Benning Cup kickoff competition Aug. 11 has been designated to become an annual event.

"More than two hundred and eighty competitors are running around out here today," said Mike Tyrell, president of the Archery Shooters Association.

Archers rotated between 20 different locations, shooting at life-sized animal targets made of self-healing foam marked with scoring rings.

Sgt. 1st Class Joe Dickson, chief instructor for D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, won the individual Fort Benning Cup.

Consisting of four amateurs and one Archery Shooter Association professional, the 63rd Engineer Company won the unit team Fort Benning Cup.

Several more competitions were held for archers of all ages and levels of expertise over the following three days.

This is the second year the ASA has sponsored a major archery event at Uchee Creek.

"One of the state directors of our (archery) federation said Uchee Creek had a really nice

Charlie Rock sneaks past WHINSEC

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

The score was tied going into the seventh inning when Charlie Rock managed to send three runners across home plate, and then keep WHINSEC scoreless, to win 8-5 in intramural softball Monday.

Charlie Rock, from C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, started the first inning at bat.

With the bases loaded, Tom Duszynski hit the ball past the first baseman into right field, sending two runners home before ending the inning.

When WHINSEC took to the plate, Carlos Matamoras had a three-base hit with two RBIs to tie the game at 2-2.

Carlos Martinez had another RBI to put his team in the lead by the end of the first inning.

Neither team scored in the second inning, but Charlie Rock managed to send two runners home during the top of the third to grab a narrow lead when Antron Meyers had a two-run, in-park home run.

"We went up in the first inning, but then it was all defensive play for both teams," said Carlos Martinez, WHINSEC. "Both teams had good defense with good throws and positioning."

The lead didn't last long as WHINSEC took their turn at bat and Jeffery Feliciano answered with an in-park home run to tie the score back up, 4-4.

Charlie Rock pulled back ahead in the top of the fourth when Duszynski circled the bases on the third in-park home run of the night.

WHINSEC was scoreless in the fourth inning and Charlie Rock was scoreless in the fifth.

"The game started out slow, both ways," said Jose Torres, Charlie Rock. "We both made good plays. Then half way through the game we had some good runs and got the singles."

WHINSEC managed to even things back up in the bottom of the fifth inning when Matamoras had a three base hit resulting in an RBI.

"They were up five to four, so we felt the pressure to catch up," Martinez said.

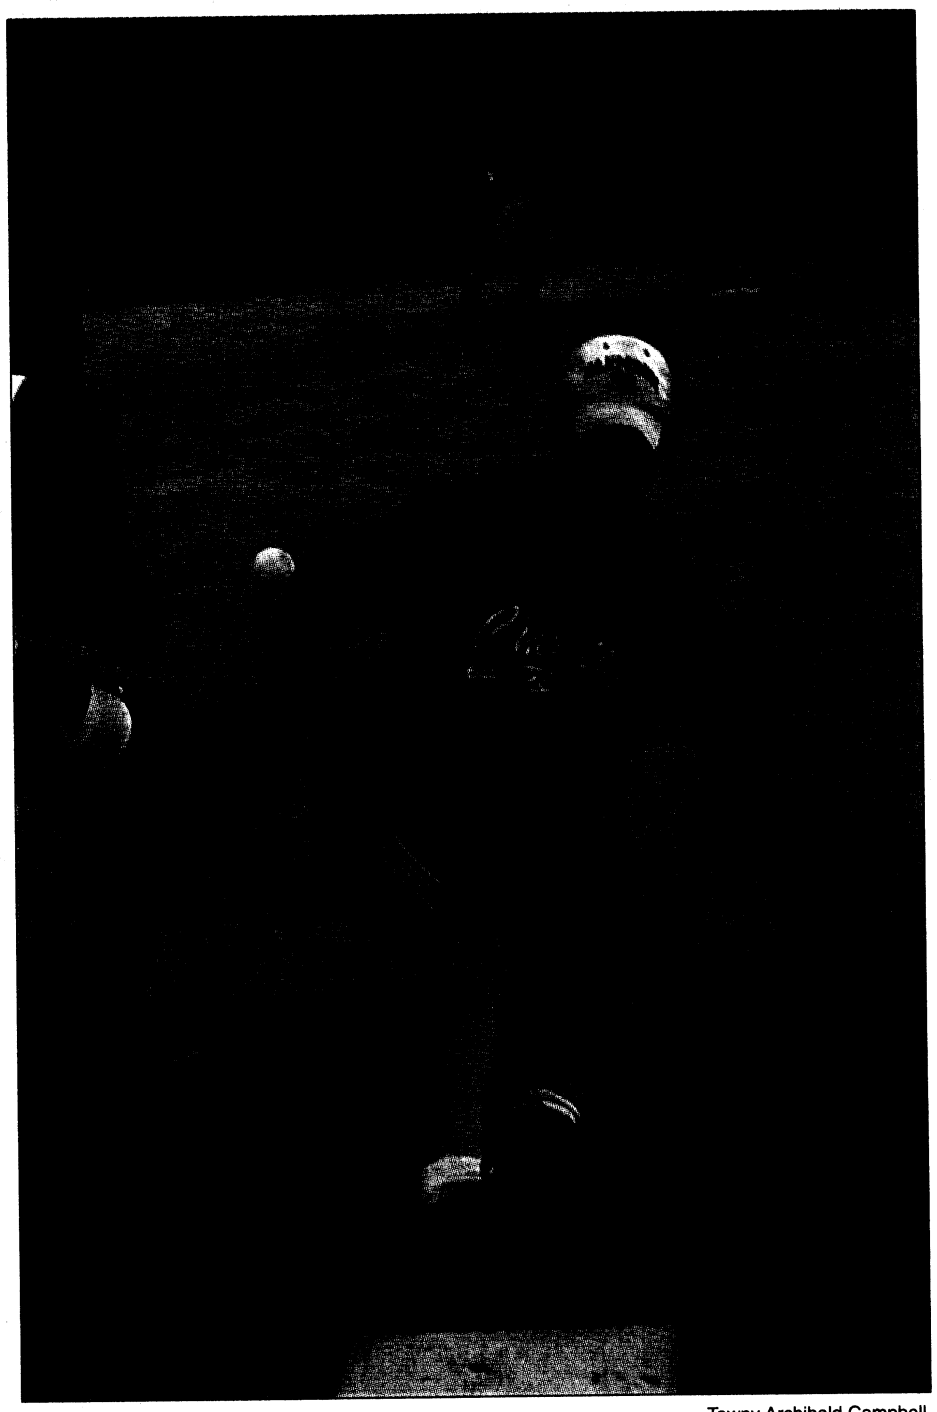
"We scored a run that tied things up. Then the sixth (inning) was another defensive inning with no score."

With the game tied at 5-5, both teams poured on the defense and the sixth inning was scoreless.

Charlie Rock was first to bat in the seventh inning and determined to clinch the win,

Bernard Smith sent in Roy Tremble on a sacrifice fly to grab a 6-5 lead. Jose Torres then sent Tom Smith home, followed by an RBI by Meyers to increase the lead to 8-5.

WHINSEC had one more chance to get in the game, but didn't send in any more runs. The game ended with Charlie Rock winning, 8-5.



"We came to bat with runners in scoring position and we couldn't get the base hits to bring the runs home," Martinez said.

"Both teams played real well. Softball is won by base hits, not home runs. We just left too many players on base."

Torres said at the beginning of the game his team had the same problem.

"In the first three innings we couldn't hit and everyone was going for the long balls instead of the base hits," said Torres.

"We weren't smart in our base hits at the beginning of the game, but all around it was a pretty even game."

Archers: World class facility at Fort Benning

Donna Hyatt

Although the focus was on competition shooting, many vendors offered specialty items for bow hunters. The sport is dominated by men, but the industry has started gearing itself to women shooters, said Fort Benning Cup individual winner Joe Dickson.

facility," Tyrell said.

"We didn't find anything in Columbus that we could really use for the competitions, so we started talking with the military. The facility was fantastic," he said.

Cliff Hughes, Uchee Creek recreation program manager, said the current range was created last year in order to host world-class archery competitions, The new facility replaced a range originally located near the Ranger Training Brigade.

Despite the high heat and humidity, archers were well cared for. "We've got water points set up all through the woods so that everybody stays hydrated and we don't have any heat injuries," said Jim Ozley, Infantry branch safety officer.

"Safety is not the absence of danger but the presence of professional training," he said.

Amateur and professional archers praised the facilities at Uchee Creek and expressed interest in the hunting and the MWR camping facilities. "We have great turkey, great deer and great pig," Dickson said. "Fort Benning is a great place for hunting."

Another archery range is expected to open in September, Hughes said. The new range will be more family-friendly and offer rental archery equipment.

According to Robin Haynie, ASA operations director, the compound bows used in competitions can cost from $500 to $5,000. More information about professional archery can be found at www.asaarchery.com.

Cruise-a-matic player hopes to make All-Army

Pashley gives up football for rugby

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet staff

During his sophomore year of high school, Matt Pashley decided to make a change. Instead of playing football, he wanted to give rugby a try — much to the surprise of his father.

"My dad didn't talk to me for two weeks after I told him I quit football," said Pashley, a specialist with the 598th Maintenance Company, currently on detail working as a lifeguard at Carey Pool.

"He asked what I was going to do then, and I said I would play rugby. (My parents) didn't know anything about the sport," he said.

Starting a different sport does have its perks, Pashley said. His dad is very vocal and shouts lots of "encouragement" from the sidelines, but once he started to play rugby that changed.

"It was kind of nice to have my parents come to games (and I would) not get yelled at from the sidelines," Pashley said. "(Dad) didn't know what was going on."

> "My dad didn't talk to me for two weeks after I told him I quit football. he asked what I was going to do then, and I said I would play rugby."

> Cruise-a-matic player

Pashley said one of his biggest supporters was his grandpa, who came to games all the time. He also found there was someone else in his family familiar with rugby. His Australian uncle played and coached rugby.

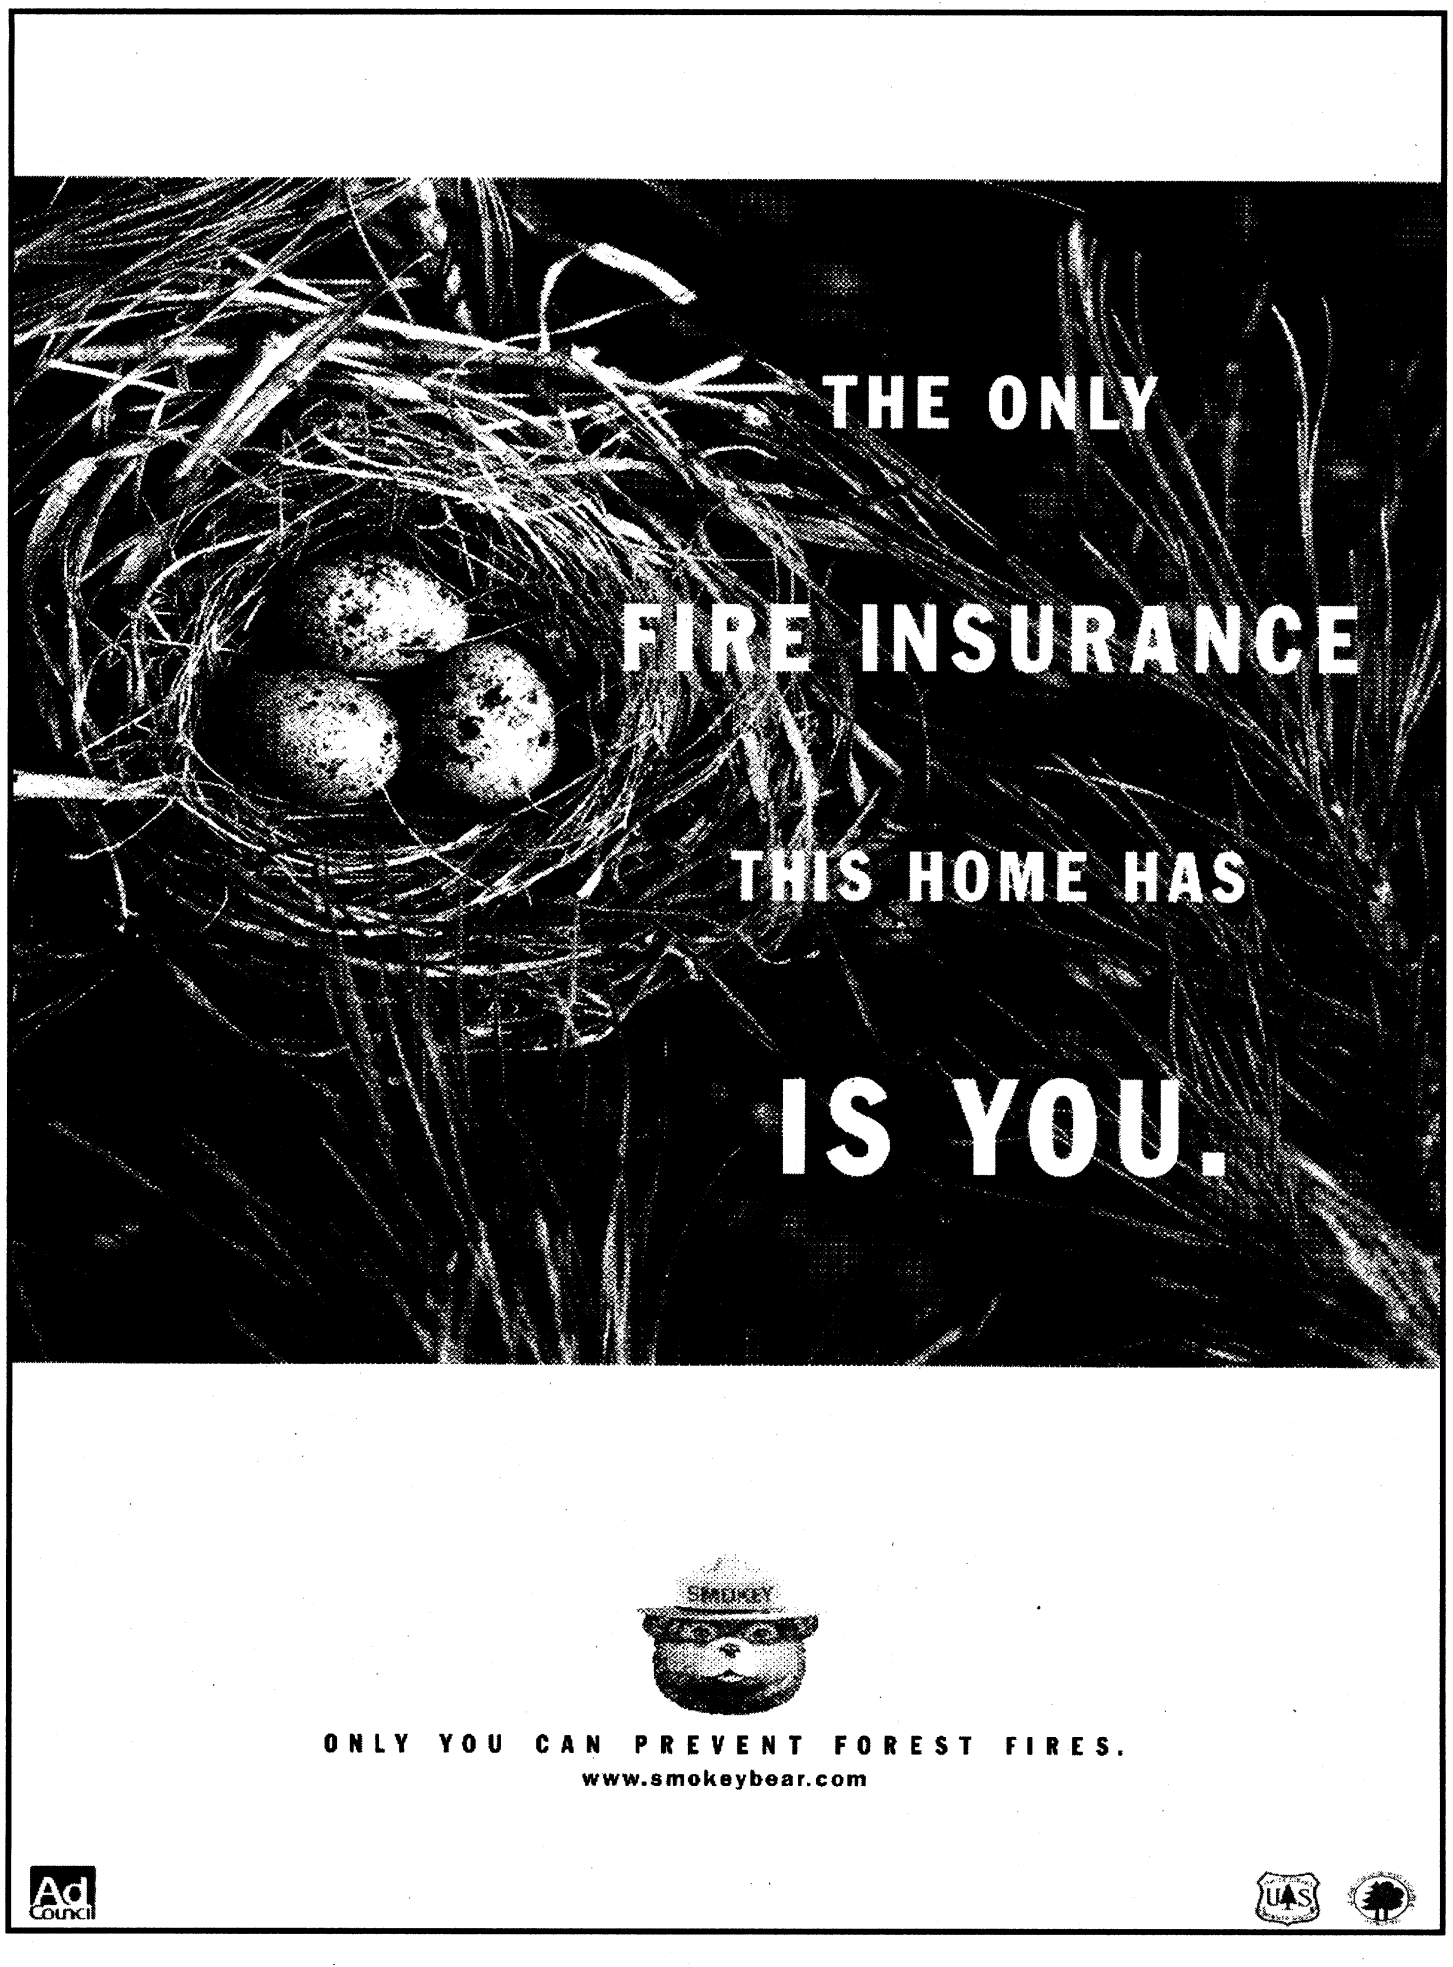
"He helped me to learn about the game," Pashley said. "He taught me a lot of strategies."

After playing club ball for three years in his hometown of Langhorne, Penn., Pashley joined the military.

His first duty station was in Germany, but he couldn't find a local rugby team so he wasn't able to play much until he was assigned to Fort Benning.

While waiting at replacement he found a copy of The Bayonet that had a sports feature on the Cruise-a-matics.

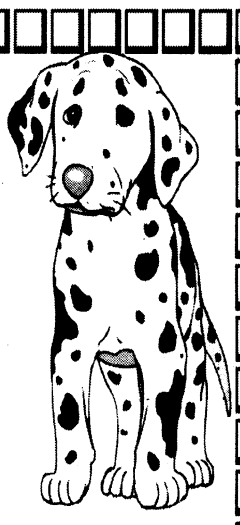
"That's how I learned about the rugby team here," Pashley said. "I've been playing with them since April." Pashley's next step is to be accepted to the All-Army rugby camp.



He turned in his application a month ago.

"Now I wait to get accepted," Pashley said. "If I do, I will go to the training camp at Fort Lewis, Washington in October."

During the two week camp, the top 30 rugby players in the Army will be chosen to play for the All-Army rugby team.



They will compete in November against other military teams. To prepare for the camp, Pashley swims, lifts weights, runs and practices with the Cruise-a-matics.

"Rugby's a crazy sport, and I love the fact there are so many strategies and you are always learning," Pashley said.

CARLTON or SHIRLEY BRUTON

Dear MR. Wood,
A Couple of Weeks ago We Came To your Place of business With What We Thought Was a TRANSMISSION Problem. We were expecting To maybe even have To have you so into The TRANSMISSION AT AN expensive repair bill. When you drove The Car + Told us it was a Fuse We were so relieved! When you didn't even us a dime we were even more surprised. As we Left We looked at The Cards you gave us + we began To see: We were dealing With a Christian. How Wonderful To Know There are still People Like you IN This World of doubt + mistrust. We have Told everyone We know about This incident. We were Stranded Away From home. you could have TAKEN Advantage of us + we wouldn't even have known. Thank you so much For your kindness.

DON'T LET YOUR CHILD FEEL LIKE A FISH WITHOUT WATER.

Once upon a time, there was a big pile of laundry.

The pile was made up of all different colors. A mommy decided she would play a game. Red! she said to her child, holding up a red shirt. Red! the child said. Mommy put it in the colors pile. Whites went in another pile. Green like a frog! White like ice cream! And so it went. Colors, whites. Colors, whites. And on the very last thing – a bib of blue – the child pointed to the colors pile. You should've seen the smile on mommy's face.
Everyday moments can become learning moments. Because learning starts long before school does. So tell stories. Play with the laundry. And even a chore with your child will become much more. Find out more at bornlearning.org.

Are heroes born?
Or are they made?

Inside every child is a hidden strength, an unknown ability, a hero waiting to be discovered. In afterschool programs, kids get involved in all kinds of activities – scholastic, athletic and creative. Activities that help them realize they have the potential to do better and reach further than they ever imagined. Because in the end, that's what makes a hero. Let us know you want afterschool programs in your area. Call 1-800-USA-LEARN.

Lightning stops training

Soldiers sent to Army hospital for evaluation

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Following a near-strike by a lightning bolt, 19 Soldiers from B Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, were taken to Martin Army Community Hospital Aug. 16.

There were no injuries and all Soldiers are back on their feet with no adverse side effects, said Capt. Todd Lamb, 1st Battalion, 329th Inf. Regt. executive officer.

"Our major concern was that all Soldiers were safe and received medical care, if needed. Everybody's fine," Lamb said.

"We made absolutely sure they were OK, and had each one of the Soldiers call his family," he said.

Lamb credits the quick thinking of the drill sergeants for preventing this near-accident from becoming a tragedy. Every one of the Soldiers involved in the lightning incident graduates today.

"We examined all the Soldiers who were brought to the hospital and none of them have any permanent problems," said Capt. Thomas Hair, third-year family medical resident and an attending physician on duty at Martin Army Community Hospital when the Soldiers came in from the field.

These Soldiers are the lucky ones. For every 3,000 people who live to be 80, the National Weather Service estimates one of them will be struck by lightning.

To put it another way (since not everyone will live to be 80), the odds are 576,000 to 1 that someone will get hit by a thunderbolt and survive.

According to the Lightning Safety Group of the American Meteorological Society, after flooding, lightning is the second leading cause of annual storm-related casualties.

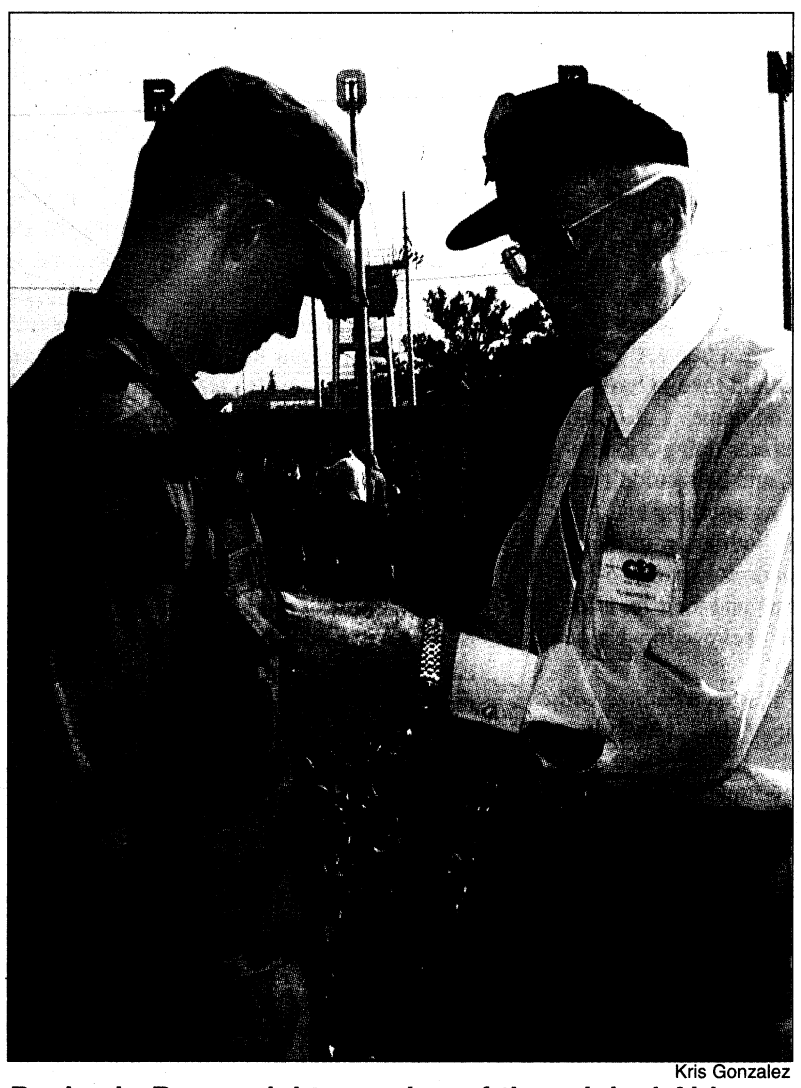
National Airborne Day

Members of Test Platoon pin wings



Kris Gonzalez
Bayonet staff

Airborne veterans came to Fort Benning Aug. 19 to commemorate the 65th anniversary of the Airborne Test Platoon's first jump and to pin silver wings on the uniforms of the country's newest paratroopers.

"You're a marked individual with those silver wings on your chest," Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough said to the paratroopers of D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, as they graduated from Airborne School at Eubanks Field. "You're charged with a grave responsibility, to preserve the spirit of the airborne, and the high standards that have always made these wings the distinctive marks of a professional."

Yarbrough congratulated the new troopers and welcomed one of the six remaining members of the original Airborne Test Platoon to participate in the celebration of National Airborne Day.

He referred to Benjamin Reese, as a "national treasure," and honored the history of the American airborne paratrooper from the conception of the test platoon in 1940.

BOLC II teaches small-unit tactics

Donna Hyatt

Designed to reflect the ever-changing guerrilla tactics now being waged on the battlefield and instill a warrior-first mentality into the Army's future leaders, the pilot class of Basic Officer Leadership Course, Phase II, graduated Thursday in Infantry Hall.

Phase I of BOLC focuses on the basic skills and knowledge necessary for officer leadership. All future officers receive the same training and instruction regardless if the commissioning comes from the U.S. Military Academy, Officer Candidate Schools or the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

Taught by the 11th Infantry Regiment, BOLC II is a seven-week, initial-entry, branch-immaterial course in small-unit leadership and tactics.

"I'm into small-unit leadership, getting these leaders ready and developed to go," said Lt. Gen. Robert Van Antwerp, commanding general of the U.S. Army Accessions Command.

"I have a son in Mosul right now, and he'll tell you it's small-unit leadership. It's the buck sergeants, the staff sergeants, it's the young lieutenants who are taking this war on," he said.

"When I went through officer basic in 1972, we hardly went to the field at all. We never operated in anything that looked like a forward operating base," said Van Antwerp, who trained

HOUSE OF HEROES
Work set to start in September

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

Madeleine Austin needs to have a room in her house painted, her bathroom floor repaired, and leaks fixed in her utility room and her heater. That's just inside the house; her flower beds need to be pruned as well.

These are things the Navy widow can no longer put on a "honey-do" list. Her husband passed away in 1994, so the chores have remained undone.

"I try to keep up with things in the house," Austin said, "but I can't get out in the yard at all."

Tuesday a group of volunteers met with Austin at her home in Columbus to take a look at her "to-do wish list" and gauge what a day's work could accomplish through House of Heroes.

House of Heroes is a local nonprofit organization that serves the nation's military and public safety veterans and their spouses, like Austin, who need minor repairs and improvements to their homes using supplies and equipment donated to the effort.

In its sixth year, House of Heroes has reached out to more than 150 families of veterans to help make life a little better for those who gave so much.

"These people have worked for our country and this is our opportunity to say thank you," said Melinda Dietrich, House of Heroes board member. "Most of them received their medals in an envelope in the mail, and no one has really said thanks."

This year's goal is 40 homes, but according to Fort Benning's House of Heroes representative Janie Pearson, more will be done if possible as there are nearly 200 homes on the waiting list for repairs.

"The first year we begged (veterans) to let us help them, the second we asked, then the third year we were overwhelmed," Dietrich said.

Last year, volunteers completed work on 51 homes.

They cleaned, painted, installed access ramps, screen windows and doors, repaired or replaced basic appliances, and did yard maintenance.

Fort Benning was responsible for 21 of those homes.

Fort Benning is looking for more Soldiers and civilians to captain teams and volunteer to help improve a house of a hero.

Community volunteer Neil Block said you don't have to possess a skill to be a volunteer or a team captain, but professionals and carpenters are also needed.

"We don't want to throw you out in the deep water and say swim. We have some lifeguards and life jackets to help out," Block said.

House of Heroes has an operation section to help with the technical aspect of any work to be done.

Team captains are responsible for meeting with the veteran or family member, tour the home and note the work to be done. The work will be done during the month of September.

Fort Benning units, as well as schools, churches and civic groups are encouraged to participate,

'SNOOD' FOR THOUGHT...

Pondering the imponderable

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Ah. What do I do all day? Sometimes even I wonder, so we thought it would be fun to enlist my boys' help in setting the record straight, not to mention illustrating just how different a take three siblings might have. What I also found was each one's "take" on my daily responsibilities also gave me insight into them as well.

I myself don't ever remember pondering that question about my own mother. The only time she worked when I was growing up was when we needed the extra money to buy a house when we moved to Illinois. Those three years, she watched me like a hawk because she worked in the same junior high I attended. No, there's no doubt in my mind what she did — kept me in line and worked with some of my classmates who had a harder time in school than I did.

And, having been a full-time "domestic engineer" for several years, I know exactly what she did when she didn't have a paying job outside the home — she worked really, really hard.

So, after my boys grumbled that I was actually making them do school-type work before they left for school, I sat down to read what they said.

I got three sentences (with multiple thoughts) from the oldest. He's not always into putting the most effort in to things.

Why write 10 sentences if there's no established minimum? But, at least, the compound sentences attest to the fact that he's getting a good education and can combine thoughts.

"I think my mom goes to work most of the day. When she has free time she might come home and do work here at home or do something with our dog. She probably goes and feeds the horse she takes care of."

The middle child slapped his pencil and paper down and said, "Here. Five sentences." I guess his teacher impressed upon him, already, the importance of a good, solid paragraph having at least five sentences — unlike some of the paragraphs I write.

"She goes to the barn. She plays around with the dog. My Mom sometimes plays a game called Snood. She eats lunch. She uses the computer."

I think this is the point where I defend myself, since, although he alludes to a quite diversified daily routine, he fails to mention any work I might do. That middle one, he's the free spirit. The nonconformist, who although he'll follow the five-sentence rule, refuses to be trapped into stating the obvious. But maybe if I stopped eating lunch, some of my clothes would fit more comfortably.

And the youngest. Ever the minimalist, turned in a paltry two sentences, but I have to give him high marks for the complexity of the first.

"She writes enterveous. She uses the computer."

I guess I better get back to work and use that computer while I'm at it.

Anger no way to honor war dead

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I am a TV news addict, and can regularly be found flipping between MSNBC, FOX News, CNN and CNN Headline News. I like to be in the know, from the very important to the very mundane news.

I was watching these channels Aug. 6 when I saw a story about a woman named Cindy Sheehan who was camping two miles from President Bush's ranch in Crawford, Texas, as a protest of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Sheehan's son, Casey, was a humvee mechanic who died in Iraq in April 2004 while trying to save Soldiers wounded in an ambush.

Casey enlisted in 2000 and also re-enlisted. After Casey's death, President Bush met with Sheehan and other families of fallen Soldiers.

Now Sheehan is demanding another meeting with the president. She wants him to end the war and bring our Soldiers home.

Of course we want our men and women home.

I would love to have my husband home. I also know he is overseas doing a job he loves, and he wouldn't want to be doing anything else.

We both know of the tremendous sacrifice of our Soldiers and their families, and we also believe in what he is doing.

While I sympathize with Sheehan's loss, I can't help but feel that what she was doing was detrimental in every aspect. (Sheehan left her encampment after her mother had a stroke but returned Wednesday.)

Sheehan's marriage is over. Her husband filed for divorce Aug. 12.

Sheehan has three other children, a son and two daughters. Quoted in People Magazine, her son Andy said, "I think she should come home."

I'm in no way a psychologist, but I believe Sheehan's grief has turned into anger and she doesn't know quite where to direct that anger.

Sheehan's husband was also quoted as saying, "Casey's life isn't being honored. I'd like you to know that Casey was proud to be a Soldier."

While no one can tell someone how to grieve, they can help them along the way. I really think Sheehan could have used her anger as a fuel to both honor her son's memory and also support our troops still serving.

She could have started a drive to raise money to buy phone cards for troops, or started a letter-writing campaign or anything else to support the troops, and all the while, let the world know what a great son and Soldier Casey was.

Instead, the media has turned Sheehan into a pawn for the anti-war movement.

Maybe Sheehan believed she could make a difference — maybe, in her own way, she has. Staging an anti-war protest at this point, however, is like shoveling your driveway in the middle of a blizzard.

I can't imagine being a Soldier overseas and seeing anti-war parades on TV. Why not a Support the Troops parade?

Even if you don't support the war, support our Soldiers — they're the reason we're able to voice our opinions.

I honestly hope Sheehan can find peace in her life and find a better way to honor her son's memory.

Casey deserves it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks to Soldier

My wife Lisa and I would like to send a personal thank you to the unknown Soldier who happened by while my wife was trying to call 911 for our son, who was having a life-threatening seizure.

Thanks to your help, and several calls to 911, our son was successfully transported and later treated by the excellent medical staff at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Proud to be an American

On Aug. 12, my husband and I visited Fort Benning for the first time in over 20 years.

When we saw the drill sergeants, it was very emotional, because my husband too, once wore that hat with pride and dignity.

Oh, how did he love those days wearing the uniform and how proud he was to serve America as an Infantryman!

I personally believe his most memorable years were drill sergeant and first sergeant days.

As a young Infantryman, he was proud to serve America, and was always excited to come to Fort Benning for training while I stayed home crying my eyeballs out, not to mention complaints that came with a bucket full of tears daily.

As for my visit, I was excited to watch the Army band at the change of command ceremony, and seeing old friends we met from Germany was another excitement.

As in life there are many things I enjoy, but nothing like watching the Army band proudly as they play their instruments while marching.

God bless them all!

But most of all, I was proud to see our Soldiers, the "ULTIMATE VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA!"

They are the one who defends our freedom and gave me privilege to be a citizen of free world.

Thank you America, for your unconditional sacrifices for freedom seeker as myself to proudly say, "I am an American!"

To those who defend our country, may God bless and protect you and your families.

The victory will be ours!

CORRECTION

Last week's edition of The Bayonet contained two errors. In one story, we erroneously referred to Puerto Ricans as immigrants. They are U.S. citizens. In another, the barrel of the M-2 .50 cal. machine gun created the need for a headspace gauge, not the handle, and the picatinny rail was misspelled. The Bayonet staff regrets the errors.

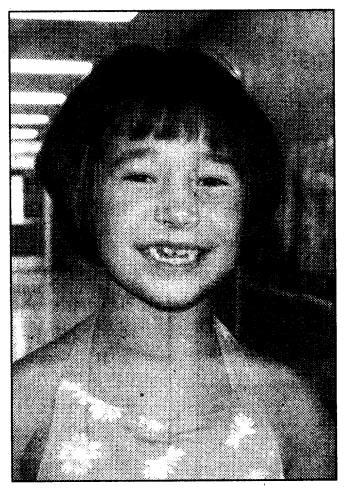
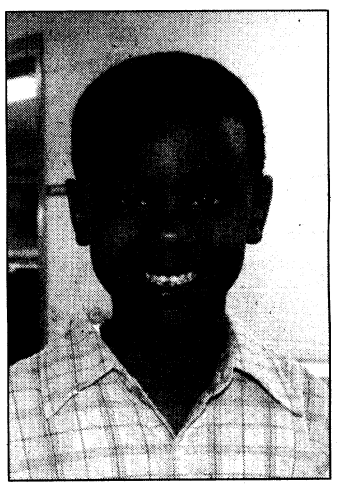
VARIOUS VOICES

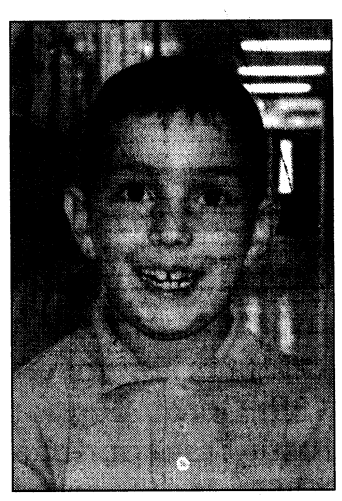


What does your mom do while you're at school?

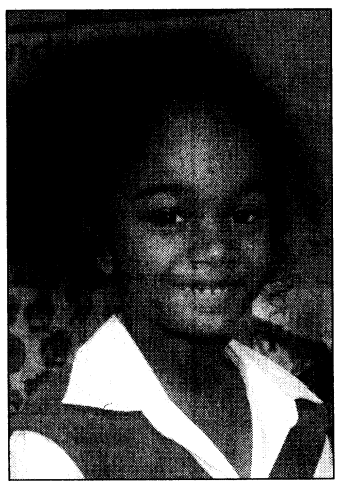


Kylie Gates — "I think she does some shopping. When we run out of bologna, she'll get that. I'm not really sure what else she does."

Zachary Harvey — "She runs five laps at Doughboy Stadium. She's a good runner. She does some work and relaxes at home. She gets time off, and during the school day she sleeps. She's a good sleeper."



Caitlyn Spears — "My mom goes to work on post. She types on the computer and stuff like that. One time, I went to work with her and got in trouble because I was being silly. Nana came and picked me up that day."



Tyrese Pruitt — "She goes to work, and talks on the phone. Then she comes home to do her homework on her computer. She has 10 hours of homework. Then she goes shopping."

Julia Ivey — "She goes to work, then she just waits for me to get out of school so she can pick me up from the babysitter. It's really, really fun. Sometimes she does a lot of homework. I like homework a lot."

Gregory Cannata — "She goes shopping. She takes care of my little brother, Justin. She makes sure my other little brother, Joseph, doesn't get on my bed and touch my CD player. When we move to a bigger house, I'll get my own room. Then I'll lock the door or nail it shut."

Jasmine Preston — "She cleans up the house. Sometimes she goes to get us some new clothes. She shops for groceries. She waits for us and makes us a snack. She's a good mom."

Corvettes cruise for cause

Owners drive on post to support troops

Melissa House

Photos by Melissa House

Dan Cope, president of the Columbus Corvette Club, sits in his 1970 red Corvette Stingray Saturday. More than 100 drivers took part in the event that supports families of special operations Soldiers.

The parking lot at the National Infantry Museum was filled Aug. 20 after 112 Corvettes "cruised" to Fort Benning as part of an event sponsored by Operation One Voice. The nonprofit organization supports the families of fallen special operations Soldiers.

Most of the cars from a number of Corvette clubs, left Alpharetta, Ga., earlier in the morning, escorted by Georgia State troopers. They were joined by 14 cars from the Columbus Corvette Club, in a line the finally measured 3 miles long from the first headlight to the final taillight.

Operation One Voice began after the tragic events of Sept. 11, 2001, when Lt. Bill Stevens of the Duluth, Ga., Police Department, created a commemorative coin for the members of his department. Stevens then designed one for the special operations forces he felt had received the bulk of the mission to initially carry out the war on terrorism. He delivered the coins honoring the Army's Special Forces to Fort Bragg, N.C., in November 2003.

Corvette Cruise organizer John Salvador said he was pleased with the turnout.

"This is just us supporting the troops," Salvador said. "Operation One Voice supports the children of fallen special operations Soldiers and events like these are a way to show we care. Salvador, whose father served in the Army, said he got involved in OOV through his wife, who has a connection the Duluth P.D. Organizing this event, he said, was his contribution the OOV efforts.

But, he said, it isn't all about raising money, even if it's for a good cause.

"I want to make sure people have fun," he said. "And I originally hoped to get 40 (cars). I'm really pleased." Salvador said the 112 cars and more than 200 people came from all over — South Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama were represented.

Salvador's a fairly new Corvette owner, having bought his car in October, but thought the event would appeal to other owners.

Dan Cope, president of the Columbus Corvette Club, said his group was well represented, and the members enjoy participating in events like the cruise. Cope and his wife drove their 1970 convertible and 1980 coupe.

"We like to get together to do things for the community," Cope said. Once the group arrived on post, they toured the museum, many of them for the first time. It was Cope's first visit and he said he was impressed and enjoyed seeing the history of the Army.

Corvette owner Jack Jett displays Old Glory while parked at the National Infantry Museum.

The CCC's activities director, Diane Oliver, a museum veteran, directed people as they entered the building.

"I used to walk over here with my classes every year," she said.

Oliver retired three years ago after teaching school on Fort Benning for 30 years. She said she started her own education on post when her father, now a retired lieutenant colonel, was stationed here.

The Columbus Club, she said, had approximately 100 members with 65 cars, including a number of retired and active-duty Soldiers.

Club member Nancy Craig said she thought the only thing missing from the museum was information about the Stryker.

BRAC panel makes decisions

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Base Realignment and Closure Commission generally supported the Defense Department's recommendations Wednesday as the panel began its final four days of deliberations.

However, commission members voted down proposals to close a submarine base, a shipyard and an Army depot.

The panel met in Arlington, Va., to begin voting on DoD's proposal to reshape the military infrastructure and eliminate excess by closing 33 major bases and realigning 29 others. Officials emphasized that the votes are not considered final until the commission finishes its deliberations Saturday.

While supporting most of the proposals Wednesday, the commission voted against those to close Submarine Base New London, Conn., and Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Maine, and agreed to realign rather than close Red River Army Depot, Texas.

Commission members supported the proposed closure of Fort Monmouth, N.J., but only with the stipulation that there's no degradation in programs and initiatives or interruption of operations that support warfighters in Iraq and Afghanistan.

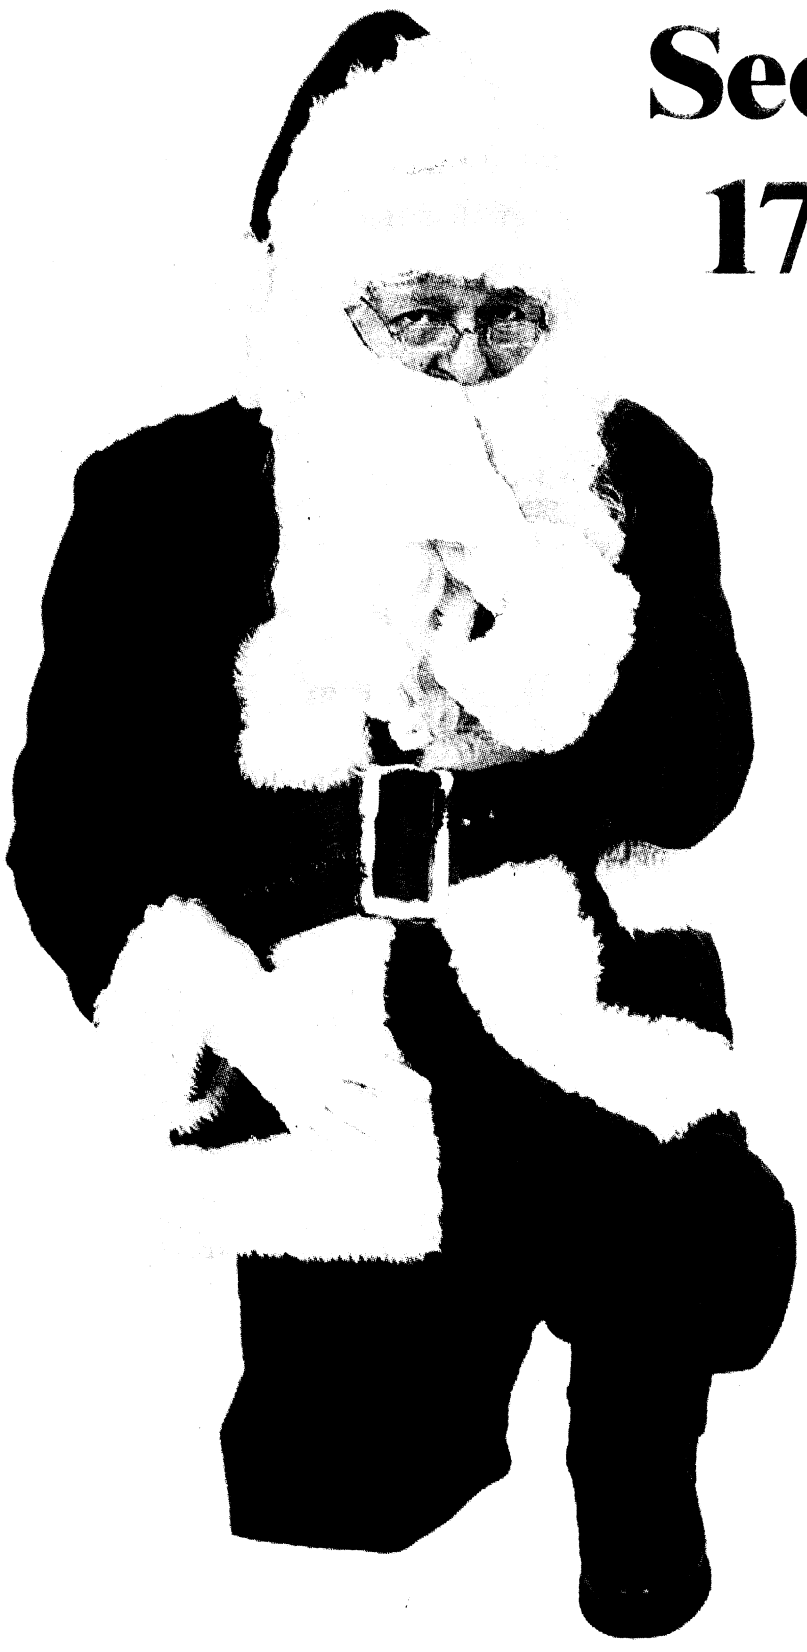
They rejected a proposal to relocate the Night Vision Lab from Fort Belvoir, Va., to Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., where most of Fort Monmouth's assets are slated to move under the plan.

The panel also approved the closure of four other major Army installations: Fort Gillem and Fort McPherson, in Georgia; Fort Monroe, Va.; and the U.S. Army Garrison in Selfridge, Mich.

The commission also agreed to close almost 400 Army Reserve and Army National Guard facilities and to create joint centers in their place.

Turning to Navy matters, the commission approved recommendations to close Naval Station Pascagoula, Miss.; Naval Air Station Atlanta, Ga.; and Naval Station Ingleside and Naval Air Station Corpus Christi, both in Texas.

The body also voted not to close Naval Air Station Oceana, Va., as the East Coast's Master Jet Base, but only with strict provisions that local and state officials take active steps to stop growth around the base within the next six months.



Commissioners had added Oceana to DoD's recommended closure list in July, citing concerns over residential encroachment around the base they said presents a safety risk to both air crews and residents. They agreed to go forward with the plan to move the master jet base to Cecil Field, Fla., if Virginia officials do not heed their warning.

The commission tabled a vote on Willow Grove Naval Air Station, Pa., until Saturday.

After its final vote this weekend, the panel will send its final report to President Bush by Sept. 8.

The president, if he concurs, will send the final list to Congress, which can accept or reject it in its entirety, but not change it.

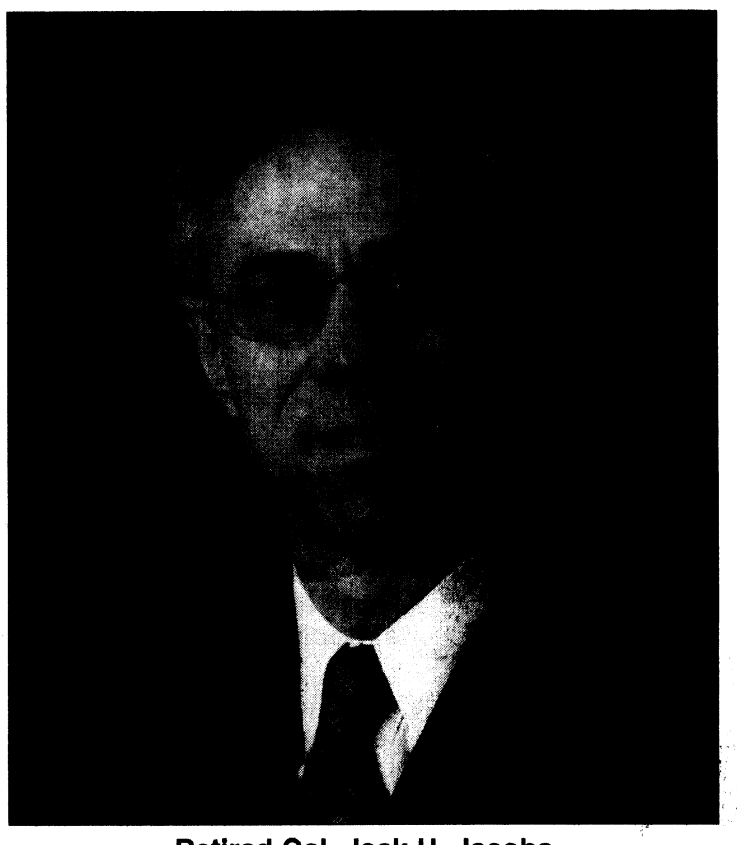
Medal of Honor recipient next combat leader guest

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Retired Col. Jack H. Jacobs, Medal of Honor recipient, will be the keynote speaker at Monday's Combat Leader Speaker Program beginning at 4 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium.



The CLSP, run by the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, invites former combat leaders to speak with students at the Infantry Center and School.

Jacobs was commissioned in the Infantry in 1966 after graduating from Rutgers University. His first assignment was as a platoon leader in the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

In 1967, Jacobs went to Vietnam and was assigned as an adviser to a Vietnamese infantry battalion. On March, 9, 1968, the battalion came under intense machine-gun and mortar fire. Jacobs was wounded by mortar fragments, but took command of the infantry company, moving through heavy fire to evacuate the wounded and their weapons, saving the lives of another U.S. adviser and 13 allied soldiers.

After recovering from his wounds, Jacobs commanded a company of the Officer Candidate School and later commanded the 4th Battalion, 10th Infantry Regiment at Fort Davis, Panama.

He currently serves as the vice president of the National Congressional Medal of Honor Society, an on-camera military and political analyst for NBC and is a McDermott Professor of Politics at the U.S. Military Academy, where he teaches cadets once a week.

Retired Col. Jack H. Jacobs

Jacobs said he has the opportunity to speak to disparate audiences every week.

"In some respects, I live vicariously through the people with whom I speak," Jacobs said. "(Today's young leaders) are on the cutting edge of freedom and they resemble me and my comrades many years ago.

"But in two respects, they are much more different than we were — they are far better trained and much more mature than we were during the Vietnam era.

Jacobs will sign copies of the book, Medal of Honor, before and after the lecture near the Infantry Hall shoppette and Medal of Honor display.

Soldiers demonstrate combat power at Redcloud Range

Fort Benning unleashed its most lethal fighting forces in a simulated battle Aug. 18 at Redcloud Range.

Officers of the Infantry pre-command course participated in a hands-on training exercise where they were able to fire weapons ranging from a 25mm enhanced automatic cannon mounted on the M2A3 Bradley Fighting Vehicle, to the 50-caliber machine guns mounted on a Stryker Infantry Carrier vehicle and handheld small arms weapons systems like the M-24 Sniper rifle.

But before doing so, the Soldiers of the Experimental Force Company demonstrated the components and capabilities of an Infantry platoon and the weapons it uses to annihilate its adversaries.

"The exercise was open to the public as a demonstration of our combat power and as a recruitment tool," said Capt. Clint Cox, commander of the EXFOR Company.

"It shows the awesome fire power that the Infantry brings to bear on the enemy."

Many spectators were surprised by the extent of the show.

"I thought it was going to be bang, bang, and that's it," said Capt. Kevin Leitch, cadre at the Officer Candidate School. "I was really impressed."

Leitch said after the simulation, his son Devin, 8, wanted to immediately go home so he could play "Army."

"I thought it was cool," said Devin, a third-grader at Dexter Elementary School.

Dexter kindergartner Alyssa Powell, 5, and her dad, Capt. David Powell, said they thought the show was "pretty cool" as well.

"I thought it was great," said Powell, a student of the Infantry Captains Career Course.

"It was a great display of fire power."

"It shows you the great capabilities of the weapon systems that we have, and as a commander you're going to have to deploy that kind of equipment," he said.

Cox said exercises like this are offered about eight times throughout the year.

The next exercise will take place at 5 p.m. Oct. 20.

funds for the holiday season, said Chuck Walls, deputy garrison commander. As in years past, Walls has the lead on the CFC project.

Last year, Fort Benning blew past the $800,000 goal, raising more than $930,000. This year, Walls said, the goal has been lowered to $700,000 because of the large number of deployed Soldiers.

"It's still a hefty goal," Walls said. "(The amount raised last year) shows what we're capable of."

All that money, he said, was raised by only 42 percent of those available to give. Walls thinks $1 million is a "doable" amount if the post can tap into just 50 percent. No matter what, he said he's been pleased with the steady increase in participation through the years.

Fort Benning works with the local United Way — the agency designated by the Office of Personnel Management in Washington, D.C., to account for contributions, process them and ensure the money gets where the donor wanted it to go. The United Way provides the accountability for the money.

"If you give money to a charity, you can rest assured we're going to get it there," Walls said.

The CFC brochure contains a list of CFC charities. The charities are organizations with status as tax-exempt charities, as determined by the Internal Revenue Service that provide health and human services. Organizations may apply and be listed in the CFC brochure as either a local, national or an international unaffiliated organization or as a member of a local, national or international federation. And each is required, Walls said, to disclose the percentage of donations that will be used to cover administrative costs.

When trying to decide what charities to give to through the CFC, Walls said there are two things donors should consider.

"First, what touches you, what has personally impacted you?" he said. "No one on the installation has not been touched by some sort of tragedy.

"Second, think about giving to (charities) 9001, 9000, or both."

Walls said it's nice to be able to keep some money in the local area, and 9001 supports programs on Fort Benning like the Army Community Services food locker and Santa's Castle. Those programs, he said, "directly reach back and touch Soldiers and families."

Donations to 9000 support 45 organizations that give directly to local community agencies, which might be used by the 60 percent of Fort Benning employees and Soldiers who live off post, he said.

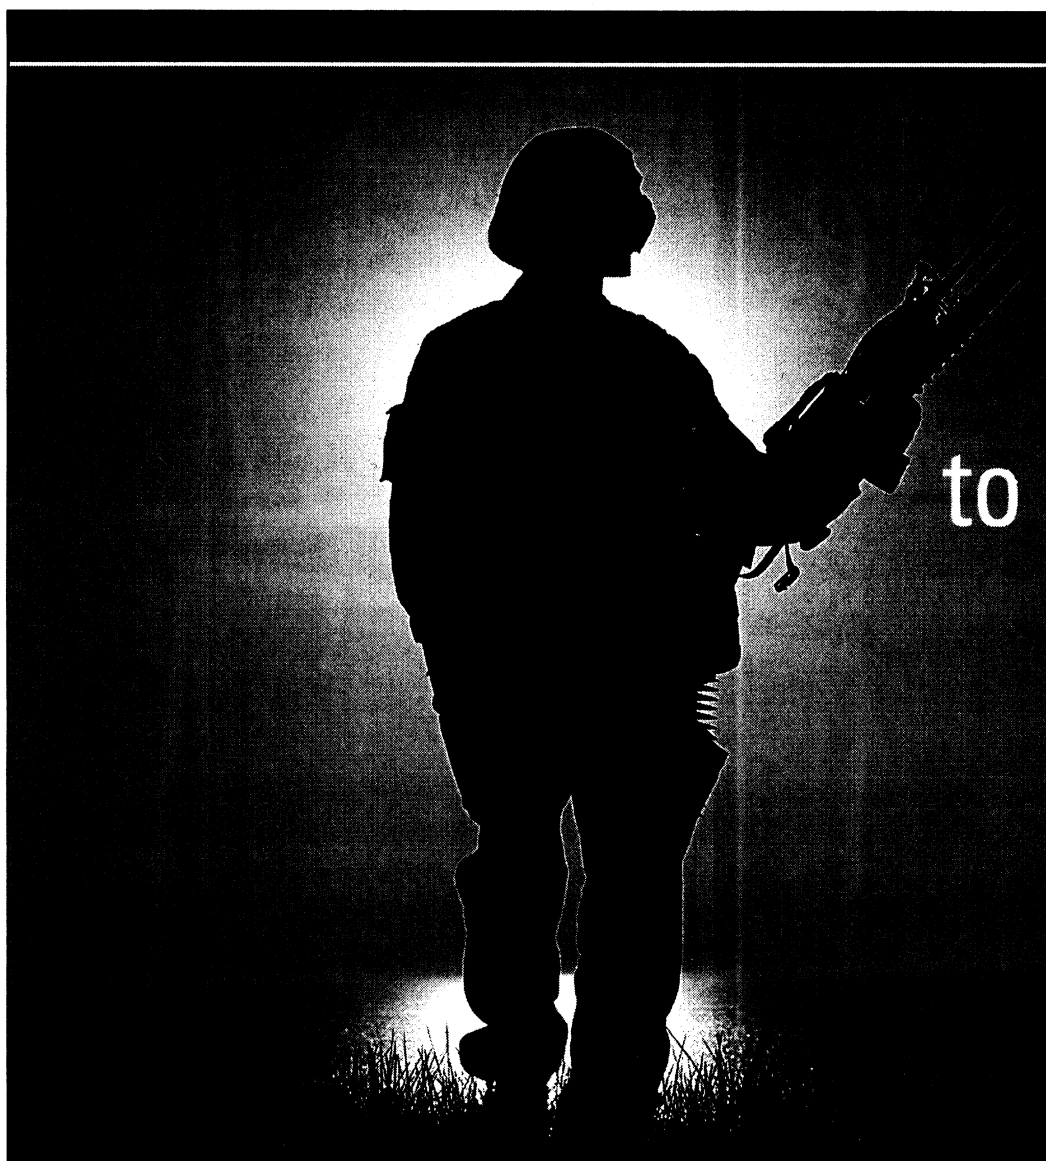
Walls said the large "thermometers" will go up, as usual, at the two main entrances to post, I-185 and Benning Boulevard. A third board will go up out at Sand Hill, because, he said, the Infantry Training Brigade likes to have their own.

Last year, ITB Soldiers contributed a large percentage of the posts donations — more than $200,000.

"The young recruits — they're not even Infantry Soldiers yet," Walls said, "but you discover such a strong desire to give that it boggles the mind. Every year they do it."

Walls has held two training sessions for the "train the trainers" who will take the CFC message out to their units and directorates on post. He likes to call them the "loaned executives" who will get away from their usual assignments to try to make the six-week campaign a success.

Those loaned executives will approach people, tell them about the CFC and show them how they can donate. For active-duty Soldiers or federal employees, it's as easy as payroll deduction. Soldiers in the National Guard or Reserves, even those currently on active duty, can only give by cash or check because the system is not set up to accept payroll deductions from them.



Walls said even though the post can't solicit CFC contributions from deployed Soldiers, their spouses and family members can still participate by making cash or check contributions and turning them in to unit rear detachment personnel.

About the greater than 50 percent out there who didn't give last year or in years past, Walls said he didn't know why they didn't give.

"There's always going to be a small percentage who have an aversion to giving," he said. "I don't know how to crack that nut. But even if you give a little, it makes a difference. We have more need than we have funds for. Go out there. Get educated. Ask questions. Don't sit on the sidelines."

Following the Kickoff Breakfast, CFC materials will be ready for pick up on the second floor of the Wachovia building on Wold Avenue. Campaign contributions will also be turned in there as well.

Lightning: Avoid windows in storm

lightning every year, the NWS notes most people who are struck survive, but they usually suffer long-term symptoms such as memory loss, personality changes, fatigue and chronic pain.

The best way to avoid becoming a lightning casualty or fatality is by following these recommendations from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration:

• Seek shelter in houses or other sturdy buildings. Open picnic shelters, carports, garages, tents, baseball dugouts, sheds and bleachers are not safe.

• Avoid contact with corded phones when lightning is in the area.

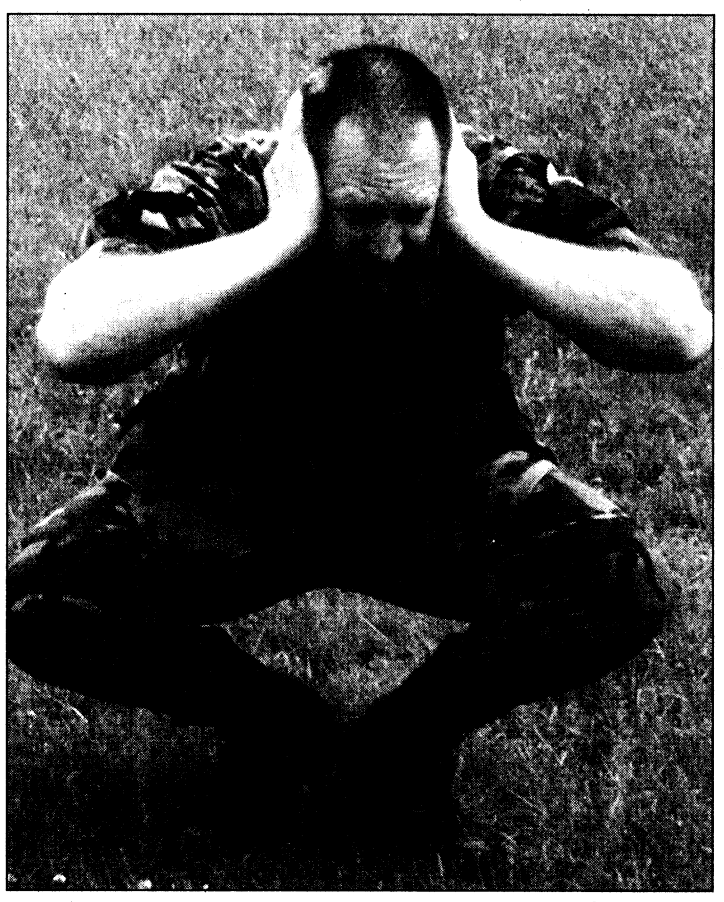
Cordless phones are safe, and cell phones are safer.

• Stay away from windows and doors, stay off porches and decks, avoid contact with electrical equipment or cords and stay away from plumbing and plumbing appliances.

If sturdy shelter is not available, seek refuge in a hard topped vehicle with the windows up.

If no shelter is available, crouch down with feet apart to create the lowest possible profile without laying flat on the ground.

Lightning can spread out nearly 60 feet after striking the earth, depending on soil characteristics.



Stay away from trees, electrical poles or other tall objects that are conducive to the electricity in lightning.

Water also conducts electricity. Stop all activities in or near the water and seek shelter.

Should a person be struck by lightning and stop breathing, administer cardiopulmonary resuscitation before calling 911.

Lightning victims do not retain an electrical charge. If necessary, move to a safer location.

For more information about lightning safety go to www.lightningsafety.noaa.gov.

Airborne: Trains thousands yearly

to form a test platoon made up of 48 volunteers from the 29th Infantry Regiment in April 1940.

On Aug. 16, the first American paratrooper, 1st Lt. William Ryder, jumped out of a C-33 over Lawson Field.

"The successful first jump of the Army Parachute Test Platoon laid the foundation for a new and innovative method of combat that helped contribute to an Allied victory in World War II," wrote President George W. Bush in his Aug. 15, 2005, proclamation declaring Aug. 16 National Airborne Day.

"These bold pioneers answered the call of duty and set an example for future generations to follow."

The Airborne School trains paratroopers from all four services.

Class 38-05, D Company, started with 418 students on July 29. By graduation day, only 331 service members stood in front of the Airborne Walk to receive their silver wings.

"The attrition rate indicates not only the difficulty of the Airborne course, but also serves to clearly demonstrate the dedication to excellence, courage, and determination of the students," said Staff Sgt. Shontae Halsey, Airborne School instructor.

The "airborne legacy began here in the summer of 1940," Halsey said.

"That legacy continues to live on and perpetuate itself through all great paratroopers of the past and present. It is only fitting that we recognize the paratroopers of the past and the present here today."

All former graduates of the Airborne School sitting in the audience were asked to raise their hands.

Those who had family members graduating were asked to come forward to pin wings on their loved ones.

Within minutes, the remaining family members were invited to pin their wings on their new paratroopers.

Reese, and other fellow airborne veterans, were asked by many of the newest paratroopers to pin their wings.

"I'm proud of all these youngsters here," Reese said. "It feels good to pin their wings. The only time it felt better was when I pinned my original wings on my youngest son about 27 years ago."

While serving with the 101st Airborne Division during World War II, Reese was struck by a grenade.

He survived to tell the world about his many jumps, in countries like France, Holland and Belgium.

"There will always be places inaccessible by land or sea that we need to put forces into," Yarbrough said.

"The United States' most lethal weapon system in the 21st century is not a multimillion dollar laser guided smart bomb. It's not a Tomahawk missile. The most sophisticated weapon we have is the a 140-pound, steely-eyed paratrooper, soaking wet, tired, mad and hasn't eaten in two days, who sneaks up behind you with his bayonet drawn, ready to complete his mission."

BOLC II: Trains warriors first

as an Army engineer.

Devised more as a basic framework than a rigid course, the Training and Doctrine Command structured BOLC II as the common core of the Army, gearing future leaders toward the mission and goals of the Warrior ethos before releasing them to their branch specific training.

"We're giving them applicable training for today's contemporary operational environment," said Maj. Kevin Elder, commander of A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt.

"You're looking at the future platoon, company, battalion and division commanders," he said. "They get this core warrior training, a core knowledge base that they'll all have to use to deal with any situation that arises on the battlefield."

Although Fort Benning is the home of the Infantry and the training focuses on the techniques and tactics taught to Soldiers here every day, the idea of teaching every Army officer core battle skills is relatively new.

"If you were an Infantry Soldier (in 1972), you might've done something similar to this when you went through basic in yesteryear," Van Antwerp said.

Today "it's not to make Infantrymen out of them, it's to make warriors out of them.

"What we're trying to do is make sure everyone has an underpinning of being a warrior first, being able to engage a target, read a map, conduct a convoy. It's a lot different, and it's different for the best," he said.

> "What we're trying to do is make sure everyone has an underpinning of being a warrior first, being able to engage a target, read a map, conduct a convoy. It's a lot different, and it's different for the best."
> Lt. Gen. Robert Van Antwerp
> Commanding general, U.S. Army Accessions Command.

Following one more pilot course at Fort Benning next January, Fort Benning and Fort Sill will begin training all new lieutenants in June, Van Antwerp said.

From here, the 173 young leaders will go on to BOLC III where they will learn their branch-specific tactics and techniques.

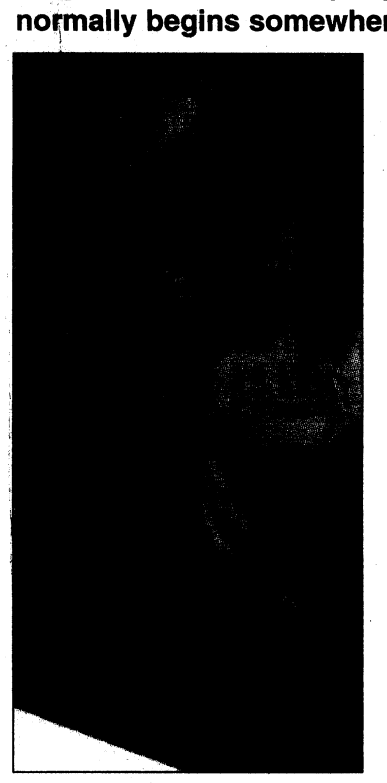
Building the future...together.
Today. Tomorrow. Always.

A day in the life



1731: Sgt. 1st Class Steve Kirby counts Soldiers as they load into a truck to head back to the company area.

0415: Sgt. 1st Class Steve Kirby shaves before heading to work. Kirby is a drill sergeant with C Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. His day normally begins somewhere between 3:30 and 4 a.m.

2018: Sgt. 1st Class Steve Kirby reads the schedule for the next day to Soldiers before lights out.

0445: After getting ready for work and kissing his daughters goodbye, Sgt. 1st Class Steve Kirby and his wife Selena take a minute to play with their dog, Alley, before he drives to Sand Hill.

DRILL SERGEANTS

Work sun-up till sun-down

It's 4 a.m. and Sgt. 1st Class Steve Kirby is up and moving around. For a drill sergeant, rising before the sun is just another part of the job description.

His morning routine is simple. Wake up between 3:30 and 4 a.m., shave and get dressed, all the while talking with his wife, Selena, who normally wakes with him. Showers are usually postponed until after morning physical training.

After a few minutes of roughhousing with Alley, his black Lab, he kisses his daughters, Cathryn and Siera, before grabbing a bite to eat and heading to Sand Hill. Once he arrives at C Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, it is all work.

Things are moving fast.

The Soldiers will be going to Malone 11 to zero their weapons.

By 5:28 a.m. Kirby is in second platoon's office checking paperwork and making sure the Soldiers are ready for the day.

It's still dark out as the Soldiers ready their weapons.

"Things here are pretty much the same thing every day," Kirby said as he checks the schedule for the day. "We usually have PT in the morning, eat and then train."

He's in his third year as a drill sergeant, and as the senior drill sergeant for the platoon, Kirby's responsibilities include everything the platoon does, or fails to do, in completing initial entry training requirements for graduation.

"It's a very demanding job," he said. "But I guess the positive thing about it is that at least I get to come home at night. Yesterday I left at 4:30 a.m. and was home by 8:30 p.m."

The day's schedule is simple. Soldiers will head to the range at about 6:30 a.m. and stay there until they qualify.

By 2:30 p.m., things have turned mundane. Kirby is responsible for making sure each Soldier qualifies. It is hot outside and the drill sergeants work hard to ensure Soldiers stay hydrated. Several times throughout the day, Soldiers take a Gatorade break.

After a late chow, Kirby is back in the barracks helping his platoon fill out counseling statements and passing out the mail. By 9:25 p.m., he pulls out of the company area and heads home to spend a few minutes with his daughters, eat, get his uniform ready for the next day, and get to bed about 10:30 p.m.

"Some people think this job is easy," Kirby said. "They don't realize just how many hours we work."

He said drill sergeants are often misunderstood. Their job is not to yell at Soldiers, but to train them so they can survive on the battlefield.

"You're a counselor, mentor, teacher and to some (Soldiers) you're a father figure," Kirby said. "I have to train these Soldiers well. Some of them will go on and do great things. I realize someday I might have some of them in my own company, serving with me somewhere."

Kirby said he wants to be a good example to his Soldiers and maintain credibility. Sometimes, when things get too harried, he said, he has to step inside a room, close the door and regroup.

One of the hardest things, he said, is separating work and family.

"It's something you have to do," he said. "I take the long way back home (at night) to unwind. Normally I don't bring my (drill sergeant) hat in the house, I leave it in the truck. I never wear it in the house. It's my way to separate work and home."

As hard as his job can be, Kirby recognizes the importance of it.

"When I look at the platoon, I see a bunch of young people fulfilling their obligations," he said. "They are a group of civilians stepping up to serve their country when other people didn't want to.

"I'm training the future Soldiers who are going to have to step up one day and defend the Constitution."

After one of his first cycles, one of his Soldiers wrote to thank Kirby for "listening, for trying hard to help, for answering my questions even when I may have seemed like a pest, and thank you for just being a good leader and teacher."

Kirby said when he gets letters from his Soldiers, he knows he's made a difference, which helps make the long hours worth it.

If making one's own bed in the morning is a chore, try making nearly 1,200 beds a day?

Housekeeping employees from Fort Benning took part this week in the third annual International Housekeeping Week activities that celebrate their hard work that services 1,175 rooms on post.

This year's celebration began Monday as staff members released balloons over Olson Hall. On Tuesday, the tables turned.

"The housekeeping supervisor staff cooked and served breakfast for the housekeepers," said Mike Childs, executive housekeeping manager.

As the heavy morning fog lifted on Wednesday, more than 50 housekeepers gathered to participate in the three-mile Walk-A-Fit event that led the group around the cuartels.

The celebration began in 1981 to recognize the "doers" in the housekeeping field and was formally named the International Housekeeping Week in July 1996, according the the International Executive Housekeepers Association, Inc. Web site. This week's celebration concludes today following a ceremony that will announce the janitor, housekeeper and housekeeping supervisor of the year, scheduled to be held at 2:30 p.m. on the grounds of Olson Hall.

Wounded OIF veteran honored at Pentagon

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The "Sentinels of Freedom" community group honored a wounded Operation Iraqi Freedom veteran Aug. 19 in a Pentagon Hall of Heroes ceremony, presenting him a scholarship that includes a lot more than educational benefits.

Sgt. Manuel Mendoza-Valencia, 24, received a scholarship certificate providing him with adapted housing, a handicapped-equipped van, educational benefits, and a job with SBC Communications.

For a four-year period, Mendoza will also receive a team of mentors to help him transition from military to civilian life.

Mendoza was wounded Oct. 3 when his M-113 light armored personnel carrier was hit by an improvised explosive device in Sadr City. The injuries sustained in the attack led to the loss of both his leg. This is the first scholarship the Sentinels of Freedom have awarded. The organization includes business, educational, community and religious leaders from San Ramon, Calif. The goal of this group, led by Mike Conklin, is to help severely wounded Soldiers returning from Iraq.

In his opening remarks as host of the ceremony, Lt. Gen. Franklin L. Hagenbeck, the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel, G1, said, "Sgt. Mendoza is a true American hero … his determination has enabled him to meet his goals in addition to being an inspiration for other patients and all of us."

Born in Mexico, Mendoza moved to the U.S. at the age of

4. In January 2000, after graduating from high school, Mendoza enlisted in the U.S. Army as a combat engineer. He deployed to Iraq in support of the 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 10th Mountain Division, with the 58th Combat Engineer Company, 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment.

Mendoza has been undergoing treatment and therapy at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

Nine months ago the director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services swore Mendoza in as a U.S. citizen during a private ceremony at Walter Reed.

"It gives me an opportunity to do what I would have done for myself if I would not have been injured," said Mendoza. "I'm really just thankful for everything that's happened.

"I'm really excited to be back home, going back to school, and going to work every morning," Mendoza said.

Acting Deputy Secretary of Defense Gordon England said, "The Sentinels of Freedom scholarship is an outstanding example of a community's commitment to our armed forces."

Once upon a time, there was a big pile of laundry.

The pile was made up of all different colors. A mommy decided she would play a game. Red! she said to her child, holding up a red shirt. Red! the child said. Mommy put it in the colors pile. Whites went in another pile. Green like a frog! White like ice cream! And so it went. Colors, whites. Colors, whites. And on the very last thing – a bib of blue – the child pointed to the colors pile. You should've seen the smile on mommy's face.
Everyday moments can become learning moments. Because learning starts long before school does. So tell stories. Play with the laundry. And even a chore with your child will become much more. Find out more at bornlearning.org. United Way Ad Council

Infantrymen make difference in Abu Ghraib

Soldiers clean up neglected soccer field

Spc. Ricardo Branch
Army News Service

ABU GHRAIB, Iraq — Soldiers in Abu Ghraib district clean up a local soccer field for the children in their sector July 29.

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 130th Infantry Regiment, attached to the 256th Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, conducted the humanitarian effort.

"It's really sad when you see kids walk around barefoot playing soccer in a trash-filled lot," said Spc. Jake Butler of 2nd Bn., 130th Inf.

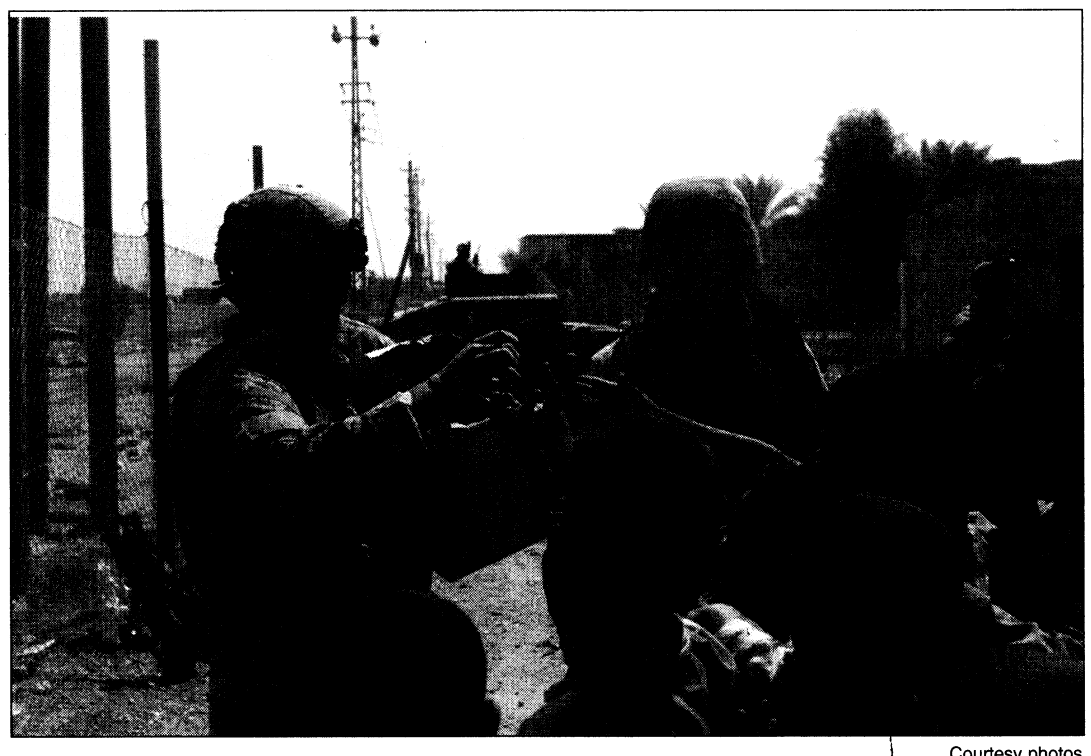
Armed with two trailers, shovels, rakes, and trash bags, the Solders of 2nd Bn., 130th Inf., began the task of clearing years of neglect from the small lot.

Many of the Infantrymen, some who volunteered on their day off, realized their goodwill gesture may be overlooked, but if their work brings happiness to even one child, then their effort will have been worth it.

The desire to make a difference for the children prompted one member of the team, Cpl. Samuel Shehorn, to coordinate the effort to visit and set up a soccer field for the kids.

"Back at home, I have two girls who can go play soccer anytime," Shehorn said. "Over here, the older kids use the soccer field while the younger ones play in a small trash-filled lot."

Bothered by the fact that small children played in a trash dump, Shehorn gathered soccer supplies, coordinated the construction of goals and planned with his company commander, Capt. Eric Kampwerth, to visit the small "soccer" lot along with his platoon.



"This is a fantastic example of what Soldiers are capable of doing if you allow them to," he said. "I can't say enough about these men. They've always done extremely well and it's gratifying to see them and perform what they want to do," said Kampwerth.

"What we're doing is showing the kids we care," Shehorn said. "If the area looks good, the kids may get a little pride in their surroundings (and keep the area up)."

After their trailers were loaded down with broken glass, stones, and hundreds of pounds of trash, the infantrymen got out the soccer balls and played with the children.

"The Soldiers enjoy playing with the kids," said 2nd Lt. Henry Mullins, platoon leader, B Co., 2nd Bn., 130th Inf. "When we interact with the kids, people see that we're out to do positive things."

Delayed progress doesn't reflect failure in Iraq, Rumsfeld says

Sgt. Sara Wood
American Forces Press Service

> "Democracy has never been described as speedy, efficient or perfect."
> Donald Rumsfeld
> Secretary of Defense

WASHINGTON — Delays in drafting an Iraqi constitution are to be expected and do not indicate a problem in the political process there, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said.

In a Pentagon news briefing, Rumsfeld said that the magnitude of the change taking place in Iraq naturally yields some delays, but that success is still on the horizon.

"Democracy has never been described as speedy, efficient or perfect," he said.

"The constitution, to be successful, has to take into account the legitimate interests and fashion a balance in the federalism aspect of it and the other key things that they're worried about."

The different ethnic groups in Iraq are putting their faith in this constitution and its ability to keep the peace, so any draft that excluded one of the three groups — the Sunni Arabs, the Shiites or the Kurds — would be defeated, Rumsfeld said.

The three groups have been working together, and they all see the value of a free, unified Iraq, Rumsfeld said. While the constitution won't solve all the country's problems, it will be a major advance for the cause of democracy in Iraq.

"Regrettably, completing the constitution is not likely to end all the violence in Iraq or solve all the country's problems," he said. "But it will represent one more important step towards cementing a new way of life for Iraqis — one ruled by ballot boxes rather than by death squads."

Rumsfeld dismissed views that the effort in Iraq is doomed, citing the terrorists themselves as examples of progress.

"It's worth noting that the enemy does not appear to share that view," he said. "On the contrary, terrorists like Abu Musab al- Zarqawi are indicating concern about the lack of support from the Iraqi people."

The reasons for decreasing support for terrorists are clear, Rumsfeld said. The terrorists are not a strong nationalist movement; they have lost their safe havens in Iraq; their most prominent leaders are not Iraqis; and their massacres of innocent people have outraged the Iraqi public.

Rumsfeld also expressed optimism about the American people's support for the war, saying he believes they will make the right decision about this important issue.

"Those being tossed about by the winds of concern should recall that Americans are a tough lot and will see their commitments through," he said.

The alternative to continuing the fight in Iraq would be to turn that country over to terrorists who wish to spread destruction all over the world, Rumsfeld said.

"That would be to turn to darkness," he said.

Space Science Center making major leaps

Upgrades will bring science to students

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Much is going on in the heavens these days, and the Coca-Cola Space Science Center in Columbus has it covered.

Following the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's launch of a seven-month Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter flight to Mars Aug. 12, the red planet is expected to make a close approach to earth in October.

It'll be about 43,000,000 miles from Earth, said Larry Pallotta, assistant director of the Space Science Center.

According to NASA, the orbiter carries six instruments designed to examine the atmosphere, surface and subsurface of Mars in very fine detail.

The spacecraft should intercept the red planet in March, and spend the next six months fine-tuning itself into an elongated orbit.

The mission's main science phase is scheduled to begin in November 2006.

Between now and then, Pallotta said the Coca-Cola Space Science Center will be undergoing a heavenly transformation.

The center has closed its doors until the end of August, when the major renovations should be completed.

"We're getting all new lobby exhibits, a bank of four flight simulators linked together and a shuttle landing simulator, which you'll be able to land as if you're at the Kennedy Space Center," Pallotta said.

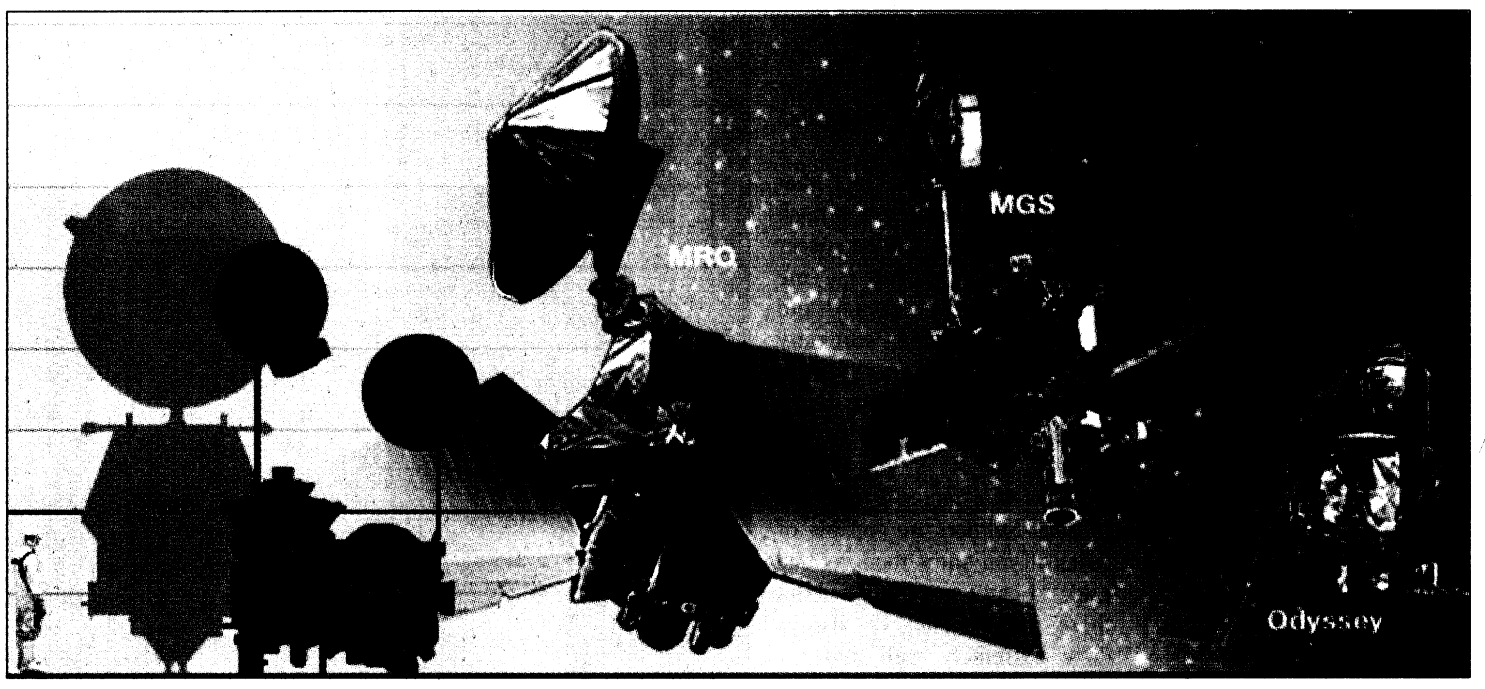
The center is also scheduled to receive an old Gemini capsule with a docking simulator used by astronauts in the 1960s to practice space maneuvers before launches.

The planetarium is also being upgraded with a new laser surround-sound projection system Pallotta said is better than any large-format movie theater.

A weather display where kids can stand in front of a green screen and become television meteorologists, and an infrared display showing how infrared works will also be unveiled then, Pallotta said.

Pallotta hopes the center, with renovations funded by NASA and Columbus State University, becomes a great resource for teachers.

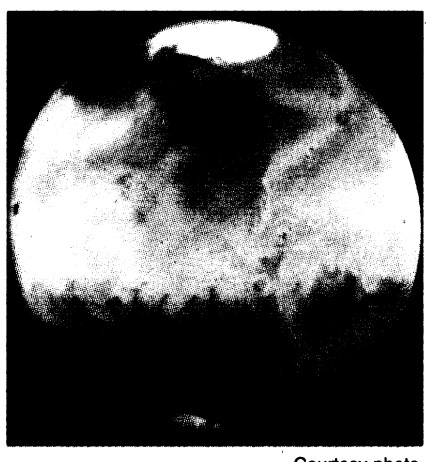
"The big telescope will be up and running as a solar telescope that teachers will be able to control from their classrooms," Pallotta said.



"They can look at sunspots, flares and actually show the kids real-time images of the sun. There aren't too many places in the world where you can do that," he said.

With the Space Science Center tooling exhibits to the Georgia state science standards for middle schools, Pallotta hopes it will become a major destination for school field trips.

With all the ongoing changes, Pallotta had a word of warning.



"There's an e-mail going around that says Mars will be as big as the moon. If Mars were, we wouldn't be here due to the gravitational pull," he said. "Please do not listen to that stuff."

The Coca-Cola Space Science Center is located at 701 Front Ave. For more information, visit to www.ccssc.org.

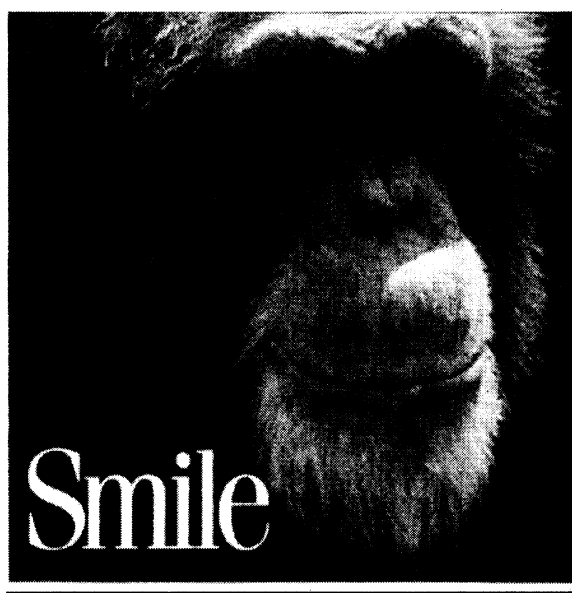
At about 20 feet long, the Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter dwarfs its predecessors, the Mars Global Surveyor and the Mars Odyssey. The Mars Global Surveyor mapped the entire Martian surface from 1997 to 2001. The Mars Odyssey is an orbiting spacecraft that has been analyzing the physical composition of the planet since 2001. The mission of the Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter is to analyze the atmosphere, surface and subsurface of the red planet in greater detail. The spacecraft will begin orbiting Mars in March 2006. Scientists are interested in several large crater basins, a rift valley the size of the continental United States, and volcanoes that measure hundreds of miles wide at the base and up to 16 miles high.



Courtesy photo

This Hubble space telescope photo offers a closer look at Mars, the red planet. Mars is 4,217 miles in diameter and is located 128 million miles from the sun. Based on data collected so far, scientists say the planet has turned out cloudier, cooler and drier than they expected.

Donna Hyatt

Larry Pallotta looks forward to an extensive renovation at the Coca Cola Space Science Center. When finished, the center will contain one of the only solar telescopes accessible to classrooms in the world.

500 attend Chicago workshop on new personnel system

Program's first spiral scheduled to start Oct. 1

Stan Cordell
Army News Service

CHICAGO, Ill. — More than 500 Army personnel managers and specialists attended a workshop in Chicago Aug. 9-12 to prepare for implementation of the National Security Personnel System beginning this fall.

The Department of Defense and the Office of Personnel Management have spent the past year engaged in a design process to establish NSPS.

Congress initially granted DoD authority to establish a new Civilian Human Resources Management System to better support its national security mission in November 2003.

NSPS Spiral 1 is scheduled to be implemented next fiscal year, beginning Oct. 1, with adoption throughout the Army continuing in three phases over the next three years.

The final version of NSPS is a rigorous and broad-based effort to modernize the personnel system for DoD, while preserving the core, enduring values of civil service, said Mary E. Lacy, program executive officer for NSPS.

She said it offers new rules and processes for pay and classification, performance management, reduction in force, disciplinary matters and appeal procedures, and labor-management relations.

Melinda Darby, assistant G-1 for Civilian Personnel, explained that the current system needs to change in order to manage DoD civilians more effectively.

Issues with the system include slow hiring practices, inadequate accountability, limited reassignment flexibility, and set pay, regardless of performance, Darby said.

"NSPS is being established to make the civilian personnel management system more flexible and to make the DoD a more competitive employer," Darby said.

"Extensive training of the Army workforce will be conducted throughout the transitional process. The biggest asset to a successful transition is an educated and knowledgeable HR team. That is why we are here today," Darby told the workshop participants.

The highlight of the workshop was an impromptu speech by Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley.

Daley attended the opening forum of the workshop because of his extreme interest in quality-of-life concerns.

"I feel a strong affinity with this workforce and the military because you believe, as I do, in commitment and a desire to perform selfless service for our country," Daley said.

Daley discussed the challenges of the Chicago school system and social programs and changes he has made to the system during his tenure.

"I believe a person who serves must also assume responsibility for making decisions," Daley said.

Darby presented the mayor an Army coin for his service and dedication in promoting "physical responsibility" and quality of life.

Lt. Gen. Franklin L. Hagenbeck, deputy chief of staff, G-1, spoke of the NSPS program development and the equally critical phase of program implementation.

"This workshop represents a major step forward in opening communication about the flexibility and changes planned under the NSPS authorities," Hagenbeck said.

"The theme 'Civilian Soldiers Supporting Soldiers' demonstrates the intense level of effort the Army is placing on the implementation of this program, as well as our commitment to the Army at war."

In addition, Hagenbeck spoke of recruiting issues, maintaining an adequate fighting force and lamented the loss of Soldiers in the field, and received a standing ovation for his inspiring remarks.

> "NSPS is being established to make the civilian personnel management system more flexible and to make the DoD a more competitive employer."
> Melinda Darby
> Assistant G-1 for Civilian Personnel

Lacy summarized some of the highlights of the new program.

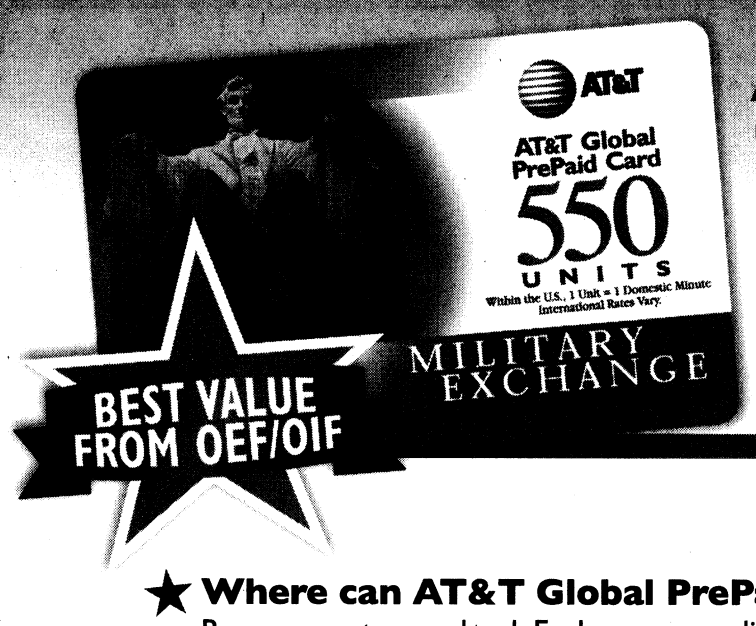
The pay system will change, she said, adding that there will be significantly less than the current 150 pay grades currently in the system.

The General Service, or GS grade and pay structure, will be replaced with a four-tier pay system called Pay Banding.

Initially an individual's income will remain the same as it is in the present system, but as the program progresses, variables will begin to occur based on performance, not time-in-grade.

The new system will combine similar occupations and omit the familiar fixed-step rates.

Lacy said some of the highlights of NSPS include:



- Simplified pay banding structure, allowing flexibility in assigning work.
- A performance management system that requires supervisors to set clear expectations (linked to DoD's goals and objectives) and employees to be accountable.
- Streamlined and more responsive hiring processes.
- More efficient, faster procedures for addressing disciplinary and performance problems, while protecting employee due process rights.
- A labor relations system that recognizes the national security mission and the need to act swiftly to execute the mission, while preserving collective bargaining rights of employees.

PURCHASE THE BEST VALUE PREPAID CARD AT YOUR MILITARY EXCHANGE

AT&T Global PrePaid Cards offer low rates that are optimized for military personnel calling home to the U.S.

The 550-Unit AT&T Global PrePaid Card offers deployed soldiers the best value when calling to the U.S. from Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom — just 19¢ a minute when the Card is purchased at any OEF/OIF location. When purchased online or at other Exchange locations in the U.S. and around the world, it's just 21¢ a minute.*

★ Where can AT&T Global PrePaid Cards be purchased?
Buy yours at your local Exchange or online at www.aafes.com. Friends and family of military personnel can also purchase Cards for you at this site. When deployed in Iraq, Afghanistan and Kuwait, Cards can be purchased at the Exchange, where the price of the 550-Unit Card is just $35.

When calling within the U.S., 1 unit equals 1 minute of calling. When making international calls from overseas, more units are used per minute of call time and the number of units is different based on the country you are calling from. For example, when using the 550-Unit Card, for calls made from OEF/OIF to the U.S., 1 minute equals 3 units of call time. So the 550-Unit Card is good for 183 minutes of calling. For information on other countries, just call the 800 Customer Service number on the back of your Card.

★ Optimized military rates. Great AT&T benefits:
- Minutes never expire.
- Low rates. Remember, prepaid cards bought at other retailers may have higher overseas rates.
- Recharge with AT&T Autominutes® and never run out of minutes.
- Toll free Customer Service available 24/7.
- INFO TO GO available† with weather, sports and more!

★ Visit Camp AT&T.
Before you're deployed, go to www.att.com/mil and check out the Camp AT&T section. It contains information on calling from all the forward-deployed areas, other overseas locations and from U.S. Naval ships.

In fiscal 2003, 6,859 Chinese children were adopted by U.S. families, 5,209 came from Russia and 2,328 from Guatemala. The Chinese adoptions increased 35.7 percent from 2002. Rounding out the top five countries for foreign adoptions are South Korea and Kazakhstan. More than 125,000 children are adopted annually in the U.S.

P.E. teacher earns Teacher of the Year Award

Combines work, play to make P.E. fun

While schools across the country are cutting their physical education programs in an attempt to increase academics and improve standardized test scores, one Fort Benning teacher is setting out to prove that physical fitness doesn't have to be neglected in order to raise book smarts.

Sherri McKendree, P.E. teacher at Loyd Elementary School, has designed a fitness program that incorporates exercises for the mind as well as the body.

"I'm trying to prove you don't have to have one or the other, you can combine the two," McKendree said. "Children need physical activities. The growing problem of childhood obesity is enormous now, so we're doing the kids an injustice if we take activity time away from them."

"Her program has so many different activities in it to address every aspect of a child's physical and academic needs," said Kris Keske, who teaches fifth grade at Loyd. "She personalizes it for every kid and she tries new things all the time. I've never seen another P.E. teacher as dedicated as Sherri is."

For her efforts, Keske nominated McKendree for Teacher of the Year 2006, and McKendree won the title for the Georgia-Alabama District.

"P.E. can be exhausting if you do it right," Keske said. "Sherri works so hard and never quits. I thought she deserved an award for that. I had no doubt she was going to win it."

This month, McKendree will prepare to compete for the Department of Defense Education Activity Teacher of the Year 2006 title by putting together a video documentary focusing on her teaching philosophy and the program she offers at Loyd.

"Every month Sherry creates a new theme," Keske said. "All the activities for that month incorporate that theme. Last year we had a field day and the theme was space. The bulletin boards were decorated with aliens and planets, and the activities were geared around space."

McKendree also implemented a program that encourages kids to run and keep track of their annual mileage by imagining they're running to another country for a special event.

"This year we're running to Italy for the Olympics," McKendree said. "We run for 15 minutes each class, and we keep track of the miles we run. We add everybody's miles together and map it out."

"After each run, the kids count their heartbeats and talk about respiration," McKendree said.

"They talk about it all the time," Keske said. "They get excited about physical fitness."

"She always thinks of something new and interesting

Search on for new TV host

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The search is on.

Fort Benning's Command Access Channel anchor and producer, Cynthia Salinas, is on the hunt for the right person to step into the shoes left by former Benning Bivouac hostess Peggy Cornwell.

"This is not a paid position," Salinas said.

"It's going to have to be a labor of love for whomever takes it."

Benning Bivouac debuted on the post channel in 2003, as "the show that makes your life in the military a little bit easier." The show has covered everything from recipes to household tips and ideas for decorating military family housing.

Salinas said there's no set of qualifications for the next hostess, or host.

The most important thing is for them to be able to have fun with it.

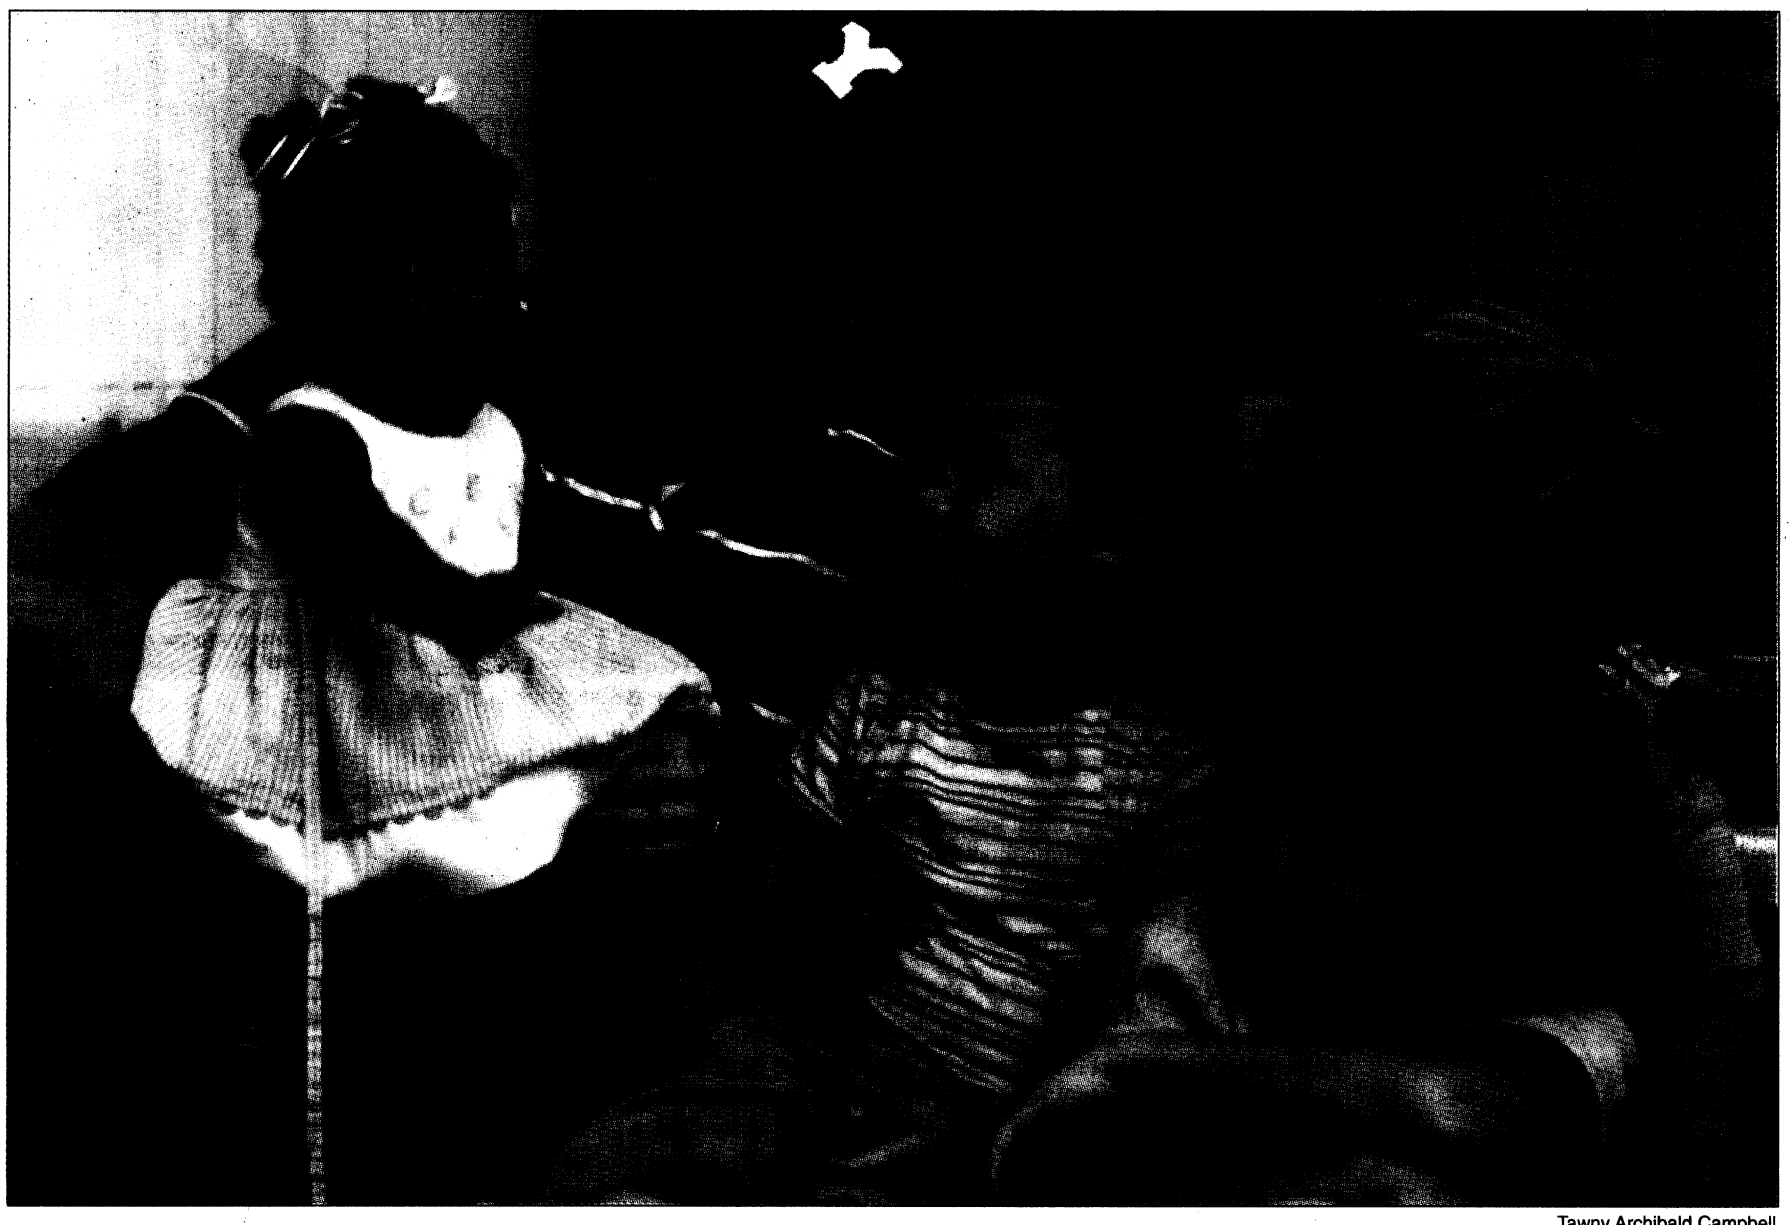
Anyone interested in the role may send in a five-minute audition tape. The tapes must be received in the Public Affairs Office by 5 p.m. Sept. 16 in order to be considered.

As for content, Salinas said she's looking for "simple."

"You don't have to have a lot of equipment. It doesn't have to be about cooking," she said.

Salinas described the content as "a condensed Martha Stewart" show, possibly of making something from items found in a kitchen junk drawer or cooking something with ingredients found in the average refrigerator.

Cornwell, she said, was well-prepared prior to taping and opened her home for filming each show —something the next host will need to be willing to do as well.



"This is hard work," Salinas said.

Although there is no target air date yet for the next show, Salinas said it would depend on the individual and his or her ideas.

"Who knows, depending on the person and the ideas, we could have a show going in a week (after the tapes are due)."

Audition tapes should be mailed or hand carried to the Public Affairs Office, 6751 Constitution Loop, Room 604 Infantry Hall, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905. For more information, call Salinas at 545-4901.

Bailey, Randy, Riley, Catherine and Catelyn Lundell spend an evening together singing songs, laughing and playing. The Lundells have adopted three children in seven years.

And Bailey makes three for Benning family

Tawny Archibald Campbell

After years of struggling to conceive a child and then miscarrying, Catherine and Randy Lundell were frustrated.

They had spent thousands of dollars on fertility measures, but were still left with empty arms.

That's when a family member suggested adoption.

"I had never even thought of it before," Catherine said. "But we decided it was the Lord's plan."

After completing a home study and turning in their paperwork, the Lundell two became the Lundell three when baby Catelyn, now 7, was born.

"All we asked for was a healthy child," Catherine said about Catelyn, who is half Korean. "We didn't care the color or what container it came in. The body is just a container for the spirit."

Three years later the family grew again, this time when the Lundells brought home a bouncing baby boy. Riley, now 5, is part Samoan, fulfilling his father's wish to have a Samoan son to play for the Brigham Young University Cougar football team.

Last summer, the Lundells were looking toward their third adoption. The adoptive mother handpicked the Lundell family and Randy, a family practice doctor, even delivered the baby, but the day after the birth, the mother changed her mind and kept the baby boy.

"It was a disappointment, but we feel those who are meant to be here will come," Randy said. "Bailey must have been waiting in the wings."

Even though the previous two adoptions had been during Randy's

Members discover family ties

Kris Gonzalez

A Web site dedicated to families of 3rd Infantry Division Soldiers is serving as a conduit for Soldiers and families all over the world, bringing wives, husbands and parents of Soldiers together.

Parents and spouses of 3rd Brigade Soldiers who are, or have been, deployed to Iraq, finally met face to face Aug. 20 at the home of Kathie Thornton on Fort Benning.

Thornton, has been a member of the Web group since Jan. 18, a day after her husband deployed to Iraq with 3rd Inf. Div.

"There's always somebody on the site who can relate to what you're going through," Thornton said.

"There's always somebody who is feeling the same way and saying, 'we'll get through this together.'"

Now the members who knew each other only by screen names and posted photos, are able to put a face with a name.

"We had never seen each other in person, but when we finally did, it was like we had always known each other," said Reese Bishop, who traveled from Virginia to meet up with her newfound friends.

"When somebody comes on and says 'Hi, I'm a new member,' we automatically say 'welcome to the family,' because we're all family here,"

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Can I press criminal charges under the Uniformed Code of Military Justice?

A: To understand the law in this area, you must first realize that there are two different types of law — civil law and criminal law.

In a typical civil law case, one individual sues another. If your dog jumps over the backyard fence and bites your neighbor's hand, for example, and that injury requires medical treatment, your neighbor may sue you for the cost of the medical care related to the dog bite.

The remedy in a civil case is money, and the victim decides whether to sue or settle.

In a typical criminal law case, the government prosecutes an individual. If you go to a downtown movie theater and yell, "Fire!" when there is no fire, for example, the state of Georgia can attempt to punish you.

The remedy in a criminal case can be a fine, jail time, or both.

In criminal cases, a representative of the government decides whether or not to take a case to court. The decision is not made by the victim.

So, a Soldier who is the victim of a crime cannot "press criminal charges" under the UCMJ.

The military chain of command alone decides whether a case should be handled by counseling, by court-martial, or anywhere in between. A victim can be a witness for the prosecution, but he does not make the decision to prosecute.

New meningococcal vaccine protects teens

MCG Health, Inc.

A new vaccine licensed for young teens and those entering college can help prevent meningococcal disease, a serious bacterial infection, and is being supported by the MCG Children's Medical Center.

"Menactra, or MV4, is a new meningococcal vaccine that is recommended for those ages 11 and 12, those age 15 or who are entering high school, and those entering college or planning to study overseas," said Dr. Dennis Murray, a pediatric specialist at the MCG Children's Medical Center.

"It also has the support of professional organizations such as the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Academy of Family Physicians."

Menactra is the first meningococcal vaccine to be routinely recommended for this population. Young people, particularly those in close contact such as in a school or dorm setting, may have an increased risk of meningococcal disease. It has many of the same symptoms as the flu — fever, headache, extreme tiredness and vomiting — along with other symptoms like stiff neck, light sensitivity and a rash consisting of small, purplish black-red dots. However, it is a serious bacterial infection that affects the brain and spinal cord and can kill an otherwise healthy young person in 48 hours or less.

Most patients with meningococcal disease develop meningitis, although those patients who do not develop meningitis actually have a higher mortality and morbidity rate. It's estimated that up to 2,800 Americans contract meningococcal infection annually, and 10 percent of those will die. Up to 20 percent of those who survive may experience permanent disabilities, including hearing loss, neurological damage and limb amputations.

"The highest incidence of meningococcal disease actually occurs in infants and children younger than four years, and the Menactra vaccine may soon be licensed for this at-risk population as well," Murray said.

For teens in the at-risk population, Menactra protects against 70 to 80 percent of the strains causing disease.

"Vaccines remain the best way to protect your children against meningococcal infection and other diseases," Murray said.

Before your teen starts school, be sure to talk to their pediatrician about the new meningococcal vaccine and other needed vaccines.

If you think your teen may have meningococcal disease, seek medical help immediately.

The Martin Army Community Hospital allergy clinic provides meningococcal vaccinations Monday through Thursday 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. and on Fridays 9 a.m. to 11 a.m.

Teacher: Combines P.E., academics

to do that meets the kids' physical needs," Keske said about her coworker.

"I try to reinforce the learning they're doing in the classroom, to back up the teachers, and help them with their academics, while at the same time, giving them a good workout," McKendree said.

When they're playing games, she said, the kids work on their reading skills because they read the cards and directions. They work on math by rolling dice and adding numbers, and they work on spelling by using letters to put words together.

"I've tried to design my program to prove that you can still improve test scores without taking away P.E.," McKendree said. "You can use that time and get (students) up and moving and improve their physical fitness while teaching and reviewing academics."

McKendree, who has been teaching since 1981, and has taught on post for six years, said the best thing about teaching is feeling like she can have an influence on young children.

"I've taught every age, and I've learned from each age," McKendree said. "Elementary kids are my favorite because they're young enough to make a difference. If they don't like physical activity it's usually because they haven't done enough to feel comfortable and successful. But they haven't already closed their minds to it. You can teach them things that will help them make the right choices in life and to live happier lives and healthier lives."

McKendree will submit her video package in September and should find out the results of the DODEA competition in October.

Adoption: An option for Army families schooling, the Lundells had no problems adopting once more, this time as a part of the military. Randy is a captain serving as a family practice doctor at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Less than six months after their failed adoption, the newest member of the family was born. Bailey, now 8 months old, is African-American. The Lundells proudly refer to themselves as the "International House of Lundell."

"I don't think people thought of us as an ethnic family until Bailey," Catherine said, "even though Catelyn is Korean and Riley is Samoan."

"Our family is now like the paint at Home Depot," Randy added. "We go from light to black and run the spectrum in between."

Catherine said she and Randy don't see the different colors of skin in their family as an issue.

She is a firm believer that the children meant to be in a family will find their way there, whether through "natural ways" or adoption, and it doesn't matter what color of skin they have.

"We could have said no to ethnic kids in our family," Catherine said. "But we can't imagine being a family without all our kids — and we know there is at least one more. We can feel it, and when the time is right they will find their way to us, just like the rest of them did."

Even though the Lundells have had a relatively easy time adopting, typically adopting has been hard for military families.

Most adoptive families have to be very patient and resourceful.

Some agencies are reluctant to begin the adoption process with military members because of how often they move and the threat of deployments.

"The issue of relocation is one of the major problems our families have faced when they are considering adoption," said Al Smith, deputy director of the Family Service Center at the Naval Development Station in South Weymouth, Mass. Smith said even though the law allows a child from one state to be adopted by a family who moves to another state, some agencies are still uneasy about placing a child who will move across state lines.

"Military families have a harder time with the paperwork, because of stability," said Chaplain (Maj.) Jeff Hawkins, with the Chaplain Family Life Center. "What military families can bring to the table is incredible adaptability. They tend to be very solution focused and they don't run from challenges, but face challenges head on."

Even though there will be challenges, the military and government is working hard to make adoption a more viable option for families.

Tax credits, military reimbursements and support services are just a few of the options available to adoptive families. (See Closer Look)

The Chaplain Family Life Center offers counseling to families in all phases of the adoption process, Hawkins said.

"We can deal with anything in terms of blended families and adoptive children," Hawkins said. "Family dynamics is our bread and butter in terms or relationship and family planning."

Hawkins said that even though the chaplains are not central in the actual adoption process, they can help families out.

"I think adoption is the ultimate act of grace — in spiritual terms, it means I will choose to take you as my own and give you everything I have," he said.

"If someone has a big enough heart to do such a beautiful thing as adopt, all we want to do is help them build the sort of family they want to have — help for their journey."

For more information on how the chaplains at the Family Life Center can help, call 545-1760.

CLOSER LOOK

Here are some things to know when trying to file for adoption while serving in the military.

Time off — If passed, the Military Adoption Act, H.R. 1373, will make it easier for service members to adopt children by allowing them to take paid leave. The act provides up to 21 days of paid leave to the primary caregiver immediately after placement of an adopted child in their home.

Financial help — According to the Adoption Reimbursement Policy, U.S. Department of Defense Instruction 1341.9, if you are on active duty, you are eligible for reimbursement of expenses up to $2,000 for the adoption of a single child and up to $5,000 per family per year. There is one catch. The adoption must be arranged through a nonprofit agency and reimbursement is paid after the adoption is finalized. Fees that can be reimbursed include agency fees, legal fees, placement fees, medical and travel expenses. Check with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate for more information about the reimbursement.

Insurance — Children placed with military families may be covered by their military medical program before the adoption is finalized. If you have questions about this process, contact your commanding officer or call (303) 333-0845.

Under the Program for Persons with Disabilities, military parents may be eligible to receive up to $1,000 a month for disabled or special needs adopted children.

The military also has a program called the Exceptional Family Member Program that will ensure adoptive parents of special needs children are assigned to bases or duty stations with programs or medical care to meet the needs of the child.

Tax benefits — A tax credit of up to $10,630 is available for all adoptive families. .

Support — The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Center offers emotional support for families looking to adopt, those in the process of adopting and those who have blended families.

Web site: Offers support for families said Amanda Farris, who traveled from Fort Stewart, Ga.

For Thornton and Reese, that notion comes literally. While corresponding with each other on the Web site, the two Army wives discovered they are cousins.

"We were online, and she saw my picture, and some of her family members saw my picture and they thought we looked almost identical. So she started naming names and telling me a little bit about her family and she said something about Lester Lee.

"I said, 'Oh, I have a Lester Lee in my family.' As we started talking about dates and places, it all seemed to add up."

After more research on both sides, Bishop and Reese traced their family trees back to Lester Lee, who is Thornton's grandfather and Bishop's great uncle. Thornton, who had lived in Pittsburgh, Pa., spent many summers at Virginia Beach, Va., just miles away from where Bishop grew up.

"I had been looking for 30 years for anybody related to my grandfather," Thornton said. "When she put her picture on the site, I thought there was no way we weren't related."

Debbie Stein, of Washington, had a similar virtual encounter when she began chatting on the site in 2003.

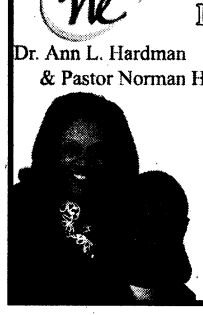
When her son, Travis, was deployed to Iraq with 3rd Brigade, Stein discovered the link while searching www.frgnews.com for information about her son's unit. She watched it for a month before she made her first posting. Soon after, she received an e-mail from Terri Westveer, whose fiance was also deployed with 3rd ID.

"(Westveer) wrote 'The Travis I know lives and breathes Washington sports,'" Stein said. "She asked me to tell her a little more about him and I said the last time I had talked to him he had proposed to his girlfriend. She (Westveer) said, send me a picture.'"

"That's my adoptive son," Westveer wrote back.

Westveer's fiancee was not only in the same unit as Stein's son, but the two Soldiers had been working together on the same Bradley crew.

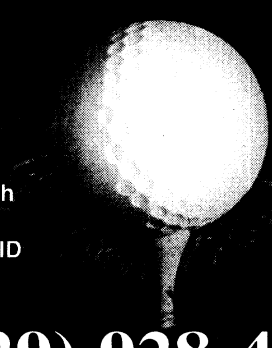
"(There are) millions of people in the world, and I find her," Stein said. "Not only that, but they (the Westveers) were very friendly."



Stein is also a co-founder of Mothers of Military Support. She and another 3rd Inf. Div. mom, Elizabeth Johnston, created the not-for-profit organization to support service members, their families and veterans.

"We provide support to the Soldiers by adopting them and sending them care packages," Stein said. "We helped ship over 181 quilts made by a local church."

Earlier this year, MOMS raised funds to help buy a new washer and dyer for the family of a 3rd Inf. Div. Soldier whose Fort Stewart home burned down.



"We help veterans and families who may be struggling because their Soldier is deployed, or when the money is not coming in," Stein said. We'll provide them with groceries, a shoulder, a hug."

Safe to cross

Kris Gonzalez

Staff Sgt. Gregory Lee, a Department of Defense police officer, stops traffic on Ingersoll Avenue Monday afternoon to let Faith Middle School seventh-grader Mark Harman cross. Fort Benning police officers man crosswalks near each of the post's seven schools before and after school to ensure the students' safety as they cross the streets. Students are required to walk their bicycles when they cross.

Manage time wisely

Chaplain (Capt.) Jim Rozmiarik
14th Combat Support Hospital

REFLECTIONS

Many of us in America have a time management problem. It's not so much that we do not manage our time well, but that we are trying to accomplish too many things within a 24-hour day. In order to accomplish the impossible, we take things out of our lives that we feel we can do without. We try to streamline our lives, only taking the time to accomplish the really important tasks.

However streamlined our lives become, we will still make time for things that matter to us. For instance, no matter how consumed we become with the tasks at hand, we still take time out to eat. Whether that means we grab it on the go or we sit down to a formal meal, it is important for us to eat. We realize that without food in our system, we will begin to starve our bodies.

The same is true when it comes to our personal hygiene. Despite our busy schedule, we will most likely start the day off with a shower, combing our hair and making ourselves presentable for the rest of the world to see us.

We would not dream of going straight out of bed and into our automobiles without getting ready, no matter how much we have to do today.

For some of us, one of the first things to go from our busy schedules is the time that it takes to stay spiritually fit. We stop attending worship services, we neglect Holy Scriptures, and we stop talking and listening to God. However, in doing so, what we are really doing is pushing God out of our lives.

There is a story from the Bible that addresses this. It contrasts two sisters, Mary and Martha, both friends of Jesus. On one occasion, Jesus came to visit them at their home. Martha, who seemed to be the typical type "A" personality, was busy running around back and forth from the kitchen, trying to make everything perfect for Jesus. In contrast, Mary sat at the feet of Jesus, listening to what he taught.

After a while, Martha, overwhelmed with the tasks at hand and frustrated with the lack of help from her sister, finally had enough. She vented her concerns to Jesus.

"Lord," she said, "doesn't it seem unfair to you that my sister just sits here while I do all the work? Tell her to come and help me."

But the Lord said to her, "My dear Martha, you are so upset over all these details? There is really only one thing worth being concerned about. Mary has discovered it — and I won't take it away from her." (Luke 11:38-42)

We can learn from Mary's example. No matter how hectic life gets, we all need to take time out for God. Whether that means going to your place of worship, spending time in Holy Scriptures or just taking some moments out of your day meditating on God and conversing with him, we need to be involved in some sort of spiritual discipline. This will make us spiritually fit.

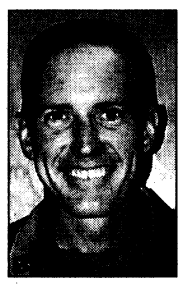
By sustaining our spirit, we will come to realize that this is time well spent. Sadie and Bessie Delany emphasize this important truth.

They write in the Christian Reader, Vol. 33, No. 2, "No one should ever be too busy or too pressured or tired to make a time and place for God in their lives. After all, he has to manage the whole world, and he's never too busy for us."

Chaos will reign if you don't set rules

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

"I'm going CRAAAAZZZY," she said as she grabbed me by the arm, and with her other hand, simultaneously extracted a stub-nose Yellow #5 Crayola from her 19-month-old son's left nostril. "I just don't know if I can do this much longer." (I wasn't sure if she meant maintain the death grip on me, her counselor, or keep her finger inserted up her toddler's nasal cavity). But I was sure she was feeling just about like any of us who've had children.



Right?

There are, undoubtedly, no greater blessings in life than feeling chubby little hands give a bear hug at bedtime.

And there are, undoubtedly, no greater challenges in life than seeing a 15-year-old with enough body piercings to permanently ensure his unemployability!

Parenthood ... the ecstasy ... the agony.

Last week we talked about how to make children mind without losing yours. We said that parents have two main roles: the role of a leader and the role of a model to and for our children.

Hawkins

As a leader, we have got to do three things well for the sake of our kids: 1) We make the rules, 2) We stick together, and 3) We stay in charge.

This week, I want to look at the first of those three "METL" tasks (military term for the mission essential things we need to be good at).

Why is it so essential that we make the rules? I think we all know the answer if we've ever been a part of any organization, unit or family where there were no rules. What happens without rules?

Chaos!

Chaos is dangerous on the highway, in the platoon, and in your living room. Chaos gets people hurt — physically and emotionally.

So here's seven things to practice when making the rules for your crew at home:

• Rules are the railings that keep family members from falling off the balconies of life. Rules are a good thing.

• Make rules for what you do want, not what you don't want.

• Make the rules very specific ("In on time" is not as specific as "weekdays in by 10 p.m. and no later than 11:30 on Fridays and Saturdays").

• Choose rewards and consequences that you are willing to enforce. Consistency is the key.

• Include your child in making rules whenever you can.

• Inform your child of each rule — make it visual when you can.

• Check for understanding by having your child repeat what he or she understands "the rule" to be.

Want some more practical tips on how to make your children mind without losing yours? Then roll out Sunday and make your way to CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel, where we're enjoying a series entitled, "Making Children Mind Without Losing Yours," or call The Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606, at 545-1760.

We're here to help you any way that we can in the most rewarding (and most demanding) calling of all: parenthood!

I look forward to seeing you!

A determined man risks everything to save his innocent older brother from execution in Prison Break, a compelling Fox drama series premiering with a special two-hour episode Monday.

The first scripted series of the 2005-06 season gets under way as Michael Scofield (Wentworth Miller, Joan of Arcadia) contemplates a bleak family situation. His older brother, Lincoln Burrows (Dominic Purcell, John Doe), is on death row, scheduled to be executed in a few months for a startling assassination Michael is convinced he didn't commit.

With time and options both running out, the desperate Michael — a structural engineer with access to the blueprints for the prison — holds up a bank in order to get himself incarcerated alongside his brother in Fox River State Penitentiary.

"Prison Break is a thriller, but it's really a family drama," Miller said. "It's really the story of: How far would one go to save a loved one? And in Michael's case, it's to the wall. Each episode will be his resolve and ruthlessness and brilliance running smack into the brick wall that is chance and fate and human nature and all those things you cannot predict or prepare for."

Actually, for most of the first hour — which is all Fox made available to TV critics for preview — things go pretty smoothly for Michael, almost to a point that strains credibility, as he coolly stands up to and even baits some very dangerous thugs behind bars. He's in for a rude awakening, however, Miller said.

"You didn't see the second hour, but I can tell you, things go wrong very quickly," the 33-year-old actor said. "There's a great deal of coolness and assertiveness on Michael's part in the first half, but the second half definitely will be a struggle for him, getting punched and shoved and getting flipped over a balcony. Someone also may come after him with some very sharp instruments.

"I wanted to make sure that while it's clear Michael is somewhat smarter than your average bear, he isn't a superhero. Michael has worked out a certain persona that he hopes will help him navigate these very dangerous waters, but he doesn't have Jackie Chan martial arts moves. He very much is in very real danger."

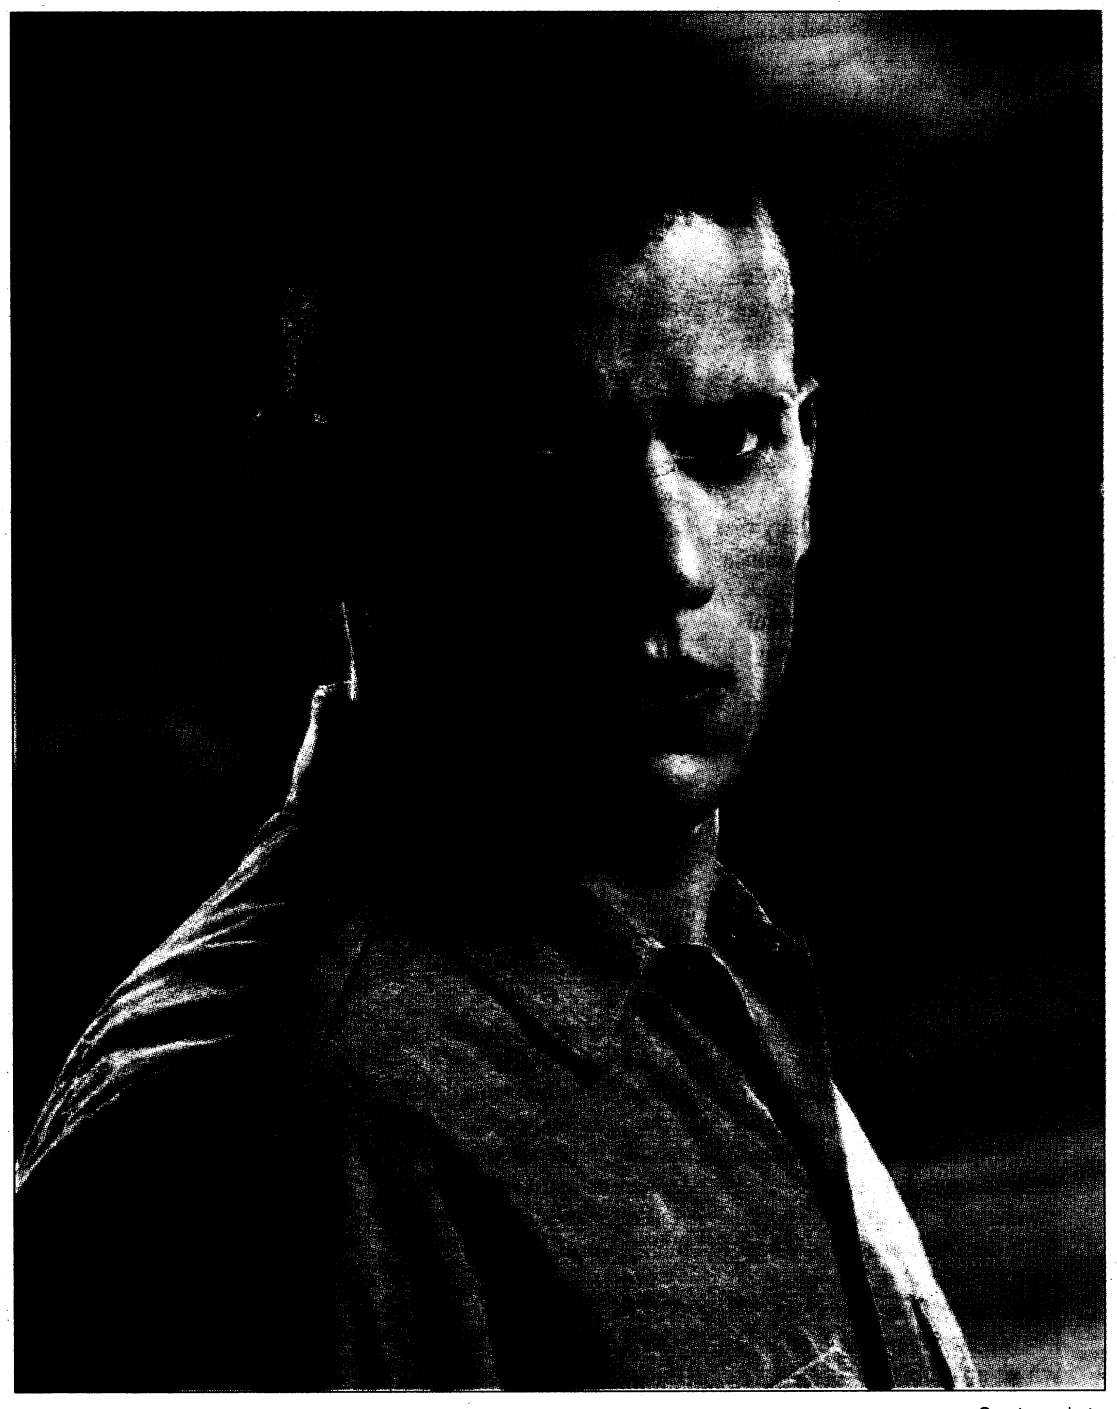
On the other hand, series creator Paul Scheuring said, "Prison Break won't be nearly as relentlessly bleak and violent as HBO's controversial prison drama Oz was. Eventually, Michael, Lincoln and some other inmates will actually break out of the prison. Until then, the tone will lighten up from time to time.

"Everyone asks about that, because Oz is kind of the last serial TV prison show," said Scheuring, who is also head writer and an executive producer on Prison Break. "I think people either really liked (Oz) in kind of a dark way or they have a very caustic reaction to it.

"This story is about hope. It's about the caper. It's about the mystery. It's all that stuff. So this is not about the depravities of mankind."

"But it's also got a lot of humor," said executive producer Brett Ratner, who directed the pilot. "My attraction to (the show) was that not only was it smart and compelling, but it also had moments of humanity and humor. These characters are very colorful, and most of the best drama happens when there also is humor. So I think it's really smart that you're going to be able to laugh and maybe be scared for these characters, maybe even cry at some point."

Scheuring won't reveal when the prison break actually will occur, but he says that big event certainly won't signal the end of the series by any means.



"There is a larger canvas here, and it is longer than a season," he said. "It's not going to be something like 24, where we're perpetually reinventing a new obstacle to overcome each season. Season two will just be the escalation of season one.

"The model is going to be very much like The Great Escape, in which we spend 'X' amount of time within the actual walls and, thereafter, we're going to break quite a number of people out and scatter them into the winds: They're going to go to the four corners of the country in planes, trains and automobiles. Each of them has an individual kind of end to their story line — one for hope, one for love, one for exoneration, and one for truth."

Meanwhile, Miller is focused on bringing to life Michael's scary new world behind bars.

"Michael is not going to breeze through this experience," he said.

"It's going to transform him in ways both unexpected and expected. Of course, his body already has been mutated thanks to the tattoo that he now wears."

Wentworth Miller stars in Prison Break, premiering Monday on Fox.

The Cave — A rescue team is sent down into the world's largest cave system to try to find the spelunkers who first explored the depths. But when the group's escape route is cut off, they are hunted by the monstrous creatures that live down below.

Starring Morris Chestnut and Eddie Cibrian.

The Cave is rated PG-13 for intense creature violence.

The Constant Gardener — When a British diplomat's wife — a socially conscious lawyer — turns up dead in Kenya, he sets out to find the truth surrounding her murder.

In the process, he finds out that his wife had been compiling data against a multinational drug company that uses helpless Africans as guinea pigs to test a tuberculosis remedy with unfortunate fatal side effects. Those who may have had the most reason to silence her are closer to home than he ever imagined.

Starring Ralph Fiennes and Rachel Weisz.

The Constant Gardener is rated R for language, some violent images and sexual content and nudity.

The Brothers Grimm — Brothers Jake and Will Grimm (Matt Damon and Heath Ledger), renowned collectors of folklore, have made a career of traveling from village to village pretending to rid them of "enchanted" creatures. Their bluff is called, however, when they are forced by Napoleon's French government to investigate a haunted forest where girls have been mysteriously disappearing.

The Brothers Grimm is rated PG-13 for violence, frightening sequences and brief suggestive material.

Undiscovered — An aspiring New York model falls in love with a struggling musician when they suddenly cross paths on a subway train. Having achieved success as a model, she decides to move to L.A. to launch an acting career. While out on the town, the aspiring model again crosses paths with the struggling musician.

As his profile rises, so do the demands of his budding new career and they both discover that the price of fame may be higher than anyone expected.

Starring Pell James, Steven Strait and Ashlee Simpson.

Undiscovered is rated PG-13 for sexual material including dialogue, partial nudity, language and drug content.

Supercross: The Movie — Two brothers overcome emotional and physical obstacles to achieve success in the competitive world of supercross racing.

The brothers' conflicts are magnified by their different life choices and their decision to become competitors and rivals.

Starring Steve Howey, Mike Vogel and Sophia Bush.

Supercross: The Movie is rated PG-13 for language and some sexuality.

Valiant — A comedy-adventure tale of a brave-but-undersized pigeon named Valiant (voiced by Ewan McGregor), who dreams of joining the elite Royal Homing Pigeon Service and serving crown and country during World War II.

Despite his small stature, Valiant's ambitions are enormous as he keeps a stiff upper beak and endures rigorous training in preparation for a dangerous mission to deliver vital messages to troops behind enemy lines.

Valiant is rated G.

Red Eye — Lisa Reisert (Rachel McAdams) hates to fly, but the terror that awaits her on the night flight to Miami has nothing to do with a fear of flying.

Moments after takeoff, Lisa's seatmate, Jackson (Cillian Murphy) menacingly reveals the real reason he's on board: he's an operative in a plot to kill a rich and powerful businessman, and Lisa is the key to its success.

If she refuses to cooperate, an assassin awaiting a call from Jackson will kill her father.

Red Eye is rated PG-13 for some intense sequences of violence, and language.

The 40-Year-Old Virgin — Forty-year-old Andy Stitzer (Steve Carrell) has done quite a few things in his life. He's got a cushy job stamping invoices at an electronics superstore, a nice apartment with a collection of action figures and comic books, good friends, a nice attitude.

But there's just one little thing he hasn't quite gotten around to doing yet — Andy's never, ever, ever had sex.

Also starring Catherine Keener and Paul Rudd.

The 40-Year-Old Virgin is rated R for pervasive sexual content, language and drug use.

The Great Raid — Set in the Philippines in 1945, The Great Raid tells the true story of the 6th Ranger Battalion, under the command of Lt. Col. Henry Mucci (Benjamin Bratt), who undertake a daring rescue mission against all odds.

Traveling 30 miles behind enemy lines, the 6th Ranger Battalion aims to liberate more than 500 American prisoners of war from the notorious Cabanatuan Japanese POW camp in the most audacious rescue ever.

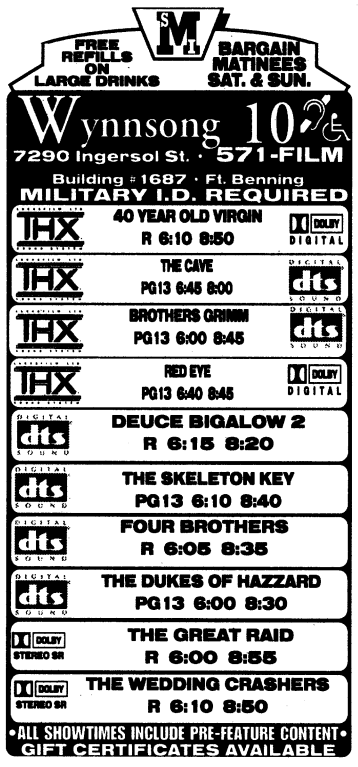
Also starring James Franco, Connie Nielsen and Joseph Fiennes.

The Great Raid is rated R for strong war violence and brief language.

Four Brothers — Four adopted brothers come together to bury the woman who raised them.

At the funeral, the brothers discover that their mother may have been murdered and they want revenge.

Starring Mark Wahlberg, Andre Benjamin, Tyrese Gibson and Garrett Hedlund.



Four Brothers is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language and sexual content.

Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo — Deuce Bigalow (Rob Schneider) is seduced back to his unlikely pleasure-for-pay profession, when his former pimp (Eddie Griffin) is implicated in the murders of Europe's greatest gigolos.

Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo is rated R for pervasive strong crude and sexual humor, language, nudity and drug content.

Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival
Sept. 2-4

Callaway Gardens will host the seventh annual Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival Sept. 2-4.

The fun beings at 5 p.m. Sept. 2 with the traditional "balloon glow," weather permitting. As the sun makes its exit, some 25 to 30 balloons take their annual first bow as they inflate, then hover, close to the ground.

Guests can also learn firsthand about the art of ballooning from the pilots themselves.

Gates open at 6 a.m. Sept. 3. The balloons will launch at 7:15 a.m., traveling approximately five to seven miles before landing.

The Columbus Exchange Club will host a pancake breakfast Sept. 2 and 3 ($5 per person including a beverage) under the Pavilion at Robin Lake Beach.

The balloon flights are repeated at 5:30 p.m. Sept. 3 and 7:15 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Sept. 4.

There will also be tethered balloon rides, a classic car show Sept. 3, sidewalk chalk art, children's games, face painting, T-shirt decorating, helicopter rides, balloon demonstrations, live music, traditional beach activities and Frisbee dog demonstrations.

Another highlight Sept. 3 will be the Nickelodeon Game Lab presentations, with all the fun and messy interaction of the popular games shows, at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Admission to the event is $13 plus tax per adult and $6.50 plus tax per child. Children 5 and younger are admitted free.

Half-price admission will be offered starting at 5 p.m. Sept. 2 and from 6 to 9 a.m. and 5 to 6 p.m. Sept. 3 and 4.

Callaway Gardens is in Pine Mountain, Ga., 30 minutes north of Columbus.

Labor Day weekend celebration
Sept. 2-4

Florence Marina State Park invites the public to the annual Labor Day weekend celebration Sept. 2-4.

There will be boat rides down the Chattahoochee River in the park's pontoon boat. Because of high fuel costs, a $1 donation is requested for boat rides, but crafts and games are free.

The park's pool will be open, so bring a picnic and spend the day.

Visitors are reminded that a $3 park fee will be required for each vehicle.

Florence Marina State Park is located 16 miles west of Lumpkin, Ga., on Hwy. 39C.

For more information, call Trena Evans, interpretative ranger, at (229) 838-4706.

Labor Day Fiddlers Contest
Sept. 5

Westville's Fiddlers Contest offers the perfect 1850s setting for musicians and music lovers to show off their talents or to sit back and enjoy listening to skilled performers compete.

The youth fiddling begins at 11 a.m., and adult fiddling begins at 2 p.m.

Westville is located one mile south of Lumpkin, Ga.

Admission is $10 for adults, $8 for seniors, college students and military, $4 for students in kindergarten through 12th grade and $35 for a family membership.

For more information, call (888) 733-1850.

Callaway Kids Workshop
Sept. 10

Join Callaway Gardens Education Department and learn how to make your own trough garden filled with all the herbs you need to make a tasty pizza.

Kids will discover the herbs used in our everyday meals and be sent home with all the ingredients to make their own pizza herb trough.

The workshop, Make An Italian Herb Garden Trough, is open to children ages 7 to 18.

The workshop is from 9:30 a.m. to noon Sept. 10. The fee is $13.

Parents or adults are welcome, but the activity is only for children.

Callaway Gardens is in Pine Mountain, Ga., about 30 minutes north of Columbus.

Enrollment is limited and preregistration is required.

To register, call the Education Department at (800) 225-5292 ext. 5153, 663-5153 or e-mail education@callawaygardens.com.

The Georgia Deer Registry maintains records of quality deer harvested by the state's hunters. Two deer taken in 1973 hold the records.
The deer taken by firearms scored 240 3/8 on the Boone & Crockett measuring system, and the one taken by bow scored 185 7/8.

Bench notes

Erin Nash

• Mayfield takes the checkered flag

Jeremy Mayfield won the fifth race of his career and first in almost a year Aug. 21 at Michigan International Speedway. Points leader Tony Stewart placed fifth. Second in points is Jimmie Johnson, 126 behind.

• Woods wins by one

Tiger Woods won the WGC-NEC Invitational Aug. 21 with a six-under and pocketed a cool $1,300,000.

Chris DiMarco finished second and Vijay Singh and Ryan Palmer tied for third.

• NFL death

San Francisco 49ers offensive lineman Thomas Herrion, 23, died early Aug. 21 after he collapsed in the locker room following a preseason game.

The 49ers will wear a black decal with his number (72) on their helmets for the season.

• Lance denies

A French newspaper said Lance Armstrong used the performance-enhancing drug EPO in his first tour in 1999.

Lance vehemently denies the allegations. The Tour director said the report appears "very credible."

• Randy pulls a Ricky

Randy Moss admitted prior marijuana use during his last seven NFL season to a reporter last week, and said he uses it during a blue moon. Way to be a role model Randy — you took the pressure off Ricky Williams.

• NASCAR night race

This week's race, the Sharpie 500 from Bristol Motor Speedway, will be on TNT Saturday, with coverage starting at 7 p.m. Only three more races until the chase.

Youth soccer teams need coaches

Kris Gonzalez
Bayonet staff

Child and Youth Services is looking for volunteers to coach Fort Benning's youngest soccer players.

Linda Laine, CYS director, said that only a few people have volunteered to coach soccer for kids ages 4 and 5. They need to have at least 10 more coaches volunteer before practices begin Thursday.

The 4- to 5-year-old age group is the largest in the league, with more than 100 players signed up, Laine said. The goal is to provide more coaches so the players can be divided among smaller teams.

"We want four players from each team playing at any given time," she said. "Four kids will play against four kids from the other team, then they will switch with four other players on their team. That means we want no more than eight players on a

USAMU wins titles

Paula Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning, Ga., have scored some major victories this month.

At the National Wild Turkey Federation Sporting Clays Championship at Forsyth, Ga., Aug. 19 to 21, Master Sgt. Rodney G. Pinkston took third place in the 100 Target Five Stand Master Class.

Pinkston also took third place in the 100 Target FITASC Master Class South Carolina State Sporting Clays Championship held at Georgetown, S.C., on July 28th to 31st.

Spc. Clay L. Hart brought home the bronze medal in the Men's Skeet Championship at the National Skeet Shooting Association International World Shoot at Eatonton, Ga., on Aug. 18 to 21.

The USAMU Service Rifle Team coached by Staff Sgt. Emil Praslick III, won the National Trophy Team Match at the National Highpower Rifle Championships held at Camp Perry, Ohio, on Aug. 2 to 15.

Praslick's Team also won the Romanian Trophy Team Match and the Herrick Trophy Team Match.

The USAMU Team coached by Staff Sgt. Jason M. St. John won the Enlisted Men's Trophy Team Match.

Sgt. 1st Class Norman L. Anderson won the President's Rifle Match and the National Trophy Individual Match.

Sgt. 1st Class Kyle A. Ward won the Farr Trophy and the Air Force Cup.

Spc. Brandon K. Green won the National Long-Range Service Rifle Championship and took third place in the overall National Service Rifle Championship. Green also won the Coast Guard Trophy and took second place in the Farr Trophy Match.

USAMU civilian Troy Lawton, who is the chief of match ammunition research and development, won the Members Trophy and the Vandenberg Cup.

At the International Shooting Sport Federation World Cup, held at Americana, Brazil, on Aug. 5 to 14, Spc. Matthew T. Wallace won the silver medal in Men's Trap.

Pfc. Joshua M. Richmond received the team gold medal in Men's Double Trap and Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery and Sgt. 1st Class James Todd Graves got the team bronze medal in Men's Skeet.

USAMU international rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Jason A. Parker won the Air Rifle Interservice Championship, Maj. Michael E. Anti won the Free Rifle Prone Interservice Championship and Sgt. Shane M. Barnhart won the Free Rifle Three Position Interservice Championship at the International Rifle Interservice Championships at Fort Benning, Ga., on Aug. 12 to 14.

Uchee Creek will host Hunting Open House Sept. 9th

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Hunters, outdoor recreation enthusiasts and all interested people at Fort Benning are invited to attend a free Hunting Open House at Uchee Creek Activity Center at 5 p.m. Sept. 9.

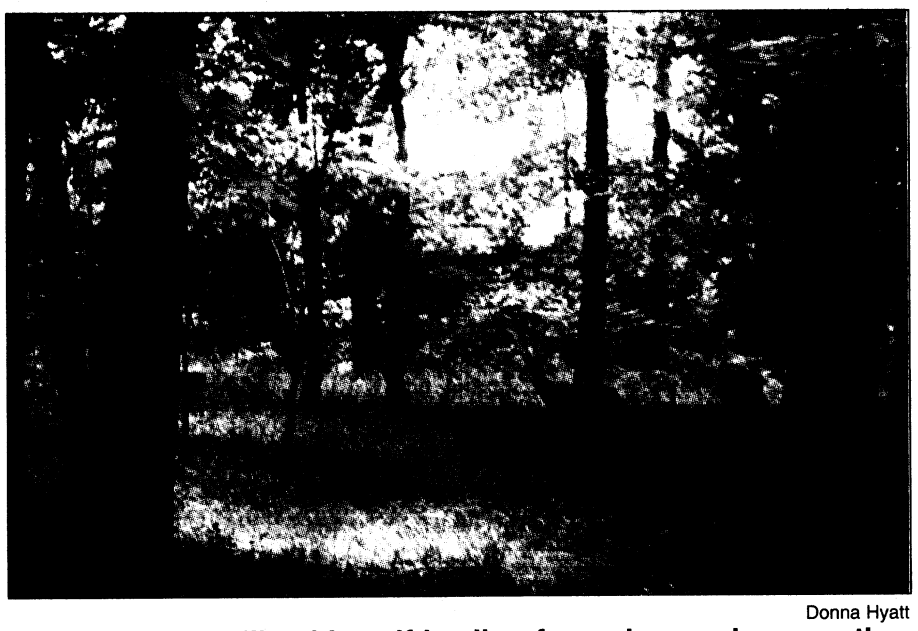
"It's designed to showcase the hunting, fishing, hiking and other recreational facilities on post," said Col. Lyle Cayce, chairman of the commanding general's natural resources advisory board.

There will be vendors, nonprofit hunting and environmental organizations at the open house.

The commanding general's advisory committee will be there to talk about the regulatory changes, policies and procedures for hunting on Fort Benning.

Free food and beverages will be available, along with door prizes and a raffle.

The first 500 people will receive a free hunting or fishing goody bag worth $10 to $15. Door prizes will be given throughout the evening and raffle tickets for prizes worth about $2,000 will be available at the activity center.



"We hope to make a little money from the raffle to put back into MWR hunting and fishing programs here on post," Cayce said.

Uchee Creek recreation area is open to all Soldiers and their families, civilians working on post and retirees.

"There's a provision in the post regulations that allows an authorized user to sponsor someone who's not otherwise entitled to come onto post," Cayce said.

Last year about 500 people attended the open house at the Officers' Club, but because Cayce expects more to attend this year, the event was moved to Uchee Creek Activity Center.

"It's an opportunity to get all outdoorsmen together primarily for educational purposes," said Brian Smith, marketing director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

Donna Hyatt

Practice targets like this self-healing foam deer and many other items for hunters of all types will be available at the open house.

Doors to the activity center open at 5 p.m.

The event is expected to last until 10 p.m. All are invited to attend.

Gas gamble pays off for Army car

Maj. William Thurmond
Army News Service

To pit or not to pit; that was the question.

Fuel mileage, a common topic of conversation in these days of $3-a-gallon gas, was also the chief obsession on pit road in the closing laps of Sunday's GFS 400.

And making the correct decision meant the difference between celebration and dejection for many NASCAR Nextel Cup teams.

For race winner Jeremy Mayfield and his crew chief Slugger Labbe, it was a gamble that paid off handsomely, earning the UAW Dodge team its first win in the 2005 season.

They vaulted from 19th place to the front as the leaders either pitted for fuel or ran their tanks dry in the final 20 laps.

Mayfield's win moved him into sixth place in the Nextel Cup standings.

Tony Stewart, Jimmie Johnson and Army National Guard driver Greg Biffle retained their locks on the top three chase slots as they all earned top-10 finishes Sunday afternoon.

Second-place finisher Scott Riggs' team also rolled the dice, earning them their best finish so far this season. The result provided a much-needed morale boost to a team that has unresolved sponsorship issues going into the 2006 season.

Luck, and gas, ran low for several popular teams, including both Dale Earnhardt Incorporated drivers Dale Earnhardt Jr. and Michael Waltrip. Earnhardt was forced to pit with fewer than eight laps remaining, dropping him from third place to 18th.

Waltrip took the white flag running in the top five but ran out of fuel on the back stretch, a mere mile from the finish line. In the end a lack of less than a cup of regular gas consigned him to a 27th-place finish.

"Front Row Joe" Nemechek lived up to his moniker, decisively earning his Army team the pole position in Saturday's qualifying runs with a speed of over 191.5 miles per hour.

He was joined on the front row by Rainbow Warrior Jeff Gordon, who was desperately trying to make up lost ground in a late season sprint to make the 10-race chase for the championship.

Nemechek's 01 Army Chevrolet dominated much of the first third of the race. Retaking the lead from Kyle Busch at lap 47, he drove smoothly out to a three-second lead. He led for a total of 30 laps.

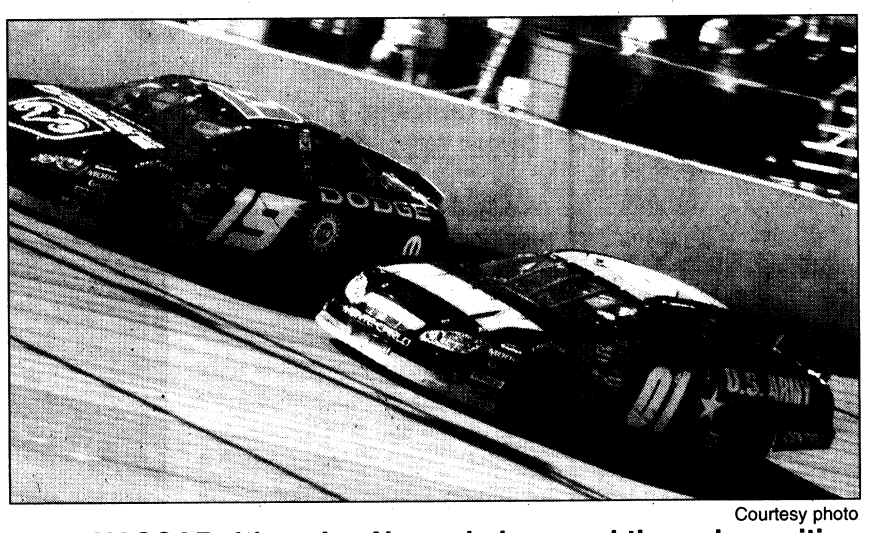
Unfortunately, an old nemesis, tire problems, rose up to trouble the Army Chevy once again. Less than a lap from a planned green flag pit stop the car's right front tire gave way, sending him into the wall.

The lost track position and damage from that incident seemed destined to doom Nemechek and crew to another poor finish.

The team pitted numerous times throughout the next hundred or so laps, making repairs and adding sheet metal to the car's damaged nose in an effort to restore vital aerodynamic downforce and help Nemechek negotiate Michigan International Speedway's steep banking.

"The incident damaged the car's front-end and we could never get it to work right from that point on," said Nemechek. "This is an aerodynamic-sensitive track and we were badly handicapped."

And each time they pitted they packed the car's fuel cell full of Sunoco gasoline.



It was those repair and fuel stops that would eventually spell opportunity for the Army team. The team made what would be their last stop on lap 149, 51 laps from the finish.

As the race drew to a close, veteran Army crew chief Ryan Pemberton and his race engineer David Elenz repeatedly ran the numbers, determining that they could finish the race without pitting for fuel. Barely.

It was a risk worth taking, and it paid off well for the beleaguered Army team. The gamble earned them an eighth-place finish.

"Topping off the fuel tank that last time made the difference," Pemberton said.

"We took a chance and this time it worked in our favor. Finishing eighth was good, considering where we came from," he said. "But I am not really thrilled about the finish — before the tire went down we had the best car out there."

Army NASCAR driver Joe Nemechek earned the pole position at the GFS 400 with a qualifying speed of more than 191 mph.

The Army driver echoed Pemberton's feelings.

"I definitely have mixed emotions about today," said Nemechek, who led 30 laps.

"The final result could have been much worse, but on the other hand, the Army Chevy was perfect — very capable of winning until I hit the wall after the right-front tire went flat.

"We had no choice but to go for broke with the fuel mileage. We finally got a break."

A break yes, but not the win they thought they deserved.

"We had the right package today," Nemechek said.

"But not having a shot at the victory after starting from the pole and leading a number of laps is disappointing.

"I thought this was the race we were going to win for our Soldiers, who are protecting our freedom here and abroad.

"We'll get that victory for our troops and I have a gut feeling it's going to happen soon. But for now, we'll take the eighth-place result and go on to the next race."

Next weekend finds the Army racing team at the world's fastest half-mile, Bristol Motor Speedway, for some Saturday-night short track action.

To run ...

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Whenever I decide to trace my American Indian roots, I have my name ready. Unfortunately, it won't be anything cool, or highlight one of my better qualities. No. I won't be "Stands With a Fist," like the gal from Dances With Wolves.

A few months ago, I finally got out on the road to train for Benning's first triathlon. I hate to run, or at least, that's what I tell myself. I really don't mind running, but it's a lot easier when I have someone to run with.

So this month, I decided my next running endeavor ought to be the Country's Barbecue Midnight Express 5K run. Because, of course, a 5K is a lot easier for me to get motivated to train for than anything significantly longer, and we'll be running with our deployed 3rd Brigade Soldiers.

And then I talked my oldest son, who runs cross country at school, into running with me, but I have discovered just how difficult it is to get an almost-teenager out of bed. Needless to say, I'm on my own.

And on my own I was, and not doing any running on my own either, until a friend tossed me a bone one morning.

"Want to run?"

Finally, the motivation I needed to get my hind end in gear.

So we ran. At 9 a.m. After the sun had come up. It was horrible and wonderful at the same time.

I ended that run lighter than when I started, and the conditions drove home the need to swap my daily Diet Cokes for water. (Maybe that will actually happen tomorrow — race day.)

I was so inspired, though, that I laced up my running shoes again the next day.

Ohmigosh. I ran twice in a row. And on that second run, I learned a few truths.

1. Running at 6 a.m. beats running at 9.

2. Even though your shoes were double-knotted the day before, re-tie them before you start. They'll come untied just as you're getting in a good rhythm.

3. If you can't run with a friend, a 60-pound dog is the next best thing, unless you can find a heavier dog. But even the 60 pounder can actually help haul you up the hills, especially since I was moving slower than she was.

3. That same dog, on a leash, can actually make your run a total-body workout, when you have to tug the leash to break her out of sniff mode.

4. Dogs are great to run with, but if you come across a person running with one not on a leash, you'll lose your hard-fought rhythm while you stop and wait for them to leash their dog so you can run by.

5. The end of the run is, indeed, the best part, especially when running in Georgia in August, when the air weighs more than you do.

6. The reason I come back lighter than when I started is the origin of my Indian name — "Sweats Like a Pig."

... or not to run

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I have a personal rule, one I live by faithfully — I don't run unless someone is chasing me. When was the last time someone was chasing me? Well, I can't remember, but it's safe to say it's been quite a while.

Yes, I shun the sport of running. I just can't fathom why anyone would want to do that to themselves. Sure, it's good for you when endorphins kick in and you feel great. I'm not buying it.

I was actually in the track club in junior high, because I thought I was a fast runner. I usually came in last, but I do remember that great race where I actually passed a girl slower than me (no, her legs weren't broken) and came in second to last.

I figured out pretty quickly I wasn't fast and I probably shouldn't be on the track club.

My dad started running in 1979, inspired by watching his sister competing in a road race. He's competed in more than 250 races and 15 marathons.

My husband has run the Midnight Express and other local races, and my (then) 5-year-old son even ran the Stowers Stampede this spring.

I admit I got motivated watching the runners and even fleetingly thought of taking up running.

I figured, it's in my blood, if I'm not meant to be fast, I can be a long-distance runner. That idea has still to come to fruition, seeing as I never have tried.

Sure, I've run around the block once or twice, and I did feel the endorphins kick in. I also felt my sore knees and back, and that was that.

My mom, a nurse who I trust implicitly with my health, once told me running was bad for knees, with all the pressure being put on them while running.

Walking, she said, was a much better alternative.

OK, but why walk if you have no destination? I can't see the point of leaving the house, walking a mile or so, then returning to the same place I started.

I know, I know, it's for my health. I admit I don't take care of my body like I should, and I bet even a leisurely walk around the neighborhood would be good for me.

I also know the kicking and screaming I'd be doing would probably be much more exercise in itself.

So, maybe someday soon I'll start walking, and even progress to running. If you happen to gaze outside your window and see pigs flying, it'll mean I'm actually out there, but please, don't hold your breath too long.

If you actually enjoy running and want to hone your skills, Country's Barbecue on Mercury Drive in Columbus will host the 25th annual Midnight Express Saturday.

3rd Brigade Soldiers in Iraq will also participate in the race via a live broadcast.

Registration, including a meal and T-shirt, is $20. For more information, call 366-4416.

Soccer: Needs team coaches for season

Kids are supposed to get a certain amount of playing time, she said, and more coaches would make it much easier to ensure each child got that playing time.

They would get to learn more about the game and it would alleviate some safety issues.

Debbie McCaffrey, mother of 9-year-old Michael and 5-year-old Joseph, is one of the few coaches from last season who said she would be willing to coach again, but only if more coaches volunteer.

"We had about 17 kids on each team last season," McCaffrey said. "With so many kids on a team, each child got the chance to play only a quarter of the game.

"We had upset kids and angry parents. You just can't have 4- and 5-year-olds not playing in the game."

McCaffrey said she believes soccer has so many players in this age group because it is one of only a few sports open to 4-year-olds on post.

The number drops in half for the next age group because at age 6, children can participate in other sports like football.

But she said it's the youngest age group that is the most "adorable" to watch.

"There's nothing more fun to watch than little kids learning a sport," McCaffrey said.

"There's nothing cuter than seeing 4-year-olds learning to play soccer and happily whacking that ball."

Soccer teaches children in this age group good hand-eye-foot coordination, it helps build up their stamina, and it prepares them for going up to the next league, Laine said.

"We want to start them on the right foot," she said.

Though the CYS would prefer to have volunteers who have a little knowledge of the game, no skills are required to be a volunteer soccer coach, Laine said.

Each volunteer will go through a three-hour training session and will be allowed to read CYS manuals to learn more about the game.

Teenagers and Soldiers, as well as parents, are encouraged to volunteer.

The season lasts eight weeks, with one practice a week and a half-hour game on Saturdays, starting at 9 a.m.

For more information, call CYS at 545-3582.

Hello, my name is Zarome Lakey. I have been with the Jay Automotive Group for 10 years. I'm the business manager that can help you with all your automobile financial needs. I know that bad things happen to good people that can negatively affect your credit rating. Things like: divorce, bank charge-offs, late payments, bankruptcies and foreclosures don't have to keep you from buying an automobile today. You don't have to buy a used car if you have credit problems. I can work with you to finance a new Pontiac, Buick or GMC today. Please call me at 320-3307 and ride today.

*Loans offered by Community State Bank, Milbank, SD (Member FDIC). Cash advance loans are intended to serve as a short term credit solution. Borrowing costs increase significantly when you are unable to pay the full amount due on the maturity date. Credit approval subject to Community State Bank's credit standards and actual terms (including actual loan amount) may vary by applicant. Community State Bank requires certain supporting documentation with each new application. Complete disclosures of APR, fees, and payment terms are provided with each loan and are available from Community State Bank. Example of loan terms: The Annual Percentage Rate (APR) for a $300 loan for 14 days is 521.43% with one payment of $360 due at maturity.
Additional fees may apply if loan is not repaid as agreed.

"AFTER A TERRORIST ATTACK YOUR FIRST INSTINCT MAY BE TO RUN. THAT MAY BE THE WORST THING YOU COULD DO."

- Mario Polit, Firefighter, Ladder 106, FDNY -

Knowing what you should do in a terrorist attack isn't just a matter of common sense. It takes some reading, some learning and some planning. That goes for people who live in small communities too. Readiness is for every American family, business and school. The terrorist threat is real and we can't afford to go unprepared.

Learn to put together an emergency supply kit, how to make a family communication plan, and how you should respond to an act of terror. All of that information is clearly explained at www.ready.gov. If you prefer, you can call 1-800-BE-READY (1-800-237-3239) for a free copy of the brochure, "Preparing Makes Sense. Get Ready Now."

Car bombing in Iraq kills Fort Benning Soldier

A suicide bombing in northeastern Iraq killed 1st Lt. Carlos Diaz, a platoon leader in E Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, Aug. 23.

According to a Department of Defense news release, Diaz was in Baqubah, Iraq, when enemy insurgents detonated an explosion near his position.

Six other people died in the attack and 20 others were wounded.

"Lieutenant Diaz equipped, trained and deployed his platoon of Sappers to Iraq," said Capt. Loyd Beal, commander of E Company, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

Of the eight traffic fatalities on Fort Benning to date, only one driver was wearing a seat belt. MPs will be checking for seat belt use over the Labor Day weekend.

Holiday traffic causes concern

Failure to wear seat belt can cost $25

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

With less than one month left in this fiscal year, Fort Benning has already had eight traffic fatalities on post.

An analysis of the accidents released by Col. David Ling, U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff, reveals that only one person was wearing a seat belt.

"I frequently get accident reports where Soldiers are seriously hurt in (privately owned vehicle) accidents, but by wearing a seat belt, they usually survive," said Regis Beighley, Fort Benning safety manager.

It's also against the law to drive without wearing a seat belt, and anyone caught not wearing a seat belt will be fined $25 by the military police.

The MPs will set up checkpoints around post over the Labor Day weekend.

According to the National Center for Statistics and Analysis, traffic fatalities increase during holiday periods. The NCSA estimates about 500 people from around the country will lose their lives over the Labor Day weekend.

Besides wearing seat belts, Beighley urges the Fort Benning community to check the weather forecasts for the areas they will be traveling through, take at least one break every two hours during long driving trips and make sure their vehicles meet the post's safety standards.

Driving through rain is particularly hazardous, Beighley said.

"Oil accumulates on the road, and the first bit of rain mixes with the oil, making driving very dangerous. It's just like driving on ice," he said.

He also reminds people not to drink and drive.

The National Highway Transportation Safety Administration estimates that one person dies from alcohol-related

More Soldiers to support relief efforts

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — More than 11,000 Army and Air National Guard members and 7,200 active-duty troops, mostly Navy, are supporting hurricane relief operations along the Gulf Coast, and 10,000 more National Guard troops are expected to join the effort within the next 48 hours, Defense Department officials said today.

Army Lt. Gen. H. Steven Blum, chief of the National Guard Bureau, told Pentagon reporters today the additional troops, who hail from 13 states outside the region, will be evenly divided between the hardest-hit states, Mississippi and Louisiana. There, he said, they will augment forces already on the ground helping law enforcement agencies with security and traffic control; transporting and distributing food, water and ice; conducting searches and rescues; providing generator support; and carrying out other missions to support life and property.

About one-third of the added troops will be military police, to help civilian law enforcement authorities guard critical facilities, prevent

LABOR DAY?

How about Labor Day Off?

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Labor Day has always struck me as an ironic title for a national holiday. It originated in the 1880s as workers protested against long hours and inhumane working conditions. The unions were instrumental in bringing about higher pay, shorter hours and better working conditions. So why didn't they call it Labor*er* Day?

Very few people actually labor on Labor Day. From what I've seen, people usually take it easy, unless they work on something like their house, car or boat. But that kind of work is usually considered a labor of love, which is different than the the labor people pay you to do.

Why didn't Congress call it Vacation Day, Picnic Day, Play Day or Last Three-Day Weekend of Summer Day?

Every other holiday has a self-explanatory title. But Labor Day celebrates labor by giving everyone a day off? Well, not everyone gets the day off. Merchants hold end-of-summer sales this weekend, and sales people have to be there to ring up the merchandise and stock the shelves. Gas station attendants have to work so people can fuel their cars, and restaurants stay open to feed the people who don't want to slave over a hot stove. For people who have to work, it's just another Labor Day.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not complaining that I have a three-day weekend. I have plenty of love labor that needs my attention, and a family to labor with me. Of course, my children don't consider work around the house a labor of love. To them it's Labor Day, in the classic sense of the word.

This wasn't in the job description

Tracy A. Bailey
USAIC Public Affairs

I had my first opportunity to observe a live fire convoy exercise last week. We coordinated a media opportunity, and I volunteered to follow the local news crew so they could get background video, and I could keep them out of trouble.

Did I mention "live fire" — where you wear a 20 pound flak vest and a Kevlar in case a stray bullet makes its way to you?

After we donned the vests and Kevlars, we did what everyone in the Army does at one time or another — we stood around and waited for the exercise to start.

We loaded up at 9:45 a.m. It was 85 degrees, the humidity had to be at least 90 percent, and my clothes were already sticking to me. I climbed into a really big truck and managed not to fall off.

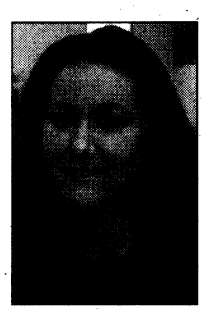
However, I bent a finger nail and cried out, "I hope I didn't just break a fingernail." Nobody was amused.

At the range, we followed about 24 lieutenants, captains and a few warrant officers who were in the vehicles in front of us with loaded weapons shooting at stuff.

Lucky for us, these young, well-trained officers only shot at the things popping up in front of them.

We continued down the road (at 15 mph) when we came to a stop and everyone jumped off the vehicles and headed into the woods. Lucky for me, someone thought far enough ahead to have a ladder.

We followed the Soldiers into the woods and stayed behind them as they fired live ammunition.



The students completed the exercise, no one was injured, and everyone was relieved to return to the holding area, shed their vests and Kevlars and drink about a gallon of water.

All the time that I was observing this exercise, I thought about two things: I shouldn't be whining because this is what our Soldiers do without complaint every single day, in training and combat.

And I don't believe observing live fire exercises was in the job description.

Who put the labor back in Labor Day?

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

I've been waiting for Labor Day for quite some time. For those of us who work for Uncle Sam, the significance of any holiday can be summed up in three beautiful words: three day weekend.

When I was in elementary school, Labor Day was the last hurrah before heading back to school — one last trip to the beach, a picnic at the lake or a sleepover with friends. This was "it." The sultry summer days were coming to a close. Time for shoes, books and homework.

Then the beginning of the school year started creeping up on the calendar. By the time I was in junior high, school started several weeks before Labor Day, effectively cutting short the perpetual party days of summer vacation. Labor Day has always been just one day, but somehow it seemed longer before it was fenced in.

So, Labor Day was no longer an extension of the good times. It was surrounded on all sides by reading, writing and arithmetic. That's when the Labor Day holiday became a labor day in my family.

My parents took to it with gusto. My brothers and I were put to work. On the first Monday of September each year, mom and I would give our house a complete overhaul, while Dad and the boys worked outside: cleaning out the shed, cutting the grass, and starting another of dad's famous "year-end" projects, the latest of which hasn't been completed to this day.

Hold everything! I thought Labor Day was created to give workers a day off? Was this idea of actually laboring on Labor Day conspired by parents in retribution for those long, lazy summers we kids enjoyed? Why would parents subject themselves to this when they work year-round? Labor Day began living up to its name.

Now that I'm a member of what my dad calls "the real world," my Labor Day plans have come full circle.

Even though I no longer have a summer vacation to hurrah, I'm on my way to Orlando this weekend. I figure, with all the Labor Days I missed as a kid while defrosting the freezer or scrubbing the tub, I've earned it.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

We all have those days when nothing seems to go our way.

Let me play on your sympathy for a few minutes.

I am a young spouse, my husband is deployed and I have three small children, one of whom has been up all night screaming due to an ear infection.

I am at my wit's end. I really need some sleep, and every time I call the appointment line at Martin Army Community Hospital I am told, "Ma'am, I am sorry there are no same-day appointments available. The earliest we can get you in is ... blah, blah, blah."

Troy is still in pain, so I pack up all three kids along with toys and diaper bags, snacks — almost everything but the kitchen sink — ask my neighbor to take me to the ER and wait five hours, if not longer. After all, I am not a true emergency and have to wait my turn in agony with my extra appendages.

Well, by now you are nodding and agreeing with me, this is horrible, I shouldn't have to be put through this.

My husband is fighting for our country, and I am trying to keep a brave face for my kids and provide a warm and nurturing home and not lose my mind in the process.

Well, guess what?

This scenario can be avoided and this is where you come into the picture.

Really, you can help make my day!

The next time you have a scheduled appointment at the hospital or one of the clinics and you can't keep the appointment, please call 544-CARE (2273) between 8 a.m. and 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and cancel your appointment or go online to www.tricareonline.com and cancel or reschedule your appointment.

If you are out of town, call the toll-free number, (888) 293-2148.

Here's a shocking fact — during the month of July, there were 2,052 no-shows.

That means there could have been that many appointments for many others like me.

Each appointment equals about $79 lost per visit (grand total $162,108), not to mention the clerks, doctors and nurses who got ready for the appointment whose time had been wasted.

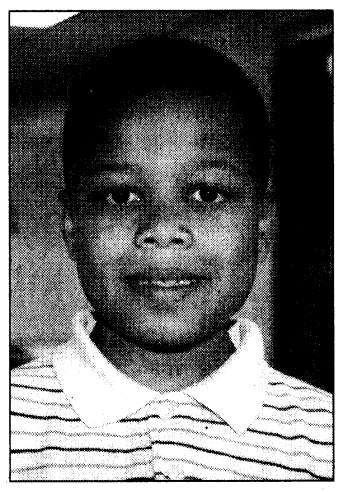
Civilian doctors and clinics charge patients $50 when they don't keep their appointment.

Imagine that!

You probably didn't know that the hospital receives its annual budget based on the number of patients that are seen.

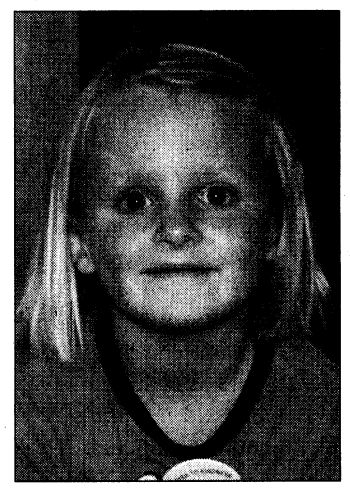
So, if patients don't show up, the hospital gets less money for the following year. That means fewer doctors, nurses and other staff will be there to assist you and your family.

So please follow the golden rule — call and cancel.



You'll feel better knowing someone else was able to get that appointment.

Thanks.



— Your neighbor

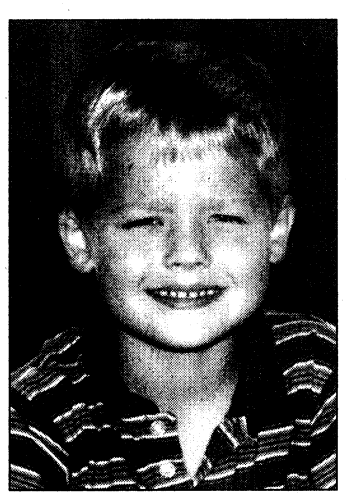
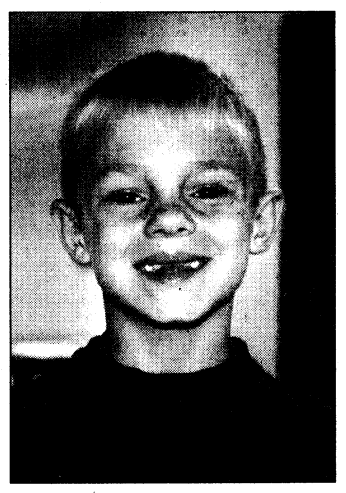
VARIOUS VOICES

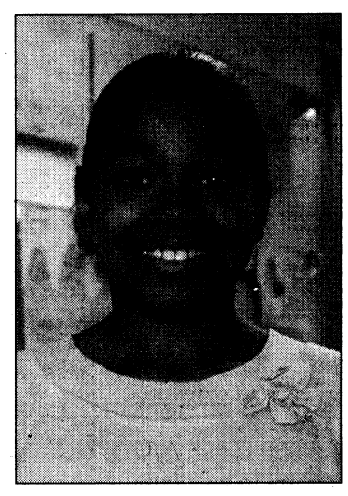


How will you spend your Labor Day?

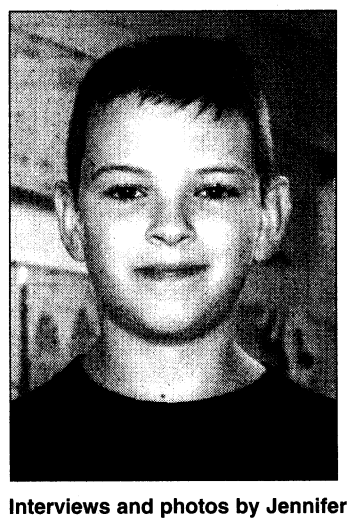
Jaden Parker, third grade — "Labor Day is about people having a good day, so mom said we'd go to Chuck E. Cheese later on. I've been going there since I was in kindergarten. I like cheesey pizza."



Jessica Kahmann, first grade — "I'm going to clean my room and my bed with all my animals at the bottom. My squirrel is my favorite. I got it when I was a baby, I think from Nana. Then I'll help mom clean up. She'll like that."



Noah Miller, first grade — "I think you should send your mom and dad something if they are in Iraq. Maybe a card with some money in it so they could get some snacks. The Soldiers would be happy to get something on Labor Day."



Taiomys Velez, fourth grade — "We don't have anything planned yet, but I want to do something for my mom like help her clean the house. She's always doing nice things for me like helping me with my homework and buying me stuff. It's important to thank the people who are always working for us."

Cody Falk, third grade — "I'm going to my granddad's in Atlanta to swim and play video games all day long. It's good to give kids a break from school, teachers and parents too. It keeps them from getting worn out from yelling at us sometimes when we do dumb stuff when we're bored."

Tavia Chance, fifth grade — "Sometimes I clean my room on Labor Day, but I won't be this year. I'm going to be in the pool at my aunt's house if it's not raining. It's good to have a day off and relax. Some people don't even get weekends off."

Mathew Coleman, fifth grade — "As long as it's not a school day — we get the day off? Awesome! I'm going to stay at home and play this video game where you get to destroy tanks and robots. I have to do a paper on how to play a certain video game and what I didn't know about it. I deserve a day off because I've been working really hard."

Medal of Honor recipient shares combat experiences

Stresses importance of competence

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Retired Col. Jack Jacobs, a Vietnam Medal of Honor recipient, shared his experiences with Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians Monday in Marshall Auditorium.

Jacobs was invited to participate in the Combat Leader Speaker Program hosted by the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski introduced Jacobs.

"He's no stranger to Fort Benning," Wojdakowski said of the Infantryman who attended several schools on post and commanded an Officer Candidate School company. "And eighteen years after his retirement, he continues to share his experiences and knowledge.

Wojdakowski said Jacobs' list off accomplishments, including his performance in the military and in national and international business, proved his leadership abilities.

"He was never afraid to take charge and accomplish the mission," Wojdakowski said. "He's a true boots-in-the-mud kind of person."

Jacobs joined the Army after receiving a bachelor's degree from Rutgers University. He already had a wife and a child, so, he said, he planned to serve his three years, earn a paycheck, then attend law school.

His first battalion commander in the 82nd Airborne Division had been a glider pilot in Normandy and later jumped into Nijmegen. Jacobs said he got thrown out of the commander's office when he went in to tell his boss he didn't want to be the battalion's air operations officer.

Jacobs said one of the reasons he went airborne was the extra $110 he received — a 60 percent increase for his $222.60 monthly salary.

Later, he met his first company commander, a man with the "improbable name" of Hunter Shotwell. By the time Jacobs joined his company, Shotwell had been to Vietnam once. When Jacobs asked him which platoon was his, Shotwell laughed at him and said he wasn't getting a platoon — he was getting all of them.

Jacobs

"I went from being responsible for absolutely nothing, to absolutely, positively everything in a split second," Jacobs said. "One hundred and forty men were mine, back in a time when payday involved a loaded .45 on a table. You ended up having a relationship with ever Soldier when you actually hand them their pay."

Bonds forged in the crucible of combat, he said, created even stronger bonds that can't be broken over time.

Jacobs spoke of the importance of objective — the first principle of war — which reminded him of an observation made by author Lewis Carroll.

"If you don't know where you're going, any road will take you there," he said. "But once you get there, make sure you have some left over. It always takes more assets to hold onto an objective than it takes to take the objective."

He said leaders need to know it's one thing to identify the objective, but another to allocate resources properly.

Another thing he said was of vital importance to the young leaders, many of whom he knew had already been in combat, was for them to keep teaching everything they know to everyone.

"Lieutenants and captains and NCOs — you're old news already," he said. "Give a brain dump to everyone in your charge."

Times, he said, have changed drastically since he went to combat.

"We now have the best trained Army because of the new notions about training," he said. "Unlike you, the first live fire I was ever in, was in combat. I remember when it happened, and it was confusing at best."

He said he watched enemy soldiers scrambling out of a commando car and tried to figure out what to do. Then he grabbed the radio from his dead RTO and called his boss with an update.

"I told him I needed advice and guidance," Jacobs said. "He was a Korean War vet and he told me just to do something, even if it's wrong. In retrospect, that was the best advice I could have gotten."

Jacobs described a pitched battle his unit was fighting in Vietnam against enemy Soldiers holed up in a church.

"Another Jacobs rule — If you make taking no casualties one of your rules, you will take a lot of casualties," he said. "And if that's your policy, you probably don't have a mission."

The two sides fought for five hours, when all of a sudden, he said, a "hapless black and white cow came loping along between the two warring battalions."

"It almost got away," he said. But when they killed it, suddenly the mission became getting the cow instead of dislodging the enemy from the church.

"What do you think happened?" he said. "We did exactly what we should have done to get the cow that we should have done five hours earlier — use our first principle and set up a base of fire, then have two companies maneuver around."

Jacobs said although there were many wrong tactical decisions he'd like to have a chance to have back, he never had any trouble with what was morally right or wrong.

"I can unequivocally say I've never been in a situation where I had trouble distinguishing between the right and wrong thing to do," he said. "Everybody comes to a fork in the road, but every time you make a morally wrong choice, you know it was wrong.

"It is vitally important, for the sake of my republic, that you select the right thing," he said.

Jacobs said it was no coincidence the word infant was part of infantry.

"It's infants — young people — who do this," he said. "And the only way they can do it, is if you train them properly and to convince them you know what you're doing and inoculate them with morality."

When asked what attributes he thought young leaders needed for combat, Jacobs said he would choose genuine professional competence for the top of the list.

"Know all you need to know," he said. "What makes you have confidence is if you really know your job — the base level bunch of stuff.

"Be able to read a map better than anybody else, fire plan better than anybody else, task organize better than anybody else. That translates into confidence in yourself and confidence in your men."

BOSS program participants plan new year

Fort Benning held its second annual Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Conference Aug. 23–24 at Uchee Creek.

At the two-day conference, BOSS representatives learned about new BOSS regulations and a new draft of the Single Soldier Quality of Life policy that may be implemented at Fort Benning this year.

"The training gave the Soldiers insight on the program and how to be a successful BOSS representative," said Sgt. Maj. Jennifer Pearson, sergeant major for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation. Keynote speaker, Eileen Soisson, president of The Meeting Institute, spoke to the group of about 80 Soldiers about business etiquette and work-place protocol.

Representatives from the Directorate of Public Works, the Army & Air Force Exchange Service, and the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation also addressed ways their programs benefit BOSS members, Outgoing president, Spc. Jeremy Oldfield, defined the role of the BOSS president and gave an overview of upcoming events. Incoming president, Spc. Donald Taylor, laid out his goals for the new year.

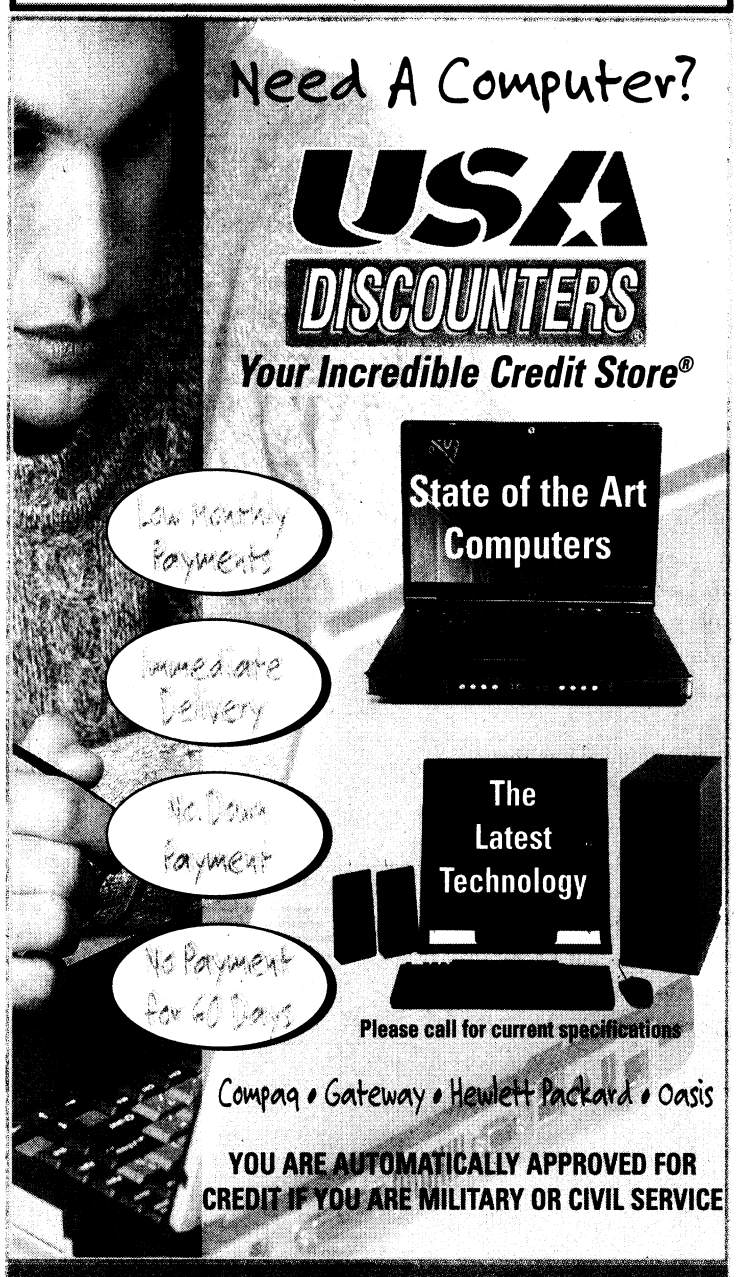
"I want to make it better than what it is," Taylor said. "But it takes cooperation from the unit representatives to make the (BOSS) program work.

Taylor said he would like to see more Soldiers volunteer to be BOSS representatives for their units, as well as to participate in functions.

"It takes a motivated Soldier to be involved with BOSS," Taylor said. "We tend to get better service from someone who volunteers, rather than having been tasked out by their unit."

Taylor said brigade representatives meet once a month, while representatives at lower echelons meet once a quarter.



BOSS is open to single Soldiers as well as single parents and those who are geographical bachelors, he said.

The next event on the BOSS calendar is in September, when members will participate in a March of Dimes fundraiser. BOSS also has ongoing programs at Baker Village the last Wednesday of every month when members have story hour and play kickball with children of lower income families.

For more information about volunteering as a BOSS representative or to participate in BOSS programs, call 544-1411.

Former Soldiers create veterans' service Web site

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

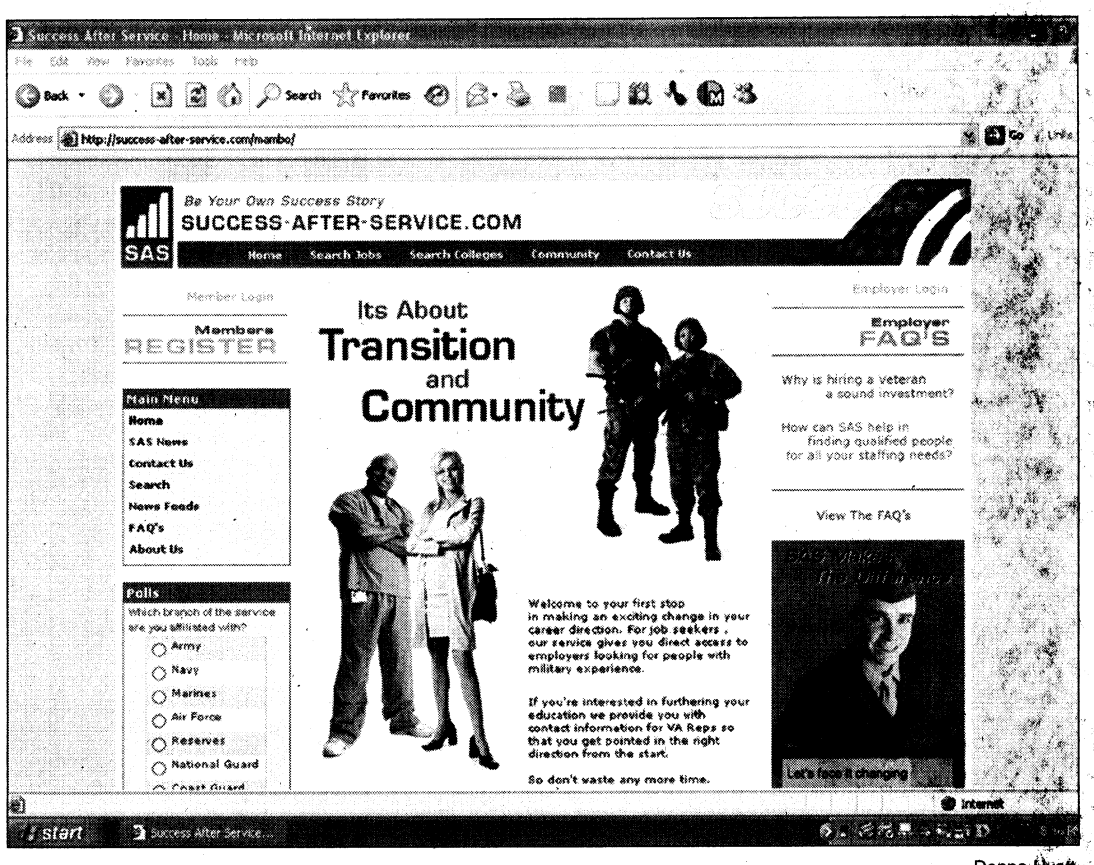
Joseph Trainor Jr. knows what it's like to be a Soldier. Enlisted from 1999 to 2002, Trainor is a veteran of two tours of Operation Enduring Freedom, serving with 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Once he left the service, though, he wasn't as prepared as he thought to start college. Finding a dearth of information, Trainor and two other combat veterans, Joshua Glassburn and Brian Radford, created Success After Service, a Web site for veterans to aid them in a job search or college information.

"It was a road I had been down," Trainor said, explaining the idea behind Success After Service. "Other Web sites had a military link, but there was not a specific Web site dedicated just to veterans."

"When I exited the military, there was a lot of confusion about what my rights were as a veteran and what I had to do to receive my benefits," said Radford, a veteran of operations Enduring and Iraqi Freedom with 1st Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

"In order to help veterans facing the same issues, I helped create a company that is completely for the veteran to let them know what their benefits are."



Success After Service, launched Thursday, is the first private organization to offer these services. Once logged onto www.success-after-service.com, veterans can post resumes, search for jobs, get college information. The site also includes an online community with classified ads and a chat area, where veterans can talk directly to other veterans or employers via a forum or a one-on-one chat.

"It's not just a job search, it's a community," said Trainor. "Our whole goal is to help the veterans. There is a categorized job list available, with a wide range of jobs, from truck drivers to corporate level. This allows service members the opportunity to have a job lined up months before exiting the military."

Also differing from other Web sites, Success After Service will link veterans looking to attend college directly with a Veterans Affairs representative, instead of the admissions department, cutting out the middleman.

Trainor said there are links to more than 35 colleges and universities in all states on the site.

Success After Service is free for service members and veterans. Since employers who post their jobs are seeking veterans, prospective employees must be able to verify their veteran status by indicating they have a DD-214 or will possess one upon being accepted or requested by the employer.

Industrywide gas shortages hit some AAFES stations

Army & Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The closure of refineries and offshore oil platforms as well as oil pipeline failures in South Eastern United States are impacting fuel availability at Army & Air Force Exchange Service gas stations. Citing the destruction left by Hurricane Katrina, many AAFES suppliers have given notification of "out of gas" situations at terminals around the country. As a result, there have been sporadic gas shortages at AAFES stations in the Southern and Eastern parts of the United States.

"Unfortunately, AAFES is not immune from the market forces affecting the industry," said AAFES' Chief of Corporate Communications Lt. Col. Debra Pressley. "AAFES is continuing to monitor the situation as it develops."

AAFES officials stress that the shortage should not be viewed as a limited regional issue. According to the Oil Express, the industries' information paper, the situation is a national matter involving at least 40 states where product shortages may soon arise.

AAFES facilities have been advised to order only those gallons actually needed during this time of short supply.

As is the case with the entire petroleum industry, AAFES does not have a get well time frame for reliable gasoline supplies until the industry damage in Florida, Louisiana and Mississippi can be assessed.

9/11 Remembrance ceremony set

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Residents of the tricommunity are invited to attend Fort Benning's 9/11 Remembrance Service at 4 p.m. Sept. 9 in Marshall Auditorium.

The guest speaker for the event is Chaplain (Maj. Gen.) David Hicks, the Army's Chief of Chaplains.

Chaplain (Maj.) David Acuff, the event's project officer, said he hopes the service can help people recreate the feelings they had in 2001, when the events of 9/11 "erased, for a while, all the issues we fight over — black, white, rich, poor, republican, democrat."

Acuff said many generations have a defining moment or moments. For his parents, it was the stock market crash followed by the Pearl Harbor bombing.

Acuff said he remembers President Kennedy's assassination.

"Our joys are not national events," Acuff said. "They're weddings and children's birthdays and the like. It's our tragedies that define us."

The events of 9/11, he said, motivated many to join the military, or at least re-evaluate what they thought about the military.

"It gave some a definition of being an American, even when they may not have wanted to think of themselves as Americans," he said.

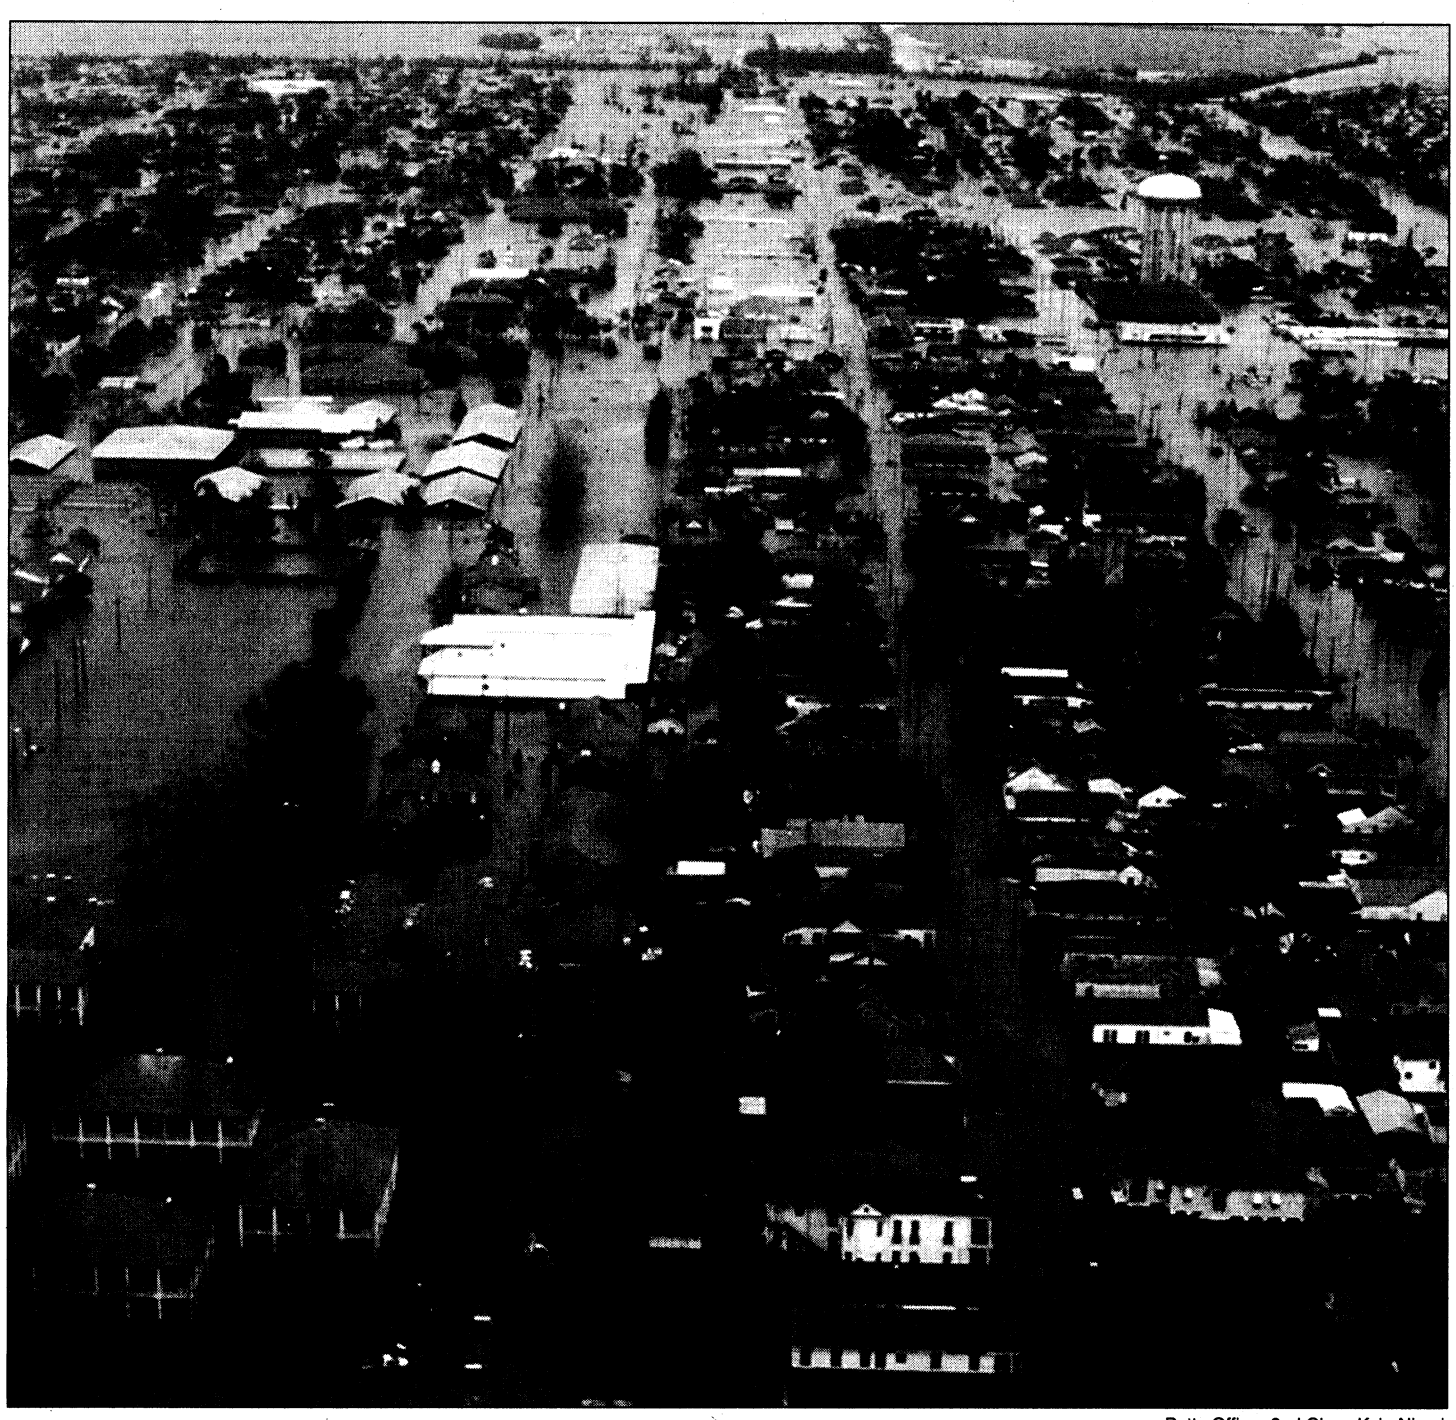
Acuff, who was serving as the chaplain at the 3rd U. S. Infantry Regiment — the Old Guard — remembers hearing, and feeling, the plane hit the Pentagon less than a mile from his office.

"That was a profound week," he said, and one he hopes will continue to be marked with a remembrance service.

As part of the ceremony, the Brookstone School Camerata will perform patriotic songs.

The Camerata, a "group joined together for the purpose of making beautiful music," will perform on post for the first time, said director Alice Kay McFarland.

"We're excited," McFarland said.



For more information, call Acuff at 545-4017.

looting, apprehend curfew violators and assist in law-and-order enforcement, Blum said.

More National Guard engineers also will join the relief effort, helping clear roads of obstructions that block movement into and out of the affected areas, and transportation units will bring fleets of 5-ton trucks capable of maneuvering through heavy floodwaters to deliver desperately needed equipment and supplies.

In addition, the Idaho Air National Guard will deliver handheld radios donated by the National Firefighting Service to help ease communication problems throughout the region due to downed cellular nets, he said.

As the added National Guard forces mobilize to support what's being called one of the largest disaster-response mobilizations in U.S. history, the Guard will continue to respond to governors' requests. Blum said he expects those requests to change as the situation on the ground evolves and more information becomes available.

All units, regardless of mission, will arrive in the region self-sufficient and ready to operate with no need for food, water, medical or fuel support so they don't burden on-the-ground operators, Blum said.

"We'll come with our own solutions," the general said.

Meanwhile, every National Guard except those in Hawaii and Guam either is supporting the relief effort or is prepared to respond if needed, Blum said.

Meanwhile, U.S. Northern Command is coordinating DoD's active-duty support for the hurricane relief mission, Air Force Brig. Gen. Terry Scherling, deputy director of antiterrorism and homeland defense for the Joint Staff, told reporters.

The initial focus is on preventing loss of life, restoring infrastructure and maintaining confidence in the government, she said.

In addition to establishing Joint Task Force Katrina at Camp Shelby, Miss., to coordinate support operations among NORTHCOM, other DoD elements and the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the command is supporting recovery operations with aviation and naval assets needed now, with seven ships and 60 helicopters already committed.

But Scherling said she expects DoD's contribution to increase as governors identify more needs. Already, the military is preparing to provide 4,000 to 5,000 hospital beds, both ashore and afloat, in the affected region.

Earlier this afternoon, Paul McHale, assistant secretary of defense for homeland defense, said DoD anticipates sending a 500-bed mobile hospital to the New Orleans area, as well as USNS Comfort, a Baltimore-based hospital ship. Comfort is expected to leave its home port today, arriving in the region around Thursday, McHale said.

McHale said a request for the military to contribute as many as 800 people to assist the American Red Cross with shelter support "is under active consideration," and DoD has 1.5 million cases of field rations available if needed.

As the military responds to immediate needs, Scherling said, DoD planners are looking ahead so they're prepared to respond to needs yet to be identified.

"We're leaning forward and anticipating what is going to be needed," she said.

McHale echoed that message during a joint news conference in which Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff and representatives of various federal agencies outlined the extent of the disaster response.

DoD is "a fully cooperating partner" that's working proactively so it's already ready to act when called upon, McHale said.

"We're forward deploying everything that we think may be required by FEMA," he said, "and will be fully prepared to respond to FEMA's requests for assistance when they inevitably are forthcoming."

President Bush, addressing the nation in the Rose Garden, announced the formation of a Cabinet-level task force headed by Chertoff to coordinate the federal response to what he called "one of the worst natural disasters in our nation's history."

The recovery "will take years," he said.

"This is going to be a difficult road. The challenges we face on the ground are unprecedented, but there is no doubt in my mind that we are going to succeed."

The president gave assurance to residents of the affected region, whose days he acknowledged "seem awfully dark" in light of what's happened to their homes and communities.

"The country stands with you," Bush said. "We will do all in our power to help you."

"He is one of the best officers I've had the pleasure of working with."

Diaz was commissioned from the ROTC program at the University of Puerto Rico in 2003, and attended the Engineer Officer Basic Course at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart, the National Defense Service Medal, the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, the Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary Medal and the Army Service Ribbon.

died Sunday in Landstuhl, Germany, where he had been evacuated after the IED detonation.

Shea's death is the battalion's third death since the battalion deployed in July.

Two Soldiers died Aug. 4 in Afghanistan.

This was Shea's fifth deployment in support of operations Iraqi Freedom or Enduring Freedom where he served as a rifleman, automatic rifleman, grenadier and machine gun team leader.

Shea joined the Army in January 2003.

He graduated from Ranger School in November 2004.

He is survived by his parents William and Mary Shea, from Sonoma, and a sister, Sara Shea, also from Sonoma.

Shea's father, William Shea, said his son was a good man.

"He set his sights high, and reached them by becoming a Ranger."

Shea is a third generation Soldier; both of his grandfathers served in World War II and his father served in a Civil Affairs unit during the Vietnam War.

His mother said her son joined the Army for direction and his enlistment was his rite of passage into manhood.

Shea, a 2001 graduate of Petaluma's St. Vincent De Paul High School, was homecoming king in his senior year and an offensive lineman on the St. Vincent football team.

Teammate Marc Mahoney told The Press Democrat in an article published Sunday that he visited Shea at Fort Benning shortly before he earned his Ranger Tab.

"I could tell he was a different guy," Mahoney said.

"He'd kind of grown up, and I could tell, because I hadn't yet."

The first stanza of the Ranger Creed is: Recognizing that I voluntcered as a Ranger, fully knowing the hazards of my chosen profession, I will always endeavor to uphold the prestige, honor, and high esprit de corps of my Ranger Regiment ...

"As a Ranger, Cpl. Timothy M. Shea distinguished himself as a member of the Army's premier light Infantry unit, traveled to all corners of the world in support of the Global War on Terrorism and fought valiantly to 'uphold the prestige, honor, and high esprit de corps of the Ranger Regiment," according to the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Shea's awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, Purple Heart, Meritorious Service Medal and Combat Infantryman Badge. He was posthumously promoted to corporal.

vehicle injuries every 30 minutes.

In the state of Georgia, more than 35 percent of traffic deaths are connected to alcohol consumption. Of the eight fatalities on post this year, one is suspected of being alcohol related.

Beighley thinks there's a slightly different dynamic behind the recent traffic fatalities.

"I've noticed when the country is at war, accidents go up. I saw it in the Vietnam War when I first became involved in safety in the early 1970s," he said. "Soldiers make it through combat and they come back and think they're invincible. It's a matter of attitude."

No one knows when they're going to be in an accident, Beighley said. "Be careful. Wear your seat belt all the time. And use common sense when driving."

Safe driving is a primary concern, but Beighley also reminds people to wear personal flotation devices while boating on the water and swim only in areas with lifeguards present.

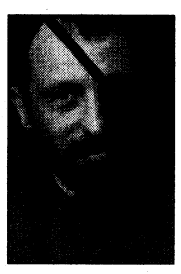
Vet's tale of resilience still relevant



Jungle In Black author returns for reunion

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The author Gerald Sittser referred to it as "the terror of randomness," the human compulsion to seek answers for the incomprehensible. If there is tragedy and suffering, we can accept it if we know and accept the reason for it, he said.

It's a concept Steve Maguire understands. An Airborne Ranger blinded in Vietnam, Maguire chronicled his attempt to make sense of the land mine explosion that ended a promising career and imprisoned him in a Jungle In Black.

"I wanted answers. I wanted to know why. Of all the people who went to Vietnam, why did it happen to me?" Maguire said Saturday during a visit to Columbus for the annual reunion of the 31st Infantry Regiment, the unit he was serving with as a recon platoon leader in the Mekong Delta in 1969 when one of his Soldiers detonated a trip wire.

Maguire

"I used to think about all the 'what ifs.' What if I'd stood up straighter? What if I'd crouched a little lower? What if?" he said. "There is no answer. I had to make peace with it."

Based on Maguire's success as a writer, counselor, social services executive, father of six and president of the U.S. Army Ranger Association, one would surmise he's successfully made peace with his past. Rightly so.

Maguire is pragmatic and pointed in conversation, wasting very few words. In print, he has much more to offer. In either case, he credits his success to a deal he cut with God, and the woman he met and married as a result of it. In fact, Jungle In Black is as much a love story as a war story, though Bantam Books chose to market it as the latter.

Maguire started writing the book in 1974, shelving it from time to time to focus on his family and his career. By the time it was complete, Born on the Fourth of July and Platoon had already made the big screen, and publishers rejected Maguire's manuscript, citing a saturated market, even as they praised its potential.

Maguire was "energized" by the good reviews and adamant that his was story worth telling. Platoon, he said, was a lousy movie, and Oliver Stone used a bitter, broken Ron Novac to further his own political agenda.

Maguire believed his story portrayed the resilience of Vietnam vets at a time when "the media wanted to portray them as ragbags."

Bantam agreed. The book, published in paperback in 1992, was endorsed by Maj. Gen. Barry McCaffrey, who commanded the 24th Infantry Division in Desert Storm, and William F. Buckley, who likened it to Rumor of War.

"It's not a maudlin story. Yeah, the Army's composed of a bunch of human beings who make mistakes, and I'm entitled to get angry about it sometimes," Maguire said. "But bad things happen. You can not allow yourself to be passive about it, because if you do, it will control you."

Maguire made passing reference to Cindy Sheehan, the mother of a Soldier killed in Iraq. Sheehan's very public denouncing of the war and President Bush has captured headlines over the last few weeks. Maguire shook his head when commenting on the situation.

"I'm getting frustrated, because we're seeing a lot of parallels to Vietnam," he said. "The 24-hour news cycle has changed things. In Vietnam, we could lose 200 a week, and you might hear it from Walter Cronkite. If we lose five a week now, the public goes crazy.

"My question to my peers is this: Are the insurgents going to tire of this before the American people?"

Maguire, who was promoted to captain before being medically retired, is unabashed in his love and admiration for Rangers.

He believes the skills and values he learned in Ranger School prepared him to endure and even overcome the darkest days of his life. That's an advantage he has over others, like Sheehan, struggling to deal with tragedy.

"The ideals I hold — that helped me get through it," he said. Then, ever the pragmatist, he added:

"I was awfully good as a night fighter," he said. "I had a natural talent for it. That sure comes in handy these days, if you want to look at it rationally."

Though Maguire's visual memories are limited to the first 24 years of his life, he continues to dream, mostly in shades of green – green jungles, green uniforms.

"I dream of leading a platoon of Rangers," he said. "I'll be 90 years old, still dreaming about leading Rangers. That won't change."

Maguire is putting the finishing touches on another book, Mekong Meridian, an anthology of "strange but true" incidents in Vietnam, based upon his own experiences there.

Future officers use FOB and forward thinking

Kris Gonzalez
Bayonet staff

For the first time in Fort Benning Officer Candidate School history, Soldiers are using a mock forward operating base to train for future operations, making digging foxholes during field exercises a thing of the past.

"Previously we dug in and established a deliberate defense," said Capt. Corey Hemingway, commander of B Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment. "But this set up is more stringent upon what is going on in Iraq and Afghanistan."

Though some candidates said it doesn't compare to the comforts of home, the new FOB consists of many amenities Soldiers enjoy in today's battle zones, like air-conditioned sleep tents, a dining facility, showers and hand-washing stations.

The tent city was set up before the candidates arrived for their latest field exercise.

"All we had to do was bring in our supplies," said Officer Candidate John May. "The biggest advantage is that we didn't have to worry about digging holes and suffering heat casualties."

"The biggest challenge," Hemingway said, "is the fact we have to transport ourselves to training areas. We used to walk outside and be at our training site. This (challenge) is more realistic for deployed Soldiers today.

Hemingway described the OCS exercise as a simulated deployment to a foreign land where the U.S. has established a presence.

His Soldiers were to replace an imaginary unit completing its rotation. After setting up their company, the Soldiers were evaluated on squad-level and platoon-level missions.

The idea is to present scenarios similar to those overseas, he said, like the ones in Afghanistan where the Americans have established ties with the local government, civilians fight alongside and against U.S. Soldiers, and the battlefield is moved to the outskirts of cities, sometimes requiring rural combat operations.

> "An officer is not going to pull guard duty. But we need to know the role of that enlisted Soldier who does pull it and understand what he goes through on a daily basis to be able to properly perform our duties as officers."
> Officer Candidate John May
> OCS student

The missions were broken down into day and night, over urban as well as wooded terrains.

The urban operations were played out at the McKenna MOUT site, where the candidates faced situations like one in which they were tasked to rescue a hostage from insurgents, or another in which they were ordered to secure a building and seize a weapons cache.

"Each day two squads from each platoon would go out on missions and one would stay back to pull FOB security," May said. "The squads that stayed behind would have to keep on their toes in case the FOB was attacked."

"It's very realistic training to the scenarios Soldiers have to face in Iraq," he said. "There are (simulated) bullets flying and if your initial plans don't work, you have to adapt on the spot and you never know if your next plan is going to work."

Another thing that makes the training realistic, May said, is the OCS class has to deal with simulated casualties.

"If you're dealing with casualties and you run off leaving a building unsecure, it is very real possibility that the bad guys would send reinforcements back into the building," May said.

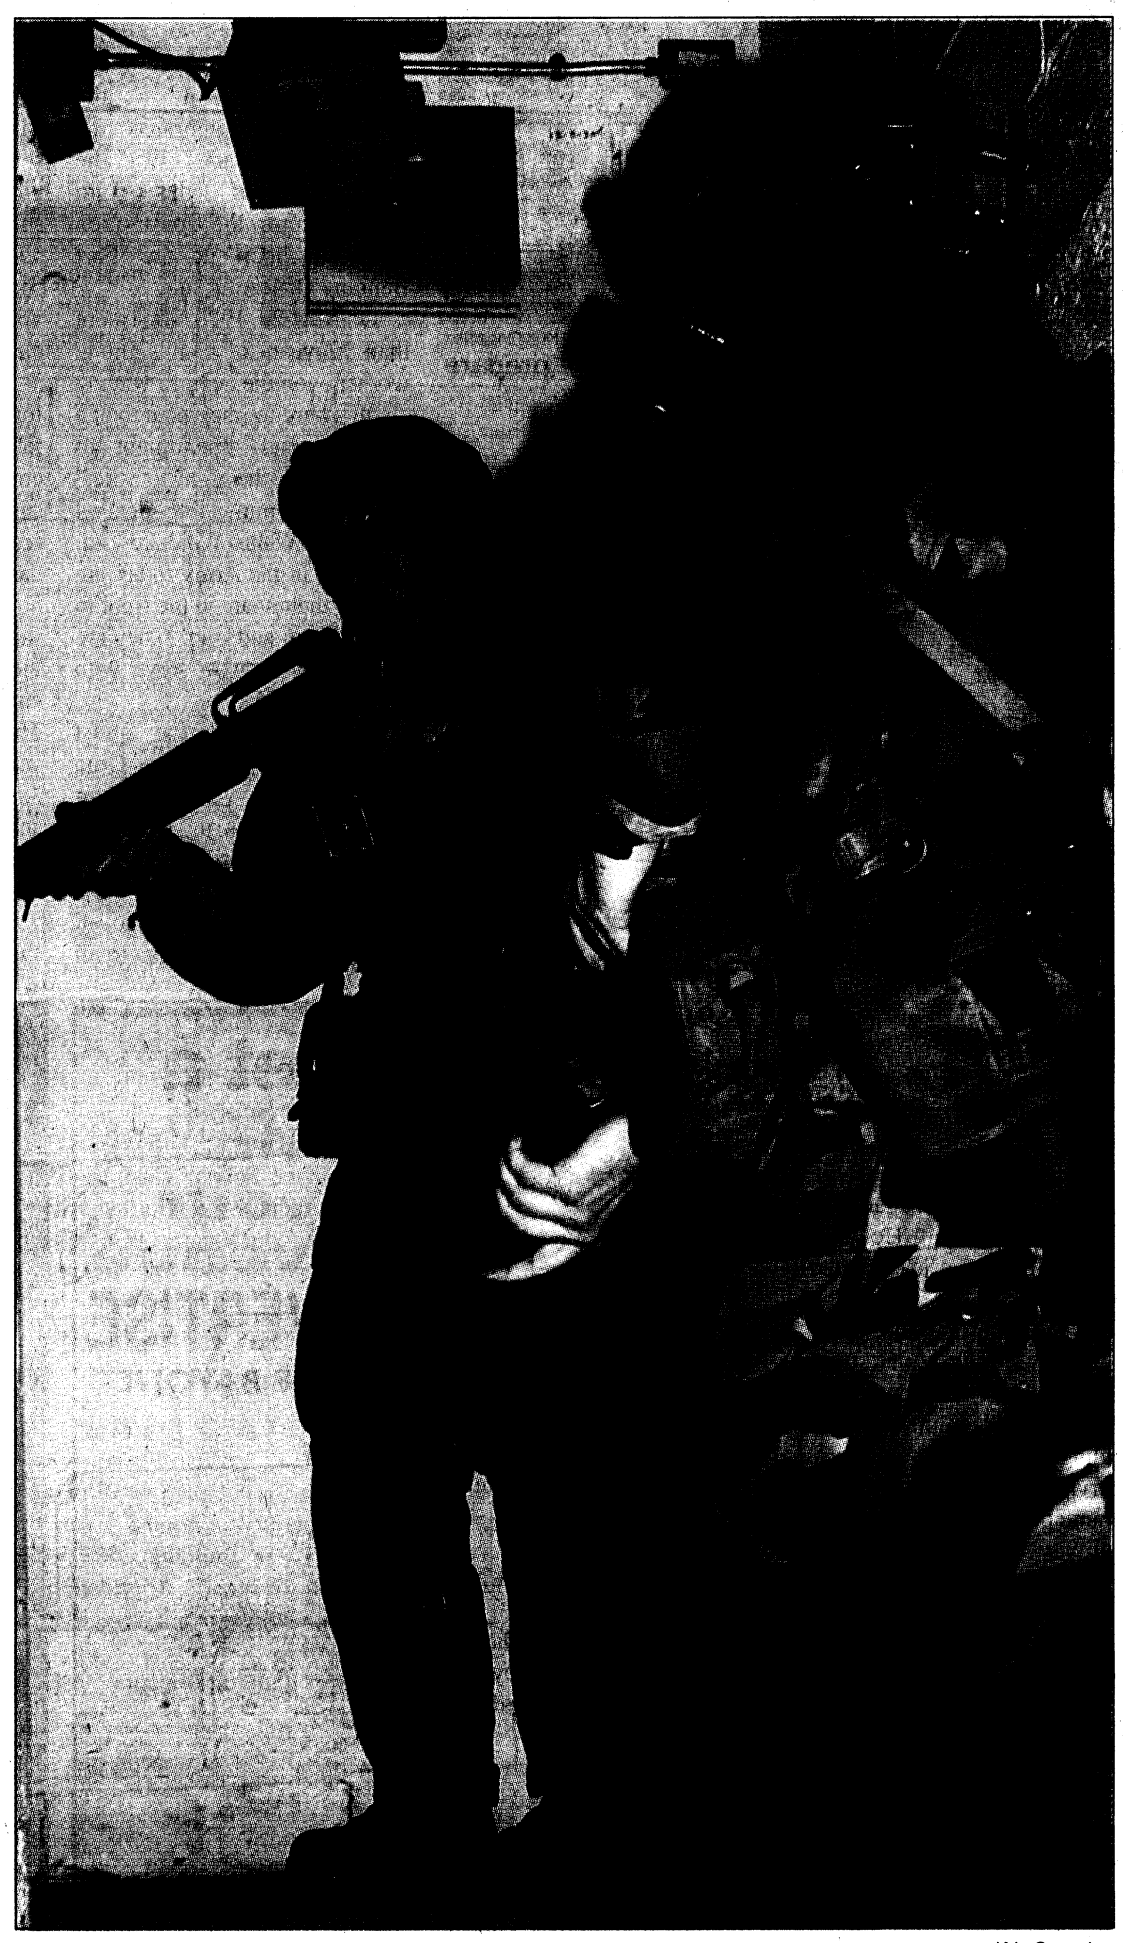
"And if there are downed enemies, you will have to take the time to write a (enemy prisoner of war) report, inventory their equipment and remove any weapons."

Before engaging in any missions, the platoon leaders plan the attack.

May, who serves as the student first sergeant, works with the platoon sergeants who deal with issues like taking accountability of the Soldiers and pulling guard duty.

"An officer is not going to pull guard duty," May said. "But we need to know the role of that enlisted Soldier who does pull it and understand what he goes through on a daily basis to be able to properly perform our duties as officers."

The future officers also learn to deal with the press. Some of the cadre role-play Al Jazeera reporters, military media or embedded journalists.



"The media adds a whole new light to the situations," Hemingway said.

"The reactions from the candidates vary. But we teach them the rules of engaging in interviews, how to ensure the safety of the embedded reporters and to prohibit anyone from taking photos of American casualties."

"They're setting up scenarios that we would actually face in an urban environment," May said.

"But no matter how chaotic it can seem at times, we've learned we can accomplish so much with the right planning," he said.

"(This exercise) gave us a great opportunity to train as we fight."

New course certifies instructors

Jo Kennedy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Instructors from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's Tactics and Special Operations Department and Fort Benning paramedics teamed up to practice medical evacuations along the Chattahoochee River Aug. 25.

This event was the culmination of the new weeklong Riverine Instructor Certification Program to certify instructors and establish standing operating procedures for all waterborne operations conducted by the Institute.

"The plan was to have someone intentionally fall out of the boats so that the remaining crew has to execute overboard procedures," said Capt. Edwin Serrano, WHINSEC deputy director of tactics and special operations. "This is where the training actually begins."

While a medic tried to stabilize the patient, the crew reported the incident to the tactical operations center, located near the training site, Serrano said.

TOC officials were responsible for notifying the hospital and getting to the closest accessible ambulance transfer point along the river, Serrano said.

Staff Sgt. Hector Vera, WHINSEC special operations instructor and river operations NCOIC, supervised the event.

His experience in waterborne operations, including the U.S. Marine Corps Coxswain course, Zodiac North America, Inc., basic course and Thompson Engine Repair course, proved essential in constructing the WHINSEC program, he said.

"As instructors, we need to be fully prepared to react and use our available assets, such as our qualified EMT personnel, to take control of the situation and alleviate further jeopardy," Vera said.

"Because of this repetitive training and our work with the paramedics, we learned such things as the availability and reaction time for EMS to arrive at our ambulance pick-up points … in the event of an accident along the river," he said.

More than 14 foreign and U.S. instructors, ranging from sergeants to majors, took part in the training with post paramedics. Paramedics said they believe the training benefited them as much as it did the military involved.

"Because of Fort Benning's size, and since units can no longer depend on helicopter medical evacuation support, our biggest issue is to be able to quickly get the patient from the scene of the accident to the hospital," said paramedic Foy Walker.

"This opportunity today, working with WHINSEC, helps us do just that."

DFAC boasts best service

Kris Gonzalez
Bayonet staff

They were named runner-up, but a group of dining facility workers say they're second-to-none.

The 36th Engineer Combat Group Dining Facility, known as The Warrior Inn, was named runner-up in the TRADOC large unit category in the annual Philip A. Connelly Awards competition, a program that recognizes excellence in Army food service.

"It's very prestigious to win runner-up," said manager Sgt. 1st Class George Howard. "(The award) is not just handed to you."

The dining facility was evaluated based on food preparation, progressive cooking, the cleanliness of the building, from inside and out, supervision tactics, and ration accountability, Howard said.

"It was based on stuff we do everyday, but maybe during the competition we paid a little more attention to detail," he said.

Howard's assistant, Sgt. 1st Class Young-Daniel Abanathey, said when he and Howard came to the dining facility more than a year ago, they revamped the administration and made sure everything was done by the book.

"We looked at it from this perspective — when we go somewhere, how do we want to be served and treated," Abanathey said.

"We tried to make dining at The Warrior Inn a valued experience," he said.

"We spent a lot of money upgrading the inside and outside of the facility," Howard said.

He, and Abanathey, along with their staff of Soldiers and civilians, changed the interior of the facility, added plants, wall fixtures, two flat screen televisions and an automated menu.

"We wanted to be up-to-date," Howard said. "You don't want outdated stuff in your DFAC. We get compliments everyday on how the facility has changed."

Abanathey said although the dining facility lost first place to a brand new dining facility built at Redstone Arsenal, Ala., The Warrior Inn deserves more recognition for the transition it has gone through.

"If (the dining facility) is brand new, it's already built to the new standards," Abanathey said. "It's more like a restaurant on post than a dining facility.

"We're taking a dining facility and trying to turn it into a restaurant," he said. "It's a much bigger process."

Howard and Abanathey agree that the key ingredient to the dining facility's success is teamwork among the Soldiers, civilians and the 36th Engineer Command Group.

> "You have to eat here to see what it's really like. It's the best meal on post. Where else can you get a nutritional meal for $3.50?"
> Sgt. 1st Class George Howard
> Warrior Inn manager

"We have the some of best Soldiers in the Army — food service wise," Howard said. "They just do what they're told, and they don't even realize that they're doing more here than they would do at another dining facility."

"They're outstanding," said shift leader Staff Sgt. Kevin Frazier.

"They do what they're supposed to do and they ask questions when they need to," he said.

"We're just doing what we learned at AIT," said food service specialist Pvt. Jeremias Duarte.

"We make sure we do the little things like keep the kitchen clean, maintain the right cooking temperatures," Duarte said. "We're just doing everything by the book."

"And their cooperation with the civilians is superb," Howard said. "The facility wouldn't be the way it is without civilians."

"It's like one big family," said food service specialist Pfc. Robert Nixon.

"I love working with the Soldiers," said Joann White, who has been working at the dining facility for nine years. "They have a little bit more control, discipline."

White said she doesn't work at the DFAC everyday for the money. She does it because she loves the people and the atmosphere.

"When you come in, the facility is clean, the food is good and you get a smile with it," White said. "I love cooking and when you love what you do, you're going to try to do the best you can."

Cook Eugenia Hunter boasts that customers love her cabbage and fried chicken, and patrons visit the facility on Thursdays to enjoy soul food and on Fridays when the entrée is T-bone steak.

"You have to eat here to see what it's really like," Howard said. "It's the best meal on post. Where else can you get a nutritional meal for $3.50?"

The Warrior Inn is located at Building 2895 on 1st Infantry Division Loop.

Post celebrates 85 years of suffrage

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Members of the tricommunity celebrated the 85th anniversary of the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the Constitution at a luncheon at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

On Aug. 26, 1920, after more than 72 years of campaigning, women won the right to vote.

"It's hard to imagine it took a congressional amendment to give women the right to vote," said post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski. "Women in the Army today are pulling their share in the fight in Afghanistan and Iraq. They are great Soldiers who serve with honor and pride."

He introduced the guest speaker, Brig. Gen. Gina Farrisee, the commanding general of the Army's Soldier Support Institute at Fort Jackson, S.C.

"She is a true model to all women in the military and to all Soldiers," he said.

Farrisee said this year's event, themed "Women Win the Vote: 85 years and Beyond," is a celebration of the hope and the sense of possibility felt by the pioneers of the women's suffrage movement. As the 61st adjutant general of the Army, she was responsible for Army voting during the presidential election.

"Hope comes in many forms," Farrisee said. "They told us we shouldn't, that we couldn't. That we couldn't succeed. So, in the past, we searched for hope, but hope now has turned to possibility."

The 19th Amendment, she said, represented a profound victory for women in civic, cultural and political affairs. The victory was fought for 72 years by women like Susan B. Anthony, Mary Ann Shadd Cary and Carrie Chapman Catt, who pushed aside barriers and opened doors.

According to the National Women's History Project, women suffragists like them were called radical and immoral. And, by the time women in the U.S. won the right to vote, 16 other nations had already guaranteed women's voting rights.

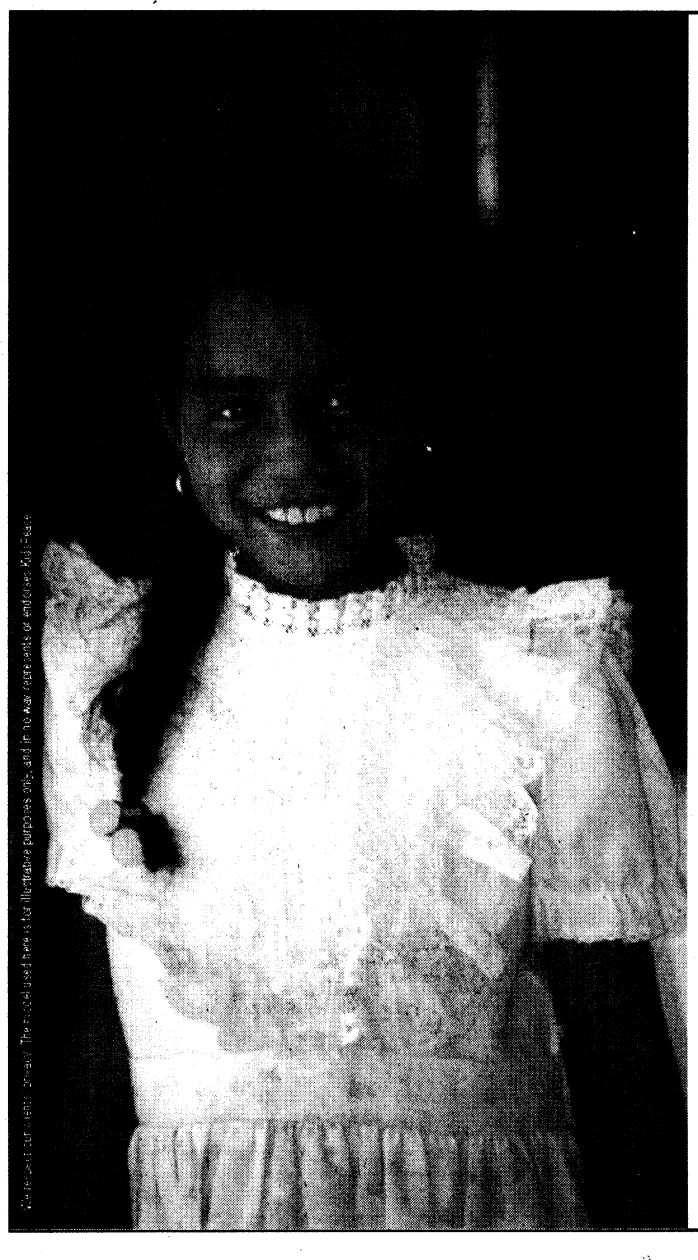
Farrisee highlighted stories of female Soldiers who have inspired her, from Sgt. Leigh Ann Hester, the first woman to earn a Silver Star since World War II, to Eileen Collins, who recently brought the space shuttle Discovery back to Earth. Collins, as an Air Force lieutenant colonel, was the first woman to pilot a shuttle.

"The message — continue to set your goals high," Farrisee said.

"Doors will open. But we still face obstacles like lower pay. Sexual harassment and sexual assault still continue to exist. They're both incompatible with the Warrior Ethos and detract from a positive unit atmosphere."

Farrisee said although women have always been known as the primary caregivers in families, there was no reason women couldn't be both mothers and professionals in whatever career field they choose.

She asked the men in the audience to look to their left and right at the women in uniform around them.



"Do you see her as a Soldier first?" she said. "What do you owe her? One thing — to treat her equally with the same courtesy, dignity and respect as anyone else. No more. No less."

The women, she said, owe the Army their best effort every day. By being committed to what they do, they then are entitled to their share of the "satisfaction and honor that accompanies service to the nation."

"Our country must continue to grow and be the land of opportunity for all," she said. "Never take the right to vote for granted. Take every opportunity to exercise your right."

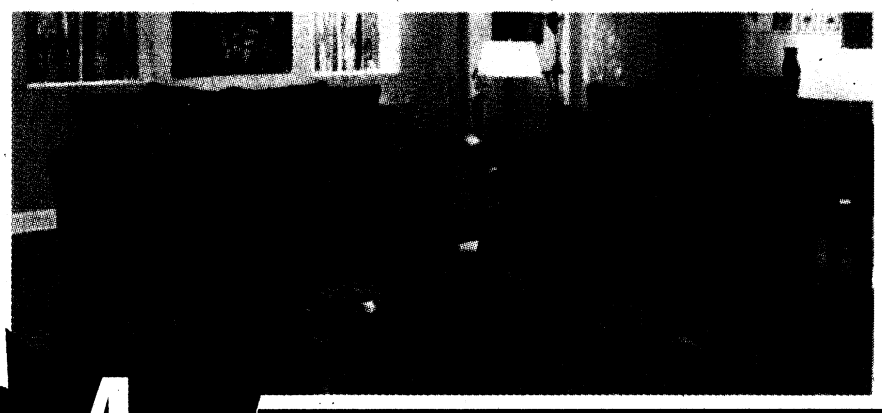
SHOP SMART!

THANKS FROM JD KINDERS TO ALL THE GUYS AND GIRLS WHO DO MORE BEFORE 9AM THAN MOST PEOPLE DO ALL DAY.



JD Kinder's Furniture is the most recognized destination in the Columbus trade area for a wide selection of quality home furnishings. We enjoy a great following amongst our military citizens and buying and financing here is very convenient. But many people are unaware that JD Kinder's can arrange financing for many people who are young and just starting out with little credit history or are in need of credit repair and think that they can't buy from normal retailers like us. These people many times go to rent to own stores and specialty military stores. They have their place, but many times the people that can least afford it end up paying more for furniture. Look at the illustration below and see just how much you can save at Kinder's.

Fascinating fly facts:
•A single house fly can carry 6 million bacteria. That's 1 million bacteria per each of its six "feet."
• Flies taste through their feet.
•A house fly can not be trained to wipe its feet at the door.
•There are 10,000 flies for every human.
•That's 60 billion germ-carrying stinky feet for everyone in the family.

RCI housing assessments nearly complete

Assessments part of turnover schedule

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The RCI program is a 50-year partnership between the Department of the Army and developer Clark Pinnacle to eliminate inadequate housing and improve the quality of life for Soldiers and their families.

A team from Clark Realty is finishing up the first phase of housing assessments as part of the Residential Communities Initiative program.

The RCI program is a 50-year partnership between the Department of the Army and developer Clark Pinnacle to eliminate inadequate housing and improve the quality of life for Soldiers and their families. Clark Realty is the program's developer, general contractor and asset manager.

Because Clark Pinnacle is borrowing "hundreds of millions of dollars" to build, renovate and manage Fort Benning's family housing, Clark Realty's Development executive Phil Cowley, said the assessments are a necessity.

"The property conditions assessments allow RCI to identify any deferred maintenance conditions and put a budget together," Cowley said. 'They're not health and welfare inspections."

The assessments, a 100-percent survey of interiors and exteriors, also serve to satisfy the lender.

Since RCI is almost here, he said, there are still some things that need to be done before Jan. 1, when Clark Pinnacle takes charge of the housing inventory and begins construction on new units. The final Community Development and Management Plan is awaiting congressional approval and financing should be finalized in December.

The initial round of 400 assessments, completed this past week, included a cross section of quarters in all of the post's housing areas, said Jim Wiggins, the post's RCI program manager and Housing Division chief. Residents received notices informing them of the inspection schedule.

Beginning Sept. 12, Wiggins and Cowley said the team must assess each set of quarters not previously inspected, more than 3,000 sets, and finish in early October.

With so many assessments to do in a short period of time, Cowley said it is logistically impossible to make appointments with residents, or to even pinpoint the assessment to a time of day.

But, the additional time spent on the first set of 400, he said, has prepared his four consultants to be able to move more quickly with the remaining assessments.

"They'll work 10-hour days and do 60 houses a day," Cowley said. That means only 10 minutes per unit, and he said if they needed to take additional time, they will try to do it in an empty unit instead of an occupied one.

Wiggins said the assessments will take place whether or not the residents are at home. Military police escorts accompany the assessment team for security purposes.

"The best thing residents can do to help the assessment process is to be there," Wiggins said.

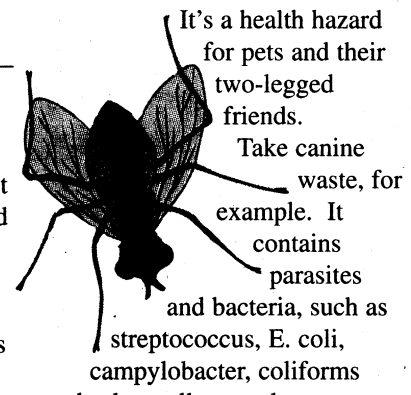
"But if you can't be there and you have a dog, please secure it somewhere or put it outside."

Cowley said the Clark Pinnacle team has been attending Fort Benning's town-hall meetings to provide information and answer questions from residents.

Near the end of the year, Soldiers, or spouses with the appropriate power of attorney, will begin signing leases for their quarters and do allotment paperwork for rent payments.

Cowley said the RCI partnership is an interactive process, unlike traditional military construction projects, and he's confident his team is going to meet Fort Benning's needs.

The team will draw on lessons learned from Clark Pinnacle's current RCI partnerships at Fort Irwin and the Presidio of Monterey, Calif., and at Fort Belvoir, Va.



The assessment schedule will be published next week in The Bayonet and on the Command Access Channel 4.

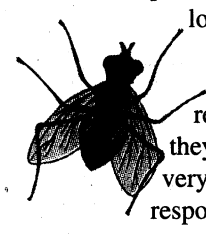
Pet poop poses nasty problem in post neighborhoods

Studies show pets may help you live longer, but your neighbors may kill you if you don't control those critters

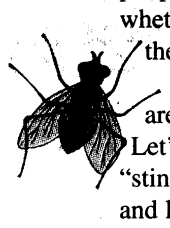
Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff



The odorometer says it's stinking hot out there. I used to ponder the meaning of the phrase "dog days of summer." Now I get it. The torrid heat has baked my neighbor's doggie dumpsite into a teeming, pungent pile of poop. Poodle poop. There's nothing worse.

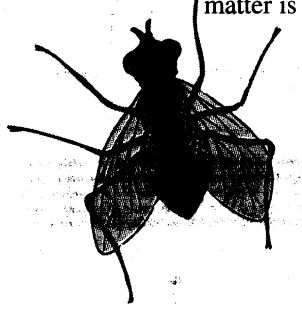
The smell wafts across his backyard and into mine. Good fences make good neighbors only if they curtail the smell. Short of replacing my chain-link with an odor-retardant privacy fence — eight-feet high with fans pointed that way — I'm stuck with the yuck.

I do have that advantage — I can erect a privacy fence. That's not an option for Fort Benning residents, who must abide by guidelines that prohibit privacy fences.



But post residents do have one advantage I don't have. They can rely on their community life officer to intervene when the smell gets unbearable.

Courtesy, like "sense," isn't nearly as common as it should be, and pet courtesy, or the lack thereof, is a common complaint among post residents. Whether its doggie doo, incessant barking or a free-range kitty, pesky pet problems rank right up there with loud music and mangy lawns.



The post housing policy, detailed in the handbook residents receive when they're assigned quarters, is very clear about the responsibilities of pet owners on post.

Four-legged critters must be kept on a leash when they're not fenced. (When's the last time you saw a cat on a leash?) And pet poop must be picked up, whether it's in your backyard or the back woods.

Doggie doo in "common" areas is a common problem. Let's lay aside the whole "stinky, unsightly, inconsiderate and lazy" issue and address the real problem here. Fecal matter is full of cooties.

It's a health hazard for pets and their two-legged friends.

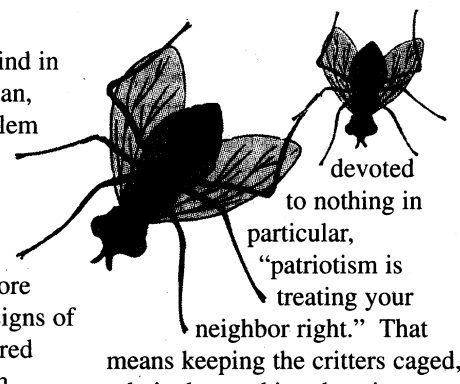
Take canine waste, for example. It contains parasites and bacteria, such as streptococcus, E. coli, campylobacter, coliforms and salmonella, a real poop lover. In this dog eat dog poop world, critters are susceptible to unspeakable, agonizing, deadly diseases. And bad breath.

Human contact with problematic poop can also cause poop problems for humans, including gastrointestinal infections and diarrhea.

It takes temperatures greater than 130 degrees to kill the bacteria found in animal excrement. It's hot out there, but it's not that hot. The sun actually bakes the poop into flaky piles of bacteria. Add a mower to the mix and you have a brigade of airborne bacteria.

So pick up your poop, and pick it up safely, using disposable gloves, plastic bags, a pooper scooper or a teenager.

If the prospect makes you want to barf — another gross topic for another day — try a product such as Poop Freeze, an aerosol that hardens it, making it less messy to pick up. Poop Freeze, or the like, can be purchased at a pet supply store or online.



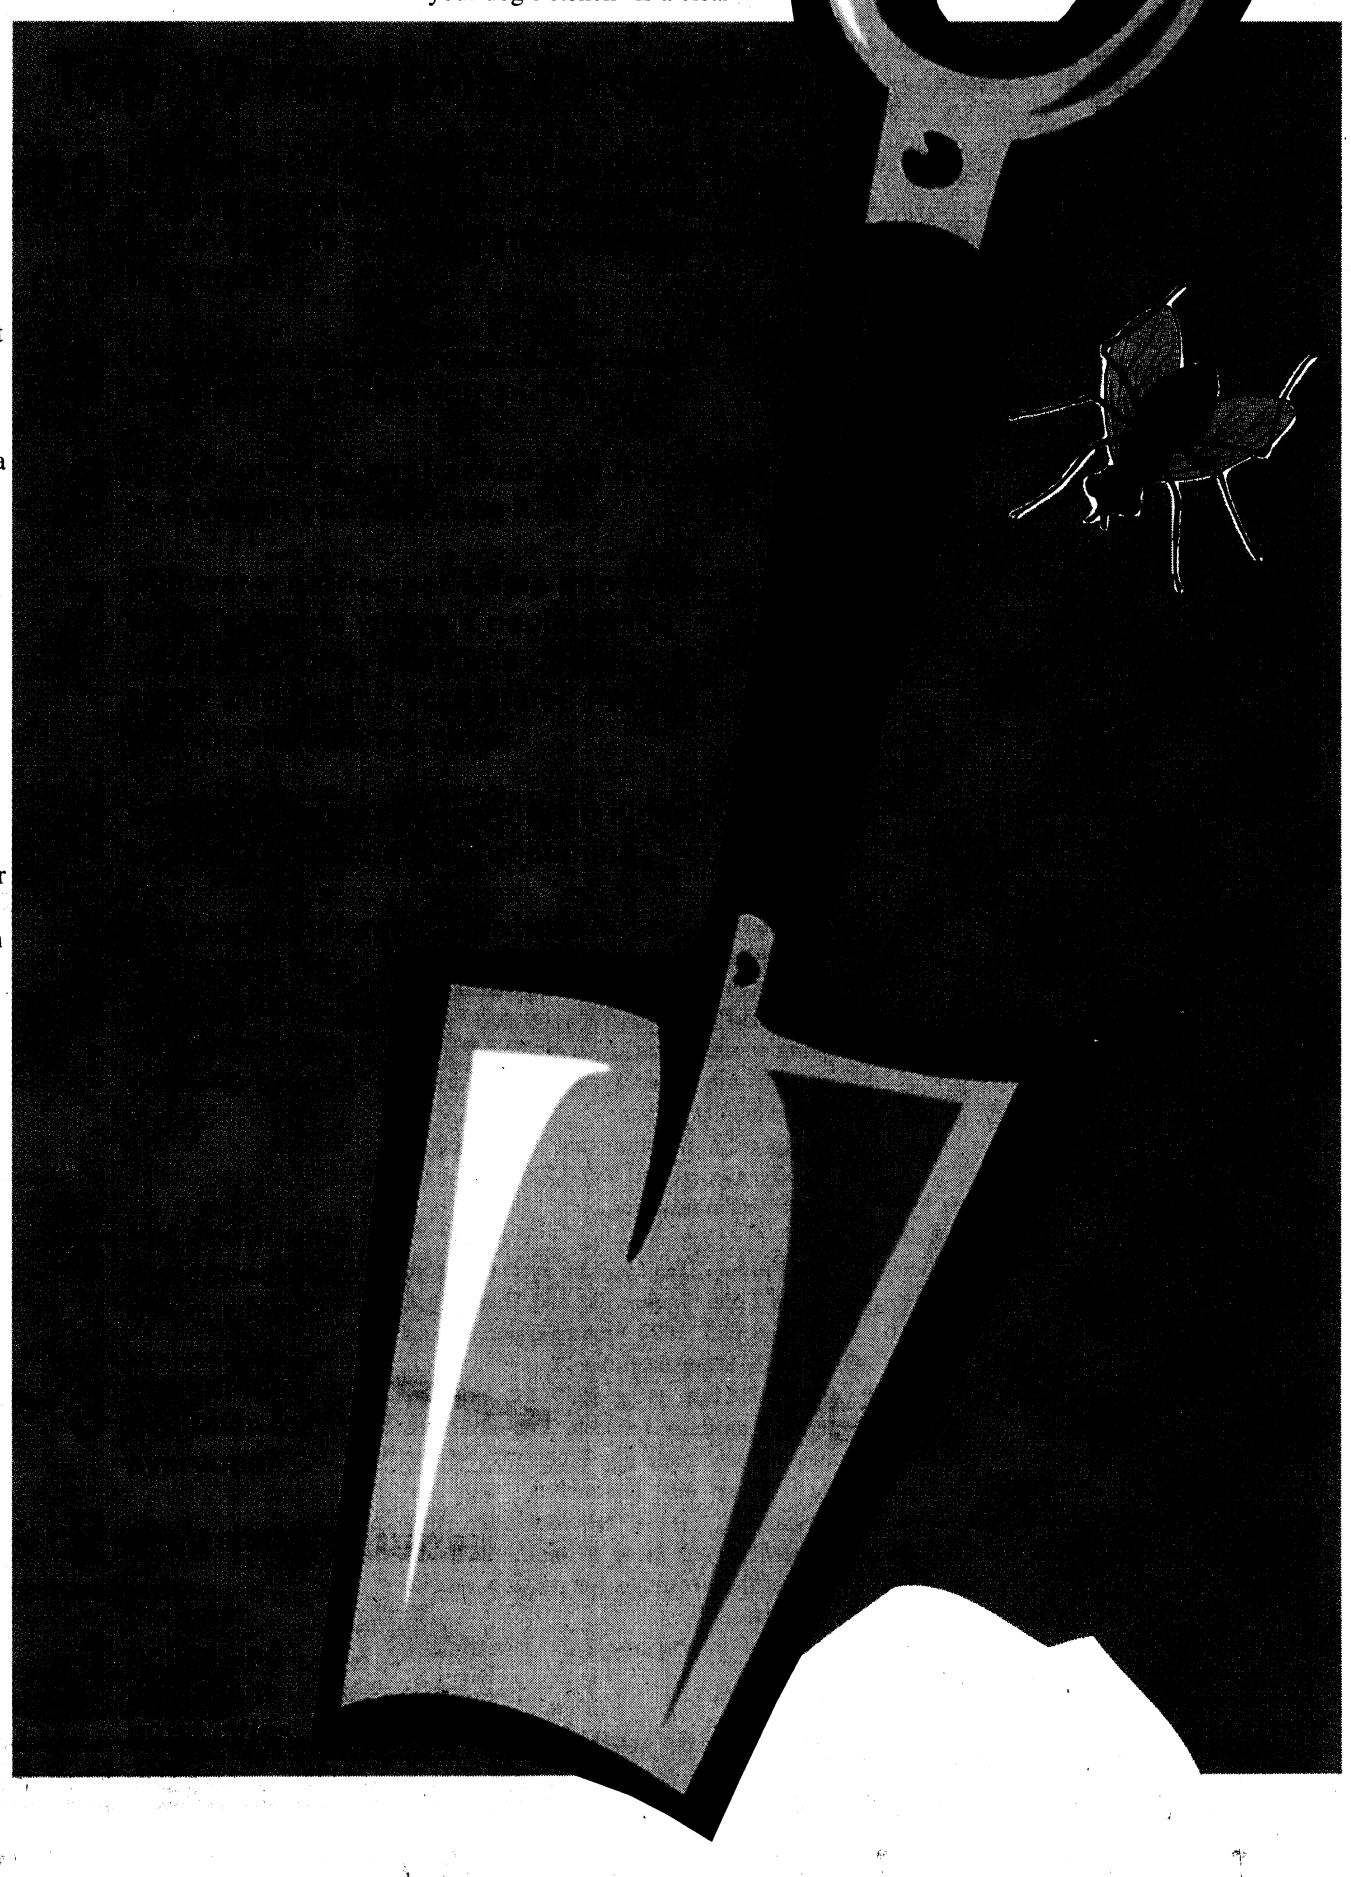
Pet waste can be flushed down the toilet, though I wouldn't recommend it if you have a Great Dane. Water from the toilet goes into the septic system where pollutants are removed before it reaches an outlet.

Of course, if you're walking, you'll have to bag the poop until you can dispose of it. That's not such a bad thing. A big bag of poop may be your best defense against assault. Hmmm. It might be a good idea to carry a spare bag of it when taking public transit or walking down a dark alley, with or without the dog. Just a thought.

You can toss the bagged poop in a garbage can, sure, as long as the can is covered tightly, which pretty much rules out the receptacles you typically find in public. If flies get in the can, you'll have a maggot problem on your hands. Ewww. That's worse than a poop problem.

Regular scooping has another benefit. You're more likely to spot the tell-tale signs of a health problem. Discolored stool or a sudden change in consistency can signal illness.

Aside from all that — the smell and disease and all — proper pet poop patrol is a matter of patriotism. Yep, patriotism. But don't take my word for it.



According to recent ramblings on badeagle.com, a Web site devoted to nothing in particular, "patriotism is treating your neighbor right." That means keeping the critters caged, relatively speaking, keeping them quiet, and keeping their poop policed.

"Selfish, careless and inconsiderate neighbors bring psychological terrorism to your own backyard," the addled author argued. "The smell of your dog's stench" is a clear indication you are not a real patriot, and your "disrespect ultimately makes for a weak country."

I had to include this passage because, in the interest of full disclosure, it's important to point out that pets are not the only creatures full of poop.

We'll talk about that "scoop" another time.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What are some legal issues involving birth certificates?

A: Birth certificates list information on the child, such as the child's name and date of birth, as well as the names of the mother and father.

If the name of the father is unknown, that space may be left blank. If the mother and father were not married at the time of the child's birth, some states will not list the father's name.

So what if the father is later identified through DNA testing, or if the parents later marry? States will usually allow a birth certificate to be amended under such circumstances. Adoption is also a common basis for amending a birth certificate.

In Alabama, for example, a birth certificate can be amended for minor corrections, and can also be changed to add a father's name, if the parties have married, if the father has submitted an affidavit of paternity, or if a court has determined him to be the father of the child.

Anyone interested in amending a birth certificate should contact the issuing state's agency for vital records.

If an unmarried man's name is listed on a child's birth certificate, is he legally the father?

The answer depends on the state, but generally speaking, a man who signs a birth certificate or an affidavit of paternity will be recognized as the legal father and will have a difficult time trying to dispute paternity later. Consult an attorney before signing if there is doubt as to paternity.

Get more miles from your gas tank

Precision Tune Auto Care

Americans may be victims of skyrocketing gasoline prices hovering close to $3 a gallon, but they are not powerless in controlling their fuel costs this Labor Day weekend.

"There's a wide range of fuel-saving tactics that can help drivers get more miles from a tank of gas," said Joel Burrows, also known as "The Car Doctor" and vice president of training at Precision Auto Tune Care. "If motorists adjust their driving habits and observe some simple care care techniques, they could make a significant impact on how much fuel they waste, and that translates into substantial money savings."

To drive home this point, Burrows provides the following tips:

• Use proper octane fuel. Higher-octane gas, which produces less energy, not only costs more, it also yields lower miles per gallon.

• Plan your day. Limit trips by running all errands at the same time or on your way to or from work.

• Avoid making quick starts or stops. To avoid jamming on brakes, stay a good distance from the car in front of you. When possible, slow down simply by taking your foot off the gas.

• Maintain steady speeds; use cruise control on the open road.

• Use overdrive gear for highway driving and don't switch lanes unless you have to.

• Slow down. Every car has an optimum efficiency level, at which it operates best. However, most people drive at these speeds only one to three percent of the time. For most cars, the optimum speed is between 38 and 48 miles per hour, but any speed over 55 miles per hour causes your fuel efficiency to decrease. Plus, driving faster makes your tires heat up more, which causes them to wear out sooner.

• Check your tires' air pressure. When tires aren't inflated properly, it can cost a mile or two per gallon, according to the Car Care Council. Check your tires' air pressure when the tires are cold. Make sure they're all inflated according to the manufacturer's specifications. You can find this in your car's owner's manual or possibly on a chart inside one of the car's doors, on the gas cap or on the trunk deck lid.

• Have an air inductor and fuel injection cleaning. Especially if you notice that your car isn't performing as well as usual, have this service done by a trained and certified automotive technician. It's also sometimes called a fuel system service. Not only does this procedure help with many driveability issues, it is the one single procedure you can have performed that will make an immediate increase in fuel economy and performance.

• If you are waiting for someone, don't let the engine idle more than a minute or two. It is better to turn your engine off and restart the car to save on fuel.

• Stop using your car as a mobile storage unit. Anything extra in your trunk adds weight, which reduces fuel efficiency. Also remove any carriers you're not using, such as luggage and bike racks. They add wind resistance to your car.

And contrary to popular belief, if you drive a truck, leave the tailgate where it is. It's actually less efficient to drive with the tailgate down or removed. You might consider buying a tonneau cover, though. Even one that covers 60 percent of your truck bed will increase your fuel efficiency.

• Have a certified technician perform an engine and emissions analysis to ensure that the engine is running at maximum efficiency.

• Today's vehicles run on a fine film of fluids. Make sure you service all fluids on a regular basis and in accordance with the manufacturer's recommendations. Engine oil level should be checked at every fill-up.

Staff Sgt. Reeba Critser

Michael Peterson, country musician, talks to students at Page High School, Franklin, Tenn., about their call to duty Aug. 24.

Country artist preaches 'call to duty'

Staff Sgt. Reeba Critser
Army News Service

These days, fighting involves fists and guns, but not for Michael Peterson. The country artist spoke to students at Page High School, Franklin, Tenn., Aug. 24 to tell them they didn't have to join the service to answer America's call to duty — they just had to serve fellow Americans.

At the school, he sang "I'm a Soldier" from his upcoming album. The song was written by Sgt. 1st Class John Lamirande and Staff Sgt. Howie Smith, both audio engineers with the U.S. Army Field Band, Fort Meade, Md.

"The song is based around the Warrior Ethos — I will always place the mission first; I will never accept defeat; I will never quit; I will never leave a fallen comrade," Peterson said. "Those are not just Army values, but should be everywhere in our country. Take out the word Soldier and replace it with anything — cheerleader, student, athlete. It's a good message for young people."

Smith said he wrote the song on his way home from work and Lamirande wrote the bridge.

"This song was originally pop, rock and folk," Smith said. "But country is a larger demographic audience. We had a few changes to make it fit that genre but it works."

In Smith's 11-year Army career, he put out a solo album in 2002 and has his own publishing company. He recently re-enlisted indefinitely and said in his travels with the band he has seen the inspiration for the song.

"The Warrior Ethos embodies professionalism, not just the Army, but civilians also," Smith said. "Regardless of what you do, this song applies to you."

"People don't understand the true meaning of serving our country unless they're in the military, but I think this song describes it well," said Jeremy Coyle, a member of JROTC and a student at Page High School.

Peterson first heard the song in May and decided to record it because it reminded him of The Ballad of the Green Beret.

"The Soldiers deserve a voice in the market place from a Soldier's standpoint," he said. "It took a month of singing this song for me to understand its meaning."

For Peterson, the song took meaning in his life after seeing a change in his daughter.

Amanda Peterson is the JROTC cadet battalion commander and a senior at Page High School. She joined the program to get out of Wellness class, but stayed because of the relationships she formed. Now she plans to attend ROTC in college.

"I started taking leadership positions (in JROTC) and realized that this is bigger than me," Amanda said. "There's a feeling of family, team, values in the Army."

"She answered her calling," Peterson said. "She's part of a family of Soldiers around the world now."

To the students, Peterson said, "This song is not about what you do, but who you are.

"I'm hoping that someone out there will see me serve my time for Soldiers and their families," he continued. "Maybe an attorney will see it and say if Michael Peterson can give his time to serve, maybe I can do pro bono work for Soldiers and their families. I'm answering my call to duty."

Peterson also co-wrote a tune with his producer Josh Leo called "Warrior Anthem." The song, which is a musical version of the Soldier's Creed, will also be released with his new album.

Peterson is visiting Soldiers at various bases and recruiting stations and will perform in the Spirit of America tour this Christmas.

"I'm just serving the Soldiers," he said.

Once upon a time, there was a big pile of laundry.

The pile was made up of all different colors. A mommy decided she would play a game. Red! she said to her child, holding up a red shirt. Red! the child said. Mommy put it in the colors pile. Whites went in another pile. Green like a frog! White like ice cream! And so it went. Colors, whites. Colors, whites. And on the very last thing – a bib of blue – the child pointed to the colors pile. You should've seen the smile on mommy's face.

Everyday moments can become learning moments. Because learning starts long before school does. So tell stories. Play with the laundry. And even a chore with your child will become much more. Find out more at bornlearning.org.

OPSEC everyone's job

Casual Internet communication could hurt ops

Kris Gonzalez
Bayonet staff

Operational security isn't just a Soldier's responsibility anymore.

With more Americans using the Internet to communicate, whether by blogging, instant messaging or sending standard e-mails, it's the responsibility of friends and families of service members to safeguard information that could jeopardize the combat operations and lives of coalition forces abroad.

"The enemy aggressively 'reads' our open source and continues to exploit such information for use against our forces," wrote Gen. Peter Schoomaker, chief of staff of the Army, in a recent Army Knowledge Online newsletter. "Some Soldiers continue to post sensitive information to Internet Web sites and blogs (with) photos depicting weapon system vulnerabilities and tactics, techniques and procedures. Such OPSEC violations needlessly place lives at risk and degrade the effectiveness of our operations."

Robert Burch, training specialist in Fort Benning's Quality Assurance Directorate, said he thinks the growing OPSEC problems are a result of the "blast of technology" in the last decade. Everybody uses cell phones and everybody has access to the World Wide Web, he said, but no one is controlling the information flow and security measures fall to the wayside.

"The average Soldier doesn't think anything of sending pictures to his brother, his mother, his wife," Burch said. "And the Internet is so impersonal, he may think he's having a conversation with one person, but he doesn't realize there are so many servers between the sender and receiver and each one of those servers has the eyes and ears of people listening to the conversation."

"Every time a message drops to a server, it leaves a trail," Burch said. "It creates a pipeline for hackers. While you're chatting, somebody else can read your messages and even download cookies to contain your personal information. People use this method for identity theft. The enemy uses the same techniques used for stealing information to find out where a unit is on the battlefield.

"So the enemy gets some significant data from what the average person would consider an insignificant e-mail," Burch said.

"We have a thinking and adaptive enemy," said Al Harvey, director of Intelligence and Security for the U.S. Army Infantry Center. "They're well versed in using information that we think is unclassified and globally known to adapt their tactics and techniques. They will change the way they fight based on the information we give them."

Harvey said he thinks education is the key to getting OPSEC under control.

OPSEC has to be addressed from the highest level to the lowest levels (in the military), to include family members," Harvey said. Because family members are in charge of family readiness group Web sites, Soldiers sometimes discuss operations and sensitive information with their spouses through e-mail and over the phone.

Harvey said all Soldiers and their family members should keep OPSEC in mind when any of the following issues are discussed via telephone or the Internet: current operations, equipment and personnel vulnerabilities, tactics, techniques and procedures, and personal data, like social security numbers and even health insurance information.

"It boils down to information security," Harvey said. "Even the number of people on sick call can be sensitive if it pertains to an operational picture. The best way to know if what you're sending is OPSEC-friendly is to have it reviewed by the unit military intelligence officer, or S2."

Harvey said he realizes this idea may be unpopular and Soldiers or their family members may not choose to bring their Web sites, blogs or e-mails to the attention of the military intelligence officer, but he encourages them to do so.

"It's what they're supposed to do," he said. "It would be like sending information to JAG to make sure it's legal."

> "Every time a message drops to a server, it leaves a trail ... It creates a pipeline for hackers ... People use this method for identity theft. The enemy uses the same techniques used for stealing information to find out where a unit is on the battlefield."

Burch suggests that every Soldier or civilian who has access to a government computer on post use one.

Every computer should have a CAC card reader connected to it, or should be in the process of getting one.

The CAC card reader, which reads the microchip on the new military ID card, encrypts messages that are sent out via Outlook accounts, Burch said.

"Instant messaging and blogging are just as dangerous and should be treated the same way as radio communications between vehicles on the battlefield," Burch said.

The next step, Burch said, is for the leadership in each unit to address OPSEC violations as a real threat.

"Our mission success and Soldiers' lives depend on aggressively denying the enemy any advantage," wrote Gen. Richard Cody, VCSA, in the same AKO newsletter.

"The enemy will exploit sensitive photos showing the results of IED strikes, battle scenes, casualties, destroyed or damaged equipment and enemy KIAs as propaganda and terrorist training tools," Cody wrote. "We cannot afford to have our photos become training and recruitment tools for the enemy."

Energy-saving tips help save money, too

Leviton Institute

One of the good things to come out of the brownouts and soaring prices of the California Energy Crisis of 2000 is the adoption of leaner, meaner standards to the state's 1978-vintage Title 24 Energy Efficiency bill.

The new measures, which take effect as of October, will require builders in the "Golden State" to install a variety of energy-efficient devices in residential and commercial construction Fortunately, the same technology can save all of us money and conserve energy.

• Install dimmer switches

Replacing regular light switches with dimmer switches is an easy and inexpensive way to save electricity. Consider this: if you dim a bulb to 50 percent brightness, you use about 40 percent less electricity, and extend the life of the bulb around 20 times.

Plus, dimmers can help set a mood, whether watching a movie in the home theater or gathering in the dining room for a special meal. Set different levels in the same room and create an attractive custom lighting scene.

• Use fluorescent lights

Compact fluorescent bulbs use up to 75 percent less electricity than incandescent ones — or, to look at it another way, a 15-watt fluorescent bulb produces the same light as a 60-watt incandescent. They give off less heat, too.

• Install occupancy sensors

Like dimmer switches, occupancy sensors are another inexpensive, easy-to-install money saver. They automatically switch lights on when someone enters a room, and then off again, when the room is unoccupied for a set period.

They're useful in basements, closets, garages, hallways and any place where people forget they left the lights on. They're especially handy with older or disabled people, who are at a greater risk of falling in a dark hallway or bathroom.

• Install outdoor motion detectors

Strategically placed outside your home, motion detectors turn on outdoor floodlights only when a person walks near them. In addition to saving electricity, they also make your home more secure, since thieves don't like being caught in the spotlight.

• Install digital timers

Wall-mounted digital timers work like a regular switch when you turn them on, but then shut power off within a set range of times intervals, from minutes to hours, depending on your need. If you've ever accidentally left a bathroom heat lamp or exhaust fan on all day, you'll appreciate the convenience.

• Turn off the lights

The easier, but not the most reliable method, especially with kids and teens in the house, is to simply ask everyone to switch off the lights when they're not using them, or when they leave a room. Seems obvious, but you'd be amazed how many people forget.

Heroes made, not born

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Thomas C. Waynick
Family Life Chaplain Training Program

REFLECTIONS

Every Nov. 1, the Christian church celebrates All Saints' Day to remember all the saints and heroes of the church who have gone before us. Heroes are as important to the church as they are to any social organization. Their lives inspire, motivate and encourage us on our journeys through life.

Thomas Carlyle, in his book On Heroes, Hero-Worship and the Heroic in History, writes, "I should say sincerity, a deep, great sincerity, is the first characteristic of all men in any way heroic."

The word "sincere" comes from the Latin, "sin cerus," meaning "without wax." Not every stone sculptor was a Buonarroti Michaelangelo creating a Pieta or David. Most ordinary sculptors made mistakes chipping away a little too much stone. When this happened, they fixed it by applying a dab of wax.

Therefore, a sincere person is someone without wax, someone who does not cover up his imperfections, but lives in spite of them. We are heroes when we confess our weaknesses, frailties and faults, then live beyond them.

"The hero is distinguished by his achievement; the celebrity by his image." A wise general once told me that the U.S. military does not hire celebrity superstars. No recruiter is going to offer you the contracts of Michael Vick or Shaquille O'Neal. The military does not work like that.

What the military does, is hire ordinary people and ask them to do extraordinary things. The military provides us the opportunity to be heroes by challenging us to do things we never dreamed possible. We are heroes when we accept the challenges of life.

Waynick

In the book, The Power of Myth, Joseph Campbell speaks of spiritual heroes. He says, "A hero is someone who has given his or her life to someone bigger than oneself."

We receive that call many times in life. I have that summons from my Christ, my church, my family and my country. I have a call to be a "spiritual" hero, to lay down my life in many ways for others.

Each of you has also received similar callings. All of us have answered a call from our nation to give of our time, talents and resources for the Global War on Terrorism. We are spiritual heroes when we place the need of others above our own, when we sacrifice for the greater mission, the greater good.

I joined the Army under the slogan, "Be all you can be." I believe people want the challenge of those words. I believe God, in his bountiful grace, calls each of us to be all that we can be. I believe he has created, redeemed and sanctified the world through his son that we might be empowered for living, not just ordinary lives, but extraordinary heroic lives.

I believe God wants us to confess our humanity, accept the challenges of life, and accomplish the mission before us.

May God bless you, the heroes who inspire, motivate and encourage each other in this endeavor and beyond.

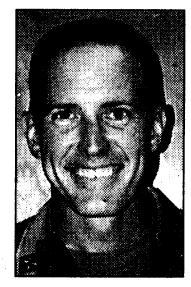
Discipline helps when raising children



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

I was in the gymnasium, and it was one of my first responsibilities as the new associate pastor in my first ministry assignment. It was a safe crowd, "The Golden Agers," and it was a safe topic — introduce myself, my family and the upcoming seminar I'd be teaching on Parenting 101.

The only trouble was Lauren, our 2-year-old, didn't want to be introduced. As I recall, she didn't particularly want to do anything I wanted her to do that morning in the gymnasium.

So as I tried to maintain some measure of ministerial dignity during my announcement on parenting in front of these beloved saints of the church, Lauren decided to do laps around their tables, running, giggling and generally being both seen and heard in a way that just wasn't appropriate to the occasion.

Painfully, her running came to a close before my announcement did, when she, at full tilt, tripped over the leg of a chair and smacked her head against that tiled gymnasium floor as a sound something akin to a ballpeen hammer bouncing off an iron anvil echoed throughout the gym. The saints gasped, she screamed, I squirmed, and I was pretty sure attendance at the seminar on parenting was going to be pretty low!

Hawkins

Being an expert in parenting is far easier said than done. I'm still working on my parenting merit badge. However, Dr. James Dobson gives some excellent advice in his new DVD series we'll be carrying at the Family Life Center this fall. He gives six basic principles of discipline for parents:

1) Clearly define your boundaries in advance. If you haven't spelled them out in advance, then don't bother trying to enforce the unknown. It's counterproductive. On the other hand, to borrow from a good military value, if your boundaries are clearly communicated, "inspect what you expect."

2) When defiantly challenged, respond with confident decisiveness. This becomes easier when you master principle three.

3) Distinguish between willful defiance (which usually calls for punishment) and childish irresponsibility (which usually only calls for correction).

4) Comfort and teach your children when the confrontation is over. After a conflict, many youngsters want to be held and reassured. Give them all of that you can.

5) Avoid making impossible demands. Involuntary responses like bedwetting or delayed potty training are not appropriate areas for punishment. They are opportunities to exercise positive reinforcement to the max.

6) Let love be your guide. God doesn't call you to be perfect as a parent, only faithful. Genuine, selfless love and affection for a child is a huge deposit in their emotional piggy bank. Love wins!

Want more practical tips on how to make your children mind without losing yours? Make your way to CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel where we're enjoying a series entitled "Making Children Mind Without Losing Yours" or call The Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760. We're here to help you any way that we can in the most rewarding (and most demanding) calling of all — parenthood.

It's Labor Day weekend — do you have any plans yet?
D-2 will give you a rundown on what's playing at the movies.
D-3 will give you many ideas for fun things to do this long weekend and beyond.

Several friends have troubling Reunion in new Fox series

Jay Bobbin
© Zap2it

What's a murder between friends? Some possible answers play out in Reunion, an intriguing Fox drama marking one of the new television season's earliest series debuts when it follows the season premiere of The O.C. Thursday. (The pilot episode will have an encore the following night.)

An attractive cast of young actors charts the highs and lows of a tight-knit group from 1986 to the present ... but one initially unidentified character won't make it all the way through.

The resulting funeral sparks the premiere, which was directed by feature-film veteran Jon Amiel (Entrapment, Copycat).

Played by Sean Faris (Life as We Know It) and Will Estes (American Dreams), pals Craig and Will have a car accident that sets off many of the events, but privileged Craig's girlfriend, Samantha (Alexa Davalos, The Chronicles of Riddick), has a secret known only by friend-to-all Carla (Chyler Leigh, The Practice).

Also in the gang is Aaron (Dave Annable, Little Black Book), who's anxious to become more than friends with aspiring actress Jenna (Amanda Righetti, North Shore).

Extended flashbacks are standard in Reunion, which covers a different year each week; 1987 is the backdrop of the second episode, 1988 the third, etc. Often, those segments are cued by questions from Detective Marjorino (Mathew St. Patrick, Six Feet Under), the policeman probing the murder.

Those he interrogates have to look as much as 19 years older than they do in the sequences set earlier, necessitating careful casting by executive producer Jon Harmon Feldman (Tru Calling, Dawson's Creek).

"Part of making that transformation is physical," Feldman said, "but a large part of it is acting. The first few episodes turn over one card, or one character, per episode. They age differently, but it's also a matter of how the actor inhabits the character.

"In the pilot, Chyler just becomes that character at 38, in how she carries herself and changes the tenor of her voice. As an 18-year-old, Carla is the sweet 'flat-chested friend,' as she calls herself; by 38, she's been hardened and she's carrying around some baggage. Part of the fun of the show is exploring how the characters change over the years."

Big performance swings can follow for the Reunion actors.

"My manager and a lot of my friends call me 'The Chameleon'," actress Leigh said, "because I can basically look like anyone in any time period.

"I'm very grateful for that because it gives me such variety, whereas other people can have a hard time adapting to a certain look or style. When we see Carla at 38, she has much heavier makeup and a different posture, in a sense.

"By 38, you really know who you are. At 18, you're still exploring, and there's a certain naivete."

Just as he was last fall in ABC's Life as We Know It, Faris is in a show pitted directly against the CBS ratings juggernaut CSI: Crime Scene Investigation, but he has faith in Reunion.

In playing a charmer who persuades others to suit his agenda, the actor said, "I looked at two friends of mine and took different personality traits from both of them. My character means well and has good intentions; he just doesn't realize his selfishness. He's had everything all his life."

Sean Faris stars in Reunion, premiering Thursday on Fox.

And do his friends know they've served as living research for Faris?

"Not in the least. I would never, ever bring that up."

The ensemble movies The Big Chill and St. Elmo's Fire might seem like touchstones for Reunion, but Feldman credits fellow executive producers Steve Pearlman and Andrew Plotkin with the idea to follow six friends over 20 years.

"Immediately, that concept felt so rife with possibility that I went off and brought back these characters and ideas."

Feldman then fleshed out the murder-mystery aspect.

"I just thought, 'Wouldn't it be great if there were additional stakes?'

"It's not uncommon that when you're 38, the innocence you felt at 18 has left. A death brings that home, but the murder is only one part of the show, and it only comes into play in the present day. Most of the stories we tell are distinct and separate from that."

Period music also plays a big role in Reunion, with hits by the original artists — including Robert Palmer's Addicted to Love and Cyndi Lauper's Time After Time — informing the first episode's soundtrack.

As with other series like CBS' Cold Case, the rights to such songs can add a lot to a show's budget, and Feldman is ready for that.

"It's no secret that the wish list comes with a price tag," he said, "and we'll have to lose some of (the desired tunes), but my goal is to maintain the essence of that music.

"I think we'll be able to keep more than you might think."

Underclassman — A baby-faced 24-year-old detective (Nick Cannon), who never gets the respect he deserves because of his boyish looks, goes undercover in an elite private school where he stumbles upon an international auto-theft ring.

Underclassman is rated PG-13 for violence, sexual references, drug material and teen drinking.

Transporter 2 — Retired in Miami, ex-Special Forces operative Frank Martin (Jason Statham) makes a living driving for the wealthy Billings family.

He's a huge favorite with their two small boys, but when the kids are kidnapped and injected with a potentially fatal virus, Martin defies the FBI and works relentlessly to get the boys to safety and discover the kidnapper's master plan.

Transporter 2 is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of violent action, sexual content, partial nudity and brief language.

A Sound of Thunder — Set in a near future where time travel is possible, this is the story of a travel agency, Time Safari Inc. that arranges hunting trips for wealthy customers back in time to hunt dinosaurs.

Each trip is carefully planned, with a scout identifying dinosaurs about to die, so the course of time is not altered by the kill.

However, a nervous hunter steps off the trail, and steps on a butterfly. The historical repercussions of the death of a single butterfly, compounded by millions of years of effects, leaves the hunters to return to a future that is not quite the one they came from.

Starring Edward Burns and Ben Kingsley.

A Sound of Thunder is rated PG-13 for sci-fi violence, partial nudity and language.

The Cave — A rescue team is sent down into the world's largest cave system to try to find the spelunkers who first explored the depths. But when the group's escape route is cut off, they are hunted by the monstrous creatures that live down below.

Starring Morris Chestnut and Eddie Cibrian.

The Cave is rated PG-13 for intense creature violence.

The Constant Gardener — When a British diplomat's wife — a socially conscious lawyer — turns up dead in Kenya, he sets out to find the truth surrounding her murder.

In the process, he finds out that his wife had been compiling data against a multinational drug company that uses helpless Africans as guinea pigs to test a tuberculosis remedy with unfortunate fatal side effects. Those who may have had the most reason to silence her are closer to home than he ever imagined.

Starring Ralph Fiennes and Rachel Weisz.

The Constant Gardener is rated R for language, some violent images and sexual content and nudity.

The Brothers Grimm — Brothers Jake and Will Grimm (Matt Damon and Heath Ledger), renowned collectors of folklore, have made a career of traveling from village to village pretending to rid them of "enchanted" creatures. Their bluff is called, however, when they are forced by Napoleon's French government to investigate a haunted forest where girls have been mysteriously disappearing.

The Brothers Grimm is rated PG-13 for violence, frightening sequences and brief suggestive material.

Undiscovered — An aspiring New York model falls in love with a struggling musician when they suddenly cross paths on a subway train. Having achieved success as a model, she decides to move to L.A. to launch an acting career. While out on the town, the aspiring model again crosses paths with the struggling musician.

Starring Pell James, Steven Strait and Ashlee Simpson.

Undiscovered is rated PG-13 for sexual material including dialogue, partial nudity, language and drug content.

Supercross: The Movie — Two brothers overcome emotional and physical obstacles to achieve success in the competitive world of supercross racing.

The brothers' conflicts are magnified by their different life choices and their decision to become competitors and rivals.

Starring Steve Howey, Mike Vogel and Sophia Bush.

Supercross: The Movie is rated PG-13 for language and some sexuality.

Valiant — A comedy-adventure tale of a brave-but-undersized pigeon named Valiant (voiced by Ewan McGregor), who dreams of joining the elite Royal Homing Pigeon Service and serving crown and country during World War II.

Despite his small stature, Valiant's ambitions are enormous as he keeps a stiff upper beak and endures rigorous training in preparation for a dangerous mission to deliver vital messages to troops behind enemy lines.

Valiant is rated G.

Red Eye — Lisa Reisert (Rachel McAdams) hates to fly, but the terror that awaits her on the night flight to Miami has nothing to do with a fear of flying.

Red Eye is rated PG-13 for some intense sequences of violence, and language.

The 40-Year-Old Virgin — Forty-year-old Andy Stitzer (Steve Carrell) has done quite a few things in his life.

He's got a cushy job stamping invoices at an electronics superstore, a nice apartment with a collection of action figures and comic books, good friends, a nice attitude.

But there's just one little thing he hasn't quite gotten around to doing yet — Andy's never, ever, ever had sex.

The 40-Year-Old Virgin is rated R for pervasive sexual content, language and drug use.

The Great Raid — Set in the Philippines in 1945, The Great Raid tells the true story of the 6th Ranger Battalion, under the command of Lt. Col. Henry Mucci (Benjamin Bratt), who undertake a daring rescue mission against all odds.

The Great Raid is rated R for strong war violence and brief language.

THINGS TO DO

Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival
today-Sunday

Callaway Gardens will host the seventh annual Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival today through Sunday.

The fun beings at 5 p.m. today with the traditional "balloon glow," weather permitting. As the sun makes its exit, some 25 to 30 balloons take their annual first bow as they inflate, then hover, close to the ground.

Guests can also learn firsthand about the art of ballooning from the pilots themselves.

Gates open at 6 a.m. Saturday. The balloons will launch at 7:15 a.m., traveling approximately five to seven miles before landing.

The Columbus Exchange Club will host a pancake breakfast today and Saturday ($5 per person including a beverage) under the Pavilion at Robin Lake Beach.

The balloon flights are repeated at 5:30 p.m. Saturday and 7:15 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Sunday.

There will also be tethered balloon rides, a classic car show Saturday, sidewalk chalk art, children's games, face painting, T-shirt decorating, helicopter rides, balloon demonstrations, live music, traditional beach activities and Frisbee dog demonstrations.

Another highlight Saturday will be the Nickelodeon Game Lab presentations, with all the fun and messy interaction of the popular games shows, at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Admission to the event is $13 plus tax per adult and $6.50 plus tax per child. Children 5 and younger are admitted free.

Half-price admission will be offered starting at 5 p.m. today and from 6 to 9 a.m. and 5 to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Callaway Gardens is in Pine Mountain, Ga., 30 minutes north of Columbus.

For more information, call (800) 225-5292 or visit callawaygardens.com.

Labor Day weekend celebration
today-Sunday

Florence Marina State Park invites the public to the annual Labor Day weekend celebration today through Sunday.

There will be boat rides down the Chattahoochee River in the park's pontoon boat. Because of high fuel costs, a $1 donation is requested for boat rides, but crafts and games are free.

The park's pool will be open, so bring a picnic and spend the day.

Visitors are reminded that a $3 park fee will be required for each vehicle.

Florence Marina State Park is located 16 miles west of Lumpkin, Ga., on Hwy. 39C.

For more information, call Trena Evans, interpretative ranger, at (229) 838-4706.

Poplar Place Farm
today-Sunday

Poplar Place Farm will host the U.S. Eventing Association Gold Cup Event today through Sunday.

The horse show times are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. all three days.

Spectator admission costs are $10 per vehicle for a one-day pass and $15 per vehicle for the weekend. Tickets will be sold at the horse show entrance gate. Admission fees benefit the Chattahoochee Council Boy Scouts of America.

Poplar Place Farm is located on Hwy. 27. Follow the signs.

For more information, call Allina Strickland at 563-3746.

Powers' Crossroads Fair
Saturday-Monday

Each Labor Day weekend, more than 200 artists and craftsmen converge on Powers' Crossroads for the Country Fair and Art Festival to display and sell their work.

In it's 35th year, Powers' Crossroads features singers and musicians, southern cooking and for children, the Twin Oaks Junction park with rides, games and concessions. New for this year is the Seedsowers Clown Troup, with face painting and balloon sculpting.

Group exhibits will feature handmade quilts and demonstrations by the West Georgia Quilters Guild and a juried exhibit of student work.

Festival gates are open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday through Monday.

Admission is $6 for adults, $5 for seniors and military personnel, $3 for children ages 5-12 and free for children 4 and younger.

Ample free parking is available with free shuttle service to and from the front gate throughout the weekend.

Powers' Crossroads is located off GA Highway 34, 10 miles west of Newnan, Ga.

For more information, call Dann Jackson at (770) 253-2011.

Labor Day Fiddlers Contest
Monday

Westville's Fiddlers Contest offers the perfect 1850s setting for musicians and music lovers to show off their talents or to sit back and enjoy listening to skilled performers compete.

The youth fiddling begins at 11 a.m., and adult fiddling begins at 2 p.m.

Westville is located one mile south of Lumpkin, Ga.

Admission is $10 for adults, $8 for seniors, college students and military, $4 for students in kindergarten through 12th grade and $35 for a family membership.

For more information, call (888) 733-1850.

Second Sunday Series
Sept. 11

Oxbow Meadows will present Amazing Birds of Prey from 2 to 3 p.m. Sept. 11 as part of their Second Sunday Series.

Join Oxbow for a special program on raptors, highlighting hawks and owls. Discover how these magnificent birds of prey hunt for their food, learn about their habitats and find out ways to help protect them.

The cost is $1 per person to attend the program.

Oxbow Meadows is a nature center located at 3535 South Lumpkin Road in Columbus.

It is an outreach program of Columbus State University operated in association with the Columbus Water Works.

For more information, call 687-4090 or visit http://oxbow.colstate.edu.

Al Jarreau
Sept. 17

Little Blessings Nurturing Center and Star Productions proudly present an evening with jazz legend Al Jarreau at 8 p.m. Sept. 17 at the RiverCenter.

From his musical beginnings, singing in a church choir, Jarreau has built an amazing career, entertaining audiences around the world.

Jarreau's hits include All Fly Home and Breakin' Away (We're in This Love Together).

Tickets are on sale now and are $40-$55.

To purchase tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or at the RiverCenter box office from noon to 5 p.m. weekdays.

Classical concert
Sept. 24

THE HISTORY OF FOOTBALL

One of the earliest examples of a game similar to football existed in ancient China. Documents reveal that around 200 BC a game called Tsu Chu (literally 'kick ball') was played with two 30ft-high bamboo poles acting as goals.

The Greeks, for whom ball games were an essential party of life, played a form of football as early as 4 BC. The game was known as pheninda and involved kicking the ball, running with it and handling it.

The Romans followed the Greeks' example and called their game hapastum. This was played on a rectangular field, between two teams who defended the lines which marked the ends of the field. The object of the game was to throw the ball from player to player, moving forward all the time, and eventually to throw it beyond the opponents' 'goal-line'. The defending side was allowed to tackle and kick.

There are other examples of early versions of the game evolving elsewhere around the world. In Japan, records show that around the fifth century AD a game called Kemari, which involved eight players ceremonially kicking the ball back to one another across a ground 14 metres square.

In Italy a similar game was developed in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries called Calcio (calciare means to kick in Italian) which involved two sides playing in Florence's town square on the feast day of St John the Baptist, the city's patron saint.

Historical orthodoxy suggests football has been played in England since the thirteenth century. In those days, football was little more than an excuse for a riot, a parochial, lawless affair with village pitted against village with unlimited numbers of people chasing through streets, across fields and through bogs in pursuit of the ball.

The real starting point of modern football came with the expansion of the public schools in the middle of the nineteenth century. At schools like Harrow, Eton, Charterhouse, Winchester, Westminster and Shrewsbury, organised games became a vital part of the curriculum, with their emphasis on order, discipline and team spirit.

The football played by these schools, while similar in form, was different in a number of technical ways: each framed its own set of laws but some played in the school cloisters, some on pitches and some even allowed the ball to be handled. The boys who played football at these schools at this time were to be the founders and leaders of The Football Association in the years to come.

Formation of The F.A.

Undergraduates at Cambridge University, where many of these boys went after school, first made an attempt at unifying the rules, in 1846 and two years later. These were then spread to the outside world, with graduates playing a vital part in convincing clubs to move away from their provincial outlook and adopt a common code. Thanks to the missionary work carried out by these individuals clubs started to crop up around the country.

In 1863, following the publication of Thring's (a housemaster at Uppingham) 'Simplest Rules' and the formation of a number of clubs, the need for concerted action became imperative.

Ebenezer Cobb Morley proposed the formation of The Football Association, which was carried by 11 votes to one. The Football Association was born, with Morley as its first Secretary.

Development

The drawing up and publication of the rules was the initial priority of The F.A. and, after the withdrawal of Blackheath over the issue of 'hacking', these were published in November 1863.

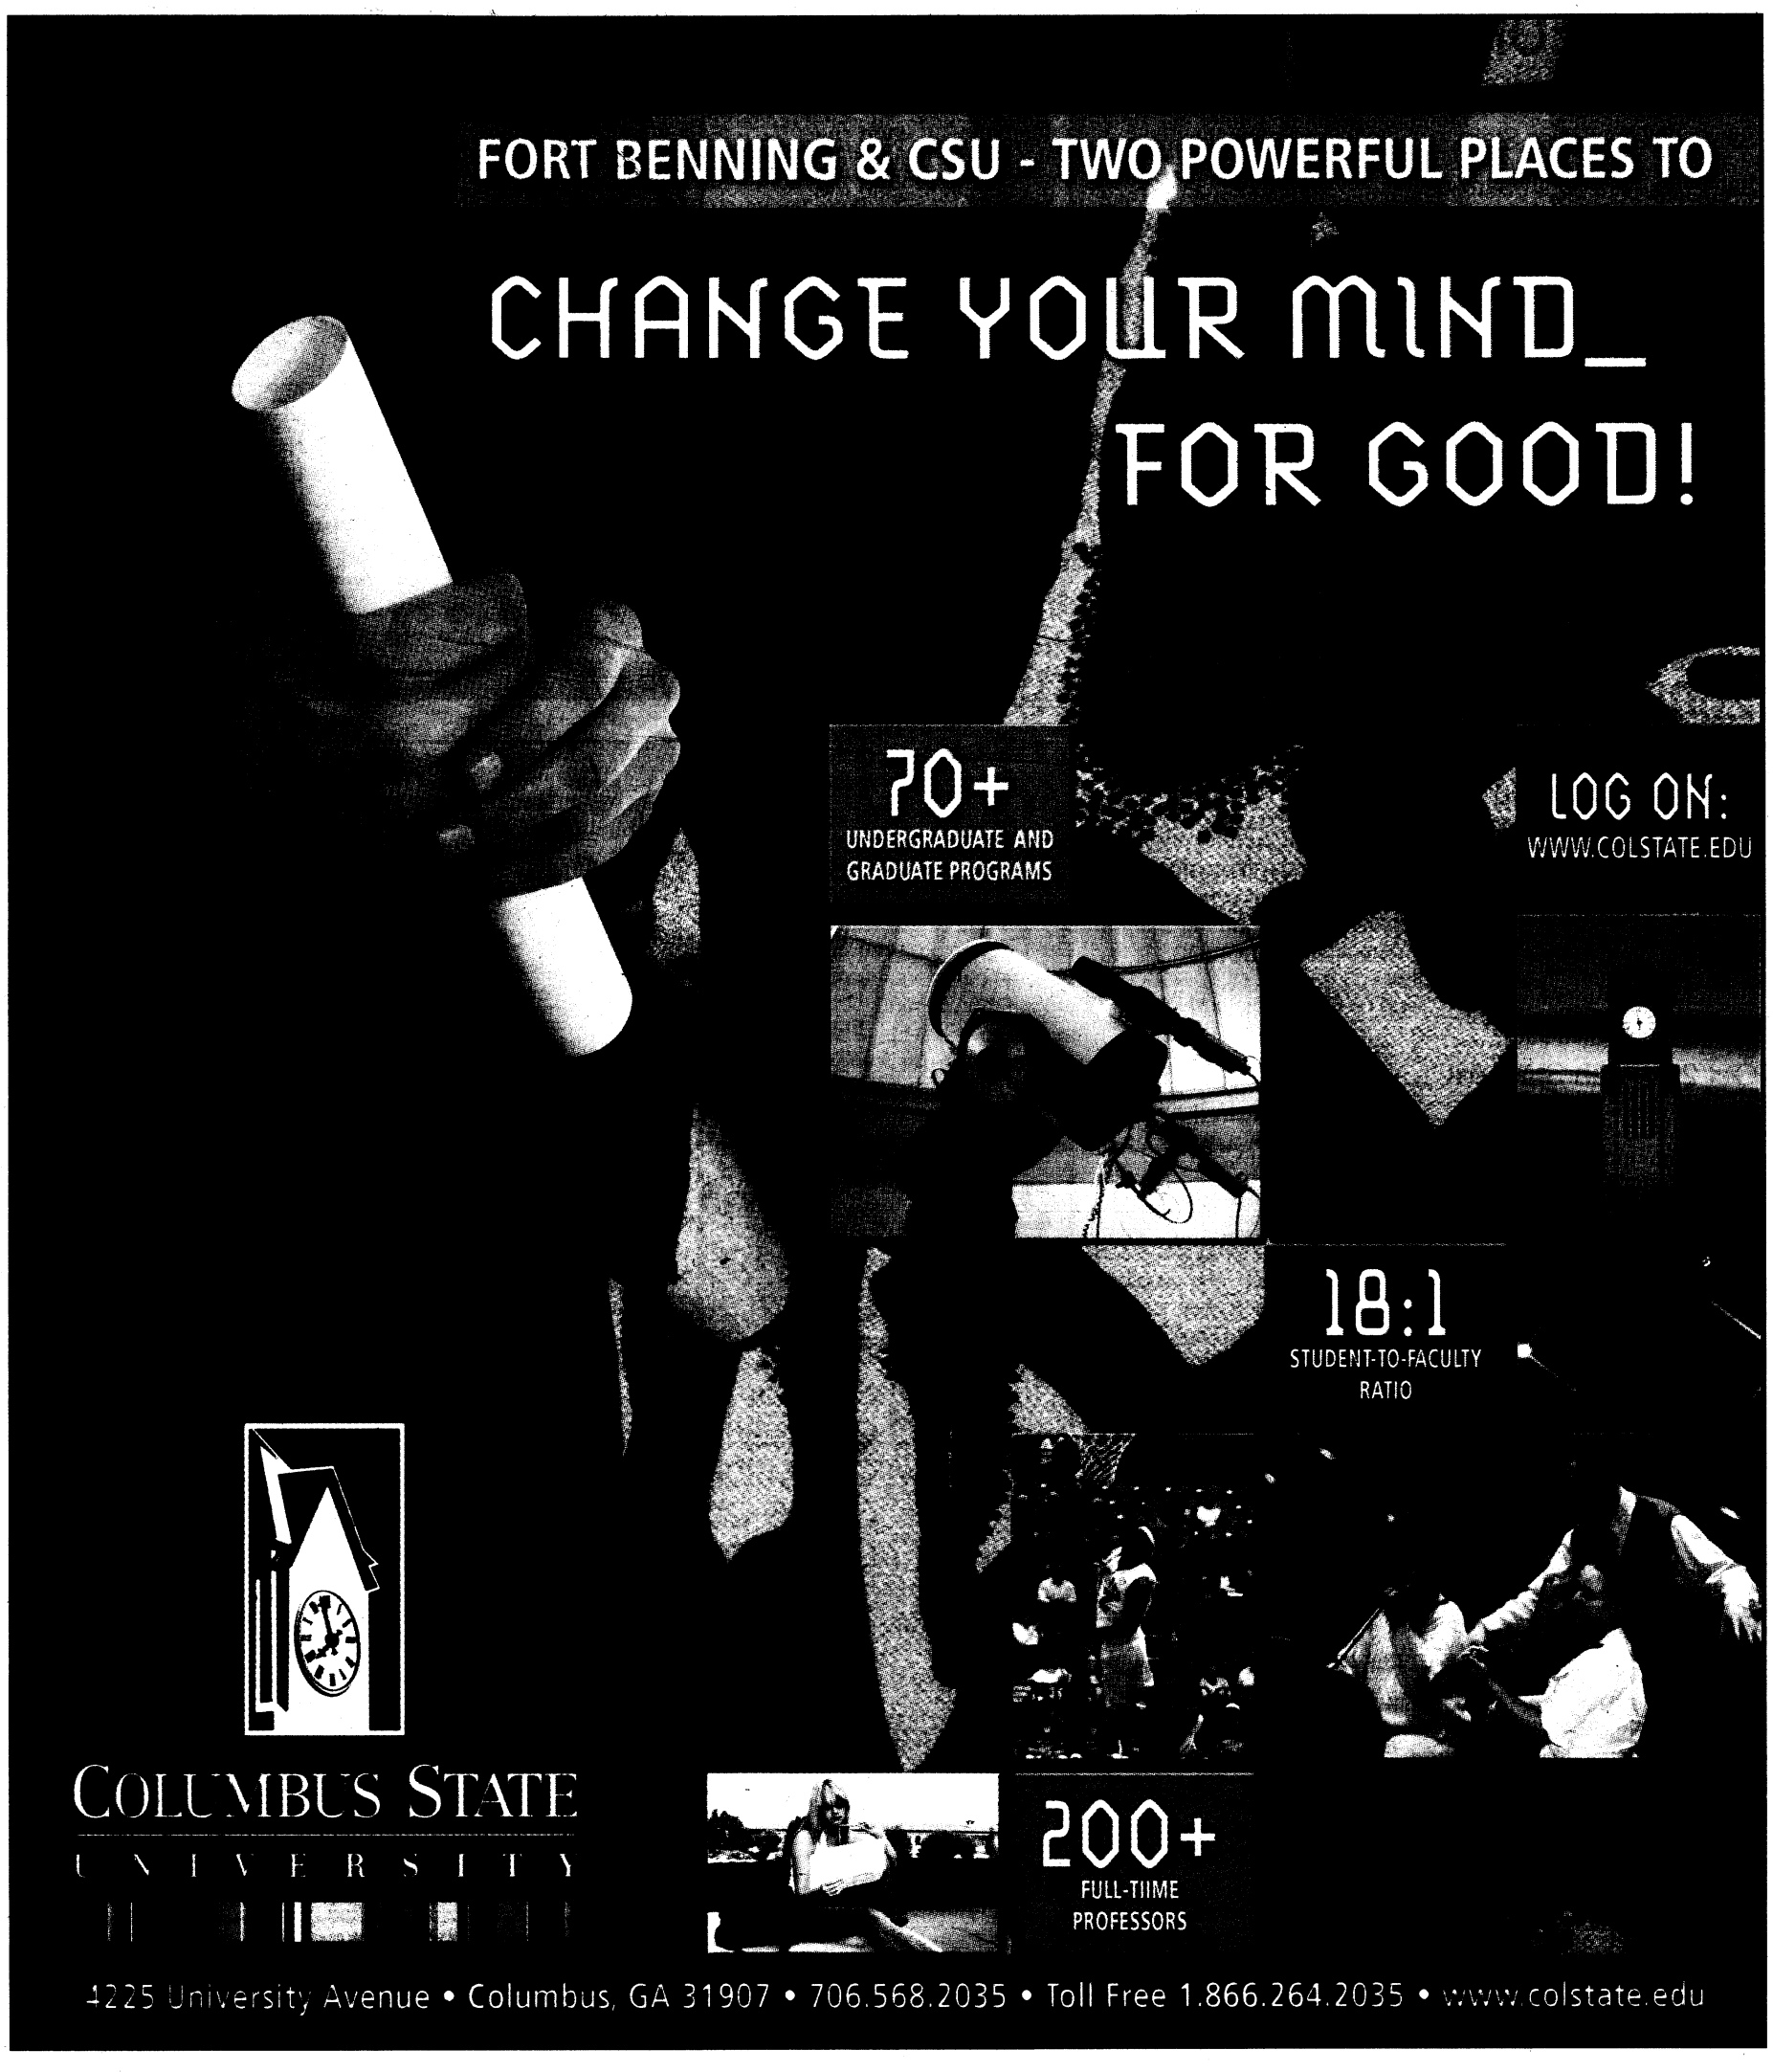
The F.A.'s early influence on the game at large was not dramatic or even widespread and was mainly confined to organising inter-county friendlies. This all changed on 20 July 1871 when Charles Alcock (Secretary of The F.A. between 1870-95) proposed that "a Challenge Cup should be established in connection with the Association, for which all clubs belonging to the Association should be invited to compete". The F.A. Cup, football's first national tournament, was born. Fifteen clubs competed in the first F.A. Cup in 1871-72 and the notion of competition in football spread rapidly. Wanderers beat the Royal Engineers 1-0 at the Oval in front of 2,000 spectators. Then, on November 30 1872, again thanks to C.W Alcock, the first formal international between England and Scotland took place in Glasgow.

In July 1885, professional football was legalised by The F.A. in response to the increasing number of working class players in the game and the revenue gained from rising attendances. The number of teams being created illustrated the need for further organisation and in September 1888, with The F.A.'s backing, the Football League was formed. A second division was added in 1892. Modern football was well and truly born.

The International Story

The modern game began in England but interest soon spread around Europe and other continents. FIFA (Federation Internationale de Football) was created in France in 1904 as a recognition of this growth on an international level and is the football world's governing body. Seven national associations - Belgium, Denmark, Spain, France, Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland - were the founders. FIFA launched the Olympic Football title in 1924 and the World Cup in 1930. The first ever FIFA World Cup for women was held in China in 1991.

There are six continental confederations (Asian Football Confederation - AFC, Confederation Africaine de Football - CAF, Confederacion Norte-Centroamericany del Caribe de Futbol - CONCACAF, Union des Associations Europeenes de Football - UEFA, Confederacion Sudamericana de Futbol - CONMEBOL, Oceania Football Confederation - OFC) which organise club and national team competitions for their respective continents. The English Football Association is affiliated to UEFA. UEFA (Union des Associations Europeennes de Football) was founded on 15 June 1954. In 1989, the first UEFA Championship for national women's teams was held.



Over 100 years after the formation of The Football Association, football is the most popular sport in the world, played by nearly 250 million people, including 40 million women. The numbers of spectators in the stadiums and of television viewers amounts to billions.

Alyssa Maldonado fights back tears as she talks to her father in Iraq Saturday during the annual Country's Midnight Express. Her mom, Trish, waits her turn.

Shortly before midnight Saturday, Trish Maldonado shared a sunrise and an "I love you" with her husband, Sgt. 1st Class Jose Maldonado, who's serving with the 3rd Brigade in Iraq.

Trish and her children, Alyssa, 18, and Alex, 13, were among the 5,000 who attended the 25th annual Country's Barbecue Midnight Express, which included a live broadcast of the leg of the event that was taking place 5,000 miles away at Forward Operating Base Warhorse in Baqubah.

As participants on this side of the globe laced their shoes and prepped for the 12 a.m. start of the race, they watched the sunrise over Warhorse on two 14-foot screens.

Nearly 100 Kelley Hill Soldiers ran the 5K, their T-shirts sweat-soaked as the temperature there exceeded 90 degrees before 7 a.m.

Jose Maldonado wasn't among the runners. Two sprained ankles disqualified him from the race, but he was first in line to use the phone. Alyssa was waiting on the other end of the line.

A 14-foot tall Jose smiled down at his daughter, who wiped tears from her eyes and coaxed him into bellowing a giant-size "hooah" before handing the phone to her mother.

"This was the most emotional thing I've ever done," said Alyssa, a Country's employee who learned about the event at work and e-mailed her father to make sure he'd be up early on Sunday, which is typically the only day he gets to sleep in late.

"He told me he's doing fine. I told him I love him, I miss him and I want him to come home safe," Alyssa said.

Though Fort Benning Soldiers have participated in the Midnight Express since the beginning in 1980, this was the first time a unit has competed, and certainly the first time Soldiers have competed abroad, said Scott Ressmeyer, who owns and operates the Mercury Drive restaurant.

The Soldiers in Iraq didn't pay for the privilege, but here, runners anteed up between $18 and $20 to participate in the event, which included performances by local bands and cheerleading squads.

The run, and the motorcycle poker run that proceeded it, raised more than $39,000.

The money raised will go to help charities, hospitals and schools for the visually impaired.

Several blind runners participated in the event. The proceeds benefit the visually impaired.

Cross-country club gets kids moving

Young people relax their minds while exercising bodies

Kris Gonzalez

Sitting behind a desk for six hours a day left Byron Weaver restless and in need of a way to release his pent up energy after school.

He saw a segment on television that focused on cross-country running and asked his parents, John and Ann Meadows, if he could start running in the sport.

"I started running two to three miles a week," Weaver said. "I would practice on the weekends running up and down my street."

Once he joined the cross-country club at Faith Middle School, the 12-year-old found his niche, and a way to calm his "hyperness" before settling down at night to do homework.

A year later, Weaver, now an eighth-grader, is one of about 30 students who use running as a physical outlet to help focus mentally.

"(Running cross country) gives the kids a chance to relax," said Lisa Madler, a seventh-grade language arts teacher at Faith Middle School.

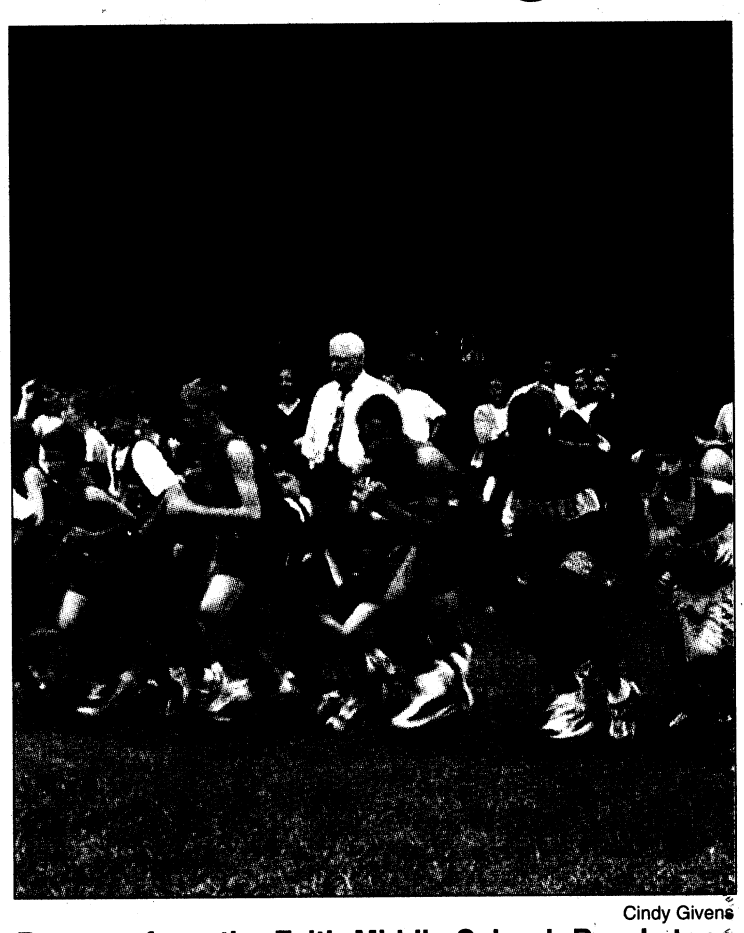
She and her husband, Gerald, a counselor at Faith, coach the cross-country club for sixth-, seventh- and eighth- grade students.

Madler said she thinks a lot of children like to run cross county because it doesn't require a lot of hand-eye coordination and it teaches them how to breathe and to condition their bodies for other sports and activities.

Ann Meadows thinks running is a great way for kids like Weaver to burn energy so he can focus on his assignments.

In fact, she said, Weaver enjoyed running so much, she encouraged her son Kyle, then 11-years-old, to join the cross-country club too.

"Byron really enjoyed running after school before doing homework," Meadows said. "And what one (brother) does, the other one likes to do. I enjoy it because it keeps them active and in shape."



Madler said she thinks the stress-free sport is healthy for a child's mind, as well as the body.

"It's competitive, but we don't put pressure on them," Madler said.

"We don't time them at practices. And at meets, they really compete against their own best time."

The children run two to four miles every Wednesday from 3:20 to 4:30 p.m. on the running track at Stewart Watson Field, across from the Infantry Hall. They have meets about every

Covered boat dock, archery range open at Uchee Creek

Uchee Creek recreation area has been undergoing a transformation this summer.

The wooden boat dock has been replaced with a synthetic, slip-resistant structure with a forest green roof.

The other dock was about 10 years old and it was becoming a safety hazard. The wood was rotten and people were getting splinters in their feet, said Cliff Hughes, Uchee Creek recreation program manager.

The covered boat dock will help prevent weather wear and tear on the boats, Hughes said. When the dock wasn't covered, the pontoon boats needed to be reupholstered every two years.

It took nine days to rip out the old dock and replace it with the new structure, which was opened to the public Aug. 26.

Following the interest generated by the Archery Shooters Association competition last month, Uchee Creek opened a new family-friendly archery range yesterday.

"The neat thing about archery is it's not just for hunting. A lot of people are also interested in precision shooting and competition," Hughes said.

The archery range is located just off the entrance to the camp ground.

"It's a very well-thought out and well-planned range," said Jim Ozley, Infantry branch safety officer.

"I went over every inch of the range and it is extremely safe. (Hughes) has done a dynamic job putting this range together," he said.

Five multi-use compound bows with arrows will be available for rent at the general store for $5 per day, plus membership in the Uchee Creek Archery club, which costs $10 per year.

"They're high-quality, unisex bows, so anyone can use them," Hughes said.

The draw weight on them is about 35 pounds, and Hughes

To believe or not to believe ...

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

They're everywhere — the yellow rubber wristbands with the word "LIVESTRONG" on them.

If you don't own one, you know someone who does. They're a result of cyclist and seven-time Tour de France winner Lance Armstrong and his battle with cancer.

Now allegations have surged that Armstrong used the performance-enhancing drug EPO in 1999, the first year he won the Tour.

French sports newspaper L'Equipe, said it obtained documents that show an unnamed rider tested positive for the drug.

The paper said the results were Armstrong's — the lab has yet to verify it.

So who to believe? Armstrong went on Larry King Live to vehemently deny the allegations. Yet in this day and age, who are we to believe?

Earlier this year, the congressional hearings on steroid abuse gave us Rafael Palmeiro denying any use of steroids.

Just a few short weeks ago, Palmeiro was suspended for testing positive for doping. He, like Barry Bonds, said he "unknowingly" took the steroid. Please, Raffy, I'm not as dumb as you look to us sports fans.

Unfortunately for Armstrong, we will always wonder, "Did he use the drug?" And was his first Tour win a result of that drug? Or did he do it on sheer endurance and athleticism?

In a situation like this, it's up to individuals to decide who and what they believe.

Do I believe Palmeiro? No. Bonds? Giambi? Or the endless list of pro athletes either implicated or tested positive? No. But Armstrong? Probably.

Armstrong has inspired millions by beating cancer and winning seven consecutive Tours.

His story is inspirational, and has probably given cancer patients incentive to fight their cancers, and even those not battling cancer the courage to face whatever obstacles they encounter in everyday life.

Armstrong's appeal goes beyond his stellar cycling career.

So Palmeiro hit 3,000 runs. Does that inspire the average American? Not likely.

I'm giving Armstrong the benefit of the doubt, and believe me, it's not very often I do, whether it's a pro athlete or my 6-year-old son, who usually has his hand in the cookie jar.

If definitive proof can be shown, I might change my tune. But until then, Armstrong remains the icon and inspirational figure he rightly deserves.

Kyle Weaver competes for the Faith Middle school cross-country team in 2004.

Cross country: Adds up three weeks against runners from private schools in the tricommunity.

At each meet, girls run against girls, and boys run against boys. Each race is two miles. Each runner is timed and receives points respective to their place as they cross the finish line. First place receives one point, second place receives two points, and so on.

The points from the top five places on each team are added together. The team with the lowest score wins.

At last year's meets, Weaver came in 13th place, then 12th, and 11th. He said his goal this year is to place in the top 10.

"I think I'm going to do it this year because I practiced over the summer," Weaver said. "Last year I was coming in second and third place at practices and now I've been coming in first. I seem to be faster and I have a better pace."

Madler said the sport is so stress-free, some runners "don't have a clue what their pace is." She said a lot of runners are proud just to say "I kept up with this person today."

She said there are also some runners who might run for a length of time nonstop, like 10 minutes, then walk for 30 seconds to one minute, and continue to run another 10 minutes.

"Lots of kids have told me they never ran over a mile before joining the club," Madler said. "Now they ask, 'Can we run more today so I can say I ran four miles?'"

Weaver said he recalls when he ran four miles for the first time. "I was huffing and puffing then," he said. But as tough as it was, he encourages other kids to start practicing and exercising so they too can reach that feat.

Children in the sixth, seventh and eighth grades are still welcome to join the club until the first meet Sept. 19, Madler said. Each runner is required to have a physical before then.

Parents must also sign a waiver allowing their son or daughter to run. And Madler said the club needs more parents to participate as chaperones.

The season ends in early November. For more information, call 545-7785.

Archery: Fun for everyone

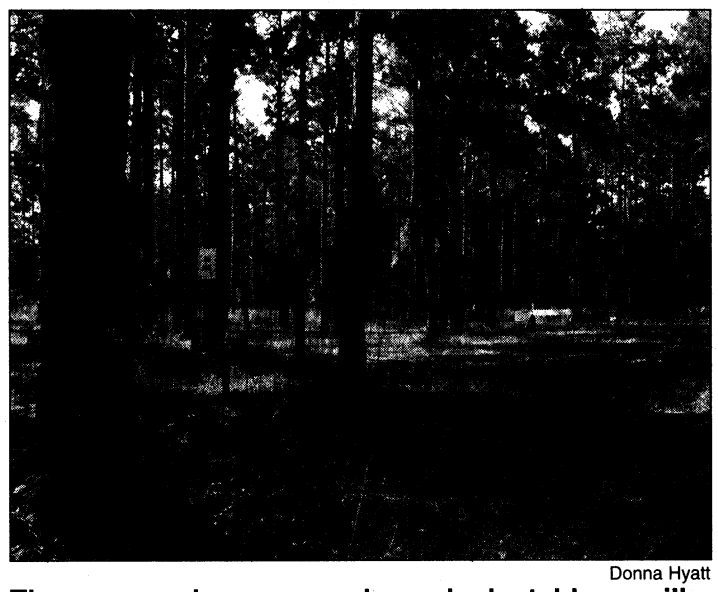
will provide some basic instruction if needed, he said.

"We get a lot of Soldiers who come here from Airborne School and they want something to do, so they come out here," Hughes said.



"A lot of them have shot archery before. It brings back a piece of home for them to do something they're familiar with," he said.

The garrison commander has also tasked Hughes with starting a youth program.

"There are about 50 schools with intramural archery programs interested in working with Uchee Creek," Hughes said.

He expects to have that program up and running very soon.

"Uchee Creek is the nicest camp ground in the Army. It's in a class by itself," Hughes said.

Donna Hyatt

The new archery range has picnic tables, grills, targets and tree stands for members to use. One year memberships cost $10 per person.

"It's the largest camp ground in the military that has an all-encompassing facility with a store, marina, camp sites and cabins at a fraction of the price charged by anyone in the outside market."

For more information about Uchee Creek and the archery programs, call Hughes at 685-3060, ext. 204, or visit www.benningmwr.com.

U.S. Naval Reservist Eric Uptagrafft of Longmont, Colo., came back from a two-point deficit to win the gold medal in men's 50-meter prone rifle at the International Shooting Sport Federation World Cup Final in Munich, Germany Aug. 26.

Uptagrafft was trailing Sergei Martynov of Belarus, by two points going into the final. It was then that Uptagrafft turned it up and shot an outstanding final round of 104.4 to finish with a 702.4, winning the gold medal.

Martynov finished with a perfect 600 score in the qualifying rounds, and a 101.9 in the final, resulting in a 701.9 overall score for the silver medal.

Mario Knoegler of Austria, rounded out the medalists in this event with a 701.3 and a bronze medal finish.

Sgt. 1st Class Tom Tamas of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, finished just out of medal contention, with a 697.3 total score and a fifth-place finish overall.

The reigning Olympic gold medalist Matt Emmons of Browns Mills, N.J., finished ninth, missing the finals competition in the tie-breaking procedure.

In the mens 10-meter air rifle competition, 22-year-old Ryan Tanoue of Honolulu, Hawaii, clinched the bronze medal for the U.S.

Tanoue went into the finals tied with teammate Sgt. 1st Class Jason Parker of Fortson, Ga., at 594.

Tanoue, who finished his last year of eligibility for the University of Nevada-Reno, then shot a 103.4 in the finals, finishing with a 697.4 total score and winning the bronze medal. Parker was just edged out of a spot on the medal stand, finishing with a 103.0 in the finals and a 697.0 total score.

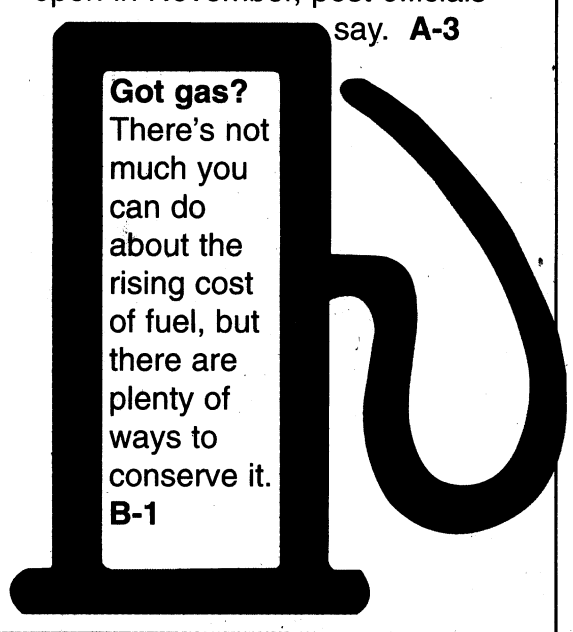
Remembering 9/11



"Our joys are not national events. They're weddings and children's birthdays and the like. It's our tragedies that define us," said Chaplain (Maj.) David Acuff, who spearheaded today's 9/11 Remembrance Ceremony at 4 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. The Army's chief of chaplains, Chaplain (Maj. Gen.) David Hicks, will speak at the event, which is free to the public.

Something to latch on to

Girl Scout Troop 66 is hosting Operation Make A Blanket at 1 p.m. Saturday at the Girl Scout Hut on Yeager Avenue, adjacent to the Driver Training Facility behind Faith Middle School. They will accept donations of fleece material and like-new blankets. The blankets will be donated to children displaced by Hurricane Katrina. "It will give them something to latch on to," said Mary Ann Allen, troop leader. For more information, call Allen at 683-0529 or 536-9560.

Benning Soldiers offer aid, security, medical relief

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning Soldiers are among the nearly 30,000 troops from around the country sent to the Gulf Coast region devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

Experts are calling it the largest military response to the worst natural disaster in U.S. history.

President Bush assured the nation last week that "we've got what it takes" to get the job done here and continue missions abroad in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"We have a job to do with the war on terrorism and a job to do helping people on this coast. We'll do both," he said.

Master Sgt. James M. Bowman

Sgt. Donald McVay from the 900th Maintenance Company, Brundidge, Ala., loads MREs to be distributed in the Gulf Coast region.

Minutes before presstime, The Bayonet received a phone call from Maj. John McNally, commander of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance). Eight aircrews, with 58 Soldiers, have rescued about 1,000 residents in the New Orleans area, he said, since the unit arrived there Aug. 31. Early on, the area suffered from a "giant communications black hole," McNally said. Crews worked around the clock with night vision goggles, relying on the incredible cooperation between various flight crews working the area. At times, he said, the beam of a flashlight or a hole punched in a roof were the only clues to the whereabouts of hurricane victims. For many, it was simply too late. The sight of corpses floating in the flooded streets of the city brought back memories of combat for the 498th Soldiers who recently returned from Iraq, McNally said.

Post hurricane relief

Jennifer Gunn

Bou Gervais, of Covington, La., sorts through donations at the Fort Benning Thrift Shop Tuesday. Gervais took shelter here from Katrina's aftermath. The Thrift Shop is accepting donations for hurricane victims during normal business hours, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Donations can also be dropped off behind the Thrift Shop, on Ingersoll Street, after business hours.

Benning welcomes evacuees

More than 200 seek shelter on post

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning opened its doors to storm-ravaged survivors one day after Hurricane Katrina churned across the Gulf Coast region, swelling the Mississippi River with enough water to burst the levees of New Orleans and flood the city.

Prepared by previous hurricane lessons learned, Fort Benning was ready with food and shelter.

"We rendered the same type of support when the last two hurricanes hit the Florida panhandle," said Col. Rick Riera, Fort Benning's garrison commander. "Obviously the magnitude of this effort is much bigger. We think the folks who are coming will be with us for a while and become part of the community because of the significant devastation, whereas in the previous hurricanes most of them returned home within two weeks. We will reach out to them and do the best we can."

Linda Hardge, Directorate of Resource Management DFAC Food Service Accounts, said the evacuees will be fed at a post dining facility.

"I think they're going to be here a while, and we'll make sure they're fed," she said.

Col. Robert Kenyon, commander of the 641st Mobilization Troop Command, Area Support Group, Detachment 1

Benning Soldier killed

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

A Soldier with the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, died in Samarra, Iraq, Aug. 31 after an improvised explosive device detonated near his vehicle during security patrol operations. Three other Soldiers were injured.

Ruth

Sgt. Monta S. Ruth, 26, of Winston-Salem, N.C., is the fourth member of his battalion to die in Iraq since the 3rd Brigade Combat Team was deployed in January.

"(Ruth) was an outstanding Soldier," said Spc. Edward Terrell, E Company, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., who served with Ruth in Iraq. "He had tremendous military knowledge. He had an answer for everything and never led me in the wrong direction. He molded me into a good Soldier — taught me everything I know."

Ruth, a combat engineer, joined the Army in 1998. This was his second deployment.

His awards include an Army Commendation Medal, the National Defense Service Medal, Kosovo Campaign Medal, the Army Service Ribbon, Overseas Service Ribbon, the Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary Medal and the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal.

A memorial service was held at Fort Benning Wednesday.

'There is hope out there,' relief worker says

Hurricane Katrina hit home for John Hollar. His younger brother, Eric, 28, was facing the first disaster in his two years as the pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Good Shepherd in Biloxi, Miss. He had sen. his wife and infant daughter to stay with friends in Arkansas, but told his brother he was going to ride out the storm in his house.

"Then he told me he was going to stay at the church," John said. "But when it became a Category 5, he was headed to the shelter." When the storm had passed, a 100-foot tree had demolished part of Eric's roof and four feet of salt water from the bay had flooded the house.

"When I heard what happened, I had to go down to help," said John, a contractor with SAIC working with the

GOOD GRIEF

I've got gas pains (at the pump)

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

It's no surprise that gas prices have gone up. We were warned by a media frenzy that because of Hurricane Katrina, gas prices were certain to increase.

Through friends and the Internet, friends of friends who worked at gas stations, and everybody's brother, we were warned. Gas going up to $5 a gallon? And we believed it.

Fortunately, I was lucky.

The day before the prices really did rise, I celebrated my one-year anniversary — with my car, which I endearingly named Mia. Because I was too lazy to wash or vacuum her out, I decided to fill up Mia's gas tank.

Gas, at that time, was at $2.43 a gallon on post. I had nearly half a tank, but figured I'd save a couple bucks and celebrate the anniversary at the same time. I fleetingly thought of filling up Evelyn, my husband's truck, but figured it had half a tank, and since he's deployed, I only drive it once a week, a total of six miles.

I wrangled with that decision the next day, when a friend told me gas had gone up at least 30 cents a gallon, and that there were only two pumps with gas left in them on post. Uh-oh, I thought, maybe I should have filled up Evelyn.

That same night, my son and I were taking our nightly walk and decided to walk the bridge over the highway near the PX. I wasn't halfway up the bridge when I saw a long line of cars being directed by MPs. Holy cow, I thought, why didn't I fill up the truck?

I have to admit I have been diagnosed in the past with very mild obsessive compulsive disorder. I find it to be a blessing in disguise, usually, since I'll never run out of toilet paper or toothpaste. And this one time I did fill up my car's tank, but I'm still kicking myself for not filling up the truck. Yeah, I could probably go months on the gas in the truck, but the thought of rationing and gas shortages has me in a tizzy.

Do I really think there will be a gas shortage? Nope.

Does everybody else? Obviously, since some stations were rationing and allowing consumers only 10 gallons at a time.

President Bush ordered 30 million gallons of our reserve fuel taken out to ease any shortages. There are 700 million gallons in our reserve. And Gov. Sonny Perdue of Georgia ratified a bill that gives Georgians tax relief at the pump.

So do we really need to be clogging streets and fearing gas shortages? No. Do we need to be wise consumers? Yes. Maybe it's time to trade in the big honking SUV for a gas-friendly hybrid. Or invest in a good bicycle.

We can all do our part to help, and maybe in the near future we can once again enjoy lower gas prices.

My 'Maine' point: Let's not forget 9/11

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Remember the Maine? I'll bet you don't. It was more than a few years before our time.

In January 1898, the Maine docked in Havana as a peaceful show of force while the Spanish governor tried to get things under control.

But on Feb. 17, not long after the last note of Taps sounded, at least one explosion rocked the Maine.

More than 250 of the ship's 355 Sailors and Marines died that night as the Maine went down between a Spanish cruiser and an American passenger ship. "Remember the Maine" became a rallying cry, and on April 20, President McKinley signed a joint resolution sending us to war with Spain.

Fast forward to Sept. 1, 1939, when Germany invaded Poland. A few days later, we declared our neutrality. But by Sept. 11, 1939, six countries had joined the war in Europe. And, on that fateful day in 1941, the U.S. was quickly drawn into World War II.

In one fell swoop, the Japanese wiped out the only naval force that could stand in the way of the empire's expansion plans.

Well, we've forgotten the Maine — and someone just brought to my attention that I've forgotten the Alamo — after all, they happened more than 100 years ago.

Thanks to the silver screen, Pearl Harbor is fresh in our minds. Hundreds of thousands of us flocked to theaters to see it.

But now, I'm afraid the events of Sept. 11, 2001, are losing the grip on our hearts and minds. I don't want that to happen.

We've tried, through history, to remember the Maine and Pearl Harbor, but those were different. They were purely military targets. Those Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Marines were involved in activities during times of international turmoil.

Things were not going well in Cuba and things were not going well in Asia. Our troops were ready to defend our borders or come to the aid of other nations, if necessary.

Whether you agree with our presence in Iraq and Afghanistan, you have to agree that the events of Sept. 11 have been one of the most horrible things to have happened to our country. Thousands of innocent civilians were killed this time along with a much smaller number of military folks.

I cried and cried recently when I read the story of a scholarship for military school-children to attend NASA's space camp.

Sounds innocuous enough. The kicker was, the scholarship was in memory of an 11-year-old military child who boarded a plane Sept. 11 that eventually crashed into the Pentagon. Bernard Brown's parents put him on that plane to California to represent his school in a National Geographic event. Who could ever understand their pain?

I don't want the feelings we had Sept. 11 to fade. Yes, it was painful. It hurt right down to the core. We lost a lot more than innocent lives that day.

I'm hoping to see people at today's remembrance ceremony. I don't want Sept. 11 to become just another day. It was an enormous tragedy — a tragedy the whole country rallied around because it touched more than just those in the military, whose mission is to support and defend our Constitution and our country.

Mark 4 p.m. today on your calendar. Come find a seat in Marshall Auditorium and honor men like Sgt. Maj. Larry Strickland and Maj. Steven Long. I looked up to these two men and now they're gone. I think about their wives and their families every day.

Let's continue to honor them, and innocent children like Bernard Brown, not only this year, but every year, and while we're there, remember the Maine and Pearl Harbor, too.

Thinking Christmas already? It's a good thing

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

If we've learned anything from Hurricane Katrina, it's this: Financial disaster can strike anyone, even the fiscally responsible. One calamity can level the field — or sink it — for everyone.

There was a time when I equated "poor" with "irresponsible," probably because I was broke most of the time and had no one to blame but myself.

Experience and maturity taught me compassion and humility. But I'm still learning.

Because of some mysterious clerical error, my husband was dropped from the Army's payroll a few weeks ago, as we were planning a Disney vacation. We had to rely on credit cards and savings, such as it was, to make do until Uncle Sam straightened out the paperwork. (Poor Uncle Sam would roll over in his grave if he knew how many times he gets blamed for paperwork problems.)

Long story short, we're doing fine, thank you very much, and I'm confident we'll get paid soon. If that doesn't happen, we'll rent out a room and a couple of teenagers.

My point?

Rain falls on the just and the unjust, the careful and the careless, the spenders and the savers.

So when you have a buck or two to spare, when you're trying to decide which box to check on your Combined Federal Campaign contribution form, when you hit the next big sale in the Wal-Mart toy aisle, don't forget Santa's Castle.

Contributions to Santa's Castle will provide Christmas for Fort Benning families who won't otherwise have a Christmas. There are people in our midst — good, hardworking Soldiers — who suffer random setbacks. Sometimes back-to-back setbacks.

Today's Army is full of lower enlisted Soldiers between 25 and 35 years old who enlisted post 9/11, bringing with them a passel of kids and the financial obligations that come with age and time. The desire to serve knows no age limit.

That's a good thing.

But the financial repercussions are often daunting. The responsible Soldier will pay his bills before indulging in the "extras."

That's a good thing.

But when Christmas is one of the "extras," it's the kids that get hurt, and that's not a good thing.

Not a bad thing, mind you, but a sad thing.

We — you and you and you and me — can make a difference. Add Santa's Castle to your Christmas list.

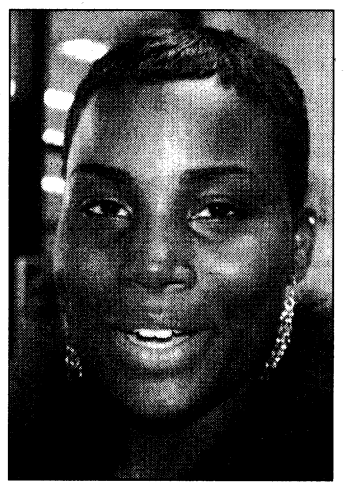
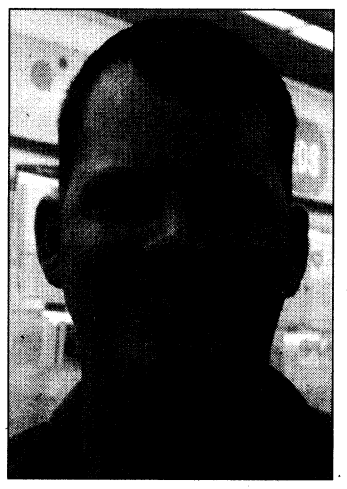
VARIOUS VOICES



What do you think of the gas prices and long lines?

Ruth Goff, left Louisiana to stay with family in Opelika, Ala. — "I had to leave two hours before my husband, because he works on an oil rig. I got out and he got stuck. They're only letting people get five gallons of gas, so he can't get out. He has no water, no food, no power — nothing. I'd gladly give $10 a gallon if I could get enough gas to go get him and get back here."



Pfc. Christopher Lavine, graduating from 1st Battalion, 19th Inf. Regt. — "When I went in (to basic training) 14 weeks ago, it was about $2.25 a gallon. Now look at it. I paid $20 to get (to the Main Mall PX) from Sand Hill by cab."

Selina Coleman, family member, works on post — "I'm gonna start catching a ride with my mom, or I'll be paying more money for gas each month than my car payment."

Linda Southard, family member, waiting in line at the refill pharmacy — "I waited in line about 30 minutes (last week) for gas. I've waited that long here — even longer at the hospital. The lines don't bother me, but the price is way too high."

Sgt. Howard Stacey, MEDDAC — "I waited in line three times (last Thursday), because I have no patience. The third time was a charm. I hate the wait, but the prices aren't that bad after living in Italy for three years."

Shawanda Bridges, left Louisiana to stay with family in Opelika, Ala. — "The prices are bad, and it shouldn't be that way at a time like this. But there are worse things. I lost my house, my job ... I don't know if my mom is all right."

Denise Boldery, AAFES employee — "We were planning to go to the Smokies over the weekend, but the gas would've cost $200. No thank you. That's too much money. I could do a lot with $200."

Work continues on Dixie Road gas station

Church's Chicken part of deal

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Construction on the Dixie Road shoppette is entering the homestretch.

The 9,000 square-foot facility, built by the Army & Air Force Exchange Service, is expected to open well before the end of the year.

"I estimate the building will be turned over to AAFES on October 3," said AAFES general manager H. Lee Holloway. "Then we'll take thirty days to merchandise it and get ready for the grand opening — roughly on November 3."

The project, which started one year ago, has proceeded steadily, almost completely on schedule.

Matt Wills, project superintendent for the George Hicks Construction Company, oversees all of the work. He believes his workers will be finished within the next few weeks.

"In the interior, we're applying the finishes — the flooring, paint, tile and ceilings," Wills said, "and we're installing the last of the glass. Once that's in, we'll turn the AC on. We're getting close."

The completed facility, a larger-module shoppette, will have a few features unlike Fort Benning's other shoppette's, including a drive-thru Church's Chicken and a car wash.

"It's an ultra-modern car wash," Wills said. It may look like a regular car wash, but it's going to have the latest technology.

The 14-pump gas station will include Fort Benning's first ethanol tank. Ethanol, a 110-octane fuel, is used by some of the post's alternative fuel vehicles.

"This is probably one of our flagship facilities," Holloway said. "It's our largest, and will also be a 24-hour operation."

The shoppette, he said, will be convenient for those who live and work on Main Post and be unique because of the ethanol and the partnerships involved.

Holloway expects the new Kelley Hill Mini-Mall to come on-line within a few days of the Dixie Road shoppette. Both AAFES stores were necessary to "fill the two main arteries to Fort Benning."

Wills agrees. He sees the traffic on Dixie Road.

"I think this is going to be a very busy location, he said.

The Kelley Hill Mini-Mall, with what Holloway called a "unique design," will provide Soldiers with an 8,000 square-foot shoppette, Burger King Express with drive-thru, barbershop, amusement center, two roving concessions and a laundry with drive-thru.

Melissa House

Skyline Electric worker J.W. Allen digs a trench for wiring next at the soon-to-be-completed Dixie Road shoppette and gas station. Allen was working to get the parking lot lighting next to the car wash completed before paving begins next week. Michael Lowman, right, who works for Abney Grading and Paving, watches his progress.

"It's up-to-date with new AAFES standards," he said. "It will be great, once the guys get back."

And the Kelley Hill store includes an eight-pump gas station, something that hasn't been available there before.

Holloway said he attends the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers and Town Hall meetings to try to get the word out about AAFES' initiatives.

Holloway said the two facilities are the first quality of life initiatives AAFES has provided to Fort Benning, "and they're the genesis of new initiatives, too."

"I have five more I'm looking at right now," he said.

ITB plans remembrance ceremony Saturday

Patriot Day Ceremony offers time to reflect

Wesley Clifton
Bayonet correspondent

Nearly 8,000 Soldiers will participate in a Patriot Day Ceremony Saturday to remember the terrorist attacks Sept. 11 and to honor those who were lost in New York, a field in Pennsylvania, the Pentagon and combat overseas.

The ceremony at Sand Hill marks the fourth anniversary of the worst terrorist attack on American soil, said Chaplain (Capt.) Chris Rusack, the acting brigade chaplain for the Infantry Training Brigade. The ceremony will galvanize the Soldiers' resolve to combat terrorism.

"We remember the fallen heroes but also look forward to a future with determination," Rusack said.

Spc. Shyreta Cox, a supply clerk with 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, is from Brooklyn, N.Y., and often thinks about fate that kept her from being transferred from a clothing store in Brooklyn to a store in the Twin Towers just before the attack.

She was in the Reserves and going to college when the possibility of the transfer came up, she said.

"I'd never been in the Twin Towers," she said.

"I'd seen them in the skyline and walked by them, but never went in.

"The store in the Twin Towers needed help, and I talked with my supervisors about working there; but it didn't work out.

"I was at my grandmother's when friends called and told us to turn on the news. I watched the second plane crash into the tower," she said.

Lt. Col. Randy White, commander of 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., said that many of the Sand Hill Soldiers were teenagers on 9-11.

"The bigger context of war and patriotism is behind most of the new recruits," he said.

"It says a lot about the character of this generation — they joined the Army knowing they may, in the near future, serve in Afghanistan or Iraq."

Pvt. Jason Fleet said he found out after the attacks that two of the hijackers had been living within blocks of his home in Coral Springs, Fla., and had frequented the same restaurants and clubs.

Fleet said he joined the Army because he was compelled to protect his family and his country.

Other new ITB graduates also feel profoundly that the terrorist attacks cemented their commitment to serve the country and "do something with a purpose," said Pvt. Daniel Stackhouse.

These Soldiers are committed to serve, White said.

"It has created a new 'Band of Brothers' for our time. These Soldiers will be making history fighting in defense of the nation."

Pfc. Brian Manschill said he joined the Army for the opportunity to make a difference, like his brother, a firefighter.

"I'd like to remember those who have given their lives in Iraq and Afghanistan," he said.

Maj. John Brown, the operations and training officer for the ITB, said the 6 a.m. ceremony, which is open to the public, is designed to show the importance of what the Soldiers are doing in the Global War on Terrorism.

Editor's note: The post's 9/11 Remembrance Service is at 4 p.m. today in Marshall Auditorium. The guest speaker is Chaplain (Maj. Gen.) David Hicks, the Army's chief of chaplains.

Post to host Warfighting Seminar

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

The U. S. Army Infantry Center will host a Warfighting Seminar Monday through Wednesday.

The theme is "Supporting an Army at War."

The purpose of the Warfighting Seminar is to provide a maneuver branch-level after action review of ongoing combat operations in Iraq and Afghanistan.

It will look at how the preparation of Soldiers, both initial entry and those already assigned to units, can be improved, said Lt. Col. Jim Hodge, executive officer of the Directorate of Operations and Training.

The seminar's agenda will be concentrated on current combat missions. The audience will include the combat leaders, including recently returned division and brigade-level combat leaders.

These Army leaders will share their experiences and observations of how the fighting force is trained and equipped for the operating environments of Iraq and Afghanistan.

Tuesday morning, Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, post commanding general, will open the conference with a presentation on support to an Army at war, support to medium brigade combat teams initial military training, and the integration of lessons learned from operations Enduring and Iraqi Freedom.

Following Wojdakowski, presentations will be made by the commanding generals of Forces Command, Training and Doctrine Command and Recruiting Command.

OIF and OEF lessons learned will be presented by the commanders of the 1st Cavalry Division; 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division Stryker Brigade Combat Team; and the 10th Mountain Division.

The Doughboy Dinner and awards presentation will be held at the Officers' Club Tuesday night.

Wednesday's highlights include a modularity transformation lessons learned presentation by the director of Force Management, followed by a focus group.

Throughout the seminar, more than 60 displays will be in the hallways on the first floor of Infantry Hall.

Conference attendees will see the latest technologies and materials available to support the Infantry Soldier.

The seminar will end Wednesday with Wojdakowski giving the closing remarks in Marshall Auditorium.

Sniper instructor receives Bronze Star in ceremony

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

An instructor at the U.S. Army Sniper School at Fort Benning was awarded the Bronze Star Medal with V device for Valor for his heroic actions in Iraq Oct. 11, 2003.

The award was presented by post commander, Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, to Staff Sgt. Jeremy Baggett, an instructor with C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, during a ceremony at Pioneer Field Tuesday.

"If you read the citation for Staff Sergeant Baggett, it becomes apparent he believes in the Warrior Ethos," Wojdakowski said.

According to the citation, Baggett was assigned to the Scout Platoon, 1st Battalion, 508th Inf. Regt., 173rd Airborne Brigade in Vicenza, Italy. He and his fellow Soldiers were conducting a live-fire training exercise while deployed in the vicinity of Tuz, Iraq.

Baggett

At the conclusion of the training event, while returning to the forward operating base, the battalion commander's vehicle was ambushed by insurgent small arms and rocket propelled grenades.

Noticing the enemy tracer and rocket-propelled grenade fire from the training site, Baggett mounted the lead vehicle and led the convoy to the ambush site, where the battalion commander's vehicle was immobilized and taking continuous fire from both sides of the road. Baggett placed a vehicle in a support-by-fire position and began to suppress the enemy on both sides of the road.

After establishing support-by-fire with their sniper teams, Baggett and his team leader ran to the command vehicle, where the battalion commander was severely injured.

While under direct enemy fire, Baggett tended to the wounded Soldiers and moved the battalion commander to a safe area, stabilized him and coordinated a medical evacuation before rejoining his team and securing the ambush site.

"All of us as Soldiers and leaders in the Army have a responsibility first to our Soldiers and second to our country," Wojdakowski said. "Staff Sergeant Baggett is a perfect example of a Soldier who accomplished those two important purposes to the maximum."

Baggett has been stationed at Fort Benning for about a year.

"I'm happy that others are appreciative," he said. "But I know a lot of other guys who have done just as much."

Post library has original Great Raid story

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Donovan Research Library at Infantry Hall is transitioning its massive collection of student papers dating from World War I into a digital format that is accessible online.

Consisting of more than 10,000 after action reports, command diaries, case studies, battle accounts and firsthand experiences, the papers reflect the personal opinions of U.S. Army personnel from across the decades.

"It's a wonderful collection," said Ericka Loze, director of the U.S. Army Infantry School's Donovan Research Library.

"We get reference questions weekly," she said. "People phone from all over the world asking for our monographs."

One of the monographs, written by Capt. George F. Monsarratt for the Advanced Infantry Officers Course in 1949 to 1950, recounts the liberation of allied prisoners of war at Pangatian Prison in the Valley of Cabanatuan in 1945.

Part of the Luzon Campaign during World War II, more than 500 U.S. POWs were liberated from the Japanese prison located in the Philippines by the 6th Ranger Battalion.

Overcoming overwhelming odds in what came to be known as "the Raid on Cabanatuan," the rescue mission was recounted in The Great Raid, which had an advanced showing at Fort Benning during Ranger Rendezvous.

"The monographs are very good for military tacticians, historians and researchers," Loze said.

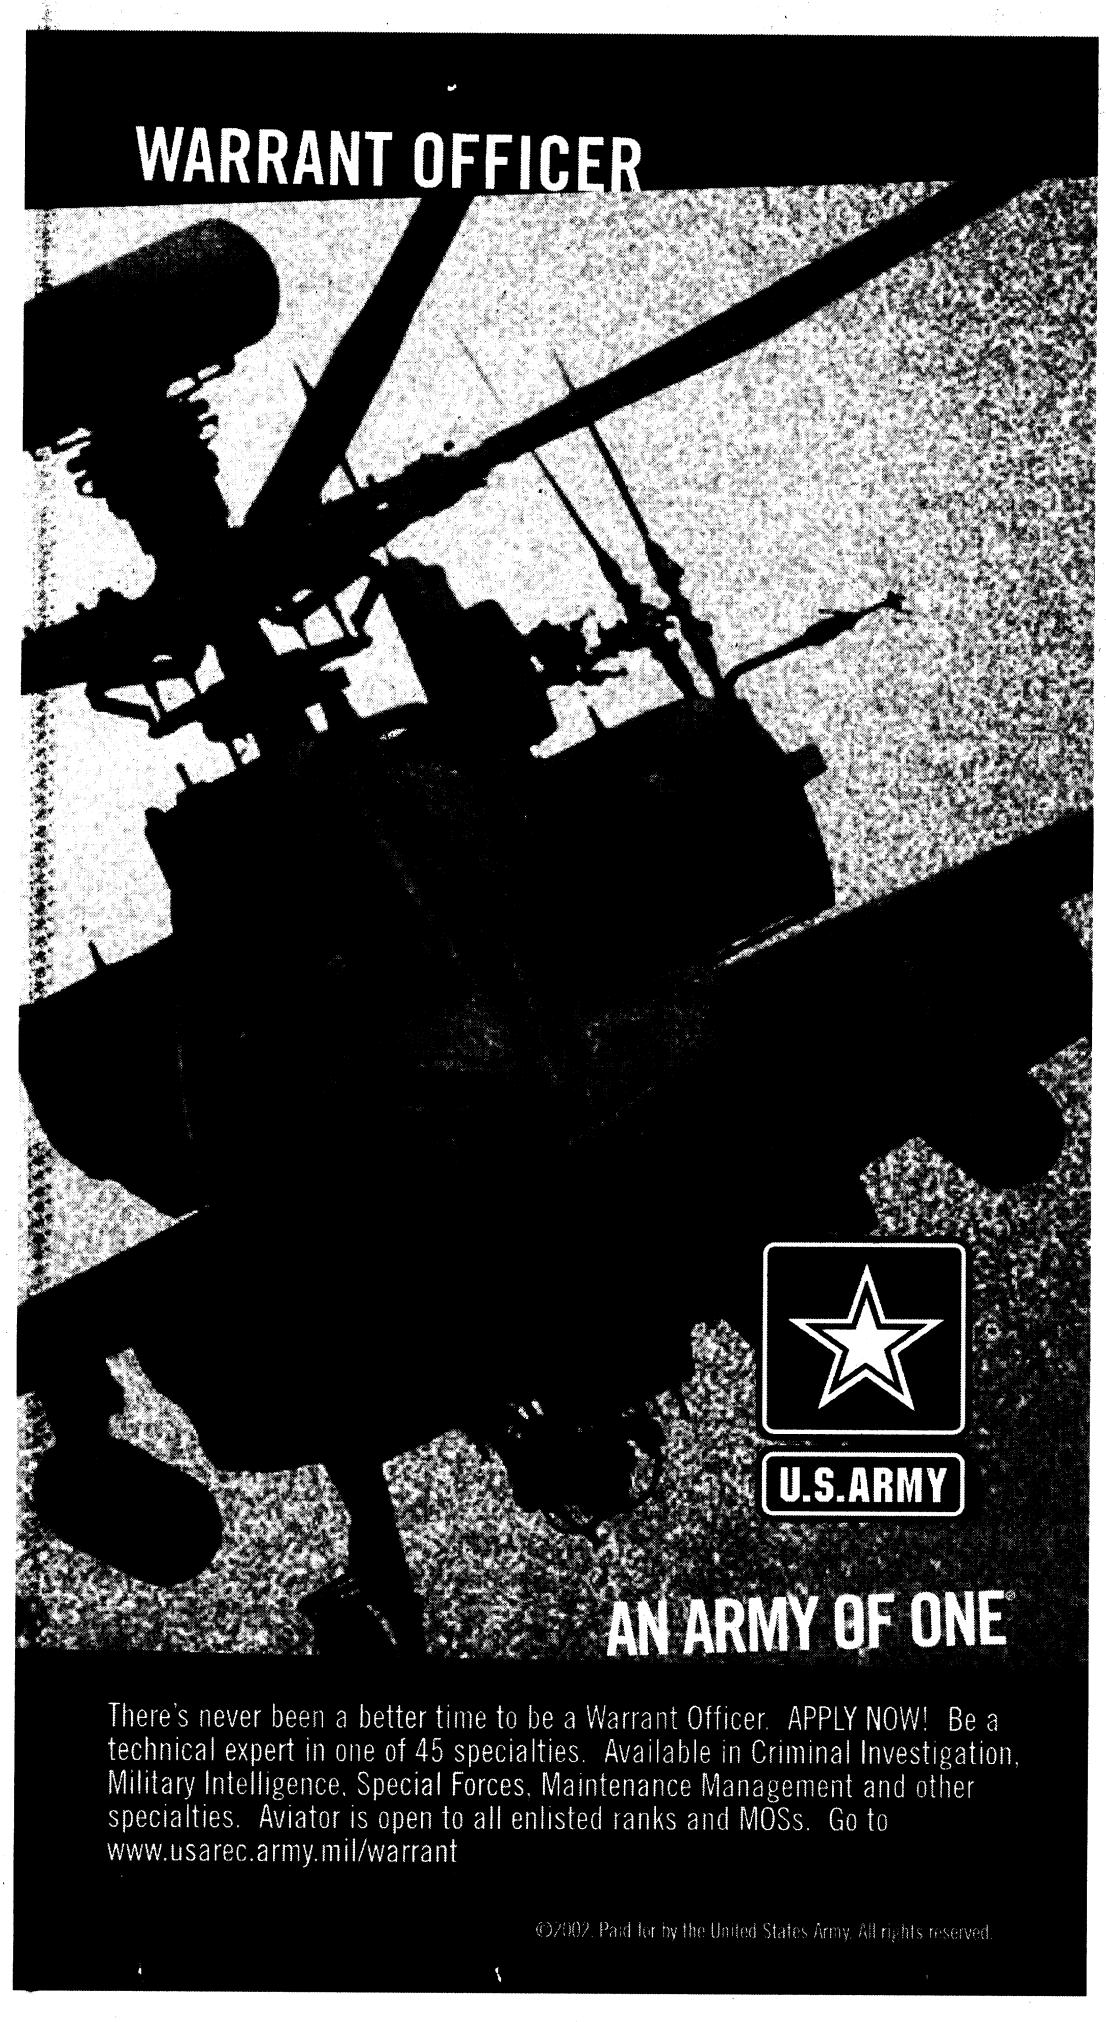
"If they get too cold reading about a (World War II) battle in Europe during the winter, then we have another monograph set in the the hot, steamy jungles of the Pacific in summer."

About 200 monographs in the library are online, with about 4,000 more to go.

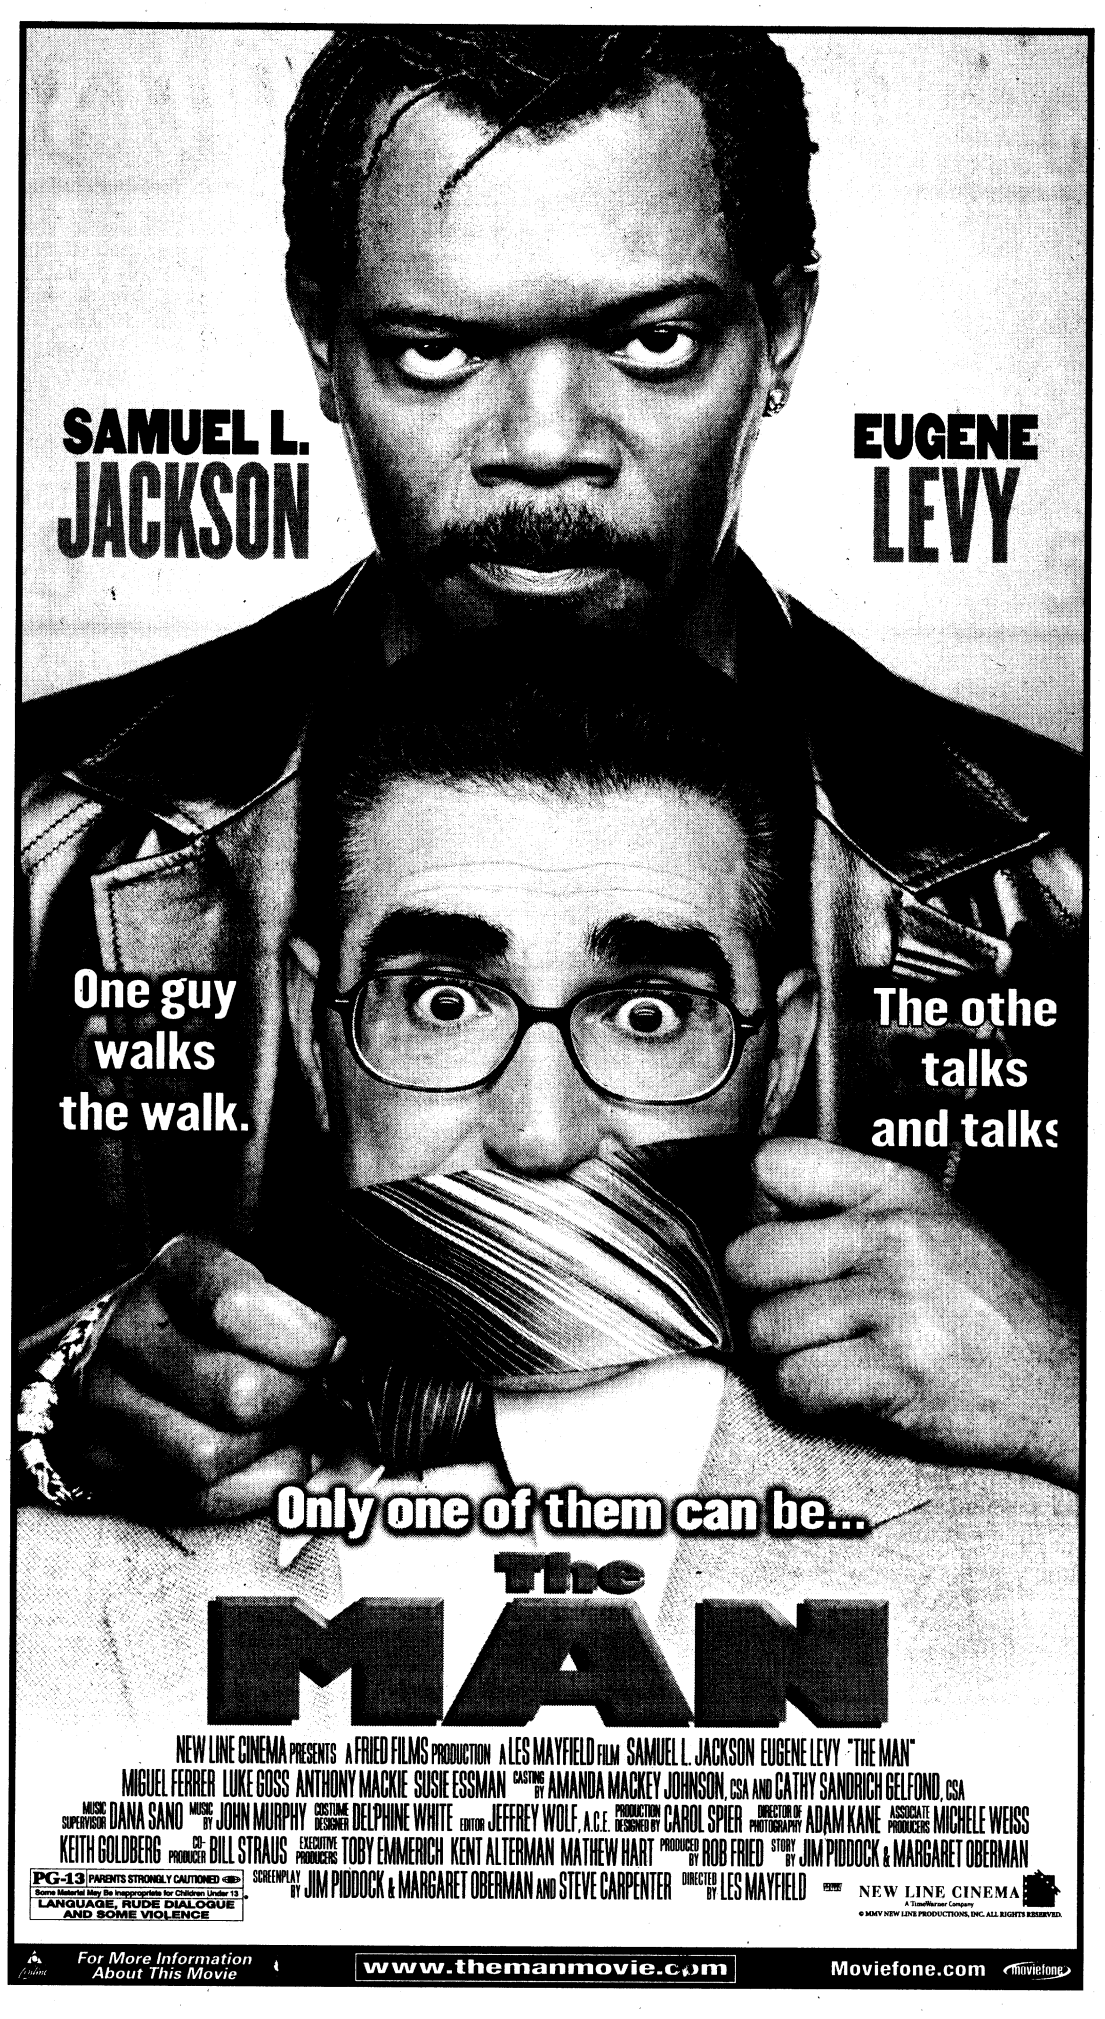
"A lot of the original papers are very delicate and feel like tissue paper," said Genoa Stanford, the Donovan librarian who is scanning the original papers.

Many of the monographs have been saved to microfiche and microfilm.

Eventually all the monographs will be available online, Stanford said.



There is a finding aid at the Web site that lists all available resources in the collection.



Should a desired paper not yet be online, the library staff will make a copy of the original, Loze said.

Located in Infantry Hall, the Donovan Research Library is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The original account of the raid, along with thousands of other pieces of Army history, are available under the digitized monograph collection at www.benning.army.mil/donovan/index.htm.

Army secretary outlines recruiting initiatives

$1,000 'finder's fee' for potential recruits one idea

Sgt. Sara Wood
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Recent Army recruiting problems don't constitute a crisis, and a number of initiatives are being implemented to bring recruiting numbers up, the secretary of the Army said.

Meeting end-strength goals for the Army is a function of both recruiting and retention, Secretary of the Army Francis J. Harvey said in a recent Pentagon Channel interview.

While recruiting has been suffering, retention goals are already being exceeded. High retention rates reflect the quality of Soldiers in the Army and show their dedication to their mission, Harvey said. He said that retention rates are highest in units that are deployed.

"Our Soldiers know that they're making a difference in theater, and that's a real tribute to the quality and capability of our Soldiers," he said.

The active-duty Army recruiting goal of 80,000 Soldiers in 2005 is the highest it's been in five years, Harvey said. The service missed monthly goals at the beginning of the year, but the numbers for June, July and August have looked good.

"We're not going to make 80,000," he said. "But, because of our retention success, I would not characterize the situation in any way, shape or form as a crisis."

To prevent the situation from turning into a crisis, the Army has implemented several initiatives to improve recruiting, Harvey said.

The first initiative, which has already been completed, was to increase active-duty recruiters by 25 percent, he said. Officials are also evaluating whether more will be needed in 2006. A new automated benefit tool is being developed for recruiters, which compares a military career with a civilian career, taking into account benefits and other factors.

In the area of financial benefits, Army officials are working with Congress to double the maximum amount for an initial recruitment incentive from $20,000 to $40,000, Harvey said. Only individuals enlisting into certain military occupational specialties would be eligible for the maximum amount, he noted.

Other financial benefits being developed include a $1,000 "finder's fee," which rewards Soldiers for recommending potential recruits, and the Army Home Mortgage Program, which may offer Soldiers down payments for homes, Harvey said.

The Army advertising budget is up 65 percent this year, and messages are being honed to ensure they reach the right audience and convey the right theme, Harvey said.

Overarching these initiatives is the "Call to Duty" program.

This program brings Army leaders, congressmen, veterans organizations, and civilian leaders associated with the Army to local venues to speak about the nobility of service, Harvey said. This program is one that is close to his heart, since he himself serves the country, he said.

"If you really think about it, the greatest work of life is serving this nation," he said.

"I think every American should look in the mirror and say, 'How am I serving this great country? What am I doing for this country that is giving me the tremendous opportunity of peace and freedom and democracy?'"

In another effort to bolster recruiting, Soldiers who recently returned from Iraq and Afghanistan are being teamed with recruiters nationwide, Harvey said.

These Soldiers, who are generally coming from units with high retention rates and morale, can provide potential recruits with experienced insight on life in the Army and, more specifically, deployments, he said.

A strong belief in the value of military service is what keeps people enlisting and re-enlisting in the Army, Harvey said.

Those serving today will be able to look back with pride at what they have contributed, he said.

"They are serving this country; they are preserving peace and freedom in this country," he said. "They are part of something that is bigger than themselves. They have freed 50 million people; they are improving the quality of life for the ordinary Iraqi and Afghan citizen."

Army transformation on track

Transformation to mean less stress on Soldiers, families

Sgt. Sara Wood
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Army's shift to a modular force made up of smaller, more rapidly deployable units will not only improve warfighting capabilities, but will reduce stress on Soldiers and their families, the secretary of the Army said.

The new Army force model will consist of 77 brigade combat teams — 43 active duty and 34 National Guard, Army Secretary Francis J. Harvey said in a recent Pentagon Channel interview.

In the active-duty units, Soldiers will be deployed or ready for deployment one year in every three, which means they will have two years at home station, Harvey said.

In the National Guard units, Soldiers will be deployed or ready for deployment one year in six, he said.

In conjunction with this new structure, the Army is launching a force-stabilization initiative, Harvey said.

This initiative creates "life cycles" for each unit, which guarantee Soldiers will be at one post for three years, he said. At the end of the first cycle, Soldiers can decide if they want to stay for another three years.

These changes, in conjunction with existing programs, like family readiness groups and Army Community Service, will give Soldiers and their families predictability and stability, Harvey said.

"For sure, the number one priority is the well-being of Soldiers," he said.

The transformation to brigade combat teams is completely redesigning the operational Army by taking functions that used to be handled at the division level and putting them at the brigade level, Harvey said.

This means the BCTs will be self-sufficient units that are flexible and capable across the full spectrum of military operations, he said.

The shift to BCTs began a year ago, Harvey said, and is expected to be completed by the end of fiscal 2007.

The Sergeant's Major Association will sponsor the tricommunity POW/MIA Freedom Ride Sept. 17.
The opening event begins at Golden Park, next to the Columbus Civic Center at 11 a.m. After the ride, the public is invited to the Infantry Museum for the POW/MIA Recognition Ceremony at 2 p.m. and the dedication of the new POW/MIA memorial monument.

Federal troops won't enforce mandatory evacuations

Emergency response in rescue mode

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Tech Sgt. Molly A. Gilliam

U.S. Air Force crew members fly a UN-1N helicopter day and night doing search, recovery and relief missions in the Gulf Coast region Sept. 4. The members are assigned to the 620th Air Expeditionary Squadron at Columbus Air Force Base, Miss.

WASHINGTON — Federal troops continue to deploy to the area ravaged by Hurricane Katrina, but active-duty forces will not participate in the mandatory evacuation order issued by local authorities in New Orleans, a senior military officer involved in the operations said Wednesday.

Army Lt. Gen. Joseph Inge, deputy commander of U.S. Northern Command, said active-duty troops would not be used in "a law enforcement issue."

Guardsmen working under the order of a governor would, however, be able to enforce the mandatory evacuation order.

Emergency response officials are still in rescue mode in some areas while entering the remediation process in others, said Inge, briefing Pentagon reporters via a video connection from NORTHCOM's headquarters in Colorado.

Military aircraft will provide 71 hours of reconnaissance flights to survey damage "to determine what the priority for mitigation will be," Inge said.

"We will continue to search and rescue. We will support the evacuation of survivors. We will transport and distribute relief supplies: ice, food, water and, of course, medical supplies. We are supporting firefighting efforts and have moved some capabilities into the (area)," he said.

There are more than 63,000 military personnel in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, Inge said.

This includes more than 18,000 active-duty Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Marines. The Marine Corps has finished deploying the 11th and 24th Marine Expeditionary Units into Mississippi.

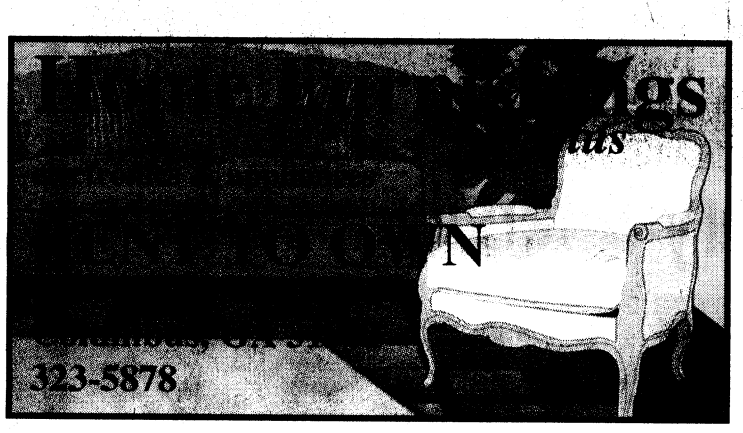
Two brigades of Soldiers — one from 82nd Airborne Division, from Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 1st Cavalry Division, from Fort Hood, Texas — will finish their deployment to Louisiana today.

More than 45,000 National Guardsmen are in the region.

Inge said commanders on the ground are repositioning troops to make sure the right people are in the right places.

They will launch a house-by-house search in flooded areas for people who need to be rescued.

Also, foreign military help is arriving.

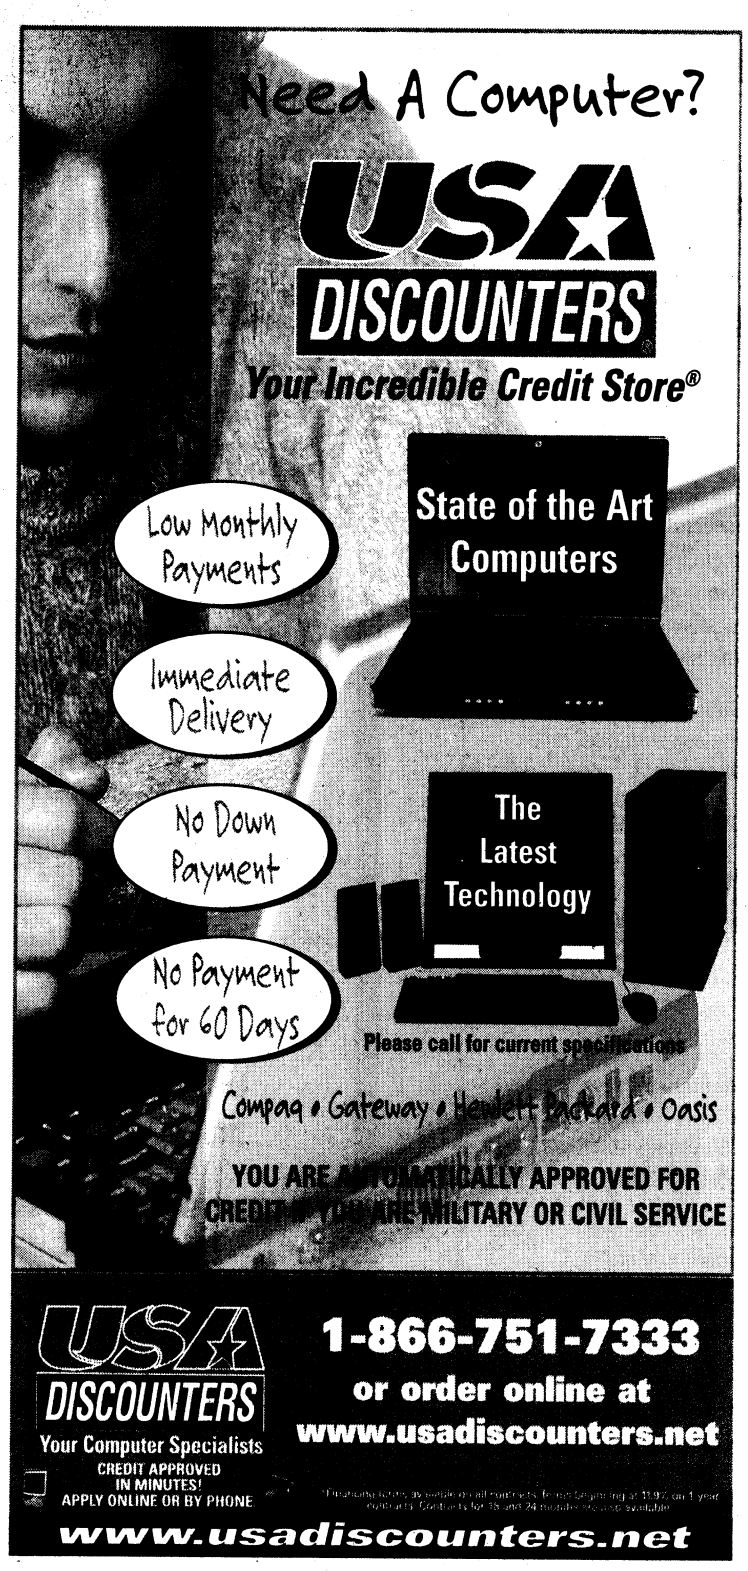


Canadian divers are helping with harbor reconstruction in the water off Pascagoula, Miss., Inge said.

A Mexican vessel is scheduled to arrive today and join the USS Bataan in conducting search-and-rescue missions.

In the next few days, U.S. military personnel will continue to explore isolated areas and conduct rescues, provide for people awaiting evacuation, and expand medical facilities as needed.

"We will deploy additional ships and aviation assets, should they become needed," Inge said.



The Navy hospital ship USNS Comfort will arrive in New Orleans today.

Help available for displaced DoD civilians

Flexible working policy for those affected by storm

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Defense officials vowed this week to keep DoD civilian employees affected by Hurricane Katrina as up-to-date as possible on benefits and other entitlements and to help these employees continue to contribute to the department's mission.

"Our DoD civilian employees are a valuable resource and an essential part of our total force structure," Marilee Fitzgerald, acting deputy undersecretary of defense for civilian personnel policy, wrote in a Sept. 3 memo to department employees.

"As we move forward to restore operations interrupted by the storm and its aftermath, we must do all that we can to assist our civilian workforce during this difficult time."

Fitzgerald encouraged maximum use of alternate worksites, telework, alternative work schedules, temporary duty at alternative work sites and other flexible work arrangements to ensure all employees can keep working following the hurricane — for the department's good as well as their own.

"As we have learned from past crises, work can be a therapeutic outlet by providing structure, consistency and camaraderie," Fitzgerald wrote.

The Defense Civilian Personnel Management Service Web site, at www.cpms.osd.mil, is being updated regularly with relevant information, as well as links to agencies such as the Office of Personnel Management and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

A fact sheet posted on the site refers employees with questions to these e-mail addresses and phone numbers:

- General questions: FAS@cpms.osd.mil or (703) 696-1615;
- Questions about pay and allowances: pay@cmps.osd.mil or call Dennis Turner at (703) 696-1284;
- Questions about benefits and entitlements: benefits@cpms@osd.mil or call Johnny McLean at (703) 696-1202. In addition, OPM announced a new, toll-free hotline for current or retired federal employees or annuitants impacted by Hurricane Katrina.

The hotline, (800) 307-8298, will be staffed between 7 a.m. and 9 p.m. Central Time to answer questions about health and life insurance, disability issues and the status of paychecks and retiree annuity payments, OPM officials said.

They urged current federal employees affected by the hurricane who have not yet contacted their agency, to call the hotline immediately.

The OPM Web site, at www.opm.gov, also provides a page for hurricane victims and human-resources professionals handling their cases.

The page provides information on benefits, such as emergency leave, transfer, military leave, insurance, retirement payments and human resources flexibilities available to assist affected federal employees, OPM officials reported.

The site also offers information for employees who would like to make cash donations or volunteer their services to help the relief effort.

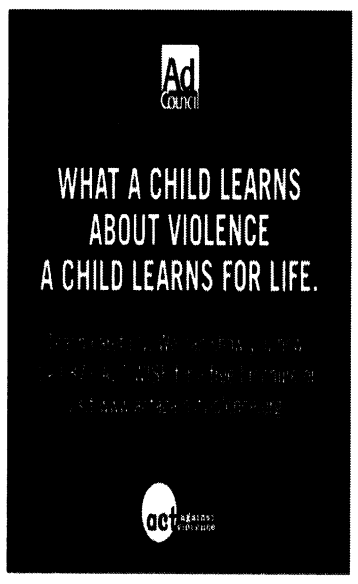
In addition to short-term and immediate relief efforts by the American Red Cross and Salvation Army, the 2005 Combined Federal Campaign has a list of national charitable organizations providing disaster relief, Richard Howell, director of the Baltimore Federal Executive Board, said.

Army announces policies for displaced military personnel

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Military family members ordered to evacuate military installations in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama due to Hurricane Katrina are now authorized to select an alternate safe haven anywhere in the continental United States, defense officials confirmed today.

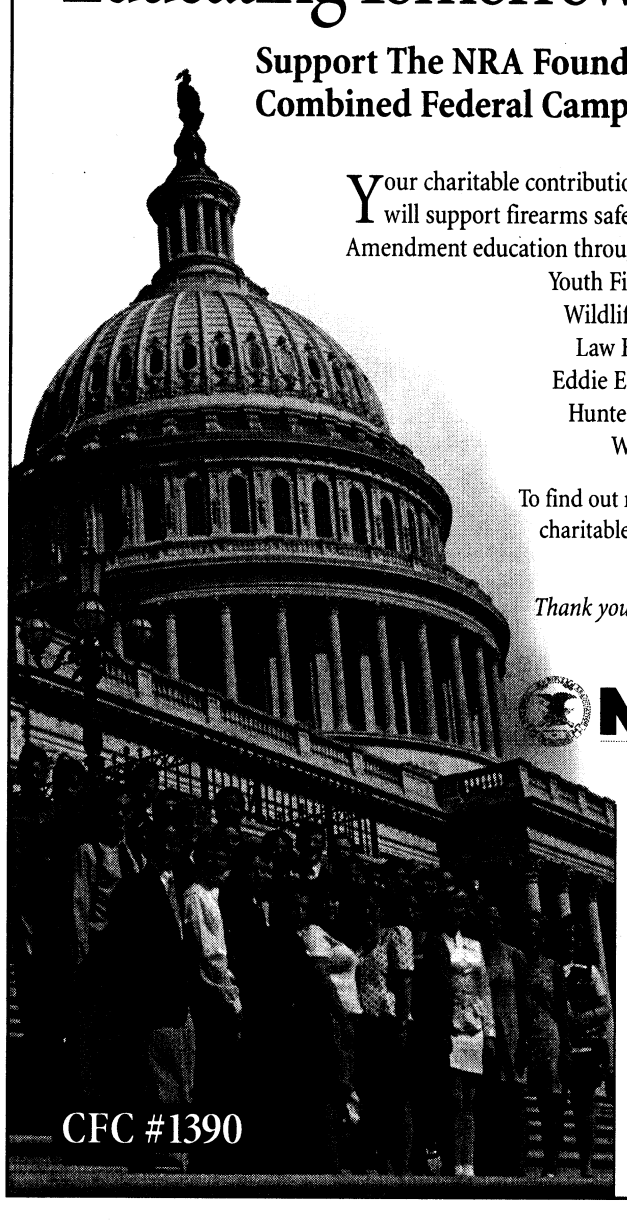
David S. C. Chu, undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, announced the new policy in a memo sent to the service secretaries Sept. 1.



The authority applies to family members whose housing was declared uninhabitable following the hurricane, Chu wrote. Families affected by the policy qualify for up to two months of advance pay.

Military family members will receive safe haven allowances for up to 180 days after arriving at their alternate safe haven location, Chu wrote.

Allowances will be paid in accordance with the Joint Forces Travel Regulation, with calculations generally following rules for temporary duty travel: the actual cost of lodging, plus a separate meal and incidental allowance, said Air Force Lt. Col. Al Bruner, from Chu's office.



Family members age 12 and older will receive travel pay and 100 percent of the per diem for their safe haven location for the first 30 days, Bruner said. DoD will pay full travel costs and 50 percent of the per diem rate for family members younger than 12.

For more information, service members should call the Defense Finance and Accounting Service's 24-hour, toll-free hotline at (800) 756-4571 and select option 6.

PURCHASE THE BEST VALUE PREPAID CARD AT YOUR MILITARY EXCHANGE

AT&T Global PrePaid Cards offer low rates that are optimized for military personnel calling home to the U.S.

The 550-Unit AT&T Global PrePaid Card offers deployed soldiers the best value when calling to the U.S. from Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom — just 19¢ a minute when the Card is purchased at any OEF/OIF location. When purchased online or at other Exchange locations in the U.S. and around the world, it's just 21¢ a minute.*

★ Where can AT&T Global PrePaid Cards be purchased?
Buy yours at your local Exchange or online at www.aafes.com. Friends and family of military personnel can also purchase Cards for you at this site. When deployed in Iraq, Afghanistan and Kuwait, Cards can be purchased at the Exchange, where the price of the 550-Unit Card is just $35.

When calling within the U.S., 1 unit equals 1 minute of calling. When making international calls from overseas, more units are used per minute of call time and the number of units is different based on the country you are calling from. For example, when using the 550-Unit Card, for calls made from OEF/OIF to the U.S., 1 minute equals 3 units of call time. So the 550-Unit Card is good for 183 minutes of calling. For information on other countries, just call the 800 Customer Service number on the back of your Card.

★ Optimized military rates. Great AT&T benefits:
- Minutes never expire.
- Low rates. Remember, prepaid cards bought at other retailers may have higher overseas rates.
- Recharge with AT&T Autominutes® and never run out of minutes.
- Toll free Customer Service available 24/7.
- INFO TO GO available† with weather, sports and more!

★ Visit Camp AT&T.
Before you're deployed, go to www.att.com/mil and check out the Camp AT&T section. It contains information on calling from all the forward-deployed areas, other overseas locations and from U.S. Naval ships.

AT&T

*A surcharge of at least 10 units/minutes (subject to increase) applies to pay phone calls. Units are based on U.S. domestic calling. International rates are higher than U.S. domestic rates, differ according to destination called and are subject to change. Rates may be higher for calls made to or from mobile phones. Locals: Still accepting donations for return trip to Biloxi

Soldier Battle Lab. He sent an e-mail to the 15 to 20 people he works with to let them know what he was doing, and before he knew it, that e-mail had circulated through Columbus.

"We had churches and high schools calling, and before you know it, I was overwhelmed," he said. "We had two truckloads of things donated by the (Fort Benning) Thrift Shop. We got water, baby food and non-perishable items. My garage is bursting at the seams.

"The support is overwhelming, he said. "Fort Benning, the Columbus community — opened arms and hearts and showered the citizens of Biloxi with offerings."

Hollar, his son Kyle, and co-workers Mark Gerkin and Jon Porter loaded up trucks and trailers full of supplies in the early morning hours of Sept, 2 and headed for Biloxi, Miss, to help victims of Hurricane Katrina.

Gerkin, John said, gave up a weekend at the beach with his family to make the trip. Gerkin's wife, Susan, the coordinator for the local House of Heroes, was partly responsible for the flood of donations.

Susan passed along John's original e-mail to her HOH volunteers, and then kept everyone updated through the weekend on the group's trials and tribulations.

> "We had churches and high schools calling, and before you know it, I was overwhelmed. Fort Benning, the Columbus community — opened arms and hearts and showered the citizens of Biloxi with offerings."
> John Hollar
> Fort Benning employee on a relief mission to Biloxi

The trip down did not go smoothly. John said someone had lost a case of roofing nails on I-65. They ended up with 12 nails in four truck tires and one in a trailer tire that flattened it immediately. Thirteen hours later, they arrived in Biloxi.

"Residents told us the ocean came inland seven miles," John said. "And they were on the mainland side of the bay." In Eric's neighborhood, he said, some houses had been reduced to debris that washed up the street, leaving nothing but concrete slabs, while other homes remained intact. Eric's church, which stood on higher ground, was slightly damaged.

The men spent the weekend helping Eric salvage what he could and helping his neighbors clear things like huge propane tanks and boats out of other people's yards. John said his brother spent the majority of the time on the phone, coordinating relief efforts and talking to and comforting members of his congregation.

Generators the group took with them provided power to the refrigerator for cooling bottled water for Eric's congregation, who spent time working at the church as well as in their neighborhoods.

Eric's church service took place, on time, Sunday morning.

John said almost everyone in the congregation has been accounted for, and the 40 or 50 who attended the service shared their stories.

"There is hope out there," John said. "They know the world is rallying around them."

Mark Gerkin joked that he was just there to provide a strong back for the efforts that put new meaning to Labor Day as they moved debris and tried to clear the thick sludge left behind when the water receded. Because the flood water was salt water, Gerkin said a lot of people will need cleaning supplies and bleach, but many will have to demolish their homes and start from scratch because of the mold.

Courtesy photo

The property damage was incredible, said John Hollar, who traveled to Biloxi , Miss., to help his brother. Hollar, his son and a friend, Mark Gerkin, delivered relief supplies donated by the Fort Benning and Columbus communities.

"This is going to be a long and hard process," John said. "The salt water has destroyed everything and there are a lot of homeowners without flood insurance. But there, its neighbors helping neighbors."

One of the most difficult things John and the group had to deal with wasn't the tons of debris.

"The news media can write about this. They can show pictures. But they can't relay the odor," he said. "It's something you can't understand unless you smell it yourself."

John plans to return to Biloxi today to take more supplies, including a tractor trailer donated by Royce Ard, general manager of Knology in Columbus.

Ard is picking up the remaining donations left at the House of Heroes office and looking for donations of water, nonperishable food, toiletries, cleaning supplies, under-garments and socks to take to Biloxi.

John said Ard also plans to cook a hot lunch for 1,000 there this weekend.

Donations for Biloxi can be dropped off at the Knology office on Moon Road.

Soldiers: Will help with recovery and security effort

Fort Benning's public affairs officer, Monica Manganaro, said the relief efforts are a natural extension of the Soldiers' mission.

"While it's heartbreaking to see the devastation, this is what our Army trains for, whether it's helping others in a war torn region or after a natural disaster," she said.

The units Fort Benning sent, or is preparing to send, include the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), the 86th Military Police Detachment (Criminal Investigation Command) and others.

More than 250 Soldiers from the 14th Combat Support Hospital left this week for New Orleans, where they'll provide "level three" support for the troops there. That's any and every kind of medical care one could expect in garrison, except rehabilitation, said Col. Jeff Haun, 14th CSH commander.

Thirty semi-tractor trailers were required to move the equipment needed to establish a hospital with more than 200 beds, including intensive care, surgery, radiology, a lab and a pharmacy.

> "We're absolutely excited about the mission. Excited about the opportunity to serve our fellow Americans. This is what we do."
> Col. Jeff Haun
> 14th Combat Support Hospital

"We're absolutely excited about the mission, " Haun said. "Excited about the opportunity to serve our fellow Americans. This is what we do."

Though most of the military forces are tasked to conduct humanitarian missions, including search and rescue, some went armed. One-third of the more than 21,000 National Guardsmen sent to the area will be used for security, to prevent looting, enforce curfews and supplement dwindling numbers of civilian law enforcement.

Other units are helping restore the area's basic infrastructure. The Army Corps of Engineers helped shore up the damaged levees surrounding New Orleans and will continue to help drain and sweep the muddy floodwaters from the city.

No one's saying just how long recovery efforts will take or how long troops will serve in the area. But, experts say there are 12 weeks to go before the end of the hurricane season — and it will continue to be very active.

"No one can say or predict how long this will take," Manganaro said.

"But a call like this only serves to reinforce why our troops train and stand ready."

Evacuees: Find support with Fort Benning agencies

at Fort Benning, said eligible families are housed together and shelter is provided based upon the number of beds needed.

Housing has been made available at McGraw Manor, Ragin Court and Building 9146. If needed, Kenyon said, temporary shelter will be set up at Peden and Dickman Field.

"There's enough space on post to take care of those who are here and those who are coming," he said.

"We are prepared to support the evacuee mission as long as is necessary."

Lt. Col. Al Lugo, veteran of five emergency hurricane evacuation operations and training coordinator for the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization, said officials are expecting "a lot more people."

"You can see the pictures. The devastation is incredible and the people caught in it have nothing," Lugo said.

"As they work their way up here, military people are calling back to their friends and families, telling them about Fort Benning. And we'll accommodate them. They're welcome here."

Residents of the Gulf Coast have been arriving at all hours of the day or night.

Kelli Stapp learned about the accommodations at Fort Benning while staying at the recreation center in Destin, Fla. The Gulfport, Miss., resident brought her 83-year-old grandmother with her.

"We started hearing it was going to be one or two months without power," said Stapp, whose husband, a National Guardsman, is helping with search and rescue efforts. "Then we heard there was room and board at Fort Benning, so we came here.

Telephone service has been sporadic throughout the devastated region. Christiana Robinson, a resident of Diamond Head, La., was grateful to be able to contact family members.

She talked with her husband, who was stationed at the Inter-Coastal Support Command at New Orleans. He's now been relocated to Alexandria, La., to help on the river.

"We're very fortunate," said Robinson, whose stepson is deployed to Iraq.

Food and shelter is being provided at no cost to the evacuees, who must have at least one military ID card holder in their group.

Those who arrive with no identification are directed by the gate guards to shelters established in Columbus.

ID card holders can use post facilities for medical services and to get prescriptions filled, Kenyon said.

Many people are arriving with young children, and Fort Benning will allow elementary and middle school-age children of non-retiree ID cardholders to attend school on post.

High school students and children of all grade levels here with retirees may attend schools in Columbus once arrangements are coordinated through the Muscogee County school board.

Jennifer Gunn

Julia Pitz, left, delivers items to the Fort Benning Thrift Shop for the Hurricane Katrina relief effort. Customer service representative Cathi Kulas, right, said the shop started taking donations when they found out Fort Benning was hosting refugees from the storm.

Fort Benning's Army Community Service Center is also prepared to help. Dennis Menard, director, said money is available through various military Emergency Relief funds, household goods are available at the ACS Lending Closet, and crisis counselors are on call.

"Besides food, water and a place to stay, support is going to be very important," Menard said.

"These people have lost everything and they really need to know somebody cares."

Soldiers from the 11th and 29th Infantry Regiments have been manning the hurricane evacuation welcome center in Infantry Hall 24 hours a day since opening the center.

quit your belly-aching — they're just

GAS PAINS

You can host a car pool:

• Advertise at work or in the newspaper. Call The Bayonet at 682-3346 to advertise.

• Meet with potential participants to determine who will drive, if driving responsibilities will rotate, etc.

• Create a telephone list.

• Develop plans B and C. Who will drive if the designated driver is sick?

• Establish policies: smoking or nonsmoking, radio or no radio, food and drinks, etc.

• Establish firm payment guidelines if one person is driving.

•Establish a limit on tardies and absences. It's a good idea to have a waiting list to replace consistently truant participants.

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It hurts.

You try really hard to keep it in perspective, but it hurts.

Gas prices are higher in Europe. Much higher.

The price of gas hasn't increased as much as, say, the cost of housing in the last 50 years.

And all things considered, what with Hurricane Katrina and all, you've got it good.

You definitely shouldn't complain.

So you suffer silently, fuming every time you fill up. Call them "gasoline fumes." They're dangerous.

Take a deep breath — not at the pump, mind you — take a deep breath and get a hold of yourself. You have options. Beyond leaded, unleaded and super-duper high octane, you have options. You can choose:

Joy.

Yep, joy.

Forget about your "motor" skills. This is a great opportunity to practice the life skill of joy, said Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins, Fort Benning's family life chaplain.

"It's the mark of a mature person to choose joy at a time like this," Hawkins said.

"It's not what happens to us, but what happens in us that makes the difference. That's true of the folks in New Orleans and the folks here at the gas pumps."

You can do absolutely nothing about the price of gas.

You can get frustrated.

You can get mad.

Or you can get creative, Hawkins said.

Getting creative with your budget, your time and your schedule is a great way to save money, sure, but it's also a great way to "bring the whole family together," Hawkins said.

There are lots of ways to get creative with your time. Car pools and synchronized errands are the obvious ways, but there are more. For example, adjust your concept of "entertainment."

Break out the board game, the jigsaw puzzles and the home movies.

Invite the neighbors over for a card game.

Cook out.

Take a nature walk with the family.

Drag the baby books and old photos down from the attic.

Teach the kids to play the games you played as a child: hopscotch, jump rope, four-square, croquet, hide and seek ...

Remember the "back to basics" mentality that prevailed post 9-11?

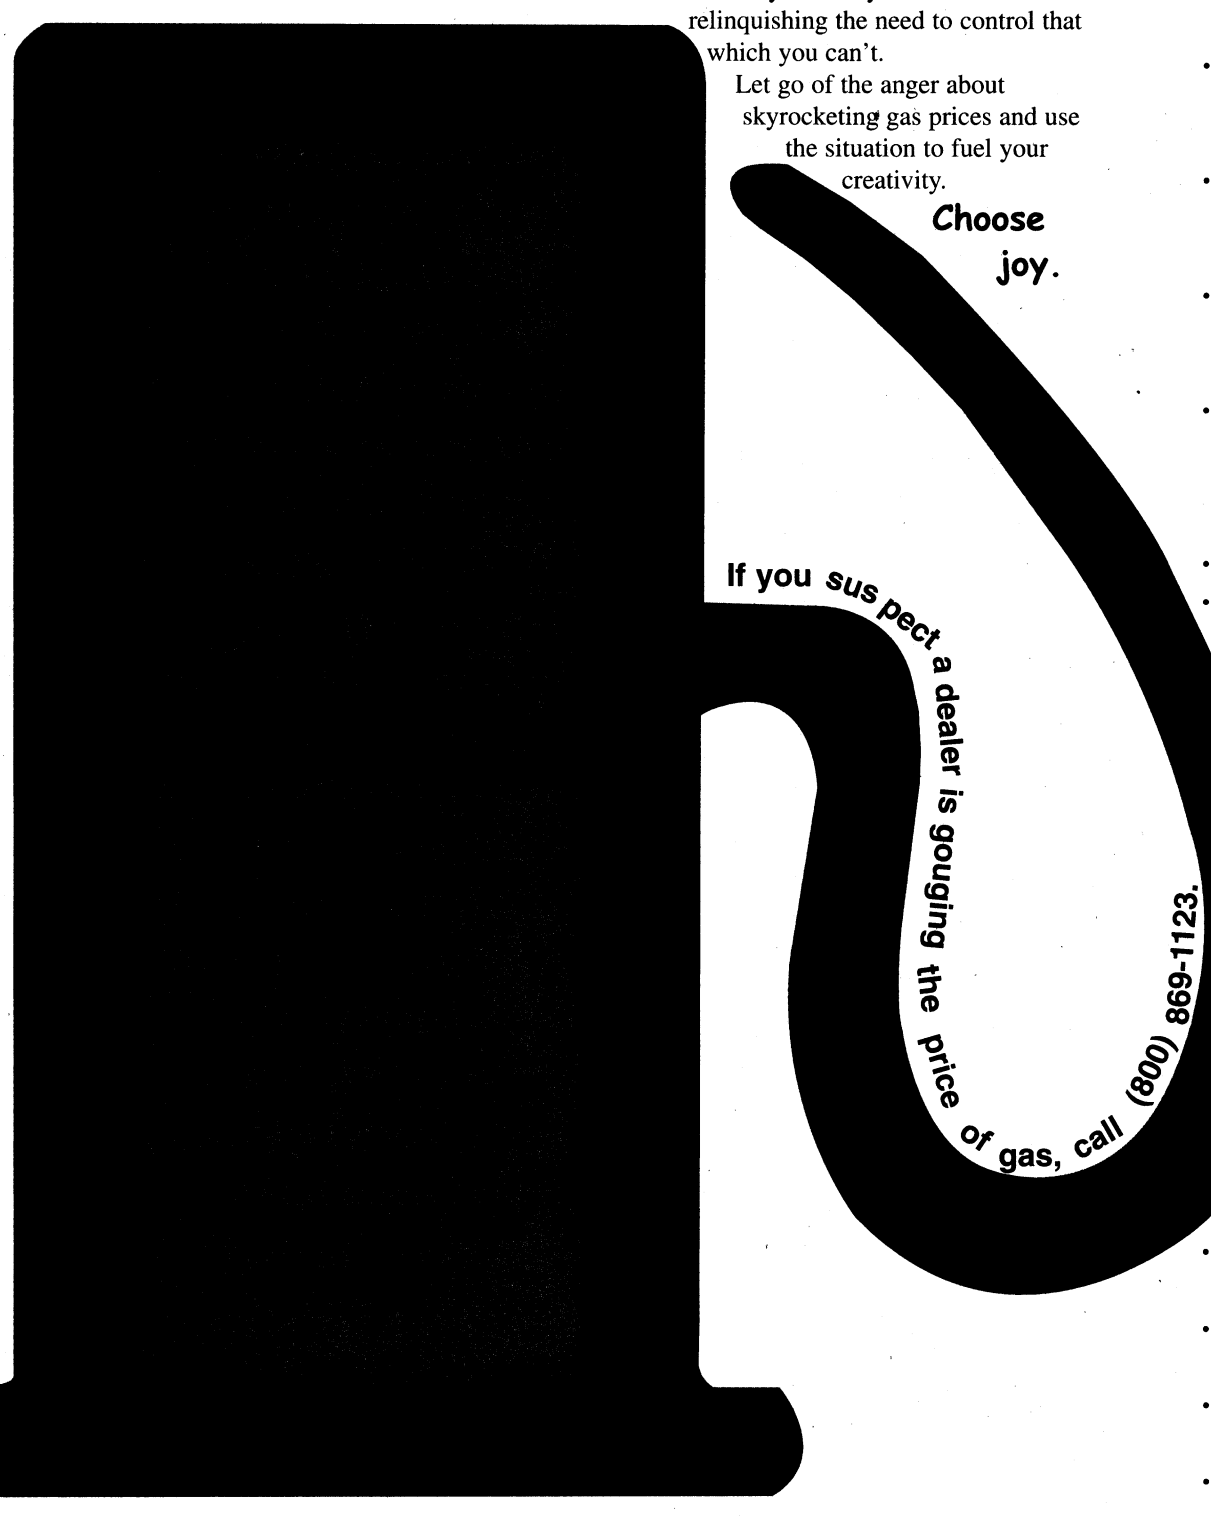
"That's what it's all about," Hawkins said, "keeping your eyes open for a blessing."

Then there's the alternative. Buckle down and use your time wisely to accomplish those chores you've been neglecting.



Yeah, spending Friday night organizing your closets isn't fun, per se, but you'll feel great Saturday morning when you wake without the hangover, closets clean, with a stack of clothes to donate to hurricane victims.

How did you get here, from being taken to the cleaners at the gas pumps to cleaning out closets?

It's simply a matter of taking control of the areas of your life you can control and relinquishing the need to control that which you can't.

Let go of the anger about skyrocketing gas prices and use the situation to fuel your creativity.

Choose joy.

It's a numbers game.

Applied individually, these tips will save you a couple of bucks each week. Incorporate several of them into your budget and your schedule, and you'll likely see a substantial savings each month.

- Look for other ways to save money to compensate for what you'll spend at the pump. Shop online, in bulk and off season.
- Get a credit card that offers savings on gas when you use the card for purchases, just as some credit cards offer frequent flier miles. Make sure the interest charges don't exceed your savings.
- Get a tune up. Your car will use less gas if it's well maintained.
- Take advantage of one-stop shopping centers, where you can buy groceries, have dinner, shop for clothes and rent a movie in one trip.
- Turn off the AC whenever possible. Of course, open windows cause "drag," so that's not an option either. If you can't live without either, use the AC.
- Use the cheap gas. Unless the owner's manual says otherwise, your car was manufactured to use the cheap stuff. Don't let anybody tell you differently.
- Don't "top it off" and don't let it go below a third of a tank. The former sends a message to the suppliers that you don't mind paying extra for gas. The latter causes damage to your fuel pump in hot weather.
- Monitor the air pressure in your tires.
- Drive at a consistent speed. Accelerating and braking quickly lowers your gas mileage by 5 percent in town, 33 percent on the highway. And idling more than a minute burns more gas than restarting. Learn to use your cruise control.
- Empty everything, except the spare, from your trunk. A lighter car uses less gas.
- Stick to the road most traveled. Rough roads, like dirt and gravel, can increase your gas consumption by 30 percent.
- Vinyl tops create drag and increase consumption. Skip the sports model.
- Avoid peak travel times whenever possible. Leave work later if it means avoiding rush hour.
- Slow down. The faster you drive, the more fuel you burn per mile. For every 5 mph you go over 60 mph, you pay an additional $.15.
- Roof racks and trailers increase drag and seriously decrease fuel efficiency.
- Buy gas during the coolest time of the day, when gasoline is densest.
- Replace your air filter. A clogged filter can increase fuel consumption by 10 percent.
- Sorry dude, revving the engine wastes gas.

Prepare your home for fall allergies

Molly Maid

With autumn just around the corner and humidity still on the rise, now is the time to do some clean-up in order to prevent a harsh allergy outbreak in and around your home.

Fall brings a rise in mold spores, ragweed and other environmental allergies that can easily find their way into your home.

According to the American Academy of Allergy, Asthma and Immunology, about 40 million Americans have an allergic reaction brought on by mold spores.

Mold spores can cause nasal stuffiness, eye irritation, coughing and other traditional hayfever-like symptoms and can quickly spread in humid conditions.

Bryna Myers of Molly Maid of Columbus, Auburn-Opelika and LaGrange said a good late-summer cleaning can reduce the buildup of those allergens that can wreak havoc on your respiratory system.

"Although most people think of spring cleaning as the essential time to rid your house of dust, dander and other potential allergy-inducing offenders, we also recommend our clients do a solid cleaning in the late summer to rid their home of big trouble spots," Myers said.

While one big cleaning job every month or so may be a great start, you need to be diligent about keeping up a regular routine of cleaning, including mopping up standing water around leaky faucets and tubs, keeping counters free of crumbs and dirty dishes, store opened food in airtight containers and make sure you clean your microwave.

According to the American Lung Association, these allergens, along with cockroaches, can aggravate cases of asthma.

Besides weekly dusting and vacuuming, Myers suggested cleaning window screens to reduce the amount of pollen your household is exposed to.

Also, Myers said this is a particular time of the year where you should forego hanging sheets and towels outside, since mold spores, ragweed pollen and other environmental allergens can collect on these materials, and you'll end up bringing these intruders indoors.

Regular check-ups important to prostate health

Dr. Ron Lewis
Urology MCG Health System

Being mindful of prostate health can help save your life, particularly if cancer is detected early.

That's why urologists and other physicians at MCG Health System continue to recommend that men older than 50 undergo an annual digital rectal exam and prostate specific antigen, or PSA, test to check for signs of prostate cancer. Black men and those with a family history of prostate cancer are recommended to begin prostate cancer checks at age 40.

In most cases, prostate cancer is a slow-growing cancer. A combination digital rectal exam and PSA test enable physicians to find signs of prostate cancer early.

If a biopsy confirms the presence of cancer, early detection gives patients the most treatment options.

The digital rectal exam looks for firmness or lumps and bumps on the gland's surface, while the PSA test checks if levels of prostate specific antigen — which rise if the prostate is enlarged — are normal.

Even if a person has no symptoms, the annual prostate checks remain important. Prostate cancer in its early stages often has no symptoms.

By the time symptoms occur, the cancer has often spread and may be untreatable.

Those at particular risk for prostate cancer continue to be:

• Older men. The risk of prostate cancer increases with age.

• Those whose diet is high in animal fat.

A study by MCG urologist and researcher Dr. Martha Terris also recently found that obesity makes prostate cancer harder to detect.

• Those with a family history. If a man's father or an older sibling has had prostate cancer, he is at increased risk.

While no clear cause for prostate cancer has been found, experts believe there are steps you can take to decrease your risk.

If you are a smoker, quit.

Get plenty of exercise. A recent small study suggests that a low-fat diet combined with regular exercise and stress management can help lower PSA levels.

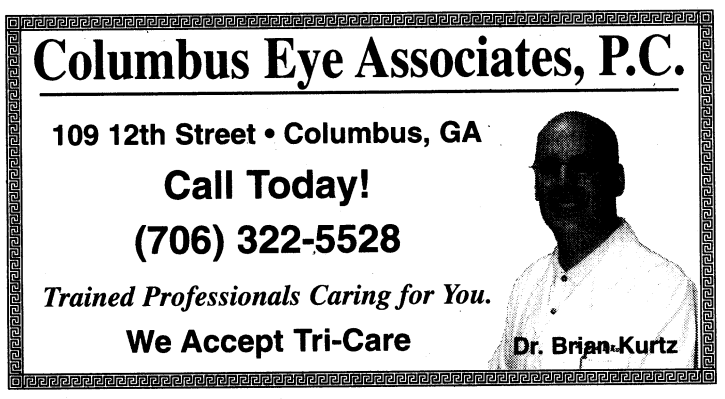
Thanks to advances in treatment techniques, a cure is possible for a large percentage of men with the disease.

Treatments include:

• Prostate removal, via traditional or laparoscopic methods

• Radiation therapy, including implantation of radioactive seeds in the prostate that helps spare normal tissue

• Chemotherapy



• Investigational therapies such as cryotherapy

• Hormone therapy

Awareness of the risk factors and the importance of annual check-ups can help decrease your risk of developing prostate cancer.

SANTA'S CASTLE

Elves prep for another banner year

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Michelle McLaughlin is thinking about Christmas — a lot. And because she is, many Fort Benning families will have a better holiday.

McLaughlin is this year's president of Santa's Castle, an organization that helps families who can't afford gifts for their children.

Last year, more than 430 families — that equates to 1,069 children — received toys so the kids had presents to open Christmas morning.

How does Santa's Castle provide toys for so many?

Power shopping, McLaughlin said.

As the chief shopper last year, McLaughlin spent $28,664 to buy $57,375 worth of toys.

The value of the donated toys was almost $21,000, which means a lot of toys were distributed to Fort Benning families in need of Christmas cheer.

Santa's Castle and the elves who make the organization run are hoping for another banner year and have three major fund-raisers planned, McLaughlin said.

The first is with Outback Steakhouse Wednesday with 100 percent of the proceeds going to Santa's Castle.

Sid Horn, managing partner of Outback Steakhouse, said it is one of the company's principles to be involved in the community.

"In light of what is going on in the world, anything we can do to help Soldiers and their families and Fort Benning, we want to be involved," Horn said.

For $15 a plate, diners will get a salad, a sampler plate of ribs, steak and chicken, Aussie fries and a drink.

There are 300 tickets available, with seating for 100 people at the restaurant at 11 a.m. and another 100 at noon. The other 100 tickets are for takeout, McLaughlin said.

Delivery is available for those who order six or more plates.

Two other fund-raisers are a golf scramble in November and a toy drive during the God Bless Fort Benning Rally Nov. 19, McLaughlin said.

A $15,000 donation from the Family and Soldier Support Association, which benefits from the Combined Federal Campaign, cash donations and toy drives from units and other organizations kept Santa's Castle stocked with toys for the younger age groups, McLaughlin said.

"But there is a real need for board games and toys for the 8- to 18-year-old crowd," she said.

Tuesday McLaughlin will brief first sergeants about Santa's Castle. The Red Cross, chaplains and Army Community Service can give Soldiers applications for Santa's Castle too.

Applications are due Oct. 15 with shopping starting Nov. 15.

"I enjoy this," McLaughlin said. "Knowing kids are going to have toys at Christmas, making someone else's Christmas nicer, and helping others is worth the effort."

To volunteer as an elf or for more information, call Santa's Castle at 687-8840.

Monetary donations can be sent to Santa's Castle, P.O. Box 51951, Fort Benning GA 31995.

FRGs benefit from technology

Staff Sgt. Yves-Marie J. Casimir
81st Regional Readiness Command

With the touch of a button or click of a mouse, family readiness groups are reaching out to families of mobilized Soldiers across the globe.

Web sites and e-mail have replaced the traditional "snail-mail" newsletter and phone tree in many FRG operations. Holding video teleconferences allows families to meet and communicate from their own living rooms.

Efforts to develop a single site, where all FRGs will have an established method of communication via the Internet, are underway.

The Army plans to debut the Virtual Family Readiness Group, also known as vFRG, site Oct.1.

"This vFRG allows FRGs to stay organized throughout the year with a known place where people can log in and communicate without the worry and expense of bringing families into a headquarters, which could be 100 miles away," said Jay M. Burcham, chief of the Deployment and Mobilization Readiness division for the Family Programs directorate at U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

When released for use by units, it will feature a unit vFRG locator, a kids' and teens' area, a phone tree organization chart, emergency family plans, and more.

"It is not designed to replace the existing physical FRGs, but to enhance them," Burcham said.

Currently, FRG leaders rely on the skill and technical savvy of other FRG members to assist in the development of an e-mail list, e-newsletter, and effective video teleconference.

Cynthia Rice, FRG Web master for the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, is accomplishing the goal of most on-line FRGs.

She works to reach out to a Soldier's entire family, not just his or her spouse, by maintaining a family-focused, informative Web site.

Keeping everyone happy and informed was the group's main objective in creating the Web site, which averages 15,000 hits monthly.

There are many forms on the site that viewers use to request answers to the questions of mothers and fathers as well as wives and husbands, girlfriends and boyfriends, Rice said.

The brigade consists of nearly 4,000 Soldiers. The FRG has a big task, attempting to keep the entire family informed.

With their combined efforts and the use of the Web site, they are able to get information out to all of the Soldiers' loved ones.

Rice, a survivor of breast cancer, volunteers because she knows the needs of Soldiers' families.

Despite her health struggles, "I just can't let the site die," she said.

It is important that all the Soldiers' families are included in all aspects of the 3rd Brigade's deployment, she said.

Through the hard work of the all-volunteer FRG staff, in three years the 3rd Brigade group has gone from non-existent to a very stable and supportive unit, Rice said.

The Web site contains educational information, from how to read a leave and earning statement, to researching scholarship information for military service members and their dependents.

It also provides links to everything family readiness related, such as deployment guides and tips on how to deal with stress.

All information posted on the site is screened or provided by the brigade's rear detachment commander, Lt. Col. Jim DesJardin, therefore eliminating the spread of gossip and false information.

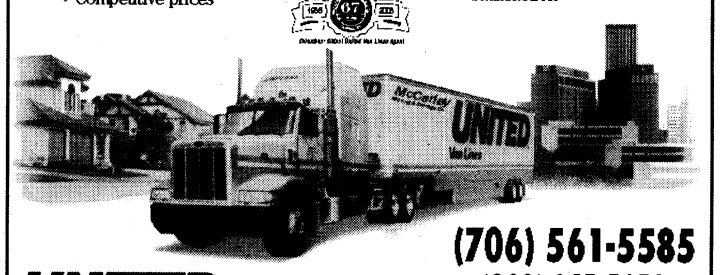
In many cases, technology has improved the way families of Soldiers stay informed despite the geographic location of the unit and Soldier.

Jill Bobroski, wife of Maj. Timothy P. Bobroski, served as the head of the 362nd Quartermaster Battalion's family support group in Kinston, N.C., during the unit's 11-month deployment.

Months of trial and error, along with the help of the Yahoo Site Builder program, equipped Bobroski to serve as the Web master for the group's Web site during their mobilization.

Each month, Bobroski attached copies of the unit's newsletters that provided information on the Soldiers' activities and mission.

The site served as a two-way highway for the sharing of information between families and Soldiers.



Families could see the photos sent from Soldiers overseas, and Soldiers could log on and see photos taken of their loved ones participating at various fund raisers.

"After much refinement, in the end it was something I was very proud of," said Bobroski, who developed a site that contained information and links to several family support services, such as TRICARE and MyPay.

Having a link to military-friendly and supportive Web portals can provide a tremendous amount of information, Goodrich said.

Eagle project helps post's veterinary services

Scout hones leadership skills in process

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Jeremy Lott's Eagle Scout project is going to the dogs, and it's going very smoothly. Now that the 41 posts are set in concrete, he's ready for the last step — wrapping the chain-link fencing.

Jeremy's project adds five large dog runs in the grassy area behind the Fort Benning Veterinary Services' stray facility, a project suggested by the former post veterinarian, Capt. Stephanie Seward.

"She said it would be nice for the dogs to have a place to run," Jeremy said. "And I said, 'why not.'"

To earn the Eagle Scout rank, the highest in Scouting, a Boy Scout must fulfill requirements in the areas of leadership, service, and outdoor skills. In the Eagle Scout project, Jeremy said, leadership is the main focus.

Although he was responsible for developing the project and finding out what materials were required, he said the hardest part was finding the time to actually do the work.

"I have to call guys or send out e-mails to see who can come and help," he said.

"It's hard finding days to do it with everyone's schedule, but the project's been pretty straightforward."

The Brookstone High School senior began planning in February and estimates he has more than 150 hours invested in the project, working around school and extracurricular activities. Jeremy plays safety and running back on the football team.

One of the criteria: the project must be completed before he turns 18. Procrastination is not an option, but Jeremy said the dog runs will be finished long before his birthday rolls around.

"We're down to the last three or four hours," he said, "depending on how many guys show up."

Jeremy said he's relied on his adult mentor, Greg Lawrence, for guidance. Together, they compiled a list of materials, which former Commanding General Maj. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, helped them acquire.

"(Lawrence) knows what he's doing, and he has all the tools for wrapping chain," Jeremy said.

Laboring with Jeremy on Labor Day weekend were Fort Benning's director of Operations and Training, Col. John Carmichael, and his son, Chris.

Jeremy Lott, foreground, gets help with his Eagle Scout project Sept. 3. Lott, a member of Troop 24 in Columbus, planned and led construction of five dog runs behind the Fort Benning Veterinary Services' stray facility.

They helped Jeremy hang gates and attach the pieces needed to install the top rails. Both Carmichaels said they've helped in more Eagle projects than they can count.

"This one is probably the longest one I've done," Chris said. "And difficulty? It's not too hard once you get started."

The elder Carmichael, who didn't have a chance to participate in Scouting when he was younger, said Scouting and Eagle projects are a good experience for the boys.

"They learn organization, and they get skills as they do the projects" he said.

"They do a lot of things that are very good for their development, and they help the community."

Jeremy's mother, Nonie Eakle, said watching her son work on his Eagle project was an opportunity for her to learn — and stay out of the way.

"At this stage, I just have to stand back and watch," she said. "That's what's great about Boy Scouts — it's not a lot of mom involvement. This is about him."

"I'm proud of him and what he has accomplished," Eakle said. "I'm grateful of the men in this troop. Jeremy's dad died a few years ago and it's been hard. I know, for a fact, his daddy would be awfully proud of him."

Hope is vital word in life

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ron Smith
Garrison chaplain

REFLECTIONS

Life is difficult. For some, life is tougher at the most difficult of times. How we cope, how we adjust, how we hope, how we exist and who we hang with help determine how well we make it.

On a monthly basis, chaplains and chaplain assistants teach a two-day class called Applied Suicide Intervention Skills training. The two-day course is well attended by drill sergeants, cadre and leaders.

ASIST emphasizes first aid for anyone having thoughts of suicide. The training equips attendees with first-aid skills to assist the person at risk of suicide, to live and be directed to resources that can help them continue to stay alive.

Suicide is a taboo word and illegal in many societies. Suicide is a major community health problem. Preventing it requires the efforts of various groups of mental health, social support and Soldier leadership.

Experts estimate that up to 80 percent of our population in the U.S. will have thoughts of suicide one or more times in their life. Those are huge numbers to be such a hidden and often deadly fact.

More people die from suicide each year than from automobile accidents. The rate of suicide in the Army has fluctuated the last 20 years, with rates for active duty Soldiers falling below those of a comparative civilian population.

ASIST is based on the first-aid model of CPR. That is, giving help at the time and place it is needed. We do not train to be experts in counseling or as a psychologist, but as persons giving direction and hope to persons having thoughts of suicide.

The fundamental element of the program is helping someone having thoughts of suicide and at risk of taking their life, and then giving them both the resources and intent to live.

Smith

Hope is a vital element of the ASIST program.

Hope is a vital word to our lives as well. A large section of our fellow citizens are suffering and left void of much hope in their lives on the Gulf Coast last week. "Hope is all we have," is being heard by those who have survived and are dealing with their own losses and pain.

Hope suggests looking forward exclusively to some positive or favorable outcome; it may well be founded in both probability and impossibility. We never know the future exactly, and there are some uncertainties about life that will always surprise us.

Hope is not blind, but built on our belief system that we will and can make it in this life. How we hope and in who we hope can give us a life full of hope.

I turn to God. It is not easy to believe, and I don't pretend that it is. For me, God has a way to give me hope when I'm hopeless, mercy when I don't want it, and love when it matters most.

In acknowledging God's presence and his power, we do not have to control the outcome of our lives. God is in control.

You don't have to be at risk. Suicide is not the answer that some choose; it does not answer the questions, but postpones them, without resolve.

If you are having thoughts of suicide, seek out help from a relative, friend, co-worker or a professional.

You can find out more about the ASIST program from your chaplain, chaplain assistant or myself.

Tough times don't last; tough people do

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

I found myself unable to walk away from the TV as she spoke. There was something about the absolute authenticity of her story. She didn't even have to say anything. You could see it in her eyes. You could sense it by the way she stared through the reporter in Biloxi. She was "there," but she wasn't there — she was still somewhere else.

She was still in the tree, with the relentless waves, with the battering wind, with rising water and diminishing hopes — she was hanging on, literally, for dear life. In fact, she said she had counted her life but gone.

This woman, who I would guess was maybe 34 or 35 years old, somehow looked like, in one night, she'd gained the wisdom of an 80-year-old. There was a peace, a calm, a resoluteness that comes only after a supernaturally defining moment — and she had had one.

The reporter was asking her, "So, you climbed out of your house just as it was being swept off its foundation and carried away underneath you, and in the middle of the most horrific hurricane our country has seen, you hung onto the upper limbs of a tree branch for five hours not knowing whether the next minute would bring life or death — what did you think about all that time?"

Hawkins

She didn't hesitate. She didn't ponder. She didn't have to search for her answer. It was there plain as the hell on earth she'd just survived. Again, she kind of looked through him with a slight smile and a slight quiver on her lips as she answered.

"What did I think about? I thought about my spiritual life, and how, if I survived, I wanted to get closer to God — that's what I thought about."

And you could tell by the way she said it, there was a peace, a calm, a resoluteness that comes only after a supernaturally defining moment — and she had had one.

Crisis, be it combat or hurricane, has a way of clearing the head, doesn't it? Things that before seemed so important can in an instant be seen for what they are: insignificant. And things that seemed so unimportant are suddenly illuminated as ultimately significant.

Let's take our lessons wisely from those in our midst who've endured supernaturally defining crisis, whether that's a harrowing patrol in Iraq or a harrowing night in New Orleans, and draw closer to God now while the opportunity is ours.

As a chaplain, it's my privilege to help bring people to God and God to people. If I can serve you in that way, please let us know here at the Chaplain Family Life Center so we can help you in your spiritual journey. And as I know you are, let's pray for those whose lives have been indelibly impacted by the ravages of this storm. And, in addition to the prayers of our heart, let's add the help of our hands.

The chapel I pastor, CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel, is already beginning to serve those dislocated by the storm to Fort Benning. If you'd like to join hearts with us in helping serve these refugees from the storm in our midst, feel free to call me at 545-9014, and we'll let you know how you can extend God's mercy and grace to our friends in need.

May Psalm 46:1, "God is our refuge and our strength, an ever present help in times of danger," be a promise close to your heart and all those looking to rebuild their futures.

BAYONET R&R

Two science-fiction TV shows aired in 1949. Captain Video and his Video Rangers ran until 1955 and had a weekly prop budget of $25. Lights Out's live episodes aired on NBC until 1952. Some of the guest stars were Boris Karloff, Burgess Meredith and Leslie Nielsen.

Brothers brave a hidden evil in WB's spooky Supernatural

Two estranged brothers encounter occult challenges while searching for their missing father in Supernatural, a new WB thriller premiering Tuesday.

Part quest fantasy, part family drama and part scare-the-kernels-out-of-your-popcorn fright flick, Supernatural opens 20 years ago on a horrifying night for the Winchester clan, when a shadowy figure appeared at the cribside of infant Sam, then whisked mother Mary away to a fiery death.

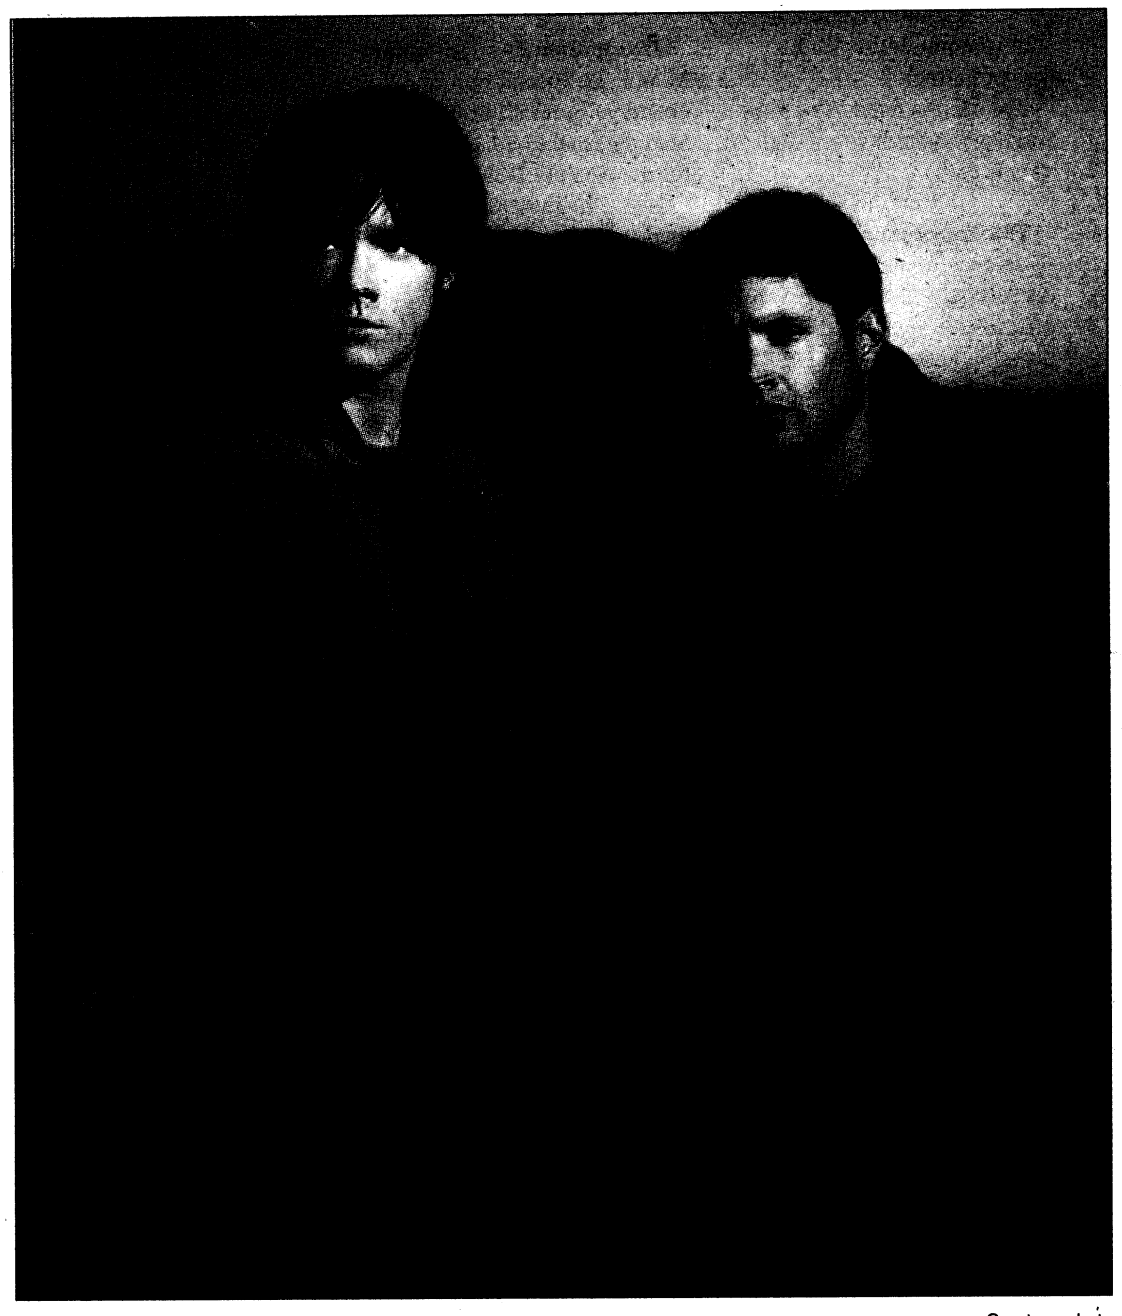
Sam (Jared Padalecki, Gilmore Girls), now a college student, has no memory of that awful night, unlike his older brother, Dean (Jensen Ackles, Smallville), who willingly joined his father's obsessive quest to find the key to Mary's disappearance. That's why Sam has distinctly mixed emotions when Dean, whom he hasn't seen for four years, suddenly turns up with news that their father has disappeared as well.

"Sam is struggling with his destiny, trying to figure out whether he has a choice in this," Padalecki said of his character. "He has fought it as long as he can, from the day he could get out of the house and away from his father and brother and the life he was born into. He has been trying to convince himself that he could just live a normal life. He finds out slowly but surely that he can't choose his own destiny."

"I think there definitely was a conflict of interest as they were growing up together with their dad inflicting his life mission upon our characters," Ackles said. "Dean was very receptive to it, being the age that he was when their mother was taken away. He was able to process it and understand, to the extent that he could, what that meant.

"Sam was just a baby and had no emotional ties to the situation, whereas Dean wanted to be a part of his dad's mission. Sam was forced into it, though, and the first chance he got, he split. A few years later, you have Dean coming to Sam and asking for his help, knowing that he's the only one Dean can really trust to watch his back, now that his father is gone."

Reluctantly, Sam joins Dean on what will turn into an extended quest for their missing father. Each episode will find the pair encountering and grappling with some occult entity or phenomenon.



"(This is) kind of an obsession of mine, and a show that I've really wanted to do for the extent of my career," said Supernatural creator and executive producer Eric Kripke. "It's a show about American folklore and urban legends, sort of the idea that every town has a really great, terrifying ghost story.

"We landed on this idea as a road show, the purity of literally just driving in and out of a different horror movie every week, a different small town where something dark and evil is lurking in the shadows. That just seemed like a very pure and stripped down and mythic way to tell this story."

Ackles said the mythic resonance of the series is hard to miss.

"This is definitely Joseph Campbell territory," he said. "Sam, especially, is a reluctant hero and, although I hope we really do scare viewers every week, it's the dynamic between these two brothers that will keep people coming back, I think."

It helps that, even in the pilot, the two actors have a relaxed chemistry together that suggests a long-shared history. Ackles said he and Padalecki spent long hours together before production even began, physically training for their roles in anticipation of the long work days to follow.

Jared Padalecki, left, and Jensen Ackles star in Supernatural, premiering Tuesday on The WB Network.

"We did a 17-hour day yesterday, and we're back into it today," Ackles said. "And these days aren't spent in our trailers snoozing or watching DVDs. Jared and I are in almost every scene. We get a half-hour for lunch, so we try to scarf our food down as quickly as possible and grab a 15-minute nap."

He paused as a production assistant interrupts the interview to ask him to come try out a new prop, then continues.

"See? That's what it's like."

The two actors carried their sibling relationship off the show's Vancouver set recently when Ackles inadvertently led Padalecki into a real-life bar brawl that left the latter with a broken hand.

"When we walked into the place, there had just been a fight inside the bar, but we didn't know that yet," Padalecki said.

"When we started hearing them talking about the fight, we decided it was best to leave, but when we went back to the front, the guys there thought we were some of the guys they had been fighting with so they basically continued the fight again."

The Man — A case of mistaken identity forces federal agent Derrick Vann and dental supply salesman Andy Fidler (Samuel L. Jackson, Eugene Levy) to team up as they speed through the streets of Detroit to pull off a sting operation and solve the murder of Vann's former partner.

The Man is rated PG-13 for language, rude dialogue and violence.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose — In an extremely rare decision, the Catholic church officially recognized the demonic possession of a 19-year-old college freshman.

Told in flashbacks, the movie chronicles the haunting trial of the priest accused of negligence, resulting in the death of the young girl believed to be possessed and the lawyer who takes on the task of defending him.

Starring Laura Linney and Tom Wilkinson.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose is rated PG-13 for thematic material including intense and frightening sequences and disturbing images.

Underclassman — A baby-faced 24-year-old detective (Nick Cannon), who never gets the respect he deserves because of his boyish looks, goes undercover in an elite private school where he stumbles upon an international auto-theft ring.

Underclassman is rated PG-13 for violence, sexual references, drug material and teen drinking.

The Constant Gardener — When a British diplomat's wife — a socially conscious lawyer — turns up dead in Kenya, he sets out to find the truth surrounding her murder.

In the process, he finds out that his wife had been compiling data against a multinational drug company that uses helpless Africans as guinea pigs to test a tuberculosis remedy with unfortunate fatal side effects.

Those who may have had the most reason to silence her are closer to home than he ever imagined.

Starring Ralph Fiennes and Rachel Weisz.

The Constant Gardener is rated R for language, some violent images and sexual content and nudity.

Transporter 2 — Retired in Miami, ex-Special Forces operative Frank Martin (Jason Statham) makes a living driving for the wealthy Billings family.

He's a huge favorite with their two small boys, but when the kids are kidnapped and injected with a potentially fatal virus, Martin defies the FBI and works relentlessly to get the boys to safety and discover the kidnapper's master plan.

Transporter 2 is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of violent action, sexual content, partial nudity and brief language.

A Sound of Thunder — Set in a near future where time travel is possible, this is the story of a travel agency, Time Safari Inc., that arranges hunting trips for wealthy customers to go back in time to hunt dinosaurs.

Each trip is carefully planned, with a scout identifying dinosaurs about to die, so the course of time is not altered by the kill.

However, a nervous hunter steps off the trail, and steps on a butterfly. The historical repercussions of the death of a single butterfly, compounded by millions of years of effects, leaves the hunters to return to a future that is not quite the one they came from.

Starring Edward Burns and Ben Kingsley.

A Sound of Thunder is rated PG-13 for sci-fi violence, partial nudity and language.

The Cave — A rescue team is sent down into the world's largest cave system to try to find the spelunkers who first explored the depths. But when the group's escape route is cut off, they are hunted by the monstrous creatures that live down below.

Starring Morris Chestnut and Eddie Cibrian.

The Cave is rated PG-13 for intense creature violence.

The Brothers Grimm — Brothers Jake and Will Grimm (Matt Damon and Heath Ledger), renowned collectors of folklore, have made a career of traveling from village to village pretending to rid them of "enchanted" creatures. Their bluff is called, however, when they are forced by Napoleon's French government to investigate a haunted forest where girls have been mysteriously disappearing.

The Brothers Grimm is rated PG-13 for violence, frightening sequences and brief suggestive material.

Undiscovered — An aspiring New York model falls in love with a struggling musician when they suddenly cross paths on a subway train.

Having achieved success as a model, she decides to move to L.A. to launch an acting career. While out on the town, the aspiring model again crosses paths with the struggling musician.

Starring Pell James, Steven Strait and Ashlee Simpson.

Undiscovered is rated PG-13 for sexual material including dialogue, partial nudity, language and drug content.

Valiant — A comedy-adventure tale of a brave-but-undersized pigeon named Valiant (voiced by Ewan McGregor), who dreams of joining the elite Royal Homing Pigeon Service and serving crown and country during World War II.

Despite his small stature, Valiant's ambitions are enormous as he keeps a stiff upper beak and endures rigorous training in preparation for a dangerous mission to deliver vital messages to troops behind enemy lines.

Valiant is rated G.

The 40-Year-Old Virgin — Forty-year-old Andy Stitzer (Steve Carrell) has done quite a few things in his life. He's got a cushy job stamping invoices at an electronics superstore, a nice apartment with a collection of action figures and comic books, good friends, a nice attitude.

But there's just one little thing he hasn't quite gotten around to doing yet — Andy's never, ever, ever had sex.

The 40-Year-Old Virgin is rated R for pervasive sexual content, language and drug use.

Cost is $90 and will teach the fundamentals of the golf swing. Sign up in the pro shop. For more information, call 687-1940.

Bench Notes

• Rookie win

Nextel Cup series rookie Kyle Busch drove his No. 5 Chevrolet to victory lane in a historic win at California Speedway Sept. 4.

Busch is the youngest winner, at the age of 20, to win a race in NASCAR history. It was also his first.

• College football upsets

Nonranked Georgia Tech routed Auburn (16) Sept. 3, 23-14. Clemson upset No. 17 ranked Texas A&M, 25-24. Oklahoma was handed its biggest upset in 45 years by TCU, with a score of 17-10.

• Rice is cooked

Jerry Rice announced his retirement from the NFL Sept. 5. Rice's 20-year career has made him the most productive receiver in NFL history. He ends with 22,895 yards receiving and 197 touchdowns.

• Superdome update

There's no doubt Hurricane Katrina did major damage to the New Orleans Superdome. The Saints are exploring options for the season.

Speculation is that the Superdome won't be ready for several seasons.

• More Superdome

The Saints are asking to play at LSU's Tiger Stadium. Options include the Alamodome in San Antonio, where they are living and practicing, or all 16 games on the road. Their home opener is at Giants Stadium, instead of the Superdome.

• U.S. Open

If you're looking for some tennis play this weekend, CBS will broadcast the women's final match at 8 p.m. Saturday and the men's final match at 4 p.m. Sunday.

No. 12 Delandis Harris, Chattahoochee County Panther's junior varsity wide receiver, runs the pigskin to the end zone. Although brought back by a penalty, it didn't slow the Panthers in shutting out the Brookstone Cougars at Doughboy Stadium Sept. 1.

Chattahoochee County's Cedric Wilson latched onto a bobbled kickoff and returned it 82 yards down the sideline to ignite the Panthers to a 36-0 shutout over Brookstone in junior varsity football at Fort Benning's Doughboy Stadium Sept 1.

Panther quarterback Caleb Horvath's 80-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Octavius Staten and another 57-yard touchdown throw to wingback Dennis Herbin helped chalk up more than 150 yards in passing for Horvath.

"Herbin had a great day and was a leader on offense with 65 yards rushing and 75 yards receiving that included two touchdowns," said Panther head coach, Josh Kemp.

"We had good execution on offense. We did a lot better blocking and the basics," Kemp said.

Frank Saunders, assistant coach for the Panthers said the team "turned a corner from last week and now have a good win under our belt."

"Our defense was also really strong," Kemp said. "Panther defensive end Tremaine Stewart, (5'10", 170lb), helped stop the Cougar offense with 10 tackles, two sacks and forcing a fumble," said Kemp.

Lester "Dee Dee" Jones helped dominate the Panther's defense with 10 tackles.

The Panthers lost last week to Pacelli, 34-14, at Doughboy as they fell weak in the fourth quarter to allow Pacelli to storm back with 28 unanswered points slipping the victory from under the Panthers.

"We've come a long way. We still are not doing everything we need to do, but our players are giving a great effort and we're making tremendous strides," Kemp said.

The Panthers played Tri County Thursday night at Doughboy.

Benning students lead pack with Kids InMotion

Fort Benning kids are on the move as part of a new initiative launched Aug. 27. Kids InMotion, sponsored by the Columbus Sports Council and several corporate sponsors, is an effort to promote healthy lifestyles and combat concerns about childhood inactivity.

By Sept. 7, kids enrolled in Kids InMotion had logged more than 8,400 hours of physical activity. The top five schools are Fort Benning elementary schools.

A.C. McGinnis, the physical education teacher at White Elementary, said his kids have him "so fired up" about the program. They're turning in their log of activities and hours on everything from notebook paper to napkins.

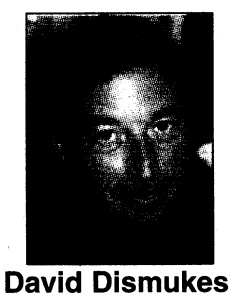
The program is simple. Between Aug. 27 and Nov. 19, children who want to participate must have a parent or guardian register them, either by forms available at the schools or on the KIM Web site. The site, www.columbuskidsinmotion.org, contains a list of activities that count.

McGinnis said there's no Nintendo credit. The kids have to do something "in motion" and he said his kids are motivated to do it.

"These children in Fort Benning schools are the most fit children in America," he said. "Look no further than their role models — their dads and moms in uniform. They're going to do well."

And doing well, they certainly are. Of the Fort Benning schools, three in the top five have children who've collectively logged in almost 2,000 hours in two weeks. And the top 10 classes — all from Fort Benning.

"Fort Benning has been awesome with implementing this program," said coordinator Merri Christain-Sherman. "They really kicked it off and supported the Super Saturday. Fort Benning Schools Assistant Superintendent, Bill Diesselhorst, got involved in the KIM planning over the summer and was very enthusiastic from the beginning, she said.



McGinnis has personal interest in programs like KIM. The retired Special Forces Soldier wrote a paper in a college physiology class about childhood obesity where he talked about the importance of

Athletes can do good

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

So often in the past we've heard about pro athletes and the not-so-good things they've done. But recently, in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, the athletes are banding together and making a difference.

I was interested in all I was seeing about the athletes, so I went on the Internet to find out more. These are the most interesting I found:

• Baltimore Ravens' Deion Sanders challenged each player in the NFL, NBA and MLB to give at least $1,000 through payroll deduction to help reach a goal of $1.5 to $3 million.

• After his win in the Busch Series race at California Speedway Sept. 3, Carl Edwards donated his winnings to hurricane victims. Kyle Busch was inspired and followed suit, donating his winnings of $241,065 after his win Sept. 4 in the Nextel Cup series.

• Lance Armstrong, seven-time winner of the Tour de France and cancer survivor, donated $500,000 to help cancer patients displaced by the hurricane.

• Indianapolis Colts' quarterback Peyton Manning and his brother, New York Giants' quarterback Eli, grew up in New Orleans. They helped out by going to Baton Rouge, La., and helped to distribute 31,000 pounds of nonperishables.

• Oakland Raiders' quarterback Kerry Collins pledged a $1,000 donation to the American Red Cross for every touchdown he throws and for every game the Raiders win this season.

• The Green Bay Packers held an autograph session to raise money and a blood drive for the vast shortage.

• At college football games this weekend, fans contributed monetarily toward hurricane relief.

• The 2004 World Series Champions Boston Red Sox donated a portion of ticket sales Sept. 5 to the American Red Cross. Also, the players wanted to help, so for $100 fans could get their picture taken with relief pitcher Keith Foulke.

• Speaking of the Sox, pitcher Curt Schilling and his wife Shonda have taken a family of nine displaced by the hurricane into their home for one year.

• The St. Louis Rams raised more than $70,000 for relief.

• Deutsche Bank Americas CEO Seth Waugh said the company will donate at least $1 million.

• Washington Wizards' player Gilbert Arenas spent $18,000 buying clothing, diapers, soap and shampoo and had it delivered to a D.C. armory where more than 400 refugees were taken in.

• The Oakland A's and former A's player Jason Giambi started a collection for third base coach Ron Washington, who lost both his and his mother's house to the hurricane. Giambi donated $20,000 of his own money.

• Members of the Florida Marlins are each donating $1,000.

• Race tracks have designated Oct. 8 as "Racing to the Rescue Day." Also, jockeys, trainers, breeders and owners will be encouraged to contribute a percentage of their purse winnings on Breeders' Cup Day Oct. 29 to help the horse breeding community that has been affected by the hurricane.

• The Milwaukee Bucks pledged $500,000, with $100,000 of it going to the American Red Cross and also the United Way and various disbursements with the rest.

It's good to see these athletes make a difference. It's nice to see them on TV handing out water and diapers, instead of sitting on a panel in front of Congress testifying about steroids. Hopefully they can see the good their money can do for those less fortunate, instead of holding out for a bigger salary. Maybe this will show athletes that they are just that, athletes, and the absurd amount of money they make can do good for their fellow Americans.

FORT BENNING FACTS

Work out at Santiago Gym? Learn more about its namesake

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

There were 26 Medal of Honor recipients from the 1st Cavalry Division during the Vietnam War, more than any other division.

Fort Benning's Santiago Fitness Center at Sand Hill is named for one of them.

Spc. 4th Class Hector Santiago-Colon was born in Salinas, Puerto Rico, in 1942.

He joined the Army and served as a gunner in the mortar platoon of Company B, 5th Battalion, 7th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile) in the Quang Tri Province in the Republic of Vietnam.

On June 28, 1968, Santiago-Colon was serving as a perimeter sentry when he heard distinct movement in the heavily wooded area to his front and flanks.

Santiago-Colon alerted his fellow sentries to move into their foxholes, when enemy automatic weapons and small arms fire broke out.

The darkness made it difficult to precisely identify the hostile positions. Only muzzle flashes from the enemy weapons indicated their locations.

Using hand grenades, antipersonnel mines and small arms fire, Santiago-Colon and his fellow Soldiers attempted to repel the enemy attackers.

Due to the heavy volume of enemy fire and exploding grenades around them, a North Vietnamese soldier was able to crawl undetected to their position.

An enemy soldier lobbed a hand grenade into Santiago-Colon's foxhole.

Realizing there was no time to throw the grenade out of harms way, he tucked it into his stomach and turned away from his fellow comrades, absorbing the full impact of the blast.

His heroic self-sacrifice saved the lives of his fellow Soldiers and gave them the inspiration to continue fighting until the enemy was forced to retreat from the perimeter.

Operated by the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation and managed by Jesse L. Moore, Santiago Fitness Center is located in Building 3350 at Sand Hill and is open seven days a week.

For more information about the Santiago Fitness Center, call 544-9486.

an active lifestyle and participating in aerobic activity. He had no reservations about getting his students registered and having them track their efforts.

"I'm so proud of the other P.E. teachers for getting invested," McGinnis said.

"They deserve to be mentioned. It's nice to see Fort Benning at the top. Our goal was to show the community just what kind of children we have here."

McGinnis said even the early success of Fort Benning schools bodes well.

"(Department of Defense) schools have P.E. teachers," he said. "I'm really pleased that Fort Benning schools have adopted this."

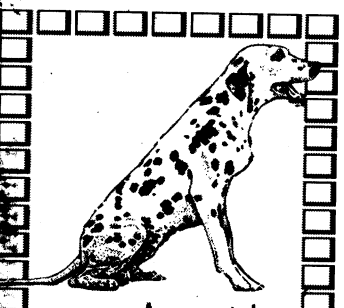
Children can continue to register if they have not done so already. The goal is for each child to exercise for 30 minutes a day, or 24 hours over the course of the program. They'll receive rewards after each six hours of exercise ranging from free McDonald's apple dippers to a pedometer from the Hughston Orthopedic Hospital. The program's next event is 9 to 11 a.m. Oct. 15 at the Hughston Orthopedic Hospital

The Kids InMotion Finish Line Celebration will take place Nov. 20 on the ice with the Columbus Cottonmouths at the Columbus Civic Center.

During the first week, Cottonmouths head coach and general manager, Jerome Bechard, visited Fort Benning, stopping at each school.

"He's big-time behind this," McGinnis said. "The kids love him. He told them he wasn't the greatest athlete, but he outworked everybody. It's great when athletes can come out and relate to the children."

Diesselhorst said members of the Columbus Sports Council saw a similar program on a visit to San Antonio last year and brought it to Columbus.



"It is a wonderful program," he said. "And the P.E. teachers have been wonderful about promoting it. Anytime you can get a hook in kids and get them excited about something, and something like the importance of exercise in a healthy lifestyle — it's good."

Diesselhorst said there are incentives for the three schools logging the most InMotion hours. Loyd Elementary has already developed a plan for any money they may win. They want to build an indoor climbing wall, he said.

In addition to making the kids more aware of the importance of exercise, McGinnis said there's an element of "responsible social development" as well, with children having to honestly and accurately log their activities and the hours.

"My heart was opened up this afternoon," he said.

"I looked out the window and saw a half-dozen scooter boards out there after school. The kids were doing laps and playing basketball."

Opportunity with McLean Hospital -

Geriatric Psychiatry Position Newly Available!

McLean Hospital is inviting applications for the position of Psychiatrist in Charge in our geriatric psychiatry program. This a 0.5 to 1.0 FTE position (to be negotiated based on needs of applicant and of service). Duties will include the provision of direct clinical services to patients in outpatient settings (partial hospital, outpatient clinic) with opportunities for weekend coverage as well. Based on applicant's qualifications, there may be opportunities for research and teaching involvement. Duties will also include participation in the program's educational activities, program development, and quality improvement program.

Applicants must have an M.D. and board certification in Psychiatry preferably with added qualifications in Geriatric Psychiatry, and must be eligible for licensure in the Commonwealth of MA. The ideal candidate should have knowledge and expertise on geriatric psychiatric disorders, managed care experience in the delivery of psychiatric services, and one year or more of post-training clinical and/or clinical research experience. Qualified women and minority candidates are encouraged to apply.

Salary, recruitment package, and academic rank will be commensurate with qualifications and experience.

Applicants should submit a curriculum vitae along with the names and addresses of three references to the search committee chair: James Ellison, M.D. MPH, Clinical Director, Geriatric Psychiatry Program, McLean Hospital, 115 Mill Street, Belmont, MA 02478. Review of applications will begin immediately and continue until the position is filled.

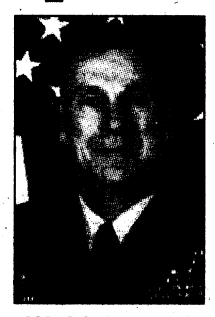
CG: Soldiers are priority



State of Infantry opens seminar, talks of change

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

During his State of the Infantry address at the start of the Warfighting Seminar Tuesday morning, Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski told attendees the "priorities remain the same at Fort Benning: to support (the Soldier) in the Global War on Terrorism."

More than 300 people attended the annual Infantry update, during which the general addressed some changes taking place in the Infantry and at Fort Benning while the post continues to support an Army at war.

One of the greatest responsibilities of the Infantry Center and School at this time, he said, was to ground Soldiers in the skills they will need when they arrive in Iraq or Afghanistan.

Wojdakowski

"The enemy is pretty smart, and he wants to win just as badly as we do," Wojdakowski said. "We have to stay one step ahead of him."

Wojdakowski, who has been the commander of Fort Benning for a little more than a month now, has immersed himself in the mission of Fort Benning since his arrival and admitted he was amazed at the workload of the post.

The Army had 90,000 new troops in fiscal 2005, he said, and one-third of those were trained at Fort Benning.

"We have a tremendous impact on the Army," he said, given that there are nearly 13,000 Soldiers

IED kills 2/69 Soldier

A Soldier with 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, died in Iraq Sept. 5 when an improvised explosive device detonated near his humvee.

Bohling

Sgt. Matthew C. Bohling, 22, from Eagle River, Alaska, died in Ar Ramadi, Iraq, during combat operations. It was his second deployment in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

Bohling joined the Army in August 2001, and while assigned to the 29th Infantry Regiment, volunteered to deploy with 101st Airborne Division during Operation Iraqi Freedom 1.

"He volunteered," his father, Charles Bohling of Eagle River, told the Anchorage Daily News in an article published Sept. 7.

"It was Matthew's dream to be in the military," said Charles Bohling, who is in the National Guard.

Capt. Jerry Coburn, Bohling's company commander, said Bohling was a proficient Soldier who earned the trust of his platoon and was counted on, in even the most difficult of circumstances.

"Sergeant Bohling always put the needs of his country, his unit, and the mission above his own," Coburn said. "He saw and believed in our purpose, and selflessly sacrificed for the Members of the 641st Mobilization Troop Command National Guard unit stationed on Fort Benning backed up their thank you to veterans with hard work and sweat Sept. 9 and 12.

Working with the local organization House of Heroes, the Soldiers of the 641st repaired Luis Aponte and his wife Jung's home on Blan Street.

Pressure washing, replacing boards and fascia, prepping and painting the exterior were some of the things the volunteers did during the two-day repair period, said Command Sgt. Maj. Tom LeGare, command sergeant major of the 641st MTC.

"We came here last year and did a home for the House of Heroes. It was very rewarding, so we all volunteered to do it again this

The New Orleans Maj. John McNally knew was nothing like what he sees now, as he hovers over the city in a Black Hawk.

The New Orleans he used to visit, the home of an old high school buddy, was "insane" in a festive, vibrant Mardi Gras sort of way.

The city, after Katrina, is nothing like that. It was desolate and dangerous when McNally arrived Aug. 31.

"It was insane — crazy. It wasn't even the United States of America. It was out of place, like some third-world country," McNally said during a Sept. 9 conference call with local reporters.

McNally is the commander of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance). Nearly 60 Soldiers from the unit are conducting round-the-clock missions in New Orleans.

The first week, they "combed the city up and down," concentrating on search and rescue, McNally said, often using night vision goggles to detect, "in the eerie, surreal darkness," a hand here and

REVIEW YOUR NOWS

Shoeless blessings, barefoot's best

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

My husband has to attend a conference in Hawaii this weekend. I get to go with him. The "busman's holiday" package includes a chance to renew our wedding vows on the beach.

I overheard my youngest daughter telling her carpool buddy about it on the way home from school.

"Mom and Dad are going to Hawaii," she said. "They're going to review their vows."

After I quit snickering, I found myself pondering the depth of my daughter's twisted tongue. Because, come to think of it, lately I've found myself reviewing my nows.

Yesterday I was cleaning out my closet, lining shoes down the hallway so I could cull my collection and donate my "perfectly good but so last seasons" to a homeless shelter. Pairing and paring.

You know, out of those four pairs of white sandals, not one would do for a wedding ceremony on the beach. Four pairs, eight shoes, two feet and not a "bingo" in the bunch.

I thought of my original wedding shoes, the pair I wore 20 years ago when Tom and I said "I do" the first time. Thank goodness my dress was long, because the shoes were worn — very worn — as in worn to three proms and two weddings.

But I couldn't afford a new pair, and shoes just weren't high on my list of priorities. Imagine that.

So there I sat, with a line of shoes stretching heel to toe from one end of the hallway to the other, as if a giant well-shod centipede had just stepped out of them.

If shoes are, in any way, the measure of how far we've come since we first combined our worldly goods in one pint-size closet — with his three pairs of shoes (jump boots, Air Jordans and loafers with tassels) and mine (aforementioned open-toed slingbacks, black "jellies" and a pair of Converse I wish I still owned) — I'd say our closets runneth over.

It took a big, bad broad like Katrina to remind us what's really important. It's not shoes. Reviewing my nows in my 6-by-6, walk-in temple of denim and cotton, where trees sprout shoes, made me realize how blessed I am with creature comforts and luxuries that don't really matter at all.

The "things" that do matter — like the one who tried to convince me she could and should be allowed to wear my cast-off stilettos to class tomorrow — well, they're the only things that really do matter.

And if the rest were swept out to sea tomorrow, we'd mourn, mind you, but we'd be OK ultimately.

I'm as sure of that as I was 20 years ago, when we embarked upon this sea of matrimony with a life raft, a paddle and a bag full of shoes.

About the whatever-will-I wear-to-my-beach-wedding situation — I think I'll go barefoot. Cause when I start counting my blessings, I'd just have to kick off my shoes anyway.

Remember ... until they all come home

Erin A. Nash

Leon Bonura of Beaumont, Texas. John Canney of Cambridge, Mass. John Nash of Tipton, Ind. Know these names? Probably not.

They're actually Air Force Staff Sgt. Leon Bonura, unaccounted for in the Cold War; Marine Maj. John Canney, killed in action in the Korean War; and Army Capt. John Nash, KIA, body not recovered, in Laos, Vietnam.

Today is the day to remember these men and many others.

The first commemoration of National POW/MIA Recognition Day was in 1979. That year, resolutions were passed and the national ceremony was in the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C.

National POW/MIA Recognition Day legislation was introduced annually until 1995 when Congress deemed that legislation designating special commemorative days would no longer be considered by Congress.

The president now signs a proclamation each year.

Upon receiving this assignment, I started to think about it. How much did I really know about POW/MIA Recognition Day, or POWs and MIAs at all for that matter?

I knew, of course, that Sen. John McCain of Arizona was a captive in Vietnam for five and a half years. While reading about McCain's experiences online, I came across a speech McCain made in 1998 at the Republican National Convention.

McCain told a story of a man named Mike Christian, who came from a small town near Selma, Ala.

He enlisted in the Navy at the age of 17, earned a commission by going to Officer Training School and became a naval flight officer before being shot down and captured in Vietnam in 1967 and becoming one of McCain's cellmates.

The Vietnamese allowed some prisoners to receive packages from home. Over a period of a few months, Christian saved up scraps of handkerchiefs, scarves and clothing, got himself a bamboo needle and sewed an American flag to the inside of his shirt.

Every afternoon before their soup, the prisoners would hang Christian's shirt on the wall and say the Pledge of Allegiance.

One day the Vietnamese were searching cells, and discovered the shirt with the flag. That night, they returned and beat Christian severely, for several hours, in front of the other prisoners.

Not much later, McCain looked up and saw Christian, his eyes almost swollen shut from the beating, with red cloth, another shirt and a bamboo needle. He was making another flag.

I was honored to have read about men like Christian in McCain's speech, and learn about other POWs and their plights. Most of their stories have never been told.

The Sergeants' Major Association is doing its part this year. They are sponsoring the Never Forget golf tournament at 1 p.m. today at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Saturday begins with the POW/MIA Freedom Ride, which begins at 11 a.m. at Golden Park, next to the Civic Center. After the ride, the public is invited to the Infantry Museum at 2 p.m. for the POW/MIA Recognition Ceremony, followed by the dedication of the POW/MIA memorial on Sacrifice Field.

Parenting the 'middle' child

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

I heard it more than once. "You don't want three children. It will always be two against one."

Well, no, I didn't really want three. I wanted four. And I really thought, I'd have a bigger concern than two against one — making sure the middle child didn't get lost in the middle.

The next dig was that the third would be the "blinger" — the handful, the troublemaker. I bought into that with my youngest up until last year, when I became the parent of a middle-schooler.

I found that in most minutes of most hours and most hours of most days, the middle schooler, no matter what the birth order, and in my case — the oldest — is actually the blinger. And on some days, the best minutes of the best hours are those a middle-schooler spends asleep.

Are you with me? Do you have one of these middle schoolers caught up in the turmoil of the transition from the carefree days of elementary school? If you don't, I would suggest you borrow one. But beware, an extended "test-drive" may be necessary for you to experience the full effect.

It really didn't surprise me when I found the headline for an August ABC News series depicting middle school as the "Bermuda Triangle" of education. The stats and experts they presented showed "more peril" in middle schools.

Middle school is a time marked by contradiction and conflict. The kids want to take risks, but their feelings get hurt easily when someone points out that a particular risk isn't the smartest thing to do.

You ask your middle schooler to take out the trash — a project only involving 25 steps to the curb and back — and you get the rolling eyes and a whine. Six seconds later, you're fielding a request for more privileges.

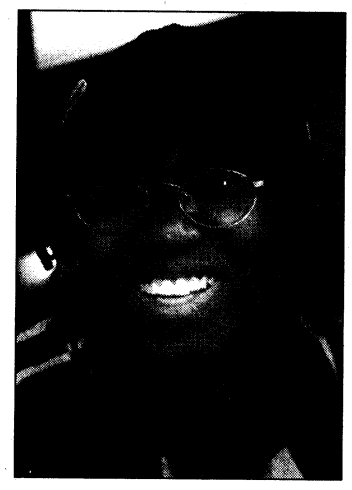
One article I read said parents had a hard time dealing with the long periods of idleness that followed their child's rounds of high energy. I think I can relate to all of that.

So what do we — as parents, or teachers, or even neighbors — do to help these kids who seem to be growing like weeds before our eyes, but reverting to some very elementary schoolish behavior?

An article published by the American Psychiatric Association puts the answer quite simply.

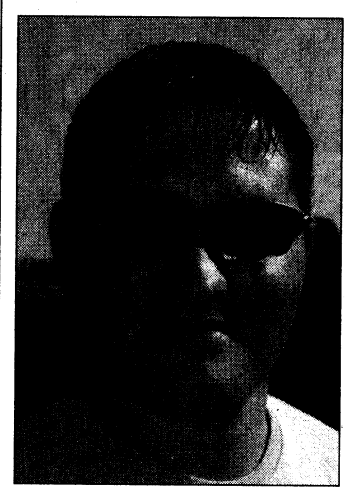
Help them develop organizational skills. Encourage them to try new things. Teach them that learning takes effort, time and practice. Tell them it's OK to fail, but find a way to turn failure into a learning experience.

And, most importantly, maintain an open line of communication.

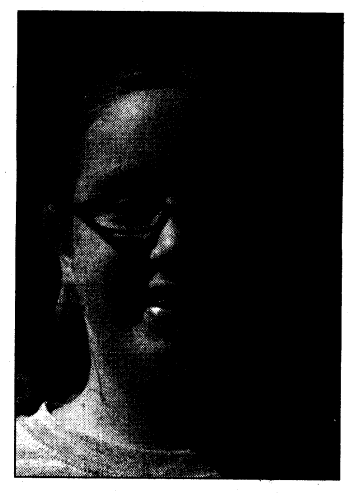


But remember, teasing them about the girl's phone number in their school planner might not go over the way you hoped. And when you fall flat on your face with that topic, pick yourself up, dust yourself off, and try something not too personal to discuss. You might recover some of those Fonzie "cool points."

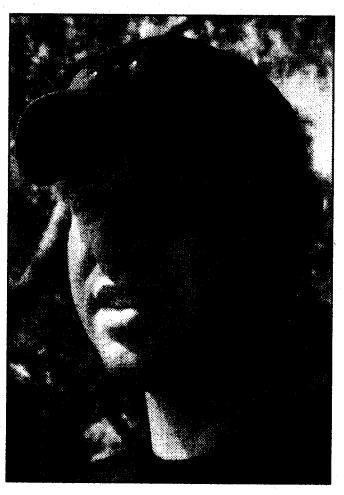
VARIOUS VOICES



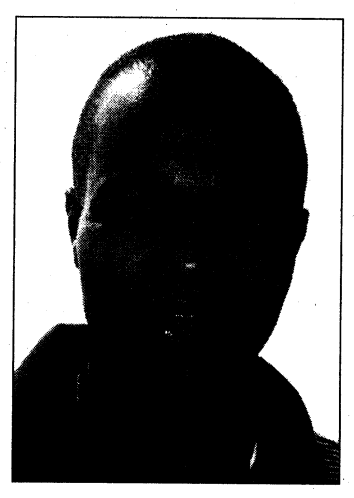
What are you doing to help the evacuees of Hurricane Katrina?



1st Sgt. Christopher Lynch, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment — "Everyone in the company has the opportunity to contribute any of the unopened food they don't eat from their MREs. We're going to put it all together and send it to the New Orleans area."



Lavon Middleton, Burger King — "I'm helping some people get clothes and food to the Red Cross."



Sgt. Brad Moore, 75th Ranger Regiment — "My wife and I donated about five big bags of clothes to a local Savannah church, and they flew it over (to New Orleans)."

Mollie Macklin, 12, family member — "It's all in the news and it's really sad. All their houses have been torn down. We're having a lemonade stand, and all of the money will go to funds so they can get blankets and things."

1st Lt. Brian Kane, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I just gave a dollar to a lemonade stand, but I haven't had time to do much else, yet."

George Moore, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment — "I have contributed to several organizations and I pray for them. I also contribute through the schools."

Wendy Mock,. Training Support Center — "My husband and I made direct donations to a couple of families we know, and to the families of friends we know, who are in need of assistance. We also made a donation to the Humane Society in Columbus for the pets."

Maximum cab fares outlined in contract

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Ron Parker has been a cab driver for 10 years. He knows the value of customer service.

Just last week, he dropped a customer at a Columbus hotel, and while she waited there for her husband, a Sand Hill Soldier, Parker drove to the local bakery, ordered a birthday cake, and took it back to the hotel.

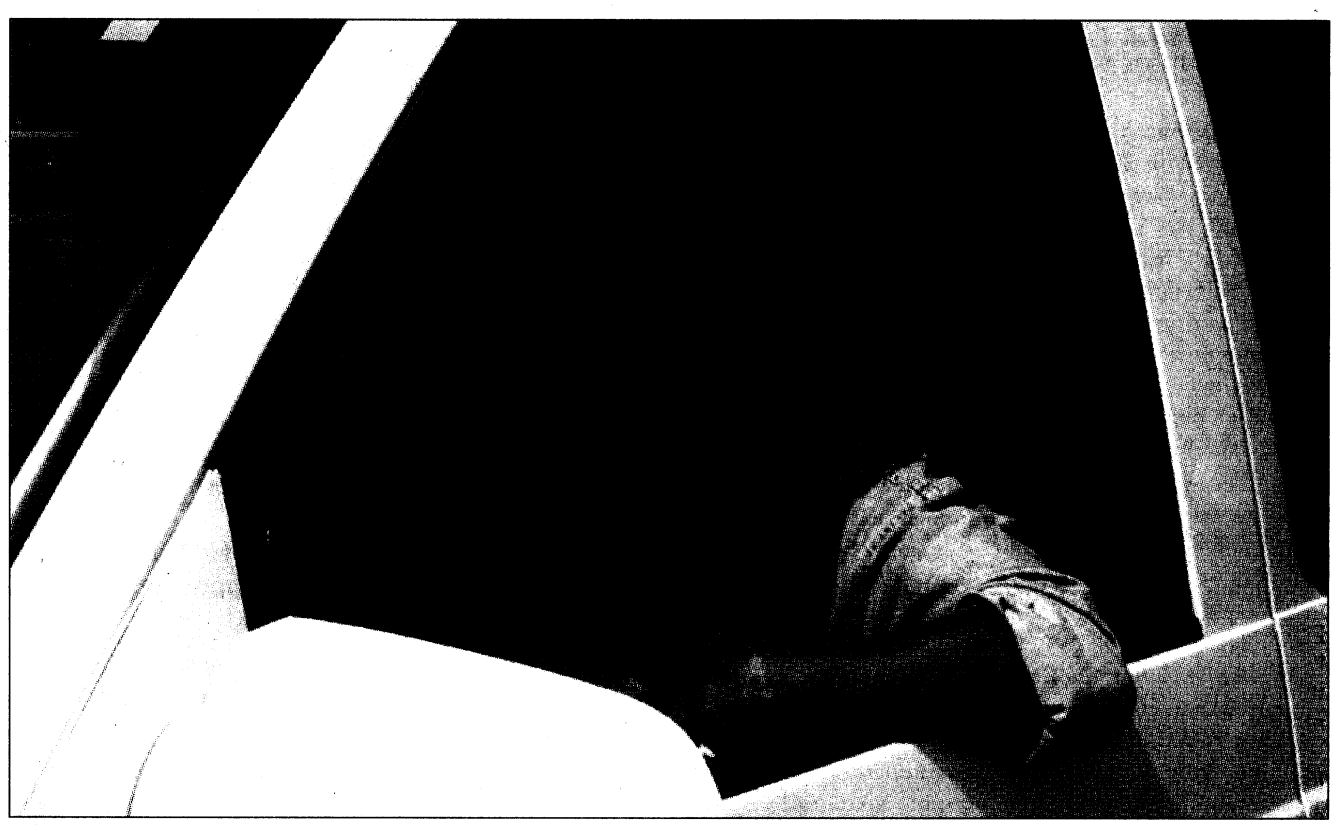
"Anything for the Soldiers," said Parker, who went to work for the Patriot Cab Company six months ago.

Soldier first — it's the mission statement Chris Petty banks on. When he began managing the fledgling Patriot Cab a year ago, Petty established what he calls a "Soldier friendly" policy, and those who don't adhere are simply "outta here."

"We're only in business because of the Soldiers," said Petty, a retired Soldier who currently oversees 26 cab drivers. That's a few less than he managed a month ago before gas prices skyrocketed and he had to "relieve" drivers who passed the price increase along to their customers.

Petty's not saying how many were fired, but he alluded to their severance to make a point.

"Does it hurt, the gas prices? Sure, it hurts. But I tell my guys to work a little harder and a little longer. Volume is key," he said, "because we're not going to stick it to these Soldiers. It's time to give something back to these guys. This is how we do it."



That's more than a sound business policy — it's a requirement for cab companies who service Fort Benning, said Jean Poole, Fort Benning's chief of the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation's nonappropriated funds financial branch.

Poole manages contracts for eight cab companies and 90 drivers, and they all must agree to maximum "zone rate." Anything above the zone rate is considered price gouging.

"Just as the city of Columbus sets a maximum rate, we do the same here," Poole said. "Drivers can work more to make more money to make up for the cost of gas, but they can't charge more. If they do, we'll hear about it."

Fort Benning zones include Sand Hill, where business booms for cab drivers most weekends, Parker said. A fare around Sand Hill should not exceed $2 for one passenger and $1 per each additional passenger. A one-way trip to the Main Mall Post Exchange should not exceed $6 for one passenger. Harmony Church Soldiers may think they're being gouged when they pay as much as $30 for a trip to Main Post. That's because Harmony Church is not a designated zone. Yet.

"That's the only thing I'd like to change. That's way too much," said Poole, who anticipates a policy change when contracts are renewed in the next few months.

Bridgett Siter

"Profits go down a little, but you gotta take care of your customers," said Charlene "Charlie" Crawford, who drives for the Patriot Cab Company.

One-Stop Center opens to help Hurricane Katrina evacuees

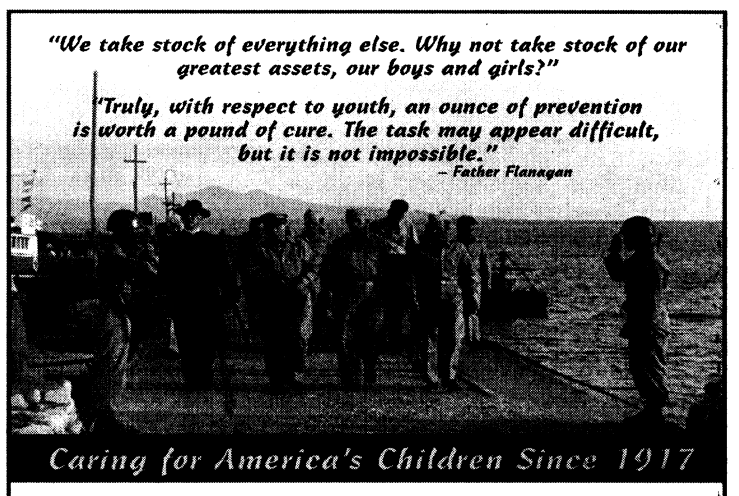
Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Columbus is doing its part for evacuees displaced by Hurricane Katrina. The One-Stop Operations Center opened its doors Sept. 8 and offers everything from financial to counseling services.

The center, located in the former Page Scranton Tucker Sprouse and Ford law office on the southwest corner of Third Avenue and 11th Street, offers evacuees several services in one convenient location.

Services include the American Red Cross, Goodwill Industries, the United Way, and assistance for housing, education, health care, public assistance, counseling, transportation, employment and recreation.

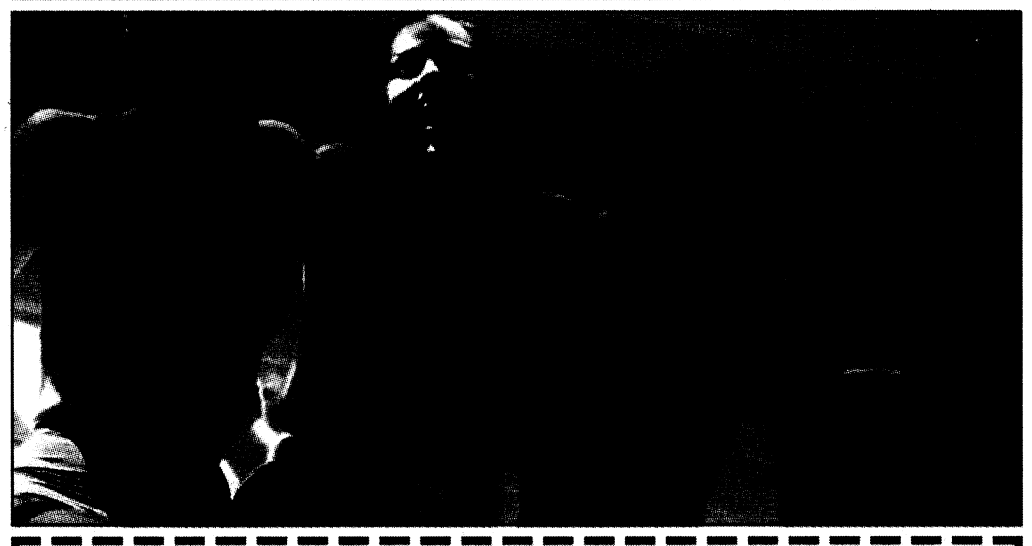
The Red Cross shelter in Columbus estimated that nearly 1,500 evacuees are in Columbus, 26 of them are four military families staying at Fort Benning.



The Social Security Administration was added to the list Sept. 12 and Lynnette Gross, coordinator, said the center was working to get FEMA there.

The center is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. every day, but with limited services on the weekend, including transportation, housing, counseling, employment and child care.

Gross recommended that evacuees arrive to the center as early as they can, because the line will be cut off around 1:30 to 2 p.m.



Columbus' Metra buses run a circular route from the center to the Red Cross shelter at the Benning Recreation Center on Benning Drive in south Columbus and the Triage Center at 3940 Rosemont Drive in midtown.

Defense ministers 'strongly committed' to expanding NATO's role

Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

NATO defense ministers, who met in Berlin Tuesday and Wednesday, "are strongly committed to expanding NATO's role" in Afghanistan, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said in a Wednesday news conference.

"By spring, our goal is for NATO to partner with the Afghan National Army to manage security in what will amount to something like three quarters of that country," he said. The secretary said U.S. forces would continue to play a strong role.

Discussions during the Sept. 14 meetings focused on expanding NATO influence into the southern part of Afghanistan, including the area around Kandahar, a historic Taliban stronghold.

Coalition and alliance military planners are pushing to get NATO "fully engaged" in the south by mid-2006, a senior U.S. defense official said Tuesday.

Expanding friendly influence into the south will represent "Stage 3" of a four-step plan to bring security and democracy to Afghanistan.

The four steps represent geographic quadrants of the country, the official explained. Coalition and NATO forces are fully ensconced in the northern and western regions of Afghanistan, signifying the completion of Stages 1 and 2. The eastern region, including the area along the Pakistani border, represents Stage 4.

Completing Stage 3 "will involve significantly expanded contributions by NATO," the official said. "NATO will be taking on more responsibility, moving towards full responsibility." He could give no estimate on if or when NATO might take full control of operations in Afghanistan.

Media reports alluded to a controversy over a possible "joint command" of the International Security Assistance Force, the NATO-led mission in Afghanistan, and Operation Enduring Freedom, the U.S.-led coalition mission there.

Tech Sgt. Kevin J. Gruenwald

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld addresses the media after an informal meeting of NATO Defense ministers in Berlin.

But NATO and U.S. leaders downplayed the significance of the issue.

"I would characterize it as 'much ado about nothing,'" Rumsfeld said in his news conference. He said a series of memoranda of understanding lay out the command relationship between the two missions.

"It's all been worked out in a very orderly way so that we had a unity of effort if not unity of command," the secretary said. "Military commands are discussing ways ahead, (so it's) really no issue. It's all kind of an artificial issue."

The ministers, however, did discuss a need for "more synergy" between the two missions.

"They must coordinate more closely, and they must therefore make the appropriate arrangements for this synergy," NATO Secretary-General Jaap de Hoop Scheffer said. He added that command arrangements are being discussed among the parties because they all are seeking "a shared way forward here."

A senior NATO diplomat, speaking on background Wednesday, indicated that even the possibility of such a joint command was a long way off.

"We have not had (North Atlantic Council)-level (or) ambassadorial-level conversations about that yet," the diplomat said. "And we certainly haven't had ministerial conversations. There is military planning and military thinking going on, but it hasn't come forward yet.

"I think what's most important at this stage and what ministers are focused on in that room today is ensuring we succeed as NATO moves into the south," the diplomat said. "And I think that we will."

In response to a reporter's question about future U.S. troop strength in Afghanistan, Rumsfeld stressed his answer hasn't changed from the many other times he's been asked this question.

"This question comes up periodically, and ... I almost feel like I could flip a switch in my back and get the same answer," he said with a chuckle.

"The first part of the answer is that the only people who are going to increase or decease U.S. forces in Iraq or Afghanistan will be the president of the United States or me. And it will result from recommendations from the field commanders.

"The second part of the answer is: We constantly are asking our field commanders to look at the situation, see what the conditions are and then we'll ask our planners in the Pentagon, in the services to look at various levels of forces — higher, same, lower — and either increasing them or decreasing them as the circumstances required for some number of years now."

Bush urges United Nations to approve resolution, fight global terrorism

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush urged the United Nations to close ranks against the threat of global terrorism Wednesday.

In his speech before the world body's high-level plenary meeting at the U.N.'s New York City headquarters, Bush first thanked the 115 nations and almost a dozen international organizations that offered assistance to the U.S. for Hurricane Katrina relief along the stricken Gulf Coast.

"Your response, like the response to last year's tsunami, has shown once again that the world is more compassionate and hopeful when we act together," Bush said to U.N. representatives.

The president then urged the U.N. to "actively respond to the other great challenges of our time." Today, terrorism "could threaten the security of any peaceful country," he pointed out.

In recent years global terrorists have attacked and killed innocent citizens in the U.S., Great Britain, Tunisia, Indonesia, Kenya, Tanzania, Morocco, Israel, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Spain, Russia, Egypt, and Iraq, Bush said.

"The lesson is clear. There can be no safety in looking away or seeking the quiet life by ignoring the hardship and oppression of others," Bush said, noting terrorists must be confronted and must "know the world stands united against them."

In this regard, Bush urged U.N. representatives to approve a new resolution outlawing terrorist acts as well as to forge global agreements to prevent illicit transfer of weapons of mass destruction across national borders.

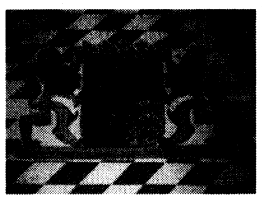
Oppressive regimes sow societal discord and poverty that breeds lawlessness and terrorism, Bush said.

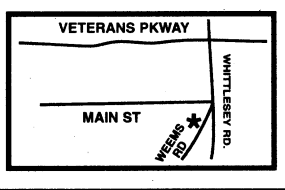
Democratic nations "contribute to peace and stability," he said, "because they seek national greatness in achievements of their citizens, not the conquest of their neighbors.

Consequently, the world "has a vital interest in the success of a free Iraq," Bush said.

"No civilized nation has an interest in seeing a new terrorist state emerge in that country," he said.

The U.N. "has played a vital role in the success" of the January 2005 Iraqi elections, Bush said, where 8.5 million Iraqis "defied the terrorists and cast their ballots." And U.N. representatives have supported Iraq's elected leaders as they've drafted a new constitution, Bush noted.





He exhorted the U.N. and its member nations "to continue to stand by the Iraqi people as they complete the journey to a fully constitutional government."

Successful establishment of a constitutional government in Iraq "will inspire others to claim their freedom," Bush said.

With Iraq leading the way, the president said, he envisions that the Middle East "will grow in peace and hope and liberty." When that occurs "all of us will live in a safer world," he said.

Garrison CSM hands over duties

Takes on one last mission before retiring

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

For Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Fortson, there has never been a dull day in his 26 months as the garrison command sergeant major.

"You never know what you're going to get," Fortson said. A typical day for him involved anything from answering more than 100 e-mails, or speaking with 30 or more people in his office, to attending five or six meetings.

"Well, there really is no typical day here," he said. "But I learned a lot from this organization. I enjoyed seeing people come through this door and leave with a smile, knowing I had helped take care of their needs."

As the garrison command sergeant major, Fortson is involved in a variety of actions and programs that touched Soldiers and their family members.

He worked on the post infrastructure, community life projects, mayor's program and implemented the "Pride and Ownership" Program with all of the post's command sergeants major. Through that program, he said, all the units helped better support the installation as a whole.

He's waiting anxiously for the results of this year's Department of the Army's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers awards. The results are due today, and, if Fort Benning makes the list, he said it will be the fifth year in a row.

The past two years, he said, have been characterized by having to endure doing more with less.

"The military to civilian conversion has been a burden on all of us," he said, "and we've also been short of money. But we must continue to win the Global War on Terrorism — while transforming — and (trying to) retain Soldiers."

Fortson said he's very proud of the Fort Benning Soldiers who are now supporting and assisting the relief efforts in Louisiana and Mississippi.

As the Fort Benning representative for Leadership Columbus, a program bringing business members of the tricommunity together, he said he has enjoyed the interaction with a community that's at the top of the list.

"Columbus and Phenix City give the best support for our Soldiers and family members," Fortson said.

And Fortson has seen more than his share of communities off post during his 29 years on active duty.

He's leaving his job, but not Fort Benning, or the Army, yet. For the next nine months, he said he'll be working a special project for Col. Rick Riera, the garrison commander. The project involves doing all the ground work needed to move the 81st Reserve Center to Fort Benning. The move, part of the Base Realignment and Closure proposal, will consolidate all the reserve centers in the Southeast.

Melissa House

Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Fortson hands over duties as the garrison sergeant major today.

"It's going to be a big thing," Fortson said. "I'll look at where they're going to train, housing, how we'll feed them and transportation.

Once that's finished, Fortson, a quartermaster corps Soldier, said he'll retire. He's eyeing a job in the Department of Homeland Security or with the Federal Emergency Management Agency, continuing to put his skills to work.

"I have really enjoyed having this opportunity," Fortson said. "This has been a dream come true to be able to serve with the Infantry as a quartermaster Soldier. I have (retired) Command Sergeant Major (Mike) Kelso to thank for that."

Fortson will hand over the garrison position to Command Sgt. Maj. Russell Sadler at 11 a.m. today in Marshall Auditorium.

"I'm leaving him with a new chair," Fortson said, "and fewer Soldiers. But I left him with more than I started with.

"I'm a systems kind of guy. when you set systems into place, anyone can come in and do a good job. He just has to take it to the next level.

I think he's going to do a great job." Fortson said he's leaving the garrison job a stronger, better person.

"In this job, you have to remember the first seven words (of the Soldier's Creed) — 'No one is more professional than I' — "You're not here for you. You're here for Soldiers and their families. Once you lose sight of Soldiers, you've lost everything."

POW/MIA Day events scheduled on post

Fort Benning to unveil new memorial

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will unveil a new statue honoring all Prisoner of War and Missing in Action military members in front of the Infantry Museum Saturday at 2 p.m.

Purchased by the Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association, the 11-foot bronze and marble effigy is the second of three identical commemorative statues to be installed in the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City communities.

The special guest speaker will be retired Col. Ben Purcell. He was held as a POW by the North Vietnamese for five years, transferred to three camps, escaped twice, and held in solitary confinement for 58 months, enduring starvation and torture.

Combat vehicles and weapons displays, a demonstrations of Rangers in action and the Silver Wings parachute team will also commemorate the occasion.

Prior to the ceremony itself, motorcycle riders can register between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. at the Golden Baseball Park, next to the Columbus Civic Center, for a commemorative ride through Columbus and Phenix City before heading to Fort Benning for the ceremony. There is a $15 registration fee, which includes a T-shirt.

"The safety equipment requirements for motorcycle riders on post have been waived for this event, as long as they come in with the motorcade," said Command Sgt. Maj. Jan Stegeman, acting command sergeant major for the Medical Retention Center Battalion and president of the Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association.

"Following the ceremony, as long as riders leave Fort Benning along designated routes, they don't have to wear their vests or safety gear," he said, but do wear a helmet.

"POW/MIA day basically started after Korea," Stegeman said, "and now the 17th of September is nationally recognized as POW/MIA Day.

The Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association will make the third Saturday of September an annual POW/MIA event, even after the final monument is raised in Phenix City, Stegeman said.

The first monument was unveiled at the Columbus Government Center on 10th Street in September 2004.

The POW/MIA monument in Phenix City is expected to be unveiled in 2006. Each monument cost the Association $23,000.

Donations can be made to the POW Memorial Fund, P.O. Box 2194, Columbus, GA 31902.

498th: Rescues Hurricane Katrina victims in Louisiana

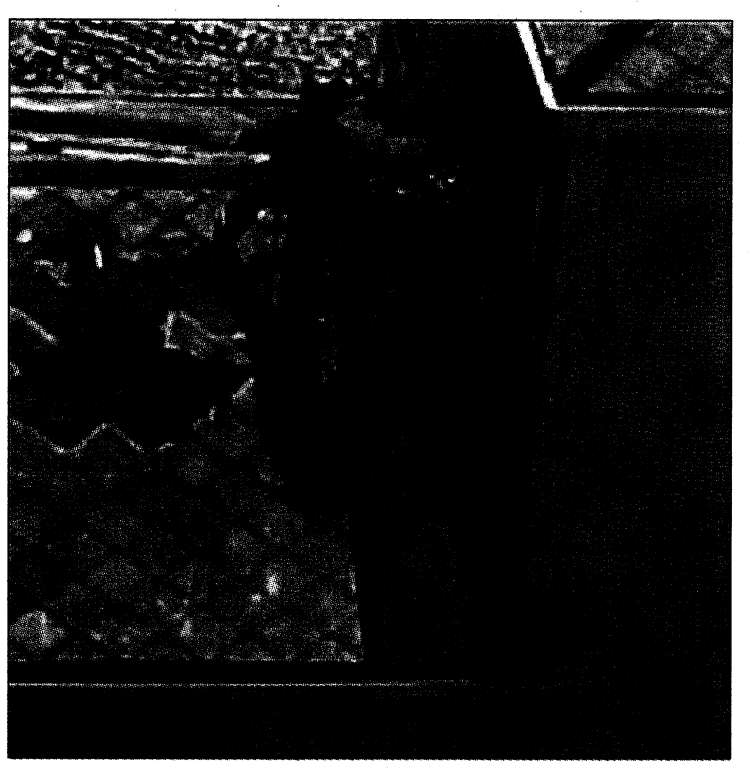
there, poking through the roof of a house, or the tiny beam of a penlight.

As of last week, his crews — eight four-man teams, each comprised of a pilot, co-pilot, crew chief in charge of the hoist and a medic — have rescued more than 1,000 residents, sometimes "swinging" onto balconies or breaking through skylights to reach them. They also helped evacuate hospitals, the Superdome, and the convention center.



"They're an absolutely amazing group of folks who have acted heroically, over and over," McNally said of his troops, many two-time veterans of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

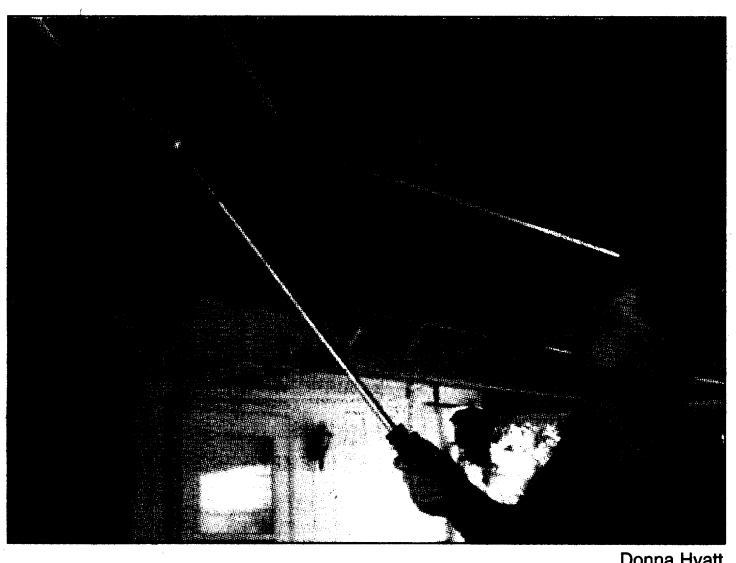
For some, McNally said, the experience in New Orleans has brought back painful memories.

"They said they see the corpses floating in the water and they have flashbacks. It reminds them of the carnage they saw (in Iraq)," said McNally, who took command in July, two months after the unit returned from Iraq.

The Soldiers were also dealing, on occasion, with a sense of guilt, he said.

"You look down on the entire city under water, with people waving T-shirts from rooftops and bridges, and it gives you a sense of urgency. It makes you want to fly beyond your capabilities to help these people," he said. "At some point, you have to stop and get some sleep, but you feel guilty about doing it."

During the first seven days of operations, nearly 1,000 victims were rescued. The crews flew 300 hours with six UH-60 helicopters.



Now, as the city lies virtually vacant — "a ghost town under water," McNally called it — the 498th will provide medical support for the recovery teams.

They're bedding down near the Baton Rouge International Airport, a 20-minute flight from New Orleans.

They sleep and work alongside teams from the National Guard, U.S. Customs and Border Patrol, among others.

"The level of cooperation was absolutely amazing," said McNally who estimates he's seen about 300 helicopters in the area, but only 50 or so with hoists, or "jungle penetrators," the basket-like devices used to lift people from roofs and bridges.

That means it's "pick up, drop off and gas up" again and again for the 498th, McNally said. They'll stay with the mission as long as it takes. No one can predict just how long that will be.

Work: Continues on heroes' homes year," LeGare said.

A nonprofit organization established in 2000, the House of Heroes consists of volunteers performing minor repairs and improvements to the homes of veterans and their spouses.

"It's a great community support, and it's not just the military doing it because there's a lot of help from the Columbus community," LeGare said.

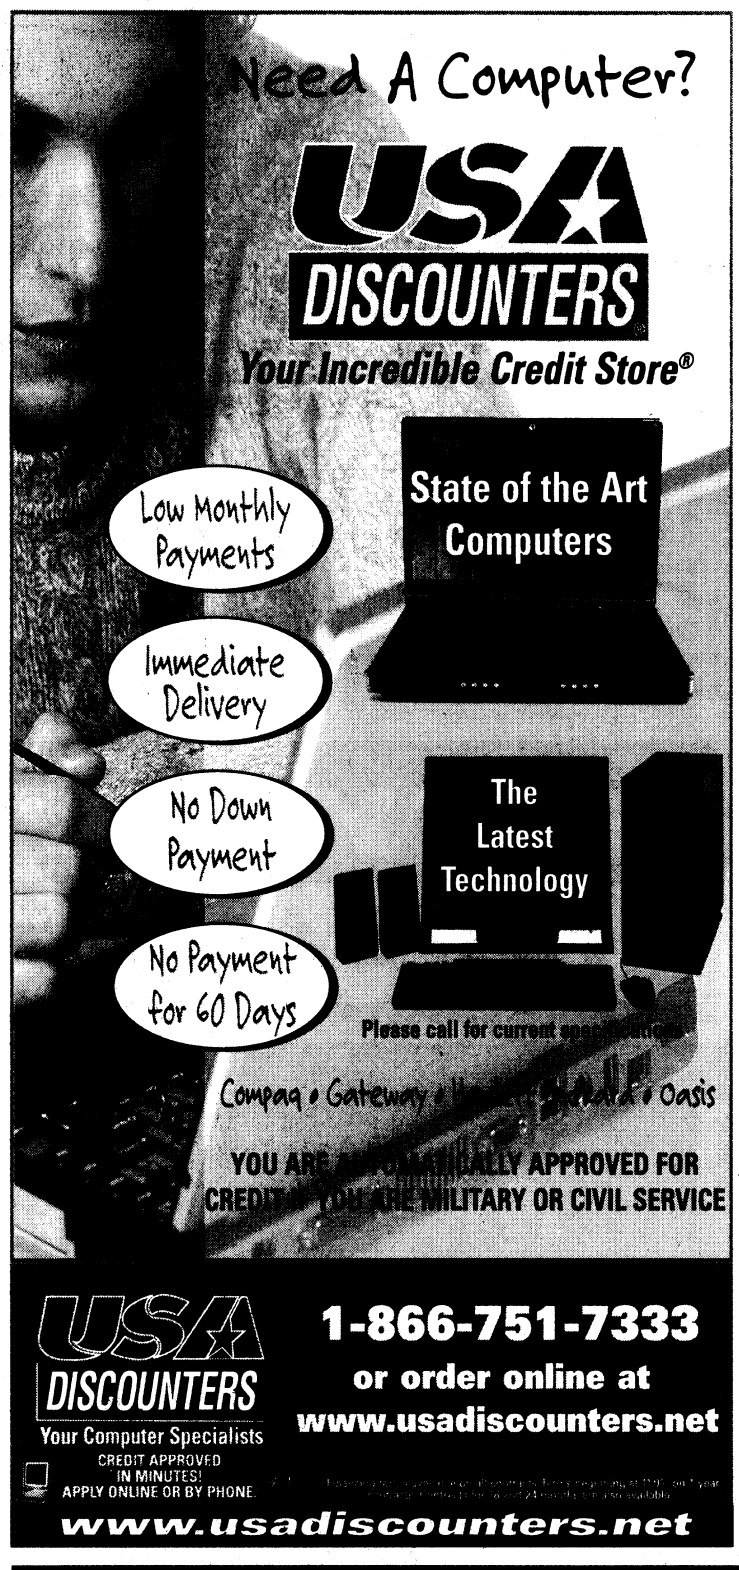
Through the generosity of individuals, civic organizations and corporations, the home improvements cost nothing to the veteran.

"We've had other cities from across the country inquire about how they can start this program," said Fort Benning's House of Heroes board member Janie Pearson.

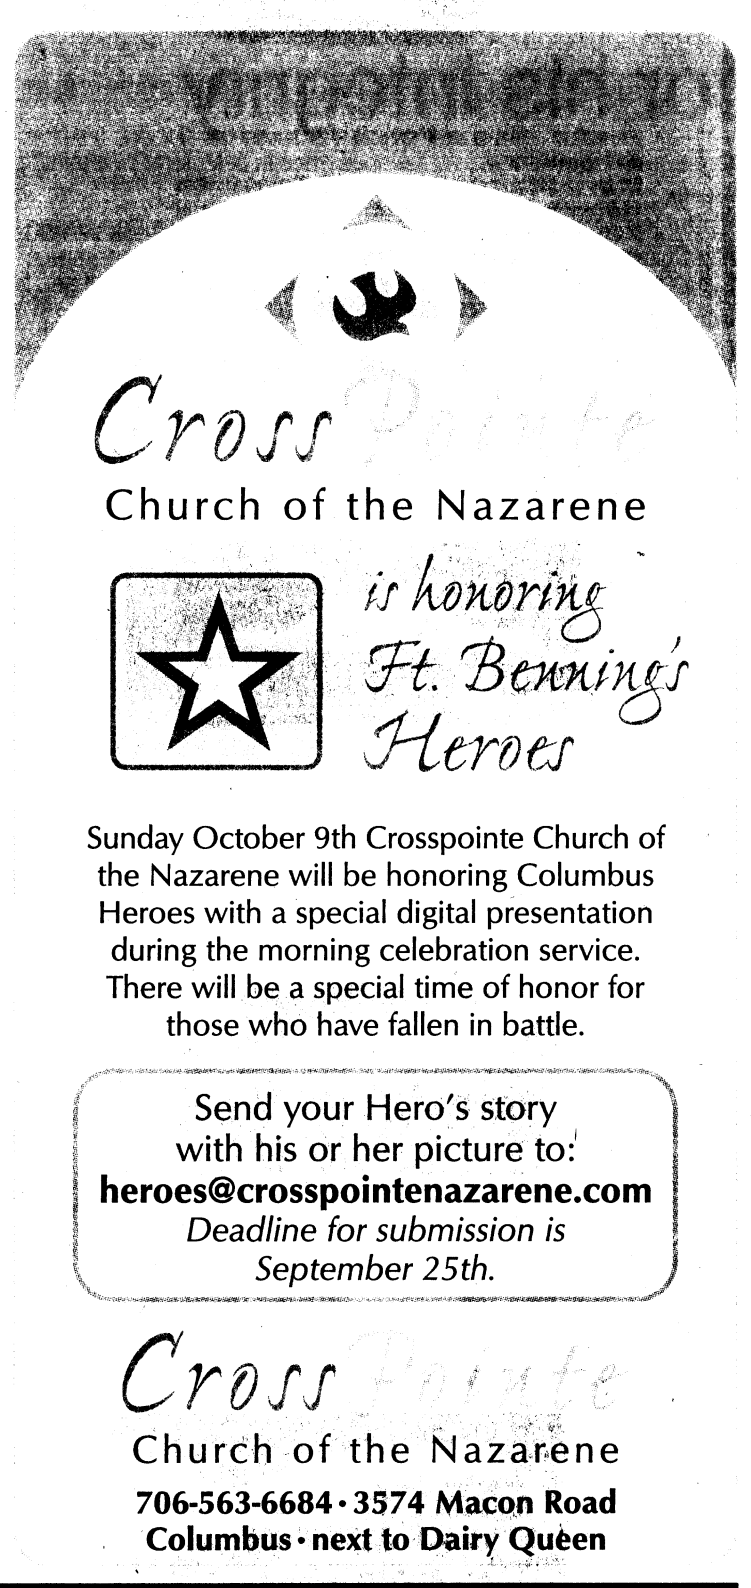
This year, House of Heroes is scheduled to repair 40 houses, Pearson said. At least 10 teams from Fort Benning, consisting of 15 to 20 people each, will be working on the houses. Pearson would like to put together one more Fort Benning team to help a veteran and the organization.

The annual home improvements are made in the month of September, with an awards luncheon scheduled at the Trade Center Oct. 21.

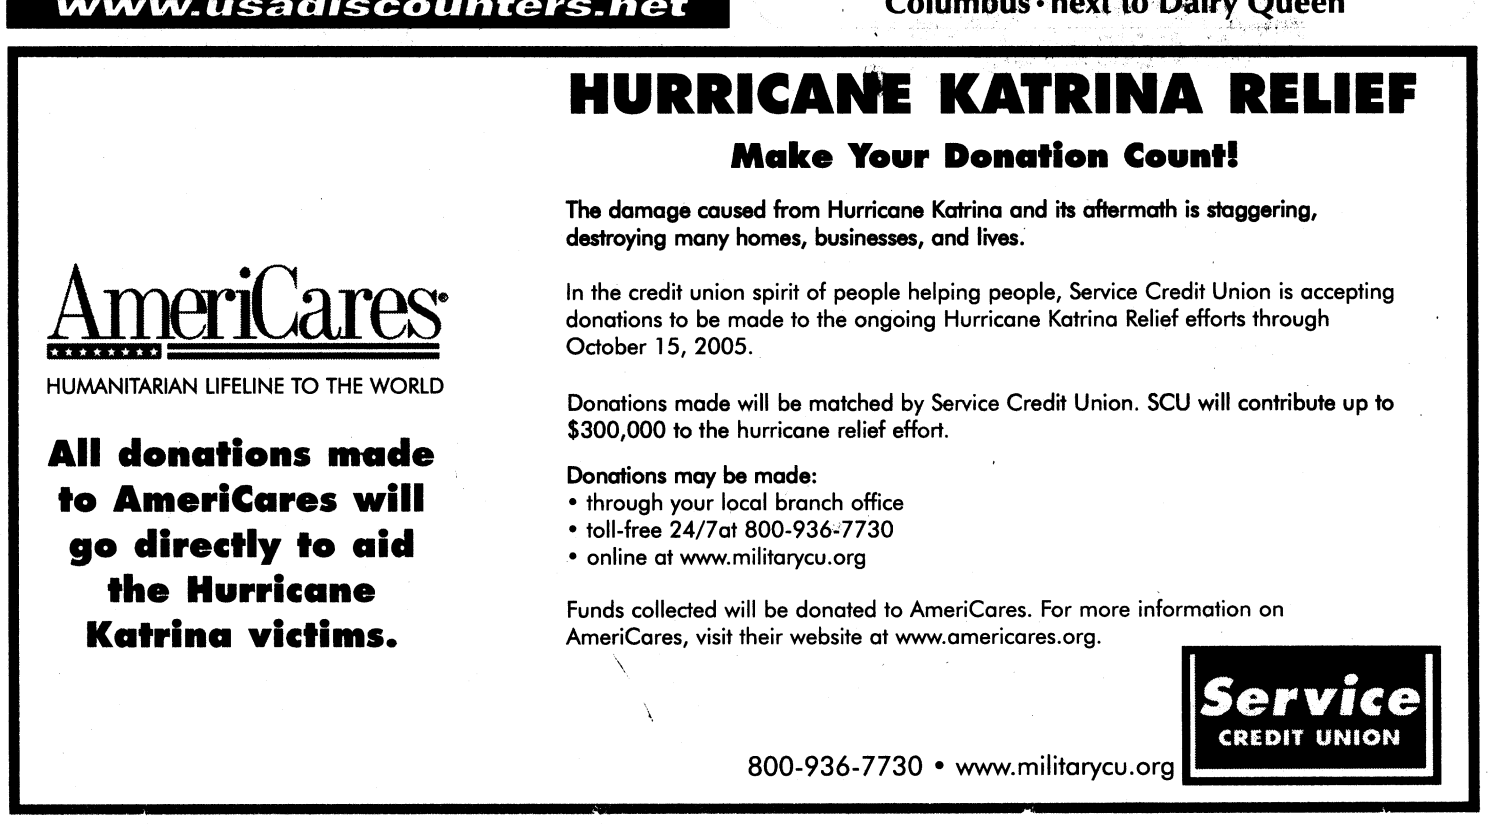
"At this ceremony we recognize each one of the home owners with the team that helped them. Then we present the veterans with a flag that has flown over the U.S. Capitol," she said.



"It's another way for us to say thank you for all the years of service and dedication they've given for this country," Pearson said.



Since its inception, House of Heroes has repaired more than 150 homes.



To qualify for assistance in the program, recipients must be a military or public service veteran, or the spouse of a veteran. They must need financial or physical assistance with their home repairs and own and occupy the home to be repaired.

The House of Heroes is located at 4713 Milgen Road in Columbus.

Infantry chief presents Doughboy Awards

Soldiers gave almost 70 years to Army

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Two "muddy boots" Soldiers were honored with the Infantry's Doughboy Award in a ceremony Sept. 13.

The award, established in 1980, was created to recognize contributions made by individuals on behalf of the Army. That year, Bob Hope received the award for his work with the USO.

"The Doughboy award is a distinguished award," said Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general and chief of Infantry. "It represents a who's who of the Army and the nation.

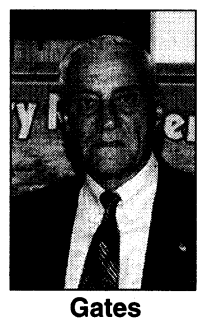
In 1993, Wojdakowski said, there was a successful movement to recognize a noncommissioned officer as well as a general officer or outstanding civilian.

"This year, we recognize two great Army Soldiers and great Americans," he said.

Retired Gen. Gary Luck, an armor officer, was not able to attend the awards dinner because he is deployed to Iraq assisting with the Multinational Forces-Iraq.

"He didn't ride a desk during his career," Wojdakowski said. "He spent more than half his career in fighting units, and even though retired, is still a hard-charging officer. He wouldn't be deployed to Iraq if he wasn't."

Luck's commands included tank platoons and Special Forces detachments, squadron command in a combat aviation group in Vietnam, brigade command in the 8th Infantry Division.



He served as the commanding general of the 18th Airborne Corps during Operation Desert Storm.

Wojdakowski said he received personal help from Luck during Operation Iraqi Freedom 1, while in Baghdad, and would be proud to present his Doughboy Award when Luck returns from Iraq.

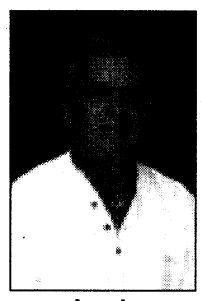
He described retired Sergeant Major of the Army Bill Gates as a "Soldier who did it all and has done it all." Like Luck, he said Gates was a "boots on the ground" Soldier who held every NCO position in the Army.

"And for a guy like me, I can remember when he was the sergeant major of the Army," Wojdakowski said.

"He is the epitome of the type of Soldier all of us want to become. He has always been an inspiration to me."

Gates

He said men like Gates, who have seen history in the making as a young Soldier in Vietnam, and later during the fall of the Soviet Union, have helped make the Army what it is today.



Gates joked that he didn't know where Wojdakowski had gotten the information for his bio.

"I enlisted to become an Infantry paratrooper," Gates said, "but instead was a policeman — policing in the kitchen, washing pots and pans. Then I became an engineer — digging holes. Then an orderly — latrine orderly, barracks orderly. I learned to use a buffer for the first time.

"As I stand before you, it is an extremely humbling experience never to be forgotten," Gates said.

Gates said it was an honor to return to Fort Benning and the Infantry Center.

"During war, the Infantry Soldier is the first in with a tough mission to kill, capture or destroy the enemy," he said. "After the battle, they will wave others forward and ask them to 'follow me.' No words can express the thanks for heroic deeds and sacrifices, but hopefully a simple thank you will suffice."

Luck

Gates asked the audience to take a moment to give a silent prayer for fellow Soldiers deployed in harm's way and asked that the Soldiers' fallen comrades not be forgotten. The fallen, he said, made the ultimate sacrifice for personal freedom and the nation's freedom.

"And old Soldiers like to tell tales," he said. "And I'm going to share some with you."

Gates was a private first class in Germany when he was selected to perform guard duty at the Spandau Prison in Berlin.

"I was the first American to relieve the first guard at the first tower," he said. "I walked up into the tower, closed the trap door and locked it from the inside."

From his post, Gates said he heard a young second lieutenant telling a Soviet colonel that the tower would not be locked from the outside, because it would be impossible for Gates to get out in an emergency.

"He stood his ground. He would not change his mind," Gates said. "He was a young platoon leader — an Infantry platoon leader."

Under fire in Vietnam, Gates watched a specialist grab his weapon, charge forward and jump into a bunker the squad was still preparing to assault. The Soldier made it out alive, but wounded.

"When we asked him why he did it, he said it was because (the enemy was) trying to kill my buddies," Gates said.

In recent months, Gates has had the opportunity to visit with Soldiers being treated at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. Gates said he spoke with one who was missing part of a leg, and repeatedly asked the Soldier what he could do for him. Each time Gates asked, the Soldier said "nothing."

Finally, as Gates was leaving, the Soldier came up with one request.

"Sergeant Major, there's one thing you can do,'" Gate said the Soldier told him. "When I get another leg, I want to stay in the Army."

"What do you do with a request like that," Gates said. "Your eyes just start to get wet."

Gates said the real reason he was present at the awards dinner was because of the distinguished Infantrymen who served on his left and right — some on whom made the supreme sacrifice that allowed him to live through the night.

"They deserve it more than this man," Gates said. 'I am willing and honored to accept this award on behalf of them and I can assure you it will be treated with dignity and respect."

Gates also received the Order of Saint Maurice and his wife, Letha, received the Shield of Sparta for embodying the courage, service and commitment of an Army spouse.

Past recipients of the Doughboy Award include

- Bob Hope
- H. Ross Perot
- Bill Mauldin
- Sen. Bob Dole
- Sen. John Tower
- Gen. Colin Powell

greater good.

"He has permanently touched all of our lives in a positive way by giving much more than he ever took.

"He was, and always will be, among a band of brothers who know him for the outstanding Soldier, patriot, and most importantly, the man of character he was," Coburn said.

Chaplain (Capt.) Se Woo Park, the battalion chaplain, said Bohling was a devoted Christian.

Bohling played harmonica during worship services, Woo said.

Bohling's genuine concern for the welfare of others, personal integrity and devotion remain without parallel, Woo said.

"Sergeant Bohling epitomized the professional Soldier and will always be remembered for his ultimate sacrifice in defense of freedom," Woo said.

The Bohling family pastor, the Rev. Brad Rud, said Bohling loved the military and saw it as an honor and privilege to serve.

"Matthew was a true patriot," Rud said in an interview with the Anchorage Daily News. "He was committed to the cause of freeing the Iraqi people."

Bohling is survived by his father and mother, Sandra, of Eagle River, Alaska; a brother, Joshua, who joined the Army and is training in Florida, and a sister and brother-in-law, Sarah and Josh Tudor.

"His family is very proud of him and his willingness to serve his country, even in harm's way," Charles Bohling said.

Bohling was promoted posthumously. His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star Medal, Purple Heart and Combat Infantryman Badge.

Infantry: Soldier foundation is focus involved in training at Fort Benning any day.

As the nation's threats are changing every day, the Army's challenge is to build tough, adaptable and smart leaders and Soldiers to lead the way in current operations, Wojdakowski said.

Among the changes taking place to improve the performance of our Soldiers on the battlefield is the reorganization of units to be more self-sufficient, bringing together front-line units with the non-infantry units that support them.

This transformation — from a division-based force to a brigade-centric Army — will allow for better trained and more capable units for the Army, Wojdakowski said. These brigade combat teams will help manage force rotations in that there will be more deployable units for current and future operations.

Another change taking place is the implementation of the Soldier as a System. This was another highlight of Wojdakowski's address.

Soldier as a System is being integrated now as a current and future management process for all Soldier requirements.

Wojdakowski stressed the purpose of the Soldier as a System is to create trained and ready Soldiers with fully integrated capability to outperform any opponent in the full spectrum of the Army, Joint and Coalition Force Operations.

The focus is on the Soldier as the foundation of every weapons system and how to better equip him for a tailored mission, not merely manning the equipment.

The final focus of the general's address dealt with the active role Fort Benning is playing in the base realignment proposal that plans to transform the Infantry Center into a Maneuver Center.

Wojdakowski made it clear to those attending the address that these plans have not yet been approved by the president.

"We have no orders yet as to when the Maneuver Center D-Day is going to be, but I believe we should be ready when the time comes," he said.

"This is a well-thought out, well-designed future, I think," he said referring to the changes that will take place at Fort Benning with the proposed addition of the Armor Center.

As the Army and Fort Benning finds itself in a perpetual state of change in the coming years, Wojdakowski emphasized the focus remains on the Soldier and the mission.

"The Warrior Ethos is top of the list. Our leadership and cadre is committed to send Soldiers from Fort Benning with the right mindset."

U.S. ambassador calls stakes in Iraq 'huge,' warns Syria

John D. Banusiewicz
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. ambassador to Iraq today called the stakes in that war-torn country "huge," and said the time has come for Syria to decide whether it's in its own best interest to impede Iraq's progress.

In a special briefing at the State Department, Zalmay Khalilzad stressed the gravity of what's at stake in Iraq.

"Iraq is the centerpiece of the defining challenge of our time," he said. "As during the Soviet era, Soviet communism was the defining challenge of our time, now it's terrorism and extremism that's the defining challenge of our time."

What happens in Iraq will affect the rest of the world, the ambassador said.

"What happens in Iraq will affect the region, and what will happen in that region will affect us all," he said. "We are all very dependent on the region."

If people like fugitive Jordanian terrorist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi — the head of al Qaeda operations in Iraq — were to dominate Iraq, Khalilzad said, "It will make Afghanistan and the Taliban look like a picnic," given Iraq's resources and location.

"So the American public needs to know that what's involved here is huge, as what we did with the Soviet Union was huge, as what we did in World War II was huge," the ambassador said.

The United States wants a democratic, unified, self-reliant Iraq that can look after its own security and become prosperous so it can serve as the model for the broader transformation needed in the region.

"It will take a long time to do," he said.

"Transforming regions such as the Middle East is not easy, but it's absolutely necessary. It's a region of the world that's producing most of the security problems of this era and, therefore, we need to deal with it. And the way to deal with it is to get Iraq right, first, as we work on the other problems of the region too."

Progress, Khalilzad said, is evident in the fact that more than 190,000 Iraqis have been trained for the police and military forces.

"Positively, too, we see Iraqis beginning to fight for themselves who are not even part of the security forces," he said, citing Sunni tribes that are standing up to Zarqawi's terrorists.

"It's critical for the success of Iraq that Iraqis, whether Sunni, Shiia or Kurd, protect their country, defend their country," he said.

"And the sign that I see in these tribes, in Sunni tribes, standing up to Zarqawi, are positive developments."

The ambassador said that a joint committee of U.S. and Iraqi leaders is working to define conditions for the increased transfer of security responsibility in Iraq to the Iraqis themselves.

"We will come to some agreement with them in the next couple of months as to a vision of transfer of responsibility and a plan for transfer of responsibility that will be condition-driven, and we'll make that known to everyone," he said.

"But the trend is towards increased transfer of responsibility to Iraqis and a decrease in the security responsibility for the United States and the coalition."

Khalilzad noted that foreign fighters continue to make their way into Iraq through Syria — fighters who share Zarqawi's bleak vision for the future.

"The vision of these people, the Zarqawi people, for Iraq is not a democratic, unified, self-reliant, successful Iraq," he said. "It's an Iraq that's very much what we saw in Afghanistan under the Taliban: an Islamic caliphate with a dark vision to take the region back — where women will not have the right to vote, where there will be no democracy, where there will be a center of international terror in a rich, powerful country."

Syria, he said, is allowing forces who want to prevent Iraq from succeeding, to enter Iraq.

"Our patience is running out with Syria," he said.

"They need to decide, are they going to be with a successful Iraq or are they going to be an obstacle to the success of Iraq? Iraq will succeed. ... Syria has to decide what price it's willing to pay in making Iraq's success difficult. And time is running out for Damascus to decide on this issue."

Iraq's Transitional National Assembly will vote within a few days on the final draft of a constitution that he called "an enlightened document." Objections by some Sunni Arabs to some language in previous drafts has slowed, but not stopped the process.

"It's a good document," Khalilzad said of the final draft. "As far as the Sunnis are concerned, there are discussions going on with them. I understand their difficulties. Because of the terrorists' threat there, some of the people who support the document cannot say it publicly because they're afraid."

Sunnis largely boycotted the TNA election, Khalilzad said, and now realize that was a mistake.

"They are registering (for the Oct. 15 constitutional referendum)," he said. "I think the numbers are above 85 to 90 percent of people who are qualified to vote are registering to vote, and that's extremely positive."

Still, he acknowledged, the road ahead will remain tough.

"Iraq is going through a difficult transition; that is clear," he said.

"It's a difficult transition because the change in authoritarian regime, a one-man rule system, where one man was the constitution to a system where people are deciding for themselves their political system, participating in the process, respecting each others' right, compromising, self-relying more and relying less on government. These are processes that ordinarily would take decades.

"We are in Iraq learning how to crawl, walk and run at the same time," he said.

"We are doing multiple things simultaneously that ordinarily would ... be done sequentially over a very extensive period of time. We're making progress, but there are significant challenges that remain. I believe we have a good plan for how to proceed, and we need to stick with it and resource it."

"The Eagle Tower is used as a motivational tool. Most of the Soldiers don't have the skill to rappel. They're scared and this is physically challenging. It will build Soldiers' confidence."

Sgt. 1st Class Donald Lindley II, a drill sergeant with B Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, tells Pvt. Jonathan Ayers to look over his right shoulder and walk down the wall.

Pvt. Russell Monroe, a rock climbing instructor from Hampton, Mass., who joined the Army to become a Ranger, said the training wasn't terrifying because of his rock climbing experience.

Staff Sgt. Mike Kelly, left, double checks a Soldier's Swiss seat knots. Soldiers were divided into two groups for the training — learning how to tie the Swiss seat and rappelling and negotiating the two-rope and three-rope bridges.

Tower teaches trust

Bayonet editor

"Look over your right shoulder and walk off the wall," drill sergeants repeated to Soldiers who have been in the Army for only two weeks.

"It's a lesson in trust," said Pvt. Joe Denny, speaking of the Eagle Confidence Tower that B Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, conquered on Monday.

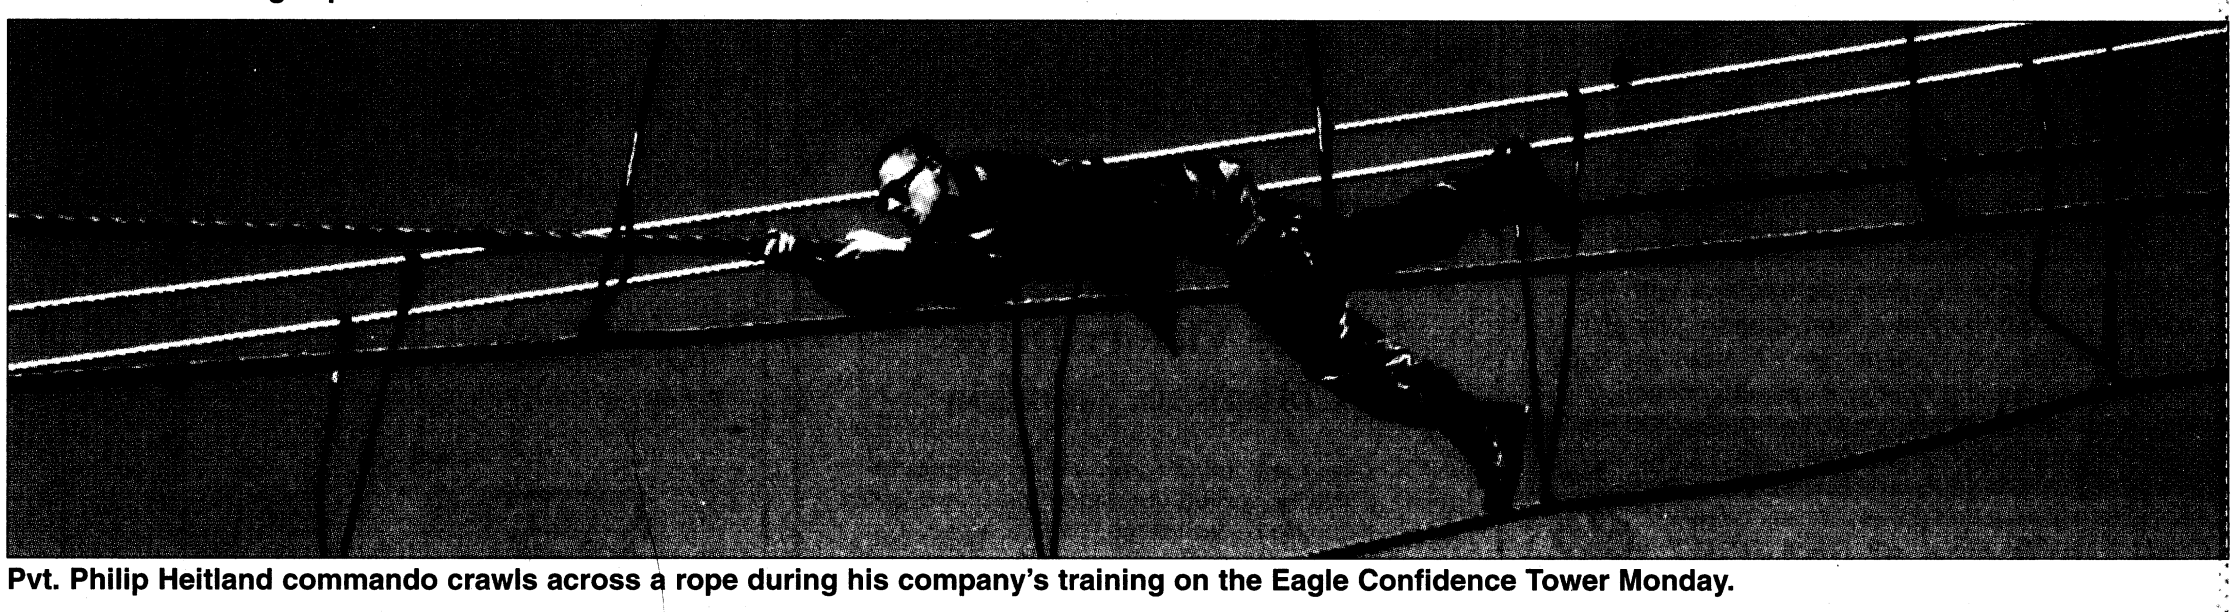
"Stepping over the edge teaches us to trust the instructors," he said after he rappelled off the 40-foot tower.

But before the Soldiers could tackle the tower, they first learned how to tie a Swiss seat, which is a necessary skill, given the current operational environment, said Capt. Tom Compitello, company commander.

The Eagle Confidence Tower training is divided into two segments:

- learning how to tie the Swiss seat and rappelling off the 40-foot wall, and
- crossing two-rope and three-rope bridges, learning the commando crawl and climbing down cargo nets.

The training is a confidence booster, Compitello said. Soldiers learn to overcome their fear of heights, and learn they can trust their equipment and their own abilities.

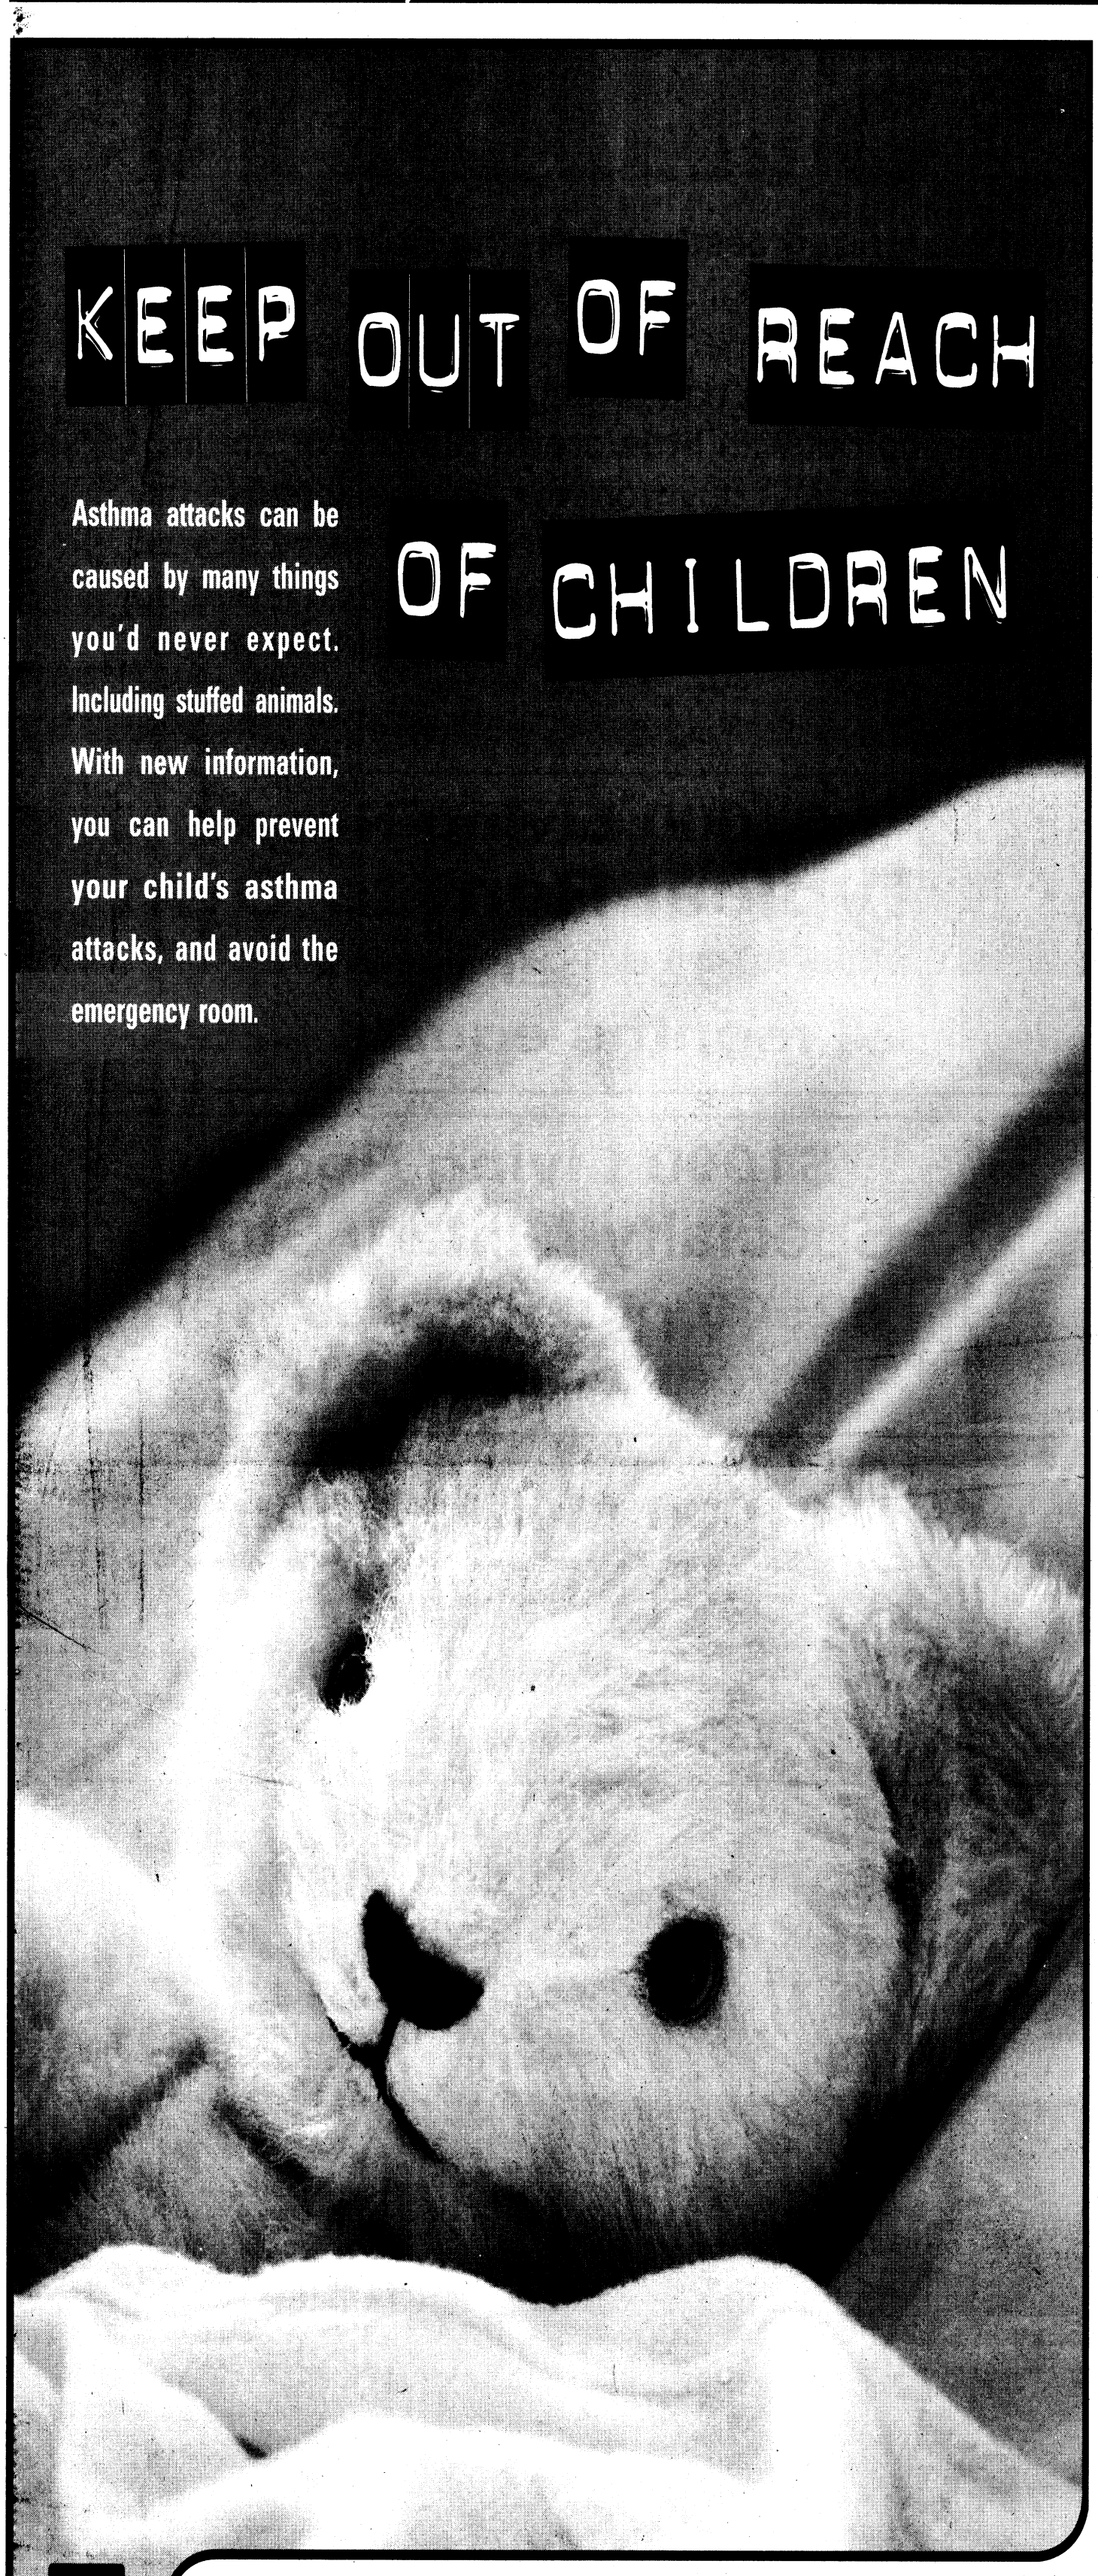


"The Eagle Tower is used as a motivational tool," said Sgt. 1st Class Donald Lindley II, drill sergeant. "Most of the Soldiers don't have the skill to rappel. They're scared and this is physically challenging.

"It will build Soldiers' confidence," Lindley said.

For Pvt. Jeremy Mingle, finishing the rappelling portion of the tower was something he was looking forward to.

"I'm scared of heights and I want to get this out of the way. I know this is important training — it's teaching us how to negotiate an obstacle like a cliff," said the 19-year-old from Homer, N.Y.



Denny, from Wapakoneta, Ohio, said although he is scared of heights, rappelling should be easier next time.

Pvt. Philip Heitland commando crawls across a rope during his company's training on the Eagle Confidence Tower Monday.

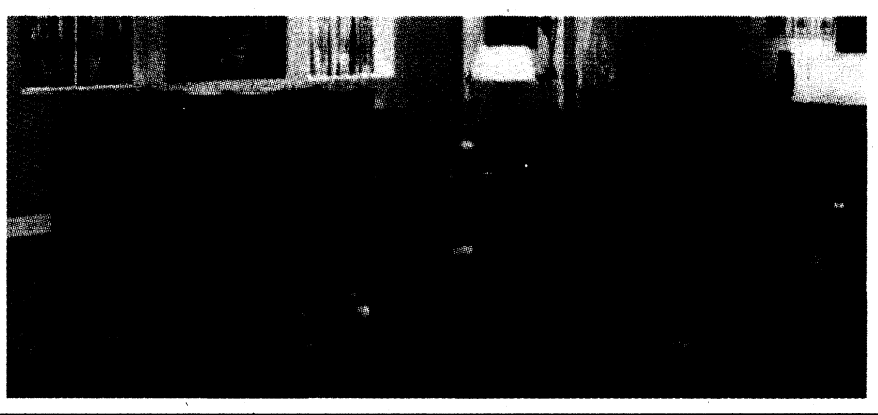
JD KINDER'S FURNITURE

SHOP SMART!



JD Kinder's Furniture is the most recognized destination in the Columbus trade area for a wide selection of quality home furnishings. We enjoy a great following amongst our military citizens and buying and financing here is very convenient. But many people are unaware that JD Kinder's can arrange financing for many people who are young and just starting out with little credit history or are in need of credit repair and think that they can't buy from normal retailers like us. These people many times go to rent to own stores and specialty military stores. They have their place, but many times the people that can least afford it end up paying more for furniture. Look at the illustration below and see just how much you can save at Kinder's.

Monkey in the Middle

So your middle-schooler is driving you bananas?

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet

There's a game you probably played when you were a child — if not you then your parents did — called Monkey in the Middle.

Maybe you knew it by another name, but the rules were pretty much the same. It was a game of keep-away, a game of frustration.

The unfortunate one, the "it," the one who drew the shortest straw, was the Monkey in the Middle, with players on either side volleying a ball back and forth over his head.

Unless he was lucky enough to bat the ball out of the air, or wrest it from another player, the middle man was stuck, grasping for a ball just out of his reach and taunted by the other players.

Life feels much like that for the "middle child," the adolescent middle-school age child, said Gerald Madler, the sixth- and seventh-grade counselor at Fort Benning's Faith Middle School. The middle school child is the monkey in the middle, reaching for something he can't yet attain, with "one foot in childhood and one foot in young adulthood."

"This is the most frustrating, most challenging age," said Madler, who's counseled Fort Benning children for 14 years.

"Yet it's also the most rewarding," he said "(It's) an incredibly pivotal time. They're trying to establish their identity apart from their parents with all these outside influences. Some of them sail through it with little or no problem, but it certainly can be overwhelming — for the student and the parent."

The teen years have long been considered a time of great transition, and certainly that's true to some degree.

But with the introduction of mass media more than half a century ago and the phenomenon of earlier maturation (today's children experience biological development five years sooner than adolescents a hundred years ago), middle schoolers today face issues their parents and grandparents faced much later in life.

They know about sex. They know a lot about sex. More than 20 percent of them have tried tobacco, and at least 25 percent — some sources say more than 40 percent — have experimented with alcohol.

And they're inundated with mixed messages. Music is punctuated with vulgarities — language society wouldn't tolerate from a teen — and subjects once considered taboo among adults. Teachers and parents say don't do drugs, but the actors on the big screen — and often their real life counterparts — use them liberally.

Add to that the pressure to conform socially, academically and athletically at a time when their bodies are growing faster than any time other than infancy.

Bones grow faster than muscle, often resulting in an uneven development, awkwardness and a lack of coordination. Nature seemingly conspires to thwart the middle child's struggle to "fit in."

Small wonder the middle schooler bears little resemblance to the child he once was. He's entered a time of "contrasts and contradictions," according to A Parent's Handbook, by the National Committee for Citizens in Education.

There's no way around it. But take heart, he'll emerge "almost normal" about the time he enters high school.

monkey business

"She's just not ready for that," said one Fort Benning mom of her daughter's progression to middle school next fall. "It's scary. Those kids are so big, and they act like animals."

That sentiment strikes a familiar cord with anyone who's weathered the elementary-middle school transition. It certainly can be scary — for the student and the parents.

Drive by any middle school bus stop on a school morning, and you'll see behavior that can be intimidating to parents anticipating their own child's move to middle school.

Middle schoolers typically huddle in small groups, often excluding one or more of their peers. Their behavior fluctuates from boisterous to maudlin. They're edgy and sometimes downright ill-behaved. Bus drivers frequently have to run conflict interference before the school day begins.

And that's par for the course, say child-development experts. The middle-school years are unpredictable, erratic and turbulent.

By contrast, the elementary years are characterized by child development experts as "consistent." Very young children are eager to please and easy to control. They thrive on predictability. They're compliant, friendly and well-behaved. What parent wouldn't want to shelter his or her child from the moors of middledom?

In fact, the sixth-grade student retains much of his "elementary charm," for the better part of the school year, Madler said. Teachers call them "our babies."

"(They) still have that elementary mentality," he said. "But suddenly they're in a whole new world. Instead of a homeroom teacher and maybe one or two others, where there's this real feeling of cohesiveness, they're now given seven teachers for short periods of time, and they don't have that same sense of belonging at a time when they have a greater need to belong."

"Teachers help them make this transition, but sometimes it takes a whole school year before you have a child who's ready for middle school. Then bam — seventh grade hits and they're everything you expect from a middle-schooler."

But what exactly does that mean? For the uninitiated, what should one expect from a middle schooler? There's certainly no "model" adolescent, according to the Handbook, but there are common characteristics one should be aware of should you happen upon a middle school animal in the wild:

• They have very high levels of energy, both physical and emotional, which may contrast with long periods of idleness.

• They crave independence from their parents, but covet acceptance and validation from their peers.

• Most of their problems are social, not academic.

• They like to take risks. They feel immortal.

• They're curious and love adventure.

• Their feelings are easily hurt.

• "Fairness" is a big issue. They tend to see things in black and white, and often fail to see the big picture.

• They withdraw and demand privacy.

• They expect more privileges but avoid responsibilities.

• They may at times appear unexplainably angry.

• They're extremely egocentric, but they're developing an awareness of social problems and the welfare of others.

"That's the dichotomy of the middle-school child," Madler said. "They're complex. They can't be put in a box. On the one hand they're so very self-centered, yet they're the most empathetic they'll ever be.

"They're really on unstable footing, on the cusp of adulthood, but they're still just kids. That's the most important thing to remember. They're still the same kids, but they're running on pure emotion. When they attack, whether they're angry or they have a bad attitude, it's not personal."

don't take it personally

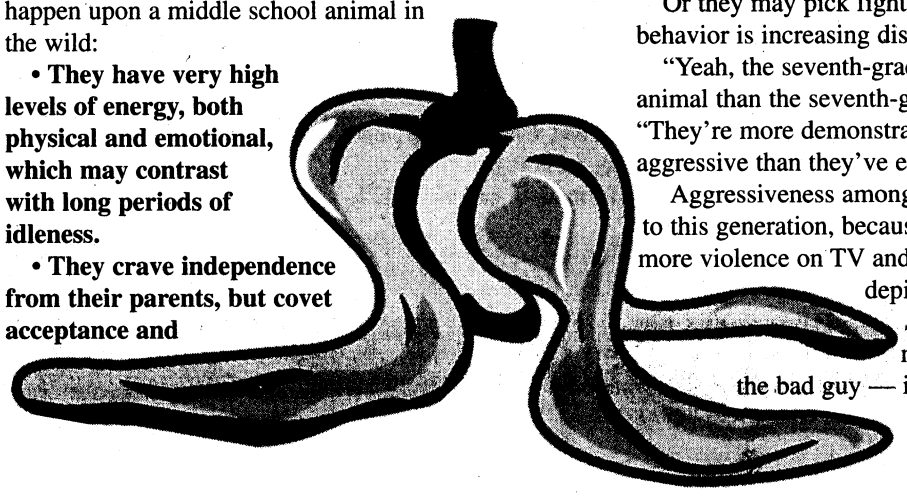
OK, OK, it is personal, but it's not about you, it's about him ... or her.

The middle-school child takes everything personally, no matter how petty or trivial it appears to an adult. That's because his priorities are skewed. He has one goal. He wants to be popular. And you just don't get it.

Popularity involves one or more of three key elements, Madler said — social, academic and athletic.

"Obviously, fitting in doesn't exempt (them) from problems in middle school, but the more of these categories students feel they fit in and are accepted by their peers, the better they feel about themselves," he said. "This is the age they become very competitive. If they don't do well athletically, they begin to feel somewhat isolated. So maybe they turn their attention toward academics. If they don't do well there, all that's left is social, and this is the most influential of the three. They may resort to behavior that goes against their family values if it gets them noticed."

And herein lies the crux, Madler said. The need to be popular is all-consuming, and when he can't be popular in the traditional sense, the middle-schooler will often settle for being "well-known," or "notorious." And that's a relatively new phenomenon.



"They've redefined popularity. It simply means having your name out there, good or bad," Madler said.

That means students may "dummy up" — fail to turn in completed assignments or intentionally score low on a test — to avoid being labeled "smart," which may be synonymous with "nerd."

Or they may pick fights with classmates, and this behavior is increasing disproportionately among girls.

"Yeah, the seventh-grade girl is a totally different animal than the seventh-grade boy," Madler said. "They're more demonstrative, more vocal, more aggressive than they've ever been."

Aggressiveness among girls is a phenomenon unique to this generation, because they're exposed to so much more violence on TV and in music, Madler said. TV's depiction of attractive, successful Survivor vixens has made it more than OK for girls to play the bad guy — it's actually cool to be unkind.

Three vital steps can prevent cancer in women

Dr. Sharad Ghamande
MCG Health System

Being aware of your own body, getting regular check-ups — even after menopause — and knowing your family history are the three vital steps women should take to help prevent gynecological cancer.

Nearly 90,000 women annually are diagnosed with some form of gynecological cancer, which includes endometrial, ovarian and cervical cancer and rarer cancers such as vaginal or vulvar cancers, and tumors of the placenta.

The good news is that most gynecological cancers, if detected early, have a good prognosis.

But the key lies in early detection.

• Endometrial cancer

About 40,000 women a year develop endometrial cancer. While most are women in the post-menopausal stage, younger women can also develop this cancer.

Abnormal bleeding is the most common symptom.

Those women who are overweight, caucasian and who have unopposed estrogen replacement therapy (without progesterone) are most at risk.

If a certain type of colon cancer runs in your family, you may also be at higher risk for endometrial cancer.

A genetic test can help determine this. If a physician suspects endometrial cancer, he may perform an examination, as well as order an ultrasound, Pap smear and endometrial biopsy. Most women do very well after treatment, usually a hysterectomy.

• Ovarian cancer

For all women, there is a 1.4 percent chance that you will develop ovarian cancer in your lifetime. While that sounds like a small risk, the truth is that more than 70 percent of all ovarian cancers are detected once cancer has already spread and it is difficult to treat. Because of this, it is one of the deadliest of all gynecological cancers.

No effective screening test exists for ovarian cancer, but the key is to be cognizant of the symptoms, which include abdominal pain and swelling.

Family history is also quite important. About 10 percent of all ovarian cancers are genetic in origin, and a test is available.

If a genetic test comes back positive, many women opt for prophylactic removal of the ovaries, which reduces the risk of cancer by 95 percent.

Use of birth control reduces the risk by 50 percent.

• Cervical cancer

Thanks to the Pap smear and vigorous education about the human papillomavirus, cervical cancer has become preventable. And statistics have shown that. Since the 1960s, the incidence of cervical cancer has declined dramatically. Only about 14,000 women a year in the U.S. develop cervical cancer.

But this does not mean that women should become complacent. An emphasis should continue to be placed on a yearly Pap smear.

Without this simple test, up to 2 million women every year who have abnormal or precancerous cells in their cervix could go untreated and go on to develop cervical cancer.

Those at risk for cervical cancer continue to almost exclusively be those who have contracted the HPV infection. Smoking and early intercourse are other risk factors.

It's important for parents to discuss the dangers of these risky behaviors, starting with their teenage children. An HPV vaccine is also currently under study and has been found to help prevent the virus types that lead to cervical cancer.

Gynecological cancer can be serious if it is not caught early. If you experience a strange symptom, even something that seems unimportant, don't be embarrassed to talk to your doctor about it. It can't hurt, and may even help you.

Every fair has rides, food and games, but the Greater Columbus State Fair, held at the Columbus Civic Center Sept. 27 to Oct. 2, has even more entertainment.

A rodeo competition, in conjunction with the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association, will take place Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

"It's huge, a full-blown rodeo," said Robin Walker, marketing director for the Columbus Civic Center.

A special evening is also planned by the Columbus Mayor's Council on Diversity during the fair.

Called the International Festival, cultural events and entertainment will be presented.

Walker said the Civic Center approached the Mayor's Council hoping to combine the two events, and the council agreed.

Tickets range in price from $5 to $7 for adults, depending on the day of attendance. Tickets for children 12 and younger are $3.

For more information about the Greater Columbus State Fair, go to the Web site www.columbusciviccenter.org or call 653-4472.

Tickets are available at the Civic Center box office or from the TicketMaster Web site at www.ticketmaster.com.

Soldier Show will perform at Wetherby Field next month

Operation America Cares comes to post

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

The 2005 U.S. Army Soldier Show will come to Fort Benning Oct. 8 on Wetherby Field.

This year's show, themed Operation America Cares, will focus on how Soldiers deal with the stresses of war and deployments and will express how important it is to give those Soldiers a touch of home.

The 90-minute MTV-style song and dance production showcases the talent of 19 active-duty Soldiers who are selected via audition, according to the MWR Web site. More than 400 Soldiers submitted applications to perform in the show and 16 were chosen. Three other Soldiers are audio and lighting technicians.

Once on the road, the Soldiers work an average of 14 hours a day, seven days a week, for six months. In that six months, the Soldiers may travel more than 25,000 miles by bus and airplane for the 100 performances at installations in the U.S., Guam and Korea. The cast and crew also unload, set up and dismantle everything themselves.

The motto, "Entertainment for the Soldier, by the Soldier," mission and philosophy were originated during World War I by Russian immigrant Sgt. Israel Berlin, also known as Irving Berlin. The first show, Yip Yip Yaphank, conceived and directed by Berlin, appeared on Broadway in 1918.

The Soldier Show will showcase a myriad of music genres, including rhythm and blues, country, new wave, gospel, rock, movie themes and patriotic.

Admission and parking for the show are free. Gates will open at 5:30 p.m. and the show will start at 7:30 p.m. Food and beverages will be available for purchase.

Monkey: Business is 'middle' child's attempt to establish identity

three-legged stool

At this point, it's important to clarify, to separate the middle-school child from the institution itself — the middle school. The school is often blamed for behavior characteristic of the age. "Did you hear what happened at that school? My child never acted like that in his last school," is a common refrain.

Indeed, characterizing 10- to 14-year-olds as "middle-schoolers" may result in the unconscious association of school and behavior. That's because society's greatest common denominator is its education system, which is universally divided by age. Terms like "elementary age" or "middle-schoolers" are understood world-wide. It follows then, that age-appropriate behavior is predictable. Talk about "middle-school behavior" and teachers from every corner of the globe roll their eyes and moan. So do parents. Because the behaviors adolescents exhibit at school, en masse, are the same behaviors, in varying degrees, they exhibit at home.

Middle-school angst is not exclusive to school, Madler said, nor is it unique to any one institution.

"Some schools have more problems then others, but overall, all schools deal with the same kinds of issues, whether they're in Portland, Oregon, Los Angeles or Fort Benning," he said. "The only thing that makes us unique is the fact that we're educating military children. And that can be a real strength."

this too shall pass

So what's a parent to do with their middle-school Jekyll-and-Hyde while he weathers adolescence? It's easier said then done, Madler concedes, but the answer isn't nearly as complex as the problem: provide firm, fair, consistent discipline.

"Over the years, my students have shared with me that they believe if their parents loved them, they would discipline them. Our students are at an age where they crave consistency. The more your middle schooler frustrates you, the more you need to remind them that you love them. The more they test and challenge and question you, the more important it becomes for you to listen, not lecture," Madler said.

Here's a compilation of recommended practices from Madler, A Parent's Handbook and the published works of Lisa Khoury, Education Specialist:

• Find ways to stay connected to your child's school. Middle school is typically the time parents discontinue the practice of volunteering, visiting teachers, having lunch with their child.

• Encourage extra-curricular activities. Statistics show students who participate in after-school sports or clubs have less emotional stress and perform better academically.

• Evaluate your conversational techniques. Are you making eye contact? Are you asking open-ended questions? Are you interrupting?

• Get to know your middle-schooler's friends and their parents.

• Never take sides with the child or the teacher until you have the whole story.

• Never say never — "My child would never do that." It's noble to have unconditional faith in your child, but it's also naive.

• Don't be a know-it-all, admit when you're wrong, and pick topics of conversation that your child knows more about than you.

• Take your child's concerns seriously.

• Establish rules for behavior and remain consistent.

• Check homework.

• Give hugs and affirmations daily. Say "I love you." Find a reason to be proud of your child and tell him about it.

Girl Scout troop makes blankets for hurricane kids

Girl Scout Troop 66 gave up their Saturday afternoon to make blankets for the evacuees of Hurricane Katrina on post.

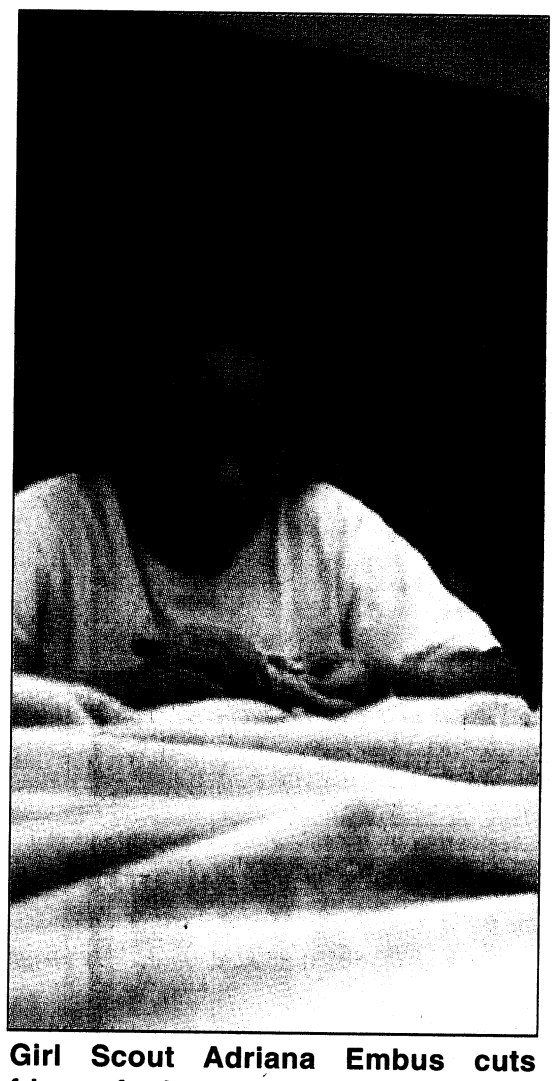
Working in conjunction with Project Linus, a volunteer nonprofit organization that provides homemade blankets to children in need, the troop made 53 blankets.

"The kids approached me for something to do to help the victims of Hurricane Katrina," said Mary Ann Allen, troop leader.

"We had just (made blankets) last February for Project Linus, and the girls wanted to do it again for all the children who arrived on post."

Made of one piece, the washable material is fringed and knotted. The blankets will be given to Fort Benning chaplains for distribution to the evacuees.

"The blankets the girls made are for the evacuees on post, but we're also working with the Red Cross and local churches to distribute the blankets to evacuees in Columbus," said Becky Motes, Project Linus Columbus chapter coordinator.



Project Linus was formed in 1995 following a magazine article featuring a young girl going through chemotherapy. She had said that it was her security blanket that helped her get through the treatments.

There are more than 340 chapters of Project Linus across the country.

Project Linus accepts material donations of cotton or cotton blend fabric, flannel, fleece, low-quilt batting, pre-quilted fabric, pre-printed panels and acrylic yarn.

Gift cards, postage stamps, envelopes and printed paper are also appreciated. Girl Scout Troop 66 will be working again with Project Linus to make blankets for children in Martin Army Community Hospital in February, said Allen.

REFLECTIONS

I spent about 45 minutes one Tuesday afternoon on a dock in the middle of a lake in northwest Iowa. It was swim time at the summer camp where I was volunteering and there were a few campers splashing around.

So, I decided to hold an impromptu belly flop contest. For the huge cash prize of $1, camper after camper would purposefully land on his or her stomach, hoping to be judged as the best belly-flopper.

Forget what onlookers would say or how their midsections would feel in the morning — it was all about the buck. When they emerged from the water, their faces told of the pain that they had just gone through for a dollar.

Some didn't want that kind of pain, so I taught them to do backflips. We had a couple of people who had never done one, but with a little bit of coaching, they were flipping like the pros in just a few minutes.

My constant tag line for this was, "Not only will you leave camp knowing Jesus but you can also do a backflip."

It was really cool to see the look on a camper's face when they came back up from the surface. No matter how the rest of the world perceived the backflip, there was a smile on the flipper's face as he or she came up and heard the applause from the onlookers.

It was the unmistakable mark of one who had just exorcised their inner demons and done something that fear had kept them from doing. The smiles all said one thing — victory!

In life, so many of us are willing to endure a lot of pain for a small reward.

For some, they are willing to wreck a long-term relationship for a short-lived gain.

Others are willing to endanger our lives for a quick fix, whether it is money or just the thrill of getting away with something. Many times, we take huge risks for something that won't last a year.

Just as I was amazed at all the people willing to endure the pain of a belly flop for a measly buck, I am often amazed at other types of pain that people will endure for a reward that doesn't last.

But, sometimes the risk is worth the reward. To learn a new skill can be scary — really scary and life changing.

To meet a new person, to take a new position, to change careers or leave a place that feels like home can make the best of us seize up in fear wondering what will happen next.

Before we know it, we feel like we're 13 years old again, standing on the edge of a dock, about to flip our head over our heels and come within mere inches of certain injury or worse, embarrassment.

But all of this is kid stuff, right? There's a reason we do this stuff when we're younger — we don't know any better. Or at least that's the lie that we tell ourselves.

We like to tell ourselves that we're too old to play around with learning new things or trying new experiences.

We're set in our ways. Our bodies can't do what they used to. And, sometimes, there's some truth to that.

Yet, I can't help but wonder do we stop playing because we grow old or do we grow old because we stop playing?

What would you do if no one was watching?

What's stopping you?

Make plans, find love of your life today

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

"So," I asked the 20-something young lady outside of Carmike 15 theater Saturday night with my digital video camera in hand, red record light flashing, "what's your plan for finding the love of your life?"

She flashed me a beautiful smile and then with all the confidence in the world said, "Uhhhhh?" My next in the series of interviews I was doing for this little video piece we used Sunday at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel was a trio of buff, young men, also 20-something. And with the neon of the movie theater as their backdrop, amazingly, they all three came up with the same answer, "Uhhhhh."

I concluded my video by taping a young basic training Soldier in fresh Class Bs, with an empty flash, and his arm tightly wrapped around "the love of his life" with whom he'd just walked out of the movie theater. I asked the question. He thought for nine seconds, turned to her and said, "Uhhhhh." I think the interview may not have been the only thing that was over at that point!

Isn't it amazing that the single most important decision that you'll ever make in terms of your happiness here on this earth (and it's the second most important decision you'll ever make in your life — want to know what the first is? Give me a call.) has, for most of us, an incredibly thin strategy behind it. The laughable fact is that most of us put more research and planning into buying a used car than we do into purchasing the love of our life, right?

Hawkins

Well, just so that you can't say I stated the problem without providing a solution, here's some great wisdom from a guy who works with more singles on this post than anybody I know — and he's done it for 20 years.

Chaplain Chuck (Maj.) Wood said if you want to come up with something other than "Uhhhh" when it comes to having a strategy for finding the love of your life, keep these three recommendations close at hand.

Gals — What you're looking for in a guy is:

1) A man who has the spiritual basics down (i.e., he has an authentic, daily walk with God to include prayer and scripture reading);

2) A man who is a model servant leader. He knows where he's going professionally, but more importantly emotionally and spiritually — and you can count on him not just to die for you (selfless, servant leader) but to live for you as well. He treats you well.

3) A man who is modeling ministry. He doesn't just talk the talk, he's actually doing something with his spiritual life, he's involved in making a difference in his local chapel or church.

Guys — What are you looking for in a girl? Make it all of the above, just substitute "follower" for "leader" in item No. 2. You want a woman who will pull with you, not against you, as you follow God's guidance closely, navigating the journey of life together.

Sound passé? Sound outdated? Sound awfully narrow? All I know is that a heartfelt faith and the strategy above leads to harmony, excitement, joy and success. I see and hear a lot of other strategies, to include "uhhhhh," and their track record is definitely just a flip of the coin and usually involves a heavy dose of heartache, pain and resentment. I want better for you than that.

If you'd like more info on being "Fit To Be Tied," then come see us at The Chaplain Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza, call us at 545-1760 or feel free to join me and the growing crowd at CrossRoads Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill. It's a casual, contemporary postwide chapel service designed for people who don't usually go to chapel.

"Lord, thou knowest better than I know myself that I am growing older and will someday be old. Keep me from the fatal habit of thinking I must say something on every subject and on every occasion ..."

— the prayer of a seventeenth century nun

TV experiences a sci-fi and fantasy Invasion

Last year, the only new "genre" show (a shorthand term encompassing science fiction, fantasy and horror) on the fall schedule was ABC's Lost.

Thrown together late in the development season by Damon Lindelof (Nash Bridges) and Alias creator J.J. Abrams, its fantastical tale of plane-crash survivors became a pop-culture phenomenon.

This fall, there are six new genre contenders, and it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out why.

Shaun Cassidy, creator of ABC's Invasion, said, "I think you can answer that question in three words: Lost, Lost and Lost."

Last week, The WB Network launched Supernatural, a Tuesday-night spookfest that sends sibling monster-hunters (Jared Padalecki, Jensen Ackles) in search of urban legends.

CBS weighed in on Friday with Threshold, from executive producers Brannon Braga (Star Trek: The Next Generation) and David Goyer (Blade).

"It didn't hurt," said Goyer of the effect of Lost on getting his show picked up.

Supernatural executive producer Eric Kripke isn't so sure, saying, "I don't know why all these shows are happening this season."

Joining Invasion this week is Surface, premiering Monday on NBC, which focuses on a new underwater species of mysterious origin.

Then on Friday is CBS' Ghost Whisperer, starring Jennifer Love Hewitt as a young woman who talks to the departed.

The existence of this show probably owes as much to the success of NBC's midseason hit Medium, also featuring a psychic who communicates with the dead, as it does to Lost.

On Thursday night ABC premieres The Night Stalker, a re-imagining of the 1970s horror series by former X-Files producer Frank Spotnitz.

In pondering the question of "Why genre shows?" Spotnitz spreads the wealth to ABC's other breakout hit of last year, a comedic prime-time soap set in the suburbs.

"The success of Lost and Desperate Housewives," he said, "got everyone — writers, executives, everyone in Hollywood — very excited, because suddenly it seemed possible to have not just hits, but really big hits, with shows that were different. This season, what you've seen is the response to that excitement."

Speaking of Lost, that show returns for its second season on Wednesday, with Invasion occupying a plum slot right after it.

This doesn't mean, though, that Cassidy — whose previous TV work includes Roar, American Gothic and The Agency — thinks success is assured.

"I'm opposite Dick Wolf and Jerry Bruckheimer," Cassidy said, "so I don't think you could ever call that plum. I care about Law & Order and CSI: NY. Those shows are kind of successful, aren't they?"

Because it follows Lost, ABC executives will wait to see if Invasion holds its lead-in's huge audience.

"I have no expectation about holding our lead-in," Cassidy said.

"If our drop-off isn't too steep, that will be good."

Lost and Invasion have one thing in common — both are set in the tropics, if on different sides of the world.

The castaways of Lost survive on an island somewhere in the Pacific, while Invasion is set in Homestead, Fla., near the Everglades, in the path of Atlantic Ocean hurricanes.

Eddie Cibrian stars in Invasion, premiering Wednesday on ABC.

Invasion focuses on a park ranger (Eddie Cibrian, Third Watch) coping with a series of family crises during a hurricane and in its immediate aftermath.

He juggles his pregnant wife (Lisa Sheridan), his brother-in-law (Tyler Labine), his ex-wife (Kari Matchett) and their two children (Ariel Gade, Evan Peters), along with the local sheriff (William Fichtner), the ex's new husband, who has a teen daughter (Alexis Dziena) of his own.

On top of all this is a mysterious threat from lights that fell out of the sky during the storm, although their significance is largely lost amid the hurricane wreckage.

"The hurricane is on the news 24/7," Cassidy said.

"It's the biggest thing in the world. Now there's the aftermath story. Anything in the world could be going on when that's happening, and no one would know about it. That's weapons of mass destruction. That intrigued me.

"One of the other aspects of the show that intrigues me is this blended family. Nobody is right or wrong. Everybody's just human, trying to do what's best for everyone. Nobody is getting it right, because we're all imperfect."

Just Like Heaven — When David (Mark Ruffalo) sublets his San Francisco apartment, the last thing he expected was a roommate.

Suddenly a pretty young woman named Elizabeth (Reese Witherspoon) shows up, adamantly insisting the apartment is hers. David assumes there's been a giant misunderstanding — until Elizabeth disappears as mysteriously as she appeared.

Convinced that she is a ghost, David tries to help her cross over to the "other side." But while Elizabeth has discovered she can walk through walls, she is convinced she is still alive and isn't crossing over anywhere.

Just Like Heaven is rated PG-13 for sexual content.

Cry Wolf — At a prestigious prep school, a student joins a group who make a game out of lying to people.

When the lies start to revolve around murder, a real killer appears and picks off the students one by one.

Starring Jared Padalecki and Jon Bon Jovi.

Cry Wolf is rated PG-13 for violence, terror, disturbing images, language, sexuality and a drug reference.

Lord of War — A wily arms dealer dodges bullets and betrayal as he schemes his way to the top of his profession, only to come face to face with his conscience.

But it's not easy to leave a life of girls, guns and glamour when nobody wants you to stop, not even your enemies.

Starring Nicolas Cage and Jared Leto.

Lord of War is rated R for strong violence, drug use, language and sexuality.

Venom — Set in the Louisiana bayou, Mr. Jangles is a man possessed by 13 evil souls killed by a voodoo priestess.

Mr. Jangles becomes evil and collects keys as trophies from his victims.

Starring Method Man and Bijou Phillips.

Venom is rated R for strong horror violence, gore and language.

The Man — A case of mistaken identity forces federal agent Derrick Vann and dental supply salesman Andy Fidler (Samuel L. Jackson, Eugene Levy) to team up as they speed through the streets of Detroit to pull off a sting operation and solve the murder of Vann's former partner.

The Man is rated PG-13 for language, rude dialogue and violence.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose — In an extremely rare decision, the Catholic church officially recognized the demonic possession of a 19-year-old college freshman.

Told in flashbacks, the movie chronicles the haunting trial of the priest accused of negligence, resulting in the death of the young girl believed to be possessed and the lawyer who takes on the task of defending him.

Starring Laura Linney and Tom Wilkinson.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose is rated PG-13 for thematic material including intense and frightening sequences and disturbing images.

The Brothers Grimm — Brothers Jake and Will Grimm (Matt Damon, Heath Ledger), renowned collectors of folklore, have made a career of traveling from village to village pretending to rid them of "enchanted" creatures.

Their bluff is called, however, when they are forced by Napoleon's French government to investigate a haunted forest where girls have been mysteriously disappearing.

The Brothers Grimm is rated PG-13 for violence, frightening sequences and brief suggestive material.

The Constant Gardener — When a British diplomat's wife — a socially conscious lawyer — turns up dead in Kenya, he sets out to find the truth surrounding her murder.

In the process, he finds out that his wife had been compiling data against a multinational drug company that uses helpless Africans as guinea pigs to test a tuberculosis remedy with unfortunate fatal side effects.

Those who may have had the most reason to silence her are closer to home than he ever imagined.

Starring Ralph Fiennes and Rachel Weisz.

The Constant Gardener is rated R for language, some violent images and sexual content and nudity.

Transporter 2 — Retired in Miami, ex-Special Forces operative Frank Martin (Jason Statham) makes a living driving for the wealthy Billings family.

He's a huge favorite with their two small boys, but when the kids are kidnapped and injected with a potentially fatal virus, Martin defies the FBI and works relentlessly to get the boys to safety and discover the kidnapper's master plan.

Transporter 2 is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of violent action, sexual content, partial nudity and brief language.

Underclassman — A baby-faced 24-year-old detective (Nick Cannon), who never gets the respect he deserves because of his boyish looks, goes undercover in an elite private school where he stumbles upon an international auto-theft ring.

Underclassman is rated PG-13 for violence, sexual references, drug material and teen drinking.

A Sound of Thunder — Set in a near future where time travel is possible, this is the story of a travel agency, Time Safari Inc., that arranges hunting trips for wealthy customers to go back in time to hunt dinosaurs. Each trip is carefully planned, with a scout identifying dinosaurs about to die, so the course of time is not altered by the kill.

However, a nervous hunter steps off the trail, and steps on a butterfly. The historical repercussions of the death of a single butterfly, compounded by millions of years of effects, leaves the hunters to return to a future that is not quite the one they came from.

Starring Edward Burns and Ben Kingsley.

A Sound of Thunder is rated PG-13 for sci-fi violence, partial nudity and language.

SPORTS

The closest finish in NASCAR history took place on March 16, 2003, at the Darlington Raceway in Darlington, S.C. Ricky Craven and Kurt Busch finished the last stretch of the race with their cars touching. Craven was declared the winner, beating Busch by .002 seconds.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• Busch family continues winning

Last week it was rookie Kyle, this week big brother Kurt won the Chevy Rock and Roll 400 at Richmond International Raceway.

The Chase begins this week with the Sylvania 300 with coverage starting at 1:10 p.m. on TNT.

• Messier retires

New York Rangers' Mark Messier retired from the NHL Sept. 12 after a prestigious 25-year career and six Stanley Cup championships.

Messier is ranked second only to Wayne Gretzky on the NHL all-time scoring list.

• They're in

The top 10 NASCAR drivers in the Chase are: Tony Stewart, Greg Biffle, Rusty Wallace, Jimmie Johnson, Kurt Busch, Mark Martin, Jeremy Mayfield, Carl Edwards, Matt Kenseth and Ryan Newman. My pick? Tony.

• Bonds, Barry Bonds

Barry Bonds returned to the San Francisco Giants' roster Sept. 12. Bonds went 1-4 with a double and a strikeout.

Bonds had three operations on his knee since Jan. 31 and received his medical clearance Sept. 10.

• Saints come marching in ...

The New Orleans Saints will play four home games at LSU's Tiger Stadium in Baton Rouge, La., and three in San Antonio, Texas, at the Alamodome. Many of the players are staying at a hotel across from the Alamodome.

• U.S. Open results

Roger Federer beat Andre Agassi for his second straight U.S. Open title and his sixth Grand Slam title.

Kim Clijsters beat Mary Pierce to win the women's title.

Nemechek has own 'chase' to the race

The 01 U.S. Army Chevy of Joe Nemechek battles for position with Chevy driver Tony Stewart Sept. 10 at Richmond International Raceway. Nemechek did not make the top 10 for the Chase.

Joe Nemechek, who currently sits 15th in the driver point standings — 10 positions better than where he was last year at this time — will be looking for some déjà vu as the Nextel Cup season heads into the 10-race homestretch.

During the final 10 races of 2004, Nemechek earned one of the best records on the circuit with one victory, three top-fives, six top-10s and two poles.

The streak started with a sixth-place finish at New Hampshire International Speedway, site of this weekend's Sylvania 300 and the opening race for the Chase for the Nextel Cup.

Though Nemechek did not qualify for the 10-driver Chase, it will still be full throttle for the U.S. Army driver.

"We have our own Chase and that's to finish off the year with results that will put us 11th in points when the checkered flag waves at the season finale in Homestead," said Nemechek.

"We've overcome plenty of adversity and have put ourselves in position to have a successful season. Our Soldiers continue to inspire us and we want to give them a finish that they'll be proud of."

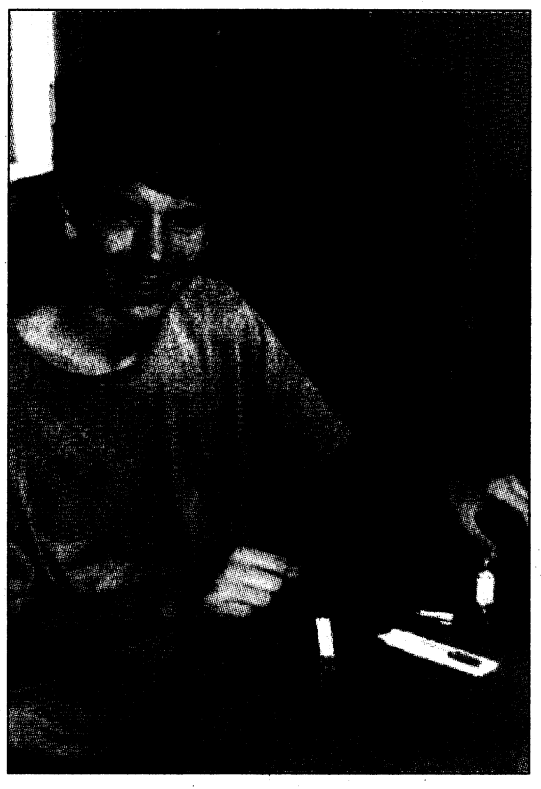
Nemechek could not have picked a better facility than New Hampshire's Magic Mile to begin his quest for the top finishing spot among the non-qualifiers for the Chase.

"I've had success at New Hampshire, including my first career Cup win (Sept. 19, 1999)," said Nemechek. "Along with New Hampshire there are a number of tracks coming up that we have done well at in the past. Barring any unforeseen problems, we should run up front this weekend and get off to a fast start for the final 10-race stretch."

In the July race at New Hampshire, Nemechek had a fast car, but finished 18th.

"That was a weird race for us," said Nemechek.

"The Army Chevy was great, but we not only got boxed in the pits three different times, we also got hit exiting the pits. Every time we started to make a move to the front, a pit-road incident would drop us to the back. Hopefully we won't have to contend with all of that bad stuff this weekend and get the finish that we're capable of achieving."



Crew chief Ryan Pemberton had a similar take about the last race at New Hampshire.

"The way the car ran and the way Joe drove — the 18th-place finish was an injustice," said Pemberton in post-race interviews. "It seemed like every time we were set to make a move something out of our control would happen to stall the momentum."

Aside from claiming his first career Cup win at New Hampshire, Nemechek's first Cup start (July 11, 1993) also came at the New England facility.

"I continue to have a special feeling when I return to New Hampshire," said Nemechek. "My goal this weekend is to add another career highlight to my New Hampshire resume."

Frosh gives diabetes big, fat runaround

Columbus High freshman and cross-country runner, Jeff Terhune, is giving his recently diagnosed diabetes a run for the money. Jeff must test his blood sugar and inject himself with insulin frequently during the day.

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Type I diabetes does not discriminate.

That's what 14-year-old Jeff Terhune and his family found out last November. His parents thought he and his sister, Danielle, just had the flu. But when Jeff's didn't go away, he ended up in the hospital, where doctors diagnosed his diabetes.

"I was kind of out of it when they told me," Jeff said. "And I really didn't know what it was. I was scared at first. Then I got mad and then I got used to it."

Getting used to his diabetes meant sitting through classes at the hospital and learning about his disease, its symptoms and treatment. Jeff said once he knew more about it, he felt better.

His parents, Marty and Jeff, said the first thing that ran through their minds was "why Jeff?"

"We hate needles with a passion," dad Jeff said. "We both thought God had picked the wrong kid and the wrong family to give this particular problem to."

But the next day, Jeff gave himself his first shot of insulin. His mother, father and sister took their turns soon after.

Jeff's Type I diabetes is also called juvenile diabetes or insulin-dependent diabetes. Most who develop the disease do so by the time they are 8, but information published by the National Institutes of Health says it can appear as late as 30.

With this type of diabetes, the cells in the pancreas produce little or no insulin — a hormone that allows glucose to enter the body and be used as fuel.

Jeff said he has gained 30 pounds and grown 3 inches since his diagnosis, since his body is getting the insulin it needs for growth.

But getting his body the right amount of insulin is not an easy process. He has to "stick" himself 10 or more times a day as he tests his blood sugar levels and injects the insulin.

Although his parents admitted to being needle-phobic, Jeff said he wasn't.

"But if you are, you have to

Erin Says...

Capt. Coates is out to an early lead with his bold picks last week that panned out. Sometimes going against the grain, like Melissa picking Miami and them having the upset win, works. Let's see if it works again this week. Ken, better luck this week — don't forget, these are football games you're picking!

Keep yer trap shut

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

"Come on Johnny, get the ball! Move, move, move! What are you doing? Don't be stupid!"

If you've ever attended a youth sporting event, you might have heard a mom or dad yelling these exact same words at their child. I know I have. It might even be you.

This was a 4-year-old in his first soccer game. Have you ever watched 4- and 5-year-olds play soccer? Half of them are talking (or picking their nose and checking it out) and the other half are chasing the ball (in one big pack). It's not a huge competition. If a child gets the ball, it's an accomplishment in it's own right.

That's where Child and Youth Services comes to the rescue. Before a child can go to their first practice, parents have to attend the Parents Association for Youth Sports class and sign a card bascially saying that they will not be that mom or dad screaming at their kid, or any other kid, for that matter.

Of course, some parents will slip through the cracks. Some coaches might even be tempted to ride the slippery slope.

Hey, I admit, it's tempting. My son would let that pack of kids duke it out for the soccer ball and wait for an opening, then sidle up and try to steal it (only from the other team, mind you).

I'd be on the sidelines wanting to yell, "Go after the ball! Be aggressive!" But I didn't.

I realized he was displaying good sportsmanship, and maybe some good sense in not wanting to get run over by four giggling girls in cleats kicking the air wildly in an attempt to make some sort of contact with the ball.

At the Nash household, we are voracious about sports. Most weekends we can be found in our recliners, watching whatever sport is on TV, and cheering or groaning, depending on how our team is doing.

One afternoon, I was watching my beloved Red Sox, yelling at something that had happened that got me fired up. OK, it doesn't take me much to get fired up about sports, but this was the Sox game.

From the kitchen, my husband yelled, "I didn't realize we had one of those TVs."

"One of what TVs?" I asked.

"One of the ones where they can hear you on the other side," he wryly commented.

Busted.

One of my favorite clips is from a boxing match in which a young boxer is getting beaten pretty bad. Suddenly, out of the corner of the screen, you see his mom charge full steam ahead at his opponent, with her shoe raised over her head, and start beating him with it. Not something I'd recommend.

It's our responsibility to display good sportsmanship and teach it to our children. It's the coach's responsibility to set a positive example for their players.

This fall sports season, and every sports season, let's watch our mouths and encourage our children to do their best, whether they're picking their noses or scoring the winning touchdown.

Runner: Not slowing down

get over it," he said.

Jeff said he needs to keep his blood sugar between 80 and 140. Too high, and he can run into long-term health problems with his eyes, heart and kidneys. If it's too low, he could "bottom out" and end up unconscious, in a diabetic seizure or in a diabetic coma, and that's what Marty said scares her.

So he tests himself before he eats, and now has to count his carbs. After a certain amount of carbs in a normal meal, he'll have to give himself a shot of insulin, or talk his family into giving it to him.

"He's really open about it," Marty said. "And he'll let anyone practice on him."

Now, Jeff's getting serious about running, which adds another dimension to monitoring his body. He's made the varsity cross-country team at Columbus High School as a freshman.

"My doctor told me to eat a candy bar before I run," Jeff said. But since running with that in his stomach doesn't appeal to him, he said he prefers to drink some Gatorade half an hour or so before he races.

Columbus coach Randy Whitt said he's had several athletes through his 25 years of coaching who have had some special condition. The two most common, he said, are diabetes and asthma.

And, because runners are burning sugars when they train or compete, he said it's important for the athletes to monitor themselves.

"Distance runners are much more conscious of their bodies than most athletes," Whitt said. "They know their capabilities and their limits. They're going to push those limits though."

Whitt said he's perfectly happy to have athletes with medical conditions, as long as he knows about them. Then, he said, he can take precautions and make sure everyone knows what to do if something happens.

And he's been pleased to have Jeff on the team.

Columbus High's boys' team has won six straight state titles. The girls' team has won eight straight. Within the teams, the top 10 runners make the varsity squad, the rest compete as junior varsity. The top seven runners compete for points at the region and state meets.

"Jeff ran number seven at Carrollton, (Ga.)," Whitt said. "He's young, but he's going to be good. For a freshman to come in and jump in (to varsity) is unusual."

But before the Sept. 10 race in Carrollton, Jeff went head-to-head with his dad in the Country's Midnight Express — a race prefaced by a lecture from dad about commitment to running.

"Dad had been traveling, and I didn't know if he had been working out," Jeff said, and he felt he'd win with the age advantage.

"I ended up beating him by two minutes," he said.

Victories like that, and the 5K he ran Thursday in 20:50, help Jeff deal with the fact that some of his plans for the future — like serving in the military or becoming a pilot — aren't possible now because of his diabetes.

"Since the active-duty military is no longer an option for him, he has had to think about what profession he will join," his father said. "No decision yet, but he's not looking back and saying 'woe is me.'

"I could never have handled it as well as he does. He doesn't let it stop him from doing anything someone without diabetes does. And as he has shown in his cross-country running, he can do about anything and do it well."

Teacher dies from gunshot

Sansom remembered as dedicated

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

A Fort Benning teacher died Saturday at the Columbus Medical Center after being shot in the head Sept. 15 outside her north Columbus apartment.

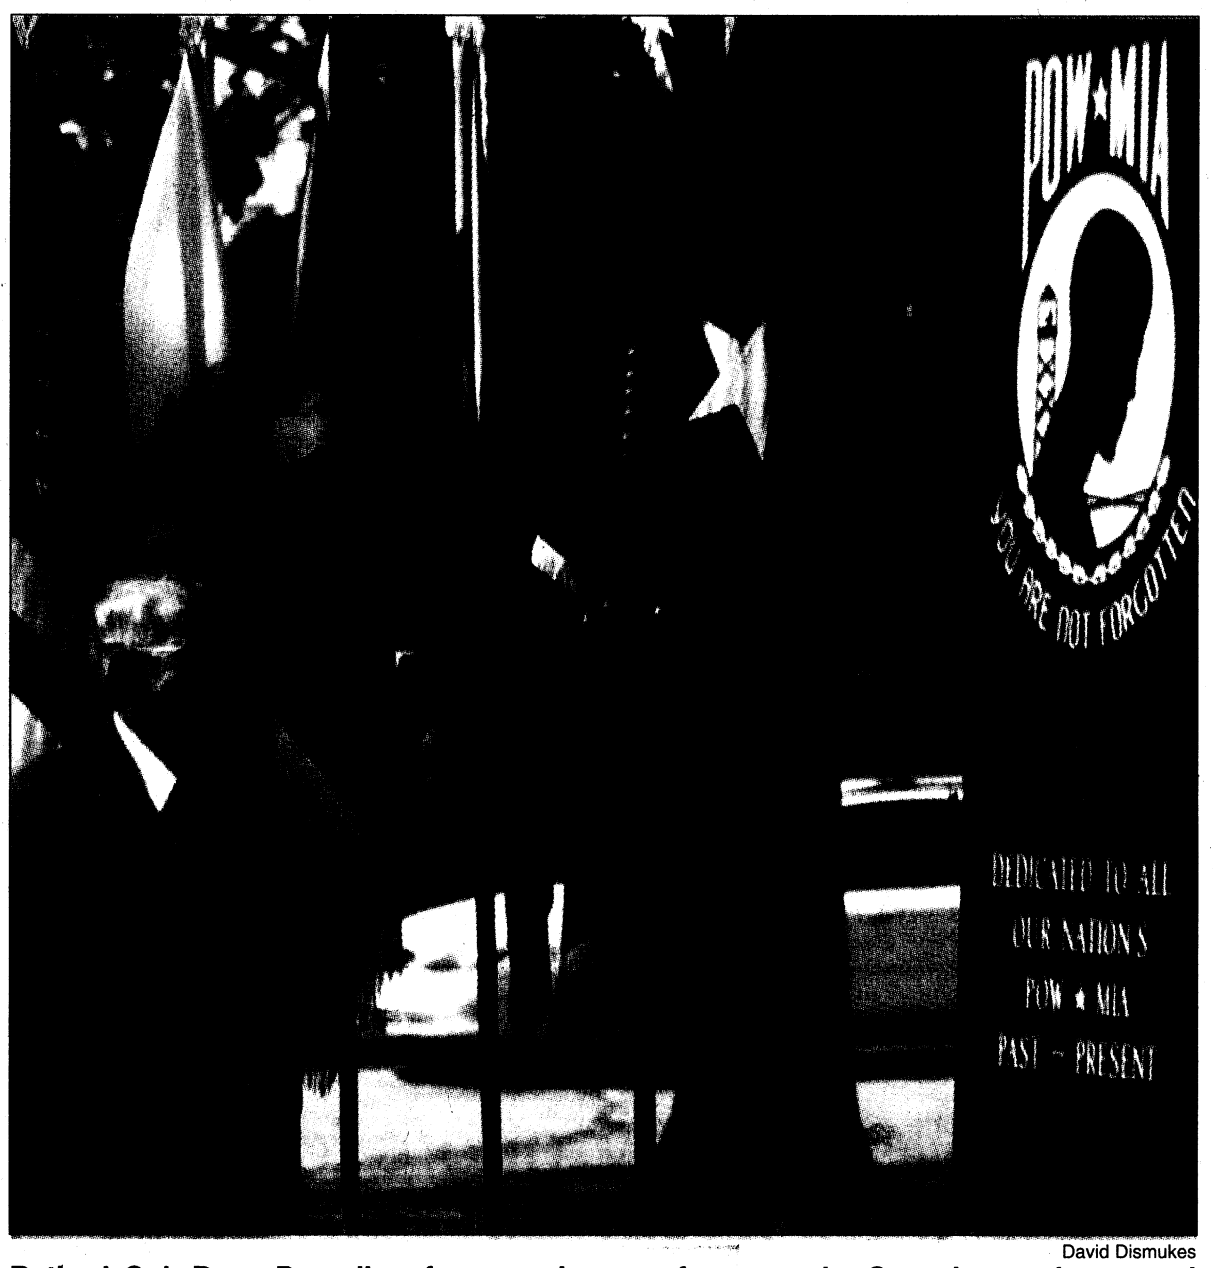
Sherian Sansom, who was a month away from her 63rd birthday, left behind a legacy of love and learning.

"Sherian Sansom loved kids and loved providing opportunities for learning," said Del Hicks, McBride Elementary School principal.

The Mississippi native had taught third-grade language arts at McBride since 1999, when she transferred from Fort McClellan, Ala., when that post closed.

"Her students enjoyed her and counted on her. They knew she would be there for them."
Del Hicks
McBride Elementary School principal

"She was a dedicated classroom teacher," Hicks said. "She was a taskmaster, but that was tempered with concern and compassion."



Hicks said Sansom was the type of educator who had high expectations, but at the same time was understanding of each student's circumstances and distractions.

"Her students enjoyed her and counted on her. They knew she would be there for them," Hicks said.

And the students weren't the only ones who counted on Sansom.

POW/MIA

Retired Col. Dave Purcell, a former prisoner of war, spoke Saturday at the annual POW/MIA Remembrance ceremony, sponsored by the Sergeants Major Association. Here, Purcell gets his first look at the newest monument at the Infantry Museum.

Timeless questions once posed by Shakespeare through the character of King Henry VI in a time of great trial to his kingdom: "Where is faith? Where is loyalty?" And if it cannot be found in a steadfast soldier in the twilight of life, "where shall it find harbor in the earth?"

To honor those whose faith and loyalty have been tested in the hands of America's enemies, and those who remain unaccounted for, from World War II to Operation Iraqi Freedom, a POW-MIA monument was dedicated on Fort Benning Saturday.

The unveiling was the highlight of the second annual Sergeants Major Association's POW-MIA Remembrance. Among the crowd of Soldiers, veterans, family members and community members who gathered on Sacrifice Field were two former POWs who spent nearly 12 years in captivity during the Vietnam War.

Retired Col. Benjamin Purcell's helicopter was shot down and captured over Quong Tri City in South Vietnam in Feb. 1968.

A prisoner for five years, he escaped twice, and spent 58 months in solitary confinement, enduring starvation and torture before he was released in March 1973.

14th CSH operating in New Orleans

The 259 Soldiers of the 14th Combat Support Hospital rolled into New Orleans early Sept. 8. The bus ride from Fort Benning took 14 hours, and it was several days before they saw the wrath of Hurricane Katrina.

"The city is quite devastated," said Col. Jeffrey Haun, the unit's commander, in a conference call Friday. "The extreme devastation is in the city, but now the water is gone, things are drying out and people are trickling in."

For the first few nights, the unit called the D Concourse baggage claim area in the Louis Armstrong International Airport their home-away-from-home. Haun said although the lights were on day and night, the baggage claim area did offer air conditioning and running water.

The airport, a 20-minute drive from the city, is also the site of the 14th CSH's mission — to provide health care to Department of Defense service members supporting the relief efforts

Key terrorists caught in Iraq

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON – Coalition forces captured two key terrorist medical doctors, dealing a serious blow to al Qaeda attempts to establish treatment facilities for terrorists in Iraq, military officials announced this week.

Coalition forces acting on multiple intelligence sources and tips from citizens raided two locations in the Baghdad and Baqubah regions Aug. 29 and 30 to capture terrorists operating in the areas, officials said.

Anis Abd-al-Razaq Ali Muhammad, also known as Dr. Anis or Dr. Saad, was captured during those raids. Saad is an admitted terrorist and senior member of al Qaeda in Iraq.

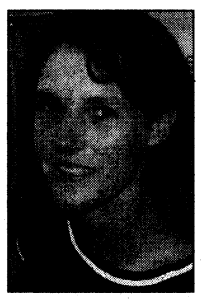
Coalition forces also captured Mazen Mahdi Salih Mahdi Khudayr, also known as Abu Abdullah, Dr. Mazen or Dr. Layth. He is an admitted senior terrorist, weapons dealer and medical doctor who worked for an al Qaeda leader in Baghdad.

In addition to treating wounded terrorists, Layth sold weapons and explosives to terrorists to kill Iraqi security and coalition forces. He has admitted to visiting neighboring countries to buy weapons and explosives and smuggling them back into Iraq, where he sold them to terrorists in Baghdad. One such purchase provided arms to an assassination platoon, according to documents recovered by coalition forces.

Saad, one of the terrorist organization's physicians, is a pharmacist, but was also acting as an unaccredited medical doctor, treating terrorists in and around the Baghdad area. He prescribed and provided drugs and medication and was involved in the treatment of terrorists' wounds.

Additionally, senior members of the al Qaeda terrorist network in Baghdad commissioned Saad and Layth to open a clinic to treat terrorists in the area.

They met on numerous occasions to discuss the endeavor and were in the process of selecting a suitable location and obtaining additional assistance when they were captured.



This is the second known instance of terrorists attempting to open such a facility in the area, officials said.

Another doctor, who was captured in June, was also commissioned by senior al Qaeda leaders to set up a clinic to treat wounded terrorists.

EDUCATION

Good teachers do so much more

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

So, what does make a good teacher? When I was younger, I pondered that question when I was trying to decide what I wanted to be when I grew up. On one day, I wanted to be a teacher, on the next, it was a lawyer. In the end, Soldier won out.

I've had the privilege of being a part of my children's education for the past 13 years, and being involved in everything from teaching them about dada and dogs to tying shoes and brushing teeth.

When my guys turned 5, it was time to hand them over to the real professionals, those men and women with the training and experience to take them on new adventures in learning. In all, I've met more than 40 teachers who have had an impact on my boys from preschool through now.

That number amazed me. Except for my oldest's preschool teachers, I can name them. And for all their different teaching styles and personalities, I haven't found one I haven't liked after I took the time to talk with them and get to know their teaching style.

Teachers don't have easy jobs. In fact, I've decided it's really hard to define their job. They're part parent, part educator, with a lot of coach, mentor, cheerleader, counselor, tour guide, actor, public speaker, motivational speaker, professional organizer, and clerk-typist.

Not only do they have to know the ins and outs of education — and how best to teach the students in the age group they're teaching — but they have to keep up with the cutting edge of technology, be in the know about what's going on in the world, and also be able to use a laminating machine, produce thousands of die-cut shapes for art projects and sometimes even perform maintenance on the school copiers.

Yes, the best teachers are the ones who can pull all of that off while making it look easy and making learning fun for their students.

While I think it's important for teachers to connect with their students, it's not necessary for them to be their students' best friends.

Several years ago at an open house, a teacher warned parents that his students would complain that they didn't like him.

He was right. But he was also right when he said those same students would come back and visit him long after they had left his classroom and moved on to the middle school. I watched two boys detour into his classroom to say hi without any prompting from their parents.

He had reached them, although they may not understand just how much until they are a lot older.

What he taught them that year was the importance of personal discipline in their educational experience. He may not have been their friend, but he was their teacher. He taught them skills they can use in and out of the classroom.

We ask a lot of our teachers. We want them to be knowledgeable, patient, kind, flexible, resourceful, enthusiastic, efficient, honest and committed.

Let's be all that for them, too.

Call game on account of pain

Elsie Jackson
Public Affairs Office

A hurricane named Katrina wreaked havoc across an entire region three weeks ago, with blatant disregard for race, age, religion, gender, hair color, IQ, height, weight or any other characteristic used to categorize a population.

Katrina reduced it to two — those in her path, and those who weren't.

The chaos Katrina left in her wake brought new meaning to the term "disaster," and the rain was still falling when the blame game kicked off.

Please.

How about we just call the game off on account of pain and get to the business at hand? There are people to feed and clothe, homes to find, and pets to care for until their families, or new families, find them. Those are just the immediate needs.

Last week, the president outlined the government's commitment for the Gulf Coast's recovery. He talked about how much had already been done, how much money has been spent, and how much more will be spent.

The president has taken a lot of the blame for the actions or inactions of his staff, as any commander would do.

During his speech, he did not talk about disaster drills and plans that failed when it was time to execute.

There are those who will say he avoided the topic because he didn't want to take the rap.

I prefer to think it was because he chose to focus on what needs to be done today to build a tomorrow.

I'm sure if I were living through the hell Katrina left behind, I would be angry. I might convince myself that too little help came too late.

I would overlook how long it takes a large scale operation to get underway, that preparedness starts at home, and that the FEMA web site makes it very clear that, in the event of a major disaster, I would be on my own for a few days, maybe longer, until help arrives.

We live in a fast food world where people expect instant gratification. Too bad there's no Hogwarts School of Magic graduate who can wave a magic wand and put everything back exactly the way it was. Now. Right now.

There is no magic wand. All we have is grass roots help working person to person, church to church.

All we have are agencies like the Red Cross and Salvation Army who have more resources but can't move with the same speed as the grass roots help.

All we have is a government that is committing to recovery.

Let's be thankful for the grass roots help that was sending trucks loaded with stuff most of us take for granted as soon as the roads were clear enough to get there. Unhampered by bureaucracy, they were providing basic needs until larger agencies got fully mobilized. (Now gather up supplies to send with them on their next trip).

Let's be thankful for the agencies in between the grass roots help and the government, who step up to the plate every time they are called. (And don't just write, but send a check to help them fund their efforts).

We've wasted enough energy playing the blame game.

Modern TV offers look at really strong women

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I've always loved TV. I grew up watching Family Affair, The Brady Bunch, The Dukes of Hazzard and all the shows that are now classic TV. Now I'm addicted to reality shows. I watch The Apprentice, The Amazing Race, Big Brother and various others.

I've watched most of the 11 seasons of Survivor, but sometimes the contestants were just not appealing enough for me to watch, not interesting enough.

It seems like there's always "the jock," "the old person," "the beauty," and "the villain." If those people don't fit their "type," I lose interest.

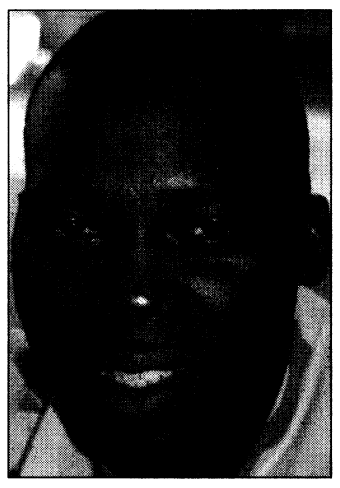
In the 10th season, Stephenie was my favorite. She was tougher, mentally and physically, than everyone put together. She had the strength of the Incredible Hulk. She seldom whined, she never quit, and she looked darn good for having been stuck in the middle of nowhere for a month.

When the season started last week, they hinted in the previews of two past Survivor contestants coming back. I figured it was Richard Hatch trying to get some money to pay his taxes, or Johnny Fairplay, who "faked" his grandmother's death to win a prize. But no, it was my girl — Stephenie is back. (So is Bobby Jon, also from last season.)

So what is it about Stephenie that will keep me watching unless she gets voted off? She's a great role model for women of all ages, and I want to learn from her. I don't want to learn how to play the game of Survivor, I want to learn how to be cool under pressure, how to never quit and how to be fair.

In her biography on the Survivor Web site, she describes herself as "relentless, persuasive, extremely competitive, dramatic and friendly" and the youngest of five children — the only girl.

I'm willing to bet that growing up with four older brothers helped her develop the strength she never seems to run out of.

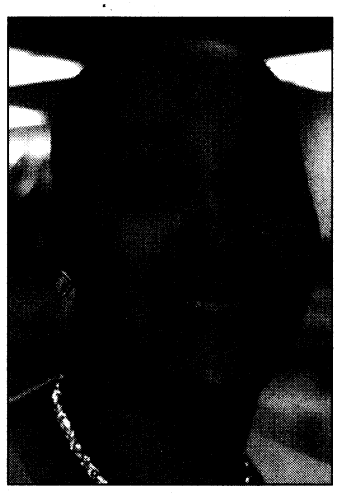


Stephenie was offered athletic and academic scholarships to two universities. In high school, she swam, played varsity lacrosse and field hockey. It's easy to see she's an athlete. That inspires me, because although I loathe any form of exercise, I do want to get in shape, and Stephenie has provided that extra shove I needed.

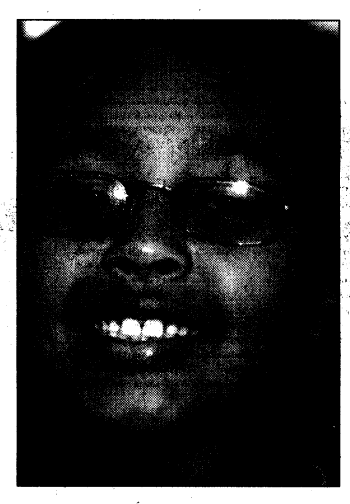
Stephenie should win Survivor. I was disappointed last year when she was voted out. She was too much of a threat, because everyone knew that she could do it.

So I'll watch Survivor this season — if Stephenie doesn't win, hopefully she'll stick around long enough for me to want to watch even if she's gone.

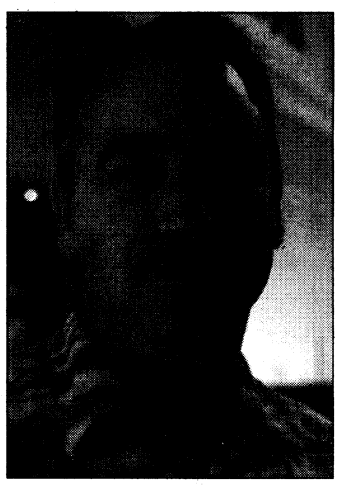
VARIOUS VOICES



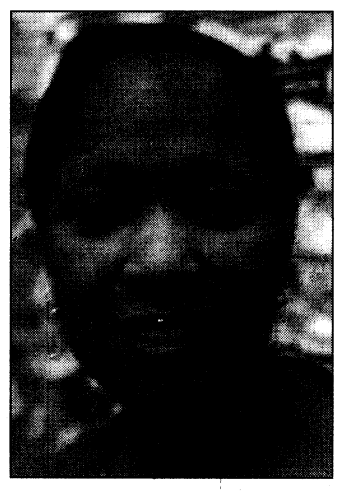
What qualities make a good teacher?



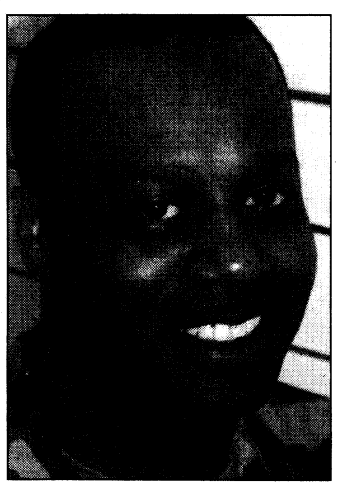
Staff Sgt. Joseph Eatmon, 81st Regional Support Command — "My drill sergeant in basic training was an excellent teacher. He was hard, but fair, and it made me want to be a Soldier."



Brittany Miller, family member — "A good teacher gets along with her students and interacts well with them. She gets to know them. She can control the class."



Konta Johnson, family member — "They have to know the subject well. My favorite teacher in college knew the subject well, and she made it worth knowing, because she made sure we understood why we were learning it."



Terrell Hearn, family member — "Last year, my teacher was a good teacher. She was strict and nice at the same time, and she was funny and good at teaching."

Retired 1st Sgt. Bill Hogue, Cataula, Ga. — "Leadership style is important. They need to have the ability to really listen to their students and interact with them."

Ethel Johnson, AAFES employee — "There's more to teaching than just teaching. A good teacher has to listen well and take the time to get to know the students. And they have to respect the students just as they have to have their students' respect."

Sgt. Verdis Oden, 1209th Quartermaster — "A good teacher needs to be patient and understanding. They need to understand the age group they teach."

Katrina brings Soldier's family to Columbus

Operation We Care helps with needs

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The last time Sgt. 1st Class Erasmus "Roz" Evans saw his hometown was in June.

Now the Fort Benning Soldier is not sure what his old neighborhood in New Orleans looks like.

Evans and his family moved to Louisiana from Panama in 1978, putting down roots in the area recently devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

Now his sister, older brother and their families are putting down new roots in Columbus.

The 10, including their youngest brother and an aunt and uncle, left New Orleans Aug. 28 ahead of the storm. His younger brother continued north to Atlanta, but the rest of the group overwhelmed Evans' house — already filled with his family of seven.

Evans' mother is staying with his family, while his older brother and sister have moved into adjacent apartments just outside the Fort Benning gate.

Amelia Blackmon is the oldest of the siblings. She left Panama on her 17th birthday.

"It was a total uprooting," she said. "Although we spoke English at home, everything else (in Panama) was in Spanish."

Their grandfather, who had emigrated from the West Indies, worked on the Panama Canal. And, although the family lived on the "American" side, Amelia said they couldn't attend the American schools.

Now, 27 years later, she is experiencing another "total uprooting."

In the years she's lived in the New Orleans' suburb of West Wego, she had never evacuated because of a hurricane, and had only gone to a shelter once. For her, Friday, Aug. 26, was a "normal day."

She left her part-time job, anticipating returning on Monday to find out if she had been selected for a full-time position. Then she went to the Saints football game.

On Saturday morning, she headed for the city and felt a cool breeze.

"I thought, this doesn't feel right," she said.

So she tuned in to the radio weather station and went home, noticing the "doggie boutique" at the corner of the expressway had been boarded up since she drove past it the night before.

"Last year I said 'this was it,'" she said. "Next time we're leaving. We've been so blessed so far."

Immediately, the 18 family members in the area started making plans to evacuate.

The closest hotel rooms they could find were near relatives in Arkansas. Some headed north, the rest headed for Columbus.

They came in two cars and a truck — six adults, four children and two dogs.

"We knew it was going to be just a couple days' vacation at Roz's house," Amelia said. "Never in our wildest dreams did we think this was going to be the one."

Petty Officer 3rd Class John P. Curtis

U.S. Navy seabees, assigned to Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 40, drive a truck loaded with a 750-kilowatt generator through the streets of New Orleans Sept. 10.

Typically a five or six-hour journey, the trip took them 24 hours. And, she she said, they left with only a few changes of clothes, and didn't pick up the inhaler or breathing machine her son, David, needs for his asthma.

"I don't even have a picture of my son," Amelia said. "Everything can be replaced but the pictures."

But, she said, things are looking up for them.

"The folks in Columbus and Fort Benning have been very nice to us," she said.

Through Operation We Care, a group started on post to help those families who evacuated to Fort Benning, she got a computer, some dishes and pots and pans. Her brother's co-workers donated cash, gift cards and furniture.

"I just want to bring back a sense of normalcy for my son," she said. "He was six months old when I moved into the apartment."

She said she'll go back eventually, to see if there's anything salvageable from that apartment, but said she won't take David. She doesn't want him to see the damage. Even if the apartment complex is OK and they have a place to live, she said her job was in New Orleans.

Her youngest brother, Jorge, doesn't know for sure what the damage is to his home. The initial report was it was under 8 feet of water.

"He was right next to the Harvey Canal," Amelia said. "And the pictures you saw on TV of the Circle Food Store, where the water was halfway up the building — that was right down the street. We know his house was under water."

Alfredo, the oldest of the brothers, said he may head down to New Orleans within a few weeks to work in the clean up efforts. He may be able to put his skills as a diesel mechanic to good use, but right now, he's dealing with health issues and said he's having a hard time with his insurance company.

Amelia said she has similar woes. She's received several letters from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, but none of the aid. Her former employer still owes her a check for the last week she worked that ended right before the hurricane hit.

But through Columbus' Enrichment Services, she and David have a roof over their heads, and the rent is paid until Nov. 1.

Amelia's registered with an employment agency and looking for work in human resources. David and one of his cousins are enrolled in Eddy Middle School.

She said if she can find a good job, she'll make Columbus her permanent home. She's learning her way around, and coming to grips with the fact that local restaurant's spicy chicken just doesn't measure up to New Orleans fare.

"We didn't lose everything," she said. "We have our lives. Some weren't so lucky. We were blessed. But we still have two months of hurricane season. God forbid that another hurricane hits New Orleans."

Sitting at his computer, Evans is able to pull up a Web site with satellite images of New Orleans, both before and after the hurricane. By following the expressway with the mouse, he can point right to his families' homes.

"Amelia's neighbor said the roof was torn off the apartment complex," Evans said. "But we have no idea what the real damage is. Right now, I'm just trying to help out, and help them find jobs."

He's also submitting paperwork, again, to have his mother made his dependent.

"I'm hoping it gets approved this time," he said.

SOCOM general tours WHINSEC simulation drug lab

New lab more realistic of actual conditions

Jo Kennedy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Gen. Bantz J. Craddock, combatant commander of the U.S. Southern Command, visited the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, in part to view the Institute's improved simulated drug laboratory used for counternarcotic training.

U.S. and foreign guest instructors from the Institute's Department of Tactics and Special Operations have worked for nine months redesigning and reconstructing the site.

The effort required $20,000 worth of building materials and more than a dozen WHINSEC personnel, including DTSOs Columbian guest instructor Maj. Alberto Romero, who headed the remodeling process of the four-building structure.

"The old drug lab was not even closely constructed to the realistic conditions of a typical Colombian drug lab," said Romero, who received extensive counternarcotic trafficking experience while serving in the Colombian special forces.

"But the site is perfectly suited for recreating the conditions surrounding a typical drug lab," he said, pointing out that the lab is located in a basin, surrounded by woods and close to a river, all essential elements for the concealment and transport of narcotics in a realistic operation.

Romero said the mission for the summer was to remove the single-structured, exposed training lab and, in its place, create a realistic South American-style drug lab.

Plans included acquiring typical drug lab materials, such as an electric plant, microwave ovens, weight scales, and flour to simulate cocaine.

These will be added to the buildings this month during the "interior decorating phase" in time for the next Counter-narcotics Operations Course for military and police students, mostly from El Salvador, Romero said.

Maj. William Worley, DTSO chief, said that the success of the endeavor is directly related to the Soldiers' ability to work as a team.

"We all win in the end as we work to provide the most realistic and demanding training possible for our allied nations in the Global War on Terrorism through counternarcotic efforts."

Post to celebrate Hispanic heritage

Monday's program features HRC CG as guest speaker

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

In 1968, Congress authorized President Lyndon B. Johnson to proclaim one week in September as National Hispanic Heritage Week.

Created to celebrate the culture and traditions of U.S. residents who trace their roots to Spain, Mexico, the Caribbean, Central America and South America, the observation was extended in 1988 to Sept. 15 through Oct. 15.

Now called Hispanic Heritage Month, Fort Benning celebrates the observation with the theme, "Hispanic Americans — Strong and Colorful Threads in the American Fabric."

"With Hispanics coming from so many diverse backgrounds, they really helped strengthen the culture of the United States," said Sgt. 1st Class Evlyn Hearne, Equal Opportunity advisor with the Equal Opportunity Office.

The monthlong event will feature a one-hour celebration at 11 a.m Sept. 26 in Marshall Auditorium at Infantry Hall. Brig. Gen. Rhett A. Hernandez, commanding general of the Human Resources Command will be the guest speaker. A Hispanic-American food sampling will follow in Classroom 9.

In addition to the post observance, all the dining facilities will feature a Hispanic-themed meal once a week for the next month, Hearne said.

The U.S. Census Bureau estimates more than 41 million Americans are of Hispanic origin, making Hispanics the largest minority population in the country, with more than 1 million Latino veterans of the U.S. armed forces.

According to the Office of Army Demographics, there are more than 128,000 people of Hispanic heritage currently serving on active-duty today.

For more information about Fort Benning's Hispanic Heritage month, call 545-6665.

BEING DEPLOYED?

PURCHASE THE BEST VALUE PREPAID CARD AT YOUR MILITARY EXCHANGE

AT&T Global PrePaid Cards offer low rates that are optimized for military personnel calling home to the U.S.

The 550-Unit AT&T Global PrePaid Card offers deployed soldiers the best value when calling to the U.S. from Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom — just 19¢ a minute when the Card is purchased at any OEF/OIF location. When purchased online or at other Exchange locations in the U.S. and around the world, it's just 21¢ a minute.*

★ Where can AT&T Global PrePaid Cards be purchased?
Buy yours at your local Exchange or online at www.aafes.com. Friends and family of military personnel can also purchase Cards for you at this site. When deployed in Iraq, Afghanistan and Kuwait, Cards can be purchased at the Exchange, where the price of the 550-Unit Card is just $35.

★ What's the difference between minutes and units?
When calling within the U.S., 1 unit equals 1 minute of calling. When making international calls from overseas, more units are used per minute of call time and the number of units is different based on the country you are calling from. For example, when using the 550-Unit Card, for calls made from OEF/OIF to the U.S., 1 minute equals 3 units of call time. So the 550-Unit Card is good for 183 minutes of calling. For information on other countries, just call the 800 Customer Service number on the back of your Card.

★ Optimized military rates. Great AT&T benefits:
- Minutes never expire.
- Low rates. Remember, prepaid cards bought at other retailers may have higher overseas rates.
- Recharge with AT&T Autominutes® and never run out of minutes.
- Toll free Customer Service available 24/7.
- INFO TO GO available† with weather, sports and more!

★ Visit Camp AT&T.
Before you're deployed, go to www.att.com/mil and check out the Camp AT&T section. It contains information on calling from all the forward-deployed areas, other overseas locations and from U.S. Naval ships.

AT&T

*A surcharge of at least 10 units/minutes (subject to increase) applies to pay phone calls. Units are based on U.S. domestic calling. International rates are higher than U.S. domestic rates, differ according to destination called and are subject to change. Rates may be higher for calls made to or from mobile phones. See Card for details. †Use of Info To Go information services will incur an additional charge to your Card balance. © 2005 AT&T. Oldest original Buffalo Soldier dies at 111

Joe Holley
Washington Post

Retired 1st Sgt. Mark Matthews, 111, one of the last of the nation's legendary Buffalo Soldiers, died of pneumonia Sept. 6 at Fox Chase Nursing Home in Washington, D.C.

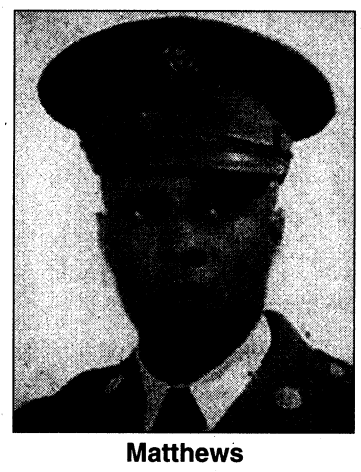
Matthews, who also was the oldest Buffalo Soldier, was heir to a proud military heritage that originated with the black Soldiers who fought in the Indian wars on the Western frontier.

Historians say that the Cheyenne, Kiowa and Apache tribes bestowed the appellation because the Soldiers' black, curly hair reminded them of a buffalo's mane.

Given the Native American reverence for the sturdy animal of the Plains, the Soldiers wore the nickname proudly — and with good reason.

The Buffalo Soldiers won 20 Medals of Honor, more than any other regiment.

They also helped lay hundreds of miles of roads and telegraph lines, protected stagecoaches, were involved in the military actions against the Apache chiefs Victorio and Geronimo and fought bravely in Cuba at the side of Teddy Roosevelt's Rough Riders during the Spanish-American War.



Matthews joined the Army at the end of the Buffalo Soldiers' colorful western exploits. The regiments that made up the Buffalo Soldiers, the 9th and 10th cavalries and 24th and 25th Infantries, stayed together for years afterward.

However, after fighting in World War I, II and Korea, the all-black regiments were disbanded in 1952 following Army desegregation.

Matthews was born Aug. 7, 1894, in Greenville, Ala., and grew up in Mansfield, Ohio. He starting riding horses when he was a child, delivering newspapers on his pony.

According to stories Matthews told friends, family members and at least one military historian, he was 15 when he met members of the Buffalo Soldiers' 10th Cavalry. They were visiting a Lexington, Ky., racetrack where he worked exercising the horses.

When the Soldiers told him that they rode horseback wherever they went, he had to join them.

Although young men had to be 17 to enlist, his boss concocted documents that convinced a Columbus, Ohio, recruiter that he was of age.

"I was 16 when I joined the Army to be a Soldier," he told Parade Magazine in 2003. "I had to wait awhile before I could get on duty. But then they shipped me to the west."

Fort Huachuca, Ariz., where he was first stationed, was still using local Indians as guides.

"I learned all the different rules, how to ride the different horses, how to jump and how to shoot," he recalled in the 2003 interview.

"Every time I got in a contest where I shot at a target or something, I usually won."

He served along the U.S.-Mexican border as part of Gen. John Joseph "Black Jack" Pershing's 1916 expedition into Mexico, on the trail of Mexican bandit and revolutionary Pancho Villa.

"I never met him," Matthews said in the Parade interview, "but I knew where he was at."

In 1931, he was assigned to Fort Myer, where he trained recruits in horsemanship, helped tend the presidential stable for Franklin D. Roosevelt and played on the polo team.

Ten years later, although he was in his late forties when the United States entered World War II, he saw action on Saipan in the South Pacific.

He retired from the Army in 1949 and became a security guard at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda.

He retired a second time, as chief of guards, in 1970.

In retirement, he liked to fish. He also enjoyed sitting on the front porch and telling tales about the old days out west and the not-quite-so-old days in the Pacific during World War II, often to neighborhood kids who came around and sat at the knee of a man who had experienced an adventure-novel's worth of stirring chapters in U.S. history.

He spent time with the children, enjoyed looking after them. He took them fishing with him, made sure they got to school, and took them in if they needed a place to stay.

"They called him Daddy," daughter Mary Matthews Watson recalled.

He met President Bill Clinton at the White House, and in 2002 marked his 108th birthday with Secretary of State Colin Powell, who for many years campaigned for a monument honoring the Buffalo Soldiers.

In 1992, Powell, then-chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, dedicated the monument at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., birthplace of one of the regiments.

Matthews was believed to be Washington's oldest man. The District's Office on Aging lists a woman, Corrine Taylor, as slightly older.

Matthews, who lived with his daughter for more than half a century, had been in good health until recently.

Before he began to lose his eyesight to glaucoma about 10 years ago, he enjoyed reading his Bible daily.

He was a former member and trustee of Trinity AME Zion Church in the District, a member of Prince Hall Masonic Temple and a member of the Washington, D.C., Chapter of the 9th and 10th (Horse) Cavalry Association.

His wife of 57 years, Genevieve Hill Matthews, died in 1986.

A daughter, Shirley Ann Matthews Mills, died in 1988.

In addition to Watson, of Washington, survivors include two other daughters, Gloria J. Matthews, also of Washington, D.C., and Barbara Jean Young of Dacula, Ga., a son, Mark Matthews Jr. of Hyattsville, Md., nine grandchildren and 17 great-grandchildren.

"I did it all," Matthews told The Washington Post a few years ago.

"Yes, I was there."

Afghan election disproves critics, Rumsfeld said

Sgt. Sara Wood
American Forces Press Services

The successful parliamentary elections in Afghanistan Sept. 18 have proven wrong all critics of U.S. efforts in that country, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said in a Pentagon news briefing recently. Critics of the war in Afghanistan were not just wrong, they were harmful because they made the cause seem hopeless, Rumsfeld said. The millions of Afghan citizens who turned out to vote proved them wrong, and terrorists weren't able to affect the elections, he said.

"Terrorists have done everything in their power to try to intimidate the millions of Afghan voters and the literally thousands of candidates from participating in their elections," he said. "And they failed this week, just as they failed in the successful presidential elections."

The magnitude of what happened in Afghanistan should not be ignored, Rumsfeld said. A country that was host to Osama bin Laden and terrorist training camps and endured decades of civil war, Soviet occupation, drought and Taliban brutality is now a democracy that fights terrorists, he said.

The very critics who foretold doom in Afghanistan are saying the same thing about Iraq, but they will be proven wrong once again, the secretary said. The Iraqis have already formed a government that incorporates the views of the different factions, have held representative elections, and have drafted a constitution that includes respect for individual rights, he said. The Iraqis and the coalition have a plan that will continue to develop the country, he said.

The wars in Afghanistan and Iraq will be looked back on with perspective, Rumsfeld noted, and will be remembered for their greater purpose.

"(History) will not be (about) the daily violence or short-term setbacks, nor which person won the battle for a daily headline by predicting doom and gloom over and over," he said. "Instead, it will show that the battle in Afghanistan and Iraq is tough and ugly to be sure, but that America was on freedom's side. And it will remember the millions of people who have been freed and the hundreds of thousands who helped them achieve that freedom."

U.S. capable of defense and relief aid

Efforts home and abroad to continue

Sgt. Sara Wood
American Forces Press Service

The U.S. military is fully capable of fulfilling all its responsibilities, including homeland defense and relief efforts, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and Air Force Gen. Richard B. Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said in a Pentagon news briefing Tuesday.

After deploying more than 50,000 National Guard troops to help with Hurricane Katrina recovery, Army Lt. Gen. H. Steven Blum, chief of the National Guard Bureau, reported that there were still hundreds of thousands of troops available for deployment, Rumsfeld said.

The active-duty force also has capabilities to support relief efforts and sustain the missions in Iraq and Afghanistan, he said.

"You can't do everything in the world, but you can do the things that you're organized and trained and equipped to do," Rumsfeld said.

Rebalancing the Army has caused a reliance on National Guard troops for the war in Iraq, Myers said, adding that the next rotation there will use more active-duty forces.

Also, the number of National Guard tank and artillery units is being reduced, leaving room for units that are more relevant to homeland defense, he said.

Myers said that re-enlistment and morale in the National Guard is at an all-time high, increasing readiness.

"We have a Guard force that has never been more ready to support whatever mission the country calls upon it for," he said.

"This is a very effective force; they like to be called upon."

In preparation for the landfall of Hurricane Rita, the Defense Department is planning measures and anticipating the needs of state and local authorities, Myers said.

Taking aim on urban ops

Photos by Lori Egan

Pvts. William Fisher and Curtis Johnson learn the correct procedures on how to clear a room during training Tuesday at Malone MOUT. Sgt. 1st Class Loman Evans said MOUT training includes learning how to cross danger areas, techniques for staying low, how to identify targets — the basics of urban operations.

Pvt. Casey O'Malley aims his sights on the stairway as the rest of the "stack" takes their positions. Stacks are four-man teams that work together during urban operations.

Pvt. William Fisher prepares to enter a room. Once the Soldiers clear a room, a status report is given before the Soldiers proceed to the next objective.

MOUT training gives Soldiers adrenaline rush

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The battle for Fallujah last November illustrated the need for Soldiers to be trained in urban operations, said Capt. Scott Dillard. And that is what he does.

As commander of E Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Dillard is responsible for graduating Infantry Soldiers ready for assignments with deploying units.

"In Iraq, especially, the fight is in the urban areas," Dillard said Tuesday as his Soldiers trained at Malone MOUT.

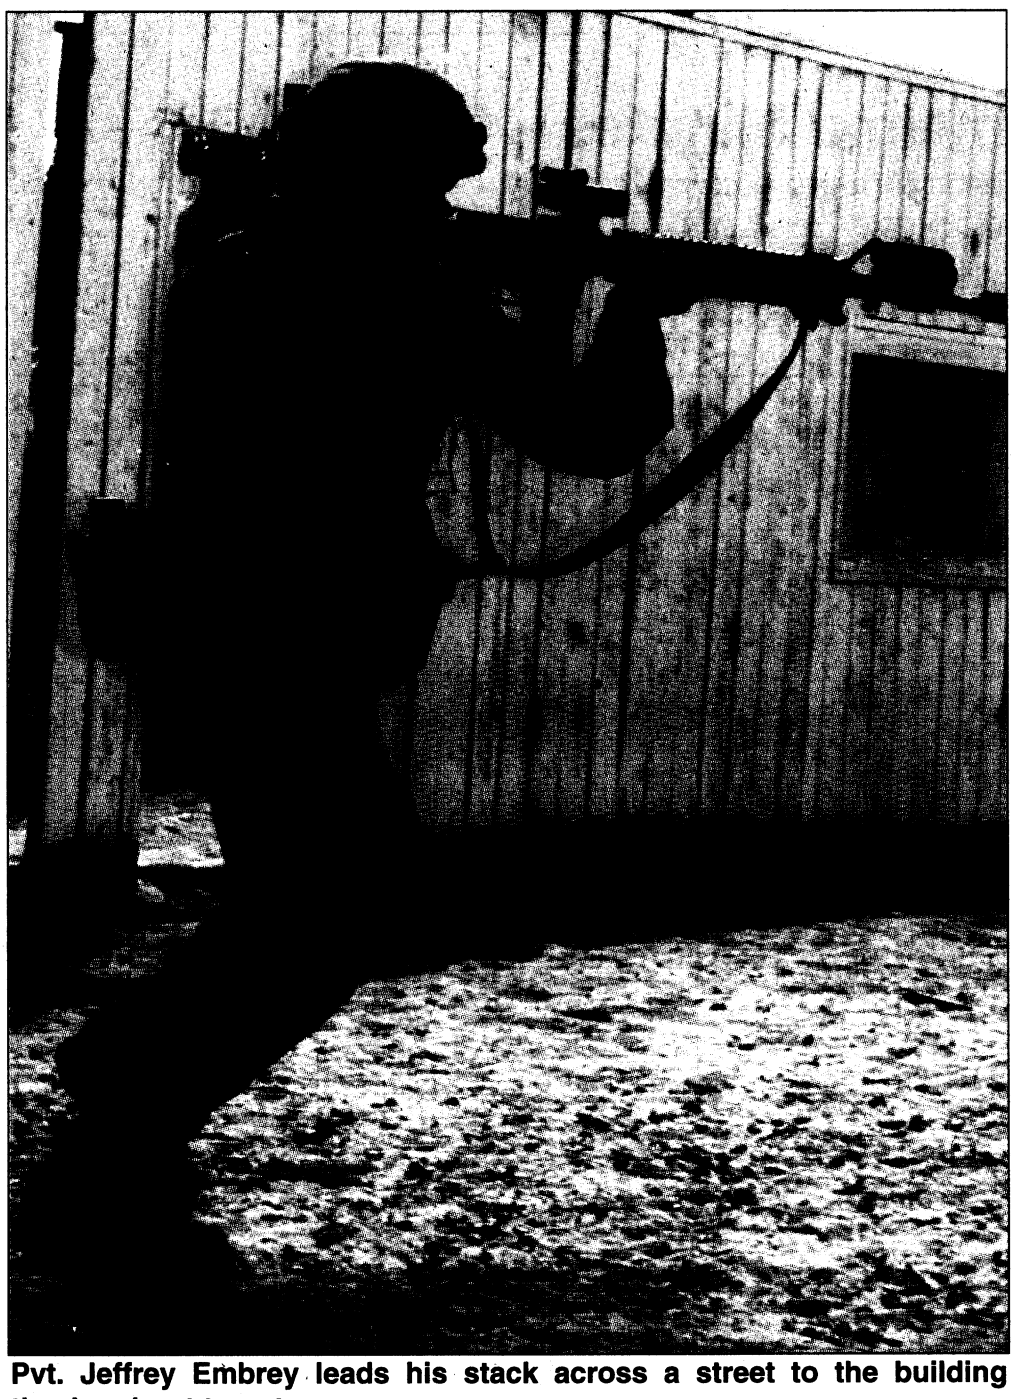
"It's a guerrilla insurgency, the enemy attacks and then blends in with the population," he said. "We're teaching the Soldiers how to identify legitimate targets, how to enter and clear a room, hallways and stairs — the basics of urban ops."

The Soldiers learn to cross open areas, enter the building in squad-size elements and use four-man "stacks" to clear a room, said Staff Sgt. John Ingoldsby, a drill sergeant with the company.

"Each Soldier has a portion of the room to clear, we teach them how — where to stand, how to avoid danger areas like windows," Ingoldsby said.

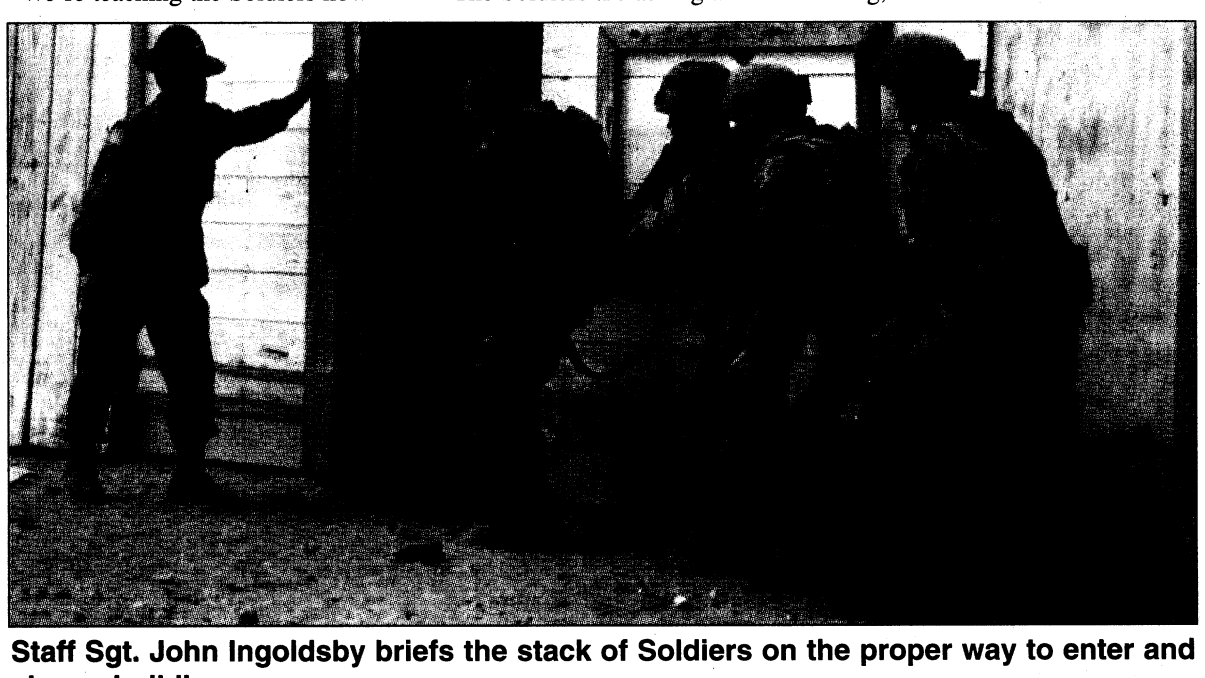
"There's a possibility of these Soldiers doing this soon," he said. "We teach the basics and when they get to their units, there will be more advanced training."

"We're taking civilians and teaching them to be Soldiers," said Staff Sgt. Tommy Jamison, who served in Iraq with the Stryker Battalion out of Fort Lewis, Wash.



"The Soldiers are asking a lot of 'what if' questions," he said. "Every situation is different, but the Soldiers are learning the basics here."

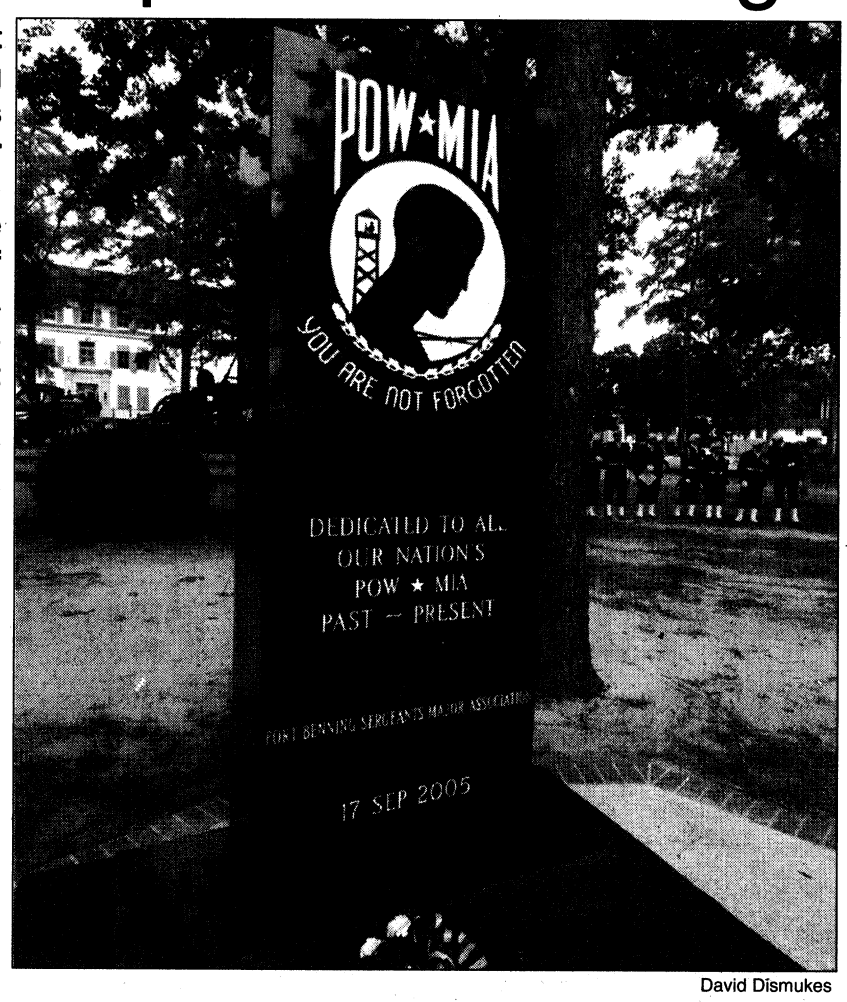
Pvt. William Fisher, from Phoenix, who is in the 11th week of training, said the urban ops training was his favorite part of one station unit training.



"This makes sense," he said. "It's hands-on. We're putting everything we've learned into use ... the (basic rifle marksmanship), teamwork, communication."

"I've never done anything like this before," said Pvt. Curtis Johnson, who has thought about joining the Army since junior high school. The 18-year-old said the training was as realistic as the drill sergeants could make it.

"It's hard to explain, it's fun and it's an adrenaline rush. It's important training, because it's mostly what we're going to be doing," Johnson said.



Pvt. Jeffrey Embrey leads his stack across a street to the building they're about to enter.

Staff Sgt. John Ingoldsby briefs the stack of Soldiers on the proper way to enter and clear a building.

POWs: Speak at unveiling of POW/MIA monument

The Fort Benning Sergeants Major Association dedicated the second of three POW/MIA monuments Saturday at The National Infantry Museum. The first monument, dedicated last year, is located in front of the government building in Columbus. The third monument will be placed in Phenix City.

The enemy considered him a troublemaker.

He may have been, but he says he's not a hero.

"If anybody was a hero, it was my wife (Anne)," he said. "She didn't know if I was dead or alive for five years."

Purcell, who served nearly 31 years, said his faith in God and country helped sustain him during captivity.

"I always held on to hope that I would be rescued," he said.

"I never thought for a second that I wouldn't be coming home."

Bill Robinson, 62, a Madisonville, Tenn., native was captured when his helicopter was shot down on Sept. 20, 1963. He was held by the North Vietnamese for more than seven years, until his release on Feb. 12, 1973.

Robinson said he considers it a positive sign that American POWs in Iraq were recognized by their captors as POWs. The North Vietnamese referred to U.S. prisoners as criminals.

"I lived on hope," Robinson said.

"I hope they will never forget that America cares and will do everything humanly possible to ensure their homecoming."

"The missing Soldiers paid everything he could for his country with his life," Purcell said.

"It's important that we recognize their sacrifice to honor them, and to help their family members close the loop."

National POW-MIA Recognition Day was established on July 18, 1979, and has been recognized by presidential proclamation on the third Friday of September since 1986.

This year's event at Fort Benning included a performance by Fort Benning's Silver Wings Parachute Team and a Rangers in Action demonstration by the Ranger Training Brigade.

"You are not forgotten — Dedicated to all of our nation's POW-MIA Past-Present."

Teacher: Sponsored McBride's after-school reading club

Her colleagues describe Sansom as gentle, loving and caring.

"She had a real interest in helping people," Hicks said. "She always had a kind word."

This is something fellow teacher Jodie Brown will miss. Brown told WTVM she would miss Sansom's simple acts of encouragement.

"Sometimes she would just meet me and give me a big hug and say how are you today," Brown said.

In addition to her daily teaching duties, Sansom dedicated her time to sponsoring McBride's after-school reading club since it began nearly three years ago, Hicks said.

"She was (at school) early and stayed late," he said. "She was determined to do a good job."

Aside from the friendship that has been lost with the passing of Sansom, Hicks said he will sorely miss watching her deal with students.

"She was very organized and things just clicked in her classroom," he said.

Students were told of Sansom's death Monday, and chaplains and counselors are available to address any needs that arise.

The details surrounding Sansom's death are being investigated. Local officials suspect domestic violence.

Funeral services were held Wednesday at Wynnbrook Baptist Church in Columbus and burial occurred the same day at Kennesaw Memorial Park in Marietta, Ga.

Soldiers: Prep for deployment to Afghanistan

Although their mission is to treat those in uniform, anyone who comes to the CSH with a "life, limb or eyesight" injury, will be treated as well.

The CSH has a complete hospital set up in a field adjacent to the airport, complete with two operating tables and the necessary surgical and nursing staff, Haun said.

They've only set up 64 beds — 24 intensive care, 20 intermediate care and 20 minimal care — but can "surge" to 204 beds within a few hours.

Although the CSH staff hadn't had more than two inpatients in the first few days they were up and running, they did treat one noteworthy patient "complaint."

"It's been typical, run-of-the-mill sick-call complaints," Haun said, "but yesterday, we performed an appendectomy on a service member. It's the first surgical case for the 14th CSH since the Korean War."

Haun said the Soldier was recovering in the intermediate care ward and would be evacuated to his home station within a few days.

The 14th's Soldiers are now living in what Haun described as a "force provider set up," where they have air-conditioned tents, showers and dining facilities.

"In grunt terms, we're living pretty well," he said. And, despite the physically exhausting work the Soldiers in the area are doing, he said morale is high.

"This is typical of American energy in a state of crisis," he said. "People are banding together with enthusiasm and energy. The drive to get the city on the ground has been astronomical. It amazes me how people rise to the occasion."

> "This is typical of American energy in a state of crisis. People are banding together with enthusiasm and energy. It amazes me how people rise to the occasion."

> Col. Jeffrey Haun
> Commander, 14th Combat Support Hospital

Haun said there are National Guard units from all over the U.S. working in the area, as well as power companies.

Some of the 14th's nurses are scheduled to assist in the reopening of a historic hospital in the city, which Haun said will be the fourth up and running in the area.

"The Soldiers are doing well," he said.

"This is a preparation mission for our Afghanistan deployment after January 1st.

"It's great team-building and absolutely an example of how we love serving our country," he said.

HUGHSTON Orthopedic Hospital
"Giving up would've been easy. Neither one of us did."
Tommy Lee, Retired - US Postal Service
After thirty years of delivering the mail, Tommy never expected to be unable to move and hardly able to speak. A stroke that severe can diminish a patient's hopes for recovery, and they often give up. But not Tommy.
Great Expectations...
During intensive therapy in Hughston Orthopedic Hospital's Rehabilitation Center, Tommy learned to write, shave, eat, brush his teeth and operate a wheel chair with his left hand – difficult tasks for a lifelong right hander. The biggest change, however, was completely unexpected.
Extraordinary Outcomes.
For years, Tommy had led a quiet life, keeping to himself. But as his therapy progressed, he began engaging friends and family in conversation and laughter. His therapists believe the rehabilitation process stimulated undeveloped brain centers. Tommy's explanation is simpler. "They made me keep on trying. I never gave up. Now I can talk and get around again."
Our physicians, nurses and therapists never gave up on Tommy either. We know that hard work, perseverance and great expectations change lives. We deliver that level of care 24/7, 365 days a year.

"Depression and alcohol problems often go together, but the evidence suggests that in men, alcohol use preceded the depression, whereas in women, the depression precedes the alcohol use."

Depression

Army Substance Abuse Program offers mental health screenings

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

The most common types of depressive disorders are depression, generalized anxiety and bi-polar disorder.

Fort Benning has set aside two days to participate in National Depression Screening Day activities.

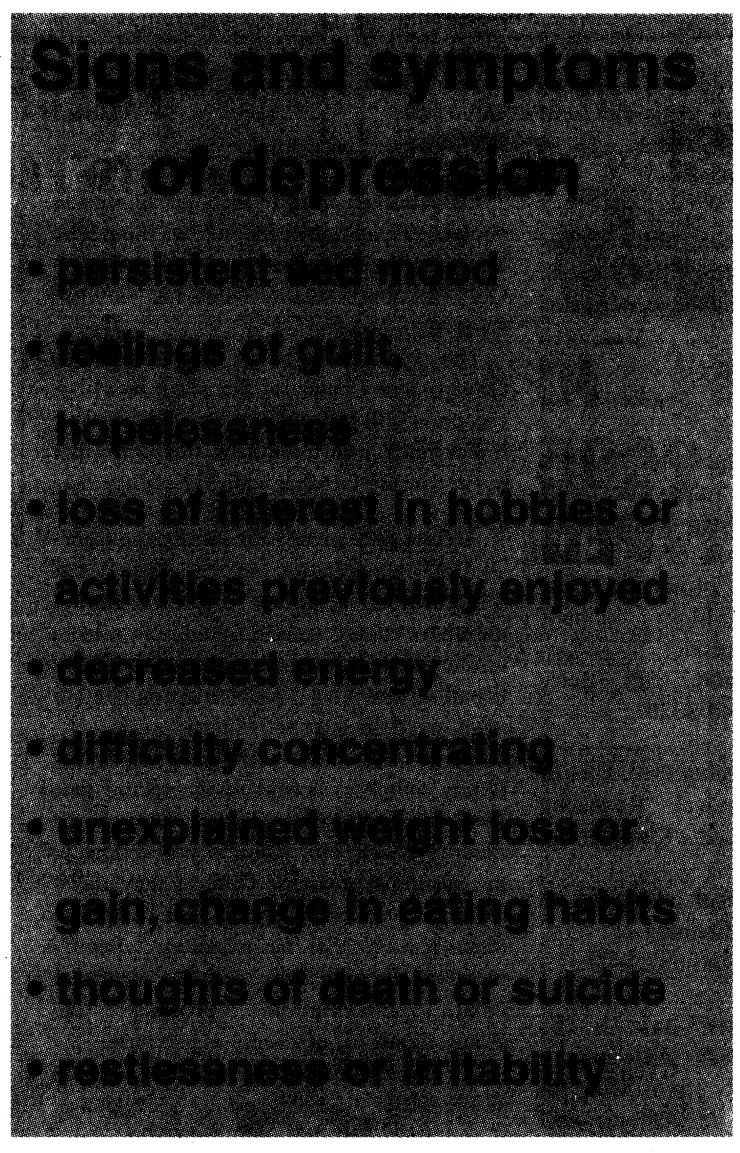
Matthew Dovel, author of My Last Breath, will speak about suicide prevention and addiction at 3 p.m Oct. 5 at the Sand Hill Recreation Center. The event is sponsored by the Army Substance Abuse Program.

Multiple choice questionnaires covering various aspects of thought patterns and emotions will be available for on-site mental health screenings. One-hour classes on the signs and symptoms of depression, anxiety and post traumatic stress disorder will be held at 7:30 a.m., 9 a.m., 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 3 p.m. Oct. 6 at Infantry Hall in Classroom 7. Dovel will be the featured trainer.

ASAP sponsors the annual event to let everyone know that help is available on post, said Deborah Manning, ASAP Prevention coordinator.

"With Fort Bennning's Soldiers, civilians and family members directly or indirectly involved in deployments — and now, as we live the trauma of Hurricane Katrina — it is very possible we may see a higher number of our community members experiencing symptoms of these disorders," she said.

Screening sites will also be located in front of troop medical clinics and the Main Mall Post Exchange. At each site, there will be chaplains, a clinical psychologist and technicians from the department of psychiatry.



"If people have the need to talk with someone, they'll have that opportunity right then and there," Manning said.

All classes will count toward mandatory Soldier suicide prevention and drug and alcohol education requirements. All screenings are anonymous and confidential.

Last year, more than 1,200 people filled out the questionnaire during the National Depression Screening Day at Fort Benning. ASAP is hoping to reach more this year.

For more information, or to schedule your unit for a class time, call Manning at 545-7027 or 1138.

Information about Drovel is at www.mylastbreath.com.

Depression facts from the National Institute of Mental Health

• In any given year, 9.5 percent of the population, or about 18.8 million American adults, suffer from a depressive illness.

• A depressive illness affects the way people sleep and eat and the way they feel about themselves or think about things.

• People with a depressive illness cannot merely "pull themselves together" and get better. Without treatment, symptoms can last weeks, months or years.

• Appropriate treatment by a licensed health-care professional, can help most people suffering from depression.

Army Community Service announces Exceptional Family Member Program events

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

The Army Community Service Center Exceptional Family Member Program has announced various upcoming events and monthly meetings.

They range from special needs dances to support groups and a walk-a-thon.

Marsha Collins, ACS EFMP manager, said these functions are beneficial to families.

"Families can meet other special-needs families, and share and exchange information with each other," she said. "They may have gone through some of the same things or can help each other with others."

Collins also said the meetings offer families the opportunity to network, from accessing services in the school system to other kinds of support that can be useful to special needs families.

EFMP has mandatory enrollment for family members with special needs. The enrollment does not affect the Soldier's career, but assists military personnel in considering the medical and educational needs in the assignment process, Collins said.

Enrollment is necessary if a spouse or child of an active-duty Soldier has asthma, diabetes, a high-risk pregnancy, a current or past mental health diagnosis, attention deficit disorder, past or present cancer, autism or Down syndrome.

For resource information and referrals on EFMP enrollment, call 545-7517 or 545-4043.

The following are the upcoming events and monthly meetings:

• A Special Needs Dance for middle-school and high-school aged children with disabilities will be from 7 to 9 p.m. Sept. 30 at the Psalmond Road Recreation Center in Midland, Ga. The dances are conducted on the last Friday of the month.

For more information, call 563-4710 or 545-5521.

• The EFMP Support Group has a meeting the first Tuesday of every month. The next meeting is at 6 p.m. Oct. 4 in the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359.

• The Chattahoochee Valley's National Down Syndrome Society Buddy Walk will be Oct. 29 at the Amphitheater and RiverWalk, on Dillingham and Broad streets in Phenix City.

Registration begins at 9:30 a.m. and the walk begins at 11:30 a.m.

The walk-a-thon, in it's third year, raises awareness and funds for the National Down Syndrome Society.

There will also be a Halloween costume contest for children.

For more information, call 317-3249.

• Morningside Baptist Church hosts Angels Among Us, D.A.D.S.-Georgia Chapter (Down syndrome) meetings every third Monday.

The meetings are held at the church, located at 6065 Morningside Drive in Columbus.

For more information, call (334) 448-1532.

• An Autism Support Group conducts meetings at 11 a.m. on the second Tuesday of each month at the Burger King on Wynnton Road in Columbus.

For more information, call 653-0323.

For more information on EFMP or any of these meetings or events, call Collins at 545-5521.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What is meant by "bad credit?"

A: When you apply for a mortgage, a car loan or a credit card, the lender will check your credit history. If you have always repaid your debts on time, you will probably be considered creditworthy. But if you defaulted on a car loan or a student loan, or were often late on your monthly credit card payments, you may be considered a bad credit risk.

Having bad credit is a hard cycle to break, because you may not be able to get new loans because of previous payment problems, and without new loans you cannot show an improved payment history.

One way to recover from bad credit is with a "secured" credit card. A secured credit card is held by a company to which you give a certain amount of money, for example, $500, and the money then gives you a credit card, for example, with a $500 limit, which is secured by your previous cash deposit.

You may also have to do business with creditors at very high rates of interest, such as 28 percent a year or higher.

Credit repair is a major industry, and there are many individuals and companies that offer "credit repair kits" for a price. Many kits are expensive, however, and do little more than offer advice.

Consumer law experts recommend you check your credit report at least once a year for possible errors and identity theft.

For more information, call 545-3281 or 545-3282.

X-rays fight tumors with precision, care

MCG Health, Inc.

Like a global positioning system for the body, radiation from X-rays is now being used in precisely targeted ways to help fight cancer.

The Georgia Radiation Therapy Center at MCG Health System, a community-based radiation therapy provider, recently acquired the latest linear technology to treat cancerous tumors with targeted X-ray radiation known as SmartBeam Intensity Modulated Radiation Therapy.

"The goal of radiation therapy is to provide the maximum dose to the tumor, while mitigating the effect on normal cells. IMRT allows us to do this, focusing radiation on the tumor site and sparing healthy tissue," said Dr. Christ Sheils, a radiation oncologist at the Georgia Radiation Therapy Center.

"As a result, patients experience few, if any, side effects from the treatments."

"The new technology basically acts as a GPS for the body," said Shawn Vincent, administrative director of the MCG Cancer Center. "Treatment information, individualized to each patient, is uploaded into the machine and enables more precise, focused radiation delivery to the tumor."

SmartBeam IMRT allows radiation oncologists at the Georgia Radiation Therapy Center to treat tiny tumors with radiation beams as small as a pencil tip.

The technology can also conform these beams into the exact shape of the tumor, which helps in the treatment of irregularly-shaped tumors.

The linear accelerator, which creates and delivers the focused radiation beams, can also revolve 360 degrees around the patient for the best beam placement.

Along with IMRT, a new feature of this technology is respiratory gating, in which the patient's natural movements during breathing are tracked.

While not appropriate for all tumors, respiratory gating allows the radiation beam to be turned on and off as necessary to ensure that the beam is delivered precisely and spares healthy tissue, even during the patient's tiniest movements.

Because the technology is so precise, higher radiation doses may be given to tumors while surrounding organs and tissues remain protected.

"Studies have shown improvement in controlling, shrinking and eliminating tumors because of this type of radiation therapy," Shiels said.

OFF POST

Walk to Cure Juvenile Diabetes — The Columbus Chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation is sponsoring its 10th Annual Walk to Cure Juvenile Diabetes Oct. 1 at Rotary Park. Rotary Park is located near the Columbus Civic Center on Victory Drive.

The walk starts at 9:30 a.m. and lasts until noon. The public is invited to participate in the walk. Walkers are asked to make a donation to JDRF themselves and to raise as much money as they can from friends, family and others.

Walkers are encouraged to register early by contacting a local JDRF volunteer at many larger work sites and schools, or they can register online at www.jdrf.org. On-site registration the day of the walk will begin at 8:30 a.m.

For more information, call Ray Lakes at 562-1654 or e-mail Lakes_Ray@Colstate.edu.

Candlelight Vigil — The Domestic Violence Roundtable, Inc. invites the public to attend their Candlelight Vigil at 7 p.m. Oct. 4 in observance of Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

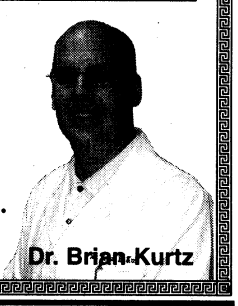
The vigil will be at the Columbus Government Center on the plaza level. A reception will follow.

For more information on this and other events during October, call 211.

Airline gate passes for family members — The Transportation Security Agency has implemented a policy allowing family members "gate passes," which allows military family members access to airport departure and arrival gates to accompany or meet loved ones on active duty.

While the pass provides non-flying family members access to the secure gate area, they still have to pass through the security checkpoint prior to proceeding to the secure gate area. Criteria may differ from airport to airport, but a photo identification will be required. Family members should check with the airline to obtain information, process and requirements for obtaining a gate pass.

For more information, call Ron Johnson at 545-4788.



Camp Toccoa reunion — The Toccoa-Stephens County Historical Society invites the public to the Camp Toccoa reunion and re-enactments Oct. 6-9.

The reunion will include veterans and family members from the 501st, 506th, 511th and 517th Parachute Infantry Regiments and the grand opening of the Toccoa-Stephens County Historical Society Museum. For registration information and agenda of events, visit www.camptoccoareunion.com.

Students at White Elementary School celebrate Constitution Day with songs and marches Sept. 17.

Post celebrates Constitution Day

Students ring bell, recite preamble

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

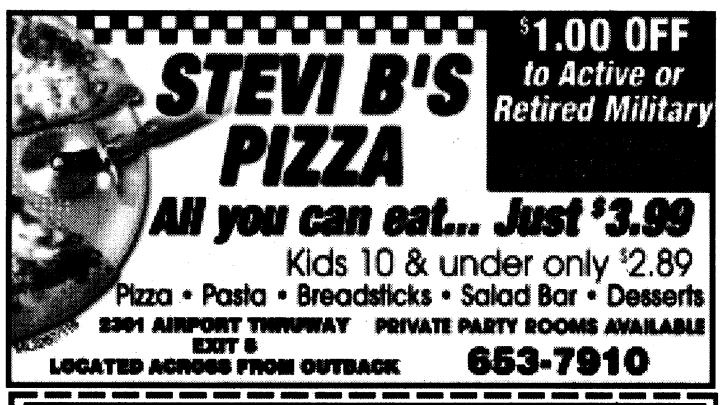
The U.S. Constitution was signed Sept. 17, 1787 in Philadelphia. Since then, Sept. 17th has been known as Constitution Day.

Because Constitution Day arrived on Saturday this year, students and teachers in the Fort Benning schools celebrated Sept. 16.

At 2 p.m, Department of Defense schools across the nation joined retired Gen. Tommy Franks, the former commander in chief of U.S. Central Command, in a telecast recitation of the preamble of the Constitution.

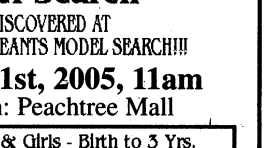
Following a tradition started at the turn of the new century, White Elementary School students blew up red, white and blue balloons. They walked to the National Infantry Museum, sang songs and rang the bell for the number of years since our Constitution was signed.

The museum's bell, cast in bronze in 1860, was rung on post the first time in 1987, the year Fort Benning renamed the driveway in front of Infantry Hall Constitution Loop and buried a time capsule in front of the Follow Me Statue to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution.



Sept. 17 is also Citizenship Day, a day to honor people who have become U.S. citizens.

President Harry Truman signed a bill in 1952 formally recognizing Sept. 17 as Citizenship Day.



Fifty-three years later, in an effort to strengthen U.S. patriotism, West Virginia Sen. Robert Byrd added a rider to the 2005 appropriations bill requiring all schools receiving federal assistance to offer a "Constitution Day" program.

The bill also requires new federal employees to receive educational materials on the Constitution at the time they are hired, and that all federal employees be offered some form of Constitutional educational program each Sept. 17.

More information about the Constitution can be found at the National Constitution Center Web site at www.constitutioncenter.org.

HURRICANE KATRINA

Faith students take on cause

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

When Katrina hit the Gulf Coast Aug. 29, Faith Middle School students didn't wait long before acting. They began raising money for the American Red Cross.

The campaign, Cash for Katrina, raised more than $1,300 in 15 days for the flood victims.

Besides contributions, the students could give $1 to wear jeans Friday. (The school implemented a standardized dress code this year that doesn't include denim jeans.)

"This (fund-raiser) showed a lot of the kids' character," said Dr. Julio Gonzalez, Faith Middle School principal. "There were children who paid money to wear the jeans, but chose not to wear them.

"One child brought in $70 from his piggy bank," he said.

"You have to be a part of helping those in need," said Assistant Principal Mike Starrett. "It gives you a sense of community."

The money will help with clothes, food and necessities for people who lost everything in the hurricane, said seventh-grader Juanita Malone, who figures it will take a year to rebuild the ravaged area.

Lori Egan

Faith Middle School Assistant Principal Mike Starrett addresses the seventh-graders during lunch to update them on the amount of money raised for the American Red Cross donation for Hurricane Katrina.

"Other people needed my spare change more than I did," said Courtney Matheny, another seventh-grader.

Spc. Douglas Roller, a 467th Engineer Battalion Soldier in the postdeployment process, saw the sign in front of the school announcing the fund-raiser.

"I saw the sign, looked in my wallet, walked into the office and gave $40," said Roller, who was deployed in Balad, Iraq. "You have to put yourself in others' shoes and do what you can to help."

> "If we were in that situation, we would need help, too."
>
> Juanita Malone
> Faith Middle School

The school's chapter of the National Junior Honor Society also donated $50 as a service project.

"People lost everything and needed our help," said eighth-grader Jack LaCamera, a member of the honor society.

"If we were in that situation, we would need help, too," Malone said.

Rosh Hashanah to begin

Retired (Capt.) Neil Block
USAIC Jewish lay leader

REFLECTIONS

Sundown on the evening of Oct. 3 marks the start of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year. Rosh Hashanah initiates the Jewish High Holy Days. That evening, and the following day for Reform observers, or the following two days for Conservative and Orthodox observers, Jews throughout the world will join with family and community groups to mark the beginning of the year 5766 of the Jewish calendar and present themselves to God for judgment.

Rosh Hashanah is the biblical (holy convocation) associated with the anniversary of the birth of the world and, according to ancient tradition, the day on which God renders judgment on the world. It is the time when each and every man is judged by God.

The righteous are immediately inscribed in The Book of Life. The wicked are consigned to indeterminate sad fates. And those who God deems neither righteous nor wicked have 10 days to repent and acknowledge their errant ways and pledge to amend their shortcomings before The Book of Life is sealed. The concluding day for repentance is Yom Kippur.

In the Jewish tradition, God commands every man to live a righteous and moral life and to be responsible to make the world a better place for all mankind in which to dwell.

Every man is responsible to ensure the hungry are fed, the naked are clothed, the widow and orphan cared for, that his community and extended community conduct their lives with morality within the teaching of the law, starting with the Ten Commandments. It is the conduct of their lives with this guideline that God judges.

On Rosh Hashanah Jews everywhere gather to pray that God will judge them kindly, to acknowledge and ask for forgiveness of their transgressions, and to ask God to grant them continued life in a good and sweet year to come. The gatherings and prayers are punctuated by the sounding of the ram's horn, the Shofar, the ancient instrument which called out the people.

Rosh Hashanah is also known as Yom Teruah, the Day of the Blowing of the Shofar.

Yom Kippur means Day of Atonement. It is a solemn day observed by prayers and fasting and repentance and awareness of God's readiness to pardon. It is considered the holiest day of the Jewish calendar and dates from biblical times.

In three separate passages of the Torah, the Five Books of Moses — the word of God transcribed by Moses — the Jewish people are told that "...the tenth day of the seventh month is the day of Atonement. It shall be a sacred occasion for you. You shall practice self-denial..."

It was on this day that Moses, after having received the first tablets of the law (the Ten Commandments) and smashing them because of the incident of the golden calf, and after returning to Sinai to receive a second set of tablets, descended to the Jewish people fasting and repenting.

The High Holy Days are days of introspection, self-examination, contrition and rededication to God's law and principles. God forgives those who have offended against God. But forgiveness for offenses by one man against another is dependent and conditioned on the offender seeking forgiveness from those who he has offended.

On Rosh Hashanah people are greeted with wishes that they be "inscribed in The Book of Life." On Yom Kippur we pray that one has been "sealed in The Book of Life."

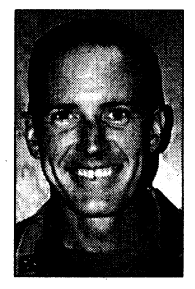
It's not how you start, it's how you finish

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

"Gentlemen ... it's not how you start ... it's how you finish that counts." That's the advice the Black Hat boomed out as we began the first steps of a 12-mile speed ruck. Little did he know that he was giving great counsel for lots of areas in life. Take relationships, for example.



Just a week ago, I sat in Applebee's as I listened to a former platoon leader I'd served with in the 82nd Airborne Division recount how he had met his wife in the sixth grade. Interestingly, it was not love at first sight — or second — or third. In fact, they pretty much avoided and detested one another through high school.

However, it's not how you start. Because there they sat, 12 years later, beautiful new baby girl in arms, madly in love with each other, and laughing over how much things had changed since those very early days in their relationship.

Now, most of us don't start out detesting the love of our life. Most of us have the hots straight from the start, don't we?

However, it can be a challenge to keep the relationship as vibrant down the road as it was in the beginning — especially with letters like LES, PCS an OIF getting tossed around in our military marriages.

So how do you keep your love together when life, and maybe even the Army, is taking you apart?

Hawkins

Well, here's some great advice that Steve and Paige Paquette shared this past Sunday at CrossRoads. I think it's worth passing on to you.

How do you "keep it together?" You gotta C-L-I-N-G!

C=Communicate. Try this exercise. Ask your mate, "When has been the best time for us in terms of communicating and feeling like we were on the same sheet of music?" Take a look at how that happened for each of you. What was going on?

How do you like to communicate — i.e., what's your language of love? More importantly, do you know your mate's language of love? Things work best when you "make commo" on a "frequency" they can "decode."

You gotta discover and then speak each other's language of love weekly, if not daily.

L= Love. Think of love in terms of action, not feeling. Think of love in terms of selfless devotion, not emotion. How are you loving your mate today?

Give it a whirl and watch the surprise in his (or her) eyes and the temperature of the relationship warm when you "serve" him for no reason at all — other than you love him.

I=Invest. Invest in each other. What's the biggest deposit you could make in your mate's love bank? What's a withdrawal you need to stop? It's all about deposits and withdrawals.

N=Nurture. Things left without attention or focus tend to get worse — whether it's your humvee or your relationships. PMCS is not just for military vehicles.

G=God. Wisdom from the book of Ecclesiastes reminds us that "a cord of three strands is not easily broken." Marriage takes three: you, your mate, and God.

Think of it as the points of a triangle, with you and your mate on the bottom and God at the top. The closer you and your spouse get to God, the closer you'll get to each other.

If you'd like more information on being "Fit To Be Tied," come see us at The Chaplain Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza or call 545-1760. Or feel free to join me and the growing crowd at CrossRoads Chapel at 11 a.m. Sunday on Kelley Hill. It's a casual, contemporary postwide chapel service designed for people who don't usually go to chapel.

"I asked for all things, that I might enjoy life. I was given Life, that I might enjoy all things. I received nothing that I asked for, but all that I had hoped for. My prayers were answered."
— prayer of a Civil War Soldier

BAYONET R&R

Nicollette Sheridan, born in England and raised in London and Los Angeles, is perhaps best known to TV audiences for portraying the beautiful, powerful and manipulative Paige Matheson in the long-running drama series, Knots Landing. She now plays Edie Britt on Desperate Housewives.

This week, ABC and NBC offer hotly anticipated season premieres of existing shows, hoping a nip and tuck here, and a fresh coat of paint there, will make these return offerings look shiny and new.

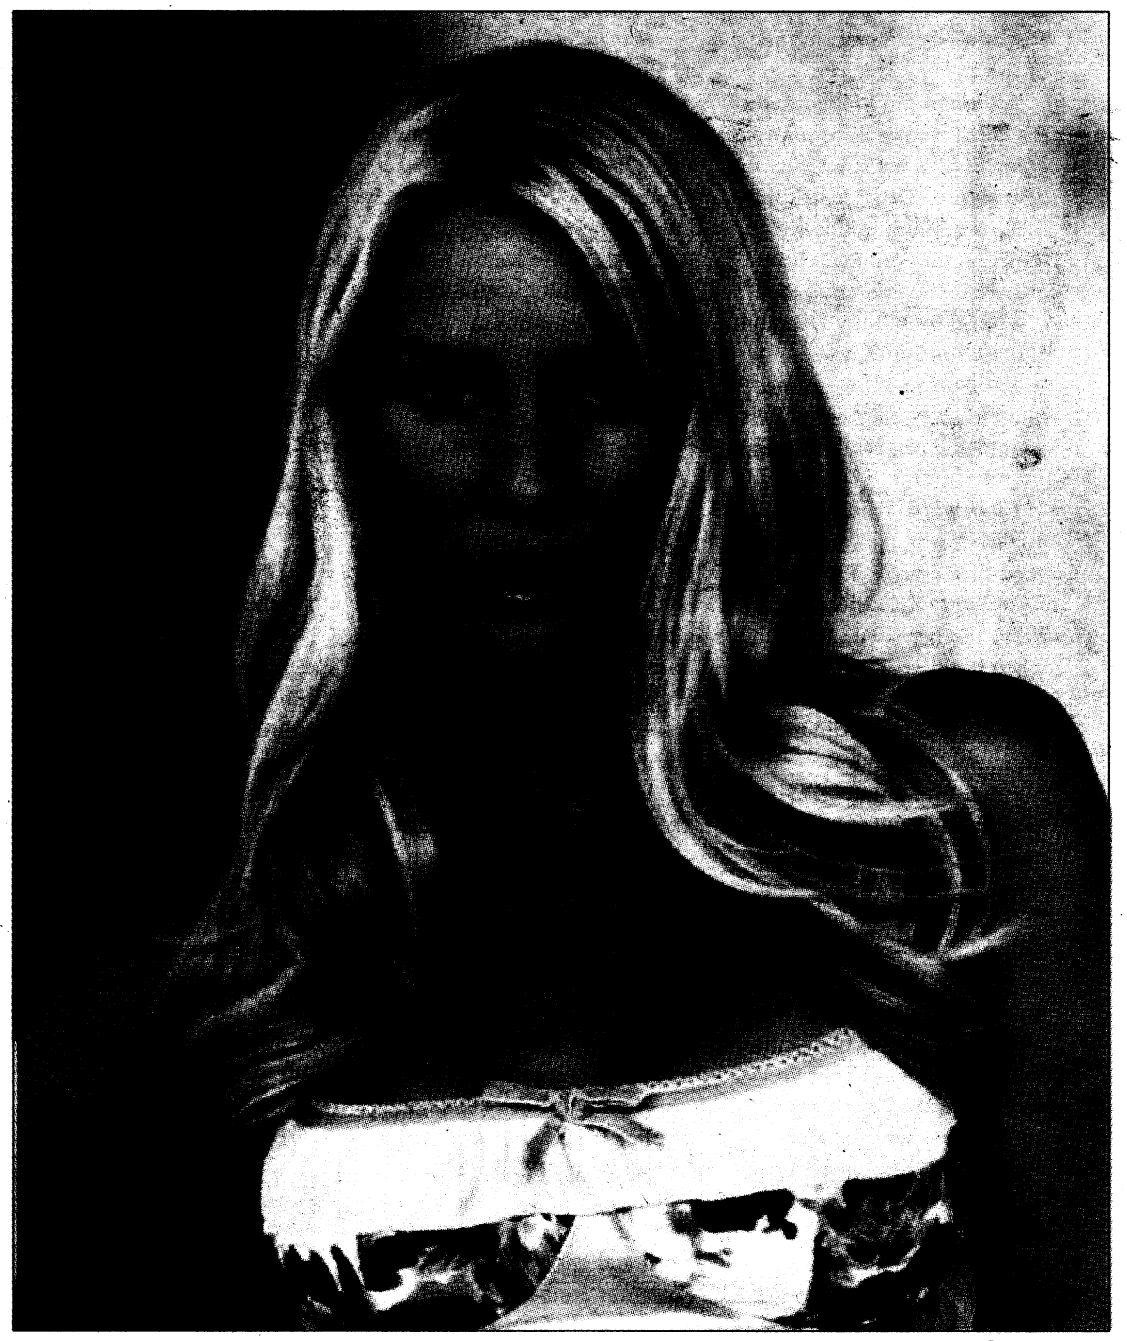
Last season, Sunday night belonged to ABC, with its blockbuster lineup of Extreme Makeover: Home Edition, Desperate Housewives and Boston Legal. A midseason switch to Grey's Anatomy as the clean-up hitter boosted ratings even further.

The sophomore Housewives went out with a bang after its first season, and ABC promises that the season two premiere will pick up where that left off, with plumber Mike Delfino (James Denton) coming home to find troubled teen Zach Young (Cody Kasch) holding Susan Mayer (Teri Hatcher) at gunpoint.

Elsewhere, Lynette Scavo (Felicity Huffman) interviews for an ad-agency job while husband Tom (Doug Savant) stays home, but her prospective boss (Joely Fisher) wonders about hiring a mom.

Also, Shirley Knight guest-stars as the late Rex Van de Camp's (Steven Culp) mother, who comes to town for his funeral and drives widow Bree (Marcia Cross) to distraction. And, fans learn a bit more about the mother and son (Alfre Woodard, Mehcad Brooks) who recently moved to Wisteria Lane.

After several seasons on Wednesday, NBC's perpetually Emmy-nominated The West Wing shifts to Sunday this year, continuing the presidential-campaign story line that pits Democratic Congressman Matt Santos (Jimmy Smits) against Republican Senator Arnold Vinick (Alan Alda).



To kick up the political heat, comedian, actor and political commentator for the liberal Air America radio network Janeane Garafalo begins a three-episode arc on Oct. 2. She plays Louise Thornton, a successful but controversial media strategist that Santos hires to be his director of communications. This throws her into conflict with Santos staffer Josh Lyman (Bradley Whitford).

Next up is NBC's solidly successful Law & Order: Criminal Intent, which shakes things up this year by splitting its cast. Half the show's episodes will continue to feature the Major Case Squad team of Detectives Robert Goren (Vincent D'Onofrio) and Alexandra Eames (Kathryn Erbe), who've been with the show since the beginning.

The other half will feature Chris Noth, reprising his Law & Order role of Detective Mike Logan, who's partnered with Detective Carolyn Barek, played by Annabella Sciorra (The Sopranos), a "brilliant criminal profiler" who spent two post-9/11 years with the FBI.

Rounding out the evening is Crossing Jordan, which returned from a long maternity leave for star Jill Hennessy, who plays Boston medical examiner Dr. Jordan Cavanaugh, to become a standout performer for NBC. Jerry O'Connell is back as Detective Woody Hoyt, Jordan's on-again, off-again love interest.

Last season, the duo headed west for a two-part crossover episode with NBC's Las Vegas, which airs Monday. In October, the two shows join forces again, with Jordan and Woody calling on old pals Danny McCoy (Josh Duhamel) and Sam Jane Marquez (Vanessa Marcil) from the Montecito Casino to solve another long-distance crime.

Nicollette Sheridan stars in Desperate Housewives Sundays on ABC.

Booted from its Sunday slot by the unexpected midseason success of Grey's Anatomy, ABC's Boston Legal returns on Tuesday, starting out with four of the five episodes left unaired last spring. Two of the leftovers — which will be updated before airing — feature Heather Locklear as a high-profile murder defendant.

Other changes in the show's Beantown law firm include the departures of Monica Potter, Rhona Mitra (now on FX's Nip/Tuck) and Kerry Washington, and the arrivals of new cast members Julie Bowen, as senior associate (and partner fast-tracker) Denise Bauer, and Ryan Michelle Bathe as brainy junior associate Sara Holt.

UPN's teen-sleuth drama Veronica Mars, starring Kristen Bell, earned a second season, only to find itself on Wednesdays, across from ABC's monster hit Lost.

Undaunted, Veronica adds new recurring stars Charisma Carpenter (Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Angel) as trophy wife Kendall Casablancas, and Steve Guttenberg (Cocoon, Police Academy) as Woody Goodman, owner of a major-league baseball team.

Also, in the Oct. 2 episode, writer, director and actor Kevin Smith (Clerks, Dogma) guest-stars as a convenience-store clerk.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride — Set in a 19th century European village, this stop-motion, animated feature follows the story of Victor, a young man who is whisked away to the underworld and wed to a mysterious corpse bride, while his real bride, Victoria, waits bereft in the land of the living.

Although life in the Land of the Dead proves to be a lot more colorful than his strict Victorian upbringing, Victor learns that there is nothing in this world, or the next, that can keep him away from his one true love.

Voiced by Johnny Depp and Helena Bonham Carter.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride is rated PG for scary images and action, and brief mild language.

Flightplan — Flying at 40,000 feet in a cavernous, state-of-the-art E-474 aircraft, Kyle Pratt (Jodie Foster) faces every mother's worst nightmare when her 6-year-old daughter Julia vanishes without a trace mid-flight from Berlin to New York.

Flightplan is rated PG-13 for violence and intense plot material.

Roll Bounce — In the late '70s when roller skating was a way of life, X (Bow Wow) and his pals ruled supreme. But when the doors of the skating rink close, it marks the end of an era and the beginning of another that sees the boys venture into foreign territory — uptown's Sweetwater Roller Rink, complete with it's over-the-top skaters and beautiful girls.

Roll Bounce is rated PG-13 for language and crude humor.

Just Like Heaven — When David (Mark Ruffalo) sublets his San Francisco apartment, the last thing he expected was a roommate.

Suddenly a pretty young woman named Elizabeth (Reese Witherspoon) shows up, adamantly insisting the apartment is hers. David assumes there's been a giant misunderstanding — until Elizabeth disappears as mysteriously as she appeared.

Convinced that she is a ghost, David tries to help her cross over to the "other side." But while Elizabeth has discovered she can walk through walls, she is convinced she is still alive and isn't crossing over anywhere.

Just Like Heaven is rated PG-13 for sexual content.

Cry Wolf — At a prestigious prep school, a student joins a group who make a game out of lying to people.

When the lies start to revolve around murder, a real killer appears and picks off the students one by one.

Starring Jared Padalecki and Jon Bon Jovi.

Cry Wolf is rated PG-13 for violence, terror, disturbing images, language, sexuality and a drug reference.

Lord of War — A wily arms dealer dodges bullets and betrayal as he schemes his way to the top of his profession, only to come face to face with his conscience.

But it's not easy to leave a life of girls, guns and glamour when nobody wants you to stop, not even your enemies.

Starring Nicolas Cage and Jared Leto.

Lord of War is rated R for strong violence, drug use, language and sexuality.

Venom — Set in the Louisiana bayou, Mr. Jangles is a man possessed by 13 evil souls killed by a voodoo priestess. Mr. Jangles becomes evil and collects keys as trophies from his victims.

Starring Method Man and Bijou Phillips.

Venom is rated R for strong horror violence, gore and language.

The Man — A case of mistaken identity forces federal agent Derrick Vann and dental supply salesman Andy Fidler (Samuel L. Jackson, Eugene Levy) to team up as they speed through the streets of Detroit to pull off a sting operation and solve the murder of Vann's former partner.

The Man is rated PG-13 for language, rude dialogue and violence.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose — In an extremely rare decision, the Catholic church officially recognized the demonic possession of a 19-year-old college freshman.

Told in flashbacks, the movie chronicles the haunting trial of the priest accused of negligence, resulting in the death of the young girl believed to be possessed and the lawyer who takes on the task of defending him.

Starring Laura Linney and Tom Wilkinson.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose is rated PG-13 for thematic material including intense and frightening sequences and disturbing images.

The Brothers Grimm — Brothers Jake and Will Grimm (Matt Damon, Heath Ledger), renowned collectors of folklore, have made a career of traveling from village to village pretending to rid them of "enchanted" creatures.

Their bluff is called, however, when they are forced by Napoleon's French government to investigate a haunted forest where girls have been mysteriously disappearing.

The Brothers Grimm is rated PG-13 for violence, frightening sequences and brief suggestive material.

The Constant Gardener — When a British diplomat's wife — a socially conscious lawyer — turns up dead in Kenya, he sets out to find the truth surrounding her murder. In the process, he finds out that his wife had been compiling data against a multinational drug company that uses helpless Africans as guinea pigs.

Starring Ralph Fiennes and Rachel Weisz.

The Constant Gardener is rated R for language, some violent images and sexual content and nudity.

Transporter 2 — Ex-Special Forces operative Frank Martin (Jason Statham) makes a living driving for the wealthy Billings family. He's a huge favorite with their two small boys, but when the kids are kidnapped, Martin defies the FBI and works to get the boys to safety.

Transporter 2 is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of violent action, sexual content, partial nudity and brief language.

Gloria Loar, left, Faith Middle School art teacher, and Dr. Julio Gonzalez, school principal, kick off the jean day campaign to raise money for Hurricane Katrina victims. By donating $1, the students were permitted to wear jeans instead of the school's standardized dress clothes. This effort alone collected more than $500, Gonzalez said. The school raised more than $1,300 to donate to the American Red Cross.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• NFL Hurricane Relief weekend

The NFL did it's part last weekend when 30 current and former NFL players had a fund-raising marathon Sept. 19 for six hours.

All of the money collected goes toward the Bush-Clinton Katrina fund. Way to go guys!

• Hello, Newman

Ryan Newman barely squeezed into the Chase but redeemed himself with a win at the Sylvania 300 Sept. 18.

Newman, who hasn't won a race in a year, pulled ahead of Tony Stewart in the last lap.

• NASCAR fines

Several NASCAR drivers were fined following the race last weekend. Kasey Kahne was fined $25,000 for intentionally hitting Kyle Busch, and Robby Gordon was fined $35,000 for using profanity and an intentional crash.

• Barry chases records

Barry Bonds started in five games the first week back on the roster for the San Francisco Giants and hit two home runs, bringing his total to 705, just nine shy of Babe Ruth and 50 behind home run king Hank Aaron.

• Jason, not Al

Golfer Jason Gore, playing in his fourth PGA Tour since earning a promotion, won th 84 Lumber Classic with a final round 70 to beat Carlos Franco by one shot.

Defending champ Vijay Singh finished the Classic in 15th place.

• Second race for the Chase

This week's NASCAR race is the MNBA RacePoints 400 from Dover International Speedway. Coverage starts at 12:30 p.m. on TNT.

Charlie Rock takes second in tight game

In a double elimination tournament Tuesday at Gowdy Field, Charlie Rock defeated MPA, 15-12, guaranteeing themselves at least a second place finish for the season and the right to battle the 4th Ranger Training Battalion for the post softball championship.

"This brings back memories of the beginning of the season. We're ready for another go-around with the Rangers," said Jack Rogers, Charlie Rock coach. "We're ready to do some payback."

The Rangers sent Charlie Rock back to the bench at the top of the first inning, and the 4th RTB's Wylie Hutchison predicted, "We're going to sweep them in one game."

The Rangers' Robert Hoffnagle sent a solid hit to the outfield and made it to third. Bronston Clough earned the only RBI before the inning ended, giving 4th RTB a 1-0 lead.

Charlie Rock fought back in the second inning, earning three home runs. Elliott Caggins of 4th RTB sent a ball to the outfield, bringing in three RBIs. At the end of the second inning, the Rangers led 6-3.

David Anderson of Charlie Rock hit a home run, helping the team rally back with three hits at the top of the third inning. But errors and missed balls gave the Rangers the opportunity to break wide open with eight more runs by the end of the inning.

Charlie Rock was scoreless in the fourth, but 4th RTB kept chipping away, bringing in two more runs and leading 16-6 at the bottom of the fourth.

Charlie Rock got going in the fifth, bringing home three runs and shutting down 4th RTB one, two, three.

Mama said don't knock 'em out (before the game)

Erin A. Nash

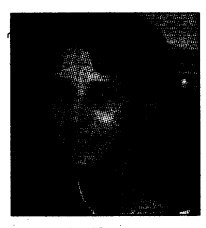
Before the game even started Sept. 13 between the Atlanta Falcons and Philadelphia Eagles, there was a fight. Falcons' cornerback Kevin Mathis and Eagles' linebacker Jeremiah Trotter were ejected without the game clock having even ticked off a second. These men get paid millions of dollars to act like this?

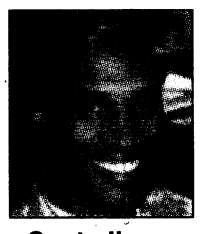
Trotter, who started the melee by pushing Mathis, was flippant about the whole thing and was quoted as saying, "They should have fined the referee. That's who they should have fined for that bad call. I do think referees should get fined, too, for making a bad call. There should be some disciplinary action for the refs."

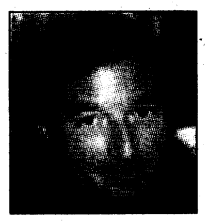
What?????

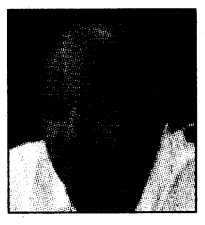
Are you kidding me? Whatever happened to personal responsibility? Why couldn't Trotter be a man and simply say, "Yeah, I messed up. It was immature of me to do that, and I apologize to all the fans who had to witness my spectacle. I fully intend to control myself in the future."

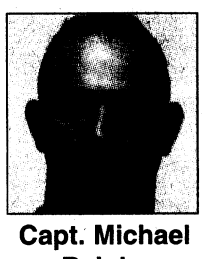
But no. He blamed the referees. Uh, Trotter, the refs weren't the ones fighting — you were.





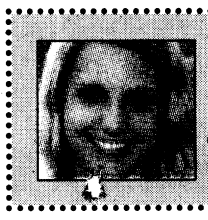






I can see a little shove here or there during the game, maybe some mama jokes or some choice words, but fighting, before the game? Come on Trotter, even the Red Sox and Yankees wait until they get hit with the ball before charging the plate, which inevitably leads to a bench-clearing fight.

I would be remiss if I said I didn't like it. Not necessarily the whole pregame fighting, but a reason to during the game. I'm not condoning violence, not in the least, but of course the fans get into it. What Red Sox fan wasn't cheering when Jason Varitek gave A-Rod a faceful of catcher's mitt last year?



Yes, it's wrong. Grown men should act like grown men. Then again, some of these so-called "professional" athletes seem to lose some semblance of the real sixth with six more runs, drawing within one run of 4th RTB, but by the end of the inning, the Rangers sent two more runners across the plate and pulled further ahead, 18-15.

The seventh inning gave Charlie Rock one last chance to swing for the title, but with two outs and a full count, 4th RTB struck them out for good.

"It's all a team effort," Rogers said. "I think we did well."

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general, presented the winning team and individual trophies at the conclusion of the game.

"I would've joined the league, but I arrived here too late," he said.

4th RTB finishes the season with post bragging rights and a first place, 12-1 season.

Their only loss went to third place finisher MPA earlier this summer.

Game: Time to really play world once they see the money.

I fully agree with the referee's decision to eject the players involved. Several others were fined for entering the fight area.

Also fined was Falcons' defensive tackle Chad Lavalais for a hit on Eagles' QB Donovan McNabb.

Lavalais was fined $7,500 for using his helmet on McNabb, whose chest was hurt during the play.

Obviously the fines and ejections aren't really going to solve this type of grandstanding behavior.

Trotter said he was going to appeal all the way to the Supreme Court, and asked if anyone knew Matlock because he heard he never lost cases.

SPORT BRIEFS

*Loans offered by Community State Bank, Milbank, SD (Member FDIC). Cash advance loans are intended to serve as a short term credit solution. Borrowing costs increase significantly when you are unable to pay the full amount due on the maturity date. Credit approval subject to Community State Bank's credit standards and actual terms (including actual loan amount) may vary by applicant. Community State Bank requires certain supporting documentation with each new application. Complete disclosures of APR, fees, and payment terms are provided with each loan and are available from Community State Bank. Example of loan terms: The Annual Percentage Rate (APR) for a $300 loan for 14 days is 521.43% with one payment of $360 due at maturity.
Additional fees may apply if loan is not repaid as agreed.

Supporting our troops is our highest calling!

EC III is a joint venture with EG&G and TRAX International, a provider of technical services to government clients. We work hard to ensure that the equipment our troops use is of the highest quality and functionality. Join EC III's operations at the U.S. Army Yuma Proving Ground as:

PARACHUTE RIGGER
Salary: $20.34/hr

You will unpack, examine, assemble, and pack cargo, extraction and personnel parachutes, including inspecting chute fabric and equipment, stowing canopy and suspension lines; and installing reefing lines and cutters.

Requirements include Army-qualified Parachute Rigger certification (Quartermaster Center, Fort Lee, VA.), 4+ years' military rigger experience, military static line jump qualified, an understanding of aircraft loading/unloading, ability to read and understand diagrams and instructions from technical documents, and ability to perform horizontal and vertical center of balance and center of gravity tests for rigging and loading aircraft. You must be able to lift 100 lbs unassisted, pass a Class 2 Flight Physical, work in outdoor weather conditions, and perform frequent squatting, crouching and stooping. Additional required certifications include Rigger/Supply/Trades Helper, RSS TNG AD-001, Military Jumpmaster qualification, and maintaining jump stauts in accordance with FM-220. FAA rigger certification and knowledge of military testing and nonstandard rigging are beneficial.

Part of global leader TRAX International, we offer excellent benefits. Submit your resume to: E-mail: jobs@eciii.com; fax: 928-328-6994, Attn: Amanda Ewing; Phone: 928-328-6515; Mail: EC III, LLC, P.O. Box 6546, Yuma, AZ 85366-6546.

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Lenders, Lenders loooove to make requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered "yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self -employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and at no charge to you - "how much you qualify for". Credit manager Eric can be reached at toll free 1-888-719-8888. Open 7 days a week.

CG shares vision, priorities

Focus on fight, formation still main priority

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

In his first sit-down interview with Fort Benning's Channel 4 news team Sept. 26, Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski outlined his vision for the future of Fort Benning, including how Army transformation will affect the Infantry Center and how the Army will continue to support the Soldier and the family.

Only six weeks into his tenure here, the general said he was still formulating his vision for the installation, but the priorities were clear and remain the same: fighting the Global War on Terrorism, preparing Fort Benning graduates to participate in that effort, taking care of Soldiers and their families and looking toward the future as the Army transforms and Fort Benning makes the change from the Home of Infantry to a combined maneuver center.

"Even though we're at war," he said, "and even though we have other issues occurring here at Fort Benning, (the) primary mission is to train Soldiers and leaders for the future."

Wojdakowski believes the future of Fort Benning is optimistic due mostly to a planned growth of the Infantry force and the proposed move of Fort Knox's Armor School to post.

"The maneuver center will allow us to train all maneuver Soldiers — Armor and Infantry — together in a combined arms, combined manner, which gives them better training for the type of combat operations that currently confront all of our forces

608th deploys again

Unit will run ammunition supply points

Melissa House

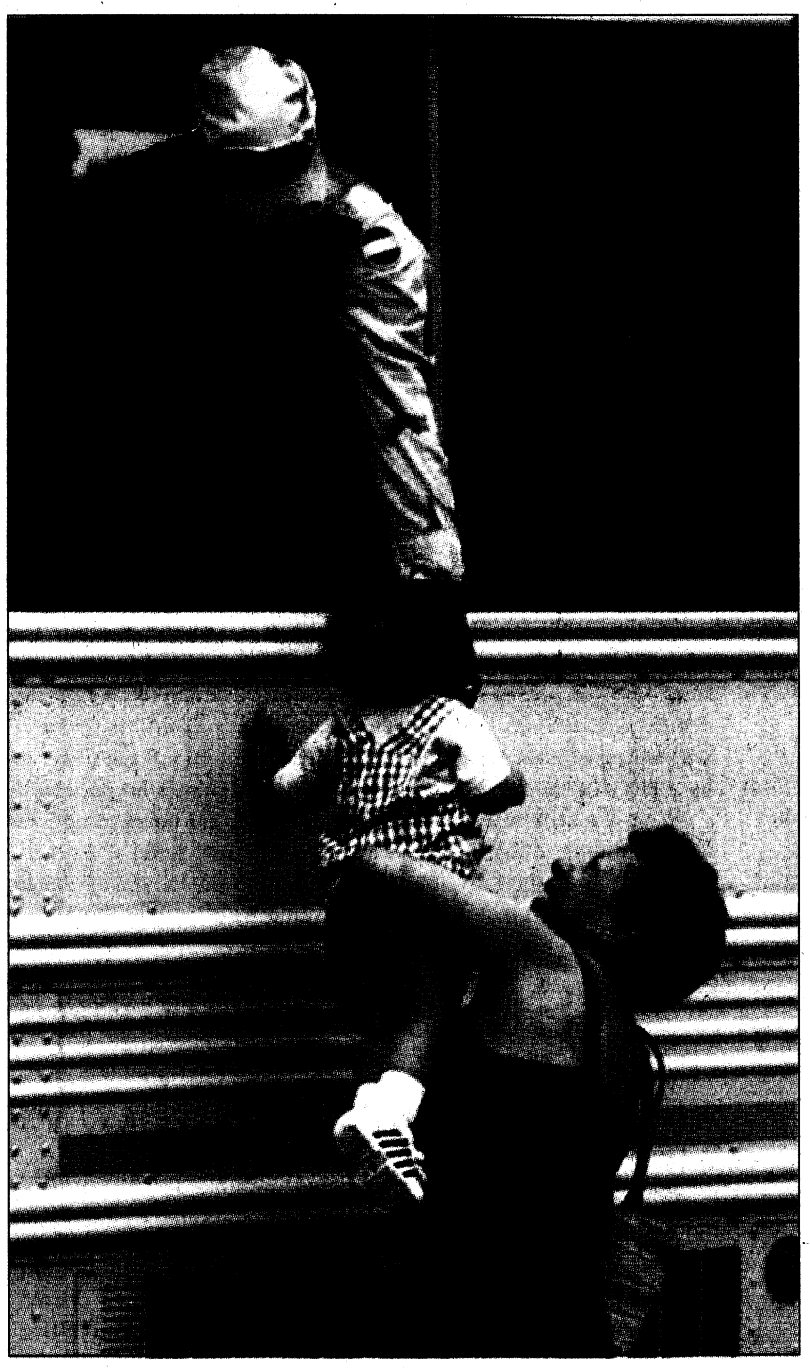
Soldiers of the 608th Ordnance Company said goodbye to loved ones, shouldered their weapons and boarded buses Tuesday morning in the first leg of their newest deployment. The unit returned from Kuwait in April 2004.

"We found out we were going to redeploy in January," said 1st Sgt. James Huffstutler. "That's when we got the first warning order."

That mission was reduced to one platoon that deployed in May.

"But as soon as they left, there was another warning order for the rest of us," he said.

Huffstutler said at least 60 percent of the unit's Soldiers have been deployed at least once before.



Each of the 608th's platoons are self-sufficient, he said, and will be sent to different areas to run ammunition supply points at the brigade to corps levels.

"We never deploy in one place," Huffstutler said. "That would be overkill."

The platoons will provide support for five camps in Kuwait and Iraq.

Sgt. Christine Hines, an ammo specialist, and her husband, Staff Sgt. Ralphell Hines, a heavy equipment operator, are deploying together with the 608th. Her platoon will head to Iraq, while his

14th CSH mission moves into city

Staff now providing only trauma care

Melissa House

The 14th Combat Support Hospital's mission has changed for the third time in its third week deployed to New Orleans.

The Louisiana state legislature passed a proclamation exempting physicians and other health-care providers from having to comply with the state's licensing process, said Lt. Col. Rafael De Jesus, the 14th's deputy commander.

"We're now providing stop-gap emergency care for the city," De Jesus said. "Some hospitals are open for outpatient care, but when it comes to trauma, we're the only functioning hospital."

The 14th was set up near the Louis Armstrong International Airport until Sept. 19, when they received orders to move to the convention center.

Using assets from the 82nd Airborne Division Support Command and the 13th Corps Support Command, the unit moved 70 20-foot containers and 11 smaller containers, De Jesus said. The hospital was up and operational by Sept. 22.

De Jesus said the hospital tents are set up inside the back portion of the convention center because the front part, which housed the evacuees, needed to be cleaned up.

"We're still set up in the tents and providing a controlled environment for the patients," he said. "It just provides a very clean area from which to work."

The hospital has running water and is being powered through the convention center's power grid. In case of power loss, the 14th's generators will keep the unit's eight surgeons and support staff in operation.

In the past week, De Jesus said, the 14th has treated cuts, removed foreign objects from eyes, and performed surgery on a gunshot victim.

For the Army, the 14th's primary mission is to provide level-three — definitive surgery — care within a combat zone.

"This is a very competent group," De Jesus said. "We're using our lull time to do continuing medical education. This deployment is also a training event to hone our skills."

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) began the return trip to Fort Benning Sept. 16, and on Sept. 23, they had received their newest warning order. With lessons learned from their time in New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina fresh in their minds, they were preparing to move to Texas.

The first four helicopters and crew left Lawson Army Airfield Friday to pre-position near San Antonio, where company commander, Maj. John McNally, said they would "hunker down safely out of range" and wait until Hurricane Rita passed.

POSTWIDE YARD SALE

It's not the longest, but the best

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I am the reigning Southeastern United States Yard Sale Queen. Self-appointed.

If you want to wrangle the crown from my head, you'll have to best me in the talent competition. Your chance is coming, but I'm warning you, I've got yard saling down to an art.

I've even competed in The World's Longest Yard Sale, a 400-mile marathon of wall-to-wall roadside junk, piled beneath plastic awnings and strung from sagging clotheslines.

It was grueling, but I can say I've been there, done that. I didn't get the T-shirt though. No self-respecting scavenger would fork over $10 for a T-shirt that reads, "I survived The World's Longest Yard Sale."

You don't have to go quite that far to bag a really great bargain. They can be found in your own back yard — or your neighbor's front yard actually — at the Postwide Yard Sale Saturday.

Some of my best scavenging has taken place right here on post.

A couple of years ago — I remember it well, because it was my husband's birthday — I had one of those rare yard sale nirvana experiences. I'd bought Tom a trailer for his new motorcycle and snuck it into the driveway so he'd be surprised when he awoke. He was.

"Oh, honey, thank you, thank you, thank you," he said, or something to that effect. "Now we'll need to get a trailer hitch for the van."

"Yeah, how much are we talking about?" I asked, regretting my generosity.

"Oh, maybe a couple hundred."

I left — to go to yard sales, of course — seething. I knew I should've given him socks.

By the time I'd stopped at a few sales, I'd begun to calm down. They have that effect on me. I managed to forget the whole matter by the time I arrived at a yard sale in McGraw Manor. The man of the house stopped me as I was rifling through his junk.

"Excuse me, ma'am. I couldn't help but notice you drive a Mercury," he said. "I have a trailer hitch for a Mercury. Used it one time, to tow my car from Fort Lewis."

No way, I thought.

"How much?" I asked.

"$75. Paid about $250 for it," he replied as he headed for his shed, where he dug out a perfectly pristine top-of-the-line Class 5 genuine Reese trailer hitch.

Hotdoggy!

OK, OK. So it's not exactly a miracle. If that doesn't impress you, I've got a dozen more stories just like it, because I am the Queen of Yard Sales.

Wanna see me in action? I'll be blazing a trail around post Saturday. Catch me if you can.

Better yet, join me. And find out for yourself why yard sale addicts say Fort Benning's Postwide Yard Sale tops the world's longest in the battle of the bargains every time.

And for those of you who will be hosting sales, God bless you, don't even think about dragging that junk (no offense intended) back into the house. Drop it all off at the Thrift Shop.

There will be someone at the back dock between 1 and 3 p.m. to collect your donations.

Of course, the proceeds from your donations support various local charities and help finance scholarships for Fort Benning family members.

So those of you who stay home and sell instead of challenging me for the crown can make a royal contribution to the welfare of our community. It's all good.

Reporter's ignorance blows me away

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I love entertainment in all forms — books, TV, movies, music, you name it. If it can hold my attention longer than five minutes, I'm there. In the past few weeks, I've found a new form of entertainment — meteorologists and news reporters.

Let me clarify. I am, in no way, trying to make the devastation brought by Hurricanes Katrina and Rita into a humorous situation — my heart truly goes out to those affected. But anyone watching any sort of news about these hurricanes has to have seen the TV reporters, holding onto their hats, trying not to get blown down the street.

My first thought at seeing them out there is, "Did they draw the short stick?" I love weather. The Weather Channel is a staple in my house, but what possesses these people to go outside in the middle of a hurricane, when they are so vehemently telling us to stay indoors?

My favorite meteorologist is Jim Cantore on the Weather Channel. He became my instant favorite a few years back, when he was telling a story of seeing lightning during a snowstorm, and his passion about it was tangible. Whoa, I thought, here is a man, handsome to boot, who shares my love of all things weather.

So last weekend I watched all the coverage on Hurricane Rita. One of the news stations aired a local affiliate's report from Texas. There were two reporters standing in a parking lot next to a decimated building. The woman reporter was telling of how she got hit in the back by a piece of sheetrock.

What the heck was she doing that close to the building in the first place? Why don't they heed their own warnings?

I know enough that if there is a severe thunderstorm warning, stay away from the windows. I've yelled at my son many times, "Get away from the windows! It's lightning!" I think I've probably made him deathly afraid of thunderstorms, but is that a bad thing?

Another thing that makes me go, "Hmmmm" is why the reporters, out in the wind and rain, are wearing baseball caps. In a driving rain, their hair is going to get wet — is it a delay tactic? And the wind — how many times have you seen reporters getting wind-whipped, clutching their hat to their head?

My advice to these reporters — stay inside. While everyone else is evacuating, you're going in. I saw a reporter in Galveston, Texas, telling of how 90 percent of the town was evacuated. So why are you still there, lady? I'll believe you if you tell me Galveston is a ghost town — there's no need to show us empty streets and boarded up houses. Stay in the warm, dry hotel and get a couple camera shots of the wind and rain from the lobby. And stay away from those windows.

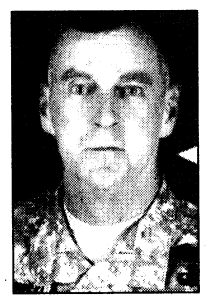
Support campaign to stop domestic violence

Our Army-based campaign to prevent domestic violence is ongoing. But each year, along with citizens and public officials across the United States, we declare the month of October as Domestic Violence Prevention Month, in order to call attention to the problem, and to re-commit ourselves to our goal.

Our campaign against domestic violence will succeed.



Several years ago all military services stepped up their efforts to end domestic violence, and the Army led the way. As time goes on, we are beginning to see some results: the numbers of cases have been in decline since the mid-1990's.

There are good signs in the civilian population as well. But the numbers remain terribly high — every 15 seconds a woman in this country is beaten by her current or former husband or intimate partner.

Studies report a range of between 2 and 4 million women are being abused annually. Family violence costs the nation from $5 to $10 billion annually in medical costs, police and court costs, shelter and foster care, sick leave, absenteeism and non-productivity.

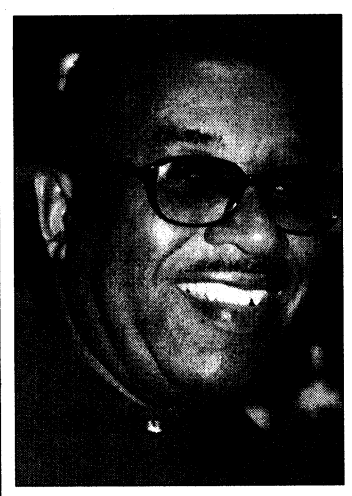
Our leadership is important. What we accomplish in the military can have positive results in the civilian community as well. Everyone at this installation must be a role model for what is right and just when it comes to domestic violence.

We must continue to build strong partnerships with the civilian community, so we can use Army teamwork to share out best prevention efforts.

Our command commitment to domestic violence prevention is total. Violence that occurs in our military families undermines our military objectives.

Children in 43 percent of all reported cases in the general population witness such violence. Children who witness violence against their mothers are ten times more likely to abuse their partners as adults, than children raised in nonviolent homes.

In other words, violence between intimate partners does violence to the children in the home. One more reason our campaign against domestic violence must succeed.



Our campaign for 2005, therefore, declares, "Domestic Violence Prevention: Make the changes that strengthen families and relationships!"

To further our campaign, I hereby proclaim October 2005 as Domestic Violence Prevention Month at Fort Benning and call on every member of this community to join the campaign.

— Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski
Commanding General

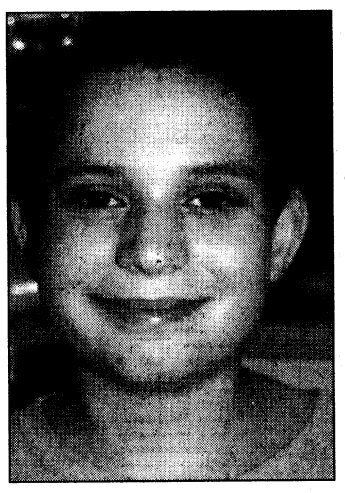
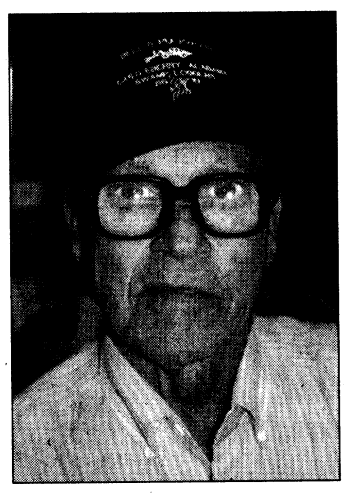
Retired 1st Sgt. George Brown, Columbus — "It's kind of like recycling. There's really good used stuff here, with a lot of use left in it. I work at the Boys' and Girls' Club, and I come in here and purchase toys that are good as new, but much cheaper."



Judy Boyd, 12-year volunteer — "Our Soldiers don't make a lot of money, but they can come in here and get affordable furniture and children's things, and it's all in great shape. Some of it's like new. We don't put it out if it's not good quality."

2nd Lt. Jeff Coughlin, 2nd Battalion (IOBC), 11th Infantry Regiment — "One man's junk is another man's treasure. I came in here with a friend to find a costume. You can find something crazy, and it's cheaper than anywhere else."



Lisa Conachan, bookkeeper — "I like that all the profits benefit the Fort Benning community. They go back into scholarships, welfare programs and such. Even the stuff we can't use gets donated to the Red Cross or goes directly to a needy family."

Drew Lesh, family member — "I came in here looking for books. You can find them here cheaper than a store. My sister's looking for Halloween stuff."

Dot O'Brien, five-year volunteer — "I like the people. I'm a people person. They call me the sales lady, because I enjoy showing people around."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Frank Troutt, 13-year volunteer — "This place means a lot to me. I get the pleasure of meeting new people — a lot of really nice people — and I just love to volunteer. It keeps me busy, keeps me out of trouble, and I like helping the customers."

Soldiers tour ancient sites in Iraq, see spider hole

Command Sgt. Maj. Don Becker
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

The battalion commander is a busy guy, so when we travel from point to point, he doesn't have time to stop along the way.

When he was on leave, I decided to take our security detachment sightseeing and maybe learn a thing or two about the history of the area we've been working in for the past nine months.

The city of Samarra, while technically not in our "area of operations," has a lot of history. Samarra, on the east side of the Tigris River, was the capital of the Muslim world from 836 to 892. Its famous structures, many now ruins, were built during this period.

We didn't actually enter the city. We stuck to the surrounding area, so we wouldn't hinder any operations our sister battalion might be conducting there.

After posting security and ensuring the bad guys weren't hanging out in there, we began to look around.

The defining feature of these ruins is a tall, spiral minaret (tower) that stands 34 meters high. There's a huge courtyard attached and all four walls are in really good shape.

A word of caution to anyone who may encounter a spiral minaret and feel the need to climb it — they get narrower as you climb upward, much narrower. Don't get me wrong, I'm not afraid of heights, but I am afraid of falling from high places.

That said, once I started up, I felt compelled to finish the ascent so as not to lose face in front of my Soldiers. That and the fact that they started climbing behind me and there was no way to get past one another on the steps kept me going all the way to the top.

When we got back to the forward operating base, I did some research on the Internet and found out the ruins were that of the Abu Duluf Mosque built in 860 A.D.

The mosque was the northern most point of ancient Samarra, one of the largest cities in Mesopotamia at the time, and was modeled after the "great Mosque" located inside the city.

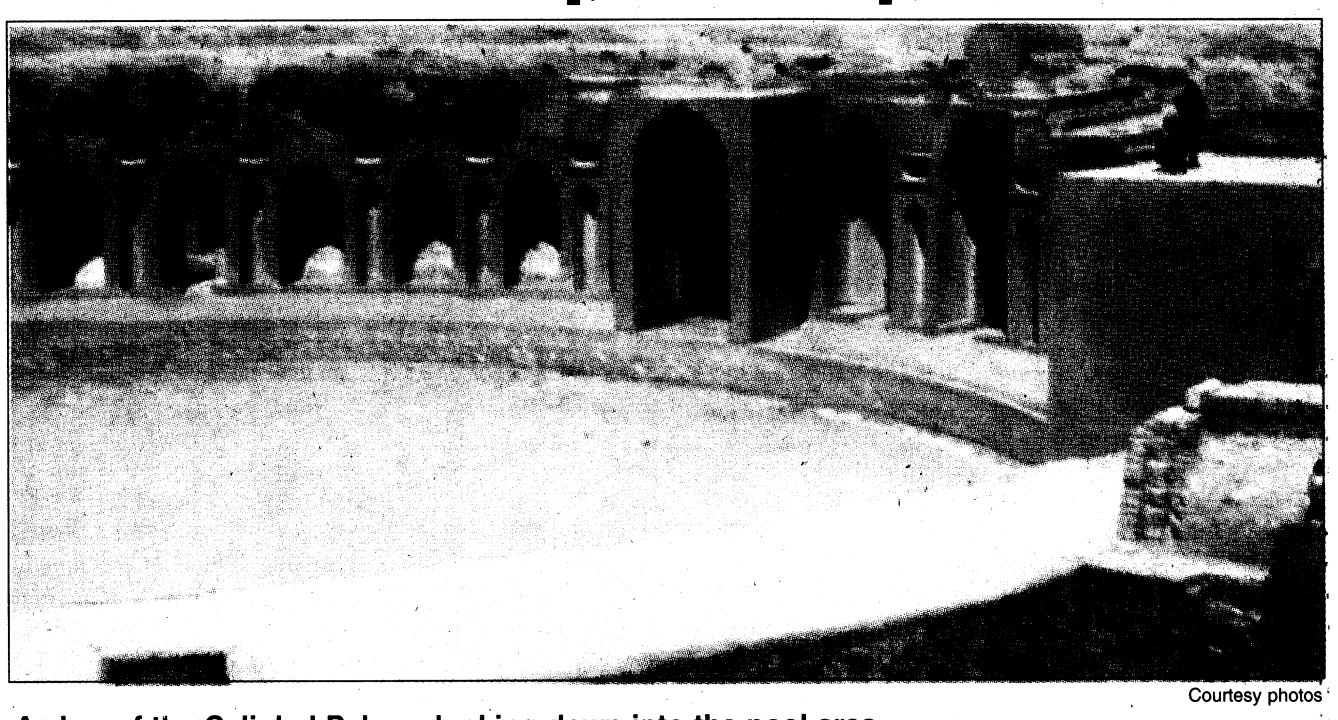
After more research, we went looking for the Caliphal Palace. From a road we occasionally travel, it's only a few hundred meters away, but you can't see what the walls are hiding unless you actually drive to it and start looking around.

It was amazing.

Built in the year 836, most of the palace is subterranean and was a big tourist attraction before the war. In the center of the palace is a large pool, 120 meters in diameter, once fed by the Tigris River.

The caverns, rooms and tunnels in the palace are great to explore, and the view from the top is breathtaking. It reminded me a lot of the catacombs in Rome, but instead of simply walking into the next room, we entered in two-man teams with rifles at the ready. You just can't be too cautious over here.

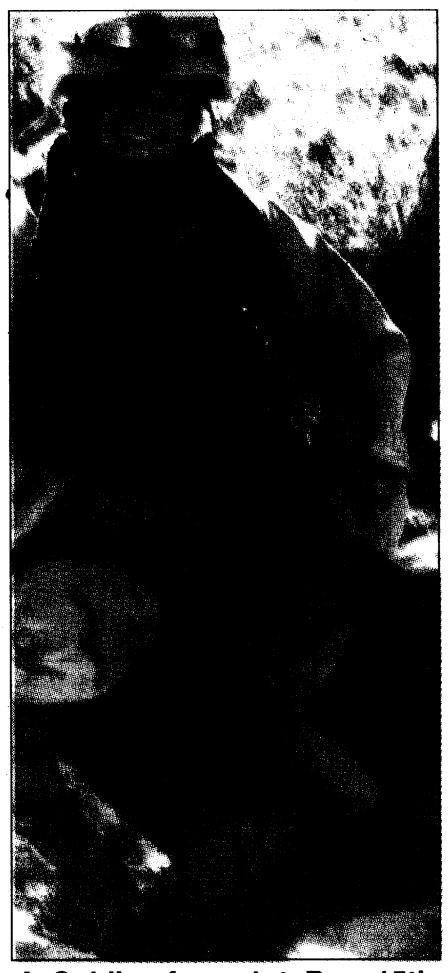
A few months ago, we had the chance to visit a location of more modern history — Saddam's spider hole. Yes, the place where the "Butcher of Baghdad" was captured in December 2003.



The area sits along the bank of the Tigris River near the town of Ad Dawr, and other than the fact that a murderous dictator —OK, an alleged murderous dictator — hid there for several months, the area is quite unremarkable.

We all looked in the hole, took a few pictures and joked about coming back one day to open a gift shop and give tours. Then we left. It wasn't nearly as interesting as the ancient world sites.

It's great to be able to get out once in a while and see some of the history of this country.



I hope, when the war is over and the Iraqi people have an established government and constitution, they'll continue to work to preserve their history, which is also world history, so generations can visit and enjoy its beauty.

Can Do!

Duluth, Ga., residents lined the parade route Saturday to cheer for Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, and the families of Soldiers deployed to Iraq. The parade, part of Duluth's annual fall festival, has featured Fort Benning Soldiers for three years.

Georgia town welcomes Benning Soldiers, families

Brittney Siter
Faith Middle School

More than half the residents of Duluth, Ga., turned out to welcome families of Fort Benning's 3rd Brigade Soldiers Saturday during the town's annual fall festival.

Two years ago, Angie Doerlich visited a recruiter in Duluth to ask how she could help the troops. Behind the desk sat a former tanker with the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment.

He put her in touch with the unit, and Doerlich solicited help from the congregation of Duluth's First United Methodist Church.

Led by Doerlich and her friend, Kathy Orcutt, who helped plan the town's annual festival, the church, and eventually the town, adopted the battalion as their own.

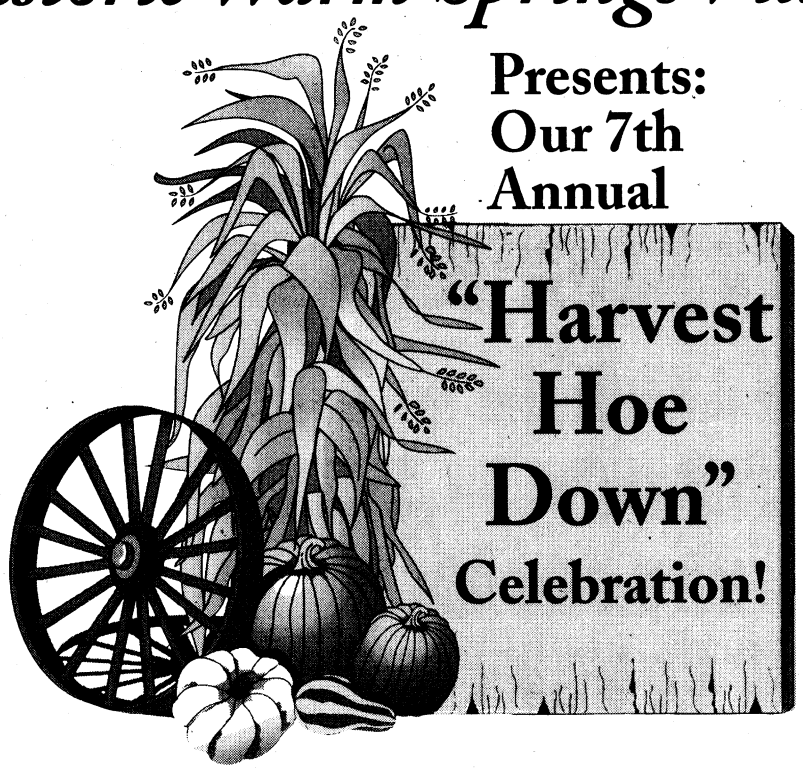
In January, when the battalion deployed to Iraq for the second time, Orcutt and Doerlich attended the farewell ceremony, delivering "hero bags" to the troops.

It was a Soldier who inspired them to "support the families back home," Doerlich said.

"He said if we really wanted to help ease their deployment, what we were doing was great, but the families have a tough job back home," she said.

The children of Kelley Hill Soldiers, like 9-month-old Kennedy Beal, were invited to ride on a float dedicated to deployed Soldiers and their families.

The Fort Benning families and rear detachment Soldiers traveled to Duluth Friday night, where dinner and hotel rooms were provided free.



After breakfast Saturday, they attended the festival and marched or rode on a float in the parade. Local residents cheered.

"This is a blessing for us, for the community," Doerlich said. "It's an avenue for our families to do something to help."

Lisa Roggeman and her daughters, Maggie and Julie, thanked the residents of Duluth. Roggeman is the wife of the 2nd Battalion's commander, Lt. Col. Rob Roggeman.

The Benning Boulevard access control point reopened Sept. 23. The access control point has a visitors center and is the new location for the vehicle registration office, which opened there Monday. The office, formerly located at Soldiers' Plaza, handles visitor passes, personal vehicle registrations and is also the place for register personal firearms registration. The ACP has the same basic setup as the I-185 access control point. Construction at Custer Road has begun and Chuck Walls, deputy garrison commander, said he expected the Custer Road construction to take three or four months.

Benning celebrates Hispanic heritage

Hispanic Heritage Month was celebrated in Infantry Hall Monday with a program on Hispanic Americans: Strong and Colorful Threads in the American Fabric and food sampling featuring dishes from Mexico, the Caribbean, Central America and South America.

"Since our nation's founding, Hispanic-Americans have served courageously in the United States armed forces," said Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general. Hispanics have earned more than three dozen Medals of Honor, he said.

The guest speaker, Brig. Gen. Rhett Hernandez, commanding general of the Human Resources Command, described his upbringing as poor, migrating from place to place as his family searched for work. He said he did not realize he was of Hispanic origin, despite his familial ties to Mexico.

"I finally knew, when I joined the Army, that I was different, and I brought something different to the fight," said Hernandez, who emphasized the educational and career opportunities the Army gave him and others like him.

White Elementary School students in native dress prepare to sing the national anthem.

"Our Army strength comes from our diversity," he said. "And it's what makes us the best Army in the world. Tell everyone of the unbelievable opportunity in our great Army.

"Although I was the first in my family to graduate from college and the first to serve in the military, countless others in the service have similar stories," he said.

Command Sergeant Major Rafael Colondres, command sergeant major of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, said he believes the strength of the Army today is its diversity and versatility.

" Because of that, we can do things that other people in other armies cannot do," Colondres said.

Hispanic Heritage Month continues through Oct. 15.

The USS Arizona Memorial marks the spot where 1,177 American servicemen were killed when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941. Across the bay from the memorial is the Pearl Harbor Museum and Visitor Center, which is slowly sinking in the soft earth. The governor of Hawaii hosted a private ceremony to honor the survivors of Pearl Harbor and to launch a campaign to raise funds to shore up and expand the Museum and Visitor Center.

Civilian survivors visit Pearl Harbor

Efforts underway to save, rebuild sinking museum

They were "keiki o ka aina." Children of the land.

Ellen Higuchi was 11 years old in 1941, an olive-skinned, brown-eyed Oahu native, who lived about 10 miles east of Pearl Harbor with her parents and her older brother.

Joan Rodby was 10, with fair hair and fair skin, but a native, nonetheless. Her family lived a few blocks from Schofield Barracks.

The two spent their lives on the island, living a few miles apart but never meeting, until Sept. 19, when Rodby sought out Higuchi's company at a ceremony honoring survivors of the Dec. 7, 1941, attack that launched the U.S. into World War II.

Rodby and Higuchi were the only female survivors present, and at first glance, they appeared to have little in common.

Rodby, blonde, petite, and effusive, looks every bit the professional she was for years, when she and her husband ran a restaurant across the street from "the barracks." Rodby, her hair cut stylishly, carried a snazzy oversized purse she called her "evacuation bag," a reference to the bags the islanders kept packed and ready in the months following the attack.

A latecomer would not know the two women were not old friends, as they shared common memories about the Hawaii they knew at that time.

"Remember those awful air raid sirens?" Higuchi asked Rodby.

"Remember how we had to practice with the gas masks?" Rodby replied.

"Chin first. That's how you did it," Higuchi said, tilting her head as she drew an imaginary strap below her chin. The two laughed together.

Such was not always the case. For many years, Higuchi would not talk, even to her family, about that day. Her niece, Cheryl Nagasako, who lives on Fort Benning, coaxed her aunt into sharing her story with a reporter a couple of years ago.

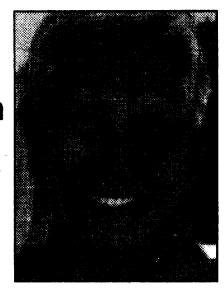
"We didn't know what it was all about. It was just a normal Sunday," Higuchi told the reporter. "Then boom! This crash … and when I looked, my arm was hanging."

The interview is now featured in the Pearl Harbor Museum, where more than 1.5 million visitors see it each year. The interest seems to perplex Higuchi.

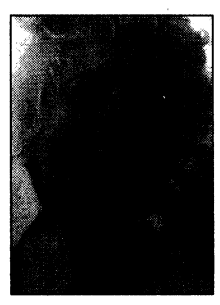
"Why?" she asks her niece, when she's asked a question.

Why indeed? Why the renewed interest in the attack, and why the focus on survivors like Higuchi and Rodby, when for so long it was the stories of the servicemen that dominated the news each year on the anniversary of the attack that killed 2,390 Americans, the vast majority sailors?

Daniel Martinez has been the chief historian at the USS Arizona Memorial since 1989. He realized the story of Pearl Harbor does not belong to the Navy when a Jewish survivor of the Nazi prison camp at Auschwitz visited the site a few years ago.



"She said that she believed this was a place of hope," Martinez said. "She said, 'When we found out America was attacked, when we knew America was in the war, we thought we might live. We had hope.'"



At that moment, Martinez said, he realized Pearl Harbor "is not just America's story."

The story, the lessons of Pearl Harbor, will eventually disappear if care isn't taken to preserve them, he said. Beyond the recorded stories of survivors like Higuchi, the museum and memorial site houses thousands of artifacts, which are mostly stored in lockers, because the facility is too small to accommodate them all.

"We didn't know what it was all about. It was just a normal Sunday. Then boom! This crash … and when I looked, my arm was hanging."

Ellen Higuchi
Pearl Harbor survivor

"The stories are there, but they're getting harder and harder to get. Harder to remember."

Joan Rodby
Pearl Harbor survivor

That's one reason a Pearl Harbor Memorial Fund was established to expand the facility. More importantly, the museum is slowly sinking. Situated directly on the harbor, it has settled more than 30 inches into the soft earth, causing a dangerous seepage problem in the basement. If it isn't shored up or replaced within the next four to nine years, officials say, it may be too late to save it.

"That motivates me to work harder … to make sure construction happens in time," Hawaii's Gov. Linda Lingle told the survivors. "It's not Hawaii's campaign. (Pearl Harbor) is a part of the world's heritage today."

Lingle and her Arizona counterpart, Gov. Janet Napolitano, used the ceremony to launch a campaign to raise $34 million to build a new museum and visitor center, with plans to break ground March 7, 2007.

For survivors like Rodby, it can't come too soon.

"The stories are there, but they're getting harder and harder to get. Harder to remember," she said.

ACUs need IR feedback patch

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Although the Army plans to complete fielding the Army Combat Uniform no later than December 2007, many Soldiers are buying it off post.

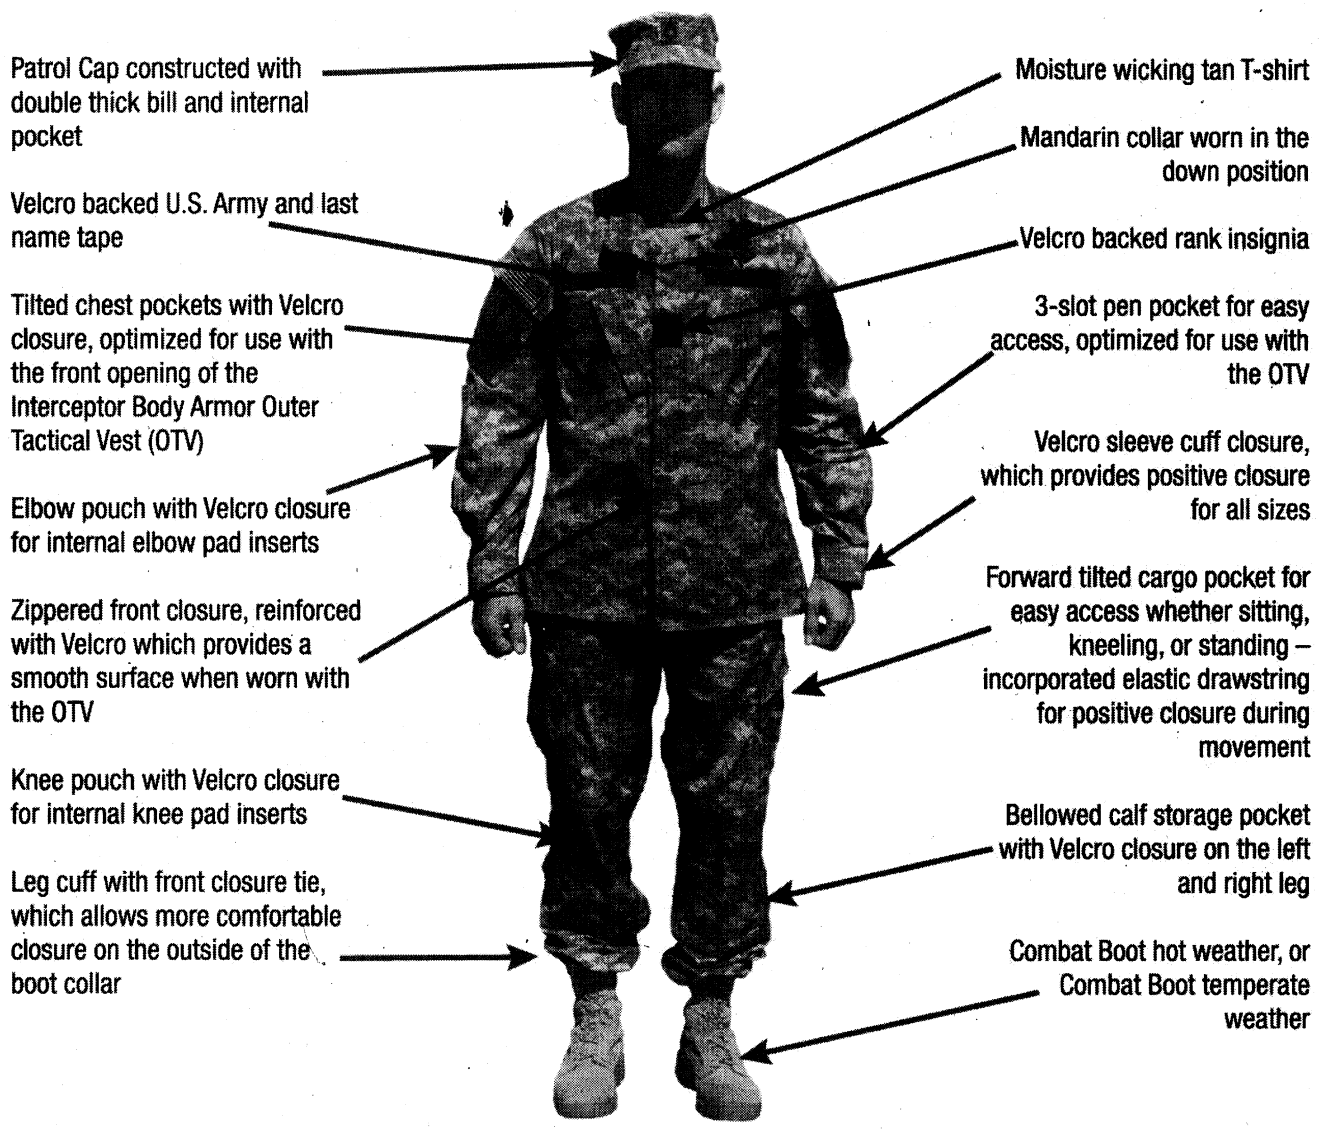
The Central Issue Facility, better known by its acronym CIF, issues the ACU to units as they deploy, but if Soldiers want to wear the ACU in garrison, they must buy it off post because Military Clothing Sales Stores won't have it in stock until January 2006, said Judd Anstey, with Army & Air Force Exchange Service.

But when Soldiers buy the ACU off post, some are purchasing it without the infrared feedback patch sewn on, said Sgt. Maj. Thomas House, the Training and Doctrine Command System Manager-Soldier sergeant major.

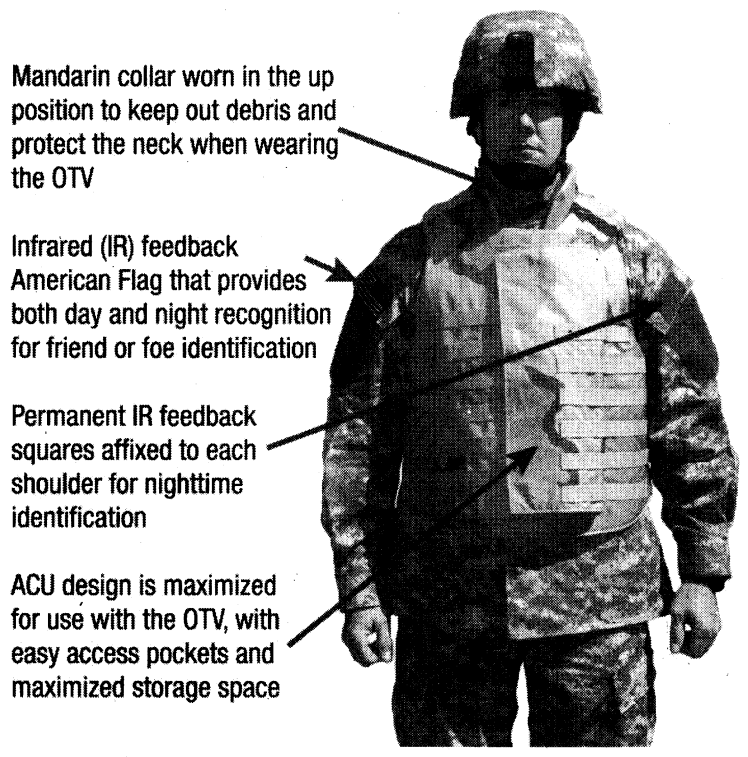
Certified uniform manufacturers aren't allowed to ship the ACU with the IR feedback patch sewn on and vendors can't sell the uniform with the patch sewn on, House said. But Soldiers need to ask for it and have it sewn on before they wear it — without the IR feedback patch, Soldiers are out of uniform.

"Soldiers are so excited about getting a new uniform they go out and buy the uniform," he said.

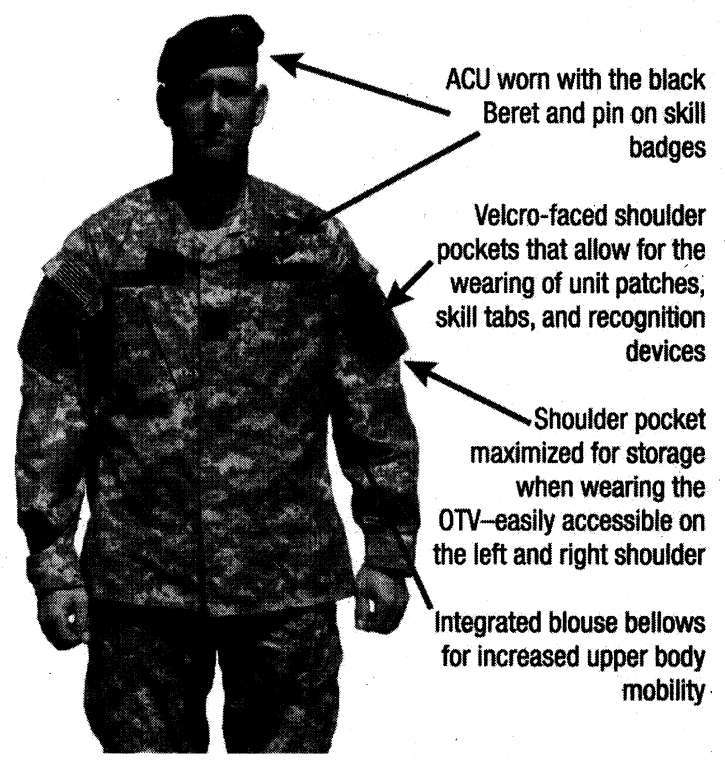
"They don't know they have to have the patch on to make it an authentic uniform."



The ACU's digital camouflage pattern of green, tan and gray will help Soldiers blend into woodland, desert and urban environments effectively, according to the Program Executive Office Soldier Web site.



The ACU is made from the same material as the summer BDUs, a blend of 50 percent cotton and 50 percent nylon, treated with an wrinkle-free finish, according to the PEO Soldier Web site.



The ACU should have the same wear out rate as the summer BDUs — six months.

Army Regulation 670-1, which covers the wear and appearance of Army uniforms and insignia, is online and can be found using the AKO site, www.us.army.mil.

4th RTB wives conquer fears, obstacles during Jane Wayne Day

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's a tradition at the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, and it's been around longer than anyone can remember. And Sept. 24, a team of women of Headquarters and Headquarters Company took home the 2005 Jane Wayne Day trophy.

Shortly after dawn, Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Jim Mingus gave the more than 40 women a modified Ranger "pep talk."

"I tell the Ranger students they need to have a lot of motivation, teamwork and take it one day at a time," Mingus said. "Today, you're going to need to have motivation, teamwork, and maybe take it one event at a time. But the most important thing is to have fun."

Although some of the day's events are more commonly seen during the annual Best Ranger Competition, some — like jumping from the 34-foot towers on Eubanks Field — are things every Ranger student has already completed.

For Karla Jones, a Jane Wayne Day veteran, the jump tower wasn't much of a problem. She said one of the things she enjoyed was watching the children take their turns.

"The kids have no fear," she said.

But 12-year-old Mika Liembach said not all the events were a walk in the park. After negotiating the jump tower, he tackled a rappel tower on Todd Field and then braved the 60-foot tower, a simulated helicopter rappel.

"It felt scary at first," Mika said. "Then I felt gravity kicking in, and it felt good." Mika's father, Staff Sgt. Jesse Liembach, joked it was because Mika was used to jumping off roofs.

And moms like Scherri Garner took their cues from the kids.

"This has all been exciting," Garner said, as she practiced the tomahawk throw. "I've been waiting to do this, and this is my chance." She admitted that after watching her son, Evan, jump three times from the 34-foot tower, she was finally able to get out the mock door herself.

"I'm looking forward to getting dirty," she said. "The only thing I'm not looking forward to is the monkey bars."

After grabbing an MRE, moms and kids settled down for a quick break.

And that break meant a few minutes for April Frans to give her 5-month-old son, Owen, his bottle. "(Owen's) out trying to see mommy make a fool of herself," Frans said. "I did the 34-foot tower, but the 60-foot one was a little too big."

The B Company women, who, in recent years have never won the friendly competition, were out in force.

"We always have the best turn out," said Kathy Bielski. The 14 women were cheering each other on as they took turns with the tomahawk and bow and arrow, since good throws and shots added points to the score sheets.

"You go girl," Bielski told Garner, who stuck the tomahawk into the target. "You made it look easy."

As his team finished the tomahawk and bow and arrow throw, 1st Sergeant Jason Gueringer gave his "Janes" a pep talk.

"Only two more events to go," he said. "It's time to get dirty."

> "I'm looking forward to getting dirty. The only thing I'm not looking forward to is the monkey bars."

Busses took the team from Todd Field to Malvesti Field for the obstacle course and the monkey bars Garner was worried about .

And, as they found out, they were right to worry. One thing their Ranger instructor husbands and team coaches didn't tell them was that the second-to-last bar on the horizontal ladder — or monkey bars — wasn't set. As the women reached the bar, it rolled, sending them into the muddy water below.

Among the women was Mingus' sister-in-law, Karen Mingus, who flew in with her family from Minneapolis to participate in the event. Her children cheered her on through the obstacle course.

At the end of they day, Laura Auer confessed to being tired, but pleased.

"It was a great day," she said. "'My camouflage came off and my hands are killing me from the bars, but it was fun."

Mingus said he thought the turn out for this year's event was larger than last year, and said he just wanted the women to enjoy themselves.

"I think it went well," he said.

Laura Auer, left, and Marilyn Kirkover climb over the top of the cargo net at the Malvesti Obstacle Course.

The day's final event was the Zodiac boat race at Victory Pond. Each team left the shore and headed to the middle of the pond with five paddles and a Ranger instructor "anchor."

will stay in Kuwait, making it uncertain if they'll see each other on their first anniversary Nov. 27.

Christine's friend, Tami Pritchard, came to see her former unit off. Pritchard left the Army in November, but remained in touch with Christine, her son's godmother.

As Christine gave him his morning bottle, she said she'd have a tough time leaving if she had an infant to care for.

"My daughter is nine," Christine said. "So she understands. I dropped her off in Atlanta yesterday and I started crying. She wiped my tears."

Along with her daughter, Christine left the top tier of her wedding cake with her aunt, not caving in to her husband's suggestion that they eat it early.

Sgts. Ron Cox and Ilia Zifiroski sat on the curb waiting for the buses in the self-proclaimed "safe zone."

The single Soldiers said there would be no tears there, but Zifiroski said the misting rain might actually make it look like they were crying.

Cox was using his cell phone to take care of last-minute details about his finances, using information he learned on his last deployment to take advantage of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act.

Since he had already been deployed to Kuwait with the 16th Quartermaster Company in 2003, he said he knew what the area looked like, and he was ready get to work as a 21M — a military firefighter.

Zafiroski, a cook, said he volunteered to deploy two years ago.

"I begged and I pleaded and now they're finally taking me," he said. "I'm ready to go, but my family's a little nervous. Kuwait's not as hectic as Iraq, but being family, they worry no matter what."

Tom and Debbie Hardy traveled from Springfield, Ill., to send their son, Pfc. Joshua Hardy, overseas. Debbie said it was hard to see him go.

"This is what he wanted to do," she said. "Right now, I'm just holding back the flood. He's our baby."

Candi Pagan spends a few moments with her husband, Spc. Esteban Pagan, before he boarded the bus to the airfield Tuesday.

Joshua's grandfather, a World War II veteran, served three years in North Africa. The two had a photo taken together, with Joshua in uniform.

"It was special for my dad," Tom said. "I'm proud of our son. Just to be here and be part of this is special. And this won't be as tough as my dad had it in World War II. We'll get to talk to him."

Huffstuter said the unit has been preparing for the mission for so long, they're ready to go.

"Morale is great," he said.

In 2003, the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act replaced the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of 1940.

The 2003 legislation updates and strengthens civil protections first enacted during World War II for all service people on active duty.

In brief, the SCRA provides the following protection to military personnel on active duty;

• Any active-duty service member who has received PCS orders outside the continental United States, or who is deployed for 180 days or more, may terminate a motor vehicle lease without incurring early termination charges.

• If an installment contract was entered into before the service member went on active duty and at least one payment was made, the creditor cannot repossess the property or terminate the contract for breach without a court order.

• Any service member who has received PCS orders or is being deployed 90 days or longer has the right to terminate a housing lease within 30 days with written notice and a copy of their orders.

• There is an automatic 90 day delay of judicial and administrative hearings upon application by the service member.

• Service members and their families with a housing lease under $2,400 cannot be evicted without a court order. This housing amount is adjusted for inflation every year.

• A nonmilitary spouse of an active duty service member who earns income in the state their spouse is assigned cannot be taxed at a higher tax bracket.

• Pre-service mortgage, credit card and car loans can usually have the interest rates capped at 6 percent. The excess portion above 6 percent does not become due when the service member leaves active duty. It is permanently forgiven.

in the Global War on Terrorism."

Although Congress has not officially approved the move, Wojdakowski said Fort Benning is gearing up for the change.

Fort Benning must increase its ability to train more students by building additional facilities to train the increasing number of Infantry Soldiers as well as creating the facilities for the training of Armor.

"The whole nature of Fort Benning as a community will probably change if we become the maneuver center … so we have a lot of work to do figuring all that out."

Having spent the last seven years in a field environment, Wojdakowski has been involved with the Infantry, performing peacetime and wartime missions.

"I can say without question that Fort Benning should be very proud of the Infantrymen they have trained here over that period of time," he said.

He went on to say that his unique experiences have given him significant insight into his role as chief of the Infantry.

Wojdakowski plans to look to units downrange for information about which systems and equipment work and which doesn't, what training and doctrine works well for the field and what seems to miss the mark to get Soldiers and leaders ready for conditions they will face in the contemporary operating environment.

"It's an environment where there are no front lines. It's a 360 degree battlefield where the enemy is apt to come at you from any direction. There's no safe haven."

Wojdakowski said this is why the Warrior Ethos is vital.

"Every Soldier has to be a Warrior, regardless of where he or she is on the battlefield, because the enemy can hit them and is hitting our Soldiers from all directions," he said.

Since Fort Benning's Infantry School is the "keeper of the basic skills of all Soldiers," the general said, it will continue to take the lead on instilling the Warrior Ethos.

Finally, in response to a question about quality of life in an Army where deployments are tough on Soldiers and families, the general said it was important for Fort Benning and the Army to continue the programs and systems that support the families.

"Our most valuable resource for any Soldier is not the installation they live on or anything else. It's their families and the support of their family when they go off to do the bidding of the country," he said.

Keeping families in touch with their Soldier downrange was at the heart of the issue, but deployment cycles themselves were also discussed.

"Looking to the future, the goal is to stabilize Soldiers and families at a permanent station for much longer than we have in the past," he said. Wojdakowski said this will help to more accurately predict deployments and help decrease the possibility of back-to-back deployments.

Tune to Fort Benning's command access channel to hear the entire interview beginning Monday. The U.S. Army Infantry Center's television station welcomes comments or questions for future interviews with the general via e-mail at usaictv@benning.army.mil.

498th: Provide medevac

Thursday, the aircraft sat inside the hangar, while mechanics from Defense Support Services performed critical heavy maintenance required after a certain number of flight hours. While in New Orleans, the 498th completed medevac and search and rescue missions. Back at Benning, the DS2 team continued their support.

"We've been pretty busy here, even while they were gone," said mechanic Bill Livingston. "They ferried aircraft up here for major repairs."

Of the unit's 15 aircraft, only seven are at Fort Benning. The rest are in Savannah, Ga., and Fort Bragg, N.C., for rest following the 498th's return from Iraq in March.

"We're still recovering from Iraq," McNally said, "and without (DS2) we couldn't accomplish the level of readiness we have."

Medevac, search and rescue are the two main missions of the 498th. Because of those missions, the unit's aircraft are equipped with hoist capability.

"These were golden," McNally said. "They were absolutely critical in (New Orleans), and they could be for Houston and Galveston. Hopefully not."

McNally said one of the key lessons he and his Soldiers learned was the importance of being as flexible as possible to adapt to whatever came their way.

In addition to the hoist, the helicopters are equipped with a carousel that can carry six patients on litters. On the first day in New Orleans, they removed the carousels to make more space. As they transitioned into search and rescue mode, they were able to lift as many people as possible — and quite a few more than the 13 they had seat belts for.

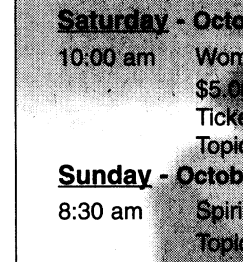
"New Orleans was insane, to say the least," McNally said. "It was shocking. We didn't expect the level of devastation, or to see so many citizens in that desperate of a situation."

One of the 498th's flight medics, Staff Sgt. Christopher James, was planning to head home for the weekend to help his mother clean up the damage Katrina caused in his hometown of Moss Point, Miss. Instead, he was waiting for the order to fly to Texas.

After New Orleans, he said the unit needed to be prepared for anything. Their initial mission was set on medevac, he said — pick up patients and treat them en route. But when they switched gears to search and rescue, he and his crew had 45 missions on one day.

"Some things you see take you back to places you don't want to be," James said. "Yes. We had flashbacks to Iraq. I don't think any of us were prepared for New Orleans."

TV pictures didn't compare to the reality on the ground, said James, whose aircraft hoisted one man who had been on his rooftop for nine days waiting to be rescued. He said he got hugs from people just because he handed them a bottle of water.



"It gets you emotionally," he said. "You may be the angel of mercy they've been waiting for for days."

He said he's optimistic about the Rita mission.

"The guys are excellent at what they do," he said. "You never get a 'B' team with this unit."

THE BAYONET COMMUNITY

The Postwide Yard Sale starts at 8 a.m. Saturday

When two hunters with two very different prey produce two kids, something's gotta give on the biggest hunting day of the season.

Can this marriage be saved?

Last Saturday Cindy and Bobby Hicks were single-minded in their pursuit of the trophy. Cindy teamed up with four other wives from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion during the annual Jane Wayne Day competition. Her husband, Sgt. 1st Class Bobby Hicks, the battalion's supply and logistics NCOIC, coached the team to a first-place finish.

Scarcely had their euphoria died down when, on the way to the sitter's house to retrieve 21-month-old Shane and 9-month-old Maggie, conversation turned to their plans for this weekend.

That's when the trouble started.

He said:

"I had to work last Saturday, and I was OK with that. And I have to work again this Sunday. But I have plans to hunt Saturday, and she says I need to stay home with the kids."

"One day of the year? You went to the postwide yard sale last spring."

"Why can't we just get a sitter?"

"Can't we find someone else?"

"I thought finding sitters was your responsibility, and bringing home the bacon was mine."

"And I think I'm doing the responsible thing by going out and finding food for them."

"You can find bargains at the mall."

"That was low."

"Can't you take the kids with you?"

"Take him hunting? Are you crazy?"

"Well, do you have a better idea?"

She said:

"Saturday is the postwide yard sale. I stay home with the kids all through hunting season, which is like all year here, so this is the one day of the year I think he should handle them."

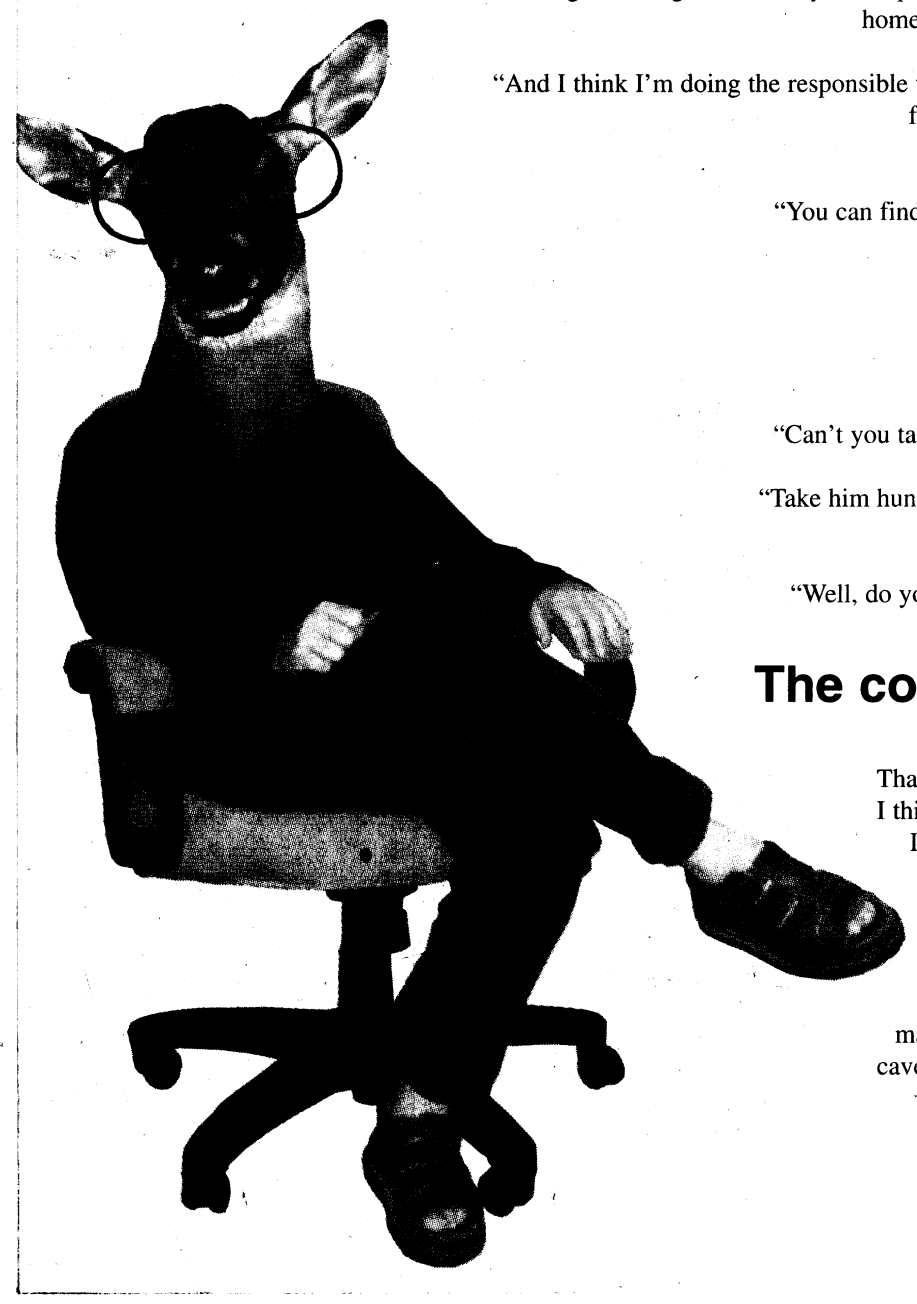
"OK, twice a year I do this. I don't think that's asking too much."

"Because the sitter is going to the yard sale with me."

"Have at it. I found the first one."

"Neanderthal. I have a job, and you have a job. The kids are our responsibility."

"You can go find food any night of the week at the Commissary. At least that's a sure thing. There's no guarantee you'll kill anything but time Saturday. But I guarantee I'll bag a few bargains."



"Big difference. I found a bagful of clothes for Maggie — brand new stuff with the tags still on them — before she was even born. I paid five bucks. Heck, with what I save, we can go out for a steak dinner when you come home empty handed."

"Sorry."

"Oh yeah, right. OK, I'll take Maggie, and you take Shane."

"Take them to yard sales? In and out of the car in 90-degree heat? Are you crazy?"

"Me? You're the logistics guy. Figure something out."

The counselor's turn:

"Oh, deer, Cindy and Bobby are in a real scrape. They have reached a crisis in their marriage. That much is obvious. They've only been married three years, so it's much too early to call it a rut. I think they're still feeling their way through the compromise process.

I have really high hopes that they can get through this, but unless Bobby stays home with the kids this weekend, I'd recommend that Cindy soak his hunting gear in bleach water.

"Now, hear me out. The case for the postwide yard sale is solid. It saves a lot of doe. I mean dough. But more importantly, if Bobby has a shot at keeping the best catch of his life, he's going to have to stay home and mind the Hicks' chicks.

"The fact that Cindy and Bobby have solicited professional advice bodes well for their marriage. They're on the right track, but they're not out of the woods yet. If Bobby curbs his caveman tendencies, I foresee smooth yard saling from here on out."

ASK THE JUDGE

1st Lt. Douglas M. Schaefer
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: How can I protect myself against identity theft?

A: One important way to protect yourself from identity theft is to check your credit report. Previously, consumers had to pay for three separate credit reports from the three separate credit reporting companies — Equifax, Experian and TransUnion — to get a complete picture of their credit history. Recent legislation now allows consumers to annually request a credit report from each of the three credit reporting agencies.

An identity thief can commit fraud by using your personal information (such as your name, Social Security number or an existing credit card number) to open a credit card account in your name.

After the identity thief opens the credit card account and does not pay the bills, the delinquent account is reported on your credit report.

Incorrect information on your credit report affects your ability to get credit, insurance or housing.

Under the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act, consumers can request a free copy of their credit report once every 12 months.

There are three ways to order your free annual credit report: go to www.annualcreditreport.com, call (877) 322-8228 or complete the Annual Credit Report Request Form and mail it to Annual Credit Report Request Service, P.O. Box 105281, Atlanta GA 30348-5281.

By requesting and checking your credit report annually, you can protect yourself against identity theft by finding inaccurate information in your credit history and notifying the credit reporting companies.

For more information, call 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Various tips to keep your children safe

The University of Georgia College of Agricultural and Environmental Services

Each year more than 200,000 children are treated in U.S. hospital emergency rooms for playground associated injuries. Most of these injuries occur when a child falls from the equipment.

Take a look at the surfaces of your local playground. There should be a 12-inch depth of wood chips, mulch, sand, gravel or mats made of safety-tested rubber or fiber material. This surface will prevent possible head injuries in a case a child falls.

Make sure your child wears a bike helmet — it can reduce the risk of head injury by up to 85 percent. There is one exception — don't wear a helmet when playing on playground equipment.

Drawstrings on jackets and sweatshirts may look trendy, but they can get caught on lots of stuff, including playground equipment, school bus or car doors, elevators and cribs. Remove drawstrings on hoods or around the neck of clothing. Trim any drawstrings at waist or bottom of clothing to no more than three inches.

How much is too much for children to carry in their backpacks? Children should not carry more than 10 to 15 percent of their body weight. Take a load off a child's back:

- Place heaviest items first.
- Buy an appropriate size backpack, one that ends just a few inches above the waist and has soft, padded straps.
- Compartments help distribute the weight.
- Try one with wheels that children can pull.

Encourage your children to carry their backpacks over both shoulders to better distribute the weight. Make sure your children bend their knees when they first lift their packs, to avoid further strain on their back muscles.

Children carrying too much weight around may stretch or strain neck and shoulder muscles or result in a spinal injury.

For more information on keeping children safe, call your local County Extension Service Office.

Towing service available on post

Will operate 24-hours a day, every day

A 21-foot roll-back wrecker, similar to the one pictured above, will be in service Saturday.

Fort Benning motorists needing a tow can now call the Auto Skills Center for help.

Fort Benning's Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation will start providing wrecker service Saturday, said Betty Mayfield-Currington, post marketing assistant for DMWR.

The service will be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week to all personnel having business on post, said Bill Player, manager of the DMWR Auto Skills Center.

"If you can get through the gates of Fort Benning, you're authorized for us to tow. Soldiers, civilians, contractors and visitors are all welcome to use this service," he said.

The $70,000, 21-foot roll-back wrecker will be parked at Fort Benning's I-185 gate to help the military police with towing, Player said.

"This way we can clear wrecks right away rather than have to wait for a truck from off post," he said.

Towing anywhere on post within 10 miles of the Auto Skills Center will cost $45. Towing anywhere on or off post within 30 miles of the center will cost $55.

In addition to the towing service, the Auto Skills Center is available for use by all active duty, retired, National Guard, Reserve and Department of the Army civilians and their families.

Located in Building 111 on Marchant Road next to the post car wash, the Auto Skills Center features 42 bays, including flat bays and lift bays, for auto repair and do-it-yourself servicing.

It also has a paint booth, battery charger, steam cleaner, tire machine, welder, wheel balancer, engine analyzer and many more automotive-related items for rent.

Mechanics are available at the Automotive Service Center for tune-ups, brake inspections and repairs, oil changes, tire services, air conditioning checks and charges, and a variety of other services.

The center is open 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays.

For information or towing service during shop hours, call 545-2337. For towing service at any other time of the day or night, call 527-0971.

For information about fees and other services at the Automotive Skills Center, visit the Web site at www.benningmwr.com/autoskills.

Clean up day comes to help Hooch

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will participate in the annual Help the Hooch River and Creek Clean Up Oct. 14.

Help the Hooch River and Clean Up is part of the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission.

Area schools and Fort Benning will take part in this event on Oct. 14, and the rest of the Chattahoochee River will be cleaned up Oct. 15.

Last year, more than 12,000 people helped remove more than 143,000 pounds of debris from the banks of the Chattahoochee River.

Volunteers who will help pick up litter and trash along the 17 miles of the Chattahoochee River that runs through Fort Benning are asked to meet at 8 a.m. Oct. 14 in front of Building 6 by the large parking lot.

Site captains will hand out latex gloves and bags for litter, said Gary Hollon, Fort Benning conservation officer for the Directorate of Public Works.

"We have a lot of area to cover, and we know we can't get to all of them in one day, but we'll clean up those areas we can," he said.

Hollon recommends volunteers wear old clothes and comfortable walking shoes or field boots. They should also bring water, heavy-duty work gloves, sun block, insect repellent, a rain jacket, and extra shoes and socks.

Lunch will be provided to all volunteers at Uchee Creek Recreation Area. For more information, call Hollon at 544-7070.

Volunteers who wish to help Oct. 15 can call Gloria Weston-Smith, director of Keep Columbus Beautiful, at 653-4008, or visit the Help the Hooch Web site at www.helpthehooch.org.

Chapel launches 40 days campaign

Program based on best-seller

CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel

When Fort Benning's CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel launches its "40 Days of Purpose Campaign" Sunday, it will join a worldwide network of thousands of churches.

Inspired by remarkable stories of spiritual renewal and growth, an estimated 13,000 churches from 60 denominations have experienced the purpose-driven phenomena inspired by a California pastor's bestselling book, said Chaplain (Maj.) Jeff Hawkins, senior pastor at CrossRoads.

"We're incredibly excited about bringing this campaign to Fort Benning and Fort Benning to this campaign," Hawkins said. "More people, in more places, have been helped in more ways through this phenomenal spiritual tool than anything I've ever seen, and it is coming to Fort Benning.

"We haven't even begun and I've already had people stop me and say, 'I've heard about the book, and I've been waiting for this.'

"Just today, I had someone pop in my office and say, 'This was the best thing I've ever done ... even though I've done it before, I want to be a part of it again. Sign me up — especially for a small group!'

"It's just so helpful in people's lives," Hawkins said.

Already CrossRoads has more than a dozen video-based small groups forming that will take place weekly in homes on and off post in addition to the main service at 11 a.m. Sunday at Kelley Hill Chapel.

At the center of the campaign is the fastest-selling hardcover nonfiction book in history. The Purpose Driven Life by Rick Warren has sold more than 30 million copies since the book's release in 2002.

During the 40 Days of Purpose Campaign at CrossRoads, the truths about God's five purposes for people — worship, fellowship, discipleship, ministry and evangelism — will be communicated repeatedly in six ways:

1) An all-chapel 40 Days of Purpose kick-off gathering;

2) A weekly message by the CrossRoads team;

3) A personal or family daily devotional reading;

4) A weekly Scripture memory verse that everyone memorizes;

5) A weekly video-based small group gathering; and

6) A daily e-mail of encouragement.

"People will hear about God's purposes for their lives in many different formats," Hawkins said. "This will allow for the truths to sink deeper into hearts, which is essential for any permanent life change.

"We're just excited to help people get from where they are to where they want to be by first discovering, 'It's not about you.' All of us long for meaning, a higher purpose than the temporary fun fixes we've tried," Hawkins said. "And that's exactly what these weeks together will help you discover — what on Earth you're here for."

The 40 Days of Purpose Campaign begins Oct. 2, and there is still space to sign up. CrossRoads in a postwide service for everyone that meets at 11 a.m. Sundays at Kelley Hill Chapel. Nursery and children's churches are always provided.

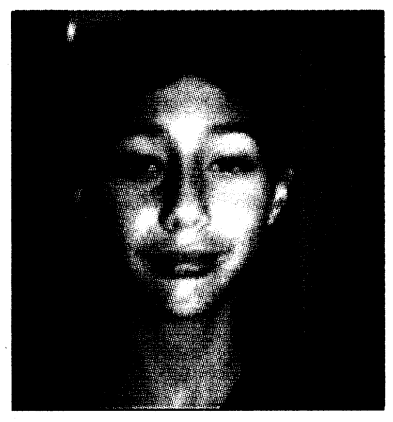
Fort Benning youth in the news

Lisa Madler asked her seventh-grade students at Faith Middle School about the impact celebrities have on their lives. Here's what they said:

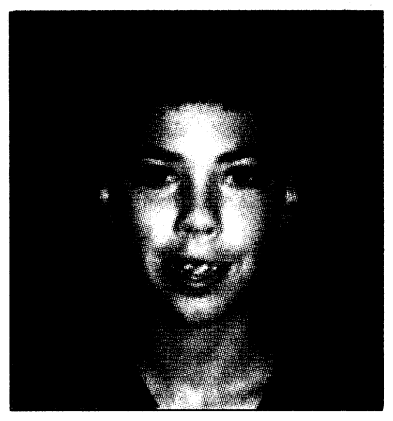


Melissa Cuevas

"Many celebrities and the marketing that surrounds them are not positive role models for young girls and women.

"I think these celebrities influence people to do really bad things to their bodies in order to look like them.

"Most women celebrities are underweight and many girls become intimidated by this, so they start thinking they are fat when they are really normal. They start dieting and starving themselves so they can look super skinny.

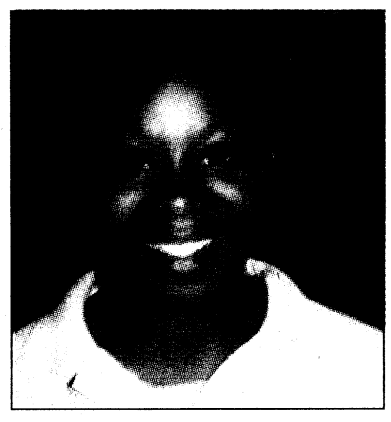


"It makes me sad, because these woman and girls are hurting their health."

Donald Smith

"Usually celebrities do not influence me. Unlike some other people, I don't care about copying every little thing a celebrity does or wears. I just don't pay them much attention. However, my dad introduced me to a famous American runner named Jim Ryun. He broke the mile record when he was still in high school with a time of 3:55.

"After my dad told me about Jim Ryun, he told me I was a good runner, too. That influenced me a lot, and I began running more and more with my dad. Then I started entering races and winning them. I guess you could say I'm addicted to running thanks to my dad and a runner named Jim Ryun."

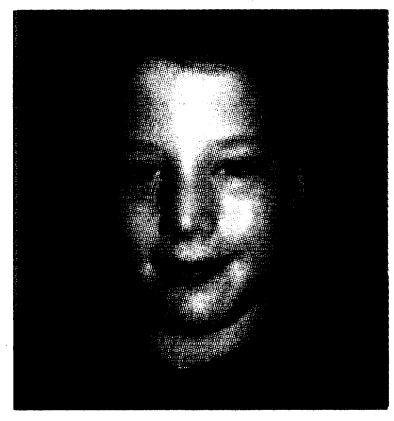


Kaleb Harbert

"I remember the first time I saw Tobey McGuire as Peter Parker in Spider-man. I thought he was a really cool actor, and I started watching Marvel movies like Hulk and Daredevil.

"I also started reading Marvel Comics. That led to collecting Marvel Comics shirts, toys, video games, posters, bed sheets, pencils, cups, hats, etc. I even dressed as Daredevil on Halloween.

"Lately I've tried to encourage my brother to start collecting with me."



Courtney Thames

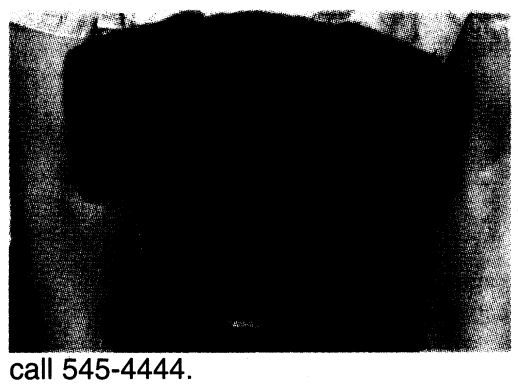
"Some celebrities are hard to look up to and imitate. Many act differently in public than they do with their families. This creates an illusion that can disappoint their fans.

"Celebrities make being famous look easy and carefree, when it really is a lot of hard work, and very few actually make it to that level. They go through many hard times and difficulties, and these are forgotten when they become famous, when they should be acknowledged.

"I think celebrities do influence me. I have to be aware of that, because their influence can be good or bad."

David Benson

"Yes, celebrities do influence me. Once I saw a commercial on Nickelodeon where Lil' Romeo was talking about the victims of Hurricane Katrina.



"He said that you could donate school supplies to fill book bags for the children of the disaster. That touched me in many ways, because I didn't think about what all was really lost until he did that commercial."

God's best kept secret

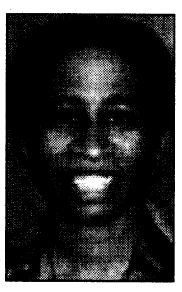
REFLECTIONS

Does God heal people? Is it possible in our present day and age that divine intervention still takes place? Are the healing miracles found in the Old and New Testaments merely myths?

The answers to these questions and many others regarding God's best kept secret are available for us today, but first let us explore this misunderstood realm of divine healing.



Anyone who has read the Bible cannot avoid the numerous healing incidents that occur throughout. In 2 Kings, Chapter 4, we find the prophet Elisha healing a Shunemite woman's son. In Chapter 5 of the same book, Elisha heals the army commander, Naaman, from leprosy.

In Psalm 103, King David, the apple of God's eye, praises God for healing him. A brief walk through the gospels shows Jesus continually healing people (Matthew Chapters 8 and 9, Mark 5 and Luke 13). Even the disciples are given the power to heal (Acts 9:32-42). If healing is found throughout the Bible and practiced by Jesus and his disciples, why don't we take it seriously?

Our reasons for not taking divine healing serious are colored by our prejudices.

First, we are turned off to healing because of the stereotypical healing evangelists who have been portrayed in the media and found to be frauds.

Second, some groups teach that we have faith. We don't need the signs and miracles of the past which were used to establish the early church.

Davis

Third, medical technology, drugs and new surgical techniques have rendered the idea of divine healing obsolete.

All of those prejudices sound reasonable but deserve a critical look in our understanding of God's intervention in our lives. There have been fraudulent healing evangelists as well as fraudulent doctors who promise many things but fail to deliver.

This doesn't negate the fact that there are individuals who have healed others through the power of God (Padre Pio, Maria Woodworth-Etter, William Seymour).

The miracles of the early church did not end once it was established. Christian history records numerous healings throughout the various centuries even to our present age.

No one can deny the benefits of modern medicine and modern technology. Unfortunately, those benefits have raised ethical and quality of life questions of which we have yet to find answers.

In the midst of the debate regarding healing, we need to keep several things in mind. First, God loves his people. Second, God wants his people healed.

God heals his people regardless of the condition.

Human beings cannot dictate how God heals, when God heals and who God heals. The best kept secret is that God loves you and will send his healing power to his people.

What will your love look like years from now?

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Everybody Loves Raymond has got to be one of my all-time favorite TV sitcoms. You know Frank and Marie, don't you? The bickering, fussing, jaded, cantankerous couple who can't seem to live with each other — or without each other. Somehow I just don't think they thought they'd wind up like they did way back when they said, "I do."

How do you think your love will look when it's 50 years old?

One of the neat things about being a chaplain is that you get to do a lot of weddings. Weddings are usually a crazy thing, aren't they? They're filled with lots of "forever" optimism.

Usually a distant family relative that somebody said could sing, but can't, slaughters a familiar love song or two while the bride and groom just gaze, unaffected, into each other's eyes.

There's always some good humor in weddings; aside from perfectly good songs that get butchered on a regular basis, you get some laughs with some of the extracurriculars too.

Not too long ago I was invited to do a wedding outdoors on a ranch in the great Northwest. Beautiful sunset, stream, white gazebo, horses grazing behind the wedding party, dogs playfully romping in the grass.

Just about the time the couple got ready to do their vows, though, one of the dogs stopped romping and started squatting. That's right, he not-so-delicately did "No. 2" right there at the foot of the bride and groom!

Hawkins

I guess that was better than another outdoor wedding I had where the two dogs roaming were "moved" by all the romance in the air that they decided to consummate the marriage before the bride and groom even could!

So, if you're looking forward to an outdoor wedding, based on my experiences, you may not want to put your dogs on the invitation list.

Well, how do you wind up going the distance in your love and look more like Romeo and Juliet and less like Frank and Marie?

How do you wind up as soulmates and not just roommates?

I think it's a lot like climbing a mountain. When I climbed Mt. Ranier, I made it a point to keep my eyes fixed on the peak while I disregarded the pain and focused on the pleasure.

I think it's the same in marriage. You go the distance by just "stepping forward," keep moving toward the peak, disregarding the pain and instead, focusing on the pleasure.

In fact, I think there are three ways that you keep stepping forward in order to go the distance in your relationship:

1) Keep stepping forward in Godliness. All things being equal, having a God-centered relationship versus a self-centered relationship is like the difference between a black and white TV versus a 60-inch, high definition, deluxe plasma TV.

The most important day in any relationship isn't your wedding day — it's the day you decide to yield control of your life to following Jesus Christ and letting him remake you from the inside out.

2) Keep stepping forward in servanthood. There's a great title to a book called Sex Begins In The Kitchen. I'm not opposed to a great breakfast like that, but I think the point is that it's the small things we do for one another that make for great fireworks later. Love is in the little things.

What little thing can you do today for your mate that will serve them?

3) Keep stepping forward in enjoyment. One of the highest compliments my wife paid me recently was just looking at me and saying, "Ya know what, I don't just love you — I like you!"

Part of being a soulmate and not just a roommate is enjoying each other the way God intended.

This week, focus less on changing and more on cherishing and see what happens. Commit to do something you used to enjoy together before marriage and see if it doesn't warm the temperature of your love together!

Want more help on going the distance? Come see us at The Chaplain Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza or call us at 545-1760.

Feel free to join me and the growing crowd at 11 a.m. Sunday at CrossRoads Chapel on Kelley Hill as we start our "40 Days of Purpose" Campaign this week.

It's a casual, contemporary, postwide chapel service designed for people who don't usually go to chapel.

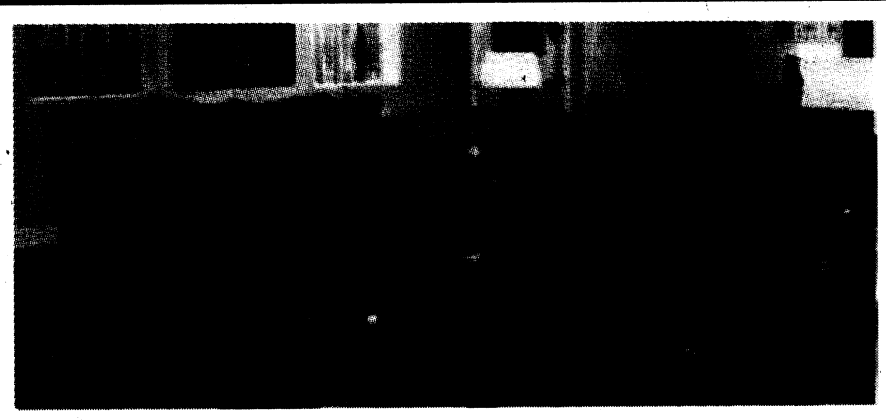
JD KINDER'S FURNITURE

SHOP SMART!



JD Kinder's Furniture is the most recognized destination in the Columbus trade area for a wide selection of quality home furnishings. We enjoy a great following amongst our military citizens and buying and financing here is very convenient. But many people are unaware that JD Kinder's can arrange financing for many people who are young and just starting out with little credit history or are in need of credit repair and think that they can't buy from normal retailers like us. These people many times go to rent to own stores and specialty military stores. They have their place, but many times the people that can least afford it end up paying more for furniture. Look at the illustration below and see just how much you can save at Kinder's.

Prosecutor tackles cases Close to Home in new CBS drama

Jay Bobbin
© Zap2it

Many Judging Amy fans resented the show's cancellation after six years, but CBS now offers an acceptable substitute.

Close to Home, the network's latest crime drama from prolific producer Jerry Bruckheimer (CSI: Crime Scene Investigation, Without a Trace, Cold Case), premieres in the former Amy slot Tuesday. Jennifer Finnigan is poised to become a major prime-time presence by moving from the wackiness of last season's NBC comedy Committed to the intensity of playing Annabeth Chase, a prosecutor and family woman alarmed that so many of her cases stem from her own neighborhood, including a house fire that cloaks a darker situation for the residents in the premiere episode.

Kimberly Elise (Diary of a Mad Black Woman) co-stars as Annabeth's career-driven new boss; John Carroll Lynch (The Brotherhood of Poland, New Hampshire) plays another office colleague who stays mindful of the general, and sometimes political, sensitivity of certain cases. On the home front, Christian Kane (Angel) portrays Annabeth's husband, who often watches their new baby while she's playing legal eagle.

Finnigan auditioned for Close to Home just after appearing as zany Marni on Committed. She admitted she was concerned the new show's makers might not "take a chance and see me. I thought, 'If I can get in that room and tackle this character'— because this character is every actress' dream — 'maybe I have a chance.'"

By then, Finnigan was positive NBC had little commitment to Committed.

"At a certain point, I think you sort of see the writing on the wall. The ratings were steadily declining."

Executive producer Jonathan Littman said, "I don't think it's a secret that we had a hard time casting the role. It's tough to play, because you need someone who is youthful, yet is really credible in being both a prosecutor and a mom. Jennifer wasn't originally in our minds, or available. When she came in and read, she nailed it. I look at Jennifer as our gift from heaven more than anything, because (the casting of her) really was the very last minute."

In an era and on a network already populated by many female crimebusters, Littman believes Close to Home has a unique one in its "working mom who's just had her first child, who's just going back to work, and who is a character that has been very under-represented on TV. It's usually someone who's been doing (the job) for a long time, an old pro, a little jaded. Annabeth has just started doing it all and still has this great, youthful belief that she can do it all."

For the show's star, that means dealing with the twins who play her baby, although Finnigan doesn't have children ... at least not yet.

Engaged to actor Jonathan Silverman (Weekend at Bernie's), she said, "Before I started acting, I was a baby sitter, so that was the extent of experience I had with a newborn. I really wanted to do this justice, so there's a woman I speak to who lives in Indiana; she's not just a working mom, she's also a prosecutor, so I've been talking to her a lot. I've also spoken to a lot of new moms, just to see how comfortable they are with their own children at first. (For me) at first, it was like, 'How do I hold the head?'"

Jennifer Finnigan stars in Close to Home, premiering Tuesday on CBS.

Annabeth's debate over leaving her new child to resume her job gets much attention in the Close to Home premiere, and executive producer Jim Leonard expects the issue to remain on the show's front burners.

"It's just such an interesting dramatic conundrum," he said. "I've been married for about 20 years, and I watched my wife go through this when our kids were young. She was a university professor, and she just struggled with going back to work or not.

"She felt like no matter what she did, she wasn't doing a great job," Leonard said. "She would work and come home and work all night, so it was like having two or three jobs at once. A lot of that came pouring back as I worked on this."

Finnigan won three Daytime Emmy Awards as Bridget Forrester on the CBS serial The Bold and the Beautiful.

She then broke into prime time with a one-season stint as medical examiner Devan Maguire on NBC's Crossing Jordan.

The actress said, "My true love is drama. As much as I love doing comedy, to tell stories that are important, that's everything to me."

The Greatest Game Ever Played — An amateur player from a working class family, Francis Ouimet (Shia LaBeouf) shocked the golf world when at the 1913 U.S. Open, flanked by his 10-year-old caddie (Joshua Flitter), he defeated his idol, the defending British champion Harry Vardon (Stephen Dillane).

An unlikely match-up — the ingenue versus the seasoned champ — theirs was the greatest match the sport had ever known.

The Greatest Game Ever Played is rated PG for some brief mild language.

Into the Blue — When four young divers discover a legendary shipwreck rumored to contain millions in gold at the bottom of the sea, they believe their dream of buried treasure has come true. But nearby on the ocean floor, a sunken plane full of illegal cargo threatens their find.

Starring Paul Walker, Jessica Alba and Scott Caan.

Into the Blue is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of action violence, drug material, sexual content and language.

Serenity — Capt. Malcolm Reynolds, a hardened veteran on the losing side of a galactic civil war, now ekes out a living pulling off small crimes and transport-for-hire aboard his ship. He leads a small, eclectic crew who are the closest thing he has left to family — squabbling, insubordinate and undyingly loyal.

When Mal takes on two new passengers, he gets much more than he bargained for.

Starring Nathan Fillion, Alan Tudyk and Adam Baldwin.

Serenity is rated PG-13 for sequences of intense violence and action, and sexual references.

The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio — Evelyn Ryan is a devoted housewife and mother of 10 in the 1950s. Her husband can't seem to make ends meet, but that doesn't stop the car from breaking down and the bills from piling up.

It falls to Evelyn to defy the conventions of the day and find a way to keep her family together with the odds stacked against them.

Applying her remarkable resourcefulness and an uncommon wit, Evelyn finds her own way in the profitable jingle contests in the '50s and '60s.

Starring Julianne Moore, Woody Harrelson and Laura Dern.

The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio is rated PG-13 for thematic elements, some disturbing images and language.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride — Set in a 19th century European village, this stop-motion, animated feature follows the story of Victor, a young man who is whisked away to the underworld and wed to a mysterious corpse bride, while his real bride, Victoria, waits bereft in the land of the living.

Although life in the Land of the Dead proves to be a lot more colorful than his strict Victorian upbringing, Victor learns that there is nothing in this world, or the next, that can keep him away from his one true love.

Voiced by Johnny Depp and Helena Bonham Carter.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride is rated PG for scary images and action, and brief mild language.

Flightplan — Flying at 40,000 feet in a cavernous, state-of-the-art E-474 aircraft, Kyle Pratt (Jodie Foster) faces every mother's worst nightmare when her 6-year-old daughter Julia vanishes without a trace mid-flight from Berlin to New York.

Flightplan is rated PG-13 for violence and intense plot material.

Roll Bounce — In the late '70s when roller skating was a way of life, X (Bow Wow) and his pals ruled supreme. But when the doors of the skating rink close, it marks the end of an era and the beginning of another that sees the boys venture into foreign territory — uptown's Sweetwater Roller Rink, complete with it's over-the-top skaters and beautiful girls.

Roll Bounce is rated PG-13 for language and crude humor.

Just Like Heaven — When David (Mark Ruffalo) sublets his San Francisco apartment, the last thing he expected was a roommate.

Suddenly a pretty young woman named Elizabeth (Reese Witherspoon) shows up, adamantly insisting the apartment is hers.

David assumes there's been a giant misunderstanding — until Elizabeth disappears as mysteriously as she appeared.

Convinced that she is a ghost, David tries to help her cross over to the "other side." Just Like Heaven is rated PG-13 for sexual content.

Cry Wolf — At a prestigious prep school, a student joins a group who make a game out of lying to people.

When the lies start to revolve around murder, a real killer appears and picks off the students one by one.

Starring Jared Padalecki and Jon Bon Jovi.

Cry Wolf is rated PG-13 for violence, terror, disturbing images, language, sexuality and a drug reference.

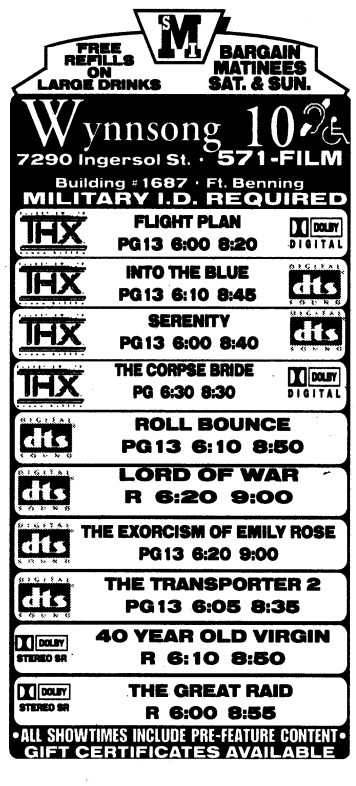
Lord of War — A wily arms dealer dodges bullets and betrayal as he schemes his way to the top of his profession, only to come face to face with his conscience.

But it's not easy to leave a life of girls, guns and glamour when nobody wants you to stop, not even your enemies.

Starring Nicolas Cage and Jared Leto.

Lord of War is rated R for strong violence, drug use, language and sexuality.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose — In an extremely rare decision, the Catholic church officially recognized the demonic possession of a 19-year-old college freshman.



Told in flashbacks, the movie chronicles the haunting trial of the priest accused of negligence, resulting in the death of the young girl believed to be possessed and the lawyer who takes on the task of defending him.

Starring Laura Linney and Tom Wilkinson.

The Exorcism of Emily Rose is rated PG-13 for thematic material including intense and frightening sequences and disturbing images.

SPORTS

Jim Ryun, a three-time U.S. Olympian and world record holder, established himself as one of the greatest middle-distance runners of all time before he reached his 20th birthday. Ryun defeated Olympic champion Peter Snell and set the American the mile record in 3:55.3.

'Monster Mile' bites military teams

Nemechek starts ninth, crosses finish line in 17th

Maj. William Thurmond
Army News Service

Compared to other recent NASCAR races, Sunday's MBNA RacePoints 400 at Dover's International Speedway was a three-hour-long parade lap of well-behaved drivers.

So racing fans were not treated to visions of thrown helmets, vehicular temper tantrums or middle-digit salutes. Gone were the four-letter sound bites and resulting fines.

Oh well. You knew it couldn't last forever.

Perhaps it was due to NASCAR president Mike Helton's stern warning in the pre-race driver's meeting that "... enough is enough." Helton went on to promise penalties ranging from monetary fines to indefinite suspension for on and off-track hijinks like those witnessed in New Hampshire last weekend.

Based on appearances, it looks like NASCAR finally got the driver's attention.

Win shakes up points race

Winning Sunday for the third time this year was Jimmie Johnson. It was his 17th top-ten finish this year, and another example of how this sport continues to reward consistency.

Johnson's victory vaulted him six positions into the top slot in NASCAR's 'Chase' for the NEXTEL Cup.

Previous leader Tony Stewart struggled all afternoon with an ill-handling racecar and finished 18th, a dismal run that ended his streak of 13 straight top-10s and pushed him back to fifth in the points battle.

Following Johnson across the finish line was rookie Kyle Busch. It's a role he knows well, as he also finished second in Dover's June race.

Retiring veteran Rusty Wallace came in third in a strong performance that saw him running in the top-10 all day. Wallace, who has finished sixth or better in his last five races, rose two positions and now rests a mere seven points beneath Johnson in season title points.

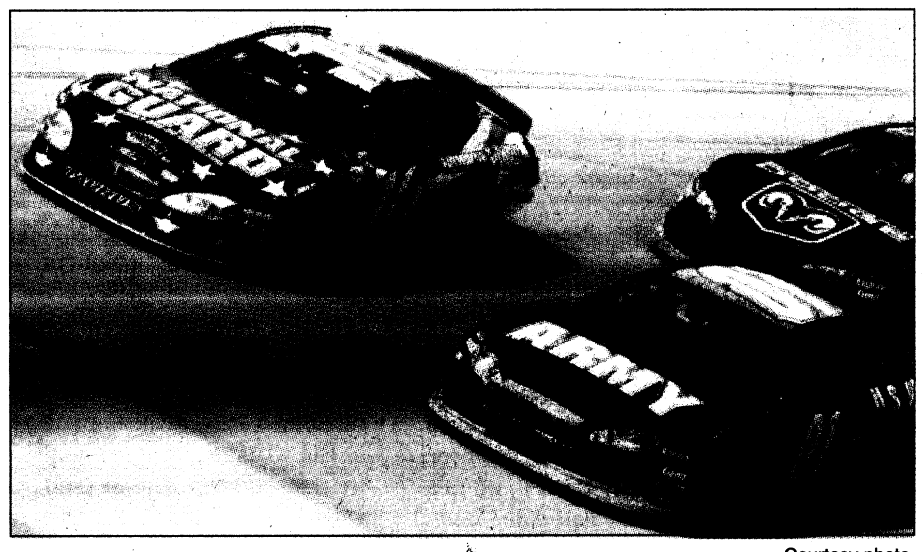
'Monster' bites military teams

As for the race's two military-themed entries, their days proved another reminder of why this track is known as the "Monster Mile."

For National Guard driver Greg Biffle, an 18th-place start proved to be no handicap as he powered his Ford into the top-five within the first 45 laps.

Leading twice and with a red-hot pit crew providing 13-second four-tire stops, Biffle looked good to finish among the leaders and improve his position among the Chase contenders. But the "Monster" got hungry around lap 299, resulting in a cut-down tire for the then second place number 16 Guard car.

Biffle's misfortune put him a lap down and relegated him to a 13th place finish. Adding insult to injury, he also lost four spots in the all-important points battle, dropping from second to sixth.



Nemechek's bad luck holds

But for Army driver Joe Nemechek, Sunday was but one more in a series of unlucky performances.

Starting in ninth, Nemechek quickly lost spots due to handling problems. Through several pit stops his crew made chassis adjustments that enabled him to slowly rise back through the field and crack the top-10.

• U.S. takes the Cup

The U.S. won the Presidents Cup, their first international competition since 2000, with a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole, thanks to Chris DiMarco. Other players for the U.S. included Tiger Woods, Phil Mickelson, Jim Furyk and Fred Couples.

• Jimmie takes first, twice

Jimmie Johnson won the MNBA RacePoints 400 from Dover International Speedway. and slid into first in the points race. Former leader Tony Stewart is in fifth, although just 23 points behind Johnson.

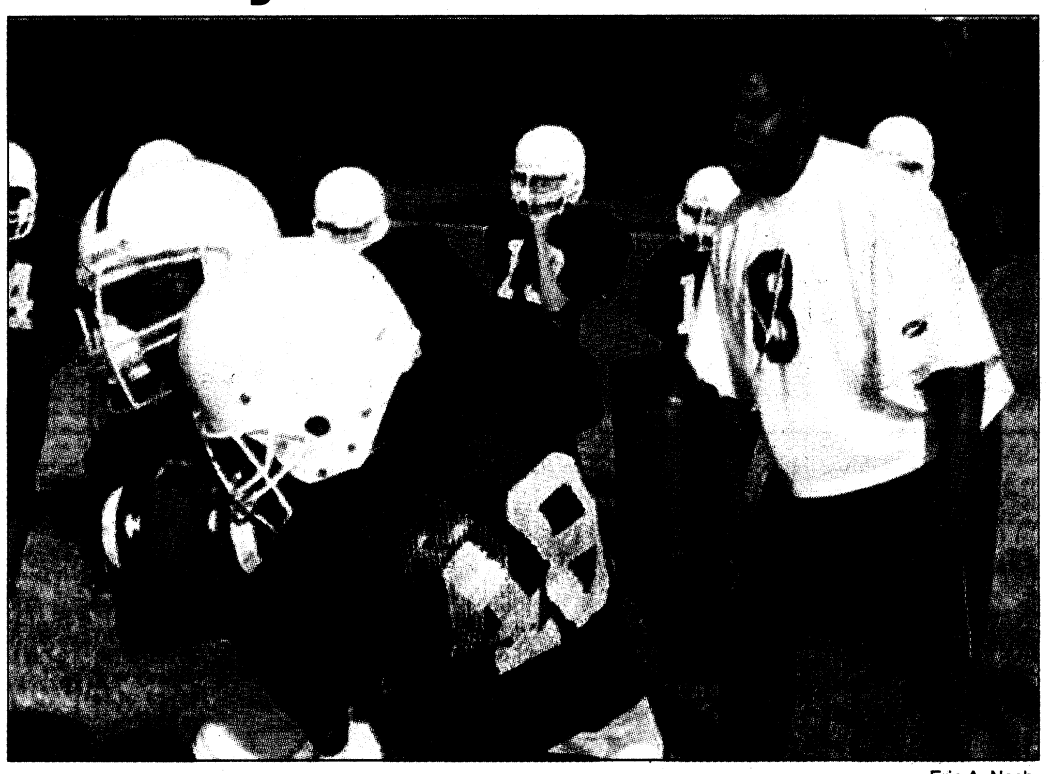
• Vinny and the Jets

Jets' QB Chad Pennington is out the rest of the season with a shoulder injury. Backup QB Jay Fiedler is also hurt. Vinny Testaverde, who had many great seasons with the Jets, resigned this week. Vinny was unsigned when the season began.

• Golf rules change

The "Decisions on the Rules of Golf" will have 111 amendments when it is published Jan. 1. Among the changes — there will be no penalty for players who forget to swap scorecards. The "Decisions" are published every two years.

• Hall of Fame Racing



Former Dallas Cowboys' quarterbacks' Roger Staubach and Troy Aikman are the new owners of Nextel Racing team Hall of Fame. They have hired Philippe Lopez to build a team as crew chief, but have yet to hire a driver.

• Talladega bound

This week's NASCAR race is the UAW-Ford 500 at Talladega Superspeedway in Alabama.

Coverage starts at 1:30 p.m. on NBC.

Faith runs home with trophy

Team effort earns third place at meet

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

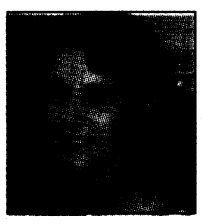
Faith Middle School's cross-country runners took home the third place trophy after the St. Luke Invitational cross country meet at Weracoba Park Tuesday.

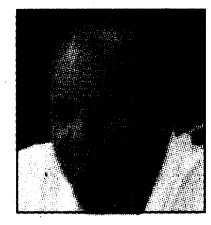
Although it was only the first meet of the season for the team, faculty sponsors Lisa and Gerald Madler have high hopes for their runners.

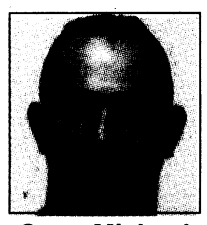
"It was a great race," Gerald said. "They probably exceeded their own expectations."

Faith fielded a 20-runner boys' team and six runners in the girls' race. The boys' second-place finish and the girls' fourth-place finish contributed to the overall trophy. Gerald said the boys are in great shape for the start of the season, and although the girls' team is lacking in depth, they make up for it in attitude.

"They have it in will," he said. "They try hard, and listen and want to improve."







He overheard one of the girls say that when she was running and in pain, she was enjoying it.

"That's a runner's mentality," he said. "And that's the second time I've heard it from a girl after running her first cross-country race."

The teams have only been practicing since the third week in August, which he said makes it hard to predict how they will Everyone went 8-4 this week, which keeps the standings how they are. Some great picks were Capt. Reinke, who picked Tennessee over LSU, and Lori, who picked Denver over Kansas City. Those will be the games that will help the pickers gain ground instead of being all packed together.

Keeping baseball faith

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

This weekend is it. The mother of all weekends for baseball fans. Well, especially if you're a Red Sox or Yankees fan. Who will win the AL East? Who will win the wild card slot?

Some of the races are so close that by press time, many will still be up in the air. Then comes tomorrow — October. When many baseball teams will make it or break it. Fans will see if their team will play into October or have to wait another long winter for another chance.

The last regular season game is Sunday. The past week I have been on the edge of my seat, nervously checking ESPN every night for the scores. My team, the Boston Red Sox, held on to the lead for much of the regular season over the New York Yankees. Then it was down to a one-game lead. Then it was a half-game lead. I wish I could look into the future and know what it's at by the time you're reading this.

This weekend is the most important — especially since the Sox and Yankees are playing their final three regular season games against each other. It's a make or break weekend.

It wouldn't be unlike the Red Sox to break the fans' hearts. We've had so much heartbreak over the years, we kind of expect it. But then last season came along, and Sox won the World Series. I'm still in shock.

Last week I was in the elevator, with my Red Sox purse my ever-present Sox hat. I usually get the "You a Sox fan?" question. Duh. But I was asked, "They gonna do it again this year?"

"You know," I answered, "As a Red Sox fan my whole life, I'm just glad I was alive to see them win it once. I can die happy. If they never do it again in my lifetime, so be it, but I'm happy no matter."

And it's true. I've been fortunate enough to see the New England Patriots win three Super Bowls in four years. It's sent us Pats fan on an ennui trip. Pats, in the Super Bowl again? Cool.

But when the Sox went to the World Series, we started to believe. We held onto that faint glimmer of hope, that this year really was the year (we say it every year). Then came the fans with their signs, "Why Not Us?," "Keep the Faith," and "Believe." And we did. And they won. And I'm still in disbelief — but happy.

Even if you're not a baseball fan, this weekend will offer plenty of tense, on-the-line baseball games. If you are a fan and your team is already out of contention, maybe next year, or the next, or the next. Keep the faith, especially Cubs' fans — it will happen.

Crash: Extends Dover race

269, Nemechek's fender slapped the GM Goodwrench Chevrolet driven by Kevin Harvick as the two exited Dover's cramped pit road.

The damage required him to pit a second time for repairs and cost the team several spots.

"We had a smooth run going," Nemechek said. "But that pit road incident really hurt. It forced us to play catch-up the rest of the race."

Battling back, Nemechek drove his Chevy hard and reached 14th position with three laps to go when the "Monster" reached for a late-race snack.

Exiting turn four, Nemechek was turned by the car driven by Jeff Burton, spinning the Army car down the front stretch where it smacked the inside retaining wall, causing severe damage.

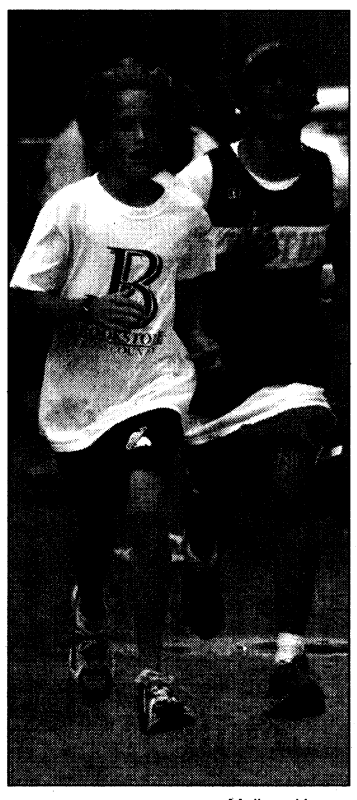
Nemechek's single-car crash also set-up a green-white-checkered overtime finish that extended the race four miles.

Following a quick pit, Nemechek returned to the track in his badly damaged car.

"Our Army Chevrolet was much better than the result," said Nemechek as he was leaving Dover.

"This was the best car we had here in a long time and it's too bad we couldn't get at least a top-10 finish.

In the end, the Army crossed the finish line in 17th place.



"That last incident not only cost us a few positions, but it also damaged a good racecar," Nemechek said.

"All I can say is give us a clean race and we'll be running and finishing up front. When you carry the Army colors on your car you only charge forward and never throw in the towel."

The next race is a restrictor-plate duel at Talladega's high-banked, 2.66-mile Superspeedway this Sunday.

Faith: Runners place well

Melissa House

Faith eighth-grader Christian Garcia, right, stays close to a Brookstone runner on the first lap of the 2-mile course. Christian finished in fifth place.

do in races.

"But when they get to the race, it becomes serious," he said. "It's personal pride and school pride and they showed that Tuesday. They have everything to be proud of."

Gerald said the first race is always a turning point, as the runners realize the need to work out on their own in addition to the one team practice.

In cross-country scoring, only the top five finishers on each team count toward the team score. Faith's top boys came in in fifth, sixth, seventh, ninth and sixteenth in a field of more than 55.

Gerald said the boys' team goal is to beat Brookstone School, and their finishes on Tuesday put that well within reach. He and Lisa crunched the numbers and discovered if the 16th place runner had finished in 11th place, the boys would have beaten Brookstone.

"That's possible," Gerald said. "Lisa and I are just tickled pink and they should be too."

Faith's sixth-place finisher, eighth-grader Christian Garcia competed in his first race.

"I never ran because I never wanted to," Christian said. "But I knew I had stamina and now I know what I need to work on to do better. I want to be first."

Christian's father, Timothy, was on hand to watch the race.

"He's not done any cross country or track, but he did pretty well," Timothy said. He said both his sons tried cross country because it was the first sport that came up for the year.

"They get a lot out of it," he said. "(Christian) can beat a lot of the 18- and 19-year-old privates in my unit."

The team trains with 3-mile runs, because they compete on a 2-mile course.

"That two miles is as much a mental distance as a physical distance," Lisa said. She hopes the younger students, who initially have trouble running the two miles without stopping, will stay with cross country.

"They're all really jazzed about going to meets," Lisa said, "and it's all about having fun."

Faith's next meet is scheduled for Oct. 19.

Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

New report cards on tap

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

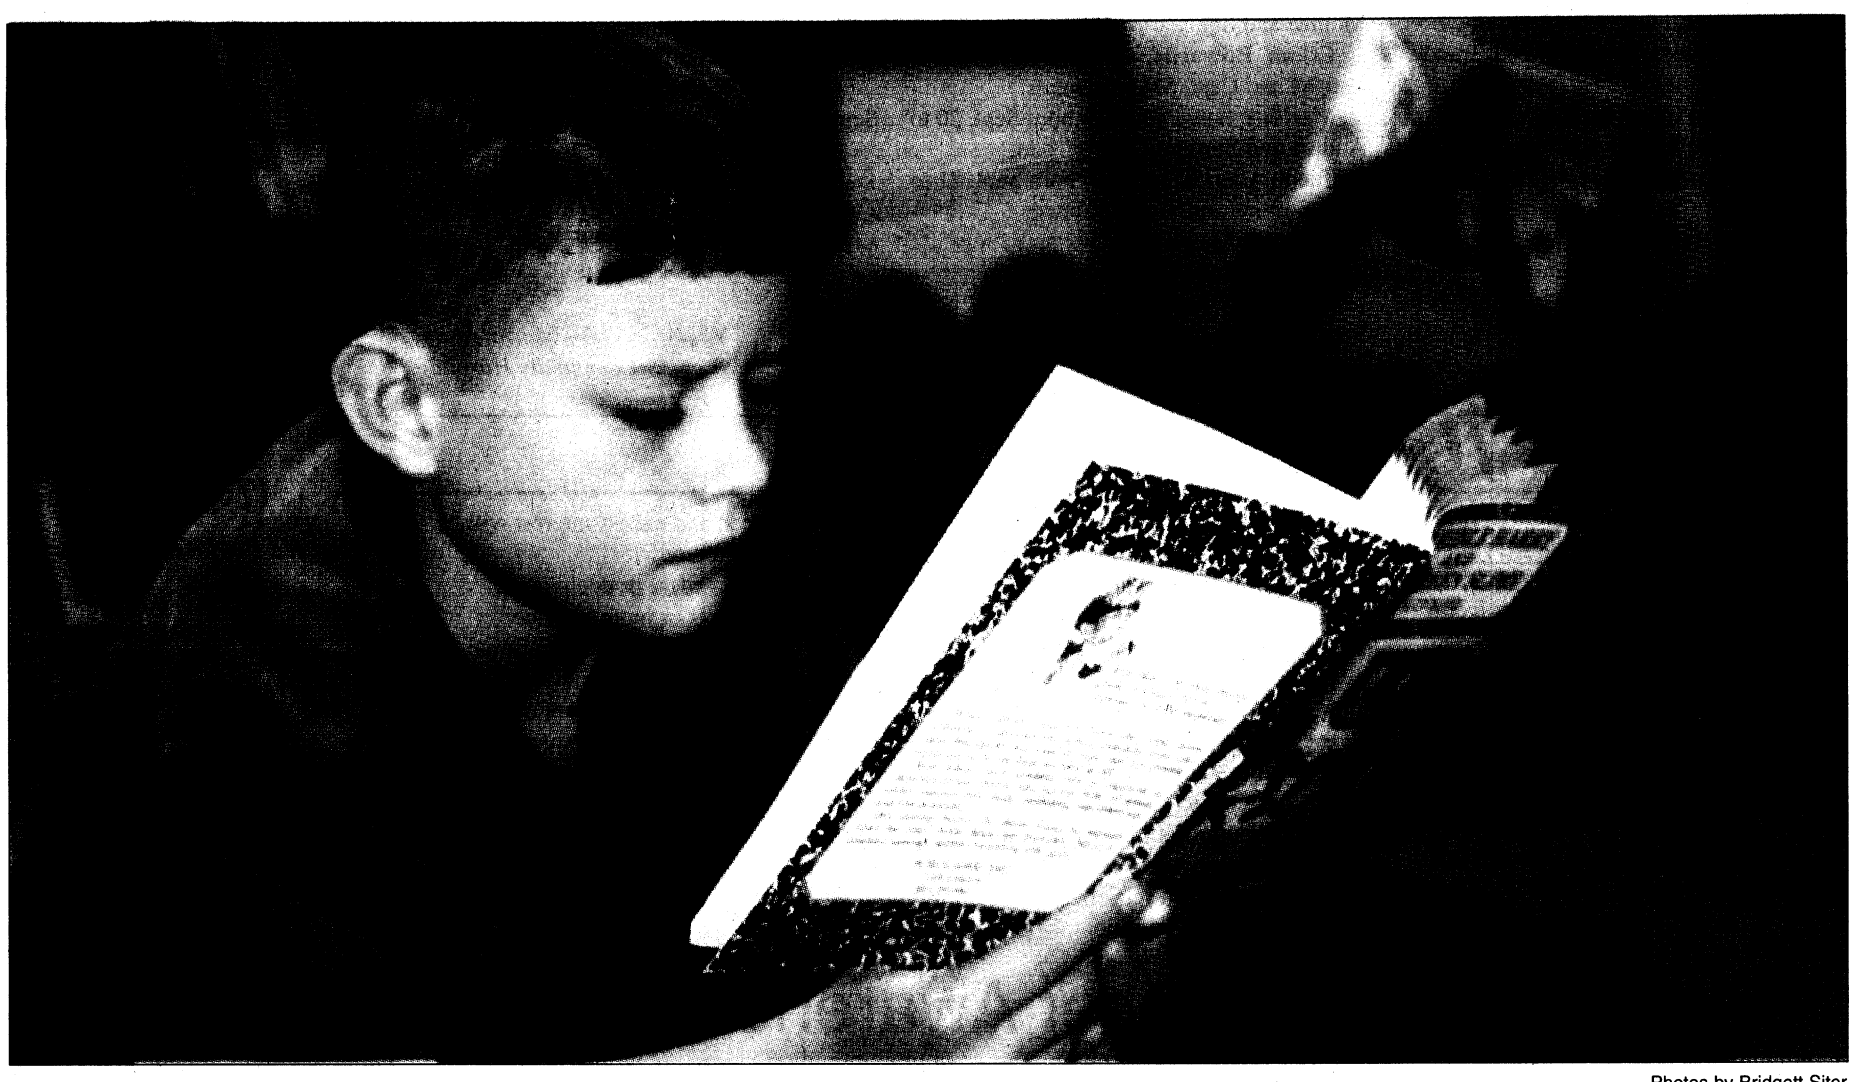
When report cards are issued later this month, Fort Benning students and parents will see something new. Because the Department of Defense Domestic Elementary and Secondary Schools changed to a standards-based curriculum, a group of principals and teachers met this summer to develop a new report card.

Last year, Fort Benning schoolchildren in first through fifth grades received letter grades in reading and language arts, math, science and social studies. Assessments were made in five special areas — art, music, physical education, citizenship and work habits. Beginning with the October report card, children in first through third grades will no longer receive letter grades, but will be assessed based on grade-level expectations.

According to the Department of Defense Education Activity, the DDESS parent organization, the change "will more accurately report the results of the standards-based instruction and assessment in the classrooms."

Stowers Principal Angie McPherson and Wilson kindergarten teacher Lisa Harman were part of two report card task groups that met in Peachtree City, Ga. On Monday, they sat down with Gail Wilson, Fort Benning Schools director of accountability, and Paige Haynes, a parent and certified teacher, to discuss the new report cards.

"With any change, there are going to be little things you'll have to work out," Wilson said. "But the new report cards have generated a lot of interest and a lot of questions." She said most parents should have seen the new report card by now, either at a school open house or in a parent-teacher conference.



McPherson said it was exciting to see the move to standard-based reporting.

"We're not there 100 percent," she said, "Because we don't have each and every standard assessed." Although the report card task group wanted to have all the standards on the report card, there are just too many standards.

"There was no way to get them all on there," McPherson said. "It's just not possible and the new Student Management System (computer program) won't allow it."

Having all the standards on the report card would allow

Drew Oglesby spends 20 minutes each day "free reading" during Read 180 at Stowers Elementary School. Read 180, developed by researchers at Vanderbilt University, is being used in more than 6,500 classrooms nationwide.

Reading strategies do a 180 in post schools

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Second-graders learn to read. Third-graders read to learn.

Jeremiah Johnson didn't learn to read in the second grade. By the time he started third grade last year at Stowers Elementary School, he was falling behind and embarrassed about his low-level reading lexile. That's a term every Fort Benning elementary student is familiar with.

"Your lexile is a number that tells you how you're doing in reading," said Jeremiah, whose third-grade lexile was well below that of his classmates.

These days, library books are shelved by lexiles rather than grade levels. A year ago, Jeremiah shopped for books with first graders. With a lexile hovering around 200, he was embarrassed, and it showed, his mother said. He was reluctant to read aloud and intimidated by chapter books.

Jeremiah's attitude did a turn around by the end of the year, and Paula Johnson credits the school's early intervention reading program, Read 180.

"Now he looks forward to going to the library to check out books for himself," Paula said. "He's more confident about reading out loud, and he loves chapter books."

Now with a lexile more than 800 points above where he started a year ago, Jeremiah is reading books like Captain Underpants, a delightfully tacky series of chapter books geared toward a 9 year old's penchant for potty jokes.

Bobbi Markham knows all about Captain Underpants and his, umm, peers — Junie B. Jones and Amelia Bedelia. Markham shops E-bay to keep her shelves stocked in her classroom at Stowers, where 45 students, in groups of 15, attend one and a half-hour sessions of Read 180 every day. Twelve others attend sessions in another classroom with another teacher.

"This is a program that's designed to make them succeed," Markham said. "It doesn't help them succeed — it makes them. It forces them to become successful readers."

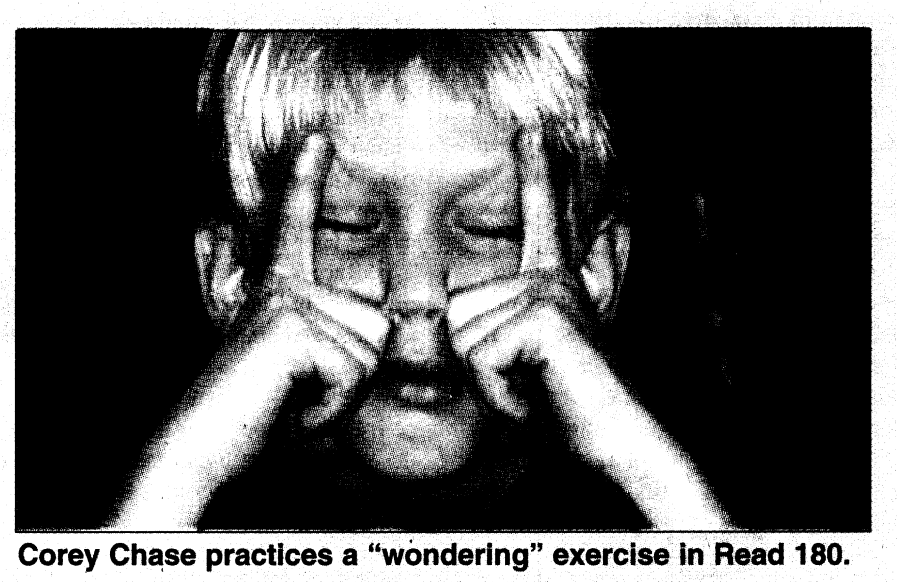
Read 180 is in its second year at Fort Benning, where it compliments other intervention programs, including Reading Recovery and Instructional Support. While school systems around the country are divesting of their small group and one-on-one programs in favor of a more cost-effective Read 180, Markham believes Fort Benning students benefit from the various approaches the programs offer.

She's quick to point out that some children need individual instruction, and they learn in a number of ways — through auditory, tactile, kinetic or visual stimuli or a combination.

Still, Markham is a cheerleader for Read 180, because it incorporates all those learning methods into one comprehensive program proven to work.

Researchers at Vanderbilt University studied the problem of struggling readers for more than a decade before introducing Read 180 in 1985. At that time, the program was designed for high schoolers, but it has since been modified for middle and elementary students.

Dr. Ted Hasselbring led the way with a software design that instantly and continually evaluates the individual student's performance and adjusts the instruction accordingly.



The computer program is central to Read 180, but it's only a small part of a much bigger picture, Markham said. Read 180 is built upon several reading strategies, including traditional techniques like phonics and whole language. It's truly a "turn around," a return to many old-school teaching methods with a lot of fresh ideas.

At the beginning of each session, students meet for 30 minutes of "whole group reading." Markham reads a passage from a chapter book and asks the students to "wonder" about the outcome. They write their musings, proofread, rewrite and read them aloud if they choose.

Markham doesn't make the students read aloud. Struggling students should never be forced to read in front of a large group, Markham said, and she should know. As a child, she struggled with a stuttering problem that made her fear public speaking.

"We'd go around the circle and read, and I'd be terrified," she said. "As the others were reading, I would count paragraphs to see how much longer before I had to read."

See READING, B-4

Corey Chase practices a "wondering" exercise in Read 180.

Wondering minds

Try this exercise: Ask a friend if he ever thinks about winning the lottery. Chances are, he'll say he doesn't think he stands a chance.

Now ask him if he ever "wonders" about winning. Watch his eyes light up as he shares all the plans he's made to spend or save or invest.

That's the "wonder" of words.

To children, the word "think" often has a negative connotation. They're given questions and told to think of an answer so often they begin to unconsciously associate thinking with logic and "right versus wrong."

Bobbi Markham, who teaches Read 180 at Stowers Elementary, prefers to use the word "wonder," which typically elicits less fear and more creativity.

Markham asks her students to close their eyes and "point to their brains" when wondering. The kids believe its magic, but the exercise is actually very practical, she said.

The position of their hands keeps them from fidgeting or becoming distracted by any form of "tactile stimulus." Closing their eyes forces them to focus on their "wondering."

"It's a method that's been proven to make you wonder better," Markham said. "Try it."

Fort Benning celebrates Oktoberfest Oct. 15

Event includes Volksmarch, pumpkin patch

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Put on your lederhosen and grab your stein — Oktoberfest, a German American celebration, will be at the Uchee Creek Activity Center Oct. 15.

Oktoberfest will begin at 9 a.m. with a 10K cross country run. The entry fee is $10 in advance and $15 the day of the race.

Advance registration is available at all post gyms. Participants will receive a T-shirt.

At 11 a.m. will be a Volksmarch, a 5K or 10K hike on the Uchee Creek walking trails.

The 5K is stroller- and pet-friendly. Pets must be on a leash.

The second half of the 10K will be over rough terrain with moderate hills, said Betty Mayfield-Currington, Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation marketing specialist.

Units are encouraged to participate. The unit with the most participation will receive the commander's Outstanding Performance trophy.

Cost to participate in the Volksmarch is $10. For each paying Soldier, DMWR will return $1 to their unit fund. Participants will receive an Oktoberfest mug.

New this year to Oktoberfest is a pumpkin patch, where children can visit and choose their own pumpkin. With the purchase of a $5 wristband, children can enjoy the pumpkin patch, nine different inflatables, crafts, a hayride and a maze and more.

"There's something for the whole family," said Andrea Giammona, DMWR marketing management trainee. "From the pumpkin patch to the band and authentic German food and drink, it's really good for the whole family."

Fort Benning's Infantry Band will perform from 3 to 4:45 p.m., followed by the Gootman Sauerkraut Band and Dance Troupe from 5 to 10 p.m. Between the music, at 4:45 p.m., will be the official keg-tapping ceremony.

A shuttle service to Uchee Creek will be available at the Main Mall Post Exchange bus stop and the Main Post bus stop (by Wachovia Bank).

For more information, call 687-7599.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What is the SSCRA, and is it still good law?

A: From 1940 through 2003, countless men and women in uniform benefited from the provisions of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, more commonly known as the SSCRA.

On Dec. 19, 2003, the SSCRA was significantly updated and renamed. The new law is known as the SCRA, which stands for the Servicemembers' Civil Relief Act.

Despite the fact that the new law is nearly two years old, the great majority of Soldiers do not know of the change and are not aware of the added protections now available under the SCRA.

Major changes to the Act include:

• An automatic 90-day "stay" (or delay) of civil proceedings upon the service member's request. Before, under the SSCRA, a judge could deny the request.

• The 6-percent interest rate cap for preservice debts was clarified, and the law now clearly states that monthly payments will be reduced and excess interest will be forgiven, not deferred.

• With PCS orders or deployment orders for 90 days or more, service members can terminate a housing lease with 30 days written notice.

• An increased dollar amount on covered housing leases and expanded eviction protection.

• PCS orders outside CONUS or deployment orders for 180 days or more allow termination of a vehicle lease.

October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month

Dr. Scott Lind
MCG Cancer Center

A woman has a one in seven chance of developing breast cancer in her lifetime.

But thanks to education and awareness of the importance of screening for breast cancer, women no longer have to die from the disease. The number of breast cancer deaths have fallen over the past several years, but with more than 40,000 women annually dying from breast cancer, there is still work to be done.

Risk factors

While not all those at risk for breast cancer will go on to develop the disease, it's smart to find out if you are at risk and take any appropriate measures to protect yourself. The MCG Cancer Center offers the following guidelines on risk factors:

• Age — Your risk increases as you grow older, with women older than 60 at highest risk.

• Family history — Make a point to find out if you have a family history of breast cancer. You are at a higher risk if your mother, sister, daughter or other relatives had breast cancer, especially if they had breast cancer before age 40.

If a strong family history exists, genetic testing can be done to find out if certain genetic anomalies exist in your family that may increase the risk of breast cancer. If you have had breast cancer, you are also at increased risk of the cancer returning in the other breast.

• Reproductive history — Your risk increases if you do not have children, if you were older when you had your first child, if you began menstruation younger than age 12 or went through menopause after age 55.

• Estrogen — Women who take estrogen (either alone or with progestin) for five or more years after menopause may be at increased risk. Women who took DES, a synthetic form of estrogen given to pregnant women between 1940 and 1971, have a slightly increased risk. Studies on breast cancer are ongoing for daughters born to women who took DES.

• Radiation — Women who have had radiation therapy to the chest are at greater risk. The younger you were when you had the radiation, the greater the risk of breast cancer later in life.

• Race — While breast cancer is most prevalent in Caucasian women, women of all races and ethnicities are at risk for the disease.

• Obesity — If you are physically active throughout your life, you have a decreased risk of breast cancer. You are at greater risk if you become obese after menopause.

• Alcohol — Some studies suggest a link between increased alcohol intake and breast cancer.

What you can do

While there may not be much you can do to change some of the risk factors related to breast cancer, you can do one very important thing: get checked regularly.

Beginning at age 20, women should conduct monthly breast self-exams and receive clinical breast exams every three years. Consult your physician to learn the appropriate way to conduct a self-breast exam. Regular self-exams are an important way for you to familiarize yourself with what's normal for you and can help you spot any later problems.

Beginning at age 40, women should begin receiving clinical breast exams and mammograms yearly. Monthly self-checks should continue.

Women with a family history of breast cancer should consult their physicians about the benefits of starting mammograms at a younger age or having more frequent clinical breast exams.

When any cancer is found early, many more treatment options exist and the chance for a cure is much higher. If you haven't been checked in a while, make an appointment now. Remember, finding breast cancer early can help save your life.

...p end the epidemic of domestic violence

Family Advocacy Program

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, a time when every person should consider what she or he can do to help end the epidemic of domestic violence that plagues our community and our nation.

The statistics are staggering. Estimates range from 960,000 incidents of violence against a current or former spouse, boyfriend or girlfriend to 4 million women who are physically abused by husbands or live-in partners per year.

A woman is beaten every 15 seconds. Domestic violence is the leading cause of injury to women between 15 and 45 in the United States, according to the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

Domestic violence is everyone's business. Abuse affects everyone in our community, and we must all come together to stop this epidemic. If you are a victim, help is available through the Family Advocacy Program (FAP), a specialized program designed to prevent abuse.

Rebecca Welch, Program Manager, said the main focus is to develop prevention programs that contribute to healthy lives for Soldiers and their families.

"A lot of people get the wrong idea about the program by believing we are out to punish Soldiers and their families if an incident is reported or if a call is received for help on child and spouse abuse. This is a misconception," Welch said.

"We provide training to help educate families and direct them to services that will assist them in meeting their needs before an incident occurs or a problem arises. We are available to help families solve problems, not to create a problem for the families."

Services are provided to families vulnerable to stresses that can lead to abuse. When families seek help, referrals are made to other treatment programs on and off post that provide services for Soldiers and their families involved in family violence.

"In order to strengthen families and prevent the recurrence of abuse, we encourage self-referral through education and awareness programs," Welch said.

The following programs are designed to help prevent child and spouse abuse:

VICTIM ADVOCACY

The FAP Victim Advocate provides support and information necessary for victims to make positive choices for themselves and their children. For information, call Theresa Sanchez, Family Advocacy Victim Advocate, at 545-4013 or 545-7517.

VIOLENCE INTERVENTION

The FAP Manager may provide crisis intervention to Soldiers and family members in emergency situations. Cases involving family violence intervention needing long term treatment and follow-up, are referred to Social Work Service.

PARENT EDUCATION

It now seems clear that parenting is a learned behavior — not something instinctive — influenced by personal history and experience, as well as the opportunity to observe and practice specific skills.

Support programs help parents "get off to a good start," interact more effectively with their children, and create and maintain a safe home environment.

This program also teaches basic skills and psychological nurturance, appropriate to a child's age and stage of development. Classes are offered at Social Work Service at 545-1661. Families who need child care while enrolled in daytime classes can receive free child care through FAP.

TROOP EDUCATION

Classes are mandatory and are provided on an annual basis for all military personnel on the dynamics of spouse and child abuse, availability of treatment services, and Army policies regarding family violence. Units can schedule briefings by calling Terry Frye at 545-6957 or 545-7517.

NEW PARENT SUPPORT PLUS, FIRST STEPS

The New Parent Support Plus, First Steps Program provides emotional support, parenting education, referrals and follow-up contact to parents with newborns, to help develop healthy family relationships to reduce the risk of abuse and neglect.

The FAP funds the program located at Martin Army Community Hospital. Each first-time mom receives a tote bag filled with educational materials. Volunteers are assigned to work with new parents for up to one year after the baby is born. Volunteers are always needed.

For more information or to volunteer, call the program coordinator, Carolyn Harris, at 544-2020.

RESPITE CHILD CARE

Temporary child care for relieving parental stress and providing a nurturing and developmentally appropriate environment. Care can be provided when both Soldier and spouse attend parenting classes or counseling. This program is designed to provide child care for families stressed because of a family problem and who are participating in treatment programs.

CHILD SAFETY EDUCATION

The FAP developed a post-wide safety education offering guidance on personal safety and child sexual abuse prevention for children, parents, and youth and child care staff to emphasize the important roles of adults and community members who interact with children. School counselors coordinating with the FAP conduct classes on a continuous basis.

COMMUNITY EDUCATION

The FAP promotes "Child Abuse Prevention Month", "Month of the Military Child," and "Domestic Violence Awareness Month" and participates in unit support groups, health fairs, etc. to promote support and encourage early referral.

COMMAND EDUCATION

The FAP Manager and FAP Training Instructor brief commanders at all levels on the nature of spouse and child abuse and the means to prevent domestic violence. Information is also provided on policies, procedures, resources, command responsibilities in the areas of identification, reporting, coordination, rehabilitation, and administrative or judicial options. Installation commanders will receive a briefing within 45 days of assuming command.

FOSTER CARE

Foster care is a voluntary or court-mandated program for abused or neglected children. It provides 24-hour care and services for children who cannot be cared for by their own families and need substitute care.

The FAP has a Memorandum of Agreement with the Department of Family and Children Services to provide foster care.

Families interested in becoming foster care parents can contact the Department of Family and Children Services.

SPOUSE ABUSE SHELTERS

The FAP contracts with the Russell County Shelter and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women to provide a 24-hour residential facility or temporary accommodation to ensure there is a safe, temporary place to stay, with emotional and material support to victims of spouse abuse and their children.

The shelters also offer counseling, transportation, and community services, including legal, medical, and financial help to spouses.

Individuals can call the shelters directly — Phenix City, (334) 297-4401 or Columbus, 324-3850 — for placement.

For more information on these services call Rebecca Welch or Theresa Sanchez at Family Advocacy at 545-7517.

ADDITIONAL TREATMENT GROUPS, CLASSES:

• Married Couple, Female and Male Support Groups — participants learn ways to resolve conflict without resorting to violence and address issues associated with being involved in abusive relationships.

• Incest Survivors Group — helps survivors begin the healing process.

• Blended Family Seminar — provides information to assist couples in unifying and strengthening the marital and parent-child relationships in blended families.

• Parenting Class for Parents of Young Children, School Age, and Teens, designed to educate and provide parents with in-depth insight into children's behavior and provide alternate parenting practices.

• Youth Support Group — to help teens improve problem-solving and communication skills

• Parent Effectiveness Training (PET), Effectiveness Training for Women (ETW), Youth Effectiveness Training (YET):

• Anger Management Class

• Couples Communication Class

• Stress Management Class

For additional information, call Social Work Service from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, at 545-1661.

A crisis worker is available during duty hours and an on-call worker is available after duty hours at MACH Emergency Room (ER) at 544-1502 or 544-1123.

Report: Cards Fit new curriculum

parents and teachers to better pinpoint exactly where a child is having difficulty, she said.

As a teacher, Harman said she was frustrated with the old report card because she felt it didn't give parents a complete and accurate picture of their student's performance. When she returned from Peachtree City and was talking with her husband about the changes, she said she had an "aha" moment.

"The new report card is like performance oriented training in the Army," she said. "When Soldiers train they're given a task, condition and a standard." Children will now have the same type of evaluations in the classroom as many of their Soldier parents receive. That, she said, is going to be something the military community can understand.

"That's what's exciting," she said. "A, B, C grades don't tell us what the child needs to know in order to be promoted to the next grade."

McPherson, who has been in the DDESS system for 24 years, said the new reports will be of particular benefit to first-graders, who may have received As in reading, but get to second grade and actually cannot read.

Haynes, who has taught first-grade reading and the new Read 180 program, said a new second- grader who cannot read can be an explosive situation for parents and teachers.

"It also puts parents at a disadvantage in their level of support (for their child,)" Haynes said. "When they see their child is on the honor roll, they might be willing to skip reading because they think their child is dong fine."

McPherson said one of the challenges the educators face is making sure parents aren't equating E (exceeding expectations) with A letter grades.

"There's no correlation," Wilson said. "A very small percentage — 2 percent max — will have E assessments." She said the new cards will tell parents a lot more about their children.

"It's a paradigm shift toward (assessing) what a student knows rather than what a teacher taught."

McPherson said discontinuing letter grades for younger students takes away competition among the children.

"The saddest thing I saw," she said, "was a child getting a paper with a B on it. That child saw the B and turned the paper over so his peers couldn't see it."

Wilson said because teachers are teaching at so many different levels in the younger grades, it's almost criminal to make a child that age feel that way.

"We're turning children off school that way and that's the last thing you want to do, she said."

McPherson said the addition of the Learning Skills assessment was something both principals and teachers insisted on including on the report card.

"We walked away feeling good about that," McPherson said. "The Student Performance section measures ability — this section measures responsibility."

Haynes said the new report cards are exciting for her as both a parent and as a teacher who has taught on post and in school systems using more detailed report cards like the one DDESS just adopted. She saw her son's at his parent-teacher conference.

"It was nice to have that opportunity to sit face-to-face with his teacher and have her explain what the new ratings mean," she said.

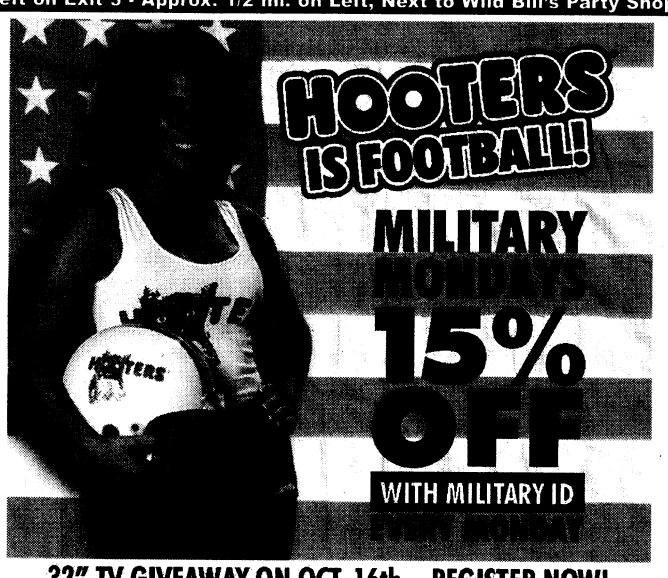
McPherson said she's had only two negative responses to the new report cards, both about principal lists and honor rolls — issues Harman said her group of teachers addressed in their work group.

But, the group said, honor roll is not everything.

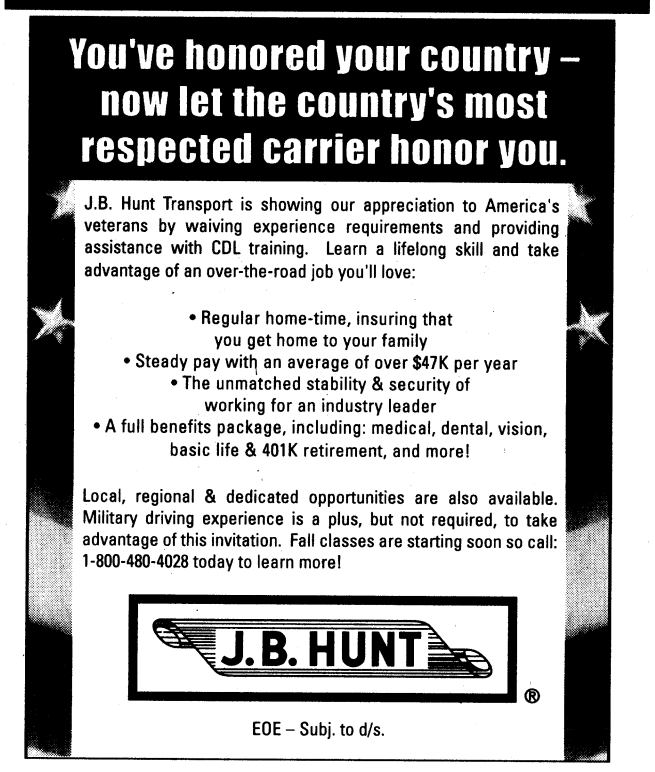
"If parents will stop, think and talk to the teachers, they will see that, too," Wilson said. "This is going to positively affect student achievement. It helps to know what you're expected to learn."

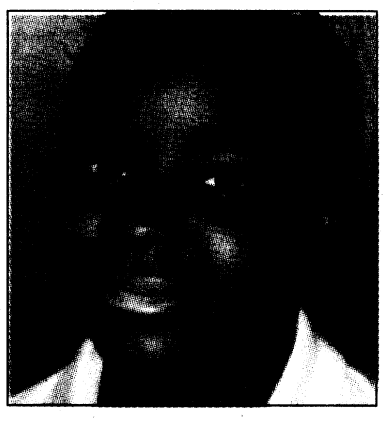
And the goal, Harman said, is for all children to meet the standards at the end of the year.

"You have a clear goal and you are working through the whole year," she said



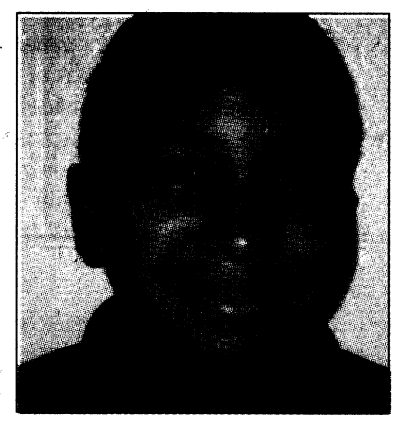
"When you hear a child talking about the standards, especially the younger children — it's really neat," McPherson said.





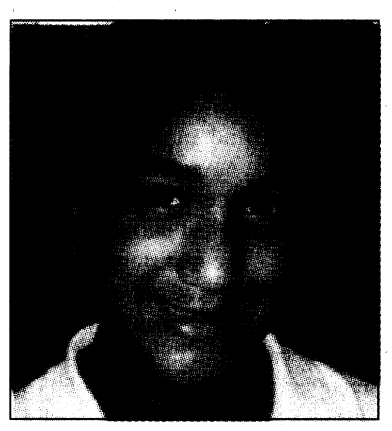
Fort Benning youth in the news

Lisa Madler asked her seventh-grade students at Faith Middle School what superpower they would like to have. Here's what they said:



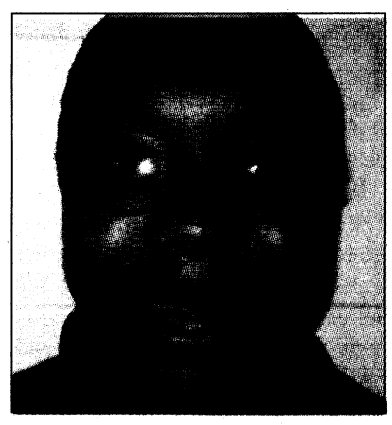
Aurora Nissley

"It would be the power to clean up messes of any size. The president would call me to clean up national disasters, such as floods and tornado damage. I would pull cars out of trenches after an earthquake and mend the ground. I would mend the damage left by Hurricane Katrina."



Jormanise Sanders

"If I could have a superpower it would be flying. I would be able to fly to the mall and visit all the different stores. My friends and I would make up flying games. I could also fly to school instead of walking or taking the bus."



John Jackson

"I would have the power of God. I would give people one last chance to see their loved ones again to say goodbye. This would help people deal with their grief. I would treat everyone like they were my children. I would also cure cancer, diabetes, AIDS, STDs and all other diseases."

Tequana Richardson

"If I had a superpower, I would rewind time. I'd use this power to undo many things I think need changing. That would mean my friends wouldn't be mad at me for saying something I shouldn't have said."

Akeisha Young

"I would be super strong, so I could help many people. I would help people carry things, and I could help during a terrible crisis. Even though people think you have to have superpowers to do all these things, you really don't. You just have to believe in yourself."

Reading: Reading program proven to improve scores

No child should have to go through that, Markham said. Elementary students should focus on becoming good readers, not public speakers.

After group reading, the students are again divided into three groups. They rotate between three "stations" for 20 minutes at a time.

At the "free read" station, they lounge on large pillows, reading books of their choosing, as long as the title is on Fort Benning's Reading Counts list. Later, they'll be tested on the book.

While one group lounges, another circles a table for small-group guided reading. Here the students get comfortable reading aloud with a handful of others within their lexile range.

The third station, the computer station, by far the most popular, defines Read 180, Markham said. It's here the students interact with "Ty," a computer character who pops up periodically to coach and encourage the students to keep trying as they work their way through a program that gets progressively harder.

The program centers on nine discs, each with four stories, video clips, reading passages and skill tests. The students view the video clip first. Markham said studies show young readers perform better if they have a mental picture of the subject before they read.

With stories based on subject matter such as sharks, Hispanic heroes, and rodeo clowns, the computer incorporates science and social studies, subjects the students may miss while they're away from their regular classrooms. It also helps them master spelling and vocabulary.

As the students read aloud into a microphone, the computer gauges their progress, based on pronunciation, fluency and comprehension, and instantly designs a study plan. It's not only possible, but probable, that two students working on the same story will have different questions, different vocabulary words and different spelling words.

On every story, each student works his way through four "zones" — the reading zone, the word zone, the spelling zone and the success zone, a final comprehension assessment.

"The feeling of success they get when they reach the success zone — it's amazing," Markham said. "Their hand shoots up and they spin around in their chair to find me, because they want me to see what they've done. It's exciting."

It's not unusual for students to try 10 or 12 times before reaching the success zone, she said. Read 180 is not easy, but neither is it frustrating.

"There are three levels of teaching," said Markham, who has taught for 31 years. "There's the independent level, which means the reading is so easy, the student needs no help; the instruction level, where he needs a little help; and the frustration level, where he misses way too many words. For years, schools taught to the frustration level."

But Read 180 is based on the "Goldilocks principle," she said. "The work should not be too easy or too hard. Challenging is just right."

Markham backs her words with statistics. Last year, eight third-graders at Stowers raised their lexile more than 500 points. And no one finished the year with less than a 300 point gain.

Scores in subjects other than reading also improved, she said. Science and social studies scores on standardized tests also improved.

National statistics mirror local success. A study of Read 180 programs in Boston, Dallas and Columbus, Ohio, showed participants in all three cities significantly increased their reading scores and more than doubled the scores of subjects in test groups using other reading intervention programs.

All of that means absolutely nothing to Jeremiah Johnson, who doesn't measure reading success in large numbers. He simply counts the number of chapters in Captain Underpants. He gives Read 180 two thumbs up, and on a scale of one to 10:

"Reading is fun now. It's a 10," he said.

Key to contentment lies with healthy relationship, thankful heart

Chaplain (Maj.) Luis Scott
29th Infantry Regiment

REFLECTIONS

Scott

The story is told of a king who was dissatisfied with his life. He had everything, but in spite of his riches and blessings, he could not find satisfaction in anything he did. The king called his counselors and supervisors and asked them, "What do I need to be satisfied?" A wise counselor responded, "You need to find a man in your kingdom who is content with is life and wear his shirt for 30 days."

The king commissioned his generals to search every inch of his kingdom for a man who was content. After months of searching, they found the man and returned to the king with the good news. The king asked the generals, "Where is the man's shirt?" The generals answered, "The man was not even wearing one."

What is the secret of being content? Paul tells us that he found the secret, but he does not tell us what the secret is. Do you know the secret? I am going to take a guess today.

• The first key to contentment is a healthy relationship with God.

After Jesus told Peter the kind of death he was going to experience, Peter asked Jesus while looking at John, "What about him?" Jesus answered him with a question: "What is it to you? Follow me."

Jesus' response could be interpreted as being cold. But in reality, Jesus wanted Peter to change his focus. Peter was looking in the wrong direction.

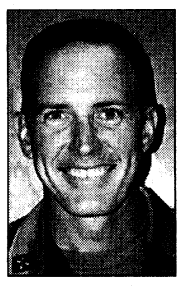
But Peter did not know this crucial truth. In essence, Peter said to Jesus, "Lord it's not fair that I have to be sacrificed on a cross while John gets to live until he is old."

We bring the issue of fairness often enough, don't we? If my car is stolen, I say, Lord, why my car? We actually mean to say, "Lord, why not John's car?" If someone gets promoted, we ask, how come so-and-so gets promoted and they are not better than I am? How do you know that life is not fair? How do you know that the other person is less deserving?

You know because we spend too much of our time, like Peter, looking at the Joneses and not looking at God. You, like Peter, spend time looking to what God is doing with John and not paying attention to what God is doing with you. Jesus' phrase, "You follow me," is intended to help us focus on the right path. If you want to be dissatisfied with your life, all you have to do is spend your time comparing yourself to others.

• The second key to a contented, satisfied life is a thankful heart.

I do not have the luxury of being a thankless person. I came from extreme poverty and have worked at not forgetting my roots. I love life because it brings me so much satisfaction.



Many years ago I came up with a personal motto: "I live in a low-stress environment." I will not let you dictate how I am going to feel about myself and about the things I love. Therefore, your opinion is important because I want to build a relationship with you, not because it will determine who I am.

A thankful heart appreciates every benefit, regardless of size. A thankful heart takes nothing for granted. A thankful heart is satisfied with life and his place in God's kingdom.

If we want to live contented lives, we need to refocus our eyes on God as the source of our strength and love, and we need to be thankful for the gifts that our neighbor brings into our lives.

Hey! Maybe you noticed the roadside banners that popped up all around Fort Benning this week, letting you know that there is something special happening at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel over the next six weeks. From Sunday through Nov. 17, CrossRoads will be offering Fort Benning The 40 Days of Purpose Campaign.

What is that?

I'm glad you asked. This spiritual growth campaign is designed to answer life's most important question: "What on earth am I here for?"

The events of the campaign will give us opportunities to commit to habits of spiritual growth, memorize scripture, participate in home-based, video-assisted small group gatherings, identify areas of our strength and service, share our faith, and learn to live a lifestyle of worship to the glory of God.

We are excited as we envision CrossRoads and lots of other new guests who haven't had the advantage of a church or chapel discovering how to live in alignment with God's purposes for their lives, and the impact this can have on our chapel and community. It truly is an amazing journey that everybody ought to have the privilege of.

Let me just recommend the three ways you can maximize what this campaign is all about. If you don't have a church or chapel home, then please take advantage of all God has in store for you by making a commitment to:

1) Enjoy each weekend service. Here at CrossRoads we're casual, contemporary and relevant with a desire to authentically offer you the hope and help you're looking for, and for six weeks, our messages will all center around God's five purposes for your life.

2) Read a chapter a day in The Purpose Driven Life. There are more than 30 million copies in print ... the bestseller of this century. And it's free to you for just being a part of this journey with us. We'll have them on hand Sunday, at CrossRoads, by the hundreds. And,

3) Host or join a video-based small group. This is your most important step. Don't miss out on the friendship, fun and life change that is yours when you simply gather in a home for just 90 minutes for just six weeks with a group of folks like yourself who are committed to growing in understanding, "What on earth am I here for ... what's my purpose in life?"

Some of you may have wondered, "I hear the word 'campaign' and think fund-raising. Will I be asked to contribute extra money to a cause?"

Nope! It doesn't have a thing to do with us asking you for money — it does have everything to do with God asking you to discover your purpose in life.

Others may wonder, "Is this something I can bring seeking friends to, or is it just for believers?"

It will absolutely have a powerful impact on both seekers and believers alike.

The fundamental question of the campaign, "What on earth am I here for?" is an ideal starting place for any of you or your friends who are seeking answers to life's most basic question. Everyone wants to know what their purpose in life is.

So again, here's an invitation to join in the excitement and impact as we launch into a very special season of spiritual growth. I'll even be hosting a small group myself at our home at 7 p.m. Wednesdays.

So if you'd like to take the next step in your spiritual journey, then come see me at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads, and we'll enjoy the walk together. Or call me at 545-9014 for more information.

One of David Caruso's first film roles was in 1982's An Officer and a Gentleman, followed by a decade of supporting roles. His breakthrough role came in 1993 as Detective John Kelly, part of the original lineup of NYPD Blue. Caruso left the show the following year to pursue a film career that didn't materialize.

The procedure of creating character on CSI: Miami

According to conventional wisdom, one hallmark of the crime procedural is its lack of emphasis on character development in favor of tracking the mechanics of an investigation. But there's no law saying one can't do both. In fact, if success is any measure, that may be the way to go.

Airing Monday, CSI: Miami is the middle child of the wildly popular franchise, having premiered as part of a second-season episode of the original, CSI: Crime Scene Investigation (a favor Miami repaid by having one of its episodes launch CSI: NY).

It focuses on a South Florida team of forensic investigators, led by former homicide detective Horatio Caine (David Caruso).

The third-season finale last spring closed out a story line about Horatio's supposedly dead brother, Ray (Dean Winters), a cop suspected of corruption. After discovering Ray was still alive and deep under cover, Horatio sent him off to a new life with his wife, Detective Yelina Salas (Sofia Milos), and their son, Ray Jr. (Alex Buck).

"We concluded a three-year arc last year with the brother," said Caruso, relaxing in his trailer after a day of filming at the show's Manhattan Beach studios, "and the little broken family that the brother had left behind, and all of those very interesting loose ends."

According to Caruso, all this is part of the master plan of the show runner of CSI: Miami, Anne Donahue.

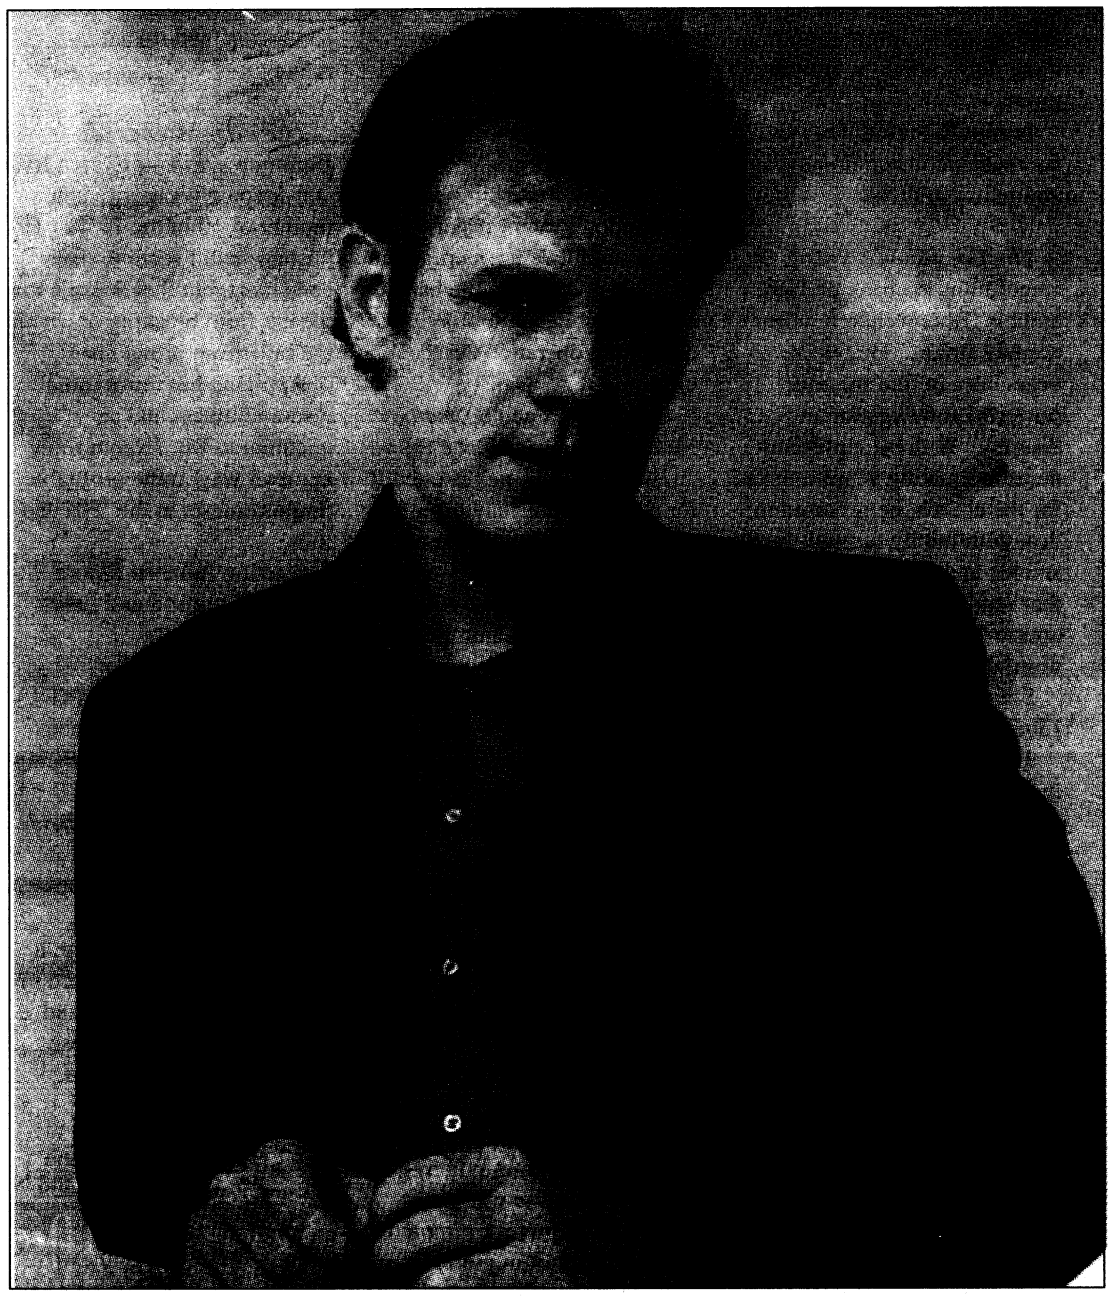
"Anne, our commander in chief," Caruso said, "has it blocked out in three three-year segments, almost like Star Wars. In a very brilliant way, Anne is telling the entire saga of CSI: Miami backwards."

Fans may remember that in the original CSI: Crime Scene Investigation episode that launched Miami, Caine commiserated with a little girl who lost her parents, saying that he had once lost someone.

"Anne takes three years," Caruso said, "with all these terrific brush strokes, to bring you back to what appears to be the source of that pain, the source of that conflict. It appears to be this broken family and the prodigal son, these things he can't really embrace because they're not his. And that appears to be what the source of all this is."

Told that it sounds like a "but" is coming, Caruso laughed.

"There's a large but — unfortunately it's probably mine. But, that is only the wrapping paper on what really happened. There's a deeper family conflict. There's a deeper family legacy that has begun to be revealed in this three-year arc."



As fans saw in the show's fourth-season premiere, which aired Sept. 19, the real source of Horatio's pain goes much further into the past, all the way back to a deadly crime he once committed.

"We finished that whole arc," Donahue said, "about Horatio trying to clear his brother's name, finding he's alive, and then sending him off to a good life with a woman, the love of Horatio's life. There's nothing sweeter than giving up someone you love for someone else you love.

"We felt it was a perfect ending, and now we had to say, 'Let's peel back another layer. What got Horatio so dedicated to saving people?'

"And we said, 'What's the one thing you wouldn't believe about him?'"

It's a testament to Donahue's flexibility and inventiveness as a storyteller that one line in the CSI crossover has now spawned two story lines — both of which didn't exist in Donahue's mind when the line was written.

"It's providence; it's serendipity," Donahue said. "We aim to entertain and have some character development.

"Then when we watch our characters on screen, other stuff is revealed. Just like a good book, you start to fill in the back story.

"When David said that line in the crossover — I still remember, I was standing right there on this gorgeous little island with Miami in the background — he said, 'I lost somebody once,' we really didn't know the whole back story at the time, because we did our whole crossover so fast.

"Everybody thought it was Ray. But I have to tell you, at that time, there was no Ray. It was a mysterious lost person, but we knew it would be someone important."

The new piece of Horatio's back story expands during November sweeps, in a crossover episode with CSI: NY, in which Horatio's past crime catches up with him.

"You see this man becoming slightly frayed," Caruso said. "He's carried the weight of this, and the closure that he received at the end of last year. He believed it might have been a healing, but in reality, it opened a trap door to something that he's not in total control of."

On this particular day, the cast is shooting episode four, called 48 Hours to Life, airing Monday, in which a young man goes to jail after a harsh interrogation with Detective. Frank Tripp (new series regular Rex Linn).

In Her Shoes — Maggie (Cameron Diaz) is fun-loving and irresponsible. Her older sister Rose (Toni Collette) is a high-powered lawyer who watches Maggie's wild life with disdain. When an attempt to live together fails miserably, they go off in different directions to find the missing pieces in their lives.

In Her Shoes is rated PG-13 for thematic material, language and sexual content.

The Gospel — A young singer turns his back on God and his father's church when tragedy strikes. He returns years later to find the once powerful congregation in disarray. With his childhood nemesis creating a "new vision" for the church, he is forced to deal with family turmoil, career suicide and relationship issues that send him on a collision course with redemption or destruction.

Starring Boris Kodjoe, Idris Elba and Nona Gaye.

The Gospel is rated PG for thematic elements including suggestive material and mild language.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit — Wallace and Gromit are cashing in with their humane pest-control outfit, "Anti-Pesto." With only days to go before the annual Giant Vegetable Competition, business is booming, but Wallace and Gromit are finding out that running a humane pest control outfit has its drawbacks as their home fills to the brim with captive rabbits.

Voiced by Helena Bonham Carter and Ralph Fiennes.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit is rated G.

Waiting — A waiter for four years since high school, Dean has never questioned his job at Shenanigan's. But when he learns that Chett, a high school classmate, now has a lucrative career in electrical engineering, he's thrown into turmoil about his dead-end life.

Starring Ryan Reynolds and Justin Long.

Waiting is rated R for strong crude and sexual humor, pervasive language and drug use.

Two for the Money — Brandon Lane is a former college football star whose uncanny ability to predict the outcome of a game introduces him to an unexpected new career when his gridiron glory is sidelined by a crushing injury.

Brandon's talent makes him a prime candidate for recruitment by Walter Abraham, the head of one of the biggest sports consulting operations in the country.

Starring Al Pacino, Matthew McConaughey and Rene Russo.

Two for the Money is rated R for pervasive language, a scene of sexuality and a violent act.

The Greatest Game Ever Played — An amateur player from a working class family, Francis Ouimet (Shia LaBeouf) shocked the golf world when at the 1913 U.S. Open, flanked by his 10-year-old caddie (Joshua Flitter), he defeated his idol, the defending British champion Harry Vardon (Stephen Dillane).

An unlikely match-up — the ingenue versus the seasoned champ — theirs was the greatest match the sport had ever known.

The Greatest Game Ever Played is rated PG for some brief mild language.

Into the Blue — When four young divers discover a legendary shipwreck rumored to contain millions in gold at the bottom of the sea, they believe their dream of buried treasure has come true. But nearby on the ocean floor, a sunken plane full of illegal cargo threatens their find.

Starring Paul Walker, Jessica Alba and Scott Caan.

Into the Blue is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of action violence, drug material, sexual content and language.

Serenity — Capt. Malcolm Reynolds, a hardened veteran on the losing side of a galactic civil war, now ekes out a living pulling off small crimes and transport-for-hire aboard his ship. When Mal takes on two new passengers, he gets much more than he bargained for.

Starring Nathan Fillion, Alan Tudyk and Adam Baldwin.

Serenity is rated PG-13 for sequences of intense violence and action, and sexual references.

The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio — Evelyn Ryan is a devoted housewife and mother of 10 in the 1950s. Her husband can't seem to make ends meet, but that doesn't stop the car from breaking down and the bills from piling up.

Applying her remarkable resourcefulness and an uncommon wit, Evelyn finds her own way in the profitable jingle contests in the '50s and '60s.

Starring Julianne Moore, Woody Harrelson and Laura Dern.

The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio is rated PG-13 for thematic elements, some disturbing images and language.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride — Set in a 19th century European village, this stop-motion, animated feature follows the story of Victor, a young man who is whisked away to the underworld and wed to a mysterious corpse bride, while his real bride, Victoria, waits bereft in the land of the living.

Although life in the Land of the Dead proves to be a lot more colorful than his strict Victorian upbringing, Victor learns that there is nothing in this world, or the next, that can keep him away from his one true love.

Voiced by Johnny Depp and Helena Bonham Carter.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride is rated PG for scary images and action, and brief mild language.

Just Like Heaven — When David (Mark Ruffalo) sublets his San Francisco apartment, the last thing he expected was a roommate.

Suddenly a pretty young woman named Elizabeth (Reese Witherspoon) shows up, adamantly insisting the apartment is hers.

David assumes there's been a giant misunderstanding — until Elizabeth disappears as mysteriously as she appeared.

Convinced that she is a ghost, David tries to help her cross over to the "other side."

Just Like Heaven is rated PG-13 for sexual content.

THINGS TO DO

Smokey Joe's Cafe
today-Saturday

The Springer Opera House doo-wops into the new season with the passion, perfume and pompadours of early rock.

Smokey Joe's Cafe is the longest running Broadway revue in history, a tribute to Leiber and Stoller, the Rodgers and Hammerstein of rock 'n' roll.

Show times are at 7:30 p.m. today and Saturday.

Tickets are $35 and under.

For more information, call the Springer at 327-3688.

Soldier Show
Saturday

The U.S. Army Soldier Show will be at Wetherby Field Saturday.

Gates open at 5:30 p.m. and the show begins at 7:30 p.m. Admission and parking are free.

This year's theme is Operation America Cares and will focus on how Soldiers deal with the stresses of war and long deployments.

The 90-minute production of songs and dance will have a variety of music including rhythm and blues, country, gospel, new wave and patriotic.

Dance
Saturday

The Phenix City Parks and Recreation will host a dance at Idle Hour Park at [redacted] p.m. Saturday.

For more information, call (334) 291-4719.

Spectacular Spiders
Sunday

Columbus State University's Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center will present "Spectacular Spiders," as part of its Second Sunday Series, from 2 to 3 p.m. Sunday.

The program will uncover secrets of spiders as part of a demonstration of local species.

The cost is $1 per person. Children ages 4 and younger are free.

Oxbow Meadows is located at 3535 South Lumpkin Road in Columbus.

For more information, call 687-4090 or visit the Web site at http://oxbow.colstate.edu.

Thoroughly Modern Millie
Sunday

Thoroughly Modern Millie is a high-spirited musical romp, based on the popular movie, that has all of New York dancing the Charleston. Filled with frisky flappers, dashing leading men and a dragon-lady villainess that audiences will love to hate, the musical is an evening of madcap merriment.

Thoroughly Modern Millie, recommended for ages 8 and older, will be at 2:30 and 7:30 p.m. Sunday in the RiverCenter's Bill Heard Theatre.

Tickets are $30-$45. For tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or visit the RiverCenter box office from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

Song and Dance Troupe
Tuesday

The Formosa Aboriginal Song and Dance Troupe will perform at the Springer Opera House at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

House of Heroes

Curtis Turner, a veteran of World War II, and his wife Ella, are pictured here with a team of Dexter Elementary School students and their principal, Melissa Hayes, top left. Pictured also is Pat Riccinto, back row on the right, beside Mrs. Turner. Riccinto is a former Dexter student and the TSYS employee who captained the team of volunteers who painted and repaired the Turner's home during the annual House of Heroes program. The Dexter students planted flowers and trees in the Turner's yard.

• Waltrip flips for 'Dega

NASCAR racing at Talladega, Ala., took a dangerous turn when, in an accident clearly caused by Jimmie Johnson (sorry, Jimmie, I've got two working eyeballs) Michael Waltrip flipped in his car. Several other "Chasers" had wrecks.

• He's gonna race the truck

Dale Jarrett must be training to race the UPS truck, since he won the UAW-Ford 500 Oct. 2 in Talladega, Ala. Tony Stewart is back to being the points leader. Ryan Newman is second, four points behind Stewart.

• Then there were eight

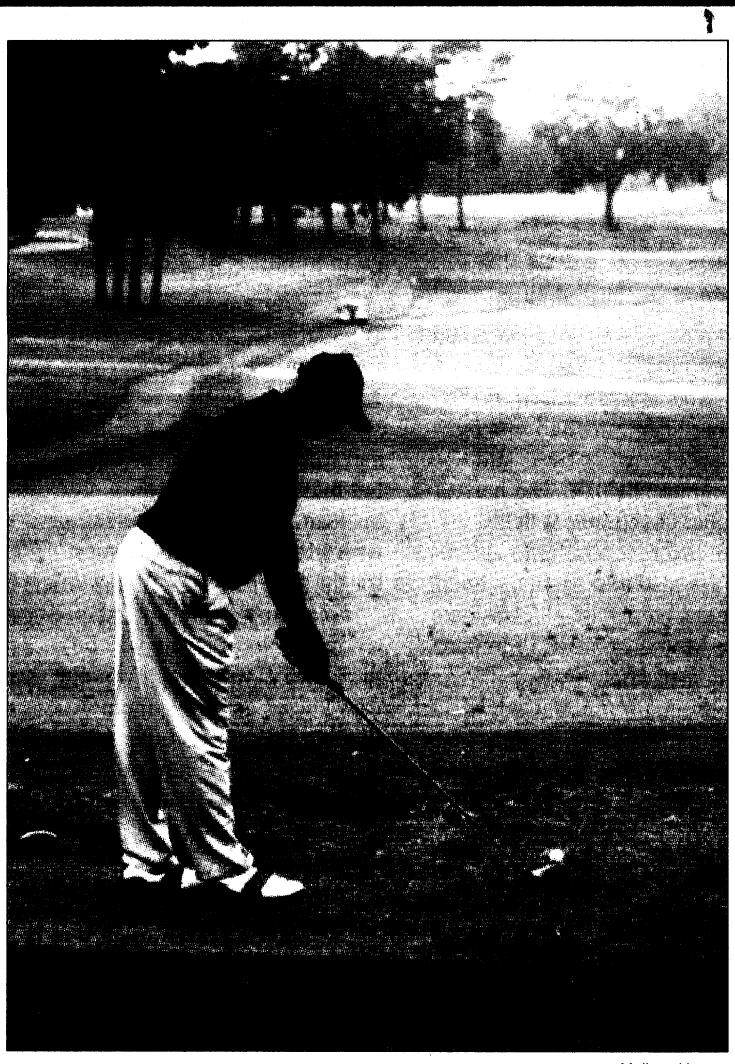
Catch the best-of-five series wrap up this weekend when the Red Sox take on the White Sox, the Yankees play the Angels, Padres go against the Cardinals and the Braves play the Astros.

The ALCS starts Oct. 11, NLCS Oct. 12.

• Wie turns pro

Golf phenom Michelle Wie turns 16 Tuesday, but announced she'll turn pro Oct. 5.

Upon turning professional, Wie will sign multi-million dollar endorsement contracts with Nike and Sony. Looks like a female Tiger is ready to roar.



• My hero of the year

Notre Dame head coach Charlie Weis granted a dying wish to 10-year-old Montana Mazurkiewicz, who called the first play to "pass right." The Irish did from their own 1-yard-line, and gained 13 yards on the play. Stay gold, Charlie.

• Keep it safe this week, guys

This week's NASCAR race is the Banquet 400 at Kansas Speedway. Coverage starts at 1:30 p.m. on NBC.

Six races remain after this week's.

Soldier wins first long drive competition

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Romeo Victorio went into the final round of the 2005 Fort Benning Long Dive Championship as the top seed, but that didn't keep him from feeling the pressure.

"I didn't want to choke," Victorio said. "Luckily, I did well." In his case, well was a golf ball hit 309 yards down the fairway at the Follow Me Golf Course Sept. 28 that earned him the Long Drive Championship title and a two-night vacation in Destin, Fla.

Golf course superintendent Ray Meredith, said he was looking for "something different" to do with the golfers, something other than a typical golf tournament.

"Everybody likes to see someone who can hit the ball a long way," Meredith said, so the Long Drive competition seemed the logical choice.

In a five-month period, Meredith offered golfers more than 10 opportunities to qualify for the final round. Each month, he said he had anywhere from 12-24 men attempting to qualify. For $5, golfers purchased three balls, and took their best swing.

"There were some guys who tried to qualify a number of times," Meredith said, "because they said they just knew they could hit the ball farther."

According to the Long Drivers of America, a regulation long drive course should be flat, and the scoring grid should measure 40 yards wide and 350 yards long. Meredith's course offered golfers more of a challenge — a slightly sloping area measuring only 28 yards wide. A golfer's ball had to land within the grid in order to be measured and scored.

Meredith seeded the top 15 qualifiers, led by Victorio with a qualifying drive of 347 yards, into the final round. Those golfers hit three balls in an attempt to qualify for the top five spots and the playoff. Of the 13 who hit Sept. 29, only six had scorable shots, and Victorio's first shot, 342 yards, put him easily into the final round. His closest competition, Bo Tabor, hit 315 yards. Dave Davis, who would have given Victorio a run for his money, hit one of his qualifying balls 366 yards, but the ball rolled to a stop just out of the grid, Meredith said.

In the final round, only three of the five qualifiers place their shots in the grid — Victorio at 309 yards, golf instructor Rudy Thorne at 282 yards, and Meredith at 249.

"That's the money," Meredith said after Victorio's shot. "I'm glad a Soldier won

Two Army drivers in victory lane this weekend

Army News Service

ARLINGTON, Va. — Whether turning left or going straight, Army drivers led the way this weekend, taking top honors in two of three separate events.

Rookie Army driver Kraig Kinser stole the show Saturday at Talladega Superspeedway by winning the season-finale ARCA RE/MAX race in dominating fashion.

Driving the U.S. Army/CENTRIX Financial/Rally's Chevrolet as a member of MB2 Motorsports driver development program, Kinser started from the pole and led 83 of 113 laps.

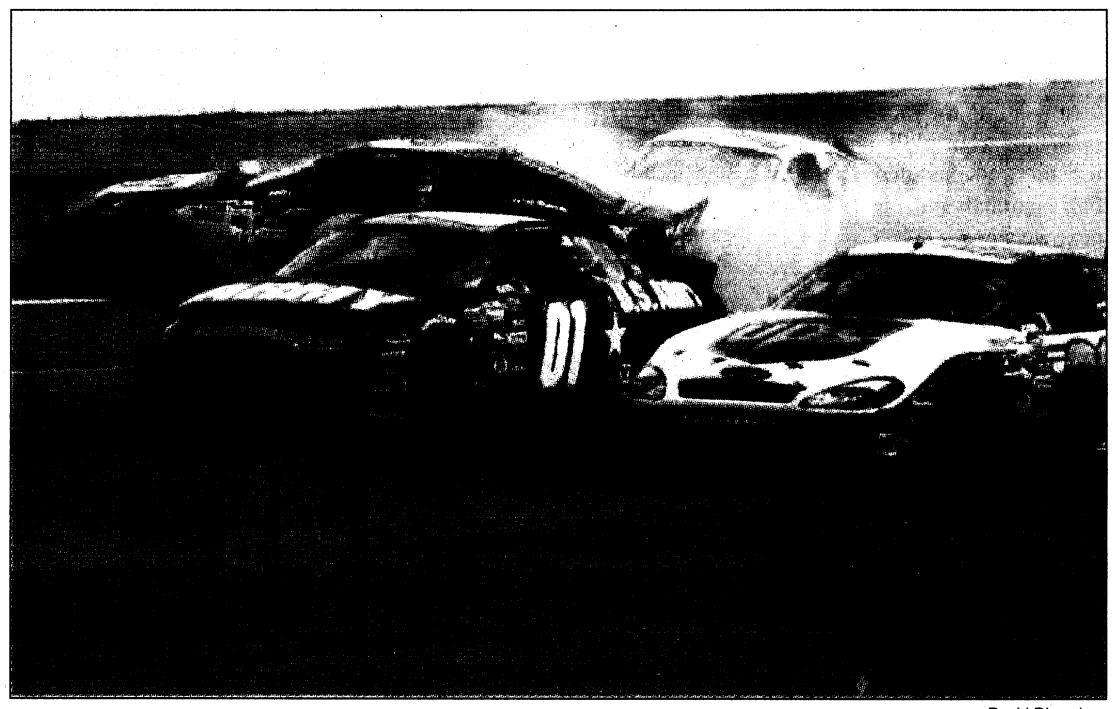
"This is sweet," said the 20-year-old son of many-time World of Outlaws sprint car champion Steve Kinser. "MB2 gave me a great car and the Hendrick engine was awesome."

Kinser, who took the checkered flag 0.168 seconds ahead of Kyle Krisiloff, didn't have much time to enjoy the Food World 300 victory. Following the customary Victory Lane photos and media interviews, he boarded a private airplane for Williams Grove, Pa. to compete in Saturday night's World of Outlaws main feature.

The only glitch for Kinser at Talladega's 2.66-mile oval was when he violated the blend line rule as he was exiting pit road near the mid-point of the race. The penalty relegated him from first to 17th place.

"I made a mistake but it turned out to be a good thing because it gave me more experience working the draft," said Kinser, who led 49 of the first 51 laps.

Competing in his second career ARCA race, Kinser sliced and diced his way back to the front with the precision of a savvy veteran. He regained the lead on Lap 80 and held the front-running position for the remainder of the race.



"Kraig did a fantastic job — he was incredibly poised for his first superspeedway race," said Doug Randolph, who handled the crew chief duties.

"He made that one mistake, but he didn't get flustered. He only got better as the race went on. He's been a pleasure to work with."

In Kinser's first ARCA race in August at Michigan International Speedway, he qualified second and finished eighth.

Along with guidance from Randolph and team spotter Roman Pemberton, Kinser also received advice from 75-year-

Erin Says...

The NFL games seemed to throw a lot of the pickers last week, which is my mission when picking games for the week. Melissa had an outstanding week, going 9-3 with her great pick of Michigan over Michigan St., and Melissa and Lori's picks of Alabama over Florida and Denver over Jacksonville. Dave, good pick of Washington over Seattle.

old Hall of Fame driver, Red Farmer, who called Kinser in Victory Lane to congratulate him.

"Red is a great teacher and I really appreciate the time he spent with me during our test session at Talladega," Kinser said.

Schumacher wins, extends top fuel points lead

U.S. Army Top Fuel driver Tony "The Sarge" Schumacher captured the Ameriquest Mortgage NHRA Nationals in Joliet, Ill., Sunday and in the process widened his lead in the Top Fuel point standings.

Schumacher, who hails from the Chicago area, won for the second time at his home track after disposing of Doug Herbert in the finals with a 4.535-second pass at 328.94 mph.

Following his class-leading sixth victory of the season, Schumacher now leads second-place Larry Dixon by 205 points in the chase for the 2005 NHRA POWERade Top Fuel world championship.

"We clearly follow the lead of our Soldiers — we will not accept defeat," said Schumacher afterward. "This U.S. Army team was just flawless all weekend."

In fact, the U.S. Army team recorded drag racing's version of a perfect game — qualifying number one, setting a new national elapsed time record (good for 20 bonus points) and then winning the race.

Schumacher will now head for the re-scheduled O'Reilly Fall Nationals outside of Dallas next weekend.

Should he manage to leave that event with a 277 point lead or better, he will clinch his second straight NHRA POWERade Top Fuel world title and the third of his career.

Nemechek survives Talladega, finished ninth

U.S. Army driver Joe Nemechek survived the Talladega Superspeedway wreckfest Sunday with a ninth-place finish in the UAW-Ford 500 Nextel Cup race.

"There was definitely more beating and banging in this race than we've had in a long time," Nemechek said.

"It was mentally exhausting out there. I came close to a couple of those big wrecks, but we hung on and survived. It feels good to leave this track with a decent finish and the car in one piece."

Nemechek, who ran as high as third with 14 laps remaining, was still in the thick of the battle when the final caution flew on Lap 186 of 190. He was running in 10th place when the race resumed with a green-white-checkered restart.

"We managed to pick up one spot, but once you're in the mix of running three-wide you can't go anywhere," Nemechek said.

Nemechek also picked up one spot in the point standings and is currently 15th with seven races remaining. He is 48 points behind 14th place Dale Jarrett and 20 ahead of 16th place Jeff Gordon.

"Our goal remains the same and that's to finish 11th," said Nemechek, who is 99 points out of 11th, the highest position a non-Chase driver can finish.

Nemechek, who qualified fifth in his No. 01 U.S. Army Chevrolet, started the race from the rear of the field due to an engine change during Saturday's first practice session.

"In the early going, I wanted to get up to the front," Nemechek said. "But at the same time I was trying to be smart. If you don't finish you don't get any points. We were patient and just wanted to be in the hunt at the end."

And that's exactly where Nemechek found himself following a two-tire, green-flag pit stop on Lap 162.

He came out of the pits in fourth place and stayed there until the second draft of cars caught up to the front-running four-car pack.

In the closing laps it was a typical, hair-raising Talladega Superspeedway finish with plenty of jockeying and shuffling on the 2.66-mile oval.

"We gave it our best shot, but lacked a little speed," said Nemechek.

"When you restart a superspeedway race with two laps remaining there's no telling what's going to happen. It's one of the wildest rides a driver can experience.

"I was proud of coming on strong at the end with the same spirit and fight of our Soldiers."

Editor's note — David Feroni and Chris Dirato contributed to this story.

it."

Meredith said a good golf shot is "all about rhythm and timing," and although strength plays a factor, the strongest golfer doesn't always win.

"In Vic's case, he has good timing," he said. "He just brought it all together. He's easily the longest driver out here, but you have to get it into the grid, too."

Victorio, who played softball throughout his Army career, switched to golf about two years ago after his doctor told him he needed to stop doing a lot of sprinting.

"I wanted to do something — hitting a ball, walking outside," Victorio said. "And the golf course was right next to the softball field at Camp Casey (Korea)."

So he started hitting range balls and found similarities between swinging a bat and a golf club.

"This is my passion. For me, (golf's) all softball action," he said. "I really don't have much of a form."

He's never taken lessons, but has gotten tips from watching the Golf Channel and "listening to the old guys." He's learned how to hit a draw shot — the preferred shot in long driving, but one he said is easier to hook or slice — and a fade.

"I'm lucky I played softball," he said. He's adapted his skill at placing softball hits for base runners into placing his shots on the golf course to get around dog legs and obstacles.

Victorio said he'd love to continue pursuing his long drive success by trying out for Pinnacle's roving tour, but right now, he just doesn't have the time.

The company first sergeant earned his title, buttoned up his BDU top at 7:15 p.m. and went right back to work preparing for a quarterly training briefing.

Irish 'pass right' for Montana

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

It takes a lot to make me cry. OK, I have cried over the Red Sox, but that's a whole 'nother ball of wax.

While watching Live with Regis and Kelly this week, Regis, a huge Notre Dame fan, told a story about head coach Charlie Weis that brought a tear to my eye (not that I'll ever admit it in public). But it is heartwarming, and it should be shared with everyone.

Weis, who left the offensive coordinator job with the New England Patriots after last season to coach the Irish, has a heart of gold. In late September, he visited a 10-year-old boy named Montana Mazurkiewicz in Mishawaka, Ind., who had been told weeks earlier that he had an inoperable brain tumor. Just the day before, Montana had become paralyzed from the waist down because of the tumor.

Weis talked with Montana about his tumor, and told him about his own 10-year-old daughter Hannah, who has global development delay, a rare disorder similar to autism.

He also told Montana about pranks he played on classmate Joe Montana — who Montana is named after.

Montana's mom Cathy told him to throw a football to her, but because of the pain he was in, could barely lift his arm. Weis climbed into the chair with Montana and helped him.

Weis signed the ball 'Live for today for tomorrow is always another day.' Then, Weis asked Montana what else he could do for him.

Montana wanted to call the Irish' first play in the Sept. 24 game against Washington. Weis let him. Montana called for a "pass right."

The night before the game, Weis got the call that Montana had fought as long as he could, but that he had died. Weis told his team about the conversation with Montana, and his request for the first play.

Following a fumble recovery, Notre Dame was on their own 1-yard line. Anyone who knows anything about football knows you never pass from your own 1-yard line. But Weis followed what Montana wanted.

He ran the play, and while most of the Irish went left, quarterback Brady Quinn ran right and threw the ball to tight end Anthony Fasano. Fasano caught the pass and managed a 13-yard gain.

Weis was quoted as saying, "It's almost like Montana was willing him to beat the defender and take it to the house."

The Irish went on to beat Washington, 36-17. Weis had the entire team sign a game ball, which he presented to the Mazurkiewicz family the following day.

The world, especially the sporting world, needs more people like Charlie Weis. He put the wish of a dying boy before the obvious play for his football team, and it all worked out for the best. Weis will always be a hero for that in my book.

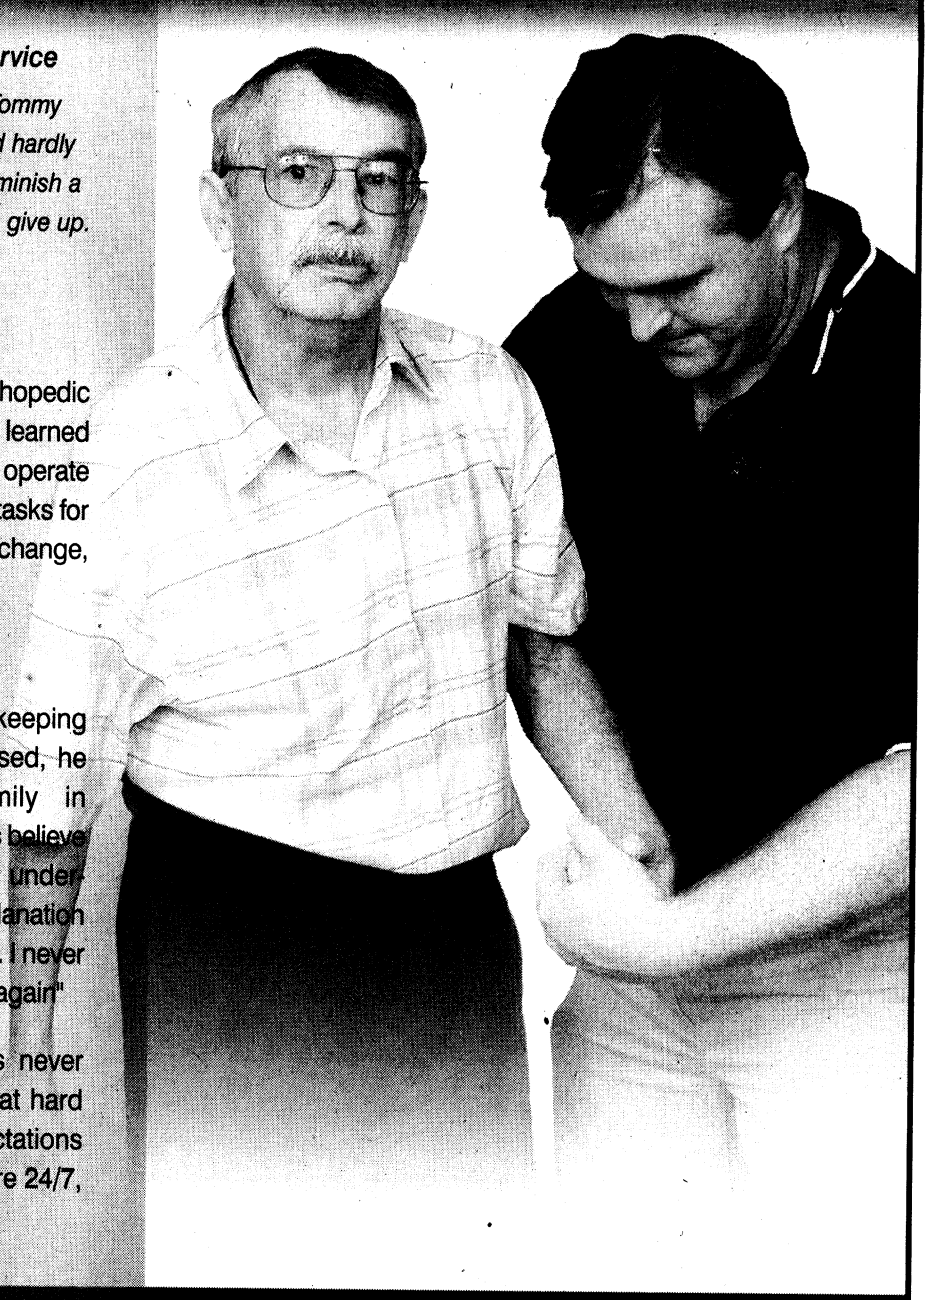
"Giving up would've been easy. Neither one of us did."

Tommy Lee, Retired - US Postal Service

After thirty years of delivering the mail, Tommy never expected to be unable to move and hardly able to speak. A stroke that severe can diminish a patient's hopes for recovery, and they often give up. But not Tommy.



Great Expectations...

During intensive therapy in Hughston Orthopedic Hospital's Rehabilitation Center, Tommy learned to write, shave, eat, brush his teeth and operate a wheel chair with his left hand – difficult tasks for a lifelong right hander. The biggest change, however, was completely unexpected.

Extraordinary Outcomes.

For years, Tommy had led a quiet life, keeping to himself. But as his therapy progressed, he began engaging friends and family in conversation and laughter. His therapists believe the rehabilitation process stimulated under-developed brain centers. Tommy's explanation is simpler. "They made me keep on trying. I never gave up. Now I can talk and get around again"

Our physicians, nurses and therapists never gave up on Tommy either. We know that hard work, perseverance and great expectations change lives. We deliver that level of care 24/7, 365 days a year.

ADVERTISE IN THE BAYONET

1819 SOUTH LUMPKIN RD. • 706-682-3346

Once upon a time, there was a big pile of laundry.

The pile was made up of all different colors. A mommy decided she would play a game. Red! she said to her child, holding up a red shirt. Red! the child said. Mommy put it in the colors pile. Whites went in another pile. Green like a frog! White like ice cream! And so it went. Colors, whites. Colors, whites. And on the very last thing – a bib of blue – the child pointed to the colors pile. You should've seen the smile on mommy's face.

Everyday moments can become learning moments. Because learning starts long before school does. So tell stories. Play with the laundry. And even a chore with your child will become much more. Find out more at bornlearning.org. United Way Ad Council

Mortar round kills 2/69 staff sergeant in Iraq

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Staff Sgt. Jens Schelbert, 31, from New Orleans, was killed Oct. 1 in Ramadi, Iraq. Schelbert died of injuries he sustained when indirect fire hit the forward operating base.

Schelbert was assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment. He had deployed with the battalion for Operation Iraqi Freedom 1.

Schelbert

Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team honored Schelbert with a memorial service Wednesday at the Kelley Hill Chapel.

Lt. Col. Jim DesJardin, the brigade's rear detachment commander, delivered the remarks from the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Robert Roggeman.

Roggeman called Schelbert a motivated tanker and true friend who was killed fighting for freedom.

"It hurts to lose outstanding Soldiers such as Staff Sergeant Schelbert," Roggeman wrote. "Schelbert loved the Army, loved reading about it, loved studying it. Loved living it — always motivated no matter how great the task or mission."

Roggeman said it was hard for "rough, tough Army guys" to talk about love, but love, he said was present with the Soldiers, friends and family who gathered to remember him, both in Iraq and at Fort Benning.

Schelbert, he said, was known as the "Candyman" to the children of Ramadi and Khalis, because he always had Jolly Ranchers to hand

Second OIF deployment for unit

Tears were never far from anyone's eyes when 65 members of the 690th Medical Company departed for a yearlong deployment to Iraq Oct. 6.

It was the second tour for many of them.

A ground ambulance company, the 690th returned from the first yearlong Operation Iraqi Freedom deployment in March 2004. About six months ago they got word that they might be deploying again.

Soldiers say conditions in Kuwait better

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Families and friends stood under cloudy skies Saturday as Soldiers from the 233rd Heavy Equipment Transporter Platoon deployed to Kuwait.

The Soldiers, many of them on third and fourth deployments, did their best to focus on the positive.

"Living conditions are better. There are buildings now instead of tents," said Sgt. Margarita Flores, a truck driver. "The Soldiers' quality of life is a lot better."

Flores noted significant improvements that included a food court and, perhaps most importantly, air conditioning. But nothing could make deploying for the third time in as many years easier, Flores said, as she sat with her two daughters.

"My daughters, they take care of each other," she said, conceding that the separations don't get easier, as she scooped up her 4-year-old niece and gave her a hug. "I'm really going to miss her, too."

To help ease the separation, Flores is taking photos, "lots of 'em," with her.

Spc. Timothy Stover and his wife, Angelina, echoed Flores' sentiments.

"We've been through it once before," Angelina said. "We're better prepared."

The Stovers said improved communications helped ease the separation.

"Phone calls, e-mails and letters," she said. "He writes beautiful letters."

Elsie Jackson

Ashley, left, Terrell and Catalina Hearn with Ashley Carlos watch as Cpl. Gerald Hearn and the 233rd HET Platoon deploy for Kuwait Saturday.

Stover grinned and said that on his first deployment "she got a shoebox full of letters."

Sgt. 1st Class Karl Lyles, the 233rd's platoon sergeant, said the platoon was ready.

"We've been spending a lot of time on the ranges to prepare for the mission," he said. "As a Soldier it's real hard. We have some people, this is their fourth time going. For some, the third."

Father, son immigrate from Ghana, join Army

Soldiers say U.S., Army their destiny

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Roll out of bed at 4:30 a.m. and head straight for PT. Study hard and keep a low profile. Expect a lot of yelling and screaming.

And physical abuse? Yeah, it happens. A lot.

That's how Pvts. Joseph and Kafui Amissah describe it — it being high school.

Joseph, 37, and Kafui, 19, are basic trainees, just four weeks and nine weeks, respectively, into military careers they dreamed of when they were high school cadets back in the Republic of Ghana.

Though father and son shied away from calling it "easy," both agreed that basic training isn't as hard as the high school they attended, a boarding school where upperclassmen abuse younger students as a matter of course.

"That's the way it is," said Kafui, recalling a time he was forced to lie under a bed for more than six hours.

"If I tried to come out, they kicked me," he said — with a smile.

Kafui smiles a lot. His father smiles a lot.

IT'LL BE FUN

Horse barns a lot like Rome

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Building a barn was a learning experience. First, I like power tools. It's amazing how a power tool can make you feel like Tim "The Tool Man" Taylor. Even down to the grunts.

Up until building the barn, I hadn't had much hands-on with power tools. I touched the bit once after I drilled a hole to hang a towel rack in the bathroom, though.

My 13-year-old daughter wasn't impressed with my yelp of pain.

"Gosh Mom! Didn't you know the bit would be hot? The drill works with friction!"

Nope, didn't know that. But I learned a lot about nail guns, drills, miter saws and skill saws. I found out that I can turn around a blade on a skill saw to cut tin. (Should be a carbide blade versus the one that came with the skill saw.) Another way to cut tin is to use a grinder blade — expect a lot of sparks.

Second, I learned there needs to be a plan.

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Griffith with the 14th Combat Support Hospital sketched the plan for the 24-by-36 four stall horse barn.

He told me where to put the 4-by-4-by-16 poles for the ridge line and how far apart to place the 4-by-4-by-12 poles. Mark also told me how to use string to mark the pole placement and to measure out so I had enough room to work.

I should have listened.

Instead of a 24-by-36 barn, one side (and I'm not saying which one) is a little bit longer. This made the construction process a bit more interesting.

Luckily for me, my friends Lisa and Spc. Louis Atchison came to the rescue. Louie showed me how to place the poles using a level to make sure they're straight. I certainly never would have thought of that!

I learned that post hole diggers were invented by Satan. The holes had to be 4 feet deep. That's where 17- year-old David Campbell's energy came in handy.

Louie's full time job is with 4th Ranger Training Battalion, but he spent long and late hours helping with the barn and teaching me about construction. I now know how to "toe nail" and why. I'm comfortable with a nail gun (but very safety conscious). I can change the blade to a skill saw and Lisa taught me how to use the miter saw, which I call the chop saw because that's what it does.

Not being really familiar with construction, I was lucky that Capt. John Parker could translate my favorite word, "thingy," to the appropriate piece of equipment or idea — putting up rafters for the tin roof.

John, who works with TRADOC System Manager-Close Combat Missile Systems, showed me how to cut a bird's mouth, something he learned from This Old House. He explained the roof's pitch and told me I was listing, which was why the skill saw was binding as I cut the bird thingy into the rafters and that I should cut from the other direction. (And no, I wouldn't cut off my leg.)

My coworker Tracy Bailey and Elwin "Gil" Gilchrist, who works in the Office of Infantry Proponency, believed me when I said a barn-raising party would be fun. (Read: fell for it.)

Tracy brought her sons out on a Saturday and helped set the poles in concrete. Gil told me the concrete works better if I don't just pour an 80-pound bag into the hole and add water. So 13-year-old Nicholas mixed the concrete while Gil helped with the framing.

When Tracy found out I planned to fix lunch, she took pity on the entire work crew and grilled a delicious lunch for us.

Third, I learned that elevation should be considered when selecting the location. When it's not, more digging is involved.

Fourth, I learned barns don't go up in a day. It took four full weekends and required more work after work. But my horses now have a home.

And I still have wonderful friends who graciously gave up their time in exchange for some back-breaking labor. The barn raising was fun ... thank you.

Now for the fences ... (It'll be fun.)

What's on your agenda this weekend?

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Decisions, decisions. There's an event for everybody this weekend, and if you play your cards right you can make it to two of the three.

The annual Lumpkin to Louvale bicycle ride starts at 9 a.m. tomorrow. Registration ($20 fee will get you a long sleeved T-shirt) starts at 8 a.m. at the United Methodist Church on Broad Street in Lumpkin.

The 20-mile loop winds along country roads with stops at Green Grove Church and Providence Canyon State Park. The 50-mile route continues to Florence Marina, on to Louvale and back. The route is described as moderate, with long hills.

All proceeds from the ride benefit the Stewart County Historical Commission. For more information, contact Gail Lynch at glynch@knology.net or call 327-9015. After the ride, check out the festivities at the 32nd annual Fair on the Square and Westville's Harvest Festival in historic Lumpkin.

Or, you can support historic preservation right here in town tomorrow at the 28th annual Historic District Preservation Society Foot Race. You don't have to run, you can walk, I won't tell. I'll be behind you. The 5K and 10K runs start at 8:30 a.m. at Heritage Park, next to the Coca-Cola Space and Science Center. Entry fees are $20 for adults and $15 for children 14 and younger. Prizes are up for grabs, but if you aren't fast enough to get one, you still get a cool T-shirt.

Then there's the Mossy Creek Barnyard Festival this weekend, which is hands-down, one of my favorite artsy craftsy fairs. It's a great place to get a jump on that (shudder) holiday shopping.

But it's more than a crafts sale. Entertainment, demonstrations, displays and lots of great food will be spread across the festival site. My daughter went to Mossy Creek a few years ago and was delighted when a very well-behaved goat helped her finish an ear of corn, cob and all.

Mossy Creek is near Perry and Warner Robins, six miles east of I-75. Admission is $5 for adults and $1 for children. The festival will run from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Since it's a two-day event, you can do the Lumpkin to Louvale ride or the Preservation Run Saturday and still make it to Mossy Creek this weekend. When you go to Mossy Creek Sunday, wear the T-shirt you'll get at the bike ride or the run.

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments, and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their units' or directorates' activities.

Requesting coverage of news events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include battalion-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations and group photos.

Also, Army Regulation 360-1, which governs the production and content of Army newspapers, states covering such events is not a function of the post newspaper or the Public Affairs Office.

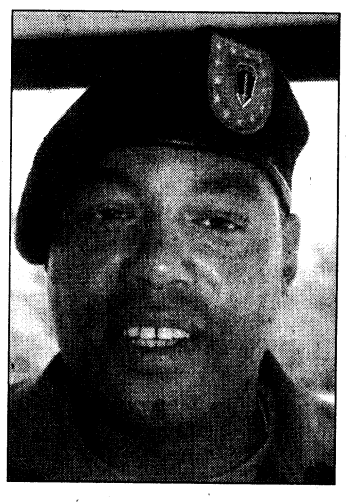
Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Story ideas, submission

If you believe you have a good story idea and want to write the story yourself, call us to see if we're interested. If you don't want to write the story, call us and we'll arrange a time for you to talk with a reporter.

We reserve the right to edit all stories for publication, and we cannot guarantee if or when submitted stories will appear in the paper. Stories that are submitted after the deadline will be published in the next week's paper.



Stringers

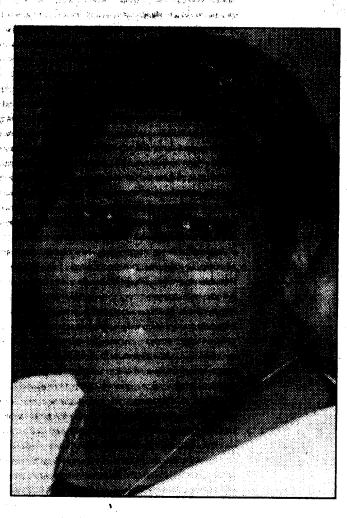
Stringers are people belonging to various units who write about and take photos of unit activities for The Bayonet.

Stringers need not be trained or have experience as journalists; we'll provide training.

VARIOUS VOICES

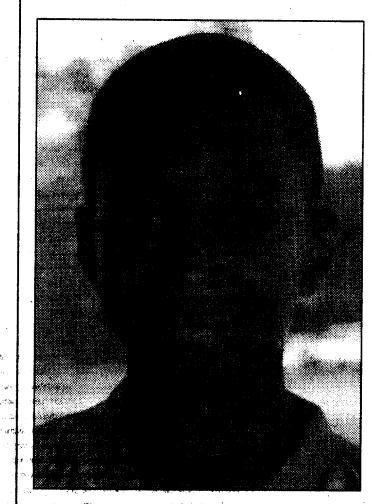
What's your favorite thing about fall?

Spc. Wayne Tisdale, 152nd MP Company — "I like the leaves changing. Back home, in Hunstville (Ala.), the view is just pretty this time of year."



Tiffany Jackson, 17 — "Halloween. I don't know if I'll trick-or-treat, but I'll probably dress up. It's still my favorite."

Michelle Reasoner, Stowers Elementary School — "I like remembering the falls when I was growing up in the Midwest. It was just me and my dad, and we'd go to apple orchards. The mornings were crisp, and the leaves — the colors — were just beautiful. I miss that down here, but at least we don't have to shovel snow."



Ariel Gibson, 9 — "I like Halloween, and I like going to my grandparents' house on Thanksgiving."

Rhonda Scott, Stowers Elementary School — "I just like that this time of year seems to bring people together. I like the anticipation of Christmas, and I like getting together with family at Thanksgiving. I think it helps us reflect on our spiritual side."

Retired Master Sgt. Tracy Tanner, Columbus — "The cooler weather. I do a lot more gardening."

Zavian Hayes, 9 — "I like Halloween the best, because I like to try to scare people. Thanksgiving isn't as much fun. You just eat."

17th association dedicates buffalo monument

eBay purchase expedites fund-raising efforts

Bridgett Siter

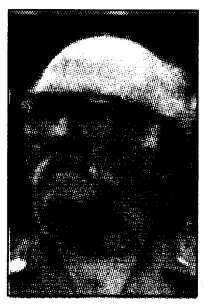
If it weren't for eBay, the Oct. 7 dedication of a monument on Fort Benning's Sacrifice Field would likely not have taken place for another couple of years, at least.

The life-size bronze statue of a buffalo perched atop a monument honoring the 17th Infantry Regiment was purchased for $7,000 by the 17th Infantry Association after a member spotted it online. Association officials figure the purchase saved them about $40,000 and expedited fund-raising efforts which began in earnest four years ago.



The seller wouldn't, or couldn't, reveal the history of the buffalo, but that doesn't matter, said Stewart Rothman, the Korean War veteran who serves as association president. Now it represents the colorful history of a unit dating back to 1812, when Congress authorized the formation of Kentucky riflemen.

It was later grafted into the 3rd Infantry Regiment until 1861, when President Lincoln formed the 17th Infantry Regiment again.

The 17th, which has 17 Medal of Honor recipients, has participated in 10 wars and expeditions and is the only unit to repel foreign invaders from U.S. soil, first during the War of 1812 and again in the Aleutian Islands during World War II.

Now, with 17th Inf. Regt. Soldiers from Alaska serving in Iraq alongside units from all over the U.S., Rothman said the monument honors "all our fighting men and women."

"I can't tell you what this day means," said Rothman, sporting "buffalo horns," a mustache modeled after the kind worn by the 17th's most famous commander, Col. "Buffalo" Bill Quinn, who led the unit during the Korean War.

Rothman

Quinn, whose practice of handing out buffalo nickels, some say, birthed the Army tradition of unit coins, "did things other commanders wouldn't do," Rothman said.

Quinn fashioned mess halls behind the front lines, and served his men scrambled eggs and sausage in their foxholes, Rothman said.

And when trench foot and frostbite took too many men out of the fight, Quinn solved the problem by rationing fresh socks every morning. He put an end to Chinese "banzai attacks" by lighting up the sky at night.

"He was fire and brimstone all the way," Rothman said.

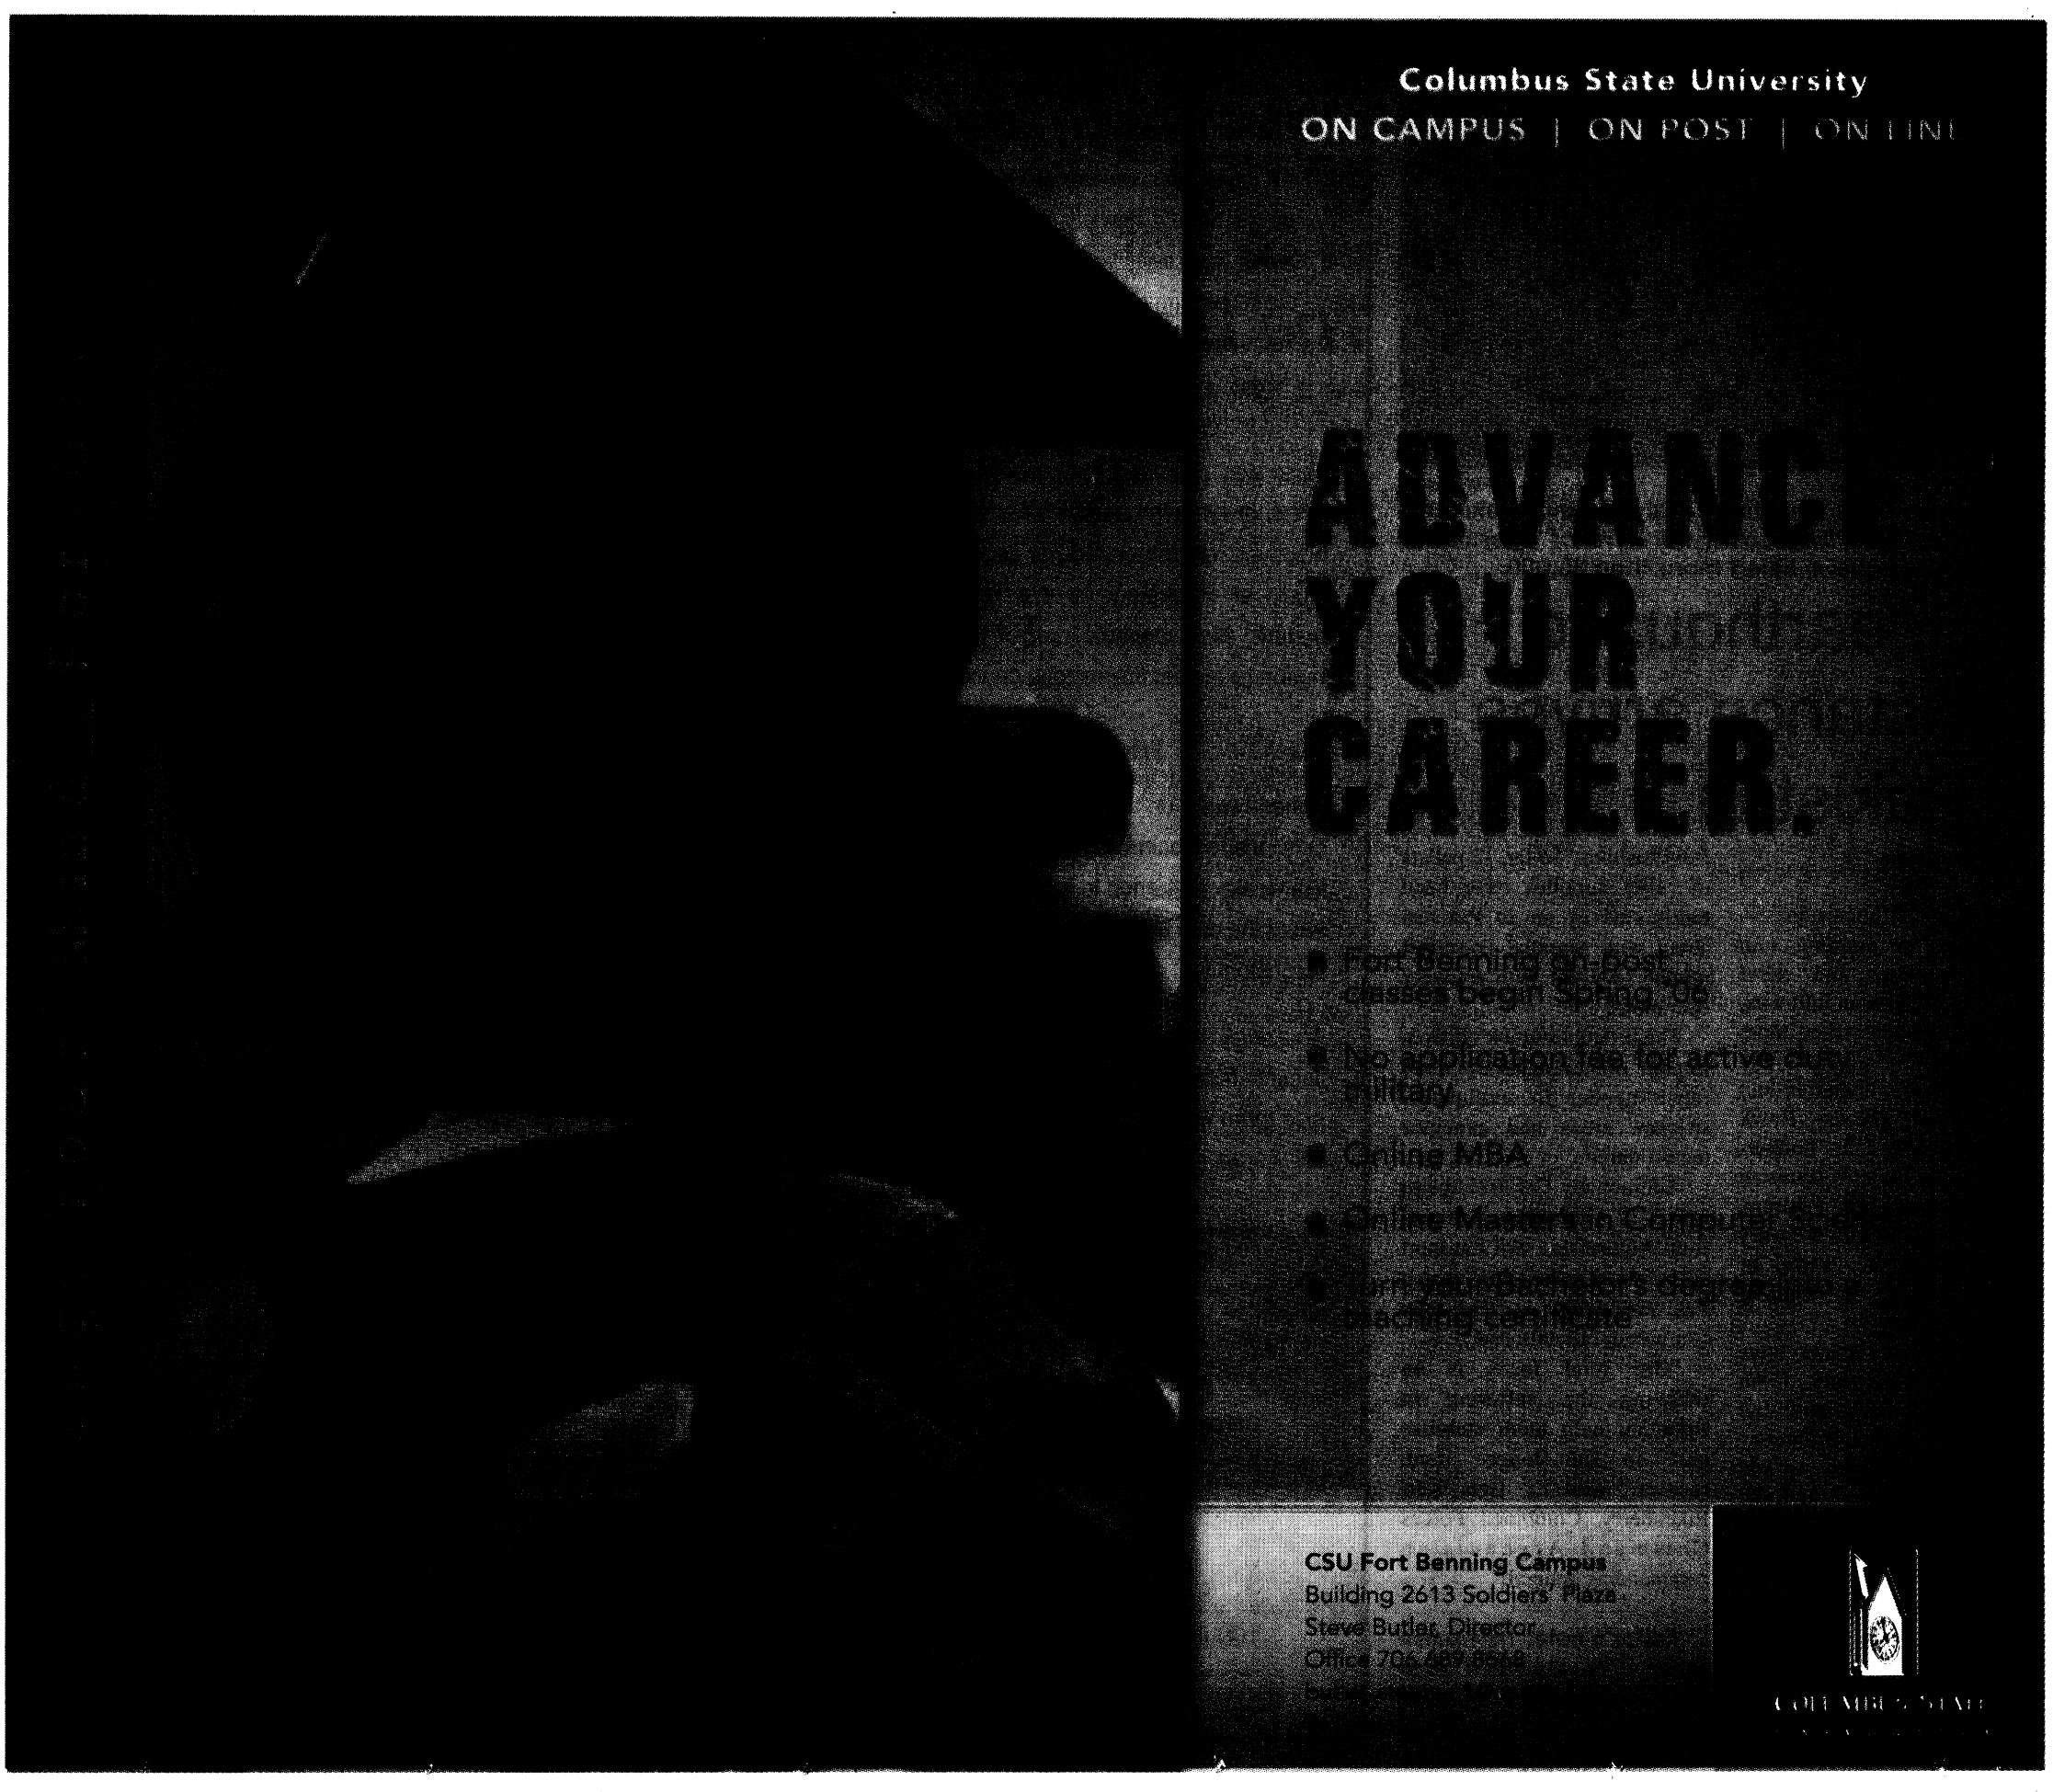
Quinn died five years ago. His son-in-law, Ben Bradley, of the Washington Post, donated $9,000 toward the monument.

Alaska and Kentucky also donated thousands of dollars, since the 17th's roots are planted in both states.

All told, the association raised nearly $80,000 for the monument, including hundreds from the sale of engraved bricks, which are embedded in cement around the base of the monument. The bricks sold for $117 apiece, that figure representing the 1st Battalion, 17th Inf. Regt. serving in Iraq.

Louise Kelly, the wife of Lt. Col. Al Kelly, the battalion's commander, attended the ceremony and read a letter from her husband in Mosul.

"The Buffalos are busy as hell over here," Kelly said, "giving freedom to a people who have been oppressed for years.



"We will succeed … and come home with a sense of accomplishment we'll not see again in our lifetime."

And he signed off with "Buffalo 6," the call sign used traditionally since Quinn led the 17th in every major campaign fought by U.S. forces in Korea.

Guard sergeant major visits post

Enlists Army aid in transitioning regular Soldiers to Guard

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

National Guard Soldiers are re-enlisting at a higher rate than before the war. And National Guard combat veterans are re-enlisting more often than those who have never been to combat.

The National Guard Bureau's senior NCO delivered the good news to a roomful of Fort Benning sergeants major Tuesday. Command Sgt. Maj. John Leonard spoke about the transformation of the Guard and enlisted the aid of his audience to help solve the bureau's number one problem.

"Right now, we're retaining Soldiers better than we normally do," Leonard said. "But we're not doing so well with Soldiers coming out of the regular Army. They're not transitioning into the Guard as they once did."

Leonard, a Vietnam veteran who started his career as a Marine more than 40 years ago, speculated on the reason for the problem. Every state and territory has National Guard troops mobilized right now to help fight the war on terrorism. Half of Hawaii's Guardsmen are deployed, as are more than 30 percent of Georgia's. With the Guard's current optempo, regular Army troops are bound to believe a move to the Guard means more time away from the family.

That's not the case, Leonard said. As the Army moves to establish a more stable rotation, (Best case scenario: Army units will deploy every three years), the Guard is looking at 48-60 months of stabilization between deployments.

Which is not to say Guard and Reserve Soldiers won't be called up for other missions, Leonard was quick to point out. Just last month, 50,000 were activated in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

With a three-fold mission — war, homeland defense and homeland security — the Guard is being "rebalanced," to leverage forces better, Leonard said. The Guard will be modular, like the Army, with more "plug and play" capabilities, able to seamlessly integrate with other forces.

The Guard currently has 60 percent of the Army's artillery. It will reduce that amount, as well as the number of engineers, armor and logistics troops in favor of more MPs, transportation specialists, Infantry and Special Forces.

All in all, Leonard said, through transformation, the Guard will look remarkably like the regular Army.

But there are several inherent differences between the regular Army and the constitutionally engineered Guard. The Guard is "two tiered" in that state units are commanded by governors, whereas the bureau's chain of command includes the secretary of defense and a three-star general. National Guard Soldiers swear an oath to the president and the governor of their state.

When a combat commander needs troops, he often requests assistance from the states, who supply Guardsmen based on ability and availability. After 9/11, so many Guardsmen were called up to protect the borders and secure airports that some states ran the risk of being shorthanded in the event of a natural disaster.

Now, Leonard said, the states are working hard to strike a balance, to retain at least 50 percent of their troops "in state" at all times. These troops can be called up at any time for crisis management and law enforcement. In fact, Guardsmen are the only military forces that can be used for law enforcement. With the Guard's multiple missions and capabilities, Leonard said he can not guarantee transitioning Soldiers won't be active Soldiers, because natural disasters are unpredictable.

"They're quality Soldiers, and we're one Army."

Command Sgt. Maj. John Leonard
National Guard Bureau

But some states are guaranteeing a one or two year "reset" for Soldiers returning from a war theater. In most cases, they're writing a combat hiatus into the contract of any regular Army Soldier transitioning into the Guard.

Leonard believes the Guard has a definite appeal to Soldiers who want to stay stateside long enough to further their education. Transitioning Soldiers retain their Montgomery G.I. Bill and in most cases, receive additional educational benefits from the state. That, along with signing bonuses, annual training and weekend pay, means many Guardsmen can work part time and go to school full time.

"The Guard has a lot to offer good Soldiers," Leonard said. "It's true, we lose about half of them back to the regular Army after they (finish their education) but that's a good thing.

"They're quality Soldiers, and we're one Army."

U.S. forces are assisting Afghani and Pakistani rescue workers in recovery and relief operations after an earthquake killed more than 35,000.

U.S. earthquake assistance arrives in Pakistan

Army News Service

KABUL, Afghanistan — U.S. forces are assisting with rescue, recovery and relief operations in Pakistan following an earthquake that killed more than 35,000.

Five CH-47 Chinook and three UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters with U.S. Soldiers and supplies from Afghanistan arrived in Islamabad, Pakistan, Monday to assist with recovery operations in the wake of Saturday's devastating earthquake.

The helicopter crews were from the 3rd Battalion, 158th Aviation Regiment, and 2nd Battalion, 6th Cavalry Regiment, at Bagram Airfield and Kandahar Airfield, Afghanistan.

Additionally, a C-17 and its crew from the 7th Airlift Squadron, McChord Air Force Base, Wash., delivered 12 pallets — weighing almost 90,000 pounds — of food, water, medicine and blankets from Bagram. So far, 18 pallets of relief supplies have been transported by air to Pakistan along with essential personnel needed to assist with recovery operations.

The helicopters took off from Bagram Airfield again Oct. 11 to ferry supplies to earthquake-stricken areas and evacuate those injured.

Additionally, C-130 Hercules and C-17 Globemaster aircraft from Afghanistan will transport 30 pallets of relief supplies to a Pakistan Army Airfield near Islamabad, officials said.

"Our total focus is on relieving the suffering in Pakistan, help them stabilize and, in the longer term, recover," said Lt. Gen. Karl Eikenberry, Combined Forces Command-Afghanistan commanding general.

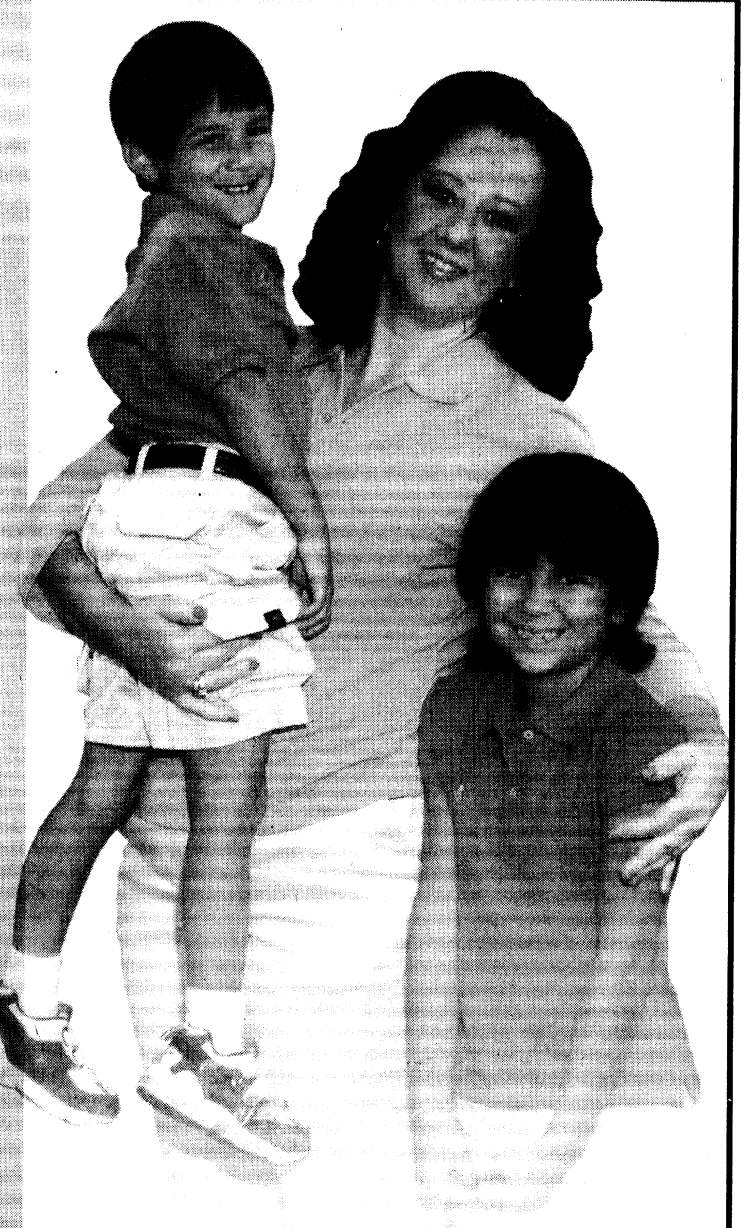
"Neck surgery at Hughston... the best thing I ever did in my life."

HUGHSTON Orthopedic Hospital

Jacki Cuevas, Health Information Specialist

It began with arm pain and weakness. By the time she met with Dr. Kenneth Burkus at the Hughston Spine Center, Jacki says, "I couldn't even push the door open. I couldn't pick up my step kids." A herniated disc and bone spurs had incapacitated Jacki, and she wanted relief.



Great Expectations...

Jacki was prepared for conventional neck surgery in which discs in the neck are fused together. Dr. Burkus, however, recommended her as a candidate for an FDA study at Hughston. In this revolutionary new procedure, Jacki became one of the first people in the region to benefit from a total cervical disc replacement.

Extraordinary Outcomes.

"When I woke up the next morning... immediate relief. I only needed pain medication for three days and, after five weeks, I returned to full activity. I cannot say enough about the care I received from Dr. Burkus and the staff at Hughston. I'm still completely amazed with the results."

Amazing? Yes, but we're accustomed to results like Jacki's. Patients come to us expecting relief, but we give them what they want most... their lives back.

Rumsfeld addresses 'growing confusion' over war on terror

Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

MACDILL AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. — Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld suggested how military men and women might answer questions stemming from "growing confusion and some misunderstanding" about the global war on terror Oct. 11.

Speaking to a group of airmen from the 6th Air Mobility Wing and other service members from U.S. Central Command and U.S. Southern Command, Rumsfeld said the troops might be getting questions from others about what America is trying to accomplish in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"Well, you can tell those who ask such questions that you and your friends across the world are standing on the front lines to protect them and to safeguard their freedoms, as well as your own," he said.

"And you can tell them something else: that America is not what's wrong with this world," he said. "What's wrong with this world are the terrorists, the 'beheaders,' the hostage-takers, the assassins — the people our forces are fighting every day in a number of locations — they're what's wrong with the world. And our country's finest men and women are out there meeting them every day."

Rumsfeld said it is not the mission of the U.S. military to "cower behind illusory defenses" because "defenses don't work." The only defense, he said, is to go on the offensive, to stop terrorists before they attack America.

"Your mission is to be on the offense; it's to go on the attack," he said. "And that's what our forces are doing: they're engaging the enemy where they live so that they do not attack us where we live."

America has one goal in the war on global terrorism: "It's victory — unconditional, unapologetic and unyielding," Rumsfeld said.

The secretary acknowledged war is "costly in its pain and the tragedies. Every loss of life and every injury weighs on our hearts and on the hearts of America," he said.

For America's fighting men and women to prevail against the enemy, the battle on foreign shores is the only way to secure this country's freedom in the future, Rumsfeld said.

"You fight today so our children and their children might not have to experience the heartbreak of something like Sept. 11," he said.

"And the men and women in uniform — you and your associates all across the globe — are displaying resolute courage, the kind of courage that's defined our country through the generations."

In a question-and-answer session, an Air Force captain suggested part of the military's perception problem stems from

> The only defense is to go on the offensive, to stop terrorists before they attack America.
> Donald H. Rumsfeld
> Defense secretary

the tone of civilian media reports.

The man's question elicited loud applause from the crowd. Rumsfeld agreed, but said it's the responsibility of service members to speak up about what they believe.

Rumsfeld said today's service members will look back on their achievements with enormous pride. Yet, he said, "one asks why is it that the public impression is so different from the reality."

The antidote to media bias toward bad news is to flood the world with good news through e-mails and other communications home, Rumsfeld said.

He said American service members deployed overseas are sending "e-mails that are in direct conflict with what's being presented in the aggregate, in the United States and in the rest of the world."

These e-mails, he said, present the American people with "a balance of what's happening, as opposed to an imbalance that they're receiving through normal channels."

However, the secretary said, a free media is part of living in a democracy.

Democracy isn't perfect, he said, but other forms of government "are so much worse."

"And if that's true," he said, "if democracy is the best by definition, it means that people, citizens with imperfect information, given sufficient information over time, find their way to right decisions on big issues. And they do."

Rumsfeld also spoke of the spate of natural disasters striking recently around the world. U.S. military forces provided assistance in the South after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita devastated the Gulf Coast, and American troops are currently providing disaster aid in hurricane-stricken Guatemala and in the aftermath of a deadly earthquake in Pakistan.

"In the past year, our country and other parts of the world have ... suffered a number of natural disasters that have affected millions of people in thousands of communities," Rumsfeld said.

"These disasters have caused a great deal of harm and a lot of death and dislocation, but they've also shown the truly heartfelt compassion and professionalism of the men and women in the United States military."

Soldier: 'Had heart of gold'

out to them.

"He had a heart of gold," he said. "He always brought smiles to their faces and to those of us who were with him."

Roggeman promised the battalion would carry on Schelbert's fight, so the memory of a Soldier who lived a life of selfless service would live on.

"We are going to terribly miss Staff Sergeant Schelbert," he said. "He died doing what he loved to do — being a Soldier. He touched all of us here. I personally owe him so much. Words cannot express the grief I, and we as a battalion, collectively feel here today.

"Be thou at peace, my friend," he said.

DesJardin, who deployed with Schelbert in 2003, said the losses of each of the brigade's Soldiers are difficult to deal with.

"I can tell you that the loss of great young leaders is not only a loss for our Army, but for the country as well," he said. "Their deaths will not be in vain, as our actions have freed an oppressed people and have planted the seeds for a new democracy."

up, brushed ourselves off from the last deployment, and said we'd do it," said Lt. Col. Scott Avery, 56th Medical Battalion commander at Fort Bragg, N.C., headquarters for Fort Benning's 690th.

"The bottom line is we are prepared to support our Soldiers. That's what we do. We have an absolutely honorable job to go out there and save lives," he said.

As departure time approached, Soldiers, friends and family milled around Lawson Army Air Field, offering each other encouragement and last-minute advice before the final good-bye.

"It's easier to stay in touch these days," said Malaika Knight, the wife of a deploying Soldier, and herself a supply logistics specialist with the California National Guard. "But it doesn't make the departure any easier to bear. At least we can write, e-mail, send CDs and DVDs once he gets there."

First stop for the 690th is Kuwait, and then somewhere in Iraq. Once settled, the Soldiers will contact their families.

"My mission is to come home and bring as many people home with me as possible. If I can do anything more than that when I'm over there, it'll be great," said Spc. Nathan Knight, medic for the 690th.

Troops board a plane for Kuwait Oct. 6.

Some Soldiers perused a table stacked with free paperback books.

"I always come out when the flights leave," said Ken Sines, an Association of the U.S. Army volunteer who collects book donations for Soldiers. "It's something I like to do to help show support for the troops."

Not far from the books, about 20 people formed a prayer circle. As the last 'Amen' was said, the Soldiers were called to formation.

"This is an interesting change," said Capt. Betsy Walters, with the 14th Combat Support Hospital, who is married to Capt. Kenneth Walters, 690th company commander.

"The last time (my husband and I) went to Iraq together, but this time I'm on the home-end," she said. Walters is the FRG leader for the 690th.

"Families, thank you for allowing us to have your loved ones deploy and fight for our country," Avery said. "Twelve months is a long time, and I thank you for your sacrifice."

Capt. Kenneth Walters then ordered the Soldiers to the tarmac, where they boarded the plane under cloudy skies.

Despite the rain, friends and family stayed to wave good-bye until the plane was completely out of sight.

"It's hard to watch everyone deploy," said Command Sgt. Maj. Alex Galarza, command sergeant major for the 56th Medical Battalion. "The families need to know their Soldiers are well-trained and well-prepared."

An Oct. 4 fire destroys the building that housed the Gator Lounge in Florida.

Fire destroys Gator Lounge

CAMP RUDDER, Fla. — A lot of memories went up in smoke during a three-alarm fire at the Army Ranger camp Oct. 4 near Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

The fire demolished the building which housed the Army Air Force Exchange Service shoppette, barber shop and Gator Lounge at Camp Rudder. The fire raged for more than two hours after the initial call to emergency services at 7 a.m.

An AAFES employee reportedly smelled smoke, as did a firefighter who was reporting to work, said Eglin Air Force Base Fire Chief Paul Hawkins. Initially, both thought it was residual smoke from a wildfire the previous evening. However, they both realized that wasn't the case as the old, wooden frame structure filled with smoke.

No one was hurt during the blaze, Hawkins said. Crews from Eglin, Fort Walton Beach, and Ocean City, Fla, responded.

Firefighters were hampered by low water pressure when it became necessary to turn off the power while fighting the fire, Hawkins said. That caused the electric pumps to be down until the situation was under control.

Sgt. Charles Bartell, a medic with the Ranger cadre, said the Gator Lounge recently underwent a major renovation.

The lounge was popular with staff and students, especially after completion of the final phase of the Ranger course. Bartell said many former Rangers donated personal momentos to the lounge.

"There's a lot of Ranger memories in there and they can't be replaced," the sergeant said. "If students don't remember anything else about training, they remember the Gator Lounge."

The shoppette was also a popular location for the more than 200 personnel who live and work at the Ranger Camp. It's the place to go for a quick drink or ice cream. However, Eglin AFB AAFES manager, Myra Moore, said help is on the way.

"AAFES has a tactical field exchange in route," she said. "It's already set up and has the merchandise in it."

The cause of the fire is currently under investigation, officials said.

Trainees make chamber rounds in week three

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Mounting physical and mental challenges confront Soldiers in the third week of basic combat training.

Bayonet instruction, pugil stick and basic rifle marksmanship training was introduced this week to the Soldiers of A Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, along with the steps necessary to detect and protect against a nuclear, biological or chemical attack.

After donning protective gear, the Soldiers received a brief course on how to react to an NBC attack.

"We have school-trained NBC cadre come out and train these Soldiers," said Staff Sgt. Donald Coleman, senior drill sergeant for 1st Platoon. "They really do a great job, and they really know their stuff."

Following the NBC exercise, Soldiers lined up in front of the "gas chamber," donned protective masks, and filed inside, where they removed their masks as CS gas was released into the air.

The exercise gives the Soldiers' confidence in their equipment, said Sgt. 1st Class Aaron Haynes, senior drill sergeant for 4th Platoon.

"If they don't pull their mask off and the equipment is working properly, they won't smell or feel anything. But as soon as they crack the seal, the real (experience) begins."

Although a handful of Soldiers seemed relatively unaffected, the majority experienced watery eyes, sinus irritation and nausea.

Despite the physical assault on their senses, Soldiers were required to follow orders and keep their gear on or risk being sent back through the chamber.

"I thought I was going to come out of the gas chamber on my hands and knees," said Pvt. Timothy Holmgren. "My eyes are really burning, but I didn't throw up. It wasn't as bad as I thought it would be."

Soldiers get their first breaths of fresh air following exposure to CS gas. Most found it difficult to open their eyes after emerging from the gas chamber.

Pvt. Joshua Polston dons protective NBC clothing with an attached hood.

Pvt. Joshua Hawkins' response is typical following exposure to CS gas.
Also known as tear gas, the chemical compound causes tearing, mild respiratory convulsions, an increase in blood pressure and irritation to the mucous membranes.

Ready to face the test, Soldiers wait their turn to enter the chamber. If they don't follow instructions, they may have to go through again.

'Iraqi-led process' promised for Saddam's trial

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — When former Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein goes to trial Oct. 19 to face charges of crimes against humanity, he'll be tried by Iraqi judges in "a completely Iraqi-led process," State Department officials told reporters here Tuesday.

Two State Department experts, one currently serving a detail with the National Security Council, and both with a year of legal experience in Iraq, described what the proceedings will look like.

Saddam and seven other defendants will stand trial for a July 8, 1982, massacre in Dujail, Iraq, following a failed assassination attempt against the former Iraqi ruler. Iraqi security forces, acting on Saddam's orders, allegedly massacred an estimated 150 villagers.

Other defendants are Barzan Ebraheem al-Hassan, Taha Yasin Ramadhan, Awad Hamed al-Bander, Abd Allah Kadhem Ruaid, Ali Daeem Ali, Mohammed Azawi Ali and Mizher Abdulah Rawed, the Iraqi Special Tribunal confirmed on its Web site.

While not the most egregious of atrocities the former dictator has been accused of, the Dujail incident represents the most straightforward case, and as a result, it is the first one ready to take to trial, the officials said.

Rather than waiting for investigations on nearly a dozen other cases to conclude, the Iraqis opted to move forward with the Dujail trial.

During the upcoming trial, Saddam and the other defendants will sit together in the courtroom, possibly behind bulletproof glass, to face a panel of three judges that will decide their cases, the State Department officials said.

It remains unclear if the trial will be televised, or if translation services would be offered for the proceedings, which will be conducted in Arabic.

The proceedings will be conducted under a civil law system, which is significantly different from trials in the United States. Rather than having a prosecutor and defense attorney present their cases to a jury that has no previous knowledge of the case, the lead judge will be armed with findings of the investigative tribunal that referred the case, the State Department officials said.

Each defendant will have at least one defense counsel. Saddam announced to the Iraqi Special Tribunal last August that he had fired all of his defense team except for his principal defense attorney, Khalil Dulaimi.

When questioned in August by Chief Investigative Judge Raid Juhi of the Iraqi Special Tribunal if he wanted international lawyers, counselors or advisers to assist Khalil in his defense, Saddam said that only Khalil could speak as his attorney, and if other lawyers or advisers were needed, Khalil would request them.

The judges will call and question witnesses to determine guilt or innocence, with no jury involved.

And unlike U.S. courts, where a defendant can invoke the right to remain silent, under civil law, this may be taken as a sign of guilt in Iraq.

If found guilty, a judgment that could land him a death penalty, Saddam will have the right to appeal, and no sentence will be carried out until all appeals are exhausted, the officials said. By law, whatever punishment is ordered must be carried out within 30 days after the judgment becomes final.

State Department officials expressed confidence in the Iraqi system, calling Iraq's judges "among the best in the world," highly trained and well-versed in Iraqi law.

In preparation for the upcoming trials, the judges and attorneys received extensive training in international criminal law from government, nongovernmental organizations, academic and legal experts from around the world, including the United States, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Italy and other nations. Mock-trial training was conducted in the United Kingdom.

Defense teams are expected to provide "a robust defense" for all defendants during the trial, the State Department officials said.

Meanwhile, Iraqi investigators are continuing to pursue other allegations against Saddam and his disciples. Among them are the 1988 Anfal Campaign against the Kurds, including chemical attacks on the village of Halabja, the brutal crushing of a Shiite revolt in southern Iraq in 1991, and repression of the Faylee Kurds, officials said.

U.S. forces captured Saddam, who was hiding in a "spider hole" near his hometown of Tikrit, in December 2003. The Iraqi government maintains legal custody of the former dictator, although Multinational Force Iraq officials have physical custody of him at the Iraqi government's request.

Ghana: Immigrants join Army

Joseph smiles as he talks about the toughest time of his life, becoming a father at 18, being carted off to jail as his girlfriend was forced out of town.

"Here, I've noticed it's no big deal if you have a baby before you're married. In Ghana, it is considered the most terrible thing that can happen to you," he said. "Those were tough times."

Joseph raised his son when his girlfriend was forced to marry another man.

Joseph's mother, a widow who "scratched out a living to see five children through high school," took care of her grandson while Joseph attended college to learn mechanical engineering.

He eventually landed a good job, but in Ghana, where "the system is choked … when you're really making it, you're barely making it," Joseph said.

So when his mother got the opportunity to move to the U.S. via a diversity visa program 10 years ago, her children urged her to go. One by one, they joined her, and all but one of her children are here now.

Joseph and his son arrived in April 2004. Joseph went to work in an electronics factory in Columbus, Ohio, and Kafui started his senior year of high school. Compared to the rigors of school back home, high school was not a challenge, he said.

"Open book tests? How do you get a zero on an open book test? In Ghana, we never heard of such a thing," he said. "There's a lot of good opportunities in America, and I don't think kids take advantage of them. If you see a good opportunity, you've got to grab it. That's why we came here."

Kafui played soccer in high school. It was on their way to a sporting goods store to buy shin guards that the Amissahs first entertained the idea of joining the U.S. Army.

"We passed a recruiter, and I started to joke, 'Why don't you join the Army?'" Joseph said. "Then, when I started to think about it, I was serious. Why didn't we join the Army?"

Well, "we" couldn't join the Army, because, at 36, the senior Amissah was too old.

"I got the shock of my life. I still feel like I'm 17. I knew I could do it," said Joseph, who recently finished a two-mile run in 14:14, just 1:04 seconds behind his son.

While Kufui was making plans to enlist, the Army upped its enlistment age, and Joseph got word he could join the Reserves.

He was several weeks behind his son in the paperwork process, which is why Kafui is five weeks ahead of his dad in basic training. He'll join an active-duty Infantry unit after his Nov. 10 graduation.

His father will be an operating room specialist with a Reserve unit in Ohio.

Both men say they're embarking on an Army career. And both say they'll earn their citizenship after basic training. Joseph is hoping to start the paperwork process to bring his wife here soon.

Kafui knows he'll probably deploy to Iraq soon after graduation. He's OK with that, he said, because he'll be fighting to protect something he believes in. He watched television in horror when terrorists attacked the U.S. in 2001. The chaos that ensued, including the temporary closing of the U.S. embassy in Ghana, delayed the immigration process.

But nothing could prevent it, he said. Living in the U.S. and joining the Army is the Amissah's destiny.

"God made it happen," Kafui said.

"There is this philosophy in Ghana — if your destiny pushes you, then it will be," Joseph said. "We had to follow what was in our hearts. God did the rest."

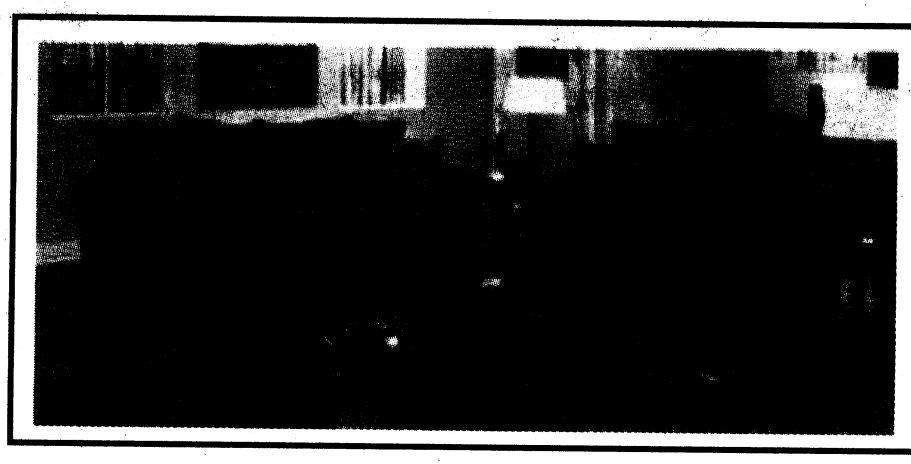
JD KINDER'S FURNITURE

SHOP SMART!



JD Kinder's Furniture is the most recognized destination in the Columbus trade area for a wide selection of quality home furnishings. We enjoy a great following amongst our military citizens and buying and financing here is very convenient. But many people are unaware that JD Kinder's can arrange financing for many people who are young and just starting out with little credit history or are in need of credit repair and think that they can't buy from normal retailers like us. These people many times go to rent to own stores and specialty military stores. They have their place, but many times the people that can least afford it end up paying more for furniture. Look at the illustration below and see just how much you can save at Kinder's.

"I found out I could make more money modeling than I could waitressing and scooping Haagen-Daaz. But I always wanted to be an actress."

— Denise Richards
Quote from imdb.com.

New UPN series star Denise Richards holds onto Secrets

Jay Bobbin
© Zap2it

Denise Richards has been getting a lot of attention, but she'd prefer it be for her new series.

The actress has been in the headlines for her marital separation from, and — at this writing — possible reconciliation with, Charlie Sheen.

She has said little about the situation, choosing instead to talk about something else: Sex, Love & Secrets, the steamy-and-proud-to-be Tuesday UPN drama labeled by some critics as a guilty pleasure along the lines of Melrose Place.

Richards is the most familiar face in the ensemble, playing Jolene, a scheming publicist who shakes things up within a group of attractive young adults. She wants to steal a punk rocker (James Stevenson) away from his girlfriend (Lauren German), a celebrity reporter who has crises of her own, thanks largely to a resurfaced ex-flame. Eric Balfour (Six Feet Under), Omar Benson Miller, Tamara Taylor (Serenity) and Lucas Bryant round out the regular cast.

"I love her," Richards said of her new role. "Especially doing a TV show, I think you really have to enjoy and embrace your character, because you'll hopefully be playing that person for a long time.

"That's new to me; I'm used to doing movies where you just see what's in one script, you do that, and you move on to something else.

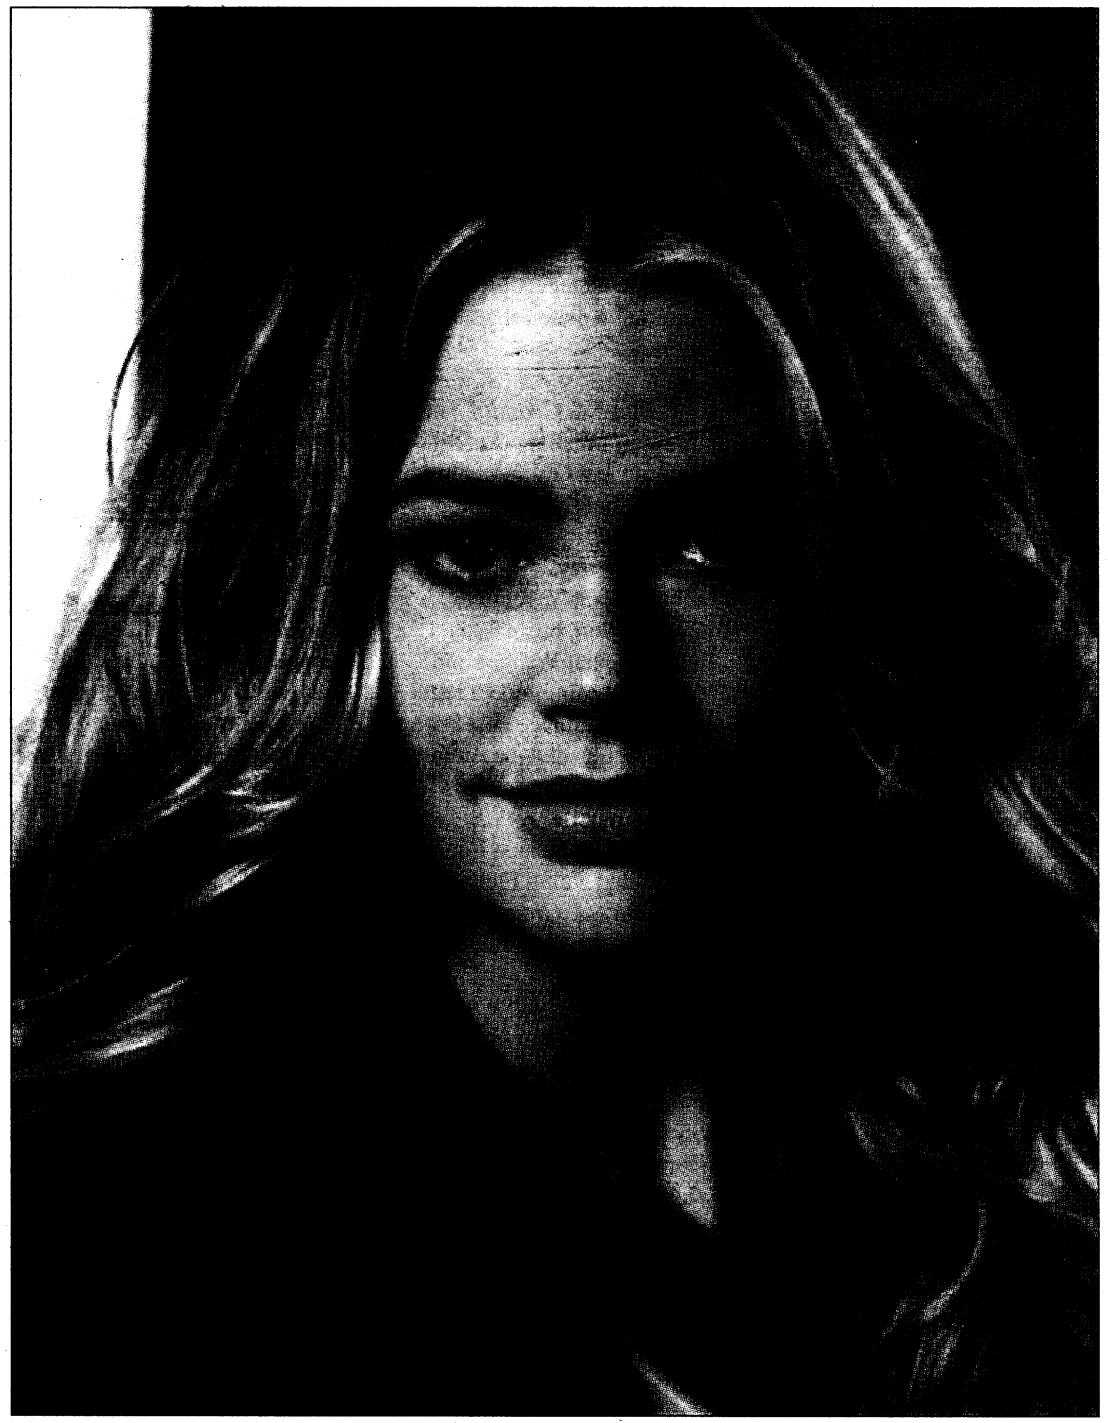
"It's interesting to keep playing the same person, not knowing what the writers have in store until we get the next script."

Richards' own publicist is taking her client's portrayal with good humor.

"She has said, 'I hope you're not basing her on me,' which I'm not," Richards said. "I wouldn't be with her this long if she was anything like Jolene. I just think it's fun playing the part that's a little juicier. I don't think I could get bored with this character."

Indeed, surprises have been delivered already, since the show initially painted Jolene as a ruthless shark.

"There have been a few episodes where you've seen a bit of a softer side to my character," Richards said, "then you see the other side, which is so much fun to play. It's nice to have different layers and not always be the vixen or the 'bad girl' or whatever. When you sign on to do a show, you never know where things are going to go, so it's a gamble for everyone."



Richards has tried to hedge her bets by seeking counsel from close friend Heather Locklear, who personified the television "bad girl" during her Melrose Place years as conniving Amanda.

"I've talked to her a lot about this," Richards said, "and she's been great. Her main advice was to make sure the show was an ensemble piece, so that I'd get some days off. None of us has worked a five-day week yet, so we're very lucky. We're not in every scene, and it's nice, especially for me with two little babies."

Daughter Sam is 1 1/2 years old, and Lola was born four months ago, so Richards filmed the Sex, Love & Secrets pilot during her final stage of pregnancy.

Not only did the producers accommodate her then by concealing her condition with various objects and close-ups, they also have on-set facilities for the children now.

"It's not fair to Sam to be stuck in a trailer. She needs to be active and doing things, so I actually prefer her being at home, playing," Richards said.

Denise Richards stars in Sex, Love & Secrets, airing Tuesdays on UPN.

The media spotlight was so trained on Richards' split from Sheen at the time her Sex, Love & Secrets involvement began, she was grateful the work gave her another focus.

"I'm enjoying working," she said.

"I really love it, but I also enjoy being home with the kids. There are days when I don't want to go to work and stay with them, but I've gotta work!"

Richards has guest-starred on Two and a Half Men and Spin City — both with Sheen — and also on the aforementioned Melrose Place, but she didn't consider doing her own series seriously until this year.

"I've gotten (offers) over the past few years, but when you sign on to do a series, it can be for a while. Some shows don't make it past half a season, but this just came along at the right time in my life. It's so nice to be close to home, instead of lugging my babies somewhere else.

"Also, I just love soap operas. I watched Melrose Place and Beverly Hills, 90210 and Dallas when I was younger, so I like that people are wanting those kinds of shows to come back."

The Fog — A thick fog enshrouds a coastal town. The fog is reminiscent of one 100 years earlier that wrecked a ship and caused the seamen aboard to drown. Sure enough, the sailors are back and out to kill whomever they find.

Starring Tom Welling and Maggie Grace.

The Fog is rated PG-13 for violence, disturbing images and sexuality.

Domino — Inspired by a real-life story, Keira Knightley stars as Domino Harvey, who rejected her privileged Beverly Hills lifestyle as the daughter of a famous actor (Lawrence Harvey) and a Ford agency model to become a bounty hunter in pursuit of society's nastiest criminals.

Also starring Lucy Liu, Christopher Walken, Mena Suvari and Mickey Rourke.

Domino is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language sexual content, nudity and drug use.

Elizabethtown — After causing the Oregon shoe company he works for to lose hundreds of millions of dollars, Drew Baylor (Orlando Bloom) is fired for his mistake, and promptly dumped by his girlfriend Ellen (Jessica Biel).

On the verge of suicide, Drew is given a new purpose in life when he is brought back to his family's small Kentucky hometown of Elizabethtown following the death of his father.

On the way home, Drew meets a flight attendant, Claire Colburn (Kirsten Dunst), with whom he falls in love, in a romance that helps his life get back on track.

Elizabethtown is rated PG-13 for language and sexual references.

In Her Shoes — Maggie (Cameron Diaz) is fun-loving and irresponsible. Her older sister Rose (Toni Collette) is a high-powered lawyer who watches Maggie's wild life with disdain. When an attempt to live together fails miserably, they go off in different directions to find the missing pieces in their lives.

In Her Shoes is rated PG-13 for thematic material, language and sexual content.

The Gospel — A young singer turns his back on God and his father's church when tragedy strikes. He returns years later to find the once powerful congregation in disarray.

Starring Boris Kodjoe, Idris Elba and Nona Gaye.

The Gospel is rated PG for thematic elements including suggestive material and mild language.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit — Wallace and Gromit are cashing in with their humane pest-control outfit, "Anti-Pesto." With only days to go before the annual Giant Vegetable Competition, business is booming, but Wallace and Gromit are finding out that running a humane pest control outfit has its drawbacks as their home fills to the brim with captive rabbits.

Voiced by Helena Bonham Carter and Ralph Fiennes.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit is rated G.

Waiting — A waiter for four years since high school, Dean has never questioned his job at Shenanigan's. But when he learns that Chett, a high school classmate, now has a lucrative career in electrical engineering, he's thrown into turmoil about his dead-end life.

Starring Ryan Reynolds and Justin Long.

Waiting is rated R for strong crude and sexual humor, pervasive language and drug use.

Two for the Money — Brandon Lane is a former college football star whose uncanny ability to predict the outcome of a game introduces him to an unexpected new career when his gridiron glory is sidelined by a crushing injury.

Brandon's talent makes him a prime candidate for recruitment by Walter Abraham, the head of one of the biggest sports consulting operations in the country.

Starring Al Pacino, Matthew McConaughey and Rene Russo.

Two for the Money is rated R for pervasive language, a scene of sexuality and a violent act.

The Greatest Game Ever Played — An amateur player from a working class family, Francis Ouimet (Shia LaBeouf) shocked the golf world when at the 1913 U.S. Open, flanked by his 10-year-old caddie (Joshua Flitter), he defeated his idol, the defending British champion Harry Vardon (Stephen Dillane).

The Greatest Game Ever Played is rated PG for some brief mild language.

Into the Blue — When four young divers discover a legendary shipwreck rumored to contain millions in gold at the bottom of the sea, they believe their dream of buried treasure has come true. But nearby on the ocean floor, a sunken plane full of illegal cargo threatens their find.

Starring Paul Walker, Jessica Alba and Scott Caan.

Into the Blue is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of action violence, drug material, sexual content and language.

The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio — Evelyn Ryan is a devoted housewife and mother of 10 in the 1950s. Her husband can't seem to make ends meet, but that doesn't stop the car from breaking down and the bills from piling up.

Applying her remarkable resourcefulness and an uncommon wit, Evelyn finds her own way in the profitable jingle contests in the '50s and '60s.

Starring Julianne Moore and Woody Harrelson.

The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio is rated PG-13 for thematic elements, some disturbing images and language.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride — Set in a 19th century European village, this movie follows the story of Victor, a young man who is whisked away to the underworld and wed to a mysterious corpse bride, while his real bride, Victoria, waits bereft in the land of the living.

Voiced by Johnny Depp and Helena Bonham Carter.

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride is rated PG for scary images and action, and brief mild language.

Teen donates hair to Locks of Love

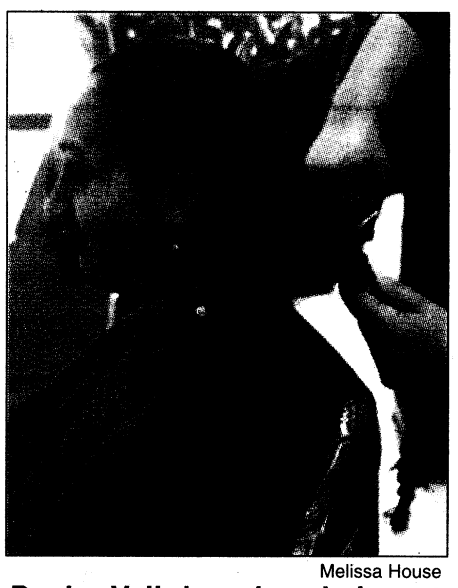
Vail

Although many teens her age are cutting their hair in the latest short fashions, being fashionable wasn't what Paula Vail had in mind.



Tuesday, she pulled her waist-length, wavy brunette hair into a pony tail and put the braid into the hands of Kunietra Lamb, a hair stylist at the Main Mall Post Exchange Beauty Salon.

With quite a few snips of the scissors, Lamb cut her way through a bundle of hair at least an inch in diameter.

"The last time I had it cut like this was a long time ago," Paula said. "It's going to be weird."

She handed the braid to her mother, Martha, who said it would be bagged and sent to Locks of Love.

Locks of Love is a nonprofit organization that provides prosthetic hairpieces for children 18 years old and younger who are suffering from long-term hair loss caused by medical conditions or treatments. Donated hair must be clean and dry, be a minimum of 10 inches in length from end to end and must be sent in either a pony tail or a braid.

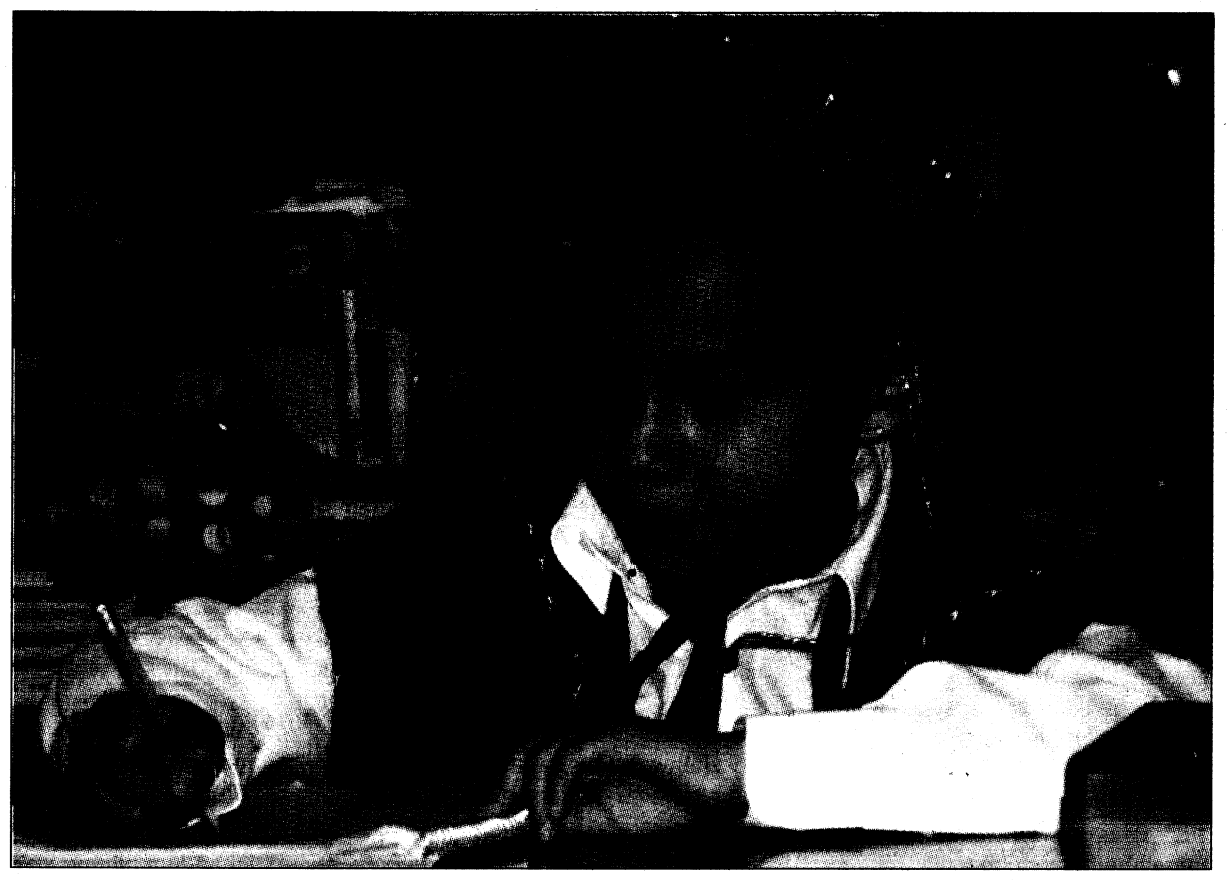
Paula Vail has her hair cut Tuesday at the Main Mall Post Exchange Beauty Salon.

According to the Web site, Locks of Love receives more than 2,000 hair donations each week, and 80 percent of the donors are children.

Paula's father, Warrant Officer Daryl Vail, commander of the 283rd Army Band, said he told her to cut her hair one day, but since then she had been defending it jealously.

"I told her it would grow back," Daryl said.



Paula said she knew about Locks of Love because a friend had donated her hair when they were living in Virginia.

But it wasn't until a friend of the family, stationed at Fort Benning, underwent treatment for breast cancer, that her friend's donation came to mind.

"It stuck with me," Paula said, "and our friend's breast cancer really made me think — I'll look in the mirror and sometimes my hair doesn't look right,

Alton and Creamonia Ford celebrated their 49th anniversary in May before she died in July. House of Heroes honored the Fords in September.

I met Alton and Creamonia Ford soon after we moved to Fort Benning six years ago. We attended the same church in Columbus.

Mr. and Mrs. Ford sat three or four pews in front of us every Sunday, a good four or five feet between them. She sat on the far right end, with her walker — and eventually her wheelchair — parked in the aisle. She stretched her feeble legs across the seat toward Mr. Ford, and he tucked an afghan around them.

She crocheted the afghan. Back when she was able, Mrs. Ford crocheted afghans and blankets and ponchos and "near about anything she set her mind to," according to Mr. Ford. He bragged on her colorful blankets. They won her a couple of ribbons at the county fair.

The Fords have no children of their own, so we adopted them. The boys helped him with his lawn, Mckenzie made cards and Christmas ornaments, and Brittney kept company with Mrs. Ford, who had a speech impediment.

She could hear just fine, thank you very much, but she was hard to understand if there was the slightest peripheral noise. On the rare occasions when I'd catch her alone in her hospital room, she and I enjoyed easy conversations.

The Siters went to say good-bye one Sunday afternoon before we left for vacation in July. She was sitting in a chair next to her hospital bed, on the mend after heart surgery. Mr. Ford was next to her. They had just celebrated their 49th wedding anniversary.

While we were in Germany,

Know risk factors associated with SIDS

Georgia Department of Human Resources

In observance of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Awareness Month in October, the Georgia Department of Human Resources is urging all Georgians — parents, health professionals, grandparents and child care providers — to know the risk factors associated with SIDS and to take steps to reduce the risk.

SIDS is the sudden and unexplained death of a baby under 1 year of age. A determination of SIDS is only made after an autopsy, a thorough death scene investigation, and a review of the infant's medical history. In 2003, SIDS claimed the lives of 1,944 infants in the U.S., including 104 infants in Georgia.

By far the most successful intervention for reducing SIDS is the "Back to Sleep" campaign. Since the "Back to Sleep" was begun in 1994, the SIDS rates have decreased 52 percent nationally and 37 percent in Georgia.

"Placing a baby on his or her back to sleep has contributed tremendously to the decrease we have seen in the past 10 years in the sudden and unexplained death of Georgia babies," said Dr. Stuart Brown, director of the Division of Public Health. "However, the risk of SIDS or sleep-related deaths can be reduced further by not having comforters, stuffed animals or any other unnecessary items in the crib with an infant."

In spite of decreases in SIDS overall, SIDS continues to be a concern among African Americans, who experience SIDS at twice the rate of whites. In 2003 in Georgia, 104 infants died of SIDS, 50 white and 54 black babies.

To address this disparity, DHR has contracted with the First Candle, SIDS Alliance local affiliate, the Georgia SIDS Project, to develop and implement community-based outreach strategies to increase safe sleep and risk reduction awareness, and to promote safe sleep practices in African American communities with a high incidence of SIDS and other infant deaths.

"Unfortunately, information about ways to reduce the risk of SIDS is not getting out to all Georgians, which is why we, as a community, really need to make sure that we are reaching everyone," said Diane Manheim, executive director of the Georgia SIDS project.

In addition to these outreach efforts, the Division of Public Health and the Georgia SIDS Project distribute SIDS awareness materials; provide sleep safety training to parents, grandparents, child-care providers, birthing hospitals and health professionals; and participate in health fairs to distribute literature and educate the public on SIDS risk reduction.

The Georgia SIDS Project provides bereavement support to families who have experienced pregnancy loss and infant deaths through a 24-hour bilingual crisis telephone line (800) 221-7437 and through local peer contacts.

In addition, Georgia is initiating a Georgia "Cribs for Kids" project to provide cribs to need families.

All infants are at risk. We need to continue to educate all care takers on how we can help to reduce SIDS," said Kim Washington, DHR Child Health Prevention Specialist.

"We join our state and national partners, the Georgia SIDS Project and First Candle, SIDS Alliance, in reminding parents, grandparents and other caregivers about the risk reduction measures.

More information about sleep safety and reducing the risk of SIDS can be accessed at http://sidsga.org, http://firstcandle.org or http://health.state.ga.us./program/sids.

and the last eight months with the show again. She'll head back to Iraq after the final curtain call six weeks from now.

"I like to sing and dance and I like the Army," Makay said. "I'm lucky, I get to do both."

The Soldier Show cast of 19 perform 107 back-to-back shows in 57 locations around the world, traveling more than 50,000 miles in nine months. They're also responsible for setting up and tearing down the stage and sound system. Days typically begin at 7 a.m. and end after midnight.

Makay took a lot of ribbing from her co-workers the year she spent in Abu Ghraib after touring with the show the first time. Truth is, she said, her tour in Iraq was easier than touring with the show.

"Doing (the show) is very, very rewarding, but it's hard work," she said. For more than half the audience Saturday — Sand Hill Soldiers — the show was a welcome respite from the rigors of basic training. The Soldiers of G Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, were given the choice of attending the show or hanging out back at the bay.

"I'd rather get out of there and get my mind off things," said Pvt. Mitch Hensley, who lounged on the lawn, one arm stretched around a pizza box.

The theme of the show, "Operation America Cares," highlighted the value of care packages. It "reflects hometown America actively supporting our Soldiers and the mission," said Brig. Gen. John McDonald, the commanding general of the Army Community and Family Support Center.

McDonald attended the event with the program's top NCO, Sgt. Maj. Willie Wilson. The show is one of six major entertainment programs sponsored by MWR, including the Army Concert Tour, Army Theater and the All-Army Battle of the Bands. They all serve one purpose, said Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's commanding general — to show appreciation to U.S. service men and women.

HoH: Helped my favorite hero

I spotted a town named Creamonia on the map. Having asked her a time or two about the origin of her name — she always responded with a shrug — I was anxious to tell her about it. But I never got the chance.

We got back home the day before her funeral.

Mr. Ford was standing next to her casket when I got to the funeral home. He was surrounded by his friends, all alone. Her casket was draped with the prettiest afghan I'd ever seen. A ribbon hung from it.

In the weeks that followed, Mr. Ford's friends kept a steady stream to the door of his humble house on Mason Drive, just outside Fort Benning. He went to the senior center to play pinochle and dropped by the Burger King on Victory Drive to have breakfast, just as he and his wife used to do.

But he was lonely. He told me so. And his cozy, little home became a big, empty house, with a myriad of problems that screamed for his attention — problems that were easy to ignore when Creamonia was alive and needed his help.

Not the least of his problems was a burgeoning collection of useless "junk" — his word, not mine.

"Bless her heart, she was a keeper," he said with a chuckle, enjoying the double entendre. Mrs. Ford saved plastic bags and margarine tubs and anything and everything she might find some use for some day. The kitchen cupboards and the attic and the basement were slam full of "stuff" she wouldn't let him throw away.

Of course, to be honest, some of that stuff was his. Mr. Ford was born during the depression, one of nine children raised dirt poor, who knew what it meant to go hungry. He showed me his hordes of canned goods and two freezers packed deep and thick.

"I'm afraid to die hungry," he said. It would take a two-year famine to make a dent in his groceries, I pointed out, but a two-day power outage would set him back mighty fast.

Aside from the accumulation of food and "stuff," the home the Fords bought 40 years ago, still filled with the furniture they bought secondhand in 1959 when he was a buck sergeant, is showing its age.

At 80, Mr. Ford is spry and healthy and wants to hold onto his home as long as he's able. It's all he's got left. So when a fellow from the House of Heroes called him to schedule a visit in September, he accepted, albeit reluctantly.

I'd told him a little about the program, about the teams of volunteers who spend each September sprucing up the homes of aging veterans in Columbus. It would cost him nothing.

"Nothing?"

Not a penny.

"How about supplies?"

They'll take care of it.

"Do I feed them?"

You don't raise a finger.

"Why?" he asked, this time with tears.

Because you're a hero.

Of course, that's not the way Mr. Ford sees it. He simply wanted to join the Army, like his four older brothers did during World War II. Three times he was rejected.

So when the draft notice came in 1950, he hopped a bus for Montgomery, Ala., certain he'd be headed home soon.

"What makes you think you're not going to be in the Army?" the man at the MEPS station asked.

"Sarge, I'm 5 feet tall and 94 pound with flat feet," Mr. Ford replied. "And the doctor says you can't fix my right eye."

True. But the sergeant could "fix" the paperwork. "Shorty" Ford grew an inch, gained 11 pounds and experienced a miraculous healing in his right eye. He was given a pair of boots and shipped to Korea 12 days shy of his 25th birthday, at which point he would've been too old to enlist.

If not a miracle, it was certainly a dream come true for Mr. Ford, who served honorably more than 22 years.

That's what qualified him for House of Heroes.

A team from CB&T descended upon Mason Drive Sept. 15. The place was crawling with people, Mr. Ford said. There was "a whole bunch of women and five or six men."

Most of them had known Mr. and Mrs. Ford for years. The Fords opened their account at CB&T in 1967. While the women scrubbed and painted and hung new curtains inside, the men carted off "the awfullest load of junk you ever seen." They cleaned up the basement, laid new flooring in the kitchen, repaired a sagging ceiling and installed hand rails here and there.

"Lordy, they spiffed the place up," Mr. Ford said. "I'm a lucky man. I wish Creamonia could be here to see it."

New early-stage breast cancer treatments improve survival odds

MEDDAC Preventive Medicine and Community Health Nursing

The diagnosis of cancer is just about the scariest medical verdict a woman can hear. It shouldn't be.

Greater progress has been made against breast cancer than against any other cancer in the past few years.

It's true that some 211,240 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer in the U.S. this year, and 40,000 will die of the disease.

But a huge international analysis released in mid-May found that for women in early stages of the disease, treatments now commonly used after surgery can lower the death rate from breast cancer within 15 years of diagnosis to one in 10 from one in five.

Those odds are sure to get even better as treatments that have emerged in the past few years start having an impact on the data.

A considerable number of drugs are now available for use after surgery to prevent breast cancer from recurring.

Since recurrences are usually far more deadly than the initial tumor, these so-called adjuvant therapies should cut the number of deaths by a third, said Dr. Gabriel Hortobagyi, director of breast medical oncology at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston.

According to Hortobagyi, there is a catch — the patient and her doctor must be well aware of what type of tumor she has, what risk factors are in her background and the latest drugs available before deciding how to proceed. Patient education is a must.

The American Cancer Society estimates that one in seven women in the U.S. will develop breast cancer in her lifetime.

If breast cancer does develop, the tumor tissue is analyzed and classified as one of three types.

About 60 to 70 percent of breast cancers are hormone-positive, meaning their growth is driven by excess amounts of estrogen or progesterone.

Some 20 to 30 percent of women have particularly aggressive tumors caused by a mutation in the Her-2 gene, and about 10 percent have what are called triple-negative tumors, because they are not sensitive to hormones or Her-2.

Medical researchers predict that in two to three years, diagnostic tests will classify tumors even more precisely, making it easier to match a particular treatment to a patient.

Right now, the best defense against breast cancer is to detect it early, treat it aggressively and figure out how to lower the risk of recurrence.

As more and better treatments come along, the chances of surviving the disease are sure to keep rising.

Upcoming events around post for Breast Cancer Awareness Month include:

•The Fort Benning Health Promotion Center will host a Breast Cancer Festival at the Post Exchange Main Mall from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 14.

• A Breast Cancer Awareness Fun Run will start at 6 a.m. Oct. 21 at Briant Wells Gym.

• A free luncheon featuring guest speaker Dr. Jack Tidwell, Tidwell Cancer Treatment Center, will be at 11:30 a.m. Oct. 27 at the Officers' Club.

• A static display will be at Martin Army Community Hospital pharmacy lobby from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Oct. 13.

Fort Benning fireman Carlos Girona demonstrates how his mask works Wednesday at Loyd Elementary School. Girona donned all his gear so the children would know what to expect should a fireman ever have to rescue them.

All the students were given plastic firemen's hats.

The popularity of decorator candles sparked an increase in the number of home fires over the past decade. That's why the theme of this year's Fire Prevention Week is "Care with Candles."

Fort Benning firefighters visited post schools this week to remind students to remind parents to use caution when using candles.

"Children this age actually do a better job of educating their parents than we can," said Tom Acacia, a fire inspector on Fort Benning. "They're good about reminding parents to change the battery on their smoke and fire detectors."

Besides calling attention to the hazards of candles, firefighters donned protective gear and masks to familiarize the students with the sight, which can be pretty scary to a young child, Acacia said.

Fire Prevention Week, the longest running public health and safety observance on record, was established in 1911 on the anniversary of the Great Chicago Fire, which killed more than 250 people and left 100,000 homeless.

Paula Vail, an eighth-grader at Fort Benning's Faith Middle School, cut 13 inches of hair Tuesday to send to Locks of Love, a non-profit organization which uses the donations to make wigs for children who have lost their hair because of medical conditions or cancer treatments. The 13-year-old, inspired by a friend's battle with cancer, said she hopes others will follow suit.

but some people don't have any."

She said many of her friends already have shorter hair, so there aren't many at the moment who she can try to convince to get their hair cut.

"Everybody at school is always saying 'Wear your hair down. It's so pretty,'" she said. "Now, it's different."

Daryl said he thought she hadn't done much more than trim her hair during the past 10 years.

"I think she was three the last time it was really cut," he said.

"It must be traumatic to lose that much hair — not that I can relate though," he joked. "I have mine cut off every week."

Martha said they planned to donate the hair in their friend's name.

"Paula has such a good heart to help other people," she said.

And Paula said she's going to work on growing it back, and possibly making another donation.

"I just want to get the word out," Paula said, "so maybe other people will contribute, too. That's what I'm hoping."

Of all things that change, God is constant, he alone endures

Chaplain (Maj.) David Acuff
U.S. Army Infantry School

And so we beat on,
Boats against the current
Born back ceaselessly into
The past.

— F. Scott Fitzgerald

For the first 17 years of my life, I lived in the same place: 322 Gun Club Road, Nashville, Tenn. Next door, on both sides, the same families were, like mine, fixed in place. They were there when I was born, and there they stayed.

All my years of schooling took place on one plot of ground. Moving from elementary to middle school, and then on to high school, meant geographically moving no more than 50 yards. The same terrains of the heart, the same people.

"Same" is the operative word. I lived in the same house. I went to school in the same place with the same friends. Nothing changed.

But after I left Nashville for the first time, I gradually began to realize that all of that sameness was an illusion. It did not exist. It was a trick.

It is certainly true that Soldiers, and those who love them, understand this better than anyone. Moving trucks are unloaded, we say hello, the moving trucks return, and we say good-bye.

This creates in me, and probably in all of us, a "sameness" deficit. There is something in us that wants things to stay the same, to give us reference points, things we can count on.

REFLECTIONS

Acuff

I take reassurance in the things that stay the same. People need a fixed reference point to know where they are and who they are.

Several years ago, after years of absence, I returned to Nashville. And there was a deep longing inside me, a longing created from moving too much too fast.

So one night I made a trip to those terrains of the heart where I spent so much of my life.

I left my car in a dark parking lot and began to cover the ground I knew and will always know so well.

Like a burglar, I moved along the side of the "T"-shaped building I first entered when I was 6. I started at the top of the "T" and moved through the years toward the bottom.

I looked in the window of my first-grade classroom, then on down a couple windows to the second grade, and around to the other side to the third grade.

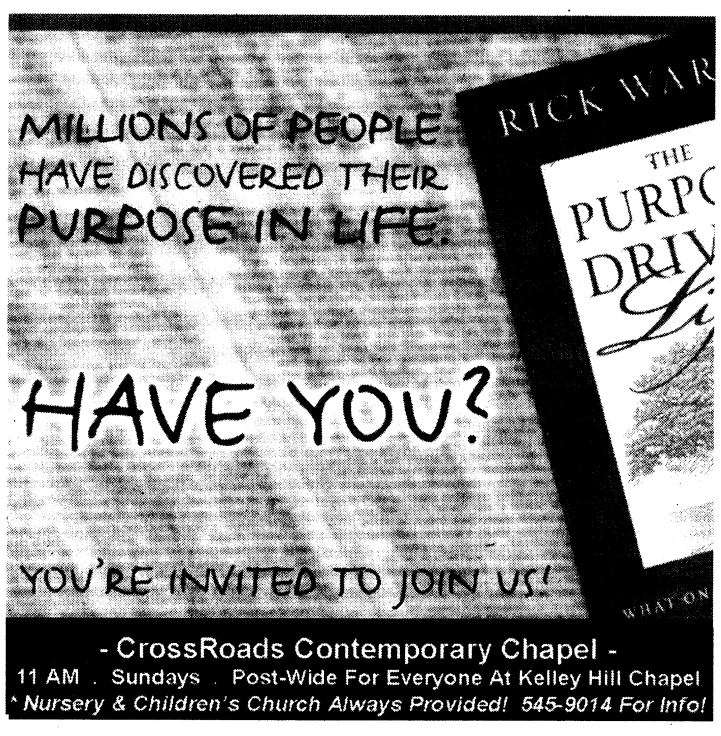
I sure got real familiar with that room. Did that one twice. Moving from one side of the building to the other, I reclaimed the first 12 years of my life.

But while visiting my old school, I was confronted with a change I didn't like. Where did all the old playground equipment go? There was a lot of new classroom construction around the old nucleus, bulldozing my memories. Who gave permission to change this place?

The problem was not only that some things were missing. There were problems with the things that remained. In the 1960s, the school was new. Now it was faded, peeling and sagging. It was heavy with time.

I got into the car and drove home on the route I walked for so many years to and from school. I know the residents of every house. The kids, the parents — they are all still here.

Not really.



Of course they're not here. Many of them are no longer at any address. They are no longer with us, because they are no longer in this life at all.

I began to realize a truth we all come to face eventually, no matter how we avoid it: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."
