The battery rebuilding department manufactures or repairs approximately 400 batteries a month for all types of vehicles. No worn out battery is thrown away, and most of them are reused unless they are absolutely no good whatsoever.

The tire department repairs between a thousand and 1200 tires a month. Tires are reclaimed, recapped, retreaded or repaired according to the damage. The motorcycle rebuilding department reconditions all the motorcycles at Fort Benning and 11 nearby districts just as a manufacturer would do it.

The paint shop paints the vehicles and manufactures its own stencils for stars, war department numbers and symbols. Aside from preliminary functions such as washing the car, a vehicle can be painted and ready for use within an hour. The paint job itself takes two men about 30 minutes, while the same amount of time is all that is required for the drying phrase of the operation.

STEAM CLEANING

Complete with washracks, the shops have a steam cleaning department which takes grease off vehicles which cannot be cleaned by water. The shops also have busy carpenter shops. Ninety per cent of the Motor Transport's carpenter work in repairing, partitioning of shops, etc., is done by these shops.

The reclamation department, which is under the immediate direction of Capt. Thomas B. McBrayer, functions in cooperation with the repair shops and receives all worn parts and units to inspect them and determine if they are fit to be repaired. Such items as motors, transmissions, rear axle assemblies, transfer cases clutch assemblies, generators and starters are inspected and segregated. Everything possible is repaired or salvaged. Approximately 99 per cent of the items are put back into use again.

SERVES WHOLE DISTRICT

The shops handle repairs and work out not only for the Post but for 11 other districts in the Fourth Service Command. These districts are camps, posts and stations in the states of Georgia and Alabama. The Ordnance Motor Transport District at Fort Benning is the head shop for all these districts.

Colonel Carlton's assistant in the Fort Benning district is Captain Branch F. Delaney, district executitve officer. Lieut Robert E. McLean is property officer; and Lieuts. Joseph Rothman and William V. Rouse are respectively personnel officer and warehouse officer. Lieut. Kenneth D. Burr is in charge of the automotive activities of the Post Motor Pool, and is assisted by Warrant Officer R. W. Kitts. Lieut Grant L. Ray is police and fire marshal for the district.

Lieut. Sutton, who supervises all the shops except the reclamation department which is under Captain McBrayer, has been in the truck business for 32 years, mostly in maintenance work. He spent six years in the experimental field with General Motors Corp. in Detroit, and at the time he entered the army again July 4, 1942, he was chief automotive advisor to the Brooklyn Army Base.

A veteran of the first World War, Lt. Sutton served for 27 months during that conflict, 24 months of which he spent in Europe. He was a senior grade sergeant (equivalent to the present day master sergeant) in the Quartermaster Corps, and handled repair shops and travelled as truck master with truck trains in France, Germany, Belgium and Italy. When he received his commission in this war, he was assigned to the quartermaster corps and sent to Fort Benning to work under the direction of Colonel Stephen B. Massey, director of supply. Lieutenant Sutton ascribes the fact he is now in the ordnance department doing the work for which he is primarily qualified to the foresight of Colonel Massey, who largely was responsible for his transfer to the present position.

A total of 244 civilian helpers and mechanics work in the shops. Oscar O. Goodrow, superintendent of the Motor Transport District Shops is assistant to Lieutenant Sutton. A Columbus, Ga., man, he spent 30 years in the automobile business, especially in service departments. Robert H. McNalty is chief clerk.

James B. McCoy is chief automotive adviser and was assigned to assist Colonel Carlton by the Fourth Service Command in Atlanta.

Several hundred soldiers have worked in the shops for training and experience and have been sent out to various units to do advanced repair work on vehicles.

The shops area extends from Anderson street to Edwards street between Vibbert and Upton avenues. At the present time, concrete is being laid on the area nearest Anderson street to prevent parked vehicles from becoming dirty and muddy while parked there awaiting repairs.

At present qualified to take care of tremendous numbers of vehicles and to do any sort of repairs, the shops are continuing to utilize and develop new and better methods every day.

The star appearing on the Defense Service Ribbon means the wearer had been in service a full year prior to Pearl Harbor. In the Navy, a star appears on the ribbon if the wearer had sea duty prior to Dec. 7, 1941.

"WISH IT WAS RAININ' TODAY; I ALWAYS FEEL BETTER ABOUT STAYIN' IN."

Unit Secures Machine Shop

The Fourth Battalion, First Student Training regiment, now boasts one of the few combination machine and carpenter shops. These tools will be available to all companies of the battalion for repair purposes and for making useful items for the companies.

Major Donohoo In 3 Battles

Engagements Include Midway, Coral Sea And Solomon Isles

The Second Company, First Student Training regiment has a student officer who has probably seen as much actual combat in this war as any man in the United States Armed Forces. Major Malcolm O. Donohoo, U. S. M. C., has spent a great deal of the time since Pearl Harbor in the South Pacific area.

Aboard a cruiser in charge of Donohoo was at sea at the time of the sneak attack on Pearl Harbor and spent the following months looking for the Japs in that area.

Major Donohoo has the envious record of having three stars to wear indicating that he has taken part in three major engagements of this war all in the South Pacific area.

The Battle of Midway, the Battle of the Coral Sea, and the bombardment of the Solomons at the time of the Marine landings there, all were participated in by Major Donohoo and his men. Firing the 37mm. anti-tank gun was relaxation for the Major after being in charge of the batteries on board the cruiser at the Solomons.

There is no difference between a limited service man and a noncombatant. Limited service means a soldier is incapable of performing combat duty due to certain physical limitations, so it follows that a limited serviceman and a noncombatant are similar.

Sgt. Hammond Is Warrant Officer

Master Sergeant John M. Hammond, after fifteen years in the U. S. Army specializing in radio communication, was made a warrant officer this week.

Hammond trained in the Canal Zone for three years before coming to the Infantry School Detachment in 1931 where he entered the communications section. He served as an assistant instructor until 1940 when he was promoted to senior enlisted instructor. He had held the rating of master sergeant since April, 1940, in the radio communication section where he will continue as an instructor.

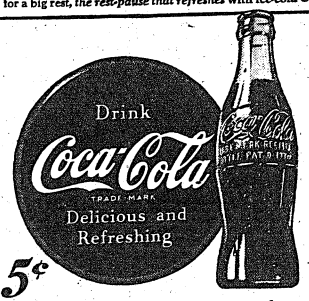
The rest-pause that refreshes

Welcome in peace... more welcome in war work

WAR production needs are pressing. No time can be wasted on the job. Rest-pauses planned and timed are the efficient way to make every minute count. They lessen tension, break monotony, and increase output. Add refreshment to a rest-pause and you promote worker-contentment.



Ice-cold Coca-Cola is refreshment that does more than quench thirst. Drink it and you feel and enjoy a refreshing after-sense. Its clean, exciting taste always pleases, never tires. Coca-Cola offers something extra. All the difference between something really refreshing and just something to drink.

When every minute counts, there's one little minute long enough for a big rest, the rest-pause that refreshes with ice-cold Coca-Cola.

Letters from plant managers from coast to coast emphasize that the little moment for an ice-cold Coca-Cola means a lot to workers in war plants. It's a refreshing moment on the sunny side of things ...a way to turn to refreshment without turning from work.

You work better when you are contented on the job. Remember, contentment comes when you connect with a Coke.

1st STR Officer Escapes Death Four Times In North Africa Battle

Lt. Wild Wounded While Landing, Then Strafed; Boat Later Torpedoed

Cats with nine lives have nothing to hold over the head of First Lt. Julius A. Wild, of Webster Grove, Mo., when it comes to bearing a charmed existence.

Lieutenant Wild, at present on duty with a basic class in the 7th company, First Student Training regiment at Fort Benning, is a veteran of last fall's historic Allied invasion of North Africa. He left this country late in October with an amphibious division, and was among the first American soldiers to set foot on Axis-held soil.

The near unbelievable story of Lieutenant Wild's frequent escapes from death began an hour after his assault boat hit the beach near Fedala, in the Casablanca area.

H-hour had been at 0400, although skirmishes with shore batteries had been going on before the time set for mass landing. Shortly after 0730 Lieutenant Wild's wave hit shore, to be met by a sharp register from a French shore battery. Flying shrapnel felled Lieutenant Wild, and his active participation in the landing ended.

An aid man ran up to the lieutenant, applied compresses, then left. An hour passed, during which Lieutenant Wild's wounds numbed his whole body. When no further aid appeared, he began to crawl toward a naval aid station about 200 yards down the beach.

Halfway there, he fell prey to a French pursuit plane, which strafed the beach around him. A chance slug went through Lieutenant Wild's helmet and burned his neck.

KNOCKS HIM FREE

Finally, he reached the aid station, where he stayed overnight. The next day, at 1000, a warning came down that a tank attack was expected at any moment. Before the news had cooled, dive-bombers began pounding away at a supply depot adjacent to the aid station. One stray missile screamed into the aid station, and Wild found himself floating through air as the concussion knocked him off his stretcher.

When quiet had again resumed, plans were made to evacuate the wounded to a "hospital" in Fedala. It turned out to be an old country club called the Casino in gayer days. There doctors worked feverishly over casualties, probing out metal without the benefit of anesthetics, which were, at that isolated point, on the rationed list. As Lieutenant Wild put it, "We were only there long enough to get mighty uncomfortable from being excavated."

At last complete evacuation from the area was made, and the wounded were piled into a transport, to start their way back to the United States. Two hours after darkness had fallen on the improvised hospital ship, Lieutenant Wild once more found himself on the "meatblock."

More probing for shrapnel, again without anaesthesia, was going on, when suddenly the vessel lurched, struck broadside by an Axis torpedo.

THROWN OVERBOARD

Attendants bundled Lieutenant Wild, hustled him on deck, removed him from a stretcher, fitted him out in a life belt, then threw him overboard. For two hours everything was a nightmare.

"First thing I became conscious of," Wild recalled, "was the boat going down. I wasn't more than 50 feet away. It wasn't like the movies, suction and all. It just slipped under. All around me men were yelling for help, and the night was darker than I'd ever seen it before. Just before that sub got us, it had sunk an oil tanker, and there a slick of fuel oil all over the water.

"After a while a liferaft picked me up, and I was as black as the proverbial ace of spades from the fuel oil. Three quarters of an hour later I was transferred to a landing boat, then to another transport, which was the one I eventually came home on."

A two-day stop was made at Casablanca, then the transport headed for home.

Lieut. Wild was sent to Walter Reed hospital and was awarded the Purple Heart for his participation in and wounds suffered during the African landing.

War Spoils Stamp Album

Collector Learns Foreign Tongues While 'Philateling'

An interest in almost every letter and package received by his buddies in the 23rd Company of the Third Student Training Regiment is maintained by Officer Candidate Leo W. Sweeney. After mail call he diligently canvasses the barracks for postage stamps which form the currency of an unusual hobby.

A former instructor in economics at Iowa State University, Iowa City, Sweeney, through his interests as a philatelist, has become a prolific writer of letters and something of a linguist. The U.S. stamps he obtains from his fellow candidates are exchanged with correspondents all over the world. Many of the letters he receives in this exchange are in the native languages of the writers so Sweeney has had to develop a knowledge of foreign tongues.

WORLD WIDE

He freshens up on his Spanish, for example, through his correspondence with a girl in Uruguay who has considerably augmented his South American collection. The war has all but ended his exchanges, however, because he no longer hears from his French and Flemish collectors. Longest of his epistolary friendships in one of six years maintained with a boy in Ireland. Others on his regular exchange list are philatelists in Australia, New Zealand, Syria and Mysore, Indian. He has had irregular dealings with collectors in Malta, Straits Settlements, Scotland and the Latin Americas.

A friend in Damascus, Syria, sends Sweeney the small paper he publishes and plasters it liberally with the rare Syrian issues. Membership in the "Paris-Globe" and three English exchanges gives Sweeney access to publications from which he has built his list of correspondents. He has amassed a collection of 40,000 foreign varieties and his duplicates run to more than a million. He uses the latter for exchange with collectors in this country.

O. C. Found Jobs For Deaf

Letters of appreciation from many of his former pupils who have found jobs in war industries form the bulk of the mail received by Officer Candidate Leo Carde of the 18th Company, Third Student Training Regiment.

Before entering the army, Carde was supervisor of boys at the New York Institution for the Deaf. Before the war, graduates of the school, no matter how capable, had a difficult time finding jobs. Now many of them are finding places in industry and, from the letters the candidate receives, it appears they are doing excellently.

Carde has had an interestingly varied career. He was at one time secretary to Philip Lord, the radio writer and actor. A singer of no mean ability, Carde has been featured in radio programs and has sung in night clubs and for movie shorts.

Soldier Graves Registered By New Q. M. Units

Designed to Assure Proper Records Of Fallen Heroes

Organization of special units for the registration of graves of American soldiers who fall on foreign soil has just been ordered by the War Department, according to an announcement by Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning.

The units, which will be under the supervision of the Army's Quartermaster Corps, are being organized in the various theaters of operation to insure proper temporary internment and to record the burial places of the men who die in combat.

Colonel Massey stated that special training given to the personnel of the Army's Graves Registration Service is expected to result in a considerable reduction in the percentage of unidentified American dead, as compared with the percentage of 1.42 per cent that prevailed in the last war.

BEHIND COMBAT LIMITS

A unit of the new service will operate closely behind the combat area, burying the dead, recording and marking graves, and collecting personal effects. Except where combat interferes, overseas burials are approximately the same as those conducted in this country, with full military honors rendered and rites conducted by a chaplain of the deceased's own faith whenever possible.

When isolated graves are necessary, sketches and maps of the location are made as a part of the permanent record. When identification tags are lost, Graves Registration officers make every effort to establish the soldier's identity through personal papers, dental work and fingerprints.

COMPLETE RECORDS

Complete reports are rendered on all burials, according to Colonel Massey. They show the deceased's name, serial number, grade and organization; place, cause and date of death.

Besides this function overseas, the Quartermaster Corps is also charged with the maintenance of all cemeteries in posts, camps and stations in this country, such as the large permanent burial plot at Fort Benning.

Bowl Heroes Reach Post

Bulldogs and Vols In Second Regiment

Fresh from college campuses, five R. O. T. C. men who helped to make football history in various bowl games have landed in the 26th Company of the Second Student Training regiment.

Three of the former gridders are from the University of Tennessee, which has sent quite a few grads to Fort Benning for the officer candidate course. They are Ike Peel, Bill Nowling and Bill Meek.

The Georgia Bulldogs, victors over U. C. L. A., by 9 to 0 last January in the Rose Bowl, are represented by Lamar Davis and J. P. Miller.

All three of the former Tennessee players are backfield men. Peel was rated the No. 2 blocking back in the Southeastern Conference for two years in a row, and was with the Vols when they met Southern California in the Rose Bowl in 1939 and Boston College in the Sugar Bowl in 1940. He hails from Dyersburg, Tenn., and also lettered in baseball while at Tennessee.

FIRST STRING BACK

Nowling was first string fullback for Tennessee for the past two years, seeing action in the Vols' appearances in the Sugar Bowl in 1940 when they lost to Boston College 19-13, and last January when they defeated Tulsa University 19 to 7. He's from St. Petersburg, Fla.

Meek, a Birmingham, Ala., man acclaimed to be one of the most handsome athletes ever to perform on a Tennessee eleven, was a blocking back for the Vols in their two Sugar Bowl appearances.

Davis of Georgia played opposite the famous Frankie Sinkwich as right halfback on the Bulldog eleven, and also played in two bowls—Orange and Rose. He made ALL-SEC while at Georgia and was on the receiving end of many aerials tossed by All-American Flatfoot Frankie.

Miller, a guard, was with the Georgians when they invaded the Orange Bowl in 1942.

Determination without love makes a dictator out of anybody.

Activists incline to think of idealists as impractical men. The truth is that activists often put big men to work at small jobs. But a man of action guided by ideals, puts everybody to work at the biggest job in the world.

Soldiers stationed overseas must have an official permission to get married, just as a soldier does in the United States.

Barracks Boys Get Legal Aid

"Barracks lawyer," a term frequently used to connote contempt in the Army is applied with admiration and respect to two stalwart officer candidates in the 12th Company of the Third Student Training Regiment.

In Barracks 5449 of this company there are two barristers, Richard C. Ashby of Chillicothe, Mo., and Stuart F. Head of Charlottesville, Va. They also are known as the "Gold Dust Twins" because of their small stature and they have won more friends than the representatives of any other profession.

They are invariably consulted for final opinions in controversial matters and when the company recently elected an honor committee, the first floor elected Head while the upstairs squads unanimously got behind Ashby.

Without proper food storage it is almost impossible to work out a real home food suppli, according to the Georgia agricultural extension service.

3rd STR Candidates Enjoy Spontaneous Athletic Programs

Sports have taken the limelight as the principal extra-curricular interest of the Sixth Company, Third Student Training Regiment. A spontaneously planned boxing program last week had some interesting results and a schedule of events drawn up by First Lieut. Robert J. Wilson has attracted a 100 per cent enrollment.

The ring tournament was held during the company's recent tactical maneuvers, the gloves miraculously appearing one evening after chow. One mixup featured Ciro Ramiriz, former Golden Gloves champion from Kansas City, and James Rand of Boston.

Interest in another featured bout, however, was divided between the fisticuffs and the size 15 shoes of one of the contestants, Candidate Von Behren. He fought "Tiny" Steel, a New York Golden Gloves titlist.

Lieutenant Wilson's program embraces baseball, volleyball, badminton, ping pong, horseshoes and softball. There is vigorous inter-platoon competition and personal rivalry has reached unexpected heights.

Thru The Peepsight

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. O. J. REMINGTON

OVERSHADOWING ALL NEWS during the week was the coal strike, which threatened for a time to disrupt the entire war effort. Union Mine Workers struck as contracts ran out. President Roosevelt ordered Secretary Ickes to take charge, call out the military if necessary; then appealed to workers to return to work. The strike ended with establishment of a 15-day truce.

Nothing is settled definitely as yet, with miners sticking to their demands for increased wages. President Roosevelt told the miners "every idle miner was directly and individually obstructing our war effort." He also stated emphatically that the production of coal "will not be stopped." A Gallup poll of opinion in the Armed Forces would show, beyond any doubt, a unanimous desire to commit mayhem over the entire situation. Congress is mumbling about outlawing strikes in wartime.

ALLIED TROOPS PUSH ahead in Tunisia, with the Axis forces grimly fighting back—and not only fighting back but actually waging suicidal counter-attacks — they grimly battle against the inevitable. They're purely defensive counter-attacks, of course, but they certainly show the temper and the mettle of the foe that we face. French troops are battling along with American and British forces. American forces bear the brunt of the attack. They have captured Mateur, are on the road to Bizerte.

A week ago German attacks in the Caucasus were being strongly re-inforced, leading some American correspondents in Moscow to believe that their full-scale spring offensive was started—or at least about to start mighty soon. But Russian lines held, stiffened, developed counter-attacks, until the Berlin radio and other news sources were calling it a Russian offensive. Russian sources were not call-

War Mothers to Adopt Orphaned Soldier Boys

Plan Has Support Of General Fulton As Morale Builder

Orphans fighting for Uncle Sam will be "adopted" for the duration by "War Mothers," under a plan originated by the Auxiliary of the American Legion, Columbus, Ga. branch.

This plan, which received the enthusiastic support of Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, the commanding general of Fort Benning, who assisted in launching it, was announced Saturday by Mrs. Wheeler Tolbert, new president of the Auxiliary in Columbus. It will be drawn up in detail for presentation to the National Auxiliary and then sent out to other auxiliaries all over the nation for action.

"The plan was formed as the Legion Auxiliary's contribution to enhancing morale for the armed forces, and is to be launched in time for the annual celebration of Mother's Day," Mrs. Tolbert explained.

"We learned that there were many men at Fort Benning who had no mothers to whom to write on Mother's Day. Further, many of these men never receive any mail at all. Many of these soldiers are far from their home cities and their friends and it was to do a little something for these soldiers on Mother's Day that we first went to see General Fulton.

GOLD STAR MOTHERS

"He suggested that we carry the plan a step farther, and that we select Gold Star mothers from the last war, and mothers who have lost sons in this war—and ask them to 'adopt' these orphan soldiers for the duration. They could be sent little things on Christmas, their birthdays, special occasions, and so on. Those who receive no mail would get letters

Columbus High Christens Peep

Tiger Vehicle Bears Name of Grid Team

With a good healthy blow, a 14-year-old Columbus High school sophomore, Patsy Butts, smashed a bottle of ginger ale on the prow of a Tenth Armored division peep last week and christened it "Blue Devil" in honor of the school's football team. The action actually symbolized the christening of 16 other peeps purchased for the Armed Forces with part of the $25,276 in War Bonds which have been purchased in the names of Columbus High school students in the past six months.

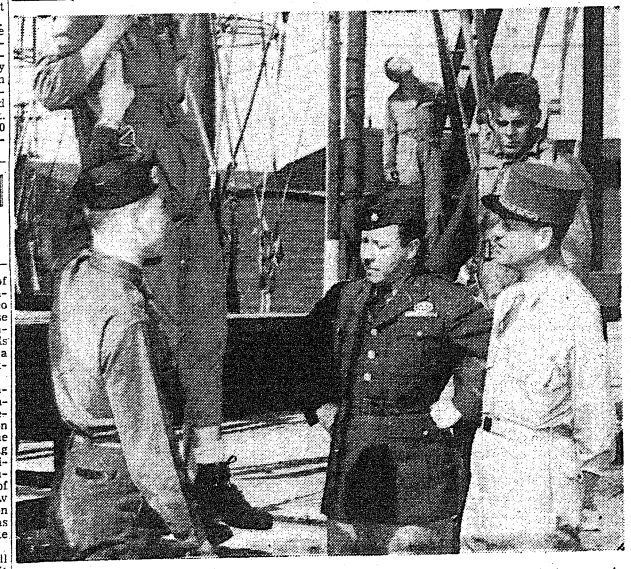
Lt. Arthur E. Mathews, assistant special service officer of the Tenth Armored division, represented the commanding general, Major General Paul W. Newgarden, at the exercises which were held on the high school steps with the full student body in attendance. Lt. Mathews praised the students for their successful efforts and emphasized the seriousness with which they are applying themselves to the war effort.

INTESTINAL FORTITUDE

"It takes," he said, "to invest your nickels and dimes in war stamps instead of spending them foolishly as boys and girls in my youth were inclined to do." The lieutenant closed his remarks with a salute to the school and student body.

While Patsy Butts received the honor of the christening ceremony, her brother, Tommy, actually earned the privilege by virtue of selling more bonds than anyone else in the school. Modestly, however, he stood back and let his sister take the spotlight. Tommy's sales approached $3,000 while his sister sold approximately $2,200.

French Mission Head Visits Fort Benning



General Bethouart Inspects Training Of French Volunteers

The Infantry School has been host to one of France's most able and distinguished soldiers, General De Division M. Bethouart, graduate of the famous West Point of France, Saint Cyr, and a hero of Narvik has just completed a visit to the French officers in training at the First Student Training regiment.

General Bethouart is a member of the famed French Picket Troops called "Chasseurs a pied." This distinctive fighting outfit has, throughout the years, been responsible for much of the glory which is that of the French people. The General and his crack fighting men have seen much fast action in the present European war. As a colonel, M. Bethouart was first sent to Norway in January, 1940, where, through his brilliant show of command ability, he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general. Later, the general took his division to Morocco where he served the Allied cause with loyalty and tact. Fort Benning was proud to open its portals to such an excellent general, a true friend and a tireless worker.

During his visit to Fort Benning, General Bethouart accompanied the French officers to demonstrations and conferences on the 81 mm. mortar platoon in the attack, and mechanical training with the 105 howitzer. He attended an Infantry Board demonstration and watched the conduct of combat proficiency tests. He saw a large scale military problem on the attack of a river line and was escorted through the Parachute School.

General Bethouart removed all insignia of rank during his visit to Fort Benning and at his own request mingled with officer candidates and instructors while observing all phases of Infantry training.

Shooray Soldier! Service Shoe Sheds Shine

Good news for G. I's at Fort Benning as well as throughout the Army was the disclosure yesterday by Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at the post, that the very latest type of service shoe will not have to be polished!

And there's a good reason for it, too, according to the Benning supply chief. Stating it simply, they can't be polished.

The shoes are an innovation in that the leather has been turned inside out and the smooth side is more comfortable to the foot, while the rough side is easier to soften by rubbing after the shoe has become wet.

To be known as Army Service Shoe Type 3, a full rubber sole will replace the rubber tap and heel on previous models, according to Colonel Massey.

Lawson Field Men In Crash

Three Men Perish In Mobile Bay Mishap

Three men were killed and two others are injured following the crash of an army transport plane, whose home was Lawson field, early Tuesday shortly after it took off from Brookley Field, at Mobile, Ala.

The three fliers were identified by the Ft. Benning public relations office as Flight Officer Allen A. Hayden, pilot of DeSmet, S. D.; 2nd Lt. R. E. Fennelly, co-pilot, of Detroit, Mich., and 1st Lt. H. W. Tikkanen of Marquette, Mich.

The three men were trapped in the aircraft wreckage, now buried in Mobile Bay.

The plane was a Douglas C-47 transport.

Private First Class Amos Ritter, of Paulsboro, N. J., and Sgt. Robert Beeman, of Covington, Ohio, were rescued from the plane by R. W. Register, a civilian employe at Brookley Field, who saw the accident and went to the scene in a motor boat. Both men suffered minor cuts and bruises.

Brig. Gen. James A. Mollison, air depot commander at Mobile, has appointed a board to investigate the accident.

TIS Instructor Made Mayor

Announcement has been received of the promotion of Captain John J. McGrath, TIS instructor, to the rank of major. Until his entry upon military duty in Oct. 1941, Major McGrath was director of the Hartford Bureau of Adult Education.

Major McGrath was graduated from the University of Connecticut in 1933 with the rank of second lieutenant and has done post graduate study at New York University and Yale. He is a graduate of the Rifle and Heavy Weapons Company Officers' course at the Infantry School. Upon completion of this course in Jan. 1942 he was retained at the school as an instructor. Since March 1942 his duties have included the training of newly assigned instructors. He was promoted to the rank of captain in June, 1942.

New Hospital Unit Opened

Equipped To Handle Total Of 1250 Beds

The Station Hospital Unit No. Two has formally opened and is serving as a reconditioning center for convalescent soldiers.

According to Lt. Col. William L. Starnes, officer in charge, the patients stand reveille and retreat, and during the day are given general conditioning exercises, consisting of hikes, drills and calisthentics. In addition classes are held in sanitation and personal hygiene, so that patients may constructively utilize their spare time.

The new unit is equipped to handle 1,250 beds, and to be a complete hospital in itself. At present, however, only 550 beds are in use.

Assisting Colonel Starnes is Capt. J. A. Bell, Jr., assistant chief of surgical service; Capt. Samuel Sherman, assistant chief of medical service; and 1st Lt. C. K. O'Kuno, sanitation officer. No nurses are stationed with the new unit as yet.

Class Starts In Dehydration

Several Hundred Enrolled In 5 Courses

Five WAAC officers and two nurses rolled up their sleeves and found out at first hand how the Army prepares its food, as they attended one of the five courses in the Bakers and Cooks School at Fort Benning, with several hundred officers and enlisted men also enrolled—all learning the intricacies of handling dehydrated foods.

In one course, 40 higher officers attended a two day course, under direction of Col. John M. Rooks, commandant of the school and Col. Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning Director of Supply.

Three of the courses are being held in all Bakers and Cooks schools in the Army for the purpose of giving general instruction in the conservation and preservation of food supplies and to point up new methods of eliminating waste. Col. Rooks said.

The members of the Woman's Army Auxiliary Corps and the nurses are among approximately 130 officers and enlisted men to take two courses in cooking of dehydrated foods. One is for one week; the other is for two weeks for officers and enlisted men who in turn will become instructors on preparations of dehydrated foods in other units.

WAACS ATTEND

WAAC officers, who came from the Training Center at Daytona Beach, are Third Officer Mary M. Kirby and Second Officers Jeanne Warner, Fay L. Pendergrass, Betty C. Jokl and Elizabeth W. Kingsbury. Officers of the Army Nurse Corps, both dietitians, are Second Lieutenants Jeanne H. Hexamer, from Oliver General Hospital, Augusta, Ga., and Alta B.

3rd Regiment Plants Garden

Unit Sets Out Huge Victory Truck Plots

Already indoctrinated with the Army's program from the prevention of waste, soldiers of the Third Student Training Regiment of Fort Benning's Infantry School Service Command have turned to a new project to aid the nation's food conservation plans—"victory gardens."

First of what eventually will be veritable acres of truck gardens in the regimental area has been sown by maintenance men in the regiment's Headquarters Company. The garden occupies a cleared space regarded by the thoughtful planners as within easy harvesting distance of the company mess hall. Cabbages could be lassoed and hauled to the kitchen by expert KPs without the necessity of stepping beyond the side doors of the building.

A wide variety of vegetables has been planted and it is expected that before many weeks have passed the company mess hall diners will be partaking of fresh food items, sown, grown, supervised and prepared by their own buddies.

As is the case with every company in this regiment, the headquarters men have had lessons of thrift in the use of food pounded home to them so often that they follow conservation practices in this direction almost mechanically. Scarce items of food and food luxuries are carefully rationed, to the very point of ounce per man, and materials which once were cast out as refuse are now prevented to be reused or to be contributed to war industries.

WASTE? NO RATIONS!

While much of the success of the conservation program is the responsibility of the individual companies, the mess cadres and the consumer-soldiers themselves, there nevertheless is a guiding authority for the plan in the Regimental Mess Office. All the problems of feeding the men of the regiment well but inexpensively eventually find their way back to this office. And it is this office that discerns waste and puts a stop to it.

The Third Regiment's mess office has a stick to wield over the wasteful in the threatened curtailment of rations. It has the power to invoke an actual stoppage of rations as a penalty for flagrant waste, but, according to Lieut. William Gessinger, the mess officer, there has never been any occasion to enforce this authority.

One of the chief sources of food waste within a company of soldiers, Lieutenant Bessinger maintains, lies in the eating habits and conflicting tastes of the men. A Southerner, for example, he said, enjoys such staples as turnip greens and grits which a northern or western boy has no taste for. Each new company of officer candidates in the regiment is carefully checked as to eating habits and if any sizeable quality of a particular food item is left uneaten, the ration for that item is speedily cut down and a substitute made.

Another practice which has aided immeasurably in the conserving of food is that of ordering rations according to the actual number of men present at messhall meals, as prescribed by a War Department circular. This policy went into effect last February, supplanting that of order-

Mother's Day

From out the trench, from out the sky,
From out the green waves rolling high;
O'er shriek of shell and light of flare—
Voiced in the murmured midnight prayer:
"My God, my God, remember her,
And let my arm be strong for her—
Till in that happy day when we Bring back to Mother—Victory.

Letter From Mother

Far, far from home, but not so far
My love can't find the place you are.
Lonely, but not alone, for there—
You have my picture and my prayer.
Locked in death-struggle with the foe—
My strength goes with you where you go.
Each blow you strike is struck for me—
I share your faith in liberty.
This day, this hour, with you I stand—
Proud in your strength, safe through your hand.

Thirteenth Company, 1st STR, Has Versatile Officer Group

Men Represent All Walks of Life; Some Vets of War in Asia

The Thirteenth Company, 1st STR, soon to graduate, has spent the past twelve weeks under the supervision of Lt. Col. Johns S. Roosma, commanding the Third Bn. The class is unique in many ways inasmuch as it numbers students from almost every state in the Union, as well as students from Allied countries.

Sixty-seven of the Yeah Ha men are recent graduates from West Point. Among these are well known athletes, such as Thomas A. Mesereau, as famous on the gridiron as in the boudoirs of the leading models of New York City Lieutenants Robert S. Beightler, Thomas W. Brown, and George M. Eberle of the West Point contingent have claims to fame also as sons of general officers on active duty. This heritage, however, does not prevent them from being among the hardest working boys of the 13th Company.

FIELD EXPERIENCE

The largest group enrolled in 13th Company consists of officers who have had much field experience. In civilian life, 14 of the officers were teachers in college and high school. Leading neck and neck for second place are the engineers and aggies with 11 of each profession. Journalism and the allied arts knew five of the group with one of them being quite a connoisseur of "cheese cake." Four students were lawyers, and there are representatives of the National Park Service, U. S. Forestry, Civil Service Air Corps, U. S. Welfare, Department of Labor.

One of the class now toiling along the draws with an 81 MM base-plate lists his past occupation as "Country Club Manager." Four chemists are now sweating it out, as well as an accountant, a musician, a horticulturist, a police officer, an ex-Marine, a lathe operator, two insurance claim agents, and six traveling salesmen. Perhaps the oddest vocations in the class are represented by an accomplished fur-cutter and sewer, and an ex-machinist who specialized in making parts for navy torpedo boats.

COLLEGES REPRESENTED

Most students have been in one college or another at some time in their careers, for the names of Citadel, Clemson, Texas A & M, Georgia Tech, L. S. U., Florida, V. P. I., Ole Miss., Davidson and Emory loom large on the register. Graduates of Drexel, Duke, Princeton, and Cornell likewise crept into the roster. There are even two fugitives of the Naval Academy at large.

Officers of Allied nations are 1st Lt. Weichow Fu who has had four years active service against the Japs, 1st Lt. Sun-Yuen Liang, graduate of Kings College in Hong Kong, and 1st Lt. Ole Reimers was on duty with the British Army for six weeks of the Norwegian campaign as a liaison officer. Capt E-Tsung Yeh, has now gone to the advance class. Capt. Yeh had five years in actual combat against the Japs and has been wounded several times.

FROM PHILIPPINES

Popular members of the "refresher course" are Capt. Leon Punsalan and Capt. Maximo Planes, both of the Philippines. Capt. Punsalan is a graduate of West Point and has had much experience in ordnance. He is also a fearless debater and renowned for his inquiring mind, especially towards the end of a lecture. Capt. Planes had had three years service with ordnance, and three years with the engineers.

Bivouac Problem Proves Man Is Known By Deeds

By O. C. ROBERT McCLEAN

You find out how to double time with a full pack without killing yourself. You keep your feet close to the ground, hook your thumbs in the pack straps and shuffle along. After you pass the point where you think you'll die, you find it gets easier. You decide the most beautiful words you ever heard are "Quick time, march."

You discover that there is such a thing as a garrison soldier and a field soldier and that the spotless "on the ball" paragons of the drill field are not necessarily worth a hoot when they get bit solid out on a bivouac.

You make a mental note never to judge a man by what he says about himself. That quiet candidate from Vermont, for instance. Back in the company area you never noticed him, except to wonder why he felt he could be a platoon leader. But on this bivouac you discover that he is the only man in the platoon who can build a fire properly. He is the only one, moreover, who willingly pitches in and gathers wood after dark. He is one of the few candidates in the company who knows how to get a good night's sleep in the woods, how to make a sleeping bag out of a shelter half, how to keep his mess equipment clean and all the other how-tos that can keep a man healthy in the field. You suddenly realize that this man is one of the best men in the platoon and you decide to be more careful in the future about sizing up people.

DON'T NEED SO MUCH

You find yourself going through the chow line two or three times. You miss the PX at first. You would like to have a beer. Several beers. Then you begin finding out you don't need a lot of the things you thought you needed. You find that food when you're hungry, a fire when its cold, a shelter half when it rains are about all you need. And you realize you could do without them if you had to.

You learn how to keep a rifle clean in the field. The first night you used your raincoat to sleep on. The second night, after two hours' work getting dirt and rust out of your rifle, you use the raincoat to wrap around your rifle.

You learn a few more Army phrases. You already know about "trigger happy" and "dry run crazy." Now you hear about "bivouac wacky." The candidate, for instance, who gets cold in the middle of the night and chops down a tree that lands right in the middle of a shelter half. The candidate who can't get in or out of his tent without knocking down a tent pole. The candidate who is afraid of snakes.

TENSION GONE

After a few days in bivouac, you begin to find out more about the men in your company. Everyone seems to relax a bit, the tension is gone. One man is a natural comedian. In front of the fire he gives an imitation of an Infantry School instructor. He uses a mess cup for a microphone and a tent pole for a pointer. Another candidate has a good voice. He leads the singing. The song is: "There's a Long, Long Trail-A-Winding." You think you're a little too old for that and there's a war going on. But suddenly you find yourself singing, too. The way you feel is this: It's a wonderful world and this is the way to live. You look around the fire and you decide: This is the best squad in the platoon and our platoon is the best platoon in the company. At that same moment, the man next to you puts your thoughts into words.

Note to whoever makes our troop training schedules for the American Army: More bivouacs!

Indo Guinea Pig Lives To Relate His Torture

Not long hence the 4th Battalion, 1st STR began a program of training consisting of drill, calisthenics and "Judo." I never cared much for drill, and that's putting it mildly, but it isn't so bad and anyone knows that calisthenics are great for the waistline (this Army chow really builds a waistline if one doesn't get plenty of exercise) but what I'm concerned with is the "Judo."

First of all, I'm only a runt-weight 135—and maybe that's why Lt. Cook, who is the "Judo" instructor, picked on me to be his "Human Guinea Pig." He's 6' 2" in G. I. shoes and weighs about 180 (step right up gals he's handsome too).

Every afternoon we go out into the Cuartel and he shows the rest of the guys how it's done — with me. He's tried head locks, arm locks, wrist twists, heel snatches (and let me tell you that one is hard on the posterior extremities) and many others too numerous to mention. I believe he thinks that my arms, legs, and neck are rubber and I'm beginning to think so to what with all the punishment they've taken and aren't broken, — maybe. He says that the elbow and knee joints will bend only one way and then promptly attempts to bend mine only one way — the wrong way.

Every morning when I get up I swear that every bone in my body is broken and maybe they are. I'm going to have an X-ray taken to find out. He was going to teach the "Flying Mare" and another hold which is worse than it, he says, this afternoon but I fooled him there. I found a lot of work to do so some other poor guy is taking my place. I'll go out and help bring in his remains in a few minutes. If I live until the completion of this course; which is doubtful, I'll be a fit subject for an old soldier home. The best I can expect is a comfortable bed in the Station Hospital. Pray for me I'm going to need it.

Army Abolishes Written Tests In ASTP Program

Several changes in the method of selection of soldiers to receive college instruction under the Army Specialized Training program are listed in a recent War Department memorandum, according to an announcement made at Fort Benning.

Among the first requirements abolished was the written test under which all early candidates had to qualify. In its place experience, education and general intelligence will be weighed. First an applicant must have scored at least 115 or better on the Army General Classification Test. Another prerequisite calls for evidence that the individual can better serve the interests of the Army by further training under this program.

Other requirements state that, candidates who have passed their twenty-second birthday, must have (1) at least one year of college with one year of mathematics, (2) not more than three years of college work or graduated from college unless college work has included three courses in psychology or have a ready speaking knowledge of at least one foreign language.

Interviews for interested persons at the post will be held in the near future with dates to be announced.

Mary Christmas of Owensville, Ind., has joined the WAVES and the Rev. Mrs. Albert Schmitt of Santa Claus, Ind., has become a Navy chaplain.

In one respect "united we stand, divided we fall" does not hold water. In combat zones men should avoid gathering in groups. To fail to do so may shorten somebody's life unnecessarily.

Nurse Duo 24th General Hospital Get Promotions

Two members of the 24th General Hospital nursing staff have been promoted to first lieutenants, according to an announcement from the hospital's headquarters at Fort Benning. They are Second Lieutenants Delores E. Tooraen of New Orleans, La., and Mildred F. Lee, of Louisville, Miss.

Miss Tooraen has been appointed chief nurse of the operating room, while Miss Lee is to serve as assistant to Captain Mary E. Miller, chief nurse of the 24th General Hospital.

Both nurses joined the 24th at Benning last September. Miss Tooraen coming from William Beaumont Hospital, El Paso, Tex.; and Miss Lee from Camp Claiborne, La.

Stifler Starred On Providence Team

A veteran professional football star, now in the 15th Company of the Second Student Training regiment, is showing a lot of youngsters that years don't mean a thing in going over obstacle courses and rough terrain, if a man is in good athletic trim.

He is O. C. James Stifler, Jr., and he has behind him 14 years of organized football experience, including two seasons with the champions of the National Football League.

Back in the days when "Red" Grange and Ernie Nevers were tearing lines apart for the Chicago Bears and the Los Angeles Angels, "Big Jim" Stifler was a star end on the Providence Steam Rollers. Providence was a big league football town in those days, and the Steam Rollers won the title in 1926 and 1927, the two years that Stifler's crashing tactics won him great favor among gridiron followers. Among his well-known teammates was Gus Sonnenburg, later a champion wrestler.

Before playing for Providence, Stifler was a star at Brown University and Peddie School. From professional football, Stifler went into coaching, guiding several preparatory school teams; then banking, and six months ago into the Army.

Stifler, who stands over six feet, weighs less today than he did in 1927 when he quit the pro grame.

The ending is not perfect, however. Stifler is probably the baldest OC in the Second Regiment. But you can't have everything.

Cpl. McGorry Best Bugler

In Tenth Armored; Receives Silver Trophy

Cpl. John R. McGorry of the 54th Armored Infantry regiment, 10th Armored division, has been named the best bugler in the division. Sgt. Jack J. Lindsey and Pfc. R. E. Henderson, both of the 11th Armored regiment, were second and third, respectively, in the contest.

The proceedings were opened by Major General Paul W. Newgarden, commanding general of the 10th Armored Tiger division, who put the contestants at ease with a few well-chosen words on the value of the bugler to the Army.

Such was the calibre of the buglers unearthed in the division that two playoffs were required before the judges could decide on the winner.

In the first playoff, in addition to the winners, were Pfc. John S. Downs of the 423rd Field Artillery battalion, and Cpl. Shore of the 3rd Armored regiment.

To Cpl. McGorry went a beautiful trophy presented to him by the commanding general.

Much credit for their conscientious efforts was accorded the judges, who served very ably. These were Capt. C. W. Carlson, special service officer of the 11th Armored regiment; Warrant Officer R. H. Zoller, bandmaster of the 3rd Armored regiment band, and Lt. H. J. Steigelman, Jr., special service officer, Headquarters, 10th Armored division.

Other buglers in the competition were: Pfc. Parchert, 54th Infantry; Cpl. Klingaman, 54th Infantry; Cpl. Lewis, 419th F. A. battalion; Pfc. Lechuga, 11th Armored regiment; Pvt. Jaggar, 11th Armored regiment; Cpl. Wehe, 11th Armored regiment; Sgt. Bownes, 55th Engineers, and Pvt. Hutchinson, 90th Rcn. battalion.

The competition was held under the supervision of the division special service office, which announces that more bugler contests will be held in the near future.

Mary Farmer Is Service Club No. One Director

Miss Mary Farmer has been appointed director of Service club No. 1 on the Main Post effective at once, Lieut. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, Special Service officer at post headquarters, announced today.

Coming to Service club No. 1 during the latter part of March as recreational and social hostess, Miss Farmer had served at the Lawson Field recreation hall. Her first army hostess assignment was at Camp Wheeler, Ga., after which she came to Fort Benning last August, when she was assigned directly to Lawson Field.

Miss Farmer is a native of Birmingham, Ala. She attended the University of Alabama and then the Birmingham Conservatory. She taught music in Jefferson county schools for six years before becoming an army hostess.

Q. M. Establishes Mobile Salvage Repair Units

Companies' Function Is To Do Same Job As Quartermaster

"For want of a nail . . . a kingdom was lost" is an old time-tested truism which the American Army is now taking heed of in every way possible, according to Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning.

Latest example of the firm belief of the Quartermaster Corps in this old adage is the establishment of several mobile salvage repair companies to do the same job on the battle zones that the Q.M. does at Benning and other stations throughout the continental United States.

Although none of these companies are currently at the fort, Colonel Massey pointed out that several of them have been activated and are in training at other posts. They comprise one of the few groups of soldiers who have developed and perfected their own equipment and are now using it.

IN BATTLE ZONE

Most of the equipment is comprised of mobile shoe clothing and textile repair shops which are able to move over secondary roads at speeds up to 25 miles per hour. These outfits can operate right in the battle zones and keep repaired such items as may get worn or torn in the grind of modern warfare.

The Q.M. salvage repair companies renovate for reissue, either to original wearer or to stock, barracks equipment, outer clothing, leather and rubber footwear, individual equipment and items of heavy tentage.

CARE FOR 50,000

One such company can keep in repair the articles used by approximately 50,000 troops operating under average conditions in a battle zone. Colonel Massey pointed out that these mobile salvage repair technicians must play a dual role in that they also must be skilled soldiers as well as technicians. They are picked men, trained in the art of camouflage and the use of small arms.

The units accompanyinvy troops in the field and are operating a new branch of Uncle Sam's Army which has been designed to permit the supply system to devote the major portion of its effort to transportation of vital tactical materials such a ammunition, gasoline and subsistence.

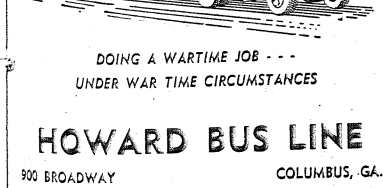
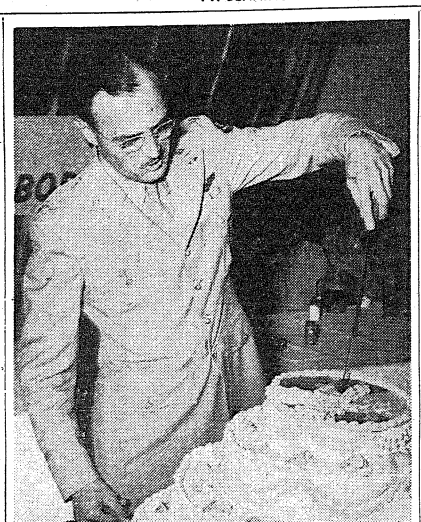
Ping-Pong Pro Pops Pamateurs

Candidate Frank Roberta's ability to defeat everyone in the 11th Company of the Third Student Training Regiment at ping-pong had his fellow officer students puzzled until he broke down and confessed recently that he possesses several championships in the sport. He has now turned "pro" to the extent that he is teaching his friends the finer points of the game.



Roberta started playing ping-pong while serving as a junior officer in the Civilian Conservation Corps. He has played in many tournaments and once captured the district state Wisconsin title. In his home city of Minonk, Ill., he was an outstanding high school and independent athlete and was well on his way to becoming a professional baseball pitcher when he developed "sore arm" trouble.



7 First Regiment Officers Captains

Seven 1st lieutenants of the First Student Training regiment were promoted to captains recently according to a release announced by Colonel Robert Sharp, commanding officer.

All seven have been with 1st Regiment as Tactical Officers in various companies prior to their appointment. Since attaining rank of captain they are serving as company commanders and battalion adjutants as follows: Captain John W. Meyer, 22nd Co.; Captain Wiley D. May, 1st Co.; Captain Harvey H. Denman, adjutant, Service Battalion Hqs.; Captain Felix L. St Claire, 10th Co.; Captain Clement E. Eicks, 3rd Co.; Captain John E. Gribbel, 6th Co., and Captain Russell B. Lawson Hails TTC Natal Day

High Officials On Air From Stout Field Hqs.

Lawson Field under the command of Lt. Colonel John E. Albert celebrated the first birthday of the First Troop Carrier Command at Fort Benning of which it is an integral part with a series of events which continued all day Friday.

The Officers Club at Lawson Field had open house Friday night which featured Colonel Albert cutting and serving an 80-pound birthday cake. Special decorations adorned the enlisted men's mess and mementos of the occasion were presented to each man.

Lawson Field became a member of the FTCC in September, 1942 and is one of two bases of the Command, the principal duties of which are to fly paratroopers and give training to pilots in the transportation of paratroopers.

Headquarters of the Command are Stout Field, Indianapolis, Ind., and is commanded by Brigadier General Fred S. Borum.

Nation-wide commemoration of the anniversary was marked by a radio-hook-up of 50 stations scattered through the country. Participating in the broadcast were General Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Forces, and General Borum.

STUPENDOUS FEAT

American troop carriers performed one of the most outstanding feats in aviation history during the assault on Oran which opened the North African campaign. Hugh transports, virtually unarmored and unarmed, transported United Natiohs troops 1,500 miles non-stop from England to Oran. For this feat and others an entire Troop Carrier Wing and its units were cited by General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The Troop carrier group in the Southwest Pacific area, operating in Australia and New Guinea, also distinguished itself. During the critical moments at Port Moresby, two squadrons ferried 3,600 troops with full battle equipment some 600 miles across shark-infested waters of the Coral Sea in less than 24 hours. As a result Moresby was saved and the tide was turned in favor of the United Nations.

Woman's Club

BY KATHERINE HAMMARGR...

More than two hundred women, members and guests of the Fort Benning Woman's Club, attended the traditional May breakfast of the club Monday. Tables for the event were gay in their patriotic color scheme, carried out through the use of red and white roses, blue bachelor buttons, and sprays of flowering shrubs. The breakfast, final meeting of the club year, was held at 1:30 p. m. in the main lounge of the Officers' Club.

Mrs. Leven C. Allen, honorary president, introduced officers for the next year. They are Mrs. Harold E. Potter, president; Mrs. Francis J. Heraty, first vice president; Mrs. Gilbert E. Parker, second vice president; Mrs. George M. Chescheir, treasurer; Mrs. James Notestein, recording secretary; and Mrs. Eric S. Molitor, auditor.

Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley, retiring president, gave a brief speech of farewell, saying that she hoped the club had been as valuable to its members as it had been to her through the contacts she had made. She stressed the fact that the club has a membership of 500, with the average attendance at general meetings running around 300.

TRIBUTES WORK

Mrs. Walter Scott Fulton followed with a public tribute of thanks for Mrs. Kelley's work during a year filled with great difficulties, after which club members gave a rising and heartfelt vote of thanks for the excellent work and friendly help Mrs. Kelley has given the club.

Those responsible for the success of the breakfast include Mrs. Syril E. Faine, hospitality chairman, and her committee consisting of Mrs. Raymond C. Barlow, Mrs. Henry C. Jones; Mrs. W. M. Spann, Mrs. Edwin S. Wallace, Mrs. E. R. Bowie, Mrs. C. D. York, and Mrs. T. Q. Donaldson. The beautifully decorated tables were the work of Mrs. Harold E. Potter, decorations chairman; Mrs. Paul Newgarden, Mrs. James Notestein, Mrs. W. W. Christian, and Mrs. John W. Hammond.

VIEW OILS

Much interest was shown in the magnificent oil paintings of Captain O. Conrad Schwiering, whose exhibition, sponsored by the Woman's Club, will be shown in the main lounge of the Officers' Club throughout the week. Captain Schwiering's twenty-seven oils range in color and mood from the gorgeous shades of Colorado's red rocks and the gray wispiness of a Wyoming fog, to sketches characteristic of Negro life in the south.

Although this concluded the general meetings of the club until next fall, several of the groups will continue to meet throughout the summer months. The book review group will hold it last meeting Monday, May 10, at 2:30 p. m. in the ladies lounge. Rabbi Herbert S. Waller of Columbus, an exceptionally fine speaker who is in great demand for his book reviews, will review "A Time for Greatness," by Herbert Agar. Mrs. Mason H. Lucas, group chairman, will give a brief talk on new books.

BRIDGE GROUPS

The bridge group, in charge of Mrs. Wilfred Jackson, will meet each Monday throughout the summer, starting May 10, at 2:30 p. m. in the main lounge. The victory gardens group will continue to meet, with its next meeting Thursday, May 13, at 10 a. m. in Mrs. James Notestein's quarters. The Spanish group concludes its meetings this month, but the current events group will continue meeting the fourth Monday of each month, at 2 p. m. in the ladies lounge, to hear the able comments of Colonel Reginald H. Kelley.

The Fort Benning nursery school, started by the Woman's Club last fall, will continue throughout the summer in order to release mothers for needed war work.

MOTHER'S DAY
MAY 9
Remember MOTHER with a Bond!
For every hero on the fighting front, there's a mother on the home front, who in her own sweet way is the "bravest soldier of them all." She's the one who smiled through her tears as she said goodbye to the man in uniform whom her heart kept remembering as a new-born baby placed in the crook of her arm for the first, wonderful time—eighteen, or twenty, or thirty, or more years ago. For every hero in a war plant too, there's a mother busy all day marketting, cooking, cleaning, washing; but not too busy to see that his sleep isn't disturbed by day, because his is a night shift; not too busy to give him a hearty meal whatever hour he gets home. Always sweet, courageous, gracious and of good cheer; making the best of little, doing anything and everything which will help her country—her boy—win, mother renders most distinguished service on the home front; and every son and daughter in the land salutes her!

"We will have to go in and beat Japan to her knees. Those Japs will never surrender. The only peace they will recognize is peace under their own terms. We will have to sink their shipping, bomb their cities and then invade their land. That is the only way to win."

—Ramon Lavalle (Argentine witness of Tokyo raid)

Mothers Of 1943 Are Soldiers All

Mothers are soldiers too these days.

Perhaps they always were better soldiers than we were. They worked for us, fought to clothe and care for us, to educate us, prayed over us, watched us in our early illnesses and our later successes or failures—and never lost faith in us no matter how little we may have repaid them for their travail.

But in time of war, mothers send their sons off, as mothers always have; and they stay behind and keep the old homefires burning.

In this particular war, however, millions of the mothers of American children are not just simply staying at home, struggling with the intricacies of point rationing and trying to see that the family is kept together.

No, sir, the modern mother—and many of them are mothers of sons in the service too—is going out and working in a war plant or stepping into the office with her husband or taking some other active part in the war.

Oh, not all of them, of course. Many are too old or have too many children at home for whom they must care. But today as never before, mothers are backing up their boys in the service by active participation in some productive field which contributes to the successful prosecution of the war. Not all of them are mothers of sons in service—but still they're mothers and it all goes to show the temper of the American public today.

The Spartan mother, who bade her son, going forth to the Pelopnonesian Wars, had nothing on the American mother of today, for where the Spartan lady of old told her son to "come back with your shield or on it"—the modern American mother is helping her son make both shield and spear.

Mother's Day for many years has been celebrated as a time when we pay tribute to American motherhood. This year, as never before, such a tribute must come from the heart.

Here at Fort Benning, 14 fortunate mothers of 14 very lucky soldiers are being brought to the Fort for Mother's Day. These 14 will symbolize for all of the men training here at Fort Benning, the mothers of all of them—indeed, will symbolize the universal American motherhood.

They will be taken about the Post; they will be entertained at dinner; they will be guests of honor at services on Sunday morning. They will return see how their sons are faring in this man's army. They will return to their home cities with more intimate knowledge of an Army camp than most mothers throughout the country can ever possibly have.

Cooperation, Patriotism Go Hand In Hand

A man has many possessions. Of them all the most intimate and the most personal are his thoughts. Thoughts cross the mind constantly, in fleeting succession, sometimes pausing to leave their mark, more often rushing through the mind unnoticed, seemingly unwelcome.

Those which do pause, those which leave their mark are pyramided into shapes and images, building the genus of personality, the mould of character. Often our minds are so preoccupied, justifiably so, with the pursuits requiring our intense concentration and steady application that potentially great thoughts are allowed to escape us. Thus what might have become an important stone in the moulding of the pyramid of our personality goes to the rubble heap unused.

The days of an officer candidate are so crowded that they present a glaring example of that kind of justifiable preoccupation which so enchains the mind as to leave it impotent, unwilling to lie in wait for enlightening new thoughts. Distracting indeed is the threat of a graded test. Which of us can neglect for an instant the ever watchful eye of the tactical officer? Impotant thinking is at a distinct disadvantage under such circumstances. A disastrous affair between my overcoat and an alluirng fire-extinguisher long ago firmly fixed my mind on an azimuth of G*I*G.

Time they say is the great healer. Gradually it has healed the wound of this unfortunate affair. But what has happened in the interim? To what potentially important thoughts have I turned the cold shoulder? I wonder.

Recently a number of things have happened which have startled my mind into at least a semi-receptive state . . . enough so that I have actually taken the time to allow new thoughts to imprint themselves upon my mind. To me they seem basic, important. Following an old habit taught me long ago by a never to be forgotten schoolmaster I set these ideas on paper.

Just as when the trees are thick around us we are unable to see and recall the shape of the forest so it seems we here at school are so preoccupied with daily details that we forget the purpose for which we are here. General Marshall's inspiring letter, read to us recently, cannot help but re-alert our minds to our eventual mission. His words sound a tocsin in the echo of which our petty grumblings fade to a whisper. One cannot misinterpret the vast importance of his meaning when he says: "You will be responsible for a unit in the Army of the United States. Its quality, its discipline, its training will depend upon your leadership . . . the truly great leader displays his quality in his triumphs over adversity, however great it may be . . . the truly great leader displays his quality in his triumphs over adversity, however great it may be . . . we expect great things of you."

In the light of such thoughts as are wakened by these words even the inevitable giant "GIG" becomes relatively tame. Let us then, pause for a moment and give thought to the basic purpose behind our presence here.

The demonstration of the "battalion in the attack" gave us another glimpse at the shape of the "forest." Each portion of our training has so occupied us with its own particular importance that we have been prone to accept it, at least temporarily, as the predominant weapon in our armor. As the weeks have passed we have become confused, increasingly so as our attention was riveted to the study of one weapon after another. In the demonstration we were shown the individual mission of each. Light dawned. The importance of the contribution of each weapon to the power of the whole became suddenly clear. A panorama emerged, a picture complete, inspiring, unforgettable.

During the demonstration, an artillery officer who so capably pointed out the purpose and mission of his weapons, made some very pertinent comments on the subject of cooperation. He also startled us into the reality of our future jobs when he pointed to a distant, solitary figure and shouted: "Take a good look, you future platoon leaders, for there you will be within a year." That hastening figure, crossing an open field of fire was a vivid confirmation of the purpose of our presence here.

It is our duty to learn the true meaning of the kind of cooperation of which the artillery officer spoke. The details of Army duty, Army life, and most especially of Army training are apt to make us forget its value. We complain, we grumble, as President Roosevelt would say, we become "petti-foggers." This petti-fogging adds to the general confusion in our minds. What are we doing here anyway? Officer Candidates, in the Army, learning to lead a portion of that Army . . . Why? . . . Young men uprooted from homes, lifted out of happy, normal lives . . . Why?

The answer is often elusive; but it lies in the essence of the word "cooperotion" as applied to our Country and to our individual relationship with our Country.

For over a century and a half it has been a Nation, the result of the willingness on the part of individual States to cooperate one with another for the common good. Thus we have one Nation, the United States, our Country. During her long history this Nation has served its citizens, cooperated with them to the full. From time to time it has been necessary for those citizens to cooperate in their turn by going to war, for their Country, with their Country.

We Americans are lucky in that we are called on for this cooperation far less often than the citizens of other nations. Our good fortune is apt to lull us into a careless, everyday civilian acceptance of America. Outward show of patriotism becomes frowned upon. We are ashamed to show it in public. But which of us, volunteer or draftee, O. C., captain or general can deny the spinal thrill of a solemn retreat, the secret, soaring wave of passion which surges through us when the Flag, which stands for America, flies nobly in the wind. This is patriotism, good old-fashioned love of Country. The same devotion which filled the heart of Washington and which so devoured the mind of Lincoln. They had it in great degree . . . each of us has it in some degree. That devotion to duty which is expected of us is a natural product of its inspiration.

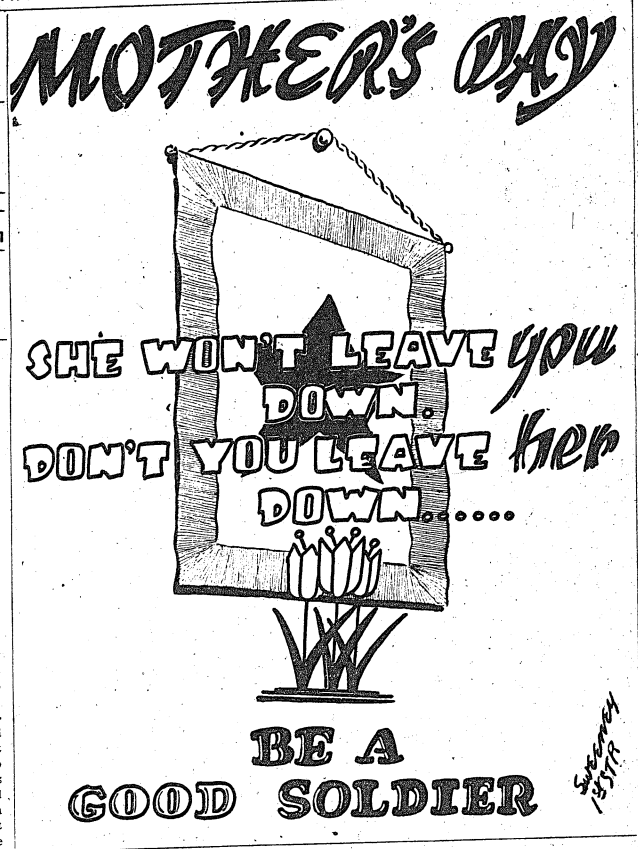
Cooperation and patriotism go hand in hand. The powerful weapon which they present is the natural right of every soldier who appreciates the strength of such a combination. Without them a rifle is ineffective, a mortar but a useless piece of metal. But when skill with mechanical weapons is inspired and directed by cooperation and patriotism Hitler and his clan will do well to take cover.

President Roosevelt in his Lincoln's Birthday address spoke of his recent trip abroad. He told of the many Americans serving their country under difficult and trying circumstances. His challenge to each of us is clear when he says: "American troops, under tremendous strain, are standing up magnificently." . . . Can we do less?

Keep your standards up and your chin will take care of itself.

Vice is so ugly that it always has to put on glamorous make-up.

A machine loses power when its driving belt slips. Men lose power when their moral standards slip. Let's tighten our belts.



Ingratitude causes as many bottlenecks as inefficiency. Jealousy between friends is as dangerous as the sabotage of enemies.

Men who show up for work are still absentee if their hearts are not there or if their minds go woolgathering.

When women stop being high tension wires and become a power line, manpower will be freed for the battle and production lines.

Take the privilege to serve, empty it of carping, and there's nothing left but duty.

We are building weapons and an army adequate to war. When will our thinking and living become so?

NINTH STREET USO CELEBRATION OF FIRST ANNIVERSARY MAY 8

By PVT. SHELDON A. KEITEL

It has been a "big" year since the USO on Ninth Street opened its doors to Fort Benning's soldiers—a year which saw upwards of a half million of them pass through its doors . . . It was opened May 7, 1942 with a gala military ball with the Military Maids and khaki clad lads, so now one year later, Saturday, May 8, 1943, an anniversary military ball with the same combination of dancing partners will be held . . . Festivities should get under way about 8 p. m. Benning time.

A rededication program will be on the program Sunday beginning at 4 p. m. at which time the doors will be thrown open to the general public and the soldiers in particular . . . A military band concert is promised, and there will be singing by choirs from Fort Benning—one the WAAC choir.

A change in the Thursday night program at the USO in Phenix City is announced by Mrs. Kathleen Davis, program director . . . The hostesses will still be there, informality will reign as ever, Edgar White will be there to render his same dulcet rhythms, there will be ping pong games for those so inclined—but there will be no spaghetti supper . . . What will take its place is being withheld as a surprise by Mrs. Davis . . . She prefers to call it simply an "informal snack." . . . The party gets under way at 8:30 p. m. (EWT).

Other attractions spotted on her program include a Friday night social from 9 to 10, a ping pong tournament Saturday from 4 to 5 p. m. and voice and musical recordings which are made from 8 to 10 p. m. Saturdays. A quiz program from 3 to 4 p. m. Sunday followed by a musicale from 5 to 6 p. m. and newsreel and movie shorts Wednesday from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. (EWT) round out the week's doin's.

Merely because the sap runs wild in the trees alone and not on the highways this year, 'tis Spring none the less . . . Mr. E. K. Ackerman of the Army-Navy USO announces the bi-weekly dances at his club will be outdoors henceforth—on the patio.

The popular "Quiz-Serial-Movie" held Tuesday nights at the Ninth Street USO has been instituted now on Thursday nights at the Fort Benning Station Hospital.

A special Mother's Day program Sunday at 4:30 p. m. at the Salvation Army USO will feature a number of Columbus mothers as special guests . . . Miss Mell Talbot, program director, announces the program will be brief but will be compensated by an extra amount of refreshments . . . An added attraction will be the "cutting" of records to send home to mothers of service men.

A visitor of nation-wide prominence will be in Columbus Friday when national president of the United Service Organizations, Chester I. Barnard, arrives for a survey and inspection of the clubs in Columbus and Phenix City . . . In addition he will confer with officials from Fort Benning . . . Mr. Barnard will be accompanied on the visit by J. L. Zwingle, regional USO supervisor.

Lusty song will ring out at the Battle of Victory Music Sunday, May 16, in the Ninth Street USO auditorium when singing teams of soldiers and civilians under the direction of Prof. Arthur Hall of the Yale University glee club will compete . . . Soloists will also be on the victory singing program which will begin at 5:30 p. m.

Why Don't They Grow Up?

SOLDIER SCRIBE IS WEARY OF DISTORTED POR TRAYAL OF G. I.

We are in favor of a concerted campaign by U. S. Army newspaper editors the world over to lend their rhetoric in a vigorous effort to erase once and for all the commercial misconceptions of the American Soldier as he is standardized by the children of literary and artistic commerce.

We refer specifically to the advertising writer, the commercial "G. I." cartoonist, the ebullient newspaper columnist who has belatedly found his literary roost in the slobbering production of daily "Dear Mom" sentiment, the fertile Hollywood scenarist, the military lexicographer who performs mental gymnastics in daily adding to his rapidly swelling dictionary of "Army" language which almost no soldier comprehends, the "cheeze-cake" photographer who gasps at the concept of photographing a cinema voluptuary without including the complete personnel of at least an infantry division to serve as watery mouthed gaping adorees, and all those misinformed individuals who commercialize the conception of a soldier and spread that stereotyped mal-image throughout the public.

To that crowd we say, "emerge from your intellectual diaperism. Here are some admonitions for you."

There is no "average" soldier in the American Army. The only thing average about him is the food he eats, the clothes he wears and the equipment he uses. To refer to the "average soldier mentality" is to presuppose the idea that he is a robot. You would be more correct to refer in such a mathematical manner to the German or Japanese soldier. Their armies stress the ideology of blind obedience. Ours encourages individual thought.

The American Soldier is not universally a pegged pants jivester in mourning for his zoot suit. Arthur Rodzinski conducted the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra at an Army camp and confided to this writer that the reception he received was the warmest and most sincere that any group of true music lovers had accorded him.

The American Soldier doesn't drool each time an attractive lass saunters by — he doesn't write letters to "Mom" like the country bumpkins in the daily columns do—if there is anything slightly novel in his expression it's because he deals with situations peculiar to the business of military life, just as a welder or a railroad worker peppers his speech with the peculiarities of his occupation. Don't worry—this war won't materially reshuffle our traditional use of the English Language. The space around his bunk is seldom littered with revealing photos of pin-up girls, nor does his footlocker contain a clandestine collection of French postcards. You would probably find his mother's picture there, or that of his wife or child or sweetheart.

Also—the First Sergeant doesn't wrestle tigers as setting up exercises—he's quite apt to be a rather quiet, efficient administrator. All officers don't wear Sam Brown belts, click heels and in general strut like Prussian cavalrymen. The Napoleonic Era expired with the 19th century.

And above all, remember this—there is only one prime quality or singular characteristic common to the American Soldier, namely, his desire to see the successful termination of this mess and to return home: The common denominator is VICTORY.

"Stereotype that, will you!"

—L. W. G. in Camp Pickett News.

To which we add "Amen, brother, A-a-a-men."

"Buy a share in 'The World We're Fighting For,'" says a department store advertisement. It can't be done. Friends, happiness and a new world cannot be bought. They are things you have to build. And fight for.

Verse

MOTHER OF MINE

Mother, you are my beacon light
You gave me eyes to see
And guided me through my boyhood days
I'll always cherish thee.

I recall songs you sang to me
They bring back joyful tears
Mother mine, your sunny smile
Calmed my childish fears.

Each night I say a prayer for you
You are always in my heart
Mother mine, please do not weep
Although we're far apart.

Let me bid you fond adieu
Until we meet again
God bless you now and ever more
Mother of mine, amen.

RATION FIGGERS ARE JOB FOR A DR. ALBERT EINSTEIN

Some of us are going around with a dazed look in our eyes these days, the result of a heavy session with our ration books. Life, which used to be a fairly simple affair, seems to be getting more and more complicated. To one not blessed with a methodical and mathematical mind, it is filled with moments of blank confusion.

After sitting down with pencil and paper for a bit of higher mathematics, you emerge triumphant with a sample menu and a list of groceries, sure that you're living up to all the admonitions the women's magazines give about a balanced diet. You're eager to try some of those low point foods which are written about in such glowing terms.

One glance at the vegetable counter and substitutes start whirling through your harried mind. A conference with the butcher and you know you're going to be satisfied with what he has. If you're low on meat points there's no chicken or fish; if you've saved your points for a munificent feast there's nothing much left but hamburger.

THOSE YOUNGSTERS!

Families, too, have a habit of disorganizing your carefully plotted menus. You can lecture on the sinfulness of waste all you like, but the three-year-old will still leave an egg half consumed, lick the butter off his bread and leave the crusts, turn down his carrots, and get into the cookie jar. Maids have an annoying habit of overlooking that little dab of leftovers you had in mind for lunch, to whittle away at the baked ham you'd thought would do for four persons. That precious pound of cheese, hoarded for some elaborate casserole concoction, meets the ravenous eye of the man of the house, with disastrous results. If you have two dozen oranges and one bottle of tomato juice, be sure everyone will decide to have tomato juice for breakfast.

JEERS AND HOOTS

Your efforts to provide a balanced diet meet with jeers and hoots from other members of the family. The maid has been used to cooking her vegetables well and long, and she's not going to change over to any new-fangled ideas. Males have an idea of long standing that this talk of vitamins is just a passing fad, and if they eat plenty of what they like they'll automatically have a balanced diet throughout the week. Children can't see why a lollypop and a dish of ice cream aren't as nourishing as orange juice and a mixed salad.

Some of us are beginning to look longingly at the recruiting notices for women, and those advertisements for women in war industries where you take a short course and start hauling down amazing sums. It would be so much simpler to turn over the children to grandma, discard your ration books, and put in a straight number of hours a day. Only grandma's busy with her own work, auxiliaries bar women with small children, and the family unit has to be kept together. Perhaps the solution is to take a course in higher mathematics and put a padlock on the ice box.

ONE OF T. P.'s FORMER CORPORALS TURNS UP WEARING MAJOR'S LEAVES

By S. SGT. TOM McDONALD

Colonel Swampwater's background is extremely interesting due to the fact that in the course of his Army career he has been pleasantly blessed with opportunities of meeting people from every walk of life.

At 11 a. m. today one of these chance acquaintances strolled into our office. He was a lanky mountaineerish looking major. His blue eyes roved menacingly around as he made an estimate of the situation.

"Sergeant," growls he, "Conduct me to the presence of 'ol 'Beer and Butts' Swampwater!"

"Beg pardon," I gasped, nearly falling off my swivel chair.

"I said show me in to ol' 'Beer and Butts' Swampwater. He usta by my platoon leader when I was a corporal in the ol' army."

"Indeed!" I queried, "and prithee inform me why you call the ol' boy 'Beer and Butts."

"Well, sergeant, 'twas like this. Back in 1921 when the old boy was in our unit, he was really heli on wheels. He growled and barked and hemmed and hawed so all-fired much we men were almost afraid to breathe in his presence. But the reason he got his nick-name was because of the fact that whenever he could gig a fellow, he delighted in sending him up to the post exchange to pick up cigarette butts."

"Was that difficult?" I asked.

"Extremely so," replied the major. "You see, there were 10 square miles of land around the buildnig without a tree or a bush on it. Those cigarette butts usta stand out like a sore thumb.

"Naturally after picking up butts for hours we would always be on the lookout for a chance to slip into the canteen and have a beer. If it hadn't of been for this little quirk of fate, I don't know how we could ever have stood the ordeal as long as we did. But that is how ol' T. P. became known as 'Beer and Butts' Swampwater."

"Well, we-ll, W-E-L-L !!!," I chuckled. "If you'll step this way, Sir, I'll see if we can't arouse the ol' boy."

After going through the customary procedure of kicking the wastebasket out from under the colonel's feet, we brought him back to reality.

"Well Shades of Salome!" he bellowed, grabbing for the major's hand, "Bless my soul if it isn't Corporal Rockbottom of the ol' 77th!"

"Major Rockbottom," corrected our guest.

"Well, blow me down," cackled old T. P. "and how in the world did you reach your majority, Rockbottom?".

"I got it in 1931, Sir, in the usual manner."

"I don't believe I recall," mused the colonel.

"Well it was this way, Sir. They had an advertisement in 'The Wooly West' magazine by the Crazy Crackles Corn Flake Company, and everybody who ate enough cornflakes to send 24? box-tops to the War Department could get a commission as second lieutenant. I ate enough to send in 313 box-tops so I was given a first lieutenancy in the Officers Reserve. Since the war began I have been promoted every six months with very little apple polishing."

"Well, well, well," beamed ol' T. P. "Come into my office, Major, and try some of my imported chewing gum."

Chaplain's Corner..

A SENSE OF DIRECTION

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

The sense of direction is one of the lost powers of civilized man. Time was when he could find his way about, unerringly. With the coming of roads, signs and maps this gift wasted away, atrophied. Put down in an unfamiliar place and left to his own devices, he simply wanders in a circle.

The most damaging criticism of our age, is that it is on its way but knows not where it is going. In the realm of education there is no agreement as to methods or the ends sought. In the domain of governments there is conflict, chaos. None striving for the same goal. In religion the situation is as disturbing. A multitude of isms, sects, are teaching, spreading divergent doctrines—all contending for supremacy. In our own land the old moorings have been swept away. The things we once trusted in no longer avail. And we are drifting no one knows whither.

Long ago mariners steered their course by the light of the heaven. They could do so today, for the sun and the stars are fixed, abiding. In the fret and confusion of life, amid the push and pull of circumstances, in the twilight of faith, man must have on his horizon, something steadfast, unchangeable, to light his way, otherwise he goes in a circle, getting nowhere. That, was the Psalmist's mood, he too was seeking direction when he cried:

I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth.

From that vantage ground he could tell where he was going.

No talent, no character, no brains are required to set up in the grumbling business. There is nothing easier than fault-finding. It takes the investment of all you have to go in for the rebuilding business. But it's the only profitable enterprise.

He laughs best who laughs last—at his neighbor's faults—and first at his own.

Mirthful Comedy Slated For 5-Day Stand Here

USO-CAMP SHOWS brings a brand new edition of "Funz'A'Fire" to Fort Benning on May 11 for a five-day stay. This is the big slap-stick musical comedy revue which premiered the whole Camp Show's entertainment program at Camp Lee in November 1941. It was a smash hit and continued to wow servicemen on its swing of military posts all during the 1941-1943 seasons.

The schedule of performances is announced as follows:

May 11 (Tuesday), Main Theatre, 6:45 and 8:45 p. m.; May 12 (Wednesday), Main Theatre, 6:45 and 8:45 p. m.; May 13 (Thursday), Theatre No. 7, 7:30 and 9:30 p. m.; May 14 (Friday), Theatre No. 11, 7:00 and 9:00 p. m.; May 15 (Saturday), Theatre No. 4, 7:00 and 9:00 p. m.

Second show — May 12th—Colored Personnel Only.

In addition to playing to troop audiences, "Funz'A'Fire" toured the top theatres of the country for the past several seasons on a solid-book schedule. This new edition is the fourth revised edition since the show was first produced.

"Funz'A'Fire" is pure comedy with the stops wide open. Anything is likely to happen and does. The action takes place all over the theatre, in the balcony; up and down the aisles; in the pit, and occasionally on the stage. Actors break into each others routines, heckling, ribbing, ad-libbing. The audience stooges plenty and likes it. The whole show is 'strictly on the beam' hokum and super entertainment.

MEROFF EMCEE

Benny Meroff, band leader, expert juggler, dancer and four star zaney, heads the revue with his ten-piece orchestra. He also doubles as master of ceremonies. The rest of the cast of headliners include: Whitey Roebrts in "Laff Insurance," Jack Gwynne and company, "Masters of Deception": Marge and Karr, "Dance Sophisticates"; Al DeVito, "The King's Jester"; Kitty McLaughlin, "Aero-Maniac"; Bob Craig, "The Long of It" and Rita DeVere, "The American Wonder Girl."

The above listed are all fugitives from the state institute and when they start reverting to type mania runs wild. All in all, "Funz'A'Fire" is a very gooley three-ring circus tossed into one stage.

Bakers, Cooks Get Course In Mess Inspection

Three new courses in mess inspection and supervision for officers of all grades will be instituted in Quartermaster Corps Bakers and Cooks schools in the Fourth Service Command, according to word from the parent school located at Fort Benning.

The object is to train the officers in a practical program of mess management with a view to prevention of waste and establishment of a mess control program within their respective units and commands.

Course "G", which is the most comprehensive of the three courses, is designed for company grade officers and contemplates a month's instruction in all phases of mess management and supervision, including duties and discipline of mess personnel, methods of inspection, cleanliness, care of equipment, meal service, accounting and conservation of food.

Also included in this course will be instruction in cookery, handling of rations, the Army subsistence system, inspection and storage of foods, sanitation, field equipment and training of mess personnel, to insure maximum use of all items of the ration.

Course "H" is designed especially for field grade officers and will require 10 days. It is planned to instruct officers to fulfill efficiently the duties of mess supervisors. This course is pointed particularly to the training of new officers exercising command responsibilities in the proper handling of the Army ration.

A serviceman may name his parents as beneficiaries of National Seivice Life Insurance even though the latter are living in Nazi-occupied lands. However, payment is postponed in case of death until after cessation of hostilities.

The Officers R. & R. Club on Cusseta Road is by far the most popular place in Columbus for commissioned officers and their guests. Ask anyone on the reservation who has been there.

Wives Wonderful But Can They Say Silly Things!

Comes graduation time in the Third Student Training Regiment and many of the officer candidates are restored to contact with the world of femininity. Wives arrive. Phone calls are made to the sources of those sugar reports. And the candidates rediscover that women are wonderful but that they just don't understand the Army.

Sample utterances, as reported by various candidates:

"But surely if you told them that your wife was in town they'd excuse you from classes."

"I called you and they said you were out in the field. I don't understand why they couldn't have sent someone to the field to get you."

"How many stripes will you have on your sleeve now?"

"You simply have to graduate. I just bought a new outfit that will look marvelous with your new dark uniform."

"Why don't you ask for a two-week vacation?"

2nd Regiment Food Conservation Program Saves $2,500 Monthly

Veteran Mess Sergeant Reduces Wastage To Rock-Bottom Minimum

Food conservation is nothing new to Tech. Sgt. Minor Turner, of the Second Student Training Regiment at the famous Infantry School. He has been practicing it ever since he entered the Army 13 years ago. He started as a cook, and for the last 10 years has been a mess sergeant, so he knows all the angles.

"The way I feel about it is this," said Sergeant Turner. "Even in the Army, we're still tax-payers, and any food we waste costs all of us money. And, brother, you can bet your shirt that we don't waste any food or money around here."

Sergeant Turner told of a plan he and the regimental mess officer, Lt. Robert F. Starr, have been using for some time, which is already saving the Government some $2,500 a month in this regiment alone.

The idea is to make the maximum use of non-perishable leftovers, so every ten days each battalion mess officer makes an inventory of the left-overs in the six company mess halls under him, and turns in a report to the regimental mess officer.

Thus, the left-overs can be combined and redistributed to various companies, and the total amount of food ordered from the Quartermaster can be considerably reduced from the rations allowed.

DAILY SAVINGS

An average daily saving from the careful use of this system runs to about $85 for the regiment. The amount of food saved in a typical day is even more impressive; 633 lbs. of flour, 170 lbs. of coffee, 129 lbs. of lard, 54 cans of evaporated milk, 21 cans of tomatoes, 14 quarts of jam, and 7 quarts of mayonnaise.

Sergeant Turner pointed out other methods long used by the Army to save food. For example, when cold drinks such as iced tea or fruit juices are served, the sugar is not simply put into the drink and stirred up, because a lot of it would sink back to the bottom that way. The Army way is to dissolve the sugar thoroughly in warm or hot water, and then stir it into the drink before being iced.

Another example of how the Army gets the last drop out of nearly everything, is the matter of fats, which are obtained from cooking meats. These fats are used two or three times over, for making rolls and frying potatoes, etc., until there just isn't any more fat in them. Then what's left is turned over to salvage.

INSPECTION INVITED

"Anytime anybody wants to inspect this area for food wastage, we'll be glad to have them," Sergeant Turner said, and added, "Let 'em come and see how we do it. Maybe they'll learn something."

As for garbage, Sergeant Turner told how the civilian garbage contractor who takes it away keeps asking him why there is so little of it. Well, for one thing, no company can throw away food unless it has been inspected by the battalion mess officer.

Also, Sergeant Turner himself, as regimental mess sergeant, along with the regimental and battalion mess officers, inspect the garbage cans every day to make sure that waste-prevention orders are carried out.

From an average noon meal for a company of 200 men, where more than 200 pounds of food are served, the garbage amounts to less than 25 pounds. This consists for the most part of unusable parts of vegetables, with less than five pounds of thrown-away food. This is about one-fortieth of a pound of food per soldier, or less than half an ounce.

"If that's wasting food at Fort Benning," said Sergeant Turner, "I'd like to know it."

"The officer candidates in our regiment burn up a lot of energy, and you can be sure they are not going to let any good food get away from them," Sergeant Turner concluded, "So we try to give them the best prepared food we know how. A good cook is half the battle in preventing waste."

Civilian Activities

By MYRTLE M. JOINES

Congratulations to the Sub-Depot at Lawson Field. Just one year ago in April, the Sub-Depot had its birth. From the small beginning of 19 civilian employes to 286 as of today, this sub-depot has outgrown all expectations since it fills such an important phase of the War effort.

The Sub-Depot has only two officers—Major W. A. Choppin, commanding officer, and Lt. D. D. King, supply officer.

The civilians coming from every walk of life are skilled mechanics, welders, riveters, warehousemen, supply clerks, specialists of various kinds, stenographers, clerks, clerical administrative clerks and fiscal clerks.

The Sub-Depot is also the end of a chain of supply and takes care of hundreds of articles used by the American Air Force.

The task of servicing our air force lies with the Sub-Depot and they are doing a swell job in "Keeping 'Em Flying."

Rifles Boast Strong Infield In TIS League

Stars From STR Regiments Have Varied Background

Contributing in no small measure to the successful start of the Fort Benning Rifles in the Infantry School Baseball League has been the sparkling play of their experienced and versatile infield. Selected from among the outstanding diamond performers of the Second and Third Student Training Regiments, each man can point to a brilliant baseball background covering school, professional and semi - professional phases of the game.

In the infield lineup is First Lieut. William C. Andrews who recently was transferred from the first baseman's post to that of catcher, where he has distinguished himself in the last two games.

SORRELS IS SLUGGER

For their slugging, the Rifles look to Corp. Paul A. Sorrels, third baseman, who played varsity baseball at Texas Christian University before entering the Army. Sorrels, mainstay of the team's offensive strategy, has been hitting .485 in the last eight games and is a capable performer defensively as well.

MANY KEYSTONERS

The team is well supplied with men to patrol the active region around second base. The Rifles have two regular second basemen in Francis Whalen and the irrepressible Brooklynite, James Patrick Carney. Also posted at that base is Corp. James C. Smithers, who occasionally is moved to the shortstop position. The regular shortstop is Corp. Carril Guzzaro.

Rounding out the infield is Sgt. Charles Coley who recently was removed from the outfield to take up the first baseman's job vacated by Lieutenant Andrews.

Star Hurler George Cave Is Pride of 300th Nine

Once Hurled For Baltimore Orioles In International

In its maiden game two weeks ago, the 300th Infantry baseball team produced a startling sensation in the form of its star pitcher, 21 year old George "Red" Cave, who held the University of Georgia to one run, and struck out 19 batters.

Those who know the baseball record of Cave were delighted but not surprised at his first attempt in Army baseball. Cave, a native of Louisville, Kentucky, has played baseball as far back as he can remember. He pitched on the varsity team at Dupont Manual Training High School, Louisville, Kentucky, under Coach Ralph Kimmel, who was also a scout for the Philadelphia "Phils" and the Baltimore "Orioles."

His first professional baseball assignment was with the Martinsville Club of Virginia, a farm of the Philadelphia "Phils," where he played for three and a half months with a record of 10 wins and 3 losses. The league of which Martinsville was a member, had to close down because of transportation problems arising from the war and Cave was sold to the Portsmouth, Virginia, club in the Piedmont league where he played during spring training and for one month of the season under the tutelage of Tony Lazzeri. While with this club he pitched 5 scoreless innings in an exhibition game with the Navy team out of Norfolk and drew as his opponents, Bob Feller and Sam Chapman.

Portsmouth had five veteran hurlers on the staff, so they optioned "Red" to Statesville in the North Carolina State league. At this time the New York Yankees took notice of the young promising pitcher and began negotiations to obtain him, but the Baltimore Orioles also had their eyes on him, and because of his life-time friendship with Ralph Kimmel, the scout for the Orioles, "Red" decided to go with Baltimore. He played 2 months with them ringing up a record of 4 wins and 1 loss. The Orioles farmed him out to Jacksonville for more polishing and "Red" finished the 1942 season with that club. He was to return to the "Orioles" this year and eventually wind up with the Cleveland "Indians," but Uncle Sam decided he wanted "Red".

Sgt. Cave, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mamuel S. Cave, live in Louisville, Kentucky, has matched his successful but brief baseball career with an equally brilliant record in Army life. Inducted in October of 1942, he completed six weeks basic training at Fort McClellan and was sent to the 300th Infantry at Fort Benning in December.

Cave's remarkable strike out record against the University of Georgia was nothing new for him. In high school he struck out 19 and 17 in two consecutive games. The 300th is quite proud of its sensational hurler and expects great things of him.

Ski Ace Misses Chance To Get Der Furher

Was On Olympic Team In Germany In 1936 Events

Angriest man in the Army of the United States is former Olympic star James Ralph Hendrickson of Eau Claire, Wis. He once was close enough to Adolf Hitler to do some fancy bayonet work and he didn't even have a pocket knife.

In 1936 Hendrickson was a member of the U. S. team which participated in the last Olympic Games, the quadrennial event which has been abandoned until the world has been restored to peaceful normalcy. The 1936 Olympics were held in Germany and to that country went Hendrickson as an American ski jumping specialist.

Now an infantry officer candidate in the 17th Company of the Third Student Training Regiment, Hendrickson vigorously is preparing himself to make up for that 1936 oversight. His ambition again is to swish down a German hillside; but instead of balancing a ski pole, he plans to be gripping an M-1.

And he's just the men to do it. In 1936 he broke the U. S. artificial ski-jump record with a 206-foot jump. His 246 feet in 1935 splintered records for a natural hill jump and in 1937 he rewrote sports history with a scaffold (artificial hill) jump of 250 feet at Iron Mountain, Mich. The present U. S. record is 287 feet.

Hendrickson has been skiing since he was a youngster. At the age of nine he competed in the Midwest Boys' Division of the Central Ski Association. At Eau Claire High School and Eau Claire State Teachers College he was outstanding in all sports. A volunteer officer candidate, he entered the Army last October.

764th Tankers Bow To Rifles

After a week-long slump, the STR Rifles regained their batting eyes Friday night to trounce the 764th Tankers by 14-7 under the lights at Gowdy Field. It was the Rifles' second victory in as many starts in the Infantry School Baseball League. The Rifles previously had beaten the Tankers in a non-league encounter.

In Friday night's engagement, each team collected 10 hits but the Rifles bunched theirs to produce the winning runs. The Tankers got off to an early lead, largely as the result of Rifle errors, but in the fourth inning the Rifles settled down to some steady, serious swatting.

WESTON HITS HARD

A new hitter was discovered in Lieut. Jack Weston who hurled competently for the Rifles throughout the game. In spite of the tiring rigors on the mound, Lieutenant Weston clouted out three well-placed hits in a row.

Corp. Paul Sorrels, the team's dependable slugging third baseman, came through as expected and chalked up another trio of hits, two of them for extra bases. A brace of belts was added to the total by Outfielder John Strukel, usually a good hitter, who has been in a slump wiht the rest of the team for the past week.

NEW POWER

The resurgence of hitting power has instilled a new fighting spirit among the Rifles and their followers in the Second and Third Student Training Regiments that is certain to bring favorable results in forthcoming games both within and outside the league calendar.

Tennis Ace With 54th Armored Reg't

Voigt Ranks Among First 15 Top-Ranking Netmen of Nation

Cpl. Frank Voigt of Co. H, 54th Armored Infantry Regiment, may get in some tennis this year—if he can find anyone in the 10th Armored Division who plays his kind of game. Otherwise, he'll just remain on the sidelines in his capacity as director of the division's tennis program.

For Voigt is among the 15 top-ranking tennis players in the country. He will concede victory in advance only to such champions as Dod Budge, Perry, Skeen and Riggs, and the chances are that he would give even these top-notchers a hard game. As a matter of fact, Voigt and a partner, Dan Watson, defeated Dick Skeen and Welvy Van Horn in a doubles tournament at Orlando, Fla., the winter before last.

He has also played Budge—and has only this to say about the king of the courts: "He's marvelous." Budge, of course, won the match, but not before Voigt had carried the second set to set point. The final score was 6-2, 8-6.

LIKES BUDGE'S SERVES

Voigt was most impressed with the terrific driving power in Budge's serves. On another occasion when he was playing against Budge, the great Don smashed one across the net which caught Voigt in the back.

"I had a large welt on my back for a week as a result of that blow," he says.

Voigt has lived tennis practically all his life. Tennis runs in his family. One uncle, James Kenney, has been a tennis instructor for 25 years. Another uncle, Daniel Kenney, was a tennis pro for many years until his death, and was the father of four boys who all became tennis pros. So it was only natural that Vigt should decide while he was still in his 'teens to make a living from tennis.

He started to play tennis at the age of 14—he is now 21—and by the time he was 16 he was teaching the game. His uncle, James Kenney, gave him his first lessons and he picked up more tricks later from Karel Kozeluh, the Czechoslovakian who was seven-time world's pro champion. Voigt served at Kozeluh's assistant for three years in Greenwich, Conn.

TAUGHT TENNIS

Then, for eight years until the war came along, Voigt taught tennis at clubs all over the country and played tournament tennis whenever he had time. Just before he was inducted into the army he was at the Woodhill Club in Wayzata, Minn., and the previous winter he spent at the Everglades Club in Palm Beach, Fla.

In addition to his match with Budge, he has played in exhibitions with "Big Bill" Tilden and "Vinny" Richards.

A year ago Voigt won the Palm Beach pro tournament against the heaviest kind of competition. In the Orlando tournament the same season he and Dan Watson came out on top despite the fact that Skeen and Van Horn were the top-seeded team.

Voigt has played and defeated such famed women stars as Kay Stammers and Alice Marble but dismisses these achievements with the observation that "any professional male player can defeat the best woman players because of superior strength and endurance if for no other reason." He concedes, however, that "Miss Marble is really good—she can really smash that ball."

The war has brought some changes to tennis, Voigt says. In the first place, most of the leading male stars have entered service. And in the second place, tennis is a slower game today because of the new tennis balls, in which reclaimed rubber is used.

As far as he himself is concerned, Voigt is glad to be in uniform and he really likes army life. And his tennis life has so conditioned him that nothing to date has bothered him.

Tiger Track Meet Slated For May 8

Units Await Gun Opening Red Hot Compete Saturday

Preparing to "dash off" with honors in the forthcoming 10th Armored division track meet, the 423rd Armd. F. A. Bn., the 11th Armd. Regt. and the 3rd Armd. Regt. have weeded out their best track stars and are waiting for the opening gun to start them around the track at Tiger field on May 8.

Competing in the 423rd F. A. Bn. events, Pvt. W. H. Hildabrant, T-5 H. C. Powers, Cpl. Q. M. Jeter and Pvt. N. J. Kaster won top places respectively in the 100-yard dash, 220-yard and 440-yard dashes and the 880-yard run. Running as a team, Pvt. Hildabrant, T-5 Bowers, Cpl. L. J. MacDonald and Sgt. Paul Miles won the 440-yard relay. The team of Jeter, Hibbets, Zychiewicz and Kukulka ran away with the one mile relay event. Pvt. Radke and Pvt. Givens proved to be the best hand grenade throwers whereas Pvt. W. E. Radke came back and won the shot put contest. Pvt. P. F. Cox and Cpl. H. C. Allnut won the running broad jump and high jump events.

FIELD DWINDLES

After a hard day's work, the 11th Armored regiment, was finally able to dwindle down their field of competitors to three representatives in each event. Pontecore, Varlous and Lennox won places in the 100-yard dash while Bourguin, Wynaroski and Appin ran in that order in the 220-yard dash. The 440-yard event and 880-yard run were won by Aspistle and Dennison, respectively.

Druzewski, Zubel, Freeman and Snyder placed second and third in these events. The obstacle course race was won by Morgan and Caraway. In the jumping events O'Briant, Branch and Grogan won the high jump while Morgan and Grogan were first and second in the broad jump. West, Holtmyer and King were the most accurate hand grenade throwers and Gutknecht and Fleming placed one, two in the shot put contest.

Winners in the regiment's second meet were Kowzinski, Dunham, Vaughan, Szekely, McConnaughey, Grassi, Casp and Sullivan.

FIELD DAY

The 3rd Armd. Regt. had a gigantic field day with companies of each of the four battalions competing against each other. Reconnaissance Co. of the Provisional battalion scored 52 points or one more point than Headquarters Co. of the 1st Bn. was able to collect. A total of 580 entrants took part in 11 events and a large number of creditable performances was the result. Bullano of I Company, Hylinski of 1st Bn., Hq. Co., Geiger of A Company, Deforest of Regimental Headquarters Co., Leshke of 2nd Bn., Headquarters Co., Lionetta of D Company, Alexander of E Company and O'Zuna of Reconnaissance Company showed up exceptionally well, taking at least two places in events and in a number of cases also taking their places on the winning relay teams of their respective companies.

Contestants participating in the division track meet will be out to win individual awards for themselves and the team winning the most points will receive a trophy for the unit they represent. A large field is expected to participate.

Rifles Plaster 71st Engineers

In a wild exhibition, featured by a wholesale commission of errors on both sides, the Fort Benning Rifles made their start in the Infantry school baseball league by plastering the 71st Engineers, 26 to 9, under the Gowdy Field lights last week.

The Rifles seized the lead in the first inning when they pounced on Kight, the Engineers' starting twirler, for a pair of hits which were speedily converted into five runs.

BESSINGER HURLS

Lieut. William Bessinger, who opened on the mound for the Rifles, was touched for only one hit in the first inning but ran into trouble in the third when the Engineers started to threaten his lead. He was relieved then by Lieut. Jack Weston who hurled capably for the remainder of the game.

The Rifles were leading, 17 to 9, when the game entered the eighth inning. Despite the Rifles' protests, the Engineers insisted upon continuing to play. The eighth inning produced a demonstration that broke the heart of everyone in the park as a monotonous procession of Rifle base runners crossed the plate to add nine more runs. The Engineers then threw in the towel before taking their turn at bat.

Profs Meet Brigadier Nine in Opening Tilt As 124th Faces 300th

BY SGT. MILTON LUBAN

The Academic Regiment Profs face a busy week with two tough Infantry School league games coming up on Sunday and Wednesday, followed by an exhibition game with Camp Rucker next Saturday night.

On Sunday afternoon, at 1:30, the Profs face the Student Training Brigade in one of their toughest contests of the season, as the opener of a double-header which also features the 124th Infantry against the 300th Infantry.

STRONG HURLING

The Brigadiers are exceptionally strong in hurling with Prendergast and DeColder, two crack pitchers, ready to toe the mound. Behind the plate they have Simmons, a heavy hitter and a capable receiver. Their infield is a strong one, with Arneth at first, Oswald at second, McCluskey at third and Bamburger at short. The outfield will probably be Kelleher, Ryan and either DeVolder or Prendergast, according to who does the pitching. Both hurlers are heavy-hitters.

On Wednesday the Profs face the STR Rifles, who are tide with them for first place, each having won two and lost none.

WESTON STRONG

So far, the Rifles have shown an ace hurler in Weston, a strong batting attack and a rather shaky defense. In their two games played at this writing the Rifles have scored 26 and 14 runs. But they have also kicked in with five and seven errors. If the Rifles tighten up their infield they're going to be mighty tough opposition.

NEIBLER RETURNS

The Profs will be at full strength with Neibler out of the hospital and ready to cover third. Cox is recovering from his leg injury, and his big bat should be available for Sunday's game. Dickinson will do the pitching for the Profs with Fenno behind the plate. The latter is a smooth receiver and batted well over .400 last season. In Monday's game against the 300th Infantry Fenno came through with a home run with the bases loaded.

Bobo and Lhener have come around to their pitching form and with Rundus, the Profs are set in the hurling department. At second the Profs have Zientara, which is enough said, while Russo holds down the shortstop post with speed and efficiency. The outfield is a heavy hitting one with Mercer, Hill, Cox and Dabbs ready to go.

Next Saturday night the Profs will face the powerful Camp Rucker nine with Lee Grissom, former Cincinnati hurling star, expected to pitch for the visitors.

RETURNS TO ACTION—After a brief absence due to illness, hard-hitting Elmer Neibler, star third baseman of the Academic Profs, will be back at the hot corner Sunday when the defending champs tackle the Brigadiers in the opener of a twin bill. (Signal Lab Photo by Stock.)

Gold Miner Is With 3rd STR

Says in Spring All Salmon and Sourdoughs Head for Alaska

A former gold miner who should know whereof he speaks is busy assuring his fellow officer candidates in the Fourth Company, Third Student Training regiment, that they should harbor no dread over possible shipping orders to Alaska.

The candidate, Thomas A. Varnson of Vancouver, Wash., declares: "In the spring the salmon all head for Alaska and every man who's ever been there wants to do the same."

Varnson got the gold mining itch at an early age, acquiring it from a colorful uncle who had made several fortunes in Alaska. After completing his sophomore year at Washington State College, he headed for Juneau, first working as a "mucker" in the Lucky Shot mine in the Talketna Mountains.

"A mucker," Varnson explains, "is at the bottom of the gold mining social ladder. He uses a long-handled idiot stick (a shovel) on the ore that the miners have loosened." But for the war, Varnson today might be a "bulldozer," the miner who makes the most money for doing the most dangerous work.

"But in Alaska money is of small importance," Varnson goes on. "Most people there work because they like it and what they make they spend fast. A man never comes into a bar to buy one drink. He's expected to buy a round for everyone in the house."

Varnson says he has heard wolves howl around his cabin at night and has found bear tracks so wide he could stand with both feet inside one paw print. He has seen moose wander down a trail like cattle going to pasture.

Entering the Army in April, 1941, Varnson was shipped overseas, arriving in Honolulu a week after the Pearl Harbor attack. He volunteered for a task force and spent several months on a lonely atoll in the Phoenix Islands before being sent to OCS.

O. C. Witnesses Cannon's Opening Roar In China

A ringside seat at the opening skirmishes of the Sino-Japanese War in July, 1937, was occupied by Officer Candidate Wilmer J. Davis of the Sixth Company, Third Student Training Regiment Infantry School, who at that time, was a U. S. Marine.

Stationed at Peiping, China, Davis watched the development of the battle centering around the Marco Polo Bridge. From the third floor of their barracks, Davis and his companions could see artillery lay its barrages and the Jap planes carry out their bombing and strafing attacks. They also were witnesses to the 24-hour evacuation of the Chinese forces from the city and the subsequent entry of Japanese troops.

20 Hit Attack Downs 223ers By 23-2 Score

The 53rd General Hospital captured the undisputed ASF championship last week with a crishing 23 to 2 victory over the 226th Station Hospital.

The 53rd lost little time in proving which was the better team by garnering 13 runs in the first three innings. The battery for the 53rd was Davis, pitcher and O'Toole, catcher. Byszesky, with a single, double, and home - run, and Perrenteau, with a double and two singles led the 53rds 20 hit attack.

The 53rd went through the league schedule without a loss. Earlier in the week the 53rd gained a forfeiture from the 24th General Hospital as the former failed to produce a team on the playing field.

In winning the championship the 53rd is sporting one of the best softball records of any outfit at Fort Benning with an average of 900 with 2 losses against 18 victories. The team is coached by Sgt. Ralph S. Brandt, formerly with Linfield College in Oregon. 2nd Lt. Charles Fellers is athletic officer and Major Wayne Brandstadt, the commanding officer.

BEAT STRONG OUTFITS

Victories over such strong outfits as Station Complement Hospital, 24th General Hospital, 226th Station Hospital, 21st, 23rd, and 24th Hospital Trains, and the 225th Station Hospital have developed the team into a winning combination.

No one man can be given credit for the fine showing of the team as every man does his job well. The line-up includes the following players: Baldy Mauldin and John O'Toole, catchers; Dick Heyl, Coach Brandt, and Verle Davis, pitchers. The infield is composed of John Byszesky, 1st; Jesse Barouch, 2nd; John Marefka, 3rd, and Julius Bristow, shortstop. The outfield has brought keen competition among the candidates and finds John Lenzeni, Mike Logan, Julius Parenteau, Bill Gerber, John Gindt, and Ed Janusz all seeing a lot of service.

The boys plan to keep in shape by taking on the strong 283rd quartermaster before entering the Post playoffs for the championship of the smaller until organizations.

Allowances allotted to a wife by the Government through the serviceman's application are payable even though the fighting man is serving overseas.

1st STR Wives Give Luncheon

Officers' Club Palm Room Scene of Function

The ladies of the First Student Training regiment held their initial luncheon of the current season on Friday April 30, in the Palm Room of the Officers club. Tables were beautifully decorated with bouquets of spring flowers.

Immediately following the luncheon, Mrs. Robert Sharp, wife of Colonel Sharp, the regimental commander, presided over a short business session. Plans were made for future luncheons to be held the last Friday of each month with hostesses for each meeting to be appointed. The following permanent chairmen were announced: Mrs. Wilfred Jackson in charge of bridge and other games; Mrs. Vernon Rullison in charge of publicity. Monday morning was selected as First Student Training Regiment Day at the Red Cross work room. Interest in this work indicated that a large group plans to be present to roll bandages, Monday, May 10.

To keep travel at a minimum, all luncheons will be held on the Post. Those living in Columbus or Benning Park organized car pools for future attendance.

During the remainder of the afternoon, bridge, knitting, and sewing were enjoyed by those attending. Assisting Mrs. Sharp as hostesses at Friday's meeting were Mrs. Arthur C. Blain, Mrs. John

Six Rulings Govern Discharge Of Women's Army

Members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps may be discharged under six different rulings, according to recent War Department directive received at Fort Benning.

Discharges may be granted to women who are under the prescribed age, to those who acquire dependents by reason of death or disability of a member of the family, to members who become expectant mothers, or who are disabled in service. Similarly, members of the Corps who are convicted of violations of the code of conduct or by civil court for grave offenses, or who have undesirable traits of character or who have enrolled fraudulently are subject to dismissal.

now and then. General Fulton suggested that this would help a great deal in maintaining their high morale.

"At the same time, many mothers who have lost sons in this war could transfer their thoughts, attentions, and affections to a motherless soldier — so that the plan would work both ways.

"From there we have advanced another step to work out a plan whereby Columbus boys who are in service all over the world may be 'adopted' in the same way. This plan could well be adopted by all Auxiliaries in all cities of the country. It would not be difficult to learn the names of orphans from each home city and then to assign a 'War Mother' to these men."

MAJOR CONTRIBUTION

The Columbus Auxiliary is planning on making the effort their major contribution to war work for the year. Success of the plan then will be charted and presented to the National Auxiliary in a full report.

First step in telling the rest of the country about the idea was made by Mrs. Tolbert and General Fulton when they made a special transcribed broadcast with soldiers from St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., and Detroit, Mich., who are training at Fort Benning, which will be played by radio stations in those cities on Mother's Day.

Both qualities have been sorely needed at various times in the class career, but eventually individual idiosyncrasies have been submerged for the good of the group as a whole and is now a smooth running and efficient unit. COUNT NOSES

"We count noses now," Lieutenant Bessinger added.

In countless other ways, the regiment is figuratively "tightening its belt" along with the nation's civilian population.

Leftovers of vegetables and fruits are converted into new dishes and reserved at the following meal and waste fats and greases are preserved. The clear fats are used in cooking and baking within the messhall while the burnt substances are placed in containers for industrial salvage.

Like civilian groups, the Third Regiment has its own experiences with shortages. For one period of 10 days it was impossible for the Regimental Mess Office to procure any of the ordinary white potatoes. Meat, of course, is a constantly recurring problem. For a considerable period butter was absolutely unobtainable but in recent weeks messhalls have been fairly well supplied with this "luxury."

One food course on which the Army can depend at all times is dry storage. Dried vegetables and macaronis are always obtainable in large quantities and these articles are invariably consumed by the soldiers with relish.

ing it anything much, but Stalin and others were issuing statements, that something all-fired big was in the making for "this year." Soviet forces have captured several positions in the Caucasus.

Significant is the prediction of General Henri Giraud that complete Allied victory would come in Tunisia by the end of May.

RAF planes continue hammering at German industrial centers, their raids growing heavier and heavier.

Undersecretary of War Patterson declared at a press conference during the week that General Douglas MacArthur is too valuable to be retired when he reaches the statutory age of retirement, which is 64, next January.

MORE CHANGES IN point rationing were announced during the week to give the holders of the home front something to figure on as they shop for their families.

A modified Ruml Tax plan to "pay-as-you-go," with provisions for "forgiving" 1942 taxes appears just about set to pass Congress.

Washington officials told the country that the Army is far from its needs in basic equipment and another 5,000,000 workers must be found and trained to meet production goals in munitions and other essential war industries by the end of this year.

Lieut. Gentile Goes To Bragg

Third Officer Letitia E. Gentile, commanding officer of the 84th WAAC Post Headquarters Company stationed in the Harmony Church area at Fort Benning, has been ordered to duty at Fort Bragg, N. C., according to announcement from Post Headquarters. The 84th Company just recently arrived at Benning for duty with the school.

The officer was formerly commander of a WAAC Company at the Third Training Center, Ft. Oglethorpe, Ga. She is a graduate of the WAAC officer candidate school at Fort Des Moines, Ia.

A native of Providence, R. I., she was office manager for the F. W. Whipple Company of that city.

Song Leader Classes Given

Yale Glee Club Director In Charge

The song-leader classes are being trained and others are being planned at Fort Benning by Arthur E. Hall, formerly associate director of the Yale University Glee club for 12 years and now traveling as music director for the USO.

The first of these groups, the colored Reception Center, began its classes Monday night, under the direction of Lieut. Robert M. Reynolds, special service officer. At the Reception Center, the class probably will be of two-weeks duration, with three one-hour classes, although it might last a week longer.

A full quota of 50 men in the Second Student Training Regiment under the direction of Captain John Torinus, special service officer, began classes this week for a three-week period, with classes meeting twice a week on Thursdays and Fridays.

Tentative plans also have been made to train one or more groups at the colored Service Club No. 5, under the direction of Lieut. Robert Long, special service officer, and Miss Bernice Smith, senior hostess of the club. The service battalions of the Second and Third Student Training Regiments, and the Provisional Truck and Regiment will select for these song leader classes.

Other units on the post also are making plans with Mr. Hall to obtain classes. As many groups as can be established within the period are desired, Hall stated.

The song leader classes are specially designed by the USO, with the backing of the War Department, to train enlisted men and officers to lead informal group singing, espesially when soldiers are on marches or bivouacs. The essential ideal is to obtain one such song leader in each company.

Milady's Make-up Bag a Boon to G. I. Subjected to Elements

Milady of fashion could enter any one of the Army's huge quartermaster corps depots scattered throughout the country and find a reasonably complete cosmetic department with shampoos, lipsticks, skin lotions, cleansing tissues, lip pomade, cleansing cream, nail polish remover, hair nets, bobby pins, mirrors, and many other items according to Col. Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning's director of supply.

"Although the average civilian might feel these items have little relation to the war effort," the fort official said, "they are quite important items on the procurement list of the W. M. C., which provides more than 70,000 different articles for Army use."

He further explained that items like lipsticks and skin lotion are a boon to soldiers spending long hours in extreme weather such as Arctic or desert regions. The items help keep faces and hands from painful chapping under such extreme conditions.

The hair nets, bobby pins and powder puffs are G. I. items because the Quartermaster Corps must also provide for the Army's female contingents, namely the Nurse Corps and the WAAC. There was considerable debate at first as to whether such items of personal necessity should be provided for the women but time has proven the Q. M. C. had the right idea on the subject.

The reason is that service women like servicemen can't always get to town when they want to, and current shortages of cosmetics also give no assurance they could buy them even then, according to the Benning supply chief.

R. C. Garden Grows Well

"I challenge anyone to grow more vegetables than we can," Lt. Colonel Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Fort Benning Reception Center, stated in an interview yesterday. Standing as proof to his statement is the Reception Center "Victory" garden gradually taking form under scores of spades in the hands of Reception Center troops and two army mules who pull the plows and harrows.

"The garden has emerged from what was two months ago little less than swampland and an entanglement of shrub and half decayed trees. To date many man hours have been expended in clearing the plot which amounts to several acres.

Although the last stumps have not been removed from one section the rest of the garden has been cultivated and the dark sandy loam plowed into long parallel rows. Already many of them have been planted with late spring and early summer vegetables.

Young tomato plants that were set out only last week were nipped by the recent drops in temperature. Lt. John E. Bailey, officer in charge of the agricultural project, pointing to numerous dead plants, stated that many of them will have to be replaced, while others survived the cold without apparent harm.

According to Col. James' original plan, the Reception Center "Victory" garden is proposed to supply fresh vegetables enough to feed the cadre of this organization during the summer months, thus counteracting the expected shortages of certain specified foods.

However, according to Lt. Robert M. Reynolds, special service officer of the Reception Center, the success of this plan depends largely on the weather. On the other hand, he explained, steps are being taken to insure the garden against severe drought.

Among those vegetables planted are okra, squash, radishes, beans, cucumbers, onions and tomatoes.

RUMORS NOT WANTED

Rumors are not popular in the First Platoon of the Fifteenth Company of the First Student Training Regiment. Outside one of the small rooms in the barracks a sign has been posted. It reads, "There are already three bad rumors in this room. Others not wanted."

Signed—3 Bad Rumors.

Red Army Is Winner In Boy Scout War Game

Led by a lieutenant from the Chinese army, the Red army defeated the Blue army last Sunday in Alabama on a "commando" hike staged by Boy Scout Troop No. 11, Fort Benning, under the direction of Lt. Col. Virgil E. Ney of the Infantry School, who is in charge of boys' activities at the post.

The troop was divided into the two armies which were led by Col. Ney and Lieutenant Fu, who was guest of the day. The officers also acted as umpires for the problem.

Initial point of the battle was the river bank near Engineers Landing. From there distinguishing arm bands were distributed, and the Red army moved across the Chattahoochee river on the ferry to Alabama where it advanced one and a half miles and took cover.

Forty minutes later the Blue army crossed to seek out and capture the "enemy." But two men of the Red army were captured while the attacking Blue army "lost" six men thus losing the fray.

Following the engagement a critique was held. Later Col. Ney led the Scouts on a exploration trip conducting a class of instruction in map reading and the use of the compass.

Under Lt. Fu in the Red army were Craig Thorn, Mason Watkins, Dan Snyder, Russell McCarthy, Arthur Smith, Bob Smith and Arthur Whittemore. In the Blue army under Col. Ney were Billy Ives, Billy Jent, Billy Powell, Bill McKenney, Billy Myers, Gordon Sargent and Seth Tuttle.

Area Engineer To Recommend Men For OCS

The Area Engineer now is authorized to recommend for Officer's Candidate School any applicants he feels are qualified, in the present campaign to secure more engineers through voluntary induction.

This was announced today by Captain James A. Baird, Area Engineer at Fort Benning, who also serves as recruiting officer for the area in Western Georgia and Eastern Alabama.

With construction in Army camps now practically caught up on itself, thousands of men employed in the various building lines are no longer in a deferred classification and soon will be facing actual induction, Capt. Baird pointed out.

"These men are eligible for the Corps of Engineers, and are in fact badly needed," he pointed out. "They can do themselves and the Army the most good by getting into the Engineers. To expedite this procedure, we are interviewing men with the necessary qualifications and seeing that they are steered through proper channels in order to be sent into the Engineers following their basic training.

"Up to this time, however, we were not able to recommend men for Officers Candidate Schools. This has been changed, however, and now we can definitely recommend men with necessary qualification."

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

Though time is short, this is not the time to forget your Mother. Why not please her especially this coming Sunday by sending her a lovely gift from one of the Columbus stores. Whatever your needs—be they a present or something for your own use—take note of these reputable shops and look over their displays. Stocks may be depleted, but you may buy, knowing full well, that these merchants are doing their best to prove that our way of business is the best.—P. B. T.

Families of three, please note! Especially mothers who have just been blessed with children or who contemplate childbirth should be interested in the complete array of baby layettes displayed at KIRVEN'S. Lovely flannelette kimonos in blue, white or pink are just the thing for the young tots. Of course kimonos are not an innovation but the fine display of attractive ones here are worth noting. Another necessity for a complete layette are receiving blankets for the newborn. These also are delightfully designed in beacon cloth and flannelette in pink, blue, or white with contrasting borders. A very practical "must" for the new-born are waterproof crib sheets. Made in two sizes, they come 18' by 27' and in a larger size, 27' by 36'. Quality hemmed muslin crib sheets also come under the heading of "musts" for the layette. Similarly muslin pillow cases are included in his display. Crib blankets in cotton or wool, which are delightfully patterned and have satin bindings, come in pink, blue or white. If your family expects an heir raid, you should, by all means, visit this fine display of accessories for the nursery.

——V——

It's certainly not too late for you to select a gift for your Mother — a gift, maybe small and inexpensive, yet something which would please her on Sunday, Mother's Day. Those of you who have so far neglected to buy a gift probably need reminding. Hence, here's a reminder that you drop into KIRALFY'S and see what they have to offer in the way of suitable presents. Lovely bags, which would please the most fastidious, seem just the proper present for Mother's Day. A fine bag which would be carried frequently would remind many a Mother of her children's devotion. If your Mother has enough handbags, maybe she'd like some jewelry. There's a grand display at Kiralfy's which includes the very popular Richelieu pearls. Adequate stocks of practical underthings, such as slips and nightgowns, are on display, each being a suitable gift for anyone's Mother. A cluster of artificial rosebuds, created by Mary Douglas, or a compact, or a cigarette case—well, just about anything you'd like with that distinctive feminine touch is offered here to make wonderful gifts.

——V——

Nothing pleases a woman more in the way of a gift than a present of some fine linens. And, while you may still be debating just what to select for your Mother for Mother's Day, I suggest you visit the TINY TOT SHOP and view their assortments. Lovely linen pillow cases with Chinese handwork and embroidered sheet sets highlight the fine display of bed linens. Other excellent buys are Irish linen hankies with hand embroidery. Or, perhaps your Mother would like best a pure linen damask table cloth. These table cloths come in either white, ivory or a grand shade of pale peach. If you're quick to take note, you may be one of the lucky ones who can select an ivory colored Point Venice lace table cloth, of which there are a few still in stock at the Tiny Tot. These Point Venice cloths are handmade in China and come in two and a half or three yard sizes. Another delightful gift for your Mother might be some odd guest towels or napkins, many of which are made of Irish linen. In deciding on a gift—be it for Mother's Day or some other occasion—don't fail to look into this fine display of linens and accessories.

Styles for bathing suits have been revolutionized since the fashions which were popularized by the "old swimmin' hole." Now, as you frequent the pools in Columbus or at Fort Benning, you'll really gander at the scores of popular Gantner trunks for men. CHANCELLOR CO., INC., fortunately for our water-minded husbands, has a large supply of "boxer-type" swimming trunks. These pale, tan, polo blue, or blue-grey togs are meticulously made of sturdy Zelan poplin, carrying a Sanforized guarantee. In fact, most all of the sportswear featured by this smart men's shop is readily laundered. Ideal for all active, part-time athletes are Chancellor's long or short-sleeved sports shirts. Teca, wool and rayon mixtures are included in the cool and comfortable slack and shirt ensembles. Swimming shorts, golf slacks, tennis shirts, in fact, any and all sportswear purchased at this men's shop will enable the wearer to be smartly, comfortably and suitably dressed.

——V——

When it comes to footwear, MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY is a "must" on your shopping list. The centrally located store in Columbus is busy every day with scores of people trying best to utilize their number 17 shoe coupon on the most useful type of shoe for their purposes. However, since the shoe store has become so popular with military personnel and their wives from nearby Fort Benning, Miller-Taylor has established a well-stocked branch on the Main Post. There, though the facilities are necessarily limited, a wide variety of shoes are on display. Perhaps, due to limited storeroom, your size might not be on hand. But, in a short time, your shoes will be dispatched promptly from the main store in Columbus. Persons living on the post have found the Benning branch most convenient, especially in this day of gasoline and tire rationing, when it is of prime importance to avoid unnecessary travel. For Army wives and soldiers on the Main Post who may not as yet become acquainted with the branch store, I suggest you drop in and take a look—see at the quality footwear offered by this reputable concern.

——V——

No WPB regulations compel our sheers to be simple. But that's the way we want them today anyway—unaffected, uncomplicated, unfussy, free of gingerbread and spinach. Just like the real charmers at KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC. Every type sheer frock, exquisite, but not overdone, is included in this intriguing display. Mousseleine de soie, chiffon, marquisite and Bemberg sheers will make you realize what you've been missing in the way of comfort these hot days. Dignified tiny pin tucks, the outer edge outlined with ruffled lace, highlight one lovely dark sheer frock. Another has for its principal point of interest narrow drawstrings of turquoise grosgrain ribbon gathering the fashionably new low neckline and the waist. Exciting printed chiffons without the usual "garden-party-look" make ideal dresses for afternoon and evening wear throughout the summer. Considering the quality material, simply unsurpassed workmanship, exquisite detail and up-to-the-minute designs, the cool, sheer dresses are surprisingly reasonable.

——V——

Excellent buys in luggage can be made in the luggage and sports department at MONTGOMERY WARD. Right here in Columbus, this large house has several departments which display just about anything one might be seeking. Take the luggage department, for intance. Here the travel-wise soldier may select a two-suiter bag of top grain leather with Yale locks. This merchandise comes in either light or dark saddle leather. Then, for the man who is off for a night or two and is going on a weekend, the department offers a good buy in overnight bags. That ever-necessary foot lock, too, may be purchased here. What make especially nice gifts for a man are any of the several utility kits on display. In the other section of this department, which embraces sports accessories, a family can find all sorts of athletic equipment. Becoming more popular every day is the sport of archery and Montgomery-Ward has an excellent offering of lemonwood and hickory bows and arrows, as well as the rest of the equipment necessary in the sport. Be sure and drop into this department on your next trip t otown and browse around. You'll like it.

'Niece' Writes Uncle Sam; Wants Her Allotment Pronto

Epistles To FDR, Mr. Headquarters Get No Results

By SUGAR BROWN SUSSINA
71St. Engr. L. ??? Co.

Dear Uncle Sam,

I have already basic communicationed with the President and my husbands Commando, Mr. Headquarters. When I wrote them, presistently I got no answer. Now I will begin to lay all the beans on the table.

As soon as my husband was induced in the army, he applicationed for a girl and a wife to have money come home at the end of the month. Sylvester, my husband, wrote for a photostatic copy of our marriage. I sent him a picture of me in my wedding dress and he wrote back saying, "Boy how you've changed!" I can't understand my Sylvester saying a thing like that. That's what the army's done for him. He wouldn't have said that before he went in the army. He wouldn't have dared.

NO CERTIFICATE

Anyhow, Uncle Sam, Mr. Headquarters wrote me a letter and told me that a photostatic copy of a marriage is a picture of a certificate, whatever that is. He said that it was a piece of paper what the minister that married us gave us, but I don't remember because I was in a hurry to get my Sylvester away from the minister before he changed his mind.

Mr. Headquarters also said something about giving me and my young daughter an allotment. Now, I don't want any allotment. I just want some money at the end of the month.

NO RED TAPE

Before Sylvester was induced in the army I got money at the end of the week, and you can bet I didn't need allotments or anything like that to get it either. I just used my rolling pin. If Sylvester wasn't so far away and I could talk to him just long enough to beat him up, he would give me the allotment and the money too.

When Sylvester was a civil man, we were in the iron and steel business. I ironed and Sylvester, — Well, he made money. Some people would have called him a bank broker, but I just called him a safe cracker, but a good one. And not only that, I didn't need no allotment then.

OVER THE DAM

Anyhow, that's all spilt milk over the dam now. What I want to know is how I can get money at the end of the month like Mrs. Murphy do. I also want money for my young daughter, Iggabetha, who needs it to support her four-F husband.

Now listen. Uncle Sam, I'm gettin' tired of written letters. If I don't get a little action soon, I'll just take Sylvester's tools that he left home and rob a bank in Washington and get me some of those "Gold Bricks" I've been hearing about.

Thanking you away in advance, I'm afraid, I remain.

Your niece
Mrs. Sylvester Nockneed

Bone-Crushing Leap Fails To Stop Hardy 'Chutist

Anyone who believes that paratroopers aren't tough should hear the story of Lt. John E. Minter, native of Columbus who was recently appointed public relations officer for the Parachute School.

The son of John E. Minter, president of the Dixie Brick Company in Columbus, Minter entered the service in 1939, and served for a short time with the 20th Infantry, Fort Warren, Wyoming. Upon organization of U. S. parachute troops Minter immediately volunteered and was accepted. He qualified in December, 1940 and became a member of the famed 501st Battalion, in which unit he journeyed to Panama.

Here the outfit was subjected to the most rigorous training in tropical combat conditions. He spoke of one forced march in which his group was fed and supplied entirely by air for 25 days. While their location was fairly definite, several times meals were missed when airplanes could not spot the troopers.

GOING RUGGED

The going was rugged and every man earned his extra pay. Then came the day when he was to prove that paratroopers are mighty tough. Several "sticks" of paratroopers were bailing out on a routine jump. Minter was in one of the first groups. Today he remembers leaving the door and that's about all—there was an intervening blank of eight days.

Here is what happened. One of the following planes lost too much altitude dropping its load of men, and Minter was slammed into one of its broad wings. The doctors rushed to meet him when he landed. He was not entirely unconscious. He managed to say, "I've got a little pain in my chest." Later they learned the cause of that little pain. Lt. John Minter had all of his ribs crushed, one collar bone cracked, and lung collapsed, and one leg paralyzed.

All this and he didn't pass out until they started carting him across bumpy jungle trails to the base hospital, 50 miles away.

BONES HEALED

Not quite a year has passed and Lt. Minter is back on duty. His broken bones have healed, his lung is functioning again, only the game leg remains, and doctors say that will mend in time. It is an even bet that he will jump again.

As for the airplane which Minter hit, it lost eight feet off one wing tip and had to make a crash landing. A mechanic, visiting him in the hospital later, said that he just wanted to see the man who could do that and live to tell about it.

Lt. Minter is a graduate of Columbus High school, and later attended Mercer College, Macon, Ga., from which he received his A. B. degree in journalism. Upon completing his undergraduate work, he worked on the Macon Evening News, the Atlanta Journal and Atlanta Constitution, and Associated Press. At the time he entered service, Minter was instructing and doing graduate work at Northwestern University in Chicago.

He is married and lives at 2800 10th avenue in Columbus.

Capt. Praedel Made Major

Former Corporal Is Crack Marksman

Members of 13th Company, First Student Training Regiment were pleased this week to learn that one of the most popular men in the outfit, Capt. L. W. Praedel, had been promoted to Major in the Quartermaster Corps, effective April 16.

Major Praedel has had eighteen years service in the armed forces. He enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in 1925 and was honorably discharged in 1929 with the rank of corporal. During his hitch with the Marines he distinguished himself in rifle and pistol marksmanship, serving with the Marine rifle and pistol team for four years. He was a member of the team which won the Elliott Trophy in 1928, firing with a group representing the Marine Barracks, Parris Island, South Carolina. During his last year with the Marines, Major Praedel was awarded the Distinguished Pistol Shot badge.

Upon his return to civilian status in 1929, Major Praedel continued his interest in weapons, being judged the winner of the Michigan Individual Rifle championship in 1932. During the years 1930-1932 he was a member of the Michigan Civilian Rifle and Pistol team, and in 1932-1933 was a member of the Federal Reserve bank of Detroit marksmen which won the state and national rifle and pistol championships.

During the year 1933, Major Praedel was commissioned in the Quartermaster Reserve. In 1935 as an employee of the Detroit Police Department Accident Prevention Bureau, he again shone as a marksman on the police team, winning the departmental championship in 1937.

All in all, Major Praedel has 150 marksmanship medals to hang on the wall. He is a life member of the National Rifle Association.

Upon his graduation, Major Praedel will return to his job as assistant to the Director of Training, Q. M. R. T. C. at Fort Francis Warren in Wyoming.

2nd STR Unit Sets April Bond Record—$18,500

The 16th Company of the Second Student Training regiment turned in a double 100 per cent in the War Bond drive, and its total of $8,500 for April is believed to be an all-time company record.

Lt. Roy A. Ostram, Jr., 16th Company bond officer, announced at the close of April business that every man in the outfit now has a bond allotment of $18.75 or over. The company was already 100 per cent in cash sales before the month was half finished.

The record company total represents sales of more than $2,000 for each platoon.

French Writer With 1st STR

Lt. Le Calvez Known For Short Story Fiction

Among the many colorful personalities enrolled in the Class of the Rifle and Heavy Weapons Company Officers course last week is 2nd Lieutenant Louis LeCalvez, French short story writer, from the 713 Military Police battalion, Fort George G. Meade, Maryland.

Lt. LeCalvez who won his commission through the ranks, is pursuing the Officers Basic course as a member of the 17th Company, 3rd 'Yea Ha' battalion, 1st Student Training regiment. He is a Canadian writer of note. Many of his works are also known to modern American short story readers. His greater recognition comes from his writings in French.

Having spent a number of years in France—watching the present world conflict grow until 1939—Lieutenant LeCalvez was associated with several French writers associations and syndicates on the continent, writing in French for French Canadian readers and stories of French Canadian getting for French readers. These writings in French have been highly publicized both in France and Canada, although publications were cut short by the war.

In addition to writing the contemporary French short story Lieutenant LeCalvez has spent some time teaching French as private tutor in our Eastern states, prior to his enlistment and subsequent commission in U. S. Army.

'LIFE' COVER CARRIES PIC OF O. C.'S WIFE

The cover of a recent issue of "Life" magazine has a special significance for O. C. James Meier, of the 8th Company, Second Student Training regiment. For it carries a photograph of an attractive nurse who happens to be his wife.

Mrs. Meier is an instructor and assistant director of nurses in the newly formed organization known as Jangos.

Roll Call History Repeats Itself For VPI Grads

Candidates Howard H. Cooksey and John T. Cruise could hardly believe their ears when they first landed in the 1st Company of the Second Student Training regiment at the Infantry School, but now they feel right at home.

Fresh from four years at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, they had heard the names Cooksey, Crawford, Crockett and Cruise, in that order on the roll every morning. Now, lo and behold, here at O. C. S. half of the faces have changed, but none of the names.

In their barracks there are four neat little bunks, all in a row, belong to Cooksey, Crawford, Crockett and Cruise.

70,000 G. I. Items Issued By QM Corps

More than 70,000 items of government issue are being procured and distributed by the Quartermaster Corps in its various depots throughout the country, it was revealed yesterday by Col. Stephen E. Massey, Benning supply chief, in discussing the operation of the huge storehouses for Army equipment.

The Benning official compared the depots to the nation's largest department stores and pointed out that there are not many stores that carry a wider range of articles than the Q. M. installations.

The supplies range from food, clothing, bedding and tents, the better known items of issue, to personal necessities. They also vary from machinery, tools and other implements which suggest hard work to athletic and recreational equipment which suggest moments of play.

"Any item which the Army uses in two or more of its branches, other than armament and motor transportation, is provided by the Quartermaster Corps," Colonel Massey said, "and that includes everything from a shoe lace to a pack mule."

The Quartermaster Corps also must provide for the operation and maintenance of transportation for its own personnel and supplies, and therefore, must also train men for operation and maintenance of motor equipment.

New Ration Plan Saves Much Food, Col. Massey Says

Vast savings of food are resulting from the present basis of issuing rations to the Army which was developed by the Quartermaster Corps after an exhaustive survey of Army kitchens made late last year, according to Col. Stephen E. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning.

Fort Benning was one of four major camps used in making the survey in 1942 which was instituated at the direction of Major General E. B. Gregory, the quartermaster general. The other camps were Camp Lee, Va.; Fort Knox, Ky.; and Fort Dovens, Mass.

The survey disclosed food waste largely due to absenteeism. Immediate corrective measures taken are estimated now to be saving more than 3,200,000 pounds of food daily on a basis of any Army of 4,500,000—the strength of the Army at the time the studies were made. Savings are increasing as the Army expands.

The present Quartermaster Corps program provides issue of food to troops on the basis of the number of men present for meals, rather than the number of men carried on the rolls. This avoids the waste that resulted in the past from absenteeism.

The outstanding revelation of the surveys, according to Colonel Massey, was that the principal cause of food waste in the Army was the preparation of more meals that were consumed. This resulted directly from the fact that in every company almost invariably there were a number of men who did not answer the mess call for various reasons.

The present system provides for computing the attendance of men at each meal each day and preparing average daily tables modeled along the life expectancy charts of life insurance companies. These tables which are constantly being revised, make it possible to gauge with extreme accuracy the number of men who will have to be fed each day.

Post Personnel Asked To Use New Phone Book

Fort Benning personnel calling telephone numbers in Columbus are requested to destroy the gray-back Columbus directory issued last September and use instead the new green-back book published in April.

C. H. Haddon, officer manager of the Southern Bell Telephone company in Columbus, said that the numbers of many subscribers in the city have been changed since the old book was issued and that the failure to consult the new directory is causing a great many "wrong numbers" which are proving annoying to subscribers.

Mr. Haddon announced that a supply of new green-back April issue directories has been delivered to the office of Col. A. W. Young, post signal officer. Military personnel may secure copies by calling FR 3333 and giving their official military address for delivery of the new directory by message center or by visiting the Post Signal Office and picking up the volume.

Sassy Retort Stirs Stern Sarge's Ire

When you've got your head in your hands feeling sorry for yourself, when your feet are tired and sore, when you think there ain't no justice, consider the case of O. C. John J. Clark, of the 9th Company, Second Student Training regiment.

Candidate Clark spent 14 months at the Parris Island base of the Marine Corps, and he tells this story on himself:

One night Clark's barracks failed to put out the lights at the appointed hour, which brought the vocal attention of the sergeant of the guard.

"If you want the lights out," sang out a brave lad, without which type no barracks is complete, "Come and turn them out yourself!"

The S. O. T. G. came all right but not to turn out the lights. "Who," he roared, in his best Marine Corps tradition, "was the blue, black and yellow pinwheel dashed asterisk exclamation pointed so-and-so who yelled at me?"

Naturally, there was no answer. "Okay," growled the S. O. T. G., "Fall out—as you are!"

"As you are" meant that most of the men fell out in various stages of undress, from underwear to bare-nekkid, which wasn't so bad considering it was in August. The rugged part comes from the fact that most of them also were barefoot, and the sergeant chose to drill them for a half-hour on the graveled company street.

RESULT WAS THE SAME

Again he asked who had yelled at him. The result was the same, so he inquired sweetly, "Will one of you tell me whose platoon this is?"

"Sgt. McNair's," ventured a voice from the shadows.

"Well, I'll see Sgt. McNair about this in the morning. Dismissed."

At 4:30 a. m., and with fire in his eye, Sgt. McNair rolled his platoon out. His question was what you're thinking, and still there was no answer. Clark and his buddies stood firm. Sgt. McNair evidently was a believer in anticipatory planning. His next orders were ominous. "You men," said he, "will fall out in fifteen minutes with full field packs."

The men fell out, and Sgt. McNair marched them 'round and 'round the drill field. Breakfast went by and the sun grew hotter and still the only voice to be heard was Sgt. McNair's. He made them double-time to a water tower a half-mile away and back again, and then back to the tower. He made them duck-walk around the tower, and now men began to pass out. At this point Clark enters the story.

"I can't stand any more of this," he said to a buddy. "I'm telling him I did it. He can do what he wants to."

CLARK STAYED STANDING

Sgt. McNair heard Clark's "confession" with an expressionless face. "Clark, you're a liar. But, if that's the way you feel about it, I'll take the platoon in. But you are staying right here, AT ATTENTION, until I bring you in!"

"Yes, sir."

For what seemed like hours, Clark stood there, the mosquitoes dining on him while the August sun wrung perspiration from every pore.

Not until he had finished his basic training did Clark learn from Sgt. McNair that the actual offender had been known to him all along.

Miss Baker Makes Society

Port Student Wins Scholastic Honors

Election to the National Honor Society, a prize coveted by all high school students in the United States, has been won at Columbus high school by Betty Baker, daughter of Lt. Colonel and Mrs. Silas K. Baker, and Charles "Chuck" Spetel, son of Colonel and Mrs. Frank J. Spetel. Lt. Colonel Baker is intelligence and public relations officer of the Infantry School.

Selection of students for election to the society is determined on the basis of the student's scholarship with an average of "B" or better in all subjects and excellence in leadership, character and service.

Miss Baker, age 16, won the honor as a result of her work for the Red Cross in rolling bandages, her activities for the French club, the A. N. O. Sorority of Fort Benning, her assistance at the Day Nursery at Fort Benning, and her work with the Victory Corps, student organization of senior girls drilling under the supervision of high school R. O. T. C. instructors.

Charles Spetel was elected to the society because of exceptional qualities shown in many school activities.

Pauline Vida, age 17, daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Frank J. Vida, was elected to the Honor Society in January, 1943 because of her work for the Red Cross, the French Club, A. N. O. Sorority and has been selected to make the speech for class graduation. Colonel Vida is commanding officer of the Provisional Truck regiment.

Other Columbus high school students similarly honored whose parents are identified with Fort Benning include Margaret Banks and John De Bardelaben, son of Chaplain De Bardelaben.

Student Officers Bivouac 3 Days At Shell Creek

Even though it was Saturday night, army cots felt good to members of 10th Company, First Student Training Regiment after three days and three nights spent in bivouac in the Shell Creek area. Student officers of the company were among the first classes to undergo the three-day field problem.

Leaving their home ground last Wednesday noon, the 174 officers of the company proceeded by motor to an assembly area some four miles short of their destination. At that point, they organized as a rifle company and, under command of Captain F. L. Miller, moved to the bivouac area in route column lugging full field equipment.

After a brief critique of the foot movement, students paired off, pitched tents, had a field dinner and spent the night fighting a cold freeze which stayed with them through the morning. In the forenoon they were busy selecting positions for heavy machine guns in defense. Lunch in field, they spent the afternoon selecting 81-MM Mortar positions for the same situation.

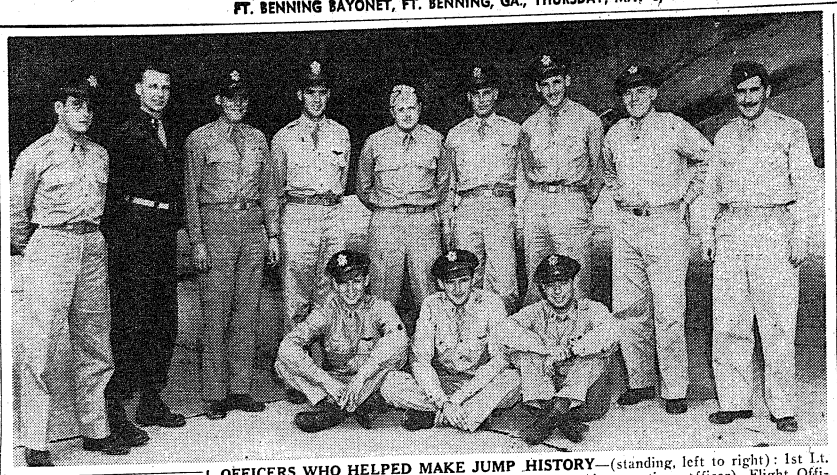
BUILD DEFENSES

Early supper in the field was followed by completion of the defensive breastworks with emplacement of 37-MM guns and the two 105-MM guns of a regimental cannon platoon.

Dismissal from instruction occurred at about 2100 and shoes came off in spite of the chill atmosphere to give tired feet a chance to rest until breakfast which was served at 0230 Friday. Heavy-lidded shavetails, first looies and captains, dragged into the inky 0330 blackness to fire the problem they had worked the day before.

The camp project began to seem worthwhile when the basics returned to their bivouac area at 0930 and remained until 1630, having two meals and several hours of A. C. sleep. At 1630 the refreshed (?) company moved out to reconnoiter an attack situation involving employment of a heavy weapons company, anti-tank and cannon platoons in attack.

Back again at 0930, they had until 0230 Saturday for night operations under the canvas and then they were on the train again to put the situation from paper onto the ground and to trade symbols for weapons.



ASSEMBLY AREA

They organized an assembly area, then moved to positions for accomplishment of primary firing missions, and opened fire at the line of departure at 0800.

The problem terminated and a short critique and movement back to the bivouac area brought the Shell Creek maneuver to a close.

After a few brief minutes spent striking tents, trucks returned the company to its quarters in the Shannon Field area where they were dismissed at 1030 Saturday morning for the rest of the day.

Not an officer, escaped any inconveniences, and difficulties with cold weather, foot trouble, fatigue, and the various items that must inevitably accompany such an extended operation. The men brightened up with the coming of Saturday noon, and they declared that the bivouac was a distinct success from standpoints of both instruction and pleasure.

Former Lawson Officer Receives Air Medal Award

Captain Charles S. Thompson, Jr., stationed at Lawson Field, as a member of the 128 Observation Squadron from September, 1941 to April, 1942, has been awarded the Air Medal, according to a War Department announcement received at post headquarters.

Now on duty at New Orleans, La., Captain Thompson was awarded the medal for anti-submarine patrol flights over the Atlantic Ocean.

Captain Thompson received his commercial license in Atlanta before entering the Army air force, with the 128th Observation Squadron, a Georgia National Guard unit, in the summer of 1941. Upon leaving Fort Benning, he was sent to Meridian, Miss., and later to New Orleans where he was recently promoted to captain.

Pre-Cooked Cereal To Be Served In Combat Zones

Pre-cooked and pre-mixed breakfast cereals are now available to United States troops serving overseas, it was disclosed recently by Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply and service division at Fort Benning.

The post supply chief stated that a new process has been developed by the Army's Quartermaster Corps which permits the serving of these dishes merely by adding water. The principal cereals are whole wheat and oatmeal.

The cereals are cooked in this country until they contain no more than 12 percent moisture. Then they are packed in containers and sent out to the far-flung outposts where American troops are now in action. By the simple addition of water, the cereals can then be made as edible as the freshly cooked dish.

CBS Air Church Broadcast Sunday

Chaplain Zeller Will Give Sermon On Half Hour Network Program

Broadcasting over a nation-wide hook-up of the Columbia Broadcasting System's "Church of the Air" program, Chaplain Frederick S. Zeller, chaplain of The Parachute School, will deliver the sermon and conduct a typical Army Protestant chapel service from Chapel No. 1 at Fort Benning next Sunday afternoon from 1 until 1:30 o'clock (EWT).

This will be the third and last of a series of broadcasts by Army chaplains from actual Army camps in the United States. The first of the series was a Catholic program from Fort Douglas, Utah, on March 28, while the second, a Jewish service, emanated from Camp Grant, Ill, on April 18. The "Church of the Air" is a weekly program which is broadcast over CBS every Sunday throughout the year.

"Victory Through Faith" will be the topic of Chaplain Zeller's fifteen minute sermon. Miss Mary Farmer, director of Service Club No. 1, will play the organ and direct the choir. Made up of officers and enlisted men on the Post, most of them from The Parachute School, the choir, joined by the congregation, will sing "The Choral Invitatory No. 1," "God of Our Fathers," and the Closing Oraison.

After the opening announcement by CBS, Chaplain Zeller will give the invocation, which will be followed by the Invitatory. Following the scripture reading, which will be taken from I John, chapter five, verses 1-12, the chaplain will lead the congregation in prayer. The sermon will follow the singing of "God of Our Fathers." After the benediction and the closing Oraison, CBS will make the closing announcement.

The Columbia Broadcasting System will pick up the program from Radio Station WRBL in Columbus, a member of CBS.

Thru The Peepsight

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. O. J. REMINGTON

THE WORLD'S GREATEST battle looms ahead. Tunisia has now fallen into the hands of victorious American, British and French armies after much fierce fighting. The way now is paved for taking over control of the entire Mediterranean area and an eventual invasion of the Continent of Europe.

The end came with rapidity in Tunisia after Allied columns had battered away at the German and Italian forces. With air power gone, supplies being cut off, there was little for the Axis resistance to do except collapse. No attempts were made to evacuate the Axis forces. They are surrendering or being mopped up if they offer resistance. Allied airpower was sinking boats that did attempt to evacuate troops.

Fate of high Axis commanders was not yet known, but earlier reports indicated that Rommel had been taken out of Africa and one report said that Von Arnim still was there. Some troops were making a last desperate stand on Cap Bon— but their grim action was of little military value since control of most of the coastal area gives the Allies the go-ahead signal for jumping off against Mediterranean islands, which appears to be the next important step now.

With control of the sea lanes, supplies can now flow more easily to Russia and of course can be brought to North Africa to prepare for the tremendous battle of Europe that now seems definitely in the cards. And if the defeat of 300,000 or so troops in North Africa took such tremendous planning and co-ordination and occupied so much time—figure what it will take to crack the Nazi and Italian defenses that are being feverishly rushed into Europe. And once they are cracked, think of the time and effort and material that will be needed to push in from the coasts. Yes, indeed, the greatest battle of the world's history looms ahead in Europe.

RUSSIA, however, seems to be softening up the Nazi armies to a considerable extent by the continued Red blows against the Germans in the East. The Germans have even acknowledged a forced withdrawal in the Caucasus near the port of Novorossisk, which the Russians are endeavoring to re-capture. Russians report fighting on a large scale, and if this continues, together with an invasion of the Continent from France, Italy, Greece, Jugoslavia, Norway and Holland, the Germans might actually be on the defensive for the first time in this global war.

Russian planes continue to carry the battle into Germany with fierce raids, RAF and American bombers from their side also continue pounding away at German and Italian industrial centers. One report is that in Palermo alone, a full square mile was blasted apart. Palermo is in Sicily, and that looks as though we'd be moving in there after more softening up.

Don't be surprised at a desparate move on Hitler's part, however, such as a sudden occupation of Spain and an attempt against Gibraltar, plus throwing Spain's Morrocan divisions into action against the Allies in Africa. He might also attempt a desperate venture against England. Such action could stall off invasion for a long time and Hitler might well take the gamble.

Mobile Blood Unit Requested To Visit Post

Soldiers May Give Plasma During Columbus Sojourn

Plans for bringing the Red Cross mobile blood unit from Atlanta to Fort Benning, following its visit to Columbus early in June, were being discussed at the Post, and dates will be announced later.

The mobile blood unit will visit Columbus June 1, 2, and 3, under arrangements completed Monday at a meeting of the blood donor committee of the Muscogee county chapter of the Red Cross with Atlanta officials. Personnel of Fort Benning desiring to give their blood may do so while the unit is in Columbus now, it was emphasized, although it wil be brought to the Post at some later date.

Ralph J. Mitchell, field director of the Fort Benning branch of the Red Cross, announced that the mobile unit will return every six weeks to Columbus, and that military personnel may give blood at those times, but stated also that a special trip will be made to the post when arrangements are completed.

Blood donations will be accepted from 8 a. m. to 1 p. m. on June 1, 2 and 3. The blood is used for plasma, and is for military use only, he emphasized.

10,000 Soldiers Congregate In Stadium To Pay Homage

It was Mother's Day at Fort Benning—as it was all over the country—and 21 mothers from a dozen states were at the Fort as the symbol of the mothers of all of the men stationed at the Post.

Fourteen of the mothers were official guests of the Post, chosen by lot. The remaining seven were guests of various organizations who pitched in with their own funds to bring the mothers to the Fort for the event.

They came in Friday, May 7, were met at the trains by official cars and special service officers from the units in which their sons were located at the Fort. They were brought to the post and saw how their sons live as they train to fight the forces that would abolish Mother's Day celebrations along with all other American institutions.

C. G. ENTERTAINS

On Friday evening they were guests of Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, Commanding General of the Post, at a dinner at Service Club No. 1, with arrangements made by Miss Mary Farmer, hostess. Sgt. Carl Neu acted as toastmaster.

On Saturday they visited the Bakers and Cooks School as guests of Lieut. Col. Grover M. Ford at a breakfast. Then they went on a tour of the post. At the Parachute School, Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, commandant, greeted the mothers at the training towers where novice paratroops learn the initial stages of jumping from fixed towers; they say how the parachutes were packed and opened and then watched two loaded C-47 planes take off and saw the paratroopers bail out and float down. They then went to the Tenth Armored Division and viewed the tanks, amphibious jeeps, anti-tank guns, assault guns, and other equipment. They were guests of Maj. General Paul W. Newgarden, commanding general of the Division, at luncheon in Service Club No. 2.

DINNER GUESTS

The afternoon they had to themselves. A special dinner and ceremony was staged Saturday evening at headquarters mess hall of the Colored Reception Center for three mothers of colored soldiers who were guests during the three days. Lt. Col. Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Center, welcomed them and a special program was presented. Other events for them were staged Saturday and Sunday at Service Club No. 5.

On Sunday morning, the mothers and their sons were special guests at the open-air services in Doughboy Stadium, when 10,000 or more soldiers, members of families on the post and members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Crops crowded into the stands or occupied seats on the field.

INTRODUCTIONS

Brig. Gen. Fulton greeted the mothers and then they and their sons were introduced by a high ranking officer of each command. General Newgarden introduced those from the 10th Armored Division; Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School, introduced those from the School troops; Lt. Col. John E.

3rd Battalion, 2nd STR Sets Bond Record

One-Month Drive Nets $56,675 In War Securities

In what is believed to be a record for a battalion in the War Bond drive, the men of the Third Battalion in the Second Student Training Regiment at The Infantry School staged a one-month push which resulted in the sale of $56,675 worth of bonds.

At the start of the drive, Lt. Col. Frederick E. Johnson, commander of the Third Battalion, turned it over to the men themselves and told them to see what they could do. The battalion is composed of soldiers who are training to become Infantry officers, and working harder than they ever did before in their lives. But they took on the added responsibility of the War Bond drive, and not only laid their own money on the line but saw to it that their buddies did likewise.

Most of the companies in the Third Battalion showed 100 per cent participation in the drive, either in cash sales or in pay allotments. The 16th Company turned in a perfect record in both classifications.

The 13th Company hit the jackpot for high sales with a resounding total of $17,600. This included the purchase of a $10,000 bond by one man, an officer candidate who asked that his name not be made public. The company commander almost fell out of his chair when this man came into his office, saluted, and said, "Sir, I'd like $10,000 worth."

Actress Brenda Joyce Visiting At Fort Benning

Brenda Joyce, Hollywood film star, has arrived at Fort Benning for a visit with her husband, Lt. Owen Ward, student officer in the Infantry School.

Miss Joyce will appear with the "Funz-a-Fire" cast directed by Benny Meroff when the USO Camp Show unit appears before personnel of Station Hospital Thursday afternoon. Monday she will fly to Los Angeles on the call of her studio.

The actress has just completed a three weeks tour of army camps as a member of the Hollywood Victory Committee composed of film luminaries. The tour was completed at Macon this week.

Marine Officer Reverts To Type In Emergency

Nautical terms around an Army Post are as scarce as the proverbial hen's teeth—so it was but natural that the student officers of the First Company, 1st Student Training Regiment could scarcely believe their ears when they were rudely awakened at an early morning hour by cries of "Hit the deck—fire in the galley."

Closer observation revealed smoke emitting from the mess hall and cries from the room of Major Michael Davidowitch, U. S. M. C., who but recently returned from Guadalcanal. Major Davidowitch, fortunately awakened by the smoke had reverted instantly to the terminology to which he had been so long accustomed, and it was his shouted warning of "fire in the galley" that the building was saved from serious damage.

Fire Trucks Must Have Right-of-Way

When the fire sirens blow, make way for the fire laddies, Col. Albert Bain, post fire marshal, urges. Several near catastrophes were narrowly averted recently when the engines failed to get right-of-way.

Bomber Crash Kills Four Lawson Flyers

T. Sgt. Dzuris Dies Friday of Injuries; Motor Failure Blamed

Three Lawson field fliers were killed and one fatally injured last Thursday night, when the A-20 medium bomber in which they were returning from a routine flight crashed at the Fort Benning field.

The dead are First Lieutenant John M. Baker, 27, pilot, son of John H. Baker, of Crossville, Ala.; Sgt. John L. Pobeschein, 21, son of Mrs. Minnie Pobeschein, 189 North Grand avenue, Baldwni, Long Island; and Pvt. Edward J. Annuscei, 30, whose mother, Mrs. Rita R. Annuscei, resides at 623 Forty-sixth street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Tech. Sgt. Joseph Dzuris, 28, son of Mrs. Susan E. Dzuris, of 1615 Canadian avenue, Akron, Ohio, died Friday at Station Hospital of injuries received in the crash.

The bomber was returning from a routine training flight and was preparing to land when one motor failed, causing the plane to nose over into the ground, Benning officials stated. All men were members of the Seventh Ob-

Richmond Blues Observe Anniversary of Founding

Famed Fighters Now First Battalion Of 176th Infantry

Combining a celebration of Mother's Day with the 154th anniversary of the organization of the famed Richmond Blues, the First Battalion of the 176th Infantry Regiment, now stationed at Fort Benning, staged a special service commemorating the founing of the organization in the Main Theater Sunday.

A history of the Richmond Blues was recounted by Lt. Col. W. W. Atkins, executive officer of the regiment as the main address of the occasion.

Previously the battalion had joined the entire regiment as it marched to earlier services in Doughboy Stadium, to pay tribute to 21 mothers who had been invited to Fort Benning as guests of the Post and of various units. The mothers had been selected by lot. Mrs. Alice M. Wolf, of Baltimore, mother of PFC. Joseph L. Wolf, of the 176th was one of the mothers who were chosen by lot. She attended the special services for the Blues and was introduced by Col. Edwin Cox, commanding officer of the Regiment to the gathered battalion.

BAND OPENS

The special commemorative services opened with a prelude by the Regimental Band, after which the soldiers and guests sang "America." Chaplain John A. Troxler then read a brief prayer which was followed by a choral selection by the 176th Infantry Glee Club. Following this came the address by Col. Atkins and then the entire organization combined to sing "Faith of Our Fathers," after which Chaplain Arnold M. Lewis spoke on "A Faith for the Future." The organization then sang "America the Beautiful," and Chaplain Anthony E. Czubak pronounced the benediction.

The Richmond Blues now is the First Battalion of the 176th Infantry Regiment, which formerly was the famed First Virginia, organized in 1832. The Blues were organized first as a company of Militia back in 1789, and first appeared in a red uniform—but it was too soon after the Revolution for the loyal residents of Richmond to want to see their lads in red coats, so the uniform was changed to one copied from the Swiss Guards. When, in 1799, Congress authorized a larger army, the Virginia militia was reorganized and the militia company became the Richmond Light Infantry Blues.

WIDE-EYED MOTHERS WERE PLENTIFUL AT FORT BENNING last week-end, as 21 visiting mothers, who made the trip to the post at the expense of Benning officials, were shown the "inside works" of an army. The three-day visit ended Sunday. On the left, Mrs. Madeline Oughton, of New Brunswick, N. J., and her son, Corp. LeRoy Oughton, First Training Regiment of The Infantry School, greet Private James Stoffel, driver of this General Sherman Tank in the Eleventh Armored Regiment, Tenth Armored Division. Stoffel is a native of Kansas City, Mo. In the center, Sgt. Phillip Traupane, of Muncy, Pa., tells two of the visiting mothers just how paratroopers come down to deal destruction to democracy's foes. Left to right in the picture are Corp. Vincent J. Esposito, of Co. H, 300th Infantry, with his mother, Mrs. Fannie Esposito, of West Haven, Conn.; Sgt. Traupane, Mrs. Catherine Fisher, of Chicago, and her son, Pfc. John S. Fisher, Co. D, First Paratroop Training Regiment. On the right, Mrs. Alice M. Wolf, of Baltimore, Md., and her soldier-son, Pfc. Joseph L. Wolf, 176th Infantry Regiment, are shown as they viewed a paratroop demonstration at the post. (All photos by U. S. Army Signal Corps.)

Army Veteran Recalls Early Days At Post

Skulls and Bones Dug Up On Range Get Second Funeral

First Sergeant William Oglen, Headquarters Company, Service Battalion, First Student Training regiment boasts of being one of the oldest soldiers in Fort Benning. He came here on cadre from the 24th Infantry, DEML, Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, July 14, 1921.

In the midst of cotton and corn fields on the main post the 24th Infantry cadre selected a spot to pitch tents. Days were filled with the task of clearing the ground for the 24th Infantry Regiment which was to arrive at a later date. In October 1921 the 24th Infantry arrived from Columbus, N. M. to begin construction of the post proper.

The 83rd Field Artillery already stationed here worked hand in hand with the 24th Infantry in demolishing farm houses and buildings to make way for the building of Gowdy Field and Doughboy Stadium. Few buildings reminescent of that era today are: General Allen's home, known as the Butt's house and the old brick part of Post Headquarters. The area known to day as Block 18 was the scene of NCO's homes, these were torn down to make way for the Officer's Quarters. Using tanks as bulldozers the 83rd Field Artillery plunged into the buildings demolishing them completely, while the 24th Infantry came along with "Hayburners" (mules) and wagons to clear the debris.

EXCITING MOMENTS

It was a gigantic task clearing and building the post, but in between they had exciting moments as in one instance in building McAndrews Range. At one time or another it was the site of a cemetery which revealed itself when they dug the pits for the targets. Digging down without the least bit of an idea as to what they were about to see, the spades and picks brought forth skulls and bones. Many of the men became alarmed and pale-faced simultaneously, and dropped their tools in alarm. The braver men, however, took the skulls back to their tents as souvenirs. That was O. K. until the captain had his Saturday inspection, and declared another funeral for the remain.

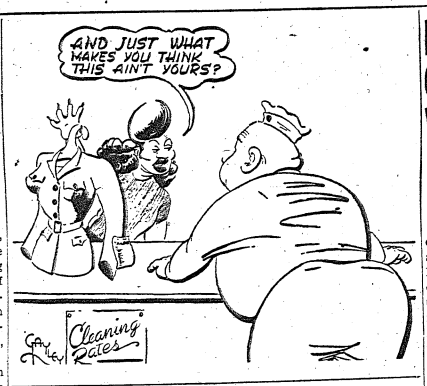
Sgt. Oglen enlisted in the army November 10, 1917 at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga. In April 1918 he disembarked for France, arriving at St. Nazain to serve with Quartermasters. When Armistice was declared he returned to the States, hoping to be able to go again. However, he is still going strong endeavoring to keep the younger soldiers on the beam. He tells them the Army is the place for them to be and how much more they shall like it when accustomed.

Sgt. Oglen who is 54 years of age regards the early days of Fort Benning as colorful ones, which he is anxious to weave a yarn about to the listener.

3534 Ordnance Settles Down To Hard Work

After having lectures and meetings on the art of camouflage and bivouacing, the 3534th Ord. AM Co., finally had actual experience on May 5 and 6 at Lower King's Pond.

This was the first bivouac for this newly arrived company of specialists in automotive repair, and although short, it gave each member of the company an opportunity to actually execute his part under semi-actual conditions. The excellent results of this convoy and bivouac was due to the instructions and guidance of the officers of the 4th Det. Special Troops, 2nd Army, as well as the Company officers.



There is much talk and preparation on the part of the '34th's top-notch welterweight, Tommy Lemmon, for a hinted forthcoming fistic bout with the welterweight champion, Henry Armstrong. The details of this proposed battle are not as yet completed nor disclosed, but things are on the fire. Lemmon, a red-headed Irishman from Milwaukee, Wis., has an excellent background of six professional fights, the last of which was the defeat of "Baby Face" Breese at Milwaukee on Jan. 1, 1943. Any fellow serviceman in the welterweight class who is interested in a bout with Lemmon is invited to contact Lt. Bryce W. Park, 3534th Ord. AM. Co., by phone. Line 6, extension 78.

The roster of this company of mechanical workers contain many former soft ball players who have formed an exceptional hard hitting, fast fielding team. Any team on the Post interested in some good competition call Lt. Bryce W. Park, Line 6, extension 78.

LT. DAVIES PROMOTED

Promotion of 2nd Lt. Stewart H. Davies of Chattanooga, Tenn., to the rank of first lieutenant, has been announced by Col. Richard G. McKee, commanding officer of the 300th Infantry Regiment, in which Lt. Davies is serving as Supply Officer of the 2nd aBttalion.

Lt. Daves, attended Chattanooga High school and the University of Tennessee. He was a member of the Chattanooga Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Medical Soldier Has Tough Job

Training More Extensive Than Is Infantryman's

By MAJOR F. I. CIOFALO
Surgeon, 1st STR

There is a mistaken concept among civilians and Army personnel that the Medical Departments assignment for a soldier, is a soft, safe and easy work. This is a fallacy because the course given to the Medical Soldier is one of the toughest and most important in the Army's curriculum.

Wherever the combat soldier goes the Medical soldier goes also, for the task of bringing the combat soldier back when wounded is principally vested on the Medical aid men. If the Infantryman is tough, the Medical-man must be tougher. The job of the Infantry soldier is to get up there and fight, but the Medical man's part is displayed in crawling from foxhole to foxhole to help the wounded. His training must be of the most developed type since it is his responsibility to save human lives. He must be in good physical condition, for he must have strength to get the wounded back during or immediately after the battle to the Medical Officer for necessary specialized treatment.

ALL COMBAT UNITS

The Medical Soldier is attached to all combat units, and has to be a sturdy individual. In addition to his medical schooling in army routine, drill, the characteristics of small weapons, trench digging, defense against various forms of attack, marches and bivouacs, scouting and patrolling, map reading, communications and tactics; he must also have various types of training to qualify him for special jobs. Some of the special studies he has to undergo are anatomy, physiology, emergency treatment, malaria medica, medical and surgical nursing, transportation of the wounded, sanitation, methods of stopping hemmorrhage, the use of sulfa druge and heat to reduce shock, also to give painless hypodermic injections, how to sterilize surgical instruments, even how to make beds and bathe patients.

Many unfair statements are made about the Medical Detachments, due to the mistaken belief that everything comes easy to them. It is true that some Medical Soldiers working in hospitals, and dispensaries on the home front have it easy, but look at other branches of the service and you will see that other soldiers also have soft and easy jobs. Let us not judge all medical units by just a few.

NEVER-ENDING WORK

We realize that the medical units that are attached to combat outfits have a duty which entails a never ending amount of work; and as for the other medical units which are not attached to combat troops, we can justly say that these medical units are no different than similar units in the other branches of service.

The Medical Detachment of the Station Hospital, Fort Benning, Georgia, under the supervision of Major John B. Joyner, has many varied and complicated duties. The Medical soldiers there work long and weary hours. These men of the Medical Detachment who show zeal, leadership, and intelligence are considered for ratings. Those who receive these ratings have climbed the ladder slowly and have worked conscientiously, just as hard or even harder than the Infantry soldier of equivalent rank.

Benning P.-T. A. Concludes Year With Meeting

Several Projects Undertaken Here Are Discussed

A summation of the highlights of the year was on the program at the final meeting of the Fort Benning Parent-Teachers' Association held last Thursday in the Children's School auditorium. Officers for the coming year were installed by Mrs. Henry Perrine, retiring vice-president.

The meeting was opened by Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, post chaplain, with his reading of the poem, "Putting It Up to God." Mrs. Richard Evens, Jr., gave a brief summary of the state convention in Atlanta.

The year's work of the PTA included sponsoring a complete health check-up for each child in school, purchase of a motion picture screen. gift of library books to each classroom, obtaining an office assistant for the principal, sponsoring the War Stamp booth, equipping the play house with athletic equipment as well as each classroom, gift of equipment to enrich the extra curricular activity of each classroom, award of an attendance prize to the room having the best attendance at each meeting, hiring an assistant on the playground during the PTA meeting, redecoration of the teachers' room, hiring a dramatic coach for the direction of two plays given by the school children, presentation of a new flag to each classroom, supplying each classroom with tissue, having a cupboard built to house PTA equipment, giving a Halloween party for all children on the post, arranging for skating areas for the children and the sponsoring of the Hobby Show.

"Electric Power Is the Life Blood..."

"Electric power is the life blood of war production. Regardless of the availability of materials and labor, modern war production would be impossible without power. . . . It is reassuring to know that electric power will not be a limiting factor in all-out war production, and that whatever war loads must be carried, electric power will be there in adequate quantities. . . .

"The power men . . . should be proud of the job that has been done in providing power supply. Power has never been 'too little or too late.' There is today no shortage of power. This is in sharp contrast to the situation as to many other vital necessities. I do not know of a single instance in which the operation of a war plant has been delayed by lack of power supply. Every single piece of complicated equipment . . . has been in place and ready to operate when the new war plants were ready for use.

"I repeat, the power men of the country can be proud of the job that they are doing."—J. A. Krug, Director, Office of War Utilities.

Tiger Duo Fails to Break Anti-Tank Compete Tie

S-Sgt. Robert Gullette and Sgt. Charles Phillips of Division Headquarters Company are not going to be outdone, at least by one another, in any contest involving the firing of the 37-mm gun. They can truthfully look at each other and say, "Listen, boy, I'm just as good as you."

And their company commander, Capt. Walter S. Barnes, will grant that they are both right. Recently the company went out on the range and the team of Gullette and Phillips found themselves outlasting all other competitors on the 37-mm. gun. Their scores were the same, so the company officers gave them a chance to break the tie. They fired again—and tied again. The unbelieving officers told them to draw another round of ammunition and the two sergeants fired again and—yes, believe it or not—their scores were the same. At this point, the ammunition was running low so the contest ended in a draw, but Gullette and Phillips can hardly wait until they get another chance to show who is the better man.

Incidentally, the company officers expressed themselves as "very well satisfied" with the work of the company as a whole. Firing the pistol, tommy gun, and co-axial 30-cal. as well as the 37-mm., the men acquitted themselves well in every case.

The officers were especially pleased because the company had just returned from a Division field problem with the Commanding General, and on the night preceding the firing had been out on blackout driving. The men fired "above average even for rested men," according to their pleased officers.

You wear them in town . . . and you wear them at the Post—and you're the envy of the wilted lilieavers, I'm praising the lightweight mesh tailored dresses displayed at KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC. These exquisitely-made creations by Nan Taylor come in a variety of colors. Pale green, white, apple-blossom pink, heaven blue, yellow and a lovely, lovely shade of luggage tan are a few of the appealing colors in which these practical short-sleeved dresses are available. This fine mesh is one material which is cool and sheer without giving too much of a peek-a-boo effect. Precise tailoring helps make the shirtwaist styles ideal for satisfying wear no matter what the occasion. Hot weather is now with us to stay so it is most important to shop around and select the most practical dresses one can so as to keep as cool as possible during the summer months. In this case, one of these fine mesh dresses will be satisfyingly cool. The exemplary tailoring on each of them likewise will preserve the fine lines though the heat may wilt the dignity of less perfect dresses.

The tropical heat which has descended on Our Town means everyone tries every possible means for keeping cool. One of the simplest and nicest ways I know for relieving that exhausted feeling is to drop into the modern CITY PHARMACY, 14 18th street, for a tall, frosty drink. The ever so spic-and-span soda fountain is just one of the many delightful features of this complete drug store. The prescription department is another. Be assured that here your most exacting prescription demands will be most skillfully compounded. Yet another attraction at the Pharmacy is the popular Shopper's Tea which draws many shoppers anxious for a delectable snack during the afternoon. All the quality cosmetics and latest feminine innovations are displayed in an attractive manner. Your every need, no matter what it may be, will be thoughtfully, skillfully, and courteously attended to at this store to assure your utmost satisfaction.

Keeping your tiny daughter looking fresh and sweet is almost an all day job in itself. A plentiful supply of inexpensive cotton dresses may be found at SEARS, ROEBUCK, CO., which will certainly fill your bill for the summer months ahead. You'll discover that the addition of several of these smart attractive dresses to your daughter's wardrobe might even induce her to take a bit more pride in keeping her frocks neat. Less spilled jam and mud smears and such will probably be discouraged if she were gifted with some of these dainty frocks. Serviceable broadcloth, batiste, dimity, and dotted Swiss are just a few of the materials available in this attractively styled assortment of young girls' dresses. Both you and your daughter will like the intriguing bits of eyelet embroidery and cotton lace trimming which many of these frocks have. The styles and colors are numerous. Some dresses sport sashes, others don't. Why not let your offspring select the models she'd like. Young and inexperienced shopper she may be, but she couldn't go wrong if she were to shop at Sear's for one of these frocks.

Separations as a result of the chaos now clouding this world of ours are affecting all of us. If leaves or furloughs are few and far between an interchange of photographs does enter a bit of a bright note. Naturally just any old picture is almost as bad as nothing at all. Only the most exacting and skilled artistry will meet the high standards you should set for yourself. You'll want to send your loved ones a photograph which is truly life-like. Painstaking care in correct lighting suitable pose, and perhaps a bit of careful retouching will result in a masterpiece of photography. For those of you who appreciate good photography, the ideal place is the AIME DUPONT STUDIO. There a skilled technician will produce your pictures in no haphazard manner but with the dexterity of one who has for some time perfected his art with scores of subjects. No mediocre job will it be, but one which will satisfy you completely.

Almost every yard, back or front, wisely boasts a "Victory Garden." Likewise, many a housewife boasts of her skill in doing her own housework. What could be more appropriate for work of this type than shorts for indoors and slacks for outdoors? One-piece playsuits and matching skirts of floral prints or solid colored broadcloth, waffle pique and striped seersucker are wisely suggested by J. A. KIRVEN CO. The skirts are either button-down-the-front or dirndl styles. Most of the playsuits are short-sleeved and simple notched-collar types. On the second floor, in fact, conveniently in the same department of this store are serviceable spun rayon tailored slacks in natural, luggage tan, green or blue shades. All of these fasten on the side and several boast suspenders gaily decorated with peasant embroidery. The other strictly man-tailored styles have belt loops so you may add your favorite leather belt. You find dressing sensibly in either slacks or shorts for your garden and housework will enable you to be cool, comfortable and still look pretty as a picture.

From the beginning of May until the end of October, occupants of the Southland adorn their feet with white shoes. The complete stock of MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY explains why this is the ideal place for summer shoe selections. New styles, new ideas, exacting workmanship, superior quality and the reputable labels of I. Miller, Rice-O'Neil, Madamoiselle, Rhythm, Step, Florsheim, combine to assure one and all grown-ups or little tots of attractive and long-lasting shoes. White calf, suede and white bucks are the serviceable and becoming materials used in making this footwear. High heels are available in nearly every style shoe so if you feel a high heel becomes your foot more so than any other type heel you best make good use of your shoe ration tickets. USO Presents Sgt. Smith For Lecture Sunday Night

Former British Army Officer To Show His Movies

A motion picture lecture on "China Today" by Sgt. Patrick Smith, a specialist on the Orient which he covered for 22 years, now a member of the 196th Signal Photo Company at Fort Benning, and a special supper to be served free to all service men will be held at the 11th Street USO in Columbus, Sunday night at 6:30 o'clock (EWT).

The films, which were made by Sergeant Smith during the last five years, show Chinese-Japanese battles and cover about 5,000 miles of travel through China todya.

Formerly a lieutenant colonel in the British army during the first World War, Sergeant Smith was wounded twice and received many decorations. At the close of that struggle, Smith was commanding 1,000 officers and men on the firing line in France, where he had spent three and a half years. Later becoming an American citizen, Smith enlisted in the American army as a buck private.

TRAVELED FAR

Between the two wars, Smith traveled from the United States back and forth to all parts of the Near and Far East, returning to give lectures, write, and show his color movies. He was Far Eastern editor of the New York Sunday Mirror, and covered every major activity of the Japanese army during the 10 years prior to Pearl Harbor.

The lecture and supper, open to all service men, will be presented under the direction of Dr. Louis J. Velte, director of religious work at the Army-Navy-YMCA USO in Columbus. Dr. Velte is temporarily at the club at the request of the Army-Navy-YMCA in New York City to help set up a church information and counselor's office in the Columbus club.

New Silver Bars Reflect Chagrin Via His Pajamas

Lieutenant West Issues Statement: 'I Was Framed'

Have you heard the one about the student officer in the 11th Company, First Student Training Regiment who wore bars on his pajamas?

Well, this time it's true, but newly-promoted 1st Lt. Irwin W. West, has a different idea—

"I was framed," he will bellow, "and my best friends did it."

It was only a few days ago that Lt. West was made an officer; that is, he received those silver bars that lift one out of the shavetail class. So he trotted over to the 2nd Battalion's Club and purchased a box of El Ropo's which he proceeded to pass out to his barracks mates.

Came night, the sun set and Lt. West was preparing for bed. He reached into his foot locker and drew out a clean pair of pajamas.

"Shucks," said a friend lounging nearby, "I don't think you need a clean pair. That other pair is still clean."

"That's so," added another friend. "Don't change tonight."

So Lt. West, frugal soul, didn't change. He soon was abed, ready to drift into the arms of Morpheus. Then came the sudden shout—"Look, West is wearing bars on his pajamas, he so proud of his promotion to 1st lieutenant."

It was true, the red-faced student had to admit, as he glanced quickly at his shoulders. And howl after howl of laughter swept the barracks.

"Framed" cried the embarrassed student but it was too late.

Nowdays Lt. West, a graduate of Clemson College and stationed at Camp Wolters, Texas, cautiously checks his pajamas each bedtime for bars. No more to date but he still doesn't trust his barracks mates.

"You can't trust student officers in the 11th Company, he will tell anyone." They do terrible things."

Tiger Strikes Gold As Bullets Whizz O'er Head

With machine gun bullets whizzing over his head and dynamite exploding all around him, a sergeant who works ordinarily as a stenographer at Division Headquarters was mostly concerned with hugging the ground as he crossed the infiltration course at Tiger Camp recently.

And it paid dividends. He not only preserved his neck, but at one of those moments when he was stretched out flat, the sergeant lifted his head and saw directly under his nose a solitary nickel, tarnished and discolored from exposure and powder blasts, but still acceptable coin of the realm.

The sergeant thinks there is some kind of moral in this which is related to that old adage about a soldier traveling on his stomach. At any rate, he intends to keep his head down—yes, and the rest of his anatomy, too—whenever ammunition is floating about in his immediate vicinity. He might find a quarter next time.

"Old Man River" and "I had the Craziest Dream" were sung by Private Charles Wicker who was accompanied on the accordian by Sergeant Natal Pintello of Detachment Medical Dept. Station Hospital who subsequently played two solos.

Of his own composition both as to words and tune were two Negro spirituals sung by Private Mickey Howard and, following these, were a cowboy and a hill billy song by Pvt. Johnny Sopher who played his own accompaniment on the guitar.

A duet was played by Sergeant Pintello and Corporal Gail Sponseller of Ward C 8 performing on the accordion and saxaphone respectively, and, following this was the finale of Private Wicker giving impersonations of noted theatrical and political figures.

This variety show was the first of a series which will be given on Thursday afternoons under the sponsorship of Capt. N. R. Shulack, M. D.

"I have only one purpose—to go out and win the war in the shortest possible time."
—Lt. General Jacob L. Devers,

Wartime No Time For Pleasure Travel

Well, we're just back from furlough, and by the time we squeezed safely out of the sardine can (bus, train, what have you) boy, were we glad to get back to old Benning. So help us, as long as the memory of this last trip lasts, never again will our heart persuade our mind to yield to the temptation of asking for a few days off from the G. I. grind. And we aren't the only ones to make this resolution to judge by what the civilians were saying.

We hadn't been away from the old post for six months, but in six months how times have changed, especially railroad and bus time tables. The bus pulling out of the Columbus terminal was packed to the ceiling with soldiers and civilians and by the time we reached Opelika the driver was faced with the grim duty of leaving whole families including babes in arms with the realization that they would be literally out in the cold unless they were fortunate enough to tear on the heart strings of some motorist.

The passengers on the bus took turns in standing and sitting so we finally decided perhaps it would be best to break up the trip and get a good night's rest in one of the country towns half way to "Buminham."

Next morn we tried our luck with the choo-choo. The first thing the conductor said was "If you're not going any further than Birmingham, maybe you'd better take the second section somewhere behind us."

Not knowing when the second section might show up and anxious to make the stream-liner (Hope springs eternal, dontcha know), we decided to try the first section. Well, it was worse than the conductor said and we can't say he didn't warn us.

The coach was of the vintage of pre-air-conditioning days with the two feeble fans stirring up the smoke and dust. The car was filled with droopy G. I.'s, at least three of the family of well-known train pests who must wander up and down the car in search of water or the little girls' room, and squalling babies. The brakeman was too busy elsewhere to remind the riders that two tunnels were coming up and with all the windows up, there's no need talking about what happened when the train entered the tunnel.

If the trip home was bad, the return voyage was worse. The busses were again jammed and packed, and the battle-cry was every man for himself and the devil take the hind-most.

Yep, everybody was fighting to get in at once, and after all seats were filled, they still poured in. And, alack alas, chivalry is dead. Women are learning that if they insist on travelling during rush week-end hours, they must suffer the consequences, and stand up if they are fortunate enough to get aboard.

One aristocratic lady boarded the bus with the announcement she was headed for Opelika and did not relish making the trip standing. And as she made her statement, she eyed in turn, (perhaps we should say stared at) every male in the coach. Well, brother, she made no impression because she rode standing into Opelika.

We don't think it was because the males were by nature unchivalrous and rude but because most of them had been travelling all night on other busses in the standing position and certainly deserved the rest they finally secured.

The whole point we are trying to make is that not only women but everyone making unnecessary trips during war time are adding to the burden of an already over-taxed transportation system. By making these trips, they are not only making it hard on themselves but on servicemen who have been granted brief furloughs which are allowed because it is morale building. Perhaps it would not be a bad idea for the soldiers as well as the civilians to limit their out of town trips to emergency visits only. Because after a day of two of fighting crowds for seats, arguing over lost or misplaced baggage, and missing trains or waiting for hours for tardy ones, the old adage "there's no place like home" is a good one. And for the duration home is your own battle station.

Russia Fights On Against Great Odds

"Russia is like an animal that's been run over twice but doesn't know that it's dead . . .

"The Russian hasn't got courage; only brute instinct."

In this way a Nazi commentator explained the strange vitality of the Soviet animal, which despite its wounds keeps returning to the attack. Russia's losses in war-potential—the power to equip and sustain her armies, might, indeed seem crippling compared with the resources of other countries at war. Of basic materials she has lost 81 million annual tons of coal in the Don basin; 10 million tons annually of pig iron at Krinoi Rog. She has lost all of her aluminum, nearly half of her machine tool industry and over a fifth of her manpower.

Hitler was well informed by German engineers whom the Russians employed about the resources of the Ukraine. Wisely, the Soviet Government didn't use them in the East. There, the foreign technical skill was chiefly American; Americans laid down the Ford mass-production plant at Gorki, now making aero-engines and military vehicles; Americans planned the gigantic tractor plant at Chelyubinsk now making tangs. The great service of Americans—and the greatest was rendered by Ford—has been to teach the Russians mass-production methods. Through the Ford internal combustion engine, millions of farmers were introduced to mechanized farming. Because they knew how to drive a Fordson tractor, they quickly learned how to drive a tank. Its simplicity enabled the government to make a people barely emerged from peasant illiteracy—into the skilled labor force now manning the Soviet war industry. To Hitler (until events made him admit this change) the industrial strength of the Soviet East was a Bolshevik propaganda myth. But to his armies, the shells, guns and tanks, created in districts where five years ago there was only steppe, desert or stone, by workers whom they had been taught were peasant barbarians, remains an inexplicable realty.

Russia lacks rubber, nickel, tin and alloys: They are the weak spots in her war machinery which must be strengthened. Germany with the Occupied Countries still has more than four times the coal remaining to Russia; three times her pig iron and five times her steel. Germany now dominates almost twice the manpower of Russia from Occupied Countries. This explains Russia's continuing need for planes, tanks and food from the Allies. With superiority in industry and manpower Germany has not been able to crush Russia. Courage, military skill, sound political warfare on the home front and a well planned economy have kept and will keep the Soviet State as a fighting entity. In brilliant local offensives the Red Army has shown its ability to attack. But to convert the local offensive into the grand assault which will finally crush Hitlerism, a synchronized pressure of all the United Nations throwing in their resources and airpower is necessary. Such a joint attack inspired by good cause add the knowledge that such overwhelming strength will bring final victory to the United Nations?

Soldiers Should Know About Hospital Trains

Only a few men in the armed forces know what a Hospital train is or what it looks like. These are newly formed units in the U. S. Army, and there is little need to impress their importance in transportation of the sick and wounded.

A Hospital train is a typical fifteen car pullman train, equipped to transport litter and walking wounded to various hospitals, which are located in different parts of the country. A graphic description of a newly set up Army Hospital train, which was designed and equipped at the order of the Surgeon General, is described as follows.

1. Two cars are made into wards to provide space for sixty-four bed patients.
2. A unit car with a kitchen capable of messing five hundred patients.
3. A unit car with dressing room completely equipped.
4. One car to quarter the train's detachment.
5. Seats and berths furnished in two standard pullmans with accommodations for approximately two hundred and sixty walking sick and wounded patients.
6. One car for supplies and equipment.
7. A unit car with berth and office space for the train Surgeon.
8. Large double doors on both sides of every car for ease in loading litters on trains.
9. The total train capacity of four Officers, six Nurses and thirty-three Enlisted men, and three hundred and twenty-four patients.

Recently the above set-up was changed because of lack of essential materials, but the above description gives us an approximate picture of the composition of a typical hospital train. These trains are completely equipped for any emergency measure and have in a compact space the facilities of a modern hospital.

The Surgeon General is doing all in his power to transport our wounded and sick in the most comfortable way and we are all in favor of giving these casualties the best accommodations possible.

"A sure footed animal," as the school boy said, "is one that doesn't miss when it kicks." We ought to be "sure footed" with our tongues.

The present is the result of the past. Tomorrow will be too.

We'll create a world worth fighting for when we make in ourselves the correction we demand in others.

Word are weapons too. Are yours telling blows AT the nation or FOR the nation?

When you get real caring you always know it's more than you deserve.

Do you know the folks next door?
Do the folks next door know you?
And if you don't
As alas, is our wont,
What are you going to do?

In the first industrial revolution the machine came into its own. We need a new industrial revolution where men will come into their own.

—How many days of unselfishness will you give to raise national morale?

USO Presents—

BATTLE OF VICTORY MUSIC AT NINTH STREET USO CLUB

By PVT. SHELDON A. KEITEL

Outstanding event carded on the various USO programs in Columbus and Phenix City this week will be the Battle of Victory Music Sunday afternoon at the Ninth Street USO. Under the leadership of Prof. Arthur E. Hall, associate director of the Yale University Glee Club, a singing contest will be held between soldiers and civilians in the audience. Words of popular victory music will be projected upon a screen, and song will ring out from the competing teams.

Prof. Hall is traveling throughout the country as one of eight music directors of the United Service Organizations, Inc. In a speech given in Columbus last week, he cited the Army's program which has 28 officers active in developing song leaders among soldiers. Noting the limitations of the program since the United States has millions of troops scattered over the world, Prof. Hall showed how the USO is lending a hand in the work.

Timely proof that a soldier's mentality is a thing to be reckoned with in so far as quiz programs are concerned comes from the Ninth Street USO. Last week the till from which come prizes for winners of the "Quiz-Serial-Movie" feature was tapped two additional times. Five awards instead of the usual three were made. One boy scored 87 points out of a possible 100.

Both popular and semi-classical strains will pour from the Salvation Army USO in Columbus Saturday night when the orchestra of the 176th Infantry entertains at 8:30 p. m. (EWT).

More equipment for skaters has been provided at the Army-Navy YMCA-USO. Parties on wheels are held every Sunday afternoon and on Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Roller skates can be rented for 25 cents, but there is no charge for skating if you have your own skates.

There is a plentitude of prizes waiting to be claimed at the Salvation Army USO in Phenix City. Prizes are awarded at a social Friday night, for a ping pong tournament Saturday afternoon and for a quiz program Sunday afternoon. Thursday night at the club an ice cream supper will be held at 9 p. m. (EWT) followed by an entertainment.

A subject of rifle speculation will be considered at the Town Hall forum Sunday, May 23, in the large auditorium of the Ninth Street USO when "After the War—What?" will be the topic. A prominent speaker will be present, and there will be a combined lecture with the League of Women Voters participating.

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

OLD T. P. BARGES IN LOOKING FOR HIS IMPORTED CHEW GUM,

BY S-SGT. TOM McDONALD

For supper last evening my devoted friend, the mess sergeant, had placed before us a tempting morsel of dried snails with creole sauce.

Although it was one of his favorite creations I found it rather easy to resist. For this reason I could not help lying awake with pangs of hunger knowing at my bread basket soon after I had "hit the hay."

For several long hours I lay there quietly by uttering unprintable epithets to myself. A full moon was peeping through a nearby window and due to its gentle, floating rays, I almost missed noting the sudden appearance of a tall shadowy figure with a flashlight stumbling over the foot lockers as he staggered toward my bunk.

Even before the figure rammed his shin against my bed rail and hoarsely muttered "Shades of Salome" I realized that my visitor was Colonel T. P. Swampwater himself. While he rubbed his shin I leaped from my bed and stood at attention.

"Rest, Sergeant," the ol' boy replied.

"That's what I was doing, Sir."

"Yes, I know," he retorted. "Be at ease then."

"Shut up!", yelled someone near the end of the squad room.

"Get the hell outa here," yelled another, and then the other fellow muttered, "Some damn drunk," and turned feverishly over.

Meanwhile, the ol' boy was trembling with indignity, and before he could gain his composure and tear the place down, I invited him down to the orderly room to state his business.

After staggering over the remaining foot lockers and waking the rest of the squad room we finally arrived at the first sergeant's lair.

After being seated and awaking the charge of quarters who proved to be decidedly "brass shy," the colonel began his story.

"Sergeant," he says, "I hate to come barging over here in the widdle of the night to wake you up, but a matter of grave importance has arisen."

"When I got home tonight and went to bed, I realized that I had forgot to lock up my box of imported chewing gum. So I immediately got up and rushed to the office, but when I arrived it wasn't on my desk where I had left it. So I rushed right over here."

"Well, calm yourself, Sir," I answered. You don't have a thing to worry about. I ran across it when I was closing up so I locked it up in the filing cabinets."

A look of relief swept across the ol' boy's face and grabbing my right hand, he wrung it heartily.

"Thank you, Sergeant," he says, "Thanks a million! I'll see you in the morning." With these words he got up and went out whistling "Banjo on my kneed!" When he had gone the charge of quarters turned to me and said:

"Gee, he's a full colonel, isn't he?"

"Yeah!" I retorted, wishing that I had at least tried to eat the dried snails with creole sauce.

Kay Says—

SHE FINDS 'TOMORROW' IS ALMOST NEXT DOOR TO 'NEVER'

You've heard of that rare soul who writes when the inspiration strikes him. And of the meticulous person who spends so many hours at his typewriter a day, come fair weather or foul. There is still a third class among those who spend long hours at our work—the procrastinators, the putter-off-ers, or just plain lazy.

We are of that piteous clan who wait until the deadline stares us in the face, then to approach our labors rebelliously knowing that something has to be turned in to fill the space, but wondering just what that something is going to be. Pity us, for throughout our thoughts runs a constant threat of the uncompleted chore.

SHE MEANS US

Copy, our Simon Legree editor informs us, must be in by Saturday morning. That gives us all day Sunday to go our blithe and cheerful way, except that we know we should have snatched that interlude of quiet to get something down on paper instead of reading the Sunday paper, comic sections and all.

Monday morning we have a splendid idea while fixing the breakfast grapefruit. A sane person would at least jot it down or, filled with the creative mipulse, abandon the family to its own devises to emerge with a masterpiece. Not us. We carefully shelve all ideas in the dusty recesses of our mind.

Days come and days go, and the virgin page remains unsullied. At times a twinge of conscience pricks us, to be quickly submerged by a bit of rationalization. It is true that our sleep is sometimes broken by thoughts of the morrow, but there are tasks which simply must be done—and Saturday is a long way off. Until suddenly it is Friday night, and something must be done.

STILL WE TARRY

We still postpone the inevitable. We debate going to a show, we half-heartedly listen to a radio program. We fix a sandwich, we read the paper from cover to cover. We answer the phone eagerly, and if it isn't for us we listen to a mystifying, one-way conversation. With a sudden spurt of energy we sit down before the typewriter—and the baby chooses that moment to wake with a terrified shriek, the victim of a bad dream.

Around midnight we're in a properly stultified frame of mind, where even the faintest inkling of an idea would die aborning. Time drags on wearily as we pound out word after word, hoping some of it makes sense. Saturday morning we regard our brain child with loathing, hand it over sheepishly to the long-suffering editor, and resolve we'll write next week's column no later than Sunday night. But by Sunday night it's a long time till next week's deadline.

Verse

RELEASE

He cannot rhapsodize
About a breast
When steel lingers
Where lips pressed.
Nor can he wonder at the night
When Stukas give him
Death for sight.
And music must seem Slightly grim
When rifles sing
Their song to him.
But could he know
The peace you give Beauty would wake,
Emotion live,
His soldier verse
Repressed within,
No longer terse—
Find sweet release.

ABSTRACTION

I could call tonight a sculpture,
The moon a bas-relief upon sky's distance,
Desire curved as an abstraction, and memory
A title rather than a wound. Or
I could hear it
As slow music, a fugue of tree-
sounds in the wind,
Its themes all joined, its meaning plain, its rhythm clear.
And yet it's none of these. It's too like you,
Its face an image blurred on broken stone,
Its voice unrecognized, its touch
no longer known
Something I once could understand, but now release
As intangible, opaque—
The whisper of a thought in space.

Cpl. A. T. Rotgard,
Co. E, 29th Inf.

THE SOLDIER'S PLEA

Sometime here down in camp, I'm a little loney
Especially when my girl friend fail' to write me.
It usually gets me down, puts me on the sick call.
Medicine will not help, neither can
Captain Hall.
Everytime when they ask, what's the matter with me
It would be a shame, answer that I'm lonely
So you, my deal ladies, write and write to them all
To save your sweethearts from worriment and sick-call.

—Pvt. John Ellis, Jr.

JUST A THOUGHT

As day ends and night draws nigh
Two hundred men will heave a sigh
Relief is here—now for fun
Says who—your day has just begun

There is no day or night for them
To love or dance like other men
To learn takes time—but more and more
No midnite at 12—but at 24

Time my friends can never be Half enough for you and me
For rifle—bayonet—mortar or maps
You've got to learn to kill those Japs

And when some day—not very far
You get a pair of golden bars
At least your time has come
For fun—No, Soldier, your work has just begun.

NIGHT FLIGHT

Runway...
Dull grey in the moonlight...
A smudge of clouds
Lying rolled up at the edges of the sky...
The smell of gasoline...
The sputter of motors...
Then the deep-chested roar
Drowning out the whispers of the world.

Far down below...
The dark towns wait in terror,
feigning sleep...
The sky above
Lazily stretches itself and smothers a yawn..
Then a searchlight,
Two, three, a host of lights
Stab the darkness with silvers of death;
The "ack-acks" send up their
"toadstools",

IT'S ME, O LORD!
Chaplain F. M. Thompson

Negro spiritual,
It ain't my father, it ain't
My mother, standin' in the need of prayer, it's me, O Lord.
It generally is.

Hall Caine in a prologue to one of his books tells of a man who was menaced by a thrall. His crops were destroyed, barns burned, cattle killed. One night he lay in wait for his enemy, saw him clutched him by the throat, threw him to the earth. As he drew his knife to put him to death, moonlight broke through the clouds and he found himself looking down into his own face.

That is only fiction but it brings home the well known truth that a man's worst enemy is himself. That he is the author of most of his ills.

Sickness, in a large measure, is the result of carelessness or the violation of the laws of health.

The misunderstanding, enmities which disturb and make life wretched, are due to his own wilful conduct. And most of them could be remedied by a little effort, a gracious acknowledgment that he was to blame at least in part.

A cantankerous household that majors in fault finding, a display of temper, could be made to function normally, if the parties concerned would go to the mourners bench, and confess, "It's me, O Lord."

And in answer to the one who did not get a square deal, that the cards were stacked against him and no doubt there are many such. Napoleon observed that "None but myself ever did me any harm."

So we are back where we began. It ain't my brother, it ain't my sister, it's me, O Lord.

Supervision Nips Waste In Battalion's Mess

1st S.T.R. Reports Excellent Results In Conservation

Many months ago the messes of the 4th Battalion, First Student Training Regiment began a concerted drive to conserve food and still present to the Enlisted Motor Mechanic and Radio Operator students complete, well balanced, and nutritive meals based on the Field Ration which was being issued.

Lt. Roy E. Cook, Battalion Mess Officer and the Company Mess Officers have been trying to educate both kitchen personnel preparing and cooking the food, and those eating in the messes the great importance of not wasting anything. At the moment, a little extra prepared, or a meal scraped into the waste can doesn't mean much. But, multiply that waste by the average number of men messing every day, and then figure it on a yearly basis. The wastage can run into thousands of dollars worth of food per year.

Just what has been done to cut excessive preparation of food? In August, 1942, the Mess Officers of the 4th aBttalion noticed that rations received were more than sufficient, and that an excess was accumulating. Therefore the Mess Sergeants were instructed to, and did, plan in advance about how many men they expected—to feed at each meal. Over a period of several months there was a great saving effected on foodstuffs.

FINE RESULTS

This saving was accomplished by the Battalion and Regimental Mess Officers cutting off a percentage of rations issued at the Field Commissary. As most all men in the service know, some months ago an actual daily count was initiated for each meal and the issue of rations become based not on company strength, but on a daily average of men eating in the mess. This did two things: (1) It eliminated the waste due to some men not eating all meals, and (2) It compensated for the normal drop in attendance over the week end or during the period around pay day.

It was noted some time ago that Mess Sergeants were not closely checking the cooking of vegetables and meats. Either the cooks were in a hurry to prepare their foods or didn't know how. Due to these facts there was an excessive shrinkage of meats, or a spoiling of vegetables due to improper cooking. In some instances over or underseasoning made the foods unpalatable and therefore were not eaten.

By continual assistance on the part of the Mess Officers, cooks and Mess Sergeants are now making full use of the Army Cook Book and other manuals outlining the proper methods of preparation, proper cooking temperatures, and correct seasoning necessary to avoid wastage, shrinkage or poor taste. Meats, vegetables, soups, pies, and cakes are continually being tasted by the Mess Officers, and suggestions are continually being made for improvement.

CHECKS THE MAN

In order to prevent monotony of menu, it is necessary for the Mess Sergeant to have each day's menu approved by the Mess Officer. Approving a menu is not just a matter of "signing on the dotted line." The menu is read very carefully and where practicable, suggestions are offered as preparing a vegetable or meat in a different manner, serving ice tea on a hot day instead of coffee, substituting one item for another.

Why is substitution necessary? Due to the present food situation certain meats, vegetables and other foods may be lacking or be so scarce that they will only be issued sparodically. This necessitates a deviation by the Field Commissary from the Master Menu. Therefore, the mess may receive spinach or greens two days in a row or every day for several days, or possibly ham may be issued and substituted for chicken, beef, or some other meat. When this substitution of like foods occurs frequently, identical preparation day after day would become monotonous. Here then is the value of knowing how to prepare the same foods in a different manner. By preventing monotony of diet for those eating in the mess, wastage of food is also prevented.

After each meal there is bound to be a small quantity of food remaining. If the particular food is of a type that will not spoil, it is not thrown out, but it is saved until the next meal, and served at that time in the same manner as the previous meal, or as a component of a dish that has been prepared specifically for that certain meal. By looking ahead and using his experience in preparing various foods, the Mess Sergeant can cut wastage of food due to left-overs to an absolute minimum.

EYE ON QUALITY

The personnel eating in the messes have been cautioned to take only what they can eat. Complaints are sometimes heard that a man could eat a lot more than he gets. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred this soldier will refer to one item only, and that is meat. However, if all that is offered on a menu is taken, and eaten, the soldier will benefit from a full, varied meal, containing the proper quantities of all foods. A soldier cannot exist on just meat, or just potatoes, or just vegetables. He must have a balanced meal.

The waste cans are inspected frequently by the Mess Officers and Mess Sergeants for excessive wastage by those men eating in the mess. They are often cautioned when scraping their trays of food not consumed to be more careful at the next meal and take only what they can consume.

Finally a poster campaign has been initiated to caution all military personnel that wasting food unnecessarily is helping our enemies.

It is agreed by the Mess Officers in the 4th Battalion, First Student Training Regiment, that if all the aforementioned precautions are taken to eliminate wastage, thousands of dollars worth of foodstuffs will be saved from the "garbage can," and someone else, somewhere will benefit from efficient mess management and use of food.

TIS Cast Completes Movie On 'Lieut. Smith' Here

William Terry Stars In Film 'On Officer's Life

After more than a month of intensive work, final scenes were completed yesterday on "Lieutenant Smith," new Army short subject filmed by Pathe starring William Terry with the entire supporting cast made up of personnel from The Infantry School at Fort Benning.

The film will be a sequel to "Private Smith, U. S. A." filmed last year by Pathe to show induction and training of a typical private. It will show the democratic process by which a private can win promotion and qualify as a commissioned officer in the U. S. Army including many spectacular combat training scenes photographed on the terrain at Fort Benning.

Slavko Vorkapich, veteran motion picture man and a native of Jugoslavia directed the short. Pathe hopes it will win many honors for faithful attention to authentic detail. Former World Champ Fights on Doughboy Ring Card Tomorrow

Pace Meets Dynamite Daniels In Windup Bout of All-Colored Match

Twenty-eight rounds of fancy leather slinging, featuring one former world champ and several other outstanding pros, are slated for tomorrow night at 8:30 p. m., when the outdoor ring season opens in Doughboy Stadium with a stellar card of seven colored championship bouts.

Georgia Pace, the Cleveland puncher who held the world's bantamweight crown just a couple of years ago, will appear in the classy wind-up feature against colorful Dynamite Daniels, 1941 National Golden Gloves Champion from Newark, N. J. The final bout will be a six-rounder.

The all-colored outdoor card is being sponsored by the Fort Benning Athletic Association in an effort to uncover individual champs in the several different weight classes. Tomorrow's winners will be awarded handsome billfolds.

OVERFLOW CROWD

An overflow crowd is expected to witness the first of a series of for the spring and summer months by the F. B. A. A. for the portable ring which has been set up just in front of the south stand of the stadium. There will be plenty of close-up seats both in the grandstand and around the ringside.

Another national headliner, who will appear in the semi-windup bout is Eddie Jackson, 202-pounder from Los Angeles, who was formerly a sparring partner with Abe Simon and Tony Galento. Jackson won 36 of 37 pro fights in his own right before entering the service and scored 22 knockouts.

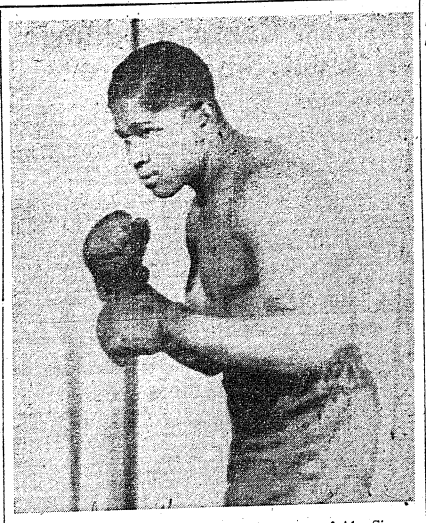
CHALLENGES JACKSON

For some time, now, Jackson's reign as king of the colored heavies at the post has been undisputed but finally some first rate competition has appeared in the person of Jo Harrison, a 205-pound intercollegiate champ from Florida A. and M. who has racked up 27 K. O.'s in winning 50 fights since his college days. Jackson and Harrison will battle in a four-rounder.

Other found round bouts carded for tomorrow night will bring together Orie Smith (163 pounds) of St. Louis and Tommy Stewart (165 pounds) of New York City; Bryant Bass (147 pounds), and Atlanta Golden Glove champ, and Terry Livingston (144 pounds), 1941 Golden Glove champ; and Danny Harris (175 pounds) of New York against Jimmie Mitchell (173 pounds) of Los Angeles.

TWO THREE-ROUNDERS

The opening two bouts of the evening's fast card will be three rounders bringing together Joe Carbin (147 pounds) of Philadelphia and Leo Young (147 pounds) of Houston in one and Joe Noble (127 pounds) of New Orleans against Leroy Hunter (128 pounds) of Baltimore in the other.



1st STR Unit Opens Spring Sports Slate

A powerful spring offensive has been inaugurated by the members of the Second Company, 1st Student Training regiment in the field of sports rather than the field of battle.

Realizing the need of keeping in shape during their training here, the class has been quick to jump at the opportunity suggested by its company commander, Colonel Raymond C. Barlow. When Colonel Barlow asked for those who would be interested in joining in the Sports Carnival, the response was ready and strong.

The golf tournament contains many star performers who are battling violently for the Championship of the Class. A tennis tournament has been organized which is keeping many of its participants working out to improve their wind and their pet strokes.

Just like Topsy, a number of baseball teams have "growed" whose organizers have been lost in the general burst of enthusiasm which greeted their organization. Each floor of the company buildings has it own team, supported and backed by its members most of whom are ex-baseball players and are forming quite a competitive league. They are taking on all comers and a short call to Captain Graham Espey will probably develop a game almost any night.

EDDIE JACKSON, former sparring mate of Abe Simon and Tony Galento, will appear in the semi-windup bout of tomorrow night's all-colored card in the stadium. The heavyweight ace will meet Leo Harrison of the Reception Center.

176th Spirits Make Debut In TIS Loop Friday Night; Academic Profs Gain Lead

New Team Clashes With 124th Nine In First Tilt

BY SGT. MILTON LUBAN

The 176th Infantry team makes its first Infantry School league appearance tomorrow night, clashing with the 124th Infantry at Gowdy Field. The game will start at 7 o'clock.

In another game, at Harmony Church, the Student Training Brigade meets the Benning Rifles with this contest slated for 6:30.

The contest between the 176th Spirits and the 124th Gators holds particular interest for TIS fans as the Spirits, while rumored to have a powerful nine, are still unknown quality.

176TH TOUGH

From watching the team in practice and from the pasting they handed the Columbus Foxes, the 176th is a mighty tough club and will be vying with the Brigade and the revitalized 300th for the privilege of knocking the Academic Regiment Profs out of the first place spot they've been holding for the past several seasons

Other league games on this week's schedule features Sunday's doubleheader at Harmony Church which matches the 124th against the 244th F. A. and the 300th against the 764th Tanks. The first game starts at 1:30.

On Monday the Profs take on the 71st Engineers at Gowdy Field while the Benning Rifles clash with the 176th Spirits at Harmony Church. Next Wednesday pits the Brigadiers against the Spirits at Gowdy Field and the Profs vs. the Tanks at Harmony Church.

PROFS MEET RUCKER

This Saturday night will see the Profs meeting the strong Camp Rucker team at 8 o'clock at Gowdy Field. Lee Grissom, former Cincinnati hurling star, will probably pitch for the visitors.

Highlight of last week's league activities was the brilliant no-hit, no-run game hurled by George Cave of the 300th against the 124th Gators. Cave struck out 18 men, allowed only two Gators to get as far as second and none as far as third, while his team forged to a 4 to 0 victory.

FRANCIS DEBUTS

The 300th, making its first appearance under the leadership of "Lefty" Francis, former pride of the Profs, looked like a new ballclub. The fielders went tearing after everything in sight, played almost flawless ball and looked like sure trouble for all opposition in the future.

Other highlights were the undefeated Profs taking over undisputed possession of first place as the Brigadiers and the 244th went down to their initial defeats.

BRIGADE BOWS

The Profs took personal care of the Brigade, winning 5 to 4 after a tense 11-inning struggle. Dickinson and DeVolder both pitched good ball, the former giving up only 10 hits while the Brigade hurler allowed 12. However, the Profs lost the services of hard-hitting Bill Cox who will be out for several weeks as the result of a torn muscle suffered while rounding third. Cox has been playing good ball and the Profs will miss his heavy bat.

The 244th F. A. lost a 3-2 heartbreaker to the 764th Tank Tteam. Menendez pitched brilliant ball in defeat, giving up only three hits and fanning 10, but a third inning double by Dib Williams did the damage. Whitfield also put on a sterling pitching exhibition, allowing only five scattered hits and holding the 244th practically helpless after the first two scoring innings.

Tiger Division Tennis Tourney Gets Under Way

20 Netmen Start Eliminations For Singles Crown

With 20 netmen now battling it out for places in the finals, the 10th Armored Division singles tourney is off to a good start, and indications are that plenty of talent will be uncovered by the time the division champion is named on May 26.

The 20 candidates for the crown were seeded by a drawing in the special service office. First and second rounds were all scheduled to be played off before Monday, May 17. The quarter-finals will be held before Saturday, May 22, and the semi-finals on Sunday, May 23.

TENNIS FAMILIES

Among the entries were two men who come from tennis families, Pfc. Richard Harris and Pvt. Harold D. Dean, both of Maintenance Battalion. Pfc. Harris is a brother of Charlie Harris of West Palm Beach, Fla., one-time eighth-ranking player in the country.

Pvt. Dean is a cousin of Miss Eunice Dean of Dallas, Tex., one of the country's leading women players. Both men are expected to give good accounts of themselves in the division tourney.

The tourney, according to Cpl. Frank Voight, director of the tennis program for the division, is only a starter as far as tennis is concerned. Other tournaments are scheduled to be held throughout the summer.

1st Regiment Red Sox Gain Trio Of Wins

The First Student Training Regiment's Service Battalion's clicky club of ball players continued with unabated ginger their victorious campaign of exhibition games by taking the Reception Center twirlers 9 to 1, recently. The game was third in a series of wins.

First victim was the 2nd Student Training Regiment which tumbled to the outstanding work of Eugene "Lefty" Randolph and Richard "Pee Wee" Haynsworth "Lefty" kept the Second Regimenteers baffled with his curve, while "Pee Wee" did some brilliant ball-snatching holding down 2nd bag. "Lefty" furthered the final outcome by slugging the sphere for a home run with a runner on each base.

In the second game played against 3rd Student Training Regiment, Robert "Lefty" Romby and Richard "Pee Wee" Haynesworth starred. Following in the footsteps of his colleague, Lefty Romby duplicated the performances of Randolph, for he too came through with a home run. His "screw ball", which very few pitchers possess, kept his opponents "bat shy". Again "Pee Wee" Haynesworth excelled at field and at bat, making brilliant saves and collecting 3 runs.

The "Red Sox" club, managed by Captain Joseph R. O'Connor, has shown remarkable talent in these three exhibitions. They are looking forward to a victorious season and hope to play many games with nearby colleges.

53rd Hospital Nine Holds Top In Post League

Medicos Meet Fliers On Sunday Twin Bill As Chute Nines Vie

The scrappy 53rd General Hospital nine still holds the leadership in the Fort Benning league and will go after its fourth straight, Sunday, in the first game of a twin bill at Gowdy Field when Lawson Field will furnish the opposition.

The Medicos have been inactive for the past ten days and are rarin' to go once more with both Lefty Byszesby and George Seward, their star pitchers, well rested. Either is likely to hurl against Lawson with Nelligan or Ritter getting the call for the Fliers.

Sunday's second game will pit the 513th Parachutes against the Parachute School in a return match. The schoolmen won the first tilt of the skytrooper rivalry last week, but the Thirteeners are improving rapidly and hope to even the score Sunday.

In the only game played during the past week in the loop, the 24th Hospital racked up its first win with an 8-7 triumph over Lawson Field. A tilt scheduled for Tuesday night between the 513th and the Fliers was postponed after heavy rains flooded the diamond.

TWO OTHER TILTS

Two other games besides the Sunday twin bill are slated for this week. Tonight at 7 o'clock, the 24th Hospital will oppose the Parachute School tossers while next Tuesday at the same time, the 53rd takes on the 513th.

Although the 53rd has yet to drop a game, a Lawson win Sunday plus a Parachute School victory in the second game could drop the leaders into a deadlock with TPS which has won its last two starts.

Standings:

	W	L	Pct.
53rd Gen. Hosp.	3	0	1.000
Parachute School	2	1	.666
513th Parachutes	1	2	.333
24th Gen. Hosp.	1	2	.333

Rifles Lose To Pair Of Rivals Over Week-End

Student Trainers Are Defeated by 244th And Columbus Foe

Revenge eluded the Fort Benning Rifles baseball team in both trys over the weekend as it fell to the 244th Field Artillery, 6 to 3, under the Gowdy Field lights Friday night and lost to the Columbus Foxes Sunday afternoon by a score of 5 to 3.

The Rifles previously had bowed to both teams but what particularly hurt was the fact that Friday night's defeat will be marked up against them in the standings of the Infantry School league.

In each encounter, the Rifles got off to an early lead but failed to use that edge to advantage once their opponents got started. The "fatal fifth" spelled disaster for the Rifles Friday night and in Sunday's game the Foxes methodically added runs while the Rifles neglected to capitalize on several promising situations.

The Rifles entered the fifth inning of their game with the artillerymen with a 2-1 lead but in that stanza the 244th pummeled Lieut. William Bessinger, Rifles hurler, for five hits, one a circuit clout by Schulde, which yielded four runs. Each team collected another run before the game ended. Lieut. Bessinger and "Red" Evans, the 244th's moundsman, each gave up 10 hits.

It at first appeared there would be no stopping the Rifles when they bounded into Columbus' Golden pary Sunday. Sgt. Domenic Moro, first man up, drew a base on balls, advanced when Corp. Elmer Glick got to base on a fielder's choice and Pfc. John Strukel collected a hit and then romped home on Corp. Paul Sorrels' infield scratch. Strukel and Sorrels scored a few minutes later, the former on a passed ball and the latter on a wild pitch.

That, however, was the extent of the Rifles' offensive power for the duration of the game. In several innings the Rifles had men well advanced on the bases but lacked the punch to bring them all the way home.

Meanwhile the Foxes pounded Lieut. John Berry, Rifles' starting hurler, for nine hits and four runs until he was relieved in the sixth inning by Lieut. Jack Weston. They got two hits and another run off Lieutenant Weston in the eighth inning.

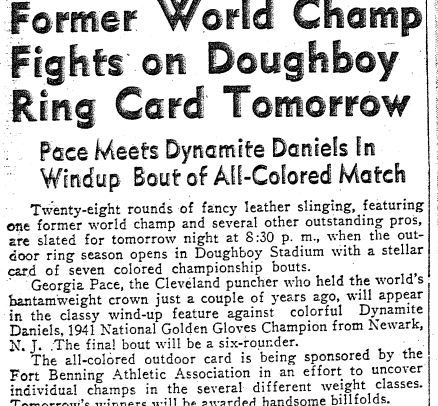
Lacrosse Star At O. C. School

Named to 1942 All-South Team

To Maryland lacrosse fans the name of Milton Vandenberg will conjure some nostalgic thoughts of a swift Mount Washington player who starred for that club six years ago, but in the 15th Company of the Third Student Training regiment, Vandenberg is becoming proficient in a different type of game—one that is played with steel, not sticks.

The officer candidate is married to the former Katherine Hartzell, who is prominent in the women's golfing world. He recently entered The Infantry School by way of the University of Maryland and, upon successful completion of the course, will be commissioned at the end of this month.



BALTIMORE STAR

Baltimore born and bred, Vandenberg attended the City College there, starring in football and lacrosse. He played with the Mount Washington club in the period between leaving high school and entering college.

Later, while attending the University of Maryland, he led the Terps to the brink of the national intercollegiate championship and sports fans named him to two mythical All-Maryland teams and, in 1942, to All-Southern.

Fliers Oppose Gators As Softball Campaign Gets Auspicious Start

Ceremonies Planned for Tonight's Tilt at Lawson Field Under Lights

Appropriate ceremonies will mark the opening of Fort Benning's first major softball league tonight at Lawson Field when the crack Flier ten opposes the 124th Infantry Gators in a night tilt scheduled for 8:30 under the brand new lighting system at the air base.

Lt. Col. John E. Albert, commanding officer of Lawson Field, is expected to toss out the first ball. Other high-ranking officers expected to be on hand for the softball opener are Col. John D. Hill, 124th commanding officer, and Lt. Col. Charles E. Finnegan, post athletic officer and head of the Fort Benning Athletic Association, which is sponsoring the league.

OTHERS PLAY TUESDAY

Although tonight's game marks the official opener, the remaining teams will not open play until next Tuesday. Starting then, the teams will play every Tuesday and Thursday on a home-and-home basis with all games being played in the different areas of the post.

Other teams entered in the league are the Academic Regiment, Student Training Brigade, Station Hospital, 2nd Student Training and 176th Infantry.

SPLENDID FIELD

The opening game will be played in one of the best softball set-ups in the south. Lawson Field has gone all-out for softball and not only boasts a crackerjack team, but also a trim playing field, where all home games will be played at night.

The Fliers boast one of the only flying softball tens in the nation, and hope to travel to other air bases for games outside the Fort Benning league.

GORMAN COACHES

The Lawson team is led by Maj. George W. Gorman, playing coach who is a well-known athletic figure at the post. Last year Gorman tutored the post baseball nine for the last half of the campaign. He is a former star player in Birmingham, where he played for the Barons and later as a member of a national championship softball nine.

Gorman holds down first base for the Lawson ten, which will be one of the title favorites in the new league. Two Lawson Field basketball stars, Bill Metcalfe and Bill Horn, are also members of the softball team. The former holds down the left field slot, while Horn is a swift-moving shortstop.

Little is known of the strength of the Gators, but the team has been drawn from the cream of the crop in the regiment's expansive intra-mural program and should be a worthy contender for title laurels.

Victors Tally 45 Points in Easy Win

Copping top honors in nearly half the program's events, the 3rd Armored Regiment early emerged the victor in the 10th Armored Division track and field meet held Saturday afternoon at Sand Hill.

Major General Paul W. Newgarden, division commander, presented a trophy to the winning team. Sgt. Walter H. Roetiger, member of the winning 440-yard relay team, accepted the trophy and turned it over immediately to Col. Thomas M. Brinkley, commanding officer of the 3rd Armored Regiment.

WON FIVE EVENTS

By garnering five firsts, five seconds and three thirds during the afternoon's activities, the 3rd Armored amassed a total of 45 points, more than twice as many as the runner-up 11th Armored Regiment team, which collected 22. Other team scores were: 423rd Armored F. A. Battalion, 20; 55th Armd. Engr. Bn., 5; 764th Tk. Bn., 3; 54th A. I. R., 3; 420th Armored F. A. Bn., 1, and 419th Armd. F. A. Bn. and 80th Armd. Med. Bn., no score.

Representatives of the winning team took first places in the 440-yard dash, high jump and 880-yard run, while the Tankers' 440-yard and mile relay teams were winners. The victors' well-trained and well-balanced combine had no individual star of note, but its strength all down the line told in the final reckoning.

MILES WINS TWO

Miles of the 423rd Armd. F. A. Bn. was the only double winner of the day, breaking the tape in both the 100 and 220-yard dashes.

Sgt. Vincent J. McGinley of Co. B, 55th Armd. Eng. Bn., a last-minute entry, put the 16-pound shot 37 feet, 5 inches, to cop an upset in in that event. McGinley placed fifth in the 12-pound shot event in the national high school tourney at Madison Square Garden in 1941.

RELAY TEAM STARS

Best time of the afternoon was turned in by the 3rd Armd. Regt.'s mile relay team, the Green and White's speedy quartet setting a mark of 3 minutes and 54 seconds under fer from perfect conditions.

The winning team was captained by Sgt. Joseph Crossin and coached by Lt. Virgil Disharoon.

10th AD Mothers Are Honor Guests At Big Luncheon

Tenth Armored mothers for the Mother's Day program last weekend were special luncheon guests at Service Club No. 2 in the 10th Armored area last Saturday. The luncheon was arranged by Mrs. Winifred Baker, hostess of the club.

The honor guests were introduced by Major General Paul W. Newgarden, division commanding general. Mrs. Newgarden was also present.

General Newgarden introduced Mrs. Baker and Miss Juanita Wilkinson and tendered them his personal thanks for their work in planning the feature of the Mother's Day program.

The Third Armored Regiment band furnished the music and as a special tribute to the mothers Pvt. Lubosky of the 11th Armored Regiment dedicated his songs to the mothers from that regiment. The 92nd Reconnaissance Battalion formed a color guard in honor of their mothers.

The Officers R. & R. Club on Cussets Road is by far the most popular place in Columbus for commissioned officers and their guests. Ask anyone on the reservation who has been there.

Leading Nines Win Again In Tiger Leagues

Only One Club Slips In Week Of Busy Action

Leaders in the Sand Hill and Cusseta Leagues of the 10th Armored Division rolled right along last week with only one of the eight leaders in the two leagues faring badly, the 423rd Field Artillery dropping two games to slip to a three-way tie for fourth in the Sand Hill circuit.

The Sand Hill title is at stake this week, when the defending division champs, the 3rd Armored Regiment, meet the 420th Field Artillery, whose 4-1 record is the only one approaching the 3rd's six straight wins.

The 420th, boasting the best pitching staff in the division, notched a 10-0 win over the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, Wednesday as Paul White whiffed 22 opponents. Lt. Ray Hebert followed this fine pitching Sunday with a one-hit, 6-1 victory over the 3rd Battalion, 54th Infantry. These stellar mound performances followed Beechko's 11-inning, 1-0 whitewash of the tough 11th Armored Regiment two weeks ago.

There is little chance of settling the Cusseta race until the last week in May, when the unbeaten 774th Tank Destroyers, 455th Coast Artillery, and Maintenance Battalion play each other. The 455th posted a 7-3 exhibition victory over the 3rd Armored Regiment at Gowdy Field last week to establish itself as the team to beat.

Navy Swimming Star In Army

O. C. Ward Chamberlain of the 18th Company in the Second Student Training Regiment is a man who literally swam his way to the Harmony Church area. This son of Neptune was all-Navy star in 1930, excelling in the 220 and 440 distances. He participated on the water polo team of the Olympic Club in San Francisco.

In addition, he bears the somewhat unique distinction of having fallen off the Golden Gate Bridge, San Francisco, during its construction.

Before joining the Army, Chamberlain worked for more than 14 months on Midway Island and in Honolulu supervising the construction of air bases there. His return to the United States preceded the attack on Pearl Harbor by less than a week.

Rules on Uniform Wear Published

Upon honorable discharge from the Army, wearing of the regulation uniform is permissible under two circumstances only, as outlined by law, according to information reaching headquarters from the War Department.

It is permissible that the soldier wear the uniform in traveling from his point of discharge to his home, providing this occurs within three months after leaving service. Also upon occasions of ceremony, men who have served during war may wear the uniform of the highest grade which they held during that period.

Other use of the uniform is forbidden as outlined in the National Defense Act, which carries a penalty of six months imprisonment, or $300 fine, or both, for its violation. These penalties do not apply to wearing of the uniform by retired officers or enlisted men of the regular army.

These men may wear the uniform after discharge, but are obligated to behave so as not to bring discredit upon the service.

Medical Satire Staged At Post

Production Written By Soldier Group

On Monday night, May 10, the patients and medical personnel of Hospital No. 2 in the Harmony Church Area were the first public audience to witness an army medical operation. The operation was pantomined in shadows behind a lighted screen in the auditorium of the Red Cross Recreation Building. While the operation was in progress a Narrator described the surgical instruments used and the procedure of the operation.

The demonstration was frequently interrupted by members of the cast planted in the audience. Much to the disgust of the Narrator and to the delight of the audience, such incidents occurred as a paratrooper descending into the operating room and amazing both audience and surgeon with the question, "Aint this Lawson Field?" The whole show was a take-off on "Hellzapoppin" and was a satire on the technique of Army medical doctors.

T-5 Murphy Hdq. Co. 3d Bn. 305 Prcht.; Cand. Lowell 12th Co. 3d STR; Cand. Venturini 30th Co. 3d STR; Cpl. Wengar 508th P. T. R.; Pvt. DiPietra 501st P. T. R.; Pvt. Massey Bty B. 420th F. A.; Cpl. Halloran Co. A Acd Reg.; Pvt. Kirkey 501st P. T. R.; Pvt. Boling Med. 'Dtch. Stat. Hosp.; T-5 Rose 1st Armd. Div.; Cand. Phelan 10th Co. 3d STR.

The skit was also presented in the auditorium of the Red Cross Building at Hospital No. 1 on Tuesday night, May 11 and was well received by a capacity audience.

A FEW POUNDS of dehydrated foods, properly prepared with water, equals many times its weight in ordinary food on the table, as is graphically illustrated by the three pictures here. All were taken as special classes were being staged at the Bakers nad Cooks School, Fort Benning, in dehydrated foods. Master Sergeant H. B. Whitehorn points out to WAAC officers and dieticians how 4 pounds of dehydrated potatoes equals a 50 pound sack of the regular products—both providing servings for 100 men. Left to right the students are Second Lieutenants Jeanne H. Hexamer, Williamsport, Ind., and Helen Mumford, Atlanta, both dieticians; Second Lieutenant Mary M. Kirby, WAAC, native of Whiteman, Mass.; First Lieutenant Jeanne Warner, WAAC, Fowler, Col.; First Lieut. Betty C. Jokl, WAAC, Buffalo, N. Y., and Second Lieutenants Ruth E. Pontius, St. Augustine, Fla., and Alta B. Johnson, Atlanta, both dieticians.

Personnel Urged To Consult Phone Directory First

Rationing boards and hospital admission wards do not normally get in the way of one another, but they seem to at Benning.

Sergeant Louis Lipp, secretary and chief clerk of the local board, reports that an average of 75 calls a day intended for the hospital office come over the already overburdened ration board phone. For the sake of better service to all, Sergeant Lipp urges that persons be careful in dialing his number, 3113, and please not to call the hospital admission ward, 3124, from memory.

Yank Dehydrated Foods Surpass Nazi Products

Captured Foodstuffs Are Too Moist, Lack Color, Flavor, Texture

Knowing that tests have proved it a mistaken idea that a man will eat anything if he is hungry enough, Army chefs who have attended the dehydrated food courses at the Bakers and Cooks School at Fort Benning, Ga., will serve delectable meals, complete from soup and fruit juice cocktails to desserts for American soldiers here and overseas, making their meals from ingredients composed of little shreds or powder-like substances.

Whether the unit happens to be a WAAC outfit, a group of hospital dieticians, or straight G. I.'s on the battle line, it will have experts who can take four pounds of dehydrated potatoes and prepare servings for 100 persons in the style they prefer, whether mashed, au gratin, Lyonnaised, scalloped or American fried.

Fort Benning dehydrated cooking instructors train their students to take a few nuggets of dehydrated apples and whip them up into a luscious pie, or a few ounces of beef and eggs and do them up like a chef in a fine hotel would prepare the food in its natural state. Taste, color, flavor and aroma of the foods are retained, for the most part, as in the original article.

These cooks need only water and a little heat to mix with the odd-looking contents of their packages and cans to prepare their meals. They take a five-gallon can of tomato flakes, for example, mix it with a certain ratio of water, stir it up thoroughly, and soon have a quarter of a ton of rehydrated tomatoes on their hands for use as tomato juice cocktails, catsup or escalloped tomatoes.

These students learn that the substances they cook with originally were fresh foods from which a large percentage of water and inedible portions like peels, bones and seeds have been removed, and that such foods are harvested at the peak of their maturity, are carefully selected varieties, and are thoroughly cleaned and dried by scientifically controlled processes. They retain most of their original food value and vitamin content.

WATER AND HEAT

The cooks-to-be are told that while Egyptians centuries ago used similar methods of preserving figs and dates in a dried state, the art of using dehydrated food on a large scale is virtually an innovation. They find that labor, time, shipping space, weight and precious metals are saved as a result of this new wrinkle in the realm of food. For example, these cooks know that three ships of dehydrated food equal eight ships of raw food or 10 ships of canned and packed food.

Using by far the best dehydrated food in the world, these students are aware that dehydrated food used by the Germans in the North African campaign has been captured by our troops and is markedly inferior to American products because it contains a higher percentage of moisture and is off in color, flavor and natural texture.

Packed in moisture-vapor proof packages or hermetically sealed cans, their food, the students learn, can be preserved under extreme climatic conditions due to the low moisture content which prevents freezing in the frigid zones or molding in the torrid zones. No storage other than a cool dry place is necessary.

The vegetables most commonly used by the Army in a dehydrated state are sweet and Irish potatoes, cabbage, beets, carrots, turnips and onions. Most of them are prepared in several forms for varied uses, and are adaptable to all methods of cooking. Eggs, several varieties of soups, cheese, spreads of apple and apricots, baked beans, butter, cranberries, beverages like milk, lemon, orange and grape juices and soluble coffee, and meats including precooked beef and pork, and ham and sausage, are among the other items prepared on a large scale for Army use.

All the intracacies of preparing the food in the most palatable form possible are taught the students at the Fort Benning school. Each student develops the knack of bringing the dehydrated food, mixed properly with water, to a slow boil, so that it is cooked until it is tender and soft and loses the firm and rubbery feeling characteristic of most fouds in a dehydrated form.

The Bakers and Cooks School at Fort Benning gives two courses in the preparation of dehydrated food. One, of one-week duration, is for those who will act as dehydrated food cooks in their various units. A two-week course makes finished instructors who can, in their turn, teach others the art of cooking the miracle food.

Not only are courses in dehydrated food taught at the main Bakers and Cooks School here, but they are also given at Bakers and Cooks School No. 2, also on the Main Post. Operated under the general direction of Colonel John M. Rooks, commandant of all Bakers and Cooks School in the Fourth Service Command, the colored school, probably the only one for Negro troops in the United States—is under the immediate direction of Captain Abraham Pfefer, assistant commandant of the school. Organized two years ago last March, approximately 500 Negro soldiers are attending the school from the Fourth Service Command at the present time. About 65 of them are taking the courses in preparation of dehydrated food.

With the exception of Master Sergeant Jesse Stringham, senior instructor, all of the enlisted men on the instruction staff are Negroes. Tech. Sgt. Dennis Newsom of Hardeeville, S. C., is chief instructor, and shows the soldiers all the tricks of the trade he has learned as a cook for 24 years in the Army. Classroom instructors in the school include Staff Sgts. Henry L. Johnson of Atlanta, Ga., and Wilburn King of Cusseta, Ga. Willis Teele of Goldsboro, N. C., is first sergeant, and Technician Fourth Grade Arthur Maddox of Hallandale, Fla., is head instructor in the dehydrated food courses.

Thrift Shop Occupies New Stadium Spot

Rummage Sale For Bargan Hunters Scheduled Thursday

The Thrift Shop Department of "The Bayonet" (there's a guy on the staff who's queer about Thrift Shops, you know) announces the removal of our local Bon Marche from its present situation on Wold Avenue on the right flank of Dispensary "A" to new quarters under Doughboy Stadium in premises formerly occupied by the Post Exchange Military Supply Shop.

In its rather mystifying announcement of this removal posted in the Daily Bulletin the Shop hints of a feat which should qualify it for listing in "The New Yorker" as the neatest trick of the week sig: "——They will be open for business (on the new site) on May 13. The Thrift Shop will hold a rummage sale at their present location on Wold Avenue next to dispensary 'A' on Thursday May 13."

This reminds one of the feat of that 18th century mountebank, Gagliostro who, when ordered by Frederick The Great to leave Berlin, departed simultaneously from all seven gates of the Prussian capital.

In any case the rummage sale ought to be a giddy event and profitable to attend. Our spies report that in a welter of lares et penates (oh well call it household equipment, if you must be so darned un-metaphorical) there is a nifty four panel Coromandel screen and various other oddments of furniture, rugs, etc.

Those virile souls who like to mess about in the great outdoors will find tennis rackets, polo equipment and other impedimenta of mysterious exercises whose nature is beyond the ability of this writer to discover.

The clothing section contains an assortment of all conceivable articles of military wearing apparel some of which could be worn on formation while other items would require the excuse of a fancy dress ball since, to the rookie eye they appear to date back to about the epoch of the battle of San Juan Hill.

If this were to go on any further it would take on the flavor of a Sears-Roebuck catalogue so it had better end right here with the admonition that whatever you may want you're likely to find it in better or worse shape at the Post Thrift Shop.

That Extra Something!
...You can spot it every time

Did you know that Coke sails on the ships of our battle fleet? Sailors, spending their lives on the water, like a beverage that is all the difference between something refreshing and just something to drink.

AT widely scattered Naval bases, they'll tell you at Ship's Service Departments how much ice-cold Coca-Cola means to the men in refreshment, in enjoyment and in morale. You read and hear similar things every day . . . from places all over the globe.

When people feel about a soft drink that way it's got something special. Coca-Cola has. A taste all its own. A finished art in its making gives it goodness that sets it apart. A drink that adds refreshment to thirst-quenching.

Truly, the only thing like Coca-Cola is Coca-Cola, itself . . . the trade-marked product of The Coca-Cola Company.

A Coke and a hot dog! Everywhere you see that combination, you see something that is America in foreign lands.

Although war has changed and disrupted so many things in their lives, our fighting forces overseas are so often delighted to find in far-off places an old familiar friend . . . Coca-Cola . . . being bottled in Allied Nations all over the globe, just as it is at home.

Centralized Government Will Make China Great

New Roads To Give Her Great Mining Future

By PVT. HERBERT RICHHEIMER
Company A—Barrack No. 1
53rd General Hospital

It is our plight as Americans, in this fight for the freedom of the world to know more than we did before about our allied nations. It is my goal in this article to describe China to you. China, which has been weakened due to internal dissension, only recently granted themselves the privilege of a central government. This will be realized great importance in making China a mighty nation.

China is divided into 25 provinces and several states. The country shows differences in languages and is diverse in countrysides. This is not surprising for the large size of China. China stretches from North Siberia to the Himalayas and from the West Turkestan to the Yellow and East Chinese Sea. This part of the country is occupied by more than 400 million people.

The biggest difference can be seen between north and south. In the north, people eat beans and corn while in the south, they eat fish and rice. Fishing is of most importance especially in the south where they do most of it on the Yangtze river. Most of the Chinese are vegetarians but not because of religious purposes. The national drink is tea because drinking water is not available and for that reason water must be sterilized by boiling. The addition of the tea leaf makes the water palatable. For cooking purposes, the Chinese use olive oil. They are unfamiliar with butter, milk and cheese.

CANAL ORRIGATION

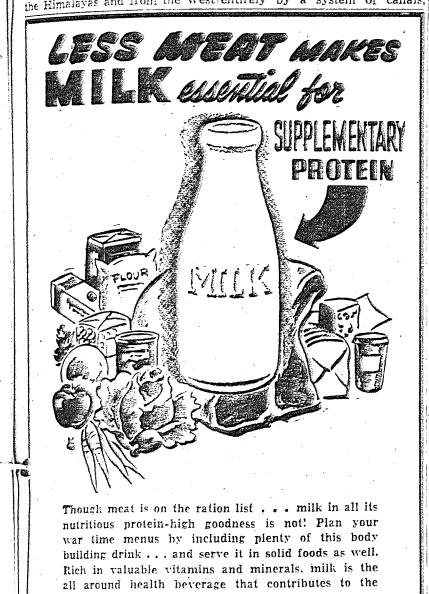
In the north, where the irrigation of the land is brought about entirely by a system of canals, mostly corn, wheat and oats are grown. But in the highland of the south where they construct water canals of bamboo, they cultivate sugar, rice, wool and tea. In most sections of the country, they have no domestic animals. Because of differences in cultivation in both parts, we can come to this logical conclusion that they are few and far between.

China will have a great future in mining after the roads on mountain sides are properly constructed and usable for traffic. In the north, there are large deposits of coal and iron. Coal has been used in China for thousands of years. In the south, we find 60 per cent of the world's production of Antimony. Other important minerals are zinc, mercury, copper, silver and tungsten. The ancient, narrow streets are inaccessible to modern transportation. Most of China's highways are natural. In the north, they use the streets for horses, camels, and two wheeled vehicles. In the south, the travel by street is not important, as most of the traveling is done by sea. But looking around on the streets of the south we will find two wheeled vehicles which are drawn by coolies.

CHINESE RAILWAYS

China has a railroad system which covers approximately 15,000 miles in comparison to the United States, which is smaller and covers 400,000 miles. The traffic system in China is one of their hardest problems. A result of the bad traffic conditions was the building of a great mass of dialects, so that today many Chinese can not understand each other. About 2-3 of the nation speak Manderin dialect. Others speak the Ngu, Min and Yueh dialect as well as Tibetoon and Mongolian. Manderin is used for writing and consists of about 50,000 symbols, but if 3,000 or 4,000 symbols are learned, it is a task well accomplished.

This difficult of understanding is the result of lack of education. The reason for the lack of education being the ignorance of the Chinese people in over-looking the importance of education. From the statistics we can see that in many provinces only 2 per cent of the children went to school. The province of Shansi is the leader with 70 per cent of their children now studying. We find in China approximately 40 universities, 70 colleges, and public and high schools with about 13 million pupils. A few hundred thousand also go to missionary schools. The Chinese are otherwise a very intelligent race.



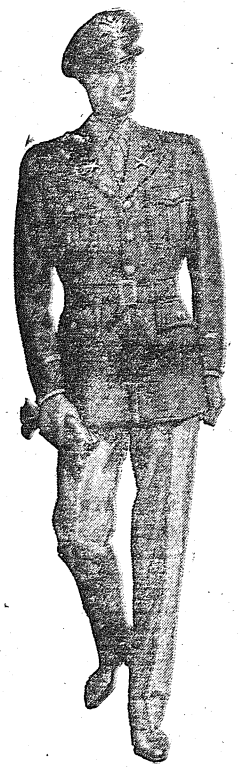
ENDLESS CULTURE

China has an endless history of culture and is responsible for such modern conveniences as the compass, gun powder, porcelain and paper, which were discovered when Europe itself was in a primitive state. The first attmept at compulsory education and primary use of European methods is due to the influence of the occidentalized minds of some of the more prominent Chinese who had adopted, in some way the European culture.

In the year 1912 was founded the first Chinese Republic with Dr. Sun Yat Sen as the president, but soon after, his place was taken by General Juan Shih Kai. In the same year, was founded the Kuohmintang (the people's party) under the leadership of Dr. Sun Yat Sen. The goal of this party was to end all foreign concessions, the uniting of China into a political democracy, the development of a school system and a betterment of social and agricultural conditions.

In the year 1913, after a short war with Juan Shih Kai, the Kuohmintang was dissolved. With the death of Juan Shih Kai, the people's party began once more only to grow tremendously until June 8th, 1928, after a successful battle in northern China, the army took over Peking, the seat of the reactionary government. The new government with General Tsiang Kai Shek as president, took over the 10th of October 1928. The Kuohmintang, working on its goal, demanded use of modern methods in agriculture, finance and also better traffic conditions. Other steps in the development of China were brought about by the development of school system and industries.

Before concluding, I would like to say that it is my belief that after this war, China will become a mighty nation with a good centralized government and that it will play a great part in reconstruction and rehabilitation of the world.



Though meat is on the ration list . . . milk in all its nutritious protein-high goodness is not! Plan your war time menus by including plenty of this body building drink . . . and serve it in solid foods as well. Rich in valuable vitamins and minerals, milk is the all around health beverage that contributes to the general well being of your family.

'Tis Not The Kind Of Job You Do But Just How Well You Do It

Someone Has To Stay Home To Teach Others How To Fight

By PFC. CHARLES W. VOORHISS
Company F, Academic Regiment

A friend of mine, a lieutenant in the Signal Corps, wrote the other day, "What in hell are you doing in an academic regiment—and what is it—an outfit where they teach you the three R's?"

It amused me at first. Then I patiently explained to him the functions of the regiment. But I can see him belaboring me with pity the next time we meet. He'll say "How many times were you wounded—in those classroom battles?"

But after the war is over, it isn't going to be very amusing for the men in this outfit to stack their accomplishments against those of the men who have been across. Demonstrations of a horizontal butt stroke to a group of O. C.'s isn't nearly as glamorous or dangerous as the deliverance of a similar stroke on the puss of a Jap or German.

You're apt to find yourself trying to find some possible danger which you faced in order to make your deeds measure up to those of the boys who saw battle. It's futile to try it. You'll be forced to draw upon your imagination and eventually make yourself look ridiculous.

How many of you remember the "Battles of the Aqueducts" of World War I?"

There were a lot of them in this country, fought by men too young or too old for combat duty. They were formed into Home Guards and assigned to protect aqueducts, power lines and public utilities in areas where sabotage was not only possible but probable.

CHIDED GUARDS

And when the veterans of '18 came back, they chided those aqueduct guards. "So you fought in the Battle of Aqueduct? Me, I was at Belleau Wood." It wasn't fair, of course. Those guards were doing their bit. They were safeguarding the home front. But there was no glory in it.

There's no glory, public glory, that is, in instructing others in the arts of war. But it's a job that has to be done.

The men you've taught or have helped to teach, will appreciate that. They know that most of you are fit for combat duty and would gladly go. They also appreciate your value here at home. But they'll be in the vast minority.

YOU'LL WEAR NO MEDALS

You'll wear no medals or wound stripes. You'll be one of the army of men who, the misinformed will believe, had a soft job during the war. You won't have the fat salaries of the civilians (Think of the taxes they're paying) and you'll have to go back to the old battle of getting a job and making a living.

But you yourself, your buddies, your officers, and the brass hats in Washington will know that the success of the war depended in a large measure on how well YOU did your job.

The reward you will get will come when you examine your conscience, take another good look at the freedom of your country, and ask yourself, "Did I do what I had to do to the best of my ability?"

If the answer is "yes," then no apology is necessary. A free nation is reward enough.

Good Manners More Important In Army Than In Civilian Life

The truth is that good manners are much more important in the army than they are in civilian life. They are not just an ornamental assortment of affectations but actually rules of conduct which help a lot of individuals of widely assorted natures to get along with one another.

In civilian life, if you dislike a man you can avoid him. In the army, no matter how much the habits of some people in your garrison may irritate you, it is impossible to escape their company. Many people place too high a value on what they call "frankness" and think it shows great honesty in their characters to tell others what they think of them (the thoughts usually being unpleasant). That's not honesty, it's just plain stupid loutishness. By the same token there is nothing hypocritical in being civil to a man you don't like or, if it is, then we need a bit more hypocrisy in this sad world.

BELT OF EGO

All of us have a thick defensive armor belt of ego or self love. That is: we think we're pretty good and, while we're very free in panning some of the habits and tricks of the other guy, it seldom occurs to us that some of our own characteristics may annoy people around us. Consequently you'll find that the lad who snatches at everything in the mess hall and makes a racket while others are asleep is the one who gets most indignant when other people pull the same stunts. The worst offenders will never take a call in good grace, admit their faults and try to correct them. Instead they bully and bluster and keep right on until finally a well placed poke in the eye convinces them.

Manners are one of the few things which distinguish men from the lower animals. While the army doesn't provide just the right silver for each course and batmen in mess jackets to serve us individually it tries to avoid in its mess halls a scene like feeding time at the zoo.

TIMES SQUARE

When a certain outfit, not too far from here, was first formed the mess hall, immediately the whistle blew, took on all appearances of the Times Square subway station during rush hours. By the time the end of the chow line got seated the tables looked as though a plague of locusts had swarmed over them.

The result was that, while there was nothing left for some, others had snatched and grabbed more than they could eat and threw half of it into the garbage pail. Presently the company commander put an end to this situation. He issued orders that everyone remain standing until a whistle blew. This signal was not given until the entire company was seated. A very short regime of this sort cured the "wolfing" and the order was rescinded.

DIAL TWISTERS

One type of blister which every outfit has is the lad who wanders into the day room, twirls the dial of the radio regardless of whether others may have been listening to the program which was playing when he entered. When he finds something dumb enough for his taste he turns the volume to a point where the noise shakes the rafters and then casually strolls out of the room.

Another variety of military public enemy are those members of the Club Latrine who, when lights go out in barracks, cluster around the wash bowls and loudly wag their tongues worse than any crowd of suburban women at a bridge table. They suffer from oral dysentery and will bellow until reveille unless stopped by violence.

A third boil on the neck of the body militaire is the prying Paul who is forever asking the most personal questions about you, your past, present and possessions. He seldom volunteers any information about himself but has no qualms about attempting to discover every thing possible about other people's social and financial status.

LOVE LIFE

Very close to top place comes the man who forces on everyone within hearing all the details of his love life. Such details are always extremely uninteresting and reveal only lack of originality and imagination on the part of the hero. No one wants to hear them anyhow but this type of loud speaker can't be turned off by the flick of a switch.

It takes more than a glance into a mirror to see yourself as others see you and it's just as well, otherwise suicide rates would take a sharp turn for the worse. After a man has been in the army for a few months he has the roughest edges worn off. It's too bad, however, so many have to learn the hard way.

However important good manners may be in making life smoother for us during our training at home they are a hundred times more so abroad and their importance increases in the ratio to the distance from our own country. So important are they, in fact, that the army issues handbooks to all men going overseas wherein is contained information about the customs and manners of the particular sector which is the soldiers' destination. The stupid and ignorant always think that whatever is foreign is necessarily ridiculous and this attitude has caused trouble all through history not only between individuals but among nations.

STREET CASANOVAS

Street corner Casanovas, for example, may be pretty hot when they whistle at the local belles on Broad Street or spout their gems of wit to the girl behind the counter at Woolworths. Let them try such tactics in Tunisia and they're likely as not to end up in a back alley with knives in their backs for all their toughness and wiseness.

One of the greatest weaknesses of the Germans has always been their bad manners. They have, indeed a perfect genius of setting other peoples backs up against them. While on the one hand they may make some effort to conciliate the people of a conquered country they always end up by being detested. The principal reason the ancient Romans were such successful empire builders was because after conquering a people they respected the nations' customs and manners and behaved with such tact that the conquored were very soon happy to enjoy the status of Roman citizens.

Mrs. Ethleen Thompson.

OLD-FASHIONED DIPLOMACY

It's the fashion nowadays to condemn the old fashioned diplomacy but the proof of the pudding is in the eating and the fact is that the old diplomats managed to avoid a general world war for about a century which is much more than their successors have accomplished and a major ingredient in the success of the older line diplomacy was good manners.

The conduct of American soldiers in foreign lands is an important deciding factor in this war. The better the behavior of every individual the less trouble will the army as a whole have and so much less discomfort and suffering will be the lot of each soldier. When we have won the struggle the impression we have left with foreign peoples will make our problems that much easier or more difficult in making and keeping the peace.

When all is said and done, it's just as easy to cultivate good manners as bad ones and the result is pleasanter for the individual man and the world at large.

MORE THAN 10,000 SOLDIERS of Fort Benning gathered in Doughboy Stadium last Sunday to pay homage to the hand that rocks the cradle. Col. Frank M. Thompson, chief of the chaplains' branch, is shown addressing the huge throng. Seated on the platform with him are the 21 mothers who were honor guests and the post's highest ranking officers. Captain Mitchell Appointed Major Promotion of Captain James A. Mitchell, commanding officer of the Post Detachment, Fourth Service Command, Unit 1447, to the rank of major, was announced recently at post headquarters, Fort Benning, Ga.

A native of Columbia, S. C., Major Mitchell was called to duty as a first lieutenant early in 1941. He has been in command of the Post Detachment since last August.

NOT MUCH ACTIVITY reported from the Pacific, except American occupation of another small group of islands.

But they are important for they guard the exposed flank of Guadalcanal. U. S. submarines sank two Jap destroyers and four other craft, damaged a transport bringing to a total of 222 the Japanese ships sunk or damaged by American subs.

In the North Pacific, however, a battle near the Russian islands of the Komandorskies, fought on March 26, has been announced. An outnumbered American task force turned back a Jap expedition there after hits on two heavy cruisers and a light cruiser, with only slight damages and casualties to the American force.

American troops now have put into operation a new air base on Amchitka Island, just 70 miles from Kiska, and our air power has staged several raids on the Japanese held Aleutian bases.

HERE AT HOME, the coal controversy, price control, tax measures continue to take up the news space. The Senate passed a bill that would make it a crime to instigate a strike in war plants or mines that have been taken over by the Government. The coal controversy still is being argued out. Doubtless there'll be an announcement soon on results. The senate now is considering the house-approved pay-as-you-go tax bill. Meat, coffee and butter prices were ordered reduced 10 per cent and grocers' profit margins on cabbage, onions, some poultry and salt codfish were reduced by the Office of Price Administration, which also fixed a top limit of 25 pounds of sugar per person for home canning.

Albert, commanding officer of Lawson Field, introduced those from the Air Force: Lt. Col. James Coutts, assistant commandant of the Parachute School, introduced the mothers and sons from that command. Gen. Fulton introduced those of the Fourth Service Command.

Chaplain Samson Shain opened the program with an invocation, after which the choir of the Post Chapel sang. A concert was presented by the 11th Armored Regiment band, Corp. Rawn Spearman, tenor from the Reception Center sang "Songs My Mother Taught Me."

TRIBUTE PAID

Tribute was paid to all mothers of all soldiers, as well as those present, by Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, post chaplain. Chaplain William Hunt closed the ceremony with a benediction.

Following the ceremonies, most of the mothers had dinner with their boys' outfits. Then they began the journey home, taking with them memories of a Mother's Day that none of them had ever expected.

Nursery School Sets Benefit Tea

A tea for the benefit of the Fort Benning nursery school will be given Saturday from 4 to 6 p. m. in the Polo Hunt club. The A. N. O. sorority, sponsors of the tea, issues a general invitation to the public to attend. Members of the sorority, made up of Army officers' daughters living on the post, have generously contributed their services as volunteer helpers at the nursery school.

The Reception Center chorus will sing during the tea.

Sgt. Smith Will Speak In Chapel To Paratroopers

Sergeant Patrick Smith, a member of the 196th Signal Photo Company and specialist on the Orient which he covered for 22 years, will be guest speaker at the Paratroop Chapel, Chapel No. 1, at 10:30 Sunday morning, Chaplain Frederick S. Zeller, chaplain of the Parachute School, announced today.

Smith, who holds the distinction of rising from private to lieutenant colonel in the British army in the last war, and back to buck private in the American army in this war, formerly was Far Eastern Editor for the New York Daily Mirror, and crossed the Pacific 34 times in the last 22 years to gather information on the Near and Far East.

The subject of Sergeant Smith's talk has not yet been announced.

kos and dress blues with white breast pieces—but today as so frequently during the history of the organization, the splendid dress uniform is laid aside as the group is in the service of its country. It saw heavy fighting in the War of 1812; the Mexican War; the War Between the States; the Spanish American War and the World War.

In the World War, the Blues, then grown to a Battalion were turned into a squadron of Cavalry for Mexican Border service, then served as an Ammunition Train with the 29th Division during the War.

The Blues were called out after John Brown's Raid on Harper's Ferry and were mustered into the Confederate service in 1861, serving in many engagements, notably the Seven Days Battle near Richmond; Halifax Junction and the Defense of Petersburg. It was nearly annihilated in the early fighting at Roanoke. It was with Lee at the Surrender at Appomotox—and there were just 16 enlisted men and not a single officer remaining.

The 176th Infantry, of which the Blues now is the First Battalion, was organized in 1632 and saw service in the French and Indian War when George Washington commanded it; The Revolution when Patrick Henry was one of its leaders; War of 1812 and the Civil War when it led the charge of Pickett's Division at Gettysburg, losing 80 per cent of its strength. At the time the Blues, however, were part of the Fourth Virginia. During the World War it served with the 29th Division.

We have solved certain problems in the past by a return to simple things. Back to nature. Back to the land. Today we may have to go still further back. Back of nature. Back of the land. Back to God.

Thru The Peepsight

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. O. J. REMINGTON

WITH THE FALL of Tunisia, Allies are stepping up bombings of European ports to a staggering degree. Nightly, tons of bombs are being rained on the Mediterranean islands, obviously to pave the way for an assault on them; and nightly, too, thousands of bombers rain death and destruction on ports in northern and western Europe, as well as on rail centers and arms plants and other military objectives.

The Italian government, suffering a very nice case of jitters, has warned the population against invasion; rumors are rife that King Victor Emmanuel has abdicated; Mussolini is said to be "purging" the Fascist party; other rumors are that the Germans are preparing to withdraw from Italy and concentrate on defending Europe proper against invasion.

A great many of those things may be wishful thinking—but don't be surprised if Hitler has written Italy off as not worth sacrificing his troops for and leaves his stooge ally to his own fate. And if that happens, don't be surprised to see Italian troops fighting on our side before this war is over. Mussolini has already warned Italy that the remnants of the Italian navy cannot hope to safeguard the country against invasion.

PREMIER CHURCHILL CAME to Washington to confer with President Roosevelt soon after Tunisia had completely fallen. News reports have it that they are planning grand strategy for the prosecution of the war. Indications are that this will include continued heavy blows, followed by ultimate invasion of Europe; plus continued heavy blows at Japan.

As a starter in that direction, American forces have begun an intense campaign in an attempt to wrest Attu, last island in the Aleutian chain, from the Japs. When this is done, it will give us bases within bomber range of northern Japanese islands. It also will protect Alaska against any threat of Japanese invasion. The Japs will battle to the end to hold Attu, since to lose it will be a grave tactical set back for them. Foggy weather has held up the operations against Attu and at this writing the outcome of the attack still is in doubt.

Japanese have stepped up bombing of Dutch New Guinea. Allied land troops are reported locked in battle with the Japanese only five miles below Salamaua, New Guinea, and the decision may go far toward deciding whether Japan can maintain its hold on the Huon gulf, an important strategical position. The Navy has announced that three Allied ships were sunk by Jap planes off Guadalcanal Island early in April. One was the American destroyer Aaron Ward.

ON THE EASTERN FRONT, Red army troops continue attacking near Novorossisk. More fighting also is reported in the Donets River valley basin. The Red Air Force has destroyed 1,300 German planes in two weeks, Moscow announces.

As the Reds continue pressing away at the Germans in the East, the Nazis have been forced to send more troops into Holland, where a reign of terror was started. Holland was reported on verge of open revolt at one time. In Berlin, rioting was reported as relatives of men in Africa stormed government agencies seeking news of their loved ones. And that's significant, too, because of the iron clamp that the German authorities have exerted over the civilian population. English bombers have managed to destroy dams, causing severe floods in the Review Marks WAAC's First Anniversary

2,000 ASF and RC Troops Stage Parade For Women Soldiers

Marking the first anniversary of the establishment of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, 2,000 troops of the Army Service Forces and Reception Center at Fort Benning Sunday paraded in review before the two companies of the WAACs stationed at the Army Post.

Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of the post, Captain Evelyn Rothrock, commanding officer of the 43rd Post Headquarters Company of the WAACs and Lieutenant Eleanor Wildes, commanding officer of the 84th Post Headquarters company of the WAACs, reviewed the soldiers as they passed in review.

Almost 800 members of the two companies of WAACs were drawn up behind the reviewing officers to receive the salute of the Service Command troops. Troops of the DEML unit, commanded by Captain Samuel Lowry, the Ordnance section, Signal Corps section, Quartermaster section and Engineers section of the Supply Division, and several companies of colored troops of the Reception Center paraded before the WAACs to herald the Corps on the occasion of its first anniversary.

NEW UNIFORMS

The WAACs, nattily clad in their sun tan uniforms, have been on duty at Fort Benning since March 5th when the 43rd Company reported for duty with Post Headquarters. The 84th Company arrived a few weeks ago and is stationed in the Harmony Church Area for duty with the Infantry School.

After the review on the parade ground at the Reception Center, the two companies of WAACs moved to Gordon Field behind the Main Theater for an inspection. There General Fulton and members of his staff marched down the rows of the auxiliaries for the formal inspection. With General Fulton inspecting the units were members of the Headquarters Staff including Colonel John P. Edgerly, executive officer, Lieut. Col. John D. Rosenberger, Jr., the post adjutant, Lieut. Col. Clarence A. Will, director of training, and Lieut. O. K. Marquardt, aide to General Fulton.

Bayonet Announces $2 Prize Winners In Weekly Contest

Winners for last week in the Bayonet's weekly contest are Cpl. H. B. Moon of the Visual Aids department of the Publications Section, TIS, for his cartoon "Patience, Mother . . . "; Cpl. James E. Andrews of the Reception Center Headquarters Company for his poem "Night Flight," and to Pvt. Charles W. Voorhiss of Company F, Academic Department, TIS, for his essay "'Tis Not the Kind of Job You Do." Successful contestants are requested to call by the Public Relations Office at post headquarters for their two-dollar checks and to sign vouchers.

In the meantime, cartoonists, poets, and feature writers are urged to send their contributions for entry into the weekly contest. The entries however must travel through channels, originating with the public relation officers of the several regiments and other components of the post. Do not be discouraged if your entry is not published at once as space is often limited. Officer candidates who are awarded prizes after their graduation will have their checks forwarded to them.

The Bayonet invited especially comic and editorial cartoons and editorial essays.

Opening of Post's New Patio Grill Planned Early in June

Erection of Band Shell Under Way For Al Fresco Concerts

A patio grill to allow patrons of the new cafeteria on the Main Post at Fort Benning to eat out-of-doors in gay surroundings, and where cold beverages may be served during the evening hours, now is being rushed to completion and is expected to be ready for opening by June 1, it was announced today by Col. H. E. McGaffey, Post Exchange officer.

The outdoor grill is 100 by 144 feet, and will be fitted up with 40 tables with four chairs each, as well as benches, Col. McGaffey said. The benches, tables and chairs will be decorated in red, white and blue.

Around the outside of the base, trellises are being built, and roses will be trained there to add to the beauty of the spot. Twenty-four large, gaily colored umbrellas also will be interspersed about the place.

A band shell is being installed and concerts will be held there from time to time. A soft drink bar also will be put up.

The patio will be opened to patrons of the cafeteria who may desire to eat outside during the day. Beer will be served later in the afternoon and during the evening hours, Col. McGaffey said.

The cafeteria, located at Wold Avenue and Ingersoll street just across from the Main Theater, was opened about a month ago and serves several thousand meals each day now.

S. C. Guard Units Attend Post Course

5 States Represented; Students Pack Soldiers' Life In One Week

Officers of State Guard units from five states of the Fourth Service Command are enrolled this week in the new school for state guard officers established at Fort Benning under the direction of Brig. Gen. Eric Fisher Wood, commanding general of Internal Security District No. 4.

These picked State Guardsmen, representing Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Florida, will undergo a week of intensive infantry training in a company officer's course at the Army Post. Last week more than 200 guardsmen from Georgia were enrolled.

The course is the second given by the new school which has recently been established by General Wood. In outlining the schedule for the guardsmen, General Wood observed "All guardsmen while stationed here lead the life of soldiers. They stand reveille and other regular military formations during the course of the week."

In addition to the regular military functions, the student officers undergo intensive training in other fundamental courses in weapons and tactics. The officers reported Sunday, May 16, and started work Monday morning. Monday General Wood welcomed the student officers and gave an orientation lecture as well as a

Unit Writes 600 Mother's Day Letters May 9

On Mothers' Day the candidates of the Second Battalion, Third Student Training Regiment, commanded by Col. Burnell V. Bryant, paused from their labor long enough to write approximately 600 letters to their mothers.

The Mothers Day Service held in the Second Battalion's new, rustic "Chapel-in-the-Grove" was well attended by both candidates and members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps. The service was conducted by Chaplain Barney. The choir was composed of sixteen members of the WAAC's, directed by Auxiliary Anna Cartlidge.

WAAC Officer, Louie Hubby Pack Life-Time In 24 Hours

Twenty-four hours are a small portion of a year particularly when they represent the length of the reunion between an Army officer and his WAAC officer wife after a separation of a year.

It was in April 1942 that Army orders took Lt. Paul Kiser Smith from his bride in Lexington, Ky. and sent him to Panama. And it was a little more than a year later that Army orders took WAAC Lt. Jean Overstreet Smith away from her husband at Fort Benning and sent her to Albany, Ga.

Lt. Jean Smith was assigned to WAAC recruiting duty in Columbus, Ga., when she learned her husband had been transferred to the Infantry School to attend a basic officers' class. She contacted him in Texas while he was en route to the school and made plans for the reunion. But the following day, the day before he arrived at Fort Benning, she was ordered to report to Albany. The order, however, did permit her to remain for a day after her husband's arrival.

The WAAC was not organized when her husband sailed for Panama and Lt. Jean Smith did not give the corps serious thought until she was appointed to OCS direct from civilian life in September of last year.

Lt. Paul Smith reported for duty with the 15th Co. of the 1st STR this week.

18 LAWSON MEN KILLED IN CRACK-UP

Transport Strikes Carolina Mountain In Pea-Soup Fog

The crash of an army transport last Saturday near Newland, N. C., cost the lives of 18 officers and enlisted men based at Lawson Field. Memorial services for the victims were held Tuesday on Lawson Field Chapel. Chaplain W. M. Lewis officiated.

Thursday Theater Profits To Go To AER

All net proceeds from post theaters taken in Thursday will go to the Army Emergency Relief Fund, Major James Sutton, theater officer, announced Wednesday. This move is made with War Department approval on request of Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, post commander. After all expenses are deducted, the theaters expect to raise between $700 and $900 for the fund.

THE INIMITABLE MARTHA RAYE

Parachute School Has First Birthday Friday

Initial Class Without Failures Or Jump Refusals Graduates

The first anniversary of the U. S. Army's Parachute school at Fort Benning was marked last Friday by the graduation of the first class of qualified jumpers without having had one of the members of the group "washout" or refuse to jump during their training.

As hardy American paratroopers today are active in several theaters of operations, all spent their novice days training to become 'chutists at the school here under the command of Brigadier General George P. Howell.

In a special review ordered for the afternoon, General Howell personally commended Major Nathaniel R. Hoskot, of Boise, Idaho, student leader of the graduating class. At the formation, General Howell lauded the entire class for having gone through training without any of the members refusing to jump or failing to graduate.

HOWELL HONORED

Friday night special honors were accorded General Howell by students and officers of the school as they lined themselves up before the general's office as he was about to leave for the day. When General Howell departed, he was greeted by a rousing cheer from several hundred paratroopers.

Although the training of paratroopers for the American Army is about three years old, Friday marked the first anniversary of the founding of the Parachute School with General Howell in command. Lieut. Col. James Coutts, of Philadelphia, Pa., who has served overseas until recently with American forces, is the assistant commandant of the school and in charge of jump training.

About three years ago two officers and 48 enlisted men formed the first cadre to engage in

MP Escorts Papa To Help Welcome Twins

Army traffic regulations limit the speed of army vehicles to 35 miles per hour under normal operating circumstances, so it's no wonder 10th Armored MP's patrolling Gusseta highway were surprised recently upon seeing a little peep flying down the road at seventy per.

The MP's took out in hot pursuit and overtook the driver, Lt. Lawrence McKenzie of the 2nd Student Training Regiment. In short time the MP decided this was not a normal operating circumstance— escorted the lieutenant into nearby Columbus.

The reason? Mrs. McKenzie gave birth to twins in a Columbus hospital.

Famed Screen Star Scheduled For Three Days

Actress to Entertain At Theaters, Service Clubs, Halls, Hospital

Martha Raye, famed comedienne of stage, screen, and radio, is coming to Fort Benning. Miss Raye is scheduled to appear here next

Martha Raye entered a New Orleans, La., hospital last night for observation following what was believed to be an attack of appendicitis, it was learned early this morning. However, no official cancellation of her appearance here next week had been received at the time the BAYONET went to press.

Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday for a series of informal acts at post theaters, service clubs, recreation halls, and at Station Hospital.

There will be no formal show, and she will bring with her only her accompanist. The screen star will come to Benning directly from Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., including the post on her itinerary of army camps.

Her current tour of the continental United States is her first since her return from North Africa where she, together with Carole Landis and Kay Francis, entertained American soldiers in actual combat zones under most difficult conditions.

Benning Man Armored Chief

Announcement Tuesday, by the War Department of Major General Alvan C. Gillem's appointment as acting chief of the armored force succeeding Lieutenant General Jacob L. Devers, is received with interest in Columbus and at Fort Benning, where he was stationed from 1935 to 1941 as instructor at the Infantry School and commanding general of the Second Armored brigade.

General Gillem arrived at Fort Knox, Ky., Monday to assume his new command following assignment of General Devers to London as commanding general of American troops in the European theater after the death of Lieutenant General Frank M. Andrews in an Iceland plane crash.

Descended from a long line of prominent army men, General Gillem enlisted as a private in the regular army at Atlanta, Ga., in 1910 when there were no appointments to West Point available. About a year later he won his commission.

During the first World War he organized and commanded the 23rd machine gun battalion and became division machine gun officer. After the war he served in Siberia as a lieutenant colonel, in Hawaii, the Philippines and Mexico. He was graduated from the Army War college in 1926 and assigned to general staff duty.

Five years previous to 1935 he was professor of military science and tactics at the University of Maryland and also during that

Brenda Joyce's Rest Just Busman's Holiday

Actress On Visit To Husband Here Put To Work Entertaining

Screen Actress Brenda Joyce, after three tiring weeks of entertaining soldiers in Army camps, came to Fort Benning for a rest and visit with her husband, 1st Lt. Owen Ward who is in a basic training class in the 1st STR. But the visit turned out to be a busman's holiday.

There was scarcely a day that Miss Joyce didn't appear at some function or other. She joined the Funz-A-Fire company in their show at the Station Hospital and with them was the guest of the 176th regiment at luncheon. She was on the sidelines when the soldiers of the 176th played a softball team composed of members of the Funz-A-Fire company. And she also appeared on the Post's radio program.

She likes to entertain soldiers. When she started on her tour, she packed all of her red dresses and those with ruffles because "soldiers like to see a gal in red." While a tour of army camps is tiring, Miss Joyce delights in them because of the hearty fashion in which the soldiers receive her. She thinks too much emphasis cannot be placed on the entertainment of soldiers in hospitals.

LIKED BENNING

Fort Benning, she thinks, is "lovely — almost like a resort." She added, "It's older than the camps I've been in and perhaps that's why it has developed such attractiveness. The recreation facilities are excellent."

Post Mosquito Control Board Wages Unending Battle on Deadly Insect

Every Means Utilized To Lure Disease Spreader Into Death Trap

By Pvt. Thomas Devine

Bloodthirsty female mosquitos are the quarry of Fort Benning's Mosquito Control Board. Although resting boxes are provided for these tiny vampires and men are sent out at night to be bitten by them, it is no wish on the part of the army to provide board and room for these pests.

On the contrary it is all part of a subtle scheme to lure the pesky insects to their destruction. As there are more ways of killing a cat than choking it with cream, so are there more methods of giving mosquitoes the works than swatting them individually.

No other agency in the world has undertaken extermination of mosquitoes on so large and persistent a scale as the United States Army whose sanitary experts have been pursuing this pest for nearly half a century. The reason for this persistence is not, however, to eliminate these creatures because of the minor discomforts their bites cause but, rather for the major peril certain breeds constitute as carriers of yellow fever and malaria.

While all mosquitoes look alike to the naked and inexpert eye there are, actually, a number of different breds. The common pest variety is known as the Culex and the result of its depredations is seldom more serious than the itch experienced by the bitten victim. It is the Anopheles species which bears malaria and the Aedes Aegypti carrying yellow fever which are the objects of the Mosquito Control Board's attention at Fort Benning and other posts in the southern part of the United States.

IN ALL CLIMES

Contrary to popular supposition, mosquitoes are by no means peculiar to hot climates, indeed they abound in the northern part of this country, in Canada and even Alaska. The yellow fever and malaria bearing species, however, would seem, for the most part to infest the warmer areas. Yet larvae have been discovered thriving in ice covered pools and they will seek cool and shaded spots in which to breed. In fact the most important part of mosquito control is the elimination of stagnant water which is their favorite breeding medium. Nor do they require any large water area for this purpose but will propogate in cans or any receptacle which may have collected sufficient moisture.

In a certain army hospital in Puerto Rico some time ago ants had become a major nuisance so the authorities set the legs of the cots in cups of toxic solution to combat these vermin. Presently malaria occurred in the place and this could only be the result of the presence of mosquitoes. In the ensuing investigation it was discovered that the liquid in the cups under the cot legs was harboring the larvae of the deadly anopheles mosquito.

WAR 45 YEARS OLD

The Army's fight against yellow fever and malaria began back in the early part of the present century when the United States took over Cuba as a result of the Spanish American War. Havana was at that time one of the unhealthiest spots in the world, with malaria and yellow fever rampant. Colonel William Crawford Gorgas was appointed sanitary commissioner by the army and, in a very short time, the city had been so cleaned up that it became as distinguished for its health as it formerly had for its plagues.

A few years later this same man, Colonel Gorgas, performed an even more spectacular task in ridding the Panama Canal Zone from these same plagues. Yellow fever produces a very high death rate and malaria, while less lethal is the cause of more lost work days than any other disease in the world. These two diseases were one very formidable factor in forcing the French to abandone their attempt at an Isthmian canal some years before we took over the job.

The Mosquito Control Board of Fort Benning was established in 1941 at the instigation of the Medical Department and was for a time operated by that body. It was later transferred to the office of the Post Engineer as that agency was better equipped to administer the work physically. The operations are still under the direction of the Medical Department which indicates what areas need attention, when the work shall be performed and what type of control work shall be done.

Captain C. E. Perkins, Assistant Post Medical Inspector of Fort Benning, who at present directs the work of the Mosquito Control Board is a civil engineer by profession. A resident of Bartlesville, Okla., in civilian life he was district manager of several electric utilities in that area and had previously occupied the chair of Civil Engineering at Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College. He entered military service in 1942.

The Board's entomologist, 1st Lieutenant E. R. Helwig, is a former professor of zoology at the University of Pennsylvania. The lieutenant's research work on insects has taken him all over the world and he knows from first hand experience those areas in North Africa which our forces have recently conquered and he is also widely travelled in Japan.

ONE-MILE RADIUS

It is the policy of Fort Benning's Mosquito Control Board to keep all inhabited areas and their environs within a mile radius free of breeding spots for the disease bearing insects.

To determine such spots the Medical Inspector's office sends out an entomologist with assistants to make dippings of ponds, pools and other places which harbor water deposits. Water from these is brought back to the laboratories and examined to discover the species of mosquito larvae existing in it. If the anopheles is discovered, steps are taken to eliminate the place of origin.

Besides dipping for larvae the Medical Department goes after the adult mosquito in other ways. The resting boxes previously mentioned are cubicles with a hole in one end. Painted black on the outside and tile red within, these are placed in cool shady spots, enticing the mosquito to rest his, or rather her, weary bones. It might be remarked parenthetically that in mosquito society as in that of another genus it is the girls who cause most of the trouble. The lads are vegetarians and only the ladies go in for a blood diet. Once in a resting box these winged nuisances fall easy prey to the medics who take them home and learn all their tricks through the medium of a microscope.

USE LIGHT TRAPS

Light traps are also utilized for catching the living adult. These lights are placed within a shell whose ingenious construction lures the mosquito to enter and only after it's tired of the Broadway glitter does it find that it has only a one way ticket to the basement of Dispensary "A".

Still another method of capture consists of sending out men with flashlights at night. These agents attack the insects to them and when one has settled on the skin it is chloroformed and swished off to the laboratory before it can say "Jack Robinson". But then, who'd want to say anything so futile in such circumstances anyhow?

TWO METHODS EMPLOYED

When a mosquito breeding spot has been discovered, one of two means are used to eliminate the hazard. These are draining or weekly spraying. Which of these to be employed is determined by the factor of economy and the less costly is resorted to.

The workshops of the Mosquito Control Board are situated next to Dispensary "A" and are under the direction of William S. Royal, a civilian employee of the Post Engineer who has been with this organization since its inception in 1941. These shops are rather astonishingly self contained and one of their functions, for example, is the making of the tile and pipe which is used for drainage on the Post.

Mr. Royal's staff comprises crews that build drainage ditches, lay drain pipes, clear weeds from the margins of ponds and spray such water areas as are infeasible to drain. Besides these functions they also spray the interior of buildings to rid them of adult mosquitoes and concern themselves with the extermination of all sorts of vermin on the post.

An excellent example of the work done by Mr. Royal and his men is the area around Russ Pool. Formerly swamp land, it was the repository of the miniature watershed formed by surrounding inclines which contained numerous springs. Drainage pipes were laid from these water sources to a central drainage ditch with the result that, from a malarial bog the land has been transformed into a pleasant picnic glade.

BENNING AREA ZONED OFF

The entire Fort Benning area is divided in zones to each of which is allotted a spraying crew from the Mosquito Control Board. The breeding period of these insects is ten days and once a week the crews spray each section requiring this treatment. This frequency is demanded by rain, wind and other natural agencies dispersing the larvacides which are applied to the water surfaces.

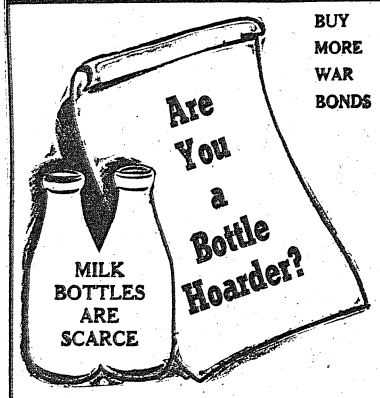
The larvacide selected differs depending on whether or not the matter of pollution is a factor. When such is the case a mixture with a pyretheum base is used, this being non-injurious to humans and animals. When polution is of no consequence a phenol base solution is utilized. A third method is spraying with oil, less desirable since it both pollutes water and injures adjacent vegetation but, due to the shortage of chemicals the last named substance is now being more widely used.

The efficacy of Fort Benning's Mosquito Control Board is demonstrated by the circumstance that in a locale of relatively high occurrence, malaria has, within a space of two years, been virtually eradicated. Such few cases as do occur are mostly recurrences of infection incurred elsewhere.

Dog Trainer Knows Pups

Seeks Transfer To Help Drill Wags

Pvt. Bruce C. Martin of C Battery, 420th Armored Field Artillery Battalion, knows his dogs—which is the reason he is requesting a transfer to the dog-training service conducted by the Quartermaster department.



Martin, who trained dogs for field trails for 10 years before he entered the Army, is credited with the training of Commique, the All-American grouse champion of 1942. And, having devoted years to breaking and conditioning pointers and setters and training them to retrieve and obey, he feels that he could be of real service in this field.

He is extremely enthusiastic about the work the Quartermaster's is doing at the new K-9 training center at Front Royal, Va., where the various branches of the service are combining to train dogs of war. In this enterprise, which is the biggest trained-dog show ever seen in America, dogs are trained to hunt wounded men on the battlefield, to carry messages and burnens, to walk patrols with sentries and to guard property.

Dogs were used extensively in World War I, and many stories of dog heroism came out of that way. Dogs will be used even more in this war—in the Malay campaign, for instance, the Japs used about 25,000 dogs. U. S. Marines had dogs with them on Guadalcanal and the animals were credited with saving the lives of many men by locating hidden Japs and warning the Marines.

Martin has hopes that he will be permitted to play some part in the training of dogs that Uncle Sam will use in the campaigns to come.

In simplifying manufacture of hand tools for Victory Gardens, 324 types of forks have been cut to 76, styles of rakes have been reduced from 55 to 8, hoes from 362 to 39, and hand cultivators from 14 to 8.

THE NAVY, ARMY and judiciary were represented in the Tuesday re-union of the Weems brothers at Fort Benning. Left to right, Comdr. P. V. H. Weems, on short leave from active sea duty; Brig. Gen. George C. Weems, assistant commandant of the Infantry school, and Judge J. B. Weems, retired. At present, there are 13 members of the Weems family serving in the army, navy, marine corps and WAACs.

Three Weems Brothers Celebrate Family Reunion

Thirteen Members Of Family Are Now In Armed Forces

The army, navy and judiciary heads of the Weems family of Dickson county, Tenn., were reunited Tuesday when Comdr. P. V. H. Weems, USN, and Judge J. B. Weems were guests of their younger brother, Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of the infantry school.

And the reunion, their first since last fall when all five of the Weems brothers were together, disclosed that the services are represented by 13 members of the family.

Both Judge Weems and Commander Weems were especially impressed with the intricate organization of the Infantry school and the perfection in methods of instruction.

Judge Weems said: "I have seen very little of our army training, but after my trip to Fort Benning, I believe I can tell our people that our young men are getting the right sort of training in battle conditioning for this war."

Commander Weems is a recognized authority on navigation and has written many books on this subject.

The commander's son, Lt. George T. Weems, USN, was recently awarded the Silver Star for gallantry in action in a naval battle in the southwest Pacific.

A nephew, Lt. Thomas N. Weems, Jr., was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for participation in the battle of Midway.

General Officers View 7th Company In Demonstrations

The 7th Company, First Student Training Regiment, claims the honor of being viewed by such distinguished officers as Maj. General Levan C. Allen, Maj. General M. E. Bethouart, chief of the French Military Commission in the United States, and Brig. General George H. Weems during a recent problem—an offensive against a Nazi village.

The patrol was first fired upon from the village while they were listening to a lecture given by an officer of the Training of the Individula Soldier Committee. This surprise shot was practically a signal for the offensive action to be taken.

Immediately, the killing party entered the dense wooded area coming out in position on the other side of the village so as to cut off all possible lanes of escape to any remaining enemy. The covering party took their positions along the creek bed so they could cover the advance of the searching party. Upon signal, the searching party swept forward crossing the creek—into the village area amid the explosions of T. N. T., booby traps, with the realism of actual combat. The village having been captured and searched, the patrol moved out to continue their training in other combat proficiency tests.

General Weems commented favorably on the interest and enthusiasm displayed by Student Officers of the 7th Company.

3rd STR Unit Has Field Day On Target Range

The Twenty-third Company of the Third Student Training Regiment recently came through with another record when on the field target range. The second squad, third platoon buckled down with cool heads and steady fingers to establish the enviable record of 57 points on the field target course.

Twenty-four targets were used in the exercise. When the smoke cleared it was found that 19 of the 24 targets were covered effectively, resulting in a total of 79 per cent of targets hit. The squad had a total of 42 hits out of 366 rounds fired to account for 12 per cent hits.

Members of the "dead eye" squad include Candidates Sinnott, E. J. Sherman, R. W. Sherman, Smith, Sealy, Schnittker, Sabel, Sharp, Scott and Sroumsos.

General Boys To Law; Greets Devers By Mail

When someone in the army bucks a general and makes it stick, the story has the aspects of a man-bites-dog story. But something just about like that happened in the 10th Armored Division recently.

The announcement was made that Lt. Gen. Jacob L. Devers of the Armored force had been named commander of the European theatre of operations following the plane crash death of Lt. Gen. Frank M. Andrews.

So it was only fitting that Maj Gen. Paul W. Newgarden, commander of the 10th Armored Division, should send a congratulatory wire to his former chief. Gen. Newgarden prepared the telegram and sent it to the Western Union office.

But the lady said, "Sorry, but this is a congratulatory message and cannot be sent under existing regulations." An appeal to the office on the main post section of Fort Benning brought similar results.

The general then "estimated the situation ,formulated a new plan"—he wrote a letter instead.

Bicycle Affords Exercise, Means Of Transportation

Cycling for pleasure as well as for transportation is the hobby of many officers in 2nd Company, 1st Student Training Regiment. Every morning three of these officers wend their cheery way to the Company from diverse parts of the Post.

For example there is Colonel Barlow, a member of the faculty, who daily travels from his home on the Main Post to the 1st Regiment area. Colonel Barlow has long been a noted practitioner as well as instructor in the art of keeping fit and healthy, and is a fine example of what conditioning and daily exercise will do for a man. Going to and from instruction periods, it is Colonel Barlow out in front setting a good fast pace which leaves many a Captain puffing in the rear ranks. Colonel Barlow enjoys his cycling and is firm in his advocacy of it as a conditioner.

Then there is Captain Carl H. Hawthorne, Jr., a member of the 1st Student Training Regiment for some time and well known in the Regiment who is a daily cyclist. Captain Hawthorne has had to keep fit in his work with officer candidate classes and has kept up his cycling so that he may keep fit for future assignments.

Conditioning being a prime essential in the Paratroops, it is not unusual that Captain Gordon C. Avery of the Parachute School should use his bicycle to carry hi mfrom his home to his company each morning. This enables him to get to the company early every day and still manage to get some of the exercise so badly needed to keep him in that condition required by the Paratroops.

Local 'Ladies From Hell' Sport Bag-Pipe Player

Out in the Second Student Training Regiment they are calling the GI's in the 8th Company the "Ladies From Hell."

For when the 8th Company comes marching into class you would think it was one of those crack Scottish regiments you read about.

The reason: the 8th Company has a full-fledged bag-piper who gives off with those famous Scottish tunes any time the company is a-marching.

The operator of the wailing cats is Candidate Gene McPoil, who comes from generations of Scottish bagpipers. As a matter of fact the pipes he plays have a history in themselves, being over 200 years old and having been handed down for generations in his family.

Flourishing the proud plaits of the Stewart clan, it is easy to imagine that these pipes have led undaunted kilted warriors into battle just as they now announce the future officers of the 8th Company.

Columbus Room Shortage Persists

An acute shortage of rooms in Columbus to meet needs of military personnel at Fort Benning was reported today by Lieut. John A. White, billetting officer of the Post.

Many officers and enlisted men desire rooms for families, he stated, but very few are now available through the Billetting Office. He has requested Columbus householders with spare rooms to write or call him.

The post billeting office branch in downtown Columbus recently was closed so that all of the business of the office now is handled directly from the post.

Chaplain Shain Is Made Captain

Chaplain Samson Aaron Shain, Jewish Chaplain at Fort Benning, has been promoted to the rank of captain, Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, chief of the chaplains branch, announced Monday.

Chaplain Shain was called to active duty last July from his congregation in Sunnyside, Long Island.

A native of Boston, Mass., Chaplain Shain holds a teacher's diploma from Hebrew Teachers College, Boston; a bachelor of arts degree from Harvard College, and a master of Hebrew literature and rabbi degree from the Jewish Institute of Religion. He also attended the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, Palestine.

Polish Prime Minister Has Nephew Here

Cpl. Sikorski Is With 420th F. A., Tenth Armored Division

Cpl. Leo Sikorski of Headquarters battery, 420th Armored F. A. Battalion, 10th Armored division, has a very personal reason for hoping the Polish army will some day soon avenge the invasion of the Nazi hordes which set the stage for World War II back in 1939. This is the reason:

The present Polish prime minister and commander-in-chief of the Polish armies now in England is his uncle, Gen. Wladyslaw Sikorski.

When the Nazis launched their treacherous invasion, the Polish army fought valiantly but unsuccessfully in the face of such superior power. After it became apparent that the blitzkrieg could not be halted, General Sikorski took as many troops as he could to England to bide the day of a general European invasion.

But the Poles have been far from idle in the meantime, and from England the general has carried on his resistance to the enemy.

Loved by his people, General Sikorski is regarded as the man who will lead the Polish state back to its place in the sun. A line in the Polish national anthem, sung through generations of oppression, has even been revised to read: "March, march, Sikorski, from a foreign land back to Poland!"

The general is well known in this country and was a guest of President Roosevelt in 1941. Corporal Sikorski has not heard from his uncle recently, but in his last letter the general wrote that he hoped to visit the United States again after peace has been established.

Quartermaster Tells More About New Uniform

Colonel Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning, disclosed more particulars of the new "all purpose" uniform for the Army's combat troops which is to be ready about July 1.

It will be a reversible uniform, dark green on one side to blend with foliage and trees, and white on the reverse side, to be used by troops serving in northern climates where snow is present most of the time.

The dark green color, Colonel Massey pointed out, is similar to the green of an oak leaf and has been found best to blend with trees and jungle growth. Again, experience has shown that it blends with desert sands quite well.

The new uniform will be a two-piece outfit, consisting of jacket and trousers. In warm countries it will be found equally as cool as the twill now used. In colder climates the troops will wear undergarments of warm pilt material, with the uniform material being designed to keep out rain, cold and snow.

The first issue of the new uniform, coming in July, will be only for troops going overseas. When present stocks of the old type unifrm are exhausted, the outfit is expected to become standardized for troops in the United States as well.

Postoffice Takes Place of Mail-Call

In compliance with a regimental order an old army tradition was discontinued Monday morning when the Tenth Company, First Student Training Regiment abolished the one pleasure students looked forward to twice daily—mail call. Replacing the conventional barracks steps distribution is a streamlined miniature post office, an innovation of the Tenth Company's first sergeant, William C. Younger.

Mail distribution in the Tenth Company is now a simple and convenient matter. Students merely file by a mesh screen at any time during business hours, observe their own box, marked with their roster number, and in the event that mail is present in their box, ask for and receive it from the company mail orderly on duty behind the screen.

This new time-saving idea has gained popularity rapidly, and at the present time, a majority of the companies in the Second Battalion have adopted it.

Lt. Col. Wilfred Jackson, Second Battalion commanding officer, visited the company while the boxes were under construction and was so enthused with the idea that he passed his walking stick to the mail orderly and pitched in on the job himself.

New Civilian Pay Goes Into Effect

Announcement of a new pay scale is made by Lieut. R. A. Parkins, chief of the Civilian Personnel Branch, Fourth Service Command, at Fort Benning, effective as of May 1, 1943.

All salaries less than $1200 will receive a 25 per cent bonus prorated on a daily basis in lieu of overtime. Salaries from $1200 to $1380 will receive $300 bonus prorated on a daily basis also in lieu of overtime. Salaries from $1440 to $4200 inclusive will be the same. Overtime will be paid on the same basis.

The $5000.00 ceiling has been lifted, therefore all salaries ranging from $2900.00 to $5000.00 inclusive will receive time and one-half time at the overtime rate based on $2900.00.

When Fire Sirens Sound, Clear The Right-of-Way

Death lurks daily on Vibbert, Ingersoll and practically every other street on the Fort Benning reservation. It is not death that will one day come to the enemy but a situation which threatens the life of many motorists on the post due to their own carelessness.

Colonel Albert J. Bain, the post engineer and fire marshal, last week urged motorists on the post to heed the shrill shriek of sirens on fire trucks and give the fire-fighters a clear path when they are answering calls. In making this plea, Colonel Bain disclosed that scores of reckless motorists are not obeying the sensible rules which govern the daily life of most citizens in every metropolitan city.

It would be frightening to think of what would happen to a motorist on 44th street or Second avenue in New York City were he to drive on in the middle of the street while fire engines or ambulances were rushing to answer an emergency call. Well, why then, does the motorist at Fort Benning fail to heed the warning of these emergency crews?

Colonel Bain revealed that on several frequent occasions he, as fire marshal, sped to the scene of a fire only to be delayed en route by some momentarily senseless motorist who obstructed the roadway. In a definite sense of the word, such actions by motorists disclose the presense of a type of "Fifth Column": that human element which fails to cooperate fully in time of emergency.

It might be that one day a serious fire would threaten an area on the post. And, under present situation, it could be that such unwitting motorists would cause an accident to befall the fire trucks. Such news would be of peculiar delight to our enemy. Why, then, don't we cooperate fully with the authorities and obey the rules of common sense?

For the sake of others' lives, if not for your own, heed the approach of fire-fighters, or an ambulance or military police! If you don't you will probably be thoroughly reprimanded by post officials if you live through your carelessness.

All He Asks Is That He May Be Proud of You

"This is all the man about to die ever asks of you—that he may be proud of you." So speaks Lieut. General Ben Lear to us on the homefront. Newly appointed to command all America's ground forces, he has trained thousands of Selectees from the civilian ranks into "lean and hardened young men, alert, obedient, intelligent, aggressive, keyed to the desire to meet their enemies and destroy them." So he has an accurate insight into our national weaknesses and what we most need as a fighting nation.

Here it is, bluntly put as you would expect from a soldier—"more fitness." He will accept no substitute in the fight for the American way of living. Not "gadgets," not more automobiles, nor endless varieties of canned foods,—those are not the ingredients to build a victorious America; instead the General names "greater effort, utmost unselfishness, infinite pains, capacity for self-sacrifice." And in their application he demands Army standards—"not just 60, 70, or 80% but mass support and complete unity of all our people."

Here is an Army leader indicating the road to total victory—not only on the battlefield but in the eternal field of national life where the only just and lasting new world must be born. In his work to conquer evil overseas, he gives a lead in the fight against evil at home.

General Lear has a very matter-of-fact and concrete idea of "moral fitness." He holds that it would answer most national problems, including absenteeism. For absenteeism, he points out, "is not confined to factories," but shows itself whenever any one of us produces less than our best. For too long we have tried to find easy panaceas instead of dealing with the weaknesses of human nature. General Lear calls us back to fundamentals.

Sixty-four years old on May 12, General Lear, by all customary standards, should retire from active service. Instead he commanded our North African ground advance—a man of whom the boys about to face death are proud.

Helpful Hints Given For Troops Overseas

Many of our fighting men have invaded desert countries and will invade other territories where climates will vary from extreme heat to extreme cold, therefore these men should be prepared to meet these variations with a minimum of casualties.

The following recommendations of sanitation are given as a guide to men transferred to desert countries like North Africa:

1. The clothing should be cool and suitable for very high temperatures of the day as well as warm for the cold desert nights.

2. Living quarters should be clean and adequately screened so that flies and insects are kept at a minimum.

3. Kitchens should be screened and garbage removed as soon as possible and covered tightly before removal, so that flies are not attracted by the odors or discarded foods.

4. Malarial prevention by mosquito control should be started immediately, by proper drainage of stagnant water near camps or proper insecticide used if drainage is impractical.

5. Sweating of men will be profuse which will favor many skin diseases. So daily bathing is desirable if water is available.

6. Shoes should be worn at all times to prevent feet accidents and hookworm.

Keeping bodies and clothes clean will eradicate body lice thus preventing typhus fever.

History of previous wars has shown that disease always takes a far greater toll in all wars than does the lethal weapons, by preventing disease our mortality rate will be decreased and our fighting men will attain quicker victories over our enemies.

In this global war, more so than in previous wars, we have to send our men ot some of the most disease ridden corners of the earth for combat, and it will be an achievement to our efforts in preventative medicine if these numerous plagues are kept at a minimum or even abolished.

Major Frank I. Ciofalo,
Reg't. Surgeon, 1st STR.

Don't Forget To Provide For Loved Ones At Home

With the quickening of action on all battle fronts, the roaring flights of long range bombers on important Axis bases, the movement of carefully planned convoys, the War Department is busy, busier than ever before in its history. But, all the machinery of the Department is not concentrated on the fronts; a few trained heads continue their work to devise means of aid and protection for the loved ones our men in the service have left behind.

To carry out their plans of providing aid and protection is the service man's job. He alone can make the necessary applications to put the plan in operation.

One of the most important projects initiated was the offer of low cost Government insurance to each man when entering the service. This provided policies up to $10,000.00 at much less cost than any similar policies. In the event of death a policy such as this would provide the beneficiary with a monthly income. The premiums are deducted from the insured's pay and no matter where on the globe he may be ordered there is no possibility of a lapse of policy.

A man upon entering the service has 120 days to make application for this insurance without taking a medical examination. At present the requirement of a medical examination after the expiration of this 120 days has been waived; now everyone in the service can take a policy without medical examination. This offer expires August 12, 1943.

Now is the time to get that protection for you and your family. You cannot afford to leave your loved ones unprotected.

21st Co., 1st Stud. Tng. Regt.

LIFE AND GOLD

The following article was sent The Bayonet and was taken from Paul Light's "So What" column in the St. Paul Pioneer Press:

"On a train recently I heard a man complain about his high income tax. He was silenced effectively by a stranger who said: 'If you'll study the matter carefully you'll find taxes are the cheapest things in this war.'

"When I told this incident to Roy Swanson of the Pioneer Press library, he showed me a pertinent bit written in 1917 by Edward Markham, then editor of the St. Peter Herald, on the eve of his enlistment in the Army. Markham wrote:

"'I am a mother's son. I love my life as you love yours. I am youth in years and experience, yet I am a gambler, betting the highest stakes a man can wager—my life. If I win, you win. If I lose I have lost all. The loss is mine, not yours; and there is a grieved mother, a saddened family, a broken home.

"'I ask only for the Godspeed and support of my nation in return for laying upon the altar of my country my all . . . Will you pawn your sheckles if I pawn myself. Will you hazard your wealth while I risk my life? Will you bet your gold while I risk my life? . . . I am the American soldier. I am the boy in the trenches . . .'"

"We recommend this to those who complain about their income tax—or hesitate to buy bonds.

Up is the only way out that will not get us in again or get us down.

"Forgiving our taxes" is an odd way to put it. What needs forgiving, it seems to us, is the way we holler about taxes.

Have we let the quality of our products represent America rather than the quality of our lives?

Unscrupulous nations with a hatred for our way of life can be defeated only by men who still consider morals manly, and who are triumphantly sure of what they are fighting for.

Preparing to take your place in the future isn't just learning a new trade. It's learning a new attitude.

If the people in the post-war world were all like you are now, what sort of a world would we have?—

A. The same kind as in 1918-39?
B. A hate-free, greed-free, fear-free world?
C. Paradise?
D. Chaos?

The world that's coming isn't going to be what we want it to be. It's going to be what we are.

G. I. FEELS BARBER'S PERSISTENCE IS OBNOXIOUS AND INSULTING

Dear Editor:—

Every fortnight I am greatly annoyed and irritated on my visits to barbershops on the post. Considering the great numbers of men whose hair must be cut, the wait for a chair is not considerable. The craft of the tonsorial artist, while not likely to win any garden society hedge-trimming award, is not too bad—up to a point. But that is just where we turn our attention to the debit side of the ledger.

Upon entering the shop and subsequently being seated in the chair, the soldier is treated with all kindness and subservience, never being "hello'd" less than twice. Once seated, the victim is surveyed and questioned as to the purpose of his visit. (On several occasions I've been tempted to ask for a pair of shoes.) Told that we want a haircut, the barber begins his work with all tenderness, slowly, methodically, first with the clippers here and then with a scissors there.

About half way through the project, he is certain to move his head lower near your ear and inquire if you would not like to avail yourself of the special price on a combined haircut, shave, shampoo and tonic. When he is told no, all friendliness between he and the man at his mercy ceases.

Oftentimes in a rebuffed and belligerent manner, the barber points out the dire need of a shampoo, which is not only poor manners but also antagonizing especially should his client have performed his own work a night or two before.

Again given a negative answer, the persistent fellows usually essay to promote an application of tonic and cite your dandruff as the reason. Now, having been virtually insulted twice, the customer irritably retorts, "No, all I came in for was the obvious haircut."

Ah, but our barbers have the final word. "We'll fix this cheapskate," they murmur and finish their original job in nothing flat, seldom even bothering to comb out their customer's hair.

While salesmanship is not to be scorned or despised — as it plays a very important role in our civilization — this particular brand of high-pressure selling is extremely irksome. It is a source of grave concern to know one cannot win and hold respectful workmanship in a barbershop by his being adamantine in entering for and leaving with just a haircut—not the shop!

Chaplain's Corner

WHERE THE BLUE BEGINS

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

"Where the Blue Begins" is the subject of a book written some time ago by Christopher Morley.

It is the story of a man who had a sufficiency of this world's goods, yet found life humdrum and unsatisfactory. He would go, as countless thousands have done, in quest of that which would satisfy.

He makes his way to New York, where he saw the lights of the town "paneled in gold against a peacock sky." He enters into the glory of that mighty city; its art and architecture. He visits its masts of trade. He goes down to the sea in ships. He finds beauty, romance, courage, conquest, but he does not find the blue. Wearied with his fruitless wanderings, he returns home, and, lo, as he opens his own door the miracle of peace and happiness floods his soul.

Where does the blue begin? In the heart of a young man when he has equipped for life's work; when he and another join hands; when they look with the eyes of wonder on their first born; when grown old they see their dreams realized in their sons and daughters.

Where does it begin? At the end of a good day, in a little garden, in a home where there are laughing children and love.

Where does the blue begin?
Within my heart and there it ends, and there's its whole expanse.
For there it burns, crystal flame apart
From intellect and worldly circumstance.
And when it burns most fiercely, that is art;
But when it flickers gently;
that's romance.

Verse

QUIET!

So many times the things we say
Are better left unsaid.
The rumors and the idle talk
By gossip mongers fed
Will often lead to grave mistakes
Creates a family row,
Disrupt a home and cause distrust
And yet you wonder how.

It's easy—all you have to do
Is start with "Have you heard?"
Continue with "Now keep this low"
Or "Here's the latest words."
Some phrases may be different but
The meaning is the same.
No matter what you say, my friend,
Be sure from whence it came.

So think it over once or twice
Before you wag your tongue;
Remember that a rumor, true
Is one that's not begun.
And when you get exclusive rights
To someone else's news
Just think how you would feel if you
Were in that person's shoes . . .

WISHFUL INTERLUDE

Fair be the path beneath your feet,
Bright be the sky above your head,
Light be your burden so weighted by time,
Strong be your limbs for such a load
That comprises life and loves.

Clear be your mind of worldly things,
Soft be your touch, sweet be your voice
That men may cling and cling and cling,
As the bee to a sweet daffodil.

True be your love and sincerity,
Small be your troubles at heart.
Near be your thoughts of ecstasy,
Tho we're miles and miles apart.

To you I wish the best of all the best,
And all the purest pertaining therein,
For long be your life, small be your woes,
That we may have happiness everlasting.

RETREAT PARADE

A big bare field, surrounded by trees
And an empty review stand there.
Not much to look on now, you say;
Devoid of a military air.

But wait til evening and Retreat Parade
And the regiments' forming there
And you'll see a sight, a wonderful sight,
To which nothing can compare.

For the love of country and love of flag
And the uniform we wear.
Makes every heart glad to pass in review;
Stalwart and debonair.

And the martial music; the measured beat;
The Generals' stance and stare
Makes each man feel that he's the best
Of all who've paraded there.

Sgt. Louis R. Stockstill,
Division Headquarters, G-4.

Kay Says—

GIRLS BETWEEN DRONES AND WORKERS MUST JOIN LATTER IN TOTAL WAR

It takes a wise wife to budget her time to the best advantage these war days. Between demands at home, hours which much be spent shopping for food, the growing delinquency problem among youth to be combated, essential war work to be done, and the stress laid on preserving the health of one's family, it requires concentration to determine just where one will be of the most value.

Given such a problem, most women react in one of three ways. There are those who run madly about from place to place, taking every course they think might be interesting, leaving their children to the mercies of an unskilled nursegirl, protesting vehemently that they loathe housework and envy the men who can take a more active part in the war.

THE EPICUREANS

There are others who decide that things may be worse before they get better, so they'll take their leisure and good times while they can. Life to them is a vacation period between the things that used to be and the things yet to come. They're out to get their full measure of pleasure and good times while they're still to be had. For them the ban on pleasure driving is merely a rule to be outwitted if possible; war work is something for the drudge who has nothing better to do with her time.

And there is the rapidly growing third class, God bless 'em. It is composed of those women who seem to have time for everything they have decided it is best for them to attempt to do. They pick their Red Cross work carefully, devoting their talents wherever they think their own particular time-schedule, personality traits, and training will be of most use.

You see them every where on the post — doing their shopping with efficiency and dispatch, making bandages at the Red Cross work room, helping at the nursery school. These are also the women you find active in the Girl Scouts, the U.-T. A., or any other worthwhile community enterprise. These are also the women, strangely enough, who find time to squeeze in an occasional bridge game, to attend an interesting and informative lecture, or to relax over a friendly cup of tea.

LEOPARD'S SPOTS

We've just about reached the conclusion that you can't change women, after the formative years. Those of us who have a tendency to take life easy and let someone else carry the burden will just continue that way until we get a heavy enough jolt to jar us out of our lassitude. The burden of responsibility continues to rest on the shoulders of those whose public-mindedness makes it imperative, to them, to do the most they can in the best way they can.

Our great hope is that that band of women on the fence, as it were, between the drones and the workers will find themselves inching steadily, perhaps unconsciously, away from the sluggard and toward the other side of the fence. It's no fun being a sluggard, these days, if your mind's active and you're in full possession of your health and all your faculties.

THE COLONEL TURNS UP AN ASPIRANT FOR ENLISTMENT WITH THE WAGS

While cautiously cutting across the regimental cuartel early this morning, I was suddenly shocked back to reality by a loud, booming, bellowing, familiar voice yelling "Halt! Sergeant, Halt!" Even before I could bring myself to a rather abrupt halt, I was keenly aware that the voice belonged to none other than my commanding officer, Colonel T. P. Swampwater.

As the ol' boy ambled up to me in his customary manner, I was surprised to see that a small black dog was leading him by a leash. Saluting in the manner of the typical field soldier, and after snapping back to my usual comfortable posture I looked curiously at the pup and then asked the colonel to explain his presence.

"This animal, Sergeant, is one of my best friends. It is a genuine Siamese shepherd dog."

"It looks more like a poodle to me, sir."

"Poodle, Hell, Sergeant," the ol' boy retaliated. "This dog is the finest Jap hunting jungle fighter in the world. He was sent to me express collect, by an old lady friend of mine that I met on my third hitch in the Pacific theatre."

"Indeed," I replied, wondering how such a frail creature as this hound could have possibly come all the way across the ocean.

"And what is the dog's name, sir?" I inquired.

"His name is 'Carpenter, Sergeant!"

"And why do you call him 'Carpenter', Colonel?"

"Because he does odd jobs around the house," grinned the old boy.

Not caring to indulge further on this line of questioning, I reached down to pat the pooch on the head, but no sooner was my hand in range than the 'little devil' bit into it like a "B" company man going after a piece of steak. As the sharp white fangs sank into my palm, I uttered words that were absolutely unprintable.

"Shades of Salome!" grinned the colonel. "Sergeant, you have the makings of a real field soldier. That's the best cussing I've heard since General Quagmire sat on a cactus at the battle of Desert Hollow. Have a stick of my imported chewing gum."

"No, thank you, sir!" I growled, licking my hand and glaring at the irascible 'Carpenter,' who was looking down his nose at me with languid half-shut eyes that seemed to imply that biting me was decidedly unworthy of his talents. I swore under my breath to let the mess sergeant know where he could alleviate the meat shortage.

"Yes, sir, sergeant. Carpenter here is certainly a wonderful dog. He never passes a wooded area without making a thorough reconnaissance. It's remarkable what a keen military sense he has. I've already instituted proceedings for getting him a commission in the WAGS.

"He'd do much better in the U. S. Forestry Service," I growled, still embittered by my cruel introduction.

"Not at all, sergeant, not at all," the ol' boy continued. "'Carpenter' is one of the most militarily versatile dogs I've ever known. Why only last night my wife Kathleen was saying that, 'Carpenter' kept her on needles and pins every minute because she never knew what he was going to do next. Such a valuable habit of deception combined with fire and movement would be valuable to any unit."

"Yes, sir," I feebly replied, totally aware that any further argument with his lordship and canine aide-de-camp would be futile. So as we strolled toward our spacious office I tactfully suggested that the ol' boy use his influence to get 'Carpenter' an appointment to West Point.

"An admirable idea, sergeant," beamed the colonel. "I shall see General Quagmire immediately."

After that I breathed a sigh of relief.

Discharged Soldiers To Receive Benefits

Informative Sheet Will Be Issued Each On Leaving Army

An information sheet to be issued to every soldier on discharge from the Army of the United States covering hospitalization, insurance, compensation or pensions, employment, and rehabilitation, has been received at post headquarters and is published below.

The sheet represents the government's continued interest in every soldier after separation from the service and is designed to give a brief coverage of the benefits to which he is entitled to receive upon his return to a civilian status. The information is based on the law and regulations in effect at the present time and is subject to future change.

Hospitalization: Any soldier discharged from the army for disability in line of duty is entitled to treatment at a Veterans Administration Hospital whenever treatment for that particular disability is needed.

Veterans not dishonorably discharged from the service, whether for disability in line of duty or for disability not in line of duty, may receive hospitalization under certain conditions: First, they must need hospital care as distinguished from care in a doctor's office or in their homes; second, they must be unable to pay for private hospital treatment and, third, there must be an available bed in a Government Hospital.

PRIORITY LISTED

The government takes care first of veterans with service incurred disabilities, but when existing bed capacities permit other veterans unable to pay for private hospital treatment may receive this treatment so long as beds are available. If, after discharge you should need to be in a hospital, apply to the nearest hospital of the Veterans Administration.

Insurance: You may keep your National Service Life Insurance even after you are discharged from the army provided you pay your premiums when due. Your insurance may be converted to a permanent form with the government from one year to five years after the date your policy was originally effective.

Compensation or Pensions: If the army discharges you for disability in line of duty, or if you feel you have a disability in line of duty, incurred during your military service, at discharge you may apply to the Veterans Administration Facility having a regional office nearest your residence. We will help you, or the Red Cross will help you to make such an application while you are here before you leave for home if you desire it.

Employment: The United States Employment Service maintains many branch offices throughout every state in the Union. You may contact the nearest office to your home and secure aid in procuring employment.

Rehabilitation: The Congress has recently enacted legislation authorizing the Veterans Administration to train vocationally handicapped veterans who are in need of such training and are in receipt of a pension for service incurred disabilities. Plans for this training are in process of being developed.

Colonel Johnson Appointed Post Inspector General

Lt. Colonel James R. Johnson, post inspector at Fort Benning, has been transferred in grade from the Infantry (BI) to the Inspector General's Department, and reassigned to the post's station complement as post inspector general, Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Benning, announced Monday.

Col. Johnson, a native of Marion, Ky., has been post inspector since May 11, 1942, having previously served here as police and prison officer. After attending the Quartermaster Transport School in Atlanta, he was assigned to his present duties.

A veteran of the first World War he saw action at Ct. Mihiel and in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. After the armistice he was engaged in demolition work in the war zones and was with the Army of Occupation in Luxembourg.

Col. Johnson was commissioned a second lieutenant in the reserves and later was a captain in the Kentucky National Guards and in the reserves.

Upon being called to active duty he commanded the third battalion, 149 Infantry at Camp Shelby, Miss. After attending a battalion commanders course at Benning, he returned to Shelby to take command of another battalion before being transferred to Fort Benning.

D'Artega All-Girl Orchestra To Play Post On May 21-26

Head-Line Stage And Night Club Stars Included In Show

D'Artega and his 20-girl orchestra and a supporting cast of headline stage and night club talent will be at Fort Benning May 21-26 inclusive for a series of ten performances of the USO Camp Show "Meet the Girls," Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post special service officer.

The show will be at the Main Theater Friday and Saturday for performances at 6:45 and 8:45 p. m., the second show on Saturday being for colored personnel only.

Next Monday the show will move to Theater No. 7 for shows at 7:30 p. m. and 9:30 p. m. Performances are slated for Theater No. 11 at 7 and 9 p. m., on Tuesday, and at Theater No. 4 on Wednesday at the same hours.

This is D'Artega's first all-girl band and is rated one of his most versatile. He formed it after his own orchestra, an established radio favorite, was broken up because of the draft—and after a three-month audition junket which took him into 622 cities all over the country.

The new aggregation plays light and symphonic swing; comedy production numbers, and production arrangements. D'Artega, who plays the piano, guitar, flute, accordion, and saxophone, plays none of these instruments in this band. He conducts and also does all the arranging, being one of the few band leaders so doing today.

ARRANGES FOR STARS

D'Artega broke into radio in 1935 as an arranger for Paul Whiteman, Kostelanetz, and Al Goodman. Before that he had conducted for Olsen and Johnson and Eddie Cantor on nationwide tours. In 1936, he took over the Jello summer program as a replacement band-show for Jack Benny. That success was followed by a long list of commercial radio shows including the Admiration Series; Enna Jettick Melodies; Stepping Along; Your Hit Parade; Rinso Vaudeville Theater; D'Artega Presents; Believe It Or Not. D'Artega reputedly has made more transcriptions than any other band in the business, cutting 20 per month for 500 stations throughout the country.

In between his commercial air shows, D'Artega has made personal appearances at leading hotels. He has also appeared as guest conductor with NBC, Buffalo, NYA and St. Louis Symphony orchestras. He has written several poems and the current hit "In the Blue of Evening."

D'Artega and His All-Girl Orchestra has the featured spot in "Meet the Girls" and also provides the musical background for the whole revue which is emceed by Harry Savoy.

Savoy, who toured for Camp Shows all winter, is a fine variety and nightclub comedian who works throughout the show delivering his material in sock style and keeping the whole thing moving smoothly.

Patricia Ford and Martez and Delita complete the cast of "Meet the Girls."

BALANCING FEATS

Martez and Delita, a handsome couple, are a pair of equilibrists whose balancing feats begin about where others leave off. A flashy, sure-fire act, they work with amazing ease, dwelling on hand-to-hand and head-to-head balancing done to rhumba music. Before joining Camp Shows, for whom they toured all last winter, they had played New York's Radio City Music Hall, the Roxy, State, Paramount and other leading theaters all over the country.

Patricia Ford, "the dual-voiced thrush" is featured songstress in the show. Glamorous as well as talented, she's a 20-year old, svelt, green-eyed blonde whose voice ranges from F below middle C to F above high C and who can run the song gamut from personality tunes through coloratura arias.

A network star, Patricia's been singing over the air since she was 16, beginning with her own NBC program out of Hollywood where she also did dramatic and musical comedy acting and modelling. After a year in Hollywood where she also did dramatic and musical comedy acting and modelling. After a year in Hollywood she went to Chicago where for a couple of years she was featured over WGN and where she made her initial nightclub bow. Last fall she went to New York. Since then, and until she joined Camp Shows, she has been featured over Stations WJZ and WHN on numerous sustaining and commercial programs.

In addition to her radio work, Miss Ford has played leading nightclubs and hotels including The Hurricane in New York and El Morocco in Montreal.

Sgt. Hockheiser Warrant Officer

Staff Sergeant Henry Hochheiser who has been with the 4th Battalion, First Student Training Regiment for the past two years, has recently been appointed warrant officer, junior grade.

Mister Hochheiser, a native of Gunprot, L. Is., was inducted in February 1941. Prior to entering the service he was connected with a retail hardware business on Long Island.

He has been assigned to 55th General Hospital, Camp Robinson, Ark.

Assistant PRO 1st Lieutenant

Second Lt. J. W. Myers, Jr., assistant public relations officer at post headquarters, has been promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, it is announced.

Lieutenant Myers is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Myers, Sr., of New Orleans, La. He was called to active duty in May 1942 and was assigned to the public relations office. At present he is also serving as post assistant war bond officer.

He was commissioned a reserve second lieutenant in the field artillery upon his graduation from Louisiana State University with the degree of bachelor of science in forestry.

Christian Must Keep Faith Active—Zeller

Parachute Chaplain Speaks Over CBS National Hook-Up

"The Christian must keep up his faith by practicing the means of grace, by the study and use of the 'sword of the Spirit', by prayer in communion with God, and by fellowship with others who believe that 'Jesus is the Christ and is born of God", Chaplain Frederick S. Zeller of the Parachute School declared Sunday afternoon in his sermon on "The Church of the Air", a nation-wide feature of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The broadcast emanated from Chapel No. 1 at Fort Benning and was the third and last of a series of broadcasts by Army chaplains from Army camps of the nation. It was heard locally over WRBL.

Taking his text from I John 5: 4-5, Chaplain Zeller said that no victory in life is truly gained unless it is first won in the heart, whether it is over temptation to do that which is contrary to the commandments of God or the conquering of fear or the victory of man on some great battlefield.

INNER VICTORY FIRST

"True victory always comes first in the heart and minds of man whether it is in an individual, an army, or a nation. And let us not be fooled into thinking that the victory through faith in the heart can be won through any other way but by constant, persistent watchfulness and effort on our part".

The chaplain said that the implements and means to be used in conquest of overcoming the world by faith include faith in the word of God and the practice of prayer. He termed the first the "sword of the spirit" which he likened to a soldier's weapons, and compared the second with the soldier's constant use of his tools thereby building up his faith and confidence in them. He declared that our communications system with God must be kept intact and constant if the greatest of all victories is to be won.

ACTIVE FAITH

Faith, he said, must be demonstrated in action. Just as the soldier draws upon his drilling and training when he goes into actual combat so must the Christian keep his faith alive by practice in the means of grace, study and use of the "Sword of the Spirit," prayer in communion with God, and fellowship with others who believe that Jesus is the Christ and is born of God.

The broadcast choir was directed by Miss Mary Farmer, director of Service Club No. 1, who also served as organist. The choir, composed mainly of officers and enlisted men of the Parachute School, sang with the congregation The Choral Invitatory No. 1, "God of Our Fathers" and the closing Orison.

The program also included the invocation and benediction of Chaplain Zeller and the reading of the Scriptures.

LIEUTENANT HAGER NAMED CAPTAIN

First Lieutenant Delbert C. Hager, of Mitchell, S. D., has been promoted to the rank of captain, it was announced at headquarters of the Second Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School.

Captain Hager entered service as an enlisted man April 28, 1941, and was commissioned a second lieutenant upon graduation from Officer Candidate school at Fort Benning, Feb. 27, 1942. Since that time he has been a Tactical Officer, Physical Director and Battalion Assistant Adjutant in the Second Regiment.

Lawson Flyers Smash 'Gators By 10-3 Score

Col. Albert Tosses Out First Ball To Col. Finnegan In Opener

Paced by Major Gorman's home-run with one man on, the Lawson Field Flyers softball team opened the season with a one-sided triumph over the 124th Infantry Gators 10-3 before a large crowd of spectators last Thursday night.

In impressive pre-game ceremonies, Lt. Colonel John E. Albert, commanding officer of Lawson Field, pitched the first ball to Lt. Colonel Charles Finnegan, Fort Benning Special Service Officer officially open to the first Fort Benning Softball League. The game was played at Lawson Field under the lights and brought out a large crowd of softball enthusiasts.

Except for a brief moment in the first half of the first inning, the Flyers led throughout the game. The first three men up for the Gators connected safely for the games first run and except for a great throw by centerfielder, Carlson, might have scored more. Carlson's perfect strike caught McCollough, who had doubled, attempting to score on Suttens single to center.

Pitcher Wagner struck two men out in the bottom half of the first, but made the mistake of walking Silvestro who scored on Major Gorman's long home-run to right centerfield to give the Flyers a 2-1 lead.

The Flyers counted three more times in the third on two errors a walk and two singles. Scoring two runs after two were out in the fifth inning the Gators threatened mildly. A walk and McCollough's second double followed by Suttens single produced all the Gator runs for the game.

The Flyers made four hits and a walk count for five runs in the last half of the fifth and make the final score 10-3. A walk followed by a single and three doubles ended the run making for the day. Major Gorman with a home-run and a double shared batting honors with Carlson who also had two hits for the winners. For the Gators, McCollough and Sutten were the batting stars with two hits each.

1st STR Golf Tourney Reaches Fourth Round

The Relaxation and Exercise Committee of the Second Company, First Student Training Regiment reports that great progress has been made in its campaign to get the students out for a little refreshing exercise and relaxation when day is done.

The Golf Tournament sponsored by the committee has already reached its fourth round, and has many worthy players pitted against each other for the golf championship of the Second Company. Col. Raymond C. Barlow is battling Lt. Col. Harvey Jablonsky in his half of the upper bracket; while Captains Lieben and Murphy are fighting for the lower half of the upper bracket. In the lower bracket, Capt. Hoebeke who has drawn a bye, is waiting to play the winner of the Murphy-Lieben match. Rain prevented the matches from getting into the fifth round and also spoiled many sporting outfits of the players.

Logan Bats 1000 With Three Hits; Each Team Gets Six

The mighty 53rd General Hospitals baseball team retained its league leadership by rolling up a 6-0 victory over Lawson Field. The score does not indicate the excellent ball game played by both teams. The game proved to be a pitchers duel between Battles, Lawson Field pitcher and Seaward, 53rd pitcher with each hurler giving up but six hits.

The 53rd got off to a two-run lead in the first by Logans single and the aid of two errors committed by the flyers. In the second inning, Seaward, 53rds chucker, rapped a long double to score Sullivan who had previously singled.

Another error, one of the four chalked up against Lawson Field, along with Logan's double brought in two more runs for the 53rd to run the score to 5-0. The hospital boys added one more run in the last of the fourth on Seaward's second hit of the day, again scoring Sullivan who had walked.

The big gun for the 53rd was Logan, third baseman, with three hits for three trips to the plate. Seaward, besides pitching a beautiful game by scattering the six Lewson Field hits over the seven innings, came through with two hits. Hardin and Ozanik, with two for four, led the flyers hitting attack.

The long lay-off by the 53rd had caused many to believe Lawson Field would knock the 53rd boys from the league leadership. With three regulars on furlough plus lack of enough practise, the 53rd, nevertheless, proved to be a dangerous club by taking advantage of every break and coming through with a hit when most needed. Early season games have shown the 53rd able to field a hard-hitting line-up coupled with a strong pitching staff. Pitchers Byszesky and Seaward have been exceptionally effective against enemy batters while Logan and Bristow lead the 53rd batters. The team is being coached by 1st Sergeant Walter Steuard. Second Lt. CharlesRellers is the athletic officer.

'Tigers' Run Until Bored

Dynamos Double-time 30 Mile Sans Effort

Any two men in any unit of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division who feel like double-timing for 20 or 30 miles? If so, step up, Super-Tigers, and accept the challenge of two human dynamos in the 764th Tk. Bn. (L), Cpl. Joe Martinez and Pvt. Jose Lalio.

When Martinez and Lalio get started, they just keep on running until they get bored. Not even they know how far they can run, as is indicated in the following statement by Lalio when pressed on this point:

"Oh, I don't know how far I could run," he replied, adding as an afterthought, "—all day, all night. I guess."

So that is the sort of thing any takers of the above challenge would be up against, although Lalio and Martinez are perfectly willing to settle for as little as 20 miles—which is just warming up, for them.

Consider the recent achievement of Martinez. The 764th was holding trials for the division track meet and Martinez thought he would like to take a try at it. So, in one day he entered the 440 and 880-yard runs, the 440 and 880-yard relays, the mile run and the mile relay—and he emerged with two firsts, a second and a third, and he was on one of the winning relay teams.

The only explanation of this sort of endurance is that Lalio and Martinez are Indians. Back in New Mexico, where they live, it was a poor speciman of manhood who couldn't keep going for 15 or 20 miles.

RED HOT ACTION was the order of the evening in Doughboy Stadium last Friday during the all-colored fight card. In the upper shot, Heavyweight Tim Still is lunging towards Eddie Jackson during their three-round exhibition. Below can be seen Georgia Pace, former world champ, as he throws up his guard to ward off a blow by Dynamite Daniels, 1941 national Golden Glove Winner, whom he defeated in the six-round wind-up affray.

ABILITY TO NEGOTIATE its obstacles with a minimum of effort has enabled Officer Candidate E. T. Harris, Jr., 14th Co. 2nd STR to establish a record of one minute 15 seconds for his regimental obstacle course. He is pictured clearing a three foot hurdle, one of the 13 obstacles on this 260 yard course.

Track Training Stands O. C. In Good Stead

Ex-Wake Forest Star Subs Ease For Speed On Obstacle Course

To Officer Candidate E. T. Harris, Jr., of the 14th Company, Second Student Training Regiment, goes the unique distinction of establishing a record for his regiment's obstacle course without the benefit of any particular speed afoot. Ordinarily this doesn't make sense but in this case, the facts speak for themselves.

At Wake Forest College where he was studying at the time of his induction into the Army, August 1941, Candidate Harris captained the varsity track team, competing in the high and broad jumps and the pole vault. He holds the school high jump record at six feet one inch. In spare moments he dabbled in hurdling. He also was assistant physical education instructor of freshmen and coached the frosh track team.

However he didn't possess enough speed to be included with the sprinters, a deficiency which still holds true over the STR's obstacle course. But the time he loses to the sprinters is more than made up by the effortless ease with which he negotiates the obstacles. That and a steady even pace enabled him to run the course in one minute 15 seconds, a full minute faster than the time required for qualification. The course measures some 260 yards and has 13 obstacles.

Candidate Harris is 24, married and resides in Washington, North Carolina. He studied law at Wake Forest and was a member of Gamma Eta legal fraternity. His class in OCS is to be graduated shortly.

1st STR Red Sox Lick Commandos In Practice Game

The Red Sox of Service Battalion, First Student Training Regiment, defeated the Commandos of Second Student Training Regiment 10-8 in a practice game at Gordon Field. It was the second defeat that the Commando's have suffered from the Red Sox this season. Since the Spring session has opened the Red Sox have played and won four practice games.

Capt. Joseph R. O'Connor, coach of the team, believes that with a little polishing up, it should be able to hold its own with any team when the Service League officially opens. The team is composed of former players of major and minor Negro League teams.

2nd Army Adjutant Gains His Majority

Captain Neil R. Maxey, adjutant of Headquarters, 4th Detachment Special Troops, Second Army, has been promoted to the rank of major, Col. George E. Jacobs, commanding officer, announced Wednesday. Major Baxey is a native of Mt. Sterling, Ky., and before being called to active duty in May, 1941, was professor of psychology and biology at Georgetown College, Ky.

French Officer Lauds Scouts

Accompanies Troop On Bicycle Hike

With Lt. Philippe de Montgomery of the French Army and former Parisian Scout commissioner in command of the forward echelon, 22 Fort Benning Boy Scouts of Troop 11 under the supervision of Lt. Colonel Virgil Ney, director of Boys Activities, participated in a bicycle hike in the Alabama area Sunday.

The purpose of the hike was to teach the Scouts water discipline, but at the last moment it was discovered that the food supply was delayed and the hike was undertaken also without rations.

The Scouts left Engineer Landing as the IP, crossed over the river by ferry, cycled across country, and returned to Georgia by Lawson Field Ferry. During one phase on the hike wooded areas forced the Scouts to dismount and push their mounts along a railroad cut. At the conclusion of the hike refreshments were served at the soda fountain.

Lt. de Montgomery, who saw action against the Germans in 1940 and who was awarded Great Britain's Distinguished Service Order medal, lectured to the Scouts on the customs of natives of various African countries. He was most profuse in the praise of the Benning Scout troop and commended particularly their discipline and hardiness. He lauded the Boy Scout movement as a whole and declared that if it had not been for his Scout training, he doubts that he would be alive today.

It has been Col. Ney's policy to invite officers from foreign nations visiting at Fort Benning to meet with the Scouts here for the purpose of giving them a thorough indoctrination in international relations.

CAPTAIN ELLIOTT GETS MAJORITY

Captain Edward C. Elliott, of Mayfield, Ga., has been promoted to the rank of major it was announced at headquarters of the Second Student raining Regiment of the Infantry School.

Major Elliott entered service and was commissioned a second lieutenant upon graduation from R. O. T. C. of Mississippi State College, May 1937, and served till 1939 with one year in the C.C.C.

455th C. A. Pushes Maintenance Outfit For Cusseta Crown

3rd Armored Regiment Wins Sand Hill Diamond Championship

The 10th Armored Division's Cusseta and Sand Hill league schedules close this week with virtually the only question left to be decided is whether the Maintenance Battalion can retain its title in the Cusseta league by staving off the 455th Coast Artillery nine. The 3rd Armored Regiment, last year's division champions, have already finished on top in the Sand Hill.

However, it won't make any difference where the teams finish this year, just so long as they get up among the first four in each league. The Shaughnessy playoff system such as the International League and American Association use will be in force to decide the division title.

The Mainteneers, the 455th, the 774th Tank Destroyers, and the Supply Battalion are so far out in front that there's no race for the first four spots in the Cusseta league. The first three teams play each other this week, but almost no turn of events can bring a fifth team into the playoffs.

The 423rd Field Artillery can climb to a tie for fourth in the Sand Hill league final standings, but the possibility is just a mathematical one. They would have to beat the unbeaten 3rd Armored team Saturday.

Besides the 3rd Armored, the 420th Field Artillery, the 1st Battalion of the 54th Infantry, and the 11th Armored Regiment will be the finalists.

B & C School Stresses Total Waste Elimination

Students Taught 3 Basic Steps To Get Most Out Of Foodstuff

By Pvt. Britton Tabor

Elimination of waste in every form and emphasis upon nutrition and diet in the feeding of soldiers as taught and practiced in the Fort Benning Bakers and Cooks School might well be a model for civilians and other groups and nations confronted by the problem of rationing.

Waste is anathema to the army. Particularly is that true in regard to food, much of which is being rationed both to soldiers and civilians. And while waste of food in the army is something long since in the process of being carefully eliminated, there are certain more advanced points which are taught and emphasized in the training of bakers and cooks, who will handle such things when they return to their original units.

In their hydra-headed drive against waste, three basic steps are taught to every student cook at the school. The first of these is to make proper preparations in cooking. This includes taking pains in preparing food so soldiers will eat it with gusto and enjoyment and preparing the kind of foods to suit the taste of the particular unit for which they are cooking.

RATION RETURNS

As the second step, students are taught to be especially careful in the submission of rations returns. They are taught to carefully consider week-ends and holidays and other periods during which soldiers might not eat in the mess halls. Careful calculations to prevent cooking too much food for the number of men who will eat is stressed.

The third basic step is the proper disposal of accumulated supplies. Excess foods are to be turned back to the Quartermaster Corps to prevent them from spoiling. Further, foods which do not seem to be popular in one outfit can, through the Quartermaster, be transferred to units having a taste for that particular food.

Sanitation and garbage disposal also is stressed greatly in the school. Many different types of garbage pits, each particularly adaptable to certain conditions, are built and demonstrated. The proper distance from the camp or bivouac for the location of such pits is learned, and holes are dug so deeply that animals are unable to dig up any food particles and leave them exposed for the spread of disease by flies. The bakers and cooks, like the arm as a whole, are trained to pride themselves on leaving camp areas cleaner and in a more sanitary condition than when they arrived.

NUTRITION VITAL

Nutrition, which can be defined as the use of food by the body, is a vital part of the courses in the cooking school. In collaboration with First Lt. W. R. Bergen, post food and nutrition officer, the instructors have provided charts outlining and illustrating every phase of nutrition.

A diagram shows how the body takes in the food covering every step from chewing through digestion. Another explains what food does for the body, while still another points out what food provides for the body.

The elements of nutrition, including all-important vitamins, minerals, carbohydrates, proteins and fats, are fully explained and carefully taught to every cook who comes to the school for instruction.

A balanced diet is stressed so that every mess in every company will provide well-rounded meals. Every consideration is taken so that all soldiers have all the essential foods and food elements in the right proportion. This is one reason why almost every man who enters the army gains weight despite the strenuous physical activity demanded by the training schedules.

FOODS ANALYZED

Each type of food is further analyzed for the student cooks. For example, each type of breakfast food is broken down into its component parts so the cooks will know just what the soldiers are getting when a certain kind of breakfast food is served, and then can provide, in other foods, the other needed elements.

Army bakers, likewise, are made to fully comprehend the importance of bread to the diet and the factors in break making which largely determine whether or not the soldiers' diet contains nutritious bread.

Minerals and vitamins are studied carefully. Although army specifications require that all flour used be enriched, bakers are instructed in the vitamins contained in the flour and the bread. They are familiar with vitamin B-1, so necessary for healthy nervous systems, and vitamin B-2, vital riboflavin, important for a healthy vision, and vitamin D, which prevents softness of bones.

Even water, one of the ingredients in bread, is broken down into various types and carefully studied so that a "balancing process" can be undertaken to improve the bread and nutrition alike.

HARD WATER IN BREAD

The baking school discloses that hard water is the desired type for bread baking as it strengthens and toughens the structure of the dough and contains the minerals necessary to the life and activity of the living yeast cell in the dough. Some of these minerals, important to the dough and Doughboy alike are calcium, magnesium and bicarbonate, and will pass into the body of the American soldier with the bread he eats.

Soft water, according to the baking instructors, weakens the structure of the dough. When soft water is used measures are taken to introduce minerals in other forms into the dough. For example, mineral yeast food is one method.

Alkaline water contains common salt which, in excess amounts, would retard them allowing and conditioning of the dough. To counteract this, the amount of salt in the dough must be reduced to balance the amount of salt in the alkaline water.

With courses like these at the Fort Benning school, cooks and bakers are so trained that they are eminently well qualified to feed the army, conserve food, prevent waste, keep sanitary conditions around camps and bivouacs, and otherwise do the job of keeping the soldiers' strength and health at a high level under any circumstances.

With an emphasis on nutrition and a well balanced diet, and with full knowledge of all the factors in their field, cooks and bakers go forth from the school filled with pride in the fact that their job is one of the most important in the army, and that army cooks and bakers "Never Say It Can't Be Done."

BENNING WAACS STAND INSPECTION—Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, is shown above as he inspected the 43rd Post Headquarters company of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps Sunday, on the first anniversary of the WAACS. In the rear of General Fulton is Colonel John P. Edgerly, executive officer of the post. Next in line is Lieut. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., post adjutant. Prior to the inspection, 2,000 troops of the army service forces and reception center at Benning paraded before the two companies of WAACS stationed on the post. General Fulton, Capt. Evelyn Rothrock, commanding officer of the 43rd Post Headquarters company of WAACS, and Lieut. Eleanor Wildes, commanding officer of the 84th Post Headquarters, reviewed the soldiers as they passed before almost 300 WAACS, who have been on duty at Benning since March 5.

Lieut. Col. Clarence A. Will, director of training, and Lieut. O. K. Marquardt, aide to General Fulton, were other members of the inspecting unit. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

Memory of Nazi Concentration Camp Stirs OC To Hard Work

Feld Spent 4 Months In Dachau; Relates Harrowing Experiences

Most candidates in Officer Candidate School have pretty good reasons for wanting to get those gold bars and put the talents they signify to use on the battlefield, but few have more personal incentive for such distinction than OC Siegfried Feld of the 1st Company, Second Student Training Regiment.

Feld has a few remembrances such as four months in a Nazi concentration camp, several more months in a German labor battalion, and many privations and tortures in the meantime, to spur him on in his war-time duties.

The date March 12, 1938, is burned deep in his memory. That was the date the Germans marched into Vienna, where his family were prosperous merchants. That was also the day 600 of his faith were rounded up by the Gestapo and sent to the infamous concentration camp at Dachau.

LIKE VERMIN

The trip to Dachau was a horror-filled experience. They were stuffed like vermin into cattle cars without food or water or even the simplest sanitary facilities. It took four days. A total of 49 died within 24 hours.

At Dachau the prisoners, not charged with any crimes except their birth-blood, were forced to do the hardest types of physical labor on a diet of a quart of soup and three-quarters of a pound of bread a day. Feld dropped from 235 to 165 pounds.

After four months there he was transferred to a labor battalion building a new camp at Buchenwalde, Germany. For six weeks the prisoners didn't receive a drop of water. For minor infractions of the rules the punishment was 25 lashes, or hanging suspended several feet off the ground with both hands stretched sideways and tied to a tree. Feld tasted this medicine several times.

MENTAL TORTURE

On Nov. 1, 1938, the day that German Ambassador Von Rath was killed in Paris by a Polish patriot, all of the Jews in the camp were called to attention facing a machine gun squad, and told that they would be shot in reprisal in several hours.

They stood before that wall for 24 hours, when they were finally released.

The next peril was a typhus epidemic which swept the camp. The hospital was so overloaded that Jews were not permitted entrance, and they suffered in silence in their rude cells.

Finally after much negotiation and confiscation of all his property, Feld was released after 11 months of internment, and together with his family fled to Havana, Cuba, and thence to New York where he entered the Army in February of 1942.

After all these trials and tribulations, one wouldn't think that OC Feld would find the tough OC course very difficult, but he hopes so vigorously for a crack back at his tormentors that he is under the same if not a greater strain than his fellow candidates.

When the German armies invaded Paris in the war of 1870-71 they used a specially devised Krupp gun against the free balloons in which the French sent mail out of the city. These might be considered the prototype of the anti-aircraft gun.

'Tiger Jump' In Repertoire Of Bugle Corps

New Song Conceived By Capt. Bickford Approved by Newgarden

Bandmaster John McGorry raised his baton, and the drum and bugle corps of the 54th Armored Infantry Regiment, 10th Armored Division, got set to play. Then, from this usually dignified group of musicians, there came sounds that seemed—it couldn't be, but, yes, it was—like jive. What had got into the band to give forth in this manner, especially when it was in the process of being reviewed by the Division Commander, Maj.-Gen. Paul W. Newgarden?

This was definitely hot music. Nothing like it had ever been heard before in the ranks of any drum and bugle corps. Now Pvt. Frederick Carroll was stepping forward, flourishing his bugle, and Pfc. James Walsh was raising his drumsticks for the torrid climax. Carroll placed his bugle to his lips—and it could have been Harry James himself. And Walsh was really in the groove, too. Then the tempo slowed, the team of Carroll and Walsh resumed their proper places in the ranks, and the jam session was over.

General Newgarden walked over and addressed the corps.

"That was very good," he said. "What is it you call it—'The Tiger Jump'? I like it, and I want to say that you have a very fine band here. You are a very valuable unit to have in your regiment."

The bandmaster and the corps as a whole breathed a sigh of relief. The "Tiger Jump," conceived by Capt. Franklin A. Bickford and developed over a period of three-and-one-half weeks while the unit was at Tiger Camp, had been a success. It would now definitely take its place in the repertoire of the 54th's drum and bugle corps.

Sun Helmet Now Authorized Head Gear In 4th S. C.

The fiber, cloth-covered sun helmet, is now authorized for wear during the hot summer months by all personnel of the Fourth Service Command, according to word received at post headquarters.

The service cap (with visor) is also authorized for wear in the Service Command.

However, the headgear for all formations will be prescribed by the commanding officers of the several units and in no case is there to be a lack of uniformity of wear in any formation. Unit commanders are not authorized to prescribe the wearing of any headgear not issued, it was added.

Lt. McAllister Made Captain

The promotion of 1st Lt. Albert J. McAllister, club officer of the Officers' Club, to the rank of captain, has been announced by the Assistant Commandant of the Infantry School, Brig. Gen. George C. Weems.

Capt. McAllister, formerly the executive manager of the Windermeer hotel, Chicago, was inducted into the service in June 1941. He had his basic training at Camp Roberts, Cal., and was commissioned a 2nd lieutenant here at Fort Benning in May 1942. He was commissioned as 1st lieutenant in August 1942.

His home is in Ithaca, N. Y., where he attended Cornell University.

Provost Marshal Clarifies Action For Blackouts

Seeking to clarify any misunderstanding aobut blackout signals, Major Willie D. Veal, Fort Benning provost marshal reiterated previous air raid instructions in a statement today.

"First," said the major, "everyone should understand that three different signals may be given during an air raid practice blackout. These are the blue, red, and all clear."

At the first blue signal the major explains, all residential lights go out and stay out until an "all clear" command is heard. Persons should not be confused by intermediate alarms. During this blue period traffic may continue with dim lights and at reduced speeds.

Major Veal pointed out that on the second red signal, which is a wavering siren wail in contrast to the steady tempo of the first or blue alarm, all remaining lights go out and all traffic ceases. Following this red signal, which lasts until danger abates, the blue signal may be repeated. In which case, traffic again begins to move and some essential lights go back on. The major stresses that all residential areas must remain blacked out until the "all clear" a verbal signal, is given.

The Norris City, Ill., terminal of the "Big Inch" oil pipeline dispatches an average of nearly 2,100 railroad tank cars a day on a single track line, or an average of a 75-car train every 52 minutes.

OC Learns Many Tricks On West Indies Island

This is a very sad story—with, we hope, a happy ending.

It is about an officer candidate named Richard Immel who has learned some very useful things in the Army, such as for instance, toting his laundry around on his head. But if Candidate Immel gets his gold bars he'll have to forget about such acquired achievements, for whoever saw a shavetail carrying his laundry about on his head?

Candidate Immel is in the 9th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment. That's for the record. After completing his basic training he was sent to an island in the West Indies group—he won't say what island. Anyway it must have been quite something. And the time he had while there must have been quite something too.

So . . . after 13 months of romance and Spanish senoritas, Candidate Immel had to come back to the States to go to OCS. Apparently not a minute too soon, for Candidate Immel was fast going native.

The native gals had not only taught Immel how to carry bundles on his head, but also taught him their stories and songs and their undulating dances. On the other hand the Americans taught the natives a few things too, like using tooth paste instead of cocoanut husk to clean their teeth, the American square dance, and songs like "Home on the Range."

For entertainment there were two movie houses, fishing and swimming. And then those all-night native dances enlivened by native kickaboo juice and lizard stew. Candidate Immel went for the dancing and the joy juice, but drew the line at lizard stew.

After all this the best cure the Army could offer Immel was a quiet three months at OCS. But in spite of that Candidate Immel still misses his native laundry women, Spanish senoritas and castenets.

Wild-Eyed Shock Troops Assault 1st STR Area

Lunch-bound basics of the 2nd Battalion, 1st Student Training Regiment, started to look for cover the other day when 200 wild-eyed "shock troops" descended on the area.

It looked as if the "Attack on a Village" problem has been moved there. Actually, the "assault" was just basics of the 12th Company blowing off steam, under the zany direction of Lt. King (Kong) Cox, former railroad engineer.

Sopping wet, faces camouflaged and raincoats mud-red after a morning spent in platoon combat firing in a heavy rain, the company at noon, spilled out of their vans and started running for barracks and mess-halls.

Cox, seeing here a splendid chance to sharpen up his command voice for the village fighting problem, placed himself in the center of this screeching mob and began waving his arms and shouting orders in the rain:

"Those three men—search that mess-hall for snipers!"

"Second squad — assault the latrine!"

"Any questions? Move out!"

"Sergeant squad leader number 3: Send your BAR to the P-X and bring me a coke!"

"Don't bunch up—you men!"

"Follow me—let's get 'em!"

Although very few of his hungry colleagues took time to follow leader Cox's commands and energetic arm and hand signals, his appearance was so terrible and his voice so stentorian that it's said that 10 cooks ran for their cleavers and three company commanders ordered their orderly rooms blockaded against invasion.

French OC Escapes Onrushing Nazi Mass

Conein In 9th French Army; Almost Entire Unit Captured In 1940

Entering the French Ninth Army in early 1940, fighting the German Panzer Divisions in Belgium, and retreating across the entire country of France after the rout of the Ninth Army, are only a few of the World War II experiences of Officer Candidate Lucien E. Conein, a member of the Seventh Company in the Third Student Training Regiment here in the Infantry School.

Candidate Conein was born in France soon after the first World War, and came to the United States in 1925 to attend American schools in Kansas City, Missouri. He remained in this country until 1939 as a French citizen studying. When the war began in September, Conein returned to his native France to enter the army. He joined an anti-tank artillery regiment, and almost immediately moved up to the front.

LAST 10 DAYS

Candidate Conein was in the Ninth Army when the German Panzer units first attacked the French on the Belgian frontier. The battle between the French and Germans lasted about ten days, resulting in the complete defeat of the French Ninth Army. The troops were almost entirely taken as war prisoners, with the exception of a small number who were able to escape into France before the Germans made their final drive.

With two other French soldiers, Conein slowly managed to get back to Paris on June 13, just one day before the Germans arrived. Disguised as a Red Cross worker, he escaped the German search for French soldiers in Paris, and made his way to the Spanish frontier when the French capital became too infested with German officials and soldiers. Here, on the Spanish border, misfortune overtook him and he was captured after eluding the Germans for nearly two months.

WAS PRISONER

For seven months he remained a war prisoner in Savoy, France—before finally escaping from the German concentration camp. Conein asserts that those German camps are all that propaganda reports—plenty of rigid discipline and deprivations.

After escaping, Conein slowly made his way back down to the Spanish border, and then into Spain. He boarded a ship in Valencia, although he was not sure of its destination. The immediate objective was to get off the European continent. Conein was sidetracked into Algiers, Casablanca, Martinique, and then in the Virgin Islands.

He finally reached the United States in June, 1941—after several weeks of travel in Africa and on the high seas. Conein acquired 12,500 francs in France by stealing gasoline from the Nazis, and selling it to the French civilians. It was this money that aided him in his long escape. He also made frequent use of false passports and papers which he stole to make his travel less dangerous.

JOINS U. S. ARMY

Three months after returning to the United States, Candidate Conein volunteered under the selective service and joined the army as a French citizen. It was only recently that he acquired his final papers making him an American citizen. Serving in the field artillery, Conein has had service in Hawaii, and it was from this American island that he returned recently to attend Officers Candidate School here at Fort Benning.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

Talk of late has been of "the man behind the guns." The girl behind the man behind the gun, too, deserves a bit of attention. Filling in on jobs to help ease the manpower situation is quite an undertaking. Even though working, every girl still wishes to be attractive and appropriately dressed. The Fashion Shop on the second floor of J. A. KIRVEN CO. is prepared and stocked with the latest fashions to cater to a working girl's "lighter moments." Dressy sheers, perky piques, and light weight crepes and shantungs, which are a blessing to those of us living in the south during the torrid summer, are but a few of the fine summer materials which are featured in dresses of innumerable designs. The extremely chic and cool low necklings are especially novel in many of these short or three quarter sleeve dresses. As can be expected with any and all merchandise at Kirven's, the quality and fit are excellent. Furthermore, values could not be better. In times like these, when the dollar must be spent with the thought in mind of frugality and wise buying, it is especially appropriate that you should view the smart creations in this shop.

Now that swimming is once more in season—and why shouldn't it be with all of this heat?—why there are many of us who must buy a new swimming suit. The ever-popular Jantzen suits displayed on the balcony section at KIRALFY'S are just the thing to wear for swimming throughout the summer in the pool. A very few Gantner lastex suits are still in this display. Many of the suits are one or two-piece dressmaker or swimming styles in either solid colors or prints. Comfortable under-panties in these suits give the swimmer complete freedom of movement and plenty of chance to "kick" right on down the length of the pool. In these selections are long-waisted styles for tall swimmers. In any case, whatever your favorite colors or whatever be your size, chances are that Kiralfy's has just what you want in stock. Even if you don't swim, you'll enjoy wearing one of these sutis around the backyard to soak up some of this Georgia sun. Now that the summer season is here and many Army wives are out shopping for new swim suits, I suggest you get an early looksee at this fine offering.

You've heard much chatter about women's dresses and coats so now let's discuss some smart things to wear under these garments. The Miss Swank slips displayed by KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC., are renowned for their appropriate slogan "Straight plus bias"; thus, they never slip up or twist in discomforting discords. The satin or crepe slips are made in white, black, "cameo." off-white shades. One clever idea is a slip with a white top and a black shirt. Another especially popular slip in this array is crepe trimmed with dainty Swiss eyelet embroidery. Brief panties fashioned of Pechglo material with a touch of lace on the bottom make a nice accompaniment for any of the slips I've mentioned. Pechglo material is especially wearable as it is knitted and does not run. Night gowns made of this material in spray blue, French blue, honey pink or white shades with lace trim or white self trim are ideal for wear these hot summer nights. For these hot days when we are ever so anxious to slip on a dress that is dainty and cool, it becomes ever so important to have cool, light underthings which will suitably help you keep ventilated.

Real honest-to-goodness he-men are enjoying toiletries made especially for them now that they realize they'll not be called sissies if they use something more than plain soap and water. The Seaforth line of toiletries carried by the CHANCELLOR CO., is one of the most satisfactory sellers of its type. Talcum powders, hair dressings, soap, colognes may be had in attractive kits or may be bought separately. One of the most popular, "Commando Kit" by name, contains shaving lotion, hair dressing, and cologne. If so desired, these selections may be made. There is not a trace of flower garden odeur about any of these toiletries; just a clean, vibrant, fresh scent especially suitable for any man. Another good value, also packed in a compact carried, is the "Clansman," also made by Seaforth. This kit contains three pieces selected from hair dressing, soap, cologne or talcum powder. A bit more expensive, but equally attractive are the larger sets which contain a sturdy shaving mug, soap and a choice of four items. Whichever set the man in your life favors, rest assured he'll like one of these nifty kits. They're especially handy when traveling and, in this day and age, many of us are doing a lot of traveling. So, if your husband or beau lacks such a kit, take a look at the selection now available at Chancellor's.

Going . . . Going . . . Gone . . . can be appropriately applied to play shoes, if you've not yet purchased what you will need this year, I suggest you visit MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY and select from their very complete stock before it is too late. You'll find wearing comfortable and attractive play shoes every chance you get will not only save a great deal of wear and tear on your dress shoes, but the change will keep your feet cool and relieve the monotony of constantly wearing high heels. The substantially-made Joyce, Daniel Green, Easy-Goers, and Penaljo play shoes displayed by Miller-Taylor will enable you to pick your style shoes and have them correctly fitted to guarantee comfort. To back up the word of your experienced salesman, you'll have the X-ray machine to check on the proper fit. Browns, Navy blues, blacks, reds, greens in either fabric or leather are featured in this fine selection of play shoes. Authentic sandals, ties or step-in styles with flat heels or wedgie styles can be worn with ease for shopping, walking, golfing—or, for that matter, for housework. Next time you're in town, stop into the shoe shop and hope there is a pair of play shoes left in your size.

Perky cotton dresses for summer wear are attractively made and reasonably priced, you'll discover when you shop at MONTGOMERY WARD CO. White pique dresses, flowered dimity, checked gingham, shantung and broadcloth dresses, all ideal for either housework or for wear while shopping these short afternoons, are fashioned in comfortable and smart styles. Many have gathered skirts, similar to the dirndl style. Others have shirtwaist tops, princess styles, jacket and skirt styles. The coming of hot weather dictates that we wear cool, comfortable frocks. However, it is ever so important to buy lightweight dresses which are well made and will hold their form. Nothing is so distressing than to have the starch melt right out of your light dresses and have them lose their form completely. To guard against such embarassment, it's most important to select well tailored summer dresses which, though they tend to wilt in the sun, will still maintain a tailored look. For such merchandise, drop into Montgomery Ward's and make a selection.

MAJOR GENERAL LEVEN C. ALLEN, Infantry School commandant at Ft. Benning, chats informally with soon-to-be Infantry second lieutenants prior to graduation and commissioning exercises at the great Army school. Picturing democracy as it works in the Army, the photo shows enlisted men who completed a special officer candidate course about to enter the once unattainable ranks of officer leaders, and reveals a high-ranking general officer mingling with men of the line. CAPT. CAFFERY WINS 10 A. D. TENNIS TITLE

Capt. Clegg Caffery of the 11th Armored Regiment won the 10th Armored Division officers' tennis tournament Sunday afternoon by defeating Capt. Julius L. Willson of the 90th Recons in straight sets, 6-3, 6-2.

Capt. Caffery reached the finals when Capt. Samuel Keats of Supply Battalion defaulted to go on leave. Capt. Willson beat Lt. Col. Henry R. Hester of Combat Command B in the other semi-final match, 6-0, 6-3.

A recent order of the War Department permits non-commissioned officers to retain their grades while attending Army Specialized advanced training courses.

Unusual Occupations Pop Up in 1st Regiment Unit

Students of 19th Company, First Student Training Regiment, prior to entering the Army had some unusual occupations, and today are becoming skilled motor mechanics. The following are a few of the rather rare heard of means of earning the "Greenbacks."

Corporal Fred Smith was a "horse killer" for a Zoo Abattoir. Strange as it may seem he supplied juicy horse steaks for the carnivorous animals. The horses butchered were those retired from the plow.

From the ranchlands of Texas comes Pfc. Major Mashburn the man of "Fair Ribbons." He traveled about the country to County and State Fairs to exhibit Blue Bred Cattle.

Fire, the enemy of the timberlands, was thwarted in many instances by the watchful eyes of Pfc. John Bulkn, a forest service tower operator. He has spent a number of years in the deep North woods of Minnesota rendering his services both as a guide and forest ranger.

Out of the saddle is Pfc. Leon Arthur a former rodeo contestant. Touring the west he entered many a rodeo show to the thrill of the audience and a demonstration of his skilled horsemanship. Horses so wild and stubborant he rode with the greatest of ease.

The firing of small arms at low flying enemy planes forces them to keep above the range of such weapons thus impairing the efficacy of the aerial attack.

When a flare is dropped at night, personnel should remain quite motionless until it has burned itself out.

Chinese Officer Explodes Jap Invincibility Theory

Nips, However, Are Tough, Hard-Bitten, Well-Trained, Ruthless

The Infantry School, as on the campus of any other center of learning, sees many interesting and intent students going about their business. None, however, can better qualify for the top honors of sincerity and gentlemanliness than First Student Training Regiment's Captain E-Tsung Yeh. Capt. Yeh is a smilingly familiar figure who, despite his genial demeanor, packs 10 years of army life, two wounds, and innumerable major engagements into his career.

To sit down and while away a few pleasant hours with the Captain, is to spend a few fleeting hours scanning through the greatest of all text books—life. While Capt. Yeh speaks of the rape of Nanking, his days in Central Military Academy, the months as a private in the army of his "Fatherland," the historic moments of Hankow, his great regard for the work of Chiang Kai Shek, then the greatest of the cause for which so many Chinese have already sacrified their lives becomes apparent. It becomes apparent that never will these people of Captain Yeh's army submit to the will of the Rising Sun of Japan. They might die, yes, but surrender, never.

ANECDOTES

Special little anecdotes dot the memory of Capt. Yeh. The story of the "Chei" or small sword which each graduate of the Central Military Academy is given, and upon which is inscribed "Victory or Death" is typical. The little "Chei" means that no man who carries the weapon with him may ever be taken prisoner. He may fight to the last man, he may die by being overwhelmed, he may suffer a thousand wounds, but captured, never. To date there is no record of the "Chei" ever having been discredited. It's record is and will continue to be, unblemished.

Discounting the invincibility of the Jap fighting man, Capt. Yeh has his favorite story. He recounts the time when his platoon, well hidden in the bushes, bided their moment until a large detail of bayonet-carrying Japs rushed forward to within a few feet of their hidden positions. Suddenly, upon a given signal, Capt. Yeh and his men leaped to their feet yelling, in the best of hastily memorized Nipponese, "Surrender — you're surrounded—we'll treat you better than your own officers do." And the much heralded sons of heaven did surrender.

QUESTIONS JAP CAPTIVES

Later it was Capt. Yeh's duty to question the prisoners. One typical ex-fighting man from the ranks of Hirohito's best, happened to be a second class banker from Tokio, a man who had been drafted into the ranks by the War Lords. He was very vehement in his assurance that the average soldier in the Japanese army is not too keen about war; he much prefers peace. However, Capt. Yeh always stresses the point that the Japanese soldier is tough. He is a hard bitten, well trained, ruthless fighter—a fighter who blindly obeys the orders of his officers.

Capt. Yeh tells with pride of the love his men have developed for their "potato-masher" hand grenade; how during the heaviest of fighting they have crept through a wall of fire to toss grenades, in beautifully aimed arches, into the nests of a machine gun crew. But such deeds as these go unheralded for, since the beginning of the present Japanese-Chinese conflict, such are the things to which the soldiers of China have dedicated their lives.

Major Anderson Completes 25 Years Service

Veteran Nurse Feted By Associates; Col. Noyes Lauds Work

BY MYRTLE JOINES

A hugh birthday cake with 25 lighted red, white and blue candles brought to Major Ruth Anderson's place at the anniversary luncheon climaxed a celebration that had been "in the making" for more than a month, to honor Major Anderson's promotion and 25 years service as an Army nurse, at the Station Hospital recently.

This cake was fittingly decorated with white as a background for American Army shields; red, white and blue buttons; and on top under the wings of a golden eagle in flight the words "Congratulations on 25 years Service," written in blue on the white background.

The celebration was a complete surprise to "Miss Anderson" as she prefers to be called saying, "I can't get accustomed to being called 'Major Anderson'."

SPECIAL GUESTS

The luncheon table had for its central decoration a low bowl of red roses and white daisies. At each end of the table were bowls of pansies and jasmine. These flowers were furnished by the nurses as a special tribute to Major Anderson.

Colonel Noyes acting as master of ceremonies said of Miss Anderson, "This celebration in honor of your having served 25 years in the Army Nurse Corps, of the U. S. Army is a small token for your efficiency, loyalty and trustworthiness."

NURSE REPLIES

"If I have made a success here at Benning and in my Army career it is because of the complete confidence and understanding of all my associates, especially here at Benning," Miss Anderson said.

Major Wallace M. Johnson, Chief of Dietetics; Master Sergeant W. C. Collifer; mess sergeant at the Station Hospital since it was built; and Staff Sergeant Harold C. Manis, mess sergeant of C-5, planned the details of the luncheon.

Music during the luncheon was furnished by Sergeant Natale Pintello, of the Medical Detachment and his accordion.

Ceiling Price On Summer Uniforms Set

Move Brings General Reduction Of Cost To Army Personnel

Ceiling prices on ready-made summer army uniforms at the retail level became effective Saturday, following a schedule of dollars and cents charged announced by John A. Miller, Jr., district OPA price officer in Columbus.

The effect of the new regulation, he said, is to bring about a general reduction of prices. The amount of savings, however, will vary among sellers, for prior to Saturday's regulation, individual March, 1942, prices of each seller was frozen under the general maximum price regulation.

No retailer can charge more than $16.13 for a khaki or white summer suit made from cotton twill or gabardine two-ply warp and filling, combed yarns, eight ounces or heavier per square yard, sanforized. Coats alone are priced at $11.25 and pants, at $4.88.

PALM BEACHES

"Palm Beach" cloth khaki or white summer suits may be sold for no more than $19.95, while coats and pants sell separately for $14.65 and $5.30 respectively. Prices on these uniforms include regulation metal coat buttons.

Prices include alterations of trouser waistband and trouser and sleeve bottoms. An additional maximum charge of $1 per set may be made for regulation metal coat buttons for cotton twill, duck or gabardine uniforms if requested by the purchaser.

DETAILS GIVEN

New top prices apply only where retailers buy at the maximum dollars and cents prices provided for their suppliers. Since retailers are permitted only a stated mark-up, retail ceilings must be lower than the dollar and cents prices stated in the new regulation when retailers purchase at less than the ceilings of their suppliers. Uniforms labeled "Palm Beach," however have a single retail price.

Although the regulation took effect May 15, in order to allow retailers to move their present stock of uniforms without hardship, they are given until June 4 to sell at old prices uniforms received prior to May 10.

O. C. Now Trains On Terrain He Helped Ft. Benning Acquire

Tadlock Played Role In Securing 40,000 Acres For Reservation

A young man who bossed over 400 employees of the U. S. Department of Justice is now undergoing training and examination in the Second Company Third Student Training Regiment, to determine if he can boss a platoon of Infantrymen.

Charles Guy Tadlock, 31, of Chevy Chase, Md., headed the administrative section of the Lands Division of the Justice Department, where he played a considerable part in the acquisition of millions of acres of land for military purposes, including 40,000 acres of Fort Benning's vast area. His duties included appearances before committees of Congress to justify expenditures for the purchase of land for military cantonments, air fields, training areas, etc., as well as supervision of the Division's administrative personnel.

REJECTS COMMISSION

General McNair was not speaking of Tadlock when he said that a majority of Army volunteers apparently preferred less hazardous branches of the service. Married, father of a two year old boy, Tadlock rejected proferred commissions in both the Army and Navy to enlist as a volunteer officer candidate with infantry his first choice.

"If I'm officer material, the Infantry School will find it out. I wouldn't feel quite right as an officer unless experts said I was qualified," he said.

In World War I the Army ration was considered the amount of food necessary for subsistence of one man per day, disregarding vitamin and calorie content.

America has seen wars every generation, but has learned that efficiency in the field is directly coherent to how the soldier is fed, today with dieticians and doctors comprising our Army as technicians, the American Doughboys' diet is a balanced one. Menus are prepared beforehand according to nutritional content to evaluate the need of the body under strenuous fatigue. At all times the individuals likes and dislikes are viewed in drawing up the menu in "Blue Print Form."

Sitting into First Student Training Regiment we have officers and enlisted men representing every state and Infantry Unit, from the wind-swept shores of New England to the sunny valleys of California. It is a great task indeed to form the operation of the mess halls in an efficient manner. This is an easy one for First Student Training Regiment since the policy now in use had been common since the activation of the training units. A close check is kept on the number of men messing daily at meal times and food is prepared accordingly. The rations left over are turned back to Regimental Ration Breakdown Depot for disposition after inventories.

Blue Plate Meal

Mess personnel, cooks, and butchers are instructed in preparation and consecration of food. Direct interest being taken to appease the soldiers' appetite. The method of feeding being the "Blue Plate Meal," whereby a man is given his share on a cafeteria tray or platter, seconds being allowed after the company is fed.

Should food be left over it is put to full consumption in a variegated dish. For instance bacon, that is used in garnishing a salad consisting of lettuce, tomato and mayonnaise. Probably the bread that was on the table wasn't consumed today, appeared the next day as a dessert in form of bread pudding. Ham from the noon meal went to the refrigerator instead of the refuse barrel, to come to light again as piping hot croquets, or a ham loaf capped with tomato sauce. This transformation to another appetizing morsel is worked by cooks using their ingenuity and utmost skill.

Mess officers of each battalion inspect kitchens, tasting food and advising the cooks of correct preparation. The refuse cans are given a routine check to determine the amount and type of food found in excess corrective measures being taken to stop repetition.

Many high ranking officers upon leaving First Regiment have complimented greatly the technique of mess personnel and the efficiency in which the mess halls are operated.

Col. Moore Recommends Judo For Spring Fever

Spring is the time of year when a soldier's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of furlough and that little girl he left behind, and the time when a G. I. just wants to get off somewhere and take a nice long rest (that is, if he ain't buckin).

Maybe last of the year before will this might have been possible, but Lieut. Col. Ellis Moore of the Fourth Battalion, First Student Training Regiment, seems to have a slightly different idea about the matter from the looks of the 4th Battalion Parade Ground at 1400 each day. It is Col. Moore's opinion that a course in physical command training will not only cure Johnnie Doughboy of spring fever but, what is more important it will help him to give the best possible account of himself in actual combat.

The training takes place each day except Saturday and Sunday at 1415 and continues for one hour. The first 20 minutes of the period is devoted to close order drill; followed by 20 minutes of the period calisthenics, the remaining 20 minutes is spent practicing "judo" under the direction of Lt. R. C. Cook.

An unusual feature of this instruction is that the cadre of the Fourth Battalion, First Student Training Regiment, spring fever and all are taking to the Judo instruction like ducks to water. While the G. I.s concerned should be showing symptoms of spring fever at this time of year they actually seem to be enjoying this business of learning the best way to break Hitler's neck.

Officer Saving 'Line' For Jap Emperor's Neck

"The last time I lay a line," says Ed Hayes, 2nd lieutenant, student at the 5th Company, Communication School, "it will be around Hirohito's neck."

That such an opportunity may come soon seems more likely as another class begins training with wire and radio at the Infantry School this week, for many of the officer-students have revenge in their hearts. Lt. Hayes, for instance, was in Hawaii when the Japs attacked.

"Our grounds were only machine-gunned by the planes, but in Honolulu I had some full time work fixing the destroyed wire communications." Hayes says, "I'm still carrying a piece of that wire—it's for Joe Hirohito himself."

The new Communication Class also contains a number of marines, in addition to the regular quota of top-notch Infantry Communications men. The enrollment covers officers from posts in at least 25 states.

Ruhr valley. Indications are that the unrest noted in Holland is spreading through other conquered territories—but whether the time is yet ripe for really effective uprisings is doubtful, and probably the governments-in-exile will discourage them until the time is ripe.

HERE AT HOME, a complete schedule for retail ceilings on beef, veal, lamp and mutton became effective on Monday.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, announced that the miners would not be represented before War Labor Board meetings, but finally he entered into another truce in the bitter soft coal wage dispute, and miners agreed to continue working under "the existing retroactive extension agreement until midnight, May 31."

Administration forces appeared on the way to scuttle the Ruml plan to "skip-a-year" and put taxpayers on a current payment basis. President Roosevelt has come out pretty strongly in favor of some sort of modified plan, but hinted he would veto any legislation providing skipping most of a tax year.

Glamour boys in service?

"It's really tough on movie actors," she said. "You know how soldiers feel when they see a man in civilian clothes. They either pity him because he's 4-F or scorn him because he isn't in service. It's a hard decision for an actor to make—to go in service as he would like to or to stay at home and turn out the high grade pictures the soldiers want to see. If the army doesn't furlough some of our male stars to make a picture now and then, actresses will be forced to make love on the screen to Lionel Barrymore."

Miss Joyce, who recently completed "Thumbs Up" for Republic, left for Los Angeles Monday and plans to do play with Tom Moore before making her next picture for 20th Century.

The 16th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment finished its M-1 firing this past week with better than average results. More than 75 per cent qualified as sharpshooter or better, which alone won the praise of the instructors. Out of the 146 officers firing 143 qualified. Instructors in charge of this group expressed their congratulations and stated that these averages were very good.

Of the large group, 48 made expert and 61 making sharpshooter. The highest score was made by Lt. Richard Webb who fired 192 out of a possible 210. Close behind came Capt. C. S. Underwood with a score of 191. Capt. H. O. Kester and Lt. Bert Komarow tied for third place with a score of 190.

tests and perfect the training for American paratroops.

TOUGH COURSE

The parachute course at Fort Benning is as tough as the product the rugged test graduates. An intensive training program covering four weeks qaluifies the soldiers as jumpers. But then, only a fraction of the training is completed.

As the soldiers qualify and win their "wings"—and the privilege of wearing the distinctive 10-inch boot—each must continue the tactical training with his own unit which moulds and cements these tough soldiers into compact fighting units.

Every soldier in the paratroops is a volunteer. If you were to ask a group, individually, why they joined this branch of the Infantry, one might get as many varied reasons as there are men. However, the most popular reason for joining the paratroops is a longing for excitement and a desire to get into the thick of the fight first.

March 29, 1941, he left Fort Benning to command the Third Armored division to be organized at Camp Polk, La.

Scribe Explains Medical Insignia

Derived From Staff Of God of Medicine

BY MAJ. F. I. CIOFALO

As far back as biblical times the snake has been used as a symbol of the medical profession. Presumably because of the theory that snakes regained renewed life in metamorphosis, and represented the duties performed by doctors in restoring their patients to good health.

Tamed snakes were used in the Temples of Aesculapius for the psychic effect and also to lick wounds of the patients. Aesculapius the Grecian God of Medicine is always represented as carrying a heavy rough staff with a simple serpent entwined about it, the staff for walking and the serpent as a symbol of medical knowledge of healing powers.

The winged caduceus used today as the emblem of the medical profession is a light wand with a pair of wings at the top, havin two snakes entwined about the wand. It was originally the wand of Mercury, messenger of the Gods, and later symbolized the peaceful conduction of business—the mercantile world as opposed to the military.

A somewhat similar form of this caduceus was also used as the staff of Hermes, who was God of many things, such as the wind and air, as well as robbers, thieves, and traitors, and guide of souls to Hades. It is believed that the Caduceus of Hermes came to symbolize the medical profession.

The origination of the winged Caduceus, which has no legendary association with medicine came to represent the profession, is unknown. Certain medical printers used it as part of their frontispiece to show the unity between medicine and letters as indicated by two entwined snakes.

From this it was probably misrepresented as being an emblem of medicine and later incorporated on the insignia of the U. S. Army Medical Corps, its misuse being practically assured by then on. No matter how widespread its use, however the winged Caduceus with two entwined snakes is actually not a symbol of the Medical profession. The only true emblem is the rough Staff with a simple Serpent, the staff of Auscalapius, God of Medicine.

V-Mail Letter Forms Available At Post Office

V-mail letter forms now are available at the post office at Fort Benning for free distribution, as well as at all army post offices, it was announced today in a notice sent to Fort Benning officials from Washington.

These forms are intended, it was emphasized, only for correspondence with military personnel and civilians overseas who receive mail through an OPA or Navy post office. V-mail letters may be dispatched free of postage by all personnel entitled to the free mailing privileges.

V-mail provides the most rapid means of communication offered by the United States post office. It also affects a reduction of approximately 98 per cent in the volume and weight of first class mail to be transported overseas.

According to a notice from the Post Office Department, if all first class military mail sent overseas during February, 1943, had been V-mail, an additional 1,568 tons of food, weapons, ammunition and other war material could have been shipped.

The New York City Council voted May 11 to name the new Idlewild airport in Queens the "Major General Alexander E. Anderson Airport" in tribute to the late Major General who served in the last war as a commanding officer of the old 69th Regiment. The action must be approved by Mayor Fiorello La Guardia.

During wartime, in place of the good conduct medal, the army issues a bar of scarlet ribbon with a white vertical stripe at each end. This may be awarded by a commanding officer to any man who has shown "exemplary behavior, efficiency and fidelity" for completion of three years service on or after August 27, 1940, or one year (on or after Dec. 7, 1941) of continuous active military service during war time.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. O. J. REMINGTON

TERRIFIC FLOODS IN the Middle west took headlines away important events of the war during the week.

Thousands are being forced to flee their homes all through the upper Mississippi valley and even out in such dry areas as Oklahoma, floods are raging. Even beyond the property damage and the danger to residents along the river areas is the importance at a time like this of crop losses. When every ounce of food is so badly needed, the damage to farm lands is tragic.

AMERICAN TROOPS HAVE occupied the island of Attu, now are completing mopping up processes on remnants of the Jap garrison there. As the farthermost of the Aleutian Islands, this cuts off Kiska from enemy reinforcements, food and ammunition; also it gives us a potential air base from which to aid bomber blows at the Japanese Islands themselves. It puts American forces with 2,200 statute miles from Tokyo, much closer to northern islands. Major General Eugene Landrum, formerly of Fort Benning, is directing the operations up there. Japanese counter air attacks have been repelled. It is doubtful if the Japs will allow the Americans to rest there without putting our men under constant attack, and some more sharp fighting may be expected in the far northern area.

Heavy and medium bombers of the Tenth American Air Force also were bombing Japanese supply bases and lines of communication in Eastern Burma to keep the Japanese busy on another front also. Meanwhile, however, Chinese news sources state that Japan is starting another heavy offensive against Chinese forces, apparently in a large scale move to break down the Chinese armies permanently. Not much has come out of interior China on this as yet, though.

RUSSIANS ARE STARTING a huge new offensive, the Germans say, apparently preparing the German public for further bad news. The Reds say nothing, but continue blasting away with heavy artillery all along the Eastern front. Most action is centered around Rostov. It would seem that the Germans are preparing the home folk for a large scale movement against them this summer—which will be the first time that the Nazi armies weren't on the offensive with coming of favorable weather. At the same time, there's plenty of possibility that this may be a feint to throw the Allies off the track and soften the Russians against a surprise heavy movement by the German armies. A few weeks now will tell the tale.

Germany continues to suffer heavy pounding at the hands of American and British bombing squadrons. Described as the heaviest and most concentrated air attack in history, the RAF dumped more than 2,000 tons of bombs on the industrial city of Dortmund. Reports state that this brings total weight of explosives dropped on Germany by the RAF to a total of 100,000 tons. Other objectives up and down the vitally important Ruhr valley were bombed. Belgian coke ovens at Zeebrugge were bombed; daylight raids were staged over northern France also; Berlin has been smashed repeatedly.

BESIDES THE FLOODS, the domestic front produced plenty of news. More than 40,000 rubber workers were idle in Akron; Chrysler plants were shut down by strikes in Detroit; John L. Lewis, who practically started the CIO singlehanded (or at least led it to great power) led his United Mine Workers back to the folds of the American Federation of Labor with an application to the executive council for reaffiliation with the AFL.

New gasoline shortages were threatened in the East, and some deliveries of goods were ordered drastically curtailed and users of "T" gasoline ration books will have to begin stretching their gasoline.

Good news for housewives however, was that Coffee Stamp No. 4 becoming valid May 31, will be good for a pound of coffee through June 30, whereas previously a pound had to be stretched over five weeks.

The Treasury is preparing to ask for new taxes before the end of 1943.

JOHNSON TO CAPITAL

Lt. Col. James R. Johnson, post inspector at Fort Benning, who recently has been transferred in grade from the Infantry to the Inspector General's department, will go to Washington for two weeks instruction, it was announced today.

Maj. Alexander H. Veazy has been designated as Acting Post Inspector during the temporary absence of Col. Johnson. Col. Johnson will return to his post after he has completed his course of instructions in Washington.

Post Invests Million Dollars In War Bonds

First Four Months Of 1943 Equal Last Half of 1942

Fort Benning soldiers and civilians have purchased over $1,000,000 worth of war savings bonds under the pay reservation plan during the first four months of 1943, Major George Fink, post war bond officer disclosed today.

This is in addition to any cash purchases soldiers and civilian personnel might have made, and does not include any sales by the local post office or during the Second War Loan Drive, aside from a $50,000 investment by the Fort Benning Post Exchange.

Major Fink announced that the $1,000,000 mark equalled sales for the last six months in 1942, and was only the beginning of vast increases in war bond sales here.

ALLOTMENTS TRIPLED

Regular monthly participation by civilian workers on the post has almost tripled, and the amount of cash being deducted has nearly doubled. Figures for April reveal that 61 per cent of local employees are investing 4.95 per cent of their salaries in war bonds monthly, and these percentages are expected to rise to 80 per cent participation and 6 or 7 per cent gross deduction by June 1, according to Major Fink.

Soldier participation has slacked off momentarily with inauguration of the new class B allotment, but should regain any lost ground as soon as the new system starts functioning, since it will offer speedier delivery of securities than was possible with class A deductions.

Ration Book 3 To Be Mailed

Fort Personnel Urged To Send Applications By Midnight June 10

Fort Benning personnel is being advised that War Ration Book Number 3 will be distributed by mail from Atlanta, Ga., and that all applications must be mailed between June 1 and 10. This announcement comes from Sgt. Louis Lipp, secretary of the rationing board on the post.

All members of the armed forces not eating in organized messes may make application for the book which will be mailed from Atlanta beginning June 20. However, some families may not receive their books until August 1.

Applications may be made by a single household only for related persons actually living in the same household. Books will not be mailed from one state to another. Persons anticipating immediate transfer who are not sure of their new addresses are advised to make application later.

Sgt. Lipp emphasizes the importance of some responsible member of each household connected with Fort Benning doing the following:

Secure an application by June 10; tear off and keep the stub containing the serial number; print all names and addresses on the application; include on the numbered lines on the bottom part of the application the names of all persons in the household entitled to Book 3; sign the application; mail it before midnight June 10, to the Georgia State Mailing Center, OPA, 44 Pryor Street, NE, Atlanta, Ga.

WHEN THE radio and runners fail, Uncle Sam falls back on a new device to get the message through. They are the parachute pigeons being trained at Fort Benning. In the above picture Pvt. Robert F. Parachute Pigeons Join U.S. Fighting Forces

Jumpers Taught To Make Leaps Carrying 2 Feathered Messengers

And now it's paratrooper pigeons.

That's the very latest wrinkle in Uncle Sam's fighting forces, and at Fort Benning these days two paratroopers in every class at the Parachute school are being intensively trained as pigeoneers.

They're learning how to handle the birds in combat, experimenting with specially constructed small parachutes and carrier boxes in which pigeons are dropped from airplanes; learning how to handle them in specially constructed portable, collapsible, field baskets and generally becoming experts in the handling of the swift-flying messengers that have already proved their worth in battle in North Africa.

Pigeons are especially helpful to the paratroops, because these fighting men are generally landed behind enemy lines. Use of radio is of necessity "out" in most cases, and naturally it is impossible in most cases to send a runner back with information and that is where the pigeons come in.

Paratroopers now are being taught to jump with two of the messengers strapped to their chests in specially constructed khaki containers that hold the birds snugly. Besides that, they now are being dropped from planes and then picked up by the para-

29th Infantry Moves To Fort Jackson, S. C.

Crack Regiment Was In Infantry School Quarter Of Century

After serving at Fort Benning for 24 years as a demonstration regiment for the Infantry School, the famed 29th Infantry has moved to Fort Jackson, S. C., and is now assigned to the Second Army and attached to the 12th Corps, it was officially announced this week.

The "We Lead the Way" regiment was the first demonstration regiment assigned to the Infantry School to assist in the task of training the thousands of officers and officer candidates who have passed through the institution since its founding and especially since the present crisis began.

The regiment came to Fort Benning in October 1919, being quartered in a tent city until 1929 when the modern barracks now occupied by the 176th Infantry was completed.

Organized at Fort Sheridan, Ill., in 1901, the regiment saw service in the Philippines at that time and again in 1907. During the World War, it was assigned the mission of guarding the Panama Canal.

Brazil's Destiny Lies With U. S.

Director Of Ministry Of Information Visits Ft. Benning Training

Assuring Brazilian cooperation in United States war policies, Dr. Alfredo Pessoa, a director of the Brazilian ministry of information, and Dr. Julio Barata, New York directo of the Brazilian section of the office of coordination of inter-American affairs, told Fort Benning officers Monday that "people of Brazil know their destiny is wrapped up with that of the United States."

The South American officials visited the Parachute and Infantry schools at Benning during a one-day inspection tour.

"Brazil is proud of the fact that she is closer to the United States than to many of the other South American nations," Pessoa asserted. "The people of the United

18-Year Old Men Arrive Next Week; Col. Tupper Is CO

Full Strength Of 12,000 Troops To Be Reached By End Of July

The A. S. T. P. Basic Training Center, The Infantry School, for 18-year-old selectees was activated Wednesday and within a week, the first contingent of youngsters fresh from high school will begin pouring into this army post.

COL. S. R. TUPPER

Within seven weeks, the Training Center will be at full strength of 12,000 troops. They will be divided among three regiments, the 4th, 5th and 6th Basic Training Regiments, each consisting of four battalions of four companies each in addition to a Headquarters Company.

The commanding officer of the Center will be Col. Sevier R. Tupper, who will also continue in the command of the Student Training Brigade.

The 4th regiment will be quartered in some of the barracks of the Second Student Training Regiment and the 5th regiment will be located in the Third Student Training regiment, all in the Harmony Church area. The 6th regiment will be housed in barracks at the Junction of Dixie and Sightseeing roads opposite Fiske range.

Headquarters of the Training Center will be in the Harmony Church area at First Division and Cusseta roads.

COL. TUPPER COMMANDS

On the staff of Col. Tupper will be Col. W. McK. Spann, Executive Officer; Col. H. B. Laux, Plans and Training Officer; Lt. Col. J. I. Davis, Personnel Officer; Maj. H. J. Lipscomb, Supply Officer; Lt. Col. Vincent S. Burton, Inspector; Maj. J. G. Macfarlan, Special Service Officer and Capt. P. N. Riley, Commanding Officer of the Headquarters company.

The commanders will be: 4th Regiment, Col. Edward S. Jackson; 5th Regiment, Lt. Col. John S. Roosma, and 6th Regiment, Lt. Col. William B. Forse.

The training program will differ from that in Replacement Centers in that it will be general and not specialized. Instead of being assigned to infantry, artillery or some other branch of service, the selectee will receive the training of a basic rifle company. This will include instructions in hand grenades, bayonets, light machine guns, mortars, military courtesy and with considerable portion of the training devoted to physical development.

ARRIVE MAY 30

Officers and cadre for the three regiments will be provided by the Academic Regiment and other school troops. The first contingent will arrive May 30 to begin the 13 weeks of training.

Col. Tupper, in retaining the command of the Student Training Brigade, will co-ordinate the facilities of the Brigade with the requirements of the Training Center. He commanded the First Student Training regiment prior to becoming commander of the Brigade, July 1, 1942. Col. Tupper was commissioned in 1916 and saw service in World War I and Hawaii. Prior to coming to Fort Benning in 1940, he was senior instructor of the National Guard at Phoenix, Ariz.

Overseas Mail Rules Changed

It is no longer necessary to have approval of the commanding officer of a soldier overseas in order to send him a package. However, it must have been requested by him and the sender must present to the postal clerk the envelope of the letter in which the request was made. Parcels must be not over 5 pounds weight and may measure no more than 15 inches long nor may they exceed 36 inches in length and thickness combined.

American CO on Attu Served Infantry School

General Landrum Was Instructor, Executive Officer, Secretary

Major General Eugene M. Landrum who is directing the attack of the American Army against Japanese on Attu Island in the Aleutians, served in the Infantry School at Fort Benning from 1936 to March 1941 as instructor, secretary and executive officer, it is recalled.

He left this post to go to Fort Lewis, Wash., as Chief of Staff of the 3rd Division, a position held shortly before by General Dwight D. Eisenhower, commanding officer of Allied Forces in North Africa.

After serving briefly at Camp Ord, Ore., General Landrum became commanding officer of an Army force for the occupation and development of an advanced base in the Aleutians. For the speed, secrecy, and thoroughness with which he accomplished this mission, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal last March. He succeeded in landing troops, building roads, putting an airfield into operation, and storing large quantities of supplies before the enemy was aware of his presence.

Martha Raye's Illness Cancels Appearance Here

Martha Raye's scheduled personal appearance here this week has been cancelled due to the film comedienne's illness, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer, announces. Miss Raye expressed her regrets that she would be unable to meet her engagements here adding that she hoped to visit Benning at some future date.

Hollywood's feminine Joe E. Brown was stricken in New Orleans last Wednesday night and was admitted into LaGarde Hospital for observation. At the end of the present week she plans to return to the west coast.

Midnight Curfew Moved Up To One A. M. Post Time

Effective last Sunday morning the curfew hour for all Fort Benning military personnel to leave the streets of Columbus and Phenix City was set at 1 a. m., EWT, Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, post commander, announced.

This order was published following receipt of a directive from Fourth Service Command headquarters in Atlanta, and the change gives soldiers an additional hour in which to meet the curfew.

After one o'clock Fort Benning time or 12 midnight Columbus time all members of the command must produce a written permit authorizing them to be out on the streets.

The change will eliminate a great deal of confusion produced by the recent change of Columbus back to Central War Time and will allow soldiers to attend downtown USO clubs and shows without forcing them to leave in the middle of these functions in order to comply with the old curfew.

'Office' Soldiers Have No Bed Of Roses Either

Deskmen Do Drill On Sunday; On Duty After Hours

Don't call them "office soldiers", although they may have jobs in offices in various parts of Fort Benning.

Because they're putting in plenty of time, over and above their regular duties, at keeping up with the arts and sciences of warfore too.

They spend at least two hours a week keeping up with their drill. They attend a training film once a week — after hours, too, mind you. They give up their Sunday mornings to drilling, rifle firing, or formal parade formations.

They are troops attached to the Fourth Service Command—DEML, the Service of Supply, or the Reception Center. And some of them have strange hours of work, too—they're office men from headquarters; men who manage the theatres; special service office men who have to be up half the night; men who work at bowling alleys or perhaps the Officers club or the service clubs. Yet they squeeze in their time for the drilling and give up their own leisure time one evening a week and on Sundays when other soldiers about the post are free of regular duties.

SPECIAL JOBS

A survey was made recently and it was found that many of the men had been sent to Fort Benning for various special jobs before their basic training had been completed. So Lt. Col. Clarence A Will, Plans and Training officer at the post, arranged to have them complete it although it meant taking them away from their regular work every afternoon. Many of the men worked nights to keep up with their office work while they went through five weeks of afternoon drill which completed the fundamentals and led up to final rifle firing.

Personnel from the Headquarters Detachment, DEML, the permanent cadre of the Reception Center and Supply Detachment troops all continue their two hour drilling each week, with a staggered system in force to that men from various offices will not all be out at the same time. Seasoned drill sergeants are in charge and the period is divided into calisthenics and actual drill, with some lectures thrown in on the finer points of waging modern warfare.

All of the detashments combine to stage a parade on one Sunday morning, and the other Sundays of the month see the men out at close order drill or rifle firing. Many of the men have qualified as marksmen or sharpshooters so far.

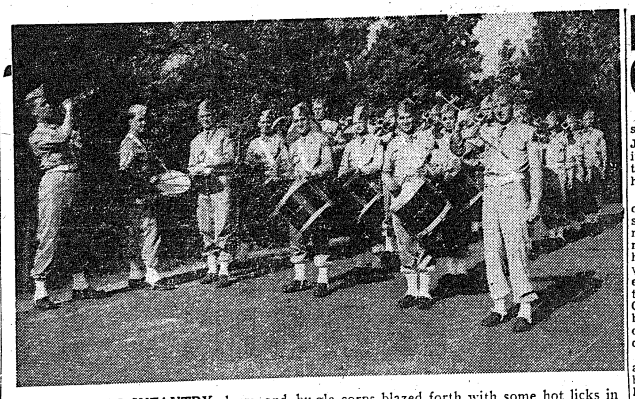
Second, Third Units, 1st STR, Vie In Sports

Class rivalry has resulted from the challenge offered by the all conquering baseball team of the Second Company, First Student Training Regiment and the probability of an early encounter with its neighbor in the Third Company, has increased within the last few days. The difficulties of fitting the game into the full schedule for both companies are rapidly being overcome and the battle will probably take place within a week.

The championship golf tournament has reached the final between Col. R. C. Barlow and Capt. T. J. Leiben and an early decision is promised in this match. Many fine golfers have been eliminated and these have formed a side tournament of the "Beaten Eight." Efforts are being expended now to form a handicap tournament which will give those less skilful players a chance to compete on more even terms with the masters.

The tennis tournament has been reorganized and the prospects of a little serious competition for those better players can be definitely seen. A volley ball team has been inaugurated in order to meet the challenge of the Third Company.

SUPPLY DIVISION PROMOTES EIGHT



Eight enlisted men of the Supply Detachment, Supply Division, Section One, Fourth Service Command, Fort Benning, have been awarded promotions upon the recommendation of their organization commander.

Corporal Raeford B. Bingham has been appointed sergeant, Pfc. Peter W. Harrell has been made corporal, and Pfcs. Will T. Jobe and Ancil T. Sweat have been promoted to technicians fifth grade. Pvts. Henry W. Guthrie, Willard D. Sumrall, Earl P. Juntilla and James C. White are now Pfcs.

In answer to many requests from soldiers and civilians in this area radio station WRBL has arranged to broadcast the complete New York Symphony orchestra program each Sunday afternoon, starting May 23.

The Officers R. & R. Club on Cusseta Road is by far the most popular place in Columbus for commissioned officers and their guests. Ask anyone on the reservation who has been there.

That Extra Something!

Regular army calisthenics like this given these girls brings thirst. Ice-cold Coca-Cola brings refreshment...more than just quenching thirst.
GIRLS are in training, too . . . at universities, under the new pre-graduation program to fit them later for various auxiliaries of the Armed Forces. Serious and hard-working, they are being physically toughened. Ask them if they welcome a chance to pause and enjoy refreshment . . . the refreshment of ice-cold Coca-Cola. Who wouldn't?
Deliciousness in every drop. Refreshment in every sip. That's ice-cold Coca-Cola. Made with the art that comes from a lifetime of practice, Coca-Cola has a taste all its own. And quality . . . quality you trust. Enjoy a Coke and you enjoy all the difference between something really refreshing and just something to drink.

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called Coke. Both mean the same thing . . . "coming from a single source, and well known to the community".

Cafeteria Suggestion Box Is Catch-All For G. I. Complaints

Misunderstanding Proves Great Source Of Soldiers' Grievances

By PRIVATE THOMAS DEVINE

Groans, gripes and grudges volleyed and thundered when the suggestion box in the foyer of Fort Benning's Main cafeteria was opened recently. Pandora herself never released such a swarm of woes as the little wooden compartment with a slit in the top and the terse but wistful legend "Suggestions please" lettered on its front.

The more literate and legible slips among the contents were in praise of our local "Colony" but approximately two-thirds of them were as acrimonious and vindictive a collection of snarls as one might expect from a body of people whose suggestions, for easily perceived reasons, are seldom encouraged.

A considerable number of these complaints centered on the patronage of the cafeteria by commissioned officers were very enfightening. In the first place they show a profound misunderstanding of the status of the restaurant. It was established as a place where everyone: officers, enlisted men, civilian workers on the Post and visiting guests of the Fort's personnel might eat in as nearly ideal circumstances and at as low prices as possible.

NOT ALL MEMBERS

Insistence in these written slips upon the officers using their club instead of the cafeteria shows that a great many enlisted men do not realize that the Officers Club is not a luxury provided for officers at government cost, but is, rather, supported out of the pockets of the members. Nor indeed, do all officers belong to it. There are plenty of officers who are getting along now on considerably less than they earned in civilian life, have families to support and simply cannot afford the expense of membership.

By the same token the Exchange cafeteria is not an enlisted man's "club." It is for EVERYBODY and officers are accorded no more privileged treatment than the rawest G. I. There has been no instance to date of any enlisted man failing to be served or to find a table because of any excess of officer patronage.

In point of fact the cafeteria's standing is similar to that of any restaurant on Broad street. in Columbus and it would certainly not occur to anyone to complain to the management of a city restaurant that there were too many officers among the patrons.

MEN FROM RANKS

This curious inversion of snobbery is a phenomenon which requires a psychiatrist's solution, and shows an odd lack of understanding of our military set-up inasmuch as the vast proportion of officers today are men from the ranks.

The cafeteria management compiled a list of suggestions which accumulated in the box over a given period and posted them with the management's answers beside the box which they came. Number one was:

"Steaks too small, thin and expensive." The management's answer was:

"Right—The N. Y. steaks cost 45 cents a pound—it costs money to cut, handle and serve. Total cost to serve this meat, which we are fortunate even to buy, is about 80 cents a pound. The steaks are weighed out at about 12 ounces each, and sold for 60 cents. We would appreciate your advice and help in steps possible to lower the selling price."

Another suggestion was to the effect that ash trays be provided and the management's reply was that "We are making our own for the ones we buy are—'taken' as souvenirs so rapidly."

Some anonymous soul, with more forthrightness than good manners succinctly comments "Music lousy—coffee stinks—restaurant worse." The response of the house to this is: "We appreciate at least your frankness. We realize how far from the goal of perfection the accomplishments thus far are. Under existing conditions improvements will be slow—but we will try to make it continuous."

Some partisan patron of the restaurant had pencilled after this on a sheet posted in the foyer "You will probably complain with the Waldorf-Astoria."

DEPLORES 'NO JIVE'

In the matter of music the complaints are on the score that there is no jive or jazz on the juke box but, instead, the type of "dinner music" which has been accepted by most persons for many years as most suited to such a place and occasion. There is a juke box full of jive and jazz in the beer hall behind the gym Every day room has a radio, most of which have graphophone attachments and supplies of "hot" records. Surely we may afford one public spot where those who wish to eat in peace need not listen to dime-a-dance music.

The management admits that the coffee is not altogether up to scratch but explains that this is not due to poor quality of coffee but rather to the fact that he equipment is so limited in capacity and the demand so great that during rush hours it is impossible to get the water to the boiling point which is essential to the best brew.

ANOTHER LINE

Many complaints pertain to the time one must wait in line. The authorities reply that they are seeking to improve this situation and considering certain practical solutions. However, they point out that the same conditions exist in civilian life.

Certainly it is evidence how few discomforts most of us have suffered thus far that we can complain about overcrowded conditions and lack of equipment which is due solely to the fact that we are at war.

"Why," moans a querelous slip of paper, "don't you make up your mind whether you are going to open from 7 a. m. to 9 p. m. or close when the help is tired?"

"Because," is the answer, "we believe in changing our minds when conditions warrant. Closing between 2 and 4 in the afternoon seemed wise as trade was small, food deteriorated and the place could not be adequately cleaned for the supper hour. The "help" are trying its best best and will so continue—."

Another gay soul, superbly unaware perhaps, that we are all here for other reasons than the 'nite club atmosphere' with informal dine and dance" (sic) while a further suggestion is that the place remain open two hours after the last show (Hm, you'd better trot back to Broadway, brother.)

The courtesy of the cafeteria personnel is brought into question by one lone complainer. It's just possible that were the shoe on the other foot ,and were the restaurant employees to have a suggestion box, complaints of this nature might be more common.

One person says the rolls are too doughy, another wishes dress and uniform regulations more rigidly enforced. The brand of drinking straws should be changed, says one customer as they come apart before a bottle of milk is finished. An aesthetic patron would like to see murals, possibly depicting soldiers of the various periods of our history.

With commendable restraint and modesty the comments which the cafeteria published and posted were all of a complaining nature. Happily, however, these were counterbalanced by a number of articulate repartees on the other face of the matter. Thus: "Anyone who says your coffee stinks is not an enlisted man and his opinion should be disregarded. Your music is in excellent keeping with the refined setup you have. Not all soldiers want fast and fickle music. Some more light classics would be ideal and please leave the juke boxes to the beer garden and other social places."."

ORCHIDS AT LAST

Another: "Keep up the good work. Let the dinner type of music prevail. I've stood in longer lines for less appetizing food. For anyone who truthfully agrees with the contradictions I saw on the board I would recommend a permanent reservation in a psycopathic ward.

Yours truly,
A Paratrooper who's been in a lot worse places.

"Brrrrrr"—shudders a horrified G. I. "Some of those suggestions (?) hurt,—such as posted on list—. Suggest those dissatisfied with conditions and food—music included—visit interior (Harmony Church Area) and dine at Service Club and P. X.'s for atmosphere. My only suggestion—don't change. Congratulations upon a very splendid organization."

Signed

Cpl. 2nd S. T. R.

Rather touching is a brief note: "This is Co. E's last dinner here. We have enjoyed your hospitality in the past Best of luck."

Signed

Co. E.

It is to be devoutly hoped that Co. E will soon return to enjoy more such hospitality in these parts. When the gripers and groaners return from other parts and climes they certainly shall have learned that we do such things rather well here after all."

Civilian Activities

By MYRTLE M. JOINES

Comes word from Hedy Peskach, Omaha, Nebraska, to Mrs. Irvin Shutt, of the Finance Office, as follows:

"Our short visit to Georgia has slipped into the past. We are back in the wild and wooly where steaks are steaks—and hominy grits an unknown substance. Since our return we have chatted about nothing but the Southland. Our friends assume a politely bored expression of patient anticipation at our approach when we "cleverly" attempt to illustrate the different types of Southern accents from T-Sgt. Scotty's Texas drawl to Capt. Ham Harriss' soft Virginia style. However, the light of this totally unappreciative atmosphere has failed to dim our enthusiasm for Georgia—and Fort Benning.

"Our first introduction to Fort Benning was on the day following President Roosevelt's visit. We were accorded a special welcome too, just like the President, though perhaps our reception was not quite the same. Everything about the South was new to us and out of the ordinary. From Baker Village we rode in a trailer-like vehicle they call a bus, to Outpost No. I, where we obtained temporary visitor's passes. With my sis as a capable guide, we flitted about all afternoon, observing various points of interest—and, it might be added, we were pointed out by various interested observers. It was the first large Army post either of us had ever seen, and we two Nebraska damsels were duly impressed with its size and with the complexities of military life.

"Sisters, wives, and sweethearts who are contemplating a visit to Ft. Benning by all means wear a glamorous hat with yards of lacy veiling. Boys in the B & C School will happily hang hazardously out of the windows to watch you stroll by. Passing truckloads of soldiers will gleefully treat you to a rendition of the "Benning anthem"—a chorus of long, low, whistles accompanied by whoops of appreciation, and interspersed with a conglomeration of interjections such as "Easter Parade"! It's just your imagination, the instructor across the street from the Finance Office doesn't really stress the last word as he says, "Keep your eyes on the target!" And we don't want to disillusion you, but that clicking noise is made by the rifles, and is NOT a vital tribute to your charm. We warn you, at first you will suffer an attack of extreme self-consciousness, but when that fades, you will begin to enjoy the above-described mass attention and you will regret that your visit cannot be of indefinite length.

"Our tour of Ft. Benning was strictly unofficial, and quite incompete. We were not invited to ride in a jeep, or jump from the paratroop training towers; or participate in target practice, or even to tag along on an all day hike. It seems these activities are reserved solely for the privileged military personnel. Since our visit was of a social nature, and not a military tour of inspection, I wish to report that the famed Southern Courtesy and hospitality does indeed rival the warmth and friendliness of the West."

Helen Knight Smothers and I covered the State convention of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs of Georgia in Atlanta this week and have certainly come back full of the wonderful part women are playing in the war effort and also the wonderful opportunities women have open to them to play an even more important part in the winning of the war. This is definitely also a Woman's War and the business women of the country are going to have to shoulder their share of the responsibility in an even greater number than ever before in our country's history.

Commissaries Rationed Too

Col. Massey Says Coupon Values Apply To Army Purchases

Point rationing of canned, bottled and frozen fruits and vegetables applies to Army commissaries to exactly the same extent that it does to corner grocery stores, Colonel Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning, disclosed today.

The same coupon values apply and coupons are collected by the Sales officer in every case, the colonel said.

In addition, Colonel Massey revealed, the quartermaster corps is participating in the OPA food rationing program by making all purchases of sugar, coffee, and processed foods for the Army through the ration banking system with so-called ration currency.

Each Army installation, including quartermaster depots, market centers, ports of embarkation, posts, camps and stations, is opening ration bank accounts at convenient commercial banks and is making all purchases of rationed foods with ration checks in the same manner as civilian dealers, according to Fort Benning's director of supply.

The purpose of Army participation in the ration banking system, Colonel Massey stated, is not to limit the amount of food the soldiers will receive, but to aid in the more satisfactory operating of existing and contemplated ration programs.

Map Reading G. T. Turns Up 89 Perfect Tests

Eighty-nine perfect papers and only one failure in Map Reading was the mark set by the new Officers Candidate class of the Seventh Company, Third Student Training Regiment. The class taught by Lt. Robinson, set a new record for all future O. C.'s in getting off to a flying start in their first week at the Infantry School.

The class is composed of men from every branch of the service, as well as a large group of recent R.O.T.C. graduates who add that college spirit to the company.

O. C. Fears G. T. More Than Japs; Was In Aleutians

Bombs and bullets from Japanese planes aren't nearly as terrifying as the prospects of a graded test, according to Officer Candidate Charles Keith of the Ninth Company, Third Student Training Regiment.

Candidate Keith just recently returned to this country after having been stationed in the Aleutian Islands for eighteen months. During his last three months in the Aleutians, he was under fire of Japanese bombs and straffing attacks thirteen times.

A graduate of West Liberty College, West Virginia, where he starred in football for four years, Candidate Keith entered the army immediately upon completion of school two years ago.

Shops In Columbus An Army Wife

By Phyllis

There'll be no dimouts for bright ideas, bright faces and bright minds! Shortages of lipstick containers, lostex bathing suits, rationing of sugar, meat, cans, oh yes, let's not forget shoes; let none of these get us down. Travel difficulties, war work and so on ad infinitum, when it's all ended (and may it not go on forever), you'll look back and think, "Why that's just life, I guess!"

Women of Columbus, always looking for the loveliness and fine quality which means lasting wear, flock to KAYSER-JULIENTHAL, INC., for gowns of every type. The expert workmanship in each and every frock, regardless of style or price, is just one of the many reasons why such outstanding values are received. The butcher linen masterpieces of line and design in this fashionable shop are especially appropriate suggestions for the hot summer months. Colors galore and a seemingly endless variety of styles highlight this surprising reasonably priced collection. These butcher linen suits are either tailored or semi-dress styles in prints or solid colors. Cunning wooden or plastic carved buttons fasten the jackets of many of the suits. One especially cool looking outfit is a soft shade of beige harmoniously trimmed with large chocolate brown roses for buttons. The skirt is made with slimming lines and a single pleat both back and front. The other suit jackets have either long or short sleeves with a few three-quarter length sleeves with a wide bracelet-sleeve effect. Light as blown blossoms, but with enough body to withstand wrinkles, these attractive suits are especially suitable for non-stop summer service.

It's the comfortable fit and excellent workmanship combined with exquisite styling that has much to do with the popularity of any and all shoes in the centrally located shop of MILLER - TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY. These points worth considering are even noticeable in the bedroom slippers. Whether you seek a pair of glamorous and flip-floppy mules or just a simple pair of soft and easy-going bedroom slippers you'll find they both have been fashioned with keen regard to fit, style and workmanship. The label of the long - famous Daniel Green lounging footwear is in many of these bedroom slippers. If you have been fortunate enough somehow to manage to save your number 17 shoe ration coupon up to this point, perhaps you'd best view the gold and silver kid evening slippers, while they last at this shop. A shortage of these bits of glamour is expected and then where will you be? Of course, a few venturesome souls might try going barefoot, but not for long! All nonsense aside, though, why not select a low or high-heeled sparkling gold or silver evening slipper while they're still being made of real kid leather and not some less suitable imitation.

Were you one of those forgetful persons who neglected to send your family a photograph of your smilin' self this past Mother's Day? If so, why not make amends by sending a photograph this Father's Day, June 6th, being not so far off, will mean in order to do this you'll have to visit AIME DU PONT STUDIOS this very week. Or else you'll be too late once again. You'll like the understanding and capable consideration you'll receive when sitting for your photograph. And the final prints will show the results of the workmanship which has gone into your photograph to make it the masterpiece it is bound to be. Particular attention is paid to avoiding a strained or unnatural look. Proofs are, of course, submitted and any suggestions you may have for a bit of retouching are heeded without any of the charactererasing tricks of poor grade photographers. The studio is closed all day on Mondays, so I suggest you phone or drop by the studio the very first chance you have so you'll be able to be "snapped" and send the result to your fond family this Father's Day.

I'm going to let glamour go its own way now and be very housewifey. Just like in the good old days when we could run next door and borrow a cup of sugar or butter without bringing exclamations, explanations and black looks down on us. I've been collecting some happy housekeeping tips. Why don't you try it my way? F'instance . . . home washing and ironing starts for us all with the advent of warm weather. So let's look at our ironing boards. You don't have one? Well, that's what I thought might happen in the temporary homes so many of us have. I shopped here and there and found an excellent buy in collapsible ironing boards and washable ironing covers to be had at SEARS ROEBUCK. You'll find, too, with a little consideration on your part these sturdy boards will not warp all out of shape. By "sturdy" I don't mean you'll need assistance putting the board up and down either. You'll find whichever of the several styles you choose, you'll like the smooth-working folding mechanism and the well-fitting covers you may buy to tie on your new board to make ironing numerous summer wash clothes a simple matter for you.

Each year brings about a more noticeable interest in Ol' Man Sol (middle name Sunshine). This year the idea is to look tan and healthy, alive, awake and aware. Visit the pool as often as you can and give others an idea how tanned and healthy you are by wearing a striking bathing costume. In case your last year's suit was in combat with an army of moths, the place for you to pick up an attractive new outfit is on the second floor of J. A. KIRVEN CO. One or two piece dressmaker styles, many with the famous Jantzen label have been attractively designed for comfort and wearability in pique or rayon materials. The material in many of the Jantzen suits is a cotton and rayon mixture with a special elasticity to it which will eventually take the place of the fast-disappearing lastex. Corded rayon, striped or printed pique and solid color rayon jersey swimming suits will give you, regardless of age or size, an excellent opportunity to "get in the swim" and take advantage of the health - giving rays of sunshine. AND, you might even go in swimming now that you'll have a becoming and correct outfit.

29th Infantry Regiment Departs This Station

Military personnel more or less permanently associated with Fort Benning took up their daily tasks one morning recently with the feeling that something was definitely missing from the picture, that familiar insignia and familiar faces which had come to be regarded as an institution on the post had suddenly faded from the scene.

They were right for the impossible had happened. The 29th Infantry, the Infantry School's first demonstration regiment, an outfit which had been stationed here for 24 years, had, like the Arabs, folded their tents and had silently stolen away to Fort Jackson, S. C., their new permanent station.

The 176th Infantry from Virginia with a record of distinction stretching back to the early days of this young Republic, has replaced the Two-Niners and no doubt will live up to every fine tradition written down in the pages of American history by the regiment.

But the 29th Infantry will definitely be missed here at Benning. The Regiment had become synonymous with the name "Benning" and the Infantry School, and some had come to regard the 29th as a permanent institution here.

The BAYONET takes this opportunity to wish the entire personnel of the 29th Infantry every success at its new station and in its new assignment. Fort Jackson's gain is Benning's loss, for we are certain that the 29th will add to the distinguished record it compiled while at Fort Benning.

We Owe It To Our Country To Keep Fit

Recreational facilities for our fighting men are being encouraged and enlarged upon throughout the United States Army continuously. In all camps regardless of their size various sports are part of the usual training program, and other sports are considered extra-curricula activities. Fort Benning itself is a vivid example of what can be exemplified for the soldiers' sporting pleasures. Variety is endorsed in full since we have at Fort Benning the selection of such sports as; baseball, softball, football, tennis, boxing, golf, basketball, swimming, etc.

A definite recreational program is more essential today than ever before because we owe it to our country and to ourselves to keep physically trained and fit. Every man in the armed forces should have some sort of a health program, which should embrace recreation, exercise, rest, sleep, and a nutritious diet. With these essentials properly carried out good health will prevail perpetually among our armed forces, both here and abroad.

Let us analyze some of these health points which has made our army, the best physically fit army in the world:

1. Rest—means complete relaxation. By giving your body the proper sleep, which should be for at least eight hours, so that the restorative powers can overcome fatigue and conserve your energy.

2. Sleep—is a marvelous healer, because it rests our vital organs giving our bodies time to mend worn out tissues and build new ones. Refreshing sleep comes easily when excitement and overfatigue is avoided just before bedtime.

3. Recreation—even amidst the grim business of war, recreation aids out men in training to learn how to relax, and ease mental fatigue. Hobbies come under recreation and should be encouraged.

4. Nutritious diet—means the consumption of wholesome foods with plenty of fresh vegetables of a diversified variety. This builds our bodies and will keep us healthy and strong so that we could outfight our enemies at all times.

Buck Private Averages $1,700 Annually—OWI

The lowliest private in the American Army receives the equivalent of $1,700 a year, according to an estimate which comes from the Office of War Information. This is a symbol of the relative affluence of the soldiers in the Army of the United States—the best paid in the world.

The estimate was made by Representative Wright Patman, Texas Democrat, with the assistance of the War and Navy departments and the Veterans Administration, the OWI disclosed.

A breakdown of the $1,700 shows that cash income of $50 a month received by the buck private totals $600 a year, while food, figured at $1.50 a day, equals $574 annually. Barrack shelter, at $10 monthly, amounts to $200. Equipment and replacement is set at $170, while medical, dental and hospital care is placed at $100 a year. Savings on laundry is estimated at an average of $32.50 a year, and on postage and barber bills at $28.65.

Other interesting facts set forth by the report point out that soldiers outside the United States can buy cigarettes exempt from the federal tax of seven cents for a pack of 20, while in this country, the price charged for the smokes in post exchanges is slightly lower than in civilian outlets. Further, postage is free for service men.

Add to this the fact that there is no income tax to be paid on the $600 stipend received and the conclusions to be drawn are that our private is well-off, indeed very well off.

We talk a great deal about "organizing the world for peace." It seems futile to worry about keeping the world the way we want it until we create the world we want.

Anyhow, 'What's In A Name? A Rose By Any Other —'

The "Foolish Questions Department" of the BAYONET has had dropped into its lap a little chef d'oeuvre, to wit: where did the 'day room' get its name.

Now in civilian life we'd just stick our monocle in our right eye and direct one of those Electroluxurious stares for which we were notorious at any one posing so obvious a query. Since, however, G. does not I., monocles and the army frowns on back talk, let's get down to business.

Back in 1889 (says Colby, who should know) some civilian (with more enterprise than good sense—Ed. comment) requested the commander of a certain army post if he might establish a general store with.n the post precincts to cater to the military. The commander granted the petition with the stipulation that, included in the shop's premises should be a recreation room, housing a billiard table and other impedimenta of idleness for the diversion of the soldiers in their spare time (Ah, those good old days when spare time was Government Issue). Hence the day room.

Now, we dare say, some blister on the neck of military body will come whining around "but that doesn't explain why it's called a day room."

Compass Rivals Rifle As Soldier's Best Friend

The 17th Company, First Student Training Regiment has a new candidate for man's Best friend. In civil life the dog gets the nod: the Rifle team will admit none but the rifle. But those who negotiated the brambles, the deadfall and the ups and downs of Georgia landscape on the night problem recently have a new nominee. You guessed it—the compass.

Who was it that said the general who wins the battle is the man who gets there "fustest with the mostest?" A hero of these hot and muddy states, Stonewall Jackson. But neither the fustest or the mostest avail one if they do get there. Some of the members of the 17th Company found that a compass in a stream or at the bottom of a tank trap may point north but its very hard to read in such a place.

Guadalcanal in all its tangle and swampy morass has little on the problem area as a thunderstorm left the territory so solicitously selected by Maps and Aerial Photos. Custer Road from stake U to stake B is a good substitute for the muddiest spot in France until another comes along. To simmulate battle conditions it is recommended that the Committee arrange to have all future problems conducted on rainy nights. This should lend more flavor to that cheerful little refrain "We Are Sorry, Dear Freshman—So Sorry For You."

To introduce the compass in the field the ability to hit destinations right on the nose under conditions like those mentioned above, makes a compass highly respected. It pays to give it the best of care as well as learning its use thoroughly. In combat it is the Soldier's friend, as is his rifle; without it advancement would be a risk in unfamiliar territory.

"WE THE PEOPLE"

We ask for honest leaders who (Though this may sound funny)
Seek only to serve the country,
And not fame nor money.

But this is a democracy,
As we so often say;
Which means that it's "we the people"
Who really hold the sway.

So when we want the country run
By honest men and true,
It means that true and honest men
Must needs be me and you.

Democracy means more than going out to make our vote count on election day. It means going out to help our elected candidate make good.

If more parents turned honest about themselves, not so many would need to worry how their children will turn out, or what time they will turn in.

With war in our home, in our work, in the land,
There is bound to be world war too.
We'll never have permanent peace until
We have it in all we do.

There's no use having a heart of golf unless you learn to give it out in small pieces.

No "incentive plan" in your concern can substitute for the incentive of concern that burns in the man himself.

Harrowing the soil will cultivate your land. But it takes more than furrowing your brow to cultivate the mind.

Responsibility is the response of ability to the pinch of the world's need.

If every man and nation adopted the honor system, we'd have no need for any other system any time or anywhere.

Irrational buying has forced rationed selling. Your buying these days is a test of citizenship.

Character is a quality which can weather every crisis, peace or war.

Kay Says—

GREMLINS ARE NOTHING NEW TO THE AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE

All this talk about Gremlins as something new makes any woman indulge in a private chuckle. Gremlins, those vexatious little imps who are now haunting the air fields, have been dogging American women for years. We haven't known the proper name, that's all.

When laundry tubes refuse to drain just when your prized laundress has threatened to leave because of an unusual number of soiled clothes, blame it on the Gremlins. You discover silverfish have eaten the hem of your pet evening gown, moths have gotten into the blankets, and mold has invaded the bread box. Your home-canned fruit has spoiled, there are ants in the sugar, and woodticks in the baseboards.

You're invited to the most important party in your life when you're suffering from an acute case of sunburn, your fingernails are broken, and your hair is a lank piece of hemp. The baby, patted too vigorously, protests by disgorging his dinner at your best dress. The neighbor's precocious son dashes your spirits by informing you that your newest millinery creation is a "funny looking hat" and your husband further dampens your ardor by announcing that your slip is showing.

GUESTS ARRIVE LATE

You prepare dinner fit for the gods and guests show up two hours late, hilariously happy and totally uninterested in your dried-out culinary attempts. When all your meat points are used up, unexpected guests are sure to arrive. The market, two days ago abounding with chickens and fish, is utterly devoid of all meat substitutes.

If you're holding down a job, the boss is sure to show up early on the one morning in months you get to the office a little late. Given an important engagement for which you're sworn you'll be on time, and work is sure to pile up until you have to work hours over-time.

KIDS BECOME FRIENDS

Overnight your children turn from fairly likeable creatures, amenable to reason, into fiends. Your prized figurine is broken; there isn't a pencil left in the house. Crayon marks disfigure the walls, and someone has left the hose running all afternoon. All mild requests or stern commands are met with a determined "no." Black eyes, cuts, and bruises occur with appalling frequency, occasioning subsequent trips to the dispensary.

All these minor trials we of the "weaker" sex have met with as much fortitude as we could muster. Perhaps it's a mamby-pamby breed of Gremlin who has been haunting us for years, but he's a persistent cuss and we predict he'll be sticking pretty close to us for the rest of our lives.

Chaplain's Corner . . .

AROUND THE CORNER

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

Long before man was able to put two and two together he was trying to figure out the future, what awaited him around the corner. He s still doing so. An eastern journal in a recent article called Los Angeles county a land of witches, a parade of freaks and faddists, seers and sorcerers, star gazers and crystal interpreters, palmists and spiritualists, occultists, astrologers, card-readers, numerologists, and what have you.

No doubt other centers of population are just as gullible and as zealous in the pursuit of the inscruitable. It is a pathetic search but futile. A good god has decreed that no one knoweth what a day may bring forth. In this we are fortunate. It was well the delightful family, friends of ours, who waved a fond adieu and went on their way rejoicing, did not know that in a few short hours, through an accident, their sweet baby girl would be dead and the father in a hospital fighting for his life.

Oh, bless the law that veils
the Future's face;
For who could smile into a baby's eyes,
Or bear the beauty of the evening skies,
If he could see what cometh on apace.

How true. "One-fourth of life is intelligible, the other three-fourths is unintelligible darkness, and our earliest duty is to cultivate the habit of not looking around the corner."

Verse

NON-COMMISSIONED

To all ye unfaithful
Take heed and caution well
Of a situation tearful
Wherein a corporal dwells.

He tried in mighty stride
To attain the grade of four
Undaunted was his pride
When T. O.'s allowed no more.

Newer men went up the grade
While two-striped he remained
Envious he decided to trade
Chevrons for bars unstained.

To O. C. S., he applied
Accepted, and then to school
But graduation was he denied
A Board of Three did rule.

When his Maker he does meet
In heaven he believes
St. Peter there, him will greet
With robe and two-striped sleeves.

T. P. AND THE SARGE VIEW A FIRST-RATE WAAC DEMONSTRATION

BY SGT. TOM McDONALD

Tripping gently over hill and dale with her lovely maiden robes floating behind her, a delicate young femme was dancing across a beautiful golden meadow. Suddenly everything went completely blank and I found myself going 'round and round.' When I realized that someone was spinning my swivel chair, I heard the great booming, back-bay voice of my commanding officer, Colonel T. P. Swampwater.

"Wake up, Sergeant, wake up!" he growled. "I've just had a call to go over to the parade ground to inspect the WAAC's."

"Shades of Salome!" I yawningly shrieked, wondering what had happened to the golden haired girl I was dreaming about. "What's up, Colonel?"

"Nothing yet, Sergeant. Nothing yet, but we shall see," he shouted as he made a wild dash for the jeep.

When we arrived at the parade ground, the entire WAAC company was lined up in hopeful expectation. As the Colonel and I walked up, the first officer called her girls to attention and saluted. The Colonel saluted back, and I saluted and winked at one of the platoon sergeants, a cute little non-com with a 'come-hither' look in her eyes.

"Well, well, my dear," said the Colonel to the first officer, "You certainly are a comely bunch of soldierettes."

"Thank you, Sir," the First Officer replied. "I have a great treat for you now. We are going to drill."

"Excellent," said the Colonel, gazing at their cute hats.

"Fine," I added, gazing at other interesting items of their attire as their drill began.

"Elevate—lipsticks!" sang out the first officer. Simultaneously all the lipsticks were held in a vertical position with the right hand, middle fingers extended and joined.

"By the numbers! Smear-r-r-r—one-e-e!"

The lipsticks went up to the mouths.

"Two—three-e-e-e!"

They were smeared back and forth leaving bright red slashes all down the line. Suddenly a first leader sang out:

"Get your chins up, Gertrude, your lips are out of line!"

"Four!" barked the first officer and all the lipsticks came down.

"At ease," she then commanded.

"Beautifully done!" praised the Colonel. "Do show us more."

"Certainly, Sir," smiled the first officer. And for the next 15 minutes we were highly entertained by the following drills.

"Mirrors up!" (a cadence drill coordinating holding the mirror in the left hand and delicately manipulating the powder puffs with the right hand.

Next came "drop handkerchiefs," a beautiful simultaneous performance somewhat akin to the opening of parachutes. After this came "Search—pocketbooks" and "By the right flank, wink!," all of which gave us a delightful exhibition.

When it was all over and the Colonel and I were riding back to the office in our jeep, he suddenly turned to me and asked:

"Sergeant, who do you think was the snappiest soldierette there?"

"I liked the little brunette, second from the end," I answered.

"Not bad, Sergeant, not bad! But did you see that little red headed corporal? She really was a honey. Sometimes, Sergeant I wish I were an enlisted man again."

"Yes, Sir," I said, "and I wish sometimes I were an officer."

"Why, Sergeant!" the Colonel replied, rather surprised.

"Well, Sir, it's sort of silly, I guess, but that cute first officer with the blue eyes kinda reminded me of a beautiful girl dancing through the meadow."

"Fiddlesticks, Sergeant, your mind is wandering."

"Yes, Sir," I thoughtfully replied, at the same time wondering if I would be able to take up my dream where I left off when we got back to the office."

'Quiet' Is —

TABOO WHEN A G. I. GANG GETS TOGETHER ANYWHERE

Just try an experiment some time when the opportunity presents itself. Walk into an empty day room and sit down. The radio is turned off. All is quiet. For best results you should take up a book to read and make as if you were actually enjoying the quiet of it all. You won't have to wait very long.

Presently the door will open. Glance out of the corner of your eye but don't let it appear that you're not absorbed in your book. You will see on the threshold a dumbfounded G. I. mouth agape.

He senses there is something wrong but it is something so very and subtley wrong that he requires a moment to grasp the situation.

It dawns upon him: Good Heavens it's QUIET. Like the lad of the story who thrust his hand in the dike the G. I. senses that here is a situation to save and he, by the Lord Harry is the man on horseback (if you don't mind a mixed metaphor.).

Rushing across the room he turns on the radio to top volume. Any station will do (this is only a first aid measure, he can find a noisier one a little later). He then tears around, bumps a few pieces of furniture, knocks over an ash tray, closes the windows if they're open or opens them if they're shut, returns to the radio, gets a somewhat more rackety program, then leaves the room with an air of self-satisfaction consequent to a job well done.

Patriotic tub thumpers, statesmen and high school valedictorians have for time immemorial been bellowing to all points of the compass the supposedly incontrovertible thesis that the United States is a peace loving nation and its citizens devotees of tranquility. Our enemies disparage us as supine pacifists and thus easy of vanquishment. Was there ever such rubbish uttered? Our foes little know with what they have to reckon.

There is one outstanding quality peculiar to the American soldier which should certainly win this war and overwhelm any force that any conceivable coalition of powers on earth or the next world might marshall against us. That attribute is the unlimited and unplumbed faculty of the G. I. for assimilating noise, bedlam, chaos, uproar, clang, crash, bang and pandemonium in all their various and sundry forms and ramifications.

American soldiers do not just have a passive stupid tolerance of noise: they love it for its own sake. They cherish it, seek it out and devise clever and ingenious means of creating it. To them a quiet room or a calm wooded dell is an outrageous abomination which they hate as nature is said to abhor a vacuum.

Look in at a service club. They have seldom less than two radios, often three, supplemented by a juke box or two and a piano. Only when all these instruments are going at once does an air of contentment and well being prevail. The tune from no one of these can be distinguished and it is not desired that such should be the case. What IS the result is a truly wonderful cacaphony which would bring down the plaster from the ceiling save that the army doesn't go in for plastered ceilings.

Another edifying expedition into the realm of cause and effect can be achieved in a service club which has a compartment set apart for those who wishs to play phonograph records. Enter one of these rooms and begin playing the "Rosenkavalier" waltzes, "Meditation" or something by Debussy. In a few minutes the door of the room will be yanked open and a G. I. haircut will be thrust in. When he sees a cretin setting there, he'll impatiently close the door with a bang.

This will be repeated several times until finally they gang up with a firm determination that people who don't know any better must be done good by forcibly. Is they march and either thump on the piano or cut the Gordian knot by leaping at the first pause to change the record for a really worthy hill-billy opus or a Georgia jive.

No, the Nazis and Japs will never prevail against us until they devise a secret weapon which will induce a profound quiet over the battle areas of the earth. Maybe then they will succeed in boring us into surrender.

The defeat of a nation willing to sacrifice every last bit of freedom to keep selfishness?

— or —

Victory for the nation determined to sacrifice every last bit of selfishness?

The United States could not stand "half-slave and half-free." Nor can the United Nations. We must find for all the freedom of a truly Christian state, or accept for all the slavery to materialistic ends.

Lieut. Benton To West Point

Gets Honor Appointment To Military Academy

Second Lieutenant James R. Benton, student in the rifle and heavy weapons course of The Infantry School and assigned to the 20th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, expects to enter the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York in July.

Lt. Benton, son of Mr. and Mrs. George P. Benton, Fairfield, Ala., graduated last May from the Gulf Coast Military Academy, Gulfport, Miss., where he was an honor graduate and the recipient of the honor appointment to West Point awarded annually at that institution.

He did not receive his commission until August, however, when he reached his eighteenth birthday. After receiving his reserve commission in the Infantry, Lt. Benton attended the University of Alabama for one semester before entering upon active duty with the Army of the United States in December 1942.

Lt. Benton was assigned to the I. R. T. C. at Fort McClellan where he has been stationed since, except for a four week course at Fort Washington, Maryland. He was sent to Fort Benning March 1 to take the basic course and will graduate on June 1. Lt. Benton has the rare advantage of having had practical experience as a commissioned officer with the Army before even beginning his cadet training at the Military Academy.

Honorable Solon Caught Doing Honorable (?) KP

Over at Camp Wheeler a few months ago a mail orderly marched into a company mess hall, stood at rigid attention, and announced, "I have here a communication for the Honorable John Woodall Murrey, Jr., Esquire."

A forlorn figure emerged from the depths of piles of kitchenware, wiped the soapsuds from his hands and elbows, came slowly forward and sheepishly accepted the imposing looking letter.

Now the mail orderly wasn't kidding. That was the way the letter was addressed—and very properly, too.

An eminent member of his outfit's kitchen police detail was Representative John W. Murrey, Jr., of the Tennessee legislature, from Gallatin, Tenn.

Observers say that the young solon left a bright future political career to enlist in the Army. Equally bright, however, appears his military career. After finishing basic training, he was selected to attend Officer Candidate school, and is now a member of the Second Company, Third Student Training Regiment.

The eagerness which the Axis prisoners showed in surrendering during the recent Tunisian campaign is a significant commentary on Axis freedom.

O. C. Anthropologist Authors Many Books

Columbia University Prof. Authority On Pomo Indians

If the pen is mightier than the sword, one Fort Benning soldier is well on his way to becoming a mighty warrior and an officer who may some day rival the heroic deeds of today's outstanding military leaders.

He is 38-year-old Bernard W. Aginsky of New York City, officer candidate in the Eighth Company, Third Student Training Regiment, who has traveled around the world once and taken several European jaunts on other occasions.

Of the fact that he has published two books on anthropology with another just completed here at Benning, Aginsky is properly modest. As a matter of fact he is somewhat reticent about any publicity.

"It's not typical of anthropologists," he explains.

Aginsky, ever since early youth, manifested a strong interest in his fellow man and consequently directed his education along the lines of social science. In 1931 he received a B.S. degree in vocational guidance and education at New York University, and after another year of post graduate work, received his master's degree.

BEGINS AT 12

He began traveling when he was 12, by making summer trips throughout the United States, sometimes with but more often without his parents. At eighteen he joined the Merchant Marine and in the course of a few short months, made several trips across the Atlantic, landing in England, Ireland and France. In 1933 he traveled to Cuba and Panama, in pursuit of factual data to aid in his anthoropological research and in 1936-37, tripped to Hawaii, China, Japan and Europe. He speaks Spanish and German.

As a member of the faculty of Columbia University in New York City, Candidate Aginsky was sent to northern California to do research on the Pomo Indians there. For years he ate, slept, and lived with them and other American Indians, collecting data for his books.

NEW BOOK

In addition, he has had many articles published in magazines dealing with anthropology. His latest book, "Bio-Social Laws of Society" will be published this year.

Candidate Aginsky has little to say of the places he has traveled or the people living in the countries he visited. "My interests were sociological and my opinions only theoretical," he stated.

Called to active service in November, 1942, Candidate Aginsky received his basic training at Camp Croft, S. C., and upon its completion, was assigned to the Officer Candidate preparatory school there.

3rd STR Unit Has Crack-Shots

The First Company of the Third Student Training Regiment went wild on the class "A" Range for the M-1, and broke all existing records. There were 71 experts, 96 sharpshooters and 29 marksman. The most unusual accomplishment, however, was that in the class of almost two hundred men there was not a single "bolo".

Lieutenant Hazel Made Captain

Lt. Francis J. Heazel, Jr., was recently promoted to captain according to an announcement made by his commanding officer, Colonel Robert Sharp.

Captain Heazel, a reserve officer, received his ROTC training at Georgetown University, while pursuing his course of study for an A.B. degree. In college he was prominent as an editor of school publications, member of Eta Chapter, Beta Theta Pi, and manager for the tennis and ice hockey teams.

Reporting to the Infantry School for his first tour of duty Captain Heazel attended a company officers class and successfully graduated in April this year. Immediately after graduation he was assigned to First Student Training Regiment as a tactical officer.

455th Coast Artillery Wins Cusseta Crown

Unit Keeps Record Unblemished With 8-1 Win Over Mainteneers

A savage 11-hit attack on Will Quinlan and Schutz supporting Cpl. Otto Frazier's steady hurling which allowed the opponents eight scattered hits netted the 455th Coast Artillery Battalion an 8-1 victory over the Maintenance Battalion, 10th Armored Division, and an unbeaten record in the Cusseta League Saturday night.

Opening up with a game-winning five-run uprising in the fourth frame, the Artillerymen went on to score three more on singletons and chalk up their ninth straight victory in the Tiger division's circuit. Frazier, meanwhile, turned in a fancy job of pitching in the pinches and scattering the opposition's blows to keep the Main Post outfit safely in front from the fourth canto to the finish.

The cagey 455th twirler fanned seven batters in besting the defending league champions' pair of hurling stars in what was a neat hurling duel except for the unfortunate fourth stanza, when four singles, an error, a fielder's choice and three bases on balls added up to five tallies.

ONE RUN IN FOURTH

The only run scored off Frazier, and incidently, the first run of the ball game, came in the Mainteneers' first half the fourth, on singles by Schrobach and Spooner around a fielder's choice.

McBride of the winners led the game's stickers, bagging out three singles in as many official trips to the platter. Cunningham, Schrobach and Spooner all got two bingles for the losers.

The score:

Maintenance Bn.
10th A. D. .000 100 000—1	8 4
455th C. A.
(AA) Bn. 000 501 11x—8	11 3

Quinlan, Schultz and DeChristopher; Frazer and Huxtable.

While members of the McClellan Field (Cal.) baseball team were playing the inmates of San Quentin within the walls of the prison, some convicts rifled apparel of soldiers in the players' dressing room. One soldier was nicked for 20 bucks and two fountain pens. A good many packs of cigarets were swiped also. The home team manager declared that "a few men are unable to shake criminal tendencies."

All servicemen, regulars, volunteers and selectees alike, are in for the duration plus six months.

Academic Profs Dominate Infantry School League Race

King-pins However Have Tough Competition Ahead From 3 Teams

By SGT. MILTON LUBAN

With the first round-robin of the Infantry School League nearing completion, the Academic Regiment Profs are still dominating the loop race. Not counting last night's game between the Academics and the 176th Infantry, played after the Bayonet had gone to press, the Profs have won six straight games while remaining undefeated.

As the league race slowly takes form, four teams seem to loom up as the powerhouses of the loop. The Profs, of course, have to be regarded as favorites if only because of their lead. However, a tough fight can be expected from the Student Training Brigade, the 176th and the 300th. The latter is on a rampage, having won its last five games after dropping the first two.

The Brigade's two defeats were heart-breaking affairs, one being an 11-inning loss to the Profs and the other a 3 to 2 affair in which the winning 176th got only two hits.

SPIRITS DROP ONE

The 176 Spirits have dropped only one game and have proven themselves a tough, resourceful outfit with a sensational pitcher in Cooper.

The 176th and the 300th meet on Monday night at Gowdy Field in the week's outstanding game. The outcome will throw the winning team into a second-place tie with the Brigade, unless the 176th should beat both the Profs and the 300th. In that event the Profs will be holding first place only by percentage points.

Other games on tap for the coming week are the 71st Engineers vs. the 764th Tanks on Sunday at Harmony Church; the 176th Infantry vs. the 71st Engineers at Gowdy Field on Wednesday and the Academic Regiment vs. the 244th Field Artillery at Harmony Church the same evening.

LAST WEEK'S HI-LIGHTS

Highlight of last week was the 300th's 2 to 0 victory over the Benning Rifles. Luck in the way of a terrific downpour gave the 300th the game. For five innings Lefty Francis had hurled beautiful ball, holding the Rifles to only two hits. Then, in the first half of the sixth, the Rifles exploded with two doubles, two singles and a homer for five runs. But, before the side could be put out and the 300th have its time at bat to make it an official inning, the skies opened and within two minutes the ballpark was covered with scattered lakes. The game had to be called and the score reverted back to the fifth inning, giving the 300th official credit for a shutout victory.

Standing of the teams as of Tuesday, May 25:

	W	L	Pct.
Academic Regiment	6	0	1.000
300th Infantry	5	2	.714

Softballers Win Thrill Packed Game 18-7

The officers softball team of the First Student Training Regiment, after a lone defeat Monday night, resumed their blitz-kreig tactics by scalping the BAR Group 18-7 in a thrill-packed game that kept the players "sweating-it-out" till the final gong.

The ball game thundered along in its usual hectic manner until the fourth inning when, howling his loudest, Super-Wolf Gene White smacked the sphere with a solemn swing that racked up the first and only hammer in the game.

In the sixth frame "fickle fate" took the game off the ice for the Wolves, by permitting the right arm of their number one pitching sensation, Super-Wolf Vern Rullson, to go sour. The enemy, quick to take advantage of any letdown, sent seven of their best batmen galloping across the home sack. However, in the seventh frame, the 1st Regiment Wolves showed coordination by pooling their resources for an additional nine runs.

A slight pause was necessitated in the second inning, by a wild throw which sent the ball through the windshield of a spectator's car. The spectator, Miss Mary Callahan, felt that she was entitled, in lieu of her windshield, to retain the ball as a souvenir. However, a committee of ball players consisting of Roy Brooks, Bob Cook, and Bill Huxford, pointed out the necessity of having the ball in order to continue the game and, following a few moments of hageling play was resumed.

More Guard Units Enrolled

Six Southern States Represented In School

State Guard units from six southeastern states sent men to Fort Benning last Sunday for a week's staff officers' course conducted by Internal Security District No. 4, commanded by Brig. Gen. Eric Fisher Wood.

Classes and demonstrations are being conducted by officers on the staff of General Wood, instructors from the Infantry School and members of the staff of the Parachute School.

Among the subjects being covered during the week are map reading, defense against parachutists, field orders, attack and defense of a village, motor transportation, administration, training schedules and military aid to civilian authorities.

Several demonstrations are being put on for the visiting officers of the guard units, among them parachutist demolition tactics, parachute jumping and an emergency river crossing method for infantry troops.

During their stay here the officers are living in barracks and eating in mess halls. Long days of classes and demonstrations and evenings of classes and discussions fill the week for the student officers during the course.

Draft Board Hounds Soldier In Army 6 Years

For six years Officer Candidate Thomas D. Sherbert, 24th Company, Third Student Training Regiment here in the Infantry School, has served in the United States Army, and the selective service board was among the least of his worries.

Recently, however, the "draft" caught up with him. A card from his home town draft board in Spantanburg, S. C., advised him that he must "register immediately."

If Candidate Sherbert, a warrant officer before coming to Officer Candidate School, successfully passes the rugged three month course here in The Infantry School, he will be a commissioned second lieutenant in the Army of the United States about the first of July.

OHIO STATE HOOP STAR AT BENNING

O. C. Moeller Played On Strong Camp Wheeler Quintet

Candidate Ed Moeller, 23rd Company, Third Student Training Regiment, former Ohio State University basketball star, like many other athletes has carried on in his sport for the Army.

During the past season Candidate Moeller played forward on the strong Camp Wheeler Post basketball team which earned the title of Georgia State Service team champions with a record of 26 wins and four losses against such competition as Georgia and Georgia Tech.

At Ohio State University between 1939 and 1942, Moeller saw three years of action on Big Ten courts with a team that provided more than a fair share of trouble for conference winners. In 1939 the team participated in the invitational tournament which is a yearly part of the Sugar Bowl Classic in New Orleans.

JOURNALIST ALSO

Along with Moeller's sports participation runs experience and training in the art and pictorial side of journalism directed at a career in advertising. At the University he held a job-fellowship as production manager of the Graphic Arts department. Moeller also served as artist for the campus humor magazine "The Sundial." He is a member of Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

Upon completion of his University studies Moeller joined the enlisted reserve and was called to active duty in November. He received his basic training at Camp Wheeler before coming to Fort Benning.

'Chutists Win Sixth In Row

Callaway Mill Team Goes Down By 11-2

The Parachute School baseball team invaded LaGrange last Saturday and defeated the Callaway Mills nine by a score of 11-2 for their sixth win in a row.

The Callaway nine scored the first run of the game in the fourth on one hit and two errors, however this lead was short lived as the 'chutists came back strong in the fifth and pushed across two runs on three hits. The Callaway chunkers gave up five bases on balls and two hits in the sixth to give TPS six more runs.

Callaway scored again in their half of the sixth, pushing across a run on a hit, walk and fielder's choice. The Callaway nine employed three pitchers who gave up a total of twelve hits.

The parachute nine finished strong by scoring three runs on four hits in the ninth. Barden, hurling for TPS, allowed only five hits and struck out nine. Gilman, Parachute School shortstop, collected two singles and a double to lead the hitters for the day.

75% OF CLASS ARE SHARPSHOOTERS

The 17th Company, First Student Training Regiment, completed its work with the M-1 Committee with scores exceeding any so far made on the new course. Over 75 per cent of the company made sharpshooter or better. This feat won for it the commendation of the Committee and the Battalion Commander. High man for the course was Capt. Leslie G. Wilson, who scored 194.

SPIRIT CAPTAIN—S. Sgt. Robert Ramizotti leads the 176th batters with a .391 batting average. Playing short stop for the Spirits Ramizotti was formerly all Piedmont third baseman. He will be one of the Spirits to watch in the 176-Prof game. (U. S. Signal Corps Photo.)

Helped Northwestern Defeat Great Illini In Sports Upset

Leading Northwestern University to a smashing victory over a great Illinois basketball team starring the incomparable Lou Boudreau, now manager of the Cleveland Indians, was the proud feat of Officer Candidate Fred Trenkle, Seventh Company, Third Student Training Regiment, here in The Infantry School.

That history-making night in Big Ten sports annals, Trenkle scored 19 points, keeping his team in front throughout the game. It was one of the few times in his career that "Lucky Lou" took a back seat to a better man.

Candidate Trenkle first started hitting the hoops at Bloomington, Ill., where he gained early fame as an All-State forward. Although he was much sought after by many colleges, Trenkle enrolled at Northwestern, an ambition he had cherished throughout his school days. In his senior year Trenkle was honored by being elected captain of the 1938 Northwestern team.

That year Northwestern started off with a bang, chalking up eight victories against one loss to lead the way in the Big Ten Conference. The team seemed certain to win the title, and then came the big game with Ohio State. Midway during the fray the aggressive Trenkle got caught in a mixup under the basket and was carried off the floor with a broken knee and arm. That ended his basketball days, and without his inspirational leadership, Northwestern slipped to a final standing of third place in the league.

Third Regiment Triples Fall War Bond Drive

Final figures disclose that the spring War Bond drive of the Third Student Training Regiment yielded results exceeding by twelve times the sales made in the first drive, conducted in November.

In the recent drive, which closed the first part of this month, the regiment, which is commanded by Col. Robert H. Lord, made bond investments representing a maturity value of $44,125.50.

Sees Snake; Seizes Same

A hasty and entirely practicable "school solution" to an unforeseen tactical problem was delivered on the spot during field exercises of the 24th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, last week.

While advancing on a simulated enemy machine gun position, two officer candidates encountered a snake of sizable proportions. The lieutenant in charge noted their difficulty and without hesitation, barked:

"Don't stop. Don't stop. One of you engage the snake. The other engage the enemy!"

The company spent three days in bivouac with full field equipment in the Smith Creek area, doing practical work in scouting, patrolling and the technique of rifle fire.

3rd STR Unit Fails To Bolo Single M-1 Shot

As a group, the officer candidate class of the Third Company, Third Student Training Regiment, did an outstanding job, both in target shooting and in range procedure, when they fired the M1 course on McAndrews Range recently. The class average for 213 men on the first line was a sharpshooter average of 167. Candidate Fred A. Hicks of Benning, Calif., led the field over this course with a high score of 194 of a possible 210. Candidate Nelson A. Odell was a close second with 192.

The leading platoon was the third platoon with an average of 171 followed by the fourth platoon with 166, the second platoon with 165.8 and the first platoon with a 165 average.

Thirty-nine Candidates fired scores to qualify as experts; ninety-six qualified as sharpshooters; seventy qualified as marksmen; and only six men bolted.

If you are an "average" soldier (that elusive military equivalent of "the man in the street"), you have eaten 253 pounds of potatoes in the past year.

4-1 Victory Winds Up Unbeaten Record In Sand Hill League

The Third Armored Regiment nine, 10th Armored Division, kept its record unblemished Saturday with a 4-1 victory over the 423rd AFA at Tiger Field. The 423rd made a better showing than the score indicates with its all-out effort to win a place in the playoffs.

In the other two games taking place during the afternoon, the 1st Bn. 54th Inf. won by a forfeit over the 2nd. Bn., 54th Inf., thus assuring themselves a place in the playoffs. The boys of the 1st Bn. had to be contented with a 9 to 0 gift although they had sought to present their coach, Lt. Albert Nadworny with a real victory as this was the loser's last game. The 90th Recon. Bn. defeated the 150th Signal nine by a score of 13 to 8 in the only other game played. This was the only game played in the Cusseta league. Milburn and Roper each went the route for their teams with the former receiving credit for the game. DEML Day-Room Books Enthrall Adventurous GI

But Picture Books For The Illiterate Are Missing, Alas!

BY PVT. THOMAS DEVINE

Tom and Polly had a new toy. It was a little gray elephant; his name was Jumbo. "I like Jumbo" said Polly, "He is a good little elephant;" "but I want to see a big elephant: "big elephants are funny: "toy elephants are not very funny."

And so on far into the rainy Sunday afternoon may the tough troopers of the D. E. M. L. Dragoons divert themselves in the company day room, the foregoing being a legitimate sample chosen at random from the bookshelves.

"Why Grace, what in the world is the matter? You've been crying."

"Yes I have, Betty, but don't mind me. It's all so sudden. Come in, I shall be all right, presently. Don't mind."

Grace Ford tried to repress her emotion but the cause of her tears was evidently too recent or the effort at self-control too much for her, for she gave way to another outburst, sobbing this time on the shoulder of Betty Nelson who patted her sympathetically and murmured sympathetically to her chum.

CHEWED FINGERNAILS

With fingernails chewed down to the quick the nemesis of Hitler, if his nerves are equal to the strain may, on finishing the thrills of "The Outdoor Girls," snatch up a copy of "Elsie Dinsmore" whose dare devil speed is indicated by this excerpt:

"Oh, Papa," she murmured (all these girls seem to be given to "murmuring." Why can't they speak up) in a low voice of deep feeling, laying her hand affectionately against his hand, "I might have lost my life by disobedience. How good God was to take care of me. Oh, I hope I shall never be so naughty again."

Of course there are those soldiers who scorn the meretricious excitement of such fiction and who rather spend their spare time improving themselves. In such case they might cuddle up with a volume on current events. (Current, that is, in 1920) and learn that:

"Japanese statecraft whether displayed in Manchuria, in Mongolia Mo or in the Marshall Islands, points to a perfectly consistent and legitimate policy which has only to be rightly appreciated in order to remove all immediate prospect of serious friction between Nippon and Anglo-Saxon peoples."

'FLEEING NYMPH'

Should a sentimental sergeant be feeling rather moody and temperamental he can seek solice in "The Fleeing Nymph" and artistic little tome issued in 1909. Those who wish the higher education will discover "the Fifth Reader" and other in the series of "Child Classics." If a top sergeant wishes to improve his style of delivery, he may study "The World's Famous Orations" which is also on tap.

Theology is brought into our lives by means of Judge Rutherford's tracts bound into little book called "Salvation" and anyone who is thinking of raising geraniums might find something about their habits in "Plant Us."

The only serious oversight in the day room shelves is a lack of picture books for those who can't read.

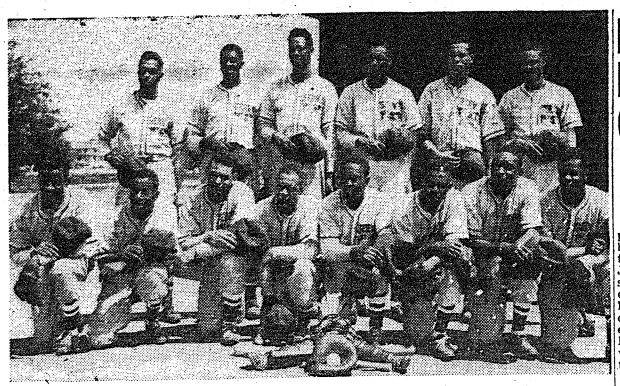
It had apparently been destined for service abroad, but according to a writer of that period, "the nation-wide outbreak of influenza so decimated the ranks of the Twenty-ninth as to prevent its departure for France."

Among other engagements in the Philippines, one historian of the organization wrote: "The men took part in the Surigao, Mindana expedition, during which time they experienced much hiking and much sleeping in the open with their clothes on—often wet from wading across streams and rice-paddies. During the first three months each soldier had to have his gun by his side at all times, night and day. Many hardships were endured, but most of the men seemed to enjoy soldiering in the field better than garrison duty at the barracks."

ASSIGNED TO POST

The regiment came to Fort Benning in October, 1919. From the beginning, its principal employment had been as a demonstration unit for the Infantry School. The regiment has also been used from time to time as a testing unit for many new items of possible issue to the Infantry. First tested here were the "K" micn sack and the non-metallic steel-teen. In an experimental hike last year, one of the companies of the regiment marched forty-two miles in slightly less than two days. The men were carefully weighed, watched, and checked to determine the endurance of troops in making long marches.

The regiment claims connection with two older regiments having borne the designation "Twenty-ninth." One saw service in the War of 1812 but was merged with other regiments to constitute the old Sixth Infantry. The second was formed during the Civil War and later was absorbed in the organization of the present 11th Infantry. Thus when the new regiment was organized in 1901 it adopted as its motto the Latin inscription meaning "Risen with Increased Splendor."



DUTY IN MANILA

In May of 1902 the regiment arrived in Manila, and in 1903 the notorious bandit leader Adriano Concepcion was subdued and captured by Company "E." The regiment returned to the United States in 1904, being stationed at Whipple Barracks, Arizona, Ft. Douglas, Utah, and at Ft. Du-Chesne, Utah, with headquarters at Fort Douglas. In 1907 the regiment again returned to the Philippines, returning to the United States in 1909 with headquarters at Fort Porter and Fort Niagara.

Declaration of war found the Twenty-ninth guarding the vulnerable mechanism of the Panama Canal, where it remained until 1918 when it was ordered to Camp Beauregard, La. There it was divided to help form the 84th Infantry, and was constituted part of the 17th Division.

After the Armistice, the regiment, less the First Battalion moved to Camp Shelby, Miss., to assist in the task of demobilizing units returning from France.

The first Battalion at that time was transferred to Fort Benning, where the new Infantry School was being formed. In 1919 the regiment joined the First Battalion here.

Army Nurse From Far-Off India Joins Hospital Staff

Angel Of Mercy Relates Her Experiences With U. S. Air Corps

BY PRIVATE THOMAS DEVINE

To the natives of Karachi the sacred cows wandering about the streets were possible reincarnations of their own forebears but to Nurse Sophie Swearingen, now on the staff of the Station Hospital at Fort Benning, they were just so many frustrated steaks and baffled rib roasts.

The nurse has just returned from a year's service in India and one of her greatest pleasures in a twelvemonth was to snap at a beefsteak which is rare in more ways than one even on her native heath at this juncture.

A native of Montgomery, Ala., Nurse Swearingen has been in military service for nearly four years. Although she had requested Philippine service visit before the war, she did not receive such an assignment and her detail to India about a year ago this time was her first experience outside of the United States.

En route to her assignment the ship on which she traveled went through the Mozambique chinnel which divides the Island of Madagascar from the African continent. Fighting was still taking place in that sector and fires from burning towns were visible from the vessel at night.

NURSES' AIR CORPS

Karachi on the northwest coast of India was the post to which Nurse Swearingen was assigned, and a base hospital there cared for those members of our air corps who are on duty in that part of the Indian Empire.

Social relations between American personnel and the native population, was at a minimum. Preceded by their world wide reputation for affluence the American military in India immediately became naturals for the myriad beggars which are part and parcel of all Asia and finally the British had to intervene to stop the nuisance. Ignorance of the language was a barrier to contact with the inhabitants and the high jinks of Mahatma Ghandi put a further damper on any chummines that might hive developed. During his fasts the town was put out of bounds for all Americans and Europeans and such of those who disregarded the edict suffered stoning at the hands of the populace. One man received a slight wound on such an occasion.

AVOID POLITICS

Some of the educated natives of the higher class made overtures to the Americans and on occasion invited them to social gatherings. Attendance at such affairs, however, were discouraged by commanding officers as it was feared that political discussions might take place and opinions be expressed which would not help an already delicate situation.

Nurse Swearingen says that the people are abysmally ignorant and so inhibited by hide-bound traditions and superstitions that their ability to guide their own destinies at their present stage of development is inconceivable. They appear to be apathetic to pgesent world affairs and their implications but are certainly not hostile save when incited by Ghandi and his didoes.

Characteristically with Americans in any foreign setting the principal discomforts experienced were in the real of eating and sanitation. Most of the food was limited stuff from the States. The meat was unpalatable to put it mildly and the nurse had an unpleasant suspicion at times that she was esting deceased camel. Butter which was of the canned variety had not stood the process to well and when the girls could get bread and peanut butter they considered it a rare enough delicacy to make an entire meal of it.

SANITATION ELEMENTARY

Indian conceptions of sanitation are elementary to say the least. If a camel or any other beast expires it i. left where cross marks spot to be dined upon by vultures, those unfastidious winged gourmands of the Orient, outraging meanwhile, the more delicate nasal sensibilities of the Occidental visitors.

Bath-tubs were as rare as ice and while the nurses had a shower to use in warm weather, during the cold season they had to fetch hot water to an out of doors tin tub and bathe al fresco.

Another difficulty was in keeping the white uniforms of her calling clean since native methods of beating wet clothes with sticks is more picturesque than it is productive of practical results and the native laundries knew of no other means.

Transportation the nurse found slow and primitive. Gharrys, which are carriages like our victorias, function as cabs in the towns while the railways are slow and dirty, not surprising as the carriage windows do not know the luxury of glass. Therefore, though Nurse Swearingen did visit Bombay and found it a beautiful city, she confined her travelling to a minimum through necessity.

GLAD TO COME HOME

Expecting to remain in India indefinitely the nurse was delighted to be assigned to the group of American military being invalided back to the States. Pursuing a protracted route in the course of which they touched Cape Town and Free Town in Africa the party ultimately reached home without molestation by enemy action.

Back in a paradise veil well plumbed and well fed Fort Benning Sophie Swearingen would not swap the Main Post for Nirvana with the other six Heavens of the Veda thrown in to make weight.

War Department Changes Over-Seas Mail Regulations

R. P. Richardson, postmaster at Fort Benning, announces packages may now be sent to Army personnel overseas without a request for the articles having been approved by a commanding officer. He pointed out, however that not more than one parcel shall be accepted for mailing in any one week when sent by or on behalf of the same person or concern to or for the same addressee. The parcels must also conform in all respects to the limits of weight and size and other conditions set forth in Postal Regulations.

Parcels presented under this modified arrangement must be accepted with the written request for the articles contained therein, together with the envelope bearing the A. P. O. cancellation in which the request was received, Postmaster Richardson declared.

When the request is contained in a processed facsimile of a V-mail letter, the envelope will not be required.

No perishable matter should be included in any parcels, and it is contemplated that there will be no exceptions to the weight and size limits for parcels to individuals. The requests will be postmarked by the accepting employe in such manner as to prevent its re-use and then returned to the sender, the postmaster said.

Tiger Mess Personnel Cutting Food Corners

Make Every Ounce Pull Its Own Load; Waste Is Out

"It's rationed" may be a new song for the average civilian housewife but it is an old refrain to the army chef. Army mess sergeants have always been trained to watch leftovers and conserve their available supplies. Today they are able to adjust themselves to our present agricultural crisis with a minimum of difficulty.

A visit to the kitchens of the 10th Armored Division at Fort Benning found the chefs and mess sergeants cutting the usual corners and making every ounce of food pull its full load.

Rations are allotted to each company in the division on the basis of men actually eating in the mess hall. There is no food planned for absentees. If five men fail to show up at dinner, their rations are considered as an average at that meal and deducted from the allowance for the following meal. "The little man who wasn't there" doesn't get fed in the Army.

This system of allocating food on the basis of the mess hall count has enabled the Army to make substantial savings on the week-end periods when many men eat in civilian homes and restaurants.

MUST EAT ON DUTY

However, soldiers today are under instructions to eat their meals in their regular mess halls when they are on duty status. Lt. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, commanding general of the Army ground forces, has recently called upon all Army personnel not to put any extra burden on civilian food supplies.

The definition of a leftover in the 10th Armored Division today is anything that can be safely carried over to the next meal. And so many a hungry Tiger may find that what he passed up at noon is back before him at supper.

Critical foods are as carefully rationed to army personnel as they are to civilians. Lemonade and other fruit drinks have been developed as two excellent substitutes for coffee.

"Steaks" in the 10th Division appear in the mess hall as beef stew—with plenty of vegetables added—which makes a very satisfactory dish and enables each pound of beef to do plenty of extra work.

And then macaroni and cheese make frequent appearances on the menu in place of meat dishes. The Army has always known that meat is not an absolute necessity for each meal.

3 MONTHLY INVENTORIES

Every Army kitchen takes an inventory three times a month—on the 10th, 20th and 30th. Any excess over one day's supply must go back to the Division Quartermaster. Mess sergeants can do no hoarding for special fancy meals. The 10th Division subsistence officer is constantly checking on the eating habits of the various organizations to adjust for the tastes of men from different parts of the country.

Soldiers from the East will show much more respect for a good piece of fish than boys from the South, and those from Louisiana understand a serving of grits a little better than New Yorkers.

Soldiers are and always have been scientifically fed. They get a balanced diet, and it is a well-known fact that the average recruit still continues to gain weight during his basic training. The Army mess is wholesome, palatable and skilfully prepared to get the most from a limited quantity of food.

Brazil's—

States don't have to be concerned about the attitude of Brazilians. We are solidly with the United States."

The only concern of Brazilians, he said, is the attitude of the United States toward them.

Doctor Barata pointed out that "Brazil is doing everything she can in this war." He declared that his people were very pro-democratic.

"If the people of the United States make any mistakes," he asserted, "one of them is looking at South America as one nation. The countries of South America differ greatly."

As a result, he said, they should be treated separately. Barata expressed the hope that Brazil "would get the very best of treatment, because she has been so cooperative with the United States."

The two Brazilians spent the morning at the Parachute school where they were escorted by Lt. Col. James Coutts, assistant commandant of the school, and Lt. John Minter.

The party lunched at the officers club with Brig. Gen. Henry Perrine.

During the afternoon the visitors witnessed demonstrations at the Infantry school, accompanied by Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen and Brig. Gen. George Weems.

Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, Fort Benning commanding officer, welcome the South Americans to the post at dinner, served at the officers club.

Pvt. Armand Bissonnette, known to boxing fans as Kid McCoy, was given an honorable discharge from the Army recently because of a systemic blood poisoning condition. Bissonnette, who was stationed at Camp Maxey, Tex., has beaten such former world champs as Lou Ambers, Lew Jenkins and fought a draw with sluggin' Henry Armstrong. He's 20 years old, and plans to return to the ring after he recovers his health.

Mobile Blood Bank To Visit City June 1-3

Unit Will Come To Post Later In Summer For Plasma

Due to the fact that duty on the post conflicts with the hours when blood donations will be be taken by the mobile bank to visit Columbus June 1-3, very few Fort Benning soldiers have volunteered a pint of their blood, Mrs. Frank Lumpkin in charge of the booth in downtown Columbus, reported early this week. However, Mrs. Lumpkin stated that the bank will come to Fort Benning later in the summer to take donations.

Mrs. Lumkpin stated that the booth would be open for the remainder of this week from 9 to 5 o'clock, Fort Benning time, on the second floor of the Flowers building at 12th Street and First Avenue. She said that some soldiers have been quoted as saying that when the mobile unit arrives, they will come forward with donations and she emphasized that a formal appointment is absolutely necessary.

The process of examination, bleeding, and rest takes about 40 minutes with people being taken in groups of ten, and those without appointments cannot be accepted.

PREREQUISITES GIVEN

Blood will be accepted from all people in good health in between the ages of 21 and 60. Before a donation is taken the donor must pass a physical examination and furnish a medical history of himself or herself. No one with a history of malaria will be accepted, and those suffering from sore throats or head colds will have to postpone their donations. A bronze medal is awarded those giving one donation, and a silver medal to those giving three. When the bank arrives, it will establish headquarters in the basement of St. Luke Methodist church.

Mrs. Lumpkin said that during the recent War Fund drive many Fort Benning soldiers had expressed the desire to donate blood and that she is certain that donors from the post will be plentiful when the unit comes to the reservation. Those who plan to give blood next week have been able to make arrangements so that their absence will not conflict with military assignments.

troopers. They are dropped in small parachutes, snugly encased in a wire mesh basket, four to a basket. Picked up, they are placed in the portable carrying cases where the paratroopers are trained to care for them for several days if necessary.

A new plastic carrying case of much lighter weight than the old aluminum type capsule is attached to the bird's legs and enables the sending of much larger sheets of paper than formerly.

Here at Fort Benning, under direction of Lt. Arthur Lehman, 50 of the 1,500 birds at the post are being used as "permanent cadre" birds to help train the paratroopers. Those soldiers who go through the course of instructions then are prepared to handle birds in the field. Fort Benning is one of the largest breeding centers for the pigeons. When they are several weeks old, they are sent out to schools for training, and then sent to the front.

'YANK' FAMOUS

One bird, bred at Fort Benning, "Yank," already has gained fame for his exploits in North Africa, where he bore the first news from the front of the recapture of Gafsa by American troops.

Of the 50 "teaching birds" used for the instruction of paratroopers at Fort Benning, one bird already has become a qualified paratrooper by making five jumps from an airplane. He soon will be given his silver parachute wings—but right now Lt. Col. James W. Coutts, assistant commandant of the Parachute School, wants to find a name for the bird. Best one yet suggested is "Thunder Bird." Anybody having any ideas on the subject may send them in to the colonel. A "Thunder Bird" was the insignia of the very first Parachute Battalion to be trained at Fort Benning and thought it now is serving overseas.

His promotion to the rank of major general followed.

General Landrum enlisted as a private in Florida in 1910 and was commissioned a second lieutenant in 1916. During the first World War he was stationed in the Philippines as aide to Brig. General Evans and later commanded a company of the 27th Infantry.

IN SIBERIA

In 1918 he went to Vladivostock, Siberia, with an American Army of Occupation. There he commanded a battalion which subsequently was stationed deep in the interior of Siberia.

He returned to this country in 1920 and was ordered to duty at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. In 1923 he joined the Adjutant General's Department in Washington and three years later served in the Presidio of San Francisco, Calif.

After attending the Command and General Staff school at Leavenworth, he was assigned to the Sixth Infantry, Jefferson Barracks, Mo., as commander of a battalion that was on duty at the Chicago World Fair.

After service with Headquarters of the Sixth Army Corps in Chicago, he attended and was graduated from the Army War College. He was then ordered to Fort Benning.

KNOWS JAPANESE

General Landrum is an expert in amphibious training and knows the Jap well from association with him in Siberia.

Another general who was associated with General Landrum at Fort Benning who is now serving on a foreign front is Major General Omar N. Bradley, former commandant of the infantry School, now commanding the American Second Army which took Bizerte in Tunisia.

It is interesting to note that General Landrum's father gained distinction in the War Between the States by organizing his own company in South Alabama at the age of 20 and rising to the command of the 36th Alabama Infantry at the age of 23.

General Landrum was born in Pensacola, Fla., but claims as his home "The Army."

Doughboys Must Learn 'King's English' Pronto

Col. Massey Says Language Differences Produce Headaches

BY PVT. THOMAS DEVINE

"Are you there—I say send a brace of lorries to the depot will you, there's a good fellow. There's a goods van full of stuff for you lads and we want to clear the metals instanter."

Should one of Colonel Stephen B. Massey's worthy quartermasters find himself at the wrong end of such a telephonic monologue he might well be—shall we say stymied? No—let's say baffled. How could a poor G. I. from Idaho possibly know that he was being asked to send a couple of trucks to the freight yards and unload a freight car so the tracks might be cleared sooner than possible?

However, the quartermasters and, for that matter many of the rest of us, may soon have to master such English expressions and idioms. Any American travelling casually in peacetime England had his minor difficulties, usually more amusing than irritating, with these differences in nomenclature. One "books a passage" instead of buying a ticket in a "first class carriage" rather than a Pullman. One's "luggage" is placed in the "luggage van" instead of having one's baggage stowed in the baggage car. A sedan is a "saloon" and a saloon is a "pub," a subway is known as a "tube" and the first floor of a house is up one flight. A freight car is a "van" and a van is, believe it or not, a "pantechnicon." You may wonder why anyone might choose to call a baby carriage a "perambulator" but the English do and like it.

PRODUCES HEADACHES

We might dip into our journalistic bag of tricks and describe the headaches caused by these national differences of expression as rhetorical sabotage. Instead we shall forego such fancy metaphors and be content with saying that they very often definitely toss ashes in the ice cream of Anglo-American mutual aid more commonly known as Lend Lease.

In describing the differences in language that the American quartermasters must meet when they go to England, Col. Massey recalled a story told by one of the men in England.

"It seems that he wanted to requisition garbage cans—but the English looked and looked, and couldn't find any garbage cans," he relates. "So the quartermaster, in desperation, sent to the United States, much worried over having to take up a lot of good shipping space.

"Finally, however, he visited a friend's country estate and spied some beautiful garbage cans, whereupon he learned that in England they're called dust bins. A quick cable cancelled the requisition for garbage cans, and saved a lot of shipping space, since he got his dust bins, or garbage cans, from the British without any further trouble."

MORE DIFFERENCES

Other examples of contrasting English and American names for identical objects which Colonel Massey lists are as follows: a blow torch is a "brazing lamp," an adjust able monkey wrench is an adjustable spanner," garters are "suspenders," a mackinaw is a "belted reefer" or "monkey jacket," a kerosene lantern is a "hurricane lamp" and the kerosene it burns is "parrafine" which word to us, in the United States means a white wax made from petroleum.

The English term for our cake turner is a "fish or egg slice, a battery is known as an "accumulator" which, one must admit, it is. They call an identification tag an "identity disc" a thumb tack a "drawing pin" and our poor o. d. breeches are allotted the undignified name of "Pantaloons etc." (SIC).

Now the English have commenced the practice of listing our standard nomenclature with the British equivalent of each item as taken from the British War Vocabulary, or when this was not possible, of producing a sample of the item in question.

To complicate matters further British weights and measures are not only, in some cases, differently named from ours, but are also of diverse values. Thus a British ton is 2240 pounds as against our 2000. One British Standard of weight is a "stone" equal to 14 pounds and a "score" which is 20 pounds.

LIEUTENANT MARTIN FIRST LIEUTENANT

Promotion of 2nd Lt. Theodore K. Martin of Blue Mountain, Miss., to the rank of first lieutenant, has been announced here by Col. Richard G. McKee, commanding officer of the 300th Infantry Regiment, in which Lt. Martin is serving as assistant plans and training officer.

In September of 1941, Lt. Martin joined the Army and was sent to Camp Wolters, Texas, where he remained until September of the following year. He was then selected to attend the Infantry Officer Candidate School and on completing his course there he was commissioned a second lieutenant and assigned to the 300th Infantry Regiment at the same Fort.

Gounod Mass Scheduled In Post Chapel Sunday

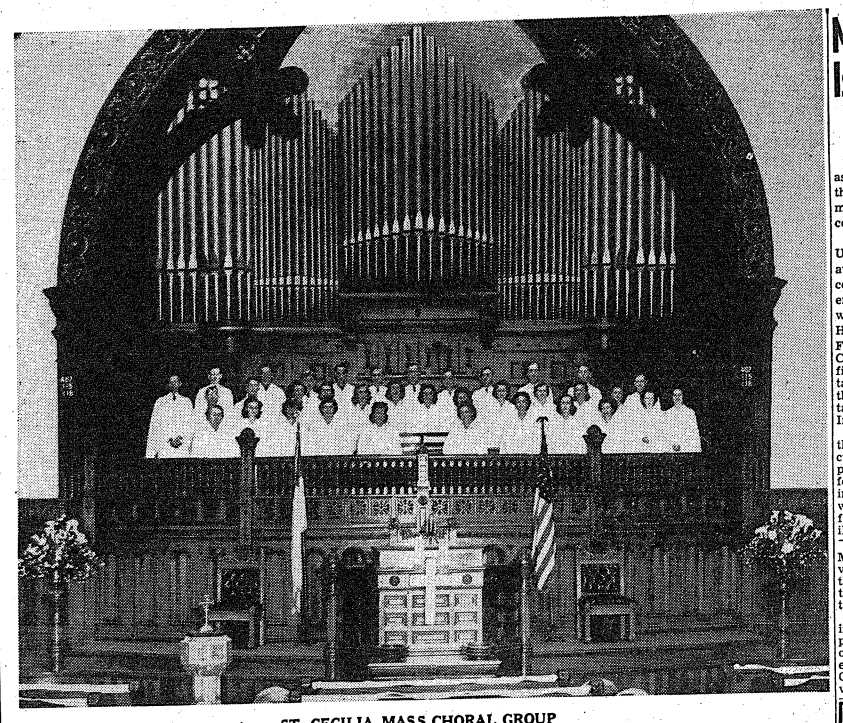
Columbus Choral Group Of 36 Voices To Sing At Special Services

Fort Benning military personnel is invited to attend a service of divine worship at the Post Chapel, Sunday afternoon, May 30, at 6:30 o'clock EWT, at which a group of singers from Columbus will give Gounod's "St. Cecilia Mass," Post Chaplain F. M. Thompson announces.

A trio composed of Mrs. Richard Lamb, soprano; Joe McCook, tenor; and Tom O'Kelley, baritone; and a chorus of thirty-five voices will sing the mass.

Directing the choral group is Miss Mary Catherine Medley. The choir is composed of voices from St. Lake Methodist Church and the First Presbyterian Church, Columbus. Mrs. Robert Gatewood is serving as co-director. Mrs. Walter E. Brown will play the organ accompaniment.

The "St. Cecilia Mass," the actual name of which is the "Messe Solennelle," was written early during the career of Charles Gounod, French composer and religious mystic. Born in post-revolutionary Paris of a family of artists and musicians, Gounod planned to study for the priesthood. After two years of theological study, he gave up the ministry and entered upon a professional musical career. His study was not wasted, however; for being by temperament a religious man, Gounod's music reveals an appreciation of literary quality and an insight into religious values such as is not common among composers.



MASS EXPLAINED.

The word "Mass", as a musical term is used to designate a musical treatment of certain portions of the Service of Holy Communion. Developing from the time when a "Mass" was simply a collection of musical settings for the congregational portions of the Service, by the nineteenth century a "mass" had come to be a unified, coherent work of musical art, deliberately written and produced as a work of art, and sung by concert choirs. Though the words were still the words of a church service, they were in effect only a libretto for an extended and elaborate musical composition.

Thus, while the "St. Cecilia" is not without deep spiritual significance, it has been freed by its art-form from the limitations of any one ecclesiastical heritage. The text is composed of some of the most ancient hymns and prayers of the Christian church, many of which are still in use in the worship of Protestant churches. The "St. Cecilia," and any other such "mass," may be looked upon, therefore, as the common heritage of all Christians, of whatever ecclesiastical persuasion.

CYCLE OF MOODS

One who enters sympathetically into the hearing of the "Messe Solennelle" will be led through a cycle of moods. The work opens with the "Kyrie eleison," which is a deeply-felt cry of penitence: "Lord have mercy upon us." The mood then changes to one of praise and festival rejoicing, the "Gloria in excelsis," recalling the angelic choir with its "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." The "St. Cecelia" continues with the "Credo," a musical setting of the Nicene Creed, which strikes a note of sustained faith and positive assurance. From this climactic point the music moves into a mood of reverent adoration, expressed in the familiar "Sanctus,"

Chairborne G. I. Lifts Voice Against Professional Snobbery

Office Soldier So Assigned By Duly Constituted Authority

By Pvt. Thomas Devine

One of the most petty and childish prejudices in the army is that entertained by the personnel of "line" outfits against those men in headquarters and other posts where clerical personnel is essential. That this is a carryover from civilian life where mechanical and industrial workers profess a great scorn for the "white collar" men makes it none the less warranted.

The nature of our civilization in the 20th century is such that the man who does office work and those who do physical labor are equally necessary to our well-being and prosperity in peace times and to our progress and safety in war. To foster ill feeling between these groups is absurd and unjustified.

In many an outfit men from all walks of civilian life get along perfectly well with one another during basic training. They all experience the same discomforts and the ex-lawyer or former secretary is no more apt to renig than is the erstwhile blacksmith or lumberjack. If anything, the man who previously did sedentary work is more apt to make an even greater effort to avoid the suspicion of "softness" which is apt to attach to such people.

PERFECT HARMONY

Perfect harmony prevails and no snobbery rears its head until at the end of basic training the men are assigned to the places and occupations for which they have been chosen by the classification center or their company officers. It might be observed at this point that the individual recruit does not choose his job through whim or fancy. He is allotted to it by a constituted authority and such allotments are supposedly made on a basis of the man's previous experience or education.

When advanced training begins with each man functioning in the capacity to which he has been assigned the headquarters men and other clerical workers are usually assigned to a separate barracks and comprise an individual platoon on formation. From then on they become the doghouse platoon. When tedius company duty is to be performed the announcement is apt to be phrased, "You'll all wash vehicles this afternoon: (Pause and vindictive sneer) that is, all except the 'pen pushers' at headquarters."

MILITARY SNOBBERY

Now oddly enough snobbery is customarily manifested by privileged people toward the less fortunate but in this case it is inverted and works just the other way around. No matter how friendly and pleasant the office man may be he is regarded with suspicion. His politeness is construed as patronizing and his class "A" uniform on duty is an affront to his comrades in fatigues. No matter how scrupulously clean his barracks may be they will never head the list as the best policed. Regardless of how smart his appearance may be the poor persecuted pen pusher may never be chosen in dress parade as the smartest soldier in his company. That, of course would be favoritism.

If the clerical worker gets a rating before men in line duty it never is because he's earned it by capable work but always because he's "bucking with the brass hats" or bootlicking "the big bugs at headquarters." Such opinions never take into consideration the table of organization by which promotions are given nor do they realize that key tappers are frequently on the job after-hours, at night. on Sundays and other time which other men have free.

GOES UNDISCOURAGED

While to a certain degree this childish prejudice is spontaneous with the men it is certainly rather fostered than discouraged by certain of the non-coms and even officers who cannot resist the urge to say something disparaging, usually during formation about the clerical workers. Possibly it is in a mistaken spirit of bon homie or to show what good fellows and men of the peepul they are but it certainly is no help to that morale which we hear so much about.

By the same token it is equally stupid to sneer at the "armchair generals" in Washington and other great military centers. If it were not for their planning, we would be an unequipped, starving, ragged disorderly mob. Whether anyone likes it or not an inescapable fact now and forevermore is that in any society whether it be monarchical or communist, civilian or military there have to be men who plan the work and men who execute those plans.

In our military set-up as in our civilian society every man has the opportunity to become anything he likes within the limitations nature or God has imposed upon him. Only too frequently we excuse our own laziness or inability by saying we "never get a break" which translated into rational English means we think we are singled out by a malignant fate for persecution. None of us are important enough in the eyes of Heaven to enjoy such a distinction.

STRIPES HARD TO GET

As a matter of fact there are very few men in mechanical or manual phases of army work who would willingly swap places with the office workers if, knowing the implications, they had the chance. Distant fields are always greener and any job seems better than the one we happen to have. As far as easy ratings are concerned: for every office man who gets his stripes quickly there are ten who work faithfully but will languish over the old Corona for years before they get a single stripe since the T. O. doesn't provide for such.

In the matter of bodily or physical danger it might be pointed out that in present day warfare headquarters is just as much exposed to attack as the front line and you may depend upon it that an enemy plane is even more eager to land a bomb on headquarters than the G. I. manning a machine gun is to have him do so in preference to the G. I's little nest. Also, en route to combat areas the pen pushers and the infantry man with his rifle are literally and figuratively in precisely the same boat.

and then progresses, in the "Benedictus," to a feeling of triumphant victory, powerful, but delicately restrained. The cycle is completed in the final hymn, the "Agnus Dei," which once more gives expression of the mood of humility and submissive devotion.

Parachute Expert Is Here To Experiment

Smith Seeks 100 Per Cent Elimination Of Landing Injuries

Floyd Smith, "granddaddy of the parachute," was at Fort Benning last week for experiments and consultations with technical experts of the Parachute school.

Mr. Smith, an executive of the Pioneer Parachute Company of Manchester, Conn., is at work on research aimed at developing a special parachute for combat use in which oscillations—pendulum-like swings which occur during descents in disturbed air—are eliminated or drastically reduced. The objective is the elimination of the already minor percentage of ankle and leg fractures encountered in parachute troop operations. Such injuries are due principally to these oscillations.

Major Emry V. Stewart, Parachute School director of specialist training, collaborated with Mr. Smith in drop-tests for the several experimental models thus far produced. Technical details of the pilot models cannot be announced, Major Stewart stated.

Floyd Smith designed and produced the first "free-type" parachute, enabling a jumper to clear with safety a plane raveling at tremendous speed, and devised many parachute improvements during World War I days. His wife won fame as one of the earliest woman pilots and parachute jumpers. Mr. Smith himself has not made an actual parachute jump since 1920, but he has been active in research and the development of testing devices and similar apparatus.

"The ordinary parachute now in use," Mr. Smith explained, "is eminently satisfactory for life saving purposes. A pilot who is forced to bail out usually accepts a sprain or fracture gratefully, for he knows that with no parachute at all he would have broken all his bones instead of one. In parachute troop operations, however, the jump and the landing are just the beginning of the mission, and a man who is injured is as useless as if he were killed. We are trying to improve the present troop parachute so that it will not only get them down alive, but also will put them on the ground uninjured 100 per cent of the time."

Technicians Fifth Grade Joseph J. Burton and John J. Smith were promoted to corporal and Corporal Arthur T. Collarner was promoted to technician fourth grade. Pvts. Ezra C. Nelson and Don E. Gillmore were promoted to the grade of technician fifth grade.

The new qualifications for the WAAC's demand a minimum I. Q. of 60 and two years of high school education.

FLOYD SMITH, parachute research authority, and Major Emry V. Stewart, parachute school director of specialist training at Fort Benning's Parachute school, are shown here discussing the present type parachute used at the school. Several new types are being tested. Nothing is wrong with the parachute now in use, according to Mr. Smith, but improvements are constantly sought. (Signal Lab. Photo.)

Officer Appointment, Promotion Modified

O. C. Schools Cut As Army Reaches Full Projected Strength

The whole procedure of appointing and promoting officers in the army of the United States is in process of important modifications which have been made necessary by a combination of factors, according to advices received at Fort Benning.

These new factors include:

First, approach of the army to its maximum projected strength, with corresponding slowing in activation of new units.

Second, the shifting of an increasingly large percentage of the whole army to overseas theaters, combined with the necessity of seeing that officers in such areas have opportunities for promotions as great as those at home.

Third, achievement in large part of the necessary officer strength due to operation of officer candidate schools on a mass-production scale since Pearl Harbor.

CURRENT NEEDS MET

Because the army has met its current needs for officers and, in fact, has a temporary large surplus, officer candidate schools and direct appointments from the ranks are being curtailed. A number of OCS's already have been discontinued, and others have been ordered to reduce the size of their classes.

From now on, it is going to be harder to get in OCS, and with a large field of applicants from which to choose, selections are going to be much more carefully made.

In keeping with the curtailment of officer candidate schools, four of these schools have been discontinued completely. The Medical Administrative Corps School at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., was discontinued some time ago; leaving a MAC school at Camp Barkeley, Tex.

The three army administration schools at Fargo, N. Dak.; Grinnell, Iowa; and Gainesville, Fla., are accepting no new classes and will close when the last of the current classes in training graduate. The fourth Army Administration School, at State College, Miss., which specializes in training of officers for the Transportation Corps, will continue, but this school recently dropped its censorship course.

Curtailment of the size of the classes at the other officer candidate schools of the army is now being effected.

Lieut. Durham Becomes Captain

Lt. T. D. Durham, Jr., was recently promoted to captain according to an announcement made by his commanding officer, Colonel Robert Sharp, of the First Student Training Regiment.

Captain Durham, was inducted into the ranks as a private at Fort Jackson, S. C. Recommended by his superior officers he was sent to the Infantry School to attend a course as an officer candidate. Successfully graduating January 23, 1942, his orders assigned him immediately to First Student Training Regiment as a tacical officer.

A graduate of the University of South Carolina, Captain Durham was prominent in many school activities, receiving letters in track and boxing.

Engineer Corps Badly In Need Of Specialists

Construction Workers Facing Induction May Ask For Assignment

Specialists in construction lines are still badly needed for voluntary induction in the Corps of Engineers, it was announced today by Capt. James Baird, Area Enineer at Fort Benning.

With thousands of construction men now being freed of jobs building Army and other war-needed installations, they are facing induction, and may be inducted in a voluntary basis thereby assuring entry into the Engineers, he stated.

For qualified personnel, officer training will be recommended by the Area Engineer to whom they may apply, Capt. Baird further said. He urged experts in construction or engineering fields to get in touch with the Area Engineer in their area. For Columbus and vicinity, it is Capt Baird at the Area Engineer's office, Fort Benning.

Needed for both the air Forces and the Ground Forces, including Army Service Forces, are electricians, mechanics, automobile mechanics, blacksmiths, bridge builders, carpenters, construction foremen, crane and power operators, draftsmen, machine-shop foremen, forging press operators, utility repairmen, millwrights, painters; quarrymen; radio operators and repairmen, receiving or shipping clerks; sheet metal workers; linemen truck drivers; water supply foremen; welders, jackhammer operators; fire-fighters; and many others.

Lieut. Everson Appointed Captain

Lt. Arthur D. Everson has been recently promoted to rank of captain according to an announcement made by his commanding officer, Colonel Robert Sharp of the First Student Training Regiment.

Captain Everson, a reserve officer, is a graduate of UCLA where he received his ROTC training while pursuing his B.S. degree in accounting. In the present emergency he was called to active duty at March Field, Calif., and sent to the Infantry School to attend a company officer course. Graduating in April, 1942, his orders assigned him immediately to First Student Training Regiment as an administrative officer.

3-Day-Old Babe Gets War Bond As Birth Gift

At the ripe old age of three days, Thomas Jan Odum, son of Sgt. and Mrs. Hubert L. Odum was presented with a War Bond and thus become the youngest owner recorded in The Infantry School campaign. Thomas Jan was born May 15. The bond was purchased for him three days later by his grandmother, Mrs. Elvin A. Krelick, wife of Major Kreilick of the Infantry School.

The youngster's daddy is a first sergeant in the 502nd Parachute Infantry of the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Bragg. Sgt. Odum was formerly stationed at Fort Benning with the 29th Infantry and was among the first to transfer to the Parachute School. The mother, Mrs. Janice Newsome Odum, is residing with her parents, Major and Mrs. Krellick.

An uncle, First Sergeant Tom Odum, also a parachutist, received the Silver Star for falling on a hand grenade thrown into his company's barracks in North Africa. The grenade, however, did not explode.

1st STR Pay Section Officer Made Captain

Lieut. Alfred H. Morrison was recently promoted to the rank of captain according to a release made public by Colonel Robert Sharp, Regimental Commander of the First Student Training Regiment. Captain Morrison is officer in charge of the Regiment's pay section.

Screen Actor Webb In TIS

Hollywood Player Seeks Commission

The 16th Company, First Student Training Regiment has its share of the famous people like the rest of the companies of the regiment. For instance in the present class is Lieut. Richard Webb of the Signal Corps.

Lieut. Webb has led quite an interesting life. He served for three years in the Coast Artillery at Panama. Upon being discharged in California he decided to stay over and take a good look at the sights of these United States. Most of his time was spent in Hollywood where he played on the stage in theatres in Beverly Hills and Los Angeles.

Lt. Webb gave up hope for a screen career but decided to take one last audition at Paramount. This proved to be successful and he was signed for part as "senior cadet captain" in the picture "I Wanted Wings" starring Miss Veronica Lake.

HELPS WAR EFFORT

He has appeared in such pictures as "Hold Back the Dawn," "Sullivan's Travels," and "American Empire." His last picture he had a second lead part in the "Remarkable Andrew." He has contributed immensely to the war effort by making training films with the Signal Corps.

While making pictures with the Signal Corps, Lt. Webb had the urge to wear the uniform once more, and joined the ranks as a private. Through diligent effort and ability to progress his company commander recommended him to attend Infantry O.C.S. here at Fort Benning. When advanced training was completed he was commissioned a second lieutenant.

When asked how he liked actshis remark was "when I die they can place upon my grave a simple stone engraved 'Ham, He Loved It'."

To look at Lt. Webb one can understand that he would be a good man for the movies or as a soldier. He weighs 185, is a blonde with blue eyes, and reaches in the six foot bracket.

Captain Boddicker Named Major

Captain Donald J. Boddicker, Commanding Officer of 2nd Company, First Student Training Regiment recently attained the rank of Major.

Major Boddicker a reserve officer is a graduate of the State University of Iowa with B. A. and J. D. degrees. He excelled in many school activities during his college course as president of Hammond Chapter, Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity, member of Dean of Law Schools advisory board, and assistant to faculty as supervisor of Freshman Law Club arguments. Upon graduation he became a barrister and county attorney of Benton county, Iowa until called to the colors, January, 1942. Reporting to the Infantry School for active duty, Major Boddicker attended a rifle and heavy weapons course, graduating in April, 1942. Immediately after graduation Major Boddicker was assigned to 1st Regiment for administrative duty.

QM Typewriter Repair Does Thriving Business

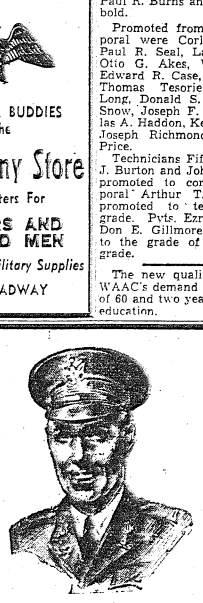
One of the most critical items in the country and one of great value to the Army—the typewriter—is no mystery to the workers in the Quartermaster Typewriter Repair Shop at Fort Benning, which repairs typewriters from all over the Post, according to Colonel Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning.

It makes no difference what make the machine happens to be, the shop can tear it down, find the trouble, and rebuilt the typewriter completely if need be. Approximately 150 to 175 typewriters are repaired each month, Colonel Massey said.

In addition to typewriters, the shop can repair just about anything in the way of general office appliances. Calculators, adding machines, duplicating machines, numbering machines, and even little stapling machines yield the secret of their troubled parts to these mechanically minded workers in this quartermaster shop.

TYPICAL REPAIRS

Most of the work done on typewriters consists of such repairs as cleaning, major repairs and replacing parts or assemblies. However, even repairs such as complete rebuilding and the salvaging of parts is done in the shop.



Repairs which consist of adjustments, oiling, and the replacement of minor parts also are an important function of the shop.

Among the important common repairs made are to adjust tabulators, install new margin release springs, put in new feed rolls and correct faulty motion in the typewriters.

The shop is operated under the immediate direction of First Lieut. Ross W. Crossley, quartermaster reclamation officer. Bob Barron of Columbus, is senior office appliance repairman. Two enlisted men in the QMC, Sgt. George T. Gill, a native of Louisville, Ky., and Cpl. H. K. Vance, a native of Atlanta, also work as repairmen in the shop. Prior to the outbreak of the war, all the employes were repairmen for many years with nationally known typewriter companies.

Typewriters, with their delicate mechanism, are easy to get out of proper adjustment, and since they are very critical items, all possible means should be taken to keep them in proper order, Colonel Massey stated. Organizations in possession of typewriters on the post are responsible for first echelon maintenance, and should keep them clean

Actor Bob Wayne Is Now TIS Instructor

"From the land of make-believe to the land of reality" is the story of the last two and a half years in the life of Lieut. H. W. Bumpas, an instructor in the Fort Benning Infantry School. Before Uncle Sam beckoned Lieutenant Bumpas was shooting-'em-up, riding the ranges, rescuing the heroine, and even dying before the grind of cameras in the flood-lights and spot-lights of the studios of Hollywood.

In Hollywood this western actor was known on the screen, radio, and stage as Boy Wayne, and was so versatile that he played everything from the villian ring-leader to the juvenile brother of the heroine.

But let's go back a few years, when the story begins in Duncan, Okla., and pokes around in strange places before winding up right here at Fort Benning.

Wayne first left his home in Duncan at the age of 16 to attend the University of Oklahoma, and spent most of his time there quarterbacking on the football team and wrestling on the wrestling team. He left to "see the world"—and saw plenty of it.

Gets Movie Job

His first stop was in Los Angeles, where he happened to accompany to the Belasco theatre a friend who wanted to try out for a part in "Elizabeth the Queen", starring Pauline Frederick. While Wayne was standing in the wings, looking on, Miss Frederick called him onto the stage, handed him a script and told him to read. He got the job.

From that start, he went on to play in more than forty pictures, including "Geronimo", "Crowd Roars", "Buck Privates", "Sleepy-time Gal", "Mysterious Dr. Satan", "A Girl, A Guy, and A Gob", "Captain Midnight", "The Man Betrayed" and countless westerns and serials. He was under contract to Republic and Paramount studios.

For the Don Lee System in Los Angeles he produced, directed and acted in television shows. He supported Billie Burke, Ian MacLaren, Julie Hayden, J. Farrell McDonald and other luminaries of the legitimate stage.

When things got dull, he sang in Hollywood's Club Casanova and Swing Club, and played in radio shows for CBS and NBC. Then he bought himself a baton and organized his own band. It went along fine but he longed to be on the move again, and took out for Italy, North Africa, and Spain. In Spain, he found himself in the midst of the revolution which broke out in Barcelona. Things were hot for a while, but he managed to break away and get back to this country.

Back in America he remembered having won the welter, light heavy and heavyweight, weight lifting crowns of the Southwest at a meet in Wichita, Kansas, and started working out again. It was then that he decided to make use of his knowledge of physical culture and athletics, and became Terry Hunt's partner in the famous health club in Los Angeles.

Role in Musical

But the lights of the theatre beckoned again, and Bob sailed into a singing role in a musical, "Sticks and Stones" with Dixie Dunbar, Johnny Downs, Jerry Colona, Milton Berle, and Eve Arden.

As Fate often rules it, the producer-author of the show, Jack Murray (who also wrote "Double Beds"), entered Lieutenant Bumpas' officer's candidate class at Benning a few months ago. And, strangely enough, Ken Morgan, a casting director who gave Bob his first job in movies, also entered one of his classes a few days after Murray.

Make-Believe Conflicts

A few months after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, Bumpas decided to leave the make-believe conflicts in cinema-land, and take part in the tremendous battle in the land of reality. He joined the army and was first sent to Camp Roberts, Cal., where he was active in entertainment work. His next stop was Camp Robinson, Ark. After graduating from OCS at Benning, he was assigned as an instructor of the logistics committee in the Infantry School.

FROM MAKE-BELIEVE FIGHTING roles in the movies to an instructorship at the Fort Benning Infantry school comes Lieut. H. W. Bumpas, who acted in Hollywood under the name, Bob Wayne.

Company Qualifies 207 of 208 Men On M-1 Range

Twenty-six per cent of the student officers of the 8th company, 1st Student Training Regiment qualified as experts with the M-1 rifle recently as 207 officers out of 208 shot qualifying scores.

Fifty-four men were in the top classification, 85 made sharp-shooters' scores, and 68 were marksmen.

With scores in the upper bracket were Lieutenants Ralph D. Peters, Bill M. Filgo, John F. Malcom, William H. Lacey, Jr., and Henry J. Chandler and Captains Dwight W. Dean and Orval C. Thompson.

The achievement is somewhat heightened by an examination of the weather on the day when the officers fired for record. Practicing of correct positions and simulating fire was done in the dryness of protecting stands, but the actual firing was accomplished from pools of water laid down by a hard Georgia rain.

Famed Woman Jumper Visits Parachute School

On her way to join the Women's Auxiliary Ferry Service, Miss Vera Turner, famed woman parachutist, stopped at Fort Benning Saturday long enough to swap stories with an old friend, Major E. Verne Stewart, director of specialized training at the Parachute school here.

Several times during the past ten years Miss Turner and Major Stewart, himself a former parachute exhibitionist, have jumped from the same plane while participating in air shows in Cleveland, Birmingham and other big cities the country over. Both are leaders in their respective fields. Major Stewart has well over 400 jumps to his credit, and Miss Turner, with 125 jumps, ranks among the first five women daredevils in America.

PACKS OWN CHUTE

Diminutive Miss Turner, who stands five feet two inches and weighs only 115 pounds, explained that her jumping started with a rigging class. To graduate she had to jump with a 'chute she packed herself.

"That was back in 1932," she added. "All others in the class were men. I was very scared; as a matter of fact if one of them had refused I would have too. However, after the first one it wasn't so bad."

Grinning she went on, "But you can tell the boys, Major Stewart, that I know all about this "sweating it out."

When asked if anw of her hundred odd jumps had proved eventful, she replied with a twinkle in her eye:

"Yes, there was one. It wasn't amusing at the time, because it cost a broken leg, but that was the least of it.

LANDS AMONG PIGS

"It was at the Minnesota State fair on Labor Day, 1941. We were jumping from an old-type biplane, and attempting to land within the fair grounds. I couldn't see the ground very well, and misjudged my distance. The result . . . a descent into some farmer's pig pen, plus a broken leg when I straddled the fence of the pig sty. Momentarily, the leg didn't bother me nearly so much as the pigs. There was quite a commotion with parachute, pigs, and one little lady."

In addition to her 125 jumps, Miss Turner has 125 hours logged in Cubs and other lightweight ships. However, flying was just a hobby until the WAFS were organized. Now she is planning to make it a full time job.

In her own words, "It's what I'd been hoping for all my life."

Captain Newton Gains Majority

Promotion of Capt. Peter J. Newton, commanding officer of the Sixth Company of the Third Student Training Regiment, to the rank of major has been announced by Col. Robert H. Lord, regimental commander. Major Newton is the son of Mrs. R. L. Newton of Gibson, N. C.

Before entering upon active Army duty, Major Newton was a chemist with a Georgetown, S. C., firm. He attended Wofford College in Spartanburg, S. C., where he was a member of the ROTC. His first active Army assignment was to Camp Claiborne, La., where he served as executive officer of Company M, 367th Infantry, in March and April of 1941.

During the summer of that year he was a student in the Rifle and Heavy Weapons Course offered at Fort Benning. Following completion of his studies he was named a tactical officer in the First Student Training Regiment and, later, executive officer in the 19th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment. He came to the Third Regiment as commanding officer of the Sixth Company April 1, 1942.

183rd Ordnance Executive Officer Made Major

Captain Lorel W. Meyers, executive officer of the 183rd Ordnance HM Battalion, has been promoted to major, it was announced by Colonel George E. Jacobs commanding officer of the Second Army, Special Troops.

Major Meyers was commissioned December 6, 1932, after completing his R. O. T. C. training at the University of California. He was called to active duty in 1941 and served as commanding officer of the 36th Ordnance Company from June of that year until February 1943. He then served as commander of the Provisional Maintenance and Supply Battalion at Camp Sutton, N. C.

At present, in the absence of Major Jack, he has been acting as battalion commander of the 183rd. Major Meyers received his B. S. degree from the University of California and before being called to active duty was employed as a civil engineer by the United States Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma, Ariz. He is married and has one child. He is a native of San Diego, Calif.

Captain Kiffin Made Major

Promotion of Capt. Robert S. Kiffin, Lincoln, Neb., to the rank of major, has been announced by Col. R. H. Lord, commanding officer of the Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School Service Command here.

Major Kiffin entered upon active service Oct. 20, 1941, as a first lieutenant in the Officers Reserve Corps. He was enrolled in the Officers Basic Course at Fort Benning and upon completion of this Feb. 6, 1942, he was assigned to the Infantry School

Army Converts Musician Into Topnotch Soldier

Candidate Edwin G. McTaggart of the Ninth Company, Third Student Training Regiment, affords a good example of how the Army can and does take a man out of civilian life and in practically no time at all transforms him into an entirely different person.

Just a few months ago Candidate McTaggart had built up a name of some renown in the Middle West as a musician, professor, and editor and contributor to music journals. An alumnus of the University of North Dakota (bachelor of science degree in education) and also several colleges of music, Mac can play practically any instrument in a band, although the violin is his forte.

He has had several bands of his own, one that took first prize in tsate competitions in South Dakota and Minnesota. As a teacher he has started half a dozen pupils on the road to fame. For two years he was supervisor of public school music in Sauk Center, Minn., the hometown of Sinclair Lewis, and for eleven years held the same position in Lapwai, Ida., in in Pierre, S. D. For two years he was president and editor of the South Dakota Bandmaster Association Journal and has contributed articles to the leading music publications.

With this sedentary and "collistered" background and with no semblance of military training or anything that borders it, Mac recently stepped into the army, was made a squad leader during his basic training at Camp Roberts, Cal., and because of his outstanding record is now at Fort Benning working for the bars of a second lieutenant, which, if successful, he will receive early in August.

Mac has struck only one discord in his army experience. In starting his officer candidate training he was required to shave his mustache.

"I was prepared for anything in war," Mac said, "but I never thought it would come to this. I have worn a mustache for fifteen years, and I now feel like a lo soul."

1st STR Unit To Get Course In Military Law

For the months of May, June, and July all officers of the 4th Bn., 1st Student Training Regiment, will be brushing up on their Military Law, it was announced by Maj. Thornton W. McAllister, Commanding Officer.

"The object of this course is to further the education of the officers of his command so as to make them better fitted to carry on the work ahead of them in their military careers, also to prevent military delinquincies, aid in the efficient administration of military justice, and to assure that justice is duly administrated, "without partiality, favor or affection'."

The course will consist of 14 periods of two hours each, twice a week in the afternoons. The subjects to be taken up in this course will be generally as follows: disciplinary powers of the commanding officer, the rights of the soldier in the military court, investigations, boards (death, etc.) evidence, procedure before trial, and during and after trial, etc. The course will also consist of moot trials to cover all the subject matter covered in the course of instruction.

Tactical officers of the battalion will give instructions during the course, and as time progresses will afford each student officer the opportunity to stress his viewpoints as an instructor.

Phyllis Jean Perry, who recently joined the WAVES, is a direct descendant of Oliver Hazard (Don't-give-up-the-ship) Perry, the famous hero of our 1812 war who provided the Navy with a theme for its song.

Capt. Schwartz Gets Majority

Talented Cornetist On European Tour

Announcement has been made by Col. Robert H. Lord, commanding officer of the Third Student Training Regiment, of the advancement of Capt. Herbert T. Schwartz, of Syracuse, N. Y., to the rank of major. Major Schwartz is a member of the staff and faculty of the Infantry School and is stationed at the Third Student Training Regiment's Second Battalion headquarters.

Before he was called to active duty April 10, 1941, Major Schwartz taught accounting, mathematics and economics in Fort Plain High school. He attended Central High school in Syracuse, Manlius Military School and Syracuse University, where he was commissioned in 1937.

He served in the New York National Guard from 1929 to 1934 as a private in the 108th Infantry. From 1937 to 1938 he was a second lieutenant with the 26th Infantry and during the following year was with the 28th Infantry, participating with the First Army maneuvers.

An accomplished cornetist, Major Schwartz is a member of Local 78, Syracuse, Musicians Protective Association. He made a European concert tour with the Manlius Military band and was soloist for several years with the American Legion band at New York state functions. Moreover, he has done commercial radio work and appeared with the Syracuse and Utica symphony orchestras.

As a youngster of 13, Major Schwartz won the Ralston Medal for bravery for saving two women from drowning in the Salmon river near Selkirk, N. Y.

First Lieut. Lyndell F. Keene, former principal of the Torrington, Wyo., Junior High School before entering upon active Army duty, has been appointed adjutant of The Infantry School's Third Student Training Regiment. Announcement of the appointment was made by the regimental commander, Col. Robert H. Lord.

As a reserve officer, Lieutenant Keene was assigned to active duty Jan. 9, 1942. After completion of the basic course provided for officers here in Fort Benning, Lieutenant Keene was designated assistant adjutant of the Third Student Training Regiment April 7, 1942. During the summer of the same year he took an administrative course at the Adjutant General's School, Fort Washington, Maryland. His promotion to first lieutenant came July 15, 1942.

When the Training Center in the California Desert became too hot for them 39 carrier pigeons gave the Signal Corps "the bird" and went AWOL.

Service Command. On June 1, 1942, he was given command of the 17th Company in the Third Student Training Regiment and was advanced to the rank of captain before expiration of that month.

The major won his appointment as a second lieutenant in the Officers Reserve Corps June 5, 1933, through the ROTC at the University of Nebraska from which he was graduated. He was elected at the university to memberships in Delta Upsilon and in Scabbard and Blade, honorary military fraternity. He was on two weeks active duty in 1933 as an instructor in the CMTC camp at Fort Crook, Neb., and became a reserve first lieutenant April 16, 1937.

G. I. Summary Of World News

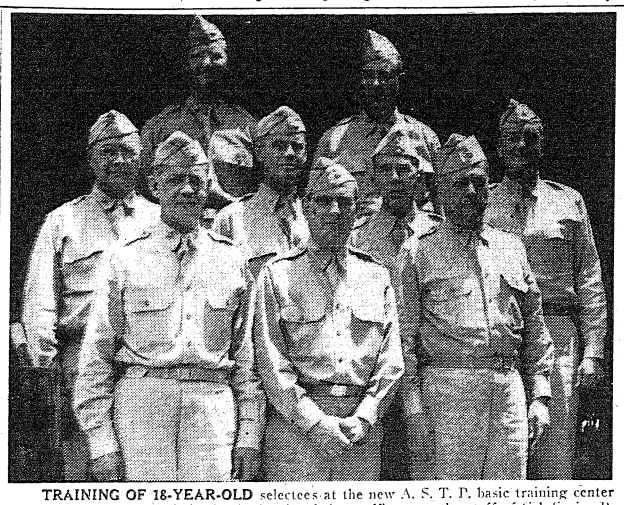
BY SGT. O. J. REMINGTON

IT WAS WHAT might be described as a fairly quiet week, after the thrill of the fall of North Africa — but actually plenty of stirring activity soon may be expected of the preparations which now are going on.

Army forces were cleaning up scattered pockets of resistance on Attu Island, leaving the way open for further action up in the far north. We may proceed against the large Jap garrison on Kiska Island—or just simply cut them off and let 'em starve. We may begin more active operations against the Japanese Isles themselves, using Attu as a base. We may jump both ways.

The Chinese high command has announced that Chinese and Allied (presumably American) bombers and fighters led off in a big-scale attack, destroying at least 23 Jap planes. Looks as though we're being able to get more much-needed assistance through to the Chinese. In China, too, reports are that the Jap thrust against Chungking has been halted and the advancing Jap army turned back.

JUNE 22 IS set by German and Italian reports as the "correct date" for Allied invasion of Europe—but American and English sources are significantly silent about it. One report coming from Washington even says no invasion is to be expected this summer. Looks as though the Axis propaganda boys are trying to draw us out, but aren't getting very far.



Allied raiders continue smashing away with heavy bombs at European industrial centers. Tremendous raids continue on Italy and the large islands in the Mediterranean. Dusseldorf in the Rhineland has been struck time after time. In one assault alone, almost 400 planes swarmed over Sicily, Sardinia and Pantelleria, which are the outer defenses of Italy. Liberators and Forteresses are playing a large part in these operations.

Reports are that German troops have been shifted to Sardinia to attempt to hold it against coming attacks. The Krupp gun works and Zeiss Optical plant took a beating from bombs.

IN ALGIERS FRENCH groups have formed a new governing body for France under joint presidency of Generals Henri Giraud and Charles De Gaulle.

That was the first big result of the long awaited meeting between the two French leaders. The new governing body will consist of seven men, two places being left open, presumably for others who may come from France. It will administer French territory already liberated, and is pledged to lead the French at the side of the Allies until final victory frees France itself.

French warships at Alexandria finally came under the Allied banner, after having lain there immobilized since the fall of France three years ago, it was reported. This has not yet been absolutely confirmed, however. The fleet there consists of a battleship, four cruisers, three destroyers, a submarine and some small auxiliary vessels.

TRAINING OF 18-YEAR-OLD selectees at the new A. S. T. P. basic training center of the Infantry school will be in the hands of these officers on the staff of Col. Sevier R. Tupper who, in addition to commanding the training center, will retain command of the Student Training brigade. First row (left to right) Col. W. McK. Spann, executive officer; Col. Tupper, Col. H. B. Laux, plans and training officer. Second row: Col. Edward B. Jackson, commanding the 4th regiment; Lt. Col William E. Forse, commanding the 6th; Lt. Col. Vincent S. Burton, inspector, and Lt. Col. John S. Roosma, commanding the 5th regiment. Back row: Maj. H. J. Lipscomb, supply officer, and Maj. J. G. Macfarlan, special service officer. (Infantry School photo.)

Twelve Brazilian newspapermen will visit Fort Benning next Friday on a tour of inspection of training in progress on the reservation, Brig. General Walter S. Fulton, post commander, announced today.

Fort Benning will be the first stop the visiting journalists will make on a swing of the training camps and war production centers of the United States. The tour is one of a series for Latin American writers sponsored by the National Press Club and the War Department Bureau of Public Relations.

WAAC Walks 12 Miles Daily In Hq. Building

Auxiliary First Class Louise Martin, of Cleveland, Ohio, and a member of the 43rd Post Headquarters Company of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps at Fort Benning, bids fair to deserve the title of "The Walking WAAC".

Distribution clerk for the message center at post headquarters on the Army reservation, Auxiliary Martin averages walking twelve and a half miles a day through the corriders of the headquarters building as she distributes all incoming and collects all outgoing papers from the 30 separate and distinct sections housed in the structure.

Aside from this little stroll, Auxiliary Martin walks to and from her barracks—no mean distance—four times a day, and does regular "soldier drill" two nights a week, just to keep fit.

O. C. Course Lengthened To 17 Weeks

Various Groups Now Engaged In Readjusting Schedules For Change

The Officer Candidate Course of the Infantry School is to be increased from 14 to 17 weeks, it was announced at the school this week. However, the school has received no official order as to the date upon which the longer terms will begin.

The various groups which have been allotted additional time under the expanded program are now engaged in re-adjusting their schedules to include added phases of the subjects which they teach.

With the lengthening of the course, however, the number of classes activated each month will be decreased.

The announcement of the lengthened course as published in the Army Times read as follows:

The course of instruction at Officer Candidate Schools will be extended to a minimum of four months, beginning not later than July 1, the War Department announced Thursday. The extension may apply to classes which enter before that time if schedules permit.

SMALLER CLASSES

Complementing the increase in the course of instruction from three to four months, OCS classes will be smaller than heretofore. The reduction in the size of classes will vary with the individual schools.

While the desirability of longer courses of instruction and additional training has always been present, it is an established fact that many of the Army's best of-

BASICS START INFLUX

Non-Insurees Must Fill Out Refusal Form

Move Is Being Made To Provide Adequate Answer For Dependents

"Put it in writing" is the War Department order to soldiers who have not taken out the full $10,000 life insurance policy offered them at the lowest possible rates, according to Lt. J. W. Inzer, post insurance officer.

Every effort is being made to avoid any carelessness or negligence in the handling of personel affairs, which may cause beneficiaries much suffering and privation, and the War Department considerable embarrassment, the insurance official explained.

In a plan outlined by Washington headquarters, every soldier, whether he be officer or enlisted man, and regardless of wheer stationed, will be required to fill out a refusal form if he is not carrying the maximum, $10.000, of National Service or United States Government Life Insurance. Forms will be issued to all units shortly, and a report of the results is to be submitted to the life insurance officer, post headquarters through channels by June 30.

CASUALTIES INEVITABLE

The War Department recognizes that certain good reasons exist for not taking out the government-sponsored insurance; their only wish is that every soldier seriously consider the personal responsibility of safeguarding his dependents, and act accordingly.

"Remember," Lt. Inzer added, "There will be casualties, and you may be one of them. Recognize that fact, and next, that your dependents may ask why you had not subscribed to a war risk policy. The insurance refusal form is the only means by which the War Department can have definite evidence that the deceased was advised of beenfits to be derived from buying the maximum amount of insurance, and had declined to take out protection or raise it to the fullest amount. In addition the exact reason for refusal will be stated.

To widen the scope of persons eligible for this coverage, the War Department recently lifted all physical examination requirements for a period extending 120 days from April 12, 1943.

Officers Affected By Curfew Law

All military personnel, including officers regardless of grade, are affected by the new curfew order of Fort Benning, it was announced at post headquarters.

The old curfew order of midnight, Fort Benning time, on May 22 was extended to 1 a. m., or midnight Central War Time, and it was the intent of all commanding officers on the post that the new order would also apply to commissioned officers.

The original curfew order was not enforced so far as officers were concerned, but according to the announcement today, the provost marshal has been instructed to enforce midnight CWT curfew on all military personnel, including officers, WAACs, nurses and enlisted men.

GENERAL GROW

General Grow Takes Command Of 6th Armored

Officer Had Been CO Of Combat Command A, 10th Armored Division

Brigadier General Robert W. Grow, commander of Combat Commany A of the 10th Armored Division since its activation, left late Sunday by plane for California to assume command of the 6th Armored Division at Camp Cooke.

Accompanying General Grow was his aide, Capt. Donald F. Forbes. The general was out in the field directing a combat command maneuver problem when he learned of his new assignment. Col. Kenneth G. Althaus of the 11th Armored Regiment is temporarily in charge of Combat Command A.

General Grow is a native of Iowa and a graduate of the University of Minnesota. He was commissioned in the regular army from the Minnesota National Guard in 1916. Although commissioned in cavalry, he served in the field artillery during World War I, for several months as a gunnery instructor at Fort Sill and later as a battery commander in the 1st Field Artillery under the then Col. Jacob L. Devers. After the Armistice he served in Germany in the 1st Division. Returning in 1919, he served in various cavalry regiments and details and graduated from Leavenworth in 1929 and from the Army War College in 1936.

BEGAN IN 1930

The General's mechanical experience began in 1930 when he became S-3 officer of the mechanized force at Fort Eustis. Later he became executive officer of the 1st Cavalry, Mechanized, at Fort Knox, when his regiment become the first iron-clad unit of the old cavalry regiments.

From Fort Knox, General Grow, then a major, went to Leavenworth to instruct in mechanization in 1934-35. He then served a four-year tour in the Office of Chief of Cavalry, where he headed the supply and fiscal section during the period of development of much of the present Armored Force equipment.

Following the organization of the Armored Force, General Grow, now a lieutenant-colonel, became G-3 of the 2nd Armored Division under General Scott and later, under General Patton. He left the Second in the fall of 1941 to take command of the 34th Armored Regiment in the Victory Wivision. He was promoted to his present grade in March, 1943, and assigned to the 8th Armored Division upon its activation. He was transferred to the 10th Armored Division when it was formed and assigned to command Combat Command A.

General Grow is 46 years old. Mrs. Grow and their two boys, 10 and 15, have been making their home at Fort Benning.

Forty-six 18-year-olds arrived in two groups, one from Fort Harrison, Indiana, and another from Camp Grant, Illinois, at 2 o'clock.

One 'loner' arrived last night from Fort Bliss, Texas, and just before midnight, four more came in from Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Eleven more were due to arrive today from Camp Perry, Ohio.

Thus did the vanguard of 12,000 young selectees arrive in Fort Benning. From now on, they will be coming in increasing numbers until the three regiments of the Basic Training Center are filled, probably within the next six weeks.

TO 4TH REGIMENT

The first arrivals were assigned to the 4th Basic Training Regiment which is located in the Harmony Church area in what was once a part of the Second Student Training Regiment. Its barracks which are between First and Eighth Division roads, were occupied for a short time by the 176th prior to its removal to the Main Post.

During this 13 weeks of basic training, the youngsters will undergo the training of a basic rifle company. Due consideration has been given the age of the selectees in planning the training program. Physical conditioning of the selectees will have a large part in the program.

Col. W. McK. Spann, executive officer of the Traininf Center, clarified the future of the trainees to this extent: those who successfully complete the 13 weeks of basic training, will be sent to a classification college. There they will be interviewed by a classification board consisting of faculty members of the college after which they will be classified and sent the type of school for which they are fitted.

Theater No. 8 To Reopen June 15

Scheduled to reopen June 15 at Fort Benning is Theater No. 8, which was destroyed by fire last winter, according to Major James C. Sutton, post theater officer.

Seven hundred new and comfortable, permanent chairs will replace the wooden benches and steel folding chairs, formerly used to accommodate the audience.

All necessary projection equipment is on hand, and the major explained that it was planned to make the shift without interruption of show schedule. At present, one of the nearby class-rooms is used as a temporary theater.

WASH CRISIS AFFECTS 800 POST FAMILIES

Col. Massey Blames Labor Shortage; Enlisted Men Given Priority

Approximately 800 Fort Benning families who have been depending on the Quartermaster laundry for service have until June 15 to make other arrangements, Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at the post, announced this week.

The announcement came following a letter from Fourth Service Command headquarters in Atlanta which stated that because of a manpower and machinery shortage no more family work will be processed in quartermaster laundries and that all work for officers and enlisted men will be standardized and processed in the same manner.

The number of family bundles processed at the post has risen sharply with each month recently, according to officers at the laundry. In February, almost 3,000 family bundles were received and that figure has been exceeded in each month since, although exact figures were not available today.

In order to allow families time to make other arrangements, the order from Atlanta will not be placed in effect at once, Col. Massey said, and the 15-day grace period has been granted.

ENLISTED MEN FIRST

The order from Atlanta also stated that when necessary enlisted men's laundries will be done to the exclusion of that of all other personnel.

The order here comes close upon the heels of changes in laundry policies in downtown Columbus, where most firms will not take family bundles. Two firms report that they take men and women's clothing in separate bundles and

Life Features Infantry School

June 7 Issue Will Devote 9 Pages To Training Activities

The product of several weeks of writing and picture taking will appear in the June 7 issue of Life magazine which devotes nine pages to The Infantry School.

Myron Davis of Life's photographic staff, made two trips to Fort Benning and spent days making pictures which will accompany the story of the Officer Candidate School. Not satisfied with all of those he took on his first trip, he returned two weeks ago to retake some pictures, striving for perfection in content in order to present an accurate pictorialization of OCS.

Working with Cameraman Davis were Miss Gertrude Epstein and Bill Howland, staff writers of Life who covered the officer candidate course thoroughly in obtaining text material for the essay.

They attended demonstrations, talked with instructors and studied such equipment as was permissible until they had a first hand and accurate working knowledge of their subject.

Their efforts and those of Life's editors have resulted in a most graphic presentation.

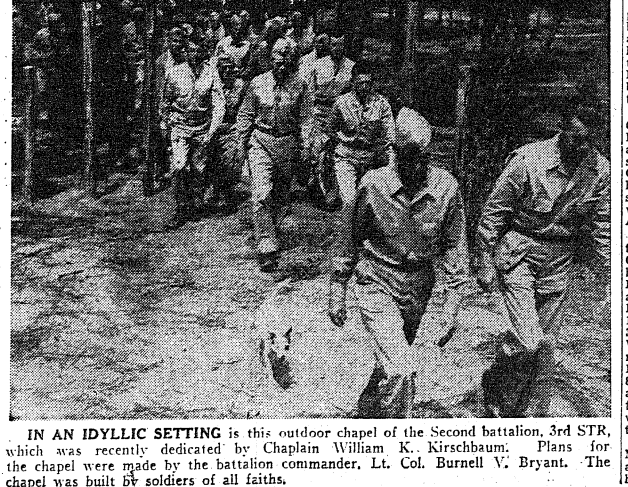
Famous Rainbow Division To Go Into Action Again

Many Of Its High-Ranking Officers Take Post Orientation Refresher

When the 42nd Division, that famous Rainbow Division" of World War I, is reactivated sometime this summer, it will have a wholesome assortment of the old Army and new Army included in its personnel. Key men in the division will include many who have had actual battle experience in World War II as well as World War I.

And down in the ranks will be men who have never seen a replacement center—who came from their draft boards' induction centers into the Division.

Here at Fort Benning are some 250 officer cadre of the 42n's infantry regiments, attending an orientation course in The Infantry School. At Fort Sill, Okla., is a similar group of artillery officers. And at Fort Leavenworth, Kas., the General and Special Staffs of the Division are attending the Command and General Staff School. When these three groups have completed their month of schooling, they will assemble at the site selected for the re-activation of the 42nd, there to be joined by the platoon commanders, many of them fresh from Officer Candidate Schools.



A short time later, they will be joined by the enlisted cadre for a brief period of indoctrination and then will come the troops themselves, all brand new selectees. They will get their 13 weeks beside training right in the division itself.

DIVISIONAL CO.

The Divisional Commander is Major General Harry J. Collins. The Assistant Divisional Commander is Brigadier General Alexander N. Stark, Jr., who heads the Infantry officers of the Division who are attending the orientation course here. General Stark saw action in the North African campaign and was promoted in the field.

With him here, among others, are Lt. Col. Peter J. Grimmer and Lt. Col. George S. Fricke, who were also in the African campaign, and Lt. Col. John W. Homewood, who was in the South Pacific theatre. Col. Edward S. Johnston, who commands the 222nd Infantry of the 42nd, has

Forest Chapel Built In 3rd Reg't. Area

Soldiers Of All Faiths Worship In Open-Air Grove Sanctuary

A forest chapel built by soldiers of all faiths, set in the natural sanctuary of a wooded grove was dedicated by the Second battalion of the Third Student Training regiment at services conducted there recently by its chaplain, 1st Lt. William G. Kirschbaum.

Known as "The-Chapel-in-the-Grove," the site has an entrance which is marked, in rustic letters, with the opening words of William Cullen Bryant's "Forest Hymn": "The groves were God's first temples." Under the ceiling of boughs and leafy branches, log benches face an altar which bears a simple wooden cross.

Plans for the chapel originated with the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Burnell V. Bryant. Building and location of the altar and benches were accomplished by soldiers of all faiths. A loudspeaker system and a field organ complete the equipment in the natural amphitheater. A musical program is played every Sunday for a half hour before the 11 o'clock service.

WORSHIP IN RAIN

Increasing attendance at the chapel was amply demonstrated on a recent Sunday when an assembly of more than 300 took took communion in the rain, which showing prompted the chaplain to remark that those rites would probably be only the first that officer candidates would attend under similar adverse conditions in far away lands.

The new chapel already has provided the setting for an outdoor wedding, the marriage of Marion R. Laue and Lieut. Nicholas J. Thermos of the First Student Training Regiment, both from Hinsdale, Ill., having taken place at a twilight ceremony May 21.

Leaving the chapel by rough log steps built into the slope, the worshippers pass under the benediction of the final words of "Forest Hymn":

". . . Be it ours to meditate,
In these calm shades, thy milder majesty,
And to the beautiful order of thy works
Learn to conform the order of our lives."

Just arrived at the 774th Tank battalon area in Harmony Church, this medium tank chassis mounts a three inch naval gun which is capable of hurling a 95-pound projectile ten miles. Toting Violin Proves Delilah To Soldiers

Lieutenant Finds Quick Remedy To Get Hair Cut Pronto

1st Lt. Thomas G. Hammond, commanding officer of the Hq. Company, 300th Infantry, has a new approach to the age-old problem of what to do with long-haired soldiers.

He noted with dismay that some of his boys had, for all practical purposes made a vow to keep clear of barber chairs. Heads were growing bushy, and to the musing Lieutenant, were assuming the conventional appearance attributed to emotional musicians.

"That's it! Musicians! I have an idea," the Lt. said to himself as he started to walk toward the supply room. He remembered seeing a violin (where it came from no one knew) in one of the recesses of the supply room. It wasn't a very fancy instrument but it would suit the purpose.

Lt. Hammond sought out the worst offender, and with the violin tucked under his arm approached the soldier and asked "Do you play the violin?"

"No, Sir," was the prompt and somewhat startled reply.

"Well that's strange," was the officer's rejoinder. "You certainly look as if you did. Here, take this violin, it fits in with your appearance. Carry it with you wherever you go until you stop this masquerading."

That night one close-clipped soldier reported to his commanding officer and sheepishly returned the violin. With a smile on his face Lt. Hammond told him to pass the violin on to the next offender.

In a short time the violin changed hands rapidly (it was too hot to handle). As a result Hq. Co. can boast 100 per cent G. I. as far as hair cuts are concerned.

Major Sutton Leaves Post

Lt. Campbell Successor As Post Theater Officer

Major James C. Sutton, theater officer has been transferred to duty at Camp Wheeler, and has been replaced by Second Lt. Jack H. Campbell who served as recreation officer for 13 years in the Hawaiians, part of the time at Pearl Harbor.

Major Sutton is a veteran of World War I, having gone overseas with the 121st Infantry in the 31st Division. He also had served a tour of duty on the Mexican border. He was ordered back to active duty as a first lieutenant in August 1941, reporting to Fort Benning where he served as commander of the Quartermaster detachment of the motor pool and motor transport office, then as commanding officer of DEML, Fourth Service Command troops. He is a native of Forsyth, Ga., and attended Emory University.

Lieut. Campbell is a regular army man, having served as an enlisted man in the 35th Infantry. He spent 13 years at Schofield Barracks and nearly a year at Pearl Harbor as chief projectionist and sound technician. He graduated April 7 from Administrative Officer Candidate School at Gainesville, Fla., and report to Fort Benning on May 7.

Lawson Enlisted Men Get New Recreation Hall

Full Facilities For All Purposes Provided; Ready In Late Summer

Construction is underway on a new $24,000 all-purpose recreational hall for the enlisted personnel of Lawson Field, according to an announcement from that headquarters.

Located across from the air base athletic field, the new structure will include a large recreation room, suitable for use as a basketball court, dance floor, and general assembly room. In one end a second story balcony will be built to seat spectators.

Other facilities which the hall will afford are a locker room, equipped with showers, and rest rooms.

The building will be completed and ready for use sometime in the latter part of the summer.

30 Spirits On Forced March From Atlanta

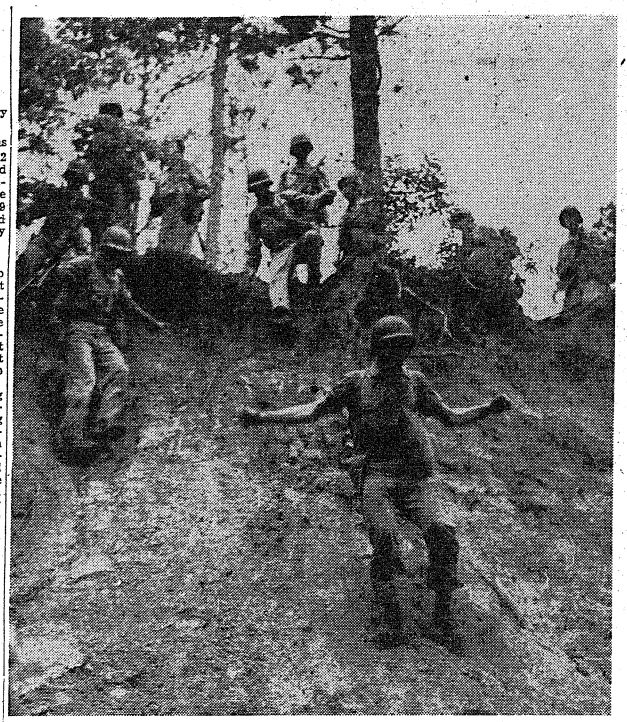
Troops To Determine Speed Rate Effect On Battle Fitness

Thirty soldiers of the 176th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning left Atlanta at 8 o'clock this morning on the first leg of a forced march which will end in Fort Benning some time Saturday.

The troops were taken to Atlanta early this morning and left from the intersection of Stewart and Decker Aves. NW, following Route 85 toward Columbus.

The purpose of the march over this 120 mile route is to determine the rate of speed at which troops can travel over a long distance and still be able to engage in battle when they arrive at their destination. The physical condition of the men will determine the pace of the march.

Stops are made every hour at which time the squad remove its shoes. Accompanying the squad as a part of it are two medical sergeants and a medical corporal who take care of any necessary foot treatments.



The first stop of any length was scheduled for Fayetteville at 2 o'clock where the troops were fed from a field kitchen. They expected to bivouac tonight at a spot one mile north of Haralson around 9 p. m. where the troops will be fed for chow at 2 o'clock at Woodbury with bivouac at Pine Mt. Valley.

BACK SATURDAY

On Saturday, the troop will stop for chow at Ellerslie and expect to reach Columbus late in the afternoon or early evening. The march will end officially in the rear of The Infantry School building where the troops will be met by the band of the 176th Regiment which will accompany them to their barracks.

The men have been undergoing extensive training for the last several days. They have taken long hikes, one of them a 27 mile affair, some of it cross country. On these hikes, they carried, in addition to full packs and personal weapons, mortars and machine guns. However on the march which began this morning, they had only their full packs and personal weapons.

The goal of 40 miles per day depends entirely on the condition of the men. If they are able, they will go farther. However it was stressed that regardless of the time involved, the men must be brought into Fort Benning ready to fight if a fight was necessary.

THIRTY SOLDIERS of the 176th Infantry today began a forced march from Atlanta to Fort Benning in preparation for which they have undergone intensive training in cross country marching. Under the supervision of the Infantry Board, this group, picked at random from the 176th, hopes to make at least 40 miles per day and still be in good condition for a battle at the end of their march. They are pictured negotiating a bit of rugged terrain in the vicinity of Marne Road.—(TIS Photo) ficers today are products of the Officer Candidate School system.

Extension of the courses which circumstances now permit, however, will enable schools to present better instruction. At the same time it will remove some of the pressure from students and make possible more thorough assimilation of the instruction.

Officer Candidate Schools have given the Army more than 185,000 officers who are now serving in grades from lieutenant colonel downward to second lieutenant.

As of April 30, 1943, one Officer Candidate School graduate had worked up through the grades from second lieutenant to that of lieutenant colonel; 16 had attained the grade of major; 2,167 had reached the grade of captain and 35,258 were first lieutenants.

Perhaps your husband has been complaining of late how hot and sticky his silk pajamas feel now that the temperature is rising. Silk nightwear is fine for winter, but for summer nights the most suitable outfit is made of lightweight wash cotton. The main floor of MONTGOMERY WARD COMPANY is stocked with men's pajamas, all colors and sizes ranging from A to D. These slip-on or coat style pajamas are made of wash ripple-cloth (similar to seersucker) and light, but durable rayon acetate material. The new style jackets sans collar and lapels help a bit to keep the wearer cool too. The cotton pajamas have long or short sleeves and afford a wide selection of stripes, prints and paisley patterns. Perhaps an old fashioned cotton night shirt is what your husband wants for summer night wear on his visits with Morpheus. They're really not as old fashioned as one might think and they are loose and comfortable without resembling a circus tent. Father's Day would be an appropriate time to give a gift of these attractive pieces of nightwear. Husbands or Fathers or Sons will all approve the pajamas you choose from this reasonably priced assortment.

This June many Fathers might be called Army Fathers. The J. A. KIRVEN CO. has kept in mind that ALL fathers like to receive surprise packages on Father's Day. Suitable as gifts are their Jantzen boxer - type swimming trunks in military tan and a blue shade which is especially popular with those in the parstroops. Bathrobes which might well be used as beach robes are well made and reasonably priced. A pair of trunks and a robe to match would indeed surprise and delight any Father, military or no. Especially for the army man is a regulation tie and handkerchief set, both the hanky and tie being army tan color. Whatever you have in mind to give your Father this June or have your children give their father you'll find what you wish or get some good ideas by shopping around the main floor of J. A. Kirven Co. Their displays of the clips, cuff links, garters, pajamas, Army and civilian shirts, socks and so on ad infinitum . . . will delight you and is not too great a strain on your pocketbook.

Your bag this year is the big bag . . . that carries your share. It's new and leather-saving . . . when made of fabric. It's the perfect bag for all round use, if you get yours at MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY. If you especially wish a leather handbag you'll find numerous durable and lovely offerings in this fast disappearing material. Casual or good bags for extra special occasions bear a famous label which assures expert workmanship and long-lasting fabrics. Appropriate accessories to wear with your new footwear are the fine grade hosiery in this same shop. With a wide price range and a variety of colors the smart thing to do is select stockings when you're buying shoes and this will assure you foot and leg wear harmoniously matched. The experienced personnel in this little shop within a shop will offer you courteous and understanding assistance. While mentioning shoes, bags, hose and things it could do no harm to remind you the time is fast approaching when shoe coupon No. 17 will be invalid. June 15 is just two weeks away, not very long, but still time enough for you to shop at Miller-Taylor's and end up with attractive shoes, hosiery and handbag without having to shop from store to store.

Ninety degrees in the shade out here on Block 23 and it's just as hot in Columbus. There's one consolation though, after an afternoon shopping in town dropping in at the centrally located CITY PHARMACY gives one a chance to have an appetizing snack and a frosty drink forgetting the torrid weather momentarily. To many of us who travel to town rather early in the morning and spend the whole day, the nicely served luncheons in this complete pharmacy are a welcome treat. Some day soon when you're in Columbus, why not have luncheon or the popular Shopper's Tea. After doing this just take a few moments and browse around and see the complete prescription department which will carefully compound your pharmaceutical needs. Notice also the vast assortment of makeup materials which are all attractively displayed. Here experienced assistance will be offered you if you wish help selecting correct shades of lipstick, rouge and powder. Now that you're acquiring a summer tan you'll want to wear a correct makeup to bring out the best in your lovely golden-bronze skin tones. If you're seeking cosmetics, medicines, knick-knacks, or an appetizing bite to eat, you'll find them all at City Pharmacy.

There are many days when wearing just a dress doesn't seem quite the thing to do. Often a pair of well cut slacks, if you have the figure for them, will make you feel comfortable and well dressed. Wearing slacks around the house or to do a bit of gardening in your Victory Garden can be quite the thing. You'll understand what I mean if you shop for slacks at KAYSER - JULIENTHAL. Their slacks are really beautifully made and not the droopy affairs that so many lesser quality slacks are. Many of the slack sets have slacks, jacket and a skirt to match so when you're finished your bit of work you'll be able to slip off your slacks, don your smoothly tailored skirt and be all set for the day. These slacks are made of easy-to-iron sharkskin and butcher linen. Short and long sleeves are available. One especially attractive outfit I spied combined a red, not too bright a red, though, jacket with navy blue slacks. Others have white sharkskin jackets with brass buttons, similar to the Navy summer uniform, the slacks with this style jacket are Navy blue or black. You'll find bright hued and rather intricate sets, or perhaps more subdued styles and colors, if you wish.

OUTFIT'S HISTORY

The Rainbow Division was so named when it was activated at Camp Mills in 1917 by Col. Douglas MacArthur, its first Chief of Staff. His selection of the name ended a dilemma over naming the division, occasioned by the fact it was composed of 27 National Guard units from 26 states and the District of Columbia. Each wanted a name symbolizing its state.

Colonel MacArthur, now General MacArthur in command of American forces in the South Pacific, decided that a 'rainbow' covered the division adequately and could be applied in many ways, such as covering the territory from which the troops came, covering the general thought and spirit for which they were fighting.

In the records of the division is a notation that before every major engagement in which it fought there appeared a rainbow.

On the day the officers of the new Rainbow Division reported to Fort Benning to begin their month's course, a rainbow appeared over their barracks in the First Student Training Regiment. Quite naturally it has been accepted as a fortunate omen for the new division.

American Soldiers Have No Excuse For Sloppiness

One of the worst abominations in this unhappy world is a sloppy soldier in garrison and one certainly sees some rare specimens in any garrison town or place where men congregate off duty.

Painful though it may be to admit it, the fact must be faced that our companion services, the Navy and the Marines have us lashed to the mast in the matter of bearing and appearance. Particularly in the case of the Navy with the acute limitations for keeping up appearances the sight of a dirty or untidy sailor is so rare as to be conspicuous.

Of course outfits very in the degree to which they stress matters of cleanliness of person and neatness of uniform and a certain responsibility can be laid at the feet of officers and non-coms who allow the men to leave their area with a sub-standard appearance. In at least one company here at Fort Benning a man is not given his pass unless he is pressed, polished, shined and combed as he should be.

However much authorities may stress these points no man can be forced beyond a certain point to look clean and smart unless he has the will to do it himself. Naturally such statements can't possibly apply to men who are doing dirty work or on field problems but these criticisms are not directed at such. They apply rather to those lads supposedly in "dress" uniform about the post and on the streets of the town who look like refugees from an unsuccessful barnstorming company of "Tobacco Road".

In a certain European country during peace times when universal military training obtained it was amusing to watch the soldiers one saw on the streets. Each looked as though he had chosen his own clothing according to individual whim and every one of them, even during the hot summer months, had some sort of handkerchief, rag or choker, inevitably dirty, wound around his neck. A messy and forlorn looking crew they were indeed. However they were merely military equivalents of what they had been in civilian life and what they'd return to being: clodhopping louts who never had any privileges in the army or out of it.

No such reason or excuse can be plead for the untidy American soldier. We are provided with adequate clothing of excellent quality and we are well paid; in many instances the equivalent of considerably more than civilian life allowed us.

In outfitting men at the induction centers the quartermasters do a superb job of fitting the garment to the man, despite innumerable not-very-funny grade "C" jokes to the contrary by cartoonists and humorists. In such cases as a man is given things which do not fit him he has every chance to exchange them for his correct size.

Such minor alterations as the shortening of trousers and the taking in of shirts can be done at the cost of between 35 and 50 cents at a post tailor or a dressmaker in a nearby community. Laundry costs are absurdly cheap while dry cleaning and pressing is done at prices lower than the cut-rate shops during peace time.

It is no uncommon thing to hear G. I.'s yearning for a return to civilian clothes. Those who moan loudest on this score are almost inevitably the scurviest looking soldiers. You may depend upon it that they cut no dashing figure on the right side of the Avenue at four p. m. in civilian life nor were they the cynosure of all eyes at Voisin's, Southampton and Piping Rock. On the contrary they probably always looked as though they'd just escaped from the book of birds.

Many mournful creatures deplore the fact that a uniform standardizes men and erases character. This is utter unqualified rubbish. In civilian life one will almost inevitably find that it is the fourth raters who go in for peculiarities of dress to attract attention to themselves. These are the inadequate souls who, not having sufficient strength of character to give them distinction, indulge in odd hats and weird neckties to compensate for their deficiencies of personality.

One of the foremost tailors in the world, Mr. Gray, of Gray and Lampel, once told the writer that material and cut were the most important factors in the distinction of clothing. American Army dress uniforms are designed by experts in that field and, within the limitations of ready-made clothing, are finely cut. Certainly their material is first rate. Well—after all, it is no doubt an accomplishment of some magnitude when a soldier manages to look like the wreck of the Hesperus. Consider that he has successfully frustrated all the efforts of the war department of the richest country in the world to the contrary.

American Soldiers Keep Their Hands Off Loot

It has been said of Americans in the last war that they fought it for souvenirs and, indeed a distressing number of American households in the 1920's rejoiced in a parlor lamp which started out in life as the case of a French 75 mm shell. Few "dens", also, had not a German helmet and what county courthouse lacked a couple of obsolete siege guns or field pieces? Indeed, were the Brandenburg Gate slightly less massive it might at this moment be straddling Fifth Ave. at 25th Street.

During a recent press conference General McNair remarked, apropos his experiences in North Africa, that although we have been teaching the uses of mines since the maneuvers of 1941, American troops do not seem to have profited by the instructions they have been given. While the General did not particularize, it is a pretty safe bet that a considerable number of these mines were booby traps baited with just the sort of glittering and ingenious gadget for which all G. I.'s are naturals and fall guys.

In the old days anything he could lay his hands on in enemy territory was considered fair game for soldiers and their leaders set them an example as witness the case of Napoleon who ravaged every capital in Europe of its major works of art including the great bronze horses which adorned the portico of St .Mark's Cathedral in Venice but which were returned after the Congress of Vienna.

The soldiers in the old days were paid very poorly and irregularly. Service was largely voluntary and looting was considered a legitimate part of the soldier's compensation. The sack of Peking by foreign soldiery, for instance, occurred less than half a century ago and many of the objects reposing in museums and private collections were purloined by troops from the Imperial residence in the Chinese capital.

Civilized nations today have outlawed the plundering of civilian property and, for that matter, public property which is not useful for belligerent purposes. According to reports the Japanese have had no compunction about taking anything they liked however. Allegations not satisfactorily substantiated have attributed to the Germans the appropriation of art objects in France and sending them to Germany. While they may not plunder in theory the Germans do in actual fact since they take what they like and "pay" for it in money devoid of purchasing power.

It hardly seems necessary to remark that violating the property of civilians, friendly or enemy will have no part in America's present war operations. There are other ways of winning a war than shooting people and we have no intention of playing the role of marauders and brigands in other quarters of the globe thus stirring up hatreds which will be the germ of future wars. Thus, for more reasons than one, all G. I. visiting firemen on foreign soil remember to keep hands off.

The Military Maids Render Patriotic Service

Last week General Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, presented service pins to approximately 200 young Columbus women who are affiliated with the worth-while organization termed "The Military Maids." In the words of General Fulton the awards were made in recognition of their "splendid cooperation in helping to entertain our vast number of enlisted men at Fort Benning."

The pins were only a token of the great debt the enlisted men of the post owe to these young ladies because their services are too great, their sacrifices too many, to be remunerated in any tangible way.

One might retort that the Military Maids receive their compensation through the good times they have attending the various functions demanding their presence. But this business of being a Military Maid is not just all dancing and good times. Many of these girls work until late afternoon. To make their social schedules they must buck the crowds packed in city buses to get home, get their dinner, primp themselves for the evening's activities, and then rush to the collecting station where buses await to take them to various destinations stretching from Harmony Church and Sand Hill to the Frying Pan area in Alabama. It matters not what the weather may be, they are on the spot ready to render their services.

The qualifications for membership as a Military Maid are high and not just any girl can be among the elect. She must be past her sixteenth birthday and must be passed upon by the membership committee. She must take the pledge to "live up to the highest standards of American womanhood and abide by all rules and regulations of the organization."

The Maids attended all USO and Army social functions. Before they are eligible to receive a pin, they must have attended twelve dances equivalent to 48 hours of service, all the while looking "their prettiest."

The BAYONET believes that it speaks for every soldier of this command in extending this note of appreciation to Mrs. Hugh Roberts, Jr., official hostess for the Military Maids, to the chaperons who are also giving their time and efforts, and to the Military Maids themselves. The entire organization represents the link that connects the soldier with the life he left behind and the life he must live until victory enables him to return to all that the rank and file of American youth hold dear.

PRIVATE'S PRAYER

The Sarge is my shedherd. I shall not want.
He maketh me pick up burnt matches. He leadeth me thru mud-puddles; he restoreth my step.
He guideth me on the course of obstacles for my health's sake. Yea, though I walk thru the valleys, I must run up the hills. He annoinieth my head with abuses and my cup runneth over. Surely cadence and KP will follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the hair of my Sargeant forever.

Are You Kidding, Buddy?

How Green Was My Valley

How green was my valley
And fertile the ground;
How rugged the mountains
That crowded around.
How deep were the rivers
And tall were the trees.
How peaceful and friendly
Our world was at ease.

How green was my valley.
And deep was the stream.
How beautiful the orchard
And fresh grass so green.
How peaceful the cattle
And sheep on the hill.
How cool in the twilight
So quiet and still.

Now gone from my valley
The green of its banks;
The streets are all furrowed
And broken by tanks.
The shell holes like craters
Are yawning and wide;
The buildings are roofless
And broken inside.

The good and the bad in man,
Jekyll and Hyde;
The strong and the weak in man
Pity and pride
Have entered my valley
Polluted, unclean;
Corrupted my valley
No longer is green.

FOR THOSE IN PAIN

The why of pain remains unanswered. No explanation explains, no argument convinces that it serves any useful purpose or that it is necessary in the scheme of existence.

No doubt many fine things have come out of suffering just as beautiful flowers bloom in the midst of glacial mountains or on the blackened edge of a volcano, but the one is as much a phenomenon as the other. As far as human understanding is concerned most suffering is vain, unprofitable, needless.

That brave, serene soul, Robert L. Stevenson was a chronic invalid most of his short life. When he could no longer speak he communicated his thoughts through his twitching fingers. In his "A Children's Garden of Verses," he has a brave, pathetic poem. It is not for children, but for grown-ups—

"In winter I get up by night,
And dress by yellow candlelight,
In summer, quite the other way,
I have to go to bed by day.

I have to go to bed and see
The birds still hopping on the tree,
And hear the grown-up people's feet
Passing by me in the street.

Oh, does it not seem hard to you,
When all the sky is clear and blue,
And I should like so much to play,
To have to go to bed by day."

But dying, he could sing—

"Under the wide and starry sky,
Dig the grave and let me lie.
Glad, did I live, and gladly die."

The only worthwhile compensation for pain and suffering is a calm, radiant, courageous spirit.

Verse

This original poem was written by a civilian who wishes he were in the army.

IMPOTENT

The bees are warm beneath the sun,
And flowers cup to catch the sky.
The winds are caroling as they run,
Oblivious that men conflict and die.

But it's little joy to know about
The earth's mild, peaceful moods,
When I am ebbing like a shout
From dark, malignant woods;

When I, compounding swords from words,
Find the blades rust-pocked and dull,
Find the forgings soft as curds
And foes combing in the lull.

Rather let me know that famines rage,
That typhoons ravage brittle shores,
That Nature mocks man's verbiage
Of smooth-spun lies, of peace-pact whores;

Let me know that flowers blight,
That bees are surfeiting and die,
To match my failure in the night
To flash the Sword of Peace on high!

GRANT H. REDFORD.

COMMISSIONS

Now that my eyes are opened
To the truth of the matter,
And I'm getting much leaner,
And not any fatter:

I'll confess the grave error
Of making a blunder
By calling a "Shavetail"
A "Ninety Day Wonder."

They used to say once,
That a moron could do it;
I said to myself,
Now I certainly rue it.

It takes lots of headwork
And plenty of guts,
If you think it doesn't,
You're certainly nuts.

Here's the truth of the matter,
Now that I have discerned it
WHEN YOU GET YOUR COMMISSION
YOU DAMN WELL HAVE EARNED IT!

Key Says—

SHE LONGS FOR MOM'S GOOD OLE PLAIN HOME COOKING

My thoughts have been turning to food these days—possibly because simple food, well prepared and attractively served, is of even more importance now that many items are hard to get. I've been running over, in my mind, dishes I've had in the past, mostly at a fairly tender age. They're not so much dinners prepared by professional chefs, but home-cooked meals that "hit the spot" at the time.

Take, for example, mother's strawberry shortcake. There was a dish for you. None of this fancy sponge cake concoction topped with whipped cream. Our idea of a shortcake, as youngsters, consisted of a big tin of piping-hot biscuit dough, split in the middle after baking and spread with butter. Strawberries oozed between the layers and covered the top. The masterpiece was cut into wedge-shaped pieces, covered with cream, and eaten with a spoon. Two servings of that—and we generally asked for seconds—and you didn't have room for anything else.

Mother, as I recall, must have been what is known as a "good plain cook." Even at that, her cooking was a bit on the uncertain side and sometimes delegated to whatever "hired girl" we might have with us at the time. But given the time and the inclination, and mother could surprise us all with a dish fit for royalty. Her stewed chicken, cooked with home-made egg noodles or perhaps topped with dumplings, all surrounded with a luscious gravy, was something to remember. And her bread puddings, ordinarily thought of as very common food, were considered by all of us as fitting fare to top off any dinner.

Mother's French thrift sometimes led her to extremes, however. I recall the day she inadvertently mixed dressing for potato salad in the same pan in which she had previously poured perfume to facilitate its transfer to a smaller bottle. One bite of the main item on our dinner and the family refused to experiment further. But mother, loaths to throw away good food, insisted to the last bite on her plate that she could taste nothing strange.

Perhaps my taste buds have been blunted by too many seasonings and sauces to appreciate "good plain cooking". But I'd like to taste some of Mother's simple dishes and her home-canned fruits and jellies again just to see if they're as good as I remember them to be.

OLD COLONEL T. P. FILLS RUSS POOL WITH 'SWAMP-WATER' ACCIDENTALLY

By S. SGT. TOM McDONALD

Due to the extreme humidity of the current atmosphere, Colonel Swampwater has been complaining rather vehemently about the degree of heat now prevalent and of its effect upon his physical being.

"Sergeant," he says, "What I need is a day of swimming, paddling, and floating. I think I shall go down to Russ Pool and spend the day."

"That's all very nice, Sir," I said, "but Russ Pool is only open to enlisted men and their friends."

"Shades of Salome, Sergeant!" the old boy retorted, "I am the friend of every enlisted man. I have their interests at the bottom of my heart; their every desire is my anticipation, and I want all of them to have three square meals a day."

"Yes, Sir, I know, but that's the regulations. You can go in the Officers Club pool though."

"I don't want to go in the Officers Club pool!" the ol' boy growled. Colonel Ray's Boy Scouts leave their Scout knives laying around and I'm afraid I'll step on one. Besides they got a lotta WAAC's down at Russ Pool that I wanna inspect."

"Yes, Sir," I replied, "but I don't believe they will let you in, Sir."

"That's where you're wrong, my boy! Why I've crashed everything from an Arabian Horse Show to the anniversary carnival of the Lafayette Club for women. Send a letter to General Quagmire through channels for me to go swimming in Russ Pool."

"Yes, Sir," I answered still skeptical.

"Also put 'urgent' on the letter. I want to go in tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock. Quagmire owes me 30 cents so there's no danger of a refusal."

"Yes, Sir," I said ambling to my typewriter. And slowly beginning to pound the keys while my leader gazed out of his office window with a beaming smile on his puss and the glint of devilment twinkling in his eyes.

As the last word of the letter was pounded out, the ol' boy came over with his fountain pen and commenced to read the letter over my shoulder. When he finished, he picked it up and scrawled "T. P. Swampwater" neatly above the "Colonel, Infantry", and turning to me with a strange leer in his right eye, he asked:

"Sergeant, do those WAAC wear two-piece suits?"

"Yes, Sir," I grinned, not altogether cognizant of my leader's motives.

Late Bulletin; The Colonel went swimming in Russ Pool, but unofficially. Denied pool privileges by his superior, he wangled an order to inspect the pool and "inadvertently" let his foot slip as he walked along the edge of the pool. The pool will now have to be drained to get rid of the "Swamp-water."

176ER HOPES TO START POST CLUB FOR PHILATELISTS

Public Relations Office,
Ft. Benning, Ga.,
Gentlemen—

Being a philatelist and deeply interested in stamp collecting, it has occurred to me that among the personnel of Ft. Benning there may be many other interested stamp collectors. This thought has prompted me to write to you and trust you can assist in furthering this cause.

Through the medium of the "Ft. Benning Bayonet," would it be possible to have a small article published in such a manner to arouse interest with regard to forming a Stamp Club in the forthcoming issue? All enlisted personnel, both men and officers alike (including WAAC's) would be cordially invited to contact this writer in an effort to determine the amount of collectors so interested, and the decision of a meeting place.

This entire procedure has the approval of my commanding officer, and I trust that your cooperation in this matter will also be forthcoming.

Thanking you in advance, I am,
Sincerely,
PVT. Wm. HOFNER,
Co. L—176th Inf.
Ft. Benning.

P. S. — Kindly be emphatic about the fact that all collectors of Ft. Benning are invited, not just those of the 176th Inf. Regiment.

WANTED—NEW DEAL

My "Zoot Suit" is hung with the greatest of care
In a vault in an anti-moth room;
My car's parked up in front of the house—
The back seat as bare as a tomb;
My Stetson is blocked and stuck in a box
Away from sunlight and dust;
My "Russian pajamas" are salted away
With a thousand dreams that went bust;
My flame-colored ties are draped on a rack—
My imported socks in a bale.
My gal's gone off with a sailor lad
(He oughta be tossed in jail.)
My job is shot, my friends have left,
My mind's not even free.
I guess I played draw with an ice cold deck
When I joined the Infantry.

'Yank' To Celebrate Birthday On June 25

Special Anniversary Issue Will Observe 1st Year's Completion

YANK, the Army's official weekly, by and for enlisted men will celebrate its first birthday with a special anniversary issue dated June 25, 1943.

Opening with a cover cartoon of the favorite Doughboy character, "Sad Sack," the anniversary issue of YANK, The Army Weekly will contain a Report to the Enlisted Man on a year's progress of the Army, extra cartoon pages, a large cartoon map of the United States by Sgt. Ralph Stein, and a message from the Army's Commander-in-Chief — President Roosevelt.

The Roosevelt letter will recall the President's message to YANK's soldier-readers published in Volume 1, No. 1, 52 weeks ago. In that message, Roosevelt reviewed the principals for which we're fighting and added, "I intend to read YANK—every issue of it—from cover to cover."

The anniversary issue will contain eight additional pages over the usual 24; it will go on sale in Army exchanges and Navy Ships' Service stores on June 18. Only servicemen are permitted to buy copies.

Since YANK's inception last June, the publication has expanded its activities to include world-wide coverage and distribution. Its soldier-correspondents have gone up in B-17's over the Southwest Pacific, they've submerged in pig boats in the Atlantic, they've ridden jeeps in Tunisia, they've looked at Germany through open bomb-doors, they've made charcoal sketches and snapped photos under the fire of Jap snipers, and they have tailed treating Nazis with advance patrols of the British 8th.

One YANK reporter, in his enthusiasm for a scoop, found himself 600 yards ahead of an armored column that stormed Sened.

Sgt. Pete Paris was one of the first soldiers to enter Macknassy, while artist Sgt. Howard Brodie had his sketch pad shot out of his hands by a Jap sniper in Guadalcanal.

In all 30 YANK correspondents have been under fire, four have been temporarily hospitalized, one killed in line of duty.

The result has been a weekly news magazine with the punch of a flying fortress and the sparkle of a G. I. belt buckle. So much have soldiers come to rely on YANK as their official voice that the editorial offices in New York receive an average of 1600 letters weekly in fan mail and technical queries alone. Requests include everything from locating a long-lost brother to sending swing-music scores to an isolated Army band. And YANK has complied with hundreds of such requests.

ARMY CROSS-SECTION

Contents of the Army Weekly are nothing more or less than a digest and cross section of Army life as it actually appears to soldiers. When Army existence is serious or unpleasant, YANK makes no bones about it. But neither is it ashamed to boast a healthy interest in the opposite sex and a full appreciation of humor. Its cartoons and gags spare no one—from the highest "brass hats" to the saddest sack.

YANK's anniversary issue will mark a definite milestone in the annals of American publishing. It is a tribute from enlisted men to the very principals of freedom for which they are fighting.

538 Armored Battalion Here

Is New Type Unit In U. S. Fighting Forces

A new type of organization in the Army—a separate armored infantry battalion—is being organized in the First Student Training Regiment area with the creation of the 538th Armored Infantry Battalion, it was announced at Fort Benning Monday.

The table or organization of the new outfit is virtually the same as that of a battalion in an armored infantry regiment of an armored division.

Captain Charles D. Young, formerly of the 54th Armored Infantry Regiment of the Tenth Armored Division, is acting as battalion commander. A cadre of 34 officers and 103 enlisted men has arrived at Fort Benning from another station to form the nucleus of the new organization.

The battalion has been attached to the 10th Armored Division for training.

A WINGED MESSENGER GETS "WINGS" as Col James Coutts, assistant commandant of the Parachute school at Fort Benning, awards paratrooper wings to "Thunder Bird," pigeon that has made 10 jumps from an airplane to become the first official paratroop pigeon. The bird is part of a training group at Fort Benning used for teaching two members of each class of paratroopers how to handle the messengers that take out vital messages from points behind enemy lines. Here Col. Coutts pins the official paratroopers wings on "Thunder Bird" which is held in the newly developed carrying jacket that is strapped to a paratroopers' uniform. The bird is held by Pvt. Raymond Chapin, Spencer, Mass., as Pvt. Philip Carney, Boston, looks on at the ceremony.

Bakers, Cooks School Is Parent Unit Of 4th S. C. Organizations

Institution Trains Men To Feed Hungry Army In All Situations

Advanced educational methods are utilized to the fullest degree in instruction at the Bakers and Cooks School at Fort Benning, with charts, models and blackboard providing the teaching tools to supplement the spoken word.

Administrators and instructors alike are specially trained and qualified to supervise and teach the bakers and cooks attending the school the best possible ways in which to provide food for fighting men whether at a post, in a camp or on the field of battle.

The Cooks and Bakers School here provides a 60-day course for cooks, a 60-day course for bakers, and two-week and one-month courses for officers from the Fourth Service Command. The officers are given advanced courses in mess management and mess supervision, and provide competent mess officers for the many military organizations stationed in the command.

The Fort Benning school is the parent school for a total of 14 in this service command. These include a colored school also located here, and ones located at St. Petersburg, Miami Beach and Camp Blanding, Fla.; Keesler Field and Camp Shelby, Miss.; Camp Forrest, Tenn.; Ft. Jackson, S. C., and Ft. Bragg, N. C. Also included are new schools opened within the last three months at the 3rd WAAC Training Center at Ft. Oglethorpe, Ga.; Maxwell Field and Camp Sibert, Ala.; and the 2nd WAAC Training Center at Daytona Beach, Fla.

ROOKS IN COMMAND

Col. John M. Rooks is commandant of all Fourth Service Command schools and directs their work from his headquarters at the Fort Benning school. With a background of 34 years in the army, 24 of them in the Quartermaster Corps, Colonel Rooks has the responsibility of supervising and handling the installation of bakeries in all camps, stations and forts in the Fourth Service Command. He visits each school once or twice a month.

Lt. Col. Grover M. Ford is assistant to Colonel Rooks and is the executive officer of all schools for bakers and cooks in the command. Prior to his call to active duty, he was a professor of biochemistry.

Working directly under Colonel Rooks as mess supervisor for the Fourth Service Command is Major Joseph N. Clemons, of Miami Beach, Fla.

Warrant Officer Daniel H. Siroty is personnel adjutant for the schools and handles the problems incident to the many soldiers who are sent to the 14 schools. Mr. Siroty, who was inducted into the army in August, 1941, handled personnel matters for a large textile firm in New York City before his call to the army.

The immediate problem of instruction in the Baking and the Cooking schools at Fort Benning rests to a large degree upon Master Sgt. Henry B. Whitehorn, Jr., of Memphis, Tenn., senior instructor for both the schools.

Master Sergeant John W. Shaffer of Pittsburg, Pa., is chief baking instructor and also is in charge of all courses of instruction, theoretical and practical, of field and garrison baking.

Tech. Sgt. Daniel R. Brooker of Tampa, Fla., is assistant chief baker and supervises the practical phase of baking in the school.

GO TO CHICAGO

Typical of the training and qualifications which instructors at the Fort Benning school are required to have is the fact that Master Sgt. Whitehorn, Staff Sgt. Clifford L. Edgar of Union, Miss., who is in charge of the experimental group at the Baking school and assists in instruction, and baking school instructors including Tech. 3rd gd. Sidney Jacobs of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Sgt. Techs. Burl W. Beaverson of Toledo, Ohio, and Frank H. Lambros, were all sent to the American Institute of Baking in Chicago and completed the army advanced course of baking.

At the Institute, the instructors were taught not only all the principles of baking and field maintenance but also were carefully taught the best possible methods of instilling knowledge into the minds of those men who attend the schools. They were taught to present their subjects in the simplest manner, to assume the student knows nothing about baking when he begins the course, to use charts, pictures, models, blackboards and all kinds of teaching aids.

Cardboard charts and illustrations present one of the most important steps in teaching the courses. Three sergeant technicians, Charles E. Parker of New York City, Ben D. Winer of Norfolk, Va., and Charles F. Walters of Chicago, devote their entire time to preparing these charts and pictures in their chart and sign studio. All of them were commercial artists or professional sign painters in civilian life and have attended the Sign Painters School at Camp Lee, Va.

The studio prepares all the charts used for classes in the schools in cooperation with the instructors. The artists and the instructors correlate their experience in teaching and artistic presentation and work out the best methods of making up the charts and illustrations so that students will be most beenfitted.

Believing that the learning period is considerably shortened and that subjects are more explicit and clearly presented when illustrated with drawings and lettering on charts, the school has these learning aids covering the walls of classrooms and available on every subject which is touched. All of the processes of baking are outlined in one series of charts, clearly, chronologically, and with striking illustrations. Another series of charts in the Cooks School covers every phase of nutrition. Charts also provide pictorial guides on the construction, assembling and dis-assembling of field equipment.

Mottos and admonitory epigrams line the walls of the classrooms and buildings. One of them, illustrates a rooster being beheaded by an axe. The caption, "There's One Way to Learn—Stick Your Neck Out," is designed to encourage the students to ask any questions which might bother them in their understanding of the subject. Other such signs, professionally painted by the men in the studio who pride themselves on the quality of their work, provide stimuli to soldiers attending the courses of instruction.

MODELS SHOWN

Models of baking ovens, field ranges, and other equipment as well as sections of equipment are placed in the classroom and are constantly used for demonstration purposes during lectures on the use of baking equipment. Learning the nomenclature of the equipment is made much easier and understanding of the function of each part is made clearer to the student by the use of such models.

Blackboards are utilized to instruct the student with outlines, formulae for baking and the thousand and one other things which present themselves during the classes.

Plans also are being made to open a new laboratory for the bakers school so that laboratory tests can be made. Glutin tests to determine the amount of proteins and ash tests to find out the amount of minerals contained in flour, a water absorption test to discover how much water will go into the particular type of flour, acidity tests to analyze the amount of acid or alcohol in the finished bread product and an opportunity to see the effects of unbalanced formulae on the final outcome of bread, are the uses to which the projected new laboratory could be put.

It is felt a laboratory of this sort would give the students a more thorough knowledge of the chemistry in baking and teach them more fully how they could be able to remedy any fault that might occur in the finished product.

Theoretical instruction in the art of cooking is provided by Staff Sgt. Hoke S. Sewell of Columbus, Ga., Staff Sgt. Jerry M. G. Allen of Nashville, Tenn., and Sgt. Tech. Charles R. Sparks of Louisville, Ky.

Utilizing the most modern and practicable teaching methods known, the Fort Benning Bakers and Cooks School is scientific in its approach to instructing, and depends upon science for its knowledge of nutrition, formulae, vitamins and the many other factors important to their field.

But despite this application of scientific knowledge and principles, instructors strive to imprint indelibly upon the minds of students and visitors alike that cooking and baking should not be classified as a mundane science.

"Cooking and Baking," they insist with pride, "is an ART!"

Profs, STB Clash Features TIS Card

Brigade Win Can Throw Race In 3-Way Tie For Loop Honors

With 10 games on tap this week, almost every team in the Infantry School League will make two appearances. The 176th Spirits play only once, facing the 124th at Gowdy Field on Sunday, while the Gators and the 244th play three games each.

Tomorrow night the Academic Regiment Profs will try to add another one to their long victory string, taking on the Tanks at Gowdy Field. Meanwhile the Gators and Rifles will be battling it out at Harmony Church.

Most prominent game of the week is that between the undefeated Profs and the powerful Student Training Brigade at Gowdy Field on Sunday.

The league fight seems to have settled down to a battle among the Profs, the Brigade and the 300th. Sunday's game will either practically eliminate the Brigadiers from the first-half race or so tighten up the loop that a victory also by the 300th over the Profs can throw the lead into a three-way tie.

On offense the Profs have a decided edge over the Brigadiers, batting .300 as compared to the Brigade's team average of .240. Only one Brigadier is batting over .300, the bulk of the Brigade's power apparently being centered in Red McCluskey who is batting an even .500. McCluskey's output includes six doubles and two homers. The Profs have seven men hitting over .300, led by Plunk with .428, Fenno with .413, Moore with .366 and Niebler with .347.

PROFS AVERAGE GOOD

The Profs have averages better than 12 runs per game while the Brigadiers have averaged six. In extra bases the Profs also have the advantage, boasting 15 doubles, four triples and four homers. The Brigade has 11 doubles, no triples and three homers.

The hustle shown by the Profs is evidenced in their base-stealing record of 22 steals in seven games. The Brigadiers have swiped four bases in six games. Benny Zientara is far ahead in the league with seven robberies to his credit.

In fielding both teams are about even while the hurling is also about on a par. In Prendergast and DeVolder the Brigadiers can boast two brilliant pitchers; but the Profs can counter with Dickinson and Rundus. Sunday's game will probably see a tight pitching duel between Prendergast and Dickinson. The previous game went 11 innings before the Profs eked out a 5 to 4 victory.

SECOND GAME

The second game of the Gowdy Field double-header features the 176th against the 124th in a game that will throw light on the three-way fight for fourth place now raging among the Spirits, Gators and Rifles.

Highlights of last week were the Profs making it seven straight in whipping the 176th, 8 to 1, and the rampaging 300th winning its sixth straight as Cave hurled a 4-0 shut-out over the 176th, holding the Spirits to three hits.

Tiger Play-Off Is Slated This Week-End

Tiger Service Co. Wallops Hq. Company

Winners Collect 7 Runs In 7th Frame To Win 8-5

By CPL. CARROLL M. RINES

Outhit 12 to 4, Service company 10th A. D., collected seven runs on only two safeties in a big seventh and final frame to defeat its traditional rival, Hq. & Hq. company, 10th A. D., 8-5, in a "grudge" battle at Gowdy field, last Thursday afternoon.

The scrap between these two friendly enemies was all Headquarters company until the final canto. The losers landed hard on Service company's starting hurler, Cpl. Milton "Bib" Falk, at the outset and collected seven hits and four runs off the big righthander before driving him from the mound in the third stanza.

Speedballer Walter Brown came in to put out the fire and pitch steady five-hit, one-run ball the rest of the way, but with Berglund pitching two-hit ball, Headquarters appeared all set.

LUCKY SEVENTH

But came the seventh, and it certainly was the "lucky seventh" for the Servicemen. Berlung hit leadoff man Chernak with one of his slants to start all the trouble. Then followed a base on balls, a fielder's choice, an error, and B. Brown's single for four runs that sidetracked Berglund.

Killian came in from the outfield to take over the mound chore, but fared no better. Lt Scholl's single, an "Annie Aakley" and another fielder's choice meant three more runs and brought in Gray, who managed to retire the side without further scoring.

Lt. Scholl and B. Brown garnered all the winners' bingles but Cpl. John Valley of Headquarters company was the hitting star of the day, with a double and two singles to show for his four trips to the plate.

11TH ARMORED CENTERFIELDER IS BAT CHAMP

Lt. Hearn Hits .563 In 32 Official Trips To Plate To Take Lead

BY CPL. CARROLL M. RINES

Lt. Ora Hearn, 11th Armored regiment center fielder, wears the crown of 10th Armored division batting king, official averages released today by Tiger division baseball statisticians reveal. The big righthanded batting Tanker gardener banged out 18 hits in 32 official trips to the platter to win the Sand Hill league championship with a .563 mark, nearly 100 points higher than any other willow wielder in the division.

Top honors in the Cusseta league are shared by Pfc. Claude Shoemake of the 774th T. D. battalion, rated by many the division's No. 1 pitcher, and T-5 Reginald Schell, Supply battalion third sacker. Both the Teedees' big left hand batting chucker and the QM outfit's stocky hot corner guardian slapped out 19 safeties in 40 tries for identical .475 marks.

Sgt. Mike Medaglia, the 455th Coast Artillery (anti-aircraft) battalion nine's classy handy man, misses a share of this circuit's title by just one point. Medaglia collected 18 bingles in 38 attempts for his .474 record, his timely hits helping the Cusseta champs to nine straight loop wins.

Second, third and fourth honors in the Sand Hill loop all go to members of the undefeated 3rd Armored regiment combine. T-4 John Snyder, first baseman, is runner-up with a .455 average; T-4 Hal Garbrick, shortstop, third with .370, while Second Baseman Yarbur shares fourth with Third Baseman Maddox of the 1st battalion, 54th Armored Infantry regiment, both having .364 marks.

Only 10 hitters hit over .300 in the Sand Hill league but no less than 30 stickers edged their way into the select circle in the Cusseta loop, the championship 455th club having seven sluggers over this figure. The undefeated 3rd Armored Dragons placed four men in the Sand Hill circuit's top ten.

Top team honors in the Sand Hill league go to the 3rd AR, only team hitting over .300 for the season. The Dragons posted a collective mark of .305, with 75 hits in 246 official times at bat. The runner-up 1st battalion, 54th AIR nine also finished second in team batting, with a .247 average.

Boasting an array of sluggers from the top to the bottom of its batting order, the 455th's powerhouse walked away with the team batting title in the Cusseta league, smashing out 125 safeties in 345 tries for a .362 mark. Two other teams, second place Supply battalion and seventh place 90th Armored Reconnaissance battalion, also hit over the magic .300 figure. The QM aggregation boasts a .322 mark while the surprising Recon club, strong on offense but woefully weak defensively, has a team batting record of .308.

Hoop High-Scorer, Post Conference, Goes To Finney

Sgt. Francis "Ace" Webster, formerly captain of the Medical Detachment basketball team, and one of the most prominent athletic figures the Detachment ever had, has been transferred to the Finney General Hospital at Thomasville, Ga.

Sgt. Webster was the leading scorer in the Post Basketball Conference of the past season, having chalked up 186 points in 14 games. He was considered by his associates as one of the best basketball players in Ft. Benning last season. He took his sports seriously, and played a hard, but always clean game.

Medicos Enjoy Monthly Smoker

Three fast boxing bouts entertained the personnel of Medical Detachment, Station Hospital, Major Joyner commanding, Friday night when men of the detachment held their monthly smoker. Two colored boys furnished the excitement for the initial bout, and were followed by two fast matches between white boys of the unit. Also on the athletic card was a three-fall wrestling match between two heavies from the main mess hall.

Music and singing were much in evidence in a variety program, and the feature musical treat came when Private Gist, of the colored barracks, brought out some hot numbers on that decimated musical-saw instrument known as a flexatone.

Addresses of a morale building nature were made by Major James Loveless, Chaplain McCarty, and the commanding officer. Lt. Webster was in charge of the athletic and entertainment program.

1st STR Cadre Begins New Softball Series

Teams Play Thrice Weekly; Champs To Receive Award

After a concerted three weeks' military program consisting of voice and command exercises, precision movements, mass calisthenics, and an interesting course in judo, the cadre of the 4th Battalion, 1st Student Training Regiment, has begun a second softball series.

Under the direction of Lt. Gneiss, 244th Company, the battalion athletic officer, a six weeks' program of softball games has been started. The cadre of the six companies in the 4th Battalion are all interested in softball, and seem to be intent on making sure that their team and company comes out on top at the end of the series.

This second series of games differs quite a bit from the first. Primarily the first series was for the purpose of obtaining exercises, and it was required that every man in each company play at least two innings if he did not

'Dream' Games Feature Opening Tilts Saturday

Dragons Meet 420th F. A.; 455th Ties Up With 774th

Jupiter Pluvius and the luck of the draw teamed up to create "dream games" in the opening rounds of both the 10th Armored division's Sand Hill and Cusseta league playoffs, slated for this Saturday and Sunday at Sand Hill.

These playoffs are both Shaughnessy system single elimination affairs, in which the first and third teams in regular league play will collide on Saturday with the second and fourth place teams battling on the same day.

A week of rain right at the end of the regular season brought about several cancellations in the Sand Hill circuit, and, although this did not cause any team to miss out on a playoff berth, it did make a definite alignment of the quartet of nines in the series.

The defending divisional championship 3rd Armored Regiment Dragons, winners of eight straight loop starts, hold the No. 1 spot, of course. The 1st Bn., 54th Armored Infantry Regiment, with six wins and two losses, gets second; the 420th Armored Field Artillery Bn., with five wins and two defeats, third; and the 11th Armored Regiment, with five wins and three losses, fourth.

This means that the 3rd Armored and 420th combines, rated by most followers of Tiger division baseball as the fastest teams in the senior circuit, will play each other in the first round, Saturday at 2 p. m. on diamond No. 8-1, Tiger Field. The 1st Bn., 54th AIR, dark horse of the playoffs, will battle the in-and-out 11th AR aggregation at the same time on diamond No. 5.

THREE-WAY TIE

Undefeated in nine Cusseta league encounters, the 455th Coast Artillery Anti-Aircraft) Bn. diamonders easily clinched top berth in that loop's series. Second place in the final standings, however, was a three-way tie, between the 774th T. D. Bn., Maint Bn., 1942 titleholder, and Supply Bn. Pairings determined by a recent draw at the division Special Service Office match the 455th with the 774th, only team to give it a close rub during the regular season. The champs defeated the Crackers, 3-1, on the strength of pitcher Weicht's nine-inning circuit clout, when these classy teams met a few weeks ago. Maint. Bn. and the QM outfit will clash in the other contest—and they also appear very evenly matched.

The sites of the Cusseta playoffs have not yet been determined. There is considerable agitation for playing the 455th-774th game at Gowdy Field, the champs being stationed on the Main Post. If this game is played at Godwi Field, either as an afternoon or night affair, the Maintenance-Supply scrap will be scheduled on diamond No. 9-2. If the former game is played at 9-2, the Supply-Maint. Bn. tussle will be contested at Field No. 2.

Winners of the two league titles will meet for the division crown in a best two-out-of-three series June 16, 17 and 18.

have company duty for the day. Also it was possible for at least one officer to play with the team at any one time.

CHANGES MADE

However, some kicks were heard about the required substitutions and officers participating, and was decided that the present series would be just the way the men wanted it. Therefore, each company may pick their team and play their men just as they wish.

Officers may umpire or supervise but cannot participate in the games as players.

The teams are playing three afternoons a week, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 4:30. Three softball diamonds have been marked out in the Battalion area so that all companies may play at the same time. Umpires are selected from the enlisted personnel in the Battalion.

Some "suitable award" for the winning team in the series has been promised, and for the next several weeks there promises to be keen competition among the companies.

All teams have had softball uniforms in various degrees of completeness issued, and this team uniformity plus excellent and complete softball equipment make for more cooperative team spirit and better softball.

Plans are being started already for a swimming program that is to be started at the conclusion of the softball series.

Ex-Processing Officers Compare Notes at Post

Months prior to beginning their work and training at Fort Benning, numerous officers of the 8th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, perhaps used to wonder just what kind of soldiers the thousands of men passing through their installations have become.

These officers were the ones who started the selectees along the route from civilian life into the Army of the United States. They received thousands of men from the countless draft boards throughout their districts and processed them, sending the qualified men on to the reception centers from the recruiting and induction stations. The inductions officers in many cases had to decide to the best of their ability whether men with little schooling, for instance, would be qualified for army service.

They sent many of these men along with thousands of other men of all types to the reception centers, where the selectees and volunteers also were classified and sent on to troop units or to replacement training centers for the preliminary work necessary to make the man a prospective "good soldier."

Now in the 8th Company, numerous former induction and reception center officers, then of the army service forces, are able to compare notes with fellow officers from divisions which received men of the type sent through the first processing installations, and are learning the divisions of replacement training centers too had their share of difficulties in fitting many of the new inductees into the places in the army where they could be of service in the total war effort.

But the main point is that these officers now are learning at Fort Benning the latest in military subjects pertaining to the infantry, and before many more months have passed undoubtedly will be in other camps training and leading men they originally inducted into the army or classified into the infantry branches—all this being one step farther along the route in the processing of the qualified civilian selectee from an untrained rookie to one of the trained and efficient soldiers so representative of the American army today.

In preparation for those coming assignments, the newly transferred army ground force officers are learning :by doing" what will be included to some extent in the training schedules for the rookies from the reception centers.

They are finding too that this study and training is building up their speed and ability and physical condition—some of them already having learned with astonishment there are many, many different muscles in the body which can grow painful with exercise, and that exercise is plentiful in the 8th Company.

Post G.I.'s Read War, Sociology And Economics

The literary speed of the G. I. is not colored comics and horse sagas, believe it or not. That's on the testimony of Miss Frances Chandler who, in her capacity as librarian at Fort Benning's Main Post, should certainly know.

In civilian life, a high school librarian, Miss Chandler says that soldiers at Fort Benning show better choice and eagerness in their literary likes and dislikes than her former students.

While there is considerable call for those works of current fiction which are considered by critics and the general public as the most distinguished among recent books, the most sought for are volumes dealing with the present war, social and economic conditions. Which proves, she believes, that the modern soldier is a pretty serious fellow.

POPULAR TITLES

Cecil Brown's "Suez to Singapore," "Guadalcanal Diary" by Richard Tregaskis and Ira Wolfert's "Battle for the Solomons" are some of the most popular titles, while works on Russia, such as Margaret Bourke-White's "Shooting the Russian War" are also in considerable demand. Mildly surprising, perhaps, is that call for good verse and Shelley, St. Vincent Millay, the Brownings and other poets enjoy the favor of the modern warrior. However, escapist or purely entertaining literature takes a secondary place in favor of non-fiction. Then too, books on military and technical topics are much in demand, showing that the soldier is quite capable of seeking knowledge of his own volition and without compulsion.

Magazines in most frequent use are "Time," "Newsweek," "Life" and "Fortune," a trend consistent with the books most widely circulated. This is out of a total of 50 magazines and 12 newspapers subscribed to by the library.

The crop of books written by enlisted men and dealing with their individual experiences are popular but not accepted with the uncritical amusement they arouse among civilians.

Mrs. W. G. Atwood, assistant librarian, observed that many readers of this sort of literature are irritated by the conventional depiction of the enlisted man as an obtuse misfit and wonder if the difficulties of the narrators are not due, in considerable measure to their own particular limitations.

"See Here Private Hargrove" is one book which has been singled out for this sort of adverse criticism and the men generally are not amused with the picture presented of a benevolently fuddled army working at cross purposes within itself.

Naturally, in using the library patrons as a criterion of G. I. intellect, Miss Chandler points out that there are plenty of men on the Post who never enter the library precincts. None the less, the traffic in that place at any time after duty hours must impress any observer as an indication of a high degree of literacy among the personnel of the Fort.

Sgt. Springer Is Warrant Officer; Goes To Fort Mac

Appointed warrant officer last week, T-3 Robert K. Springer has been assigned to Ft. McPherson for duty, it was announced at post headquarters where he had been chief clerk of the Enlisted Personnel Section of Fort Benning since October 1942.

A native of Independence, Mo., W. O. Springer was a railroad man before entering the service Jan. 7, 1941. He was sent to Ft. Leavenworth, Kas., then to Fort Benning with the Second Armored Regiment. Later he was assigned to DEML, and was made chief clerk of the enlisted section last October.

Post Soldiers Read War, Sociology and Economics

The literary speed of the G. I. is not colored comics and horse sagas, believe it or not. That's on the testimony of Miss Frances Chandler who, in her capacity as librarian at Fort Benning's Main Post, should certainly know.

In civilian life, a high school librarian, Miss Chandler says that soldiers at Fort Benning show better choice and eagerness in their literary likes and dislikes than her former students.

While there is considerable call for those works of current fiction which are considered by critics and the general public as the most distinguished among recent books, the most sought for are volumes dealing with the present war, social and economic conditions. Which proves, she believes, that the modern soldier is a pretty serious fellow.

POPULAR TITLES

Cecil Brown's "Suez to Singapore," "Guadalcanal Diary" by Richard Tregaskis and Ira Wolfert's "Battle For The Solomons" are some of the most popular titles, while works on Russia, such as Margaret Bourke-White's "Shooting the Russian War" are also in considerable demand.

Mildly surprising, perhaps, is that call for good verse and Shelley, St. Vincent Millay, the Brownings and other poets enjoy the favor of the modern warrior. However, escapist or purely entertaining literature takes a secondary place in favor of non-fiction. Then, too, books on military and technical topics are much in demand, showing that the soldier is quite capable of seeking knowledge of his own volition and without compulsion.

Magazines in most frequent use are "Time," "Newsweek," "Life," and "Fortune," a trend consistent with the books most widely circulated. This is out of a total of 50 magazines and 12 newspapers subscribed to by the library.

The crop of books written by enlisted men and dealing with their individual experiences are popular but not accepted with the uncritical amusement they arouse among civilians.

READERS IRKED

Mrs. W. G. Atwood, assistant librarian, observed that many readers of this sort of literature are irritated by the conventional depiction of the enlisted man as an obtuse misfit and wonder if the difficulties of the narrators are not due, in considerable measure to their own particular limitations.

"See Here Private Hargrove" is one book which has been singled out for this sort of adverse criticism and the men generally are not amused with the picture presented of a benevolently fuddled army working at cross purposes within itself.

Naturally, in using the library patrons as a criterion of G. I. intellect, Miss Chandler points out that there are plenty of men on the Post who never enter the library precincts. Non the less, the traffic in that place at any time after duty hours must impress any observer as an indication of a high degree of literacy among the personnel of the Fort.

Chaplain Helfer Shows G. I. Twist

Chaplain Frederick W. Helfer of the First Student Training Regiment is a man well known among the soldiery for his inspiring sermons and short talks. Frequently it will be noted, by an eager listener, that within the short space of four or five sentences, the Chaplain has coined at least one monumental expression. Each in its own way, smacking of G. I. appeal.

In a recent sermon, sentence packed with inspiration, Chaplain Helfer let drop one particularly appealing suggestion. In a few words the Chaplain bared a workable plan against life's more complex struggles. A plan so simple, so plain, so G. I. that it works. To quote: "I have often thought for instance that about all a goodly number of men need to become rather decent fellows is to change their habits on Saturday nights, stay away from the old hang-out and the old gang. It is a great thing for a man to put up his own off-limits sign around the indecencies of life."

300th Infantry's Band Starts Work

The 300th Infantry band is gradually taking shape. Under the capable leadership of 1st Lt. Benjamin F. Zvolanek of Regt. Hq., the band is forming into a working group. On Friday, May 7, the band had its second practice and devoted most of the time to rehearsing the National Anthem. To the men of the 300th, who had been quartered with the 29th during the first few months of the 300th's existence, this particular rendition of the National Anthem brought back memories of the 29th Quartel and the 29th Band parading smartly at Retreat. All agreed that the successful rehearsal gave promise of a bright future for the 300th Band.

At the present time Lt. Zvolanek and 1st Lt. Thomas E. Cassidy, Special Service officer of the 300th are busy acquiring more instruments and sheet music to finally bring the band to its contemplated strength.

Harry Stuhldreher was a quarterback of the famed Four Horsemen. Other members of that backfield were Elmer Layden, Jim Crowley and Don Miller.

O. C. deShishmareff Served In French Foreign Legion

Officer candidates here at The Infantry School have come from nearly every type of civilian occupation and from military service on many fronts, and now to make the story complete, there appears on the scene a former member of the French Foreign Legion.

The saga of Kyrill Feodorovich deShishmareff reads like the script for a motion picture thriller. In fact, among other things, deShishmareff used to be a script writer himself.

In the French Foreign Legion, deShishmareff rose through the ranks to become an officer, and now in the Second Student Training Regiment in the 17th Company, he is going through the rigorous three months' course that is necessary for enlisted men who wish to become officers in the U. S. Army.

INTERNATIONAL

Candidate deShishmareff has an international military background, if ever there was one. He was born in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) Russia, the son of a colonel in the Russian Imperial Guard. His mother was an American.

He was tutored to enter the Imperial Lyceum to be trained for the Russian army and the diplomatic service. Then came the revolution, and his mother took him to the United States. He still wanted to be a soldier, so he went to military school.

His education was later continued in trips to France and England, where he attended Christ Church College, Oxford, and the University of London. Today, as a result, deShishmareff speaks Russian, French and English with almost equal ease, and has a smattering of several other languages. His accent can be described as having a broad "A" with a Russian twist.

JOINS LEGION

Tired of just going to school, deShishmareff in 1929 volunteered for service in the French Foreign Legion. He stayed in for five years, which is a lot of time in that outfit, and rose from the grade of private to be commissioned a lieutenant. He took part in three campaigns and was cited for conspicuous bravery in action.

In 1935 he was brought from Paris to Hollywood by MGM studios as a writer, and technical director for a film production with Foreign Legion background.

He remained in Hollywood until he entered the Army last year, and during that time worked for several of the major studios and as a free-lance writer. He knew most of the film stars.

12-Year Olds Want In WAAC's, Letter States

Signs of the times.

No longer are hero-worshippers confined to young boys, for today came proof that the WAACs have theirs.

Captain Evelyn Rothrock commanding officer of the 43rd Headquarters company at Fort Benning, Ga., received a letter from Dorothy Crewe and Helen Bray with the return address of 1809 Third avenue, Columbus. The letter speaks for itself:

"We are only 12 years old and want so much to train and be a WAACS. I know we are too little but please try and get us in.

"P. S. If you don't get us in we thank you for trying."

Gene Tunney was in the other corner when the fans paid $2,650,000 to see Dempsey's last fight at Chicago in 1927. Floored by Dempsey, Tunney won with the aid of Referee Dave Barry's famous "long count" of 1/.

TIS Woodwork Shop Enhances Troop Morale

Students Enjoy Spare Hours In New Workshop

In the mechanical battalion of the First Student Training Regiment a profitable, morale building and practicable idea has sprung forth. Colonel Ellis Moore, commanding officer of the 4th Battalion, developed and furthered the idea of installing and equipping a wood-work shop worthy of the attention of his many students attending the Motor Mechanics and Radio Operators courses here at the Infantry School.

The equipment, which includes a lathe, band saw, circular saw, power drills, planing mill, bench grinders, hand tools are of sturdy and professional-like structure. During the procurement arrangement of all equipment, Battalion officers have kept in mind that they are seeking to set up a shop for men with a "natural" bent for mechanics. There is no amateurishness in any aspect of enterprise. It's professional from the very word "go."

This morale building enterprise has been undertaken with the idea that the men would find pleasure in working with good tools while the battalion itself would profit in the form of lawn furniture, shelves, bookcases, etc., and innumerable unpurchaseable articles.

Unit Conducts Retreat Parade

Before Col. R. H. Lord, regimental commander, and Lt. Col. Burnell V. Bryant, battalion commander, the officer candidates of the Second Battalion, Third Student Regiment, conducted their own retreat parade and review Friday night.

Colonel Lord and Lieutenant-Colonel Bryant were the only officers on the field for the ceremony, the conduct of which was left entirely to the candidates. Candidate company commanders assembled their companies and marched them to the battalion drill field and ordered them into formations with a dispatch that excited admiration from veteran officers who witnessed the demonstration from beyond the field.

As battalion commander, Candidate Edwin W. Emmerson of Potomac, Ill., issued the commands of the always impressive military ritual and they were conveyed to the company commanders by Candidate Long H. Goffigon of Cape Charles, Va., student battalion adjutant. Both men are from the Seventh Company.

Student company commanders for the review were: Seventh Company, Charles W. Anderson; Eighth Company, Lloyd A. Gillespie; Ninth Company, Andrew J. Boechler; 10th Company, John C. Pochinchuk; 11th Company, Stephen B. Sitar; 12th Company, Robert M. Boyer. Music for the parade was played by the 124th Infantry Band.

Such student-conducted demonstrations are rare in OCS units, where the plea usually is made there is too little time for other than the routine, concentrated training. No class in the Second Battalion has been functioning more than five weeks.

Christmas Gift From Boston Via Africa Arrives

A gaily wrapped Christmas package containing cigarets and sweets and postmarked November, 1942, turned up in the mail call of the 24th Company, Third Student Training Regiment at Fort Benning, last week.

Its recipient, dumbfounded at first, learned the reason for the delay after a close inspection. At the time the package was mailed, he was serving as a first sergeant in Africa and the Yuletide gift had traveled from Boston to Africa and, failing to catch up with him there, pursued him to OCS in Fort Benning.

Bomber Crew's Adventures In June 11 'Yank'

"Sixty-six Days Missing In Action," is the title of an exclusive feature appearing in the June 11 issue of YANK, the army weekly. Cabled from Guadalcanal by YANK staff correspondent, Sgt. Mack Morris, this unusual feature describes the experiences of a U. S. bomber crew lost sometime ago in Jap controlled Pacific waters.

These men made their way to an uninhabited island where they found a Navy man who had been stranded there six months before.

Recently a number of Navy photographs came through from the Pacific theater showing members of the lost bomber crew. Pix were minus captions or text. Sgt. Morris' article is the first authentic account of what happened to the missing men.

Another special feature of the June 11th issue will be an informative article titled "Gas Warfare" by YANK's Sgt. Bill Davidson. In this article Sgt. Davidson gives a comprehensive review of the dangers of chemical warfare as a potential weapon, and stresses the serious possibility of its use in the near future.

YANK's Alaskan correspondent reports on the Kiska aerial offensive in a timely write-up of the activities in this recently exploding theater of operations.

Pin-up for the week is Nan Wynn whose activities on the screen up until recently have consisted of supplying voice of Rita Hayworth. One glance at Nan's face and figure will explain why she has been chosen for more visual performances. Her next movie will be Columbia's "Right Guy."

The June 11th issue will be on sale June 4th in all Army Exchanges and Ship's Service Stores —5c a copy.

Boyhood Pals Training Here For Gold Bars

Midwesterners United Again At O. C. School

The Ninth Company in the Second Student Training regiment has two candidates from the same town who grew up together, were inducted together, attended the same camp for their basic training, and are now working for their commissions at The Infantry School.

The candidates are John B. Kilmer and Kenneth Douglas of Janesville, Wisconsin. They were the first selectees taken from Janesville who were married and had families.

Candidates Kilmer and Douglas attended the Janesville high school and played on the football team together.

Kilmer married his high school sweetheart and they are the proud parents of a baby girl, Julie Ann. Candidate Douglas also married his high school sweetheart and they have a baby daughter, Sherrill Ann. Julie Ann is nine months old, and Sherrill Ann is five months.

Kilmer and Douglas were inducted Nov. 17 and traveled to Milwaukee to report on Dec. 1. They arrived at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and landed in the same barracks.

A long train ride deposited them in Camp Wolters, Tex., at the Infantry Replacement Training Center. There, in the 56th Battalion they received their basic training in a heavy weapons company.

During their period of training both candidates attended the battalion school in preparation for O. C. S. Upon completion of their studies there, they then went to the camp school for more advanced training. Both are in the same platoon here.

Never once have Kilmer and Douglas been separated since their induction. This is something that doesn't happen very often in the Army.

APO Has Job Finding Owners Of Incorrectly-Addressed Mail

Intricate Record System Worked Out To Locate Missing Soldiers

When Aunt Sue (or an old flame, or a creditor perhaps for that matter) remembers vaguely that "Johnnie is somewhere at Fort Benning" and sits down therewith and writes a nice cheery letter and addresses it "Johnnie Doughboy, Fort Benning," chances are 95 to 5 that the letter will be delivered, due to the intricate system of records that has been worked out by the army post office at the post.

For it's the little chore of the Army Post Office, commonly referred to as the APO, to handle all of the mail that is incorrectly or partially or improperly addressed—and if you think that's a small job, just try handling about 60,000 pieces of first class mail and several tons of second class mail each week.

Besides that, Captain Joseph F. Twohig, a veteran of 30 years in the Postoff.ce in Boston, and also a veteran Army Post Office man from World War I, who is commanding officer of the APO unit at the Fort, is charged with the task of maintaining a 24 hour a day information service for anybody seeking whereabouts of any soldier; training postal units for service overseas; investigating all cases of claims on insurance; acting as postal inspector, which means a lot of first grade detective work, and a few other assorted tasks.

95 PERCENT DELIVERED

In order to track down the eventual recipients of incorrectly addressed mail, Capt. Twohig and his assistants have worked out a system of handling the mail which now results in 95 percent of it being delivered. And of the remaining 5 percent, most is made up of circulars or advertising material, so that actually, only about one per cent of first class mail has to be returned to the sender.

Every organization on the post is supposed to send in a card for every active member of that organization. These cards are placed in a "live" file. Clerks consult this file for names of soldiers when mail is received. If the name cannot be found, the letter is placed in a rack, and next day in another, and so on for 10 days.

Each day a clerk attempts to locate the soldier and generally by the end of 10 days, it is accomplished. If, however, it remains undelivered, it is placed in a "dead" rack, and then the hard work actually begins. Files are ganization to determine whether the soldier is there.

Then, if the man is found, the organization is asked to send in a card on the man. If the man is not located, the half million or more cards in the "dead file" are combed thoroughly. Chances are that the man has left the post and if his name then is located, the letter is sent to his forwarding address.

If all of that fails, chances are that he never was on the post.

WAAC's HELP

Ten men and 32 WAACS handle this work. Also at work in the office are 44 other men who are members of four Army Postal Units training for service overseas. These are the 563d, 564th, 555th and the 556th, consisting of 11 men and one officer each. After they have learned the intricacies of handling mail for army organizations, they will be sent out with permanent organizations.

The office also holds mail for men who are to be assigned to the post—sometimes Officer Candidates come in to find several pounds of mail awaiting them. Whenever any unit anywhere in this country or abroad assigns a man or an organization to Fort Benning, the APO is notified and the mail is redirected to Fort Benning. Here it is held until the man—or organization—arrives.

Because the APO has the only complete indexed file of all members of all organizations on the Post, it now serves 24 hours a day as an Information Bureau. Army personnel seeking some individual may call the office and find out where that individual may be located on a few minutes notice.

Offices and files of the APO are maintained in the Old Theater building, near the present gymnasium. Besides the men and WAACS at work there, four men are kept at the United States Post Office on the post, redirecting mail that comes in for units that have recently left the post.

Assisting Capt. Twohig are two other officers of long postal experience, Lt. Willard Mather, West Palm Beach, Fla., served for 16 years there before he was called to service while Lt. Melvin G. Hartman, Martinsburg, Pa., also served for 16 years, part of that time as postmaster. Sgt. Roy Levey served for 23 years at Union City, N. J., for instance.

BIG TURNOVER

Turnover of men at the post is greater than a city of 300,000 Capt. Twohig pointed out. In the Parachute School, for instance, men move from company to company every few days in their progress through the school. Others are shifted from one organization to another. Others are sent to the hospital, and may then be shifted to another organization or sent off the post. Others leave the post for some reason. Officer Candidates are here for 90 days. Bakers and Cooks School students are here for 60 days. Students in the various Training Regiment groups are on the post for varying length of times. In every instance, the man's card must follow his army shiftings and when he eventually leaves, the card is maintained for a year in the live file before being shifted to the dead file.

Another job of the APO is that of notifying newspapers, magazines, and other publications, of changes in addres of men. Several clerks are kept busy doing nothing else.

The APO also supplies cards to members of organizations that are due to be sent away. These are to be filled out and sent to their correspondents. In cases where the unit is to go overseas, the APO fills out the Army Post Office address to which mail is to be addressed, holds the cards for a time, and then sends them on to the friends or relatives so that they may have the mailing address of the men.

Right now the APO officers and clerks are building up home addresses of the men, in addition to their present Army addresses. They're looking forward to the time when men will be sent home—and their mail will have to follow them.

W. D. Clarifies W. O. Insignia

Army warrant officers hereafter will wear the insignia of the arm and service to which they are attached, advices reaching Fort Benning disclosed.

Warrant officers not members of and not on duty with an arm or service will wear the coat of arms of the United States, it was revealed. According to change 18 to Army Regulation 600-35, dated April 29, the following insignia are prescribed for warrant officers.

On the service cap, the present warrant officer insignia, consisting of an eagle with spread wings standing on a bundle of two arrows—the whole enclosed in a wreath, will be worn.

On the collar and lapel, the insignia of arm, bureau or service should be worn. Formerly warrant officers wore the warrant officers wreath here. If not on duty with an arm or service, warrant officers will wear the coat of arms of the United States 9-16th of an inch in height with a ring 3-4 of an inch in diameter.

The insignia of grade of warrant officers (junior grade), chief warrant officers and flight officers, AMPS, will be worn as prescribed heretofore.

The regulation change also prescribed an aviation badge for aerial gunners, consisting of a winged projectile, point down, superimposed on a circular target, the whole placed at the center of the standard wings.

Gail A. Gaines Is 2nd Officer,, 43rd WAAC Co.

Recently raised from third to second officer in the WAAC was Gail A. Gaines, executive officer and second in command of the 43rd Headquarters Company.

Entering service in July, 1942, Lt. Gaines attended officer candidate school at Des Moines, Ia. from which she was commissioned last December. She was later transferred to Daytona Beach, Fla., to help activate the 43rd company, and came to Benning with the group in March 1943.

She is a graduate of Washburn College, in her hometown, Topeka, Kan., and in civilian life was employed as a bookkeeper and statistical clerk.

Rogers Hornsby, then a member of the St. Louis Cardinals, hit .424 in 1924, best major league batting record compiled since 1887 when J. E. O'Neil, of St. Louis, hit .492. In 1887, however, bases on balls were scored as hits.

Nebraskan Hits M-1 Target For 191 Out Of 210

Although it was the first time he had ever fired the smoothworking M1, Officer Candidate Leslie Cash of the Seventh Company, Third Student Training Regiment, recently slugged the target on the McAndrew Range for a sturdy score of 191 out of a possible 210. The mild-mannered sportsman from Albion, Neb., still is not fully satisfied with his initial performance, however, and hopes, with a little practice his scores will improve.

Cash reveals his accuracy with the rifle was developed in prewar days roaming the western plains in search of fleet-footed rabbits. So unerring became his aim, it is reported, that when Cash approached with his musket; the nimble bunnies would merge from their haunts with their hands up. The other candidates in the Seventh Company think Cash is the best target knocker to come along since Sergeant York of World War fame.

Before reporting to Fort Benning, Cash was attached to the Chemical Warfare Service with the Air Corps at Hammer Field, Fresno, Calif.

BENNING GETS COLORED AST BASIC CENTER

Vanguard of 6,000 Soldiers Have Arrived For Training Here

An Army Specialized Basic Training Center to handle approximately 6,000 colored troops coming from reception centers from all over the South is to be established at Fort Benning immediately, Brig. General Walter S. Fulton, post commander, announced late Wednesday. Lt. Col. Ulric James, commanding officer of the Reception Center, will command the center in addition to performing his present duties.

Col. James will receive a cadre of 1,000 men and 134 officers to form the nucleus of the center. The vanguard of the center's personnel has already begun arriving.

The Center will be organized into four battalions of 24 companies, the latter elements to have a strength of 250 men each.

The training program will extend over a period of between six to 13 weeks, depending upon the progress made by the individual soldier.

BASIC SUBJECTS

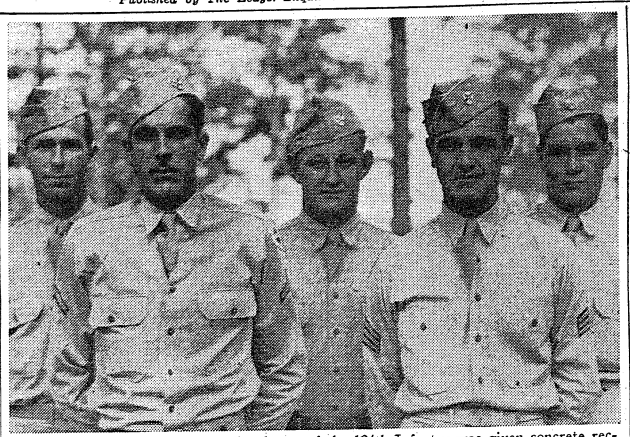
The basic subjects to be taught will include all those up to actual firing on the range. It is also designed to aid in the proper classification of the soldiers so that the Army may place them in those jobs in which they may do the nation the most good, thus expediting the Army's program.

The curriculum will also include an educational program of three hours daily to bring the soldiers up to the educational standards set by the Army. This program will be so set up as not to slow up the progress of divisional training by those men who are in need of more elementary preparation.

Col. James is now engaged in the solution of numerous problems attendant upon the establishment of the Center, such as the housing problem, expansion of recreational facilities, and the procurement of sufficient classrooms adequately to carry on the work of the Center.

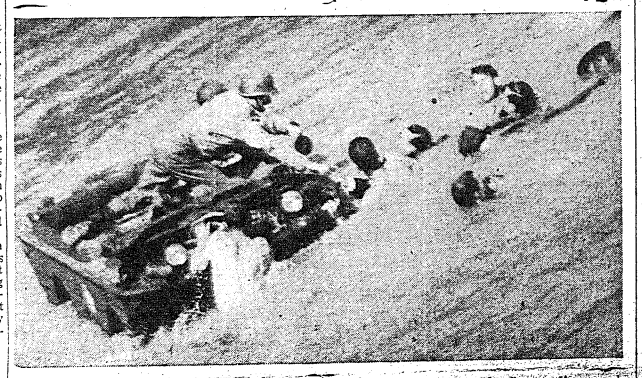
239 West Point Men At Post For TIS Work

Two hundred and thirty-nine members of the first year class of the United States Military Academy at West Point arrived yesterday afternoon for a 10-day tour of observation at the Infantry School. The Cadets disembarked at Fort Benning Junction and were transported to the First Student Training Regiment where they were assigned to the barracks of the 11th company.



In command of the cadets was Brig. Gen. Philip Gallagher. Accompanying them on their six-car special troop train were 39 officers of the military academy.

The cadets will attend numerous demonstrations at various installations of the Infantry School and will aso take part in some practical work.



Maybe He Tagged Her With 'Mrs..'

So struck with the beauty of a young lady he met while on furlough was a member of the 300th Infantry of The Infantry School troops, that he sent the following telegram (paid) to his commanding officer. "I met the prettiest lady staying here on furlough stop Will be home soon."

The C. O.'s comment was a fervent "I hope so" as he tried to figure out the proper file for the message.

THE HEROISM of these five enlisted men of the 124th Infantry was given concrete recognition yesterday when they were awarded the Soldier's Medal for Heroism by Brig. Gen. Henry P. Perrine, Commander of the School Troops Brigade, at a ceremony on the regimental parade grounds. The awards were made for heroism shown in rescuing a contingent of South American journalists who fell into the flood-swollen Upatoi Creek while witnessing a river crossing expedients demonstration last March. Left to right, they are: Corp. James Benton DuBois, Pfc. Kenneth H. Scott, Pfc. Harold E. Thacker, Sgt. Harold Doker and Pfc. Rudolph J. George. (124th Infantry Photo.)

June 15 Deadline For Income Tax

All military personnel who have made the first payment on federal income tax were reminded of the June 15 deadline for the final installment, in an announcement from post headquarters.

Although a bill is now pending which would relieve most fighting men of this obligation, it has not as yet been signed by the president.

As the tax bill passed Congress, few soldiers other than unmarried officers of higher grades will have to pay taxes on their 1943 income. In addition to the personal exemptions of $500 for single persons and $1200 for married persons, servicemen will be given a flat exemption of $1500. Thus no soldier making less than $2,000 would pay U. S. income taxes.

Furthermore the withholding provisions of the pay-as-you-go bill would not apply to servicemen.

Machine Record Unit Here Abolished Today

The Machine Record unit at Benning will cease operation today and its work of gathering daily strength reports for the Adjutant General's Department will be assumed by the 4th S. C. headquarters in Atlanta, Lt. T. E. McNamara announced. Its enlisted and civilian personnel will be divided among machine record units about the country.

AN OAK LEAF Cluster to add to his Soldier's Medal for Heroism was presented to Lt. Col. Andy A. Lipscomb, Jr., Director of Training of the Infantry School.

428 AST Men Have Reported

18-Year-Olds Began Their Training Monday

A total of 428 young selectees have reported to the new A. S. T. P. Basic Training Center of the Infantry School in the last seven days according to an announcement made at the headquarters of the Center in Harmony Church.

The selectees, most of them 18-year-olds, have been assigned to the 4th Basic Training regiment and are in the first two companies of the First Battalion.

It was expected that the selectees would arrive at the rate of 2,000 a week and continue at that pace until the quota of 12,000 had been reached. Present indications are, however, tha it will be some time before all three of the regiments of the Center have their full complement of men.

The first company of the selectees began their 13 weeks of basic training Monday.

30 Spirit Men Complete 120-Mile Forced March

Back at their duties today are the 30 members of the 176th regiment of The Infantry School troops who completed a forced march of 120 miles from Atlanta to Fort Benning in 86 1-2 hours. The march ended Sunday night at 10:30 when 25 of the starters marched briskly past the Officers Club and were picked up by the 176th Regimental band.

Four of the five who were forced out, suffered from bruised feet; the fifth suffered from cramps.

It was hoped that the troops could make the trip in three days, averaging 40 miles a day. But hot weather forced the officers in charge to decrease the pace in keeping with their plan to bring the troops into Fort Benning in good physical shape. That was the object of the march—to cover the distance at a pace which would permit the troops to arrive fit for a battle at the termination of the march.

And it was a pretty cocky bunch, too, that returned the greetings of hundreds who waited two hours for their arrival and listened to an impromptu concert by the band.

The toughest going was over the 1,000 foot Pine Mountain. At Warm Springs, the troops had a half hour swim in President Roosevelt's pool.

MARCH BY NIGHT

Considerable of the marching was done at night. With the temperature going as high as 106, 1st Lt. A. Ashwood of the Infantry Board and Lt. James F. Harkins of the 176th deemed it best to hold down the pace in order to retain the physical fitness for which the march was planned.

The troops themselves apparently enjoyed it—at least they gained a pleasant insight into Southern hospitality. At Gay, Georgia, one enterprising citizen who had learned the route of their march, had 15 gallons of cold milk waiting for them.

At one of their halts, the troops took advantage of a large shade tree on the lawn of a private home after obtaining permission from the owner. Before they were ready to leave, the owner had rounded up enough oranges to turn out a big batch of orange ade.

On occasions when they stopped to patronize stores, the owners refused to take their money.

Air Raid Drills Are Very Serious Business

An Editorial

Monday night the Columbus district including Fort Benning experienced an unannounced air-raid blackout which evidently produced, on the one hand a great deal of confusion and on the other some indifference.

The confused ones flooded telephone switchboards with queries concerning the reason for the siren blasts, while the indifferent ones either paid no attention at all to the signal, or passed it off with the thought that there was a fire or that lightning had set off the siren.

While the blackout at Benning was pronounced very successful, still post officials are quite concerned that every man, woman, and child on the reservation get his or her signals straight, and when a blackout, announced or otherwise, is signaled that every living soul give 100 per cent cooperation.

These air-raid drills are serious business. They give us the opportunity to practice and practice correctly the exact procedure to be followed in case the real thing comes along. Just as troops who fail to correct their errors in training will repeat these errors under fire and cause heavy loss of life, so will people who fail to take recommended precautions during blackout drills invite catastrophe for themselves, their friends, their country.

Colonel John P. Edgerly, executive officer at post headquarters, reminds all military personnel at Benning, that a new chart has been issued here explaining the air raid warning. It is so arranged that it illustrates graphically as well as in words, the BLUE, RED, and WHITE air raid signals.

"These air raid drills do result in matters of some inconvenience to all military personnel involved," Col. Edgerly stated.

"Unfortunately many soldiers and civilians fail to realize the seriousness of these drills. Many civilians, who do not hesitate to spend a substantial sum each year for fire protection against a fire which may never come, resent spending a few minutes inconvenience in training to prevent panic and disaster from an air raid which they feel will never come.

"The military authorities from the Chief of Staff down regret that they cannot share this feeling of confidence regarding the nonoccurrence of an air raid. A smug complacency and refusal to prepare for this emergency on the part of a few individuals is outright injustice on others. Carelessness in observing, or ignorance of air raid signals and prescribed procedure when these signals are given is unjustifiable when one considers the expense and effort which has been lavished in educating the public. Carelessness or ignorance on the part of military personnel is plain neglect of duty.

"Any town or community that fails to comply with blackout regulations may not suffer themselves from their carelessness, but their lights blazing brightly at night may constitute a funeral pyre for some other town or community to which their bright lights lead hostile air craft. We feel at Fort Benning that the responsibility is national and by no means local. Bright lights in Columbus, for example, might assist materially in hostile air craft finding Birmingham or some other town, likewise, bright lights in some nearby tomn such as Thomaston might prove the fatal touch for military personnel at Fort Benning even though Fort Benning were completely blacked out.

"It is encumbent on every member of the military personnel to be thoroughly conversant with the black-out regulations and signals and to be very scrupulous in observing the regulations governing action when the signals are sounded.

"Like all of our people, military posts hope the wail of the sirens at night will never indicate anything more serious than an air raid drill, but we realize our obligation to meet the more serious meaning which these sirens may have some time. We realize, too, that it is not only for our own individual benefit that we may suffer a few minutes, or even a few hours, inconvenience but that it may be for the benefit of some other town or locality to whish our lights might be a guiding beacon. We also hope that none of the communities may ever find themselves in a position of self-accusation or remorse after some even light raid to which their carelessness may have contributed.

"It is understood that unannounced black-outs will be held at frequent intervals in the future and that these black-outs will cover larger and larger areas, when all of our civilian friends and nearby military posts will be included in these darkened areas. Let us all remember that the smug, 'it can't happen here' is playing the game for our enemies rather than against them."

Regimental Ceremony Marks Medal Awards

Soldiers Risked Lives To Rescue Argentineans From Raging Upatoi

Five enlisted men of the 124th Infantry were awarded the Soldier's Medal for heroism and an officer of The Infantry School received an Oak Leaf Cluster to add to his medal, at a ceremony on the 124th Regimental parade ground yesterday morning.

The officer was Lt. Col. Andy A. Lipscomb, Jr., director of training of The Infantry School, and the enlisted men were: Sgt. Harold Doker, Sanford, Fla.; Corp. James Benton Du Boise, Naples, Fla., both of Company D; Privates First Class Rudolph J. George, West Palm Beach, Fla.; Harold E. Thacker, Wellston, Ohio, and Kenneth R. Scott, Good Hope, Ohio, all from C company.

Col. Lipscomb is a resident of Bessemer, Ala.

The awards were presented by Brig. Gen. Henry P. Perrine, Commander of the School Troops Brigade, in the presence of Col. James D. Hill, commanding officer of the 124th and the assembled troops of the regiment.

CITED BY ALLEN

Recipients of the awards were cited by Major General Leven C. Allen, Commandant of the Infantry School, for their heroism in saving the lives of a contingent of South American journalists who were witnessing a demonstration of a river crossing expedients on Upatoi Creek March 6 of this year.

The men had completed their part of the problem and were busy on the bank of the flood-swollen stream when the visitors were invited to cross the newly constructed foot bridge. They failed to keep moving, with the result too much weight was concentrated at one point. The bridge sank below the surface, and they tumbled into the water.

THRILLING RESCUE

Col. Lipscomb, who was in the party with the journalists, and the five enlisted men, plunged into the creek and effected a thrilling rescue.

In a written commendation to Col. Hill, Gen. Allen stated, "The heroism displayed on the Upatoi, March 6, by the men of your command was a just reflection on the 124th Infantry as a whole."

Col. Lipscomb was credited with saving the life of one man and co-ordinating the rescue work of

18-Year-Olds In Right Church But Wrong Camp

When the first batch of 18-year-old selectees arrived for the new A. S. T. P. Basic Training Center at Fort Benning, three Mississippi boys: Charles Gray of Meridian, Robert S. McLaurin, Jr., of Brandon and U. V. McKibben of Calhoun, debarked along with them at Columbus.

Not until later did they discover that they belonged in Camp Wheeler. They saw the group from Fort Harrison pile into trucks headed for the Harmony Church area and figured they belonged right with them—In fact, they insisted they did, because as they argued later, "Wasn't this Camp Wheeler?"

Upon discovering their mistake they admitted their error to officers who made arrangements for them to continue their journey. But, the boys said, "We didn't go so far wrong. Anyway, it was an A. S. T. P. camp!"

GEN ASA SINGLETON

Gen. Singleton, Ex-Post Head, Died Monday

67-Year-Old Veteran Of 42 Years' Service Once TIS Commandant

Upon retiring from the Army in October, 1940, General Singleton assumed the position of superintendent of Manlius School at Manlius, N. Y. At the time of his death General Singleton was on leave from Manlius and had been making his home with his wife, Mrs. Mabell Wright Singleton, in Warm Springs, Ga.

Self-Government Planned For Village, Benning Park

Residents Of Communities Affected To Vote On Proposal In Near Future

Plans for self-government of the Baker Village and Benning Park Community between Fort Benning and Columbus, are now under way with the selection of temporary officials and committees, it was learned today.

A representative group of residents in the two communities met with the Housing Authority of the project late in May to work out a scheme of promoting civic pride, and from the meeting came plans for providing a form of self government.

A code has been worked out whereby the government will consist of a mayor and four commissioners. The projects will be divided into sections; each section will have a representative council which they will elect. The mayor and the commissioners will be elected at large.

Temporary mayor is 1st Sgt. Percy I. Hopkins who headed the general committee at the time of its establishment. Temporary commissioners are Lt. J. A. White, Sgt. J. F. Harper, Mr. J. R. Grayson, and Mr. W. W. Daughtry. Permanent officials will be elected later, it is said.

The Housing Authority has turned over the planning and operation of the self-government plan entirely to the committee, and has offered to lend any fa-

Tigers To Use New First Aid Combat Packet

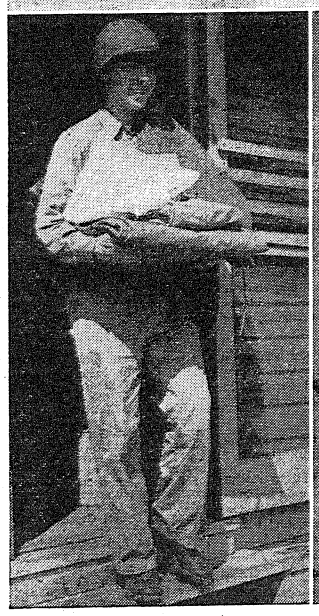
Sulfa Powder, Wound Tablet Drugs Included To Forestall Infection

The new red first aid packet, which all Tigers will carry into combat, is the spearhead in the attack to insure the recovery of the wounded soldier, according to Colonel Paul C. Hansen, division surgeon of the 10th Armored Division.

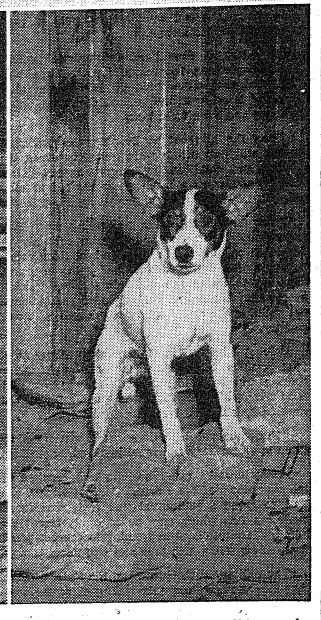
Proper use of this packet by the soldier will greatly increase the value of the medical aid and treatment which he will receive from the medical detachments of the division.

Three items are included in the red aid packet. First is a shaker envelope with sulfanilamide crystals—"wound powder"—which is to be sprinkled on the wound. Second, is the regulation bandage which is to be used to bind up the wound. Second, is the regulation bandage which is to be used to bind up the wound. Third, is the sulfadiazine—"wound tablets"—which the soldier takes by mouth, at the same time drinking as much water as available. Even if no water is available, the wound tablets should be taken.

If every soldier makes this correct usage of his first aid packet, he makes a real contribution to his own recovery. In back of the first aid packet are all the resources of the medical department.

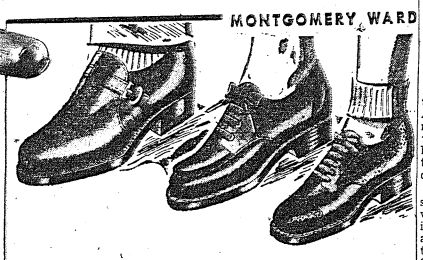


Each battalion will be serviced by a unit of approximately 16 men and two doctors who will operate right up in the combat zone. Mounted in two armored half-track ambulances, these unit medical aid men will carry blood plasma, sulfa drugs, and morphine in their kits. They will perform the first medical treatment for the wounded man, make him comfortable and move him to a collecting point.



From here, the Medical Battalion men will take over. The litter and ambulance platoons of the medical companies will move the wounded soldier to the treatment platoon's surgical station. This station, under the supervision of the doctors of the Medical Battalion, will redress the wound and prepare the wounded man for hospitalization if it is required.

This new, modernized medical set-up has already proved to be highly effective in the battle zones where American soldiers have already been in action. Wounded men picked up by the medical department have an excellent chance of recovery, Colonel Hansen said. The record of recovery will be at least twice as good as in the last war, and maybe even three times better. Loss of arms and legs by amputation has been reduced to the vanishing point by the use of the new red aid packet since its drugs prevent infection.



When it is necessary to hit the ground at short notice for your own protection, do so regardless of mud or other obstacles; a thousandth of a second may mean the difference between life and death to you.

FIRST OF 18 YEAR OLD SELECTEES—Arriving at Fort Benning last week were the first of the 12,000 18-year old selectees, who will train for 13 weeks a tthe new Basic Training Center at the post. At the top the first arrivals are being welcomed by Lieut. Col. Robert Garrison, commander of the First Battalion of the Fourth Basic Training Regiment, to which the trainees were assigned. Colonel Garrison is shaking hands with James Ernest Anderson, of Anderson, Ind. The picture at the lower left shows Daniel W. Reddin, of North Baltimore, Ohio, just after he completed the drawing of equipment, among the first duties of the young soldiers. Although the event has not been reported in the orders of the day, "Yardbird," a canine veteran of two years' service in the Army, has transferred from the 176th Infantry to the First Company, First Battalion, Fourth Basic Training Regiment, and maybe seen above as he awated the arrival of the first batch of 18 year old selectees. Wagging his tail in violent welcome as the youngsters filed through the Company supply room, Yardbird is said to have shown more life than since his rookie days. (TIS Photos.)

2nd STR Captain Steals Show In 'Lieut. Smith'

When the Pathe News short feature, "Lieutenant Smith, U. S. Army," is shown throughout the nation starting this month, one of the stars in the final undoubtedly be Capt. Paul A. Ballantyne, of the Third Battalion, Second Student Training Regiment.

Capt. Ballantyne practically stole the show in the film which was made at Fort Benning, even in competition with the Hollywood actor, William Terry, who played the lead. The acting ability of Capt. Ballantyne caught the eyes of Pathe News executives in New York, who, after viewing the first takes, called the director here to find out who was playing the part of "Rafferty."

IN BUSINESS

But actually acting in front of the cameras, or anywhere else as that goes, was not a new experience to Capt. Ballantyne. He has been in show business for more years than he likes to admit. He will say, however, that after graduating from Sherwood Music School in Chicago with a teachers' certificate of the pipe organ, that he played in stock companies in Chicago for a time and in 1931 went to New York, where he has spent most of the time since.

One of his big breaks came in 1937 when he landed a lead role in "Brother Rat," and toured with that highly successful show all over the country. Another experience he likes to recal is playing Ina Clair's leading man in "Biography" in a summer stock series in New England. He had done some work in motion pictures in commercial advertising shorts, and also did some work in radio.

Capt. Ballantyne had a particularly difficult part in "Lt. Smith." The film is a sequel to "Private Smith, U. S. Army," in which Terry also played the lead, which pictured the life of an infantry soldier going through his basic training career. In "Lt. Smith" he goes through OC school and becomes an officer.

Director Slavko Vorkapich picked two officers from the Infantry School staff to play OC Smith's pals throuout the picture. Thus although the sequences were actually taken as any number of OC classes went through the course here, the presence of these three friends throughout the picture gave it continuity.

HAPPY-GO-LUCKY

Rafferty was the happy-go-lucky member of the trio, usually getting into trouble and scoffing at work and study. In fact in one scene Capt. Ballantyne had to take a knockout punch from the Hollywood actor, and after finding out that Capt. Ballantyne has a physical training instructor the directors were a little worried about how that scene would work out.

But Capt. Ballantyne's work drew constant plaudits from Director Vorkapich, and it meant a grand screen test for the Second Regiment officer.

Altogether the crew took a total of about 40,000 feet of film here at the school, which is now being boiled down in New York into a two-reeler which will run about 18 minutes on the screen.

TIS Civilians Awarded Flag On Bond Record

A "Minute Man" flag is now hanging proudly in the foyer of The Infantry School Headquarters at Fort Benning, indicating that its civilian personnel, at least 90 per cent of it, is setting aside at least 10 per cent of its salaries for War Bonds.

There are 292 civilians employed by The Infantry School and, for the last two months, more than 93 per cent of them have set aside 10 per cent of their earnings for bonds.

The highest percentage is among the colored employees. Only one out of 150 has not joined the ten per cent club.

Student Training Brigade Has Done Tremendous Job

The Student Training Brigade under the inspiring leadership of Colonel Sevier Tupper has been doing a tremendous and excellent job in the training of the many thousands of officers, officer candidates, and enlisted students since its inception in July 1942.

It is difficult for many of us to realize the huge task and respcnsibilities undertaken by the Student Training Brigade, and the many obstacles encountered in the formation of such an organization. In the early days of October 1940, the nucleus of the organization was part of the Unit School detachment, and was called the Training Regiment. Then in January 1941, this unit was redesignated the Student Training Units, and assigned to the Infantry School Service Command. The strength at that time was 2200 student officers, 39 officre cadre, and 172 enlisted cadre.

With the continued expansian of training students, it was necessary to form a 2nd Student Training Regiment in November 1941. The original Student Training Units were split in two and the 1st and 2nd Regiments were organized. Due to the program of training enlisted men from the ranks to become officers the 1st and 2nd Regiments were unable to handle the increased number of officer candidates, and a 3rd Regiment was activated.

After activation of the 3rd Regiment it was realized that these units needed a new set-up, and on July 1, 1942, the Student Training Brigade was formed. Colonel Tupper, having had a vast amount of experience since the formation of the Training Units, was chosen to work out all the details of a reorganization program. With the splendid cooperation of his officer personnel Col. Tupper was able to devise a Brigade Headquarters plan. This plan now functions with precision and smoothness, and few difficulties are encountered in the processing and training of the students. To these many thousands of officers, officer candidates and enlisted personnel of the Student Training Brigade, Colonel Tupper's dynamic personality and ceaseless drive constantly serve as a noble inspiration.

Since the Army Specialized Training Program was initiated, Colonel Tupper has been selected as the commanding officer of the center and will retain command of the Student Training Brigade. The center of the new born units will constitute the fourth, fifth and six regiments which were recently provided for the training of the 18-qear-olds. These young selectees will be given a course similar to a basic rifle company that will fit them to the field prior to entering the various colleges throughout the country for advanced knowledge of highly specialized phases.

Short Sleeves And Pants Would Be Comfortable Now

The current laundry crisis plus the tropical heat wave which has engulfed Fort Benning for the past week or so prompts the BAYONET to step forward at this time with a suggestion which it has long harbored in its G.I. brain.

Briefly it is this. Wouldn't it be a good idea if the Army adopted short-sleeved, open-collar shirts and short pants for wear by soldiers and officers serving in tropical and semi-tropical areas where military standards still place the burden on individual neatness and a military appearance?

Despite the many objections to such a uniform because it isn't considered too military, the BAYONET feels that the individual soldier would look more soldierly than he does in the present uniform once they are drenched with perspiration.

Also it cannot be doubted that the laundry crisis would be eased considerably. Skimpier uniforms would alleviate it simply on the poundage of wash that had to go through a Q.M. laundry. Also, the absence of long sleeves would eliminate the cuff-pressing problem, while the short pants could certainly be ironed in much less time.

Besides all that, it's our belief that uniforms would stay clean for a longer period of time and thus lessen the number that had to be cleaned. We all know that in this intense heat, it is the collars and cuffs that get dirtiest the quickest.

Of course, behind all of this is also the question of comfort and a corresponding increase in efficiency which would be brought about by such a change to a cooler uniform. But the laundry crisis lends a very practical aspect which cannot be overlooked as the cleaning situation the country over becomes more and more serious.

The Army has long debated the problem of shorts and never reached any definite conclusions. Perhaps this is the time to act!

Mental Meanderings Of A Saturday C. Q.

Well, here I am on CK again—Saturday afternoon, too! Guess it's not so bad, tho, since it's the end of the month and I'm broke anyway. Most of the fellows are gone, and the rest are doing bunk fatigue, so there isn't too much to do. Perhaps I can catch up on my correspondence.

I wonder who the OD is this week-end? Everything is mighty quiet. Think I'll just take this comfortable chair and—Oh, hang, there goes that telephone. "All right, operator, if you will leave your number I will notify Corporal Brown of the 23th Company 1st STR to call you. No, I can't get him on this phone—you're on it. No, operator, he doesn't have a phone." (My gosh, these operators think every soldier in the Army has his own telephone!) "Yes, operator, I know he's a corporal in the First Student Training Regiment, but he still doesn't have a 'phone!"

Now I've lost my place in that book I was reading. No, here it is—OOPS! here comes the OD—guess I didn't want to read after all. "Yes, Sir. Very well, Sir. I will call you if you are wanted by anyone." (Why do I have to call him, I wonder? I can handle anything that comes up around here.) Well, what do you know, here it is time for chow.

The OD just called from the other office and told me to go to chow. Now, how on earth did he get in there without my seeing him? Here comes Slim. He's hanging around because he has a furlough coming through soon. Seems like everyone around here is getting a furlough except me. Maybe Slim has a cigarette on him. No, he wouldn't be so foolish as that.

What's that! "Oh, yes, Sir—I guess I must have dozed off for a moment." That OD is off for another inspection. I don't see what he finds so interesting around here to inspect, anyway. Oh, well—"Yes, operator, if you will leave your number—."

This is where we came in.

Yanks In Cold Climes Suffer Less From Disease

Many people are under the erroneous impression that cold climates cause more diseases, especially upper respiratory infections, and that colds are more prevalent in cold weather. This is not true, because colds are caused by germs in the pure cold air has less germs and thus causes less colds.

If men are crowded together in barracks which have impure air and quickly expose and chill their bodies, by moving from a hot room to cold outside temperatures, and are not properly clothed, then these people will catch colds more frequently. But men stationed in cold climates and not herded together in overcrowded surroundings, and are well clothed, then these people will have less colds.

The sick rate of our troops stationed in Alaska is about 1 per cent, making this cold country one of the healthiest spots in the world. Statistics show that the sick rate in Alaska is about one-half of that of the United States, excluding epidemics.

This cold territory with its blowing winters, drenching rains and heavy fogs has such a low sick rate, because there are no body lice, hence no typhus. There is very little venereal disease because of the scarcity of women. Tetanus is practically unknown in this climate because the soil is not contaminated with organisms. There are no bed bugs, because they cannot survive the cold weather; also there is practically no malaria because mosquitoes cannot live in very cold climates.

Wool clothing is ample protection against this freezing weather of Alaska, and very few of our soldiers stationed there developed disease, even during the coldest weather they had last winter. Also the low incidence of disease among our troops was aided by good nutritious foods, warm woolen clothes, clean water, and a non-contaminated soil, with a practically germ free atmosphere.

Parents and relatives of our soldiers who are stationed in Alaska should be encouraged by this low sick rate, and should be mentally relaxed knowing that their loved ones are practically free from diseases.

Calling A Spade A Spade Could Be Embarrassing

Interested as we always are when we read displays in magazines on the current advertising campaign concerning given names and the origins and meanings thereof, we wince to think what might happen if mankind, eager to revert to a more golden era, should once again take up calling their friends and people with whom they have dealings by descriptive phrases in place of the familiar handles like "Mac, Jack, and Joe."

Such a situation might have certain serious repercussions especially in the Army. But then other people whom Nature—or more specifically their parents — favored with GRAND names might be flattered to know their meinings.

Let's take the case of the "eight ball' of the platoon named Brutus. What if the kindly old sergeant, Jabez, began calling ur hero by what his Latin name means? Now we'll grant many a kindly old platoon sergeant probably called many an eight ball worse than "stupid," but what if our boy, Brutus, discovered the meaning of Jabez?

He might greet him thusly, "Oh, sergeant of sorrow, one who gives pain." We vouch the old boy would live up to his name to the very letter and make stupid Brutus "hurt."

Short of men? Let's raise our sights and
Use the energy spent in fights,
Through needless friction, hate and strain.
Let's run our lives for the country's gain.

The answer to manpower shortage is men producing more.

"You think this life is killing you," said an army sergeant, "but it's the life you led before you got here that's killing you."

"HERE ARE medal Jap Military would love to give very honorable Yankee people when he don't buy War Bond, don't help U. S. War effort, don't give dam for nobody but self. So sorry aren't but a few kind of Yankee—so sorry!—for us!!"

Chaplain's Corner..

THE TRANSGRESSOR
Chaplain F. M. Thompson

His way is hard, so sayeth the Good Book. Were it not so written it would be just as true. For this is a moral universe. It is founded on immutable laws. An evil doer is fighting against the stars. He can no more escape the consequence of wrong doing than he can escape death.

It is hard for him, it is doubly hard for his friends, loved ones. Herein lies the tragedy of sin the innocent suffer with the guilty. A young man in the heat of passion or without passion may do the wrong thing, saying, "Yes, I did it and I'll pay the price."

Alas, he is not the only one who pays—those who love him share his shame, his suffering.

It is hard for him, it is harder for society. Every dishonest politician casts reproach on every man in public life. Every corrupt judge brings suspicion on all the courts. The fabric of our humanity is so closely woven, the mechanism so sensitive that,

Pluck one thread, and the web ye mar,
Break but one of a thousand keys,
And the paining jar through all will run.

This seems a very cruel law, the just suffering for the unjust. But it is not as cruel as it seems. In the long run its effects may be highly beneficial. There is need for some sort of restraint to keep most people from running wild. They may care little as to what happens to them personally. They are terribly concerned as to what may happen to those they love. They will hesitate long, curb their dangerous impulses, inclinations before they will cause them pain and suffering. So,

I will be true, for there are those who trust me,
I will be pure, for there are those who care.

Key Says—

IF WOMEN CAN CUT OWN BREAD, THEY CAN SURVIVE WASH CRISIS TOO

June 15, 1943, is a date that will long be remembered by Fort Benning housewives. On that date the Quartermaster laundry will cease to take family bundles, and on that date many wives will cease to make the laundry a routine stop on the weekly trek with the car.

True, the Quartermaster laundry was not the most convenient thing in the world. It had a habit of promising clothes in a week, then in ten days, and finally we were lucky if we got them on the third desperate trip of inquiry. However, in cases of extreme need where the laundress quit without notice and the Columbus laundries neglected to pick up clothes even after repeated phone calls, it was calming to know that you could deliver solled clothes to the Quartermaster laundry—although it was never certain when, or if, you were going to get them back.

Now even that mainstay has forsaken us. Maids are getting upset at the prospect of doing the entire family watch, accustomed as they are to washing out a few of the toddler's unmentionables and letting it go at that. Laundresses are few and far between, and those women who are fortunate enough to have one are going to find themselves condoning many an offense in order to keep their prized treasure. Columbus laundries were in at the kill long before the Quartermaster laundry, so there's no hope of succor there. Which leaves a good many of us, judging by the 3,000 family bundles received by the Quartermaster laundry in February, pretty much behind the eight ball.

Already we have nightmarish dreams involving mounds of clothes, tubs of steaming water, back-breaking wash boards, and water-logged hands. Even the soap advertisements, which turn wash day from blue Monday into a delightful adventure, can't convince us that a family wash on a Georgia summer day is anything to be undertaken lightly.

However, there's many a soldier or nurse overseas who would be grateful for just a bit of the abundance of soap and water we'll be using in our washes. And there's many a woman on the post who remembers her mother turning out a family wash before the days of machines, and complaining only when she didn't have a sunny day to dry her clothes.

The Daily Bulletin has plenty of ads from persons wanting washing machines. Shucks, I want one too. But lots of women aren't going to get them, and in some quarters on the post the bathtubs are going to see double duty. Hot water and soap and a bathtub are still much, much better than a muddy stream in New Guinea or a frozen tub in Alaska. I imagine we'll continue to have clean clothes. Some enterprising reporter in Atlanta, we recall, found that women could actually cut bread themselves.

Mush

THERE ARE NONE SO BLIND AS THOSE WHO WILL NOT SEE

By FALKO M. SCHILLING

The music was soft and mellow, as it the sharp and shrill notes had dulled in cutting their way through the haze of cigarette smoke that hunk like a blue curtain in our corner of the already dim-lit and sentimental Orchid Room. The blue velvet didn't over-affect our table; Em and I had been married too long for that, even though this was our third anniversary party. We had long left the adoring glances and affectionate touch of hands to those a little newer in the ectasies of romance. In fact, our chief argument and issue for squabble was that same subject, that silly notion that women have about keeping love fresh and new with each passing day. Of course I knew Em was right. Why should I have practiced it daily if I didn't? That is, of course, except in places where the general public got the bigger kick out of it. Holding hands under the table, stealing a kiss when the lights grow dimmer for a waltz, or winking a sensuous wink over a tall, thin-glassed scotch and soda, I mean.

Tonight we were at it again. I must have started it off when I pointed out a young soldier who was visably showering his love on a very attractive and youthfully fresh looking young lady. Em thought it was "cute", but she was referring to the love scene being enacted. I thought it was "cute", too, but I was speaking about this golden-locked vision in a pale blue evening gown, a gown which reminded me of those Junior Prom days back at old M. H. S. As for the love scene, I expressed the opinion that people are too dramatic when they hold hands in night clubs.

Well, sir, that's the way the argument started. Each new drink found as dragging out new theories. Whether love can flourish in stuffy niteries, whether squeezing hands means more than wisely chosen words, whether love grows quicker in proportion to how tightly two dancers hold one another.

And so we watched the couple in the corner. The soldier, so neat and well groomed; the girl, so young and attractive. Our watching grew out of the discussion, and then into speculation. When they passed our table to reach the dance floor I summed up his insignia and found myself understanding things a little better. His unit of the Engineers had just arrived from the inland camp and were all set to jump off for God-knows-where in the very near future. I should know, I had a lot to do with getting the supplies together for the convoy. I didn't tell Em what I knew. She was too busy making speculations of her own. "The kids are probably finishing up the time left with this evening to remember". I didn't tell Em how close she must have come to the real thing. But I still thought that squeezing hands is insipid love-making when done in public.

The kids left shortly after eleven. Em and I were all set to leave, too. It took some wild gestures, but the waiter finally found his way to our table. Old "43" was rather talkative; something unusual in the Orchid Room. He must have heard our conversation during the evening. He must have heard me telling Em how silly it looks to see people making love by squeezing hands, or dancing too close.

"Nice couple that just left", old "43" spoke. "I feel so sorry for the kids. Most people don't even realize what's wrong. They've been here several times the last couple of weeks. Most folks don't know she's blind. Did you notice how the soldier kept holding her hand to keep her from getting frightened?"

As we got up to leave I took Em's hand in mine and held it tightly for a moment. I held on longer. I squeezed her hand in mine. Then turned to "43", "Yes we noticed", I said.

AN ODE TO TIGER CAMP

A blistering day, and stifling dust,
Old Sol was on the tramp;
And we of Service Com-pan-y
Were out in Tiger Camp.
A four-mile hike (we really ran),
And then we rest awhile;
"Jap In The Grass" is coming next,
(We walk another mile).
With feet all wet from sloppy mud
We must tramp one mile more
And doff our clothes and have a swim
Upon a sandy (??) shore.
"The strength test's coming up," you say,
"Well, I'll just show them now,"
And so with creaking bones you rise
And prance off with a bow.
Three hundred yards in fifty flat!!
And I thought I was flying;
And then some push-ups, burpees too,
Oh, man, I think I'm dying!!!
But wait, you've got another thing,
a course called infiltration,
With shell holes, mud and barbed wire fence,
What next in all creation?
Explosions rack my aching brain,
And barbs have torn my clothing,
And in those stagnant water holes
I've found a secret loathing.
But now we've finished, flopped and fagged;
We throb in every fiber . . .
But look, for from that kitten's "Meow",
There comes a mighty tiger.
Oh, Tiger Camp, oh, Tiger Camp.
With all your fascination;
There'll never quite be one like you,
If so, where in tarnation?

"Give me back my gun," said the wounded soldier who hobbled up to the front. "There isn't any rear in this darn fight." No, there isn't any "rear" in total war and no "end" to it either—even in victory. It is then the fight for our war aims will just begin.

'Boogie Woogie' Added To Chutists' Curriculum

Jive Strains Ease Task Of Packing Recalcitrant Chutes

"Boogie Woogie" has been added to the curriculum of Fort Benning's Parachute School.

The soothing strains of Brahms and Beethoven have upper efficiency of workers in war plants throughout the nation. But, the institution of daily sessions of "jumpin' jive", and "boogie woogie" has scored wonders since it has been introduced at the packing section of the Parachute School.

In the Packing sheds, where all aspiring paratroops are taught the trying manner in which they must pack their 'chutes, the task is a strenuous one. Many a G. I. labors and strains more in the meticulous art of packing than he does when he pounces out of the transports high over Fort Benning for his first jump.

Major Alton R. Taylor, of Clarksdale, Mississippi, Director of Parachute Training at the School, recently experimented with the hardy paratroops in the packing sheds. He introduced lilting strains of smooth music, then the soothing melodies of the Ink Spots, and finally "boogie woogie."

MEN LIKE IT

Studying the men and noting the time needed for packing chutes, Major Taylor disclosed that "boogie woogie" was what the men liked best. Packing was done efficiently. And the time needed to pack chutes decreased by 30 per cent from the era of "all work and no music."

A public address system has been installed in the packing shed to amplify recordings of the Andrews Sisters and other exponents of "boogie woogie." As an added attraction Private First Class Richard Bell, of 2729 West Division street, Chicago, Illinois, entertains night packing classes with music from his electric guitar. Bell, who works during the day in the message center of the Parachute School, offered to charm the paratroops at night in his off-duty hours. He is a former entertainer with Johnny Martin and the Texas Range Riders who broadcast over Station KYRO in Longview, Texas.

So, with Private Bell playing Hawaiian tunes and cowboy ditties and the "boogie woogie" coming straight from the juke boxes, the paratroops go on their merry way, happily learning how to spread death and destruction behind the enemy lines when the sky-borne troops strike.

513 Promotes 8 Chutofficers

Eight officers of the 513th Parachute Infantry Regiment have been raised to higher ranks, according to an announcement reaching post headquarters.

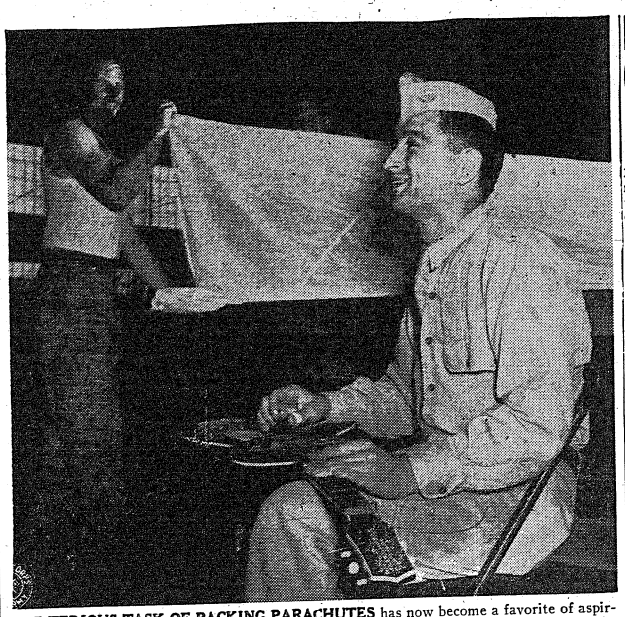
Included in the group are the promotions of three majors, Allen C. Miller, regimental executive; John R. Weikel, commander of the 1st battalion; and Gerald L. Breland, to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Also three captains, Morris S. Anderson, 2nd Battalion executive; William W. Moir, regimental surgeon; and Emmett V. McRae have bee nraised to majors. And Second Lts. Homer A. Curtis of Des Moines, Ia., and John W. Deam of Jacksonville Beach, Fla., have become first lieutenants.

Colonel Weikel, whose home town is Royal Oak, Mich., is attending Command and General Staff School, Fort Leavenworth, Kas. Colonels Miller and Boland are natives of Quincy, Calif. and Madison, Minn., respectively.

Of the majors, McRae is from Valdosta, Ga., Anderson's hometown is Baton Rouge, La., and Moir is a native of Minneapolis, Minn.

'Chutists Invest Million Dollars In Life Insurance



More than a million dollars worth of National Service Life Insurance, the low-cost protection afforded members of the armed services of the United States, was bought in two days last week by members of the First Academic Company of The Parachute School.

Captain John B. Spitzer, commanding officer of the company, disclosed that the average policy for the troops in his unit totals $9,400. Including insurance policies which have just been taken out, the amount of protection purchased to date by members of the Academic Company totals $5,151,000.

"Practically every soldier in the company who has dependents," Captain Spitzer said, "has taken out adequate insurance to safeguard them." He revealed that 90.5 per cent of all men in the organization have purchased National Service Life Insurance.

Take your goggles off when not in use. Their reflection when shoved up over your helmet is simply an invitation to an enemy sniper.

The army forces in Africa roast their own coffee raised on that continent.

THE TEDIOUS TASK OF PACKING PARACHUTES has now become a favorite of aspiring paratroopers at Fort Benning's Parachute school, Maj. Alton E. Taylor, of Clarksdale, Miss., director of parachute training, experimented with the men and discovered that they packed chutes 30 per cent faster, and just as efficiently as heretofore, when music floats through the packing sheds. Although the troopers are "at their best" when listening to "boogie woogie," one of their favorite entertainers is Pfc. Richard Bell, of 2729 West Division street, Chicago. He spends his off-duty hours at night entertaining chutists in night packing classes. He is shown above as he charms some soldiers as they go about their meticulous business of packing chutes which will carry them safely to the ground. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

O. C. Cheers As RAF Bombs Native Town

Rechtshaffen Says He Would Like To Show Allies Targets

Officer Candidate Oscar Rechtshaffen let out whoops of joy the other evening in his barracks when he read in the papers that his "old hometown" had been subjected to a merciless bombing. Rechtshaffen's "old hometown" happens to be Duisberg, Germany, major Rhineland industrial city, and Rechtshaffen, who has experienced Hitler persecution, says:

"Wish I could have been with the R. A. F. to show them a couple of good targets."

Rechtshaffen is training for his second lieutenant's bars in the Fourth Company of the Third Student Training Regiment, coming here from the 12th Armored Division, in which he was a radio instructor. He speaks Polish, German and Hebrew and was a student at New York University before entering the Army.

The candidate spent his boyhood in Duisberg. His life was the same as that of any other schoolboy until he reached his 12th birthday anniversary in 1933 simultaneous with Hitler's ascension to power. From then on, Rechtshaffen, the only Jewish boy in his junior high school class, had to sit at the rear of the classroom in a yellow chair, labeled "Jew."

Chums of better days refused to speak to him after the persecution but Rechtshaffen can recall their enthusiasm, even then, of growing up to serve in the German army. "They were all going to be soldiers and I, as a Jew, could not expect to join them," Rechtshaffen said.

"Won't they be surprised to see me, though," he added, musingly.

When conditions became intolerable in Germany, Rechtshaffen was sent to Palestine, where he attended an agricultural college for two years. He came to this country in 1937, joining his parents, whose property in Germany was confiscated.

House Approves Bill Incorporating WAAC's In AUS

Legislation placing the WAAC in the Army of the United States has been approved by the House of Representatives this week, with several slight changes over the bill which was recently passed by the Senate.

Under the new bill adopted by the house, the corps will be limited to 150,000 strength; the commanding officer will be limited in rank to colonel; physicians and nurses will not be enrolled in the corps; military authority of commissioned officers of the WAAC's will be exercised only over women in the corps; provisions of the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942 will not be applicable to dependents of women enlisted in the corps; subsistence and rental allowances will be granted to women commissioned or enlisted only to the extent that they are allowed for commissioned officers and enlisted men without dependents.

Before further action, differences between the Senate and House bills will have to be ironed out.

Jack of All Trades Adds Soldiering To Repertoire

Candidate V. M. Rutledge of the 24th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, has been just about everything under the sun, airplane pilot, teacher, entertainer, football coach and Chamber of Commerce welcomer, to mention a few occupations, so he is not in the least timid about embarking on his new career.

He is not bothered by the fact he no longer is a spring chicken, either. The other day a fellow candidate inquired: "Don't you think you are a bit old for this stuff, Pop?" "Heck, no," Rutledge replied. "I'm just a yearling. Life begins at 40, you know. I was 41 a few days ago."

They may call his "Rut" in his company but he certainly has not spent his life in one. Following his graduation from Southwestern College in 1924 with an A. B. degree and a football letter, Rutledge took up high school teaching and athletic coaching but soon abandoned these pursuits to start a 15-year tour of the country as an entertainer, singing cowboy ballads and strumming a guitar. He also appeared in several "hoss opera" movies and has been on the radio. As a Chamber of Commerce recreation director, he directed the nationally famous Colorado Springs chuck wagon dinners. He even found time one winter to manage a ski club.

Last fall he decided the Rutledge representation in the Army should be increased—an older brother, Cecil, is a colonel of infantry and once was stationed at Fort Benning—so he enrolled as a VOC and took his basic at Camp Wolters, Tex. To date he has a scholastic average of "A", has made expert with the M-1 and light machine gun and missed expert on the heavy machine gun by only three points.

Women In Slacks Now A Fact Excepting Waac's

Blue or olive drab slacks are now optional for street wear by members of the Army Nurse Corps and the Corps of Dietitians and Physical Therapy Aides under a modification of army regulations, according to an announcement received at post headquarters.

Under such conditions as the immediate commanding officer of the nurses may deem appropriate, the slacks may be worn in place of a skirt.

This latest regulation change also lists prescribed uniforms for hospital, street, and field wear.

14-Week Program Opened By G. I.'s On Straus Estate

A 14-week program of outdoor entertainment for groups from Fort Benning at the farm of Mr. and Mrs. Abe Straus outside Columbus, Ga., was opened Sunday by a delegation from Headquarters Detachment, DEML, and WAACs from the 84th Post Headquarters Company.

A softball game and swimming party were highlights of the afternoon at the Straus country place. Supper was served by the host and hostess and a committee from the Ninth Street USO in Columbus. In the evening the group was led in singing by Corporal E. B. Sturmer of the Special Service Division at Fort Benning.

Georgia Drivers' Licenses Expire On June 10

All persons operating private vehicles on the reservation under permit granted by the state of Georgia were reminded today that these licenses expire June 30.

Renewal and application blanks for the 1943-44 license can be secured through the Provost Marshal, between 8:30 a. m. and 5:30 p. m., and should be submitted to the Department of Safety, State of Georgia, Atlanta, to secure the new permit.

Through special arrangements, car operators with valid out-of-state permits will not be required to secure another for Georgia.

New Child Care Center Planned

Benning Civilian Mothers Asked To Fill In Blanks

Civilian mothers working at Fort Benning whose children are not conveniently located to the two already established Child Care Centers in Columbus are asked to fill in blanks recently sent out by the Muscogee county Department of Public Welfare for the establishing of a new center.

The first Child Care Center in Columbus was established in the Peapobdy Housing Project district and takes care of many children in that section. The Linwood Day Center is the second of such centers for working mothers, at 940 Twenty-seventh street.

For lack of interest, the Center in the Booker T. Washington Housing Project for colored children was discontinued, but plans are underway for establishing two in other sections of Columbus. One will be established in the Poug street school beyond the Jordan Mills, and the other in the Shady Grove church, corner of Nineteenth and Second avenue.

GOVERNMENT HELPS

The government puts up an amount equal to that given by any civilian agency, person, or by the fees paid to the centers for the care of children. A business woman's club of Columbus pays $20 per month and the government meets that amount, making it $40.

Fees are $2 per week for colored children and $3 for white children, less 10 per cent for each additional child from the same family. This includes orange juice in the morning, their regular vegetable dinner in the middle of the day, and crackers and milk for the afternoon snack.

Miss Neva West is head of this department, which at present has its office in the Muscogee County Department of Public Welfare.

Any mother, colored or white, interested in the projects, may communicate with Miss West at Columbus, 3-6471.

The number of military truck drivers now exceeds the strength of the entire army at the war's beginning.

Food Menus To Suit G. I. Tastes Planned

Roast Beef Proves Most Popular Meat, Post Survey Shows

Styling food menus to more nearly match soldier appetites, and installing a new system of ration counts are the result of a survey conducted at Fort Benning and three other large army posts, during the early part of 1942. The survey and changes made netted an estimated saving of more than 3,200,000 pounds of food, based on army of 4,500,000, according to Major General E. B. Gregory, The Quartermaster General, in a recent report.

Outstanding revelations of the survey showed over-preparation caused by absenteeism, and leavings of little favored foods are responsible for the greatest losses.

The survey revealed that foods left on plates were the less popular ones, particularly was this true as regards such foods as liver and spinach. An interesting twist became apparent when it was shown that frankfurters, while not the most popular meat had the lowest "leavings" figure. This is because of lack of bones, coupled with the fact that once accepting them, the soldier usually consumes the entire morsel. More complete tests proved roast beef is the serviceman's favorite meat.

Ranking highest in left-overs was soup, indicating little demand. Fresh vegetables, cereals, noodles and fish appeared next on the soldier's not-well liked list.

Taking a composite typical dinner as basis for anlysis, it was found leavings were highest in consumption of kale, a green leafy vegetable, and vegetable soup. Following these in order were, coffee, cole slaw, mashed potatoes, roast beef, and finally fruit salad. Similar results were produced using a typical supper, with left-overs running down through beef stew, kidney beans, coffee, and gelatine.

Attempting to accomplish closer utilization of food, Quartermaster experts are now busy adjusting menus to suit the average soldier's taste discrepancies, as found by the survey. In addition a new system of ration allowance computation has been devised, based on average mess attendance, rather than the older method using unit strength.

PARACHUTE PROMOTIONS

The promotion of six enlisted men of the First Academic Company of the Parachute School, Fort Benning, has been announced by the public relations office of The Parachute School. Sergeant Douglas W. Morlan has been raised to staff sergeant, and Sergeant Raymond P. Horwath has been made technician third grade. Technician Fifth Grade Jack I. McGee and Private First Class Richard H. Haynes have been promoted to sergeant. Private Irvin J. Leo has been raised to technician fourth grade, and Private Gabriel W. Lavella is now technician fifth grade.

Ft. Lewis, Wash., recently received a new recruit in the person of Lewis E. Lewis of Lewisport, Ky.

HATS OFF to the crack Parachute School nine which turned the first-half race in the Fort Benning league into a runaway after a bad start. In losing their opening game, TPS showed little promise but once the Skyjumpers began to click, they moved on all cylinders and grabbed seven wins in succession to take the gonfalon.

Much of the credit belongs to Capt. George Johnson for leadership and patience in developing the team. TPS now rates as one of the hardest hitting aggregations on the post and they are bound to give the Infantry School loop champ a great battle for post laurels.

The first-half schedule in the Fort Benning League came to an end Tuesday night, but the Paratroopers won't be idle during the interim between now and the play-off dates early in July. They have already played two games with camp Stewart and have another pair coming up as well as a brace of tilts with the 137th Infantry from Camp Rucker and the improved Columbus Foxes.

IF THE PROFS of the Academic Regiment continue their steady parade to the altar, Sgt. Milton Luban, their ace publicity man, will be forced to change the name of the current TIS leaders to the Benedicts. In less than two weeks recently, three of the diamond tossers were married. First it was Elmer Neibler, crack centerfielder, then Rudy Rundus, the elongated pitcher. And just last Saturday, Cehster Dabbs, another gardener, took the fatal step. Now it's rumored that Benny Zientara's getting similar ideas, but his bride-to-be is a Chicagoan, so Ben's marital venture will have to wait until his next furlough—which might to be till the baseball season's over.

THIS FELLOW Claude Shoemake of the 774th Tank Destroyers is really the talk of the 10th Armored Division in baseball circles. He's practically a one-man cyclone. Besides sharing a tie for batting supremacy in the Cusseta League with a healthy .475 average, Shoemake is the team's star pitcher and turned in a beautiful job at Gowdy on Saturday when he set down the favored 455th Coast Artillerymen in the opening play-off game. Critics claim he's the best player in the division, although he has played very little pro ball. Hails from right close by in Sargent, Ga., and you're quite likely to hear more about him at war's end.

SPEAKING OF STARS, there's one Benning player who will be the rage if he ever hits the big time which he's almost sure to do. It's Red McCluskey, the red hot third sacker on the Student Training Brigade entry, who right now is batting a cool .600 or so in the Infantry School League. A fine fielder with a strong arm and plenty of speed, he is definitely a comer.

Red played last year with Cedar Rapids in the famed Three-I and was slated for Montreal in the International this year. He's the property of the Brooklyn Dodgers and if he ever takes over the hot corner at Ebbets Field, he'll surely be an idol what with his flaming red hair, fiery nature and colorful play.

ONE BENNING athlete who was particularly saddened by the news of the untimely death of Nile Kennick, Iowa's famed footballer, is Erwin Prasse, Academic Prof third baseman, who was a team mate of the All-American back on one of the greatest Hawkeye elevens. As a matter of fact, it was Prasse, a great end in his own right, who caught a passthrown by Kinnick in the stunning defeat handed Minnesota's mighty Gophers during the 1939 campagin.

That was the year that Iowa swept to six wins and a tie in eight encounters against the cream of the midwest. The 13-9 last quarter win over Minnesota and a 7-6 win over the Irish of Notre Dame highlighted the campaign. Kinnick was rated as one of the best players of the year and was an excellent passer. Prasse was on the receiving end of most of those heaves.

The Prof third sacker was a three-sport star at Iowa and went on after college to play professional baseball and basketball. In the court game, he played with the famed Oshkosh All-Stars which means that his presence in the Academic Regiment will also bolster Prof hopes for a basketball title next winter. Meanwhile Prasse is doing a bang-up job at the hot corner for the Profs and swing his big bat in the batting order's No. 5 spot. He is a dangerous long range hitter.

SPORT SHOTS—Fans are already looking forward to the July 2nd date when the 300th meets the Profs and the distinct possibility that Lefty Francis, now tutoring the 300th, will pitch against his old mates. . . . Speaking of the 300th reminds this corner to suggest that they adopt the name of "Triplets" which would be suitable and make it a little easier to write about them without continually repeating numerals. . . . One of the largest crowds of the season is expected to witness the Service League opener tonight and some good baseball is in prospect with sevral former pro stars on both teams. . . . There are rumors floating around about a post golf tournament but nothing has materialized. . . . The recent heat wave has made most folks uncomfortable, but not the baseball pitchers. They love it and some of the recent mound performances at Gowdy speak for themselves.

8-Club Service League Opens Tonight

STARS TO SHINE in tonight's Service League opener at Gowdy Field will be these four athletes who are the mainstays of the Reception Center and 3rd STR nines. On the left is Jim Greene, sturdy catcher for the Orphans, who is a former Negro National League star with the Homestead Grays and Kansas City Monarches. Over on the far right is Roy Welmaker, the expected starting moundsman for the Reception Center, who is also a former national leaguer from the Grays and the Philadelphia Stars. The two Panther infielders in the center are Frank Phillipson, peppery shortstop, and Big Hank Blackburn, star first baseman, of the 3rd STR tossers. Both lads are well known Benning athletes and were the sparkplugs on the crack Panther court team this past winter. Phillipson, a former New York City schoolboy ace, was also a grid star for the green and white club. (Signal Lab Photos by Bourne and Stock.)

Reception Center To Oppose Panther Nine In Gowdy Field Fray

Pitch-Out Ceremony Will Precede Big Colored Battle

The Fort Benning Service League, a brand new baseball circuit composed of eight crack colored nines, will get off to an auspicious start tonight at 7 o'clock in Gowdy Field when appropriate opening ceremonies will precede the first tilt between the Reception Center and the 3rd STR Panthers.

While the Orphans and Panthers are battling it out in the big park, the Post Detachment Tigers will oppose the Academic Regiment Pacesetters in another game slated for the field at the Reception Center. 2nd STR, 1st STR, the Provisional Truck Reds and the Provisional Truck Blues, the other four loop entries, will swing into action with a pair of games tomorrow night.

FANCY PITCH-OUT

In the pre-game ceremonies tonight, the first pitch will be tossed by Lt. Col. Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Reception Center, and the pellet will be caught by Col. R. H. Lord, commanding officer of the 3rd Regiment. The umpire will probably be Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post athletic officer and head of the Fort Benning Athletic Association, which is sponsoring the eight-club league.

Officials expect a banner crowd for the Service League opener with almost 1500 men from the Reception Center expected to march to Gowdy Field behind the unit's snappy band.

TITLE FAVORITES

The game itself will bring together two of the title favorites in the colored circuit. The Panthers, tutored by Lieut. Jack Gushin, have already engaged in several practice frays and been quite impressive. The Reception Center, on the other hand, is relatively untested, but boasts a wealth of talent.

Two outstanding former pro stars are expected to form the battery for the R. C. outfit. Roy Welmaker, a crafty lefthander, who is slated for mound duty, has seen service with the Atlanta Black Crackers, the Macon Peaches, the Philadelphia Stars and the Homestead Grays. The latter two are Negro National League teams.

CRACK CATCHER

Welmaker will serve up his curve balls to an outstanding catcher in Jim Greene who played with both the black squeeze in Belin and the tying run.

After the stretch in the 7th, two singles by Inoff and Rogers and Ankrom's long fly to right, brought Inoff home with the winning run for the Gator's sixth straight and Christie's second in three days.

TPS Divides In Two Games At Camp Stewart

Win Sunday Tilt By 3-2 Score After Saturday Loss

In a trip to Camp Stewart over the past week-end, the Parachute School tossers gained an even split in a brace of games with the strong antiaircrafters. It was the first baseball competition of the season between teams of the rival Georgia camps.

Stewart won the first game on Saturday with a three run rally in the ninth by a 5-4 count, but TPS bounced back on Sunday to even the score by a 3-2 triumph. Two more games in the series will be played here at Gowdy Field early in July.

WIN ON SQUEEZE

Saturday's game was practically in the bag for the Paratroopers until the fatal last inning. They had a 4-2 advantage and were rolling along behind Bucket Vaughan's neat hurling. But Stewart rallied to tie the count on some solid hitting, then perpetrated an artful squeeze play to gain the decision.

Both teams banged out eight hits apiece in the battle, with Danny Coyle slashing three singles to lead TPS at the plate.

HOGAN HURLS

On Sunday, Al Hogan took the mound for the Benning nine, and pitched a beautiful game setting the home team down with three lone hits. Meanwhile, the Paratroopers banged out seven safeties paced by Mickey Maguire with two.

TPS came from behind, however, in the eighth frame to take the game. Bruiser Kinard, the sturdy catcher, opened with a hard double, advanced on Maguire's hit and scored on an infield out as Maguire went down to second. Ben Boki then poked a long single to score Maguire with the winning run and give the Benning visitors an even break in their week-end joust with the antiaircraft tossers.

Profs Lose First Tilt To Student Training Brigade As Loop Race Gets Hotter

Prendergast Triumphs Over Dickinson In 2-1 Mound Duel

BY SGT. MILTON LUBAN

It had to happen someday! And the Student Training Brigade decided there was no time like the present. So, on Sunday afternoon, led by burly Jim Prendergast on the mound, they hauled off and socked the Academic Regiment Profs right into the defeat column, handing the Profs their first licking of the season after the Academics had piled up nine straight Infantry School League victories. The score was 2 to 1.

MOUND DUELS

As anticipated, the game was a beautiful pitching duel between Prendergast and Dickinson, both pitchers hurling eight scoreless innings. But the Profs could only squeeze across one run in the first on an error, single and infield out, while the Brigadiers exploded in the fifth with a single and two successive doubles for their two runs.

The Brigade triumph, plus its Monday win over the 244th Field Artillery, pulled the team into a second-place tie with the 300th Infantry.

The second game of the doubleheader saw the 124th Infantry come from behind to smack the 176th Spirits, 5 to 4, marking the sixth consecutive triumph for the Gators.

McCLUSKEY RAGES

Most spectacular individual streak of Red McCluskey, Brigade third-baseman, who boosted his batting mark to .545, 18 hits in eight games, including seven doubles, a triple and two homers.

Holding the spotlight next week is the game between the 300th and the 124th at Harmony Church on Sunday. Both teams have been on a rampage and two winning streaks of six games each will collide when the clubs face each other. On the same bill the Student Training Brigade will take on a strong 176th team which is much tougher than its record indicates. Meanwhile the Profs will be playing the Columbus Foxes at Golden Park.

RIFLES ERRATIC

Tomorrow night the Brigade meets the 71st Engineers in an easy game while the Profs take on the erratic Rifles who seem to delight in losing to the weak teams and knocking off the tough ones. The Rifles pulled a typical stunt in beating the powerful Foxes last Sunday.

On Monday the Rifles clash with the 176th Spirits who will be gunning for revenge over the 8-1 pasting the Rifles handed them in their first meeting. At Harmony Church, the same evening, the Profs will be having their hands full with the scrappy Gators.

300TH VS. BRIGADE

Next Wednesday will see another highlight when the 300th and the Brigade fight it out for possession of second place. The winner will be in a strong position to challenge the Profs for the first-half championship, while the loser might just as well resign itself to making plans for the second half.

Parachute Nine Captures Title In Post League

Borden Hurls TPS To 10-0 Triumph Over 24th Hospital

The powerful Parachute School nine won the first-half title in the Fort Benning League last Thursday night when the skyjumpers blanked the 24th General Hospital by a 10-0 count in an encounter at Gowdy Field.

Pete Borden, fireball righthander, on the mound for TPS, hurled superlative ball all the way, setting the Medicos down with three scare hits and fanning eleven of them.

The 24th lads threatened seriously in only one frame, the seventh, when they placed men on second and third on a hit and walk with none out. However, Borden hitched up its belt and proceeded to strike out the next three men, to sew up the ball game.

TPS backed up Borden's fine mound effort with a 12-hit attack on the Medico hurler and scored its runs at will. Kinard and Porterfield were the big guns in the paratrooper hit column.

The 10-0 win was the seventh straight victory for the Parachute School, which swept to the title without trouble after losing its first loop test. TPS ended the race with a full two-game margin over the second-place teams.

BOYS IN SWIM!

More than 50 boys at Fort Benning now are enrolled in the Boys Activities Swimming Classes held every Monday and Tuesday evening at the Officers' Club Swimming Pool, with Lt. William L. Bryan of the Publications Section of The Infantry School in charge.

Joe Kirkwood, noted trick golfer, will give a golfing exhibition in Doughboy Stadium at 7 p. m. Thursday, June 10, Lieut. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post special service officer announced today.

Admission will be free to military personnel. The performance will last for approximately an hour. Mr. Kirkwood's tour is sponsored by the Philco Corporation of America.

Travelling in a private automobile, Mr. Kirkwood is now on tour in the Fourth Service Command, Colonel Finnegan said.

Christie Stars As Gators Grab Two More Tilts

Hurler Gains Credit For Both Victories In 3-Day Period

Lew Christie, stellar right hander for the 124th Infantry Gators, pulled an iron man's stunt in defeating the Benning Rifles, 5 to 3, Friday at Harmony Church Field and the 176 Infantry Spirits, 5 to 4, Sunday at Gowdy Field, to stretch the Gators win streak to six straight.

The revived 124th team has taken on the appearance of the Brooklyn Bums, as they just won't be beat and are a fighting pack that is out to win and playing great ball.

THREE-HITTER

Against the Rifles, Christie kept the batters eating out of his hand and allowed but three hits. Of the Gators' 7 hits, three were collected by Sammy Inoff, lead-off man and shortstop, who opened the game with a smashing triple down the third base line. Hanvey singled to knock Inoff in with the first run of the game. After Sam Sharp bingled and the Rifles had stopped booting the ball, three runs were over to put the Gators out in front never to be headed.

Sunday against the 176, Coach Don Shaffer started "Lefty" Cisgen, a newcomer to the Gators. The big left hander, overcome with the heat in the second inning, faltered and walked in one run and loaded the bases with two outs. Christie came to the rescue and proceeded to fan Compton, the 176th catcher, to quell the uprising.

In the fourth, Christie took on a wild streak and walked Cartazzo and Veimeyer, Lukowitch's single sent one run home and an error let two more filter in to run the Spirit lead to 4 to 0.

BELIN HITS HARD

Burks and Ankrom started off the Gator half of the fourth with singles and came home on Belin's bingle and Belin tripling to deep center. Tony Gallo laid a perfect bunt down the first base line to

Former Racers in Tiger Division Hope to Meet at Indianapolis

The Indianapolis speed classic of, say, 1946 or 1947, should be a case of Tiger vs. Tiger. There are two members of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, anyway, who hope to be entered in "the 500-miler" after the war is over: Cpl. Milton Fankhauser of Division Headquarters Co. and Sgt. Vernon E. Tharp of Co. A, Maintenance Battalion.

Both have made a living from the gruelling racing business, Fankhauser for eight years and Tharp for four, and both have zoomed over tracks all over the country. Both have "taken flips" (race track lingo for cracking up) and both have had miraculous escapes.

Fankhauser, who is rated among the first 10 race drivers of the Central States Racing Assn., drove his first race at Sacramento, California, about nine years ago. Since then he has raced on every major speedway in the country, with the single exception of Indianapolis. He holds track records all over the U. S. and in 1935 won the Canadian championship.

BUILDS HIS OWN

He has always built his own equipment and even now has a brand new speedwagon which he designed and built, waiting to hit the tracks as soon as peace comes. The car with which he made the most money was a high-powered job which cost him $3500 but which paid for itself many times over. It won seven races, setting track records in two of these, and never came in worse than second during its long life—until last year, a few months before Fankhauser decided to forget abou tracing and offer his services to the Army.

The end of the car came at Akron, Ohio, when Fankhauser, after pulling up from 15th to third place, tried to get in second place. He clipped the man in front of him, struck the wall outside of the track—and seven cars behind piled into him. When the smoke cleared, the car was junk and Fankhauser had a crushed hand. It was the worst accident in the history of the Akron track and the worst Fankhauser ever experienced. During his racing career he "took a flip" seven times and escaped injury all but the last time.

"I've been pretty darned lucky," he expresses it, concisely.

Right now Fankhauser is doing tank maintenance work for Division Headquarters Co., having just rteurned from a three-months' course tt Fort Knox, Ky. He is burning for action and for a very good reason: he joined the Army because his brother was killed last August at Guadalcanal.

SPEED MERCHANT

The second candidate of the 10th Armored for some future Indianapolis thriller is Sgt. Tharp of the Maintenance Battalion, who began racing in Michigan in 1939. Veteran of many speed events throughout the country, Tharp had one bad accident at Davidson, Mich., early in his career when his car struck another vehicle and did a series of flips. When he woke up in the hospital the following morning, Tharp was considerably pleased to find tha the had sustained only a slight knee injury.

In 1940 Tharp began driving the "big jobs," including the famed Hispano, and he kept on driving them until 1942 when he came into the Army.

Considering the records of these two speed merchants and their plans for the future, it will not be surprising if the first Indianapolis race after the war turns out to be a reunion of the 10th Armored Division.

3rd Armored, 774th Prep For Title Clash

Tiger Diamond Crown At Stake In Series Opening June 16

BY CPL. CARROLL M. RINES

Champions of the Sand Hill and Cusseta Leagues, respectively, by virtue of their title playoff wins this past week end, the 3rd Armored Regiment and 774th T. D. Battalion nines are currently prepping for the 10th Armored Division crown series, which opens on the 16th of this month.

Tentative plans call for the first and last games of this best-two-out-of three game playoff to be fought on Tiger Field on the 16th and 18th, with the middle game under the arcs at Gowdy Field, Main Post, on the 17th.

Although the 3rd Armored, undefeated in loop play this Spring, came through as expected in the Sand Hill circuit, this past week-end's loop titles series was not without its upsets. In fact, both of Saturday's opening games in the Cusseta League went contrary to expectations. The dop bucket took the worst kicking around at Gowdy Field, where the 774th knocked off the previously unbeated Coast Artillery (Anti-Aircraft) Battalion, 9-1. The Anti-Aircraft club was a rather pronounced favorite to cop the Cusseta crown, but found its nemesis in Claude Shoemake, the Teedees' classy righthanded chucker. Shoemake hurled a great seven-hit ball game and helped his own cause along by slapping out four timely singles.

MAINTEENERS OUSTED

In the other Cusseta duel, the never-say-die Supply Battalion aggregation eliminated the 1942 loop champ, Maintenance Battalion, by a 4-3 margin. Big "Bucky" Buchan fanned two batters to halt a ninth-inning rally by the ordnance outfit just in the nick of time. Maintenance had scored three times and had the sacks loaded when Buchan an bucked down. Will Quinlan pitched four-hit ball for the losers, but was the victim of his mates' misplays.

The 1st Battalion of the 54th Armored Infantry Regiment also turned in a mild upset when it edged the 11th Armored Regiment, 5-4, in a Sand Hill opener. The 3rd AR sluggers had little difficulty with the 420th Armored Field Artillery Battalion, smashing out an 11-1 victory behind the hwo-hit chucking of Ralph Brett.

NO RUNAWAYS

Sunday's finals lacked many of the thrills of Saturday's scraps, yet neither could be called a runaway. The 3rd AR came from behind to top the 1st Bn., 54th AIR, 10-5, with iron man Brett again the winning hurler. Brett took over the mound chore after Smith had developed a sore arm in the second frame and hurled four-hit ball the rest of the way. The Dragons got to Taylor in late innings to break a 5-5 tie and pull away to victory.

The Teedees got their second straight stellar bit of hurling in the Cusseta finale, Hurley Martin allowing Supply Battalion only seven well spaced hits in painting the QM club, 6-0. Martin fanned eight and received some grand support, particularly by Third Baseman Murphy. Bob Lansinger, who went the rotue on the mound for the losers, also pitched a seven-hitter but passed 11 batters and committed a throwing error that led to three first-inning Teedee tallies.

If you know of an apartment that will be available within the next few months please dial 2-2727.

WILL GIVE REWARD

GEORGE (RED) CAVE, mound star of the fast-moving 300th Infantry nine in the Infantry School League, rates as one of the finest right-handers at the post. With the only no-hit game of the year already to his credit against the 124th Infantry, Cave recently turned in another superb mound performance by blanking the 176th Infantry. Prior to his Army days, the fiery redhead was with the Baltimore Orioles in the International League.

Lawson Field Fliers Lead In Post Softball Circuit

Leaders Undefeated In Four Games Gators In Second

With four well-earned wins already to their credit, the crack Lawson Field softball ten entered this week's play in the post league with high hopes of crashing through to the first-half title in the eight-club circuit.

The Fliers gained undisputed possession of the top spot in the league last week when they dumped the 2nd Student Training Regiment. Running the Fliers a close race in the number two spot is the Gator ten of the 124th Infantry whose only loss was to Lawson in the season opener.

GORMAN STARS

The prolific hitting of Major George Gorman, playing coach of the Fliers, has been the biggest single factor in the success of the Lawson Field club so far. The star first baseman is a former Birmingham softball ace who has played on a national championship team.

Play in the first round robin of games, which comprise half of the first-half schedule, was completed on Tuesday, but several rained-out games are still to be played.

Also there has been one substitution in the loop with the 1st Academic Co. of the Parachute School replacing the Student Training Brigade. The three games played by the Brigade have been dropped from the standings and will have to be replayed against the paratrooper.

FLIERS VS. GATORS

Tuesday night the second round-robin of games will commence with a quartet of games listed. Lawson Field will invade Harmony Church for a return game with the 124th Gators that may well decide the title laurels. The Gators scored a win over the Fliers in a recent practice and will be primed for their chance to throw the race into a deadlock.

Other Tuesday night frays will see the Academic Profs oppose the Station Hospital Medicos, the 2nd STR travel to the main post for a tilt with the 176th Spirits, and the 3rd STR invade the Lawson Field area for a game with the new paratroop entry from the 1st Academic Company.

O. C. Enters 10 Dogs In Show; All Win Prizes

Canines Take Eight Firsts, Two Seconds In Columbus Trials

Every dog has his day, especially if O. C. Erie J. Ferguson of the 18th Company, Second Student Training Regiment, is handling it.

Candidate Ferguson, who made a name for himself in the Middle West as one of the country's leading dog handlers, took Columbus by storm recently when he put ten dogs through their paces at the Columbus Field Trial Association's dog show, and walked off with eight firsts and two seconds.

It was one of those "they laughed when he sat down to play" affairs when Ferguson first asked one of the owners for permission to display his dog. Thanks to the expert handling by the soldier dog-fancier, the pup won first prize over thirteen other entrants in his breed. From then on, Ferguson was deluged from all sides with requests to display canines. His eight firsts and two seconds were easily the best record of the show.

Before the show ended, owners were ready to concede defeat when Ferguson was handling a dog against theirs. One high-ranking officer who had several dogs in the show and saw them all go down to defeat against Ferguson's assorted batch of pick-up entrants, remarked that the next time they have a dog show in town, he's going to "suggest" to Ferguson that he spend the afternoon studying—far, far away from the show—unless, of course, he handles that officer's dogs.

Gator Golfer Wins Tourney From Chutist

Bilowich of 124th Captures Laurels In Columbus

Corporal Michael Bilowich, Company A, 124th Infantry, from Lyndora, Pa., recently defeated 1st Lt. Lynn Creason, 513th Parachute Infantry, 2 up and one to play, in the Lions Municipal Golf Tournament in Columbus.

Bilowich, only one over par for the three rounds necessary to win the tournament, easily defeated John Dorn, 4 and 3 and L. Blanton, 4 and 2, shooting par all the way. Against Creason, Mike played the steadier golf and although Creason constantly outdrove him, he was usually on the green, putting for his pars or birdies.

Mike jumped into the lead on a regulation par on the first, only to have Creason even it at the second, by coming out of the rough and sinking an elongated putt, while Bilowich three putted.

The champ, chipped dead on the third for a birdie and went two up on the fifth with a par, as the Lt. caught the rough on his long drive and was two getting out. The two matched shots throughout the remainder of the round, giving Bilowich the match, tournament and War Savings Stamps, offered as a prize.

The scores:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	Total
Par ...	5	4	4	4	4	3	5	3	4	36
Bilowich	5	5	3	4	4	3	5	4	4	37
Creason	6	4	4	4	6	3	5	4	4	40

Colonel Blain Heads 2nd STR

Succeeds Col. Jackson, Now 4th Basic Chief

Col. Arthur C. Blain has assumed command of the Second Student Training Regiment, it was announced today.

Col. Edward B. Jackson, who had been skipper of the Regiment since Col. Maurice G. Stubbs left at the end of January, has taken command of the 4th Basic Training Regiment. A number of ranking staff and line officers of the Second are also assuming duties with the 4th along with Col. Jackson.

The new Regimental commanding officer, Colonel Blain, is a native of Georgia. He is a graduate of the Gordon Military College and the National Institute of Pharmacy.

Col. Blain entered the Army from civil life in 1917 as a 2nd Lieutenant and served as company commander in the 43rd Infantry, during the first world war. Since that time, he has served as an instructor at the Infantry School and on ROTC duty at Emory University in Atlanta, and at the University of Florida at Gainesville.

Most of Col. Blain's service in the Army has been with infantry tanks since 1930. He was with the 2nd Armored division at the time of its activation in 1940 as S-2 and S-3 of the 2nd Armored Brigade, and later with the 3rd Armored Division as assistant chief of staff, G-1 when it was formed in 1941.

Following a period as an infantry tank instructor at the Field Artillery School at Ft. Sill, Okla., Col. Blain returned to Fort Benning in August, 1942, where he has been connected with the Officer Candidate Training in the 1st Student Training Regiment.

Col. Blain is a graduate of the Infantry School, of the Tank School, and of the Command and General Staff School. He is a veteran of World War 1, and has since seen foreign service in Hawaii.

Col. Blain is married and the father of one daughter. Col. and Mrs. Arthur C. Blain reside on the Main Post.

O.C.s' Initiative Drafts Taxi For Night Problem

When the Seventh Company of the Third Student Training Regiment went out on its recent night compass course, the general idea was for each student to return to the assembly point just east of the 10th Armored Division area to complete the first leg of the course. In accomplishing this objective, four candidates proved beyond all doubt that they had taken the admonitions "to improvise" received in basic training with great seriousness.

The problem was to cease at 0030. At 2400 all but four of the candidates in question had arrived at the designated place. The instructor waited and waited and finally set out in search of the missing with lantern in hand. Hardly had he left the area, however, than the sound of a non-G. I. motor was heard and up roared and screeched a taxi.

Yep! You guessed it. Out stepped the four azimuth-happy candidates with this to say: "Sir, Candidates ——, ——, —— and —— reporting."

Civilian Activities

By MYRTLE M. JOINES

What is my responsibility as a Civilian Employee for the government and what am I doing about that responsibility is a question each civilian should ask himself.

Is the civilian fully cognizant of the fact that this war and its outcome is as important to him as it is to the man in uniform? Is the civilian aware and fully appreciative of the fact that he is at home doing his job while the military personnel who is fighting this war is far from home and its comforts?

Civilians have an important task to perform. There is much speculation as to whether or not they are awake to the importance of the task they are trying to perform.

Just for example. Our soldiers are the best trained soldiers in the world. But it is up to civilians in the supply division to see that they get necessary supplies and equipment to keep them the best-trained by seeing that they continue getting their supplies on time or our casualties will be twofold. So this business of being civilian employees can be construed no other way than a serious one. So the job should overshadow how much I am to be paid or how long I am to work to fulfil my task. Civilians should lose themselves and their identity in their job.

Civilian employees were originally designed to release as many fighting men to the battle front as possible. Their worth was proved and through the years more and more civilian employees have been added to the government pay-roll until today the government is the largest employer of civilians in the country.

Civilians should strive in every way for the best of relations between themselves and their employers. At times there are strained conditions existing between employer and employee and it has been suggested that a program be instituted to bring about improved relations. It is more than possible that malignant absenteeism could be curbed to a large extent by a better understanding or relations between employer and employee.

But on every job where civilians are at work the question should be asked and an adequate answer found for it. "Am I fulfilling my job efficiently enough to enable a soldier carry successfully the battle to the enemy on the front line?"

This question canont be answered honestly unless you do your best each day on every job assigned to you; unless you are on the job on time to do that job every day; and unless you have in the right mental attitude that can come only from good health, right thinking, and an honest desire to serve.

Changes in civilian personnel this week are: Lenora E. Holland's transfer from Camp McCain, Miss.; and Myra White's resignation to move to Bradford, Pa.

Reception—

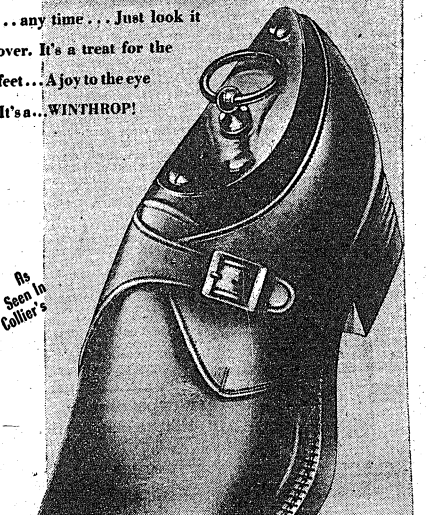
Crackers and Peaches as well as the Homestead Grays and the Kansas City Monarchs in the national loop.



Besides Welmaker, the Orphans boast a nicely balanced mound staff with four other hurlers ready for duty. They are Aharte Carter, Bill Tolbert, Robert Miller and William Jackson.

PANTHERS STRONG

The Panthers also boast their share of talent with Fred Beckett of the Negro American League; Howard Wallace of the Passaic Black Sox; and Arnold Palmer of the Flushing Paragonas in the line-up. Two familiar figures in the Panther line-up are Frankie Phillipson at short and Hank Blackburn at first. Both were court stars for the 3rd STR, while the short-stopper was also a great grid star for the Panthers.

The G. I. Longs For Snappy Uniforms, Blaring Brass Bands

Adolescent Dreams Of Vie Militaire Shattered By War's Harsh Realism

Habitual mourners of "the good old days" are prone to give us what the French, with true Gallic succinctness, allude to as a "torticolis" but what we must content ourselves with calling a pain in the neck. These sententious boils are so enchanted with the past that they derive a minimum of pleasure from the present. They forget that today is tomorrow's yesterday.

Now being tearful about the passing of the Gibson Girl type 10 years hence they'll be reminiscing regretfully about the girl, American, hot, M. 1943. It might be noted in passing that bores of this genus flourish in bars, (every spot has one) and are at their best (or worst) when adequately irrigated by copious interior drenches of white man's poison.

Civilian society has no corner on these retrospective tear jerkers for the army also has its quota of lads who feel that any habit, custom or man, for that matter, post dating 1937 is an affront to decency and an abomination.

Having demonstrated that we in a few regrets on our own hook about certain aspects of the Army which have changed so greatly in recent years and are destined to further alteration.

BOYHOOD DREAMS

Every boy during his pre-adolescence has at one time or another aspired to be a soldier or sailor. Possibly the presetn day child being so much more sophisticated has fewer romantic illusions on the topic of military life but when we weer the scourge of the kindergarten, soldiering to us meant snappy light opera uniforms glittering with brass and braid like a 14th Street honky-tonk and cavorting gallantly about to the accompaniment of fifes, bugles, drums, and military bands.

But, alas, when the dreams of our childhood are apparently on the verge of fruition and we are swished off into the army, what do we find? Instead of the wasp-waisted white uniforms and coq feather shakos a la Oscar Hammerstein or Beverly of Graustark we are given fa. o. d. blouse and a manilla envelope cap. We glue our noses longingly against the glittering shop windows of Broad St. speculating as to what maximum of that gaudy brassware we might get away with on our blouses to make us more picturesque. We know darn well, however, that the first sergeant will make us take it off so we turn away with a sigh. Now, lackaday, our poor brass buttons are obsolescent and in the not distant future we will receive uniforms which will be much more practical than our present ones but which won't have a gleam or a glitter in a gross.

Now in this matter of incidental music: Unlike the layman's conception of "la vie militaire" the march playing brave brass band is so rare that when the strains of such resound within the precincts of a military area, the amazed G. I's come clustering around mouths agape and ears flapping in the breeze to listen to the treat. It seems sort of an anti-climax to hear such music through the medium of a loud-speaker as we occasionally do.

NO COMIC OPERA

Naturally we fully appreciate the reasons for this sad state of affairs. We are at war which is a serious business and not a Gilbert and Sullivan opera. We know right well that our uniforms are more practical our living conditions a thousand times better than they weer in the good old days but, darn it all, man doesn't live by bread alone and we want to look like something out of a Schnitzler play even though we haven't got the figure for it nd have to wear shell-rimmed spectacles in the bargain.

There are more ways of getting a cow out of a dry well than tying it to a balloon and other methods than close order drill of making a soldier. Oddly enough a lot of these G. I's who claim they hate soldiering are fall guys for a formal dress parade to music and will even admit they like it. Afater all, if there are two fundamental childish attributes which a man bears to his grave, they are a loving of dressing up and showing off and the armies of the world are getting duller and duller as time goes on. What chance has a boy got nowadays are not reactionaries, we may with impunity (we hope) indulge.

LT. CRANE CAPTAIN

First Lieutenant Douglas B. Crane, member of the veterinary detachment, 283rd Quartermaster company, has been promoted to the rank of captain. Entering the service in October, 1942, as a first lieutenant, Captain Crane was assigned to the 283rd last November after a short orientation course at Camp Lee, Va.

The Officers R. & R. Club on Cusseta Road is by far the most popular place in Columbus for commissioned officers and their guests. Ask anyone on the reservation who has been there.

Canine Mascot Joins Basics

'Yardbird' Transfers From 176th Infantry

The event has not been reported in the orders of the day but nevertheless "Yardbird," a canine veteran of two years service in the Army, has transferred from Company A of the 176th Infantry to the First Company, First Battalion, Fourth Basic Training Regiment.

The regiment is one of three new A.S.T.P. Basic Training Center regiments of The Infantry School. The first batch of 18-year-old selectees arrived at Fort Benning, June 2, a lone lot of 35 boys from Fort Harrison, Indiana. It was hot, they were tired and also lonesome.

But wagging his tail in violent welcome as they filed through the company supply room to draw their equipment was the Yardbird, showing more life than he had shown since his rookie days.

Yardbird is strictly an Army canine. He likes it when the going is rough. The 176th became his home when the regiment was assigned to guard duty in Washington following maneuvers in the Carolinas.

LIKES OPEN AIR

He didn't mind it very much when the regiment was transferred to Fort Benning because it was located out in the open spaces of Harmony Church area. But when it was moved into the brick cuarters at the Main Post, Yardbird objected. He didn't like cement floors. He didn't like barracks with three stories and a basement and inumerable corridors. It was all too darned fancy —for a sturdy canine of his ilk.

When it became necessary to organize a cadre for the newly activated training regiments, some of the personnel of the 176th were transferred. Company "A" contributed the cadre for the First battalion of the Fourth Regiment and Yardbird was presented with a problem.

However when he learned the First Battalion of the new regiment was to be quartered in the barracks formerly occupied by the 176th in the Harmony Church area, his decision became easy.

He moved with the first batch of cadre back to the wooden barracks among the pines where he can chase squirrels to his heart's content.

Yardbird also will have seniority over all but the cadre. At present, members of the new regfment can count their army service in days whereas the Yardbird counts his in years.

1918 Veteran Still Likes His '03 Springfield

A veteran of five major campaigns in World War No. 1, Clifford E. Harkness of Decatur, Ill., has decided he can not let another war go by without taking part in it so he is striving for second lieutenant's bars in the 11th Company of the Third Student Training Regiment.

Harkness is a musician by profession. He was a year overseas in the last war with the 130th Infantry of the 33rd Division, acting as stretcher bearer as well as bandsman. Among the campaigns he experienced were those of St. Mihiel, Amiens, Tromerville, Meuse-Argonne and Verdun.

Upon his arrival at Brest, Harkness's unit was attached to the British Army, then the French and finally it came under American command. He was in the front lines throughout his service overseas and after the Armistice was stationed in Luxembourg.

Although he has a family which includes two young sons, Harkness enlisted in the Army last November and underwent training at Perrin Field near Sherman, Tex. His only comment as to the difference between this war and the last one is:

"Army life is better, training is far superior—but I still love that old '03 rifle."

Menagerie Keeper Knows His Snakes

Officer candidates in the Third Student Training Regiment who may be a little hesitant about approaching snakes and other forms of wildlife on bivouacs this summer can pick up a few useful hints by talking things over with Pvt. William Tyson of Company B in the resigemtn's Service Battalion.

Before entering the Army, Tyson was an assistant menagerie keeper and handled boa constrictors, leopards, monkeys and ocelots as well as a wide variety of birdlife. On one occasion during this career, a leopard escaped through its cage door, carelessly left open, and Tyson was compelled to cope with the situation alone. He admits he was scared, but, relying on his experience, he secured a pole and coaxed the beast back into its cage without any damage being done.

Hospital Patients Witness Another Musical Show

Another in the series of musical and variety programs given by the patients of the Neuropsychiatric Section of the Station Hospital was given on Wednesday afternoon, June 2. The continuance of these weekly entertainments, started by Captain Shulac on May 6 is evidence of the success they have enjoyed.

This most recent performance by the patients of the Section and their guests was opened by an accordion and guitar duet by Sergeant Pintello and Private Dunlap. Private Marty Gross sang "Jealous" and "Marie" followed by the singing of "White Cliffs of Dover" and "There Are Such Things" by Corporal Jinnie Grammas of the W. A. A. C.

Mr. Emmet Leitel of the American Red Cross sang "Johnny Doughboy" after which he led a group singing of "My Wild Irish Rose." This was followed by two tap dances, one slow and one fast time by Private Elwood Briddel of Ward E.6 which also was represented by Private Alden Young who sang "Wagon Wheels."

Private Charles Jones, a theatrical man in civilian life previous to his induction, sang "The Road to Mandalay" and Corporal Grammas concluded teh show by "You'd Be So Nice to Come Home To." At the end of the show cold punch was served by the Red Cross.

Brazilians Give Argentine Coup News Big Applause

Brazilian newspapermen who visited Fort Benning last Friday accorded thunderous applause to the announcement that the pro-Axis regime in Argentina had been overthrown.

The 12 men and members of their party were attending a luncheon at the Officers Club given by Major General Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School, when the news was telephoned to the club. William Dyer, coordinator of Inter-American Relations, called out the news in Portuguese whereupon the visitors gave vent to their feelings.

The 12 Brazilians witnessed demonstrations given by the Infantry School and the Parachute School. The tour of the Parachute School was personally conducted by Brig. General George P. Howell, and Lt. Colonel James W. Coutts, commandant and assistant commandant respectively of the School.

In the evening they were the dinner guests of Brig. General Walter S. Fulton, post commander. After dinner the party left for Opelika, Ala., where they took a train for New Orleans to continue their swing of the nation's training and war production centers.

In a special message to post personnel, Wilson Lins, editor in chief of O Imparcial of Caia, Brazil, and enlistee as a private for active service in the Brazilian Army, now at war with the Axis, declared:

"I salute the military staff of the BAYONET and all the hearty officers and men of Fort Benning, who in this hour of American life are giving their best efforts for the common cause of a sane and anti-Fascist humanity."

2nd STR Men Have $38,399,000 In Service Insurance

The percentage of men in the Second Student Training Regiment holding National Service Life Insurance has climbed to a new high of 89 per cent, it was revealed in a report issued this month by Capt. John B. Torinus, Insurance officer.

Total insurance now held in the regiment is $38,399,000, also a new high. The average policy amount for each man with insurance is $8,932.

Four companies in the Second Student Training Regiment have already signed up their personnel 100 per cent in the insurance drive, and several other companies are rapidly approaching perfect records.

Poker-Face Jap Is Misnomer, O.C. Says

O'Melia Investigator In California MP Concentration Camps

There is no such thing as a Japanese "poker face," according to Officer Candidate Malcolm B. O'Melia of the Fourth Company, Third Student Training Regiment. "You ought to see them blush when caught telling a lie," the candidate discloses.

This is only one of the many interesting bits of information O'Melia picked up as an investigator of Japanese concentration camps in California, working under the Civil Affairs Division of the U. S. Army Western Defense Command. O'Melia expects the knowledge he gained of Japanese custom and trickery to stand him in good stead before the war is over.

An Elwood, Calif., resident, O'Melia picked up some knowledge of the Japanese language through working on Japanese fishing boats in Puget Sound. He later secured a position as guard in the concentration camps at Pomona and Santa Anita. Before his appointment as an investigator, he was sent to a school of Japanese psychology in San Francisco.

There he was taught never to have paper and pencil in hand when questioning a Japanese nor to place the witness near a door. Japanese fear entrance of "gods" through a door and consider the deities in question as ill omens. Never, moreover, he was told, should he question one Jap in front of another, or, worse, in front of a woman. Women are considered inferior and this disclosure explained to O'Melia the evident terror on the part of women who were questioned before men of their own race in concentration camps.

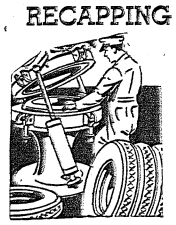
COURT GOD OF CHANCE

The lanky Californian has many interesting stories of the camps in his state — of the Japs' fondness for gambling; how out of 20,000 Japs only one would serve as a stool pigeon, and how, despite fine hospital facilities, Japanese women refused medical attention in childbirth.

There was one case of hara-kiri at Santa Anita, he said, and searches of the prisoners yielded all kinds of knives, maps and charts. Despite the apparent patriotism of some of the American-Japanese, O'Melia insists there are few he would trust. He related the incident of one Japanese, graduate of an American college and a professional physical education instructor, who was given liberty to leave the camp. An inspection of his belongings before he departed revealed a lengthy document condemning the American government and reciting many falsehoods as to the treatment of his race in California.

O'Melia's father was supervisor of many of the Elwood oil-wells which were shelled by a Japanese submarine early in the war. The shells, as a matter of fact, were lobbed right over the O'Melia home but did no material damage to the area. Most of the tanks O'Melia said, usually contained aviation gasoline but on the night of the attack they were all empty.

Later is was claimed an American plane had sunk the sub. Bodies of the Japanese were washed up on the California shores and on their fingers were class rings from University of Southern California, Santa Barbara State and University of Washington.



WAAC's Learn About Foot Care

1st Lieut. Gail Gaines, executive officer of the 43rd WAAC post headquarters company, Fort Benning, Ga., has issued her WAAC's general rules for foot care during the hot summer months.

The rules, as emphasized by Lieutenant Gaines, are general commonsense rules that could profitably be followed by civilian as well as military personnel. They were in order of importance: shoes should be properly fitted; feet should be kept well bathed and foot-powder used freely; shoes should never be worn when damp—stockings either for that matter; and at the slightest indication of any foot infection, immediae medical care should be obtained; and last but certainly not least in importance, heels must be kept straight so the foot is relaxed at all times.

The old adage that an army travels on its stomach, may be true to some extent, but Uncle Sam takes no changes with the feet of his soldiers and WAACs.

The rest-pause that refreshes
Welcome in peace...
more welcome in war work

WAR plant managers will tell you that anything that contributes to contented workers makes better workers. In plant after plant it has been found that a rest-pause breaks monotony, lessens tiredness and tension.

When you add refreshment to a rest-pause, you not only have a pause that rests, but refreshes, too. A moment for ice-cold Coca-Cola makes a rest-pause take on more meaning... promoting contentment that leads to more work and better work. Yes, contentment comes when you connect with a Coke.

Letters from plant managers from coast to coast emphasize that the little moment for an ice-cold Coca-Cola means a lot to workers in war plants. It's a refreshing moment on the sunny side of things... a way to turn to refreshment without turning from work.

Close work brings the need to pause. Ice-cold Coca-Cola brings tingling refreshment to make any pause the pause that refreshes.

With Coca-Cola in the plant, refreshment can be close at hand. Even with wartime restrictions there's still enough Coca-Cola for many a refreshing pause.

All RC May Inductees Take Out Life Policies

Perfect Record Made By Colored Soldiers For First Time

All colored soldiers entering the Army of the United States through the Fort Benning Reception Center in May have safeguarded their wives and dependents by investing in National Service Life Insurance, the low-cost life insurance made available by the government to persons in the armed services, it was disclosed today by Lieut. Col. Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Reception Center.

Although the percentage of soldiers who have taken out insurance in past months has neared the perfect record established during May, this is actually the first time that all of the selectees from the southeastern states who came to Benning for processing have availed themselves of the insurance benefits offered by the government.

The lowest policy taken out by soldiers amounts to $5,000 while the average policy amounts to $8,412.62. Eighty-nine percent of the selectees who entered the Army at Benning last month purchased $10,000 policies.

Lieut. John W. Inzer, Jr., insurance officer of the post who is charged with supervising the insurance program, pointed out that "the record of the Reception Center is one of the most enviable on the entire post. When the total number of men in the organization is considered, in addition to the fact that most of the men are stationed here but a short time, this record stands as one very hard to beat by any Army unit."

Col. James said that when the selectees arrive at the reception Center they are told about the insurance policies and of the special benefits which accrue to service men through the low-cost insurance. The decision to take out insurance then rests entirely with the soldiers, he pointed out.

W. D. Issues Ruling On Insignia Use For Civilian Appointees

Officers appointed in the army of the United States from civil life will no longer wear the insignia of an arm or service, until they have completed a 90 day probationary period, according to word received from the War Department.

The new ruling, which does not affect officer personnel of the Medical Corps or Corps of Chaplains, states that Specialist Reserve insignia will be worn during the first three months of duty.

It is also added that retired regular army officers will wear insignia of the branch in which they were previously commissioned, unless now detailed to another arm or service.

Officers detailed in a branch in which they do not hold a permanent commission will wear the badge of that branch.

Truck Reg't Literacy School Graduates 52

Col. Vida Presents Certificates At Close Of Three-Month Course

Fifty-two enlisted men of the Provisional Truck Regiment have received certificates for those persons successfully completing a three months' course in basic subjects at the Regimental Literacy School.

Colonel Frank J. Vida, commanding officer of the Provisional Truck Regiment, presented the certificates to the graduates. Introduced by Lt. Everett Bell, Regimental Supply Officer, the Colonel expressed his satisfaction with the progress made by the graduates and offered encouragement to others in the school who have not yet completed the course.

Lt. Colonel Edward G. Herlihy, Regimental Executive Officer, was present and offered his congratulations to the graduates. Chaplain Levi L. Stanmore, who divides his time between the Service Battalion, Third Student Training Regiment and the Provisional Truck Regiment, gave a message on working together and making the most of opportunities for advancement.

FUNCTION EXPLAINED

Sergeant Walter R. Bennett, Jr., the school supervisor, explained how men who, for various reasons, have been denied educational privileges, are given instruction in reading, writing, arithmetic, spelling, and geogrphy by competent enlisted personnel. He told how these classes meet four nights weekly and how a well-planned program has enabled many soldiers to better themselves mentally.

The musical portion of the exercises was presented by vocal soloist, Private First Class Joseph Coles, and Staff Sergeant Isaac Royal, pianist, both of Company "F," Provisional Truck Regiment, along with the Regimental Quartet and Chorus directed by Corporal Ernest Baskette of Company "K" of this Regiment. Corporal Eugene Howard, chaplain's assistant, gave the opening prayer and the master of ceremonies was Sergeant Theodis F. Donald, Regimental Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, who ably served in that capacity.

In appealing refusals of pension incident to a medical discharge application should be made to the Veteran Administration.

PTR Officer Back On Duty

Complete Automotive Course, Infantry School

The Provisional Truck Regiment has welcomed back into its fold eleven officers who have just completed a three months course in Automotive Section of The Infantry School.

These officers were originally assigned to the regiment during its activation in December, 1942, but, in February, 1943, were selected by Colonel Frank J. Vida, regimental commander, to attend Motor Maintenance Class Number 23 at The Infantry School.

After the 12 week period of learning the army method of handling, servicing, and repairing all types of vehicles, these officers have returned to their regiment and will assume the duties of motor officers in various companies of the regiment.

As evidence of the fine records made by these men in the school, Lieutenant Melvin A. Hendry, Jr., Company "T," Provisional Truck Regiment, won the distinction of having the highest grades for the course, and when the final ratings were released, had led all other members of the class.

Officers from the Provisional Truck Regiment who graduated were: Lieutenants Crawford H. Lydle, r., Milton V. Seraile, William H. Webb, Jr., James C. White, Jr., Clyde W. Briggs, Channing C. Colston, Charles H. Fields, Jr., William G. Gray, Melvin A. Hendry, Jr., Tyler E. Hill, Jr., and Herman McKinney.

Every Time You Hear Fred Waring and Harry James it Means a Million Free Chesterfields a Week for the Boys Over There

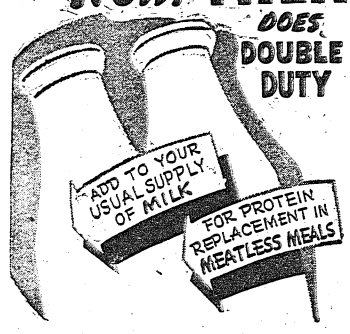
A grand good luck gift with Chesterfield's Compliments

"It's Victory Tunes for the boys over here and Victory Smokes for the boys over there," Chesterfield announces five nights a week over the regular Fred Waring "Pleasure Time" radio broadcast (Mondays through Fridays, N.B.C.)—and also three nights a week on the Harry James program (Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, C.B.S.).

A million Chesterfields, week after week to our fighting men is the result of the public's interest in Chesterfield's two ace radio shows.

Since last November, Fred Waring has devoted his 15-minute broadcast to "Victory Tunes", playing and singing songs selected by the service men and dedicating each program to one of the camps or posts.

To date, eight new service songs have been written and presented by Fred Waring and so far this year 110 different Camps have voted on what they wanted Waring to play and then tuned in to hear the result. The songs written include "Sky Anchors" for Naval Aviation; "Roll Tanks Roll" for the Armored Forces; "Look Out Below" for the Parachute Troops; "The Fighting Quartermaster Corps"; "The Men of the Merchant Marine"; "Man to Man" for the Infantry; "In Navy Blue" for the Waves and "Hail to the Corps" for Marine Aviation.



Harry James' tribute to the men in the armed forces is his nightly "Chesterfield Special". Since Harry James' records are hard to get, he plays a "Chesterfield Special" every night over the air, so that the boys can hear the sensational James arrangements, played through the mike exactly as you would hear them on your phonographs at camp.

Service men will be delighted to hear that Harry James has just been voted champion of about everything on the list. He recently emerged from a popularity survey conducted by "Radio Life," Pacific Coast fan magazine, with the following score: 1—Favorite recording artist; 2—Favorite sweet orchestra; 3—Favorite swing orchestra; 4—Helen Forrest, favorite girl singer; 5—Favorite song, "I've Heard That Song Before".

Bayonet Awards Two $5 Prizes To Contestants

Because their contributions were especially outstanding and because no prizes were awarded by the BAYONET for the issue of May 27, two awards of five dollars each are being given to Cpl. H. B. Moon of the Visual Aids section, Publications, Infantry School, for his cartoon "Are You Kidding, Buddy?" and to O. C. Ernest W. Caine of the 23rd Company, 3rd STR, for his poem "How Green Was My Valley", published last week.

Both contributions were well received throughout the post, and requests were received for republication rights in other papers.

The BAYONET, meanwhile, again urges that post contributors enter their work in the weekly $2 contest. Comic and editorial cartoons are especially desired for publication in the paper.

Academicians Donate $257 To War Prisoners

To help buy necessities for American prisoners of war, members of the Academic Regiment donated $256.97 out of their last month's pay, according to Lt. W. G. Smith, regimental adjutant.

Leading the list of contributers in this move which was suggested by The Infantry Journal, was Company C. Boxes were set up on each pay table and men given an opportunity to purchase cigarettes, soap, toothpaste, candy and other articles for their buddies, now interned by the Nazis and Japanese.

The money goes to the Red Cross, which is charged with handling communications with prisoners of war, and will supplement family gifts sent to internees.

In December, 1917, General Singleton went to France as Chief of Staff of the 41st Division, which was basically made up of the National Guard of Washington, Oregon, Montana, Wyoming, Utah and other western states. He later served as plans and training officer of the First Army Corps and as Chief of Staff of the 4th and 8th Divisions.

After the Armistice, General Singleton, then colonel, was ordered back to Brest, France, as Chief of Staff of Base Section No. 5, where he was largely responsible for the organization and operation that was charged with the repartriation of about 67 per cent of the A.E.F.

As a result of his work overseas, General Singleton was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal by the United States and the Legion of Honor by the French government.

General Singleton was on the Initial General Staff Corps Eligible List. He served on the War Department General Staff during the period that General Pershing was Chief of Staff, and at the same time was a member of the Army and Navy joint planning committee.

His service since leaving the War Department General Staff includes two tours of duty at Fort Benning, with the Infantry School demonstration troops, and as commander of the 29th Infantry. He also served a four-year tour of General Staff with troops of Headquarters, Ninth Corps area, San Francisco, Calif.

He came to Fort Benning from the Office of the Chief of Infantry, Washington, D. C., where he served approximately four years in charge of training. He has been closely identified with military training throughout his career, having served as an instructor at various schools and as assistant umpire in joint Army and Navy maneuvers in both the Hawaiian and Panama departments.

The heroic soldiers were highly praised by Henry Frantz, associate director of the Press Division in the office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Washington, who was with the Argentineans on their trip to Benning and who shared their harrowing experiense. In a letter to post officials Mr. Frantz said:

"I know that the Argentine newspapermen and myself felt deeply grateful to them, and also to the crew or the boat or amphibious jeep that was maneuvered so effectivery to assist us."

No matter how many shirts Father has he always seems to need more. The same goes for belts and pajamas and ties and so on down the list. Knowing this, many sons and daughters will be buying these items in the men's shop of the J. A. KIRVEN CO. If your Father is in the Army that's fine: your shopping demands will be filled! And if your Father is a civilian, that's fine, too. The men's shop has gift items for them all. A handsome leather Hickock belt makes an inexpensive, yet thoroughly appreciated gift for a civilian Father. For the Army Dad a regulation style and color Yale shirt or two might be appropriate. Army socks, civilian hosiery, pajamas for all men are a few of the gift ideas displayed in this conveniently located store. Especially for the Army man is a regulation tie and handkerchief set, both the hanky and tie being Army sun tan color. All Fathers will be duly appreciative if they are given any of the wide variety of appropriate gifts exhibited by J. A. Kirven Co.

Leather goods are about as difficult to get these rationed days as a good thick steak. But while MAX ROSENBERG CO. has no steak, they do have a large supply of real cowhide leather bags especially suitable for men, be they Fathers or not. Mentioning Fathers brings to mind Father's Day will soon be here. A leather bag replete with zipper would indeed make an especially prized gift. Both leather and zippers are hard to find, but each and every one of the men's bags displayed by Max Rosenberg is the best grade leather with prices ranging from almost rock bottom to a little bit higher and a little bit higher than that. Several of these luggage pieces have been reduced so it would be a wise shopper who shops now and chooses a black, chocolate brown, tan or a lovely shade of russet leather bag. The only connection these bags have with shoe "mittens" is they're both used by men. For those not in the know, shoe mittens are knitted socks to be used as shoe coverings to protect the shoe leather from dust and scratches when not on the feet of the owner. When buying your men folks leather luggage include a box of three pairs of shoe mittens just to do the whole thing up pink.

Crisp, cool cottons are something we girls simply can't do without when the weather is humid. Nothing can give a fresher appearance than a spanking clean, attractively styled cotton frock. The Nelly Don, L'Aiglon, Saxon and Judy and Jill cottons displayed by KIRALFY'S will indeed help perk up your wardrobe this summer. Junior and women's sizes are equally attractive, you'll find. Ever so smart summer piques and chambrays, light butcher linens and seersuckers are a few of the materials featured in these chic and reasonably priced outfits. The famous Grace Ashley dresses are included in this large assortment. One white dotted Swiss frock was daintily trimmed with just the right size tiny gold buttons down the front. The Grace Ashley patterned meshes in white and lovely soft colors are a notable addition to the summer fashion scene. If you've been having trouble finding unusual styles in summer cottons, you need look no longer, just make a "bee-line" for Kiralfy's and choose several of their "up-to-the-minute styles in this main floor display.

Long delayed shipments and lack of materials has not prevented H. ROTHSCHILD, INC. from selling comfy mattresses. These cool and fine light mattresses are each and every one an exceptional value. They are not bargains just for immediate use, but you'll find them perfect for comfort today and thousands of tomorrows. These "clouds of comforts" are covered with patterned heavy damask or woven tickings in blue, green or grey, as you prefer. Fine workmanship is evident in all these mattresses which are so manufactured that they cannot become lumpy or shift about. Another point to consider is the ease with which you'll be able to give your new mattress its weekly turning. It will be easy as sturdy self-material handles have been attached to either side of the mattresses. Why not get into action today and send your old and worn-out mattress to the Salvation Army or some similar place and then select your new sleeping aid at H. Rothschild. After just one hour of ethereal sleep on your new mattress you'll look forward to countless more nights of comfortable rest.

Of late iron, so-called "Terrace Furniture" has become so popular and is considered so smart, one no longer need own a terrace to necessitate some terrace furniture. Several iron chairs and a white iron coffee table can often be blended well with other furniture of a different type. Especially suitable for use in many post homes, temporary or otherwise, are the small white iron tables tucked away in a corner of the basement of SEARS ROEBUCK COMPANY. These rather baroque-like tables are ideal for use as extra tables for anything under the sun. Many place their potted plants on the colored or clear glass tops to make an attractive corner on a porch or in a living-room. The tops of the tables measure 8" by 10" and the glass itself is available in either clear or a deep royal blue shade. You'll find out too that these practical and lovely additions to many a home are not nearly as expensive as you'd expect, if you were judging by appearance alone. Now that you've been buying birthday, Father's Day and Mother's Day presents why not buy a present for your family in general. You'll not mind the very few dollars expenditure as the result will be well worth it all.

Now that the torrid heat of summer is once more upon us there still are many times when we feel like really being dressed up in our Sunday-Go-To-Meeting clothes. Perhaps some one is giving a tea or you're going to the Officer's Club for luncheon, you're going to watch the Polo game with your best beau . . . your hubby, and so on ad infinitum. All these occasions will mean you'll be expected to wear something more than a "house-dressy" looking frock. At the exclusive shop of KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC., you will find many appropriate and becoming styles for these moments when you want to look your very best. Lightweight crepes, one and two-piece jersey, solids and prints, chiffons, and shantungs are included in their assortment of better dresses. By "better," I mean workmanship, materials and design, not price. One attractive and cool looking dress I noticed especially was white crepe, very lightweight, with simple lapels, its only trimming being a set-in belt of two wide strips of red and blue crepe rather intricately designed. Plain enough is this dress and yet lovely-looking for wear anywhere and at any hour. I suggest you follow my advice and make your own selections from these quality frocks.

If your husband has a birthday just around the corner you might give him an unusual present, i. e., an appointment at the AIME DuPONT STUDIOS. Here the resulting photograph will be one you'll cherish for many years to come. The painstaking care with which each "shot" is made does not necessarily mean the whole procedure will take hours and hours. Speed, through exact knowledge of the art of photography, is the reason why the actual "shooting" time is short. For his photograph may I suggest your husband wear his best summer uniform? The particular light sun tan shade of the Army regulation slacks, shirt and blouse is especially adapted to clear and "sharp" photography. In photography the general rule is wear something light around the face. This applies to men and women alike. The good bronze tans most of your husbands have will also aid the final result. Naturally proofs are submitted and retouching suggestions may be made. Finishing up the final proofs does as a rule take a bit of time, so don't hesitate to pick up your phone and dial Columbus 3-1505 for your husband's appointment.

SHARP OC GRAD

Col. Sharp, a graduate of the Officer Candidate School at the Presidio in Monterey, California, in 1917, took over the Command of the First Student Training Regimen in August, 1942 after serving with Headquarters of the 7th Corps Area. Baker Village, Benning Park To Elect New Officials On July 6th

Tuesday, July 6, has been selected as election day for Baker Village and Benning Park. On that date the residents of these two communities will march to the polls to elect permanent officials to govern the community.

This announcement was made Tuesday night by First Sgt. Percy H. Hopkins, temporary mayor of the community, before more than 1,000 Baker Village-Benning Park residents who attended a giant mass meeting on the village recreational field.

Under the proposed plan there will be 15 representative councilmen, in addition to the mayor and four commissioners to be elected at large. Baker Village will be split into nine districts, each district electing a councilman, while Benning Park homes will have representatives from six districts.

Wade Coggins, assistant manager of Newton D. Baker village, expressed gratification that the program for self-government is underway.

The following temporary officials were introduced by master of ceremonies, Jack Gibney, Mayor, 1st Sgt. Percy H. Hopkins; W. W. Daughtry, commissioner of traffic; J. R. Grayson, commissioner of recreation; J. F. Harper, commissioner of welfare; Lt. J. A. White, commissioner of sanitation.

These temporary officials were selected by a general committee who volunteered to work out a temporary governing program which consists chiefly of outlining the form of government and drawing up the rules of elections so the people may elect their own permanent officers.

Sergeant Hopkins outlined plans for the project, including the ultimate goals, addition of a nursery school run by the people, a shopping center in the project and a dispensary. He outlined the form of government.

The 176th Infantry band played a concert through arrangements made by Sgt. A. A. Wonsick, chairman of the ways and means committee.

Special Units Camp To Open Next Sunday

Recreational Project Completed For Post's Colored Servicemen

The newly renovated Special Units Camp, located at the junction of Jamestown and Hourglass roads, Harmony Church area, will be formally opened to the colored troops of the Harmony Church area, on Sunday, June 20, when representatives of the Provisional Truck Regiment, and the Service battalions of the Second and Third Student Training Regiments, combine in presenting a program celebrating the opening of this recreational project.

Under the general supervision of Chaplain Levi L. Stanmore, of the Third Student Training Regiment and part time chaplain of the Provisional Truck Regiment, and Lt. Henry A. Talbert, Special Service officer of the Provisional Truck Regiment, this program will start at 4 o'clock on the bandstand in the camp. Soup To Nuts Here Monday

One Performance Slated For The Alabama Area

One performance of the USO-Camp Show "Soup to Nuts" is scheduled for Monday, June 28, at 8:30 p. m. when it will play to Fort Benning Paratroopers of the Alabama Area on the outdoor stage, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer at the post, announced.

This New York musical comedy revue, headlined by Broadway Jester Harry Rose as master of ceremonies, is replete with gags, songs, dances and specialties routined with nice timing. In the way of feminine pulchritude it offers the Taft Kretlow Girls, who open the show with a precision dance number.

Other stars of the cast include Vernon and Draper, a young man and girl duo, who have a sophisticated singing and dancing routine which they highlight with subtle comedy patter; Seed and White, zany acrobatic team who pummel one another all over the stage; Harriet Brent, from New York's famous Swing Street who combines outstanding personality with great ability to deliver a song, and Gregory, Raymond and Cheste, musical novelty trio who have been termed the "Musical Lunatics" because of their outstanding ability to play standard as well as novelty instruments including the "hootinany" and the "theramin," of which there are only four in this country.

Instruction In Emergency Life Saving Planned

Two-Week Course For 100 Selected Men Starts Monday

Swimming instruction aimed at the prevention of casualties among American soldiers whose lives might be imperiled by ship sinkings or other emergencies will be given 100 selected Fort Benning soldiers at Russ Pool starting next Monday, June 20, under the auspices of the American Red Cross.

The big class will take instructions from a Red Cross Life Saving expert, being sent here from Washington, every morning for two weeks. At the end of that time, it is expected that the selected men will then be qualified to pass on the instruction to men of their own units.

The Red Cross expert will come to the fort with enough equipment for the full complement of the class, according to Lt. Col. Clarence A. Will, director of plans and training, who is working on the project in cooperation with Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer and head of the Fort Benning Athletic Association which operates Russ Pool.

GIVES LOW-DOWN

The two-week course will give the real low-down in realistic fashion on emergency swimming. Demonstrations in Russ Pool are expected to include everything from swimming in burning oil to the use of ingenious devices for converting clothing, barracks bags and other G. I. equipment into life-saving rafts.

Most impressive of the methods taught will be that of moving a wounded man across water with nothing more at hand than a standard Medical Corps litter. Four men will be shown how to remove their trousers, tie up the legs and inflate them. These are put under the handles of the litter, thus making a sort of life raft. The "wounded" man can then ride across the water, propelled by his swimming comrades.

SWIM IN HOT OIL

The Benning men will be taught how to swim in water blazing with ignited oil by splashing the water ahead of them to squelch the flames. They will also learn

56-Year-Old Enlistee Wants Crack at Hitler As Father's Day Gift

Sergeant Morgan Fought At Verdun In First World War

Sgt. "Pop" Morgan, 56, oldest enlisted man in the Medical Detachment, of Station Hospital, would like to take a personal crack at Hitler by way of celebrating Father's Day.

"We gave the Heines a trouncing in the last war," said Pop, "and we're going to give them the 'works' in this one. I'd like to march with the boys into Berlin and take a personal wallop at Schickelgruber!"

Morgan volunteered for the service last year shortly after his fifty-fifth birthday. Born in Shelbyville, Ind., he comes from a fighting stock of ancestors. He has a son, 16, who is trying to get into the navy.

In the last war Morgan spent eight months overseas with the 145th Infantry, 35th Division, and was at Verdun when the fighting was hottest. Morgan's hair is now white and his legs are a bit weak, but he is still spry and has plenty of "snap and go."

He is a mild-mannered man now, but occasionally, when he thinks of those old days when he helped the "Sammies whip the Huns" there comes a grim set to his jaw, and a glint of battle leaps into his eyes.

Up until his enlistment last year, Morgan was state commander of the V. F. W. in Alabama.

"I enlisted," said Pop, "because I wanted to have a hand in winning this war, too. I wanted to do something, anything to help my country."

While he's a bit too old for active service, Pop is carrying on like the real soldier he is by shouldering a lot of work in the office of First Sergeant Bittle.

Tent Stake Takes Toll Of 'Gator Top Sergeants

Tough luck. . ., that's what Company K, 124th Infantry, had this past week. While on the range, after falling out the company, First Sergeant, St. Clair Little, tripped over a tent stake and painfully dislocated his right elbow. Medicos patched him up and he is reclining in the hospital for a two-week's rest.

The following day, fate seemed to have it in for Co. K, as the acting top kick, Staff Sergeant S. B. Carter, fell over the same stake that waylaid Sgt. Little. The Medicos hemstitched him and he was able to resume firing.

Major Russell E. Tuttle has been assigned as intelligence officer for the ASTP Basic Training Center of the Infantry School, Colonel S. R. Tupper, commanding officer, announced today.

Major Tuttle is a recent graduate of the advance officers course of the Infantry School and formerly was the supply officer for the First Student Training Regiment.

He received his reserve commission in 1927 upon his graduation from the University of Idaho and prior to his call to active duty in June 1941 was connected with the Drumheller Analytical Laboratories of Spokane, Wash.

MAJOR PRASNJAK

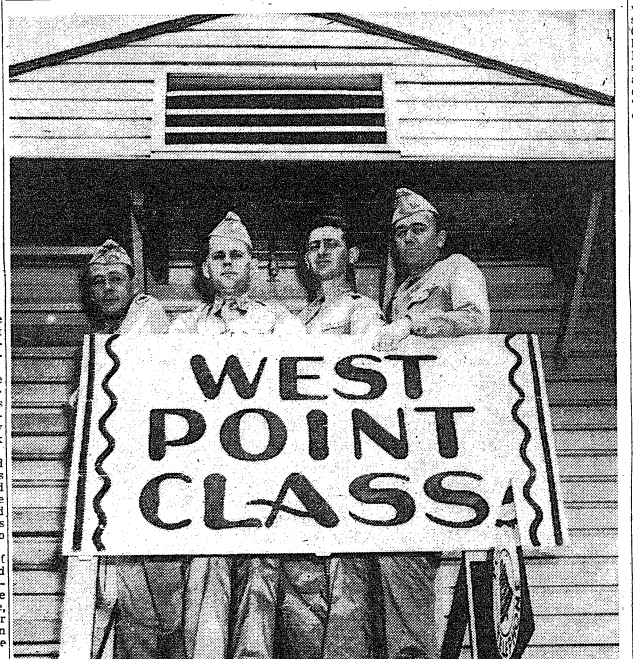
Capt. Joseph L. Prasnjak of the Second Training Regiment, Fort Benning, Georgia, has been promoted to the rank of major while he is attending an advanced course in the 3rd Company of the First Student Training Regiment.

French Class Finishes Course

General Weems Delivers Baccalaureate Address

The special eight weeks course for French Officers conducted at The Infantry School was concluded here Saturday with graduation ceremonies.

During the weeks in which the course was held, the French officers studied American weapons and tactics. These studies included conferences, demonstrations by school troops and practical work by themselves.



In the latter, they disassembled and assembled various weapons of the infantry and also operated them. They learned tactics in the classroom and also in the field where they watched school troops go through various maneuvers to illustrate the lectures.

Officers who were members of the class which was arranged especially for them, were assembled from various parts of the world. Some came from France, others from Africa and a number were Frenchmen who had been living in this country for some time.

At graduation exercises held Saturday, Brig. Gen. General George Weems, assistant TIS commandant, addressed the class.

"On behalf of The Infantry School I wish to offer my congratulations to you upon the successful completion of your course—the first French officers class. We have been glad to welcome you here as representatives of a great nation, not only in token of our esteem for your country, but also to the end that we may demonstrate our friendship and faith in your future. We are glad to have an active part in the work which will lead the resurrection—

Academic Regiment Plans 'Milky Way' Production

Former Broadway Producer Will Direct Stage And Screen Hit

"The Milky Way", a three act dramatization of the comedy success by Lynn Root and Harry Clork, has been put into production by members of the Academic Regiment and will be presented early in July at the Main Theater and other spots on the post.

Directed by Sgt. Milton Luban, former Broadway and Hollywood director, the cast is composed entirely of men of the Academic Regiment and their wives. The two female parts will be played by Elaine Luban and Helen Miller, wife of Pvt. Walter Miller who portrays the part of Willard, a reporter.

EX-BROADWAY DIRECTOR

Sgt. Lubin directed "The Milky Way" for the New York Federal Theater in 1939, and at that time Helen Miller was also a member of the cast. Most of the actors from the Academic Regiment have had previous stage experience and a finished production is expected.

"The Milky Way" is a riotous comedy dealing with the adventures of a milkman, who without ever striking a single blow, wins the world's middleweight boxing championship. St. Sgt. Sam Elterman will portray the part of Burleigh Sullivan, the milkman.

COPE IN CAST

Corp. William F. Cope, well-known Benning radio announcer, plays the part of Speed McFarland, the middleweight champ, who falls unconscious every time he comes in contact with the milkman, Sgt. Joseph Tedesco as Spider, the punch-drunk fight trainer, and Luban himself as Gabby Sloan, a loquacious manager who ends up in a psychopathic ward, are other leading characters. Wilbur Austin, portrayed by Sgt. Thomas B. d'Antignac, is the gullible society blublood who buys up Sullivan's contract.

Helen Miller, as Mae Sullivan, plays the pretty little ingenue who delivers the final kayo to Speed, while Elsine Luban is cast as Anne Westley, Gabby's girl friend, who can find her way to any hock shop blindfolded.

Although "The Milky Way" was first produced on Broadway in 1936, a revival of the popular comedy made its bow in the Windsor Theater in New York just last Wednesday with famed comedian Joey Faye in the lead role of the milkman and Lila Lee and Helen Gillette in the supporting roles.

Congressman Baldwin Visits Fort Benning

Solon Fathers Bill Paying Extra Cash For Quick Victory

Congressman Joseph C. Baldwin of New York, author of the Second World War Veterans' Fund bill, concluded a two day visit to Fort Benning yesterday and left with the impression that "it's the greatest school in the world." He spent a portion of the morning witnessing an attack on a village. In his enthusiasm, the Congressman, who is a captain in the reserves, followed the troops and even hurdled a picket fence "for the first time in years."

He was the guest of Capt. Henry Lee Munson who is on the staff of General Leven C. Allen, Commandant of The Infantry School.

Speaking of his Veterans' Fund bill, which is, in effect, a bonus measure, Congressman Baldwin pointed out that it provides cash in the sum of $300 to $400 for every man and woman in service and in the merchant marine if the war ends next year. If the war is prolonged, the amount will be greater at the rate of $100 a year.

Its advantage, he said, was the fact the cash would be paid upon discharge when the soldier or sailor or marine needs it most—not two or three years later.

HOW IT WORKS

The bill works this way: The Government is to deposit $8.33 each month for everyone in military or merchant marine service, dating from December 7, 1941, when the war started, until the time the bill is passed. Those who have been inducted since Dec. 7, 1941, will have the amount allotted to them according to the number of months served.

From the date the bill is passed,

Nazis Can, Probably Will Bomb American Cities

Army Is Eager For Public To Know Facts Of Situation

By HENRY J. TAYLOR

By Special Permission

Eeprinted from "The American Mercury"

Large sections of the public may not believe that German bombers can or will attack us on the American mainland. But America's high army authorities are convinced that the Nazis will strike. What's more, many of them are eager that the American people should know this. The morale and strategic purposes of such a raid, they explain, can be defeated if the public understands what it is all about.

NEW YORK AND WASHINGTON

"Where will the enemy strike? "We look for them over Washington and New York," I was told, "although none of the large Eastern and Midwestern centers can be considered immune."

When? "Any time. They'll come over. Make no mistake about that!" Important air officers, top commanders, the men who must stop the enemy, gave me this blunt answer.

They urged the need for a better understanding by ordinary Americans of what such raids would aim to accomplish. That is why I have written this article. That is why THE AMERICAN MERCURY is cooperating to obtain the widest attention for it. Unless air raid wardens, nurses' aids, civilian defense workers and the people at large recognize the danger—not so much in the raid itself as in its effects on public opinion—the Nazis may succeed in attaining their primary objective.

NO PANIC NECESSARY

There is a feeling among our most important air staffs that when the enemy comes there may be loud and dangerous shouts of "Another Pearl Harbor!" There may be panic pressures to keep more air-planes at home. There may be a wave of apprehension. None of these things need be—and none of them will be if the facts are more widely known and understood in advance.

As one who has seen Nazi bombers attack from the Baltic to the Mediterranean, over London, Gibraltar, Egypt and the Middle East, I know that any frenzied shouts of "Pearl Harbor" would be unfair to the army and to the top officers involved. More important, it would be unfair to the American cause since it would play right into the enemy's hands.

VISITS LOCAL BASES

Recently I visited vital U. S. Army Air Corps Interceptor fields from Florida to New England. Previously, I had been abroad with many of the same American staff officers who now command these fields. We had been together during their training periods in England, and while they were taking our planes into action elsewhere. The settings on this side are different—no ack-ack fire every night, no blazing shafts of wandering searchlights, no quick commands for fighter squadrons to take to the air. But the men are the same.

I asked them how they could expect to do in the United States what is not done any place in the world; namely develop a shut-out against enemy attack. Their answers were specific enough. "We can't do it. And the Nazis, of course, know we can't. There simply is no way to stop a scattered air raid."

NO 100% INTERCEPTION

And that's the central fact which the public needs to know. It is impossible to mass enough interceptor planes and anti-aircraft batteries to keep off every Nazi attacker. To attempt to do that, all our fighting production would have to be retained at home, where the enemy would like to have us keep it, and even then bombs would fall.

The Nazis cannot attack in force and they cannot maintain sustained raids. Hitler's Luftwaffe at this stage cannot really hurt our war effort. While the amount of physical damage they could do would be trifling in relation to the total set-up, they would hope to work an immense amount of moral havoc in our midst.

NAZI BOMBS COULD . . .

Nazi bombs could start a great hue and cry among us about inefficiency, lack of preparedness and vulnerability. Nazi bombs could pin down here more of our war equipment and fighting men than are actually needed. That would add up to significant military achievements by the Nazi mission. If the raid succeeded in getting our public sufficiently excited and worried, Hitler and Goering and Goebbels would consider it worth the heavy investment.

Furthermore, the Nazis would thereby please the Japs by offering a friendly retaliation for our raids on Tokyo. As far as the German people are concerned, Nazi propaganda would have a wonderful dish to serve with headlines of "Washington burning! White House wrecked! New York a shambles!" This would be the Goebbels description of the first wisp of smoke, no matter how small. Now that Allied bombings are increasing over Germany, it would mean a lot to Hitler to print such exaggerations. It is inconceivable that the Nazi mind has overlooked the advantages of a raid, however costly and however limited in its physical effects, in terms of its psychological consequences inside Germany and inside the U. S. A.

HOW THEY CAN DO IT

Goering knows how to get planes here. When it is over, we are not likely to know exactly how it was done—any more than the Japs knew exactly how Doolittle and his boys managed the job.

A squadron can hop from Germany to the barren stretches of Labrador, let us say, with the greatest of ease. From such a hiding place it could come down along our seaboard, drop its load of explosives, and return. Such a trip is readily within the Nazi bomber range. Both the Graf Zeppelin and the Hindenburg in their day surveyed and charted the air currents around Labrador and the Germans had weather stations in the Far North continuously until expelled by American and Canadian forces.

Or miscellaneous planes can be catapulted at sea. The Nazis have done a lot of pioneer work with catapult devices. Germans experimented with this in Long Island harbor, using their catapult Friesenland and Schwabenland regularly off our shores, before the war began. Their new sea-raiding cruisers carry planes and aircraft carriers may also be sneaked out.

There may be other ways of doing it. The answer in army circles to queries about the how of it is simple. "Of course they can do it. Why not?"

PLANES DIFFUSED

We would, of course, be warned by highly scientific radio devices and by spotters. It is the Interceptor Command's task to meet attackers in the air. But when single planes are diffused over a wide area, no intercepting operation can meet them all. The few that get through would suffice for Goering's main purposes. As the sirens scream, the civilian defense forces spring into action, police cars screech down the street and searchlights stab the sky, as the ack-ack fire breaks out with a thundering roar and throws a barrage of high shrapnel, the people of the city under attack cannot know that only a few scattered enemy planes are overhead. The external excitement and action are as intense against a skeleton raid as against massed air might. Generally the planes are so high that nobody can see them anyhow.

ANTI-AIRCRAFT

Where does our anti-aircraft figure? Well, it discourages the enemy from the target, tends to keep him high and often drops him when he ventures within range. But it has to work in closest relation with the interceptor forces, for when defending planes are in the air the anti-aircraft must shut down or it will hit our own planes. This takes hair-trigger timing and the most intimate cooperation.

For obvious military reasons, armies withhold details of damages after any raid. Wisely, the censorship lid goes down tight on what the enemy has accomplished or failed to accomplish. Inevitably, therefore, the rumor factories start production. In all the confusion and drama and noise in our case heightened enormously by the novelty of the experience—the raid seems effective when it really may have been a dismal bust.

FOR GERMAN MORALE

From the enemy's standpoint it would be enough. Enough for exploitation at home to raise the sagging morale in Germany. Enough to stimulate protests and bickering in America. Enough to cause local and Congressional demands for more anti-aircraft and planes and other equipment to make every one of our myriad population and industrial areas invulnerable.

Our air defense officers are good, their interceptors and detection apparatus are good, their anti-aircraft is good. They are fully prepared, on the alert, and entirely able to repulse any concerted attack and to make it far too expensive for the Nazis to stage large scale raids. But they can't stop raids by scattered planes. It isn't possible and it isn't worth it.

The role of the public is to avoid hysteria.

Phenix USO Serves Soldiers

Free Breakfast; Club Lists Many Activities

Soldiers visiting in Phenix City have an opportunity to sleep late on Sunday morning, forget about making their beds, and enjoy a breakfast they help prepare themselves, Captain Richard T. Bergren, director of the Salvation Army USO in Phenix City, disclosed this week. Two hundred beds are available.

A nominal charge of 25 cents is made for the use of the clean sheets on Saturday night, but soldiers the next morning can have a shower, press their clothes and do their part in making their breakfast. Captain Bergren makes the coffee, Mrs. Bergren cooks the eggs, while one soldier is given the opportunity to cook the bacon and another the toast for the morning meal, the captain stated.

Each Thursday night the club holds an old-fashioned ice cream supper, with the soldiers freezing the ice cream. This is followed by singing.

At the Junior Chamber of Commerce Lakes last Saturday, 40 soldiers attended a picnic given by the U. S. O. Thirty-eight wedding ceremonies have been performed in the club "quiet room," including one wedding for a lieutenant whose affianced arrived from Chicago 15 minutes after midnight. Captain Bergren performs the ceremonies without charge.

Selectees leaving from Phenix City are given their lunch by the club before they leave the community, and also are led in songs. The Lions Club, the Civitans and the Junior Chamber of Commerce have their dinners at the club.

Jordan School Red Cross Unit Gives WAAC's Curtains

The day room of the 43rd WAAC Headquarters company is now adorned with 17 pair of new crepe tonne curtains thanks to members of Jordan Vocational High School chapter of the Junior Red Cross and the senior home economics class of the same school.

Wishing to help their sisters in service the school's Junior Red Cross chapter purchased material for the curtains, and students in the home economics class, under the guidance of Miss Louise Randall, completed them.

Captain Evelyn Rothrock, company commander in accepting the gift expressed her appreciation and thanks to all concerned for their interest in the unit.

Sgt. Howard, who composed the music after Pvt. Perna had written the lyrics, and Pvt. Perna have each been awarded a $25 War Bond by the Army Times which has published words and music to the song. They wrote the song as an adjunct to the Careless - Words - Cost - Lives and a S l i p-of-the-Lip - May - Sink-a-Ship campaign.

At the present time they are competing in a Tenth Armored Division contest to find a new division song. Their entry is entitled "We Are the Tigers." They have worked together on numerous favorite numbers around Fort Benning among which is "The Tenth Armored Tiger Song."

Sgt. Howard, who is leader of the Third Armored Regiment dance band, has many Fort Benning hits to his credit including "How Time Flys," "When I Look at You," "Where Have You Gone," "Cheer Up Brethren" and an arrangement of "Tenth Armored Herby."

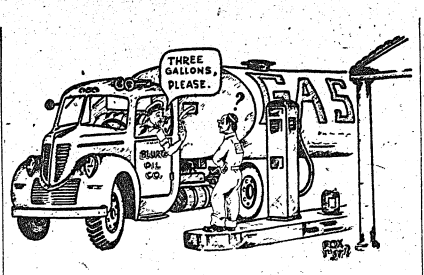
Before entering the Army some two years ago he was with the orchestra of Don Peebles which made a cross-country tour with Sally Rand. He was born in Lititz, Pa., and was inducted from Harrisburg, Pa.

Pvt. Perna hails from Detroit, Mich. A bandsman in civilian life, he began his lyric-writing career after entering the Army. He is 28 and Sgt. Howard is 26.

Their song, "I Ain't Talking" follows:

I AIN'T TALKING

If some body wants to know
"How's The Army, Mister Joe?"
I'm too wise to make replies
'Cause "I ain't talkin'."
If while walking down the street
Folks have questions when you meet
Don't be a dud; say "Listen Buddy!"
"I ain't talkin!"



I ain't talkin'—No siree
Can't tell secrets
If I'm in the know you see
It's a sacred vow with me.

Tell your pal or gal or wife,
If they want to save a life
Don't repeat, just be discreet
Say "I ain't talkin!"

If you want my policy
'Bout the things I hear and see
I don't blab, just stow the gab
'Cause "I ain't talkin!"
If while sitting in a bar
Strangers ask you how things are Say "Sorry Chum, I'm keeping mum"
'Cause "I ain't talkin!"

If you want a friendly tip,
Here's what you should do
Better button up your lip.
That is my advice to you.

Just don't broadcast any dope,
Tell the gang it's just "no soap"
Just be nice and say "no dice!"
'Cause "I Ain't Talkin."

Announcer Has Personal Grudge Against Rommel

Harold C. Hassell used to be a commercial radio announcer and it always burned him up when he was interrupted while extolling the excellence of soaps, cereals, eac, by news flashes concerning the doings of Rommel in North Africa. The war finally simmered down to the point where, to Hassel, it was a bitter, personal feud between Hassell and Rommel.

One day he felt he had endured enough and he shoved his microphone out of the way and went into camp at Fort Snelling, Minn., there to lay plans for suppressing this Rommel, who indirectly cut into his broadcasts.

Hassell, who comes from St. Paul, was at Fort Snelling for eight months and then came to Fort Benning as an officer candidate in the Ninth Company, Third Student Training Regiment, to effect an even closer meeting with his arch enemy. Meanwhile, the Americans and British in Africa did a pretty good job of taking care of Herr General Rommel but Hassell wants to help finish the whole business now and he has a map of the world in his pocket.

Many AAF Men Seek Commissions

Although too new to have established any academic or field records, the present class in the 11th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, which got underway May 26, has set an all-time high in the number of aspirants for commissions from the Army Air Forces.

Out of a class of 201, 110 came to Fodt Benning from Air Forces units, or approximately 55 per cent of the enrollment.

Virtually every branch of the service is represented in the class with infantrymen very much in the minority. Many of the candidates have seen foreign service and have come to Fort Benning directly from the various theaters of operation. There are several candidates with records of service in World War I.

Only the countries which can learn to serve will be worthy to survive.

That Extra Something!
...You can spot it every time

Gruelling work in high temperatures makes heavy demands on tank crews. Doubly welcome, therefore, is an occasional pause for frosty bottles of Coca-Cola.

EVEN a general in Africa writes home how much he misses meeting the gang downtown to enjoy a Coca-Cola. Overseas, Coke is a refreshing remembrance of home. Men cherish the very thought of its taste and refreshment.

The newspapers have been full of such incidents. Such as Bataan survivors getting hold of some fruit, eggs and Coca-Cola. Mighty welcome fare to them, they said.

These men, like yourself, have found in ice-cold Coca-Cola all the difference between something really refreshing and just something to drink. Being made the quality way, Coca-Cola has the extra something it takes to refresh and delight you. Yes, the only thing like Coca-Cola is Coca-Cola, itself.

Although war has changed and disrupted so many things in their lives, our fighting forces overseas are so often delighted to find in far-off places an old familiar friend . . . Coca-Cola . . . being bottled in Allied Nations all over the globe, just as it is at home.

Word that "the Coke's in" packs any canteen these days. Every good soldier wants the drink that adds energy to refreshment.

General Allen's Aide Pulled Draft Numbers

BY MARTHA BUMPAS

There was an expectant hush. All eyes were on the blind-folded figure of a man behind a crystal bowl. The figure held his hand high, with sleeve rolled up to show that he had nothing concealed.

Then as the crowd waited, breathless, Sgt. Robert W. Shackleton plunged his hand deep into the bowl containing the draft numbers of the first 21-year-old selective service men of 1941.

The honor of drawing the first number from the now historical goldfish bowl in Washington was accorded Sergeant Shackleton when Secretary Frank Knox felt that the capsule should be drawn by the highest ranking non-commissioned officer present..

Sergeant Shackleton, now Captain Shackleton and aide to Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, knew then that this would always be his most important public appearance . . . even if he were blindfolded!

But let's go back to pre-emergency days before we had selective service . . . to Philadelphia where Robert W. Shackleton, a native of the "city of brotherly love", made his first public appearance in 1935. There, he joined the Gilbert and Sullivan Savoy Opera Company (where Nelson Eddy got his start) and sang and acted the leads of all shows from "Pinafore" to "Iolanthe."

CAPT. ROBT. W. SHACKLETON

IN BEA LILLE SHOW

Jasper Deeter's Hedgerow Theatre was Bob's next stop. There, he studied Shakespearean drama and "long hair" acting, but he admits that he had to "unlearn" much of his technique acquired there when he came in contact with the fast-moving commercial theatrical crowd in New York.

Shortly after his arrival in New York, Shackleton's big chance came. When one of the leading members of the cast of Bea Lillie's show, "Set to Music" was called to London, Bob, who had a very small part in the show, was chosen to fill the vacancy. He and ten Powers' models were the only American members of the English cast.

Bob well remembers his audition before his favorite composer Jerome Kern. In the middle of his song (and he was requested positions), the composer pushed back his chair, went upstairs, and wandered all over the house. Though his heart sank into his to sing anything but Kern's comshoes as he heard the footsteps above him, Bob somehow managed to continue his singing, shouting the notes to the rafters in hopes that he could reach Kern in some way.

At the finish of the song, which seemed endless, he sank into the nearest chair, squirming, to await the verdict. Kern finally came into the room smiling. He explained to Bob that he had passed the "test" . . . by being fearful of every noise in the house and by retaining his poise in the most distracting circumstances possible. Bob was given a part in Kern's next production, and was chosen to sing the juvenile lead, introducing the song, "All the Things You Are" in Oscar Hammerstein's show "Very Warm for May" (with Eve Arden and Grace McDonald.).

From there he joined the cast of "Three After Three" and played opposite Mary Brien. Other leading members of the company were: Simone Simone, Mitzie Green, and Stephen Fetchit.

Between shows, one could find Bob "fluttering hearts" as he sang in the biggest night clubs in New York, on a sustaining NBC program, and modeling for Harry Connover. As a matter of fact, his pictures still may be found in magazines displaying the "Pepsodent Smile", endorsing "Vaseline Hair Tonic", etc. Although he doesn't smoke, Bob's first appearance on a signboard was posing for a cigarette advertisement. In 1938, he played with Dorothy Fox in the first musical comedy show on television.

The last New York stage fling came when he joined the company of "Keep Off the Grass" (with Jane Froman, Ilka Chase, Ray Bolger, and Jimmy Durante). After the show closed, Bob enlisted in the army and was sent to Fort Dix. There, he organized an orchestra made up of members of all the big name bands sent to Dix, and was given a full page write-up in PM Magazine.

Bob's love for music comes naturally, for his mother was once a professional singer. Although his talents are varied, his ambition is to sing on the concert stage and to work in musical comedy.

He was commissioned at Fort Benning in the first Officer's Candidate Class to graduate after Pearl Harbor was bombed. After serving as an intructor on the advanced machine gun committee, Captain Robert W. Shackleton was chosen to serve as aide-de-camp to Major General Leven C. Allen, Commandant of the Infantry School.

AR Streamlined For Simplification

Acting to streamline Army regulations, the War Department has approved a revision of these directives along functional lines, according to word received at post headquarters.

Instead of similar regulations being carried under different heads, the basic policies will be listed under one broad heading. For example, instead of details of allowances for enlisted men, warrant officers, and officers being outlined separately, all will be included in one general memorandum.

Only in the case of more or less permanent policies will the Army regulations be carried on the basic file. Additional details as to the manner of carrying out the policies, liable to frequent modifications, will be referred to field manuals and similar publications.

Present plans call for AR's being placed in one volume, with loose leaf pages. Under this system, "changes to regulations" will be abolished. When revisions occur, the page affected will be reprinted.

Captain Lamar Gains Majority

Captain Joseph R. Lamar, former executive officer of 2nd Battalion, 1st Student Training Regiment, was recently promoted to major, as announced by Colonel Robert Sharp, regimental commander.

Major Lamar, a native of Cazenovin, N. Y., is a graduate of St. John's University, Brooklyn, N. Y. From 1933 to 1941 he was connected with the CCC of 2nd Corps Area as Sub District Inspector, Adjutant and District Ass't-Executive Officer. In July of 1941 he relinquished his civilian status to active duty at Pine Camp, N. Y. August of the same year he was sent to The Infantry School to attend a course in heavy weapons.

Major Lamar was assigned to the 2nd Battalion as an administrative officer after completion of the special course in April of 1942. At present Major Lamar has been assigned to 3rd Company to attend an advanced officers course.

Soldiers Abuse Mail Privilege

Continued Violations May Bring Changes

Lt. Colonel Hartley B. Dean, chief of postal section, Headquarters, Fourth Service Command, striking at abuse of the free mailing privilege extended to servicemen, warned that continuation of this action may result in change of rules, according to word received at post headquarters.

The regulation provides that franking privileges shall be applicable only to personal mail, including post cards. However, soldiers and their families have time and again endeavored to send packages, announcement cards, and other mail in direct violation of the order, the colonel said.

He added that the sender's name, his grade, the designation of service to which he belongs, and the word "free" must be in the sender's own handwriting.

Although greeting cards are also acceptable free of postage, it was pointed out that the privilege does not apply to air mail, registered mail, insured or C. O. D. items, parcels or packages, newspapers, printed or mimeographed materials, and letters of officers clubs or other organizations.

Neither is it permissible that former business men use the privilege to carry on their business.

Former Benning CO Nominated Lieut. General

Major General Omar N. Bradley, 50 year old Missourian, who was stationed at Fort Benning as instructor and head of the Weapons Section of the Infantry School, and later commanding general of the post, and school commandant from February 1941, to February 1942, has been nominated for the rank of lieutenant-general.

It was General Bradley who led the Second Army Corps, composed of the 1st Armored Division, and the 1st, 9th, and 34th Infantry Divisions in their break through to Bizerte during the final phase of the Tunisian campaign.

A graduate of Command and General Staff School, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, Army War College, Washington, D. C., and a former instructor of mathematics and tactics at West Point, General Bradley is considered one of the outstanding infantry leaders.

He is a native of Clark, Missouri and a graduate of the 1915 West Point class.

300 Infantry Trio Get Silver Bars

Promotion of three officers to first lieutenant was recently revealed here by Col. Richard G. McKee, commanding officer of the 300th Infantry. Those promoted were Lt. Harvey A. Simpson, Executive Officer of Co. D., Robert P. Post, 2nd Bn. Motor Transport Officer and Lt. Edward W. Martin, Platoon Leader of Anti-Tank Company.

Lt. Simpson before his enlistment was a District Budget Supervisor for B. F. Goodrich Company. Lt. Post was engaged in Traffic Management and Lt. Martin worked as a general Insurance Agent.

Army Invites Soldiers Into Parachute Artillery

Airborne Command Launches All-Out Drive To Get GI Volunteers

To any G.I. who is possibly yearning for some thrill-packed days and nights, here's an invitation: Join the highly specialized artillerymen in the Airborne Command.

Lieut. General Lesley J. McNair, commanding general of the Army Ground Forces, has announced from his headquarters in Washington, D. C., that arrangements have been completed to receive and training an unlimited number of artillerymen in the tactics of the paratroops.

The Airborne Command, under the direction of Major General E. G. Chapman, has its headquarters at Camp Mackall, North Carolina. To qualify as paratroops, the artillerymen are first schooled at Fort Benning's famed Parachute School under the command of Brigadier General George P. Howell. There are training centers of the command at various camps and posts throughout the nation.

RIGID PREREQUISITES

Soldiers who have received basic training in Field Artillery are especially desirable for enrollment at this time provided they can meet these rigid physical requirements:

Applicants must volunteer for Paratroop duty.

They must be alert, active, supple, with firm muscles and sound limbs; capable of development into individual fighters of aggression, with great endurance.

Age limits—18 to 32, both inclusive;

Weight—Maximum, 185 pounds; Height—Maximum, not over six feet;

Vision—Distant vision uncorrected must be 20-40 in each eye, or better;

Feet, bone structure, nervous system, medical history, blood pressure, etc., must all be above the average.

The Paratroop Unit, contrary to popular belief, is not designed as a "glamour" outfit, but rather, it is meant to be a hard-fighting, tough group of men that must form spearheads for advances against objectives deep into enemy territory. Paratroop Units work in close cooperation with the other two Units, the Airborne Command—the Airborne Infantry and Artillery.

CHUTISTS' JOB

Paratroops launch their attack from the air by means of their chutes. When they reach the ground they are strictly Infantry and Artillery in maneuver and operation. Their job is to attack and destroy the enemy and hold the objective until the arrival of other Airborne Units which come in transport planes and gliders that must land to discharge their cargoes of men and material. Paratroop Artillerymen are able, by use of specially constructed parachutes, to bring heavy machine guns, mortars and disassembled light field and anti-aircraft pieces of artillery with them.

In addition to the basic and advanced training in Artillery, the Paratrooper learns the proper way to pack and handle his 'chute, how to ride a motorcycle, how to drive a truck, how to operate a tank and fire tank weapons, and how to run a locomotive. He is taught how to handle explosives and where to use them to do the enemy the greatest possible amount of harm. He is taught these things because they are the things he is expected to do when he goes into combat. Tactics in battle after the Paratrooper reaches the ground are basically the same as a man faces in regular artillery combat.

Advantages offered by the Paratroops are the ease of transportation in maneuvers and combat, the freedom from long and difficult movements on the ground, the excellent chances for advancement in grade in this new branch of the Army and the additional pay—fifty dollars a month extra, regardless of grade.

Artillery trained soldiers who wish to transfer to the Paratroops may do so by applying to their company first sergeant. He will aid in the filing of the application for transfer.

Fish Runs Obstacle Course In 95" To Set Record

Candidate James Fish, Seventh Company, Third Student Training Regiment, broke the record on the Second Battalion obstacle course recently when he covered the distance in 95 seconds. In setting this terrific pace, Candidate Fish was faced with additional obstacels of a blistery hot day and inevitable soreness of typhoid shots. Because of these unfavorable circumstances, the majority of men in the company found it difficult to qualify.

Candidate Fish is a graduate of Georgetown University, where he was a member of the track team for three years, serving as captain during his last year. In March 1942, Fish was the leadoff man on the Georgetown team which broke the world's record for the mile relay. The record had previously been held by the University of Pennsylvania and had stood since 1931.

Major Reed Is Lt. Colonel

The promotion of Major John Francis Reed, logistics instructor, to the rank of lieutenant colonel, is announced by the Infantry School.

He is a graduate of Union High school, Burgettstown, Penn., received the degree of B.A. at Penn State in 1929 and M.A. at Washington and Jefferson College in 1937. He also studied at New York University and the University of Pittsburgh.

At Penn State, he was a member of the ROTC and was commissioner in 1929. He was graduated from the National Guard Reserve Officers' advance course at Fort Benning in 1940. Recalled to duty as a captain in 1941, he was promoted to major in February, 1942. He served as a map reading instructor and secretary to the General Section before being assigned to his present position in the Infantry School.

Col. Reed is married and has an eight year old daughter, Elinor.

Serving as 1st Sergeant of the Anti-Tank Company, 101st Infantry, he was recommended for OCS, and gained his commission May 12, 1942. Since graduation from Officer Candidate School, Captain McCarthy has been serving as Battalion Supply Officer of the 2nd Battalion.

Captain Schilling, a graduate of St. Anselms College, Manchester, N. H., is also a graduate of Infantry OCS. At St. Anselms College he was prominent in many school activities, which included the college band and dramatic societies.

Captain Schilling entered the army at Fort Devens, Mass., and gained his commission through the ranks after attending the Infantry School OCS. Graduating in the spring of 1942 he has been on duty with 1st Regiment, and is at present company commander of the 24th Company.

Captain Craig Made Major

Promotion of Capt. Harry Marcus Craig of Columbia, Mis., commanding officer of the 14th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, to the rank of major, has been announced by Col. Robert H. Lord, regimental commander.

Before being called to active duty Sept. 22, 1941, Major Craig was engaged in the printing and binding business and was active in labor relations work. He won a reserve commission in the ROTC at the University of Missouri where he also played football and was a member of the wrestling team. In 1924 and 1925 he served in the CMTC at Des Moines, Ia.

Upon beginning active duty Major Craig was assigned to Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and in October, 1941, came to Fort Benning to enter the Infantry School's rifle and heavy weapons course which he completed the following January.

He served as platoon leader and as executive officer in two officer candidate companies before assuming command of the 14th Company July 15 last.

Intellectuals Grace Company E Roster, 300th Infantry

Something new in the line of recruits arrived at Company E of the 300th Inafntry recently. These are apparently picked men, for the group boasts of General Classification Marks exceeding 110 on the part of most of the men. The recruits, of all ages from 18 to 33 have recently completed basic training at Camp Robinson, Ark., and Camp Fannin, Tex., and some have had additional training in Non-Com and O. C. S. Prep schools.

At the present time the recruits are undergoing a refresher review of their basic training and have a fairly stiff schedule. Beginning with a period of strenuous calesthenics they go on to rifle marksmanship, map reading and all the other important subjects of an infantry soldier. It has been noted that they are especially expert at close order drill and have aroused considerable attention by the form and precision they display.

124 Infantry S-4 Appointed Major

Captain William B. Stinson, 124th Infantry S-4, was recently appointed major, according to an announcement by Colonel John D. Hill, Commanding Officer of the Gator Regiment.

As a member of the 124th Infantry for 18 years, the Major has held all enlisted ranks and received his commission as second lieutenant in 1937.

The Major, born in Yazoo City, Miss., attended high school at Tunica, Miss., and graduated from the University of Florida, where he received a B.A.E. degree. He played football for the Orange and Blue, it was his college days that gave him his football background, which he applied as assistant coach of the post champion 124th Infantry football eleven.

Major Stinson recently completed a course in an advance class of the Infantry School's battalion commander and staff officers school. In civilian life, he was principal of the Oneco Junior High school, Monatee county, Fla.

Remember that a year ago we were on the run. Six months ago we were standing our ground on the defensive. Today the tables are turned. We are on the offensive. We'll keep on that way. It is all in the grand strategic plan. It was worked out with our Allies and they and we know where we are going.—Lieut. Gen. Brehon D. Somervell.

We Want To Pay As We Go Too

Last week President Roosevelt signed the income tax bill passed by the Congress which placed most of the nation's millions of tax-payers on a pay-as-you-go system whereby they pay their indebtedness to the Government from month to month as they earn their money. Members of the armed forces of the country were left on the old system of paying which might be termed a "pray-as-you-go" basis, that it, pray that we have the intestinal fortitude to put money by with which to meet our debt to Uncle Sam at the end of each quarter.

The tax bill gives members of the armed forces an additional personal exemption of $1,500. However, come next March 15, we with other members of the select group exempted from the pay-as-you go plan, will pay the first quarter of the 1944 tax, plus the victory tax of 5 per cent, plus one-half of the first quarter installment due on the 1942 or 1943 tax, whichever is the larger. Income tax experts at Post Headquarters estimate that the tax for military personnel in the lower brackets will average 18 per cent plus three or five per cent victory tax which will amount to 21 or 23 per cent to be paid on taxable income.

Now our G. I. mind does not object in the least to paying the income tax. We feel that, since many of us still serving within the continental limits of the United States are receiving more pay than we enjoyed in civilian life, the high cost of living notwithstanding, we should pay an income tax. We are willing to give the Government any amount of our income it feels it needs to win this war and win it as quickly as possible. What we object to is the fact that we have not been placed on a pay-as-you-go basis.

The BAYONET has interviewed a cross-section of officers assigned to post headquarters and we believe they also represent a cross-section of all military personnel stationed at Fort Benning. Their concensus is that all military personnel subject to payment of income tax and victory tax should also be included in the pay-as-you-go plan.

In the first place we too are subject to the temptation of spending too much on non-essentials, and when the time comes to pay the tax, we may find ourselves scraping the bottom of the barrel in order to meet our obligations. One officer bluntly stated that he is afraid he will have to cash in some of his bonds in order to pay his debt to the government.

Several officers are of the opinion that it would be much better for the Government to reduce the amount of base pay and longevity to take care of the tax and let the remainder be tax-exempt.

Including the armed forces in the new system of tax collection would also eliminate a tremendous amount of paper work and reduce in a measure the huge book-keeping staff the Government as to maintain to keep the income tax straight.

Therefore the BAYONET casts one vote in favor of the pay-as-you-go plan for the Armed Forces.

To Dad On Father's Day, June 20, 1943

DEAR DAD:

It isn't often that I've taken time over the years to tell you how very much you have meant and always will mean to me; how very much I appreciate all you have done and the greatest gift of all which you have given me, your name. Somehow, I think that you know, because the bond between us has been more like that of two buddies as well as one between father and son. I knew that if I ever attempted to tell you of my love, manlike you would have been embarrassed, and told me to cut all the muss and bother. However, today, since it is the one day of the year that fathers get their due, I am going to try and tell you you what your love and sacrifice to rear me have meant to me, and how deep my gratitude and love really go.

Ever since I was able to notice things with my baby eyes, I had you pegged as a swell sport and a grand guy. When I was able to toddle around and talk a little, how you must have planned for the day when I would be able to go fishing and to ball games with you Then one day I was old enough and we did start going fishing and to ball games. You were a regular pal, treating me as another pal even though we were often in company with much older people. You never made me feel that because of my youth I might be considered out of my place. Sometimes when you would come home from a hard day's work and be told by mother that I had been cutting up during the day, I could tell that when you took me to the cellar for my walloping, it was hurting you every bit as much as myself. You didn't hit me very hard but I sure did holler and as I remember it, we sort of worked together on that score to let mother think that I was geting he pasting of my life. You were always ready to give me your last cent for movies and candy and ice cream, and don't think that I'll ever forget any of them.

Then one day not long ago, I was inducted into the Army. I've tried awfully hard to be the kind of guy you want me to be, and though I have made mistakes, I think I have had a certain amount of success. I have tried to keep the same cheerful disposition you always had, and which was one of the attributes which made you tops in my book. I've had a few furloughs since coming into service, and though I haven't spent too much time with you, in your understanding way, even without words you conveyed to me the impression that it was alright with you because you knew that I must spend most of my time with mother and Yvonne. I don't write letters individually to you often, but I know that you don't mind, as long as I am fine and working hard at my job. Today I am a good many miles from you and the family, but believe me, I will be as close to you in spirit as though I were actually there at the dinner table with you, and praying God that next year at this time we shall all be together again, not only on Father's Day, but Mother's Day, Christmas, Easter, birthdays, and all the other holidays and feast days throughout the year.

The bugle is blowing now for "Lights Out," so I'll have to close and hit the hay, but I'll be writing soon again. Happy Father's Day and Good Night, Dad.

Your Loving Son,

PAUL.

Private Scores Enlisted Men Out of Uniform

The ruling against the wearing of officer-style clothing by the enlisted man in flagrantly violated in and around Ft. Benning. That fact is obvious. And this misconduct on the part of the violators brings a slightly confusing spectacle before the eyes of the new-arrived EM, as well as visitors to the Post. It presents to the public eye, now pretty well familiar with military uniforms and insignia, soldiers who appear in public in freakish, "out of uniform" habiliments. This does not speak well for the Service, of which the personnel of Ft. Benning is a part. Therefore, enlisted men who persist in appearing "out of uniform" before the public should be subjected to disciplinary action.

The situation vitally concerns Private John Doe. It irritates him no end when he suddenly comes upon what at first glance appears to be an officer rating a salute; but turns out to be, under closer scrutiny, a buck private. This is especially inconvenient in twilight, and to the recruit who is not too familiar with the various military insignia and customs.

As a case in point, consider the private wearing an indistinguishing tropical helmet, or garrison cap, gabardine slacks and shirt with shoulder straps; or the same type of clothing with metal insignia flashing on a non-government-issue overseas cap!

The metal organization insignias worn on caps are bad enough, as many of them resemble officer's bars to a great extent, but when one begins to meet soldiers with the cap insignias, shoulder-strap shirts, gabardine slacks and all, it is time to call a halt. Therefore, we humbly plead that these other privates be made to appear on the street as true privates. For, if we have to spend a valuable minute inspecting every man in uniform we meet to determine whether or not to salute him, how can we give our needed attention to the girl friend by our side?

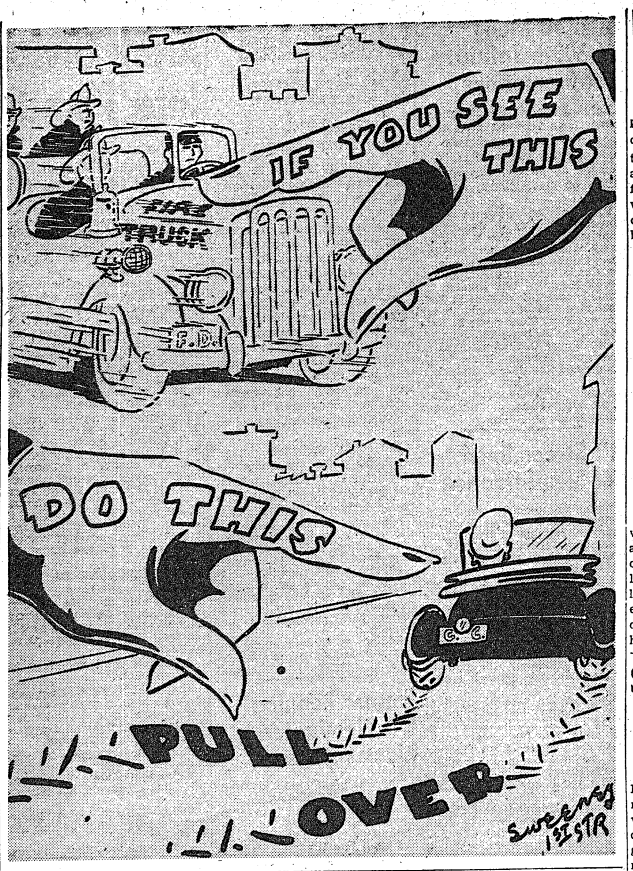
The Post's Water Supply Must Be Conserved



This is the time of the year when withering heat reaches this section of old Georgia and with it comes a terrible strain, not only on Benning's water supply, but also on the power needed to pump it.

Post headquarters officials are at this time calling the attention of all residents on the post that the water supply here is not without its limits, nor is the power it takes to circulate the water.

Post personnel should conserve water in every way possible by being sparing in its use, by reporting promptly leaking and dripping faucets in sinks, bathrooms, and by using water for irrigation only when and where it is necessary. Vehicle wash racks should be used in the same manner. With the approach of hot weather and possible scarcity of rain, it may become necessary to curtail or even probihit the use of these washs racks connected with the post water supply systems, it was said.

The war-time popularity of Victory Gardens about the post will, during dry weather, also add to the already heavy burden on the water supply Post authorities warn that no victory gardens or lawns are to be watered between 10 a. m. and 5 p. m. In addition to the fact that these are hours when households are using the greatest amount of water, watering gardens and lawns under a broiling sun will result in the vegetation being burned up. When lawns are watered after 5 p. m., the hose will not be turned on for more than three hours.

Furthermore, the practice of children using hose shower baths is strictly forbidden. This practice constitutes a great waste of water in as much as there are enough swimming pools on the reservation to cool off the kiddies. Post officials expect the fuel cooperation of all concerned.

HOW WE EXPECT TOO MUCH AND SUFFER BITTER DISAPPOINTMENT

BY CAPT. F. M. SCHILLING

We all agreed on that point, there were no two people both named Mihil Grabrinovitch. Stan Casey and Hank Forrelli swore that it was Mike's picture in the "Gazette"...one that he had taken just before we sailed across. The newspictures in our "local paper" were never too clear anyway...the cheap stock they used smudged easily. But there it was, the picture with Mike's name under it. The article said he was coming to town on the new reservoir survey project—some sort of check on the site and land lequisition. "Leave it to Mike to get one of those easy jobs," Stan Casey said, but Hank and I were two interested in reading the complete details to listen.

It was a long wait until the 2:30 local, but a few hours meant nothing now...the last of the Four Horsemen was returning Somehow we had managed to stick through it all together. Together? Where were we together last? Let me see...Forrelli said it was at Verdun. I guess he was right at that. The night of the last big drive, the push that threw the Jerries back. We cracked old Hindenburg's Line that time. Days and nights when we thought that there would be no end to all this—march—advance . . . Dig in—Advance, go ahead. It was here that we lost track of Mike and we never found out what happened. We worried terribly for awhile ...then forgot. Forgot until we remembered every once in awhile. Remembered that he pulled us out of the thick of fire at Chemin des Dames. He dragged Forrelli for two hundred yards the time the Bosch got Hank in the leg with a piece of shrapnel.

Good old Gabrinovitch. Home at last. Back to his place in the quartet. Back to the place that never had been filled. News for the first time of the lost sheep Funny thing...he never told us where he lived—or else we'd forgotten. But the waiting was all over. Mike would be here and the time would roll back to the yesterdays of twenty-odd years ago.

Hank and Stan and I had quite a time of it that afternoon. We fought and lived those days gone by over and over again. Fought at Chemin des Dames then on into the La Reine and Boucq sector. Beyond Chateau-Thierry and into the thick of it in the Marne offensive...Rupt, Tryon, then St Mihiel and Verdun. The time got far behind us—Hank was the first to notice the station clock. Two minutes left. Our reception committee of three was ready. Nervous and excited like kids headed for a Sunday school outing.

It wasn't until most of the passengers had disappeared that we finally spotted him. Just exactly the way he had looked when first we met him at the training camp. Something inside of us turned sick and disappointed. We had expected too much.

Funny things that we had forgotten...Mike said something once about having a son.

Chaplain's Corner...

WHAT IRRITATES YOU?
Chaplain F. M. Thompson

The American people are said to be very irritable. Col. Hugh Johnson would call it: "Ants in the pants."

Perhaps we have more cause than other folks to be that way. At least it is an evidence of life; a head of cabbage never gets excited.

Anyway, we are forever getting in a temper over the honking of auto horns, flat tires, stop signs, being late for meals, putting the cat out at night, radio ads, crooners, static, long speeches, funny things your children say, sand traps and Greta Garbo.

Then there are people who exasperate us for no reason whatsoever.

I do not love thee, Dr. Fell;
The reason why I can not tell;
But this I know, and know full well;
I do not love thee, Dr. Fell.

You would suppose, though if we must get all hot and bothered it would be over something worth while, not over trivialities, nonessentials.

You can not imagine Abraham Lincoln getting stirred up over a bridge game. He did become very outspoken over the question of slavery and the preservation of the Union.

It is impossible to think of Christ becoming incensed over a neighbor's dog, a line fence or social procedure. He did become mightily incensed when great moral issues were involved. So much so, that he characterized the religious leaders of the day, as hypocrites, whited sepulchres. And waxing warmer He fashioned a scourge and drove the money changers from the temple of worship.

Yes, there are times when we are disturbed. But is not this the measure of a man's bigness or littleness, his character or the lack of it—the things that irritate him.

This Day I Think of You

My Father, tried and true,
This day I think of you, each year this day,
As deep June throws her mantle, soft and green,
Over the hills we used to walk, we two.
Then you were young and tall and straight,
Your stride was swift, your eyes were eagle keen,
The days slipped by, so gradual the change,
I did not seem to know
That time had laid its hand upon your brow,
And one day you had gone beyond the hills,
Above the far horizon, dim and blue.
Blazing a trail I could no longer find.
Many a moon has waned and suns have set
Since I have walked without you, but voice
Comes often to me in the still dark hours,
Gently, like a benedictine prayer,
Bidding me face the perils of the day
Without a flinch or falter.
Sometimes as I wander far afield,
I feel your guiding hand upon my arm
And stars shine out before me in the dawn,
Leading me to some strange destiny . . .
The greening world may turn a thousand times,
But this has borne itself into my heart:
That mystery and romance never die,—
And one far day we'll walk again together
Beside some thunderous river in the hills,
Smoking our pipes in silence, as men do . . .
This day I think of you, each year this day.

THOUGHTS WHILE ON GUARD

Would I were with thee, dear tonite,
As I my lonely vigil keep;
The stars are out, with luster bright,
And half the world is lost in sleep.

I'd hold you fast within my arms,
And see that look within your eyes,
And each whispered word would sound,
Sweet as softest lullabies.

But fate decreed them not to be,
These reminiscent thoughts of mine;
But even thinking, dear, of thee,
Makes each lonely hour sublime.

Perhaps at last, a peace will come,
Upon this war-torn earth of ours;
And I'll be with you once again,
And gone will be these lonely hours.

CARELESS PEOPLE CONVERT SPOT OF BEAUTY INTO DEB RIS-LITTERED MENACE

The Officer's Club swimming pool is a popular place these hot days, the one cool spot is a sweltering world for many an officer and his family. Late afternoons finds every pool full of bobbing wet heads, with as many persons ccooling themselves under the beach umbrellas.

It's a pleasant place, indeed, until one starts considering what a mass of humanity can do when it's out to enjoy itself. Take a look at the crumpled paper cups and sandsandwich wrappers littering the place. Count the number of empty "coke" bottles left left carelessly about. Watch the flies making their journey from bits of discarded food to the lips of some infant slumbering under the shade of a tree.

Notice the number of persons who carefully avoid the showers and foot baths before going into one of the pools. Avoid that gum left lying on the sidewalk, the lighted cigaret butt carelessly tossed aside for unwary feet to tread on, the bits of broken glass half hidden in the grass.

Persons frequenting the Officer's Club pools should be above the average in intelligence. Surely most of them have at least the rudimentary ideas of sanitation. Surely most of them must realize that a sliver of glass or a lighted cigaret butt is a major hazard where persons, many of them children, walk about in their bare feet.

Even a crew of men working would be hard put to clean up the debris left by a bevy of happy bathers, unless persons using the pools don't learn to tidy things up as they go. It requires little exertion to put out paper cups and sandwich wrappings in receptacles provided for that purpose, or to take "coke" bottles back to the sand where they'll be no danger of breakage.

For many of us, as has been said, these pools are the only spot where we can find a moment for relaxation and surcease from summer heat. It is a shame that place of enjoyment shoul be changed into a hazardous unsanitary spot because of the thoughtlessness of a few.

WAACS TELLS COLONEL T. P. HOW WOMEN WON TUN ISIAN CAMPAIGN

By SGT. TOM McDONALD

Having worked with Colonel T. P. Swampwater for a good many months, I was not unduly surprised when he rushed into the office today with a strange, half hidden gleam in his eyes and shouted in my ear:

"Quick, sergeant! Clean up the office. Take your time and do a thorough job but be finished in two minutes!"

"Yes, Sir," I grumbled, "What's up?"

"A genuine Waac, sergeant!" beamed the ol' boy. "She's coming all the way from Harmony Church for a personal interview."

Trembling with anticipation, I swept up the three weeks collection of cigarette butts and chewing gum wrappers and hurriedly dumped them into the colonel's OUT basket. Meanwhile the ol' boy was combing his two strands of hair and using some G. I. foot powder on his nose. All of which in a small way tended to enhance his beauty.

When we finished, there was a very hasty knock on the door and both of us made a wild dash to answer it. Since the colonel outranked me, he managed to get there first and opened it.

Perched upon the threshold was as neat a soldier as I've ever seen. Her hair was combed, her uniform trim and shapely and the glint in her grey eyes a mischievous twinkle hovering between anticipation and trepidation, that is, fear of the colonel's eyes. Finally assuring herself that the ol' boy's eyes wouldn't peck at her, she saluted and spieled off the usual GI report:

"Auxilliary Drake has the permission of the first sergeant to report to the company commander who sent for me to tell me that you, er, I mean the colonel sent for a cute Waac to come over here to be interviewed. So I'm reporting."

'At Ease, Auxiliary Drake," the ol' boy replied. "Make yourself perfectly at home."

"Thank you, Sir," she said, taking out her lipstick and trying to improve an already perfect paint job.

"Auxiliary Drake," continued the colonel, not exactly sure of himself but nevertheless eager, "What do the Harmony Church Waac's think of the war?"

"The sooner we win it the better," she replied. "The Waac's are fighting diligently on all fronts and we feel confident of our success."

"Explain yourself, my dear," cooed the colonel.

"Well," she replied. "Remember how we ran the Germans out of North Africa. It was really very simple."

"Indeed," mused T. P., arching his brows. But there were only a few Waac's sent over."

"That's correct, Sir," our visitor continued. "Even then we had more than we needed. You see we sent over the very cutest auxilliaries, so there was really no chance of failure."

Being dumb, I interrupted.

"I would like to know more explicitly just how you Waac's won the North African campaign."

"Well, you see it was like this. The General just put a cute Waac about 300 yards in front of each regiment in a jeep and told the boys to follow her. Every once in a while she would yell 'yoo-hoo!' and turn and wave at 'em. Talk about covering ground; our doughboys nearly tore up the Sahara desert trying to catch up with them. A few Germans and Italians got i nthe way, but you know ians got in the way, but you know can come between an American soldier and a pretty girl and stay in the way long. Especially these Benning boys."

"Amazing, simply amazing," the ol' boy replied. Come into my private office and tell me how you plan to invade Europe. And, Sergeant, get that box of imported chewing gum out of the safe.

ARE GIVEN ACTOR S FOR THEIR MAGNIFICENT WA R CONTRIBUTION

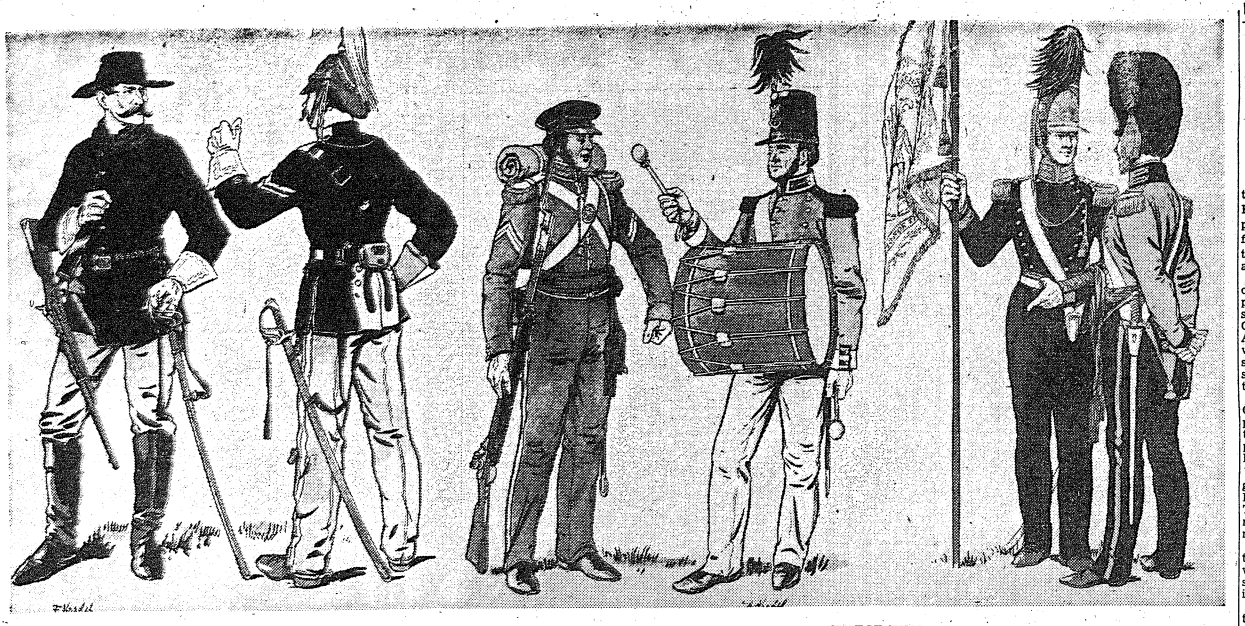
That the members of the motion picture and radio industry and the Actors' Guild are making a tremendous contribution to the war effort in a morale-building way we have never doubted, especially after witnessing their work here at Fort Benning and reading of their sacrifices in the daily press.

But the full force of the scope of their contribution was brought to our attention in the concise, succinct, but comprehensive film released recently by the "March of Time55 and shown last week in a down-town theater.

In this film fe saw Martha Raye in a chow line somewhere in North Africa, and blg mouth notwithstanding, fellas he was actually beautiful. We saw Al Jolson singing his famous "mammy" song for a multitude of our boys, God knows where; we saw Joe E. Brown going through his famous pantomime of a a big-league baseball pitcher somewhere in the South Pacific; we witnessed scenes at Hollywood's Stagedoor canteen showing men in uniform rubbing shoulder to shoulder with much stars at Marlene Dietrich and Olivia deHavilland; we saw other great stars of the screen cooking for the boys and doing KP duty; we saw Carole Landis, rendering a sigh for some boys in the South Pacific on the "Command Performance" rario show beamed only to Yanks on distant fighting fronts.

In addition we saw topnotch technicians of Hollywood at work passing on their knowledge to members of our Signal Corps to enable them to record perfectly on film a pictorial history of this war for posterity.

The Motion Picture industry and and the Stage Guild are indeed compiling a brilliant record in these trying days, a record of which all can indeed be proud Needless to say, we of the Armed Forces are proud of them.



There are also absentees who are are only absent-minded.

Distinctive U. S. Army Garb Evolved Since 1900

Until Turn of Century European Modes Dominated Uniform Styles

It is interesting to observe in the changes of modes in American military uniform throughout our history that we have been influenced by whatever European nation happened to be the dominant military power until the early part of this century when our present dress commenced to evolve. As we maintained but a very small standing army we depended largely in time of war upon the various state militias and these wre severally bedecked upon the models of European states taken over with minor alterations.

While certain state units in the early part of the last century regular army uniforms were obviously inspired by the Napoleonic originals which to this day remain copied the regalia of British in the dress uniforms of the West Point Cadets.

Just before the War Between the States the United States Army modified its uniform but once again chose a French prototype in the dress of Napoleon III's soldiery at that time the most conspicuous of the European armies. It this same period certain states adopted for their militia the French type of Zouave outfit with baggy red trousers, a blue jacket and tasseled red fez.

TEUTONS COME IN

After the defeat of the Second French Empire France took a second place to the New German Empire among the European nations and accordingly the armies of the world, including that of the United States', cut their coats to a new Teutonic fashion. Because no major wars took place during this periad Americans are not familiar with the spiked helmets and blue jackets of our military during this epoch. As a matter of fact it seems in retrospect the least prepossessing of any outfit in our military history.

It was only after the Spanish War of 1898 that the Federal Government began to standardize the uniforms of the various state militias, part of a coordinating movement which culminated in their being merged into the National Guard in 1916.

UTILITARIAN AGE

From that time until the present there has been a perceptible evolution or continuity in our uniforms, changes being relatively minor and calculated to make the clothing less stiff and more comfortable. Probably the two major changes are the abolition of breeches save in specialized branches and the substitution of the open V neck and lapels for the old upright collar.

Our present uniforms, however, are already obsolescent and within another few years will have become "period pieces" in keeping with the tendencies of a utilitarian age which cannot afford to concern itself with tradition and sentiment.

TIS Mess Sergeant Fought Villa and Japs

3rd Regiment's Lee Wounded In Battle Of The Coral Sea

From Pancho Villa and the Mexican border to the Battle of the Coral Sea is a long route which few Army men have traveled. But one member of this exclusive fraternity is Staff Sergeant Gust J. Lee, mess sergeant of the 22nd Company, Third Student Training Regiment.

And if he had his way, he'd do it all over again, taking a crack at a couple of battles that he missed. The sergeant is one of the fightingest men that ever lived, and for the moment he likes to think he merely is disguised as a mess sergeant.

Sergeant Lee's story goes back to 1914 and Jefferson Barracks, Mo., where he took his basic training. He was sent to the 24th Infantry, known pretty well over most of the world as the old "Two-Four". From that day on Sergeant Lee has sat down in one spot hardly long enough to blow his nose.

The 24th pulled out for the Philippines, where Sergeant Lee engaged in a little side-arm skirmishing with refractory Igorots and Moros; the 24th shot back to the states to have a word with Pancho Villa, who was raising "Old Ned" on the Mexican border.

"Now, there was a traveler," the sergeant will say. "We chased that no good up and down and around for months and never laid an eye on him."

Right at this time the first World War blew the lid off the world and, naturally, Sergeant Lee wanted some more action. He was sent to France with the 349th Field Artillery of the 92nd Division. He soon found himself in a good scrap at Verdun, was wounded and got three decorations. Then, when it was all over, he did what every American soldier promised his mother he would do—he saw Berlin.

"Seemed to me it was the only sensible thing to do," the sergeant observed. "Here we spend all that time trying to get to Berlin the hard way and after it was all over, half the Army never even had the curiosity to see what we were fighting for."

After the war, Sergeant Lee left Army life for a year, having, he explained, plenty of money. That disappeared, and Sergeant Lee reenlisted in the "old Two-Four". The regiment thereupon started a long tour of the country, even making a one-night stand at Fort Benning. "Then just a mud hole with one paced road," the sergeant recalled.

December 7, 1941, found him in Miami, Fla., for maneuvers. "They whipped me up to New York, shot me over to Frisco and had me on a boat for the Southwest Pacific before I knew what had happened," he said.

In the New Hebrides Islands at the time of the sergeant's arrival, conditions were in a rather sad state. The Army had hardly enough men on hand to fill up a shelter half and the Navy was not much better off. Sergeant Lee said there were dozens of valuable merchant ships all fitted with fine guns which nobody knew how to fire. And there were tons and tons of priceless cargoes requiring delivery.

"Doggoned if they didn't make me a sailor," the sergeant said. "As soon as I landed they put me on one of those new Liberty ships as a gunner. They were hard up for artillerymen, and I just happened along at the right time."

So the sergeant was off again, this time for the Solomons and all the other bitterly contested islands and Asiatic points of the Pacific war. Jealously nursing his deck gun like a baby, he banked away at anything that looked like a periscope.

"The best shot we had," he recalls, "was at a Jap sub down near the Antarctic Circle. We jumped it before it knew we were there and, man, we let everything on board fly at it. It was pretty bad for a while after that—we didn't know if he had hit it or not and we didn't know if they were going to hit us."

Gunners were scarce in the South Pacific, and Sergeant Lee was not allowed to wait while his ship was unloaded and reloaded. The Army flew him to his next ship, which was loaded and ready to sail. That is how he got mixed up in the Coral Sea battle.

At Auckland, New Zealand, the sergeant was put aboard a destroyer sailing for the New Hebrides, where he was to board a cargo ship to man the gunner's position. The destroyer was cruising quietly through the Coral Sea when suddenly it seemed everything broke loose. The destroyer had sailed into the midst of an American task force which at the moment was rather preoccupied with a battle with a Japanese fleet.

How the battle came out the sergeant didn't learn until several weeks later. A Jap bomb scored a direct hit on a ship only 300 yards away from the sergeant's destroyer and splinters caught the sailing soldier in the head and hip.

After hospitalization, the sergeant was transferred to Fort Benning and the mess hall of the Third Student Training Regiment's 22nd Company. His heart is not in the kitchen, though.

"I'm so sorry I'm away from that old "Two-Four" I don't know what to do," he mourns. "There's still a couple of good fights left in me yet."

That's the kind of statement that would be expected from a man who once had Gen. Lesley J. McNair as a company commander.

Model Plane-builder Does Ships To Avoid Nostalgia

Four-Mast Schooner Built By Station Hospital Patient

Dry docked on a park bench between two wards of the Station Hospital Cantonement area, is a perfectly scaled model of an old four master schooner for its hull to dry after a thorough sanding and painting.

Pvt. Elmer W. Roth, formerly of a troop carrier squadron is the proud builder and owner of this ship. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Roth of 5912 Cedonia Ave., Baltimore, Md., Pvt. Roth was educated in the public schools of Baltimore, taking a special course in the automotive trades to complete his education.

In 1940, Pvt. Roth went with the Glenn L. Martin Aircraft Company, Baltimore Md., as an electrician doing installations in planes. In October, 1942, he enlisted in the army and at the time of his illness was a mechanic specialist at Fort Benning.

Feeling the necessity of keeping his hands in good working order for the delicate precision work of plane maintenance, Pvt. Roth started work on model airplanes for his pastime. Planes seemed to make him homesick, so he switched to ships, and since being in the hospital has completed eight models which he has distributed to patients in the hospital.

Since these models require infinite patience and special skill in handling— the last one Pvt. Roth built having 250 separate pieces of balsa wood which has to be shaped, and carefully sanded — they serve two distinct purposes. Pvt. 3rd Reg't S-2 Named Major

Advancement of Capt. Jerome Gregg Taylor, intelligence officer of the Third Student Training Regiment, to the rank of major has been announced by Col. Robert H. Lord, regimental commander. Major Taylor has served as the regiment's intelligence officer since April, 1942.

A graduate of Davidson College, Davidson, N. C., and the University of Tennessee Law School, Major Taylor was admitted to the bar in 1939 and practiced law as an associate of Judge Sam J. McAllister in Chattanooga. He is a member of Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity.

On Dec. 22, 1940, Major Taylor, as a reserve officer, entered upon active army duty and came to Fort Benning with the 24th Infantry. While stationed here he was graduated from the Infantry School's rifle and heavy weapons course.

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

POTENTIAL KING of the fort's home run hitters this summer is Sam DiBlasi, flashy third baseman for the red hot 300th Infantry nine. Although he hasn't stepped way out in front of the pack as yet, the former Washington and Lee athlete did demonstrate his possibilities quite convincingly one night last week when he set a modern Gowdy Field record by slamming a pair of homers over the left field fence in consecutive innings.

The second round-tripper came with the cases clogged while the first one, with the bags empty, was a terrific clout that papeared to clear Wold Avenue before it hit the ground. Battin in the clean-up spot for the Triplets, DiBlasi has been hitting consistently all season, but critics think he has yet to hit his real stride—and when he does they think the Gowdy Field fences are going to take a real shellacking.

DiBlasi probably would have been holding down the hot corner for the Louisville Colonels in the American Association this season if Uncle Sam hadn't claimed him first. Louisville bought up his contract during the winter and he had already been ordered to report for spring training when the Army got priorities.

Last summer, the Triplet star had plenty of seasoning in the Piedmont League with Greensboro and the Middle Atlantic League with Canton. Early in the spring, DiBlasi was up for a try-out with the Boston Red Sox and gained a lot of experience playing third base next to the sensational Johnny Pesky at short-stop.

DiBlasi's biggest thrill during his stay with the gilt-edged Bostons was in having a locker right next to the inimitable Ted Williams. "The great hitter", DiBlasi says, "has about five pairs of shoes and two racks full of bats". Even though the Triplet third baseman doesn't have two racks full of bats, he's still doing a bang-up job in the No. 4 slot for the 300th which which is riding the crest of a neat 7-game win streak at the time of this writing.

A NEAT BIRDIE on the final hole by Col. Edward Noyes, probably the post's bet golfer at present, enabled he nad Frank Gross, pro at the Officer's Club course, to gain a 2-up win over Col. James Notestein and the famous Joe Kirkwood in an exhibition match over the week-end on the local course. Colonel Noyes, who is commanding offiver of the station hospital, shot the birdie 4 on the difficult par-5 eighteenth hole. Kirkwood made a special return trip to the post Saturday after his Thursday exhibition just to play the course and was delighted with it. Said he'd be back at the earliest opportunity for a return match.

STRANGEST STORY of the week concerns a $1,000 race that was staged (?) in Doughboy Stadium last Friday shrouded in much secrecy. Seems that a young paratroop officer, in a boastful mood, claimed he could spot any man one-fourth of the distance and beat him in a foot race. Furthermore, he was willing to wager 500 bucks on his prowess. Needless to say, the BOQ buddies covered the bet in no time at all, and the race was arranged—at 100 yards.

The lad chosen to run against the superman was a former Oregon runner who once ran the century in 9.9 seconds. Since this man had only to run 75 yards while the superman raced 100, experts anticipated a new world record by the superman. The course was measured off, officials secured and everything all set.

Finallly came the time for the race, and both men lined up with the Oregon sprinter 25 yards out in front. The gun cracked and the men were off. The Oregonian tore off his yardage to burst the tape miles in front of the superman who simply jogged down the track. Then, the latter calmly walked over to the stake-holder and proceeded to claim the thousand bucks. His contention? That he had only said he would RUN the race, not WIN it! In other words, just another version of the old gag. Needless to say the hue and cry was terrific and he never did get the money. Bet he's a popular lad right now, too!

BET THERE wasn't any more exciting baseball anywhere in the country this past week-end than at Gowdy Field in those four games that were played practically within 24 hours. The Paratrooper rally Satnite was truly unbelievable and just added fuel to the belief that the Germans and Japs are in for a helluva lacing when they get tangled up with some of Benning's never-say-die Skyjumpers. And the triple bill Sunday was just as terrific, with the 176's last-ditch rallly providing a perfect climax when they came from behind to nip the Brigade, 6-5. In the four games almost every kind of hit was produced, some of the most startling fielding gems ever seen in the park were perpetrated, players and managers were banned the umps, and there was never a dull moment. Yep, it was real big league stuff, and all for free, too.

SHORT SHOTS—Two of last year's title-winning coaches, Major Red Milton and Capt. Frank Shannon, are now taking the advanced course at the Infantry School. Milton guided the 124th Gators to the post grid crown, while Shannon was at the helm when the Profs won their 7th straight diamond crown last summed. . . . The three K's in the 300th batting order always give the press box announcers a workout. The 5th, 6th and 7th batsmen for the Triplets are Kunkel, Woivisto, and Kotowski. . . . Corp. Eddie Fogg in the 124th special service office runs golf tourneys for the Gators but naturally can't enter himself. However, he plays along just for a workout and in a recent trip, scored a 72 which would have won the price. . . Tom Gallivan, Student Training Brigade pitcher-outfielder, is a brother of Phil Gallivan who used to hurl for the Chicago White Sox. Tom himself was a great grid quarterback at Minnesota in the days of Pug Lund, Ed Widseth and Stan Kostka. . . . Michael Patrick Hogan, former Baltimore Oriole hurler now toiling for the Parachute School, is a robust Irisher who hails from New York City's Yorkville section, believe it or not. . . . Biggest attraction on the post right now is Russ Pool where they actually have to close the gates frequently to keep the crowds in the water from getting beyond control.

Panthers Take Early Lead In Service League

Win Twice In Openers; Face Tigers At Gowdy Field Tonight At 7

The baseball Panthers of the 3rd Regiment's Service Battalion stepped out to an early lead in the first week of play in the brand new Service League with a pair of triumphs over the Reception Center and the Academic Regiment Pacesetters.

Winning over the R.C. Orphans by a 6-5 count in a thriller at Gowdy Field last Thursday, the Panthers definitely established themselves as the team to beat in the first-half pennant chase. Tuesday night's results are not included at this writing.

MEET TIGERS

Tonight, the 3rd STR tossers will go after their third straight when they oppose the Post Detachment Tigers in a feature tilt, slated for 7:00 o'clock at Gowdy Field. Tonight, also, the Pacesetters will invade the Reception Center for a tilt with the Orphans.

The other two training regiment nines from the 1st and 2nd STR also got off to a good start in the opening games by gaining triumphs. The 1st Regiment Red Sox scored a 5-2 win over the Provisional Truck Blues, while the Commandos struck down the Provisional Reds by a 12-1 count.

Other openers saw the Post Detachment trounce the Pacesetters 18-2, and then lose its second outing to the Reception Center on Monday night by a 6-5 score in a thriller at the R.C. field.

HALL TO PITCH

Fans concede the Tigers a good chance to stop the Panthers when they meet tonight at Gowdy with Big Tom Hall, 6 foot, 6 inch giant, expected to toe the slab against the 3rd STR. Brummitt is the probable hurler for the invaders from Harmony Church.

A banner crowd, including the Reception Center's crack band, watched the official loop opener last Thursday at Gowdy Field, and the game lived up to all the advanced ballyhoo. The Panthers scored twice in the second to overcome an early Orphan lead and then stepped out in front, never to be headed.

3-RUN RALLY

Highlight of the game, however, was the three-run rally which the Reception Center flared up with in the ninth inning. For awhile, it looked like the Orphans might pull the game out of the fire, but they fell just one run short and went down to defeat.

Both teams accounted for eight hits apiece, with Bob Brummitt as the winning pitcher over Lefty Roy Welmaker, former member of the Homestead Grays and Philadelphia Stars. Against the Pacesetters on Monday night at Brigade Field, Brummitt turned in a one-hitter, the lone blow being an Academic Regiment homer in the ninth.

Red Sox Draw Baseball Talent

Colored Nine Composed Of Big League Names

The National Selective Service Act dealt a sharp blow to many Negro baseball leagues as it did to all organized baseball, but it enriched by leaps and bounds the pool of talent at Fort Benning.

The Red Sox of the Service Battalion of the First Student Training Regiment is a fine example. The team has talent from such clubs as the New York Yankees, Baltimore Elites, Black Eagles, Washington Elites, Nashtown Giants, Bronx Bears and Baltimore Giants.

Team manager, James E. Taylor, an outstanding player with much professional acclaim to his credit, gets results on the diamond by insisting on aggressive play.

First sacker Johnny Washington hails from the professional circuits, Catcher Wimbush, late of the Black Eagles, combines alertness with a fine throwing arm and lets no opponent steal second base on him. Moundsman Bullock, called from the Black Eagles, displays poise and confidence in his lightning-like slants.

Abe Johnson of the Nashtown Giants covers the territory around the "hot corner" like the dew covers Dixie. "Pee Wee" Haynesworth at the keystone shines in the star infield. Gardners King and Wheaton from the Bronx Bears and Bumry from the Baltimore Giants play grand ball in the outfield.

Other mound artists are Swann from Durham, N. C., and Southpaw Randolph from Newport News, Va.

Until August 10, 1943, any enlisted man on active duty may take out insurance, new or additional, without having to undergo a physical examination.

All commissioner officers are welcome at the Officers' R & R Club, the only exclusive officers' club in Columbus. "Good grub, too!"

300th Jumps Into 2nd Place In TIS League

Lefty Francis Hurls His Team To Eighth Straight Triumph

BY SGT. MILTON LUBAN

The 300th Infantry nine had all eyes focused upon it this week as it ran its winning streak to eight straight games while cracking the seven game streak of the 124th Gators in a beautiful 10-inning hurling duel between Fefty Francis of the 300th and Wilder and Christie of the 124th. The 300th finally won out, 3 to 2.

Francis gave up only four hits in the 10 innings and fanned 13. The win gave the Triplets sole possession of second place and put them in a position to threaten the lead of the Academic Regiment Profs who are still on top of the Infantry School League.

TWO GAMES BACK

The 300th team is now two games behind the Profs but is only one behind in the loss column. If the Triplets can continue their winning stretch, the Prof-300th game on July 2nd should be the pay-off game for the first-half championship.

Biggest upset of last week's play was the 6 to 5 victory of the 176th over the Student Training Brigade. Cooper, striking out 17 Brigadiers, gave up only six hits. But at that it took a three run rally in the ninth for the Spirits to win.

176TH ROLLING

The 176th kept rolling on Monday, winning an 11-inning game from the STR Rifles. Again the Spirits had to put on a ninth inning rally, scoring two runs to tie things up and throw the game into extra innings.

The same night at Harmony Church saw Joe Dickinson pitch a two hit shutout for the Academic Regiment, the Profs beating the 124th, 2 to 0, to mark up their 11th league victory.

MOORE STARS

In the one other league game last week the Profs walloped the STR Rifles, 10 to 5. Herb Moore had a field day at the plate, knocking in eight runs and hitting a home run with the bases full.

In one of the big games of the season the 300th clashed with the Student Training Brigade last night to settle the ownership of first least second place, but the game was played after the Bayonet had gone to press.

Hightlight of next week's schedule is Sunday's game between the rampaging 30th and the oncoming 176th. The game is the first of a double-header at Gowdy Field which also features a clash between the Student Training Brigade and the 124th Infantry. This latter game was pushed up from June 30th. Also on Sunday the Rifles take on the 764th Tanks at Gowdy Field at 7 o'clock.

PROFS PLAY

Tomorrow night the Profs and the 244th Field Artillery meet at Gowdy Field and the 300th and the Rifles face each other at Harmony Church.

On Monday it's the 176th against the 244th and on Wednesday the Brigade and the Rifles will fight it out. Both games are at Gowdy Field. All games with the 71st Engineers have been canceled.

Gator Winning Streak Halted

After running their win streak to 7 straight, with a 5 to 4 victory over the 764th Tank Battalion, Wednesday, June 9, at Harmony Church Field, the 124th Infantry Gators, went down to defeat at the hands of the 300th Infantry, 3 to 2, Sunday, June 13th, at Gowdy Field.

Their seventh win, with Taylor hurling, was won in a big third inning, when the Gators pushed over five runs on a pass, a single, a double, a triple and a home run by Vern Smith, the 124th catcher. Taylor's four hit pitching, blanked the Tankers for the last five innings to hold the one run margin.

Sunday, a chuking duel, between Wilder of the Gators and Francis of the 300th, kept the teams on an even keel until the tenth inning, when a base on balls issued to Di Blasi after two were out, followed by a stolen base and a long infield single by Kunkel drove in the winning run.

Sam Inoff, the Gator shortstop, collected two of the 124th's four hits, to continue his terrific hitting spree. "Lefty" Francis set 13

Academic Nine Blanks Gators In Record Time

Profs Win by 2-0 In Game Played In 75 Minutes

In one of the fastest played baseball games on record, the Academic Profs nipped the 124th Infantry Gators, 2 to 0, Monday, June 14, at Harmony Church Field.

Behind the four hit pitching of Dickinson, the Profs bucked 3 of their seven hits off Taylor in the 5th inning to romp over with two runs. Penno bingled to open the inning and went to third on Russo's single. Benny Zientara the Prof second baseman, broke up the game with his second extra base knock, a double to left, to send both runners home.

The Gators had one chance to score on Coach Shaffer's long triple to right center, but his mates let him die. Ankrom provided the fielding gem of the day, when he out-foxed Zientara at third and smothered the crafty keystone sacker into the dirt, for the putout. Benny had started home on a grounder to Ankrom, but changed his mind when Ankrom held the ball, the dodging and dashing between the two players ended in a duo, head long leap to the bag with Ankrom leading on top.

The teams started their play at 1850 and the final results were in the scorebook at 2005, one hour and 15 minutes playing time.

TPS Grabs Eight Runs With Two Out in 9th Against Rucker Nine

Win Tilt In 12th Frame By 12-11; Also Trip 137th Infantry Sunday

The Parachute School's miracle rally which produced eight runs in the last half of the ninth with two out on Saturday night at Gowdy Field enabled the skyjumpers to completely steal the show in a week of red hot baseball, unlike anything the post has seen in many a day.

Going into the final frame, TPS trailed Camp Rucker's crack 137th Infantry by an 11-3 count. The first two men were easy outs and then Mike Hogan, the pitcher, got a life on an infield error. Then it happened!

Bursting into flame with a volcanic eruption, seven straight TPS batsmen stepped to the platter and slashed out safe hits to every corner of the ball park. The eighth man drew a walk, and then Hogan come up again and slapped a line single to right that scored the tying run. Kissell finally flew out to retire the side and game went into extra innings.

WIN IN 12TH

After the miracle rally, both teams settled down into their stride again and it was not until the last half of the twelfth that the issue was finally settled by the unbeatable parachutists. Again with two out, Coyle drew a walk and promptly pilfered second. Then Ed Porterfield, stocky second sacker, socked a single to right and that was the ball game, 12-11.

The winning pitcher was Michael Patrick Hogan, a former Baltimore Oriole star, who replaced Pete Bardin on the hill at the start of the fourth and set the Ruckermen down with only five blows in the final eight innings.

Detrich went the entire route for the 137th and until the fatal ninth had been touched for only three safeties.

GREAT FIELDING

Pearson, Novak and Rush of the visitors produced three of the most beautiful fielding gems ever seen on the Gowdy loam, but it was all to no avail when the redoubtable troopers erupted in the ninth. In addition to his game-winning single, Porterfield also had another one-baser and a long double to garner the game's hitting honors.

The same clubs met again Sunday afternoon in the first tilt of a triple bill and the chutists practically repeated their performance of the night before when they scored seven runs in the fourth inning to come from behind and take the decision, 10-7, in a seven-inning fray.

TWO HOMERS

Haller and Porterfield were the big stars in the Sunday win when both of them parked home runs over the right field wall, each with runners aboard. Haller's clout came in the second inning to give TPS a temporary lead, while Porterfield's round-tripper was the climax of the big fourth inning.

Bucket Vaughn started on the hillock for TPS in the second game of the series, but developed a wild streak in the third and gave way to Bardin who was the winning pitcher. However, it was eventually Hogan who returned to hurl the final two innings and stomp out a potential Rucker uprising.

Bruiser Kinard, TPS catcher, and Haller, each poked out a trio of safeties to lead the victors at the plate. Danny Coyle, parachute center fielder, was the fielding star on the basis of a daring one-hand catch of a line drive near the scoreboard in the second frame.

TO MEET FOXES

TPS has been idle since the week-end, but will get back into action tomorrow night at Golden Par in Columbus when they battle the fast-moving Columbus Foxes, who tripped the Profs on Sunday by a 2-1 count. A return tilt between the chutists and Foxes will be waged next Tuesday at Gowdy Field starting at 8:00 o'clock.

Spirits Stage Wild Rallies For Two Wins

176th Gains 6-5 Triumphs In Tis League Battles

In two rip-roaring, slam-bang games, the 176th Infantry Spirits twice came from behind to defeat the Student Training Brigade by a score of 6-5 on Sunday night, and the Benning Rifles by the same score on Monday night.

The game with the Brigadiers was loaded with dynamite and fuel was added to the fire when "Sparky" Suchara the new Spirit catcher was ejected from the game along with Prendergast of the STB. Suchara was a thorn in the Brigadiers' side for the short time he was in the game. His peppery "on the ball" playing spread throughout the team and they played inspired ball.

Dragons Place Five Men on Loop All-Star Team as Play-Off With 774th T. D. Begins

Dream Nine Picked For Sand Hill And Cusseta Leagues

By CPL. CARROLL M. RINES

The Third Armored regiment's complete domination of play in the Tenth Armored division's Sand Hill ball loop this spring was echoed in the circuit's all-star team, released today by the Tiger special service office. The Dragons placed five men on the 16-man team selected by the circuit's coaches.

The same was far from true in the division's other diamond loop, the championship 774th T. D. battalion gaining only two places on the honorary Cusseta league club. Only two places went to the 455th Coast Artillery (anti-aircraft) battalion, which was undefeated in regular seasonal play but lost out in the title playoff, while the Maintenance and Supply battalion nines, which tied with the 774th for second honors in seasonal play, both gained three berths on the all-team.

All positions on the Cusseta league club went to men from first division clubs, while Joe Seber, sparkling south-paw hurling star of the 419th Armored Field Artillery battalion nine was the only member of a lower bracket team to gain a spot on the Sand Hill combine.

The balloting for positions was close in several instances, and in one case caused a shift in position. In the Cusseta league voting, Bill Murphy of the 774th and Reginald Schell of Supply battalion tied for third base. The Teedee hot corner guardian, being a slightly better defensive player, was given the third base post, with Schell, who tied with Pitcher Claude Shoemake of the Teedees for top loop batting honors, was transferred to the outfield. Chet Huber of Maintenance and Charlie McBride of the 455th both garnered several outfield votes but no other gardener received more than one, thus Schell's shift to the outfield robbed no one of a position.

The remainder of the Cusseta league infield has fancy fielding Ed Schroback of Maintenance battalion at first base, slugging Mike Medaglia of the 455th at second and classy Al Monchak of Supply battalion at short. Pfc. Joe DeChristopher of Maintenance battalion copped the catching job, while the 774th's Shoemake, rated by many as the loop's most valuable player, and big Bucky Buchanan, Supply speedballer, were the hurlers selected. Both are righthanders with plenty on the ball and both boast fine records, despite the fact that they hurled all the tough ones for their respective teams.

Third Armored regiment pastimers named on the Sand Hill all-team are First Sacker John Snyder, Second Baseman Walt Yonemuk, Shortstop Hal Garbrick, Outfielder Luther Smith and Pitcher Ralph Brett.

Third Baseman Bill Maddox of the First battalion, 54th Armored Infantry regiment garnered the remaining infield post. Division batting champion Ora Hearn of the 11th Armored regiment, only officer on either team, and the 420th Armored Field Artillery battalion's Al Glancy were almost unanimous choices for the other two outfield berths. Pete Osborne of the First battalion 54th AIR copped the Sand Hill catching position, while Seber of the 419th was virtually a unanimous choice for the No. 1 hurling job.

The all-teams:

Air Paraparade Series Started

513ers' First Radio Show Pronounced Success

With a large audience singing "This Is the Army, Mr. Jones," the 513th Parachute Infantry introduced their first of a series of broadcasts called "Parachutists On Parade." The broadcast was staged and directed Sunday from the main ballroom of the U. S. O. Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. in Columbus.

Judging from the number of very attractive WAAC's, pretty civilians, soldiers and sailors, it certainly might be termed a parade. Colonel Albert H. Dickerson, commanding officer of the 513th, gave a short talk on the work-a-day life of a parachutist after qualifying as a jumper.

A quartet of trained-voices led the singing with that famous old parachutist's song "Blood Upon the Risers." Following this more music was added to the program by the splashy fingers of the afternoon's guest entertainer, Gordon "88" Anderson from the Infantry School's First Student Training Regiment. Eighty-eight, a former pianist for Tommy Dorsey, gave out with endless hot licks on the ivories. Eighty-eight is one of the First Student Training Regiment's more famous musical composers. Several of his sentimental songs have been published.

Corporal Nelke of the 513th started the audience by suddenly appearing before them in a jump suit all set to make the leap and reading a beautiful letter of his own composition dedicated to his "Mom and Pop."

The program was announced and directed by Lieutenant Dick Daly of the 513th.

trailing 5-3, Bill Lohr the first batter walked. Pat Cooper also walked, putting men on first and second. "Lefty" Wissman went in as pinch-hitter for Cortazzo and he, too, drew a walk loading the bases. The stands went wild. They stamped their feet and jumped with joy. Gallivan, the STB pitcher, was taken out and Carlson went in for him.

The next man up singled, scoring Lohr. Lukovitch walked forcing in Cooper and tying up the ball game. Then with two out "Whitey" Deliman singled, bringing in the winning run on Poland's shoulders. Pat Cooper struck out 17 men in the nine innings he pitched allowing only five hits.

The first night, Monday, against the Benning Rifles the Spirits tied up the ball game in the ninth inning and won it in the eleventh. Schultz started as pitcher and fanned 9, and Wissman, coming in in the 8th, struck out 11.

All tied up at 5 and 5, the Spirits won the game when Compton, who earlier in the game had hit a home run, singled. Bill Lohr the next man up hit a terrific triple to score Compton and win the ball game, with the stands going wild. L. C. Richardson had 4 for 6 to play a big part in the victory.

"We have sought to make available to you the best teaching facilities of any military establishment anywhere. We have sought to have you know and understand our Infantry weapons and their use, and our conception of tactical principles. We have done these things in order that you might go from here to inspire and lead others of your countrymen who wish to be active in the fight for freedom.

"There will come a day when the world will again be at peace, and when all nations will live in dignity and self-reliance. I know that your country and mine will be co-workers, standing shoulder to shoulder, creating everlasting understanding and good will and decency among peoples of the earth. We want to feel that our opportunity to work with you here at the school has been another strong link forged in the chain of friendship and trust, and that we have in some measure helped to fan a spark which must glow in the heart of every Frenchman.

"Good luck to each of you.

Instruction—

how to swim silently as in the case of escaping in the presence of the enemy, how to duck under water to escape machine gun fire, how to rescue an injured comrade, and how to use an ordinary bucket as a float.

The Red Cross is sponsoring this wholesale instruction since Army records have revealed that only 10 per cent of the men in the modern Army are qualified to save themselves in disasters at sea and that only 45 per cent are moderately good swimmers.

Monday morning's instruction is expected to begin with a demonstration of the various modes of swimming, how to breathe properly in water and how to swim with one arm and one leg in case of injury to the other member.

INFLATED SHIRT

One of the most interesting stunts that will be taught is that of blowing in the front of the shirt to inflate the back of the garment, thus making it a float. The men will also learn how to use the rescue skills, the wrist carry, the collar or blouse carry, and the tired swimmer carry.

The over-all effect of the two-week training program at the local pool is expected to be the means for saving the lives of hundreds of men in the event of the sinking of ships that carry large troop concentrations.

3rd Armored Meets Tank Destroyers At Gowdy Today

Champions of the Sand Hill and Cusseta Leagues, respectively, the 3rd Armored Regiment and 774th T. D. Battalion nines are currently battling for the 10th Armored Division's 1943 diamond diadem.

The title series, a best-two-out-of-three-game affair, opened Wednesday afternoon at Sand Hill's Tiger Field. The second game will be played at 2 p. m. today at Gowdy Field while the third, if necessary, will be contested at 2 p. m. Friday at Tiger Field.

The 3rd AR Dragons, undefeated in loop play, entered the series as a slight favorite. The Sand Hill titlists, coached by Lt. Bray and Cpl. Bill Early, boast plenty of punch and a strong defense, but are a bit short on mound talent, with Cpl. Ralph Brett the only first line chucker on hand.

The 774th, surprise victor in the Cusseta circuit's round robin title playoff, boasts two of the finest pitchers in the Tiger division, in Pfc. Claude Shoemake and Hurley Martin. Shoemake, loop batting champion, rates as the division's No. 1 tosser while Martin boasted a record of five wins, no losses and 32 consecutive scoreless innings pitched going into the current series.

The school library will also make its facilities available, remaining open from 11:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., daily.

Congressman—

the government will continue to allot $8.33 a month to privates and ordinary seamen and to those of relative grades in other branches of service. Those above that grade will have five per cent of their monthly wage deducted and the government will make up the difference between the amount of the duction and the $8.33. The bill also applies to officers.

The individual amount of the fund is roughly $100 for each year of service, regardless of rank.

DRAWS INTEREST

Upon a soldier's discharge, he can withdraw his allottment in cash, or, if remaining in civil service, transfer it to Civil Service Retirement fund or can let it remain in the Veterans' Fund, adding to it if he choses. The fund will draw four per cent compounded interest.

By leaving his money in the fund and adding to it, the soldier will, in effect, be maintaining a savings account drawing the four per cent compound interest.

World War I bonus cost the government four billion dollars. Congressman Baldwin estimated the Veterans' Fund will cost the government three billion unless the war goes beyond 1944.

Rehearsals Slated For Colored Show

Rehearsals will be staged during the coming week for the all-soldier show, "Swing Benning Swing" with all-colored talent which will be staged Friday evening, June 25, at Doughboy Stadium.

Several acts will be presented, together with several new musical numbers written especially for the show. There will be music by the Reception Center orchestra and chorus and comedy acts as well as the music.

The show is being put together under direction of Corp. E. B. Sturmer of the Special Service Office, with the various special service offices of units all over the post co-operating in securing talent.

The word "caisson" is derived from the French and means virtually the same as "case" in English. Its specific military use signifies those ammunition chest on wheels which were part of horse drawn artillery.

Med Detachment Men Enjoy Open Air Song Festival

Members of the Medical Detachment, Station Hospital, enjoyed outdoor religious service and community singing last Sunday evening in the detachment area.

The group heard a short talk by Chaplain Proctor and then was led in group singing of a repertoire of old-time songs which, amplified by the detachment public address system, brought melody and good cheer to the far reaches of the hospital relaxation grounds.

The outdoor services will be continued through the summer months.

300th Infantry Has New Open Air Beer Garden

The 300th Infantry recently opened its new and attractive Beer Garden in a grove of trees on the edge of the regimental area. Although only operating for a short time it has already proved immensely popular and is a favorite rendezvous for thirsty and hot 300th men these sultry nights.

At an attractive counter operated by the PX the men buy their military beer, repair in groups to large tables spaced around the garden, rehash the day's activities and endeavor to decide just when this war will end.

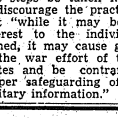
Electric lights strung from tree to tree give the Garden a carnival appearance and the white picket fence enclosing the whole sets it off from its strictly military surroundings.

On Tuesday and Thursday nights a combination five piece orchestra selected from the main 300th Infantry dance band supplies melodious entertainment. On a hot summer night the boys of the 300th agree there is no better place than the regimental Beer Garden.

Second Lieutenant John D. Daggett, assistant special service officer in charge of Service club 2 in Sand Hill area, has been promoted to first lieutenant, according to an announcement at post headquarters. A reserve officer, Lt. Daggett was called to active duty in May, 1942 and immediately assigned to Benning. He is a graduate of Louisiana State University and a native of Baton Rouge, La.

W. D. Scores 'News Letter'

Practice Dangerous To Nation's Welfare



The practice of soldiers engaging in "round robin" or "news—letters" sponsored by numerous companies, organizations and clubs among their former employees is to be discouraged, according to a War Department memorandum reaching post headquarters this week.

The plan followed is for an organization to send a letter to an individual soldier who adds his letter to it and forwards it to another soldier named on a list attached to the original communication.

The War Department objects to the practice because like a snowball, the letters gather information as they circulate and in this wise much data of value to the enemy is unwittingly included, inasmuch as the letter finally winds up overseas conveniently bound in one volume treating a variety of military subjects.

Letters which have been brought to the attention of the War Department have outlined technicalities of training of many units, specific duties of individuals, future movements, exact locations of individuals, and units, and discussed our own and enemy weapons from a technical standpoint.

The War Department requests that steps be taken immediately to discourage the practice stating that "while it may be of great interest to the individual concerned, it may cause great harm to the war effort of the United States and be contrary to the proper safeguarding of classified military information."

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

In past years many have thought of colognes and sweet smelling things being exclusively one of the delights of women down to it, what man doesn't like down to it, what man doesn't like a bit of glamour. After-shave lotions with a brisk, mannish scent and cologne to match are just two of the touches to make the daily task of shaving less of a "task" and more of a pleasure. Especially appropriate to give the men in your family on Father's Day are the Gourielli, Sportsman, Seaforth, Courtley, Early American and Yardley gift kits. Prices range from very low to the "luxury" class. One rather elaborate and attractively packaged set of powder, after-shave, cologne and shaving bowl is made by the house of Courtley. This particular set is available in green, tan, maroon, black or white pottery-like containers. A reasonable, but thoughtful gift for any Father might be a bright red and white Early American Old Spice tube of shaving cream. The Sportsman line includes an unusual gift package of nicely bottled cologne and shaving soap contained in a decoy duck. The exclusive Gourielli packages contain talcum, after-shave lotion and an imported Old English Soap Bar and the shaving soap. Any of these suggestions of the J. A. KIRVEN CO. should appeal to any and all Dads who like a bit of spice and sweet with their daily grooming.

One of the coolest type dresses for summer wear is one made of bemberg sheer. This material is extremely light weight with just enough body to hold shape well. The colors are all those in the rainbow and then some. If you plan to look cool and be cool this summer make your choice of a bemberg sheer frock or suit at KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC. Whether you want a simple or rather elaborate, you'll like the lines of all these dresses. Exquisitely painstaking workmanship is evident in not only the main seams, but the tricky seams like the side-opening around the armholes and the neck f-a-c-i-n-g-. The trimming, whether it be a bit of grosgrain binding or a series of intricate pin tucks, is perfectly made. The hems are not skimpy and any pleats are surprisingly wide. If you'd like to appear exquisitely cool and lovely and fashionable too, visit Kayser-Lilienthal's and try on their bemberg sheer creations.

Table tennis sets and military games of strategy are just a few of the games included in this delightful corner for children of all ages.

Army Chaplains Prove Miracle Age Not Gone

Spiritual Leader's Duties Have Multiplied Since The First World War

Whoever said that the age of miracles is past reckoned without our army chaplains to whom the performing of one is as routine a matter as the extraction of rabbits from a hat by a vaudeville magician. If your wife is in confinement, your sister is in jail or you are in the dog house trot yourself to the chaplain. He is the army's trouble shooter.

Chaplain Frederick Helfer of the 1st Student Training Regiment is no stranger to G. I. woes. Immediately after his ordination in 1917 at the age of 23 he joined the United States Army and was assigned to the 326th Infantry, which was part of the 82nd Division, and went overseas with that outfit.

Contrasting conditions which obtained in the army during the last war and the present conflict Chaplain Helfer observes that in the forces of 1917-18 much less consideration was accorded the personal and spiritual problems of soldiers than at present. The authorities attitude was that the chaplains' function began and ended with the administering of religious rites and consolation. No such powers for cutting through red tape as they now possess belonged to them.

At the present time, on the other hand, Lieut. Helfer points out that the officers recognize the value of the chaplain's office as a liaison agency in handling innumerable cases which would be very difficult of solution otherwise and, says he, the cooperation of all authorities willingly given is a happy phenomenon peculiar to our present day army.

Since his return to service in July 1942 Lieutenant Helfer has been with the First Student Training Regiment. For about two months he was chaplain for the Fourth Battalion until in mid-October he became regimental chaplain and has been such ever since. The interim between his two terms of military service were spent as pastor of the Hiram College Christian church situated about 35 miles from Cleveland, Ohio.

Taking issue with those pessimists who condemn the "moral bankruptcy" of our age Chaplain Helfer believes that such dour prophets are unable to distinguish between issues of morals and manners. The young men of today, he has found, are much more honest with themselves and others than their prototypes of other generations. They are less inclined to "kid themselves along," but see their own faults and try to correct them.

One rather surprising circumstance the lieutenant has noticed is that in his experience marriages by soldiers appear to be more numerous in this war than the last. This despite the preaching in the press against "war marriages." However, says Chaplain Helfer, these marriages are not predominantly hasty or frivolous and seemed destined to be permanent and happy unions.

These marriages, he believes, are all of a piece with the difference in the attitude we have toward this war in contrast with that of our predecessors in 1917. That struggle was commonly regarded as a tiresome nuisance which must and could be cleared up with neatness and despatch so we might resume as soon as possible the normal tempo of our lives. Today there is a keener appreciation of the fundamental issues involved and the seriousness of the undertaking. Men do not think that they are soon going to be back in civilian clothes living normal lives and they feel that such happiness as marriage stands for cannot safely be postponed but must be taken while it may in adverse circumstances.

Besides administering to his regiment, Chaplain Helfer communicates regularly with the men from his parish at home who have joined the armed forces. He acts as a clearance agency for news of their activities, receiving from and writing letters to all continents on earth.

He has always liked dealing with men, preferring in civilian life to reach them directly and not through the medium of their womenfolk and it is gratifying to see how, of their own volition and with a minimum of urging, men in the service tend to their religious duties. The lieutenant is certain that the status given the clergy by the United States Army will work a salutary effect on social conditions in the post-war world as it has brought home to the average man how valuable a service the clergyman can render to the individual in the problems life presents.

Aiding Lieutenant Helfer in his many functions are Corporal Wade Letts of the First Student Training Regiment, Corporal Bertha M. Godby of the 43rd WAAC and Pfc. Omie Ross of the Service Battalion attached to the First Student Training Regiment These aides assist the chaplain by visiting the patients in hospitals, aiding in chapel services, etc. Private Ross, who was formerly a Baptist minister, conducts a Bible class for the colored members of the Service Battalion and is organizing a singing group among the men.

Sergeant Makes.. Possible With M-1 On 1000' Range

Demonstrating for a class of officer candidates, Tech. Sgt. Joseph the "Mad Minute" 1,000-inch C. Johnson of the Academic Regiment last week made a possible 32 out of 32 with the M-1 rifle on the "Mad Minute" 1,000-inch range, with all shots hitting dead center and chewing the nickel-sized bulls-eye to bits.

Sergeant Johnson, despite this spectacular shooting, has perhaps a more remarkable record to his credit, inasmuch as a short time ago on McAndrew range, he made a score of 316 out of a possible 340. At the present time Sergeant Johnson's record with the M-1 is unequalled except by Master Sergeant "Mad Minute" Oddis L. Lowe, who has not fired for record for some time.

A native of Milan, Tenn., the sergeant has spent six years in the Army, three of them with the 29th Infantry and three with the Infantry School. At present he is an assistant instructor and enlisted chief with the M-1 Rifle Group, and has 11 other men under him.

In addition to skill with the M-1, Sergeant Johnson also is an expert with the Thompson submachine gun, the Springfield, the .45 pistol and the Browning Automatic rifle.

From Athens, Greece via air, to an Italian city, then via train to Lisbon, Portugal, then on board a Swedish liner for America is some of the travelling Diane Paski did to get back to her native country. Her mother is still in Greece, but Diane being an American citizen was forced to leave her ill mother after the Nazis invaded Greece.

Diane can tell you about nursing German wounded, buying food on a "black market" and seeing people starve in the streets of the city of Athens. This was part of her life in Nazi-occupied Greece before she was forced to leave.

There are many miles between the transportation division at Fort Benning where Diane is now employed and Athens, Greece, but with the help of friends, Diane has covered those miles.

With 17 other native Americans, Diane landed in New York and later came to Valdosta to school. Friends have played an important part in Diane's present security and opportunity and in her plans for the completion of her education.

"I love the South", Diane said. "It is so like my Greece. Everyone seems to take life so easy and be so friendly."

Winifred Baker at Service Club No. 2, 10th Armored Division, has "done it again" with a beautiful June prom for her boys. The service club represented a rose garden in full bloom with white trellises covered with trailing red roses. A feature of the dance was the June Walk. Each of the Military Maids was presented a special gift from her escort of the evening. The music by the Third Armored Regiment band was an added attraction.

Do soldiers in offices on the Fort Benning reservation offer a challenge to civilians—both male and female—in their personal appearance these long, hot summer days?

Definitely yes, they do. The soldier in his "little-boy-scrubbed-shiney face—his sparkle, his white teeth, his clean hands and nails, those highly polished shoes, clean clothes—even though they may be wrinkled and damp from the heat—and his hair—what there is of it—well cared for—at least as well cared for as one inch hair can be—is just that—a challenge!

Donnie Grimes, son of Cecil Grimes of the PX, who worked for the PX grocery, come out the loser Saturday when he tried to conserve his shoes from getting soaked in the rain.

Delivering groceries in the downpour he decided to get barefooted and save his shoes from the weather. Struggling with a large basket of groceries in one hand, and a carton of drinks in the other, a door slammed on the dampened carton of drinks causing them to drop to the ground. One bottle exploded and sent a piece of flying glass into the side of his foot.

At the hospital it was necessary to take 11 stitches in the foot but nothing daunts Donnie. He's back at work today.

Capt. Lieben Wins Golfing Honors

Captain Theodore J. Lieben is the new champion of the Second Company, First Student Training Regiment golfers. In a hard fought match recently he defeated Col. Raymond C. Barlow in the finals of the tournament sponsored by the Recreation and Exercise Committee of the Second Company, 2 and 1.

Although the finals were interrupted by rain and several night problems that were scheduled for last week, the match was hard fought and resulted in a real victory for Capt. Lieben.

Captain Kirk and Major Rydalch are fighting it out for the consolation prize, and were stopped by rain several times, as was the tennis tournament which managed to get into the second round.

Jones Quartet Enters O. C. S.

Men Come From Four Corners Of Globe; All Are In 9th Co., 2nd STR

Meet the four Jones boys from four corners of the United States, who recently arrived as officer candidates in the 9th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment.

Reading from here to there, they are: Charles E. Jones, of New Bedford, Mass.; Haven E. Jones, nicknamed "High Explosive," who hails from Blissfield, Mich.; Jack L. Jones, of Los Angeles, Calif.; and Robert V. Jones, of Shreveport, La.

The quartet also came from four different branches of the Army: the Field Artillery, the Medical Corps, the Air Corps, and the Infantry.

C. E. OF THE ARTILLERY

As for C. E. Jones, he started working for Uncle Sam in January, 1941. Inducted at Camp Edwards, Mass., he went on the 1941 North Carolina maneuvers with the 101st F. A. upon completion of his basic training. C. E.'s only comment was that it was very rough.

He then went to the Mojave desert in California with the 212th Armored Field Artillery for five months. Tired of sand and the hot California sun, C. E. decided to come east and live the easy life of an OC at Fort Benning.

H. E. OF THE MEDICS

H. E Jones was inducted into the Army August 8, 1941, and completed his basic training at Camp Grant, Ill. From there, High Explosive went to Fort Lewis, Wash., then to San Francisco with the Medical Corps.

From there he went to Canada and helped establish the 45th Station Hospital.

He E. was assigned to the Engineer's Medical Detachment. The nearest town was five miles from camp but the twenty people of that secret thriving community didn't provide much entertainment. And a walk to the corner drug store would have taken a month.

J. L. OF THE AIR CORPS

Third in line is Jack L. Jones of the Air Corps. Jack came into the fold August, 1942, at Fort MacArthur, Los Angeles.

Roswell Army Flying School was the scene of J. L.'s basic training in New Mexico. He was then transferred to the 42nd Aviation Squadron at Roswell and began his Army career in earnest.

After a short time in the personnel office, our number three man was made mess sergeant. And in a very short time Jack had the best mess hall on the field.

R. V. OF THE INFANTRY

Last, but not least is Robert V. Jones of the Infantry. R. V. signed up August 4, 1942. After his induction at Camp Beauregard, La., R. V. went to Camp Walters, Texas, for basic training.

When his 13 weeks ended, R.V. was assigned to the cadre at Wolters to spread his knowledge among the newer recruits. R. V. was in a heavy weapons company, which accounts for his possible in the mortar G. T.

He applied for OCS and arrived at Fort Benning April 1.

African Coup Psychological And Military

Col. Massey Says QM Corps Played Role In Both Phases

The North African invasion was a psychological campaign as well as a military one, and the Quartermaster Corps provided the goods for the former as well as the latter, Colonel Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning, disclosed today.

Inasmuch as one important objective was to sell the native population on the idea that the Allies were a genuine Army of liberation, approximately every sixth soldier was given a "barter bag," the colonel revealed.

These barter bags contained tea, tobacco, sugar, perfume, candies, glassware and coins, and approximately 2000 tons of barter items was included in the cargo, Colonel Massey said.

Producing an unparalleled amount of good will when traded or given to the natives, the items in these barter bags told the North Africans at least two things, according to the director o fsupply. First was that while conquering armies traditionally ravage all before them, here was one that found it more blessed to give than to receive, and secondly that America was a nation so rich and powerful that it could still afford to be generous in the midst of its greatest war, he said.

In addition to the barter items, Colonel Massey stated, some consumer goods were carried to the local French populations. Including cigaretts, lipstick, tea, sugar and cosmetics—luxuries the people had not enjoyed for more than two years,—the items proved to be invaluable, he declared.

8th Company, 1st STR Out-Shoot Their Instructors

Freshening up in the technique of direct and indirect machine gun firing held vastly more interest to member officers of the 8th company, 1st STR, after completion of their preliminary course of firing, disclosing new records in hitting the markers which count for high scores.

Records just compiled show the company made an average of 167.3 points with heavy machine gun and higher in comparison with the average of 165.1 set by instructors for recent classes.

The light machine gun gained in popularity as 83 officers qualified as experts in firing with the gun. Another 41 qualified as first class gunners, and 58 qualified as second class gunners.

Former Benning Truck Unit Is On Duty In India

Somewhere in northeast India is a quartermaster truck regiment formerly stationed at Fort Benning, whose commander says is the best educated negro regiment in the army.

The outfit commanded by Colonel Ellis F. Altman of Palm Beach, Fla., boasts that 483 of its 2,000 members have some degree of college training, ranging from one year's study to one or more degrees. The colonel believes that it is not only the best educated colored unit, but would give any outfit a stiff race.

Colonel Altman explains it this way: "At Fort Benning we were a crack truck outfit. When we were ordered overseas, I was given the right to choose the best men I could find in the colored units there, because we were going to have a lot of paper work. We went through the personnel records and took the cream of the crop."

All of the officers are white with the exception of First Lt. William O. Jones, the chaplain, formerly a preacher in Chicago and Birmingham, Ala.

Colonel Coursay's Son Graduates From West Point

Lt. Richard R. Coursey, Jr., son of Col. and Mrs. Richard R. Coursey, is visiting his parents at Fort Bennnig on a brief leave following his graduation from the United State Military Academy at West Point. Col Coursey is director of Officer Candidates.

Lt. Courscy, who received his wings at West Point, has been assigned to Williams Field, Arizona, for further study as a pilot.

Calvert, commanding officer of Company M in the 124th Infantry, and the other members of that regiment who participated, from Lt. Col. Silas K. Baker, intelligence officer of the Infantry School.

In a letter to Colonel John D. Hill, regimental commander, Colonel Baker said, "Lieutenant Calvert and the enlisted personnel from the 124th Infantry working under his supervision demonstrated efficiency, attention to duty and a high degree of patience and cooperation under difficult circumstances."

When Blowers Blows In Old C. O. Checks Out-t-t

Company commanders in the First Student Training Regiment begin to worry when they see the name of Captain Tom H. Blowers on the roster of their classes, because it's even money that when the class graduates Captain Blowers will be the new C. O., while they themselves depart for other climes.

This assumption of command began last September when Captain Blowers graduated from the Fifth Company as a member of the communications course and, on the following day, took over command of the company. After holding the command until last January, he entered the 13th Company as a student in Rifle and Heavy Weapons. Graduating in April, he is now the company commander of the unit.

It is now rumored that when Captain Blowers, a native of Jacksonville, Fla., is assigned to a new class, the first thing he does is to try the company commander's easy chair.

Captain Freeman Appointed Major

James E. Freeman, assistant to the post executive officer and organizer of the present post headquarters set-up, has been promoted to the rank of major.

A veteran of 23 years of service, Major Freeman first enlisted in 1920 at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and saw duty overseas with the Army of Occupation in Germany. He came to Benning in 1922, joining the 29th Infantry and during the next 20 years rose to the rank of master sergeant.

For his outstanding work in handling the regiment's personnel and administrative section, he was the non-commissioned officer selected to organize a headquarters staff, when the decision was reached in January 1941 to separate the post, and school commands.

After organizing headquarters, Major Freeman served as chief clerk until February 1942 when he was commissioned a second lieutenant and named assistant adjutant. In later months, he served as acting adjutant, assistant S-3, acting executive officer, and is now in the capacity of assistant to the executive officer.

He is married and lives at 301-B 1st Division Rd., on the post proper.

Motor Class Names Leaders

Permanent assignment of student officers for the senior motor mechanic class of the 19th Company, Fourth Battalion of the First Student Training Regiment were announced late last week.

Student company commander for the group, according to the assignment list, is Technician Fifth Grade Max Guerrero, of Manila, Philippine Islands. Student second platoon leader is Corporal Nelson Hunt, of Sandusky, O.

Technician Fourth Grade Thomas Bufford, a native of Silex, Mo., was assigned as student second platoon leader; while Private First Class Thys de Young, of Big Rapids, Mich., was named student third platoon leader.

Student first sergeant is Sergeant Joe I. Saturno, a native Filipino from Sacramento, Calif.

Short In Stature Long In Discipline

Candidate Rufino Cabebe, Second Company, Third Student Training Regiment, is a good soldier who subscribes to prompt and willing obedience to the orders of his superior officers.

But now his morale is low. Cabebe, who came here from the First Filipino Regiment at Camp Beal, Calif., is upset and disturbed because he could not carry out an order to the satisfaction of the officer who gave it, an able and distinguished instructor from The Infantry School.

"Please rise to your feet, Candidate Cabebe, and, hereafter, always, always stand when a question is addressed to you," said the captain-instructor at a recent class, fixing an icy stare upon the distressed OC.

Cabebe vows he will climb upon his chair from now on. Because, being the soldier he is, he did immediately stand when called upon. The trouble was, standing straight up brought his head only about level with those of the rest of the class sitting.

He is five feet, one inch in height.

LT. LABELLE ADVANCES

The promotion of Second Lieutenant Henry A. Labelle to first lieutenant has been announced at the office of Col. Robert Sharp, commander of the First Student Training Regiment. Lt. Labelle, a former resident of Manchester, N. Y., has been officer in charge of classification for The Infantry School's oldest regiment since his assignment to the unit in Nov., 1942. A sergeant of classification work while an enlisted man, Lt. Labelle was assigned to his post at Fort Benning after graduating from The Infantry School and attending the Adjutant General's School at Fort Washington, Md.

16 Supply Men Get Promotions

The promotion of 16 enlisted men of the Supply Detachment, Supply Division, Section One, Fourth Service Command, Fort Benning, has been announced at post headquarters.

Technician Fourth Grade Basil A. Cox and Technician Fifth Grade Bernard Litman have been made staff sergeants. Technician Fourth Grade Joseph S. Kindur and Corporals Robert A. Mowery and Edward McDonnell have been raised to sergeant, and Corporal Harman F. Beavers has been promoted to technician fourth grade.

Officer's Picture Brings Him 2 Marriage Proposals

Lt. Bruce Douglas of the Sixth Company, First Student Training Regiment, has gained a healthy respect for the power of the press. A short time ago when various state guard units were quartered in his company while attending a short course at the Infantry School, Lt. Douglas was asked to pose with the guardsmen for the Public Relations photographer.

The picture was given wide circulation, the Atlanta Constitution giving it a prominent spot.

Two days after the picture had appeared, Lt. Douglas received two proposals of marriage. One was from a lady who possessed, she said, a considerable amount of coin of the realm. The other confessed she was good looking—but broke.

Lt. Douglas is still single.

OC Seeks Tractor Charged to Him But Never Received

Anybody seen a caterpillar Tractor, Model 10-20, which is entered on the QM Form 32 of Candidate Fred E. Laube of the 5th Company, Second Student Training Regiment?

Discoverer of the whereabouts of the machine is requested to get in touch with the orderly room of the Fifth Company, whose officers and supply staff are about ready to call off the hunt for it.

Grilling of Laube and his fellow officer candidates has failed to throw any light on the matter of the missing tractor. Laube is adamant in his denial of ever possessing the tractor or of knowing how it got on his QM Form 32.

While speculation continues within the company as to what use the OC had devised for the Caterpillar—whether he wanted to use it to pull a 37 mm. antitank gun or ride on it between Fort Benning and Columbus, the search is now being extended to Fort Lewis, Wash., Hickam Field, Hawaii, and Merced Basic Flying School, Calif., where he was previously stationed.

200 Soldiers Go To Auburn

Benning Men To Be Classified In STAR

Almost 200 Fort Benning soldiers were selected for the Army Specialized Training Program and left last week-end for Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, Ala., for classification at the STAR school conducted there by the Army, First Lieutenant Robert C. Weiland, classification officer at post headquarters said.

At the STAR school, the men were to be assigned to basic or advanced courses under the SSTP, the STAR board deciding which schools the individual enlisted men are best qualified to attend, as well as the subjects to be taken.

Of the 194 men selected, approximately 60 percent were members of the Tenth Armored Division, while about 35 percent were from the Infantry School, Lieutenant Weiland disclosed. The remaining five percent of the men were selected from the station complement.

Orders instructing the men to report to STAR units now are being issued from Fort Benning headquarters, and not directly from the Fourth Service Command in Atlanta, according to the present procedure. Men selected are sent on detached service to STAR units.

3RD STR CAPTAINS

Five first lieutenants were raised to the rank of captain in the Third Student Training Regiment, it was announced by Col. R. H. Lord, commanding officer of the Regiment. The new captains are David Welles Palmer, Altadena, Cal.; Lyndell F. Keene, Torrington, Wyo., who recently was named adjutant of the regiment; Edward Guy Garrett, Jr., Marlin, Tex.; Chesley J. Bennett, Festus, Mo.; Timothy McBride Furlow, Americus, Ga.

Red Cross Men To Teach Life Saving—Full Pack

A program of instruction to teach men how to save themselves if they should be thrown into water with full packs and equipment will be given by Red Cross instructors at Russ pool for one week beginning June 21, Lt. Col. Charles C Finnegan, special service officer announced Saturday.

The instruction will be given 100 soldiers who will be selected from among all units on the post. Classes will be held from 8:30 a. m. to noon. These selected men, who must be good swimmers, will in turn, it is expected, be able to carry the instruction on among men of their own units.

The course will be as practical as possible, Col. Finnegan said. Men will be taught how to dive from high places with their packs such as from the deck of a ship which has been torpedoed, how to get out of their heavy packs and other equipment should a landing barge capsize and in every way be able to take care of themselves and other men under any emergency which they may meet.

Chaplain Pollock Named Major

Captain Alfred Lafayette Pollock, assistant post chaplain, has been promoted to major, according to an announcement from post headquarters.

Entering on active duty, August 28, 1941, as a first lieutenant, Chaplain Pollock was immediately assigned to Fort Benning with the First Student Training Regiment.

In May 1942 he was raised to captain and later named assistant chief of chaplains branch, his present position. The new major served with the AEF in World War I as a private in the 1st Army Corps artillery.

He is a graduate of Wake Forest University, and received higher religious training at Colgate — Rochester Divinity School, from which he holds two degrees, bachelor of divinity and master of theology.

Major Pollock formerly held various pastorates in North Carolina, the last being at Red Oak, N. C.

He is a native of Warsaw, N. C., but at present resides with his family on the main post.

General McNair Sees Infantry School Activity

Ground Forces Chief Shows Keen Interest In Demonstrations

Lieut. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, commanding general of the United States Army Ground forces, frankly admitted he was wounded in Africa when he stood up to see what was going on instead of taking cover. That penchant for first-hand information stood out in bold relief during his day and a half inspection of the Infantry School last week.

Those who saw him on his whirlwind tour of the school, during which he traveled 150 miles by motor to witness 12 demonstrations and student problems, didn't see much of him in the observation stands. As soon as they were explained to him, he usually started off on the heels of the students. He kept just far enough behind so that he could see all phases of their work.

When the students stormed through a village, he stormed after them and, if it was barbed wire they climbed over or under, then barbed wire was his ticket too. At times, he came close to breaking into a trot to keep pace with the problem.

PRAISES SCHOOL

When he left he had nothing but praise for the Infantry School. "The school is excellent, simply excellent," he said. "I don't see how a man with normal intelligence can go through any of its courses without becoming a good and well grounded leader. The methods are good and the instruction sound and easily understandable.

"I was particularly impressed by the 'platoon in attack with supporting weapons" problem and the "close combat" problem. I'd like to come down and take this course myself, but I don't think I could do it at all. Those boys are pretty rugged. It would be an eye-opener for those of our officers to have seen it."

During his inspection, he saw officer candidate and members of officer classes as well as units of all school troops in action. There

Even Expert Can't Hit Bull's-Eye Sans Front Sight

Cpl. Fred Harig, of Service Company, 300th Infantry, stepped up to the firing line of Fiske range confidently to fire for record on the slow-fire target.

He took the correct position and squeezed off his shot. Called it a bull.

Up came "Maggie's Drawers."

Again and again he fired. The red flag cut the breeze eight consecutive times.

Must be something wrong, thought Harig. He looked closely at his rifle.

It had no front sight!

Colored ASTP Gets Officers

Form Part Of Cadre At Reception Center

Eighteen officers have recently arrived at the Reception Center at Fort Benning to assume duties in the specialized basic training center which will be comprised of approximately 6,000 negro troops from reception centers of the south. They are part of a cadre of 134 officers and 1,000 enlisted men who will form a nucleus for the training center, according to Lieut. Col. Ulric James, commanding officer of the Reception Center.

The new officers are: Major Alvin B. Cottrell, Capt. David A. Hess, First Lieutenant Leon E. Chalkin, and Second Lieutenants David S. Abrams, Claude Beeman, Jr., Harold O. Samuels, Delwin A. Mills, Elmer T. Morgan, Gordon S. Crawford, Robert W. Lyman, Nathan Gottlieb, Herbert P. Gruber, Louis Hofeld, William H. Waddy, Carl J. Max, Joseph M. Haley, John H. Kornkamp, and Robert H. Eaton.

TIS Activates 6th Regiment, AST Program

Col. Sharp Announces Officer Personnel Who Will Make Up Staff

The Sixth Training Regiment of the ASTP Basic Training Center, the Infantry School, was activated last week under the command of Col. Robert Sharp, former commander of the 1st Student Training Regiment.

Located in the Frying Pan area of the main post, the Sixth will give the 13 weeks training of a basic rifle company to four battalions of the basics. The men have been chosen under the Army Specialized Training Program for enrollment in one of the several score colleges which the Army is now utilizing to train specialists in many fields. The men of the Sixth, all of whom have met the primary requirements of a General Classification Test score of 115 or over and have the necessary educational qualifications, will be sent to one of the ASTP colleges upon completion of their training here.

As the wheels of organization began rolling, Colonel Sharp announced the appointment of Lt. Colonel Maurice C. Higgins as his executive officer. Colonel Higgins formerly commanded the Casual Battalion of the Student Training Brigade.

KEY OFFICERS

The other key officers who have reported for duty with the Sixth Regiment are former officials of the Infantry School. Major Walter C. Alexander was adjutant of the Student Training Brigade; Major Walter H. Pierce was executive officer of the Casual Bn., S. T. B.; Major Orville J. Hall was in the Academic Department of the Infantry School; Major Edward C. Donaldson and Major John L. Warnock were also in the Academic Department of the Infantry School. Major Charles O. Echols, Jr., was commanding officer of ISC Co. of the Casual Bn., S. T. B., and Captain George M. Miller was supply officer of the Casual Bn., S. T. B.

A large number of the company and battalion officers of the Sixth Training Regiment come directly from assignments as instructors in the Infantry School, and so the Sixth's basics will receive the highest calibre training possible in the Army. Among former TIS instructors who will serve in the regiment are Captains Robert K. Hamilton, Robert L. Martin, James K. West, Edgar Barrett, Furman G. Bobo, William F. Frick, Jr., Howard W. Busch, James W. Harrison, Jr., George F. Arnold, Bernard J. Scherr and First Lieutenant John P. Sandford of the Weapons Section. Captains John W. Stewart, James E. Young, Robert Welch and First Lieutenants Frank T. Miller, Jr., and Edward B. Lee, Jr., formerly of the General Section will also take active part in the training of the ASTP basics.

NEW TICKET BOOTH

An enlarged and improved ticket booth is being constructed at the Main Theater. Master Sergeant E. L. Baner, theater manager, announced that the new booth will not only offer better accommodations but also harmonize with the architectural design of the building. A temporary ticket booth has been set up until the project is completed sometime this week.

Patio Grill Opening Slated for Saturday

Facilities Available For Enlisted Men And Families, Cafeteria Patrons

Formal opening of the new Patio Grill, attached to the new cafeteria on the Main Post has been set for Saturday night, it was announced by Lt. Col. Harold E. McGaffey, post exchange officer.

Tables and chairs for the outdoor grill are expected to arrive today or Friday, and service will begin informally as soon as they are installed, Colonel McGaffey said. But even if they do not arrive by Saturday, the grill will be opened with the facilities now at hand, he said.

The new Patio Grill has been established for use of enlisted men and their families only, according to an order by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning. It is designed to be utilized during the day as an outdoor eating place for patrons of the new cafeteria. In the evenings, a bar will be set up for serving of beer and soft drinks.

Establishment of the grill will help care for the large crowds that have been patronizing the cafeteria since it was opened a few months ago, Colonel McGaffey said. More than 3,000 persons per day now are being served at the cafeteria.

Army Officers' Sons Enter Naval Prep School

Sons of three high-ranking Army officers at Fort Benning observed Father's Day last Sunday by departing for a NAVAL prep school.

They were Walter Scott Fulton, Jr., son of Brigadier General and Mrs. Fulton, the former the Fort's commanding general; John Watkins, son of Col. and Mrs. Elliott Watkins; and Raymond Barlow, son of Colonel and Mrs. Raymond C. Barlow, Sr.

The boys will attend Sullivan's Naval Preparatory School in Washington, D. C., in preparation for applications for appointment to the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

Pin-Up Girl Jane Russell Is Typical Benning Wife

Glamour Days Over, She's Just Being Normal Once More

Far from the madding crowd, Hollywood beauty Jane Russell is fast becoming a typical Army wife in a modest little one-room apartment in an obscure corner of downtown Columbus.

The Army's famous pin-up girl is doing a little pinning up on her own these days, with the action taking place in a tiny backyard on the family clothesline that she shares with the rest of the household.

It's quite a change for the luscious dark-haired lass who gained more fame for a movie that was never released than most of the screen's glamour girls do for their greatest hits.

Jane may not be so well-known to uninitiated civilians, but to every G. I. she's a barracks institution. Just ask your bunkmate to show you whose picture adorns the inside of his foot locker, or to show you the exposure on the back of his wall-locker door. Ten to one it'll be Jane Russell in one of her familiar poses. The current issue of Yank carries a full-page shot of La Russell that's a dilly.

And fellows, take it from a G. I. who went, saw and was conquered. She's a honey and her pictures don't lie. There is no one who can dispute that Jane Russell is a beauty. Her lovely dark hair, sparkling brown eyes, almost-olive skin, and lithe figure rate her as a rare type of American beauty.

Withal, however, she's a very natural person and completely unaffected by her G. I. fame. She's warm and friendly and has happily forsaken the glamour life of Hollywood for the career of an Army wife.

Jane's hubby of six weeks is Officer Candidate Bob Waterfield of the 13th Company, 3rd Student Training Regiment. Bob's quite famous in his own right, too, having been Mr. Big of the U. C. L. A. football team that gave Georgia's Bulldogs such a battle in the Rose Bowl on January 1 of this year.

Jane, of course, was on the sidelines for that game just as she had been for every Bruin game during the last two years. No wonder Waterfield was such a scourge to Uclan opponents! Only ironical thing about her present home is that she has had to come into the lair of the hated Georgia Bulldogs to be near her hubby.

LIKES BENNING

But the screen beauty likes Fort Benning and Columbus and is quite contented, as long as she can be near Bob. When he was called into service from the reserves two weeks after their marriage, she thought she would remain on the West Coast, but after three weeks of loneliness, she packed up and came here.

Jane can only see her sandy-haired husband on week-ends but it's a comfort to her to know that he's only a few miles away. And she looks forward longingly to the day some three months hence

The Army's favorite pin-up girl, "Jane Russell, of Hollywood, will be the guest star in Harmony Bowl tonight (Thursday) at 7:15 when the Second Student Training Regiment starts the summer season at its outdoor theater.

General Fredendall Visits Fort Benning

Hero Of Oran Notes Definite Improvement In American Soldier

The lessons learned in actual combat by his comrades in arms are now serving the American soldier in training in the United States in good stead and he has definitely improved during the past year, Lt. General Lloyd R. Fredendall, commanding general of the Second Army, declared Tuesday while on a one-day visit to Benning.

Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, commanding general of the Infantry School, and Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, greeted General Fredendall and members of his staff as they arrived at Fort Benning's Lawson field air base Tuesday morning.

SERVED AT POST

General Fredendall, a veteran of World War I served as commanding general of the 4th motorized division at Fort Benning and as post commander in 1940-1941.

Flanked by high-ranking members of his staff, General Fredendall came to Benning to inspect various units of the 2nd army which are stationed at the post under the command of Col. George E. Jacobs.

As he finished his inspection here, General Fredendall said that the effects of thorough army training during the past year have become "very apparent."

He said that since maneuvers a year ago, troops now are "definitely more interested" in doing a good job.

"The soldier today knows that this war is being played 'for keeps'," General Fredendall observed. "The men are more determined than ever to get in the best physical shape possible and

Five Companies, 2nd STR, 100 % In Life Insurance

The first five companies in the Second Student Training Regiment to report perfect records in holdings of National Service Life Insurance are the 7th, 11th, 17th, 18th and 26th. This means that each and every enlisted man and officer in these five companies has signed up for the maximum coverage of $10,000 in government insurance.

Capt. John B. Torinus, insurance officer of the Second Regiment, said that other companies are nearing the 100 per cent mark, as the drive in the regiment moves toward the goal of full insurance coverage for all.

The insurance now carried by the men and officers in the Second Regiment totals between forty and fifty million dollars.

Army Camouflage Too Good, Soldier Avers

Sergeant's Suit Bears Concrete Evidence; Truck Runs Over Hideout

Sergeant Lester Wilson of Fort Benning's Parachute School entertains no qualms about the effectiveness of the U. S. Army's camouflage equipment. In fact, Sergeant Wilson thinks it is "too darned good."

An instructor in the Parachute School's camouflage division, Wilson, who is a former resident of 3233 Brandis street, Erie, Pa., was engaged with other troops in a demonstration for a group of West Point cadets here last week.

Clad in green camouflage suits, which blend with the scenery here, the camouflaged paratroopers bailed out of C-47 transports high over Fort Benning. The cadets and other students taking part in the problem watched the camouflaged troopers with camouflaged 'chutes float earthward.

The jumpers, when they landed, fell prone on the ground and remained still to determine if the observers could spot them. Minutes went by and Sergeant Wilson remained secreted under his camouflage.

However, as he lay on his stomach, Sergeant Wilson shortly heard a rumble approaching and soon was aware of a quarter ton jeep passing over his body—with all four wheels, two of which crossed his legs and two his back.

That failed to move Sergeant Wilson, though, and he remained still uninjured.

In fact, the peculiar story did not come to light until this morning when Wilson was about to don his camouflage suit again and his buddies noticed some muddy tire marks across the back which caused considerable questioning.

Janie Russell Sweeps

Jane Russell, beauteous Hollywood actress and former model, has forsaken the film capital for Fort Benning, has given up her career to be an Army wife. Married to Bob Waterfield, former star quarterback of the UCLA team that lost to Georgia in the Rose Bowl last January, Jane has moved into a modest cottage in downtown Columbus.

From now on, her only career will be that of taking care of her husband while he is in officer candidate school at Benning and then staying with him as long as

She Does The Dishes

Uncle Sam makes it convenient to do so. Jane spends her time keeping house, appearing at service clubs and at entertainments for Fort Benning soldiers, and waiting patiently for her soldier husband to come home for weekends. She plans to do Red Cross work and perhaps take a job to help pass the time until her husband graduates.

Her career, which won her the distinction of being one of Hollywood's most beautiful women, started quite simply. She was a model in Tom Kelly's studio in Hollywood and one day, while her picture was displayed in the studio window, a Howard Hughes' talent scout happened by. The minute he saw it, he hastened inside shouting, "Who?" Kelley, the sphinx, smiled and merely said, "Just a nice little country girl."

Hughes' scout snatched up the picture, rushed to his boss, proudly displayed it, pulled a Philo Vance, and the next thing Jane knew, she was under contract to Howard Hughes. That very night she was called in for testing, and within a week, was signed to play the lead opposite Jack Beutel in "The Outlaw."

And Pours Coffee For Hubby

A terrific publicity campaign was launched and Jane still holds the all-high publicity record in Hollywood. Millions of dollars were spent to place her before the public, and although she has made only one picture, her face and figure are more familiar than many stars who have been at the top for years.

But now she is glad to forget that career and finds it much more exciting to wait each evening for that call that comes in at a certain time from a certain six feet-one inch, sandy-haired ex-football player. (Signal Lab Photos by Kortemeier.)

Soldier Fought Boredom On Lonely Pacific Island

He has never faced a German or a Jap in combat, but for an uninterrupted 18 months Vincent Bartholomeo of the Third Company, Third Student Training Regiment, fought a soldier's worst two enemies, loneliness and boredom.

He battled these pernicious twins from a little spot of land half the size of Fort Benning, isolated in the vast stretches of the South Pacific and designated as a secret base. Bartolomeo and his buddy had contacts with the outside world only through a short wave radio and occasional visits by a boat. A canteen boat pulled up to the island an average of once in four months.

Off duty, the soldiers had to find entertainment in the radio or a rare, ancient moving picture. For eight months the men subsisted on dehydrated foods. For weeks on end there were no such things as candy, cookies, beer and other luxuries available at post exchanges.

Inhabited by Polynesians, the island offered no evidence of civilization beyond a footpath and three primitive stores, Bartolomeo says.

Bartolomeo, 25 years old and a resident of Pittsburgh, was a commercial artist in civilian life. He has a brother, Sgt. Richard Bartolomeo, who is in Africa.

538 Armored Infantry Trains

Drawing its officers and enlisted cadre from four armored divisions and from several other infantry units, Fort Benning's newest combat outfit, the 538th Armored Infantry Battalion, is typically American in origin—tracing its ancestry in as many directions as a spider weaves its web.

Maj. Milledge M. Beckwith, commanding, comes from the 6th Armored Division at Camp Cooke, California. A veteran of nearly eight years active duty and of five maneuvers, Major Beckwith has been in the Armored Force since August, 1940, when he was assigned to the 1st Armored Division. He graduated from the Armored Force School at Fort Knox, Kentucky, 2nd class, and joined the 4th Armored Division upon activation, remaining there until activation of the 6th Armored Division.

Maj. Chas. D. Young, executive officer, who was with 10th Armored Division here until the 538th was activated May 25, served with Major Beckwith in the 80th Armd. Regt. of the 4th Armored Division at Pine Camp, N. Y., until its inactivation.

Nine other 10th Armored officers were transferred to the 538th, among them Capts. Brady J. Dayton, Jr., Howard L. Weeks and Connie I. Hood.

One hundred and three enlisted cadre came from the 5th Armored, now on maneuvers in Tennessee. Their experience includes three months on the California desert, and six weeks making training films at Warner Bros. ranch near Hollywood.

Though its recruits have not yet arrived, the 538th has been busy putting into practical application Major Beckwith's motto: "Do it—and do it right!" Through courtesy of The Infantry School, key personnel are taking refresher courses and all officers and men are undergoing intensive training in physical conditioning and instructional methods. At no other post has he seen so much cooperation among different commands as he has been given here, Major Beckwith said.

The 538th Armored, now quartered in the old ROTC area on the Main Post, expects to move to Sand Hill before July 1.

AST Soldiers Chorus Organized, Harmony Church

The first performance of the recently organized soldier's chorus of the First Battalion, Fourth Training Regiment of the Army Specialized Training Program Basic Training Center of The Infantry School, was given last week in the Shell Hole amphitheater in the Harmony Church area.

The chorus is made up of personnel of the First and Second companies and is directed by Mr. Arthur Hall, U. S. O. musical director. It shows promise of being a creditable addition to the many excellent musical organizations on the Post.

In addition to the chorus numbers of recorded music was presented.

This is the first of a series of entertainment programs arranged by 1st Lt. John S. Thomas, Special Service officer of the Regiment.

Former Engineer Specialists May Transfer To CE

Enlisted men who were specialists in many engineering lines or who had years of general construction experience, may now be transferred to the Corps of Engineers from other organizations in the Army, it was announced today by Capt. James A. Baird, area engineer at Fort Benning.

Recently the Corps of Engineers began a campaign to secure voluntary inductions of men with necessary experience, and many men already in the Army inquired about possibilities of transferring. At that time, however, there was no method by which such transfers could be accomplished.

Now, however, specialists or men with years of general construction experience may transfer by requesting from their Commanding Officer a letter asking for an interview, addressed to Captain Baird. If the interview indicates that the applicant is qualified, machinery will be set in motion to accomplish the transfer, Capt. Baird said.

"No ratings can be assigned until after 13 weeks basic training is completed," Capt. Baird said, but the Area Engineer can reasonably assure the enlistee of probable rating after such training period. This is not a promise, but is an estimate of rating based on experience and qualifications of the applicant."

Furloughs Given For Good Ideas

'Spirit of 176' Sponsors Contest To Improve Regiment's Functioning

"Submit an idea and win a furlough!" is the theme behind a novel contest being conducted by the Spirit of 176, weekly newspaper of the 176th of the Infantry School troops.

The contest has been running since April. Each week, suggestions for the improvement of the regiment, its management or training or use of equipment are submitted by members of the regiment. The best of these are selected by Captain James Brown, Special Service officer, and forwarded to Col. Edwin Cox, commanding officer.

If the idea is meritorious and is accepted, its author receives a six-day furlough plus traveling time.

Pfc. Joe F. Scott of Company D has hit the jackpot twice, one week elapsing between each occasion. His first suggestion was to set aside one Sunday as a memorial day to those members or former members of the regiment who have lost their lives. Some of the 176th have been transferred to other regiments and gone overseas. Others have died of natural causes or from accidents while serving in the company.

His other suggestion was to roll the mattresses and fold the blankets for airing each day instead of making up bunks in the morning.

Representatives of all the companies met, and Sgt. Story was elected president. "The club will be open from 12 noon until 12 midnight," said Sgt. Story. The rest-pause that refreshes
Welcome in peace....
more welcome in war work

After hard work wouldn't you, yourself, welcome a frosty bottle of Coca-Cola when it came your time to pause? Who wouldn't.
MANAGERS and personnel directors will tell you that regular rest-pauses plus the refreshment of ice-cold Coca-Cola increase contentment in their plants. Thus production is increased. A pause for Coca-Cola is a little thing in itself, but one of the little things that brighten a busy day.
You might think it strange that workers have such a welcome for a 5¢ soft drink. But Coca-Cola has something all its own in goodness. Made with a finished art, its taste always pleases. More than just quenching thirst, it brings a happy after-sense of complete refreshment. The only thing like Coca-Cola is Coca-Cola, itself.

A breathing spell, a rest-pause and ice-cold Coca-Cola. Contentment comes when you connect with a Coke.
Letters from plant managers from coast to coast emphasize that the little moment for an ice-cold Coca-Cola means a lot to workers in war plants. It's a refreshing moment on the sunny side of things . . . a way to turn to refreshment without turning from work.
The best is always the better buy!

2nd Regiment Ice Cream Plant Popular Institution

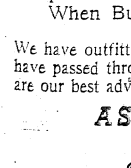
Year-Old Factory Produces 1,000 Gallons Per Month For OC's

Here is an Army business that makes everybody happy. It is as easy as selling ice cream in the hot Georgia summer. In fact, that is exactly what this business is.

It started a year ago when a group of officers in the Second Student Training Regiment at Fort Benning wondered what could be done to make hot days more bearable to hard-working officer candidates, and at the same time would not make too much of a dent in the regimental funds.

So the idea of an ice cream plant that would be self-supporting was hit upon. Some second-hand machinery was purchased and set up in a building in the regimental area, centrally located so that soldiers could buy their ice cream right at the plant.

After taking a few kinks out of the machinery and experimenting with different ways of making ice cream, the plant roared into production, and business boomed from the start. Today it is a very smooth-running enterprise, producing about 1,000 gallons of ice cream a month and paying its own way entirely.



VARIED FLAVORS

One of the factors in the plant's success is its ability to produce ice cream rapidly in a wide variety of flavors. There are nearly always a dozen different varieties to choose from, and at one time or another the plant has probably made every flavor known to man.

The soldiers' favorites are black walnut, butter pecan, and orange-pineapple. All flavors are sold at 10 cents a half-pint cup, and 20 cents a pint.

The plant is open from 10 a. m. to 8:30 p. m., and is run entirely by enlisted men with an officer in charge. One of the busiest periods of the day is during the ten-minute breaks when officer candidates come rushing out of nearby classrooms for a quick refresher. At such times, they usually prefer their ice cream fairly soft, so they can finish it in time to get back to class.

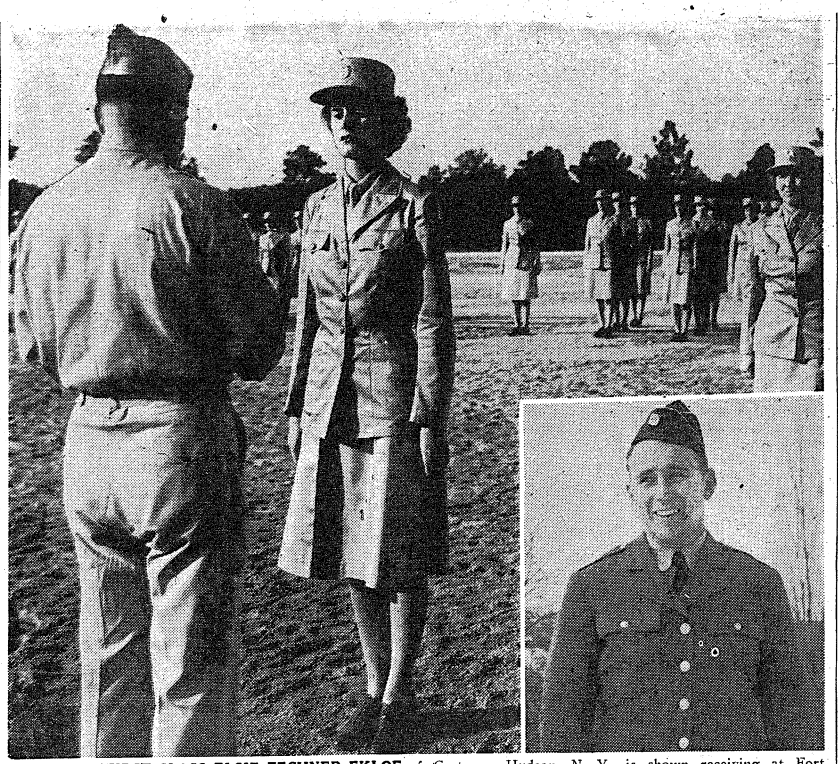
German, Jap Uniforms Used

In TIS Intelligence Class for Spiriters

Officers of the 176th Regiment of The Infantry School troops have gone back to school. A series of weekly instructional periods is now in progress during which new theories and equipment are explained and the old reviewed.



The course has the following set-up of subjects and instructors: Individual Weapons, Major G. A. Bridgers; Orientation, Lt. Col. W. W. Atkins; Flat Trajectory Crew Served Weapons, Major N. S. Mathewson; Mortars, Major J. N. Apperson; Staff Organization, Col. Edwin Cox; Intelligence, Captain, C. P. Sirles; new developments in Warfare, Capt. J. N. Chesson, and Tactical Principles, Col. As part of the demonstration, soldiers dressed in Japanese and German uniforms demonstrated captured enemy weapons, showing various tricks in their use as learned through Intelligence operations.

Lt. J. F. Berkowitz discussed the habits and fighting traits of the Italian soldier. Similar discussions were given by Lt. W. J. Harick on the Japanese and Lt. Lee D. Pollock on the Germans.

AUXILIARY FIRST CLASS ELSIE FECHNER EKLOF of Croton-on-Hudson, N. Y., is shown receiving at Fort Benning the Purple Heart, posthumously awarded her husband, Staff Sgt. Harold Eklof, killed in action in Tunisia last April. The presentation was made by Col. Sevier R. Tupper, commanding officer of the Infantry school troops brigade at Fort Benning in the presence of the Harmony church WAAC detachment of the Infantry school to which AFC Eklof is assigned. Second Officer Eleanor Wildes (right) commands the detachment. Sergeant Eklof is pictured in the inset. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

Husband's Purple Heart Awarded to Post WAAC

Auxiliary Eklof Loses Mate In Tunisia; Tupper Presents Medal

Auxiliary First Class Elsie Fechner Eklof of the Harmony Church WAAC Detachment of the Infantry School. Monday was presented with the Order of the Purple Heart, posthumously awarded her husband, S. Sgt. Harold Eklof, killed in action in Tunisia. The presentation was made by Colonel Sevier R. Tupper, commanding officer of the Student Training Brigade.

AFC Eklof, who received her first stripe less than two weeks ago, was pretty certain she was going to cry. She had known about the award to her soldier husband whom she married a month before he sailed for Africa last October. But she didn't expect a ceremony.

Past the long ranks of auxiliaries especially assembled for the ceremony, she marched, lips quivering, to a position in front of the formation. Once she confronted Colonel Tupper, she regained her composure, accepted the medal, saluted smartly and returned to the ranks.

MARCHED HOME

Then she marched back to her barracks. An ordeal, which she had dreaded, was over.

When news of her husband's death came, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Eklof of Croton-on-Hudson, N. Y., were notified first. The War Department was unable to locate his widow because two months to a day before that April 7, the day he was killed, she had enlisted in the WAAC's and had been sent for basic training at Fort Oglethorpe.

Transferred to Fort Benning with the second contingent of WAAC's assigned to this post, she took up her duties in the personnel department at the headquarters of the 2nd Student Training refiment.

She likes her work and life as a WAAC but will be mighty glad when "this horrible war is over." "It didn't seem so bad when Harold was over here," she said. "When he came home on his last furlough, he had a hunch he would be shipped across. And then a month before he went. I went down to Fort Bragg. We were married in Fayetteville. Then, after he left, it seemed a pretty natural thing for me to want to get into service too.

"I enlisted in New York and was sent to Fort Oglethorpe. Now I'm here."

She admitted she didn't like to talk about her husband's death, "but when the Purple Heart came up, well—I guess I owe it to him. I'm proud of him, darned proud."

"There was a big story in the paper at home about him," she related. "Everybody liked him. He was a good student in school and a good worker. He was one of the first of the Croton boys to go across and was the first to be killed.

PASSES RESOLUTION

"The village board of trustees at Croton passed a resolution on his death. His brother, Lt. Edwin Eklof, was a member of the board before he went into the army."

AFC Eklof, who is 23, was graduated from Croton-Harmon High school from where her husband also was graduated. They had known each other a long time. Sergeant Eklof attended New Paltz Normal school and AFC Eklof attended the Eastern Secretarial school in New York. After her graduation, she worked as a stenographer and secretary but gave up her job to enlist.

And after the war?

"Golly, I don't know what I want to do—work I guess."

AFC Eklof is one of the most popular girls in the WAAC detachment.

LT. BARTLETT KILLED

Lt. Joseph S. Bartlett, Seventh Observation Squadron, AAF, Lawson Field, was killed Monday while on a local training mission when he apparently lost control of his plane and it went into a flat spin. Authorities said he was probably hit by the tail of the plane as he attempted to bail out and was rendered unconscious and unable to pull the rip-cord of his chute.

He was conducted on his tour by Maj. General Leven C. Allen, Commandant of the Infantry School, and Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, Assistant Commandant, and their staffs.

Accompanying General McNair were: Maj. Gen. R. C. Moore, Brig. Gen. J. M. Lentz, Brig. Gen. W. H. H. Walker, Col. C. L. Hyssong, Col. J. W. Middleton, Col. F. R. Fuller, Col W. L. Mitchell, Col. A. when she can pin those coveted gold bars on his shoulders.

Meanwhile, she is experiencing the trials and tribulations of an Army wife. She actually rides the bus out to the post whenever she comes and "doesn't mind it a bit." When she first arrived, she spent a couple of days at the guest house adjoining Service Club No. 3 in the Harmony Church area and felt quite at home.

Jane had her first peek at the main post last night when she journeyed out to appear in a G. I. sketch on the "Fort Benning on the Air" radio show at 6 o'clock.

She's not seeking excitement here, and saw two movies over the past week-end when Bob came in to be with his lovely wife. During the week, she spends her time helping with the dishes, doing her own laundry, pecking away at the upright piano in the front room and just being a normal Army wife.

She's kind of glad she's finished with the movies and looks forward to her married life, especially at war's end when Bob has ambitions of being a grid coach. And at 22 (she was celebrating her birthday when we talked to her) she's forsaken glamour and the bright lights.

Nice girl, this favorite pin-up girl of ours, and we know she's already the toast of the post.

THE NEAREST thing to the real McCoy outside actual combat are these Benning soldiers dressed up in the uniforms of enemy. They are so attired to help instructors to get across their points concerning combat intelligence. (TIS Photo.)

Musical Comedians Slated For Five-Day Engagement

'Take It Easy' Features Clown Prince of Swing; Opening Date June 29

"Take It Easy," USO-Camp Shows, Inc., recipe for summer-time entertainment starring Mill Britton and his tear-it-down musicians, will play a five-day engagement at Fort Benning starting Tuesday, June 29.

The show will open at the Main Theatre and will move to theaters in the other areas, according to Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer at post headquarters.

"Take It Easy" will open on the famous outdoor stage at Doughboy Stadium and remain there for a three-night stand. Tuesday and Wednesday performances will be for white troops, while the Thursday night show will be exclusively for colored troops. On Friday, the show will perform at Harmony Bowl in the 2nd STR area, and on Saturday, the cast will wind up their Benning appearance with a performance in the 3rd STR Ampitheater, also in the Harmony Church area. All shows will start at 8:45 o'clock.

Britton, known as "the clown prince of swing," leads the band whose men maul each other with bull fiddles and bows, throw buckets of water at each other and shoot blank cartridges. The band, billed as "America's craziest orchestra," holds records for long runs in South America and England. They have been starred in feature motion pictures and musical short subjects.

Furthering the comic relief on the program are Hap Hazard, the careless comedian, and Mary Hart who balance and juggle to the accompaniment of hilarious patter.

"Take It Easy" also features Jane Fraser and the Roberts Sisters, three attractive young tap dancers, who do their routines on drums, thus furnishing their own percussion accompaniment. The act was discovered by a Broadway columnist who started them on their road to big-time success and glory.

Ruth Petty, ballad and blues singer, rounds out the show's complement.

The natural evolution of a free society is a constant process of trial and error—a constant competition between men of ability and a constant contest between ideas welling up from within our communities.—Thomas E. Dewey, Governor of New York

Patriotism Can't Be Bought; It's Personal

The following article, written by a Mrs. White of the Fiscal Branch, Headquarters, Fourth Service Command, is reproduced here because it shows such a keen understanding of our wartime responsibilities and serves to jar all of us into a realization of what every American's part must be if we hope to win this war.

"If those we love— brothers, sweethearts, husbands, kinsmen, friends—can fight, and die (many of them), in the muck, grime, slime, and bloody Hell of war and battle, it seems that sacrifices here at home are little to ask. What are you doing? Sacrificing? Ask yourself? Only you, God, your conscience can make answer. We'll win this war only if we deserve to win, for 'God helps those who help themselves," and He lends a guiding hand only to those who honestly strive to do their best. I believe that is the meaning of "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition." Kipling said, "It isn't the individual, or the Army as a whole, but the everlasting teamwork of every bloomin' soul." Your team, my team. Make it the Victory team.

"Doctor Norman Bethune, who perfected the present method of sending blood plasma to the fighting soldiers, died in China because he operated with bare hands. Rubber gloves were not available. A tragedy of improper equipment. CHINA! Have you heard of the Chinese women who are used for Japanese target practice? Another clever little Nipponese trick. Your money and morale will battle against this evil force.

"Think of our brave American and Philippine soldiers when you are asked to make small sacrifices here at home. Think of men isolated in desolate Aleutian Islands, barren of all vegetation except a lone tree here and there. An aviator with a sense of humor brought a tree from Alaska, fenced it in, marked it "National Forest." The boys stand before it and just look and think—of home. Kneel and pray for what we have. In good old forceful American slang "get going," do your part—not in words, but in deeds. "It'S RESULTS THAT COUNT. . . . . .

"You can't buy patriotism; like integrity, it's a personal thing—within. Only your heart can say, 'I am true.' 'Send your money to meet our boys.' They can't fight with words, high-sounding patriotic slogans, air. It takes planes, bombs, shells, guns, a thousand other necessities, together with the thought that we, here at home, safe and sound, warm and well-fed even with rationing), are steadfastly and soundly behind the fight. The man without a gun, a shell, the right kind of plant; the man who died because we didn't do out part here at home, may be the man you love. It's unpleasant for war to interfere with our pocket-books. It's unpleasant to die, too. The more we cooperate the sooner this war will end, and the less danger there will be of your soldier dying for you. Let him live for you. And it can happen here. The vague things that could never happen to us do. America is not impregnable by divine right. She remains invincible only if we make her so.

"Our Government has to finance this war—there is only one way—by the people. We are the people. The voluntary way is the American way. Don't clutch your pocket-book tighter and hold it dearer than flesh, and don't shut out the broad vision by holding a dollar too close to your eyes. "God gave us two ends—one to think with, the other to sit on, and it depends on which end we use whether or not we win this war.' Patriotism consists of idealism and good common horse-sense (realism). We must protect ourselves here at home and increase our capacity for helping those 'over there.

"We have always prayer for ourselves, for those we love, for our friends. Now we are praying for the world. Maybe that is what this war is all about. Maybe we won't win until we learn to give more and take less. 'The war to win wars has never been won, because the war to end selfishness has never begun.'

"John Steinbeck said in 'The Moon Is Down,' 'Free men do not start wars, but once they are started they can fight on, even in defeat. Herd men, the followers of a leader, can't do this. And so, it is the herd men who win battles and the free men who win wars.' We are free, and God grant that we deserve to stay that way.

"Did you ever see our flag rippling in the breeze and, as you gazed at those glorious colors, have that tight feeling come into your throat, as if you were in Church, Cathedral, or Synagogue? Of course you have, because you realize all that it means, all that it enfolds—your heart and mine. All that we stand for, and are; all that we love, and hold dear and precious, are wrapped in its folds. Let's keep what we have, you and I. Don't leave it up to George. George is wear yof doing it all, and besides, it takes all the Georges in our land.

"Ten per cent is the goal. If that is impossible, do the best you can. No man can ask more of you. I believe, however, that you CAN if you WILL to do so. If all of us waited until we could, we probably never would. Circumstances never reach perfection. Everybody knows someone who is fighting 'over there.' Buy bonds for him. Lend Uncle Sam your dollars. 'It's easier to talk about than to do,' and 'words which won't work are worthless.' Buy bonds and don't 'just talk.' Sooner or later Hitler and his gang will be tried in the Courts of The Almighty, and found wanting. In the meantime? Each must do his share. Don't clip the Eagle's wings. Let your money yfly a plane to our boys. If they must sweep clean Berlin and Tokio, let's do all we can to see that they get back. This is an appeal in the name of the armed forces, on land and sea; in the name of those who lie on unknown battlefields, and those who must go down to the sea in ships. 'If ye break faith with us who die, we shall not sleep; though poppies blow in Flanders' fields'."

Recommended Methods Of Reducing Heat Fatigue

With the advent of the 1943 "hot weather" season which now prevails in the Fort Benning area, officials at post headquarters are reminding the commanding officers of the several units of recommended steps to prevent heat fatigue.

All commanding officers of Fourth Service Command units are being enjoined to do their utmost in the prevention of heat exhaustion by arranging training and work schedules so that members of their command will not be exposed unnecessarily to the direct rays of the sun during the hours of the most intense heat.

In addition to these recommendations made in a post memorandum, the attention of those concerned is invited to various War Department circulars and field manuals which treat of methods of preventing heat fatigue.

For the benefit of military personnel the BAYONET reviews below the salient points discussed in these circulars and manuals.

Heat exhaustion is the product of the loss of valuable body salts and vitamins through excessive perspiration in the performance of manual labor in high temperatures.

Take a day's march for example with its attendant perspiring. Troops begin the march with approximately one pint of water in their stomachs. At the end of the second hour's march the troops will have consumed one-half canteen of water, and at the end of the third hour the remainder of the canteen, or one pint in all. The fourth and fifth hours of the day are spent in camp, and at the end of the fifth hour the troops again depart from camp with one pint of water in their stomachs and one pint in their canteens. One-half of this water is consumed by the end of the seventh hour and the other half at the end of the eighth hour. At the end of the ninth hour the troops are back in camp for a refill. Thus in the course of the day's work, approximately two quarts of water are consumed if water discipline is followed through.

Meanwhile, there has been of course excessive perspiring and the loss of the body salts and vitamins. To replace these salts, War Department circulars recommend that water consumed contain 0.1% of table salt. The proportion would be one pound of salt to every 100 gallons of water, or 0.3 pound to a 36-gallon Lister bag, or one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt to a quart of water. If salt tablets are used, there should be used two 10-grain tablets to a quart of water, on one 10-grain tablet consumed to every alternate glass of water drunk.

The post memorandum also points out that it is a common experience that the ingestion of citrus juices is of value in the removal of fatigue caused by the undesirable loss of water soluble vitamins B-1 and C. It is recommended that free use be made of citrus fruit drinks, and that such drinks be prepared from fresh fruits rather than from the various proprietary substitutes now on the market.

While the post memorandum was intended primarily for military personnel, the BAYONET suggests that civilians employed on the reservation ease the rigors of hot weather by availing themselves of this valuable information.

European Refugees Will Be Helpful To Uncle Sam

How profitable it was for us to give a home to those who found it possible to flee from Europe is shown again by a member of one of the enlisted radio operator's courses of the 4th Battalion, 1st Student Trainig Regiment.

Corporal Demitris Samaritos was a radio operator in the Greek army about 15 years ago, when he had to serve 2 years according to the conscription law, which at that time had already been enforced in most all of Europe. With his old experienced refreshened by the intensive Infantry School training, and in addition to his knowledge of the Greek language and terrain, he will be of good value in the coming invasion of the European continent.

"All I want," he says, "is to get a crack at Adolf and Musso, who combined had a tough time conquering my little country."

Corporal Samaritos is a man of wide travel. In the beginning of 1940, he was inducted into a section of the Greek Army which was similar to the duties of our own Merchant Marine. There he started to sail to the seas, leaving behind his family. Sending out his "dots and dashes" at various trips to England, to South Africa, to New Orleans, hauling war material to his country, he eventually landed in New York at the time when the Fascists tried in vain to overrun heroic Greece. It was then he was granted permission to stay in the United States of America.

A few days ago he received his Naturalization papers.

"It was one of the happiest days of my life," the Corporal admits.

"I've been selfish all my life and never noticed it," said a school girl. Familiarity, it seems, breeds blindness if it doesn't breed contempt.

As the home goes, so goes the nation.

A hot temper often calls from a cold heart,

Idealists try to play tomorrow's world on paper. Realists know they'll have to build it out of people.

Men still living on the moral capital of yesterday can scarcely understand the moral bankruptcy of today nor the moral battle for tomorrow.

USO Presents—

A LAND-OFFICE BUSINESS WRAPPING 2,500 PACKAGES FOR DOUGHBOYS

By PVT. SHELDON A. KEITEL

The package wrapping service at the information desk of the Army-Navy YMCA-USO handled last week 1,200 parcels . . . The past month it wrapped 2,300 packages . . . "The service will not fold up now that Fathers' Day is past, either" E. K. Ackerman, director of the club, announced this week. "What we are seeking now," he added, "is more volunteers to help us" . . Volunteers, who are expected to work only a few hours a day, are needed especially between the hours of 2:30 and 8 p. m. . . . So great a variety of packages has been brought into the establishment to be wrapped lately that one volunteer worker exclaimed she was awaiting a tire or a house next.

A picture of the great expansion of the wrapping service can be obtained by noting that the service had been offering servicemen originally during the holiday season. . . . Last May the mailing desk became an established feature at the YMCA-USO . . . The warm months do not bring on a shortage of servicemen's parcels to be wrapped, but do bring a shortage of volunteers Mr. Ackerman stated.

Schedule in short at the Ninth St. USO this week: Thursday, dance at 9 p. m., with the Military Maids. . . . Friday, pie social. . . . Saturday, dance at 9 p. m., with the 124th Infantry orchestra. . . . Sunday, Coffee-Ands, Sportorium and bridge party at 4 p. m., followed by music and hostess hours and movies in the evening. . . . Monday, dancing class. . . . Tuesday, art club and singing at 8:30 p. m., with 35 boys from Benning's ASTP and the Community Chorus.

The 300th Infantry will be in charge of the Army Hour broadcast Sunday at 5 p. m. from the Army-Navy YMCA-USO. . . . The new 300th Band will make music.

* * *

Fifty soldiers are invited to the picnic frolic Saturday at 4 p. m. from the Phenix City USO. . . . The Victorettes will be hostesses at the affair to be held on the grounds of the old Phenix City waterworks.

P.S.: All times are EWT.

Song Of The Allies' Dead

We are not dead; we fight; we march: we live;
We scheme; we plot; we plan; we draft new methods of destruction.
For through us only do those behind remember what our enemy has done, is doing, will do.
And using our death, no not death but our departure from this earthly struggle,
As a focal point for all their schemes and plottings and plannings and drafting of these new methods of destruction,
Do they make us fight and march and live,
Do they make us yet a part of freedom's struggle for existence?
"We have not died in vain." These words are tried and true.
Perhaps our "dying," as they call it, has not materially advanced our cause;
But if it inspires the ones behind to do their all, to give their all, never to submit, to be satisfied with no compromise of freedom,
Then, no, 'twas not in vain we left our place on earth.
Their talk of patriotism, sacrifice, the will to give one's all, is good, but not enough.
Men still are selfish, greedy, eager to profit by another's loss.
But loss of loved ones; husband, wives, children, friends, makes one forget all thoughts of profit, gain and well-lined pockets.
Who are our fighters, the ones who will not give in—who resist to their last ounce of human energy?
Not those who have been lulled to serve by patriotic bands and speeches—nor yet the ones who claim an everlasting love for country—nor even those who fight for gain or glory.
Our fighters are those who have loved us—we who are not dead but fight on and march on and live on. Our wives, mothers, children, buddies, these are our fighters!
The English, Russians, Chinese, Poles and all the others who know what war means, who have seen their loved ones fall victim to the thing they hated, but now look upon with cool detachment as they scheme and plot and plan and draft new methods of destruction for it.
These are our fighters!
When we, the human fuel for the only energy strong enough to defeat the powers of tyranny, have become enough, only then shall we know victory.
To win, we must "die." We must "die" to make the ones behind us strong. We must leave our loved ones to give them that energy they need for unceasing resistance.
Without us, they are merely soldiers and factory workers, sailors and merchants, housewives and farmers, servicemen and civilians.
With us they are an unconquerable, undefeatable force of freedom.
Our "death" then, is not in vain, nor is it death—it is the living fuel for an energy which by its being will be the means by which the victory will be ours.
No, we are not dead; we fight; we march; we live.

Key Says—

SHE APPRECIATES COLUMBUS MORE AFTER A WEEK-END JAUNT TO FLORIDA

I've been doing some grumbling, lately, about the inconveniences one encounters in Columbus. It seemed to me—this being my first experience of a town vainly trying to keep up with the demands of a greatly augmented population—that there were a lot of things which could be remedied easily if I were handling the situation. But that was before I spent a few days in a Florida town, formerly a pleasure resort but bulging with soldiers, sailors, ship yard workers.

True, the Florida sands gleam as white as ever, and the Florida waters are the same startling blue. But the sands lose a bit of their allure when you discover part of the beach between hotel sheets, where the laundry situation is so desperate that even a good hotel sometimes neglects to change bed linen between incoming and outgoing guests.

The weather's a bit on the warm side here, but I have yet to stop for a cold drink to be told languidly, "I'm sorry but we're all out of ice." Nor do we have a long line of persons, stretching for perhaps two blocks, patiently waiting their turn for a few pounds of the precious stuff.

I've complained, in the past, because restaurants in Columbus weren't always what I considered up to standard. That was before I discovered there are towns where, unless you eat before 9 p. m., you go hungry until the next morning. And where waitresses look at you wearily and you can almost hear they say, "What, another one to be fed!"

* * *

Perhaps I've criticized Columbus employers for not being a little more "choosy" in picking their help. But I hadn't known then there are places where adult labor is so hard to get that children are manning the elevators and the cash registers.

From now on I'm seeing Columbus from a new angle, with a deep appreciation for its advantages. It seems to me that, considering everything, Columbus has the situation well in hand.

Chaplain's Corner..

INVICTUS

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

I have a man to match these lines, and there must be others. "The fight is lost, and he knows it is lost, and yet he is fighting still."

I knew him as the most popular student in prep school, college and university. Graduating with the highest honors he returned to his own state and in a few short years took a commanding place in his profession.'

Then in the noonday of his power his fair name went into a moral eclipse. Not only he but his whole family entered into the tragedy. Unafraid, undaunted he started to build anew. None will ever know what he went through. Many of his former friends knew him no more. The fight was lost and he knew it was lost, yet he kept on.

Time is resting upon him now. He has not and never will attain his former position, but he is laughing and fighting still.

What a heart-breaking task it must be to fight a losing battle, to make the climb back. Many no doubt fail, but for those who win, hats off in their presence. They more than match the above heroic words—they belong to the immortals of Henley's "Invictus."

"Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul."

Educate a race without religion and you educate a race of clever devils.

Reward—

ENOUGH IS OFTEN FOUND IN A FEW KIND WORDS

By CAPT. F. M. SCHILLING

Tim Shea was pretty young to be a company commander, but what he lacked in age was made up by spirit to have "the best-damn-outfit, ever." Tim tried. That in itself might be the greatest point in his favor. Tim loved; pouring out his affection for life and living into the company. Tim loved Em, too, but not in the strong, masculine way that he loved the company. A love similar to a sailor's for his ship, or greater still, a love for home.

Sometimes things sail along smoothly for months. Everything worldly must roll around in cycles, a little good, a little bad. Fortune is like that. Streaks of good luck may continue for months without a bad break . . . and then it happens. Hell breaks loose in torrents, "the rains came," so to speak. And they continue. Day after day, week after week. Luck doesn't change for ages when it gets you down; especially if it gets you in a strangle-hold-grip, the way it had Tim. Nothing seems to break the jinx.

Zellisa, the supply sergeant, broke his leg on the obstacle course the first week of the bad luck run, only a day after Hood, his assistant had left on a ten-day furlough. Which was followed a few days later by a fire drill which nobody in the company heard, and a stack of "reply by endorsement here on" correspondence which started when the company clerk had erroneously placed important letters in an envelope addressed by some wit to the "Commanding General, 107th Underground Balloon Corp, HQ., Washington, D. C." Not to mention the surprise inspection which caught Company "G" unprepared, the hallway clock which stopped five minutes before "1st Call" for the battalion parade (on the same day the bugler, from "G" Company, by the way, forgot to repeat the call in that direction.)

Older company commanders might have taken all this in stride. Tim tried like the dickens to take it all in stride, too. It was a valiant attempt. The men mustn't know. "Never show your weakness Tim," the Old Timer had told him long ago. So he spoke in firmer tones and gave the commands louder at the formations. Age has assurance but youth has the spirit. Capt. Tim Shea was young. Assurance comes with experience and age. Capt. Tim Shea would grow older.

Actually, Company "G" was no worse off than the majority of other companies. Perhaps Tim thought it was worse off because he wanted so much to have it better than others. Then again, it takes time to feel the company. What at first seems like a hopeless task of straightening out becomes a simple process in time. But the main factor is always the men. Tim knew this. Knew that he must have their confidence and trust; their loyalty and cooperation.

And so it all reached a climax. . . . But that's getting ahead of the story. Tim came home on Thursday night thoroughly discouraged. He'd have given a fortune to be alone on a farm somewhere. Another nightmare of mistakes in the office. Even Em's "welcome home" kiss didn't relieve the situation. Few words were spoken. Tim crawled off to bed. "If I only knew I was making progress. If I only knew wether the men know I'm putting everything I've got into the job," Tim thought.

And so the next day was Friday. Somehow Friday always follows Thursday. It might as well have been the 13th. A note on the desk sent Tim hurrying on his way to the regimental commander's office. Another thing gone wrong? It was.

Tim stayed late at the company that evening. Somehow he hated to face Em. Then he did something strange. He noticed the shrubs in front of the company orderly room building needed water. With his pass key he entered the supply room and picked up a bucket. None of the men were around. Probably they had gone into town. Tim filled the bucket with water and started to wet the mulch around each bush. As he bent over the second bush he heard someone behind him: "Let me do it, Sir," he heard a voice say. Looking up he noticed three of the men from his company. The soldier who had spoken took the pail out of Tim's hands and started watering the third bush. "Alright . . . thanks," was all the young company commander could find in his throat to say.

As he started away he could hear the men talking. "The Old Man's O.K. He's looked sort of tired and worried lately, though," one voice said. "He's a good old scout," the other voice echoed.

Captain Tim Shea got into his car and turned on the ignition. He started for home. He knew he could take anything in his stride. "Old Man" Shea had grown older. "I wonder whether Em kept the supper warm?" he muttered before he started whistling.

THE COLONEL'S FAN GETS TANGLED UP IN PLENTY OF RED TAPE

By S. SGT. TOM McDONALD

Some of the days at Fort Benning are rather hot. (Ed's note: The best example of under-statement these aging eyes have beheld in a long, long time.) Now this in itself is nothing to shout about or even to raise one's voice over, but dash it all. Colonel Swampwater's electric fan broke and when that happens, the ol' boy usually goes on a rampage.

"Sergeant," he bellows, "I am burning up! It feels miserable up here without my fan; even my imported chewing gum doesn't taste good. Judas Priest, do something!"

"Yes, Sir!" I replied, scrambling to my typewriter and immediately slipping some triplicate forms into place. Requisitions to the Signal Corps, Corps of Engineers, and to the Ordnance Department.

Finally after two hours of work, I finished filling them out and got them started on their tour of the message centers. As I licked the envelope on the last set, I could feel Colonel Swampwater's hot breath on the back of my neck.

"Sergeant!" gasps he, "How long before my electric fan will be fixed?"

"Normally, Sir, it would take three months for the requisitions to get through, but I put 'extra-urgent' in the upper right-hand corner so we should have an answer by this afternoon."

True to my prediction, three neat letters arrived from the Signal Corps, the Corps of Engineers, and the Ordnance Department. With great deliberation I picked them up and brought them into my leader's lair and stood at attention.

"Are those the letters about my fan, Sergeant?"

"Yes, Sir," I replied.

"Well, read them to me Sergeant."

"Yes, Sir," I answered, fumbling with the one from the Corps of Engineers which read as follows:

"Dear Colonel Swampwater: Your request to have your fan fixed is indeed touching. We civilians here in the office feel for from the bottom of our hearts. Hot weather can be extremely annoying at times.

"As chief assistant fan fixer, I have brought your requisition to the attention of our Mr. Hobnob, our chief fan belt administrator who has been obliging about it alll. He suggests that you forward a letter through channels to Mr. Hangover, the third assistant shop clerk who will refer you to Mrs. Oblique who is Colonel Hightide's secretary.

"After Colonel Hightide okeys this requisition to have your fan fixed, it will be forwarded to the unit engineer's office through the Quartermaster Warehouse. Meanwhile you may call for our form 13, section 8, and fill it out in triplicate. Then take the original and one carbon copy to the ordnance section of the post exchange cafeteria, and they will initial it. Take the remaining carbon copy to the Quartermaster Motor Pool and give it to the dispatcher in charge.

"When this is done, report to post headquarters and fill out post engineer requisition form 17, 18, 19, and 20, all of which must be on green paper with black ink.

"On Thursday, July 27, 1948, one of our repairmen, Mr. Sykes, will report to Mr. Loop who will refer your case to Sgt. Hunt who will send a man from Motor Maintenance over to fix your fan.

Sincerely yours,
FREMONT P. HECKBURG,
Ass't Supervisor,
Post Engineers"

With a deep grimace, I put the letter down and gazed at my leader. His tongue was hanging out and his eyes rolled wildly in their sockets.

"Sir," I asked, "Do you want me to read you the other two letters?"

"No, Sergeant," he whispered. Don't read me anymore; just pick up that magazine and fan me. My head is swimming so I just feel dizzier and dizzier."

"Yes, Sir," I sympathized as I picked up the magazine and fanned him gently and with great benevolence.

If it's sound family life we're fighting for, teamwork in industry and utility everywhere, we've as hard a fight to wage at home as in the Solomons, Sardinia, Kiska or Attu.

A person wrapped up in himself makes a pretty small package, they say. And two people wrapped up in each other don't make a much bigger one.

Adam Lazonga II Passes Away As Gators Mourn

It's hail and farewell to Adam Lazonga II as the 200-pound alligator, one of the two famed mascots of the 124th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, died—leaving Adam Lazonga I shedding "crocodile tears" over the demise of his rival for affections of the men of the regiment.

The alligator died when he began to eat again this spring—as they diet during the winter—and now the regiment has only Adam Lazonga I.

Adam II was obtained when Adam I went AWOL last fall only to turn up as mysteriously as he disappeared, in answer to chow call one day. Adam I is just the baby 'gator and now his health is being guarded anxiously.

The regiment, a Florida outfit originally, is known as the 'Gator Regiment.

'Swing, Benning, Swing' At Stadium Friday Night

Colored Show Stars Local R. C. Talent In Musical Revue

The Reception Center Orchestra and Chorus and talent recruited from the various service units here at Fort Benning have whipped up a musical revue, "Swing, Benning, Swing," which will be performed at Doughboy Stadium, June 25 at 8:45 p. m.

Several original musical selections have been written for the show. Sgt. Clyde Ewell of the Reception Center Orchestra, has written the music for the title piece, "Swing, Benning, Swing" as well as the arrangements for the entire presentation. Cpl. Cleavant Dericks also attached to the Reception Center has composed a stirring march for the finale.

Swing will rule under the reign of Pfc. James Bailey of the Service Battalion, 2nd Student Training Regiment, whose renditions of his own melodies promise to be one of the highlights of the evening. His "Furlough Blues," "Stompin' on the KP Time" and "They Sent Joe to Tokio" are already known to Benning swing enthusiasts.

FEATURED DANCERS

Featured dancers are Sgt. William Irons, Sgt. Leroy People, and Pvt. Henry Carter of the 3rd STR and two "inkey-dinks," Pvts. Mitchell and Shore of the Reception Center.

Corp. Jackson and Sgt. Crook are a pair of comedians who prior to going G. I. were touring minstrel men. Their material was collected by Sgt. McIvers who will act as master of ceremonies.

To deviate a bit from the swing mood, Corp. Rawn Spearman, lyric tenor, who has thrilled Benningites in many previous stage and radio presentations will render several selections from Noel Cowards' "Bittersweet." Another deviation from the swing mood will be the appearance of Pfc. William Long whose splendid voice was bringing him fast recognition on the concert stage but then came Pearl Harbor.

Corp. Barry Sturmer, of the Post Special Service Office, aided and abetted by 1st Lt. James E. Reynolds, Special Service Officer of the Reception Center and 2nd Lt. William Long, special service officer of Service Club No. 5, recruited the talent, has handled the production of the revue.

Admission will be free to all post personnel.

Ex-Lawsonite Captures 4 Nazis In North Africa

Modestly writing home to his parents, "It's incidents like this that break the monotony here in North Africa," Sgt. Seaborn J. Underwood, Jr., described how he single-handedly captured four Nazis. A former member of the staff of Tail Skid, Lawson Field publication, Sgt. Underwood left here in August, 1942, and has since been stationed in North Africa with the U. S. Army Air Forces.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Seaborn J. Underwood, 1115 Fourth avenue, Columbus, Ga. About his experiences with the four Germans, Sgt. Underwood wrote his parents:

"Have a little incident to tell you about. The other night we were coming back from a small town in a truck. There were several of us coming back from a one-day pass, and we were about half asleep in the back of the truck.

"I felt the truck stop and some one asked the driver if anyone on the truck spoke French. So I looked over the side and looked into the faces of four Germans. You can believe me, if that truck had a top on it, I would have gone right through it. So I hopped down with expectancy, thinking they probably wanted to take the truck, but I didn't see any guns.

"I spoke to one of the fellows in French and asked him what he wanted. He told me that they were looking for a place in the south where there was no fighting. So I told him that they were my prisoners, and that they would have to give me any guns or knives that they had, and that they would have to be searched.

"He reached in the compartment of the car and handed me a Luger, the only gun in the crowd. We brought them back to camp, and everyone gathered around to gaze like they were monkeys in a cage. I had a Luger and a compass from them, but the intelligence officer took them away from me. Tough luck! It was only when I got back to camp that I found out the officer spoke English. I don't know why he wanted to speak French, unless he thought we were Frenchmen.

"It's incidents like that that break the monotony here in North Africa."

BY SGT. CARL NEU

IT WAS IRONICAL that when the 124th Gators gained their hard-earned 13-inning victory over the Student Training Brigade on Sunday, the verdict automatically handed the first-half title in the Infantry School league to the Academic Profs. The Profs and Gators have long been bitter rivals on the baseball diamond and basketball court, and they hate to concede a thing to the other party.

As one Gator partisan said in the press box at the start of the game, "This is one game that I don't care whether we win or not." "I'd hate to see the Profs ride into the title on the wings of a 124th victory." But that's the way it happened, and since the Prof title-clinching was practically inevitable, it didn't matter much.

In the face of such a situation as the Gators faced when they opposed the Brigade, however, it was encouraging to see the way they fought tooth and nail for that victory. They just couldn't be licked and when Sammy Inoff, their brilliant short-stop, slid home on that clean steal of the plate in the 13th, it marked a glorious ending to one of the best ball games played here all year.

THERE'LL BE some mighty classy colored baseball at Gowdy Field this coming week-end with four great games carded for a space of a little more than 24 hours. Tuskegee Army Flying School's crack nine meets the Panthers on Satnite and the famed Atlanta Black Crackers come here Sunday evening for the second game of their series with the Red Sox. In between there will be a Service League twin bill on Sunday afternoon, which means that some of the outstanding former professional ball-players from the nation's best colored leagues will be on view for soldier fans over the week-end.

BEN STANTON, Red Cross Water Saving Instructor who is here from Washington giving a course at Russ Pool, has given many such periods of instruction to soldiers all over the country. Some of his pupils are now in Guardalcanal, Australia, North Africa and England spreading the gospel of water safety to thousands upon thousands of American soldiers. Results of the Red Cross campaign are bound to save hundreds of lives, since the submarine menace continues and ship sinkings are inevitable.

Official Army statistics have shown that less than 10 per cent of the millions of men in uniform are capable of taking care of themselves in the event of any kind of water emergency—and less than 40 per cent are qualified swimmers. A mighty husky looking group of Benning G. I.'s reported Monday for the course, and we'll wager that when Stanton gets finished with his rugged instructional course, these lads will be excellently qualified to continue the instruction amongst the men of their own units.

GATOR GOLFERS of the 124th Infantry, through Press Agent Ed Fogg, have issued a blanket challenge to any other unit at the post, for a golf match to determine a post regimental champ. The Gator team is composed of four officers and four men and would like to meet a similar group of eight from some other unit.

This corner would be glad to hear from any challengers, and we'll pass the threat along to the Gator linksmen. One of the officers on the 124th squad, incidentally, is Jim Todd, erstwhile Georgia footballer, who starred in the Rose Bowl game.

WHEN DRAGON baseballers of the 3rd Armored Regiment won the third and final game of their Tiger Division playoff series last week, it marked the sixth division championship garnered by the unit in eleven months, which is a record really worth boasting about in any man's Army—and particularly in the 10th Armored Division where good athletes and powerful teams abounded.

It all started last September when the Dragons won their first baseball crown with a garrison finish after a slow start. Then they turned to football and under the able tutelage of Captain (now Major) Leo Gregory, they won the Tiger grid championship and finished second in the strong Fort Benning Conference.

The next conquest, during early April, was on the volleyball court where a six-man team representing regimental headquarters won the 3rd Armored championship, and went on to take the divisional title in straight games. In the divisional track meet this spring, the Dragons were once again supreme, scoring 45 points to more than double their nearest rivals. Lt. McPeak, one of the volleyball stars, helped the unit to another title when he took the Tiger handball crown about the same time.

Although the Dragons did not succeed in winning the division boxing crown, they did manage to share the post championship when a well-rounded eight-man team met the defending 29th Infantry in a challenge match and gained a draw in an exciting match. Finally came baseball again and again the Dragons reign supreme.

One of the reasons for the success of the 3rd Armored teams has been the wholehearted backing of the teams lent by Col. Thomas M. Brinkley, regimental commander, and Lt. Col. Wm. T. S. Roberts, regimental executive. Both have been number one rooters on the sidelines during practically every contest. If the Dragon carries that same winning spirit onto the field of battle that it has shown on the field of sport, he's going to be a mighty tough critter for Hitler and Co. to handle.

SHORT SHOTS—There's even a grandpa playing baseball at the fort this year. He's Charlie Harris, utility man for the championship Profs, who at the ripe old age of 36 is a bonafide grandpop. . . . Tallest diamond ace is undoubtedly Tom (Slim) Hall, the gigantic six foot-six inch first baseman and pitcher on the Post Detachment nine. He's not only tall, but appears to be the hardest hitter at the post. His line drives are really scorchers. . . . Sparky Suchara, new 176th Infantary catcher, really earns his nickname. He's the guy who ignited the Spirt of 176 into a raging fire in late inning rallies that won several recent games for them. . . . Major Ed Davis, who served here for many years as master sergeant and was a former press box announcer after his ball-playing days ended, dropped in to say hello last week. He was on furlough from his new post at Temple, Texas, where he says its hotter than you-know-where. . . . Congrats to baseball ump Bob Ayers and 176th special service officer James Brown, both of whom are sporting brand new captain's bars these days. . . . Details are now being worked out for the first-half post title series between the Profs and the Parachute School which will probably start on the Fourth of July with plenty of fireworks.

Profs, Dragons Capture Diamond Titles

Academic Nine Clinches Flag As Gators Win

Idle Profs Triumph When 124th Halts Brigade Threat

BY SGT. MILTON LUBAN

Through all the furore of a hectic Sunday triple-header which saw all the favorites toppled, the idle Academic Regiment Profs emerged with undisputed possession of the Infantry School league first-half championship.

Although the Profs still have to play the 176th Spirits on Monday and the 300th Triplets next Friday, the games will have bearing only on the fight for second place as no matter what the Profs do, the title is theirs.

2ND PLACE FIGHT

Ownership of second place, however, is a complete scramble. Four teams are mixed up in the fight with only one game separating the current second place Student Training Brigade and the fifth place 124th. In between are the 300th and the 176th.

Two days last week settled the championship. On Friday night at Gowdy Field the Profs tore into the 244th Field Artillery for a 17-3 trouncing. The victory assured the Profs of at least a tie for the first-half crown regardless of what happened in the remaining games.

Meanwhile, at Harmony Church, the 300th took a 6-4 clout on the chin from the STB Rifles, thus eliminating the Triplets from all title hopes.

GATORS DECIDE

Then on Sunday the scrappy 124th Gators took a 13-inning 3-2 thriller over the Brigade and out went the Brigadier hopes.

On the same bill the 176th Spirits shoved themselves into the second-place fight by slapping the 300th, 8 to 5, and then, the following day, bolstered their chances by whipping the 244th F. A., 7 to 3. The third game of Sunday's triple-header saw the 764th Tanks shut out the Rifles, 2 to 0.

300TH VS. TANKS

Tomorrow night the 300th and the 764th Tanks clash at Gowdy Field, while the 124th will close its first-half season at Harmony Church playing the 244th F. A.

On Sunday the Brigade and the 764th Tanks meet at Harmony Church in the first game of a double-header which includes a game between the STR Rifles and the 244th. On Monday the Profs face the 176th Spirits at Gowdy Field, while the Brigade and the Tanks clash again at Harmony Church in a postponed game.

Parachute School Bows To Columbus

The Parachute School took its second drubbing of the season from the strong Columbus Foxes in last Friday evening at Golden Park in Columbus when the city nine grabbed a 14-7 decision in a wild game.

Bucket Vaughn and Mike Hogan split the hurling chores for the chutists and gave up 12 hits. Vaughn was toucher for five in three frames, while Hogan gave up seven in the remaining innings. Poor support hurt the pitchers, however, with eight errors being scored against the Benning nine.

Hal Simmons and Archie Corley did the pitching for Columbus and were nicked for only nine hits by the usually hard-hitting TPS nine. Kissell, Morris and Hogan had two hits apiece for the losers.

CHAMPION DRAGONS—Here is the scrappy 3rd Armored Regiment baseball squad which last week captured the 10th Armored Division baseball crown for the second straight year by defeating the 774th Tank Destroyers in the third and deciding game of a play-off series between the titlists of the Sand Hill and Cusseta leagues. The Dragons won the first tilt, 8-4; dropped the second, 1-0, and then grabbed the finale by a 3-2 count to capture the laurels.

Soldier Swim Exhibit Marks Conclusion Of Red Cross Training

A remarkable water show of military nature will be staged for edification of post personnel next Thursday night, July 1, at 7 o'clock in Russ Pool. The show will mark the official graduation exercises of a selected group of Benning soldiers who are now taking a two-week course in combat swimming instruction.

The event, which will last approximately an hour, will be conducted under the supervision of Ben Stanton and Holman Marks, nationally famous Red Cross Water Saving experts, who are here for two weeks conducting the instructor's classes at the enlisted men's pool.

FULTON TO ATTEND

It is expected that Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, will witness the exhibition of military aquatics and then present Red Cross certificates to the successful members of the "commando" swim class.

Heading the novel features of the soldier aquatic exhibit will be that of swimming through burning oil, in which the amphibious soldiers will splash the water ahead of them in order to make a pathway through the conflagration.

BLOW UP SHIRT

Other Benning soldier-swimmers will demonstrate the new techniques of inflating an ordinary G. I. shirt in the water on a man's back by blowing air inside while under water, as well as the inflation of trouser legs and barracks bags.

A ten-foot addition to the present high-diving platform at Russ Pool will be built and the "commandos" will leap from some 20 feet above the water into the pool while fully clothed; they will swim through the pool carrying full equipment; demonstrate rescue techniques they are now learning; do silent swimming, swim with rifles and many other water safety stunts they have been taught.

TO SAVE LIVES

The water show is expected to attract unusual interest, since it will demonstrate convincingly many of the newest innovations designed to save the lives of countless American soldiers in event of ship sinkings or other marine disasters.

Stanton and Marks put a husky class of more than 75 already qualified swimmers through stiff drills the first three days of this week, and will continue for another week. At the conclusion of the course, the graduates will then be qualified to carry on the same type of instruction amongst the men in their own units.

LARGE CLASS

The new course in functional swimming and water safety was begun by the Red Cross just about a year ago and has already been taught to hundreds of soldiers in different camps throughout the country. This is the first visit of the instructors to Benning but they are handling one of the biggest classes on record due to the capacity of Russ Pool.

Red Sox, Atlanta Black Crackers To Meet Twice

Teams Will Clash June 26-27 In Post, Columbus Ball Parks

A special treat for the baseball fans of Fort Benning and Columbus has been arranged for the week-end of June 26 and 27, bringing together the league leading Red Sox and the renowned Atlanta Black Crackers.

The first meet will be in Columbus Park at 5 p. m., CWT, June 26 under the auspices of the Columbus Athletic Association.

The second game will bring the teams to the Main Post on Sunday, June 27 wheer they will perform in Gowdy Field at 7 p. m., following an afternoon tilt between the Red Sox and the 3rd STR Panthers.

Fans who are familiar with the power and showmanship of the teams, expect the Crackers-Sox game to be the outstanding exhibition of baseball of the Fort Benning season.

POWERHOUSE

The Red Sox have proven to be the powerhouse of the Service League, piling up fourteen wins out of fifteen pre-season games and since the official opening of the season remain the only undefeated team in the league.

The superlative pitching of Taylor, Romby, Randolph and Swann, combined with the terrific hitting of the team make this nine the team to watch in this circuit. Among the wielders of the heavy wood is Randolph, the sensational southpaw hurler who, in 28 trips to the plate, has picked up an average of .643. John Washington, spectacular first sacker, in 43 tries with the hickory carries a cool .627. Both of the aforementioned gentlemen have designs on the 455 foot marker in Gowdy Field.

TPS Tops Foxes At Gowdy Field

Chutists Gain 7-3 Win Over Columbus

The Parachute School nine played improved ball Tuesday night at Gowdy Field to capture a 7-3 decision over the strong Columbus Foxes in an exciting game played under the arclights before a large crowd of soldier fans.

Manager Hogan made his debut as pilot of the Parachute club last night and threw Bardin at the Foxes and the right-hander not only limited the Foxes to six scattered hits but he also fanned no less than 14 men. Only big John Wright, Columbus first sacker, was able to solve Bardin's slants and in the 9th inning the Foxes clean-up man drove out a tremendous home run over the wall in deep right-center field. The drive was some 400-feet.

Harold Simmons started for the Foxes and had to be relieved by Tom Dixon in the fifth after being touched for 7 hits and 5 runs, only two of which were earned. The loss was Simmons' second of the year against three wins.

Inoff Pilfers Home In 13th For Gator Win

Christie Stars On Mound As 124th Upsets Brigade

In the longest game played at Gowdy Field this year, Lew Christie pitched and Sam Inoff offensively led the 124th Infantry Gators to a 13th inning victory over the Student Training Brigade, 3-2.

Christie, hurling magnificently in the pinches, allowed bu 7 hits in the game and blanked the Brigade in 12 innings. Sammy Inoff, Gator shortstop, got two of the Gators seven hits and thrilled the crammed stands in the 13th by pulling a Ty Cobb and stealing home with the winning run.

BRIGADE TIES

Carlson, the 'S T B hurler, blanked the 124th until the last of the lucky seventh, when 2 passes and a single by Merl Stoker netted two runs. The losers retaliated in the 8th after Christie had fanned the first two batters. McCluskey drew a walk and was sent home on Kemether's long triple to the fence. Kemether came on across with the tying run, as the throw in went under the runner and rolled to the grandstand.

In the ninth, Carlson hit Smith with one out and Gallo's single sent him to third. Prendergast, southpaw relief hurler for the Brigade, forced Stoker to hit into an around-the-horn double play to cut off the rally. Score, 2 to 2.

GREAT THROW

Vern Smith, Gator left fielder, saved the game for the 124th in the eleventh by throwing a perfect strike from deep left to nail Kemether coming home from second on Simmons single. In the 12th, Christie faced the STB cleanup batter, with two outs and the sacks loaded, Chris came through by fanning the heavy sticker on three pitches.

ENDS IN 13TH

The 13th, which broke the longest game record, found the losers set down in order by Christie and the Gator leadoff man driving a single to start their half of the inning. Hanvey laid a bunt down to first sending Inoff to second. Rogers grounded to second and Inoff went to third on the play. DeVolder, another southpaw pitching for the STB, threw two balls to Belin and on the third pitch Sammy Inoff electrified the stands by streaking in with the pitch and sliding under the catcher for the winning run.

774th Loses To 3rd Armored In Playoff Series

Brett Hurls Dragons To Both Wins As Teedees Bow

The scrappy 3rd Armored Regiment Dragons captured the baseball crown of the 10th Armored Division last week for the second straight year when they won two out of three games from the 774th Tank Destroyers in an inter-league playoff series.

The Sand Hill league titlists won the opener of the series with the Cusseta league champs at the same field on Wednesday by an 8-4 count but received an unexpected setback at Gowdy Field the next day when they were licked 1-0 in the best game of the series.

WIN IN 8TH

It was a line single to left by Yonchuk, Dragon shortstop and clean-up hitter in the last half of the eighth frame that gave the 3rd Armored the laurels. Yonchuk's smash scored a runner from second with the deciding run.

Big hero of the series for the Dragons was Relph Brett, classy right-hander, who hurled the trumph in the opener, Brett came back Friday to turn in a beautiful four-hit performance.

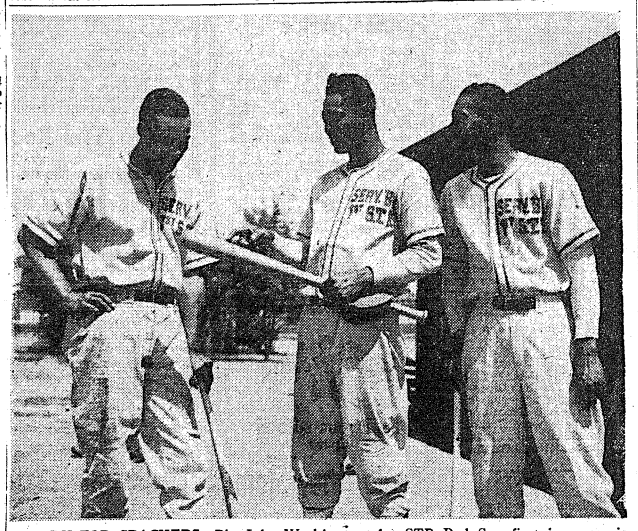
BRETT WINS TWO

In turning in his two triumphs, Brett twice gained the nod over Big Claude Shoemake, the sensational mound star of the 774th, who had been burning up the Cusseta circuit. Shoemake allowed only five hits in the finale, however, and fanned seven Dragons but when the 3rd went on its late inning rampage, it was all over.

Toast of the Teedees during the series was hurler Hurley Martin, who kept the Tank Destroyers in the fight by pitching a brilliant two-hitter at Gowdy Field on Thursday afternoon. Unbeaten all season, the sterling right-hander ran his string of consecutive scoreless innings to 41 and allowed only four balls to be hit out of the infield during the entire game. He fanned seven and walked only one batter.

MARTIN STARS

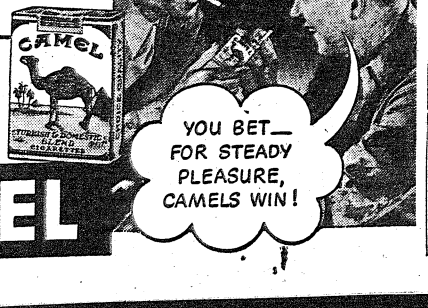
Martin had plenty of stiff opposition from Gramp Larson, who did the slab work for the Dragons and permitted only five hits. The lone Teedee run came in the sixth when Bobby Klein doubled to left, advanced on an infield out and scored when Claude Shoemake drove out a hot single to decide the mound duel.



The opening game of the series last Wednesday was the sloppiest of the three-game set. The Dragons built up a five run advantage in the early frames on some timely hitting plus several miscues by the 774th nine. Brett was the Dragon hurler and held the Teedees to five hits while his own mates amassed seven off Shoemake, the 774th all-around flash.

Thus, the 3rd Armored Regiment maintained its athletic superiority in the Tiger division by adding a second straight baseball crown to its already crowded trophy belt.

Denton Tecumseh (Cy) Young, pitching for Boston, St. Louis, and Cleveland Indians, won 511 major league games in 22 years. Walter Johnson was second with 414, all won for Washington.



Chuck Klein, of the Philadelphia Phillies, was the last man to hit four home runs in a single game. Others to accomplish this feat were Lou Gehrig, Bobby Lowe and Ed Delahanty.

Red Sox Take Over Lead In Service Loop

1st STR Captures Two More Games To Top League

Winning their fourth straight loop test from the Reception Center by a 3-0 count on Monday night, the powerful 1st STR Red Sox swept into undisputed possession of first place in the Service league as the teams neared the halfway mark in the first half pennant chase.

A cluster of three runs in the top half of the final frame, after the teams had battled scoreless throughout an exciting game, gave the Red Sox their victory. They loaded the bases on an error, a hit and a walk and then a long hit to left field cleared the sacks.

Last Friday, the Sox walloped the 2nd STR Commandos by a 14-4 tally in another game played at the R. C. Field for their third win in the league. Tomorrow night, however, they meet a stern test in a game on the R. C. diamond when they tangle with the Post Detachment Tigers who now share a deadlock for second place in the circuit standings.

The Tigers helped the Red Sox take over the top slot late last week by slamming out an 11-2 win over the 3rd STR Panthers, former loop leaders, in a game played at Gowdy Field. Simpson on the mound for the winners pitched superlative ball and had some great hitting support from Catcher Sam Hale and First Baseman Tom Hall.

That defeat started the Panthers into a slide which continued Monday when they bowed to the Provisional Truck Blues by 11-3 at Brigade Field in the Harmony Church area. Lack of pitching has hurt the Panthers with both Fonville and Brummitt, their ace hurlers, on the sidelines due to hand injuries.

In other games during the past week, Reception Center trimmed the Academic Pacesetters, 16-6; the Red Sox dumped the PTR Reds, 18-4; and the PTR Blues defeated the Commandos, 15-5. The Blues are now tied for second place with the Tigers while the Panthers share a fourth place deadlock with the Reception Center.

An interesting game is carded for tonight at Gowdy Field when the Panthers and Commandos, arch rivals from the H. C. area clash at 7 o'clock. Also tonight, the PTR Reds invade the Reception Center for a 6:30 encounter. Besides tomorrow night's Red Sox-Tiger game, the PTR Blues entertain the Pacesetters at Brigade Field.

Sunday, the Service League will take over Gowdy Field for a twin bill beginning at 1:30. Reception Center meets the powerful Blues in the opener, while the Red Sox will clash with the Panthers in the nightcap.

Next Tuesday, Post Detachment and the Commandos clash at Brigade Field while the Reds and the Pacesetters will stage a cellar battle at the R. C. diamond. If the league-leading Red Sox succeed in winning their games with the Tigers and Panthers, they will have just about clinched the first-half flag since their only remaining game will be with the Academic Regiment current occupants of the cellar spot in the loop.

Varchminn's Sensational Hurling Carries Chutist Team to Top in Softball

Three Tens Deadlocked For Second Position In League Standing

Sensational pitching by Earl Varchminn, Benning's top softball hurler, has carried the 1st Academic Co. of the Parachute School to the lead in the post softball league after a late start.

The chutists have now won four in a row without a setback and rate at the top of the heap in this week's standings which were released by the F. B. A. A. before Tuesday night's games had been played.

THREE-WAY TIE

A real dogfight is going on for second place in the fatings with the 124th Gators, Academic Profs and 2nd STR Leaders all deadlocked with six wins and three losses. The once-proud Lawson Field Fliers have nose-dived into fifth place, one game behind the second-place trio.

The chutists, of course, still have ten games to play and will have a heavy schedule the rest of the way since they must make up several games. The Parachute School entry replaced the now - defunct Student Training Brigade ten about three weeks after the loop started. All of Brigade's games were cancelled off the record and must be replayed by the chutists.

CHUTISTS FAVORED

However, the way Varchminn is bowling over the opposition, 1st Academic Co. now rates as the title favorite for the first-half of the softball schedule. In his first four starts, he has set down all of the second place teams with great finesse.

Two of the wins were no-hitters. Against the Gators, he turned in a perfect game, facing only 21 batsmen, to win by a shutout. He also set the Profs down without a hit, but they did manage to tally a run and the chutists won by 8-1.

The 2nd STR Leaders fared a little better against Varchminn's violent slants, garnering three hits and dropping the decision to the loop newcomers by a 2-1 count. 3rd STR bowed 6-0 in a tilt where Varchminn gave up only one hit.

ONLY FOUR HITS

Therefore, in four full games, the sensational moundsman has permitted only four hits which is record pitching in any man's league. Tonight Varchminn will hurl against Lawson Field in a game at the chutists' home diamond.

Other battles tonight will pit the Gators against 3rd STR, the 176th against Station Hospital, and 2nd STR opposite the Profs with the last named being the home teams. Next Tuesday, the Spirits invade Gatorland, 2nd STR treks in to Lawson Field, Varchminn and Co. visit Station Hospital, and 3rd STR plays at the Academic Regiment.

Triplets Bow To 176th Nine

Wissman And Cooper Hurl Spirits To 8-5 Triumph

The 176th Infantry Spirits defeated the 300th Infantry baseball team Sunday afternoon in a hotly contested battle by a score of 8-5. The game was played before a packed stand who voiced their sentiments at every opportunity. It was a Spirit crowd who cheered their favorites on to victory.

"Lefty" Wissman started on the mound for the Spirits and pitched beautiful ball until an old leg injury forced him out. Wisman had those Triplet runners that reached first base hopping as he threw strikes to the first baseman, Poland, in an effort to catch men off the base. Wissman is an old hand at picking runners off base.

FRANCIS LICKED

In the fifth inning Lefty Francis, the Triplet starting pitcher was forced to leave the game after he had loaded the bases. Red Cave came in to relieve him with the score 3-2, one out.

Cave pitcned three straight balls and the bleachers went wild. They took up the chant, and began to clap and stamp their feet. Wissman was on third, Richardson on second, Compton on first and the Spirit's most dangerous batter up, Ram Ramazotti. The next ball was a strike. Then came the fourth ball and Wissman walked in with the fourth Spirit run.

Lukevitch was the next batter. Cave's first pitch was a strike. The next pitch was fouled off. Then a ball. Count was now 2 strikes and one ball. Then with three and two, one out, bases loaded, Luke hit the next ball right down the center alley. The Triplet shortstop made a sensational stop, tossed to the second baseman for one out and then the relay to first ended the inning.

COOPER FINISHES

Cooper came in to pitch the sixth inning. He did a good job, and in spite of his coming in "cold" he managed to pitch swell ball. Ramazotti thrilled the stands in the seventh inning when he stole home after hitting a towering triple to deep right field. Ram had a single, double, triple, and two walks for a perfect day.

Red Sox Win Runaway 18-4

The Red Sox sluggers of 1st STR continued to set a blistering pace in the Service league, this past week, by winning their second league game from the PTR Reds 18-4 at Gowdy Field.

"Lefty Romby" whiffed 10 batters and held the PTR Reds to two hits. The Red Sox hard hitting outfit started out with a five run rally in the first inning. Jones, the PTR Reds moundsman walked Johnson, the Sox 3-B and Haynesworth, 2-B for the Red Sox. Randolph, R-F, ups a line drive down the first base line for a base hit scoring Johnson. Washington, sensational first sacker connected, driving a double deep into center field scoring Haynesworth and Randolph.

Gator Officers Win Fifteenth Straight In Softball League

The 124th Infantry Officers Softball team last Monday defeated the 1st Student Training Regiment, 3 to 1, to gain undisputed possession of first place in the post Officers Softball League and run their win streak to fifteen straight. During the game, the Gators lent perfect support to Knute Crosson, the 124th pitcher, by executing four double plays.

Dick Koeller doubled to left in the first inning to send Andy Jackson and shortfielder Bragaw home with two runs. Koeller later scored the final Gator run on Leonardo's single. The double plays, came in the first four innings and a fifth was missed by a step.

Tuskegee Fliers To Meet Cats Here In Saturday Battle

Tuskegee Army Flying School's crack baseball nine will invade Fort Benning on Saturday night for a game with the 3rd STR Panthers slated for Gowdy Field at 7:00 o'clock.

It will mark the first visit of the season for the Fliers who were a popular basketball visitor here during the indoor court campaign. The TAFS rate as one of the strongest colored nines in the Army and an exciting game is expected.

For the visitors from Tuskegee, a hurler named James is expected to toe the slab with Smith doing the catching. Either Brummitt, if his injured hand is healed, or Walker, a newcomer, will do the mound work for the Panthers.

Tuskegee boasts a long-distance hitter in its first baseman, Machey, while Rowers, a basketball star, is also a big threat at the plate for the visitors. Hank Blackburn, Lou Johnson, and Frankie Phillipson are the big batters for the Benning nine.

A HERO MEETS HIS UNCLE—Lt. (jg) G. T. Weems USN (right), hero of an episode of a naval battle off Guadalcanal, visited his uncle, Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of The Infantry School. Lt. Weems received the Navy's Silver Cross for gallantry in action. He has been transferred to aviation schools in this country and plans to become a pilot. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

General Weems' Nephew Decorated for Gallantry

Won Silver Cross For Heroic Mission In Guadalcanal Battle

A swim in the South Pacific's Guadalcanal in the middle of the night isn't included in the routine duties of a naval officer. But in the case of Lt. (jg) G. T. Weems, it was an expedient to determine the identity of a partly burned warcraft and secure information necessary for the security of his own and other United States Navy vessels.

Lt. Weems, son of Commander P. V. H. Weems, and nephew of Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of The Infantry School, is visiting his uncle at this post prior to entering aviation training at schools in Dallas, Tex., and Pensacola, Fla. He has served a year with the Navy in the South Pacific and has been awarded the Navy's Silver Cross for gallantry in action. During his year in the South Pacific, he participated in three major naval engagements.

The one in which he received the recommendation for the Silver Cross, occurred off Guadalcanal and included the swim through shark-infested waters. It was his first big engagement.

He was stationed aboard one of the newer destroyers assigned to a task force whose duty was to prevent the Japs from landing supplies and reinforcements on Guadalcanal. After three days of this assignment, word came of the approach of a Jap cruiser force.

WE MEET THE JAP!

The call to battle stations came over the ship's speaker system along with the captain's message, "We meet the Japs tonight. Give them hell."

When the enemy was sighted, the American destroyers opened up at about 2,000 yards. There was no return fire immediately and Lt. Weems thought for a moment they were not Jap ships after all. The Japs finally returned the fire but American shells had found their marks and were doing frightful damage.

Lt. Weems described the picture as something Hollywood could could never produce with its vivid toy boat battles. He saw a series of flashes as hits were scored on one vessel. Then it was silhouetted against the sky by the burst of star shells. There followed a series of explosions and flares as fire broke out. The ship then folded in two and sank.

After the action, it was noted one of the American destroyers was missing and the destroyer on which Lt. Weems was aboard, turned about to look for it. Toward midnight, they spotted a glow of a ship afire. However they could not identify the craft.

SHARK-INFESTED WATERS

A launch was lowered and Lt. Weems was among those aboard who set out to investigate. It approached to within five hundred yards of the vessel and still could not identify it. Then Lt. Weems volunteered to swim the distance. He found the vessel to be American, burning in several places and abandoned. The crew of the launch joined him and efforts were made to salvage the ship. But it had to be sunk the following day.

Later that day, Lt. Weems and his mates were picked up by their destroyer.

Back in the states, he is anxious to complete his aviation training and go back into action—in the air this time. Lt. Weems is a graduate of the United States Naval Academy. A brother, Capt. P. V. H. Weems, Jr., is with the Marines in the South Pacific.

LIEUT. COL. BOYKIN

The promotion of Major Starley N. Boykin to lieutenant colonel has been announced at headquarters of the Second Student Training Regiment. He is commanding officer of the 1st Battalion of the regiment.

Lt. Col. Boykin, whose home is in Grapeland, Texas, received his commission as 2nd lieutenant in 1931 and entered active service on Dec. 9, 1941.

Through successive promotions, his duties in the Second Regiment included those of company commander, battalion executive officer, and battalion commander.

Hospital Patients See Movie Shorts

At the usual weekly entertainment the neuropsychiatric patients at Station Hospital were entertained by several excellent movie shorts. These shorts included excellent views of deep sea fishing; a championship wrestling bout and miscellaneous thrill subjects. These movie shorts were accompanied by centralized music and sound and were presented through the courtesy of the Phillip Morris Cigarette Company.

The usual refreshments of punch was served to all, by the American Red Cross, during the display.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

Wartime reasoning: Your heart insists on loveliness; your head dictates long-lasting quality; your creed is economy . . . to buy more War Bonds. The combination and understanding of Columbus merchants will enable you to do your utmost.

Fashion reports from all over the country prove that white shoes are more popular than ever this summer season. To keep up with the constant demand of smart women in Columbus, The MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY still has available, white shoes in every size, every brand and every style. If your still need a good pair of white dress shoes to wear this summer and next summer too, you'll like the bucko pumps, with or without bows. For perhaps, a bit more support and yet the same smart appearance high heeled "dies" will keep you right in the swim. On the Post and in Columbus, too, I've noticed more than a few women wear play shoes for day wear. The smart designs of Penaljo, Joyce, Daniel Green and Easy Goers will assure you smartness with comfort and support. You'll find too, that these substantial play shoes will withstand a great deal of scuffing about. Whether you plan to spend your No. 18 coupon on white shoes or low heeled play shoes, I'm sure you'll be more than satisfied with the selections of Miller-Taylor's.

Being able to send a good deal of time at the Officers' Club pool, I've had a chance to notice just how many youngsters are taking advantage of the excellent swimming facilities. If your little boy or girl is not one of those splashing about in the inviting water these hot days, I suggest you visit KIRVENS, select a tiny bathing suit and let your growing offspring have the benefit of healthful exercise, and sunshine. The J. A. Kirven Company has a large section of their second floor devoted to swimming equipment. Apparel for tiny tots and young adolescents is all reasonably priced and attractively designed. Dressmaker suits, one piece styles for girls and "boxer-type" or pleated shorts for boys feature many famous labels. Materials in many of the suits are seersucker and printed or plain rayon fabrics. The outstanding array of swimming equipment displayed in this department store will facilitate your shopping no end.

Now that so much radio time is dedicated to the war news many persons have found the best way to enjoy an hour or two of music is start the "Vic" going and get out all the best records. No matter what a large supply of records you have you always seem to need some new ones. The basement of SEARS ROEBUCK COMPANY has a large and assorted supply of the latest "Hit" records for your enjoyment. If you're in your glory listening to the smooth trumpetings of Harry James, you'll find many of his latest offerings on sale here. Those melodious melodiers, The Inkspots give many a tuneful rendition of currently popular songs. Both Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey put out equally smooth notes in unusual arrangements of both new and old tunes. Sweet music and "jive" that's really hot is yours for the asking. I know you'll "ask", too, if you plan to brighten up your leisure hours at home. Sears Roebuck's Decca and Victor records will afford you and your family many an enjoyable moment.

Perky pinafores have at last come into their own as fashionable wear for women of all ages. Some smart designers have no doubt figured that youngsters aren't the only ones who get a kick out of wearing ruffles. No matter what YOUR years you'll find selecting the right pinafore, probably one not too extreme in color and design will give you a rather tricky outfit to wear around the house and to the PX and the Commissary. The gingham pinafores of white with black, green, brown or red checks are suitable and subdued enough for women above the age of sixteen. The short sleeved white blouse to accompany the pinafore features a plain, slightly gathered round neckline which shows above the heart-shaped neckline of the pinafore itself. White rick rack trim spins three times around the hem of the pinafore and once around the neckline to give a finished appearance. Any of these eye-appealing creations of KAYSER-JULIENTHAL, INC., will prove a noteworthy and inexpensive addition to your wardrobe.

Photographs have long been one of the most appropriate ways to have lasting evidence of important occasions. Baby pictures, graduation photographs, wedding pictures and so on all can call to mind again the significant moments of years gone by. Officer candidates graduating and receiving their second lieutenant's gold bars have indeed a noteworthy event which should be photographically recorded. The regulation summer uniforms of all officers are especially suitable in tone for excellent photographic results. Lights and shadows are clearly picked up by the photographic lense and result in "sharp" photographs. Personal consideration and expert workmanship will result in all graduating officer candidates and newly commissioned second lieutenants being more than satisfied with their photographic portraits by the AIME DUPONT STUDIOS.

Station Hospital Unit Plays Unique Role for Convalescent Doughboys

Is No Infirmary Of Bathrobes And Pajamas, Visiting Scribe Learns

"Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labour and to wait."
—Longfellow.

This closing verse from "Psalm of Life," might well be the motto for Station Hospital Unit No. 2 for convalescent patients at Fort Benning—the only such unit in the Fourth Service Command.

This is no hospital of bathrobes and pajamas. These soldiers in this unit are up and dressed and seriously about this business of effecting a complete recovery in order to return to their home units for active duty.

Consequently, a program designed to restore both physical and mental healings has been perfected by various officers in this unit headed by Colonel William L. Starnes, commanding officer. A program of work and play; good food; the finest medical care the Army can provide with the newest in equipment; comfortable living conditions; absolute freedom for expressing any constructive idea, and always the co-operation, understanding and wise counseling of their superior officers has made possible recovery of more than 500 patients since the unit's opening in March of this year.

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING

Working on the theory that "something for nothing" is always a challenge to man, 2nd Lieut. Clifford K. Okuno, sanitary and laboratory officer at this unit has worked out plans of construction with soldiers convalescing in this area that give the mind employment, the body needed exercise and valuable sun rays, and that light the spark in a man's heart for the love of life and pure joy in his usefulness.

A field sanitary area composed of 12 units consisting of an underground trench incinerator; human waste vaults; garbage disposal plants; improvised outdoor showers; different types of latrines; and outdoor incinerator and an underground food storage vault are among the important projects constructed under Lt. Okuno's supervision. Materials salvaged from scrap piles left from the construction of the area were used. Rocks were brought from nearby streams and fields.

The convalescent soldiers work only such time as doctors allow and have made this model sanitary area as preparation for the day when they will be doing "field duty" in the tropics, the frozen north or some continental European post. There they will be able to bring into full play this valuable knowledge for their own and their soldier-buddies' protection.

GOOD EARTH POLICY

Plans and training officer for the reconditioning program is Captain John Bell. He successfully demonstrates the good earth policy with the soldiers in the Victory garden project, knowing that no method is so rich in dividends as seeing growing things come to life under one's own hands. Plenty of fresh garden vegetables to build strong bodies for the physical man, and the satisfaction that comes from a job well done for the mental is the victory harvest reaped from this project.

Not the least of the activities under the plans and raining officer is the showing of the latest news and orientation films each day, provided through the co-operation of Lt. Col. Clarence A. Will, post plans and training officer. Films showing every organization on the post are shown at some time or other to these men who are representatives from every outfit in this convalescent group. Once each week round table discussions are held with the officers and men participating when world problems are debated and settled, at least to their own satisfaction.

ARMS INSTRUCTION

There are line officers to instruct in arms. An infantry and a field artillery officer keep these men in practice in the rudiments of their separate branches. One thought is ever uppermist in the minds of the officers responsible for the convalescence of these men: prepare them to take their place with their own organization strong in body, active in mind, with a clear idea of their responsibility to their organization, and to better equip them for the arduous task confronting them.

"Making little ones out of big ones' so to speak has resulted in the neat little white picket fence around the administration building. Old fruit and vegetable crates were the source of the material, split and trimmed to the exact dimensions for this fence enclosing a "V" bed planted with flaming scarlet salvia.

Along with nature, physiotherapy is the miracle worker in this hospital. There are a number of ingenious devices invented or constructed by Captain Samuel Sherman, formerly of New York City in charge of the physiotherapy ward. These run the gamut of one's imagination from a finger-ladder to a foot rocker. In addition to these home made miracle workers are all the most modern scientific inventions for the care of Uncle Sam's boys.

FINGER LADDER

The finger ladder is of interesting construction. Nailed perpendicularly to the wall is a narrow strip. On this strip are built little steps, each with a number to see how much progress is made each day. For an injury that leaves stiffened fingers, a man runs his fingers up and down these little steps—first maybe just one or two, but up and down, up and down, until they can go as high as the arm can reach and before long that trigger finger is just as good as new.

"The wheel of chance" copies from its predecessor on the state fair midway is just that—lacking numbers of course and the inevitable "kewpie doll" prize—but the stakes are much higher. Complete use of shoulder and arm put out of use by breaks or sprains is the goal of this machine. A man grabs hold of a knob built onto this wheel and starts turning. Round and round it goes, and you know that with every turn of that wheel the injured member is getting more and more limber and the stiffness is being gradually worked out, restoring it to full use again. That is the prize from this wheel.

A "foot rocker" is still another device. It is more like a shoe-shine box than anything else. A man places his foot on the last and rocks back and forth and the the coreness in a broken or sprained ankle is soon worked out.

BAKING CABINET

But these are just a few of the things accomplished for soldiers with sick muscles. There is the electric baking cabinet with a controlled temperature of 110 degrees. While the patient is in this cabinet having all body soreness and stiffness steamed out, he is given salt water continuously to drink to replace the chloride in his system lost by perspiration. Ultraviolet machines used are so powerful that five minutes is equal to one hour in the sun. The infra-ray lamps are used for "deep under the skin" treatment.

For stiffened joints and limbs the whirlpool bath is the quickest method for aiding nature. The limb or joint is placed into a washing machine-like device. Water, electrically controlled as to heat, is flooded into the tub. A motor sets in motion the water with a terrific force that duplicates therapeutic action and hastens recovery to these joints and limbs.

You find here a new use for the medicine ball. Patients lie flat on the ball and roll round and round, exercising stomach muscles that have become inactive from operations—maybe bayonet stabs. That ball is also used in a home-made punching bag. It is placed in a discarded fruit sack, hung from a rack, and there is a punching gag for building muscles that have become flabby from inaction.

MODERN EQUIPMENT

Naturally—this ward has all the latest, modern equipment such as a Diathermy machine used in treating pneumonia patients that have not fully recovered. This same machine is used in giving the boys "beauty treatments". It removes molds, scars and any disfiguring marks from the face.

Recreation in its fullest term—re-creating is capably handled by Miss Winston Lamar, a graduate of Smith College and Tulane University, Red Cross Director at the Unit. Housed in a separate building with rooms for visiting mothers, sweethearts or any member of the soldier's family this building also has a large reading room, a recreation hall with piano, a completely equipped stage where movies are shown every night, a special room for the Arts and Crafts, and a game room.

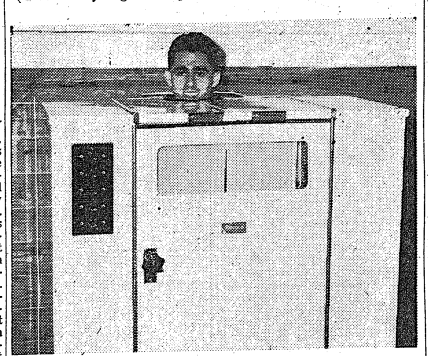
All outdoor sports are encouraged and at one time there may be in progress a badminton game, croquet, volley ball or horse shoes. Included in the outdoor program is the immense grill and oven constructed by the men with material for which they combed the hillsides, fields and streams. Outdoor parties are encouraged around this grill and Military Maids from nearby Columbus invited as special guests.

NO EASY SAILING

But don't get the idea this convalescent hospital has been all easy sailing. The first 50 patients sent out from the Station Hospital on the Main Post were a pretty rebellious lot, feeling that the War Department through Colonel Starnes had literally "snatched" their 30 days' sick leave from under their nose.

As the number one patient of this group wrote, "You didn't make the mistake of throwing the whole book of Army Regulations at us when we were so rebellious. Instead, you and your staff recognized the cause of the feeling and set to work to make up to us for the lost furlough.

"All in all, Sir, I think that Unit is a tremendously successful experiment. I enjoyed immensely my stay there; I made some friends that I will always remember, and my stay there was an experience that will always be one of the highlights of my Army life."



In talking with Colonel Starnes, one becomes imbued with his vision of what the Unit is going to grow into, and the part it is going to play in rehabilitating our boys for life in the service and for their place in civilian life when peace has been declared.

His one desire is that the Unit will be developed to its full strength of 1250 beds for use as a convalescent hospital for overseas wounded. One catches his enthusiasm in his plans for their recovery; his belief that Unit No. 2 is the natural place for the overseas wounded from this area, since it is the only such unit in this command and is so centrally located; his knowledge in the healing qualities of this Southern climate; and his pride in the splendid staff and equipment of this unit.

If proof is needed as to the accomplishments of this Unit and the possibility of what it might become, look to the boys who have gone out from it healed spiritually and physically.

LIGHTING THE FIRE in the outdoor fireplace built of salvaged materal are Pfc. Henry A. Jeuczewski of the 1st Parachute Regiment; T-5 Lee Caldwell, Hq. 10th Armored Division; Cpl. Richard Frailey, 23rd Co. Officer Candidate School; and Sgt. Frank Petrone, 55th Armored Engineers, 10th Armored Division, all of whom built the fireplace. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

PVT. HARRY KAZEN, 421 Christopher Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., is shown taking a treatment in the electric baking cabinet in the physiotherapy ward for stiffened bones and muscles as well as to relax the nerves. Heat in this cabinet is kept at 110 degrees and the convalescent patient is fed salt water to keep the balance of chloride in his system. (U. S. Signal Corps Photo)

Parade Slated For Col. McKee

300th Infantry In First Review Since Activation

Colonel Richard G. McKee, commanding officer of the 300th Infantry, will review his troops as they march in their first regimental parade since the activation of the outfit on Friday night, June 24.

The parade, which will be held to honor the Colonel, will mark the first appearance of the 300th in marching formation since the regiment began last December. Troop requirement duties, plus the fact that the regiment was widely scattered over the area in its early stages prevented any previous demonstration.

The parade will be held in the drill area of the regiment, just off Indian Head road at 8 p. m. Assisting Colonel McKee in reviewing the troops will be his staff led by Col. Fred W. Kushmer, executive officer of the regiment.

The recently organized regimental band, under the supervision of Lt. Benjamin Zvalonek, will participate in the parade. Although they have appeared before the microphones of WRBL and have played retreat, this will also be their initial appearance in an actual dress parade.

The only other occasion when the regiment marched as a unit was on Mother's Day when detachments from the companies went in formation from the Regimental area to Doughboy Stadium.

Chief of Staff Lauds WAACS

Expresses Confidence in Unit's Integrity

Waac leaders at Fort Benning were in receipt last week of a message from Colonel Oveta Culp Hobby, commanding officer of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps in which she relayed an expression of confidence in the integrity of the organization from General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States. General Marshall's message to Col. Hobby was prompted by derogatory remarks concerning the WAAC's which recently found their way into the nation's press.

"On my return from Africa," General Marshall wrote to Col. Hobby, "I learned of the attack which had been directed against the integrity of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps. The Secretary of War has already stated in forcible terms the views of the War Department in the matter but I wish to assure you personally of my complete confidence in the quality and value of the organization which has been built up during the past year under your leadership.

AMAZING PROGRESS

"To me, one of the most stimulating aspects of our war effort has been the amazing development of the WAAC organization in quality, discipline, capacity for performing a wide variety of jobs, and the fine attitude of the women themselves. . . .

"The best evidence in the matter are the demands now being made on the War Department for increased allotments of WAAC organizations which total, I believe, some 600,000. I wish you would assure your subordinates of the confidence and high respect in which they are held by the Army."

Colonel Hobby stated in her message that General Marshall's words will "send us forward with new faith and renewed determination to serve the Army to the best of our abilities. I know our answer to his message will be that we are neither summer soldiers nor sunshine patriots and that we shall not be distracted from our duties to the Army and the Country."

"The Lord Is The Strength Of My Life; Of Whom Shall I Be Afraid?"

THE ABOVE PAINTING in oils is the work of T-4 Abraham L. Chanin, medical detachment, 55th Armored Engineer battalion, 10th Armored division. Sgt. Chanin, a student four years with the Barnes Foundation in Philadelphia, has attempted here to portray "Religion in the War" from the standpoint of the fighting man. Suggestive of the Biblical text "The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?", Psalm 27:1, it represents the soldier in combat on the one hand and the parents and sweetheart back home on the other, each drawing comfort and peace in contemplation of the righteousness of God (Moses with the Law) and the compassion of God, Christ with the understanding that His own suffering (the nailprints) gives Him for those who sacrifice for high and holy causes in all time.

While the painting is not yet completed, sincerity and poignancy are well conveyed in the expression. The face of the Christ is reminiscent of Titian. The artist travelled on a fellowship from the Barnes Foundation through many galleries of Europe and the influence of the classical masters shows itself at a number of points in this his first religious work. The artist's desire to tackle this job arose in part from his Jewish background and from his own personal touch with the European situation during his study abroad in the summer of 1934. He tells with animation of seeing Hitler in a parade in Munich and of being present at a Gestapo trial in Vienna. The painting expresses the intensity of his own feeling. The work, done for the Protestant chaplain with the 55th, Chaplain Charles B. Hastie, is properly called a tryptich, and is intended for field as well as altar use. Members of the battalion have shown considerable interest in the project as it has developed and the artist takes pride in including his host of fellow soldiers and officers as co-creators.

Chanin was first detailed to do part time art work for the battalion by Lt. Col Daniel S. Spengler, commanding officer, when the battalion was first activated. Capt. L. A. Grossman and Lt. E. A. Movius, medical officers with the outfit, have made possible his successfully carrying it through. Provision of materials to perform the work was made by the 10th Armored Division Chaplains' corps.

USO-TA Observes Second Anniversary

Organization Served 42,684 In First Five Months of 1943

The USO-Travelers Aid Service in Columbus observed its second anniversary Tuesday. No special program was arranged but the public was invited to stop at the office and look in on everyday operations.

Proof of how activities of the USO-Travelers Aid Service in Columbus have grown is contained in the biennial report of the organization. In the six-month period from the time of its opening but 2,693 services were rendered. In the next like period, beginning Jan. 1, 1942, and ending June 30, 1942, 23,892 services were recorded.

The total jumped to 50,044 from July 1, 1942 to Dec. 31, 1942, and in the five-month period from Jan. 1, 1943, ending May 31, 1943, 42,684 services were rendered.

The work of the USO-Travelers Aid is divided into four major functions; namely, information and direction service, case work service, travel service and the rather intangible service of providing an opportunity for the lonely or disturbed traveler to talk.

The information service is carried on by some 75 volunteer workers on a regular weekly schedule. During these two years they have donated approximately 14,000 hours.

Service of the Travelers Aid has been extended to Phenix City, Ala., and covers the entire Fort Benning area.

Every Time You Hear Fred Waring and Harry James it Means a Million Free Chesterfields a Week for the Boys Over There

A grand good luck gift with Chesterfield's Compliments

"It's Victory Tunes for the boys over here and Victory Smokes for the boys over there," Chesterfield announces five nights a week over the regular Fred Waring "Pleasure Time" radio broadcast (Mondays through Fridays, N.B.C.)—and also three nights a week on the Harry James program (Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, C.B.S.).

A million Chesterfields, week after week to our fighting men is the result of the public's interest in Chesterfield's two ace radio shows.

Since last November, Fred Waring has devoted his 15-minute broadcast to "Victory Tunes", playing and singing songs selected by the service men and dedicating each program to one of the camps or posts.

To date, eight new service songs have been written and presented by Fred Waring and so far this year 110 different Camps have voted on what they wanted Waring to play and then tuned in to hear the result. The songs written include "Sky Anchors" for Naval Aviation; "Roll Tanks Roll" for the Armored Forces; "Look Out Below" for the Parachute Troops; "The Fighting Quartermaster Corps"; "The Men of the Merchant Marine"; "Man to Man" for the Infantry; "In Navy Blue" for the Waves and "Hail to the Corps" for Marine Aviation.

Harry James' tribute to the men in the armed forces is his nightly "Chesterfield Special". Since Harry James' records are hard to get, he plays a "Chesterfield Special" every night over the air, so that the boys can hear the sensational James arrangements, played through the mike exactly as you would hear them on your phonographs at camp.

Service men will be delighted to hear that Harry James has just been voted champion of about everything on the list. He recently emerged from a popularity survey conducted by "Radio Life," Pacific Coast fan magazine, with the following score: 1—Favorite recording artist; 2—Favorite sweet orchestra; 3—Favorite swing orchestra; 4—Helen Forrest, favorite girl singer; 5—Favorite song, "I've Heard That Song Before".

LT. GEN. LESLEY J. McNAIR, commanding general of the U. S. Army ground forces, spent a day and a half inspecting the Infantry school at Fort Benning, and was pleasantly surprised and amazed at what he saw. He is pictured (dark helmet)listening to an explanation of a demonstration by Lt. Col. Harry D. McHugh, group chief in charge of the training of an individual soldier. The general insisted upon following closely on the heels of many of the demonstrations he witnessed. (U. S. Army Signal Corps photo.)

Noisy Trains, Singing Motors Bring Post Breath of Gotham

Awesome Quiet Of Sand Hill Area Almost Drove G. I. To Distraction

When I first fled from New England's stern and rock bound coast to New York eighteen years ago helpful friends told me that I must live in Grammercy Park,—so nice and quiet. It'll remind you of Boston. Well — I'd had plenty of niceness and quietude—21 years of it—and I was never such an ardent stooge for the Boston Chamber of Commerce that I needed to be reminded of my home town. However I knew nothing against Grammercy Park so I lugged my carpet bag, parrot, and hot water bottle down to East 21st street and took up quarters in one corner of Grammercy.

It really was rather pleasant enough in a sense. Grammercy, as you know, is a private park in the middle of Manhattan and only residents are permitted the privilege of treading its neatly gravelled paths and sitting on the benches underneath the ancient shade trees. Each house on the surrounding streets has a key which unlocks the iron gates and admits the residents to this lush little enclave of privilege which formed a thorn in the side of the communist orators who bellowed from their soap boxes five blocks south in Union Square.

The only roach in the ice cream was the adjacent Third Avenue elevated railway half a block distant whose rumble at first disturbed my slumbers and caused me to start from sleep occasionally on warm summer nights when the windows were open.

However, in a short time, such is human adaptability, I soon ceased to be conscious of this noise.

CAN'T STAY PUT

One of the most characteristic idiosyncracies of the New Yorker is his notorious inability to stay in a fixed habitation for any protracted period. In other words he's afraid he'll gather mold if he doesn't move once a year (N. B. Rumors that this is done to escape house cleaning, have little foundation in fact). Hence about the time of the autumnal equinox I commenced scurrying about the island looking for a new place to live and presently found one.

The apartment was in an impressive old building which had nearly a century ago been the town house of some plutocratic Gotham nabob. Great Corinthian columns began at the second story and extended to the roof, four flights above the ground. Long French windows fronted on Lafayette street and formed a setting for a speech which Mussolini never could have resisted. Always a fool for Corinthian columns and French windows I leased the place without quibbling.

I regretted my hasty action the first night I spent in my new quarters. I discovered that the cobbled street was the most widely used thoroughfare to the Brooklyn and Manhattan bridges and, furthermore, two subways the I. R. T. and the B. M. T. had perversely chosen a spot directly beneath my bed to converge. The uninterrupted rumbling of heavy duty truck tires over the cobbles and the frolicking of the underground trains combined to make an atmosphere about as peaceful and cozy as one of Wagner's more chaotic operas.

EARS ATTUNED

It was pretty bad for a while but ultimately my ears became attuned to the rumpus and my voice developed to a pitch where I could actually bellow down the traffic noises. It came to a point where I'd actually be surprised if any caller remarked that the situation was a bit on the noisy side.

One of the reasons I gave up my next flat in Patchin Place was because it seemed very dull and backwaterish with only the Sixth Avenue El, two trolley lines and a nearby firehouse to relieve the crossroads stagnation.

My two rooms, kitchenette, and bath on East Twenty-fourth street boasted the proximity of two subways, an elevated and three 1870 model trolley lines within two blocks, to say nothing of divers loose manhole covers which taxis could run over all night and produce nice satisfying clangs that gave one the happy gregarious feelings that only city dwellers can know. My place on Fifty-third street (dead end you know) rejoiced in two "El's" and an equal number of trolley routes near at hand.

New Yorker's believe in progress, not retrogression, and my last apartment in Manhattan represented the zenith of achievement. It was situated on First avenue right near Beeckman Place (Murder Alley to you) and a municipal survey revealed that the corner of Forty-ninth street and First avenue at 5 o'clock in the afternoon enjoyed the highest number of noise decibels any place in the area bounded by South Ferry, the Harlem River, East River and North River (so called by reason of its being to the west of East river).

REALLY SOMETHING

It really was something: El a block off, buses in profusion, trucks carrying steel rails, market produce and assorted freight, horns and whistles from tugs and steamers in the East river, you couldn't hear yourself think (and who wants to anyhow).

We hear an awful lot of guff about the difficulty of adapting oneself to army life but the examples most people choose to point the difference between average civilian surroundings and a military environment are a mere bagatelle compared to what I went through and only a dyed-in-the-wool New Yorker could be expected to understand.

Fancy, after 18 years of conditioning to the aforementioned sort of thing, being unceremoniously swooped off and set down in the middle of Sand Hill.

Heaven knows the quiet was bad enough but I think what terrified me most was that awful fresh air. Anyone who has witnessed the throes of a fish rudely yanked out of a placid pool and tossed up, through no choice of its own, on a mossy bank will know what I mean. Whenever we had a 10-minute break I rush down to the motor pool and take deep invigorating breaths of carbon monoxide and gasoline fumes to dispel the stench of the pure pine-laden ozone which is one of the blights of this region.

AH! WILDNESS

Running a close second to the fresh air in repulsiveness was stillness broken only by the feeble chatterings of G. I.'s and the occasional distant hoot of an engine whistle. The quiet was so thick you could have used it on salad instead of mayonnaise. It really got me down. I'd turn and toss on my canvass cot, unable to sleep then, just for variety's sake, I'd toss and turn. When I'd finally fall asleep out of sheer exhaustion, my dreams were troubled and I'd awaken with a horrid start from the sheer serenity of it all.

Another incidental blight was the nourishing food thrust upon me and at regular intervals, too. During my formative years I have been used to toast, coffee and orange juice in the morning eaten with one hand while dressing with the other, a souffle and a salad for lunch and Heaven knows what sandwiched in between cocktail time and night duty at a favorite spot. On this regime I retained a figure which was little short of sensational.

Three months in the army, however, ruined the work of a lifetime and here I am, teetering on the brink of 40 and weighing ten pounds more than I consider decent. I can shudder when I think of the unkind observations the boys who hang around the drug store at Madison and 57th will make and the pregnant silence about the cracker barrel the next time I enter Sak's Fifth Avenue.

LIMITED SERVICE

Well—at the end of the third month my decline must have been apparent, for they placed me on limited service. They said it was because of my eyesight, but I think that was just a kind evasion on the part of a benevolent reclassification board which saw in me a candidate for a section eight. They assigned me to D.E.M. L.

When I first saw the D.E.M.L. barracks, it put new heart into me, because I had to climb three flights of stairs to my quarters. But that was only a beginning for, as I lay abed that night I felt the first sense of home and well being in months.

You see right across the street there is not one railroad but two, a little boy railroad and a big man railroad. They cooperate beautifully. When one stops clanking the other begins rattling. When the big one tires of puffing the other commences to hiss. Bells ring, whistles toot, flat cars amiably nudge box cars with satisfying bumps. The fire engines scream down Vibbert avenue with an exhilarating pandemonium and go around the corner with a screech of rubber. Endless truck convoys rumble gaily past. A motor park on one side and a motorpool on the other supply waves of stimulating gas fumes and the invigorating clouds of carbon dioxide. I am beginning to feel myself again. Just at the point where I felt I was getting too much Georgia in my talk, my walk, and my hair the Army, while it didn't take me back to New York, brought New York to me at Fort Benning.

Col. Vida's Idea Bearing Fruit

Officer Fathered Thought Now Supplying Units With Trained Mechanics

An idea that started in the mind of Colonel Frank J. Vida soon after he assumed command of the Provisional Truck Regiment, in December, 1942, is beginning to pay dividends in the form of trained motor mechanics who are returning in a steady stream to various companies throughout the regiment.

These mechanics are now available after 3 months of intensive study in motors as students of Enlisted Motor Mechanics Course Classes No. 69, 70, 71, 72 and 73, held in the Automotive Section of the Infantry School. They represent the major portion of groups sent to these classes as early as January 15, 1943, when Colonel Vida sensed the future need for trained mechanics in operating some 1,316 motor vehicles, from the little 1-4 ton commonly known as the "Jeep" to the large 4-6 ton semi-trailer van trucks.

At that date, less than a month after activation of this regiment, the initial group of prospects was sent to join class No. 69 in learning the army method of motor maintenance. Hardly had these men started their studies in the motor field, then another group from Prov. Trk. Rgt. was enrolled in the next class and, since that time, every 7 days finds additional of the regiment's personnel leaving for the three month's course.

As proof of its value, mechanics who have returned to the regiment from the Automotive Section, are now familiar with all types of vehicles used by this organization and many are the instances where their newly gained knowledge has enabled some driver to meet a dispatch requirement in a vehicle that to him was seemingly due for the "deadline."

Recent figures released from the office of the Regimental Commander reveal the fact that at present date a sufficient number of graduates have been returned to the regiment to enable each battalion to have almost a dozen specially trained mechanics on hand and ready to handle practically any type of repairs occasion by heavy dispatch requirements that are the lot of the Provisional Truck Regiment.

300th Infantry Boasts High Life Insurance Record

With all but 168 men in the regiment uninsured, the 300th Infantry is leading all other Schoop Troop regiments on the post in the percentage of men holding National Service life insurance, Lt. William H. Dennis, regimental insurance officer announced.

Lt. Dennis pointed out that last week, his records showed that 94.85 per cent of the 300th is insured in amounts from $1,000 to $10,000, for a total of $21,840,500.

Since then, the number of men holding insurance has increased, as has the amounts held by those who already subscribed to the Government. Lt. Dennis feels that in time the entire personnel of the regiment will be completely insured.

The average policy of the 300th is $7,477.06, a figure above the average of the Infantry School Troops as a whole.

In 1919, Sir Barton won the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness, the Withers Mile and the Belmont Stakes. No other horse has ever duplicated this feat.

Time Changes All, Colonel, Ex-Sarge Of Marines Agree

Many years ago a 13-year-old lad clad in a Boy Scout uniform walked into the Marine recruiting office in Birmingham, Ala., and boldly stated the reason for his call.

He wanted to join up with the Marines, he told Recruiting Sergeant J. C. Whitlock.

"Aren't you rather young, my boy?" the sergeant asked.

"I'm young, yes, but I'll make up for my lack of years with good hard work if you'll take me in, Sir," the boy replied.

"Hum-m-m-, well, maybe you had better wait a few years and then come in and try your luck," the sergeant told the disappointed applicant.

Thursday Whitlock, now ex-sergeant of marines, walked into the office of Lt. Colonel J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., formerly of Birmingham, Ala., and post adjutant at Fort Benning.

"Remember me, Sir?" he inquired.

"Your face is awfully familiar, but I don't seem to recall your name," the Colonel replied.

"Well, Sir, I'm former Sergeant of Marines Whitlock. When you were about knee-high to a grasshopper, you tried to enlist with me in the Marines. It's good to see you in a service uniform even though it isn't that of the Marines."

Sergeant Whitlock is now retired, resides in Atlanta, and is supervisor of a chain of photographic studios, one of which is located in Columbus.

Red Cross Water Safety Demonstration Will Be Staged Tonight At Russ Pool

TONIGHT AT RUSS POOL the above scenes will be reenacted for the edification of those attending the Red Cross Water Safety Show. In the photo in the upper left two soldiers are shown swimming with full field equipment. They are Cpl. Fred Costello of the 455th Anti-aircraft battalion (closer to camera) and Staff Sgt. Joseph Rickman, Cannon company, 176th infantry. In the upper right men are swimming with inflated trouser legs used as life buoys, propelled by foot. They are (left to right) Sgt. Paul Thomas of the 538th Armored Infantry battalion, and Cpl. James D. Marquart, Hq. company Second STR. In lower left four men are transporting an injured comrade by the simple use of a standard medical litter held up by inflated trouser legs, left rear Cpl. Costello, right rear Sgt. Rickman, right front, Cpl. Si Weinberg, 53rd General Hospital (Cpl. Marquart not shown). At the microphone in lower right is Ben Stanton, nationally known Red Cross water safety instructor and director of the course at Benning. (Signal Lab Photos by Sgt. Mel Stock.)

STAFF SGT. JOHN J. LEHNER of Dolomite, near Birmingham, Ala., an enlisted instructor in The Infantry School, has been credited with one of the most amazing rifle scores in the history of the United States Army. Sgt. Lehner scored 209 out of a possible 210 in all positions with a Browning Automatic Rifle, amazing because of its high rate of fire—350 to 550 shots per minute. (U. S. Army Signal Corps photo.)

Alabama Marksman Sets New World BAR Record

Sgt. Lehner Scores 209 Out Of Possible 210, All Positions

Legend has it that the best riflemen in the nation come from Tennessee and Kentucky but Alabama, in the person of two enlisted instructors of The Infantry School, has risen to deny that legend.

Staff Sergeant John J. Lehner of Dolomite near Birmingham, Ala., has officially been credited with one of the most amazing rifle scores in the history of the United States Army. Firing the Browning Automatic rifle—perhaps the most difficult of all Infantry weapons because of its high rate of fire (350 to 550 shots per minute)—Sgt. Lehner scored 209 out of a possible 210 from all positions.

This performance, which occurred during a routine demonstration before an Officer Candidate class, was witnessed and certified by six officers.

ANOTHER BAMA BOY

Two months ago, Technical Sergeant Grafton King of Somerville, Ala., created a then amazing record of 206 out of a possible 210. This feat was given wide acclaim at the time because, of the tens of thousands of men who have fired this weapon, only a few had even closely approached that mark.

Close friends, the two sergeants also are experts with the light and heavy machine guns, the M-1 and Springfield rifles, the bayonet and hand grenade.

Sgt. Lehner is the son of Mrs. Eva E. Lehner of Dolomite. He has been in the army three and one-half years, seeing service with the 30th Infantry at the Presidio in Monterey, Cal., before coming to this post in 1941. Prior to entering the army, he handled .22 calibre rifles and shot-guns with proficiency.

He is a member of Company I of the Academic Regiment, assigned to duty as an enlisted instructor with the BAR group.

Special Service Office Books G. I. Movies

Film To Be Issued Bi-Weekly For Armed Forces Personnel Only

Booking has begun on a new movie service to be known as "GI Movies," which will be shown in recreation halls, day rooms, and service clubs through the entire post, it was announced today by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer at Fort Benning.

The movies, released bi-weekly, now are available without cost to all posts, camps and stations in the United States through the Special Service Division of the Army Service Forces.

G. I. Movies are packaged as balanced programs, released for 16 mm. projectors, with each program consisting of several subjects joined together for convenience in handling on one large 1,600 foot reel. Approximate running time for a typical show will be 45 minutes.

SUBJECTS ANNOUNCED

Subjects for the initial release include "The War," issue No. 1, containing shots of the bombing of Pearl Harbor which were seized from the Japs; Private Schmid of the Marines telling how he riddled 200 Japs on Guadalcanal; "Army Air Forces," an aerial attack in the Aleutians, and other material. This is packaged with "Vendetta," an M.-G.-M. Academy Award contender; "Men of Timber," a story of Australian Commandos believed now captured on the Isle of Timor; "Anchors Aweigh," a song short and an exclusive Army Sport short.

ADMISSION FREE

Only personnel of the Armed Forces are eligible for attendance at the movies, it was emphasized, and admission is free. They are designed primarily for showing to groups the size of a company or groups in service clubs, mess halls, recreation halls and similar locations other than theaters. Showings also may be staged out of doors.

Organizations or groups interested in securing the film are asked to contact the Special Service office, Ft. Benning 3411. A 16 mm. projector has been ordered for use of groups that do not have facilities for showing the film, Col. Finnegan stated.

Official Scores Village, Park Lease Violation

Serious Irregularities Jeopardize Status Of Military Personnel

Military personnel who violate rules of housing at Baker Village and Benning Park homes are jeopardizing eligibility for continued occupancy of apartments, according to a warning issued today by W. M. Coggins, assistant manager of the War Housing Developments.

"There is an increasing prevalence to ignore terms of the contract between tenants and the Housing Authority of Columbus and those persons who are known to have committed violations are seriously jeopardizing eligibility for continued occupancy of an apartment in these War Housing Developments," he said.

"The two specific terms of leases most often violated are subletting without written permission from the manager and permitting others to share apartments without knowledge of the manager."

In some cases, personnel now having apartments have subleased at rentals far above what they were paying. In others, crowding has resulted.

Families of military personnel are permitted to occupy their apartment for 30 days after departure of the soldier or officer to another station, he pointed out. Personnel are advised to make arrangements for vacating of the apartment assigned to them within 30 days after they are transferred.

"In many instances, no attempts are made to move families of officers or enlisted men who have been transferred," Mr. Coggins said. "This means that personnel stationed at the post, who have a right to these apartments, are not able to secure them."

Apartments at Benning Park homes are rented to officers while those at Newton D. Baker Village are for non-commissioned officers of the first three grades.

CORTLAND PROMOTED

Second Lt. William J. Cortland, manager of the Harmony Church Officers Club, has been promoted to first lieutenant. He served as assistant Officers Mess officer until last November when the H. C. club opened and he assumed its management. In civilian life he managed Newark, N. J.'s Hotel Riviera.

Bride, Benedict Bridle Barriers Backtu Benning

Aggressiveness is without a doubt the distinguishing mark of a successful Infantry officer.

If this officer also has speed, coordination and a sense of timing it is unlikely anything can stop him from completing any problem with dispatch.

Such an officer is Lt. Irving Rosenfeld of the 8th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, who, in a typical abbreviated Fort Benning weekend practiced these principles with thorough efficiency which would be a credit to the teachings of leadership. Early last Saturday evening, after a difficult day in the field, he sped to Atlanta, where he rushed into a plane bound for New York City. There he married Miss Edythe Greenberg. Taking to the air once more, he flew to Atlanta with his bride, where they transferred to motorcar, arriving in Columbus in time for Lt. Rosenfeld to make his formation with the 8th Company at 0845 Monday morning with minutes to spare.

OPA Restricts Officers' Club Coca-Cola Quota

Hundreds of officers walking into the Officers' Mess or its brances and finding no "cokes" are asking "why?" Here is the reason, according to Captain James A. Guthrie, Officers' Club secretary.

The OPA has ruled, he said, that as a voluntary membership club it is not to be regarded as part of the Army, and therefore must be placed on a civilian basis.

The result: the club now gets 60 cases of Coca Colas per day whereas it has been getting 460. As Sherman so aptly put it: "War is h——," ain't it?

War Bonds Will Be Issued At Post

In a move to clear up all outstanding war bond accounts and assure speedier delivery of overdue purchases, the War Bond Division, Chicago, Ill., is transferring all records to the local issuing officer, who will in turn make out bonds which were purchased under the pay reservation plan prior to January 1, 1943, and have not yet been received.

Major George Fink, post war Bond officer, said that present purchases by civilians are being delivered within 15 days and that as soon as these older purchases are processed the whole program will be able to continue on schedule.

Boston Tommy Takes a G. I. Driving Lesson at Tiger Camp

Even Ferocious Tankmen Quailed At Thought of Riding In His Vehicle

By PRIVATE TH OMAS DEVINE

I have done something which the British, the French, the Tripolitan pirates, the Mexicans, the Spaniards, Austrians, Turks, Germans, Italians and Japanese have attempted in vain over the course of 168 years. And what's more I have done it without trying. In short: I have defeated the United States. Please don't quote me any old saws to the effect that where there's a will there's a way because I have just told you that there was no will in this case.

To get down to fundamentals:

I cannot drive an automobile. For an adult American male to make an admission of this sort is comparable to confessing that he is vegetarian an an interior decorator or a single-taxer. Unjustly enough there seems to be culpability, guilt and reprehension attached to such a deficiency. I make haste to say that I am not against automobiles as such. There is much to be said for them and I have no objection in the world to accept them passively as a means of transport. I ride several times daily in a motor car with little or no trepidation and I am firmly convinced that they are here to stay.

So unshakeable is this belief that in the summer of 1933 I even undertook, due to the overpersuasion of well meaning friends, to buy myself an automobile. It was a very smart blue job with yellow wire wheels and a sun tan top, a sport phaeton. I can tell you it was a very chic vehicle and caused many heads to turn in admiration as it bowled along the roads of Long Island and Connecticut—with me in the rear seat.

COULDN'T LEARN

I probably used the vehicle six times—week ends—the entire summer but as it was an open car it had to be put in storage for the winter. Meanwhile I made several earnest attempts to learn how to work it but it was very tiresome and there was always some willing friend about to operate it for me.

That winter, what with storage, maintenance, property tax, insurance, etc., the four wheeled pest practically took the bread out of my mouth and had me walking on the wrong side of Fifth Ave. at unfashionable times of day for fear I'd meet some one I knew who'd mistake me for a Sudeten refugee.

What finally convinced me of the folly of maintaining mechanical transport in Manhattan was an incident one afternoon when a friend of mine parted company from me at the corner of 42nd and Madison. He was going to 47th so he walked out. I was bound for 65th and got on a bus. My bus passed my pedestrian friend twice and he passed it three times in five blocks finally arriving there before the bus did. Hmm—I thought, "if that's an example of what gasoline can do I think I'll stick to my 7 1-2 b's." A couple of days later I gave my phaeton away and felt like a new man.

"Tempus, as the Romans so aptly put it, fugited along for a few years and I with it until last November when fate snatched me from the midst of my Louis XVI canapes and Directoire petiteries and set me down in the middle of Sand Hill.

One is sometime apt to question that wisdom of Providence which we all so complacently take for granted when she pulls such boners as thrusting into the mechanized forces a guy who, while he can tell the difference between a marron glace and a past participle, sees no whit of difference in the appearance of a gear and a ratchet. However, there I was for better or worse.

TIGER AT LAST

From the circumstances of my having been at Sand Hill you will assume I was a Tiger and so I was. General Newgarden told me and a few thousand other G.I.'s that such was the case when we first arrived.

Well—the things that a Tiger has to put up with and go through you wouldn't believe. Don't get me wrong. I'm not one of those supine souls who hate change for its own sake. I love new experiences. I'd been a lot of things in the course of 38 years in this grove of grief but I'd never been a Tiger before and I was crazy about it. It was a grand camp.

If I do say so who shouldn't I acquitted myself in basic training with verve, elan and, if it doesn't seem extravagant of me to say so, —eclat. The windows I polished gleamed like Mrs. Harrison Williams on opening night; when we had to police the company area I always finished with twice as many cigarette butts as my fellow Tigers. On coal details I always procured the choicest of not the greatest quantity of coal for my company and after I'd finished a job of K.P., you might have eaten off the floor (although I never could understand why anyone would wish to do such a thing when the government provides us with perfectly serviceable tables).

BOW AND ARROW

What's more and incidentally, although I'd never before shot anything more lethal than a bow and arrow and that back during the reign of the late Edward VII, I qualified as sharpshooter with the M 1911 45 calibre thereby earning for myself with my Tiger comrades the respectful sobriquet of Two Gun Tommy.

In brief: all went swimmingly

General Fulton Will Give Certificates

Soldiers To Swim Through Burning Oil As Climax of Aquatic Show

Fort Benning soldiers will leap and swim through burning oil with complete safety tonight at Russ pool in a graphic demonstration of the very latest methods of functional swimming taught by the Red Cross to safeguard the lives of American troops in the event of disasters at sea.

"Swim and Live' will be the theme of the mass military aquatic show which will get under way promptly at 7 o'clock. Officer and enlisted personnel of the entire post are invited to attend the one-hour demonstration which will mark the conclusion of a two-week's course given a selected group of fort soldiers.

FULTON TO ATTEND

Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of the post, will be the honor guest at the demonstration, and prior to its start will award Red Cross Certificates to the 60-odd men who have successfully completed the rigorous course and are now qualified to pass on the water safety instruction to men of their own units.

The swim through burning oil will mark the finale of the program and promises to provide a dramatic moment. Two separate pools of petrol in the pool will be set afire. Into one area of burning oil several soldiers will leap from a high platform showing how soldiers might similarly leap from the deck of a burning ship into hot oil.

SPLASH AT FLAMES

The second pool of burning oil some distance away will be used by soldiers who will swim directly through the middle of it with complete safety, simply by splashing the waters of Russ Pool ahead of them to clear a path.

This demonstration will be only one of many during the 60-minute program, however, that will give graphic evidence of the new and important strides in water safety made by the Red Cross under the title of "functional swimming."

FULL FIELD PACK

The program will open with a boatload of fully-equipped soldiers being thrown into the water just as if their small vessel had capsized. The men will then swim to the side of the pool under the weight of their full-field packs showing how they have been taught to make their way through the water under any circumstances.

At various times during the show, the Benning soldiers will show how to swim through water littered with debris, how to float supplies across water, how to swim silently in the presence of the enemy, how to swim under machine gun fire, and how to avoid the severe shocks that might accompany explosions in the water.

TO SHOW STROKES

Working in relays, the new soldier instructors will show various individual functional strokes, methods of leaping into the water while fully clothed and equipped, simplified diving methods to conform to wartime needs, and newly-devised means of breath con-

BLOOD BANK VISITS POST JULY 14-16

500 Soldiers, Civilians To Get Opportunity To Donate Plasma

More than 500 soldiers and civilians will be given an opportunity to donate blood to the ever-growing national blood plasma reserve when a Red Cross trailer unit from Atlanta visits Fort Benning for three days, starting July 14.

Ralph J. Mitchell, local Red Cross field director, explained that the blood is being collected for the armed services by the Red Cross upon request of the Surgeon General. The blood will be processed and sent to theaters of operations to be used in treating combat casualties.

To be acceptable for a donation, individuals must be between the ages of 18 and 60. Donors younger than 21 must bring a written permission signed by their parents or guardian, otherwise they cannot be accepted.

PREREQUISITES

Outlining other limitations, Mitchell said that donors must not weigh less than 110 pounds; must not have a cold or infections, such as boils, sore throat, or skin rash; nor have had serious illness in the past three months. In addition, persons are not eligible who have had malaria in the past 15 years, or ever suffered from undulant fever, lung trouble, or heart disease. Several other restrictions were listed for women, one of which requires that they wait nine months after childbirth before being eligible.

Approximately 175 appointments will be handled each day, and all donors must be volunteers. Already the Parachute School has volunteered to furnish enough donors to take up the first day, Wednesday, July 14. Members of parachute units may volunteer through their company commanders, who will receive further instructions from Lt. Col. Herbert P. Dunlap, executive officer of the school, about appointments and procedure.

INFANTRY SCHOOL

Similarly, the Infantry School has been allotted one entire day, July 15, and will furnish 175 donors from school troops and school officer-instructors. No Infantry School students will be eligible to volunteer donations at

Village, Benning Park Election Slate Ready

Residents To Name Permanent Officials At Polls Next Tuesday

A slate of candidates has been nominated for the forthcoming election on Tuesday, July 6, at Baker Village-Benning Park Homes, it was announced today by First Sgt. Percy H. Hopkins, temporary mayor of the community under the new plan for a permanent self-governmental policy.

Under the plan, a mayor and four commissioners will be chosen from the two communities at large, while 15 councilmen will be named to represent the 15 districts into which the two communities have been divided.

Ballots will be distributed from door to door by a committee, and then will be collected the following day, Sgt. Hopkins said. In this way it will not be necessary for residents of the area to go to a polling place.

FIVE OUT FOR MAYOR

Five nominees have been made for mayor. They are Sgt. Hopkins, Mr. J. S. Grayson, Master Sgt. A. A. Wonsick, Capt. Ralph Phackston and First Lieut. R. W. Ryan.

Nominees for the four commissioners—traffic, recreation, welfare and sanitation—include Mr. W. W. Daughtry, First Sgt. J. B. Sharpe, Master Sgt. (retired) J. F. Harper; Mr. W. B. Frith, Capt. M. A. Sanderson, Mr. George Ryan, Capt. E. J. Cannon, Capt. D. C. Hager, Maj. H. M. Craig.

In some of the districts, no nomination has yet been made for a representative, but it is expected this will be accomplished before Tuesday and that residents of the areas will cast votes at large, within their own areas. Nominees so far selected include Dist. 1, Sgt. Robert Waller; Dist. 2, Mr. Curtis Herbert, Tech. Sgt. Methias, Tech. Sgt. S. A. Taylor; Dist. 3, Sgt. J. H. Fisher, Mr. M. Duncan; Dist. 4, First Sgt. B. Lebowitz; Dist. 5, Staff Sgt. Thomas Haley; Dist. 7, Mrs. A. J. Presley, Sgt. A. J. Presley, Sgt. Jack Walton, Mr. Bob Barron, Sgt. M. E. Johnson; Dist. 8, N. W. Frankfort; Dist. 9, J. E. Ansley, Mrs. Alice Buicutt; Dist. 10, Mr. Albert Stoutey, Capt. O'Neil; Dist. 13, Capt. J. S. Carrian, Lt. Samison, Lt. Ross Crosley; Dist. 14, Mr. R. B. Daniel.

Most interesting race appears to be centering in Dist. 7, where Sgt. A. J. Presley is running against his wife and three others.

At a meeting early in June, the new plan for self-government for the two housing project areas was outlined. It is planned to establish a nursery school run by the people, a shopping center and a dispensary.

2nd STR OC Got Six Japs On Guadalcanal

Four Are Rifle Victims; 2 Die On Bayonet End

The fighting "spirit of the bayonet" hammered home here at The Infantry School is something of first-hand reality to Staff Sergeant William A. Swift, 23, of Lawrence, Mass., and Guadalcanal, and now an officer candidate in the Second Student Training Regiment.

Swift was on Guadalcanal exactly 18 days and nights, and in that time he killed six Japs, four with his rifle and two with his bayonet. Of these last two victims, he slashed one through the neck, and the other he rammed in the guts.

The main theory, if one can call it that, which Swift brought back from his rather concentrated sessions with the little sons of Nippon is that the only good Jap is a dead Jap.

A soldier soon learns a lot of useful tricks in dealing effectively with the Japs. For example, Swift tells how the Japs employ a bayonet with a hook at the base. They catch an opponent's bayonet with this hook and quickly twist his rifle out of his hands, if he is not wary. The best way to beat the hook is to give the Jap a butt stroke or a quick, short jab.

Swift cut short his plans for a college education to take up the business of fighting. He left Huntington Prep in Boston to join the National Guard in January, 1941. After a year's training at Camp Edwards, Mass., he was shipped to the Southwest Pacific. On New Caledonia he completed ten months of intensive shaping up, and was ready for the great adventure.

His outfit landed on Guadalcanal on Nov. 11, 1942, which also happened to be Armistice Day of the last war. But there was no armistice in the Solomons, and 15 minutes after Swift landed, a Jap air attack began. From then on, the fighting continued day and night all the while Swift was there.

He could see the great sea-air battle from the shore, and every morning for several days there would be more Jap bodies washed up on the beaches. After that battle, Jap planes did not show up very often; but the steady, stealthy jungle warfare began in earnest.

Swift was the leader of a rifle squad, and his home was a foxhole, dozens of foxholes, anywhere and everywhere he happened to be. The worst part, he said, was waking up in the morning in case you were lucky enough to get any sleep, and having a Jap sniper take a shot at you before you were entirely awake.

Two of the Japs that Swift killed with his rifle were snipers in trees. The others were one he shot on patrol and one in a rush.

JAP TRICKERY

"A favorite trick of a Jap sniper when you shoot at him is to drop a rifle from the tree, and then when you think you've got the buzzard and start to move toward the rifle, you get plugged. So you learn not to take anything for granted," Swift said.

"Like the cook in our outfit, who looked up one night while the chow line was filing by, and saw a Jap standing right in front of him. So he hauled out his .45 and shot the rash fellow."

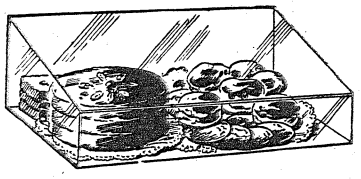
Swift is here to testify that the Jap knee-mortar, 50 mm., one-man operated, is one of their best weapons. It works well at ranges even as close as 100 yards. Swift will also add his testimony to the theory that you never hear the shell that gets you.

WOUNDED

He was advancing in a rush on November 29, and the next thing he knew he was down and his head did not feel very good. A Jap mortar shell had wounded him and four of his squad, and none of them had heard the explosion.

That head wound put Sergeant Swift in the hospital for nearly five months, or rather six different hospitals on the way back to and in the United States. But he recovered completely, and had the big thrill of getting home to Lawrence, Mass., to see his mother, Mrs. Annie Swift.

Now he is Officer Candidate Swift at The Infantry School, learning the finishing touches of the technique of putting whole platoons and battalions of Japs out of business.



Bored by pesterings for non forthcoming letters a mail clerk at Camp Roberts, Cal., put an end to his persecution by writing one himself to his tormentor.

174 2nd Regiment Men Get Good Conduct Medals

One of the most unusual events to occur at Fort Benning in many a moon was the mass presentation of Good Conduct Medals to 174 members of Headquarters Company in the Second Student Training Regiment.

Col. Arthur C. Blain, commanding officer of the Second Regiment, made the awards individually to each man in a colorful early morning ceremony held in Theater No. 4. Capt. Henry R. Callahan, commander of Headquarters Company, and other officers of the regiment were present.

The award, in the form of a red ribbon with white stripes, is given to enlisted men who have demonstrated fidelity through faithful and exact performance of duty, efficiency through capacity to produce desired results, and whose behavior has been such as to deserve emulation.

Third Officer Miller Rejoins Post Hq. Waac Detachment

Third Officer Jeannette Miller of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps has been assigned to Fort Benning for duty with the WAAC Detachment, Station Complement, as executive officer, Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., post adjutant announced today.

This is Lt. Miller's second tour of duty at Benning. When the first WAAC company was assigned to Benning, she came and made plans for the arrival of the unit in the arrival of the unit in the capacity of supply officer. She remained in that assignment until May 10 when she was ordered to duty at Camp Shelby, Miss.

Lt. Miller is a graduate of the first officer candidate course of the WAAC at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, in October, 1942 and was commissioned a third officer.

Medico Bugler Toots Mean Note With Saxaphone

Private Heil of the Medical Detachment, Station Hospital, is perhaps the most unpopular man in the area around 0600 in the morning. But on evening occasions when the Detachment bugler doubles on his shiny sax to play in the recently organized Medico Syncopators, the story is different. For Heil, a new arrival in the unit, plays a mean saxophone in the orchestra.

The Medico Syncopators, a five-piece orchestra got together through the efforts of Corporal Tate of the Detachment Special Service office, will represent the station hospital on forthcoming occasions. The instruments of the band are a sax, accordion, piano, drums, and bass fiddle played, respectively, by Heil, Pintello, Morris, Swanger and Tate.

NEW MAJORS

Five captains attending an advanced course in the 3rd Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, are wearing gold leaves as the result of their promotions to the rank of major, according to an announcement made by the Regimental Commander, Lt. Col. John S. Roosma. They are: Captains Luther W. Drennan, James B. Elliott, Jr., Freddie M. Shaw, John L. Greenfield and James W. Sorensen.

Foster parents may receive a dependency allowance from a soldier if he provides satisfactory proof of their status.

Rather than risk a hurried trip to Columbus, many residents of the Post will find it convenient to drop by the branch of CHANCELLOR'S, INC. which is centrally located at Doughboy Stadium. This well equipped shop has been most capably run for 24 years by Mr. James King. One might venture the guess, and not be far wrong, that ninety per cent of the military personnel of Fort Benning has, at one time or another, done business with Mr. King. The stocks of this shop on the Post are drawn from the main Chancellor's store in Columbus and any article which happens to be in Columbus, will, on request, be sent immediately out to the branch at the Post. Equipment is, for the most part, military and includes ties, insignia, shirts and even complete uniforms. I suggest you advise your husband to drop by this branch where he'll receive every consideration from Mr. King.

One of the neatest tricks of the year to fool the general public on the size of your wardrobe is sporting a variety of blouses with one or two skirts. KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC. has blouses galore with either short or long sleeves, as you will. Solid colors, checks, stripes, plaids and flowered patterns brighten scores of these "skirt-toppers." Tailored shirt waist styles, jabot necklines and simple tucked waist front styles are a few of the assorted type blouses. Any of these crepe, cotton, silk, jersey, gingham and mesh blouses may be successfully teamed with either slacks or skirts or suits. Careful de-tailoring is especially evident in each and every one of these smartly designed blouses. Another point in their favor is you'll not see your favorite blouse on every Sally, Mary and Jane in the neighborhood. Each of these blouses is worth every penny you invest in any one of them.

Suntan lotions, mascara, lipsticks, powders, rouges, eye-shadows, foundation creams, nail polish, leg film, perfumes and colognes are just a few of the notions featured in the CITY PHARMACY which appeal to women from the ages of 16 to 30. Each of these aids to beauty is available in a variety of shades and odeurs, a wide choice of popular brands. Revlon polish, Elizabeth Arden Velva Leg Film, Helena Rubenstein Mascara, Lentheric perfumes are just a few of the famous names you'll encounter in this cool and attractively decorated drug store. Not that all the space is devoted entirely to women's cosmetics. No indeed, the medicine counter and soda fountain boast many a customer of the stronger sex. Business men as well as women find the comfortable booths an ideal place for their noon-day luncheons. City Pharmacy's luncheons are especially appetizing and, equally appealing, is the Shopper's Tea, served regularly afternoons. So now, if you've not done it before, visit City Pharmacy and see its good points for yourself.

Are you one of the bright young women who have discovered that a play suit can be a galley slave, scullery maid, backyard leisure-time sun-snatcher and just plain around - the - house - pretty? If not, let me tell you that you'll really find a million uses for the play suits displayed by the J. A. KIRVEN CO. You can wear them in wilting hot weather. Work in them to keep your day cottons fresh for neighborhood activities. Kirven's play suits are, for the most part, fashioned of shantung or rayon crepe in bright, eye-appealing colors. The shorts are pleated back and front and are attached to the shirt top, so you'll have no separation troubles. The wrap-around skirt has a tiny bit of shirring around the waist to give a dirndl effect. If you prefer a smooth and mannishly-tailored pair of slacks with a plain shirt or striped cotton-knit shirt you'll find a wide selection in every popular shade on the second floor of this up-to - the - minute department store.

These energy - sapping days make us all feel like lying down and taking a bit of a snooze every afternoon. Naturally an honest - to - goodness comfy pillow helps a great deal. If your couch, daybed, sofa, or whatever you've been fortunate enough to find is a bit on the hard side, soften it up with chintz throw - about pillows. MONTGOMERY WARD COMPANY has ever so many pillows which are really pretty, but will withstand a great deal of wear and tear. An especially nice version features pale yellow full blown roses on a grey and white striped chintz background. This attractive style is finished off with a matching yellow border. Three or four pillows in this particular pattern would indeed make a comfortable and lovely back rest for your daybed if it happens to be minus a back section. Trimmings on bits of comforts are either self-trim or looped fringe in complementar colors. The variety of patterns in either chintz or upholstery fabrics create pillows to suit the tastes of all.

That Extra Something!
...You can spot it every time

When it comes to refreshment, nothing takes the place of ice-cold Coca-Cola.

EVERY woman in the new Marine Corps Women's Reserve releases a trained Marine for combat duty. But before they do that, they must, themselves, undergo training so rigorous that regular rest periods are allowed them. That's when the call goes up for ice-cold Coca-Cola . . . for the pause that refreshes.

Ice-cold Coca-Cola does more than just quench thirst. It brings a pleasant after-sense of refreshment. You feel it and welcome it. Made with a finished art, Coca-Cola has a taste all its own. Delicious! Satisfying! There's an extra something of goodness about it. You know from experience that the only thing like Coca-Cola is Coca-Cola, itself.

A couple of Cokes! That's the way to make a friendly moment refreshment time.

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called Coke. Both mean the same thing . . . "coming from a single source, and well known to the community".

Boston—

until one day it was announced that we all must learn to drive all the vehicles. My heart sank (metaphorically I make haste to assure you) and I thought I saw my Waterloo.

Now I had always thought of myself as a sort of highly strung, delicate instrument, if you know what I mean; or perhaps I might make myself clearer by saying, a kind of creature of impulse. Hence you may conceive my distress at being expected to go swooping up hill in a half track, dashing down dale in a tank and flying over the terrain in general in a scout car.

Well—with characteristic G. I. thoroughness they didn't just plunk us into vehicles and make us drive them forthwith. They took us into a shed in the motor pool instead and put us through a procedure which looked like a Rube Goldberg cartoon. First they strapped a pencil to my head with the point upwards. Then I had to stand under a block of paper which the point of the pencil touched. The idea was that the degree to which the pencil moved on the paper showed how jittery you were. To my supreme disgust and vexation I discovered that my pencil had not moved an iota, thereby demonstrating indisputably that I was just a stolid oaf with no more sensibility than you could put in your eye.

GUILLOTINE

Next I was placed before a sort of guillotine device. A long iron rod pointed at one end was placed in my hand and I was told that when the board of the guillotine commenced to drop I must thrust the spike into it and arrest its fall. I did so before the beastly thing had moved two inches. This I learned demonstrated excellent judgment on my part.

This no doubt was expected to produce gratification in me. On the contrary it actually enraged me. "Here", I reflected, "all these years one of my family's most cherished precepts was my poor judgment and inability to handle my own affairs. I couldn't be trusted to make investments and, in fact, whenever I left the house I was always cautioned to look both ways before crossing the street. Relatives and friends were in constant terror that if I were let loose with more than ten dollars in my pocket someone would sell me the information booth in Grand Central station for a fruit stand. Benevolent bar tenders made a practice of taking away any excess of cash I had on my person and holding it for me for fear I should waste my sustenance on high living. I now saw this universal attitude in its true light viz: as a well meant but none the less subversive conspiracy against a latter day Solomon.

Following the judgment gadget was a gew gaw whose nature I don't exactly remember but which proved that my coordination was one of the miracles of the age. This didn't improve my temper in the very least in view of the circumstances that it proved as utterly groundless the reputation I had in the more knowing Manhattan arrondissements for being a scatter brained and frivolous boulevardier who thought that there were only two kinds of Bach, to wit: that which grows on trees and the vocal articulation of a dog.

HOT STUFF

In any case and the light of the aforementioned tests I realized on reflection that I must be after all what is described in the vulgate as "pretty hot stuff" and any compunctions I had about driving a vehicle vanished like eiderdown before a gale of wind.

The morning we went to the driving range was sharp and cold so we built a fire and while the first of the group were being taught to drive scout cars tanks, etc., the rest of us gathered around the blaze to keep warm, dishing the dirt the while. The entire morning passed and the mess truck showed up without my turn to drive having come. Shortly after lunch some of the boys discovered a hickory tree with nuts scattered about on the ground and we got so engrossed in gathering them that it was time to leave the range and I had missed out on my driving lesson.

Not long after this I was put to work at headquarters and my company duties ended.

General Newgarden is not one of those laissez faire officers who let well enough alone and in order to be a Tiger one has quite definitely to be on the ball. Hence one day the General issued an order to the effect that everyone in Headquarters must have driven every type of vehicle utilized by the outfit so we were accordingly sent out in relays for instruction.

The group of which I was a member was taken one day, not to any puny little flat billard table driving range, but to a course in the woods which looked like nature's version of a roller coaster or scenic railway. There was no road at all but a couple of cart tracks which went through the woods, thickets, up steep hills, skirted gorges and traversed creeks. This course, we were told would be the route over which each must drive a scout car.

TIGERS SHUDDER

Even my newly-found self confidence as the result of the tests quailed before the notion of guiding one of these lumbering vehicles over this hazardous path, so whenever one of the cars would return with a bunch of Tigers who'd completed the circuit, I'd sore of make myself inconspicuous an davoid the eye of the lieutenant when he was selecting another lot of G. I.'s to drive around.

Presently all my subterfuges came to naught for the officer in charge remarked, "Devine, I don't see your name checked off here, have you been around?" Now it isn't that I have any fine moral scruples about economy of truth but from an early age I recognized that as a liar I was definitely grade "C," so I have always avoided the practice, and on this occasion I replied "No Sir."

"Well then," said the lieutenant," you'd best go at once as we must return to the company soon."

"Sir," I quavered. "I don't know anything about it. I've never driven before."

"Oh, that's all right," he replied breezily, "most of these other chaps have never driven a scout car before. You'll catch on to it easily enough."

"Sir——I mean to say, not that I've not driven a scout car, but I've never driven ANY kind of car in my life."

He frowned, obviously thinking such levity was misplaced and, seeing his disbelief, I continued. "I don't know the difference between a gear shift and a cylinder head. I can't even start one of the darned things much less drive it."

GENERAL'S ORDERS

The lieutenant looked at me curiously as though I had escaped from a page of one of the minor 18th century novelists, but contented himself with saying "Well then, we'll just have to teach you. General's orders, you know," and before I could collect my poor wits I found myself behind the steering wheel of a scout car named, I believe, "Nzdrowie."

The Tiger assigned to instruct me patiently explained how to start the contrivance and asked me if I thought I'd got the idea. I answered that I was certain of it and forthwith pushed, pulled and turned four knobs and buttons in rapid succession. The result was: the glove compartment flew open, the horn squawked, the lights went on and the heater commenced to glow (quite needlessly since it was a mild day) but the scout car as a whole remained stationary.

My Tiger instructor began all over again and more painstakingly this time. No one was more surprised and gratified than myself when the thing commenced to move.

Perhaps at this point I should interpolate that there were four or five other Tigers lolling languidly about in the rear of the vehicle, just out for the ride as it were. I might further observe that when the automobile started it did so with a jerk sufficiently vigorous to vanish every trace of languor from my passengers. Further more it bounded forward with considerable enthusiasm jerking and quivering at intervals with a great deal of what the French call "esprit."

When I found it was all so simple all my qualms vanished and I felt as though this sort of thing had been a lifelong avocation.

"Now don't be nervous," cautioned my instructor.

"Oh I'm not in the least," I rejoined deftly jerking the wheel to the right to avoid a bowlder then rapidly spinning it to the port to escape a gully.

At this point a stifled scream from the rear chilled my blood and darting a glance behind me I saw my Tiger passengers, pale as death and clinging on to machine gun tracks and uprights as though they feared these items of government property were going to be lost in the rush. Thinking to impart a little more confidence to the distressed lads I cried cheerily, "Never mind boys, it's better than the movies and it doesn't cost a dime."

The ridiculous scout car chose this juncture to go bounding off the path and plunged gaily into the forest. The instructor covered his face with his hands and I heard gasps from the back seats (they told me afterwards that they were too depleted to scream) but I am proud to say that the G.I. devices utilized for the aforementioned test were vindicated, I didn't turn a hair but I did turn the scout car back on the road in three shakes of a lamb's tail.

Subsequent reports that I levelled a half acre of woodland were greatly exaggerated, (some people will do anything to get a laugh) and the reproach which was levelled at me to the effect that this was a driving lesson not a deforestation problem was entirely unwarranted. It is perfectly true that when the scout car returned to the road it grasped upright in its bumper a very good medium sized example of the long leafed Georgia pine (I forget the scientific name for it) and a slightly less impressive growth, really not a tree at all but rather a shrub of the magnolia family. It rather reminded me of that passage in MacBeth where the witch's prophecy about Birnam wood moving to Dunsiname comes to pass.

Well in any event the instructor insisted on taking the wheel from me and returning at once to the officer in charge to whom he explained that I couldn't seem to learn the difference between the brake and the gas pedal.

The Tigers who had been riding with me began to level reproaches at me for what they called my "reckless driving" and endangering their life and limb. I silenced them by pointing out that (a) It was not recklessness but rather self confidence and the fact that they were safe and sound certainly demonstrated something, (b) I had made no secret of the fact that this was my initial experience and I thought I'd done rather well taking all into consideration and they got into the vehicle entirely of their own volition for I certainly didn't ask them to ride with me, had I? (c) A little realism in the way of driving wouldn't do them any harm because in combat conditions it was perfectly possible that a situation might arise in which it was necessary to leave the path and you weren't going to let a tree or so interfere with a military operation were you?

A subsequent examination of the scout car revealed, besides minor abrasions and contusions, that the frame was a bit out of alignment a trifle. I will say that no reproaches were leveled at me on this account because, unequivocally the government had brought this situation on itself.

Unlike the government my fellow dwellers in Tiger Towers (the 4th barracks) were not inclined to forgive and forget, at least those who had been my passengers and when, as a finishing touch to our driving course, we were sent out to do a bit of blackout driving they took a very offensive attitude. They all tried to get other cars than the one I was in until they were finally ordered peremptorily to stay in the vehicle to which they were assigned.

It was a very pleasant evening when our convoy started out and I looked forward to our little junket with considerable enjoyment. Would you believe it, however, those dirty low down G. I's had hatched a conspiracy against me. After all the others had had a turn at the wheel the car commander said who is next? "I am," I cried eagerly."

"No he isn't, it's my turn" yelled one of these unethical scoundrels, I commenced to argue but all the rest of the occupants perjured themselves desperately and bore false witness. In brief three of those lice had two turns each at blackout driving and we arrived back home without my once having sat in the driver's seat. Well—I tell you I was fit to be tied. Hadn't General Newgarden said that each of us was to complete our driving course? The plot of which I had been the victim was treason, sedition—or something. I toyed with the idea of addressing a petition to the General but presently I was inspired with a more feasible device which involved direct action. While the rest of them were washing the vehicle I surreptitiously flew to "Tiger Towers" and set all their bunks at "parade rest". I still cannot drive a car.

The Fourth Of July And The British Empire

One scene of the motion picture version of "The Pursuit of Happiness" shows George III pacing the floor of his study with his minister Lord North in attendance. The King had just received dispatches from America telling of British reverses and in an access of irritation he crys "Why the deuce didn't that fellow Columbus stay at home and mind his own business."

His Majesty was not alone among his contemporaries in this feeling. Many of the Tories must have felt that the colonies were more of a headache than they were worth and there was a very powerful minority of Whigs headed by Charles James Fox who opposed the American war with all their energies and were all in favor of letting the colonists have their independence without opposition.

American tub thumping orators in the old days made the Fourth of July the occasion for much bellicose flag waving and chauvinistic condemnation of "foreign tyrants." The latter were always tacitly understood to be the English Crown or its wearers and small town audiences were wont to repair to their mid-day dinner of fresh salmon, green peas and ice cream with a feeling of thankfulness that Providence and our valiant predecessors had delivered us from the savage and saddistic machinations of an effete monarchy.

We Americans are still happy that the Revolution took place and gave us our independence and self determination as a nation but we are less naive in our attitude toward our quondam mother country. We realize, all except the most stupid and ignorant that the weaknesses of the British economic and goverr.mental system which gave us just cause for complaint were simply part of a corrupt order which the British themselves had foredoomed to destruction and which was part and parcel of the times of the Eighteenth Century.

To indulge in unprovable hypotheses may not be very profitable but it seems reasonable to suppose that if America had remained under British rule those qualities of spiritual independence and enterprise which have cropped up so plentifully and in such surprising places might well have been stifled during the 19th century and what is now the United States, inhibited by the disabilities which the existing British social order laid upon great masses of people, might never have become the mighty and opulent industrial factor she now is.

Let us never forget, on the other hand, that if it were not for the protecting might of Britain's naval power we would long since have become prey to the land grabbing powers of Europe and could never have enjoyed the years of security which enabled us to attain our present status.

Curious Phenomenon Is Our Attitude Toward Italy

A curious phenomenon of the present war without precedent in our history is the almost complete lack of animosity felt toward Italy. Unlike in 1918 it has been unnecessary to indulge in any rabble-rousing tactics to work up venom against the Germans for even the dullest folk realize the menace of German power in this day and age. The Japanese by Pearl Harbor simply crowned the work of 35 years in creating a detestation in the hearts of Americans.

A certain school of thought would direct our animosity toward the national leaders of our enemies rather than toward the people themselves and it was on this premise that our war of 1917-18 was prosecuted against the German Empire. This time, however, our enmity and mistrust embraces the German and Japanese people but in the case of the Italians it is confined to Premier Mussolini and his Fascist followers.

In view of Mussolini's absurd histrionic posings on the balcony of the Venezia Palace and his belligerent shoutings in conjunction with the disgraceful attacks on first, Albania and then France and Greece, the subsequent military fiascos have made Italy look very ridiculous. Why then has she failed to earn the deep seated loathing we accord our other enemies?

Possibly it is because Italy never comprised even a potential menace to the rest of the world such as did Japan and Germany. Or it may be that the Italians are such an amiable people with too keen a sense of humor to take their tin horn Caesar as seriously as the priggish Germans regarded their second coming of Parsifal.

The Italian people have no natural antipathy toward the United States, England or France and such as may exist is entirely based on deliberate lies told them by their self-appointed leaders. In the first place Napoleon Bonaparte as the instrument of France first made a united nation out of what had been a collection of petty Italian states. While this was cancelled by the Congress of Vienna in 1815 largely, it may be noted through German influence, Italy's final unity in the later 19th century was achieved largely through the help of Napoleon's nephew the Emperor Louis Napoleon.

During the struggle for Italian unity England gave Italy moral and indeed material support and always since stood her as a good friend. Finally the United States has been the haven of millions of Italians who have always been hospitably welcomed here and whose relatives in the old country are well aware of the good feeling we bear towards their race.

Western European civilization owes more to Italy than any other country in the world. Our Christian culture is purely Roman in origin and upon the fall of the Eastern Empire in the 15th century Italy took up the torch and has borne it ever since. With few exceptions the major cultural movements have emanated from the Italian peninsula and even during her period of political and economic hibernation this area of Europe remained a source of civilized inspiration.

Mussolini's civic improvements and the cheap victories he achieved in Ethiopia, Spain and Albania blinded the Italians to the road down which Fascism was leading them. The rest of the world, however, does not believe that they ever wished to be a party to the gross, godless cruelty whereby the Germans proposed to manifest their superiority to the rest of mankind. If their military attainments have been unsuccessful, it must be remembered that the natural leaning of the Italians is towards the arts of peace rather than the martial crafts. Unlike the Germans, who have for generations had a national sense of inferiority, the Italians have for many centuries been a superior people who had no need of a resort to arms to prove it.

For many years there have been sporadic rumors of disagreement between Premier Mussolini and the House of Savoy which is the Italian Royal Family. Some quarters hold that King Victor Emanuel is a lazy selfish man who is mainly concerned with his own comfort. His heir, the Prince of Piedmont however, is an energetic person who is persistently reported to be antagonistic to the premier. This Prince is married to Marie-Jose, sister to the King of the Belgians, hence no lover of Germany. Some authorities hold the feasibility of an ousting of Mussolini, the abdication of the King and an assumption of power by the Crown Prince who is popular among the masses.

All our dealings with Italy since the war's outbreak have been characterized by an absence of venom on our part. The President has assured the Italians that the Allies are eager to welcome their country back into the concert of civilized nations and it is to be hoped they soon appreciate that they ultimately have more to gain from a United Nations victory than they conceivably could from a German dominated world.

He Who Wants To Be A Leader Will Be One

"I was generally a leader among the boys, and sometimes led them into scrapes." BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, "Autobiography," Vol. I, Page 100.

Were Franklin an enlisted man today, his realization that it takes "leadership to direct a scrap would probably lead him directly to a commission. Franklin was aware of that intangible "something" even as a boy. He nurtured that sense of leadership, which in him was inborn, and later as a dynamic statesman capitalized on its power to sway the events of the world.

Not all of us are so fortunte as to be born with a strong sense of leadership. However we all can develop the quality of leadership by determination, by practice, by strengthening our character. Like the development of other admirable traits of character, leadership requires hard work. It requires that a man first decides he wants to be a leader—he will be a leader. Once that first decision is firmly implanted in concrete, then that man, by dint of hard work, will become a leader of men. The more work, the greater the leader.

The question then arises, "How best does a man go about working on leadership once he has reached his decision? The answer is simplicity itself. Just look about you. Do the things you are supposed to do and a little more besides. Just don't salute a passing officer, be the first to salute him. Don't just come to attention when an officer walks into a room, be the one that calls attention." Don't just keep your body in average sort of physical condition, see to it that you are the tops in physical form in your entire group.

It is these little things which lead a man on to the bigger problems of leadership. If a man can consistently conquer these fundamental steps, it might then be said that he has won the first round and is well on his way to success through leadership.

Oh I have bid the earthbound farewell, and lanced through skies of purple dawn, alone;
Where the cloudy seas of the heavens swell, I find myself at home.

Across the countless miles of space, I've seen my love in faded hue,
Frolic along with ease and grace, with every maneuver my ship went through.

Then over the very top of dawn . . .
Ah, 'Tis heaven where no men have trod,
Where a man can lift his soul aloft,
And be alone . . . with God.

1776—This Nation Shall Not Perish—1943

In Flanders' Field The Poppies Die

In Flanders Field the poppies die,
And shorn of blossoms withered lie,
Across the breast of soldiers brave,
Who died that Freedom's flag might wave
Beneath the Great Creator's sky.

We know they died, but better know,
Wherever men shall want it so,
Forth from rubble of ravished dreams,
Born of oppression's ruthless schemes
A better way of life shall grow.

For souls of men cannot be chained
And never shall it be ordained,
That tyrant's sword may cut the thread
Which binds the living to the dead
While vice and lust rule unrestrained.

Those who lie here shall never rest,
Until the lasting peace has blest,
The sacrifice they gladly made
Without regret and unafraid,
They met and passed the one great test.

When time shall ease all loss and pain,
In peaceful sleep shall lie the slain
And round their graves as if to hide
The war-torn pock marked countryside,
The popplies yet shall bloom again.

Key Says—

SCHOOL GIRLS, LANDLADIES COULD TEND WAR BABES FOR YOUNG MOTHERS

Sometimes I think the ones getting the worst break just now are the war babies, those poor little scraps of humanity who are unable to protect the wrongs done them.

It must be pretty tough on a baby to be dragged from pillar to post—which in his case includes the grocery stores, crowded shops, stuffy theaters, and even an occasional night club. Some infant protege ought to tell his pleasure-seeking young mother to send for the pamphlets on infant care and the child from one to six put out by the United States Department of Labor.

"The best way to prevent infection is to prevent exposure," says this excellent pamphlet. "Do not take a little child to public gatherings, such as fairs or circuses or into crowded stores. These are always overexciting and overfatiguing, and offer great risk of infection. Unless you suggest to the child that he is missing something by not going to such places, he will feel no disappointment. A child should not be expected to sit through movies or other entertainments suitable only for grown-ups."

Grant you that a young mother often has a hard time, these days, finding someone with whom she can leave the baby. There are times when it is impossible to do necessary shopping unless the child is taken along. But such essential trips surely need not include browsing through store after store, a hot and fretful baby riding on one hip. Nor should it include a long jaunt through downtown streets on a window-shopping tour, with a hot sun pouring down on a babe-in-arms or a weary toddler.

* * *

A mother has a certain responsibility to a child. She alone is responsible for its physical welfare and often, in these days when children see little of their fathers, for its mental and moral upbringing. If she takes her job seriously enough she will not mind too much the curtailing of pleasures to a minimum while children are small, especially if she realizes that these years are but a few out of her life, while to a child they are his most important years both from a mental and a physical standpoint.

For the young mother I put up a plea for understanding, however. Often only a girl herself, she is suddenly confronted with the routine of baby tending. It is only natural that she should still want a few leisure moments for enjoyment. Encumbered with a small child and unable to find someone to look after him, there are only two solutions for her—to stay at home or to take the child with her. Under such circumstances, and there are many of them, it would be an unmitigated act of kindness for school girls or landladies to volunteer for a few hours to "mind the baby."

The answer to the need of millions is not a new doctrine but new living.

Chaplain's Corner...

A MOST PATHETIC VERSE

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

Once a year wherever a bagpipe can be mustered Scotch folk come together to celebrate the birthday of their sweet singer, Robert Burns.

It is good to do so for Burns is Scotland. Nay, he is more. He belongs to us all. He speaks our common language. His songs of humor, of love, of home, of country, have sung their way into the hearts of people everywhere.

Likewise we feel in him a kindred spirit when he writes of the dignity of man. "A man's a man for a' that." "Princes and lords are but the breath of kings."

Passing strange, it was this phase of life that most disturbed him. Conscious of his own worth, his fierce, passionate nature rebelled against his heritage of grinding poverty. This seeming injustice makes him, at times, as moody as a Scotch sky and as restless as the sea that beats the craggy cliffs of his beloved country.

To one of these bitter tempers must be attributed one of the most pathetic verses in all literature. While plowing he turned up the nest of a field mouse. A fellow worker made an effort to kill it. Burns protested. The result was his poem, "To a Mouse," well known to all.

These are tragic lines, for they portray his own life. So far it has been a dreary round and though he will live on some years and come to great place, with prophetic insight, for him the future is dark and foreboding.

He means man's treatment to the "Wee, sleekit, cow-rin tim'rous beastie." . . .

Then,
Still thou are blest, compar'd wi' me!
The present only toucheth thee:
But, Och! I backward cast my e'e
On prospects drear;
An' forward, tho' I canna see,
I guess an' fear.

One does not have to go to college to go straight.

Reform is the change we demand in the other fellow. Dictatorship is the change some other fellow demands in us. The real change is the change we ourselves demand—in ourselves.

Bickering will lead to rout,
Teamwork must begin;
Nations conquered from without
Have first collapsed within.

Prejudice is being down on something you're not up on.

USO Presents—

SNAKE-HUNTING ON CHATTAHOOCHEE, BOAT RIDE, AND DANCING LESSONS

By PVT. SHELDON A. KEITEL

News Item: "Technician Fifth Grade Ima G. Eye of the 26th Mess Kit Repair Unit, Fort Benning, shot a 14 1-2 pound snake last Sunday afternoon while cruising aboard the Falcon on the Chattahoochee River nine miles below Columbus. USO officials reported the "catch" was one of the biggest recorded."

You think we're crazy? Well, not yet, and such a story well might appear in the local prints shortly. The Ninth Street USO will inaugurate Sunday, July 4, a program of river cruises starting at 11 a. m. and lasting well through the afternoon into early evening.

Feature of the program will be snakeshooting and frog digging besides fishing and boating. The Falcon will cruise leisurely approximately 10 miles down the river and return. Two meals will be served to the servicemen en route. All this for the nominal fee of $1.00.

The Salvation Army USO clubs in Columbus and Phenix City will offer their usual entertainment features on their programs next week.

The Army-Navy YMCA-USO will co-operate with the 176th Infantry Regiment in teaching a number of the doughboys not the familiar "hut, tup, trip, hup" but rather the "one, two, three, glide." . . . Classes for beginners in dancing will be held Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. . . . Skating continues to be well patronized at the club every Sunday afternoon and evening and Monday, Wednesday and Thursday night on the patio . . . The Army Hour from the YMCA-USO Sunday afternoon will feature the ASTP chorus from Fort Benning composed of more than 75 voices . . . The sewing and mending corner is open every day and night.

Two outdoor parties are scheduled in the Ninth Street USO's summer hospitality program for the July 10-11 week-end . . . Fifty servicemen may obtain tickets at the Ninth Street USO for each of the affairs . . . Saturday, July 10, the scene will be the Columbus home of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Simons where a dance with girls in "formal summer party dresses" will be the attraction . . . The next day, Sunday, a picnic will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Rosenberg.

Dead Pigeon-------

CAN'T MARRY EM SPENCER UP YONDER IN NEW JERSEY

BY CAPT. F. M. SCHILLING

Joe crouched down deep in his foxhole. Somehow he wished to hell he could light up a cigarette. Not that he was scared, mind you, not Joe. Just a bit unaccustomed to the whole thing, that's all. Somehow he could imagine the others were feeling the same way, all awaiting the first baptism of fire. Much worse than those initiations and hazings gone through at State College after accepting the bid to the frat.

The rest of the company was scattered around in foxholes nearby. Joe didn't feel much like an isolationist. The mere knowing that the other fellows were close by made everything so much better, although it didn't take away the frightening newness of what lay in store.

"How soon will it start? How soon?", Joe thought to himself. Suddenly he could hear the machine guns growing louder and more constant in bursts of threes, or fives, or seven. Joe counted the shots in the bursts. He listened to loud rumblings that counded like distant artillery fire. He took a deep breath and inhaled the pungent, sickening odor of battle. He looked upward and saw the brilliant light of a flare. He froze in position as if by second nature, forgetting that he was tucked away in the safety of his foxhole. Then it was quiet again. The artillery groaned and rumbled at a distance. The machine gun fire ceased. Only an occasional rifle shot filled the air.

How soon will it start? How soon?", Joe thought to himself. Everything was dark again. The flare had died out. The noise became a drone in the background. The evening breeze whipped up the stench of battle and made it stronger. Sound, smell, darkness and fear blended into a temporary oblivion.

"I wonder if Dad's come home from the factory yet? Is Em in her room writing a letter to me? How's John getting along in the Air Corps?"

A hundred million years slipped by. "Out of your holes and at them." That was IT. Jack took a better grip on his rifle, checked the bayonet with a quick glance, then sprang to his feet and said a tiny prayer as he started running. "Please make it good, God. Thanks," he said, and then started running harder.

He could hear the machine guns cracking again. This time they were louder. No time to count the bursts. He could hear a voice giving orders. A sharp, quick voice within himself; automatic and precise from the training that had been made a subconscious part of him.

"Zig-zag, Joe. Down on your belly. O. K. now. Your next objective, that tree. Run. Jump the bank and wade that stream. Down again. Use your head, for Pete's sake, use your head."

Running, diving, climbing, crawling, Joe began to feel like a pretty important machine. Being scared wasn't bothering him much. He plunged the bayonet and saw it draw blood. He could smell it, but it didn't bother him. He squirmed his way under the barbed wire and glanced up at the tracers flying around overhead. "Damn mosquitoes," he muttered, "One bite and you're a dead pigeon."

He could see the lights now. One more spurt of energy and he'd reach the objective. He could hear that voice again, "On your toes. Pump those legs. Grab that rifle and keep it ready." A shot rang out. Joe flopped down like an elephant with its legs shot off. Then he was up again. A couple of steps left. Joe made it.

Tired, dirty and hungry, Joe climbed into the two and a half-ton that was waiting there for him. He started the cigarette that he had waited for. The tiny flame lit up the back of the truck and he could see the other fellows for an instant. He recognized the fellow sitting next to him. Pretty tired and dirty and hungry, too. The voice inside Joe wasn't sharp anymore, but sleepy and slow. Joe hear dit just before he dozed off in the back of the truck.

"You'll be in your bunk soon. It won't be long until you're back at the barracks. You're not the only on who's tired. These realistic obstacle courses are pretty swell training . . . and besides, you'll be a shavetail in a couple of weeks. But remember, Joe, the next machine guns won't be firing overhead, the shot from behind trees won't be blank, and the smell won't be artificial. Most of all, Joe, Em Spencer back in Jersey can't marry a dead pigeon."

AXIS BANKS

Certains firms in the Middle West have hit on a new idea to prevent absenteeism. To wake up American workers who absent themselves from important war work for no valid reason, these companies have been putting checks drawn on the "Bank of the Axis" in the pay envelopes of these people, who were recently surprised to find two checks in their pay envelopes, one for the actual days worked and the other for time absent from their jobs. The check for not working was drawn on the "Bank of the Axis" signed by Adolf Hitler and countersigned by Benito Mussolini. Across its face was stamped in red letters "Negotiable in Human Lives." As a result of these checks, one firm reported 27 per cent reduction in absenteeism immediately after the first checks were issued. Others reported similar reductions.

G. I. From Gotham Finds Yanks Soft From Good, Clean Living

Philosophical Lecture On Civilization Lulls Pals To Sleep On Their Feet

By PVT. THOMAS DEVINE

Our Axis enemies have accused us of being soft. Now impetuous and bull-headed people always passionately rush to their own defense whenever any adverse criticism is levelled at them. The more rare and objective type of man gives pause and ponders on the possible truth of the accusation with a view to rectifying his shortcomings.

The regrettable truth is that most recruits, more particularly the young ones, are soft as cotton wool and no one seems to have discovered the perfectly palpable reason to wit: American youth lives too darned good, clean, healthy lives.

When I was inducted I was swished onto a railway train and swooped off to a reception center quicker than you could say dis-establishmentarianism. Being rather well advanced into the post adolescent period ("Class of 1904" they say on the Continent) I found myself surrounded by innumerable fresh-faced young folk who could have been my children (were I ever so ill advised) I could easily perceive from their sidewise glances that they interpreted my austere diffidence as galloping decrepitude and wondered if the truant officers from the Natural History Museum were not hot on my trail.

Smugly burying my nose in a well thumbed copy of "Fleurs du Mal," by Baudelaire, I comforted myself with the reflection that these lads would presently be hurting: and so they were.

I refrain from boring a G. I. audience with one more recapitulation of the processes a person goes through at an induction center. The G. I. humorists who have given us such treats within the past year or so in book form would, if laid end to end stretch from here to there and the literary world is as pockmarked with their offerings as Pantelleria in the post-Spaatz period.

THE ROSES HAD FLED

Let me content myself with saying that after a few hours of punchings, proddings, pinchings, prickings, and pokings in divers lines; being permitted to go to bed at 2:30 and allowed to rise at 5:30 (or else) the roses had fled from the youthful damask cheeks and the sparkle had vanished from the eager eyes. The whinings and plaintive murmurs which arose from these robust young lungs made the mournings of the Hebrew women at the Wailing Wall sound in comparison like a Polish wedding.

I, on the other hand, was happy as a lark and fresh as a daisy (if I may be permitted a mixed animal and vegetable metaphor). I've always maintained that life doesn't really start until about 2 a. m. and I never could see eye to eye with those folk who seem to think there is something undesirable about the habits of the sun in the Scandinavian peninsula and points north. Actually it is only in such climes that the sun displays the gentlemanly reticence suitable to its functions.

Well—as I was observing—all these corn-fed young bumpkins looked and behaved as though they were just winding up a war rather than about to commence one and it was very evident that they were somewhat outraged to see me, their senior, so blithe, fresh and whistling a lilting tune from Gertrude Stein's "Four Saints in Three Acts" at that time of night. One of them ventured to comment on my condition.

TOO, TOO CLEAN

"My worthy lad," said I, "the trouble with you and all your contemporaries is that you've lived good clean lives. I dare say you go to bed before midnight 365 days a year, are probably up with the birds (horrid noisy creatures) every morning, do setting-up exercises, drink nothing but mille from contented cows, eat some highly endorsed breakfast food and chivvy some kind of a ball about a lot regularly. Also you no doubt continually drive an automobile about the countryside without a hat while allowing the breeze and sunlight to do devilish things to your hair and complexion. How, in the light of this rubbish, can you expect to stand up to a situation like this?"

"On the other hand, since a perverse providence (grossly misnamed since it failed to provide) decreed that I must earn my own living, thereby denying me the civilized luxury of sleeping all day, I have schooled myself to a minimum punishing of the box spring. After all you can't take in the more noisesome joints seven nights a week and sleep at the same time. Thus you make a choice between sleep and pleasure. I chose pleasure.

"Here are you complaining about loss of sleep at 2 a. m. Why back in civilization things are just getting started at this time. Many a morning have I pepped into bed at 5 a. m. only to bound brightly out at 8:30, shave, shower, shine and breakfast and be at the office at practically the crack of dawn. Oh well—10 o'clock if you must quibble over a few hours, and for that matter, they say that in Iceland at certain seasons dawn does occur around ten o'clock.

ONE MAD RUSH

Well then—there I am in the mad rush of the office and after I've dished the dirt of the town and read the paper in a mad rush it's one o'clock before I know it and I have to rush over to Armando's or Henri's and tear through a snack and three or four Pernod frappes in the limited space of two short hours or so. Then scamper back to the office barely in time to tell a few snappy new ones to my editor-in-chief and simply fly to a cocktail skirmish where one spent hours fighting one's way through hordes of hungry Russian countesses to the buffet only to meet with bargain sherry or medicinal tsting martinis made with American vermouth.

"If you can manage to escape from one of these reconaissance problems, snatch a mouthful at a quaint little place I discovered called the Saint Regis Grill and get off on the round of the regular spots by midnight you're darned lucky.

"I never dissipated my strength in my youth by indulging in complicated sports nor did I expend my nervous energy in driving a gasoline automobile. All a civilized man need know about motor transport is how to whistle for a taxi.

"In my dissertations against a good clean life you mustn't take me too literally. I always took a shower every morning and changed my linen at least once a day. So much for cleanliness. As for goodness: I never tossed a brickbat through the window of St. Thomas' Church nor did I ever chalk scatological words on the polished surfaces of dowager's 1925 model Brewster town cars. During my nocturnal dissipations the streets of Manhattan were never painted red. I paused at a vivid shade of pink. I always say—moderation in all things.

SOPORIFIC

At this point I paused in my oral thesis to take a badly needed deep breath. I heard a peculiar stertorous sound first in front of me in the line of G. I. waiting for their next innoculation, then to my rear. Removing my spectacles which hot air from some source or other had clouded in the chill November night I polished the lens and set them back on my nose. Then I had revealed to me a monumental proof of the truth of the philosophy I had just expounded. All the G. I.'s within hearing distance were asleep on their feet.

WAAC Director Visits Benning

Captain Westray Boyce, staff director, Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, Fourth Service Command, was at Fort Benning Friday, June 25, on a routine tour of inspection.

Captain Boyce is a graduate of the second class of officer candidates of the WAACs, Des Moines, Ia. Before entering active service she was for a number of years with the Federal Government in Washington and later with the Federal Works Agency.

Captain Lorene M. Wolcott, assistant staff director accompanied Captain Boyce.

Commenting on her visit to Fort Benning, Captain Boyce said, "The WAAC Detachment, Station Complement, Fort Benning, Ga., is doing fine work and is a splendid example of the important place these women are taking in the Army today."

Truck Regiment Master Sergeants Off To School

The Provisional Truck Regiment has lost two of its three master sergeants with the departure of Master Sergeants James R. Keith and Isaac Joe, both of Headquarters & Headquarters Detachment, for Camp Lee, Va.

These noncommissioned officers were selected by their superiors to attend an advanced course of instruction in the Quartermaster Noncommissioned Officer Administration and Supply School at Camp Lee and are two of the regiment's best qualified enlisted personnel in administration and supply.

Sergeant Keith, the regimental sergeant major, had served as such since the organization's activation in December, 1942. Prior to that time he had served with the 48th Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) and, more recently, the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) as personnel sergeant major.

Sergeant Joe, the top-ranking enlisted man in supply in the Provisional Truck Regiment was, likewise, a transfer from the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) where he served in the supply branch.

These men will pursue advanced courses in their fields for a period of approximately three months and then return to their original station.

Corporal Robert L. Stinson is acting sergeant major during Sergeant Keith's absence, and to date has familiarized himself to a commendable degree with the many duties connected with his new status.

In Sergeant Joe's absence, Pvt. Wilson Sparks, a clerk in the Regimental Supply Office, is taking over a greater part of the responsibility for storing, issuing, and accounting for the many types of supplies for regimental personnel, as well as varied classes of motor parts for the organization's sundreds of vehicles.

Stock Car Race Winner Is Motor Mechanics Student

Born with a silver carburetor in his mouth, Pfc. Pierce W. Wilbourn, the winner of the $3,700 Los Angeles, Calif., "Stock Car Race" in 1936(is now a motor mechanics student at the Infantry School.

Private Wilbourn, who has been burning up every type of track since 1931, when he rode to an ignoble fifth place in Huntington Beach, Calif., has been making a very comfortable living in a very uncomfortable manner ever since. His fellow students have Wilbourn pegged down as a darn good story-teller, and sit by the hour listening to his droll tales of near misses and not so near misses. The day room of the 21st Company of the First Student Training Regiment constantly reverberates to the hearty guffaws and the drawn out "ohhhhh's" as Wilbourn brings a group of motor mechanics around the home bend in the big classic race of a year or two ago.

400 STARTS

From the first start that Wilbourn moved up to, until the time that racing by motor was banned for the duration, Wilbourn has made in the neighborhood of some four hundred starts. Not all in big races for a man has to learn this hazardous business as well as any other, but in later years hitting some of the top boards in the big time circuit. Out of these many starts a good percentage have found him in the chips. Approximately 150 times the starter has flagged him down as first man across the winning line. Although such a high percentage of wins nets the driver a very handsome bank account, yet it also has its compensating hazards. Wilbourn himself, while shoving an Offenhauser Midget along a dirt track in 1938, went into a spin that resulted in a series of end-to-end rolls, ten in all, over an area of 137 feet. Needless to say, when they finally demotorized Wilbourn he was ready for the meat wagon. Because of his excellent physical condition and iron will he was discharged from the hospital after 16 weeks and went back to ply his trade with a newly healed shoulder bone.

SPEAKING OF WRECKS

Speaking of wrecks brings to Wilbourn's memory the most remarkable accident he has ever fitnessed. In 1940 during the big Balboa Stadium races five cars were roaring down the straightaway grappling with one another for first place. Suddenly the leading car wobbled a bit, hooked wheels with the crowding second car, and a fraction of a second later all five cars were interlaced in a pile of smoking metal that looked like the successful beginning of a Boy Scout drive for scrap iron. It looked like curtains for five of the race game's best drivers. Suddenly, however, a doctor began to count noses on them as could walk and discovered that not a single driver had been injured.

It always isn't the driver who suffers a glood and gut expirence. Sometimes an accident will happen that throws panic and injury amongst the closely-packed spectators. Wilbourn vividly recalls the most harrowing sight he has witnessed. At the Huntington Beach 5-8 of a mile track in California a car was pounding down an open stretch in a dirt track classic, when suddenly the hub broke and a wheel went racing ahead of the careening car.

20 LAID LOW

There was not much of a fence to protect the spectators from such an accident and within the space of seconds some twenty-odd people had been laid low by the whirring wheel. Two or three of whom were seriously injured. However, Wilbourn hastens to add that since the time of this accident, such occurrences have been minimized because of the legislation which requires all cars to be squipped with hub-safeties. Wilbourn also assures his listeners that the spectator is afforded some means of protection should such a freak accident occur. The law requires that there be first a doctor present at all times and second that an ambulance present at all times. Many races have been delayed and postponed because of the absence of one or both.

Pfc. Wilbourn is not of a superstitious nature, having broken a mirror or two in his day, walked under a ladder, and driven several cars with the number 13 as their identification. But Wilbourn does speak more slowly regarding the aurora of superstition surrounding a man's last race before retiring. It seems that most drivers have a fear of cracking up before the finish of such a race. Of course, Wilbourn agrees that such a thing is nothing but silly superstition, but then there was Gus Schrader. Schrader is Wilbourn's nomination for the all-time greatest race-track driver. He was killed in 1941 at the age of 55 in his last race before retirement.

Henry Armstrong, former featherweight, lightweight and welterweight champion, drew gates of $425,000 in his first 22 comeback attempts.

Miss Peacock Named Lawson Field Hostess

Announcement is made by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer of the appointment of Miss Dorothy Ann Peacock as hostess at Lawson Field.

Miss Peacock comes to the Fort direct from the teaching staff of Russell High, Atlanta, Ga., but had taught previously in the Birmingham schools and also at Bessemer, Ala.

An honor graduate from the University of Alabama where she received her A. B. degree, Miss Peacock also had one year at Agnes Scott College in Decatur, Ga., after her graduation from Girls High School as well as several summers at Emory University where she majored in education. She was on the staff of the college paper at the university when it received a special citation from the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism.

Miss Peacock is an instructor in first aid for the Red Cross and has done special work at the USO-Terminal Station Soldiers Lounge, in Atlanta.

Spiriters Help With Dance Classes

The 176th Infantry in cooperation woth the local USOs is holding regimental dancing classes. The classes were started under the guidance of Mrs. Carlien Hennesy and Mrs. Dayn of the USO, and Pfc. Mike Tinnirelo of the 176th band.

The class lasts for two hours during which time the men try their best to learn the fox-trot, waltz and rhumba. The men have been showing marked improvement and they expect to graduate after two lessons. The class is a popular one and no absentees are expected.

3rd STR Company Boasts 87 Men From Overseas

Eighty-seven men in the current officer candidate class of the Fifth Company, Third Student Training Regiment, have seen service which included duty outside continental United States.

Selected from the active armies to become candidates for commissions because of their energy, experience and character as demonstrated in overseas service, many of the men are fresh from combat with the enemy.

A constantly increasing flow of officer material from overseas units is arriving in the Third Student Training Regiment. Most of these candidates have been under actual fire and have demonstrated that they can think and act in emergency situations.

Each man in the Fifth Company overseas contingent traveled thousands of miles in returning to this country to attend The Infantry School. Many of them crossed dangerous stretches of ocean and some came through combat areas for most of their journey back.

List of the areas from whence the candidates have come reads like a table of the American theatres of operation. It covers American Army bases in Iceland, Christmas Island, Canton Island, Guadalcanal, Hawaii, Australia, Alaska, North Africa and England as well as secret points in the South Pacific.

The longest fight on record was between Patsy Tunney and Jack Hones at Chelsea, England, in 1825. Hones won in 276 rounds. Next longest was a draw between A. Bowen and J. Burke in New Orleans, April 6, 1893. This bout took seven hours, 19 minutes.

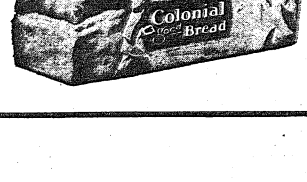
300th Infantry Band Serenades Wrong Recruits

After patiently waiting more than an hour to greet the new recruits assigned to the regiment and march them into the area, the 300th Infantry band finally received word that the men were coming.

They struck up a lively air and stepped in front of the fifty-odd men arriving from a basic replacement center. The band past regimental headquarters and several staff officers came out to review them.

The payoff came when one of officers, after "Halt" was given, looked at the tags on the men.

"Say," he exclaimed, "These aren't our recruits. They're for the 2nd Army Ordnance across the street. Take 'em away."



The finishing touch to the story was applied when the 300th recruits finally did arrive. There was no band to greet them; the music makers were playing guard mount.

WHO'LL IT BE? That's the big question that will be in every baseball fan's mind along about 2:30 Sunday when the Profs and Parachutists square off at Gowdy Field for the opener of the five-game series to decide post honors for the first half of the baseball season. There are arguments on both sides of the fence despite the fact that the Academic nine will probably take the field as favorites.

One fact stands out, however, and that is that neither team will be representative of the pennant winning combination in its respective loops. The one-officer rule, which must be enforced in the inter-league series, will force two Prof regulars to the sidelines, while the transfer of Bruiser Kinard and the untimely death of Lieut. Jim Donovan, killed in a jump-tower accident, will weaken the TPS sluggers in at least two spots.

We mention this fact now only because some wag is sure to come along when the series is over and claim that his favorite team could have beaten both contestants. That might be true because usually short series prove nothing. But it's the club that wins consistently during the schedule over a period of weeks and makes a runaway of its league race such as both the Profs and Parachutists did that rates the nod as true champs.

Weakened as they are, however, the series rivals are sure to play inspired ball with post supremacy at stake. This corner looks for a mighty interesting series with the distinct possibility that it might go the limit of five games. One thing is sure, the opener on Sunday should touch off some real Fourth of July fireworks for the post's rabid diamond fans. We wouldn't trade our seat even for a three-day pass!

SPEAKING OF things that shouldn't be missed there is tonight's Water Safety show at Russ Pool which promises real excitement. The grand finale should be a humdinger when those Red Cross gents set fire to two pools of petrol and then demonstrate how soldiers can either leap into the burning oil or swim through it with complete safety simply by splashing water ahead of them to clear the way. Ben Stanton and Holman Marks, the Red Cross men who have conducted the course, deserve a real verbal orchid for the way they have conducted the class and for the invaluable knowledge they will have left at Benning to be passed on to hundreds of men—knowledge that may same day save their lives in the event of disaster at sea.

POST TOAST in softball circles is this lad Earl Varchminn of the Parachute School's 1st Academic Company. He seemingly can do things with a softball that no one ever imagined judging by the reports of the batters who TRY to hit against him. Getting mildly curious last week as to just how he did these almost magic things on the softball mound, we managed to corral Varchminn for an interview.

And here's what we uncovered. Varchminn, who is really quite a modest chap, admits that he can make the ball drop as much as a foot and a half on certain pitches. Is it any wonder the batters can't connect with it? It's easy to understand how a hardball pitcher can throw that kind of a drop but for a man to be able to do that with the larger 12-inch spheroid is really something. Secret of his success, also, is his marvelous control. Varchminn claims he tries never to throw 'er down the middle. Always works the corners and evidently seldom misses judging by his permitting only four hits in the first four loop games his team played. O. K. fellows, now that you know how Varchminn does it, you shouldn't have any further trouble hitting him. Oh no!

THEY SAY that Elmer Neibler, reliable center fielder on the Academic Profs, is walking on his hands these days. We can't vouch for the fact, but it seems logical after his two accidents last week. First off, Nibbles ups and develops some nasty athlete's foot on one hoof (and why shouldn't he since he's an athlete) that requires medical treatment and incapacitates him somewhat. Then the very next day, he drops a ketchup bottle or something on the OTHER foot and that wound requires two stitches to heal it up. That puts two feet out of commission, so why shouldn't he walk on his hands?; Despite all the misfortune, however, Elmer says he'll be ready for the title series, even if he has to use slippers instead of spikes. Maybe he should borrow paratroop jump boots for protection.

CREDIT THREE employees of the post engineer with ingenuity for their work in constructing the jump tower which will be used in tonight's big show at Russ Pool. Ordered to construct the tower early this week, they arrived at the pool with a truck load of lumber, hammers and nails, only to find that the tower was to be constructed on the island life guard stand which is surrounded on every side by at least 15 feet of water. And there was no boat in sight.

Undaunted, however, the civilian employees strode into the bath house, borrowed three pair of trunks and when last seen were busy as beavers, swimming through the water hauling their lumber and equipment over to the island stand. Rather wet work for carpenters, but by gosh, they did the job they set out to perform!

TALK ABOUT hard-hitting ball clubs there days and you can't overlook those rampageous Red Sox of the 1st STR who are literally mopping up in the colored Service League. With an almost all-professional line-up they have a batting order that is truly terrific with the third, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh batsmen all towering over six feet. Those giant lads wave that bat around like it was a toothpick and can really whale the old horsehide.

Sunday afternoon against the same Panther nine that had handed Tuskegee a drubbing just the night before, the Red Sox bombarded the fences with 12 extra base hits out of the 17 they accounted for in a seven-inning contest. That's hitting in any man's league, and one of the blows by Gene Randolph cleared the fence beyond the 400-foot mark for the longest Gowdy Field homer of the year.

SHORT SHOTS—The Student Training Brigade nine will play in the second half TIS race as the 6th Regiment, ASTP Basic Training Center, since most of the personnel from the now-defunct brigade has been transferred to the new outfit. . . . Two new teams that are possible entries in the Fort Benning League next half are the 225th Station Hospital and the 515th Parachutes. . . . You could have a miniature Rose Bowl game at the post with all the former Georgia and UCLA lads now stationed here. There's George Poschner, Jim Todd, J. P. Miller, Lamar Davis, and Gene Ellenson of the Bulldogs, and Bob Waterfield, Buck Compton, Al Solari and a couple more of the Bruins roaming over Benning landscape. . . . Sgt. Jim McManus, Supply Detachment oracle, may not be the post's number one baseball fan, but he sure can needle more of the players than any other fan. He really keeps 'em on the ball. . . . Tomorrow night's the night lots of fans have waited all season for because it is the date the 300th battles the Profs for the first time since Lefty Francis took over the reins of the Triplet nine. It'll sure be interesting if Lefty toes the slab against his team-mates of a year ago. . . . Win Pederson, one of mighty Minnesota's greatest grid captains and an iron man who played all but 28 minutes during a recent Gopher title season, is now just one of the Benning boys. . . . Lt. Troy Ricks, former All-American who led 2nd STR to post court laurels last winter, is keeping in shape for the hardwood campaign by riding the bucking broncos at the post stables. This season, he'll be in Prof livery. . . . Give Buck Brady, chief groundkeeper at Gowdy Field, a boost for the swell way he's keeping the infield in shape during this sweltering weather. The infield greensward has never looked greener.

Post Title Series Starts On Sunday

Profs Meet Parachute School Nine in Opener Of Five-Game Play-Off

Joe Dickinson Slated to Hurl For Profs Against TPS Ace Mike Hogan

Baseball supremacy of America's most complete Army post for the first half of the 1943 campaign will be at stake Sunday afternoon when the Academic Regiment Profs, champions of the Infantry School League, and the Parachute School, Fort Benning League titlists, clash in the opening of a five-game series at 2:30 o'clock on Gowdy Field.

The series will continue on consecutive days until one or the other contestant has captured three tilts and the laurels. Games Monday and Tuesday are certain, therefore, with Wednesday and Thursday tilts depending on the outcome of the earlier battles. All weekday frays will get under way in Gowdy Field at 7 o'clock in the evening.

Two former minor league pitching stars are expected to oppose one another in Sunday's big opener. For the Profs, Joe Dickinson, of Milwaukee Brewer fame in the American Association, will toe the slab while Michael Patrick Hogan, once of the Baltimore Orioles in the International League, is expected to hurl for TPS.

RUNDUS VS. BARDIN

The second game on Monday night will probably see Rudy Rundus, former Rochester International Leaguer, get the mound call for the TIS champs with Pete Bardin, soldier fireballer, starting for the Parachutists. Lefty Lehner, a Prof veteran of several seasons, is the most likely third game choice and he will be opposed by Bucket Vaughn of the skyjumpers. After that, any of the previous three starters are likely to see action.

Although the Profs who have collected seven straight post titles will be a slight favorite to gain the first leg on their eighth conquest, critics concede the chutists a good chance for an upset. TPS boasts a hard-hitting, gashouse gang that is capable of playing some really inspired baseball as evidenced by a recent game when they scored eight runs in the ninth inning after two were out.

BOTH WEAKENED

Both teams will go into the little world series with weakened line-ups due to varying factors. Since in an inter-league series, the Profs must adhere to the one-officer rule instead of the three-officer rule which was in vogue in the TIS loop, two regulars will have to warm the bench.

The best guess on how the Prof line-up will be shifted is this. Manager Herb Moore, crack first baseman, will probably retire to the dugout and hand over the initial hassock to Lefty Lehner, who held down the slot for several seasons on championship clubs. Garnet Mercer, slugging right-fielder, is the other officer who will give way, yielding his job to Chet Dabbs. Dabbs, however, will probably patrol left field with Bill Cox moving around to right. Elmer Neibler will be in center, of course.

PRASSE REMAINS

This shifting will leave Erwin Prasse, the third baseman, as the only officer, in the starting line-up. Ben Zientara and Johnny Russo will be at second and short to complete the infield, while Ross Fenno will do the catching. If Lehner pitches one game, then Moore will go back to first, Neibler will relieve Prasse at third, Fenno will go to the gardens and Plunk will catch.

Now for the Parachutists. Greatly weakened in the catcher post by the transfer of Bruiser Kinard and the untimely death of Jim Donovan, Manager Mike Hogan will probably be forced to shift Al Gilman in from shortstop to take over the receiving job. Gilman started the season behind the plate and will not be entirely a newcomer behind the mask and pads.

MAGUIRE AT SHORT

Such a shift, however, will leave a gaping hole at shortstop which Hogan hopes to plug by using Mickey Maguire, utility infielder. Ben Boki, the leftfielder, could also be used in an emergency. Otherwise TPS will present its usual line-up with Gus Morris on first, Ed Porterfield at second, and Buck Kissel at third. Aiding Boki in the outfield will be Danny Coyle—in center and Mark Haller in right field.

Slugging 1st STR Red Sox Hold Lead in Service Loop

Trounce Panthers By 16-2 Count For Fifth Win

Trouncing the 3rd STR Panthers by a 16-2 county in the second game of Sunday's twin bill at Gowdy Field, the hard-hitting 1st STR Red Sox continued their mastery in the Service League to run up their fifth win in a row and remain in first place.

It was the only game of the week for the loop leaders who were rained out Friday in their scheduled tilt with the Post Detachment Tigers. They meet the Academic Pacesetters at Gowdy Field tonight, and then will have only the postponed tilt with the Tigers to play off sometime next week.

BLUES WIN AGAIN

Meanwhile, the Provisional Truck Blues kept close on the heels of the Red Sox by toppling the Reception Center in the opener on Sunday by a 6-1 count at Gowdy Field. It was their fourth win against a lone defeat, that at the hands of the Red Sox. The Blues tackle the Tigers in a second place battle Friday at Reception Center Field and also have a cancelled game to make up against the PTR Reds.

Tonight, a second game is slated at the R. C. diamond where the Orphans will entertain the 2nd STR Commandos who are floating around in fourth place, despite their 35-0 shellacking of the Academic Pacesetters last week, an all-time scoring record for Fort Benning baseball. A second game tomorrow night will see the PTR Reds invade the 3rd STR area for a tilt with the Panthers.

TIGERS TRIUMPH

In addition to the Sunday doubleheader, the only other games played last week asw the Post Detachment dump the PTR Reds by a 12-6 tally, while the Blues edged out the Pacesetters, 6-5, in an exciting tilt.

The Sunday twin bill provided most of the week's action, however, with both the Blues and the Red Sox playing excellent ball. Tacow was the lad for the Truckers who set the Reception Center crew down with only six hits as he hurled the Blues to a well-earned win.

WELMAKER STARS

He might have had tougher opposition, however, had Roy Welmaker started for the Orphans. As it was, the star left-hander came in as a relief hurler in the fifth and proceeded to hold the Blues hitless the rest of way as he fanned 12 of 15 batters he faced.

Coulter was the big batting star for the winners with his home run blast over the left field wall in the fifth frame with one aboard. The speedy shortstop also had a two-bagger to lead the winners at the plate.

GET 17 HITS

The nightcap saw the Red Sox slam the slants of Brummitt and Fonville, Panther pitchers, all over the lot. They collected 17 safeties and 12 of them were for extra bases. Biggest hitter was Gene Randolph, tall center fielder, who slammed out a pair of homers in consecutive innings.

His first round-tripper in the fourth cleared the right field barrier beyond the 400-foot mark for the longest homer of the season at Gowdy, while his second was an inside homer which rolled clear to the flagpole in deep center field. Jim Taylor pitched for the Red Sox and set the Panthers down with six blows as he struck out 12 batsmen.

Pacesetters Really Live Up To Name!!

The Academic Regiment ball teams don't believe in half-way measures. On top of the Infantry School league are the Profs.

At the bottom of the Service League are the Pacesetters, who went all out against the 2nd STR last week before they were nosed out 35 to 0.

The score is an all-time scoring record at Benning, and shows the determination of the Pacesetters to live up to their name.

Gator Nine Upset By 244th Tossers

In a free-hitting slug-fest, the 124th Infantry went down to a surprise 11 to 8 defeat, against the 244th Field Artillery, Friday, June 25 at Harmony Church Field.

The Artillerymen, knocking out 11 hits, including home runs by Loeffler and Welch, for 26 bases during the game, tallied 5 runs in the 4th inning to jump into the lead 6 to 5 and never be headed.

Junie Belin, Gator first sacker, was the leading hitter of the day with a single, double and a triple. Loeffler also got three hits, a round tripper and two bingles.

Ram Ramizoffi Stars As 176th Topples Profs

Lefty Wissman Hurls Spirits to 4-3 Lop Triumph

The 176th Infantry Spirits defeated the league leading Academic Profs Monday night by a score of 4-3. The game was a hotly contested one, and the second loss for the Profs this season.

Eddie Wissman pitched all the way for the Spirits and gave only five scattered hits. Captain "Ram" Ramizotti played heads-up ball at short-stop, handling eleven balls cleanly. The "Ram" made thrilling stops all through the game and it was he, who fittingly, ended the game with a superb stop of a hard hit ball in back of second base. Ram ran far to his left and stabbed at the ball, and with almost the same motion threw to Poland at first base to end the game.

SCORE 4 RUNS

All of the Spirit scoring was done in the last half of the 3rd inning. Wissman singled. Bill Lohr also singled, advancing Wissman to 2nd. Richardson, the next man up, popped out to the Prof short-stop. Compton, the next hitter, smashed a blow to right field scoring Wissman from second and advancing Lohr to 3rd.

Ramizotti sent a ball through 3rd scoring Lohr for the second Spirit run. The Profs held a conference on the mound, but Dickinson, their pitcher, stayed in the game. Erb the next man up hit a ball to the short-stop who threw wildly to 2nd base. Compton streaked home from 2nd and Ram from 1st, Erb pulling up at 3rd. Four runs were across on four hits and one error.

LOHR'S GREAT CATCH

In the fifth inning, "Shuffle" Lohr, the Spirit left fielder, made a sensational catch of Prasse's solid blow to deep left field. Lohr looked as that ball, turned, started running towards the fence, then he turned around again, looked at the ball and ran some more. Suddenly he threw his gloved hand up and took the ball over his shoulder with his back to the ball and while running towards the fence. The stands gave him a rousing ovation for that catch.

The Profs scored their three runs in the 7th inning when Prasse sent a home run ball over the score board in deep left field, sending two men home ahead of him.

Trainasium Built By Company, Cost Nine Dollars

An up-to-date outdoor gym—complete even to a tennis court—has been constructed by Co. H of the 300th Infantry at the eyebrow raising cost of only $9.

This trainasium, as it is called by the soldiers in the area who make almost constant use of it in their off hours, includes, in addition to the tennis court, badminton and volley ball courts, overhead ladders, a shimmey rope, trapeze rings, parallel bars, a torture bar, punching bag, boxing ring, high and broad jump pits and a basketball goal.

It took the company more than six weeks to complete building the outdoor gym, mainly because all work was done in the soldiers spare time. Hours off from troop requirement duties and company work were put in on the "trainasium."

The idea was conceived, when some of the men approached Lt. George Hallenbeck and told him that they were getting out of peak physical condition because of pressing troop demonstration commitments.

Lt. Hallenbeck acquainted Capt. Robert Bailey company commander with the plight of the men and received the green light to proceed with the construction of the project.

Using practically all material from salvage, and expending only $9 which went mostly for paint, the Co. H men went to work on the gym, directed by Lt. Hallenbeck, and now have one of the niftiest physical training areas on the post.

Panthers Trip Tuskegee Nine

Behind Lew Fonville's steady hurling, the 3rd STR Panthers slammed out a 10-3 decision over Tuskegee Army Flying School on Saturday night at Gowdy Field in a colored exhibition fray.

The tall right-hander had complete control of the game all the blows, he scattered them effectively over the nine-inning route and allowed two hits in only one frame. Fonville struck out only five men, but had the visitors bouncing to his infielders all night.

CHEARS HOMERS

Only one really hard blow was struck off the Panther pitcher and that was a tremendous 350-foot homer over the left field fence in the sixth by Lloyd Chears, Tuskegee third sacker. The Panthers grabbed an early lead with a run in the first, then broke loose in the third with a five-hit barrage which sent three more runs across. After that they coasted to victory.

13 HITS

Danny Williams, Hank Blackburn, Jack Griffin and Frankie Phillipson paced the Panther attack with two hits apiece. In all, the 3rd STR nine gathered 13 safeties off the combined slants of Pickens and James, the Tuskegee hurlers.

Score by innings:	R	H	E
Tuskegee AFS ..	000	101	010— 3 9 3
3rd STR Panthers	130	012	10x—10 13 1

Batteries: Tuskegee—Pickens, James and Smith, Childs. 3rd STR—Fonville and Young.

176th Spirits Threaten Near Close of Race

Climb Fast in TIS Loop With Four Recent Wins

BY SGT. MILTON LUBAN

Handing the champion Academic Regiment Profs a swift 4-3 clout on the chin Monday night, the fast-climbing 176th Spirits, by taking four of the last five games, have really climbed into the Infantry School league scramble for second place.

The Spirits are one game out of second and a half-game out of third and, if they continue to play the flashy ball they demonstrated against the Profs, should take their remaining two games.

Behind the beautiful pitchnig of Lefty Wissman the Spirits really sparkled in the field, Lohr robbing Prasse of at least a triple by a spectacular leaping catch of the ball just as it was about to hit—or sail over—the fence. Ramizotti practically covered the entire infield by himself, handling 13 chances flawlessly.

If nothing else, the Spirits showed they would definitely be in the fight for the second-half title along with the Profs, the Brigade and the 300th.

GATORS IN 5TH PLACE

The 124th Gators, after having their seven game winning streak disrupted, have had their troubles, having completed their first-half schedule solidly entrenched in fifth place. A week ago at this time the Gators seemed on the verge of crashing into second but a slump killed their chances of rising higher than fifth.

The Brigade has two more games to play and must be favored to take both, which would clinch second place for them.

trol. They will also take part in a mass resuscitation exercise.

One of the most interesting phases of the demonstration will be that of showing how ordinary items of G.I. clothing such as trousers, shirts, barracks bags or paratroop jump suits can be easily inflated while under water and made to serve as a life preserver.

G. I. PANTS

The G. I. Pants have lately proven to be the most effective of these items since the trouser legs can simply be tied and a real balloon-like effect achieved. On one pair of inflated trousers, an injured soldier could transport himself by using only his uninjured member, either arms or legs.

Two pairs of trousers can be used by a pair of soldiers to transport an unconscious soldier across the water, while with the aid of four pairs of pants and a standard medical litter, a quartet of fighting men can easily move a totally disabled buddy across the water. All of these skills will be demonstrated tonight at Russ Pool.

STANTON AT MIKE

At the microphone during tonight's show will be Ben Stanton, nationally known swim safety expert of the Red Cross, who has directed the course here at Benning. In the water, guiding the soldiers through their paces will be Holman G. Marks, the other Red Cross representative who came here especially for the two-week period of instruction.

Stanton and Marks had nothing but words of praise early this week for the group of Benning men who took the course. The Red Cross men stated they worked diligently and with an earnest desire to glean every bit of available information on water safety so they might pass it on to their buddies.

For tonight's show, approximately 500 seats will be available inside the pool enclosure on the northwest side. The remainder of the audience will be seated on the hillside behind the pool since a capacity crowd is expected.

Thot— For Food

BY THE DEPARTMENT OF MESS AND CAFETERIA SUPERVISION

This Department is at the service of Station Complement Food Service Units. Those who serve and those who eat are invited to assist in a betterment effort. Call upon, or send suggestions or criticisms to: Lt. Clifford E. Clinton, Fort Benning Exchange. Phone 3224, 10 to 11 a.m.

MISSION

". . . The messes and food serving units of this Command will immediately strive to achieve the highest attainable standards in nutrition, preparational attractiveness, operational efficiency and the elimination of every single item of avoidable waste . . ." — Brig. Gen. W. S. Fulton, Post commander.

MOST VITAL WORLD COMMODITY

America does not waste many drops of gasoline today—when we "slide" that rubber tire, it should grate on our conscience — the bankers are counting even the pennies. Yet while every ounce of food costs an average of 1 1-2c, we waste it by the millions of pounds a day — enough to keep alive a starving world.

But the cost of food no longer is the rub. To get food at all at any cost is the problem. America is desperate in its effort to meet the greatest demands in history. Food is the most vital element to victory, and to peace.

The United States Army through a conservation program is saving annually over 30,000 freight car loads. That is enough food to feed an Army or near two million men—$125,000,000 worth.

But since the inauguration of this program by the QMC, even greater urgency is upon us. The civilian population is facing lean larders—Our overseas forces need mounting shiploads—Congress debates (Subsidies) rewards for food, Food Czars and other means of aiding. But the question still remaining is getting more food!

WE MUST HELP

It is our duty as members of the armed forces at least not to waste a morsel of edible food. That means a lot more than well-fed Americans are used to. That means that EVERY man must help. Don't take more than you can eat.

It means that if we don't want bread, bacon, potatoes, salad, etc., don't take it just to throw it away. It means we must be cut to about 3 oz. or less per man per day. The job can't wait — Too many are hungry already. It is your job, and money! Will you help?

FT. BENNING TO LEAD

In the program to make Ft. Benning the shining example so far as mess operation, and food conservation are concerned, will be contests and awards between messes, regularly held meetings of messes, regularly held meetings of stations, training courses and all necessary to cooperative assistance.

Officers and mess sergeants of all station complement messes will attend first regular meeting: Friday July 2, Post HQ — Court Room, 2 p. m.

TRAINING AVAILABLE

The department of Mess and Cafeteria Supervision will accept for DS for periods of one week or more any enlisted or officer personner. Assignees will be used in the work and supervision at hand, assuring valuable practicable training, useful to those associated in mess problems. Contact Lt. Clinton.

YOU ASKED IT!

Q. "How come we are getting so much pork . . . sometimes three times a day?"

A. Beef and other meats are difficult to secure—even though the Government has ordered 45 per cent set aside for military forces. We are getting even now more than civilians or any other army.

Q. "What become of all those good steaks cafeteria used to run . . ."

A. For two weeks the exchange has been scarcely able to buy ANY beef. Packers are not killing, awaiting congressional action on price control and subsidies. Cafeteria will try to fill in with other foods—probably not as appealing—but at least as filling. That's something.

Q. "Is smoking permitted in messes . . . Our sergeant says he never heard of such a thing . ."

A. Depends upon your C.

O. But nothing in AR prevents. In fact the QM Survey reveals that where smoking is permitted, a policy of less regimentation and a more hospitable attitude is maintained—food waste drops.

Q. "Our mess has difficulty using grapefruit—men leave it . . ."

A. Grapefruit may be squeezed for juice—May be peeled and diced alone or with oranges, sugared and chilled making delightful fruit or dessert that will be used.

Q. Two pretty young ladies came up to the manager of the cafeteria last week and said: ". . . Your service is lousy . . ."

A. Cafeteria admits its service far inferior to its aims and plans. The exchange which operates it is confronted with many problems not often understood. The greatest of which is getting food—then to get folks to serve it—You see an Exchange Cafeteria must buy just like civilians and employ civilians and has no Army priority. The Cafeteria appreciates tolerance accorded by its thousands of daily patrons. Even though now rendering an important service it will accept the challenge of these two ladies as well as its other demands and continue to improve.

Q. "How can I prevent my men served in mess from taking more bread than they eat . . . often throwing while slices away . . ."

A. By allowing men to serve themselves — cutting slices in half, by varying bread offered—Making Melba toast or Sweibock—out of left over slices, by having NCO remind wasters that there must be no more. Thanks for questioning.

FOOD FOR THOT REMEMBER:

If hardships are hard to bear: "That load becomes light which is cheerily born."

If you are discouraged: "Every noble work is at first impossible."

If you feel like blabbing: "Silence is the true friend who never betrays."

this time. Appointments will be arranged through Lt. Walter F. Gleason of the Adjutant General's Department of the school.

As yet there are still open appointments for July 16, although the WAAC Detachment, Station Complement, has taken the first hour and one-half with 54 volunteers, and the 774th Company of the WAAC at Lawson Field will furnish nine more donors.

The remaining 112 appointments will be offered to post civilians, who may apply directly to Red Cross Headquarters on the Main Post, starting July 1. These appointments can be made between 8 a. m. and 5 p. m., and each prospective donor must apply in person.

TAKES 40 MINUTES

Explaining more of the procedure, Mitchell said that while the actual bleeding takes only 4 to 5 minutes, the entire time required to handle a donor amounts to about 40 minutes. First, there is an examination, including recording of medical history and pulse and blood pressure counts. Then the actual taking of blood is begun.

Mitchell stressed here that there was no pain, or adverse reaction to normal, healthy persons giving a pint of blood. Ordinarily the individual can go right back to work. However, taking every precaution, he is made to rest several minutes, and is given hot drinks and fruit juices to replace the fluid lost. This pint of blood removed is replaced by the body in a matter of hours.

A donor may eat a hearty meal four hours before reporting, but following this he must not take anything but the following: black coffee, or clear tea, (sugar may be used but no milk or cream), dry toast with jam or jelly (no butter), fruit juices, fresh of stewed fruit. However, absolutely no dairy products or fats in any form should be eaten during this period or doing so will result in the donation being wasted. The blood cannot be processed with these materials present.

BLOOD PROCESSED

The blood collected here will be sent to Cincinnati to be dehydrated and processed, and will then go overseas as standard equipment for sanitary corps men and stretcher bearers. The greatest value results from plasma's compactness, and the fact that it can be used anywhere and that anyone can give it. Mitchell stated that plasma is most effective as a combatant of shock, and particularly shock resulting from burns.

Assisting the trailer group, which is composed of one surgeon and four nurses, will be the Fort Benning Red Cross Auxiliary under the direction of Mrs. Walter S. Fulton, and Volunteer Service Units under Mrs. Leven C. Allen.

It is planned that the trailer unit visit Fort Benning again in six weeks, to handle additional donors who may not be afforded an opportunity for appointment this time.

Turbo-superchargers...

ANY FRONT, Today—This is the tail of a bomber—the kind that is turning broad daylight into twilight for the Axis. The history-making details are in your newspaper nearly every day.
One of the reasons why our planes can successfully attack the most heavily fortified areas in the world in daylight is because they can go "upstairs." They can operate thousands of feet above the range of the best Axis anti-aircraft fire—where the cold reaches 60 below zero and the air is so thin that ordinary engines lose four-fifths of their power! But American planes can reach these heights and maneuver and fight there because they are equipped with General Electric turbo-superchargers.
The turbo-supercharger is a fire-eating machine that takes its power from the red-hot exhaust, and uses that power to cram fresh air down a big engine's windpipe fast enough to give it "full military power" at almost any altitude. Because one part must operate in an arctic 60-below-zero, while the other end spins at a blistering 1500 degrees, and because the rotating parts have to travel twelve times as fast as the plane's engine—the turbo-supercharger is one of the toughest of all machines to design and build.
General Electric designed and built the first turbo-supercharger for a plane in 1918 and in the intervening 25 years has been working continually with engineers of the Army Air Forces and plane manufacturers to perfect it.
When the demand came for more high-flying planes, G.E. greatly increased its facilities to manufacture turbo-superchargers and turned over its designs and know-how to other manufacturers chosen by the Army. Development of the turbo-supercharger is another example of the engineering and research that are today developing better war weapons and will tomorrow provide products for better living in the peacetime world to follow. General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.
31,256 G-E employees are now serving in the armed forces. G-E employees at home are buying more than $1,000,000 worth of War Bonds a week.

THINGS TO REMEMBER:
★ If it's an American-built high-altitude bomber or fighter, it's turbo-supercharged.
★ The turbo-supercharger is an outstanding example of the co-operation of American industry and the armed forces, each working in its own sphere.

Lab Technicians Trained In Benning Hospital Unit

Six-Months' Course Established To Prepare Civilians For Work

The scarcity of skilled civilian and military laboratory technicians for Army hospitals is being alleviated at Fort Benning by the institution of a six-month course of instruction to qualify civilians for the important jobs at this Army post.

A new classification to enlist civilians for the tasks has been opened under the title of minor laboratory helper. With 10 civilians on the job at Fort Benning, they are undergoing a course at Station Hospital Unit No. 2 under the direction of Second Lieut. Clifford K. Ukuno.

Here in a completely equipped laboratory, the civilians are mastering the techniques of the labs and are qualifying themselves for vital war work. The laboratory helpers assist with all laboratory work in this hospital unit which acts as a clearing house for all dispensaries in the Harmony Church Area.

RESPONSIBILITIES

The student technicians are responsible for the cleaning and sterilizing of standard laboratory equipment, polishing slides, washing and assembling glassware, preparing labels with dates and code numbers and the carrying of samples to and from the laboratory.

The minor laboratory helper classification was necessitated by the shortage of qualified enlisted technicians who have been transferred on cadres and also due to the fact that it is difficult to recruit qualified civilians locally or through civil service.

They are also responsible for the feeding and care of experimental animals: rabbits, guinea pigs, etc., and the preparing for experimental purposes according to specified instructions, of these animals.

BASIS OF SELECTION

These 10 civilians were selected because they possessed certain necessary qualifications: they had to be high school graduates with at least 14 units acceptable for college entrance, supplemented by one year's study in biology, chemistry or physics. This study must be completed in a recognized educational institution attended certifying that the applicant completed his four years of high school training or 14 units of high school study acceptable for college entrance including or supplemented by the one-year course in at least one of the following subjects: Biology, chemistry, or physics.

Applicants must have reached their 16th birthday but must not have passed their 21st birthday on the closing date for receipt of application. This age limit will not be waved in ay case.

Visual Aids Officer Tops As Movie Script Writer

Lieut. John Murray of the Visual Aids Committee in the Fort Benning Infantry School is an ex-Hollywood A-1 script writer, who received his check of four figures each week until the war started. Then he decided the time had come to put down his pen—and take up the sword.

Until he enlisted in the Army, Jack had written everything from college term papers to number-one Broadway smash hits.

Native of New York

Born in New York City (an honest-to-goodness Manhattan native) of parents whose only interest in writing was the monthly letter to "Aunt Suzie," Murray's first success in the literary world was when he won first prize in the annual English contest held at Columbia University his freshman year. Then that writing bug bit him HARD and he wrote and wrote and wrote—good things, bad things, plays, poetry, stories, novels, music, everything.

Between terms at school he found a job at the Eagle Pencil company (he couldn't stay away from writing in any form, it seems) and, in his spare time, contributed bits to the factory newspaper.

With the money he earned there, he decided to put himself through the St. Lawrence University Law School, but his ambition was nipped in the bud by that ole writing bug.

With Ziegfeld

In 1931, Murray got his first big break when he was engaged by the late Flo Ziegfeld to write music, lyrics, and sketches for what proved to be the last "Follies" produced by the Great Ziegfeld himself. The cast boasted such star performers as Helen Morgan, Harry Richman, and Jack Pearl.

Jack then wrote and produced his own Broadway musical, "Americana," which although good in its own right, was a "warmer-upper" for the biggest Broadway smash hit of the season, "Room Service," which Jack wrote. George Abbott directed and produced, with Betty Field and Eddie Albert in the leading roles. This show broke all existing records at that time for the sale of movie rights, $225,000 being paid for it by R. K. O.

It was not long before radio writing, directing, and producing caught Jack's interest and he did the Eddie Cantor Sunday night series for Chase and Sanford Coffee, the Phil Baker "Beetle and Bottle" series, and a series of Mark Hellinger stories which he dramatized and in which Hellinger acted.

But Hollywood beckoned, and in 1937, Jack found himself in a script room at M. G. M. studios writing screen adaptations. "Libeled Lady," several Marx Brothers pictures, and many others are chalked up to his credit.

His in-between-time moments that first season at M. G. M. were spent in directing and producing an original stage review, "Sticks and Stones," with Luise Rainer, John Garfield, Johnny Green, Bob Wayne, Jerry Colona, Milton Berle, Dixie Dunbar, Eve Arden, and Leif Ericson.

LIEUTENANT MURRAY

Writes Novels

Murray returned to New York in 1940, wrote a few novels, and opened a producing office of his own. He was searching for a good script to produce when war was declared, and, suddenly, all of his work seemed unimportant in comparison with the war.

With a group of radio and magazine executives, Murray conceived an idea of asking writers all over the country to include stories about defense projects in their works. Then he, Moss Hart, and Aline McMahan launched the "Lunch Hour Follies" plan. These are a series of half-hour musicals reviews with professional actors, which were sent to defense plants to entertain the workers during their lunch period. This plan was copied in England, subsidized by the British government, and now over 1,000 such units are in operation.

But ideas such as these were not enough for Jack. Since he was physically fit, he wanted to get into a uniform . . . an American soldier's uniform. He declined a Special Service commission, for he felt that he would rather get his commission the hard way and go into actual combat.

Inducted in New York

He was inducted last September at Camp Upton, N. Y., and hardly had a chance to put his shoes under his bunk when an old New York friend rushed up to him exclaiming that he was "just the guy he was looking for." It seems that the Opry House Players (a group of professional actors at Upton, who, incidentally, formed the nucleus of Irving Berlin's Broadway success, "This Is the Army") were producing "Room Service" and wanted Murray to direct. Jack fought the idea tooth and nail for he wanted to

Spiriters Run Primary School

Foreign-Born Members Learn English Elements

A regimental Primary School is being held five days a week for members of the 176th Infantry who find it difficult to read or write the English language. Many students are foreign born and the school is proving a great boon to them.

Chaplain John A. Troxler, the general supervisor of the school, is planning the courses. Cpl. Harold Carlson of the Chaplain's office is helping at the school. Pvt. Milton Kassof of Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, is the teacher with much experience as a principal of a New York City school.

Colonel Edwin Cox, the regimental commander, addressed the class one day last week, complimenting them on their progress. The colonel also paid a fine tribute to Pvt. Kassof for his excellent work with the class.

Chaplain Troxler is very pleased with the attitude of the men. "We had a test in which all the men did a good job. These men are here to learn something they don't know. There are certain things they know that we could learn from them. The men have been very cooperative and willing. With the determination that they express, these men will soon have learned something they've missed in their childhood."

Basic Center Staff Additions

Mason And McCrillis Ass't Supply Officers

Colonel Sevier R. Tupper, commanding officer of the ASTP basic training center of the Infantry school, has announced the appointment of Captains Harold P. Mason, of Knoxville, Tenn., and Paul L. McCrillis, of Norwalk, O., as assistant supply officers of the newly activated training unit.

Captain Mason, a graduate of the University of Tennessee in 1939, received his reserve commission through the R.O.T.C. of the Knoxville school and was called into active service January 16, 1942, and detailed to the officer's basic course here at Fort Benning. Following his graduation in April of the same year he was assigned to the second student training regiment as a tactical officer where he remained until his assignment as assistant operations officer of the student training brigade August 17, 1942. With the activation of the ASTP basic training center, Captain Mason was transferred to the new organization.

Captain McCrillis, who is married and lives at 604 Brown street, Columbus, came to Fort Benning from Camp Shelby, Miss., August 8, 1941 as an officer candidate and was commissioned a second lieutenant the following November. Following his graduation, he was assigned to the first student training regiment as a tactical officer and remained in that capacity until the activation of the student training brigade last August. He was then assigned to brigade headquarters as assistant operations officer. Like Captain Mason, he was transferred to the ASTP upon its activation.

Major Harold J. Lipscomb, former operations officer of the student training brigade, is supply officer of the ASTP basic training center.

Reception Center Chaplain Was Child Evangelist

"I've been preaching the Gospel since the age of seven when I was so small that I had to stand on a soap box to see the congregation", says Chaplain Charles B. Hodge, of the Reception Center.

He was born in Clarksville, Tex. Chaplain Hodge's mother is still a resident of that city.

Traveling over the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Missouri, the family settled for a stay in Council Bluff, Ia., where the Chaplain completed his high school education entering the Western College of Missouri from there.

Questioned as to his childhood evangelistic work, Chaplain Hodge said there were two important factors in his being a "child evangelist": first, pre-natal influences and secondly, the influence of a Christian home.

Before being called to active duty Chaplain Hodge served as pastor of the Mount Cavalry Baptist church Tucson, Ariz.

Captain Torinus Named Major

The promotion of Captain John B. Torinus, Special Service Officer of the Second Student Training Regiment to the rank of major is announced by Col. Arthur A. Blain, commanding officer of the regiment.

Major Torinus, a former newspaperman, is a native of DePere, Wis. He was graduated from Dartmouth in 1934 and engaged in newspaper work with the Green Bay, Wis., Press-Gazette.

A member of the Officers Reserve Corps, he was called into service in 1941 and reported to The Infantry School at Fort Benning for a three months basic course. Following this, he was assigned to the Second Student Training Regiment as executive officer of the Eighth Company.

He was made captain in August 1942. He is married, has three sons, and resides in Columbus.

Blackberry Bush Boobey Beckons Boys

With diabolical cleverness, the Germans design "booby traps" intended for the self-destruction of careless or napping American soldiers.

Officer students of the 8th company, 1st STR, learned this during a day of practical work in studying types of firing mechanisms, in preparing and planting land mines and "booby traps," and in probing for and neutralizing such contraptions.

But observers figure the enemy, with all his cunning, has failed to design the perfect "booby trap" for this particular group of student officers.

Such a trap, they feel sure, would be an explosive setup camouflaged as a wild blackberry bush because officers formerly content during the ten-minute halts between periods to take a short snappy snooze, now sacrifice all that to hunt the elusive wild berries.

AST Organizes Male Chorus

The male chorus of the Army Specialized Training Program Training Center of the Infantry School presented a sacred concert at the First Baptist Church of Columbus last Sunday evening.

The Sunday program included "Now Let Every Tongue Adore Thee" by Bach; Gounod's "Sanctus"; Tchesnokov's "Salvation Belongeth to Our God"; and Work's negro spiritual "Glory to the Newborn King."

Chaplain George A. Ritchey, chaplain of the Fourth Regiment, delivered a short message in connection with the concert.

The chorus was organized by Corporal Ray C. Dodridge of the Second Company of the Fourth Training Regiment, and is directed by Lt. Alfred W. Haight. The latter was assisted in training the chorus by Arthur Hall, regional musical director of music for the Columbus USO.

The new organization is composed of some 55 voices and lists among its membership former singers from such colleges as Notre Dame, Purdue, Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth, Indiana, and Ohio.

Two Chaplains Join 5th AST Basic Regiment

Col. Kenneth S. Whittmore, commanding officer of the Fifth Training Regiment of the Army Specialized Training Program Basic Training Center of the Infantry School, has announced the appointment of Chaplains Henry L. Taylor, of Gainesville, Ga., and Roy B. Johnston, of Lexington, Ky., as regimental chaplains for the newly-activated regiment.

A graduate of Mercer University Macon, Ga., Chaplain Taylor assumed the pastorship of the Baptist church of Sardis, Ga., in 1938 and remained at its head until his call into the armed forces Oct. 22, 1942. He served as camp chaplain at Camp Van Dorn, Miss., before coming to Fort Benning.

Chaplain Johnston, who comes to Fort Benning from Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., is a graduate of Transylvania university and the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. He formerly was general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at the University of Indiana, Bloomington, Ind., and pastor of the Central Christian church, Lavett, Ala. Prior to his entering the armed services on July 26, 1942, he was pastor of the First Christian church in Miami, Fla.

Both Chaplain Taylor and Chaplain Johnston are graduates of the Chaplain's school at Harvard university.

Canary Mike Drowns In Bath

Mike doesn't live here any more. Not because Mike didn't like his home, but because—Mike is dead.

Mike was the canary that Lieutenant Clifford Clinton presented to the mess hall of the WAAC Detachment, Station Complement, Fort Benning, Ga., to bring joy and happiness through his songs to these busy Army lassies.

Friday, Captain Westray Boyce, staff director, WAAC headquarters, Fourth Service Command was on a routine visit to the detachment. Lt. Gaines, company commander, was very proud that Mike was taking a bath—something that he had to be coerced into doing ordinarily. He made two terrific splatterings and then no more splashing. All was quiet.

Alarmed at the sudden quiet, investigation was made and Mike was dead. Just like that.

So the song is ended.

Member of Sandino Clan Is Officer Candidate Here

Cousin Led Marines Merry Chase For Years In Native Nicaragua

Bearer of a name famous in the fighting history of Nicaragua, Candidate Jose L. Sandino, of the 1st Company, Second Student Training Regiment, has already packed a lifetime of thrills and adventure into his 32 years.

He has met and knows fairly well many present day leaders, including Secretary of War Stimson and, on the other extreme, Walt Disney. Perhaps of more general interest to brother OC's is the fact that Jose knows such film stars as, Jinx Falkenberg, Ann Miller, Bette Davis and Irene Manning. These and other Hollywood lovelies send our Jose personally autographed pictures, several of which now decorate the 1st Company day room.

Sandino is descended from an old Spanish family that settled in Nicaragua about 1600. His family has been among Nicaragua's leaders up and down the centuries since then. One of his cousins was the famous General Augusto Sandino, who made a fight for his country's independence and also led the U. S. Marines a merry chase for several years. The Marines never did catch up with him, and they finally left Nicaragua in the early 1930's.

In 1932, General Sandino who was at odds with the incumbent regime, was shot down in ambush by henchmen of an enemy political leader. Civil war again threatened, but Mr. Stimson, then Secretary of State, paid a visit to Nicaragua and concluded a peace treaty between the Sandino faction and the opposition.

AN EARLY GRADUATE

One of the terms of the peace was that a military academy be established which would graduate officers to form a nucleus for a Nicaraguan National Army. Jose Sandino was one of the first to attend and be graduated as a 2nd lieutenant.

After several months, he became a 1st lieutenant and was well on his way to being a captain when trouble broke out again in Nicaragua in 1934. Unfortunately, Jose picked the wrong side, and on the very day he was supposed to receive his captaincy, he instead boarded a plane and left the country. He hadn't received any formal invitation to do so, but he just decided that the climate would be healthier in the United States.

He arrived in Los Angeles, where he went to work for the Pan-American News Bureau and wrote many pamphlets about the political situation in his homeland. In 1936 there suddenly came an invitation to return to Nicaragua to help the incumbent president in his re-election campaign. Jose returned and fought hard for his candidate, but again he was on the losing side, so again he took it on the lam.

FOUNDED A NEWSPAPER

This time he went to Panama and then Colombia, where he founded a newspaper. After sometime there, he thought he'd like to try newspaper work in New York, so he hooked up again with the Pan-American News Bureau and spent his time commuting between New York and Washington, where he made the acquaintance of many U. S. leaders.

Then he went to Hollywood and met the aforementioned glamour girls. In 1942 he entered the Army and soon put in for OCS. In this, he was helped by a ruling from the War Department that declared him eligible to receive a commission even though he still retains his Nicaraguan citizenship and his commission in that army.

One of Candidate Sandino's proudest boasts is that Nicaragua was among the first of the Pan-American countries to declare war on the Axis. After the war he intends to go back to his native Nicaragua and resume his political career. This time he says he's going to make sure about being on the winning side in Nicaragua just as he's on the winning side in the war against the Axis.

1st Regiment G. I. Served German Kaiser

Saw Nazi Preparation For Second World War Around Kiel

One of the most interesting students attending the Motor Mechanics Course in the First Student Training Regiment is Cpl. Herbert Helmrich of the 20th Company. He is an Englishman by birth with wide experiences delved in foreign armed services.

His early childhood days were spent in England prior to entering Germany with his aunt who was a nurse. Shortly after arriving in Germany World War I broke out and both were forced to serve the Kaiser by caring for the innumerable wounded in hospitals behind the lines. Due to the scarcity of trained hospital technicians they were required to toil for endless hours to cope with the battlefront casualties.

In 1921 he was compelled to serve the Deutches Reich by induction into the German Naval Militia at Kiel for three months service. The training was hard and exacting. Particularly vivid in his memory are the nocturnal landing practices on the beaches near Altoon, Germany, with most realistic bayone' work. Cpl. Helmrich says that it was evident at this time the Germans were preparing for a great drive in years to come."

Several years later he and his aunt left Germany to return to their homeland in England. Settling down to natural life once more, Cpl. Helmrich decided to join the English National Guard for a period of three months. In comparison with the German discipline he thinks the English was not as hard, but more efficient.

He left England in 1927 and arrived in New York where he set himself in business as a garage proprietor Closing his shop in October, 1942 he answered Uncle Sam's call to the Army. He is proud to serve in it and awaits the day anxiously when he will be a citizen of the United States.

TIS Students Train For Gas

Explanation, demonstration and application, these three phases of instruction at the Infantry School have become very familiar to student officers of the 8th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, as they go through the processes of learning almost automatically by explanation and demonstration how the gas mask is constructed, operation, and the use in case of gas attack.

The students learned to adjust the masks, use them, sniff for traces of gas, then replaced the masks in their carriers and awaited the next instructions

Suddenly a white cloud of smoke appeared, which was found to be tear gas. After some fumbling and eye moistening, all students had donned their masks, and moved through the sudden emergency.

Now application—especially in gas mask instruction, means much more to them than formerly, as they have some new points on gas instruction to take back to their home stations.

"Gas" and "gas masks" are more than empty phrases to the officers of 8th Company, not only from their sudden experience in the class, but also from other "sniff" tests, which indicated plainly through their presence of smell that what seems to be the odor of green corn, geraniums, garlic, or fly paper, may not be the harmless odor the soldier thinks it might be—but warn of deadly danger and the need for instant protective measures when gasses with these odors are first detected.

O. C. Has 18 Year Record

Master Sergeant Saw Dutch Harbor Bombing

Career man of the 11th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, is Officer Candidate Stephen B. Sitar who has six hash marks on his sleeve, years of regular army service in the Philippines, China, and Alaska behind him and an indelible memory of the Jap bombs that thundered down on his outfit at Dutch Harbor.

Although he has a record of 18 years of unbroken service in the army, Sitar is only 34 years old. He enlisted in 1925 and his entire army career has been spent in the infantry. He was six years in the Philippines and 18 months in China and his last "long distance" assignment was at Dutch Harbor where he was stationed for two years.

Sitar traveled as high up the enlisted man's ladder as he could before coming to the Infantry School for a commission. He holds the grade of master sergeant.

The candidate explained that the trip he hopes to make to Japan at the head of an infantry platoon will not be his first to those islands. "I have visited Nagasaki", he revealed, "but that was for just a three-day stay." "The next time it will be for a longer visit."

Throughout his travels, Sitar has picked up a smattering of Tagalog, Filipino dialect, and some Chinese. He admits fluent use of Polish and Czech.

Direct Descendant Of 'Geronimo' Turns Up At Post

A recent fact of vital importance to all parachutists has come to light in the 21st Company of the First Student Training Regiment. Captain Gordon Govatos, the company commander, who has played host to many parachutists while they were attending courses at the Infantry School, discovered that he has in one Pvt. Peter J. Geronimo, a direct descendant of the paratroops' patron saint "Geronimo."

To the uninitiated, folk lore has it that the boys of the silk umbrellas usually cry "Geronimo" at the split second when they make their daring leap into space. This worthy gentleman Geronimo, a character of frontier times, was known as a "wild Indian" and therefore somewhat in the liking with the ferocious fighting spirit of the paratroops.

Although Private Geronimo is a direct descendant of the wild one of the plains, he himself is from the wide open places of New York City. He was both born and reared in that city.

Col. Ridgely Gaither, a native of Baltimore, Md., today assumed command of The Parachute School at Fort Benning, succeeding Brigadier General George P. Howell, who served as commanding general of the school from its infancy to the present date. General Howell has been transferred to another duty.

Colonel Gaither, who is the third generation of his family to be in the Army, evolved plans for the organization of the U. S. Army's original paratroop unit, the 501st Parachute Battalion in the fall of 1940.

At the time of the organization of the 501st, Colonel Gaither was in the training division of the chief of infantry's office in Washington, D. C.

Coming to Fort Benning for his new assignment, Colonel Gaither declared, "I consider American army parachute-troop training the best in the world, not excepting the Germans. And I hope to keep it that way."

General Howell, who served as executive officer of the original 501st Parachute Battalion when it was formed at Fort Benning in 1940, said: "My service as commandant of The Parachute School has been the most interesting duty of my entire Army career. The high state of efficiency, which I am proud to leave to Colonel Gaither, is due to the hard work and loyalty of all the officers and enlisted men of the school."

PRESENTED PAINTING

At a farewell party tendered General Howell by the officers at The Parachute School, he was presented with an oil painting of paratroopers bailing out of C-47 transports over Fort Benning. The painting is the work of Corporal Kenneth L. Hobbs, of the Parachute School art department, and was presented to General Howell by Lieut. Col. James W. Coutts, assistant commandant of the school.

Colonel Gaither was commissioned in the regular army in July, 1924 upon his graduation from St. John's College at Annapolis, Md. After tours of duty in Indiana, Alaska, and Wyoming, he was ordered to attend the Infantry School at Fort Benning in 1932.

Colonel Gaither, then a first lieutenant, served with the Civilian Conservation Corps in Massachusetts until March, 1935, when he was ordered to duty with the 15th Infantry, Tientsin, China. He was promoted to captain in August, 1935 while he was serving as regimental adjutant and adjutant of United States Army troops in China at the outbreak of hostilities between Japan and China in 1937.

In 1938, he attended the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, after which he was ordered to the office of the chief of infantry in Washington, D. C.

SGT. HOPKINS NAMED VILLAGE PARK MAYOR

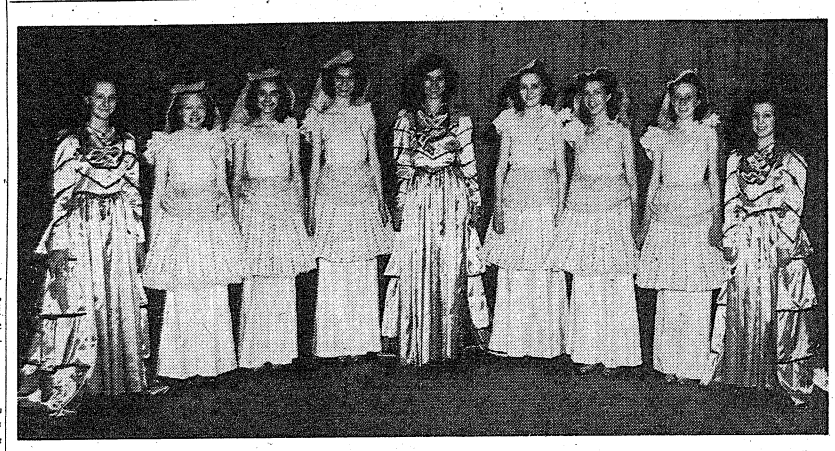
Harper, Sharp, Craig, Daughtry Elected Commissioners

First Sgt. Percy I. Hopkins, Jr., former Miami attorney, was named mayor of Baker village and Benning Park Homes for the coming year, in an election of city officials held Tuesday.

Four city commissioners were elected, including Master Sgt. (retired) J. F. Harper, First Sgt. Joe B. Sharp, William W. Daughtry, and Maj. Harry M. Craig.

Mayor Hopkins said that the officials, elected on the invitation of Fort Benning authorities, would carry on during the coming year like officials of any regularly incorporated city.

The program he outlined would attempt to get the following improvements for the area: a shopping district, a dispensary, elimination of undesirable elements, more police protection, and pavement of Benning drive.



Tabulations completed as the Bayonet went to press were as follows:

For mayor: Sergeant Hopkins, 495; Master Sgt. A. A. Wonsick, 149; J. R. Grayson, 131; First Lt. Richard W. Ryan, 106; Capt. Ralph Thackston, 101.

For commissioner (four elected) Sergeant Harper, 645; Sergeant Sharp, 579; Mr. Daughtry, 426; Major Craig, 405; Capt. Melvin A. Sanderson, 365; Capt. Delbert C. Hager, 328; Capt. Edwin J. Cannon, 280; William B. Frith, 268; George M. Ryan, 242.

CONGRESSMAN STARNES TO ADDRESS CLASS

Representative Joe Starnes, of Alabama, will arrive at Fort Benning next Wednesday to address the officer candidate class with which his son, Joe Starnes, Jr., is graduating. Candidate Starnes, of Guntersville, Ala., is in the 6th company 2nd Student Training regiment. He attended the University of Alabama before entering service.

THESE PRETTY YOUNG dancers from LaGrange, Ga., will be featured on the outdoor stage in Doughboy Stadium on Sunday at 8:30 p. m. when the 90-girl Callaway band and dancing group invades the fort for its first 1943 appearance. The famous all-girl band played three programs here last summer and has always been a favorite with Benning soldiers. The nattily-dressed band will go through some of its famed military formations as well as play during the stage show which promises to attract a huge audience to the stadium. In 1941, the band played for the national convention of the Lions' club in New Orleans, La., and also for the Southeastern fair in Atlanta. It has also made numerous appearances throughout the south during 1942 and the early part of this year. The all-girl organization is sponsored by the Textile Welfare association of the famed Callaway mills in LaGrange. One of the featured dance numbers on the program will be an "Old Southern Mammy Dance" by seven of the girls.

Sweep Series Over Parachute School

Dickinson, Rundus and Bobo Hurl Academic Nine To Straight Wins

Those scholarly gentlemen of the baseball diamond known as the Academic Profs have once again demonstrated their vastly superior knowledge of all things pertaining to the national pastime and still reign supreme over all they survey in post diamond circles.

The latest lesson taught by the Professors was a straight series drubbing dealt out to the Parachute School challengers in the post title series which opened Sunday and closed Tuesday. That rapid triumph earned the Academic Regiment the post laureis for the first half of the season and marked the eighth time in nine years that they have ruled the roost.

The TIS League titlists used as unbeatable combination of brilliant pitching, neat fielding and timely hitting to bowl over the champs of the Fort Benning League. The first two games went to the Profs by shut-out scores, 4-0 and 5-0, and they took the finale by a topheavy 14-2 count.

Prof pitching particularly stood out. Joe Dickinson, Rudy Rundus and Bill Bobo turned in a remarkable performance for a championship series when their combined effort held the paratroopers to a mere eleven hits in 27 innings of play.

Dickinson, the former Milwaukee flash in the American Association, lead the way with a two-hit effort in Sunday's opener. Rundus, who once toiled for Rochester in the International, followed with a four-hit whitewashing on Monday evening and Bobo, veteran of several Prof title nines, completed the rout with a five-hitter on Tuesday.

HELPLESS 'CHUTISTS

All three right-handers had the husky paratroopers literally eating out of their hands. Only once during the entire series could the TIS hitters get more than one hit in an inning and that was the third frame of the finale when they also collected their only runs of the series.

The Profs themselves did not pile up an imposing array of base knocks, but their hitting was timely and for extra bases when it came. They bunched all of their scoring in two innings during the first two tilts and consumed only three frames for their 14-run total in the last tilt.

As a result of their triumph, the Profs could retire on their laurels and wait until a second-half champ is decided upon to furnish them opposition in the

War Department Establishes Italian War Prisoner Camp at Fort Benning

Captives From Europe To Be Interned Here For Duration

The following story was condensed from a series of three articles written by Charles Sloan of the Ledger staff. Permission was kindly given the Bayonet to republish the articles in abbreviated form.

Some of these days, and shortly, thousands of Italian prisoners will disembark from a train at a spur within the reservation, march a few miles to the newly built Fort Benning Internment Camp, and there remain for the duration of the war.

This, then, is an attempt by one reporter to write a factual account of what will happen to them there; how they will live; their housing, food, recreation, working conditions and all the this and that which enters into their internment.

To write such a factual account, it seemed incumbent upon the reporter actually to experience the life of a war prisoner, to compare the conditions of his potential habitat at Fort Benning with (a) his normal life on the sunny, olive-studded slopes of Italy; (b) his military existence amid the arid, shifting sands and the hell on earth that was North Africa or Pantelleria and even, perhaps, Lampedusa; and (c) the hardships now being undergone by American prisoners of war—many of them newspapermen and personal friends—now in concentration camps in Axis and occupied countries.

The first is easy, because of a long acquaintance with Italy and Italians, an acquaintance dating back to the summer of 1913, wherein the reporter spent delightful months in the little town of Predappio and many hours in the tiny plant of the village weekly, "Lo Lotta di Close," the editor, publisher and typesetter of which was a young bombast named Benita Mussolini; and an acquaintance wherein in subsequent years he was to see much, much more of the country that has its head in the Alps and its heel in a boot.

The second comparison likewise is simple of execution because of personal experiences with the Italian army which date back to World War days, through the Italian invasion of Ethiopia, and later in the Spanish revolution. But the third comparison must be based only on knowledge of German concentration camps before we entered the war, and from what trickles of written information have come forth from our own nationals held therein since.

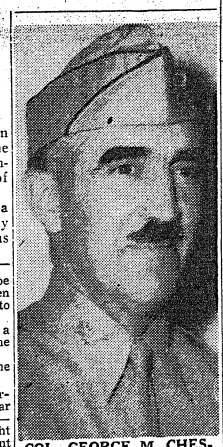
And so we come to what happened to Prisoner No. 1—me—at the Fort Benning Internment Camp and what I saw, and what wee my conclusions.

Picking up a signal corps photographer, we drove at once to the camp site; and there to the presence of Col. George M. Chescheir of Louisville, Ky, commanding officer; and, as I was subsequently to learn, the kind of a commanding officer beloved by his men.

First, we talked of the camp itself. He told of its origin; how he had expected to have it occupied as long ago as last December 15. With the light of enthusiasm in his eyes, he told of training his crew, from privates to officers, for the work to come. He told of their intensive studies —two periods a day—in mastering Italian that they might treat directly with the captives to be confined to heir care. And then he asked me how I wanted to cover the story.

I told him I wanted to be a prisoner for a day. I wanted "the works," and first-hand.

"Okay," said he, "you'll get 'the works!'"



And forthwith he called a sergeant, ordered a prisoner of war uniform for me. They brought me a regular Italian size but eight sizes too small for me. He sent it back; he wanted a big one; and they brought back the biggest one they could find. And so, in the colonel's office I stripped, blushing pinkly over running comments on the state of the chigger bites on my legs, and the multifarious scars of past experiences decorating my carcass.

The uniform is of dark blue cotton. I think it had originally been khaki color, and then dyed. The coat was single-breasted; and there were holes for metal buttons to be inserted; but mine didn't have any buttons. I didn't don the underwear the prisoners must wear. The trousers, likewise of dark blue, looked like a pair of old riding pants, and ended in a lot of holes in which to thread laces—which reminded me of the old days of World War One. Blue canvas, laced leggings completed the ensemble; and it was topped by a shapeless blue cloth hat.

On the back of the coat, on the sleeves of each arm, above each knee, and on the seat of the pants, the letters "P. W." had been stencilled in bright orange paint.

I had rather anticipated being thrown bodily into a delousing tank, but I found out later that the expected prisoners were deloused at their disembarkation points in the U. S. On arriving at the camp, all their clothes will be taken away from them; they will have a shower; and new outfits, just like the one I wore, will be issued temporarily to them. Meanwhile their clothes will be meticulously searched for hidden contraband; and then cleaned; their personal belongings will be inspected; and finally everything not contraband will be returned to them—and they will have to wear out their own uniforms before being issued Uncle Sammy's replacements. They can have their military decorations, their lucky pieces, their pictures of their wives and sweethearts, and they can even keep pictures of Hitler and Mussolini if they want to. But they can't have money—or an other articles which could

General Patton Gets French Legion of Honor

Tank Expert Receives Honor For Role In North Africa

Lieut. General George S. Patton, Jr., former commandant of Fort Benning and of the Second Armored Division when it was activated at the post in July, 1940, has been decorated with the French Legion of Honor which was presented in North Africa, according to information reaching Fort Benning today.

General Patton, a tank expert and commander of the Second Army Corps in North Africa, was commander of American forces in the Tunisian front until the Second Corps was transferred from Southwestern Tunisia to the Northern front. At that time, General Patton was transferred to another important command, the nature of which has not been revealed, provoking much Axis speculation and adding to the war of nerves against Germany and Italy.

General Patton won the Distinguished Service Medal for forming and leading the first American tank unit into battle in France and earlier this year received the Oak Leaves decoration to that award from General Eisenhower for his work in the North African campaign.

He also has been decorated with the Purple Heart, Distinguished Cross, and the Silver Star, and holds the Carnegie Life Saving Medal, second class.

Details on the presentation of the new decoration of the French Legion of Honor are not yet available.

Soldiers Ready To Give Blood

Military Quota Filled; More Civilians Needed For Bank Visit July 14-16

Four hundred soldiers in training at Fort Benning with guns and bayonets will donate their blood to the Red Cross Blood Bank July 14-16 that members of the armed forces in action now will have sufficient plasma to give new life to them if they are injured in the course of battle.

More than 100 civilian employes at the post similarly will contribute their blood to aid the campaign with the slogan "Your blood may save your next of kin."

Ralph J. Mitchell, Fort Benning Red Cross field director, disclosed today that sufficient military personnel including members of the Women's Army Corps have volunteered to give their blood to fill their quota.

However, there are openings for many civilians on the post to contribute to the blood bank. Civilian employes will donate their blood on Friday, July 16, Mitchell declared.

Civilians who wish to take part in the program must contact the Red Cross office at Fort Benning immediately so that their medical history can be charted and medical authorities can determine if the volunteers are in such physical condition that they can contribute their blood.

Billeting Office Reopens Columbus Branch July 15

As a result of urgent requests from Army personnel living in Columbus for assistance in finding quarters, the Columbus office of the Fort Benning Billeting Office will be reopened on July 15, Captain John A. White, post billeting officer, announced Wednesday.

The office will be located in Room 320 of the Columbus Bank and Trust company at 12th and Broad and will be manged by Sgt. Stephen Ivaniszyn.

The hours will be from 8:30 a. m. to 7 p. m. (EWT) six days a week and from 9 to 5 o'clock (EWT) on Sunday.

The billeting officer announced that the downtown office, closed several months ago, will list room and room plus kitchen privileges, rentals of which have been approved by the OPA. At present approximately 40 such rooms are now available, Capt. White said.

Chaplain Writes Spirit History

Scope Extends From Colonial Period; Covers 52 Engagements

A "History of the Regiment" has been prepared and distributed to the members of the 176th Infantry Spirits. A chronological record of the activities of the regiment was assembled by Chaplain Arnold M. Lewis from factual information collected by the commanding officer, Colonel Edwin Cox. The booklet is enclosed in an envelope suitable for mailing to the folks home who would acquire a better understanding of the regimental motto, "Liberty or Death."

"The history begins with the Colonial Peroid, giving the background of the organization of the regiment in 1628," said Chaplain Lewis," through the War of the Revolution, War Between the States, First World War, and the intervening periods.

"It covers the activities of the regiment through its fifty-two major engagements and concludes with the arrival of the Spirits at the cuartel, at Fort Benning.

"The booklet contains three maps drawn by Cpl. Ken Jackson depicting the Colonial Period, the period of the War of the Revolution and the War Between the States."

New Pass Form Issued At Post

Cards Bear Soldier's Signature And Unit

New passes, which will show the signature of the bearer and name of his organization, and identification cards for those soldiers not possessing identification tags, have been issued to Fort Benning soldiers and the provost marshal has been instructed to honor only passes of the new issue after July 6.

All passes not showing the signature of the bearer and the name of the organization issuing the pass will be destroyed. The passes were made up by the organization commander and signed on the signature line by the soldier.

The new passes must not be altered in any manner and no entries should be made on them which are not provided for in the printed form.

The identification cards issued to all enlisted men who do not have "dog tags" must be in the personal possession of the owner at all times.

FOUR FORMS

Four forms of passes are authorized. Permanent class "A" passes, of orange color, may be granted to enlisted men authorized to live off the reservation. Permanent class "B" passes may be granted to enlisted men of the first three grades, who are not authorized to live off the reservation, under such regulations as the organization commander may prescribe. These passes are colored blue.

Local class "C" passes to Columbus, Ga. and environs may be granted to enlisted men nit issued "A" or "B" passes, under such regulations as prescribed by the organization commander. These passes are colored white.

Distant class "D" passes to points other than Columbus and environs may be issued to all enlisted personnel for cogent reasons. These passes, colored pink, will show to points to be visited by the soldier.

Approved Bill Makes WAAC's Part of Army

Women To Enjoy Benefits Accorded To Enlisted Men

President Roosevelt Friday signed an act dropping the "auxiliary" from the WAACs, renaming the organization the Women's Army Corps, and placing the group under army regulations.

The new act raises the membership age limit from 45 to 50 years and provides that officers shall exercise command only over women of the corps and other army members "who are specifically placed under their command."

With the signing of congressional legislation today by President Roosevelt, members of the WAC now reap the rewards of enlisted personnel in the army of the United States. Now the WACs will have equal rights and benefits with army personnel, including nomenclature of rank, free mailing privileges, government life insurance, and allotments.

"Members of the WAC at Fort Benning have established a fine record," Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of the post, declared. There are three WAC units at the post, the WAC detachment, station complement, assigned to post headquarters jobs, the WAC detachment, Infantry school and the 772nd company of

Taft Visit to Air Venereal Control

Fulton to Entertain Notables at Luncheon

Charles P. Taft, director of Office of Community War Services of the Federal Security Agency, in Washington, D. C., will visit Fort Benning and Columbus Thursday, it was announced this afternoon by the public relations office.

Taft, son of the ex-president and brother of Senator Robert Taft, will be guest at a luncheon Thursday at 1:30 at the Officers' club, at which Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commandant of Fort Benning, will entertain Columbus and Muscogee county officials, and high ranking military officers. He is expected to inspect the venereal disease control program. He will be accompanied by Arthur Fink, of Atlanta, regional representative of the Social Protection Section, FSA.

A number of prominent civic leaders in Phenix City and Columbus have been invited to attend the luncheon.

1st STR Hot Weather Cold Lunch Reduces Waste

Expert Mess Personnel Prepares Healthful Palatable Dishes

With the arrival of summer and the hot murky weather, it becomes increasingly difficult to serve the conventional "heavy" meal to officers and enlisted men who are faced with the necessity of having to attend afternoon classes and stay awake. A hot and meaty meal at noon time has a tendency to make even the most ardent of students a bit groggy during certain periods of any lecture course.

The combination of heavy food and strong sun combines to create a feeling of lethargy. This of course being to the students' disadvantage. In the first Student Training Regiment, Lieutenant Colonel John S. Roosma has taken cognizance of this fact and adjusted both the arrangement and selection of the noon day meal. By making a close study of both man and ration under his command, the new regimental commander has been able to arrange the meals to the students' advantage.

In the Fourth Battalion of the First Student Training Regiment are the enlisted radio operators and the enlisted motor mechanics. Those students are required, because of their studies, to remain in the field from time to time during the noon day meal. Heretofore it has been customary to serve the men a "hot dinner" while on their lunch period.

PLAN DEVISED

Colonel Roosma consulted with Lieutenant Roy E. Cook, the Fourth Battalion Mess Officer, and a plan was devised whereby men in the field would be served a cold but palatable lunch. This diet was found to be not alone healthy but also invigorating. Thus the regular lunch consists of: three sandwiches (one of meat, one of sandwich spread and one of peanut butter, jelly or cheese); fruit (peaches, apples or oranges); for dessert, cookies, doughnuts, cake or cinnamon buns. To quench the thirst there is always cold lemonade, iced tea, or fruit juices. Since the inauguration of this diet the men have come to look forward to the picnic lunch with more enthusiasm than to the aspects of a hot meal served in the field. Each man is certain of his just share and can, without the bother of having to laboriously "sweat out" a line, pick out a cool spot for immediate operations.

In the remaining battalions made up of officers attending the Infantry School's divisional, advance, basic, motor maintenance and communication courses, Colonel Roosma held a meeting of all officers connected with the purchasing and preparation of foods. To these men of his command he outlined his plans and formulated his menus.

SALADS POPULAR

The noon meal, instead of the customary hot meal, hot potatoes, hot spinach, etc., was renovated to chicken salads, jelly omelets, stuffed eggs, tomatoes in various forms and many varieties of delicacies, such as sea food newberg salad. In order that the proper attention be given to the preparation of these dishes, Colonel Roosma appointed two specialists to the full time job of supervision. Master Sergeant Oikari, for many years connected with army foods and methods of preparation, and Corporal Wallace, formerly a salad specialist for several of the better known hostelries, were selected to seethat an appetizing menu was tastily prepared. These two men have not let the colonel down, the food is excellent.

Colonel Roosma points out that a very interesting factor has come to light. Wastage of food has been reduced to a minimum. The students apparently eat a greater amount of these cooling foods and leave less to be scraped off their plates. Garbage has been reduced through these Battalions to a noticeable degree. However, the Regimental Commander points out that these noon day meals must be augmented with a good substantial "hot dinner" in the cool of the evening.

War Bond Sale Sparks Smoker

Medicos Also Enjoy Boxing And Wrestling

War bonds totaling $712 were purchased by the personnel of Medical Detachment, Station Hospital, at the monthly smoker held in the detachment area Friday night. Hard-working NCO's sold the bonds despite the fact that it was only a week before payday and consequently a time when the average soldier is somewhat strained as to finances.

The smoker, drawing a record crowd, was participated in by representative groups from all of the detachment outlying clinics. One of the unusual features of this monthly occasion was that, while there were plenty of soft drinks and smokes, no beer was served.

Major Joyner, commanding officer, presented to Staff Sergeant Charles A. Pond, on behalf of detachment members, a token of esteem for outstanding athletic achievement. The memento was a Justin leather billfold inscribed in gold.

SYNCOPATORS

Music was furnished by the Medico Syncopators, a recently organized five-piece orchestra led by Sergeant Pintello, accordionist. Accompanists for several numbers was a colored septet of detachment harmonizers who crooned soul-stirring negro folk songs and spirituals into the mike.

The athletic card produced several incidents not on the program, much to the joy of the onlookers. The only wrestling match of the evening, between Kayajan and Cooksey, ended hilariously when the contestants, not liking the tactics of referee Pitlosh, also a wrestler, charged him from one side of the ring. The match, becoming a laughable three-way affair, ended in a draw.

FOUR BOUTS

There were four boxing bouts, all packed with entertainment. Johnson, from Unit No. 2, scored a technical knockout over Opelente. Engleking, also from Unit Number Two, won the second three-rounder on points.

A scheduled three-round bout between James Duncan and Cecil Morey, which had first started outside the ring, became a grudge fight, and ended early in the third round when Referee Taylor stopped the bout, and likewise the bout.

The single colored bout was packed with action throughout. King Ike and David Pool, from the colored barracks, slugged their way through four fast rounds which ended in a draw.

The sale of war bonds will be a feature of each forthcoming Detachment smoker, said Major Joyner.

Nazis Jailed TIS Aspirant

Well acquainted with Nazi persecution methods is Gerhard Loose, stocky, broad-shouldered officer candidate of the 10th Company, Third Student Training Regiment.

Loose was jailed by the Nazis in Leipzig when he expressed his own and not the government's views on education of the worker. Then a student in the University of Leipzig and a candidate for a Ph. D. degree, Loose was put behind bars for a month.

He was successful six months later in obtaining visa to this country. Arriving here, he made immediate application for citizenship which came through in record time, five years and four years later. He earned his living by teaching languages and sociology in exclusive eastern schools, moving eventually to Colorado to take an instructorship at the state university there. Once settled, he sent for his wife, daughters and mother.

Loose lectured throughout the country on the threat of Naziism and, concluding he could best serve his adopted country by actively defending it, entered the Army as a VOC. At Camp Wolters, Tex., where he underwent preparatory training, he was delegated the work of explaining and interpreting current events to his fellow soldiers.

In a triumph of the obvious, one Corporal E. E. Duck of Sheppard Field, Texas and mate named a recent duckling "Donald".

Initial WAC, G. I. Wedding Solemnized Here

The first marriage between a member of the Women's Army Auxiliary corps and a soldier at Fort Benning took place last Thursday when Corp. Claire Parton of the WAAC detachment, Station Complement, married Staff Sgt. Ben Yuter, of the Machine Records Unit.

The ceremony took place at the Standard Club in Columbus, with Chaplain Samson A. Shain officiating.

Corp. Parton is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Parton, 2511 Newkirk avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Sgt. Yuter is the son of Mrs. Clara Kaufman, 1643 South Oricney street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The couple met first at a Friday night service conducted at the Children's School at Fort Benning by Chaplain Shain, shortly after arrival of Corp. Parton on the post last March. She entered the WAACs on Jan. 4, 1943, and had been sent to Daytona Beach to train. She came to the post on March 5. Sgt. Yuter was inducted March 25, 1941, and came to Fort Benning on April 5, 1941.

1st STR Officers Study Dehydration At Ft. Jackson

To further improvement in the quality of the food being served in the First Student Training Regiment, Lt. Col. John S. Roosma has made arrangements for two of his officers, currently engaged in mess supervision, to attend the Dehydration School at Fort Jackson, S. C.

They are Lt. David G. Barry and Lt. O. H. Arnold. Both these officers are especially well suited to attend the course and have been selected because of these special qualifications.

DUFF TO SCHOOL

Pfc. Charles D. Duff, clerk typist of the 4th Hq. & Hq. Detachment Special Troops, Second Army, has been selected by his commanding officer, Major Neil R. Maxey, to attend an eight weeks administration course at the University of Mississippi. Pfc. Duff was inducted on November 7, 1942 at Fort Meade, Md. Before entering the service he was employed by the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation of Clairton, Pa. He was graduated from the Clairton High school and was swimming team captain, class of '37. He is a native of Wilson, Pa.

"Coke"= Coca-Cola
It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called "Coke".

...or how to get along in Alaska

The American soldier in Alaska meets up with a hundred little things that remind him of home. One of them is Coca-Cola. Have a "Coke", says he, and it clicks in the Yukon as it does in Youngstown or Yuma. From pole to pole Coca-Cola stands for the pause that refreshes — has become the high-sign between kindly-minded strangers.

WDBPR Issues Code Of Wartime Conversation

Modeled After Code Prepared For Use by Press, Radio

At the request of the women's organizations for a guide in the effort of their members to stop conversation which may be of aid to the enemy or dangerous to the Army of the United States, the Women's Interests Section, War Department Bureau of Public Relations, has prepared the following "Code of Wartime Conversation" modeled on the "Code of Wartime Practices for the American Press and Radio.

It is published for the information and guidance of Benning personnel.

TROOPS

A remark about an individual soldier may seem harmless, but when the enemy spy puts it together with other remarks picked up, he may discover where and how troops are to be moved. An attack on a boat or the wreck of a train may be the result.

Therefore: Never tell where any soldier is located unless he is at a training camp or on police duty in the United States.

Never tell when a soldier is leaving a place, where he is going, or how he will travel.

Never mention the name, designation, or number of men in any company, division, corps, or regiment, or of any other body of troops which you have seen or heard about.

Never mention the clothing, guns or any other equipment of any particular soldier, as it may indicate where he is being sent and for what purpose.

Never mention the gathering of a body of troops at a specific point which may suggest they are preparing to sail overseas

Never give the name of any soldier known or thought to be in foreign country until official announcement of American troops in that area has been published. Even then, do not mention the soldier's company, regiment or division.

Never tell what kind of work or duty a specific soldier is engaged in.

SHIPS AND CARGOES

The most casual remark about a ship, its movements or construction or provisions for its defense, may heard or over-heard by an enemy spy, give the enemy just the information he needs in order to know where to intercept or attack a ship carrying soldiers or their supplies.

Therefore: Never tell where any vessel of the United States or the Allied Nations has been seen, the direction it is sailing or what it carries.

Never refer to a person sailing on a transport or convoy, or give any other information about a convoy or transport.

Never tell anything about a mine-field or harbor defense.

Never repeat an instruction given about lights or buoys.

Never tell where or when a new ship is being built or mention the size or kind of any ship under construction.

Never give any information about a ship launching until official announcement of it has been made.

Never tell what work anyone is doing in a shipyard or how he does it, or under what conditions, or anything about the arrangements and physical set-up of a shipyard.

SHIP SINKINGS AND DAMAGES

To keep the enemy guessing as to the strength of the Army, or available forces at any point, or the availability of its supplies is essential.

Therefore: Never mention the sinking by the enemy of any war or merchant vessel in any water until it is officially announced.

Never mention any damages to a dock, railroad, airfield, a public utility or industrial plant through an enemy air or sea attack.

PLANES

The enemy is eager to know how many planes we are building and where, all he can discover about new models and changes in design, where our planes are going and what used for. To find out, he assembles the chance remarks reported by his spies.

Therefore: Never state the number of planes or other aircraft of the United States turned out by any factory or plant or by any military group.

Never tell anything about new military aircraft and equipment and the armament they carry.

Never discuss reports of how good they are or rumors of faulty performance.

Never mention any changes in military craft or new characteristics seen or heard about.

Never mention the location of any military craft or air forces.

Never tell when or where airplanes take off or the direction they are going.

Never tell of troops being moved by plane or of any war materials being carried by plane.

Never mention the name or plans or orders of a member of the Air Transport Command.

Never tell where he is going, when he goes or what he is transporting, except or until the facts have been published.

Never tell what a member of the Civil Air Patron (Office of Civilian Defense) is doing or plans to do to assist or relieve the armed forces, unless authorized.

FORTIFICATIONS

Never give the location of a fort or other fortifications, a coast defense or anti-aircraft gun.

Never give the location of a bomb shelter or a camouflaged object.

Never mention any defense precautions.

Never repeat anything heard or learned about fortifications installed by American troops outside the continental United States.

WEATHER

The enemy must make his air and submarine attacks when the weather at the target is favorable for his operations. By knowledge of the weather at one place he can predict the weather at another.

Therefore: Never make or repeat a weather forecast except those officially issued by the Weather Bureau.

Never repeat or volunteer news of weather conditions in other states or sections.

PRODUCTION

A delay in providing our soldiers with the necessary equipment or supplies might cost the lives of our soldiers. The enemy, therefore, has a force of saboteurs ready to destroy production and upset the routine of factories.

Every word heard about any procedure or process or arrangements in a factory is recorded by enemy spies and passed on to superiors for the use of these saboteurs. Any information they may gain is dangerous to our soldiers.

Therefore: Never give any details about any factory or plant engaged in producing war materials.

Never tell what a worker in a factory or plant is doing, what or how he works in a factory or under what conditions.

Never give the amount of war products turned out by any plant or man.

Never mention sabotage in a factory, express fear of sabotage, or recite evidence of it.

RUMORS

Rumor is one of the weapons employed by the enemy against the effectiveness of the Army. Their purpose is to weaken our confidence in our armed forces, to stir up dissatisfaction between civilians and the Army, between the Army and that of our Allies, and between groups in the Army —geographical, racial or religion.

Therefore: Never tell any stories suggesting that our enemy is invincible.

Never repeat a story about our lack of equipment or its poor quality or a deficiency in that of our Allies.

Never repeat a story about the treatment of soldiers, or undesirable conditions in American camps.

Never tell stories that discredit sections of our population.

Never repeat details of friction between races and groups.

Never repeat critical remarks or stories about soldiers or defenses which are said to have been made by our Allies.

Never repeat hints of disagreement between us and our Allies.

CONCLUSION

In a total war words are weapons. As well place a gun in an enemy's hands to use against our soldiers as to throw out words that may result in a soldier's death.

Used carefully, however, words may be weapons against the enemy. Words giving information which Americans have a right to know about the armed forces and equipment, the Government's program for the health and welfare of its soldiers, its provisions for their families. Such words build up confidence in our armed forces and so stimulate their morale. They throw fear into the enemy and so weaken them.

Words we must not speak are those that convey information to the enemy to be used against our own soldiers. These are words which the newspapers may not print.

'Uncle Sam' In Person Lectures G.I. On Subject Of Free Mail Privilege

By PVT. WALTER MILLER
Academic Regiment

Carrying an envelope, whistling blithely, we sauntered toward a mail-box. Deftly we pulled down the iron flap, took careful aim, and——

"Wait a minute, soldier."

Somebody laid a big hand on our shoulder. Annoyed we looked around. A guy dressed up like Uncle Sam stood there. Frowning, we returned to our business of—and then we looked again—it was Uncle Sam!

"Hiya, Unk," we gasped, trying to recall whether regulations called for a salute.

"You didn't put a stamp on that, soldier."

"Stamp? Me? Say, I'm a soldier, I get free mail—I use my own signature as a frank—like congressmen and other big shots—see? I write 'Free' up in the right——"

"Yes, but I have to stop that now."

"Stop it? Gee, Uncle, my folks complain I don't write enough now—and if I have to pay for postage too——"

"Too many chowhounds abusing the privilege. Nothing personal, you understand, but did you ever send home an army newspaper in a franked envelope?"

"Who, me?" we said, slipping our "letter" into our pocket.

TELL ME, DID YOU?

"Did you ever exchange stamp collections in 'free' mail? Send out printed wedding announcements? Photographs too, when they weren't part of a letter? Circulars?"

Like the sunset our face deepened hue by hue. And like the Uncle Sam on the recruiting posters who points a big finger at you and says "Uncle Sam wants YOU!" the white-bearded, high-hatted notable advanced on us personally.

"And worst of all, have you endorsed letters written by your wife? Actually written your signature and frank on envelopes containing letters written by somebody other than yourself?"

He stared at us. We stared back—at the white stars on his blue tie.

"And so, Pvt. Chowhound, I'm taking the free mail privilege away from you."

"Look, Uncle! Think of cards to Mother on Mother's Day! Think of pictures I send to my family! Subscription checks I mail to Yank. And letters demanding to know when I get my first copy of Yank. Give us one more chance, Unk."

"Do you know your sixth General Order?"

Magnificently we stood at attention.

"To pass on to the chowhound who relieves me all orders from——"

STRAIGHT FROM UNK

"From Uncle Sam! Pass this on straight. The only items acceptable free of postage are personal letters, business remittances to firms or associations, film negatives when accompanying letters, greeting cards, and election ballots. That's all. One more violation and I'll stop it altogether."

"Golly, thanks, Uncle." We drew our envelope from our pocket and——

"And when mailing copies of the Bayonet home, put a three-cent stamp on it. That's special order number one, soldier."

"Yessir. I was just on my way to the postoffice, yes, sir!"

96.4 Per Cent Of 2nd STR Now Insured

Average Policy Valued At $9,596; Most OC's Carry Maximum

Heading into the home stretch of a three-month insurance drive, the Second Student Training Regiment announced that 96.4 per cent of all its personnel now carries National Service Life Insurance.

This is an increase of 7.1 per cent over the holdings of the previous month, according to the report of Major John B. Torinus, regimental insurance officer. Outstanding work was done in Headquarters Company, where 92.8 per cent of the men now have government insurance, as compared with only 60 per cent a few months ago.

The value of the average policy held by a man in the Second Regiment amounts to $8,604. Officer candidate companies lead the way in the amount of coverage with an average policy of $9,569. Most of the OC companies report that all men carry the maximum insurance protection.

One Service Battalion company now has a perfect record. It is Co. E, commanded by Capt. John W. Cake, Jr., with 164 men all holding government insurance. Co. C is not far behind, with 211 out of its 215 men having policies.

Adam Lazonga III Joins Gator Clan As Unit Mascot

Welcomed to the fold by the Gator-men of the 124th Infantry at Fort Benning is Adam Lazonga, III, an alligator from the Florida swamps and reputedly a nephew of the Adam Lazonga already mascot of the regiment.

He was found on a Florida road by a group of Gators on leave last month, and reportedly laid claims to be the nephew of the mascot at Fort Benning and requested permission to visit his uncle.

Touched by his story, the Gatormen brought the small alligator to the reservation, where he was Adam's constant companion while the old boy was on his death bed. With his uncle's demise, Adam, III, was the unanimous choice of the regiment as his successor.

Members of the regiment find but one fault with Adam, III. They have warned him that if he doesn't stop blowing bubbles at the goldfish, they will tan his hide.

Calling 'Wolf' Makes Soldiers Resentful

The properly trained soldier snaps to attention when the order to come to attention is given. This is true whether the soldier is on the drill field, or reclining comfortably in his barracks.

The order to come to attention may be given by a private to other privates when an officer approaches a group of soldiers or, enters a barracks. Since this is one order of command which the EM without any chevrons may give, and which must be obeyed by other privates an Non-Coms alike, the non-ranking man in uniform should never abuse the privilege of giving this order.

Groups of soldiers often are embarrassed, inconvenienced and made fighting mad by some clowning EM who considers it funny to call peaceably quiescent soldiers to attention without official reason.

Often, too, when an officer enters a barracks, the men, having been fooled time and again by pokesters, fail to respond when the call to attention is given. As a consequence innocent men are sometimes gigged through no fault of their own.

Soldiers as a rule, enthused with their training program, are wont playfully to salute each other, and to give simple commands when they meet; and there is no harm in these actions because they are responded to with little or no inconvenience to the individual. But when one private or non-com consistently makes it unpleasant and troublesome to a dozen or more men by calling them to attention without just cause, the situation ceases to be facetious.

Popularity Is Outgrowth Of Soldier's Leadership

"I have no naval commanders. I would like to create a few rear-admirals, but I would prefer to select men who showed most promise, regardless of seniority." Letter from Napoleon to Vice-Admiral Ganteaumt.

The question of whom to pick as a leader is as pertinent today, and a good deal more so, as ever it was in the days of "light gloves, buff waistcoats, feathers and frocks." Today's soldiers are far more often called upon to demonstrate, for their safety of their own necks, their qualifications as leaders than ever before in the existence of a warring world. It is therefore important that every soldier, sailor and marine be taught to develop within his own breast the rudiments of "leadership development", in order that we may win the war.

To understand "leadership", we must first understand its objective. Leadership is the ability of any one man to construct within the hearts of other men, a high degree of loyalty, initiative, team work and responsibility. Can a company commander attain this in his men by compiling a reference book of solutions? Can a sergeant develop these traits in his squad by referring to a textbook wherein all the solutions are enumerated? Certainly not. You yourself must be proficient, enthusiastic and a good student of human nature. In short, the objective of "leadership" is to be better able to influence men by your example of promptness, energy, cheerfulness, interest, etc.

Your outfit, be it a squad, a platoon, a company or a regiment, should be welded into a fit team that clicks along in the harmonious manner of a single mechanism. There can be no friction, no sand in the works, no outside influences to cause friction or bickerings. Every man must stand to his full height and fairly shout out his organizational pride. His pride in the performance of his squad, of his company of his battalion. Listlessness and indifference on your part will quickly destroy any such "esprit de corps" that might be existant at the moment when you first took over. Only by your example of cheerfulness, energy, and understanding can you hope to attain the proper spirit which is so important to the furtherance of your leadership and the development of theirs.

The question of popularity sometimes becomes confused in the discussion of leadership. But, upon close scrutiny, we will find that popularity is the outgrowth of leadership; not leadership the outgrowth of popularity. Something like the problem of which came first, "the chicken or the egg", leadership and popularity are closely aligned; but by the simple process of fairness, courage, truthfulness and good example, popularity will follow us as surely as night follows day.

Popular Army Food Surveys Need Salt

The "Fern and Sheet Metal Age" of Boise, Ida., The "Sunday Visitor" and the journal of the Camp Fire Girls, whose title eludes my memory, recently collaborated in making a survey of soldiers' likes and dislikes in food after all every other publication had beaten them to the draw but I suppose they felt that it was "better late than never".

You'd never guess what they discovered so I'm going to tell you anyhow. They found that soldiers' favorite food is frankfurters (you may know them as 'hot dogs') and sauerkrau, that G. I.'s like their coffee weak, prefer luke warm boiled potatoes, and are indifferent to cold boiled leaves of the common sumac.

Of course, this survey came as no surprise to the military world of which the "Army and Navy Journal" is the unofficial organ. In fact it seems a pity to have the duplication of effort and expense which goes into these efforts. I propose that each surveys be printed in quantity with a space left blank for the name of the newspaper or magazine which wishes to make one. This can later be filled in by the subscriber to our service and the money saved can be donated to a worthy cause.

In order to save the "Journal of the American Humane Society" the trouble of making a survey let me explain why it is that when soldiers catch a glimpse of frankfurts and sauerkraut on their mess trays they emit low moans and growls reminiscent of the sounds uttered by the Tern or American waterfowl of the female gender when her young are disturbed by the proximity of a duck billed platypus (Habitat: Formosa).

You see, Americans as a people are subject to an occupational disease known as "chronicum complaintus" called "griping" for short in G.I. society. This affliction perverts the point of view and renders the victim incapable of realizing when he's well off. Consequently, although G.I.'s are really currazy about frankfurters and sauerkraut (they've got to be since the magazine surveys have told them so) they just whine and carry on out of force of habit.

I know a woman who is very cleverly smart and before whose door the wolf wouldn't dream of howling (that is to say she's quite rich). One day she asked me to lunch at her country place. Lunch was served in the garden under the trees on a table beautifully spread with a deep blue linen cloth and set with Wedgwood Queen's Ware, Jensen silver and Orefors crystal. That's all very well so far but what do you think the lunch was? Well—believe it or not, boys it was snails—yes SNAILS. Now can you imagine that? I see you can't and I don't wonder. These of the earth, earthy creatures were borne to the table on a silver charger garnished with vine leaves and exuding whiffs of garlic. Someone once remarked that there's no such thing as "a little garlic" and I agree enthusiastically. Well all I can say is that the whole thing looked like something Lili Dache and Salvatore Dali might have put their heads together and produced.

Honest now, boys, get a load of that—a dame with a lot of dough actually eating them there slimy things. Cripes, fellers, sounds like she was a case for Havelock Ellis, don't it?

I should say in extenuation of the circumstance that the lady to whom allusion is made labored under the disability of having as servants a male Korean whose mate was a Monogasque. This is not quite as bad as it sounds since the latter is nothing less innocuous than a subject of the Prince of Monaco (An altogether respectable man whose family name is Grimaldi and concerning whom further information will be found in the "Almanach de Gotha). Thus you may conceive that the cuisine of the establishment was apt to be on the baroque side and you will readily sympathize with me when I tell you that during lunch I confined myself to Ry Krisp wafers and Moet et Chandon (1926) to wash them down.

In case any of you might be wondering what the point of my dissertation may be I may as well, with characteristic absence of circumlocution and a minimum of beating about the bush, say that you should be darned grateful for G.I. chow. Think of how much worse it could be if they really set their minds to it.

* Just before going to press messages arrivede by carrier pigeon to the effect that "Your Love Life" of Noroton, Conn., and "La Revue Deux Mondes" now published at Sfax in Tunisia have not yet made their surveys.

—T. D.

This is more than a war we are fighting. It's a race to remake men and nations. Every walkout, every lockout, every breakout is a knockout to our hopes.

The new world will come not by chance but by change. And the change will be forced on us by circumstances, or some other fellow's scheme, unless it has its origin in me and you.

There are three kinds of people in the world: Those who have problems; those who have problems; those who have problems.

We don't so much need more people in industry as more industry in people.

Compromise can never take the place of confidence in our industrial relations.

People who cease to show feeling cease to have feeling.

The marriage knot gets tangled not because marriage itself is so difficult but because married people are.

Manpower, food and transportation,
War bonds, salvage, conservation,
Are my job. I begin to see
This whole thing depends on me.

Let's be sure our post-war planning isn't just to pin new labels on some old mistakes.

Dreams Soldiers Dream

Such dreams as dream through sleep are icebergs
Doomed through warm and restless seas,
Frozen exiles loosed from ancient glaciers,
Floating shapes of nine-tenth under,
Known by the slow moment of waking
As only a death in dark water.

So sinks my sun-shell dream: I: civilian:
Found in the cursing of troops through history:
Crept to the damp edge of dawn, dew-wet,
Helmet to helmet in a whispering patrol,
Tense against another day's surprise:
Mistward the morning glowed:
The sun rose a pointed sun
Slowing a giant cannon-shell flung quiet
As breathing through the dawn's usual course:
A brilliant cylinder of shape familiar
Lighting our day-drawn vigil of terror:
We held the dark west where the sun-shell set.

But dreams that soldiers dream through daylight
Brood deep nostalgia for the future:
Seated at azimuth in the saddle of free fury,
We hope for all time's giving in our gun's pivot:
I, civilian, whirl my crew, ten men traverse
The center of any bombing bird's burning death:
Beloved gun-tube tracks the plotted sky:
Patient as space we await the final figures
From the line-finders, the focus that points us
Freedom's formula. O strike, strike.

Out there too the sniper broods on time
When truth is not guerilla, firing furtive
From an unfree foxhole: nostalgia closes
The trigger: nostalgia turns our lathes: yearns
The flier's heart far far inland, where his target
Screams surprise and spirals fire. O nostalgia
Burns our debris-laden heart's low flame.

Chaplain's Corner...

ON DOING THE RIGHT THING
Chaplain F. M. Thompson

A page out of history by Albert Jay Hock tells us that the year 1800 saw a great political contest between the Federalists and the Republicans The outgoing legislature in New York was Federalist, the newly elected was anti-Federalist. Since the character of the presidential electors was at that time determined by the legislature, this boded great danger for the Federalists' national ticket and threatened to see Mr. Jefferson in the presidential chair.

The prospect so frightened Alexander Hamilton that he wrote the governor of New York, who was then John Jay, urging him to recall the adjourned legislature for the purpose of enacting a clever measure to defeat the will of the people and save the national election for the party.

Hamilton assured Governor Jay, "that in times like these it will not do to be over scrupulous,"—anything to keep an atheist from the White House.

Now there is no record that Jay ever acknowledged the Hamilton letter. But after his death 30 years later it was found among his papers inscribed, "Proposing a message for party purposes which I do not think it would be becoming to adopt . . ."

Jay had perhaps the most flawless character of any man at that time in public life. Beverage in his Biography of Marshall speaks of him as "the learned and gentle Jay."

Jay was an aristocrat. He detested the policy of Jefferson and when Jefferson was elected president he retired to private life. He could have taken steps to thwart the will of the people and continue his party in power. He might have thought the means justified the ends. Yet he looked at the opportunity and passed it by in silence, because he did not think it would be becoming to embrace it.

What an extraordinary reason to assign for a decision of such political significance. What a standard for conduct in governmental affairs. Nothing illegal, dishonest, immoral, merely unbecoming.

I

We are coming again, over there
Just like our "Dads" before us.
The fighting Yanks from U. S. A.
This time you won't forget us.

II

You'll see our bird men in the sky
Marines swarming on your shore
The sound of Doughboys tramping
The Sailors' cannons roar.

III

When the din and strife of battle's o'er
When the flag of truce is waved
There will be no pen and paper peace
But Democracy, steel engraved.

IV

Had your chance twenty years ago
And you were treated fair,
So you can take it from our father's sons
This time it will be over, over there.

BY PVT. SHELDON A. KEITEL

The photography program at the Ninth Street USO has been re-organized with Pfc. J. L. Delaney of the Fort Benning parachuters in charge. . . . He was a professional "photog" in civilian life. . . . Two classes, one for beginners and one for advanced picture snappers, were begun the first Thursday in June.

"Snap That Picture" will be the theme for the beginners tonight at Ninth Street, and "Photography in Criminal Investigation" will be investigated by the seniors. . . . Classes will continue throughout the summer with such subjects as developing, printing and enlarging, and night photography for the beginners. . . . Advanced classes have been scheduled only through Aug. 5 at present. . . . The latter class will pursure the "paper negative process" and color work in both still and motion picture making.

A weiner roast will be held in the side yard of the Phenix City USO Wednesday night, starting at 8 p. m. (EWT). . . . Accommodations will be for 75 soldiers, Mrs. Kathleen Smith, director, announces. Sausages will be grilled over open fires, and girl hostesses will be present.

Quality of motion pictures being shown at the Columbus Salvation Army USO, the Phenix City USO and the Ninth Street USO has been improved since the three units have organized to rent better films for three days. . . . The new plan, now in operation, is this: A film is shown Friday night at 8:30 (EWT) at the Salvation Army USO in Columbus. . . . The next night, Saturday, the same film is at Phenix City USO, and is screened Sunday night at the Ninth Street USO.

A like plan is being used in the showing of short subjects. . . . The first showing is at the Salvation Army USO in Columbus on Tuesday night, at Ninth street on Wedensdays and in Phenix City on Thursdays.

Watermelon cutting will be featured along with swimming and picnicking Thursday night at Wachula Lake, sponsored by the Salvation Army USO in Columbus, according to Miss Mel Tolbert, program director. . . . Girls will be there, she says.

The Army-Navy YMCA-USO has renewed its contract for motion pictures and short subjects for the summer months, thus assuring the continuance of those features. . . . The movies are on Wednesday night and the shorts on Sunday night.

Calling other nations names
Isn't really our "war aims:"
We're fighting to set up a state
Others like and duplicate.

The trouble with nations is human relations — especially you and me.

The new world we are wanting can be won in spite of all and because of you.

Nowadays everybody has a plan, or is in favor of a plan, or is against a plan. What we need are men able and willing to carry out a plan.

The Letter—

BRINGS PVT. SAROTTE FACE TO FACE WITH HIS FUTURE

By CAPT F. M. SCHILLING
1st STR

Mike Sarotte had believed in fortune tellers at one time. Just a week before the local board called his number Mike had visited Madame Fifi La Sure for her vision of the future that lay in store. Now, as he stretched so comfortably in his G. I. undershorts on his G. I. cot, in a typical G. I. manner, Private Sarotte's thoughts drifted back to the last words of Madame Fifi, his last interpretation of the so-called "Insight into the Future."

"You will travel in the very near future," she had said. "How true," Mike thought, as he dreamed of his home a mere two-thousand miles away. He'd never guessed that his number would come so close to the top of the list. . . . but it did. And now he was so far from old Dorchester that he really missed it for once in his life. It probably wouldn't be the same, though, for the gang had all finally answered the card of welcome into the armed forces. "You will travel in the very near future," she had said. Latest rumors had it that the real traveling would start within the week. The outfit was polishing up on the final phases of training.

"You will have many new things", Madame Fifi had told him. Mike looked up and saw his helmet and gas mask, his barracks bag and his footlocker. "Yes," Mike thought to himself, "I certainly have, but all of them are government issue."

"There will be someone entering your life who brings a conflict into the picture. He is short and pudgy, a bit bald, and minus a single tooth which has been replaced by gleaming gold. His ways are firm. He cannot be swayed easily.

He is both respected and influential." "Shades of Hades," Mike thought, "I wonder where she met the Top-kick, Sarge Naylor?" The part about bringing a conflict into the picture had begun on the very first day in the outfit. Pvt. Sarotte didn't have any idea then that telling the 1st Sergeant to "Do it yourself" was such a serious crime. He knew now. As for the description, it fitted the Top-kick perfectly. Mike learned that he was firm and not easily swayed. He remembered only too vividly how his peace offering of a carton of cigarettes, with the inscription, "Come on, old boy, let's bury the hatchet", had netted him an increase in troubles.

"There will be new fields for you to conquor," were the Madam's words. Mike rolled over on his bunk to catch a little more of the cool evening breeze. His back was aching from another day of nursing the sink in the kitchen. "I wonder if old Fifi was talking about K.P.", Mike mused to himself. "The only field I've conquored was filled with potatoes, and goodness knows I've peeled every one of them."

Mike absorbed the refreshment of the rest and coolness of evening. He pondered over the significance of the words the Madame had spoken. Invariably they had all come true to the letter. "Letter," Mike thought. He remembered something about it now. "Don't forget to write that letter," had been Fifi La Sure's last words, Mike smiled, "What the hell's a letter got to do with it"?

All the time Pvt. Mike Sarotte had been in the army he had forgotten one thing. He hadn't written home to Mother. "Maybe I'd better do it. Maybe I'd better write a letter to Ma tonight," Mike said to himself. So he went downstairs into the dayroom and started writing. He told his mother about the fellows, the food, the fun, but nothing about the kitchen police, the first sergeant, the extra duty or the peeling of potatoes. Not a word about them. Not a single word. Then he signed the letter, wrote the address on the envelope, placed the letter in it, and dropped it into the little box marked "letters."

That finishes the story of Pvt. Sarotte, the fortune teller, and the letter; unless, of course, you're interested in the reply Mike got from his mother. Maybe you'd be interested in this short paragraph:

"Dad's best world war buddy was called back into the service six months before you were. He's quite an old hand at being a soldier, so they gave him his job back. I wish you could get into his company. He promised me that he'd make a man out of you if you ever got into his outfit. He always said I spoiled you. I don't know. Look him up if you get a chance, son. His name is Charlie Naylor, and he's a first sergeant, I think."

Key Says—

NO GREATER GRIEF THAN TO REMEMBER DAYS OF JOY, WHEN MISERY IS AT HAND

Dante

Remember when you thought rice was something to be served with cream and sugar; told the gas station attendant to "fill 'er up"; wondered whether to go to California or to Florida for your vacation; went on a diet by cutting out potatoes, butter, and whipped cream; saw that the baby got his ripe mashed banana once a day?

Remember when you had no qualms about the tires on the car; traded your old car as soon as it began to show a few signs of wear and tear; thought nothing of a long journey by train, packing your bags on impulse and starting out the next morning?

Remember when you bought clothes and shoes for appearances rather than for durability; took a look at well-stocked grocery shelves and meat counters and couldn't think of a thing to buy for dinner; wondered what to get when you'd already had beef, pork, veal, and lamb that week; loaded your guests' plates and thought nothing of the particular gent who ate only the choicest morsels from his T-bone steak?

Remember when you turned on the kitchen light in the wee, small hours without casting a wary eye at the walls for insect life; thought an ant in the house warranted a general housecleaning; let the hose run all day to give the lawns a good watering?

Remember when you lived next door to the same neighbor for years; went shopping for a washing machine or a vacuum cleaner with your only thought the relative merits of the various makes; whipped up a butter cake or an angel food without worrying about ration tickets or the price of eggs and butter; threatened to move unless the landlord redecorated the entire house and had the floors sanded?

Remember when you thought nothing of driving thirty miles to "drop in" on friends or to go swimming; envied army wives their chances to move and see different parts of the world; thought the South, from hearsay, a combination of "Gone With the Wind" and Jeeter Lester?

Remember when you could buy liquor and beer by the case, and as many "cokes" as you were man for; when safety pins were plentiful and you threw away bobby pins when they'd lost a little of their spring; used your candid camera whenever and wherever the mood struck you; changed laundries if you didn't get prompt service?

Remember when watermelons were fifteen cents each; when you had such things on your shopping list as a flashlight battery and a new electric iron, a set of aluminum pans or several pairs of blulnt-edged scissors for the children; wondered what to do with your leisure time and thought vaguely of the Red Cross as some organization that handed out food and clothing to unfortunates?

It all seems a long time ago, doesn't it?

JUST BEFORE DAWN

Just before dawn when it's blackest,
As I lie on my lonely bed,
I see your face before me,
And grand dreams run through my head,
I see the stars above me,
Looking down through my window so clear,
And I know that they're looking down at you too
And they seem to bring you so near.

All too soon my reverie,
Is interrupted by the dawn,
It is time to get up, and though broken,
My dreaming will go right on.
Through the day, though I'm often busy,
And my mind must on other things dwell.
You are uppermost in my mind and heart,
How much I've not words to tell.

All through the day too I keep thinking,
That soon the night will fail,
Bringing the peaceful darkness,
And the knowledge that soon you'll call.
So you see, my darling, though many miles
Separate us and keep us apart,
We are never without one another,
Because you're right here in my heart.

Benning Wives' Summer War Work Spurts

Red Cross Quota Completed; Women Make Bandages

Army wives at Fort Benning work even better in hot weather than cold if such a thing is possible, but at any rate, production in the Red Cross work room is humming. These volunteer workers have completed their quotas for the American Red Cross, and are at work on surgical dressings for the Station Hospital, to help out in an emergency, Mrs. Walter S. Fulton, chairman of the Fort Benning Auxiliary of the American Red Cross reports.

There is no one contributing factor to this record, she states. Perhaps it is the desire of these Army wives to meet the record of work set by their husbands, then again it may be the attractiveness of their new work-room that makes work a pleasure. At any rate, whatever the cause the result is a new record established in production.

Mrs. Fulton also announces the appointment of Mrs. Leven C. Allen as chairman of Volunteer Services, a department of the work formerly handled by Mrs. Fulton herself, but due to increased responsibilities attributable to the growth of the Auxiliary a division was necessary.

Mrs. Reginald Kelly has assumed the chairmanship of the sewing and knitting room left vacant by the departure of Mrs. Paul C. Newgarden, and Mrs. Joseph Lambert has assumed the secretarial duties for the Auxiliary and the Volunteer servics formrly handled by Mrs. George P. Howell.

United Artists Production Man Was Miracle Worker

Given his materials, Officer Candidate William C. Johnston of the 17th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, can, with a figurative flick of the finger, place you in the middle of Times Square, place you in the Arabian Desert or order up a snowstorm, hurricane or fog.

These seeming miracles are in Candidate Johnston's power as the result of his experience as a production man with United Artists Studios, the position he held prior to his entrance into the Army.

Johnston, who is the son of Mrs. W. C. Johnston, 3923 McLaughlin St., Culver City, Calif., explains that varied locations are made possible on short notice in moving picture studios through use of the process screen.

This equipment is a large translucent screen on which any desired background may be flashed. Actors are placed in the foreground and protographed against a choice of backgrounds, moving or still. It is with the process screen, Johnston goes on to explain, that shots in taxicabs and moving trains, on a busy New York corner or in the desert may be made merely through ordering the location from the film library.

In "The Road to Morocco", Bob Hope and Bing Crosby ride a Hollywood camel in front of a process screen on which is flashed a desert background. To the movie audience it appears the actors actually are crossing the desert. In the picture the sea background in the raft sequence was a process screen shot.

HOW HE DID IT

Candidate Johnston has used many tricks to simulate conditions and scenes. For barbed wire he once used insulated wire to which he tied bits of rubber bands. In "To Be Or Not To Be", the snow which fell on Carole Lombard and Jack Benny was bleached corn flakes, isfted from above.

He has produced what appear to be heavy steel beams and massive iron doors by putting wooden rivet heads on boards and then coating the carpentry with a special scaly paint to give the illusion of weight and age. Hurricanes

New 1st STR CO Holder Of Hoop Scoring Record

Lieutenant Colonel John S. Roosma, newly appointed commanding officer of the First Student Training Regiment, is the holder of long established basketball scoring records for state tourney action.

Colonel Roosma hails from New Jersey where, prior to gaining all-American fame at West Point, he played in a good many state scholastic basketball tilts. In 1921 the Colonel racked up fifteen goals totaling 37 points against Plainfield. This record was however, recently topped. But Colonel Roosma's final game tourney scoring mark appears to be as safe as ever. In 1921, he accounted for 159 points in six games, and scored 137 in the same number of games in 1920.

Second Army Unit Adds Three New Organizations

Three additional organizations have been assigned to the Second Army Special Troops, it was announced by Colonel George E. Jacobs, Commander of Second Army Troops.

They are the 455th Anti-Aircraft Automatic Weapons Battalion, commanded by Lt. Col. Charles H. Sargent, Jr., the 774th Tank Destroyer Battalion commanded by Lt. Col. Conrad B. Sturges, and the 533rd Ordnance Heavy Maintenance Company commanded by Captain Chester L. Reed. These units were formerly attached to the 10th Armored Division until it left this station.

Lawn Movies Prove Popular

Chaplain Reddick Runs Shows For 1st STR Unit

Chaplain Glenn S. Reddick, of the 4th Battalion, 1st Student Training Regiment, today can visualize the immensity of his idea which was only a bud in the bloom last winter.

Considering that the students of the Motor Mechanic and Radio clacses needed a form of relaxation after the day of schooling ends, he decided to arrange a weekly program of movies. The room he uses for his office was the cradle of it all, where he set up chairs and equipment for the first show. Several weeks passed by, and through increased popularity he found it necessary to move his weekly program to an adjacent mess hall to cope with the attendance.

Spring arrived and the chaplain was busy again scratching his head in bewilderment. The crowds were jammed to the threshold. Looking out his office windows across the expanse of green another idea was born. To the green he went the following week with his projector, screen and students. The first showing of the lawn theatre also attracted everyone in the immediate vicinity, but Chaplain Reddick was content because the seating problem was solved.

Students anxious to know the forecoming attractions have the chaplain constantly answering their questions in regards to them. For the benefit of all Chaplain Reddick announces the following program for the month of July, and also invites each and everyone to his outdoor movies every Thursday evening at 9 p. m.:

July 8—"Tom Brown's School Days"—starring Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Freddie Bartholomew.

July 15—"Stage Door"—starring Katherine Hepburn and Ginger Rogers.

July 22—"Mad Miss Manton"—starring Barbara Stanwyck and Henry Fonda.

July 29—"Devil and Miss Jones"—starring Jean Arthur and Robert Cummings.

11st Company, 3rd STR, Wins Chapel Attendance Cup

A silver cup for attendance at Sunday services in the Second Battalion's "Chapel in the Grove," has been awarded to the 11th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, by First Lieut. W. G. Kirschbaum, chaplain.

Candidate H. P. Schluter accepted the cup in behalf of the company which had 84 men present the first Sunday after entering OCS and has had the highest representation at services for three consecutive Sundays.

Schluter is chairman of a company committee which is largely responsible for the second showing. His associates on the committee are: Candidates I. C. Guddal, C. E. Harkness, G. S. Marshall, W. F. Morris and R. D. Schofield. Harkness, a veteran of World War No. 1, is violinist at the company services.

W. D. Authorizes Officers To Wear The Trench Coat

Approval of the officers' trench coat, which previously lacked official sanction, now has been granted, officials at Fort Benning have been informed.

The changed regulation now provides that "wearing of the overcoat, field, long (trench coat) or the overcoat, wool, short, is optional with the individual officer under all conditions. Commanding officers will neither require the purchase nor prescribe the wearing of any one of these types of coats to the exclusion of the others."

Also, in the same change, provision is made whereby in rainy or other inclement weather "officers may wear raincoats of commercial pattern, with shoulder loops, as nearly as practicable olive-drab in color, or the outer shell of the overcoat, field, long."

Lt. Anderson Becomes Captain

Lt. Gilbert Anderson of the 1st STR has been promoted to the rank of captain.

In civil life the captain was with the Phillips Book Store Corporation of Montana and left that position to be one of the first volunteers for Selective Service from Bozerman, Montana. Captain Anderson also holds the distinction of being the first Infantry officer candidate from his part of the country to receive a commission from the Infantry School at Fort Benning.

Captain Anderson joined the colors in 1941 as a buck private. After a short term of service he received a promotion to the grade of corporal and a short time later was made a sergeant. As a reward for meritorious service and outstanding ability Sgt. Anderson was appointed to attend one of the first few Officer candidate classes being held at the Infantry School.

Upon graduation from an officer candidate class in Jan. 22, 1942, Lieutenant Anderson was assigned to the First Student Training Regiment where he later became commanding officer of Co. A, Service Battalion.

Anti-tetanus shot were made compulsory in the United States Army in consequence of the fact that in the Battle of Dunkirk a high percentage of the men who had not received them contracted tetanus while not one case developed among those immunized.

Former Gator Officers See African Action

Lt. Manuel Wounded; Lt. Mitchell Shot Down, Captured

Word has been received that two former Gators, Lt. Frank Manuel and Lt. Merlin "Buddy" Mitchell, Jr., both former members of Company K, 124th Infantry, have seen action in the North African theater of operations and have been injured or captured.

Lt. Manuel was inducted into the Federal Service on November 25, 1940, serving his company as squad leader in a rifle platoon. After arriving in Fort Benning, he went to O. C. S. where he received his commission. Upon graduation he was assigned to another Infantry unit and a short time later was sent overseas.

During the North African campaign, he was seriously injured twice in his leg and sent to the rear for medical treatment. Failing to respond to treatment he is being sent back to the States for further medical care.

Lt. Mitchell, was a rifle platoon sergeant before leaving the Army to continue his college education in 1939. Known as Buddy, he joined the Army Air Corp, where he received his commission. Shortly thereafter, he was sent to foreign service. During aerial operation, his plane was shot down and he was captured by the enemy. His parents received a letter recently reporting that he is well.

Major Tufts Takes Over 2nd Battalion 300th Infantry

Major William C. Tufts has taken command of the 2nd Battalion, 300th Infantry, in place of Lieut. Col. Albert C. Haley who is attending the General Staff and Command School at Fort Leavenworth, Kas.

A graduate of Shattuck Military Academy, Minn., the major later attended the University of Nebraska and then the University of Minnesota.

After a year in the Army, 1937-38, Major Tufts went as an officer in the Civilian Conservation Corps. In 1940 the major was assigned to the 2nd Infantry and sent to Fort Benning.

After completing his basic course at the post, the major was attached to the Operations Office of the Infantry School. He later attended the Advanced Officers class at the General Staff and Command School.

Major Tufts was then assigned to the 300th Infantry as S-3, a post he held until his assignment to the Second Battalion.

Quick Time Means On Double To Diminutive Candidate

Take one soldier five feet, four inches tall, put him with an outfit that marches 15 miles in two hours and nine minutes—and the result is a run instead of a march for the soldier.

Thus diminutive Officer Candidate Edward L. Crum, 24th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, explains how he had to double-time for 15 miles without a break, with pack and rifle, over the hills of Scotland last summer while in training with the famed British Commandos.

Candidate Crum, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Crum, Springville, Ind., spent approximately three months in training with the Commando units, and among his most vivid memories, besides the 15 miles of double-timing, are:

Running a 1,200-yard assault course with bullets nipping at his heels; storming beaches under fire and taking a village, armed with tommy-gun and grenade, in a special street-fighting course.

On another occasion, while his outfit was at sea, Candidate Crum said, he was amused to hear via the Nazi radio that their entire organization had bee nsunk.

After returning from his Commando training, Candidate Crum spent several months at Camp Livingston, La., before coming to Officer Candidate School.

Botanical Garden Planted By 300th Infantry Units

Expert Horticulturist, Winner Of 11 Cups, Sets Out Flowers

If you should visit Company H of the 300th Infantry, be sure not to stumble over their Zantedeschia aethiopica. The boys are very touchy about people disturbing this species of the family Araceae.

It may sound like double talk but it really means that Company H is proud of its Calla lilies and isengaged in a horticulturist feud with its neighbors across the street, Company G.

Company G has a display of Zinnias in front of its orderly room, and a visitor to the two companies immediately receives the impression that he is in a botanical garden. Both are taking part in a general beautification campaign of the regiment.

The gardening for Company G was done by Sgt. LaRue Lott, who until his induction into the army was an agriculturist on the Ranche Zerro, ranch of the late Douglas Fairbanks. Sgt. Lott, who is 39 years old, will shortly be released from the army and return to the rach as foreman.

He has won 11 cups at California flower shows and explained that he has grown zinnias of such size that if you cut the stems short and put the bloom on a plate, it would hang over the sides.

Sgt. Lott was unable to devote much time to the company display in front of the orderly room, but the flowers have brightened the surroundings.

Company H has had no experienced horticulturist on their display, most of the work having been done by new recruits recently assigned to the company.

Mexican General Felicitates Fulton On Glorious Fourth

As a manifestation of the cordial relationship existing between the United States and Mexico in the pursuance of the Good Neighbor Policy, Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, was in receipt Sunday of a congratulatory message on the occasion of Independence Day from General J. Salvador Sanchez, chief of the Mexican Presidential General Staff.

General Sanchez's wire read: "Request that you accept congratulations on the occasion of your Day of Independence". General Fulton telegraphed the Mexican leader the deep appreciation of all military personnel at Fort Benning, stating that the message from Mexico was a manifestation of the friendship existing between "our two great nations".

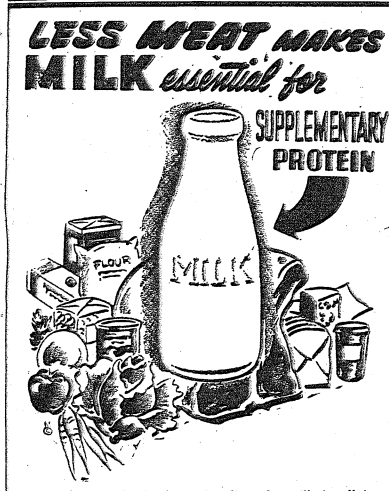
General Sanchez and his immediate staff were Fort Benning's guests for two days last April when the visitors came to the post for an inspection of the newest methods of training. At that time a warm friendship sprang up between General Sanchez and General Fulton.

NEW MAJORS

The promotion of four captains in the Second Student Training Regiment to the rank of major has been announced at the Infantry School.

The new majors are: Floyd R. Meyer, adjutant of the Second Regiment; Wilmer H. Salmon, personnel officer; Frank M. Pittenger, commander of the 4th Company; and Thomas L. Waters, commander of the 4th Company.

The Army, through the U. S. Employment Service, attempts to place in agricultural or war work all recipients of Disability Discharges.



Regular Battalion Parades Slated By 300th Infantry

The Special Units of the regiment will be divided to march with the various battalions. The exact date and hour of the parades have not yet been announced by Col. Hunt, but the weeks have been specified.

BY SGT. CARL NEU

LEFTY WISSMAN is a local lad who is really making good in a big way in Fort Benning baseball circles. The crafty left-handed ace of the 176th Infantry nine hails from Phenix City, believe it or not, and although his fame at the fort is new-found, he has had baseball rep around these parts for a good many years. His work with the Spirits in the last half of the TIS loop race shoved the 176th up into a tie for third, and he promises to be a real threat in the second-half race which gets underway Sunday.

The Spirit southpaw broke into professional ball in 1937 with Union Springs, Ala., and the next year came back to his home town as a member of the Columbus Red Birds in the Sally League. He spent two seasons, 1938 and 1939, here at Golden Park, and then jumped to Houston in the Texas League. There, he won 17 games and dropped eight to help the Buffs gain the Texas loop title.

Still moving in the St. Louis Cardinal chain, Wissman turned up in 1941 with Columbus, Ohio, in the American Association, but in the middle of July, he was shifted to Rochester in the International, another Card farm. He stayed with the Red Wings until the end of last season, and was due to return this spring when Uncle Sam reached out for him.

Realizing he was due for a draft call, Wissman did not report to Rochester this spring, but instead joined the Columbus Foxes and helped open the local season at Gowdy Field early in April when he pitched against the TIS All-Stars. When he reported for Army duty, Lefty first was assigned to Camp Wheeler and hurled a couple of games for the Spokes before he landed back in the home lot again with the 176th Spirits.

The Phenix City lad is just six feet tell, and scales 185 pounds. He is particularly noted for his slick motion towards the bases which often fools the runners and results in their being caught napping. Wissman says that big leaguer Clyde Shoun taught him the motion, but hastens to add that a good first baseman is also a big help in picking 'em off.

CHUTIST GOLFERS of the 513th Parachute Infantry recently took up the challenge offered in this corner by the 124th Gators for a team match at the local course. Soon as they heard about the Gator statement, the Thirteeners shouted "Geronimo" and started polishing up their pitching and putting. . . The four-man teams met yesterday, but since this is being written before the battle over the hill and dale, we can't give the results. Creason, Hendrickson, Smith and Hickman formed the foursome for the 513th, though, and Joy, Todd, Orlandi and Vagianno were slated to tee off for the Gators who boast some of the best linksmen at the fort.

THOUGHT YOU might be interested in hearing that the 29th Infantry Blue Devils, so prominent for many years in fort sports, are now playing baseball again up at Fort Jackson, their new station. Knowing that a transfer was imminent, the Two-Niners did not form a nine this year until they reached their new home. Several old faces dot the line-up for the Devils, although they are not faring too well in the fast Servicemen's League around Columbia, South Carolina. Just recently they lost to both Shaw Field's Fliers and the Columbia Air Base Bombflashers to drop into the loop cellar.

The 29th line-up has Dale Baker at first, Tony Cross at second, Julie Gruber at short and Bud Otto at third. Otto is the only newcomer and he is a former pro player, now a lieutenant, who is coaching the 1943 edition of the Devils. In the outfield, burly Mike Hutchins, all-post grid tackle, is in left field with Teddy Arico in center and Joe Semago in right. Joe Yockman, who hurled a short while with TIS this spring, and the old stand-bys, Ike Silcox and Jimmy Dorman, are doing the mound work, while footballer Joe Bryan is the catcher. Good luck, Two-Niners, we sure miss you around Gowdy Field!

IT'S A SHAME that inclement weather last Thursday marred the Red Cross Water Safety show at Russ Pool and held the crowd down to a handfull. However, the lads in the graduating class went through with the performance, and those few who sat in the light rain, including General Fulton, to watch the show were amazed with the manner in which the soldiers handled themselves in the water. The skills and stunts which they learned in a short ten-day course were truly amazing, and thoroughly convinced this corner of the tremendous need for this training to be passed on to as many other soldiers as possible. It is to be fervently hoped that all units who now have qualified water safety instructors in their midst will use that knowledge to the utmost.

FOOTBALL FURORE is already beginning around the post even though the diamond season is right now at its height and the merry is forever pushing the century mark. But that doesn't stop grid fans, because July is usually the month they start to get excited about what's going to happen along in September, October and November. Everyone wonders what form the grid program will take this fall, and frankly no one knows as yet. For one thing, the number of clubs that may be formed is indefinite, and secondly, the Army's policy towards football is not altogether clear and might possibly be altered before the season starts.

One thing is sure, however, Benning will have football and plenty of it. We'll wager there wasn't a spot in the nation last year that had the quantity of football we were privileged to watch here. Doughboy Stadium was the scene of 33 major clashes, and most of them were humdingers. This year, the post has more grid talent than ever, including many men from last year's big bowl games. Whether their military duties will interfere with their digging cleats in the stadium turf, we cannot say right now, but there's a good chance they'll play. Two regiments are already steamed up over grid prospects, so it probably won't be very long until some of the lads are out punting and passing with the old pigskin once more.

SHORT SHOTS—When Joe Dickinson, Prof mound ace, hurled four and two-thirds hitless innings against TPS in the series opener, it ran his hitless inning total to over ten since he finished out the recent 176th battle with a similar streak of superb efficiency. . . . Rudy Rundus, who hurled the second series win for the scholarly gents, is probably the most under-rated chucker at the fort. With Dickinson around, he doesn't get much chance to work, but it's a fact that he has not been beaten since donning a Prof uniform. . . . The soldier's edition of Sporting News, the national baseball paper, which is now being distributed by the special service division, makes swell reading. . . . The week-end tilts between Camp Stewart and TPS should be honeys. When the rivals met over Savannah way a few weeks ago, they split a pair of games and one-run decided both tilts. . . . Roy Welmaker, Reception Center star, hurled his mates to a 3-2 win over the 1st STR Red Sox in a game in Columbus Monday which indicates that the crimson hose may not be invincible in the second half of the Service League. . . . Sammy Inoff, 124th Gator leadoff man, reached first safely as the opening batter in the last eight games played by his team in the TIS League. . . . A bang-up colored boxing card is planned for the stadium ring on July 30th when Tuskegee Army Flying School will send over a 12-man team to meet Lieut. Jack Gushin's hard-punching Panthers from the 3rd STR. So long for now.

final play-off in September. However, they will probably start right in next week in quest of second-half honors, which if they capture, would eliminate a post-season playoff.

Considering that the Prof triumph came with two of their really big guns on the sidelines, it was all the more impressive. Both Manager Herb Moore, and Garnet Mercer saw the series from the coaching boxes because of the one-officer rule which had to be adhered to in the inter-league play.

GREAT BALL

However, the replacement for Moore and Mercer played great ball. Lefty Lehner fielded with real eclat at first base and saved several potential base hits from riding into right field while Chet Dabbs who replaced Mercer in the outfield did the hardest hitting of anyone in the entire series.

The paratroopers, who had made a runaway of the race in the post loop, played good ball afield in the first two tilts although woefully weak at the plate. In the finale, however, their defense fell completely to pieces and five errors trickled through the infield.

The brand of ball pitched by Pete Bardin, Mike Hogan and Bucketfoot Vaughn for TPS was not bad at all, buit just wasn't quite in a class with the superb work of the Prof moundsmen. Dickinson, Rundus and Bobo were little short of magnificent and that just about tells the story of the title series. That's all there is, there isn't any more!

Scorer Luban Looks for Trouble Picks All-Stars for Cute Smiles

Dissatisfied With Booing of Late, Milt Stirs Up New Hornet's Nest

BY SGT. MILTON LUBAN

I haven't been satisfied lately with the booing I've been getting at the Infantry School league ball games. It used to be that when I announced a ball clouted over the fence as a hit, or a fly conking an outfielder's head as an error, there would be a soul-satisfying bellow of discontent from the stand. Quite often fans would come up to the press box and interestingly inquire, "Where the hell did you learn to score?"

But either they just don't care any more or they're getting used to me at the scorer's book. Whichever it is, I'm feeling ignored. I refuse to be taken for granted that way. I like trouble and can't imagine a better way of getting into it than picking an all-star Infantry School league team. So here goes:

1b—Moore, Academic Regiment.
2b—Zientara, Academic Regiment.
3b—McCluskey, Student Training Brigade.
SS—Ramizotti, 176th Infantry.
LF—Kemether, Student Training Brigade.
CF—Kunkel—300th Infantry.
RF—Niebler, Academic Regiment.
C—Simmons—Student Training Brigade.
P—Cave, 300th Infantry.
P—Dickinson, Academic Regiment.
P—Prendergast, Student Training Brigade.
P—Christie, 124th Infantry.
P—Wissman, 176th Infantry.

For all-around value Moore is way ahead of the other first-basemen. A .350 hitter, Moore is setting the pace in runs batted in and is a steady, reliable fielder. And my wife thinks he has the cutest smile.

VICTORY ARCH

Zientara is in a class by himself as a second baseman. A peerless fielder, he is a clean, aggressive player, drives a long ball, hits consistently and is burning up the league in stolen bases. Besides, his curvacious legs can always be used as a victory arch should shortages become too acute.

McCluskey is leading the league in hitting, is a clever fielder and good thrower and his flaming red head is always good to have in reserve in case the lights fail to work.

GOOD SPELLER

Ramizotti is an entire infield wrapped up in one cavorting glove. He covers the infield like a tarpaulin. And this proves I can spell Ramizotti.

Kemether is a slugging outfielder who covers plenty of ground. This works both ways. Kemether weighs about 200 pounds which casts a lot of shadow and is a heck of a lot of weight to run the risk of irritating. He might get sore if I leave him out.

Kunkel is a fast outfielder and consistent hitter. Besides, the 300th is too close to my outfit for comfort. I believe in self-preservation.

LIVELY BRIGHT EYES

Niebler is a .340 hitter, a steady outfielder, has a terrific throwing arm and is just a little behind Zientara in stolen bases. And he has the loveliest bright eyes. Ask Honey.

Simmons is a skillful receiver and is liable to knock the ball out of the park at any time. These traits are considered very desirable in a catcher. I don't know why.

APPRECIATION

Cave is likely to come through with a no-hit performance at any time. This makes scoring an easy job and I have to show my appreciation.

Dickinson is having an off-day when he gives more than one earned run in a game. It would be an off-day for me if I were dopey enough to leave out a from my outfit.

Prendergast has everything, including a fiery temper that makes it unsafe to leave him out. After all, I have to go down to the dugout to get the line-ups.

DALLAS-BORN

Christie is the prop of the 124th. In spite of his won and lost record he is one of Benning's finest hurlers. Christie used to pitch for Dallas where my baby brown eyes first gazed wonderingly at an admiring world. That alone is enough to put Chris on an all-star team.

I've heard it said that Wissman is slipping. I know a lot of pitchers who would love to slip up a few notches to where they could equal Wissman's skill and mound craftiness.

CAN'T GET 'EM ALL

There are a lot of good ball-players missing in this line-up. DiBlazi (300th), Strukel (Rifles), Cooper (176th), Graham (300th), Inoff (124th), Russo (Profs), Oswald (Brigade) and Williams (764th) would decorate any line-up. But we can't include them all.

And possibly even replacing some of the all-stars are players like Compton and Suchara of the 176th and Mercer, Prasse and Rundus of the Profs. But they haven't played enough games to merit equal consideration with those picked for the first team. Perhaps the second half will tell a different story.

You'll notice the instinct of self-preservation plays a leading role in the selection of the all-star team. This is in strict accordance with army regulations. Personally, who cares—I have my ten thousand insurance policy.

Gators Stage Sport Program On Vast Scale

760 Ball Games Are Played By and For Men of 124th Unit

Inter-regimental athletics in the 124th Infantry have been put on a mass production scale. During the winter months as basketball schedule was played off in some 360 games, plus finals for the championship.

Company F won this championship and a survey of the titlists revealed that 20 men actually participated in the sport and 60 men were ardent followers of the team. With practice and league games, the basket ball season provided up to 1,500 hours of particular sporting interest to the men of this company. In the regiment as a whole, it was estimated that 1,560 men derived 30,000 hours of keen competition throughout the season.

40 TEAMS PLAY

In baseball, a gigantic 40-team schedule of 760 games of softball and baseball was set up. This brought out 700 that were actually active in the play and 700 spectators. As the season progresses, the staggering figure of 115,000 hours of the national pastime is being brought in range for the enlisted men and officers of the 124th.

OTHER SPORTS

Other sports activities carried on in Gatorland are the regimental softball team, inter regimental volley ball play and the football team which won the post championship last year, all of the keenly sharpening the competitive spirit of the 124th Infantry Gators.

'G' Company Takes Softball Laurels In 176th Infantry

The first half of the 176th Infantry Softball season ended last Friday when the Company G team beat the Anti-Tank team in a two-game series 5-1 and 6-1.

The star G-man, Novocol, was in there all the way, as he pitched both games in championship style. He had the Tankers swinging at high ones, and swinging at low ones. His men backed him up with timely hits and flashy fielding.

The Softball Trophy was presented G Company, emblematic of the championship softball team for the first half of the season. The second half winners will play G at the end of the season for permanent possession of the trophy.

A sportsmanship Trophy was presented the Personnel Softball team for their fine conduct on the field. The team, win, lose or draw showed up at every game and displayed sportsmanship truly worthy of the 176th Infantry.

176th Spirits Trip Columbus In 13th Frame

Poland and Crumpler Hurl Scoreless Ball In Win For Soldiers

In a thrilling encounter, the 176th Infantry Spirits defeated the Columbus Foxes Sunday afternoon by a 2-0 score. The largest crowd of the season was present, and they were on edge all through the 13 inning affair.

Walt Poland started on the mound for the Spirits and he pitched nine innings of runless ball. He gave them five scattered hits, and had the Fox batters literally eating out of his hand. Poland struck out only three men, but that doesn't tell the story. Walt was "right" all afternoon and in the seventh inning hit a long ball to deep left field that was destined for extra bases. A fine catch by the outfielder robbed Poland of a chance of winning his own ball game.

Pete Crumpler relieved Poland in the tenth inning, and he too pitched shut-out ball for his three innings. The Spirit pitchers were "on the ball" for this game and displayed the reasons for the Spirits being considered first place contenders in the coming second half of the TIS League.

"Ram" Ramozotti played his usual errorless ball at short stop, figuring in nine plays, as well as being the hitting star of the game. The "Ram" got four hits in six times at bat. The Spirits play the Foxes again this week, and a real battle looms.

Red Sox Down M-P Blue Sox

1st STR Sluggers Pound Ot 11-1 Win

The M. P. Blue Sox, representing the colored Military Police Detachment, made their baseball bow at Gowdy Field on Sunday night, but went down to an 11-1 defeat at the hands of the powerful 1st STR Red Sox in an exhibition tilt.

The newcomers couldn't cope with the powerful hitting of the 1st Regiment and offered little resistance to the current leaders in the Service League.

RUMBY WINNER

Rumby did the twirling for the winners and his left-handed slants held the Blue Sox completely at bay. He gave up only three safeties in the seven-inning tilt and struck out 12 M. P. batsmen.

In addition to his sterling mound work, Rumby also led the Red Sox attack on two M. P. hurlers by slamming out two singles and a double. Big John Washington, 1st STR first baseman, and Shortstop James Taylor had two blows apiece for the winners.

LARGE CROWD

The Red Sox hopped on Benton, Blue Sox starter, in the very first inning for a quartet of runs and were never headed after that. One of the largest crowds of the season watched the tilt, which was the first game for the Blue Sox, who hope to enter the Service League in the second half pennant chase.

Sidelights On Title Series

Here are a few figures—the wrong kind—for you to tell your grandchildren about. When the Parachutists got their hit in the fifth inning of the first game, it was the first safety Joe Dickinson had given up in 11 innings. Joe had pitched six hitless against the 176th. The burly Prof hurler has now gone 15 innings without allowing a run.

In 29 innings, Ruddy Rundus, who blanked the Parachutists in the second game, has experienced exactly one inning in which the opposition scored. Lanky Rudy also broke his lifetime batting record when he got two hits in one game against TPS.

The Prof hurlers—Dickinson, Rundus and Bobo—gave up only 11 hits in the entire post series. In only one inning could the Jumpers get more than one hit. That was in the third inning of the final game when they got two singles.

Apparently TPS followers were discouraged by the consecutive shutouts of their boys. When the third game started the umpires almost outnumbered the spectators. But after TPS got its two runs the fans started drifting into the stands. You just can't beat the speed of the grapevine.

The Profs, leading larcenists of the Infantry School league, demonstrated how they did it, stealing 13 bases in the three games. Elmer Niebler, hobbling with a ringworm in one foot and two stitches in the other, stole three bases in the third game. If he'd only had his health he would have walked off with the grandstand.

The Parachutists came through with some spectacular fielding, particularly a one-hand stab by Ray Kissel which robbed Lehner of at least a double. Kissel was earlier saved some embarrassment by Sandy Morris who leaped into the stratosphere to spear Ray's heave over his head and get Lehner just in time.

The entire series proved one thing: that when the chips are down the Profs are practically invincible.

BESS WINNER IN DOG SHOW

Major William W. Choppin, commanding officer, 43rd Sub-Depot, entered Bess, his pointer female puppy in the Columbus Amateup Field Trial Club's Bench Show for sporting dogs which was held Sunday, May 16 in the Municipal Stadium in Columbus. Bess was handled by Candidate Erle Ferguson, 18th company, OCS, and first place in the Pointer class of female puppies.

ALL-AMERICAN JABLONSKY

'Jabbo' Jablonsky, Army's All-American Gridder, Now Qualified as Paratrooper

Gridiron Game Is "Tame" Compared To Rigors Of Skyjumping, He Says

Asserting that the gridiron is "tamé" compared with the rigorous training as a parachutist, Lieut. Col. Harvey J. Joblonsky, 34, former all-American football player of West Point Military Academy, qualified as a full-fledged paratrooper at Fort Benning's Parachute School.

Colonel Jablonsky, who starred in collegiate sports at the Military Academy, completed his fifth qualifying leap from a C-47 transport plane high over Fort Benning and won the right to sport the 10-inch paratrooper boots and the "wings" of the hardy chutists.

Since his graduation from West Point in 1938, when he won national fame as a star guard on the football team, Colonel Jablonsky has returned to the Academy annually to coach the eleven for their fall campaigns.

Between football seasons, Colonel Jablonsky has been assigned to tours of duty at Fort Monroe, Virginia and in the Panama Canal.

"About a year ago," Colonel Jablonsky asserted, "I thought I'd like to join the paratroops. Upon completion of the last Army-Navy football game and after another tour of duty, I applied for the Paratroops. Now that I've qualified, I have no question about the excitement and action which I'll get with my troops in the Airborne Command."

A husky soldier, Colonel Jablonsky stands five feet eleven. He is married, and the father of two children, Jean and David. Mrs. Jablonsky and the children now reside at Clayton, Missouri.

Backed by his proficiency in teamwork which he acquired while starring on West Point's baseball, basketball, track and football teams, Colonel Jablonsky asserted that he "ready to go" into his new assignment as executive officer of the 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Lohr Of 176th Star In Clutch

One of the best "money" players on the 176th baseball team is Bill "Shuffle" Lohr. The "Shuffler" has three times figured in the winning runs of Spirit Games. Twice he sent in the winning markers, and in one game he personally took the deciding run in with him.

Lohr is 5' 11" and weighs 173 pounds. He bats and throws right handed. A native of Richmond, Va. "Shuffle" played all his ball with a Virginia semi-pro team. He was noted there, too, for his quiet, dependable playing.

Playing left field for the Spirits, Lohr made many fine catches to rob enemy batters of sure hits. The Spirits have lost only one game when Lohr was out in left field while winning seven. At present he is batting a cool .328 and will be a big factor in the coming half of the TIS League.

"I like playing with the Spirits, said 'the Shuffler,' because they are just that. Plenty of pep and fight and determination. We may have started off slowly, but we sure will finish fast."

Six Men Die In Plane Crash

Former Post Officers Aboard Were Enroute From Benning To Capital

An Army transport plane from Fort Benning crashed and exploded, killing five officers and one non-commissioned officer near Saxe, Va., 15 miles southwest of Keysville, Va., last week.

Four of the officers were attached to the operation staff of the Army War College and were enroute to Washington from the Infantry School at Fort Benning.

They were: Col. Kameil Maertens, Washington, D. C.; Col. Richard L. Baughman, Washington, D. C.; Lt. Col. Felix A. Todd, Jr., Silver Spring, Md., and Lt. Col. Milton H. Pressley, Jr., Arlington, Va.

The pilot, Maj. William M. Marks, Jr., Montgomery, and co-pilot, Staff Sgt. William Evans, Jr., Peckville, Pa., also were killed.

Officers from Camp Pickett, Va., assigned to investigate the accident, reported that the plane circled, dropped a flare and attempted to land in a field, then hit a rise in the ground and burst into flames. No indication was given of the cause of the attempted emergency landing.

Lieutenant Colonel Todd formerly was battalion commander of the First Student Training regiment of the Infantry School, and later served as battalion commander of the Second Student Training regiment. He left Benning in 1942 to go to Washington.

Colonel Maertens served on the Infantry board in 1940 and 1941. His son, Second Lt. James Maertens, is now an instructor in the weapons section of the Infantry School at Fort Benning.

Colonel Baughman served at Fort Benning for two years as chief of rifle instruction at the Infantry school.

Chapel No. Three Gets Silk Flags

Two silk flags were presented to Chapel Number Three at a special service last Sunday by members of the 6th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment.

Chaplain William Willingham received the flags in behalf of the chapel from Candidates Jess B. Huff, Jr., and John J. Heyman, representing the 6th Company.

The chapel had been in need of the two flags, one American and one Christian, since its first service. But the need had not been fulfilled until Candidate Harold L. Beisemeyer of the 6th Company became aware of it. He took the matter up with the men in the company, a collection was taken in the barracks, and the flags were purchased.

Once Fort's Star Athlete, Sam Prophet Now Contents Self With Umpire Chores

Recalls Old Times In Benning Sports When Games Were Spirited

BY JOHNSTON C. WOODALL

"Throw da bum out!" yaps a Brooklynite; "It's moider!"

"Hang him," raves a Rebel, "he's plumb blind."

"Kill him," urges a Westerner, "he may be a zoot-suiter in disguise."

"Rrroll him," grows a Mid-Westerner, "he's rrrotten."

"Execrate the obnoxious umpire," whispers an effete Easterner.

These are the villifying remarks the fans roar at Umpire Sammy Prophet of the Academic Regiment.

We decided the ump couldn't be that bad, so we invited him over for an interview.

"Come in, Sergeant!" we said and then politely, "give the gentleman a seat."

UMPS GENTLEMEN?

"They call umps gentlemen? They call us everything else," he jokingly added.

Now for the story. Master Sgt. Sammy Prophet, who spells his last name "just like a prophet in the Good Book—though not so good" has put in 16 years of soldiering, all of them at Fort Benning, since his enlistment.

The sergeant is a native of Greenwood, Miss., and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Prophet of the above town.

ATHLETIC FAME

Sgt. Sam's athletic fame has spread through Benning like a wind-swept flame through a forest. He has starred in football, baseball, basketball, track and swimming and "played tennis while I was resting from the other sports." His wife presented him with golf sticks not so long ago and now he marches down the fairways "every time I get a chance."

All in all, he is an athlete with a capital "A." His whole life is wrapped up with anything "sports and competitive." He prefers football best because it is the "roughest."

OLDTIMERS TOUGH

"Football teams today are sissies—we played football for keeps in the old days," the sergeant noted.

"We could have taken our second team back in 1927 and run the Gators of today out of the stadium!" he continued.

"The 124th think they are so good but you should have seen us whip Auburn two straight successive years when that team had Ed Shirling and 'Barleycorn' Shirey (two All-Americans) and Auburn was the Goliath in southern football," he added.

QUARTERBACKED

In those days, Sgt. Sam was the quarterback because he pulled "the opposite of what was sensible and the plays went well."

In a game against the Tanks for the championship back in 1928 or thereabouts, with the Tanks out in front by virtue of a safety, five minutes left to play, three quarterbacks in the same backfield at one time (Sgt. Sam included), the Tanks were forced to punt. Sam took the spiral and twisted 65 yards for the winning score and then drop-kicked the extra point. The final score was 7-2 and with the winner went the championship.

37-YARD DROPKICK

Another time that year, the sergeant drop-kicked a 37-yard field goal from an extreme side of the playing field.

"Sports today at Benning are not as good as they used to be, more spirit and better games in the old days, especially baseball," he mused.

"Swede Kjelstrom was the best ball player ever to appear at the post, the canniest, and the best manager," he judged. (The Swede is still at Benning, though too old to participate in sports).

SHANNON GREATEST

Wittenberg College, take note: as to the basketball question of whether Johnny Roosma or Frank Shannon was the greatest to ever play at Benning, he said, "Shannon by a shade—he's the better floor man."

"Roosma was the better shot and he was fed the ball by 'Fat' Franz, who was the best handler of a basketball that I have ever and was very, very good."

(This coming from one who has played with both of these Benning greats doesn't necessarily settle the question, though it does clarify some of the salient merits of each player).

MEDALS GALORE

Sgt. Sam has medals galore one being for the best baseball hitter of the year with an astonishing .485, another for basketball performance, being selected all-tournament guard, track medallions, one medal for sportsmanship and has the honor of playing on several straight Prof. baseball championship teams and two championship Prof. basketball teams. Plays first base in baseball, quarterback in football, guard in basketball and in track—well, he was a star at the javelin, pole vault, broad jump, a specialist in the mile and half-mile and also gallivanted at relay.

Sgt. Prophet, wife, and "only little gal," reside on 18th Avenue, Columbus.

He's umpiring now so as to "finish paying for the Studebaker and my kid's tonsil extraction" and smilingly acknowledges that

It's Started! G. I. Borrows WAC Apparel

Another first has been recorded in history.

An enlisted man in Fort Benning post headquarters, Pfc. Robert Rankin of High Point, N. C., had tarried beyond his quitting time. Approached by a WAAC, Afc. Elizabeth Armstrong of Belmont, N. C., he was asked why he was waiting.

Pfc. Rankin answered he would go to the Main Theater if he had brought along a necktie to wear. With that the auxiliary pulled off her cravat and offered it to the soldier.

He put it on, and the WAAC, "At last a man can wear something a woman has taken off."

Officers Get ASTP Posts

Major O'Neill And Lt. Twitchell Ass't S-3's

Colonel Sevier R. Tupper, commanding officer of the ASTP Basic Training Center of the Infantry School, has announced the appointment of Maj. William C. O'Neill, of Flushing, N. Y., and First Lieut. John S. Twitchell, of Haddonfield, N. J., as assistant plans and training officers of the new center.

Major O'Neill, a graduate of Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., where he received his reserve commission in 1928 through the ROTC, entered active duty at Fort Benning on November 9, 1940, and was detailed as student to the officer's basic course of the Infantry School. Following his graduation he was assigned to the Academic Department of the School as an instructor and remained in that capacity until his enrollment in the officer's advanced course in March of this year. With the activation of the ASTP Basic Training Center here at Fort Benning, he was assigned to the new unit. A former employee of the B. Altman Department store in New York City, he is married and lives at 101 Rainbow avenue, Fort Benning.

Lieut. Twitchell, who was inducted into the army at Fort Dix, New Jersey in 1941, came to Fort Benning from the Eighth Infantry Division to enter Infantry Officer Candidate School in February of 1942. He was graduated the following May and named assistant operations officer of the Infantry School. When the ASTP center was activated here at Fort Benning he was assigned to the new training unit.

Col. Herbert B. Laux is plans and training officer of the ASTP Basis Training Center.

West Point Grads Arrive At Post For TIS Course

Ninety-two men of West Point's 1943 graduating class have arrived at Benning to attend the Infantry School's basic training course currently being given in the Eleventh Company of the First Student Training Regiment.

The course which the West Point officers are attending will extend over a period of 13 weeks and covers conferences, demonstrations and application of every phase of infantry work in the field. All the officers of the West Point group selected to attend the school's course are men who have been assigned to the infantry branch of the army. The work is primarily to acquaint the men with the gigantic training plan which the Infantry School runs for advanced officer training, basic officer training, officers motor maintenance, officers communication, officer candidates, enlisted radio operators and enlisted motor mechanics.

He has seen service in the Philippines, China and Hawaii and was in the Hawaiian department when Pearl Harbor was attacked. He has spent considerable time in R.O.T.C. work, serving four years at the University of Alabama and four years at Casper School in Wyoming. Col. Burton came to Fort Benning from Howe school where he served as R.O.T.C. officer.

Col. Blain has been transferred to a new tour of duty.

Gators Receive Certificates

Group Completes Combat Intelligence

A picked group of 124th Infantry men recently were presented certificates by Col. John D. Hill, commanding officer, signifying their completion of a six-week course of instruction in combat intelligence.

The school, conducted by Captain Leroy F. Richards, Regimental S-2, operated four hours each day during the six-week period, and was the first course of its type to be offered in the Gator Regiment.

Minute study went into the selection of the men chosen for this work and final selection was based on the man's physique, sound judgment, observant mind, extraordinary initiative, energy and keen sense of responsibility. Each of the men selected had previously proven themselves trained soldiers, before they were given consideration for the school.

In addressing the class at the exercises, Capt. Richards told the men, "that he was highly elated with their exceptional performance." He later singled out five members of the Medical detachment. "These men are especially to be congratulated for their excellent showing, in view of the fact that they had none of the preliminary experience afforded the men of the other outfits."

Hospital Officers Get Promotions

Promotion of Second Lieuts. Arthur L. Modin and Joseph J. Russell of the 225th Station Hospital at Fort Benning to the rank of first lieutenants was announced this week.

Lieutenant Modin, assistant adjutant of the hospital, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Modin of Kenmore, N. Dak., formerly of Longview, Wash. He was called to active duty March 24, 1941, at Fort Lewis, Wash. After graduating from the officer candidate medical administrative school at Camp Berkley, Texas, Feb. 10, 1943, he was sent to Fort Benning June 8 of this year. Prior to entering the army he was connected with the Bonneville Power Administration project.

Lieutenant Russell, mess officer of the 225th Station Hospital, is a native of Beverly Hills, Calif.

the WAC assignee to Lawson field air base.

Since the arrival of the first company of WACs at Fort Benning last March, members have worked side by side with soldiers, learning the non-military tasks of the latter so that they may be replaced and sent to combatant assignments.

"The assignment of the WACs to Benning," General Fulton continued, "is helping solve the great manpower shortage in the country. Were it not for the WACs at the post, it would be a decided drain on manpower here and in other camps and stations in necessitating able-bodied soldiers to fill non-military jobs."

WACs at Fort Benning fill a variety of jobs, General Fulton pointed out and "already have relieved a substantial number of able-bodied troops for active duty." Scores of stenographers and typists have replaced soldiers at "desk jobs" at post headquarters; and others have assumed jobs in theaters, service clubs, the army postoffice, and a variety of other places.

"There are scores of imperative jobs at Fort Benning, as well as at other army posts, which need alert, capable personnel to fill the assignments. With the establishments of the WAC, these tasks are being taken over by the personnel of the Women's Army corps. However, anxiously we look forward to the assignment of additional units of the WAC to the post to fill these jobs and release able-bodied enlisted personnel for assignments in combat units," General Fulton observed.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

This summer season playsuits have been selling just like "hotcakes." KIRALFY'S has tried to have their supply somewhat equal the demand. But, let me warn you, hesitate not a second, 'cause if you do, the latest assortment of these useful outfits will be helping make someone else attractive and comfortable. Displayed for you, in the little balcony of this smart shop, are magenta, white or flame colored jersey playsuits with matching skirts which are indeed unusual in appearance and price. Simple lines and exquisite tailoring combine to conceal your figure faults and play up your good points. For those of you who favor printed materials, KIRALFY'S has one-piece playsuits fashioned of an interesting blue, green and white pattern on either a beige or luggage tan background. Dirndl-style skirts team nicely with these printed playsuits. Why not "gild the lily" with a new playsuit, at this, the opportune moment?

Being a good portrait photographer is something that can not be learned overnight, nor for that matter, even in a year or two. Years of constant study and work alone, will yield a truly capable portrait photographer. Mr. Klimcheck of the AIME DUPONT STUDIOS, is a good photographer in the finest sense of the word. Having a portrait made you'll understand just why no amateur can produce excellent photographs. Facial contours, lights and shadow, angles and expression must all be taken into consideration when photographing is done. Careful retouching and painstaking care with negatives are just two more of the processes to be learned, and learned well. Officer candidates, commissioned officers, housewives and children all receive the benefits of Mr. Klimcheck's years of study when dealing with Aime Dupont Studios in Columbus.

Moving out to the Post and trying to curl up and be comfortable in the chairs issued by the Quartermaster has made me realize what a blessing a well-padded chair can be. Wanting something to ease my bruised and aching bones, I made a "beeline" for H. ROTHSCHILD, Inc., finding as I had expected, the ideal comfortable chaise and chaise lounges. Pretty, little chintz covered boudoir chairs are displayed in a number of different styles, any one of which would not only add a feminine touch to your bedroom, but be comfortable and cozy in use. Maroon, blue, cream, aqua, rose and black are the background shades for the printed materials beautifying these chairs. One usually attractive and well-cushioned chaise lounge in this group is covered with a greyish-beige satin, sprinkled with minute, gold flecks. Box pleats around the skirt and tufted cushions made this indeed a beautiful piece of furniture. Equally attractive are the other satin or chintz covered chaise lounges.

While skipping about all over the country have you noticed how much you've missed having your Baby Grand Piano with you? If you are musically inclined and have, so far, found no outlet for your yearnings to tinkle the "ivories", I've solved your problems for you. HUMES COMPANY has an assortment of factory reconditioned upright pianos in popular makes and a variety of prices. Buying an upright piano and using it for your stay at Ft. Benning and then selling it, is one way to enjoy piano playing without investing too much money. Clarinets, violins, trumpets and even a marimba are just a few of the second-hand musical instruments being sold by Humes Music Store. If you can't play any musical instrument, but do enjoy listening to classical or swing music, you can stock up on records, singly or in albums. All the current and well-loved recordings may be purchased in this complete music store.

Just about the only pleasure driving one can do now is riding a bicycle. No fooling about it, bike riding can be fun for grown-ups as well as children. There are many attractive sections to explore on and about the Post. If you have no bicycles to take you on picnics and little tours about the neighboring countryside, read on and I'll tell you about the treasures waiting for you in the basement of SEARS ROEBUCK COMPANY. Substantial and hard-to-find bicycles are priced to meet even the tiniest pocket-book. Sears Elgin quality is stamped on every man's and woman's bicycle in the lot. They are all lightweight and have unbreakable handle bar stems. Black or aqua are the present shades available. If you travel to the PX, the commissary or just visitin', you'll find having a bicycle will get you there in good time and also save your precious gasoline.

Cosmetics being an always popular subject with women, I'd like to remind you once again of the good points of Germain Monteal beauty products. Displayed by KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC., are the eye-cream, eyebath, astringent, suntan oil, skin freshener, perfume, cologne, lipstick, powder and rouge, each in shades and scents suitable for varying tastes. The lipstick which has a particularly lasting quality comes in an attractive white plastic case in Dark Fire, Burma Ruby, Red Africa, Azalea Pink, to mention a few of the becoming shades. Perfect for muddy complexions is the Plastic Cream. Women troubled with wrinkles might do well to sample the Night Skin Cream which has improved many an appearance. "Laughter", just as lilting and lovely as it sounds is the Germaine Monteil scent available in either eau de toilette or perfume form. Every article put out by the House of Germaine Monteil, no matter how tiny, is always attractively packaged and never fails to please.

Even though Father's Day has once more come and gone, there are still countless items in the men's shop of the J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY to catch many a masculine eye. Thought— For Food

Office of Mess and Cafeteria Supervisor (OMS)

OMS at your service, in mess and related problems. Those who serve and those who eat are invited to assist in a betterment effort. Call on, or send your suggestions or criticisms to Lt. Clifford E. Clinton, Fort Benning Exchange. Phone 3224, 10 to 11 a. m.

DOLLARS AND SENSE

At last Friday's Mess Meeting—a garbage can was displayed—apparently full of green cabbage leaves, on closer examination dollar bills could be seen all through the leaves—dozens of them. A laugh went up—This was ridiculous! No one would allow folding greenbacks to be so wasted But another garbage can's lid was lifted—revealing many kinds of food—once edible—now waste. Eggs, meats, potatoes, lots of bread, vegetables, pieces of bacon—and so on. When this ugly sight was studied a moment it was evident that currency in the garbage would be preferable. Today food is more precious than dollars—We can get dollars—Not so easily food. With the world food situation so critical, we at the Post are determined to stop every ounce of avoidable waste.

FREIGHT CAR LOAD A DAY

Estimates based on garbage checks, and nutrition studies show a possible 40,000 pounds of food that can be kept out of Fort Benning garbage cans every day. Think of it! A freight car load of food a day just at our Post. If you will help!

CLEAN PLATE POLICY

Complement messes, require an officer or NCO to be stationed at the garbage can and the name of all who bring unnecessary waste taken for submission to C. O. for corrective action.

CHECK COUNTS

Accurate counts of men messing will also be required. Persons at garbage may keep this—It should be kept in a memorandum book—a page per day—a permanent record. Each mess then knows how many have been served at any given time.

NO FOOLISHNESS

Several messes have volunteered to experiment with the new "menu performance record," prepared by OMS. This provides spaces for the mess sergeant to grade preparation of each item—and for tabulation of amounts received, prepared and unserved, of each item on each meal menu—also provides space for plate waste for every item. Thus a mess can know exactly where production problems and wastes lie—No guessing. Following this program also gives that mess higher rating, upon which the July "E" Flag will be awarded. Following this program requires real effort. Only messes voluntarily seeking betterment and requesting the privilege will be given these new forms.

C & B SCHOOL

Next discussion meeting of all mess and related departments will be by invitation at C & B School No. 1, in the Mess at 2 p. m., July 15, 1943, commanding officers, mess officers, sergeants and any personnel or related departments, welcome.

IDEA EXCHANGE

Submit your idea for mess improvement!

1. Several messes have Victory Gardens, some flower borders. The WAAC Mess (Sta. Comp.) has flower boxes at each window.

2. With smoking permitted in Messes, butt cans are noted at 24th General Hospital and WAAC—(14-oz. cream cans, tops out, rims incised, painted company colors: Insignia).

3. 24th General Hospital submits another. They date (paper marked with pencil) all left-over items in their refrigerator. Simple—clever.

4. Captain Pfefer, C & B School No. 2 uses this dandy for serving officers—(Prevents family style service waste where officers come at random). Foods as breads, beverages, salads, fruits are on table—meats and vegetables each put in platter or bowl. All these are kept on large tray (or board shaped like tray)—kept warm; as officer comes—the buffet tray of warmed food is brought. Saves waste too!

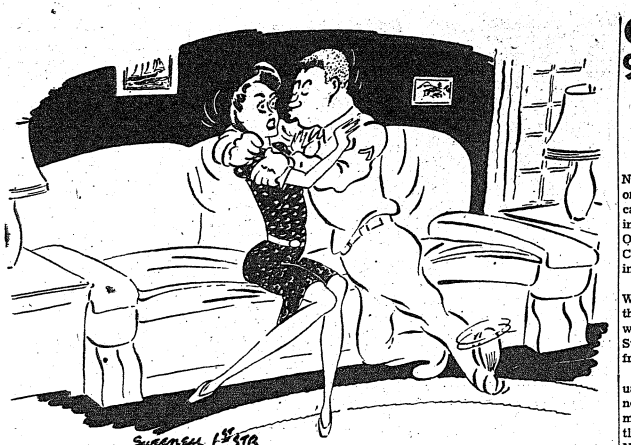
YOU ASKED IT!

Your comments and criticisms will help.

Q. "Just an eater . . . but here's my gripe—at . . . the cooks have the meal ready usually around two hours before the mess bugle. The food is dry or cold . . . How about that?"

A. "This is all too often a fault. Preparation not timed with service. The messes are being urged to work to a chronological food production chart—which will assist them and the "eaters."

Q. "I'll bet you won't print this—I'm a mess Sergt—I naturally don't want to reveal myself . . . But Saturday mornings we have to have things just right for our CO's inspection. He judges us on how slick and clean things 'look.' So we rub and scrub . . . and rush breakfast out . . . than lunch, so we can get looking like a cream puff for the . . . 'Attention.' But our CO does not look on the inside of "cream puff" where we got just "sour cream." . . . If things look right—that rates. But what seems to me to be wrong is that we have to cook our dinner too soon—or too late—and the fellows of the outfit get poor chow" . . .



A. Some CO's do judge solely on orderliness and cleanliness; are concerned with the tactical problems or not fully aware of necessity or intricities of food preparations—What you describe certainly does happen. . . . As CO's understand this problem there is no question but that they will undertake a different type consideration for mess inspection. Actually even though you were faultless in "sanitation"—if food comes out poorly—you should receive poor inspection rating.

Q. "At Cafeteria—Saturday and Sunday afternoons we have to wait in line so long because those who want just a cup of coffee barge in ahead . . . Why not stop this bucking . . . "

A. You're right! It will stop. Instead we will have a coffee and donut self service at No. 2 counter for quick snacks—Saturday and Sunday breakfasts.

Milt Britton Reveals Secret of Laughter

Merry, mad Milt Britton of the entertainment world may well have found himself a place in the field of psychology had he not already been on the way in the music business. The mere fact of discovering what the public wants and satisfying them with it would not qualify him as a psychologist, but his clever means of explaining how he arrived at his destiny would help.

He told us a story in his dressing room at the Main Theatre before a performance of the USO-Camp Show "Take It Easy" which is worth repeating. It was in answer to our question of why and how he came to organize his band of instrument-breaking musicians.

"Some years ago," he related, "I was walking along Broadway at 42nd Street in the Times Square section of New York. I noticed the usually brisk crowd slowing to emit side-splitting laughs. Their mirth interested me, and I investigated. My discovery was that a man had fallen from a street car. Now while his fall may have been entertaining, he none the less was removed from the scene in an ambulance, but that did not matter to the crowd.

LAUGHTER

"They laughed, and then and there I decided if I could make my boys create the impression that they were hurting one another in a riotous and funny way, I would have an act that would be sure-fire. It clocked."

Milt Britton told us that one time an actor who made a picture with the band conceived the idea that he definitely had been injured in some of the horseplay. "He made several unnecessary trips to the chiropractor," the bandsman said.

But the impact of war economy has been felt by the band, and now the light, breakable instruments must be placed on order several months ahead of time. times the band is fortunate to get even a portion of its order, and consequently the elaborateness of his act has been trimmed. Now, he tells me, we save them up and shoot the works when we make a motion picture.

Such a film, we were informed, is "Riding High" with Dorothy Lamour, Dick Powell and technicolro. It will play at Fort Benning in the near future.

LAUDS POST

Milt Britton hesitated in no measure to toss a posey or two at Fort Benning while he was here. He told us he really liked the post and the enthusiastic reception he received here, and we believe him. His tour with USO-Camp Shows is an inspiration, he declared. (Britton is suffering with an infection in his left eye. He joined the unit at Fort Benning, and his shows here were his first with the troupe.)

After telling us he is never nervous or tense before a performance, he went on to prove his point. Only once did he display a trace of eagerness, and that was when he looked in on his musicians who were not showing enough pep in getting dressed and made up for the show. "Only 15 minutes," he bawled.

As he smeared grease paint on cheek and chin and patted powder here and there, Milt Britton philosophically smiled. "You know in a large measure it's up to those fellows upstairs how soon we get this war over with. Until it is through, I guess, we'll just have to go beating out the Anvil Chorus on Joe's head and save our instruments."

1st Regiment Officer Has Unique Athletic Record

An unusual career as marksman and athlete in the Army has been established by First Lieut. W. C. Kjelstrom, a company officer in the First Student Training Regiment and a graduate of the Infantry School's officer candidate course.

After enlisting in Salt Lake City, Utah, at the age of 15, Lieutenant Kjelstrom, then a private, was assigned to the 20th Infantry at Fort Douglas to start his career as a marksman and athlete. He held a berth in the 1931, 1937 and 1938 Infantry Rifle Teams at Camp Perry, and also won the Regimental championship for pistol shooting in the years of 1935-40 while stationed with the 29th Infantry. Between the years of 1931 to 1938, he also acquired 14 or 15 medals.

The lieutenant's athletic career is vouched for in a letter dated Sept. 19, 1932, and signed by Lt. Col. E. F. Rice, commanding the 29th Infantry. Listed under the notation "athletics" is the following: Post Team—football, 1922-27 inclusive. All Army team, 1925-27 (Won Presidential Cup in 1925). Battalion Team 1922-32 inclusive, which won post championship in years of 1923-25, and again 1931. Basketball: Post Team 1925-28, battalion team 1922-32 inclusive, and captain the entire time. This team was post champion from 1922 to 1932. Baseball: Post Team 1922-31 inclusive, captain of team 1928-29, and coach for year 1931: Battalion Team 1922-30, and again in 1932, and held captaincy the entire time. Post champion in 1932. Track: Post record until 1930 in the 880-yard run.

Among Lieutenant Kjelstrom's commendations is one dated June, 1929, indicating that General Charles P. Sumerall considered him to be an outstanding soldier, who, through marked leadership and splendid performance, has contributed exceptional services to the Second Battalion, 29th Infantry, in all its athletic endeavors. Also, a telegram reads, "—Congratulations to you on winning Marine Corps Cup and Second place Coast Guard rapid fire cup."

Obstacle Course Record Broken

Candidate Richard H. Kirby of the Sixth Company, Third Student Training Regiment, shattered the first battalion's obstacle course last week, lowering the time from 1:25 to 1:23.

A New Yorker, Kirby previously was with the 17th Company, Second Battalion's obstacle course record of 1:35. He attended Dewitt Clinton High school in New York and ran the 220 on the varsity track team. He also is known as a singer of considerable talent.

O. C.'s Brother Routs 9 Nazis In North Africa

Officer Gets Silver Star And Promotion In Field For Exploit

A little engagement in the North African campaign in which one American personally overcame nine Germans was described in a letter received recently by O. C. Emerson Tanner, of the 26th Company, Second Student Training Regiment.

The one American was Capt. William Tanner, older brother of the O. C., and for his action he was decorated with the Silver Star and given a field promotion from lieutenant to captain.

Captain Tanner, an ROTC graduate from the University of Tennessee, led an assault on a German machine gun nest in the Battle of El Guettar. He killed three Nazis with his .45 cal. pistol and put six others to flight by his quick action. The story is told in the following excerpt from his letter:

"The attack started before daylight, and along about noon of the first day we could hear this German machine gun just over a little peaked ridge raising h—l. It wasn't firing at us, but was giving out bops down the valley a hard way to go.

CHARGES RIDGE

"Most of the company was engaged at the time, so Captain Wit (the company commander) decided he would take a squad of men around to the left and attempt to put fire on the machine gun, and meanwhile I would take a few men and rush the ridge when he gave me the signal.

"Well, he got around all right, but wasn't able to get in a position to fire on the gun, so he gave me the signal anyway. With about five men I took off for the ridge. I never thought of myself as being very fast before, but I must have really let loose and covered the distance to the hill in nothing flat. For when I reached the top of the ridge I suddenly realized that I was alone and had only my pistol.

"There was nothing else to do, so I plunged over the top, and face down right at my feet were three Germans, evidently ammunition bearers for the machine gun. About 30 feet to my left was the gun with six men.

"I guess I was pretty much excited, but at any rate I fired all eight of my shots into the three men at my feet, completely ignoring the other six. It must have been the element of surprise in my favor, for the six men deserted their gun and took off, panic stricken. I reloaded, and the five men who were with me came up with their rifles and Tommy gun, and we got three more of the six as they ran down the hill.

"About this time, Wit and his squad came up, and it was here that Wit was killed by machine gun fire as he attempted to observe over the hill."

MEDICOS PROMOTED

Among the corporals recently promoted to sergeant in the Medical Detachment, Station Hospital were Verlyn B. Little, Marion C. Pate, Woodrow Reynolds, John Sebor, Hubert Sewell, Henry Tandy, Paul Whellis and James Woodward.

Vocal, telegraphic and radio messages will be transmitted on a new 2000 mile overland cable being laid to connect Alaska and the United States.

be used for barter, or for bribery, or for similar purposes.

All these things I learned while trying to solve the mystery of the laces on my pants and my leggings, which persisted in getting tangled.

Once my uniform was donned, I was turned over to a sergeant, who waltzed me over to a nearby desk and handed me a mimeographed blank to fill out.

FILLS OUT RECORD

On top of it, it said "Campo di Internamento di Fort Benning, Georgia," and following that were instructions to "scrivere chiaro e in lettere maiuscole per piacere," which meant I was to write clearly. I did my best to scrivere.

This blank is valuable both to the army and to the prisoner. It gives the army the necessary information to classify the prisoners as to occupations, and to make it easier for them to give him the kind of work he likes to do. It also gives them data on his military career, his next of kin, his life prior to the war and other details of importance.

There were a lot of those questions. The first, of course, was my cognome e nome—my name. Then my internment serial number. Then my altezza and my peso in kgs; my width and weight.

The colore degli occhi, colorito, and colore dei capelli; the color of my eyes, my complexion and my hair which I used to have, were V, VI, and VII on the list.

Then, of course, they wanted to know my nazionalita (nationality), and I wondered at the first four letters of the word and its spinesy), my eta (age) and my luogo e data di nascita (date and place of birth); and also my indirizzo de residenza permanente, (my previous permanent residence.)

MANY QUESTONS

Questions XIII, XIV, XV, XVI, and XVII all related to my marital state, addresses of my wives or nearest relatives, and data about my dependents. My education and religion, my knowledge of foreign languages were the subject of inquiry. I see my mestiere prima della chiamata al army—my pre-war jobs, and my army experience. What grade did I hold, what arm or service of the Italian forces was I in; was I a member of the Army, Navy or Air Force and what unit or ship; what was my Italian army serial number and my military occupation; and did I have any other occupations and what was the date of my capture and where was it, who captured me and what was my physical condition at the time of my capture? In fact, any and all questions which could be asked to insure my well-being, my contentment insofar as possible with my status as a prisoner.

And then I was given a card to fill out—a card which would be mailed immediately to my next of kin notifying them of my capture, and where they could write to me.

I was then given a receipt for whatever cash, bonds or personal property of value I might have had when I came in; and my financial status was entered on another card which was to follow me throughout my internment. On this card were to be entered all sums I earned, or were paid as a prisoner of war—the first being up to 80 cents a day maximum, and the second being a flat payment of 10c per day.

I could earn the 80 cents a day by being hired out to farmers, or to other forms of labor. The employer would pay the government the prevailing rate for such labor in the competitive market—this to insure that prisoners were not to be used as "cheap labor" and thus undercutting private wages.

Whatever I was paid over and above the 80 cents a day the government allowed me, was placed to the credit of the government.

GETS $13 A MONTH

Of the sums placed to my credit, I could get up to $13 a month in camp scrip or exchange tokens, which, in turn, I could use at the camp post exchange for the purchase of cigarettes, candy and other such comfort items. The balance of my money remains to my credit and will be paid to me at the end of the war, when I am released and repatriated.

The paper work over, I was taken across the camp street, and there issued my equipment. The supply sergeant gave me a barrack bag, two bed sacks, two comforters, a cot, a pillow and I was to be allowed 15 pounds per month of straw or substitute bedding with which to stuff my mattress.

I was allowed a belt, a pair of denim pants, a blouse, a cap, four pair of cotton shorts, a pair of leggings, two shirts, a pair of shoes, four pairs of socks and four undershirts—and I could have an additional allowance if and as my health and well-being demanded it. And in wintertime I could have two pair of wool trousers and a woolen coat.

TOILET ARTICLES

As to toilet articles, they loaded me up. They gave me a safety razor and blades, a shaving brush, a tooth brush, a card of buttons, a comb, two handkerchiefs, some shoe laces and shoe polish, tooth powder, hand and shaving soap, and two towels.

My company barber also was issued two hair clippers—for each company — and other sundries. My company cobbler had resoling soles and both leather and rubber heels for repairing my shoes; as well as a complete tool kit.

And this accomplished I was taken to the wirebound gate of the camp proper.

The camp is bound around by two high wire fences, separated from each other by a space of from fifteen to twenty feet. Three strands of barbed wire top the fences at an angle. On each corner of the fences are towers, in which camp guards—trained machine gunners — are on duty 24 hours a day in two hour shifts.

The towers are squat and bulky affairs. In each of them are mounted three machine guns. On top of them are maneuverable searchlights, which have emergency current from battery installations for use should the normal electric supply be interrupted.

These machine guns are kept trained on the aisles between the two fences, and on the camp proper. The searchlights at night constantly illumine those aisles. At no time, day or night, can prisoners approach either of the fences.

The towers themselves are ingeniously constructed. The guards, once in them, are isolated from the rest of the camp, save for communication service. Anyone, even the camp commander, approaching them, is challenged. From the tower platform a comprehensive view of the camp as a whole is possible. In our camp at Fort Benning there are several of these main towers.

WIRE BOUND GATE

The entrance to the camp is similarly protected. You walk—or drive—through a wire bound gate, and stop. The gate closes behind you, and your presence there is thoroughly inspected before the gate in front of you is opened by the guards. War prisoners, of course, are thoroughly frisked as they go in and out.

That double gate is a necessary and very valuable precaution. Groups of prisoners, you see, are hired out to farmers and other employers, to do essential work. They are accompanied by guards from the post. They can be absent, working or in transportation, for as long as ten hours. . . . but they must be back in camp each night.

As they depart, in the morning, or arrive, at night, they are brought into the double gate, inspected, and finally sent to the camp proper.

With my equipment I enter this compound of long, single story buildings. I am assigned, first, to barracks, brand new, hospital clean, pine smelling barracks, with long rows of single cots. Each prisoner is given a cot of his own. He keeps it clean. He can, probably will, and generally does, evolve lockers from soap boxes, with doors and ingeniously contrived hinges cut from tomato cans, in which to keep his personal effects. He can decorate this little niche as much as he pleases; but it must pass the efficient and frequent inspection of camp officers.

HOT AND COLD WATER

In another long building are rows of wash basins and toilet equipment. At one end is a shower room capable of accommodating a score of prisoners at a time. Here, too, are tables on which they may scrub their clothes. Hot and cold running water continuously are on tap.
