I often look for things that were. And in doing so, I come to realize that only one thing remains from those times. Only one thing remains at all.

Only God does not change. It is he alone that is the reference point that creates all other reference points.

It is he alone that endures. And it is in him alone that we find that place where time no longer does its damage to us and those we love.

"And I pray that I may forget those matters that with myself I too much discuss."

SPORTS

Tiger Woods has helped revitalize world interest in golf. On April 8th, 2001, he made history by holding all four major titles simultaneously: the U.S. Open, British Open, U.S. PGA and the Masters. In 1930, the legendary Bobby Jones won what is generally regarded as a golfing Grand Slam, four majors in the same calendar year: the U.S. and British Open and Amateur titles.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• Martin wins in Kansas

Mark Martin held off Greg Biffle to win the Banquet 400 at Kansas Speedway Oct. 9.

Martin is now seventh in points. Tony Stewart is still points leader, followed by Ryan Newman, Greg Biffle, Rusty Wallace and Jimmie Johnson.

• Daly chokes, Tiger pounces

Tiger Woods beat John Daly on the second playoff hole Oct. 9 at the WGC-American Express Championship in San Francisco.

This was Tiger's fourth career AmEx victory.

• Only four remain ...

The Chicago White Sox swept the Red Sox, the Angels took care of the Yankees, the Astros beat the Braves and the Cardinals triumphed over the Padres in the Division Series.

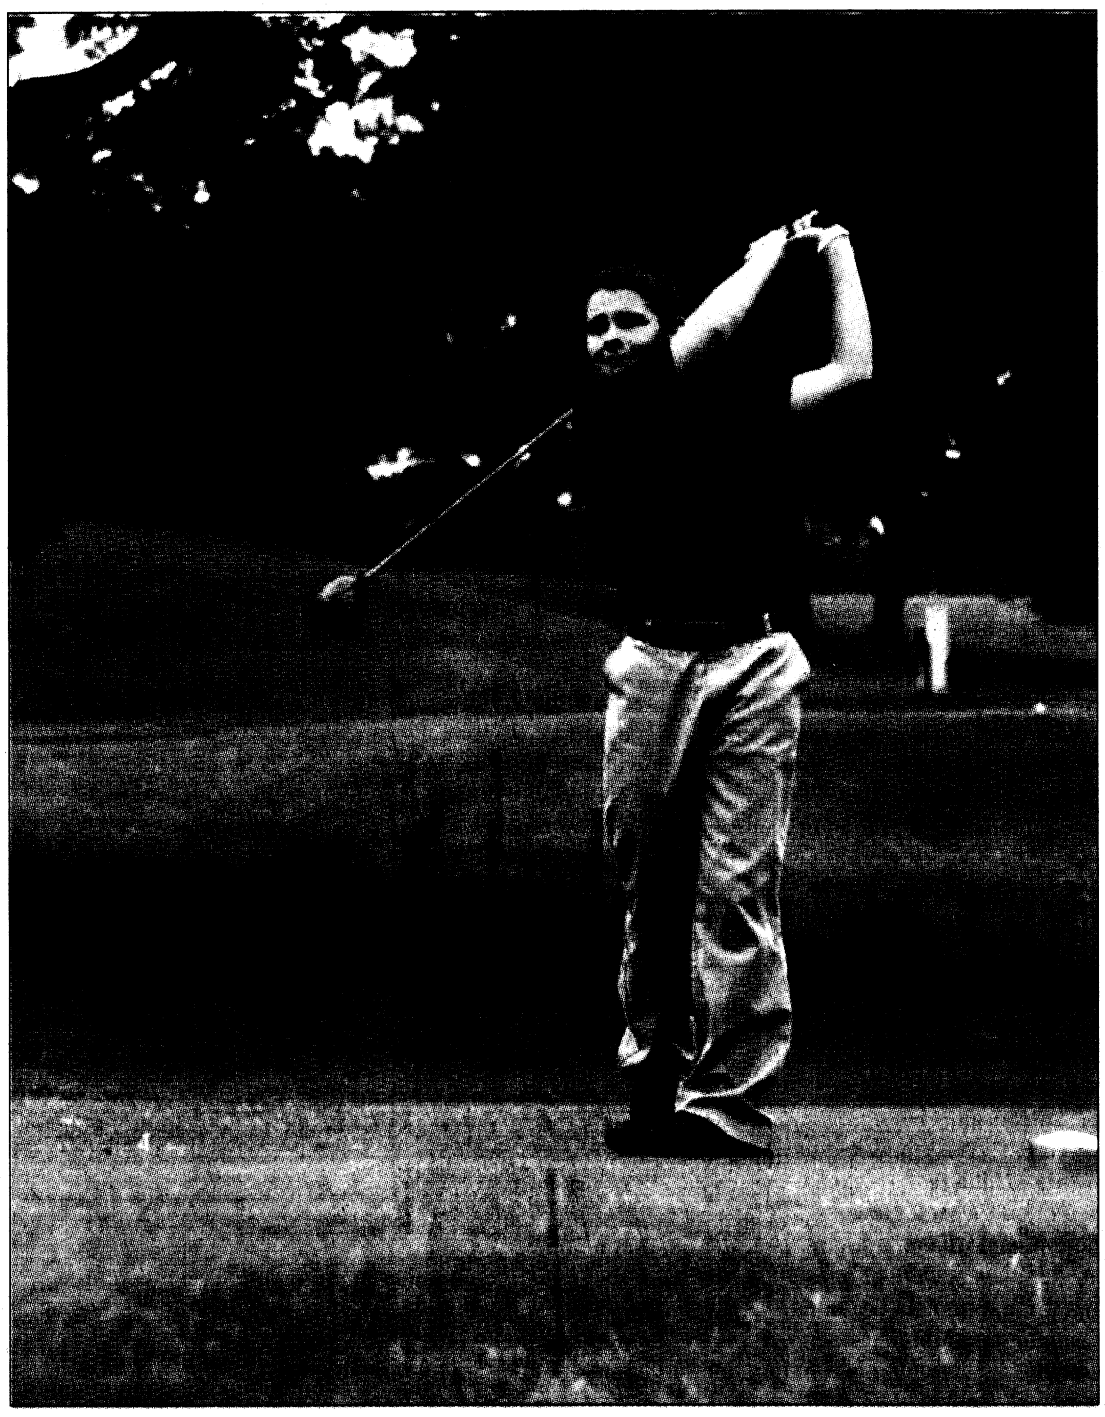
Next up: the Championship Series. Look below for games.

• Watch some good baseball

Tonight's ALCS game is at 8 p.m., Saturday the NLCS is at 4 p.m. and ALCS at 7:30. Sunday brings the NLCS at 4 p.m. and the ALCS at 7:30 p.m.

All games can be seen on Fox. Check local listings for more.

• Green Bay who?



Brett Favre and the Packers showed up to play Oct. 9 in a 52-3 win over the New Orleans Saints, bringing their record to 1-4.

Favre passed for 215 yards, went 19-27 and threw three touchdowns. 'Bout time, boys.

• I love the night races

This week's NASCAR race is the UAW-GM Quality 500 from Lowe's Motor Speedway in North Carolina.

Coverage begins at 7 p.m. Saturday on NBC.

Faith boasts golf team

More than 20 students out for practice

Melissa House

Although much of his team is relatively inexperienced, Faith Middle School golf coach, Elliott Caggins, said his golfers represent the future of golf.

"We have about 25 students who come out regularly for practice," Caggins said, "Some who've never picked up a club before."

Of his 25, four players make up his varsity team, four are the junior varsity and the remainder make up the B-level team. Only two of his players are girls, and they're both sixth-graders.

"These kids provide the future of golf," he said. "The game is no longer your father's game. We have a lot of talent out here and hopefully, they'll keep playing."

His young talent hasn't been tapped into in recent years, and unless someone stepped forward and offered to coach a golf team, it would have remained untapped.

"It's funny how the team got started," he said. "There's a big middle school golf program in Columbus and in Alabama. Everyone around here has one, and, ironically, they play all their tournaments here at Fort Benning. But Faith didn't have a team."

So Caggins wanted to form one. He knew he could match up the post's middle school students with a convenient golf course. And, he said, the response was more than he anticipated.

"The idea caught people by surprise," he said. "The amount of participation is great and we have a lot of parent support."

The students practice Tuesdays and Thursdays for at least an hour at the Follow Me Golf Club. Their tournaments, held either Mondays, Wednesdays or Thursdays, take the students through nine holes on the Lakeside Course.

Caggins has his team work on putting, driving and has the varsity and junior varsity golfers play a few holes at practices, then chooses his teams based on how well a golfer plays. He said his rosters can change from week to week because a player's good round at the B-level

Youth hockey registration open

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Marc Gaudet has tried his hand at football, baseball, soccer and hockey.

Nothing compares to hockey, the 15-year-old Northside High School sophomore said. And he should know.

He started playing ice hockey 11 years ago in New Brunswick, Canada.

"Ice hockey is the sport up there," Gaudet said. "It's tougher than the others, and it's fast-paced. You're always moving."

Gaudet's mother married a Soldier three years ago, and he moved south, doubtful he'd find a hockey program to compare to those back home.

That was just about the time the Columbus Hockey Association launched the Junior Snakes, a youth hockey league for 4- to 18-year-olds. Gaudet's ice hockey habit barely missed a beat.

He's hoping a lot of skaters will sign up for hockey this year, because the more participants, the more teams.

"And the more teams we have, the better the competition," Gaudet said.

Final registration runs from noon till 4 p.m. Saturday at the Columbus Civic Center for the CHA House League and Learn to Skate classes.

The House League is open to players between 9 and 18. The program includes at least 30 ice sessions and 12 games.

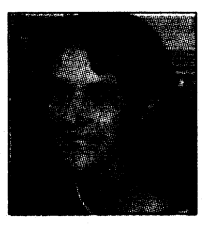
The registration fee of $235 covers a jersey, socks and U.S. Hockey membership.

For $140, beginning skaters can receive 15 skating and hockey lessons in the Learn to Skate program.

A second session later in the season will offer 15 additional lessons at $60 for returning participants.

The Columbus Hockey Association also has midget travel and adult teams and an advanced practice program.

Advanced practice targets skilled players who would benefit from more challenging practice.



Participants must be enrolled in the House League. The fee of $150 covers 25 additional skating sessions.

House League players between 15 and 18 may try out for the traveling midget teams for a fee of $650. The fee does not cover travel and lodging expenses.

The adult league is open to players older than 18. Fees will be determined by interest and participation.

For more information about the Columbus Hockey League or preregister for a team or learn-to-skate clinics, log onto www.columbushockey.org or call (706) 575-7350.

Erin Says...

Hey, look above and see that Ken has moved up in the rankings and is tied with Jimmy. Ken, maybe your daughter will finally stop making fun of you. Maybe your streak will continue, but as long as Melissa keeps up with the good picks, she'll be unstoppable. It's going to take an upset, like Notre Dame over USC this weekend, and a good read on the games to stay afloat.

AMU competes in Switzerland

USAMU Accessions Support Brigade

Nine military personnel from the Army, Army Reserve and Navy Reserve will represent the U.S. at the 40th Conseil International du Sport Militaire through Oct. 20 in Thun, Switzerland.

The CISM World Military Shooting Championship — also known as the Military World Games or Military Olympics — features seven shooters from the Army Marksmanship Unit, one from the Army Reserve and one from the Navy Reserve.

The U.S. Team shooters are:

Men's Pistol Team — Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski, Staff Sgt. John C. Ennis and Staff Sgt. Keith A. Sanderson of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

Women's Pistol Team — Staff Sgt. Janet Sokolowski of the AMU, Staff Sgt. Elizabeth Callahan of the Army Reserve and Petty Officer 2nd Class Sandra Uptagrafft of the Navy Reserve.

Men's Rifle Team — Lt. Col. Robert E. Harbison, Sgt. 1st Class Jason A. Parker and Sgt. Shane M. Barnhart of the AMU.

The CISM Shooting Championships consists of men's and women's rifle and pistol competitions.

The rifle shooters compete with standard rifles at 300-meters in the prone, kneeling and standing positions in both rapid and slow fire matches.

The pistol team will compete in the Center Fire and Military Rapid Fire Championships.

Only the men's teams' scores count in the overall "Best Nation" awards; the women's teams compete for separate individual and team awards.

Szarenski is a two-time Olympian and 2001 CISM Military Rapid Fire Team Bronze Medalist. Ennis, the Center Fire National Champion, competed in the 1999 and 2004 CISM championships. Sanderson is the Rapid Fire Pistol National Champion and Interservice Pistol Champion.

Harbison is a 1996 Olympian and a five-time CISM Team member; he has won an individual Silver Medal, three team Gold Medals and a team Silver Medal at CISM. Parker is a two-time Olympian, world champion, world record holder and 2001 CISM Overall Rifle Champion. Barnhart won the Military Rapid Fire Bronze Medal and took home a team Gold Medal and world record in the 2001 CISM.

Sokolowski was the Army's first female Soldier to receive the President's Hundred Pistol tab; she also is a recipient of the Distinguished Pistol Shot badge. Callahan is a three-time Olympian and is a retired lieutenant in the patrol department with the Washington, D.C. police force. Uptagrafft was a member of the AMU from 1992 to 1995 and is married to Navy Reserve Lt. Eric A. Uptagrafft, also a former member of the USAMU, who just happened to be last year's CISM rifle winner.

Approximately 50 countries send about 650 shooters to compete for the World Military Shooting Championship Trophy. The USA's strongest competitor's include Russia, France, Switzerland and Scandinavia.

"We are fielding an extremely strong rifle and pistol team and I think we have a very good chance of winning Best Nation this year," said Michael J. Behnke, USAMU chief of competition.

could mean a move onto the JV team for the next tournament.

Although he said he's been golfing since he was 12, and done his "dad duty" coaching his son in other sports, this is the first time he has coached kids in golf. His son, Zach, a Dexter Elementary fifth-grader, practices and plays with the Faith team.

"Some of these kids are going to high school next year," Caggins said. "It's a different work ethic. It's motivating to drive by and see kids on the driving range, hitting balls and working on things. They're displaying the commitment to the game and the team. It's not like you can just go out and shoot hoops in your driveway." And since his goal was to introduce the kids to the game and give them the motivation to continue, he thinks the short season is going well.

"They've really run with it," he said.

The varsity foursome was out on the course Tuesday working on their game. As eighth-grader Chris Spicer teed off, his teammates — and his coach — jokingly called him "Darth Fader" and "Sir Fades A Lot" as they watched the ball head down the fairway.

"I used to fade it off the tee," Spicer said, "but coach showed me some things and how not to hit a fade — except when I don't wear a glove." Spicer was gloveless.

Other players were of one mind when it came to deciding the toughest part of the game.

Cody Smith, playing golf for the second year, and Hollie Salvo, who has golfed for six years, didn't need any time to think.

"It's putting," they said.

The event is Nov. 5 in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. Pre-judging is at 1 p.m. and the final show is at 6 p.m.

For more information, call 545-4300.

Golf course work day — The Follow Me Golf Course will have a work day from 1 to 5 p.m. Nov. 6. Bring your family to work. Work items include removing trash and tree limbs and fixing ball marks, sand divots and more.

For more information, call 687-1940.

Scrambling for Santa — Santa's Castle will have a Scrambling for Santa golf scramble tentatively scheduled for Nov. 10 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Registration begins at noon with tee off at 1 p.m. Cost is $30 per person. A steak dinner and prizes follow the scramble.

To register, call the golf shop at 687-1940

Pineside tee times — The Follow Me Golf Course now runs tee times every day on Pineside. You can obtain a tee time seven days in advance. Tee times will run until 3 p.m. After that, it is first come, first served.

For more information, call 687-1940.

Volunteer marshals — The Follow Me Golf Course is looking for a volunteer marshal for Saturdays and Sundays. Strong customer service skills are required.

For more information, call 687-1940 or see Bill Webb, Leon Dunagan or George Cliff in the Pro Shop.

Golf teaching center — The Follow Me Golf Course now offers the only full service teaching center in the area. The teaching pros are Leon Dunagan and Rudy Thorne.

The basic lessons are $30 for a half hour, $60 for an hour with video and $90 for a group clinic lesson.

For more information, call 687-1940 or 366-7499.

Aerobics at Briant Wells — Briant Wells Fitness Center offers aerobics five days a week. Triple Fit, which provides a variety of high, low and strength training is offered Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9 to 10 a.m.

Step and Sculpt is offered from 9 to 10 a.m. Tuesday and Thursday. X-treme training is an intense 45-minute class using plyometrics agility training with balance and coordination skills and is offered at 5 p.m Tuesday and Thursday.

Core Crunch is the ultimate abdominal and core body workout, offered from 10 to 10:30 a.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

For more information, call Lori Smith at 545-4300 and 545-4726.

Hunting committee monthly meeting — The Hunting Committee meets the second Tuesday of every month through November at 3:30 p.m in the Doughboy Conference Room in Room 641 in Infantry Hall.

For more information, call Burt Davis at 325-0250.

Paintball parties — Birthday parties are available at the Paintball Park.

The cost is $20 per child with 10 or more children, which includes 200 paint rounds, a Subway sandwich, chips and a drink.

Units can also use the Paintball Park at reduced rates. With a minimum of 150 players, it is $25 per person for 500 rounds of paint.

Unit or training funds can be used, and there is an option of playing on other designated paintball fields.

For more information or reservations, call 405-9777 or 267-5038.

Late Night Basketball League — CYS Youth Sports and Fitness hosts a Late Night Basketball League for teens in grades nine through 12.

Games are the second Friday of every month at the CYS gym.

This is street-style basketball. Teams must be formed by 8 p.m. on game night. High school teams are not allowed.

For more information, call 545-3540 after 3 p.m.

OFF POST

Kids InMotion Super Saturday — The Columbus Sports Council will sponsor the second Super Saturday event for Kids InMotion at the campus of the Hughston Orthopedic Clinic to take part in a variety of activities including the 50-yard dash, shuttle run, sit-ups and the standing long jump.

There will be snacks and drinks and an appearance by the Columbus Cottonmouths' mascot, Boomer.

The event is free.

For more information, call 660-1996.

Preservation run — The 28th annual Historic District Preservation Society foot race will be Saturday in the downtown historic district.

The start and finish will be located across from Heritage Park, beside the Coca-Cola Space Science Center.

The 5K and 10K races both start at 8:30 a.m.

Entry fee is $18 for adults (pre-registration) or $20 the day of the race. Children 14 and younger are $12 for pre-registration or $15 race day.

Fair on the Square bicycle ride — The fourth annual Fair on the Square bicycle ride is Saturday in Lumpkin, Ga.

There are two routes, 20 and 50 miles, following winding roads through Providence Canyon State Park.

The 50-mile ride continues from the canyon onto Florence Marina State Park. Rest stops with refreshments and support vehicles will be provided.

Registration begins at 8 a.m. at the Methodist Church on Broad Street in Lumpkin; the ride starts at 9 a.m.

Entry fee is $20.

WE KICK 400 KIDS OUT OF SCHOOL EVERY DAY.

We have to. They just don't want to leave. They go to an extraordinary new kind of public school. It's called a Community School for Excellence.

It's open up to 15 hours a day, 6 days a week, 52 weeks a year. Like many schools in this program, it has medical and dental services and a social worker on site. Its extended hours are filled with unique academic and recreational activities.

It's a school where teachers have more time to teach. And students are physically and emotionally better prepared to learn.

So, if you have trouble getting your kids to go to school, find out how you can make it a place they won't want to leave.

Infantry Soldiers killed in Iraq

Bradley crew rushing to aid of wounded

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Two Soldiers assigned to B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, were killed in Ar Ramadi, Iraq, Oct. 10 when an improvised explosive device detonated near their Bradley fighting vehicle.

Staff Sgt. Brandon K. Sneed, 33, and Sgt. Leon M. Johnson, 28, were driving toward Soldiers engaged with the enemy in order to evacuate a wounded Soldier when the device exploded. Their unit had been attached to 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, operating from a combat outpost in the area since July.

Sneed

Sneed, a native of Norman, Okla., enlisted in the Army in 1990 as a health-care specialist, later reclassifying as an Infantryman. After serving as an instructor in the basic Bradley Training Course with 1st Bn., 29th Inf., Regt., and a tour in Korea, he was assigned to B Company as a squad leader and Bradley commander.

Johnson

Staff Sgt. Johnny Roman met Sneed more than four years ago when Roman arrived in the unit.

"He was actually the first NCO I met," Roman said.

The men served together in three major deployments — one to Kosovo, and two to Iraq.

"Brandon was a kind leader who took very good care of his Soldiers," he said. "He always did what was morally right. He was quiet and calm and a good listener."

In talking about their families, Roman said Sneed spoke of his wife's strength, his pride in his three children and how important his mother was to him.

Johnson, a Jacksonville, Fla. native, enlisted in the Army in 1998 and served at Fort Hood, Texas before his assignment to Fort Benning as a grenadier, anti-armor specialist and Bradley gunner.

Mission complete. Daunting, bizarre, eerie, surreal mission complete.

Those were the words the Soldiers of the 14th Combat Field Hospital used to describe the five weeks they spent in New Orleans helping the people there recover from the devastation of Hurricane Katrina.

"It was like a third-world country," said 1st Sgt. Mark Pumphries. "It was hard to believe we were in the U.S."

The 14th moved out quickly Oct. 8 and established a hospital outside the city near Louis Armstrong International Airport. The primary mission was to provide health care for Department of Defense service members working there.

"In grunt terms," they had it pretty good, Col. Jeffrey Haun, 14th's commander, said at that time. They lived in air conditioned tents with showers

Afghan general visits post

Focus on Army training of NCO Corps

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

The chief of the general staff of the Afghan National Army visited Fort Benning this week to observe training.

Khan

Fort Benning was the second stop on Gen. Mohammed Bismullah Khan's tour. His first stop was at Fort Drum, N.Y., and the last stop on his itinerary was Fort McPherson, Ga.

Lt. Col. John Hansen, an Office of Security Cooperation-Afghanistan staff officer and Khan's escort for the trip, said the the purpose of the general's visit to Fort Benning is to show how the Army relies on the skills and abilities of its NCO Corps.

"We hope to use the same type of system, learn from it and take it to Afghanistan," Khan said, speaking through an interpreter.

"You have a professional Army," he said.

"In Afghanistan we are just starting to build our Army, and this (visit) is helping us gain expertise."

While here, Khan toured the NCO Academy, observed demonstrations by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit and

Rice explains how Iraq fits in terror war

Petty Officer 3rd Class John R. Guardiano
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Critics of the Iraq War allege that there's no connection between Iraq and the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the Pentagon and World Trade Center. But Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice maintains the attack and actions in Iraq are linked.

Rice spoke on NBC's Meet the Press with Tim Russert, Sunday.

"When we were attacked on Sept. 11," Rice said, "we had a choice to make: We could decide that the proximate cause was al Qaeda and the people who flew those planes into the buildings, ... or we could take a bolder approach, which would say that we had to go after the root causes of the kind of terrorism" produced in the Middle East.

The United States, Rice said, decided to take this bolder approach, which involves transforming the Middle East along freer and more democratic lines. A freer and more democratic Middle East, she said, is far less likely to produce terrorists who will forever threaten catastrophic damage on the United States.

"There is no one who could have imagined a different kind of Middle East with Saddam Hussein still in power," she said.

Rice said that real progress is being made in the Middle East.

"We have ahead of us the prospect — and I think the very good prospect — of a foundation for a democratic and prosperous Iraq that can solve its differences by politics and compromise," she said. That type of country could be "an anchor" and an example for others.

Rice cited recent progress in Lebanon, Palestine and Egypt.

"This is a Middle East that is in transformation to something far better than we have experienced for the last 60 years when we thought that we could ignore democracy and get stability — and in fact we got neither," Rice said.

If the United States were to give up on Iraq, she said, then we would "condemn generations of people in the Middle East to despair ... (and) generations of Americans to fear and insecurity."

The Iraqis are taking this (democratic) process seriously," Rice said, "and we just need to help them have a chance."

MISSing MANNERS

HyPATHETICally speaking

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Let's say, hypothetically, you're retired from the military — not the Army, but a sister service. And, let's say, you drive a big, shiny black truck, with all the bells and whistles, sporting a sticker that tells the world you are indeed a former, um, serviceman.

Would you — still speaking hypothetically, of course — consistently behave badly in traffic, knowing you're so easily recognizable? Would you speed through the parking lot of the I-185 Welcome Center every morning in your haste to bypass everyone waiting in the "legal" lanes? Would you worm your way to the front of the line reserved for visitors without decals because you have a disproportionate sense of entitlement?

Of course not. Who would be so crass? And thoughtless? And selfish? And unethical? Certainly not someone driving a vehicle so easily distinguishable.

Now, if you drove, say, a non-descript, beige-ish sedan with tinted windows, it might be a different story, right? You could comfortably fall in behind the big, black "hypothetical" truck without worry that anyone will recognize you in the parking lot of Infantry Hall.

Hypothetically speaking.

Now I suppose these hypo-pathetic drivers would lack a certain sensitivity gene. Or perhaps their parents are to blame. Who can say? For whatever reason, the guy in the black truck, the gal in the sedan and the string of drivers behind them should be taken out of the gene pool. Did I say that? I mean the car pool. They should be forced to take public transportation. Harsh, I know, but hey, we're talking hypothetically, right?

I suppose public transit could be considered torture, and we are, after all, a kinder, gentler people. Maybe there's a better way to put them on the road to redemption, to instill a little ethical awareness. What we need is a pledge. Or a song. Or a creed. Of course, a creed! We need a driver's creed!

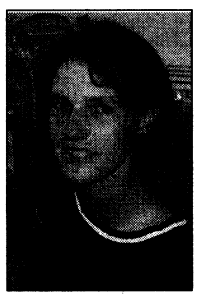
With apologies to the author of the Soldier's Creed, it might go something like this:

I am a driver on an American Army installation. I drive in the greatest nation on earth. Because I am proud of the privilege of driving, I will always act in ways creditable to this nation, this installation and the Soldiers who guard it.

I am proud to work here (live here, play here.) I will do all I can to make it the safest, most courteous place on the planet. I will be considerate of those with whom I share the road.

I realize that I am one of a gazillion drivers who use these roads. I will stay in my lane. My time is no more important than anyone else's. No matter how late I am today, or how late I will be again tomorrow, because I am a poor planner, I will wait my turn like everyone else.

I will not bring disgrace or discredit to myself, my coworkers or the Army (Marines, Navy, Air Force, Coast Guard, Boy Scouts, etc.) I will use every means I have to restrain myself from cheating, cutting or endangering the lives of unsuspecting pedestrians who may be walking to and from the Welcome Center because they have a legitimate right to be there. I do not.



I am proud of my car. I clean it and wax it and decorate it with cute little stickers that reveal a lot about who I am. Semper Fi, baby. With that in mind, I'll try not to embarrass myself.

Because of my relationship to Fort Benning, I know that I am a representative of the U.S. military. I am proud of that, and I will try to make the people of this nation proud of the service I represent.

For I am a driver on an American Army installation. People are watching me.

It's about some people's children

Recently, an Associated Press article asserted that Americans are rude. That same day, the Ledger-Enquirer ran an online poll asking what we thought. I've either missed the results, or they haven't finished tallying, but I'm pretty sure I know how folks feel.

We're rude, or at least impolite. We're mean. We're inconsiderate. Worst of all, we're vengeful.

In the past few weeks, I've noticed a number of signs, at the post office, the bank and the grocery store. In my doctor's office and my dentist's, too. "Please turn off your cell phone," before you reach the counter." It seems those providing customer service are being hampered by our phone habits.

Even if we don't have a cell phone in our hand or at our ear, we're missing the boat in a number of other areas, too.

I'm on a full-fledged mission to find two words that are becoming increasingly rare — you're welcome. For some reason, the standard response to a "thank you" is now an offhand "no problem." Adults have latched onto no problem. Kids tend to not respond at all.

I can't help it, though. There are some groups of people I have certain expectations of.

A few months ago, we had a group of senior officers and NCOs descend upon us. From their patches, it was apparent they didn't belong to Fort Benning. I was leaving the building and saw two gentlemen from the group who looked like they might need a hand. They had their hands full of gear — kevlars, LBEs and body armor. One was toting a gym bag that was almost as big as he was, and I knew he wasn't going to fit through the door without a fight. I held the door open for them. Neither of them even looked at me, never acknowledged I was holding the door, and certainly didn't thank me. It's obviously still bugging me, not that I'm the type to hold a grudge.

And if we can't be courteous when someone is looking us right in the eye, it's no wonder there's so much road rage. It has to be the anonymity of being surrounded by a few thousand pounds of automobile hurtling down our roads at varying reckless speeds. We're either in a terrible hurry to get somewhere and cut folks off or we're terribly lazy when we cut folks off for that choice parking spot.

One of my favorite stories happened here. A Soldier walking through a parking lot saw a person letting the air out of a car's tires. Turns out the victim had parked in a spot reserved for someone else (presumably the guy letting the air out). Ironically, the spot was earmarked for someone who didn't even work in that building. Have we become so attached to things like parking spots that we can't share them once every blue moon?

And who's to blame? According to the AP's poll, it's us. Parents. We're not teaching and enforcing and reinforcing common courtesies. And for those of us in the older age bracket — well, I guess we can blame our parents too. As the article said, "A whopping 93 percent faulted parents for failing to teach their children well."

The fix surely won't be simple or easy, but it ought to start with a quick self-assessment and a vow to say at least please, thank you and you're welcome to people you encounter everyday and teach your kids to do it too.

Trick or treat, thank you

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Halloween will be here before you know it. Are you ready? Are your kids ready? Do you have a costume ready?

I'm giving out candy. I've decided to give trick-or-treaters another chance. Don't disappoint me. Please wear a costume if you're going trick or treating. Otherwise, it's begging, even if you don't say a word.

I understand not everyone has $40 to buy a high-speed costume. That's where creativity comes in.

My husband, while growing up, made his own costume one year when money was tight. He took a discarded box, cut arm and leg holes, and went trick-or-treating as, you guessed it, a box. Hey, it wasn't the best costume out there, but at least he tried. If he came to my door, I would've given him extra candy for trying.

When we moved on post in October 1997, my husband and I were excited to hand out candy and see all the costumes, cute and scary and those in-between. What we didn't expect to see were kids with candy bag outstretched wearing no costume. I was flabbergasted. No costume? It's Halloween. This is trick-or-treating?

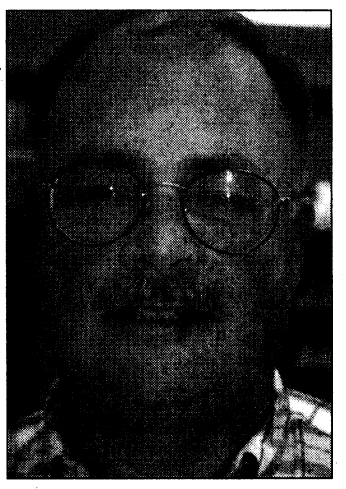
Apparently not. We saw very few trick-or-treaters wearing costumes. Few said "trick or treat" or "thank you" and quite a few were younger than one year old.

So, the next year, we turned out the lights and hid in our house, hoping we wouldn't get "tricked." We didn't, so year after year, we were the Scrooges of Halloween. I don't see the point of handing out candy if I won't get a thank you. Granted, kids may forget in the excitement of seeing a Twizzler dropped in their bag, but a gentle reminder is nice.

We didn't start taking our son trick-or-treating until he was actually old enough to eat the candy and say thank you. Even then, we limited the number of houses he went to. How much candy does a 3-year-old need?

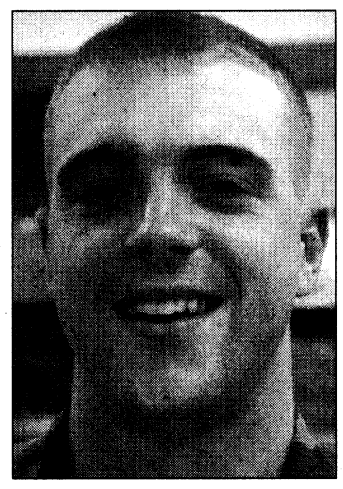
A lot, apparently. It broke my heart one year, to see a mom yelling at her toddler, while balancing a baby on her hip, prodding him to hurry up so he could go to more houses. The little boy couldn't have cared less about his candy haul, but mom did.

This year, my husband will take our son trick-or-treating. I'll give out candy. So I'm giving you extra time to think about your costume. Parents, I'm giving you time to teach your kids to say "trick or treat" and "thank you."

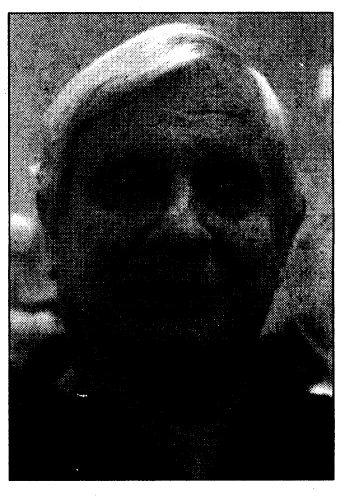


I'll get off my Halloween high horse (hey, that's a good idea for a costume) and let you know trick-or-treating hours are 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 31. Remember all those safety rules, like taking a flashlight, making sure your child's costume isn't too long so as to prevent tripping, and make sure he or she can see through the eyeholes.

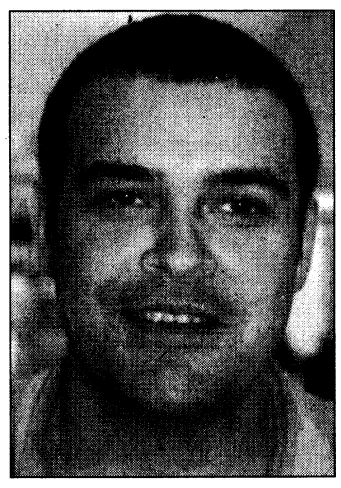
VARIOUS VOICES



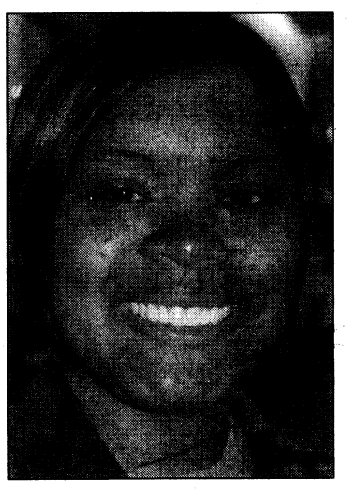
Are we more rude than we used to be in the United States?



Sabine Ferguson, AAFES employee — "Yes, especially teenagers. Back in the day, kids didn't tell adults 'no.' Where I live, the kids stay out till midnight with their music blaring. If I ask them to turn it down, they say, 'No. What are you going to do about it?'"



Nick Comer, Department of the Army employee, Fort Leavenworth, Kan. — "I think we're more abrupt and abrasive than we used to be over all, but some parts of the country are more pleasant than others — the South and the Midwest."



2nd Lt. Jace Walden, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Definitely. When my dad was small, it was 'Yes, sir' and 'Yes ma'am.' Now that's only for superior officers."

Paul Berezney, Main Mall Barber Shop — "Yes. I was raised in the 40s and 50s. My mother was home, and all my friends' mothers were home. Now, our expectations have changed. We want bigger houses and SUVs, so mom and dad both work. Nobody's home when the kids get home, or someone else is taking care of them, and they're not being taught the same values and manners."

Pfc. Steven Smith, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "Yes. It's in the upbringing. It might boil down to money. It takes two incomes to live comfortably like families did 30 years ago with dad working. Basically, the kids are raising themselves."

Sgt. Angela Kinzer, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "No, I don't think so. I think foreigners are much worse. I just got back from (Europe) and they were awful."

Jennifer Prettyman, family member — "Yes. The things kids get away with, I'd never have gotten away with. But it's not just kids. It's worse on the road. Everybody's in a hurry, cutting other drivers off and holding up traffic. There's no general courtesy."

Benning Soldier quiet hero

Rescues girl while helping her family

Master Sgt. Marty Wazbinski was changing a flat tire when a young girl dashed into the path of a truck. He rescued the child, fixed the tire and sent the family on their way.

Master Sgt. Marty Wazbinski shrugs off praise the way some football players shrug off tackles. So when a letter crossed his desk thanking him for saving someone's life, he didn't have much to say.

"I'm sure anybody else would have done the same thing," said Wazbinski, who works in the operations and training section of 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment.

But not everybody would have stopped to help a woman change a flat tire on the shoulder of I-185 during a peak "afternoon-everyone's-going-home" traffic.

Wazbinski searched his memory for details about that day. He can't pinpoint it exactly. It was sometime during the spring. While driving northbound on I-185, he noticed a family pulled over on the shoulder.

"It was so simple," he said. "I just pulled in behind them." The family, and he doesn't remember their names, save one, told him they were here to see the woman's son who was in basic training at Sand Hill. They were from Tennessee.

Wazbinski joked that he's not the most mechanical person in the world, and luckily for him, everything he needed was in the trunk.

He set about changing the flat tire to get them on their way and was on the ground close to traffic when he saw the blur come from the right-hand side of the car.

"It was the little girl running into the road," he said. "And I looked up and saw a semi. I rolled out, grabbed her and rolled back.

"She was about 5 or 6 — a cute little girl. Alesha. Yes, I remember her name."

He said Alesha was more scared than anything else and ran right to her mother. After that, there was a stream of continuous thank-yous as he finished the tire change and sent them on their way.

"Nothing too exciting," he said, although he admitted he knew his heart was working after seeing the semi. "And I really didn't expect to hear anything after that."

The letter, when it came, arrived without a return address and the mother's name was indecipherable, but her thanks were sincere.

"Dear Sir," it read. "I just wanted to thank you for your Soldiers. One was nice enough to help me change a tire ... Not only that, but he saved my little girl's life ... My little girl Alesha would be dead now if not for him. His name is WAZBINSKI. Thank you so much. I love the Army and the U.S.A."

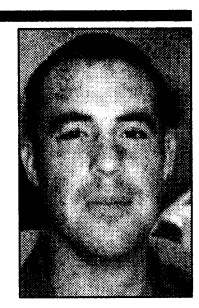
Capt. William Similo has worked with Wazbinski since 1996. They've been at Fort Benning since they were activated in May 2004 to perform their wartime mission of providing cadre and staff to run a basic training battalion.

Similo said Wazbinski's actions didn't surprise him in the least.

"I only found out about this recently," Similo said. "And it's just because he let it slip."

Sgt. 1st Class John Phillips said helping someone out just goes along with Wazbinski's personality.

"He doesn't brag about anything," Phillips said. "And he very much debated about whether or not to talk about it."



When his tour on active duty is over, Wazbinski will return to Midland, Mich., and his job with a company that grows silicon for use in computer chips. He'll also return to his wife, son and two daughters.

"My family's up north," he said. "That's hard. I'm sure anybody else would have (stopped to change the tire).

Ranger saves life of woman left for dead

Bridgett Siter

"If more people had EMT training or first responder training or combat life saver ... It obviously pays off."

Spc. Louis Atchison
4th Ranger Training Battalion

"She's dead. Don't waste your time." A stranger, the first on the scene of a head-on collision on a remote road outside Fort Bragg, N.C., told the six Soldiers to "move on," disregard the driver of the car and try to save the others.

Spc. Louis Atchison was one of those Soldiers. The 4th Ranger Training Battalion's information management officer was a student nearing the end of the Special Forces Assessment and Selection course in May, when he and his classmates came upon the wreck.

An SUV was resting upside down on the hood of the car. The driver of the car was dead, according to the first responder.

The driver of the SUV, who had apparently run a stop sign, was pinned beneath the dash. She would lose her leg, but not her children. A 5-year-old boy was flung from the rear window, but he was stable when Atchison knelt beside him. His 7-year-old sister was saved by a seat belt.

Atchison, who once toyed with the idea of leaving the Army to become a paramedic, earned his basic EMT license in 2003. He knew enough to know the people in the SUV would recover, so he returned to the driver of the car.

She wasn't breathing.

He checked her neck. No pulse.

He checked her wrist. No pulse.

He checked her neck again. No pulse. Maybe a faint pulse.

Definitely a pulse.

Atchison dragged the woman from the car and started CPR. Within minutes she was breathing on her own, but drifting in and out of consciousness.

Her name was Kitty, Atchison presumed, based on the inscription on the Bible in the backseat. He and his classmate, Capt. Sean Morrow, kept her roused as much as possible.

"You know you're going to be all right," said Morrow, now the commander of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment on Sand Hill.

"Yes," she replied, tears running down her face.

That's the only word Atchison heard her say, but it was enough to assure him she would, indeed, be OK. More than that, he'll never know.

And it's likely, he said, she'll never know how close she came to dying.

If Atchison had taken the stranger at his word ...

"He was a civilian. He was losing his mind. He just sat there on the side of the road and bawled," Atchison said.

"That's one of the greatest things about military people — they're used to stress. They don't freak out. They always want to step up and do the right thing."

Atchison is quick to eschew credit for his actions that day — actions for which he was awarded an Army Commendation Medal.

"Everybody did their part, even the guys who didn't have medical training, per se. They were doing everything they could to help," he said.

"But if there's one thing I would like to see come out of this — the reason I'm OK with talking about it — is the training. If more people had EMT training or first responder training or combat life saver ... whatever. It obviously pays off. I'd like to see more of that."

Audie Murphy Club

The Audie Murphy Club, comprised of the top two percent of NCOs in the Army, was established to recognize leadership excellence and overall potential of NCOs in the ranks of corporal through sergeant first class.

To be eligible, corporals through sergeants first class must have no UCMJ actions and be recommended by their chain of command.

The Fort Benning chapter of SAMC will organize a toy drive within units on Fort Benning to help Santa's Castle and a fund-raiser to assist the Damascus House, a shelter for women and children.

For more information, call Staff Sgt. Thomas Thornhill Jr. at 544-9868.

ID card schedule

The ID Card facility, in Building 2638, Soldiers' Plaza, is open Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 8:15 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Wednesday from 8:15 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Schedule appointments by calling 545-4068.

Rangers stand up support company

Soldiers needed to fill key positions

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet correspondent

The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, saw its first major change in more than 30 years Wednesday when the Regiment stood up a new support company.

"This is huge for us. We're adapting to change (in the Army) like everyone else is," said Kimberly Laudano, the Ranger Regiment's public affairs officer.

The support company will include personnel such as an interior electrician, carpentry specialist, medical specialist and water treatment specialist. Until now, these services had to be sought elsewhere.

"This way we don't draw from other Army units," Laudano said.

The support platoon will train with the Rangers and deploy with them. A Soldier will not only learn his job, but that of the unit he supports, she said.

"The company will greatly enhance our ability to perform operations by having a dedicated combat service support company with them as opposed to outside services," said Capt. Deryck Brookhouse, the support company commander.

This will have an impact on the Global War on Terrorism, he said, by increasing readiness and capabilities.

"Everyone is very excited about having dedicated support," Brookhouse said. "People coming in are excited about being here and doing their job."

"If someone ever wanted to be a Ranger, now's the chance," Brookhouse said. The support company is actively recruiting Soldiers to fill support unit positions.

Interested Soldiers can contact the Ranger Regiment for more information.

Initial entry Soldiers should call DSN 835-2617. Permanent party Soldiers should call DSN 221-5566.

Breast cancer awareness event focuses on personal responsibility

Reynolds guest speaker at luncheon

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The ballroom at the Columbus Trade and Convention Center was a sea of pale pink Tuesday during the fourth annual Tidwell Breast Cancer Awareness Luncheon.

Pink balloons lined the hallways. Pink napkins and decorations adorned the tables. Hundreds of women, dressed in pink, were in attendance, and so were men. And many wore pink ribbons, the symbol of breast cancer awareness.

"It stands for the sisterhood that will help women survive and conquer this disease," said the symbols' inventor, Evelyn H. Lauder, president of the Breast Cancer Research Foundation.

But breast cancer awareness is more than pink ribbons, said Pamela Bates, Family Readiness Group leader for B Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

"You can't take any chances," said Bates, who lost her sister to breast cancer 10 years ago.

It's important to stay informed Know how to stay healthy, she said.

Reminding spouses to take care of themselves during deployments is a priority for Bates.

"A lot of times we're so busy taking care of others, we forget to take care of ourselves. (Health) is more important than make-up, haircuts and fingernails," she said.

Bates sentiment was echoed by the speakers for the luncheon: Dr. Sandra Tally Willis, an oncologist, and celebrity, Debbie Reynolds.

Willis said there will be more than 211,000 cases of breast cancer diagnosed this year. At least 1,700 of those cases will be men.

"Breast cancer is all around us," Willis said. "Breast cancer victims come from different backgrounds."

Although the risk is higher for those with a family history of cancer, the lack of cancer in the family is no guarantee, said Willis, who took a moment to recognize the mammographers in attendance, including those from Fort Benning's Martin Army Community Hospital.

"Give them a hug when you see them," she said. "Squeeze them like they squeeze you."

> "Ladies, this is your body. You own it. You are responsible for it. You enter life with it, and you will depart in it. Treat it with honor."
> Dr. Sandra Tally Willis
> oncologist, guest speaker

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, mammography can detect a lump an average of 1.7 years before it can be felt. It can also increase chances of survival 20-25 percent for women older than 40.

Willis touts self-breast exams and she encouraged this routine by the age of 20.

"Ladies," she said, "this is your body. You own it. You are responsible for it. You enter life with it, and you will depart in it. Treat it with honor."

As Reynolds took the stage to the strains of "Singin' in the Rain," she admitted to having "snuck in early to find out what (she) should do" regarding her own health.

"(I'm) certainly not an expert," she said. But having "gone through so many things," she spoke in a mostly light-hearted and witty, sometimes serious approach, about the importance of breast cancer awareness.

Two of her best friends are undergoing treatment for breast cancer.

Reynolds had the audience laughing as she related stories of how her life and health has evolved during the years.

In response to Willis' encouragement of self-breast exams, the star of stage and screen told attendees, "My mother told me if I touched myself, she would kill me. But if your doctor tells you to, it's OK. So far it's not interesting.

"I feel lucky to be alive," she said. "Everyday I wake up and I'm so surprised that everything has moved somewhere else."

Reynolds echoed the encouragements of Willis to practice self-breast exams and have annual mammograms.

But she had one more comment to add.

"It isn't like our boobies aren't right there in front of us," she said amidst a roomful of laughter and some tears. "Let's keep ourselves fixed and look after ourselves."

Jennifer Gunn

Debbie Reynolds used humor and drew from her own experience to urge her listeners to take care of their health at the annual Tidwell Breast Cancer Awareness Luncheon Tuesday.

Week three gets real

'I can't wait to go through it again'

New Soldiers experience combat training

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

With bayonets fixed, Soldiers of A Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, hurdled obstacles, crawled through tunnels and maneuvered over trenches while parrying and thrusting at enemy targets. The objective was to maintain control of their weapons during combat.

"This course teaches them to follow leadership early on and find the aggressive nature needed to be part of the Infantry," said Staff Sgt John Redente, drill sergeant for the 3rd Platoon. "Up to this point, they've never had to motivate themselves in this manner."

Sgt. 1st Class Dale Kessler, 1st Platoon drill sergeant, said the exercise is difficult because "you really have to knock that weapon out of the way so it opens enough to give Soldiers a chance to attack."

"It was a workout," said Pvt. Terell Sauls, from Dallas. "I was looking for a little sweat, but I wasn't expecting to get as dirty as I did, or for half the platoon to die. I can't wait to go through it again."

Not everyone found the training as inspirational.

"Out of all these guys, I'm probably the weakest link," said Pvt. Eddie Feliciano, from Brooklyn, N.Y. "But the encouragement of my comrades makes me strive to do better.

"I called my father the other day and told him what was going on," Feliciano said. "He said it was very different from when he was in the Army. Even the civilians are helping us out."

Pvt. Michael McCarthy, from Lowry, Mo., said he enjoyed his first taste of real training.

"I'm really impressed. It's a lot tougher than I thought it would be," he said.

"As long as we're not sitting in a classroom, it's fun," said Pvt. Dustin Iverson, from Port Angeles, Wash.

No problem, Redente said. They'll go through the course two or three times.

Soldiers practice disarming the enemy using their weapons and targets.

Crawling through a tunnel on his back, Pvt. Johnathan Voyles keeps his rifle down to prevent the bayonet from getting caught on the "ceiling."

One of the goals of the course is to teach the Soldiers to move together and stay together while concentrating on the mission.

Soldiers: Die in Ar Ramadi

Regt., said Sneed and Johnson gave their fellow Soldiers "hope to carry on and love life the way they loved life, to live life the way they lived life. Not afraid, but with courage."

Roggeman delivered his remarks at a memorial service Monday at the outpost in Iraq.

"Nothing I can say will help explain how or why their lives were taken away from us," Roggeman said, "but I do know that there are two more Infantrymen in heaven today. The good Lord may have needed a qualified Bradley crew, the good Lord may have needed a couple of squared away NCOs to take care of and love the fallen Soldiers up there, or the good Lord may just have needed someone to take a knee and pull security."

Capt. Steven Gribschaw, the B Company commander, called the men "an ideal Bradley crew."

"Staff Sergeant Sneed (was) always calm and controlled, while Sergeant Johnson always seemed to be moving with excited energy," he said. "They both had a quick smile and a contagious laugh, a willingness to bend over backwards to help a fellow Soldier, an ability to lead by example. They brought out the best in everyone around them."

Gribschaw said he was fortunate to have been their company commander and he is a better commander for having worked with them.

"I believe that everything happens for a reason," he said, "although that reason can often elude us for months or years. Right now, I do not understand why they were taken from us — and I doubt if I ever will. What I can do, though, is find comfort in the time I had with them and the lessons they taught me. I can follow their example as men and Soldiers."

Sneed, who was posthumously promoted to Sgt. 1st Class, is survived by his wife, Lori, stepson, Christopher Peters, daughter, Brandee, and son, Brandon.

Johnson is survived by his wife, Shalonda, daughters, Keionnah and Deionne, and son, Leon Jr.

Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team held a memorial for Sneed and Johnson Tuesday at the Kelley Hill Chapel.

Afghan: Visits post to learn about U.S. Army training the Ranger Training Brigade, took a tour of the basic training complexes and had dinner with drill sergeants.

Hansen said this visit will help Khan and his staff understand U.S. Army training techniques and give them an example of what to instill in their own forces when they return to Afghanistan.

Currently, there are three junior officers from Afghanistan training on post, and Khan hopes to send more officers here for advanced training.

and dining facilities — no small thing considering temperatures outside hovered in three digits. And the workload was fairly easy, with only an occasional "run-of-the-mill sick call" and one noteworthy surgical procedure — the unit's first since the Korean War.

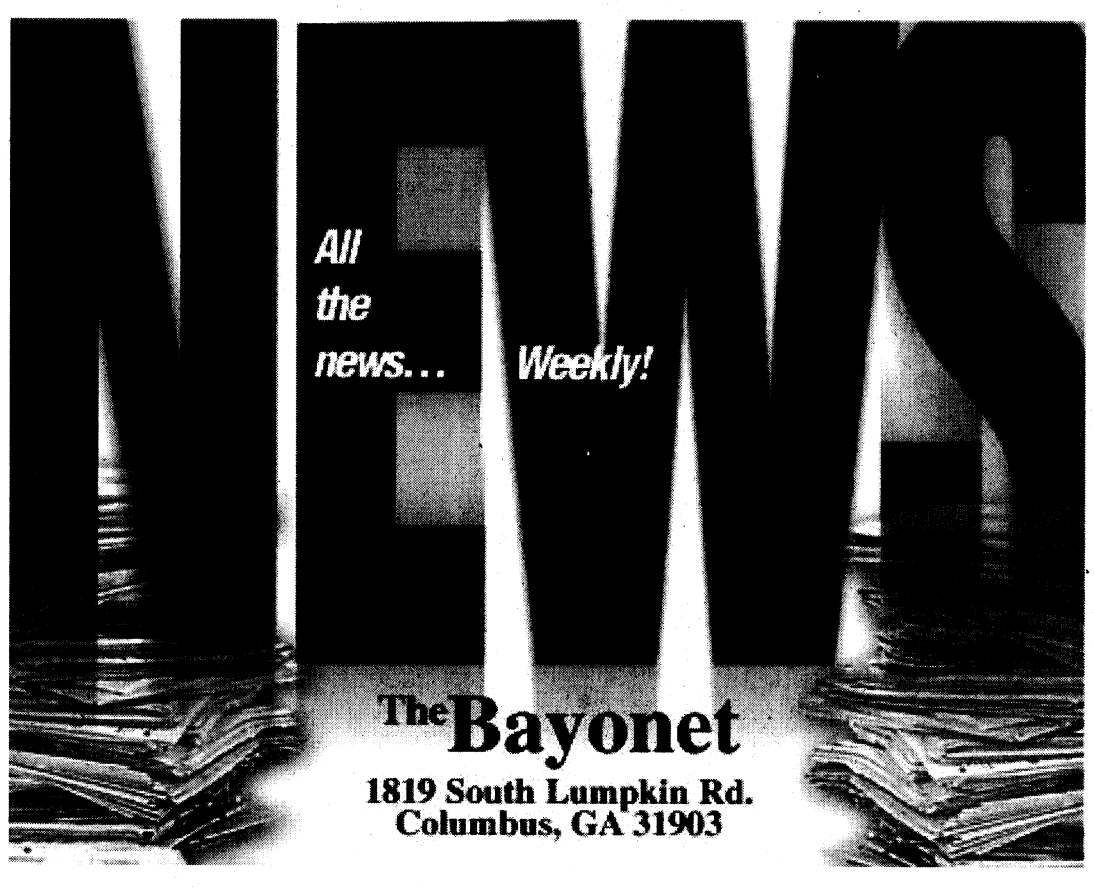
All that changed Sept. 19, when the Louisiana state legislature passed a proclamation exempting physicians and other health-care providers from having to comply with the state's licensing process.

That's when the 14th CSH packed up and hauled their equipment, using more than 70 20-foot containers, to the New Orleans Convention Center, which had previously housed thousands of evacuees.

The convention center was a mess, the heat stifling and the task daunting, Pumphries said. Before the hospital could be operational, a "sanitary, controlled environment" had to be established.

That mission was completed in four days.

Then, as the citizens of New Orleans trickled back into town, the 14th went to work on a steady stream of patients — most with alcohol or drug-related problems. Automobile accidents were also a problem.



"It was a city in crisis," said Lt. Col. Glenda Lock, an intensive care nurse. "There were a lot of people in need. We're glad to be home, but it meant a lot to us to be able to help those people."

Despite the heat and the smell and the separation from their families, the New Orleans mission was "good medicine" for the 14th CSH, Pumphries said.

They worked well together, proved more than proficient at their jobs, and they'll leave for Afghanistan in February confident in their ability to complete the mission. Again.

According to the U.S. Department of State, trafficking in persons is a modern-day form of slavery. It is estimated that at least 600,000 to 800,000 people, mostly women and children, are trafficked across borders worldwide. This estimate includes 14,500 to 17,500 persons brought into the United States.

Human Trafficking nets Mira Sorvino for Lifetime

Jay Bobbin
© Zap2it

Even if someone wins an Oscar, that's no guarantee the movie world will offer him or her better material than television might.

Mira Sorvino can confirm it. An Academy Award winner early in her career for Woody Allen's Mighty Aphrodite, she steps into topical territory with the new two-part Lifetime movie Human Trafficking, debuting Monday and Tuesday.

Sorvino stars as a Homeland Security rookie focused on immigration and customs, putting her on the cases of an American teen kidnapped in Manila and two enslaved European women sent to the U.S.

Kate Morozov (Sorvino) leaves the New York Police Department to help a federal agent (Donald Sutherland, who goes up against his ABC show Commander in Chief on Tuesday) to bring down the crime kingpin (Robert Carlyle, The Full Monty) behind an international sex-slave operation.

Posing as a mail-order bride after her initial entrapment plan goes awry, Kate risks her life to gather evidence from the inside.

The global view of Human Trafficking is mirrored by the specifics of Sorvino's character.

"My character in this film is of Russian descent," the actress said.

"She came over from Russia when she was a teenager, and because she has a past of sexual abuse, she's tried to leave her Russian self a little bit behind her.

"She's a career woman, and for her to become the naive Russian girl she had once been is very painful. The journey she takes is back to a time when she was vulnerable, but that's the only way she can appeal to these traffickers as a potential victim for their recruitment."

By the time filming began on Human Trafficking, Sorvino already was immersed in the culture she had to portray.

"Luckily for me, I had shot a film in Russia last winter about the siege of Leningrad, so I had been surrounded by the Russian accent. I actually had to speak a little bit of Russian in the other movie, so it did help me, but they also had wonderful people on the set of this film to help us."

Robert Halmi Sr. is the executive producer of Human Trafficking, marking a departure from the large-scale fantasies that have become his specialty (Gulliver's Travels, Merlin, Hercules, etc.).

Co-writer Agatha Dominik, a native of Poland, said using Prague and Kiev as backdrops for two of the story's abducted women indicates "the whole aspect of selling children for money for prostitution, (which is) planned by their families. Because they're so poor, that's one of the ways to actually survive.

"It's a huge problem," Dominik said. "I grew up in Poland during the communist system, so it's not much different there as far as the mentality of the women and the fear of authorities that still exists.

"One hundred thousand women are trafficked every year. Those are the staggering statistics that basically give us a jolt to use this part of Europe as a source of information for the story."

Sorvino's personal concerns factored into her involvement in the drama.

"I work with Amnesty International as their ambassador for the 'Stop Violence Against Women' campaign," she said.

Mira Sorvino stars in Human Trafficking, airing Monday and Tuesday on Lifetime.

"We have partnered with Lifetime not only to help promote the project but to raise awareness about the issue.

"There's going to be a teaching guide created to accompany the film; the subject matter is a little sensitive for younger people, but (the guide) will be made available to teachers at secondary schools and professors at colleges. We're also going to work with legislators to try and get things done."

Since her Oscar win, Sorvino — the daughter of actor Paul Sorvino (Law & Order) — has made such movies as Romy and Michele's High School Reunion, Mimic and The Replacement Killers, but many of her most recent credits haven't been as high-profile.

"I think actors go where the material is good and challenging," she said.

"Oddly enough, I was offered a feature film the same week I was offered this, on virtually the same subject. It was also about a woman of Russian origin working with law enforcement, but this script was so superior.

"I felt it really tackled many of the social issues involved, but it also dealt very justly with the victims and the trauma they go through, and what their road to recovery really is."

Doom — Something has gone wrong at a remote scientific research station on Mars. All research has ceased. Communication has failed. And the messages that do get through are less than comforting. It's a level-five quarantine, and the only souls allowed in or out are the Rapid Response Tactical Squad — hardened Marines armed to the teeth with enough firepower to neutralize any enemy — or so they think.

Starring Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Karl Urban.

Doom is rated R for strong violence, gore and language.

North Country — When Josey Aimes (Charlize Theron) returns to her hometown in northern Minnesota after a failed marriage, she needs a good job. A single mother, she turns to the predominant source of employment in the region — the iron mines. The last thing the miners want is women competing for scare jobs — women who, in their estimation, have no business driving trucks and hauling rock.

When Josey speaks out against the treatment she and her fellow workers face, it takes her farther than she ever imagined, ultimately inspiring countless others, and leading to the nation's first-ever class action lawsuit for sexual harassment.

North Country is rated R for sequences involving sexual harassment including violence and dialogue, and for language.

Stay — A reality-bending thriller about a psychologist whose suicidal client makes bizarre predictions that, to the psychologist's mounting terror, begin to come true. The shrink must race against time to save everything he loves before it disappears.

Starring Ewan McGregor and Naomi Watts.

Stay is rated R for language and disturbing images.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story — Ben Crane (Kurt Russell) was once a great horseman, whose gifts as a trainer are now being wasted on making other men's fortunes. Sonya was a great horse whose promising future on the racetrack was suddenly cut short by a broken leg. Considered as good as dead to her owner, who also happens to be Ben's boss, Sonya is given to Ben as severance pay, along with his waling papers.

Now, it will take the unwavering faith and determination of Ben's young daughter, Cale (Dakota Fanning), to bring these two damaged souls together in a quest for the seemingly impossible goal: to win the Breeders' Cup Classic.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story is rated PG for brief mild language.

The Fog — A thick fog enshrouds a coastal town. The fog is reminiscent of one 100 years earlier that wrecked a ship and caused the seamen aboard to drown. Sure enough, the sailors are back and out to kill whomever they find.

Starring Tom Welling and Maggie Grace.

The Fog is rated PG-13 for violence, disturbing images and sexuality.

Domino — Inspired by a real-life story, Keira Knightley stars as Domino Harvey, who rejected her privileged Beverly Hills lifestyle as the daughter of a famous actor (Lawrence Harvey) and a Ford agency model to become a bounty hunter.

Also starring Lucy Liu, Christopher Walken, Mena Suvari and Mickey Rourke.

Domino is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language sexual content, nudity and drug use.

Elizabethtown — After causing the Oregon shoe company he works for to lose hundreds of millions of dollars, Drew Baylor (Orlando Bloom) is fired for his mistake.

On the verge of suicide, Drew is given a new purpose in life when he is brought back to his family's small Kentucky hometown of Elizabethtown following the death of his father.

On the way home, Drew meets a flight attendant, Claire Colburn (Kirsten Dunst), with whom he falls in love, in a romance that helps his life get back on track.

Elizabethtown is rated PG-13 for language and sexual references.

In Her Shoes — Maggie (Cameron Diaz) is fun-loving and irresponsible. Her older sister Rose (Toni Collette) is a high-powered lawyer who watches Maggie's wild life with disdain. When an attempt to live together fails miserably, they go off in different directions to find the missing pieces in their lives.

In Her Shoes is rated PG-13 for thematic material, language and sexual content.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit — Wallace and Gromit are cashing in with their humane pest-control outfit, "Anti-Pesto." With only days to go before the annual Giant Vegetable Competition, business is booming, but Wallace and Gromit are finding out that running a humane pest control outfit has its drawbacks as their home fills to the brim with captive rabbits.

Voiced by Helena Bonham Carter and Ralph Fiennes.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit is rated G.

Two for the Money — Brandon Lane is a former college football star whose uncanny ability to predict the outcome of a game introduces him to an unexpected new career. Brandon's talent makes him a prime candidate for recruitment by Walter Abraham, the head of one of the biggest sports consulting operations in the country.

Starring Al Pacino, Matthew McConaughey and Rene Russo.

Two for the Money is rated R for pervasive language, a scene of sexuality and a violent act.

Waiting — A waiter for four years since high school, Dean (Ryan Reynolds) has never questioned his job. But when he learns that a high school classmate has a lucrative career, he's thrown into turmoil about his dead-end life.

Waiting is rated R for strong crude and sexual humor, pervasive language and drug use.

The first Oktoberfest took place in 1810 to celebrate the wedding of Crown Prince Luitpold I and Princess Theressa of Bavaria. Anniversary celebrations have continued in Munich each year for almost 200 years, except during times of war. Today, almost a million people visit Munich every year to celebrate Oktoberfest.

TSYS pays back by the yard

Local businessmen and women from TSYS in Columbus took the day off Oct. 13 to do yard work. But they weren't working at their own homes.

They volunteered to manicure the lawns of Fort Benning family's with deployed Soldiers.

"This is nothing compared to what our Soldiers are going through," said Joe Brooks, a TSYS volunteer. "We want to contribute as much as we can. This is the reason we concentrate on this kind of project."

Brooks and more than 20 of his colleagues wanted to demonstrate their support of the Soldiers deployed in support of the Global War on Terrorism and do something that would impact their families.

The 36th Engineer Group's family readiness assistant helped them locate 15 spouses who would benefit the most from the project.

"Our Soldiers are deployed, they're defending their country," said FRG assistant Evelyn Livermore. "The spouses are back here, keeping the family running, keeping the house running, taking care of their kids, possibly going to school, having jobs."

Lawanda Culler, whose husband, Gabe, deployed to Iraq in December, has four children from 9 years to 6 months. She attends classes at Columbus Technical Institute.

"By the time I'm through with (my class work), I'm going to bed at 3 o'clock," said Culler, whose husband typically maintains the yard. "I miss him doing it, but if they want to help, I'm grateful."

Brooks said he hopes the project will free up time for Culler to focus on the important things.

"Just to get the equipment together would probably have taken a couple days," he said.

"She doesn't need to be doing that. She should be spending time with her children."

Rangers teach teens biblical principles of manhood

Before there was Survivor, there were survivor*s*, local boys on their way to manhood via R.E.A.L. Adventure Ministries' Extreme Survival Weekend.

Mike Ivey, a Fort Benning employee and former Ranger, launched R.E.A.L. Adventures in the summer of 2000. Then, twice a year, Ivey and a handful of retired Rangers guided the boys, ages 14 to 18, through a rigorous survival course on 3,000 acres of privately owned land — rugged, thickly wooded, overgrown and boggy land — in Juniper, Ga. It served dual purposes — to teach survival skills and the biblical principles of responsible manhood, Ivey said.

"Nobody gives them clear milestones in this life to mark the course to adulthood," he said. "We don't want them to think drinking their first beer or having sex for the first time makes them men. We're trying to teach them the right course to take to become Godly men who understand their roles and responsibilities in society as men and leaders."

Ivey conceived R.E.A.L. Adventures after reading Raising a Modern Day Knight, by Robert Lewis. Based on the medieval rituals of knighthood, the book encourages fathers to raise spiritually strong sons — modern day knights — through the practical application of biblical principles.

Mike Ivey, the former Ranger who started R.E.A.L. Adventure, recently returned from two years in Iraq, where he worked as a contractor to help fund the ministry.

Ivey and his Ranger buddies took the concept one giant step further by instituting a series of survival weekends designed to teach young men to navigate the road to manhood while learning land navigation and survival skills.

The program caught on with local youth groups and Christian-based school programs, like Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Now, R.E.A.L. Adventure has grown to include six successive

Benning celebrates Oktoberfest

Events debut at annual German celebration

The first Pumpkin Patch children's activity area was prominently featured at Uchee Creek's Oktoberfest Oct. 15.

There was a pick-your-own-pumpkin patch, hayride, maze, arts and crafts center, games, body painting and nine large inflatables.

Linda Laine, director of Youth Sports and Fitness for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, said the patch, which was geared toward kids in preK through fourth grades, was open Oct. 11 through 13 for Fort Benning schoolchildren. More than 1,000 students visited before the weekend celebration.

"With the Pumpkin Patch open to the public during Oktoberfest, who knows how many children will come through here now," she said.

Maggie Pope, chief of Fort Benning's Resource Management Division, said DMWR has been hosting Oktoberfest for four years.

"We have had smaller versions (of Oktoberfest), but every year we try to expand and make it bigger and better," she said.

Another event making its debut at the Oktoberfest was a 10K cross-country run. Fort Benning sports director, Ken Wetherill, said there were 109 entrants in the race.

"Hopefully this race grows and grows until it becomes a staple here," he said.

Vendors provided a variety of food and drinks. The official Oktoberfest beer was made by the Benning Brew Pub's master brewer, Gregg Jonas.

The Infantry Band played polka music throughout the afternoon, followed by the Gootman Sauerkraut Band.

Fort Benning's commanding general, Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski helped tap the Oktoberfest keg with Phenix City Mayor Jeff Hardin and Lt. Col. Herbert Sladek, the post's German liaison officer.

BBB warns consumers against various scams

Better Business Bureau

Scam artists continue deceiving consumers to obtain personal bank account numbers through an old gift card scam.

In the past, scammers used Home Depot and Wal-Mart names and claimed to have a Better Business Bureau license number.

Now they are using JC Penney and other major retailers in their scams.

Telemarketers have told residents they already have their bank routing number and needed to verify the account number to pay the $5 shipping and handling fee for a $500 voucher.

The BBB wants to remind consumers whenever they receive an unexpected phone call or e-mail requesting financial or personal information, no matter how great the promised "reward," not to divulge any information.

Ask for the telephone number and address of the business or agency making the call, hang up the phone, and call the BBB immediately.

The BBB has also issued an international alert on cross-border lottery scams and company names being used fraudulently on counterfeit checks.

Consumers across the country are contacting BBBs in the U.S. and Canada to ask about the legitimacy of notices they received by mail and spam e-mail announcing they have won substantial amounts of money in a foreign lottery.

Consumers were given a telephone number to call and instructed to cash certified checks in amounts ranging from $2,000 to $9,000 in order to collect their "entire award package."

They were then told to wire the money or send their check to the lottery company to cover fees or taxes.

The names and bank account numbers of reputable businesses appear on the certified checks.

The companies have advised the BBB that they are victims of identity theft and their names and account numbers are being used fraudulently in the lottery promotions.

The BBB in Huntsville, Ala., recently issued an alert regarding De-Lotto Trust Group, Inc. of Toronto, Canada, for the De-Lotto Australian Sweepstakes.

The Bureau received inquiries from consumers in Alabama, Arizona, California, Georgia and Ohio regarding this "sweepstakes."

The notification letters state that the recipient is a winner of a drawing. The check, ranging from $3,500 to $8,950, is payable to the recipient from an account for Apel Machine and Supply of Cullman, Ala.

Consumers who contacted the BBB reported they were instructed by De-Lotto Trust representatives to cash the check and wire funds back to De-Lotto to pay taxes for the winnings.

Some consumers did cash the checks, but were notified later by their bank that the check was counterfeit and they were liable for the funds they withdrew.

The Bureau has confirmed that Apel Machine and Supply, a distributor of mill and plumbing supplies, had no connection to De-Lotto Trust or any lottery-related company.

The BBB in Dallas, Texas, reported receiving inquiries from consumers in Florida and Georgia regarding International Lottery Incorporated, located in Brampton, Ontario, and Golden Investment Trust of Concord, Ontario.

The Bureau received two checks from supposed "lottery winners."

The name of Michael's stores, an arts and crafts chain based in Dallas, was on the counterfeit checks. Both consumers recognized the scam and did not deposit the checks.

The name of a video production company in Dallas was used on a letter and check sent to a New Hampshire woman, who reported the scam to the BBB in Dallas.

"This is to inform you of the release of the final quarter of the Carnival Gaming Lottery, Inc.," the letter said. " ... we have enclosed a cheque for the amount of $3,850 to help you cover the legal fees in your winnings ..."

The Dallas company reported numerous inquiries from across the country about the letters and phony checks.

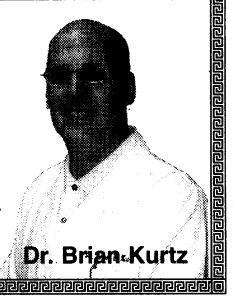
"While most of these lottery notification letters deservedly end up in the trash, there appears to be an increase in the number of people who are taking them seriously," said Ken Hunter, president and CEO of the Council of Better Business Bureaus.

"People need to realize the danger in responding to unofficial lottery-related solicitations," he said.

"If they cash the counterfeit checks, they can end up liable for any funds they spend while waiting for the funds to clear."

Even if no money is transferred to these organizations, Hunter said, simply providing an ID or bank account details to an unknown party makes consumers vulnerable to identity theft and fraudulent use of their bank account."

If you have won a legitimate, legal lottery, you do not have to pay taxes, custom fees, shipping or handling or any other fee before receiving your winnings.



It is illegal to participate in a foreign lottery through U.S. mail.

"Lottery winners" and businesses who believe their bank account data is being misused in a cross-border lottery scheme should report the incident to PhoneBusters at (888) 495-8501 or send information to PhoneBusters, Box 686, North Bay, Ontario P1B 8J8.

PhoneBusters, run by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Ontario Provincial Police, provides a central complaint database for law enforcement officials.

They also communicate with the U.S. Postal Service, the FBI, U.S. Customs, Federal Trade Commission and state attorneys general offices.

The numbers for the BBB in this area are: Columbus, 324-0712; Albany, (229) 883-0744; and outlying areas, (800) 768-4222.

Fort Benning helps clean 'Hooch

Amount of trash in river estimated to be less this year

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Almost 150 people helped remove litter from some of the 17 miles of the Chattahoochee River that runs through Fort Benning Oct. 14.

"More people than we expected showed up," said Gary Hollon, Fort Benning conservation officer for the Directorate of Public Works. "We were able to clear out a lot of stuff."

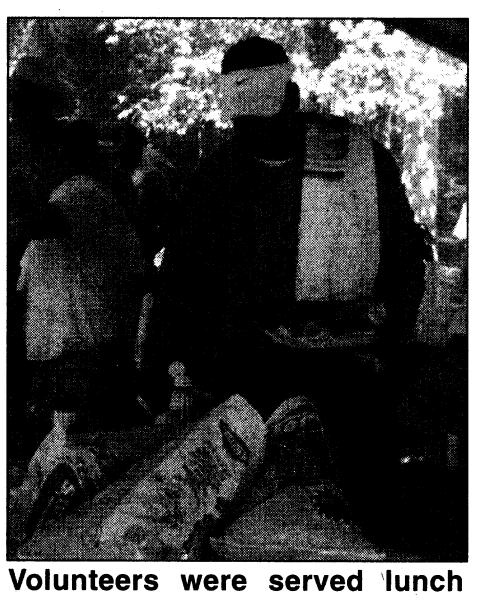
Volunteers arrived from all over post, including a Girl Scout troop, 32 people from Fort Benning's B.A.S.S. Club and a busload of Rangers.

Fort Benning is a beautiful place and Uchee Creek adds to the quality of life , said Pete Swiderek, chief, Conservation Branch, DPW.

"We wanted to show our appreciation by cleaning up the river, and that was accomplished by all the volunteers," Swiderek said.

Members of Girl Scout Troop 177 found a boat, an animal skull, an engine transmission, lots of tires, some moldy shoes, empty beer cans, a car door and many other items.

This is the first year the troop participated in Fort Benning's Help the 'Hooch clean up effort.



"I was surprised by how much trash we found," said Girl Scout Miranda Hull. "It didn't look that bad until we started picking it up."

In contrast, members of Fort Benning's B.A.S.S. Club thought the river was relatively clean this year.

"We've done this every year for about six years," said Randy Blake. "We covered about ten miles today, and this is one of the cleanest years I can remember."

"We appreciate fishing on Fort Benning and always put it on our schedule to help clean up the river," said Harry Hall, environmental officer for the Georgia B.A.S.S. Federation.

The Fort Benning Commissary provided lunch to the volunteers at Uchee Creek Recreation Area.

Volunteers were served lunch provided by the commissary.

"The volunteers were so thorough, we don't need to head back out this afternoon," Hollon said. "Five sites were completely cleaned up."

Help the Hooch River and Clean Up is part of the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission. The Columbus community hosted a clean-up effort Oct. 15 at Golden Park.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE PREVENTION MONTH

Women, children at risk

Family Advocacy Program

Why do battered women feel trapped?

Simply, because they often are trapped. That doesn't necessarily mean there's no way out. However, there are many obstacles safely ending a relationship with a violent partner, and the choices women confront are not risk-free.

Risks of seeking help or deciding to leave:

Physical violence and psychological Harm

• Risk of escalated threats and physical violence, resulting in harm to victim, children, friends, or family

• Risk the batterer will follow through on suicide threats

• Risk of continued harassment, stalking, and verbal and emotional attacks, especially if the batterer has ongoing contact (such as during court ordered visitation)

• Risk of physical harm or death

Children

• Continued risk to children of emotional and physical harm; possibility of increased risks to children if batterer has unsupervised visitation

• Risk of losing children by parental kidnapping or as the result of a legal custody decision

• Risk of negative impact on children as a result of "breaking up the family"

Financial

• Risk of reduced standard of living — possible loss of home, possessions, neighborhood

• Risk of losing income or job — may lose partner's income, may have to quit a job in order to relocate or to fulfill the responsibilities of single parenthood, may be prevented from working because of threats and harassment

Relationship

• Risk of losing help with children, transportation, household

• For elderly women or women with disabilities, risk of losing caretaker

Responses from friends, family members and helping professionals

• Risk of not being believed or taken seriously, being blamed, being pressured to do something she's not ready or able to do

• Risk of being judged as a bad wife, partner or mother

• Risk of being pressured to maintain the relationship based on religious and or cultural beliefs or because the children "need a father"

• Risk that actions of "helpers" may increase danger

Under the best of circumstances, it is difficult to end a relationship with an intimate partner. Love, family, shared memories and a sense of commitment are bonds that are hard to break.

Battered women face the additional risks of physical, emotional and psychological harm. Many battered women want the violence to stop, but they don't want the relationship to end.

Seeking help, getting an order of protection, or deciding to leave only makes sense to a woman when it reduces the overall risks that she and her children have to deal with. There are risks attached to every decision a battered woman makes.

Safety planning is the process of evaluating the risks and benefits of different options and identifying ways to reduce the risks.

For further information, contact Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, or Theresa Sanchez, victim advocate, at 545-4013 or 545-7517.

Effects of domestic violence on children

Family Advocacy Program

Violence is passed on from one generation to the next in homes where battering takes place. Children first learn about the adult world in their families. What are your children learning if you are a battered woman? They could be learning that violence in the home is a way to deal with conflict.

What effect does domestic violence have on children?

In homes where domestic violence occurs, children are at high risk of suffering physical abuse themselves. Regardless of whether children are physically abused, the emotional effects of witnessing domestic violence are very similar to the psychological trauma associated with being a victim of child abuse.

Children in homes where domestic violence occurs are physically abused or seriously neglected at a rate 1500 percent higher than the national average of cases reported in the general population.

Children may "indirectly" receive injuries when household items are thrown or weapons are used. Infants may be injured if they are held by their mother when the batterer strikes out.

Children from violent homes have higher risks of alcohol and drug abuse and juvenile delinquency.

Possible signs of a batterer:

• A batterer is often extremely jealous and possessive.

• A batterer's anger is frequently disproportionate to the problem that arises.

• The batterer's anger is often displaced and exaggerated, with the objects of violence often being small animals and property, as well as family members.

• The batterer often describes the alcohol abuse as the cause of the battering.

• The batterer blames the battered woman for the violence, and the alcohol or drug abuse.

• The batterer has ineffectively or not dealt with his abuse as a child.

• The batterer has hit or been abusive with a partner in the past.

Possible signs of a battered woman:

• She is frightened of her partner's temper.

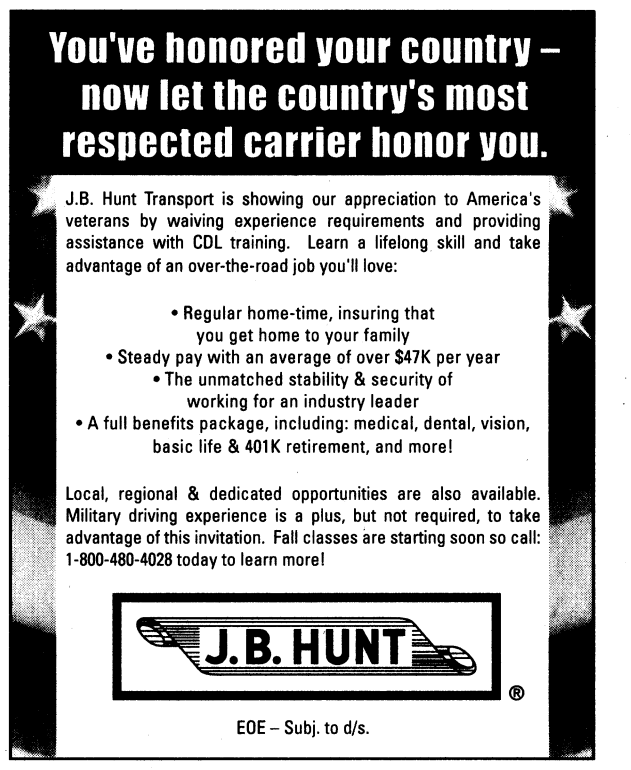
• She is often compliant in order not to excite the batterer.

• She apologizes for her partner's behavior.

• She drinks heavily or uses other drugs to cope with the violent situation.

• She has visible bruises, or other temporary or permanent injuries without appropriate explanation.

If you, or someone you know, is involved in a domestic violence situation, please call for help. The violence rarely stops without outside intervention.



For more information, call Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager, or Theresa Sanchez, Victim Advocate, at 545-4013 or 545-7517.

R.E.A.L. Adventure Ministries survival courses were inspired by Robert Lewis' Raising a Modern Day Knight. Based on the medieval rituals of knighthood, the book encourages fathers to raise spiritually strong sons — modern day knights — through the practical application of biblical principles.

courses, each more difficult than the last. Participants who graduate from the Basic Course, a three-day event focusing on the most basic skills of survival, proceed to Squire Courses I and II, which include advanced land navigation and fieldcraft.

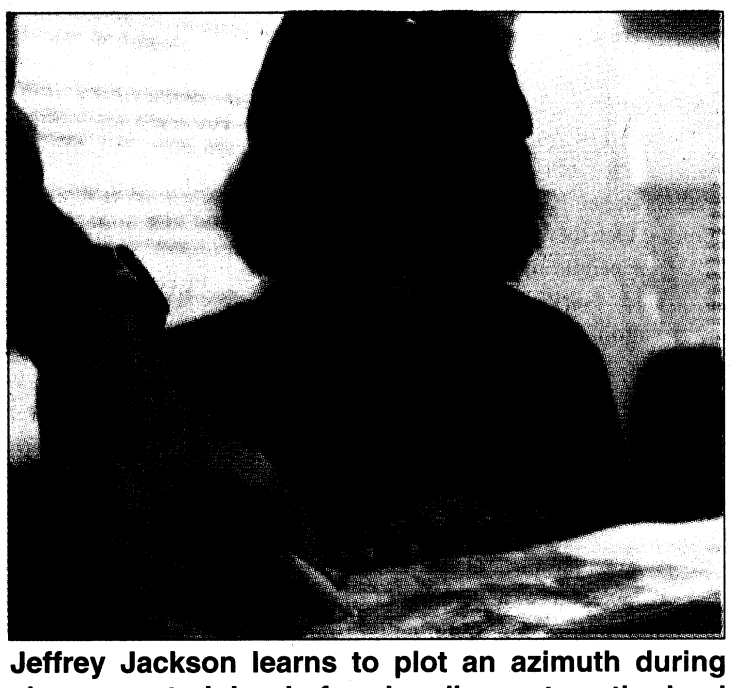
Successful Squires can take Advance Courses I and II, which include rappelling, roping and obstacle courses. The final phase, the Knight Course, is a four-day event for 18-21 year olds. It's a long-distance mission that combines all the previous tasks and tests all the skills they've learned so far.

Last weekend, 13 boys from local churches participated in the Basic Course. During the introduction to land navigation, they divided into four squads, each with an adult Knight Instructor. With maps, compasses, notebooks and Bibles, they navigated their way to four points, designated by the letters, R, E, A and L. At each point, they stopped to rest and hone their spiritual muscles during a brief devotional designed to reinforce one of the four basic principles of R.E.A.L. manhood: Real men reject passivity, Expect a greater reward, Accept responsibility and Lead courageously. They repeated the exercise two more times during the weekend, with each experience longer and more difficult.

"We're using land navigation and map reading as the vehicle to teach them biblical truths with Christ as their compass and the Bible as their handbook," Ivey said. "We're giving them a clear focus, a path that will lead them to manhood."

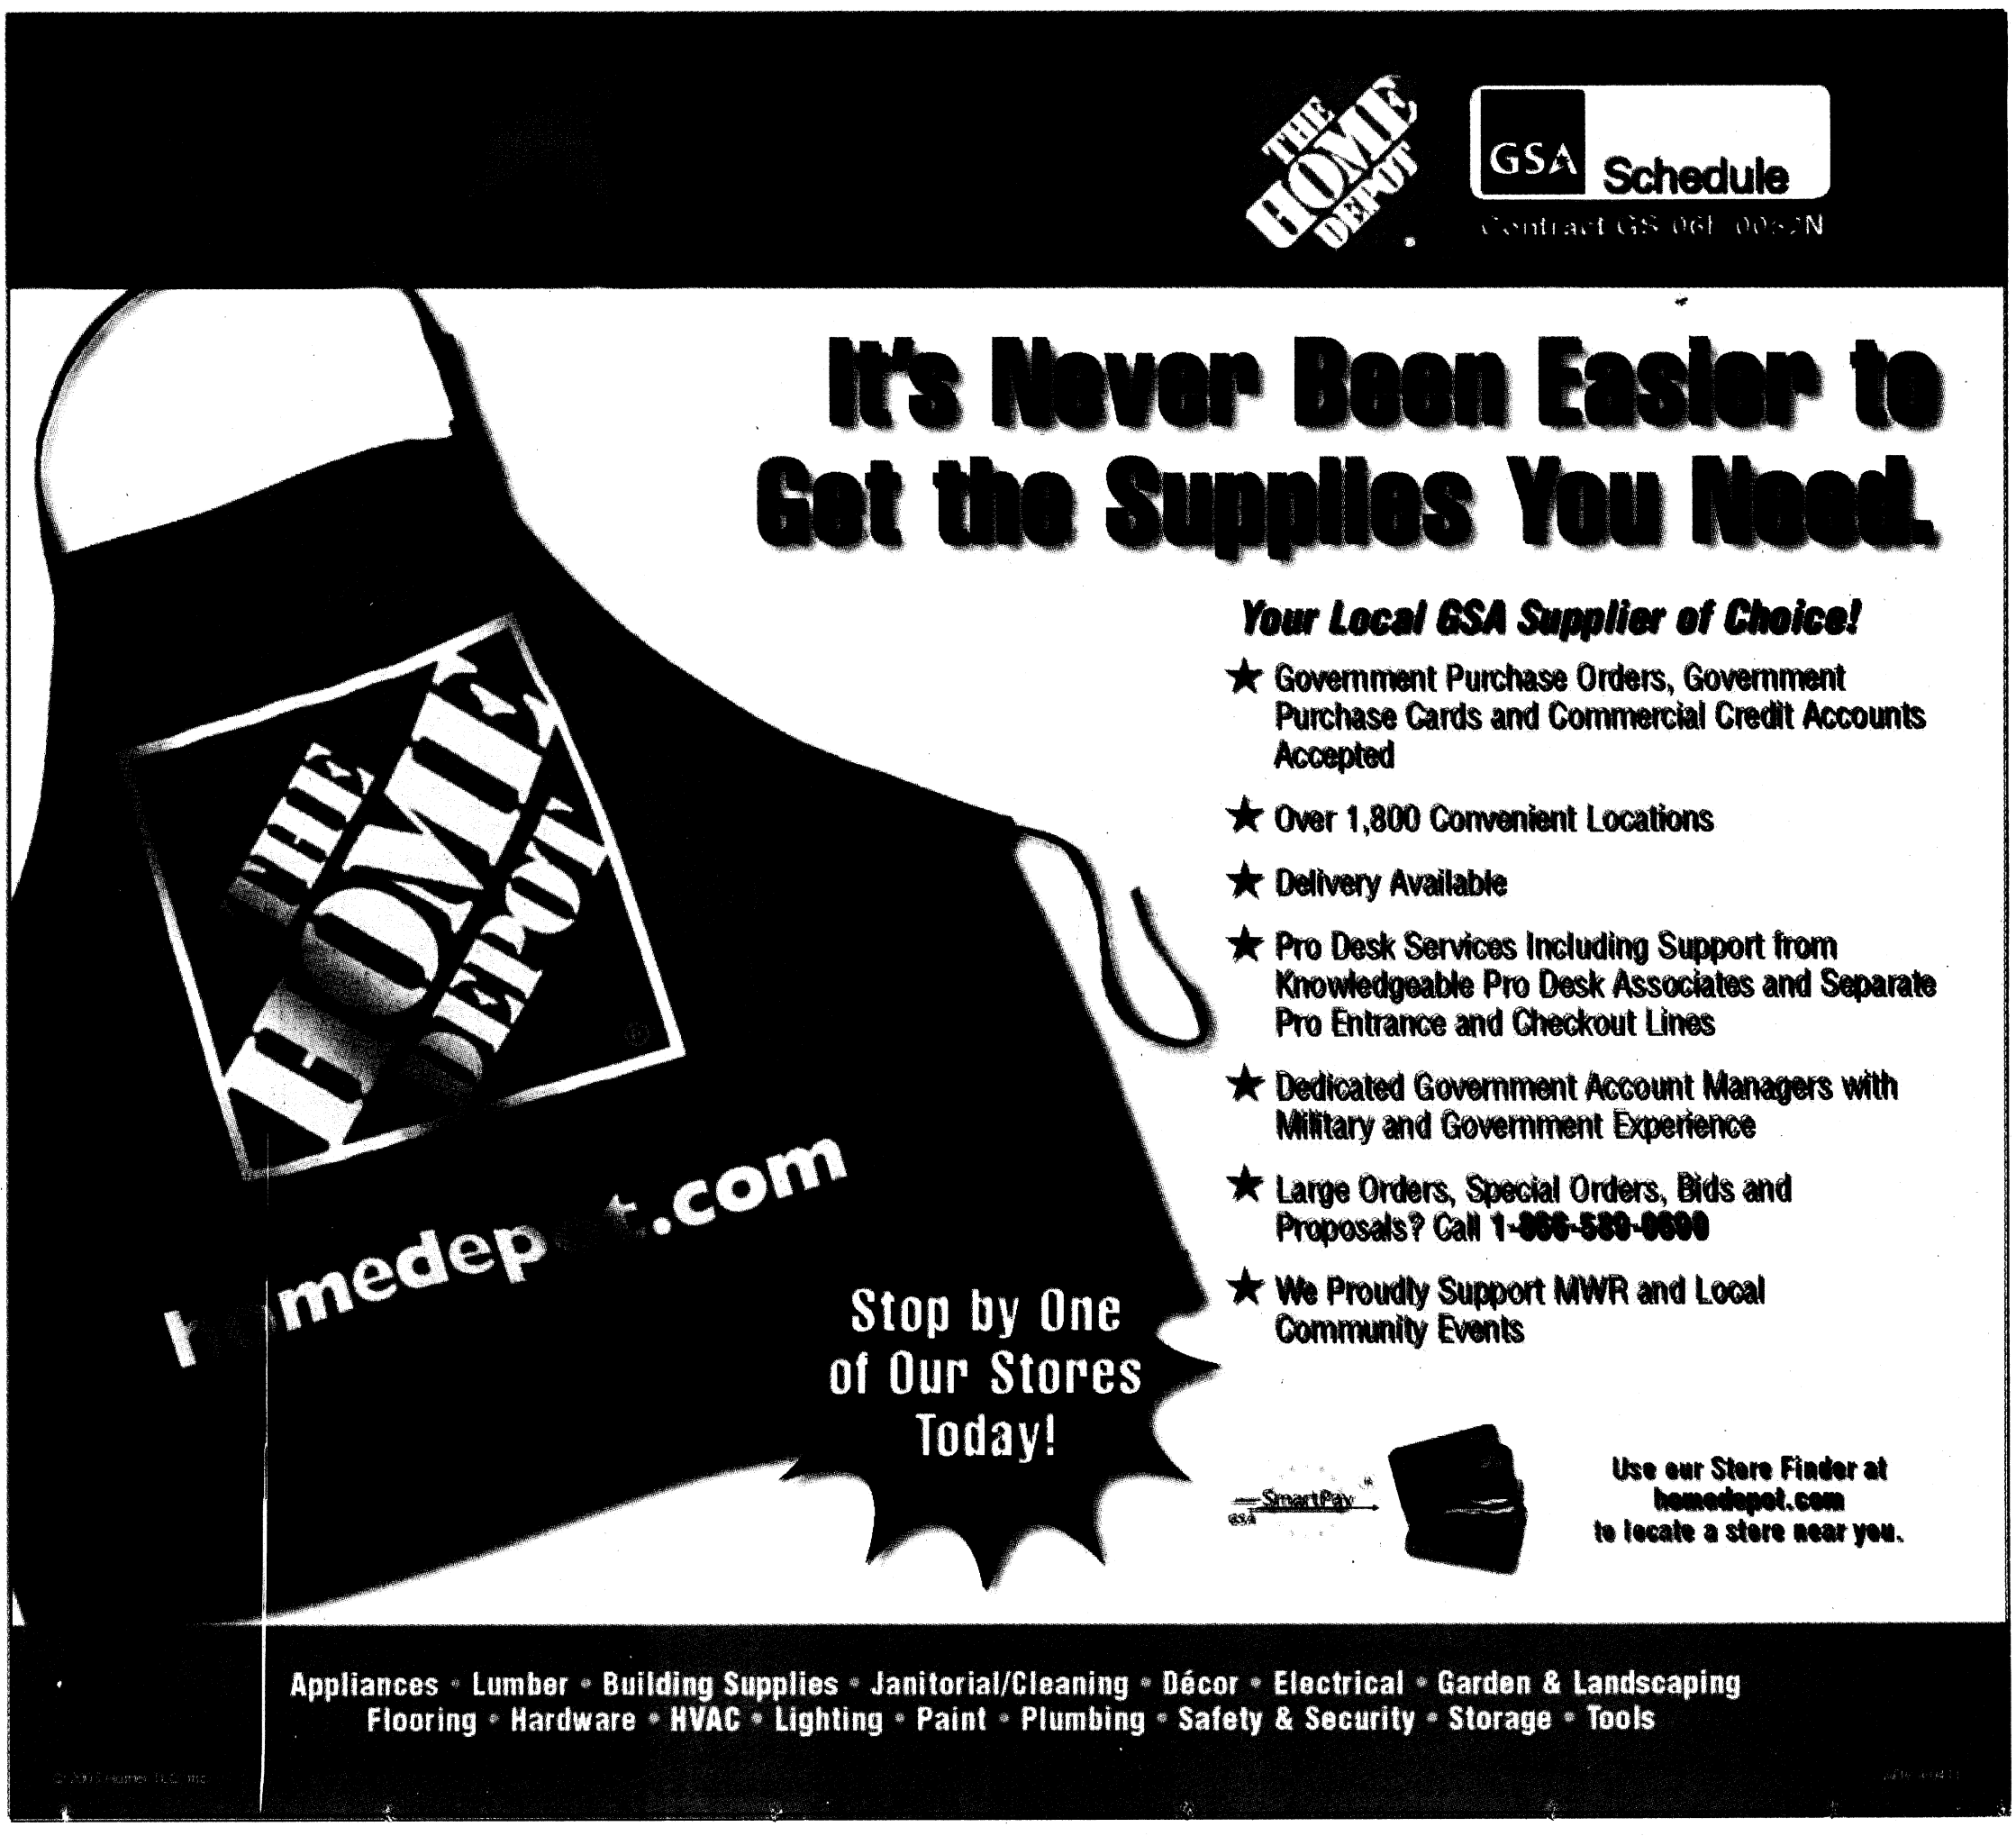
Kyle Sussenbach, a 14-year-old freshman at Northside High School, learned about the program at school. The former Boy Scout has had plenty of experience camping.

"I like being in the wilderness, but I came because I hoped it would bring me closer to God," Sussenbach said. "Being out there makes me realize how much he cares for us and all that he created for us."



Sunday morning, Sussenbach said, he was less enthusiastic about part of God's great creation, the marshy low ground, where his group got lost for a time, despite the presence of a Knight Instructor.

"He wasn't even allowed to talk to us, so we thought we'd never get through that part. It was tedious," he said.



Janet Sussenbach attended her son's graduation ceremony Sunday. The final event was "very revealing," she said.

"He was tired. I could tell it was very challenging for him," Janet said. "But he was enthusiastic. He likes the whole 'outdooring,' thing, the experience of finding his own way. I can tell it enhanced his spiritual life."

REFLECTIONS

I'm not really sure about the origin of the following story. It might be Russian, but I find its application to our daily life very relevant.

It is a story about a bird, a cow and a cat:

Once upon a time, a bird set about the task of testing its wings in the dead of the Russian winter. Pleased with its ability, it quickly climbed into the upper atmosphere.

However, it did not consider the drastic temperature drop of the higher altitude and soon found itself plummeting to the ground, its wings laden with ice.

As it lay in the open field where it had fallen, apparently dying, a cow happened upon it. But not only did it come upon it, the cow actually "dumped" on it. Imagine that, not only fallen but dumped upon too.

Even so, what initially seemed like an insult actually turned out to be a blessing, for the bird soon discovered the warmth of the cow's dung provided the heat to thaw it out.

Hancock

Additionally, the bird discovered seeds, needed nourishment, in the pile. Thawed and happy, the bird began to sing.

This brings us to the cat. Hearing the bird's joyful song, the cat quickly pounced on the bird ... and ate it!

What does this have to do with us?

This fable teaches us the following lessons on human relationships and the work place.

First, not everyone who dumps on you (for example, corrects you) is your enemy.

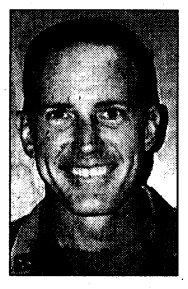
Second, not everyone who digs you out (rescues you or keeps you from learning from your mistakes) is your friend.

Third, if you're warm and well fed (that is, if things are going well), keep your mouth shut. Enough said.

"You can trust a friend who corrects you, but kisses from an enemy are nothing but lies."
— Proverbs 27:6

God designed his first creation to worship

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



"I really, really need to know what my purpose in life is," she said. "I get up, I get the kids to school, I go to work, I even enjoy a lot of what I do. But I just sense there's got to be more. I'm driven by a bunch of things, but one thing I'm not driven by is purpose ... what is the purpose of my life?"

Wow! A chaplain couldn't ask for a better question than that. And I was pleased to share with her what I'm excited to share with you for the next few weeks — our five purposes in life.

Taken from Rick Warren's best-seller The Purpose Drive Life (number-one selling book of the century, besides the Bible), and in conjunction with the post-wide campaign of "40 Days of Purpose," hundreds of us across post are walking a day-by-day journey discovering just "What on earth am I here for?"

If you'd like to get the 40 Days of daily e-mail encouragements that I send out, feel free to e-mail me at Jeffrey.D.Hawkins@us.army.mil and we'll make sure that you join the growing crowd of purpose-driven folks on Fort Benning.

How do you determine the purpose of something? Well, if I want to know the purpose of a subterrainianastrofus-sioncombobulator, who would I ask? Do I ask the subterrainianastrofus-sioncombobulator? Nope! Instead of asking the creation, it's best to ask the creator what the purpose of a particular item is.

Hawkins

And that's the way it is with the human creation, too. If we want to know what our purpose in life is, it's wise to not look to ourselves (the creation), but it's far more effective to look to God (the creator).

In God's blueprint for living, the Bible, he gives us five purposes that we can build our life on and enjoy the satisfaction and fulfillment that comes with "being who we were designed to be."

What's the first? The first purpose in our life is to worship.

The Bible says, "Love God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind, and with all your strength."

On a scale of one to 10, how are you doing on that one? I know I do better on some days as opposed to others, but there is no satisfaction and no delight like the joy that comes when I just love God like I was designed to do.

What's worship? Worship is my response to my creator. It's giving back to God for all that he's given me.

I can worship lots of things: pleasure, prosperity, position, power — but they won't love me back.

In fact, having tried a few of those things in my life, they kind of tasted like a cup of sand. They may have looked great, but after tasting them, they just leave you kind of dry inside.

God gives us what we can't find elsewhere: unconditional, never ending love. And we long for it, because we were designed for it.

This week, try a little experiment. Express your love for God and to God (that's worship). Really! Give it your best in terms of doing it thoughtfully (with your mind), passionately (with your heart) and practically (with your strength).

See if you don't enjoy the fulfillment that comes in doing the first thing your creator designed his creation to do — worship.

If you'd like to join others who are on the same journey, we have 17 home-based small groups meeting all across post and off-post. Connect with us at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill or give me a call at 545-9014 for more information.

The Houston Astros are in their first World Series in franchise history. Established in 1963, the Astros had been one of only six teams to never advance to the World Series. They had been 0-5 in their NLCS appearances, including last year's series against the St. Louis Cardinals.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• Wie gets DQ'ed

In her first start since she turned pro, 16-year-old Michelle Wie was disqualified Oct. 16 after taking a bad drop Oct. 15, which eventually led to her signing an incorrect scorecard.

Wie should have added two strokes to her third-round 71, not one.

• Hull throws in his skates

Hockey great Brett Hull retired just five games into the season Oct. 15 from the Phoenix Coyotes.

Hull, 41, is the third all-time leading scorer in the NHL, behind Wayne Gretzky and Gordie Howe.

• Johnson wins in his "house"

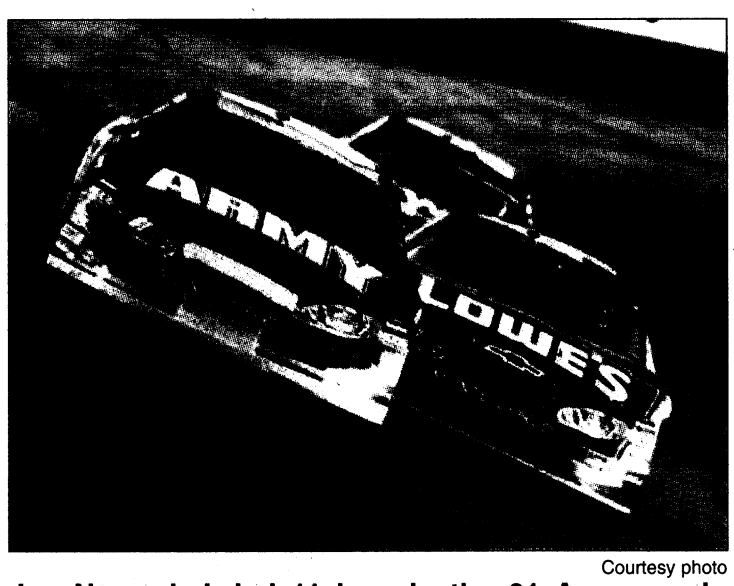
Jimmie Johnson did what he set out to do Oct. 15 at Lowe's Motor Speedway — win. The debacle of the night was the tire problem — the track underwent a grinding process twice as a temporary fix. Shame on you Humpy!

• On to the World Series

It's the Chicago White Sox versus the Houston Astros in the World Series.

First game is Saturday at 8 p.m. on Fox, in Chicago. Second is at 8:10 p.m. Sunday. Check listings for more game times.

• [illegible] in shock!



I've never seen a better college football game than the USC-Notre Dame game Oct. 15. It comes close to some of the Super Bowls I've seen, but I'm still in shock over what a game. USC won, but illegally. So, ND won on my TV.

Joe Nemechek led 11 laps in the 01 Army car in Saturday's race in Charlotte, N.C. Nemechek finished fourth.

Nemechek fights back to fourth at Charlotte

David Ferroni
Army News Service

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Overcoming adversity has been the trademark of Joe Nemechek and the U.S. Army Team. Saturday night at Lowe's Motor Speedway, the 01 team's comeback was dramatic, as Nemechek battled from the rear of the field to finish fourth in the UAW-GM Quality 500.

Twice during the 336-lap event, the Army of One team was forced to replace a battery due to an electrical problem. Following each replacement, Nemechek fell a lap and was relegated to the back of the pack.

"You talk about fight and spirit, we had it tonight," said Nemechek, who retook the lead on lap 320 and held it until eventual race winner Jimmie Johnson passed him with 12 laps remaining.

"My car was a little tight in the middle of the corner, and Jimmie (took) advantage of that," Nemechek said. "What feels good is that we put ourselves in position to win. We're ready to keep on going and get that first win of the season for our Soldiers."

Nemechek, who was the only non-Chase driver to finish in the top five, made a gain in the Nextel Cup standings. He jumped two positions — from 15th to 13th — and is six points out of 12th and 17 out of 11th.

"After not making the Chase, our goal was to finish 11th and that is now within our grasp," said Nemechek, who ran up front until his alternator started to malfunction near the 200-lap mark. From that point, a combination of savvy driving, calculated pit strategy by crew chief Ryan Pemberton, and excellent pit stops propelled the 01 Chevy to the front.

"I can't say enough about this team," Nemechek said. "The pit crew was incredible. We gained on almost every stop, and toward the end, when we really needed a couple of quick stops, the guys came through."

A decision by Pemberton not to pit following a caution on lap 268 put Nemechek back in contention. While the majority of the teams pitted for fresh rubber, Nemechek moved into ninth place when the race was restarted on lap 275. He remained in the top 10 for the remainder of the event.

The 505-mile race, which went into overtime, saw numerous blown tires.

"It didn't seem like the tires would go for more than 30 laps," Nemechek said. " I was just trying to run the pace I thought my tires would withstand. You would see somebody go by you and pretty soon they would be in the fence."

The next stop for Nemechek and the U.S. Army team will be Sunday at Martinsville, Va., Speedway.

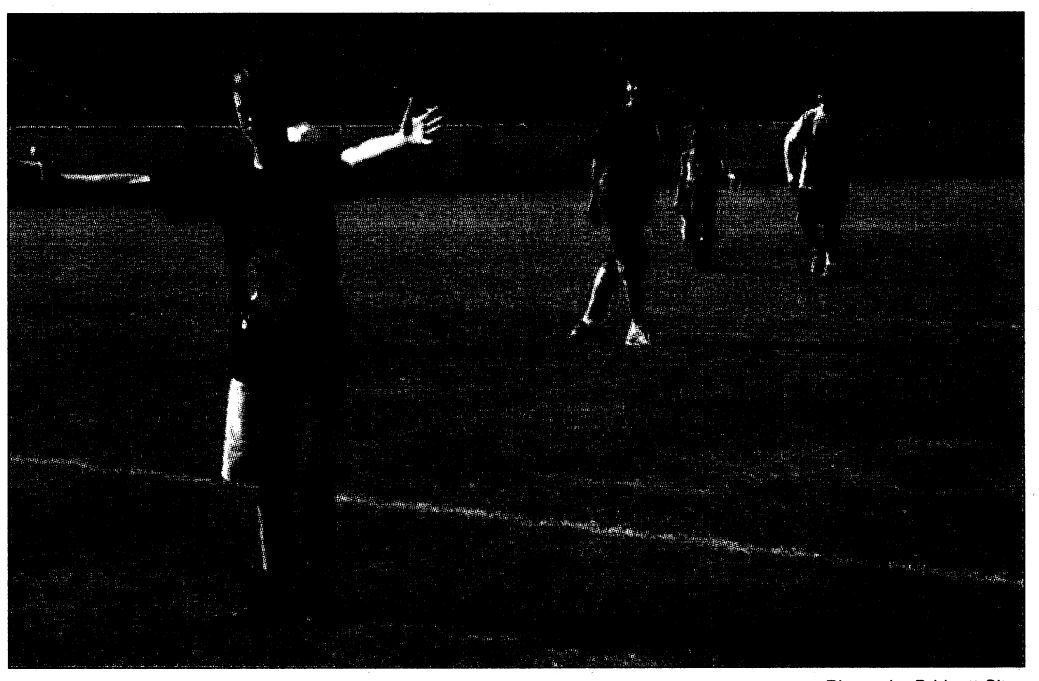
Fort Benning schoolchildren were out in force Saturday for the Columbus Kids inMotion Fitness Challenge held on the grounds of the Hughston Orthopedic Hospital.

Wilson Elementary P.E teacher Becky Archilla went and spotted her students in the crowd of youngsters participating in the morning's events — a shuttle run, 50-yard dash, standing long jump and sit-ups.

"The program is wonderful," she said. "The kids are excited about it. They're getting off the couch and out from in front of the TV and playing outside.



And that's the whole aim of this year's test of the KiM program, sponsored by the Columbus Sports Council and several local businesses. Children register online, then track the hours they spend participating in physical activities.

The goal is for each child to log at least 24 hours between August and November. Although Fort Benning Schools are not participating in the online portion of the challenge, which will award monetary prizes for the top three schools logging the most hours overall, the post students are receiving the incentive prizes for reaching hour milestones.

Children who went to the Fitness Challenge earned ribbons for each event and

A group of Fort Benning students took advantage of the nice weather and a school holiday Oct. 14. They rounded up a bunch of balls and gathered at Doughboy Stadium, where they played a variety of games — soccer, football, dodgeball and keep-away — sometimes all at once. Oct. 14 was a teacher workday, and report cards were distributed during parent-teacher conferences.

Jack LaCamera joined his friends Friday afternoon for games.

Erin Says...

Ken, get out your scissors and laminating paper ... you're ahead, albeit by one game, over Melissa. By all accounts, it should be a tie. Anyone who saw the USC-Notre Dame game knows N.D. really won, especially after Reggie Bush admitted pushing Matt Leinart into the end zone. But hey, enjoy it this week Ken, Melissa hates to lose!

Kids: Rewarded for getting off couch, outdoors to play received a T-shirt. Those who had reached the 18-hour mark walked away with a pedometer.

Archilla said the students' enthusiasm is clearly reflected in the activity logs they hand in to her weekly. As of Friday, her students had logged 12,777 hours, and she'll post the newest numbers today.

"They're waiting for me to hang it up," she said. The update goes up on the wall outside the gym, where she lists the hours earned by each class, as well as the top 20 students.

Every student who reaches the 24-hour goal will receive tickets to the Columbus Cottonmouths game on Nov. 20, where they will receive a medal and T-shirt and be recognized on the ice before the game.

White Elementary P.E. teacher A.C. McGinness and fourth-grade teacher Richard Thomas attended with a large contingent of students.

"We had more children show up for the Fitness Challenge than any other school," McGinness said, "and their performance was incredible. They did wonderfully well."

The children, sporting colored ribbons from each event, were "pumped up," he said.

McGinness said he credits the Kids inMotion program for providing the impetus for a new after-school club – the track and field club.

He expected 10 to 15 children would show up for the group's first meeting. What he got, he said, was more than 30. In the weeks since the club began, the children have brought friends in.

"I have 48 children," he said. "And on any given Wednesday, we have 25 to 30 out running around." On Wednesday, McGinness had to get the students to stop moving and sit down in order to get an accurate head count. He had 44.

"It's just incredible," he said. "The kids are going out in the afternoon and staying busy."

And, he said, the kids' hard work at home and at track practice paid off at the Fitness Challenge.

"We were in shock over the difference in (Fort Benning) kids and others," he said. "I saw one (Fort Benning) boy do 39 sit-ups in a minute. Another little boy got down there and did his best, but he only squeezed out three. The gal who organized this was astounded, but in a good way."

ON POST

CG Golf Scramble — The Follow Me Golf Course will host the CG Golf Scramble at 1 p.m. Thursday.

The cost is $25 in advance or $30 the day of the event and includes cart, greens fees, two mulligans, food and prizes.

The scramble is open to all players. Register in the pro shop.

For more information, call 687-1940.

BASS Club results — The BASS Club of Fort Benning fished a two-day tournament near Uchee Creek Oct. 15 and 16.

First place was John Brady of Fort Benning with 14.48 pounds. He also had the big fish of 5.46 pounds. Second was Jim Irvin of Columbus, 12.49 pounds, and third place was Ben Derrick with 11.52 pounds.

Red Ribbon Fun Run — Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski will start runners at 6:30 a.m. Oct. 28 in the three-mile Red Ribbon Fun Run on York Field.

The run is part of the post's Red Ribbon Week campaign to reaffirm Fort Benning's commitment to a drug-free military and a drug-free society.

The public is welcome.

Hunter amnesty — Fort Benning is granting approval for blanket amnesty to those who failed to turn in their kill cards last year. Hunters can apply to get a new license for this year.

Discount tickets — Omega World Travel has tickets on sale when the Atlanta Hawks play the New Orleans Hornets in preseason NBA play in Columbus Oct. 28. Tickets are $32.50. Discounted tickets are available to active duty, reserve, retired, dependents and DoD.

Omega World Travel is located in the Main Mall Post Exchange. For more information, call 685-1151.

BOSS paintball tournament — The BOSS program will host a double elimination paintball tournament Oct. 29.

Sign in starts at 7:30 a.m. at the Main Post Paintball Field. The first 16 teams registered will play. Teams must have five players with two alternates.

Equipment will be provided or bring your own. No fully automatic weapons allowed.

The tournament is open to all authorized ID card holders.

For more information, call 544-2741 or 544-1411.

Bodybuilding championship tickets — Tickets are on sale for the Mr. and Mrs. Fort Benning Bodybuilding Championships.

The event is Nov. 5 in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. Pre-judging is at 1 p.m. and the final show is at 6 p.m.

For more information, call 545-4300.

Pineside tee times — The Follow Me Golf Course now runs tee times every day on Pineside. Tee times are available seven days in advance and run until 3 p.m. After that, it is first come, first served.

Volunteer marshals — The Follow Me Golf Course is looking for a volunteer marshal for Saturdays and Sundays. Strong customer service skills are required.

For more information, call 687-1940 or see the pros in the Pro Shop.

OFF POST

Adult ice hockey league — Those interested in playing in an adult ice hockey league can call 315-2203 or e-mail BarkmanGA@aol.com.

Getaway giveaway — Take a tour of the Georgia State Parks Golf Web site at www.GolfGeorgia.org and get a chance to win Georgia's Great Golf and Football Getaway.

The prize package features four tickets to the college football game in Athens, Ga. Nov. 19 versus Kentucky, a round of golf for four at the Creek at Hard Labor and two nights lodging in a cottage at Hard Labor Creek State Park, which is located 30 minutes from the stadium.

The drawing will be Nov. 11.

To register, log on to www.GolfGeorgia.org.

Hunter education classes — The Georgia Department of Natural Resources work section includes Clay, Chattahoochee, Randolph, Stewart, Quitman and Webster counties.

If you cannot find a class in your county, register for a class in one of the other counties. DNR requires at least 10 people or a class may be canceled. Preregistration is required. CD's for CD review classes are available at your local library.

To register for a class or replace a hunter education card, visit www.georgiawildlife.com, call the Central Reservations System at (800) 864-7275 or e-mail DNR414@netzero.com.

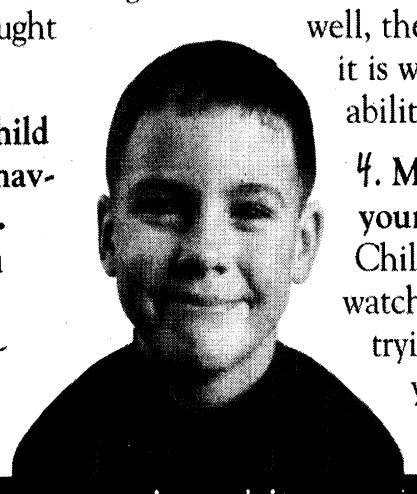
Children Learn More from Do's than Don'ts



Young children will be better behaved when they know clearly what you expect of them. Instead of just saying, "Don't do that," show and tell your child what you do want him or her to do.

1. Teach your child the steps of the desired behavior. It is unreasonable to expect your child to do something if you haven't taught it to him or her.

2. Have your child describe the behavior back to you. This will tell you whether or not your child understands your expectations.

3. Ask your child to demonstrate the behavior to you. If your child can demonstrate the behavior reasonably well, then you know that it is within the child's abilities.

4. Model the behavior yourself. Children are always watching you and trying to imitate your behavior.

Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

In nature
we see reflections of our children.

The tree is the strong one.

The ocean, rambunctious and untamed.

The sky, the absolute dreamer.

And to choose the tree over the ocean
would be like choosing one child over the next.

An impossibility as large as the world itself.

The world's leading environmental groups are working together.

CONSUMER NOTICE

Due to a huge inflow of trade-ins in response to the factory's recent new vehicle promotions and the on going 2005 new closeout deals, Bill Heard has an inordinate number of unclaimed pre-owned vehicles. Add to that number the usual luxury lease returns, occasional buy-backs, repossessions and deals that sometimes fall thru and we have ran out of room to park these unclaimed vehicles.

Year end audits are fast approaching so the order has come down to dramatically reduce and in many cases completely dispose of these cars, trucks, vans & SUV'S. We are forced to sell regardless of loss of profit. The prices below should be considered as opening negotiation point as any and all offers will be taken and serious consideration will be offered, bring only a small fee to transfer ownership.

Posts blasts past goal

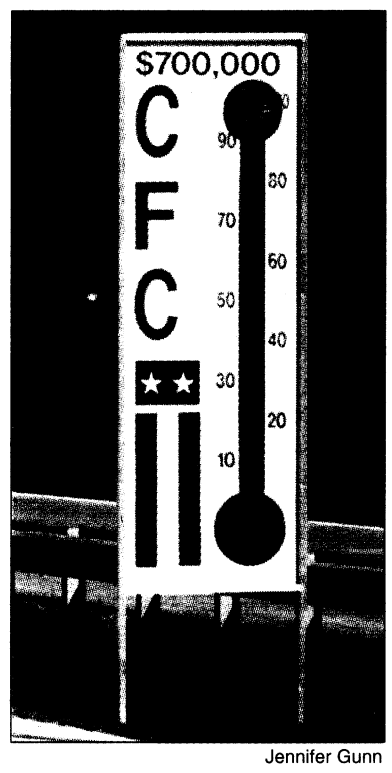
As of today, Fort Benning's 2005 Combined Federal Campaign netted more than $915,000 in charitable donations.

Although the campaign has officially ended, contributions are still coming in, especially from deployed units, said Chuck Walls, Fort Benning's deputy garrison commander and the post's CFC director.

Last year, Fort Benning's CFC raised more than $900,000, but the campaign was extended through December, he said.

This year, Fort Benning raised more than $700,000 by the end of the official six-week drive.



"We've never raised this much money so fast," Walls said. "It's a first. People are in a mood to care for others.

"When we started, (Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, commanding general of Fort Benning) wanted everyone to be contacted. He said, 'If you talk to people and make positive contact, the money will take care of itself.' And it did," said Walls, who credits volunteers with making this year's campaign successful.

"We've got a good team that did a great job," he said. "A huge thank you to everyone for making this campaign a success."

Established in 1961, the CFC is the largest workplace charity campaign in the country and the only organization authorized to solicit contributions from federal employees in the workplace, according to the Office of Personnel Management, the government's human resources agency.

The CFC office at Wachovia Bank on Fort Benning will remain open for a few more weeks should anyone want to make contributions. For more information, visit www.opm.gov/cfc.

Children honor teacher

Memorial tree planted as tribute

Melissa House

McBride Elementary students gathered outside the school Friday to pay tribute to a teacher killed Sept. 15.

Sherian Sansom, a third-grade teacher, was remembered in a ceremony that took place near one of her favorite spots on the school's campus.

At that spot, Principal Del Hicks said the children would plant a Brandywine maple tree and place a plaque.

"We gather to honor one of McBride's finest," he said. "Her memory is underscored with the sadness we all feel. We will remember her for different reasons based on our personal experiences, but she will always be remembered in our hearts. Mrs. Sansom leaves behind, in our students, the conviction and will to carry on."

Sansom's students made several presentations to her sister, Sandra DeRose, her son, Tom Sansom, and his wife, Lynn.

"She was a great teacher

U.S. to continue to fight terrorism

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush told attendees at a military spouses' luncheon that they and their husbands and wives deserve a clear strategy for victory over global terrorism.

Terrorism is "a mortal danger to all humanity," Bush said Tuesday at Bolling Air Force Base. He said the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the United States revealed the terrorists' destructive intent for the United States.

The terrorists would like to strike America again, Bush said. Yet, the United States will continue confronting terrorism and "will not rest or tire until the war on terror is won," he said.

Bush said terrorists also have attacked and killed innocents in Bali, Indonesia; London; Casablanca, Morocco; Baghdad; Istanbul, Turkey; Riyadh, Saudi Arabia; and elsewhere.

The terrorists' goals "are evil, but not insane," he said.

Islamic radicals want to dominate the world, and they embrace an ideology that exploits Islam to serve a violent, political vision, Bush said.

Bush said the terrorists employ subversion and insurgency as part of their plan to establish "a totalitarian empire" that denies all political

Nigerian prince forgoes crown for Army uniform

Tawny Archibald Campbell
Bayonet correspondent

To be, or not to be — a prince? Prince Joseph Asiegbo of Abia State, Obeyin, Nigeria, son of King Eze Young Ogbonna, grew up hearing stories of great warriors. His father told him it is honorable to fight for a just cause.

Prince Joe, as he is called in his country, made a vow to join the military and fight against terrorism and injustice. He fulfilled that vow four months ago when he began basic training with D Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment.

"It is an honorable thing to (serve) among men like these who make the world a peaceful place," Asiegbo said. "I wanted to join the Infantry because they are the real Soldiers — the ones you point at and say, 'This is the Army.'"

Spc. Asiegbo's story sounds like a movie plot. In his 26 years, he has escaped a murder plot; played professional soccer in Europe; seen firsthand the effects of religious persecution; and joined a military halfway around the world.

GHOST GUEST

Finally, two females in the house

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I wrote a commentary a few years back about a ghost I believed to be living in my quarters. I gave several compelling examples of what I thought qualified as a supernatural entity living as the fourth member of the Nash family.

In the late spring, we moved. Not far, just two miles down the road. Several co-workers were interested to know if our ghost had moved with us. I believe she has.

Yes, I said she.

After my husband and I decided it was kind of strange for my then 1-year-old son to stand in the middle of the hallway, raise his arms like he wanted to be picked up, and say, "Hi" to the air, we bought a Ouija board.

We both knew it was silly, but we were curious. We got as far as finding out our ghost was a woman, and while starting to spell her name, she decided to tell us it was over. I don't know if my husband got bored and decided we were done or not, but we ended it there.

After we moved, I didn't give a second thought to whether the ghost had moved with us or not. While spending my birthday putting up our fence and unpacking, the ghost was the furthest thing from my mind. Until a few weeks later.

I was standing at the sink in my kitchen, when I felt someone behind me. I whipped around before my husband could pinch me, scare me, kiss me, whatever he was going to do — but he wasn't there.

OK, I can play this game, I thought.

I proceeded to turn back to the sink, and kept turning around, probably about 10 more times, until I figured out both my husband and son were out back, nowhere near the kitchen or me. That's when I figured out our ghost had indeed moved with us.

Some of my friends think it's scary to have a ghost in the house. She's never done anything bad to us (besides waking me up by turning on the TV in the middle of the night years ago — and the dogs didn't hit the remote — it was sitting on top of the TV).

In a weird way, it's comforting to know she's around, and flattering that she actually moved with us.

I don't know if our ghost is an actual family member or just a random ghost who has always been on Fort Benning. I have heard several stories of ghosts in quarters and other buildings on post.

I know there are some reading this who think I'm out of my gourd or just imagining things. Either you believe in ghosts or you don't.

I have heard and seen too much to believe there aren't spirits among us, and I like to believe that someday I'll be an apparition, visiting my loved ones and wreaking havoc on others.

Don't forget to be nice to me while I'm here.

When greatest generation gets what's coming to them

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

All the medals in the world won't fix a leaky faucet, and all the fancy-shmancy monuments in D.C. don't mean a thing if your ceiling's caving in.

That's the gist of the message my friend conveyed to me last week during the annual House of Heroes ceremony at the Trade Center in Columbus.

He was one of the honorees, a veteran of the Korean War with 20 years of service under his belt. He's 80 now and getting frail. The odds are, he'll never make it to Washington to see the Korean War monument — one of my favorites — or the brand-spanking new World War II memorial (his brothers fought in that one) or any of the others.

But he doesn't waste much time worrying about it. He has bigger concerns, or he did anyway, until last month, when a team of volunteers from House of Heroes descended upon his home and repaired that saggy ceiling, installed safety railing by the back door and cut down the trees that were threatening to damage his roof.

Someone told my friend that House of Heroes is wasting money fixing up the homes of aging veterans who could well afford to pay for someone else to do the work if they want it done badly enough.

Hmmm.

At first, I wanted to throttle the man who said that. How dare he! But after some thought, I've concluded there might be some validity to his statement. Hear me out.

My friend could afford to pay for someone to do the work. Heck, he scrimped and saved and went without for so long, he's got a comfortable little nest egg, relatively speaking, to see him through his golden years. Like so many of his generation, he did without the luxuries my generation calls necessities, and as a result, he can go to sleep tonight (on the same bed he and his wife shared nearly 50 years — the one they bought secondhand soon after the wedding) without worrying that a check will bounce before the first of the month.

If all goes well, meaning nothing breaks down, caves in or springs a leak — we're still talking about the house, mind you — my friend will live out his life comfortable.

But that's a pretty big "if."

His was the Depression generation — the go to school, go to war, go to work generation. The generation that learned to live within its means, then learned to live below it.

So its easy to understand why he chose not to pay a contractor to repair his ceiling. Sure, it was unsightly and a tad bit worrisome, but it wasn't a safety hazard. Not yet. He might need the money for a real emergency down the road. A really rainy day.

I'm reminded of another veteran, several years ago, who decided to use his savings to fix up his house, so he and the Mrs. could live out their last years in comfort. A cruel and heartless contractor took advantage of them, and when the veteran died shortly thereafter, his widow was left with a shoddy repair job and a pile of debt. I wish he'd known about House of Heroes.

So yes, some of these veterans could clear out their bank accounts and update their homes if they felt it was a necessity instead of a luxury. I'm glad they don't have to, because the fine folks who volunteer for House of Heroes — 5,000 to date — consider it a privilege to pay their respects in this manner.

What a shame it would be to spend millions of dollars on fine fancy memorials and monuments a thousand miles away while our local veterans are forced to choose between peace of mind or the repair bill for a leaky faucet. Thanks to our Heroes, it doesn't have to be that way.

Trick or treat safely

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Monday. This is the only day trick or treating is permitted. This fun time for children can be tragic if common sense precautions are ignored.

Parents can ensure their child's safety with the following actions:

• Children younger than 13 years old are allowed to trick or treat. Preschool children must be accompanied by children 14 years and older or by an adult.

• Limit trick or treating only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entryways.

• Children should wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes that are short enough to prevent tripping. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or glow spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

• Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

• Wear masks or head covering that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial make-up as much as possible.

• Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children.

• Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

• Ensure children carry flashlights after dark.

• Never let your child eat anything until you have inspected the treats. Give your child a full meal before they go trick or treating.

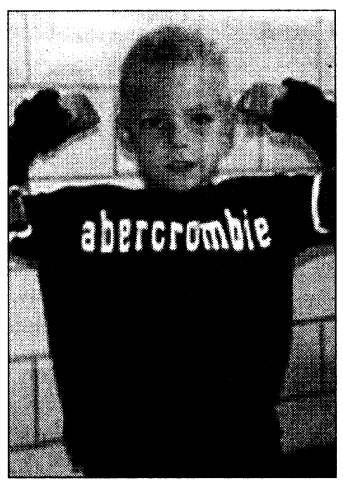
The time it takes to protect our children is small compared to the lifetime of regret a mishap can cause. Enjoy the occasion, but make sure your child is well prepared to avoid accidents and injuries.

— Col. Ricardo R. Riera
Garrison commander

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Veteran appreciates post

Thank you all at Fort Benning. I hadn't been back since 1967. Our visit to Benning School for Boys was an emotional return to a very exciting place in our young lives.



My wife and I found the apartment she rented with another officer's wife while we were stationed at Benning. It was the last place we saw a lot of our friends alive. All good men and all volunteers.

Again, thank you all for being such good hosts to the (17th Infantry Association). Frank Hanner at the Infantry Museum and Bridgett Siter from The Bayonet were outstanding. And the young troops who helped set up the tent and everything at our monument.

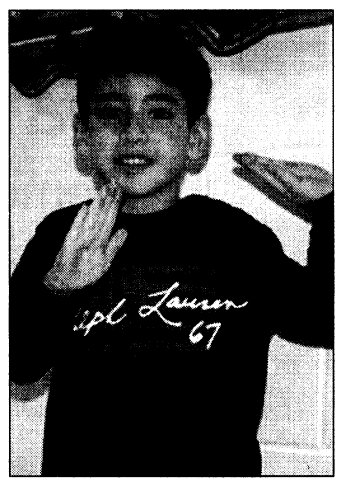
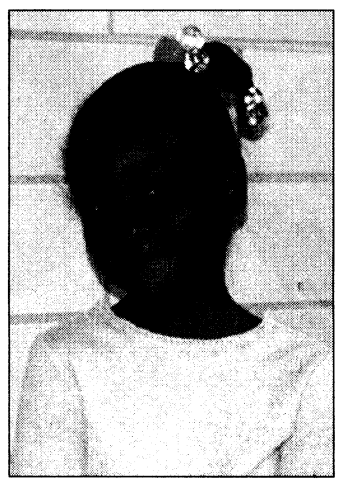
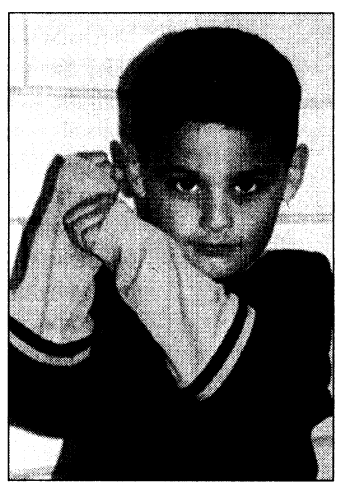
VARIOUS VOICES



What are you going to be for Halloween?



Javin Lipscomb, 5 — "The Incredible Hulk. I have the mask and everything that goes with it. He looks pretty scary. He's so strong, his muscles bulge out of his shirt. If I were strong, I could do anything."



Morgan Holly, 4 — "A (Tyrannosaurus) Rex. They are meat eaters. I like dinosaurs. Mine has a short neck, and it's green with horns on the back. I named it Sparkley. I'm going to roar and show my big sharp teeth."

Christian Torres, 5 — "I'm going to be a Lion Knight. The costume comes with a sword. I think this is the strongest knight. They find bad things and try to destroy them."

Skyler Williams, 4 — "I'm going to be Snow White because I look beautiful in that costume. My mom likes blue and red, and I like green and yellow — those are Snow White's colors.

Michael Hamel, 5 — "I'll be Darth Vader because I have a red (light saber), and I can fight the (Storm Troopers). When we got my costume, I pressed a button on this mummy and it screamed and scared my little sister."

Kaela Lamb, 4 — "I'm going to be a fairy for Halloween, because I had a dream about a fairy and it was pretty cool. A monster was chasing me, and an invisible fairy saved me. My costume is purple and blue, and my mom is going to put stuff on my cheeks. I'm going to be beautiful."

Tomas Cuevas, 4 — "I'm going to be a Cowboy Sheriff who cooks too. I want to be a cook when I grow up, only a little taller (than Emeril). My mom picked (the costume) because the frog costume would be too hot."

RCI lease signing begins

Clark Pinnacle

The U.S. Army and privatization partner Clark Pinnacle Family Communities LLC will begin lease signing on post starting Monday.

Lease signing, which includes BAH and allotment paperwork, will run for five weeks, and be held at several locations. The detailed schedule will be published soon.

Doors will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Under the Army's Residential Communities Initiative (RCI) Program, service members who choose to live in privatized family housing must sign a lease for an initial term of six months. After the six-month term, effective January 2006, leases will automatically extend month to month.

The unique public-private partnership formed between the U.S. Army and Clark Pinnacle will finance, construct, renovate, and operate approximately 4,200 military family homes at Fort Benning and in Dahlonega, Ga.

Congress approved Clark Pinnacle's Community Development and Management Plan this month. The closing is expected in early January.

Under privatization, Soldiers will receive their basic allowance for housing. Privatization does not affect the amount of BAH paid, as those living on- and off-post receive the same BAH.

Prior to privatization, service members would not receive BAH if they lived in military housing.

At the lease signing, Soldiers will sign several forms: A Standard Lease Agreement with Fort Benning Family Communities LLC, and DD Form 2558 to authorize an allotment to transfer rent automatically to privatized housing partner. Residents should bring a copy of their LES to the lease signing.

The lease is a contract between the owner of the home, Clark Pinnacle, and the tenant, the Soldier.

It is a legal document that establishes the rights and responsibilities of both parties and binds them to the terms of the agreement.

Typical terms contained in a lease are:

- Resident move-in and move-out dates
- Amount of rent to be paid
- Early termination clauses
- Move-out procedures

Soldiers are required to sign a lease to protect themselves by defining landlord and tenant rights and responsibilities.

The lease guarantees the resident the use of a home for a specific period of time for a specific amount of rent.

If the service member is currently deployed, spouses need to contact the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate to get a special power of attorney in order to sign the lease.

The Army may pay moving expenses for families who move off base prior to Jan. 1. Families should contact the Housing Office to verify eligibility as soon as possible.

Those who have existing contracts on homes, but will not be moving until after Jan. 1, will be required to sign a month-to-month lease and provide a 30-day written notice to vacate.

For more information, contact the Pinnacle Management Team at 685-3939, 545-8172, or visit www.benningfamilyhousing.com.

and religious freedom. The Islamic radicals twist the concept of jihad, or holy war, to call for the murder of Hindus, Christians, Jews, and other Muslims — anyone who does not share their world view, Bush said. Terrorist networks like al Qaeda spread propaganda while financing splinter groups and assisting them to devise new, brutal attacks.

Regional terrorist groups often allied with al Qaeda operate in the Philippines; Somalia; Pakistan; Russia's separatist Chechnya region; Kashmir, the restive region along the border between India and Pakistan; and Algeria, Bush said.

Regardless of where they operate, the Islamic extremist groups have pledged to end Western and American influence in the broader Middle East, Bush said.

Some terror leaders think America can be coerced into abandoning its interests in the Middle East, including Iraq, he said.

"The terrorists regard Iraq as the central front in their war against humanity," Bush said. Accordingly, Americans must recognize that Iraq "is the central front in our war on terror."

Terrorist leaders want to expel U.S. and allied troops from Iraq, topple the new Iraqi government, and establish a radical Islamic empire "that spans from Spain to Indonesia," Bush said.

The terrorists' ruthless blueprint for global domination shouldn't be dismissed, because they are "utterly committed" to achieving their goals, Bush said.

"We must stop them before their crimes can multiply," he said. Bush said Islamic radicals recruit disillusioned young men and women to do their bidding. Terrorist ideology relies on a victim mentality that blames the West or Jews for complex economic and social problems that exist in the Middle East and elsewhere in the world, he said.

The terrorists also believe the only way that change can be achieved is through violence, Bush said. He said there's only one effective response in confronting such an enemy.

"We will never back down, never give in, and never accept anything less than complete victory" over terrorism, he said.

House of Heroes celebrates success

Volunteers complete 200th house

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Isaac James Avery was 19 years old, working as a gas station attendant, when he volunteered for the Army in 1948. He met Lucille, a Columbus native, while stationed at Fort Benning.

They married in 1953 and had three children in three years. Just one month shy of their third anniversary, Cpl. Avery was killed in Korea, leaving Lucille to raise their babies on her own. She never remarried.

Last month, Lucille was honored by the House of Heroes, a local nonprofit organization that honors military and public safety veterans and their widows by sprucing up their homes — cleaning, painting, doing yard work and minor repairs.

"They practically gave it a makeover," Lucille said. "Almost like you see on TV. Almost."

A team of volunteers — Lucille can't say where the team came from, only that they "just seemed like a big, happy family" — painted the house she bought soon after her husband's death. They installed a ceiling fan, new countertops in the kitchen, fresh blinds throughout the house and a new toilet.

"It feels like a new place," said Lucille, one of 40 guests of honor at the sixth annual House of Heroes Honor Ceremony Oct. 21 at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center.

More than 400 people attended the ceremony, which featured the presentation of flags, each flown over the Capitol in Washington, D.C., to the homeowners from their team captains.

Wayne Anthony, the Columbus City Councilman who pastors a local church, told the crowd he first dreamed of the House of Heroes project while attending the funeral of a veteran. For too long, he said, veterans have not received their due.

"After World War II, they came home and went back to work," Anthony said. "After Korea, they came back to silence. After Vietnam, they came home to jeers. Most of them received their medals … in the mail in brown envelopes. It's time to say thank you."

In 2000, its maiden year, House of Heroes volunteers spruced up one house. The next year, they did 12, and the next 54. Interest in the program has steadily increased.

This year, teams completed 40 houses, less than they anticipated, because volunteers and funding headed south after Hurricane Katrina.

All in all, more than 5,000 volunteers have fixed up 200 houses since House of Heroes started six years ago.

Recycled paper? Maybe not. Don't assume the paper or package stamped "recycled" has been used by a consumer, sent to a recycling center and turned back into paper. Not necessarily so. The only time you can be certain is when the label includes the words "post consumer." The government allows paper mills to market scraps gathered from the mill floor and dumped back into the paper pulp as recycled.

Group comes through for Soldiers, families

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

When her best friend's husband was evacuated to Brooke Army Medical Center, Dawn McMaster went to work finding help. When the Soldier came off his breathing tube, he asked for his parents, who could ill afford more than $2,000 for plane tickets.

McMaster got help — in spades — from an organization called Operation First Response, founded by two women from different areas of the country who were brought together by their desire to do something to help Soldiers and their families.

"It was amazing," McMaster said. "Not only did they get tickets from New York to San Antonio, Texas, but provided his family and the other families with money to help with expenses. And they're still doing more."

Peggy Baker, OFR's president and co-founder, had been on the board of directors with another charitable organization. She visited Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., with a friend whose son had lost a leg and realized there were wounded Soldiers with needs American citizens could fulfill.

So she left one organization in order to found another, and recently, OFR received its official nonprofit status.

"It has changed our lives forever," Baker said. "We get involved at such a critical time in the Soldiers' lives and we've worked with some of them for more than two years. We went to find a way to help and it has turned into so much more than we ever could have seen."

Since its inception in 2003, OFR has sent more than 1,000 black backpacks filled with T-shirts, undergarments, toiletries and a handmade lap quilt overseas to Landstuhl Army Medical Center in Germany. Wounded Soldiers often arrive there with nothing more than the clothes on their backs, she said. OFR volunteer Carolyn Crossley, a nurse and Army spouse, hands the backpacks out overseas.

"The backpacks get information out to the guys really quickly," she said. "So, if they have issues, they can contact us. Carolyn has the hardest job — she's faced with the trauma there."

But beside the backpacks, OFR has been able to provide 300 families of wounded Soldiers with things like plane tickets, cash, food and clothing, depending on their needs, she said. The OFR volunteers are "on call" from their homes in Virginia and South Carolina all day, every day.

"We stay in contact with the Soldiers and their families, even the ones who go home, retire or return to their units overseas," Baker said. "You become very personally attached to them at a time when it's so emotional. You're adding one more to your Christmas list."

And with McMaster's phone call, OFR added a few more families to the list. The group relies on donated frequent flier miles in order to provide family members with airline tickets.

"We desperately need frequent flier miles," Baker said. "Having to purchase the tickets really drains the funds." Sometimes, she said, the funds run out, so they contact other agencies to get help. The Coalition to Salute America's Heroes is stepping in to help pay some bills.

"What a relief," Baker said. "We want (the Soldiers) to be able to concentrate on getting better and we're thrilled to be able to help take some burdens off the families."

"This is our way of letting the Soldiers know that America supports them and cares," she said. "It's an honor to be able to do this."

OFR's vice president and co-founder Liz Fuentes answered the phone at 10:30 p.m. when McMaster called her home in Cheraw, S.C., a small town of around 5,000.

"She was searching the Internet for help and by some miracle, she found us," Fuentes said.

But according to McMaster, the miracle is in what OFR is doing to help her friend's

Salsa on menu for concert

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

A night of salsa music featuring Tito Nieves is scheduled for 8 p.m. Nov. 4 at Lawson Army Airfield.

Nicknamed the "Pavarotti of Salsa" by the Music of Puerto Rico Foundation because of his clear and powerful voice, Nieves has had several gold and platinum albums since 1988.

Latin Grammy award winner Kevin Cebello will open the show, and a disc jockey will play before the performance and between acts.

Betty Mayfield-Currington, marketing assistant for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation recommends purchasing tickets early, because seating will be limited to make room for a dance floor.

Advance tickets cost $20 for one or $30 for two and are available at Omega World Travel, the Fort Benning Officers Club, El Zapata Mexican Restaurant or the DMWR Headquarters, Building 2783.

Off post, tickets are available in Columbus at the El Zapata Mexican Restaurants, 1112 18th Ave., or 6100 Veterans Parkway; Millie's Market, 2033 S. Lumpkin Road; and the Chamber of Commerce, 1200 6th Ave.

Tickets will be available at the door for $25 and $35.

Food and drink will be sold.

Technically speaking

Bridgett Siter

Sue Ann Dixon, Stowers Elementary School's educational technologist, guides Ana Estrada through a lesson Monday Morning during Tech Talk, a computer skills class.

Stowers ed tech offers computer course

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Ana Estrada wants a job, maybe something clerical. The problem is no one wants to hire someone without computer experience.

"How am I supposed to get experience if no one will give me experience?" Estrada said Monday, as she waited for class to begin at Stowers Elementary School, where she attends "Tech Talk" once a week in the computer lab.

Sue Ann Dixon, Stowers' educational technologist, teaches the class, which includes basic computer skills, such as e-mailing, using attachments, scanning for viruses, Microsoft properties, downloading from a digital camera and much more.

"We cover anything and everything they want to learn. There's no such thing as a stupid question — or a stupid person — just because they don't know the things I take for granted when I use a computer," said Dixon, who has taught at Fort Benning for 20 years.

"As we learn more, we progress to more complicated areas. But it's driven by what they know and what they want to learn."

Five weeks ago, Dixon began teaching the Monday morning classes, from 8:30-9:25, for the parents of Stowers students. On Tuesdays, she offers similar training for teachers, who get staff development credit if they choose to attend. Now, she wants to open the Monday sessions to other Fort Benning residents, adults only.

The only stipulation is that Tech Talk students must not bring children to class. That could be a drawback for the parents of young children, Dixon said, but she figures a comparable course at a local college would cost at least $600. The savings alone might justify child-care expenses, she said.

Anyone interested in attending Tech Talk should call Dixon at 544-2438.

Fort Benning AFAP wraps up annual conference

Community addresses quality of life issues

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

The top three issues discussed by the Fort Benning community at this year's Army Family Action Plan conference were:

- acquiring the Army Combat Uniform,
- the amount of time a Soldier stays at one duty station and
- the cost of living adjustment for retirees.

Sarah Hertig, Fort Benning's Army Family Action Plan coordinator, said these issues will be forwarded to the Training and Doctrine Command for review.

"We're all good at complaining and seeing what's wrong, but making it right is where the challenge is," Hertig said.

"That's where AFAP comes in and gives people an opportunity to fix their problems."

During Fort Benning's Family Action Plan conference, Oct. 19 to 21, six work groups comprised of delegates from every demographic group on post reviewed issues that were collected throughout the year.

The group suggested changing the Officers' Club to a community club by opening membership to all Department of Defense ID card holders and improving the procurement system so that Army issue items are in the store within five working days.

Delegates recommended replacing outdated Child and Youth Services sports equipment, changing the current military spouse preference laws to allow qualified spouses to receive employment preference after marriage rather than after a PCS move, and designate a post-divorce consultant to provide information about programs while implementing a policy requiring Soldiers visit a post-divorce consultant.

The AFAP representatives advocated all Soldiers be issued a complete set of the Army Combat Uniform, reduce the stabilization time Soldiers stay at one duty station to five years or less, and fund Installation Management Agency services to meet the needs of people moving to Fort Benning due to Base Realignment and Closure.

Delegates would also like to see a teen television program on Fort Benning's Command Access Channel, a youth-oriented employment database with a supplementary employment skills workshop, and a "Back to School Teen Fling."

Representatives suggested improving the refill pharmacy by creating multiple service lanes, a drive-through, installing a number system for waiting customers, increasing the seating capacity and implementing weekend hours.

> "We're all good at complaining and seeing what's wrong, but making it right is where the challenge is. That's where AFAP comes in and gives people an opportunity to fix their problems."
> Sarah Hertig
> AFAP coordinator

They also recommended developing a children's area with books, activities and media in the emergency room waiting area.

AFAP members also proposed revising current policy to adjust retirees COLA to reflect the same percentage increase as active-duty service members, reducing the premium paid on elective insurance coverage, and authorizing yearly eye exams for retirees and their dependents.

Some issues and recommended changes will be reviewed at the installation command level. Others have been forwarded to TRADOC. Hertig said two issues from Fort Benning's 2004 conference will be reviewed in January at the annual AFAP symposium in Washington — making chiropractic care a benefit for families, and allowing Soldiers to sell back unused leave over 60 days.

People interested in participating in next year's AFAP conference should call 545-2536.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I recently bought a car, but I can no longer afford the payments. Can I just take it back?

A: The purchase of a vehicle usually involves two contracts. The first contract is for the sale of the vehicle, where the buyer agrees to buy the vehicle and the dealer agrees to sell it.

Unless the buyer is paying in full, which is rare, there is a second contract for the financing of the purchase price. The dealer is rarely also the lender.

By signing a contract to borrow money, the borrower agrees to be bound by all of the terms of the contract. If the borrower fails to pay according to the terms of the contract, the lender can repossess the vehicle, sell it at auction and sue the borrower for the difference between the sale amount and the balance on the loan (and any repossession fees).

In a typical case, a borrower whose vehicle is repossessed will still owe the lender several thousand dollars even after the vehicle is sold.

Does it matter if the borrower lost his or her job? What if he or she became ill suddenly?

Does inability to pay affect the borrower's obligation to pay each month?

The answer is almost certainly no. Financing agreements are drafted by lenders, not borrowers, and so the terms of such contracts favor lenders. It is important therefore to speak to any attorney before allowing a vehicle to be repossessed.

Stay safe this Halloween with several tips

Teachers' Insurance Plan

Halloween is a time of great fun for children, but it can be a little scary for parents and drivers. Children are often out after dark, crossing busy streets and perhaps going to unfamiliar homes.

"With the season's shortened daylight and excited kids frantically going from neighbor to neighbor, drivers need to be particularly cautious," said Ray Palermo, director of public information for Teachers' Insurance Plan. "However, by following some simple advice, parents, children, drivers and homeowners can all have a safe, enjoyable time."

The following are several tips and advice on how to be safe this Halloween:

• This year Halloween falls on a school day, which means trick-or-treating is more likely to take place at dusk or later.

If children are out at night, drivers need to be particularly careful at dusk and when driving either over a hill or around a curve, where visibility is limited. Use high beams to see and be seen.

• Trick-or-treaters should always be accompanied by an adult or travel in a group. Children should be told not to eat any unwrapped candy or treats until they return home where their parents can see them.

Making sure kids have already eaten before heading out may help.

• Parents should incorporate reflective tape in costumes or add bright colors to increase visibility. Make-up rather than masks should be worn to help ensure that children have an unobstructed view of their surroundings.

• Trick-or-treaters may be caught up in the excitement of the day and not be as careful as they should.

They should always cross at corners and look both ways before crossing.

Drivers need to keep a careful eye on the road and on the sidewalk, in case anyone darts out from between parked cars.

• Children should stay on the sidewalk or if none is available, walk facing the lane of traffic, and they should carry a flashlight.

• Homeowners should clear their yards of anything that can be tripped over and be sure to have a front door or walkway light on, and refrain from decorations that use an open flame that could ignite a child's costume.

COMMUNITY NEWS

EENT clinic school screenings — The EENT clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital conducts eye, ear and dental screenings for all children entering Georgia public schools for the first time.

The screenings are by appointment only from 1 to 3 p.m. on Wednesday afternoons. The child's medical records, ID and medical cards are required.

For an appointment, call 544-2273.

Power of attorney for housing residents — Soldiers planning to deploy between now and Nov. 30, whose families wish to continue occupying family housing, must have a special power of attorney permitting spouses to sign the required resident occupancy agreement with Pinnacle Military Housing.

The power of attorney is available, on a walk-in basis, at Legal Assistance Division, Building 5.

For more information, call 545-0667 or the Housing Office at 545-2990.

For questions on power of attorney, call OSJA at 545-3281.

EFMP enrollment — The Exceptional Family Member Program has mandatory enrollment for special needs family members (child or spouse.) Enrollment does not hurt the Soldier's career, but assists military personnel in considering the medical and educational needs of the family member in the assignment process.

Enrollment is necessary if the spouse or child meets the following criteria: asthma, a current or past mental health diagnosis, a high-risk pregnancy, cancer (past or present), attention deficit disorder or diabetes. For resource information and referrals, call 545-7517 or 545-4043.

Tips for buying used vehicles

Capt. Luis E. Ortiz
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

The first thing you need to do before buying a car is to do research about the important aspects surrounding this investment. This is especially true when you are buying a used car. Research does not have to be a complicated process; however, there are areas you need to investigate in order to protect yourself from making the wrong choice that can cost you money.

You might be thinking, "What can I do to protect myself if I decide to buy a used car?" The following suggestions can help you out in making an informed decision:

• Payment options — You have two choices — pay in full or finance over time. If you finance, the total cost of the car increases. Remember that annual percentage rates are usually higher and loan periods generally are shorter than on new ones. Make sure the exact price you're paying for the vehicle, the amount that you're financing, the number and amount of payments and the finance charge (the dollar amount the credit will cost you).

• Sales in dealers — You can buy used cars through a variety of outlets: franchise and independent dealers, rental car companies, used car superstores and the Internet.

You can ask your co-workers, friends or relatives for recommendations or you may want to call your local consumer protection agency (Georgia Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs), state attorney general and the Better Business Bureau to find out about complaints against a particular dealer.

• The Federal Trade Commission Used Car Rule — This requires dealers to post a buyer's guide in every used car they offer for sale. The buyer's guide must tell you whether the vehicle is being sold "as is" or with a warranty, what percentage of the repair cost a dealer will pay under the warranty and that spoken promises are difficult to enforce.

Also, it should tell consumers to get all promises in writing, the major mechanical and electrical systems on the car, including some of the major problems you should look out for, and to ask to have the car inspected by an independent mechanic before you buy.

• As is-no warranty — When the dealer offers a vehicle "as is," the box next to the "as is-no warranty" disclosure on the buyer's guide must be checked. If the box is checked but the dealer promises to repair the vehicle or cancel the sale if you're not satisfied, make sure the promise is written on the buyer's guide.

If the dealer fails to provide disclosures, the sale will not be considered "as is." Therefore, the implied warranties may apply. Implied warranties are state laws that hold dealers responsible if cars they sell don't meet reasonable quality standards. For these, like mentioned before, you need to contact your local consumer protection agency.

• Spoken promises — The buyer's guide cautions you not to rely on spoken promises. They are difficult to enforce because there may not be any way for a judge to determine what was said. The best thing is to get all the promises from the dealer in writing.

• Prepurchase independent inspection — It is an excellent idea to have any used car inspected by an independent mechanic before you buy it. For about $100 or less, you will get a general indication of the mechanical condition of the vehicle.

An inspection is a good idea even if the car has been "certified" and inspected by the dealer and is being sold with a warranty or service contract. To find a pre-purchase inspection facility, check your yellow pages under "Automotive Diagnostic Service."

• Spanish language sales — If you buy a used car and the sales discussion is conducted in Spanish, you are entitled to see and keep a Spanish language version of the buyer's guide.

• Sales by individuals — You can buy the car from a dealer or from an individual. If you decide to buy the car from an individual, the sale generally is not covered by the Used Car Rule. Private sales usually are not covered by the "implied warranties" of state law. In other words, the sale probably will be on an "as is" basis, unless otherwise stated in a written contract with the seller.

You need to make sure if the manufacturer warranties or services contracts on the used car are valid and that you as a second or third buyer of the vehicle can use them.

• Problems with sellers — If you think that your problem is covered by a warranty or service contract, but the dealer does not agree, the first thing you need to do is try to resolve the situation directly with the salesperson at the dealership or its owner.

Also, if your warranty is backed by a car manufacturer, contact the local representatives of the manufacturer.

Remember, the whole purpose of these tips is to reduce the chances of making a bad decision when buying a used car. The bottom line is that you as a consumer need to keep yourself informed before buying a car, especially if it is a used one.

Domestic abuse questions answered

Family Advocacy Program

Is domestic violence really such a big problem?

In this country, a woman is more likely to be assaulted, injured, raped or killed by a male partner than by any other type of assailant. Domestic violence is believed to be the most common, yet least reported crime in our nation.

An estimated 3 to 4 million American women are beaten each year by their husbands or partners. The U.S. surgeon general has identified domestic violence as a major health problem to women.

Wife-beating results in more injuries that require medical treatment than rape, auto accidents and muggings combined. Each year, more than 1,000 women — or about four women per day — are killed by their husbands or partners. Domestic violence is indeed a serious national problem that affects not only individual victims, but the entire community as well.

Isn't domestic violence mostly a low-income or minority issue?

Domestic violence occurs among all sectors of society. It happens to people of all racial, economic and religious groups. However, low-income battered women are more likely to seek assistance from public agencies, such as shelters and hospital emergency rooms, because they have fewer private resources than middle- and upper-income women. They are therefore more likely to be counted in official reporting statistics.

Aren't husbands and wives equally violent?

In about five percent of reported domestic assaults, the offender is the male victim's wife or female partner. It is known that women generally resort to physical force in self-defense.

Also, it is known that men who batter deny and minimize their acts of violence. Moreover, males commit more than 80 percent of violent crimes that occur outside the home.

Don't most women ask for it?

No woman wants to be emotionally or physically abused by her partner. Staying in the relationship has much more to do with emotional ties, traditional values about marriage and parenthood, fear, money or the lack of it, and religion.

Choosing not to leave an abusive partner does not mean that you are stupid, weak or naive. It does not mean that you are asking for anything, except to have a loving, fulfilling relationship with someone you care about and chose as a partner.

If the abuse is so bad, why do women stay in these relationships?

Actually, many women do leave their abusers. In one study of 205 battered women, more than 50 percent left the relationship. Moreover, we will never know about the countless number of divorced women who choose not to identify abuse as the reason they ended their marriages.

Battered women, in general, do not passively endure physical abuse, but actively seek assistance in ending the violence from a variety of sources, including police, lawyers, health care personnel, family members, and the clergy. Frequently, it is the failure of these individuals and systems to provide adequate support, which traps women in violent relationships.

A study of more than 6,000 battered women in Texas found that, on average, the women had contacted five different sources of help prior to leaving the home and becoming residents of battered women's shelters.

Certainly, many battered women also suffer in silence. These women endure physical abuse for a variety of reasons:

• A battered woman frequently faces the most physical danger when she attempts to leave. She may be threatened with violence and death or attacked if she tries to flee. She fears for her safety, her children's safety and the safety of those who help her.

• For many women, leaving may not be an alternative. There may be nowhere to go and little or no resources in the community to help battered women.

• Because of religious, cultural or socially learned beliefs, a woman may feel that it is her duty to keep the marriage together at all costs.

• Many women want the violence, not the relationship, to end. They may take many steps to try to stop the abuse; leaving the home may be their last resort.

• Some women will endure physical and emotional abuse to keep the family together for the children's sake. Very often, it is when the violence is directed at her children that she will take them and leave.

More than half of the children whose mothers are battered are also victims of physical abuse.

• A woman may be financially dependent on her husband. She will probably face severe economic hardship if she chooses to support herself and her children on her own.

Aren't battered women's shelters just band-aids for the problem?

Battered women's shelters are not "band-aid" solutions to domestic violence, but important life-saving responses to the problem, just as ambulances and emergency rooms respond to medical crises.

Shelters are a critical component of the community's efforts to ensure the safety and protection of victims. Making available safe havens for battered women and their children is essential to ensure such protection, particularly for low-income women who lack the resources to find safety elsewhere.

Shelters not only offer women refuge, but other essential supportive services, including legal, economic, housing and medical advocacy; court accompaniment; employment and job training assistance; support groups for residents and nonresidents; and child care and special children's counseling programs.

Beyond performing crisis intervention and providing essential victim services, shelters are important grassroots efforts towards effecting the social change that is necessary to prevent and ultimately end domestic violence.

For example, advocates for battered women, working through shelter programs, have worked to pass important state and federal legislation on domestic violence. In addition, shelters also are focal points for educating the community about critical issues, training of law enforcement and other professionals who often confront domestic violence in their work, and for establishing and monitoring counseling and education programs for abusers.

Will the abuse happen again?

You may wonder what will happen if you confront your abuser. Sometimes the batterer will try to use excuses to rationalize his behavior. He may try to trick you by a sorrowful attitude. Or, he may "hook you" by convincing you that you are the only person who can help him change his behavior.

Have you ever thought to yourself, "He promised me that he would never hurt me again."?

The batterer may truly believe that he will never beat his lover again. He may believe that he will be able to control himself in the future. He may believe that he has taught his partner enough of a lesson so that she doesn't "tempt" him into violence. He may try to control you by appearing vulnerable, needy and pitiful. Since women are great at nurturing, they usually respond to the weak, emotional sides of their batterer.

You may want to believe the excuses — that he is sorry and will change, that his workload or his drinking is to blame, that his children need him, that he needs help to change. Sometimes you may begin to assume responsibility for any punishment that the batterer receives.

You may see yourself as the one who must stay by your partner while he gets the help he needs so desperately.

You need to remind yourself, you are not responsible. For more information on domestic violence, call the Family Advocacy Program at 545-4013.

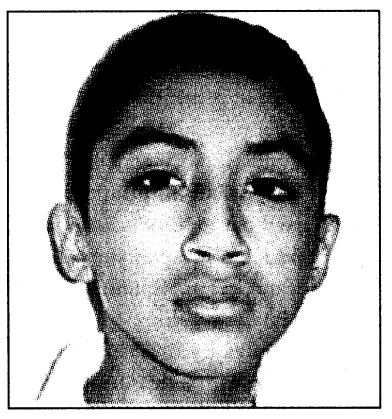
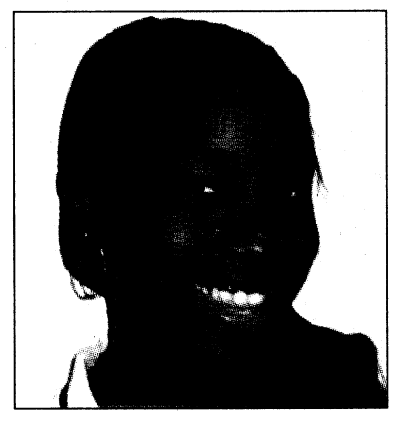
Fort Benning youth in the news

Lisa Madler asked her seventh-grade students at Faith Middle School what makes them laugh. Here's what they said:



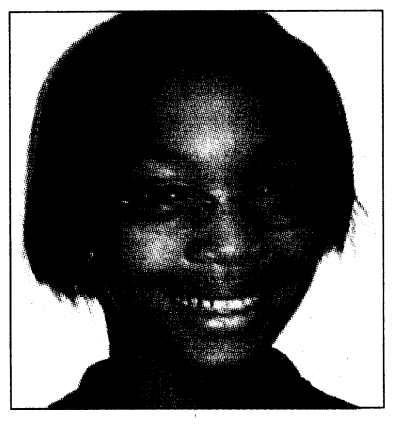
Michael Miranda

"At the top of the list are my mom and dad. They make me laugh when they come home and share a joke or story from their jobs. They definitely work with some interesting people. I spend a lot of my time laughing."



Aurora Nissley

"I like to get phone calls from my little brother, Nathan. He is just learning to talk, and he makes me laugh when I hear the words that come out of his mouth. He is just plain funny."



Danny Hernandez

"My mom does funny things. She messes up her sentences when she talks sometimes, and every time she runs fast, she looks like a mosquito flying."

Deja Acevedo

"Seeing and meeting people makes me smile. They make me feel special when they smile back. Sometimes I think of the dumbest things and start giggling. I also smile when I see food."

Indigo Pullen

"I like to laugh a lot. My mom is a daycare provider, and she keeps lots of children. Whenever I get home from school, they're there at the door waiting for me with hugs and giggles."

OFR: Helps Soldiers, families recover

family and the families of other Fort Benning Soldiers.

"When an organization helps like that and in such a big way. it's wonderful," McMaster said. "It just kills me to see how much they care. These people are angels."And what really stuck in her mind was something Fuentes told her about why she became involved.

"She doesn't even have someone in the military," McMaster said.

In fact, Fuentes only connection to the military is the fact that her cousin's husband served in the Army for a few years.

She got started, she said, watching the war on TV.

"I have two daughters, 22 and 24, and they're safely in college," she said. "I kept seeing these sons and daughters going off to war."

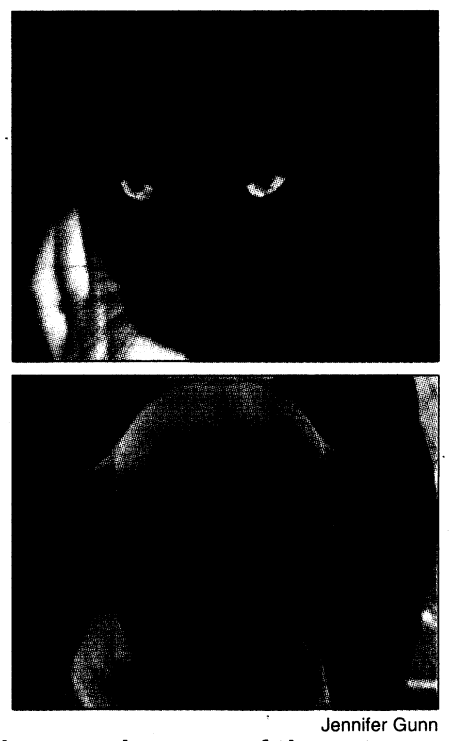
She started sending packages and got more involved, to the point where she met Baker and decided she, too, wanted to focus of the wounded Soldiers.

"We feel fortunate we get support from the American public to be able to do what we do, she said. "We're honored any time someone calls us for assistance because they feel we can help."

Fuentes was on the phone with a wife on Wednesday hearing the latest news from BAMC.

"If it's good news, it's overwhelming. If it's bad news, it's really overwhelming," she said.

And something one of the wives she helped said something to her that stuck in her mind and made her want to work even harder.



"This wife of an injured Soldier — in the middle of a tough time — said 'Don't worry about (us), Just make sure you take care of the other Soldiers. We know we can make it through,'" Fuentes said. "To see (her husband) burned — to see his battle buddies burned and to still be so stalwart — amazes me.

"But it would be nice if we got put out of business," she said.

REFLECTIONS

The month of November is special for most Americans. It includes several days commemorating and celebrating significant religious and cultural events.

Every day of our lives should begin and end with prayers and praise and gratitude to God; and the days of November are particularly noteworthy.

For most Christians, Tuesday is All Saints Day, celebrating the triumph of holy souls over sin and death, and their passage into the glory of God in heaven. The evening before is known as the Hallowed Evening, or "Halloween," in Old English terminology.

Sadly, most Americans have forgotten the evening and day's religious significance. Instead, they've reveled in the frivolous, the macabre, or even the monstrous aspects of death and evil.

For Catholics, Wednesday is All Souls Day, a time for prayer for poor, departed souls in purgatory.

Purgatory is a state of purification, like a refiner's fire or like a reformatory, where imperfect souls are purged from the vestiges of sin, reformed, and prepared for their perfect vision of God in glory.

On Nov. 11, patriotic Americans remember and honor veterans with a special day. Originally, that day marked the armistice after the first World War, which took a horrendous toll on human lives, especially on young Soldiers of the European nations and many from North American countries. Nowadays, European Christians celebrate Saint Martin of Tours, a Roman soldier, whose charity toward Christ in the disguise of a beggar led him to become a man of peace and a bishop of the church.

Veterans Day in the U.S. commemorates all those who, at any time, have given honorable military service to promote the cause of liberty, justice and peace on earth.

Finally, on the last Thursday of November, all religious and patriotic Americans pause with family and friends to give thanks to God. Thanksgiving Day is an uniquely American holiday, with religious and cultural roots dating back nearly four centuries. It represents an expression of gratitude to almighty God for his divine providence in sustaining human life, and an occasion of peaceful relations among neighbors who share this land and its resources.

Thanksgiving to God in prayer and goodwill toward one's neighbor in charity are especially characteristic of this time of year.

We thank men and women of integrity who have answered the call to sacrifice and serve, like the son of God. We thank them and we thank God who inspired them. We thank you, dear fellow Americans, dear sisters and brothers in the universal family of God, for answering that divine call to "build one another up in love," to be your brother's keeper, your poor neighbor's friend, to lend a helping hand to troubled individuals families or nations, be peacemakers and peacekeepers, while prepared to honorably deter unjust aggression.

We were formed for God's family, fellowship

Second purpose speaks of our spiritual family

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Hawkins

"What on earth am I here for?" Isn't that a question we all ask ourselves?

I don't think there's a specialist in Ranger School, a mother in the midst of deployment with a 1-, 3- and 5-year-old, or even a crusty first sergeant who's been around the block a time or two who isn't interested in getting an absolute answer to that question.

The desire to know why we're here is universal, isn't it? And that's why we're in the midst of a special event on Fort Benning called "40 Days of Purpose."

Last week I talked about making sure we turn to the creator of something to ask what the purpose of his creation is. We discovered that this approach works for us as human beings too.

If we're going to understand our purpose, we first have to look to our creator to get that answer. And the first of God's purposes for us is that we were created to worship (honor) him. That pleases him.

This week I want you to know that not only will you experience ultimate fulfillment (that sense that you are being and doing what your creator designed you to do) by worshipping, the second purpose is you were "formed for God's family" — and that's called fellowship. What do we mean by fellowship?

God wants a family, and he created you to be a part of it. The Bible is the story of God building a family who will love him, honor him and reign with him forever.

When we place our faith in Christ, God becomes our father, we become his children, other believers become our brothers and sisters and the church becomes our spiritual family.

Our families on earth are wonderful gifts from God but they are temporary and fragile, often broken by divorce, distance, growing old and inevitably, death.

On the other hand, our spiritual family — our relationship to other believers — will continue throughout eternity.

We are created for community, fashioned for fellowship and formed for a family. None of us can fulfill God's purposes by ourselves. The Bible says we are put together, joined together, built together, members together; heirs together, fitted together, held together and will be caught up together.

You're not on your own anymore. Your faith is not meant to be lived as a solo sport. Going to chapel or church doesn't make you a believer, but true believers always go to chapel or church. They understand that we were formed for a family — we walk the walk together.

The Christian life is more than just commitment to Christ — it includes a commitment to other Christians.

Let that amazing truth sink in — you are a part of God's family, and because Jesus makes you holy, God is proud of you.

Being received in God's family is the highest honor and the greatest privilege you will ever receive. Nothing else comes close. Whenever you feel unimportant, unloved or insecure, remember to who you belong.

If you'd like to join others who are on the same 40-day journey, connect with us at 11 a.m. Sunday at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill, or give me a ring at 545-9014 for more information.

See ya there ... and get purpose-driven!

Gillian Anderson made The X-Files history in 2000 by becoming the first woman to write and direct an episode of the series entitled "all things" (first broadcast April 9).
"It was an amazing experience," she said. "I didn't realize how much I was going to enjoy it."

Scary stuff: Some of the home screen's very best shockers

Jay Bobbin, Kate O'Hare and Beverly Foster Seinberg

Halloween is the traditional time for frights, but on television, they don't necessarily have a specific season.

Almost as long as the medium has existed, series, miniseries and TV movies have been sources of scares. Here's look a some of our favorites.

The X-Files*: Squeeze and Tooms, first-season episodes of the long-running Fox series, both star Doug Hutchison as Mulder and Scully's (David Duchovny, Gillian Anderson) yellow-eyed nemesis Eugene Tooms, whose unique genetic makeup allows him to squeeze through tiny spaces but also forces him to eat human livers to survive. The search for Tooms was harrowing enough in the first episode, but his gruesome demise in the second still causes viewers to have the wiggins. Kudos to writers Glen Morgan and James Wong and to directors Harry Longstreet (Squeeze) and the great David Nutter (Tooms).

Lost*: The constant sense of dread instilled by one of ABC's biggest hits in years qualifies it as a home-screen classic, barely a month into its second season. Questions such as whether Jack and Kate (Matthew Fox, Evangeline Lilly) are destined for romance take a back seat whenever this show goes for the maximum terror it can, and frequently does, provide.

The Twilight Zone*: No series beats Rod Serling's classic for sheer chills, delivered for the most part with sinister subtlety rather than beat-you-over-the-head shocks. There are exceptions, however. One is the unforgettable Eye of the Beholder, in which a woman is hospitalized for plastic surgery to fix her disfigured face. When the bandages are removed and the doctor proclaims the surgery unsuccessful, we gasp at the revelation that her perfect features — displayed by lovely Donna Douglas (The Beverly Hillbillies) — are considered ugly in her world, where hideously deformed faces are the norm.

Another Twilight Zone facial fright comes at the end of Long Live Walter Jameson. The eternally young title character (Kevin McCarthy) is a history professor who actually witnessed the Civil War; he is shot and transforms into an old man, then to dust, before our eyes.

Still in The Twilight Zone, subtler shivers are delivered in The Monsters Are Due on Maple Street. Strange occurrences in a quiet suburban neighborhood fuel residents' suspicions, then their outright hostility and violence toward one another. It's all a plot by aliens to destroy us by turning us against our own.

Duel*: Penned by the great science-fiction short-story writer Richard Matheson and directed by a young Steven Spielberg, this 1971 TV movie is still haunting — especially for those who must deal daily with nightmare traffic.

Dennis Weaver plays a business traveler who tries to pass a rusty gasoline truck while driving through California and becomes the target of a positively satanic case of road rage.

Dark Shadows*: Until Passions came along, no other daytime serial used the supernatural so much as a principal element. The saga of vampire Barnabas Collins (Jonathan Frid) and company was enough to keep back-of-neck hairs raised daily, and many partakers were youngsters who raced home from school ... then tried to keep Mom and Dad from finding out what they were watching.

Courtesy photo

Gillian Anderson delved into cases of the supernatural as federal agent Dana Scully on The X-Files, deemed to be one of the scariest offerings in television history as Halloween approaches.

Night Gallery*: Rod Serling revived his Twilight Zone style of nightmare inducing with this 1970s offering, which may not be as fresh in many minds as the eternally rerun Zone.

Two episodes that remain so are the mermaid story — in which a seagoing beauty gets legs but loses her human head and upper body, turning into a large, ugly fish — and the infamous earwig tale, exploiting the urban legend of the bug that gets into one's ear and eats its way through the brain.

The Night Stalker*: Produced by Dan Curtis (Dark Shadows) and again written by Richard Matheson (from a Jeffrey Grant Rice story), this 1972 TV movie — available on DVD with its equally entertaining 1973 sequel, The Night Strangler — inspired both The X-Files and a new ABC remake.

Irascible, dogged reporter Carl Kolchak (Darren McGavin) tries to revive his flagging career by pursuing a vampire on the seedy streets of pre-Steve Wynn Las Vegas.

It's plenty cheesy, but it still packs both horror and humor punches.

Prime — Rafi (Uma Thurman) is a recently divorced 37-year-old career woman from Manhattan, and Dave (Bryan Greenberg) is a talented 23-year-old painter from Brooklyn who falls in love with her.

Rafi's therapist Lisa (Meryl Streep) is gingerly helping Rafi out of her post-divorce slump and through the urgent alarm of her ticking biological clock. Once Lisa accidentally discovers that Rafi's new boyfriend is, in fact, her son Dave, she finds it difficult to act the good therapist while hearing intimate details of her son's love life.

Prime is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue and for language.

The Weather Man — Popular Chicago weatherman Dave Spirtz (Nicolas Cage) has a shot at the big time when a national morning television show calls him for an audition. Professionally, Dave is on top of the world, but his personal life is in disarray. Dave's painful divorce, his dad's illness and trouble with his kids have him poised on the knife's edge between stability and disaster.

The Weather Man is rated R for strong language and sexual content.

Saw II — While investigating the bloody aftermath of a grizzly murder, detective Eric Mason has the feeling that it is the work of Jigsaw, the notorious killer who disappeared, leaving a trail of bodies — and parts — behind. And Mason is right. Jigsaw is at work again.

Starring Donnie Whalberg and Beverly Mitchell.

Saw II is rated R for grisly violence and gore, terror, language and drug content.

The Legend of Zorro — This movie is the sequel to the 1998 film The Mask of Zorro. Alejandro (Antonio Banderas) and Elena (Catherine Zeta-Jones) are married and have a 10-year-old son, Joaquin (Adrian Alonso). Though Alejandro continues to don the mask of Zorro to protect the poor and oppressed residents of the California territory from the greed of the overlords, he is torn between his duty and desire for a more normal life.

The Legend of Zorro is rated PG for sequences of violence, peril and action, language and suggestive moments.

Doom — Something has gone wrong at a remote scientific research station on Mars. All research has ceased. Communication has failed. And the messages that do get through are less than comforting. It's a level-five quarantine, and the only souls allowed in or out are the Rapid Response Tactical Squad — hardened Marines armed to the teeth with enough firepower to neutralize any enemy — or so they think.

Starring Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Karl Urban.

Doom is rated R for strong violence, gore and language.

North Country — When Josey Aimes (Charlize Theron) returns to her hometown in northern Minnesota after a failed marriage, she needs a good job. A single mother, she turns to the predominant source of employment in the region — the iron mines.

When Josey speaks out against the treatment she and her fellow workers face, it takes her farther than she ever imagined, ultimately inspiring countless others, and leading to the nation's first-ever class action lawsuit for sexual harassment.

North Country is rated R for sequences involving sexual harassment including violence and dialogue, and for language.

Stay — A reality-bending thriller about a psychologist whose suicidal client makes bizarre predictions that, to the psychologist's mounting terror, begin to come true. The shrink must race against time to save everything he loves before it disappears.

Starring Ewan McGregor and Naomi Watts.

Stay is rated R for language and disturbing images.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story — Ben Crane (Kurt Russell) was once a great horseman, whose gifts as a trainer are now being wasted on making other men's fortunes. Sonya was a great horse whose promising future on the racetrack was suddenly cut short by a broken leg. Considered as good as dead to her owner, who also happens to be Ben's boss, Sonya is given to Ben as severance pay, along with his waling papers.

Now, it will take the unwavering faith and determination of Ben's young daughter, Cale (Dakota Fanning), to bring these two damaged souls together in a quest for the seemingly impossible goal: to win the Breeders' Cup Classic.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story is rated PG for brief mild language.

The Fog — A thick fog enshrouds a coastal town. The fog is reminiscent of one 100 years earlier that wrecked a ship and caused the seamen aboard to drown.

Sure enough, the sailors are back and out to kill whomever they find.

Starring Tom Welling and Maggie Grace.

The Fog is rated PG-13 for violence, disturbing images and sexuality.

Elizabethtown — After causing the Oregon shoe company he works for to lose hundreds of millions of dollars, Drew Baylor (Orlando Bloom) is fired for his mistake.

Drew is given a new purpose in life when he is brought back to his family's small Kentucky hometown of Elizabethtown following the death of his father.

On the way home, Drew meets a flight attendant, Claire Colburn (Kirsten Dunst), with whom he falls in love, in a romance that helps his life get back on track.

Elizabethtown is rated PG-13 for language and sexual references.

In Her Shoes — Maggie (Cameron Diaz) is fun-loving and irresponsible. Her older sister Rose (Toni Collette) is a high-powered lawyer who watches Maggie's wild life with disdain. When an attempt to live together fails miserably, they go off in different directions.

In Her Shoes is rated PG-13 for thematic material, language and sexual content.

THINGS TO DO

Christmas Made in the South

today-Sunday

The Columbus Convention and Trade Center will host the 15th annual Christmas Made in the South today through Sunday.

The festival features works of more than 300 artists and master craftsmen from more than 23 states and Canada.

Hours are 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. today, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Admission is $5.

For more information, call Russ Hunt at (704) 847-9480 or visit the Web site www.carolinashows.com.

Spooktacular
Saturday

The Columbus Business Improvement District will host the Spooktacular Kissin' Kids Fair at the RiverCenter from 5 to 7 p.m. Saturday.

The fair will include more than 30 activity tables, putt-putt golf, jump machines and a dunking booth. There will also be pumpkin bowling, a cakewalk and pumpkin decorating.

There will be a hayride on the 900 block of Broadway for a ride down to the "Haunted" Heritage Park.

For $1, children will receive a goodie bag and wrist band that will give them access to all the fair activities and trick or treating. Parents and babies are free.

Uptown Columbus merchants will hand out goodies and treats from 7 to 8 p.m. for trick or treating.

For more information, call April Ducote at 322-9078.

Back Lot Drive-in
Saturday

The Columbus Film Society will present Frankenstein Meets Wolf Man and The Bride of Frankenstein, preceded by drive-in previews and short subjects.

There will be a costume contest before the main features. Winners will receive movie tickets.

There will be free popcorn and candy beginning at 7 p.m. and the films begin at dark.

Admission is $8 for film society members and $10 for general admission.

For more information, call Kristen Miller Zohn at 748-2562, ext. 35.

Harvest Festival
Saturday-Nov. 13

Historic Westville's 1850 Harvest Festival will begin today and run through Nov. 13.

The animal-powered cotton gin, believed to be the only operational gin of its kind in the U.S., can be seen in action during the festival.

Visitors can also watch sugar cane be squeezed into juices for the syrup-making process or taste the unique flavor of the juice.

Westville's artisans will demonstrate and teach traditional crafts like pottery making, candle dipping, soap making and much more.

Hours of operation for the Harvest Festival are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Westville is located in Lumpkin, Ga., on US 27.

For more information, call (888) 733-1850.

Chrysanthemum Festival
Saturday-Sunday, Nov. 5-6

Callaway Gardens invites the public to close out the fall season with two special Chrysanthemum Festival weekends, Saturday, Sunday and Nov. 5-6.

The John A. Sibley Horticultural Center will offer a host of fun-filled activities and events including chrysanthemum kite making and a Mediterranean Scavenger Hunt.

Other highlights include demonstrations and exhibits about Ikebana stenciling, stamping, origami and calligraphy and candle making and decorating sessions that use chrysanthemums and other fall flowers and plants.

Activities are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays and 1 to 4 p.m. Sundays.

Activities are free with Gardens admission — $13 for adults, $6.50 for children ages 6 to 12 and children 5 and younger are free. Active-duty military receive free admission and a 50 percent discount for all other passengers in the same vehicle. These benefits transfer to the spouse if the Soldier is deployed.

For more information, call (800) 225-5292.

The Spencers: Theatre of Illusion
Saturday

For more than a decade, Kevin and Cindy Spencer have entertained audiences throughout the U.S. and around the world with one of the most successful touring illusion shows in the nation.

The Spencers will perform at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the RiverCenter's Bill Heard Theatre.

Tickets are $10-$15. For tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or visit the RiverCenter box office from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday or 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday. At the box office, children 12 and younger with an adult are $5, children 2 and younger and sitting in the same seat as an adult are free.

Rockin' at Riverside
Sunday

The U.S. Army Infantry Center will present the Infantry Center Top-40 band in Rockin' at Riverside, a concert of oldies from the '60s, '70s and '80s at the Riverside, the home of the commanding general, at 3 p.m. Sunday. For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Lester McKinney at 545-5313.

Anne Frank exhibit through Monday

On loan from the Anne Frank House in Amsterdam, Holland, the Columbus Public Library will host an exhibit on the life of Anne Frank, through Monday.

For more information, call Patty Chamberlain at 243-2697.

Night of Salsa
Nov. 4

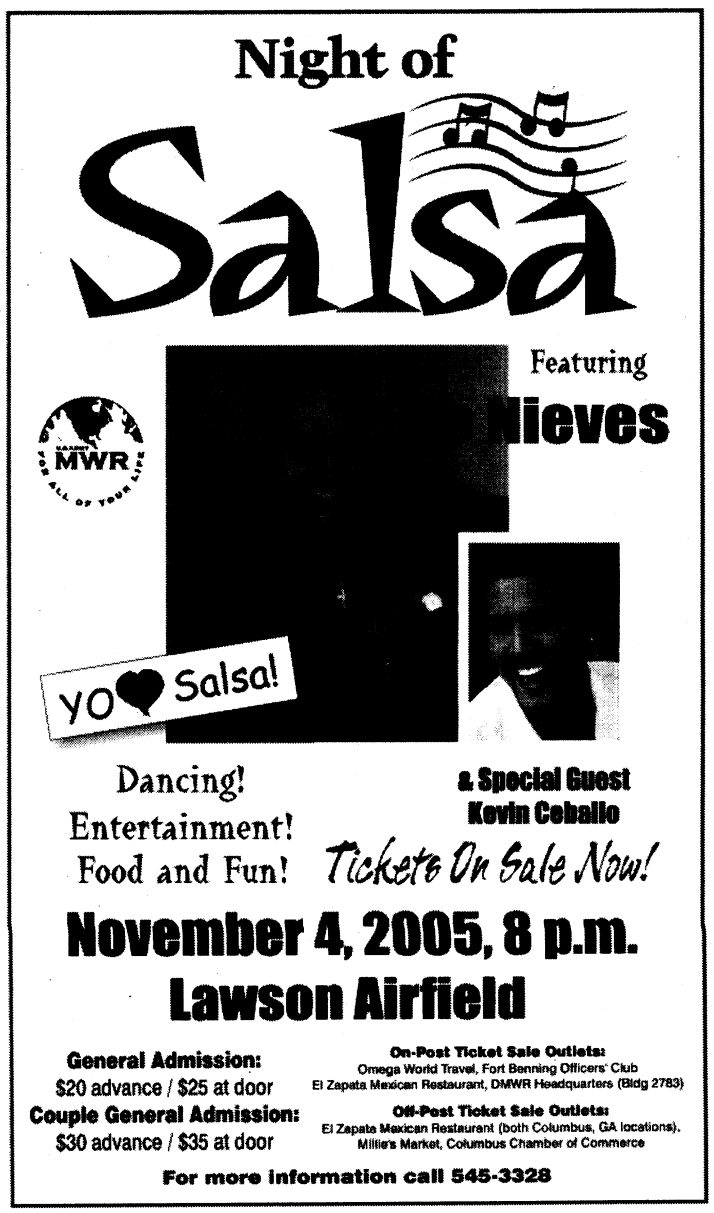
The Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation will present a Night of Salsa with entertainment, dancing, food and beverages at 8 p.m. Nov. 4.

Tito Nieves and Kevin Ceballo headline the event at the Soldier Processing Center on Lawson Army Airfield.

Tickets are on sale now at DMWR headquarters, Building 2783, and Omega Travel in the Main Mall Post Exchange.

General admission is $20 in advance and $25 at the door; couples are $30 in advance and $35 at the door.

For more information, call 682-7599.



Syrup Makin' and Story Tellin'
Nov. 12

Jarrell Plantation State Historic Site near Juliette, Ga., will present Syrup Makin' and Story Tellin,' from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 12.

This program brings the event of the traditional syrup cookoff back to life with demonstrations of the sugar cane mill, syrup kettle, woodstove cooking, spinning and storytelling.

Admission is $4 for adults, $3.50 for seniors, $2.50 for youths ages 6 to 17 and free for ages 5 and younger.

For more information, call (478) 986-5172.

SPORTS

Bench notes

Erin Nash

• Sox sweep Series

The Chicago White Sox swept the Houston Astros in the World Series, winning game four, 1-0, Oct. 26.

The last time the Sox won the World Series was in 1917.

Jermaine Dye was named MVP.

Maybe they'll give Cubs fans some hope.

• Gordon wins

Jeff Gordon stayed out during a pit and never looked back in the Subway 500 Oct. 23 at Martinsville Speedway.

Tony Stewart finished second, Jimmie Johnson third and Bobby Labonte fourth.

• Tiger, Vijay cut

Tiger Woods and Vijay Singh, ranked one and two in the world, failed to make the cut at the Funai Classic at Walt Disney World last weekend.

Lucas Glover won with a 23 under, a one stroke victory over second place.

• NBA dress code

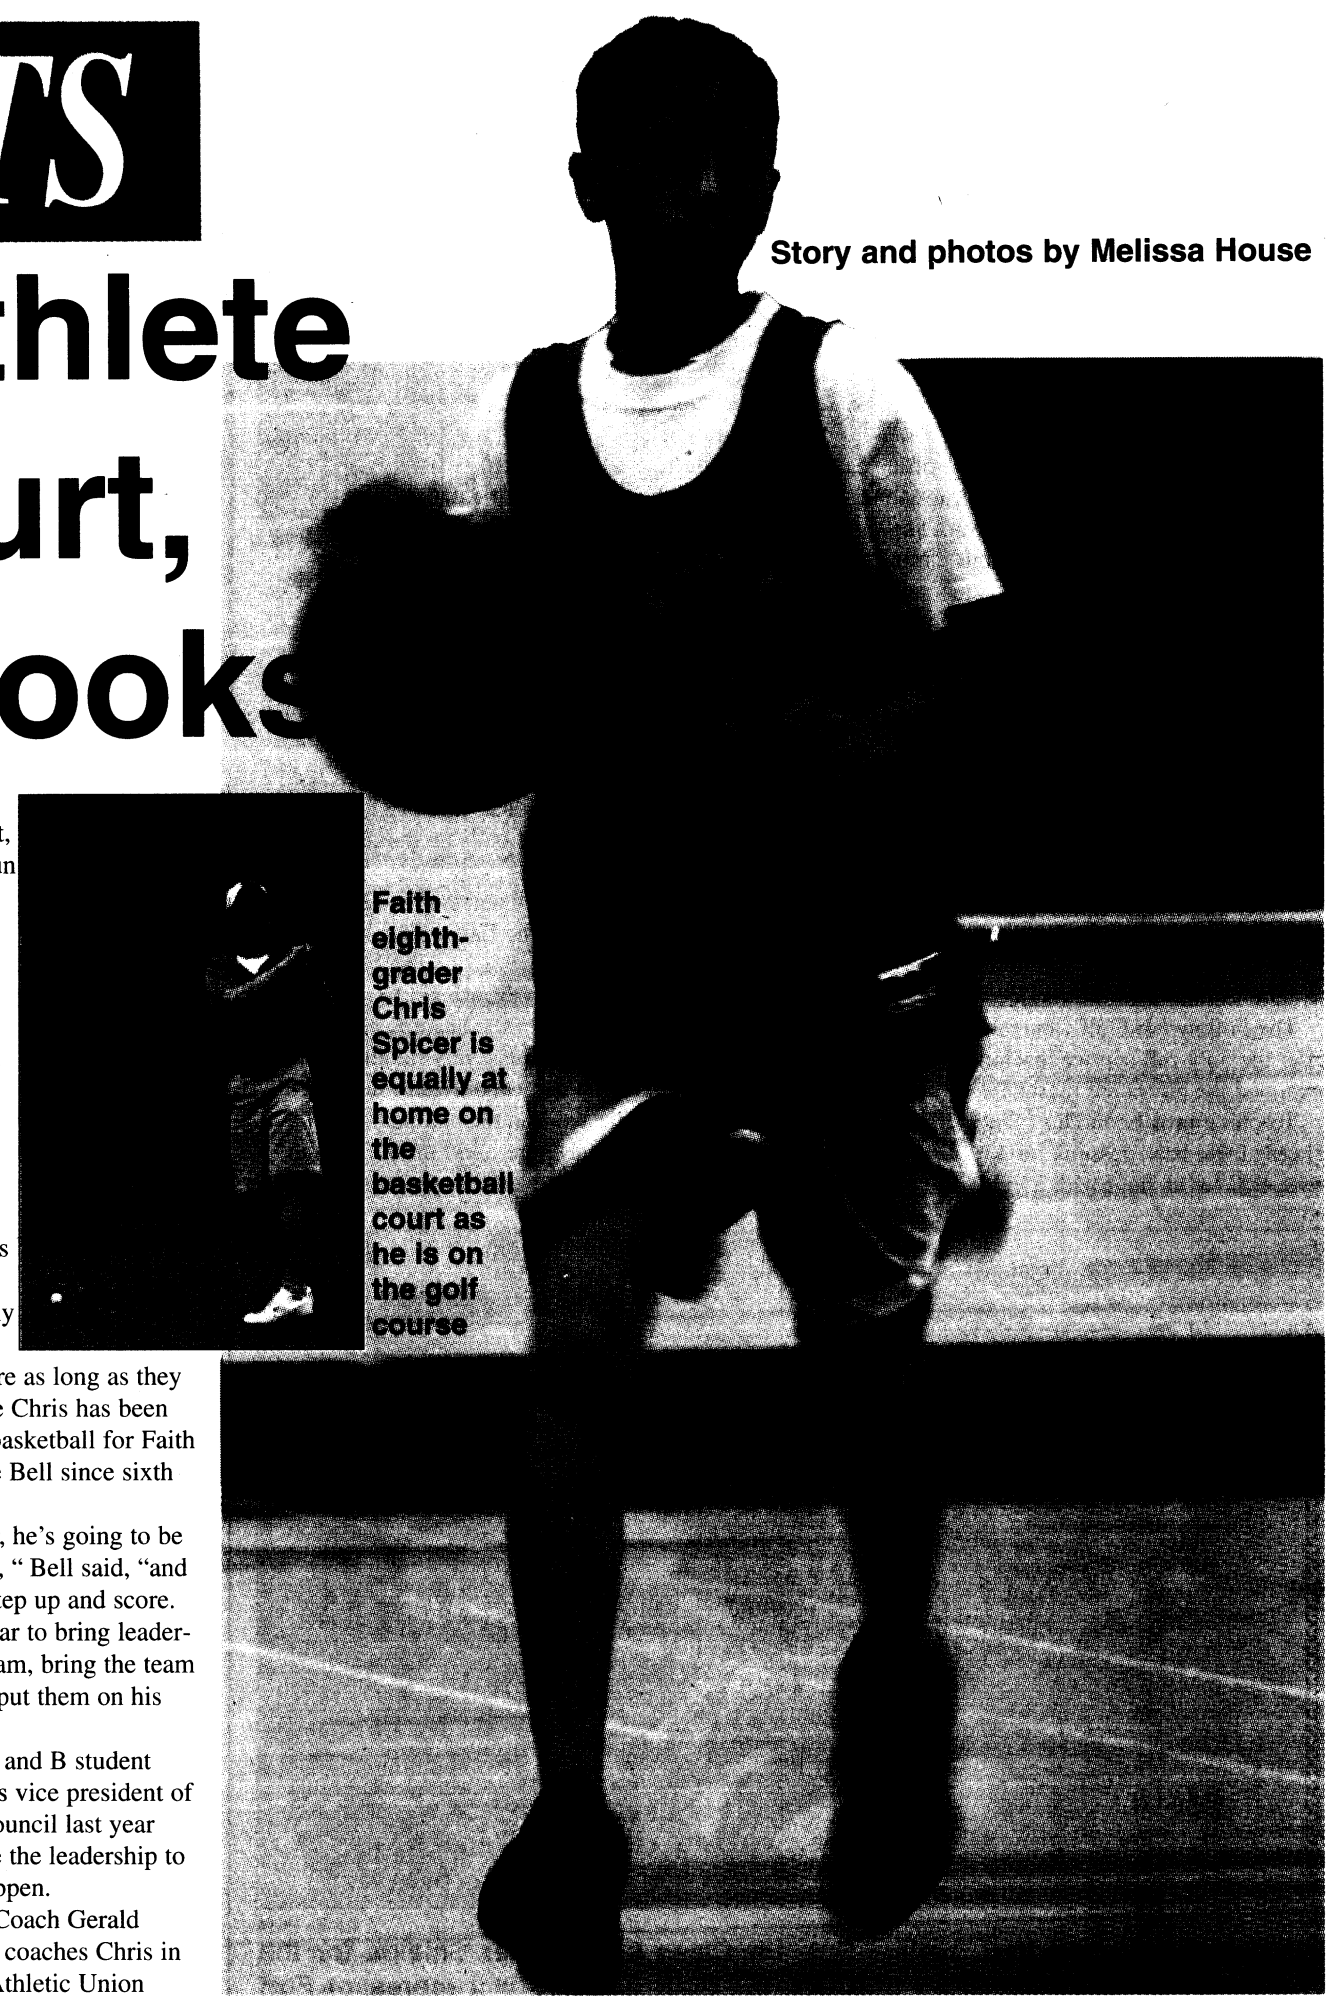
A memo sent to NBA teams announced that as of Tuesday, the start of the regular season, a "minimum" dress code will go into effect.

The code requires business casual attire when engaged in team or league business and appropriate shoes.

• Martz out

St. Louis Rams' head coach Mike Martz is out for the rest of the season with a bacterial infection of a heart valve.

Joe Vitt will take over for Martz, who has one year left on his contract and expects to come back next year.



• Four to go ...

This week's NASCAR race is the Bass Pro Shops MBNA 500 from Atlanta Motor Speedway. Coverage starts at noon on NBC.

It's getting down to the wire for the chasers.

Faith athlete hits court, links, books

Story and photos by Melissa House

Faith eighth-grader Chris Spicer is equally at home on the basketball court as he is on the golf course

Ask Faith eighth-grader Chris Spicer to pick a favorite between golf and basketball and it just might be the only time he's completely speechless.

On one hand, he likes golf because he only has to rely on himself. On the other, he likes basketball because of the teamwork.

And if he woke up one day and really had to decide which sport to play — "I'd play basketball in the morning and golf in the afternoon," Chris said.

Chris said he's been playing golf since he was 4 or 5. He started out riding in the cart with his grandfather, who lived on a golf course, then began hitting balls and playing.

His mom, Kristi Salus, said the family has sprung for a golf club membership wherever they've lived so he and his dad, Erik Salus, can play together as much as they want.

At the beginning of the school year, Chris went out for the cross country team, but changed his plans when Faith fielded its first golf team.

Chris said he would ask (Faith athletic director) Cindy Givens if there was going to be a golf team every time he saw her in the hall. When the team formed, they had one practice on a Thursday and participated in a tournament the next Tuesday. He had to let cross country go.

"I was supposed to run cross country," he said, "But I also had a golf tournament."

His efforts on the varsity golf squad helped the team earn third place in the final tournament of the year.

"We came in third," he said. "We were lucky to make the championship in our first year. No one expected a lot, but we had fun and (Coach Elliott Caggins) was proud. Some had never played golf before."

Now that basketball season has begun, Chris has shifted his focus. Kristi said the family is thrilled to have been here as long as they have, because Chris has been able to play basketball for Faith coach Ronnie Bell since sixth grade.

"This year, he's going to be a point guard, " Bell said, "and he needs to step up and score. This is his year to bring leadership to the team, bring the team together and put them on his back."

And the A and B student who served as vice president of the student council last year ought to have the leadership to make that happen.

Assistant Coach Gerald Ogletree also coaches Chris in an Amateur Athletic Union summer team.

"He's very motivated," Ogletree said. "He handles the ball well and plays great defense even though he's still learning the game. Once he can see things before they happen, he'll be really good."

And, he said, Chris is great entertainment during their summer road trips.

"He used to have his hair in a flip," Ogletree said. "That was my lucky charm. When he had that, we used to win."

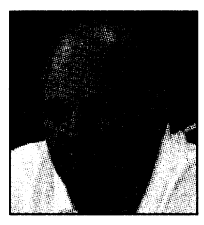
Kristi said the hair flip flopped after Chris got a bad haircut. The hair thing isn't going to affect the Faith team, though. They've been hard at work with tryouts and conditioning for two weeks.

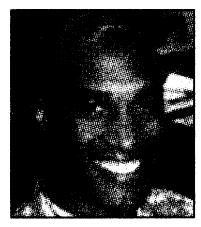
"We have a short team this year," Chris said, "So we have to do more conditioning and work on more fundamentals of rebounding. It's a learning experience for all of us."

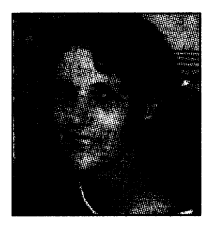
As a point guard this year, he said he's going to be the one who dribbles the ball down the court and sets up the plays.

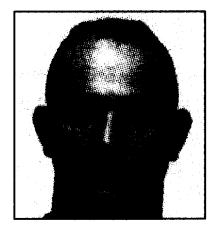
"I like to shoot the three-point, but I also like to dribble," he said, looking forward to the team's first game Dec. 1 — a home game against Our Lady of Lourdes. Faith plays teams in the Christian Independent Athletic Association and will have a lighter schedule this year, playing half as many games as in years past, Bell said.

Even with the demanding sports schedule, Chris said school comes first.









"I have to take care of that first," he said. "'I'm taking algebra this year." But his preference is literature and language arts, because one of his favorite things is writing.

And when it comes to college, Chris has already put a little time and energy into some research on the topic — swing back towards golf.

"A lot of colleges offer golf scholarships," he said. "There were 120 unawarded golf scholarships in Georgia last year. It's a great opportunity to go to college for free.

"If I'm playing (golf) badly, it's frustrating," he said. "But with golf, it's all on me. I just have to rely on myself."

Note: Picks are made by Wednesday afternoon

Erin Says...

You'll notice the numbers are off a bit from last week's games. The Georgia Tech at Miami game has been postponed, so it was really a Pick 11. The NFL games got the best of most of the pickers, except Ken, who went 4-2 in his pro picks. Ken remains in the top spot, but Melissa, Jimmy and Lori are knocking on the door.

Start swinging the sticks

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I've played a full round of golf before — and loved it. Have I done it since? No. Should I have? Yes.

It all started when someone in the office came up with the bright idea of some "professional development" on a Friday afternoon. I talked my husband and son (avid golfers) into joining us.

It was a beautiful afternoon, sunny and warm at the Follow Me Golf Course. We completed our round in a few hours. When I was done, I felt accomplished, frustrated and a little sore. I was ready to go back the next weekend and work on my game. For reasons that escape me, I never did. Even my 6-year-old son played three complete 18-hole games in a week this summer. I think it's time for me to get back into the swing of golf.

I highly recommend giving it a try. You can't expect to go out there and drive the ball like Tiger Woods or Annika Sorenstam. It takes a lot of patience and a lot of practice.

The Follow Me Golf Course can help. They offer the only full-service teaching center in the area, and the prices are reasonable.

Teaching pros Leon Dunagan and Rudy Thorne offer basic lessons for $30 for a half hour, $60 for an hour with a video and $90 for a group clinic lesson.

Whether you're a novice who needs basic skill direction or a weekend duffer who needs help curing a slice, they can help.

If you're ready for a golf scramble, the Scrambling for Santa event will be Nov. 10 at the golf course. Registration begins at noon with tee off at 1 p.m. The cost is $30 per person, and after hitting the greens, a steak dinner will follow. And the best part is that proceeds will benefit Santa's Castle, an on-post organization that provides toys to Fort Benning children at Christmastime.

If you're not quite ready to hit the links for 18 holes, you can always practice your putting on the green or whack some balls on the driving range.

The Follow Me Golf Course offers 27 holes, and will be renovating the Lakeside course in January.

So, now you have no excuse not to get out there. Take advantage of the beautiful fall weather. You can even play year-round here in Georgia, unlike my dad, who tries to squeeze in a quick nine after work in the cold, dark northeast. It's a fun sport, and I think I'll even get back out there and work on my swing.

Sgt. Brooke Corson, top, battles Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Shields for the modern combatives flyweight title Oct. 6. Both Soldiers will represent Fort Benning in the all-Army modern combatives championship Nov. 4 to 6.

Post set for combatives tourney

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

The Army's best modern combative warriors will compete for the first all-Army championship title Nov. 4 to 6 at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center on Fort Benning.

Combining Brazilian Jiu-Jitsu, judo, wrestling, boxing and kickboxing techniques, modern combatives are now taught at the entry level to all incoming Soldiers.

Hosted by the 11th Infantry Regiment, competitors representing Army installations from around the world will register and weigh-in at 7 a.m. Nov. 4.

First-round elimination matches start at 9 a.m. Nov. 5. The elimination brackets will be fought using standard combatives competition rules, but the finals will allow more advanced maneuvers such as fist striking, throws, takedowns, chokes and locks, said Matt Larson, president of the U.S. Army Combatives School.

"It's very realistic, it's almost a real fight except there's an agreement not to bite an opponent's nose off or gouge them in the eye," he said.

Championship matches will begin at 1 p.m. Nov. 8 with an awards ceremony following completion of the competition.

The U.S. Army Combatives School will host the first Combatives Symposium at 9 a.m. Nov. 7 in Classroom 6 at Infantry Hall.

Admission to the competition is free. For more information, call the Audie Murphy Fitness Center at 545-1940.

Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

Unfortunately, some parents skip important step number three: Booster seats. Because their children have outgrown toddler seats, they mistakenly assume a safety belt is the next step. However, safety belts alone can be dangerous for kids who are under 4'9". Because safety belts don't fit these children properly, they can cause serious injuries to their face, neck and abdomen during a crash or sudden stop. In fact, kids 2-5 who wear the four safety-belt steps are not magical ...they're critical.

safety belts alone are 4 times more likely to suffer head injuries than kids in car seats and booster seats. In addition, children 4-7 who use booster seats are a whopping 59% less likely to be injured in a crash than those only restrained by a safety belt. Booster seats raise your child up so that a safety belt (designed for adults) will fit and protect them properly. Remember, 4'9" is the magic number. Until then, kids really need to be in a booster seat. Booster seats work like... well, you know.

IEDs claim more Soldiers

'Army lost two really good Soldiers'

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

An improvised explosive device detonated near a Bradley fighting vehicle on patrol near Samarra, Iraq, Oct. 17, taking the lives of two Fort Benning Soldiers.

Staff Sgt. George Thomas Alexander Jr., 34, of Clanton, Ala., died Oct. 22, and Sgt. Michael Tremain Robertson, 28, of Houston, died Oct. 25 at Brooke Army Medical Center at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

"The Army lost two really good Soldiers," said 1st Lt. James Ryan who served with Alexander and Robertson while deployed in Iraq with the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment. "Soldiers like that aren't mass produced or easily replaced."

Alexander, a veteran of Desert Storm, Operation Iraqi Freedom 1, and many other deployments to Southwest Asia, was one of the most experienced Soldiers in the

5 troops die in Ar Ramadi during combat

Lori Egan

The Army experienced its largest loss of life since Mogadishu, Somalia, Oct. 15, when five Soldiers were killed when an improvised explosive device exploded near their Bradley fighting vehicle during combat operations in Ar Ramadi, Iraq.

The Soldiers were with 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom 3.

Dead are Spc. Thomas Harold Byrd, 21, from Cochise, Ariz.; Spc. Jeffrey Wilbur Corban, 30, from Elkhart, Ind.; Spc. Richard Allen Hardy, 24, from Newcomerstown, Ohio; Staff Sgt. Vincent Earl Summers, 38, South Haven, Mich.; and Spc. Timothy Dee Watkins, 24, San Bernardino, Calif.

Byrd joined the Army in November 2003 and completed one station unit training with 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment,

Airborne names black hat

Melissa House

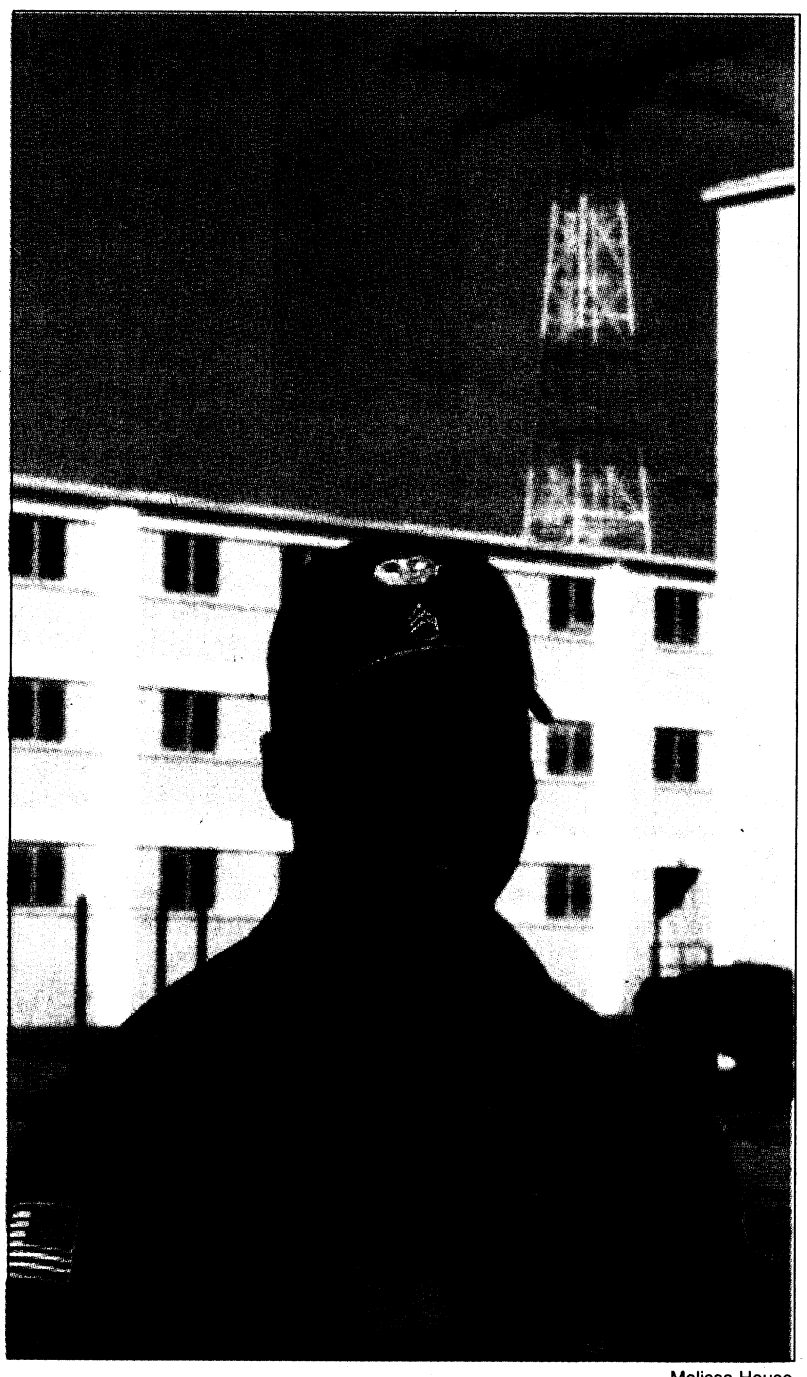
Twelve black hats with the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, entered competition Oct. 11 to 14. Only one came out on top.

Staff Sgt. Brian Smith walked away with the 2005 Black Hat of the Year title in a ceremony Friday on Eubanks Field, lending weight to the line of the Soldiers' Creed — "I am an expert and a professional."



To compete for the title, a black hat must be a senior-rated jumpmaster, pass the battalion's six-week certification course and have served as a black hat for at least six months.

Because they play an important role in the safe and effective training of Soldiers, they are expected to be able to teach two formal blocks of instruction and are graded on "flawless execution."

Competitors also went through a modified Airborne APFT, a series of tests on jumpmaster and drop zone safety officer duties, a 50-question test taken from Field Manual 3-21.220, Airborne Operations, and were graded on their ability to recite the pre-jump instructions — verbatim. The 12 also participated in a Black Hat board, based on a promotion board format, said Sgt. 1st Class Brian Jenkins, the battalion's operations and training NCOIC and the man responsible for setting up the competition.

"This year's competition was very strenuous," Jenkins said. "They went from event to event with no break ... no time to study."

The result, he said, is better airborne instructors who give a better product to the students.

Staff Sgt. Brian Smith was named Black Hat of the Year.

Smith joined the battalion in September 2004 after serving four years in the 2nd Battalion, 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, at Fort Bragg, N.C. He spent a year instructing in D Company, 1st Bn. (Airborne), one of the four companies instructing Soldiers in the basic Airborne

Hospital expecting shipment

Doctors encourage hand washing

Jennifer Gunn

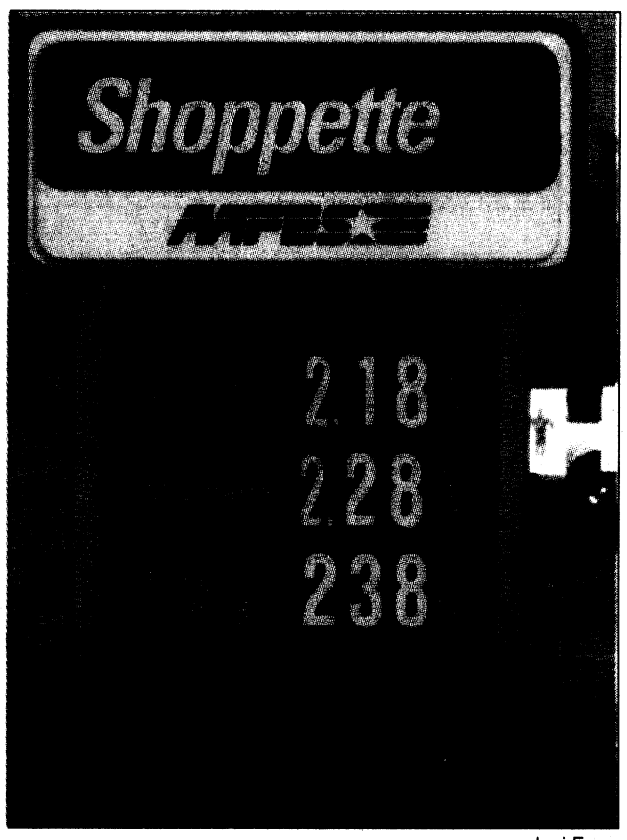
Seasonal flu vaccines are not just for high-risk individuals anymore, according to the Center for Infectious Diseases, and health officials are encouraging everyone to be vaccinated.

Martin Army Community Hospital is expecting a shipment of the flu vaccine, said hospital spokesperson Terry Beckwith, but officials are unsure when it will arrive.

Army doctors feel confident, however, the vaccines will be in place in time for the brunt of the flu season, which in Georgia can last well into March.



"People think getting vaccinated in December is too late, but it can still provide protection," said Dr. (Maj.) Laura Pacha, chief of the Department of Preventive Medicine at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Until the vaccine arrives, doctors are encouraging their patients to practice good hand-washing hygiene because the flu is contracted by person-to-person contact.

"Washing your hands before you eat, after you use the bathroom, and especially after

AAFES prices gas to beat competitors

Lori Egan
AAFES plans more competitive gas pricing.

Nickel decrease should beat Columbus stations

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

With new AAFES shoppettes and gas stations opening at Kelley Hill Nov. 8 and on Dixie Road Nov. 21, Soldiers and their families will spend less time waiting in line to pump gas. But what many don't know is that for the past two weeks, the AAFES team has been making pumping gas easier on their wallets as well.

AAFES general manager H. Lee Holloway has been looking at all the AAFES operations since he arrived at Fort Benning two months ago. His observation — gas prices outside the gate are not as competitive with prices across the state.

The guidance Holloway has says he must survey the local gas competition within a 10-mile radius of post, take the lowest surveyed prices and match them.

"Traditionally, we've been matching their prices," Holloway said, "and we're surveying their prices not weekly, but three times daily."

But even that effort, he said, isn't always clear to his customers.

"Folks downtown can change their prices any time," he said. "But we have a policy that we only change ours at midnight." He said the competition comes onto post daily to check his prices, and then can go right out and lower theirs, so someone leaving post in the middle of the day might have the impression that AAFES gas prices aren't any cheaper than anyone else's.

Holloway can match competitors' prices, he said, because AAFES does not use taxpayer dollars to buy goods or run the facilities. Of the money AAFES generates, 70 percent goes back into Morale, Welfare and Recreation programs for Soldiers and families.

"No organization does that," he said. "We're unique in that sense."

While the merchandise in the AAFES stores is not taxed, Holloway says it's

FIRST CONTACT

Life's too short to hover

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I say life's too short to hover. You know what I'm talking about. Your mama taught you to hover over a public toilet. Never sit. That's just nasty.

Me, I quit worrying about cooties in the third grade. I swipe the seat with a fistful of t.p., take a deep breath (I often regret) and make contact.

Even if I wanted to, I couldn't hover. My thighs don't play that way. In the absence of muscle tone, I've adopted a "no worries" modus operandi. I refuse to be a prisoner of germ warfare.

On my first trip to Chicago some years back, I met a public toilet with a rotating seat, which replaced the plastic seat cover after every, um, visit.

As far as Windy City tourist attractions, it surely ranked (even I didn't see that pun coming) right up there with the Sears Tower.

I was impressed — until I met a public toilet in Europe with a rotating seat and ARMS. Yep. On the first go-round, an arm sanitized the seat. On the second go-round, the other arm dried it. It was way more fun than a merry-go-round. Hard-pressed to believe someone invented such a contraption, I figure the European toilet mutated from the Chicago toilet, a higher-life form than the toilets at Wal-Mart.

Modern conveniences are impressive, but the contemporary hysteria that breeds the need for them is worrisome. The same hysteria that feeds the "pandemic" panic at the onset of every flu season, which seems to come earlier and earlier each year, like Christmas. Soon we'll see Santa hawking cough syrup in July. Mark my words.

My flu policy is no different than my public toilet policy. If it looks icky, I head the other way, but I don't live in fear of cooties every time I hear someone sneeze. I refuse to lose sleep over flu strains. And I will gladly shake your hand or kiss your baby. I live on the edge.

I realize carelessness — and ignorance — can be deadly. I don't mean to make light of the bird flu, the Asian flu, SARS or whatever plague or pestilence currently threatens the human race.

I expect doctors and scientists and all those high-paid federal muckity-mucks to do everything within their power to find the cause and cure for the common cold and the flu and that awful headache I get when I eat ice cream too fast. I'll do everything in my power to keep from getting and sharing them.

I shower once or twice a day and wash my hands religiously. I keep hand sanitizer in the console. I take vitamins every day, eat plenty of leafy green vegetables and say my prayers.

But I will not worry, because, like you, I have a very rich, full, busy, busy life. At the end of the day, I'm flat-out tired. I can't muster up enough energy, or time for that matter, to worry about microscopic mutants. If I catch a cold, so be it. I like to think I'm building my immunities.

So as flu season approaches, here's a little something for all you germ phobics to ponder as you toss and turn on your pillow tonight — besides the fact that your pillow is riddled with dust mites. Experts say worrying will make you sick. I don't mean clutch-your-chest, cold-sweat, somebody give her a paper bag sick.

Nope, worrying will very slooooowly wear down your body's natural defenses, bit by bit by bit, and one day you'll touch a dirty doorknob and keel over.

And then you'll wish you hadn't spent so much time worrying about germs.

Little kids are germ factories

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I wouldn't exactly call myself a germaphobe, but I do carry around my own bottle of hand sanitizer. I soak the family's toothbrushes with mouthwash (it contains alcohol) and clean with bleach. If someone in the house happens to get sick, I whip out my Lysol and spray down doorknobs and toilet handles. Maybe I go overboard by other people's standards, but I feel my preventive maintenance will help in the future.

I was given the standard rules growing up: wash your hands after going to the bathroom, and on any other toilet besides your own, tone up your quads and hover over the seat. The rest I've learned on my own.

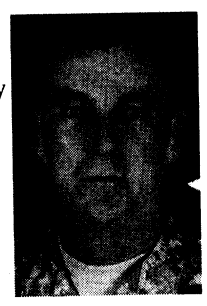
Last fall I was sick. And I mean sick. Being the stubborn person I am, I try not to rely on others. But early one morning, my husband was in the field, and I had to take my son to school. I literally rolled myself out of bed, and tried to dress myself. I couldn't do it. I had to call a really, really good friend, and ask her to take my son to school, because I couldn't manage to dress myself.

When I finally recovered, I went to the commissary and loaded up my cart with fruits and vegetables. I bought myself and my son our own personal bottles of hand sanitizer, and as soon as he got in the car after school, he was to apply a very liberal amount and make sure to get between the fingers. There was no way I was going to get that sick again.

And I haven't. Maybe my immune system has built itself up now that my son is in first grade, and I've gotten used to the germs that only little kids seem to have. Ask any first-grader to share their favorite toy with you and they have no problem telling you no, but if they've got germs, they're more than happy to share them with everyone.

I cringe just thinking about the many times I've been in stores, and a very harmless looking child suddenly opens his mouth and a very wet, barking cough comes out, right in my direction. Or a sneeze that produces slime-like snot that gets wiped right on their sleeve.

Parents, here's where I very nicely plead to teach your kids to cover their mouths (and noses) when they sneeze or cough. Granted, sometimes kids forget, but itt should become second nature if you get after them enough.



Even though we can't see germs, they're there. And I don't believe the scientists or doctors or whoever says that by using all the antibacterial stuff, germs are just getting more powerful. I prefer to think I'm actually killing germs when I'm slathering on the hand sanitizer. Even if I'm not, it makes me feel better.

I know I'll get sick in the future. Sometimes there's just no way around it. But if just one squirt of Lysol on a doorknob will prevent it, I'll start buying it by the truckload.

Protect against preventable cold weather injuries

Our Soldiers must be aware of the special precautions necessary to prevent cold weather injuries. Through training concerning the early warning symptoms and application of common sense, injuries can be prevented.

Now is the time to educate leaders in the prevention, recognition and treatment of cold injuries. The pocket card (FB Form 42, Cold Facts for Keeping Warm) provides guidance for the prevention and treatment of cold injuries. It is available from Post Publications, DOIM, Building 110, Ingersoll Avenue entrance of the post office building.

Major unit commanders will ensure that all military personnel receive cold injury prevention training. Classes can be requested from Preventive Medicine, Building 2616, 545-1445.

Cold weather injuries are preventable. The key is strong first-line leaders trained to recognize potential cold weather injuries. Prevention of cold weather injuries must be a command-wide goal.

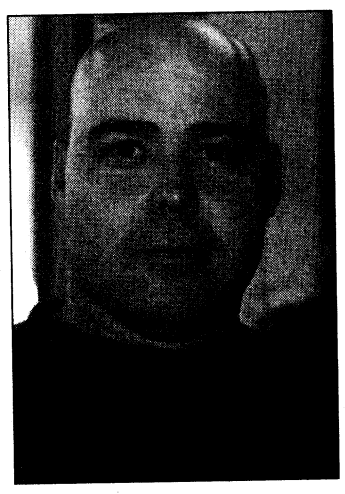
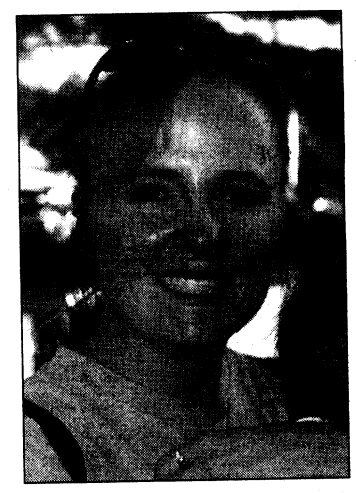
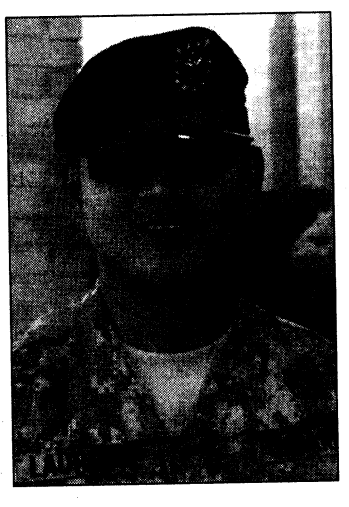
VARIOUS VOICES



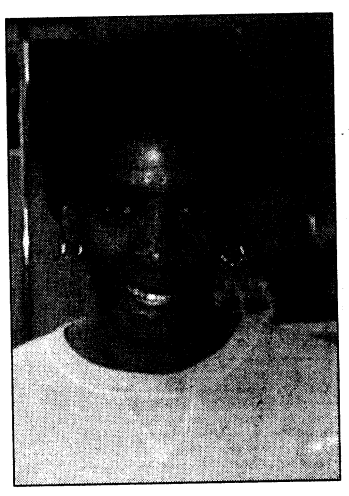
What do you do to stay healthy?



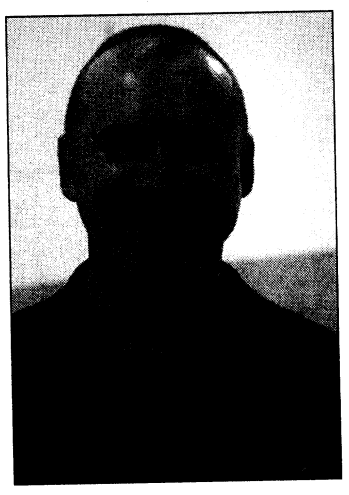
Sgt. 1st Class Mike Lavigne, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment — "I'll do what I tell my Soldiers to do — eat well-balanced meals, exercise regularly, and wash hands often, especially in a field environment."



V-chanti Carson, Stowers Elementary School third-grader — "I drink milk, eat fruit, run around, and wash my hands after sneezing and coughing."



1st Sgt. David Vallette, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — "Being with troops six days a week means a lot of PT, running three days and (muscular strength and endurance) the other days. I drink a lot of orange juice and wash my hands — the normal stuff."



Adrienne Watson, family member — "My family exercises and eats healthy foods. I keep the house clean. And we use hand sanitizer."

Staff Sgt. Alan Laurente, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment — "Keeping a regular diet, getting enough rest and staying emotionally and mentally healthy helps relieve stress and keeps the body healthy."

Retired Sgt. Mary Powell, Columbus — "I exercise to stay healthy, and I'm going to lose some weight."

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, Columbus — "I eat right and do PT. Also, when I feel a bug or cold coming, I take over-the-counter drugs to get rid of it."

Senior leaders say Ranger School will change the way they do business from now on

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Bridgett Siter

Capt. Cain Baker, left, Sgt. Maj. Richard Erickson and Maj. Denver Leonard graduate from Ranger School today. For 62 days, they were deprived of sleep and food and contact with the "outside world." Upon returning to Fort Benning earlier this week, they wondered why the flag was at half staff (the death of Rosa Parks) and what was "going on with that hurricane" — meaning Katrina. They knew nothing about Hurricanes Rita and Wilma until Sunday night, when Erickson learned that Wilma had done considerable damage to his home in Miami.

Ranger Class 11-05 is marked by diversity more than any class in recent memory, Ranger School cadre said earlier this week, as 104 all-but-tabbed Rangers returned from the final Florida phase and prepped for today's graduation ceremony on Hurley Hill.

Among today's graduates are seven foreign students, a sergeant major from Special Forces, an Apache pilot pending promotion to major, and an artillery major with 17 years of service under his belt.

Any one of these soldiers would be an anomaly under normal circumstances, said Lt. Col. Odie Sheffield, the 4th Ranger Training Brigade's deputy commander, but combined, they make for "a very unusual class."

The war on terrorism has changed the dynamic of Ranger School.

"Ten years ago, none of us would've been sent here," said Capt. Cain Baker, the 31-year-old pilot who'll pin on major rank in December.

That's because 10 years ago, it would've been hard to justify funding and training for senior leaders. The typical Ranger class is heavy with lieutenants and fresh-faced privates. Popular thinking was these Soldiers had their whole careers in front of them to put Ranger skills to good use.

These days, it's still unusual, if not rare, for a senior NCO to get the opportunity to earn the tab. It's an opportunity Erickson had to fight for.

"I've tried for 22 years to get to come here," said the 42-year old National Guardsman, who spent a year in Afghanistan with the 20th Special Forces Group. "Every time I thought it would happen, my orders would get canceled or we'd get deployed or something. Always something. I just didn't give up."

Like Erickson, Baker and Leonard are combat veterans.

The 36-year old Leonard, who fought in Desert Storm, tried twice before to make it through — not to — Ranger School. He was sent home once when his son took sick and again when he injured his back.

To get another shot at the tab, Leonard said, he had to sell his soul to the devil. He wanted it that badly. Becoming a Ranger has been his goal, he said, since 1988, when an Army recruiter showed him a picture of an Airborne Ranger. It was enough to get him to enlist.

Baker, 31, who deployed twice in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, said his reasons for wanting to attend were less altruistic than he cared to admit.

"My dad was tabbed in 1982. I got tired of him making fun of me," he said. "I got tired of asking myself if I could make it or not. I decided to find out."

Deciding to go to Ranger School was easy, Baker said. Like his classmates, he discovered "the hardest part of Ranger School is getting to Ranger School," because Army brass in all MOSs recognize the value of Ranger training, and classes fill up quickly, he said.

As far as justifying their Ranger slots — no problem. All three said they will benefit, and more importantly, their Soldiers will benefit, from the training they got here.

"It's like sharpening knives," Baker said. "You take a senior leader, you take him off his high horse and you humble him — which is good. You level the field, and he has to rely on E-2s and E-3s to show him how to do a job. A company commander goes back to being a guy on the line. It makes you a much better leader.

"I know I'd have done a lot of things differently if I'd gone to Ranger School when I was a lieutenant," he said. "I'll do a lot of things differently from here on out."

After 62 grueling, sleep- and food-deprived days of rigorous training, those E-2s and E-3s are "more dear to me than anyone I went through combat with," Baker said. "You end up revealing your soul to your Rangers brothers. You tell them things you'd never tell anyone else."

Ranger School was harder than combat, they all agreed. With no down time, no chance to regroup, it forged a bond between the students that will last a lifetime.

"(Ranger School) would be the best survival show on TV if they'd put it on TV," said Baker, who believes he's in the worst shape of his life after losing 10 pounds — a mere 10 pounds, compared to Erickson and Leonard, who both lost 40.

"I came through in good shape, and it was still challenging all the way. But I'd do it again if I had to. I had a good time," Erickson said.

In fact, they all agreed, Ranger School was fun.

"It's probably the last chance we'll get to be Soldier Soldiers," Baker said. "To fight and carry a weapon and a ruck and be a true warrior. Believe it or not, it was fun. Guys don't join the Army to do PowerPoint slides."

All three made it through school without recycling, and that alone is a feat, considering that less than a third of their squads, combined, made it through the first time.

Baker had an incentive. His fiancee was making plans for their wedding in 16 days. Failure was not an option, he said.

Simply not having to go through it all over again was incentive enough for Leonard, who discovered his greatest vulnerability is fatigue. After a while, the days "all began to run together." Now, after a couple of days of rest, only one day matters — today.

Graduation day.

Recycling awareness event on post

Paper, glass, scrap metal accepted

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will participate in America Recycles Day from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Nov. 14 and 15.

The commissary will have a recycling collection location Nov. 14 and the Materials Recycling Facility will accept all recyclable material Nov. 15.

Plastic, glass, scrap metal and paper (including telephone books) will be accepted at both locations.

"For these two days, people can recycle old electronics," said Andrea Hicks, Fort Benning's Pollution Prevention program manager.

Hicks said the recycling locations will take VCRs, cellphones, DVD players and computer monitors, but TVs cannot be accepted at this time.

The materials collected and sorted on post are sold to an outside vendor, and the money covers recycling expenses such as labor, equipment and repairs, said Debbie Addison, plans officer for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

Donna Hyatt

Paper is collected and sorted at the Materials Recycling Facility for later resale to a paper recycling plant.

If there's additional money after expenses, Addison said it is split between recycling and DMWR. DMWR uses the money for post programs and services.

A national, nonprofit organization, America Recycles Day was founded in 1997 to promote recycling throughout the U. S.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency recommends recycling the following items:

Organic waste — Materials such as food scraps and yard trimmings put in composting bins significantly reduces the amount of solid waste disposed of in landfills or incinerators.

Paper — Paperboard products such as newspapers, office papers, books, magazines, cardboard boxes, mail and telephone directories make up the greatest proportion of municipal solid waste, but paper is also the easiest item to recycle.

Containers — Wood packaging, polymer wraps and films, wax corrugated cardboard, pallets, and all beverage containers (aluminum, glass and plastic) can all be recycled.

The MRF, the post's main collection point for recyclable materials, is located in Building 4000 at Harmony Church.

More information about recycling on Fort Benning can be found by calling 544-6142 or 545-0276.

Clean-up to Benning standards this week

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Don't store those lawnmowers for winter just yet. Fall clean-up for post residents will be Monday through Thursday.

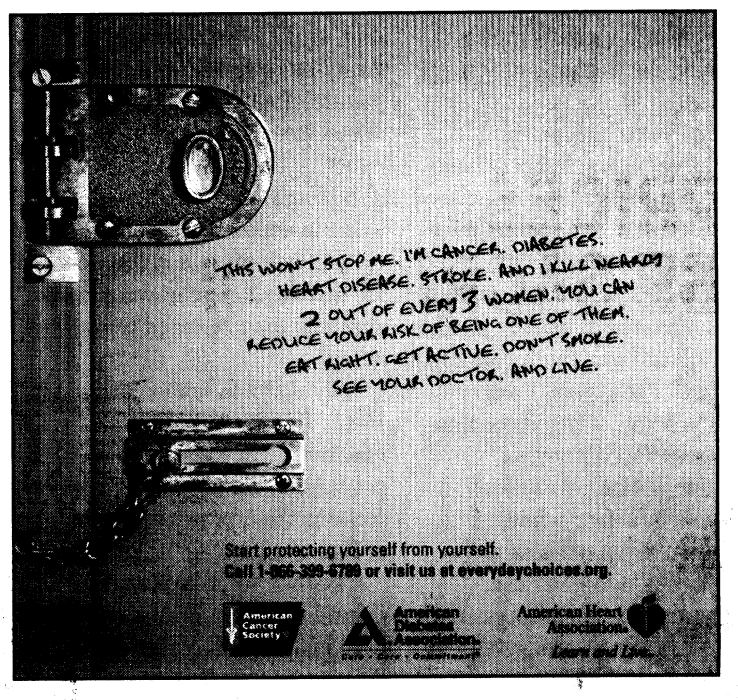
"It's important to keep up the post standards," said Britta Stevens, vice mayor of Bouton Heights and Davis Hill. "We need to keep the communities nice and clean so everyone likes living on post."

Residents are responsible for areas immediately adjacent to quarters, including lawns, shrubbery, sidewalks, curbs, gutters and driveways. The area extends to the surrounding streets and halfway to adjacent quarters, but doesn't exceed 150 feet.

"Residents need to make sure their grass is cut, there's no grass in the cracks of their sidewalks, bushes are trimmed and their yards are cleaned up," Stevens said.

Residents also need to edge walkways and curbs. Edging grooves should not exceed one inch in width and depth adjacent to the pavement. V-shaped ditches are not authorized when edging.

In addition to pruning and trimming shrubs, residents need to sweep sidewalks and driveways, remove debris from curbs and gutters and remove vines and other vegetation from buildings and fences.



Fence maintenance is also on the list. Fences should be maintained by cleaning, painting and repair or replacing broken or missing parts.

Bulk recyclables, such as washers, dryers and others are collected separate from household trash and lawn debris.

Residents should call the DPW Recycling Center at 545-4749 to coordinate pick-up of these items.

For more information or questions about fall clean-up, call the Community Life Office at 545-9263.

Soldiers of 4th Platoon, F Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, hopped on helicopters for a ride to the field training exercise.

New twist for OSUT FTX

1st Lt. Gino Davis
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

A new twist to basic Infantry training was added for the Soldiers of F Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — an air insertion to the company's field training exercise site.

But because of limited aircraft, only one platoon was able to move by air. The remaining three platoons were inserted by ground assault convoy.

4th Platoon spearheaded the air insertion because of the their exceptional ability to come together as a cohesive unit throughout the entire cycle, said Capt. Terence Hunter, F Company commander.

The Soldiers were alerted, deployed, and given a friendly and enemy situation at a notional staging base with the final catalyst being the actual air insertion into a remote forward operating base.

The purpose was to replicate the Afghanistan and Iraq situations as much as possible, Hunter said.

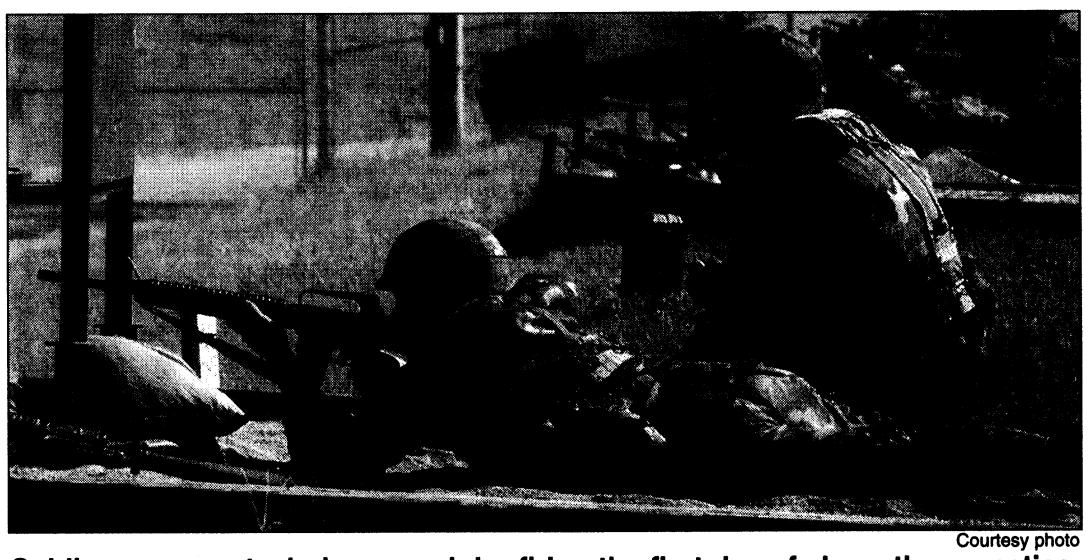
"Soldiers are currently operating in areas that cannot be accessed by vehicular traffic, and air is a Soldier's only lifeline," he said.

Once at the FTX site, the Soldiers conducted continuous patrols, check point and urban operations for seven days.

"It was worth all the crap I had to put up with for the last 12 weeks," said Pvt. Michael Banks.

Before the flight, the Soldiers practiced loading and unloading the Black Hawks, and what to do once the helicopters touched down at the training site.

This training gave them the confidence they needed to get on and off of the helicopters while the rotors were moving, Hunter said.



After the static load training was finished, the anxiety factor of the Soldiers began to show as butterflies filled their stomachs. For some this would be their first flight ever in any aircraft.

"This was my first flight and nothing will ever compare to this rush," said Pvt. Jeffrey Lachaud, from Jamaica, N.Y.

"I will remember this day for the rest of my life, it was by far the most exciting thing that I have ever done," said Pvt. Chase Spalding from Charleston, W.V.

Soldiers go over techniques and dry-firing the first day of class, then practice with real ammunition the remaining three days.

USAMU Soldiers teach skills, focus on sight alignment

Spc. Stephanie Pearson
Korea Area 1 Public Affairs Office

CAMP CASEY — Four members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Team from Fort Benning went to Warrior Country to teach Soldiers marksmanship techniques Oct. 14 through today.

The USAMU is a specialized team of sharpshooters who represent the U.S. Army in shooting competitions.

Since 1956, team members have won hundreds of individual and team competitions, including 40 world championships and 20 Olympic medals.

The instructors taught four classes of 30 students each, going over and perfecting basic rifle marksmanship skills for the M-16A2 and M-4 rifles.

"We reiterate the fundamentals," said Sgt. 1st Class Grant Singley, mobile training team NCOIC, "because that's really all there is."

Singley said the class focuses on sight alignment and trigger control.

"The hardest part for most people is focusing on the front sight post instead of the target," he said. "The average weight needed to pull the trigger is 7-10 pounds, but the weapon is only 7 pounds so you can easily disturb it if you don't have good trigger control."

Sgt. Ryan Hey, C Troop, 4th Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment, usually qualifies as a sharpshooter or expert and didn't think relearning the basics would impact his marksmanship.

"When I first got to class and learned their techniques, I thought, 'That's not going to help me,'" he said. "They proved me wrong — I'm hitting more targets now, so the new techniques have definitely helped."

Singley said good marksmanship is especially important now because of the Global War on Terrorism.

"With the conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan, we've seen that this is definitely a ground war," he said.

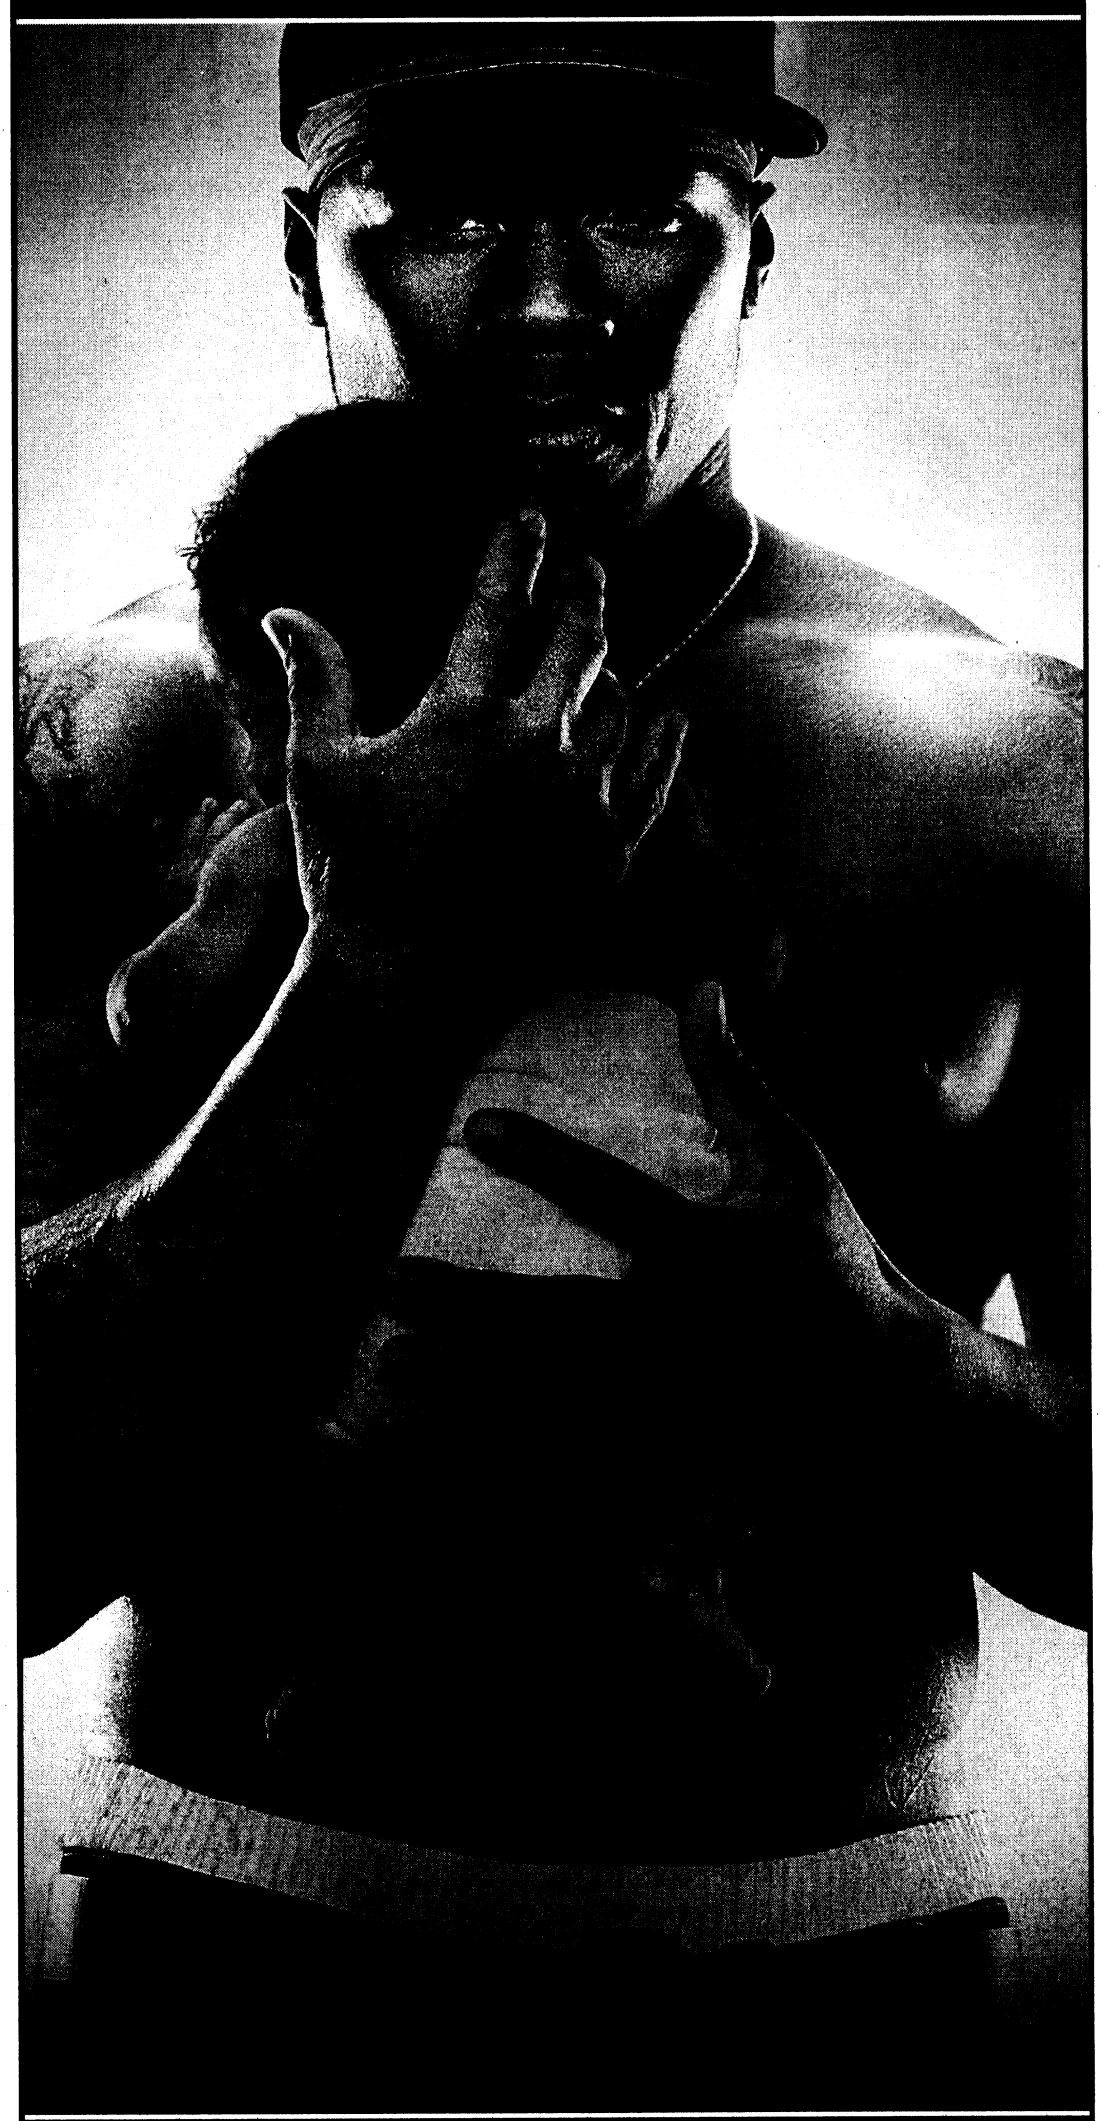
"There is a lot of close-quarters combat, so marksmanship is a must. Everyone needs to have good marksmanship — medics, supply specialists, military journalists – not just the infantry."

Hey agreed.

"Every person, no matter what MOS, has to be a rifleman first," he said. "On today's battlefields, there are no front lines — it's all around you. Everyone needs to know how to engage a target."

Soldiers spent the first day of training in the classroom discussing marksmanship techniques. The remaining three days of class were spent on Camp Casey's Apache Range, where shooters adjusted their sights and practiced their firing skills.

Singley said familiarity with the weapon is the key.



"The more you handle it, the better off you are," he said. "That way, when you find yourself in a pressure situation, you can fall back on what you know. It becomes second nature."

The class was designed to train noncommissioned officers to go back and train Soldiers at their units.

"Instead of affecting 30 Soldiers from one unit, we can potentially affect all of the 2nd Infantry Division if we have leaders from each unit here," Singley said.

This is the second time the instructors have come to Korea, and Singley said it will probably become an annual training event.

At the end of the day, what will you hang on to?

Financial Readiness Program can help ease Soldier's, family's redeployment money issues

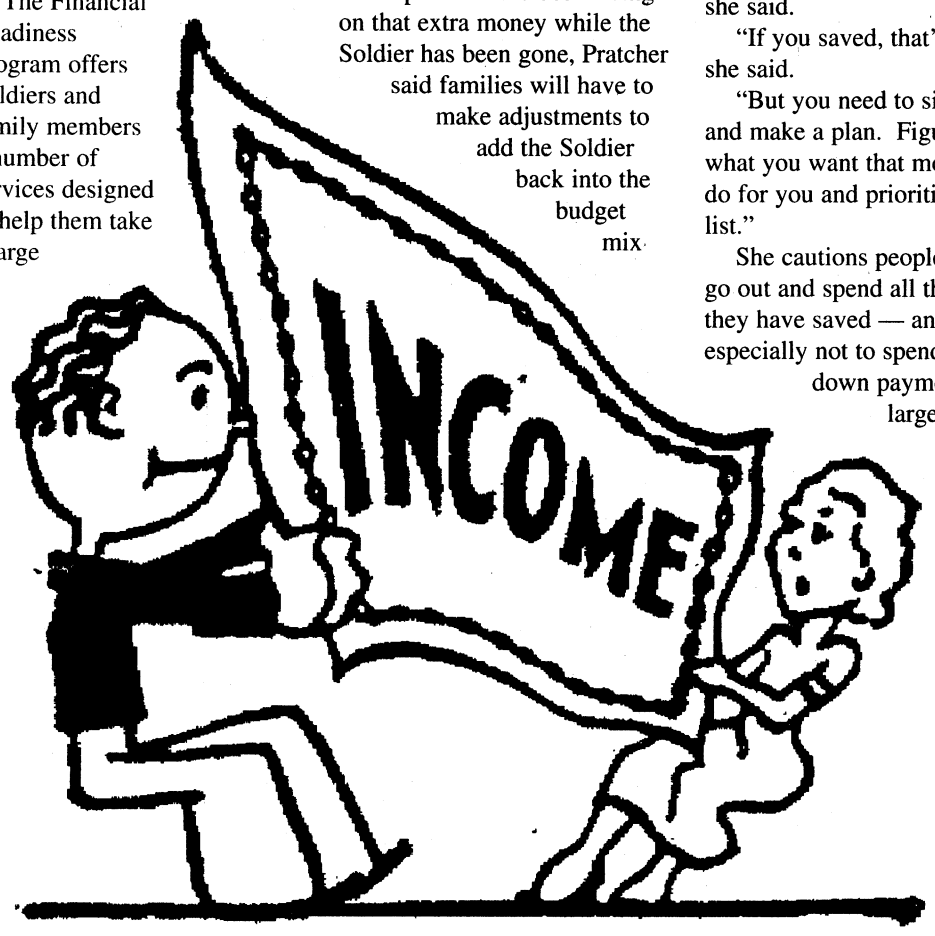
Offers tools, counseling on money matters

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

As Fort Benning's deployed Soldiers begin trickling in, so, too, may the bills — bills they might not even know about.

And Fort Benning has a program that can help spouses get the family's finances on track.

The Financial Readiness Program offers Soldiers and family members a number of services designed to help them take charge of their money and make their money work for them.



Unfortunately, not nearly enough people take advantage of all the FRP has to offer, said program manager Ann Pratcher.

"Most don't come in until thy have a real significant event," she said. "They don't come in until (their finances) are ready to be on life support, rather than at the first headache."

Pratcher said it's not that those on "life support" can't be helped, but the sooner people come in, the more good they can do for them.

And with Soldiers coming home, the average paycheck is going to drop anywhere from $700 to $1,000.

If spouses have been living on that extra money while the Soldier has been gone, Pratcher said families will have to make adjustments to add the Soldier back into the budget mix.

> "Where you feel the squeeze is when the debt payment takes more than 20 percent of after-tax pay. And people who think they're in good shape are at the 30 to 40 percent. They're already overextended."
> Ann Pratcher
> Financial Readiness Program manager

If a Soldier, or spouse, has been deployed for a while, there's an inkling that the finances are not in good shape, Pratcher says start by figuring out just how bad it is.

"Throwing stuff unopened into the drawer isn't a good plan," she said, and she's lost count of the number of clients who sit in her office and open their mail for the first time because it was too scary to do alone.

Her clients, or potential clients should do a "reality check" and figure out exactly what it takes to realistically run the household — the monthly bills and expenses like phone, cable, utilities, food, and clothing.

Then, she said, take a look at the debt — car and credit card payments, student loans or other loans.

Those in charge of the finances need to look at what the Soldier's pay is going to be when they redeploy and figure out what money will be left to pay debt after taking care of household expenses.

"Where you feel the squeeze is when the debt payment takes more than 20 percent of after-tax pay," Pratcher said. "And people who think they're in good shape are at the 30 to 40 percent. They're already overextended."

A typical client, she said, is carrying a 40 to 60 percent debt load when they come in for help.

"If you're accustomed to spending and having certain things and now you're in a jam, you're going to have to shut yourself down until you get back on track," she said. "Sometimes the cold-turkey approach is the only way."

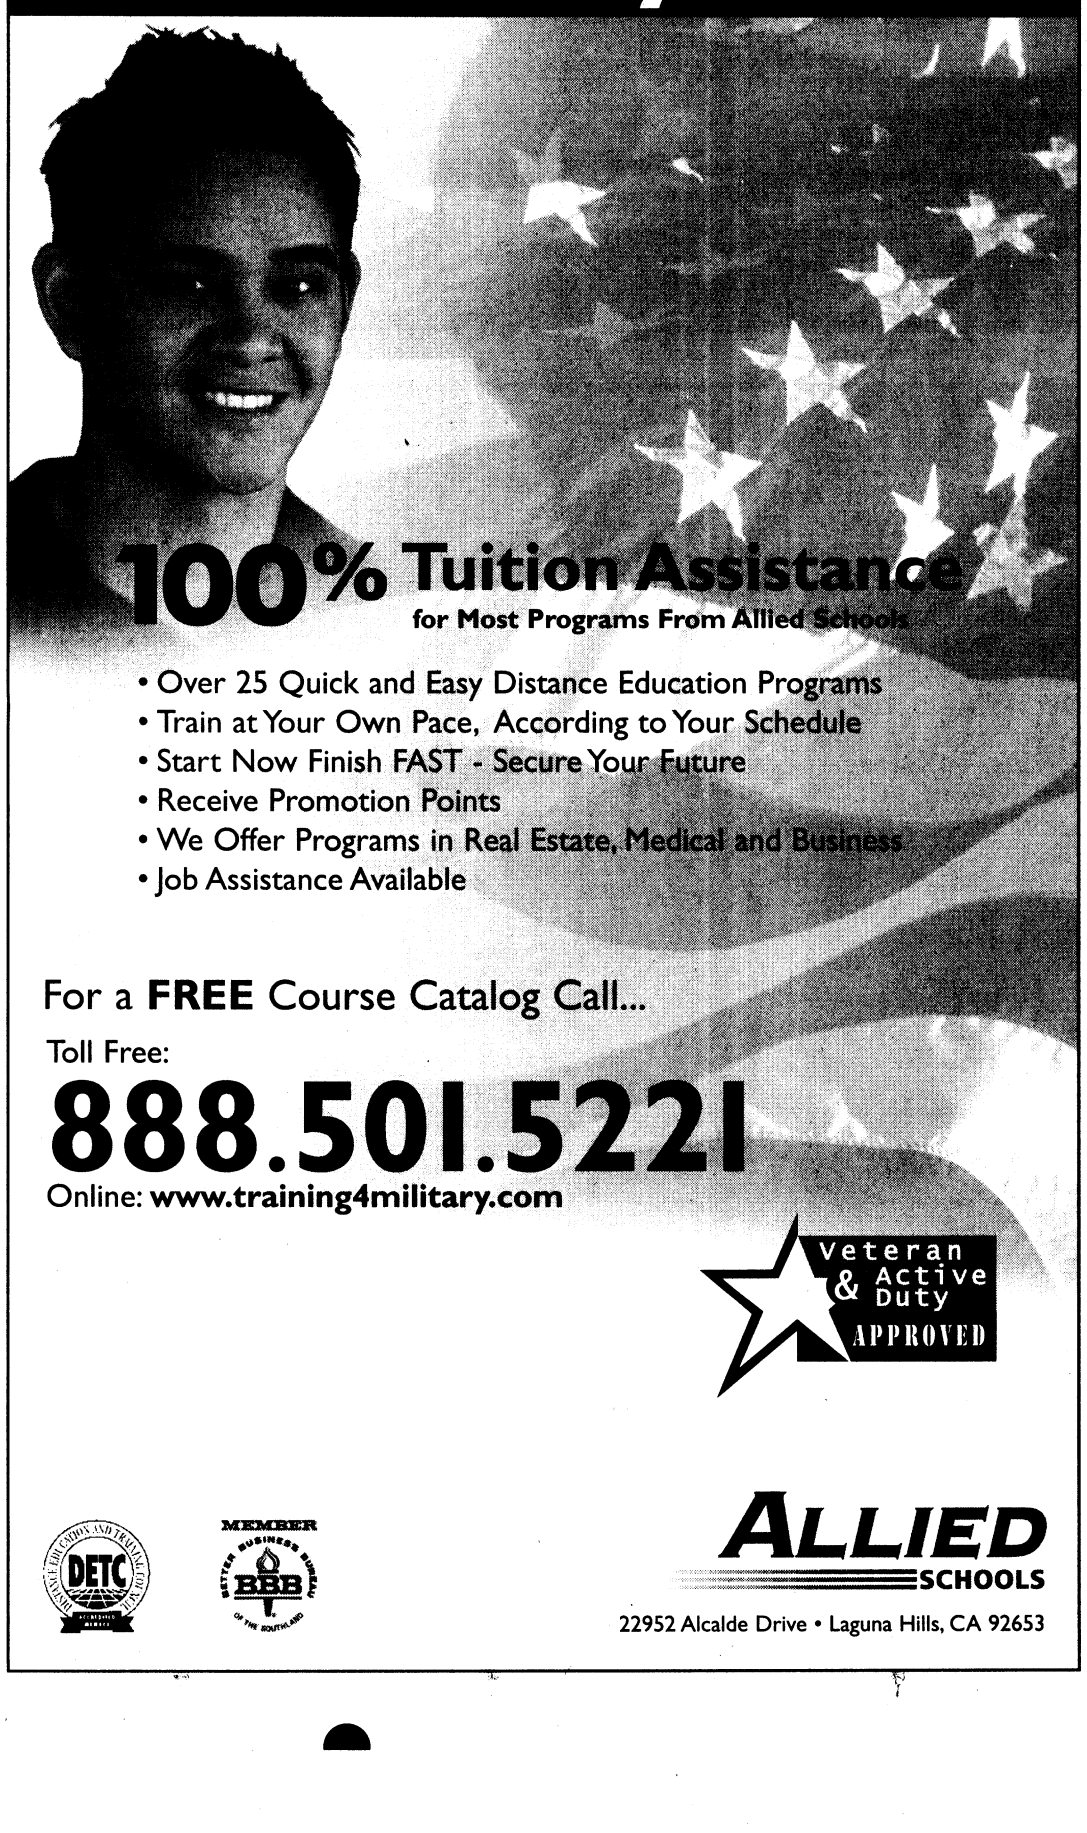
But, for some, she said, admitting you need help is the hardest first step.

At the FRP, those who come in for help get the benefit of two financial counselors — Pratcher and Patti Herron — who have more than 40 years of combined experience. They're both accredited by the Association for Financial Counseling and Planning Education.

The FRP holds intake sessions at 8:15 a.m. every Monday (except holidays) in Building 2625 in Soldiers' Plaza. Pratcher and Herron explain the programs available and have clients fill out a financial assessment tool that gives a snapshot of their finances.

After the intake, clients receive a list of documents they'll need to bring with them to their first appointment — all bills, bank statements, contracts, Leave and Earnings Statements, checkbook and check register.

Pratcher said some clients are not necessarily comfortable sharing all that information, but by having all the documents, there's no guessing.



And in all her years of experience, she's only had one client come in with financial problems who kept an actual checkbook register.

Those planning to get married, divorced, have a baby, leave the Army, retire, buy a house or a car are the people the FRP can help, Pratcher said.

"If it has to do with money, that's what we do," she said. "We can set up spending plans, plans for those starting to save or invest. We can review any contract — before you sign it."

1/15: Soldiers die in combat ops

company, Ryan said.

"When I got to the company, he was the acting platoon sergeant," Ryan said. "He taught me a lot. I had always been light (Infantry) and he helped me understand how a mechanized unit works."

Alexander

A friend, a leader and the epitome of an NCO is how Lt. Col. Gary Brito, battalion commander, described Alexander.

Alexander broke his wrist in January while still in Kuwait, Ryan said.

"He was sent back to the States, pins were put in, but he wanted to get back to his Soldiers," Ryan said.

Sasha Spence, Alexander's sister, told the Clanton Advertiser that her brother enjoyed being in the Army.

"He loved it," she said. "He wanted to make a difference ... He was very loving ... and he always had a smile."

It was that smile Alexander's battalion commander will remember.

"I remember seeing him on patrols, down in the city, leading from the front, taking care of his boys, all the while cracking his trademark smile," Brito said in his remarks for Alexander's service in Iraq.

Alexander is survived by his wife, Fina Alexander, son, Jsai, both of Killeen, Texas; and daughter, Alexandria Alexander, of San Antonio.

Robertson, the platoon medic, was really good at his job, Ryan said.

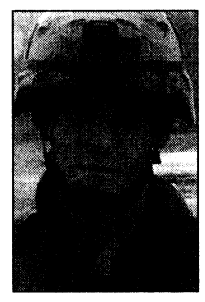
Robertson

"He put himself at risk to help people," Ryan said, describing an incident where Robertson's experience helped an Iraqi child whose arm caught fire from a stove.

Robertson, known to the battalion as "Doc Rob," established more advanced trauma care training for the Soldiers, which made the company more proficient at helping the wounded, Ryan said.

"Doc Rob was there whenever Hardrock got into those heated moments down in the peninsula," Brito said. "When it came time to perform his magic, he did just that. He was an expert at his trade ... and mastered the skills of the rifleman."

Robertson, a veteran of Operation Iraqi Freedom 1, instilled confidence, Ryan said.



Robertson's aunt, Alma Newsom, told the Houston Chronicle that her nephew "took his duties as a medic very seriously and was passionate about maintaining and upgrading his skills so he could give those he assisted on the field of battle the best chance of survival."

Robertson is survived by his wife, Tanya Robertson, and son, Xavier, both of Colorado Springs, Colo.; his mother, Barbara Booker, of Seabrook, Texas; and father, Michael Robertson, of Houston.

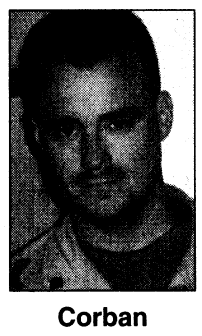
on Sand Hill.

Byrd

After graduating from Airborne School, he was assigned to 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., as a Bradley fighting vehicle driver.



As a Bradley driver for the lead vehicle, his aggressive driving style helped in accomplishing the mission, said Spc. Patrick Foley, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

"He was a motivating person who had the ability to smile even when times were tough," Foley said. "This helped the platoon overcome the day-to-day stresses."

Byrd's wife and high-school sweetheart, Mykel, told the Ledger-Enquirer that Byrd "did what he did because he wanted to protect everyone. He had a huge heart of gold."

Byrd is survived by his wife and his parents Michael and Julia Byrd of Vail, Ariz.

Corban joined the Army in November 2003 and completed OSUT with 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., on Sand Hill.

Corban

Corban, the platoon leader's radio telephone operator, learned all there was to know about platoon communications to become an expert in his job, said Pfc. Patrick Lantz, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

Corban didn't deploy with the battalion because of shoulder surgery.

"He wasn't a quitter," said his wife, Joy Ellen Corban, in a Ledger- Enquirer article. "The Army was hard on him physically. But it didn't deter him from going to Iraq."

He arrived in Baqubah in March.

"During his first dismount mission, when asked if he would be able to carry the manpack, he said 'I'm good to go, sergeant,'" Lantz said.

"His strength and will served as a role model for all his peers," Lantz said.

Corban is survived by his wife and son, Steven, of Fort Benning; his mother, Mary Corban, of Shawnee Mission, Kan.; and father, Douglas Corban, of Spencer, Ind.

Hardy also graduated from OSUT on Sand Hill. His first duty assignment was with 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., where he served as a squad automatic weapon gunner during Operation Iraqi Freedom 1.

Hardy

Sgt. Ryan Vallery, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., said Hardy was a hard-working Soldier.

Whenever maintenance was required, Hardy could be found in the dirt, oil and grease of the Bradley, ensuring it would be ready for the next mission, Vallery said.

Hardy planned on leaving the military, Vallery said, but when he found out the unit was going to deploy, Hardy extended, saying "he was going to stay to help these new guys."

Hardy served as an Infantryman and Bradley gunner.

"His selfless service to 3rd Platoon is echoed in his words and will always be remembered," Vallery said.

"I am very proud of him," his father, Richard Hardy, told the Beacon Journal.

Hardy is survived by his mother, Doris Hardy, of Massillon, Ohio, and his father of Dennison, Ohio.

Summers

Summers joined the Army in 1988 and served with the 1st Armored Division during Operation Desert Storm and with the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., in Operation Iraqi Freedom 1. When the unit was redesignated as A Company, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., he continued to serve as a section leader.

"Staff Sergeant Summers' personal courage and selfless service was exemplified during daily operations," said Staff Sgt. James Beamer, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., "whether overcoming an illness that left him on rear detachment or manually firing the (coaxial machine gun) after an IED left his weapons systems electronically inoperable.

"It was an honor to serve with him," Beamer said. "He was an outstanding NCO and friend. He will truly be missed."

Summers' mother-in-law, Brenda Williford, told the Ledger-Enquirer, that he "was Army all the way."

Summers is survived by his wife, Melissa, and son Preston, both of Columbus, and his mother, Edna Summers of Bangor, Mich.

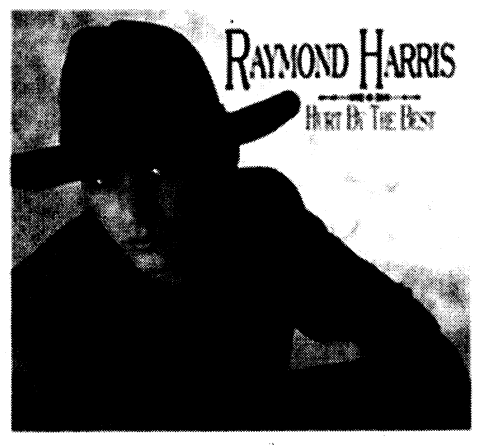
Watkins

Watkins joined the Army in September 2003 and completed OSUT with 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., on Sand Hill. Upon graduation, he was assigned to 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., as a M-240B gunner.

His father, Rob Watkins, told the San Bernardino County Sun that his son was a proud young man who deeply believed in the importance of fighting for the people of Iraq.

"We believe, too, that Tim was involved in a great cause. It was a cause for democracy, a cause for freedom."

Pfc. Thomas Mackey, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., said Watkins was known as a devoted Christian who mentored his peers. He was patient and always willing to lend a helping hand.



Watkins' faith was his passion, his father told the San Bernardino County Sun, and he was fervent even in the midst of war. People were drawn to that.

"Specialist Watkins' zeal for life was a great motivator for the rest of the platoon," Mackey said. "He was respected by all."

Watkins is survived by his mother, Terri Watkins, and his father of Yucca Valley, Calif.

AAFES: Prices gas lower now

different with gas.

He's not exempt from paying local and state sales taxes every time his distributor drops gas at his stations, so his costs are the same as local stations.

Holloway said he can make a difference, though, in the profit.

He's taking things a "little bit farther."

Local press reports, he said, showed how Columbus has a history of having one of the highest gas prices in the state during recent gas crises.

So he started surveying stations further out and found gas prices 20 miles from Fort Benning are two or three cents cheaper per gallon.

In order to protect his consumers and help them get what the competition outside the city offers, Holloway said, he's made the decision to bring AAFES gas prices a nickel less than prices in the Columbus area.

"I though I might initiate a price war, but thankfully that didn't happen," he said.

"We can absorb the profit margin in order to provide for our customer. (Other merchants) can't, or aren't willing.

"It's our local policy to take care of our customer, and it has worked so far," Holloway added.

And because of the unique nature of AAFES, Holloway said capital expenditures, like the $60 million in projects underway or on the schedule, don't affect the prices of the goods in the stores.

"It's a great feeling," he said.

"We're doing the right thing for consumers, the command and for our employees. It's a good time to be at Benning."

Black Hat: Enjoys responsibilities

Course before being selected to become an instructor at the Jumpmaster Branch.

And the move meant Smith had to learn a new class to "sing" for the competition — all 19 single-spaced pages of it — covering all aspects of the equipment used in airborne operations.

"If it was really singing, I wouldn't be here right now," Smith said.

"He got one of the hardest classes in the jumpmaster course," Jenkins said, "and he has to know it word for word."

Smith said he had to describe the tensile strength, materials, weights, and dimensions of the parachute, reserve parachute and the harness as well as describe how the different parts work.

Although there were some "perks" and prizes that went along with his title, Smith said he likes the responsibility that comes with being a black hat, and being the best of the black hats.

"In the basic Airborne course, you see a bunch of blank faces," Smith said. "They put their trust in you. They're depending on you. If you're off your game that day, you could cost someone their life."

He's now actively taking on the responsibility associated with being the guy everybody in the battalion has their eyes on, he said.

"They're looking at me to do the right thing," he said.

One thing he's proud of is bringing the BHOY title back to Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

The title had been in A Company the past two years, and the distinctive gold-braided black hat with gold wings hadn't been on the head of a pathfinder or jumpmaster instructor since sometime in the late 1980s.

Smith said he was able to expand on his knowledge as an instructor in D Company through preparing to become a jumpmaster instructor and in preparing for the competition.

"It just makes me a better instructor all around," he said.

The first runner up was Staff Sgt. Michelle Fontenot and the second runner up was Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Nicholson.

"We have nothing but solid NCOs," said battalion commander Lt. Col. Sean McCaffrey. "These twelve went above and beyond to compete."

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Roberts said the competition is part of a proud tradition in the battalion, honoring those instructors who rose to the top among the "best of the best."

"You are the only ones who do what you do," Roberts told all the black hats on the field. "This award is not to take anything away from the rest of (you), because you put the eliteness into all of the Soldiers who come to Airborne School."

Roberts, who became the battalion's command sergeant major in 1987, said the Black Hat of the Year competition had been lost, so he and and one of his "airborne buddies" decided to bring the award back and make sure it stayed in place.

The Black Hat of the Year, he said, stands for the entire Airborne community.

blowing your nose or coughing, can help decrease the spread of germs that can cause illness," Pacha said.

Pacha also said that if you get a cold or experience flu-like symptoms, such as high fever, headache, extreme tiredness, dry cough, sore throat, runny or stuffy nose, muscle aches and upset stomach, you should see your doctor and stay home until you are well.

"Take care of yourself instead of pushing yourself to go to work, and potentially putting others at risk," she said.

Patients can choose to go off post to receive their vaccine, but Beckwith encourages checking the source to prevent flu shot fraud.

"Check with the local health department for a list of reputable providers," she said.

One reputable source for off-post vaccines, said Cheryl Johnson, of Georgia's West Central Health District, is the American Lung Association's Flu Clinic Locator Web site: http://flucliniclocator.org/.

To find a local flu clinic, enter the zip code. The vaccine cost, date, times, address, and phone number of the clinics offering vaccines nearby, as well as a map showing where the clinic is located, will be displayed. The locator is updated daily.

As soon as Fort Benning receives its supply of vaccinations, Pacha said, the vaccine will be available to Soldiers and family members.

"Our priorities have to be with deploying Soldiers, active duty and high-risk beneficiaries," Pacha said.

Although recent research has suggested vaccinating children first who tend to pass infection to older people, those Martin Army considers priority are patients at risk for complications from the flu and people who can transmit the flu to others at high risk for complications.

A complete list of those at a greater risk from the flu can be found at http://www.cdc.gov/flu/protect/keyfacts/htm.

For Martin Army Community Hospital updates on when the vaccine will be available visit www.martin.amedd.army.mil/news.html.

Riding on a Bradley was a treat for the competitors, especially foreign competitors, said David Spencer, president of the Army Sniper Association. Here, a team dismounts behind a guide, who will lead them into the urban stress fire competition, which was staged at Buchanan Range, one of two buildings on Fort Benning designated for live-fire training.

Story and photos by Bridgett Siter

Counter sniper: On today's battlefield, a sniper is the hunter and the hunted

Call it a snipe hunt. Today's sniper is the hunter and the prey.

In Iraq, Afghanistan or anywhere coalition forces are fighting the war on terrorism, the enemy is often hiding in plain sight. He looks just like his neighbors.

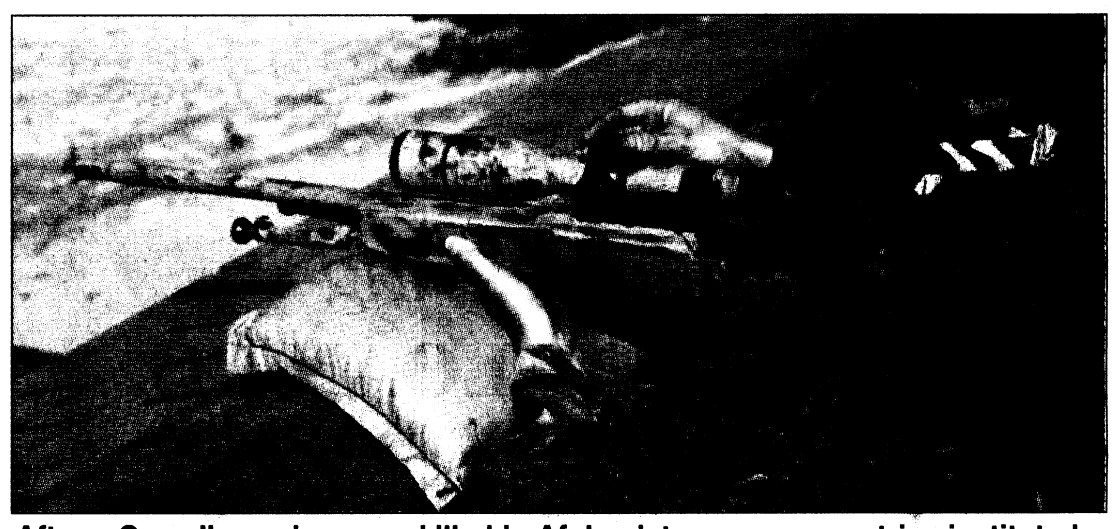
It takes a skilled sniper to spot — and yes, kill — an insurgent waiting for the opportunity to kill him first.

Snipers from six countries put their skills to the test this week during Fort Benning's fifth annual International Sniper Competition. Thirty-one two-man teams took to the sky, the rooftops and the hills to ferret out the enemy before the enemy found them. It's called counter sniping, and it's the focus of sniper training around the world today for good reason.

"This is the best, as far as training goes, we've ever done," said Sgt. James Brown, who came from Fort Lewis, Wash., to compete with his teammate, Sgt. Colin Handy. The two spent a year in Iraq, and they said this week's competition was "combat relevant," because the scenarios, or tasks, mirrored those they faced during their deployment with 5th Battalion, 20th Infantry Regiment.

"As far as being realistic, yeah, this is it," Brown said.

The competition is relevant by design, said Staff Sgt. Larry Davis, and he should know. Davis participated in the first two competitions here. He's helped plan and execute the last three.



"We're not here to test their schoolhouse skills," he said. "We're here to see how they perform in a combat situation under a lot of stress. We throw a scenario at them, and let them figure out the best way to handle it by themselves, just like they'd have to do in combat."

The majority of the school's 25 cadre — Soldiers in C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — are combat veterans, and they had a say in designing the competition since planning started in the spring. The competitors completed one or two events each day, nine in all, based on lessons learned by the cadre in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Sniper teams from Israel, Ireland, Great Britain, Canada and the U.S. — Marines, Airmen, and Soldiers — took turns at the urban stress shoot event on Buchanan Range Monday. With the cacophony of gunfire, air assaults and mournful "mosque music" blaring from loudspeakers — a "stress enhancer," Davis called it — the snipers were tasked to search a building, top to bottom, and root out hostiles in the area.

Sniper School cadre role-played opposition forces throughout the competition. Here, stationed on a rooftop at Buchanan Range, they fire blanks to add an element of realism to the stress fire exercise.

After a Canadian sniper was killed in Afghanistan, many countries instituted a policy of anonymity for their snipers. Competitors who didn't want to be filmed or identified wore yellow ribbons throughout the competition.

> "Everybody who competes will leave here a better Soldier, because we share information that will save lives in combat."
> Tech. Sgt. Todd Reed
> Sniper competitor

Targets dotted the landscape, but it was hard to tell, at first glance, which targets carried guns. That's where the spotter came in. In each team, the spotter, typically the more experienced of the two, used a scope to identify the target and a scientific calculator to gauge distance and trajectory. A slight miscalculation could result in the death of a bystander — a target minding its own business — and the loss of a few precious points.

Based on skill and speed, points were tabulated at the end of each event to determine today's winners.

The first place team will go home with a nice package, including guns and scopes, after an awards ceremony tonight.

The prize package is nice, said Tech. Sgt. Todd Reed, but it's not the competition's greatest draw. You can't put a price tag on the skills one learns in competition.

"This is the best competition I've been to," said Reed, who competed with his twin brother Tim. "They knock it dead here. It's fun. But it's not all about the fun. Everybody who competes will leave here a better Soldier, because we share information that will save lives in combat."

That's the dichotomy of the event, said Capt. Ray Dillman, the commander of C Company. It's a "gentleman's game" in that the participants traditionally share the kind of insider information that levels the field.

"And that's really the goal. At the end of the day, we want an exchange of ideas," Dillman said. "We're all friendly forces, and we have the same goal."

That goal, Davis said, is to win the war on terrorism. The competition has evolved into a world-class event because of the war and not in spite of it. Three years ago, attendance was down as armies around the world focused on the war at hand.

School officials toyed with the idea of canceling the competition. But the war itself made evident the need for sniper training.

"Now, everybody's trying to improve their snipers," Davis said.

"Outside of combat, this is really the only way to test your skill level."

A sniper helps his teammate through a hatch in the roof of the live-fire building on Buchanan Range during the first day of competition Monday. The winners will be named tonight during an awards ceremony, sponsored by the U.S. Army Sniper Association.

Teams from six countries, including a civilian team from the U.S. Border Patrol, participated in the competition, which was designed to simulate combat situations soldiers experience in the Middle East.

CHARMED

Newest phase part of historical craze

The latest phase of the age-old charm bracelet craze gives new meaning to the word "charming."

Italian charm bracelets, those modular cuffs with spring-loaded snap-on links, are the newest version of a jewelry tradition that's been around longer than any other. Longer even than the wedding ring.

Scientists can argue till they're blue in the face about the origin of man, but science, via archaeology, has proven that the modern charm bracelet evolved from a primitive version. Imagine Cro-Magnon man bringing a bracelet home to his woman.

OK, that's a bit of a stretch. Charms have been around almost forever, but they didn't dangle from bracelets until a few hundred years ago.

Let me explain.

In the beginning, the earth was not a charming place. It was covered with dirt and rocks and water. And animals, which lived and died and decayed, pretty much like they do now, leaving behind a pile of pearly white bones, which appealed to the Stone Agers. They carved those bones into tiny figures, and the charm was born.

Since then, people have been using tiny figurines as symbols or tokens of love, hope, superstition or power. You name it.

In Africa, scientists have unearthed charms made from shells more than 75,000 years old. Those were obviously the cheap forerunners of the jewel-encrusted charms that were popular during the Bronze Age, when jewels were believed to elicit various powers.

Egyptians used charms as early as 3000 B.C. to ward off evil spirits, enhance fertility and assure prosperity. They were the first to cast gold, using a "lost-wax" technique still used by many charm manufacturers.

But it was the Babylonians who were the first to put charms on a chain and put the chain around the wrist. Why the wrist instead of, say, the neck or the waist, no one can say.

Until the industrial revolution, charms were custom made and very expensive. Queen Victoria launched the earliest and most widespread charm bracelet craze in the mid-1800s when she wore a bracelet with lockets that contained family portraits and a lock of her husband's hair.

In the U.S., charm bracelets reached the height of popularity after World War II, when American servicemen brought home souvenir charms from the cities they liberated. Jewelers recognized the rebirth of a potential cash cow and started turning out charms of every ilk. To this day, crosses, silhouettes, bells, hearts and birth stones are requisite charm starters.

At that point, charm bracelets served two purposes. There were theme bracelets, like the Ten Commandments, American states and baby trinkets, which were often ready-made gifts to mark milestones in a young lady's life. Today, period pieces are a rare find, as most were passed on from generation to generation. A vintage theme bracelet is a highly sought-after collectable.

And there were the more popular add-as-you-go bracelets, called a "Lifetime bracelet," a collection of assorted charms that told the story of one's life.

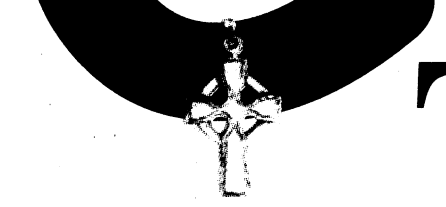
If you have your grandmother's charm bracelet, it's probably this variety, and it's probably filled with miniature mementoes of her life, including her high school or college graduation, her marriage, maybe her husband's military service, the birth of her babies, something to denote her religious affiliation and any civic organizations she belonged to. It's a jeweler's version of the scrap book.

Your grandmother may have passed her bracelet to your mother, who added her own charms, including ones related to her career, her favorite teams and her hobbies.

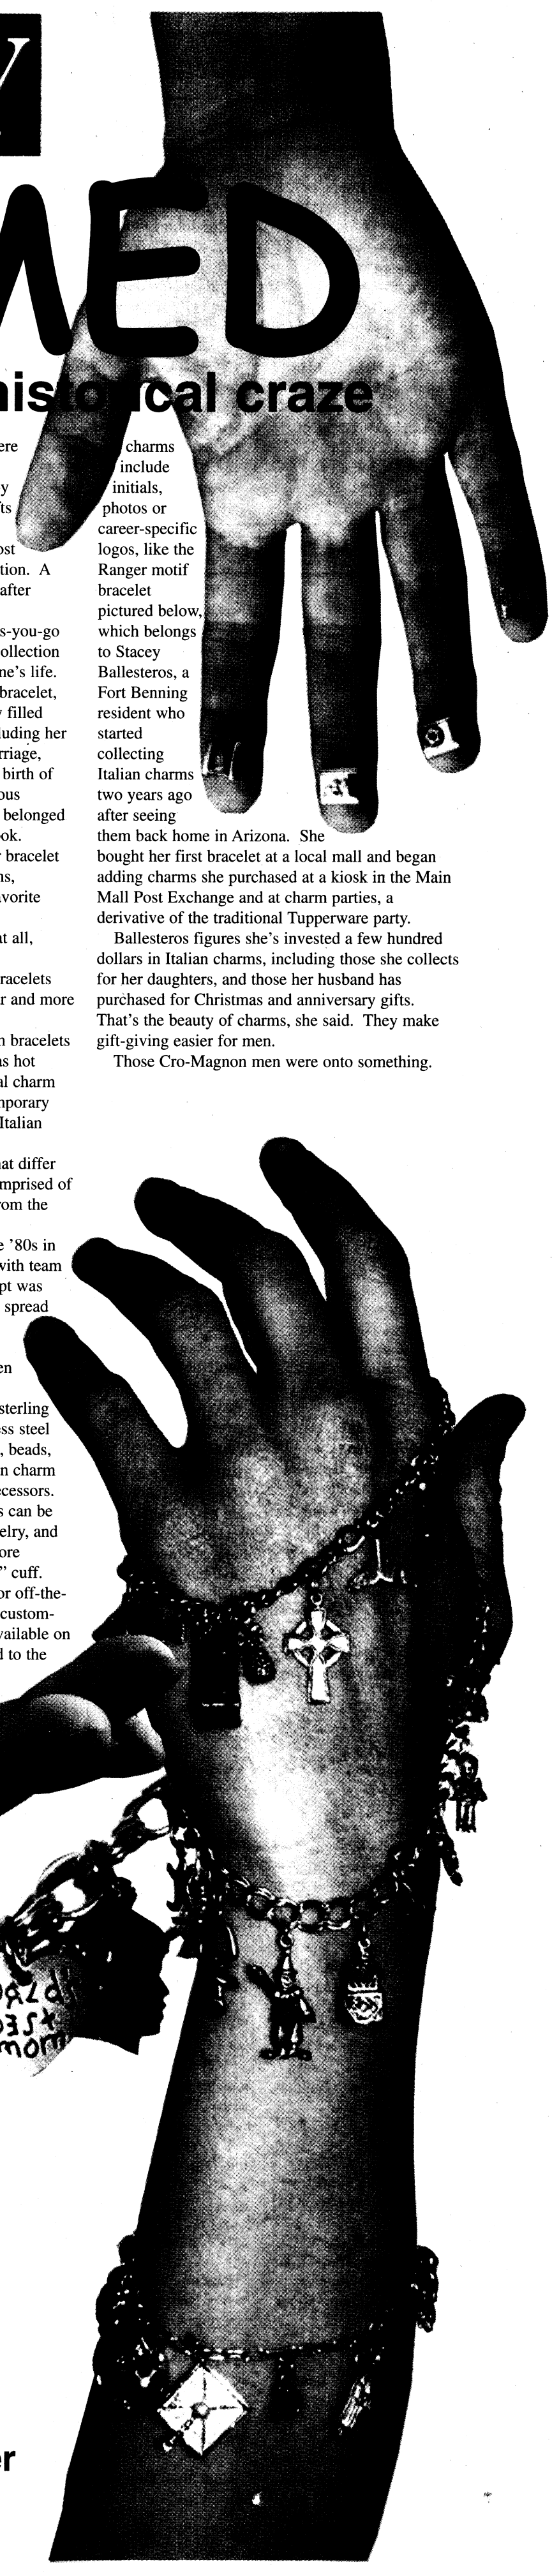
Then again, maybe she didn't add any at all, because the charm bracelet craze cooled considerably by the early '60s, when ID bracelets and costume jewelry became more popular and more affordable.

Collectors began dusting off their charm bracelets a decade ago, when everything vintage was hot again. In the past few years, the traditional charm bracelet has vied with newer, more contemporary versions, such as slides, charm beads and Italian charms. Especially Italian charms, those "composable" build-your-own bracelets that differ from traditional variety in that they are comprised of charm links, instead of charms dangling from the links of a chain.

Italian charms were introduce in the late '80s in Europe, where soccer players wore them with team colors and their national flags. The concept was introduced in California in the '90s, and it spread like wildfire to other parts of the country.



Again, it evolved. Now Italian charm bracelets, like their early counterparts, often tell the story of one's life. Though gold bracelets are available, stainless steel and sterling silver are much easier to find. And stainless steel is much easier to adorn with laser pictures, beads, jewels and enameled art, making the Italian charm bracelet much more colorful than its predecessors. It's also much more versatile. Watch faces can be added to turn bracelets into functional jewelry, and "megalinks" are used to connect two or more bracelets, creating one very thick, "storied" cuff.



Italian charms cost anywhere from $2 for off-the-rack mall merchandise to $50 or more for custom-made, personalized links, like those available on any number of Web sites devoted to the art.

These personalized charms include initials, photos or career-specific logos, like the Ranger motif bracelet pictured below, which belongs to Stacey Ballesteros, a Fort Benning resident who started collecting Italian charms two years ago after seeing them back home in Arizona. She bought her first bracelet at a local mall and began adding charms she purchased at a kiosk in the Main Mall Post Exchange and at charm parties, a derivative of the traditional Tupperware party.

Ballesteros figures she's invested a few hundred dollars in Italian charms, including those she collects for her daughters, and those her husband has purchased for Christmas and anniversary gifts. That's the beauty of charms, she said. They make gift-giving easier for men.

Those Cro-Magnon men were onto something.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Is Internet spam merely a nuisance, or can it be dangerous as well?

A: Online spam can be financially dangerous, as some classic swindles have been getting a new twist via the Internet. One of them is the "advance fee" scam.

An advance fee scam promises that you will get something of value if you pay an up-front fee. For example, you might get an e-mail promising a free vacation at a resort timeshare by paying a small amount, perhaps called a "processing fee."

Once you pay the fee, you will often be asked to pay another small fee, then another, until you have paid out quite a bit. The "free prize" itself is never awarded, however.

Suppose you receive an e-mail saying a poem you wrote and posted online was chosen to appear in an anthology. Could it be a scam?

It could be, depending on what the company demands from you in return. If the company states that there is a charge to buy the anthology, let's say, $50, and for another $25 your biography will also appear, then the company may be running a scam. Beware of literary contests that claim you have won a prize, which turns out to have a price tag attached instead.

Have you received an e-mail stating how profitable ostrich farming is? This is another example of what used to be a chain letter scam that has now moved to the Internet.

The pitch claims that for a small investment, you and several investors can start an ostrich farm. The claim is made that ostrich meat is very popular, and the farm will make a great profit. Usually any money sent in is simply stolen.

Even if an ostrich farm was created however, ostrich meat is not in enough demand to produce huge profits as claimed.

Consumers should be wary of any exotic-sounding investment, and conduct thorough research before investing any money.

Precautions can prevent flu this season

Maj. Laura A. Pacha
Martin Army Community Hospital

It's flu season again. To reduce your chances of getting the flu between October and May, the peak flu season, you should get a flu vaccination.

Why do I need a flu shot?

Five to 20 percent of the U.S. population gets the flu; more than 200,000 people are hospitalized from flu complications and about 36,000 people die from the flu.

What is the flu?

The flu is caused by influenza viruses, which is a contagious respiratory illness. The flu can cause mild to severe illness and at times can lead to death. The best way to prevent this illness is by receiving an influenza vaccination.

Older people (50 years of age and older), young children (older than six months) and people with health conditions such as chronic heart or lung conditions, including asthma, diabetes, chronic kidney disease or a weakened immune system caused by medicines or by infection such as HIV and AIDS are at a higher risk for serious flu complications. These individuals are considered in a high risk group.

How do I catch the flu?

The virus is spread by respiratory droplets caused by coughing and sneezing and is usually spread from person to person, however, people sometimes become infected by touching an object that has the flu viruses on it and then touching their mouths or noses.

Most adults usually infect others beginning the first day before symptoms develop and up to five days after becoming sick. In other words, you can pass on the flu to someone else before you realize you are sick, as well as while you are sick.

Symptoms of flu include: fever (usually high), headache, extreme tiredness, dry cough, sore throat, runny or stuffy nose and muscle aches. Complications of flu can include bacterial pneumonia, dehydration and worsening of the chronic medical conditions mentioned earlier. Children may develop sinus problems and ear infections.

What types of vaccines are available?

There are two types of influenza vaccines. The flu shot is an inactivated vaccine containing killed virus. The flu shot is approved for use in everyone older than 6 months, which includes the healthy and those with health issues. The flu shot is not recommended for pregnant women.

The nasal-spray flu vaccine — a vaccine made with live, weakened flu viruses — is approved for use in healthy people ages 5 to 49 who are not pregnant. Neither vaccine causes the flu.

Any person in close contact with someone in a high-risk group should get vaccinated. This includes all healthcare workers, household contacts and caregivers of children 6 to 23 months old, and those having close contact with people 65 years and older.

Some people should not be vaccinated without first consulting a physician. They include those who have a severe allergy to chicken eggs, people who have had a severe reaction to an influenza vaccination in the past and children younger than 6 months. Influenza vaccine is not approved for use in this age group.

How do I reduce the spread of the flu?

Avoid close contact with people who are sick. Avoid people when you are sick. If possible, stay home from work, school and refrain from running errands while sick. Cover your mouth and nose with a tissue when coughing or sneezing. Washing your hands often will help protect you from flu viruses.

To protect yourself and others from the flu this year, get your flu shot and stay away from those who are sick, as well as stay away from others when you are sick.

Benning Bazaar set for Sunday

Fund-raising event at Officers' Club

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

The Officers' Spouses' Club will hold its annual Benning Bazaar fund-raiser from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday at the Officers' Club.

The theme of this year's bazaar is "Here Come the Holidays."

"Approximately 60 vendors have provided door prizes to be given away throughout the day," said Sandy Risberg, fund-raising chairman for the club.

"Those who eat brunch at the Officers' Club and visit the bazaar will receive two door prize tickets and double their chances of winning," she said.

Local craftsmen from Georgia, Florida and Alabama will sell a wide variety of merchandise, including hand-made and one-of-a-kind items.

The Officers' Spouses' Club hopes to raise $7,000 from this event.

Proceeds from the bazaar will provide grant money for various children's organizations on post, and contribute to college scholarships for dependents.

The event is open to the public. Admission is $3 for everyone 12 and older. Children 11 and younger are free.

Advance admission tickets purchased at the Officers' Club prior to Sunday are eligible for a special $25 gift certificate drawing.

For more information about the Benning Bazaar, call Risberg at 682-9585.

For more information about the Sunday brunch, call the Officers' Club at 682-0640.

God Bless Fort Benning Rally Nov. 19

Free event features Tracy Lawrence

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

You may not know them, but they know what you're going through. They know your reality and your worst fears.

Jessica Redmond was a newlywed when her husband was deployed to Iraq in 2003.

John Givhan risked his life at the control of a helicopter in Vietnam.

Deborah Tainsh lost her stepson to a roadside bomb in Iraq.

Redmond, Givhan and Tainsh have written books about their experiences with war. They'll join nine other "military" authors at the annual God Bless Fort Benning Rally at the Columbus Civic Center Nov. 19.

The authors will be among the VIPs featured at the Hug A Hero station, said Jan Pease, director of community relations for the Tidwell Cancer Treatment Center.

Dr. Jack and Eve Tidwell, Columbus residents, started the rally four years ago in response to the annual SOA-Watch protest outside Fort Benning's main gate on Fort Benning Boulevard.

The protest, Nov. 18-20, will draw thousands of people to South Columbus. The gate at Benning Boulevard and South Lumpkin Road will be closed.

Fort Benning residents who plan to attend the free rally should take I-185 to Victory Drive west to the Civic Center.

The rally, from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m., will feature 15 bands, country music star Tracy Lawrence, the Budweiser Clydesdales, helicopter rides and the Army's NHRA dragster.

Pease encouraged those who attend to wear red, white and blue to "say thank you to the U.S. military ... and send a message to everyone that we thank them for their service."

Protect yourself from identity theft

Capt. Luis E. Ortiz
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Since I began working in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate two months ago, I have interviewed several clients regarding identity theft issues. Nowadays it seems pretty common to hear about identity theft crimes from colleagues or relatives.

Identity theft occurs when someone uses your personal information without your permission to commit fraud or other crimes. It is very difficult to control being a victim of identity theft, but there are steps that can help reduce or minimize the risk of becoming a victim.

The thief doesn't need a whole lot of information to steal your identity — a small piece of information is more than enough.

There are several techniques used by thieves to steal someone else's identity. They can get information from companies by stealing records or information while they are on the job, bribing an employee who has access to these records or conning information out of others.

Thieves can also steal your mail, including bank and credit card statements and credit card offers. They may steal your credit or debit card numbers by capturing the information from a data storage device in a practice known as "skimming."

They may steal your wallet or purse or may complete a change of address form to divert your mail to another location. They may even go through your trash, the trash of businesses or public dumps.

Once identity thieves have your personal information, they can use it in a variety of ways. They may open new credit card accounts in your name. They may open a bank account in your name and write bad checks on that account.

They may file for bankruptcy under your name to avoid paying debts they have incurred in your name or to avoid eviction. They may buy a car by taking out an auto loan in your name.

They may get identification, such as a driver's license issued with their picture and your name.

They may give your name to the police during an arrest and if they don't show up in court, a warrant for arrest might be issued for you.

People must be alert to the following signs that they have become victims of identity theft. For example, failing to receive bills or other mail could mean that a thief has taken over your account and changed your billing address to cover his act. Also, if you have received credit cards that you didn't apply for, being denied credit, being offered less favorable credit terms or if you have received calls or letters from debt collectors or businesses about merchandise that you didn't buy, that might be a strong suggestion that you have become a victim as well.

However, it is very difficult to predict how long it will take a victim of identity theft to recover from this situation. This will depend on several factors, like the type of theft, whether the thief sold or passed your information to other thieves, whether the thief is caught, and problems related to correcting a credit report.

Victims should review their credit reports once every three months in the first year of theft and once a year thereafter. A victim should act fast and diligently in correcting the records and contacting all companies that opened fraudulent accounts. The longer it takes for the victim to act, the longer it is going to take to resolve the problem.

At this point you must be asking what you can do to fight back against an identity theft in order to correct your records and credit information.

The 2003 amendments to the Fair Credit Reporting Act section 609(e) allow identity theft victims to get from businesses a copy of the application or other business transaction relating to their identity theft free of charge.

Businesses must provide these records within 30 days of receipt of the victim request. Businesses must also provide these records to law enforcement agencies authorized by victims.

On the other hand, businesses don't have an absolute obligation to provide the requested information, if in good faith they determine that the true identity of the requester is uncertain.

As an identity theft victim, you must prove to each one of the companies where accounts were opened that you didn't create the debt. One way to do this is through what is known as an ID Theft Affidavit. However, while certain companies that may accept this affidavit, others may require additional or different documents. It is recommended to call each one of the companies to find out if they will accept the affidavit.

Once the affidavit is completed, mail a copy to each creditor, bank or company that provided the thief with unauthorized credit, goods or services you described. Then file a report with the police in the community in which the theft occurred. Get a copy of that police report or at least the number of the report and attach a copy of that report with the affidavit.

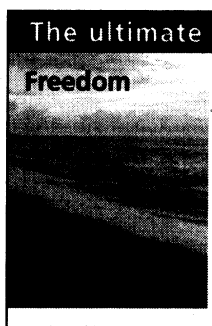
If the police don't want to take your report, ask to file a miscellaneous incident report and check with your local attorney general to see if the law requires the police to take reports of identity theft. Unfortunately, these actions might help with the creditors, but there are no guarantees that the debt will be cleared by them.

It is important to keep in mind there are three nationwide consumer reporting companies with which a victim can place a fraud alert on their credit report. These companies are: Equifax, www.equifax.com, (800) 525-6283; Experian, www.experian.com (888) 397-3742; and TransUnion, www.transunion.com, (800) 680-7289).

What are the benefits of placing a fraud alert? A fraud alert can help in preventing an identity thief from opening another account in your name.

If you call one of these companies to place a fraud alert, they are required to give notice to the other two about the alert and they have to include that information in their credit reports.

Victims of identity theft, as well as the general public, must be aware of these issues in order to avoid dealing with the painful consequences of a bad credit report, huge legal fees, and problems with law enforcement officials or even jail time.



You can find this information and more at www.consumer.gov/idtheft or by calling call the FTC identity theft hotline at (877) 438-4338.

Faith Middle School tests anti-terrorism plan

Simulates hostage situation drill

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Melissa House

Faith's D.A.R.E. officer, Staff Sgt. Gregory Lee, helps evacuate students in the sixth-grade wing during Wednesday's hostage drill.

Students and faculty at Faith Middle School passed a test of a different kind Wednesday — a test of their plans and procedures in the event of a hostage situation at the school.

Assistant Principals Angie Cotton and Mike Starrett said Fort Benning schools have been required to plan for and practice these and other safety drills for many years, but the hostage scenario drill came into effect about seven years ago.

Wednesday's drill, while inconvenient for several parents who tried to drop off or pick up their children, is important because the students and faculty need to be prepared for a violent situation.

"This is not just in the wake of 9-11," Starrett said, "but it is another aspect.

"We could have a noncustodial parent who wants to seize an opportunity to take his or her child back, and we need to know how to react until the authorities come," he said.

"We need to protect the students, and we're also cognizant of what happened at Columbine (high school) and other similar incidents."

On Friday, the school had to be evacuated when a Halloween display set off the smoke alarms.

The students reacted the same way they would for a planned drill, Starrett said, proving practice pays off.

"It's as simple as why Soldiers train the way they do for war," he said.

In an actual emergency, all of the post's emergency services would respond to the situation.

During the drill, two members of the Military Police Activity's Special Reaction Team were on hand to add realism to the drill, to observe the faculty, and assess what improvements had been made since the last drill.

Starrett notified the staff of the situation at 9:30 a.m. using a coded announcement to let them know what the situation was and what actions they should take with their classes.

Teachers immediately locked their classrooms, accounted for the students, and waited until they could be safely evacuated from the building.

The SRT OIC 1st Lt. Erik Salus and NCOIC Staff Sgt. David Valentin went room by room, rattling doorknobs and pleading with the teachers to open the doors.

Their efforts didn't pay off from a hostage standpoint, but did from a safety standpoint.

"This year was completely different from last year," Valentin said. "I saw a 150 percent improvement right off the bat.

"The new control measures and codes are working," he said.

Despite the coaxing, none of the teachers opened their doors.

Salus and Valentin used the school's D.A.R.E. officer, Staff Sgt. Gregory Lee, a Department of the Army police officer, as a familiar and friendly face for the students.

As the SRT members cleared the classrooms, Lee led the students and teachers out of the building.

Valentin stopped in one classroom to talk with the students.

They were the only ones who didn't heed the instructions to stay quiet.

"I let them know it's imperative to stay quiet," Valentin said.

"As a 'bad guy,' I'm listening to find out where they are, and I knew they were inside the classroom and along the wall."

Although the drill took less than two hours from start to finish, Salus said, in a real hostage situation, the timeline would be much longer.

Choose God's values

Chaplain (Capt.) David Phillips
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division

REFLECTIONS

There are values we cherish that determine our loyalties and how we choose to live our lives. Those of us serving in the U.S. Army are familiar with the seven Army values — loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage. So adherence to values is commonplace for most of us and we assign priorities to those we hold most dear.

For those of us who are married and have children, our families hold our first priority whenever they are not superseded by the needs of the Army. Thus, under certain circumstances, we have to adjust our priorities even when we hold others most dear.

To deny that we are at war with our values because we hold the values of human rights and freedom dear would be like going into a closet and staying so we would not have to face reality. There are those who detest our freedoms and would rather enslave us to their doctrine and way of life.

To maintain our freedoms and the safety of our loved ones, we fight to maintain our freedoms, even at a tremendous cost, in order to preserve what we have come to think is our God-given right and part of our destiny. Therefore we must give our support to the persons and materials necessary to fight this war that threatens our way of life and our very existence.

In order for us to achieve the completeness of our human character and to become all that God wants and desires for us, our relationship to God should be of primary importance. The priority we place on our relationship to God conditions all our attitudes.

Matthew 6:33 says, "But seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." We are to give God and his kingdom first place in every aspect of our lives. God wants to influence the whole scheme of our lives, that we might be an influence in all that our lives encompass.

The priority of faith makes the concern for the values we hold dear more important than what we shall eat, wear or drink.

God desires the best for us, but we often place his will down the list of our priorities. God's values should influence every aspect of our lives and have great promise to change how we treat others as well as how we approach our everyday routines.

With God's peace, strength and wisdom, what a difference he can make as we face trials and difficulties instead of relying on our own. Scripture tells us that, "With God all things are possible through Christ" (Matthew 19:26).

The key is to let God permeate every aspect of our being, and when we practice that, we find renewed strength. The priority is ours to choose, so why not choose wisdom that is centuries old and is all-knowing? We choose our values, so why not choose God's values that are time-tested and true?

You were created to become like Christ

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Hawkins

He sat across from me, head in hands, eyes rimmed with tears, just wanting life to be better.

"I just thought there'd be more to life than this ...," his voice trailed off. Ever had a moment like that when you sat in silence and just thought, "It's got to be better than this ..."

Well, for 40 days there are several hundred of us on Fort Benning who have committed to grow the third dimension of our life. We want to be healthy and vibrant and not just physically, and not just mentally, but we want the best God has to offer spiritually too.

And that's what the 40 Days of Purpose Campaign is all about. It's not about money and things that are here today and gone tomorrow; it's about what matters and will go on long after this warm-up act for eternity, called life, is over.

If you've been tracking with us, then you know that we've discovered there are five purposes why God put us here. The first purpose is worship — that's making God smile by honoring him and living the life the Creator had in mind for his creation. The second purpose we mentioned last week is fellowship — that's connecting deeply with other believers to "do life together," instead of living life as a solo sport. The third purpose for our lives that we want to talk about is discipleship — getting a hold of the fact that you were created to become like Christ.

Isn't it interesting that you can argue and go back and forth about a lot of religious stuff, but when it comes right down to looking at the life and teachings of Jesus Christ, most everybody will agree — "now there's a mold worth following!" Has any figure ever had the breadth of influence and impact of Jesus? Yet he didn't have a lear jet, never owned a home, much less a condo at the beach — in fact, he didn't even have an address the last three years of his life.

How do you become like Christ? Well, for those who've decided to follow him, it doesn't take long to realize that God is more interested in our character than in our comfort. And he produces that growth in us several different ways.

First he transforms us by the truth — as we read God's blueprint for living, the Bible, we get to practice three activities. We accept its authority for our lives, much like a compass that guides us. We assimilate its truth, much like a baby who can grow only as it gets the milk it needs. And then we apply its principles, much like a Soldier doesn't become a Soldier until he has accepted, assimilated and then applied what he's learned.

Second, God transforms us not just by truth, but he transforms us by trouble. Yup, Hawkins has learned the hard way that there is usually a purpose behind every problem.

Bad PCS? Look for the purpose behind the problem. Troubled relationship? Look for the purpose behind the problem. Disappointment with Uncle Sam? You get the picture. What happens on the outside isn't nearly as important as what happens on the inside, and God can bring his purposes to pass, especially through the classroom of "problems."

Lastly, God grows us through not just truth and troubles, but through temptation. On the path to spiritual maturity, even temptation becomes a stepping stone rather than a stumbling block when you realize it is just as much an occasion to do the right thing, as it is to do the wrong thing. Instead of destroying you, God wants to use temptation to develop you.

Pioneer games motivate Soldiers

Softball for breakfast and tire tossing for lunch was on the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, menu Oct. 28.

The battalion's annual Pioneer Olympics competition started with Soldiers batting for softball bragging rights at the crack of dawn.

Following the win by A Company, the battalion's Soldiers streamed into Briant Wells Fitness Center or fanned out over Pioneer and Stillwell Fields to engage in racquetball, dodgeball and ironman competitions.

"This brings back a competitive spirit to a unit that's always out to the four winds," said Staff Sgt. Charles Edwards, C Company.

"It brings us together, strengthens the esprit de corps and it's great for motivation and morale."

Each company was charged with staging and scoring an event.

Points were awarded to teams based upon final event standings, with bonus points awarded to event winners.

The company with the highest total amount of points at the conclusion of the day would be declared battalion champion.

"This is definitely team building," said Sgt. Kyle Bender of Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

"The camaraderie here is something else. It doesn't even matter what company (a Soldier's) in, everybody still roots for them."

Following a lunch break, Soldiers squared off for football and basketball contests.

"Everyone wants to win and no one wants to be the loser," said Staff Sgt. Landon Becker, B Company.

"It's fun to get out and have this camaraderie among the companies."

When the points for all competitions were totalled, A Company, D Company and HHC emerged in a three-way tie for first.

To break the tie and determine an overall company winner, the first sergeants from the three winning teams tossed pumpkins.

HHC 1st Sgt. Dwight Christopher heaved his pumpkin to the top spot, giving HHC the overall win.

"This is a good thing. It gives us a break from training every day and we can let off a little steam with some friendly competition," he said.

The daylong events culminated in a family fall festival in front of the battalion headquarters, complete with children's activities such as a haunted house, moonwalk, pumpkin painting and face painting.

"I think it's great the battalion puts this together," Edwards said.

"The Soldiers enjoy it and I look forward to doing it again this spring."

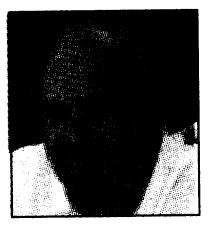
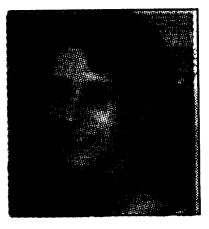
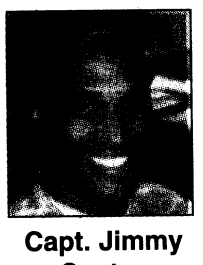
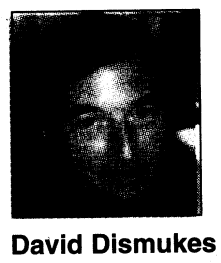
• Give me a Bruschi
New England Patriots' linebacker Tedy Bruschi returned to the field just nine months after suffering a minor stroke and having surgery to repair a minor hole in his heart Oct. 30. Bruschi played in 64 of 77 defensive plays and had two tackles and five assists.

• Carl did the flip
Carl Edwards finished out his season sweep of Atlanta Motor Speedway with his win Oct. 30 in the Bass Pro Shops MBNA 500.
The win puts Edwards in a tie for fourth place in the points standings with Ryan Newman.









• Epstein leaves Sox
General manager Theo Epstein announced Oct. 31 he will not return as the general manager of the Boston Red Sox next year.
Epstein, one of the youngest GM's in baseball history, said he might leave baseball or take a year off.

• Vikings set back again
Minnesota Vikings' quarterback Daunte Culpepper had a season-ending injury to his right knee Oct. 30.
The Vikings, 2-5, will use veteran Brad Johnson as their starter for the remainder of the season.

• Goodbye, Wellington
Wellington Mara, 89, co-owner of the New York Giants since the age of 14, recently died.
Mara's grand-daughter Kate, one of 40 grandchildren, sang the national anthem Oct. 30 as the Giants went on to win, 36-0, over the Redskins.

• Three to go ...
This week's NASCAR race is the Dickies 500 from Texas Motor Speedway Coverage starts at 3 p.m. on NBC.

Ken is only one game ahead of Lori, who had some stellar picks last week. Capt. Coates slides from second to fourth, although everyone in the top four is within one game of each other. Capt. Reinke also had a good week, and is sneaking up on David. Should be some good games this weekend and make for interesting standings next week.

NASCAR driver takes closer look at Soldier life

Greg Biffle, left, NASCAR driver for the Army National Guard, listens to Staff Sgt. Joshua Carle explain the mechanics of the Squad Automatic Weapon Oct. 27.

National Guard driver visits Fort Benning

Tracy A. Bailey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Greg Biffle, driver for the Army National Guard sponsored NASCAR #16, got a firsthand look at Army training Oct. 27.

Biffle experienced the power of the Squad Automatic Weapon.

"This thing's awesome," said Biffle, who compared firing the SAW to driving a race car. "I have a little bit of an adrenaline rush ... like a qualifying lap right there."

Biffle was at Fort Benning to say thank you to the troops and get a look at what they do every day.

"Not a lot of people get to see the behind-the-scenes types of things I got to see this morning," he said. "It's incredible the heart these guys have for what they are doing."

Biffle watched Soldiers at the National Guard Warrior Training Center navigate a series of obstacles, showing the strength and mental endurance Soldiers need to attend Ranger school.

"It's been a neat experience so far ... pretty amazing to see," said Biffle, who visited three ranges to talk to the Soldiers and express his appreciation for all they do.

"It's incredible ... the training that they do," he said. "We're proud of what they do, the hard work and effort they put forth."

The feeling was mutual, said Sgt. Maj. Tom Siter, sergeant major of the National Guard Warrior Training Center.

"We certainly appreciated the time he took to come and show his appreciation for the Soldiers who defend our country every day," Siter said.

Damien Garwood, a 12-year-old NASCAR fan, was awestruck to meet a top five NEXTEL cup driver. Biffle is now his favorite race car driver.

"He'll wear the hat Greg gave him everywhere," said Damien's dad, Staff Sgt. Peter J. Garwood.

Biffle carries a decal honoring the 48th Brigade of the National Guard, a Georgia unit that has lost "a tremendous amount of people,"

"It's a sad story," he said. "We're thinking about them."

Biffle made good his promise to take his "newfound knowledge to the track," when he placed seventh at the Atlanta Motor Speedway Oct. 30, moving his team to the third position in the NASCAR Nextel Cup points battle. The National Guard team will return to the track on Sunday at Texas Motor Speedway.

USAMU Soldiers win CISM medals

Paula Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Six shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, representing the United States, brought home two Gold Medals and two Bronze Medals from the 40th Conseil International du Sport Militaire in Thun, Switzerland, Oct. 9 to 16.

Team USA competed against hundreds of shooters from 43 countries around the world in the World's Military Shooting Championships.

USAMU international rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Jason A. Parker won the Gold Medal and World Military Championship and set a CISM Military World Record in the Men's 300-Meter Three Position Standard Rifle competition.

Austria and Finland took the Silver and Bronze Medals.

Staff Sgt. Keith A. Sanderson took the Gold Medal and World Military Championship in the Men's Military Rapid Fire Pistol match.

China got the Silver and Bronze.

The U.S. Team of Parker, Lt. Col. Robert E. Harbison and Sgt. Shane M. Barnhart received the Bronze Medal in the Standard Fire Rifle Team Match. Austria and Norway took the top two spots.

The U.S. Team of Sanderson, Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski and Staff Sgt. John C. Ennis got the Bronze Medal in the Rapid Fire Pistol Team Match after China and Russia.

"Parker's and Sanderson's Gold Medals are great performances on glide slope for the Olympics," said USAMU Commander and CISM Chief of Mission Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag.

Nine military personnel from the Army, Army Reserve and Navy Reserve represented the United States at CISM.

The CISM World Military Shooting Championship featured seven shooters from the Army Marksmanship Unit, one from the Army Reserve and one from the Navy Reserve.

The U.S. Team shooters were: Men's Pistol Team — Szarenski, Ennis and Sanderson of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit; Women's Pistol Team — Staff Sgt. Janet Sokolowski of the Army Marksmanship Unit, Staff Sgt. Elizabeth Callahan of the Army Reserve and Petty Officer 2nd Class Sandra Uptagrafft of the Navy Reserve; Men's Rifle Team — Harbison, Parker and Barnhart of the Army Marksmanship Unit; Women's Rifle Team — None.

The CISM Shooting Championships consisted of men's and women's rifle and pistol competitions.

The rifle shooters competed with standard rifles at 300-meters in the prone, kneeling and standing positions in both rapid and slow fire matches.

The pistol team competed in the Center Fire and Military Rapid Fire Championships.

The competition will be followed by a Combatives Symposium directed to level four and installation combatives instructors from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday in Infantry Hall.

For more information, visit benning.army.mil/combatives/ or call 545-2811.

Bodybuilding championship tickets — The Mr. and Mrs. Fort Benning Bodybuilding Championship is Saturday in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. Pre-judging is at 1 p.m. and the final show is at 6 p.m.

For more information, call 545-4300.

Golf course work day — The Follow Me Golf Course will conduct the next work day from 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Bring your family to work. Work items include trash removal, fix ball marks, sand divots, remove tree limbs and more.

For more information, call 687-1940.

Scrambling for Santa — Santa's Castle will have a Scrambling for Santa golf scramble tentatively scheduled for Thursday at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Registration begins at noon with tee off at 1 p.m. Cost is $30 per person. A steak dinner and prizes follow the scramble.

Proceeds benefit Santa's Castle, a nonprofit organization providing toys for Fort Benning children at Christmas time.

To register, call the golf shop at 687-1940.

Trailblazer Adventure Day — The Girl Scouts will host Trailblazer Adventure Day, "Trailblazin' with my Dad!" Nov. 12.

Activities include target shooting, fishing fun, game-calling techniques, shooting with a bow and arrow, learning about conservation and trapping facts and fiction.

The event, at Hook Complex, will have check-in at 9 a.m., with activities beginning at 10 a.m.

The day is free for the entire family. Lunch will be provided.

For more information, call (614) 888-4868.

Kefurt Fitness Center closure — Kefurt Fitness Center will be closed until further notice due to an infestation of bats. For more information, call Ken Wetherill at 545-4300.

Hunter amnesty — Fort Benning is granting blanket amnesty to those who failed to turn in their kill cards last year. Hunters can apply to get a new license for this year.

OFF POST

MEMBERS OF THE MILITARY ARE DISCIPLINED, HONORABLE AND TEAM FOCUSED.

JUST THE QUALITIES MERRILL LYNCH LOOKS FOR IN A FINANCIAL ADVISOR

We are committed to respecting the individual. We value integrity and encourage everyone to stand up for their convictions and we embrace teamwork. Members of the military relate to those values because they live them everyday.

BECOME A MERRILL LYNCH FINANCIAL ADVISOR

WHAT YOU CAN EXPECT AS A MEMBER OF OUR TEAM:

SUPPORT - Your local manager is committed to your success and helping you build your practice. You are also supported by specialists who have the widest range of product-area expertise in the business - expertise in areas such as financing, trusts, retirement, small business and philanthropy.

TRAINING - Our training program, one of the best in the industry, is designed to help you develop the critical skills and knowledge needed to build mutually rewarding client relationships. We believe training is integral to success.

A DISCIPLINED PROCESS - We have state of the art workstations and sophisticated software, where you can draw on the insights of our highly rated research to provide timely answers and personalized solutions for your clients.

COMPETITIVE COMPENSATION - We have structured a competitive compensation package to reflect your needs. The package includes salary plus opportunities for short- and long-term incentives, as well as an extensive benefits program.

The "It's Only Another Beer" Black and Tan

8 oz. pilsner lager
8 oz. stout lager
1 frosty mug
1 icy road
1 pick-up truck
1 10-hour day
1 tired worker
A few rounds with the guys

Mix ingredients.
Add 1 totalled vehicle.

Never underestimate 'just a few.'
Buzzed driving is drunk driving.

Got Trust?

Dear MR. Wood,

A Couple of Weeks ago We Came To your Place of business With What We Thought Was A TRANSMISSION Problem. We Were expecting To maybe even have To have you so into The TRANSMISSION at an expensive repair bill. When you drove The Car & Told us it was a Fuse We were so relieved! When you didn't even charge us a dime We were even more Surprised. As we Left We looked at The Cards you gave us & we began To see. We were dealing With a Christian. How Wonderful To Know There Are Still People Like you IN This World of doubt & mistrust. We have Told everyone We know about This incident. We were Stranded Away From home. you could have Taken Advantage of us & We wouldn't even have known. Thank you so much For your kindness.

Sincerely

"I wish I had conducted myself better on occasion and been more private, but I would rather live my life to the fullest than constantly conduct myself in a certain way to gain approval from others."

— Shannen Doherty

A Category 7 storm strikes in new CBS sequel

Jay Bobbin
© Zap2it

As if Earth hasn't been weatherbeaten enough lately, here comes Category 7: The End of the World.

Already in production when Hurricane Katrina struck, CBS' four-hour sequel to last year's Category 6: Day of Destruction begins Sunday and, in an unusual scheduling move, ends the following Sunday.

Randy Quaid reprises his role from the earlier drama as storm chaser Tornado Tommy, who joins a scientist (Shannen Doherty) to determine why the Category 6 crisis has continued to grow ... and how it can be stopped as it zeroes in on Washington, D.C.

Also in the large cast: Gina Gershon (Bound) and Robert Wagner as the new director of FEMA — the Federal Emergency Management Agency — and her politician father; Tom Skerritt (Picket Fences) and Adam Rodriguez (CSI: Miami) as military pilots who watch the storm from above ; and James Brolin and Swoosie Kurtz (Sisters) as televangelists who exploit the public's fears by warning of an imminent Armageddon.

Kenneth Welsh, who also faced environmental peril as the vice president in the 2004 movie The Day After Tomorrow, is among the co-stars.

Many of the scientific facts offered by Category 7 are relayed by Doherty's character.

"She has created a rocket that she sends up to read how strong the storm is, what direction it's headed in, all that stuff," the Beverly Hills, 90210 and Charmed alumna said. "She's an incredibly smart girl, and she definitely puts herself in harm's way in order to try to save people, along with Randy Quaid's character. She's a little bit in your face, sort of raw, which is what I really liked about her."

Doherty also liked working with Quaid, since their Category 7 alter egos ultimately connect personally as well as professionally.

"The height difference alone made it interesting," she said with a broad laugh. "We had a scene where we had to kiss, and it was like, 'Wow! How do I get up there?' I think he leaned down as far as he could, but I might have been standing on a box. Actually, I think he picked me up very gruffly and pulled me up to him.

"What's really interesting is that when these two characters come together, it works," Doherty said. "Randy and I got along really well, although it was a short stint for both of us. They'd bring in each group of actors for two or three weeks, shoot their stuff and then let them go. I met Gina, but I didn't get to work with her. She arrived on my last day of filming."

Gershon did much of her work with Wagner, whose disaster-movie credits also include the 1953 version of Titanic and producer Irwin Allen's 1974 epic The Towering Inferno.

While he didn't face Hurricane Katrina firsthand, Wagner came close.

"I was doing another movie that (singer) Jimmy Buffett is producing," the veteran actor said, "and we were shooting in Fort Lauderdale. I got out of there the week before the hurricane hit. They had to shut down the production."

Some may question Category 7 airing in such close proximity to actual disasters, but CBS had the dates set well before Hurricane Katrina was literally on the radar.

"This was all written before Katrina hit," Wagner said. "It's a fictional situation."

Courtesy photo

Shannen Doherty stars in Category 7: The End of the World, airing Sunday on CBS.

It also maintains the screen tradition of a star-packed cast threatened by a shared crisis, and as Wagner said from experience, "It seems to work pretty well."

The CGI, or computer-generated imagery, used heavily in Category 7 didn't exist when the skyscraper-on-fire scenario of The Towering Inferno placed Wagner and co-star Susan Flannery, among others, amid heavy smoke.

"Nobody got hurt on that film, which is pretty amazing," Wagner said.

"Nobody did that kind of movie better than Irwin; he had the whole genre in his pocket. If you care about the characters and put them in a disaster situation, you've got something going."

Doherty believes Category 7 achieves a similar effect, thanks largely to its depiction of the storm.

"Your car's moving superfast, you have to land on a certain mark, you jump out, and there's three huge jet-engine fans blowing straight at you.

"I could barely stand. The fans were almost blowing me down the street, and you can actually see it. My legs are set wide apart and I'm braced, because I can't possibly stay in one spot."

Familiar with special-effects work from her early tenure on the WB Network series Charmed, Doherty stressed her sympathy for victims of true climatic disasters of late.

Some of her own relatives in Gulfport, Miss., were affected by Hurricane Katrina.

Chicken Little — The movie picks up where the classic fable ends, namely after the pint-sized hero has caused big-time havoc when he mistakes a falling acorn for a piece of the sky. In the wake of the "unfortunate acorn incident," Chicken Little's name is mud in his hometown of Oakey Oaks.

Down but not out, he struggles mightily to restore his reputation and make his dad, Buck Cluck, proud.

Chicken Little joins the local baseball team despite the fact that he is barely bigger than a baseball himself.

Voiced by Zach Braff, Garry Marshall and Don Knots.

Chicken Little is rated G.

Jarhead — Jarhead, the self-imposed moniker of the Marines, follows Anthony Swoff (Jake Gyllenhaal), a third-generation enlistee, from a sobering stint in boot camp to active duty in Desert Storm, sporting a sniper's rifle and a 100-pound ruck on his back through Middle East deserts with no cover from intolerable heat or from Iraqi soldiers.

Swoff and his fellow Marines sustain themselves with sardonic humor and wicked comedy.

Also starring Peter Sarsgaard and Jamie Foxx.

Jarhead is rated R for pervasive language, violent images and strong sexual content.

Prime — Rafi (Uma Thurman) is a recently divorced 37-year-old career woman from Manhattan, and Dave (Bryan Greenberg) is a talented 23-year-old painter from Brooklyn who falls in love with her.

Rafi's therapist Lisa (Meryl Streep) is gingerly helping Rafi out of her post-divorce slump and through the urgent alarm of her ticking biological clock. Once Lisa accidentally discovers that Rafi's new boyfriend is, in fact, her son Dave, she finds it difficult to act the good therapist while hearing intimate details of her son's love life.

Prime is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue and for language.

The Weather Man — Popular Chicago weatherman Dave Spritz (Nicolas Cage) has a shot at the big time when a national morning television show calls him for an audition. Professionally, Dave is on top of the world, but his personal life is in disarray.

Dave's painful divorce, his dad's illness and trouble with his kids have him poised on the knife's edge between stability and disaster.

The Weather Man is rated R for strong language and sexual content.

Saw II — While investigating the bloody aftermath of a grizzly murder, detective Eric Mason has the feeling that it is the work of Jigsaw, the notorious killer who disappeared, leaving a trail of bodies — and parts — behind. And Mason is right. Jigsaw is at work again.

Starring Donnie Whalberg and Beverly Mitchell.

Saw II is rated R for grisly violence and gore, terror, language and drug content.

The Legend of Zorro — This movie is the sequel to the 1998 film The Mask of Zorro. Alejandro (Antonio Banderas) and Elena (Catherine Zeta-Jones) are married and have a 10-year-old son, Joaquin (Adrian Alonso). Though Alejandro continues to don the mask of Zorro to protect the poor and oppressed residents of the California territory from the greed of the overlords, he is torn between his duty and desire for a more normal life.

The Legend of Zorro is rated PG for sequences of violence, peril and action, language and suggestive moments.

Doom — Something has gone wrong at a remote scientific research station on Mars.

All research has ceased. Communication has failed. And the messages that do get through are less than comforting.

It's a level-five quarantine, and the only souls allowed in or out are the Rapid Response Tactical Squad — hardened Marines armed to the teeth with enough firepower to neutralize any enemy — or so they think.

Starring Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Karl Urban.

Doom is rated R for strong violence, gore and language.

North Country — When Josey Aimes (Charlize Theron) returns to her hometown in northern Minnesota after a failed marriage, she needs a good job.

A single mother, she turns to the predominant source of employment in the region — the iron mines.

When Josey speaks out against the treatment she and her fellow workers face, it takes her farther than she ever imagined, ultimately inspiring countless others, and leading to the nation's first-ever class action lawsuit for sexual harassment.

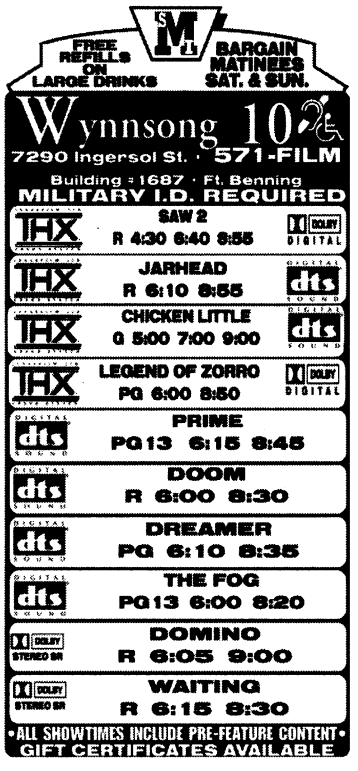
North Country is rated R for sequences involving sexual harassment including violence and dialogue, and for language.

The Fog — A thick fog enshrouds a coastal town. The fog is reminiscent of one 100 years earlier that wrecked a ship and caused the seamen aboard to drown. Sure enough, the sailors are back and out to kill whomever they find.

Starring Tom Welling and Maggie Grace.

The Fog is rated PG-13 for violence, disturbing images and sexuality.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story — Ben Crane (Kurt Russell) was once a great horseman, whose gifts as a trainer are now being wasted on making other men's fortunes. Sonya was a great horse whose promising future on the racetrack was suddenly cut short by a broken leg.



Considered as good as dead to her owner, who also happens to be Ben's boss, Sonya is given to Ben as severance pay, along with his walking papers.

Now, it will take the unwavering faith and determination of Ben's young daughter, Cale (Dakota Fanning), to bring these two damaged souls together in a quest for the seemingly impossible goal: to win the Breeders' Cup Classic.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story is rated PG for brief mild language.

THINGS TO DO

Night of Salsa
today

The Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation will present a Night of Salsa with entertainment, dancing, food and beverages at 8 p.m. today.

Tito Nieves and Kevin Ceballo headline the event at the Soldier Processing Center on Lawson Army Airfield.

Tickets are on sale at DMWR headquarters, Building 2783, and Omega Travel in the Main Mall Post Exchange.

General admission is $20 in advance, if purchased by noon today, and $25 at the door; couples are $30 in advance and $35 at the door.

For more information, call 682-7599.

The Underpants
today-Saturday

This hilarious farce, written by Steve Martin, probes the passions sparked by wardrobe malfunctions.

The wife of a straight-laced and self-righteous government clerk ignites a scandal when her panties fall to her ankles during a parade.

The show will be presented at 7:30 p.m. today and Saturday at the Springer Opera House.

Ticket prices are $32 and below.

For more information, call 327-3688.

The Steeplechase at Callaway
Saturday

The Steeplechase at Callaway offers terrier races, entertainment, food, art and the thrill of some of the world's best horses racing at breakneck speed around a steeplechase track.

Admission ranges from an infield pass at $20 per person (plus a $20 parking pass) to the terrace box for $425, that seats up to six.

For tickets or more information, call 324-6252 or (800) 225-5292.

Chrysanthemum Festival
Saturday-Sunday

Callaway Gardens invites the public to close out the fall season with the Chrysanthemum Festival Saturday and Sunday.

The John A. Sibley Horticultural Center will offer a host of fun-filled activities and events including chrysanthemum kite making and a Mediterranean Scavenger Hunt.

Other highlights include demonstrations and exhibits about Ikebana stenciling, stamping, origami, calligraphy and candle making and decorating sessions that use chrysanthemums and other fall flowers and plants.

Activities are from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Activities are free with Gardens admission — $13 for adults, $6.50 for children ages 6 to 12 and children 5 and younger are free.

Active-duty military receive free admission and a 50 percent discount for all other passengers in the same vehicle. These benefits transfer to the spouse if the Soldier is deployed.

For more information, call (800) 225-5292.

Family Art Affair
Sunday

Kids of all ages are invited to explore the exhibition Introductions: George Long and create a mixed-media artwork inspired by the artist's installation in the studio.

Children must be accompanied by an adult.

The art affair will be at 3 p.m. Sunday at the Columbus Museum. The event is free.

For more information, call 748-2562.

What Makes It Great?
Saturday

As composer, conductor and commentator, Rob Kapilow has created hundreds of entertaining programs. This one will feature an exploration of Beethoven's famous Appassionata Sonata with Jon Kimura Parker at the keyboard.

The program, for children and adults, will be at 10 a.m. Saturday in the Bill Heard Theatre in the RiverCenter.

Tickets are $30. For tickets, visit tickets.com or call the RiverCenter box office at 256-3632.

Riverdance
Tuesday-Thursday

This highly acclaimed celebration of Irish music, song and dance features an international company that has touched the hearts of millions around the world.

Riverdance will be presented in the RiverCenter's Bill Heard Theatre at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Tickets are $40-$55. For tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or visit the RiverCenter box office at 900 Broadway from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday or 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

The Rose of Treason
Thursday-Nov. 13

Columbus State University's Department of Theatre will stage the drama The Rose of Treason Thursday through Nov. 13 in the Fine Arts Hall auditorium.

Set in 1943 Germany, the play depicts the true story of a group of university students who start a resistance group aimed at bringing down Hitler and the Nazi regime.

The effort, known as "The White Rose," is regarded as among the most heroic feats in European history.

Show times are 7:30 p.m. Thursday and Nov. 11-12 at 2 p.m. Nov. 13. General admission is $15. Admission is $13 for seniors, active duty military and CSU alumni.

For tickets, call the box office at 569-3179.

For more information, call 568-2048.

Syrup Makin' and Story Tellin'
Nov. 12

Jarrell Plantation State Historic Site near Juliette, Ga., will present Syrup Makin' and Story Tellin,' from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 12.

This program brings the event of the traditional syrup cookoff back to life with demonstrations of the sugar cane mill, syrup kettle, woodstove cooking, spinning and storytelling.

Admission is $4 for adults, $3.50 for seniors, $2.50 for youths ages 6 to 17 and free for ages 5 and younger.

For more information, call Bretta Perkins or Brenda Banks at (478) 986-5172.

Harvest Festival
through Nov. 13

Historic Westville's 1850 Harvest Festival will run through Nov. 13.

The animal-powered cotton gin, believed to be the only operational gin of its kind in the U.S., can be seen in action during the festival.

Visitors can also watch sugar cane be squeezed into juices for the syrup-making process or taste the unique flavor of the juice.

Westville's artisans will demonstrate and teach traditional crafts like pottery making, candle dipping, soap making and much more.

Hours of operation for the Harvest Festival are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Westville is located in Lumpkin, Ga., on US 27, about 35 miles south of Columbus.

For more information, call (888) 733-1850.

Welcome home

Melissa House

Family and friends gathered in the terminal at Lawson Army Airfield to greet their returning heroes.

They waited several hours to welcome 153 Soldiers from the 598th Maintenance Company and 59 from Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th Corps Support Battalion, who deployed late last year.

Sgt. 1st Class Eulis Hicks, a drill sergeant in F Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment and his children, Erie, 8, and Tyrese, 5, brought balloons for Staff Sgt. Tammie Hicks, who deployed Dec. 10 with the 598th.

Hicks said this was his wife's first deployment, which made for a "long, very long" year. He had to work and care for the children.

Erie said her dad did her hair — once.

"He did so-so," she said.

Tyrese lost two teeth while his mother was gone. He told her on the phone, but would finally be able to show her. Both children were excited at the prospect of a trip to Disney World.

In another row of seats, Ron and Barbara Markland waited for their daughter, 1st Lt. Brooke Markland.

DoD announces new OIF unit list

OASD Public Affairs Office

Washington, D.C. — The Department of Defense announced Monday the major units scheduled to deploy as part of the next Operation Iraqi Freedom rotation.

This announcement involves several combat brigades, headquarters elements, and combat support and combat service support units and approximately 92,000 service members as presently envisioned.

The scheduled rotation for these forces will begin in mid-2006. Decisions made by the Secretary of Defense at the recommendation of military commanders in Iraq may result in changes to this rotation and may affect units now being identified and advised to prepare to deploy.

This rotation continues the U.S. commitment to OIF, yet is flexible and adaptable in order to meet the evolving requirements for the mission in Iraq.

For OIF, the major units announced Monday include:

Division Headquarters, 25th Infantry Division, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii

13th Corps Support Command, Fort Hood, Texas

1st Brigade, 34th Inf. Div., Minnesota Army National Guard

2nd Bde., 1st Inf. Div., Schweinfurt, Germany

3rd Bde., 2nd Inf. Div., Fort Lewis, Wash.

3rd Bde., 82nd Airborne Div., Fort Bragg, N.C.

3rd Bde., 25th Inf. Div., Schofield Barracks, Hawaii

2nd Bde., 10th Mountain Div., Fort Drum, N.Y.

The individual services will announce the smaller, supporting units for this rotation.

Additionally, the 1st Bde., 1st Inf. Div., based at Fort Riley, Kan., previously notified to prepare to deploy in early December, now will not deploy prior to Dec. 31, 2005.

In consultation with the Iraqi Government, commanders continue to assess the situation to ensure sufficient forces to best support the Iraqi government. The U.S. rotations may be tailored based upon changes in the security situation. Iraqi security forces continue to develop capability and assume responsibility for security in Iraq.

DoD will continue to release unit announcements as they are identified and alerted.

BRAC becomes law

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Base Realignment and Closure Commission's recommendations for reshaping the Defense Department's infrastructure and force structure took effect at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday after Congress allowed them to pass into law Tuesday.

The nine-member BRAC panel delivered its final report to President Bush Sept. 8, and he sent it to Congress for review Sept. 15. Congress had 45 legislative days, until Nov. 9, to accept or reject the report in its entirety. However, it was not authorized to make any changes to the final report.

By statute, the Defense Department has until Sept. 15, 2007 — two years from the date President Bush sent Congress the BRAC commission's final report — to begin closing and realigning the installations as called for in the report. The process must be completed by Sept. 15, 2011.

The 2005 BRAC recommendations represent the most aggressive BRAC ever proposed, affecting more than 800 installations, officials said. Four previous BRAC rounds — in 1988, 1991, 1993 and 1995 — resulted in 97 major closures, 55 major realignments and 235 minor actions, according to DoD figures. Overall, closing and realigning these installations saved taxpayers around $18 billion though fiscal 2001 and a further $7 billion per year since, officials said.

BRAC 2005 is being called an important milestone in restructuring DoD's domestic base structure to improve efficiency and operational capabilities. It also supports plans to move thousands of U.S. forces currently serving overseas within the United States as part of DoD's global positioning strategy, officials said.

After months of study, installation visits and public hearings around the country, the nine-member BRAC panel approved 86 percent of DoD's original BRAC recommendations — 119 with no change and another 45 with amendments, the panel noted. The panel also rejected 13 recommendations, significantly modified another 13, and made five additional closure or realignment recommendations on its own initiative.

Of DoD's 33 major closure recommendations, the panel approved 21, recommended seven bases be realigned rather than closed, and rejected five recommendations outright. In addition, the commission recommended closing rather than realigning another installation, for a total of 22 major closures.

Many of the transformational recommendations in the report, particularly those to establish joint operations, will present significant challenges as they are implemented, officials said.

Detailed business plans will be developed for every BRAC

VETERANS DAY

Let's actually honor them today

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

World War I was supposed to be the war to end all wars. On the 11th hour of the day of the 11th month of 1918, hostilities between Germany and the allied nations ended. Although the Treaty of Versailles wasn't signed for several months, the temporary cessation of fighting in a war involving 32 countries was significant enough to have stuck.

The war lasted four years, three months and 14 days. Nations spent somewhere in the neighborhood of $186 billion. Soldier casualties numbered more than 37 million. Another 10 million deaths were indirectly attributed to the war. The world population in 1918 was 1.8 billion

Statistics show 52 percent of those allied Soldiers mobilized for war died, compared to 67 percent of those on the other side, a relatively small 8 percent of U.S. Soldiers died.

Those numbers were enough for President Wilson to proclaim Nov. 11, 1919, as the first commemoration of Armistice Day, where Americans should reflect and "be filled with solemn pride in the heroism of those who died."

But it's the language in the 1926 congressional resolution that really got me.

"Whereas the 11th of November 1918 marked the cessation of the most destructive, sanguinary and far reaching war in human annals and the resumption by the people of the United States if peaceful relations with other nations, which we hope may never again be severed."

In 1938, Armistice Day became a legal holiday — a day to be dedicated to the cause of world peace.

Since then, American Soldiers have taken up arms at least 10 more times, by my count, for the sake of world, or at least regional peace.

Now called Veterans Day in honor of all veterans of our Armed Forces, it's a federal holiday — at least for those working for the government. It's a hit or miss prospect for America's schoolchildren though, and I'm not sure how I feel about that.

Thankfully, mine are out of school, and this year, I'd like to make this a meaningful day, not just a day off. We owe all of our veterans so much.

So why don't we all take a brief two-minute break with people in the U.S., Canada, and even France, today at 11 a.m. That's the time we can observe more than just a moment of silence.

Let's take the full two minutes to honor all of our veterans and reflect like Wilson wanted us to.

New name, same Soldier support

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

God bless Eve Tidwell, the entrepreneur/artist/philanthropist/humanitarian and general do-gooder formerly known as Miriam.

Eve and her husband, Jack, are the force behind the annual God Bless Fort Benning rally, which will take place Nov. 19 at the Columbus Civic Center. Jack's a great guy, having dedicated his life to fighting cancer, but I want to talk about Eve.

Long before the advent of God Bless Fort Benning (from here on referred to as GBFB), Miriam Tidwell was a mover and a shaker on the local scene. She put the "Miriam" in Miriam's Cafe, which specializes in haute cuisine and Southern comfort.

Last year, Miriam sold the restaurant, and with it the rights to the name. So, shortly thereafter, about the time she turned 50, Miriam reinvented herself, ala Eve, which is actually her middle name.

I met Eve a few years back, when she was still Miriam, at a debate with Father Roy Borgouis of the SOA Watch. Speaking from her perspective as a Columbus resident, Eve was passionate and vehement about the need to support Fort Benning — its mission, its troops and its families.

Afterward, I asked Eve to elaborate. The gist of what she told me was this: While dining at a Columbus restaurant one day in November, five years ago, she witnessed a protester lay into a Soldier, flinging the same ugly accusations and outlandish (but generally accepted because they've been repeated so many times) lies about WHINSEC, Fort Benning, the Army and the Soldier that we hear year after year after year.

Eve was appalled. She approached the Soldier, who was dining with his family, and apologized on behalf of every sane American citizen in the country.

"That's alright ma'am," he said, or some such. "He's an American. He has the right to say what he thinks. It's my job to protect that right."

So taken was Eve by his humble attitude, she vowed to do something to counter the protester's rally. Thus was born the first GBFB counter-protest rally, which drew a couple of hundred military supporters to a parking lot outside the post's main gate on Benning Boulevard.

The GBFB supporters were surrounded by SOA-Watch protesters, who slung barbs by day and vandalized property by night.

So the next year, three years ago, the Tidwells took their show down the road to the parking lot of the Columbus Civic Center, where it grew and grew and grew.

Last year, nearly 20,000 Fort Benning families, basic training Soldiers and local supporters turned out for the event, which featured Lee Greenwood.

And this year, GBFB planners — plural, because this thing has outgrown its roots — expect to see twice that many, roughly 40,000 people, at the Nov. 19 rally. Small wonder. With more than 15 bands, including a concert by Tracy Lawrence, a motorcycle rally, Ranger reptile show, Silver Wings demo, helicopter rides and a host of carnival activities, this year's GBFB rally will do Eve proud. It starts at 10 a.m. and ends at 6 p.m.

And it's free.

God bless Eve Tidwell.

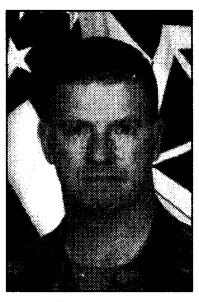
Army leadership offers Veterans Day message

On this Veterans Day, we honor all Soldiers, Marines, Sailors, Airmen and Coast Guardsmen for selflessly serving our nation.

Harvey

The history of the United States is replete with stories of Americans who displayed the steadfast courage that defines our country. Today, the brave men and women of our Armed Forces continue that legacy as they write history in the war on terror.



Nov. 11 has long been a day of reflection on the sacrifices of our Armed Forces. From Woodrow Wilson's 1919 proclamation of Armistice Day to commemorate the end of World War I, to President Dwight D. Eisenhower and the 83rd United States Congress changing the name to Veterans Day in the aftermath of World War II, we have retained the noble purpose of the day — to express gratitude to our service men and women.

Schoomaker

We salute our 25 million living veterans, and like President Wilson, have "solemn pride in the heroism" of those who died in service to this great nation.

We stand as proudly beside our Soldiers as did President Wilson and the Americans of his generation. Your sacrifices have preserved for people around the world the same blessings of freedom and the limitless opportunity that we enjoy in the United States today.

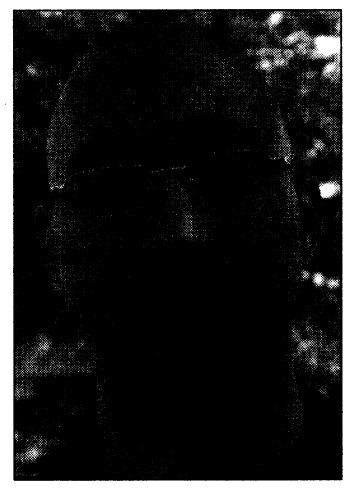
Preston

May each of you have a safe Veterans Day. May God bless the men and women in our Army. And may God continue to bless our great nation.

— Francis J. Harvey
Secretary of the Army
— Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker
Chief of Staff
— Kenneth O. Preston
Sergeant Major of the Army

Battalion standing tough

I want the community know that we (the battalion) will be fine. Our Soldiers are tough, and although losing a comrade is hard, we are professionals, well-trained and hardened Soldiers, who will drive on and not let the deaths of battle buddies go in vain."



Brito

— Lt. Col. Gary Brito
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment,

Editor's note: The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, has lost nine Soldiers this year in combat in Iraq.

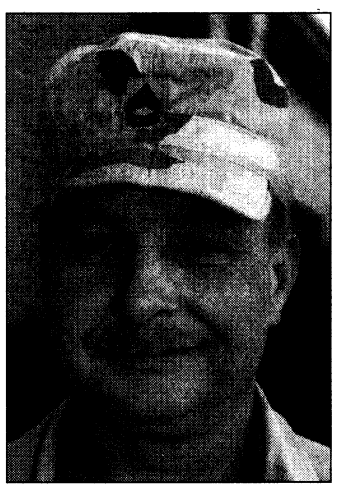
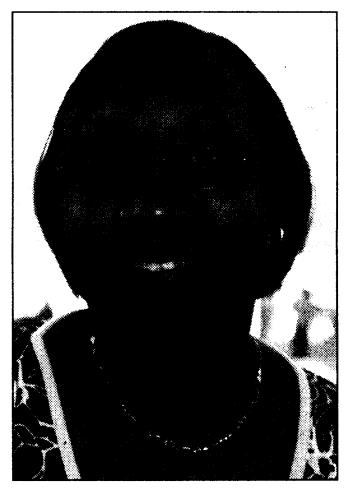
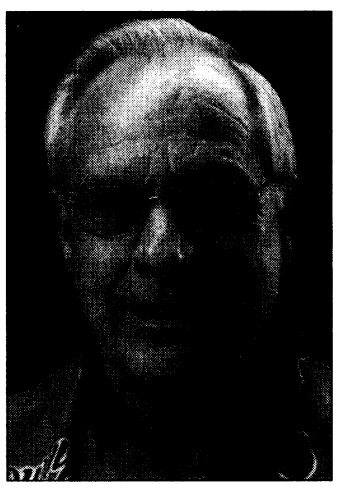
VARIOUS VOICES



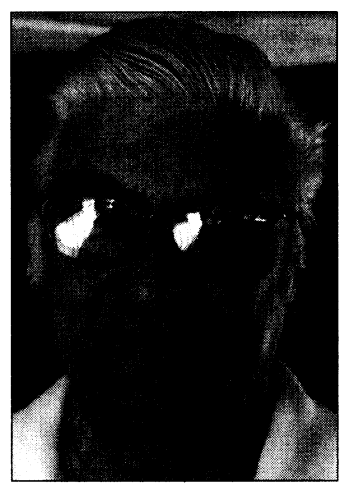
How do you show support for veterans?

Christopher Stewart, family member — "I always donate money to the different organizations, and I attend FRG meetings to see where I can lend a helping hand. For my (active-duty) wife, I try to give her moral support."



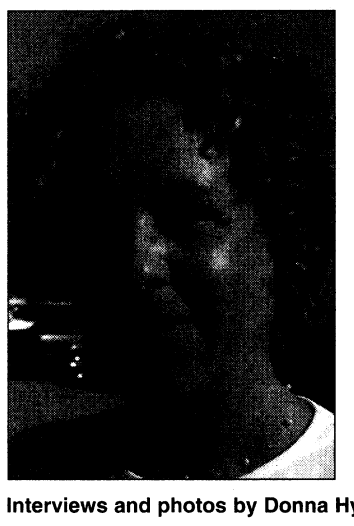


Frances Olive, family member — "My grandson is in Iraq and I write to him and send him things he needs. I pray for (the Soldiers) every day."



Sgt. 1st Class Paul Mason, 122nd Corps Support Group, Alabama National Guard — "I just got back from Iraq, and I plan on adopting some Soldiers the way some churches adopted me. Just knowing somebody cares really helps."

Terri Pass, family member — "I support my (active-duty) husband every way I can. I'm taking him out to breakfast (today)."



Barry Mello, Tide racing team member — "Tide and NASCAR are really big on supporting veterans in all facets of the racing community. Whenever we have a race, the military gets VIP treatment."

Guy Livorsi, AAFES vendor — "Whatever veterans sell, I buy. I travel around the country a lot, but when I'm home I'll fly the flag (to show I care)."

Nicole Ray, family member — "I try to be mindful of their sacrifices, and I plan on making a special dinner for my (active-duty) husband."

Jutras: 'Went into fight with courage and commitment'

"Dillon Jutras represented everything that is good about our nation and he died fighting to protect it," said Capt. Doug Philippone, Jutras' company commander.

"Dillon held nothing back and committed himself totally," he said. "His courage and toughness represented everything we stand for as Rangers. He went into the fight with courage and commitment."

Jutras was awarded the Bronze Star Medal with V device posthumously.

An Army brat, Jutras followed in his father's footsteps, his father, Maj. Pierre Jutras, told the Washington Post.

Born while his father was stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., Jutras grew up on Army installations including Fort Campbell, Ky., and Fort Benning.

Jutras

While his father was stationed at Fort Belvoir, Va., Jutras played soccer, ran and bowled.

"He was just a healthy, strong, athletic guy," his uncle, Steve Silvey, told the Times Community Newspapers in northern Virginia.

Jutras was a member of Junior ROTC at Thomas Edison High School in Fairfax County. While enrolled at George Mason University, Jutras, a member of the school's ROTC program, decided to enlist.

"We were very proud of him," his father told the Washington Post.

In a guest book for Jutras, his parents wrote, "Dillon was a truly special person and a perfect son. We are so extremely proud of him ... if we didn't have dedicated men and women, like Dillon, willing to accept the ultimate sacrifice, the wars would be here on our hallowed soil of the United States of America and, then, none of us would be safe."

Jutras is survived by his father and mother, Julia, his sister, Heather, and brothers, Dustin and Hunter, of Fairfax Station, Va.

Ferderer: Lived dream of being a Soldier fighting vehicle driver, humvee driver and radio telephone operator.

Ferderer, from New Salem, N.D., joined the Army in June 2003 and completed one station unit training on Sand Hill with 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

"He wanted to be a sergeant major," said Lt. Col. Gary Brito, Ferderer's battalion commander. "He was simply a great Soldier."

Being a Soldier was Ferderer's dream, his parents told Brito. And though they are grieving, they are happy their son was able to live out his dream of being a Soldier, if even for a short time, Brito said in his remarks at Ferderer's service in Iraq Sunday.

"We're proud of him, but it hurts," his mother, Claudina, told The Associated Press Nov. 4.

When Ferderer went home for leave in September, his mother said "he couldn't wait to get back to be with 'my brothers.'"

Brito described Ferderer as a bright and intelligent young man who "simply made things happen."

"Dennis had an infectious, pleasant demeanor," Brito said. "He was the kind of Soldier everyone wanted to be around. He was focused when he had to be and joked with others when he could."

Ferderer

A former history teacher of Ferderer's, Robin Doll, told the Bismarck Tribune that Ferderer smiled all the time.

"He seemed to be happy all the time," she said.

"He liked the lighthearted side of a lot of things. Whatever we were talking about, he'd find something funny to say about it."

Before her son deployed to Iraq, Ferderer's mother told The Associated Press that she had no opinion on the war.

"He convinced me we were there for a reason," Claudina said.

"Life is too short not to lead the life you want," she said.

His awards include the Bronze Star Medal, Purple Heart, and Combat Infantryman's Badge.

He is survived by his mother and father, Dennis, of New Salem, N.D.

Howe: Loyal Soldier who believed in mission, team

Regiment, to die from the Oct. 17 IED attack. Staff Sgt. George Thomas Alexander Jr., 34, of Clanton, Ala., died Oct. 22, and Sgt. Michael Tremain Robertson, 28, of Houston, died Oct. 25 at Brooke Army Medical Center.

Howe joined the Reserves after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks, wanting to go to flight school, said Capt. Jimmy Hathaway, Howe's company commander.

When Howe decided to transfer to active duty, it took three applications and outside help for the transfer, Hathaway said.

Howe

A graduate of Airborne School, Howe was assigned to the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., in April 2004 and deployed with the unit in January. He served as squad designated marksman, humvee gunner and Bradley driver.

Howe's stepfather, Greg Klaus, told the Sioux City Journal, that his son was driving the Bradley and after the explosion, Howe helped pull injured Soldiers to safety.

"Howe was a really loyal Soldier who believed in the mission and the team," said 1st Lt. James Ryan who was Howe's platoon leader in Iraq.

A hernia sent Howe back to the U.S. to recuperate, said Ryan, now assigned to Student Detachment, Fort Jackson, S.C.

While redeploying from Iraq, Ryan and Howe, who was returning to theater, spent several days in Kuwait together.

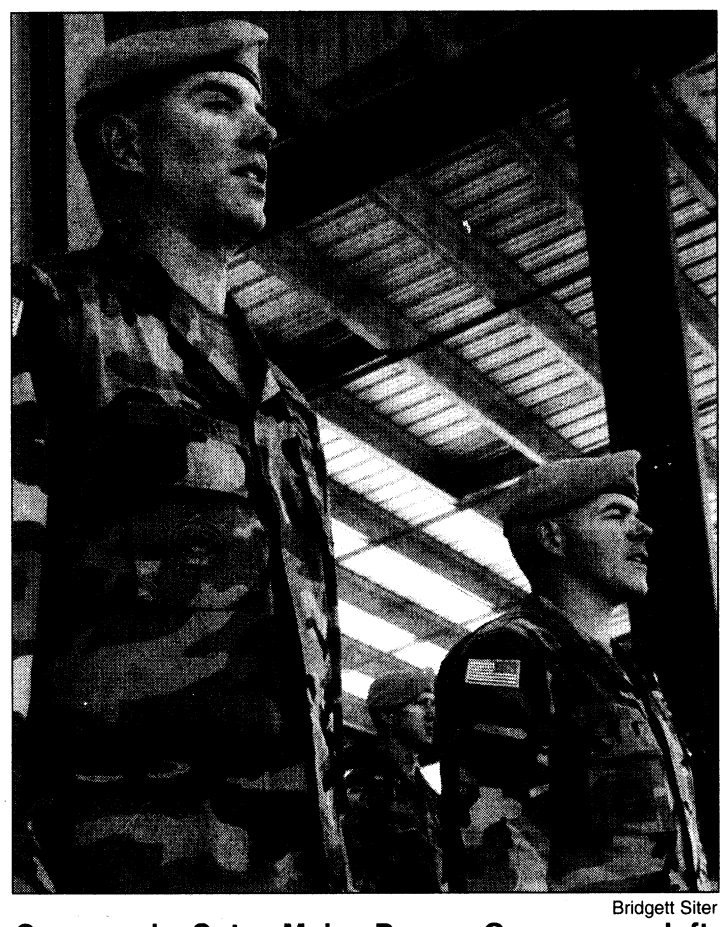
"All Howe talked about was how guilty he felt for going home, and leaving his Soldiers," Ryan said. "I told him not to be in such a hurry to get back because he needed to be healthy when he got back in theater, that the Soldiers understood his absence."

Hathaway told a similar story during his remarks at Howe's memorial service in Iraq.

"Like most dedicated people, Howe was actually fighting to get here, to get back with his platoon," Hathaway said. "Howe called from Kuwait to let me know that as soon as he could get his gear, he would be on his way and ready to go. True to his word, he was, immediately stepping into his platoon and helping out anywhere possible.

"I am amazed by his drive and dedication," Hathaway said.

Ryan, who visited Howe at Brooke Army Medical Center, said, "Howe fought really hard to stay alive, he was angry he had been taken out of the mission."



Lt. Col. Gary Brito, the battalion commander, talked with Howe's stepfather and repeated what Klaus said. "Klaus said 'don't be sorry for what has happened to these Soldiers for they were fighting for their country.

"When I am asked about my son, my voice is not filled with grief, it is filled with pride. I applaud everything that your Soldiers are doing so that Americans like me can enjoy freedom. I brag about my son being a Soldier and I brag about your unit in Iraq. I will remain committed to what you guys are doing over there.

"God bless you and your Soldiers. Bring them home safely.'"

Howe is survived by his wife, Nakia, stepdaughter Shaye Pearson, and son, Gary Howe, of Plymouth, Neb.

RTB welcomes new CSM

Walker assumes office of top NCO

Bridgett Siter

Command Sgt. Maj. Doug Greenway said good-bye to the Ranger Training Brigade Nov. 4. The 26-year veteran is now the Infantry School's command sergeant major.

Greenway passed the ceremonial espontoon to Command Sgt. Maj. Matt Walker Nov. 4 on Hurley Hill following the graduation of 104 Rangers from Class 11-05.

The espontoon, a replica of the spear-like pole that served as a weapon and a symbol of authority for Continental Soldiers during the Revolution, is decked with streamers bearing the names of the former command sergeants major of the RTB and its predecessor, the Ranger Department. Greenway's name was added to the 18th streamer.

Greenway

During his tenure, the brigade turned out 3,000 new Rangers, the first and second place Best Ranger teams, the Army's top NCO and Instructor of the Year, and captured the post title in softball.

"Command Sergeant Major Greenway set the standard for success here, day in and day out," Col. K.K. Chinn, the brigade commander, said of Greenway, who stands 6 feet, 5 inches tall. "When I got here, I thought 'This guy is the epitome of a Ranger — big and tall.' I didn't know if I could hang with him, but as tall as he is, I figured I oughtta be able to smoke him on a run. I'm still one step behind him."

Walker

Borrowing from a quote by Col. William O. Darby, for whom the Ranger's Camp Darby is named, Greenway compared training Rangers to harnessing wild horses — its easy to get them running, but it's hard to rein them in, he said.

"They take the hardest tasks, because they love to live life to the fullest, and they love challenges," he said. "They don't have words like 'can't' or 'won't' in their vocabulary. That's the definition of a Ranger. It's a spirit, an attitude."

Greenway, a father of three, with a son serving in the 75th Ranger Regiment, a daughter in the Army and two sons-in-law serving in Iraq, credited his success to his wife of 26 years, JoAnn, who let him "have fun with the Rangers all these years."

"She did it all. I didn't raise those kids ... I didn't know their names half the time. My wife did it all," said Greenway, whose assignments included four tours with the 75th Ranger Regiment, one as the regiment's LNO to Australia.

Greenway figures he leaves the RTB in good hands with Walker, a 20-year veteran with several combat missions to his record — his most recent with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"I've known him for years," Greenway said. "I know his professionalism, and I know his attitude. He'll take whatever mess I made and make it better."

Fort Benning shows appreciation to former military

Retirees, family attend various events

Donna Hyatt

Veterans from all branches of the military converged on Fort Benning Nov. 4 to participate in a day devoted to military retirees.

Following breakfast with Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers, the retirees and their spouses watched a Rangers in Action demonstration and a Ranger graduation before meeting for lunch in the Officers' Club.

"I hope when you saw the fire in those Soldiers' eyes, you said to yourselves that we're in pretty good shape if that's who's fighting the war for us," said Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough, assistant commandant of Fort Benning.

Danny Wilson, adjutant general of the Human Resources Directorate, said more than 200 people registered to hear retired Brig. Gen. William Matz, current president of the National Association for Uniformed Services, speak during the luncheon.

Matz spoke about aspects of the National Defense Authorization Act and its affect on military retirees, such as health-care benefits and funding of the Veterans Administration, that are pending before Congress.

He also gave a detailed analysis of how representatives in Alabama and Georgia voted on these issues in the House and Senate, and urged attendees to join military lobbying groups in order to strengthen retirees voices in legislative matters.

"I think if we show young men and women that the military keeps it's promises after they leave the service, there will be a positive effect (on Soldiers) today," he said.

At the health fair, attendees received free flu shots, cholesterol and blood pressure screenings, and had the opportunity to talk with various retiree lobbying organizations, banking institutions and insurance groups.

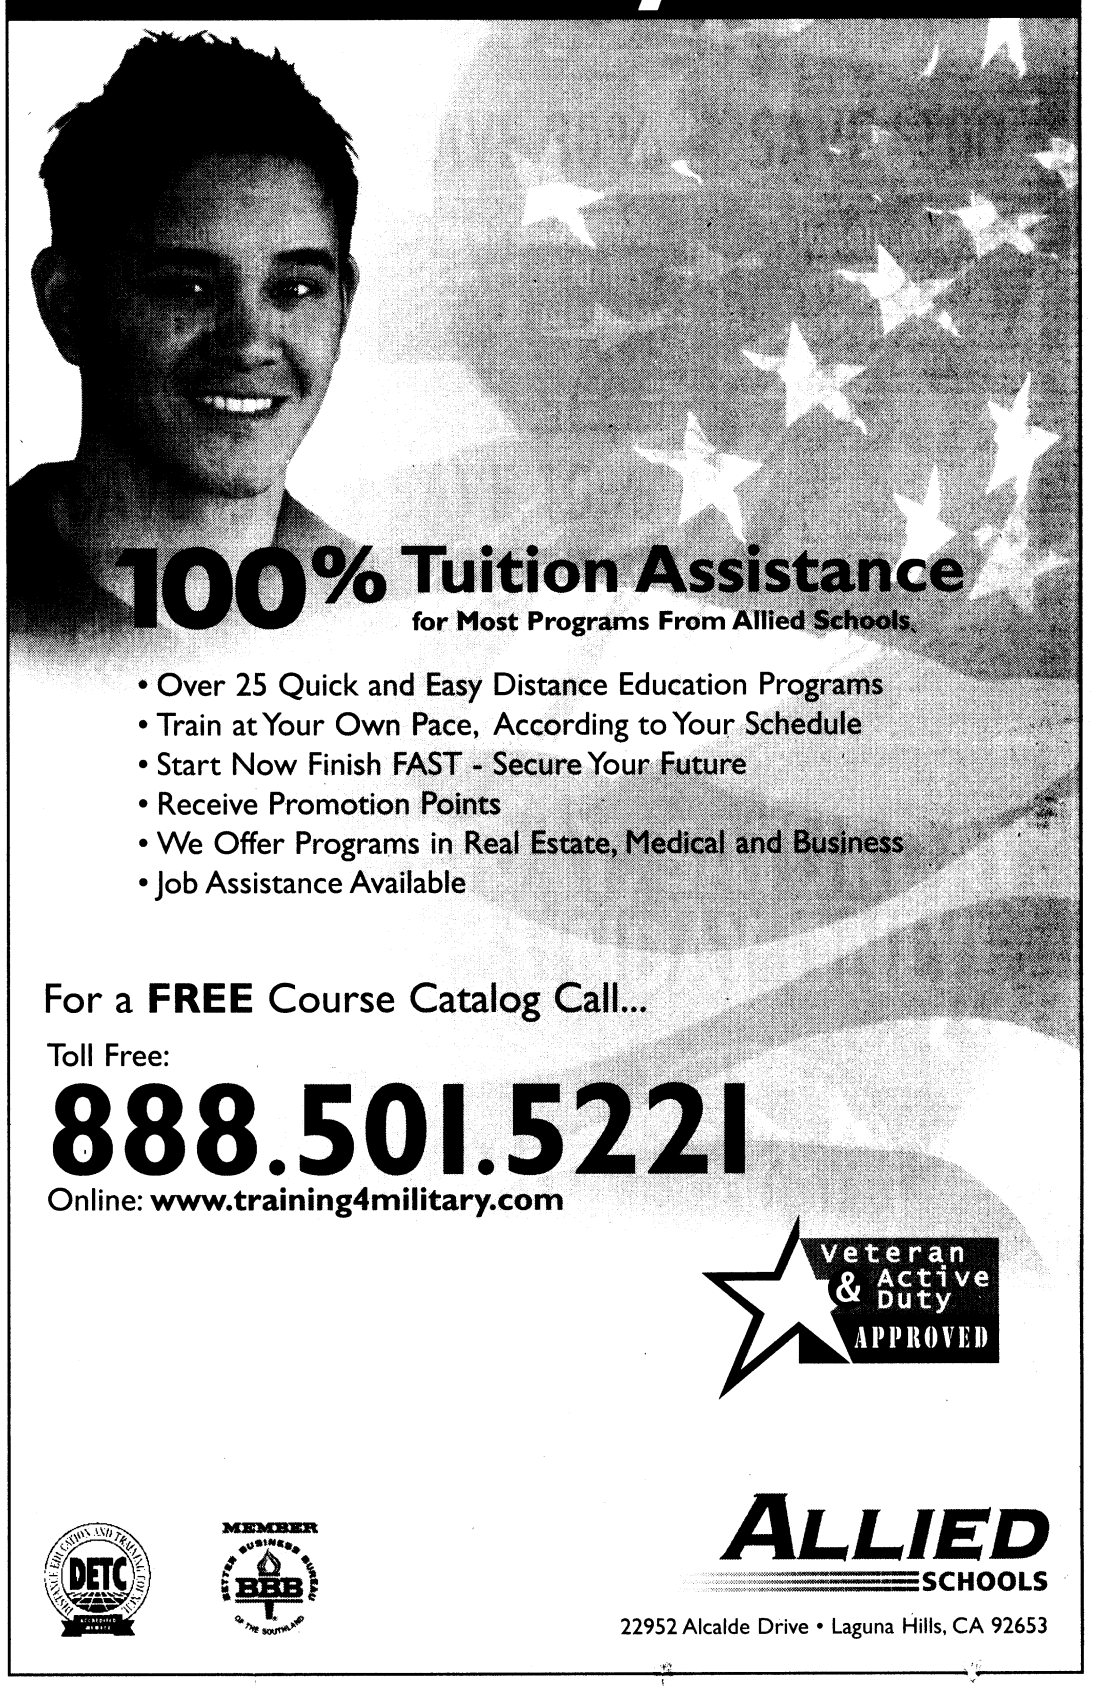
"This is the first time I've come here, there's so much to see. It'll take all afternoon to look everything over," said retired Staff Sgt. Mose Talley, of Columbus. He picked up a cookie jar shaped like a gingerbread house that was free from the commissary.

"I like giving good things to the retirees," said Lilly Burns, a representative of the Fort Benning commissary. "A lot of vendors donated a lot of items for us to give to them."

Donna Hyatt

Giveaways, information and free medical screenings were just a few of the benefits attendees received at the Retiree Appreciation Day.

"I come (to Fort Benning) all the time. I'm a World War II veteran, and I'm still getting around," said retired Lt. Col. Cody Crawford, of Abbeville, Ala. "I especially like this fair because I meet a lot of old friends. (Fort) Benning always puts on a big show for us."



For more information about retiree benefits, call 545-1805.

Lease signing continues for family housing

Clark Pinnacle Family Communities

The U.S. Army and privatization partner, Clark Pinnacle Family Communities, LLC, are conducting lease signing for everyone living in family housing.

Lease signing will continue for five more weeks, and be held at several locations (see schedule for details).

Under the Army's Residential Communities Initiative (RCI) Program, service members who choose to live in privatized family housing must sign a lease for an initial term of six months. After the six-month term, effective January 2006, leases will automatically extend month to month.

Under privatization, service members will receive their basic allowance for housing. Privatization does not affect the amount of BAH that is paid to the service member as service members living on and off post receive the same BAH. Prior to privatization, service members would not receive BAH if they lived in military housing.

At lease signing, what forms will I sign?

A standard lease agreement with Fort Benning Family Communities, LLC.

What is a lease?

A lease is a contract between the owner of the home and the tenant. It is a legal document that establishes the rights and responsibilities of both parties and binds both parties to the terms contained in the agreement.

Examples of typical terms contained in a lease:

- Resident move-in and move-out dates.
- Amount of rent to be paid.
- Early termination clauses.
- Move-out procedures.

What will I need to bring with me?

A copy of a current LES.

Do I really have to sign a lease?

Yes. The lease establishes the right for you to occupy the home and provides the Partnership a way to collect rent. Signing the lease is in many was like signing for quarters, it's something that you are required to do.

A lease protects the resident by defining the landlord and tenant rights and responsibilities. It guarantees the resident the use of a home for a specific period of time for a specific amount of rent.

What if my spouse is deployed?

A spouse can sign the lease as long as they have a general or special power of attorney and bring a recent copy of the service member's LES.

NSPS published in National Register

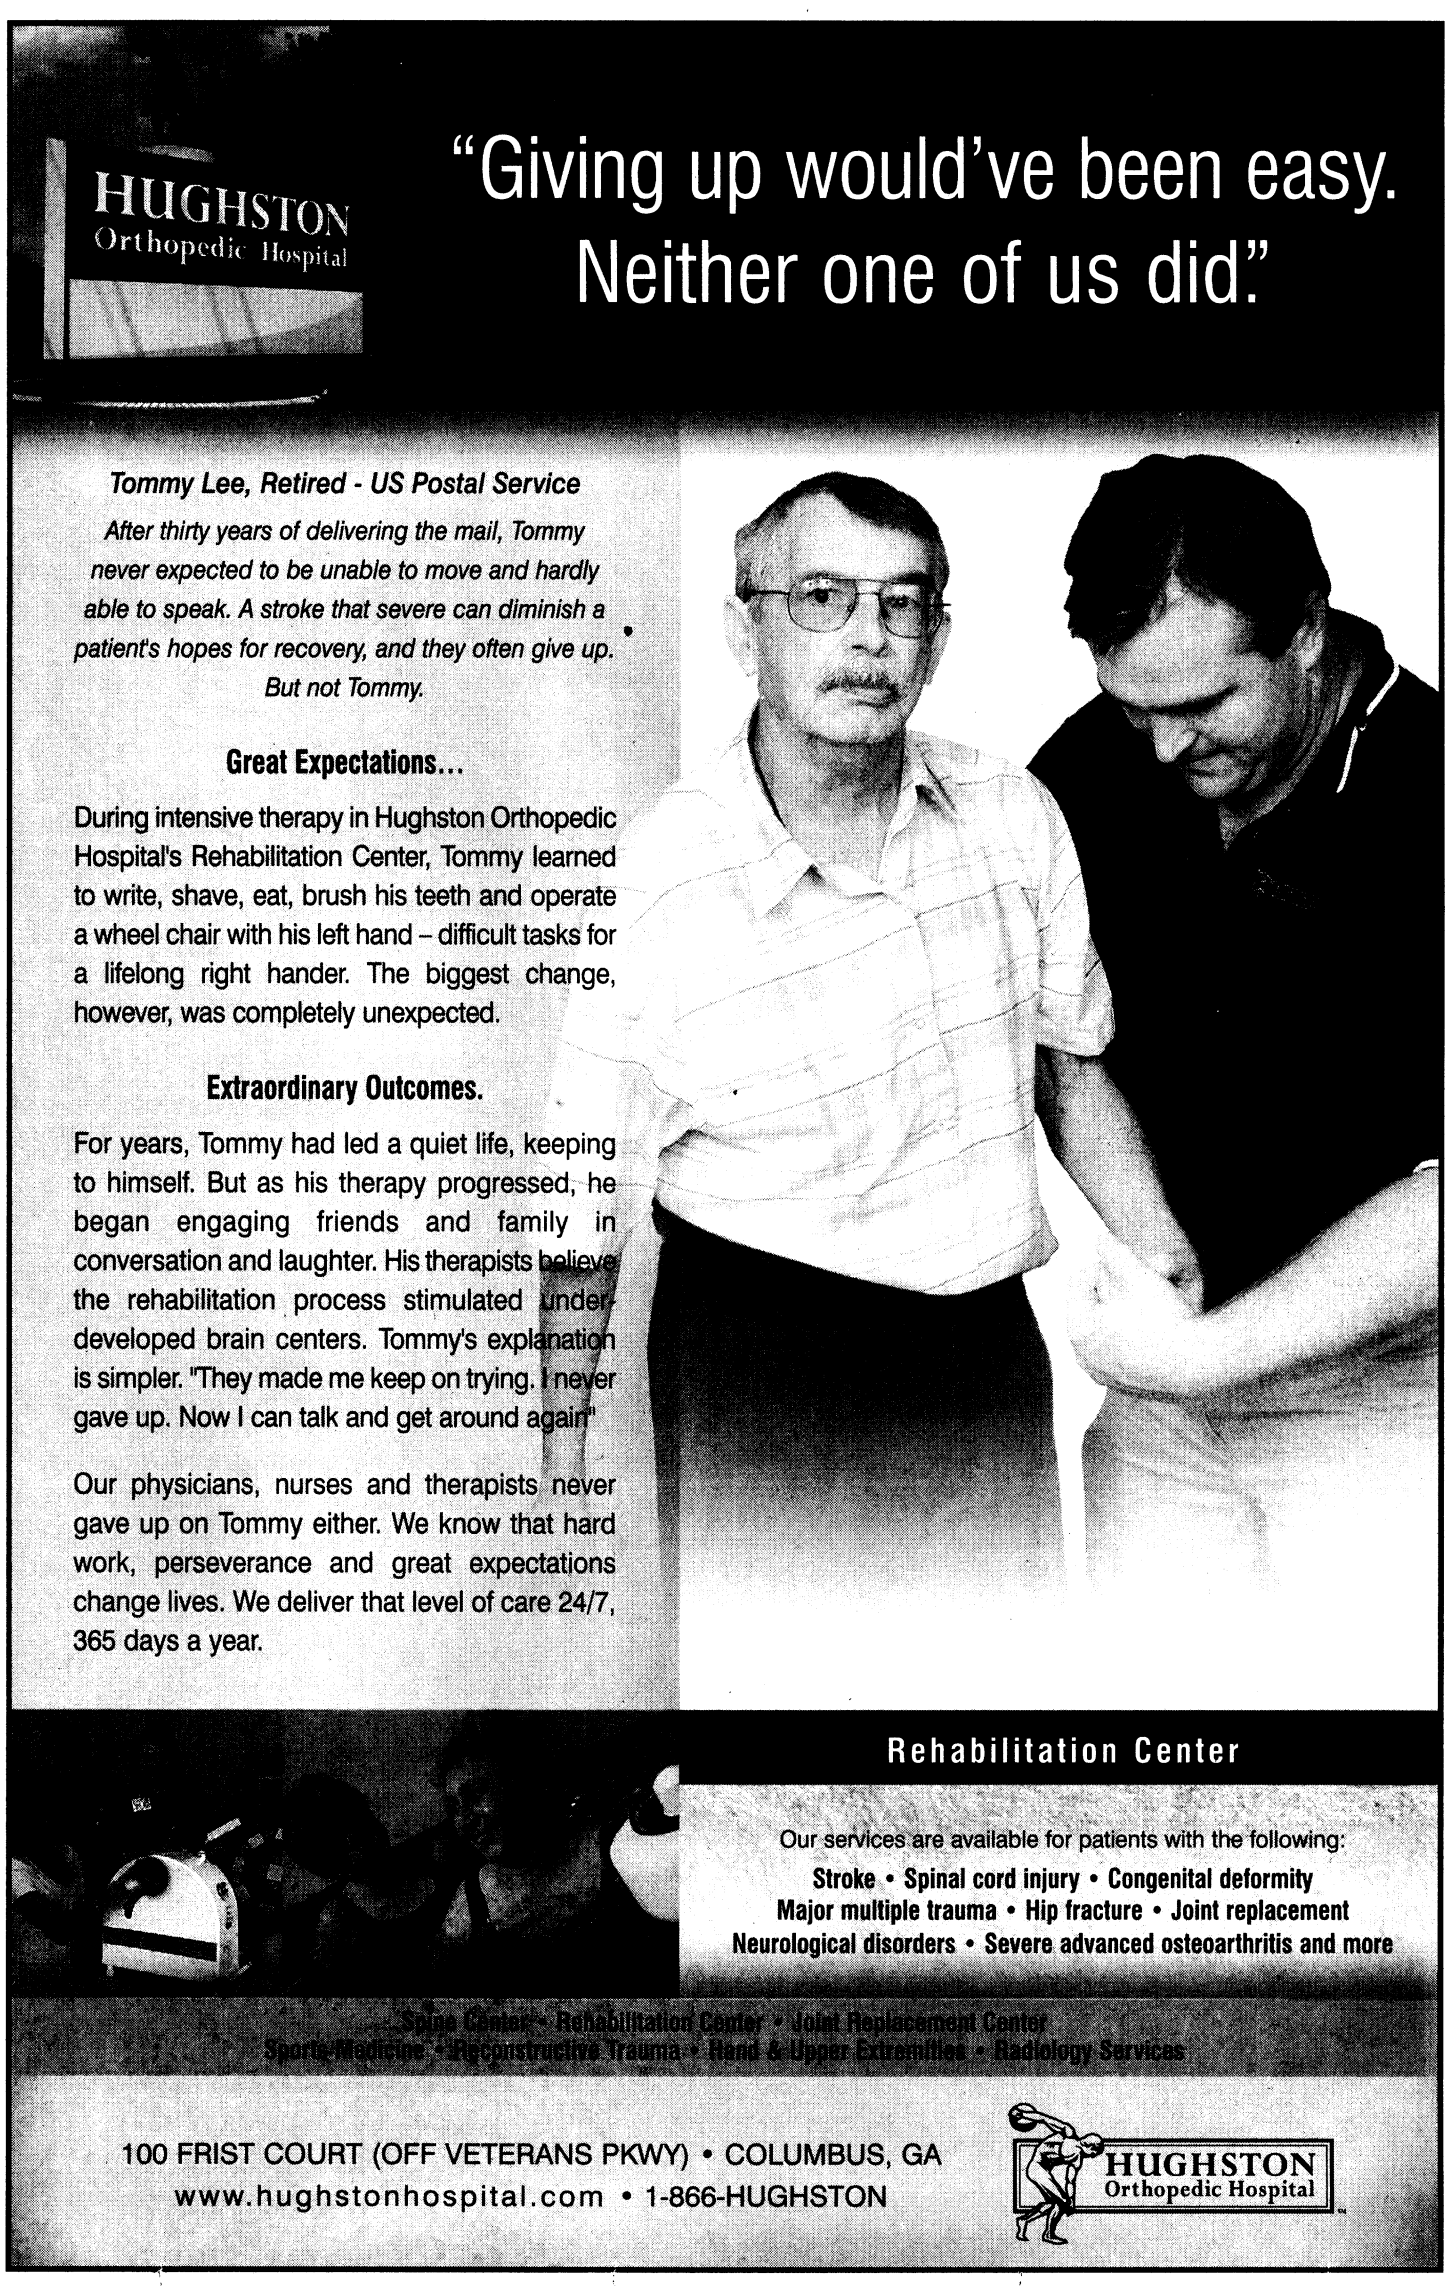
Anita Vajentic
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Final regulations for DoD's National Security Personnel System were released to Congress Oct. 26 and published Nov. 1 in the Federal Register.

NSPS becomes effective no sooner than 30 days following Congressional notification and publication to the Federal Register, personnel officials said. DoD will then begin collaborations with national-level union representatives to discuss the NSPS Implementing Issuances, which will provide the final details of the system and the implementation plans.

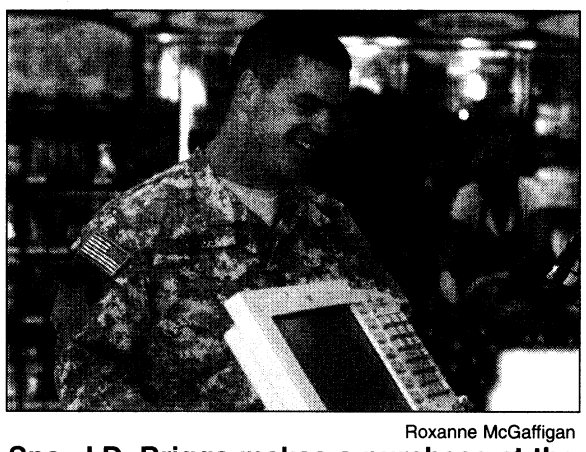
NSPS will include the vast majority of DoD employees, except certain excluded categories, such as intelligence personnel, as specified in NSPS law.

The NSPS Human Resources programs include new processes for classification, compensation, performance management, staffing, work-force shaping, and adverse actions and appeals.



NSPS HR programs will implement in phases called "spirals."

The first implementation will begin early in calendar year 2006 for Spiral 1.1 organizations, starting with the performance management element. The remaining HR programs will transition in those same organizations after the January 2006 General Pay increases.



Spiral 1.1 will include about 19,000 Army civilian employees. Spiral 1.1 includes Army employees from: Army Materiel Command's Tank-automotive and Armaments Command; AMC's Army Research, Development and Engineering Center; Civilian Human Resources Agency; Corps of Engineers in the South Pacific and Southwestern regions; Medical Command's Madigan Army Medical Center; and the Space and Missile Defense Command.

Spiral 1.1 is limited to employees located in the continental United States only, Army personnel officials said.

New AAFES shoppette opens on Kelley Hill

A new AAFES facility opened on Kelley Hill Tuesday, with a Burger King, drive-through drycleaners, full-sized Class Six, and arcade for those who live and work there.

"It has created a Kelley (Hill) town center that's multi-functional," said Garrison Commander Col. Rick Riera.

AAFES General Manager Lee Holloway called the opening exhilarating.

"It's the first domino of many that will impact Fort Benning," Holloway said. He said more new buildings will go up around post, creating a mini-city for the troops and families.

Kelley Hill is the first area to see changes, Holloway said, because 3rd Brigade is one of the largest units on post and the area needed "something to make Kelley Hill complete."

The advantage, too, is that the new facility will supplement foot traffic seen at Main Post facilities, he said.

Riera said the opening is just in time for the 3rd Brigade Soldiers returning from fighting the Global War on Terrorism in Iraq.

"They deserve this quality of service," Holloway said.

Already, Soldiers appeared eager to take advantage of the new mini-mall.

"When I came here a year ago, there was nothing," said Sgt. Shawn Wickizer, of the 335th Signal Command. "This is (great)."

"Finally," said Spc. J.D. Briggs, of D Company, CONUS Replacement Center. "We've been waiting a long time for this."

In the upcoming weeks, another shoppette will open on Dixie Road,

And that's not all, Holloway said. In January, the Starbucks at Martin Army Community Hospital and the new food court in Infantry Hall should open.

Riera said the multi-million dollar improvements are part of the commitment to improve the quality of life on post.

"They will make Fort Benning a complete community," he said. "It's part of the Army's 'One Plus One' standard for the future."

know she's out of Iraq," Ron said. "It's hard to describe the feeling of the past year. It's like suspended animation. I could think about her, but I couldn't go forward."

Although Ron said Barbara e-mailed her daughter every night, Brooke was tight-lipped about what they were doing in Iraq and wouldn't tell them a lot.

"But she was very serious that nothing would happen to anyone under her command while they were there," Ron said.

A round of cheers went up as those waiting heard the sound of the plane touching down and taxiing up to the terminal.

"This has been the longest two hours of my life," Barbara said.

The families would have to wait longer, as their Soldiers turned in weapons, received safety briefings and the single Soldiers received keys to their barracks rooms.

Spc. Johnny Alston, of the 598th, waited in line for his key. The Washington, D.C., native said although he didn't have anyone waiting for him on the other side of the wall, he would see them soon.

"I'll see them next week," Alston said.

"I'm looking forward to getting with my family and catching up."

When the Soldiers finally marched in front of their families, Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough welcomed them as Saturday night turned into Sunday morning.

"Last year, we lined you up and said goodbye and told you that you had a long road ahead of you," Yarbrough said.

"We hope you realize just how important what you did was.

"Your country thanks you. We, at Fort Benning, thank you and the folks in the crowd thank you. Welcome back."

Lt. Col. Matthew Higginbotham, 13th CSB commander, said although it was good to be home, there are two companies from the unit still deployed — the 104th Transportation Company and the 608th Ordnance Company.

recommendation, laying out what actions are required to implement them, when they will occur, and what resources are needed, officials said. Affected services and agencies must submit these plans by Nov. 15 to the DoD Installation Capabilities Council, which will review them and forward them to the Infrastructure Steering Group for approval.

Meanwhile, DoD is poised to begin working with civilian employees and communities to be affected by the BRAC decisions. DoD has a long and successful history of helping its civilian workers impacted by base closings, officials said. This includes programs that promote placement, training, retraining and transition to new jobs.

Since 1989, DoD has reduced its civilian work force by 428,400 people, with less than 10 percent of those reductions through involuntary separations, officials said. DoD's Priority Placement Program, which officials call the centerpiece of DoD's Civilian Assistance and Re-employment programs, gives defense employees placement priority at other DoD facilities.

A community conference to be held later this year will focus on many of the issues involved in BRAC 2005 and the programs available to address them.

75th Ranger Regt. wins team trophy

The first All-Army Modern Combatives Championship trophy was awarded to Soldiers from Fort Benning, home of the U.S. Army Combatives School.

The 75th Ranger Regiment won the team championship Nov. 6 following two days of competition.

Surrounded by fellow Soldiers congratulating him for winning the heavyweight division title, Sgt. James Stelly was all smiles.

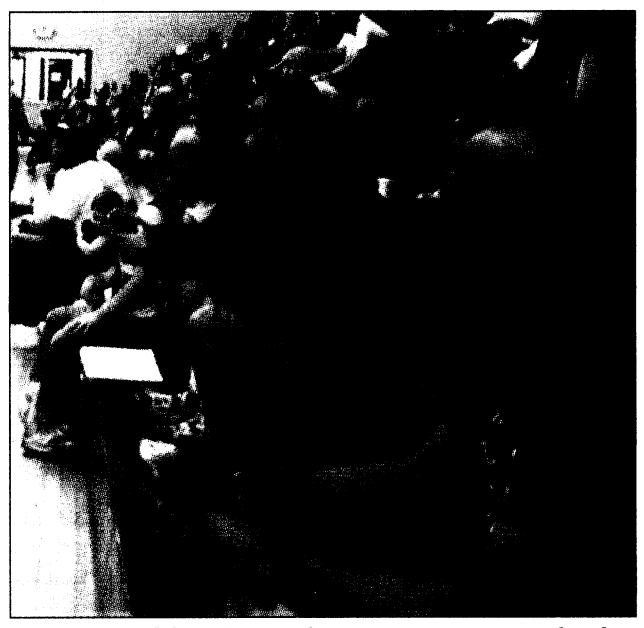
"I first started doing (modern combatives) when I went through the Ranger Indoctrination Program," he said.

Hosted by the 11th Infantry Regiment, competitors representing Army installations from around the world weighed in Nov. 4.

The competition began with 198 preliminary fights to determine the 24 semi-final positions. The standard combatives competition rules were used in the elimination matches, but the finals allowed maneuvers such as fist striking with protective gloves, throws, takedowns, chokes and locks.

"The only limitation was no elbow strikes because they're more dangerous, no hitting the back of the head, and things like that" said Matt Larsen, president of the U.S. Army Combatives School.

He said he was happy with the number of Soldiers competing in this inaugural event.



"Competition spawns excellence by giving people the opportunity to be champions," he said.

Modern combatives started within the 2nd Ranger Battalion in 1995 when Lt. Col. Stan McChrystal, then battalion commander, ordered a review of defensive hand-to-hand training.

Combining the best of several different forms of martial arts, the Rangers settled on a program based upon Jiu-Jitsu, with elements of judo, wrestling, boxing and kickboxing, Larsen said.

As Rangers redeployed to new commands, they took the modern combatives system with them and taught others.

It was Col. Michael Ferriter, then commander of the 11th Inf. Regt., who successfully integrated modern combatives into the program of instruction for Officer Candidate School, the Infantry Officer Basic Course and the Infantry Captains Career Course in 2000.

Fighters, friends and spectators watch the ring action Nov. 6.

Since then, Larsen wrote the combatives field manual, and the chief of staff of the Army has approved the modern combatives program under the Task Force Soldier initiative.

Elementary modern combatives are now taught at the entry level to all new Soldiers, Larsen said.

Surveying the ongoing activity, Larsen said every Soldier should be willing and able to fight when called upon.

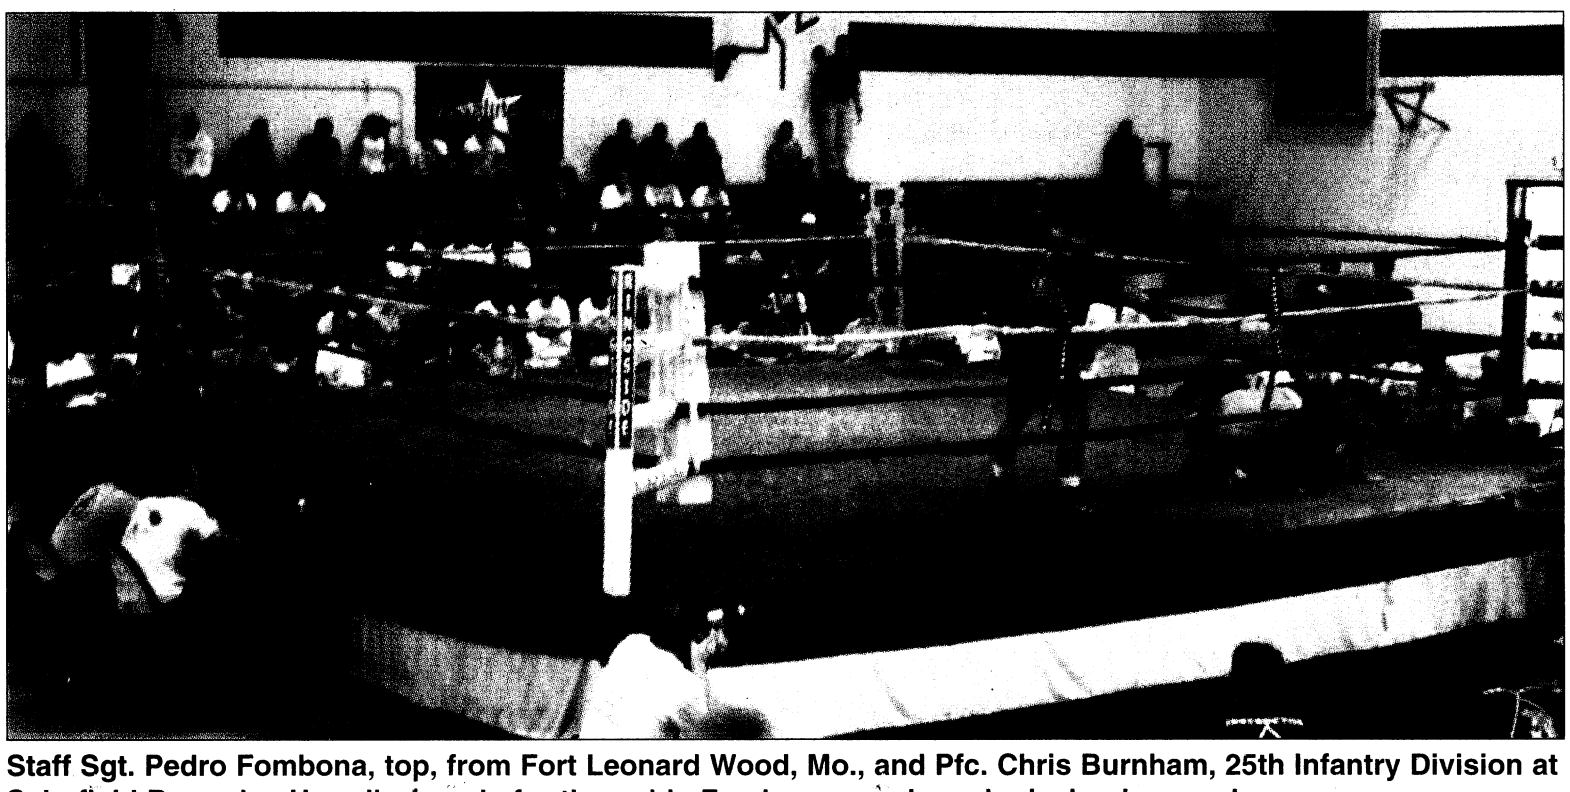
"Being a warrior is about taking the fight to the enemy," he said. "We're the ones who are willing to be the fighters for this nation."

Comprised mostly of military personnel, civilians also watched the competition.

"I think combatives are good because of the job requirements to be a Soldier," said retired 1st Sgt. James Todd, of Columbus. "What if you get in a fighting situation and there's no ammunition for your weapon? A Soldier would need to fight hand-to-hand."

Attending the event for inspiration to write an English 101 assignment, Columbus State University freshman Gena Willard said she was impressed with the fierceness of the competitors.

"There were a lot of tense moments when they repeatedly smacked each other in the head or kneed the ribs," she said. "I also understand that when you're fighting an enemy, you don't always have your gun, so you're going to have hand-to-hand combat."



The U.S. Army Combatives School followed the competition with the first Combatives Symposium Nov. 7 at Infantry Hall for upper-level combatives instructors.

In addition to Stelly, three other post Soldiers won individual medals: Staff Sgt. Grant Shanaman and Spc. Jamel Ellison, both of the 75th Ranger Regt., won second and third place in the welterweight division, and Capt. Ben Fielding, C Company commander of the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regt., placed third in the lightweight competition.

"All the things you can ever learn in life, you can learn in the ring fighting," Stelly said. "It teaches you discipline and how to take pride in what you do."

Col. James Klingaman, 11th Inf. Regt. commander, awarded the win, place and show medals.

Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough, assistant commandant of Fort Benning, presented the Rangers with the trophy.

Staff Sgt. Pedro Fombona, top, from Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Pfc. Chris Burnham, 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, grapple for the gold. Fombona won by submission in round one.

DoD program helps redeploying troops

Will receive various assessments

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Service members returning from deployments will now participate in a post-deployment health reassessment program that all the services are instituting, defense officials said at a Pentagon news conference Nov. 4.

This new program will assess the health — both physical and mental — of service members some 90 to 120 days after they have redeployed.

"We recognize that deployments may have an impact on the health and well-being of our service members, and we know from research that health concerns are identified even several months after returning from operational deployments," said Dr. William Winkenwerder, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs.

This new program is in addition to the routine post-deployment health screening that all service members go through upon return to the states from a deployment. More than 900,000 service members have already gone through that program. The reassessment program is designed to find service members whose symptoms don't show up immediately. The program aims to get them the help they need, the doctor said.

The program builds on test programs the services have conducted since June. The Army, Navy and Marine Corps tested the program on 3,000 service members. Medical officials said the pilot program was effective and now look to expand it to all returning service members.

> "Effective education to gain leadership support ... is critical to the success of this program."
> Dr. William Winkenwerder
> Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs

Those three services plus the Air Force — which started the test program in September — will institute the program in January, officials said.

Key elements of the program include outreach to service members, education and training for service members and their families, screening of service members, assessment by medical professionals, evaluation and treatment, and follow-up.

The Army, Navy and Marine Corps will do the assessments face to face with service members. The Air Force plan calls for Airmen to answer an online survey and incorporate the survey in with their members' annual physicals.

Winkenwerder said the results so far do not indicate the the Global War on Terrorism is affecting "service members or their families in ways different from past wars. What's different is the way we're responding."

The assistant secretary said that it is important that military leaders, service members and clinicians understand the process and buy into it.

"Effective education to gain leadership support and service member participation and optimal clinical practice is critical to the success of this program," he said.

Health officials want to destigmatize the process of service members going to health professionals for mental or physical help. Returning combat veterans shouldn't believe they must deal with the stresses they experienced by themselves, said Navy surgeon general Vice Adm. Donald Arthur.

"Everyone who goes into combat is in some way psychologically affected," he said. "I don't think you can get around that fact."

He said it's significant that the military is addressing the issue upfront "with people who understand combat because they have also been there and can more readily talk with the Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Marines who are coming back.

"We have learned that we shouldn't let our combat veterans go into society without any questions asked or without any contact, as we used to do," Arthur said.

The admiral said early contact with service members reduces stress and takes care of family issues, noting that "combat is inherently stressful."

Winkenwerder said active duty and reserve component personnel will be treated exactly the same. Unit commanders are charged with ensuring service members participate in this program.

Fire in the hole!

Rising cost of heating fuels fears of house fires

Denise Simmons doesn't mince words when it comes to in-home fire safety. As the co-owner of Top Hat Chimney Sweeps in Opelika, Ala., she knows a thing or two about the dangers of a neglected fireplace.

"I've never seen such concern about fireplaces and a desire to change heating systems," said Simmons, who fields about 90 phone calls a day in the business she runs with her husband, Jeff, a 20-year veteran of chimney maintenance.

"The problem is, I talk to a lot of homeowners who don't want to be bothered with safety codes, and they don't want the expense of permits or maintenance," she said. "This is no place to cut corners. We're talking about lives here."

Presently, more than one-third of Americans use fireplaces, wood stoves and other fuel-fired appliances as their primary source of heat at home. Heating fires account for more than 35 percent of residential home fires in rural areas alone.

That's likely to increase, said Simmons, who fears the desire to save money will override common sense and result in an unprecedented number of residential fires.

"I truly believe we're going to see more chimney fires and homes burning up this year than ever before," she said.

Tom Acacia, a Fort Benning fire inspector, visited post schools last month during the annual nationwide fire safety and prevention campaign, sponsored by the National Fire Protection Association. This year's campaign focused on Care with Candles, because the popularity of decorator candles has increased the number of house fires nationwide over the past decade. In fact, according to the NFPA, the number of fires started by candles nearly doubles each year during the month of December.

Even as Acacia and his fellow firefighters focused on the campaign at hand, he feared a problem looming larger this winter, as more and more people rely on their fireplaces for heat after the cost of crude oil spiked in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

"I can tell you right now," he said. "Next year's campaign will most likely be about fireplace safety."

On Fort Benning, residents don't have to worry about the cost of heating this winter. They don't pay the bill. But like decorator candles, the use of fireplaces will become more and more trendy as home improvement and accessory companies cash in on craze.

More than 300 homes in the post's historic district have wood-burning fireplaces, some 80 years old. And even though post housing officials discourage residents from using these fireplaces, there's no policy prohibiting it, said Ben Anderson, engineer tech for Fort Benning's Family Housing Branch.

He encourages residents to use extreme caution if they do, indeed, decide to use their fireplace. They should call in a work order to schedule a professional chimney inspection and cleaning before lighting the first fire. The NFPA recommends a complete, professional inspection and cleaning annually, preferably in the spring, when its easiest to schedule a visit.

A certified chimney sweep has the tools, typically a video scanning devise, and the know-how to detect damage or potential problems lurking in the uppermost area of the chimney. They can tell you if your chimney has inadequate draft, which can cause the potentially fatal build-up of carbon monoxide.

They can also remove the creosote, a black, tar-like substance that clings to the walls of the chimney flue and builds up over time, if not treated, creating a potential fire hazard.

Creosote is a highly combustible by-product of wood or coal, and it's a carcinogen, known to cause cancer. That's why early chimney sweeps, more than 200 years ago, seldom lived to adulthood.

Commercial "chimney sweep" logs were introduced a few years ago, with their makers claiming the product will remove creosote. To some degree, experts say, they work, but not enough to significantly reduce build-up.

In fact, according to the NFPA, the logs can actually create more of a problem than they solve. As creosote falls, it settles on the ledges, curvatures and smoke shelves inside the flue, creating a bottleneck, which can eventually result in a fire. Professional chimney sweeps have special tools and extension brushes designed to reach these creosote "collection points."

That's why a professional inspection and cleaning is the single most important step a resident can take to prevent a fireplace fire, outside the recommended safety practices listed below, said the NFPA.

Of course, Fort Benning residents don't pay for an inspection if they schedule it through their housing maintenance company, but there's one fact Simmons wants them to know for future reference: You get what you pay for. If a chimney sweep is in and out in 15 minutes, he has not done an adequate job.

And when searching for a professional, make sure he's certified with the Chimney Safety Institute of America. Log on to their Web site, www.CSIA.com, to find a chimney sweep in your area.

The following are practices recommended by the NFPA:

- Always open the damper before starting a fire. Don't close it until the embers have completely cooled.
- Burn only hard woods, such as oak or maple, that have seasoned for at least one year. Soft woods, such as pine, are loaded with tars and resins that can cause a chimney fire. Also, never burn compressed wood, trash or colored paper.
- Use a metal grate to support the logs, and never allow more than two inches of ash to accumulate below.
- Keep wood near the back of the fire box, but not against it. Leave room on all sides for air to flow.
- Make sure your fire is completely extinguished and all embers cooled before going to bed.
- Never use flammable liquids to start a fire inside, and never burn coal in a fireplace. Coal gives off a dangerous amount of carbon monoxide.
- Keep rugs, toys, furniture and kindling at least three feet away, and keep a metal screen in front of the fireplace.
- Avoid roaring fires. They can cause creosote to ignite inside the flue.
- Store soot in a covered metal container. Never dump it in a trash-can.

Chim chiminey, chim chiminey, chim chim cher-ee!

Chim chiminey, chim chiminey, chim chim cher-ee!
A sweep is as lucky , as lucky can be

Contrary to what Mary Poppins would have you believe, early chimney sweeps were not happy-go-lucky fellows at all. Sweeping began in England in the 17th century, when a single chimney fire could reduce a city block to ashes within minutes. The chimneys of the period were very large, so very young "climbing boys" and occasionally girls, usually orphans sold as slaves to "chimney masters," were sent up the flue to brush away soot. Often, an older, more experienced boy followed behind, prodding the sweep with a needle to coax him along. If a climbing boy absolutely refused to climb, it is said, he was forced into the flue and a fire was lit in the fireplace, hence the phrase "light a fire under you."

Chim chiminey, chim chiminey, chim chim cher-oo!
Good luck will rub off when I shake 'ands with you
Or blow me a kiss and that's lucky too

It's considered good luck to see a chimney sweep on your wedding day, and in cultures where the practice is still prevalent, sweeps are often invited to weddings to assure a prosperous, happy union. Why? Many years ago, legend has it, a chimney sweep fell from a rooftop. His foot caught on the gutter, and there he hung, upside down, until a young lass, betrothed to another, reached through a window and pulled him to safety, presumably saving his life. They fell in love and were later married.

Now as the ladder of life 'as been strung
You may think a sweep's on the bottommost rung
Though I spends me time in the ashes and smoke
In this 'ole wide world there's no 'appier bloke

Not so, according to historians. As slaves — and at best, indentured servants — chimney sweeps were forced to give all their money to their masters, who, in exchange, occasionally fed and sheltered the lads. The sweeps carried large sacks, which they filled with soot each day and used as a pillow each night. Come morning, the soot was sold to farmers for fertilizer.

Up where the smoke is all billered and curled
'tween pavement and stars is the chimney sweep world
When the's 'ardly no day, nor 'ardly no night
There's things 'alf in shadow and 'alf way in light
On the rooftops of London, coo, what a sight!

And what a sight they were, those chimney sweeps, decked out in top hats and tail. Legend has it that sweeps wore cast-offs from funeral directors. Such a sight they made in tuxedos, covered in soot, that cherubic-looking chimney sweeps became a popular feature on greeting cards and postcards, which typically showed them with horseshoes, shamrocks or other good luck symbols.

Though I'm covered with soot from me 'ead to me toes
A sweep knows 'e's welcome wherever 'e goes
Chim chiminey, chim chiminey, chim chim cher-ee!
When you're with a sweep, you're in good company

Wanna join the company? Chimney sweeping became a viable career in the U.S. in the '70s, when two oil crises sent the cost of heating fuels through the roof. As the popularity of fireplaces increased, the need for skilled, professionally trained sweeps grew. Today, the trade can be learned at the Sweeps School, www.sweepschool.com, or through the National Chimney Sweep Guild's certification program.

Nowhere is there a more 'appier crew, than them wot sings
"Chim chiminey, chim chiminey, chim chim cher-oo!"
On the chim chiminey, chim chim cher-ee, chim cher-oo!

'Virtual Commissary' opens for business

Bonnie Powell
Defense Commissary Agency

Commissary shoppers looking for a different kind of gift for friends or family at home or abroad can let their "fingers do the clicking" at the new Virtual Commissary. Located under the shopping link at www.commissaries.com, Virtual Commissary will open up a whole new world of Internet shopping for authorized users of the commissary benefit.

"We're excited about DeCA's first adventure into the world of Internet shopping," said Patrick B. Nixon, chief executive officer and acting director for the Defense Commissary Agency.

Initially, one of DeCA's business partners, Kraft Foods, Inc., is kicking off Internet shopping with a selection of gift baskets.

"But the number of vendors and manufacturers participating will continue to increase — along with a variety of products," Nixon said.

All of the products in the gift baskets at Virtual Commissary can be found on the shelves of "brick and mortar" commissaries, but the unique packaging of products into gift and special occasion baskets adds a new twist.

With titles like "Camouflage," "Drill Sergeant," and "Touch of Home," the baskets offer assortments of crackers, canned cheeses, cookies, candies and even beverages and coffee packs.

To access the extended commissary, shoppers must pass through a secure portal found under the shopping link at www.commissaries.com. Personal information entered by the customer is validated to ensure they are an authorized shopper.

Access is dependent on whether the customer is entered in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System. Military exchanges use a similar method to check for authorization before permitting access to exchange Web sites or online shopping.

DoD civilians stationed overseas who are otherwise authorized to shop at commissaries may not be able to access Virtual Commissary until changes are made to the DEERS database by the Defense Manpower Data Center, said DeCA officials.

DMDC is targeting completion of the changes for late November.

Virtual Commissary customers can make selections and fill in their payment and shipping information in one easy and secure step, before being transferred to the manufacturer's site where they can get total cost for the product (including the shipping) and finalize their purchase.

Shipping and handling charges are paid by the customer, just as at most other Internet shopping sites, and charges will vary depending on the method of shipping selected, location and the speed of delivery requested.

Customers can check for availability of delivery to APO and FPO addresses as well as get more information on what's in the gift baskets by clicking on the image of the gift basket at Virtual Commissary.

Payment for orders can be made with any credit card accepted in "real" commissaries and customer information is not archived by DeCA.

"We're certainly energized by the possibilities offered to our customers through this partnership with industry," Nixon said.

"The future of online commissary shopping is unlimited."

Down the road, Virtual Commissary expansion could include making a wide variety of commissary products available, a feature that would allow deployed military service members, retirees and other authorized shoppers to order items they want and need at commissary savings — no matter where they live.

Treatments advance for lung cancer patients

Dr. Amanda May
MCG Health System

More than 80 percent of lung cancers are preventable with one simple act — not picking up that first cigarette.

Lung cancer is the number one cancer killer in the country and the number one cause of lung cancer is smoking. At highest risk are smokers or past smokers 60 and older; those with previous lung tumors; and those who suffer from chronic pulmonary disease (emphysema, chronic bronchitis, chronic asthma and other types of lung disease).

While research is ongoing for testing that can more effectively screen for early signs of lung cancer, such as low-dose CT scans, recent advances have been made in the treatment of lung cancer.

The FDA has recently approved several new drugs for advanced lung cancers where surgery is not an option. These drugs offer additional options for patients who could not tolerate or were not responding to past drugs.

One challenge for physicians has been the high rate of occurrence of lung cancer. Another new recommendation is adjutant chemotherapy treatment, or a course of chemotherapy given after lung cancer has been removed surgically.

Surgery has been the standard treatment for lung cancer. This additional chemotherapy treatment is believed to improve and reduce rates of reoccurrence of cancer by affecting microscopic disease or by affecting cells that may be in a precancerous stage.

Another new therapy that has recently been approved is targeted therapy, but results in practice may not be as promising as they proved during study. These drugs target a certain receptor in cancer cells that are not present in normal cells. However, recent findings indicate that patients may feel better on the program but whether or not they actually improve the lung cancer has not been shown.

Even with medical science moving toward better treatment options, the preferred choice is prevention. Doctors continue to advise patients not to smoke and if they do smoke, to explore options to help them quit.

Risk of lung cancer begins to drop five years after quitting and continues to drop to almost normal the longer a person remains a nonsmoker.

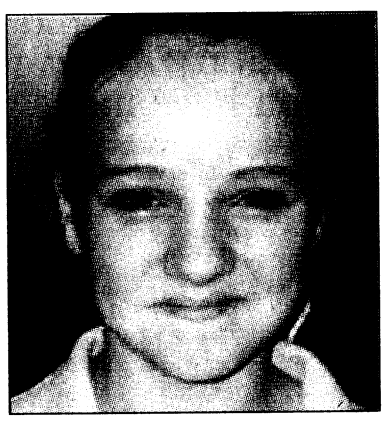
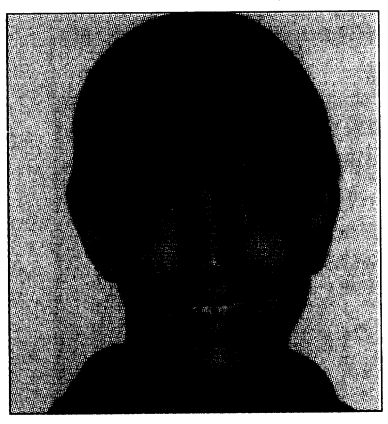
Fort Benning youth in the news

Lisa Madler asked her seventh-grade students at Faith Middle School what scares them. Here's what they said:



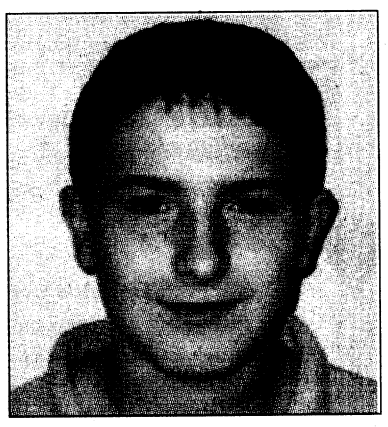


Kyle Weaver

"What scares me the most are horror movies. I always think about the scary parts. My dad teases me about it. He sometimes jumps out of my closet or startles me when I'm not expecting it. I don't get much sleep after I see a horror movie."

Tanya Howell

"I never walk directly by a storm drain, because I watched the movie IT, where a little boy went by a storm drain, and "It" got him and killed him. Now every time I go by a drain, I walk a little ways from it. My brother laughs at me."



Brian Forshee

"About three years, ago we were camping on the beach, and my little brother and I got on our boogie boards and played in the surf. I was letting the waves pull me in and out off the beach. Then a big wave swept me off my feet. Before I knew it I was being carried out to sea. I got really scared. Just when I thought I was going to drown, my dad came out and got me."

Chris Cantrell

"The thing that scares me the most is probably spiders. They really creep me out. I think it is the way they move. I hate how they're sneaky and creep up on you when you are not expecting them."

Tie a yellow ribbon

Bridgett Siter

Taylor Floyd, a fifth-grader at Smiths Station Intermediate School, ties a ribbon on a fence around the school Wednesday during a pre-Veterans Day celebration. Angel Nelson, the wife of a Fort Benning Soldier and the school's military liaison, spearheaded the event. At the Smiths Station Fall Festival last month, students, parents and faculty wrote notes of appreciation and encouragement on the ribbons. Nearly 100 students brought pictures of "their" servicemen and women to the school, where they were posted on a bulletin board.

Pray for our veterans

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ronald L. Smith
USAIC Chaplains Office

REFLECTIONS

It is always a privilege to sit and listen to the stories of our nation's veterans. Listening to the stories of wars, losses, triumphs, and the peace that ensues, you hear the unfolding of our history. Each one that speaks tells of both the personal experience and that of a comrade who neither time nor memories can fade.

The details can sometimes change, but the impact those events had on the life of our cherished veterans do not diminish what each of them has done for our freedom, liberty and democracy.

The faces of some have wrinkled, yet we are also shocked to see how young the faces of our newest veterans tell the same stories in a different way, from a current war.

Woven into the fabric of most of the stories we hear is one of faith, hope and an unending belief in righteousness. The expressions of individual faith flow from both pain and perseverance.

You will hear how miracles, unmeasured grace and unbelievable circumstances occurred with no reasonable or rational explanation. How knowing that someone was praying for them helped to sustain and deliver them.

You hear of unselfish acts and sacrifice that demonstrate the devotion not only to a cause and country, but also to a fellow veteran that goes far beyond the scope of duty.

Smith

How our veterans accomplished so much is seen in an undying devotion to their beliefs and hopes. In 1941, a book was published entitled Song and Service Book for Ship and Field. The preface dedicates it to "the men, living and dead, who have hazarded their lives for America, to the lads who keep faithful watch today and tomorrow, and to the Glory of Almighty God ..."

A prayer entitled A Prayer at Taps captures much of what was and is prayed for both our past and present veterans. Pray this prayer with them:

"Before we go to rest we commit ourselves to thy care, O God our Father, beseeching Thee through Christ our Lord to keep alive thy grace in our hearts. Watch Thou, O Heavenly Father, with those who wake, or watch, or weep to-night, and give thine angels charge over those who sleep. Tend to those who are sick, rest those who are weary, soothe those who suffer, pity those in affliction; be near and bless those who are dying, and keep under thy holy care those who are dear to us. Through Christ our Lord. Amen."

God gives us 'SHAPE' to make us unique

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Want some good news today? Only you can be you! That's right, your DNA is a mind-boggling message from your creator that he's got an absolutely perfectly tailored and unbelievably unique mission for his creation — you.

Having trouble with self-esteem this week? Then listen to what this Psalm says about God: "You shaped me first inside, then out; you formed me in my mother's womb" (Psalm 139:13, The Message).

God designed each of us so there would be no duplication in the world. No one has the exact same mix of factors that make you unique. That means no one else on earth will ever be able to play the role God planned for you. If you don't make your unique contribution, it won't be made.

What's the fourth of the five purpose for our life? Well, we've said the first purpose is reflected in the fact that we were planned for God's pleasure — we were made to worship God. The second purpose has to do with the fact that you and I were formed for family — we were made for fellowship. The third purpose we discussed last week is that you were created to become like Christ — we are to engage in discipleship. And the fourth purpose we're going to discover today is that you and I were shaped for service — we are to have a ministry.

Hawkins

"Your hands shaped me and made me (Job 10:8 NIV). Before God created you, he decided what role he wanted you to play on earth. You are the way you are because you were made for a specific ministry.

Not only did God shape you before your birth, he planned every day of your life to support his shaping process. God uses all of it to mold you for your ministry to others and shape you for your service to him.

"We are God's workmanship ... to do good works" (Ephesians 2:10 NIV).

Wondering what you were shaped to do? Then here's a handy little acrostic that can give you a real headstart on how to feel the joy and fulfillment of making a difference.

God's custom combination of capabilities is called your SHAPE:

• Spiritual gifts — These are divine deposits God makes in your life so that you can serve those around you. What are your spiritual gifts? (Everybody's got at least one and nobody's got them all.) Do you have the gift of leadership, mercy, teaching, counseling, etc. We need your gift!

• Heart — What are you passionate about — what do you feel strongly over? That's not coincidental. God places that passion for good in your heart so that everything will get done that needs done.

• Abilities — These are things you're just flat good at. What talent do you enjoy that others don't? What are you best at?

• Personality — Some of us are introverts, some extroverts ... some of us good with people ... some of us not. Your personality is the way it is just so you can play a position on a team perfectly suited for who you are.

• Experience — Did you know God will never waste a hurt? What have you been through that could help somebody else?

What have you learned through pain that you couldn't have learned through pleasure? You see, your "SHAPE" defines your ministry in this world.

Want to hear more about living the Purpose Driven Life?

Then give me a ring at 545-9014 at the Family Life Center, or join in the journey at 11 a.m. Sundays at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill.

Bodybuilding returns to post

Roxanne McGaffigan

Professional bodybuilder Rodney Helaire works the crowd at the Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning Bodybuilding Championship Saturday in Marshall Auditorium. Helaire is a member of the International Natural Bodybuilding and Fitness Federation, an organization which sanctions drug-free competition.

Saturday night's competition drew a crowd that saw 38-year-old Gerald Richardson of Roswell, Ga., and 41-year-old Nancy Machado of Columbus take the overall Mr. and Mrs. Fort Benning Bodybuilding titles. Besides proving they can pump iron, the draw for contestants was the event was all natural. No enhancers can be used.

"For the competitors, keeping it all natural makes it a true competition," said Richardson, a former staff sergeant once stationed at Fort Benning with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

All natural is part of a major push by many bodybuilders to make events totally chemical free — banning drugs like ephedra, a weight–loss and body-building aid, and prescription diuretics. The International Natural Bodybuilding and Fitness Federation is a growing organization which sanctions drug-free events.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• T.O.=Totally Over

The Philadelphia Eagles have booted Terrell Owens. He's been suspended for the next three games, and will be deactivated after that.

Coach Andy Reid explained in a conference it was a culmination of several incidents by T.O.

• Good job Charlie

Coaching phenom Charlie Weis, head football coach of Notre Dame, was offered a 10-year contract by the Irish. Speculation puts the contract price at $30-$40 million, making him the highest paid coach in college football.

• Bart who?

Bart Bryant won The Tour Championship Nov. 6 in Atlanta.

Bryant beat Tiger Woods by six strokes, finishing at -17.

Bryant walked away with $1,170,000, while Tiger got a measly $715,000. How do they do it?

• Carl does it again

Carl Edwards drove the 99 car to victory lane in the Dickies 500 Nov. 6 for his second consecutive win.

Edwards jumped into the third spot in the Chase, just 77 behind Jimmie Johnson, who is 38 points behind Tony Stewart.

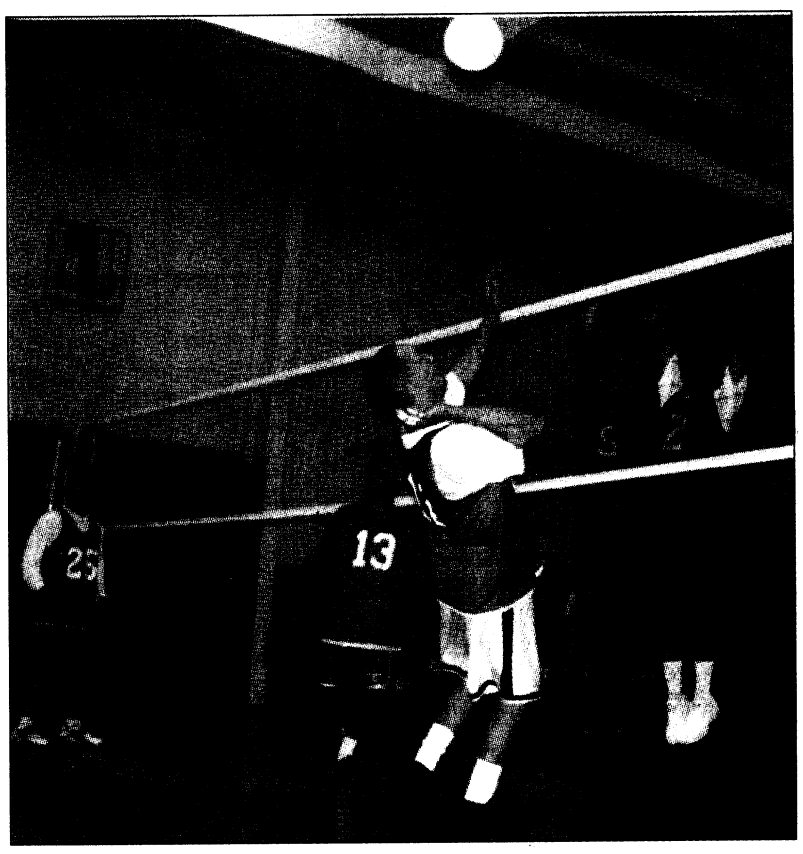
• Rookies of the Year

The American League chose Oakland A's relief pitcher Huston Street as their Rookie of the Year.

The NL chose Ryan Howard, a first baseman for the Philadelphia Phillies. Howard had 22 home runs in 88 games.

• Down to two ...

This week's NASCAR race is the Checker Auto Parts 500 from Phoenix International Raceway. Coverage starts at 3 p.m. on NBC. Can Carl make it a three-peat?



Volley !

The Ranger Training Brigade's volleyball team went into the Commander's Cup Championship tournament undefeated Tuesday. The team from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation set them back on the first night of play, but Wednesday the Rangers came back strong and defeated WHINSEC twice to claim the tournament title. WHINSEC took second place, and the 641st Mobilization Troop Command team took third.

Erin Says...

The top three are all tied, with Capt. Coates just one game behind. Ken lost the top spot, going 6-6 for the week. I like to see variety in the picks, which is my main goal in picking the games for the week. The big game of Miami and Virginia Tech threw the pickers, as did the Detroit and Minnesota game.

Dress code, good or foul?

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

The NBA recently enacted a "business casual" dress code. Some players like it, others are crying foul.

These rules are for when players are engaged in team or league business, i.e., arriving and leaving games, promotional appearances and conducting interviews.

A memo sent to teams spelled out what can and what can't be worn. Among those that can't — sleeveless shirts, shorts, T-shirts, chains, pendants or medallions worn over clothes, sunglasses while indoors and headphones (unless on the team bus or plane or in the locker room).

The "business casual" rule states that players will be required to wear a long or short-sleeved dress shirt, dress slacks, khakis or dress jeans, and appropriate shoes and socks — no sneakers, flip flops, sandals or work boots.

Some players immediately deemed the rules "racial." I'm not even going to go there, because there's no merit to it.

I will say that the rules are just right. Not too strict, not too loose. So why the big uproar from the players?

One player said something along the lines of having a financial strain, because he would have to go out and purchase this type of attire. Please, spare me. You have thousands of dollars of diamonds in your ears, but you can't afford to buy a pair of $30 Dockers pants?

Since when did looking nice become something so bad?

I was watching Super Bowl III on ESPN Classic recently, and although it was a great game, it wasn't Broadway Joe who caught my eye. It was the fans.

The men were dressed in sport coats and ties, and the women were in their Sunday best, every hair in place.

In just a few decades, we've gone from fans nattily dressed to men making millions of dollars complaining because of a dress code. What's wrong with this picture? Since when did looking nice become a bad thing?

These guys can wear whatever they want on their free time. Nobody's taking that away from them. But they also know that kids emulate them, want to look like them, and will spend hundreds of dollars trying to achieve that look.

The NBA isn't trying to be Big Brother or rule the players' lives. It's trying to bolster it's own image and that of the players, who in the last few years have not had such a great reputation. (I refuse to tread into that quagmire also.)

In closing, I have to point out one thing about the list of what can't be worn — sunglasses while indoors. An oxymoron in itself, I have to say that no one, absolutely no one, looks cool while wearing sunglasses indoors.

Seriously, it's like wearing a raincoat to bed because it's raining outside. It's one fashion faux pas whose time is over, so thank you NBA, for doing us all a favor.

USAMU hosts women's clinic

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Action Shooting Team coordinated with the U.S. Practical Shooting Association for the USPSA to conduct Fort Benning's first women's USPSA pistol clinic at USAMU's Brinson Range Oct. 20-22.

"The U.S. Practical Shooting Association Ladies' Clinic was a great success," said USAMU Commander Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag. "They were very happy with the location of the venue and support provided."

According to the USPSA, Practical or Action Shooting is the fastest growing shooting sport in the world and started with law enforcement and security personnel in the U.S. who wanted a competition focused on practicality with their designated duty pistols.

The International Practical Shooting Confederation is the international governing body for action shooting. The USPSA is the national governing body for action shooting and runs the IPSC matches in the U.S.

Action Shooting involves shooting multiple steel and rapid-fire pistols from various positions with multiple shots. Courses incorporate drawing the gun from the holster, making magazine changes and requiring the shooter to manage scenarios in a safe manner. The time it takes shooters to manipulate a course is recorded along with hits. The time is then divided into the hits scored. The fastest, most accurate shooter wins.

Kay Micalek was the chief instructor for the USPSA Ladies' Clinic, assisted by Lisa Munson and former USAMU Soldier Julie A. Goloski.

"Kay's original goal was to improve the level of shooting for U.S. Team lady shooters at the World Shoot — IPSC World Championships — after losing overall titles to other countries' lady competitors, Goloski said. "She wanted a camp to take our top women and make them even better. The concept took off with many ladies wanting to learn from (us) into what it is today — three camps spread throughout the country," .

"Kay pioneered the ladies camp idea," she said. "It started last year and we hosted one at Kay's range in Shreveport, La. It was such a big success we added a few more this year with Kay hosting a camp at her range again and then taking it on the road for the Fort Benning class.

"The clinic is designed to take lady shooters to that next level. Kay and I have discovered that many ladies find it helpful to get a woman's perspective to progress with their shooting skills."

Instructors focused on fundamentals and back-to-the-basics type training the first day and then more demanding skills on the second day, which lead up to a mini-match on the last day.

"Even the best know the fundamental skills of drawing from a holster, magazine changes, strong hand and support hand shooting, and shooting on the move are needed to build the foundation to winning success," Goloski said.

The mini-match tested the skills the women worked on in the camp in actual stages of fire, Goloski said.

The course was the first event on the newly opened Brinson Range.

The range reopened for Oct. 19 after lying dormant for 17 years on the outskirts of Harmony Church. Several months ago, it looked like nothing but a wooded area off a tank trail.

"First we cleared out about 400 trees, then we moved about 50,000 cubic yards of dirt," said Shaw Construction Manager Michael R. Kremer Jr.

Shaw constructed four 75-foot long berms, four 150-foot berms and one 450-foot long berm, all about eight feet high and 30 feet wide.

"We loved the new Brinson Range," Goloski said. "Not only is the range beautiful, but the layout is superb.

"One of the big highlights was when a few tanks cruised by on the tank trail. It was a huge hit. It was also nice to see how much AMU has evolved."

Wild makes Thanksgiving healthier

National Wild Turkey Federation

During this year's Thanksgiving dinner, don't cheat yourself out of eating more turkey because you're trying to watch your weight. Instead, try eating wild turkey rather than a store-bought bird. What's the difference?

The domesticated turkey, which most Americans eat every year for Thanksgiving, isn't as healthy as the ones that hunters pursue in the spring and fall.

Most pen-raised turkeys live on ground feed and are given antibiotics to keep them healthy. Wild turkeys, on the other hand, feed on acorns, grasses, fruits and plants, which provide them with natural vitamins. And because they forage for what they eat, wild turkeys have less fan content than their domestic cousin.

"It's no secret wild turkeys, like any wildlife, tend to search for more nutritional food until they find it," said Dr. James Earl Kennamer, National Wildlife Turkey Foundation senior vice president of conservation programs. "They prefer acorns, seeds, small insects and wild berries."

"It's definitely much healthier to eat wild turkey," said chef Albert Wutsch, director of the Indiana University of Pennsylvania Academy of Culinary Arts. "Wild turkeys aren't given dietary supplements or bred for a specific color and flavor."

Just as there are genetic differences between wild turkeys and the tamed variety, there also are differences in the way they are cooked and prepared.

Wild game must be properly field dressed and frozen. Amy Minish, registered dietician, said it's important to field dress the wild turkey soon after the bird is killed.

She also recommended cooking the turkey at an internal breast temperature of 160 degrees.

"If you remember nothing else, remember the flavor of game meat depends partly on how it was handled in the woods, how it was hauled home and when it was cleaned," Keck said.

Body: Built drug free

"All natural is a good incentive, especially for children, with obesity being such a problem. It shows you can get fit and do it healthy," said Nancy Machado, who came into the event with her own challenge: a severely under-active thyroid. "This is for those who say you can't, you can."

Men's lightweight division champ Reese Brown, said he enjoys the competition, supporting a drug free environment. "It's based on what you can do on hard work and consistency versus what drugs can do."

On hand were INFB pros Rodney Helaire, a former Army sergeant, and Liza Laurence. Both agreed natural is best.

"There are no shortcuts," said Helaire. "It takes maturity and time."

"People can achieve healthy muscular physique, optimize health, enjoy the art of bodybuilding, keeping it as natural as possible," said Laurence, who was inspired to start bodybuilding after watching Conan the Barbarian.

Ken Wetherill, MWR Sports Director said the event supports Army values.

"Bodybuilding is a viable sport. It is our job to provide competition for all athletes. The ethics behind the competition tie into the Army's standards of good physical fitness and a drug free environment," Wetherill said. "People are doing this the natural way."

Wetherill said an accidental finding helped to resurrect the event; it has been more than four years since the last Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning competition. One day while digging around Doughboy Stadium storage he came across a trophy from an earlier competition, which gave him the idea to start Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning up again.

Lori Smith, MWR Fitness director, said they were pleased with the turnout, but disappointed there were no active duty Soldiers from Fort Benning competing.

Smith and Wetherill said there will be a competition next year with some additions, including a fitness competition. Helaire and Laurence will be back as well — they have agreed to help with classes and seminars on Fort Benning.

MEMBERS OF THE MILITARY ARE DISCIPLINED, HONORABLE AND TEAM FOCUSED.
JUST THE QUALITIES MERRILL LYNCH LOOKS FOR IN A FINANCIAL ADVISOR

We are committed to respecting the individual. We value integrity and encourage everyone to stand up for their convictions and we embrace teamwork. Members of the military relate to those values because they live them everyday.

BECOME A MERRILL LYNCH FINANCIAL ADVISOR

WHAT YOU CAN EXPECT AS A MEMBER OF OUR TEAM:

SUPPORT - Your local manager is committed to your success and helping you build your practice. You are also supported by specialists who have the widest range of product-area expertise in the business - expertise in areas such as financing, trusts, retirement, small business and philanthropy.

TRAINING - Our training program, one of the best in the industry, is designed to help you develop the critical skills and knowledge needed to build mutually rewarding client relationships. We believe training is integral to success.

A DISCIPLINED PROCESS - We have state of the art workstations and sophisticated software, where you can draw on the insights of our highly rated research to provide timely answers and personalized solutions for your clients.

COMPETITIVE COMPENSATION - We have structured a competitive compensation package to reflect your needs. The package includes salary plus opportunities for short- and long-term incentives, as well as an extensive benefits program.

If you have any brains at all, you'll be aware of the danger of depression.

Depression is a suppression of brain activity that can strike anyone. It's powerful, it's constant, and it makes life unbearable. It's also readily, medically treatable. And that's something everyone should know.

Unfortunately, some parents skip important step number three: Booster seats. Because their children have outgrown toddler seats, they mistakenly assume a safety belt is the next step. However, safety belts alone can be dangerous for kids who are under 4'9". Because safety belts don't fit these children properly, they can cause serious injuries to their face, neck and abdomen during a crash or sudden stop. In fact, kids 2-5 who wear the four safety-belt steps are not magical ...they're critical.

safety belts alone are 4 times more likely to suffer head injuries than kids in car seats and booster seats. In addition, children 4-7 who use booster seats are a whopping 59% less likely to be injured in a crash than those only restrained by a safety belt. Booster seats raise your child up so that a safety belt (designed for adults) will fit and protect them properly. Remember, 4'9" is the magic number. Until then, kids really need to be in a booster seat. Booster seats work like...well, you know.

In nature
we see reflections of our children.

The tree is the strong one.

The ocean, rambunctious and untamed.

The sky, the absolute dreamer.

And to choose the tree over the ocean
would be like choosing one child over the next.

An impossibility as large as the world itself.

ATTENTION

Bill Heard Chevrolet and its advertising agency have combined resources in an attempt to sell off its excess inventory. This inspection and sale is for the purpose of selling over-aged inventory, previous rentals and bank repos from their inventory. Inventory may vary due to market conditions and certain acquisitions. Approximately 300 vehicles are on the premises.

All used vehicles are offered at incredible prices. A $45 plus tax and license down payment delivers, on approved credit. $45 down. On approved credit for 72 months, 9.99% APR equals $18.59 per month per thousand dollars financed. Each vehicle will include a posted sale price amount to clear title. All guests are invited to make an offer. Vehicles will sell to the first buyer where purchase offer is approved. All vehicles have been inspected. Vehicles are in running order with current emission certificates. Clear titles are guaranteed. Every vehicle is accompanied with a limited warranty. See dealer for written warranties. Many late model units have existing limited factory warranties and will qualify for low finance rates, on approved credit.

Sugarland hopes for a sweet time at annual CMA Awards

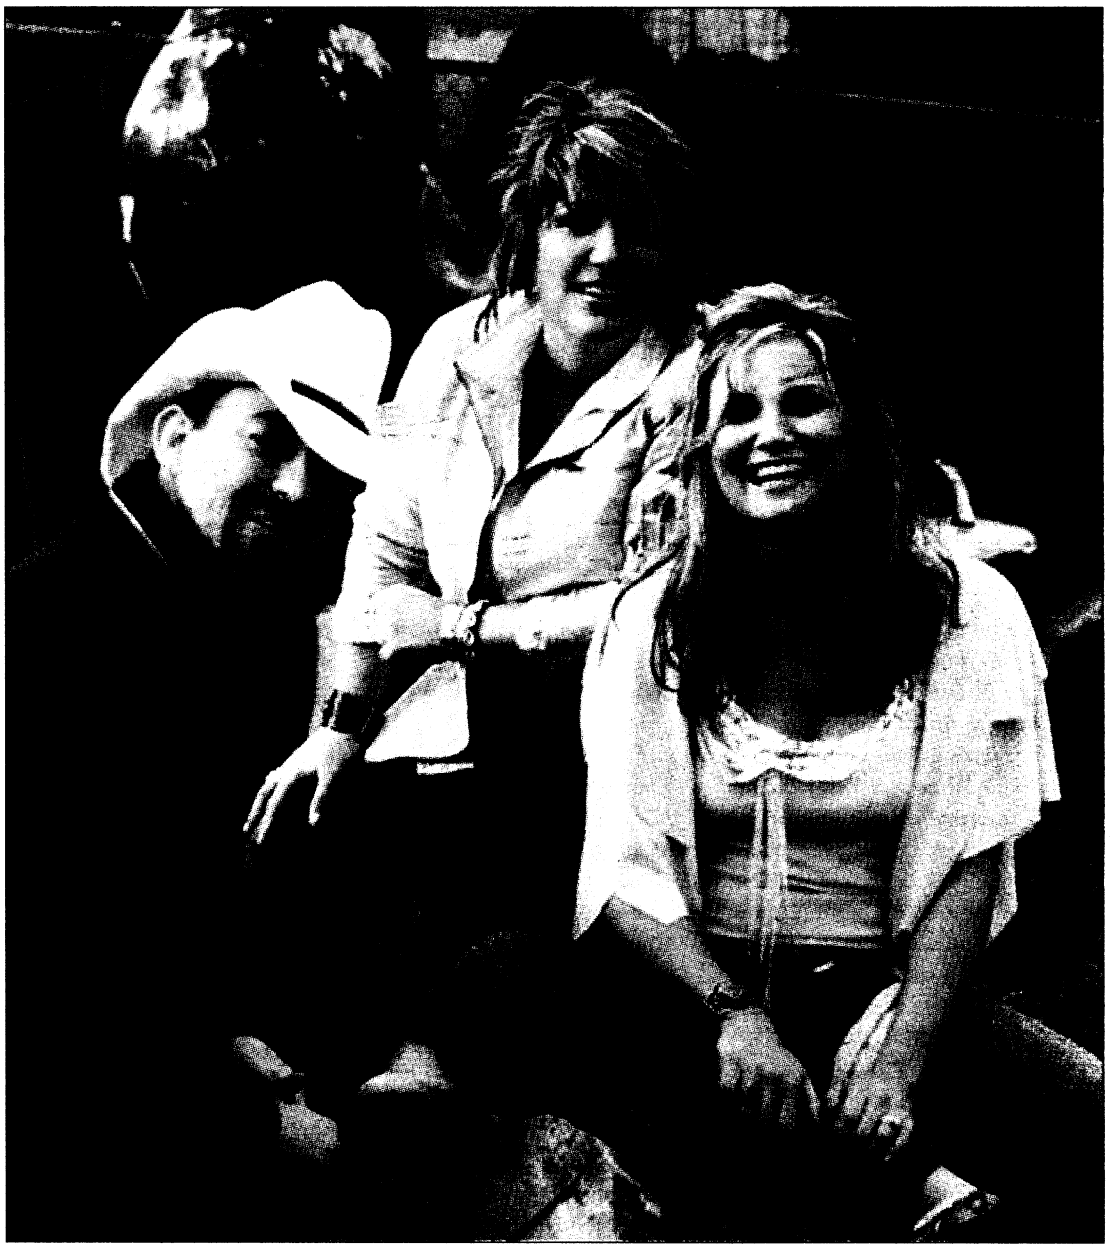
Perhaps cued by one of its hit songs, there could be Something More in Sugarland's immediate future: a Country Music Association Award.

One of the genre's most popular new acts of the past year could have a coronation of sorts Tuesday, as CBS televises the 39th Annual CMA Awards. Kix Brooks and Ronnie Dunn, named CMA vocal duo (as Brooks & Dunn) of the year a record 12 times — and up for that award again — return as hosts, not from Nashville, Tenn., this time, but from New York's Madison Square Garden. Sugarland is nominated for three honors: single of the year (for Baby Girl), vocal group of the year, and the Horizon Award for a country-music newcomer.

Others with multiple nominations include Brad Paisley and Lee Ann Womack with six each, and Toby Keith and Keith Urban with four apiece. Rascal Flatts, George Strait and Gretchen Wilson have three each; Big & Rich, Kenny Chesney, Sara Evans, Alan Jackson, Alison Krauss and Martina McBride are among those with two nominations each. Along with Sugarland, Billy Currington and Miranda Lambert also have scored their first-ever CMA Award nominations.

"It is super-exciting," Sugarland lead singer Jennifer Nettles said. "When you think where we were three-and-a-half years ago, then how quickly everything happened to culminate at this point, it's unbelievable. I had hoped we would be considered for the Horizon Award, since it's about new people. We also had anticipation because we were invited to come when the nominations were read. We thought, 'Surely they're not going to invite us here just to watch us crumble! They must know something we don't.'"

The confirmation of Sugarland as a Horizon Award contender both calmed and thrilled Nettles.



"Then when it continued, the vocal group nomination was a big surprise. What an honor, but that's still a small pool of people to choose from; not that many groups have been out there this year. The biggest surprise of all was single of the year. There were a lot of songs played this year, so that's a really big honor. It's like, 'Hey, we're new ... but hey, it's really working for us.' It's almost a bit intimidating. How do you continue that?"

Sugarland already is working on that. After performing on tours with Alan Jackson, Brad Paisley and Sara Evans, the band will come off the road in January to begin planning the follow-up to their platinum-selling debut album, Twice the Speed of Life.

"There's still all that working-your-way-up-the-ranks that has to happen," Nettles said. "We've gotten a great response and we're grateful for it, but you still have to get out there and pound the pavement and do the shows. You're able to see how other people work and run their tours, and you also get to see how the energy of those who work around them trickles down from the artists."

Before she teamed with fellow Atlanta singer-songwriters Kristen Hall and Kristian Bush to form Sugarland, Nettles had her own band named for her. Along with her earthy vocal quality, her infectious spirit is a Sugarland trademark, and she enjoys seeing audiences share it.

"Oh, yeah, man. They're on their feet, clapping and dancing and having a good time," she said.

Sugarland (Kristian Bush, left, Kristen Hall and Jennifer Nettles) is nominated at the 39th Annual CMA Awards, airing Tuesday on CBS.

"I think live performance is one of our strengths. We'd all been playing clubs and other places for many years before we got together, plus it's important that we give people the chance to come and forget their troubles for a while."

Another recent highlight for Sugarland was a tandem performance with the rock group Bon Jovi for a Crossroads concert special on Country Music Television.

"We had the greatest time," Nettles said.

"Their music was part of the soundtrack of my youth and many other people's ... in fact, the majority of America, I'd say. I think a lot of people who listen to country music now can say Bon Jovi is a part of their lives. It was such an exciting experience not only to be on stage with them but to sing their songs, and for them to sing ours."

With the future looking bright for Sugarland, Nettles said she appreciates the years of hard work preceding it.

"The thing I like about it is that it was so organic," she said.

"I believe it was the right time in the universe for us. We made a pointed decision to focus on country music, because I feel that's the best genre for the singer-songwriter right now, and we've tried to put a positive message out there.

"It's such a wonderful reward that this success is coming, especially for three people who had been doing this for so many years at a different level."

Get Rich or Die Tryin' — An orphaned street kid (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson) makes his mark in the drug trade, but finally dares to leave the violence of his former life behind to pursue a promising career in the music business as a rapper.

Also starring Joy Bryant and Benz Antoinee.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language, drug content, sexuality and nudity.

Zathura — Two brothers discover an oblong box in the park, which they dismiss as "just some dumb old game." The boys turn their attention away from the game's jungle adventure board game to discover a second game board inside with an outer space theme and a colored path leading to the purple planet, Zathura.

Mayhem ensues each time one of the boys draws a game card or rolls the dice.

Starring John Hutcherson, Jonah Bobo and Tim Robbins.

Zathura is rated PG for fantasy action and peril and language.

Derailed — Charles (Clive Owen), a successful ad exec and loyal family man, meets an alluring and sexy woman (Jennifer Aniston) on his morning commute. Flirtation quickly escalates into passion.

But this casual fling turns dangerous when a violent criminal confronts and pulls them into a dangerous plot.

Derailed is rated R for strong disturbing violence, language and sexuality.

Chicken Little — The movie picks up where the classic fable ends, namely after the pint-sized hero has caused big-time havoc when he mistakes a falling acorn for a piece of the sky. In the wake of the "unfortunate acorn incident," Chicken Little's name is mud in his hometown of Oakey Oaks.

Down but not out, he struggles mightily to restore his reputation and make his dad, Buck Cluck, proud.

Chicken Little joins the local baseball team despite the fact that he is barely bigger than a baseball himself.

Voiced by Zach Braff, Garry Marshall and Don Knots.

Chicken Little is rated G.

Jarhead — Jarhead, the self-imposed moniker of the Marines, follows Anthony Swofford (Jake Gyllenhaal), a third-generation enlistee, from a sobering stint in boot camp to active duty in Desert Storm, sporting a sniper's rifle and a 100-pound ruck on his back through Middle East deserts with no cover from intolerable heat or from Iraqi soldiers.

Swoff and his fellow Marines sustain themselves with sardonic humor and wicked comedy.

Also starring Peter Sarsgaard and Jamie Foxx.

Jarhead is rated R for pervasive language, violent images and strong sexual content.

Prime — Rafi (Uma Thurman) is a recently divorced 37-year-old career woman from Manhattan, and Dave (Bryan Greenberg) is a talented 23-year-old painter from Brooklyn who falls in love with her.

Rafi's therapist Lisa (Meryl Streep) is gingerly helping Rafi out of her post-divorce slump and through the urgent alarm of her ticking biological clock. Once Lisa accidentally discovers that Rafi's new boyfriend is, in fact, her son Dave, she finds it difficult to act the good therapist while hearing intimate details of her son's love life.

Prime is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue and for language.

The Weather Man — Popular Chicago weatherman Dave Spritz (Nicolas Cage) has a shot at the big time when a national morning television show calls him for an audition. Professionally, Dave is on top of the world, but his personal life is in disarray.

Dave's painful divorce, his dad's illness and trouble with his kids have him poised on the knife's edge between stability and disaster.

The Weather Man is rated R for strong language and sexual content.

Saw II — While investigating the bloody aftermath of a grizzly murder, detective Eric Mason has the feeling that it is the work of Jigsaw, the notorious killer who disappeared, leaving a trail of bodies — and parts — behind. And Mason is right. Jigsaw is at work again.

Starring Donnie Whalberg and Beverly Mitchell.

Saw II is rated R for grisly violence and gore, terror, language and drug content.

The Legend of Zorro — This movie is the sequel to the 1998 film The Mask of Zorro. Alejandro (Antonio Banderas) and Elena (Catherine Zeta-Jones) are married and have a 10-year-old son, Joaquin (Adrian Alonso). Though Alejandro continues to don the mask of Zorro to protect the poor and oppressed residents of the California territory from the greed of the overlords, he is torn between his duty and desire for a more normal life.

The Legend of Zorro is rated PG for sequences of violence, peril and action, language and suggestive moments.

Doom — Something has gone wrong at a remote scientific research station on Mars. It's a level-five quarantine, and the only souls allowed in or out are the Rapid Response Tactical Squad — hardened Marines armed to the teeth with enough firepower to neutralize any enemy — or so they think.

Starring Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Karl Urban.

Doom is rated R for strong violence, gore and language.

North Country — When Josey Aimes (Charlize Theron) returns to her hometown in northern Minnesota after a failed marriage, she needs a good job.

A single mother, she turns to the predominant source of employment in the region — the iron mines.

When Josey speaks out, it takes her farther than she ever imagined and leads to the nation's first-ever class action lawsuit for sexual harassment.

North Country is rated R for sequences involving sexual harassment including violence and dialogue, and for language.

Vol. 63, No. 46 Published in the interest of the Fort Benning community Friday, Nov. 18, 2005

The guest of honor at Saturday's God Bless Fort Benning rally is YOU. The local community and a number of VIPs, including country music star Tracy Lawrence, will honor Soldiers and their families at the Columbus Civic Center on Victory Drive. Events — all free — start at 10 a.m. and continue until 6 p.m. And anyone with a military ID can attend the Cottonmouths game afterward for $5. The game starts at 7:30 p.m. The Main Gate on Benning Boulevard will be closed all weekend.

Basic trainees conquered Eagle Tower Monday. A-12

IEDs claim Soldiers' lives

Siblings say he believed cause worth fighting for

Capt. Joel Cahill spent his life in good company. Today, he'll be laid to rest in good company.

Cahill, the commander of B Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, the unit Audie Murphy served with during World War II, was killed Nov. 6, when a roadside bomb detonated near his humvee in Ad Dawr, Iraq. Today, he'll be buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

Cahill

Cahill loved being a Soldier, his siblings told The Associated Press last week from their home in Gretna, Neb., where Cahill attended high school. He enlisted 15 years ago, before attending the University of Nebraska at Omaha,

Sgt. 1st Class Alwyn Cashe, 35, died Nov. 8 at Brooke Army Medical Center, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, from wounds suffered Oct. 17 when an improvised explosive device detonated near a Bradley fighting vehicle while the unit was on patrol near Samarra, Iraq.

Cashe, from Oviedo, Fla., was the fourth Soldier with the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, to die from the Oct. 17 IED attack. Staff Sgt. George Thomas Alexander Jr., 34, of Clanton, Ala., died Oct. 22, Sgt. Michael Tremain Robertson, 28, of Houston, died Oct. 25, and Spc. Darren Howe, of Beatrice, Neb., died Nov. 3 at Brooke Army

63rd Engineer Co. deploys

Mission includes building roads, access points

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

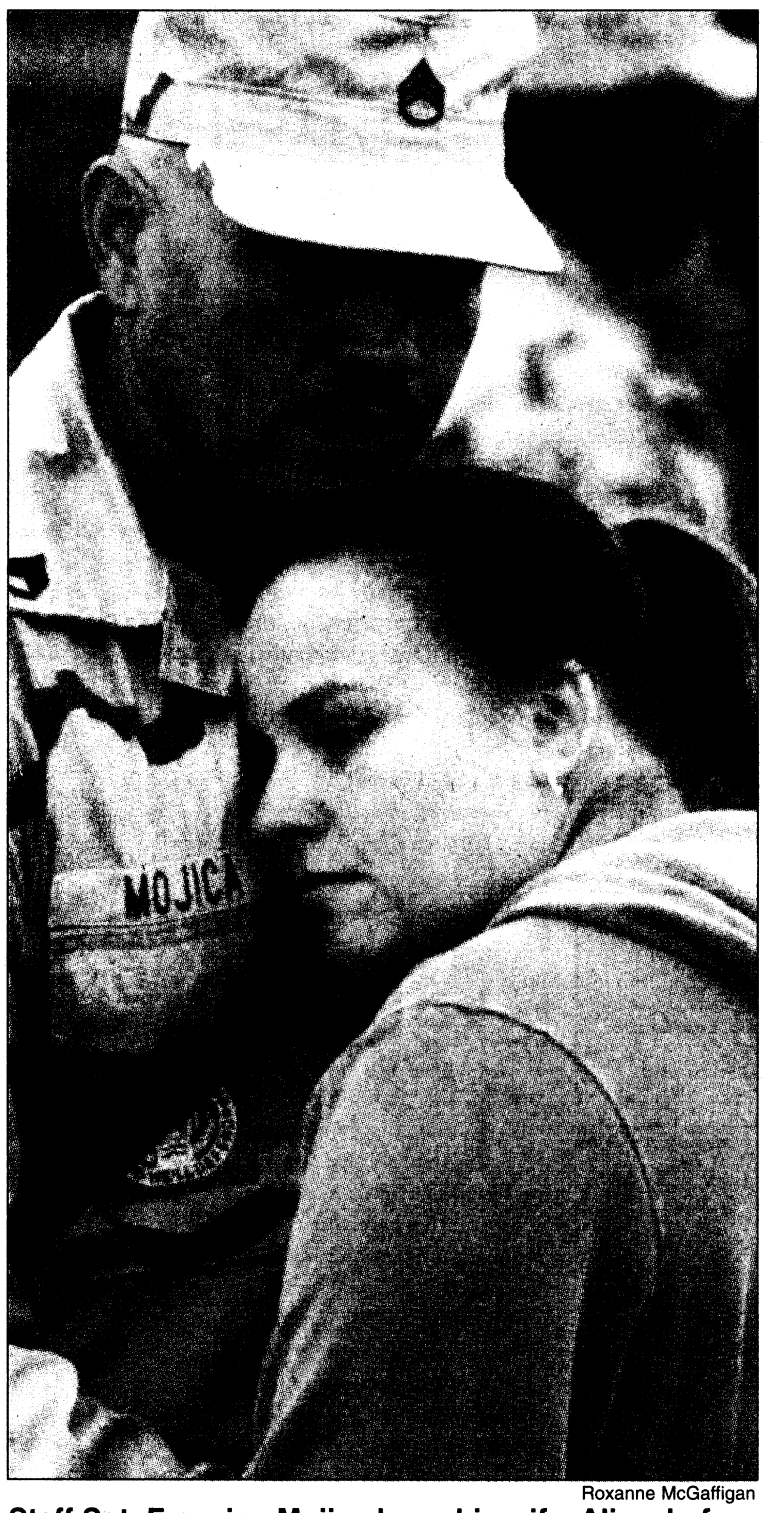
Emotions were high and strong as family and friends gathered in darkness to bid farewell to the 63rd Engineer Company Sunday morning. The Soldiers boarded buses and set off around 7:10 a.m. for a yearlong tour in Kuwait.

More than 160 Soldiers of the "Rugged Seahorse" company will be responsible for constructing roads, access points and building structures during the deployment, said Company Commander Capt. Edward Allen.

Rear Detachment Commander Capt. David Hoe said the engineers will be attached to a Navy engineer unit while in Kuwait.

And while they are not slated to go to Iraq, "they've deployed with the weapons and equipment needed," Hoe said.

The last time the unit deployed was early 2003 for six months in support of OIF.



Though orders for this mission did not come until early this summer, the speculation the engineer company would deploy started in the summer of 2004, Allen said.

"Everyone is ready to get there," he said.

There are more than 10 people still with the unit who deployed with the company in 2003. For many others, this is their second and third overseas deployment.

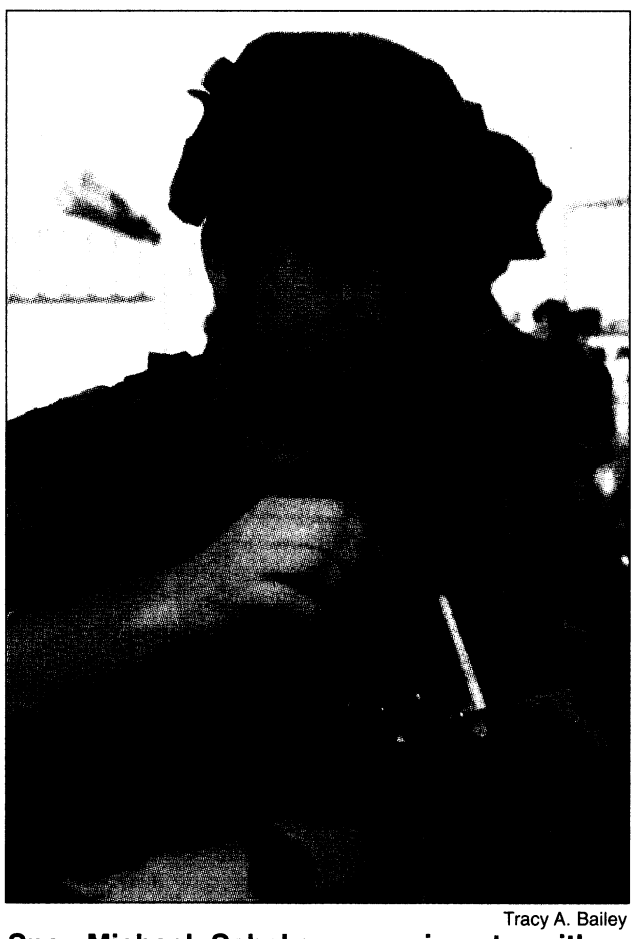
Armor move to begin in 2010, BRAC experts say

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Although the Base Realignment and Closure recommendations became law Nov. 9, the team working the issue at Fort Benning isn't planning for any significant changes.



"There's been a lot of dialog between us and Fort Knox," said Fort Benning's garrison BRAC planner Jay Brown. "We've been working on all the items contained in the BRAC recommendations since they were released on May 13."

The four main parts of Fort Benning's BRAC plan are the movement of the Armor School from Fort Knox, Ky., the consolidation of the 81st Regional Readiness Command's equipment, the consolidation of five Reserve activities on post and the transition of the Drill Sergeant School to Fort Jackson, S.C.

Brown said the group had to develop 16 functional area plans — assessing impacts on areas like housing and medical care — to become part of the installation's implementation plan.

"We realized, on looking at (BRAC) , that there's a lot more growth in the next five to six years at Benning than just BRAC," he said. "It's all going to happen between now and 2011, based on an overarching document called the G-3 Force

Tracy A. Bailey

Spc. Michael Schakey experiments with a tough-bot, a radio controlled robot used to investigate areas before Soldiers enter.

AAEF tests technologies

Tracy A. Bailey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Air Assualt Expeditionary force is testing more than 40 new technologies.

One of them, the tough-bot, a two wheel, camera-mounted, remote-control vehicle, is designed to save the lives of Soldiers.

"I like it. I like the fact that it can save lives," said Spc. Michael Schakey, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, and a veteran of OIF I with the 101st Airborne Division. "It has a multitude of uses and we find new applications for it everyday."

It's similar to a remote control car with the added feature of being able to transmit images to a small display screen that a Soldier straps to his wrist. The Soldier controls the tough-bot the same way as a remote control car. The tough-bot has two cameras on it so the user can see what it sees.

The tough-bot is small enough to maneuver around boxes, trash, objects and just about anything, Schakey said.

"The tough-bot can go under vehicles and look straight up into the undercarriage of a car," Schakey said.

Schakey said the tough-bot can be thrown into open windows and up the stairs. Once inside, the tough-bot can go from room to room to make sure that there is not an insurgent waiting to attack Soldiers.

Other technologies in the experimentation phase are the airship, the soldier radio wave, the small unit support vehicle, the Force 21 battle command system, and the tablet PC, which are tied together.

The airship, which looks similar to the Goodyear blimp, flies about 4,000 feet above the ground and can carry up to three people. In the experimentation phase, the airship has one pilot and carries a communications package.

Communications, Electronics Research, Development and Engineering Center is the lead integrator for the experiment. In September, CERDEC conducted the C4ISR On-The-Move Experiment at Fort Dix, N.J. This precursor to AAEF ensured many of the technologies participating in the experiment here were integrated into the network supporting the experiment, said Randy Zimmerman, team leader with CERDEC.

G THANKS

Filing my blessings, A-Z

Bridgett Siter

If we "give thanks in all things," as the Bible tells us to do, we eventually have to move beyond the "big stuff," like health and wealth and happiness, and recognize God in the details.

So this year at Thanksgiving, when you typically count your blessings, try something new — besides the deep-fried turkey. Try listing the things, in alphabetical order, that put a smile on your face. It's a bit more challenging, but if you learn to recognize God in the details, when you're running low on the health and wealth, you'll still have plenty of happiness.

I'm thankful for:

Apples, the green ones. America. And America, who gave us a horse with no name. The Army and the Air Force.

Brittney. Babies. Babysitters. Bedtime. Back rubs. Birth control.

Chocolate. Coffee. Chocolate coffee. Charlie Butler. Camping. Common sense. Common decency. Uncommon courtesy.

My dad. My dogs. Dancing. Diamonds.

Eggs over easy. The Eagles. The Everly Brothers. Easy listening. Early to bed.

Faith. Freedom. Family. Fox News, fair and balanced. A tank full of fuel. First class seats and coach fare. Free samples. French fries or freedom fries or fried foods in general.

Good genes. Good hair days. Good friends. Good food. Good times. Good God.

Harleys. HGTV. Humor. Hawaiian honeymoon with my honey doing the hula. (See: humor)

Indoor plumbing.

Jesus. John Wayne. Jacob. Good jeans. 'jammies.

Kokomo.

Love. Low-fat cheese cake. Laundry, clean and folded.

Mckenzie. My mom. My mom's mom. Microwave popcorn. Movie night. Moonlight. Marines. Music.

"No problem," "no charge" and "no worries."

Omelets. Okra, deep fried. Old hymns. Old Glory. Old Lori. Old Guard. Old Yeller.

Pizza. Pepperonis. Pepperoni pizza. Pizza with cheese. Pizza without cheese. Pizza with pretty much anything.

Quilts. Quitting time. Quakers in buggies and bonnets. Quaker oatmeal, microwaveable with cinnamon.

Rangers. Rangers. Rangers.

Soldiers. Sailors. Sean Connery. Space A travel. Surprises. Sunrises. Sunsets. Suntans. Sundays.

Tom Sr. Tom Jr. Teachers. Train rides. Comfortable underwear.

Veterans.

Whiskers on kittens (and warm woolen mittens.) Words. Witty words. Words of wisdom.

Xylitol and no cavities. Xmas.

*YMCA, the Village People, accompanied by a room full of wedding guests after the toasts (*substitute the Chicken Dance or the Macarena.)

ZZZZZZZs.

Quitting easier said than done, but there's plenty of help available

Monday night I heard an unbelievable statistic on the ABC World News — 80,000 women will be diagnosed with lung cancer this year.

Unbelievable. My mom was one of the 80,000 women. She died May 12, about two weeks after the diagnosis. Unbelievable. My brothers and sisters — me! — we still can't believe it.

Mom started smoking when she was a teenager and died young — 69. She tried to stop smoking many times — cold turkey, nicotine gum, patches — she managed to quit for about two years. But started again.

She knew cigarettes would kill her. Her brother died of lung cancer, too. Each cigarette was another nail in her coffin, she said.

Cigarettes shouldn't be the nails in anyone's coffin. Lung cancer is the second most common cancer and the number one cause of cancer deaths in the United States, according to the National Cancer Institute.

It's easy for a nonsmoker to tell a smoker to quit; I've said it a lot — "Just quit. It's bad for you. And you know it."

My daughter's most requested Christmas gift — asking her father and grandmother to stop smoking. One year she even bought nicotine patches for her father for Christmas.

Unfortunately it's not as easy for smokers to quit as it is for nonsmokers to ask them to quit. Perhaps they need to want to quit to quit.

The American Cancer Society Web site offers information, guides and advice on how to quit smoking. But to succeed in quitting, there needs to be a plan that includes making the decision to quit, a stop date and a quit plan, dealing with the withdrawal and staying "quit."

Thursday was the The American Cancer Society's 29th annual Great American Smokeout. Hopefully some took the day to stop smoking — for life.

Both MEDDAC and DENTAC have smoking cessation programs. For more information, call Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-3065 or 544-1255, DENTAC at 544-1503. The American Cancer Society Web site is www.cancer.org and the Quit Line at 1-877-270-STOP (7867).

Just quit. It's bad for you and you know it.

Post commander says take time to remember

The tradition of Thanksgiving calls us to express our gratitude for the blessings we have received. Since the first day when the Pilgrims and Native Americans sat together, Americans have gathered together as families and friends to worship and share in a meal to celebrate the bounty of goodness they have experienced during the past year.

Certainly, today we as Americans have much to be thankful for.

Yet, we live in difficult times: the ongoing Global War on Terrorism and the recent natural disasters have brought hardship, separation and loss to some Americans. The guarantee of our freedom has meant great sacrifice, even for the Fort Benning family.

If we look only at the events of the day, some may find it hard to be thankful. However, a wise man once said, "Thanksgiving is possible only for those who take time to remember; no one can give thanks who has a short memory."

I encourage you today to take time to remember. I believe you will find you have much for which you can give thanks.

Today, I encourage you to consider your blessings not just as something for you to enjoy, but as a means of a blessing to others. As you are able, share your abundance with others less fortunate. When you do, you truly will be expressing your thanks for what you have received this past year.

God bless you, and God bless Fort Benning!

— Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski

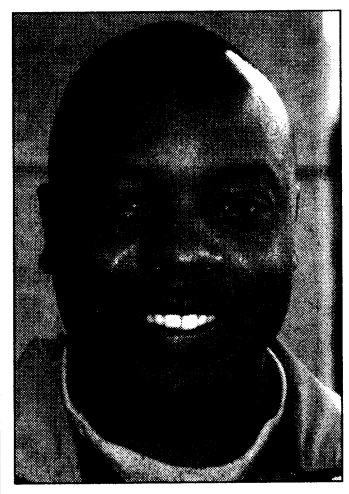
LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Coach will be missed

Hi everyone. At Stowers Elementary School, something strange has happened. Coach (Adam) Weinbaum has left for Iraq. We, the whole school, will miss him. I would like to tell you a little more about him.

As everyone knows, everyone has a good side and a bad side. I will tell you about Coach Weinbaum's good side and bad side.

The good side is he knows how to do cupstacking. And he has a sense of humor, and he's gifted and talented.



But the bad side is he doesn't know how to dance. We do warm-up dances in PE.

Coach Weinbaum is the best. And he rocks!

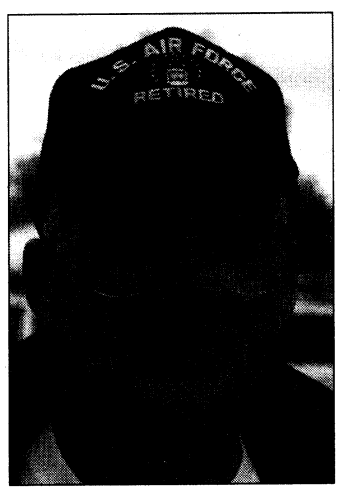
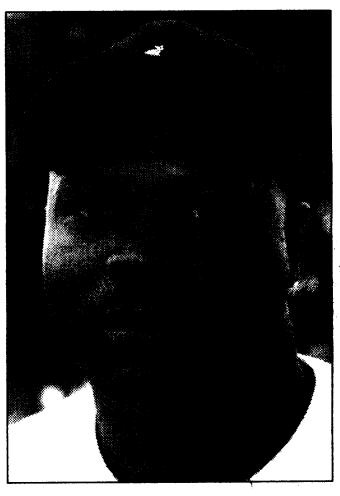
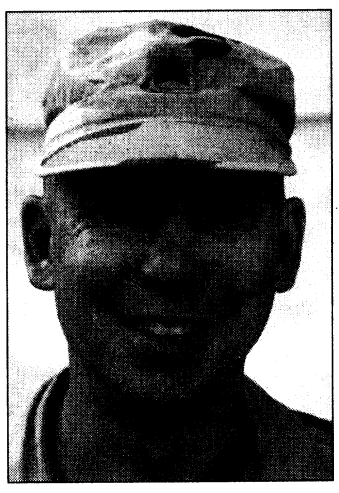
VARIOUS VOICES



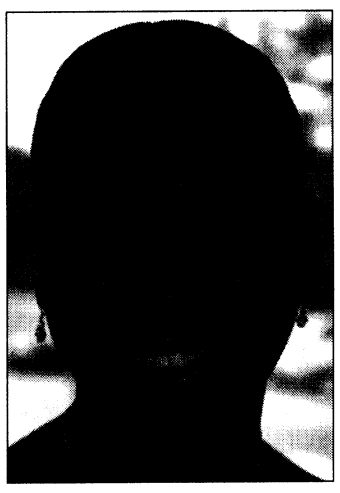
What are you thankful for?



Staff Sgt. Emmanuel McWilliams, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment — "I'm thankful for living in the United States. I love this country. I'm thankful for my family. I've been blessed to survive two wars and I'm looking forward to going back over and serving my country once I finish training up some Soldiers."



Angela Berry, family member — "I'm thankful for living in America. It's such a wonderful country. We are free to think as we like and do as we please under the guidelines that our forefathers provided for us, in the Christian way."

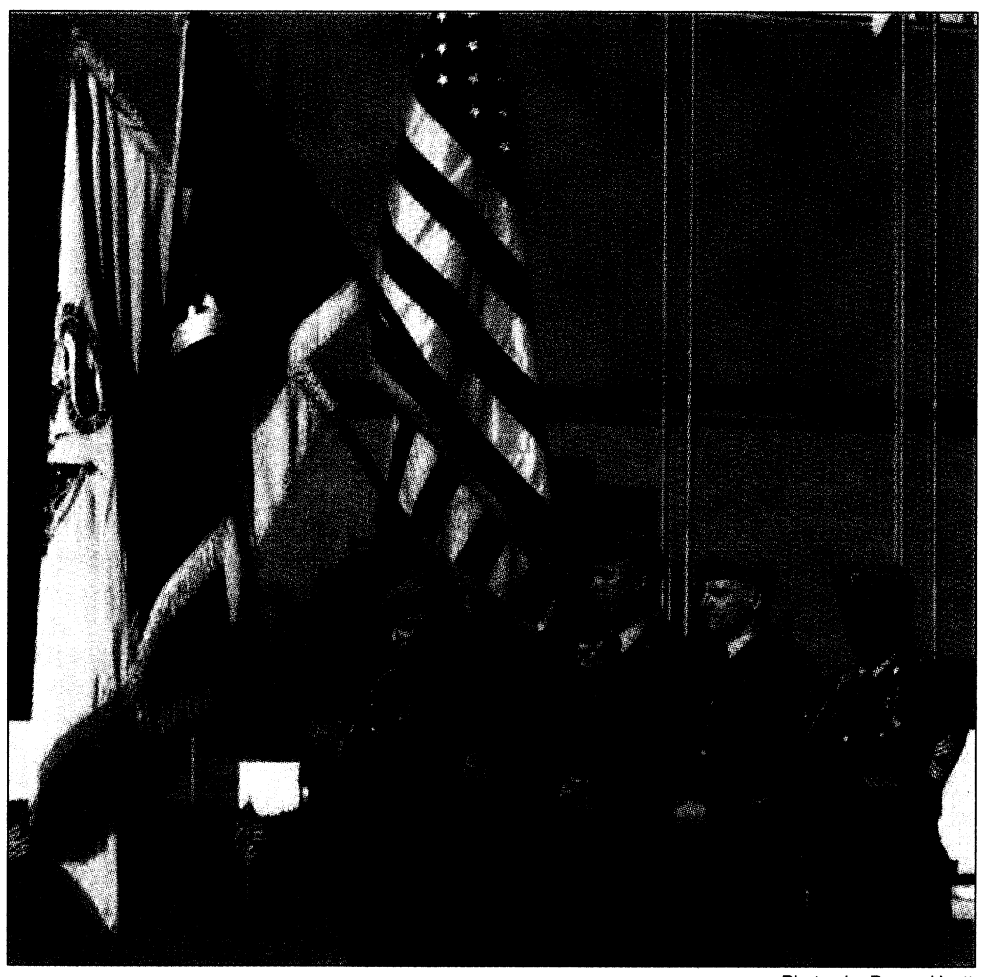


Retired Air Force Chief Master Sgt. Louis Nickerson, Columbus — "I'm thankful for so many things. Probably most for my country and my family."

Cortney Pope, Willis and Company employee — "I'm thankful for my wife, my family, my kids and the blessings God has sent forth to me and my family I'm thankful for our world. I think it's becoming a better place, slowly but surely."

Sgt. Robert Nakamoto, Medical Retention Battalion — "I'm thankful for the blessings of God in my own life, on the United States and on my family. I'm also thankful to be back from Iraq."

Tierra Chapman, family member — "I'm thankful for my husband coming home from Iraq, and I'm glad that he's back."



Kelly Wahler, family member — "I'm thankful for my children being heroes. I have four sons in the military, and I'm thankful to be here every day."

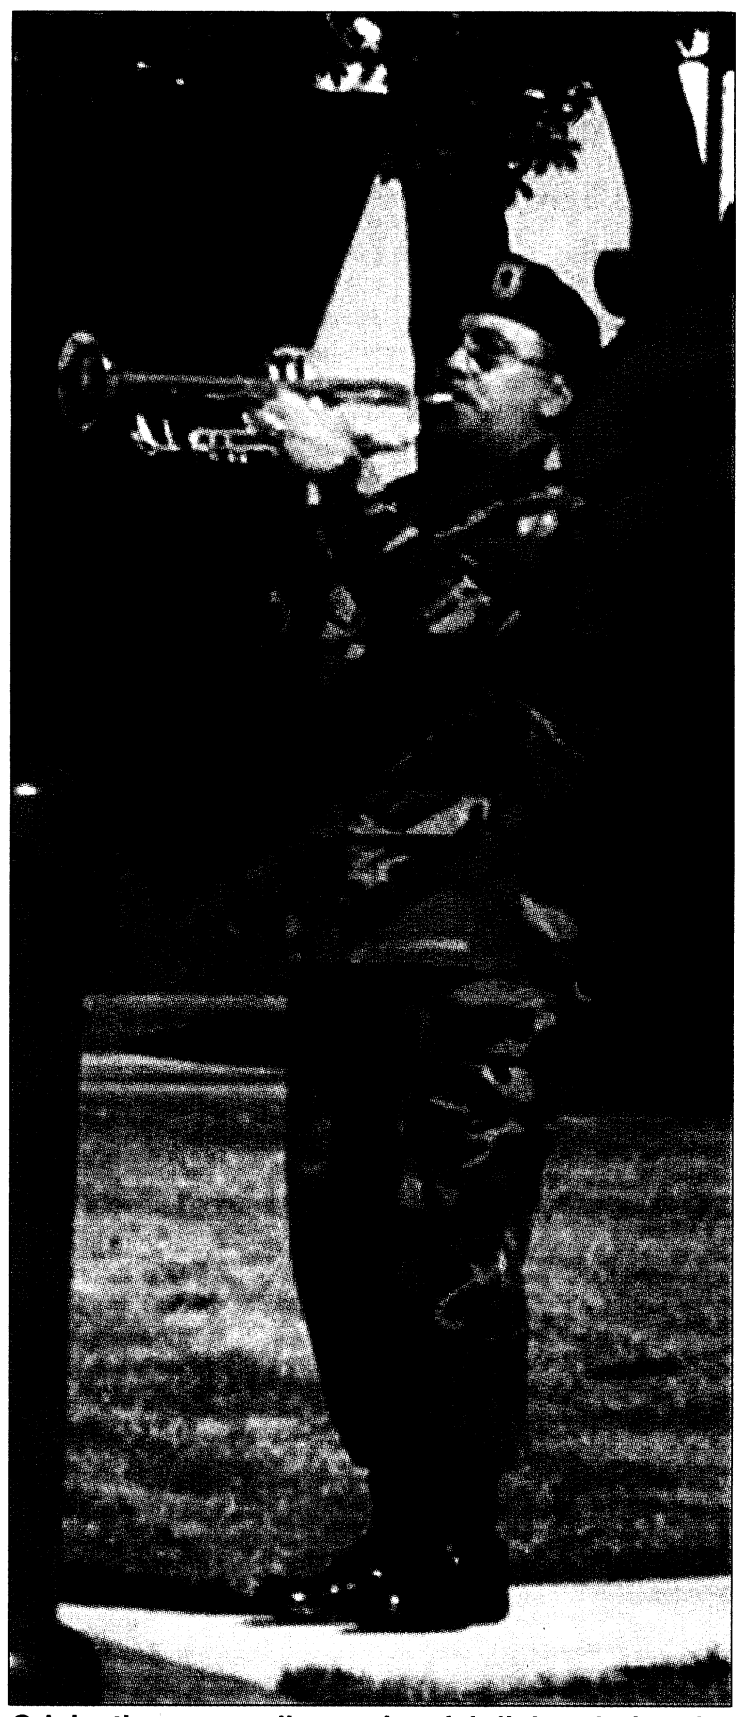
Fort Benning pays tribute to veterans



Remembrance for those who gave all to country

Fort Benning's Veterans Day ceremony took place in front of The Follow Me Statue at Infantry Hall Nov. 11.

Originating as a call to extinguish lights during the Civil War, Taps is sounded at funerals, wreath-laying and memorial services.

Under a clear, blue sky, dignitaries and guests assembled in front of Infantry Hall Nov. 11 to pay homage to America's military veterans.

"Veterans who gave their lives for the cause of liberty didn't celebrate a war. None of us do," said Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough, deputy commanding general.

"But they stepped forward when America called them to duty, and they fought for what was right in the hedgerows of Normandy, along the 38th Parallel in Korea, in the jungles of Vietnam and today in Iraq and Afghanistan," he said.

Among the guests were the families of Staff Sgt. Jason A. Benford, Pvt. John Henderson, Sgt. 1st Class David J. Salie, Staff Sgt. Jens E. Schelbert, Pfc. Marquis Whitaker, Sgt. Charles T. Wilkerson and Sgt. Obedaih Kolath, casualties of the war on terrorism. Asking everyone to stand in honor of the fallen Soldiers, Yarbrough thanked the families for their sacrifice.

"They didn't march to foreign shores with notions of glory. They went ... with one simple notion," he said. "That the people in all nations have a right to live in the world free from all tyranny," he said. "Some principles are worth dying for."

Citing freedoms of speech, assembly and the press, Yarbrough gave credit to the more than 1 million people who have died since the Revolutionary War defending and fighting for the freedoms enjoyed by the nation today.

"Because so many have sacrificed, we live to enjoy our legacy of freedom, and we'll pass that legacy to our children and our children's children," he said.

Columbus Mayor Robert Poydasheff also spoke at the event.

"This is a very important day," Poydasheff said. "I'm honored to be in the presence of heroes. As citizens, as veterans, the way we honor our Soldiers and their families is to support what they're doing.

Playing an acoustic guitar, Lt. Col. Steven Russell, chief of the Combined Arms and Tactics Division, performed a song he'd written as a battalion commander in the 4th Infantry Division. He said it was a tribute to the Soldiers who won't be coming home.

After the ceremony, retired Lt. Col. Michael Cerrone Jr., father of Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Michael Cerrone III, said he was inspired by the ceremony and impressed by the Soldiers he'd seen training in the Basic Combat Training Brigade and Airborne School.

"It was a great ceremony," he said. "I also saw all these young Soldiers getting the latest training and doing it because they want to. Makes me proud of this country."

Nov. 11 is the anniversary of the armistice, which was signed in the Forest of Compiegne by the Allies and the Germans in 1918, ending World War I.

It was not until 1938 that Congress passed a bill stating that every Nov. 11 shall be "dedicated to the cause of world peace and ... hereafter celebrated and known as Armistice Day."

The name Armistice Day was changed to Veterans Day by an act of Congress May 24, 1954, to honor the servicemen of all American wars.

National ceremonies for Veterans Day center around the Tomb of the Unknowns in Arlington, Va. To honor these men, symbolic of Americans who gave their lives in all wars, the 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard), keeps vigil day and night.

At the 11th hour on the 11th day of the 11th month, a color guard representing all military services executes Present Arms at the tomb.

The nation's tribute to its war dead is symbolized by the laying of a presidential wreath and the playing of Taps.

Although no wreath was laid at Fort Benning, a lone bugler standing off to one side played Taps to honor those who gave their lives in service to their country.

Combat veteran shares leadership thoughts

Former post commander guest speaker

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Retired Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza headlined the Combat Leader Speaker Program Tuesday in Infantry Hall.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski introduced Cavezza to the Soldiers, highlighting a 34-year military career that began in 1961 when Cavezza was commissioned as an Infantry officer. Throughout his career, Cavezza led Soldiers at every level, from platoon to corps. He served two tours in Vietnam and was the commanding general of the Infantry Center and School from June 1990 to October 1991. Among his decorations are two awards of the Silver Star and the Distinguished Flying Cross.

"General Cavezza is a true leader," Wojdakowski said. "You need to pay attention to what he has to say and gain insight from him."

Cavezza served as the Columbus city manager from May 1997 until he became the executive director of the Cunningham Center for Leadership Development at Columbus State University in January. He described his new position as the job he would have designed for himself immediately after retirement, and said much of what he is doing is concentrated on helping make leaders successful.

Outside the military, most programs focus on management, Cavezza said, so it's easy to understand why the civilian community has problems with ethics and values. In developing the programs, he said, good management practices were not the only important thing, and he tried to figure out where to start.

"I went back to my roots," he said. "I went back to (Field Manual) 22-100 — that's a good basis for leadership."

In the military, he learned by experience, Cavezza said. He got a lot of experience making mistakes, and he learned from a catch phrase that originated from the FMs chapters — be-know-do, is actually better rearranged into know-be-do.

"Know how to be a leader, be that leader, and do what that leader does," he said. "And we also need to understand the importance of assessing ourselves."

And good leaders, he said, need someone to challenge them, he said, citing a book about why great leaders don't take yes for an answer.

In the civilian community, Cavezza said, loyalty to the organization is not necessarily accepted, and selflessness — putting the welfare of subordinates above yourself — isn't practiced daily.

"But you understand that," he told the Soldiers. "You do it every day."

Like past guest speakers, Cavezza spoke of the importance of personal integrity.

"Like Mark Twain said, 'If you tell the truth, you do not have to worry about what you said.'"

And even a truthful leader is made, not born, he said. A leader's competency must be continually measured, evaluated and developed.

"If some think they don't need more leadership development — they're now ineffective," Cavezza said. And that explains the gap in the leadership in the civilian community, he said.

"A leader never stops learning," he said. "Change is constant and leaders effect change."

Another charter for leaders is their responsibility to establish the climate in the organization.

"Abu Ghraib should never have happened if the climate had been such that the Soldiers knew that behavior was not acceptable," Cavezza said. "When in charge, take charge."

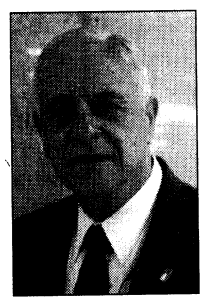
In making the transition to the civilian world after retirement, he said, he tried to use his leadership skills, not his management skills to understand what motivates people to work.

"Our country is crying out for leadership — people like you," he said. "In the age of the Internet, distance becomes irrelevant and leadership and education become dominant factors."

He said he realized his remarks would not be needed to motivate the audience, because they were already a well-trained and motivated group.

"You are the best — get better," he said. "You are motivated — motivate everyone around you. You are instruments of U.S. policy — serve well."

Those lessons, he said, are applicable to Soldiers of all ranks who are embarked on a journey toward success.



"Always strive to be better, because we are never as good as we are capable of being," he said.

"Don't stop at the first right answer. Ask yourself, 'Is this the best right answer?' Look for the special talent in your Soldiers.

"Develop a sense of presence — where to be and when to be there. Leadership in the decisive place at the decisive moment can influence the battle, and when in charge, take charge.

"As Ben Franklin said, 'There is no little enemy.'"

> "Always strive to be better, because we are never as good as we are capable of being. Don't stop at the first right answer. Ask yourself, 'Is this the best right answer?'"

Soldier waits 44 years for medal

Saves life of Soldier, survives freefall, returns to jump again

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Choosing to save another person's life while risking his own was a decision Spc. 4th Class John T. Slovenz made in a split second in 1961.

That act of heroism was recognized 44 years later on Eubanks Field at Fort Benning before an Airborne School graduation ceremony Nov. 10.

A fellow Camp McCall, N.C., Soldier lost the supporting lift in his parachute and collapsed onto Slovenz's canopy seconds after Slovenz stepped out of a transport plane at 1,200 feet for his 28th jump.

With his parachute hanging over one side of Slovenz's chute, Pfc. Charles E. Johnson was helpless.

Slovenz immediately began yelling instructions to the less-experienced Johnson, but Johnson wasn't responding.

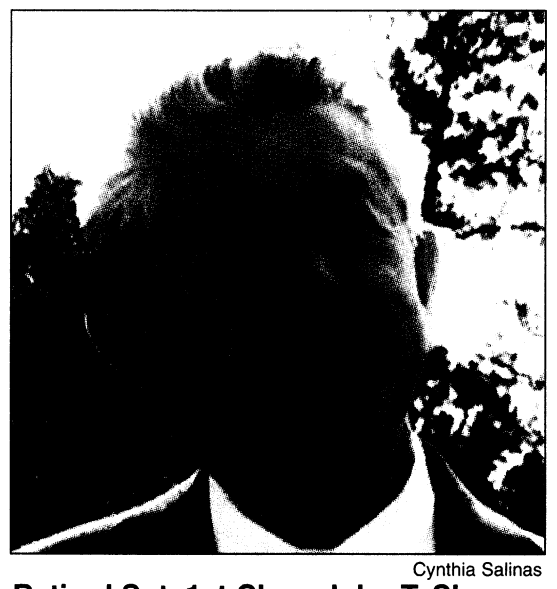
"I was concerned about Johnson's life," Slovenz said. "He was panic-stricken. About 250 feet up, he grabbed the skirt of my canopy, which inverted my canopy. Ironically, the air rushed from my parachute into his."

Thanks to the air that filled his chute, Johnson managed to slow his fall and land with few injuries.

Slovenz was now scrambling to save his own life. He hadn't deployed his own reserve chute earlier for fear of fatally injuring Johnson.

"Surprisingly, I wasn't scared. I was too concerned about Johnson. I started working on pulling my reserve chute," he said.

"I thought about my parachute training, and my instructors telling me to do a good parachute landing fall," Slovenz said. "So I put my feet and knees together and started praying."



With his reserve chute unfolding, Slovenz prepared for the worst as he quickly approached the ground.

"I needed about 50 more feet for the chute to open up properly," he said. "It took roughly six or seven seconds to fall 250 feet. On impact, witnesses said I bounced 15 feet in the air."

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Aaron Gelber said it was incredible Slovenz survived the fall.

Slovenz's left arm was embedded in the ground, elbow first, and his left leg passed under his body with the boot pressed against his face. Gelber said he did not expect the heroic paratrooper to survive.

Slovenz's back broke on impact, his pelvis broke in seven pieces, and his left femur was crushed from hip to knee.

Cynthia Salinas

Retired Sgt. 1st Class John T. Slovenz received the Soldiers Medal Nov. 10 for airborne heroism performed in 1961 when he was 21 years old and stationed at Camp McCall, N.C.

He spent 239 days in the hospital recovering from his injuries.

His superiors nominated Slovenz for the Soldiers Medal, an honor given to military personnel for heroism not involving actual conflict with an enemy.

"The award was processed in 1961 for saving a guy's life," Slovenz said. "But because I was reassigned to a hospital, the paperwork, everything, got lost and I never pursued it until just a few years ago."

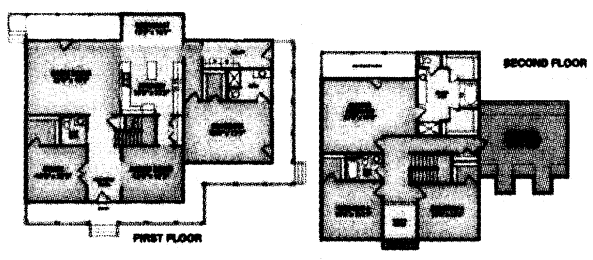
When finally healed, Slovenz was discharged from the Army, but two years later he re-enlisted and started jumping again.

"The Army thought I was crazy to come back in and jump again," Slovenz said. "They made me take a psychological test. I told them I wanted to jump out of planes because I'm a paratrooper and I like it. They finally said OK, so I came back in."

Slovenz stayed in, volunteered for two tours of duty in Vietnam and was awarded a Purple Heart before retiring as a sergeant first class in 1980.

A few years ago, Slovenz decided to follow up on the whereabouts of his Soldiers Medal in order to collect an increase in his retirement pay.

"It took a little while to get all the paperwork back together," he said. "But I'm patient."



Finally, just prior to the Airborne School graduation of D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, Lt. Col. Sean McCaffrey, battalion commander, presented Slovenz the Soldiers Medal he earned 44 years ago.

"I still think being a paratrooper is a pretty safe thing to do, especially today," Slovenz said.

"I'd jump again in a heartbeat."

Blogs can endanger troops, says Army chief of staff

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

This is not your father's war, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker tells troops in a videotaped message emphasizing proper Operations Security procedures and responsible use of the Internet.

The video is part of the Army's comprehensive OPSEC Action Plan that has Mobile Training Teams visiting deploying units to teach how improper information and photographs posted on the World Wide Web could endanger lives.

For instance, photos of combat operations and destroyed military equipment could provide the enemy with clues about U.S. vulnerabilities, said Maj. Michael Pate, the Army's OPSEC officer at the Pentagon.

OPSEC is not censorship

"This isn't censorship," Pate said about the OPSEC plan he had a key role in devising. "It's about striking a balance between freedom of expression and protecting sensitive military information." In World War II and Korea, it took a long time for information to move from the battlefield to the public, Schoomaker says at the beginning of his video. Today with the World Wide Web, it's immediate with the push of a button.

CSA: Info-tech explosion global

"We have an information-technology explosion that is global," Schoomaker said. "Our adversaries have the ability to take our utterances, our writings and our pictures and do all kinds of things to harm us."

Web logs, or blogs, are a venue where instances of unauthorized photos and some sensitive information have been inadvertently disseminated, Pate said.

MNC-I first with blog policy

So the Multi-National Corps-Iraq headquarters came up with a policy for the increasing number of Soldiers posting blogs in theater. Some of the Soldiers found that posting a periodic blog to the Web was easier than sending multiple e-mails to friends and family. Others have found a modicum of fame for their descriptive coverage of life in the combat zone. The MNC-I policy requires Soldiers to register their blogs through their unit chain of command. A list of blogs is maintained at the division level, complete with Web addresses and points of contact.

The policy also identifies established elements such as Army Web Risk Assessment Cells and Information-Assurance teams that assess Web sites and monitor information for compliance with Army policy. Such information includes classified info, casualty information before next-of-kin notification, info prohibited by the Privacy Act and details of incidents under investigation.

Commanders are able to develop their own OPSEC policy addressing blogs, Pate said, under the umbrella of Army policy and guidance.

OPSEC plan comprehensive

The Army's new OPSEC initiatives are comprehensive and range from individual to institutional training, Pate said. The Mobile Training Teams provide unit-level training, Pate said, to priority-one units scheduled to deploy. The MTTs come from the Army OPSEC Support Element established earlier this year out of the 1st Information Operations Command (Land) located at Fort Belvoir, Va.

MTTs recently visited the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) to provide OPSEC instruction to one of its brigade combat teams at Fort Campbell, Ky.

Smaller units can access OPSEC training modules through Army Knowledge Online, Pate said. He said users can click on center right of the AKO front page on "Army OPSEC News," sign in again using their AKO password and enter the OPSEC Portal.

The OPSEC Portal includes a number of PowerPoint briefings that Pate said assist in satisfying OPSEC training requirements.

HUGHSTON Orthopedic Hospital

"Giving up would've been easy. Neither one of us did."

Tommy Lee, Retired - US Postal Service

After thirty years of delivering the mail, Tommy never expected to be unable to move and hardly able to speak. A stroke that severe can diminish a patient's hopes for recovery, and they often give up. But not Tommy.

Great Expectations...

During intensive therapy in Hughston Orthopedic Hospital's Rehabilitation Center, Tommy learned to write, shave, eat, brush his teeth and operate a wheel chair with his left hand – difficult tasks for a lifelong right hander. The biggest change, however, was completely unexpected.

Extraordinary Outcomes.

For years, Tommy had led a quiet life, keeping to himself. But as his therapy progressed, he began engaging friends and family in conversation and laughter. His therapists believe the rehabilitation process stimulated under-developed brain centers. Tommy's explanation is simpler. "They made me keep on trying. I never gave up. Now I can talk and get around again"

Our physicians, nurses and therapists never gave up on Tommy either. We know that hard work, perseverance and great expectations change lives. We deliver that level of care 24/7, 365 days a year.

BRAC: Means growth for entire tricommunity area

File."

That document, and others, capture all of the changes Fort Benning and other installations will undergo.

In addition to BRAC, the installation faces changes in transforming into the modular force and the Integrated Global Presence and Basing Strategy, which adds almost 500 Soldiers to the post's rolls as a result of restationing of units from Korea and Germany

Brown said although Fort Knox loses the Armor School, it will actually grow overall in senior-grade permanent-party Soldiers and a deployable brigade

"It's going to be a huge gain for the (Fort Knox) community with the permanent influx," Brown said.

> "There's lots of interest. Everybody wants to know — 'Fort Benning, what's your number?'"
> Jay Brown
> Fort Benning garrison BRAC planner

Fort Benning's current population of more than 50,000 — which doesn't include contractors, Army and Air Force Exchange Service employees, and retirees — should grow by more than 14,000.

But, Brown said, that number includes almost 6,000 in transient students, and doesn't include a hard and fast number of family members, since there are several divergent methodologies for calculating that number.

"There's lots of interest. Everybody wants to know — 'Fort Benning, what's your number?'" he said.

"We have a good source document to fall back on for base numbers, but the estimates for family members could range from a low of 7,500 to a high of 10,000 depending on the methodology used."

Whatever the final number, the effective date is Oct. 1, 2010. That's the date Brown said all conditions should be in place for the Armor School to begin moving to Fort Benning.

"We believe we can do it earlier," he said. "But even if the money was available tomorrow, we couldn't begin construction."

Not only is there a significant difference from the $460 million estimated by the the Cost of Base Realignment Actions committee, and the "real estimates of $2 billion, Brown said, but there's an environmental impact statement that must be completed first.

"All BRAC construction has to fall under one (EIS) document," he said. "And we think that will take 18 months to complete."

Now that BRAC is law, Brown said, funds will become available for the projects — like construction of ranges and maintenance facilities for the more than 300 tanks that will eventually land on post.

But it may be January before post officials know just how much of the $2 billion will actually be reality.

A number of the growth-related projects are already underway, like construction to support changes to the 3rd Brigade Combat Team at Kelley Hill and the 75th Regiment as a result of the Army's transformation.

Brown's cross-functional team meets weekly and holds weekly video-teleconferences with their counterparts at Fort Knox.

Once a month, there's a VTC with representatives from the Army's Training and Doctrine Command.

Those members of the community who don't attend the weekly meetings are invited to a monthly update on the major BRAC activities.

Brown also presents the information at meetings off-post. He spoke in Marion County last week.

"The most value-added part of my job is making sure the message is consistent and the numbers are straight," Brown said.

"The numbers drive everything."

AAEF: Tests new technologies

The airship acts as an airborne receiver to give a seven to 10-mile range to the communications network that includes both voice and data, Zimmerman said.

The soldier radio wave is designed for the dismounted Soldier, Zimmerman said. The Soldier carries it on his back, and can communicate with Soldiers on the ground or in a technology-enhanced humvee and the small unit support vehicle.

"In addition to the communication piece, the radio also has a Global Positioning System attached to it," he said. "Once the Soldier turns it on, the guys back in the humvee can track where the Soldiers are located."

Currently in theater operations, the Soldier has the capability for voice communications with his squad, but the company commander cannot track him as he would be able to do with the soldier radio wave.

The small unit support vehicle and the humvee, both of which are technology enhanced, provide the mobile battle command system, the FBCB2. This upgraded computer system is the command and control system for the platoon leader and company commander to communicate with Soldiers and vehicles on the ground. The company commander sits in the back of the SUSV with the FBCB2 and has the ability to collaborate and share plans with his leaders in other vehicles or the squad leaders on the ground who have the tablet personal computer — another emerging technology, Zimmerman said.

The tablet personal computer and the FBCB2 are the same, the tablet is a hand-held computer similar to a lap top in size, and they interface with each other.

Tracy A. Bailey

The tough-bot is a two-wheeled, camera-mounted, remote controlled vehicle.

For example, the company commander in the SUSV can instruct the platoon leader on the ground (who has a tablet personal computer) to move away from an area by using his finger to draw a line on the FBCB2 (from point A to point B) Zimmerman said.

"This is a four-year experimentation campaign and we are in year two," Zimmerman said. "We figure out what works and help the force today and what we can do to help the force of tomorrow. Its all about saving Soldiers lives."

63rd: Deploys

Mojica and her husband, Staff Sgt. Francisco Mojica, have been married, most of that time has been spent apart.

"One day, we'll spend our anniversary together. I just hope that he comes back safe," Alice said.

Spc. Teresa Conley left behind her 15-month-old daughter, Brianna, and her husband, Maurice.

"We don't have a choice but try to get the mission over with, and come home," she said.

Conley said her husband, who is prior service, returned in April from a deployment.

"We've been separated four times in the last two years." This is Conley's third deployment in two years.

"What we are doing is positive," said 1st Lt. Kimberly Cowlin, a platoon leader.

Spending her parting moments with her mother and aunts, Cowlin kept in mind the dangers of deployment, asking "Everyone, pray for my company."

U.S., Iraqi soldiers begin Operation Steel Curtain

Army News Service

Iraqi and U.S. Soldiers, together with Marines in Regimental Combat Team-2, began a new phase of "Operation Steel Curtain" Monday by entering the town of Ubaydi, located on the banks of the Euphrates River about 20 kilometers from the Syrian border.

Many of the terrorists who are now fighting in Ubaydi are suspected to have fled from Husaybah and Karabilah, the first two cities that were secured by Iraqi and coalition forces at the beginning of the operation last week, officials said.

Part of Ubaydi was cleared by Iraqi and coalition forces Monday. The section of the city known as Old Ubaydi has been cleared and now the Iraqi army and coalition forces are focusing on clearing the al-Qaeda in Iraq stronghold of New Ubaydi.

While the fighting has been sporadic, it has been characterized by commanders on the ground as some of the heaviest since Operation Steel Curtain began Nov. 5. Intelligence reports indicate that the strong resistance to the Iraqi and coalition push into the city is due in large part to the fact that terrorists believe they are trapped and have nowhere else to go.

An estimated 80 terrorists have been killed since Iraqi and coalition forces entered the city Monday morning. Most of those terrorists were targeted by coalition air strikes, although some were killed in direct small-arms engagements on the ground, officials said.

Iraqi and coalition forces continue to clear the city house-by-house, occasionally encountering buildings that are rigged with explosives and triggered to detonate upon entering.

Numerous weapons caches have also been seized, to include several that contained suicide vests and bomb-making material. Overall, there have been 36 weapons caches found and destroyed during Operation Steel Curtain.

Iraqi and coalition forces have also discovered numerous improvised explosive devices and mines during the operation, the vast majority of which were destroyed by coalition forces before they could inflict any damage, officials said.

The precise locations of many IEDs were revealed by detained terrorists, officials said.

They said a total of 107 IEDs and mines have been discovered during the course of Operation Steel Curtain.

Several detainees were captured trying to sneak out of the area by crawling among a flock of sheep.

Overall, there have been about 150 terrorists detained since Operation Steel Curtain began.

As Iraqi forces entered Ubaydi Monday, a suspected car bomb blocked their advance. The car was engaged with a round from an M-1 A1 tank.

Marine Staff Sgt. Jason D. Becksted

Iraqi soldiers with 3rd Battalion, 2nd Regiment, 7th Division, patrol a field along the Euphrates River.

The blast from the tank initiated a secondary explosion powerful enough to throw the car onto the roof of a nearby building.

Iraqi forces also discovered an active minefield southeast of Husaybah, which they are working to reduce for the safety of the local citizens.

About 1,000 Iraqi soldiers and 2,500 U.S. Marines, Soldiers and Sailors are participating in Operation Steel Curtain.

The offensive is part of the larger Operation Sayaid (Hunter), officials said, designed to prevent al Qaeda in Iraq from operating in the Euphrates River Valley and surrounding area.

"The objective of Operation Steel Curtain was to restore security along the Iraqi-Syrian border and support the coalition's efforts along the Euphrates River Valley," said Maj. Brandon Robbins, operations officer, Multi-National Corps–Iraq.

"Ultimately our intent is to assist the ISF in establishing a permanent presence on the border and to set the conditions for a safe and secure national election Dec. 15," Robbins said.

Other significant operations conducted this week include Operation Knockout in Baqubah where Ministry of Defense and Ministry of Interior forces detained 370 suspected terrorists.

In the northwestern region of Iraq, Operation Wolf Stalk 2 continues to disrupt terrorists' ability to carry out attacks in western Ninevah, while reconnaissance operations in northwestern Ninevah are identifying the needs of local residents and supporting legitimate economic and civic ventures.

"Several operations are out in sector to identify locations coalition and the Iraqi Transitional Government can focus on future stability and reconstruction efforts," Robbins said.

In Baghdad, Operation National Unity, which began this summer, is dedicated to increasing the capability of the Iraqi security forces to control the security environment and decreasing the number of vehicle-borne improvised explosive devices in the city.

Operation Open Window, in the central south region of Iraq, continues to pave the way of handing responsibility of the area to the 8th Iraqi Division.

"The way ahead is clearer," Robbins said. "Senior leaders of MNC-I have integrated with Iraqi Ground Forces Command and continue to look forward to those critical points where ISF will sustain themselves and take over battle space responsibilities to keep up tactical and operational momentum."

Insurgents weapons helping arm Iraqi forces

Refurbishing AK-47s saves Iraqi, U.S. money

Pfc. Joshua R. Ford
Army News Service

Some might ask why the U.S. forces are refurbishing old enemy weapons, and the answer is: the AK-47s are being used to arm the Iraqi army, police and security forces, putting the insurgents weapons to use against insurgents.

When the Iraqi police were being formed, they were short on weaponry, and this program is solving the shortage problem, said Chief Warrant Officer Pedro Munoz, armament and repair technician, 3rd Forward Support Battalion, 1st Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division. His unit's armory refurbished 88 AK-47 automatic rifles.

It saved the Iraqis money, since they didn't need to buy new AK-47s, said Spc. Philipp Arthur, small arms repairman, 3rd FSB, 1st Bde., 3rd Inf. Div.

Explosives ordnance disposal teams, U.S. military patrols and civilian contractors find enemy weapons caches, and the proper authority will bring the weapons found in the cache to the arms shop for repair, Munoz said.

"I don't see why we should destroy the weapons we find when we can easily arm the Iraqi forces with those weapons," Arthur said.

"In helping them we are helping ourselves, because the program is saving the U.S. and the Iraqi army money and bringing Iraq one step closer to being self-sufficient," Munoz said.

"We were actually trained by a Special Forces unit at Forward Operating Base Danger," Munoz said. "They gave us a base on how to approach the Iraqis and at what level we can train them."

"We used the Special Forces training and trained the Iraqis how to professionally clean, operate and maintain the weapon systems they use," Arthur said.

"We also taught them basic skills that all U.S. Soldiers should know," he said.

"Before our training, the Iraqis were cleaning their weapons with gasoline and kerosene, which helps the weapon acquire more dirt and deteriorates the weapon's metal," Arthur said.

The learning isn't one way, Munoz said.

"The Iraqis have taught us just as much as we taught them during training," Munoz said.

Some of the things the Iraqis taught the arms workers were how to look for booby traps on AK-47s and how to disassemble the weapons faster.

"I never thought I would be working on these weapon systems when I arrived here," Arthur said.

AK-47s are not the only foreign weapons the armorers have had to fix. They also work on the RPK, SKS and PKS weapon systems.

> "It feels good to take weapons out of insurgent's hands and put them into play against them."
> Spc. Philipp Arthur
> Small arms repairman, 3rd FSB, 1st BDE, 3 ID

The 3rd FSB arms room Soldiers have fixed hundreds of weapons the Iraqi forces are using today, Arthur said.

The first time the Soldiers were tasked with this mission, an explosive ordnance disposal team brought 453 foreign weapon systems to 3rd FSB armory. Of these, 420 of them were fixable.

"Sometimes you can fix most of the weapons, other times you can only fix some of them. It all depends on the condition the weapons are in when you receive them," Arthur said.

"Cross-training everyone in the shop has helped out a lot," said Spc. Evan Lewis, a fire control repairman for 3rd FSB.

Lewis works on tank weapons systems, but since cross-trained, he has been able to help train the Iraqi army.

"It feels good to take weapons out of insurgent's hands and put them into play against them," Lewis said.

Cahill: Believed in cause

where he earned an ROTC commission in 1999. Since then, he deployed four times, twice to Afghanistan. He was awarded the Bronze Star, Purple Heart and Soldiers Medal.

Cahill's family had begun to think he was invincible, said his sister, Erin Christenson. At one point, he told his mother to quit worrying about him.

He said "the only thing that could kill me is an IED," Christenson said.

"He strongly believed he was doing the right thing and that there was a cause," she said. "I asked him, 'Do we really need to be there?' and he said he needed to do his job to keep his girls safe in the future. He loved his job, and he loved what he did."

> "I asked him, 'Do we really need to be there?' and he said he needed to do his job to keep his girls safe in the future."
> Erin Christenson
> Sister of Capt. Joel Cahill

The Army was Cahill's passion, his brothers said, but his family was his first love.

"He just loved being around family and his wife and girls. His face would light up around the kids," said Jason Cahill.

Carter Cahill, Joel's nephew, dug out a box of medals and patches last week and the letter that accompanied them, a letter from his uncle explaining what each patch represented, how each medal was earned. He read and reread the letter, said his father, Larry.

"Carter idolized his uncle," said Larry, the oldest of the four Cahill boys. "We'll miss everything about him. I hope people consider him the hero he is. He laid his life down for his country and for us."

Besides his siblings, Cahill is survived by his wife, Mary, daughters, Faith, 4, and Brenna, 3, and his parents, Larry and Barbara Cahill, of Nebraska.

Cashe: 'Was true hero'

Medical Center.

Cashe was a hero, said Lt. Col. Gary Brito, commander of 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt.

According to the narrative for the Silver Star, which was awarded posthumously, Cashe was drenched in fuel after the IED blast ignited the Bradley fighting vehicle's fuel cell. After the vehicle came to a stop and erupted in flames, Cashe helped the driver out of the hatch and extinguished his flames.

In the back of the Bradley were six more Soldiers and a translator. Flames engulfed the Bradley.

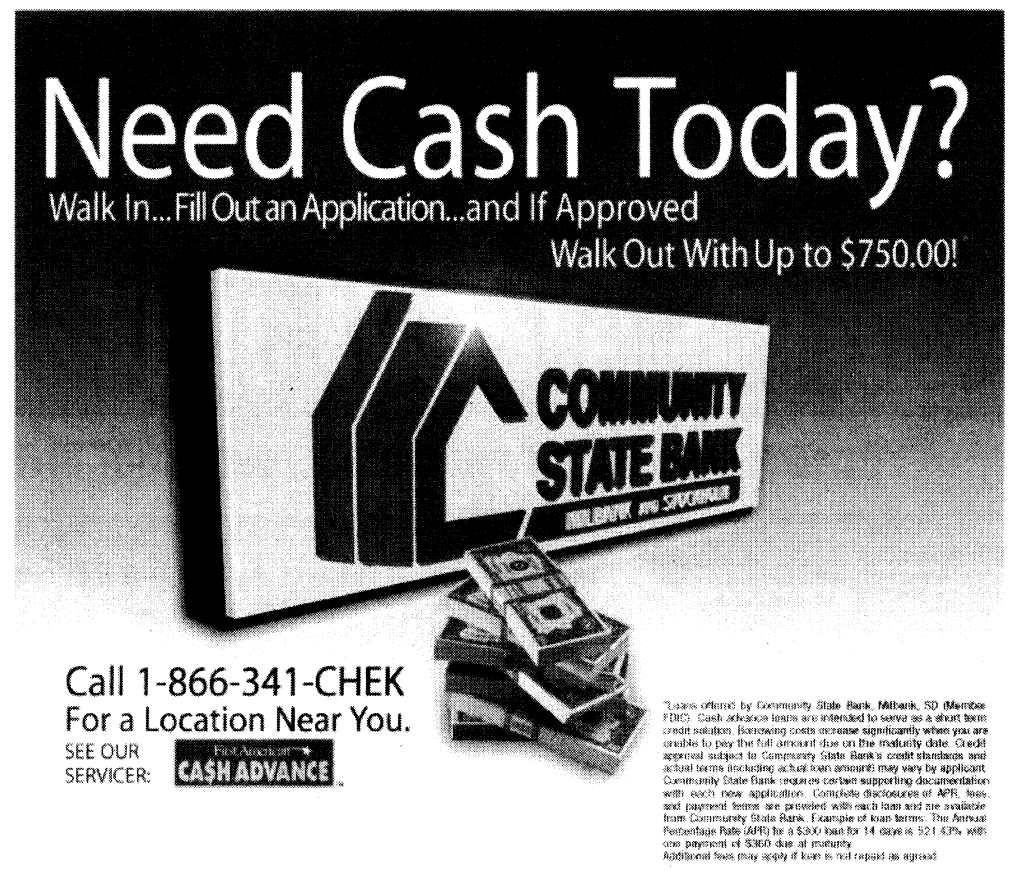
"Cashe rushed to the back of the vehicle, reached into the hot flames and started pulling out his Soldiers," the narrative read. "The flames gripped his fuel-soaked uniform. Flames quickly spread all over his body.

"Despite the terrible pain, Cashe placed the injured Soldier on the ground and returned to the burning vehicle to retrieve another burning Soldier; all the while, he was still on fire."

Cashe was badly injured, yet he rescued his Soldiers from a burning vehicle, Brito said.

"Cashe was a hero in the truest sense of the word, for his actions clearly prevented several Soldiers from dying that night," Brito said.

According to Dr. (Maj.) Mark Rasnake, 332nd Expeditionary Medical Group, who treated Cashe at Balad Air Base, Iraq, Cashe was hero who went back into the burning vehicle to get Robertson, his friend, out.



"In a testimony to his love for his Soldiers and his strength in character and spirit," Brito said, "Cashe fought to the end.

"I most admired Cashe's bravery," Brito said in his remarks during the memorial service in Iraq.

"Being in combat strikes fear in all of us at times, but Cashe conquered that fear to take care of troops. He always led from the front and always put the welfare of his Soldiers first. Cashe was doing exactly that, putting the welfare of his Soldiers ahead of his own when he reached through the flames and heat to save his men.

"A true warrior, a true leader, a true hero."

Cashe is survived by his wife, Tamara, daughters Alexis and Lajada, and son, Andrew.

Trainees overcome obstacles, overcome fears

Training tests Soldier confidence

Pvt. Christopher Curcio, a 21-year-old Soldier from Broomfield, Colo., has survived many challenges. His father's death, when Curcio was 4, left his mother emotionally detached, he said. Cucio then lost his mother when he was 16.

Curcio and his sister were sent to live with his aunt, but he accepted the responsibility of raising his younger sister.

Not having his parents available when he was growing up created a sense of insecurity, Curcio said. He developed "trust issues."

Monday was no ordinary day of training for Curcio. He had to put his hands in the fate of his equipment, in the hands of his drill sergeants — he had to trust them.

Curcio and the Soldiers of D Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, spent the day on the Eagle Confidence Tower, a 40-foot wooden structure laden with ropes, nets — enough to intimidate some and instill fear in others.

Facing one of his greatest challenges — the fear of heights — Curcio was nervous as he ascended a tall, wooden ladder. He stopped for several minutes before he reached the top.

Then, over the top of the wall, his legs appeared.

Drill sergeants were waiting at the top to encourage Curcio. Still, it took some time to build up his mettle, before he clenched the rope and started his descent, his shoulders slightly hunched.

Curcio cautiously climbed down in an "L"-shaped position, his left hand holding onto the rope in front of him, his right hand, serving as a brake, clenched tightly to the small of his back.

There was silence from his peers in the bleachers until Curcio reached the bottom, where he was met with congratulatory praise. Curcio was obviously excited.

"I was nervous. I just overcame a big fear in my life," he said.

Curcio and his buddies passed a test in trust and confidence, said Staff Sgt. George Wommack. The Eagle Confidence Tower builds camaraderie and brotherhood. They'll need it when they go to combat, he said.

Of the 214 students, many will see deployment in the next year, Wommack said.

This confidence boost, and lesson in listening to leadership, will prepare him for battle, said Curcio, who credited the drill sergeants for encouraging him.

"They line you up so you know what to do," he said. "I don't want to endanger my buddy."

Sgt. 1st Class Jon McSherly, acting first sergeant of D Co., said the tower exercise is designed to do more than help the Soldiers overcome the fear of heights. The course "helps with self confidence when they go into battle."

Capt. John Hamilton, company commander, said up to this point the Soldiers have been getting acclimated to the Army; this is the first 'fun' thing they've had to do.

"It instills confidence and teaches then to trust their equipment and drill sergeants," he said.

The Soldiers said they enjoyed the tower experience, though it was challenging.

"This is fun. It challenges you mentally and physically," said Pvt. Max Reyers.

"It instills confidence and teaches them to trust their equipment and their drill sergeants."

ROCK SOLID BACKUP

WWW.TRUCKSCHOOL.COM WWW.EARTHMOVERSCHOOL.COM

Rock solid backup jobs offer a financial failsafe for families separating from the military without a job, marketable skills, a college degree, or funds to cover unemployment periods. Many veterans leave active duty without a backup plan. I know because I ask them as they attend my briefs every week. Hundreds call me within 24 months of leaving the military mainly because things did not go the way they thought. Prior-Planning-Prevents-Poor-Performance is what helped me survive twenty -one years on active duty. Stuff happens! Be prepared! Men and women can learn to operate semi tractor-trailers, heavy equipment, secure a CDL, and receive job placement assistance before ETS/ DOS/EAOS. There are shortages in the transportation and construction industry and I can assist those needing to secure access to these rock-solid jobs. The commercial driver's license is powerful in the hands of the average inexperienced but qualified operator. *License and certification required.

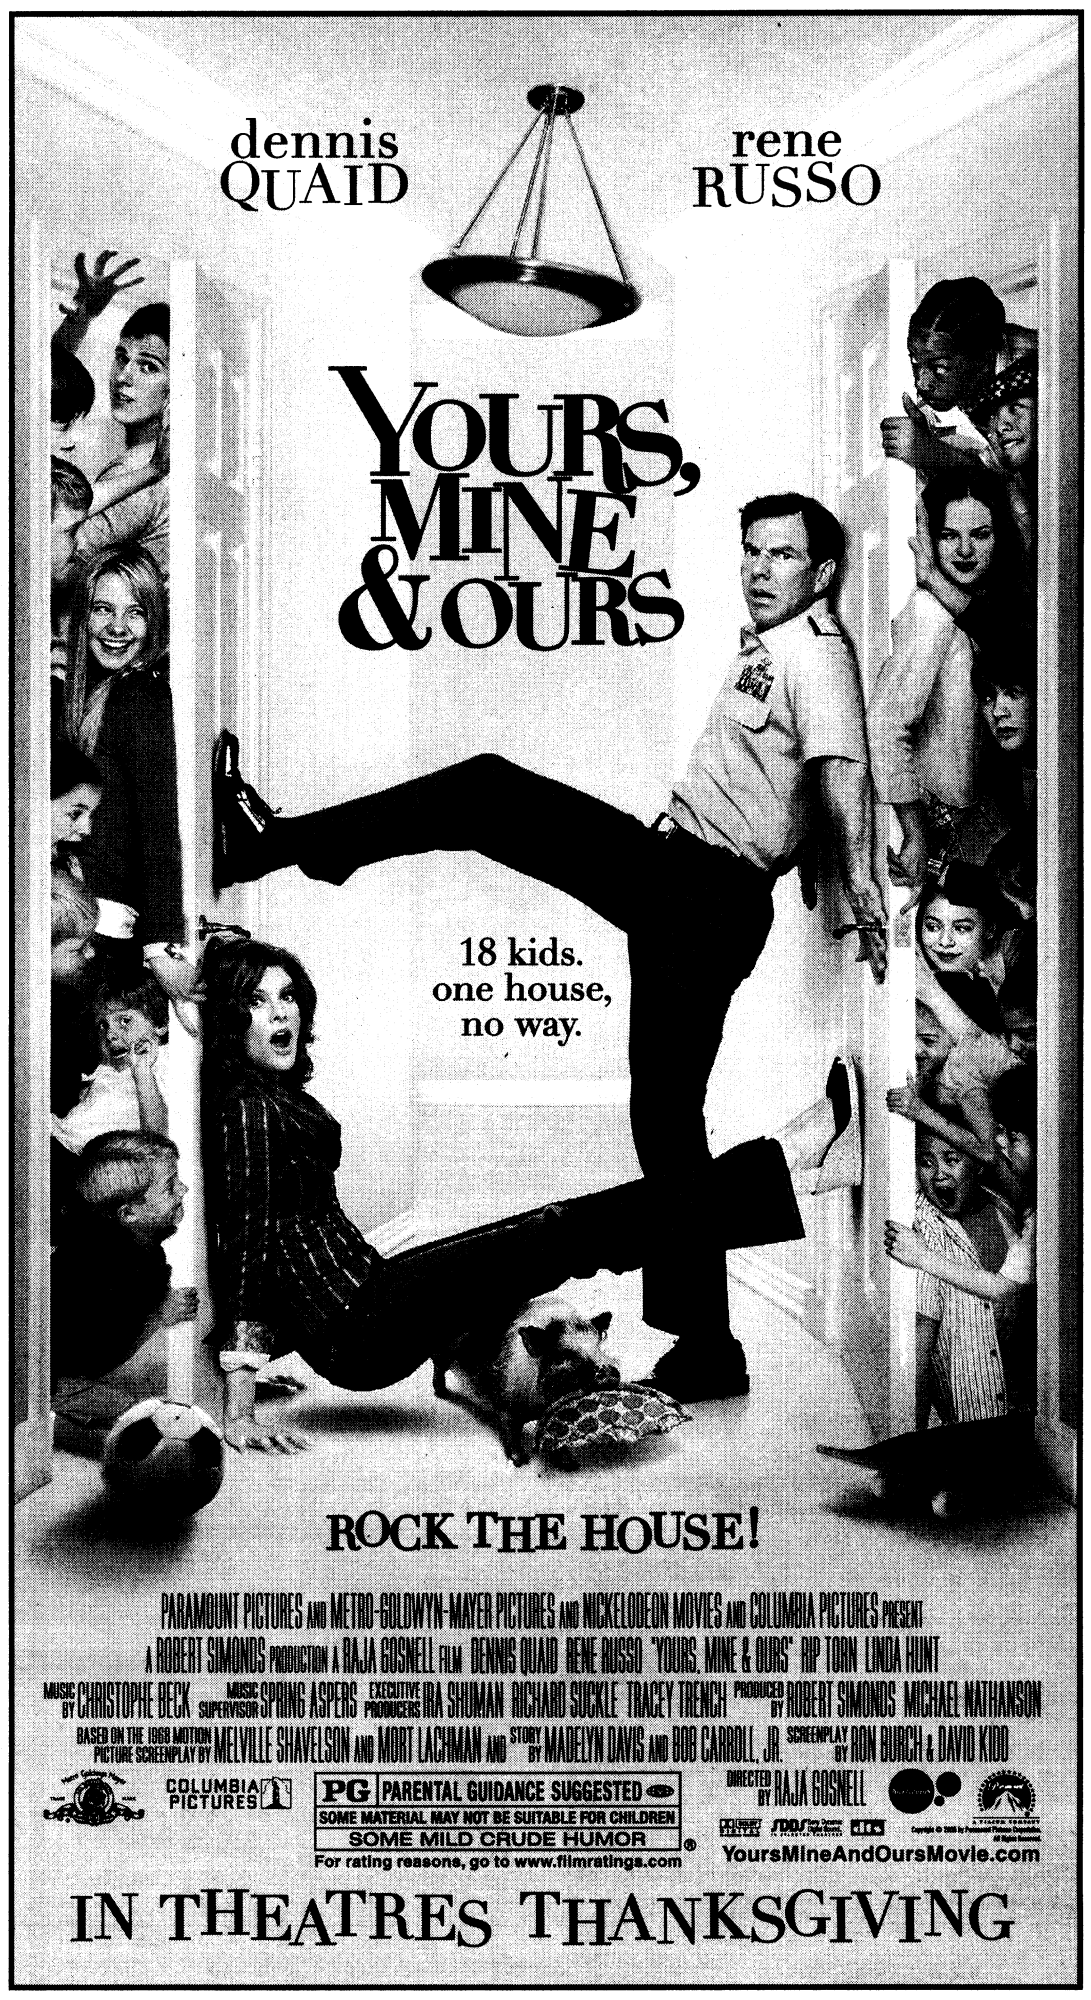
The benefits of training and graduating from National Training:

. Free job placement assistance and refresher training . Nationally accredited truck driver and H.E. operator training . Learn laser technology, surveying, and construction drawings . Three courses: Basic Truck Driver / Owner-Operator / Heavy Equipment . Two Training Phases; Home Study and Residence Training . Home study allows more rubber-to-pavement time . Graduate on Friday and start working Monday . A CDL in your wallet or purse allows you to get a job anytime . Active duty personnel receive no cost lodging while attending the Heavy Equipment or Truck Driver course

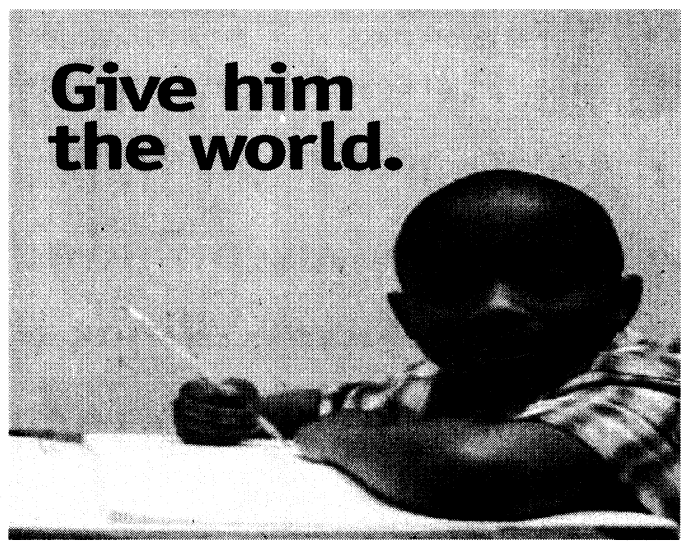
NTI Courses are approved in Fiscal Year 2006 for: Base Education Up-Front Tuition, MGIB, DANTES Tuition Reimbursement, "Top-Up" (Active duty TA and MGIB Combo), and Vocational Rehabilitation

Complete phase-1 home-study lessons now and engage phase-2during terminal leave.

Expense Average: CDL permit $10. Commercial Driver's License $50. Drug test is $50. Fast food $12 daily. Enrollment fees are $50. At graduation, present a receipt from other hotels and receive a seven day rebate. Camp Blanding is 16 miles away with a guesthouse.



* Hazardous material handlers will submit to a background check and fingerprinting.



Requirements...CDL Truck: Must be 21, have a CDL permit, a copy of your motor vehicle record, and pass a "Department of Transportation" physical. Heavy Equipment Operators: Must be 18 and pass a DOT physical. All students must be able to read, write, speak, and understand English.

Buyer beware. Just because the package says the turkey is fresh doesn't mean it hasn't been frozen. To be labeled fresh, a turkey has to be stored at temperatures above 26 degrees Fahrenheit — the freezing point for poultry. But the label doesn't have to say frozen unless its stored at 0 degrees or less. So a company can say it was never frozen, even if it was stored at 1 degree Fahrenheit.

Brandon Allen and his classmates at Faith Middle School welcome their adopted Soldier Nov. 10.

'The war got old'

Faith students adopt single Soldier

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The war got old.

That's how Sgt. Mario Sottosanti explained the dearth of letters and care packages his last four months in Iraq.

After six months of deployment, mail from home started to dwindle. During his two weeks at home in July for R&R, his family and friends saw he was healthy and hale. When he returned to Iraq, the trickle of mail dried up completely.

"Nothing. No letters, no boxes. I didn't get anything," said Sottosanti, who returned with the 598th Maintenance Company Nov. 5. "The war got old, I think. They saw that I was doing just fine."

Staff Sgt. David Quesenberry noticed his coworker wasn't receiving mail. He mentioned it to his wife, Tonya, a teacher's aid who helps Joni Ashcraft with special needs students at Faith Middle School.

Together, the women crafted a plan to "adopt" Sottosanti. Their students took it from there. They did it all, Ashcraft said. They sent letters, e-mails and care packages.

And last week, Ashcraft's five sixth-grade language arts students created banners to welcome "Sotto"

See SOTTO, B-3

Photos by Bridgett Siter

Joni Ashcraft's students treated Sgt. Mario Sottosanti to a surprise pizza party last week after he returned from a year in Iraq. The sixth-grade language arts class "adopted" Sottosanti during his absence.

"Packages and letters help a lot — any kind of mail. It makes the time go faster. Mail is probably the biggest morale booster over there, I'd say."

'Read Me a Story' features commanding general

Chrystal Shaver, son Zachary, and husband Sgt. 1st Class Joshua Shaver follow along in their copy of Mercedes and the Chocolate Pilot at White Elementary's "Tell Me a Story Event" Monday. The event, sponsored by the Military Child Education Coalition, facilitates parent-child communication.

"By getting children to talk to their parents about difficult issues, we feel like it will make transitions, separations, deployments and redeployments easier."

Pam Metz
"Tell Me a Story" ambassador

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski settled into a chair to read to about 200 White Elementary schoolchildren and their parents as part of the post's first "Tell Me a Story" event Monday.

The program is part of the Military Child Education Coalition's ongoing efforts to help children, parents and educators deal with the special needs of military students. The nonprofit organization seeks to identify the challenges facing military children, increase awareness of the challenges in the community and initiate and implement programs to meet those challenges.

According to the MCEC Web site, a military child will move between six and nine times between starting kindergarten and graduating from high school.

Army spouses Dee Thurman and Pam Metz traveled from Fort Hood, Texas, to bring the story program to post.

The first "Tell Me a Story" was held at Fort Hood Sept. 11. Thurman kept two of the books and mailed them to her daughters, thinking the daughter at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., a reading specialist, would jump on the chance.

But her daughter at Fort Benning, Carey Thomas, read the story to her husband and her sons and became excited about it. The book, Mercedes and the Chocolate Pilot, tells the story of the Berlin airlift, the World War II pilot who dropped candy to the children, and one girl who watched and waited for his plane to fly over. Thomas was so excited about the book, Thurman said, that she wanted to bring the program to her children's school and share it with other families.

So Metz and Thurman decided to take their program on the road, arriving Nov. 10 and holding a facilitator training session Friday for the adults who would lead the discussions and get the kids to talk about their feelings after hearing the story and its underlying theme of caring for others.

"By getting children to talk with their parents about difficult issues, we feel like it will make transitions, separations, deployments and redeployments easier," Metz said.

Thurman encourages parents to sit and read with their children and then discuss the books. That strategy, she said, helps with communication whenever there's a big crisis — like today's kids having a hard time dealing with deployment and moving to a different post.

"All this is catered around the military child," Thurman said.

And the word about this new initiative is already getting out at other posts. Metz and Thurman, dubbed the "Tell Me a Story" ambassadors, said they've fielded requests from four other posts, and are working on plans for implementing the next event at Fort Benning.

Tentatively planned for January, the next book called Night Catch — the only book specifically about deployment, Metz said. She wants to encourage parents to sign up to participate in that event, which may possibly be held at a planetarium, in keeping with the story's "star" connection and family tradition theme.

"The reason we're so in with this is we think it's a wonderful program," Thurman said. "And we both truly care for children. We're grandmothers — young grandmothers."

Officer Candidates from 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, White Elementary's Partners in Education were on hand to narrate stories and share pictures of Soldiers helping children in Iraq, and handed out bags of candy attached to handkerchief parachutes.

Wojdakowski told fifth-grader Bekah Ivester, covering the event for the school newspaper, he enjoyed the story because it "shows how compassionate and giving the American people are."

Country star anxious to perform for Soldiers

Lawrence will sing new release at Saturday rally

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Tracy Lawrence will perform his new release, If I Don't Make it Back, Saturday at the God Bless Fort Benning Rally.

The song is based on the true story of a young Soldier preparing to go to war, Lawrence said Monday during a phone call from New York City, where the Country Music Awards were held Tuesday.

"Of all the songs I've recorded over the years, this was one of the rare times I remember, when all the players came out of the studio, and we were just overwhelmed by the power of the song," Lawrence said. "The first 100 times I played it, it hit hard every time."

The Texas native, who broke into the country scene 15 years ago with his traditional honky-tonk sound, is not stranger to the military. He's toured with the USO and recently performed at the 50th anniversary celebration for Fort Rucker, Ala.

"I've noticed music does make a huge difference in morale," he said. "It has a tremendous impact, especially overseas, where people are separated for long periods of time from their loved ones. Music, particularly country music, can bring a little bit of home to them."

The country music industry has traditionally been supportive of the military, Lawrence said.

"I think our format of music has always been outspoken when it comes to our need to support Soldiers," he said. "We're not so much pro-war as we are pro-Soldier. You don't have to agree with the politics behind the war to know that our young men and women in uniform make a lot of sacrifices for us. The least we can do is show them we care."

Lawrence said performing at the God Bless Fort Benning Rally gives him another opportunity to share his message with the American people.

"The most important thing I want to stress is that we don't want this to turn into another Vietnam situation," he said, "where our Soldiers don't get the love and respect they deserve when they come home. That was a horrible tragedy in itself, and we can't let it happen again. I don't care how you feel about the war, we have to show our support for our troops."

Lawrence will take the stage at 3 p.m. Saturday following a 15-minute honor ceremony. The day's events, which start at 10 a.m. and end at 6 p.m., include food, helicopter rides, midway fair rides, and a Silver Wings Parachute Team demonstration. A number of local bands, the NHRA Army dragster and the Anheuser-Busch Budweiser Clydesdale Horses will be present. A motorcycle rally is scheduled for noon.

The God Bless Fort Benning rally, free to the public, will be held at the Columbus Civic Center on Victory Drive.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: A certain creditor used to contact me once a week, but now they've stopped calling and writing. Does that mean my debt has been forgiven?

A: To answer the question, it is important to first understand the three different parties in the credit system.

The creditor is the business that loans you money. If you repay your loan in a timely manner, you will probably never hear from anyone else. If you do not repay the loan as required, however, the creditor will normally contact you a number of times, and if you still do not pay then the creditor will likely turn the loan over to a collection agency.

The collection agency will attempt to collect on the debt, and may even sue you to collect the debt. The third step is the possibility of your failure to repay the debt appearing as negative information on your credit report.

People often think that if a creditor stops calling or writing about a debt, that means they've given up and the problem has gone away. This is very rarely the case however, as most of the time the creditor sells the account to a collection agency and reports the bad debt to the credit reporting agencies.

While some debt collectors sue to collect on bad debts, others are content to simply wait until some time in the future when the borrower is unable to get a car loan or home loan, at which time he or she will have to settle the old debt in order to borrow for the new purchase.

"Out of sight, out of mind" is a bad theory when it comes to legal problems. Bad debts can still damage your credit, even after bankruptcy, and even after seven years. The best thing to do with a bad debt is to deal with it, rather than ignore it.

Protect yourself, family from tobacco smoke

Patrice Cathright
Community Health Nursing

Each year, tobacco kills more than 10,000 Georgians and drains 1.2 billion dollars from our economy in health care expenses.

According to the 2004 Georgia Tobacco Surveillance Report, 24 percent of adults, nine percent of middle school and 24 percent of high school students in Georgia smoke cigarettes.

Nicotine is frequently the first experimental drug used by youth. Smokeless tobacco can contain up to five times as much nicotine in one chew as in one cigarette. Unfortunately, another killer stalks those who are exposed to smoke from burning tobacco products.

Secondhand smoke, or environmental tobacco smoke, is harmful and can cause death in nonsmokers. Secondhand smoke is the smoke exhaled from the lungs of smokers and the smoke that comes from the burning end of a cigarette, cigar or pipe. ETS causes about 53,000 deaths a year in those who do not smoke. Children and infants are especially sensitive to ETS and get an estimated 300,000 cases of infections such as bronchitis and pneumonia.

Tobacco smoke has more than 4,000 chemicals, more than 43 chemicals classified as Group A carcinogen (cancer causing).

Imagine inhaling acetone, ammonia, arsenic, carbon monoxide, formaldehyde and hydrogen cyanide. These are just a few of the chemicals that we are exposed to on a daily basis when we frequent restaurants with smoking sections, sporting events, homes of smokers, etc.

What can you do to protect yourself and your family from the lethal effects of environmental tobacco smoke? Here are some helpful tips:

- Ask family and friends not to smoke around your family.
- Do not allow smoking in the car.
- Look for child-care workers who do not smoke when they're with your children.
- Do not smoke in your house.
- Have smokers go outdoors when visiting your home.
- Have smokers wash their hands prior to holding your children.
- Quit smoking or help friends and loved ones quit.

The bottom line is that we all pay for the burden of tobacco. In one way or another, we will pay out of our pockets, whether you are a smoker or not, or pay with our lives. For more information on tobacco cessation programs, call Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-3065 or 544-1255, the American Cancer Society at (800) ACS-2345 or the Quit Line at (877) 270-STOP.

Sotto: Re-enlists in Saddam's palace home.

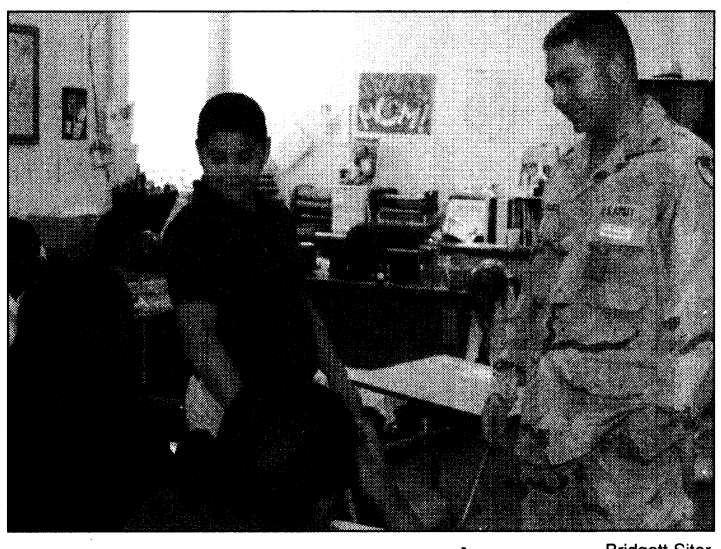
His unit redeployed Nov. 5, and the students hosted a surprise party Nov. 10, with Sottosanti and Quesenberry the guests of honor.

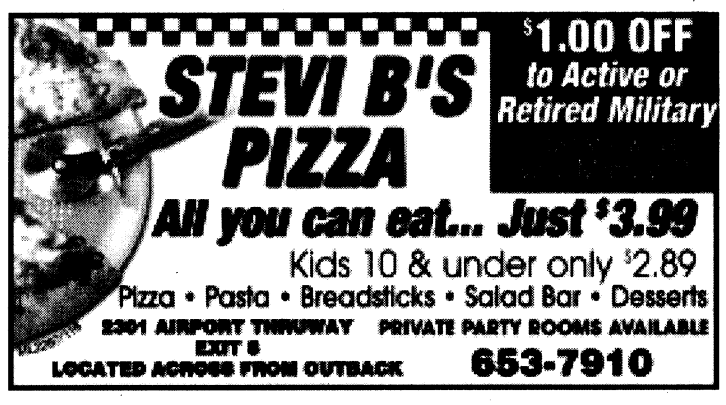
Two of the five students have a parent deployed. Brandon Allen's father was injured in Iraq. He's home recovering nicely, said his son, who spoke for the whole class when he welcomed Sottosanti and invited him to share Thanksgiving dinner with them at the school.



Between pizza and cupcakes, the students quizzed the Soldiers about life in Iraq. It wasn't all bad, said Sottosanti, who re-enlisted in Saddam's Hussein's former palace Sept. 1.

"I got to sit on his throne," the 24-year-old Arizona native said.

"And I went to the Baghdad zoo. That was cool."



But he missed having the freedom to come and go as he pleased. He missed being able to go out after dark without fearing for his safety. But mostly, he missed the mail.

"Packages and letters help a lot — any kind of mail. It makes the time go faster," he said. "Mail is probably the biggest morale booster over there, I'd say."

Bridgett Siter

Sgt. Mario Sottosanti met the students who adopted him Nov. 10.

Reading expert offers tips for parents

Shane Templeton
Houghton Mifflin Education

The process of reading aloud has specific educational functions that lay the groundwork for reading and language development.

Your child becomes familiar with the basic concepts of words and books and begins to develop a basic vocabulary as he listens to and watches you read.

You probably engage in one or more of these practices every time you read to your child:

Language development: You read Curious George, and your child listens. He hears familiar words like "hat," and unfamiliar ones, like "curious."

At one page, your child asks why George is standing on the table. At another, you ask why the man in the yellow hat looks angry.

As both of you react to the story, you are building your child's vocabulary, encouraging him to think about the meanings of specific words ("What is a restaurant?") and about the messages of the story ("Should George be punished for misbehaving at the restaurant?").

All the while, you are teaching your child that stories come in a many different styles ("That was funny!" "That made me sad." "Hey it rhymes!").

Letter recognition: Many children have their first literary experience with a plastic or cardboard book.

Not only are these thick pages colorful and easy to turn, but the simple pictures and individual words or letters they contain introduce children to the concept of books.

Children learn that the letters are somehow connected to the words and the stories they hear.

Concepts of print: As children move on to more sophisticated picture books, they begin to learn the conventions of printed English. For example, they see that we read English from left to right, and from top to bottom. They become familiar with terms such as "letter" and "word."

At first, they see that the word "hat" corresponds to a picture.

Later, they understand that the number of words they see in a line of print is the number of words they say out loud.

These are valuable insights that children learn to apply as they begin to read.

Why is this so important? : Because researchers have discovered that children who enter school with these prereading skills are more likely to become successful readers.

Educators estimate that preschool children in literacy-rich environments enter school having been read to for 1,000 hours or more.

In contrast, preschoolers with little experience with books have been read to for only 25 hours or less.

This second group of children tends to encounter the greatest difficulties as they learn to read in school.

What can you do to make a difference for your child?

Keep your home stocked with books: This does not have to be expensive. Borrow books from the children's room at your local library.

Yard sales are great places to pick up books at bargain prices.

Some families like to swap books so that their children can share a broad range of stories.

Read aloud often: Make sure that reading is included in your child's daily activities. When you pack for a trip to the store or the doctor's office, stuff a book in your tote bag.

Reading aloud to your child can be a great way to transition from active to quiet play. But keep it fun.

If your child is bursting with energy, it might not be the best time to sit down with a book.

Remember, books should never be used as punishment. And always try to talk about what you're reading.

This is as important as the reading itself in developing prereading skills as well as vocabulary.

Establish a routine: Set a regular time for reading aloud. Children love books before bed or naptime.

You may also like to sit down regularly at snack time or in the park.

Establishing routines weaves books firmly into the fabric of your child's day.

It gives them something to look forward to and teaches them to make reading a priority.

Involve the whole family: Encourage older siblings to read to your younger child. Most children will jump into the process at some point by reciting their favorite words and phrases.

Some like to "read" the whole book, telling a familiar story in their own words while turning the pages.

And when the time is right, children can sound out certain words, then alternate reading pages aloud.

REFLECTIONS

Traditions can lock us into a mindset that limit our full appreciation of why we do what we do. Thanksgiving is no exception. We approach this holiday with endless ways to celebrate. Most involve a meal, a gathering and time off.

However, not all of us can enjoy these same things. Thousands of your fellow Soldiers are deployed, separated from family and the traditions they would usually enjoy. There will be no celebrations in those places with the usual fanfare of food and gatherings, but it is not the same if they were home.

These members of our armed forces know the choice they have made is the right one. They are serving our nation, standing up for us to ensure that our traditions are guarded and protected for the future of all our families.

Traditions can get in the way of the real meaning of a holiday. Why we celebrate and commemorate is often lost in how we observe the day.

Thanksgiving was, and is, intended for us to pause and give thanks to God for all his blessings on our nation and families.

As we pause this year, let us stop for a moment and remember all that God has blessed us with. The list is long for some, short for others, and even bitter for a few of us. Giving thanks acknowledges our dependence upon God, and what is ultimately important in our individual lives.

God has blessed our nation with freedom and a bounty of prosperity. Hidden among all these blessings is our ability to worship, speak, and live our lives within a free society, governed by our own elected officials.

Smith

As we compare our lives with most of the world we really should be thankful. If you can this year, look around and count your blessings — they could be more abundant than you realize.

On Oct. 3, 1863, President Abraham Lincoln proclaimed the following. Read his words and see where your thanksgiving is this year:

"It has seemed to me fit and proper that they should be solemnly, reverently and gratefully acknowledged as with one heart and voice by the whole American people.

"I do therefore invite my fellow citizens in every part of the United States, and also those who are at sea and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November next, as a day of Thanksgiving and Praise to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in the Heavens.

"And I recommend to them that while offering up the ascriptions justly due to Him for such singular deliverances and blessings, they do also, with humble penitence for our national perverseness and disobedience, commend to his tender care all those who have become widows, orphans, mourners or sufferers in the lamentable civil strife in which we are unavoidably engaged, and fervently implore the interposition of the Almighty Hand to heal the wounds of the nation and restore it as soon as may be consistent with the Divine purposes to the full enjoyment of peace, harmony, tranquility and Union."

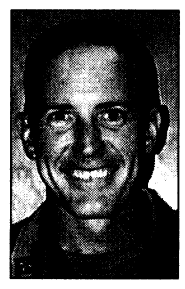
Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



It's been a great ride! For 40 days a whole group of folks across Fort Benning have been reading, listening, meeting and enjoying positive life-change as they've discovered God's five purposes for their lives from the New York Times bestseller, The Purpose Driven Life.

I've had great fun and have been very touched by a number of e-mails I've gotten from individuals describing the impact this campaign had on them.

"This has changed my life," one woman wrote. "I have finally discovered what it is that I'm supposed to be doing with my days on earth that God has given me ... I've gotten out of my comfort zone, and it's amazing to see what he's done with me and how fulfilled I've become!"

Another man wrote, "The first words of the first chapter got to me: it's not about me! I'm just trying to live each day not worrying so much, but instead, trying to see how I can make a difference and how I can bring God's glory through the way I interact with and help others."

Yet another wrote, "This is awesome! I now have a purpose worth living for. I know it! I know what it is that I'm supposed to be doing, and I'm doing it! And it's awesome!"

Hawkins

Have a story you want to share? Then feel free to e-mail me at Jeffrey.D.Hawkins @us.army.mil, and I'll add your story to the growing number of folks who have been positively impacted by a closer walk with their creator during these last weeks. So far we've talked about four purposes. What's purpose number five?

Well, purpose number five is that "You were made for a mission." What mission is that? It's the mission to share the good news of what God has done for you.

We don't want to be just a reservoir — we want to be a river. We don't want to be just a pot, we want to be a pipe. We don't want to just take things in, we want to pass them on.

As we wrap up our 40-day journey, keep something in mind — blessed are the balanced — they shall outlast everyone.

For example, one of the events in the summer Olympics is the pentathlon. It is composed of five events. The pentathlete's goal is to succeed in all five areas, not just one or two.

Your life is a pentathlon of five purposes, which you must keep in balance. All of our purposes are summarized in the great commandment and the great commission of Jesus.

These statements sum up God's five purposes for your life:

- Love God with all your heart. You were planned for God's pleasure, so your purpose is to love God through worship.
- Love your neighbor as yourself. You were shaped for serving, so your purpose is to show love for others through ministry.
- Go and make disciples. You were made for a mission, so your purpose is to share God's message through outreach.
- Baptize them into ... You were formed for God's family, so your purpose is to identify with his church through fellowship.
- Teach them to do all things. You were created to become like Christ, so your purpose is to grow to maturity through discipleship.

It's been a joy to walk with you through these last 40 days. Want to hear more and take the next step in living the Purpose Driven Life?

Call me at 545-9014 at the Family Life Center, or join us in our final Sunday focusing on 40 Days of Purpose at 11 a.m. in the CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel on Kelley Hill.

It's postwide for everyone.

Red Buttons and Carol Lynley, whose characters fall in love in the 1972 version of The Poseidon Adventure, actually disliked each other intensely. They refused to have anything to do with each other except when the cameras were rolling.

Poseidon Adventure sails in NBC remake

When an ocean liner turned upside down in 1972, so did the movie industry.

It was the year of The Poseidon Adventure, producer Irwin Allen's Oscar-winning blockbuster that launched a slew of disaster epics from The Towering Inferno to Earthquake and beyond. Based on a novel by Paul Gallico, the shipwreck survival saga remains durable enough to inspire two remakes within a year of each other. NBC airs the first Sunday and the second — simply titled Poseidon — is slated for theatrical release in the summer of 2006.

Filmed in South Africa, the three-hour television update keeps the basic premise but changes some details.

A tidal wave doesn't overturn the S.S. Poseidon this time; a terrorist-planted bomb does. A character named Mike Rogo is still aboard, but instead of the beat cop first played by Ernest Borgnine, he's now a Homeland Security agent portrayed by Adam Baldwin. And senior citizen Belle Rosen remains a passenger, but rather than being the doting wife and expert swimmer embodied by Shelley Winters, she's now a widow played by veteran British actress Sylvia Syms.

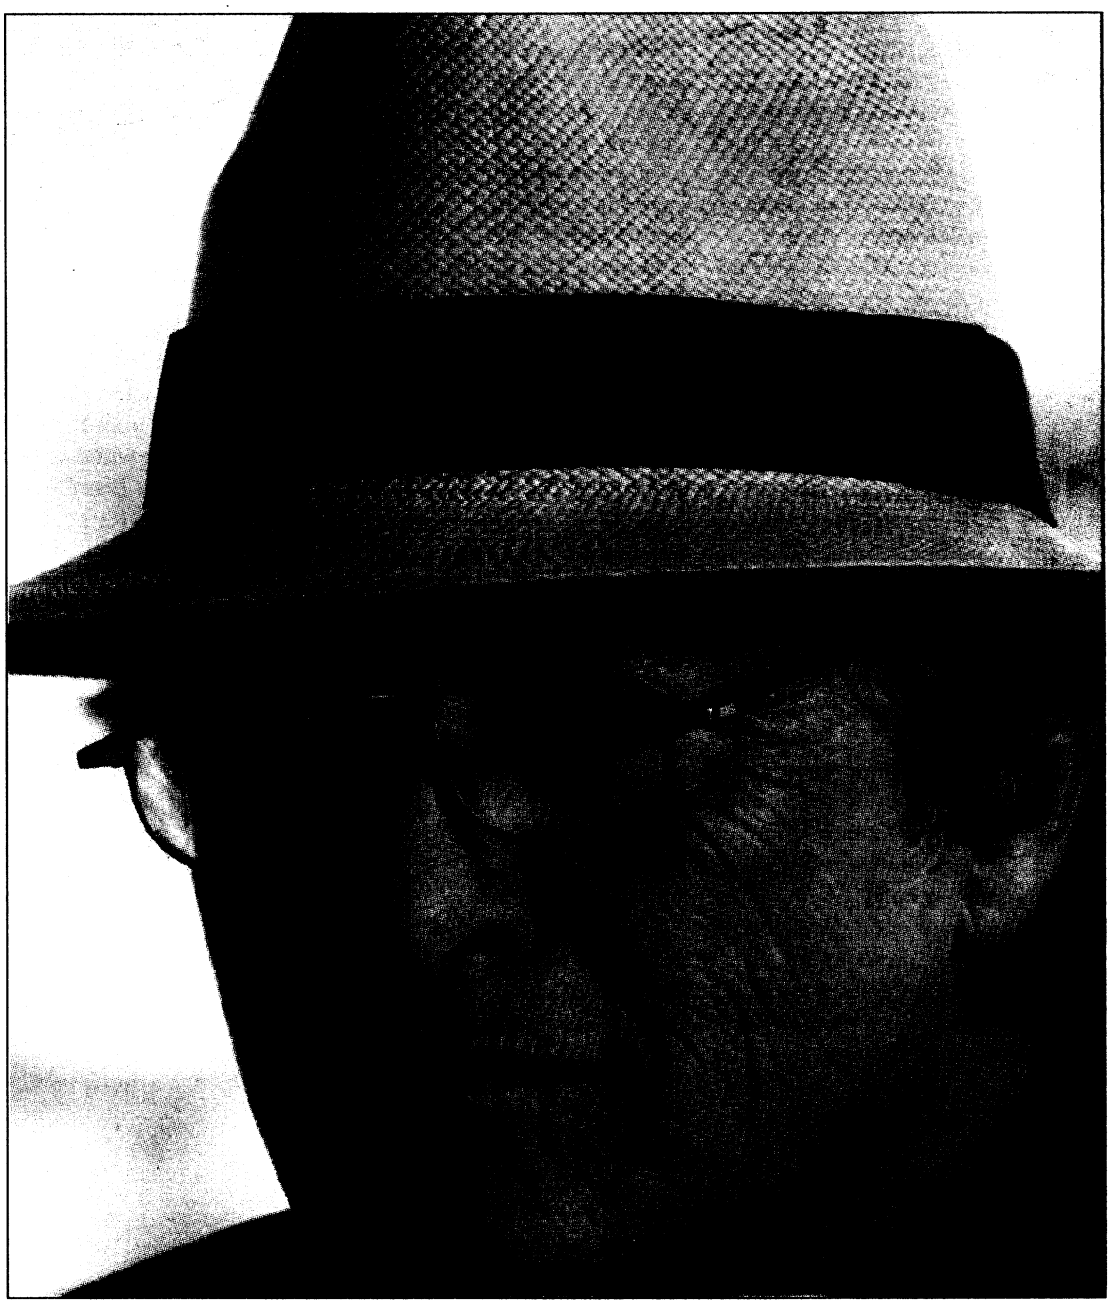
Peter Weller succeeds Leslie Nielsen as the boat's captain, now named Gallico after the book's author, and Gene Hackman's faith-challenged minister has been replaced by a skeptical bishop played by Rutger Hauer. Also, the ship's doctor (C. Thomas Howell) has a much bigger role in the action.

Other characters include a philandering family man (Steve Guttenberg, Veronica Mars) and his wife (Alexa Hamilton), and a reality show producer (Bryan Brown, The Thorn Birds) and his new bride, a pop singer (Tinarie Van Wyk). Alex Kingston (ER) also stars as a British intelligence operative.

For all the computer graphics and new elements added by director John Putch, the son of actress Jean Stapleton, NBC's take on The Poseidon Adventure lifts certain scenes directly from the original film. That's especially clear just after the ship capsizes, as some passengers hang from tables bolted to the floor that suddenly has become the ceiling ... and one unfortunate fellow plunges directly into the stained-glass panel beneath him, as happened in the 1972 version.

While most stars of the new drama are familiar with the first movie, the Poseidon legacy isn't necessarily what drove them to sign up.

Weller said, "I didn't look at this and think, 'Whoa! I can be in The Poseidon Adventure! It was a great paycheck for a few days' work in South Africa. I remember the original movie, and it was a great disaster story, but mainly, I saw this as a good gig. Terrorism is a terrific linchpin for drama, especially in this post-9/11 age. It's all around us, and we're all aware of it."



Playing the Poseidon's captain forced Weller to stretch his often-somber screen image.

"I come from a military family, so I took my cue from that. It was partially being disciplined and partially being outright hard-nosed. This is sort of a charming guy, too. Travel is entertainment, and travel is his business."

Weller also enjoyed paying homage to Poseidon novelist Gallico through his character's name.

"Yeah, I thought that was kind of nice," he said.

"When I first saw it in the script, though, I asked, 'Does he know about this? Did he approve it?' "

Rutger Hauer co-stars in The Poseidon Adventure, premiering Sunday on NBC.

Next year's Poseidon will feature Kurt Russell, Richard Dreyfuss and Emmy Rossum (The Phantom of the Opera), and the television edition's Guttenberg appreciates the story's ongoing value as a multistar vehicle.

"I just knew this was going to be a hit," he said, "and I need a hit right now, so that's why I did it. The story is solid, and putting it in a contemporary situation makes any little 'blips' go away ... but the stuff that really works, you keep."

Guttenberg's cheating-husband character is keeping intimate company with a woman who isn't his spouse when the ship rolls over.

The actor said that scene and others were staged in the same manner used 32 years ago.

"They built this amazing set, a contraption that looks like a Ferris wheel," he said, "and they put an entire ballroom with live actors inside it. It was something like 100 feet tall, and they just spun it."

Performers' insurance companies can be concerned about such activity, and for good reason.

"It's very dangerous," Guttenberg said.

"We had a few people get hurt, not seriously, but hurt nonetheless. They'd rotate me until I was at about a 90-degree angle, then they'd yell 'Cut!' and pull the machine back down and put in a stunt person. It was really cool, really exciting."

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire — In his fourth year at Hogwarts, Harry (Daniel Radcliffe) faces his greatest challenges and dangers yet. When he is selected under mysterious circumstances as a contestant in the Triwizard Tournament, Harry must compete against the best young wizards from schools all over Europe.

But as he prepares, signs begin to point to the return of Lord Voldemort.

Before long, Harry is playing not just for the Cup, but for his life.

Also starring Rupert Grint and Emma Watson.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire is rated PG-13 for sequences of fantasy violence and frigtening images.

Walk the Line — He picked cotton, sold door-to-door and served in the Air Force.

He was a voice of a rebellion that changed the face of rock and roll.

An outlaw before today's rebels were born — and an icon they would never forget.

His name was Johnny Cash (Joaquin Phoenix).

The movie explores the early years of the music legend, an artist who transcended musical boundaries to touch people around the globe.

As his music changed the world, Cash's own world was rocked by the woman who became the love of his life — June Carter (Reese Witherspoon).

Walk the Line is rated PG-13 for language, thematic material and depiction of drug dependency.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' — An orphaned street kid (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson) makes his mark in the drug trade, but finally dares to leave the violence of his former life behind to pursue a promising career in the music business as a rapper.

Also starring Joy Bryant and Benz Antoinee.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language, drug content, sexuality and nudity.

Zathura — Two brothers discover an oblong box in the park, which they dismiss as "just some dumb old game."

The boys turn their attention away from the game's jungle adventure board game to discover a second board game inside with an outer space theme and a colored path leading to the purple planet, Zathura.

Mayhem ensues each time one of the boys draws a game card or rolls the dice.

Starring John Hutcherson, Jonah Bobo and Tim Robbins.

Zathura is rated PG for fantasy action and peril and language.

Derailed — Charles (Clive Owen), a successful ad exec and loyal family man, meets an alluring and sexy woman (Jennifer Aniston) on his morning commute. Flirtation quickly escalates into passion.

But this casual fling turns dangerous when a violent criminal confronts and pulls them into a dangerous plot.

Derailed is rated R for strong disturbing violence, language and sexuality.

Chicken Little — The movie picks up where the classic fable ends, namely after the pint-sized hero has caused big-time havoc when he mistakes a falling acorn for a piece of the sky. In the wake of the "unfortunate acorn incident," Chicken Little's name is mud in his hometown of Oakey Oaks.

Down but not out, he struggles mightily to restore his reputation and make his dad, Buck Cluck, proud.

Chicken Little joins the local baseball team despite the fact that he is barely bigger than a baseball himself.

Voiced by Zach Braff, Garry Marshall and Don Knots.

Chicken Little is rated G.

Jarhead — Jarhead, the self-imposed moniker of the Marines, follows Anthony Swofford (Jake Gyllenhaal), a third-generation enlistee, from a sobering stint in boot camp to active duty in Desert Storm, sporting a sniper's rifle and a 100-pound ruck on his back through Middle East deserts with no cover from intolerable heat or from Iraqi soldiers.

Swoff and his fellow Marines sustain themselves with sardonic humor and wicked comedy.

Also starring Peter Sarsgaard and Jamie Foxx.

Jarhead is rated R for pervasive language, violent images and strong sexual content.

Prime — Rafi (Uma Thurman) is a recently divorced 37-year-old career woman from Manhattan, and Dave (Bryan Greenberg) is a talented 23-year-old painter from Brooklyn who falls in love with her.

Rafi's therapist Lisa (Meryl Streep) is helping Rafi out of her post-divorce slump. Once Lisa accidentally discovers that Rafi's new boyfriend is, in fact, her son Dave, she finds it difficult to act the good therapist while hearing intimate details of her son's love life.

Prime is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue and for language.

Saw II — While investigating the bloody aftermath of a grizzly murder, detective Eric Mason has the feeling that it is the work of Jigsaw, the notorious killer who disappeared, leaving a trail of bodies — and parts — behind. And Mason is right. Jigsaw is at work again.

Starring Donnie Whalberg and Beverly Mitchell.

Saw II is rated R for grisly violence and gore, terror, language and drug content.

The Weather Man — Popular Chicago weatherman Dave Spritz (Nicolas Cage) has a shot at the big time when a national morning television show calls him for an audition. Professionally, Dave is on top of the world, but his personal life is in disarray.

The Weather Man is rated R for strong language and sexual content.

Doom — Something has gone wrong at a remote scientific research station on Mars.

It's a level-five quarantine, and the only souls allowed in or out are the Rapid Response Tactical Squad.

Starring Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Karl Urban.

Doom is rated R for strong violence, gore and language.

When it was introduced in 1848, the golf ball was called a "gutta-percha" ball.

Bench notes

Erin Nash

• Busch loses

Kurt Busch was suspended for the final two races by Roush Racing following a reckless driving citation in Phoenix the night of Nov. 11.

Kenny Wallace filled in for Busch in the No. 97 car.

Busch was in the Chase for the Cup.

• Busch wins

Either fueled by anger or desire, little brother Kyle Busch got the victory Nov. 13 in the Checker Auto Parts 500 at Phoenix International Raceway.

Kyle told reporters the incident with Kurt was blown out of proportion.

• WWE star dies

World Wrestling Entertainment star Eddie Guerrero, 38, was found dead in his hotel room in Minneapolis Nov. 13 by his nephew.

There were no apparent signs of foul play, but an autopsy will be done to determine the cause of death.

• AL MVP

Fine, I'll say it — Congrats to Alex Rodriguez, third baseman for the New York Yankees on his Most Valuable Player award for the American League.

A-Rod barely beat out DH David Ortiz of the Red Sox.

• Tiger chokes

Brit David Howell won the HSBC Champions tournament Nov. 13 in Shanghai, China. Howell, who was paired with Tiger Woods, finished at 20 under, three strokes ahead of Tiger. This tourney kicked off the European season

• Make or break time

Get me my hanky — it's the last race of the 2005 NASCAR season.

CYS football continues

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

Child and Youth Services football continued its season Saturday.

In 9 to 12 year old tackle football, the Bulldawgs beat the Vikings, 14-0, on French Field. The first score came in the first quarter on a pass into the end zone. The Bulldawgs mustered another touchdown and conversion point in the second quarter on a run. Though it was a scoreless game for the Vikings, they put up a fight. This victory moved the Bulldawgs to a 4-1 record. The Vikings currently stand at 0-5.

The Bulldawgs will play the Falcons Saturday at Doughboy Stadium. The Falcons are 3-2 for the season.

Two games played out in the 6 to 8 year old flag football league. The Raiders and Bulldogs met on the field. The Bulldogs scored on the first drive in the first quarter. But the Raiders scored a touchdown in the second quarter, making it a 6-6 tie at halftime. At the start of the second half, the Raiders scored on their first drive and made the conversion point. The Bulldogs were close behind, scoring again in the third quarter. The Raiders made a touchdown in the last quarter, ending the game at 19-12. The Raiders bolster their winnings to 4-2-1 for the season. The Bulldogs go into their final game tomorrow with a 4-2-1 record.

In the second flag football game, the Eagles took home a 6-0 win against the Falcons. The Eagles scored their winning touchdown in the first half of the game. The match proved to be a real nail-biter for spectators with a "birds-eye" view. The Falcons came close to scoring in the second and fourth quarters to no avail. Both teams played well in their offensive and defensive positions.

The Eagles' win puts their record at 2-2-3. The Falcons hold a 2-4 record for the season.

The CYS youth football season wraps up for the year Saturday.

Keynan Christopher, 8, tries to stay one step ahead of Uriah Nevin, 8, in Saturday's matchup of the Falcons versus the Eagles on Blue Field.

TO gets Taken Out, none too soon

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Oops, he did it again. And now he's paying for it. It's about time.

I'm talking about Terrell Owens, who loves to talk about himself almost more than the media does.

Owens was suspended for four games starting Nov. 6 and will be deactivated from the Philadelphia Eagles following those games. It wasn't just an isolated incident that caused the suspension and deactivation, said Coach Andy Reid. It was a buildup of many, many incidents involving Owens and his larger-than-life mouth.

I do have to admit Owens is an outstanding football player. Sure, I trashed him and the Eagles when they were playing my team, the Patriots, in the Super Bowl. But watching him play in the Super Bowl and other games, I was impressed with his athletic prowess. Unfortunately, his behavior spoke volumes louder than his athleticism.

Everyone has heard the old adage, "There's no 'I' in team." Owens seemed to go by his own adage, There's no 'I' in team but there is a 'm' and an 'e' and that spells me." It seemed like the last straw for Reid was an interview Owens did with ESPN.com, where he said the Eagles showed a "lack of class" for not recognizing his 100th career touchdown catch in an Oct. 23 game.

In the same interview, Owens once again slammed quarterback Donovan McNabb, saying the Eagles would be better off with Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre. Guess McNabb's mom won't be making any more Chunky Soup for Owens.

So what is with this guy? He's always been known for being money hungry, and also pretty much a pain in the neck to coaches and players alike. Owens will lose about $800,000 for the four game suspension, and the Eagles will have to pay him around $1 million for the last five games.

He will be traded or released at the end of the season. Where will he go? What coach is willing to take a risk on someone who publicly berates his own teammates and starts fights with everyone from the head coach to the offensive coordinator?

Whatever team does decide to gamble on Owens will certainly have a lot of paper to put stipulations in his contract. Is there any franchise willing to take a risk with such a tempestuous player?

Sure, Owens apologized and let his agent do most of the talking. It was a little too late by then. Owens finally realized he had bit the hand that had fed him. He lost half of the season due to his immaturity. His future in the NFL is in limbo.

My advice? Grow up T.O. Act like a man, keep your comments to yourself, and do what you're supposed to be doing — playing football. My ideal scenario involves Owens attending basic training like every other regular Joe. Maybe some really early mornings and really long days would teach him the meaning of teamwork. I can only guess how many push-ups he'd have to do.

Erin Says...

First, let me point out an error (gasp!) in last week's picks. One of esteemed pickers was typing in their picks and inadvertently shifted some of the games. So, it was Jimmy who picked Iowa St. over Colorado, not Ken. Second, yes, Michael had a BAD week, but I'll give him a break since his son was born last week. Congratulations, and better luck this week!

Warrior Bears' season begins

Faith to play Our Lady of Lourdes in season opener

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Faith Middle School kicked off its basketball season with a scrimmage game between the boys' and girls' basketball teams Tuesday. Ronnie Bell, who returns for his fourth season as the head coach for both teams, rotated the boys and girls throughout the game.

Faith Warrior Bear cheerleaders and its new step team performed during halftime.

Faith is a member of the Christian Independent Athletic Association, which includes a number of local private schools. The Warrior Bears will play teams from St. Anne, Our Lady of Lourdes and Mother Mary Mission Catholic schools, St. Luke United Methodist School and Calvary Christian.

Bell

Regular season starts at 4:30 p.m. Dec. 1 with a home game against Our Lady of Lourdes. Admission to the game is $2. The season will end with a tournament mid-February in Tuskegee, Ala.

To participate in Faith's sports, cheerleading and dance programs, students must maintain at least a 2.0 grade point average with no failing grades and adhere to behavior and attendance policies, said Cindy Givens, Faith's athletic director.

*Rate shown is Annual Percentage Rate, accurate as of 11/07/05 and subject to change without notice. Rates, terms and approval amount determined by the overall credit worthiness of each applicant. Rate shown reflects a .35% reduction for direct deposit and selection of the automatic loan payment feature, (example: 8.84% APR less .35% = 8.49% APR). Offer available on current SCU loans which qualify for additional funds of $2,500 or more. Not to be combined with other special discounted offers. Holiday loans available up to $20,000.

In nature
we see reflections of our children.

The tree is the strong one.

The ocean, rambunctious and untamed.

The sky, the absolute dreamer.

And to choose the tree over the ocean
would be like choosing one child over the next.

An impossibility as large as the world itself.

WE KICK 400 KIDS OUT OF SCHOOL EVERY DAY.

We have to. They just don't want to leave. They go to an extraordinary new kind of public school. It's called a Community School for Excellence.

It's open up to 15 hours a day, 6 days a week, 52 weeks a year. Like many schools in this program, it has medical and dental services and a social worker on site. Its extended hours are filled with unique academic and recreational activities.

It's a school where teachers have more time to teach. And students are physically and emotionally better prepared to learn.

So, if you have trouble getting your kids to go to school, find out how you can make it a place they won't want to leave.

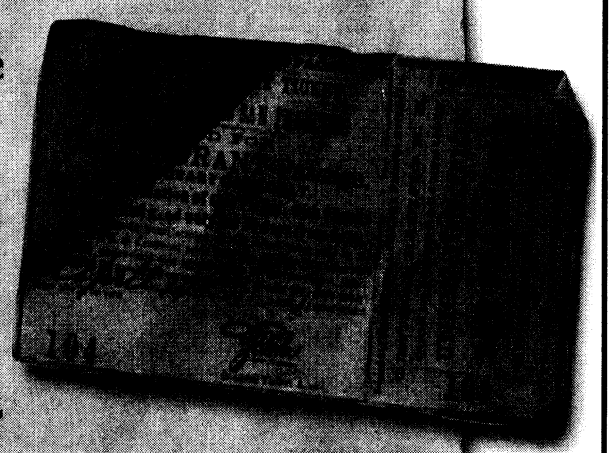
How "WE HAVE NOTHING TO EAT"



became "DAD, CAN I BORROW THE CONVERTIBLE?"

Millions of Americans can trace their roots back to an ancestor who came to the new world with a hunger. Metaphorically speaking, it was a desire for freedom. But more often than not, this noble goal was directly tied to a powerful physical need for a good, hot meal.

They came from countries around the globe, yet their stories were remarkably similar. They had left behind hard times, oppression and just about everyone they knew and loved to seek out a better life in the land of opportunity. And while it wasn't necessarily easy, they found that with a little hard work, perseverance and good old-fashioned gumption, they could achieve a quality of life far beyond what they had known before. They were free to live their own lives and prosper by their own hands. In fact, perhaps the greatest testament to the power of freedom is that, simply by working hard and educating their children, the world's tired, poor and hungry have become the nation with the highest standard of living on earth. CSA speaks to ITB grads

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Pvt. Andrew J. Clayton told his parents a "very high ranking officer" was coming to speak at his graduation from C Company, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, Friday on Kannell Field.

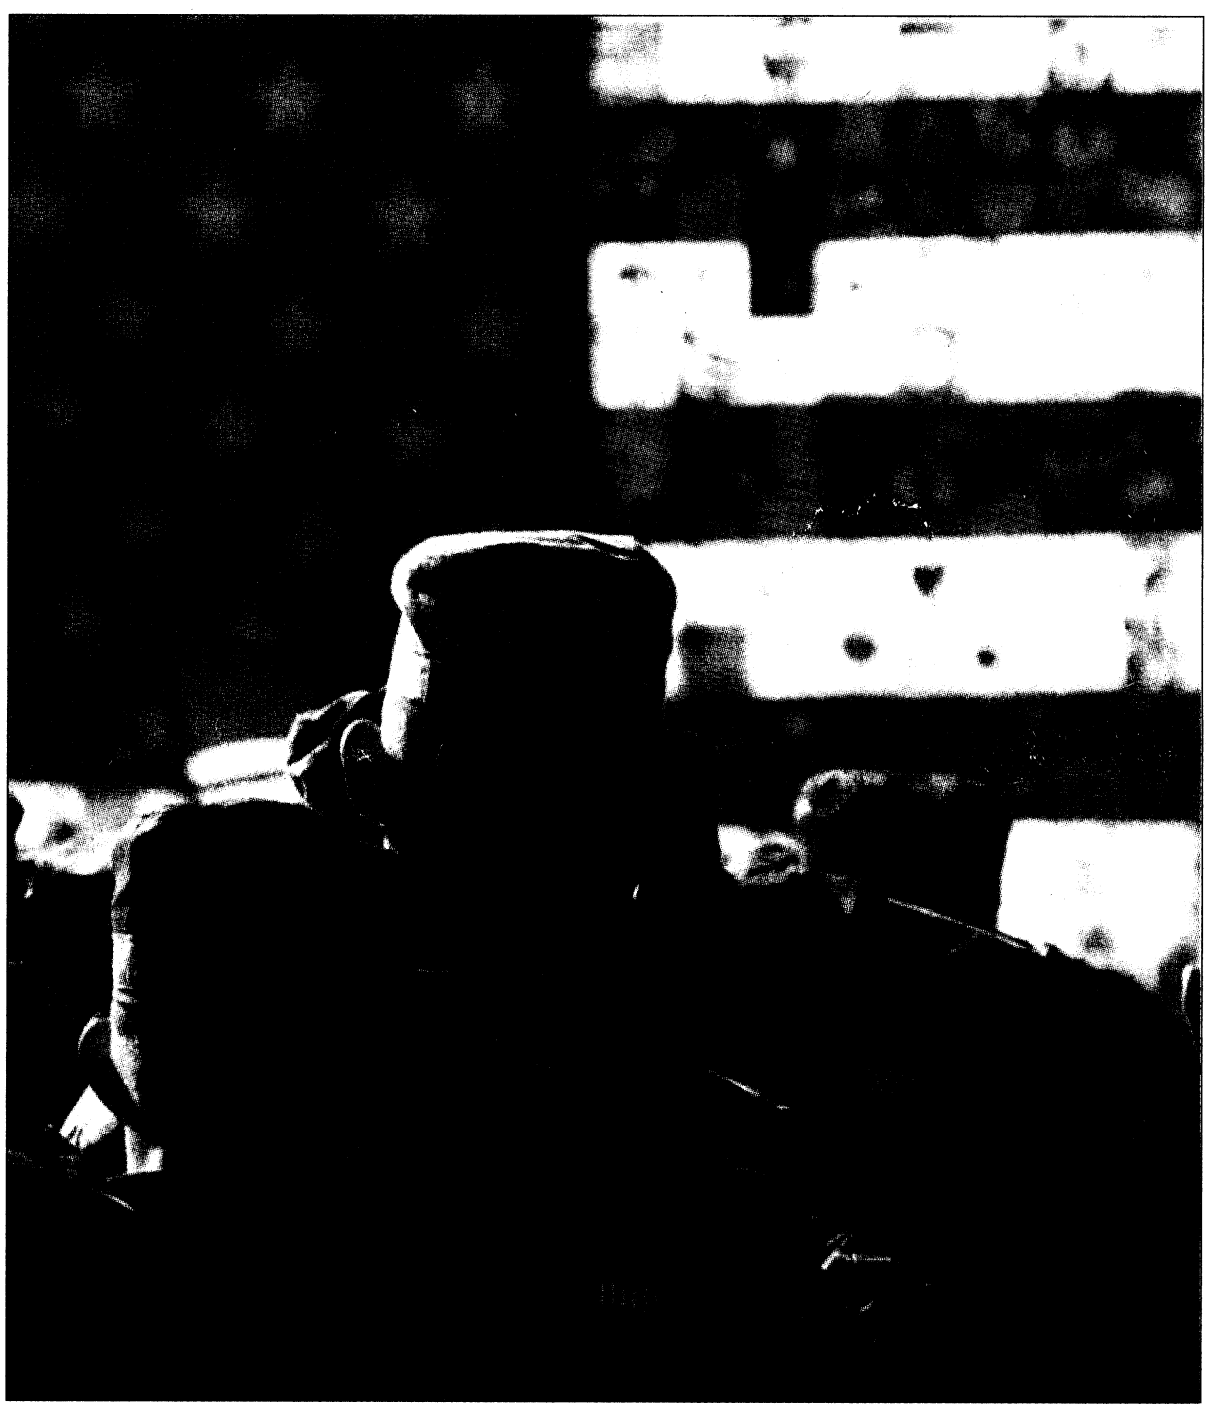
Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Peter Schoomaker spoke to the graduates of C Company and G Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., their families and friends.

Lt. Col. Thomas Brittain, commander of 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., introduced Schoomaker as a "Soldier's Soldier and leader of men," citing his assignments with conventional and special forces units in peacetime and in war.

"He is a great role model of selfless service for every Soldier standing here today," Brittain said.

Schoomaker said it was an honor to be at Fort Benning and at the graduation.

"Like those in generations past who've worn the uniform, the burden of upholding the Army's solemn obligations ultimately rests on the Soldiers you see before you," Schoomaker said.



The Soldiers, he said, represent a cross-section of America who now have instilled the Warrior Ethos and

More than 700 basic training Soldiers attended the fourth annual God Bless Fort Benning rally Saturday at the Columbus Civic Center. Here they salute during the national anthem. The "quilt" flag pictured was constructed by local school children. For more about the rally, see B-1.

Policy change affects cab fares

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

A policy change that will take affect Dec. 1 has taxi drivers calling new fares foul.

The new taxi contract includes a number of changes, but two in particular — a $10 cap on fares from Harmony Church to Main Post and a $12 cap from Sand Hill to Uchee Creek — has been criticized by drivers who say the fares are too cheap, said Jean Poole, Fort Benning's chief of the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation's non-appropriated funds financial branch.

"I've asked them to bear with us," Poole said. "I tell the drivers we have to be fair to them and the Soldiers."

Taxi fares from Harmony Church to Main Post and Sand Hill to Uchee Creek were previously unregulated, Poole said, and Soldiers paid as much as $30 for a one-way trip. Technically, companies couldn't be charged with price gouging, because the contract didn't address these zones.

Under the new contract, there are 15 rate zones on Fort Benning, and standard fares for one passenger start at $2 and do not exceed $12. Additional passengers will pay $1.

These rates only apply to

New Dixie Road, 24-hour shoppette opens

Adds new services, more gas pumps

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

Main Post saw a major change in conveniences with Monday's opening of a brand new Army and Air Force Exchange Service shoppette on Dixie Road. The 24-hour store has a Church's Chicken, video rental, food and retail products that AAFES stores typically provide. And if that isn't enough to draw customers, the 28 gas pumps might.

"This is going to be a focal point for this installation," said AAFES general manager Lee Holloway. "The location is a main artery, the artery to every avenue on Main Post. What better place to have gas, food and retail products than at an artery of an installation?"

And now, diesel is available at the gas pump, which is a brand new option, Holloway said. An ethanol pump will open soon.

Monday's store opening was the result of $4.6 million expenditure, Holloway said. The 9,000 square foot facility will not change the services available at the Airborne shoppette, which has been the post's only 24-hour store.

"The existing services — we're going to keep those running at the same level and improve them, so Soldiers won't see a downsizing of services," Holloway said "So we now have two, 24-hour services at Fort Benning. Not too many AAFES facilities have that."

Customers lined up outside the store before the doors opened.

Staff Sgt. Elijah Parker, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th Corps Support Battalion, returned earlier this month from a yearlong deployment to Iraq. Parker said he's glad to see the improvements and more options on post.

"It's been a big change since we deployed. Before, there was nothing here. Because of the location and Fort Benning's (expansion), it will be a valuable asset," Parker said.

Sgt. James Myles, 71st Military Police Detachment, said he likes having a new option.

"Instead of having to go to the Main Mall Post Exchange, I can get something to eat here. It's right on time because I work at night,"

GOOD GRIEF

Stop counting our casualties

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

I have to say I'm embroiled in one of those love-hate relationships — with the media.

I love my job, and even though I consider myself part of the "media," I hate what the national media is doing to undermine all the good things our Soldiers are doing in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Fort Benning came up on the radar screen a few weeks ago, as the media reported the 2,000th casualty was Staff Sgt. George Alexander, an Infantryman assigned to 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.

Responding to the report, an Army spokesman sent an e-mail that said "the 2,000th Soldier, Sailor, Airman or Marine killed in action is just as important as the first who died and will be just as important as the last to die in this war against terrorism and to ensure the freedom for a people who have not known freedom in over two generations."

Members of the Senate marked the 2,000th death with a moment of silence. Personally, I'm glad they honored Alexander, but somehow I doubt they've seen fit to honor each and every casualty that way.

Because 2,000 is only a number, and an insignificant number at that. The number has no meaning. But each of those heroes' lives were meaningful. Each one of them is meaningful — from the families they left behind to the Army they served so honorably and nobly.

I'm having a hard time figuring out why the media is so obsessed with our casualty count. Why is our count any more sensational than hundreds of other casualty counts?

Did the Senate stop and observe a moment of silence for our share of the more than 500,000 children in the world who died of AIDS in 2004? Did they even notice the date we all lost the 2,000th child, or the 100,000th?

Between 1999 and 2001, more than 6,300 children in the United States between the ages of 12 and 20 were killed as a result of underage drinking. And underage drug abuse killed 980.

More than 2,300 children are killed in car crashes involving drunken drivers each year. Do we mark their deaths?

Do we realize 68 percent of those children were killed while riding in the car with the drunken driver?

In 2004, approximately 1,500 children younger than 14 died from cancer. One-third of them had leukemia, a disease that killed more than 23,000 adults as well.

Our national losses are staggering, but children and adults are dying worldwide. Of the 10.6 million children who die each year, 19 percent of them die of pneumonia and 10 percent die because they are born prematurely as a result of inadequate nutrition and prenatal care for their mothers.

My message to Congress and the media is this — stop reducing the sacrifices of our Soldiers to a meaningless number that you can use to manipulate public sentiment. Instead, start counting the multitude of senseless losses our country experiences every minute of every hour.

Maybe if we see those numbers day in and day out, we, and you, our elected leadership, will be motivated to do something to combat the injustices of all the lives cut short.

Our Soldiers are doing everything they can to combat injustices overseas. Let's get motivated to fight here at home and make our lawmakers pay close attention to those numbers.

Selfless service, brave Soldiers

I'm going to tell you about it, because he never will. I want to tell you about what my husband, Adam, and several other Good Samaritans did recently.

Monday night we were returning from dinner out, and as soon as we crossed the overpass on I-185, I saw smoke. Then I saw lights, and was able to distinguish a car, overturned in the grass between the lanes of traffic.

"Oh my God," I said. "We need to stop."

So we did. Adam got out of the truck and I dialed 911. I saw him sprinting down the highway. I couldn't see what was going on, and about 10 minutes later Adam came back and told me what happened.

A woman and her two children were in the car. When he got down to the accident, the woman had managed to climb out her window, but her children were still inside, one still strapped into his car seat, upside down, crying.

A man was trying to coax the bigger boy out. Adam climbed in, unbuckled the baby and handed him to his frantic mom.

That mom and her kids must have had some guardian angels with them that night, because Adam said a doctor, still in his scrubs, pulled over to help.

Adam was visibly shaken, but knew the family was in good hands.

I told Adam, "You know, we do stories about people like you in The Bayonet."

"No, no, I was just doing what anyone else would have," he told me.

It's nice to think that most people would have done the same thing, but I really don't know.

How many people are willing to put themselves in danger to help a fellow human being? It's only when something happens that we see the the true character of someone, and in this instance, Adam was the epitome of the Army value of selfless service.

Selfless service pertains not only to the military, but in all walks of life.

How many unsung hero Soldiers do we have walking around Fort Benning daily? Many more than we think.

It's not until someone lets something slip, or in this case, has a wife who will tell people what her husband did, because he's too humble to say anything, that these stories get told.

The Army and our nation should be proud of these Soldiers who put others before themselves, and are willing to help people in their time of need.

Whether it's helping a veteran fix up his house or rescuing a baby from an overturned car, we are lucky to have so many Soldiers live the Army values every day.

Thanksgiving blessings, many thanks from chairman

Pace

This Thanksgiving we join Americans everywhere in giving thanks for the many blessings we enjoy as citizens of this great nation.

Those freedoms for which we give thanks, however, came about only through tremendous sacrifice.

Nearly 400 years ago, the Pilgrims inaugurated Thanksgiving after surviving the first harsh winter at Plymouth.

George Washington proclaimed the first national day of Thanksgiving during the early struggles of the republic, and Abraham Lincoln later revived the tradition following the dark days of the Civil War.

On this Thanksgiving Day, we are again engaged in a great struggle, this time against terrorists who threaten the values we hold so dear.

Like those before you, a new generation of courageous Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen, Marines, Coast Guardsmen and Merchant Marines continues the noble tradition of service to the nation.

To each of you in uniform, we are thankful for your dedication and selflessness.

Many will pause on this special day, and give thanks for the freedom your service makes possible.

On this day, when duty will keep many of you away from home and loved ones, the joint chiefs join me in sending you and your families our best wishes for a happy Thanksgiving.

This November, we honor the extraordinary contributions of our nation's military families as part of national Military Family Appreciation Month.

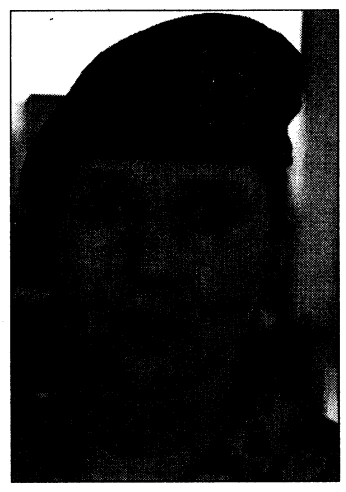
Throughout our history, the steadfast support of military families has always been a source of inspiration.

You have faced the special challenges of long deployments, family separations and frequent relocations with great courage and resolve.

In doing so, your selfless dedication has directly contributed to the mission readiness of our Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen, Marines, Coast Guardsmen and Merchant Marines.

My heartfelt thanks to the families who sacrifice so much — you are patriots in a quiet, strong way and you make all the difference.

You support us, even though we work long hours that often interrupt your plans. When we are away, you hold our families together. When we get tired, you remind us how important our jobs are. When we receive recognition, you stand in the background.

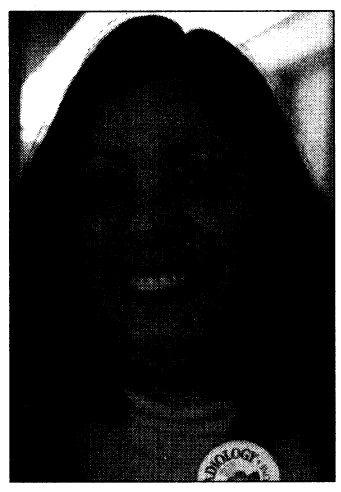


You define us and sustain us. You promise us the tomorrows for which we strive.

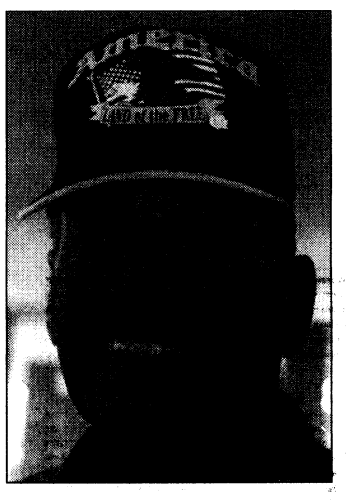
The joint chiefs of staff join me in thanking all military families for their faithful service to their communities, their loved ones and this nation.

— Gen. Peter Pace
Joint chiefs of staff chairman

VARIOUS VOICES

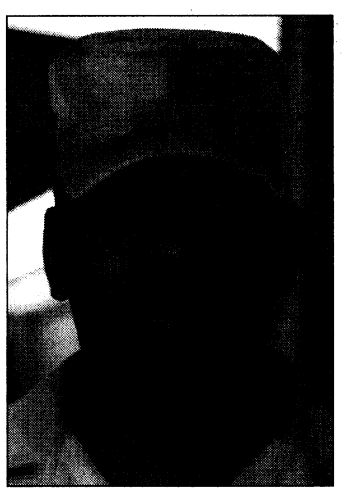


Where have you seen selfless service best demonstrated?

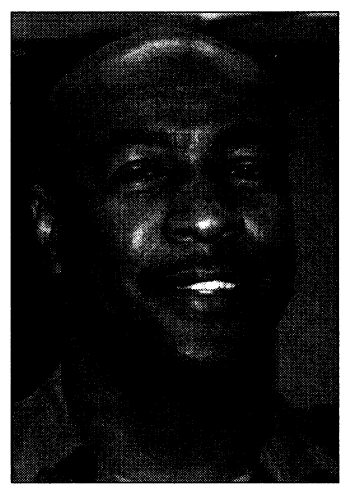


Master Sgt. Anka Jurden, 641st Mobile Transport Company — "We mobilize and demobilize Soldiers that come back from Iraq, and we talk with them as they process out. I think anyone who goes overseas and risks his or her life for this country shows selfless service."

Sheri Belcher, family member — "When I first got here at Fort Benning and needed assistance with child care and schools, the (people at the preschool) helped me take care of registrations and told me about the various services on post."

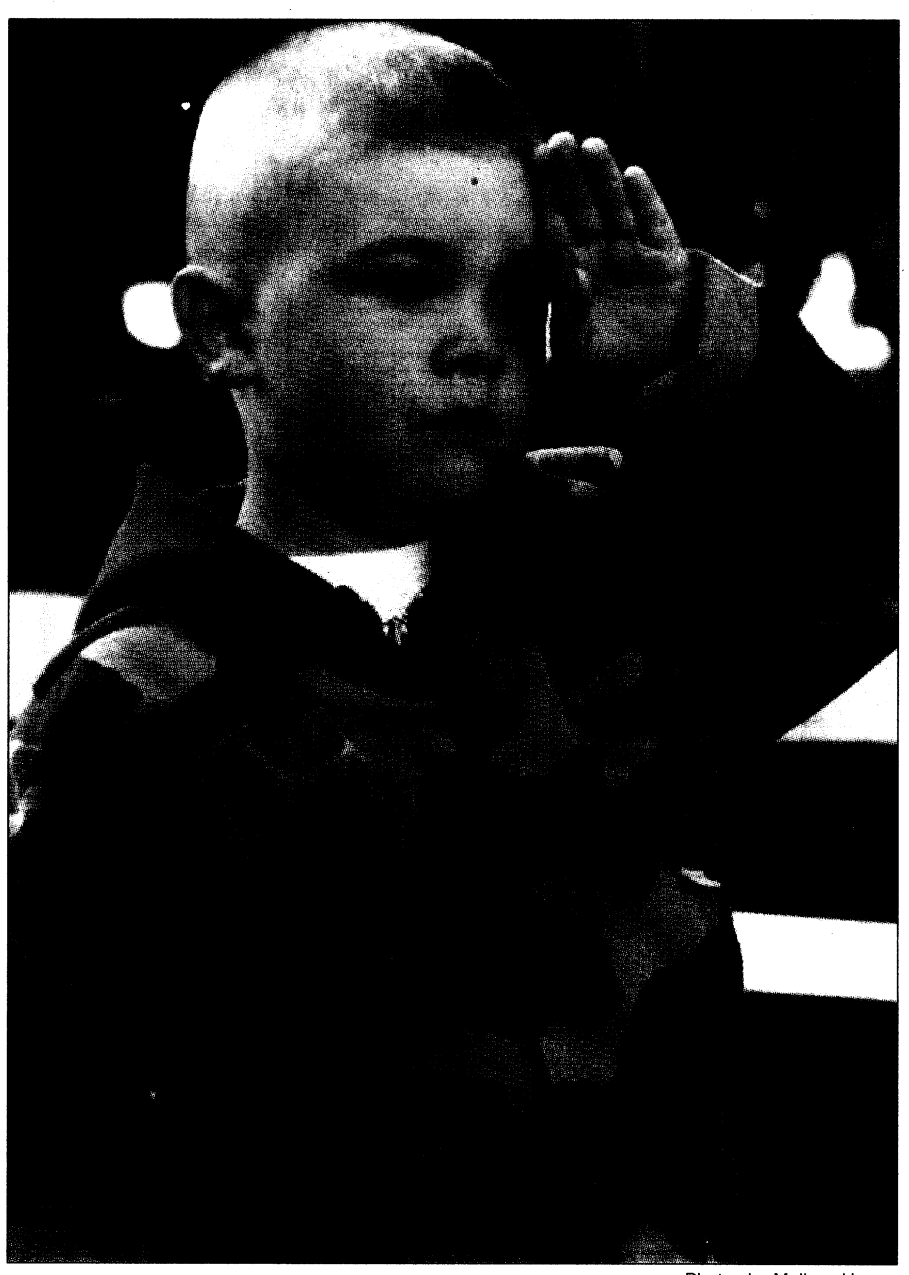


Magda Hernandez, Martin Army Community Hospital employee — "I used to work for Army Community Services in Maryland, and I think ACS is excellent. They provide assistance to family members free of charge."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class Arthur Porter, Columbus — "I see people having bake sales to help military families whose Soldiers went overseas, and those who remember our troops who went to Vietnam. To me, that's selfless service."

Betty Gibbs, AAFES concessionaire — "I was impressed with the way people helped each other after Hurricane Katrina. A lot of the victims came up here and people took them into their homes."



2 Lt. Jason Clayton, Medical Retention Battalion — "Most of the Soldiers who are injured in northern Iraq go to the Casualty Aeronautical Support Facility in Kuwait. The Airmen at that facility do a fantastic job making sure all wounded personnel receive top-notch treatment. They make us feel welcome. I broke my wrist, and they made me feel like I was at home."

Sgt. Maj. Allen K. Johnson, TRADOC System Manager of the Stryker, Bradley — "I believe selfless service was best demonstrated by anyone who supported Hurricane Katrina relief projects."

who will draw on it to face the challenges that lie ahead.

"All who have worn the uniform understand the ideals of liberty and freedom for all," he said. "And they all understand the Soldier's Creed — I will always place the mission first, I will never accept defeat and I will never leave a fallen comrade."

Schoomaker said the long war the country is engaged in will continue to test the Soldiers who fight it.

"All Americans sleep better at night because of the Army's willingness to defend freedom," he said. "We are motivated by the unwavering belief that you will be victorious and we take great comfort that the training at Fort Benning has prepared you well."

Schoomaker presented awards and coins to the drill sergeant of the cycle and Soldier of the cycle for both of the companies.

Ten family members came from New Jersey to see Clayton realize a long-standing dream of becoming a Soldier.

"He's wanted to do this since he was three and worked very hard to get here," his mom, Judith said. "He's enjoyed it, and I'm glad.

"I'm happy with him and I'm happy with the Army. I'm just a happy parent."

Rosa Bell, Dixie Road shoppette manager, said this should have happened years ago.

"Soldiers deserve the best," Bell said. "The facilities were not up to standard and now they are. This will help morale, with product availability, and fast service."

This is the second new AAFES facility to open on post this month. Less than two weeks ago, Kelley Hill's new mini-mall opened.

"Right now Kelley Hill is doing great. People are patronizing the area," Holloway said.

Holloway said customers can expect even more from AAFES. The new food court in Infantry Hall, which will house a Charley's Grilled Subs and Wings Express, will open in January. And Martin Army Community Hospital will soon be home to a new Starbucks, expected to open shortly after in January.

Army goal reality now

Soldier leaves Jamaica, joins NY Guard

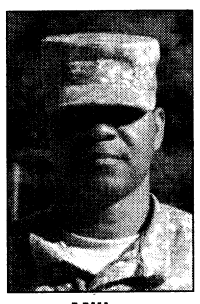
Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

The sounds of battle are nothing new to Pvt. Gary Miller, 36.

The Jamaican native was a veteran to war even before he started his 15-year career in the Jamaican army. His struggle for survival, surrounded by violence, started when he was just a boy.

Miller is the last of 10 children. Since there was not much money, from age 10 until 17, he had to earn his own money to buy books and attend school.

He didn't officially graduate high school, because his family was too poor to pay for the final exam required to receive his diploma.



Miller said he and a friend would sell fish they caught illegally at night to earn school money.

Another way they made money was from ships that brought in wheat.

"Some of the wheat would fall to the ground. We'd scrape it up and sell it on the street," Miller said.

The streets were often violent in East Kingston, Jamaica, Miller said, and being affiliated with the wrong political group could mean death.

The politicians, he said, used the militia to enforce community rule, and ensure votes.

Miller

Elections occur every five years in Jamaica, and communities became politically divided, Miller said.

"If you got through an election, you could consider yourself lucky," he said.

Miller said most of the people he grew up with were killed because of the political violence.

Ironically, violence itself is what prompted Miller to join the Jamaican army.

Most of his career was spent patrolling the streets of Jamaica. It wasn't until one of his sisters suggested he come to the U.S. that Miller considered visiting the states.

"My sister had the information about relatives in the Bronx. She gave me the number and I called and spoke to my aunt," Miller said. "She didn't know who she was talking to. She only knew I existed, but she knew nothing about me in terms of name."

He left the Jamaican army in 1999 to live in New York.

As he settled in his new home, Miller was disappointed to learn he was too old to join the regular Army, so he visited a National Guard recruiter.

"I am not a person who sits in the office or fixes a truck. I want to be out there. I want to put my two cents in. The only way to be a Soldier is the Infantry," said Miller, who feels his life experience can help others he will be serving with.

"A lot of them (at training) don't take it serious because they are young, and because of my experience, I can help them. I can put in some good input based on the experience I have," Miller said.

Staff. Sgt. George Wommack, Miller's drill sergeant, said Miller's peers respect him.

"They listen to what he has to say. If there's any animosity around, they'll listen to him," Wommack said.

Miller's battle buddy, Pvt. Kevin Milam, 19, from Montgomery, Ala., said Miller helps everyone.

"Everybody takes his advice and pays attention to how he does things. Overall, he's just a great person and a motivator, and keeps everyone in line," Milam said.

"He helps me keep emotions back so they don't interfere (with training). I look toward him as a father figure," Milam said.

After returning to his National Guard unit in February 2006, Miller will have to serve for six months before he'll get a chance to transfer into the regular Army, something he aspires to do.

"It's been a long road. I'm finally here," Miller said.

Miller is eager to deploy and put in his share.

"I'll be here until I am walking with a cane," he said.

Volkstrauertag

Donna Hyatt

Fort Benning's Main Post Cemetery is the final resting place for 44 World War II German prisoners of war. Fort Benning's German liaison officer, Lt. Col. Herbert Sladek, and other officials paid tribute to those soldiers on Volkstrauertag, the German National Day of Mourning, Nov. 16. Leopold Haenel, deputy consul of the German consulate general in Atlanta, was the guest speaker for the event. The 44 German soldiers buried in the cemetery died between 1944 and 1946.

Taxi: Changes rates for various zones travel around the installation, said Gaynelle Rutledge, the post's taxi contract representative. Customers leaving posts will pay established off-post rates, which are controlled by Columbus and Phenix City officials.

The greatest change with the new contract, Poole said, will prohibit drivers who have not signed a contract from entering post to pick up or drop off customers.

That means drivers who pick up customers in Columbus will have to drop them off at the entrance to Fort Benning, and the customer may have to hire a second taxi to take them to their destination.

Post officials have no control over taxi companies who have not signed a contract and no way to ensure drivers tell their customers they can't take them onto post when they pick them up.

"It's important we get the word out to Soldiers," Poole said, "so they know to ask before they ride."

Taxi stands will be located at the I-185 and Benning Road access control points for those Soldiers who find themselves dropped off by a non-contracted driver.

And the military liaison at the Columbus Airport "is being educated" about post taxi regulations, Poole said, so he can steer Soldiers toward companies that can take them on post and therefore save them money. Contract companies can not charge for luggage, parcels or duffel bags, she said.

There are eight taxi companies with signed contracts serving Fort Benning and approximately 90 drivers.

Effective Dec. 1, the following zone rates apply on post:

- Main Post (anywhere, including the Benning Road and I-185 access control points), $4
- Kelley Hill, (to and from anywhere on Kelley Hill), $2

Kelley Hill to Main Mall Post Exchange, $3

- Sand Hill (to and from anywhere on Sand Hill), $2
- Sand Hill to Main Post, $6
- Main Post to Uchee Creek, $9
- Sand Hill to Main Mall Post Exchange or Martin Army Community Hospital, $5
- McGraw Manor to Main Post, $5
- McGraw Manor to Sand Hill, $4
- Custer Terrace to Main Post, $4
- Custer Terrace to Sand Hill, $5
- The Main Mall Post Exchange or Martin Army Community Hospital to Main Post, $4
- McGraw Manor or Custer Terrace to Kelley Hill, $7

Country artist's tour stops at Fort Benning

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

Country music fans had the chance to meet rising country star Raymond Harris at the Main Mall Post Exchange Friday and Saturday.

Harris' stop at Fort Benning is part of a tour that will encompass military posts around the globe.

"Soldiers have a hard enough job leaving their families. I want to do my part to support the troops ... and their families," Harris said.

Harris gave autographed pictures and promoted his latest CD, Hurt by the Best. A percentage of his CD sales will be donated to military community programs, he said.

"Troops don't get the support they should. They keep this country free, and I appreciate the freedom," Harris said.

Harris said his idea to visit every military post around the world came from visiting Fort Campbell, Ky., in February.

He said the support there was so great, he was asked to visit more posts. Since then, it's grown into a tour that will take five years to complete. Harris said he is trying to get other country and western music performers to join him. Harris said he also hopes to perform for troops in Iraq in 2007.

Lee Holloway, AAFES general manager, said Harris' visit supports the AAFES motto, "We go where you go."

"You have a celebrity who's traveled to various posts, spending time with our customers," Holloway said. "It's a kind of partnership — in showing our support for Soldiers and their families."

Harris said the tour has been an incredible experience.

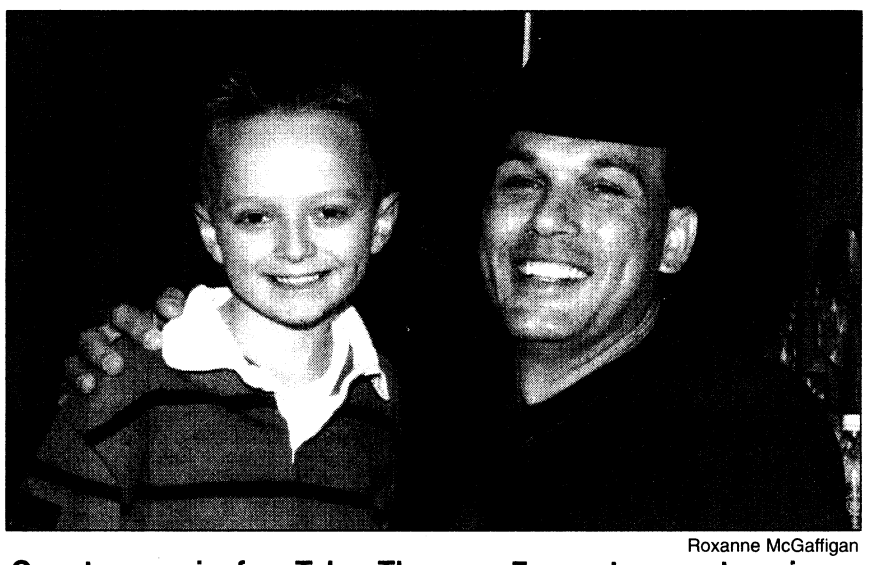
"Everyone is so good ... they really make me feel like family," he said.

The military is not completely foreign to Harris; he enlisted in the Navy, but his career was cut short because of a knee injury during basic training.

Harris, grandson of the late Johnny Cash, said his dream of a music career was realized in July 2004, when he sold his trucking business and pursued music full time. He appeared at the Grand Ole Opry Nov. 5.

Country fan Tyler Thomas, 7, was excited to get an autograph.

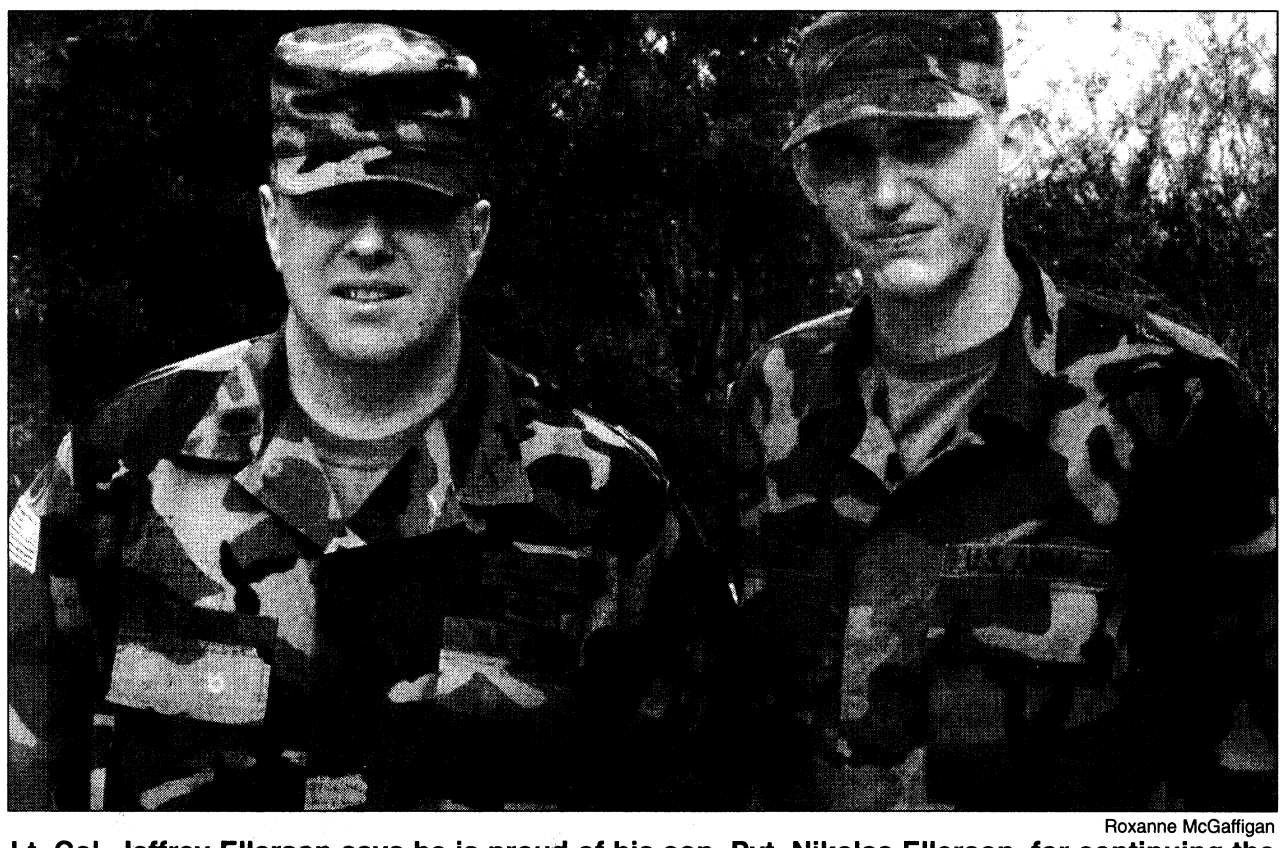
"I like (country music) because of all the stories," Thomas said.



Samaentha Cunningham said her father bought her Harris' new CD last Friday. She enjoyed it so much that Cunningham headed to the Main Mall Post Exchange Saturday for a last chance to meet the country singer.

"I just got the music, and now I'm a big fan," Cunningham said.

Sgt. 1st Class Jackie Blankenship said Harris' appearance is great for Soldier morale.



"Some people put bumper stickers on their car. This guy is really out here showing his support," Blankenship said.

Harris' CDs, Hurt by the Best and Dance Thirty, can only be purchased at AAFES stores, or online at www.raymondharrisusa.com.

Lt. Col. Jeffrey Ellerson says he is proud of his son, Pvt. Nikolas Ellerson, for continuing the family tradition by joining the Army.

Father, son share service

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

For 22-year-old Nikolas Ellerson, a part-time job washing dishes had as much impact on his decision to join the Army as his family's tradition of serving did. Joining the Infantry wasn't something he had planned.

In fact, Nick didn't even consider the Army until he realized he wanted more out of his life than washing dishes at Chili's. He married just before shipping out for one station unit training at Fort Benning, where his father and grandfather trained.

Lt. Col. Geoffrey Ellerson, commander of 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, said he is proud of his son, now a private in 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., at Sand Hill.

After 12 weeks of basic training, Nick and his father agree that Nick has grown up a lot.

"I'm a lot more confident," said Nick, who knows he's likely to deploy to Iraq with whatever unit he's assigned to. And he'll be ready when the day comes because of his training and faith in his fellow Soldiers, Nick said.

"The good news is he'll be with eight others in his squad who will be as well trained as he will," said Geoff, whose unit's mission is to prepare new lieutenants in the Infantry Officer Basic Course to be platoon leaders — the leaders who will one day lead his son into battle.

"I'll make sure he'll have a good platoon leader," Geoff said.

As for Nick, now, he said, he understands "certain things" about his dad — "Like how he could always be so patient in roller coaster ride lines."

Both laughed and smiled.

"Nick is much better at drill and ceremony than his old man, but he can't shoot as well," Geoff said to his son, both smiling the same Ellerson grin.

Because Thanksgiving falls on a different date each year, the president of the United States must issue an executive order to officially set the date. In 1789, George Washington proclaimed the first national day of Thanksgiving. Thomas Jefferson didn't declare any holidays, because the very act struck him as "too monarchial."

Wende Molisani stood beside her son in the lobby of a local hotel Friday afternoon. He was still decked out in his Class As, hours after graduating from basic training. In walked a group of protestors spewing anti-military sentiments.

"It made me want to cry," Molisani said. "Look, I'm not for the war, but I'm going to support our military. People need to think about what they say, how it makes the families of our Soldiers feel."

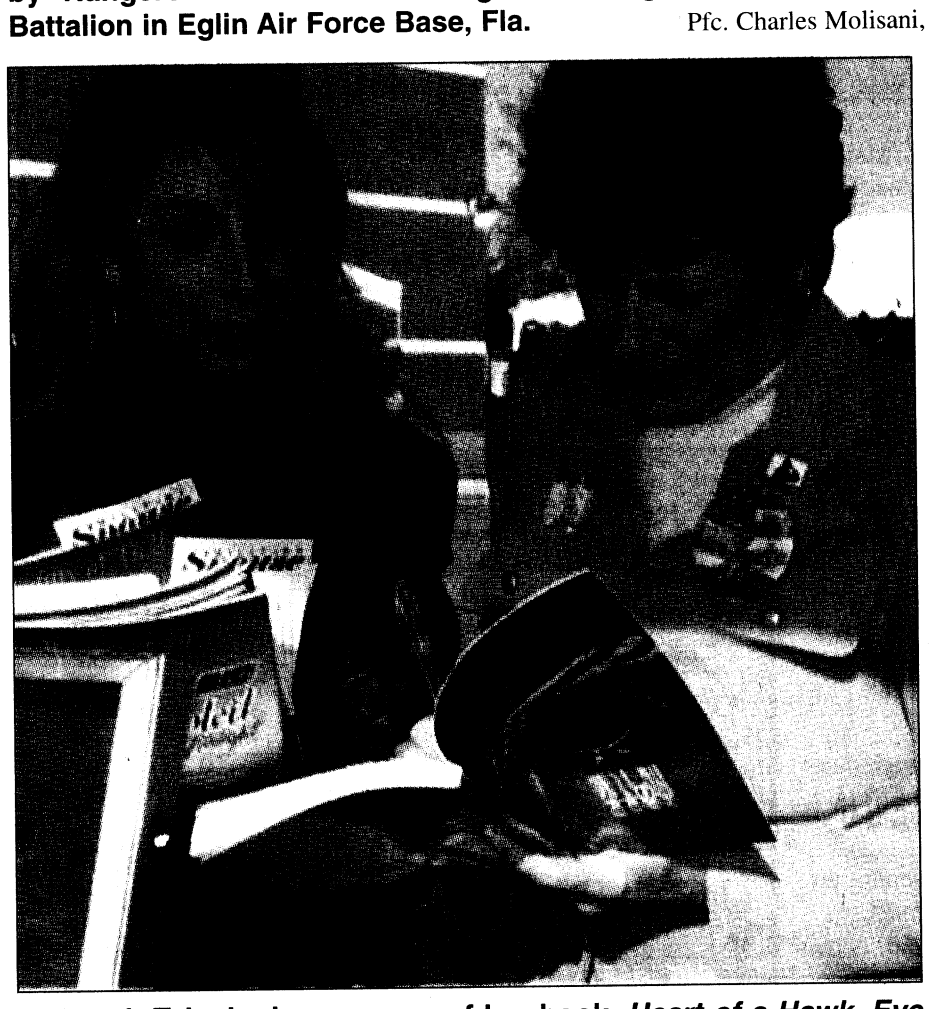
In stark contrast to Friday's "awkwardness," as Molisani called it, she found support and encouragement Saturday at the fourth annual God Bless Fort Benning rally at the Columbus Civic Center.

"This is different. It's a great surprise," said Molisani, who attended the event with her son, Pfc. Charles Molisani, who's assigned to the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii.

The Molisanis were among an estimated 25,000 guests who participated in what has become this area's largest show of support for the troops at Fort Benning and the families they leave behind when they deploy to fight the Global War on Terrorism.

Dr. Jack Tidwell, who founded the event with his wife, Eve, said as long as Fort Benning troops continue to do their part to protect freedom around the world, the local community will do its part to support them.

"We will not cut and run," he said. "Our Soldiers don't cut and run when they're called on to fight, and we will not cut and run on the war."



Saturday's events included a concert by country music star Tracy Lawrence, a visit by the Anheuser-Busch Clydesdales, performances by 15 bands, a meet-and-greet with a number of authors, helicopter rides, a motorcycle rally, and a number of side shows, fairway rides and games.

Tidwell, who was joined on stage by local dignitaries, including the mayors of Columbus and Phenix City and Fort Benning's commanding general, Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, told the audience the rally was a protest of sorts.

"We're protesting terrorism," Tidwell said, thanking the 700 plus basic trainees in attendance, who enlisted in an Army at war. "Thank you for standing up in this, our nation's fight against terrorism."

Tracy Lawrence performed his latest release, If I Don't Make it Back, during his concert Saturday at the rally.

Deborah Tainsh signs a copy of her book, Heart of a Hawk, Eye of the Eagle, for Sarah Lorenzen. Tainsh, whose son, Sgt. Patrick Tainsh, was killed in Iraq last year, was one of several authors at the rally.

More than 700 basic training Soldiers lined the motorcycle route, as 200 cyclists participated in the second annual God Bless Fort Benning motorcycle rally. "It sure is nice to see this kind of support," said Pvt. Chris Martinez, who will graduate from 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Dec. 9.

ASK THE JUDGE

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I changed my mind on a purchase and now I want to cancel the contract. Can I do so?

A: The terms of a contract set out the rules of the transaction between the buyer and the seller.

The contract must be examined therefore to know whether or not cancellation is allowed.

Some contracts have a specific "cancellation period," allowing the buyer to cancel the agreement. If there is such a section in the contract, then the buyer must follow those terms exactly.

For example, if the contract says that it may be cancelled within seven business days by sending a written notice of cancellation by certified mail, then that is exactly what the buyer must do.

A phone call to an "800" number or an e-mail might be easier, but if the contract sets out a certain cancellation method, it must be done that way or the contract is not cancelled.

Even if written notice is not required, it is still best to send a written follow-up letter to the seller and keep a copy.

Generally speaking, if a contract does not have a cancellation provision, then the sale is final at the time of transaction.

One exception may be the "72-hour rule" in which door-to-door sales can be cancelled within three days.

What constitutes door-to-door sales has evolved in recent years, so check with an attorney before you try to cancel a contract.

Public help needed in Ga. tick attach study

Department of Human Resources

The Georgia Department of Human Resources, Division of Public Health, is continuing its study of ticks in the state, and asking people to send ticks in for study. The Tick Attach study, which is working to increase understanding of tick-borne disease, is being conducted in cooperation with the University of Georgia and the Georgia Poison Center, and continues through April 2006. Since the study began last spring, more than 350 ticks have been collected from around the state.

"Although most people associate ticks with summer, ticks are still abundant in the autumn months and in warmer weather during the winter," said Dr. Stuart Brown, director of the Division of Public Health. "Anyone who finds a tick attached to them during the fall should call the Georgia Poison Center (404-616-9000 or 800-222-1222) and arrange to have the tick mailed in. The more ticks we receive, the greater our opportunity to learn where ticks are biting people in Georgia, and if they are carrying disease-causing organisms."

People who submit ticks for testing will receive a phone call in about three weeks from the health department asking about their exposure to tick habitats and whether or not they have developed any symptoms of a tick-borne illness. Brown said the public's help is needed to assist in the study and only ticks that have been attached to humans should be submitted.

There are hundreds of species of ticks but only a few commonly bite humans in Georgia: the American dog tick, the lone star tick and the black-legged tick. These three species can carry five diseases that are harmful to humans: Lyme disease (black-legged tick); Rocky Mountain spotted fever and tularemia (American dog tick); Southern tick-associated rash illness (STARI) and human monocytic ehrlichiosis (lone star tick).

"Although each disease has unique characteristics, generally symptoms of tick-borne disease can occur anywhere from three or four days to four weeks after being bitten and may include fever, rash, headache and muscle pain," Brown said. "Not everyone develops all of these symptoms, and some people develop other symptoms like nausea, swollen lymph nodes, chills and weakness."

Ticks are commonly found in shady areas, moist ground litter, tall grass, brush, low tree branches and along trails in the woods. They can also be found in backyards that back up to woody areas. Most cases of tick-borne disease in Georgia occur between April and September but infection can occur year round.

To remove a tick from the skin, grasp the tick as close to the skin surface as possible with fine-tipped tweezers. Pull the tick straight out slowly. Wash and treat the bite area with a disinfectant. Do not squeeze the tick, twist the tick, light the tick on fire, or cover the tick in petroleum jelly, nail polish, alcohol or kerosene.

These home remedies may increase the chances of transmitting the bacteria and become infected with a tick-borne illness. Save the tick and call the Georgia Poison Center at (404) 616-9000 or (800) 222-1222 for information about tick identification and testing.

The best thing you can do to avoid being bitten by a tick is:

- Wear insect repellent containing DEET on your skin.
- Wear insect repellent containing permethrin on your clothes (not on skin).
- Tuck pants into socks and shirt into pants so ticks can't crawl up pants legs.
- Wear light-colored clothing so ticks can be seen easily and removed.
- Wear a hat and pull long hair back.
- Do tick checks frequently during the day and a full-body tick check at the end of the day. Use a mirror and check behind ears, behind knees, underarms and groin. Ask someone to help you check your back and scalp, especially the nape of the neck. Take a shower and wash your hair before going to bed.
- Do not sit directly on the ground — use a blanket or towel.
- Remove excess brush and keep grass mowed around the house.

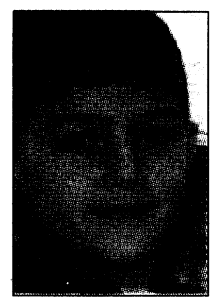
Military children win top essay honors

Family focus of winning essays

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

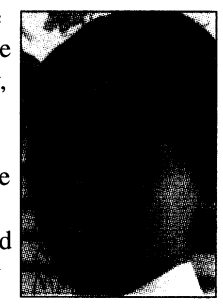
Two military children took home top honors in a Columbuswide essay contest entitled "What my family means to me."

The competition was designed to promote National Family Week. Melissa Fleshman, director of Human Resources for the Family Center of Columbus, said the contest is one way the center and the local chamber of commerce bring families closer together through community and school activities.



Fleshman said more than 1,500 essays were judged by their overall presentation. One winner was chosen from each of the elementary and middle school levels. Jarrod Wood, 8, and Kiuana Hemingway, 12, were the winners in their respective groups.

This year's topic gave children a chance to express what their family means to them.



"My family means togetherness, keeping promises and always thinking about each other," wrote Wood, a third-grader at Reese Road Elementary.

Hemingway, who includes her dog, Isaac, in her essay, described the comforts of having family.

"When one family member is in pain, there is always someone in the family to help. Even if it's my dog, he'll at least lick the sadness away and try to comfort us … Without them I would not survive … for I will always and forever love them," wrote Hemingway, a seventh-grader at Faith Middle School.

Wood

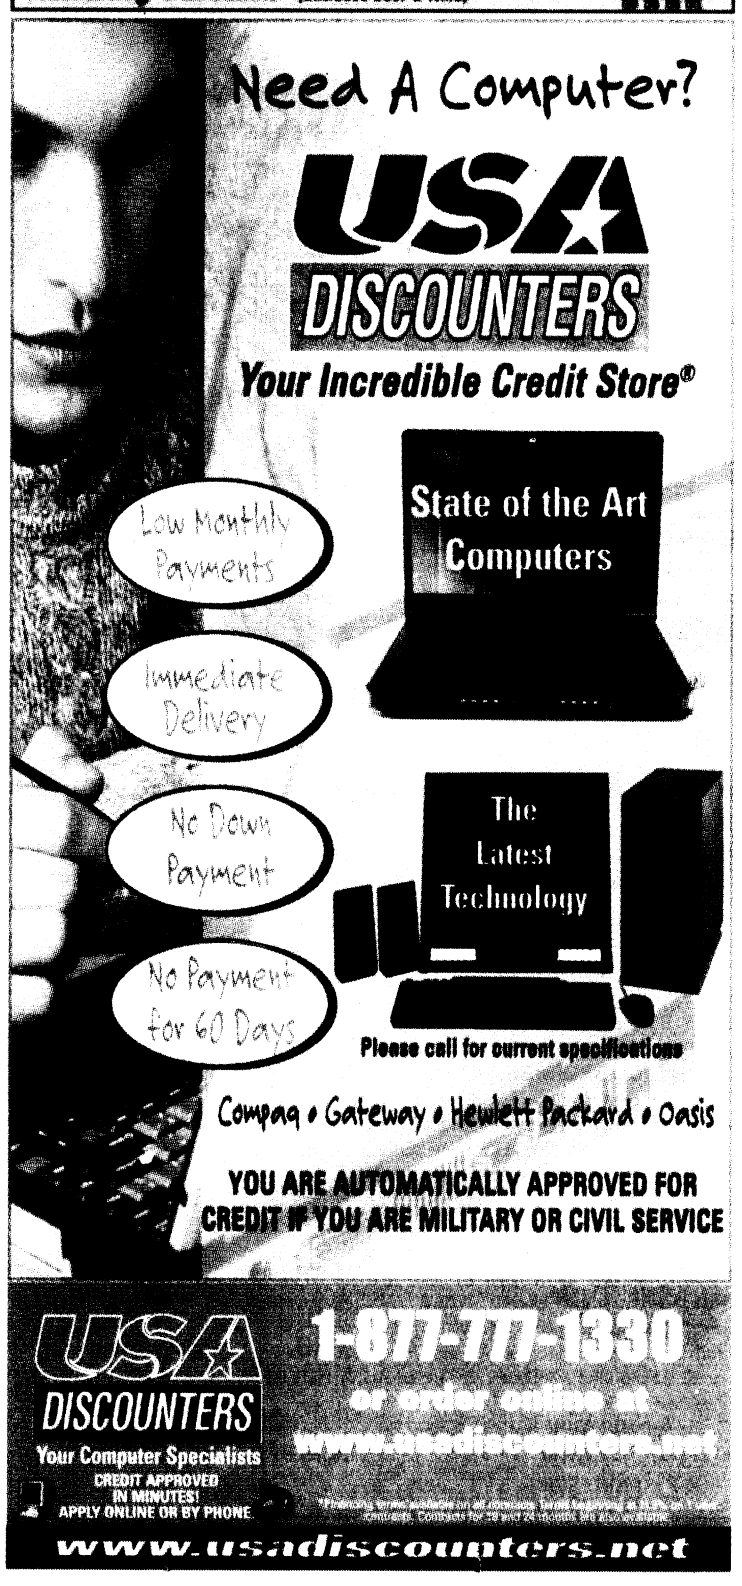
Hemingway

Wood and Hemingway each received a $50 savings bond, gift certificates to Bruster's Real Ice Cream and a trophy.

LaTonya Hemingway, Kiuana's mother, said she's very proud of her daughter, especially with the honesty in her writing.

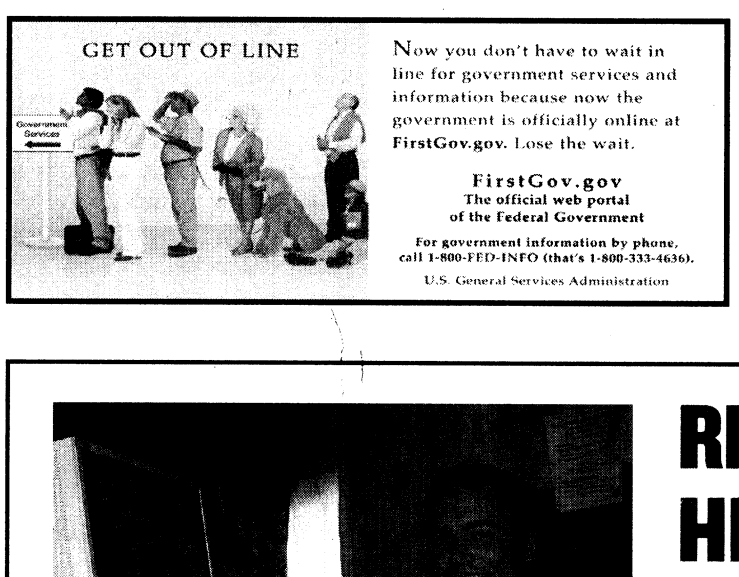
"The little things we do mean so much to children," Hemingway said.

Colleen Wood said her son was surprised and excited when he heard he was the winner.



"His eyes got big and his mouth opened wide. He loved it," Wood said.

Both winners' parents agreed that bringing National Family Week into the community is a great idea.



"This is a great focus for the community. Family is important, especially where there are so many deployed Soldiers," Hemingway said.

National Family Week was started in 1968 by an Indianapolis teacher wanting to promote strong families.

How to safely thaw holiday turkey

The University of Georgia Cooperative Extension

The U. S. Department of Agriculture recommends three ways to defrost a turkey, and none include thawing on the counter!

Thawing on the kitchen counter is not a safe way to defrost food, and turkey is definitely included. The three accepted ways to thaw a turkey are in the refrigerator, in cold water and in the microwave.

Thawing in the refrigerator requires planning ahead. For every five pounds of turkey, allow approximately 24 hours of thawing time in a refrigerator set at 40 degrees Fahrenheit. After thawing, keep turkey refrigerated for only one to two days before cooking.

If you forget to thaw the turkey or don't have room in the refrigerator for thawing, don't panic. You can submerge the bird or cut-up parts in cold water in its airtight packaging or a leaf-proof bag.

Allow about 30 minutes defrosting time per pound of turkey. Change the water every 30 minutes to be sure it stays cold. An eight- to 12-pound turkey takes four to six hours to defrost. Turkeys thawed this way should be cooked immediately.

Follow the microwave oven manufacturer's instructions when thawing a turkey that will fill your oven, the minutes per pound, and the power level used for thawing.

Plan to cook immediately after thawing, because some areas of the turkey may begin to cook during microwave thawing.

Safely thawing the turkey can help prevent foodborne illness. To keep the turkey safely out of the temperature danger zone while thawing, following any of the three accepted ways.

Plan now to thaw and keep those thawing turkeys off the counter!

Cook turkey safely this Thanksgiving

The University of Georgia Cooperative Extension

After safely thawing the holiday turkey, the time arrives to begin cooking the turkey in anticipation of a meal to remember. Just be aware that the people who eat your meal do not want to remember it as a holiday of foodborne illness. Here's how to properly cook the turkey so that your guests will have fond recollections of the holiday season.

Begin with the correct oven temperature set no lower than 325 degrees Fahrenheit. Although preheating is not necessary, you may still want to preheat your oven for best results. Place the turkey on a rack in a shallow heavyweight roasting pan large enough to hold the turkey and a meat thermometer.

For food safety and uniform doneness of the turkey, cook stuffing separately in a casserole dish. Use a food thermometer to check that the internal temperature of the stuffing has reached 165 degrees Fahrenheit in the middle, thickest part.

Now the question that everyone wants answered, "Is it done yet?" Even if the turkey has a "pop up" temperature indicator, it is also recommended that a food thermometer be used to test in several places, including the innermost part of the thigh. When the temperature of the poultry meat (as measured in the thigh) has reached 180 degrees Fahrenheit, there is usually no other site in the bird lower than the safe temperature,

Next, check the temperature in several locations, being sure to include the wing joint. All turkey meat, including any that remains pink, is safe to eat as soon as these parts have reached 180 degrees Fahrenheit.

Many factors can affect the roasting time of a whole turkey. A frozen or partially frozen turkey takes longer to cook than a completely thawed turkey. And, a turkey will cook faster in a dark roasting pan.

The use of a foil tent for the entire cooking time can actually slow cooking. Putting a lid on the roasting pan speeds up cooking and an oven-cooking bag will shorten cooking time. The National Turkey Federation recommends the open roasting pan method in a preheated oven for best quality.

A fresh or thawed 12- to 14-pound turkey will take approximately three to three-and-a-half hours to cook at 325 degrees Fahrenheit. Cooking charts give times for judging cooking times of different sizes of turkeys; however, the only way to accurately determine doneness is by using a thermometer. Remember when the turkey is removed from the oven, let it stand for 20 minutes.

You've almost made it to the finish line. Don't make the mistake of cross-contaminating the cooked turkey. Be sure to carve the bird with a clean knife, using clean hands on a clean work surface, wearing a clean apron, and placing the finished product on a clean serving plate. After correctly cooking the turkey, the key word for food safety is clean.

Now, it's time to relax and make fond memories of a safe holiday meal with family and friends.

Prevent foodborne illness, keep everything clean

The University of Georgia Cooperative Extension

A large crowd to cook for, a big bird to roast and too many cooks in the kitchen can lead to foodborne illness from holiday dining. But handling and cooking a turkey should not be an illness waiting to happen. Following basic recommendations will help you ensure safe food and prevent foodborne illness for diners — not only during the holidays, but year round.

First, be sure to keep everything clean. That includes your hands and kitchen surfaces while you are preparing holiday meals. Wash hands and kitchen surfaces with hot soapy water. Also wash cutting boards, dishes and utensils after preparing each food item and before you start another food item. Use paper towels for cleaning up kitchen surfaces. Keep sponges out of the kitchen, they are not food safe.

Next, always separate raw and ready-to-eat foods. Cross-contamination is the scientific word for how bacteria can be spread from one food product to another. This process begins at the grocery store and continues to carry-home bags, and your refrigerator. Use one cutting board for raw meat, poultry and seafood and another cutting board for ready-to-eat foods. Never place cooked food on a plate that previously held raw meat and poultry unless the plate has been thoroughly cleaned.

Cook food to the proper temperature. Use a food thermometer to make sure meat and poultry are cooked to a proper temperature and keep a cooking internal temperature chart handy. Whole chicken and turkey should be cooked to 180 degrees Fahrenheit internal temperature in the thigh part of the bird. If cooking a turkey breast only, cook to at least 170 degrees in the thickest part. Thoroughly reheat leftovers to 165 degrees Fahrenheit internal temperature and be sure to bring gravies, sauces and soups to a rolling boil.

Finally, chill everything promptly. Refrigerate or freeze leftovers within two hours by placing them in shallow containers to cool rapidly. Keep the refrigerator temperature at 40 degrees Fahrenheit or below and the freezer at zero degrees Fahrenheit.

Monitor the temperatures with an appliance thermometer. Always thaw food in the refrigerator, under running cold water or in the microwave and marinate foods in the refrigerator.

Store leftovers safely now for more enjoyment later

The University of Georgia Cooperative Extension

The excitement of celebrating a Thanksgiving meal with friends and family has now faded and it's time to begin dealing with the leftovers.

It isn't a favorite job, but is very important to the safety of the food your family and guests may eat later. Four steps are important for safe leftovers.

First, make sure you have clean hands, work surface, utensils and apron when you begin to work. Second, separate the turkey, stuffing and gravy into shallow containers. Be sure to cut the turkey into small pieces. Third, chill all leftovers within two hours of cooking. That means taking care to store the leftovers in the refrigerator or freezer immediately.

The refrigerator should be 40 degrees Fahrenheit or below; the freezer temperature should be zero degrees Fahrenheit. Do not overload the refrigerator or freezer with leftovers, causing the temperature to rise above the recommended storage temperature. Keep an appliance thermometer in the refrigerator and freezer to monitor safe temperatures.

Finally, reheat safely. Reheat leftovers to at least 165 degrees Fahrenheit and check the internal temperature of the thickest part with a food thermometer. Bring graves, sauces and soups to a rolling boil.

Use turkey and stuffing within three to four days; gravy should be used within one to two days. It is safe to freeze leftover cooked turkey and trimmings even if you purchased them frozen. Wrap and seal leftovers tightly for best quality and be sure to thaw frozen leftovers in the refrigerator. When you are ready to re-serve the leftovers, be sure to follow the reheating safety rules.

Food safety steps for correctly storing the turkey and trimmings are critical when preparing your favorite sandwiches, casseroles and soups from leftovers. The four steps of clean, separate, chill and reheat will give you the confidence that leftovers can be safely enjoyed during the holiday season. Each step is important, so don't take short cuts.

REFLECTIONS

There was a little boy who lived in the Midwest. He was blind. His family heard about an eye surgeon at Massachusetts General Hospital who had developed a new surgical technique that was related to the boy's condition.

There was a possibility that if he could be sent to Boston for this surgery, the boy might have the gift of sight. It was very expensive. The people in the church contributed to the cause. So did some others in the surrounding community. Finally, all preparations had been made and the boy and his mother were packed and ready to go.

As they were saying their good-byes to the rest of the family, the mother noticed that the little boy had tucked his old teddy bear under his arm. The teddy bear had seen better days — some of the stuffing was popping out through a broken seam, one ear had been chewed and an eye was missing.

In the hospital, the little boy had his teddy bear tucked under his arm through every experience — even into the operating room. Through the long period of post-operative convalescence, the teddy bear stayed with him.

Then came the day when the doctor was able to remove the bandages from the boy's eyes. Wonderful! He could see! Imagine what it must have been like for him to see his mother's face for the first time. Imagine what it was like for that little boy to see his teddy bear for the first time!

The boy was sitting on the edge of the bed, clutching his teddy bear, when the eye surgeon who had restored his sight came into the room for the last visit. Before the doctor could say anything, the little boy spoke: "Here, doctor, I want to pay you for helping me," and handed him the battered old teddy bear. The doctor took the teddy bear into his hands, accepting it without reservation.

Waynick

For some months after that, if you had gone to the 10th floor of the "White Building" in the Massachusetts General Hospital complex you could have seen the teddy bear. The doctor had put it in a glass case in the corridor.

There it sat, one ear chewed, stuffing coming out, one eye missing. Under the teddy bear the doctor had placed his professional calling card and below his name had written this sentence: "This is the highest fee I ever received for professional services rendered."

As we approach the season of "gift giving" — we as God's people remember the gift God gave us (John 3:16). It was and still is the greatest gift man can receive. We can never pay for it, earn it or buy it. We can, however, live in response to it.

That is what the church's season of Advent is about — remembering that God's gift of Christ came into our world, so that he might come into our lives, that we might by his grace come into his kingdom forever.

A blessed Advent to you!

Thanksgiving means faith, family, freedom

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

I love this time of year. (Not just because of the half-day work schedule.)

I love this time of year. (Not just because I get to eat enough pecan pie to make my veins run with corn syrup.)

I love this time of year. (Not just because I can slump in the La-Z-Boy, maintain total control of the remote, and drool heavily while passing in and out of consciousness throughout 246 football games.)

I love this time of year because I'm truly thankful. Of all the mental health exercises that people with lots of initials in front and after their names recommend, none is more effective than the simple technique second-graders were practicing in Sunday School this past week as they sang the ageless little chorus, "Count your blessings, name them one by one. Count your blessings, see what God has done ..."

In fact, that's what started this whole Thanksgiving thing off about 400 years ago.

Most of us know the story: It was a small band of devout followers of Christ, called Pilgrims, who simply wanted to raise their children without fear or persecution.

Hawkins

So they set sail for the New World. They may have been spiritual giants, but they were rotten farmers. They took 50 percent casualties their first winter.

Fortunately, the Indians lent a hand, and after doing a good after action review and executing a new strategy, providence smiled on them, the harvest was plentiful and it was time to give thanks.

The first celebration lasted three days, history records — you might think of it as the first training holiday!

Well, if they gave thanks for their first training holiday, what are you doing with yours? I love this time of year most because it reminds me of what matters most and lasts the longest.

First of all, I'm thankful for freedom. There is no substitute for being in the Army, traveling the world, seeing the good, the bad, and the ugly, and then coming home to realize, truly, "there is no place like home."

Freedom is never free, and I'm grateful for all giving some, and some giving all, to make this the land of the free and home of the brave. I'm thankful for my freedom.

Second, I'm thankful for my family. There is no greater joy than slipping into my children's bedroom at night, their eyes closed, chests rising and falling silently with each breath, knowing that they have everything they truly need: love, laughter, food and a roof.

To be married to my best friend, to have healthy children, to have the means to support them, I know that the writer of the country song meant when he sang, "And the view I like the best ... is from my front porch looking in ..." I'm thankful for my family

Last, I'm thankful for my faith. Freedom is wonderful. Family is priceless. But faith lasts forever.

You would have had to have known me before God "ambushed me," and I discovered the ultimate transformation by following Jesus Christ as leader of my life.

The difference is undeniable, and again, I'm humbled and blessed to live in a country where such leaps of faith are encouraged and supported, not tracked and persecuted.

Out of everything, I'm most thankful for my faith.

That's what I'm thankful for: freedom, family and faith ... how about you, "pilgrim?"

The movie Felicity: An American Girl Adventure, was filmed in June, but some of the scenes take place in winter. The special effects crew used large rolls of cotton batting and barrels full of crushed ice to create snow in the summer.

WB's Felicity movie offers historical role model for girls

John Crook
© Zap2it

While the grown-ups around her engage in heated arguments about relations with the mother country, a headstrong girl in 1775 Williamsburg, Va., learns some valuable life lessons in Felicity: An American Girl Adventure, The WB Network's second original movie based on the popular line of American Girl characters.

This latest entry, premiering Tuesday, stars Shailene Woodley as 10-year-old Felicity Merriman. The spirited redhead shares her Virginia home with her father (John Schneider), a patriot who owns and operates the local general store, and her mother (Marcia Gay Harden), a homemaker who takes care of Felicity and her 6-year-old sister, Nan (Eulala Scheel, Harden's daughter).

Also living in the home is Ben (Kevin Zegers, Air Bud), the teenage apprentice to Merriman who grumbles because he isn't free to take off and join other young rebels in the fight for independence. He's nonetheless a very good friend to Felicity, especially when the girl learns that a beautiful horse who has captured her attention is being viciously mistreated by its cruel owner.

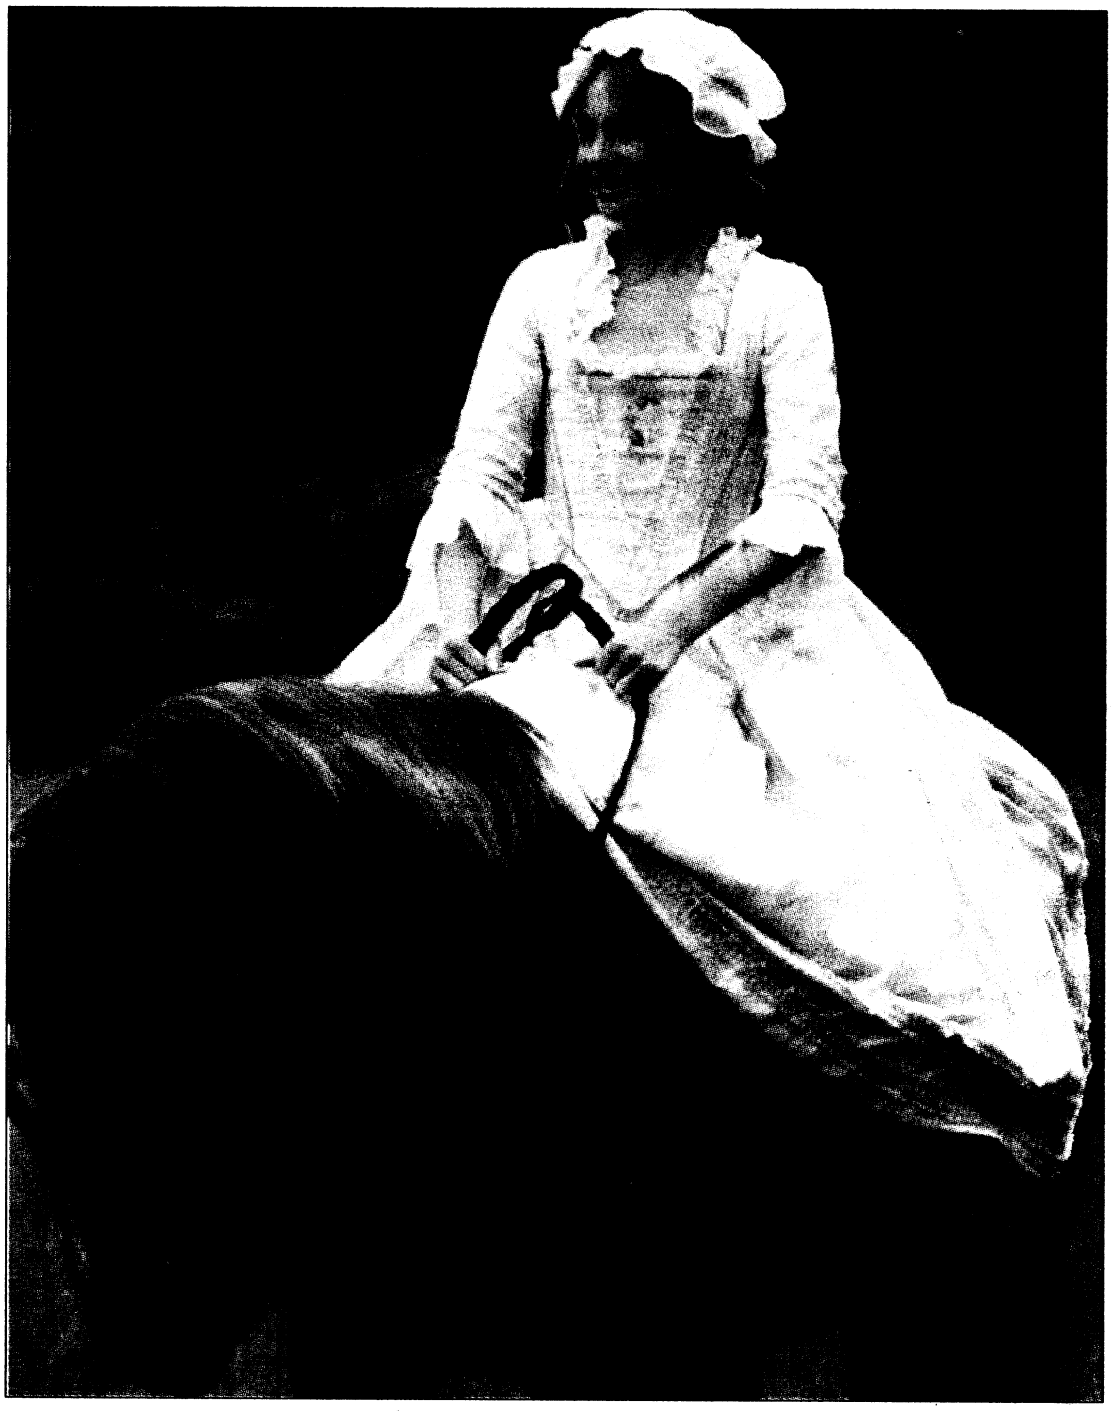
Yet while Felicity wishes she could devote all her energies to freeing the animal, her mother has strong opinions about how a young lady should best spend her time.

So Felicity grudgingly finds herself struggling through painfully dull lessons in how to serve tea as a proper young gentlewoman, as well as learning the difficult dances featured at the social highlight of the year, a glittering Christmas party.

As with last season's Samantha: An American Girl Holiday, which was set in 1904 New York, this new TV movie presents a family-friendly story that also gives young girls an enlightening perspective on what life might have been like for them had they lived at a very different time and place in American history. The content is suitable for general audiences, yet these movies don't sugarcoat the often harsh challenges faced by their young heroines.

"I've been a fan of American Girl for a long while," said actress Julia Roberts, returning as an executive producer of the new TV movie. "They have created such a terrific balance of fun and history."

And while many other U.S. period projects look sadly like a gathering of modern actors attending a costume party, Samantha and Felicity are noteworthy for casting actors who can convincingly inhabit their period costumes and surroundings.



"It has, in both cases, been a long process of casting," Roberts said of the two American Girl movies to date. "Being period stories does add an extra challenge to all the actors.

"I particularly love the time period of Felicity and feel all of the actors portray it beautifully. Shailene, especially, seems to shine in this period and this part."

Remembered by many viewers as Marissa Cooper's (Mischa Barton) little sister, Caitlin, in the early days of Fox's The O.C., Woodley, who turned 14 recently, said she embraced one aspect of the period with a lot of enthusiasm.

"I'm just not someone who will go to a school dance, because I don't really like the way I dance, but (learning and dancing) the minuet and Yellow Stocking's Jig were probably the funnest things I've ever done," she said.

"I will never forget one move about them. It was so amazing to learn this really, really hard thing, and I really felt that I had accomplished something afterwards, that I could really do something that they did (back then).

Shailene Woodley stars in Felicity: An American Girl Adventure, premiering Tuesday on The WB Network.

"You had to wear these high shoes and put all your weight on one foot without falling, so it was hard, but a lot of fun."

Far less fun were her character's unforgiving costumes, which were enough to convince Woodley that she is better off living today than in the late 18th century like Felicity.

"In the bodice, there were these spinal things that kept me from bending down," Woodley said. "My whole upper body was rigid; I couldn't slump. I could barely move. The petticoats all together weighed a good 10 pounds, so it was hard to do things like jumping the fence, because my dress would get caught on something. The shoes were very clunky, also.

"I'd go home and change into my regular clothes and go, 'Ahh, I'm free!'"

Even with the discomfort, however, Woodley said that girls may have had it easier during a time when no one seemed to be obsessed with body image and other superficial peer pressures.

The Ice Harvest — It's Christmas Eve in Wichita, Kan., and this year Charlie Arglist just might have something to celebrate.

Charlie, an attorney for sleazy businesses, and his unsavory associate, Vic Cavenaugh, have just successfully embezzled $2,127,000 from boss Bill Guerrard.

Starring John Cusack and Billy Bob Thornton.

The Ice Harvest is rated R for violence, language, sexuality and nudity.

Just Friends — When Chris (Ryan Reynolds), a likeable, high-school loser, finally gathers the courage to reveal his love to Jamie (Amy Smart) — the girl of his dreams and a super cool cheerleader — she rejects him, saying she just wants to be friends. So, he transforms himself into a selfish, womanizing and successful music executive.

But, 10 years later, circumstances bring him back to his hometown and fate reconnects him with the "just friends" girl of his dreams.

Just Friends is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue.

In the Mix — Hoping to safeguard his daughter, a mafia don assigns his loyal right-hand man, Darrell (Usher Raymond), to act as his daughter's bodyguard.

Little does he realize that his daughter and Darrell have been sweet on each other for a long time, and now, things are really going to heat up.

Also starring Emmanuelle Chriqui and Chazz Palminteri.

In the Mix is rated PG-13 for sexual content, violence and language.

Rent — Jonathan Larson's Pulitzer Prize-winning rock opera tells the story of a group of bohemians struggling to express themselves through their art and "measuring their lives in love."

Starring Jesse L. Martin, Taye Diggs and Idina Menzel.

Rent is rated PG-13 for mature thematic material involving drugs and sexuality, and for strong language.

Yours, Mine & Ours — Frank (Dennis Quaid) is a straight-laced career military man with eight kids. Helen (Rene Russo) is a free-spirited designer with 10. When they get married and decide to pack the entire clan under one roof, the only thing that will get the kids together is the job of breaking their parents apart.

Yours, Mine & Ours is rated PG for mild crude humor.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire — In his fourth year at Hogwarts, Harry (Daniel Radcliffe) faces his greatest challenges and dangers yet. When he is selected under mysterious circumstances as a contestant in the Triwizard Tournament, Harry must compete against the best young wizards from schools all over Europe.

Also starring Rupert Grint and Emma Watson.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire is rated PG-13 for sequences of fantasy violence and frightening images.

Walk the Line — He picked cotton, sold door-to-door and served in the Air Force.

He was a voice of a rebellion that changed the face of rock and roll. An outlaw before today's rebels were born — and an icon they would never forget.

His name was Johnny Cash (Joaquin Phoenix).

The movie explores the early years of the music legend, an artist who transcended musical boundaries to touch people around the globe.

As his music changed the world, Cash's own world was rocked by the woman who became the love of his life — June Carter (Reese Witherspoon).

Walk the Line is rated PG-13 for language, thematic material and depiction of drug dependency.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' — An orphaned street kid (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson) makes his mark in the drug trade, but finally dares to leave the violence of his former life behind to pursue a promising career in the music business as a rapper.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language, drug content, sexuality and nudity.

Zathura — Two brothers discover an oblong box in the park, which they dismiss as "just some dumb old game."

The boys turn their attention away from the game's jungle adventure board game to discover a second game board inside with an outer space theme and a colored path leading to the purple planet, Zathura.

Starring John Hutcherson, Jonah Bobo and Tim Robbins.

Zathura is rated PG for fantasy action and peril and language.

Derailed — Charles (Clive Owen), a successful ad executive and loyal family man, meets an alluring and sexy woman (Jennifer Aniston) on his morning commute.

Flirtation quickly escalates into passion.

But this casual fling turns dangerous when a violent criminal confronts and pulls them into a dangerous plot.

Derailed is rated R for strong disturbing violence, language and sexuality.

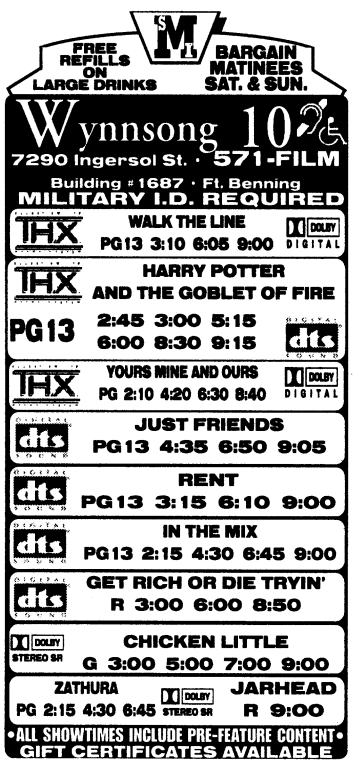
Chicken Little — The movie picks up where the classic fable ends, namely after the pint-sized hero has caused big-time havoc when he mistakes a falling acorn for a piece of the sky.

In the wake of the "unfortunate acorn incident," Chicken Little's name is mud in his hometown of Oakey Oaks.

Voiced by Zach Braff, Garry Marshall and Don Knots.

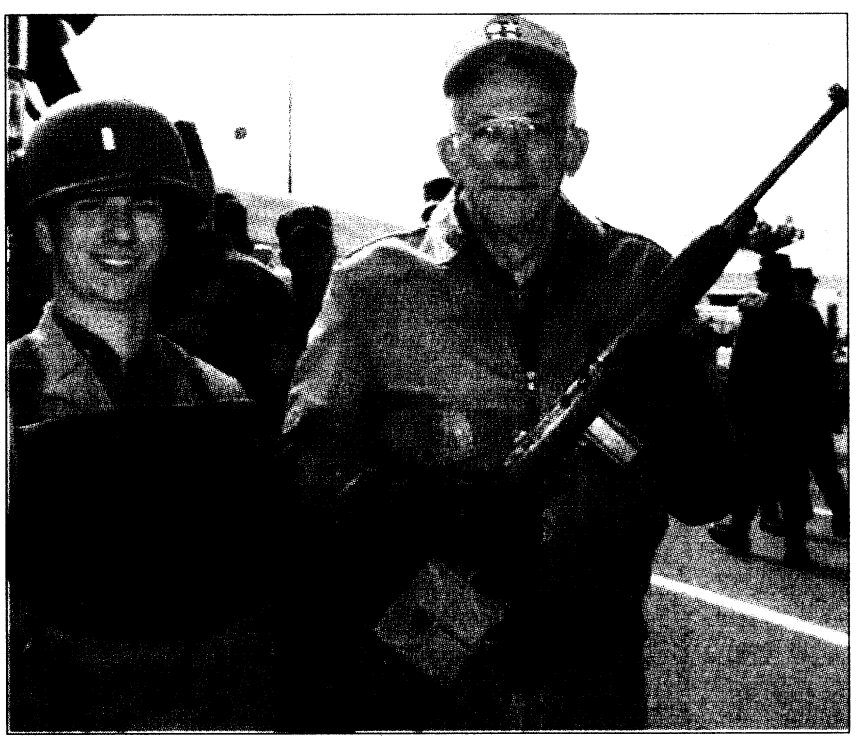
Chicken Little is rated G.

Jarhead — Jarhead, the self-imposed moniker of the Marines, follows Anthony Swofford (Jake Gyllenhaal), a third-generation enlistee, from a sobering stint in boot camp to active duty in Desert Storm, sporting a sniper's rifle and a 100-pound ruck on his back through Middle East deserts..



Swofford and his fellow Marines sustain themselves with sardonic humor and wicked comedy.

Also starring Peter Sarsgaard and Jamie Foxx.



Jarhead is rated R for pervasive language, violent images and strong sexual content.

Holiday Traditions

Hanukkah

For eight days each November or December, Jews light candles in a special candleholder called a menorah. They do this to remember an ancient miracle in which one day's worth of oil burned for eight days in their temple. On Hanukkah, many Jews also eat special potato pancakes called latkes, sing songs, and spin a top called a dreidel to win chocolate coins, nuts, or raisins

St. Lucia Day

To honor this third-century saint on December 13, many girls in Sweden dress up as "Lucia brides" in long white gowns with red sashes, and a wreath of burning candles on their heads. They wake up their families by singing songs and bringing them coffee and twisted saffron buns called "Lucia cats."

Hanukkah, St. Lucia Day, Christmas, and Kwanzaa are all holidays in which cultures use candles to symbolize an important part of their holiday. Do you celebrate a holiday that uses candles as a symbol? Write about this connection among holidays in the message for your class, and read what others wrote in the Global Goodwill Gift Box Symbols Album.

Christmas

People celebrate this Christian holiday by going to church, giving gifts, and sharing the day with their families. In some parts of Europe, "star singers" go caroling singing special Christmas songs as they walk behind a huge star on a pole.

Kwanzaa

Kwanzaa, which means "First Fruits," is based on ancient African harvest festivals and celebrates ideals such as family life and unity. During this spiritual holiday, celebrated from December 26 to January 1, millions of African Americans dress in special clothes, decorate their homes with fruits and vegetables, and light a candleholder called a kinara.

Chinese New Year

Many Chinese children dress in new clothes to celebrate the Chinese New Year. People carry lanterns and join in a huge parade led by a silk dragon, the Chinese symbol of strength. According to legend, the dragon hibernates most of the year, so people throw firecrackers to keep the dragon awake.

Mardi Gras

Lent is a solemn time of reflection for Christians. So, the Tuesday before Lent begins is a time of merry-making for many people around the world. In New Orleans, people wear costumes and attend huge parades for the festival of Mardi Gras. Brazil's Carnaval also features parades, costumes, and music. The day before Lent starts is also known as Shrove Tuesday. In England, some towns have pancake contests in which women run a race while flipping a pancake at least three times.

Thanksgiving Dinner Menus

Thanksgiving is one of the best dinner parties of the year, and what many love about the holiday are all of the traditions. For some that may include a house full of friends, children, parents and aunts and uncles all gathered together spending the day preparing and enjoying recipes that are old family favorites.

For others it may be a first Thanksgiving away from home, feeling independent and ambitious, experimenting with a few recipes for the first time. Whether you find yourself hosting a house full of guests, or planning your first Thanksgiving dinner for two, try forming some new culinary traditions of your own. Here are some menu and recipe ideas to get you on your way!

Recipe Box and Shopping List Tip:
If these recipes or menus are a perfect fit for your family's taste buds, feel free to put them into your online recipe box or add them to your shopping list. You can click on the recipe's title and when you view the body of the recipe, choose the "add to my recipe box" or "add to my shopping list" option found just above the recipe ingredients

A Note on Planning
Try to make as many dishes as possible ahead of time. Nobody wants to be stuck in a steaming kitchen all day away from what really counts, friends and family. Not to mention a large turkey will take up just about all of your precious oven space. Items that are easily prepared ahead of time include breads and rolls, soups, cranberry sauces, casseroles, side dishes and desserts.

The dough for breads and rolls can be made days or weeks ahead of time, allowed to rise once, shaped and frozen. When ready to bake, thaw the dough, give it its second rise and bake. Soups can also be made days or weeks ahead of time, frozen, and reheated when ready to serve. Cranberry sauces can usually be made a week in advance and refrigerated in a non-reactive container. Casseroles and side dishes can be made 1 to 2 days ahead of time and refrigerated. Desserts should be made the day before and refrigerated.

My First Thanksgiving
If this is the first Thanksgiving dinner you're preparing, you'll want to keep it simple or you will be overwhelmed! Roasting a whole turkey is a big enough job in itself! And if this is your first roast turkey be sure and read our Turkey Roasting 101 hints and tips. Besides the turkey, you can make a couple of side dishes and a dessert. For the remainder of the meal, have your guests bring the bread, a few more side dishes and appetizers or purchase ready made ones. If you plan on purchasing ready-made items be sure to order them ahead of time; you don't want be running all over town looking for a bakery that's open and actually has a few dinner rolls left! This menu will feed 6 to 8 people generously.

Homestyle Turkey, The Michigander Way

INGREDIENTS:
1 (12 pound) whole turkey
6 tablespoons butter, divided
4 cups warm water
3 tablespoons chicken bouillon
2 tablespoons dried parsley
2 tablespoons dried minced onion
2 tablespoons seasoning salt

DIRECTIONS:
1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees F (175 degrees C). Rinse and wash turkey. Discard the giblets, or add to pan if they are anyone's favorites.

2. Place turkey in a Dutch oven or roasting pan. Separate the skin over the breast to make little pockets. Put 3 tablespoons of the butter on both sides between the skin and breast meat. This makes for very juicy breast meat.

3. In a medium bowl, combine the water with the bouillon. Sprinkle in the parsley and minced onion. Pour over the top of the turkey. Sprinkle seasoning salt over the turkey.

4. Cover with foil, and bake in the preheated oven 3 1/2 to 4 hours, until the internal temperature of the turkey reaches 180 degrees F (80 degrees C). For the last 45 minutes or so, remove the foil so the turkey will brown nicely.

Savory Turkey Gravy

INGREDIENTS:
5 cups turkey stock
1/4 cup all-purpose flour
1 cup water
1 teaspoon poultry seasoning
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon ground black pepper
1/4 teaspoon celery salt

DIRECTIONS:
1. In a medium saucepan, bring the turkey stock to a boil. In a small bowl, dissolve flour in water. Gradually whisk into the turkey stock. Season with poultry seasoning, salt, pepper, and celery salt. Bring to a boil, reduce heat, and simmer for 8 to 10 minutes, or until thickened.

Mushroom Stuffing

INGREDIENTS:
1 pound fresh mushrooms, sliced
6 tablespoons butter
1 cup diced onion
1 cup chopped celery
1 teaspoon poultry seasoning
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper
12 cups dried bread crumbs
1 1/2 cups hot chicken broth
2 eggs, beaten
2 cups diced apple without peel
1/4 cup chopped parsley

DIRECTIONS:
1. Butter one 9x13 inch casserole dish. Preheat oven to 375 degrees F (190 degrees C).

2. Rinse, pat dry and quarter mushrooms. In large skillet heat butter and add mushrooms, onion and celery; saute 5 minutes and remove from heat. Stir in poultry seasoning, salt & pepper.

3. In large mixing bowl, combine bread crumbs with broth and eggs, add mushroom mixture, apples and parsley; mix well. Turn into casserole dish.

4. Cover and bake at 375 degrees F (190 degrees C) for about 45 minutes. Remove cover and bake 15 minutes longer to brown top.

Make-Ahead Mashed Potatoes

INGREDIENTS:
5 pounds Yukon Gold potatoes, cubed

2 (3 ounce) packages cream cheese
8 ounces sour cream
1/2 cup milk
2 teaspoons onion salt
ground black pepper to taste

DIRECTIONS:
1.Preheat the oven to 325 degrees F (165 degrees C).
2.Place potatoes in a large pot of lightly salted water. Bring to a boil, and cook until tender, about 15 minutes. Drain, and mash.
3.In a large bowl, mix mashed potatoes, cream cheese, sour cream, milk, onion salt, and pepper. Transfer to a large casserole dish.
4.Cover, and bake for 50 minutes in the preheated oven.

Pecan Pie Bars I

INGREDIENTS:
3 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 cup white sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup margarine
4 eggs
1 1/2 cups light corn syrup
1 1/2 cups white sugar
3 tablespoons margarine, melted
1 1/2 teaspoons vanilla extract
2 1/2 cups chopped pecans

DIRECTIONS:
1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees F (175 degrees C). Lightly grease a 10x15 inch jellyroll pan.

2. In a large bowl, stir together the flour, 1/2 cup sugar, and salt. Cut in 1 cup of margarine until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Sprinkle the mixture evenly over the prepared pan, and press in firmly.

3. Bake for 20 minutes in the preheated oven.

4. While the crust is baking, prepare the filling. In a large bowl mix together the eggs, corn syrup, 1 1/2 cups sugar, 3 tablespoons margarine, and vanilla until smooth. Stir in the chopped pecans. Spread the filling evenly over the crust as soon as it comes out of the oven.

5. Bake for 25 minutes in the preheated

Have your guests bring or purchase:
Appetizers like a vegetable platter with a dip or spread
Dinner rolls
One or two vegetable side dishes like green beans or brussel sprouts
Cranberry Sauce
A dessert like Pumpkin Pie or Apple Pie

Nice n' Spicy

If the spark of red pepper is something that gets you going or if sausage and cornbread make you swoon, this Cajun inspired menu is for you. It has a great mix of spicy seafood with some great down home classics that will feed around 8 to 10 people.

Pumpkin and Sausage Soup

INGREDIENTS:
1/2 pound andouille sausage, diced
1/4 cup butter
1 1/4 cups chopped onion
1 teaspoon dried thyme
1 1/2 pounds pumpkin puree
1/4 cup praline liqueur
7 cups chicken stock
1/2 cup packed brown sugar
3/8 cup heavy cream

DIRECTIONS:
1. Cook diced sausage in skillet with 2 tablespoons butter for 5 minutes.

2. Add onion and cook until soft. Add thyme and pumpkin OR sweet potatoes and cook 5 minutes.

3. Add liqueur, broth, and brown sugar. Cover and simmer over low heat for 45 minutes, or until pumpkin OR potatoes are tender.

4. In blender puree soup in batches. Return to pan and stir in cream and remaining 2 tablespoons butter. Warm but do not boil. Serve immediately.

Angel Biscuits I

INGREDIENTS:
2 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons white sugar
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup shortening
1/4 cup warm water (110 degrees F/45 degrees C)
1 (.25 ounce) package active dry yeast
3/4 cup warm buttermilk (105 to 115 degrees F)

DIRECTIONS:
1. In a large bowl combine flour, sugar, baking powder, and salt. With pastry blender or two knives, cut in shortening until mixture resembles course crumbs, set aside.

2. Place warm water in warm bowl. Sprinkle in yeast, stir until dissolved. Add yeast mixture and warm buttermilk to dry ingredients, blend well.

3. Remove dough to floured surface. Knead dough 10 to 15 times, form into ball. Roll dough to 3/4 inch thickness. Cut into 2-1/2 inch biscuits. Cover and let rise until doubled in bulk, about 30 to 45 minutes.

4. Bake at 400 degrees F (205 degrees C) for 15 minutes or until done.

Deep-Fried Turkey

INGREDIENTS:
3 gals. peanut oil for frying, or as needed
1 (12 pound) whole turkey, neck and giblets removed
1/4 cup Creole seasoning
1 white onion

DIRECTIONS:
1. In a large stockpot or turkey fryer, heat oil to 400 degrees F (200 degrees C). Be sure to leave room for the turkey, or the oil will spill over. Layer a large platter with food-safe paper bags.

2. Rinse turkey, and thoroughly pat dry with paper towels. Rub Creole seasoning over turkey inside and out. Make sure the hole at the neck is open at least 2 inches so the oil can flow freely through the bird.

3. Place the whole onion and turkey in drain basket. The turkey should be placed in basket neck end first. Slowly lower basket into hot oil to completely cover turkey. Maintain the temperature of the oil at 350 degrees F (175 degrees C), and cook turkey for 3 1/2 minutes per pound, about 45 minutes.

4. Carefully remove basket from oil, and drain turkey. Insert a meat thermometer into the thickest part of the thigh; the internal temperature must be 180 degrees F (80 degrees C). Finish draining turkey on the prepared platter.

Editor's Note:
We have determined the nutritional value of oil for frying based on a retention value of 1% after cooking. The exact amount may vary depending on cook time and temperature, ingredient density, and the specific type of oil used.

How to Survive Holiday Parties on a Calorie Budget!

by Kathleen Fitzgerald and Liz Neporent

The most fattening days of the year are the ones sandwiched between Thanksgiving and New Year's. A handful of Christmas tree-shaped cookies here, a couple of missed workuts there, and before the last chorus of "Auld Lang Syne" has been sung, your scale registers a few extra pounds.

Where does this holiday heft come from? Those additional calories can sneak up on you even if you're trying to "behave." But believe it or not, it is possible to navigate through the holiday season and remain within your calorie budget. Below, our top tips for doing just that:

Be a buffet slayer:
Cruise buffet tables and survey the offerings before going in for the kill. Once it's on your plate you'll feel obligated to eat it. And the better stuff may be down at the end, tempting you to come back for seconds because your plate is already full. Be last on line; the fattening stuff will be gone. Choose foods that are high in water content and fiber like veggie and fruit dishes, clear soups and non-oily salads. Try everything, but limit quantities.

Be a thoughtful eater: Don't just blindly gobble up nuts and chips. Stop. Think. Is what you're putting in your mouth worth an extra workout? If you really want to nibble on some party mix, put it on a plate so you're conscious about how much your "nibbling" adds up. Wait at least 20 minutes before you go back for seconds; that's how long it takes your stomach to signal your brain that it's full. Even if you don't keep an exercise and food diary at any other time during the year, keep one during the holiday season. It will keep you honest and help you monitor your excesses and successes.

Be careful how you quench your thirst:
Most alcoholic drinks deliver over 100 calories an ounce -- and believe us when we tell you they are not exactly high in fiber. In addition, try to avoid those drinks that contain milk, cream or fruit juice. Many are filled with sugar (empty calories) and fat (extra calories). Try wine spritzers or alternate each alcoholic drink with a glass of water, diet soda or flavored seltzer to cut your consumption.

Make working out a priority:
Yes, it's harder to work in a workout when you toss traveling, shopping, gift wrapping, baking and a whole host of other holiday-related activities into the mix. That's why it's so important to commit to fitness. Besides counteracting extra holiday calories, exercise reduces stress and gives you more energy. Sure, you may have to get creative about slipping your workout in, but knowing it will help you get through the holidays without gaining weight should be a big motivator.

Live by the 90-10 rule: After all, the holidays are about having fun and celebrating life. While they shouldn't totally focus on eating and drinking, you may feel left out if you don't get a taste of some of those once-a-year treats. Keep this thought in mind: do everything right 90 percent of the time and allow yourself to let loose and "cheat" the other 10 percent of the time. You'll enjoy the festivities without carrying them around on your waistline the rest of the year.

Holiday Pet Safety Tips

The holidays are a wonderful time to celebrate with family and loved ones, but it can also be a stressful and dangerous time for your family pet. With Christmas and the New Year just around the corner here are some tips to help keep your pet safe during this joyous season. Following these safety tips can help prevent:

Hang breakable decorations and tinsel well out of paw's reach. Tinsel, ribbon and ornaments are especially dangerous to pets if chewed and swallowed.

Place holiday plants out of pet's reach. Some seasonal plants can be poisonous including mistletoe, holly berries and poinsettias. An unnecessary medical emergency for your pet. Poinsettias, and evergreen trees can all be dangerous if eaten by your pets. The same goes for the water in your Christmas tree.

Make sure strands of lights, loose wires and extension cords are out of reach. Pets, especially puppies, often try to chew them and may get burned, shocked or electrocuted.

Metal ornament hooks can get caught in curious mouths. Use ribbon or yarn instead of hooks to hang ornaments.

A Christmas tree should stand on a flat, wide base. Anchoring the tree with a fishing line tied to a drapery or ceiling rod or wall hook can prevent the tree from falling over on your pet.

Cats often see a Christmas tree as an excellent climbing post. Needles from both artificial and live trees are indigestible.

No alcohol for your pets during the holidays or EVER Chocolate is especially harmful to pets. Some ingredients in chocolate are toxins and can be fatal to animals.

Ask...No....TELL your guests not to feed your pets or give them alcohol.

When you have company, make sure your pets have a safe, quiet place to escape.

Curiosity killed the cat. Don't let this happen to your pets.

Be sure to keep an eye on candles and fireplaces.

If you have any food in gift packages, don't leave it under the tree.

If you're traveling with your pets, do what you can to make them comfortable. Bring their favorite blanket, Make sure that your pet will be welcome where you're going. Make sure vaccinations are up to date and bring any necessary medication. Bring a copy of your pet's vaccination record and license. If your pet isn't microchipped.... do it now. It can save them while you're traveling or all year long if they get lost, stolen, or stray.

Keep the number for your veterinarian near your phone in case of emergency.

Holiday Gift Wrapping

by Arleen Kaptur

Decorating Your Christmas Gifts

Gifts can be store bought or homemade. Some have sentimental value shared by the giver to the recipient, while others mirror a person's interests, likes and preferences.
A package that is thoughtfully wrapped and presented or placed under a tree will share delight even before it is opened.
Boxes come in all shapes and sizes. Many can now be purchased in a rainbow of colors. If you purchase or have a solid color box, cut out patterns such as snowmen, snowflakes, or other designs and line the box with tissue paper that is in contrast to the color of the box. This way the cut-outs will be shown with the hint of the tissue paper just behind. Use an X-Acto knife for best results - available at any hardware or craft store. Also remember that if you can't find tissue paper in the exact color you are searching for, layering the paper will increase the depth and magnitude of the shade that you are trying to achieve. Too dark - remove a tissue or two; too light - add more.
To add a special touch to your package or gift tags, choose a design that has features you can outline with a glitter pen. Then the sparkle and shine will add so much to the gift.
Raffia has been a staple accent for packages in the last few years. Cut 6" pieces and bundle in the middle with a twist tie. Make several of these bundles for a more pronounced showing; fluff out; and attach to the package with a glue gun. You can attach a small felt ornament to one of the strands or a jingle bell.
Wallpaper also makes a nice gift-wrapping material if you can find some really interesting designs. Using those metallic star stickers that we are all familiar with and a plain index card, create a Christmas tree, wreath, or star and use as an attractive gift tag.
Creating your own gift-wrap from plain white paper and embellishing with designs can be an afternoon of fun for the whole family. Use light-weight felt or fleece and tie with yarn - add cut out snowflakes or other designs.
A light-weight towel (bath or kitchen) adds a special second gift.
Christmas material can also be purchased by the yard to use as wrapping paper.
Drapery tassels can be used to "tie" up a gift and give it a "Victorian" feel.
Paper doilies over solid color gift wrap gives a package a "delicate" feel.
A very large gift in a very large carton - spray paint the box (removing the gift first), and then replace the item. Add some features such as stencils or other effects and no paper is needed. Tie with festive cord and you are ready to go.
There is no end to the possibilities. The most important gift is your love and your time - creating your own wrappings, cards, tags, etc. gives the recipient double the gift value - ENJOY!

Happy Thanksgiving!

James Naismith invented the game of basketball in 1889 at the behest of Dr. Luther Gulick, who wanted to disprove YMCA official's assertion that sports were "distinctly worldly ... unspiritual ... and utterly inconsistent with our professions as disciples of Christ." Naismith set out to nail a box to the balcony of a gymnasium, but he couldn't find a box. The janitor offered him two old peach baskets. That's why we play basketball instead of boxball.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• Way to go Tony!

Tony Stewart walked away with his second Nextel Cup title Nov. 20, finishing 35 points ahead of Carl Edwards and Greg Biffle.

Biffle won the Ford 400 by a hair over teammate Mark Martin, but just couldn't get the points to surpass Tony.

Jeff Gordon placed 11th in points, earning him a guaranteed $1 million.

• Say no to steroids

Baseball owners unanimously approved a new steroid policy Nov. 17. The first offense is a 50-game suspension without pay, the second offense is a 100-game suspension without pay and for a third offense, lifetime suspension.

• You go Reggie

USC tailback Reggie Bush set a Pac-10 conference record with 513 all-purpose yards against Fresno State Nov. 19. USC won the game, 50-42, extending their winning streak to 32 games.

Bush had two touchdowns.

• NL MVP

Albert Pujols, first baseman for the St. Louis Cardinals, won the National League MVP Nov. 15, beating the Braves' Andruw Jones by a few votes.

Pujols ended the season with a .330 BA, 41 homeruns and 117 RBIs.

• Till next year, NASCAR

I'm counting the days until February when the 2006 NASCAR season begins.

Next year should be interesting, with drivers coming from the Busch series, drivers switching to different car owners and lots of other changes.

Ronnie Bell coaches the boys' and girls' basketball teams at Faith Middle School. Here he's pictured with his youngest children, Aaliyah, 8, and Jerry, 13, and members of the Faith Warrior Bears.

Bell gave up a career at the post office to support his Soldier wife, Sgt. 1st Class Monica Bell, who is currently a truck driver in Iraq.

Dad is coach, mentor, teacher ... mom

Daughter says Bell's attitude makes for success on court

Coach Ronnie Bell's players call him "fair" and "tough" and even "courageous." His coworkers say he's "absolutely wonderful with children." But his youngest daughter, Aaliyah, may be his biggest fan — at home and on the court.

"He's not a good coach. He's a great coach," the 8-year-old said Thursday, as she sat on the sideline watching basketball practice at Faith Middle School, where her dad has led the boys' and girls' teams to championships in the Christian Independent Athletic Association the last two years.

"He's a great coach and a great dad," Aaliyah said. "And he's a great mom."

Bell, 41, was a former Soldier with a promising career at the post office in Washington, D.C., in 1994, when he met a single mom, a Soldier at Fort Leonard Wood, Kan. After a five-month telephone courtship, the two married during her Christmas leave.

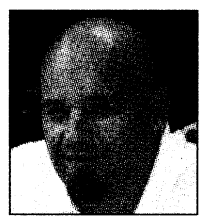
She returned to Fort Leonard Wood, and he stayed in D.C., until her son's asthma started causing problems for her at work. Bell made her an offer: "You join me, or I'll join you. One of us will give up a job."

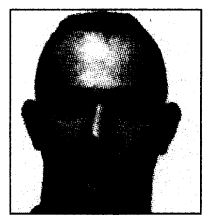
He did.

Bell moved to Fort Leonard Wood and went to work sewing pockets on blue jeans for minimum wage. It allowed him to take care of the children — his, Aaron, who was 6, and hers, Sequoyah, 5, and Jerry, 2. It also allowed him time to coach, something he discovered he enjoyed when he was only 21.

"I love it. I love teaching the game, and I love being around the kids," he said.

Throughout the next six years, as the Army moved the Bells hither and yon, Bell coached basketball, football and soccer, adults and children.





Four years ago, the family moved to Fort Benning, and Bell, a substitute teacher at Faith, launched the school's basketball program. It met with instant success, a fact

See BELL, C-2

Coach Bell, pictured here during last week's basketball practice, handles one team on one end of the court, while his assistant, Gerald Ogletree, handles the other team, in this case the boys, on the opposite end of the court.

Erin Says...

Way to go, Melissa! Almost a perfect week, but hey, 11-1 isn't too shabby. Lori had a outstanding week too, going 10-2, and claiming the top spot all by herself — she doesn't like to share, but if Melissa has anything to say about it, she'll be in that top spot all by herself. Jimmy continues to do well, tied with Melissa.

Thanks for the memories Coach D

Erin A. Nash

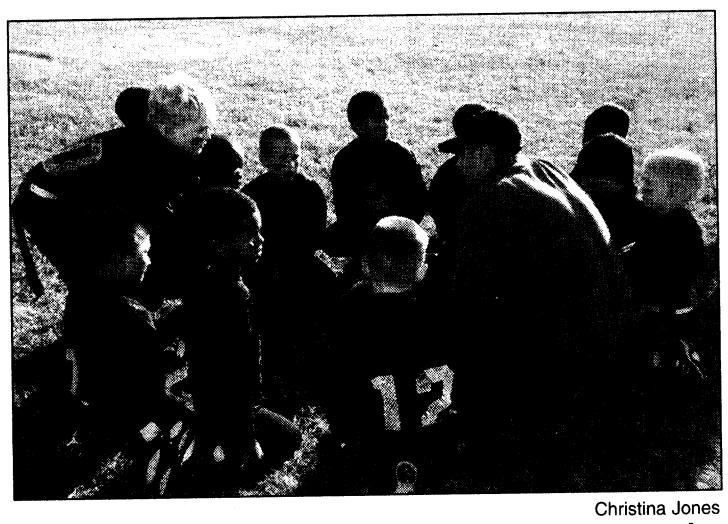
I want to tell you about a coach. Not just any coach — a great coach. No, I'm not talking about Bill Belichick or Charlie Weis, although I certainly could be. I'm talking about a coach most of you have never heard about — Pedram Davoudpour, or Coach D, as the kids call him.



That's right, Coach D coaches the 6- to 8-year-old flag football team, the Raiders. My son is lucky enough to have learned under Coach D this season.

Within the first week of practice in September, I thought, "This is what a coach should be." My son has played sports previously, and really didn't end up knowing more about the sport than when he began. But I could tell Coach D knew what he was doing, and he enjoyed doing it.

By the time the first game rolled around in October, we thought our team was pretty good. The kids worked hard for Coach, never complaining (OK, maybe sometimes after running and running and running) but I could see the respect in both the kids' and parents' eyes.

Coach D didn't show up demanding respect — he earned it quietly.

The Raiders lost their first game to a tough opponent. They tied the second game and lost the third. But it didn't deter Coach D. He worked the kids just as hard and taught them more. And more. And more. And then the Raiders won five in a row, ending the season at 5-2-1, with the best record by virtue of winning twice over the Bulldogs, who had the same record.

Christina Jones

Coach Pedram Davoudpour gives his team, the Raiders, a pep talk before a game Nov. 5.

After one particularly grueling practice, I asked my son what position he had been assigned.

"Titan," he answered.

"I think you mean tight end," I told him.

Not only did my son learn his position, the kids learned all positions. This was evident while throwing the football around in the backyard one weekend.

"I'm a wide receiver! Throw it to me," my son told me.

Just sitting and watching their practices, I was amazed at how much the kids absorbed. When Coach D would yell out, "Heavy right, on the ball!" the kids moved, and they knew exactly what to do.

Coach D exemplified just what makes a great coach in several games. Some of the other team's coaches were hootin' and hollerin' about this and that, and generally distracting the kids from the game.

Coach D never wavered, didn't say a word, and let the referees take care of it. A lot of coaches would have yelled right back, or even get into a screaming match, but Coach D concentrated on the game.

"Coach is a classy guy," one mom told me. After one game, the Raider parents were so impressed with Coach D, the parents and players applauded him.

Even when my mom was visiting and got to watch a game, she remarked, "Wow, the coach is great. That other coach needs to calm down."

Anyone watching the Raiders play could see how calm and collected Coach D was, and how much his players respected him. They knew the drills they practiced and the running they did paid off in the end.

Coach D taught the kids the true meaning of teamwork, and how though certain players may shine more, it's because of the team working as a whole to help them shine.

So, Coach D, thank you for a wonderful football season. Keep on coaching, keep on being classy. Any child who is lucky enough to have you as their coach will have fond memories of their time spent on the gridiron.

Bell: Hero, daughter says

Aaliyah attributes to her father's winning attitude.

"He wants everybody to play. He doesn't cut you if you don't know the game. He teaches you," she said. "At the beginning of this year, some of those girls didn't even know how to dribble the ball. I knew how to dribble when I was in kindergarten."

Cindy Givens, Faith's athletic director, doesn't even try to define Bell's success.

"I don't know what it is. I just know he's absolutely wonderful with children," she said. "He drives them to give it their all on and off the court, because they have to keep their grades up to be part of the team."

These days, with Sgt. 1st Class Monica Bell serving in Iraq with the 104th Transportation Company, Aaliyah spends a lot of time courtside watching her dad at work.

She sometimes worries about her mother's safety, she said, but "she has to do her job."

"She's a hero. Actually, they're both heroes. If anything goes wrong over there, Mom will take care of it," Aaliyah said. "And if anything goes wrong here, Dad will take care of it."

Big brother Jerry, now a seventh-grader, plays on the Faith team. Jerry uses his dad's last name, while Sequoyah, a junior at Pacelli High School in Columbus, chose to keep her mother's maiden name.

But her dad helped her establish her identity as an athlete.

When Sequoyah was 5, she gave up cheerleading to join her father on the basketball court.

Now, she's ranked among the top 100 high school female basketball players in the nation.

And while Bell is reticent to talk about his coaching skills or his decision to stay home with the kids, he's quick to brag on his children.

And he never uses the word "step."

"They're all my kids. I love them all," he said. He says everything succinctly, but his daughter makes up for it with her effusiveness.

"He plays mom and dad at home. He even cooks like a mom. He's 'specially good with cornbread," said Aaliyah, who also depends on her dad to put her hair in ponytails, help with homework and get her to karate on time. When mom's home, she said, they share duties.

"They're like this," the Dexter Elementary third-grader said, cupping her hands together.

"They're a team."

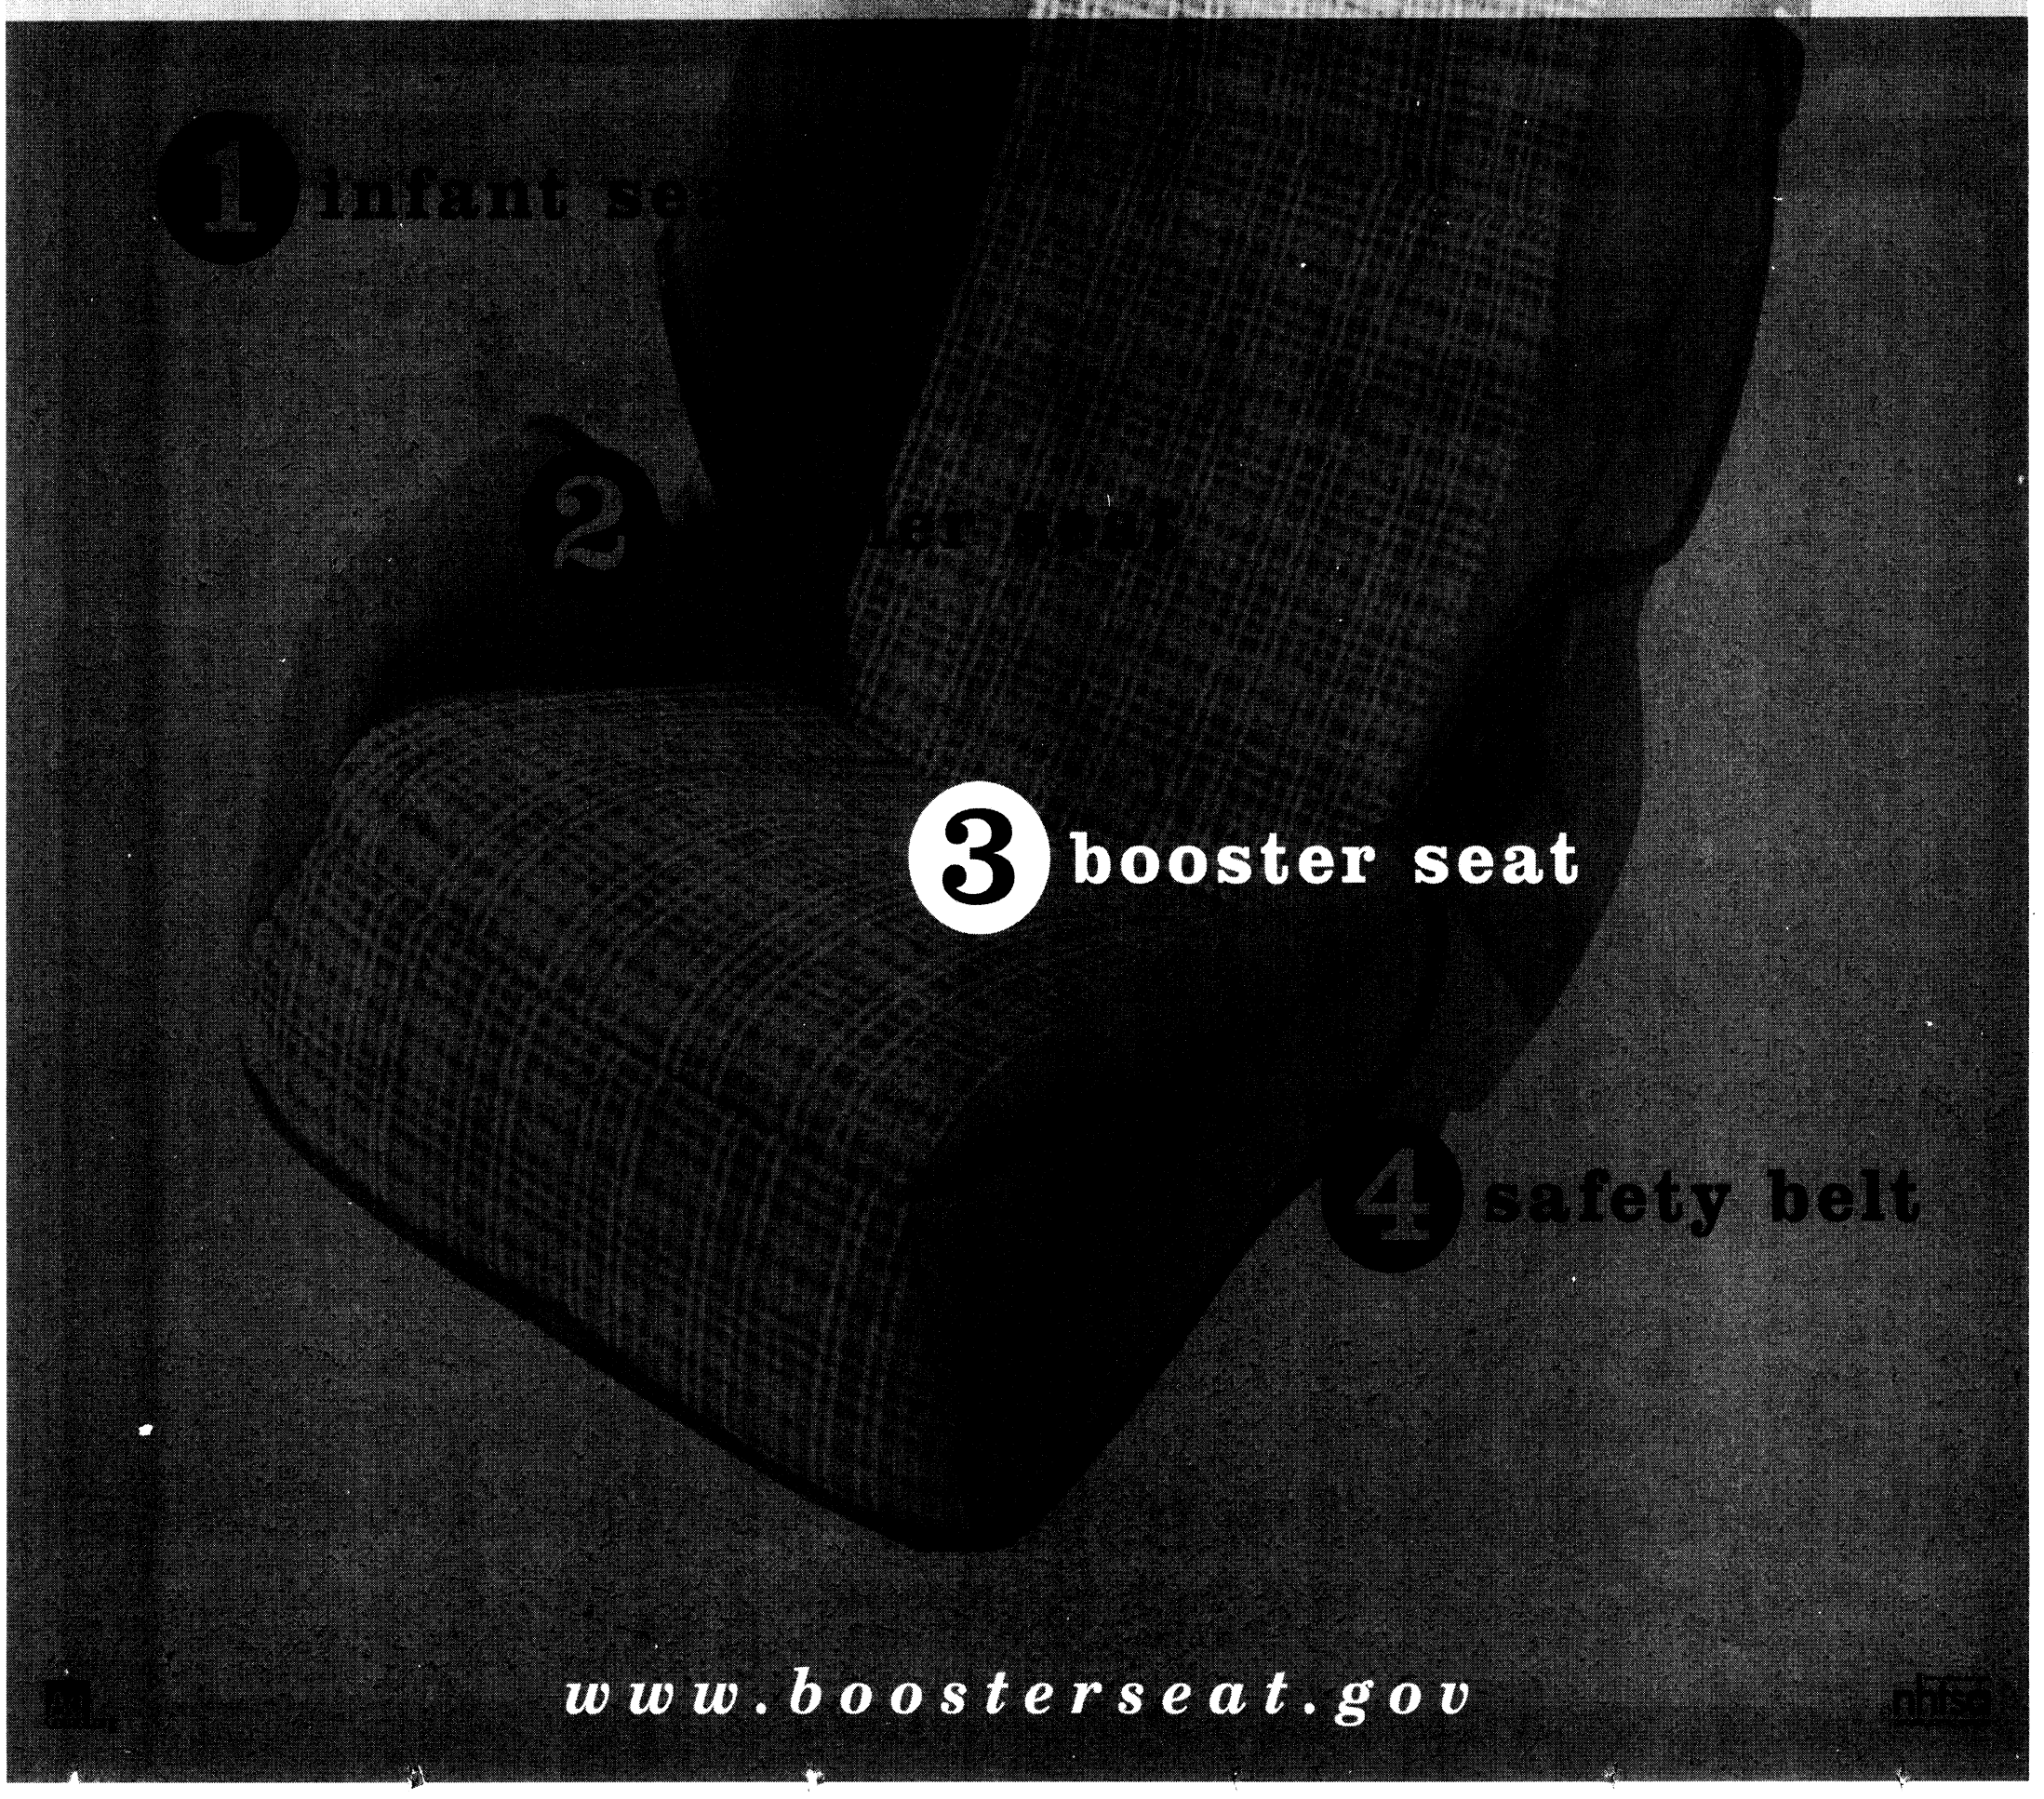
Stay Informed



The Bayonet
1819 South Lumpkin Rd.
Columbus, GA 31903

Unfortunately, some parents skip important step number three: Booster seats. Because their children have outgrown toddler seats, they mistakenly assume a safety belt is the next step. However, safety belts alone can be dangerous for kids who are under 4'9". Because safety belts don't fit these children properly, they can cause serious injuries to their face, neck and abdomen during a crash or sudden stop. In fact, kids 2-5 who wear the four safety-belt steps are not magical ...they're critical.

safety belts alone are 4 times more likely to suffer head injuries than kids in car seats and booster seats. In addition, children 4-7 who use booster seats are a whopping 59% less likely to be injured in a crash than those only restrained by a safety belt. Booster seats raise your child up so that a safety belt (designed for adults) will fit and protect them properly. Remember, 4'9" is the magic number. Until then, kids really need to be in a booster seat. Booster seats work like...well, you know.

You know that noise your heart makes when you work out?

IT'S CALLED APPLAUSE.

Think of each beat as your heart's way of cheering you on for staying physically active. Want a standing ovation? Try keeping your diet low in cholesterol and saturated fat too. To learn about other steps you can take toward lowering your risk of heart attack and stroke, visit our web site at www.americanheart.org or call us at 1-800-AHA-USA1.

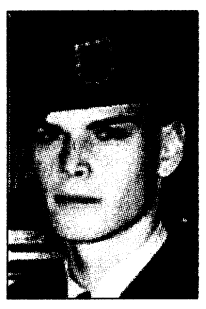
Soldier dies from gunshot wounds

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

A Fort Benning Soldier with more than 50 combat patrol missions as a .50-caliber machine gunner died Nov. 16 in Baqubah, Iraq. Pvt. Dylan Paytas died from multiple gunshot wounds received while deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Paytas was responsible for providing combat patrol security for the battalion commander and the command sergeant major of 3rd Brigade Troops Battalion.



In a memorial service last week in Iraq, Capt. Keith Clipp, Paytas' company commander, said Paytas never complained about deploying, doing his job or facing challenges.

"That is the lasting memory I will have of Private Dylan Paytas, the desire to be a Soldier," Clipp said.

Born in 1985, Paytas joined the Army after graduating from Freedom High School in Freedom, Pa., in 2003.

The Soldier's mother, Dianne Paytas of Freedom, Pa., told the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review that her son joined the Army because he wanted to serve his country.

"I will look at the flag with a little more respect," she said.

Paytas

Following graduation as a combat engineer at one station unit training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., in 2003, Paytas was stationed with the 317th Engineer Battalion.

After the battalion's transformation to the 3rd BTB, Paytas attended Airborne School in 2004. There he met Spc. Dominic Valentino.

"He was never in a bad mood, no matter what the circumstances," Valentino said during the memorial service.

"His goals and achievements drove me to set my own goals. He was always one step ahead of me in everything, which gave me incentive to excel."

Besides his mother, Paytas is survived by his father, John Paytas, two sisters, Kayla and Isabella, his grandmother, Betty, and other family members.

A private Mass was celebrated Nov. 26 for Paytas in Cranberry, Pa. Military honors were performed at the conclusion of the service.

Nick of time

Santa Claus checks his Nice List Thursday in anticipation of his meet-and-greet with Fort Benning children today at the annual Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony, sponsored by the Chaplains Office. The event, which starts at 5:30 p.m. at the Field of the Four Chaplains, includes refreshments and entertainment.

Despite delays, Claus makes Benning in time for tree lighting

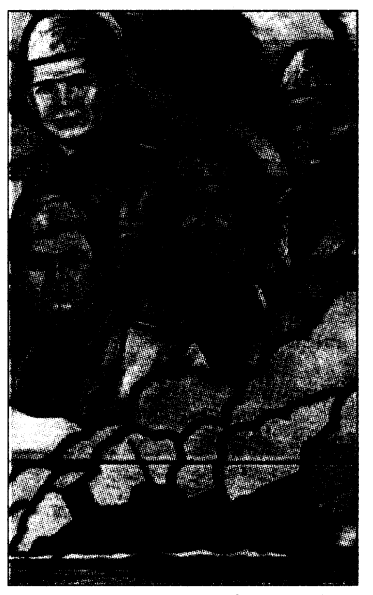
It sounded simple enough; get Santa Claus to host tonight's Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting ceremony at the Field of the Four Chaplains. No problem, right?



Wrong.

Getting Claus to agree to host the event was easy. The hard part was getting him from Point A, the North Pole, to Point B, Fort Benning. One would assume he could fly straight from pole to post, via reindeer-drawn sleigh, his standard modus transportatus.

Wrong again. After Rudolph went Hollywood a few years back, the other reindeer unionized, and their contract prohibits them from working between Dec. 26 and Dec. 23.

So Claus flies commercial — coach, in fact — and uses public

In November 1942, four men from varying walks of life met at Harvard University and quickly formed bonds that remain unbroken to this day.

The men were chaplains — Protestant, Catholic and Jewish — all called by their faith to serve their God and all called by their patriotism to serve their country as part of the almost 9,000 chaplains who ministered to Soldiers during World War II.

On Jan. 23, 1943, Chaplains George Fox, Clark Poling, Alexander Goode and John Washington boarded the U.S.A.T. Dorchester in New York. According to some accounts, the troop transport was bound for an Army installation in Greenland, in others, like a chapter from the history of the U.S. Army Chaplain Corps, the boat was Something bigger: General says chapel fills spiritual need for Soldiers, families

Members of the community gathered Tuesday at a ribbon-cutting ceremony for the post's new Follow Me Chapel.

Groundbreaking for the chapel, which can seat up to 600, was April 2, 2004.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ronald Smith, the garrison chaplain, praised the new chapel as evidence of the post's "rich blessings and the foresight of its leaders and planners."

"This chapel will benefit untold thousands," Smith said. "And Soldiers, past, present and future can meet and worship fully."

Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough said the dedication of the chapel, designed and built by McKnight Construction, was a great achievement and an event long overdue.

"I can't remember cutting a ribbon on a chapel in 26 years of service," Yarbrough said. "Our worship facilities have been good enough to sustain us."

The chapel was finished less than four years after a fire destroyed the post's approximately 55-year-old Catholic chapel Jan. 12, 2002. The project's promised completion date was October 2005, and the building was completed Nov. 7, 2005.

"We need this," Yarbrough said. "Soldiers are sometimes guarded, in private, about how they worship, but they worship. And I know that when the chips

Maybe an old-fashioned Christmas is not such a good idea after all

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I'm the first on the block to trim the tree, and I shop for Christmas all year long, but I'm quick to bemoan the commercialism of the season. It's lost its meaning, I say. For those of us who celebrate the birth of Christ, mall madness can be dispiriting. You'll not hear me complain this year. I've been enlightened by a little research into the history of the holiday. Here's what I found:

Christmas is rooted in the ancient pagan tradition of celebrating winter solstice. This was not a time of worship, as we think of worship. In Babylon, Egypt, Persia, Rome and Germany, the gods of fertility and prosperity were "honored" for weeks on end, as hordes of celebrants drank and rioted and pillaged and partied.

Certainly no one was reflecting on the birth of Christ, because he was not even born in the winter. Bible scholars believe Christ was born in the springtime, but early Christians couldn't decide when or even if they should celebrate. Celebrations of any kind were generally frowned upon. Holy days were marked by reverence and somber, quiet reflection and prayer.

In 125, the bishop of Rome called for a service to commemorate the nativity, but it wasn't until 320 that Pope Julius I specified Dec. 25 as the official day to celebrate. Government officials hoped it would replace the costly, dangerous pagan festivals. For years, both Christmas and solstice were celebrated, and not much changed. Celebrations waxed and waned through the centuries, until Oliver Cromwell banned all festivities in England in the 17th century. Cromwell mandated a strictly Puritan observance of Christmas. His subjects didn't like it, so when King Charles took the throne again, they returned to their merry ways.

But something was different. They celebrated Christmas with wild abandon, but they celebrated Christmas — not the sun god or Saturn or whatever. They celebrated with drunken street parties that traditionally included the looting of homes if the homeowner refused to give them food and money. Remember the lines "Oh, bring us some figgy pudding," and "We won't leave until we've had some," from We Wish You a Merry Christmas? Yep, they meant it. If they didn't get their figgy pudding, somebody got hurt.

When the Puritans settled in the New World, they put the kibosh on Christmas celebrations. Anyone caught partying was arrested and fined. And so it went, all the way through the Revolutionary War and 60 years more. Congress even made it a practice to meet on Dec. 25.

Eventually, in the early 19th century, immigrants began to ignore Puritan law. Special police forces had to be dispatched to try to squelch Christmas riots.

Across the ocean, Queen Victoria married her cousin, German Prince Albert, and adopted his homeland's family-oriented Christmas customs. In 1823, when The Night Before Christmas was printed in the New York Times, it changed the way Americans viewed the holiday. Here, as in England, celebrations began to revolve around children.

Charles Dickens's A Christmas Carol, published in 1843, emphasized the importance of love, charity and family. Once again, American families took a good hard look at the meaning of Christmas and reconsidered their Christian values. They began to welcome English and German Christmas customs. The trend continued over the next century. It wasn't until World War II that Americans began to lament the commercialization of Christmas. Read more about that on D-4.

Given the evolution of the Christmas holiday, contemporary mall madness seems a relatively minor annoyance. It pales in comparison to ancient customs. So the next time someone tells you Christmas has lost its meaning, tell them it's a good thing.

Merry Christmas.

Girly girls do like football, other sports

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

It was the week of Thanksgiving, and while preparing for our guests, my husband said to me, "Oh, so-and-so is bringing his girlfriend. Just to warn you, she's a girly girl."

"What the heck does that mean? Am I not a girl?" I asked him.

Realizing quickly he had stuck his foot in his mouth, he tried to make reparations.

"No, what I mean is, she probably won't watch football or whatever. I don't know!"

I mulled this over for a few days, wondering, what is the difference between a girly girl and just a regular girl? Am I not as feminine as I think I am? I made some mental lists, one of the "girly-girl" things I do and one "not so girly-girl" list.

Girly-girl: I wear pink — a lot. I wear make-up just about every day. My hair is long, and my blonde comes courtesy of Ms. Clairol. I curl my hair regularly. I read chick lit and watch chick flicks. My ears have been pierced for 26 years.

Not so girly-girl: I love sports. Sportscenter is one of my favorite shows. I swear like a sailor. My drink of choice — beer. No wine coolers for me. I usually wear pants or shorts. When I do wear a skirt, I don't wear pantyhose.

I think I'm a middle-of-the-road kind of girl. I can watch the Ultimate Fighting Championship while painting my nails. I can toss the football around with my son in my pink sweats. So why all the fuss?

I know men who have longer hair and more ear piercings than I do, yet no one accuses of them of being less of a man. It's cool these days for guys to wear pink. But God forbid I watch every single NASCAR race of the season, and curse at the TV when my driver crashes.

For about five minutes after the conversation with my husband, I considered what it would take to be a girly-girl. If I was, my son wouldn't know half of what he does about football. We wouldn't have spent hours on the front lawn practicing pulling flags and learning how to catch and throw properly.

There's a lot of stuff my son would miss if I was a girly girl. With my husband deployed often, I have to be mom and dad. I've put together Hot Wheels ramps, played endless Playstation 2 games and have run around the house with a lightsaber playing Star Wars.

The nine years I've lived in Georgia have not turned me into a genteel southern woman. I'm still the straight-talkin', take-no-crap girl from Massachusetts. I'm going to watch football in my recliner and curse at the TV, because that's me, girly girl or not, and that's how I like it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Visitors send Thanksgiving wishes

One year ago, our family had the incredible honor of spending Thanksgiving on your beautiful base.

Our youngest son, Evan, had his wish to be an Army Ranger fulfilled by the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

The men and women of Fort Benning went above and beyond his biggest dreams as he and his brother Austin were given the adventure of their lives!

You treated us like a part of your family and we will never forget our precious memories. It was a privilege to meet men and women of such high character, and an honor to call you friends.

We realize many of those we met are now deployed around the world. We lift you up daily in our prayers, with thankful hearts for your courage and sacrifice. Our special week had a profound affect on all of our lives.

This Thanksgiving we want to express our gratitude as we stand with you, and thank you for all you have given to our family. Most importantly, we thank you for the ways you have protected our great country.

We miss you and wish you a blessed Thanksgiving.

YS football coaches earn parents' thanks

We, the parents of the Youth Services 12- to 14-year-old football team the Jaguars, just had to write and publicly thank the coaches of our team: Chris Pierce, Dennie Young, Bill Denova, Matt Walker, Matt Henigsmith and Lt. Arnold.

Many of our boys were seasoned football players and some were new to the sport. But all received the same expertise from coaches who not only cared about the football skills that make a team good, but who also cared enough to teach and model good sportsmanship.

We had a hard-working season of practices and games with a 5-2 record.

We thank these men from the bottom of our hearts for sacrificing their time to our sons and we truly hope that our boys have the good fortune of being coached by these men again.

INSTRUCTORS OF THE YEAR

Post to celebrate Soldiers' excellence

Ceremony set for Dec. 8 to recognize Soldiers

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

Sharing personal lessons learned from the battlefields of Iraq and Afghanistan, Fort Benning's three Instructors of the Year all have a passion for teaching the intricacies of Soldiering.

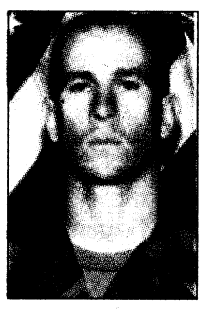
Three men were chosen by the Directorate of Operations and Training for demonstrating outstanding principles and techniques combining technical instruction at the Infantry School.

They are: Capt. Jason A. Rains, a basic small unit patrol instructor for C Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Officer Instructor of the Year; Sgt. 1st Class Craig A. Bishop, C Co., 5th RTB, Senior Enlisted Instructor of the Year; and, Staff Sgt. Paul D. Powers, B Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., Junior Enlisted Instructor of the Year.

"My peers and I take what we do very serious around here," Rains said. "We're training Rangers to fight our country's battles. For a young private and young lieutenant, we're teaching lessons from Iraq that's going to keep them alive."

Rains

Capt. Mike Walls, C Co. commander, said Rains is an outstanding instructor.



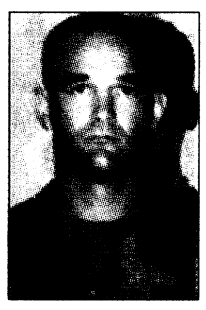
"He brought an important advantage to his classes by sharing his real-world experiences," Walls said.

In addition to being an instructor, Rains has served as a rifle platoon leader, company executive officer and an aide de camp. He has deployed to Bosnia and Iraq. He graduated from The Citadel.

Another Ranger, Sgt. 1st Class Craig A. Bishop is a combat techniques instructor with C Co., 5th RTB.

Four deployments with 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt., in support of Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom has helped Bishop devise realistic training situations.

"Through different experiences, I've been able to share with students not only the curriculum of the Ranger course, but also a real perspective on the importance and impact of training," he said.



Bishop

Because the terrain in Dahlonega, Ga., where the second phase of Ranger training takes place, Bishop said Soldiers learn important lessons that are well-suited to the Afghanistan theater.

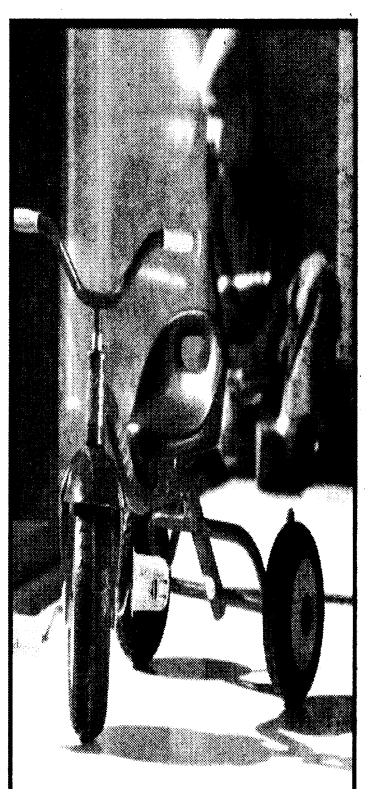
"He gets upset when Soldiers fail because he treats them as if they were in his own unit," said 1st Lt. Kellyjack Luma, a fellow 5th RTB instructor. "The ones who absorb the instruction most intensely are the ones who spark the greatest creativity.

"Bishop runs a good program," Luma said.

Training based upon real-world situations is introduced in basic training and Staff Sgt. Paul D. Powers, a .50 caliber machine gun and MK19 grenade machine gun instructor, combines technical instruction with personal experiences in teaching Infantry Training Brigade, Basic Combat Training Brigade and Basic Officer Leadership courses.

Powers

Powers, a member of the Sergeant Audie Murphy Club, said his deployment with the 101st Airborne Division to Iraq is his incentive to teach his Soldiers well.



"I don't want them to get hit. That's what happened to me when I was in Iraq in 2003, and I don't want it to happen to them," he said.

"Basic trainees are really enthusiastic," Powers said. "They want to learn the '.50-cal' and I take advantage of that. It's not really an in-depth course, but trainees get some knowledge before going on to a unit"

Last week Powers said some Soldiers recognized him while he was in the post exchange.

"They'd just graduated," Powers said. "They remembered me and what I'd taught them. It felt good to hear they'd learned something and that my teaching had an impact on them."

A ceremony honoring the three Soldiers, and all Instructor of the Quarter winners, will be held at 9 a.m. Dec 8 in Classroom 7 at Infantry Hall.

Army chief of staff presents awards to Rangers

Army News Service

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker presented Army Rangers more than 25 awards for valor during a ceremony at Fort Benning Nov. 18.

The Soldiers, all assigned to 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, deployed between July and October in support of Operation Enduring Freedom or Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"I am glad I could be here to recognize great heroes," Schoomaker said. "I'm proud of your service. I am proud of what you do and what you represent. You are living the Ranger Creed and Warrior Ethos."

The Silver Star, awarded for gallantry in action, was presented to two Rangers for actions while deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Capt. Christopher A. Molino was awarded the Silver Star while serving as the ground commander when his Soldiers were attacked. Molino was conducting combat operations when his element came under direct small arms and hand grenade fire from a determined enemy. According to the award citation, Molino's personal courage, tactical expertise and professional competence contributed to saving the lives of wounded Rangers and the success of the task force.

> "Fellow Rangers are standing here today because of the valorous actions of these Rangers."
> Lt. Col. John G. Castles
> Commander, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Staff Sgt. David M. Edwards was awarded the Silver Star while serving as a squad leader for the task force. Edwards' unit was conducting combat operations when his element came under an intense enemy attack. According to the citation, while under direct fire, his outstanding leadership, dedication to duty and commitment to excellence were fundamental in saving the life of a wounded Ranger and success of the task force.

"These men represent extraordinary heroism. They fought for each other, their families and to get the mission done," said Lt. Col. John G. Castles, battalion commander. "Their actions are representative of others on this field today.

"Rangers often downplay individual actions, because nothing can be done without the entire force."

He said the awardees' actions were significant and that "fellow Rangers are standing here today because of the valorous actions of these Rangers."

The Soldier's Medal was presented to Sgt. Mark T. Alperin while serving as a mortar platoon squad leader in support of Operation Enduring Freedom. This medal is awarded for personnel who distinguish themselves by heroism involving personal danger and the voluntary risk of life, though no contact with the enemy was made. This award requires the same level of heroism as the Distinguished Flying Cross.

According to the award citation, Alperin displayed the highest degree of professionalism, sound judgment, technical and tactical knowledge and an overwhelming concern for the welfare of his Rangers. His exceptional performance and dedication to duty were contributing factors in saving a Ranger and success of the task force.

Bronze Star Medals for Valor were awarded to 11 Rangers for actions in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom. This medal is awarded for heroic actions. Awardees were: Sgt. 1st Class Andrew T. Bristow, Sgt. Jeremiah A. Dagel, Capt. John F. Detro, Sgt. Ian B. Hunter, 1st Lt. Ryan M. Kelly, Spc. Casey M. Loose, Staff Sgt. Joseph G. Lynch, 1st Sgt. Edward L. Noland, Staff Sgt. Michael N. Rach, Spc. Webster J. Slavens and Staff Sgt. Jared N. Van Aalst.

"It is my privilege to have served with the caliber of men such as those in my unit," said Loose, a Ranger medic. "I believe, however, that any one of my fellow Rangers would do, and have done, the very things that I received this award for.

"It is the Rangers' constant endeavor to live the Ranger Creed and exceed the standards, that makes us who and what we are, especially on the battlefield."

Detro, the battalion physician's assistant and acting battalion surgeon, echoed the sentiments of teamwork and skill during the mission for which he and five of his medics, including Loose, received valorous awards. He said that his men used their battlefield knowledge to prepare for the mission and then competently applied their training in accordance with the plan, allowing them to effectively assist wounded Soldiers.

Ranger medics support missions on the front lines with their fellow Rangers, working together to accomplish the mission and bring everyone back.

"We would not have made it off of this objective and saved the injured men without the entire force fighting together," Loose said.

Sixteen Rangers received the Army Commendation Medal for Valor, awarded for a valorous act distinguished by heroism, meritorious achievement or meritorious service.

Fort Benning names Career Counselor of Year for 2005

Donna Hyatt
Bayonet staff

After spending years recruiting people to join the Army, Sgt. 1st Class Nakia Nelson now works hard to keep them in.

Less than two years after becoming a career counselor on post, Nelson has been named Fort Benning's 2005 Career Counselor of the Year.

"Although I enjoyed working as a recruiter, I missed the operational Army so much that I wanted to come back," said Nelson, who is assigned to 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"I truly believe being a career counselor is the best job in the Army because it's not about me," he said. "It's all about helping Soldiers go further in their career."

Sgt. Maj. Lyle Hogue, Fort Benning's command career counselor, said he was so impressed, he put Nelson in charge of counseling the Basic Combat Training Brigade and its tenant units.

"Nelson now works with just about everyone on post," Hogue said. "He talks with a lot of different Soldiers who have a lot of different motivations, and he works very hard."

Recruiting experience helped Nelson forge career paths for approximately 100 Soldiers last year.

Nelson said he tries to put himself in other Soldiers' positions, so when he gives them re-enlistment options, the advice is something he would really do.

Nelson

"I like to give people all the different scenarios for their situation, so they can decide what's best for themselves," he said.

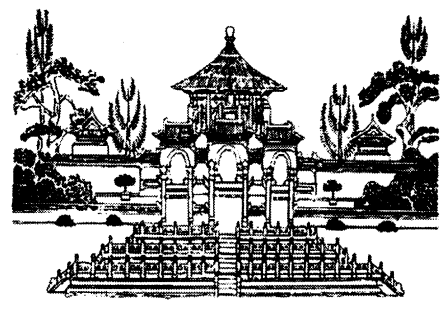
"It's important to listen to the Soldier, and the Soldier's spouse, and sometimes even the Soldier's children, and hear what they're saying," Nelson said.

"But on the other hand, I have to be able to effectively communicate with Soldiers and tell them what they need to know."

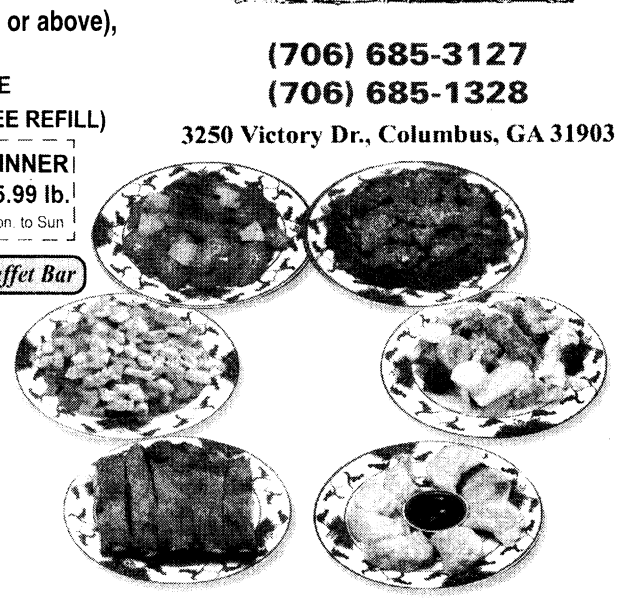
Even though he works to re-enlist Soldiers, Nelson is a big help in getting Soldiers the assignments they want, said Sgt. Jeff Sheldon, a guitarist for The Infantry Center Band and the band's re-enlistment NCO.

"He's a wealth of knowledge, very personable and always available to talk with," Sheldon said. "I couldn't do what I do without Nelson's help. He even helped me re-enlist."

Nelson considers himself a specialist at finding the right documents to help prior-service Soldiers.



He also believes bonuses play a critical role in the high retention rate the Army is experiencing these days.



"You have to be very careful when talking with Soldiers about bonuses," he said. "Bonuses are tailored to each individual based upon different criteria, such as experience, length of service and the unit a Soldier serves in. Every situation is different."

With 13 years of service under his belt, Nelson hopes to stay active for at least seven more years.

"A mission is a mission," Nelson said. "It's my job to accomplish the mission."

Soldier finds WWII dog tag during cleanup

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

A Fort Benning Soldier unearthed a bit of airborne history last month, and he's made it his mission to return it to its rightful owner.

Spc. Joshua Abston, of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Infantry Center, was helping with the post fall cleanup Nov. 17. He was blowing leaves near Sightseeing Road, when he kicked up a patch of dirt and discovered a dog tag embedded below.

"I knew it was old, because it has a notch in it. They don't make them like that anymore," Abston said.

The dog tag belonged to Walton T. Fessler. It bears his service number, 39339354, his blood type, O, and a P, presumably for Protestant.

With a little help from Sgt. 1st Class Antonio Arrington, HHC, USAIC, and an Internet search, Abston discovered that Walton "Bud" Fessler served with the 101st Airborne Division during World War II. He hailed from Portland, Ore. The National Archives Web site led Abston to Fessler's sister, Minne Jorgeson, in Oregon. He called her last week.

The phone call "was amazing," Jorgeson said. She had just hung up the phone after talking to her daughter. The two were making plans for the family's annual party on Dec. 23. Her daughter, Jorgeson said, was remembering "the old parties, when Uncle Bud was alive."

"She said, 'When Uncle Bud came — that was a party!,'" Jorgeson said. "Then I hung up the phone, and this young man called and said he had Bud's dog tag. It was like a message from my brother. I couldn't believe it."

Jorgeson told Abston that Fessler, who died of leukemia in 1996, was in his mid-20s, "older than the average recruit," when he joined the Army at the outbreak of World War II along with his younger brother. An older brother, who joined before the war, survived the Bataan Death March but was killed aboard a ship on his way to a Japanese labor camp.

Bud Fessler, his sister said, made two combat jumps, one on D-Day. He participated in the defense of Bastogne, the Battle of the Bulge and the liberation of a concentration camp. He earned a Bronze Star.

"There wasn't a risk he wouldn't take," said Jorgeson, who speculated that her brother must have lost his dog tag when he was at Fort Benning for airborne training.

Jorgeson said her brother married a member of the Women's Army Corps. After the war, they returned to the coast of Oregon, and Fessler spent his life in forestry and fishing.

The couple, both deceased, had one daughter. She travels the country with her husband in an RV, so she's often out of touch with her Aunt Minne, who hopes to have her niece and her brother's dog tag on hand for the family party.

As for Abston, Jorgeson said she's "quite taken with the young Soldier" who took the time to locate Fessler's family. He dismissed her praise with a shrug.

"If somebody found my dog tags, I'd hope they would try to get them back to me," he said.

Soldiers celebrate early Thanksgiving meal at Warrior Inn

Tracy A. Bailey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Warrior Inn Dining Facility Soldiers prepared an early Thanksgiving Nov. 23, serving more than 160 pounds of turkey, 100 pounds of ham and more than 60 pounds of Cornish hens the day before Thanksgiving to approximately 400 Soldiers, civilians and family members.

A great deal of planning goes into this dinner, said Sgt. 1st Class George Howard, 36th Engineer Group Food Service supervisor.

"We think about this meal year-round," he said. "We plan this meal with all ethnic groups involved and the food that represents many different cultures."

The staff started cooking the dinner the night before — turkey, ham, steamship round, two different stuffings, candied yams and pie.

"It's a time to shine with the ice carvings, the cake decorating — the quality of the meal. The Soldiers appreciate it. They come back and say 'man, I didn't know you could do that.' So, it's rewarding for us as well as the Soldiers themselves," Howard said.

"It's a great honor to thank these Soldiers for everything they do for us," said Capt. Gerardo Pulido, Supply and Service OIC with the 36th Engineer Group who served the meal along with the Group's other officers and senior NCOs.

The efforts of the dining facility's staff did not go unnoticed.

"It's great. I like it," said Spc. Serafina Bermudez, administrative specialist with HHC, 36th Engineer Group. "I like the way the dining room is decorated, and I like that the officers get to serve the Soldiers."

Chapel: Dedicated Tuesday

are down, they are searching for something bigger than themselves. We need to nurture that. They and their families will worship here."

Since the Army is putting "pretty heavy rocks in Soldiers' rucksacks," he said a unit's chaplain and chaplain assistant are instrumental in touching Soldiers' inner strength and helping prop up the Soldiers and the families who support them. The chapel, on its "special piece of terrain," would be important.

The Army's Chief of Chaplains Maj. Gen. David Hicks attended the ceremony.

"When God closes a door, he opens a window," Hicks said. "That's especially true of what's happening here today."

Of the ashes of the "devastating loss" of the Catholic chapel, he said people with a vision were presented an opportunity to build a new chapel.

Hicks said his presence at the ribbon cutting was personal.

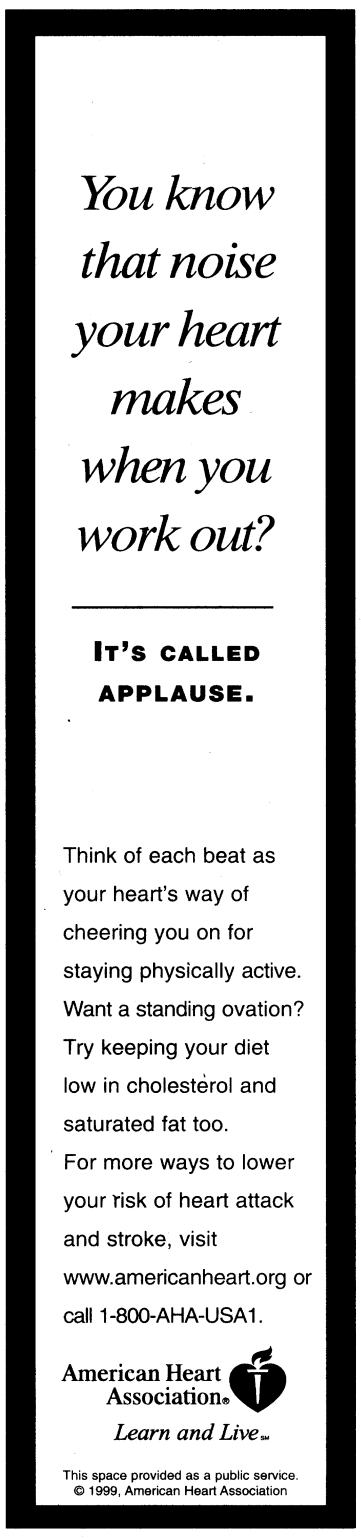
"As a young Soldier, I came to faith in an Army chapel," Hicks said. "I was a problem child, but it was the chapel that changed my life. It just shows what God will do with a building.

"This is significant," he said. "It does indeed count for time and eternity. Although this is just a building — a construction that came about because of man — all we see in this building is a means to an end. This house stands as a place for people to come and worship."

One of the chapel's pieces of art was created by E. Marie d'Esterno, who had worked at Fort Benning. Her cold-cast bronze sculpture "Prayer for Peace" hangs inside the main entrance.

D'Esterno said she was creating the artwork originally as a painting inspired by a French Press Agency photo of eight Soldiers, men and women, praying while deployed to Iraq.

"I thought, 'what have I left undone,'" she said. "And I decided it needed to be a sculpture."



Davis said the chapel, although still a "work in progress," will be open for worshippers attending services Saturday and Sunday.

The chapel has classrooms for religious education classes, a kitchen adjacent to the fellowship hall, a nursery and a cry room where parents can sit with their children and still participate in the worship service.

Santa arrives at 5:30 p.m. today at the Field of the Four Chaplains.

Rumsfeld: Iraq's terrorists not worthy of 'insurgent' label

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — "Insurgents" just seems like too positive a word to describe terrorists in Iraq and implies a level of legitimacy they don't have and don't deserve, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld told Pentagon reporters Nov. 29.

The secretary mused during a Pentagon news briefing about terms that might be more appropriate: "terrorists" and "enemies of the government" among them.

"We frequently call them insurgents, (but) I'm a little reluctant to, for some reason," Rumsfeld said. "They don't have broad support in that country. ... They're against a legitimate government. ... There are also growing divisions among the enemies of the government."

Marine Gen. Peter Pace, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, slipped later during the briefing and used the "i" word.

"I have to use the word 'insurgent,' because I can't think of a better word right now," he said with a smile.

"Enemies of the legitimate Iraq government," Rumsfeld responded, drawing laughter from reporters. "How's that?"

Jesting aside, Rumsfeld and Pace affirmed the enemy threat in Iraq is no laughing matter.

But Rumsfeld said he believes divisions are popping up within the terrorists groups in Iraq and that they're continuing to lose popular support. He predicted that Iraq's upcoming Dec. 15 elections will take more wind out of the terrorists' sails.

"When the Iraqi people have their own constitution, that they wrote, that they voted for, and then they elect people under that constitution, it becomes increasingly clear that anyone going around killing the Iraqi people (is) fighting against a legitimate government," he said.

"They are against a legitimate constitution, (and) they will be against people who have been legitimately elected under the Iraqi constitution," he said.

Once Iraq's new democratic government stands up, "any contention that there's some sort of an occupation taking place or that coalition forces are there at anything other than the invitation of the government and the United Nations becomes a weaker argument," Rumsfeld said.

Success in fighting terrorism is critical to U.S. security, he said.

"Let's be clear," Rumsfeld said. "U.S. forces are in Iraq to help the Iraqis fight the terrorists there, so we don't have to fight them here in the United States."

Burning Afghan bodies resulted from poor judgement, not war crimes

Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The decision by U.S. Soldiers to burn the bodies of two enemy Afghan fighters was an act of poor judgment, but not a violation of the laws of war, U.S. officials have determined.

Officials also determined that using the act to incite Taliban fighters by announcing it over psychological operations loudspeakers was a separate act. In all, four Soldiers have received administrative punishment in the two incidents.

"Based on the criminal investigation, there was no evidence to substantiate the allegation of desecration or any violation of the Law of War," according to an executive summary of the official investigation report from Combined Joint Task Force 76. "However, there was evidence of poor decision-making and judgment, poor reporting and lack of knowledge and respect for local Afghan customs and tradition."

The executive summary was released to the media Nov. 26.

The report refers to an investigation into a widely reported incident Oct. 1 in Gumbad, Afghanistan, in which U.S. soldiers burned the bodies of two enemy fighters and psychological operations forces announced the burning to incite Taliban fighters.

Coalition forces know the location as an area of enemy activity, officials said. A Sept. 30 engagement killed two enemy fighters, and local citizens had not retrieved the bodies 24 hours later. An officer on the ground decided it best to burn the bodies for hygienic reasons.

When apprised of the act, the unit's battalion commander ordered the bodies extinguished. The troops on the ground complied immediately. However, a psychological operations team operating in the area heard of the incident via local tactical radio traffic and broadcasted the information toward the village and mountains where the enemy was suspected of hiding.

As a result of this investigation, four soldiers were reprimanded. Two of them, the PSYOPS specialists, received "nonjudicial punishment," imposed by a commander for wrongdoing that doesn't rise to a criminal level. Such punishment can result in fines, extra duties and short-term confinement, but no details were released on the extent of circumstances in this incident.

"These were all nonjudicial, administrative actions that were taken," Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman said Tuesday.

The investigation found the soldiers believed burning the bodies was the best course of action, knowing cremation of enemy remains is allowed under the Geneva Conventions.

"The Soldiers at Gumbad did not have a thorough knowledge of the local Afghan traditions with respect to burial," the report summary states. "This incident was the first time that this unit had killed enemy combatants at close range and had to determine what to do with the remains."

Islamic custom forbids cremation. Task force officials acknowledge the burning was wrong and have ordered training on Afghan sensitivities for all troops in the command, officials said.

Regarding the loudspeaker broadcasts, investigating officials found no evidence that the bodies were burned for the psychological effect. However, the report states, the broadcasts were "in violation of standing policies for the content of loudspeaker messages."

The operator and his supervisor have been reassigned to other duties, officials said.

"CJTF 76 investigations identified two separate but related incidents that highlighted poor judgment and a lack of Afghan cultural knowledge — not Law of War violations," officials said in the investigation report summary. "The judgment errors are serious and have been corrected with administrative action and training."

Santa: To attend tree, menorah lighting ceremony transportation whenever possible. Though frequent flier miles and senior discounts help defray the cost, he pays his own travel expenses when he makes public appearances.

Claus has consistently refused endorsement offers, including a recent pitch from a major airline, which was designed to save the carrier from bankruptcy and "engender a post modern Claus that would appeal to the upwardly mobile, those with more expendable income," a company spokesman said.

The campaign, "Savvy Santa flies the friendly skies in style, from St. Cloud to Santa Cruz in less time than it takes to harness his reindeer!" was the brainchild of Anna Mulrights, the head of the company's marketing division and a former animal activist.

Claus dismissed the offer out of hand, a North Pole source said.

"It has always been his belief that to offer his person or his persona as an advertisement for any commercial venture would tarnish the value and the very meaning of Christmas," the unidentified spokesperson said. "It is not about the money. He is steadfast in his commitment to the children, and will not accept one penny for his work. His travels, his wardrobe and his healthy appetite are funded through a residual pension account established by Saint Cardinal of Louis in 1562."

Claus's yearly pension runs low this time of year, as more and more he's asked to appear publicly in areas where children have begun to doubt his very existence. Though Fort Benning children have long been reputed as "believers, do-gooders and keepers of the Christmas spirit," according to the 2000 Santa Claus Archives and Historical Behavioral Census, Claus attends the annual lighting ceremony because he "has a special fondness for the children of our Soldiers," his spokesman said.

"Mr. Claus looks forward to his annual visit with the children at Fort Benning," he said. "Aside from delivering toys, it is the highlight of the season, because the children at Fort Benning know what it means to be thankful and giving and loving and kind all year 'round."

Claus's annual trek to Fort Benning has historically been complicated and costly. Department of Defense officials cut through a lot of the red and green tape by issuing Claus a military identification card after President Dwight Eisenhower issued a proclamation naming Claus the Goodwill Ambassador to Everywhere in 1961. By and large, that simplified the matter of entering military installations without triggering panic, as was the case during the Cuban Missile Crisis, when Claus was detained for questioning after entering airspace over Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

But his military ID was useless at Chicago's O'Hare Airport, where Claus missed a connecting flight last week after what a spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union called "a clear-cut case of profiling."

Claus took the incident in stride, airport officials said, though the delay caused him to miss a scheduled appearance at a bowling tournament in Boise, Idaho. Officials offered to bump a passenger from a later flight, but Claus declined, saying "the safe and timely departure of the passengers on that plane is much more important than my own mission, and their arrival is anticipated with more delight than my arrival has ever generated."

According to the airline official, the plane was filled with Soldiers returning from Iraq.

Claus reportedly spent the night in the airport USO lounge before boarding a bus for Benning Monday morning. He arrived here late last night after a short stay in Birmingham, where he presided over the annual International Santa Claus and Elvis Impersonators Convention.

Claus will be available for wish list consultations tonight at the lighting ceremony, which begins at 5:30 p.m. at the Field of the Four Chaplains.

Editor's note: Aside from the fact that Santa will be present tonight at the lighting ceremony, everything else in this article is pretty much bogus. Completely bogus, actually.

Chaplains: Gave lives to save fellow passengers bound for England.

Each account ends the same, with the sinking of the Dorchester on Feb. 3, 1943, in the icy waters of the North Atlantic in an area already dubbed "Torpedo Junction."

An account of the events written by Victor Parachin contains interviews with some of the survivors. They told Parachin of the boat's Coast Guard escort report of sonar readings from a submarine. Without protection from air, the ship would be vulnerable that night. Hans Danielsen, the ship's captain, instructed the 902 Soldiers, Merchant Marine crewmembers and a few civilians to sleep in their clothes and life jackets as a precaution, but many did not.

Not long after midnight, the German U-boat fired a torpedo at the Dorchester, scoring a direct hit below the water line on the starboard side. The captain ordered the men to abandon ship, and less than half an hour later, the Dorchester disappeared into the frigid waters.

Two Coast Guard Cutters rescued 230, the rest, including the four chaplains, died that night. Survivors recounted stories of the chaplains, calm and efficient as they helped men out of the hold and onto the deck where they could board life boats.

Petty Officer John Mahoney was headed to his cabin for his gloves when he was stopped by Goode, a Jewish rabbi.

"Never mind," Goode said. "I have two pairs." Mahoney told Parachin it wasn't until after he made it to safety that he realized the chaplain hadn't had a second pair.

One of the boat's engineers, Grady Clark, watched the chaplains issuing life jackets. And when they had handed out the last one, calmly removed their own life jackets and gave them to the next four men in line.

"It was the finest thing I have seen or hope to see this side of heaven," said John Ladd, another survivor.

As the ship went down, others recalled hearing the chaplains' encouraging words and seeing them standing, arms linked, praying.

At 42, George Fox was the oldest of the lieutenants and the only one who had already been to war. The Pennsylvania native had left home and school at 17, lied about his age and enlisted. As a medical corps assistant, he earned the Silver Star and a Purple Heart for his injuries. He left the Army, eventually becoming a Methodist minister in 1934.

The youngest was Clark Poling. The 30-year-old son of a World War I chaplain studied at Yale University's Divinity School and was ordained in the Dutch Reform church. And although he had been told that chaplains had the highest mortality rate among Soldiers, he still signed up.

Alexander Goode, the Jewish rabbi, grew up in Brooklyn and earned his Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University. In January 1941, he applied to become a Navy chaplain, with no success. After Pearl Harbor was bombed, the Army accepted his application.

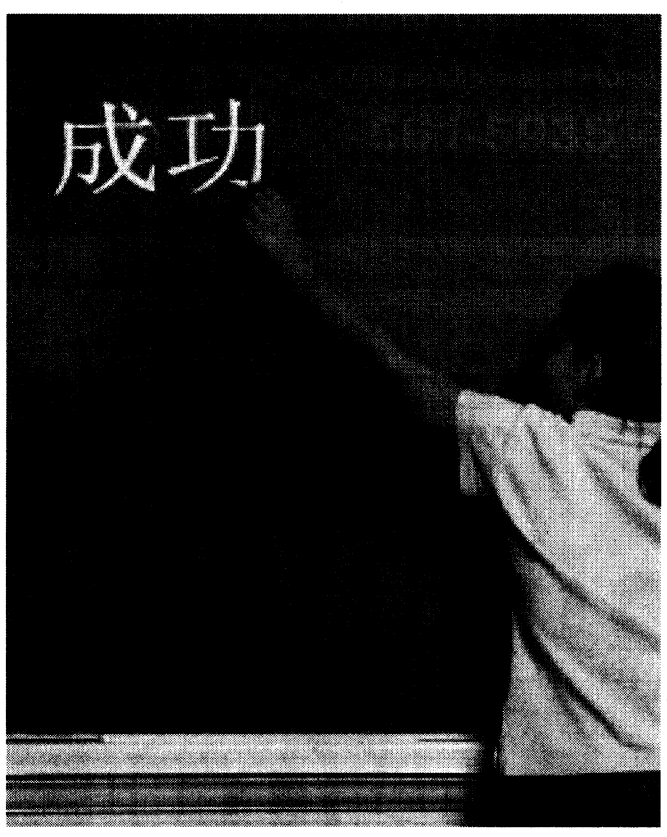
John Washington, one of seven children of Irish immigrants, earned money on a paper route to help support his family. Although he wore glasses and loved music, he was described as having inner toughness and had been the leader of a gang roaming the streets of New Jersey before turning his life around.

Three left wives and young children, who received their Soldiers' posthumous awards of the Purple Heart and Distinguished Service Cross in December 1944.

Their service was remembered by President Truman in 1951 with the dedication of the Chapel of the Four Chaplains at Temple University in Pennsylvania. Though that chapel no longer stands, a nonprofit organization of the same name does, dedicated to "encouraging selfless service and cooperation among all people."

Another nonprofit organization, The Immortal Chaplains Fund, was founded by Fox's nephew and Goode's daughter.

In a history of the U.S. Army Chaplaincy, author Robert Gushwa documents the four chaplains' story, writing "the story of the immortal four captured the imagination of the nation and became the most famous and commemorated incident involving chaplains in all of World War II."



The survivors were asked to provide information to the Office of the Chief of Chaplains. Those responses are now part of the National Archives.

Ironically, the chaplains' names never appeared in the official register of commissioned officers for 1942 or 1943, although they have been honored with a commemorative stamp issued by the U.S. Postal Service and received a posthumous Special Medal for Heroism authorized by Congress that has never been presented to any others.

And little information is available as to why Chapel Field, adjacent to The Infantry Center Chapel, was renamed the Field of the Four Chaplains.

But Headquarters, U.S. Army Infantry Center General Order 29, dated April 17, 1968, made the change official. The field has been home to events like the post's annual Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony ever since.

Pvt. Miguel Ramos, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, pulls security at the checkpoint during Wednesday's field exercise.

Training gets real-world flavor

The Iraqi man, carrying nothing more than a coat, walked up to the U.S. Army checkpoint. He was stopped, searched and allowed to pass through. The Soldiers manning the checkpoint watched his every move as he continued on his way.

Although this is a everyday occurrence for Fort Benning Soldiers in Iraq, this was a first for the Soldiers of D Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment. They're in their 12th week of one station unit training and the checkpoint scenario was one of three mission sets the Soldiers would rotate through Wednesday.

"This is their culminating field exercise," said company commander Capt. Terrence Higgins. "It's 24-hour operations, fully tactical, designed to get these guys ready to deploy."

And Higgins knows the importance of training the Soldiers well. He's been in command of D Company for six months, but it's another six months of his life that's relevant to the training he's overseeing — the time spent deployed to Iraq with 1st Bn., 8th Inf. Regt., from Fort Carson, Colo.

"Most of our drill sergeants have been deployed, too," Higgins said. "It definitely adds to the training."

And, he said, the cadre's experiences and training across the spectrum of Infantry units — mechanized, light and airborne — means they each have something different to add to the training they give the new Soldiers.

The Iraqi at the checkpoint was actually one of the company's drill sergeants, Sgt. 1st Class George Weill, a combat veteran of the 82nd Airborne Division, with a combat jump to his credit.

Squads went through several iterations with Weill at the checkpoint. In one, he drove through in a pickup truck with a camper shell, in another, he went by foot.

"Drill Sergeant Weill's very creative," Higgins said. "He brings a lot to the table."

Weill used a constant stream of questions to eventually wear some of the squad down and get them to respond to him. He looked for opportunities to catch the Soldiers off guard, lunging for the weapon stashed behind the seat of his truck, ending up pinned to the ground as a result.

"You have to maintain control at all times," Weill told the squad. "The next time you'll do this will be in combat and probably within five months."

The third iteration at the checkpoint had Weill driving up in a different truck than the squad had seen before.

After searching the driver and moving him to a holding area, the Soldiers checked underneath the vehicle with a mirror.

Then came a faint dinging sound.

"Awwwwww," one Soldier said, as he and the others realized that was the sound of a simulated explosive device detonation.

Weill held up the detonator, a wireless doorbell the Soldiers had missed when they searched him, and reached under the truck for the rest of the "bomb" the Soldiers didn't see with the mirror.

"You have to think like a insurgent sometimes," Higgins said. "Where would you hide something if you didn't want the police to find it?"

"And Pepsi cans are IEDs," Weill said. "Dead cows are IEDs. Anything can be an IED. Anything. Anything. Anything."

Pvt. Marcos Morales earned praise from the cadre for jumping in and subduing Weill after Weill knocked one of his squadmates down.

"It's hard keeping my cool and trying to be cautious," Morales said. "I'm trying to be one step ahead."

The drill sergeants, he said, were doing a good job at teaching them their new trade.

"We have to take it seriously," Morales said. "What they're teaching us is going to be real — soon. And no one said this was going to be an easy job."

"All our training is the only thing that will keep us alive," said Pvt. Nicholas Minter. "And you've got to trust the man next to you, even the people you don't like."

On the movement to contact and react to ambush lanes, Staff Sgt. John Zaremba held an after action report with another squad.

"You get an OK," Zaremba said, telling the Soldiers the training was designed to give them a better grasp of what they'll do with their units.

"They're still standard battle drills," he said. "You're going to use them."

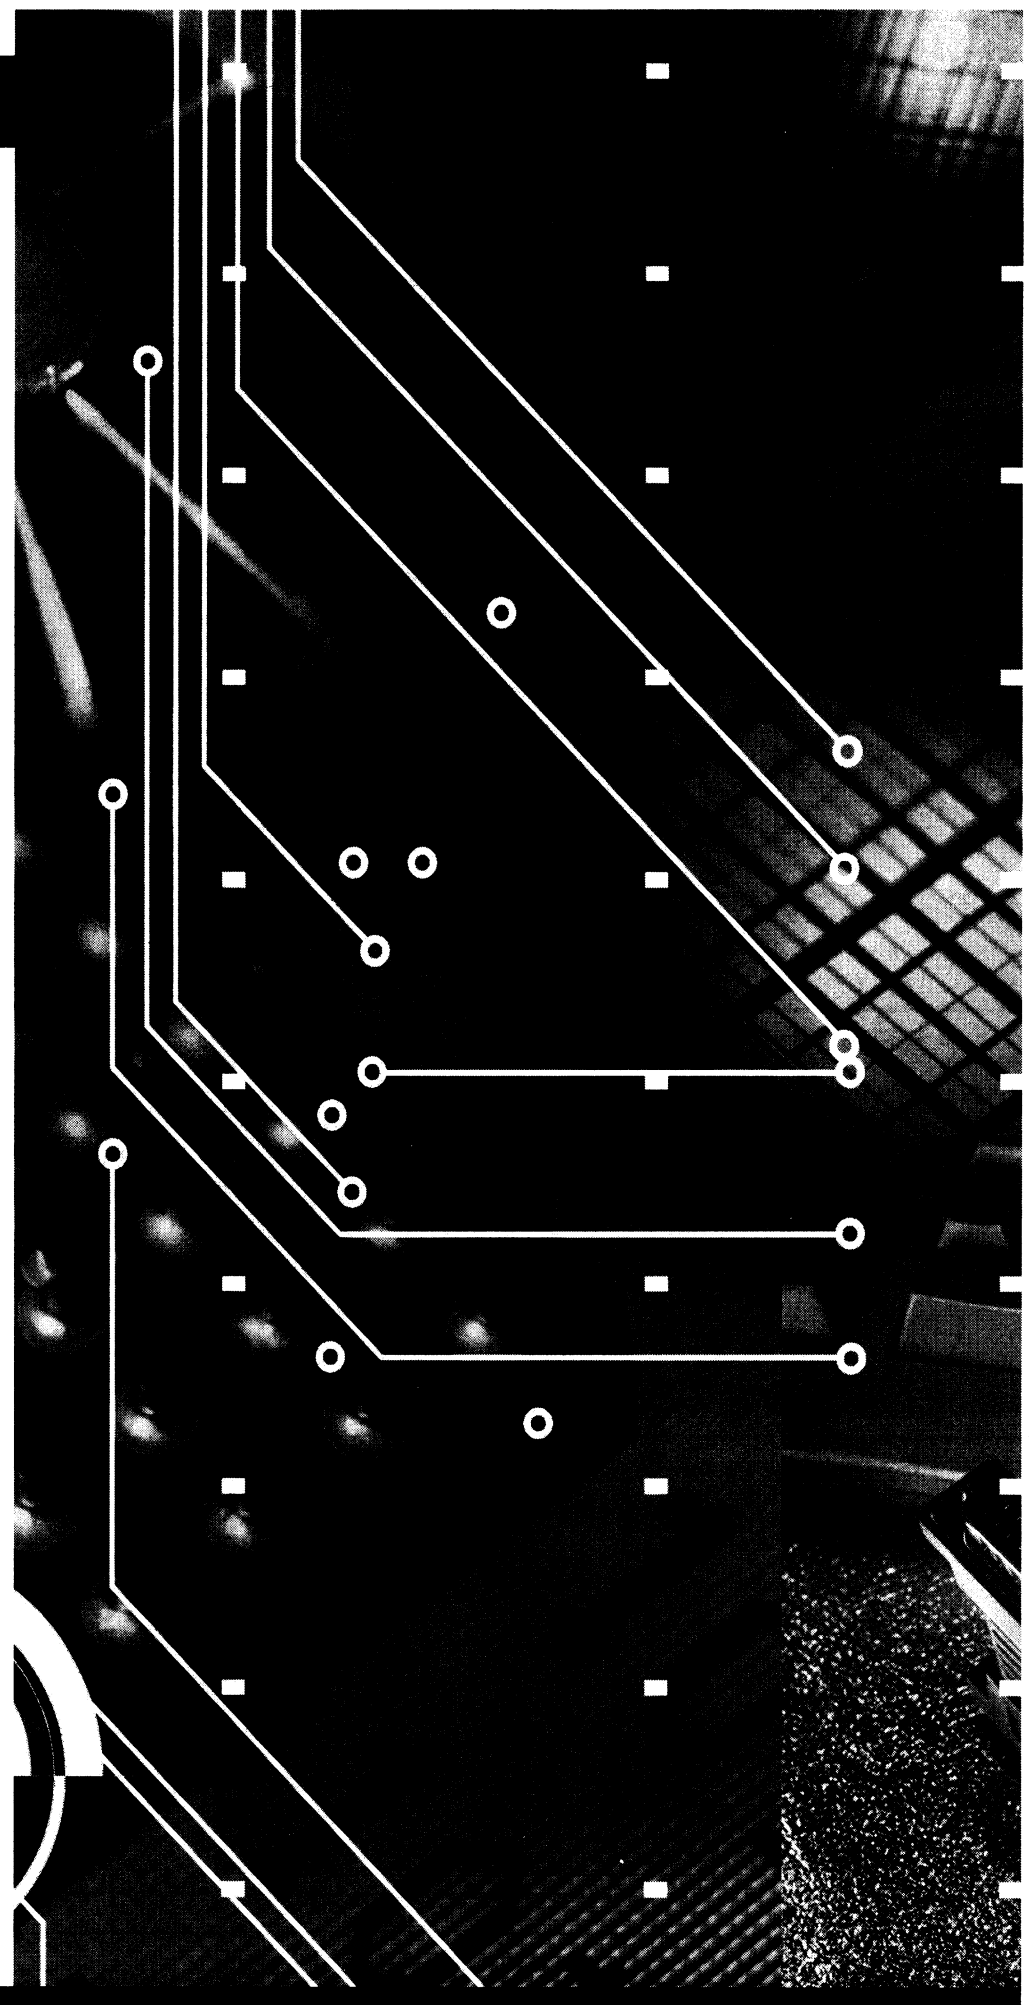
Pvt. Samuel Valdes said the field exercise was the first time they were able to apply all of their training at the same time.

"It's pretty different when you put the missions together," he said. The 25-year old former tree trimmer said he joined the Army partly for more of a physical challenge.

"And I want to do something good while I have a chance," Valdes said, "so I can tell my little boy I did something about it."

Pvt. Jeff Ware provides security as another Soldier searches an enemy soldier killed in an ambush Wednesday during the unit's situational training lanes.

Story and photos by Melissa House



Pvt. Nicholas Minter checks an Iraqi, played by Sgt. 1st Class George Weill, for weapons before allowing him to proceed through the checkpoint.

Pvt. Samuel Valdes cracks a smile as a fellow Soldier plays dead. Valdes practiced searching the "enemy," taking inventory of equipment, then passed the information to his squad leader.

Q: Under what name did show biz entrepreneur Merv Griffin originally try to sell the TV game show we know as Jeopardy?

A: What's the question?

TV favorites can offer ideas for the perfect holiday gift

John Crook
© Zap2it

If you're going nuts trying to find a holiday gift for that hard-to-please person on your list, the answer may lie as close as his or her favorite TV show.

Stores and online retailers have a bumper selection of new TV-related videos, clothing, toys, books and sundry collectibles aimed at everyone from small fries to seniors.

HBO's Classical Baby DVD set is a fun way to encourage children to explore the world of music, art and dance via three half-hour programs in which a diaper-clad maestro leads an all-animal orchestra through catchy renderings of short musical pieces. Bonus features include activity tips for parents and kids before and after the program.

Sesame Street products are also reliable favorites among kids, who can slip into a Grouch sweatshirt while singing along to the Cookie Monster Playing Guitar toy. Nickelodeon's Dora the Explorer is another good bet (check out the Dora Plug 'n' Play game-control unit), as is SpongeBob SquarePants, especially the delightfully silly Ripped Pants SpongeBob toy.

Disney offers a That's So Raven line of clothing, fragrance and other products for "tween" girls, while boys can replay The Lord of the Rings via sets of action figures and Minimates of the main characters (be prepared to share with Dad), along with a full range of other LOTR-inspired calendars, games and collectibles.

Kid-friendly DVD titles include the first season of Jim Henson's Fraggle Rock, A&E Network's second season of The Wind in the Willows, seasons one through four of Danger Mouse and Nickelodeon's Surprise Santa.

Then again, kids are rarely shy about sharing their wish list. If you have a fan of NBC's The Apprentice or Fox's Family Guy on your gift list, he or she will get a huge kick out of the talking 12-inch Donald Trump doll that is seldom at a loss for words, or the 18-inch talking Peter Griffin doll from Fox's sitcom hit.

If your list includes a TV fan who wears his heart on his sleeve — or head, or wherever — for a favorite show, check out the sexy scrubs and T-shirts from ABC's Grey's Anatomy or the range of Desperate Housewives shirts, oven mitts and other items.

Of course, if you really want to mess with a friend's mind, wish him a bon voyage via an Oceanic Airlines travel bag from Lost.

ABC also has a complete assortment of items from its daytime lineup, including Erica Kane's engagement ring from All My Children to a coffee mug from The View.

Like Fox's soapy The O.C.? Try on the show's logo cap while dashing off a box of Chrismukkah cards as you listen to Peter Gallagher's new CD, 7 Days in Memphis. If you're really brave, check out American Idol DVD: The Best and Worst of Seasons 1-4.

CBS invites gift recipients to solve puzzling crimes via CSI: The Board Game, a CSI fingerprint examination kit and a new CSI forensic entomology kit.

Check out the Everybody Hates Chris hat and the Survivor: Guatemala T-shirt among clothing items.

NBC has the ticket for anyone jonesing for the upcoming Winter Olympic Games via a hat and T-shirt bearing the Torino 2006 and NBC Olympic logos, but that's barely scratching the surface of TV sports-related products.

Score a home run with any serious baseball fan with ESPN's five-part The Brooklyn Dodgers: The Original America's Team on DVD — which includes previously unreleased footage — or Yankeeography Volumes 3 and 4, the latest DVD releases in an ongoing look at the most influential figures in New York Yankees history.

If your budget allows, treat that special sports buddy to A&E's 7-DVD New York Yankees Fall Classic Collector's Edition 1996-2001, which includes five complete games.

Any Bosox fan will flip over The Boston Red Sox 2004 World Series Collector's Edition, a 12-DVD collection encompassing nearly 40 hours of baseball.

Also of note from ESPN: Now I Can Die in Peace, Bill Simmons' hilarious account of a Red Sox fan's painful years leading up to the team's historic 2004 World Series championship season, and ESPN All Sports Trivia Challenge, the cable giant's first such trivia board game.

It's not much of a gamble that the poker fan on your list will be royally flushed with excitement over the complete line of World Poker Tour products ranging from a new X-box game, a season three DVD of the hit TV series and the helpful book Making the Final Table.

Video-game enthusiasts aren't lacking for new titles, either, what with new X-box 360 releases such as Quake 4, Call of Duty 2 and Amped 3.

A new title for Windows PC, The Movies, allows gamers to build and run their own Hollywood film studio.

The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, The Witch and The Wardrobe — This movie follows the exploits of the four Pevensie siblings — Lucy, Edmund, Susan and Peter — in World War II England, who enter the world of Narnia through a magical wardrobe while playing a game of hide and seek in the rural country home of an elderly professor.

Once there, the children discover a charming, peaceful land inhabited by talking beasts, dwarfs, fauns, centaurs and giants that has become a world cursed to eternal winter by the evil White Witch.

Starring Tilda Swinton, James McAvoy, James Cosmo, Jim Broadbent and Elizabeth Hawthorne.

The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, The Witch and The Wardrobe is rated PG for battle sequences and frightening moments.

Aeon Flux — Set 400 years in the future in a world where humans have nearly been wiped out by a virus and the remains of mankind live in a city encased in a protective bubble, Aeon Flux (Charlize Theron), an acrobatic superheroine, is assigned to kill the government leader.

Also starring Frances McDormand, Marton Csokas and Jonny Lee Miller.

Aeon Flux is rated PG-13 for sequences of violence and sexual content.

The Ice Harvest — It's Christmas Eve in Wichita, Kan., and this year Charlie Arglist just might have something to celebrate.

Charlie, an attorney for sleazy businesses, and his unsavory associate, Vic Cavenaugh, have just successfully embezzled $2,127,000 from boss Bill Guerrard.

Starring John Cusack and Billy Bob Thornton.

The Ice Harvest is rated R for violence, language, sexuality and nudity.

Just Friends — When Chris (Ryan Reynolds), a likeable, high-school loser, finally gathers the courage to reveal his love to Jamie (Amy Smart) — the girl of his dreams and a super cool cheerleader — she rejects him, saying she just wants to be friends.

So, he transforms himself into a selfish, womanizing and successful music executive.

But, 10 years later, circumstances bring him back to his hometown and fate reconnects him with the "just friends" girl of his dreams.

Just Friends is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue.

In the Mix — Hoping to safeguard his daughter, a mafia don assigns his loyal right-hand man, Darrell (Usher Raymond), to act as his daughter's bodyguard.

Little does he realize that his daughter and Darrell have been sweet on each other for a long time, and now, things are really going to heat up.

Also starring Emmanuelle Chriqui and Chazz Palminteri.

In the Mix is rated PG-13 for sexual content, violence and language.

Rent — Jonathan Larson's Pulitzer Prize-winning rock opera tells the story of a group of bohemians struggling to express themselves through their art and "measuring their lives in love."

Starring Jesse L. Martin, Taye Diggs and Idina Menzel.

Rent is rated PG-13 for mature thematic material involving drugs and sexuality, and for strong language.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' — An orphaned street kid (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson) makes his mark in the drug trade, but finally dares to leave the violence of his former life behind to pursue a promising career in the music business as a rapper.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language, drug content, sexuality and nudity.

Yours, Mine & Ours — Frank (Dennis Quaid) is a straight-laced career military man with eight kids. Helen (Rene Russo) is a free-spirited designer with 10.

When they get married and decide to pack the entire clan under one roof, the only thing that will get the kids together is the job of breaking their parents apart.

Yours, Mine & Ours is rated PG for mild crude humor.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire — In his fourth year at Hogwarts, Harry (Daniel Radcliffe) faces his greatest challenges and dangers yet. When he is selected under mysterious circumstances as a contestant in the Triwizard Tournament, Harry must compete against the best young wizards from schools all over Europe.

Also starring Rupert Grint and Emma Watson.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire is rated PG-13 for sequences of fantasy violence and frightening images.

Walk the Line — He picked cotton, sold door-to-door and served in the Air Force.

He was a voice of a rebellion that changed the face of rock and roll. An outlaw before today's rebels were born — and an icon they would never forget.

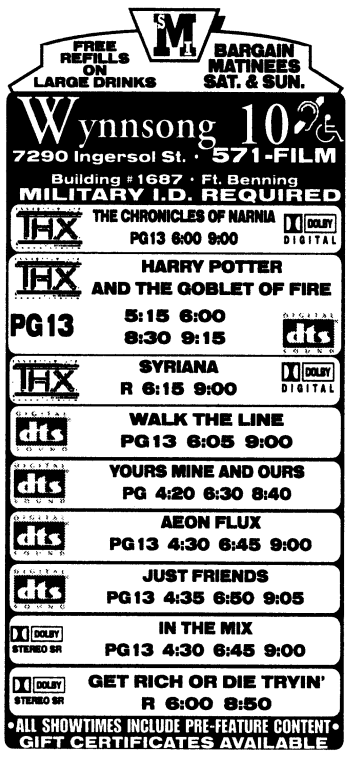
His name was Johnny Cash (Joaquin Phoenix).

The movie explores the early years of the music legend, an artist who transcended musical boundaries to touch people around the globe.

As his music changed the world, Cash's own world was rocked by the woman who became the love of his life — June Carter (Reese Witherspoon).

Walk the Line is rated PG-13 for language, thematic material and depiction of drug dependency.

Chicken Little — The movie picks up where the classic fable ends, namely after the pint-sized hero has caused big-time havoc when he mistakes a falling acorn for a piece of the sky.



In the wake of the "unfortunate acorn incident," Chicken Little's name is mud in his hometown of Oakey Oaks. Down but not out, he struggles mightily to restore his reputation and make his dad proud. Chicken Little joins the local baseball team despite the fact that he is barely bigger than a baseball himself.

Voiced by Zach Braff, Garry Marshall and Don Knots.

Chicken Little is rated G.

THINGS TO DO

A Christmas Carol
through Dec. 23

The Springer Opera House will present a musical theatre adaptation of A Christmas Carol, produced by artistic director Paul Pierce, through Dec. 23.

Show times are 7:30 p.m. today, Dec. 16 to18, 22 and 23 and 2:30 p.m. today, Sunday and Dec. 17 to18.

Ticket prices are $35 and under. For tickets, call (888) 3320-5200 or visit tickets.com.

A Tuna Christmas
through Dec. 23

The residents of Tuna, Texas, return for another holiday engagement of Columbus' most popular theatre event. Audiences just won't let the Springer Opera House "put ... it ... down," in the immortal words of Vera Carp.

Will this be the year that Vera's 15-year winning streak in the annual Tuna Christmas yard display contest is broken? Will this be the year that waitresses Inita Goodwin and Helen Bedd finally catch a man, preferably two?

A Tuna Christmas will be performed at 7:30 p.m. today, Wednesday, Thursday, Dec. 16 to 18 and Dec. 21 to 23 in Foley Hall.

Tickets are $25 and under.

For tickets, visit tickets.com or call (888) 332-5200.

Bi-City Christmas Parade
today

It's the holiday season, and that means it's time for the annual Bi-City Christmas Parade. Beginning at 10 a.m. today, the streets of Columbus and Phenix City come alive with holiday spirit as marching bands and floats usher in the season.

The parade begins in Phenix City and continues down Broadway in Columbus.

For more information, call 576-5475 or (334) 291-4719.

Blast!
through Sunday

Blast!, winner of the 2001 Tony Award for Best Special Theatrical Event and 2001 Emmy Award for Best Choreography, is comprised of 37 brass, percussion and visual performers brought together in a unique explosion of music and theatre.

Blast! is an exuberant 15-number show that doesn't falter while bridging the categories of classical, blues, jazz, rock 'n' roll and techno-pop music.

Blast! will be performed at 7:30 p.m. today and Sunday at the RiverCenter's Bill Heard Theatre.

Tickets are $30 to $48.50.

For tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or go to the RiverCenter box office.

Christmas on the Lake
today

Florence Marina State Park invites the public to their annual Christmas boat parade, Christmas on the Lake, today.

Private boat owners will decorate their boats and parade around the marina for the public's enjoyment.

The lighted boat parade will begin at 7 p.m. followed by refreshments.

Santa Claus will arrive at the boat ramp to visit with kids and hand out goodies.

The event is free but visitors are reminded that a $3 park fee is required.

Florence Marina State Park is located 16 miles west of Lumpkin, Ga., on Hwy. 39C.

For more information, call Trena Evans at (229) 838-4706.

Yule log ceremony
today

Historic Westville, the village of the 1850s, will host a yule log ceremony at 2 p.m. today to reflect the romanticism of the 1850s, honor Westville's friends and volunteers and open a month of special activities.

All children (grades five and younger) are invited to hunt for the yule log.

The Youth Choir of First Baptist Church in Cuthbert, Ga., will sing Christmas carols.

After the yule log lighting, visitors are invited to the McDonald House to drink wassail and eat yule log cake.

Westville is located in Lumpkin, Ga., 35 miles south of Columbus.

For more information, call (888) 733-1850 or visit www.westville.org.

Second Sunday Series
Sunday

Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center will present "Natural Holiday Decorations" from 2 to 3 p.m. as part of its Second Sunday Series.

Just in time for the holidays, participants will learn how to make decorations from natural products.

They will design and take home tree decorations using twigs, cones, natural fibers and more.

The fee is $1 per person.

Oxbow Meadows is located at 3535 South Lumpkin Road in Columbus.

For more information, call 687-4090 or visit http://oxbow.colstate.edu.

Family Art Affair
Sunday

Bring your family of all ages to the Columbus Museum for hands-on art activities at the Family Art Affair.

From 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday, the museum will present "Recycled Re-Seen: Creating Treasure from your Trash Can!"

The exhibition Hugh Williams: The Market of Kumasi will be the inspiration with its themes and materials. The museum will provide materials, but participants are encouraged to bring any other "everyday" items to include in their creation.

The Family Art Affair is free and open to the public.

For more information, call 748-2562, ext. 36.

Blind Boys of Alabama
Dec. 17

The Blind Boys of Alabama will perform their holiday show at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 17 on the Bill Heard stage of the RiverCenter for the Performing Arts.

Since 1939, the Blind Boys of Alabama have been traveling the world with their unique blend of classic pure-soul gospel and contemporary music.

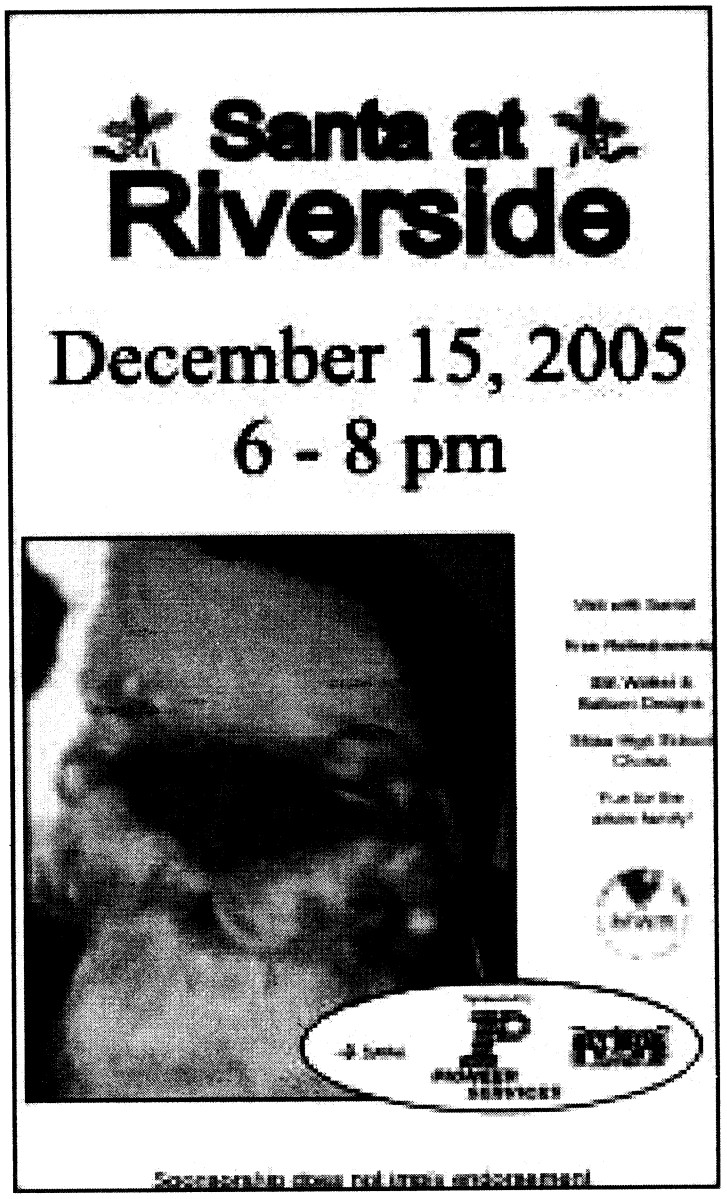
Single tickets are $15 to $38 for reserved seating. Student and group discounts are also available.

Tickets can be purchased at the RiverCenter box office, online at www.rivercenter.org or by calling (888) 332-5200.

Fantasy In Lights
through Dec. 31

Callaway Gardens presents the 14th Annual Fantasy In Lights, selected as a 2005 Southeast Tourism Society's Top 20 Event, through Dec. 31.

The Christmas Village opens at noon, Santa arrives at 4 p.m. and the lights show begins at 6 p.m. daily.



Tickets to Fantasy In Lights include same-day admission to Callaway Gardens.

The Gardens open at 9 a.m. daily.

To minimize wait times and maximize enjoyment, hourly time slots are assigned for peak dates (through Dec. 25, 30 and 31.

When ordering tickets online at www.callawaygardens.com, guests should know the ages of those in their party and the date, time and whether they want to ride in their personal vehicle or on the Jolly Trolley (available through Christmas Day).

For information or to order tickets by phone, call (800) 225-5292.

Tree time

The season's most universal tradition is rooted in ancient history

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

While Christmas may come once a year, decking the halls with evergreens is a winter tradition dating back centuries. Originally, instead of evoking the holiday spirit, evergreens were used to ward off sickness and evil spirits.

The Christmas tree has roots that date way back, back to when evergreens were used as bough and swag decorations, and not in the form we think of it today. Ancient people in the northern hemisphere once thought winter the result of the sun god becoming ill. The solstice marked the turning point in the god's health. To celebrate the god's recovery, evergreens were used as decorations as a reminder of the sun god's strength and the promise of summer.

Ancient Egyptians filled their homes with palms during the winter solstice. The palm symbolized life's victory over death.

Early Romans celebrated the solstice with a feast to honor their agricultural god, Saturn. They decorated their homes and temples with evergreens because the solstice meant the farming season would return soon.

Scandinavians have been credited with creating the Advent wreath and yule log and decorating homes with greenery during winter celebrations.

Druids, ancient Celtic priests, decorated temples with evergreens to symbolize everlasting life. They used holly and mistletoe as symbols of eternal life and placed evergreen branches over doors to keep away evil spirits.

It took until the 12th century for the Christmas tree to take the shape we see today.

Two Christians are given credit for the Christmas tree. One is Saint Boniface. Legend suggests that he used a fir tree, because of its triangular shape, to teach about the Holy Trinity. Pagans, who had worshiped the oak tree, began to view the fir as God's tree, and by the 12th century, fir trees were hung from ceilings upside-down at Christmastime as a symbol of Christianity.

In the early 16th century, Martin Luther, the Protestant reformer, was said to have been wandering through a forest one night, in awe of the twinkling starlight. According to legend, he brought an evergreen into his home and decorated it with candles to recreate the magnificence of the starlight to his children.

Germany is where the tradition of the Christmas tree as we know it today started. In the 16th century, devout Christians brought trees into their home. Christmas markets appeared in towns and villages selling food and decorations.

Tinsel was created out of silver in Germany around 1610. It took until much later for the Christmas tree tradition to take off.

New England Puritans had a strict observance of Christmas; cards and decorations were seen as frivolous and undermined what they called a sacred event.

In the 18th century, pockets of German settlers in Pennsylvania were said to have trees in their homes, brought with them their homeland tradition. However, many Americans did not accept the custom until the late 19th century; the Christmas tree tradition remained in secluded pockets around the U.S.

It was in 1846 the Christmas tree experienced a revolution, when Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were sketched standing with their children around a Christmas tree. Because of Victoria's popularity, what was done in court became fashionable not only in Britain, but the eastern American coast. For the fashion conscious, a tree was a must have during the holidays.

The 1890s saw a rise in popularity of the Christmas tree across the U.S. with an influx of ornaments from Germany. Americans were said to have trees that reached floor to ceiling, compared to the four-foot table-top trees Europeans used.

The 20th century brought about a major transformation of the tree. The first artificial tree, made from goose feathers to help preserve forests was made in Germany. The American version of the artificial tree was created by a company using the same machinery used to make toilet bowl brushes.

The '50s brought about the infamous aluminum Silver Pine. In the last few decades, plastic trees have arrived on the market in every shape, size, color and texture imaginable, brought the evolution of the Christmas tree up to date.

While "fakes" offer less mess and more convenience, many still pine for the traditional, history-rich, fresh evergreen. But whether you're a fake or real, keep in mind your evergreen's history is everlasting.

Please use your outside voices! Come ready to perform some of your favorite classic carols tonight at the annual Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony at the Field of the Four Chaplains. The festivities start at 5:30 p.m. Refreshments will be served, and Santa Claus will be available for photos and wish list consultations.

Benning families to get free tree

Trees, trees and more trees!

This is the season for giving, for taking care of Soldiers and their families. And it's not just the Army that looks out for Soldiers — other organizations care about them, too.

The Christmas SPIRIT Foundation, in cooperation with the FedEx Corporation and New Holland, will provide more than 3,500 cut Christmas trees to troops stationed in the U.S. and the Middle East.

Fort Benning is one of five installations across the country to receive approximately 650 free Christmas trees for Soldiers and families who might not have one this year.

"During a time of year when friends and family gather with loved ones, we must also remember the servicemen and women stationed overseas this holiday season," said Douglas G. Duncan, president and chief executive officer, FedEx Freight. "With this small gesture, we want to extend a special thank you to our brave troops and their families."

According to a press release from the Christmas SPIRIT Foundation and National Christmas Tree Association, the Trees for Troops program provides a way for all Americans to show their appreciation for the sacrifices that U.S. troops and their families are making this holiday season.

Members of the National Christmas Tree Association and 17 state and regional Christmas tree associations are donating Christmas trees, FedEx is providing free shipping, and New Holland is providing logistical support.

"These trees will go to Soldiers and their families who might not have a real Christmas tree this year," said Richard Martin, director of Community Recreation Division with the Directorate of Morale Welfare Recreation. "We plan to distribute 400 trees to Soldiers and their families through Santa's Castle."

The remainder of the trees will be distributed to other Soldiers in Fort Benning units, Martin said.

The six different varieties of Christmas trees are coming from tree farmers on the East coast. The retail value of the trees Fort Benning is receiving is approximately $25,000.

The Christmas trees will be delivered Dec. 9, and Soldiers and families who benefit from of Santa's Castle will receive a coupon for a tree. Trees can be picked up starting Dec. 10 from the Auto Skills Center on Marchant Street between 8 a.m. and 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

A limited number of additional trees may be available for Soldiers E-5 and below after Dec. 14. For more information, contact your unit's first sergeant or command sergeant major, Community Recreation at 545-1248, or the Auto Skills Center at 545-2337.

Keep holidays safe this year with various tips

Rene Hopkins
MCG Children's Medical Center

If you go all out during the holidays, you're not alone. The National Retail Foundation estimates that this year Americans will spend $435.3 billion during the holiday season alone. That's a lot of tinsel and toys.

While you're out spending, Safe Kids East Central, led by the MCG Children's Medical Center, asks parents to remember to buy safely too. Beautiful decorations can become choking hazards or cause injury to young children. And the latest and greatest toy may not be the best choice if it's not age appropriate for your child.

Decking the halls

Candles? Check. Poinsettias? Check. Glass decorations? Check. If you're crossing off your shopping list for this year's holiday decorations, take a moment to think again. Some of the most common decorations can cause problems, particularly if there are young children in the home.

• Ornaments. Glass balls are easily knocked off and broken and can be dangerous when little feet step on them. If you must use them, use them high up and make sure they are securely placed. Small, bright-colored ornaments are tempting for children to grab and put in their mouths, but are also a choking hazard, as are bigger ornaments with removable parts.

Remember, anything small enough to fit through a toilet paper tube is a choking hazard. Tinsel, another popular holiday decoration, is also dangerous for children and pets if swallowed.

• Holiday greenery. Mistletoe is beautiful and traditional, but also poisonous to both people and pets. Use it high up if you must use it, and make sure to immediately clean up any leaves or debris that fall from hanging mistletoe. Poinsettias are not as poisonous as once thought, but can cause stomach upset if ingested — enough to ruin any holiday. So keep them out of reach of small children and pets.

• Lighting. Make sure all candles are set on steady surfaces away from flowing curtains and drapes that could catch fire. Don't leave candles unattended and remember to blow them all out before you leave for holiday parties or go to bed.

One new product you can try is the flameless candle; these are made of wax and flicker like a real candle, but run on batteries and are not a fire hazard.

Also, be careful when placing candles or other decorations on tablecloth-covered tables; young children may pull the cloth and other accessories down on themselves and cause injury. If you put up a live tree every year, keep it watered and turn off the lights before going to bed or leaving the house.

Toys for boys and girls

Each year, more than 121,000 children ages 14 and younger are treated in hospital emergency rooms for toy-related injuries. Even innocent-looking toys can present a hazard to small children. Toys to avoid include:

• Toys with small removable parts. The small parts are hazardous and can pose a choking hazard to children younger than 3. Use a small parts tester (which can be purchased at a toy or baby specialty store) or toilet paper tube to measure the size of the toy or part. If the piece fits entirely inside the tube, then it is considered a choking hazard.

• Toys with sharp points or edges. Children may accidentally cut themselves or another person.

• Toys that produce loud noises. Toy guns and high-volume portable cassette recorders can permanently impair a child's hearing.

• Propelled toy darts and other projectiles. Propelled toys can cause cuts or serious eye injuries.

• Toys with strings, straps or cord longer than seven inches. Long strings and cords are a strangulation hazard.

• Electrical toys. Electrical toys are a potential burn hazard. Avoid toys with a heating element — batteries or electrical plugs — for children younger than 8.

• Toy cap guns. Paper rolls, strips or ring caps can be ignited by the slightest friction and cause serious burns.

Many toy-related injuries occur when parents overestimate their child's ability to handle a toy designed for an older age group. Age recommendations for toys not only take into account a child's cognitive abilities, but they also consider the overall safety of a toy.

Be especially aware of safety labeling on a toy's packaging, such as "This toy is not appropriate for children under 3."

Remember, too, that sometimes just buying the toy is not enough. Bicycles, in-line skates, scooters, skateboards and sleds are popular gifts for the holidays. But these gifts are not compete unless the appropriate gear, including helmets, reflectors and pads are included.

The holidays truly are the most wonderful time of the year. Keep them that way by making sure your home is not only beautiful, but safe.

COMMUNITY NEWS

ON POST

Flu shot schedule — Martin Army Community Hospital has a limited supply of the flu vaccine available for high risk beneficiaries.

High risk categories include: children ages 6 to 23 months; adults ages 65 and older; pregnant women in their second trimester; and individuals with chronic medical conditions such as moderate to severe persistent asthma, emphysema, heart disease, diabetes, kidney or liver failure, weakened immune systems due to cancer, HIV or AIDS or currently taking certain medications.

The clinic schedule for flu shots is:

• Family Medicine Clinic — 8:30 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday;

• Internal Medicine Clinic — 8 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday;

• Adult Primary Care Clinic — Call 544-3615 to speak with a nurse; and

• Pediatric Clinic — 9 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday.

All high risk patients not assigned to a primary care clinic can get a flu shot at the Allergy Clinic from 9 to 11 a.m. Monday through Friday and 1 to 3 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

After Monday, all other beneficiaries with an assigned clinic can get a flu shot on a first-come, first-serve basis, while supplies last. All other beneficiaries can get their flu shot at the Allergy Clinic.

For more information, call 544-2041.

Christmas full of promise

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ronald L. Smith
USAIC Chaplains Office

REFLECTIONS

Christmas is full of promise. The future is the hope for unripe plans and gifts that we can expect. The season of Advent in the church is ripe with a potential, sometimes untapped, and more than not overlooked.

Promises abound in a story of a savior coming into our world with peace toward every breathing soul. How can we go wrong with such a good account? Yet some of us choose to live in a world of pessimism and doubt, where the harsh realities invade our perceptions and darken our outlook for anything excellent.

With all the giving and getting during the holidays, we are distracted from the real potential that lays in the promise of a savior. But once upon a time, in the fullness of time, our mortal life was intersected. It was changed, transformed, by a one-time event that remade everything, including the way we understand time. The event that makes all this difference is called Jesus Christ. His Advent announces a whole new dimension.

It begins with the claim that there is "good news" for what is going on in the world. What can be good news for what is going on in the world? It is a big claim to say you have something that is good news in any world!

The good news story from the Gospels sets the agenda: how Jesus was good news and brought good news and how we can be good news. For people familiar with Roman propaganda, the claim to good news might even sound subversive.

Smith

There was only one Son of God, bearer of good news, bringer of peace and ruler of the empire that was not an obscure Galilean.

The good news, however, might have very different associations for those who longed for change. How beautiful on the mountains are the feet of the one bearing good news to Israel and announcing God's coming kingdom (Isaiah 52:7). The Spirit anointed the prophets to proclaim good news to the poor and that meant liberation (Isaiah 61:1). The cries of the poor and the acclamations of the emperor still compete in our ears.

The opening sentences is that the good news which will come with Jesus follows God's intention expressed both in biblical prophesy. A sense of continuity is important for a community of faith: what happened in Jesus did not leave the past behind it; it continued it. The God of Jesus is the God already known in the actions of the past. This God means well; this God delivers.

Let this Christmas be a season of promises kept in your life. That you would hear the story of Christmas — and believe that in Christ — we have the greatest gift our world can offer us — blessings!

Give me some peace ... on earth ... please

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

As I'm typing on my keyboard, I'm in the post-Thanksgiving recovery mode. And presently, I'm fighting the serious urge to slip back into a food coma with the heavy smell of pumpkin pie and Cool Whip on my breath. Like some of you, I traveled across many miles this Thanksgiving to be with friends, family and loved ones (did you ever notice how those aren't necessarily the same people) and I am very thankful to have arrived home safely and for God's traveling mercies for all our military Soldiers and families on the road.

Where did you go? We went to Indiana. Hoosier country. The land of NBA-sized basketball stadiums for junior high schools. It's where most of my family is, and it's become tradition to enjoy turkey day there — as well as engage in close quarters combat for the pre-Christmas shopping assault that follows. I'd hoped it would be different this year — but it wasn't.

Did you see the literal stampede at a Wal-Mart they showed on national television? The only thing more disconcerting than seeing throngs of people overdosed on cranberry sauce trample each other in search of DVD players for $9.99 (or whatever the deal was), was seeing the lady at the bottom of the door's dogpile refuse to get up off the floor and save herself from being mauled until she had put her wig back on that had been knocked off and tossed just out of harm's way next to the rack of singing Santas. Greed and vanity — it was a two-for-one special last Friday.

Hawkins

Did you have any parking lot stories from last Friday? Everybody always has parking lot stories from the day after Thanksgiving. Mine involved a very large GMC 3500 diesel truck, a very small parking spot, and a universal hand and arm signal that involves one finger only and is not the sign for "we're number one."

Somehow or another, I don't think that's what the shepherds understood the reason for the season to be when they first heard "Peace on earth, goodwill toward men."

One of the things I enjoy most about the military is the opportunity it has given me to see different people in different places in different cultures with different lifestyles. One of the most meaningful Christmases I spent wasn't with a 52-inch HDTV plasma screen or knocking grandmas over to be the first to get iPod Minis.

It was in very austere conditions in the jungle with refugees who'd fled their country to seek freedom in ours. There were no "today only" sale racks, no "two-for-one" specials, and no "some assembly required" printouts that Christmas season. There were only people with dreams, people with needs, and a spirit in the air of "peace on earth, goodwill toward men."

As the holiday season begins, I invite you to remember "the reason for the season" and worry less about lines and more about love. Less about toys and more about time. Less about money and more about meaning.

Let's all do our best to make it the best Christmas yet by focusing on things that can't rust, rot or get ripped off and instead give and receive presents that will live on long after we're gone.

And if you'd like some encouragement and inspiration to make this Christmas season all you want it to be, feel free to join me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel's new home in the newly opened Follow Me Chapel (across from the Wynnsong movie theater) at 11 a.m. Sunday or call me at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760.

R & R

It takes more than 8 million lights – that's 731 miles of string — to make Callaway Gardens Fantasy In Lights a reality. See what's new at the 14th annual event, which runs through Dec. 31. D-4

Aeon Flux — Set 400 years in the future in a world where humans have nearly been wiped out by a virus and the remains of mankind live in a city encased in a protective bubble, Aeon Flux (Charlize Theron), an acrobatic superheroine, is assigned to kill the government leader.

Also starring Frances McDormand, Marton Csokas and Jonny Lee Miller.

Aeon Flux is rated PG-13 for sequences of violence and sexual content.

The Ice Harvest — It's Christmas Eve in Wichita, Kan., and this year Charlie Arglist just might have something to celebrate.

Charlie, an attorney for sleazy businesses, and his unsavory associate, Vic Cavenaugh, have just successfully embezzled $2,127,000 from boss Bill Guerrard.

Starring John Cusack and Billy Bob Thornton.

The Ice Harvest is rated R for violence, language, sexuality and nudity.

Just Friends — When Chris (Ryan Reynolds), a likeable, high-school loser, finally gathers the courage to reveal his love to Jamie (Amy Smart) — the girl of his dreams and a super cool cheerleader — she rejects him, saying she just wants to be friends. So, he transforms himself into a selfish, womanizing and successful music executive.

But, 10 years later, circumstances bring him back to his hometown and fate reconnects him with the "just friends" girl of his dreams.

Just Friends is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue.

In the Mix — Hoping to safeguard his daughter, a mafia don assigns his loyal right-hand man, Darrell (Usher Raymond), to act as his daughter's bodyguard.

Little does he realize that his daughter and Darrell have been sweet on each other for a long time, and now, things are really going to heat up.

Also starring Emmanuelle Chriqui and Chazz Palminteri.

In the Mix is rated PG-13 for sexual content, violence and language.

Rent — Jonathan Larson's Pulitzer Prize-winning rock opera tells the story of a group of bohemians struggling to express themselves through their art and "measuring their lives in love."

Starring Jesse L. Martin, Taye Diggs and Idina Menzel.

Rent is rated PG-13 for mature thematic material involving drugs and sexuality, and for strong language.

Yours, Mine & Ours — Frank (Dennis Quaid) is a straight-laced career military man with eight kids. Helen (Rene Russo) is a free-spirited designer with 10. When they get married and decide to pack the entire clan under one roof, the only thing that will get the kids together is the job of breaking their parents apart.

Yours, Mine & Ours is rated PG for mild crude humor.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire — In his fourth year at Hogwarts, Harry (Daniel Radcliffe) faces his greatest challenges and dangers yet. When he is selected under mysterious circumstances as a contestant in the Triwizard Tournament, Harry must compete against the best young wizards from schools all over Europe.

Also starring Rupert Grint and Emma Watson.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire is rated PG-13 for sequences of fantasy violence and frightening images.

Walk the Line — He picked cotton, sold door-to-door and served in the Air Force.

He was a voice of a rebellion that changed the face of rock and roll. An outlaw before today's rebels were born — and an icon they would never forget.

His name was Johnny Cash (Joaquin Phoenix).

The movie explores the early years of the music legend, an artist who transcended musical boundaries to touch people around the globe.

As his music changed the world, Cash's own world was rocked by the woman who became the love of his life — June Carter (Reese Witherspoon).

Walk the Line is rated PG-13 for language, thematic material and depiction of drug dependency.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' — An orphaned street kid (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson) makes his mark in the drug trade, but finally dares to leave the violence of his former life behind to pursue a promising career in the music business as a rapper.

Get Rich or Die Tryin' is rated R for strong violence, pervasive language, drug content, sexuality and nudity.

Zathura — Two brothers discover an oblong box in the park, which they dismiss as "just some dumb old game."

The boys turn their attention away from the game's jungle adventure board game to discover a second game board inside with an outer space theme and a colored path leading to the purple planet, Zathura.

Starring John Hutcherson, Jonah Bobo and Tim Robbins.

Zathura is rated PG for fantasy action and peril and language.

Derailed — Charles (Clive Owen), a successful ad executive and loyal family man, meets an alluring and sexy woman (Jennifer Aniston) on his morning commute. Flirtation quickly escalates into passion.

But this casual fling turns dangerous when a violent criminal confronts and pulls them into a dangerous plot.

Derailed is rated R for strong disturbing violence, language and sexuality.

Chicken Little — The movie picks up where the classic fable ends, namely after the pint-sized hero has caused big-time havoc when he mistakes a falling acorn for a piece of the sky.

In the wake of the "unfortunate acorn incident," Chicken Little's name is mud in his hometown of Oakey Oaks.

Down but not out, he struggles mightily to restore his reputation and make his dad, Buck Cluck, proud.

Voiced by Zach Braff, Garry Marshall and Don Knots.

Chicken Little is rated G.

THINGS TO DO

School House Rock
today-Sunday

The Emmy Award-winning 1970s Saturday morning cartoon series that taught history, grammar, math, science and politics through clever songs is not only making a small-screen comeback, it's lighting up stages everywhere from school rooms to university and regional theatres all around the country.

The Liberty Theatre will present School House Rock at 8 p.m. today and Saturday and at 3 p.m. Sunday.

General admission for adults and children is $8.

The Liberty Theatre is located at 821 8th Ave. in Columbus.

For more information, call 653-7566.

A Holiday Celebration
Saturday

The U.S. Army Infantry Center will present A Holiday Celebration, featuring The Infantry Center Band, at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the RiverCenter for the Performing Arts in Columbus.

The concert is open to the public. There is no admission charge, but tickets are required.

To request tickets, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to: The Infantry Center Band, Building 2751, Fort Benning GA 31905. Indicate the number of tickets you would like.

There is a limit of four advance tickets per request. For group tickets, call 545-6130.

Free tickets are also available at the RiverCenter box office from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday on a first-come, first-serve basis.

For more information, call 545-6130.

Outdoor Christmas Decorations class
Saturday

Callaway Gardens will conduct an Outdoor Christmas Decorations class from 9:30 a.m. to noon Saturday.

Participants will see demonstrations of several appropriate techniques for using natural material to enhance the area around the home; arrangement styles and even bird treat recipes, using a wide variety of holiday greens and natural materials.

The fee is $45.

For information, or to register for the class, call (800) 225-5292 ext. 5153 or 663-5153

Holiday Symphony
Monday

One hundred fourteen of the area's finest young musicians in two orchestras, representing more than 20 schools from eight counties in Georgia and Alabama welcome the season with Holiday Symphony at 7 p.m. Monday in the RiverCenter for the Performing Arts.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for students and children. Tickets are available for purchase at the RiverCenter box office.

For more information, call Dottie Brown at 256-3614.

Bi-City Christmas Parade
Dec. 10

It's the holiday season, and that means it's time for the annual Bi-City Christmas Parade.

Beginning at 10 a.m. Dec. 10, the streets of Columbus and Phenix City come alive with holiday spirit as marching bands and floats usher in the season.

The parade begins in Phenix City and continues down Broadway in Columbus.

For more information, call 576-5475 or (334) 291-4719.

Blast!
Dec. 10-11

Blast!, winner of the 2001 Tony Award for Best Special Theatrical Event and 2001 Emmy Award for Best Choreography, is comprised of 37 brass, percussion and visual performers brought together in a unique explosion of music and theatre.

Blast! is an exuberant 15-number show that doesn't falter while bridging the categories of classical, blues, jazz, rock 'n' roll and techno-pop music.

Blast! will be performed at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 10 and 11 at the RiverCenter's Bill Heard Theatre.

Tickets are $30-$48.50. For tickets, visit tickets.com, call (888) 332-5200 or go to the RiverCenter box office.

Second Sunday
Dec. 11

Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center will present "Natural Holiday Decorations" from 2 to 3 p.m. Dec. 11 as part of its Second Sunday Series.

Just in time for the holidays, participants will learn how to make decorations from natural products. They will design and take home tree decorations using twigs, cones, natural fibers and more.

The fee is $1 per person.

Oxbow Meadows is located at 3535 South Lumpkin Road in Columbus.

For more information, call 687-4090 or visit http://oxbow.colstate.edu.

Family Art Affair
Dec. 11

Bring your family of all ages to the Columbus Museum for hands-on art activities at the Family Art Affair.

From 2 to 5 p.m. Dec. 11, the museum will present "Recycled Re-Seen: Creating Treasure from your Trash Can!"

The exhibition Hugh Williams: The Market of Kumasi will be the inspiration with its themes and materials. Like Williams, collage, assemblage and mixed media will be used to create masks and murals.

The museum will provide materials, but participants are encouraged to bring any other "everyday" items to include in their creation.

The Family Art Affair is free and open to the public.

For more information, call 748-2562, ext. 36.

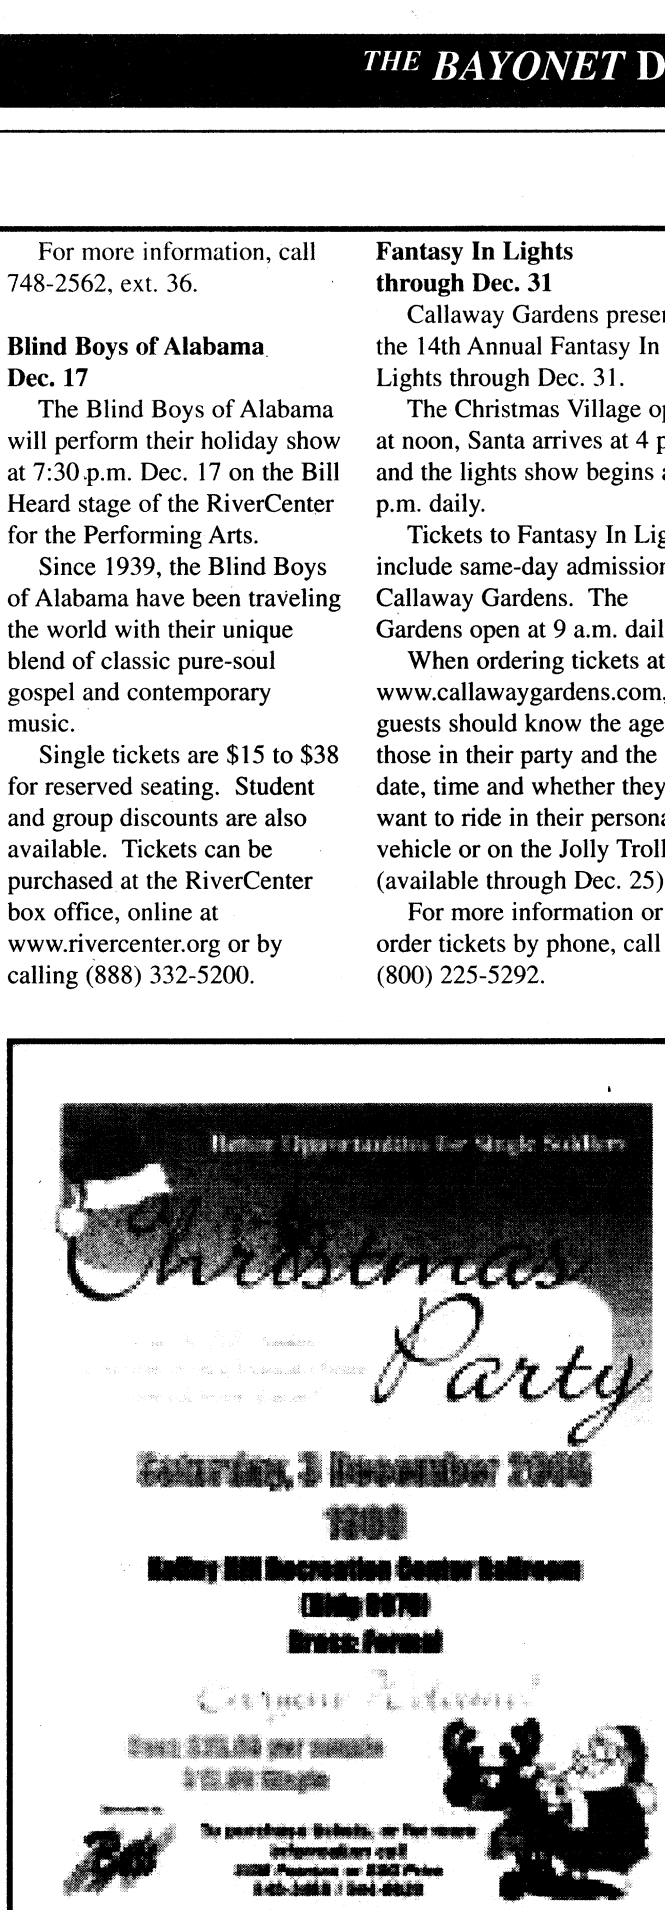
Blind Boys of Alabama
Dec. 17

The Blind Boys of Alabama will perform their holiday show at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 17 on the Bill Heard stage of the RiverCenter for the Performing Arts.

Since 1939, the Blind Boys of Alabama have been traveling the world with their unique blend of classic pure-soul gospel and contemporary music.

Single tickets are $15 to $38 for reserved seating. Student and group discounts are also available. Tickets can be purchased at the RiverCenter box office, online at www.rivercenter.org or by calling (888) 332-5200.

Fantasy In Lights
through Dec. 31

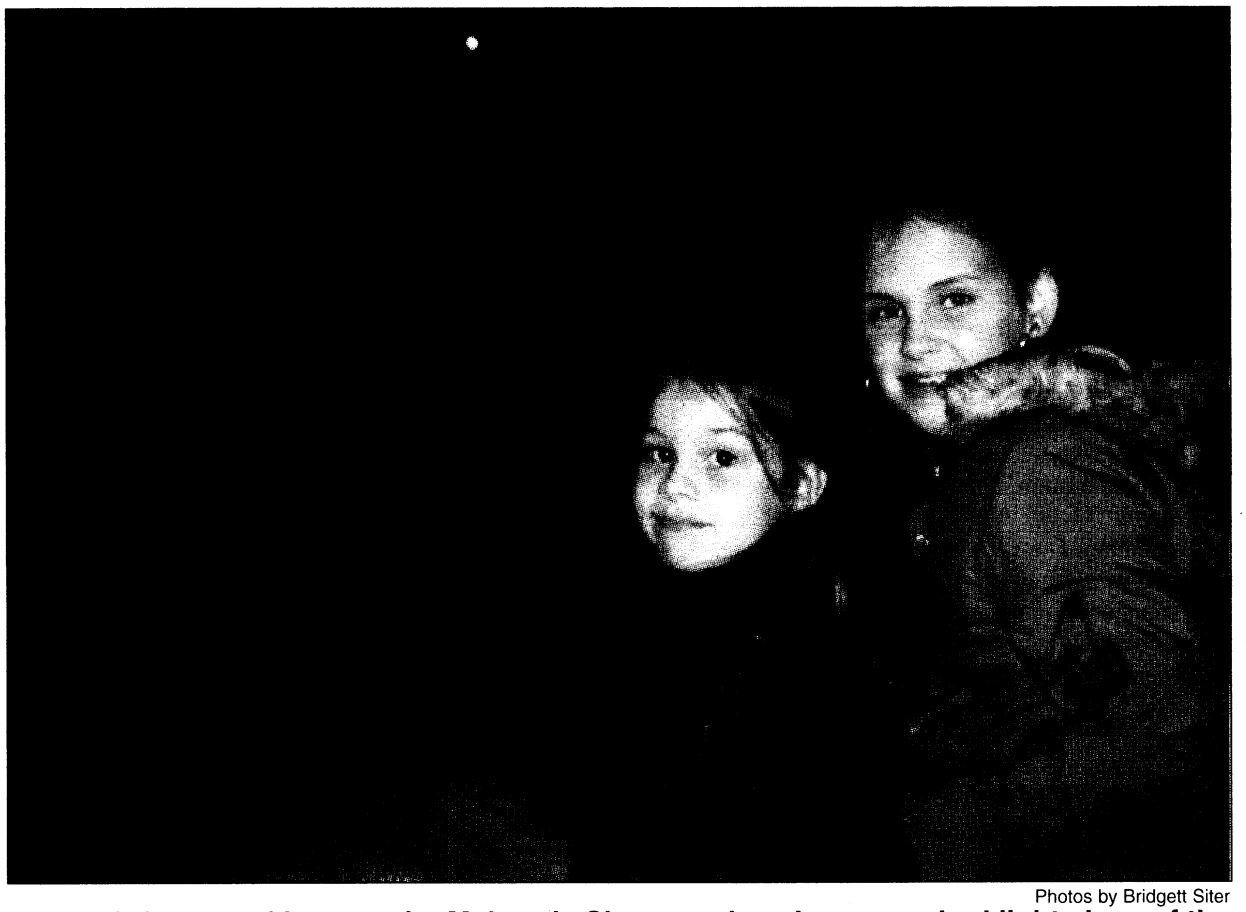


Callaway Gardens presents the 14th Annual Fantasy In Lights through Dec. 31.

The Christmas Village opens at noon, Santa arrives at 4 p.m. and the lights show begins at 6 p.m. daily.

Tickets to Fantasy In Lights include same-day admission to Callaway Gardens. The Gardens open at 9 a.m. daily.

When ordering tickets at www.callawaygardens.com, guests should know the ages of those in their party and the date, time and whether they want to ride in their personal vehicle or on the Jolly Trolley (available through Dec. 25).



For more information or to order tickets by phone, call (800) 225-5292.

Fantasy In Lights

Callaway's winter wonderland seasons Christmas with magic

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I suspect more and more families, like mine, use their Thanksgiving holiday to kick off their Christmas. And it makes a lot of sense, really. The spirit of giving thanks and the spirit of giving go hand in hand. Even if you hate the hype, it would take a hard heart to resist the lure of Christmas before the end of November.

And those of you who have loved ones serving overseas can appreciate the historical reason for the length of the season. During World War II, U.S. postal officials urged people to send packages early if they hoped to have them in their Soldiers' hands by Christmas. In response, stores put up holiday decorations in November. It worked beautifully. Troops received care packages for the holiday, and merchants turned an early profit, spurring a tradition, unpopular with Christmas purists, that continues 60 years later.

Me, I say if you can't beat 'em, join 'em. At the Siter house, we celebrate "the season" from turkey to turkey — the only two times, I might add, that I actually serve the bird all year long. During the four-day Thanksgiving holiday, we emerge from a food-induced coma long enough to A) put up the Christmas tree, B) check out the early bird sales at the mall, and C) visit Callaway Gardens Fantasy In Lights.

This last one became an instant favorite the first time we toured Callaway six years ago, and we look forward to the trip to Pine Mountain every year. If we're lucky enough to have company for Thanksgiving, as was the case this year, we get to introduce them to the magic of Callaway. It never fails.

Callaway's Fantasy In Lights ranks right at the top of Southern Living's "must do" list each year with good reason. More than 8 million lights — that's 731 miles of strings to untangle each year! — make it the South's most dazzling light display. It's a five-mile wonderland filled with enough lights to cover 26,666 six-foot-tall Christmas trees.

But trees are only one of Callaway's great attractions. An hourlong ride on the Jolly Trolley takes you through a forest of choreographed lights and enchanted animation, accompanied by festive music and narrative. Be sure to dress for cold weather. Callaway Gardens is 30 minutes north of Columbus on Highway 27 near the town of Pine Mountain. It's cold up there, and the open-air trolley ride over the river and through the woods will be much colder than you anticipate. Bundle up.

While waiting your turn on the trolley, be sure to see the light shows on Robin Lake Beach and visit Callaway's Christmas Village, where Santa holds court nightly. The real Santa. The village also features a marketplace, a collection of artfully decorated trees, Georgia crafters and artisans, activities for children and Mrs. Claus's Cookie Workshop. It's a child's paradise.

That's why we took my niece, a 6-year-old-going-on-12 and standing on the brink of disbelief. Jolynn's from Florida, which has more fake Santas per capita than the rest of the continent combined. And a 6-year-old can spot a fake a mile away. She was smitten with the Callaway Claus, absolutely smitten. You will be too.

The bungee jump is a new feature at the 14th annual Fantasy In Lights.

Fantasy In Lights is open nightly until Dec. 31. The village opens at noon, and trolley rides start at 6 p.m. and run hourly until 10 p.m. The trolleys don't run after Christmas, so you'll have to tour by car.

The $15 admission price ($7.50 for children between 6 and 12 and free for children younger than 6) includes same day and next day admission to Callaway's world-class gardens, open from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily. For reservations, call 1(800)CALLAWAY.

SPORTS

Instant replay made its debut at the 1963 Army-Navy game. As of 2004, Army has 49 series wins, and Navy has 49. Seven games ended in a tie. There have only been 10 years when the game was not played since its debut in 1890. The majority of the games were played in Philadelphia, although some notable exceptions are the 1926 game played at Soldier Field in Chicago, the 1930 game at Yankee Field and the 1983 game at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.

Bench notes

Erin Nash

• Say what?

Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania accused the NFL and the Eagles of treating Terrell Owens unfairly, yet then went on to say during a news conference that he was "not a supporter of Terrell Owens." He said he was mad at T.O. for ruining the Eagles' season, but that it wasn't appropriate to make him sit out the rest of the season.

• Older than the turf, but ...

It was announced the Rolling Stones will perform at the Super Bowl halftime show Feb. 5 at Ford Field.

I'm really, really, really hoping there are no "wardrobe malfunctions."

• Hall of Fame ballots

Former Cy Young winners Orel Hershiser and Dwight Gooden are just two of the 14 first-time eligible candidates for next year's HOF ballot. Another first-timer includes Ozzie Guillen, manager of the World Series Champions White Sox.

• BCS almost locked

Barring an upset with either USC or Texas this weekend, the Rose Bowl looks like a lock between these two teams.

The final BCS standings will be released on Sunday. Don't expect any surprises.

• Mariucci ... out

The Detroit Lions fired head coach Steve Mariucci Nov. 28 and replaced him with defensive coordinator Dick Jauron for the rest of the season.

The Lions are 4-7 under Mariucci this season, and in the two years he's been head coach, 15-28. Not hard to see why he was fired.

Driver proud to sport Army star logo

Lt. Col. William Thurmond
Army News Service

If you're in the market for a 'sucker' bar bet this holiday season, you might consider this one:

What is the name of the Army NASCAR driver who started on the front row for six races in 2005, including two poles?

If your mark says 'Front Row' Joe Nemechek, smile knowingly, signal the bartender and place your order. But drink responsibly, please.

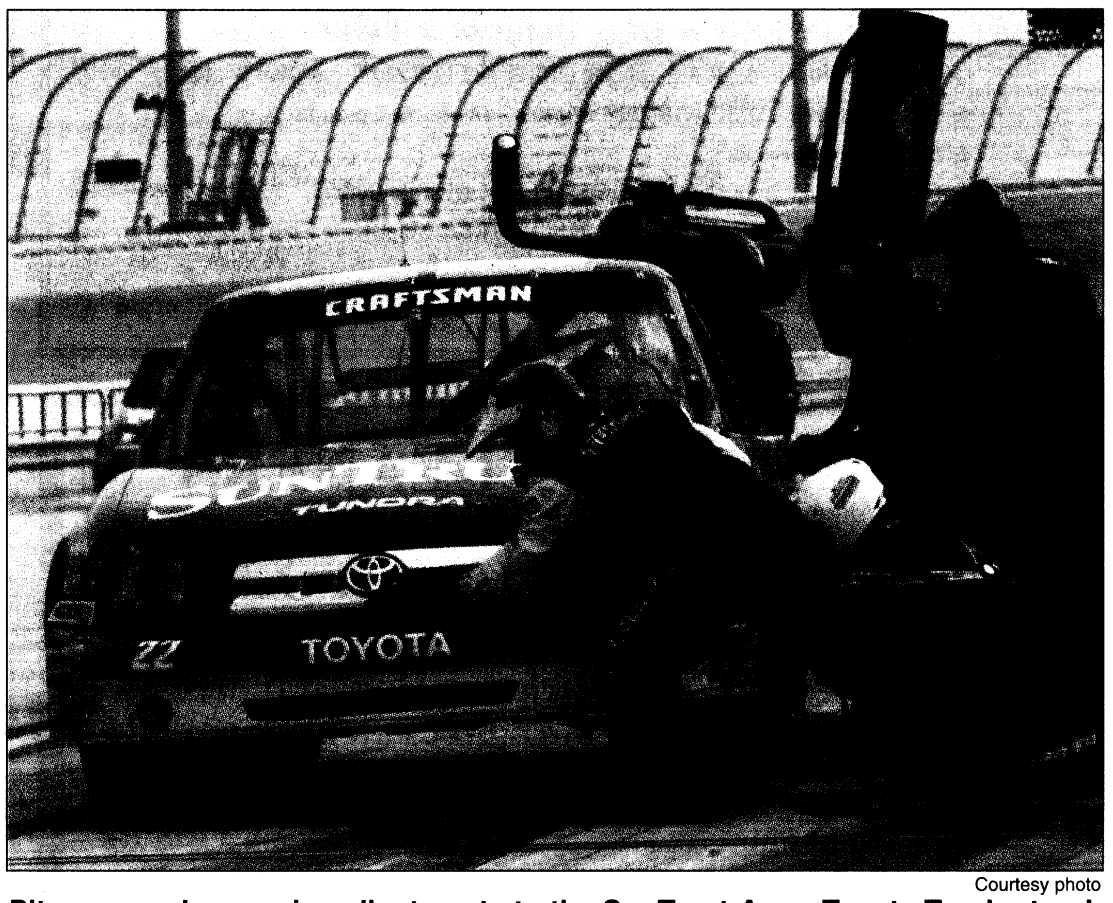
The man qualifying most often in the top-two was Bill Lester, the driver of the number 22 SunTrust /Army Toyota Tundra race truck for Bill Davis Racing.

Of course, unless you follow the Craftsman Truck Series and have access to the Speed Channel, you probably haven't seen him race. And that's too bad, because the truck series is perhaps the most entertaining, old-school, paint-tradin' racing venue in the NASCAR empire these days.

No restrictor plates or cut-down rear spoilers here — truck racing is the closest thing to Saturday night short track racing to be found at the pinnacle of American motor sports.

Lester, who hails from Atlanta, has been racing since the mid-80s.

A 1984 graduate of UC-Berkley in electrical engineering and computer science, he once worked for Hewlett-Packard, finding time to race and win two championships in the Sports Car Club of America's GT-3 division.



Between weekday work and weekend racing, something had to give. So with his family's backing, Lester decided about a decade ago to focus full-time on his racing career. Since then, he's gotten rides in the Rolex, Motorola, Grand-Am and NASCAR Busch series.

In 2002, Lester started full-time in trucks for Bobby Hamilton's team in the number eight Dodge Ram truck, finishing 14th in driver's points in his 2003 season. The next year he signed on to drive Bill Davis' number 22 Toyota in that manufacturer's inaugural season.

While the Army was not his principal sponsor in 2005, it was perhaps his luckiest. With the Army logo on his truck's hood, Lester won the pole and scored his best finish, a fifth place, at Kansas in July.

Lester says he was proud to sport the Army star on his firesuit throughout the year.

"It's was definitely an honor and a privilege to represent the Army, especially all the men and women overseas who are securing our freedoms. I hope I represented the Soldiers well," said Davis, just before the start of the final race of the season.

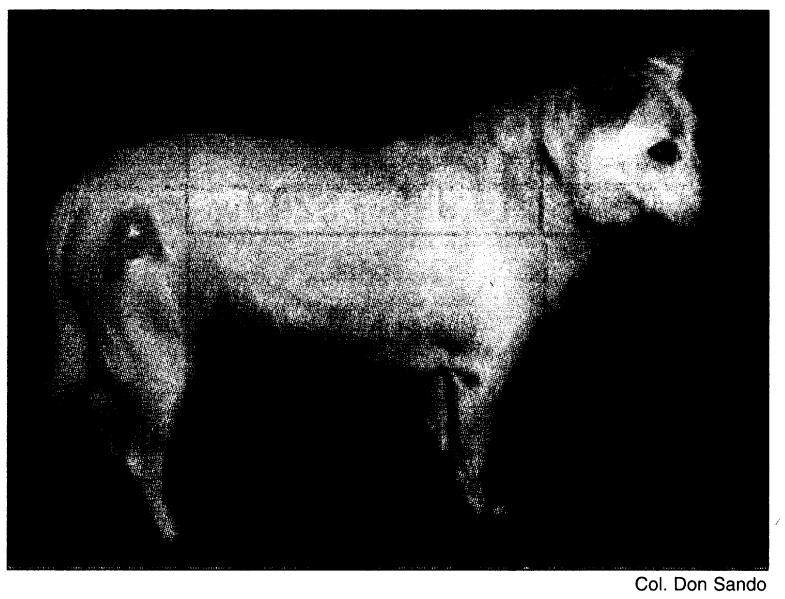
Pit crew workers make adjustments to the SunTrust-Army Toyota Tundra truck driven by Bill Lester during the Craftsman Truck Series race Saturday.

Starting on the pole last weekend at Homestead-Miami Speedway, Lester understands why truck racing has rapidly grown its fan base over the last 10 years.

"We definitely put on a show," Lester said. "We beat and bang. Our races are more like sprints as opposed to Cup races. It's no-holds barred racing.



"One of the best things about the series is that you'll see former Cup drivers racing alongside drivers just starting out," he said. "You get a wide variety of driving styles, so you never know what you're gonna' get."

Fastest in practice and second-fastest during qualifying, Lester ran this last race smoothly despite an overnight rain delay and multiple early cautions.

Only briefly out of the top-10, he finished fifth.

He ended the season 17th in driver points.

SPORT BRIEFS

Preseason basketball tournament — Fort Benning Sports will host a pre-season basketball tournament Thursday through Dec. 11. A coach's meeting will be at 1 p.m. Tuesday in the Audie Murphy Fitness Center, Building 2828.

All teams must bring an alpha roster to the meeting.

For information, call Carol Gearheart at 545-4592 or 545-9220 or Fred Woods at 545-1940.

CG Golf Scramble — The Follow Me Golf Course will host the next CG Golf Scramble at 1 p.m. Thursday. The cost is $25 in advance or $30 the day of the event and includes cart, greens fees, food and prizes. Open to all players.

For information, call 687-1940.

Hunter amnesty — Fort Benning is granting blanket amnesty to those who failed to turn in their kill cards last year. Hunters can apply to get a new license for this year.

Golf teaching center — The Follow Me Golf Course now offers full service teaching. The teaching pros are Leon Dunagan and Rudy Thorne.

The basic lessons are $30 for a half hour, $60 for an hour with video and $90 for a group clinic lesson.

For information, call 687-1940.

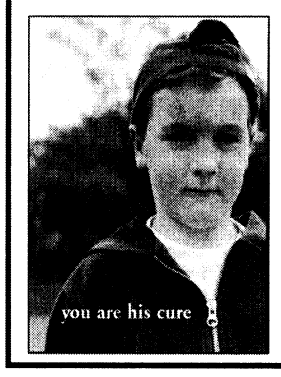
Note: Picks are made by Wednesday afternoon

Erin Says ...



Michael had a great week, going 9-3. Jimmy, on the other hand, went 3-9, with Ken not far behind at 4-8. Lori retains the lead by three games. This week's college games are not the most spectacular, I know, but the dearth of games led me to pick games with teams who have a somewhat close record. Obviously, if I picked the USC game, everyone would pick them to win, hence the not-so-great games.

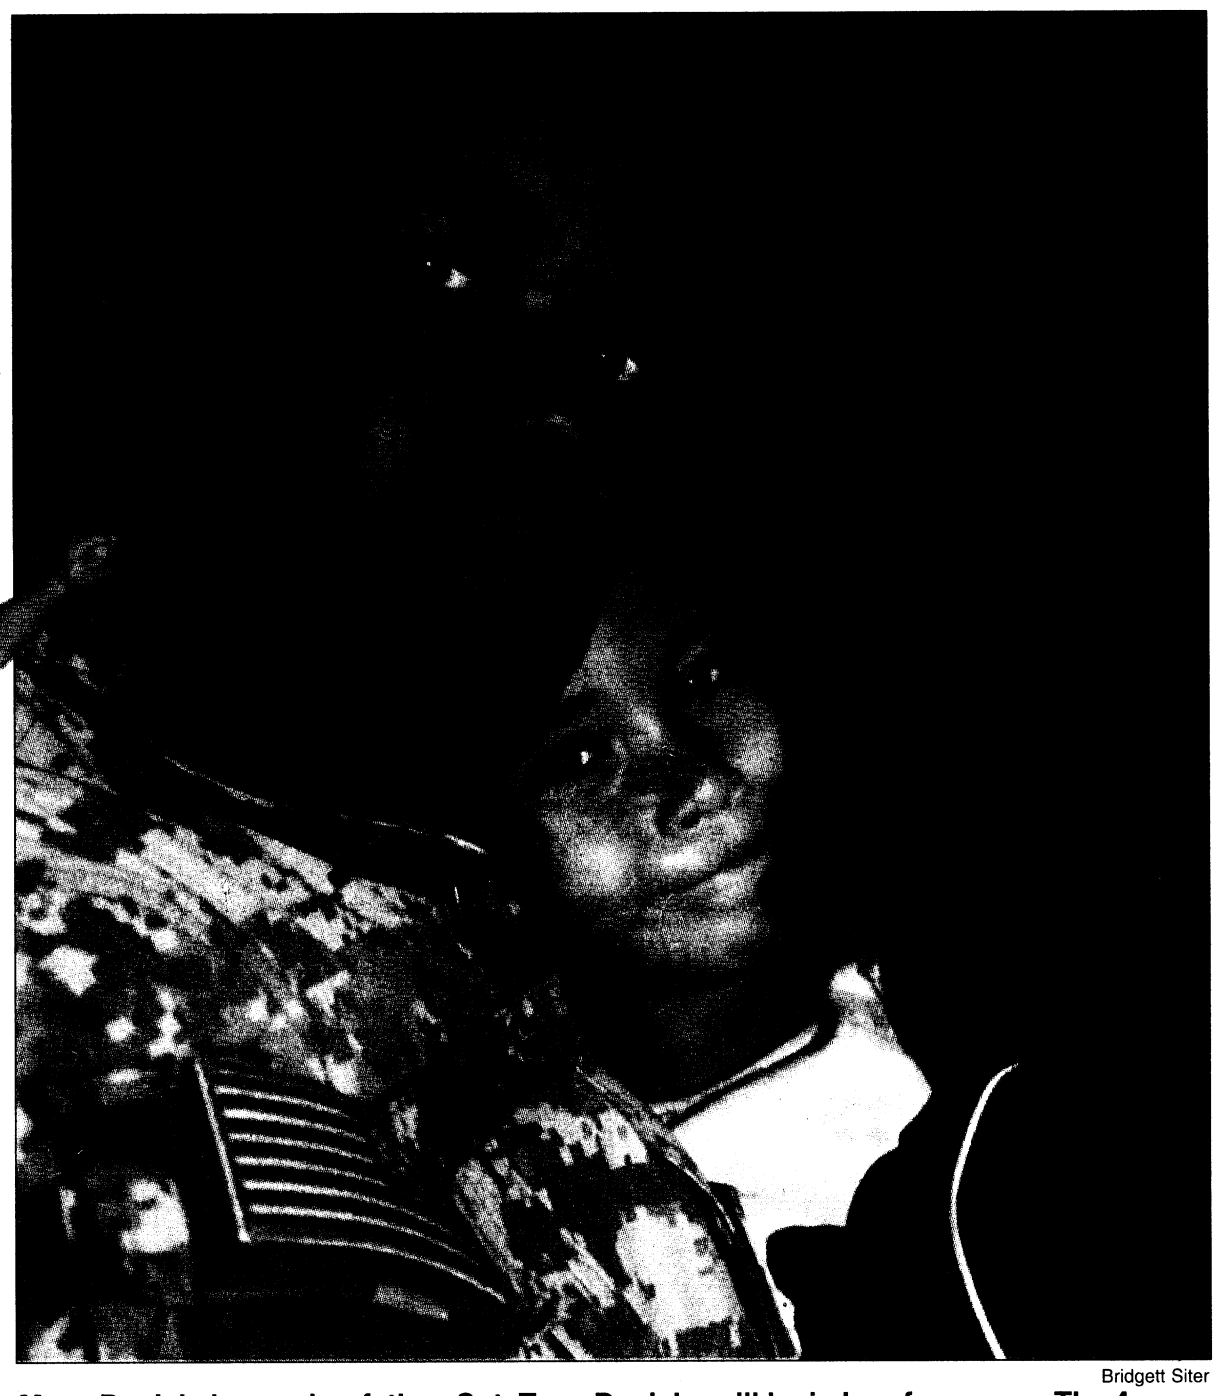
Loaded 45 begins

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

It's called Loaded 45, the dangerous 45 days between the Thanksgiving and New Year's holidays. Loaded — meaning loaded up on alcohol and drugs. Nearly half of drunken driving fatalities occur in this 45 day period, said Deb Manning, of the Army Substance Abuse Program Office.

A car is a 2,000 pound weapon, "a missile basically," Manning said, and people who drink and drive don't realize that reflexes and repetitive "simple" actions, like putting a key in the ignition, are a lot more complicated, because alcohol skews perception.

Capt. Kevin Pelley, Fort Benning's deputy provost marshal, said there will be increased random checkpoints on post during the holiday season. Besides checking for sobriety, MPs will check registration, insurance, driver's license, seat belt and car seat use.



"We're here to help. It is not just speed enforcement, it is for safety," Pelley said.

Paper delayed

For the first time anyone here can remember, The Bayonet was not ready for print Thursday. When a vigilant employee discovered a suspicious package in Infantry Hall, the building was evacuated for more than three hours, until safety officials determined it was safe to return. Unfortunately, it was too late to make press time. The phone calls we received at the office Friday told us our readers missed The Bayonet. We're flattered, and we regret the inconvenience. We hit the ground running Friday morning to get the paper to your door and on the news stands Saturday. Thanks for your patience and understanding. Once again, here at The Bayonet, we're wishing you and yours a very happy and safe holiday season.

And carry a big stick

Maya Daniels knows her father, Sgt. Tony Daniels, will be in Iraq for a year. The 4-year-old plans to join him there "to fight the bad guys."

MPs prepare to depart

Bridgett Siter

Maya Daniels gave her father an early Christmas present — a stick she found in her front yard.

"He's gonna use it to fight the bad guys," the 4-year-old said Monday as she sat between her mother and father in Marshall Auditorium, where a departure ceremony was held for the 988th Military Police Company.

Maya's dad, Sgt. Tony Daniels, and his cohorts will likely be in or en route to Iraq on Christmas. They're scheduled to leave in the next couple of weeks, although an exact date hasn't been released.

Maya knows her dad will be gone for a year, but at her age, the concept of a year is fuzzy. Rather than anticipate his return, she figures to join him.

"I'm going to grow up and be a Soldier and go fight with him," she said.

If that's the case, Maya will join the MPs on patrols, combat raids, security details and any number of tasks that fall under the unit's

Benning wants guardian angels

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Combat Readiness Office is launching a program first approved and implemented in 5th Corps and Combined Joint Task Force Seven in early 2004.

Dubbed Operation Guardian Angel, the program is designed to enhance the safety of members of the nation's armed forces as they return from deployments. The idea grew from a conversation between Warrant Officer Darrel Smith, the 5th Corps aviation safety officer and one of his Soldiers who was preparing to go home to Alabama after a year in Iraq.

Smith said he was concerned for the young Soldier's safety, and eventually had the idea to call his parents and ask them to encourage him to be safe while on leave.

So, with approval from Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, then the commander of CJTF-7, the program went Armywide.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski signed Fort Benning's Operation Guardian Angel memorandum Monday asking family members, friends, and individuals and community organizations to become a part of the program.

Harley Chase is the point of contact at the Fort Benning Combat Readiness Office and works on programs like this one to reduce off-duty accidents.

"The 101st Airborne Division lost five Soldiers in a seven-day period right after Desert Storm," Chase said. "POV accidents are the number one killers of off-duty Soldiers.

Soldiers get directions during the 2004 holiday Exodus.

Post plans for Exodus

More than 6,500 Soldiers to travel for the holidays

David Dismukes
USAIC Public affairs Office

Nearly 20,000 Soldiers from Southeast military installations will be headed to Atlanta's Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport on their way home for the holidays Dec. 16.

Every year, Fort Benning, Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Jackson, S.C., conduct "Exodus," when training stops for the holiday period. This year Exodus is through Jan. 2, and training will resume Jan. 3.

More than 4,500 Infantry Training Brigade and 2,000 Basic Combat Training Brigade Soldiers will travel by bus to the Atlanta airport, said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Lavigne, a drill sergeant with 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment. Drill sergeants will be stationed throughout the airport on both departure and return dates to answer questions and get Soldiers to gates and buses.

"I look forward to seeing my girlfriend and little girl," said Pvt. David Parish, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt. "I'm looking forward to catching up on what I've been missing.

"I want to tell my friends how good the Army is," the Dublin, Ga., native said. "I'm looking forward to spending some quality time before coming back."

TRADITIONS

Can't fake season, traditions

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Artificial Christmas trees have been a part of my holiday tradition since I returned to Georgia in 1999 — much to the dismay of my daughter, Jessica.

Jessica has grown up with my family stories of decorating huge, freshly cut, 12-foot Christmas trees.

My dad's job was to get the lights on it, and the five of us kids would get the decorations out of the boxes and hand them to Mom for placement. As my older brothers and sister aged, they, too, could put the ornaments on the tree.

My youngest sister and I were in charge of putting the tinsel on after the ornaments — my brothers couldn't because they wanted to throw it on the tree by the fistful rather than separate each strand.

So I tried to start a Christmas tree tradition for my daughter.

When Jessica was a toddler, I wouldn't put ornaments on the lower branches because I was a neurotic mom and I didn't want her choking on ornaments, stepping on broken ornaments and cutting her foot and, of course, tinsel wasn't even purchased because of potential health hazards. (I still have a fear of a child choking.)

When I was stationed here from 1995 through 1998, I bought real Christmas trees, and with each tree, a new Christmas stand, because the old stand didn't fit the tree. One year I bought a tree so big it broke the stand, and I used 800-pound fishing line to keep it upright. (I still worried about it falling on my child.)

The last stand (so to speak) for purchasing freshly cut trees was the Christmas of 1999, after Jessica and I moved back to Georgia.

The tree started dropping needles as soon as I stuffed it in the Pathfinder. Definitely a Charlie Brown Christmas tree, it became a fire hazard when the lights were plugged in.

Jessica added water to the basin every morning and night because the tree was dry. Bone dry, and more needles dropped off every time Jessica reached underneath to plug in the lights.

I even accused the dogs of drinking the tree water — nope. It was just a very dry tree. And buggy. The one time I put water in the basin, a bug jumped on me. I thought it was just some needles — nope. Living creatures had made the tree their home. I got out the Raid.

We hauled that Christmas tree to the curb for recycling the day after Christmas, and as the rest of the needles fell off, I found the remnants of a bird's nest.

Recycling the tree at Cooper Creek Park was embarrassing, because by the time we got it there no needles remained, just the tree trunk and bare branches.

That was my last formerly fresh cut Christmas tree.

The following year, I dragged a kicking and screaming child into a store to buy an artificial tree. I don't use the word fake, although Jessica did, because it was real. It really was in a box and I paid real money for it.

It took several years for Jessica to accept the artificial tree; however, she did appreciate not raking pine needles out of the front yard.

This year, because we moved, we needed to get a new tree. We finally have room for a seven-foot tree, and Jessica plans on putting the little tree in her bedroom — a new tradition in the making.

So be it: Generations will never know to whom they owe their lives

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"So be it."

That's how Freeman Horner liked to end a good prayer well said. So be it — the contemporary equivalent of "amen" or "enough said."

And that's how Horner lived his life. He didn't dwell on the past. He didn't talk about the exploits that earned him the Medal of Honor more than 60 years ago. He was an unassuming man who didn't count himself a hero.

But retired Maj. Freeman Horner will have a hero's burial Dec. 16 at Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D.C. He died Dec. 1 at the age of 83.

Horner was a staff sergeant on Nov. 16, 1944, when his unit, K Company, 199th Infantry Battalion, 30th Infantry Division, was pinned down in the flat, wide-open terrain outside the town of Wurselen, Germany. K Company was taking casualties left and right.

Horner took control of the situation, single-handedly charging the enemy with a sub-machine gun, a couple of hand grenades and a tommy gun.

He ran 100 yards in a hail of bullets, killing three gunners and chasing two more, who abandoned their positions, into the cellar of a home on the outskirts of town.

Horner burst into the home, lobbed grenades into the cellar and claimed four German prisoners.

Thanks to his courage, K Company took control of Wurselen.

Horner was a real hero, with blood that ran green, said retired Chaplain (Maj.) Bud Rupel, who spoke at a memorial ceremony Sunday in Columbus, Horner's home since he retired from the Army with 23 years under his belt in 1966.

Later, as a civil service employee at Fort Benning, Horner never felt the need to relive his glory days. "Once was enough, thank you," he told a reporter back in 1983.

"Real heroes have no need to talk about their exploits," Rupel said.

That's why Horner's daughter, Diane Staiti, didn't learn about her father's medal until a nun told her about it in grammar school.

His second wife, Joyce, who married Horner after his first wife, Agnes, died in 1982, learned about his exploits when she happened upon some military records. She asked him why he'd never told her about the award.

"Nothing to tell," was all he said.

So be it.

Because of his quiet courage, generations will never know the story of Freeman Horner, Rupel said, but his story is part of their history.

"There are fathers who had children who had children who had children because of Freeman Horner," he said.

"There are grandchildren and great grandchildren who don't even know who Major Horner was, but they (owe) their very lives to him."

Other than his wife and daughter, Horner is also survived by two sons, a step-daughter, nine grandchildren and 11 great grandchildren.

Angels needed to watch over returning Soldiers

Historically, Soldiers returning from war need extra help in readjusting. Operation Guardian Angel is designed to enhance the safety of service members.

During duty hours, leaders provide direct oversight of their troops. While deployed to a war zone, buddies take care of each other. Once off duty, service members lose the oversight of their military family.

Operation Guardian Angel asks civilian family members, friends and members of the community or organizations to pick up the off duty safety oversight of our service members.

Participating individuals are called "Guardian Angels." The Guardian Angel's activities and degree of involvement are strictly left up to them.

Some might simply remind a service member not to drink and drive, slow down, plan extra time for an automobile trip, or wear their seatbelt.

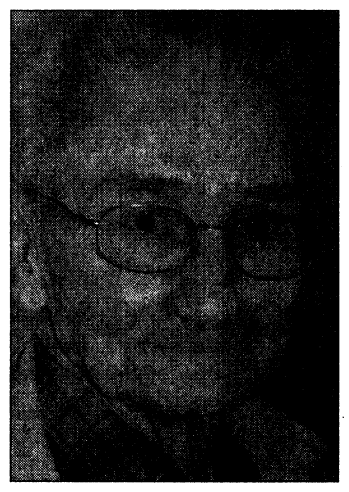
Other Guardian Angels might choose to be more involved by providing a ride home as a designated driver or contacting the service member with periodic safety reminders. Either way, they are all Guardian Angels.

Our message to the local community and citizens of the U.S. is simple; there is no better way to show your appreciation for the sacrifice and service of our nation's heroes than by participating as a Guardian Angel.

I urge all citizens to join the program and let our men and women in uniform know you care and appreciate their service to our country.

The benefits are huge; our service members receive the thanks of a grateful country, while the citizens of the United States have an official means to express their appreciation for our nations service men and women.

It's the ultimate win-win!



Everyone is encouraged to participate in Operation Guardian Angel through the Fort Benning Combat Readiness Office.

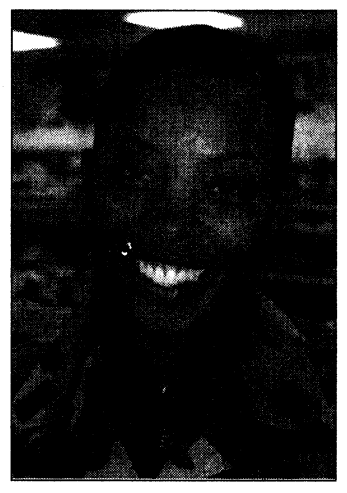
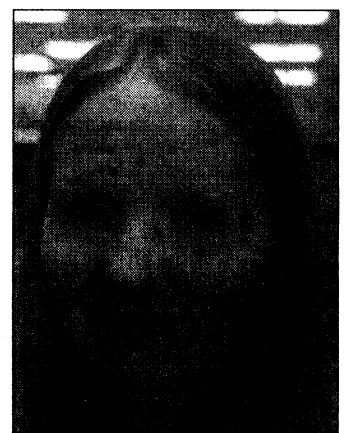
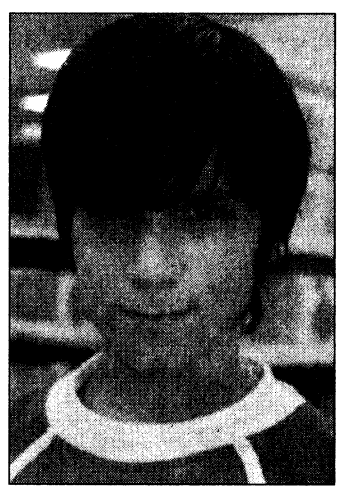
VARIOUS VOICES



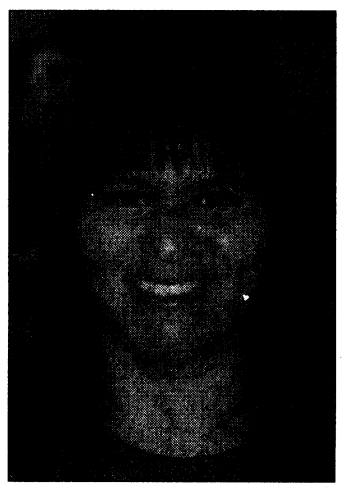
What is your favorite holiday tradition?



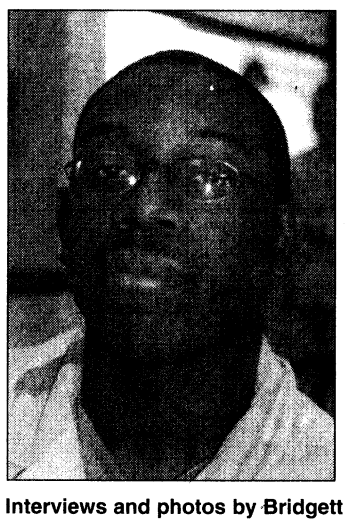
Retired Sgt. 1st Class Carl Bland, Columbus — "My family gets together and shares memories of the whole year. It's a spiritual time."



Gabrielle Fridley, family member — "I like opening presents. I'm usually the first one awake, and I open my stocking till everyone gets there. Then we sit around in a circle and Mom passes out gifts. We take turns opening them, and afterward we have breakfast."



Staff Sgt. Janna Gaddy, 14th Combat Field Hospital — "I think my favorite is opening gifts on Christmas Eve at midnight. Everyone, even the cousins — there's like 40 of us — open gifts together. It's like 5 o'clock in the morning before we're done. Then we sleep in."



Krissie Hammett, family member — "It's gotta be spending time with the family. I have a huge family. We'll have about 50 people — three generations. We get together and eat dinner and dessert."

John Carlos Hurtado, family member — "The best part is the presents. We stay up until midnight on Christmas Eve, and then someone dressed like Santa brings the presents."

Angel Lower, family member — "Drinking hot chocolate while putting up the Christmas tree. We usually do it the day after Thanksgiving, but we're PCSing, so there won't be a tree this year."

Spc. Johann Skull, 467th Engineer Battalion — "Watching A Christmas Story. Definitely. Christmas isn't right without it. You gotta love the part where they beat up the bully."

New DoD radios may lock out residents

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

Almost everyone on Turnberry Lane in Columbus has had the same problem: garage doors won't open like they used to.

"If I pull up to the door and hit the button, there's no chance the garage will open," said Joel Sutton, who lives on Turnberry Lane.

"Sometimes it will if I use the remote through the garage window."

But to do that, Sutton must get out of his car, walk around the side of his garage to the window, tinker with the switch, then get back in his car to park inside. At least seven of his closest neighbors have resorted to the same techniques.

At first, they changed the batteries. Then they called the retailer, who sent out a technician. Then the spending started.

"One of the guys has already spent enough on repairs and maintenance to purchase a new opener," Sutton said.

So much for convenience.

The problem isn't the opener itself. Sutton's opener is a Genie, but his neighbors own Lift Masters, Legacies and Pythons.

The root of this problem stands nine miles away on Sand Hill — one of three military communication towers, which transmits a signal for the government's new Land Mobile Radio Communications System.

The LMR system is part of a Department of Defense initiative recently installed here and at other military installations around the United States.

"The LMR is critical to Fort Benning's training mission and force protection," said Larry Lalka of the Directorate of Information Management. "It will help strengthen communication among military installations in the United States and with local responders.

"We are sorry that people have been inconvenienced. We know that for most, a garage door opener is a necessity, but the new radio system will help our Soldiers, our emergency responders, and our law enforcement perform their missions better," he said.

The new radios use a narrower band of frequencies ranging from 380-399.9 MHz, a band the U.S. military has owned for more than 50 years, but just put to use.

Columbus residents reported interference with garage door controls as the LMR systems began testing at Fort Benning.

Sutton said his remote control only worked at very close range with new batteries or not at all.

As of August 2005, manufacturers had received more than 1,300 customer complaints of affected garage door openers that they attributed to LMR interference.

"We probably got 10 calls a day from August to early October," said Michelle Zack of River City Door Company in Columbus, a garage door retailer and installer. "There seemed to be problems all over Columbus."

The calls have slowed since Fort Benning completed testing. Even Sutton said it's not as bad as it once was.

During the normal operating of the system, problems should only occur when individuals are actually talking on the radios using the frequencies programmed to the garage door openers, Lalka said.

The nature of interference has varied by location, according to the DoD and garage door manufacturers. In some locations, no interference was reported when the LMRs were rolled out.

According to the Federal Communications Commission, garage door openers operate legally under Part 15 of the Commission's rules, at very low power on an unlicensed basis. They have been permitted to operate on frequencies reserved for the federal government since WWII for air and ground communications systems. As unlicensed devices, by law, the openers are not protected from interference.

The military's switch to the new radios began in 2004 and will continue through 2008. The change comes in response to the increased need for homeland security.

This transition will benefit all users because it leads to more efficient use of the spectrum, doubling the number of frequency channels available for new and existing users, according to DoD.

As many as 40 million homeowners throughout the country could be affected by the LMR system.

More than 90 percent of these garage door openers operate within the military's bandwidth.

The DoD has provided LMR rollout locations to manufacturers and the ranges of frequency to be affected through fiscal year 2010.

It has also conducted analysis showing the possible extent of LMR interference in several populated areas where the radios will be deployed. This information has been provided to manufacturers.

Many manufacturers are offering retrofit kits to change the frequencies of existing garage door openers that consumers may purchase for $20 to $80, excluding installation.

Fort Benning officials said most owners will not experience any interference with their garage door opener controls from the LMR system.

It is not possible to accurately predict what areas will or will not experience interference, as this is determined by such variables as topography, weather, the testing phase and level of the transmitter, and user habits.

LMR technicians say interference will likely be limited to a five-mile radius of the transmitter tower.

Because the potential for interference exists, residents are advised of the following:

- Plan for an alternate way to enter your home in the event your opener control experiences interference.
- Move closer to the door and try again. You can expect the interior, wall mounted control to work and be free from interference since it is hardwired.
- Contact the manufacturer to report the problem and for information on available immediate solutions.

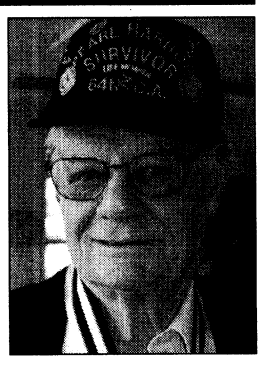
Veterans remember Pearl Harbor

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Pfc. Robert Sellers was a 19-year-old with a car, a weekend pass, and a month's pay — $60 — all to himself, a heady combination for a single Soldier in 1941. He was on top of the world, tooling around the island of Oahu the morning of Dec. 7.

Suddenly, a dark cloud appeared on the horizon. It grew quickly until it covered the sky, raining bombs on Pearl Harbor. Two waves of Japanese bomber planes, more than 350 in all, pounded the harbor for nearly two hours.

It was Sellers job, and that of his cohorts in the 64th Coast Artillery Regiment (Anti-aircraft), to guard Pearl Harbor. From their vantage point atop a hill overlooking the shipyard, Sellers and his buddies watched in frustration as the USS Arizona went down, and with it more than 1,000 Soldiers and Sailors.



"You never saw such a mad bunch of boys," Sellers said. "We were supposed to protect the harbor, but we didn't have any ammo. Didn't get any until six o'clock that evening. There wasn't nothing we could do."

But he tried his best. He ran to the bank of the harbor and drug one Sailor ashore. He reached for another.

"It was the awfullest thing you ever saw," he said. "You won't believe this. I grabbed at his arm and pulled, and his skin came right off in my hand. Just like that."

"You never saw such a mad bunch of boys. We were supposed to protect the harbor, but we didn't have any ammo."

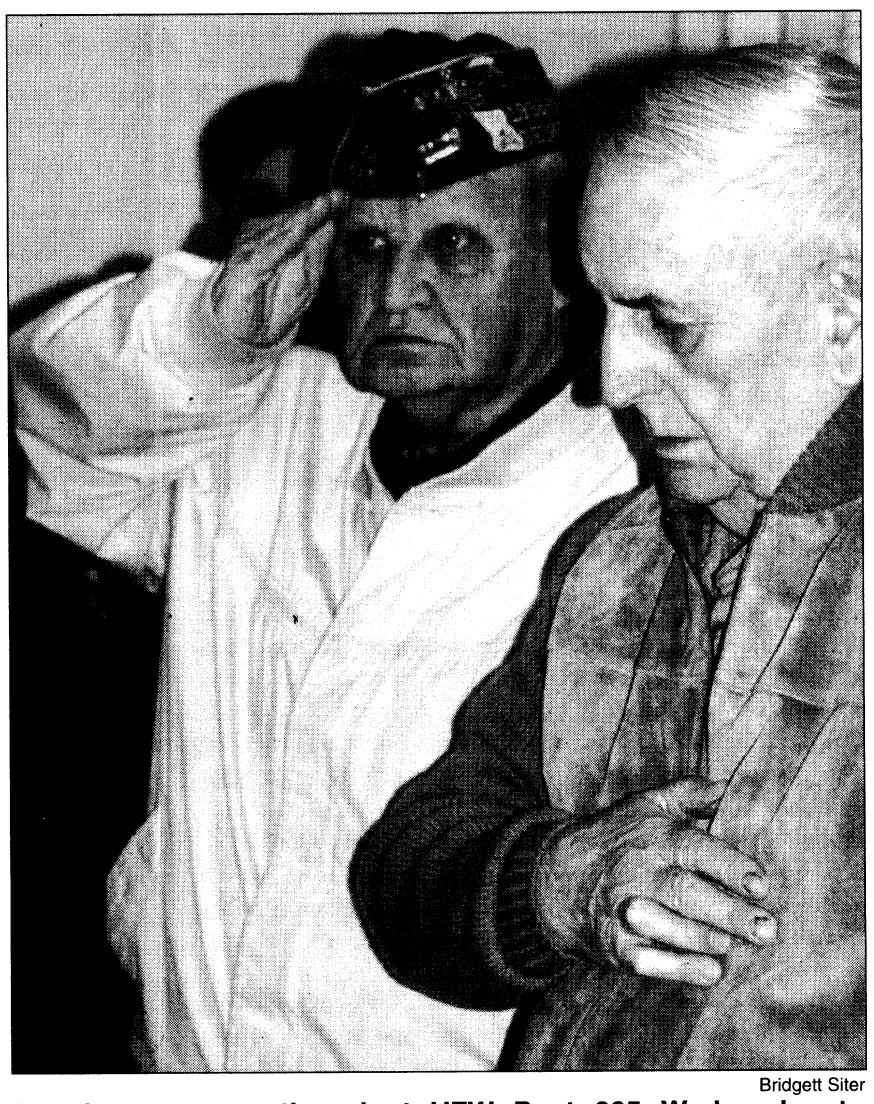
Retired Sgt. 1st Class Robert Sellers
Pearl Harbor survivor

No one had to tell Sellers that the date — Dec. 7, 1941 — would live in infamy. He knew he'd never forget it. He never really wanted to.

For many years, he joined other survivors in Hawaii on the anniversary of the attack that killed more than 2,300 Americans, awoke "the sleeping giant" and launched the U.S. into World War II.

Two years ago, when his health began to decline, Sellers had to forgo the trip. Doctor's orders. Since then, he's made it a point to attend the Pearl Harbor Remembrance Ceremony at the VFW 665 in Columbus.

A handful of veterans, mostly from World War II, gathered at the eternal flame at the Government Center in Columbus Wednesday morning, where they dedicated a memorial wreath and lowered the flag to half staff.



Later, they met at the VFW, where Columbus' Mayor Bob Poydasheff and retired Col. Robert Nett spoke, each emphasizing the need to support today's military with the same kind of enthusiasm World War II veterans were granted.

Nett, who earned the Medal of Honor during World War II, said he has no doubt today's Soldiers will live up to the standard set by their predecessors.

"When I bump into someone who has doubts about today's forces, I say,' Now just one cotton-picking minute. Today's forces have the genes of their fathers and grandfathers,'" Nett said. "They can do the same thing the so-called 'greatest generation' did."

Poydasheff said the nation owes it to the men who died at Pearl Harbor to "stay the course" in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"We didn't quit then, and we cannot quit now," he said.

Retired Lt. Gen. Robert Foley will speak as part of the Combat Leader Speaker Program at 4 p.m. Tuesday in Marshall Auditorium.

The program, sponsored by the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, invites former combat leaders to share their experiences with Soldiers of all ranks.

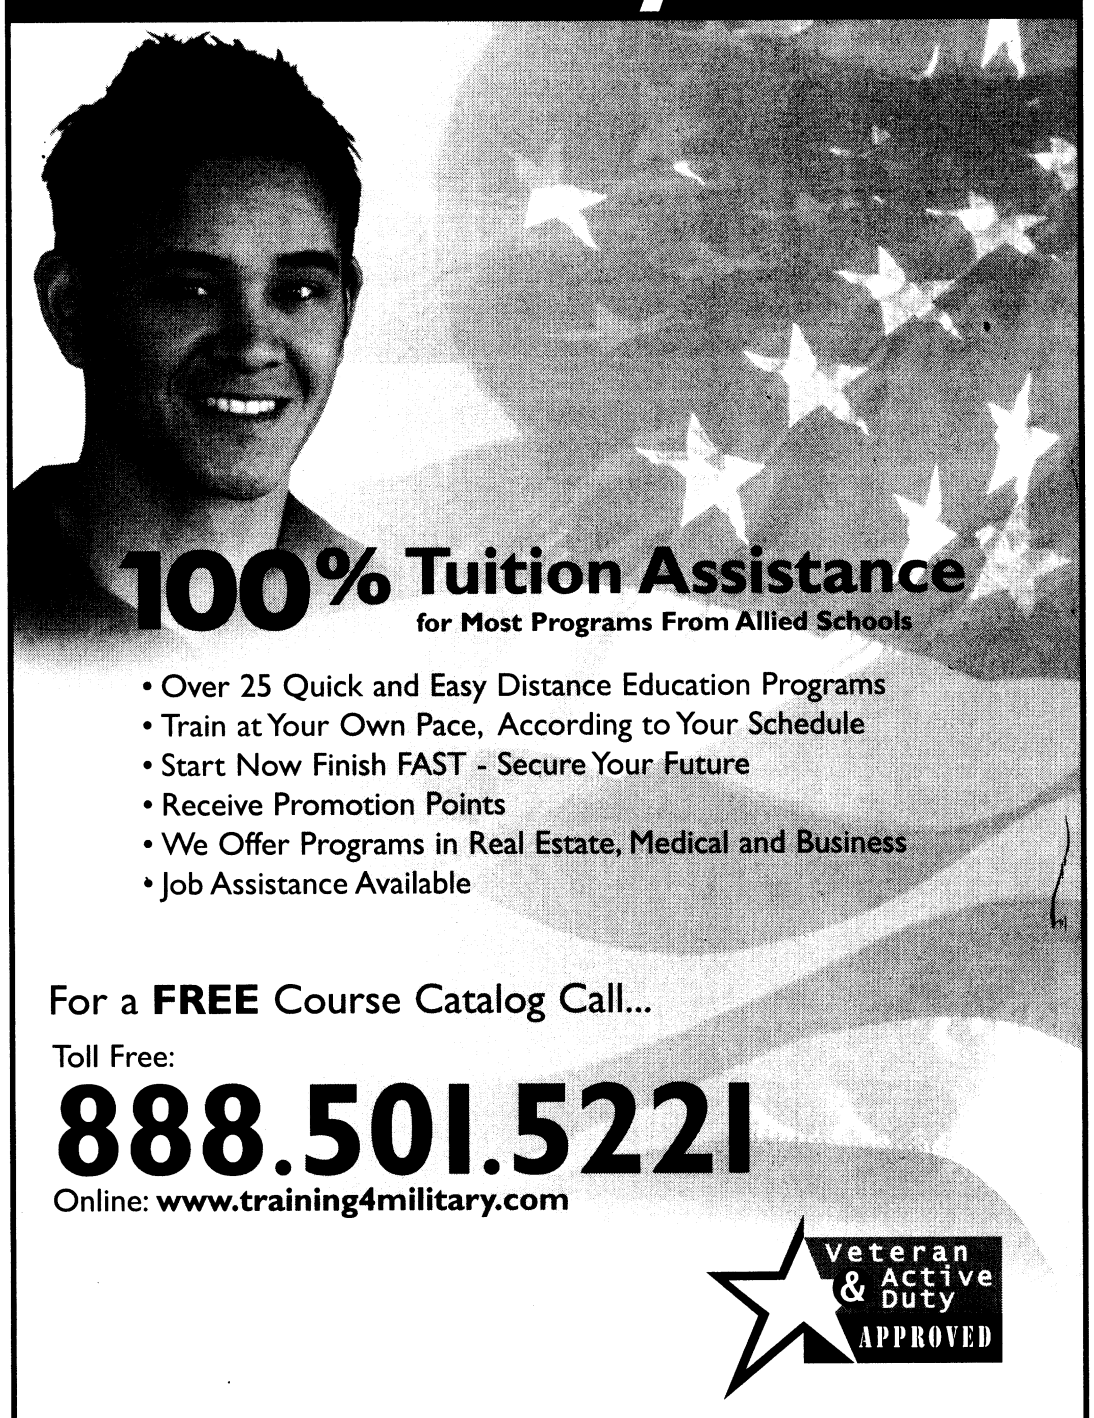
Foley

Foley, who retired in 2000 after more than 37 years of commissioned service, holds a bachelor of science degree from the United States Military Academy and a master's of business administration from Fairleigh Dickinson University.

From December 1965 to December 1966, Foley served as a heavy mortar platoon leader and then as company commander in 2nd Battalion, 27th Infantry Regiment, 25th Infantry Division, in Vietnam. It was there that Foley earned the Medal of Honor for his actions on Nov. 5, 1966, while leading his company through the jungle near Quan Dau Teng.

According to the citation, Foley's leadership under intense enemy fire was critical in evacuating wounded Soldiers, rallying his men, and singlehandedly advancing and destroying three enemy gun emplacements.

Foley's heroic actions, while wounded, led to the success of their mission to extricate another company in a battle lasting several hours.



Other awards and decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal with oak leaf cluster, Legion of Merit with five oak leaf clusters, Bronze Star Medal and Purple Heart.

His last two assignments were as commanding general, U.S. Army Military District of Washington and commanding general, 5th U.S. Army Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

He currently serves as the director of Army Emergency Relief in Alexandria, Va.

The public is invited to attend.

Historian brings El Alamein to Benning

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Dave Stieghan, Fort Benning's command historian, is used to fielding phone calls from around the world. Most of them are what he calls "stump the chump" calls — people trying to test his knowledge.

Then he fielded a call earlier this year about setting up a staff ride for Soldiers of the 3rd U.S. Army planning cell and the Coalition Joint Task Force during Bright Star, a joint military training operation in Egypt.

Stieghan and three other subject-matter experts planned the trip to El Alamein battlefield, the site of one of three World War II battles Stieghan considers pivotal.

He said the team prepared to lead the staff ride for 60 to 80 officers — already a difficult number to accommodate. But once word got out, their two buses became four as Soldiers decided to visit El Alamein instead of the pyramids.

"We had everyone from specialists to generals on the same bus," Stieghan said, "and at the end, they all said they wouldn't have missed it for the world."

What Stieghan and the team gave them was a look at a small portion of an enormous battlefield — a 12-day battle that was part of a five-month campaign that ended Nov. 4, 1942.

With Stieghan was Lt. Col. Thomas Ryan, command historian for the 3rd U.S. Army, Dr. Duncan Anderson, head of the Military Studies Department at Sandhurst Military College in the United Kingdom, and Dr. Peter Lieb, a visiting professor of history at Sandhurst.

Stieghan said each team member brought something unique to the staff ride.

Anderson's father fought in the battle as a platoon commander for an Australian infantry battalion, Lieb brought the "much needed" German and Italian view, and Ryan, an archeologist, helped the group differentiate between old fighting positions and Bedouin camp sites.

The battlefield, Stieghan said, needs to be surveyed, because it is disappearing. Condominiums being built along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea and irrigation systems crisscrossing the north are encroaching on the battlefield.

But a lot of what is interesting about the battlefield is what isn't there.

"There are no parks, no monuments — except what other countries and families have put up," Stieghan said.

There are three cemeteries and monuments erected by South Africans and the family of a German captain credited with shooting down more than 140 Allied aircraft. His memorial, a pyramid, marks the spot where his plane crashed.

Although there is a museum maintained by the Egyptian army, "this was not the Egyptians' war," Stieghan said. "Then and now, they really have no interest and they don't study it in school. But it's an international site of significance."

In fact, Anderson wanted to find Barrel Hill, the last place his father fought, but the hill was gone — "quarried off for limestone block," he said.

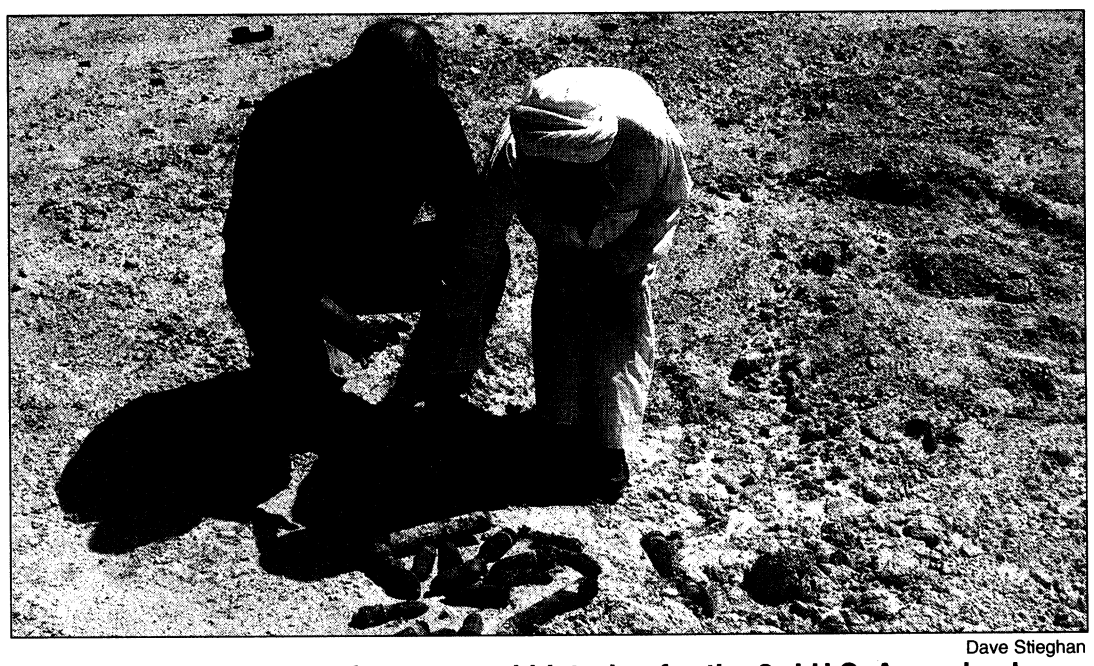
Although there are few signs to indicate a battle took place in the desert, the team showed the Soldiers individual fighting positions, antitank positions and an underground bunker complex.

"It was incredible," Stieghan said. "But it isn't marked, so you have to know where it is." And the group found it impossible to cross any portion of the battlefield without seeing some sort of relic, like rusty ration cans, unexploded ordnance and shell fragments.

But for the former Army field artillery captain, the trip wasn't about relics, though he did bring a few back to Fort Benning.

Part of his duties include teaching military history to the thousands of students each year in the Officer Candidate School and Infantry Officer Basic and Infantry Captain Career Courses. He's working the pictures and material from the El Alamein staff ride into the courses he teaches.

"Because the battlefield is so unique, it was good to be on the ground studying it," Stieghan said.



"It was good development for me, but the most important thing those who participated got was an excellent appreciation for the use of ground."

Miteiriya Ridge, with it's 3-foot hills, showed how Soldiers could "hide in plain sight," Stieghan said. "Even a slight fold in the ground can give you protection."

He said the desert environment was "like the moon — with oxygen" and they could tell how fighting there would affect combatants.

"If you're out there on foot, without a truck, it stinks to be you," he said. "It's similar to what we do today. You have to bring everything with you — vehicles, food, water, fuel, ammunition. It's a logistician's nightmare."

Stieghan said it was a battle without hate, in which both sides played by the rules of warfare. When the Germans, under the command of Field Marshal Erwin Rommel, "cut and ran," much of the the Allied army spent days saving the "tens of thousands of Italians, who had been cut off during the course of the fighting."

Dave Stieghan

Lt. Col. Thomas Ryan, left, command historian for the 3rd U.S. Army, is shown relics of the El Alamein battlefield on a staff ride during Bright Star 2005.

It's significant, Stieghan said, that the war in North Africa was truly coalition warfare.

"It was Mussolini's war," he said, "but Germany sent assistance, and the two nations had to work closely together."

It also wasn't simply the British against the Germans, either, he said.

Although the British formed the armor units, they contributed little to the infantry, which was made up of soldiers from India, Rhodesia, South Africa, a Polish brigade and the 9th U.S. Army Air Force.

"That was hard for people to get their minds around," Stieghan said. "And what blew my mind was the British report that six crews on American-made tanks were U.S. (Soldiers)."

Those Soldiers were in North Africa to train the Allies on the tanks, but quickly jumped into the counterattack.

After months of fighting and both sides advancing and retreating hundreds of miles, British Gen. Bernard Montgomery came up with a deception plan that would enable the Allies to fight the Germans, even without the desired three to one advantage.

"I gained a tremendous appreciation for Montgomery," Stieghan said. "He sized up the situation, trained the force, came up with a plan and fought it. But because he was able to change the plan during the fight, he was successful."

Montgomery set up an elaborate deception operation, aided by an illusionist he brought in from England, that was so good it confused the enemy and the Allies, and provided the "smashing victory" the British wanted.

The initial push to penetrate the German lines along the 38-mile front was reminiscent of an old Civil War tactic called the "offensive defensive" Stieghan said is the same used to take Baghdad during Operation Iraqi Freedom 1.

Stieghan teaches his students the history of that tactic, used at Antietam in 1862, and tells them they will see it again.

"At El Alamein, it was superb," he said. "Montgomery punched through the minefield, went one mile, stopped, and set up an armored defensive position."

He said he tries to bring the lessons of El Alamein and other battles to his students' experience levels.

"They are the junior leaders on the ground who have to decide where to put the troops," he said.

"It's critical that they not only understand the ground, but how to use it, and not only hills and valleys and cities.

"And while Iraq is not all desert, like at El Alamein, we still have to bring everything with us."

The warning is everywhere — don't drink and drive. But what happens when you need a ride home, and no one is sober? Take advantage of SafteyCab.

For 23 years, SafteyCab has provided safe rides home for an unbeatable price — free.

For partygoers on Fort Benning, in Columbus and Phenix City, SafteyCab will provide free transportation home from parties, restaurants and bars between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m starting today through Jan. 1.

Amy Adams, director of communications for Saint Francis Hospital, said the first goal of SafteyCab is to encourage holiday revelers to pick a designated driver.

Because sometimes a sober driver is not available, the Bradley Center of Saint Francis created SafetyCab, Adams said.

During last year's holiday season, SafetyCab provided 343 rides, Adams said

"Those were potential accidents and fatalities," Adams said.

The rides are free because of donations and community sponsors who want to help reduce the number of DUI's during the holiday season, Adams said.

Regis Beighley, safety manager for Fort Benning, said SafteyCab is a good option, but whenever you go out, you need to plan ahead.

"You've got to make alternate preparations. If you have a designated driver, make sure that person is responsible," Beighley said.

To use SafteyCab, call 660-6069.

Loaded 45: Works to keep roads safe during holidays

Statistically, throughout the country, there is an increase in traffic accidents between Thanksgiving and New Year's because of DUIs and traffic accidents attributed to drowsy drivers, the high volume of drivers on the highways, wet or icy roads, and excessive speed, Pelley said.

"Soldiers know that drinking and driving kills, and they know that they can lose their careers, and it costs a lot of money to fix their cars when they wreck it.

"Take a cab ... there is no excuse for drinking and driving," he said.

Manning said there are a number of resources available to educate drivers about the dangers of driving under the influence.

To schedule classes or for individual education and information, call the Army Substance Abuse Program office at 545-4993 or 545-7207.

988th: Prepares to deploy

MMSO mission — mobility maneuver support operation, said Lt. Col. Willard Moore, Fort Benning's provost marshal.

More than 160 MPs attended the ceremony, about half of them deployment veterans. "Seasoned Soldiers," Moore called them.

They've been training hard for this deployment since Moore took command from Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan Oct. 21. At that time, the MPs "came off the road" to concentrate on training for the mission.

They left Wednesday for a mission rehearsal exercise at Fort Stewart, Ga. They'll return and deploy before Christmas.

Col. Rick Riera, Fort Benning's garrison commander, asked three things of the Soldiers Monday — recite the Soldier's Creed every morning, guard against the dangers of complacency and routine, and live the Army values every day.

"You have our commitment to take care of your families," Riera said.

Program: To help Soldiers

We lose several hundred a year that way."

Among the reasons are the fact that off-duty and after deployments, Soldiers no longer have a battle buddy next to them or a commander or other leader providing safety oversight

Chase said he's lining up points of contact in the units that have had Soldiers deployed — the Military Police Activity, 14th Combat Support Hospital, 36th Engineer Group and the 3rd Brigade Combat Team.

He said Col. Steven Salazar, the 3rd BCT commander wants the program in place for his Soldiers when they redeploy. Chase's son, also named Harley, is deployed in Iraq as the 3rd Brigade Combat Team's safety officer.

The program is voluntary for Soldiers, and individuals and organizations can sign up to become guardian angels by visiting the Army's Combat Readiness Center at www.crc.army.mil.

Individuals or organizations may also call Chase at 545-4812 to sign up to either sponsor a Soldier or an entire unit.

And, Chase said, what they do after that depends on the guardian angels.

"Say an organization like AFLAC or TSYS wants to support a unit and meet them when they come back," he said.

"They could have a barbecue. The activities and degree of involvement are up to them." Individual guardian angels can talk with the Soldier in person, or email or phone them.

Chase said he will send the names of guardian angels to the units, who will match them with Soldiers who volunteer for the program.

"A Soldier can have more than one guardian angel and a guardian angel can have more than one Soldier," Chase said, "but Soldiers can't be forced into this.

"Unfortunately, we cannot tell a commander how many accidents we prevented (with our programs)," he said.

"We can only tell how many we didn't, but we try to do what we can with the resources we have. This is just one more program designed to try to reduce the number of off-duty accidents."

In the OGA memorandum, Wojdakowski said "there is no better way to show your appreciation for the sacrifice and service of our nation's heroes than by participating as a guardian angel.

"All citizens should join the program and let them know you care."

Exodus: Gives Soldiers training break

Although Soldiers are excited about going home, travel should be well planned, said Capt. Todd Lamb, assistant operations officer, Infantry Training Brigade.

"Soldiers need to be careful when they travel. I know they're all anxious to get home, but I urge them to be patient and plan for and expect weather delays. If someone is going to be late, for any reason, they should contact their unit staff duty as soon as possible."

Fort Benning Soldiers must return to Fort Benning no later than 11:59 p.m. Jan. 2.

The first step in ensuring Soldiers report back to Fort Benning on time is to confirm their return travel arrangements when they arrive home and continue to check the status throughout their leave, Lavigne said.

Help expedite security screening by not bringing wrapped gifts through security screening, said Felicia Browder, media relations manager, Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport. Wrapped gifts will probably be unwrapped for inspection, so place them in checked baggage, she said.

The USO in the main terminal will provide a number of services for Soldiers waiting to fly. USO hours are 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday, 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.Sunday.

"Every year the whole community looks forward to serving our troops during the holiday season," said Mary-Lou Austin, director of the Atlanta based USO.

After the holidays, Soldiers should look for drill sergeants for assistance when they arrive back at the airport in Atlanta, Lavigne said. Drill sergeants will marshal returning Soldiers to appropriate areas for transport back to Sand Hill, where all Soldiers will report to 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., for in processing.

Soldiers are to return in the Battle Dress (BDU) or Army Combat Uniform (ACU), Lamb said.

If Soldiers don't see a drill sergeant upon arrival at the airport, they should check in with the USO office, Lavigne said.

"Safety is our main concern," he said. "We want them to enjoy the holidays with family and friends and we want our Soldiers to return the same way we sent them home."

Tips for Exodus

If a delay is unavoidable, then do the following:

1. Call your chain of command and keep calling until you speak to your company, battalion staff duty, or the brigade staff duty

2. Make arrangements to get on the soonest returning flight or bus or make arrangements to get your automobile situation fixed.

3. Call and update your chain of command with as many details as possible. Make sure the message is left with an NCO or officer.

4. In the event you have trouble calling your company or battalion, try calling military installations close to your home, your recruiter, or USO.
(This is not the preferred method of reporting your delay.)

Failure to report back by the ending date of your leave without taking the steps above is grounds for you to be considered away without leave or AWOL. AWOL is a serious offense and can lead to punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ).

In An Emergency

Soldiers would be well advised to carry a phone card in case they are delayed en route to Atlanta. Contacting the American Red Cross-Fort Benning Chapter: 545-5194. Local Chapter: This phone number can be found in your local phone book — look under American Red Cross.

Media Tips for Exodus

While away from Fort Benning during Exodus, you may be approached by the media asking questions about the war, your training or your decision to join the Army.

As a Soldier, you're the Army's best spokesperson and are always representing the military, on or off duty.

Here are a few tips to help if asked for an interview:

Be honest and forthright. Talk about yourself, your personal experiences, the value of your training and the mentorship of your drill sergeants.

Don't speak for the command or other Soldiers.

Don't speculate about issues you're not involved in.

Remember security. Don't discuss specific numbers, locations or dates of present or future operations.

Avoid using Army jargon and acronyms.

Tell the reporter if you don't know the answer to a question. If you can't answer a question, say why.

Assume that everything you say is, "on the record."

If you don't have time or interest, decline the interview.

Contraband Policy

All Soldiers will be searched for contraband items at Atlanta Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport and again upon arrival back at Sand Hill.

Soldiers will process through 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, for this search. The use of drug search dogs may be used in the barracks as well.

Possession of a weapon or any instrument that can reasonably be viewed as a weapon is STRICTLY PROHIBITED.

All contraband will be confiscated and given to your company chain of command. Any violations may be subject to punishment under UCMJ.

Bottom line — If you were not allowed to have it when you came to your company don't bring it back with you from Exodus.

Bush cites Iraq rebuilding progress

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — On Wednesday, President Bush highlighted reconstruction achievements made in Iraq during the past two years as positive evidence that that country is making progress toward becoming a self-sufficient, productive state.

U.S. and coalition forces continue to assist the Iraqi government to establish its own military and police to confront Saddam Hussein supporters and terrorists, Bush said in his speech before the Council on Foreign Relations.

And, as Iraqi security forces are increased to eventually take over the mission of combating terrorists, progress on the reconstruction front also is being made for the benefit of all Iraqis, the president said.

"We're also helping them rebuild a sound economy that will grow and deliver a better life for their people," Bush said. Iraq's young and talented work force and its land and oil resources are indisputable indicators that point to the country's future economic prosperity, he said.

During his decades in power, Saddam Hussein confiscated Iraq's wealth for himself and his followers and destroyed the country's economic infrastructure, Bush said.

"And, he squandered the most valuable resource in Iraq — the talent and the energy of the Iraqi people," he said, noting America and other nations are now assisting Iraq in reviving its economy through myriad reconstruction projects.

"Like our approach to training Iraqi security forces, our approach to helping Iraqis rebuild has changed and improved," Bush said.

After the fall of Saddam's regime in April 2003, U.S. and coalition reconstruction efforts first focused on repairing or building large electric power plants and water treatment facilities, Bush said.

Yet, those large-scale projects take a long time to complete. Iraqis also had other urgent, smaller infrastructure rebuilding needs such as constructing local sewer lines and city roads, he said.

"Delivering visible progress to the Iraqi people required us to focus on projects that could be completed rapidly," he said. Accordingly, more money was provided to U.S. military commanders to pay contractors to construct sewage systems, streets and roads.

"By adapting our reconstruction efforts to meet needs on the ground, we're helping Iraqi leaders serve their people," Bush said. "And Iraqis are beginning to see that a free life will be a better life."

Bush acknowledged that terrorist-conducted sabotage has slowed down Iraq reconstruction efforts.

"But, they haven't been able to stop it," he said.

In fact, the United States has helped Iraqis with nearly 3,000 school renovation projects, train 30,000 teachers and distribute more than 8 million textbooks over the past two and a half years, Bush said.

U.S. and coalition-sponsored irrigation projects have helped more than 400,000 rural Iraqis, and water treatment projects in Iraq have improved drinking water for more than 3 million people, he said.

Bush said Iraq has a new currency, reopened the stock exchange, and made $21 million available to Iraqi entrepreneurs for credit and small-business loans.

"As a result of these efforts and Iraq's new-found freedom, more than 30,000 new Iraqi businesses have registered since liberation," Bush said.

A recent survey says that more than 75 percent of Iraqi business owners expect growth in the national economy over the next two years, which should help mitigate high rates of unemployment currently experienced in some parts of Iraq, Bush said.

Iraqi leaders have negotiated significant debt relief and filed an economic "report card" with the International Monetary Fund, Bush said.

Internal economic and business reforms are assisting Iraq to compete on the world market, he said.

"Iraqis are serious about reform and are determined to take their rightful place in the world economy," he said.

Burgeoning economic activity and business growth seen across Iraq will greatly assist military and political efforts to defeat the terrorists, Bush said.

"With all these improvements, we're helping the Iraqi government deliver meaningful change for the Iraqi people," Bush said.

"It's another important blow against the Saddamists and the terrorists."

Bush said Iraqis who'd once been disillusioned are now hopeful for the future of the new, democratic Iraq.

"Many who once questioned democracy are coming off the fence," Bush said.

"They're choosing the side of freedom."

Santa Claus, as we know him, was first depicted as a jolly, bearded elf dressed in red in 1863. He was created by Thomas Nast, an illustrator and caricaturist who worked for Harper's Weekly. Nast was the fellow responsible for drawing the donkey and elephant images we still use to represent the Democratic and Republican political parties.

For Pete's sake

Five-year-old Chase Allen ponders the age-old question, "Have you been a naughty or nice?" during his visit with Santa Claus Dec. 2 at the annual Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony at the Field of the Four Chaplains.

Santa's arrival sparks holiday spirit

There are some things about which Joseph McCaffrey is uncertain. He's "five or five and a half, or maybe five and three quarters." And he's not sure if he wants a RoboRaptur or a RoboCar for Christmas.

But there's one thing Joseph's absolutely certain; now's not the time to ask for presents.

"Santa knows what you want. You're not supposed to tell him what you want, for Pete's sake. No one does," he said, just moments after climbing off Santa's lap — which he deemed "very comfy" — Dec. 2 at the Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony on Fort Benning's Field of the Four Chaplains.

How's Santa supposed to know what Joseph wants for Christmas if Joseph doesn't know? Don't ask, for Pete's sake.

Joseph joined more than a 100 children and their parents at the annual lighting ceremony, which featured performances by The Infantry Band and the Brookstone High School Camerata.

Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough coaxed kids from the audience to help him flip the switch on the tree and menorah, before Santa arrived by fire truck.

The tree and menorah will remain lit until after the New Year.

Santa arrived via fire truck shortly after the tree was lighted. He was greeted by a crowd of children who lined up to consult with him on toy preferences and to clear up any misunderstandings about why their names might have inadvertently appeared on the Naughty List this year.

Brig. Gen. James Yarbrough shows a group of children how to flip the switch to light the Christmas tree and menorah.

Fest to feature family fun, free

Post mayors sponsor post-wide event

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Post residents looking to get into the holiday spirit and mingle with residents of all housing areas can do so easily, and for free.

The Community Life Mayors' Association will present Winter Fest, a postwide, community event, today on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

The festivities kick off at 11 a.m. with a bike parade, which will start at El Zapata restaurant by the Main Post NCO Club on Sightseeing Road and will end at York Field.

Winter Fest will feature inflatables, games for different age groups, arts and crafts for kids, informational booths, local vendors selling jewelry, woodcrafts and other wares, raffles, door prizes and much more.

"There's something for the whole family to do, and it's all free," said Britta Stevens, who volunteers as the vice mayor of the Bouton Heights and Davis Hill housing area.

Everyone who attends Winter Fest can get a free food ticket for various food items, including pizza donated by Papa John's, Domino's, Pizza Hut and Little Caesar's.

Participants can also get free raffle tickets, with a chance to win various prizes, including a seven-foot artificial Christmas tree, donated by the Fort Benning Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

"It's a great way to get into the holiday spirit," Stevens said.

The Faith Middle School band and choir will perform to help residents get in the holiday mood, Stevens said, and Girl Scouts will sing Christmas carols.

The post fire department will be at the event, along with DARE officers with their safety dogs.

For families who have a Soldier deployed, there will be an opportunity to videotape a holiday message in Infantry Hall, and the tape will be sent to the Soldier.

For more information on Winter Fest, call Stevens at 689-2298.

Benning wife stages fight against holiday humbug

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Bah humbug. Who wouldn't feel a little Scrooge-ish with her husband deployed for the holidays?

Not Kelli Canorro, who's spent most of her four-year marriage apart from her husband, 1st Lt. Anthony Canorro.

Kelli grew up in Columbus. Her husband "traded" assignments after a year at Fort Bragg, N.C., so she would be close to her family when he deployed. He's serving in Iraq with the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

Being "home" sure makes the separation easier, Kelli said, but "lonely is lonely" no matter where you are when your husband's away at Christmastime.

"It's nice to be here when I need help. If the car breaks down, I can call Granddad," Kelli said. "But you just get so lonely. It's not the same."

Canorro

Still, Kelli said, she's not one to wallow in pity. She stays busy by day working at a local building company. Nights and weekends she spends at the Springer Opera House, her home away from home for more than 20 years.

Kelli is a member of the cast of this season's A Christmas Carol. She has performed in several Springer productions. A former Disney World "castmember," she's also acted at Georgia Southern and in Italy, during her husband's tenure there. In her spare time, what little she has, Kelli volunteers at a soup kitchen to help the poor, much like the character she plays in A Christmas Carol, a benevolent soul asking for alms for the poor.

Staying busy, Kelli said, keeps her spirits up during her husband's absence.

"I have to fill my calendar. If I don't, it's bad. But it's pretty easy to find things to do at Christmas," she said. "You've got to be your own person in a marriage. You've got to get out there and do something with your time. Volunteer."

Fort Benning families new to the area will find a worthy activity to add to their holiday traditions at the Springer Opera House, Georgia's State Theater, established in 1871. Some very notable artists have performed there over the years. Perhaps the most notorious was Edwin Booth, renowned Shakespearean actor and the brother of John Wilkes Booth. Booth's spirit is said to haunt the theater, which was recently named one of the Top 10 Haunted Places in America. But it's not Wilke's ghost making headlines at the Springer these days. It's the ghosts of Christmas Past, Christmas Present and Christmas Yet-to-come. A cast of 40 will perform Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol on the theater's main stage through Dec. 23. Shows start at 7:30 p.m. today, Dec. 16-18, 22-23 and at 2:30 p.m. Sunday and Dec. 18. Tickets cost $18-$35. For more information, call 327-3688.

Protective measures effectively boost immunity

Beth Israel Continuum Center for Health and Healing

For families with young children, cold and flu season is an endless cycle of somebody getting sick, recovering and then catching the next round from another family member or friend.

"There are effective ways to break the sickness cycle by taking protective measures and boosting immunity," said Woodson Merrell, M.D., M. Anthony Fisher Director of Integrative Medicine at the Continuum Center for Health and Healing of Beth Israel Medical Center in New York City.

Merrell attacked the problem with an integrative medical tool kit.

"I'm a pragmatist," he explained, "which is why I incorporate the best of Western scientific medicine and the best of complementary therapies. Even if you get a flu shot, you're still at risk for colds and flu. However, everyone can add a few smart preventive measures to their routine and strengthen their natural immunity."

Here are Merrell's out-of-the-box tips and tricks to help families make it through cold and flu season:

1) We all know the importance of hand washing in reducing the transmission of cold and flu germs. But did you know that most children do not wash their hands long enough to have a significant impact? Teach your children to recite a nursery rhyme while lathering their hands, rinsing at the completion of the poem. This technique can triple or quadruple the amount of time their hands are exposed to soap and friction — the two methods that remove the most germs from the skin.

2) When serving snacks, beware the communal snack bowl. Children like to touch, and may pick up three cookies before making a final selection. Children also may not have washed their hands before plunging into the popcorn bowl. Much better to use separate bowls, or single serving sizes when concerned about cold and flu germs being passed around with the goodies.

3) Wait wisely. During peak outbreaks of viral illnesses, you might want to reconsider turning the little one loose in a children's waiting area. These areas have tempting child-sized tables and chairs, brightly colored toys and books. Unfortunately, these areas are used by many children with varying degrees of hygiene in the course of a day.

4) If you or your child is ill, stay home. Not only is this the most effective way to protect others from your illness, you are more likely to rest and drink more fluids in an unstructured home environment versus the more rigid schedules of school and the workplace. Consider canceling play dates with children who are coming down with colds.

5) Treat yourself to a new toothbrush. After your recovery from a cold or the flu, celebrate with a new toothbrush. Your old brush is likely carrying some residual germs from your illness, so out with the old and in with the new.

6) Wash scarves and mittens frequently and in hot water. Little hands in mittens wipe noses, play with outdoor toys and wrestle with playmates. Scarves pick up germs carried in the mouth. Washing these items frequently and in hot water can make a difference during cold and flu outbreaks.

7) Think about a new drink. Tea contains antioxidants and polyphenols that can boost the immune system. Substituting iced tea (decaffeinated for young ones) for soft drinks is a healthy choice anytime, but especially during cold and flu season. As an added benefit, choose unsweetened or lightly sweetened, which contain far less sugar than soft drinks.

8) Nutritionists tell us, and the evidence has proven the great health benefits of getting more fruits and vegetables in our children's diets, but we know how picky children can be. Experiment with smoothies made with fruits rich in vitamin C and other nutrients. Youthful taste buds may prefer fruits like bananas, papayas or strawberries.

9) Go herbal, but go cautiously — most have not been tested in children. One that has extensive safety and efficacy studies is Esberitox and it's been proven safe for children as young as 2 years old. In fact, in a clinical study in Europe, it was shown to reduce the duration of colds by 50 percent.

10) For older kids with sore throats, gargle with disinfectant solutions, such as Listerine or diluted hydrogen peroxide (the latter is not safe for young children who may swallow it).

Even if the headlines predict widespread infections during cold and flu season, you and your kids may be able to avoid them. If you take proper care, you can dramatically reduce the number of days you're out of commission, or even dodge getting sick altogether. And if you do happen to get sick, you can use these tips to get better faster.

Bureau issues Medicare scam alert

Better Business Bureau

Beginning Jan. 1, everyone with Medicare, regardless of income or health status, will have access to prescription drug coverage. The enrollment period began Nov. 15 and private companies that have been approved by Medicare to provide the benefits were permitted to begin marketing their plans Oct. 1. Each company will follow Medicare guidelines, but they will differ in such aspects as the drugs they cover, the costs and where the drugs can be obtained.

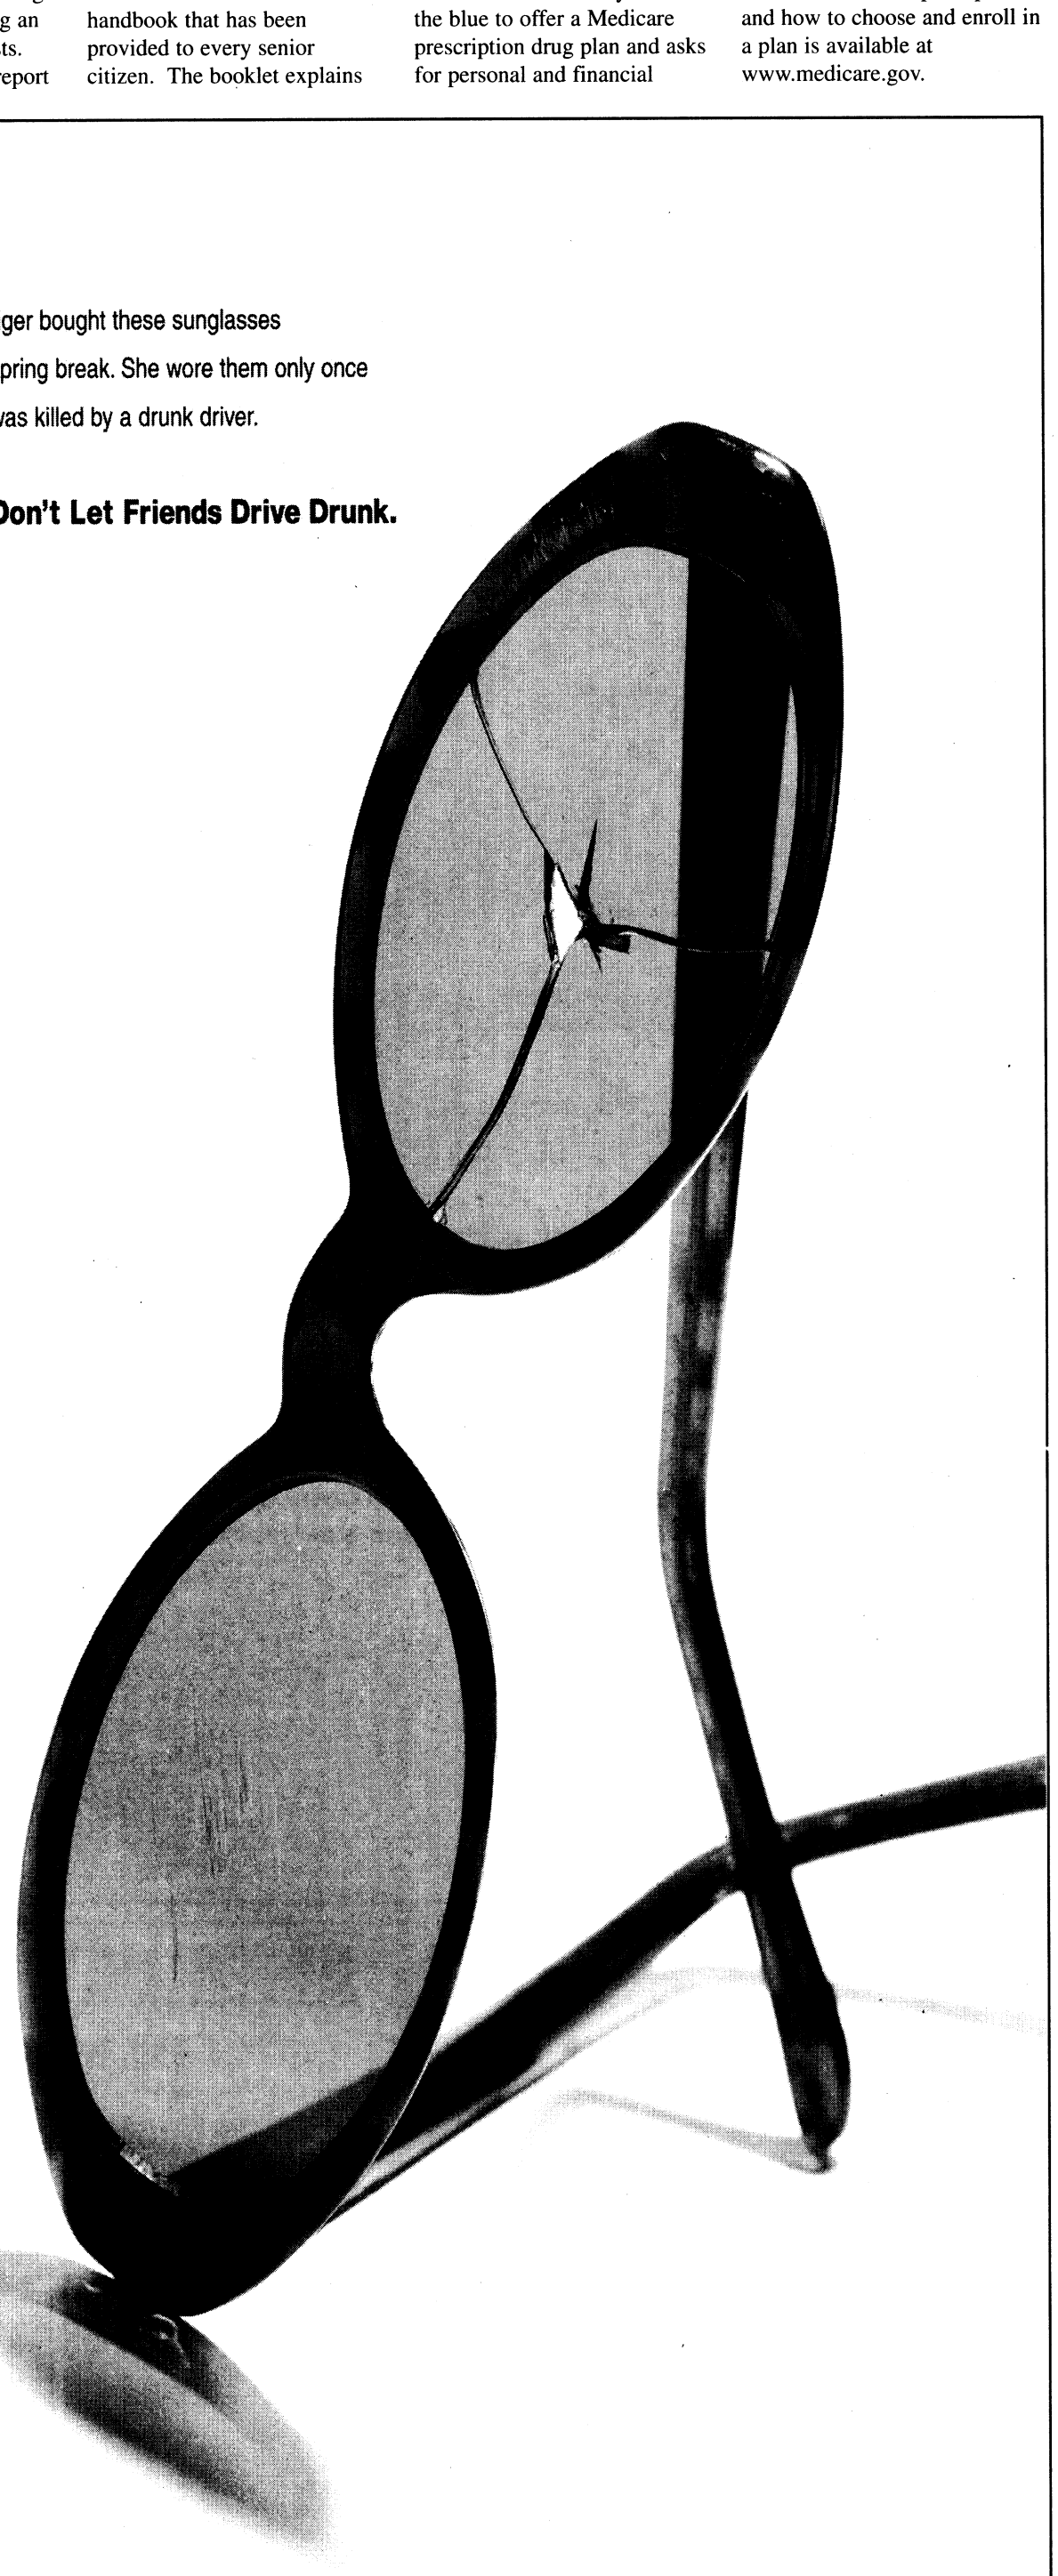
This benefit, while exciting for seniors, is also creating an opportunity for scam artists. Better Business Bureaus report that crooks are calling seniors, masquerading as "approved" providers or government officials, and offering to sign them up over the telephone. Their goal is to wrest personal and financial information from seniors that they can use to steal their identities or money.

Seniors and those who care for seniors need to know how to identify the legitimate, approved Medicare Prescription Drug providers from the "pretenders." The BBB offers the following tips when evaluating the various plans being marketed:

• Carefully review the Medicare & You 2006 handbook that has been provided to every senior citizen. The booklet explains in detail what prescription drug coverage means to you and which plans are available in your area.

• Legitimate providers are not allowed to market the drug plans door-to-door or via unsolicited e-mails.

• Legitimate providers are permitted to contact consumers, but they must observe federal and state do-not-call laws and registries. Also, they should be willing to send you information about the plan in the mail, and wait to obtain any necessary personal and financial information until after you decide to enroll.



• If someone calls you out of the blue to offer a Medicare prescription drug plan and asks for personal and financial information, obtain their name, the name of their company or agency and their phone number. Ask them to send you information about their plan in the mail. Do not provide your bank account number, your Social Security number or any other personal information over the telephone.

• Verify the legitimacy of any provider that contacts you by calling the Medicare toll-free phone number (800) 633-4227, which is open 24 hours a day.

More information about the new Medicare prescription drug coverage, how to assess your needs and review option plans and how to choose and enroll in a plan is available at www.medicare.gov.

Playground gets makeover

2nd Lt. Matt Meloni watches on as Zachary Shaver, 4, paints a swing set at the Ragin Court playground.

Class project similar to Iraqi goodwill mission

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

What appears to be an act of selflessness, the renovation of a playground on post, is more than that.

It is a lesson in deployment.

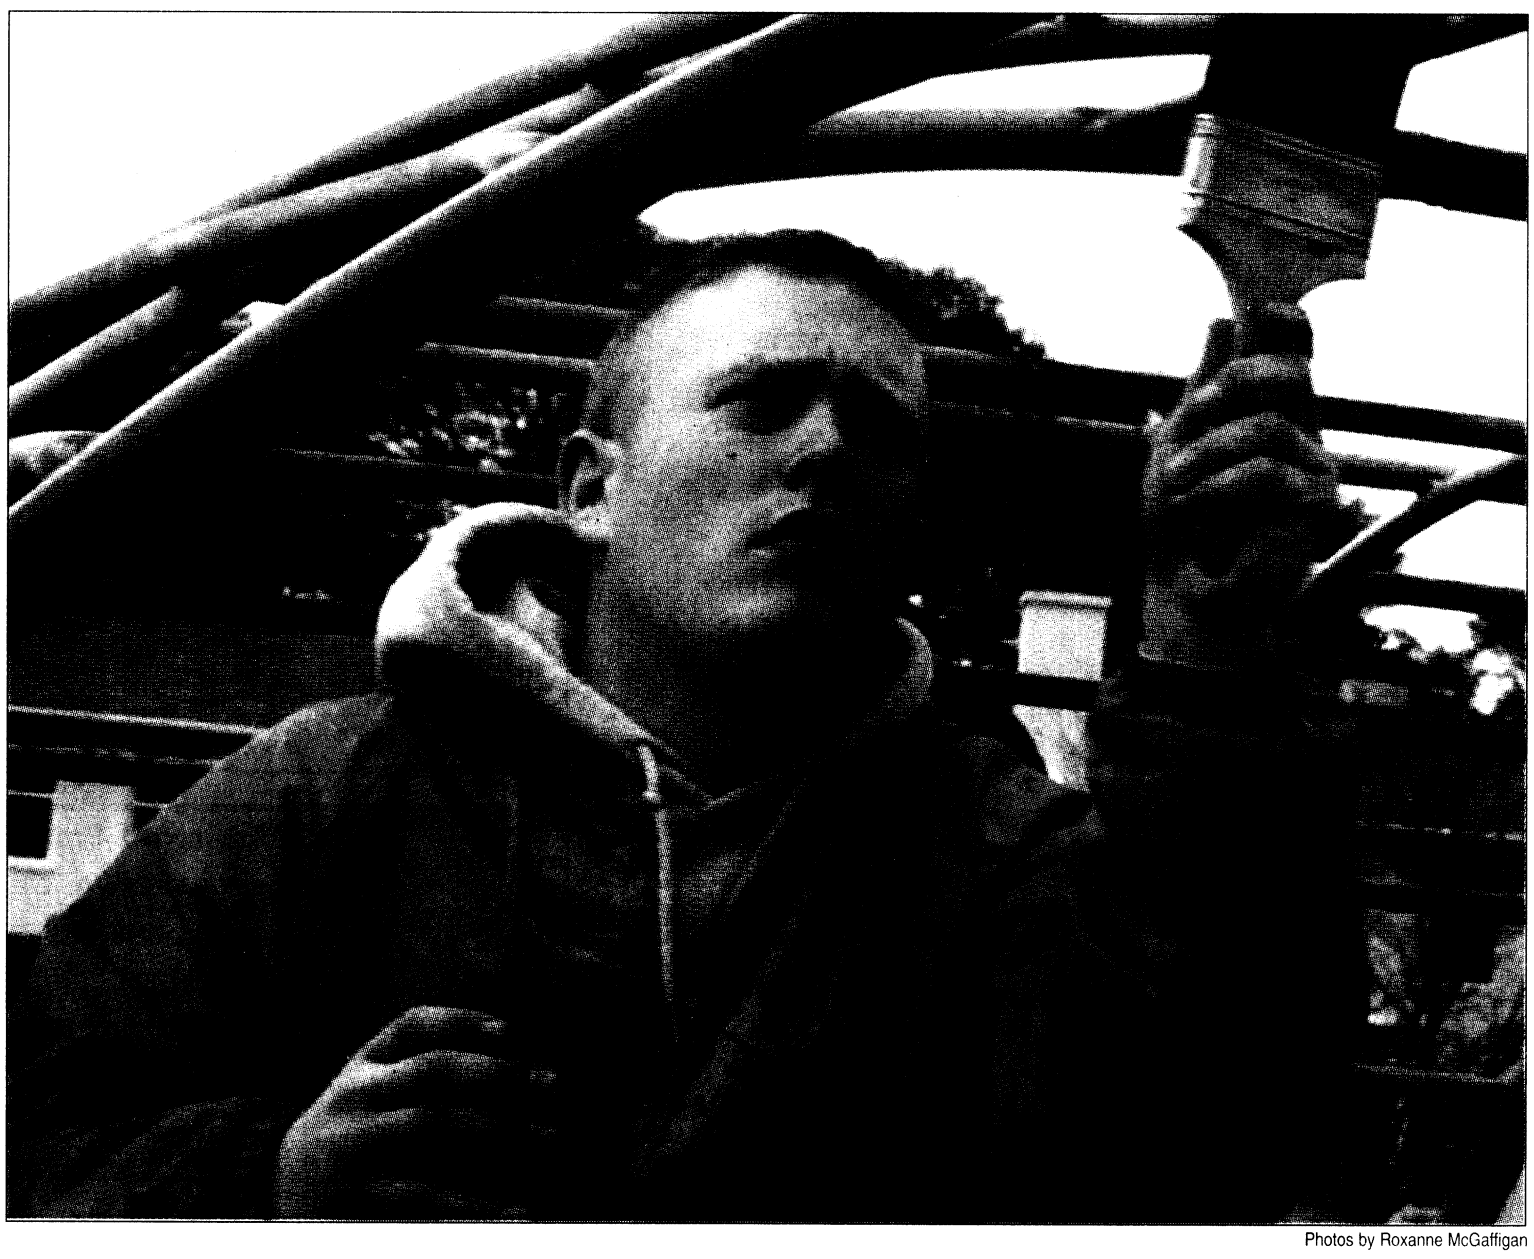
Soldiers of 3rd Platoon, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, spent Saturday renovating the Ragin Court playground.

The playground, primarily used by residents of Ragin Court on Main Post, was in need of repair, said 2nd Lt. Joshua Shaver, an IOBC student who volunteered to organize the project.

Shaver said improving the community was part of the mission during his previous deployment to Iraq. His unit went door to door to ask the Iraqis how they could help make their community a better place to live.

Shaver said his classmates will likely be doing something similar when they deploy. This class project was structured to simulate the way his unit organized improvements in Iraqi neighborhoods.

The IOBC students painted the playground equipment red, white and blue. They also replaced broken chains, put in new swings and made minor repairs.



"It's good to help out, especially when we spend so much time at Fort Benning," 2nd Lt. Bryan McLane said.

"This is needed. It's great. We play out here all the time," said Susan Arends, a resident of Ragin Court.

Arends said that all the rust on the equipment was concerning, but now it will be much better with the new paint.

Her son, 3-year-old Caden Arends, was happy to see his playground being fixed up and painted his favorite color, red.

2nd Lt. Bryan McLane uses paint to spruce up rusting playground equipment at Ragin Court. McLane and his IOBC classmates chose to fix up the playground for their community project.

Journey to paradise

Chaplain (Capt.) Tracy N. Kerr
2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

REFLECTIONS

Well, it is that time of year again. The leave form is signed and the family is one safety brief and one POV inspection away from heading to paradise for the holidays.

No, not the tropics. We are going to Raleigh, N.C. I know Carolina is not heaven, but it is geographically located to allow you to see it from the Blue Ridge Parkway in the west and just off the shoreline of Cape Hatteras in the east.

Simply stated, North Carolina is home.

Once we have loaded the minivan to its maximum payload, including our 10-month and 2-year-old daughters, we will journey north for eight to 12 hours to see family.

Christmas music will fill the air. The smells of Christmas candies and pies will smite me into a sugar coma before I can settle our luggage indoors.

Our journey will consist of laughter, joy, gifts and even the telling of the Christmas story around Dad's living room. I am referring to the baby in the manger version and not the Santa one.

Please, do not get me wrong. I like Santa. It is just that part of the story, "not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse" that I do not get. It simply is not credible to refer to the busiest time of the year in the same context as "nothing was stirring."

My girls are not old enough to understand the significance of this season. However, the fact that their parents allowed a seven-foot tree to grow up alongside the entertainment center has them stirring.

Not only did we allow it to grow, but we decorated and put lights on it for the whole world to see. No, Christmas is about stirring life up as we know it.

Imagine how the shepherds must have felt the first Christmas Eve. The phenomenal star and the perfect phonetics of the angel declaring, "Fear not, for I bring you glad tidings of great joy. This night you will find a baby lying in a manger who is Christ the Lord."

Wow, they were stirred enough to journey and see if this experience was real or not (it was and is today).

As we load our wagons and head out on our journeys all across this free land, let us pause somewhere along the way and remember those serving on foreign soil to keep us free.

Yes, I am excited about my journey to paradise and with God's message of great joy you can be too.

Handle disappointment with dignity, faith

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

The cow got lost from the manger scene. In fact, in The Infantry Center Chapel last Sunday night during Fort Benning's wonderful, warm tradition of Carols By Candlelight, he wandered so far away from Mary and Joseph that he actually crawled up the steps of the "high pulpit" in the sanctuary.

As I recall, this preschooler with floppy brown ears and spots to match didn't come down until about halfway through the second selection of the evening.

Have you caught a Christmas pageant this year? They are all over the place, and they are certainly one of the best ways to bring a smile to your face and celebrate the reason for the season.

They are also a great way to totally take the real Christmas story for granted. I think it's a lot like hearing the national anthem at the beginning of the movies on post. We hear it and sing it so often it's just human nature to get on autopilot and not think much about the real setting and the real meaning.

So this holiday season, let me take you back to the first Christmas season and let you hear the story again — for the first time.

Did you know that the season of joy we so often refer to ... wasn't one ... at least not initially? What's the story line? There's a young girl and a young man who've been looking at engagement rings, an angel shows up and tells her that though she's never been with a man, she's miraculously pregnant with God's special gift to transform the world, and then she gets to share that good news with her boyfriend!

Hawkins

The girl was Mary, the boy was Joseph, and could you imagine just how filled with "joy" he was when he got the news that his girlfriend that he'd not laid a hand on was pregnant? By the way, they had pretty much the same words for women who came up pregnant out of wedlock back then as now, except they tended to face a stiffer social penalty — they were frequently stoned to death.

Joseph was so excited over this "good news" that the Bible tells us that he had in mind to dump her (divorce her) quietly to save her and him maximum humiliation and embarrassment. Reality is, the first Christmas season started with tons of disappointment.

So how did he handle the disappointment and what can that tell you about how to handle yours if it pops up during the Christmas season or beyond?

1) He chose to stand up to, not run, from his challenges. Joseph didn't cut and run when times got tough and disappointment struck — he faced with faith the surprise life dealt him.

2) Joseph made decisions based on facts, not feelings. He didn't let his emotions propel him to a rash decision in the moment — instead the Bible says he took time to consider things. Good advice for us all when disappointment hits.

3) Joseph was driven by his character, not his circumstances. He was a righteous man, we're told, so that means his ability to make a correct "big" decision in that moment was actually dependent on lots of correct "little" decisions he'd made along the way. You can't microwave character — but you can cultivate it.

4) Joseph believed that God was going to show up. And show up God did — Joseph got an angel of his own who clued him in on God's plan, and the rest, well ... history or "his story" as many like to say.

So if your Christmas isn't perfect, realize the first one wasn't either! And use the wisdom of Joseph to navigate your way through any disappointment you may be facing.

The Consumer Products Safety Commission says roller skating, with the proper gear, is twice as safe as the local playground and three times safer than basketball or football.
Roller skating burns an average of 350 calories per hour, the equivalent of jogging.

- And the BCS says

Like I said last week, it's no surprise USC and Texas will meet up in the Rose Bowl.

The first bowl game, So. Mississippi versus Arkansas St., is at 8 p.m. Dec. 20 on ESPN. The bowl games will culminate at 8 p.m. Jan. 4 on ABC with the Rose Bowl. Another notable: Penn State versus Florida State at 8 p.m. Jan. 3 on ABC.

- Heisman trophy

The Heisman trophy presentation is at 8 p.m. Saturday on ESPN. I'd like to see Brady Quinn or Reggie Bush win. USC QB Matt Leinart is up to win two years in a row.

Archie Griffin of Ohio State won in 1974 and 1975.

- Jays pay out

The Toronto Blue Jays signed pitcher A.J. Burnett to a five-year, $55 million free-agent contract.

It's the longest contract since December 2001 for a free agent starter. Burnett is 49-50 for his career with the Florida Marlins.

- Target World Challenge

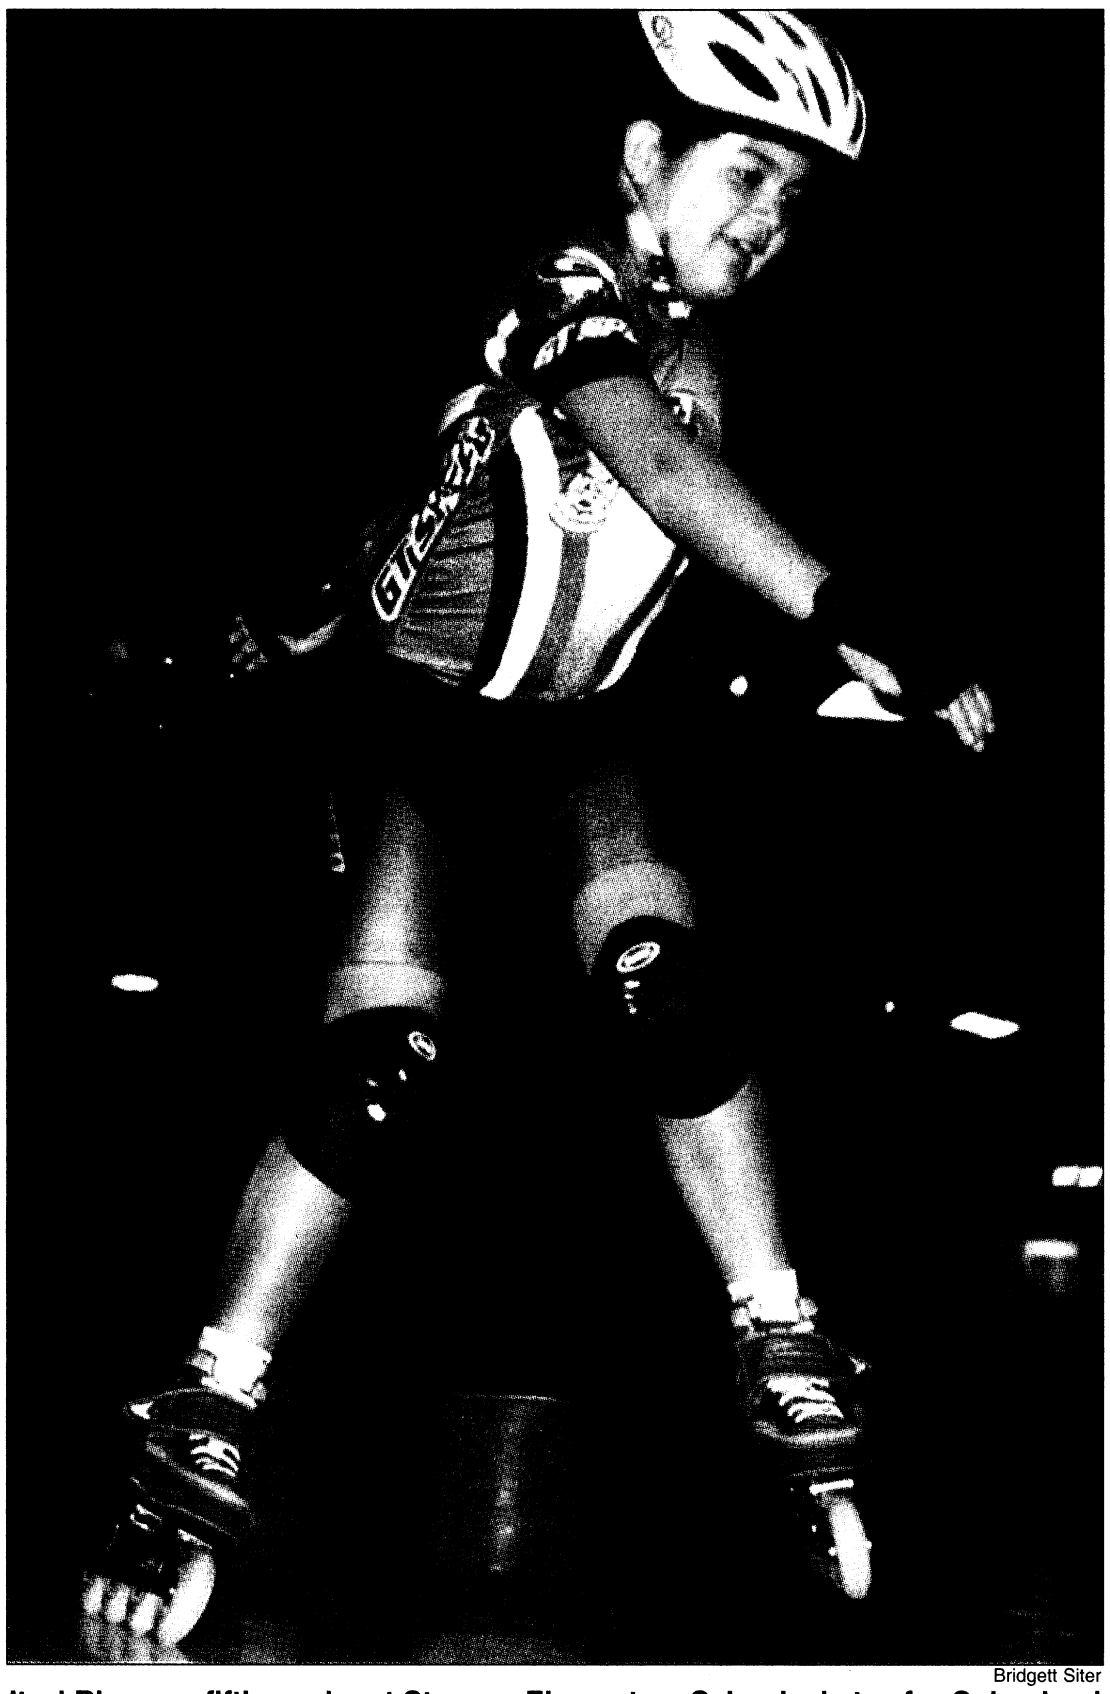
Tiger Woods hosts the Target World Challenge this weekend.



The 16-man event will include Fred Funk, Jim Furyk and Chris DiMarco.

Catch the golf action at 3 p.m. Saturday and Sunday on ABC.

- World Baseball Classic

The inaugural World Baseball Classic will be March 3-20, with 16 teams from various countries competing.

Players signed on right now to play for the U.S. include Chipper Jones, Roger Clemens, Jason Varitek, Barry Bonds, Andy Pettitte Lance Berkman and John Smoltz.

Thrills on wheels

Post student, coach extol benefits of speed skating

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Yamill Collazo has coached speed skating long enough to recognize potential. He saw it in 10-year-old Itzel Rivera three months ago, when he recruited her for Columbus' GT Speed, the number one speed skating team in the nation. Itzel didn't let him down.

The Stowers Elementary School fifth-grader finished each heat in her first competition Saturday in Tallahassee, Fla., — that's seven heats, or races, one right after the other, against experienced competitors two and three years her senior. She made it to the finals in the Junior Olympic Elementary Division.

"She did wonderfully," Collazo said. "She didn't give up, and this was her very first competition. It was grueling. What you have to remember is that in this sport, the best skater in the country only wins 15 percent of the time. It's tough, and you've got to be tough to handle it."

Learning to lose is critical to the success of any speed skater, Collazo said. That's why he puts his skaters up against more experienced skaters — to test their mettle and hone their skill.

"If you can't lose, this isn't the sport for you," he said. "You know, we tell everyone they can be the president, but not everyone can be the president. And everyone can't be the winner every time."

That's a lesson Collazo learned at a very early age. Forty years ago, he was a small boy, smaller than most 9-year-olds, and not particularly dynamic at any sport. His dad, a career Soldier, was serving in Vietnam, and his mother worked at a local department store. She dropped her son off at the skating rink on her way to work. It was a safe place to hang out.

After a year of skating, Collazo was good. Good enough to compete. So he started speed skating, a popular sport in the '70s, when roller disco and roller derby were hot.

He skated for years, through a stint in the Navy, and back here again. He met his wife, Donna, at the skating rink. And when the kids came along — there are three now — he taught them to skate.

When his oldest daughter was 4, Collazo recognized her potential as a skater, so he began making weekly treks to Atlanta to practice with GT Speed, which is owned and coached by David Downing, of Wide World of Sports fame.

Before long, Downing offered Collazo the opportunity to start a GT Speed team in Columbus. That was 1988, and

Linebacker honors fallen Ranger during Army-Navy game

Scruggs wears scroll of fallen Soldier

Justin Rodriguez
Times Herald-Record

There is silence on the phone. Did John Henderson hang up?

Then there is breathing and it is apparent Henderson is struggling for the words to answer the question: What was it like to plan your only son's funeral before he even died?

"We both knew what kind of job you do when you join the Army Rangers," Henderson said. "They don't get cake assignments."

Rangers, the elite of the Army, are given some of the most dangerous missions. The kind that leave young men like John Henderson Jr. dead.

Henderson Jr. never played football at Army, never attended classes at West Point, never even stepped foot on campus. But Pvt. John Henderson Jr. of Columbus was a Soldier, assigned to 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. That's why starting Army linebacker Barrett Scruggs honored him during the Army-Navy game Saturday in Philadelphia by wearing the same Ranger patch Henderson wore when he took his last breath on a mountainside in Afghanistan this summer.

"I'm definitely moved," Scruggs said. "I'm honored because (Army football) coach (Bobby) Ross tells us all the time that we have an effect on so many troops around the world."

Henderson, a physician who retired from the U.S. Army after more than 20 years of service in 2004, wrote to West Point officials in September about a player wearing a patch to honor his fallen son. Each Black Knight in the game traditionally wears a patch representing an Army unit.

Army director of football operations Maj. Bill Lynch contacted Henderson weeks

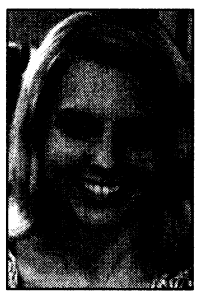
Erin Says ...

You'll notice all of the games for the Pick 12 this week are NFL games, because the regular college season is over. Next week, our last paper of the year, our pickers will be picking 9 Bowl games, AFC and NFC champs and also making an extremely hard pick for who they think the Super Bowl champions will be. At least they have Green Bay out of the way for that one.

UFC kicks you-know-what

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff



I've found a new sport I absolutely love. It's called the Ultimate Fighting Championship. It's not exactly new (it was started in 1993), but it's something new to me, and I watch it on Spike TV every chance I get.

UFC is a professional mixed martial arts organization offering the premier series of MMA sports events.

UFC athletes are skilled in karate, jiu-jitsu, boxing, kickboxing, grappling, wrestling, sumo and other combat sports. Basically, it's a smorgasbord of sweaty, heavily muscled men trying to beat the snot out of each other, but in a professional way.

There are five weight classes, starting at lightweight and ending in heavyweight. UFC competitors hail from many different countries, and almost all have studied martial arts.

So what's the appeal of UFC? Personally, I love attending the boxing and combatives matches during Ranger Rendezvous every two years. The thrill and excitement of these guys rolling around, trying to choke each other out is awesome to watch.

Watching UFC is like that, only with different rules and commentators. I never knew what a rear naked choke was until I watched a UFC marathon.

It's a reality series within a reality series. There are two teams, headed by UFC champions, and in each episode, two fighters are pitted against each other to fight in "the octagon."

The octagon was designed by doctors and martial artists as a neutral arena so the fights can be seen wherever competitors may end up. It is different from a boxing ring — no one falls out or gets caught up in the ropes.

Once fighting, non-championship bouts are three rounds and championship bouts are five rounds, each lasting five minutes with one minute between rounds.

Fighters can win by physical or verbal tap-out, a technical knockout via the referee stopping the contest, a scorecard decision, technical decision, a technical draw, disqualification, forfeit or no contest.

I have to admit I like when someone gets bloodied up, or has to physically tap out. There's something about the raw, no-holds-barred fighting that gets my adrenaline going.

Although it seems like it's anything goes, there are 31 different fouls fighters can commit, which include kicking to the kidney with the heel, groin attacks of any kind, biting, hair pulling and butting with the head, just to name a few. Fighters usually keep it pretty clean — the skill of their fighting speaks for itself, without any cheap shots.

I highly recommend trying to catch UFC on TV. They have several Pay-Per-View events during the year, so if you're feeling monetarily ambitious, go for it. You won't be disappointed.

Skating: Gains popularity in U.S.

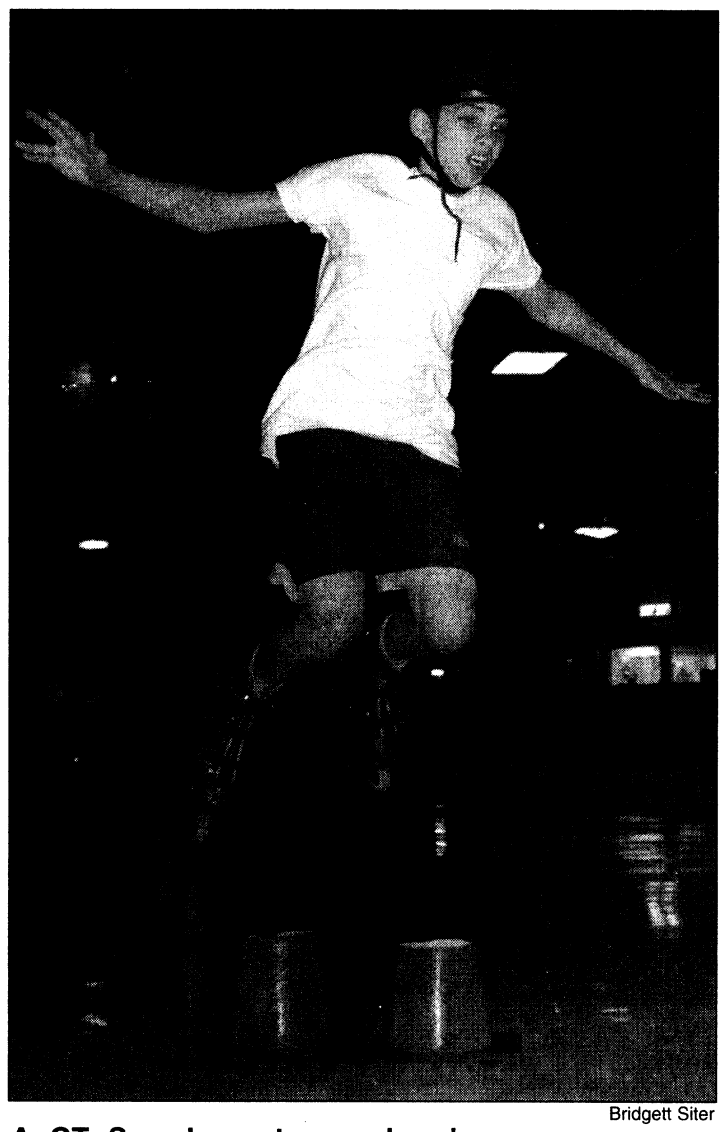
GT Speed has boasted some of the world's best speed skaters since then, a couple of national champions, a PanAm competitor and an Olympian.

Collazo imposes strict standards on his skaters, on and off the rink. Although new skaters like Itzel practice with the team two or three times a week, more advanced skaters practice five or six times a week and travel to out-of-town competitions three or four times a year. In order to do so, they must maintain good grades. Parents, like Itzel's, appreciate that edict.

"She's on the honor roll now. She's all about school, because she wants to skate. She has a lot more discipline," said Marie Rivera, whose husband, Sgt. 1st Class Victor Rivera, who works at the Special Operations Division at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, where Collazo is the information technician at the Amos Library.

Itzel first saw speed skating when she attended a Kids InMotion event in Columbus several months ago.



Collazo's team was there, instructing children about "small wheel" safety, meaning inline skating, speed skating and skate boarding. He figures his skaters spend about 40 hours each year volunteering with the Safe Kids Coalition of Columbus.

Collazo learned about the program in 1993, after one of his skaters, a 6-year-old girl, was killed when she veered into the path of a car while skating at home without a helmet. That's when Collazo began to teach safety aside from coaching, and today it's one of his greatest passions. He meets with novice skaters, young and old, Saturday mornings at Lambert Skating Rink to teach them "how to fall correctly," the right way to stand and stop, and how to prevent and avoid potential accidents and injuries. His team conducts regular safety demonstrations, and through Safe Kids, they give away free helmets to young skaters.

"This is not a job for me. It's what I do because I love to skate, and I love the kids and I love to teach them to skate safely," said Collazo, who believes more and more people are starting to feel the way he does about the sport that keeps him captivated 40 years after he first entered the rink.

In Colombia, speed skating is the most popular sport, he said, and in Latin American countries, et al, it consistently ranks number two, after soccer. In the U.S., it's gaining ground, though it's still not as popular as it was in the '70s.

Collazo said anyone, child or adult, can attend his Saturday morning class.

Bridgett Siter

A GT Speed sports member jumps over cones during a Saturday practice at Lambert Skating Rink.

"We don't turn anybody away," he said. "Just show up," at 8:30 with $6, a bicycle helmet and your own skates, if you prefer, though Lambert does have skates available.

Team: Honors fallen Soldier

later and told him it could be done.

"It is overwhelming," Henderson said. "It would be one thing if John was a three-star general, but he is a private. For these men to think of him like this is amazing, outrageous."

One of the last times the Hendersons talked was on July 11 — the day before the son deployed for Afghanistan. They spoke about funeral arrangements — everything from pallbearers to what would be inscribed on his tombstone if tragedy struck. Henderson chose "Continue the Mission" for his epitaph.

In Armyspeak, that is abbreviated "Charlie Mike." Father and son ended each conversation by saying the phrase to one another.

Henderson sent a message to Scruggs last week through Army senior associate athletic director for athletic communications Bob Scruggs.

"I told Scruggs to kick some Navy ass," Henderson said, fighting back tears. "I told him 'Charlie Mike.' He knows what to do."

Henderson Jr. and another Soldier, Damian Garza of Odessa, Texas, died during a mission near the Afghanistan-Pakistan border on Aug. 4. The pair were following a group of Taliban fighters when their armored humvee rolled down a mountainside, killing them instantly.

John Henderson Jr. was 21 years old — just 23 days into his first tour. Just a week earlier, his father gave several family members at a family reunion stamped, addressed envelopes to mail to John Jr. They all did.

"He probably never got them," said Henderson, who only learned where his son served when Army officials knocked on his door to tell him he was gone.

Henderson Jr. was a standout athlete in high school. He played football, soccer, golf and tennis. He loved to race motorcycles and read philosophy. He was always the life of the party, making everyone around him laugh.

Henderson Jr. joined the Army Dec. 30 after two years in college. He felt unfulfilled on campus and wanted a challenge.

Henderson expected to speak with Scruggs via phone Dec. 1.

In nature
we see reflections of our children.

The tree is the strong one.

The ocean, rambunctious and untamed.

The sky, the absolute dreamer.

And to choose the tree over the ocean
would be like choosing one child over the next.

An impossibility as large as the world itself.

The world's leading environmental groups are working together.

Q: In the TV series Three's Company, what was th full name of Chrissy, played by Suzanne Somers?

A. Christmas Snow

CBS offers a Blessing for those seeking sweetness

"The Christmas Blessing," a sentimental new CBS drama starring Neil Patrick Harris, Rebecca Gayheart and Angus T. Jones (Two and a Half Men), is aptly named for any viewers who are going through sugarplum withdrawal.

This Sunday sequel to the highly rated 2002 holiday drama The Christmas Shoes finds Nathan Andrews (Harris), the boy from Shoes, now grown up and working as a medical resident.

Nathan's work has impressed his hospital colleagues, but the unexpected death of a patient sends him into a depression and leads him to take a break and move back home with his widowed father.

His homecoming is a little rocky, however. Not only has Nathan's father somehow lost the shoes Nathan had struggled so hard to get for his dying mother in the earlier movie, but the older man is planning to sell the family home and business and start a new life in the South.

These events shake up Nathan, but he begins to get a new perspective from Megan (Gayheart), a vivacious teacher he meets and begins to date, as well as young Charlie (Jones), one of her students who has lost his mother.

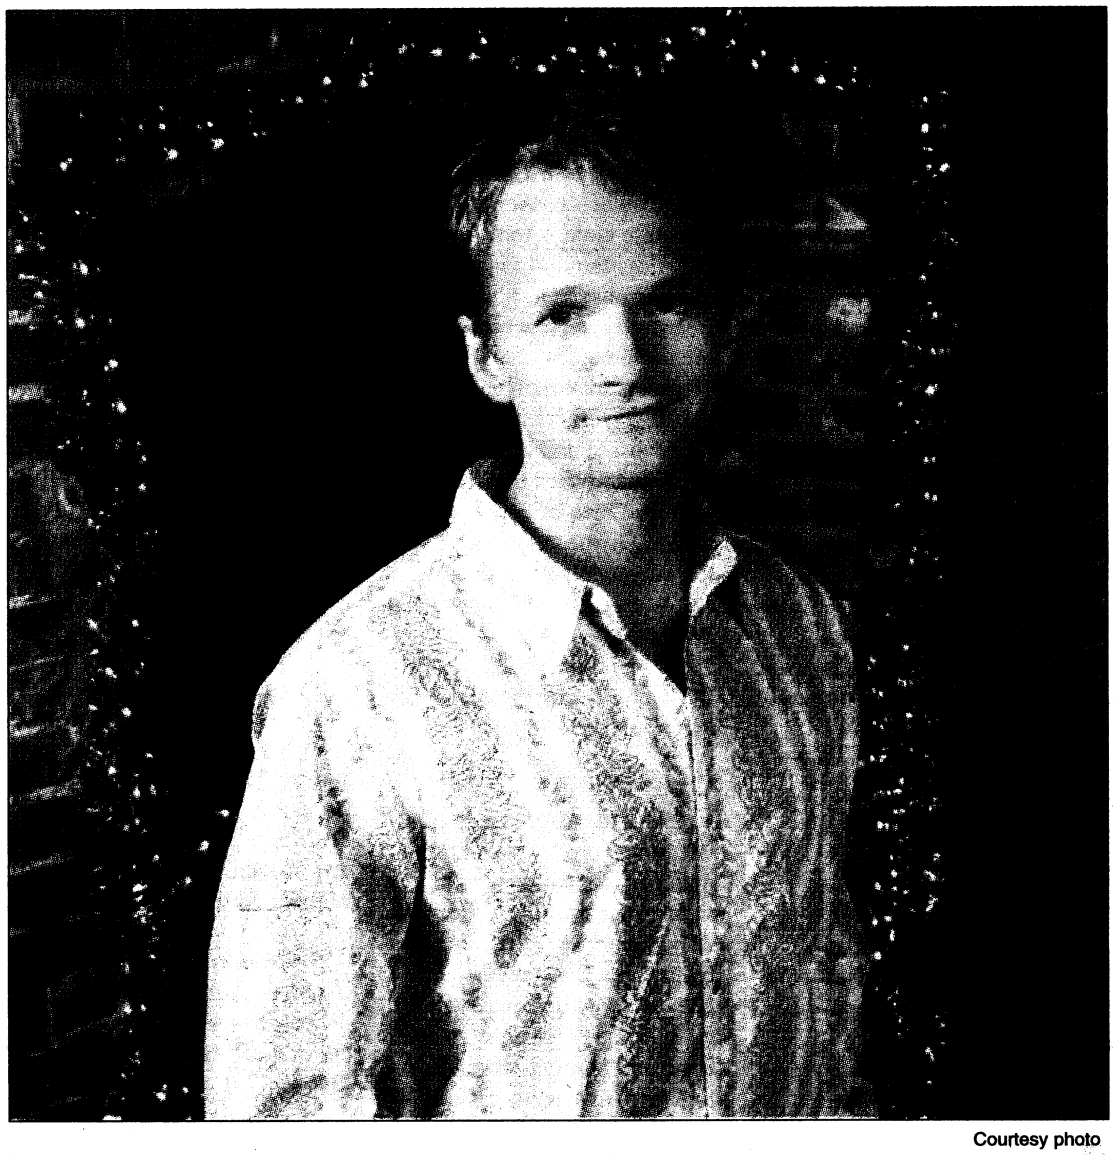
This being a holiday tear-jerker, however, Nathan scarcely has begun to try letting go of the past when he discovers that not one, but two of the people he loves most suffer from life-threatening medical conditions that only Christmas Eve transplants can resolve.

Harris good-naturedly acknowledged that The Christmas Blessing lays on the melodrama pretty thickly in some respects. But then, with no big new Christmas-themed movies playing in theaters this year, audiences are having to rely on TV movies to tug their holiday heartstrings.

"Doing a Christmas TV movie, the cliches are probably a bit inevitable, but around Christmastime that's just a little more palatable because you're looking for a little saccharin in your coffee," Harris said.

"I think a lot of people may find themselves at the home of loved ones without much going on. There will be a dinner evening event and perhaps some churchgoing, but other than that, aside from football, there isn't a lot of structure, so the TV tends to be on a lot. I think it's great, because it allows the movies to be a little more mainstream."

Of course, "mainstream" also means appealing to as large an audience as possible, which only encourages a "too many cooks" situation as a Christmas movie goes into production.



"There's a lot of people from the network and otherwise who put in their two cents about what ought to be in it," Harris said.

"The script has to answer to a lot of demographics: kids, grandparents, everyone. By the time the script got to us, it was kind of a cut-and-paste job."

Harris said he and his cast mates worked with director Karen Arthur and the producers to keep the dialogue sounding natural and the action flowing as seamlessly as possible.

"I don't know that I've ever spent more time on a movie doing that, because usually all that happens before you even get to the set," he said.

"I'm not saying that to cast a dark light on the making of this project, just to let you know that everyone involved had aspirations to make it something beyond a routine, cliched Christmas tear-jerker."

The 32-year-old actor admitted he also had to make peace with his own past to play a doctor, since he knows this role invariably will raise references to his starmaking 1989-93 role as Doogie Howser, M.D.

He's proud of his work on that Steven Bochco medical series, but it can't be a coincidence that he refers to that show without actually uttering the D-word itself.

"I think it's inevitable that it will be acknowledged," Harris said, "but as my manager said, it's been more than 12 years, and doctors have such a key role in life that it would be pretty hard to avoid playing a doctor forever.

"I thought, what the heck, I may as well do it. And I sort of liked that the story line had my character wanting to leave that behind and re-create himself. That sort of fit into what is happening on its own in my own world.

"It seemed like a decent fit, although they ended up adding more medical stuff than I had expected. That was fine, because I'm a relatively intellectual actor, and I'm sure I'll play another doctor in my day.

"As long as it isn't poking fun at or trying to replicate what I've done in the past, I hope that I'm allowed to play those roles."

That seems like a safe bet since, over the past dozen or so years, Harris has turned out a body of work that is almost breathtaking in its diversity — especially on stage, where he has earned acclaim for playing a star-struck young lover (Romeo and Juliet), an omnisexual nightclub M.C. (Cabaret) and a bohemian filmmaker (Rent).

Opening today

The Family Stone — The Stones, a traditional New England family, have their annual holiday gathering. The eldest son (Dermot Mulroney) brings his girlfriend (Sarah Jessica Parker) home to meet his parents, brothers and sisters.

Before the holiday is over, relationships will unravel while new ones are formed, secrets are revealed and the family Stone will come together through its extraordinary capacity for love.

The Family Stone is rated PG-13 for sexual content including dialogue and drug references.

Opening Wednesday

Fun With Dick and Jane — Dick (Jim Carrey) and Jane (Tea Leoni) are in love and living the American dream — until one day it becomes an American nightmare. When the company Dick works for becomes involved in a scandal, Dick and Jane are faced with the prospect of losing everything.

After playing by the rules and getting burned, Dick has an idea: If stealing was good enough for his boss, then it's good enough for him.

Fun With Dick and Jane is rated PG-13 for brief language, sexual humor and occasional humorous drug references.

Cheaper by the Dozen 2 — Tom Baker (Steve Martin) and wife Kate (Bonnie Hunt), hoping to bring their family together for a memorable summer vacation, take their 12 offspring to rustic Lake Winnetka.

But their retreat soon becomes cutthroat when they enter into a competition with the overachieving members of a large family headed by Tom's longtime rival, Jimmy Muraugh (Eugene Levy).

Cheaper by the Dozen 2 is rated PG for crude humor and mild language.

Opening Dec. 23

The Ringer — When Steve Barker finds himself running dead last in the corporate rat race, he sinks to an all-time low — he attempts to rig the Special Olympics by pretending to be intellectually challenged. But, Barker is completely outclassed by his fellow Olympians, who are not only better athletes, they're just plain better people.

Starring Johnny Knoxville, Brian Cox and Katherine Heigl.

The Ringer is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, language and drug references.

Memoirs of a Geisha — In the years before World War II, a Japanese child is torn from her penniless family to work at a geisha house. Despite a treacherous rival who nearly breaks her spirit, the girl blossoms into the legendary geisha Sayuri.

Beautiful and accomplished, Sayuri captivates the most powerful men of her day, but is haunted by her secret love for the one man beyond her reach.

Starring Ziyi Zhang and Ken Watanabe.

Memoirs of a Geisha is rated PG-13 for mature subject matter and sexual content.

Opening Dec. 25

The Producers — A shady Broadway producer and his nerdy accountant concoct a scheme to overfinance a huge flop and pocket the excess budget, but the show unexpectedly becomes a smash.

Starring Will Ferrell, Nathan Lane and Matthew Broderick

The Producers is rated PG-13 for sexual humor and references.

Wolf Creek — It was supposed to be the vacation of a lifetime in the Australian Outback — full of fun, sun and adventure. But what happened was a trio of 20-something backpackers took a detour into the depths of unrelenting terror.

Based on true events, Wolf Creek is the haunting story of their unthinkable ordeal — a mounting white-knuckle nightmare so real it was destined to become horror legend.

Starring Cassandra Magrath and John Jarratt.

Wolf Creek had not been rated as of press time.

Rumor Has It — Sarah Huttinger's (Jennifer Aniston) life is in a tailspin. She's finally agreed to marry her boyfriend Jeff, (Mark Ruffalo) but isn't at all sure that marriage is what she really wants — in fact, she's not sure what she wants in general.

When she finally meets Internet millionaire Beau Burroughs (Kevin Costner), their encounter unexpectedly unlocks some well-kept secrets that may help Sarah uncover the truth about her family and finally discover who she truly is, once and for all.

Rumor Has It is rated PG-13 for mature thematic material, sexual content, crude humor and a drug reference.

Now playing

King Kong — Flamboyant, foolhardy documentary maker Carl Denham (Jack Black), sails off to remote Skull Island to film his latest epic with leading lady Ann Darrow (Naomi Watts). Native warriors kidnap Ann to use as a sacrifice as they summon "Kong" with the local witch doctor. But instead of devouring Ann, Kong saves her.

King Kong is rated PG-13 for frightening adventure violence and disturbing images.

The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, The Witch and The Wardrobe — This movie follows the exploits of the four Pevensie siblings in World War II England, who enter the world of Narnia through a magical wardrobe while playing a game of hide and seek in the rural country home of an elderly professor.

Once there, the children discover a charming, peaceful land inhabited by talking beasts, dwarfs, fauns, centaurs and giants that has become a world cursed to eternal winter by the evil White Witch.

Starring Tilda Swinton and James McAvoy.

The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, The Witch and The Wardrobe is rated PG for battle sequences and frightening moments.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire — In his fourth year at Hogwarts, Harry (Daniel Radcliffe) faces his greatest challenges and dangers yet.

Also starring Rupert Grint and Emma Watson.

Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire is rated PG-13 for sequences of fantasy violence and frightening images.

The Bayonet traditionally takes a two-week break around the holidays, when so many of our readers go home to be with their families. We wish you all a very Merry Christmas and a safe and happy New Year. We look forward to seeing you back here Jan. 6. Until then, God bless us every one.

Jan. 1 is the deadline for post residents to sign the leases with Pinnacle Realty, the company now responsible for managing post housing. You can sign your lease at Building 280 on Transportation Street, between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Monday — Friday. The office will be closed Dec. 26. For more information, read B-1 or call 545-8172.

Rookie Santas trained at Fort Benning this week, each hoping to earn a spot on the Santa Claus Support team. A-11

Today is the last day of school this year for Fort Benning students, who celebrated the holidays in various ways. See A-15, B-1 and B-3.

'I want one of my own'

'Social orphans' need resource families

Bridgett Siter

They say all hearts go home for Christmas. Not so. Miles and Kaleb once had a home of their own, but their hearts were never in it. They lived in squalor, in a damp, cold house that never was a home. They shared it with their mom and dad and a passel of brothers and sisters.

Miles says there were eight of them. Kaleb says there were nine.

"Remember, there was that newborn," the 12-year-old said to his brother, one year his senior, Wednesday afternoon as the two sat on the edge of the bed in the room they share at The Carpenter's Way Ranch in Fortson, Ga.

It wasn't all bad, Kaleb said of the house they lived in before the state took custody of him and his siblings.

"Me and Miles got lucky," he said. "We got a room without broken windows."

Kaleb and Miles dream of going home with a family for Christmas. Not the home they once knew, and not the

Trees for Troops delivers

As promised, Federal Express delivered.

More than 650 trees arrived at Fort Benning Friday, courtesy of Federal Express, the Christmas SPIRIT Foundation and tree farmers from 17 states.

Fort Benning was one of five installation to benefit from the Trees for Troops program, which supplied trees — free — to Soldiers and their families who might not otherwise have one.

"We had an overwhelming response from tree growers," said Steve Drake, the CEO of Christmas Spirit Foundation. "At each stop, we received more trees than had been promised to us. The response was great."

The Georgia Christmas Tree Association donated 250 Christmas trees to the cause. Coy Dillahunty, executive director, said that the Georgia tree farmers were very cooperative.

"Everywhere I stopped to pick up trees, I was asked if 'that was enough and did I need to take some more.'"

"I couldn't believe it when our (family readiness group) leaders said they were giving away free Christmas trees for Soldiers families," said Amy Barger whose husband Spc. Branden Barger is deployed with 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

"Anything to get us in the Christmas spirit while he's away.

"I think it's great."

Post officials stress safe travel

Roxanne McGaffigan
Bayonet staff

No one is ever safe enough. That is the message from post officials this holiday season, as Soldiers and families prepare for the holiday Exodus. Proper planning and common sense could make this season a happy and safe one.

"Our Soldiers, NCOs and officers define excellence and deserve to have the time of their lives. Planning is the key to success," said Command Sgt. Maj. Douglas Greenway, U.S. Army Infantry School.

Greenway said leaders need to make sure Soldiers have specifics on where they are going, accurate contact information and a return plan.

Col. David Ling, Fort Benning chief of staff, said motorcycles and POVs should be inspected. Leaders need to make sure Soldiers have insurance and a driver's license, and Soldiers need to make good choices, including getting rest, not drinking and driving and obeying driving laws. Careless driving kills Soldiers, Ling said.

Ling said Soldiers should also maintain their physical condition and return ready to train.

Greenway said with some planning and common sense, everyone should have a safe Exodus.

"Every soldier and his family is so very important to the Army," Greenway said.

Post agencies offer reintegration help

Families should anticipate, head off stress issues

Jennifer Gunn
USAIC Public Affairs

As more than 4,000 Fort Benning troops near the end of their supporting reconstruction efforts in Iraq, the folks back home are gearing up for a building project of their own: rebuilding their families.

In the coming weeks, families and friends of Soldiers in the 36th Engineer Group and 3rd Brigade Combat Team will welcome home their warriors with reintegration training from Army Community Service.

"Reunions can be stressful or they can be joyful," said Rebecca Welch, ACS Family Advocacy Program manager. Most homecomings, Welch said, will be a little of both. It's important to remember that when a Soldier comes home, things will not be the same as when he or she left.

"These spouses have been alone for a year, and in many cases they've had to be both mother and father to their children. It's tough," Welch said. Welch said returning Soldiers and their families may be overwhelmed with the changes that have taken place during the deployment. This is to be expected, she said, because change is inevitable when experiences are so vastly different.

"It'll be just like dating all over again," Welch said. "Couples will have to get to know each other again, and (there can be) tension."

To rebuild a relationship, Welch said, there has to be communication, and partners should avoid what she called "the blame game."

"Even though a community has good services, things can go wrong unless people reach out for help."

Rebecca Welch
Family Advocacy Program

"The Soldier has been fighting a war, and the spouse has been back here alone running the household. (Spouses) will use those factors against each other," she said. "It's hard on everyone; and everyone has made sacrifices. Coming forward for help is the first step in taking control of the situation."

Post agencies offer help. The Family Advocacy Program provides crisis intervention, respite care, parental stress relief program, victim advocacy, new parent support program, marriage retreats and educational materials. Other resources include a Financial Readiness Program, Army Emergency Relief, counseling by the Chaplaincy and Social Work Services.

"We are one big team here at Fort Benning, and we have a lot out there to help get our families through this transition," Welch said. "Even though a community has good services, things can go wrong unless people reach out for help."

Welch said family members and Soldiers can call for help 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Contact the helpline at 327-3999. For more information, call the Family Advocacy Program at 545-4013.

DEAR GOD,

Charlie's coming up, break out the peanut butter

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

"Butler was a dandy lad, full of zip and tobasco," — Ross S. Carter, author of Those Devils in Baggy Pants

We called him Charlie Butler every time. Never "Charlie" or "Butler." Always Charlie Butler.

"Here comes Charlie Butler."

"Hi, Charlie Butler."

"Good to see you, Charlie Butler."

I call it the Charlie Brown phenomenon. Nobody called Charlie Brown anything but Charlie Brown, except Peppermint Patti, who called him Charles. Charlie Butler's wife Reiko, and his sons, Rick and Michael, were the only ones who called him anything other than, well, you know.

Come to think of it, Charlie Butler had a lot in common with Charlie Brown. He was quite a character, brightened a lot of lives and offered profound — and not so profound — insights from time to time.

"How would you explain Santa to an alien?" I asked Charlie Butler last year, while interviewing him for a Christmas article.

"Aliens are so thick," he replied. "I wouldn't bother."

Monday we gathered at the Airborne Walk to say good-bye to Charlie Butler. That's the way he wanted it, because Charlie Butler lived and loved all things Airborne. He was a regular at Airborne graduations and reunions right up until his death, Dec. 8, just two weeks after he was diagnosed with cancer.

My co-worker said it best: Charlie filled in for a lot of dads who missed their sons' and daughters' graduations. He was always available to pin wings, take pictures and share stories from his his own days with the 82nd Airborne Division in World War II. Charlie Butler had a lot to offer young Soldiers.

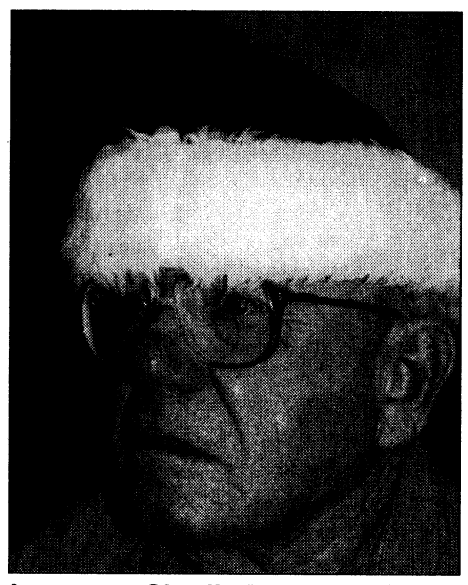
When he joined the Army in 1943, in what should have been his senior year of high school, all Charlie wanted was to be a good Soldier. The day the yearbook photographer took pictures of the Bessemer High School Class of 1944, Charlie was completing his last training jump at Fort Benning.

In no time at all, Charlie Butler, the newspaper delivery boy from Bessemer, Ala., became "Kid Butler," the newest and youngest member of C Company, 504th Parachute Regiment. Three months later, he jumped into Holland with "Those Devils in Baggy Pants."

He told me once he was "too young and naive" to be scared when C Company led an assault on the bridge at Nijmegen. The anti-aircraft rounds that whizzed over his head fascinated Charlie, who used to while away summer afternoons concocting recipes for homemade firecrackers.

The sky above Nijmegen lit up like the Fourth of July, and when Charlie raised his head to get a better view, he got hit with shrapnel above his left eye.

In an instant, Charlie Butler gained a Purple Heart and a healthy respect for combat. It served him well. Charlie went on to serve nearly 30 years, with multiple combat tours in Korea and Vietnam. He retired as a sergeant first class in 1973.



After his retirement, Charlie remained passionate about four things: his family, the Army, motorcycles and photography.

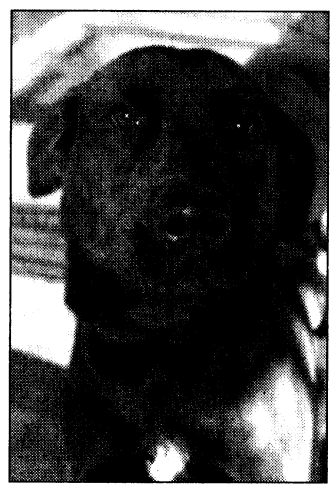
He was a regular at The Bayonet, where he contributed some of our favorite photographs. In fact, several of Charlie's photos have been used for post publications, including the classic "Ranger Memorial after dark" photo used on the cover of a Fort Benning directory some years ago.

Charlie stopped by The Bayonet every Friday after Airborne School graduation. He'd call on Thursdays to make sure we'd be in the office Friday afternoon. "I'm coming up," he'd say, "up" being the sixth floor of Infantry Hall, where our office is located. And up he'd come, without fail, every Friday, with stories to tell. Nobody could tell a story quite like Charlie. He typically started with, "One of my alleged girlfriends graduated from Airborne School today. Wanna see a picture?"

We were all his "alleged girlfriends." I was his alleged blonde girlfriend and Melissa was his alleged brunette girlfriend. He encouraged Lori to dye her hair, because he needed a red-headed girlfriend.

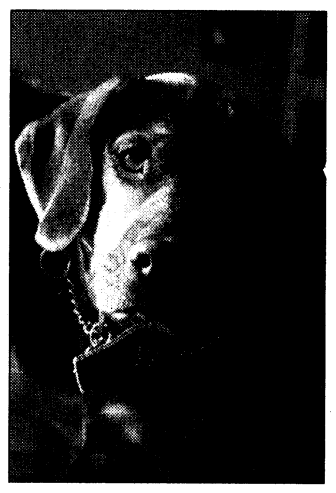
He loved us all, but he gave his heart, really and truly, to Reiko, his bride of 50 years. She stuck by his side through thick and thin — the "thin" being Vietnam, when Reiko held tight to a thin thread of hope, assuring her boys that daddy would soon be home, like all the other dads on the block. She kept her chin up when her youngest, Rick, bowed his head at the dinner table and asked God to keep his daddy safe "over there" and make sure he had plenty of peanut butter sandwiches. Charlie Butler loved peanut butter sandwiches almost as much as he loved jumping from airplanes. A good day included both.

Last year, Charlie Butler posed for a Christmas story in which I interviewed prospective Santas. "Why do you want to be Santa Claus?" I asked him. "Santa? I thought this was the line for Scrooge," he replied.



As I sat beside Charlie's bed at the hospice — God bless the Columbus Hospice — the words to an old Kathy Matea song kept running through my head: "Charlie's got a good wife. Charlie's had a good life." I couldn't say it better myself. Charlie Butler was a good man who led a very good life, and he leaves behind a good wife and a passel of friends who will miss him always.

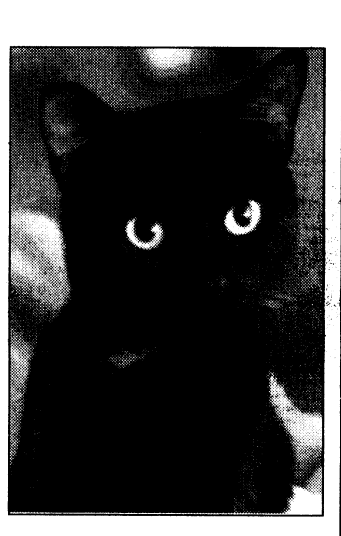
Great men, great heroes and truly great friends come along every now and then. Charlie Butler was t[illegible]ree, and there will never be another [illegible]n.



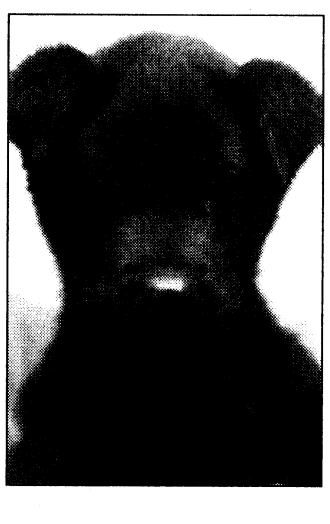
We missed Ch[illegible]ll last Thursday. I like to think of h[illegible]e line with God. "I'm coming up," h[illegible] "Got any peanut butter?"

VARIOUS VOICES

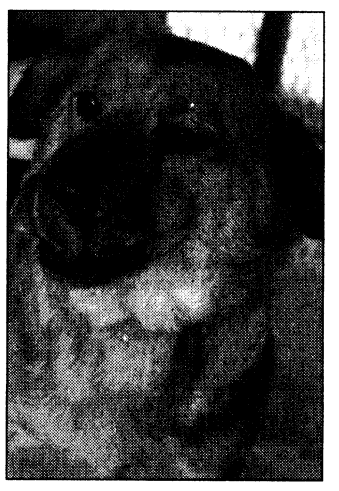
What do you want for Christmas?



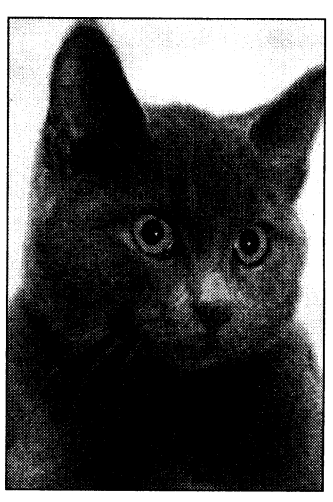
Single, sad, four-legged friend, resident of the Fort Benning Vet Clinic adoption center — "I'd dig a place of my own, a backyard with a tree maybe, a warm place to curl up each night. And a bone."



Woeful One in need of a name, resident of the Fort Benning Vet Clinic adoption center — "I want a real commitment, a relationship that will last a lifetime. I want someone to worship and adore. Someone to love me."



Misunderstood, resident of the Fort Benning Vet Clinic adoption center — "I want a traveling companion. I want to see the world. I dream of marking territory in Alaska and Germany. Or maybe Hawaii. I'd settle for Bragg or Campbell. I just want someone to take me with him."



Feline feeling lucky, resident of the Fort Benning Vet Clinic adoption center — "I want a litter box to call my own. I want a sunny windowsill to stretch out on, and a couple of people to own and ignore."

Cute Puppy Dog, answers to "here boy," resident of the Fort Benning Vet Clinic adoption center — "A family. That's all I want. Nothing else matters."

Doggie Doe, in touch with my tongue, resident of the Fort Benning Vet Clinic adoption center — "I want someone to love me and never leave me."

Kitty Cat Doe, low maintenance and cuddly, resident of the Fort Benning Vet Clinic adoption center — "I want someone to rub my belly every now and then. Is that too much to ask?"

On shoebox treasures and precious memories

Monica Manganaro
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Recently, while moving, I came across a big cardboard box I knew I hadn't packed. Curious to see what it held, I pulled the tape and discovered it was a box my mom sent me a few years after my college graduation. In it were items I had long outgrown and left behind when I went off to school. Not one to keep clutter, my mom packed it up and shipped it off to me. I had forgotten all about it.

Among some worn and faded stuffed animals, whose names I still remember, I discovered my shoebox. A shoebox filled with childhood memories and the keepsakes that were once my treasures.

In the first moments of holding my shoebox, it dawned on me that my mother is so clever. She was an Army brat, so packing and moving on short notice came naturally. She had a knack for efficiency and tried as she could to pass that gene to her children. So as an Army brat, I too learned that there wasn't room for clutter, and knickknacks were collected sparingly. By my senior year of high school, we had moved 13 times.

Early on, my mother introduced the shoebox. My brothers and I could take as many treasures as we wanted, as long as they fit in the shoebox. That's not to say we didn't get to pack toys or games. It was merely her way of keeping clutter to a minimum. As time drew closer to moving day, I would deliberate over which treasures to take and which to leave behind.

Some treasures always went back into the shoebox, and some weren't that precious. I laughed when I discovered my Brownie beanie. It looked brand new, but it didn't fit like it used to. Way too small. Next, I unpacked a pair of red fuzzy dice — the kind that dangle from a rearview mirror. My dice never "dangled." Mom and Dad never saw the need to buy me a car during those years, and when I finally got one, I had long forgotten the fuzzy dice.

I laughed as I pulled out my "fire escape." That's what I called it anyway. Sometime around 8 or 9, I decided that if my brothers and I were ever to escape a fire, we'd need a plan. I had the plan, and I had the fire escape, a device comprised of a wooden spool with four nails hammered into one end. Around the nails, I spun yarn into a "rope" of sorts, which I drew through the hole of the spool. As I wove, the rope grew longer, creating what I called "the fire escape." Fortunately, we never had to test it, but I obviously thought enough of it to cherish it as a keepsake in my shoebox.

As I held my childhood treasures, it occurred to me that these were the things that once mattered the most to me. I found comfort in that. As you go through this season, count your blessings, take time to reflect on your real treasures and only fill your shoeboxes with that which matters.

General speaks to ITB Soldiers, families

Lt. Gen. Robert T. Clark delivers remarks at a three-company graduation ceremony Friday at Kanell Field.

Former DCG praises new Army 'varsity'

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Sand Hill Soldiers from three Infantry Training Brigade companies, and their families and friends heard "three-star words" during their ceremony Dec. 9 on Kanell Field.

Lt. Gen. Robert T. Clark, commanding general of the 5th U.S. Army, San Antonio, Texas, visited Fort Benning and gave the graduation remarks for B Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, and D and F Companies, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

Clark served as a rifle platoon leader and company executive officer in Vietnam with the 1st Cavalry Division and was a brigade commander in the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) during operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Lt. Col. Ricardo Mitchell, commander of 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, who served with Clark in Texas, introduced him as "a mentor, coach and a Soldier who lives by the Army values."

Clark said he's participated in many graduations and has always walked away inspired by the transformation that takes place during basic training.

"You have been taught the Army values and the Soldiers Creed," Clark said. "You are not the same person you were fourteen weeks ago. You are an Infantryman and as such ... you will become a starter on America's varsity."

He said as members of the "pre-eminent land force in the world," the newest Infantrymen would become the "face of America," representing the country wherever they serve. And in their units, they will see how the rest of the Army lines up to support them in their efforts.

Once they arrive at their units, Clark said they would all soon experience the busy pace of an Army engaged in fighting the Global War on terrorism and complete even more training.

As members of the varsity, the Soldiers will learn they have joined a huge team and that teamwork is the order of the day, he said.

"This is your generation's moment in history and I can tell you that your generation takes a backseat to no one," Clark said. "What your generation is doing today will have a profound effect on world history.

"So today, we honor you. We honor you for your courage and thank you for your commitment to service."

Clark thanked the friends and family members in the audience for supporting their Soldiers and wanted all the mothers to know an important fact.

"Every day, without fail, for fourteen weeks — for more than 100 consecutive days — your Soldier has made his bed," Clark said.

And to the new Infantrymen he said, "Thanks and good luck."

Retired Chief Warrant Officer James Torney and his son, Chief Warrant Officer Gabriel Torney sat in the reviewing stand to see Pvt. Vincent Torney, a member of the New York Army National Guard's 69th Infantry Regt.

"It's amazing," James said, "and beautiful to see him so proud (of becoming an Infantryman."

Although James and Gabriel both sported the distinctive black Stetsons worn by members of the cavalry, they said there was no pressure on Vincent to become cavalry.

"He said if he's going to go Army, he's going Army all the way," Gabriel said of his older brother. "He's going Infantry."

James retired after 27 years in the Army and Gabriel has seven years under his belt. Gabriel was home on convalescent leave from the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regt., assigned to Fort Carson, Colo.

And military service runs in the family, said mom, Gloria, whose father served in the Army in World War II.

"I'm really, really proud of these guys," she said.

Emerging technology experimentation continues

Tracy A. Bailey
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Soldiers of A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, continue to experiment with 41 emerging technologies.

One such technology is the Lynchbot Unmanned Ground Vehicle — a four-wheel, camera-mounted remote controlled vehicle. The Lynchbot is able to transmit images to a display screen that the Soldier holds in his hands and the Soldier controls the Lynchbot the same way you would a remote control car.

This type of technology just might save a Soldier's life.

"The bot is currently being used in theater operations," said Spc. Charles McDevitt, A Co., 1st Bn. 29th Inf. Regt. "It can be used to search out IEDs from a safe distance without having to send a Soldier to check it out."

The Soldier can interpret the information received through the video image and determine if the unidentified item warrants further investigation, McDevitt said.

Gen. William S. Wallace, commander of Training and Doctrine Command, was on hand to view the new technologies.

"If it were not for experimental venues like this, we would not be able to develop the technology as rapidly as we can and get it into the hands of our Soldiers," Wallace said. "The value of these experiments is to be able to determine what is immediately available and what needs a little bit more work, and to move this stuff as quickly as we can into the hands of the Soldier on the battlefield.

"Some of these technologies allow us to observe what the bad guys are doing on a day-to-day basis, and see what patterns are developing in their ways of operating, so we can develop techniques to counter those activities in advance," Wallace said.

Another reconnaissance and surveillance tool is the tactical mini-air vehicle, a small, unmanned aerial vehicle.

Its mission is to carry a camera to allow Soldiers in the field to see over ridges or around corners in an urban environment. The TACMAV carries two video cameras and can be monitored from a laptop computer. It transmits live video images, compass headings and grid location information to the ground control unit.

"An individual Soldier can operate this by himself at the squad level," said Spc. Robert Vanvarick, A Co., 1st Bn., 20th Inf. Regt. "Normally we would not have a UAV (unmanned aerial vehicle) fly over an area, and this equipment extends our line of sight."

"All of these experiments, as they come together, ultimately save our Soldiers' lives," Wallace said.

Boys: Seeking resource families to call their own family they shared it with. That's out of the question, Miles said.

"They lost their parental rights," he said matter of factly. "They don't talk to us any more."

Miles and Kaleb and their older brother Kyle are among the 17 boys who live at The Carpenter's Way Ranch year-round. Though they go to public schools in Harris County, they eat, sleep and play at the facility, a Christian "boys' home" founded 12 years ago by Columbus City councilman Glenn Davis and his wife Teresa.

The boys are mostly "social orphans," meaning their parents are in prison or lost their parental rights, though some are orphans in the traditional sense of the word. Still, ranch officials constantly wrestle with public misconceptions about the facility, said Bob Lynch, the executive director.

"People hear 'boys' home,' and they think the worst," he said. "None of our boys have been placed here because of issues with the juvenile courts. They're here because they've been abandoned, neglected or abused."

The misconceptions about the boys are unfortunate most of the year, but they can be devastating at Christmastime, when the boys, like Kaleb and Miles, dream of sharing Christmas with a family.

Through a program called "resource families," Lynch pairs his boys with local families who volunteer to take the boys for an occasional evening or weekend throughout the year. There's a constant turnover of resource families, so ranch residents are often left without a family.

They deal with it fairly well, Lynch said, but at Christmastime, the "deal" is a little harder to swallow.

"I'd like a resource family, if they'd be nice to me," said 10-year-old Mykell, who lived in several foster homes before being transferred to the ranch three months ago.

He likes it there, and the staff is nicer than some of the people he stayed with before, Mykell said.

> "A really good Christmas would be driving around on Christmas Eve and looking at lights and talking to your family. Then you'd get up real early on Christmas and wake everybody up and have a big breakfast. It makes you feel like you have a home, you know?"
> Bop
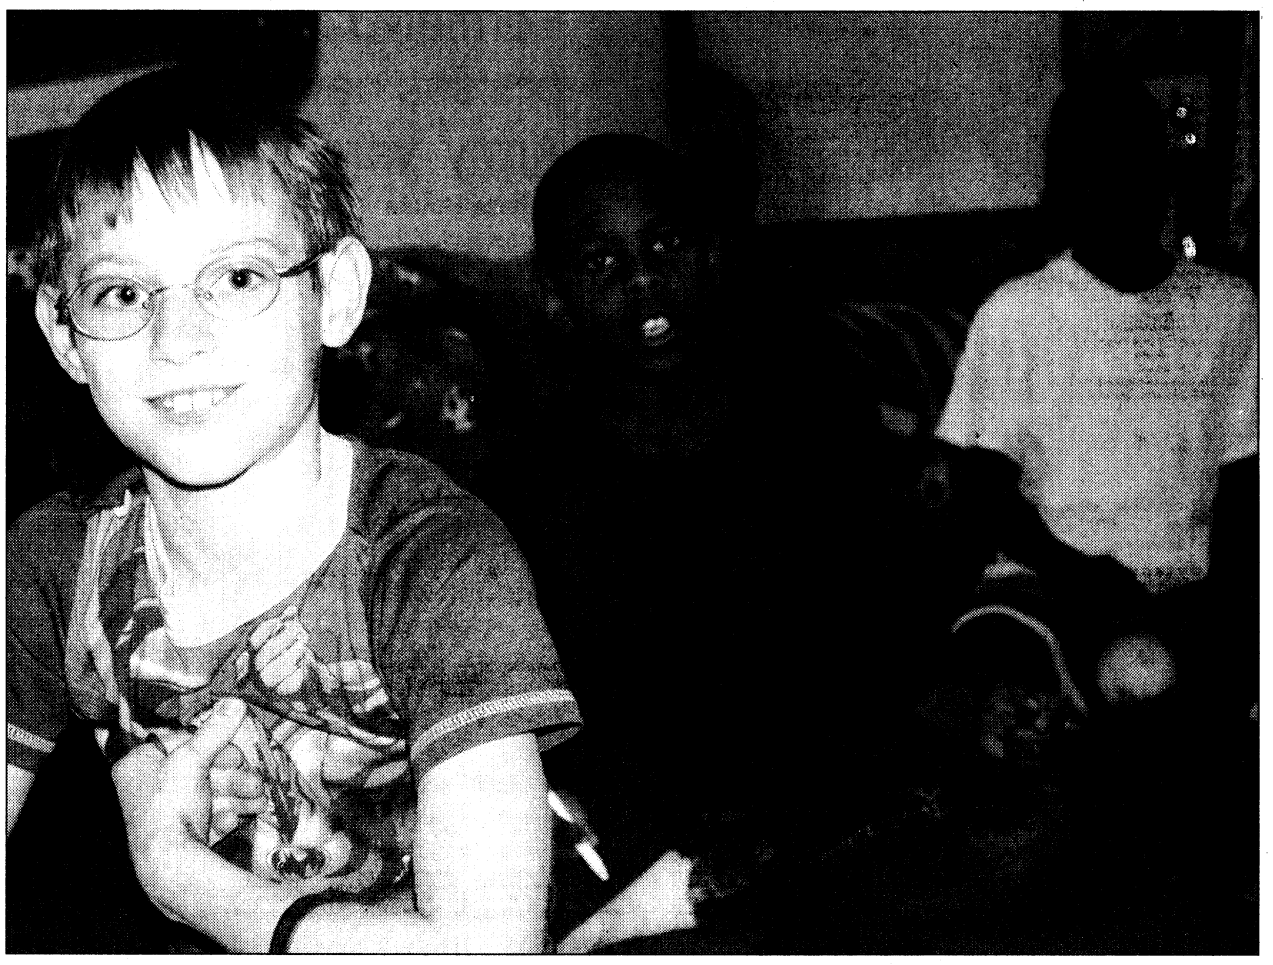
> A 10-year-old resident of The Carpenter's Way Ranch

"If I don't get a (family), I'll be fine," he said. "But if they came on Christmas Day, I would be very happy."

What kind of resource family would Mykell like?



"They just have to like me," he said. "That would be a good present."

Bop is 10 years old like his friend, Mykell. Wednesday, as they sprawled on the floor of the room Bop shares with his 11-year-old brother, Dion, they decorated the brown paper lunch bags they'll use to wrap their teachers' Christmas presents in.

When the conversation turned to presents, Bop — whose real name is Orlandenez, and "that's why they call me Bop" — was quick to point out that purchasing the boys Christmas presents is not a requirement for potential resource families.

"People bring us presents here. We'll get presents," he said. "There is other stuff more important than presents. Like God."

In fact, when Bop describes his idea of an ideal Christmas, there's no mention of toys or games or gifts of any kind.

Bridgett Siter

Mykell, Bop and Dion are among the 17 boys between 9 and 18 who live at The Carpenter's Way Ranch in Fortson, Ga. Bop and Dion are brothers. They've been residents at the ranch for six years. Mykell moved in three months ago. There are three group homes at the ranch, each with house parents who live on site, but the ranch employs a "Resource Family" program, so the boys can experience traditional family life during outside visits.

"A really good Christmas would be driving around on Christmas Eve and looking at lights and talking to your family," he said. "Then you'd get up real early on Christmas and wake everybody up and have a big breakfast. It makes you feel like you have a home, you know?"

Lynch said resource families are not required to spend money on "their boy." And if they can only give one or two nights a month, that's OK, too. It's about quality, not quantity.

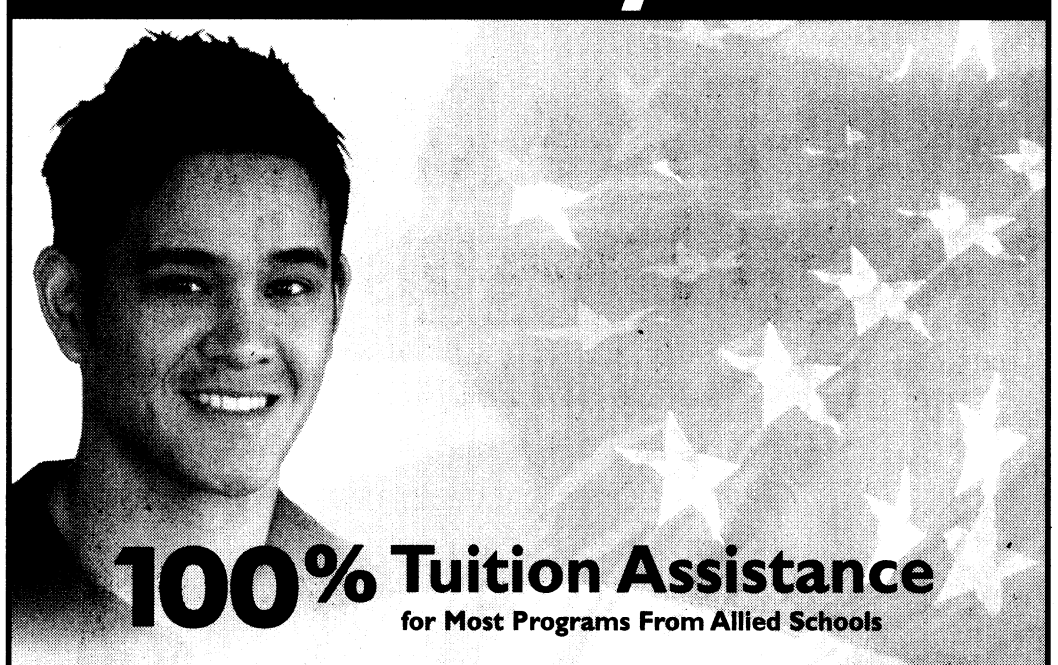
"The bigger the circle of people who care about these boys, the more it reinforces the values that are important to all of us," he said.

Miles, who figures he lived in about 17 foster homes before coming to the ranch 18 months ago, used to share a resource family with his older brother. He's hoping for another soon. As for Kaleb:

"I ain't ever had one," he said. "My brothers did. They used to go places with their family on the weekends, huntin' and stuff. I want one of my own. I've been wanting one since I got here."

Lynch said military families are often a "good fit" as resource families, because they understand the difficulties the boys face with so many relocations under their belts at such a young age. They also tend to be "family oriented" and enjoy the kinds of wholesome activities the boys benefit from.

And like Miles and Kaleb, military families know how it feels to be separated from their families at Christmas, to look forward to a new home and new people to love.



"I don't miss that house," Kaleb said.

"I don't even think about it much anymore," Miles said.

Anyone interested in making Miles' and Kaleb's dream of having a home for Christmas can call 322-5406 to apply.

It's not a long or complicated process, Lynch said. At this time of year, when the need is greatest, the application process is often expedited to get the boys acquainted with their "new families" before Christmas.

Medal of Honor recipient addresses post Soldiers

Shares thoughts, reading list

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning filled Marshall Auditorium for the monthly Combat Leader Speaker Program presentation Tuesday.

The guest speaker was retired Lt. Gen. Robert Foley, whose actions in Vietnam as a young company commander earned him the Medal of Honor.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski introduced Foley.

"It is said that heroes are people who do what has to be done, when it has to be done, regardless of the consequences," Wojdakowski said. "We have a hero here today, who served his country for more than 37 years."

Foley currently serves as the director of Army Emergency Relief Services, where "he continues to take care of Soldiers and their families," he said.

Foley began his remarks thanking the Soldiers in the audience for what they do for the nation daily.

"I admire you for your service," Foley said. "We need you to step up to the plate."

He said there have been tremendous technological advances since he was commissioned in 1963.

"But as we look at the changes," he said, "it is important to look at what has not changed. The mission of our Army is still to fight and win our nation's wars."

Soldiers' oaths of office and oaths of re-enlistment also haven't changed, he said. Those oaths are not to defend our country, but to support and defend the Constitution, and in turn, support and defend freedom and democracy.

"We have to do what's right for the American people," he said. "We all want to do the right thing, but determining what that is is sometimes difficult."

Soldiers and leaders can find help in the seven Army values — loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity, and personal courage.

"It's not important to be able to rattle them off," Foley said. "What's important is that those values are inculcated in us as leaders. If we're going to be leaders of character, we have to inculcate those values. If we understand that character in peacetime translates into courage in times of war, then those seven Army values are very important."

Foley offered his three-step process for doing the right thing:

1. Recognizing when you are confronted with a moral or ethical dilemma.

2. Selecting the right course of action.

3. Having the moral courage to do the right thing — sometimes the difficult step.

"Sometimes doing the right thing has consequences that may impact you, your fellow Soldiers, family, friends or the Army," Foley said. "But if you have reinforced a strong set of professional ethics, it's going to be easier to make that decision."

He recommended leaders reinforce the values through their professional reading, where they, like he, could read about others' dilemmas and gain knowledge about what transpired when people ran into difficult situations.

Foley recounted the story of Col. Joshua Chamberlain and his action on July 3, 1863, on Little Round Top, where he gave the command for his Soldiers "to refuse the line" and sidestep to the left.

"That prevented the Union flank from being turned," Foley said. "Why? Because Chamberlain knew when he said it, his Soldiers would do it and he trusted them to do it, and his Soldiers knew if he said it, it was the right thing to do."

Chamberlain later accepted the Confederate surrender. His units stood at attention, in absolute silence, then saluted.

"That simple act began healing the wounds of a very divided nation," he said, "and showed the impact of values on the course of events."

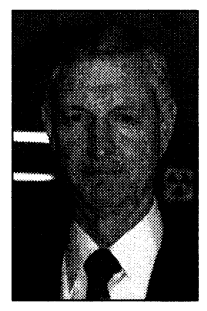
He said leaders also needed to be able to tell their superiors "no, I can't do it."

He faced a dilemma as a brigade commander in Germany, where the division commander wanted to swim Bradleys across a river that was almost at flood stage. He said he stood up, dropped his maps and said there was a good possibility they would kill Soldiers if they proceeded.

"He was angry with me," Foley said. The next day he had to brief the Corps commander, who agreed with Foley's assessment.

"One thing we need to do is trust the judgement of commanders on the ground," he said. "It was the right thing to do. It never crossed my mind to do anything else. Sometimes these decisions have to be made pretty quickly.

"This is not just about your values, but it's the inculcation of the values in your organization — enforcing standards and talking to your Soldiers about the standards."



He said as the Global War on Terrorism continues, the trust and cohesion in a unit, and the seven Army values, are what they will fight with in the future.

"Our Soldiers are on point and making judgements," he said, "and waiting to inculcate the values after deploying is too late.

"And what is it that makes these Soldiers do what they have to do on the battlefield? Training? Leadership? Discipline?

"I found the most powerful thing is the intense regard Soldiers have for their fellow Soldiers. If you want to have an effective fighting force, inject a lot of respect."

Foley's recommended reading list

Killer Angels, by Michael Shaara — "You can get into the minds of Lee, Longstreet and Chamberlain and the thought process of fighting brother against brother."

The Founding Fathers on Leadership: Classic Teamwork in Changing Times, by Donald T. Phillips — "Terrific gentlemen who used their values to give birth to this nation. Read about how Washington, in the winter of 1777 convinced people to leave their shops, farms and families and go to Valley Forge. Many didn't survive that winter, yet many kept coming. Historians say that was the turning point of the American Revolution. How did Washington ensure inculcation of values?"

Five Point Play, by Mike Krzyzewski — "He's a man who knows a lot about leading, leadership and values that helped Duke win the 2001 National Championship. He talks about when his players cross the 'line of departure,' he's empowering them. His 'fist' concept — pride, trust, caring collective responsibility and communication. And when all five are manifested, his team can really take an opponent to task."

The Agony and the Ecstasy: A biographical novel of Michaelangelo, by Irving Stone. "A man who tried to be loyal to four popes and remain loyal to the tremendous works of art he left. Talk about selfless service — he spent so much time lying on his back painting the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, he almost went blind from the paint pouring into his eyes.

A wannabe Santa observes a hand-to-hand combat demonstration Monday. The need for hands-on combat training became evident 136 years ago, when Santa Claus was forced to wrestle a polar bear on the runway of the Reindeer Launching and Farrier Facility.

Santa trainees practiced risk avoidance and hostility detection Wednesday on McKenna MOUT. Occasionally, Santa Claus encounters angry unbelievers in combat areas around the world. He can usually appease them with candy.

"We certainly don't foresee a problem this year. We put our candidates through this kind of training as a preventive measure, that's all. Mr. Claus is very mission-focused, and he works very hard to circumvent any potential delays."

Santa trainees vie for support team rookie positions

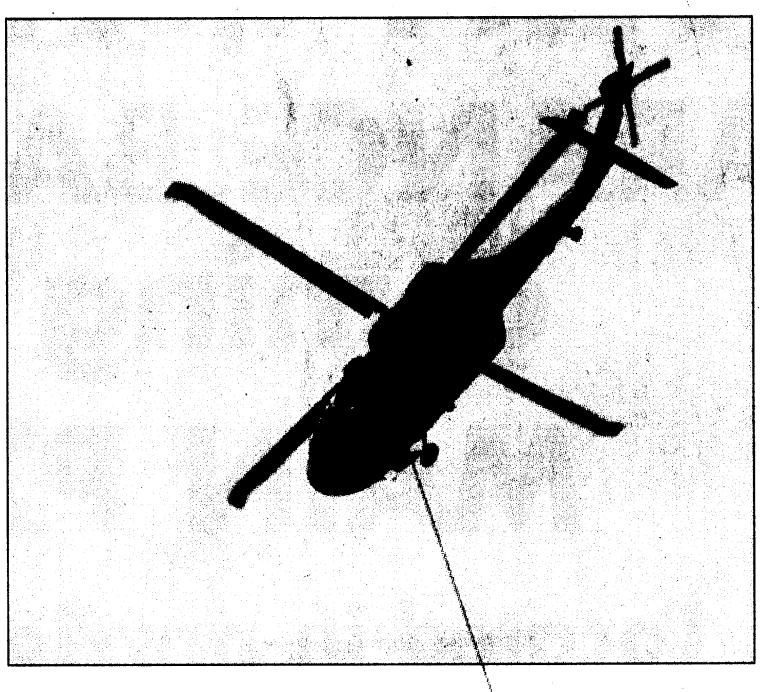
Wannabe Santas spent the better part of this week training with Fort Benning Soldiers in hopes of qualifying for one of 25 coveted understudy slots on the Santa Claus Support Team.

If selected, the Santas will fill in for the veteran street Santas who fill in for Claus during the week prior to Christmas. That's when Claus goes into seclusion to prepare for his primary mission, the Dec. 25 delivery of toys to more than 2.5 zillion good boys and girls around the world.

It takes approximately 340 street Santas to fill Claus' role from Dec. 17 until Dec. 23. All street Santas are required by contract to leave their stations before the close of business Dec. 23, but each year, SCS Team officials said, a number of rogue Santas refuse to turn in their fuzzy red uniforms to the Santa Uniform Distribution Center by the 10 a.m. Dec. 24 deadline.

"It's a power play, nothing more," said an unidentified team official. "We can train and train and train physically, and we can require them to know the Santa Claus Uniform Code of Conduct forward and backward, but in the end, they are merely human, and the temptation, the desire to be Santa can override common sense and good will. I'm sure Superman has this problem, too."

Renegade Santas lose their slots on the SCS Team. They're replaced by understudies who can earn a permanent position if they meet height, weight and moral standards after a designated trial period.



That's what brought the prospective Santas to Fort Benning, where they practiced the fast rope, insertion and extraction, hand-to-hand combat and stealth movement techniques they'll need should they be called in to assist Claus on D Day — Delivery Day.

Only three times in the last 1,200 years has Claus required assistance; once when he was detained in France during World War II, once when he was accosted by a polar bear en route to the Reindeer Launching and Farrier Facility just south of the North Pole, and once, sometime in the Dark Ages, when a freakishly untimely lunar eclipse caused Rudolph's internal compass to malfunction.

In each case, Claus called in the most experienced members of his SCS Team to make up for lost time.

"We certainly don't foresee a problem this year," the North Pole officials said. "We put our candidates through this kind of training as a preventive measure, that's all. Mr. Claus is very mission-focused, and he works very hard to circumvent any potential delays."

No word yet if the Fort Benning trainees will get a shot at the SCS Team this year.

Santa trainees learned insertion and extraction techniques at the 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga., Tuesday. Hordes of locals showed up to watch the training. It's rare that a SCS Team member is required to put his insertion or extraction knowledge to work, but should Santa Claus be delayed or incapacitated, the subordinate Clauses will breach homes in this manner.

The low crawl techniques the prospective Santas practiced this week will come in handy should they be detected during delivery operations. Stealth movement is crucial to the success of the SCS Team, a spokesman said.

Iraqi soldiers exercise right to vote

Courtesy photo

Iraqi soldiers of the 2nd Brigade, 6th Division, wait in line to cast their ballots during early voting at a polling station Monday. More than 5,000 Iraqi Army soldiers, Iraqi Security Forces and polling station workers in east Baghdad districts voted in advance of Thursday's elections.

Sgt. Matthew Wester
Army News Service

TAJI, Iraq — Iraqi soldiers northwest of Baghdad voted Monday before the country's national elections, freeing them for duty Thursday.

Soldiers had been working to make polling sites throughout the area secure prior to election day. On Monday, thousands went to the polls themselves and voted at a site in Assariya village, near Camp Taji, north of Baghdad.

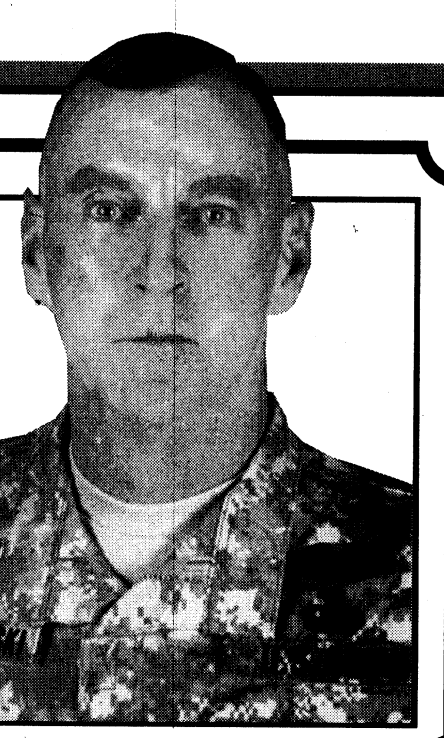
"I am very glad. This is good for all Iraqis, not just for us," said Pvt. Zaheer, an infantryman with 9th Iraqi Army Mechanized Division.

This is the third time in a year Iraqis have participated in democratic elections, after the success of the interim government elections in January and the Constitutional Referendum in October.

The Iraqi soldiers formed long columns and marched to the polls. Other IA soldiers guarded the Assariya site.

"The Iraqi Security Forces vote early so they can do their job on election day, which is primarily to provide security for the citizens of Iraq, so that they have an opportunity to vote in a safe environment," said Capt. Richard Hicks, a team leader for A Company, 490th Civil Affairs Battalion. His team works with the citizens of the area to improve infrastructure and quality of life.

"The Iraqi Security Forces are the lead element in providing this security. They are the ones people see at the polling sites," Hicks said. "It's a further demonstration of their ability to take the lead as they will guide their country following the election."



The Soldiers took charge of security during the recent referendum vote and were successful at curbing attacks and ensuring citizens made it to the polls safely.

After voting, some troops danced and sang patriotic songs. One Soldier led his comrades in a chant extolling the virtues of their favorite candidates.

"It really means a lot to see how much enthusiasm they have," Hicks said. "It's just a very warming experience to share that with them here and see democracy in action."

"I hope for democracy and security for this country," Zaheer said as he headed to the polls to cast his vote.

LOADED 45

"Loaded 45" is the term we use to describe the period between Nov. 20 and Jan. 3, when the risk of automobile accidents is the greatest. Our Soldiers, employees and their families will travel many miles to be with loved ones this holiday season. We're concerned for their safety. Our most effective weapon against traffic accidents is our emphasis on safety. Commanders and directors must stress the need for drivers to be sober, well rested and alert at all times. Obey the speed limit, and reduce your speed during inclement weather. And wear your seatbelt!

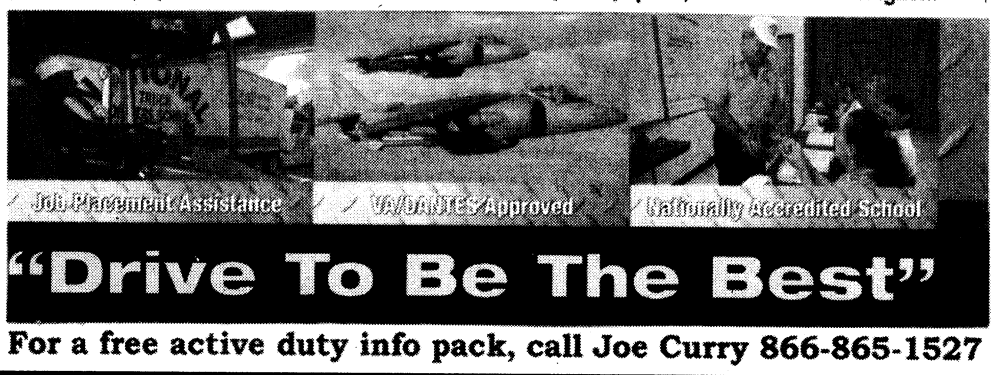
ROCK SOLID BACKUP

WWW.TRUCKSCHOOL.COM WWW.EARTHMOVERSCHOOL.COM

Rock solid backup jobs offer a financial failsafe for families separating from the military without a job, marketable skills, a college degree, or funds to cover unemployment periods. Many veterans leave active duty without a backup plan. I know because I ask them as they attend my briefs every week. Hundreds call me within 24 months of leaving the military mainly because things did not go the way they thought. Prior-Planning-Prevents-Poor-Performance is what helped me survive twenty -one years on active duty. Stuff happens! Be prepared! Men and women can learn to operate semi tractor-trailers, heavy equipment, secure a CDL, and receive job placement assistance before ETS/ DOS/EAOS. There are shortages in the transportation and construction industry and I can assist those needing to secure access to these rock-solid jobs. The commercial driver's license is powerful in the hands of the average inexperienced but qualified operator. *License and certification required.

The benefits of training and graduating from National Training:



. Free job placement assistance and refresher training . Nationally accredited truck driver and H.E. operator training . Learn laser technology, surveying, and construction drawings . Three courses: Basic Truck Driver / Owner-Operator / Heavy Equipment . Two Training Phases; Home Study and Residence Training . Home study allows more rubber-to-pavement time . Graduate on Friday and start working Monday . A CDL in your wallet or purse allows you to get a job anytime . Active duty personnel receive no cost lodging while attending the Heavy Equipment or Truck Driver course

NTI Courses are approved in Fiscal Year 2006 for: Base Education Up-Front Tuition, MGIB, DANTES Tuition Reimbursement, "Top-Up" (Active duty TA and MGIB Combo), and Vocational Rehabilitation
Complete phase-1 home-study lessons now and engage phase-2during terminal leave.

Expense Average: CDL permit $10. Commercial Driver's License $50. Drug test is $50. Fast food $12 daily. Enrollment fees are $50. At graduation, present a receipt from other hotels and receive a seven day rebate. Camp Blanding is 16 miles away with a guesthouse.

* Hazardous material handlers will submit to a background check and fingerprinting.

Requirements...CDL Truck: Must be 21, have a CDL permit, a copy of your motor vehicle record, and pass a "Department of Transportation" physical. Heavy Equipment Operators: Must be 18 and pass a DOT physical. All students must be able to read, write, speak, and understand English.

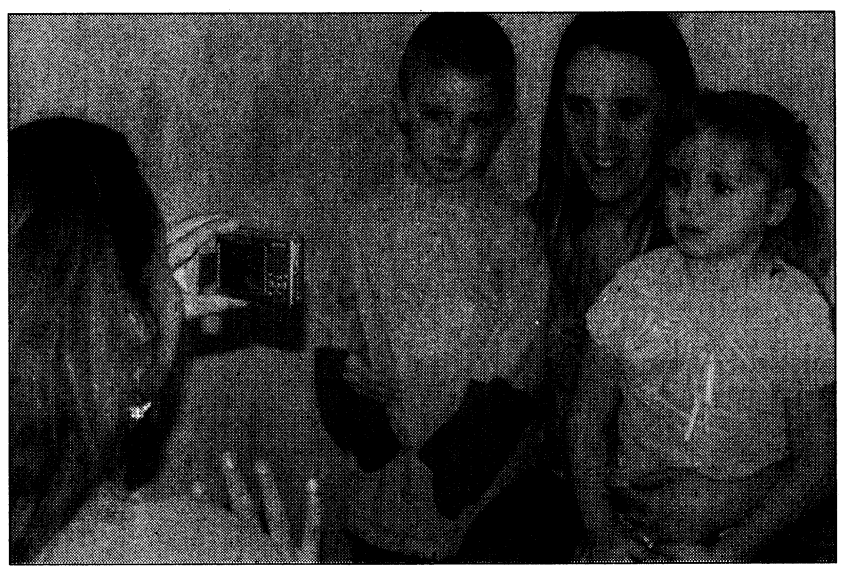
Snowflakes and yellow ribbons



Jacob Richardson, 5, hugs his mother, Stacy Richardson, after filming a video message for his father, who is serving in Iraq. In the background is a Christmas tree decorated with yellow ribbons. Jacob and his classmates at Loyd Elementary School spent the afternoon Wednesday creating messages, Christmas cards, and snowflakes in their Snowflakes and Yellow Ribbons celebration.

Hugs from home

Loyd Elementary School hosted Snowflakes and Yellow Ribbons Wednesday to help the students cope with the absence of their deployed parents during the holidays. The event included various activities, including video messaging, creating snowflakes, and designing Christmas cards to send to Iraq. The students also signed a banner for the 203rd Forward Support Battalion, which is scheduled to return in January. Afterward, the students rang in the New Year early with music, refreshments and a performance by the Loydettes.

When teaching Catholicism was outlawed in 16th-century England, clerics composed "silly" poems that actually veiled the teaching of church tenets. The most famous example was The Twelve Days of Christmas. The 12 days represent the traditional celebration of Christmas from Dec. 25 — Jan. 5. Each "gift" was a coded symbol of faith. For example, the partridge represents Christ. The mother partridge is the only bird that will die for its young.

Residents reminded to sign leases

Dec. 31 completion deadline fast approaching

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

As the year draws to an end, post officials want to remind housing residents of the requirement to sign leases.

Lease-signing with Pinnacle began Oct. 31, and officials expected to have the mission accomplished by Dec. 2, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

"But we're only about 70 percent through," Walls said, "so we're working closely with commanders and command sergeants major in following up with the remaining 30 percent."

The reality, Walls said, is that the remaining leases need to be signed by Jan. 1, when ownership of post houses transfers from the Army to the Clark Pinnacle team as part of the Residential Communities Initiative.

Part of the lease-signing process includes completing the paperwork for an allotment of the Soldiers' Basic Allowance for Housing to Pinnacle as the rent payment for the quarters.

That payment, Walls said, represents some of the money Clark Pinnacle will use over the next few years to replace 75 percent of the existing housing and renovate the rest.

Those Soldiers or spouses of deployed Soldiers who haven't signed the leases, can do so at Pinnacle's office in Building 280, near the intersection of Transportation and Edwards streets from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday to Friday through Dec. 31, with the exception of Dec. 26, when the office will be closed.

"They're especially sensitive about spouses of deployed Soldiers," Walls said, "and they'll guide you through the process and address any unusual circumstances.

"Don't ignore it," he said. "They're a private company with a vested interest in the community. Let them know your situation and they can help you."

And help is exactly what Terri Bond, director of housing for Pinnacle, wants to do.

"We will do whatever is convenient," Bond said. "If they want us to come to them, we'll do that."

Bond said the process typically takes 20 to 30 minutes, depending on any questions that arise. The Soldier must bring a copy of his or her Leave and Earnings Statement, and a spouse signing a lease must also bring a special or general power of attorney.

The leases go into effect Jan. 1 for a six-month period, Bond said. After that, they automatically become month-to-month leases. Soldiers with PCS orders will be released from the lease as long as they provide Pinnacle with a copy of the orders at least 30 days in advance.

As of Tuesday, nearly 1,800 Soldiers had signed the leases, including Commanding General Maj. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, and Garrison Commander Col. Rick Riera, but there were still nearly 800 who had not.

"If there's a reason they can't come (to the office), call us and schedule something so we can make this happen," Bond said.

"We'll walk them through all of it. Anything they're not comfortable with, we'll get them there."

Both Bond and Walls are excited about what will happen as a result of the RCI partnership. Walls said his enthusiasm was reinforced after talking with residents of other installations, like Fort Bragg, N.C., where RCI is already up and running.

"It's a good thing," Walls said. "The whole quality of life goes up."

Although residents will not immediately see new housing, Bond said, they will see Pinnacle's excellent standard of service and improvements to the leasing center in Building 6. And every family will be taken to see their home, rather than being handed the keys.

"It's so refreshing to be able to make some changes for the Soldiers," she said. "We're so excited for the takeover."

Bond said she plans to be in her office Jan. 1 — even though it's a Sunday.

"It's our first big day," she said.

"I'm going to make sure everything is up and running."

For information, call Bond at 545-8172.

More than 75 students from the Desire Street Academy, who relocated from New Orleans to Camp Timpoochee in Niceville, Fla., experienced what the Army Rangers from the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Eglin Air Force Base do day-in and day-out Dec. 1.

Retired Brig. Gen. Mike Ferguson, the civilian aide to the secretary of the Army and a former Airborne Ranger, is a friend of Danny Wuerfful, vice president of the academy and former quarterback for the New Orleans Saints.

When Ferguson learned that Katrina displaced the academy, he organized a field trip for the students. The Rangers brought out their equipment for interactive displays with reptiles, weapons, diving equipment, and Zodiac boats.

Helpful hints keep pets safe at holiday season

Dana Farbman
ASPCA Animal Poison Control Center

The holidays can be a wonderful time of year. But for our four-legged, furry friends, all the extra food, chocolate, decorations and flowers means even more for them to get their noses into, and some can be very dangerous to their health.

Here are some helpful hints to keep pets happy and healthy during the holiday season:

• Holiday sweets with chocolate are not for pets. Depending on the dose ingested, chocolate (bakers, semisweet, milk and dark) can be potentially poisonous to many animals. Unsweetened baking chocolate contains almost seven times more theobromine as milk chocolate.

Vomiting, diarrhea, seizures, hyperactivity and increased thirst, urination and heart rate can be seen with the ingestion of as little as one-quarter ounce of baking chocolate by a 10-pound dog.

• Keep your pet on its normal diet. Any change of diet, even for one meal, may give your dog or cat severe indigestion and diarrhea. This is particularly true for older animals that have more delicate digestive systems and nutritional requirements.

• Don't give pets holiday leftovers and keep pets out of the garbage. Poultry bones can splinter and cause blockages.

Greasy, spicy and fatty foods can cause stomach upset; spoiled or moldy foods could cause food poisoning signs, tremors or seizures.

• Alcohol and pets do not mix. Place unattended drinks where pets cannot reach them. If ingested, the animal could become very sick and weak and may go into a coma, possibly resulting in death from respiratory failure.

• Keep aluminum foil and cellophane candy wrappers away from pets. They can cause vomiting and intestinal blockage.

• Be careful with holiday floral arrangements. Lilies are commonly used this time of year and all varieties, including tiger, Asian, Japanese show, stargazer and Casa Blanca, can cause kidney failure in cats.

Safe alternatives can include artificial flowers made from silk or plastic.

• Common yuletide plants such as mistletoe and holly berries can be potentially toxic to pets.

Should a cat or dog eat mistletoe, they could possibly suffer gastrointestinal upset and cardiovascular problems. Holly can cause vomiting, nausea, diarrhea and lethargy if ingested.

• Poinsettias are considered to be very low in toxicity. However, they could cause mild vomiting or nausea if ingested by your pet.

• Keep pets away from Christmas tree water. The water may contain fertilizers, which if ingested, can cause stomach upset. Stagnant tree water can also act as a breeding ground for bacteria and if ingested, a pet could end up with nausea, vomiting and diarrhea.

• Consider decorating your tree with ornaments that are relatively less enticing to pets. Traditional decorations such as ribbons or tinsel, if ingested can become lodged in the intestines and cause intestinal obstruction. This is a very common problem, particularly with cats.

good discipline, teamwork and friendship," Ferguson said.

"These are the kind of things the Desire Street Academy is trying to instill in these young men."

Lemour Howard is a student at Dream Street. He lost everything he owned in the hurricane.

"We have traveled back and forth from Texas to Florida since we left New Orleans. All I have left is what I took from the house," he said.

Howard said he wouldn't mind being in the Army, but he doesn't want to get shot at like he was when the rescue helicopter was taking him to safety.

Student at the Dream Street Academy

"They told us to get down, because we were being shot at by people on the ground," he said. "You could hear the pinging on the side of the helicopter."

The Rangers gave Howard and his classmates a class on "snake safety and identification," and the Ranger's Reptile Team allowed the students to handle snakes as they taught them how to tell the difference between the poisonous and nonpoisonous varieties.

After the reptiles, they watched the Rangers bridge the Yellow River using a rope. They also tried on the heavy ruck sacks the Rangers wear while they are on a mission.

Set spiritual priorities

Chaplain (Maj.) Ken Revell
11th Infantry Regiment

REFLECTIONS

Revell

Norman Vincent Peale once remarked: "This is the age of the half-read page, the quick hash and mad dash, the bright night with nerves tight, the plane hop with a brief stop, the lamp tan in a short span, the brain strain and the heart pain, the catnaps 'til the spring snaps. And the fun's done!"

Without question, Peale's words compellingly capture the rush, crush and fuss of life that is so characteristic of our day and age. While various methods have been employed to offset the reckless pace at which many of us live, nothing can be more important than setting spiritual priorities.

I find the words of the prophet Isaiah to be of tremendous encouragement for those of us who live in this constant deluge of pressure, urgencies and emergencies of life.

Isaiah says, "The Lord is the everlasting God, the creator of the ends of the earth. He will not grow weary and his understanding no one can fathom. He gives strength to the weary and increases the power of the weak. Even the youths grow tired and weary and the young men stumble and fall; but those who hope in the lord will renew their strength. They will soar on wings like eagles; they will run and not grow weary, they will walk and not be faint." (Isaiah 40:28-31).

I draw courage from three truths outlined in this passage.

First, God is never exhausted. The Lord's supply of strength is positively endless. He cannot be worn out or down or victimized by the crush, rush and fuss of life. Therefore he who is beyond stress can help us with our stresses.

It is not surprising that Peter instructed believers in Christ to "cast all (their) anxiety on the Lord for he cares for you" (1Peter 5:7).

Second, the Lord is never perplexed. When it comes to having a commanding knowledge of a situation, the almighty cannot be perplexed, surprised or startled.

"His understanding no one can fathom!" This means that you can have 20 Ph.Ds, and you would still never be as smart as God is. He is in a category all by himself. The sooner we come to grips with this fact, the better off we are going to be.

Mankind, over the centuries, has either tried to explain God, deny God, fight God or play God. The sooner we get about the business of allowing God to be God, the sooner we can begin trusting in the Lord for his wisdom in solving perplexing problems.

If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, James exhorts (James 1:5).

Third, God is the giver of strength to all who dare to put their hope in him. The Hebrew word for "renewed strength" is of great importance in this Scripture. It literally means, to "exchange strength."

When a piece of a Soldier's equipment becomes unserviceable through normal wear and tear, he or she can exchange it for a serviceable piece of equipment.

This same truth applies to the person who is bankrupt of strength and comes to the Lord for new strength.

In essence, we shall exchange our failing strength for his unfailing strength. With the Lord's strength we will soar on the wings of eagles. We will run and not be weary. We will walk and not faint.

As we make room for God in our daily lives we will have his unfailing power to triumph even in the daily grind.

Continue holiday traditions, make new ones

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey D. Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Hawkins

Have you heard 'Twas The Night Before Christmas — as written by a government contractor?

"'Twas the nocturnal segment of the diurnal period preceding the annual yuletide celebration, and throughout our place of residence, kinetic activity was not in evidence among the possessors of this potential, including that species of domestic rodent known as Mus musculus. Hosiery was meticulously suspended from the forward edge of the wood burning caloric apparatus, pursuant to our anticipatory pleasure regarding an imminent visitation from an eccentric philanthropist among whose folkloric appellations is the honorific title of St. Nicholas."

Just goes to show you that you can get things technically correct but still just kind of miss the whole spirit of things, right? How about this Christmas season, how are you doing with the whole spirit of things?

One of the best ways to "keep an azimuth" (military lingo for keeping the main thing the main thing), is to invest in Christmas traditions. What traditions did you have as a child? What traditions do you have as an adult? What traditions do you want to pass down to your family?

One Christmas, when I was a boy, I got a stuffed alligator that was larger than I, and a James Bond 007 SpyKit, which included an instamatic camera which turned into a clandestine firearm (probably explains why I was in the military intelligence branch when I first came into the military).

Our family traditionally read the Christmas Story before we exchanged gifts on Christmas Eve. After food and fun and the excitement, I'd succumb to sleep, confidant that Santa would execute a clandestine link up at the Hawkins house in the early a.m. and leave all sorts of gifts under the tree for Christmas morning.

That tradition of the Christmas Story, family gifts and Santa's arrival continue now, 40 plus years later, to a third generation ... and that's kind of neat, don't you think?

What tradition will you pass on? Because we want to reflect the real reason for the season to our children and those God allows us to serve during the holiday, we've started a new tradition that I hope will go on for generations in the Hawkins home.

It's giving the gift of service to those in need at Christmas. Last year it meant going to a single mom who'd had a terribly difficult year, doing a little caroling for her, and then giving the gift of service by handing her an IOU for a yard makeover once spring hit. She was touched, we were touched, and the season of giving became more meaningful.

This year, there are numerous families who need simple things to have a merry Christmas. Want to adopt a family or two and help them materially?

Well, I've got a list and I'm checking it twice. Give me a ring at 545-9014, and I can get you names, sizes, etc., so you and yours can give to them in the same spirit that God gave Christ to us that very first Christmas.

Enjoy a new tradition. And enjoy the season of giving!

Want more help with the holidays? Feel free to join us in our new location for our new series at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel called Experience Hope For The Holidays at the Follow Me Chapel (across from Wynnsong Theater) at 11 a.m. Sundays in December. Or call the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760. Merry Christmas!

Q: Why did Roberta Gibb Bingay wear a hooded sweatshirt to disguise her appearance when she ran in the Boston Marathon in 1966?

A: Women were banned from the race until 1972. Bingay, of San Diego, Calif., was the first woman to complete the race. Her time, unofficial because she was an illegal participant, was three hours, 20 minutes.

Bench Notes

Erin Nash

• Bush wins, in a big way

Like I called it, USC running back Reggie Bush was awarded the Heisman trophy Saturday in a landslide over Texas QB Vince Young and USC QB Matt Leinart.

Bush garnered 784 first-place votes, the second most in Heisman history. O.J. Simpson got 855 when he won the Heisman in 1968.

• Target Challenge results

Luke Donald won the $1.3 million purse at the Target World Challenge Dec. 11, finishing the tourney at 16-under 272.

Tiger, who hosts the Challenge, shot a 73 in the final round, and finished tied for 14th.

• Riley in, Van Gundy out

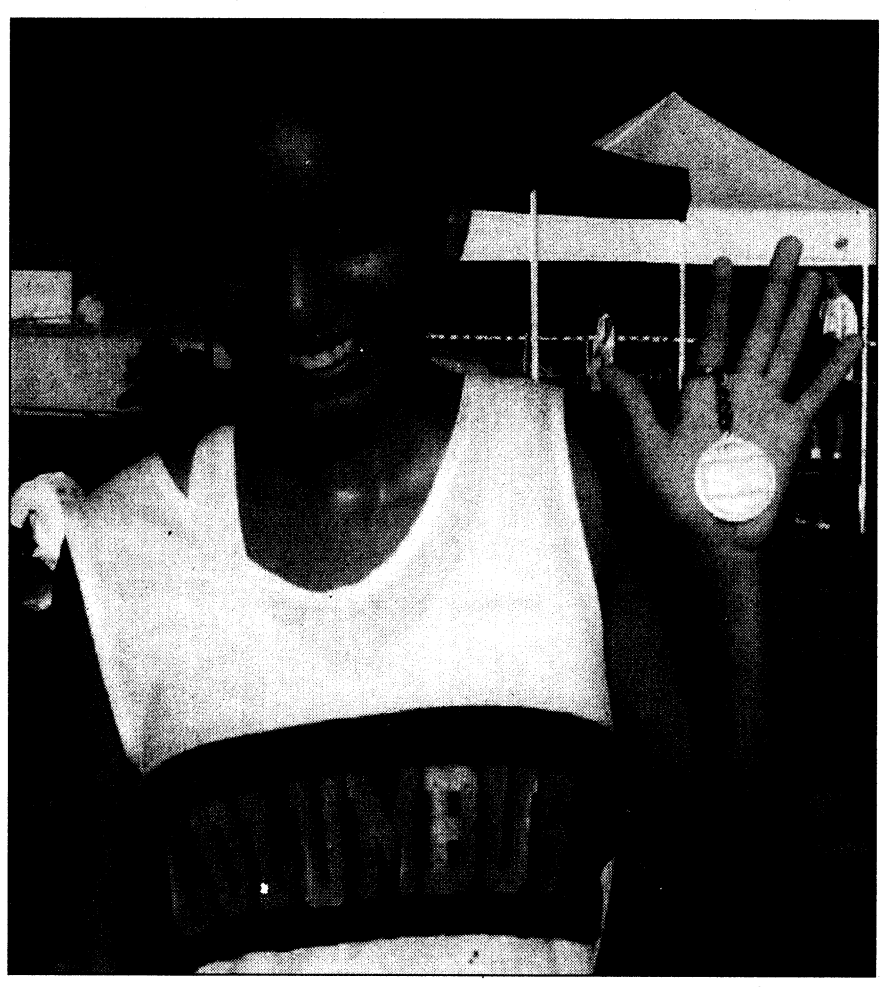
Miami Heat coach Stan Van Gundy quit Dec. 12, saying he wanted to spend more time with his family.

Former head coach Pat Riley is back in charge.

When Shaq's happy, everyone's happy.

• Bowl games

Don't forget to turn the page, where you'll find a complete College Bowl schedule, and I've even thought to put the dashes around it, so you can cut it out and place it right next to your seat of choice.



Enjoy the games, and happy holidays.

• Montgomery banned, record erased

U.S. sprinter Tim Montgomery was banned from the sport for two years Dec. 13 by the Court of Arbitration for Sport in Lausanne, Switzerland.

Montgomery's 100-meter world record has been erased, along with every result, medal and prize money from the past five years.

Military daughter also plans for Army career

Meet Vanessa Pizarro, 17, student extraordinaire. The Columbus High School senior has the been top runner for the Lady Blue Devils for two straight seasons, recently winning the 2-AAA championship, running the 5K course in a time of 20:45.

And she's been named an All-Bi-City Cross Country runner. Pizarro finished 13th in the Class AAA state meet this year. Her season-best is 18:59. Pizarro also placed in the top eight statewide in the one and two-mile runs last year.

"Vanessa has both qualities of a good runner and a good leader. She sets the example," said Randy Whitt, Columbus High School's girls' cross-country coach.

"If you're going to excel in competitive running, it hurts bad. She pours everything she's got into it," Whitt said.

"I work hard ... and try to do my best," Pizarro said.

Excellence is part of Pizarro's life. Both her parents are career military. Her father, Lt. Col. Jose Pizarro, is chief of staff at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. Her mother, Lt. Col. Waleska Pizarro, commands the 1200th Quartermaster Battalion and is the Alabama National Guard transportation liaison officer. Pizarro will attend North Georgia College and State University in the fall and hopes for a ROTC scholarship. Then she, too, plans for a career in the Army.

Pizarro's desire to run began when she was 9. Her family was living in California, and at her father's suggestion, she decided to enter a local race.

Then in middle school, Pizarro said friends asked her to join the cross country team and she "got into it."

"I used to run with my dad a lot, and then I got faster," Pizarro said.

Pizarro is not only top-notch at running, but she's a scholar, with a 4.0 for her high school academic career. Pizarro is also a National Honor Society member. When not running or studying, she is swimming, playing paintball, or dancing.

"I like to be active in everything," said Pizarro.

1st Lt. Niul Manske and 2nd Lt. Michelle "Mickey" Kelly finished first and second respectively at the 2005 NORCECA Modern Pentathlon Championships Dec. 3 and 4 in Guatemala City, Guatemala.

Manske led Team USA to victory in the men's division of the five-sport competition among five teams from North and Central American and Caribbean countries. Kelly, who finished runner-up to Cuba's Katie Rodriguez, led the women to a second-place finish.

Manske trains in the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program at Fort Carson, Colo. Kelly, who graduated Dec. 6 from her officer basic course, is scheduled to enter WCAP in early January.

Manske compiled 5,344 points to nip teammate Sam Sacksen (5,340) of Somerset, Pa.

"I was very pleased and surprised how prepared he was mentally and physically, especially with his swimming," said U.S. coach Janusz Peciak, a veteran of eight Olympic teams. "He has the potential, but he's never (before) put all five sports together well. It was a perfect day for him."

Kelly is the U.S. women's reigning national champion in modern pentathlon, a five-sport event that includes pistol shooting, fencing, swimming, equestrian riding and cross-country running. She amassed 5,052 points in Guatemala City and was one of four U.S. women who scored a perfect 1,200 points on the ride.

"When she comes back to Colorado and trains, she'll get a lot stronger," Peciak said.

While attending OBC, Kelly still managed to win the women's run. Emily Shertzer (4,888) of Colorado Springs, Colo., and Suzanne Stettinius (4,692) of Parkton, Md., completed the U.S. women's squad.

Tim Hipps

2nd Lt. Michelle Kelly finished second in the women's division of the 2005 NORECA Modern Pentathlon Championships in Guatemala.

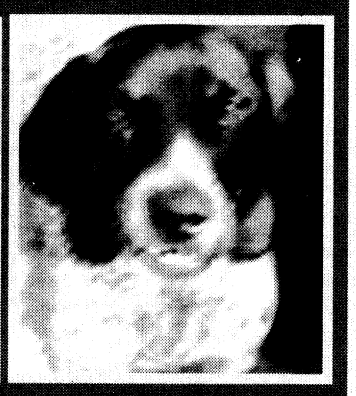
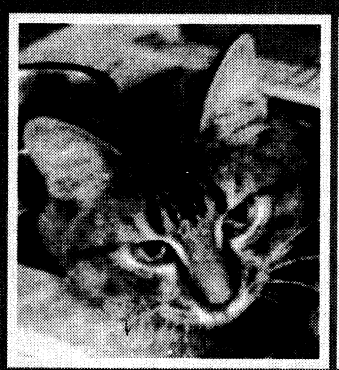
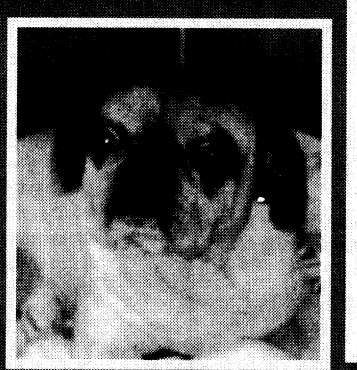
Iams® Home 4 the Holidays®







THE MUSCOGEE COUNTY HUMANE SOCIETY and PAWS are working hard to place 400 animals in adoptive homes this holiday season. Make this Christmas a very special one by giving a deserving animal a home. All these animals are owner surrendered due to moving, divorce, ill health and other reasons. All animals are socialized and special needs are indicated. Please open up your heart and your home to unconditional love for your new holiday pet.

PET ADOPT-A-THON GOING ON NOW AT PETSMART & OUR SHELTER

(SEE MAP BELOW)

WHAT YOU GET

ADOPTION FEES ARE LOW $75 - $200

• Test appropriate to species • Vaccines appropriate to species • Deworming • Spay/Neuter • Flea/Tick control • Microchip • Valued $300-$400

Adopters will receive a take home package with deluxe samples.

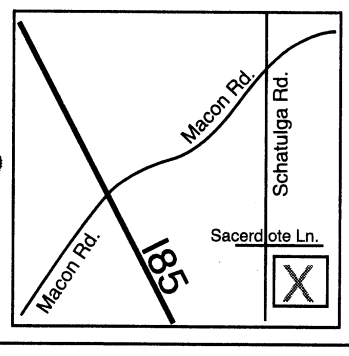
Holiday Appeal

PLEASE JOIN US THIS HOLIDAY season in helping your humane society to continue its mission. Our ultimate goal is to end euthanasia as a form of population control. Challenges do lie ahead in this vision but it can happen! Please, send what you can this holiday season to help the humane society accomplish this wondrous goal.

CALL NOW 563-DOGS

MAKE YOUR PLEDGE, USE YOUR CREDIT CARD

Our Shelter Has Over 300 animals at any given time. It takes a staff of 16 to feed, medicate, socialize and adopt these wonderful pets. Please send what you can. Call or mail donations to PO Box 8788 Columbus, Georgia 31908. www.muscogee-humane.org.



FREE GIFT FOR YOUR PET TODAY AT BOTH LOCATIONS!

YOUR HUMANE SOCIETY, PAWS, and other area rescue groups will be at Petsmart locations beginning today and throughout the end of the holiday season. Other locations to find your special holiday pet are at Humane Society's portable adopta-trailer, and the Humane Society and PAWS shelters on Sacerdote Lane (see map below)
