I have first hand information on the situation, being fitted out with only two names from the time of my birth. I was not in the army long when I first realized the disadvantage. At the post of my induction I filled out a form and passed to a sour adjutant. He shoved git back to me, "Include your middle name."

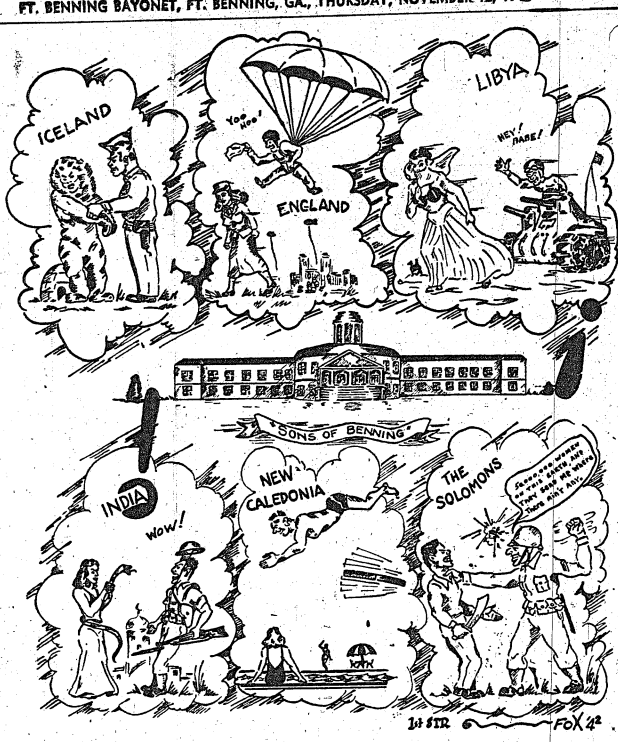
"Haven't one, sir," I said.

He looked at me pityingly, saying mutely that all the better people come equipped with middle names built in. As my military education progressed and I learned the difference between the M-1 helmet and a spitoon, I realized more and more that one insignificant letter inserted between my necessary handles would have saved a great deal of wear and tear on my mental superstructure.

G. I. clerks have numerous methods of remedying the deficiency. The (NMI) type is the best known. However, sometimes the parentheses are omitted and your name resembles a string of box cars. Then the "None" method would work, if it weren't for the fact that the "none" is always being misspelled and you're left with a variety of strange cognomens.

Sometimes I toy with a fiendish idea. Why not adopt an "Aloysius," or a "Findlebert," or some revered old family name like "Cruxelfield," and then watch G. I. clerks gnaw their pencils and exhaust their vocabularies. But then my newspaper training as Assistant-Building-Page-Editor-in-Charge-of- Checking-Misspelled-Names comes to the fore and I abandon the idea, through sheer pity toward the clerks.

Only one solution remains. The army will have to issue G. I. Middle Names, M-1. I am ready to draw mine.



LT. WALTER (NMI) WILCOX.

Many nice things have been said since the first appearance of the Bayonet two weeks ago. We are truly proud that the paper has met with such wonderful reception. But just to keep us from resting on our laurels and to keep us interested, a kick where it will do the most good can be of supreme advantage at times.

Our biggest job at home is to make our country worth fighting for.

Bricks and mortar were used even by the builders of Babel. Mud slinging never built anything.

The USO Presents

By CPL. SOLOMON KLEINDORF

Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party...And the party is at the Salvation Army-USO Club in Columbus this coming Tuesday... That is if you are a paratrooper in the 505th...If you're not, I'm afraid that you will not be welcome...Some one has finally remembered the "forgotten men of Alabama."

At the same club, each Thursday, there is a gathering known as the Friendship Circle...Here they try to make you feel at home ...Anything that you do at home can be done at the club on Thursdays...Even to taking off your shoes and throwing ashes on the carpet...If the club had a carpet...Informal singing, piano playing, small games, and just general conversation, with Mell Tolbert, hope I spelled the name right, acting as mother of the brood.

For the first time since the skating started at the Army and Navy YMCA-USO I went down and watched it....No wonder all they do down there is talk about it...Can you imagine a nicer way to spend Sundays from 2 to 5 in the afternoons, than skating under a cool Indian Summer sky in the open air patio?...With just enough of a breeze coming off the river and the leaves of the trees falling all around you...Well, that's the way it looked to me and I was all set to chuck this job of knocking out a USO column and getting a pair of skates for myself.

The "Army Hour" broadcast coming from the same club has been pushed down to 10:30 p. m. and this time the directors hope it is there to stay...The poor thing has been kicked around from time to time until the performers don't know whether they are arriving too early or too late for the program...Just so long as it isn't "Too little and too late" we will forgive them.

All of you O. C.s who claim that you can't do anything in town can go to the Army and Navy "Y" and have a real good dance every Friday...Speaking of dances brings to mind that there are good old time square dances held at the same club every Monday evening.

This coming Sunday sees the final day of the "Salute to the States" program with a finale that is equal to any that has ever been had before...The program will be held at the 9th St. USO and will honor all those states that have not been honored before... Instead of the regular prize for the winner of the quiz contest, which is a free long-distance telephone call to his home state, there will be five winners and five free telephone calls.

And here is a scoop...The 9th St. USO is putting a steam table in order to be able to serve hot dishes from their snack bar during the winter months.

The Basketball League of the 9th St. USO will take the place of the Salute to the States on Sundays...Ten teams will participate in the tournament and will play one game Tuesday evening, two games Friday evenings and two on Sunday afternoon. Watch this column for a full schedule.

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

No one has much to say about the widows of Bataan. What can one say of wives who live with nothingness and terror? What is there to offer of consolation to them? Words of sympathy are meaningless. Much more to them are the words they read in current magazines of possible horrors of Japanese prison camps. Each word must be a stab in the heart, a heart that prays their beloved one is safe from such humiliation of body and soul.

Then quickly they must take those prayers back. They didn't mean that, but quick insinuations reiterate, wouldn't death be preferable? Would sleep come easier if they knew their husbands weren't hungry, thirsty and shamed as a proud white race before the yellow man?

Each woman has learned the torment of the agony known as loneliness. If she could only touch him. Just once feel the warmth of his arm about her. If she could talk with him of the simple, quiet things that made up the happiness and companionship of their marriage. Decisions are so hard for her. Everything rests on her now, the future for herself and the children.

The children. Without them life wouldn't function with surface acceptance. The success of her outward acceptance of tragedy is proved in their childish prattle, "When Daddy comes back we're going to see parades again, ain't we Mommy?" Ah, when Daddy comes back.

BURDEN IS HERS

But suppose he doesn't come back. What strength and character does she have within her to rear these children of his? Can she alone give them the bright future planned in happier days? Won't they be cheated of both mother and father while she earns the very essentials of their living?

Bitterness and a terrible hate for those people of the world that must conquer and bend nations to their will. Hate for those peoples who destroy homes of little people like her with nothing but a husband who loved his profession of soldiering next to her and the children. She loved it too, but that was a peacetime love of a profession that gave kindly protection to her country. The protection hadn't been strong enough to save her bits of precious happiness.

The quietness of the house at night. A stillness stretching into eternity of her longing. The pang of jealous and unreasonable anger she feels at the sight of other women laughing into their men's eyes. What right have they to this happiness when she is so terribly alone? What right has any woman or man in our country to laugh while this agony tears at her heart?

What right has anyone to forget for one moment that men are waiting on Bataan? Their women waiting and waiting in their homes while the days of the calendar move slowly toward another month and then another year.

Chaplain's Corner...

By CHAP. FRANK M. THOMPSON

I shall always remember the rejoicing that took place in a little village in France on the first Armistice Day. Everywhere you could hear, "Fini la guerre, fini la guerre." Children cried. Old men and old women wept aloud. And the whole wide world witnessed like scenes. Peons of praise and thanksgiving went up to a good God that the cataclysm of horror which had engulfed the nations of the earth was of the past; henceforth humanity would travel a new road.

But alas—

"We hoped for peace, there came a sword,
Goodwill and still there grows discord;
The snow with bloody slaughter red,
Passion is regnant, God is dead."

Over all the earth the war gods are marching on. Untold suffering and death follow in their wake. And no one knows when "Universal peace will lie like a shaft of light across the land."

However, we are not to dispair. Mankind is rather foolish and mulish. But slowly and surely as the tree adds foliage he does garner a little wisdom. And the time will come when the prophecy of old shall be fulfilled.

"They shall beat their swords
Into plow shares, and their spears
Into pruning hooks; nations shall Not lift up sword against nation,
Neither shall they learn war any more."

NO FISH STORY: It happened recently on maneuvers. A cavalry platoon captured one lieutenant colonel, one major, four captains, five first lieutenants, one second lieutenant and 137 enlisted men from the "enemy". But the sergeant who led the group was despondent in the face of many congratulations. "Aw, that was nothing," he said. "We had a major general, too, but he got away."—Mitchell Beacon.

SCHOLAR: The other day we met a new recruit at the Field, a learned fellow who has spent long years at American universities. After only two weeks in the Army, this man of many degrees—including B. A., M. A. and Ph. D.—is entitled to add some more letters to the string—K. P. . . . In keeping with his high academic standing, he was given a rating of "magna cum laude" in culinary science. — Mitchell Beacon.

Thru the Peep-Sight

By SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

The grey ghosts of those who died 24 short years ago to make the world safe for democracy raced with the humming armored legions of Britain's Eighth Army in Egypt; fought with the battle-weary U. S. Marines at Guadalcanal and stood with the Russians at Stalingrad this week as the anniversary of mighty Fort Benning brought back memories of World War I and of other warriors, who died for their cause.

The armistice was the news that threw America into wild hysteria just short of a quarter century ago, when Fort Benning was a group of uncompleted wooden buildings only a few weeks old standing bleakly on the pine-covered Georgia hills near Columbus.

One year ago electrifying news was again received at Fort Benning, now a bastion of American military might—the Japs were at Pearl Harbor and the Philippines, and once again the nation turned to war and death and sacrifice.

Today the headlines tell of the achievements of the sons of those men who fought in France and big, black letters on the front page told of victories this week that might turn the tide of war.

In the African desert wastes, Marshal Erwin Rommell, Germany's "desert fox", bled of supplies through incessant, savage attacks by Allied air force fliers and face to face this time with a British general—Lt. Gen. Bernard L. Montgomery—as able as the Axis leader, was striving desperately to gather the remnants of his Afrika Korps around him and stave off complete defeat.

At week's end, the onrushing British Army, supported this time by powerful air arms and artillery, had cut mighty gashes in German and Italian defense lines and armored divisions were relentlessly pursuing the fleeing enemy across the desert sands. Unless Rommell, who had lost two of his top commanders, could again reorganize his army, it looked like a certain complete victory for the Allies and a possible invasion of the Italian peninsula later.

Holding grimly in the Solomons and killing five Japs to every Marine killed were the U. S. Marines "first to land and last to leave". So many of the yellow-men have been killed by the defending Marines that "disposal problems" were reported by American commanders on the island. Elsewhere in the Pacific a grim toll of Jap merchant and warships taken by U. S. submarines in "silent war" since the fighting started between Japan and the United States was reported by Washington. On New Guinea, Australians continued to advance mile by mile through the dense jungles. The work of rooting the Jap out of every island in the Pacific was under way, but at best it was "a long job ahead."

The Russians, still holding the Germans and still killing them in waves, prepared to battle a second grim foe—winter and starvation—and at the same time were massing men and materials for a probable winter offensive against the hard-pressed Germans.

Election was over in the United States, and the Republicans were riding high in New York State, in Congress and in many other states. Thoughts in Washington concentrated anew on such vital problems as manpower, the draft of young America and rationing.

Congress prepared to settle the battle of whether the 18 and 19-year-olds soon to be drafted could be sent to combat field with less than a year's training. Lined up against the measure were the armed services and most government officials, who worried that inclusion of such an amendment would create a "soldier bottleneck" when it came time for more and more outfits to go over seas.

Keeping enough men in the production lines and yet supplying the armed forces with fighting men was the tremendous problem facing the White House, Congress and the nation. Rationing of coffee, sugar, gasoline, fuel oil, all the other essentials of the American way of living, continued as a topic on every tongue as more and more the iron hand of "not enough," "sold out", "no gas" reached into the most remote villages and hamlets of a war-awakening country.

The real story of war and the sacrifice American mothers and fathers are making for democracy was told this week in a few figures—casualties of the U. S. in eleven months of fighting. The toll: 47,463 killed, wounded, captured and missing. The Army lost 31,469; the Navy, Marines and Coast Guard, 15,814.

Nine Oklahoma soldiers got out of a train at Cleveland, Ohio, to stretch their legs. A nearby band, playing for a sendoff for some selectees, played the Star Spangled Banner and the camp-bound soldiers snapped to attention. While they stood at attention, the train quietly pulled out and left them standing. They were nine hours late reporting back to Camp.

In India, American Negro Army troops took time out to introduce baseball to Calcutta. The Americans defeated the Calcutta police force team 11 to 3 in the first ball game ever seen in India.

A houseboat on the Nile was formally opened as the headquarters club for U. S. warrant officers and non-commissioned officers in the Egyptian theater of war.

Soon after I leave here, a group of WAACS is going to be moved to Fort Benning, it was disclosed recently. That's the kind of breaks I get!

Or could it be that they've heard about me, and are purposely waiting until I get out, before taking the chance of moving the gals in?

They are going to be quartered in barracks numbered 1776, which is quite appropriate for a group of modern "liberty belles".

And the "Spirit of 1776" will have a new meaning around here then.

But this feminine army is causing all kinds of complications. Picture the fate of a guy married to a top sergeant!

Or, imagine enjoying holding a second lieutenant on your lap!

Or, sending a WAAC to the powder room and having her return with a freshly applied make-up, instead of ammunition.

And pity the poor civilian husband whose WAAC wife can pull the line: "Here I am, spending the best years of my life slaving over a hot machine gun, etc., etc., etc., etc."

We've been spending a lot of time recently studying military tactics, learning how to be Napoleons in six easy lessons. But we do more than merely solve the problems neatly while comfortably reclining at desks, far from the actual scene.

After working out a solution for a situation, we then go into the field and perform it. After pushing anti-tank guns around and lugging machine guns and mortars up and down hills, I often wonder why I didn't try to get in the paratroops or some easy job like that.

What a whale of a difference a few months can make! I'M the guy who used to carry the stool when there was a piano to move, and who even went through revolving doors on somebody else's push.

Those of us who are now almost second lieutenants (we hope) naturally have a very high opinion of that exalted position—an opinion, it seems, that is not generally shared by everyone. The following instance was cited last week by one of our officers:

A general sent a message to the War Department requesting 200 second lieutenants and one mule. He received the following reply: "The second lieutenants are on their way, but who the censored do you think you are, asking for a mule?"

I received a letter recently from Pvt. Bill Bol, now located "Somewhere Up North". Bill, are there any comfortable steam-heated igloos up there? You never can tell, maybe I'll be in the market for one some of these days.

Army Will Train Sledge Dogs To Move Supplies

To facilitate transportation of supplies in snow-bound areas, the Army soon will begin training sledge dogs and enlisted men as drivers at Camp Rimini, near Helena, Montana, it was announced yesterday at Fort Benning by the office of the post quartermaster.

The Benning headquarters said that the training will be conducted by the Remount Division of the Q. M. C., the same division that is responsible for the procurement and training of both horses and dogs for the Army.

Training facilities at Camp Rimini, formerly a Civilian Conservation Corps camp, will consist of troop quarters, individual kennels, and veterinary kennels for ailing dogs. The enlisted men will receive instruction in sledge driving and the care of huskies, malamutes and St. Bernards.

The Army Specialist Corps will provide experienced dog teamsters as instructors. Both dogs and driver will receive a six weeks' course of instruction. The Q. M. C. has requested Dogs for Defense, Inc., to obtain the full complement of animals. This is the same civilian agency that is procuring dogs for sentry duty with the armed forces.

These light observation craft likewise perform many liason missions, engaged by units as communications carriers or to carry officer observers who may direct friendly fire upon enemy targets which may be sighted from the air.

Although many an infantryman at Benning has cursed the pilots as their flour bags have found their marks and exploded on their backs, the same soldier some months hence may well bless the pilot for having taught him the value of "taking over" when enemy planes strafe and bomb the ground positions only to find Benning's soldiers stretched out in a slit trench or other suitable hole to escape injury from bomb fragments.

Family Quarters At Benning

Quarters for the families of enlisted men of the higher grades are shown above at Fort Benning. Since the personnel at Benning has multiplied in recent years there has been a large demand for these houses of which they are but a limited number. Non-commissioned officers who are entitled to quarters allowances for their families can apply for such quarters as these shown above. (Photo by 161st Signal Photo Company.)

Visual Aids Prove Valuable In Infantry School Class-Work

Instruction Is Made As Realistic As Possible To Get Points Across

They say seeing is believing. And the Infantry School takes this message to heart in its educational program. Although text books play an important role in the curriculum of this great training school, just as important is the great number and variety of visual aids used to drum facts into the heads of our soldiers.

Thousands of troops and thousands of pieces of equipment go into this planned training program—so that students may see with their own eyes what the instructor is trying to put across.

To teach the proper method of getting a regiment across a stream, The Infantry School doesn't stop with passing out text books on the subject. It turns out a regiment of men, and a crew of engineers. Students are put in stands at an advantageous spot. A loud speaker apparatus is set up and then the actual job of putting up a bridge, and the actual movement of troops and equipment is accomplished before the students' eyes. The instructor, meanwhile, gives a running commentary on the planning behind the operation and the reason for each and every step.

BATTLE CONDITIONS

Every effort is made to simulate actual battle conditions. Smoke screens are laid, airplane attacks are fought off by anti-aircraft equipment, and artillery fires from concealed positions. Communications systems are set up and the class listens in over the loud-speaker system as commanders of different units send out their messages.

When it is desired to impress upon the students the strength of a regiment, and of its many component parts, an entire regiment is turned out with full rolling equipment. It parades slowly before the students, again with an instructor describing the units in detail over a loud-speaker system. Men are fully equipped and weapons and vehicles are ready for action.

Even in small units, such as a patrol squad, troops are used in demonstrating the proper handling of the men by a squad leader. The patrol members are checked for clothing, equipment, ammunition and health. They are given proper instructions and made to repeat in great detail their appointed task. The school works on the theory that when this little scene is enacted before the students, they will remember the lesson taught far more vividly than by giving it to them in a lecture from a text book.

MODELS USED

Not the least important in the school's visual aid program is its great use of models. Almost without exception one or more models, usually about 15 times the actual size of the object they represent, are displayed in front of the different classes.

They range from great working models of the trigger mechanism of a pistol, to a model airplane wired to operate in a ground message pickup.

The medals are true replicas of the real thing, usually gaily painted in contrasting colors in order to aid in pointing out the many different parts. They operate exactly as the real thing and in this way the mechanics of all Infantry weapons can easily be explained to students.

Models and aids are used in marksmanship training, in assembling and disassembling all weapons, in repair work, and in almost every phase of the school's training program.

MURAL-LIKE MAPS

Charts and terrain maps which border on mural work, are devised for teaching tactical problems. They are turned out by a large corps of soldier and civilian artists and technicians. Some are as big as 10 feet high and 20 feet wide, and can be seen easily in its smallest detail by all students.

Also vast in its scope is the use of motion pictures and slides. A great corps of technicians are used to compile and keep up to date a gigantic film library. Military men decide on subjects and methods of presentation, and Hollywood then lends its highly trained technical aides and equipment to provide a professional finish to the films.

MOVIE FILMS

These films are not only available to the school, but can be obtained by every unit in the U. S. Army. Every regiment is equipped with a projector for showing the training films and slides to their troops. In this way latest developments in warfare can be brought to every man in our armed forces, as vividly as if they were actually in conflicts themselves.

The Infantry School, as mentioned earlier, still keeps its "Bibles" or technical text books as part of its course, and it is to these that the student refers for authoritative assurance on any detail. The visual aids program is simply devised to aid in hammering across the message from the manuals.

And even in the books themselves the modern trend of visual education is not forgotten. The Infantry School has another crew of artists and photographers assigned to the Publications Section in order to make all manuals profusely illustrated. Tactical scenes and intricate parts of weapons are shown either in sketches or in photographs. Our soldier needs only eyes to learn the intricacies of warfare today.

O. C. Class Scores High On 37 Mm. Gun Range

The 17th Company of the 3rd Student Training Regiment emerged from its first encounter with tanks in a most commendable manner recently. Waves of theoretical low silhouetted eight Nazi tanks were obliterated in the eight-hour engagement.

The officer candidates' firing positions were literally covered with shells as the batteries of efficient 37 Mm. Anti-Tank guns took their toll of targets.

The decisive victory occurred on the 1000-inch Preparatory Marksmanship course on O'Brien Range and marked the second day of work for the company with the favorite gun of the majority of officer candidates. The weapons were adapted for the use of small calibre ammunition.

A class average of 88.9 per cent qualified gunners put the class 5.9 per cent ahead of the mean score for recent classes.

Almost half the class qualified as experts, raising the class figure for top notch gunners almost ten per cent over the average in that category.

TWO PROMOTED

Two enlisted men in Headquarters 10th Armored "Tiger" Division Trains have been promoted from privates to fifth grade technicians. They are Arthur R. Cassel and James H. Kimmel.

Fort Benning Infantry School Is Famous For Training Army Leaders

School Founded Here In 1918 Offers Variety Of Courses

BY SGT. HERBERT KALETTE
(Infantry School Public Relations Office

The Infantry School at Fort Benning has become the world's greatest institution for military education and the development of military leaders. Established in 1918, it existed primarily as an educational and testing center of the Army's largest branch of service, the Infantry, until the beginning of the present expansion program. Today, in the crisis of war, it has been given the tremendous task of training tens of thousands of soldiers to become officers of infantry and strong leaders of men.

The school was first established as the Infantry School in October, 1918, three miles east of Columbus, Ga., on the Macon road. Previously it had been known in successive stages as the School of Musketry at Presidio of Monterey, California, and the School of Small Arms Fire at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. After several months in its Columbus location, it was moved in 1919 to its present location nine miles south of Columbus on to what was soon to become the Main Post of Fort Benning.

The Infantry School is located on the most complete army post in the country. Its classrooms extend out over almost 200,000 acres of ground, including all types of terrain. Making use of its hills and level areas, its woods and open spaces, its streams, creeks, and rivers, the school is able to stimulate every conceivable condition of warfare in training the leaders for the greatest fighting force ever known to man.

SCHOOL IS DEVELOPED

The home of the Infantry School was designated by the War Department in 1922 as Fort Benning, named for General Henry Lewis Benning, a distinguished Confederate Army officer and native of Columbus. Originally the post contained nothing but the school, but in recent years it has been enlarged many times.

The School has numbered many distinguished soldiers as it leaders, among them General George C. Marshall, army Chief of Staff, who served a tour of duty as Assistant Commandant, and Major General Courtney C. Hodges, head of the newly created Replacement and School Command, who was a recent Commandant of the School.

Present Commandant is Major General Leven C. Allen, an officer who has had three tours of duty at Fort Benning and who has watched the school grow from its infancy. He was on the staff of the school as in instructor from 1920 through 1924 and later served for a brief period with the 29th Infantry before leaving the post. He returned in 1940 as commander of the old Fourth Anti-Tank Battalion and remained in that position until May, 1941. He has been Commandant of The Infantry School since February, 1942.

General Allen has spent all his life around army posts. He was born into the army at Fort Douglas, Utah, the son of an army man. His own military career began on November 30, 1916 when he entered the army as a second lieutenant. He served at Fort Sill, Okla., and Fort Sam Houston, Tex., before going overseas in World War I as a captain in command of a machine gun company. Returning to the United States, he was assigned to Camp Lee, Virginia for a short time before being transferred to Benning and The Infantry School in 1920.

Each time the General has left Fort Benning, it has been to take a position in Washington. In 1924 he was assigned to the office of the Chief of Infantry, a post which he occupied until 1928. When he left here in 1941, he was transferred to the General Staff.

Other stops in the General's career have taken him to Panama as Chief of Staff of the Pacific Sector from 1928 to 1931, and to Fort Wadsworth where he served until transferred to Fort Benning with the Fourth Anti-Tank Battalion.

General Allen was made a major in 1929, a lieutenant colonel in 1938, and a colonel in October, 1941. He was promoted to Brigadier General on February 6, 1942. His present rank of Major General was attained on September 8, 1942.

VARIETY OF COURSES

Before the present emergency, most regular army officers attended the Infantry School at least once in their careers. With the beginning of the expansion program, it became the aim of the Army to send all infantry reserve officers here as soon as they were called into active duty, and before they were assigned to troops. Three regular infantry courses are presented for commissioned officers. For junior officers of company grade there is the Rifle and Heavy Weapons courses which is a complete refresher course covering all weapons of the Infantry and the tactics of Infantry units up to the Battalion. As almost all junior reserve officers have already been called to active duty, no new Rifle and Heavy Weapons classes are contemplated for the duration.

An advanced Infantry course known as the Battalion Commander and Staff course is provided for field officers. This is a thirteen week course designed to train officers in the administration and tactics of larger units up to the regiment. In addition, a Division Officers course is given for the officers about to be assigned as commanders of newly activated regiments and divisions. This is a six weeks course and it includes officers up to the grade of Brigadier Generals. Specialized courses are given in Motor maintenance and in communications.

The above mentioned curricula have been the mainstays of the Infantry School for many years. Today the training of Officer Candidates has become, physically at least, the major function of the school.

The Officer Candidates are selected enlisted men who come from every Corps Area and Foreign Station in the Army. They are the privates, corporals and sergeants who were selected by their superior officers in having outstanding qualities of leadership and intelligence requisite for officer material. After a man has been selected for the Candidate School, he is transferred to the Infantry School Service Command and sent to Fort Benning. Here he is assigned to a candidate company and embarks on a rigorous thirteen week training program.

O. C. S. IS RIGOROUS

The candidate course is extremely difficult. From the first day at school, the candidate is made to feel that he is a prospective officer. He is observed continuously by the commissioned personnel assigned to his company to see that his bearing and deportment are worthy of an officer. His day begins with reveille at 6:45 in the morning, and he is kept very busy almost until bedtime. The actual hours of instruction are from 8:20 a. m. to 6:15 p. m., but in addition there is a compulsory study period four nights a week. Moreover he frequently finds it necessary to do more work on his own time. Lights go out in the barracks at ten o'clock, and there is a bed check.

The actual training is divided between the field and the classroom. Indoor classes are held on such subjects as map reading, mechanics and functioning of weapons, combat intelligence, mess and supply management, and instructional methods. Out in the wide open spaces, the candidate learns the use and manipulation of all weapons of the infantry and gets to fire each on the ranges. The first six weeks of the course are devoted primarily to training with weapons. The balance of the time is spent on tactis. Under this heading the student learns proper disposition and use of all tactical units up to the battalion. He learns how best to deploy a platoon of men in every conceivable attack in defense position. He is taught how to coordinate his small arms fire with supporting heavy weapons, and primarily, throughout the entire thirteen weeks the candidate is TAUGHT HOW TO TEACH.

The School has taken cognizance of the fact that officers being commissioned today must be more than leaders of men in battle. Many of them have been assigned to newly activated regiments where they will be charged with the responsibility of training new recruits to be hardened, efficient, seasoned soldiers. To accomplish this, these platoon leaders must be good instructors, and so it is that The Infantry School has become in reality a school of pedagogy, a teachers' college, imparting the latest and most effective methods of instruction to its students.

LEARN TEACHING METHODS

The Officer Candidates, for instance, receive eleven hours of instruction in training management during their first week at the school. This instruction is given early in the course so that the Officer Candidate may be sensitized at the very outset to the place of teaching methods, both at the school and in Military training in general. They are made aware of what constitutes good instruction, and are urged to study their instructors at the School. This every hour of instruction which an Officer candidate has at The Infantry School is, in effect, a demonstration of how to teach that particular subject.

This plan presupposes, of course, a high degree of excellence on the part of instructors at the school, because the Infantry School urges its thousands of graduates to adapt the training methods employed here to their own training facilities. In order to insure a high standard of training efficiency, all new instructors appointed to serve at the school are given a short but intensive period of instruction in training methods and philosophy. In addition to this, the new instructor, before he goes on the platform, is given a generous period of time to observe other instructors at the school. Then after he has mastered his material and determined his method of instruction, his presentation is given before a critical committee. The committee makes suggestions and recommendations for improving the presentation. Thus, what students at the school see on the platform before them represents the very best judgment of experienced officers on how best to instruct in that particular subject.

The relationship of the Infantry School to the training of infantry in general is that of a wholesaler. The instruction is wholesaled to officer candidates and officer students, and retailed by them to the masses of troops now making up the new American army. Thus the position of the school is a strategic one. Its high standards require safeguarding despite the pressure of time and of numbers occasioned by the war. That it is maintaining its standards is shown by the hearty approval which its work has received from countless educational and military leaders who have come here to observe and to criticize, and who have left convinced that the instructional methods used at the Infantry School are the most efficient in the world.

This, then, is the Infantry School whose motto is "Follow Me." That motto indicates its position in the infantry branch of the army. It is another good reason why this war will be won by the army of the United States.

First Filipino Officer In Our Army Is Here

Captain Abdon Llorente is mighty proud of his home regiment, and he has good reason to be for it is the only one of its kind in the world.

The First Filipino Regiment was organized July 1..., under the command of Col. R. H. Offley, Class of 1917, West Point. It was organized at the request of the Philippine Government and of Philippine people in this country. Captain Llorente, the first Filipino to be commissioned in the Army of the United States, was instrumental in its formation.

The Regiment is organized for overseas duty only, and is anxious for a crack at the Japs. Ten of its officers are at Benning now in the Advanced Classes, and 95 per cent of all their officers are from Benning. They like only Benning officers, and who can blame them?

Captain Llorente is at present a member of the advanced class at the 3d Co., of the 1st STR.

Time and the Pioneer section of the 3rd Bn. H. Q. Co. have finally accomplished their task of building a fence around the tennis court of the company. (They are now all fenced in.)

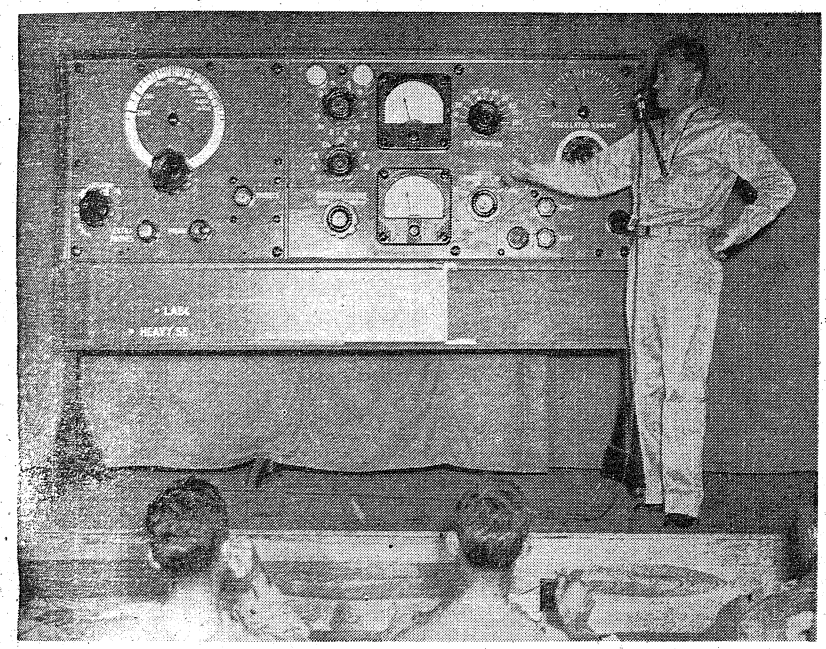
Explanation, Demonstration, Application, Examination Are Keys to Formula Followed

CAPT. C. J. SIMMS and three enlisted men are shown demonstrating the use of the sighting bar for rifle marksmanship. The bar is used to test the student's ability to get the correct "sight picture."



THE BOLT MECHANISM of the Browning Automatic Rifle which is actually but four inches long is reproduced in a wooden model 15 times its actual size. The wooden model is shown as compared to the size of the instructor. The model actually works just as the real bolt in the rifle, and in this way the principles of its operation are easily explained to the student.

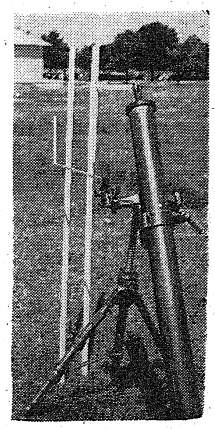
MAJOR CREIGHTON uses an enlarged model to explain the control of the radio set SCR 288 to students at officers' communications course of the Infantry School.

LARGE SAND TABLES such as the one shown in the photo are proving a great aid in demonstrating tactical problems in miniature to students. Every possible type of terrain is reproduced. Enemy units are placed in certain strategic positions and students are shown the accepted method for operating against them. Model weapons, equipment, and small figures are used in demonstrations. Many similar tables but on a less elaborate scale are used in many School classes.



LARGE-SCALE MURALS made by enlisted men of the Infantry School are used to demonstrate military tactics. This mural illustrates a river-line attack.

A SIGHTING device for use on the mortar is shown above. It is known as the Cook practical aiming demonstrator and is used to instruct by visibly exaggerating the movement of the mortar adjustments.

CAPTAIN J. D. BUTLER uses the enlarged wooden model to demonstrate the correct "sight" picture which students must use to recognize when they fire the Garand rifle. The black dot represents the "bull's eye" rear peep sight.

THE INFANTRY SCHOOL'S great training program is based primarily on visual education. Although it has many models, pictures, graphs, and charts there is also a great use of actual troops in the vital aid program. In the photo students are shown learning the proper equipment and proper method of inspecting a squad before it is sent out on patrol or other detail. Sometimes a whole regiment may be so employed.

Soldier Poetry

When nations go to war, it is presumed that the time for words, written and oral, is past. Men lay down the pen and take up the sword to fight for causes they believe to be just. Nevertheless literature is not entirely dormant as every was has proven, and from the pens of soldiers on the field of battle and from those of men too old to fight have come now and then jewels which have taken their place in the great literature of the world.

For man is both militant and pacific; he expresses these moods in literature and art, and it is apparent that the two are not incompatible.

His war literature is devoted usually to the exaltation of such special qualities as patriotism, self-sacrifice, enterprise, and endurance. This literature, and we have in mind chiefly poetry, is necessarily subjective for the war poet feels and sees all the things he converts into verse. He envisages war from various points of view and treats his subject from these viewpoints. His treatment may be romantic, sentimental, or realistic. The war poet may be the chronicler who celebrates some great historical war event or he may be the contemplative interpreter of military history.

This war post has sung the fall of Troy; he has followed Caesar to the fields of battle to record in rhyme what his eyes have beheld; he has shared in the hardships, the sufferings, and the triumps of the crusaders; he may have been at Agincourt or at Waterloo.

Consequently some of the great bards of literature have been responsible for some of our great war poetry. We need name only a few to prove this point: Milton, Dryden, Byron, Scott, Tennyson, our own Walt Whitman, Britain's Rudyard Kipling, John Masefield, Rupert Brooke, John McRae, author of "In Flander's Field", and Alan Seeger, poet of the haunting "I Have a Rendezvous with Death."

PRIZES OFFERED

Anticipating another flow of war verse from the pens of soldier poets, A. S. Barnes and company, New York publishers, have already offered $1,000 in prizes to soldiers submitting their work to contest judges. This contest is evidence of the importance which publishers and men of literature place on the potential crop which is now in the offing. As an example of what can be done Barnes and company has issued a thin collection of war poems entitled "Steel and Flame" which should serve as an incentive to soldier bards to submit their work.

Much verse has already been written in this war. Some of it is good, some bad, some indifferent, but nevertheless it is being written. One need only peruse the verse columns of camp newspapers which come through the mails to Fort Benning every day, or read periodical literature.

'HIGH FLIGHT'

One verse especially has caught the fancy of literateurs. It is the "High Flight", written by John G. Magee, Jr., an American volunteer with the Royal Canadian Air Force, who was shot down last December just after mailing his poem to his mother in Washington, D. C. Archibald McLeish, librarian of Congress and a poet of note in his own right, has termed this poem the first jewel to come from an American's pen in this war. The poem has been published widely in magazines and newspapers throughout the nation, and appeared on the editorial page of the BAYONET in its inaugural issue.

Because it may have slipped by the eyes of some of our readers, and because it has inspired another poem from a Fort Benning poet, it is reproduced here:

"HIGH FLIGHT"

Oh, I save slipped the surly bonds of earth,
And danced the skies on laughter-
silvered wings;
Sunward, I've climbed and joined the tumbling mirth
Of sun-split clouds—and done a hundred things
You have not dreamed of—wheeled and soared and swung High in the sunlit silence. Hovering there,
I've chased the shouting wind along and flung
My eager craft through footless halls of air.
Up, up the long delirious, burning blue
I've topped the wind-swept heights with easy grace,
Where never lark, or even eagle flew;
And while with silent, lifting mind
The high untrespassed sanctity of space,
Put out my hand, and touched the face of God.

As we have said, a great deal of soldier verse is being written, a great deal of it here at Fort Benning. The literary value of this verse is beyond the point at this writing, but along with verse from other camps, some of it is good, some bad, some worse. The BAYONET has believed it wise, however, to encourage verse writing by offering a small weekly prize. It is the hope of the editors that over a period of time the dollars invested will reap a rich return if one single poem finally finds its way into a niche in war literature.

'PET GRIPES'

Benning verse writers are typically soldieresque in their outlook and in the verse through which they express their feelings. Some of the verse deals with the same themes found in greater verse but most of it is an expression of the soldier's memories of home, of mother, of the girl or wife left behind, of his pride in his outfit. Neither is he hesitant to give expression to his pet "gripes"; the hard-boiled sergeant with his "Mo'nin Repo't"; his discontent with his mess. He may even turn to ridicule or may poke fun at individuals or at groups.

We have made an effort to go through the reams of verse which have been pouring into the editors' office and to submit examples of soldier verse production from Fort Benning as indicative of what our soldiers are thinking and feeling before they have their first baptism of fire.

Obviously inspired by "High Flight," Lt. F. M. Schilling who has frequently contributed to the BAYONET's verse columns has written "Infantryman" in which he professes no jealousy for the bard who has "slipped the surly bonds of earth."

INFANTRYMAN

I am an earth-bound thing
With not a want to sail or fly
To play in clouds, so soar the sky
There are no wings upon my chest
Nor will there ever be
The ground is home to fight or die
The earth is good to me.

Here, with my feet set deep
Placed in, as if grown root
I stand in stubbornness, afoot
My grip is firm on rifle butt
My eyes look straight ahead
No tyrant from a foreign soil
Can pass me 'til I'm dead

I'm Infantrymen through and through
The moth that ne'er grew wing
A soul unharnessed to the blue
The song of earth I sing
The song of sweat and bodies warm
Strained to the breaking, holding strong Clenched fists, tight muscled, solid brawn
Men all, not bound to clumsy tools to keep Themselves alive, except cold steel
Within the hand, cold steel thrust deep

I am returned to whence I came Dust unto dust, ground-soldier is my name
I stand on firmness, ground beneath my feet
Upon the base of God, the earth
And though a million tempests move to the moon and stars
I can but sink to ground, my womb
And lie embraced in warmth, in death.

Another Benning soldier post is the "Unknown Soldier" who has requested that he be left cloaked in anonymity. With his "Wouldst Thou?" he struck a responsive chord, and now he is back with two poems, "Mother" and "A Victory Prayer" which are reproduced below.

MOTHER

Who scrubbed your ears and dried your face,
And saw that all your things were placed
Correctly on the mantel shelf
As though you'd put them there yourself.
Whose smile is like the morning
dew,
And like the Roses that are new.
That's sweet and clean and pure and right,
And also taught you not to fight.
And though she taught me not to fight,
That we may still retain our right,
Our right to say just what we please,
Our right to bow down on our knees,
And pray with all our heart and soul,
And do things that are not foretold.
Our right to mix with Jones and Browns,
Our right to move from town to town,
Our right to read the "Times" and "News",
Our right to mix with Czechs and Jews,
And Irish and English and Scotch and Dutch,
Italians and Germans won't matter too much,
For there's a job, awaitin' o'er
see,
That we, may retain democracy.
Who always stressed the "Golden Rule",
And seldom made you late for school,
Who stroked your cheek and kissed your chin,
And always prayed for you
within.
Lest we forget her tribulations,
Lest we forget our obligations.
Fore'er shall I keep her preserved,
She asks much less than she deserves,
She asks much less and accepts
no more,
But I shall give as ne'er before.
To her I'd give my very soul,
To one that's purer than purest gold.
Always will, star in my dreams,
By now do you know who I mean?
Each night she's always by my side,
With utmost joy and faithful pride,
Although we are miles and miles
apart,
I hear her with my secret heart.
I hear her exclaim, "This is my son
Who's out to see that Victry's won,
And when those rats are put in chains,
Back oe'r the sea to me again
He'll come back to me once more,
As safe and healthy as before.
And this I pray will be the last,
To add to all those in the past.
Whose smile is still like morning
dew,
And like the roses that are new.
Who stresses still the "Golden Rule",
And tho' there is for you no
school.
Who'll stroke your cheek, still kiss your chin,
And still pray for you from deep within.
Her touch is still a Heavenly bliss,
No ISMS whate'er, can substitute
this.
If this to you has not occurred,
You'll still know to whom I referred ? ? ? MOTHER.

Benning's Unknown Soldier.

"A VICTORY PRAYER"
By Benning's Unknown Soldier

O'Lady of the Miraculous Medal
May thy ever loving kindness,
Thy immortal Spirit of Truth and Grace,
Ever guide me upward, upward to soar above mankind
And with all thy every lasting Glory
Might I beseech Thee, O'Lady, might that which thou possess Instantaneously smothereth mine heart and soul
And covereth me as the sand so covereth the beach;
As the dew so covereth the sweet fragrance of the daffodil;
Becometh here from a part of me as the roots are of God's trees,
As the soil of Mother Earth,
Make mine heart so clean as God's ray of sunshine
Across so beautiful a horizon.
Herewith am I, O'Lady, uncleen and unfit as to visualize
Thy pure and unequalled Virgin
Grace
That might I degrade uplifting humanity.
O'Lady, might I becometh so pure
as Thou?
Yes? Yes!!! Like a drop to the ocean,
A rock to the mountain, and unworthy am I, O'Lady;
"Unworthy?" Thou might ask?
"Didst not the Prodigal Son returneth with wisdom
He so obtaineth by mountainous obstacles?"
"Didst not he seeketh in vain that which he didst already possess?"
"Dost not paternal and maternal instinctive love
Contribute to Thee, obedience, truth, and sacrifice and Honor?"
"Canst thou spread happiness upon others less thou waste
Some on Thee?"
O'Lady, make mine heart strong that I might Smite mine enemies with instan-taneous success.
Make mine strength as the wind
over the stormy sea,
As the sun over a torrid desert,
so, O'Lady, might peace,
And good will, and love and honor prevail amongst men,
And God-gifted Democratic leadership so designated our Country
That we becometh victorious in all our future battles, Despite our countless number of enemies, from within and without,
I beg of Thee, O'Lady.
AMEN.

In the following columns we have attempted to group various types of Benning verse. There has been no thought of analyzing this verse either from the standpoint of mechanics or that of literary value. As stated above; it merely indicates what our soldiers here are thinking. Their thoughts may be simple and lacking in depth, their meter may be bad, yet there is the effort for self-expression, and moreover are not the simple things of life those which are closest to our hearts; do they not deal with the things we consider of greatest interest to us, past, present, and future?

DEAR MOTHER
Corp. Paul F. Cunningham,
5th Signal Service Co.

I went walking tonight, I was lonely,
I was thinking of home and you,
And wondering just what you were doing,
And if you might be lonely, too.

The moon came out and whispered,
That there should be joy in my heart,
For though many miles are between us,
We are never really apart.

It came to me then as he nodded,
What he was trying so hard to say,
Was that he'd keep friendly watch over you,
At the close of every day.

Each night now as I look up,
To greet my friend the moon,
I am happy to know he is taking my place,
Till I come home very soon.

A SOLDIER'S PRAYER
Jack Basile
Co. M 1st Para. Trn. Reg.

Oh give me that home
Just a year ago today;
Of give me the home
Where freedom I'll find,
The home of the U. S. A.
Oh give me that home
Where I long to be,
Where I'll always feel at ease;
The home I love,
Is what I'm thinking of,
With the garden and towering
trees.
Oh give me my home
With the long white fence,
And the winding path in view;
And the hum of the bees,
The caressing breeze,
And neighbors who say, How Do.
(not heil Hitler)
Of give me my home
With the budding rose
Blending with grass so green;
And the tangling vines creeping up the blinds
Of the prettiest home I've seen.
Ah yes! to me it's a memory,
I can paint it all in mind,
But when I return to the home I love
All that beauty again I will find.
Oh give me my home,
A typical home;
A home where Democracy grew.
An American Home
The only home
The land of the red, white and blue.

MY WAR AIM
Cand. Roger E. Groth,
18th Company, OCS 137

I've heard of many war aims,
And things we're fighting for,
"World Peace"—"Security"— are claims,
And there are dozens more.
But every thinking warrior man
Is looking forward to the day,
When honorably, each soldier can
Line up for his last pay.

I'm fighting for the chance to live
My life in my own chosen way,
To work, to eat, to talk, to give,
Without first asking if I may.
I'm fighting for the chance to learn Greater knowledge, sense, and above
All, a much more rapid return
To home, and all the things I love.

AMERICA SPEAKS
Pvt. Emery V. O'Daniel
Hq. Co., 3rd Bn. 507th Para. Inf.

I am the land made by Americans,
A land of noble birth;
I am men's homes, hopes, safety,
And God-given earth.

On my bosom people of all walks of life tread,
To pass into the Future, glorying in the life they have lead.

I have helped in the cause of freedom,
In years that have gone by,
I have sent my sons across the seas
To conquer or to die.

My ships have sailed the ocean
For the sake of home and love,
And for me their mother country
They give thanks to God above.

Another crisis looms ahead
Caused by greed and strife;
And many Americans shall heed
the call
To lay down their life.

May God in Heaven hear our call
And end this useless war;
So love, life, and Democracy
Shall be ours forever more.

I thank God for everyone
Remember God, America,

WHAT IS LOVE?

LOVE is a funny thing, I say.
It'll make you sleep the live long day,
And stay awake the whole night
through,
With thoughts of one you love
so true.

LOVE is blind, it cannot see,
It is also brutal to you and me.
That's when you're taken from my side,
To become another's blushing bride.

LOVE is lasting and sometimes real,
'Twas tried for years, and did not fail.
Through toil and tears and years
apart,
When he returned, full were their hearts.

LOVE is sweet, now can't you see Them under the moon and the lone pine tree.
The moon laughs aloud as it
climbs so high,
As they laugh and love; so timid and shy.

LOVE is "Puppy" in the hearts of youth.
They think it's real, but it isn't truth.
Tonight they're in love; tomorrow
they hate.
Of this kinda stuff, they soon get a "bait."

LOVE is two-sided, as we often
see,
He's in love with her; she's not with he.
This kinda love I know when I meet,
For twice it's knocked me off my feet.

LOVE is aged and different too.
They love not today as they used to do.
Forty years ago, she'd only hold his hand.
When she loves today, "T. B."
for the man.

LOVE is challenging to you and me.
Competition a-plenty among the 'He's."
One sets his head to love her best.
To woo and wine her from the rest.

And when he wins her little hand,
Before the Parson they soon will stand.
Out of this thing called LOVE, I wouldn't be,
For it's the making of you and me.

SAGA OF THE MILITARY POLICE
By F. M. Schilling

This is the story of Sammy P.
Kirk
Who hated all exercise, trouble, and work
He was physic'lly fit (like a model T fliver),
Took Vitamin Pills for his heart
He looked like a ghost, and a sick
one at that,
For between bones and skin was no meat . . . and no fat
But our Sammy P. Kirk got his draft card one day . . . with its "Greetings," my friend, you are hereby 1-A.

He was tested and questioned . . .
was inducted, too:
Then he was sent to Fort Ben with the rest of the crew.
There he spent just one week . . .
'Till the Sergeant took pity in Sammy's sad plight,
And the Sergeant told Sammy,
the same he told me,
"Sam's not fit for a soldier, but he could be M. P."
So they spoke to the Captain and he thought it best That Sammy be given the new M. P. test.

That night they gave Sammy two hours of sleep,
Then they gave him a post where the snow was so deep—
Where the wind was so cold that the kid nearly froze.
(As he walked you could see just his cap and his nose.)
But Sammy trudged onward, for eight hours straight
Till the corp'l arrived . . .
with relief a bit late.

Well, when Sammy got in he was too late for chow;
If he bothered the cooks, he would just start a row;
So his turned in the pistol, and turned in the clip
When the Desk Sergeant shouted, "We've been given the slip.
To arms all you yardbirds, a prisoner's loose
And if he is not caught we'll all get the noose."
So they hunted and searched . . .
yes, for hours and hours,
And they looked under bushes, trees, shrubs, even flowers
Yes, the story they say, at the Guardhouse they tell
The prisoner missing was found in his cell.

So Sam laid on his bunk, and he just closed his eyes
When the Corporal whispered,
"Hey, Sammy, SURPRISE
You have done your job well, so here is the booty
You've been picked as best man for the traffic duty".
So Sammy, our hero, had to wave traffic on Until it just seemed as if both arms were gone.
Next morning (about seven) they found Sam in a heap;
When he came to—he said not a word nor a peep.
And he never admitted, when thawed out next day
That his tongue was so numb not a word he could say.

So . . . they made Sam a Sergeant for being a hero
In weather that was . . . well
'twas far below zero
And the moral is this, that you, too, can be
THE PRIDE OF THE FORT
AND A SCREWY M. P.

TO THE GIRL BACK HOME

Now your man is in the army,
And you'd better keep in mind
That I'll stand for no "two-timing"
Or bad acts of any kind.
Tell those guys there's no trespass
On this soldier's "private" rights;
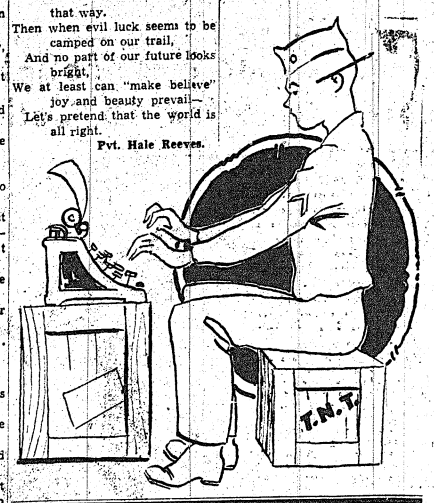
Let there be no classy parties
And no staying out at nights.

Tell those guys who are civilians
That they haven't got a chance,
And present a cool resistance
To each single, bold advance.
Let them know the line is busy;
It can't do a bit of harm,
Since your heart is in the keeping
Of a man in uniform.

If you ever are downhearted
And you can't help feeling blue.
You can still write me a letter,
For I might be lonely, too;
But don't seek solace elsewhere.
When your mind is in a whirl
Let me think that you are always
Just a perfect "soldier's girl."

Pvt. Hale Reeves.



LET'S PRETEND

Let's pretend that we're happy as onward we go,
That perfect contentment is ours;
Let's pretend life is lovely (though well we all know
That thorns are hidden by flowers).

Let's pretend there's a spirit of peace in the land,
That nations by wars are not torn;
Let's pretend that there's gladness on every hand,
Let's pretend we've no reason to mourn.

Let us show all our foes that we can't be kept down
No matter what people may say;
Let us give them a smile (though we'd much rather frown),
And pretend this we feel just that way.
Then when evil luck seems to be camped on our trail,
And no part of our future looks bright,
We at least can "make believe"
joy and beauty prevail—
Let's pretend that the world is all right.

Pvt. Hale Reeves.

Army Bugler Has Tough Time; Must Memorize 45 Calls

Remember that old song from World War days — "Some Day I'll Murder the Bugler?"

Well, pause for a second or two and consider the number of regulation bugle or trumpet calls that the poor bugler must carry around in his head. Most persons, soldiers included, think that the chief function of the bugler is a sort of human alarm clock who wakes up the armed forces with his hated reveille call only too early every morning.

But, believe it or not, there are about 45 regulation calls that govern the daily life of the average military reservation, and besides that, the bugle can be — and even today, frequently is — used to give all the commands for marching and drilling.

This is especially true in cavalry units where the voice of the officers cannot possibly be heard.

Use of a trumpet or some sort of brass instrument for sounding commands for the armed forces dates back to earliest times. The Egyptians and Abyssinians and other early civilizations used the trumpet to summon the martial forces and to direct them in the clash of battle.

CALLS RECORDED

Today many of the calls have been recorded and are played over loud speaker systems at the larger army posts. But while most soldiers today know only reveille, chow call, payday call and taps, the bugler must know all of them and the soldier on smaller posts learns to recognize them as they are sounded off.

"Those who think that the bugler is just a guy who wakes them up on the morning are sadly mistaken," Sgt. Grady W. Kirkland, chief regimental bugler for the 29th Infantry, said in commenting on his job. And he ought to know for he has been an army bugler for nine years, and chief bugler, or trumpeter, for the 29th for the past three years. He trains the drum and bugle corps of the regiment, having about 40 men under him, including students. The drum and bugle corps has to practice several hours each day, in addition to appearing for various duties during the day.

Horning In On Morpheus

Here's that nasty man again, the Army bugler. Just when we get to the best part of an early morning snooze, along comes that big bag of wind!

VARIOUS GROUPS

"The various calls may be divided into several groups," he explained. "There are, for instance, 10 warning calls, three alarm calls, a number of service calls and besides those, the calls for drilling. Then, too, we must know many marches to play for reviews and other occasions. Being a bugler is plenty hard work, and don't ever make any mistake about that."

The warning calls include "First Call," which is a warning to prepare for reveille, retreat, parade or review. It also is used as a signal for the band or the field music to assemble. Then there are "Mess Call," "Guard Mounting," "Drill Call," "Church Call," all of which are self-explanatory.

But did you know that there is actually a "Boat Call" in use in the Army? Well, there is, and it's used as a signal to announce that a boat will either dock at or depart from the Post.

Then there is a "Full Dress" call indicating that full dress uniform is to be worn at the following formation. And there's an "Overcoat Call," as well. Then there's a "Stable Call" to warn all troops with stable duties to perform, to proceed to the stables. There is also a "Fatigue" call that warns men with fatigue duties to perform to report to the designated places.

ALARM CALLS

The "Alarm" calls include "Fire Call," "To Arms" and "To Horse." Two formation calls are "Assembly" and the "Adjutant's Call," signifying that the adjutant is about to form guard, or battalion, or the entire regiment.

Reveille and retreat are "Service" calls. Others in this category include "Call to Quarters," summoning in all the men not authorized to be absent for the night; "Sick Call;" "Mail Call;" "Tattoo," which is the signal for all lights in squad rooms to be put out within 15 minutes; and "Taps." "Taps" also is played as the last honors at funerals for military or naval men. Another very little known regulation governing playing of "Taps" is that it must be sounded whenever a war vessel passes Washington's Grave at Mt. Vernon between sunrise and sunset.

Also included in this group is "Recall," the signal for certain duties to cease; "Officers' Call;" "Captains' Call;" "First Sergeants' Call;" "School Call;" "Boots and Saddles;" "General Call," which is issued to signal striking of tents and loading of vehicles preparatory to marching; "Issue Call," indicating that supplies are ready for distribution; "Water Call," to signal all mounted men to lead horses to water; "Inspection" and "Payday March."

NAVY HAS CALLS TOO

Many of the same calls are used by the Navy but designate different functions from those used in the Army. Besides, the Navy has many special calls of its own for various activities aboard ship.

The call "To the Color" is given as a salute to the Colors or to the President or Vice President of the United States, as well as for an ex-President.

Bugles also may be used for sounding codes, with a short note on C to denote a dot and a long note to denote a dash, Sgt. Kirkland explained.

On the field, bugle calls are used for the various drill movements, from a section right or left to column movements, flank and oblique movements, right or left into line, deploy as skirmishers, commence or cease firing, rally by company, fix bayonets and others. There are several special cavalry or artillery calls such as prepare to mount, prepare to dismount, cannoneers prepare to mount, gallop, charge, and so on.

Each company or each battery or troop generally has at least one bugler, while many have two regular buglar buglers as well as a student. There are regulations describing color of guidons to be used by the bugle units of various companies and the guidons are often used to give signals for troop movements, he explained.

117th Hurler Proves That They Do Come Back

There is an exception of that old adage, "They never come back" in the 117th Infantry. This exception is Sgt. James L. "Dinkie" Vaughan, star softball hurler for Co. K.

Several years ago, while pitching the Columbia (S. C.) Essos to the City League championship, Vaughan developed a sore arm. Due to a scarcity of pitchers, he had to continue despite this ailment. This went on for three weeks in which he pitched and won 13 games. The arm did not respond to treatment and was advised to give up soft ball.

Not content to watch his team continue from the sidelines, Vaughan went to the outfield where his hitting would be to a good advantage. In this position, he won the batting crown for two years in a row, and led the league in runs scored. His team went on to win the city championship three years and represented South Carolina in the national softball tournament in Chicago, winning one and losing one.

Then came the Army, and Vaughan wanted to continue his ball playing. Unable to find sufficient pitchers, "Dinkie" went again to the mound, but soreness returned. Changing his style to the "windmill" type of hurling, he appears to have found himself again. Upon going to Radio School here on the post for three months, he pitched and batted for his company team to the regimental championship, and upon being transferred to the "Break Through" regiment, he has continued his winning streak. To date, he has won two out of three games, one being a perfect no-hit, no-run game, and the other victory was a one-hit shut out.

"And the Star Spangled Banner IN TRIUMPH SHALL WAVE O'er the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave"

O say can you see by the dawn's early light, what so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming. Whose broad stripes and bright stars, thro' the perilous fight, O'er the ramparts we watched were so gallantly streaming, and the rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air, gave proof thro' the night that our flag was still there.

Read those words again and again. You've sung them a thousand times—perhaps too automatically, unthinkingly. You learned them first when you were a small child, raising a thin voice in school. You learned them by heart. But is their meaning alive in your heart today? The land of the free and the home of the brave! That is how the young patriot, Francis Scott Key described these United States. And one hundred and twenty eight years later we fight again to keep it free. Today it is still the home of brave young millions of men who have reached around the world in the globe-circling war which can only end in making every man's land a free land! But the fight will be long, and the sacrifice will be great. Lives will be given, homes broken, and loved ones torn from each other's arms. For this is a war of the people, just as ours is a flag of the people—its stripes an ever-flying banner of glory: its stars an ever-bright beacon of liberty. On this anniversary of Fort Benning, what could be more fitting than that every American rededicate himself to the cause both the words and the flag bespeak! How better can we rededicate ourselves than by reaffirming—each and every one—the pledge to . . . buy War Bonds.

MONTGOMERY WARD

Civil Relief Act Provisions Are Outlined For Service Men

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act was enacted to give members of the armed forces a degree of mental repose through intervention of the courts to the end that their civil rights and remedies shall not be imperiled as a consequence of their being in the military service. It suspends the enforcement of civil liability against members of the armed forces in order to permit such persons to devote their entire energy to the defense needs of the nation. Consequently, an action or proceeding in which a person in military service is involved, either as a plaintiff or defendant, may be suspended or stayed, in the discretion of the court, during the period of such service or within 60 days thereafter, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the soldier (sailor or marine) to prosecure the action is not materially affected by reason of his military service. Although the court must avoid injury to one who is devoting himself to the service of his country, this does not imply that the Act is applicable to every situation without limitation merely because such person is a member of the armed forces.

JUSTICE ITS PURPOSE

The Act is not to be employed as a vehicle of oppression or abuse; its invocation is not to be permitted for any needless or unwarranted purpose. It is to be administered as an instrument to accomplish substantial justice. The criterion then as to whether an action or proceeding is to be stayed or postponed under the Act is dependent upon two factors.

(2) That such military service has materially affected the abilty to comply. As an illustration let us consider the case of "The Sylph." In that case, "A" purchased the boat, "The Sylph" on a conditional sales contract. "A" later was inducted. Thereafter, while "A" was in New York on leave, the seller brought an action against "A" to regain the boat. "A" did not appear to defend the action, permitting a default judgment to be taken against him. Later, in an attempt to prevent a sale of the boat by the plaintiff pursuant to the judgment, "A" pleaded the Act. His plea was denied because although he was in the military service, the fact of his service did not materially effect his ability to defend the action because he could have prepared a defense while he was in New York.

DEFAULT JUDGMENTS

Under the Act, a default judgment cannot be entered unless the plaintiff files an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service or that he does not know whether or not the defendant is in the service. If the plaintiff fails to file such affidavit, the judgment can only be entered by a court order directing such entry. In this latter case, unless the court is satisfied that the defendant is not in military service, it may require as a condition of entering judgment that the plaintiff file a bond to indemnify the defendant against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of the judgment, should the latter be thereafter set aside.

The Act provides a further safe-guard by making it a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment, fine or both if the plaintiff knowingly makes a false affidavit. Should judgment be entered against one in the military service during the period of his service or within 30 days thereafter by reason of his failure to appear in the action due to his being in the service, and it appears that he would have had a meritorious defense, he may have the judgment opened within 90 days after he leaves the service.

Further provisions of the Act provide that:

OTHER PROVISIONS

1. The wife, children or other dependents of a person in the military service shall not be evicted or dispossessed from their home or apartment during the period of military service if the monthly rent does not exceed eighty dollars, except with the consent of the court. If an application to procure the courts consent is made, the court may stay the proceedings for not longer than three months or it may make such order as may be just, unless in its opinion the ability of the tenant is not materially affected by reason of such military service. Any person who takes part in an eviction in violation of the Act is guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by fine, imprisonment or both.

2. In action to regain possession of a motor vehicle or tractor or accessories for same purchased under a conditional sales contract, the court may not stay the proceeding unless it finds that fifty percent of the purchase price has been paid. Should the court fail to find the latter situation, although it cannot stay the proceeding it may require the plaintiff to file a bond before the judgment is entered, conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if the latter is in the military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of the judgment, should the judgment later be set aside in whole or in part.

REAL ESTATE TAXES

3. Where taxes on real estate owned by one in the military service fall due during the period of his service, such person may file with the collector of taxes an affidavit stating that by reason of his military service he is unable to pay such taxes. In such case, the property cannot be sold because of tax delinquencies except with the permission of the court, which may thereupon stay such proceeding or sale for a period not extending beyond six months after the termination of the period of military service of the defendant. However, should the property be sold, it may be redeemed by the defendant at any time within six months after the termination of military service.

4. Where the ability of a person in the military service to pay his income taxes due either prior to or during his period of military service is materially effected by reason of his service, the collection of such income taxes shall be deferred for a period extending not more than six months after the termination of his service, without imposition of penalty.

LIFE INSURANCE

5. No life insurance policy shall lapse or be forfeited for the nonpayment of premium during the period of military service or during one year after the expiration of such period if each of the following conditions exist:

a. The policy must have been made and a premium paid thereon before the passage of the act.

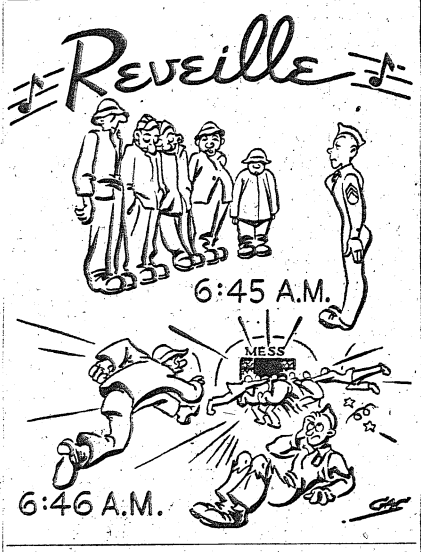
b. The face value of the policy must not exceed $5000.00.

c. Application for the benefits of this provision must be made to the Veterans Administration on a prescribed form.

The act is not applied to the following cases:

a. Where the policy has lapsed for the non-payment of premium before the commencement of military service.

b. Where premiums on a policy are due and unpaid for a period of more than one year at the time when application for the benefit of this section of the Act is made to the Veterans Administration.



c. Where there is outstanding on a policy, a policy loan or other indebtedness equal to or greater than fifty per cent of the cash surrender value of the policy.

6. A certificate signed by the Adjutant General of the Army as to persons in the army is prima facie evidence that a person named therein has not, or is, or has been in the military service. It is the duty of the foregoing officer to furnish such certificate on application.

Everhardy Is His Name, Jap!

Typifying the rugged American soldier that Uncle Sam is sending to the battlefront is Pvt. Jack Everhardy, formerly of Los Angeles, Calif., now with the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, stationed at Fort Benning. Besides being a qualified jumper, Everhardy is fast becoming expert in the use of basic infantry weapons, such as the Thompson sub-machine gun shown in his hands. Parachutists are highly trained specialists, skilled in the art of destruction and equal to any emergency.

Delfini Gets Gold Leaves

Captain Manlio T. Delfini, popular Commande of Headquarters Company in the Third Student Training Regiment in the Infantry School here at Fort Benning has recently been appointed to the rank of Major.

Formerly an Engineer and draftsman with the Combustion Engineering Company, Inc., of New York, Major Delfini resided at 2364 Lorillard Place, Bronx, N. Y., before being called to active service in November of 1940.

At that time he came to Fort Benning for three months of basic work and then was assigned to Camp Roberts, Calif. In February of 1942 he returned to Fort Benning and joined the First Student Training Regiment. When the Third Student Training Regiment was activated in March he took over his present duties with that organization.

Major Delfini graduated from City College of New York in 1930 and was on C.C.C. duty from 1933 to 1935 in California, Idaho, Washington and Ft. Dix in New York.

Three Non-Coms Advanced In Grade

The promotions of three non-commissioned officers is announced by Headquarters Company, First Student Training Regiment. Staff Sergeant Harold M. Smith is promoted to 1st Sergent; Cpy. Felix Perez and Pfc. Jesse L. Babineaux are promoted to staff sergeants.

Technician Gr. IV James Liaskas has left for Ordnance Officer Candidate School at Aberdeen, Md.

Lieutenant Freeman H. Bokenkamp of Headquarters Company will soon attend the Parachute School at Fort Benning.

Avoid moving around too freely in areas where you suspect the presence of booby traps or personnel mines.

Before entering a building try to find a window or some opening through which you can get the 'lay of the land' for possible traps.

Never use a knife to cut a cord or wire. Use a scissors or a wire cutter so that no pull will be exerted that would detonate the trap.

Fort's Soldier-Musicians Play Important Role In Symphony

One-Minute Interviews Reveal How They Embarked On Careers

Soldier-musicians from Ft. Benning are playing an important part in the Columbus Symphony Orchestra which presented the first of a series of fall concerts last month at the USO Auditorium, 100 Ninth street.

Pfc. Harold Scheckman is conductor of the orchestra and 25 soldiers from various organizations at Ft. Benning are included in the membership—making the orchestra unique in the entire country for that reason.

Here are some one-minute interviews with a few of the soldier-musicians, prepared by Corp. Robert Sugarman for the 29th Infantry and by Pvt. Joseph J. Roman, for the 11th Armored Regiment, to give an idea of the background of some of these men.

We lead off with our Tuba, and the artist who is wrapped inside of it—ANTHONY BATTUELLO, Bassist from New York City, called "The Bat" by his confreres. "Bat" comes from a long line of musicians and naturally followed in their footsteps. While still in grammar school, he studied trumpet. After three years of putting so much power into his little horn that it sounded like six men playing instead of one, he changed to the Tuba and at once his talents became recognized. He played with the National Symphony Orchestra of New York for three years and with various military bands. With the advent of conscription, he volunteered with the old "Fighting 69th" and from there came to the 29th Infantry Band.

SGT. DELOS V. ANDEUS, 1st Horn, called "Curley" by the boys because of the wonderful crop of hair he hasn't got, began playing French Horn at the age of eleven with the Boys' Community Band of Elmira, New York. After a varied career as a bandsman he joined the army in 1934 and while an enlisted man had the honor to be elected to play with the Julliard Symphony Orchestra. Since then he has played with the 16th and 18th Infantry Bands and now with our own 29th Infantry Band.

CPL. ROBERT SUGARMAN, Percussionist, better known as the "Duke" . . . In his own words, "My parents decided that at the age of six their little darling was to become a violinist. I took five lessons; on the sixth I hit the professor on his bald pate with the fiddle and liked the sound of wood on skin so well that I made up my mind then and there to become a drummer. Since then my drums and I have played throughout the United States and Europe and South America, traveling 365,000 miles by sea and nearly as much by land and air. In 1940 my option was taken up by the army and now it's divided between the 29th Infantry Band and the Columbus Symphony."

CPL. WILLIAM HENRY SPROAT, 1st Trombone, or "Pine Top" alias the "Deacon", was a child virtuoso of the piano at the age of 4. When he was 8 he toured the country with Skillmans Bros. Minstrel Show performing as a banjoist and vocalist. At the age of 12 his switch to the trombone was his Moment in History, for in later years it made him internationally famous amongst the musicians of the world. He was one of the few younger musicians in New Jersey to be selected to play concerts with the All-Star Band under the direction of Dr. Edmond Franko Goldman. The "Deacon" also has a very fine baritone voice. He studied with a member of the "Westminster Choir," and has sung with a number of well known choral groups. "Pine Top's" one ambition in life is to be a General.

CPL. JOSEPH J. SULLIVAN, Bb Tenor Sax, will answer quick-er if you call him "Yussel" than if you use his real name. Studied music with Professor H. Rehman of New York University who is now director of Music for the Nassau-Suffolk Counties, New York Public Schools. Joe, at the age of 13, won the New York Music Association Gold Medal and appeared as soloist in Carnegie Hall. He also played with the Le-Roy Little Symphonie, The Aeonian Community Chorus & Orchestra and the Long Island Opera Guild. About the time that Joe was called to duty he was slated to go with Enric Madriguera's Orchestra.

PFC. THOMAS LEONARD, 1st Trumpet, the "Meyer Davis" of the 29th Infantry Band, started on trumpet at the age of 15. One-one-one-two-three-four can be heard almost nightly in the various U. S. O. halls around town in Tom's husky baritone as he starts the music flowing for the dance. Amongst his various duties, T. L. is leader of one of the 29th Infantry Dance Orchestra. Back in civilian life he played with the Haydn Symphony of Newark, New Jersey, and toured the U. S. with such famous orchestra leaders as Emil Petti, Smith Ballew and William Scotti. Tom is one of the few left handed artists in the world and when he is not playing trumpet you can always find him with brush in hand in front of a canvas putting down his impressions of life around him for the sake of posterity.

PFC. VERNON "SPEEDY" GLICKEMAN, 2nd Horn . . . You can rest assured that everybody has fallen out for the formation when Speedy shows up. Since he's been in the army he has always managed to be the last man to get into line. But as he puts it, "I get there and that's all that matters." Vernon's musical ability is inherited as all the members of his family are musicians, his father being a famous conductor and arranger of a decade ago. Speedy's first instrument was piano but on entering high school he took up trumpet and played with the "Y" Symphony of Newark, New Jersey. When he was drafted he entered the 29th Band and took up French Horn which he mastered in no time at all . . . Hurry up, Vernon.

PFC. JOHN LUCAS, 2nd Violinist, whose cognomen is "Big John," studied violin under a well known Parisian teacher, and saxophone and clarinet with a New York music professor. He has played with various symphonies in civilian life. Big John has one complaint to register with the public; he says that everybody picks on him because he is such a little fellow. He only stands 6 feet 1 inch, and tips the scales at a little over 210 pounds.

PFC. THOMAS LYTEL, 2nd Trombone, has the honor of being known as the first "Father Cobb" in the 29th Band. He became interested in the trombone at the age of 16. Upon entering college he was selected to play with the Mississippi All-State Band. Prior to entering the army, Tom won honors in every Mississippi State Band contest he entered.

SGT. SAVERIO T. PRUNESTI, 1st Flutist, for some reason or another is called Sal and sometimes Prunes by his friends . . . Studied with Professor Anschuw of the Conservatory of Music in Naples, Italy. Sal claims that there are two things in his life besides wine, women and song; and those are his flute and a good basket ball game. Prunes was a well known basketball star back in his home town of New Rochelle, New York.

PFC. WALTER (CHERUB) F. SMITH, Eb Baritone Sax, wants it known that he hails from Ohio, where at the age of 12 he became interested in music, particularly the type dispensed by reed instruments. At present he capably handles all of the modern reed instruments. Before he was drafted, Cherub played every passable type of music from the Symphonic to Dance work.

SGT. E. MARTINETTI, flutist, whom we might in truth label chief cook and bottlewasher, for he is a distinguished chef as well as musician, wants it known he was born in Italy and has studied music from a tender age. He has travelled all over the world several times with various well-known opera companies, orchestras and music shows. He first came to the United States when he was about 20 and has been in the army for the past ten years, spending quite a while in the Hawaiian Islands where he played with the Honolulu Symphony. He came to Fort Benning with the 11th Armored Regiment Band from California where he was actively interested in several Monterrey musical organizations.

SGT. JOSEPH SORCI, clarinetist, a native of San Jose, California, began the study of clarinet and saxaphone about twelve years ago, and has played professionally with well-known concert ensembles, dance orchestras and radio orchestras. His main interests now are the 11th Armored Regiment Band and the Columbus Symphony.

PVT. FRANK PROVENZANO, clarinetist, first saw the light of day in Glascow, New York. Besides being proficient with his chosen instrument, he has also appeared as a singer with various dance orchestras.

CPL. SAVERIO LEMEDICO, clarinetist, hails from Madison, Connecticut, and was educated abroad. He has played with European bands in many parts of the Old World. After studying foreign languages he has devoted his talents to the theatrical arts. He was also announcer and commentator on a Los Angeles radio station at the time Uncle Sam called, from which time he has been a member of the 11th Armored Band.

PVT. JOSEPH D. ROMANO, violinist, and your "Thumbnail Sketcher", was born in Italy and early began to study the violin. His tutors were prominent teachers, and when he came to America he later studied at the Julliard Institute in New York. Playing experience has been with string quartets, concern ensembles, symphony orchestras and radio orchestras. He recently appeared on the C.B.S. "Cheers from the Camps" program from Fort Benning on September 1. Before heeding the army call, he was playing professionally with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

CPL. DON E. WRIGHT, oboist, is from Aberdeen, South Dakota, and began his musical education with the study of violin. Later he took up the oboe and now it is his favorite instrument. His talents are at the disposal of the 11th Armored Band and the Columbus Symphony.

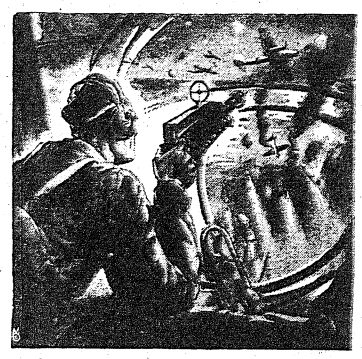
PVT. JOE SCHEITZ, violinist, comes to the 124th Infantry Band from Bogota, N. J. He's still a young fellow, having not long ago finished high school where he was concert master and soloist with his school orchestra. Has been in the army about three months.

PVT. EARL HEISNER, violinist, from Pontiac, Illinois, and now with the Reconnaissance Company, 11th Armored Regiment, says he is still too young to have done much in a musical way besides study with a graduate of the Cincinnati Conservatory and play in small ensembles and orchestras. He appears to be enjoying his work with the Columbus Symphony.

SGT. D. G. TADDEI, violinist, began his study in 1918 with Max G. Cimbollek which he continued for seven years. In 1926 he went abroad to Bologna, Italy, for further instruction by Professor Fedeirco Barera of the Bologna Conservatory and leader of the Bologna String Quartet. Professor Barera also made quite a name for himself in the United States some years ago as a soloist. Later Mr. Taddei went to Paris and studied under Professor Charles Dorson, member of the examining board of the Paris Conservatory, and well-known through Northern Europe as a soloist and composer. When Mr. Taddei returned to the States he started teaching in his home state of Maine, in the meanwhile doing solo, quartet and ensemble work. It was there that Uncle Sam found him in June of 1941, and he can now be found working with the 24th General Hospital Unit at Fort Benning and spending part of his spare time with the Columbus Symphony, playing viola.

Civilian Teams Are Organized For Bond Drive

Civilian personnel at post headquarters, under the supervision of Lt. John J. A. Lyons, assistant adjutant, have been organized into teams of Minutes Men to foster increased pay reservations for the purchase of war bonds.



Mrs. Myrtle Joines has been appointed group supervisor, with Miss Estelle Patrick, Mrs. Mary Marley, Miss Peggy Moore, and Mrs. Rosanne O'Kelley, as Minute Men in charge of teams of 11.

When the group gets into full swing, it is hoped that the objective of the Secretary of War, 10 per cent pay reservation from 90 per cent of civilians, will not only be equaled, but bettered.

The program is on a purely voluntary basis; however, it is the desire that as many of the civilian employees of the War Department, as possible avail themselves of the facilities of this monthly pay reservation plan.

If pay reservations can whip the Nazis and Japs, the girls at post headquarters are going to get them!

GOD GRANTS LIBERTY ONLY TO THOSE WHO LOVE IT AND ARE ALWAYS READY TO GUARD AND DEFEND IT . .

Lack of College Degree Is No Officer Candidate Drawback

Army Survey Shows Only 70 Per Cent Have College Sheepskins

If you're undecided whether the Army is the place to get ahead, stop for a minute and realize that six of every 100 officer candidates you pass on the post proper or in the Harmony Church area are not high school graduates and that 24 out of that 100 completed high school but had no college education.

These are percentages compiled by the War Department and announced this week in a survey of the present officer candidate program of the Army.

The survey was of special interest at Fort Benning because one of the 18 officer candidate schools operated by the Army—the great Infantry School—is located at Fort Benning.

The War Department disclosed that before the end of October the various officer candidate schools will have their highest attendance since their inception. Included in the 18 schools are 70 widely-distributed branches. In any of these schools, only a man serving in the ranks can be appointed.

ONE-THIRD COLLEGE MEN

A survey of more than 20,000 officer candidates disclosed that 34.45 per cent are college graduates; 34.72 per cent had some college training; 24.85 per cent were high school graduates, and 6.48 per cent were not high school graduates.

The War Department added that there are no inflexible rules in the Army as to the educational background required for appointment of officer candidate schools. Obviously, the technical branches require more academic training than the non-technical ones. However, even in the technical branches, sound practical experience and self-education are considered as valid as college diplomas.

"Men who are outstanding in their mental alertness and capacity for hard work have ample opportunities to win commissions under the officer candidate system. A man who is regarded as having the quality of leadership does not lose out through lack of academic training; he is asked to make an alternate choice as well as a first choice among the schools."

Here are the 18 different schools which men serving in the ranks are eligible to attend. The Army says the schools in which the greatest number of openings now exist are Engineer, Anti-aircraft Artillery, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, and Tank Destroyer.

The complete list:

Adjutant General's School, Anti-aircraft Artillery, Armored Force, Army Administration, Army Air Forces (Administrative, Statistical, Physical Training), Cavalry, Chemical Warfare Service, Coast Artillery, Engineer, Field Artillery, Finance,* Infantry, Medical Administrative, Military Police, Ordnance, Quartermaster, Signal, Tank Destroyer.

*At Fort Benning.

UP FROM RANKS

The Army's policy is to find its officer material in the ranks and develop it through the officer candidate schools. Commanders have been instructed, says the War Department, to study their men, to seek out those who are potential officer candidates, to give them every opportunity for development in leadership and to encourage qualified men to apply for the schools. The fact that a man is difficult to replace in the assignment he is filling will not be allowed to stand in the way of his appointment to an officer candidate school.

Selected applicants belonging to units about to go overseas will not accompany their units, but will be sent to the schools, added the War Department. Those whose applications have been approved, but who have not yet been assigned to schools may also, at the discretion of their commanders, be left behind.

As a reward for outstanding leadership and initiative shown during maneuvers or unusual conditions, a general officer may appoint an enlisted man to a school without requiring him to appear before the examining board. Appointments of this nature are limited to ten per cent of the quota allotted to the command for the school in question.

NO OUTRANKING

No man at an officer candidate school is outranked by a fellow. Insignia of grade and rating are removed from their clothing during the school term.

An applicant for an officer candidate school must be a citizen of the United Staets, of the Philippine Islands, or of another co-belligerent or friendly country. He must have reached his 18th birthday and not have passed his 46th birthday on the date of completion of the course for which he has been selected—except in the case of the Army Administration School, where men up to 50 are eligible. Volunteer officer candidates and men in combat branches who are under 35 years of age are not accepted for the Army Administration Officer Candidate School.

A Colored Soldier's Prayer

By PFC. SIMON PETER

Dear God,
I'm asking you tonight
To think of me each day;
I'd like to feel that as I fight
You're with me all the way.
The call to arms I followed
Because I thought it was right;
The cause itself seems hallowed
In all my people's sight.
Perhaps I'm just a fool
To risk my life again;
Maybe I'm just a tool
For bigger, craftier men.
Am I just cannon fodder?
Some people say 'tis so.
They say—"Why do you bother?
Your glory will be woe."
But I've got a strong conviction
That this is our fight,
And contrary to some fiction—
Two wrongs don't make a right.
Freedom will never be ours
If we stand idly by.
This is no time to cower:
It's a case of do or die.
And when this war is over
For myself I'll ask no glory
But Great God! I pray with fervor
That we'll have a different story.
That my people then may stand
To face the rising sun
In one great, united band
And know a new day's begun.
That's why I fight, Dear God;
I know that I'm not wrong:
And before I rest beneath the sod
May we all sing freedom's song.
AMEN.

HONEYMOON EXPRESS

"Honeymoon on a train" was the experience of Technical Sgt. Robert B. Berlin, headquarters, 80th Medical Battalion, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, and Mrs. Berlin, the former Miss Sarah Miller, Washington, D. C.

On a three-day pass, Sergeant Berlin rode to Washington, got married, and returned to duty at the appointed time, of course, being accompanied on the return trip by the bride.

The sergeant and Mrs. Berlin are making their home in Columbus.

Benning's Hill Brothers

The four Hill Brothers, all members of Uncle Sam's Army, get together for the cameraman at The Infantry School. Three of them are members of the school command, while the fourth, formerly with the school, was a visitor here, now assigned to the 7th Armored Division. Left to right, they are: Technical Sergeant Clinton A. Hill of the school's Academic Department Headquarters; Staff Sergeant George W. Hill, lithographer in the school's Reproduction Plant; Staff Sergeant Lonnie F. Hill, mess sergeant of the 22nd Co., 1st STR.; and Technical Sergeant Marshall R. Hill, the visiting member of the family, who is a transport sergeant in the 7th Armored Division. (Infantry School Photo.)

Veteran Fighter at Fort Studies for Commission

Saw Action On Mexican Border, World War I

Typical of the American spirit prevailing today is that displayed by Officer Candidate Raymond C. Fisher, of the First Student Training Regiment, commanded by Col. Thomas R. Gibson.

Combat will be no new experience for Candidate Fisher. He started dodging bullets and bayonets before most of the officer candidates here started cutting their baby teeth. His baptism of fire even pre-dates World War No. 1, for he saw action along the Mexican border against the forces of Pancho Villa, notorious Mexican Revolutionist, before the United Sstates entered the first World War. In France he fought through six of the seven major engagements in which American troops participated, was wounded, gassed, and twice decorated. Now he is back for more.

VOLUNTEERS AFTER P. H.

The modest, 44-year-old officer candidate is not a professional soldier; he volunteered for the present conflict immediately after Pearl Harbor. For more than 22 years between wars he was a successful business man in civilian life. He well illustrates a large group of American citizen soldiers of the Army of the United States—ready to do his part and then some when his country needs him to fight—ready to resume his place in the country's business activities when peace reigns.

Candidate Fisher is not only ready, he is able to fight and work. Husky and active at 44, he performs the tasks of a soldier more efficiently than many men 15 years his junior. Erect, alert, and thoroughly military in bearing, he looks like a soldier and is one.

In civilian life Candidate Fisher was an assistant department head for Benrus-Schwartz Company watch manufacturers at Attleboro, Mass. He is married.

MEXICAN BORDER

Candidate Fisher joined the Massachusetts State National Guard when he was a junior in High School. When he was 18 years old he was serving on the Mexican border. After returning to his home at Attleboro he finished high school and was mustered into Co. I, 3rd Bn., 26th Div., and sent overseas immediately.

The young soldier fought at Vaux, Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, Verdun, Meuse-Argonne, and Aines-Marne. He was wounded by shrapnel in defense of the Toul Sector and was gassed with Phosgene gas in the Argonne. He received the Regimental Citation, known as the French Fourergere, and the Division Citation and Decoration. Back in the United States in 1919, he was mustered out of the army.

Candidate Fisher talks little of his army experiences and then only when questioned directly.

"I think our soldiers in this army are much better trained than they were in the last war," he said. "We had a good army then; this time we have a better one," he added.

SOCCER

A pick-up team of soccer players from Keesler Field, Miss., are engaged in a series of booting contests with a team of small, but skilled British sailors. The soldiers have managed to hold the English lads to three ties and one close victory in the four encounters to date.

Army-Navy Production Award pennants have been given to 20 industrial plants for outstanding performance of war work.

Japanese Writes First Yank Note To Hon. Tojo

First entry in the current "Nuts to the Axis" contest sponsored by YANK, The Army Weekly, came from Pvt. Freddie Shigaki, a Japanese-American in the United States Army.

Pvt. Shigaki addresses his message to Tojo without waste of words. Choosing the subject, "Doolittle Was Only the Beginning," he writes, "Doolittle was only the beginning on Tojo as he flew over Tokyo and said, 'So sorry, big mistake, excuse please'."

And he adds tersely, "So let's all do a little more with General Jimmie Doolittle!"

Pvt. Shigaki is stationed at Camp Grant, Illinois.

Many Negroes Inducted Here For The Army

Capt. Gardner States Processing Continues Seven Days A Week

Refuting a general misconception prevalent in this vicinity that few negroes are being inducted into the Army at the Recruiting and Induction Station at Fort Benning, Captain J. H. Gardner, commanding officer of the station, stated that several thousands of colored men have been sworn in here since June 1. The Benning Recruiting and Induction station, serving the states of Alabama and Georgia, inducts men seven days a week.

Every effort is made to process the men in a 24-hour period. Induction processing includes the giving of mental classification tests and physical examinations including X-ray and Wasserman tests and the completion of induction records.

If the candidates are accepted, their induction papers are completed and they are sworn into the Army of the United States. Those who desire immediate 14-day furloughs to enable them to arrange their personal affairs are given transportation home and back to the Reception Center. The others are sent directly to the Reception Center.

One of the important functions of the Induction Station is the screening of the men to separate the literate from the illiterate. Those making better than a score of 25 on the tests are considered literate and are sworn in. The Army is also taking ten per cent of induction selected from those illiterates making a score between 15 and 25. In order to determine which of the illiterates are to be taken into the Army, the classification officer and his aides conduct personal interviews. They base their rulings on the appearance, native intelligence and previous experience of the men interviewed. Those selected are sent to a compulsory opportunity school conducted in the Special Training Detachment, Colored, where they are taught reading, writing and authmetic as a part of their thirteen week's basic training.

Discussing the question of gonorrhea discovered among negro candidates for induction, Captain Gardner stated that those suffering with uncomplicated cases are accepted to the extent of about 4 per cent of induction. These are sent to the station hospital for treatment.

Under the guidance of S-Sgt. Les Wilson, former Boston Braves and minor league infielder, the Keesler Field, Miss., 'Commandos' rolled up a season record of 22 victories against only seven losses to take the State semi-pro baseball championship.

Each day, thousands of our boys in training enjoy the delicious goodness of Wells' Pasteurized Milk! Produced by carefully selected dairy herds, rushed to our plant where it is tested, scientifically pasteurized and automatically bottled in sterilized containers, Wells' wholesome milk is Nature's most Perfect Food! Our army knows the value of plenty of milk in the daily diet. . . . You, too, should see to it that every member of your family drinks Wells' milk every day! Production, pasteurization and spotless cleanliness all combine to protect the purity and delicious natural flavor of Wells' Pasteurized Milk.

THE MILKMAN IS ALWAYS AT WAR!

Always the number one defender of public health, the dairyman today assumes a heavy role in the critical task of keeping a nation at war strong and healthy. Wars are not won by sick armies and navies nor by ailing civilians behind them, and the dairyman is only too conscious of the part that he is expected to play. The customers that he serves receive only A-1 milk and it is his duty to see that the milk is wholesome and pure and contains only beneficial elements. Wells' dairymen are loyal and have vowed themselves toward the same service that they have always given.

New Post Exchange Also Opened With Much Fanfare

No sooner was the Main Branch of the Fort Benning Post Exchange completed than work was begun on another large building which will be occupied by the Exchange for the soda fountain, cafeteria restaurant and the main offices. Major H. E. McGaffey, Exchange Officer, announced.

Opening of the Main Branch was handled with the fanfare and flourish usually attendant on a regular Hollywood premiere, with band concert, attendance by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, Commanding General, Maj. Gen. L. C. Allen, commanding general of the Infantry School, and other distinguished guests, with flowers and presents presented by guests and patrons.

The new Main Branch was moved from under the South Stands of Doughboy Stadium to the building formerly occupied by the Grocery which was destroyed by fire several months ago. The building was rebuilt and reconditioned, with new tile floors and new ceilings. It is 160 by 60 feet, completely equipped with most modern store equipment including latest type of show cases which are fluorescent-lighted. Fluorescent overhead lighting also has been installed.

DIMENSIONS

The new building, on which ground was broken by General Fulton a short time before opening of the new Main Branch will be 188 feet by 200 feet. Part of it will be two stories in height, with the Main offices to be installed on the second floor. Cost of construction, exclusive of installing fixtures and furniture, will be approximately $100,000.

The new Main Branch gives the Post one of the most modern and complete store buildings of any Post in the service, with several departments handling many different lines of goods and a large soft drink bar as well.

Opening of the Branch thus gives Fort Benning one of the finest, most complete Post Exchange plants in the country, doing a business of about $700,000 per month. In addition to the usual facilities supplied by the average Post Exchange, there is a complete grocery with produce and meat departments, garage services, four filling stations, one Main Restaurant, 11 Lunch Counters, in various branches, mail order department, watch repair shop, beauty parlor, and two soda fountains one for white and one for colored personnel.

There are approximately 800 employees, working on 69 different activities, with four supervisors, one of whom is colored, managing 10 branches that serve colored troops with colored help only.

All employees are bonded under a blanket bond the day they enter the exchange service. All food handlers are examined before they enter the service and at least every six months thereafter. All employees are fingerprinted and photographed after having filled out the prescribed application blank.

Major McGaffey Inspects New Exchange

Major H. E. McGaffey, Post Exchange Officer, is pictured here with Miss Ruth Wood, inspecting a portion of the recently completed Main Branch Post Exchange. The new exchange is one of the most modern and complete store buildings of any post in the service. A business of around $700,000 per month is transacted through the exchange.

'Wouldst Thou' Drop In On Us, Unknown Poet?

Woudst thou, Unknown Soldier Poet of Fort Benning, deign to drop thy cloak of anonymity long enough to walk into the public relations parlors to enable us to deliver a check for two bucks which thou didst win with thy poem "Woudst Thou?" published in the verse columns of the BAYONET several weeks ago? Woudst thou?

The poem was favorably received by many Benningites, some of whom have requested your name. Your poem was accompanied by the request that your name be omitted. Consequently we threw your signature in the wastepaper basket. Several days later we decided to encourage verse writing by awarding prizes for the best poems published in the BAYONET. Your editor must confess he was very much embarrassed a week later when your poem was named for a prize. We cannot make out your check without your name. We only know you are a corporal.

Woudst thou deign to drop by our office. Woudst thou?

Basic Course Grads To Hold Class Reunion

The graduates of Rifle and Heavy Weapons course number 19 will hold a class reunion at the Polo Hunt Club on Saturday, November 14. All former members of the class are invited to attend.

Many of the graduates of this class are now on duty as officers at nearby camps, such as Fort McClellan. They are being contacted, and several are expected to attend. All members of the class are urged to call Major Warsack at FB-2974 during the day or at FB-2015 in the evening, or Lieutenant Sandens at HC-373 or Columbus 8055.

Seven Officers Get Promotions

The following promotions for student officers of the 1st Student Training Regiment, have been announced: Capts. Edward Chalgren, Jr., Andrew Lipscomb, and Julian J. Ewell from captains to majors. Major Chalgren and Major Lipscomb are both from Camp Croft, S. C., while Major Ewell is in the Parachute School at Fort Benning.

Capts. Bearss, Sandridge and Morrison to majors. Major Bearss is from Camp San Luis Obispo, Calif.; Major Sandridge is with the Sixth Army Corps, New York, and Major Morrison's station is Camp Bowie, Tex.

The junior promotion in the class was that of 1st Lt. Joel Hollis of the Second Army, Memphis, Tenn., who was promoted to Captain.

Fort Hq. Civilians Over-Subscribe War Bond Quota

Civilians employed at Headquarters at Fort Benning are subscribing 18.5 per cent of their payrolls in the Pay Reservation Plan for purchase of war bonds, a late report issued by Lt. John A. Lyons revealed.

There are 49 civilian employes at Headquarters, of whom 38 have subscribed to the plan. Four of the civilian employes are on leave and three are leaving Headquarters, Lt. Lyons reported.

Gross total of payrolls of civilian employees under the War Department is $5,055.33 and the employes have subscribed for a total of $572.50½ making 18.5 per cent of their total payrolls being put into War Bonds.

Laugh Of The Week

A private stationed at the Army Air Force Basic Training Center, N. J. was ordered to wash and clean an officer's inner sanctum. Quickly he went to work. Happily humming a song, he wiped the desk, cleaned the chair, dusted the books. A half hour later the officer walked in. Everything was tip-top—except the floor.

"Private," remarked the officer, "wasn't the floor washed?"

"No," replied the private.

"No WHAT?" exclaimed the irritated officer.

"No mop," said the private meekly.

Uncle Sam Trains Rover To Help in War Work

FRONT ROYAL, Va.—War is proving now that you can teach an old dog new tricks.

Here in its new school for dogs in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia, the Army is demonstrating daily that canines as old as five, middle age for a dog, learn new tricks with remarkable speed.

Dogs are being trained for the most part as messengers, airplane detectors and for sentry duty. Their keen sense of hearing enables them to sense approaching ones much more efficiently than man.

Former household pets, 4 and 5 years old, accustomed to serving only one master, learn to respond to certain orders, no matter who delivers 'em.

Firmness, system and patience are the secret.

Experienced dog trainers are in charge, but men from the Coast Guard and Army learn to become dog trainers themselves.

Eventually some 125,000 dogs are to be mustered into service.

NO LAP DOGS

One of the first lessons all dogs must learn is outdoor sleeping. This is hard on animals accustomed to snoozing on a bed, but they are comfortable after a few nights.

Their one daily meal comes after training, which makes the dog regard it as a reward for obedience and alertness.

In the four-week basic training course dogs and handlers drill two hours daily. Commands are given by a drillmaster, but the dog does not obey until his handler, who works him on a leash, speaks.

The dog rookie is taught first to comply with the command to "sit." At the word "down," he is taught to lie with body pressed to ground, all four legs flexed. The command "heel" requires the dog to stand quietly by the left side of the soldier, alert and ready for action. At the command "stay," the dog is trained to remain motionless, to "freeze." When the soldier wishes the dog to come to him, he utters his name with the command, as "Tige, come!" If the soldier orders the dog to go to a designated point, he cries "out" and simultaneously points to the spot.

NO WHIPS

Dogs are never struck during training. One blow will destroy a dog's capacity to learn. But after he really knows what the commands mean, he may be disciplined with the hand should he wilfully disobey.

Most difficult of all tricks to teach a dog is to disregard the presence of other dogs. But it can be done—as is proved by every Seeing Eye dog that leads his blind master about the streets.

As guards, many canines already are in service at various Army and Coast Guard posts. They scent an intruder at amazing distances, thus acting as invaluable aids to sentries.

As messengers, dogs are unexcelled. Swift, agile, certain of direction, they offer a small target to enemy marksmen.

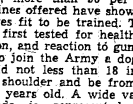
They also are used in finding wounded on the battlefields and in directing stretcher-bearers to the fallen.

CARRY MATERIAL

Small arms ammunition, food, medical supplies and other material often are sent to isolated units by dog soldiers—now used as extensively abroad as in the last war.

The Front Royal dog school is the first of several being established.

Dogs are recruited in the main by Dogs for Defense, Inc., an organization of breeders and dog handlers.



According to Harry I. Caesar, president of Dogs for Defense, Inc., more than 90 per cent of canines offered have shown themselves fit to be trained. The dogs are first tested for health, disposition, and reaction to gun fire.

To join the Army a dog should stand not less than 18 inches at the shoulder and be from one to five years old. A wide variety of breeds is represented—German shepherds, St. Bernards, Newfoundlands, Great Danes, Great Pyrenees, Doberman pinschers, collies, retrievers, French poodles. The chow and the bull terrier do not make good soldiers.

G.I. GAGS

I am one of the fellows who made the world safe for Democracy. I fought and I fought and I fought . . . But I had to go away. I was called in Class "A." The next time I want to be in Class "B" . . . Be here when they go and Be here when they come back. I remember when I registered, I went up to the desk and the man in charge was my milkman. He said "WHAT'S YOUR NAME?" I said, "You know my name." "WHAT'S YOUR NAME?" he barked. So I told him—August Childs. He said, "Are you an alien?" I said, "No, I wasn't born in Brooklyn." He then asked, "Where were you born?" I said, "Pittsburgh." Then he said "When did you see the first light of day?" And I said, "When we moved to Philadelphia." He asked me how old was I . . . so I told him, 23 the first of September. He said "The first of September, you'll be in France and that will be the last of August."

The day I went to camp, I guess they didn't think I'd live long. The first fellow I saw wrote on my card, "Flying Corps." I went a little further and some fellow said, "Look what the wind blew in." I said, WIND NOTHING, the drafts doing it." On the second morning they put these clothes on me. WHAT an outfit??? As soon as you are in it you think you can fight anybody. They have two sizes . . . Too small and too large. The pants were so tight I can't sit down, the shoes were so big . . . I turned around three times and they didn't even move, and what a raincoat they game me, it strained the rain. I passed an officer all dressed up with a funny belt and all that stuff, he said calling after me, "Didn't you notice my uniform when you passed?" and I said, "Yes, what aya squawking about, look what they gave me."

Oh, it was nice . . . five below one morning when they called us out for underwear inspection. You talk about scenery . . . red flannels, B. V. D.'s and all kinds zoot Suits with the Rear Seats and the tight cuffs. The union suit I had on would fit Tony Galento (and I weighed 140, plus full field pack). The lieutenant lined us up and told me to stand up. I said, "I am up, Sir, this Brooklyn underwear makes you think I am sitting down." He got so mad he put me out digging a ditch (how was I to know he was from Brooklyn?) A little later he passed me and said, "DON'T THROW THAT DIRT UP HERE!" I said, "Where am I going to put it." Then he said "Dig another hole and put it in there.

Three days later we sailed for France, Marching down the pier, I had more luck, I had a sergeant who stammered and stuttered. It took him so long to say "HALT," that twenty-seven of us marched overboard. They pulled us out and lined us up on the pier and captain came by and said, "FALL IN!!! I said, "I have been in, Sir." I was on the boat twelve days . . . Seasick for twelve days, i. e., Nothing going down and everything coming up. Leaning over the rail all the time I was approached by the captain in my last lean, who asked, "What company are you in?" I said, "I'm all by myself." He asked me if Brigadier Fish was up yet? I said, "If swallowed it, it's up." Talk about dumb sergeants, I said to one of them, "I guess we dropped anchor." And he replied, "I JUST KNEW THEY WOULD LOSE IT; IT'S BEEN HANGING OUT EVER SINCE WE LEFT NEW YORK."

Well, we landed in France, we were immediately sent to the trenches. After three nights in the trenches, the cannons started to roar and the shells started to pass, I was shaking . . . with patriotism. I tried to hide behind a tree . . . but there wasn't enough trees for the officers. The captain came around and said, "Five O'clock we go over the top." I said, "Captain, Sir, I'd like to have a word with you?" He said, "Haven't you any red blood in you?" "Yes, but I don't want to see it, Sir." Five o'clock came, we went over the top. Ten thousand Germans came after us. The way they looked at me you'd think I had started the war. Our captain yelled . . . FIRE . . . at WILL, but I didn't know any of their names. I guess the fellows behind me thought I was Will, because in the excitement they almost shot me.

Then came the Day of Atonement, I mean the Victory Day. The Victory Day was really a Chase Day. The Kaiser ran so fast not even Sergeant York could catch him.

I thought we would never get back to New York. There were so many people on Fifth avenue I thought Brooklyn had won a double header. I went home and took one look at my family and thought I was looking at the League of Nations. Boy, the things that can happen when you are gone for few weeks. My youngest son looked at me and said, "Mommee, here's that tramp we threw out last week." Then I knew I was at home at last and we lived happy ever after.

By the PINE-BUR STAFF

One company in the Regiment now has three captains since the recent promotion of two of its tactical officers to that rank. It's the 21st, commanded by Capt. Dwight E. Osler. The new captains are Frank M. Pittenger and Richard H. Evans. The latter by the way is the son of Dr. Silas K. Evans, president of Ripon college up in Wisconsin, where he was quite a football ace.

Capt. Joshua V. Davidow has been named executive officer of the Second Regiment, while Capt. Paul T. Hiser of 24th Company has been named adjutant succeeding Capt. Davidow. Service Club No. 3 in the Harmony Church area has a new librarian in the person of Miss Theresa Atkinson of Atlanta. Miss Atkinson got a going-away blast as the lead story in the top social column of the Atlanta Constitution which testified to her reputation as librarian and as a well-known member of the Atlanta younger set.

You can call Candidate John G. Fuller of 19th Company a "rough neck" and get away with it, for that was Fuller's official title in the oil fields in which he worked. It's a high paying job among oilmen. Over in the 4th Company we find Candidate Israel Leites, who once held the Southern Conference Light Heavyweight boxing title, won while he attended Maryland University, where he also starred at football.

When Candidate George F. Cornell graduated from 1st Company last week he was merely following in the footsteps of an older brother who three months ago graduated from the same battalion. He's 1st. Lt. Elwin Cornell of the Operations Office of the Infantry School.

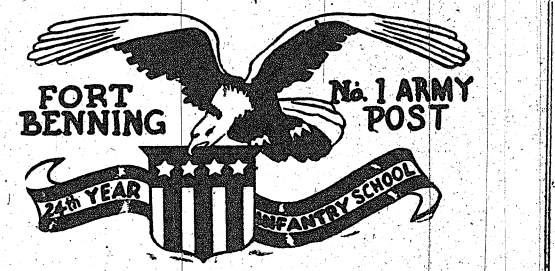
Capt. Floyd R. Meyer of the 5th Battalion headquarters staff, promoted to that rank last week, has left to attend Adjutant General's school at Fort Washington, Md.



10th Company has a candidate who lists his civilian occupation as a mixeologist at Al Moran's Windup in Brainerd, Minn. And in the same company is a gent who once served as chauffeur to Wayne King, the "Waltz King." While the 8th Company can boast of a candidate by name of Jack Frost, who may be just the thing the Army needs to cool off the Rising Sun.

Sgt. Peter R. Palermo, former of Hq. and Hq. Co., writes from the Army Air Force Officer Candidate School at Miami that the going there is tough. They run six weeks before they become upon a West Point basis, serving as underclassmen and subject to the traditional hazing, etc., for perclassmen and can take it out on the new entrants.

Thousands of Colored Troops Processed Here

Reception Center Only One Of Kind In This Country

Fort Benning's Reception Center for colored selectees exclusively—the first and only one of its kind in the country—has processed many thousands of troops at this Post since its inception in January, 1941.

The expansion of the Reception Center has been phenomenal: the original center, housed in one building, now occupies 47 buildings and 232 hutments; the initial total of 25 soldiers processed in one day has increased many times; the first cadre of enlisted men who classified troops has grown from 38 to 378.

In the beginning, the Center occupied the Twenty-Fourth Infantry Recreation hall on Anderson street. But, so rapid has been its expansion to meet the needs of a fast-growing Army, that, today 22 months later the Reception Center occupies a new area with several score buildings and hutments.

When it was organized, the Center was set up as a temporary installation. However, in May, 1941, it was activated as a permanent unit. From January, 1941, to the date of activation the Center showed promise of efficiently handling the ever-increasing number of Selective Service men.

In June, 1941, officers at the Center heralded the "Peak Day" when 558 inductees were processed in a single day. But Capt. Boyd Baggett, adjutant of the Center, recently characterized that record as a "drop in the bucket" compared with present schedules.

The Center was organized under Lt. Co. Frank Lockhead, Infantry, the first commanding officer. Colonel Lockhead was succeeded by Lt. Col. E. L. Hubbard as the commanding officer with Maj. Ulric N. James as the executive officer. Recently, however, upon the transfer of Colonel Hubbard, Major James was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and assigned as commanding officer of the Reception Center.

In order to carry out efficiently the technical and varied process of preparing a trainee for army service, special attention has been given to the selection of qualified officer and enlisted personnel.

The enlisted personnel working in the Center has been picked through a further selective process. They are the men whose training, educational background and army test scores gave promise of educational ability which was necessary in order to qualify for a clerical job at the Center.

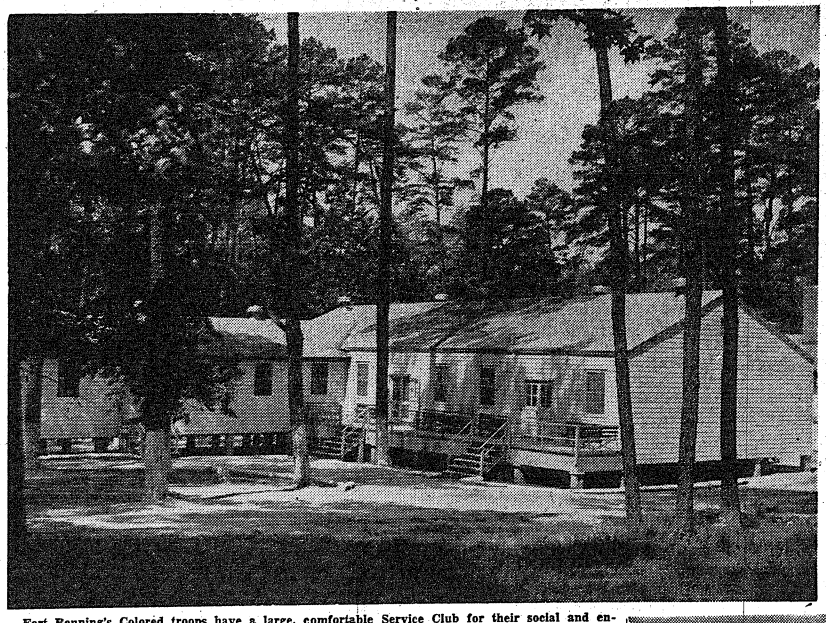
The Reception Center is believed to have one of the best prepared staffs of any reception center in the country. A majority of the enlisted personnel are college men. Soldiers now serving as clerks hold ratings as sergeants, corporals, privates, and technicians.

Thousands of the young colored men who were selected to join the army's ranks have passed through the Reception Center. On Friday, June 5, 1941, exercises were held honoring the 10,000th Selective Service men to pass through the processing. But, of late, processing has been stepped up so rapidly in this Center as well as in all other Reception Centers in the country that dates of the succeeding quotas are now just a matter of record in the files as restricted data.

The typical selectee is held at the Center but a few days for his proper classification tests, outfitting of clothing, and assignment of duty before he is sent on his way to a permanent assignment "somewhere in the United States."

Soldiers processed at the Reception Center come from all walks of life. They represent nearly every kind of occupation found in the country. Among them are well-known musicians, carpenters, sand blasters, cooks, bakers, lawyers, artists, clerks, and men of various other civilian occupations.

A Reception Center exists for the purpose of preparing the Army selectee for acceptance into the Army. In order to provide for this, the recruit passes through numerous "Sections" of the Center where distinctive tasks are performed by trained clerks, in order to carry out the processing.



Here at Fort Benning's Reception Center, after induction, soldiers are checked, tested, classified, recorded, vaccinated, immunized, outfitted with clothing, and assigned.

The record that is prepared for each soldier as he passes through the Center, goes with him as a guiding source of information wherever he is stationed. In order to analyze and record all information of value to the individual soldier, a speedy and accurate system has been developed to carry out efficiently the several processing functions.

Realizing the importance of providing for the young soldier's moral and mental welfare as well as for his physical well-being, there is provided in each of the several companies a Recreation Room in which he may relax, write letters, read the current magazines, and otherwise entertain himself. Movies, football games, entertainments also provide social recreation for the men.

Recreation Center For Colored Troops

When Captured Button Your Lip

In this war as in every war one of the enemy's objectives is to capture prisoners from whom they would like to obtain valuable information.

Before going into action destroy all papers, letters, diaries or tags that might identify your organization.

In the event of capture you should remember that the International Code in regard to prisoners dictates that the only information a soldier has to volunteer is in regad to his name, rank and serial number.

Don't believe the enemy if he promises to drop a message from you to your unit stating that you are safe.

Don't address any letters in such a way that your organization's whereabouts are disclosed.

Remember directions and landmarks, so that in the event you escape, you will be able to tell what you have learned. —

Major J. H. Cooper, director of Service Club, Number 4, pictured above, plans entertainment and social programs for Negro troops at Fort Benning. The thousands of colored troops at Benning have a well balanced social and recreational program.

R. C. Biographer Pens Sketch of Pvt. Derricks

THE SOUTH—Time passes—the South—poor, proud, and prolific—satisfies itself yielding cotton, sorghum, livestock, and families. It still yields all these but lately it has begun to turn out capable Negro teachers, businessmen, professional women and music writers. We at Fort Benning are proud of our talented colored soldiers.

Lieut-Colonel Ulric N. James, Commanding Officer, Reception Center, and Captain R. P. Langley, Special Service Officer, Reception Center, are proud of the many soldiers who make up the chorus, the quartette, and the orchestra. Turning in his swivel chair and looking directly into the eyes of the writer, Captain Langley said, "I have another man, a soldier named Private Cleavant Derricks, I want you to meet him." The next morning I was introduced to Private Derricks. Private Derricks was a tall, lanky man weighing about 150 pounds. His eyes were sincere and his voice was clear and mellow. From my first observation, Private Derricks looked as if he had been trying hard to get accustomed to army life—trying in a private's way—to be a good soldier.

He smiled, and said, "How do you do." I was sure the four word phrase was lost in the bottom of his stomach, but when the words reached his vocal cords, the phrase was truly musical — in short—his speech was superb. For two months Private Derricks had experienced the life of a soldier and now he faced the duration. Army life is tough for a man 32 years old, but this man was practical, a soldier with ideas, and music writing ability. I am sure he can take it. As I sat listening to Private Derricks' stories of travel in Canada and America the joyous day spent in Tennessee with his wife and daughter, and the tedious hours he spent directing choral groups, writing music, I was awed. "Here is a man the army can use." . . . America—meet Private Cleavant Derricks.

CECILE DERRICKS . . . Since the time America entered the WAR the women must be responsible for activities at the home front. The Derricks Jubilee Singers of Chattanooga, Tennessee was organized by Private Cleavant Derricks. While Derricks is in the United States Army, Cecile Derricks will direct this nationally radio choir heard twice weekly over station W. D. O. D., Chattanooga, Tennessee. Choirs, groups, choirs, quartetts, sextettes throughout the country will continue to sing the gospel songs composed by Private Derricks. The 1000 voice chorus of the National Baptist Convention will hum, "Just A Little Talk With Jesus," popular gospel hymn which was composed by Private Derricks. We need more music writers in the army. Songs assist the building of Morale for soldiers. We need more musicians in the army to organize bands—there is a long march ahead and we need bands to play patriotic tunes. So, Private Derricks, you arrived at the Reception Center just in time. The Derricks School of Music of Chattanooga, Tennessee, has made a great sacrifice in giving to the army the founder and director of this musical organization. I am sure the citizens are happy to boast of a man like Private Derricks. Cadek Conservatory of Music prepared this private and now America has called him to serve.

24th Anniversary At Benning Is Celebrated

On October 7, 1941, the Detachment, Medical Department, Station Hospital, commanded by Major John B. Joyner, celebrated its twenty-third anniversary. That this unit is one of the fastest growing organizations on the post is evidenced by the fact that since that anniversary, the personnel has been doubled already.

Taking care of so many patients, even for the enlarged force, is no "picnic." The hours are long and the work is hard. For that reason high ranking detachment officers have bent every effort to keep the morale of the men high; and these efforts have been completely successful.

To afford diversion for the men in off-hours, Detachment officers have promoted some of the best entertainment programs on the post; sports events with all of the men participating have been presented; and for those who like to take their amusement inside, they have been provided day rooms where the men may read books and magazines, play billiards, cards and other games, or listen to radio or victrola music. There are three of these day rooms, one of which is reserved for colored troops, who make up almost one-third of the detachment's strength.

There has also been organized an orchestra and band for the Detachment which plays at many of gatherings of Detachment personnel as well as on post radio programs and on USO broadcasts in Columbus.

The colored troops have a spiritual quartet which has also entertained during programs on the post and in Columbus.

WELL ROUNDED PROGRAM

The athletic and recreational program is supervised by First Lt. W. C. Somermeyer and is planned and directed by Sgt. John P. Hamill. The program includes sports of all types and features frequent tournaments with each of the 12 barracks sending two teams to compete in each event. Each Friday night a program is presented in the arena in the barracks area. These programs consist of music by the orchestra, stunts, quiz programs, and boxing. Once a month outside talent is invited to perform before the Detachment personnel. Another feature of these programs is the showing of films of current happenings.

Another monthly treat planned for the men is a smoker during which the troops enjoy musical and boxing programs and refreshments.

DEFEATE ISSC

The Detachment boasts that it puts strong teams in the competitions on the post and in Columbus. Last season the Detachment basketball defeated the ISSC championship team at basketball, being one of the only two teams able to perform this feat. The team was also runner-up in the Columbus City softball league, losing out in the play-off after finishing the season in a tie with a strong city team.

The Detachment's Staff Sgt. James K. Guinn led the post baseball team with the highest batting average, and St. Sgt. Francis Webster was high scorer in the Bibb City basketball tournament last season with more than 60 points in three games. The team was runner-up in this tourney.

23 O. C. GRADS

There are other accomplishments by the Detachment of which it is rightly proud. Twenty-five men have gone out of the organization to attend officer candidate school. Only two failed to make the grade. In the War Bond drive contest this fall, the Detachment was first of all units in the number of bonds sold. It is also proud of its monthly publication, "Medicos," which ranks high among publications of its nature.

PROMOTED

Three promotions of enlisted men in the Casual Battalion of the Infantry School have been announced by their commanding officer, Lt. Col. M. C. Higgins. They are Larry O. Curry of Shreveport, La., promoted to staff sergeant; Solomon Silverblott of Roselle, N. J., and Edward Cruz of Banes, Oriente, Cuba, promoted to technician fifth grade.

Officers Quarters At Main Post

30,000 Served By Army Clinic In Columbus

Families Of Officers, Enlisted Men Treated In Doctor's Building

Serving more than 30,000 persons a year is a record of which any part of the Army's Medical Department can be proud. And that is the record that Lt. Col. George H. Clark points to when someone asks about the duties of the Army medical offices in the Doctors' Building in downtown Columbus.

The job of this office is to take care of the medical needs of the families that are dependent upon the men in the service and the officers and enlisted men living outside of the reservation, according to Colonel Clark.

The colonel and his staff handle any type of case that does not require an operation or the setting of a compound fracture. The simplest ailment, such as: "how can one take off weight?" or the most complicated case of pneumonia, is just another one on the books.

When the clinic first opened in the latter part of January, 1941, the first record of a full month showed the handling of 1,445 cases in all. During the month of September of this year 2,777 cases were listed on the books, showing an increase of almost 100 per cent.

Colonel Clark's day staff consists of three officers, seven enlisted men, two Army nurses, and one civilian receptionist. The night staff is made up of one officer and two enlisted men. Except for the colonel, all officers are on temporary duty. The day doctors are on duty at the clinic for a month at a time. The make-up of the office shows that one officer is on call for cases that must be taken care of in the home, while the colonel and the other two are at the clinic.

On the night shift, the officer on duty is constantly on call for emergencies and for handling of cases that the military police may bring in. The enlisted personnel consists of one driver and one Charge-of-quarters.

Colonel Clark spent more than 20 years in the National Guard as a member of the 108th Infantry in the famous 27th Division of New York. Two years ago the colonel became a member of the army of the United States at Fort McClellan when his unit was inducted into federal service.

Closer examination of the personnel shows that First Lt. Alice Johnson, army nurse corps, has been in the service for more than 24 years. She served in France in the last war and since then has not only served at a great many of the forts in the States, but has been on duty in Hawaii and the Philippines. Lieutenant Johnson is said to be the favorite of the children. Second Lt. Martha Rifkin, A. N. C., is the other nurse on day duty.

Of the enlisted men, there are Sgt. James E. Lee, chief of the enlisted section; Sgt. Arnold P. Satterfield, chief clerk; Sgt. Xavier J. Lenoir, pharmacist; Tech. 4th Grade Odis E. Simmons, laboratory technician; Cpl. William J. Pippin, driver.

Mrs. Mabel Farrar, the civilian receptionist, now has a son in the armed forces. In fact, he is Sgt. Jesse C. Farrar, somewhere in Australia.

Scrap Campaign Nets Many Tons Of Metal At Post

Besides staging a metal scrap drive all its own, Fort Benning has supplied trucks and men for scrap drives in Columbus, Phenix City and Cusseta to bring millions of pounds of precious steel, iron, copper, brass and aluminum, as well as rubber, to the nation's much-needed scrap heaps, according to a report by Major J. R. Johnson, post inspector, in charge of the campaign at the Fort.

More than 7,000,000 pounds of metal has been collected at the Fort alone, and an estimated 1,000 tons has been collected by the Army trucks in the campaigns in the three cities as well, Maj. Johnson reported.

Besides the metal and other material contributed to the scrap drive, nearly half a million pounds of metal have been salvaged and returned to active use on the Fort. This includes chains, hammers, chisels and many other tools and equipment.

Salvage work at the Fort also is going on, on a regular routine basis in order to conserve all sorts of materials from food to clothing and steel. Leather from worn out shoes and material from worn out clothing is being salvaged and turned into industrial or other channels. Rubber is being turned into the rubber scrap-heap. Iron and steel is being re-used or, when objects are completely worn out, turned into scrap.

One of the largest sources of scrap metal at the Fort is the "iron mine," the dump in which old metal on the post has been thrown away for 20 years. There, men under Lt. Col. C. A. Will, are finding everything from horseshoes and nails to old motors.

More than 150 tons have been salvaged from the old scrap heap, and another 250 tons is estimated buried there, Col. Will said.

"Estimates show that steel mills consume scrap metal at the rate of more than two million tons a month," Maj. Johnson said. "The government is endeavoring to collect 17,000,000 tons of scrap to see the mills through the winter months and we must all collect every scrap of metal possible.

"The problem now is to get at the metal in homes, in forgotten dumps, in all the places where scrap has been thrown away and probably forgotten through the years. If we can locate that and estimate its weight and the difficulties of hauling it away, we can more easily tell about the metal in plain sight in our cities and on military reservations. Then we can know how much to plan on."

The campaign at Ft. Benning is just part of that now going on throughout the entire nation.

Army Author's Contest Opens

$1,000 Bond Offered To Writer Of Best Book

An Army author's contest for officers, enlisted men or women serving with the army is announced by Doubleday, Doran and Co., of New York. Soldier authors are invited to submit book manuscripts, fiction or non-fiction, to compete for a $1,000 series E War Bond.

The bond will be an outright prize, and in addition the successful writer will receive the regular royalties from the sale of the book. The publishers also reserve the right to publish other manuscripts of sufficient merit which are submitted, and the authors will receive royalties.

The subjects treated may be on any subject and need not be concerned with the war. At least 10,000 words of completed manuscript must be submitted plus a synopsis of the remainder.

The editors of the publishing company will be the sole judges and their decision will be final. In the event that no manuscript merits the award, the right is reserved to award no prize.

All entries must be in the judges' hands by Sept. 30, 1943. Typewritten manuscripts are preferred, but legible entries in longhand will be given equal consideration. The manuscripts are to be sent to Service Contest Editor, Doubleday, Doran and Co., Inc., 14 West 49th Street, New York. Men on overseas duty may send their manuscripts to Winifred Nerney, Doubleday, Doran and Co., 91 Great Russell St., London, W. C., 1; or to Augus and Robertson, Sydney, Australia.

180-Day Wonder Story Of Lawson Field Growth

Construction Work Is Never Ending

The home of the Army's famous Infantry School and the almost as famous experimental 501st Parachute Battalion suddenly came to life late in 1940 with the addition of a GHQ Air Force Unit, two additional C & D Observation Squadrons, the 62nd Air Base Group, and today is rapidly growing to gigantic proportions under the command of Major John E. Albert.

So rapid has been the growth of Lawson Field since the former days of "Flight B," as the unit formerly stationed at Lawson Field was called that correspondence is still being addressed to "C. O. Flight B."

It has always been the custom of the War Department, when naming a new flying field or christening an old field, to select the name of one of the pioneer flying officers who had lost his life in the line of duty, for whom with propriety a field could be named. Lawson Field is named in honor of the late Captain Walter R. Lawson, a native Georgian, an Army Air Corps hero of World War I, who was killed in an airplane accident at McCook Field, Ohio, in April, 1923. After careful study of historical data available, the airdrome at Fort Benning was christened Lawson Field in memory of him.

TRANSPER IN 1932

In 1932 a group of Air Corps officers and enlisted men from the 1th Observation Squadron, Fort Riley, Kans., was transferred to Lawson Field to be used by the Infantry School for tactical and allied problems. It is interesting to note, that at the time the 16th Observation Squadron was at Fort Riley it was under the command of then, Captain Warner B. Gates, now a colonel, who prior to the arrival of Major John E. Albert on September 12, 1942, was commanding officer, of Lawson Field. "Flight B" 16th Observation Squadron, carried on the operations of Lawson Field until the fall of 1940, when the 15th Bombardment Squadron (L) GHQ A. F. was transferred from Barksdale Field, La. In November of the same year this group was augmented by the 16th Observation from Fort Bragg, N. C., which was commanded by Captain Fred S. Stocks and the 97th Observation Squadron from Mitchell Field, N. Y. under the command of Captain Philo G. Meisenholder. In December, 1940, Captain Stocks was transferred to command of the 62nd Air Base Group (Sp) a newly activated unit.

CONSTRUCTION ENORMOUS

During this period of personnel organization the construction of service buildings and barracks seems never ending. Roads have been laid out and surfaced and hangars and parking aprons have been completed. A million dollar program of expansion has been completeld adding to the field a group of thirty-five buildings both barracks and administration buildings, a Radio Control Tower, Radio Range, A. A. C. S. Station, new runways, underground gasoline servicing tanks together with improved night lighting facilities. This has made Lawson Field one of the largest, finest and best equipped air fields in the southeast. Even so a further program of enlargement of the field's facilities is now underway so that Lawson Field will be able to assume its proper share in the training of upright young men who want to and will "Keep 'Em Flying."

117th Infantry Proud Of Distinguished War Record

Regiment In Drive Which Smashed the Hindenburg Line

A long and honored history of glory and action is represented by the famous 117th Infantry, the "Break Through" regiment now located at Fort Benning as demonstration troops for The Infantry School.

The regiment is part of the 30th division, and it was stationed at Fort Jackson since being called to active duty two years ago. It is commanded by Col. Grant A. Schlieker, veteran Army office who is a specialist in military research and development, formerly being attached to the staff of the Chief of Infantry, Washington, D. C.

The regimental crest is blue for infantry, with the broken chevron representing the "Breaking Through" of the Hindenburg Line during the World War I, while the three mullets symbolize the organization's three battle honors.

Originally organized of volunteers in Tennessee, the regiment became the 3d Tennessee Volunteers in 1847, and it was mustered into service at that time for the Mexican War campaign. The regiment continued in existence during the Spanish American war, seening service under command of Col. J. P. Fyffe. The regiment then remained as the Tennessee Militia and was sent to the Mexican Border in 1916, then into Federal Service in World War I as the Third Tennessee Infantry.

IN FAMOUS ATTACK

On Sept. 12, 1917, it joined the 117th Division, 30th Division, and went overseas, remaining until March 27, 1919. The regiment is credited with a large share of the glory in smashing the Hindenburg Line and also performed with valor and distinction at Ypres-Lys, the Somme Offensive and the Canal Sector.

On returning to this country after the war, the regiment was disbanded at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., April 17, 1919. Its members then joined with the Fourth Tennessee Infantry, National Guard, and remained the 117th Infantry, Tennessee National Guard.

Under War Department Orders, the 117th Infantry is entitled to a streamer in the colors of the Victory ribbon, embroidered for Flanders, Ypres-Lys and the Somme Offensives.

Not only in war but in peace, the regiment saw important service since it was called out in 1937 in connection with relief work during the Ohio-Mississippi River flood.

The regimental staff consists of Lt. Col. Harry M. Arthur, Union, S. C., as Executive officer; Maj. Robert E. Franklin, Jackson, Tenn., as Plans and Training officer; Capt. Edgar H. Reece, Lincolnton, N. C., Supply; Capt. Warren C. Giles, Athens, Tenn., adjutant; Personnel Adjutant Albert D. McCollum, Jackson, Tenn., and Capt. Eugene H. Thomas, Nashville, Tenn., as Intelligence Officer.

VETERAN COMMANDER

Colonel Grant S. Schlieker, commander of the Regiment, brings to the Infantry School a varied and intensive military experience covering 25 years of service. He is a native of East Chicago, Ind., and entered the Army in 1917 as a provisional officer, from the 1st Officer Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison.

Colonel Schlieker was first assigned to the 46th Infantry, serving with it during the World War. Returning to the United States, he attended a several Army service schools, establishing himself as a specialist in tanks and in research and development. He also is a graduate of the Quartermaster Motor Transport School at Camp Holabird, Md. He served in 1925 with the 65th Infantry in Puerto Rico, then returned to the Tank School at Ft. Meade, Md., where he stayed as an instructor until 1929. From there Colonel Schlieker went to the French Tank School as a student in the advanced course.

In 1932 he took command of H company, 29th Infantry, at Fort Benning, serving until May, 1935 when he was sent to the University of California at Berkeley, Cal., for ROTC duty. In September, 1936 Colonel Schlieker resumed his military studies at the Command and General Staff School, Leavenworth, Kansas, then in 1937 became the executive officer of the 3rd Infantry Brigade, 2nd Division, serving until 1938 when he entered the Army War College.

From June, 1939 until June, 1940 he served as Infantry liaison officer at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., the Chief of Infantry's representative with the Ordnance Dept.

Until June, 1940 when the Chief of Infantry office was disbanded under the Army Reorganization Plan, Colonel Schlieker was chief of its equipment and development branch. He later became Supply Chief for the Replacement and School Command, Birmingham, Ala., holding that post until Aug. 12 when he was assigned command in offices of the 117th Infantry.

Doctors From Tulane Staff 24th Hospital

The 24th General Hospital, an offspring of the old 24th Base Hospital, which served overseas during World War I, was activated at Fort Benning July 15th. The hospital is staffed, as it was in World War I, by alumni and faculty members of Tulane University, New Orleans, La.

Head of the organization is Col. Walter C. Royals, M. C., an army officer for nearly a quarter of a century. Colonel Royals is a graduate of Tulane University, class of 1917.

Prior to the 24th General Hospital's activation, the staff members were gathered together by Lt. Col. I. M. Gage, M. C., associate professor of surgery at Tulane University. Lt. Col. Gage is at present chief of surgical service for the hospital. The units detachment commander is Captain R. J. Manor, M. A. C.

Lt. Col. R. P. Turner, M. C., also with the hospital, formerly served as professor of internal medicine at Tulane. Executive Officer, Major J. B. McLester, was formerly a physician at Birmingham, Ala.

The 24th General Hospital's mess officer needs no lengthy introduction to "Bayonet" readers. For he is 2nd Lt. Clifford E. Clinton, a Californian, who operated the "Golden Rule" cafeterias throughout California and who has deservingly received world-wide acclaim for his work in civilian life.

Captain Thomas Reed, M. A. C., is the 24th's adjutant, and has been in the service for 24 years. In a statement Captain Reed observed that "The organization has completed an intensive period of training and is anixous to enter into active operations. We know full well that the present 24th General Hospital will live up to the excellent record made by the 24th Base Hospital during World War I."

Enlisted men from all walks of life and all parts of the United States join together under a common bond to make the 24th General Hospital one of the finest medical units of its kind.

Laboratory technicians, pharmacy students, opticians and even ministers makeup the nucleus of the men who are serving with this non-combat unit.

AN ARMY WIFE Shops In Columbus

by EVE

Now that the stores of Columbus have officially opened the Christmas season maybe you'll believe me when I say it's really time to do something about the holiday shopping. I've already noticed shortages caused by canny shoppers who made up their minds to shop while the counters and shelves are full. Limitations of production will be the yard stick of our purchases. When the stock now on hand is sold, there will be no more. Just a friendly tip from the gal who looks over the town for you.

Mothers who are unable to purchase underthings and various necessary garments for the small fry will confirm the information I secured at the KIDDIE SHOPPE at 1144 Broadway. There is a definite shortage of children's clothing. In spite of the fact there are many adorable and practical items stocked for Christmas gifts, the Kiddie Shoppe doesn't expect to have much choice left by December 1st. A word to the wise. A tiny miss would adore the soft-as-a-kitten muffs and mittens of white or beige fur. Bright embroidered purses are important parts of the wardrobe when one is small and eager to ape mother's clothes. Pink rayon pajamas with blue frogs are adorably elegant. For the young lad, a tiny replica of Daddy's field jacket with slacks to match. Mother will like these too, because they're water repellant. Mighty grand gifts to find under the tree on Christmas.

Old files of annuals and information of Fort Benning's early days shows that MILLER - TAYLOR SHOE STORE supported our activities then as they do today. While the same line of shoes was carried then, the shop has grown with the post. Right now alligator shoes continue to rank foremost in the shoe wardrobe. The I. Miller alligator shoe for dressy street wear is distinctive with a turn over tongue and high leather covered Cuban heel. There are alligator baby lizard oxfords of soft brown snail grained leather. The open toed oxford for those who remain faithful to that perennial favorite. If the genuine alligator runs too high for your purse, you might look at the beautiful calf alligator. Alligator purses to mach your shoes are almost an obligation for a complete set of accessories. Look at the matching bags when you're buying shoes. There's a new stock of loafers for daily knock-about wear.

— — V — —

KAYSER - LILIENTHAL INC., have always had a shopping service a bit more personal than one would expect. This year they are trying harder than ever to help those who find shopping difficult. They suggest that men who are worried about gifts for the feminine members of their family make a list of names, colors, gift preference, approximate size and price range and turn it over to their experienced staff. The gifts will not only be beautifully wrapped for mailing but Kayser-Lilienthal will mail them free of charge. No small item for busy men these days. A visit to the store will convince the most shopping-shy man he'll find beautiful, practical and luxury gifts for the favorite women in his life. This personal Christmas service is not limited to the men. Women will be helped with equal friendly and courteous service. The Postmaster General urges early mailing. And that doesn't mean the 15th of December either.

Someone has a use for things you no longer want. In this day of shortages and extraordinary demands, unused accumulations are not only selfish, but unpatriotic. THWEATT AND SON'S, 1242 Broadway, are anxious to contact any army family that has household furnishings they no longer have any use for. You'll find their prices for second-hand furniture is mighty generous for the one who is selling. In case you don't know, this furniture shop specializes in repairing and refinishing furniture. Repairs and refinishing of our precious household bits is a necessary and persistent need. Antique seekers can pick up some beautiful bits in this store. They've just received some lovely hob-nailed cranberry glass.

Combining luxury and practicability is sometimes a difficult thing to do. That's why I liked the lovely down and feather comforters at SEARS-ROEBUCK. I can't think of a nicer gift, or one that would be more appreciated for many years to come, than the pale peach and green rayon satin down filled comforter. Another beautiful one is made of pink flowered satine. Fluffy and warm, guaranteed to make sleeping a cozy experience. Another beautiful sleeping luxury is a soft dusty pink and powder blue taffeta comforter filled with turkey feathers. All the comforters have a tricky gadget reminsful of our girdle supporters. They fasten the comforter to the more secure bedding and prevent the slipping objected to by so many people.

Have you ever thought of the part our department stores play in bringing us some of the fundamental spirit of the holiday? The beautifully decorated stores have always made the season gay and given our shopping hours at Christmas a directness from the rest of the year. KIRVEN'S has opened the holiday shopping season with a heart catching theme, "Christmas, 1942 —Keep It Shining For All The World." For all the world those special days when self becomes dedicated to the happiness and pleasure of others. The lovely white angels and star sprinkled background that provides the Christmas motif in Kirven's this year is a reminder of our spiritual debt in a war-torn world. We, who are safe in our homes, will reverently make this Christmas a season of joy for those who are dear to us. Each tie of relationship and gesture of good will will be more precious for the knowledge of our great privilege of being one of the few countries left in the world still adhering to the age-old holiday.

— — V — —

Newly unpacked, fresh from New York, pretties are something to make a special trip to town over. The PATRICIA SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel, is in a happy litter of tissue paper and breathless approval over the things Patricia bought for her many Fort Benning friends during her recent buying trip in New York. She has something pretty special in evening things for those parties we'll be going to during the holiday season. That's one time of the year a new outfit is indicated. Last year's things won't do at all. If you haven't looked at her exquisite lingerie you should. Beautiful underthings have no age group appeal. All women adore them. He'll enjoy buying them for you. Fragile froth of feminine lingerie makes a strong man feel stronger when he purchases such womanly whimsies.

— — V — —

Have you got a husband that must be pushed into buying sorely needed uniforms? Nothing unusual about that, for many men detest any form of shopping other than meandering through the dime stores. They are universally the same in their spendthrift fling when they see tricky gadgets for a few cents. It often becomes your duty to see to the purchase and replacement of shirts, ties and socks. If you must take these responsibilities on your shoulders you'd best get acquainted with SAKS FIFTH AVENUE MILITARY SHOP on Cusseta road. They have those hard-to-get tropical wool shirts. The form fitting cut of the shirt will be especially satisfying to him. If you brought home one of the beautifully tailored blouses with a matching belt he'd have to take it in for a fitting and you wouldn't wait for him while he rubbed up the old Sam Brown belt.

ALLIGATORS, EIGHT-BALLS AND HORSEPLAY ENHANCE MORALE OF 24TH INFANTRY'S SOLDIERS

Campus Comes To Camp As 'Gators Go 'Screw-Ball'

When somebody in the 'Gator outfit "goofs off" (army for 'faux pas'), his unit gets behind the "eight-ball." Out come the weeper towels, and the little globe is officially delivered with pomp and ceremony.

The 'Gators may be a little confused, but they have a general idea where they want to go: Berlin, Tokyo, or Rome.

The famous 'Gator wishing-well is to the 124th Infantry what the statue of Tecumseh is to Annapolis. Throw in a penny, close your eyes, and wish for all you're worth. Heddy Lamar is on our list as the 'Gators hitch their wagon to a star.

Here is Adam Lazonga II, the usurper to the throne of Lazonga I who went AWOL for a while. Once alligator hide meets pig-skin as the mascot goes to a grid game.

Floridians Show What Makes Good Morale Better

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

Ask a sun-tanned Florida infantryman from Fort Benning's 124th Infantry Regiment how his morale is if you want to get a good laugh.

He'll probably give you a big grin, point to the regiment's 225-pound alligator mascot with one hand and the military record of his regiment with the other.

Then he'll ask you how your morale is and probably suggest that maybe you'd like to "join up" with the 124th.

It's that kind of a regiment. For plain, downright good soldiering, the 124th has a record comparable with the best organization at Fort Benning and on a par with any in the Army today. And for plain, downright "screwiness," the 124th boys are charter members of the "Screwball Club of America."

And morale officers, wise in the ways of soldiers, will point to the close association between good soldiers and good times and tell you that half the battle is already won.

It's not a case of combining business with pleasure though. On Army time, the regiment's all business. On their own time, the sky's the limit. The 124th has more wierd "ceremonies," "contraptions" and mascots around their area than there were in "Hellza Poppin." And don't kid yourself that it's all a lot of nonsense either. It serves as an emotional "safety-valve" for men far from home and engaged in work that at its best is often monotonous and 124th officers are convinced the good-natured horseplay has plenty to do with the outstanding military record of the regiment.

As an example. Everyone has heard of the statue of Tecumseh at Annapolis and how the Naval cadets throw pennies and a left-handed salute at the old statue. Well, the 124th has a stone "Wishing Well," and G. I. built at that, in which a soldier has only to toss a penny to have a wish granted—or at least that's what the 124th says.

PENNIES AND SLUGS

There must be something to it though, because so far they've taken 800 pennies, 35 slugs and a wedding ring from the bottom of the well. Worshipping infantrymen, wanting everything from a fifteen-day furlough to a lithesome blonde, kneel solemnly in front of the well, toss in a penny and wish fervently. As a payoff, the 800 pennies have been used to buy goldfish for the well.

"Behind the eight-ball" is a favorite American expression for being in the "doghouse." So the 124th has invented an "Eight-Ball Ceremony" wherein the individual, company or squad that has committed the "could have been prevented with careful planning" error gets presented a large, black eight-ball. And they just aren't given the eight-ball quietly and "on the side." Oh, No! They call out the regimental band, they have a parade down the company streets complete with all the "trimmings," including the "wailing squad" outfitted with towels to "dry" their eyes.

And if you think the boys don't take it seriously, you should hear the groans and gnashing of teeth from the "doghouse" when somebody pulls a boner and his outfit is presented the eight-ball. And they work like Trojans to clear their record and find some other unlucky recipient for the dubious "honor."

Fort Benning is the home of the parachute troops so a few weeks ago some of the Floridians decided it was about time they were represented in the paratroopers. Any regiment could have sent a man or two to the parachute infantries, but not the 124th. They looked around carefully, selected a likely looking prospect and trained him for parachuting right in their own area. "Him" was an unsuspecting little, black dog named, appropriately, "Blackout," who caught on to parachuting quickly—in fact so quickly he soon began to bark when he wanted to jump. The 124th's Medical Detachment fashioned a parachute from an old table-cloth, tossed "Blackout" off the roof into the waiting arms of his master a couple of times and announced the "purp" as a qualified jumper.

"BLACKOUT" BALKS

It worked swell until they dramatized "Blackout" and his achievements over the air and at the crucial moment, the pup got temperamental and decided that it wasn't his night to jump.

The 124th goes in for unique road signs too. One outlandish "road-directions" sign stands in the middle of the regimental area and gives the approximate distance to nearly two score places including Berlin, Rome and—of all places—Hell. During one of their daily infantry demonstrations they decided to bring their demonstration area up to the times; Now the road they take to the area has been dubbed "Burma Road No. 2; Rangoon Approach" and a neat sign attests to this fact.

An interesting manifestation of the American soldier's power of initiative is embodied in the 124th Infantry's mile and a half "Burma Road No. 2"—an overland trail constructed by personnel of the Headquarters Company, 1st. Battalion, 124th Infantry. To the commander of the 1st. Battalion, Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, Jr. goes the credit for both the unusual name of the highway, and its conception.

From its "Rangoon" entrance at the south the eight-foot road winds northward over hills, through swamps and ravines until it finally emerges at the "Chungking" bridge spanning "Salween Creek." At the northern end of the bride is the Chungking Approach which faces Hammond Field.

The "screw-ball" 'Gators even have their Burma Road II, namesake for the famous Oriental trail. The 14th went to a lot of trouble to construct it. Who knows, maybe it'll pay rich dividends some day.

The route of the miniature Burma Road, like its famous contemporary extends through an ever-changing terrain of wild, natural beauty. Portions of the trail cut alongside the red clay hilly sections afford a hardpacked surface to the traveler. For quite a distance the road outlines the contours of rolling lands as it pursues its way among the thickly wooded areas of Georgia Pine.

At the halfway point, however, the character of Burma Road No. 2 changes abruptly, dropping swiftly to the marshes and quagmires of "Mekong Creek." There the sturdy logs and thick planks of the causeway scarce give stable footing to the heavily laden troops marching over it, although at times the ubiquitous "Jeep" has not found passage difficult.

After the marsh is passed the highway rises again to the hills and journeys through a leafy citadel, pitted by rifle trenches and forgotten field fortifications. Finally Burma Road comes to what is the most scenic section of the thoroughfare—the bridge over Salween Creek.

This bridge, substantially constructed of pine logs from eight to twelve inches in diameter, and surfaced with heavy planking, crosses the Salween in a graceful crescent. The north bridgehead abuts upon Chungking Approach.

As we mentioned previously, the outfit's from Florida, land of the alligators. It's only natural then that the 124th should be known as the 'Gator Regiment, its soldier-paper, doubded "The Alligator" and its officers' club known as the 'Gator-Hole. It's typical too of the regiment that instead of having some quiet dog or cat for a mascot they'd have a 225-pound, eight-foot alligator—affectionately called "Adam Lozonga, the II." It's "Adam, the II," because "Adam, the I," a tiny, 28-inch 'gator, is temporarily in regimental disgrace—and in jail.

Little Adam used to be the mascot but he brought "shame" to the outfit one summer's day when he took off "over the hill" and went A. W. O. L. Regimental men looked everywhere, little Adam was discussed over a national radio network, officials wired to Fort Dix, N. J. on a rumor an alligator was found there—but no Adam. To sooth their aching heart, one of the alligator farms in Florida sent the ponderous "Adam, the II" to the regiment, but only three weeks after the big boy's arrival, little Adam poked his mud-stained snout over the edge of a ditch one frosty morning and headed for his old hangout.

There, however, he was given the cold shoulder, slapped into "confinement" under guard and made to take second place to his complacent substitute, "Adam, the I." Both I and II went to the 124th's football games last week and this week and Adam II even wore a football helmet and jersey—much to his disgust.

BUILD GUEST HOUSE

So one day the boys decided they needed a guest house for visiting relatives and friends of the soldiers. There was no wood, no labor available because of priorities and the war effort. That

Communications Section, TIS, Sets Example for Other Schools

Courses for Officers, Enlisted Men Here Adopted by Army

The specialized Communication Section of the Infantry School at Fort Benning offers two courses, the Enlisted Radio Operators' Course and the Officers' Communication Course. The former has for its mission the development of qualified operators for all types of radio sets used within the Infantry, the standardization of operational procedure, and the training of radio instructors. The officers' course is designed to produce qualified communications officers for infantry units, and qualified instructors in signal communications.

The physical set up for the Communications Section is very elaborate, and their equipment is the most modern obtainable. Housed in a large group of new wooden buildings on the main post, classes are conducted in well-lighted lecture and work rooms. The new code room, a model of good planning, is a source of amazement and admiration to all visitors.

The methods of instruction developed by the Communications Section here are considered so good that they have been adopted by the War Department as standard for all communications schools throughout our ground forces. Even the Signal Corps, the branch which specializes in communications, has adopted The Infantry School's methods of teaching code. The technique used is rather complicated and until proved feasible here, it was deemed impossible by the other branches of the service. It consists largely of teaching from phonograph recordings made in this code room. The man cutting the record sends a letter or a number with a code key, and then gives the phonetic name for the character and an oral explanation. Thus the students hearing the records played get the code sound of the character and a spoken explanation at the same time. Instructors from this section have been called to Washington to cut such records for the Library of Congress.

INDIVIDUAL WORKROOMS

The code room is set up with rows of tables at which the students sit. By means of small partitions the tables are divided into individual booths, each equipped with a set of ear phones. Through these phones the students receive code sent from the phonograph records, from code tapes, or tapped out on a key by one of the instructors. By means of an intricate control panel containing hundreds of electric switches, it is possible to send different code messages and different speeds to each set of ear phones in the code room. Thus no student is held back by slower men in his class, nor would he be shoved ahead to a more advanced lesson before he had mastered the one he was doing.

Both the communications courses taught here are twelve week programs, but they differ widely in requirement, scope, and content. The Enlisted Radio Operators' Course places greatest stress on code speed with 13 words per minute as the minimum requirement for graduation. Many of the operators reach many more words before they complete the course.

The students in the Enlisted Radio Operator's course are enlisted men selected in the various infantry field regiments because of a high code aptitude. They are sent to Fort Benning on detached service from their permanent units, and they return to those units after completing the course. The Officers' Communications course is made up of commissioned officers who have been selected to be communications officers, and they too return to their permanent stations at the end of their twelve weeks' training.

The enlisted students have code practice every day of the course.

During the first four weeks, classes in all types of radio sets are alternated with the code practice. Courses in map readings, message center procedure, and cryptography are presented during the same period. Large visual aids in the form of enlarged models of radio sets are used to aid the instruction. As the instructor mentions a particular instrument, an assistant instructor points it out on the enlarged model.

RADIO PROCEDURE

During the next three weeks, classes in radio procedure are added to the radio sets study and the code practice, and all three subjects are taught each day. Then in the eighth week four subjects a day are presented, with wire communication being added to the other three. Radio sets and radio procedure are dropped from the schedule in the ninth week, and tactical information is added to make a three subject a day program along with wire and code practice. The last three weeks of the course are spent on code practice and the operation of radios in actual field nets.

The students in the Officers' Communication Course are given code practice every day for approximately eight weeks, during which time they also receive instruction in wire communications, map reading, cryptography, message center procedure, radio sets, radio procedure, and field nets. During the first five weeks much time is spent on wire communications. Under this heading, the officer students handle telephones, operate switchboards, climb poles, lay wire, and splice breaks. They do everything that the enlisted men under them will be called upon to do when they get out in field units as communications officers.

Greatest stress in the officers' course is placed on tactics, including the part played by a communications platoon in regimental attack or defense situations, the selection of command posts, and axes of signal communication. They study the laying of wire lines to supporting and subordinate units, and the interior arrangement of command posts. Several hours of the course are devoted to map reading and aerial photograph reading, and practical work in map reading is included in all tactical exercises. The School encourages these officer students to use their own initiative insolving all problems and will accept any plausible solution as correct.

OTHER INSTRUCTION

Eight hours of the course are spent in automotive instruction. This covers all types of infantry motor vehicles and the proper method of loading them. It includes the selection and training of drivers. Lectures are given on field expedients with motor vehicles, and the maintenance and inspection of those vehicles.

During the field net training, the students actually operate the radios over an extended area. Ground to air communication is maintained with some of the students riding in an airplane and communicating with other students on the ground. A few hours are spent on visual and sound signalling, including panels, pyrotechnic signals, and improvised flags and lamps. The use of sound as a means of communication is discussed. Such devices as whistles, sirens, horns, and rattles are employed.

All students in both courses under the Communications Section get the best possible training in communications. When they graduate from this school, they return to their units as expert enlisted operator or radio chiefs, or as first class communications officers.

Bill Requests $100 More For Uniforms

Warrant Officers National Guard Are Included

A bill to increase the allowance for uniforms for Army officers is expected to be asked of Congress soon by the War Department, according to Washington authorities.

An increase in the present allowance from $150 to $250 has been asked by the War Department, it is understood but the Bureau of the Budget has not yet approved such a request, so that Congressional action on this phase of the proposed bill is in doubt. The Budget Bureau, however, has approved a revision of the present complicated law which would extend the uniform allowance to warrant officers and to National Guard Officers.

Two bills probably will be sent to the Congress, one to extend the clothing money allowances to National Guard officers below the rank of major and the second a War Department proposal to rewrite the present uniform allowance law.

CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS

The present law applies primarily to officers below grade of major, ordered to and accepted for active duty in excess of three months. Except for certain classes of Reserve officers, the bill covers only those officers commissioned on and after Sept. 26, 1941, and it is believed that the new draft will remove the limiting date and will permit any officer below rank of major, regardless of when commissioned, to draw the allowance when he reports for duty.

Warrant officers also will benefit from the proposed bill and will receive the allowance when called to duty. However, chief warrant officers in the fourth pay period will be prohibited from receiving the allowance, just as majors are.

Fathers, Sons (Two Pair) Are Inducted Here

Four Colored Men Now Are Privates At Ft. Benning

It was father and son day with a double emphasis when two sets of colored fathers and sons were sworn in at the induction center this week at Fort Benning, and now both sets are beginning their army training together.

One of the father and son groups comes from Birmingham, Ala. They are Lee T. Watts, Sr., and Lee T. Watts, Jr., both of 1943 Twenty-first avenue, Birmingham, Ala.

The elder Watts, who was born Nov. 22, 1899, has been a coal miner for 22 years, of which 20 have been spent with the Republic Steel corporation at Birmingham. The younger Watts, born September 25, 1921, is a school teacher, and is principal of Mt. Pilgrim Junior High school, Livingston, Ala.

The four men were sworn in by Lt. William F. Ryles, induction station officer.

Garrison Library

By FRANCES CHANDLER

This Armistice Day makes us remember that the last war did not make the world safe for democracy, but through books we can keep alive the ideals which will make democracy live again.

Elmer Davis recently wrote the following: "One of the first acts of the Japanese in the Philippines was to destroy an American library. The policy of the Nazis and the Fascists toward libraries, librarians, writers of books, and readers of books has long been familiar to us. The Japanese by their act of barbarism adopted the Nazi policy for themselves."

Many books have been published in the last few months which can help to win the war. The following books which are available in the Garrison Library should be on your must list for worthwhile reading:

Brown, Cecil. Suez to Singapore. Random house, 1942.

Byas, Hugh. The Japanese Enemy: His Power and His Vulnerability. Knopf, 1942.

Carr, E. H. Conditions of Peace. Macmillan, 1942.

Churchill, Winston. Blood, Sweat, and Tears. Putnam. 1941.

Kernan, W. F. Defense Will not Win the War. Little, 1942.

Kiralfy, Alexander. Victory in the Pacific: How We Must Defeat Japan. Day, 1942.

Michie, A. A. Retreat to Victory. Alliance, 1942.

Shirer, W. L. Berlin Diary: the Journal of a Foreign Correspondent. Knopf, 1941.

Smith, H. L. Last Train from Berlin. Knopf, 1942.

SMART SERGEANT

Barracks debate at Camp Barkeley, Texas, flares high over the justice of it all, but makes a funny story. To tell it: take three privates, six dollars, no names, and one smart sergeant. Like this: The first private was assigned to Kitchen Police and wanted instead to go to Abilene that week-end. So he offered the second private six dollars to do the job for him. The second private agreed, pocketed the half dozen dollars and found a third private. The last private was persuaded to take over the KP detail for three dollars, leaving a nice profit for the middleman. But the last private, worried about getting up on time, dropped into the company office and asked to be awakened early for KP duty. The sergeant noticed his name was not on the list and started an inquiry. Result: The first private didn't go to Abilene, the second private didn't keep his profit, the last private didn't get to sleep. They ALL did KP, and the sergeant who put two and two together, finds it makes six dollars.

Jascha Heifetz Here Nov. 22

Famed Violinist Plans Post Concert

It was wartime, the night of October 27, 1917, when a 16-year old Russian violinist stepped on the stage of Carnegie Hall and played for the first time in the country which was to become his own.

It was again wartime when Jascha Heifetz started out in October, 1942, on a coast-to-coast tour in the course of which he will play here on Sunday, November 22 at Fort Benning's Sports Arena in the Harmony Church area.

Always a believer in fine music for everyone and convinced that music now is more vital than ever before, Heifetz is not only filling a more extended concert tour this season than last, but is playing as many concerts en route for service men in camps as his engagements permit.

Ever since the war broke out, the violinist has devoted much of his time to civilian war work at his home on the coast of Southern California and presenting at army camps. The army concerts have proved to Heifetz that American soldiers are not only hungry for music, but for the best in music.

On any subject relating to his work, Heifetz is eager and willing to talk. But about his personal life he has never been particularly glib. He has always felt that music-making was his story. Once, when Deems Taylor was writing an article about him and asked for detailed biographical information, Heifetz said: "I wish you'd keep it short. Just make it: 'Born in Russia, first lessons at three, debut in Russia at seven, debut in America in 1917'. That's all there is to say, really. About two lines."

This outline, when filled in, reveals that Jascha Heifetz was born in Vilna on Feb. 2, 1901. He took his first lessons from his father, Ruvin, himself a professional violinist. As a small child Jascha studied at the Royal school of his native city, then in St. Petersburg under the best teacher of the time, Professor Leopold Auer.

Once famous in Russia as a child prodigy, Heifetz made his Berlin debut at ten with the Philharmonic under Nikisch, followed by appearances with the orchestra in Leipzig and Vienna. When the first World War broke out, the youth was touring the Scandinavian countries. Later he returned to Russia where he remained, playing all through the difficult winter of 1916-17.

June 27, 1917! Food rations were down to a quarter of a pound a person, machine guns were filling the Petrograd streets with dead, and Kerensky was at the head of the new government when the Heifetz family assembled their belongings and left Russia.

They were five—mother, father, two sisters and Heifetz. They travelled eastward, across Siberia, and finally, punctuated by stops in Japan and Honolulu, their ultimate goal was reached—New York.

Since that time Heifetz has toured the world four times, has played in almost every country on the face of the globe and has, in the course of concert-giving, "travelled a distance equivalent to two round trips to the moon and is well along on the first leg of a third."

'Medicos' Will Be Suspended For Duration

Urging readers to join in support of "The Bayonet," official post publication of Ft. Benning, the staff of "Medicos" announced in the current issue that publication of the monthly paper would be suspended.

The "Medicos" has been published for the past 17 months by the Medical Department Detachment of the Station Hospital and has gained in popularity with each issue, being sent all over the country with its news, views, sports and humor.

"With deepest regret, the Staff of the Medicos announces that this issue of our publication will be the last edition for the duration," the announcement said. "In cooperation with the conservation of essential war materials we feel that a continued reduction in the use of paper will aid in the defense effort; and also that we might lend a helping hand to the post-wide publication "The Bayonet," published by the Public Relations Office of Fort Benning."

ALWAYS WORKING

The MP was tired. He had been on duty in San Antonio and was headed for Kelly Field and bed. Yet all the soldiers who entered the bus went over to him and exhibited their passes. At last the MP rebelled. He said, "Look, you guys. I'm just riding the bus like the rest of you. Don't I ever get off duty?" It's the same way in civil life, soldier. Look at the doctor who is always prescribing free for his host's cold, or the piano player who is always asked to bring the music to the party.

Standards Set On Homes For Army In City

Billeting Officer Approves Rents And Living Conditions

In a small office in the center of Columbus sit four men, one officer and three enlisted men, who directly govern the living conditions of every officer and enlisted man living in Columbus and vicinity. This group of men is known as the personnel of the Billeting office.

The purpose of this office is to appraise and approve apartments and houses, establish rental that army personnel can afford, and control that price, on every place that is open to military personnel.

In order for a home to be approved by the Billeting office, the owner must first call the office and have a representative investigate the conditions of the home. Two representatives look the place over, noting the type of heat, neighborhood, type of furniture if it is furnished, and taking everything into consideration. The house is then compared with others in the same section of town. Once the price is established, the address is placed on the list of "approved homes."

At the end of the month of October there were 1,120 sharehouses and 775 rooms on the approved list. During the average week 45 rooms and 40 sharehouses are listed with the Billeting office for rent. More than 110 calls a day are made to the office, and many persons call at the office in person for advice. The Billeting office will not rent any rooms unless it is requested by the owner.

STAFF IN COLUMBUS

First Lt. George E. Fogel is the billeting officer and his staff consists of three enlisted men, Cpl. William J. Duffy, Tech 5th Gr. Lee S. Scarbrough and Tech 5th Gr. Steve J. Ivanisyzn.

On the other side of the ledger, is the convenience to men looking for a place to live. The entire list of rooms and sharehouses are available to anyone looking for a place to live. A member of the armed forces find that it saves them a lot of trouble, due to the fact that military personnel cannot live in a house that is not approved.

One of the less known jobs of the Billeting office is to act as arbitrator. If a property owner has any claim against army personnel or vice versa, the Billeting office investigates and tries to settle the claim.

The office has been received with open arms by Army personnel and civilians alike. According to Lt. Fogel, the cooperation received from all has been favorable. "The Chamber of Commerce is owed a deep vote of thanks for the wonderful cooperation that has been extended by that organization to the Billeting office," the lieutenant said.

Miss Reynolds Finds Checks For a Million Just Routine

Were Among First Yanks To Go To War Zone

Checks for a million dollars are just "pieces of paper" for one feminine employe at Fort Benning who includes the drawing of million-dollar checks in her routine duties for the day.

She is Miss Mary Reynolds, principal clerk of the commercial accounts section at the Finance Office and one of the older employes in point of service at Fort Benning.

Miss Reynolds, perhaps, more than any other woman employed at Fort Benning, has a good idea of just how big the "big business" at Fort Benning is.

As principal clerk of her section now, Miss Reynolds supervises the paying of all commercial accounts, all subsistence accounts for troops of the post, all construction bills and bills for maintenance work—in fact, everything used by the government on the post is paid for by this office.

And in the office, Miss Reynolds is the chief "check-writer."

Last month, for example the department paid bills of more than a million dollars, exclusive of construction accounts. For such high-geared payment of bills, Miss Reynolds has to draw checks of more than a million dollars at one time. As a typical example, one check with one figure followed by six zeroes was paid to a construction company one day recently for work at the post.

Other "minor items" that keep this feminine "high-financier" busy all day at the Finance Office are the payment of all Quartermaster market center accounts for the Columbus office; payment of all meal tickets for soldiers traveling to and from Fort Benning and payment of all subsistence accounts for air field located near Columbus.

Miss Reynolds, who has been working in the post Finance Office since April, 1926, was graduated from the State Normal College at Milledgeville, Georgia. With the exception of one year when she taught, her entire business career has been spent in the Fort Benning Finance Office.

Fort Benning's Station Hospital Medical Detachment now has a 15 piece orchestra which plays frequently at social events at the Post.

DID HE SEND THE PACKAGE BACK?

The most surprised man in Northern Ireland was Corporal Jack McNamara of the armored forces when he received a package from his wife in Chicago at a recent mail call. The contents were all ladies unmentionables, sent him by mistake by a department store which got the orders mixed. Now what should a man do? It costs so much to send them back, and with the shortage of such garments over there and all, and all....It has Corporal McNamara puzzled.

'OKAY BUDDY . . . I MEAN, SIR'

Private Johnny Graves, postal clerk at Camp Edwards, Mass., will never get chatty again. The last time Johnny said to the man who spelled out his name in asking for mail, "Okay, bud." And what's that uniform. Canadian or British?" The man replied, "British." And Johnny said, "Not bad, not bad, what's the junk on the shoulder for?" And the man said, "For majors, bud." And Johnny said, "Yessss, SIR!".

Skilled Auto Mechanics Trained At Infantry School For Tactical Units

Automotive Section Offers Variety of Courses Here

The Automotive Section of The Infantry School, under the direction of Colonel Cornelius E. Ryan, has attracted wide attention for its methods of training expert motor mechanics and motor maintenance officers. Representatives from automotive schools of avrious branches of the Army have come here to observe the techniques employed at The Infantry School.

The Automotive Section presents two similar 12-week courses, one for officers and one for enlisted men. Known respectively as the Officers' Motor Maintenance Course and the Enlisted Motor Mechanics' Course, their avowed mission is to produce qualified transport and maintenance officers, and also skilled mechanics capable of performing and supervising second echelon maintenance and the operation of all vehicles organic in the infantry regiment.

The permanent personnel of the section includes more than 400 officers and non-commissioned officers as instructors and assistant instructors. A new class of students is admitted each week. An officer's class enters every fourth week; the other three are enlisted motor mechanics. The students for both courses come, for the most part, from tactical units in the field. Contrary to the procedure for Officer Candidates, these men are not transferred to The Infantry School Service Command, but come here on detached service from their permanent units. Upon completion of the course, they return to those units.

GROUP ORGANIZATION

The section is divided into headquarters which handles administration, and four instructional groups, known respectively as the engine, chassis, operation, and general groups. The students get four weeks of work with each of the engine, chassis, and operations groups. The general group presents eight hours of automotive instruction to all officer and officer candidate classes.

The first four weeks of the automotive courses are spent on engines. After a general orientation to the course, the first few days are devoted to the operation, construction, nomenclature, and function of the four cycleinternal combustion engine, including the principles of carburetion, I, L, and V head engines are studied in detail.

Carburetors used on all infantry vehicles form the next subject for instruction. Considerable time is spent on carburetor and valve adjustment. The method of instruction here, as throughout the entire course, follows the conference, demonstration, and practical work sequence found in all branches of The Infantry School. Here the greatest emphasis is on practical work. The students in the automotive courses learn by doing. For instance, the officer instructor tells the class how to make carburetor and valve adjustments, and the assistant instructors demonstrate the procedure. Then every student must make all the adjustments himself, repeating them until there is no doubt that he understands them thoroughly.

STUDY ELECTRICITY

Much time during the second week of the course is devoted to automotive electricity. Under this heading the classes study batteries, generators, starters, and battery ignition systems, including functioning of distributors. Detailed studies of automotive failures have revealed that almost all of them are caused by faulty carburetion or defective electricity systems, with 85 per cent of all failures traceable to the latter. Accordingly, a heavy stress is placed on these systems with an eye to preventing breakdowns and to repairing with minimum delay those that do occur in the field.

Beginning with the third week the classes move into the live engine building. All but four hours of the third week's instruction is spent on live engines. Here the study of the ignition systems is continued. Wiring and timing, lighting systems, and electrical tests of the electricity systems follow in order. Next the students learn engine tune up. They spend many hours studying causes for failure and diagnosing troubles. The instructors set up troubles on the engines deliberately before the classes begin, and then the students are required to diagnose the trouble and to make all necessary repairs. The final sessions with the engine group are devoted to a study of field ranges and air compressors found in infantry units. This period concludes with a comparison of infantry engines with other engines used in the mechanized cavalry, the armored forces, the artillery, civilian vehicles, and others.

WORK ON CHASSIS

The fifth through the eighth week of the course is spent with the chassis group. Here as with the engine group, the students learn by doing. The practical work consists of the disassembly, adjustments at least once.

After a general orientation into the chassis group, the first class is on mechanical principles. A conference on bearings is followed by a study of frames and their function as the foundation of the vehicles. All types of clutches used in infantry vehicles are examined next. After a lecture by the officer in charge and a demonstration by his enlisted assistants, all students take apart and adjust the various clutches being studied.

Transmissions, transfer cases, and winches are discussed and studied. Each student must learn to diagnose and repair the causes for failures in these parts. In addition to the mechanics of the winch, a conference is given on all the possible advantages of that instrument in the field, and also the normal abuses which should be avoided.

Springs, shackles, shock absorbers, propellor shafts, universal joints, front and rear and their component parts make up the work of the sixth week. This is followed by a study of wheels, runs, and tires, with much time spent on simple rules of rubber conservation, a problem necessitated by the present rubber shortage. In this connection, proper wheel and frame alignment is stressed to preserve tires, as well as to promote safety and ease of steering.

Proper lubrication of all vehicles is studied thoroughly. Live vehicles used by the demonstration regiments for the school are brought into the section for servicing, and each student gets ample practice in lubricating all types of infantry vehicles.

STUDY WELDING

The final period of this seventh week is spent on acetylene welding. Both officer students and enlisted students learn how to do welding in the field, as well as the use, care, and handling of welding equipment.

The eighth week, which is the last week with the chassis group, is devoted to brakes. After a conference and a demonstration on all types of brakes, the students spend several days in practical work diagnosing and repairing brake faults. Mechanical, hydraulic, vacuum, hydrovac, air, and electric brakes are studied in detail. This work ranges from simple brake adjustments to brake shoe relining. The period ends with an inspection by the students of live vehicles and the adjustment of their brakes.

The final four weeks are spent with the operations group, and are devoted to all phases of field maintenance with greatest stress on driver maintenance, breaking in new vehicles, and proper lubrication. The first period is devoted to the assembly and adjustment of the motorcycle. Next the students learn how to supervise first and second echelon maintenanee and how to conduct an army inspection. They are taught the procedure for thousand mile and six thousand mile check-ups.

Preparing vehicles for movement by rail are discussed. Classes are held on the servicing and breaking-in of new vehicles and on the operation of all vehicles under such adverse weather conditions as desert heat or sub-zero cold.

Discussion periods are held throughout the month on expedients and short cuts in vehicle operation and maintenance. Students returning for school from units in the fields of operations contribute many suggestions learned under battle conditions. These discussions periods help the automotive section keep up to date in their instruction.

LEARN FIELD WORK

The final week of the course covers field expedients and day and night motor marches. The students are taught how to load and lash vehicles properly and how to operate a motor park. An exercise is held on a bivouac problem at night. One half of the students are in charge on the way out to the bivouac, and the other half takes over on the return trip. The convoy proceeds under blackout conditions and battle procedure is faithfully simulated. An airplane follows the convoy to determine whether their movements are visible from the air. When they reach the bivouac area, the observer in the plane drops a message by parachute which is used in a critique of the problem.

Probably no section of the Infantry School makes better use of visual aids than does the automotive section. The section has its own drafting room and its own carpenter shop where five draftsmen and three carpenters are kept busy full time making visual aids to instruction. An enlargement facsimile of virtually every part of every vehicle studied is made. Some of these enlarged models are as much as fifteen times the size of the actual part. They are constructed to scale and are painted in bright colors to distinguish one part from the other. And what is most important, these models actually work.

The automotive section of The Infantry School is the center of motor information for the entire infantry branch of the army. It provides pamphlets and instructional materials to army units all over the world.

Expansion of 21st QM Regiment Is Enormous

Is Proving Ground For Colored Officers

The 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), of Fort Benning, is rapidly becoming the proving ground for newly commissioned colored officers. Commanded by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, this regiment has 41 colored officers the largest complement of colored officers, on active duty, of any unit on the post.

The first to arrive at Fort Benning in July, 1942, were eight graduates of the Quartermaster Officer Candidate School in Fort Warren, Wyoming. Of that number, four were given first hand experience with troops and then sent to another post as cadre for a new organization. Word has since come back that one of these officers is now a battalion adjutant and that another is a company commander.

Of the four who remained with the 21st Quartermaster Regiment, Lt. Winfred T. Gilmore is Assistant Traffic Officer for the regiment; Lt. Andrew B. White is one of the company officers, Lt. Everett Bell is assistant to the Regimental Supply Officer, and Lt. Henry A. Talbert is the Regimental Public Relations Officer. Since joining the regiment the latter two officers have been promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. Arriving at approximately the same time as the above mentioned officers, 1st Lt. Levi L. Stanmore reported from Washington, D. C. and assumed the duties of regimental chaplain.

During the last week in September, a large group of graduates of the Quartermaster Officer Candidate School at Camp Lee, Va., reported for duty with the regiment and of this number four were colored. They were Lt. Clyde Rhinehart, of New Orleans, Louisiana, who is assistant adjutant of the regiment, Lt. Tyler Hill, Jr., of Charleston, W. Va., who has recently been serving as adjutant of the Third Battalion, and Lieut. John W. Hoggat and Jackson Searcie, of Nashville, Tenn., and Oklahoma City, Okla., respectively, who are company officers in an attached unit.

NEW ARRIVALS

With the coming of November, other groups of colored officers began arriving from the Officer's Pool, Camp Lee, Va. Fifteen in number, they are Second Lieutenants Charles Campbell, of Washington, D. C.; Joseph Dismond, of Hampton, Va; Robert H. Ewing, of South Bend, Ind.; Edward L. Goodlett, of Atlanta, Ga.; Robert W. Harris, of Anniston, Ala.; Melvin A. Hendry, of San Diego, Calif.; William Gray, of Chicago, Ill.; Fambro Kendrick, of Savannah, Ga.; Herman McKinney, of Wilmington, Del.; Lynnwood Parker, of Omaha, Neb.; Olivey R. Pope, Jr., of Philadelphia, Pa.; Clarence W. Purvis, of New York City, N. Y.; William Sanderson, of Kansas City, Mo.; and Moses Spencer, of Saint Louis, Mo.

Five days later another quota from Camp Lee sent the following colored officers to the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck): Second Lieutenants Lloyd M. Wright, of Atlantic City, N. J.; Robert C. Long, of Norfolk, Va.; Crawford H. Lydle, Jr., of Muskogee, Okla.; Ralph W. Hall, of Thomasville, Ga.; Thomas H. Meeks, of Joplin, Mo.; Hugh D. Murdock, of Saint Louis, Mo.; Emmid E. Bradford, of Saint Louis, Mo.; Adolphe J. Peters, of Stamford, Conn.; James C. White, of Kansas City, Kan.; Milton V. Seraile, of New Orleans, La.; Clyde W. Briggs, of Kansas City, Kan.; Charles H. Fields, Jr., of Absecon, N. J.; Richard A. Edwards, of Proctorville, Ohio; Channing C. Colston, of Montclair, N. J.; Manuel E. Coasta, of New Bedford, Mass.; William H. Webb, Jr., of Indianapolis, Ind., and Leon E. Terry, of San Francisco, Calif.

In checking the Qualification Cards and personal history of these officers, it is interesting to note that a goodly portion of them are college graduates—with one holding a Master of Science degree. Fourteen of these men were in business, there were some football coaches, professional men, Post Graduate students, and several travelers. The present chaplain was the pastor of a very prominent church in Washington, D. C. A look at the Pay Data Cards disclosed the information that the bachelors slightly outnumber the married men.

Having the privilege of being assigned to one of the army's greatest truck units, and receiving whole hearted cooperation from veteran, experienced officers in the 21st Quartermaster Regiment, it may be truthfully said that the colored officers assigned to this regiment have a wonderful chance for advancement.

HABIT DIDN'T HELP

The Staff Sergeant at Camp Crowder, Missouri, who had just been assigned as Mess Sergeant reported pretty sleepy on his first day. At any rate the lieutenant who inspected the dining room before breakfast swears that when he advised the sergeant the dishes were not stacked in a military manner, the dialogue went like this: Lieutenant: "Sergeant. Those dishes are out of line." Sergeant: "Ten shun, Dress right. DRESS! . . . (Yawn) . . . oh . . . DISHES!!!" The sergeant didn't bother the KPs. The sergeant lined the dishes up himself.

Data is being compiled at Fort Benning for a new Army manual on how best to apportion meats to units in the field.

PARATROOPS—Well-Trained and Heavily Armed—Practice Their Art at Fort Benning

These striking pictures of Paratroopers in training at Fort Benning realistically portray the tough and alert soldiers as they engage in their daily routines. The Paratrooper's life is not an easy one and it is not solely made up of thrilling jumps from soaring transport planes: Out of bed at the break of dawn, hours of rugged physical cross country running, practice jumps from training towers.

Paratroopers at Benning are selected men; all are volunteers for the tough, exacting and exciting assignment. Hundreds of qualified jumpers are graduated every month in a thorough and streamlined course to prepare thousands of these shock troops for assault and battle against the enemy.

Picture at top right illustrates the manner in which the troops file onto Lawson Field to board a transport plane from which they will jump. The troops are clad in warm suits, with protective headgear and high boots, typical of the excellent equipment designed solely for the Paratroops.

Picture top center, shows a group of troops in a transport planes as they prepare to jump off into space. Only thoroughly trained and hardened soldiers—typical of American Paratroopers—are qualified to engage in their hazardous business every day of the year.

Picture middle right shows one of the four 250-foot training towers at Fort Benning, in which Paratroopers take their first "jump." The trooper dropping down from the tower is in the early stages of jumping, although he is physically fit veloped and excel in high and low-altitude jumping, techniques

Picture middle center shows Paratrooper as he floats down from the Georgia skies. Troops trained at Benning have developed and excell in high and low-altitude jumping, techniques which will be used to surprise the enemy when they make their attack.

Picture lower left is a striking photograph, showing several chutes opened in the skies overhead, the Paratroopers floating down to earth again.

Picture lower right shows the Paratroopers in action once they have landed. Heavily armed and trained in the use of many varieties of weapons, these soldiers are deadly and will prove their mettle when they drop behind the enemy's lines.

Expert Rigger Made In Parachute School

Students Are Taught To Sew 44 Different Seams In Course

Yes, the sergeant is really learning to sew, but don't get him wrong! Sewing is one of the prerequisites of becoming an expert rigger at the Parachute Riggers' School, Fort Benning.

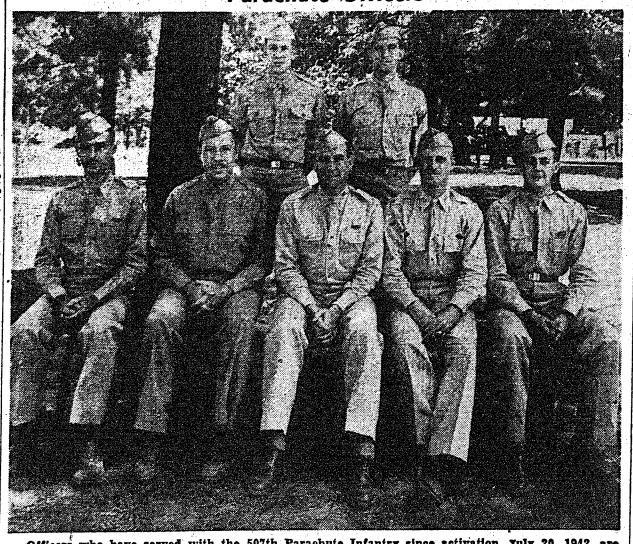
Here the prospective packers are taught not only the technique of folding chutes, but also maintenance, minor repair work, inspection routine, operation and use of all types of these silk umbrellas, and even the manufacture of containers in which these and others must be dropped.

Students are chosen from men who show special aptitude for this type work during their training as jumpers. After qualifying as paratroopers the men are sent to Captain E. Verne Stewart, a veteran parachutist, and rigger, with 22 years' experience in this particular branch for one month of special training. As a matter of fact he was, and the captain really knows his work, training jumpers and riggers at his own school in Chicago, prior to coming into the army.

During the course students are given 70 hours of work and are taught 44 different seams on specially constructed sewing machines, which cost from $200 to $1,000. On these machines they learn to repair small holes in parachutes, patch harness straps, repair leather clothing, and the actual construction of containers for equipment which must be dropped. This often involves the development of personal initiative and ingenuity, for nearly always the rigger will work alone and unassisted.

LICENSE ISSUED

On completion of this month's training, the student receives a license permitting him to pack civilian as well as army parachutes, and is recognized as a qualified rigger by the Civil Aeronautic Authority.



Besides the training on the sewing machine the student's eight hour day includes lessons in knot tying and hand sewing. He is taught more knots than a sailor and 14 different hand stitches.

After receiving his certificate, the new rigger is assigned to a parachute service company, where he is charged with all the maintenance and repair for a regiment. In combat the riggers do not ordinarily jump, even though they are qualified to do so. They will pack all chutes, serve as jumpmasters, and drop supplies to troops on the ground. In this latter capacity they will be called on to pack material weighing from 25 to 1,000 pounds, so that it will reach the ground in useable condition.

The school is a comparatively new innovation, being started on July 20, 1942, under the supervision of Captain Stewart. Formerly this work was handled by the Air Force.

Parachute Officers

'Sewing' Seeds of Destruction

"Now, sergeant, this is the way to do it," Captain E. Verne Stewart, officer in charge of the rigger's course, at the Army Parachute School, is telling Sergeant Aubrey E. Wells, as Wells learns about the mysteries of the sewing machine.

Hardy Paratroopers Train At Post By Hundreds Preparing For Battle

Parachute troops today are a dominant factor in the armed forces of the United States and the story of their development in two short years is a Fort Benning saga of inspired leadership, painstaking planning and cold courage on the part of the thousands of rugged, young Americans who are the rank and file of our parachute legions of 1942.

On this, the 24th anniversary of the founding of Fort Benning, the Parachute Training School commanded by a pioneer paratrooper, Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, is recognized and vital part of the post.

Not ten, a dozen or fifty parachute troops are trained in a month at this new school, but hundreds and hundreds of qualified paratroopers proudly graduate every four weeks, ready for assignment to the rapidly-growing parachute infantries destined some day to make American military history.

The sprawling buildings of the new schools, the four impressive jump towers, the hundreds of trained—and training—parachute troops that compose the Howell-commanded First Parachute Infantry Brigade at Fort Benning are monuments to American enterprise and ingenuity that created the Parachute School from a nucleus of 50 intrepid officers and men who in July, 1940, set about to make a War Department paper-plan a reality at Fort Benning.

The 29th Infantry Regiment, long a tradition at Fort Benning, furnished the cadre for the first American parachute troops who were placed under the command of an energetic, far-seeing West Point lieutenant, William T. Ryder, for this important assignment.

The test platoon of two officers and 48 enlisted men were sent to Chanute Field, Ill., for orientation and early training. From there the group went to Hightstown, N. J., for jump training on the 125-foot towers and in a few weeks returned to Fort Benning, where their jumps from transport planes over Lawson Field marked the birth of American paratroopers.

START NEW UNITS

So successful were the experiments with parachute troops that on Oct. 3, 1940, the 501st Parachute Battalion, the first of a long list of parachute infantry units was activated and the Army was under way in earnest on its development of parachute troops.

The Army had been studying the importance of airborne infantry such as paratroopers for years and the establishment of this first parachute battalion was carried out by the famous Infantry Board at Fort Benning, the group of "military scientists" charged with the development of infantry tactics for American armies.

Under the immediate direction and supervision of the Director of the Board, members supervised and initiated tests leading to the development or tables of organization and special equipment for the parachute infantries, methods of training, weapons to be used and even the type of footgear to be worn.

Enlistment in the paratroopers was always—and still is—purely voluntary and shortly after the 501st was formed, volunteers were pouring in so fast that waiting lists had to be established.

Guiding the early training of the first battalion was the now-Captain Ryder and his little test platoon, who were the "guinea pigs" of the Infantry Board. There were other capable, aggressive infantry officers assigned to the first battalion such as its commanding officer, Maj. William E. Miley—now Brig. Gen. Miley and an important figure today in the development of air-borne troops; General Howell, who as Major Howell served as executive officer of the battalion and later as commanding officer of the 502nd Battalion, when it was activated in July, 1941, and Lt. Col. William C. Lee—now General Lee and another important man in the development of this new branch of the service—who later commanded the Provisional Parachute Group.

PROGRAM EXPANDS

The formation of the Provisional Parachute Group in the late fall of 1940 was the answer to the rapidly-growing parachute legions. Formed early in 1941 to facilitate the training of new jumpers and the growth of the 501st, the Group—still operating under the Infantry School—eventually included the 501st, the 502nd, the 503rd and the 504th Battalions, which were all organized at Fort Benning in the 12 months following the activation of the 501st.

In May, 1941 two 250-foot jump towers were completed, marking a milestone in the training program of the 'chutists, like popcorn from a paper bag.

Pearl Harbor drew a cloak of military secrecy around U. S. training programs such as the development of parachute troops, but despite the urgency of the situation and the greatly stepped-up program the same thorough and complete training and conditioning that marked the early stages of paratrooping continued at Fort Benning. Months of practice had evolved a compact, gruelling four weeks training course that taught the jumpers the fundamentals of jumping from speeding planes at low altitudes—more hangers were built, more barracks and training equipment added — and early in 1942, two more 250-foot shafts of steel towered above Fort Benning.

The spring of 1942 marked another important step in the development of parachute training because in May, 1942, the Parachute School was formally established and General Howell, then Colonel Howell, was brought to Fort Benning to be its first commandant. About the same time, part of the training program and part of the parachute troops were

Paratrooper Frowns On 'Glamor Boy' Title

Are Red-Blooded He-Men Doing He-Men's Work

"We ride to work," the motto of the U. S. Parachute Troops, expresses in its own flippant way the casual and modest courage of these men.

They dislike the title, "Glamor Boys of the Army." They are red-blooded American soldiers doing a red-blooded he-man job. The esprit de corps is high. Officers and men face the same risks side by side, and learn a mutual respect for one another.

No man is forced into this branch of the service. On the contrary, all are volunteers, chosen from the best physical specimens of American manhood.

Only officers and enlisted men, who have completed at least four months of basic training, and who meet rigid physical and mental qualifications, can hope to some day wear the wings and jump boots of a full-fledged paratrooper.

Candidates are subjected to three weeks of rigorous going over before even entering an airplane. During the first two weeks the student is generally limbered up with special exercises, including tumbling, calisthentics, long distance running, rope climbing, jumps from mock-up towers, and the rudiments of wrestling and judo. All during this period he is also learning how to carefully fold and pack his own parachute.

The third week consists of jumps from a 250 foot control-tower, jumps from the 250-foot free-tower, and rides in the shock harness. In the control-tower the student has no control over the movement of the chute. However, he learns the feel of parachuting and something about the technique of landing. Jumping from the free tower, which is the next step, tests all the student has learned to date. Here he is hauled to the top of a 250 foot tower and with chute already opened, is turned loose. Everything is exactly like a jump from a plane, except the actual leap from the door and the opening jerk of the silk.

This latter feeling is experienced when the prospective paratrooper is taken up in the shock harness. Here is a gadget designed for no other purpose than to simulate a real opening, and at the same time test a man's nerve. The student is hooked into a harness, and hauled upward in a horizontal position, face down.

At a height of about 75 feet, the individual is halted and told to grasp the rip-cord. Several lengths of risers are folded behind his harness, which will be released upon pulling the rip-cord. The total length of fall will be that of the folded risers, or about 15 feet. However, the jerk and nervous shock will test the courage of any man.

STIFF TESTS

The men who survive through this third week (and we say that because some will have, by this time, found the tests too great, and the work too hard) are now ready for that last and all important one, the week of actual jumping.

Bright and early Monday morning the candidates are marched down to the jump field. They are sweating, and they sweated last night. Is that chute properly packed? Will it open? Can I even get out of the door?

The men are loaded into the big transport, nearby. Heads are high, jaws are set, and there is a certain grim expression on every face. Silently the men all file in and are seated in rows facing one another. The pilot gives the ship the gun and they are away. About this time the jump master turns around and shouts, "Is everybody happy," and the boys sound off, "Hell yes." The ice is broken. Someone off in the corner starts singing, "We Did It Before" and soon all of them join in. Some of the men smoke, others bring along a magazine and read a little, others laugh a bit too loud at jokes that aren't funny.

NERVOUS TENSION BREAKS

Suddenly the jump-master makes a move, all is silent again. "Stand-up and hook-up," he shouts. Quickly all arise and hook on to the static line. "Check equipment." Each man checks the equipment of the man in front. "Count off." The nervous tension breaks momentarily as each soldier sounds off.

Then the jump-master signals to the pilot, and the plane commences to slow down. The long-awaited moment has arrived. "Stand in the door." Damn; it's a hell of a long way down there. Time goes by at a snail's pace. And then like a clap of thunder comes the command, "Go!"

The first man leaps, followed closely by his buddies. One thousand, two thousand, three thousand," and then the sudden jerk of silk above. About to burst with pride and relief the men start shouting to one another, and singing as they swing earthward.

That night the coming-paratroopers pack their chutes and wait for another day. Again they jump. This goes on for three more days. Then it is time for recognition, graduation day.

Chests swell, and boots fairly burst with polish as each jumper goes forward for his wings. Then with that silver parachute over his heart, the paratrooper knows he's as good as any man.

First Parachute Officer In Army Is Lt.-Colonel

Word has been received at the Parachute School of the promotion of Major William T. Ryder, former assistant commandant of the school, to Lieutenant Colonel.

Lt. Col. Ryder has the distinction of being the first parachute officer in the American Army. It was he who commanded the first test platoon of parachutists, which was made up of volunteers from his regiment, the 29th Infantry.

This platoon of two officers and 48 enlisted men later went to Highstown, N. J., for parachute training on the 125 foot towers at that place. After a month of intensive training and experimentation, Captain Ryder returned to Fort Benning to direct jump training instruction with the 501st Parachute Battalion.

Recently Lt. Col. Ryder was elected by the War Department to act as technical adviser for the RKO production, "Parachute Battalion." Upon his return from Hollywood, the colonel was named assistant commandant of the provisional parachute school, in charge of parachute training in all of its phases.

At present Lt. Colonel Ryder is on detached duty, assisting in training of airborne units, in the Texas maneuver area.

LT. CLINTON MAKES PARADISE OF A MESS

No Wonder 24th General's Mess Is 'Soldier's Delight'

Lt. Clinton Is At It Again But The Setting Is Different

Men of the 24th General Hospital are sporting a well-fed and contented look these days. With a brand new and neatly arranged mess hall, and with 2nd Lt. Clifford Clinton as mess officer, who wouldn't be contented?

Lt. Clinton, in civilian life originated and operated the famous "Golden Rule" restaurants on the west coast. There were no fixed prices. Patrons paid what they thought the meal was worth, and Clinton didn't go broke. He made money.

So one day last week, when the bugler sounded "soldier's delight," chow, Clinton found himself again managing a cafeteria, one which he organized to feed 600 mouths in 18 minutes.

Trays of hot food flowed so fast from four serving lines, that the hungry G. I.'s seemed to melt away. Immediately after receiving their portion of hot chow, the soldiers stopped by one of the buffet tables and helped themselves to coffee, bread, jam, and butter, before being seated.

GOLDEN RULE ENCORE?

The hall beams with cleanliness and good cheer. Several coats of white paint have brightened the walls, which are adorned with portraits and paintings, and canaries provide the music. It could be another "Golden Ruler."

However, there was lots of hard work behind the scenes. Everyone worked extra hours, before the job was done. Lt. Clinton, modestly says it isn't complete, even yet. All soldiers and officers are invited to express freely any suggestions, criticisms, or comments pertaining to the improvement of the mess facilities.

Assistants striving with Lt. Clinton for added efficiency include, Staff Sergeant Elbert Bell, Sergeants William Seaman, Willie Alexander, Charles Meuschke, Roscoe Carter, and twenty-four cooks, two bakers, two butchers, and two store room clerks.

transferred to Fort Bragg, N. C. to further facilitate the tremendous expansion of the units. Named as assistant commandant of the school was vetean-paratrooper Maj. William T. Ryder, the same officer who first developed the art of Army parachute jumping.

B. C. C. ORGANIZE BRIGADE

General Howell also became commander of the First Parachute Brigade, composed of several Parachute Infantries stationed at Fort Benning. Major Ryder — who only this fall became Lt. Col. Ryder—is still playing a vital part in the development of the Army skytroops, returning early in the fall from England. At the present time he is on detached service for air-ground maneuvers in Texas.

An example of the esteem in which the American school is held by its allies in World War II came in late August when a carde of selected Canadian officers and enlisted men arrived to begin training at Fort Benning. The cadre graduated and returned to Canada to establish Canada's first parachute school but already new contingents of Canadian soldiers have arrived at Fort Benning for jump training.

One of the proofs of the careful operation of the school and its program is the fact that despite the hundreds of thousands of jumps that have been made in the last two years, less than a dozen men have been killed.

Today the skies over Fort Benning and Lawson Field are filled with huge transports and billowing parachutes as the school continues its tremendous training program. Only two short years ago, the first American parachute trooper stood at the door of a plane over that same Lawson Field—a trailblazer in the sky, a symbol of American pioneering.

Red Cross Aids Servicemen File Dependents Forms

American Red Cross field directors at Army posts and local Chapters will assist soldiers and their dependents to prepare the official application form under the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act signed by the President on June 23, 1942, it was announced today.

Chapter Home Service workers and field directors have been supplied by the War Department with the official forms and a booklet explaining provisions of the law.

Application for a family allowance should be made by the soldier in every case where practicable. In certain instances, however, the application may be made by relatives or dependents.

Soldiers on duty overseas may obtain application forms from their commanding officers. Relatives or dependents may obtain application forms from the nearest Army installation or their local Red Cross Chapter.

If the application is made by a person other than the service man, documentary evidence must accompany the application. On the other hand, if the soldier himself makes the application he is allowed six months in which to furnish documentary proof to the War Department. Field directors will assist soldiers, and Chapters will aid dependents in furnishing this evidence.

Benning's Civilian Business Women Play Vital Role In War Effort

Women of America—women of the world—are playing a vital and all-important role today in the world at war. Typical of the feminine scene is Fort Benning, the Army's most complete post and the home of the great Infantry School.

Here at Fort Benning are the major generals, the brigadier generals, the other commissioned officers, right on down the line to the sergeants and privates—all working long hours, many of them seven days a week, at the business of training fighting men.

And right by their sides, working the same long hours, handling a thousand one details, seeing to it that things go smoothly and generally making themselves useful are 2,500 "soldiers in skirts"—Fort Benning's contribution to the 1942 Army of women.

THEY ARE CIVILIANS

They are the civilian business women and employes of the post. The grandmothers, the mothers, the married women and the younger girls who accomplish the myriad tasks that fall to the lot of trained women working on a post the size of Fort Benning.

Most of them have homes in nearby Columbus, many of them are the wives of Fort Benning soldiers who came to Georgia to be with their husbands. All are as determined as the soldiers to do as much as they possibly can to win the war completely.

The variety of tasks performed by Fort Benning women is amazing, but their over-all efficiency is the subject of never-ending praise from officials who consider their feminine secretaries, stenographers and clerks their "right-hand men."

Most of the tremendous "paperwork" associated with the administration of a military city like Fort Benning goes through the efficient hands of the feminine workers. The positions held by women at the post run from chief clerks of offices and secretaries to commanding generals through highly-specialized work as physical therapy aides, dietitians and dental hygenists to the maids and attendants in quarters, mess halls and at the hospital.

The great majority are stenographers, clerks and typists. There are specialists such as teletype and telegraph operators, key punch operators, telephone operators, code experts. Many of the women in the high salary brackets handle extremely important papers and work in confidential positions requiring great trustworthiness.

SCATTERED OVER POST

They are scattered all over the post. The Infantry School, Quartermaster offices, post headquarters, the station hospital and other administrative offices have the greatest number employed. Others work at the Parachute School, Ordnance and Signal Offices, telephone exchange, machine records unit, the Reception Center in fact about everywhere where there are offices on the huge reservation.

Naturally the supervisory and administrative problems associated with the employment of 2,500 women present an important task which is ably handled at Fort Benning by Civil Service authorities assisted by military officials.

All feminine employes of Fort Benning come under Civil Service and must abide by the consequent rules and regulations.

C. Arthur Ryden Jr., field representative of the United States Civil Service Commission, supervises the operations of the local Civil Service set-up, which was designated the central personnel agency by the War Department long before war broke out.

The Civil Service Board at Fort Benning maintains complete records of placements, positions open and even rates examinations in order to expedite the hiring of girls. Vacancies are filled as far as possible from local lists, but if no names are available, eligible girls are recruited from Atlanta or Washington.

HAS PERSONNEL DIVISION

Fort Benning post headquarters has created a personnel division headed by Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger Jr., post adjutant, who reports directly to Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general. Heading the personnel division, however, in an administrative capacity is Lt. Raymond A. Parkins, who supervises all of the women employees of the post. Supply activities at the post. Not under this division are the Infantry School, Area Engineer Offices and Lawson Field, all of which have their own personnel setups.

The function of Lieutenant Parkins' office is the processing of all personnel, change of status, re-allocation and promotion, also separations from Civil Service positions, of all employes in the SOS installations. Other duties include maintaining complete records on all employes, supervising the civilian payroll section and supervising the Civil Service Board which handles recruiting and interviews of persons not on the eligible list but qualified for Civil Service work.

At post headquarters, Lt. John A. Lyons is liaison officer between civilian personnel and military authorities. Civilian employes at the Infantry School are under the supervision of Maj. Phillip A. Dickey.

GENERAL'S SECRETARIES

Women in high positions of trust and confidence at Fort Benning are Mrs. Nelle Freeman, Mrs. Emma R. Price and Mrs. Sue Irvin Woodall, who work as private secretaries to three of the posts top-ranking generals.

Because of the very nature of their work, they are entrusted with many confidences and are valued as private secretaries because of their efficiency, their tactfulness—and their trustworthiness.

Mrs. Freeman is the confidential secretary of the post commanding general, Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton; Mrs. Emma Price is the secretary of Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of the Infantry School, and Mrs. Woodall is Brig. Gen. George P. Howell's secretary. General Howell is commandant of the Parachute School.

Mrs. Freeman, a graduate of Central High School and Mountain City Business College in Chattanooga, Tenn., has been working at Fort Benning's post headquarters since Aug. 21, 1941. She has worked for General Fulton since Dec. 8, 1941, the day after Pearl Harbor. Mrs. Freeman is the wife of Ray C. Freeman, Columbus insurance agent, and has a daughter, Jane, eight years old.

Mrs. Price has watched Fort Benning grow from a few tents and wooden barracks to its present position in the national military spotlight. Mrs. Price came to Fort Benning in May, 1919, when the post was only a few months old. She worked first for Maj. J. Paul Jones, constructing quartermaster, and C. G. Trost, field auditor. A day she will long remember was July 4, 1919, when word came from Washington that Fort Benning was to be abandoned. She worked all day and night getting records in shape only to have word come through that the order had been rescinded.

Mrs. Price is another graduate of the old Industrial High school. She has the distinction of having worked for a line of generals who have made a name for themselves in the military world. They include General Gordon, General Malone; General Collins, General King, General Asa Singleton, General Short and now General Weems, the assistant commandant of the school.

Youngest of the general's secretaries is Mrs. Woodall, secretary to paratrooper General Howell. A native of Columbus, Mrs. Woodall also graduated from Industrial High school in that city.

Mrs. Woodall came to work at Fort Benning on June 10, 1942, under Lt. Col. Richard McKee. Previous to her work at Fort Benning, she was employed by the First Presbyterian church in Columbus and the Social Security Board in the city.

THEY'RE "TIME-SAVERS"

Operating a real "time-saver" are two of the newer feminine employes at Fort Benning, Mrs. Kenneth C. Forry and Mrs. Edward C. Sykes.

Mrs. Forry and Mrs. Sykes operate the new test-scoring machines at the Infantry School, which is always in the market for new methods of saving time.

The electrically-operated machines score written tests for all of the officer candidates and student officers at the School. The apparatus looks very similar to a sound board in a broadcasting studio and, of course, the operators will tell you "it's very simple."

To save time in explanation though, we'll simply say that through using a sample test sheet with all the answers filled in correctly, that 1,000 tests can be scored in an hour and that after passing through the machine, the marked papers are automatically tacked in the bottom of the machine.

Civil Service Boards are always on the lookout for punch board operators who can take over the work of operating these test-marking machines, but the board points out that any experienced office clerk can quickly learn to operate the machine.

P. S.—And the machines aren't made to handle short tests either. Answer sheets can be made for as many as 300 questions.

THEY REMEMBER WHEN...

Two of the respected and well-known civilian employes at Fort Benning are sisters who recalled this week, with many a chuckle, of the days when they rode a train from Columbus to Fort Benning every morning...a train that chugged along so slowly and stopped so frequently that they used to have a fast game of bridge every morning on the way to work.

The sisters are Mrs. Mamie K. Johnson, senior clerk in the fiscal section of the Infantry School, who came to work at the post in July, 1920, and Mrs. Roberta K. Hickman, senior clerk stenographer in the office of the assistant commandant at the Infantry School. Mrs. Hickman recalls with pride the days when she worked for the present Chief of Staff, Gen. George C. Marshall, who was at one time assistant commandant of the School.

The sisters are graduates of the old Industrial High School in Columbus, and are both long-time residents of the city.

Mrs. Johnson recalled this week that when she first came to work at Fort Benning, the Infantry School headquarters were located in barracks. Civilians and officers rode to the post each morning on a train of 13 or 14 coaches.

"We often played bridge on the way out as the train had to stop so often and was delayed so much that we always had ample time for a good game," Mrs. Johnson remembered. "Often we would stop and pick berries while the train waited on some siding for another train or was delayed for other reasons."

Mrs. Hickman, a veteran of 15 years at Fort Benning, also rode the "commuters" train but her work was in a different area, in what is known now as Lawson Field. She would be met at the train with a car or more than likely a truck and taken to the 24th Infantry Officers mess for breakfast and then continued to the field.

At that time there were two types of aircraft at the field, lighter-than-air, the balloon type of dirigible, and the airplanes, Mrs. Hickman recalled.

"MASTER-PLANNERS"

Dealing more directly with John Soldier than any other business women at Fort Benning are those "master-planners" the hostesses and Red Cross recreation workers at the Station Hospital.

The hostesses have to be mothers, sisters, friends and confidants of soldiers all at one time and at the same time administrate the complicated affairs of service clubs on the post. The Red Cross recreation workers, highly trained in their fields before they even come on duty, have tasks similar to hostesses, with the additional task of aiding hospital patients in every way possible.

Hostesses are always the guiding lights of the particular service clubs they operate. There are three at Fort Benning, each noted for her ability to organize programs and act as an honest friend to soldiers.

Nationally-known because her "boys" in the armed forces have spread her accomplishments to Army posts in far corners of the land is Mrs. Winifred Baker, senior hostess at Service Club No. 2.

Typical of the tributes paid to Mrs. Baker was one recently from Capt J. H. Keller, special service office at Ft. Riley, Kansas, written after he conferred with the Chief of Staff of the 9th Armored Division, Col. A. G. Kelly.

"During our conversation," wrote the captain, "Colonel Kelly mentioned the fact that of all the service clubs which he and Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Keyes, commander of the 9th, had seen, your club at Fort Benning was the finest as far as management and efficiency was concerned."

Mrs. Baker is unusually well-qualified for the work because of her long association with the Army and Army men. Her programs at No. 2 are built to satisfy the enlisted men and the attractively-appointed club with its home-like atmosphere is jammed every night with soldiers and their guests. A tip-off on one reason Mrs. Baker is so well-liked is the fact she didn't take all of her annual 15-days vacation this year because she felt "she just couldn't get away."

Miss Mary Farmer is a comparative new-comer at Lawson Field but has already made an excellent impression on the men of the Air Corps. Miss Farmer came to Fort Benning with a background of recreational and educational work. A graduate of the University of Alabama, she taught in the Jefferson County school system in Alabama as musical director; worked in radio production for the Birmingham Age-Herald, where she participated in the first Pan-American program, broadcast from a moving train going from Cincinnati, Ohio, to New Orleans. Before coming to work at Fort Benning, Miss Farmer worked in a Columbus music store and at Camp Wheeler, Ga.

Miss Ivy Randall is the impresario supervising the recreational work at Service Club No. 1 on the post proper, where she moved to after doing excellent work as senior hostess at No. 4 Service Club in the Harmony Church area.

Miss Randall, former professional dancing teacher in Washington, D. C., and a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, came to Fort Benning first on Nov. 15, 1941, when she took over the work in the Harmony Church area. Early this spring, she was moved to No. 1 to take over the program on the main post.

Another "hostess" at Fort Benning is Mrs. Lucille Kirkpatrick, in charge of the enlisted men's guest house on the main post. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was placed in charge of the guest house when it was opened many months ago, and has managed the work so well she still holds the position. She has the complicated task of housing the relatives and friends of enlisted men who visit Fort Benning and because of present overcrowded conditions, considerable management is needed to keep everyone satisfied. A native of Hamilton, Ga., Mrs. Kirkpatrick graduated from the Southern Female College in LaGrange, Ga., taught school, worked in newspaper offices and operated a business in Columbus before coming to Fort Benning as hostess at the guest house.

Red Cross recreation workers at the Station Hospital have the task of keeping patients in the hospital as contented as possible during their stay at the institution. They work long hours arranging entertainment programs, visiting the wards wit hgames and reading materials, running errands for the soldiers, writing letters and handling the hundred and one other details that come up in the course of a day. They are carefully selected for the work and must have previous training in group recreation or social work.

CHIEF CLERK

A graduate of Lanier High School in Macon, Georgia, Jennie M. Robinson, chief clerk for the new civilian personnel branch at Fort Benning, resided in Macon until November, 1929, when she began working at Fort Benning.

Her work at Fort Benning for the first five years was with the constructing quartermaster and during that five years much of the permanent construction on the post was accomplished under the supervision of the quartermaster.

Among the projects completed were the Infantry School building, the post chapel and many sets of quarters for officers and non-commissioned officers. Betjeman Bridge and various barracks were also built by the constructing quartermaster during this period. Transferring later from the constructing quartermaster's office, Miss Robinson was engaged exclusively in personnel work until Sept. 1 when she was assigned as chief clerk of the new civilian personnel branch.

RESPONSIBLE POSITION

Miss Mary Harris, native Georgian, had two years of study at the University of Georgia before coming to work for the government at Fort Benning.

She was employed in the administrative department of the Quartermaster Officer on the post from 1925 until April, 1941. Promoted to junior administrative assistant in April, 1941, she was charged with accounting for all funds expended by the Quartermaster and now holds one of the most responsible positions at Fort Benning.

SOUTHERN YANKEE

A Yankee in the South is Pettie V. Light, veteran employe of the Quartermaster's property office at Fort Benning.

Miss Light, a native of Columbus, Ohio; was graduated from Columbus High school in her home town. She entered government service at Fort Benning on Aug. 16, 1927, working first in the Quartermaster office under Colonel Warfield. She was transferred to the memorandum receipt section of the property office in November of the same year and has worked there since that time.

FEMININE SOLDIERS

Two hard-working feminine "soldiers" of Fort Benning are Mrs. Mattie H. Bray, only woman employe of the reproduction plant and Mrs. Dorothy B. Morris, junior administrative assistant in the motor transport division of the Ordnance Department.

Mrs. Bray was educated in the Quitman County, Georgia, schools and took a business administration course in Columbus. In 1922, she came to work at the Academic Department of the Infantry School and ten years later transferred to the reproduction plant where she has the distinction of being the only woman employe.

Mrs. Morris is a comparative newcomer but, like most of the other successful women at Fort Benning, is a graduate of Industrial High in Columbus. She transferred to Fort Benning from Camp McClellan. As junior administrative assistant in the motor transport division of the Ordnance Department, her duties are purely administrative, requiring considerable tact in handling personnel. She handles payrolls, supervises employes and co-ordinates the distribution of correspondence in addition to other clerical duties.

WITH BENNING 16 YEARS

At present purchasing and contracting clerk for the District Motor Transport office is Mrs. Clara M. Zehrbach, who has been a Fort Benning employe for 16 years.

Besides being one of the busiest women at the post, Mrs. Zehrbach has a distinction of which she is even more proud—she is a grandmother, having three sons and two grandchildren.

She started work at Fort Benning in the Quartermaster Office for Capt. Lipell, now retired, but who at that time had about a dozen different jobs to perform with the assistance of Mrs. Zehrbach.

Colonel Stephen B. Massey, now post quartermaster, was utilities officer as "Captain Massey" at the time. Mrs. Zehrbach stayed for nine years in transportation and billeting offices there and then transferred to the district motor transport offices.

"PIONEERS"

Two feminine "pioneers" are Miss Estelle Patrick, secretary in the judge advocate's office at post headquarters, and Mrs. Frances Alford, assistant to the personnel sergeant major in headquarters.

In November, 1940, post headquarters was separated from the Infantry School and established as an independent organization. 1st Lt. James E. Freeman, present executive officer of the post but then a master sergeant, was named to organize a civilian and military staff for the headquarters and under his guidance the present staff of nearly 50 civilians and as many officers and enlisted men was built.

Miss Patrick and Mrs. Alford were the first civilian employes under the new set-up. At that time, the present commanding general of Fort Benning, Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, was post inspector and later executive officer before assuming command of the post.

Miss Patrick, a native of Columbus, was educated in Columbus schools and in the John Muir High School in Los Angeles. She is a graduate of the Jordan Industrial School. Before coming to post headquarters, Miss Patrick worked at the Infantry School and the Tank School and since she has been at headquarters, she has worked in the personnel section for the special service officer and in the judge advocate's department.

Mrs. Alford, formerly Miss Frances West, is a graduate of Columbus schools. When she first came to Fort Benning, she worked in the post quartermaster office, coming to headquarters in November, 1940, to be secretary to the post adjutant, and working as civilian personnel secretary before assuming her present job as assistant to the personnel sergeant major.

JEWISH HAVE FOUR SERVICES

Soldiers of all faiths have opportunities to worship at Fort Benning. Protestant and Catholic services are several in the various sections of the church. Jewish services are held four times weekly. These services are not formal as the soldiers participate in them. Following the reading as the soldiers participate in them. Following the reading of the Scriptures, the chaplain broaches an important Jewish topic of current nature and of vital importance. The soldiers enter into free and frank discussion of this subject, and at the conclusion of it the rabbi gives a summary of the points brought out, together with his own reactions. These have proven to be very interesting at Benning. There is, moreover a specific objective underlying these discussions. The plan is to prepare the Jewish soldier for intelligent American leadership in the Jewish communities throughout the country during the post-war period.

"Yes, the chaplain's work in a regiment like ours is an understanding service, based on a hierarchy of values," writes a Fort Benning chaplain. "Automatically, in the life of a chaplain God comes first. The externals of military etiquette do not blind the chaplains to the fact that colonels and privates are important, because they have souls to save."

Army 'Doc' Tells How To Fight Common Colds

Oil, Nose Drops, Cathartics Taboo; Urges Rest, Isolation

Fighting the common cold in the Army is a big winter job for medical men, and some of the things learned in the Army medical practice may well be applied to civilian life, according to Major Sam P. Wainwright, Army Medical Corps, stationed at Fort Benning.

Maj. Wainwright told of latest developments in battling the common cold, which annually takes toll of hundreds of thousands of man-hours from work in this country and frequently leads to complications, in a talk before the P.-T. A. of the Fort Benning Children's School.

"While no experiments are being made here at Fort Benning just now, some have been conducted on the Post recently, and a good deal has been learned about fighting the cold," he said. "One of these blasted the ancient idea that a cathartic was 'always needed' in combating the common cold.

"One group of 500 men were treated for colds with use of cathartics while another group of 500 was treated without their use. A large percentage of the second group was returned to duty in shorter time than those from the first group.

NO OIL DROPS

"Use of irritating drops in the nose, use of sprays, and other home treatment of colds is generally of little use and may even lead to serious results. One result from use of oil drops is lipoid pneumonia, caused by the material getting into the lungs.

"Not everybody who sneezes has a cold while many others are prone to have colds that start with a slight sore throat, so they do not realize it is actually a cold. Home treatment frequently, therefore, is a bad idea.

"The best thing is to isolate ourselves as soon as we feel a cold coming on. Take a good deal of liquids. Get as much rest as possible. Unfortunately this cannot always be put into practice, especially in the army where sometimes a cold may sweep through a whole platoon or company. The practice in the army, however, is to put the soldier into the hospital whenever there is a fever. In civilian life it is often much easier for the individual to go to bed—a couple of days off to fight the start of a cold may save a great deal of loss of time later when the cold has developed.

"Use of mild antiseptic solutions for colds starting in the throat may frequently help in heading off the development also. In any event it is a very good idea to go to bed since the cold attacks the tired and run down soldier or civilian much easier than the one with a reserve of energy."

11TH ARMORED PROMOTES

The following enlisted men have received promotions in the 11th Armored Regiment of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division:

T-5 Luis Barber, Headquarters Company, to sergeant; Pfc. Walter Pietryka, Company G, to corporal, and Pfcs. Joseph Metesh and Raymond Seeley, both of Company G, to T-5s.

SCOTT FIELD, Ill.—Two soldiers stationed here hopped a ride to town with a friendly motorist, but one of them lost his teeth in the car. The motorist found a set of uppers and wrote the Field in an effort to locate the soldier who had lost them.

Moral: Keep your mouth shut when riding with strangers.

'Keep Em' Happy' Is Theme Of USO Clubs In City

Five Clubs and Service Bureau Aid Troops From Fort Benning

Covering the fields of service and entertainment—from arranging weddings to providing a sharpener for one's pencil—is the purpose and the theme behind the United Service Organizations in Columbus. The six organizations which make up the USO maintain five clubs and one service bureau for the men of Fort Benning.

The largest and newest USO club in Columbus is the one on Ninth street and First avenue. This club is run jointly under the auspices of the Jewish Welfare Board, of which Edward Korn is director, and the National Catholic Community Service, which is headed by Eugene Bergman. The main feature of this club is the enormous auditorium which can be adapted to any use. In the past, dances, parties, breakfast meetings, movies, concerts, and sports contests have been held in the auditorium. But this is not the only feature of the club. Numerous clubrooms, a lounge, lunch counter, showers, and various games help keep the boys occupied.

In contrast, the oldest USO in Columbus is the Army-Navy-YMCA located on West Eleventh street. Originally an old factory building, the Army and Navy Y opened because of the demand of a recreational place for the men of the 1st Infantry Division, which was stationed at Fort Benning at the time. Later it was converted into a USO Club. H. J. Sims, director of the club is mighty proud of its fine dormitory, new kitchen, open air patio, lounge, pool tables, art room, craft room, and many of the other features. In fact, as he puts it, he is "mighty pleased with the entire club." Open all night, to accomodate soldiers arriving in town during the night, the club features a lunch counter that serves the boys 24 hours a day.

The USO-YWCA located at 1425 Third avenue, helps solve one of the problems confronting the average G. I. The problem — Where to find a place to live for the visiting wife, sweetheart, or relative. The answer—the YWCA. New and comfortable beds provide housing facilities for 23 women on the second floor of this building. A beautiful garden next to the building was arranged by the Junior League and the landscaping and abundant supply of shrubs was made possible by the United Garden Clubs. A fish pool, adequate fireplace and badminton court are found in the garden. With the use of large portable tables and chairs more than 150 persons may be accomodated at an outdoor luncheon or buffet supper in the garden. During the week organized clubs meet in the evening for informal recreation, dancing instruction, bridge instruction, parties and invitation dances. The outstanding part of the program is the Army wives.

KEEPS WIVES ACTIVE

This club plans programs for wives of the men of Fort Benning. Miss Anne Pridmore, formerly Executive Secretary of the community YWCA at Daytona Beach, Fla., is the director. Last but not least of the services afforded the men of Fort Benning is the chance to have a real home-style wedding. The Y makes all the arrangements and the only thing that the groom has to produce is the bride.

The Salvation Army maintains not one but two separate clubs. One in Columbus and the other in Phenix City. The Columbus club is located at 1323 Broadway and is under the direction of Adjutant and Mrs. Thomas Evans. Housed in an old Methodist church, the club found that the building fitted their needs to the T. The main floor is a lounge complete with comfortable furniture, writing tables, radio and record player, snack bar, and library. Going up, you find on the second floor forty single beds in the dormitory. During the past year this has proven to be the most appreciated of all features. In the basement is a game room with ping pong tables, lounging furniture, and other tables for playing small games. The showers are really appreciated when the men are out on maneuvers and can not find a place to get their showers.

The other Salvation Army Club is the only USO Club in Phenix City. Headed by Adjutant C. L. Andrews, the club has the same features of the one in Columbus. Newer and one of the nicest looking clubs, the club is always on the go to find better and finer things for the soldiers to do.

After describing the clubs one finds that more needs to be told. The USO does things for the boys that can not be included as part of the club and yet the club pays the expenses for these things. For example:

The NCCS sponsors the Columbus Symphony orchestra and the Community Chorus, both of which are made up of soldiers and civilians. Then there is the fine service some of the clubs are doing to aid men looking for rooms for their wives and themselves, shoppers service, record making, special cooking clubs for men, and so many things that they can't be listed.

But the job isn't done. More and more must be added to the clubs and other facilities of Columbus in order to make this town an example for the rest of the community.

FETE MILITARY MAIDS

Dancing beneath swaying palm trees and colorful decorations depicting beautiful Hawaii, the men of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division played hosts to the Military Maids of Columbus last Thursday night at Service Club No. 2.

Miss Jean Edenfield entertained those present with two songs, "Blue Hawaii" and "I Want To Go Back To My Little Grass Shack" and later, in her Hawaiian costume, did the hula dance. Miss Edenfield lived in the islands for several years and is an accomplished dancer.

Music was furnished by the 11th Armored Regiment dance band.

Fort Benning Utilities Could Provide For City Of 150,000

Post Engineer Can Tackle Repairs Of Almost Any Kind

Put up a name sign on an officer's house.
Fill in a hole in a road.
Repair a damaged power line pole.
Fix a gas main.
Make major repairs to a saw mill.
Throw up a pontoon bridge over a raging stream and then repair a concrete bridge washed out by a "flash flood."

Such orders are all in a day's work for Post Engineer's office at Fort Benning, where an engineering staff, public utilities staff, and laborers sufficient to take care for a city of 150,000 or larger is maintained the year around.

Col. A. J. Bain is Post Engineer for Fort Benning, and under him are the 1,900 civilian employees who perform not only the duties of the city engineer's office of a metropolis, but who also perform the same jobs as the electric light company, gas company and the water department of a large city.

Heading the civilian staff is W. A. Ford, administrative assistant, who has had 20 years of experience in the office. When rapid expansion began at Fort Benning, a nucleus of other civilians who had from 15 to 20 years experience were called in to train the rapidly expanding staff, so that work of the office has run smoothly.

At each Army Post there is an officer who is a member of the Post Commander's Staff, charged with the maintenance and repair of buildings, structures, grounds and utilities and all of the permanent installations; operating the utilities, construction of additions, extensions and alterations, or the rehabilitation necessary for the proper discharge of maintenance, repairs and operational work.

ALL IN A DAY'S WORK

That's Colonel Bain's job at Fort Benning. With the rapid expansion of construction put up by the Area Engineer's office, the work of Colonel Bain and his Army and civilian assistants has grown more demanding as each day passes.

Exactly as in a city, one of the principal essentials of an Army post is a supply of water. At Fort Benning there are two large pumping filter plants, with a capacity of 9,000,000 gallons daily, which supplies the personnel in the Georgia part of the Reservation while the Alabama area is supplied from wells.

Again, exactly as in a big city, the Post Engineer maintains a department to analyze the water. Here the chemists not only make daily analyses of water for Fort Benning, but for nine other Army Posts in Georgia, Florida and Alabama. Each day samples of water are sent to the Fort Benning laboratory and if any slight trace of contamination is discovered, the Commanders are immediately notified and proper measures are taken to provide a water supply that is absolutely free from any contamination. The water system is constantly under pumping pressure so as to an provide adequate supply for the fire department.

Miles of water mains, ranging from 14-inch pipe down to the small pipe line supplying some of the smaller quarters are maintained. The system of standard fire plugs also is maintained under this department, and maintenance of the entire fire department also is the job of Col. Bain.

COL. A. J. BAIN

Current for electric lighting and for cooking in many mess halls is supplied from the Georgia Power Company. The Engineer's office maintains 326 miles of electric lines on the Post. All of the maintenance, repair, operation and construction of electric generating plants, transmission and distribution systems, together with installation of motors, ranges and other electric appliances are handled here.

Twenty-six miles of gas pipe for supply and distribution of natural gas. Repair, maintenance, installation, operation and extensions to the gas service, together with repair of gas-burning equipment is handled through the Post Engineer's Office.

In addition to the gas supply, there also is the problem of determining the need, specifications and quantity requirements and putting in requisitions for coal, coke, fuel oil or other fuel. Then, too, gasoline must be secured for the fire apparatus and all of the other motor vehicles assigned to the office. This includes, heavy road machinery, shovels, graders, bulldozers, tractors, pumps.

Operation of all of the central heating and power plants must go on smoothly. There are three large central heating plants and a number of smaller units, making a total of 3,500 different heating units, to be maintained and operated.

At the same time, the office maintains five ice and refrigeration plants on the Post. Not only are these maintained, but the office services walk-in boxes with refrigerating coils and services the large kitchen refrigerators on the Post.

Then, after preserving the food, the problem of collection and disposal of garbage after thousands of hungry men finish their "three squares" a day comes up. The office maintains three large incinerators and besides that, maintains and operates the sewage collection system, pumps and the plant operation. There are about 78 miles of sanitary sewer lines at Fort Benning and about 28 miles of storm sewers to be maintained.

A modern fire department with a crew of 145 firefighters, maintaining 19 motor vehicles, all modern type pumpers, serves the Post. The Post Engineer provision, maintains, repairs and operates the fire protection equipment, sprinkler systems and the alarm systems and provides and trains the personnel.

HOUSING FOR CIVILIANS

The Post Engineer also is charged with the maintenance, repair, and management of the recently announced civilian housing project on the reservation. This includes supplying of food and housekeeping. There now are accommodations ready for occupancy soon by about 300 civilians, Colonel Bain announced.

Extermination of insects, vermin and rodents is just one of the little things that the office handles. This work alone takes from 75 to 100 men and thousands of gallons of mosquito destroying material is used as spray for water and swamp lands each year, while in some instances whole areas are drained in order to eliminate the mosquito nuisance.

With more than 3,500 buildings now in existence on the Reservation, one of the major problems of the office is the maintenance and repair of them. These includes sheds, tanks, warehouses, administrative buildings, schools, barracks, offices, and others. In addition, the office must maintain water tanks, bridges, fences, the parachute jumping towers, flag poles and other structures.

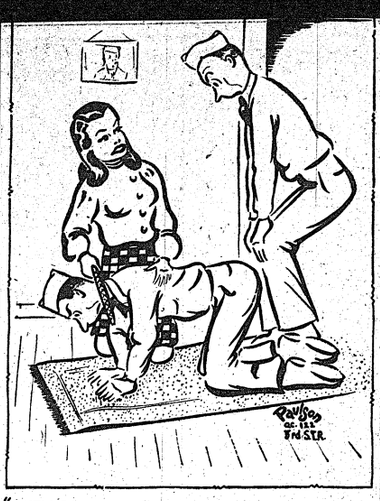
Still another major project is the maintenance, repair and construction of roads, walks, parking areas, taxiways, driveways and grounds, the culverts, ditching and forestry on the reservation. There are about 75 miles of paved roads and 200 miles of unpaved roads and more than 40 miles of paved walks. Then there are many concrete-steel and wooden bridges, ranging from small crossings to a large highway and railway bridge.

An emergency job that once confronted the office was the washout of a bridge by a flash flood. A pontoon bridge was quickly thrown up and later the concrete bridge was repaired and put back into use. It was all in the day's work.

FORESTRY PROBLEM

Considerable areas of forest require attention the year around, and trees are "harvested" when they should be cut, in order to prevent loss of good timber. Three sawmills saw up the logs into timbers and lumber and also supply firewood. In the way no waste is allowed.

Even the sawdust from the mills is put to use. Recently Colonel Bain conceived idea of utilizing the sawdust piles to fill in around the parachute towers to make a better landing field. Some of the large timbers and the heavy lumber from the sawmills was used to lengthen runways at Lawson Field in order to accomodate the latest heavy type of aircraft.



Not only does the office maintain the roads and the walks, but the engineers maintain about 12 miles of standard gauge track and 20 miles of narrow gauge.

Maintenance, repair and upkeep of the target ranges, from small arms range to anti-aircraft, anti-tank and artillery comes under the office, also.

Problems of soil erosion, too, require constant attention, and the engineers plant vegetation over bare areas, and protect shoulders of the roads against erosive influence of rains.

To meet requirements of all of the different organizations on the post, there is a constant demand being made for installing various articles of equipment. The office replaces, maintains and repairs all power-operated kitchen mess equipment, cooking ranges, heating plants, stoves, electric fans, ventilation and air conditioning equipment on all parts of the post.

The Post Engineer maintains a large warehouse and storage yard, together with plumbing, carpentry, electrical, painting, roofing and sheet metal shops in order to maintain and repair all of the equipment on the post.

German-Born, Now Fights For America

He enjoys it. Enjoys what? Why the Army of course. Pvt. Rudi Wilk, guidon bearer for the Motor Maintenance class in the 20th Co. 1st Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School, who was born in Hamborn, Germany, today is an American citizen and soldier, proud to fight for his adopted land.

On December 22, 1936, a husky blond youth, who spoke no English, arrived in America, land of promise and freedom. It would be hard to say what thoughts were his that first time he saw the "Lady of Light". Today, it is clear that he thinks this the finest country on earth. He spoke no English when he arrived but made haste to remedy this and in a short time became American in speech as well as at heart.

In Hamborn he had finished Gymnasium — comparable to our prep-school, here, and had attended a private military academy for two years. His arrival here and subsequent enrollment at a New Brunswick, New Jersey high school brought him a first-hand acquaintanceship with English. Here he also played fullback, ran the mile, boxed, and skated. Friends were easy to make and he kept them.

Area Engineer Charged With New Construction

Equipped to Erect Anything From Shed To Modern Hospital

Vast construction projects valued at more than $30,000,000 are being developed at Fort Benning currently by the Area Engineer who describes his task as "one of the biggest" engineering feats in the country. Major C. W. Hamilton, the Area Engineer, is chief of the organization which is staffed and equipped to handle anything from building a small range shed to a modern army hospital.

Millions of dollars worth of new construction has been handled during the past year by Major Hamilton's office. Hundreds of barracks, scores of mess halls, many recreation halls, chapels, administration buildings, theaters, warehouses, sheds, school rooms, sewage disposal systems, wells for water—these are only a few of the gargantuan tasks which have been undertaken by the Area Engineer during the past year.

The Area Engineer's office is charged with the construction of new buildings at army posts. In most cases the engineer moves in, builds the buildings, turns them over to the Post Engineer's office for maintenance, and then goes on to another post. But here at Fort Benning, the job of building is so vast that Maj. Hamilton has been here for more than a year and has set up five sub-area offices in order to handle the administration of the enormous amount of building that he must supervise.

He has at his beck and call enough equipment to construct anything from a tool house to a new post office or a huge new hospital. Trucks, graders, draglines, tractors, power shovels, caterpillar tractors and other heavy duty equipment is maintained. A large repair shop is set up to take care of major repairs to anything from a light pick-up truck to a heavy duty caterpillar.

LARGE STAFF HERE

The main offices house an engineer and drafting section, a safety section, and a general office section. There are 200 on the annual pay roll on the average, while at times more than 1,500 civilians are employed on various construction projects.

The five districts, in each of which is an officer with a complete engineering organization for erecting buildings, installing sewers, drilling wells or putting in new pavement, are at the main post, Lawson Field, Harmony Church, Sand Hill area and the Infantry School. Major Hamilton superintends all of the construction and inspects the work on a rigid system. Frequently two or three construction jobs are under way on a major scale, not one being within 40 miles of the other.

The Area Engineer's office under Major Hamilton built the parachute jumping towers and the target ranges on the post. Frequently a specialized job comes up such as building a moving target renge in a hurry. The office is equipped to do such work with a minimum of lost time or delay in securing supplies.

Much of the work is done under contract but much more is done directly under the watchful eye of Major Hamilton or the officers on his staff. The office is responsible directly to the Corps of Engineers headquarters at Mobile, Ala.

CHIEF LIKES JOB

"I believe that I have the most interesting construction job in the whole country today, and probably one of the biggest," Major Hamilon said. "We cannot divulge the amount of construction now going on, but it is tremendous, I wouldn't trade my job for that of any engineer in the world today."

Major Hamilton was called into active service in October, 1940. He is a veteran of the First World War, having served overseas with the 34th Division in the Field Artillery. He has been a reserve officer since 1927.

Major Hamilton has had a wide and varied experience in engineering, covering more than 25 years. He was electrical superintendent for the Manila Electric company, building most of the electrical system that now is being utilized by the Japanese in the Philippine Islands. Returning to the United States, he was associated with the Associated Gas and Electric of Pennsylvania; Pacific Gas and Electric in California, and served for six years as construction officer for the Civilian Conservation Corps in California.

His first job at Ft. Benning was construction of Lawson Field in June, 1941. After the Engineers took over all army construction, on Jan. 1, 1942, Major Hamilton was assigned to Fort Benning as Area Engineer and has remained here since.

In addition to maintaining the various shops and equipment, the office maintains a saw mill which cuts into timbers or finished lumber all of the trees that the engineers remove when clearing ground for new projects. This is used in construction and supplies much of the needed lumber and timbering for heavy buildings.

The Area Engineer's office can tackle any construction job proposed for Fort Benning. Pictured above are some enlisted men's barracks which will swell the total housing facilities at the Post. Barracks, range sheds, hospitals, jumping tower for parachutists, sewage disposal systems—they're a few of the tasks assigned to Major C. W. Hamilton, Area Engineer, for development at Fort Benning.

54th Infantry Bayoneteers Are Winners

55th Engineers Are Vanquished By 4-1 Score

On Guard! Kill! To that signal the 54th Infantry Doughboys charged into The "Mighty 55th" Engineers Friday night at Division Bowl and came out winners in the bayonet fighting bouts. Both teams representing the 54th Infantry won by the scores of 4 to 1.

In the first bout, Sergeant Floyd Taylor, captain of the 54th team defeated Sergeant Harry Otto, captain of the 55th team. Private Sherman Gyton followed suit and defeated Staff Sgt. Albert Gustitis. Not to be outdone Sgt. Doyle Rambo upheld the banner of the 54th and smeared 1st. Sgt. Paul Layman. In the fourth match Sgt. Bernard Friedman hoisted the 54th banner higher to whip Tech. Sgt. Mangnus Mindrebo and in the final match of the first team bout Cpl. James Harlan of the 55th scored the only win for his team by defeating Sgt. Chester Derr. Score: Company B of the 54th four to one for Company E of the 55th Engineers.

The Doughboys came out fighting for that second team win as the second bout opened with Company H of the 54th meeting Company D of the 55th. In the first match Sgt. Paul Thorpe, captain of Company H started the ball rolling for his team by tromping Stagg Sgt. James O'Neill, captain of Company D. Another star was added to the flag of the Doughboys as Sgt. Carlton Mullinax put away T-4 Michael Paulah. Lieutenant Thomas Patterson of the 55th team scored the only win for the Engineers as he disposed of Sgt. Dan Roper. In the fourth match Sgt. John Chalken made up for the only defeat of his team by mopping up on Staff Sgt. Sherman McMillan and the bouts ended when Sgt. Charles Carlson added the fourth win for his team in defeating Sgt. Earl Hughes. Score: Company H of the 54th Infantry four to one for Company D of the Engineers.

Both organizations were on hand to cheer and root for their team and banners waved and the spirit of competition was as keen on the side lines as it was in the ring. Gaiety was added to the occasion by the music of the 11th Armored Regiment band.

Officials for the evening were: Announcer, Major Frank H. Britton of G-3, Scorer; Lieut. Marston Busch of the 90 Reconnaissance Battalion, Referee; Lieut. Jesse Bolson of the 90 Reconnaissance and Judges, Lieuts. L. S. Bealsey and Ray Green of the 90th Reconnaissance.

Among the interested spectators were Major General and Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden, Brigadier General Robert W. Grow, Colonel and Mrs. Julian E. Raymond, Lt. Colonel David Spengler and Captain and Mrs. Roger Rawley.

LUKE FIELD, Ariz.—Two soldiers who were listed as "painters" when they entered service have completed a mural at this Post after a stretch at painting numbers on planes.

PFC Francis Donnini of Rhode Island and PFC James W. Newbold of Ohio were painting numerals on aircraft when they received an assignment to give a day room another coat. Instead of slapping on the paint the soldiers produced a large mural. At present they are working on a mural in the Army exchange at the Post. The job is like pulling guard as they can work only between 10 p. m. and the time the Exchange opens in the morning.

WARRENSBURG AIR BASE, Mo.—PFC Wayne Bentley, a native of Olney, Tex., hit a 'jackpot' when he received 48 letters and cards, all at one mail call. Some of them were sent airmail and all of them were from his wife.

Five New Majors Named At Lawson Field Last Week

Announcement was made today at Fort Benning of the promotion of five captains of Lawson Field to the rank of major. They are:

Captains A. D. Adair Jr., Cyril O. Shuler, George W. Gorman, George E. Key and Julian D. Freedman.

Major Key, who is the plans and training officer at Lawson Field, has been at the post since March, 1941. Major Shuler, a graduate of Clemson college and formerly with the U. S. Postal service, is base supply officer at the Field. Major Freedman's duties include those of managing the officers' mess and the Officers' Club.

Major Adair, the Lawson Field adjutant, is a native of Atlanta. He was graduated from Princeton university and did graduate work at Emory. Major Gorman, the base administrative inspector, is widely known as an athlete and last spring was the playing manager of the Fort Benning baseball team. He is a former Notre Dame athlete.

WASHINGTON — No customs duties are enforced on parcels addressed to members of the United States armed forces in India, according to an announcement by the Agency General for that country.

FT. LEONARD WOOD, Mo.—In anticipation of the stationing of a WAAC outfit here several new barracks are planned and a beauty parlor is under construction.

Women Workers Cheer Soldiers Through Post Red Cross Chapter

Seven Sections Spend Long Hours on Variety Of Helpful Duties

Making life a bit brighter and really aiding those who need it, are the hundreds of women of the Fort Benning Chapter of the American Red Cross. Breaking the work up into seven departments, this chapter covers every form of Red Cross work that can be done. Under the direction of Chairman Mrs. Walter Scott Fulton, wife of Brig. Gen. Fulton, Post Commander, the Auxiliary and Volunteer Special Service unit has really grown to enormous proportions. Working night and day, many of the women don't start working for the Red Cross until they are through with their regular day's work. A resume of the different sections of the unit follows:

FIRST AID

This section trains others in the art of First Aid. Covering both the elementary and advanced courses, the lessons take place in the evening. Many of the colored maids working on the post have volunteered for the course, which is given Mondays and Tuesdays at Service Club No. 4. This is the first class of its type in the history of Fort Benning. Mrs. Wilfred Jackson is chairman of the Section.

Headed by Mrs. Richard Coursey, the Gray Ladies visit patients in the Post hospital, run errands for them, play games with them, and just try to make the lives of the shut-ins more pleasant. The name of the Gray Ladies is derived from their uniforms, which are all gray with a gray veil. In order to do this type of work, the women must pass a strict interview and then take an intensive course of study.

MOTOR CORPS

Dressed in their smart tailored blue-gray uniforms and overseas caps tilted at a chic angle, the Motor Corps serves the staff of the Station Hospital. They used their own cars before gas and tire rationing went into effect and now when the one station-wagon is busy on call, they still do. Their job is to run errands for the staff. If all the ambulances are busy, they must go with the doctors and pick up cases, and last, but not least, provide transportation for emergencies. Before getting, or being permitted to buy their uniforms, the women must take a course in First Aid and Motor Maintenance. For weeks on end, dressed in dirty and greasy overalls they had to crawl under trucks and cars to find out what made them run. Now they are qualified to make almost any type of repairs on a vehicle. Mrs. F. W. Pratt is the chairman.

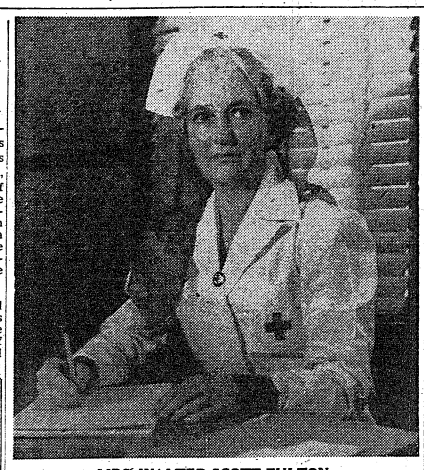
SEWING AND KNITTING

Under the direction of Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden, wife of Maj. Gen. Newgarden, commanding general of the 10th Armored Division, the sewing and knitting sessions are held twice a week in the Red Cross work room. The women knit all types of military articles, such as socks, sweaters, caps and masks. In the sewing section, childrens clothes and womens dresses are made. These are sent overseas to England.

STAFF ASSISTANCE

The job of this section is to assist the regular workers of the Red Cross. Dressed in their yellow uniforms and veil, they are found behind information desks, wrapping packages, and doing clerical work. Mrs. Leven C. Allen, wife of Maj. Gen. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School, is the chairman. Anyone can have their packages wrapped by this organization. In order to insure safe passage through the mail, the parcel must be wrapped properly. The staff has been instructed in the proper handling.

SURGICAL DRESSING



Looking very smart in their white uniforms and cap, with navy blue cuffs and veil, the instructors of the Surgical Dressign must be always on the alert. Mondays through Fridays, from 9 to 12 in the mornings and Friday afternoon, the women of this section take over the Red Cross work room. The workers must wear a wash dress and a cotton covering for their hair, making sure that there isn't any lint on them. This is a tedious job and must be done to the nth degree of perfection. Who knows but that the bandage that some woman folds may someday be used by her son or husband? Ninety per cent of all bandages finding their way into the air are done by volunteers. The call for more women and still more women to help do this work has been issued by Mrs. William Denton, chairman of the group.

Unique is the purpose of this section. Under the direction of Mrs. J. D. Rosenberger, the school children of Fort Benning wrap and mail, to all corners of the world, for needy civilians and our Allies, Christmas packages. All the articles that go into the packages are donated by the children themselves and consist of soap, bobby pins, candy, toys and any type of article that someone, somewhere may find of use. Last year, the children enclosed a card in each box telling from whom the package was. In short order answers were received, thanking them for their fine work.

The secretaries of the Auxiliary and Volunteer Special Service are Mrs. G. P. Hoyell, wife of Brig. Gen. Howell, commandant of the Parachute School, and Mrs. John B. Townsend.

All in all, much fine work is done by the Fort Benning Red Cross and the chapter will continue to do fine work, but they must have the assistance of every woman on and off the reservation. They must have volunteers to carry on the work. And that doesn't exclude the men. They can do something to help too.

MRS. WALTER SCOTT FULTON

Miss Bagley Is First Woman With Paratroops

Miss Mattie Kate Bagley, prominent in state and national club circles, is the first Civil Service employe and the first woman to work for the Parachute group.

She is a native Georgian, member of a pioneer family. She is a past president of the Georgia department of the American Legion Auxiliary; has served as president and has held just about every office in the local Legion Auxiliary; served as the Georgia member of the national executive board of the American Legion Auxiliary; was Fidac speaker at the first state Defense Conference in Georgia. She was legal secretary in the Housing Authority in Washington; was legal secretary in the chief attorney's office in the Veterans Administration in Atlanta; was selected by the Georgia Department of the American Legion to take part in the national celebration of Armistice Day in 1938 by placing a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington Cemetery.

Modern Homes Built For Benning NCO's

Baker Village and Benning Park Ease Housing Shortage Here

Housing, one of the most vital problems at all of the nation's Army posts, has been partially solved at busy Fort Benning by the Baker Village and Benning Park Homes, developments of the Columbus Housing Authority.

Hundreds of junior commissioned officers and non-commissioned officers with their families are living in the apartments provided in the two communities but despite the many apartments in Baker Village and Benning Park there is still a shortage of rooms, apartments and homes in the Columbus-Fort Benning area.

At Baker Village and in Benning Park, every effort has been made to offer as complete a program as possible for the men and their families—most of whom are far from homes and friends.

In addition to providing heat, clean apartments equipped with electric refrigerators, stoves, hot water heaters and space heaters and rented for a minimum price, the Columbus Housing Authority is endeavoring to present a well-rounded program of social, educational, recreational and religious activities.

Work was first started on Baker Village in September, 1939, and the first tenant moved in on January 30, 1940. The project, consisting of 612 apartments with from one to three bedrooms, a bathroom, kitchen and living-room, cost approximately two million dollars. Living there are civilians who work at Fort Benning and non-commissioned officers of the first three grades. Present rent for apartments is $22.50 and $25.00, depending on the size of the apartment. Water and lights are also furnished.

DIVERSE ACTIVITIES

Most social activity and business administration centers around the Administration building. The auditorium is used for parties, dances, teas and other social affairs and entertainments, handled by a recreation committee. A nursery school for pre-school children is maintained in the building where children from the ages of three to six years are cared for from 10:15 a. m. until 4:15 in the afternoon. They have supervised play periods, lunches with proper diets, all under trained workers. There is a craft room for the use of all tenants and for the Boy Scouts for regular meetings. The rental and business offices are also housed in the building. Another feature of the Village are the supervised playgrounds for the many small children living with their families in the apartments. There is a library for tenants in the maintenance building.

Feature of the Village will soon be the new Baker Village School which will include all of the elementary grades and the four high school grades. The school will be one of the most modern in the state and will be equipped with a diet kitchen, shop, gym and auditorium.

Benning Park Homes was built by the Public Buildings Administration and leased to the Housing Authority of Columbus. Work was started in April, 1940, and it was turned over to the Housing Authority on July 1, 1941. Construction costs were approximately one and a quarter million dollars. There are 350 apartments consisting of two or three bedrooms with a bathroom, kitchen and living room.

In and near both Benning Park and Baker Village are two beautiful churches: The Benning Park Baptist Church has the Rev. C. C. Davison as pastor and the Baker Village Methodist Church has the Rev. Albert M. Hall as pastor. Catholic mass is held in the auditorium of the administration building at 9 every Sunday morning.

The Housing Authority of Columbus, with Brown Nicholson as executive director, consists of a board on non-paid civic leaders of Columbus. Baker Village was named in honor of Newton D. Baker, Secretary of State during the last World War.

When You And I Were Young, Maggie

The saying "once an Army man, always an Army man" was borne out this week at Fort Benning when this old photograph was unearthed. The snapshot, taken many years ago at Fort Adams, Rhode Island, when that camp was a Coast Artillery post, shows a group of Army children gathered on the steps of one of the post's buildings after a party.

The interesting coincidence about the old photograph was the fact that several of the boys and girls in the snapshot are now high-ranking officers in the Army or are the wives of high-ranking officers, some of them still at Fort Benning.

Local residents picked out the following men and women well-known at Fort Benning and in Army circles at the present time.

Post School Grads Give Cheers For Miss Grimes

Little Schoolma'm Taught Many High Ranking U. S. Officers

Several high ranking officers today—and the sons and daughters of some of the highest general officers in the Army of the United States as well—can boast that they actually went to school in Fort Benning's version of "the little red school house."

Because the fine, modern Children's School on the Post is the direct descendant of a little schoolhouse that was established in 1922 in an abandoned barracks near the present site of the swimming pool.

But it isn't the pretentiousness—or lack of it—of the building or the equipment that makes a school in free America—it's the quality of the teachers and their love of teaching the children in the American way of life that most of them remember even today.

And they prove it almost every week by paying a visit to Annie Lou Grimes, the teacher who has been the guiding light of that little school which grew into the modern school. Hardly a week goes by but a lieutenant or captain or major or the son or daughter of some figure in the news of the world today, drops in to visit with her.

There is Major Wood Joerg, for instance, and Major Joseph Stilwell, Jr., to name only two who have visited her not so long ago.

SON OF GENERAL

Major Stilwell is the son of the famous general who now is in China. The Stilwell's used to say that their life was "China and Fort Benning and China and Fort Benning." The family rotated in about that manner, they used to say. The Major himself spoke Chinese like a native, and once was called in as an interpreter and guide to a group of visiting Chinese generals on the Post. Benjamin, another son of General Stilwell, now about 15, could speak Chinese much better than English when he first came to school, Miss Grimes recalls. The family now is in California while the General and the Major are on fighting fronts.

"Many of the boys who came to school here now are majors," observed Miss Grimes, "and I'm looking for them to be advanced rapidly these days. I want to see some of them generals next time they come back to see me. Some of them went to school in the original building when we had desks that were made for adults and the little boys and girls had to get soap boxes for their feet to rest on. But they must have learned their lessons all right, for many of them are advancing rapidly, not only in the Army but in various walks of civilian life."

The original school, established in 1922, was close to one of the barns on the old Bussey Plantation. The barn was used for a theater in those days. Also nearby were the print shop and the "Infantry School News," published in a tiny building, as well as the sales store. The playground was behind one of the buildings, with an old silo at one end. There were three teachers and 60 students. A stove in each of the four rooms heated the building. Partitions didn't go all the way up to the ceilings.

GIFT FOR SCHOOL

The school stood there for ten years. The first part of the present building was put up in 1931 and Major and Mrs. Benjamin Ferris, who had left the post but who remembered the schooling that their two boys, Sumner and Benjamin, had received there, sent a check for $1,500 for new desks.

There were eight classrooms in the building. Now another wing has been added, manual training, and home economics rooms are set up in the basement and more recently a large Auditorium was built on the old playground.

The Auditorium is used for many things besides school purposes. Courts martial have been held there. Rationing and draft offices were set up there. Officers Candidate School lectures are frequently given there. Sunday school and other church activities are conducted there. It is even used one night a week for classes in the Russian language.

"Many of our students have come back to Fort Benning as Officer Candidates and nearly every one of them comes in to visit us," Miss Grimes recalls. "Some of the candidates come right from the Post, others have been to far places around the world since going to school here. We're awfully proud to see the progress these younger men are making."

Proud of the Washington Cedar are Miss Grimes and the other 15 teachers and the 440 students. It was planned on the Bicentennial of the birth of George Washington, shortly after the new building was put up, and it has grown.

Three enlisted men of the 124th lustily since then. Now it is used as an outdoor Christmas tree every Yuletide season.

Lawson Field Sub Depot Facilitates

The Lawson Field Sub Depot is a recently organized division designed to facilitate operations at the busy air base engineering and supply sections. Under the supervision of Major W. M. Choppin, a staff of civilian Civil Service employees carry out the many and varied details of an organization of this type.

It operates under the control depot to which it is assigned, and these control depots are under the supervision of the Maintenance Wing Commander who, in turn, is under the Commanding General, Army Air Forces Maintenance Command.

The Sub Supply Depot conducts all supply operations heretofore assigned to the station supply department. It maintains the accountable records of the station, receives all incoming shipments and delivers supplies to all unit supply officers. At Lawson Field this includes the purchase of parts for all planes at the field as well as the fuel. It also has under its jurisdiction four warehouses and a reproduction plant.

The Personnel Sub Depot, located in Air Corps Supply, keeps all records of civilian personnel, including time records, pay roll and medical reports and charts. This office is under the supervision and direction of Miss Mildred Price.

NOT PART OF TRAINING

At Camp Wolters, Texas, the other day a group of soldiers under full pack was going through an obstacle course. The leading man grabbed a rope, swung out over a mudhole and landed kerplunk in the slush. One by one the others followed, each landing with a dull thud in the mud. Then and only then did the soldiers learn that they weren't supposed to fall in the mud at all—the lead man slipped.

Armored Force Private Yearns for Parachute

Most of the men who prepare for the Armored Force at Fort Knox, Ky., get a kick out of the rumbling tanks and blasting guns, but Pvt. Tom F. Wilson has a yen for parachuting and nothing but the Paratroops will do for him.

Pvt. Wilson's parachuting career began in the summer of 1940 near Jasper, Ala., when he and his wife went over to the county fair and heard some traveling showman offer $100 to anyone in the audience who would make a jump from his free balloon.

He only had time to make the offer once before Pvt. Wilson was up there saying, "I will." That was about the fastest and easiest $100 Pvt. Wilson had ever made up to that time. During that same summer, he made two more jumps for the same man at the same fair, but in different parts of the country.

He happened to be visiting some friends in Vermont, Fla., and he ran into the same man there. He made the jump and pocketed another $100. About a month later, he made a weekend trip to Gainesville, Ga., and there was the same fair, so he made another $100.

While the U. S. Army can't quite match the $100 a jump, Pvt. Wilson still wants to become a paratrooper.

Wanted— One Dead Mule,

Requisitions for all sorts of things from bicycle tires to airplanes come across the desks of supply officers at Fort Benning, and most of them can be and are filled.

But today, Major Jack Cornot, of the 505th Parachute Battalion, goggled a bit when he received one from Lt. Hurbert Bass for "Mule, One: Missouri Type, Dead."

Investigation showed that Lt. Bass wanted a fresh carcasss to give realism to a bayonet class. The requisition had to be denied, however, when further investigation showed that the Fort Benning version of the Missouri mules are possessed of extremely long lives and in fact one hasn't died on the reservation for many months. So, Lt. Bass went back to the straw dummy for his training class.

At Camp Pickett, Virginia, Sgt. Jesse Kent is putting over an idea that has his girl frantic and, is beginning to worry the girls of other soldiers. Sgt. Kent is keeping his shoe-shine bright for inspection by covering it with clear nail polish. And where do you suppose he gets the polish?

Listen . . . . . It's Fort Benning

Well, here we go again into another week of radio at Fort Benning. The first thing on the order of business, is the "Fort Benning on the Air" program coming to you every evening, Monday through Friday over Columbus' own station WRBL, at 6 p. m.

Plenty of new talent for this week, more than we have ever seen before in one week's time . . . Tonight—Pfc. William Jones, baritone, of Co. A, Service Bn., 1st Student Training Regiment . . . This is the first time for him on this program . . . He was discovered for us by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning . . . In a recent program held in honor of the general, he made such a hit that the general told the directors of the program about him and they in turn asked Jones to sing on the air.

Friday will see the "Bond-a-Dears" interviewed on the program in reference to the Fort Benning War Bond Breakfast . . . Monday there will be a Red Cross interview . . . E. C. Bussy, field director of the F. B. Red Cross, Miss Hattaway and Col. Noyes of the Station Hospital.

Tuesday and Wednesday will be devoted to new talent. Sgt. Harrie Bugg, Co. C, Academic Regiment, ISSC . . . will present some of his own arrangements of popular numbers, on Tuesday . . . The sergeant is from Tampa Fla., and has played in Miami night clubs before entering the Army. He will play a brand new arrangement he has just completed on Zez Confrey's "You Tell 'em, Ivories," as well as "Skylark" and "My Devotion."

Another pianist will be on tap for Wednesday when O. C. John Johannesson, 10th Company 1st Student Training Regiment who has just come from Hollywood, will play and sing some of his own works, including lyrics he has written for Gershwin's famous "Rhapsody in Blue" . . . Johannesson has been active in the small theater movement in Boston, New York, and Hollywood, and has appeared with the well-known Bliss-Hayden Theatre productions on the coast . . . He has helped actively in the direction of such movies as "Ten Gentlemen From West Point," "Eagle Squadron," "Thunder Bird" and "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

Presidents of three nations—the United States, Mexico and the Philippines—collaborate over three national networks Sunday, Nov. 15, to help observe Philippine Commonwealth Day . . . CBS, MBS, NBC-Blue, 5 to 5:30 p. m. . . . The program opens in the new ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel in Washington, D. C., when the Philippine soprano, Enya Gonzalez, sings "Planting Rice" witha piano accompaniment by Rudolfo Cormelo. Then, also from the Shoreham, President Manuel L. Quezon of the Philippine Commonwealth speaks, and the United States Marine Band plays the Philippine National Anthem . . . Next, President Manuel Avila Camacho of Mexico speaks in Spanish from Mexico City. A running translation of his talk is to be given in English. On conclusion of his talk, the Marine Band in Washington will play the Mexican National Anthem . . . Finally, President Roosevelt has the networks and the program concludes with the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" by the Marine Band . . . This program should be of interest to every G. I. on the post.

AIRAVES . . . Congrats to . . . Sgt. James C. Murphy, Co. M, 29th Infantry for his fine work on the Fort Benning on the Air" program last Tuesday . . . He has a fine baritone voice and can he sing those Irish ballads . . . T-5 Owen J. Remington, for the fine job of lining up this new talent. If I ever produce motion pictures, he will be the first man I hire as a talent scout . . . Sgt. Delos Andrews and his brand new bride, the former Miss Ruth Pettus, of Dothan, Ala., for being the first couple to be married over the air on a Fort Benning program and also for being the first to be married in a service club. The sergeant is in the "Two-Nine" and is from Elmira, N. Y.

This coming Monday evening at 8:05 from the Sand Hill area Service Club, there will be broadcast the weekly program "Listen, It's Fort Benning," and will feature the 29th Infantry Band. The story of the "Two-Nine" will be told . . . The history, background and customs of the famous demonstration regiment will be aired . . . It will be proven that "We Lead The Way" is a very appropriate motto for the regiment.

The regular Friday night broadcast of the "Kate Smith Hour" is to be heard from Chapel Hill, North Carolina, Nov. 13, as Kate Smith moves her full company to the Naval Pre-Flight School for a special program. The "Kate Smith Hour" is heard over Columbia Network at 8 p. m. . . . Guests of Gate Smith include screen celebrities Jane Wyatt and George Murphy. Also on hand are the regular members of the cast including Olyn Landick, the "Hackensack Gossip," Jack Miller's orchestra and Ted Straeter . . . A regular feature of the show is the medley of songs, requested by the men in the service, which the ever popular Kate Smith sings.

That's all folks . . . See you again next week.

Peeks at Pics

Cpl. Solomon Kleindorf

With the name, Casablanca on the front pages of all the newspapers in the country and possibly, the world, gives Warner Bros. more publicity than any hundred publicity men could. . . . Warner Bros. has just completed a picture entitled "Casablanca", telling the story about the town since the fall of France . . . Starring Humphrey Bogart, Paul Henreid, Ingrid Bergman, Claude Rains, Conrad Veidt, Peter Lorre, Sidney Greenstreet, S. Z. Sakall, and many others, the story deals with a famous French patriot (Paul Henreid) who tries to escape to America through Casablanca in French North Africa. . . . Because it is under Vichy, he cannot be touched by the Nazis legally but he can be stabbed in the back up some dark alley. . . . A cafe owner (Bogart) has papers in his possession that can get Henreid out of the country safely but because Henreid's wife (Ingrid Bergman) once jilted him, he refuses. . . . Conrad Veidt plays the Nazi hunter and Claude Rains does a masterful bit as the French Commissioner. . . . What finally happens to the patriot and his beautiful wife makes the pic a delightful evening's entertainment.

Now we come to the movie of the week, "Springtime in the Rockies" . . . Starring Betty Grable, John Payne and Carmen Miranda, with a fine supporting cast, Cesar Romero, Harry James and His Music Makers, Edward Everett Horton and Charlotte Greenwood, the story is light and not too fast. Betty may not be able to act but when it comes to dancing she can wiggle any part of her anatomy that is necessary. . . . Seems Betty Grable is a cigarette holder user and loser. So George Raft gave her one with a chain and identification tag. . . . She took a spill during one dance number, so the dance director, Hermes Pan, had the slippery floor covered with finely powdered carborundum to prevent further skidding. Watch for one quickie scene in which Carmen Miranda wears a dress trimmed with three hundred real orchids. . . . Harry James and His Music Makers make their screen debut in "Springtime in the Rockies", and Harry's fan mail upped to six thousand letters the first week. . . . Director Irving Cummings wrote to John Payne's young daughter, Julie, apologizing for making him toll on her 2nd birthday and a promise never to do it again.

The story of "Nightmare" is in one way unusual and in the other, rather commonplace. . . . The story, starring Brian Donlevy and Diana Barrymore, takes place in England and starts with the bombing of Brian's gambling house. . . . from there on, a murdered man is brought in, only to be carried away and to appear once again in the same spot, shortwave radios are found wired to the dashboard of a car, mysterious sayings are mouthed by the dying man and finally spies and sabateurs are brought into the plot. . . . Plenty of fast action and Brian Donlevy playing the role of a smooth but tough gambler to the limit. . . . If you like thick mystery and anti-climaxes this is the pic for you.

Here is some inside dope on the new feature by RKO, "Once Upon a Honeymoon", starring Ginger Rogers, Cary Grant and Albert Dekker. . . . This is Villain Walter Slezak's first picture. The man was bogged down with advice and hints, and ribbed constantly. . . . For one scene, he had to turn his back while phoning so he wouldn't see Ginger cross the room and enter, another door. . . . McCarey, the director, told him to keep talking until he got a cue that would mean Rogers was safely out of sight.

Laughs Aplenty Afforded By Special Service Shows

Col. Finnegan Aids Soldier Morale By Sponsoring Shows

A half million Fort Benning soldiers have enjoyed a good laugh or a good song in the last year through the untiring efforts of the special service officer at post headquarters.

This estimate was disclosed this week when the entertainment and recreation program carried on at Fort Benning during the last year was reviewed. At the same time, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer, announced plans for an even more ambitious winter program for the coming months with a number of USO-Camp Shows Inc. units scheduled to play at Fort Benning and a number of soldier-shows planned that army officals asked for full details on its production. In addition to the many Columbus Defense Council directed by Johnny Clarke, former promoter of soldier entertainment at Fort Benning, presented several well-attended variety shows.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS

There were other attractions that proved popular with Benning personnel. The LaGrange, Ga., All-Girl Band made three apperances; Camel Caravan sent four units that were always well-received; General Electric's popular "House of Magic" drew thousands of soldiers to its demonstrations; the Topperweins, famous shooting duet, made an appearance; Mary Ann Merver, singing star of NBC came down for a bond rely attended by several thousand soldiers and the Gem Razor Blade Company sent a man to make phonograph records of soldiers voices to be sent home to relatives and friends. There were many other special attractions such as art and photography exhibits placed around in the various service clubs during the last year.

Assisting Colonel Finnegan in the special service office at Fort Benning is Sergeant Wicker, former Broadway stage manager. The office cooperates with the various special officers of the Fort Benning outfits in arranging entertainment programs.

"JUNIOR MISS" STARS

Outstanding in the series of USO-Camp Shows was the three-act comedy "Junior Miss" and two colored musicals. Top-ranking actors appearing during the season were Al Jolson, Mischa Auer and Harpo Marx.

In addition Fort Benning served as the "experimental station" for "sing-song units," groups of four or five entertainers who were so well received at Fort Benning they were leter sent overseas to entertain the troops.

All of this professional talent was greatly supplemented by soldier produced and soldier-acted productions such as the summer water show, "Aqua-Poppin'," directed by Sgt. James Wicker, assistant to the special service officer, that played before 10,000 spectators at Russ Pool and was so successful that army officals asked for full details on its production. In addition to the many Columbus Defense Council directed by Johnny Clarke, former promoter of soldier entertainment at Fort Benning, presented several well-attended variety shows.

PRINCE TOTOA AUELUA, 18-year-old son of the High Chief of Satuls Village in Pago Samoa, was questioned in San Francisco last week on charges of being a stowaway. Claiming that he had merely fallen asleep while bossing a gang of stevedores loading the ship at a port near his home, Totoa solved the whole problem by enlisting in the army.

THE GENE AUTRY HOUR, beamed over 115 CBS stations and by shortwave to foreign countries, was the first international radio broadcast from the AAF Flexible Gunnery School at Tyndall Field, Fla. The occasion was the graduation exercises of the aerial gunnery students. Sgt. Autry, now a member of the AAF, participated in the broadcast, which originated in the NCCS-operated USO club in Panama City.

8,100 Vehicles A Day Pass Benning's 'Times Square'

MP's Vigilant As Traffic Approximates That of a "Big City"

The next time you drive through Fort Benning's "Times Square"—or in other words Out Post No. 1—and notice the dazed, tired look on the military policeman on duty there, just realize that every 24 hours more than 8,100 vehicles go whirling by that fork in the roads.

With those 8,100 cars going by the Out Post on an average of one car, truck or bus every ten and a half seconds, a serious traffic jam could be caused and the post's war effort seriously impeded if Fort Benning's military police had not perfected a system to "Keep 'Em Moving."

Lt. Col. Clarence A. Will, provost marshal, this week released a report of a 24-hour tabulation on vehicles moving past the Out Post which disclosed that during that day and night, 4,141 cars, trucks and buses came in and 4,052 went out.

The importance of maintaining clear traffic lanes to and from the mighty post is easily apparent when it is recalled that these 8,-193 vehicles carry tens of thousands of soldiers and civilians to and from their duties.

And the problems of keeping this traffic moving along the approaches to Fort Benning at the maximum legal rate of speed are intensified by the fact that the great bulk of this traffic moves through the Out Post between 6:30 and 8:15 a. m. and 4:30 and 6 p. m., according to the poll by military police.

During one "peak" period lately, military police estimated that 1,440 vehicles, or one every seven seconds, were checked in or out of the reservation.

The two-lane Benning Boulevard, the direct route from Columbus through Baker Village, carried the bulk of the traffic, with 2,682 cars coming in by that route; 1,176 by the old Benning Roa dand 283 by way of Custer Road—the thoroughfare running from the Sand Hill area.

VIGILANT PATROLS

The five or six miles of road in the reservation are well patrolled during the rush hours and usually throughout the day by the motorcycle police who have instructions to keep "things moving" at the legal rate of speed and to prevent hundreds of cars and trucks from "bunching up" and slowing the traffic line down.

Added to the M. P.'s troubles only recently was the task of identifying every person entering the reservation and of checking passes of all enlisted personnel leaving the post.

Until the present system was perfected there was considerable confusion and a two-hour delay one morning in getting past the Out Post, but now the cars speed along after being checked by three men at the very edge of the reservation so that if any civilians are refused permission to enter they won't be well inside the reservation when they are turned back.

"Civilians employes and residents of the post have cooperated splendidly in speeding things up by wearing their identification buttons where we can see them at a glance," provost marshal assistants told the BAYONET.

"Pooling" of rides, requested by Fort Benning officials some time ago to conserve gasoline, is being done to a great extent but there are still many cars passing the Out Post with only one or two persons in them, recent checks disclosed.

Some indication of the value of "pooling" cars can be shown by the fact that these 8,100 cars consume more than 8,100 gallons of gasoline each day in driving to and from the post to work.

The task of seeing that military personnel at Fort Benning receive enough gas for their important needs is the work of an unique enlisted men's unit of the provost marshal's office—the Gasoline Rationing Board, now under the supervision of Pfc. Louis Lipp, who succeeded Corp. Kalman Rubin as chief of the section.

"NO" IS THE ANSWER

If there is an office where tact, common sense, discretion and the power to say "no' 'nicely is vitally important, it's the Gasoline Rationing Board.

Although they operate under the supervision of Colonel Will and the assistant provost marshals, the three enlisted men in the section are the authorities on how much gas a soldier should or shouldn't have—because they have worked there so long they have become masters of a difficult problem—gas rationing.

"Our duty is not to ration gas, not to say no to as many army men as possible," declared Lipp this week. "On the contrary we're here to get as much gas to a soldier as he is entitled to legally."

Lipp and his two assistants, Pvt. Lawrence Feuerstein and Pvt. Ewald Braumann, say "yes" and "no" to ranking generals, colonels, captains, sergeants and privates. "And each is given the same impartial consideration."

"Our Army men, or the great majority of them, are entirely honest about gas rationing when they come to us and we find the only just way is to treat each case individually because the fact they are Army men means they will have special problems of transportation and change of home that the civilian won't have," Lipp said.

Even as he explained the problems of the Board, which interviews roughly 400 applicants every day, an officer came in and asked for enough gas to take a short honeymoon. Regretfully he was turned down but when the situation was explained to him, the officer declared he'd take a train and solve the whole problem.

The Fort Benning rationing board is believed the only one in the nation operated entirely by enlisted men, and the trio working there now are working to maintain a record of never having a formal complaint placed against them.

Lipp declared, though, that an even tougher "nut to crack" was coming up in December when the board takes over the task of regulating forms for the periodic tire examinations ordered by the government.

True to past form though the "board" was in conference with a tire rationing expert late last week getting first hand "dope" as Lipp explained so, they'll know the answers when the questions start pouring in.

Did anybody say the M. P.'s didn't put in a day's work?

Beware Soldier; That Steak May Be Booby Trap

The average soldier eats his way into enough high explosives each month to supply the TNT in 10 39 mm. shells—and in addition, enough soap to keep himself and a large part of his laundry clean for several months.

Sounds a bit confusing, doesn't it? But that's the way that Lt. Herman E. Klein, salvage officer at Ft. Benning has it figured out from tables prepared recently.

Salvage of food from the mess tables in the Army now provides, among other things, much needed greases, used to make both high explosives and soaps. According to the tables prepared by Lt. Klein, the grease salvage per soldier per month will be sufficient to make half a pound of high explosive and three pounds of soap.

Besides this, glue is also made from meats and bones salvaged from the mess halls and still further, the residue from boiling this refuse into glue is used to make animal and chicken food.

Soap and glycerine, the basis for nitro-glycerine, is made from cooked grease and trap grease, taken from traps under sinks, the latter being rendered out to form practically pure grease of high value.

"Jeeps" or Trailer Vans All in Day's Work for 21st QM (Truck) Regiment

Among the many groups and organizations functioning as a part of the world-famous Infantry School at Fort Benning, the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) occupied a place of importance.

Composed of colored soldiers who hail from all parts of the United States and who represent a variety of backgrounds, this regiment is commanded by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, a veteran of many years in the service.

This is a comparatively new regiment—having been activated in April, 1942—but in the short time of its existence it has made an enviable record. It is designated by the War Department as a truck outfit, which means that its daily work hinges around the transportation of personnel and supplies. For this purpose many types of vehicles are assigned to the regiment.

Men with ability to drive, maintain, and service these vehicles are sent to the regiment where they receive the finest of motor training in conjunction with the necessary basic military training. Under the expert supervision of commissioned and non-commissioned personnel, they soon learn to assume complete responsibility for the handling of these various types of vehicles and are able to drive any motor from the smallest "jeep" to the giant trailer van.

FORM CADIES HERE

From time to time calls come from other posts requesting skilled mechanics, motor operators, and even instructors. A goodly number of these requests reach Headquarters of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment, and, within a remarkably short time, replacements are on the way to fill these needs. With the speeding up of the war effort, these requests are coming in increasingly greater numbers but the work and training in the regiment is so well organized that qualified men are always ready to leave without lessening the efficiency of the workers on the home post.

In addition to the transportation activities carried on by the regiment, the routine duties common to any army unit must be attended to and, for this purpose, men with previous clerical training and experience work in the various headquarters and orderly rooms. Officers work to provide wholesome recreation for the men while others publicize the promotions of these same men in order that the folk back home may know of "their boys" progress. During off hours, soldiers may be seen engaged in spirited athletic contests, while others are attending religious services planned by the Chaplain, and still other men are rehearsing as musical groups to represent the regiment on public occasions.

Working under Colonel Altman is a group of officers, including 39 recently commissioned colored officers. Colonel Altman's staff includes Lieut. Cbl. James E. Darby, executive officer; 1st Lieut. Wilbert D. Meeks, adjutant; Capt. Kenneth J. Atwell, regimental supply officer; Lieut. George Schwartz, intelligence and special service officer; and Regimental chaplain, Levi L. Stanmore.

A further breakdown of the command functions of the regiment finds Lieut. Col. Ewell C. McCallum in command of the First Battalion, Lieut. Col. William E. Stubbs commanding the Second Battalion, and Lieut. Col. Walter Garth commanding the Third Battalion. The Fourth Battalion, a casual detachment, is under the command of Maj. Norman W. Oppenheim, Company "M," 28th Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), commanded by Capt. Addison T. Whitt, and Company "E," 27th Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), commanded by the Lieut. Everett Pettijohn, are attached to the regiment.

To sum it all up, the 21st Quartermaster Regiment as a truck unit is contributing in a great way to the work of The Infantry School, and is likewise teaching hundreds of men to live, work, and play together in a patriotic and profitable manner.

QM's Job Is To Keep Doughboy Best Dressed, Best Fed Soldier In World And Benning Is Doing It

Col. Massey's Office Is Bee-Hive of Important Activities

No other branch of Uncle Sam's Army carried the tremendous burden of responsibility in the daily operations of a military post like Fort Benning that is borne by the Quartermaster Corps.

The problems involved in feeding all of Benning's thousands three times a day is enough in itself, but in addition the Q. M. C. also provides all clothing and equipment with the exception of actual guns and ammunition. The corps operates laundries, maintains the cemetery, runs the fuel stations and ice house, furnishes administrative transportation, and does the bulk of the purchasing and contracting for the entire post.

In the past few months this vast network of activity has been administered daily with clock-like precision under the aggressive supervision of Colonel Stephen E. Massey, recently named director of all supply at the fort. As post quartermaster Colonel Massey quickly geared the Quartermaster Corps at Benning to war-time operation and ever since early this year, the Q. M. C. has been on the alert 24 hours a day.

The quartermaster, during the past few months, has truly been the odd-job man of Benning. At one and the same time, he has been marketer and grocery-store man, laundryman, haberdasher, milkman, the filling station operator, truck dispatcher, junk disposal man, iceman and shoe repair man.

RESPONSIBILITIES SHIFTED

Until recently, the Q. M. C. also had other duties, but recent reorganizations have shifted some of these to other branches of the service in order that all emphasis might be placed on the paramount problems of supplying food and clothing. All motor transport is now an Ordnance function, and a separate corps has been created to coordinate all transportation problems formerly handled by the Quartermaster Corps.

The quartermaster office at Benning is ever a bee-hive of activity. It now houses the administrative officer, the purchasing and contracting section, and the supply division in addition to the civilian personnel branch for the entire post. A quartermaster officer, 1st Lieut. Raymond A. Perkins heads the latter division, while 1st Lieut. Charles McKeown, another member of the Q. M. C., is in charge of the transportation activities.

From this headquarters, the activities of the Quartermaster Corps fan out all over the reservation with buildings located in many sections. Huge warehouses are strung out over a length of almost a mile. The two modern laundries are located in different areas, various repair shops are scattered in different buildings, but everything clears through the main office and the daily functions are performed with amazing efficiency.

Supply, naturally, is the main problem and food is the foremost item. Under the direction of 1st Lieut. Marcus E. Cooper, the subsistence officer, all food not only for daily issue, but also for the sales commissary is procured and distributed. Carloads of foodstuffs arrive daily, and while large stocks are carried on hand, all perishables like fresh fruits, vegetables and dairy products come into Benning every day from nearby sectors. A huge refrigeration plant stores these items until unit trucks arrive to take them to the mess-halls.

Although food is foremost in interest, clothing and equipage are of equal importance. Almost every conceivable item of Army issue is stocked in the Q. M. warehouses. The variety runs from tents to insignia, and the hourly flow of material in and out of the warehouses is gigantic in proportions.

YANK BEST DRESSED

There are many problems incident to the supply of clothing, particularly in order that the American soldier may remain the best-dressed in the world. Correct fitting is difficult but is easily handled by the use of scientific devices, many of them specially created by Q. M. C. technicians. One item never issued until it is correctly fitted is the service shoe, and if a man cannot be taken care of with one of 144 stock sizes, then special lasts are prepared for him.

The Benning supply corps provides coal and wood for fuel in vast quantities for both heating and cooking purposes. Oil houses and filling stations are located at strategic points on the reservation and thousands of gallons of gas and oil are distributed daily for use by all mechanized equipment. As a sideline, a forage shed is also maintained to provide for the animals in the Infantry School Stables.

Also supplied by the quartermaster is stationery, printed forms, typewriters, office machinery, office supplies and a thousand-and-one other items. Stock reply at Benning is "if you can't get it elsewhere try the Quartermaster Corps."

MOTOR POOL

All motor transportation for administrative purposes is provided by the post motor pool, operated under the supervision of Capt. Walter H. Cook, a veteran Q. M. officer. The administrative transportation involves many different types of vehicles such as passenger cars, station wagons, cargo trucks, and many others.

The quartermaster laundries, operated under the direction of Major Leslie E. Parker, a laundry operator in civilian life, care for all the soldier washing at the post, and are modern, up-to-date cleaning plants which turn out tremendous volumes of work every week.

On top of all these functions, the Q. M. C. has constantly been

Experts Have Streamlined Army 'Stix'

72-Hour Limit In Getting Records To Capitol Hill

"In order to keep tab on new triangular divisions and fast-moving mechanized corps, army statistical methods have been amazingly streamlined," according to Lt. B. E. Moore, officer in charge of the Machine Record Unit at Fort Benning.

"Previously it took three months time for simple personnel changes to reach Washington. Today the machine record units give this information to the Adjutant General on Capital Hill in just 72 hours," Lt. Moore said.

He went on to point out that it would be a physical impossibility to keep track of Private Joe Doakes with the old pen and pencil. For each enlisted man a total of seventeen pertinent facts, including full name, serial number, grade, arm or service, type of organization, company or battery, main civilian occupation, race, station, duty, type of change of status, date of change, and military occupational specialties are listed. In an officer's record there are 11 more facts given.

Now multiply these figures by the number of officers and men in the present day army and the result would look like twice the that it can be done. They are the only country besides the United States which have this system in use, and they have been using it for six years. A considerable proportion of their success may be due to this factor. It is one of the most valuable assets a general can have.

MOBILE UNITS

Here at Benning, Lt. Moore, assisted by Lt. E. S. Miles, Warrant Officer E. D. Lewis, and 64 enlisted men, is charged with keeping the records for Fort Benning and several other camps in this area. Their unit is a fixed one but mobile ones of a similar nature have been perfected for use in the different theaters of operations. These mobile units usually keep books for an army corps, even so, streamlined methods enable them to close down at one location move to another and be ready for work in four hours.

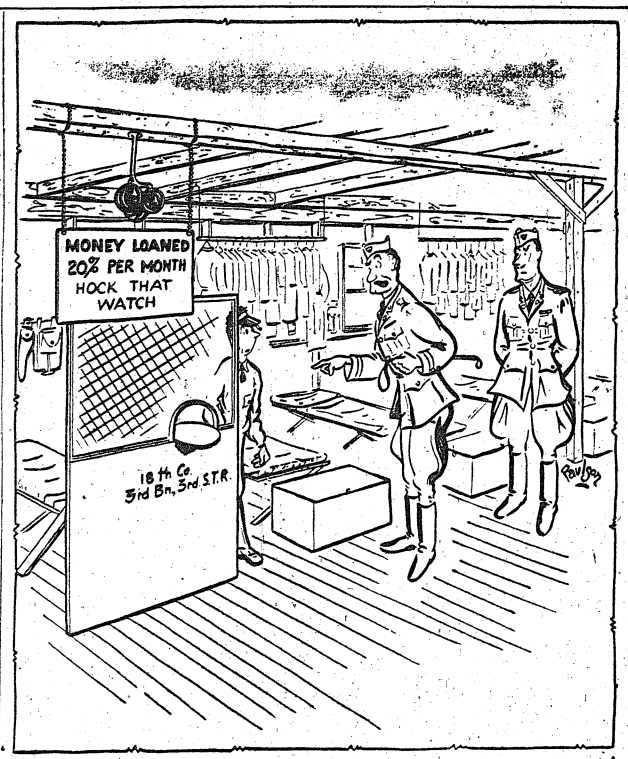
As for the machines themselves, they are the peak of perfection in speed and accuracy. A machine record unit can compile a listing of military specialists, such as cooks, bakers, clerks, and mechanics for an entire service command in less than three hours. Over 1,000 officer data cards can be handled, pertinent information gathered and printed ready for use in as little as 40 minutes. This includes arranging these alphabically and by arm or service, listing serial number, station, organization and grade of the officer. As for accuracy, once the information is correctly punched, into the card, the percent of error is negligible, not even half of one percent.

Besides answering questions of supply and demand of manpower, the machine record unit serves as a means of keeping individual histories, which may later be the soldier's chief means of proving eligibility for pensions, hospitalization, veterans preference and assures equal treatment to all.

But while we are at war the unit continues to serve principally as any general's most valuable asset, telling him where his soldiers are, what they are doing, and how well it is being done.

11th Armored Quiz Team Beats 54th

Grabbing the lead on the opening questions, the 11th Armored Personnel quiz team representing the 54th Infantry Personnel by the score of 305 to 230 recently at the Service Club. It was the second win for the 11th Armored in as many weeks and gave them the right to compete again next week on Wednesday.



Members of the winning team were Corporals Joe Sullivan, Fred Boylan, Morse Johnson and Sergeant Walter Coss. The 54th team was composed of Corporals Bernard Eil, Edward Schleske, Albert Zimmerman and Sergeant Horace Swain.

Master of Ceremonies for the evening was Corporal James E. Frye of the division public relations office. Sergeant Jerry Tonkens served as timer and Warrant Officer Ralph Ellis acted as scorer.

The program is a weekly feature on Wednesday at Service Club No. 2.

a leader not only in the post's salvage campaign, but also in conservation. Substitutes have been adopted for many critical items, and in many cases the substitutes are better than the originals. Every conceivable item at the post is salvaged by the quartermaster, or repaired and returned to use. A large shoe repair shop does nothing but re-sole Army brogans.

"Keep 'Em Supplied" is but one of many slogans adopted by the Quartermaster Corps, and at Fort Benning it is more than just a slogan. It is a promise, and it is being fulfilled daily by a staff of officers, enlisted men and civilian employees who have been banded together into a smooth-working war time organization.

2nd S.T.R. Celebrating Its First Year At This Post

Infantry School Unit Pioneered Training Of Officers Here

The Second Student Training Regiment, one of the three huge training regiments of The Infantry School, is also observing a birthday this week—its first.

And while ordinarily a first birthday signifies extreme youth, an outfit one year old in these fast-moving times in the Army of the United States may belie its age. For in one year the Second Regiment has grown into quite a baby, as its commanding officer, Col. Maurice G. Stubbs, can testify.

The Second Regiment was activated Nov. 13, 1941 by General Order No. 19 of The Infantry School, and two officers were immediately assigned to the new unit, Col. Stubbs and Major (now Lt. Col.) Paul E. Jacobs.

The original purpose was to make of the Second an outfit to handle companies of student officers taking the Rifle and Heavy Weapons course at the School. As such on Nov. 13 there were activated a Headquarters and Headquarters Company, a Service Company, and three battalion of four lettered companies each.

But the Second was to learn very soon that this is an era of constant change in the American Army, and starting in January all the original plans were reshuffled, a process which was to be repeated many times up to the present day.

ACTIVATE NEW UNITS

On Jan. 29 the whole organization was changed to accommodate Officer Candidate students. Lettered companies were redesignated by number and a fourth battalion was activated with provision made for six companies in each battalion. The Fifth Battalion was activated this spring, June 17 to be exact, with six companies, and a seventh company, the 31st, was added to that battalion Aug. 4. The Service Company became a Service Battalion with five companies of its own on Sept. 1 to bring the Regiment up to its present organization.

At first companies of students arrived in the Regiment in rather leisurely fashion, compared to today's mass-production schedule. The Officer Candidates started arriving in February. At the same time several O. C. companies were moved to the Harmony Church outfit from the main post.

A number of other officers have been with the Second continuously almost from the beginning. These include Col. Edward B. Jackson, present executive officer; Major Robert H. Garrison, Service Battalion commander; Major John J. Hazel, original Headquarters company commander and now commanding officer of the 20th Company; Capt. Robert B. Barrette, regimental supply; and Major Gerald B. Shine, regimental adjutant. All of these officers were assigned before classes started arriving.

OFFICERS ASSIGNED

The first group of company officers were assigned Dec. 20, including such veterans as Captains Edward T. Johnson, William C. Kahle, James W. Sorenson, Lieut. Lester D. Trautman, Major Francis A. Sergent and Major Lester E. Winslow.

The largest group of officers assigned at any one time joined up Feb. 7, when 54 graduates of a Basic Class came to the Second as company officers. A total of 28 of these are still with the Second.

The Second Regiment, being the pioneer unit in the School in the handling of Officer Candidate affairs, originated a good part of the present Standard Operating Procedure for administering Candidates. It was fortunate in having with it from the start a nucleus of officers who had been with the first O. C. companies in the First Regiment and on the basis of their experience and innovations suggested by newer blood in the Second were the efficient methods now used worked out.

Just in the last few months has the Second been able to settle down from constant reshufflings made necessary by the rapid expansion of the Officer Candidate training program and begin to lead the life of an adult Regiment.

Projects under way at the present time reveal this trend. The Regiment publishes its own newspaper, THE PINE-BUR; it has furnished its companies with plentiful day-room furnishings and athletic equipment to make the extra-curricular life of the O. C. student more enjoyable; a colored Service Club is nearing completion in the Harmony Church area and new life has been injected into the white Service Club, No. 3. An Officers' Club for the Harmony Church area is a-building; the Regiment is even sponsoring an art contest among members of its personnel.

When this war effort is over the Second Student Training Regiment will probably not go down into national military history; but there will be thousands of officers and enlisted men in the United States Army who will remember back to pleasant, if hard-working days, which they spent in the Second out at Harmony Church.

NOTES OF THE BUGLER

FT. DEVENS, Mass.—The bugler blew and blew and blew until he was blue in the face—but there was not a sound and not a man arose from his slumber. Cpl. James E. Meyers checked his bugle for mechanical defects. He found a wad of paper had been stuffed far into the tubing. It took 15 minutes to clear the way for reveille.

Fort Loop Leaders Clash Sunday In Conference Feature

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

No need to feel too badly about the result of Sunday's Army-Navy fracas when Benning absorbed a 35-7 licking at the hands of Pensacola. The result was not at all a surprise to this corner, and even in defeat there were plenty of good things about the game. As a matter of fact, it just served to vindicate some of the opinions we have had all along about the grid sport.

In losing to Pensacola, our boys went down before the onslaught of a really great eleven. After the game, one of the Navy coaches remarked that the Goslings had never played better this season. And with that array of talent, they were simply out of our class.

With but two exceptions, the Pensacolans were all former college stars, while only a sprinkling of the Benning 60-man squad had ever played college ball, and most of those had no more than one year of the big time experience. And few grid fans can question the fact that college football adds that certain amount of "seasoning" that goes to make really great players.

At Benning this year, however, we have been interested in football for sports sake, rather than a super team. At this post, every man in six different units who wanted to play football had his chance. Even if he had never played before, he was invited to come out, and many of the current varsity men are playing their first year of organized football.

Pensacola, like other Navy stations, assembled a collection of super stars and banded them into one great team. This isn't by way of criticising the Navy's viewpoint, but simply to point out that we think ours is better from an all-around point of view.

The intra-mural conference at the post this year has been tremendously successful—far more so than even its founders dreamed it might be. The mere story of its success is actually the story of Sunday's defeat. The reason? Well, the regimental coaches got so absorbed in the conference title-chase that they frowned on breaking up their teams in mid-season and sending their stars off to play on an all-star team. To them, winning the loop flag is more important, even though no one outside the bounds of the reservation might ever hear about it. That's football for sports sake!

Result of all this was that when the time came to select an all-star team, too many difficulties had to be overcome, and rather than risk any serious impediments to the title contenders, officials hit upon the unorthodox idea of using four teams in the game as units. Whether or not the original plan might have worked better is beside the point. Benning put on a good show, the game was interesting all the way, more than 15,000 soldiers had a fine afternoon of recreation, and the conference picture was not upset in any way.

To this pillar's way of thinking, that made the game a rousing success. Never before was such a tremendous crowd assembled for a sports event at the post. That mob was truly inspirational, and a great tribute to Army-Navy regulations, particularly at Benning. There was no disgrace in losing to that great Pensacola eleven, and there's plenty of consolation in knowing that the success of our own intra-mural program was proven even in defeat.

Further proof that the intra-mural league idea is the coming thing was given by Dick Hawkins of the Associated Press last week when he wrote in his popular column, 'Southern Fantalk," that the Benning plan this year might well be adopted by many colleges next fall when transportation problems eliminate inter-college games. He hailed the Benning formula, and praised it for being an excellent solution of the problem as to just where football belongs in a nation at war.

SIDELINE SNAPSHOTS—Polsy Clark was unable to make the trip with the Goslings, having been called away on official business Saturday. In his absence, Lieut. Weems Baskin, former line coach at Ole Miss, handled the reins in workmanlike fashion . . . Another head-liner who failed to show was Blacky Blumenstock, the ex-Fordham star, who had just received his wings and been transferred earlier in the week . . . Pensacola lost one more star back right after the game when Sal Lococo was ordered to report to the Athens Pre-Flight School. He was one of the few non-college players on the Gosling roster, and as matter of fact had never played anything but six-man football before entering the Navy . . . George Sauer, the former Nebraska All-American, played a spirited game despite his 32 years . . . Biggest cheers of the game went to Ole Dunderhead, the Army mule, who pranced around the field as mascot. He was ridden and "chased" by members of the 29th Infantry . . . The pre-game music by members of the 124th and 3rd Armored, playing on the field, was reminiful of real college ball . . . For most of the Benning boys, the crowd was the largest they had ever played before in their grid careers . . . Four generals, Fulton, Allen, Weems and Howell, were in the commandant's section, and enjoyed the game immensely . . . All in all, it was a GREAT SHOW!

Overflow Crowd Of 15,000 Sees Navy Win by 35-7

An overflow crowd of more than 15,000 wildly cheering spectators watched Pensacola Naval Air Station's star-studded gridiron machine roll over a game but out-classed Fort Benning eleven by a 35-7 count in Doughboy Stadium on Sunday.

Every nook and cranny of the huge concrete structure was filled for the most spectacular sports show in the fort's 24-year history. Three bands filled the air with football tunes, and even an Army mule was present to inspire the doughboys. But the limelight belonged to the Navy with its great array of gridiron talent.

Piling up 28 points in a first-half onslaught that had the crowd dumbfounded, the Pensacolans swept to a fairly easy victory after having lost their last four tilts to a quartet of the nation's strongest elevens. In the second semester, however, Benning rose to new glories and held the visiting Goslings even by pushing over a Soldier score in the third period.

It was a pair of spirited Gators from Capt. Red Milton's powerful 124th Infantry squad who accounted for the Benning score with a miraculous aerial effort. Roy Cestary, probably the Army's outstanding back yesterday, got off a pass after he was almost tackled and it connected with Vernon Smith, who made a one-handed catch, and raced 20 yards to the score. Nick Carlos, also of the Gators, converted the extra point.

Statistics showed the game to be much more evenly contested than the final score indicated. Benning piled up 12 first downs against 11 for the visitors, and also outgained them through the air by a slight margin despite the Navy's vaunted aerial circus. Pensacola completed 15 passes in 29 attempts for a net gain of 229 yards, while the Soldiers clicked on 17 out of 32 for 232 yards.

It was along the ground, however, that the Navy held the upper hand. With such great backs as Al Brumbaugh of Texas Christian, Bill Leckonby of the Brooklyn Dodgers, George Sauer of Nebraska and Cotton Milner of L. S. U. running hard all afternoon, the Goslings were seldom stopped. Johnny Birr, colossal 225-pound end from Indiana, was an outstanding pass-catcher who also caught the eyes of the fans.

The Pensacolans played minus the direction of their famed head coach, Lieut. Comdr. George (Potsy) Clark, who was called away from his station on official business the day before. In his absence, Lieut. Weems Baskin, former line coach at Mississippi, ran the team and used his superb material to great advantage.

Both teams filled the air with passes during the final canto, and Benning got inside the Navy 25 several times but lacked the punch to put over another score.

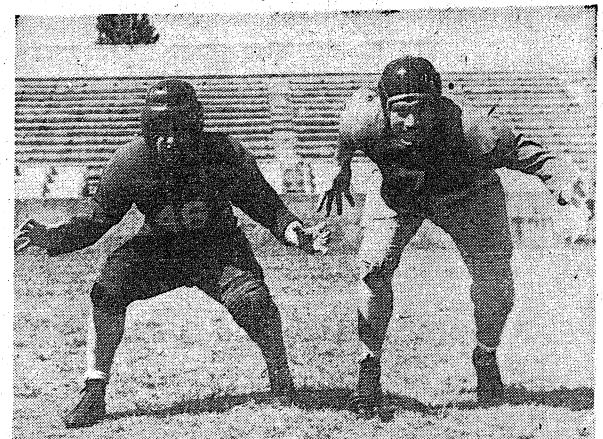
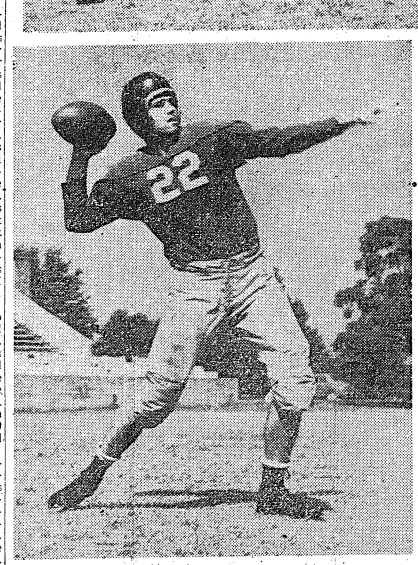
Panthers Meet Tuskegee Team



Fort Benning's Panthers, only colored eleven on the post, will invade jungletown in Alabama on Saturday for a grid battle with the far-famed Golden Tigers of Tuskegee Institute.



Still seeking their first win, the soldier gridders have been primed for this game all season. In Tuskegee, the charges of Lieutenant Maurice Kirk and Norman Hogenson will meet their hardest opponent.

The Tigers rate as the top-notch colored college team of the South if not the entire nation. They tripped Morehouse College in Columbus several weeks ago, and the Morehouse team gained a later win over Benning.

Naturally, the Panthers will be a pronounced under-dog, but the soldier club is counting on some of its stars like Clarence Reid, Bill Young and Frankie Phillipson to make quite a ball game out of Saturday's battle on the Alabama gridiron.

Ready For Dragons

Here are three star operatives for the 29th Infantry who are all set for a comeback Saturday night at the expense of the 3rd Armored Dragons. In the upper picture is shown 435 pounds of tackle in Mike Hutchins, 210-pound captain of the Devils, and Hank Zawaski, his 225-pound running mate. The pass flipper is Ed Hurley, the triple-threat star, who will start at halfback in the night tilt.

29th Infantry Boasts Varied Athletic Card

BY CPL. DON VAN TASSELL

Down Through The Years of 29th Sports: Tales of the deeds of many a 29th gridiron hero echo around the cuartel down through the years. Among them, was former Sgt. Major Davis whose backfield manuevers struck terror in many opposing teams . . . Intramural football got organized back in 1924, with teams from the 1st and 2nd Battalions, Special Units, 29th Infantry, I. S. S. C., 83rd Field Artillery, 15th Tank Battalion; battling for the Garrison Championship . . . Sergeants Kgelstrom and Bertelman, stellar athletes on the Infantry Eleven, were awarded positions on the mythical "All Washington" '24 Eleven. Each year selections were made by a committee of prominent sports writers from the Capital. Kgelstrom and Bertelman were selected along with other players from such teams as Loyola, Georgetown, Marylang and Catholic U . . . The 2nd Battalion, 29th, won the Intra-Mural Football league that year. "Flash" Franz was presented with a gold watch and chain by his teammates, for his outstanding play during the season.

Basketball: Back in those days, the 2nd Battalion copped about every athletic league on the Post. Sgt. Davis, Kgelstrom, Franz and Hendrix, formed the nucleus of the 2nd Bn. quintet that won the Post Basketball Title in 1925, defeating their brother doughboys from the 1st Battalion in the playoff . . . The Regimental Basketball Loop was first organized in '25 as a fore-runner to the Post Tournament. All companies erected outdoors courts in their company streets and the Regimental Loop wound up a huge success.

The Ring: Most of the titles in the Army Southern Boxing Meet were won by Two-niners in '25. Three "Blue Devils" were crowned Fourth Corps Area champs that year. "Red" Keenan, 1st Bn., won the featherweight title; Pvt. Whittle, Howitzer Co., took the bantamweight crown; and Pvt. E. A. McFadden, Co. "H," reaped in the heavyweight championship . . . Regimental boxing was held several nights a week at the 29th Infantry Theatre, after movies. Every Friday night, the A & R Office sponsored a boxing card, charging ten cents admission.

Doughboy Riders: The 29th Infantry Riding Team headed by Cpl. Ernest Akers, was presented with gold watches by the Chattahoochee Valley Fair Association, a token of appreciation for the exhibitions given at the fair that year. Members of the "crack" team were: Pfcs. Parvin Bennett, Watson, Wright; Pvts. Jones, Scales, Towns, and Hall; all of Regimental Headquarters Co.; and Pfc. Moore of Headquarters Co., 2nd Battalion.

Gators Meet Unbeaten 117th Eleven at 2:30; Devils Battle Dragons

Two all-important grid battles in the Fort Benning Conference this week-end will develop a clear title picture for the first time since the free-for-all flag race got underway six weeks ago.

The feature tilt on Sunday afternoon in Doughboy Stadium at 2:30 will bring together the undefeated 117th Infantry Breakers and the powerful 124th Infantry Gators with first place at stake. Both have won two and lost none in the conference standings and are currently deadlocked for the lead.

Saturday night at 8:00, the 29th Infantry and the 3rd Armored will come to grips in a desperate battle to remain in the flag race. The winner of the nocturnal tilt will move into a second-place tie with the Sunday loser, while the unsuccessful team will practically be eliminated.

The two remaining conference elevens, both of which have been practically counted out of the title picture, will journey into South Carolina for outside tilts with college opposition. The 11th Armored will invade Newberry College, while the 55th Engineers visit Wofford College.

EXPECT BIG CROWD

A near capacity crowd of 10,000 will probably be on hand to watch the Gator-Breaker fracas. The two elevens have consistently played the best football at the post all fall, and when they collide head-on in this battle for first place, plenty of fur is sure to fly.

Games This Week

Saturday night, 8:00 p. m.—29th vs. 3rd.

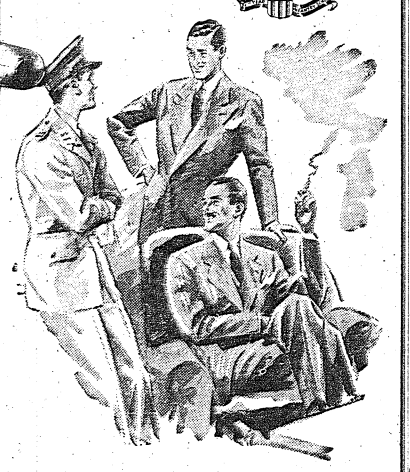
Sunday afternoon, 2:30 p. m.—117th vs. 124th.

After dropping its opening tilts to Chattanooga's Moccasins and Auburn "B," the Gators have captured three in a row from Spence Field, the 3rd Armored Dragons and the 11th Armored Tankers. The Breakers also have a three game streak and are unbeaten and unscored upon. The 117th has toppled Draper Prison, the Tankers and the vaunted 29th Blue Devils.

Sunday's game may develop into a wide-open affray since both elevens boast spectacular attacks, built around fast backs. In Roy Cestary, once of Notre Dame, the Gators have probably the best all-around performer at the post, but the Breakers can counter with Ken Smith, of Indiana fame, who is also a potent ball-carrier and passer.

GATOR AERIAL ATTACK

The Gators have developed a powerful aerial attack built around Cestary's adept passing. If the great Gator tailback is in form, the 124th aerials will be hard to stop, and the outcome of the game may depend on whether the Breakers can shackle the Gator passes.



Cestary is also a hard-charging ball-carrier and a long distance punter, but he gets plenty of help from such other crack backs as Blocker Nick Calos, Wingback Vernon Smith, and Fullback Stan Ergler. Hackney and Hamlin are other potent backs.

CLASSY BACKS

Lieut. Johnny Cudmore, Breaker coach, can match this array, however with a classy set of 117th backs. Besides Smith, there is big Mike Pansock, one of the loop's best punters as well as Charley Pierce, Vince Daddino and Boo

6 Million Pounds Of 'Dough' Ain't Hay To Cooks In This Man's Army

Bakers and Cooks School Knead (Roll) Their Own Here

By Cpl. Owen Remington

Fifteen thousand graduates of the Fort Benning Bakers and Cooks School and those in the 4th Service Command, during the past year may not be exactly rolling in dough these days but they certainly are hard at work rolling out the dough for the doughboys wherever there are Armies of Uncle Sam.

And they're able and willing to roll out that dough under any circumstances, anywhere from the most modern of big hotel kitchens to army posts, to field kitchens, or even to improvised clay ovens—or even no ovens at all.

Some of the graduates of the school—including not only the 15,000 graduated during the past year but other thousands from years past—were experienced in baking or cooking or catering before they entered the Army; others were never closer to an oven than watching hungrily near Mother's kitchen range, when they were boys.

Yet today they are officers, mess sergeants, supply sergeants, or active cooks and bakers turning out everything from breads and roasts to crisp salads and fancy pastries.

The Bakers and Cooks School at Fort Benning is not only regarded as probably the largest and best equipped school of its kind in the country—and therefore probably the world today—but one of the most progressive. Here new ideas are constantly being thought up and tested. Here the pace is being set for bakers and cooks schools in other Army posts. Here theories are tested thoroughly and scientifically. Here every effort is being made to work out arrangements to give the American soldier the best prepared foods.

TWO SCHOOLS HERE

There actually are two schools here at Fort Benning. One, for white personnel, is the parent school for nine others in the Fourth Service Command; the second is for colored cooks and bakers.

Col. John M. Rooks now is commandant of all Fourth Service Command schools, including the two at Fort Benning. The others are located at St. Petersburg, Miami Beach and Camp Blanding, Fla.; Keesler Field and Camp Shelby, Miss.; Camp Forrest, Tenn.; Ft. Jackson, S. C. and Ft. Bragg, N. C. He directs the work of all of these schools from his headquarters at the Fort Benning school.

Assisting him at Fort Benning is Lt. Col. Grover M. Ford, who recently took over after Lt. Col. William Edwin Barksdale was assigned a few weeks ago to the Quartermasters' department at the Fort. Col. Barksdale was in charge of the school here from March of 1941 until this October.

Men attending the school work from 7:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. attending classes, acting as regular cooks in the mess maintained at the school; hearing lectures; making models of ovens; taking down and putting together ovens; learning how to cook or bake under any conditions that might confront them; learning the theory as well as actual practice of preparing foods; studying in the newly established laboratory the effects of various ingredients on cooked foods; learning dietetics.

There is a two months' course for cooks; a two months' course for bakers; a month's course for mess sergeants.

a month's course for officers and another two weeks' course, also for officers.

PREPARE CHARTS

Right how the students themselves are actively engaged in preparing charts for the entire course under a plan instituted by Colonel Barksdale. This covers all phases of the work of the school and some of the charts look as though they were made by professional artists.

The bread for the entire post is baked here at the school, with the student bakers working under direction of experts. An entirely modern factory is in existence here, with bread being produced on regular assembly line basis. Huge mixers churn the dough; it is cut by automatic machines into loaves of exact size; then baked in huge ovens in which continuous chains keep moving the bread pans up and down, up and down, in order to keep it in absolutely even temperature in the big ovens.

But the training of the bakers doesn't stop there. Outside there is a battery of 16 large field ovens, run by wood. Here the bakers must turn out bread by hand that is every bit as good as that turned out inside the modern bakery. And they do it, too, learning how to use the same equipment that they will later find in many an army camp or less equipped base. They are prepared to stoke their own ovens and cook or bake in them under any conditions.

But the training doesn't stop there. Out in a big field nearby the bakers must learn how to work under much more primitive conditions. Here each class has to set up a clay oven in order to learn how to prepare for baking with whatever material may be at hand under advanced field conditions. And the bread coming out from there has to be just as good as that from the modern ovens, too. They also learn how to handle disposal of garbage and waste materials in the field through use of various types of incinerators or pits.

HOLE IN GROUND

But they don't stop there, either, for out in the field is what looks like a plain ordinary hole in the ground. It's a "trench oven." Here, with not even the clay at hand to build a clay oven, the student must learn how to do his work and again turn out well-nigh perfect results.

During the last 12 months, more than 6,000,000 pounds of flour were turned into bread by the school. The baking department is so organized that it has never been necessary to "send around the corner" for a single loaf of bread, as might happen in even the best regulated of homes when unexpected company drops in. Here at Fort Benning as much as an unexpected division has passed through or has "dropped in" and their bread needs were always filled.

Besides learning how to run the old wood burning field kitchens—or how to make their own kitchens from materials to be found in the field—the men learn thoroughly the mechanics and theory of the Wynne burner, which uses kerosene, or of another type of field kitchen that uses gasoline. This is in order to be prepared for cooking in desert areas where wood may be unavailable for heating purposes.

Students come to the school through the Quartermaster's corps of the Fourth Service Command, which alocates a certain number of students from each post. The students then are selected by that post and the Quartermaster then

54th Air Base Men Are Active on Battle Lines

The 54th Base Headquarters and Air Base Squadron was activated early in April 1941 under the command of Major William A. Capers, at the time a captain.

The squadron was organized with only 17 men as a nucleus and its first home was one barracks across the street from the field headquarters. In May of the same year several hundred recruits arrived and the 54th moved down the hill to "Tent City". It was there that these first recruits took their basic training and upon completion of this training the squadron again moved up the hill where new barracks had been built to accommodate the increased complement.

The primary purpose of the 54th Base Headquarters and Air Base Squadron is the administrative and mechanical maintenance of Lawson Field. In addition to the landing area which is but a minor, although nonetheless important feature of the field, here are located the hangars, shops, warehouses, gasoline storage facilities, bomb and ammunition depots, permanent quarters for combat and maintenance crews, the messing and recreational facilities and the maintenance and repair facilities. Between hangars No. 1 and No. 2 is an especially constructed administration building. Here are the offices of the Commanding Officer, Operations Officer and the weather station. Another indispensable unit in this administration building, atop the hangar, is the field control tower. Here trained observers note the air space in the airdrome area and traffic on the airdrome and, by visual signal or radio, contact all pilots, greeting them with take-off or landing directions.

EQUIPMENT

Back of the flying line are the shops and supply warehouses. The shops are equipped to make engine changes, to repair or change instruments and do all the second line maintenance. Minor repairs, which usually can be completed in a 48-hour period are made on the flying line by squadron mechanics. Second line maintenance work, repairs of a more complicated nature, is done by the engineering establishments of the air base. In this second or maintenance line are found technical buildings which house, Signal, Ordnance, Engineering and Chemical supplies. Another important item on the maintenance line is the Motor Pool where Air Corps technical vehicles and staff and reconnaissance cars are stored and serviced. These vehicles facilitate the rapid movement of the ground echelon.

The Base Photographic building contains dark rooms, drying rooms and specially ventilated rooms for the storage of valuable cameras. Facilities are also available for the enlarging or reducing of pictures, map-making and the making of mosaics. A trained staff of specialists is engaged in this work and the pictures desired can be taken either, by sending a photographer aloft in a plane to take them or, by attaching the camera to a speedy pursuit ship and letting the pilot double as chauffeur and photographer.

ESPRIT DE CORPS

The morale of personnel, flying, administrative and mechanical, generally will be no better than the accommodations for food, shelter, and recreation. Suffice it to say that the morale of the officers and enlisted men of the 54th has always been, and undoubtedly always will be, very high. It has been remarked by veteran soldiers who have served in different branches of the service, that, "the spirit of cooperation and camaraderie existing between the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of this squadron is of the highest type and something that is eagerly sought for in other outfits".

At the present time, men from the 54th are scattered all over the world, and many of them are waiting to attend Officer Candidate School and Aviation Cadet School. It is interesting to note that only a very small percentage of the men who go away to Aviation Cadet School, wash out; none of the men who have left the squadron to attend Officer Candidate Schools failed to receive their commission. That record speaks for itself and the type of men that make up the squadron complement.

Major William A. Capers is the C. O. and Thomas I. Burke is the 1st Sergeant.

didn't mean a thing to the men of the regiment who went to work with a crash of saws, falling trees, hammers and nails and in a few weeks the commanding officer of the regiment was dedicating a neat-looking, roomy guest house, all soldier-built.

"What we need is a good, first class recreation arena," said one 124th man the other day and that remark was the signal for another burst of carpentering. The result—McMillan Bowl, built at a cost of only a few dollars and sporting seats for 1,000, two dressing rooms and a full-size motion picture screen.

Tip-off on the caliber of men in the regiment are two things in particular. The present commanding officer of the First Battalion is one of the youngest lieutenant colonels in the U. S. Army—if not the youngest—Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, just 32, and a real leader of men. The second is that the regimental football team—well on the way to the post championship—practices and plays in the afternoon, but crowds their regular military duties into their morning hours so as to maintain the efficiency of the regiment.

The pay-off on all of this is just this. The men enter wholeheartedly into these "extra-curricular" activities and, in the words of one sergeant, "get a kick and a good laugh out of it all," but when they settle down to soldiering—their main job after all—they're good.

So good in fact that during October, 47 per cent of the demonstrations the regiment participated in for the Infantry School were marked superior and 50 per cent were credited as excellent, none was termed satisfactory and none poor. A similar excellent record was achieved during August.

As a matter of fact, the 124th, a Florida National Guard outfit that was called to active duty in November, 1940, was brought to Fort Benning as a demonstration regiment because of its outstanding record in maneuvers. Work of the regiment since its arrival at the Georgia post has been more than satisfactory.

So if you're really worried about that much misused word "morale," come on out to the 124th, meet "Adam the II," toss a penny in the "Wishing Well" and stay around to meet some of the boys.

(NOTE TO COMPANY COMMANDERS: Paragraph regarding "Wishing Well" and furloughs is of special interest, don't you think? Certainly would be a shame to have the men lose "faith" in the Well, over such little things, hey what!)

Sgt. Manlove Of Old 24th 28-Year Man

Served in Mexico, World War I; Widely Travelled

BY PFC. SMITHY NORTON

Twenty years ago the 24th Infantry moved back to Fort Benning from Columbus, Mexico. Fort Benning is the home of this history making organization and the people of Columbus enjoy telling new soldiers of this area about these gentlemen-soldiers. Officers of this post respected the reputation made by these men and a number of men from the two-four (24th Infantry) make up the cadre of the present army organizations at Fort Benning.

Somewhere today the two-four carries on for Fort Benning, for America, and for four freedoms.

The other day in the Service Club No. 4 the writer met M-Sgt. Hubert Manlove of the 24th Infantry. M-Sgt. Manlove, spry 212 pounder and stands 5' 6 1-2" in his best pair of GI shoes. He is a native of Clarksville, Tenn., and enlisted in the army October 5, 1914 at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

M-Sgt. Manlove is a cheerful sort of fellow and enjoys chatting about his extensive travels in the Philippines, China, and Japan.

"I enjoy watching a good football game and the boys in the 24th Infantry were good at this sport," says M-Sgt. Manlove. The men of the Quartermaster Detachment (colored) have great respect for M-Sgt. Manlove and they eagerly assist in keeping the vehicles of Fort Benning ready for rolling. Once as a chauffeur and motor mechanic in civilian life M-Sgt. Manlove has served well during his twenty-eight years. He is proud of his Fort Benning home (a modern cottage for colored non-coms in a select area on the army reservation) and his charming wife, Mary Manlove. She is an excellent home maker and keeps her GI butter ball. (apologies please) M-Sgt. Manlove in physical trim for his daily army duties.

M-Sgt. Manlove rates being placed among the Who's Who at Fort Benning. His long years of service in the Punitive Expedition (Mexico), World War I, in the Viastas (Juarez, Mexico) gives him quite an army background. Fort Benning is a great army post and it is the home of a large number of non-coms of the 24th Infantry. The non-coms and soldiers are trying hard to make good and with the assistance of the fine commissioned officers at Benning more men and soldiers like M-Sgt. Manlove, M-Sgt. Sellers, M-Sgt. Cummings, 1st-Sgt. Baker Wiseman, and others will be developed. These are Fort Benning's own—they are men from the two-four.

54th Armored Infantry Forms Integral Part of Tenth Armored

Last summer a distinguished old Infantry Regiment was reborn after twenty years of rest between wars. The 54th Armored Infantry, formerly the 54th U. S. Infantry, became a unit of the 10th Armored Division.

Twenty years ago, in 1922, this Regiment discharged its last soldier and veteran of World War I after distinguished service as a foot infantry regiment with battle streamers won at Meuse-Argonne and Alcase.

Twenty-five years ago, soldiers of the 54th Infantry wore the neck-tight khaki and basin type helmets of their period with a distinction which is bound to be an incentive to the new soldiers of the 54th Armored Infantry who wear the green overalls of the Armored Force.

The old and new 54th Infantry will have much in common. The old Regiment, activated in 1917, consisted mainly of citizen soldiers. The same is true today. The cadremen of the new 54th Armored Infantry are veterans in a manner of thinking since the average soldier of the Regiment has had nearly two years of service during the present emergency. Many of the officers and non-commissioned officers were private citizens less than two years ago. They have studied hard at various Armored Force posts during the past eighteen or twenty months to qualify for the positions which they now hold in the Regiment. And they are well qualified to train and lead the less-experienced men of the Regiment into action with the 10th Armored Division.

COL. ELEY COMMANDS

The 54th is commanded by Col. William S. Eley who has twenty-five years of continuous military service to his record.

A native of Virginia, Col. Eley sailed for France with the 23rd Infantry in 1917 as a captain. While overseas, he attended the General Staff College from November, 1917, until February, 1918, after which he spent two weeks with the British 39th Division at Perrone. Then he was placed in command of a company of that Division, serving the Allied forces on the Verdun front.

Ordered to Washington, D. C., in June 1918, Col. Eley was assigned to the office of the Chief of Staff. Three months later, he returned to France as assistant to Chief of Staff of the 31st (Dixie) Division. When the latter was broken up, he remained on the Western Front at Lemos until March, 1919.

Among his many assignments were: battalion commander, 57th Infantry, Fort Dix, N. J.; one year as student and one year as G-2 of Post Headquarters, Fort Benning; and Armored Force Reception Training Center, Fort Knox, Ky.

He returned to Fort Benning July 1, 1942. His promotion to a full-fledged Colonel came six days later.

old Private Carl Foster who served with the 5th Regiment of Marines in the 2nd Division.

He was in the famous battles at both Verdun and Chateau-Thierry and proudly says his outfit "played the biggest part in the battles."

He was a sergeant then, in charge of a machine gun section, and though he's supposedly going through his recruit training with the Maintenance Battalion he's actually giving the drilling, not taking it. He's considered the Battalion's top man at the manual of arms.

Another man who has been through the mill is Private George Hosier.

FOUR BATTLES

He was with the 1st Division and was "over" for 27 months seeing action in four battles: Saint Mihiel, Argonne, Sossions, and Cantigny. He was with the engineers but says they "were infantry troop more than anything else."

Private Hosier, who is married and the father of two children, is another volunteer who wants just one 'more crack at the foe. He was wounded at Soissons and gassed at the Argonne, and he, too, received the Purple Heart.

Private Daniel Massey, who volunteered last September, saw action in no less than five battles. He served with the old 76th Field Artillery, 3rd Division, for 19 months and was in the engagements at Aix LaMont, Saint Mihiel, Champagne Marne and the Argonne. Like the others, he remained tight-lipped when it came to telling anything of his experiences.

Private Otis Secrest was with the 76th Motor Transport of the famous 42nd "Rainbow" Division. But, he reluctantly added, the 76th was stationed at Brest putting equipment together. Then, as now, he worked in the maintenance shops.

Last of these volunteers is Private Cecil Ardary, 40, who is married and has two children.

Private Ardary spent two years in Germany with the army of occupation so that "others could get out." He served with the 50th Infantry and was only sixteen when he took the overseas trip.

Yes, these men are tough and experienced. What they lack in youth they make up doubly in solid determination. Hitler, Hirohito and Co. had better watch out when they meet up with these rugged "Tigers."

Tiger Outfit Has Six Vets Of World War

Several Participated Against Germans In Decisive Battles

Although Maintenance Battalion's "C" Company is studded with youngsters, many in their teens, the outfit boasts six men who were "over there" in World War I.

Take Private Manuel Correira who volunteered last month "to get a crack at a couple of those so-and-so Japs." He was with the famous 26th (Yankee) Division in the last war and saw action for 19 months in no less than five battles. He was in the thick of the fighting in the battles of Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Woods, Saint Mihiel, Soissons and Apermont.

His job was sniping and though he refused to talk about it Private Correira did admit he "got a few." He hopes to get a sharp-shooting post in this war for he's had plenty of practice since '18. In civilian life he had his own vaudeville act and put on an exciting show of both sharpshooting and knife throwing. Something tells us this GI will come in mighty handy when the "Tigers" meet up with Hirohito and Co.

Private Correira was wounded twice and received the famous Purple Heart.

Another tough soldier who vows to make things mighty tough for Uncle Sam's foes is 43-year-

Thirteen Former Enlisted Men

Thirteen former enlisted men of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division were sworn in last week as warrant officers by Lt. Col. F. J. Mallon, adjutant general, to fill vacancies existing in the Division's tables of organization.

Of the number, seven, under an assignment order, remain in their respective organizations fulfilling duties similiar to those they did as enlisted men. Those remaining in their old units are:

Messrs. Leonard E. Mullins, Headquarters, adjutant general's office; Edward L. Cohen, Division Quartermaster office; Paul B. Ford, Inspector General's office; Walter E. Larson, 54th Infantry, administration; Ralph W. Ellis, Jr., 11th Armored Regiment, administration; Manuel Reyes, adjutant general's office, and Stephen R. Johnson, 55th Engineers, construction.

Mr. Johnson who is attending the Armored Force School at Fort Knox., was sworn in there and will return to his Benning post as soon as his course is completed.

The other newly appointed Warrant Officers, their old organizations and assignments are:

Messrs. Roy Case, Combat Command B, to motor transport, Train Headquarters; Edsel B. McCowan, Supply Battalion, to G-4 transportation; Sanford Axelrod, 11th Armored Regiment, to 90th Reconnaissance Battalion, administration; John A. McDonald, 55th Engineers, to 54th Infantry, motor transportation; William B. McKewen, Combat Command B, to G-4 transportation, and Anton W. Makar, Division Service Company, to Judge Advocate's Division, clerical.

It was announced at the Adjutant General's office that approximately 50 vacancies still exist in the Division and that each enlisted man will be given an opportunity to apply for them. Formal announcement as to procedure in filing of applications is expected in the near future. They exist in administration, motor transport, motor maintenance, communications, supply and tank maintenance.

ENGINEERS PROMOTED

Promotion of eight enlisted men of the 55th Engineer Battalion, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, was ordered last week by Lieut. Col. Daniel S. Spangler. The men are:

Sgt. Salvatore A. Leonardo, Company E, to be staff sergeant; T-5 John Drogomir, Headquarters Company, to sergeant; Pfcs. Edward Blanco, Frank M. Anderson and Edward J. Ochab, all of Headquarters Company, and Private Albert J. Francescotti, Company A, to be T-5's, and Privates Richard E. Hayes, Company B, and John Moran, Company D, to be corporals.

'Terrify And Destroy' Is Goal Of Benning's 10th Armored 'Tigers'

Division Is Young Fast-Moving Unit Of Uncle Sam's Army

Despite its comparative youth as one of Uncle Sam's potential striking forces, the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division has progressed far in the attainment of its ultimate goal—the ability to "Terrify and Destroy" its enemy.

Out of months of toil, fatigue detail, routine training, tactical schools and a thousand other things—the "Tigers," with spirit and determination, have exemplified themselves as being typical troopers of the fast-moving, hard-hitting Armored Force.

Despite the rigorous training program, 10th Armored men have found time to organize baseball, football, basketball, volley ball and bayonet fencing teams and many other forms of recreation and entertainment, much of which was done on a voluntary basis and after regular training periods.

Officers and men well-remember when Major General Paul W. Newgarden, the "Tigers" commanding officer, delivered an address to recruit soldiers of his command. In it were seven pieces of advice which ring as true today as they did when first delivered an address to recruit soldiers of his command.

They are: "Stand up straight, clean up, muscle up, carry out orders, learn to march, learn to shoot, and learn to maneuver." The record of the 10th Armored Division speaks for itself in the program of carrying out those bits of advice.

TRAINING MARCHES

First big step in the training program took place last August when the entire division took part in a series of three training marches to Pine Mountain State Park. The division was divided into three groups, each going out for a day and a half.

Tactics, march discipline and standard operating procedure were stressed. In the afternoon recreation and sports held sway with hundreds flocking to the Park's swimming pool.

On August 16 at an impressive ceremony at division headquarters, Col. Morrill Ross was sworn in as brigadier general. Gen. Ross is chief of Combat Command "B."

A month later the 10th Armored "Tigers" was chosen as the official name for the division. The name was selected by Maj. Gen. Newgarden from over 900 contest entries.

On September 26 Maj. Daniel S. Spengler, commanding officer of the 55th Engineer Battalion, and Maj. Corneliuc A. Lichirie, 90th Reconnaissance Battalion, were promoted to lieut. colonels.

September 28 proved to be a red-letter day for the division. For it was then the "Tigers" dipped their colors in salute to their chief. Lt. Gen. Jacob L. Devers, chief of the U. S. Armored Force who arrived here for a one-day inspection tour of the Tenth.

Highlight of the day was Gen. Devers' talk to the officers and men at Division Bowl.

PRAISE FROM DEVERS

"You men look fine," he told the "Tigers," "you look as though you can do a good job. I like your name, and if you can live up to it I'm sure you will go places."

General Devers covered as much ground as he possibly could, watching artillery, rifle and pistol demonstrations, reviewing parades, attending both a luncheon and dinner held in his honor.

The following day another distinguished visitor arrived. Brig. Gen. Alexander R. Bolling, G-1 of the Army Ground Forces, was here for a conference with General Newgarden. A brief ceremony was held in his home at division headquarters.

September was the "walking" month. With the ultimate goal of 25 miles in 12 hours, the "Tigers" made many conditioning marches before tackling the 25 miler which was required of all officers and men, bar none.

Despite sore legs and blistered feet, the men "took" to the hikes in good determined spirit. As the "54th Infantry Liaison" reported, "each doughboy's by-word was, 'I'll make it if I have to crawl'."

On October 28 the first edition of the division's newspaper, "The Tiger's Tale" hit the streets. An all-soldier publication written by and for 10th Armored men, the paper is headed by Editors James E. Frye, Robert K. Kerbs and Paul R. Jenkins.

The division climaxed its October training program with a four-day tactical motor march and field exercise.

Two of the days were devoted to the tactical phase of the march with the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion serving as the enemy, the rest of the division being split into three groups, Combat "A" and "B" and the reserve.

The final day of the march was devoted to the "battle" between the combat commands with General Newgarden and his staff serving as umpires and observers.

'Twas A Dirty Trick On Cohen, Yes, It Was!

Paging Edward L. Cohen! Paging Edward L. Cohen! Draft Board No. 9999 calling! Draft Board No. 9999 calling!

Last Monday, Cohen of the Division Quartermaster Office, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division was discharged as an enlisted man and sworn in Tuesday as one of the newly appointed Warrant Officers. During that 24-hour period when he was a "civilian," it was reported, his draft board got wind of his status and had a message on the way for him to report the next day for physical examination.

Just how the board got "wind" has not been determined, but—Mr. Cohen, who after repeated reminders, began to believe it himself, suspects fellow workers in the QM office.

for their pleasure and praised the work of Mrs. Baker.

The men look forward to the bi-weekly dances but the formal Cafe de la Paix dance held in September was an affair long to be remembered for its beautiful decorations and sweet music furnished by the 3rd and 11th Armored Regiment's dance bands. Since then the Club has sponsored a barn dance, a Hallowe'en party and most recently a Hawaiian dance. Extensive plans are under way to make the Thanksgiving and Xmas seasons memorable events in the 10th Armored's program of social activities.

Miss Mary Clark is librarian of the newly furnished library which is located just across the street from the Club. Here the men can find all the latest books, magazines and daily newspapers for their reading pleasure.

11th Cavalry Fought Villa With Pershing in Mexico

Regimental Coat Of Arms Tells Exciting Story

Organized at Fort Meyer, Va., in March, 1901, the 11th Cavalry received its baptism of fire before it had been in existence a year. The 3 squadrons under command of Col. Francis Moore, a distinguished veteran of the Civil, Indian and Spanish American wars, were ordered to the Philippines during the winter of 1901, and stationed at Samar, Batangas, and Northern Luzon. Among their frequent battles with the natives in suppressing insurrections, their fight against General Malvar in June (1902), was the most important. It won the 11th its silver band on its regimental standard.

The regiment returned to the States in 1904 and was assembled as a unit at Fort Des Moines in 1908. From there the regiment, less the 1st Squadron, was ordered to Cuba as part of the Army of Occupation. It returned to the States in February, 1909, arriving in time to participate in the inaugural of President Taft. At this time Col. James Parker was in command.

In May, 1914, the 11th moved to Colorado to assist in preserving law and order, returning to Oglethorpe in January, 1915. In March 1916, the regiment joined Pershing's Punitive Expedition against Pancho Villa in Mexico.

PURSUES VILLA

One squadron, under command of Maj. (later Gen.) Robert L. Howze, made a night march to Ojos Azules (May 5, 1916), surprised the enemy force, killed 42, and captured men and horses. It traveled 571 miles over mountainous country in 21 days on a 5-day ration supply, and without communications with its main command.

During the World War the 11th was stationed at Chickamauga Park, Ga., from where the bulk of its command was taken to form the 22nd and 23rd Cavalry's base. In 1919 the regiment was moved to the Presidio of Monterrey, and in 1940 (November) to Camp Seeley, Calif. A year later the 11th moved to Camp Lockett, Calif., and not long afterwards the Cavalrymen gave up their horses for tanks and moved to Fort Benning as the 11th Armored Regiment.

COAT OF ARMS

The regiment's coat of arms tells an exciting story. The outfit's Philippine service is indicated by the red and blue bolos of the arms. Its Mexican border activities is noted by the green cactus. The regimental's colors, black and yellow are shown on the shield, the wreath and the standard. "Allons" is the French for "Forward."

The 11th is commanded by Col. Bertram Morrow who has been with the regiment since June 30, 1942.

Col. Morrow entered Military Academy in 1913, received his commission as second lieutenant in April of 1917; by August of 1917 he was commissioned a captain. In 1933 Capt. Morrow was promoted to major and in 1940 he became Lt. Colonel. On December 11, 1941, he became a full-fledged colonel.

"Mother" Baker Reigns At "Tigers" Service Club

10th Armored Troops Find Relaxation, Fun At the Service Club

It didn't take the men of the 10th Armored "Tigers" long to find the most popular spot in the Sand Hill Area. That spot has a large sign over the entrance reading "Tenth Armored Division Service Club."

Here at Service Club No. 2 the men find a host of activities to add to their comforts, relaxations and entertainment needs. All this is brought about by the capable and efficient management of Mrs. Winifred H. Baker, Senior Hostess. Her never-ending efforts have given the Tenth one of the top Service Clubs in the country and she is affectionately known to all the boys as "Mother Baker."

Many a young soldier has gone into the office of "Mother" Baker to talk over his personal problems and there he has found cigarettes handy so that he could relax and feel more at home and tell his troubles to the one who would so willingly help him solve his problems. In the winter time, Mrs. Baker always has candy and apples around for the men to enjoy as they sit in front of the fireplace and partake in the many activities planned. She has given up many of her social activities to devote all her time to seeing that her boys are royally entertained in the evenings.

"I really love my work and couldn't use up all my 15 days of my vacation this year. My day off is Monday but I simply must return at 10:30 to see that all is properly closed in the evening," was Mrs. Baker's answer as to how she enjoyed her work.

Miss Irene Warner is the capable Junior Hostess and works cooperatively in doing her part in carrying out the problem planned by Mrs. Baker.

The Service Club hums with activity and every man who enjoys the privilege of claiming this club as his own can find something to help him pass his spare moments in the evening. There is ping pong, pool tables, writing equipment, cards, all sorts of games and comfortable furnishings for him to stretch out in front of the fireplace and enjoy a good smoke while he listens to his favorite radio program.

SUNDAY OPEN HOUSE

Weekly features at the Club include open house on Sundays when the families of the men can visit them and share in the comforts of the Club. Monday night is the night when the 10th Armored broadcasts their program "Listen, It's Fort Benning." This program is sent out in cooperation with station WRBL from Columbus and is broadcast from the main floor of the Club. All the talent comes from the 10th Armored of which all are mighty proud.

Tuesday nights the bridge club meets and the classical musical hour is held in the music room suitably furnished for the occasion. Quiz holds the spotlight each Wednesday night as a spirited quiz contest is held with teams from the various units competing. Bi-weekly dances are held each Thursday night with the Military Maids of Columbus coming out to furnish the feminine grace needed to complete these gala affairs. Bingo is enjoyed each Friday night and bi-weekly tea dances are held on Saturdays.

Since the 10th Armored has enjoyed the benefits of the Service Club several outstanding events have taken place. On October 5th, the 10th Armored held its first broadcast over the air when it inaugurated its series of "Listen, It's Fort Benning" programs. Major General Paul W. Newgarden, commanding officer, welcomed the men to use their Service Club

We Americans have nurtured Liberty, have fought for it always, creating in our country a citadel where freedom for all is enshrined.

This liberty has made us righteous, and strong in mind and body. We who have not flaunted this strength now call upon it to stamp out ruthless aggression in every quarter of the earth. To this cause we pledge our resources and our blood, "That government of the people, by the people, for the people" may be the privilege of all men. This is a fight worth fighting. This will be our victory.

War Prompts Vast Expansion Of Benning's Athletic Program

Both Major And Minor Sports Affected

By SGT. CARL NEU
Bayonet Sports Editor

The 24th year of Fort Benning's existence saw one of the greatest athletic programs in history carried out. The tremendous expansion in the fort's personnel meant a spreading out of the program of organized sports, particularly those sponsored by the Fort Benning Athletic Association, which for the past eight months has been under the supervision of Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post athletic officer.

Basketball, boxing, baseball, bowling, volleyball and football were the major sports during the year, but Benning athletes also distinguished themselves in other fields as well, such as golf, tennis, handball, weight-lifting, and badminton.

BASKETBALL

The court championship last winter was finally captured by a scrappy 29th Infantry quintet which won a post-season play-off from the Infantry School Service Command. The Blue Devils won the second half of a split schedule and continued in form to grab the gonfalon in the final game of a play-off series.

O'Hara, Herman, Keary, Stolarzyck, Vogt and several others were leading hoopsters for the Two-Nine and gave Benning some of the best basketball it had seen in many years. The Devils were tutored by Lieutenants William Desorbry and Maurice Dozier, and provided one of the upsets of the year when they conquered the favored I. S. S. C. which had long reigned supreme in Benning court circles. For the first time last season, many of the loop games were played on the spacious new court in the Sports Arena, located in the Harmony Church area of the reservation.

BOXING

At just about the same time that the 29th courtmen were gaining post honors, the boxing team of the demonstration regiment was also gathering in a fort title. The Devil pugilists won the championship of the post on a point basis, and throughout the campaign, they were defeated in only five bouts out of fifty. Besides the intra-mural victories, the 29th also topped Camp Gordon at Augusta and Camp Wheeler at Macon in inter-camp team cards.

The 29th boxers were coached by Lieut. Bill Jennings and Pvt. Archie Milano, who developed many outstanding stars. Stuetes and Parks, a lightweight and middleweight slugger respectively, were chief threats for the Two-Nine. Other crack swatsmiths were Sharp, McKimmey, Jharmark, Hutchins, Hazel, and Reno.

The post title-winners gained much praise after every bout for their exciting performances. They fought with a great deal of finesse at all times, and turned in a distinguished record. In a post-season round-robin tournament, the slugging 41st Infantry of the 2nd Armored Division came off the winner, but the 29th did not compete in this late tourney.

Jack Schwartz of the 67th Armored Regiment was probably the number one boxer at the post. Early last spring he went into the Golden Gloves eliminations in the middle-weight class and slammed his way into the semi-finals held in New York's Madison Square Garden. He made quite a name for himself as well as for Benning.

VOLLEYBALL

The post volleyball championship, conducted in the form of a round-robin early this year, went to Company "A" of the Infantry School Service Command's Academic Regiment. This club won by a good margin in the finals over Headquarters Company of the 29th paced by Sgt. John LaBonte, one of the post's best all-around athletes. Sgt. Collis D. Lehner, better-known as Lefty to baseball fans, was the big star of the victorious Company "A" team.

BOWLING

The bowling campaign at Benning was marked by some great individual effort. Master Sgt. James T. Guinn and Tech. Sgt. Joseph Bitala journeyed to New Orleans for the Southeastern tourney and carried off the doubles crown against top-flight opposition. Two other Benning keglers came in fifth in the two-some tourney. They were Sgt. Ledford Calsor and Sgt. Henry Boudreaux, now a first lieutenant commanding the Corps of Military Police. Boudreaux also captured fifth place in the all-events competition.

Later on in the campaign, Boudreaux also teamed up with Sgt. Perry F. O'Donnell, also now an officer, to capture the Benning doubles crown for the winter season. Outstanding woman bowler at the fort was Mrs. Valura O'Blenness, wife of a master sergeant, who consistently bowled well over the 200 mark. It was a great bowling campaign, and Boudreaux justified his claim as the fort's outstanding bowler again early this fall when he rolled a 269 game on the new alleys, which still stands as the record score for the season.

BASEBALL

The Academic Regiment also won the 1942 baseball crown with one of the best nines in Fort Benning history. They captured the first half crown with little trouble, but then went into a mid-season slump to allow the 151st Infantry to grab the final-half flag. The academics, coached by Lieut. Frank Shannon, recovered their form, however, and swept through to the title in an abbreviated series when the Hoosiers forfeited after taking two terrific shellackings.

A good many of the I. S. S. C. players had also been stars on the post team earlier in the spring which compiled an enviable record against top-notch college and professional opposition. Lefty Francis was the big star for the post nine, just as he was for the academics. Major Roy Lindquist coached the Benning Doughboys halfway through the campaign and was replaced by Capt. Francis Gorman when he was transferred to another post.

Besides Francis, Bill Bobo and Lefty Lehner were stand-out pitchers for both teams, while Benny Zientara, once with the Cincinnati Reds, Elmer Neibler, Chet Dabbs, Hal Burnett, and several others played great ball for both teams. Orlando Taylor of the 124th, Harry Taylor of the 151st, Ike Silcox and Bob Dorman of the 29th were great flingers all season. It was a successful diamond season all the way, and Gowdy Field was the scene of many an exciting game.

FOOTBALL

When football took over the center of the sports scene at the post, there were seven teams instead of one as last year. Accordingly a six-team conference of the white elevens was formed, and halfway through the schedule, the Fort Benning Conference has already established itself as probably the year's outstanding sports development at the post.

The seventh team is the Fort Benning Panthers, a colored club representing the Service Battalion of the 3rd Student Training Regiment. They are planning a mixed schedule of colored prep school and college opposition and have already provided grid fans with some exciting games.

Another important development was the installation of a lighting system in Doughboy Stadium which made it one of the best-equipped grid lay-outs anywhere in the South. The lights are considerably brighter than those in Memorial Stadium in downtown Columbus, and have resulted in ideal facilities for night football. The result has been banner crowds for the nocturnal games. As a matter of fact, the crowds all season have been large, averaging about 8,000 per game.

WEIGHT-LIFTING

Benning's sports story of the year would be incomplete without mentioning one other performer. He is Charles (Muscles) Neitling, a member of the 29th Infantry, who was an outstanding weight-lifter. In fact he went to Cincinnati for the national championships, and captured second place in the strong man competition. He also won a Southeastern States title in Atlanta.

Some of the deeds of Benning athletes during the fort's 24th year were truly amazing, and will go down in the record books for future generations of Benning soldiers to gaze upon with admiration.

as 1923. The Infantry School organized a Polo Team which was put to rout by the "Blue Devils" in their first game. The Schoolers found it hard to keep Douglas and French of the "Blues" in check.

Memos of A Baseballer: '25 had all the ear-marks of a banner year for Two-nine teams. The Baseball team, under the capable leadership of Lt. Hussing, walked away with the Columbus Industrial League that year, and followed through with another pennant; the Fort Benning League. Special games were played with college and professional teams, such as the Baltimore Orioles. During the season, 46 games were played, 37 won, eight lost and one tied.

Back in 1913, Dusty Miller, one of the Army's baseball immortals, served with the Twenty-ninth. An all-around athlete, Dusty, was considered one of the outstanding shortstops in the Army's baseball history. Retired a number of years ago, Miller has 30 years of service to his credit.

Officer Candidate Class Shows Democracy At Best

Analysis Reveals All Groups of Nation In Typical Group Here

That the men being chosen to be the leaders of our Army represent a complete cross section of our nation is demonstrated conclusively by a statistical study of the First Student Training Regiment under the command of Colonel Thomas R. Gibson.

The survey shows democracy in action as the numbers of students in each category are in direct proportion to group percentages in the Army as a whole. It shows that undue favoritism is not shown to any race or creed, any social or economic group, nor to any occupational or educational category. Anyone who can satisfy the physical and mental qualifications can have a chance to become an officer.

The study showed that 83 per-cent of the students were between the ages of 21 and 29. Selective service men are in the great majority. Thirty three per cent of the company interviewed have had less than one year's service and 80 per cent have been in the Army less than two years.

An analysis of the educational background of these Officer Candidates explodes the myth that a man has to be a college graduate to qualify. Nineteen per cent of the men did not finish high school and 70 per cent did not go to college. The other 30 per cent entered college, but less than five per cent were graduated. Most of them were forced to drop out of college for financial reasons or because the draft interrupted their educational careers.

FIGURES PROPORTIONATE

The percentages in each religious group closely approximates national census figures. Fifty four per cent are Protestant, 36 per cent are Catholics, and ten per cent are Jewish.

Other figures compiled by the regiment in this study show a similar correspondence with national figures. Thirty five per cent are former industrial workers, 23 per cent had white collar jobs, and 15 per cent were employed as salesmen before they were called into service.

Ten per cent of the class are colored. Three per cent were foreign born. Thirty four per cent are sons of foreign born parents.

The complete cross section of the nation which is found here is interesting, but it is only the beginning of the problem. These men from diverse social backgrounds—the steelworkers, lawyers, teachers, students, farmers, millhands—in three months must be molded into leaders of men, equipped to handle the responsibility of the lives of the men under them. These men from diverse occupations must learn to be experts at one single occupation. They must become officers of Infantry and leaders of men.

USO Clubs Plan Recreation For Post's Colored Troops

Taking care of the recreational needs of the colored soldiers of Fort Benning, are the two USO Clubs located in downtown Columbus. Providing such facilities as information service on travel or rooms, lounges, library, personal counseling, games, music, radio, arts, crafts, writing paper, home hospitality, refreshments, sewing-kits, package wrapping and mailing, plus varied programs for the enjoyment of all, the clubs fill part of the needs of the boys.

One club, operated by the Army and Navy YMCA at 851 Fifth avenue, has many historical aspects. It began operation in 1941 as the first and only duly constituted Army and Navy YMCA in the world for Negro troops. Later it became the first Negro USO Club. Unlike most of the USO Clubs, the bulk of money required to purchase equipment was raised locally. The City of Columbus through the Columbus Defense Service Council appropriated $4,000 toward the project, and about $2,000 came from volunteer contributions of colored soldiers of Fort Benning. The balance represented contributions of white and colored citizens of Columbus.

Major Maynard R. Ashworth, who until recently was Executive Officer of Fort Benning, served as Chairman of the Board of Management from its organization early in 1941 until he was ordered away from Fort Benning a few weeks ago. The club is directed by E. E. Farley, who has had 17 years of experience in welfare work with colored troops at Fort Benning, being the only colored secretary in the employ of the Army and Navy YMCA until last year.

From its inception, this club has served efficiently and satisfactorily the needs of colored troops at Fort Benning. Its program is varied and comprehensive as to include the whole range of interest of the men served, from the fine arts, music and religion, and the red hot jazz and jitterbugging.

To take care of the tremendous volume of service carried on by this organization, a personnel of four professional workers, and nearly a score of non-professional workers are required. The club operates 24 hours a day and is used to its capacity. The 65 beds in the dormitory are wholly inadequate to take care of the demand and additional sleeping quarters are now being acquired.

The other club which is operated by the YWCA and is under the direction of Mrs. Frances Penman, has all the facilities that the Army and Navy Y has, plus special clubs and activities for Army wives and Defense workers. Located at 936 Fifth avenue, the club is noted for its arrangements for weddings and special parties. In addition to the facilities listed above, one of the club features is the sewing machines which are open to anyone who wishes to use them.

Roberts, once of Presbyterian College.

Probably the best running back in the Breeker line-up is Billy Sturgill, but he may not be fit for action. Sturgill was injured in the second game of the campaign and did not see action again the Two-Nine. It is still problematical as to whether or not he will be ready by Sunday.

The Gators may hold a slight advantage in the line because of their deeper reserve strength, but the 117th has the faster forward wall. Belin, Dyal and Berasi are standouts in the Gator front line, while Brown and Banasiek are stellar forwards for the Breakers.

NO PREDICTIONS

Neither coach will make any prediction on the tilt, but both admit it will be a hard-fought game from start to finish. It may be the most thrilling tilt of the conference schedule, and the winner will be an odds-on favorite to capture the loop laurels.

The Saturday night game will bring together two teams that started fast this season, and have since run into injury bug-a-boos and mid-season disappointments. Both will be attempting a comeback in this game and the verdict will go to the eleven that rebounds the fastest.

NEW BACKFIELDS

A new backfield will operate for both elevens, and each hopes it proves a winning one. For the Two-Nine, Fritz Vogt is a new fullback with Bryan shifted to tailback, and Hurley moving over to the wing. Costanzo will probably start in place of Del Monte at quarterback. The line will be the same as usual.

The new quartet of backs for the Dragons lists Linscott at quarterback, Nick Copra and Al Litwak at the halves, and bulling Chief Carney at fullback. The rival lines are fairly evenly matched which means the game may be decided in the air lanes. The game will probably rival Sunday's for the intensity of the play.

Record Units Have Streamlined Their Sleuthing Pieces

"In order to keep tab on new triangular divisions and fast-moving mechanized corps, army statistical methods have been amazingly streamlined," according to Lt. B. E. Moore, officer in charge of the Machine Record Unit at Fort Benning.

"Previously it took three months time for simple personnel changes to reach Washington. Today the machine record units give this information to the Adjutant General on Capital Hill in just 72 hours," Lt. Moore said.

He went on to point out that it would be a physical impossibility to keep track of Private Joe Doakes with the old pen and pencil. For each enlisted man a total of seventeen pertinent facts, including full name, serial number, grade, arm or service, type of organization, company or battery, main civilian occupation, race, station, duty, type of change of status, date of change, and military occupational specialties are listed. In an officer's record there are 11 more facts given.

Now multiply these figures by the number of officers and men in the present day army and the result would look like twice the distance to the most distant planet.

But the Germans have proved that it can be done. They are the only country besides the United States which have this system in use, and they have been using it for six years. A considerable proportion of their success may be due to this factor. It is one of the most valuable assets a general can have.

MOBILE UNITS

Here at Benning, Lt. Moore, assisted by Lt. E. S. Miles, Warrant Officer E. D. Lewis, and 64 enlisted men, is charged with keeping the records for Fort Benning and several other camps in this area. Their unit is a fixed one but mobile ones of a similar nature have been perfected for use in the different theatres of operations. These mobile units usually keep books for an army corps, even so, streamlined methods enable them to close down at one location move to another and be ready for work in four hours.

As for the machines themselves, they are the peak of perfection in speed and accuracy. A machine record unit can compile a listing of military specialists, such as cooks, bakers, clerks, and mechanics for an entire service command in less than three hours. Over 1,000 officer data cards can be handled, pertinent information gathered and printed ready for use in as little as 40 minutes. This includes arranging these alphabetically and by arm or service, listing serial number, station, organization and grade of the officer. As for accuracy, once the information is correctly punched, into the card, the percent of error is negligible, not even half of one percent.

Besides answering questions of supply and demand of manpower, the machine record unit serves as a means of keeping individual histories, which may later be the soldier's chief means of proving eligibility for pensions, hospitalization, veterans preference and assures equal treatment to all.

But while we are at war the unit continues to serve principally as any general's most valuable asset, telling him where his soldiers are, what they are doing, and how well it is being done.

Organized in 1901, Regiment Assigned To Benning in 1919

With ninety-two per cent of the men presently subscribing to War Bond purchases, the Twenty-Ninth Infantry, first demonstration regiment at Fort Benning, continues to exemplify the truth of its motto: "We Lead the Way."

Organized at Fort Sheridan, Ill., in 1901, the regiment saw service in the Philippines at that time and again in 1907. During the World War, it was assigned the mission of guarding the Panama Canal. It had apparently been destined for service abroad, but according to a writer of that period, "the nation-wide outbreak of influenza so decimated the ranks of the Twenty-Ninth as to prevent its departure for France."

Among other engagements in the Philippines, one historian of the organization wrote: "The men took part in the Surigao, Mindana expedition, during which time they experienced much hiking and much sleeping in the open with their clothes on—often wet from wading across streams and rice-paddies. During the first three months each soldier had to have his gun by his side at all times, night and day. Many hardships were endured, but most of the men seemed to enjoy soldiering in the field better than garrison duty at the barracks."

ASSIGNED TO POST

The regiment came to Fort Benning in October, 1919, where the men were quartered in tents until 1929 when the present barracks were completed. From the beginning, its principal employment has been as a demonstration outfit for the Infantry School; the Twenty-Ninth being the first unit to be assigned this work. The regiment has also been used from time to time as a testing unit for many new items of possible issue to the Infantry. First tested here were the "K" ration and the non-metallic canteen. In an experimental hike last year, one of the companies of the regiment marched forty-two miles in slightly less than two days. The men were carefully weighed, watched, and checked to determine the endurance of troops in making long marches.

For the purpose of maintaining the regiment at peak efficiency at all times, a diversified program of athletics has assumed a dominant role in the training program since the inception of the regiment, every outstanding sport being represented. Company athletics are an everyday part of the schedule.

Aiming towards efficiency in combat, this, along with a recently-instituted school for non-commissioned officers and a school to improve education among the best trained soldiers of our army.

The regiment claims connection with two older regiments having borne the designation "Twenty-ninth." One saw service in the War of 1812 but was merged with other regiments to constitute the old Sixth Infantry. The second was formed during the Civil War, and later was absorbed in the organization of the present 11th Infantry. Thus when the new regiment was organized in 1901 it adopted as its motto the Latin inscription meaning "Risen with Increased Splendor."

DUTY IN MANILA

In May of 1902 the regiment arrived in Manila, and in 1903 the notorious bandit leader Adriano Concepcion was subdued and captured by Company "F". The regiment returned to the United States in 1904, being stationed at Whipple Barracks, Arizona, Ft. Douglas, Utah, and at Ft. Du-Chesne, Utah, with headquarters at Fort Douglas. In 1907 the regiment again returned to the Philippines, returning to the United States in 1909 with headquarters at Fort Jay, with units at Fort Porter and Fort Niagara.

Declaration of war found the Twenty-ninth guarding the vulnerable mechanism of the Panama Canal, where it remained until 1918 when it was ordered to Camp Beauregard, La. There it was divided to help form the 84th Infantry, and was constituted part of the 17th Division.

After the Armistice, the regiment, less the First Battalion, moved to Camp Shelby, Miss., to assist in the task of demobilizing units returning from France.

The First Battalion at that time was transferred to Fort Benning, where the new Infantry School was being formed. In 1919 the regiment joined the First Battalion here and here it has remained ever since.

CREST OF REGIMENT

The Crest on the coat of arms of the Regiment shows a lamp representing the lamp of knowledge while a twisted wreath bears the colors of the regiment. On the shield, the tree represents the mango, symbolizing the Regiment's Philippines service. The crossed weapons are the bolo and the bayonet, indicating combat, showing the Regiment's victorious engagements with the "Insurrectos". The white background is distinctive of spotless history and signified that the Regiment stands ready to win future glory. Blue is for the color of the Infantry. The regimental motto is "We Lead the Way."

Col. C. A. Bagby is the commanding officer of the Regiment. Before coming to the Twenty-ninth, he commanded the 12th Infantry from June, 1941, to July, 1942. He served with the Infantry School from 1919 to 1922 and his service includes duty as platoon leader and company commander in the 16th Infantry in Alaska and in Mexico under General Pershing. He also served as Battalion Commander in the 20th and 21st Infantry, Executive Officer of the 26th Infantry and Executive Officer of the 21st Brigade in Hawaii.

FROM MISSOURI, YET

At Camp Crowder, Missouri, they swear it happened when First Sgt. James Colvin lined up a company of recruits the day he caught a cold in his head. The sergeant explained the chores had to be done and that if there were'nt volunteers to step out of ranks for various jobs he would have to assign men. "Now about policing up the grounds," began Sgt. Colvin—and started to wrestle with a sneeze. The sneeze exploded and a man stepped forward one pace. "You, there," the sergeant called, "What's the idea of breaking ranks. What's your name?" The reply was "Oothoud. I thought you called the name." The sergeant shouldn't have laughed. It made him sneeze twice more, one sneeze that he tried to smother and the other that really got away. That brought another man out of ranks. His name was Obritschkewitsch.

Col. J. D. Hill Takes Command of 124th Infantry

The 124th Infantry Regiment, demonstration regiment for the Infantry School at Fort Benning, welcomed a new commanding officer this week.

He is Col. John D. Hill, former resident of Birmingham, Ala., and a veteran of World War I, where he saw considerable action as a battalion commander. Colonel Hill assumed command of the Florida regiment at Fort Benning following completion of the battalion commanders and staff officers class at the Infantry School.

Colonel Hill will succeed Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, senior battalion commander of the regiment who returned to his post as commander of the first battalion.

Colonel McMillan took over regimental commander duties on the departure of Brig. Gen. Fred A. Safay, former commanding officer, who is now stationed with the 78th Division at Camp Butner, N. C.

Fort Benning's Military Police have man-sized jobs. Their jobs are not only to walk the streets and see that all is in order, but a principal job at Fort Benning is to keep the traffic moving on the post. During one twenty four hour period, 8,100 vehicles passed in and out of the reservation.

Dancing Nightly at So. Manor

Lovely Jackie White is tops in tap dancing at the Southern Manor this week. She recently appeared at Casino Royal in New Orleans and many nite clubs throughout Florida. On the same program is Marion Serpas, Doris Dell and the De-Vosters—a show that will please anyone. Cutliff Meriwether furnished the Music.—adv.

Post Guard Has Increased Six-fold in Last Two Years

Well-Armed Complement Is Safe-Guarding Reservation

Marking an anniversary this month is the system of post guards at Fort Benning, where today 109 men are needed to form the Main Post Guard compared to 18 at the same time in 1941.

Col. C. A. Will, permanent field officer of the day who recently also took over the duties of Provost Marshal at the Post, is responsible for installation of the system.

When he took over a year ago, 18 men on a watchman basis guarded the various points on the main post. He enlarged the guard to a complement of 150 men, of whom 109 are needed to form the guard every day, installed dozens of new posts to safeguard military supplies and various other points.

Installs Telephone System

In addition, he installed a telephone system to allow guards to report every hour. The guards must know where telephones are on their posts and they also must know the location of fire boxes and fire telephones.

Carrying loaded shotguns or rifles, the guards are on duty 24 hours a day on some posts and at night on others. The main guard is divided into two compartments, one the regular guard detail, second the colored guard detail also supplied by a permanent detail.

The white guard forms daily at 8 a. m. on the parade ground of the barracks, near DEML headquarters where colorful yet very functional "changing of the guard" takes place. The men of the new guard are formed and then inspected by the guard commander, who inspects the arms and uniforms, and checks to see that the men are prepared for duty. Men of the old guard who are not on post also form and stand an inspection. The two guards then present arms and salute each other.

Divided Into Reliefs

The officer of the new guard then presents his men to the Officer of the Day, who then takes over. The retiring guard is marched back to its barracks and the new guard is marched out to allow the first "relief" to take over from the members of the old guard who still are on duty.

Men of the guard are divided into three reliefs so that one group is walking post for two hours, then is off for four hours. Members of the white guard handle the detention barracks, hospital prison barracks and other places. They carry rifles or shotguns.

Must Know Orders

Members of the guard details must know their eleven general orders" and must also know their special orders.

We once had two colored lads who couldn't read or write but they were far from dumb soldiers—they had somebody read over the General Orders to them and learned them in a hurry, recalls Col. Will in discussing his men and their work.

Besides the Main Post Guard, there are interior guards provided for various areas in regimental and other special areas. For instance, the 29th Infantry provides its own daily guard detail, as does Lawson Field, the Parachute group, Infantry School Stables and others.

On the posts of the Main Guard the men must telephone headquarters every hour. Thus, if a call is not received promptly, the sergeant of the guard can rush a detail to that post to check up. With the sergeant of the guard is the corporal of the guard who is responsible for the particular detail of the relief on duty at that particular time. In that way close co-ordination is worked out.

In addition, a further check is made frequently by the Officer of the Day, as well as by Col. Will as Permanent Field Officer of the Day.

In case of fires or disorders, members of the guard not on duty are rushed to the scene to maintain order or to act in any capacity that may be required.

TIS Casual Battalion Operates Reception Center

Receives Incoming Officer Candidates For Processing

Prior to last December, The Infantry School at Fort Benning was busy training officers for the infantry branch of services. But after that date the effort was stepped up to such a pace that the existing officer training organizations were unable to administer the thousands of officers and officer candidates ordered here for training.

A new system had to be set up. And one of the most important changes was the activation of the school's own "reception center," only here we call it the Casual Battalion.

In almost every way it is like the army's well known receiving station, the first army home of its new selectee.

At the reception center, the Infantry School's Casual Battalion has a great deal of processing to do new students to handle. The Casual is located on the west side of the Student Training Brigade, at the First Division and Cussetta Roads in the Harmony Church Area.

The Battalion is part of the Student Training Brigade, which is commanded by Colonel Servier P. Tupper. All students of the school are part of the Student Training Brigade. The Battalion is commanded by Lt. Col. Maurice C. Higgins, Detroit, Mich. He previously was commander of Hq. Co., 1st Student Training Regiment.

Prior to coming to Fort Benning, Col. Higgins was acting Recruiting Officer of the Detroit district. He was originally commissioned in June 1927 as a reserve officer and served for several years in the CCC before being called to active duty.

The Battalion's Hq. Co. now is commanded by Capt. Walter H. Pierce. This unit furnishes all enlisted personnel for Battalion Headquarters and for functions of supply, service and the maintenance of the Battalion.

CLOCK-LIKE PREASION

The First Company, commanded by Capt. Charles O. Echols, receives, registers, billets, feeds and finally forms the new classes for delivery to their new training company in one of the three training regiments of the Student Training Brigade. After thirteen weeks training the candidate students who successfully pass the course are commissioned as 2nd lieutenants. However, some of these new officers are delayed in receiving their new assignments. While such officers are awaiting their orders they are sent back to the Casual Battalion, 2nd Company, commanded by Capt. Noel G. Henke, for quartermess, unc deprocessing.

The pictures appearing with this story show quite clearly some of the numerous activities accomplished by the Casual Battalion.

The train of activities follow a clocklike procedure. Brigade Operations section personnel receives the students at the train and transports them in motor vans to the 1st Company area.

They are then taken to the 1st Company Registration Building for registration, orientation and completion of preliminary forms. From this procedure they are taken to the supply room for issuance of bedding and assignment to barracks.

During this period the individual records of the students are sent to Brigade Personnel Section where they are processed by the Personnel Section and Machine Service Unit and the roster of the next class is prepared. Each group of students is given a dental examination and if deficiencies are noted those men are sent to the dental clinic. Next comes the taking of individual photographs. Then finally the formation for roll call to form the new class company.

CLASS A DAY

With the supply of incoming students constant each day a new class is formed and assigned to one of the Student Training Regiments each day, six days a week. When asked as to just why the activation of the Student Training Brigade, Col. Tupper replied, "to simplify and make uniform the administration, policies and control of the entire officer training program of the Infantry School."

The following officers of the Casual Battalion, working in close cooperation with Brigade Headquarters, are doing a big job in accomplishing the mission:

Lt. Col. Maurice C. Higgins, Detroit, Mich., Commanding Officer; Capt. Kirk P. Brock, Libertyl, Texas, Executive Officer; Capt. George M. Miller, Portland, O., Bn. Supply Officer; 1st Lt. John Pisarkiewicz, St. Louis, Mo., Adjutant; Capt. Walter H. Pierce, Raleigh, N. C., Co. Hq. Co.; Capt. Charles O. Echols, Grand Junction, Colo., C. O. 1st Co.; Capt. Noel G. Henke, St. Paul, Minn., C. O. 2nd Co.; 1st Lt. John M. Wilson, Luling, Tex., 1st Co.; 1st Lt. Perry N. Riley, Silsbee, Tex., 1st Co.; 1st Lt. John Wachowicz, Bloomfield, N. J., 1st Co.; 1st Lt. Maurice L. Moore, Spokane, Wash., 2nd Co.; 2nd Lt. Oscar A. Bailey, Carthage, Mo., 1st Co.; 2nd Lt. Myles L. Humphus, Dallas, Tex., Hq. Co.; 2nd Lt. Thomas J. King, Pecos, Tex., 1st Co.; 2nd Lt. Henry Gettman, Denver, Colo., 1st Co.

Around The Cuartel

BY CPL. DON VAN TASSELL
Special Service Office,
29th Infantry

Down Through The Years With

The 29th: The year, 1925 saw most of us scarcely in knee-pants, the Army was something reverent to us. War movies quite popular at that time, inspired us with awe. Today we are part of the vast organization, no longer inspired with awe at its vastness, but inspired with determination to do our part as members of the organization.

Back in 1925, the 29th Infantry was housed in tents and wooden barracks, when a long-delayed appropriation came from Congress providing for the construction of new modern barracks known as the "Cuartel System."

AT THAT TIME, 29th Troops gave actual demonstrations at the Chattahoochee Valley and other Expositions. An entire platoon of the 2nd Battalion gave all sorts of demonstrations, drills, guard mountings, etc., at the Columbus Fair during the summer of '25. In addition, every activity in the 29th was represented in the exhibits.

IN THOSE DAYS, the Twenty-ninth Infantry laid claim to having the highest jumping horse in the United States. His name was "Cyclone," a troop horse that was sent to the Two-nine, but condemned unfit for military service because of his vicious nature. He was saved from being outlawed by Sgt. Ernest Akers, who asked permission to train the horse. With a few weeks training, Cyclone was tamed and proved to be a phenomenal high jumper, later capturing numerous titles in horse shows throughout the South.

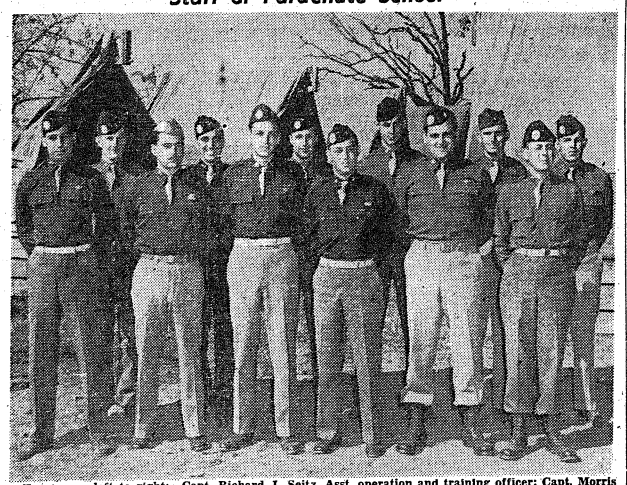
DURING THE YEAR, 1925, Col. Monroe C. Kerth was Commanding Officer of the 29th Infantry. . . . Among some of its war heroes were Capt. Malcolm Rice, Lt. Stephen B. Elkins, and Sgt. Henry J. Mongeau, all receiving the Distinguished Service Cross . . . The enlisted men of the Regiment produced a minstrel show, "Never Hot, Never Cold." The production proved to be a huge success under the guidance of Sgt. McGee of "H" Company, interlocutor.

Cpl. George C. Friend, Hq. Co., won the try-outs for The Infantry Rifle Team at Camp Logan, Illinois, taking the Knuebel Cup. General C. E. Black, Adjutant General of the State of Illinois, presented the cup to Cpl. Friend during the try-outs.

THE A & R HALL was known as the 29th Infantry Theatre back in 1925. As a part of the extensive recreation program, the theatre had been remodeled and a new stage put in which could be converted into a boxing ring in short order. The Chero-Cola Company of Columbus donated a main curtain that would be a credit to any theatre . . . On January 30th, graduation exercises were held, concluding the first Regimental Non - commissioned Officers School to be instituted by the Two-nine. Thirty-three graduates received diplomas presented by Lt. Vinson, senior instructor . . . Regimental "Blue Pennant," which was awarded to the company each month that maintained the highest standards, was captured throughout most of the year by the 1st Battalion Headquarters Company . . . The Regiment boasted one of the most outstanding Polo Teams on the Post, beating virtually all competition in Benning.

THE 29TH INFANTRY BAND under the direction of Warrant Officer R. O. Dickson made quite a name for itself around this part of the country, playing for the annual Peach Carnival at Fort Valley, Ga. and the Chattahoochee Fair. The band consisted of 38 members in addition to 20 student musicians and 10 drummers. An orchestra was also formed, but organized under the able instruction of Sgt. Strickland. A nucleus of the Band members had formed the "Twenty-niners Jazz Band." Decked out in tuxedos, the orchestra played for many affairs held at the Post and in Columbus.

Ask Questions Of Travelers Aid



Today, with soldiers going to and from camps, with relatives and sweethearts journeying to visit them, and with workers flocking to factory centers, this country is seeing the greatest flood of travel in its history.

There is one agency in Columbus set up to take care of the thousands of requests resulting from these persons traveling into our city—the USO Travelers Aid.

The idea behind Travelers Aid originated in the Gold Rush days of '49. Bryan Mullanphy, mayor of St. Louis, noticed that many of the pioneers pouring westward through the city were "broke" or sick or lost; he also saw that the stream of women following their husbands, or going out to marry sweethearts, needed protection. Mullanphy provided an endowment to care for these various travelers. Later, in the early '80's, the Boston YWCA established a Travelers Aid Service for new arrivals from Europe. Still later, some Quakers employed a worker to meet strangers arriving in New York and direct them to their destinations. In 1903, the New York Travelers Aid Society was formed, which became the first organized service in this country. The present National Travelers Aid Association was organized in 1917.

Columbus, Ga., has had a Travelers Aid worker in the railroad station for several years. When the soldier population at Fort Benning began to increase, it was decided that a USO-Travelers Aid was needed and, on June 15, 1941, an office was opened in Columbus. Since that date, the number of requests for information and the number of cases handled have increased from 72 to 10,000 per month.

Modern Fort Benning Is Near Site of Old Fort Mitchell

Visited by Francis Scott Key and General Lafayette

Where once oxen dragged the heavy guns to fortify a frontier post in the early settlement of Georgia and Alabama, and today modern warplanes drone overhead within cannon shot even of the old muzzle loaders, stands the modern installation of Fort Benning.

There's nothing left now of the old fort where the guns commanded the approaches of the Chattahoochee except some earthworks and a graveyard—and the old rutted trail down which the cannoneers led their mounts to water at a tiny stream when the buglers blew "Water Call." Visitors today sometimes find buttons that dropped from the soldier's uniforms in the old days.

It's the site of Old Fort Mitchell, just across the river in Alabama from the modern Army reservation of Fort Benning. It was built in 1811 by Georgia militia, and then taken over by Federal troops who remained during the Indian troubles in this territory of what was then the Frontier. From its base, troops went out on numerous battle expeditions against the rebellious Creeks — and to it frequently returned columns of battered troops who had had to bury their dead and drag back their wounded after fierce Indian warfare battles.

NAME HONORS GOVERNOR

The early fort was named for Governor David Brydie Mitchell, and there the Indian agent resided from 1821 to 1838 and there the Old Federal Road crossed the Chattahoochee River by ferry and proceeded west, along a more ancient Indian trail which had been the main highway of travel for the Indian tribes from the Atlantic coasts to Mississippi River settlements.

The fort was built just a short way from the ancient site of Kawita, the old Indian fortified village, where a mound still stands. This village visited by Oglethorpe in 1739, was the focal point for the Indians for many miles around.

John Crowell, the first Indian Agent, was established at the old Fort, He was Alabama's first delegate to Congress in 1817, serving for four years. His tomb is in the little cemetery at the site of the Fort.

Although the Fort was abandon in 1839, the site was again used as a training place for Confederate troops during the War Between the States, and there Col. James Cantey drilled his famous "Cantey Rifles." The Colonel was born in South Carolina, in 1818 and was a member of the bar. He served with the Palmetto Regiment in the Mexican War in 1849, after which he settled near Ft. Mitchell as a planter. His old house still stands there. In 1861 he was elected colonel of the Fifteenth Alabama, saw service under Jackson in the Valley and in the battles before Richmond. Promoted to the rank of brigadier general, he was assigned to the Western Army, was stationed at Mobile, and organized a brigade consisting of the 17th, 21st and 29th Alabama and the 37th Mississippi. He later commanded a division in the War. He, too, is buried in the little graveyard, together with other members of his family.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS

Old Ft. Mitchell knew many distinguished visitors when it was an old artillery post. Lt. Henry DuPont, scion of the famous munitions family marched there overland with a detachment from Savannah in 1823 to assist in fighting the Indians. He had just graduated from West Point at the time.

There, too, came Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner" as a Federal Commissioner to help adjust the difficulties arising over the slaying in 1833 of Hardeman Owens by the Creeks.

And there, too, came LaFayette in 1824 on his visit to this country. His reception at the Fort was in the nature of a triumphant entry into Alabama, with Indians dragging his carriage up from the ferry. At the Fort, the last "ball game"—as played Indian style with several hundred braves on each side—was played by the Creek Nation before being moved

Woman's Club Activities Noteworthy In 19 Years

Scrapbook Reveals Expansion of Club

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

Pouring over a scrap book invariably immerses one in the deepest nostalgia. No exception is the scrap book of the Woman's Club of Fort Benning. Names of old friends, books one has enjoyed and favorite music make it almost a personal history of Army days past.

Scrapbooks might be accounts of almost anything, but this one more than recalls old memories. It seems closely allied with the trend of the particular years. This is no great surprise when one acknowledges that the services of our country are always first to be affected by the historical and economic status of our nation. No woman lives closer in loyalty and concern than the service wife. Her husband's life is her life too. Small wonder that this is reflected in the programs throughout the nineteen years of the club's existence.

Like most women's organizations, the Woman's Club had its small beginnings. It seems strange that so many of the nation's more important women's activities started with a small group of twelve earnest women meeting at each other's homes. Strange, too, that out of their sincerity of purpose they should wish to increase their group to include all women of like sincerity of purpose.

Thus in 1923 when a small group of women organized the Woman's Club of Fort Benning and elected Mrs. Alfred Bjornstadt as its first president, they instituted an organization that was to become a cultural and decisive factor in the life of Army women during their stay at Fort Benning.

The first two years of the club's organization bi-monthly meetings were held with no social features. Emphasis was stressed on important speakers and musical programs. As the club grew the social aspect was considered to foster friendship and increased participation in varied activities.

CLUBS ARE STARTED

During the year of 1925 departmental clubs came into being. An Arts and Crafts Group was organized under the leadership of Mrs. Albert Helsley. This group became popular with the club members with its diversified studies to suit all artistic inclinations.

The art of homemaking was also recognized as an important part of the club's activities with the home economics group. Cooking, dressmaking and millinery reached a high point at that particular period under the leadership of Mrs. Butler Knight.

Those of literary turn of mind were led in serious study of important contemporary literature of that time under the direction of Mrs. Phillip B. Peyton. Child psychology was studied under Mrs. Edwin T. Bowden, who was especially qualified to instruct on that subject. Their interest in this subject led them to the responsibility of contributing to the Children's School and playground equipment.

From year to year the club called on talented members of the garrison to provide entertainment. Many times officers contributed their bit with interesting observations they had made on foreign service and highlights of their career.

On December 17, 1928, the then Colonel G. C. Marshall spoke to the club on the approaching Christmas season. No one at that West in honor of the French general.

The site of the old Fort today is in possession—or at least was until very recently—of descendants of brothers and sisters of Crowell, who had been a bachelor.

meeting could have foreseen Colonel Marshall becoming General George Catlett Marshall, chief of staff of the United States army, and one of the most important military men in the world 14 years later. Throughout the scrapbook one finds names of men who have become distinguished military leaders in our army today.

Over a period of 19 years lies a record of substantial and concrete effort to give the club members programs that offered not only entertainment, but practical knowledge of adjustments to the demands made on an army wife in her life in the service.

PURPOSE OF CLUB

A paragraph written by Mrs. W. H. Vincent on December 21, 1928, might well be written of the club's aim and purpose today: "The club has a serious purpose. It strives to give an intellectual outlet for all who are interested. It hopes to offer these things which will make for the enrichment of our community life."

The club year of 1941-42, under the guidance of Mrs. Charles H. Owen, faced a new and serious problem with the tremendous increase of the present day army. The many newcomers were bewildered and lacking in contacts that would give them a feeling of security and a sense of belonging to the Army. The Woman's Club bent every effort to attract and interest these newcomers in their activities. The success of their efforts was overwhelming in scope.

Since no organization is any better than its leaders, full cognizance and honor must go to the following women who have devoted so many unselfish hours of faithful service as presidents of the Woman's Club of Fort Benning: Mrs. Alfred Bjornstadt, 1923-24; Mrs. Frank Cocheu, 1924-25; Mrs. William McKendry Scott, 1925-26; Mrs. Ralph Kingman, 1926-27; Mrs. Wait C. Johnson, 1927-28; Mrs. Edgar S. Miller, 1928-29; Mrs. Oscar W. Hood, 1929-30; Mrs. D. C. Berry, 1930-31; Mrs. Charles Hunt, 1931-32; Mrs. E. G. Peyton, 1932-33; Mrs. Phillip Wood, 1933-34; Mrs. Maxon Lough, 1934-35; Mrs. W. A. McCullough, 1935-36; Mrs. W. G. Livesay, 1936-37; Mrs. J. W. Moreland, 1937-38; Mrs. A. M. Patch, 1938-39; Mrs. John R. Eden, 1939-40; Mrs. Roger B. Harrison, 1940-41; Mrs. Charles H. Owen, 1941-42.

The wisdom of continuing the Woman's Club during the war was debated as the time drew near for the opening of the season of 1942-43. The problem of morale and opportunity for occasional relaxation was as acute for the army wives this year as it has been in the past. Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley was elected president for the coming year. The chief directive of the club for the year of 1942-43 is its sponsorship of Red Cross activities and war-time duties. To that end a Nursery School was founded under the direction of Mrs. Kelley to release young mothers for war-time duties. With the combined objectives of duty to Red Cross activities and stimulating programs for occasional hours of leisure the Woman's Club of this year will continue the aims of constructive worthy for the coming club season.

Lawson Proving Ground For Air Commando Units

Personnel Made Up Of Specially Trained Men for Transport

"Air power today has decided the fate of nations. Germany with her powerful air armada has vanquished one people after another. On the ground, large armies had been mobilized to resist her but each time it was that additional power in the air that decided the fate of each individual nation."

In the book "Winged Warfare" by Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold and Col. Ira C. Eaker the authors tell of the origin of the Parachute Troops and the subsequent forming of Air Transport units. Gen. William Mitchell returned from the first World War with the conception of Parachute. It was demonstrated at Kelly Field before the procedure became commonplace in Russia and Germany that troops with machine guns could be and were landed by parachute with their automatic weapons and could have them set up for operation in a brief span of time.

To transport this air infantry, Troop Carrier Groups and Squadrons were activated. These Groups have become known as Air Commandos. It is not unlikely that considerable numbers of men will have to be transported over great distances and their equipment carried on wings. That is the mission of the Air Commandos.

Lawson Field, Fort Benning, is a proving ground for the Air Commandos. At present a Troop Carrier Group under the command of Lt. Col. S. V. Payne is working out tactical air problems. A "jump training" program is scheduled and jumps are made daily.

The personnel of the Air Commandos are specially and technically trained men, fully qualified for transport flying organizations. They have pride in their outfit, and none other than Col. Landis Reed, chief of staff of the Troop Carriers, in collaboration with Capt. W. N. Dekker, C. O. of the 45th Transport Squadron, has written the Carriers' official song, the Air Commando Song. It has been featured by top name radio bands.

In the days to come out only will the Troop Carriers "Keep 'Em Flying," but in addition will play a big part in keeping the men in the field.

Gen. Newgarden Keeps Tab On "Tiger" Division

Personal supervision of all activities of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, as far as time permits, is the day-by-day policy of Major General Paul W. Newgarden, commanding general.

Recognized as a "doer"—not a behind - the - desk commander—General Newgarden does not believe in having his men do anything which he himself would not do. It, therefore, is not surprising to see him leading a group of officers racing over an obstacle course and conducting a vigorous hour of calisthenics.

Whether it be visit by Lieut. General William Knudsen, director of production, or the arrival of John Doakes and his recruit friends, the General makes it a point to be present and extend personal greetings and prepare for the well-being of the new arrivals.

The General's determination and ability to have his organization down to the last man ready for combat when the time comes, is no doubt, a result of his very complete military experience, as well as to his comparatively youth for such a responsible position.

Born on February 24, 1892, he attended a number of military colleges and served continuously in the armed forces of the United States since his graduation in 1913 from the United States Military Academy. He was a graduate in 1922 of the Field Officers Course at the Infantry School. In 1926 he was a distinguished graduate of the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. In 1932 he graduated from the Army War College.

In addition to his attendance at these schools, the General must have also spent some time in the handling of the saber and pistol, for he was National Junior Saber Champion in 1919, and a member of the Infantry Rifle and Pistol team in 1922 and 1923. The 1923 pistol team on which he fired high score set a new record in winning the national championship.

Only recently, General Newgarden, with Lieutenant E. J. Stahn, Jr., won the tennis doubles championship of Fort Benning.

The handling of armored units is not a novelty to General Newgarden, for, previous to being placed in command of the 10th Armored Division, he was Brigadier General in charge of Combat Command "A" of the 2nd Armored Division.

Early Medical Cases Treated In Columbus

Present Structure Was Completed In May, 1925

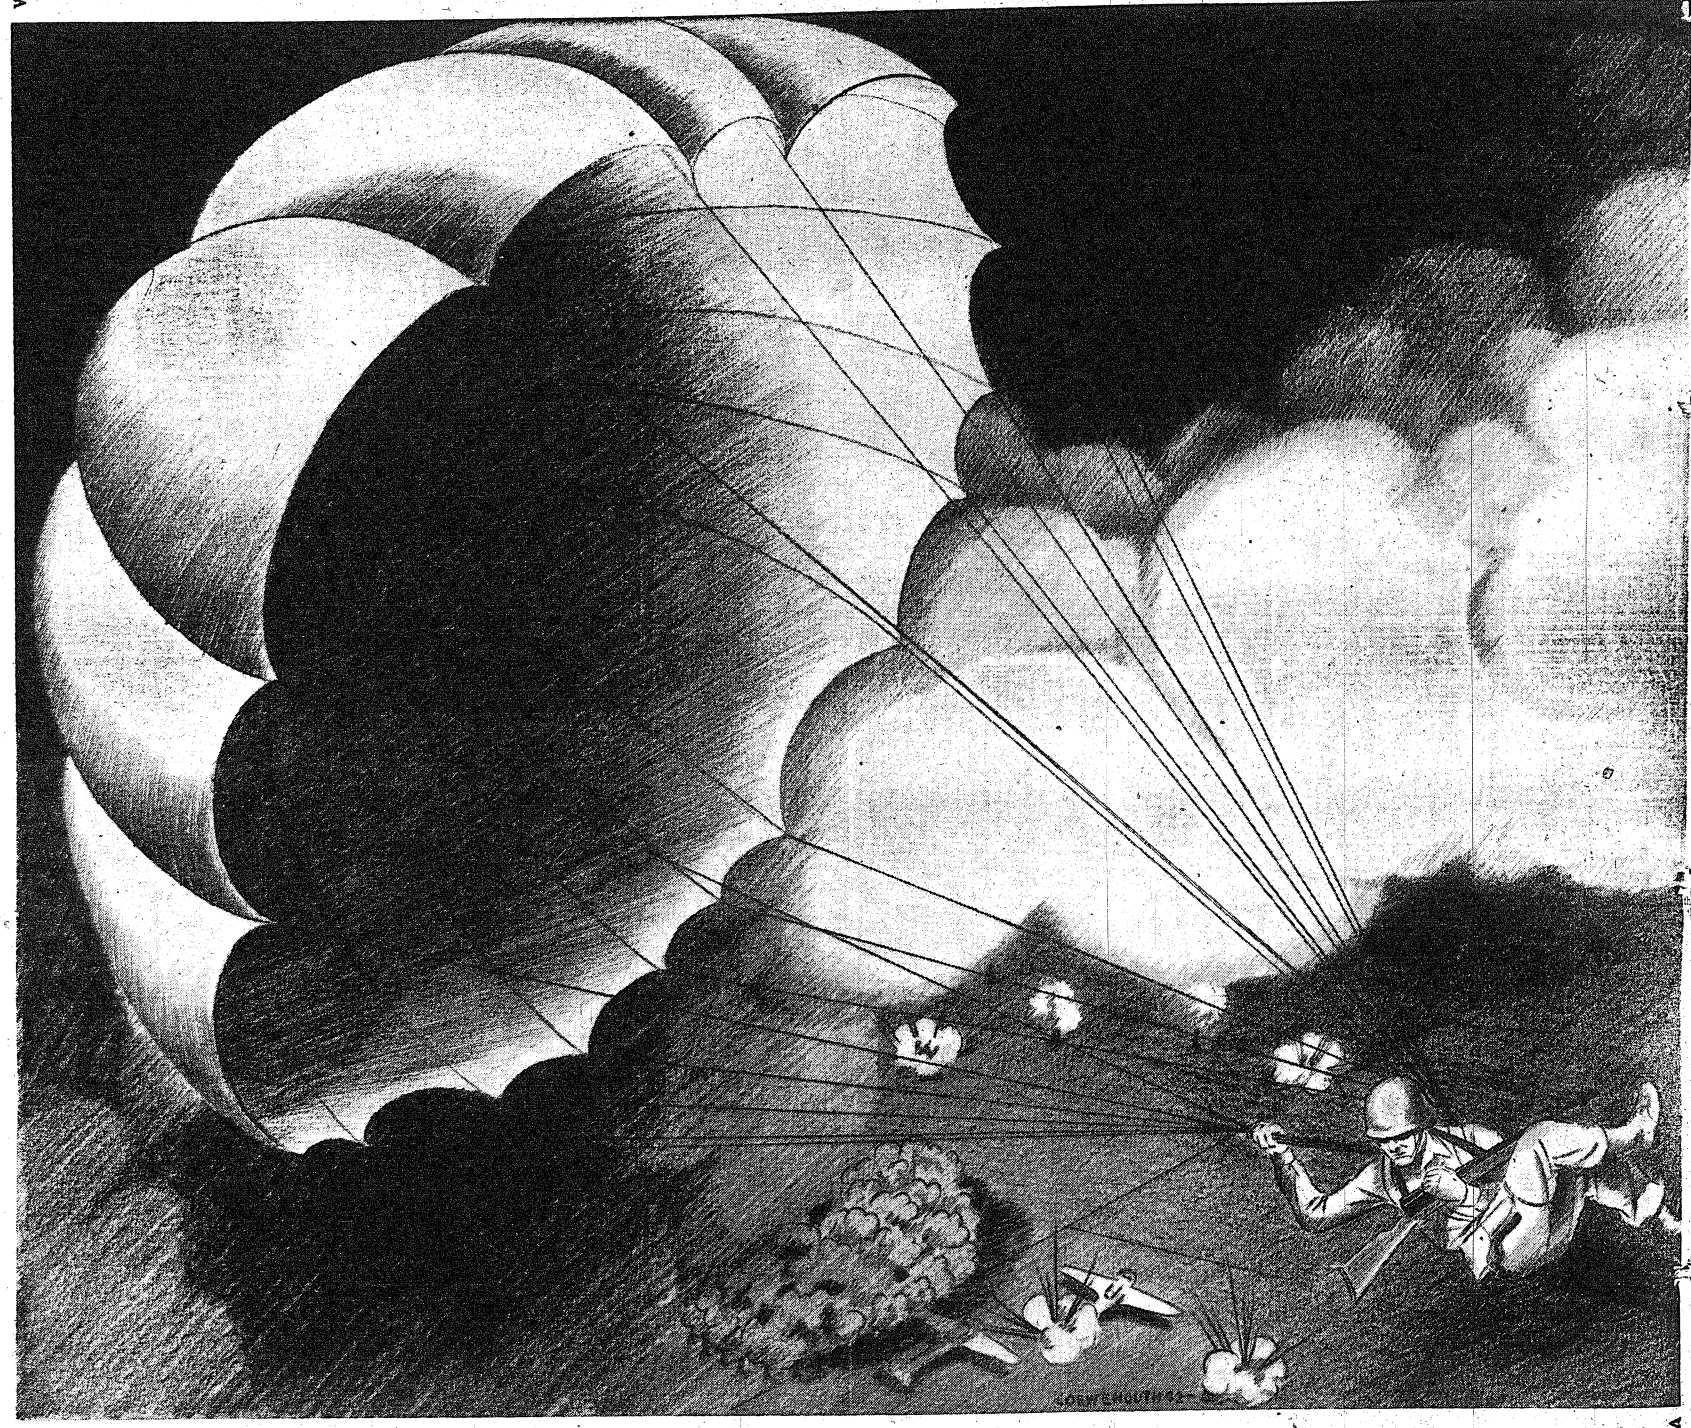
Fort Benning was established as a camp on October 7, 1918. It was made a permanent military post by General Orders, January 9, 1922. At the time of the establishment of Fort Benning, no hospital was available and men needing medical care were treated in the City Hospital in Columbus. A small wooden building, located on the lot in front of where the Post Theatre now stands, was the beginning of the Station Hospital.

There were no facilities for bed patients at first, and all such patients were treated in the Columbus City Hospital. A temporary hospital, composed of wards, buildings and barracks, was set up in late 1920, and was known as the Station Hospital from January 1, 1921, to May, 1925, when the main building of our present hospital, a three-story, concrete structure, was completed and occupied. The use of the temporary buildings was not abandoned until 1929. In February, 1929, two additional two-story, permanent ward buildings were completed, and in March, 1930, a third was built. In August of the same year, a two-story concrete building was completed and occupied as quarters for Army Nurses.

These constructions proved to be fairly adequate for the hospitalization of the garrison, but when the strength was greatly increased in 1939, it was necessary to utilize an entire barrack building located about one mile from the Main Hospital, for hospital purposes. In November, 1940, construction started on a cantonment type hospital of 1,415 beds on a standard 2,000-bed Jay-out plan. The cantonment hospital was finished in May, 1941. Since that time, many additional wards have been constructed and opened. All new wards are immediately occupied by the transfer of patients and the admittance of new patients to the hospital.

ONE OF LARGEST

Thus from a humble beginning of one small wooden dispensary building, the Station Hospital has passed through various periods of growth and development until it now stands as one of the largest Station Hospitals in the military service, comprising a group of eight permanent buildings and well over a hundred temporary structures; wards, clinics, barracks, quarters, mess halls, storehouses, etc.



Since the activation of the hospital in 1918, it has grown in size and also has developed a high state of efficiency and an excellent reputation due to the efforts of the following officers who have commanded it: Lt. Colonel C. E. Koerper, M. C.; Lt. Colonel J. W. VanDusen, M. C.; Lt. Colonel H. L. Hansell, M. C.; Lt. Colonel P. S. Halloran, M. C.; Colonel F. C. Baker, M. C.; Major D. P. Carr, M. C.; Colonel C. J. Manley, M. C.; colonel L. J. Smith, M. C.; Brigadier-General Dear, U. S. A.; Colonel E. A. Noyes, M. C.

The operation of a large Station Hospital, like the one here, is very much like the administration of any large city hospital. Long hours are spent by the hospital personnel and officials, surgeons, doctors and nurses, working to guard the health of the soldiers, with the highest state of efficiency. They are prepared to meet and handle any kind of an emergency that may arise. Men of the Medical Department are trained in the performance of various duties required of them, and the entire personnel and staff are on duty at all times to guard to the limit of their ability the health of the men in the service.

Whether in peace time or in war, the Army Medical Department is constantly striving through research and study to keep abreast of the latest and soundest methods in medicine, and to "Keep em Fit for Fighting."

First STR Is Daddy Of TIS Regiments

Unit Is Symbol of Growth Of Officer Training Program

The First Student Training Regiment at Fort Benning, commanded by Col. T. R. Gibson, holds the distinction of being the "Daddy" of all officer training units on the post. It was the nucleus of the vast training program which has sent out thousands of officers from the Infantry School since the attack on Pearl Harbor.

In speaking of the record of the 1st S. T. R., Colonel Tupper, commander of the Student Training Brigade, has said:

"As the former commander of the 1st S. T. R., I can't help but take a measure of pride in its work. In a large sense the 1st S. T. R. symbolizes the whole program and expansion of the Infantry School.

"The magnificent accomplishments of the training program of the Infantry School; Officer Candidate Classes, Motor Maintainance, Radio Communications, Advanced and Divisional Officer Classes, all identify their beginnings and growth with the 1st S. T. R. Many of the leaders of the regiments of the Student Training Brigade were former officers of the 1st S. T. R.

"I congratulate the present Officers of the 1st S. T. R. on their successful continuance of the traditions and standards that have become associated with this, the 'Mother Regiment' of the Infantry School."

BEGAN IN 1941

The 1st S. T. R. had its beginnings in January of 1941, when the Student Training Units were formed out of the Infantry School Detachments.

The Student Training Units were placed under the command of Col. Tupper, who is at present the commander of the Student Training Brigade, and consisted of 15 companies and 4 Battalion Hdqs., involved in the Advanced and Basic Officer Courses, the Enlisted Radio Operators courses, the Motor Maintainance Courses, and the Parachute School. In July of 1941 the first OC Training Battalion was formed within the framework of the Student Training Units and the entire structure of what later became the broad, mass training program identified with the School was complete.

In December, 1941, the expansion of the training program of the Infantry School, necessitated the formation of another Training Regiment and out of the ranks of the Student Training Units were formed the cadre and leadership of the 2d Training Regiment. The old Student Training Units was redesignated as the 1st S. T. R. and was again called on in March of 1942 to furnish the cadre and officers for the newly formed 3d S. T. R.

BRIGADE FORMED

In July of 1942, the Student Training Brigade was formed and Col. Tupper left the 1st S. T. R. to assume new duties as the commander of the Student Training Brigade.

He was replaced as commander of the 1st, by its present commander Col. Thomas R. Gibson. Its record is enviable.

Through the 4 companies and classes of the 1st have come the leadership of newly-formed divisions, to develop the close coordinated teamwork demanded by the problems of modern warfare. Divisions of the American Army, serving in all parts of the world have seen their first beginnings somewhere within a Divisional Training Class held at the 1st S. T. R. OC men.

The unique role of the Officer Candidate School classes, furnishing as it does the leadership for today's Army, was begun at the 1st and thousands of officers now serving with the Army are 1st S. T. R., OC men.

So, too, with Paratroopers. Both the present officer and enlisted men's Parachute courses had their beginnings within the 1st.

The training of motor maintenance and enlisted radio operator men has from the beginning been the work of the 1st S. T. R.

COL. GIBSON COMMENTS

In speaking of the work and history of the Regiment, its present commander, Col. T. R. Gibson, has said:

"The 1st Student Training Regiment is proud of the role it has played in the program of the Infantry School. Proud and at the same time conscious that its responsibilities are great ones. We have a unique role to play. There is nothing of greater importance in the present situation than the training and schooling of the Officers and Technicians of the expanding Army that will bring tomorrow's victory.

"The Officers of the 1st S. T. R. are grateful for the opportunity to serve in this direction. It is a matter of great pride to us that we are directly contributing to the development of the leadership of our Army.

"The present staff of the 1st S. T. R. shall continue to make every effort in the future to guarantee that the Officers and men who go through our organization are equipped and ready to meet the responsibilities that befall them. . . ."

Col. Gibson Termed Inspiration to Men

First STR C. O. Was Oft Decorated for Gallantry

COL. T. R. GIBSON

To the thousands of Officer Candidates trained and commissioned at the 1st Student Training Regiment, the record of their Regimental Commander, Col. Thomas R. Gibson, may well serve as an example and an inspiration.

Col. Gibson began his career as an Army officer as a graduate of an OC class at Ft. Sheridan, Ill., August 15, 1917. He received sealed orders upon graduation, and twenty days later was on French soil. He attended a British Machine Gun School for one month, and was assigned to duty with the 1st Division.

With the 1st Division, Col. Gibson shared and participated in the creation of one of the truly glorious records of World War I. It was as an officer of the 18th Infantry of that Division that Col. Gibson shared the honor of being in the first American Regiment to cross the Rhine.

It was the 1st Regiment that received the honor of conducting the traditional ceremony of Dipping the Colors into the Rhine, symbolizing the victory over Germany and effectually beginning the occupation. During the occupation Col. Gibson served with the 18th Infantry.

GETS DSC ,OTHER MEDALS

Col. Gibson has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism during the battle of Soissons, where he was wounded in action; the Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, representing citations for valor in several engagements, and the Purple Heart, in recogintion for wounds received in battle.

He has received the Victory Medal with five battle clasps, indicating participation in five major battles of the last war.

From the French government, Col. Gibson was awarded the Croix de Guerre; and shared in the honor of his Regiment, when it was twice awarded special citations for outstanding bravery and gallantry in battle. It was the citations awarded to his Regiment that permitted Col. Gibson to wear the French Fourragere. There are other medals and awards, too, the Campaign Medal for participation in the Occupation of Germany, and in 1929, the Verdun Medal, a Decoration of Honor, awarded by the French government.

Col. Gibson came to the 1st S. T. R. in July of 1942 from the 3d Trn. Regt., where he served as a Battalion Commander. Prior to that time, he had acted as assistant professor of Military Science at Cornell University and at Virginia Military Institute and had served with the 65th Infantry in Puerto Rico.

There is a strange thread that history weaves, linking the past with the present.

It would be fitting, indeed, that some officers, graduates of the 1st Student Training Regiment, under Col. Gibson, shall also have the honor of standing on the shores of conquered Nazi Germany and participate in the Victorious Color Dipping.

There is much to be said in length about the present work of Colonel Gibson, but somehow, that though sums it up.

Army Grease Packs Heavy Kick

Large quantities of grease which the Army is collecting daily at Fort Benning as well as all other posts, camps and stations under the supervision of the salvage division of the Quartermaster Corps, is being turned into valuable explosives, according to Col. Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning quartermaster.

The grease is sold by the Q. M. C. to soap manufacturers who extract all glycerin content and sell it to firms making high explosives. On the average, cooked grease yields about 10 per cent glycerin and 87 per cent soap stock.

Colonel Massey stated that the glycerin now being extracted from rendered bones, meat scraps and waste greases in the nation's army camps, is sufficient to manufacture about 1,500,000 pounds of dynamite monthly, or 18,000,000 pounds a year. It may also be used for English cordite, or smokeless powder for the Russians and Chinese.

Besides the soap stock salvage which amounts to over 60 million pounds annually, the raw bones collected in Army kitchens yields about 18 per cent glue. Once the glue is extracted from the bone scrap, the residue can further be used for poultry feed or fertilizer.

After all surplus greases and spent fats are removed, all edible garbage remaining is sold to farmers for feeding hogs, and the Q. M. C. estimates that at present two pounds of pork is being produced each month from the food scraps of each soldier.

SIX TO SCHOOL

Six enlisted men of the 10th Armored's "Tiger" Division left recently to pursue a course in gunnery at Fort Knox, Kentucky. The men are, Sergeant Abraham R. Milco of the 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, Sergeant Earl H. Apgar of the 11th Armored Regiment, Corporal David F. Wilson of the 11th Regiment, T-5 Zennon L. Nowakowski of Supply Battalion, T-5 Arthur V. Crego of the Maintenance Battalion and T-5 Grant W. Allen, Jr., of the 55th Engineer Battalion.

'Happy' Hunting Grounds In Army Record Section

Letter to Oshkosh Or Albuquerque All In Day's Work

The Infantry School's Record Section is sometimes referred to as the "Happy" Hunting Grounds.

"Where oh, where—is that letter to Oskosh? It went out a month ago, and I haven't got those shears it requested yet."

"Where did you hide that request for my 10-day leave?"

"How can I qualify for the Flying Tigers?"

Such are the questions that Lt. Troy V. Moore, Records Section chief, and Master Sergeant Brian P. Riley, chief clerk, and their staff have daily almost without letup. They frequently pass the request to chief of the general file, Staff Sgt. George Stalker, or 201 chief clerk, Sgt. Abe Belsky.

It seems to be one continual large-scale hunting foray, as the section's staff tries to find the answers to the greatly varied questions. Usually that "letter to Oskosh" still reposes in the desk of the writer. Or they find it wasn't Oskosh, it was Albuquerque, or it wasn't a month ago it was six months ago or it wasn't a request for shears, but an order for a clip board.

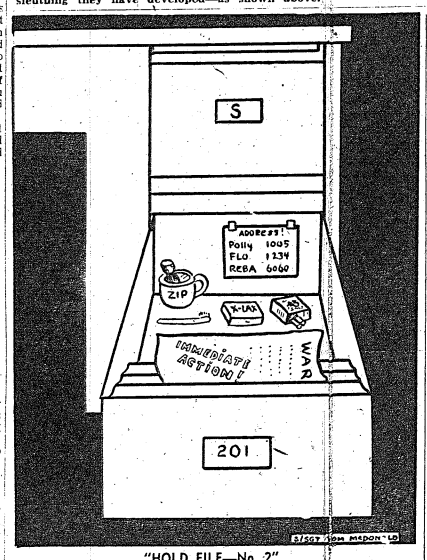
But no matter. It's the job of the records section sleuths to track down the desired correspondence, even if it doesn't exist. As a result it's a common scene to have a flock of heads bent over folders, books of Army Regulations, file cabinets and sheaths of papers trying to find that little slip of yellow paper for the Colonel.

Every office has it's "Hold File No. 2" where it can be found usually in the lower right hand drawer of the desk. And it's Hold File No. 2 that is the bugaboo of the Records Section. One of the first tricks the Records Section Detectives learn, is to hunt for every office's "dead letter office."

AH, THAT DRAWER

Then when a piece of correspondence from that office fails to come to light after an exhaustive search of the records section files, a sly advance is made on said lower right hand drawer. And more often than not, there reposes the lost paper.

Lieutenant Moore and Sergeant Riley have had long experience in records section. They can remember when it only took three clerks and a few files to keep things straight. But today the section is threatening to push the rest of the Adjutant General's section right out of the school building. They have row upon row of files, containing records of every man in the school. They keep records of officers and enlisted men and of civilian personnel.



Every bit of correspondence is recorded and filed. Every directive, every Army Regulation is ready and easily accessible—that is easily accessible if trained men such as Lieutenant Moore and Sergeant Riley are on hand to know how to dig it out. It's an art that comes only from years of training, an art that permits you to "sense" where the misplaced paper has been put.

If Lieutenant Moore or Sergeant Riley can't find it for you, you'd better look in your No. 2 hold file.

Sure, We'll Find It—Someplace

That the pen is mightier than the sword is illustrated above as the powers-that-be in a typical Army Record Section look for your records. And, if the Record Section can't find your missing papers in their own files, chances are they'll find them in your own desk through the sly manner of sleuthing they have developed—as shown above.

Army Children Prepare For Citizenship

Entire Program For Youngsters On Military Lines

Doing their share in the war efforts are the sons of officers and enlisted men at Ft. Benning these days.

Organized under the leadership of Major Virgil Ney of the Infantry School Publications Section, primarily for social and sports and Boy Scout activities, the youngsters have turned their organization into an all-out effort to put "boy-power behind the war effort."

Whenever or wherever the boys can be of use in any activity or campaign during the past year, they have offered their services—and the wartime activities of the group came to an all time high when the youngsters conducted a scrap iron and rubber drive of their own.

They combed the residential areas of the Post and brought in a total of more than 10 tons of scrap which probably otherwise would have never been uncovered. Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general, officially commended the boys for their activity and their determined efforts. For participation in the scrap drives, each boy who took part received a ribbon.

In addition, a group photo of the boys activities group at Ft. Benning was used as a cover on "Scouting" the National Scout Leaders Magazine and honorable mention was given to Troop 11 and Pack 1 in "Boys' Life," the nationally circulated boys magazine.

Recreational facilities for the children on an Army post naturally present about the same problems as those in a large city, and Major Ney has organized boys' activities to take advantages of the opportunities offered at a large Army post.

Three football teams have been organized—the Jeeps, Peeps and the Trailers, and they practice daily at 5 p. m. Their games are staged between the halves at the big games in Doughboy Stadium and draw as many cheers as the adult teams. The Trailers are the true "small fry" in the league, and some of them are hardly bigger than the football—but they're learning the rudiments of the game and Maj. Ney is certain some of them will be big time college stars in the future.

A new group at the Fort is the Benning Rangers, organized for boys from seven to nine years of age, who are not eligible for membership in the Boy Scout Cub Pack. This group is organized along the line of Rogers' Rangers, and the First Battalion now is completely organized. Emphasis is placed on obedience and discipline.

MINIATURE SOLDIERS

The Rangers will have their own program, both recreational and physical training. A miniature obstacle course will be built for their use and each company will have its own captain and learn to act as escort to the colors. Eventually a big formal parade of the Ranger Battalion is planned under its own officers.

Peter Sherman, son of Lt. Col. Frank Sherman, is assistant commandant of the Rangers, acting under Major Ney's direction. Meetings are held each Friday at 5:15 p. m. at the Scout Cabin.

Activities of Boy Scout Troop No. 11 and Cub Pack No. 1 have been making a vital contribution to the lives of the youngsters at Ft. Benning. In the Cubs, three medals have now been placed in competition for personal inspection awards. In this activity, too, several Den Mothers have been contributing their time. Mrs. M. C. Higgins has consistently devoted much of her spare time to this group.

A new course has been started during the past season in "Leadership" for the Scouts and Cubs. This group meets each Saturday afternoon at the Scout Cabin, where the youngsters are taught the principles of leadership and group direction.

PLAN BASKETBALL

Another new activity is a wrestling class for boys meeting each Tuesday night in the Main Post Gymnasium, where Lt. D. F. Farrell of the Infantry School Publications Section teaches the art of self defense and a mild form of "Judo" adapted to boys.

As soon as the football season closes, basketball will begin, and all boys in the post are invited to participate in the sport. All boys also are invited to take part in the other boys' activities, Major Ney emphasized. The boys are asked to get in touch with Major Ney and indicate in which activity they are interested. Regardless of size or age, the individual boy will have an opportunity to play his game under proper coaching and leadership.

SOME KEGLER!

The boys stationed on the Hawaiian Islands have named Pvt. Bob Morris as the top service bowler in that neck of the woods. Bob has been bowling 'em over, over there, and is now looking around for a little stiffer competition. The maplewood destroyer is only 23, but has been yelling "Timber!" since he was 15. Bob participated in the National American Bowling Congress in Cleveland when he was 17. Today his average is well over 200.

124th Looms As Football Champs

Gator Eleven Tops 117th Before Huge Crowd In Stadium

Emerging from the week-end battles as the sole unbeaten entry in the Fort Benning Football Conference, the great Gator eleven of the 124th Infantry now looms as a distinct favorite to capture the flag and the gridiron championship of the post.

Capt. Red Milton's powerful machine bowled over the previously undefeated 117th Infantry Breakers by a score of 20-7 on Sunday afternoon before an overflow crowd of 12,000 madly cheering fans in Doughboy Stadium to establish itself firmly in first place after several weeks when the entire league picture was a muddle.

From here in, it will be a case of the other teams overhauling the fast-moving Gators who have now racked up four straight wins after dropping their two opening games. The defeated 117th still has a good mathematical chance of at least deadlocking for the crown, but the rest of the clubs are almost entirely out of the running.

The 124th gridmen could actually clinch the honors this coming week-end if they topple the 55th Engineers, and the 3rd Armored upsets the 117th. Any other combination of results will hold up the final decision until the climactic game on December 6th when the Gators meet their arch rivals, the 29th Blue Devils.

Afterf the rivals had battled to a scoreless stalemate in a whizz-bang first half, the Gators roared into action and big Roy Gestary

Field Age For Officers Is Up

Age limit for both first and second lieutenants for field service has been raised to include those who have not passed their 36th birthday, it has been announced by the War Department.

Previously second lieutenants were ineligible for field duty after reaching their 30th birthday, while the age limit for first lieutenants was the 35th birthday.

It was pointed out that many graduates of Officer Candidate Schools have been between ages of 30 and 36 when they are commissioned as second lieutenants, which necessitated their assignment to overhead installations, although they were otherwise qualified for active field service.

In addition to the new age requirement, the only qualification other than professional, for service with troops by lieutenants is that they shall have adequate physical and mental vigor and stamina necessary to perform the command or staff duties to which assigned under the rigorous conditions of modern combat.

Latin American Officers Arrive Here Saturday

15 Guests to Tour Post and Visit All Installations on Trip

Twenty-nine officers representing 15 Latin-American nations will arrive for a thorough tour of Fort Benning Saturday. One group will be here for three days, while 19 of the officers will remain for six days.

During their stay the officers, including one lieutenant commander of Paraguay's navy, will visit the post, the Infantry School, the 10th Armored Division and the Parachute School.

Numbered in the group are representatives from Costa Rica, Guatemala, El Salvador, Mexico, Nicaragua, Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Haiti, Panama, Paraguay, Peru and Venezuela.

The program calls for a tour of the post Sunday with a visit to the 10th Armored Division. Monday will be spent in visiting activities of the Infantry School and Tuesday in inspecting the Parachute School. Officers remaining here for the longer period of time will devote the additional days to witnessing the work of the Infantry School.

Pvt. Pierre J. Huss, Who Knows Hitler, Assigned to Post

Word was received today from Washington that Pvt. Pierre J. Huss, speaker at the War Bond breakfast, will be transferred to Fort Benning for assignment to the public relations office after he completes his basic training at Fort McClellan.

A request for his transfer by Fort Benning has been approved by the Adjutant General's department. Huss, who "covered" the Nazi regime as manager of the Berlin bureau of the International News Service since 1934, is also author of the currently best selling book, "The Foe We Face."

LT. J. E. FREEMAN IS PROMOTED

The promotion of 1st Lt. James E. Freeman, one of the veteran Army men at Fort Benning and organizer of the present post headquarters staff to captain was recently announced.

Seated between a major general and a brigadier general at Fort Benning's all-military War Bond breakfast Sunday was a buck private, Pierre J. Huss, former Berlin manager of the International News Service. Huss, shown here with Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, Fort Benning's commanding general at his right, and Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School, at his left, was principal speaker before 600 soldiers attending the breakfast. At the extreme left, is the toastmaster, Staff Sgt. Carl F. Neu. A staggering total of $170,200 was raised in war bonds for the breakfast, believed the first of its kind held on a military post in the nation. Other general officers seated at the speakers table were Maj. Gen. Paul W. Newgarden, commanding officer of the 10th Armored Division; Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, commandant of the Parachute School, and Brig. Gen. Eric Fisher Wood, commanding officer of Internal Security District No. 4. (Photo by 161st Signal Photographic Company.)

Private Tells Generals Hitler Is 'Slipping'; War Bond Drive for Breakfast Tops $170,000

War Correspondent Pvt. Pierre J. Huss Speaks at Benning

A buck private stood before two major generals three brigadier generals and hundreds of other officers and enlisted men this week and told a gripping story of eight years in Berlin, "covering" Hitler and the Nazi regime.

"And inasmuch as someone had to be the 'fall' guy, we had orders to maintain cordial relations with that Public Louse No. 1 all those years," Pvt. Pierre J. Huss, former Berlin manager of the International News Service, told 600 Fort Benning soldiers gathered at the war bonds breakfast on Sunday at the post gymnasium.

The story of the magnetic eye that detects metal in the clothing of persons calling on Hitler; the reaction of the German man in the street to the war; what would happen on Hitler's death and the reason for Hess's flight to England were among topics asked by Fort Benning men and answered by Huss during a question-and-answer-forum.

In explaining Hitler's "body-guard system," Huss said that callers to the dictator's office are searched and even as they walk toward his office, they pass through a magnetic field that detects any metal such as guns or a knife. None of the officials around Hitler are armed just in case they get "ideas," Huss added.

"The German man on the street is mentally cowed and accepts the war because he has to. We asked an intelligent German one day what he thought of the war. He replied that he didn't think because if he did, he would go crazy."

The war would go on if Hitler were killed, but the "fanatics" would cease to rule and the Army officials would take over and probably try to sue for an honorable armistice, Huss added.

He told his audience that Hess, when he took off on a flight to England, was demented with an idea for a British-German military alliance against Russia. Hess now is a ruined man with no party influence in Germany, said the former war correspondent.

"The solid, non-decision making German soldier lost the golden opportunity in world history when the generals reached Dunquerque two weeks ahead of schedule and because they were ahead of schedule failed to go ahead with the invasion of England. A MacArthur or an Eisenhower would have gone to England after the British left the French coast if he had had to swim across," Huss added.

Highlight of the War Bond breakfast program, his first-hand account followed post commander Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton's announcement that final sales of War Bonds for the affair had reached the unprecedented total of $170,200—over six times the quota.

"Soldiers of Fort Benning did double duty when they used their well-earned money to buy bonds and breakfast. We are proud of you here today and we know that your actions will serve as an inspiration to soldiers and civilians all over our nation," General Fulton said.

OFFICERS, MEN GATHER

"Officers and men alike from all organizations on the post are here together. Our deepest appreciation goes to all of you who have made this possible. But let

Goal of $30,000 Oversubscribed By 550 Per Cent Here

The sale of war bonds for the all-soldier War Bond Breakfast last Sunday at Fort Benning soared to $170,200, a record 550 per cent above the original quota of $30,000, according to Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., post adjutant and chairman of the affair.

Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, post commander, who announced the record at the Bond Breakfast, pointed out that this sum is in addition to more than $200,000 invested in bonds monthly by officers and enlisted men on the post through pay reservations.

The original quota of $30,000 was surpassed shortly after the drive for the Breakfast was initiated, according to Colonel Rosenberger. He said that the staggering total subscriptions came only through the cooperation of all units on the post and the War Bond officers who promoted the drive.

Many bonds were sold by the "Bond-A-Dears," a group of about 20 young women, civilian employes on the post who volunteered their spare time in the evenings to visit Service Clubs and theaters to sell bonds to soldiers.

While Fort Benning's troops contribute vast sums of money through pay reservations and other purchases into the War Bond drives of the Treasury Department, the War Department reported this week that nearly 2,000,000 soldiers, from privates to generals, now are buying approximately $13,000,000 in bonds every pay day.

"Ike" Orders "Georgie" Patton To Crack African Defenses

Gone are the days when tedious FIVE-PARAGRAPH field orders are necessary to direct combat in war if one from Lieutenant General Dwight D. Eisenhower, American commander in North Africa, to Major, Gen. George S. Patton, formerly of Fort Benning and now one of the North African commanders is an example of the present trend.

It reads:

"Dear Georgie:

"Algiers has been ours for two days. Oran defenses crumbling rapidly, with Navy shore batteries surrendering. Only tough nut left to crack is in your hands. Crack it open quickly.

Canada's First Paratroop Unit Formed Here

Veterans Of Combat Volunteer For Service As Daring Troo

Canada's first parachute group, officially designated the 1st Canadian Parachute Battalion, has established headquarters at Fort Benning, according to Lt. Colonel G. E. P. Bradbrooke, commanding officer of the unit.

Here former members of Canada's crack shock troops will train and qualify as jumpers according to American methods, until their own school at Camp Shilo, Manitoba is ready for use. Under this arrangement, they will train side by side with American paratroopers at the U. S. Parachute School, commanded by Brig. Gen. George P. Howell.

Around a nucleus of officers and men who came to Benning in September to train at the Parachute School, a sprinkling of commandos, rugged French-Canadians, Canadian-Scotish soldiers (some are still wearing their kilts), and officers and men from every other branch of the Canadian army, have been gathered.

All are volunteers, as are the American paratroopers, and represent the best of our northern ally's fighting men.

Although all in the group have received basic training, only a few have seen actual combat.

Bond Sales Soar For 2nd Regiment; Near $100,000 Mark

Two Officer Candidate companies in the Second Student Training Regiment have achieved 100 per cent participation in buying of War Bonds, it was announced this week by Capt. Fred A. Polumbo, War Bond Officer, who pointed out that this is something of a record for companies where the personnel is organized together for a maximum time of three months.

The companies which set up this record are the 31st, commanded by Capt. Maxwell A. Snead, and the 23rd, of which Capt. Don A. McNealmis the commanding officer.

The 31st Company compiled a company bond total for the month of October of $2,950, while the 23rd Company has garnered $1,929 in sales so far this month in its all-out effort.

Sales for the Regiment neared the $100,000 mark for the six-month period the drive has been on in Harmony Church, with October adding $18,630 to the total.

Housing Shortage May Be Eased By Camps Here

To help alleviate the critical housing shortage in the Fort Benning military area for the families of officers and enlisted men, a survey has been launched here to determine the practicability of establishing trailer camps on the reservation where such families may set up temporary homes.

Under a recent War Department directive, post commanders have been authorized to establish such parks where critical housing shortages exist. The housing shortage in this vicinity is well-known as the post billeting officer this week again urged home owners in Columbus to register available apartments and rooms for rent with Army authorities so as to accommodate officers and enlisted men's families who are unable to get quarters on the main post.

Major Jack I. Davis, Infantry School inspector and billeting officer, has been named president of a board to conduct a survey here to determine how many officers or enlisted men with families would be interested in making their homes in a trailer on the reservation.

Under the plan of the War Department, officers and enlisted men who are entitled to draw quarters allowance for their families would continue to be eligible for them if they lived on the post in their own trailers.

As details of the plans at Fort Benning became known, the headquarters announcement stated that "it is planned to establish trailer parks on the post for

Changes Made At Main Post

New staff assignments at Fort Benning, including appointment of Col. John P. Edgerly, executive officer as director of the administrative division and Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer, as director of the personnel division, were announced Thursday by Brig. General Walter S. Fulton, commanding General.

The announcement included the organization of the new Supply Division headed by Col. Stephen R. Massey, former post Quartermaster. Named as special service office to succeed Colonel Finnegan was Maj. Alexander H. Veazey, post theater officer.

In taking over the work of the director of the personnel division, Colonel Finnegan will supervise work of the four chiefs of the civilian, military, chaplains and special service branches, who are respectively, Lt. R. A. Parkins, Capt. W. B. Arbuthnot, Lt. Col.

Mother's Little Helper Gets Good Training With Scrub Pail, Broom, And Mop

Those all were tasks that, back home, he blithely left to Ma or the Little Woman.

And they're tasks that, returning home again, he probably will leave to them just as blithely. But not if Ma or the Little Woman ever find out how adept he has grown at it in the Army.

A group of soldiers can give a huge barracks a swell G. I. going over in not much longer, too, than it takes the one man to do his morning housekeeping chores. The barracks floors are mopped out with lye water, followed by clear water, and the beds are made up and the clothing all hung to stand a rigid inspection, and all the footlockers put in order inside and dusted outside, and all of the windows are washed. And, besides, the outside of the barracks is policed up.

The secret, of course, is organization. If the wives and mothers back home could get sufficient hands to help them with their work, they, too, could do the same with housecleaning. But will Johnny Doughboy pitch in and help when he gets back, and give the women the benefit of his experience? Make your own beds on that one, soldiers.

Learning how to be a damn good janitor isn't all, though. The average doughboy has to learn how to sew on his own buttons—or else. The "or else" includes having a tailor do it—which frequently cannot possibly be done when there's only one shirt available and inspection time is 10 minutes away; or getting a buddy to do it, which also is next to impossible; or getting a girl friend in town to do it.

Which is generally a waste of time as there are more interesting things to have a girl friend in town—if the soldier has one to begin with—than sewing on buttons.

Then, again, there's the little matter of darning socks, sewing rips in the more embarrassing places in the pants where such things more mysteriously occur (nobody ever knows how he ripped his pantaloons), and sewing on chevrons—if the soldier happens to make a rating.

Your average soldier becomes a pretty fair "seamster," if such an expression may be coined, by the end of his first year. He learns how to use a canteen for a darning or mending by utilizing it for a needle "stopper." He learns, too, of course, how to thread needles.

Some of the boys learn how to press their own clothes mighty neatly, too, without benefit of an ironing board, by using the top of a footlocker and a towel for a pressing service.

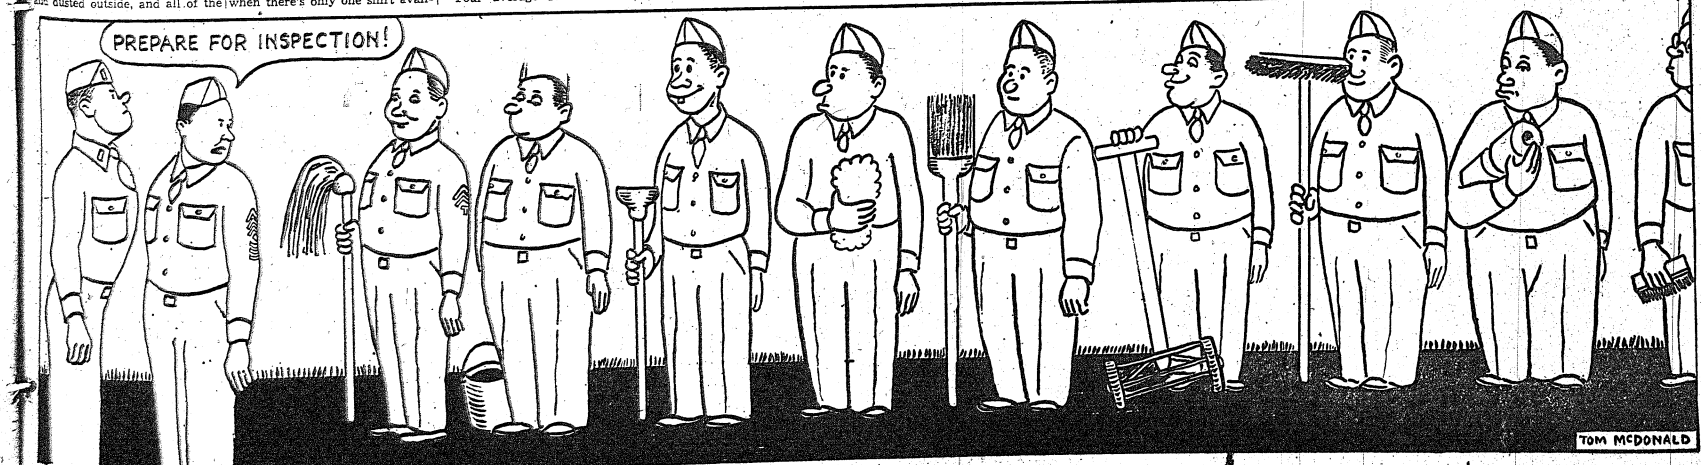
The doughboy learns, too, how to wash clothes by using a scrubbing brush and yellow soap — something that the average American housewife probably never would have occasion to do but mighty handy to know about if the family wash machine breaks down and there aren't any old fashioned scrubbing boards to be obtained. The soldier gets a mighty clean job out of those scrub brushes, too, incidentally.

Washing windows is mere child's play to the average G. I. after just a few weeks in the Army. In fact, it's one of the less obnoxious chores. He learns how to smear on "sand-soap" and wipe it off with the least possible effort. Some of the boys have found that the soft side of a shoe brush is just swell to wipe off the windows—a thing that no housewife would ever figure out. He learns a lot of these things because he has to use the materials at hand and to a man living out of a barracks bag and a tiny foot locker, there aren't many tools available.

Speaking of footlockers, if Mom or the Little Woman could ever see how that man of theirs, who used to litter up the bureau drawers back home, has to keep the footlocker in apple-pie shape, she'd certainly make it hot for him if he ever littered up another drawer by standing across the room and tossing shirts and shorts, socks, ties and shirts at the dresser.

He learns how to roll up underwear and socks so that they take up not much more space than a man-sized handkerchief. Yes, and he even keeps the handkerchiefs folded.

And he keeps the portion of the footlocker devoted to shaving things and tobacco plenty neat, too, for those footlocker inspections. The women back home could learn a good deal about keeping up those medicine chests in the bathroom, from their soldier-boys.



Provided the boys will remember how they did it and then show the women-folks, of course.

Not that all of the boys won't, either, when they get back home. Most of them just never thought how much work there was to this business of housekeeping. They just took it for granted that somebody else would do it around the house.

The little matter of kitchen police, too, is enlightening to the soldier, although perhaps it is more painful than enlightening.

But what he doesn't learn about keeping a kitchen clean and about running a large amount of dishes and silverware through the cleaning process in the shortest possible time is hardly worth learning. A lot of the methods used in the Army kitchens could save time for the home folks — for instance the trick of dousing dishes and silverware with boiling water and drying in the air, instead of the tedious job of wiping dishes—often with a cloth that carries germs, too—is one that might well be adopted by the average housewife.

That is, if she can ever get her husband to mention K. P. after the war, in language fit for the kiddies to hear.

423rd F. A. Unit Is Winner In Rifle Match

N. Y. Congressman Makes Award Of Crisp Greenbacks To Victors

Tiger sharpshooters firing in competition out at Gill Range have two targets to blaze away at. One, of course, is the black bulls eye and the other is welcome cash. Each man on the winning team receives a crisp, one dollar bill.

In the first rifle competition held Nov. 13th which pitted twelve teams in six matches, the 423rd Field Artillery Headquarters Battery not only won their match but took topscoring honors with 23 points out of a possible 25. Members of the team received their dollar from Congressman James Wadsworth of New York who was at the division to visit his son, Lieutenant Revedy Wadsworth of the 3rd Armored Regiment.

This rifle shoot was the first of similiar competitions to follow which will also include pistol and machine gun marksmanship.

This rifle shooting is based on the "group" and not nearness to the bulls eye. The guns are not zeroed in and winners are determined by the size of their groups in the standing, kneeling and prone positions.

The teams were given a week's notice to prepare for the matches and they did not know who they were to fire against until they met their opponents at the range.

THE WINNING TEAMS

Members of the winning teams are:

Headquarters Battery, 423rd Field Artillery: Sgt. Michael G. Yuhasz, Pfc. Royal N. Braxton, T 5 Max H. Basse, S-Sgt. William L. Thompson and Sgt. Charles W. Cartwright.

Reconnaissance Company, 11th A. R.: Sgt. Nele Baril, 1st Sgt. Godfrey Morrin, Sgt. Raymond Krantz, Sgt. Arthur Monroe and Sgt. Howard Beale.

Company "C," 55th Engineers: M-Sgt. Gabriel Hominick, S-Sgt. William Goolsby, Sgt. James D. Whittington, Sgt. Francis Shortere and Sgt. Stewart Wylie.

Tiger Knife-Expert Is Ready for Nazis, Japs

Company C of the Maintenance Battalion has in its ranks a soldier who would inspire terror in the heart of any man, be he a stoic Nazi or an icicle-hearted Japanese. This so-called terrorist is Private Manuel Corriera, alias Tex Corey, whose markmanship with guns and dexterity with knives has been publicized in various vaudeville stages from coast to coast. Tex, who has seen 42 summers, 22 of them in show business, is also a veteran of the last war, having spent 19 months with the A. E. F.

Tex can shoot wafers the size of a quarter held between the fingers of the hand with devastating accuracy: this he does with a .22. But that is not all. For with the .22 rifle from an under-arm off-shoulder position at a distance of thirty feet, this Jap-baiter can split his bullet against a knife edge, making the two parts ricochet and burst two ballons placed on either side of the knife.

Now when it comes to knives, look out! This Tex with his eyes open or closed, can outline the form of any person standing against a wall; he can neatly cut a piece of paper held in a person's mouth. So, watch out you Japs, here comes Pvt. Corriera with a rifle in one hand, a pistol in the other, and a knife stuck between his teeth!

O. C. Rooks Gets Chow To Men Despite Enemy

A kitchen truck is a mighty valuable instrument of warfare whether on the battlefield or just on maneuvers. Napoleon thought so, and that was good enough for Candidate Jesse E. Rooks, 7th Co. 1st Student Trainifg Regiment.

Rooks, a staff sergeant out of the 23rd Infantry, did such a good job of piloting his kitchen truck through enemy lines after his outfit had been surrounded by the enemy during the summer Louisiana maneuvers that it brought commendation from his regimental commander.

It all started late on the afternoon of August 13. The enemy suddenly moved in, captured the commander of the anti-tank company and all but had Rooks and his kitchen detail hooked.

But Rooks had been fortunate enough to see them coming and needed no other cue, he took off, without serving dinner.

With his outfit gone to new positions, Rooks and his kitchen truck began a night-long journey that took them hither and yon through the heart of the enemy line. At one time he even piloted the chow wagon through a village crowded with hostile forces.

The next morning found Rooks searching out each platoon of the AT company and serving the first meal the boys had in 18 hours and after the company commander who had escaped and returned to the outfit earlier had informed his troops he didn't know when they'd eat again.

"During the VIII Army Corps maneuvers, Staff Sergeant Jesse E. Rooks, AT Co., 23rd Infantry, on the night of August 13-14, 1942, displayed outstanding skill and initiative in guiding the kitchen truck of his company through the hostile lines to his company, which was surrounded by the enemy."

11th Armored Quiz Winners

Battling down to the last question, the 11th Armored Regiment just barely squeezed through to their third victory in the weekly quiz contest held at the Service Club when they defeated Company C of the 10th Armored's Maintenance Battalion by the score of 465 to 455. On two occasions the score was tied and both teams were "on the beam" as they answered brain-teasers fired at them.

Members of the winning team were Corporals Joe Sullivan, Fred Boylan, Morse Johnson and Sergeant Walter Coss. The team representing Company C were Privates Dick Sparnall, Joe Shiftman, Louis Osborne and Louis Dennis.

Mrs. Winifred H. Baker, Senior Hostess, presented the winning team with a carton of cigarettes. Corporal James E. Frye of the division public relations office acted as Master of Ceremonies. Sergeant Jerry Tonkens acted as timer and Sergeant Frank Bachinger was the scorer.

W. D. Issues G. I. Booklet

Is Answer To Many Personal Problems

The solution for those hundred and one personal problems always bothering a soldier is given in a new War Department booklet now being printed for distribution to old and new soldiers.

Entitled "Personal Affairs of Military Personnel and Their Dependents", the 46-page booklet will be given to all present members of the Army and will be available for new men just coming into the service.

Stressing the importance of arranging personal affairs, the booklet declares that "at any time during the course of war, all officers, Army nurses, warrant officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States may expect sudden changes of station. It is imperative that military personnel satisfactorily arrange their personal affairs before a sudden change of station occurs."

The booklet adds that "efficiency of performance varies directly, in proportion to an individual's peace of mind and mental stability. This human factor falters in the face of worry concerning loved ones left at home."

Under the heading "Information Your Family Should Know" the booklet advises that "your dependents should have knowledge of the arrangements made in their behalf. It is imperative that you reduce to writing for their guidance a complete history of your affairs."

Among the many subjects explained in detail by the booklet are transportation of dependents of military personnel and shipment of household goods; allotments of pay and deductions; pay, allowances and allotments of personnel reported missing, in action, or captured by the enemy; joint bank accounts; power of attorney; wills; automobiles; estates; safety deposit boxes; medical attendance and hospital facilities for dependents of Army personnel; chaplain services to military personnel and their dependents; burial if death occurs in the service; six months pay gratuity; arrears of pay, collection of accrued military pay if death occurs in service.

The booklet also covers benefits of the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942; the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of 1940 as amended; benefits administered by the Veterans Administration; United States War Savings Bonds and Stamps; Federal income tax returns and payments; the Army Emergency Relief, and the American National Red Cross.

Dependents and others desiring copies of the booklet may obtain them by writing to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., enclosing 10 cents to cover the cost of printing.

Minor Loop Ace Now in 3rd STR

Candidate Stanley L. Reft, Pittsburgh athlete who was a catcher for the Minneapolis, Seattle and Beaumont (Texas) ball clubs, has completed the first month's training as an officer candidate at the Infantry School in the 3rd Student Training Regiment.

Reft graduated from Connelley High School in 1935, where he played baseball and went to the University of Arizona where he was a multi-letterman in baseball, basketball and football.

Husky voiced Reft, whose vocal cords were tuned a deeper base when he was accidently struck by a baseball while playing for Beaumont, began to train for the biggest contest of his career when he entered the army in 1941.

He completed his basic training as an Infantry rifleman at Camp Wheeler and rose to the grade of corporal. While at Wheeler he was selected as an Officer Candidate and sent for training to the Third Student Training Regiment at the Infantry School.

Instead of grabbing hot baseballs from home plate, Reft is now learning the fine points of Infantry troop leader under hostile enemy fire. His familiar voice which has encouraged pitchers in three ball leagues, will soon—he hopes, command and comfort men on battlefields.

Gen Morrill Ross, commander of Combat B, Tenth Armored Division, 18-year-old Charles Coolidge Ross, his son, is shown above as he enlisted in the Army of the United States. "Like father, like son" is borne out in this case where young Ross chose the Armored Force as his branch of service.

Gen. Newgarden Greets 10th Armored Recruits

The following is a message to our "recruits" by Major General Paul W. Newgarden, 10th Armored commander.

"The 10th Armored extend a hearty welcome to its "recruits." We hope you will rapidly become staunch "Armored Tigers" in spirit and accomplishment.

"Readjustment is always difficult—more so to some than others. Although you are fortunate in having joined a powerful Armored unit, and especially the 10th Armored Tigers, it may take some little time to harden physically and readjust yourselves to your new environment.

"Throughout this trying period try to keep in mind that you are preparing yourself for battle. Keep check on what you are learning and forget your personal problems in studying the whys and wherefores of weapon and battle technique. Do not hesitate to ask your noncommissioned officers and your officers the relation to battle of the things you are being taught. When the big test comes it is too late to wonder what it is all about. Learn to 'hit home runs and steal bases' now."—Paul Newgarden, Maj. Gen.

us always remember that we fight for a common cause—Democracy. The kind of democracy that sits among us this morning.

Before the speaker was presented by General Fulton, Staff Sergeant Carl F. Neu, toastmaster, introduced those at the speaker's table. Included in the group were: Major General Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School; Major General Paul W. Newgarden, commanding general of the 10th Armored division; Brigadier General George P. Howell, commandant of the Parachute School, and Brigadier General Eric Fisher Wood, commanding general of Internal Security, District No. 4. The invocation was given by Chaplain Frank M. Thompson.

In addition to interpreting current war moves, Huss, now taking basic military training at Fort McClellan, Ala., gave an interesting insight into the life and work of Hitler and the other ranking Nazi leaders.

'PUBLIC LOUSE No. 1'

"After eight years of covering Hitler I can say the same thing I thought on my first interview—Hitler is Public Louse No. 1," Huss commented, "and here is a typical example. When you meet him formally he moves forward with both hands extended and grasps your hands as though you were a long-lost friend. Then he proceeds to jerk you almost off your feet, thus upsetting your mental poise and giving him the mental advantage his inferiority complex thinks he needs."

"Mark my words when the going gets too tough for Hitler, he will try the same trick on you, perhaps a 'peace offering,' and then endeavor to throw his enemies off balance with a stab in the back."

Returning to Hitler's present predicament, Huss pointed out that Hitler's moves in the next few weeks are of vital concern to the worried Italians because a Nazi decision to pull out of the Mediterranean theater of operations will expose the Italian peninsula as a potential battle front. And yet to stave off a certain Allied second front, Hitler must certainly be debating throwing his division into Spain or Portugal in an attempt to take Gibraltar.

"Our enemy is a cruel, relentless foe, desperate and confused when being beaten, and armed to fight a total, global war, not a sectional war. Hitler is the man who had the Jap attack on Pearl Harbor planned two years ago. Even now a third of the Japanese high command is in Berlin and as many German staff officers are in the Pacific theater directing operations against the United States.

"He has focused his whole, small-minded hatred on those stupid, idiotic Yankees' who he blames for spoiling his blitz against the world and against whom he has sworn to bring some devastation, suffering and blood-letting before he is defeated.

WILL USE GAS

"Hitler has not used poison gas as yet because of any humanitarian instincts, but because he fears retaliation at present and fears its effect on the German people. But I have seen factories working day and night turning out a new and deadly poison gas and I know Hitler will use it when the time comes.

"Hitler is slowly but surely going on the defensive because at last he is being forced to fight the Allies' war and not dictate the first moves himself. But do not underestimate he or his army—it is a highly mobilized fighting machine, equipped with everything, and taught that now it is a fight for survival of the German people.

The Fuehrer today, however, is not what he was two years ago and the 'proof of the pudding' is North Africa, where those same Yankees are rapidly upsetting his applecart," Huss concluded.

Other guests introduced were Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., post adjutant and chairman of the breakfast committee; Harold Blach, Birmingham, Ala., business man and originator of the bond breakfast plan; members of the committee, and the Bond-O-Bears, a group of young women who sold bonds for the breakfast.

Musical selections were played by the 29th Infantry orchestra and Pvt. Rawn Spearman, tenor of the Reception Center, sang two numbers.

Anti-Tank Men Lead a Lonely Existence—Much Work, No Play

Their Job Has Many Compensations So They Remain Cheerful Lot

The Regimental Antitank Co., 124th Infantry has come through many trials and tribulations since its formation in Jacksonville Florida, Nov. 20, 1940. Starting out from scratch with a handful of borrowed men, the organization has pulled itself up by its bootstraps until today it is very favorably known to The Infantry School. Only the past week the A. T. Company received a mass commendation from the Mortar-Antitank Group of T.I.S.

Starting out as the step-child of the regiment and armed with stove pipe and old tires, the first days of A.T. on the Louisiana maneuvers were ones of constant embarrassment. Many fist fights ensued between Antitankers and members of other units of the 124th when invidious comparisons were made between the old established companies and the young upstart.

LONELY INDIVIDUAL

The Antitank man is a lonely individual. In maneuvers, he and the few buddies of his gun squad, are dropped off in the wilderness and told to shift for themselves. He knows that he must stuck by his gun whatever happens. He also knows that in actual combat he is practically defenseless against well-trained Infantry, and that his one mission is to stop the tanks until he and his gun are over-run. He accepts this responsibility with cheerfulness and with confidence.

On garrison duty the A.T.s have much the same lonely life. He is out in the rain and cold, shuttling his guns, long before most problems start. He returns late in the evening, cleans his guns, washes his truck, and if he is lucky—has from 8:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. to launder his fatigues and write letters home. He is asleep before Taps are blown, unless he has been gigged for a dirty rifle or stung for a tour of K.P. Nor are the Non-coms or so-called "company overhead" spared. It is by no means uncommon to see the top and platoon sergeants serving the guns, while the second cook and supply sergeant pass the ammunition.

Such a Spartan regime is not conducive to much extra-curricular activity within the regiment. The antitankers are not exactly anti-social but they are limited as to leisure time. They live by an "Antitank Week" which comprises eight days.

DEMONSTRATIONS

Since the arrival of the 124th Infantry at Fort Benning the tasks of the A.T. have grown with their ability and experience. They are constantly engaged in demonstrations before officers and officer candidates in the world's largest infantry school. Personnel act as assistant instructors in teaching the nomenclature, mechanical functioning, care and service of the piece. Then they teach the student how to track and lay on moving targets, how to fire the sub-caliber on the 1000-inch range, and how to behave on advanced gun drill. After the preliminary training, the antitankers take their charges to the range. This assignment is the most popular one with the company, as on that day the forests resound with the spiteful bark of the guns throwing over the heavy stuff in flat, dazzling trajectories. Muslin targets are torn to pieces and the air is filled with acrid, blue, smoke, which to the true antitank man, is sweeter than the perfume on a loved one's hair.

MINE-LAYING

The mine-laying demonstration also fills the A.T. man with joy as there he can give vent to his hate of tanks by laying mines, blowing up dynamite, putting out concertina road blocks, and constructing ingenious booby-traps. His knowledge of anti-mechanized defense grows daily as this assignment grows richer in field expedients.

Still other school assignments give the men of Antitank additional experience in backing up the rifle battalions in defense and attack. In their spare time the A.T.s get in a little range practice on their own hook, or strive for the perfection in their actual combat duties.

With almost a solid year of maneuvering in Louisiana and Carolina behind them, and with another year just completed in learning the technical side of the 37 MM cannon, the Antitank Company of the 124th Infantry will prove a formidable foe. When an enemy tank commander gives the famous message "Crush the guns on the left!" he had better know what he is doing—for the slogan of the Antitank is:

"The wind blew and the snow flew
"But Antitank came through—
"And if you can't go, let me know
"Then we'll call the Medico!"

Poetry

I SEE DEATH

By Private William Jones
Reception Center

I see death!
Not as a murderer, who comes with drawn
Dagger to pierce my failing heart
But as a messenger from my Heavenly Father
Bearing my summon to the eternal home
Of rest and peace.

He comes quietly
In the still of the night
Wearing a smile of love and mercy,
And sits near my bedside;
I close my weary eyes and open them suddenly
When I feel the scorching fever leaving my brow.
I find that death has laid a cooling hand
Upon my torrid brow and is gently stroking it.

Don't weep, loved ones;
This is not an occasion for sorrow and mourning.
Can't you see the peaceful smile I am wearing?
I have just discovered real happiness;
Dry away those tears and smile with me,
All of you; I am happy.

Death comes nearer and lifts me out of myself;
I feel as if I shall fly, for a great load
Has been lifted from my shoulders.
I am carried to river of unrivaled beauty,
And laid on a bed of flowers in a ship manned by angels.
I cast my eyes to the far shore and behold
The angels sing a song of welcome, and Jesus stands at the landing
With outstretched arms to receive my soul.
All is peace.

Canada's—

One, however, participated in the Dieppe raid, and was among the few Canadian officers to return from that encounter. He is Captain Wilkins, now a student in the school.

Several have qualified as jumpers by British standards, and were in London or vicinity, during the great fire-blitz raids of the fall and winter of 1940. Colonel Bradbrooke is one of these. He said that flames were so high over London that at a distance of 25 miles the whole city appeared as one red glow. The raids were terrible. Yet, according to the colonel, the English people accepted the whole affair very philosophically. Many wouldn't use the air raid shelters, perferring to die out in the open.

BRITISH METHODS

Speaking of the British method by which he qualified, Colonel Bradbrooke told of making his first jump from a ballon, which the British use in place of the American training towers. He then described his experiences during the first jump from a plane. The method of exit differs slightly from that used by the Americans.

However, he would not consider one system of training and jumping better than the other, and said that the Canadians planned to use modifications and incorporations from both the American and British routine.

Following this same vein, the Canadian paratrooper will wear the beret of the British airborne troops, and the famed jump-boots of the American paratroopers. Above the left breast will be worn the Canadian parachute wings designed by Major H. D. Proctor, and Major R. N. Routh, members of the first parachute contigent from Canadian. This new insignia consists of a pair of white wings mounted on a background of dark green.

Several interesting angles have developed during the training of these men. Although many speak English fluently, some of the French - Canadians experience language difficulties. One of these French lads went through the whole course without being able to speak one word of English, and he qualified as a rugged paratrooper.

There is a fine espirit de corps in this 1st Canadian Parachute Battalion, and the closest cooperation exists between it and the U. S. Parachute School, under whose supervision its members are being trained.

officers and enlisted personnel" and requested interested military personnel to communicate with billeting officials immediately so that further plans can be made.

Army personnel who are interested in establishing quarters in a trailer have been asked to furnish the following information to the Post Billeting Officer at Post Headquarters; Do you have a trailer? Would you move your family into a trailer on the reservation if such a trailer camp were established? If you do not own a trailer, would you buy one to make you home on the Post?

According to tentative plans, utilities such as water, electric current and sanitation facilities will be provided by the Government at a small charge to trailer tenants. Several sites have been suggested but definite selections have not been announced yet as plans are still in a state of survey.

USO Forum To Meet Sunday

Problems of work in the prevention of juvenile delinquency, growing out of war conditions, will be considered by the U. S. O. Town Hall Forum Sunday at 2:30 p. m. at 100 Ninth street, Columbus when Corp. Jules Siegel will act as moderator.

Discussion will center around youth problems and efforts being made in America to combat possibility of the outbreak of juvenile delinquency that struck England in the earlier days of the war.

Following the meeting at 2:30 p. m. the Town Hall Forum has been invited to hold another meeting at the YWCA-USO on the subject "Women and the War." Two young ladies of the YWCA will be speakers, Corp. Morris L. Levin will present an outline after which there will be an open discussion. The public is invited to attend both meetings.

Upholstering Will Be Demonstrated At Woman's Club

Mrs. John W. Hammond will give a demonstration on upholstering furniture before the Practical Home Making group of the Woman's Club tomorrow, at 3 p. m. The meeting will be held in the ladies lounge of the Officers' Club.

Mrs. Hammond, whose hobby is the renovation of old furniture and the upholstering of new pieces, learned the hard way. "My husband, Lieutenant - Colonel Hammond, hands me the frame of a chair and tells me, 'there it is, see what you can do with it,' she says. In this way Colonel Hammond and his wife have built several wing chairs, a love seat, and a bar, and have also upholstered an old bed which had been battered by much moving. "We've had a good time doing it," Mrs. Hammond emphasizes.

PRELIMINARY MARKSMANSHIP
O. C. Jonathan B. Rintels

My back has an ache,
I quiver and shake.
I'm weak on the squeeze
And worse in the knees.
My eyes have gone dim.
I pain in each limb.
My backbone is bent*
And my torso is more so.

My ankles are twisted.
My fingers are blistered,
And my shot groups are plastered
All over the sky line.
But I stick grimly to it,
I do it and do it,
'Cause they teach me that experts
Are made on the dry line.

'Crime' Lab Is Established At Benning

A new Fort Benning "crime laboratory" where modern methods of crime-detection will be used has been established at Benning, Col. Clarence A. Will, provost marshal, announces.

Addition of the laboratory to the equipment of the provost marshal's office is the latest achievement by that department, which functions at Fort Benning much in the manner of a first-class city police department.

When work of installing the new department is completed, the military police will be able to utilize the latest developments in detection of crime through scientific methods used by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Some of the tests that experts in the laboratory will be able to perform will include restoration of invisible fingerprints, restoration of numbers on metals, tests for blood stain, preliminary ballistic examinations, handwriting examinations, typewriter identification examinations, glass fractures, casting of fingerprints, gun powder tests, secret writing tests and marijuana tests.

The establishment of the new laboratory, which will supplement the other departments such as fingerprints, photographic divisions and special investigator's section, was made possible through the authorization of the expenditure of funds necessary for the purchase of equipment. Most of the chemical solutions that will be used were furnished by the Station Hospital.

Work in the new laboratory will be under the direction of Sgt. Leonito first A. Spector, who recently graduated from the Criminal Investigation Department of the Provost Marshal General's School at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Those who will assist in the work are Sgt. W. O. Mooring and Sgt. Thomas Spraggins of the Fingerprint Bureau; Staff Sgt. Robert Templeton and Pfc. Thomas Bode of the Photographic Section as well as the enlisted men of those offices and those working in the Special Investigation Offices.

The laboratory equipment will be available to all organizations stationed at Fort Benning.

Heading the Investigating Department at the provost marshal's office is Captain William Veal, a former officer of the Georgia State Patrol. Under Captain Veal will be the new "crime laboratory" and those other previously named departments that were already functioning at the post before the establishment of the laboratory. Captain Veal is a recent graduate of the Military Police School at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia.

Troops Told To Omit Units On Checks

Merchants Asked To Cooperate In Request

Recent instructions to Fort Benning soldiers not to place their unit or organization on personal checks were reiterated Saturday by post authorities when reports were received that military personnel were encountering difficulty in cashing checks without giving unit identification in Columbus.

The co-operation of Columbus businessmen was asked by Fort Benning officials who pointed out that military personnel are under strict orders not to designate their unit or organization on personal checks.

For the information of Columbus merchants and businessmen, the orders to Fort Benning soldiers were quoted by authorities as follows:

"All persons in the military service in handling their personal funds, will immediately discontinue the use of checks which have printed thereon any reference to a particular unit or organization, and will refrain from placing after signatures as drawers or indorsers, in the handling of such funds, any unit or designation or location of such. Members of this command will comply strictly with these instructions."

Serial numbers may be given but merchants will please not ask for unit designation.

MYRTLE JOINES

Rosanne Claymore Jones of the Indorsement section is doubly happy. First off she was promoted to the desk of supervisor in the indorsement section at Headquarters, then later in the day came word from Camp Hood, Tex., home of the Tank Destroyer School that her husband, Corp. Gwynedd Jones, had been promoted to sergeant. What a day for this little girl! We are happy with her for she is one of the kind who deserves nice things and he's not bad either.

Martha Fay, secretary to Colonel Rooks of the Bakers and Cooks School, is just one of the nicest girls on this post. Works hard all day and at night does anything that comes to hand at Service Club No. 1 from grinding the organ for the rumba to keeping a radio program on the air by silencing the telephone. This may not seem much,—but just you girls come over some evening and see:

Things are in a pretty stew down at Motor Transport. The big boss is sick and they have just moved into new quarters and now here come two new girls! Labelle Meadows and Eva Morris.

Here comes the bride? Where is the Groom Why in the Book Shop at the Infantry School of course. Congratulations and best wishes to Irene Medley, and Carter H. Wolfe. Parents of both these youngsters are former Ft. Benning residents so naturally both are well ahead on good wishes. This is going to be a good old Baptist wedding. For Keeps.

Mirian Noel, down in the Rail Transportation office, has gone and written a song for somebody called "Someday." Here is the Chorus and we like it:

"When you said goodbye dear,
you left me alone
But I know you will come back
some day.
Tho I'm sad and lonely I'll always be true,
For I know that you'll come back
some day.
Each night I'll pray for you, dear,
as I sit home all alone,
With only memories of the days that we once knew.
So I'll keep on smiling and waiting for you
For I know that you'll come back
some day.
Sounds pretty good, EH? Well listen, your favorite dance band may be playing it soon.

They are Shirley Martin, Eumera Taylor, Pauline Phelps, Elizabeth Davis, Hazel Olson and last but certainly not least in importance is Myra White.

This is reall, a scooper-dooper. Did you know that Jean Pedley whose engagement was announced to Columbus and Fort Benning friends had the distinction of having her engagement first announced by the Duke of Windsor, Governor of the Bahmas. You see our little Jean used to work in the Ordnance, and are they happy over this wedding of hers to Lt. Col. Thomas Jay Hayes, III.

The entire post is glad that Nellie Mitchell, sentor hostess of service club No. 3, is back at her office once again. It seems that of a young couple, Whit and Melissa Livingstone, pioneering in New Hampshire in the days of the Revolution.

Doris Tew says about her wedding, "There's not much to tell. I just slipped off and 'dood it'." But there is really much more than that to it, for Doris is one of the sweetest girls around headquarters, and we all want to know exactly what did happen. She went to her mother's, Manchester, Ga., and was married to Lt. Edward Roberts, Jr., Company "H", 29th Infantry, formerly of Washington, Pa. They are at home to their friends at 824 Forest road, Columbus, Ga., after a short wedding trip.

"BUT SIR, I TAUGHT MORTAR AT THE RECEPTION CENTER!"

Garrison Library

Ilka Chase's amusing autobiography "Past imperfect" tops the list of most popular books in the Garrison Library during the past few weeks. Another proof that soldier readers like to laugh is evidenced by the number of requests for Ludwig Bemelmans' "I love you, I love you, I love you." Subjected to Mr. Bemelmans' humorous but keen observations this new book contains sketches and anecdotes of personal experiences during the author's recent years as a traveler and writer.

Recent collections of short stories and plays are always in demand. "The best American short stories, 1942" includes 30 stories from such writers as Eric Knight, Sally Benson, John Steinbeck, William Saroyan, and James Thurber. This famous annual anthology, following the death of its editor, Edward J. O'Brien, has been taken over by Martha Foley, joint editor of Story Magazine.

Burns Mantle's "The best plays of the season as selected by New York's distinguished dramatic critic, together with a vast amount of fascinating information about the theatre in general. The plays included are: "Angel Street," "The moon is down," "Junior miss," "In time to come," "Blithe spirit," "Letters to Lucerne," "Candle in the wind," "Jason," "Hope for a harvest," and "Uncle Harry."

Among the new novels acquired by the library LeGrand Cannon's "Look to the mountain" is a most refreshing and original pioneer story. In this unique historical novel which has no important historical figures and no great battles, the author tells the story of a young couple, Whit and Melissa Livingstone, pioneering in New Hampshire in the days of the Revolution.

The wine industry provides a unique setting for "The cup and the sword." Alice Hobart's story of a family and a business between two world wars. The patriarch Philippe Rambeau had come to California from France, and his family, intermarried with other grape growers and wine makers throughout the valley, had grown rich under his rule. Then wealth began to outweigh the traditions of good wine making, prohibition brought lawlessness and the family split, never to regain its solidarity.

Post Youngsters Organize Hoop League; 10 Teams

Any of the personnel of the Fort interested may call Major Ney at FB-3331. A trophy for the winning team in each of the age groups will be put up.

Boy Scouts Are Promoted

Promotions and assignments in Troop 11, the Boy Scout organization at Fort Benning, were announced today by Major Virgil Ney, as he named James Harding, son of Lt. Col. J. H. P. Harding as acting assistant scoutmaster.

Eagle Scout Raymond Hamilton, son of Col. Raymond Hamilton, was named division commander of the Crockett Division, with rank of Senior Patrol Leader, and Matt Withem, son of Major Matt Withem, was named commander of the Custer division with the same rank.

Four patrol leaders also were appointed. They are Harry Wilbur, son of Lt. Col. Harry S. Wilbur; Russell McCarthy, son of Lt. Col. A. M. McCarthy; Richard Meek, son of Master Sergeant Meek; and Charles C. Finnegan, son of Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan.

A leadership course now is being conducted by Major Ney for the new appointments. Demonstrations in outdoor cooking and camp craft are also being conducted each Saturday afternoon for the Scouts.

Bunks will be built at the Scout Cabin soon, he also announced, in order to enable patrols to go on overnigh: winter camping trips without leaving the reservation.

Tigers Are Heavy Bond Purchasers

Over the top in War Bond sales went the 10th Armored in their recent one-week drive which was climaxed by a Post War Bond Breakfast held Nov. 15 at the Post Gymnasium, announced Major Russell C. Hinote, division war bond officer.

The Tigers shelled out to the tune of $6,125.00. This amount does not include the $1,700.00 10th Armored officers bought in one hour from the Fort Benning Women's Club nor does it include the many bonds bought from the Bond-A-Dears.

A huge portion of the credit must go to the Third Armored Regiment and its War Bond officer, Captain Leo Gregory. The Dragons bought $3,125 worth of bonds—more than half of the entire division's sales. Co A of the Help Regiment's Maintenance Record

Keeping the trucks and other vehicles rolling in good condition is a major job for the modern "motorized infantry," and the 29th Infantry has developed repair and maintenance of its trucks to a new peak of efficiency, according to a report made by the organization today.

The Chassis group of the Infantry School Motor section conducted a checkup test on 20 of the organization's vehicles and found that not one adjustment, or correction was necessary as a result of the methods of handling the rolling stock.

An important role in the effort to maintaining a high efficiency rating for the motorized infantry is played by the welding shop at the regiment's Motor Park. Many of the 29th welders were skilled at the trade in civilian life, while others have graduated from the welders course maintained at the Motor School.

Cpl. Joe Hayes, who worked as a welder with the U. S. Steel Mill, Cleveland, is one of the men who had experience before entering the Army. Others include Pvt. Richard R. Gray, who worked at Taylor Craft Aviation, Alliance, O.; Pvt. Clarence Williamson, who worked at the Macomber Steel company, Canton, O., and Pvt. Charles Watson, employed at the Wieller Welding company.

The welders are adept in use of both electric and acetylene welding.

Three Promoted In Third S. T. R.

Promotion of three lieutenant in the Third Student Training Regiment was announced by Co R. H. Lord, commanding.

There are First Lt. George I. Knauer, to the rank of captain; Second Lt. Donald F. Cochran to first lieutenant, and Second Lt. William L. Roberts to first lieutenant.

Captain Knauer is commanding the 21st Company of the Third Student Training Regiment. Lt. Cochran is now with Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the regiment, while Lt. Roberts is a tactical officer. Lt. Cochran was a member of the advance party to Davidson Creek, British Columbia, on the Army's Alaskan highway project before receiving his appointment to the Infantry Officer Training School in April of this year.

Dragons' 1st Battalion took company honors by purchasing $225 00 worth of the bonds.

Major Eugene R. Venable, executive officer of the 2nd Battalion, 3rd Armored Regiment, topped the officers with a thousand dollar purchase.

Second to the 3rd Armored was the Maintenance Battalion with $393.75 and third was the 11th Armored Regiment with $375.00.

Ice-cold Coca-Cola is the best-liked soft drink on earth. That's because it gives millions of others just what it gives you. First, there's the extra something you expect from something that was original to start with and still is. Second, you enjoy a blend of fine flavors. They set this drink utterly apart. Then, with a quick quenching of thirst, you get an after-sense of refreshment that is mighty satisfying. There's energy in that refreshment. You know you're face-to-face with quality.

Yes, the choice of experience tells you that only Coca-Cola tastes like Coca-Cola... only Coca-Cola refreshes like Coca-Cola. Nothing ever equals the genuine... the real thing.

Wartime limits the supply of Coca-Cola. Those times when you cannot get it, remember: Coca-Cola, being first choice, sells out first. Ask for it each time. No matter how short the supply, the quality of Coca-Cola carries on.

Where you find war work, you find workers welcoming ice-cold Coca-Cola. The rest-pause it provides means more work and better work.

"Why not attack the enemy where he least expects it?" Somewhere in a Georgia pine woods on the Fort Benning Reservation, standing in a semi-circle of youthful faces, a tall young man is addressing the instructor. The Infantry School solution is being subjected to a critical inspection by an Officer Candidate. It is 10th Co., 1st S. T. R., a typical class of young Americans.

But the instructor knows that this is a successful class; the candidates are thinking for themselves. Their suggestions and criticisms are invaluable in planning instructions, in formulating principles, in actually learning how to handle adequately a tough situation. The instructional method breathes a spirit wholly American. The School solution is not an absolute, feasible though it is in most instances.

These men have a fighting spirit but they are as yet green in many phases of leadership. Interest is unflagging; the men are learning to become leaders, to use their initiative, to analyze complex problems of military science with open minds. Perhaps the skeptical candidate will leave the class resolved to work furiously in secret upon a new tactical manual which he will bequeathe to the School upon graduation.

Have you seen the candidates negotiate the precarious steeps of the Upatoi on their Commando patrol? They are learning to be stealthy, agile, and to maintain control in the face of new situations. Wherever you may go on the Fort Benning Reservation you will find Officer Candidates training seriously, thoroughly. They are to be the junior officers of the American Army. They learn unit control and coordination. The spectacular demonstration of the "Battalion in the attack" is not subtle bargaining for a Hollywood contract. The student learns to see order in all the confusion and din of modern battle.

The instructors know that combat is the ultimate test. Indeed, they feel that this open-minded spirit is most essential in junior officers whose importance on the battlefield has never been as great as it is now.

The junior officer. Here is the key man on the battlefield. No matter how brilliant the grand strategy, the action depends wholly on the small unit and its trained leader who are in real contact with the enemy. Especially in modern warfare when vital communications are prey to infiltration and pincers does the nation depend upon the self-sufficiency of the small unit and on the adaptability of its leaders cut off from the rear.

Modern history is replete with examples of this new importance. A great responsibility devolves upon the junior leader in combat. Only the superb control exercised by junior leaders in the desert permitted the British to surprise Marshal Graziani's forces at Sidi Barrani. We recall too, how the isolated small unit, acting independently, whittled away the jaws of Gen. Guderian's pincer at Smolensk until the greatest offensive in history up to that date crumbled. Well-knit small units sapped the strength of Gen. Ritter Von Leeb's columns at Rostov precipitating the first German retreat of World War II.

An obvious theatre for the small unit is mountainous and jungle terrain in which movement, control, and fields of fire are restricted. The junior officer led the bands of ballet-skirted Greek Evzones to astonishing victories over the Italian legions, driving the enemy from Yanina until Argyrokastron and capturing Koritza in Albania. It was the junior officer who led the Chetnik bands that forced a German armored column to retreat hurriedly from Kachanik Gorge.

Going down the homestretch in its last week, 10th Co. can look back with a serious consideration at the events that have gone before. There is a healthy respect for those who are molding themselves into officers to lead the modern American Army.

Finally, the men realize, perhaps for the first time, that this conflict is no pageant. There is no time out for ritual. Rather, here are stern tasks to be faced directly, efficiently. They have before them the stirring symbol of Bataan. Of grim, determined infantrymen in foxholes fighting off disease, hunger, and the relentless press of the enemy.

War Bond Drive

Over at the 31st Company, in the 2nd Student Training Regiment is a mighty proud group. They're just established a record—one that had defied all preceding O. C. classes.

For the first time in the history of The Infantry School, an Officer Candidate Class has contributed 100 per cent to the war bond drive. Last week, Lt. Hubert A. Nicholson, War Bond Officer of 31st Company, sold the last man a bond to achieve a long-sought goal. As a supplementary record, the company purchased over $2950 worth of bonds in the month of October alone. Chalk up another marker for top score among O. C. classes.

Statistically, the mark is going to be a difficult one to shatter, but that's not the vital point in a war bond drive among soldiers. More important is the reasoning behind such mass purchasing.

Why do so many soldiers contribute so wholeheartedly?

Primarily, because it is a strong belief in the foundations on which our government is built; because there is a desire to preserve "our way of life"; because soldiers have certain ideals for which they intend to fight.

Some might say—"Yes, but we're doing enough already, aren't we? We've been taken out of civilian life, away from our homes and jobs and brought into the army. Let, the folks back home take care of war bonds."

Unhappily, this war can't be won by following such reasoning. Because every soldier will shortly be risking his life in combat, is no proof that they belong to a divine circle. Repeatedly, soldiers have heard the slogan—"An all-out war." Yes, this is an "all-out war" and the job is not complete just because civilians have become soldiers. Soldiers—more than civilians—can understand and foresee the task ahead. They've got to work harder at it than they do. And by contributing their services to the armed forces plus the spirit and backing to buy more bonds and build more planes, they're achieving this objective.

Again, men in service must look ahead to the time when they will be officers in combat units. Again, part of every soldier's job is to inject a fighting spirit into new recruits only a few days out of civilian life. They'll be selling these men on the bond idea. To sell them, these "old" soldiers must first sell themselves. The men of 31st Company have already taken this first step forward.

According to both Capt. Maxwell Snead, Commanding Officer of the company, and Lt. Nicholson, the bond sale will be pushed all during the month of November, in an attempt to better last month's grand total.

The men of 31st Company intend to maintain their leadership. It's a challenge to all other O. C. classes on the Fort, to see if they can beat their record!

So You Want

The Infantry School at Fort Benning writes its highest honors upon its O. C. S. Graduates, the gold bars of a Second Lieutenant; REWARD for individual progress, SYMBOL of character, leadership and initiative, CONFIDENCE in your ability to fulfill great missions.

IF you can wear your bars a long, long time and never let them wear you; and keep your sense of duty and loyalty above that of the almighty dollar; and not court popularity with vulgarity; and brush shoulders with stars and eagles and still be proud of your insignia . . .

IF you can remember that your real job is just beginning, and that it is only your preparation for it that you have completed . . .

THEN remembering the long hot hours in the bleachers, the SCHOOL SOLUTION, the motto of your ARMY ALMA MATER, FOLLOW ME, and above all remembering that you too were once a private and are now JUST a shavetail, then, friend, you can be a shavetail.

A Soldier's Prayer

Some people like Armistice Day
Because there are flags so bright and gay.
And others like Armistice Day
Because that's the day they feast and play.
But some old mothers love Armistice Day
Because that was the end of the war so dark and gray
When the World laid down her arms
And peace once more took its different forms.

At last, they thought, the world was free
Of hate and blood and tyranny.
They thought at last the war would cease
And we would have a lasting peace.

But today the world's at it again
Fighting with every gun, shell and man
And now more mothers hope and pray
That there will be another Armistice Day.

It's Tough, But Fun

Dear Family:

General Sherman was a piker! His hike was an outing compared to an O. C.'s course of instruction throughout the Georgia countryside. One Ride on the miniature edition of the Chattanooga Choo-Choo, and you're ready for a black face part in a minstrel.

A modern private who thinks he knows the weapons of this country, can come to Ft. Benning and find out the only thing that is still muzzle loading and breech firing is a chicken.

They really work fast here, too. While on the firing line the other day someone said, "Load," over the speaker and the next thing I knew a Sergeant screamed, "Cease Firing," and jerked the rifle out of my hands like a Finance Company repossessor. Of course, we were so far down the line we were getting our instructions by Carrier Pigeon. Then we started "Dry -Running.". (That's the same as drinking G. I. 3.2 Beer)

By the way, have you ever tried to execute Right Shoulder Arms with a rifle in one hand and a large manila folder in the other? I did. I put the manila folder diagonally across the body, stuck the rifle between my legs, tore the manila cover off the folder, went about ten paces forward like a man struggling through the obstacle course, and hit old Terra Firma in a very Unmilitary manner. So I'm gigged (meaning part payment of a one-way ticket home).

After a strenuous week I thought I'd go to town and see some life. What an optimist! Someone hollered "All-Aboard" and 4000 men went to the Infirmary in the A. M. Anyway, riding that bus is the only way I know of, getting my clothes pressed for 15c.

Hopefully yours,
Your Son.

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

For nearly a year our life has been filled with drives and "can't you find time to give an hour—" Each one of these requests has been for vital and serious effort on our part. Most of the women of Fort Benning have assumed those obligations with cheerfulness and complete disregard that there are limitations of hours in the day and physical strength.

I therefore, propose a new idea for the women. A "Let's All Have a Nervous Breakdown Week." An official sponsor should be chosen for the drive. My suggestion is Colonel Edward A. Noyes, guardian of our health and well being. Of course, he'd have to do a better job than he does of hiding that twinkle in his eye. His sense of humor is apt to find the situation too apropos and that would give all the husbands a chance for a belated laugh at our expense.

After proper publicity and pictures showing him shaking hands with the deeply sincere workers and heads of our women's activities the week would be opened officially. The first step would be to disconnect all telephones in the quarters. The woman who is to enjoy the breakdown will be put in a room that can be locked away from the rest of the house. The bed should be made up with the household's finest guests linens. The prettiest nightgowns should be taken out of the drawer marked "save for special occasions." A tall stack of the newest magazines, preferrably Vogue, Harper's Bazaar and House and Garden should be placed beside the seasons raciest modern novels.

A nearby table should be loaded with all manner of creams, lotions and powders. Little pamphlets telling how to pat and massage away tired lines, deep circles under the eye, correcting dry skin or oily skin, should rest alongside the jars and bottles. Lipsticks pots of rouge, eye shadow and bottles of slaughterhouse red fingernail polish should complete the equipment for ventures into the fresh grooming of women before the day of hourly demands.

Before entering the sanctuary a wreath will be solemnly hung on the door. This will be an effective measure against the door bell. All the Bettys and Johns that figured on a bed for a few days while they visited Fort Benning will be shocked and discouraged. They will have to rent a hotel room. The conscience will squirm a bit, for Betty and John were good friends at Fort Sheridan. Vindication of action will be restored at the remembrance of the many friends and stations that turned quarters into "Ye Old Wayside Inn" of Fort Benning. The only difference between quarters and a regular Inn was a staff of well trained hotel employees. The Fort Benning hospitality is generally dispensed by a single woman who can yank sheets off the bed and put fresh ones on if the demand for fresh linen doesn't exceed the ability of the Quartermaster laundry to return a clean supply.

A great sight will go up around the post as the women settles in the quiet of their room. The family will be distracted. They will live on fried eggs, peanut butter and solve their own problems. Mother will be no longer be the oiler of the household wheels. The Red Cross Work room will be closed. Patients in the hospital will do without the ministrations of the Grey Ladies. The Woman's Club will feature no brilliant program or even warm a seat in the Officer's Club. There will be no lines at the Post Exchange Grocery and the Commissary.

One blissfull week of quiet and peace will transform the worn and jittery nerves. Emerging from the retreat will be a new woman. No longer will there be black circles deep enough to jump through. The skin will be fresh and dewy. The disposition will be calm and pleasant. A hearty wholesome laugh will come readily. The women of Fort Benning will be born anew through the "Let's Have a Nervous Breakdown Week." They can then start all over again to acquire tired lines and greying hair when they assume their obligations.

G. I. Summary Of World N s

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

Democracy was on the march this week, and the waters of the Pacific and sands of the North African desert ran red with Axis blood.

In the Pacific, a battered and beaten huge Japanese task force was limping back to bases after meeting an outnumbered American naval unit that struck in the dead of night. After the battle, the Japs counted 23 battleships, cruisers and transports sunk and upwards of 40,000 soldiers and sailors dead in the greatest naval victory since the Battle of Jutland in World War I.

The Americans counted two light cruisers and five destroyers sent to the bottom and a major Jap attack on the Marines and Army men on Guadalcanal nipped in the bud.

Pressing an advantage won by minutely-timed and perfectly executed invasions of North African seaports, American and British troops were racing across the desert sands toward Tunisia and a union with the conquering British Eighth Army still chasing Rommel's fleeing Germans and Italians into Libya.

Already the American, British and French armored units were fighting together and the battle for North Africa was rapidly reaching a showdown as the Germans frantically reinforced their few remaining sea bases by carrier-plane and the United Nations consolidated their newly-won gains in North Africa and prepared for the next offensive.

Reported in Munich to face Hitler and explain the debacle of the Africa Corps was Marshal Erwin Rommel, whose crack troops are beaten, disorganized and on the run.

Worried Italians waited for Hitler's decision whether to withdraw from the Mediterranean battle fronts or fight the Allied Nations, perhaps through an invasion of Spain and Portugal. Withdrawal from Africa and the Mediterranean would leave Italy as a potential battle-front and the concerned Italians, already harassed constantly by large scale Allied bombing attacks on Genoa and other key cities, were resting squarely "on the spot."

Americans knew that the successful operations in Africa and the Pacific, while cheering and encouraging for the first time in many months, was by no means the end of the war. As Winston Churchill, England's prime minister, put it:

"It is not the beginning of the Country Editor in Khaki

The United Nations cause is safe: by the time this is printed I will be a second lieutenant. Praise the Lord and pass me my commission!

(Note to the editor: If something happens between the present writing and November 19, I'll let you know, and you can run this column with a black border around it.)

We had our company "Foundation Day" last week—a harrowing experience. On that day, the names of those not making the grade became known, and we all felt like a bunch of nice, fat turkeys on the day before Thanksgiving!

After the ax fell, the victims dropped out of ranks, and the survivors went on to class. When we returned at noon, they had been moved out, bag and baggage, and there were yawning empty spaces where the bunks had been.

And the thrill of having survived was offset by the regret at seeing some of our classmates and friends leaving without their commissions, after having put in 11 pretty tough weeks. The barracks felt like a morgue.

This has been a mighty interesting and instructive course, and on the whole, really enjoyable, too, despite the toil and sweat and fears.

Memories of these action packed three months include: strange names and strange faces gradually evolving into distinct personalities and warm friends; map reading and weapons; tactics and obstacle courses; G-T's and that unpleasant duty of rating our barracks mates; hours spent sitting on hard bleachers under a sweltering sun; ten-minute breaks that last four minutes; Friday night rifle cleaning and "gigs" at Saturday morning inspections; voice and command exercises and double-timing; Saturday night trips to Columbus; . . . and through it all, running the undercurrent of gnawing doubt about being able successfully to complete the course.

But just because we've been exposed to 90 days of intense military instruction, none of us has illusions about being a finished officer. The thousands of facts, figures, techniques and methods thrown at us with such rapidity naturally aren't all completely assimilated.

However, I'm sure I'm a better soldier than I was three months ago, and the training received here has provided a good foundation upon which to build and develop. Expert instruction, strict discipline and the opportunity to observe how good officers get what they want from their men should stand us in good stead when we have units of our own with which to work.

Of course, I don't know yet where I go from here. I'm hoping for a few days leave—to break in those new bars at home—and am also anxious to know what my first assignment will be and what kind of an officer I'll really make.

I suppose I'll merely feel like a "gold-plated corporal" for a while. After all, a guy doesn't become an officer and a gentleman by an Act of Congress alone. Despite the hard work and studying we've done the past few months, we all realize that we really don't start earning our commissions until after we get them. Actually, we earn them: not from the Infantry School, but from the officers under whom we will serve, and from the men we will lead.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last of a series of articles by Cpl. Blumenfeld which have been published on the editorial page of the BAYONET for the past several weeks. In them the writer has given his impressions of the officer candidate course from the trainee's point of view. We are happy that he is successfully completing the course sorry that this is his final contribution.

FAMOUS FAREWELLS

Go ahead and pull it. It ain't loaded.

Kill Or Be Killed Urged By McNair

In a recent address, Lt. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, commander of American ground forces, declared that in this war "we must hate with every fiber of our being. We must lust for battle; our object in life must be to kill; we must scheme and plan night and day to kill."

Gen. McNair's declaration will probably sound blood-thirsty to many of our people who have not recovered from a bad case of the pacifism which almost got us all into a pretty bad plight. We are fighting a heartless, cruel enemy in both the Germans and the Japs. Their Nazi philosophy is that the individual means nothing; the state is all; human life is cheap, and they feel no pangs of conscience in killing any living human being, regardless of age or sex.

A recent "BAYONET" editorial "Pretty Damned Mad" anticipated the General's words, and again we repeat that it is time for all of us to get pretty damned, fighting, killing mad, and the sooner we do, the sooner we will bring about the "inevitable victory" President Roosevelt spoke of in his Armistice Day address.

Chaplain's Corner

By CHAP. ARCHIE CARRAWAY

The story of the religious activities of the Twenty-fourth General Hospital has touches of the romantic because of its growth and interesting development. The Twenty-fourth has received much publicity during the last few weeks because of its outstanding personnel and many achievements. And now comes an account of the religious life and activities of the organization, which equals, it is thought, other areas of activity in accomplishments. This growth and achievement is due to the splendid co-operation of the Commanding Officer, and personnel of officers, nurses, and enlisted men.

On July 16th, when the Medical Officers reported for active duty and basic training, the writer, the Protestant Chaplain, arrived with some 40 other officers and found a considerable group of enlisted men already in camp, the enlisted men having been transferred from the 53rd General Hospital. Facilities and equipment of all kind were rather limited. Headquarters was located in a tent. However, plans were at once put in process of execution for improvement and during these four months the area occupied by the Twenty-fourth has experienced remarkable change and improvement.

The Chaplain was assigned a tent about eight feet square, partially open to the weather, for his office. A few days later the Catholic Chaplain reported for duty and the two chaplains occupied this tent jointly. Soon two assistants were selected making four who used this eight foot tent as an office. It was but a short while until better office facilities were provided. During these four months the Chaplain's office has been moved four times. At present the office occupied by the two chaplains and their assistants is on the second floor of a two story building near Headquarters of the organization. In this general office are private offices for each Chaplain, a large central room for the assistants, and a large room, which is used for lectures, committees, and meetings of special groups for instruction.

Religious Services were at first conducted out in the open, in a canopy of trees with benches, without backs, for pews. Each Sunday at both Catholic and Protestant Services, large groups of both officers and enlisted men assembled and occupied these crude pews in their respective worship services. The Commanding Officer was also a regular occupant of these rather uncomfortable pews. The place for Religious Services has also experienced several changes, having been moved three times. Now an officers' mess hall (not used for mess) is being used as a Chapel. On Sunday, at the sound of the bugle, the enlisted men and officers find their way to the mess hall and worship God, in this improvised Chapel.

SEVERAL SERVICES

Father F. C. Waterstrat, formerly of Holy Trinity Parish, Webster, N. Y., is the Catholic Chaplain, and is carrying on a truly comprehensive and efficient Religious Program. Mass is offered in the 24th area each morning at 6:30 a. m. Confessions are heard at stated periods throughout the week. Mass is celebrated on Sunday morning at 10:30 with an unusually large portion of the Catholic enlisted men and officers in attendance. On Tuesday and Thursday evenings, religious discussion groups are held in the Chaplain's lecture hall. Each Monday evening, the Chaplain conducts a Novena in honor of St. Jude for the Catholic Nurses of the 24th at the Station Hospital.

The Protestant Chaplain who hails from Dumas, Arkansas, conducts a Religious Service each Sunday at 8:30 a. m. with a fine attendance of enlisted men, officers, and nurses. Motor transportation is furnished the nurses from the Station Hospital to the 24th area for this worship service. A Bible Study Hour is conducted at 10:45 a. m. in the Chaplain's Office. At 7 p. m. each Sunday a religious "Sing-song" and forum hour is held. On Monday evenings in the Nurses' Recreation Hall, the Chaplain meets the Protestant Nurses for a service. This service is varied, sometimes a devotional hour and then at times a book review or other type of program. A group of Protestant enlisted men have voluntarily organized a Bible hour which meets on Tuesday evening. Weekly printed bulletins are distributed regularly by the Protestant group.

Regular office hours are maintained by both chaplains and they are finding that the men are taking advantage of these hours for conferences and fellowship with their religious leaders. No doubt these contacts have proven helpful and interesting to both the men and to the respective chaplains. Subjects that have been discussed in these conferences pertain to finances, love affairs, personal problems and religious life.

The leader of the religious groups of the 24th feel that much progress has been made and that surely a history of the organization cannot be compiled without taking into account the activities in the religious area. The fellowship between the two chaplains is of the finest type and co-operation is the key word of the progress that has been made throughout the organization.

President Roosevelt ordered the lend-lease administration to make available as soon as possible food, clothing and weapons of war to the armed forces and the citizens of the areas in North Africa occupied by U. S. troops.

"No one will go hungry or without other means of livelihood in any territory occupied by the United Nations," the President said, "if it is humanly within our power to make necessary supplies available to them. Weapons also will be supplied to the people of these territories to hasten the defeat of our common enemies."

The President described the African campaign as a smaller second front launched in lieu of a big-scale offensive against the Axis forces across the English Channel. He said that during Prime Minister Churchill's visit to Washington in June, it was decided a major offensive across the channel could not have been started until next year at the earliest. The number of men necessary and points of attack had been determined and the approximate date was set by the end of August.

The President has signed legislation lowering the draft age to 18 years. At the time he signed the bill, he announced a committee of educators, working with the War and Navy Departments, would make a study of steps "to enable the young men whose education has been interrupted to resume their schooling and afford equal opportunity for the training and education of other young men of ability after their services to the armed forces has come to an end."

The Office of Defense Transportation postponed its mileage rationing program for commercial vehicles from Nov. 15 to Dec. 1 after the Office of Price Administration postponed its nationwied gasoline rationing program for passenger cars from Nov. 22 to Dec. 1. The OPA also postponed its fuel oil rationing starting date from Nov. 1 to Nov. 23.

Miss Randall To Leave Benning As Club Hostess

Resigns to Accept Job in Washington

By
CORP. THOMAS R. MULVIHILL
29TH INFANTRY

Miss Ivy Randall, senior hostess at Service Club 1 for more than a year, has resigned and will leave this weak to assume a new position in Washington, D. C.

In announcing her resignation, Miss Randall said she was leaving Fort Benning to accept a position in the War Department Building in Washington as associate counselor in the employee relation section of the Chief of Engineer's Office. Her work will be to plan the recreational activities of government employes.

"Ivy," as she was known to hundreds of Fort Benning soldiers, came to Fort Benning in November, 1941, and after a few weeks of services in the Harmony Church area Service Club, she was transferred to the main post and placed in charge of recreational work for Service Club 1.

During her work on the post proper, Miss Randall was responsible for several innovations in Service Club 1, including a recreational program that featured a different entertainment or social event every night in the week. She played a part in the Fort Benning Mother's Day celebration last spring and was active in several other post projects.

In going to Washington to work, Miss Randall will be returning to the city where she has spent most of her life. Born at Fort Williams at Portland, Me., she went with her parents to Washington at an early age and was educated in elementary schools there. Miss Randall graduated from the University of Wisconsin and took postgraduate work at George Washington University in Washington.

Long interested in dramatics and art, Miss Randall studied dancing in New York at the same time that Eleanor Powell, Hollywood dancing star, was enrolled. Later Miss Randall went on a tour with the Gay Foster Girls and after that opened her own dancing school in Washington. She closed her school to become an Army hostess in November, 1941.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

It was a family tradition that on every birthday Ermono Pietrieni's mother baked a cake with green icing for him. That was in civilian life Then came war and the Army.

Another birthday rolled around for Ermono, now Private First Class, and on duty at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. For the first time in his life he'd have to forego the green iced cake, he thought. But then this is war and of course he didn't mind.

Came His birthday and regular Army routine. Then noon mess call As Priavte Pietrieni marced into the mess hall and sat down a large cake with green icing was placed before him. His buddies sang, "Happy Birthday."

The Red Cross at Fort Bragg had the cake baked after Private Pietrieni's mother sent the money for a cake—with green icing.

J. Heifetz Is Booster Of Americanism in Arts

Famed Violinist Plays In H. C. Area Nov. 22

Jascha Heifetz, famed Russian violinist, who plays here on Sunday, November 22, at the Fort Benning Sports Arena at 8 p. m. in the Harmony Church area, has been a booster of Americanism in the arts for a long time.

A little over a year ago Gail T. Kubik, a young American composer, received a $1,000 check offered by the violinist for the best new Violin Concerto submitted in a contest held by Carl Fischer, the publishers of Heifetz's own violin transcriptions.

About the time Heifetz and a committee of experts announced the result of a contest he sponsored among American violin-makers. From 36 cities came more than 100 violins, the work of professionals and hobbyists. The prize-winning fiddle, made by Michael Yurkevitch of New York, was a copy of a 1747 Guadagnini. In announcing te winner Heifetz said: "I want to prove that it is not necessary for a young violinist to own a Stradivarius or a Guarnerius to play well. American violins speak—and sound—for themselves. There are first-class violin-makers right here in our own country."

This contest was the successful aftermath of an experiment Heifetz had made some years before with the physics department of Harvard University in an effort to prove the relative values of the original handmade Strads and other great violins with those produced today by modern and industrial methods. At the end of the exhaustive tests, Heifetz reported that a modern $200 fiddle produced tones whose quality compared favorably with that of a violin made by one of the best Italian craftsmen. To Heifetz this was a heartening discovery. He felt that it had been well worth his while to co-operate in the tests, for the results helped remove another mental obstacle from violin students who often believe that their careers are crippled by the quality of their instruments.

For many years Heifetz has been digging into American folk music and transcribing for the violin. He is a great believer in the American tradition and the American composer. Such names as George Gershwin and Robert Russell Bennett, composers of authenically American music, figure regularly on his concert program.

Post Radio Show Seeks New Talent

If you can sing, play the piano, or any other instrument, or if you recite—here's a chance to "air" your talent.

Talent is needed for the "Fort Benning on the Air" radio program that goes out every week day, Monday through Friday, at 6 p. m. over station WRBL.

It's a fine chance to keep up your playing or singing, gives you a chance for radio training and gets your organization some publicity too.

tell about the things that I did last week.

We'll open the week with last Thursday . . . That was the day that I went over to the Salvation Army Club in Phenix City . . . They have the best apple pie I have tasted since I came south of the Mason Dixon line . . . And you should see the size of a ten-cent cut . . . When it was first served to me I thought that they had mistaken my order and given me the whole pie . . . The club itself is a new and quiet place. The radio plays but very low and no one seems to raise his voice above a whisper when quiet is required, but from what I hear everyone really seems to have a good time there at all times.

Friday night I went to the show and afterwards dropped into the Army and Navy YMCA-USO for some informal games . . . played ping-pong with the "little woman" and when she decided to listen to the recordings of the classics I went down stairs and played pool . . . Now that pool-room in the basement is really a swell place . . . The ceilings were made out of that fabric that deadens sound but it had to be changed due to the fact that some of the players were poking their cue sticks through the fabric . . . Of course this was unintentional but you know how excited some people get when playing a good game.

As I said before I spent Saturday in the Salvation Army Club in Columbus and played all my old favorite records. This time I was the boss and we played such numbers as "Taps 'till Reville" and "Star Dust" . . . Then Bill Garrick got on the piano and Mell Talbott sang all of the new songs . . . Sunday evening was spent at the same club doing the same things except that we tried out some of the new small games they have there.

It seems that by Monday I was starting to get into a rut, so for a change I went to a USO Club. . . . This time I went back to the Army and Navy Y for some folk and square dancing . . . Boy when that band hit "Turkey in the Straw" my feet just wouldn't stay still . . . But that wasn't all. I went out on the patio and did some fine and fancy rug cutting but not on a rug . . . No sir, I was on skates because as you all know, Monday is skating night at this club.

Tuesday I was on night duty at Post Headquarters so I spent the time reading the USO Bulletin.

Wednesday, being a previous member of the 1st Division, I went to the Reunion that was held at the 9th St. USO . . . And it was well worth it . . . I ran into some of my old buddies that I never dreamed were at Fort Benning . . . Movies of the old outfit, in action in the Carolina Maneuvers of '41 were shown and there were plenty of stories to go with the entertainment and refreshments . . . And that is a typical week at the USO in and around Columbus.

Plain Bread Dressed Up As Tasty Melba 'Toast' for Troops of 24th Hospital

PVT. LOUIS E. STEVENS

Here's a toast to your health from the 24th General Hospital!!

It's Melba Toast and Zweiback, made from plain ordinary rolls, bread, and apple butter! In fact, the story of this new "toast" begins when there was an abundance of these items:

Once upon a time the soldiers at the 24th General Hospital at Fort Benning, were getting a bit fed up on apple butter and white bread. Oh, these items were good, but the men just wanted something different. But, alas, there was a goodly supply of apple butter and white bread and ona of Mess Officer Lt. Clifford E. Clinton's mottos is "No Waste."

Well, what to do with leftover bread has always been a dire problem which faces Army messes. The bread could be used as croutons for soups, in puddings, and as plain bread crumbs. Finally, the idea was conceived to make Melba toast and rich, crunchy Zweiback out of these leftovers, thus adding to the bread's versatility and adding another indispensable way of using these leftovers in producing satisfaction and economy a la Toast!

The Melba idea was a G. I. lulu. The Zweiback also disappeared ten minutes after it was placed on the tables. Men munched, blinked their eyes, couldn't figure out what rare delicacies they were eating—to this day, don't know it's just their old friends, apple butter and leftover bread!

We're passing these recipes on to you. Here's how to "glamorize" a humble piece of Toast the "Melba" way:

Take the thinly sliced bread and place it in a moderate oven on sheet pans. Keep turning 'till they are browned thoroughly. Now, a process called "Dextronizing" takes place, as the starch in the bread is slowly changed to sugar, making the toast even more delectable! The result is a mouth-watering rarity called Melba Toast.

Zweiback, even more delicious because of the rich, pure apple butter that goes on top of it, can be made out of any old bread or rolls that can be found in the bread bin . . . heels and all.

The Zweiback goes through the same process of glorification as the Melba, inasmuch as both are dextronized. Then, hungry reader, the treat is spread with a moist mixture of apple butter, sugar and salted butter, and set into the oven till it glazes into the toast. The result is something that has to be tasted instead of described!

The 24th General Hospital hopes that these two recipies will be helpful in other Army messes, not only as a means of economy, but for the enjoyment and satisfaction of the men, and is heartily anxious to learn of other food-saving production or serving ideas and invite those of the mess personnel or citizens to sub, it their suggestions so that all might benefit.

All-American Joe Routt of Texas Aggies Is Now an Officer Student at Infantry School

Great Line Star Was Member of Western All-Army Eleven

If fighting ever brings First Lt. Joseph E. Routt, student officer of an Advance Class at The Infantry School into hand-to-hand contact with the enemy, said enemy will likely feel extremely unhappy. For 27-year-old Lt. Routt, who is a member of the Third Company of the First Student Training Regiment, has spent the better part of the last seven years getting tough young opponents off balance and taking them off their feet.

He is, in fact, none other than Joe Routt, Texas A. & M. All-American football star of 1936 and 1937, who happens to be a college wrestling and boxing champ, a prize fighter, a two-time All-American football player, a member of the All-West football team of 1938, of the college All-Star team of the same summer, of the All-Army Western team of this last summer, and a man who figures he has had in the last seven years at least 2,000 such man-to-man encounters of the type in which either he or his adversary violently left his feet—and had his breath completely removed, to boot.

"If I had my choice of weapons in an individual fight," says Lt. Routt, who only joined the Advance Class the first of the month, "I'd pick bayonet and bare hands. After several years filled with almost daily practice at making smashing lunges at other people and bashing their heads in, you get so you feel pretty confident about your ability along those lines."

STARTS EARLY

And after talking with him, you'd agree. Six feet two inches of bone, muscle, and perfect condition are mighty convincing persuaders.

Lt. Routt, who just a month or so ago could best be described as 205 lbs. of commissioned officer in a football uniform, has been playing with experts, against experts, and under experts for over 12 years. Starting at age 14 in his home town high school at Houston, Tex., he worked his way easily toward heavier weights both in football and boxing. After high school and a two year interlude in junior college he found himself in 1935 on the Texas A & M first string football team. At a sideline at that same time he was also his school's boxing and wrestling champ.

Playing the position of running guard under the expert tutelage of his head coach, Homer Norton, Lt. Routt during this period went up against such teams as Southern Methodist and Texas. He tackled and blocked such stellar performers as Isbell of Purdue and Whizzer White of Colorado.

In the course of his far-flung football itinerary Lt. Routt played directly under such well-known coaches as Matty Bell, Biff Jones, Babe Hollingsberry, Andy Kerr, Bo McMillan, Major Wallace Wade, Cliff Battles, and Rae Crowthers. Of them all though he still favors his own home team coach Homer Norton.

NORTON TOPS

"As far as I'm concerned, he's tops. Some of the others though were wonderful leaders and great teachers. Each had his own mannerisms and ways of instilling morale. There was Biff Jones, nicknamed tea and cookies because he would serve them after a game. And Bo McMillan, who would give each of his boys a big red apple after a good practice."

Lt. Routt, who is only now catching up with the tackle-back schedule for the Battalion Commander and Staff Officers Course, has just finished spending most of the summer playing football for the army as a first string guard on the All-Army Western team. After coming on duty the first of the year and spending the first four months as a company commander at the Camp Wolters Replacement Center, he entered the Basic Course at Fort Benning. After two months of this his past caught back to him—he was ordered to join the All-Army team at Camp Cook, Calif., to play in a series of Army benefit games.

While on this duty Lieut. Routt followed a far-flung itinerary and filled the role of a genuine ironman. To begin with, the team, which consisted of about 45 players, all-stars, commenced its initial practice only two weeks before the first game. Many of the players had not played for two or more years. Lt. Routt had not played for over four and the metamorphasis was rather painful. "Even so," he says, "it would not have been so bad were it not for the constant travel. We played an average of once every three days—for a total of five games. And the smallest hop we ever made was 600 miles. The average was over 100 miles and the longest hop was 1700, between Los Angeles and Denver."

The travel could not have been too debilitating, however, for the Western team played the Washington Redskins, Detroit Lions, Chicago Cardinals, New York Giants, and the Green Bay Packers—and did a good job against all of them.

NOMADIC

"Sometimes," Lt. Routt added, "we were on the train within 10 minutes after the final gun, and once I even had to take my after-game shower on the train. Longest we ever dallied in one place after finishing a game was one hour."

Of all the outstanding players he ever played with or against, Lt. Routt says the two that stick out in his mind are teammate Kimbrough and Cecil Isbell of Purdue. "Kimbrough was just a giant of a man and could do anything with his body," he said. "It was a pleasure just to watch him run. And Isbell—well, like Kimbrough, he too was tops in each of his triple threats, but his passing was really uncanny. Once in the East-West game I had pulled out of line to run interference for a receiver who, unbeknown to me, tripped and fell. The next thing I knew the ball, thrown by Isbell about 50 yards away, hit me square in the back of my skull."

During his playing time in the last seven years, Lt. Routt has seen almost all the present-day outstanding players. Aside from Isbell, whom he opposed when playing the Green Bay Packers, other opponents Lt. Routt noted particularly were Don Hutson, also with the Packers, and Sammy Baugh and Dick Todd, both of the Washington Redskins. "When you play head to head in a game with or against a man, you see lots of things the sports writers and All-American pick-ers miss," says he. "One player who received practically no mention other than one or two second team honors was Furgeson of Florida. Yet I consider him every bit as good as the best."

After playing in the All-Star game in Chicago in 1938, Lt. Routt quit football until this summer. During the interim he was not only cattleman and rancher on his father's ranch in Texas but also a prizefighter. He fought in six bouts, winning all by OKs including one over the Golden Gloves heavyweight champ of 1938.

Military benefits of the All-Army Western Team's barnstorming were unique. The five games played netted several thousand dollars, all of which went to Army Emergency Relief. And this is exclusive of the consequent bond sales which soared in each city visited, as a result of an intriguing autograph-lottery procedure of sales promotion. This system obtained its effectiveness by an almost irresistible combination appeal to both gambler's instinct and autograph collector's fanaticism. It offered prospective customers a certain number of chances on an autographed football for each bond purchased. These balls were autographed by all members of each team. Three to five balls went this way in each city visited.

BY SGT. CARL NEU

For the first time since the conference race started several weeks ago, one of the clubs has definitely stepped out in front and now seems destined to rule the roost the rest of the way. It is, of course, the scrappy crew of the 124th Gators tutored by Capt. Red Milton, and it will surely be the upset of the year if the orange and blue fails to take the laurels.

There are many reasons why the Gators now hold first place and appear destined to take the flag. As this corner sees it, the 124th is deeper in manpower, trained to a better peak in conditioning, and boasts more outstanding individual talent. With such advantages over the remaining five clubs in the loop, the Gators are logical champs.

Each of the other clubs was potentially powerful and might have challenged the Gators more than they have to date. But "might haves" don't count on the gridiron, and the Gators have played spirited, aggressive ball all the way, and justly deserved all three or their loop wins.

In the last few weeks, also, the Miltonmen have caught the fans' eyes, and they are at present probably the most popular post eleven with their spectacular wide open play and great slashback in Roy Cestary. Although not the only sterling performer on the 124th, the ex-Notre Dame back could probably turn any of three league teams into a title possibility.

Cestary has played yeoman ball for the 124th all season. He runs hard, bulling over opposition and dragging tacklers along with him. His punting, especially under pressure, leaves little to be desired, and his passing has been spectacular and varied according to needs. He seems equally at home firing a bullet pass in the flat, or zooming a balloon-like aerial into the end zone.

Another factor in the progression of the Gators to the head of the class has been their end play. In Belin, Pieton, Dyal and Soltas, the one-two-four has a quartet of lads who all lean and over six feet. They are all adept pass-receivers, and used properly on defense, they have been dropping back a few yards to spread a net of pass defenders that is hard to lick.

Last Sunday against the 117th, Belin gave one of the best performances ever seen in the stadium. He played superb ball, calling the defensive signals for the Gators, and then popping into every play. Twice he intercepted Breaker passes, and on one of them the ex-Auburn collegian traversed half the field before he was forced out of bounds.

Behind Cestary and the big ends, Capt. Milton has a sturdy line that always performs well. Green Howard at guard is an exceptionally fine blocker and tackler. The other Gator backs are talented in at least on field, and some like Nick Calos boast two. He is the blocking and tackling end of a two-back one, but he also does the place-kicking for the Gators and has a remarkably good record. Last Sunday Calos tried a field goal from the 25-yard line at a difficult angle, and it came close to being good.

Surprise sensation for the Gators in the big game was the work of Bobby McCullough, their second string tailback. His 40-yard gallop for the third touchdown was a masterful bit of broken field running, and will probably earn him more actual duty, as a relief for Cestary, who often plays most of the game. Vern Smith, Hackney, Erzler, Joos, Hamlin and several others give the title-bound 124th machine backfield depth that no other loop entry can boast.

Lieut. Johnny Cudmore's Breakers played their heart out Sunday against this array of Gator talent, and after stalemating them in the first half, they went down to defeat, simply because the 124th wore them out. Cudmore is very shy on capable reserves and is plagued with several injuries, which meant that the Gator manpower paid off in an important triumph.

BAYONET TIPS—Archie Milano, until last week assistant football coach of the Two-Niners, will shortly take over the supervision of the Sports Arena out Harmony Church way, where he will have charge of the basketball and boxing program for the winter months. . . . Jack Meagher, Auburn Tiger mentor and athletic director, has promised to send either a "B" team or a frosh crew here for a game with the Gators on the Thanksgiving week-end. Should be a corker.

. . . Another battle that week-end, probably on Satnight, will feature two all-officer elevens representing the 2nd and 3rd Student Training Regiments. Several All-American mentionables may appear in that one. . . . The 505th Parachuters are fully prepared and ready right now to start taking on post competition in the squared circles. . . . The 29th-124th game on Dec. 6th will pack more college color than any other game of the year, and the crowd may even exceed the 15,000 draw for Pensacola. . . . The Panthers may crash through for their first win tomorrow night. They must have certainly been hot against Tuskegee to hold the Tigers to a 13-6 count at intermission. . . . As the loop tilts, this corner picks 29th over 11th, 117th over 3rd, and 124th over 55th. They should all be good tilts and feature a week-end where all games bring an armored unit against an infantry unit.

Cestary Big Star In Gator Win Over 117th

personally conducted them to a pair of touchdowns within five minutes after the intermission. That lead was enough to win the ball game and break the deadlock for the top spot in the loop.

Cestary scored first on a spectacular 25-yard gallop over left tackle after Claude Hackney had returned a punt 10 yards to place the ball deep in Breaker territory. A few plays later, a desperate 117th aerial was intercepted by Belin of the Gators, on the Breaker 28-yard stripe. Interference on a pass intended for Belin gave the Gators the ball on the one-yard line, and Cestary crashed over center for the second score.

40-YARD JAUNT

Just for good measure, Cestary's sub, Bobby McCullough, took off early in the final period on a 40-yard scoring jaunt. He slashed through left tackle, then reversed his field and out-ran three entire Breaker team for the score. Nick Calos booted the extra points from placement after the first and third Gator tallies.

The lone 117th touchdown came mid-way in the final period, after a healthy penalty for roughing had given them possession of the ball on the Gator 37. On the next play, the losers used one of their two completed passes for a 30-yard gain, and then on the third attempt, Big Mike Pansock, ringed fullback, crashed over from the two. Lieut. Johnny Cudmore, Breaker coach, came in to boot the extra point and wind up the day's scoring.

TALLY 13 FIRST DOWNS

The victorious Gators, who now rule as a heavy favorite to go unbeaten the rest of the way and take the title, held an advantage in first downs of 13 to 9. Both teams so effectively throttled the other's aerial assaults that only four passes were completed in the entire game, two by each side.

For the Breakers, it was the first time they had been scored upon this year, and of course their first defeat. The blue-and-gold 117th squad played valiantly all the way, but in the final analysis, the 124th wore it down with superior manpower. Capt. Red Milton's club played its usual aggressive, spirited game and after Cestary's scoring flurry early in the second half, the issue was never in doubt.

1ST HALF STEALS SHOW

The first half of the ball game really stole the show, however, and had the stadium in an uproar when the whistle blew. For most of the semester, the ball shuttled back and forth, but both helevens managed to get inside the other's 25 in the final two minutes. The Breaker threat came first, and was halted by Belin's interception of a pass after which he raced 50 yards downfield to completely change the picture. That riled the 117th, and they had pushed the Gators back to a fourth-down and 43-yards-to-go status when intermission arrived.

62-Yard Aerial Play Gives 3rd Tie With 29th

Virtually scoring a knockout punch on one another's flag hopes in the Fort Benning Conference, the powerful elevens of the 29th Infantry and 3rd Armored Regiment battled to a 6-6 draw, in their tilt last Saturday night under the lights of Doughboy Stadium.

Prior to the fracas, each team had an opportunity to regain lost prestige by crashing through to victory, but after 60 minutes of hard-fought football, the rivals were on the same footing, still deadlocked with one another for third place in the conference standings.

COPRA SCORES

A spectacular 62-yard touchdown pass from Chief Carney to speedy Nick Copra in the waning moments of the third period brought the armored Dragons back, from almost certain defeat, and set the stage for the hottest finish of the year on the battle-scarred stadium turf.

The Two-Niners roared back near the close of the game to almost score a second time and rescue the victory they had practically put on ice with a first period touchdown. With only two minutes left, big Fritz Vogt, snared a desperate Dragon aerial on the 3rd Armored's 25 and slashed to the ten. A penalty moved the Devils five yards closer, but then the Dragons held for downs in the shadow of the goal posts.

VOGT GOES OVER

It was the same Vogt who ripped off tackle early in the game from the five-yard line to rack up the Devil score, after Mike Hutchins had recovered a fumble deep in Dragon territory. Both teams missed their try for extra points when the conversion placements went wide. The Dragons also attempted a field goal early in the final period, but the boot was short.

The 29th held a slight advantage in first downs of eight to seven.

HENNESSEY STARS

Jim Hennessey, rugged right end for the Devils, was the standout star, playing a superb defensive game and recovering two Dragon fumbles at crucial moments. For the 3rd Armored, Carney was outstanding with his passing and vicious line plunging.

All Six Conference Teams Play Loop Tilts; Dragon-Breaker Clash Sunday Is Feature

Mr. Sinkwich Comes To Town

About to fire one of his famed aerials is Frankie Sinkwich, Georgia's famed All-American who will be seen in Memorial Stadium in Columbus against Auburn on Saturday at 3 o'clock. The game has aroused great interest at the fort, and a good many Benning soldiers are expected to be in the stands for a good look at Mr. Sinkwich.

29th Battles 11th On Saturday Night; 124th Vs. 55th

The busiest week-end of the year for Fort Benning gridders comes up Saturday and Sunday when all six conference elevens will go into battle in loop tilts. The outcome of the three frays may even decide the title for the 1942 campaign.

Saturday night, the elevens of the 29th Infantry and 11th Armored Regiment will open the slate when they clash under the stadium lights at 8 o'clock. The Blue Devils, stung by two defeats and a tie in their last three outings, will be a slight favorite over the burly Tankers from Tigerland.

Two games will be played at the same time on Sunday when the 3rd Armored Dragons meet the 117th Breakers in the stadium, and the 124th Infantry opposes the mighty 55th Engineers on the Sand Hill gridiron. The kick-offs will be at 2:30, and large crowds are expected at both battle scenes.

The highlight game of the card will undoubtedly be the stadium fray between the Dragons and Breakers. The two teams are evenly matched, and potentially powerful elevens, with big, flashy backs. Also, a Dragon win plus the expected triumph for the 124th would hand the Gators the title.

The stadium fray will bring together two of the best fullbacks in the conference when Chief Carney of the 3rd and Mike Pansock of the 117th line up on opposite sides of the ball. The Chief, a full-blooded Indian, has been the wheel-hore of the Dragon attack and is a hard runner and better-than-average passer. He fired the aerial which enabled Capt. Leo Gregory's club to deadlock the 29th.

Pansock has played some great ball for the Breakers all year. A big, rugged lad from Elizabethton, Tenn., he is a good plunger and a fine punter. Pansock's booming punts give the 117th an advantage in that department; but Copra and Carney can balance this by their passing ability.

The Devil-Tanker tussle Saturday night will pit two desperate elevens against one another. Most of the 29th injuries have healed now, however, and they rate the nod. The Tankers took a bad beating from Daniel Field a couple of weeks back, and they may not be sufficiently recovered to cope with the potent Devils who are burning mad by now after a series of setbacks to their once-bright title hopes.

Records would indicate that the powerful Gators should win as they please from the 55th at Sand Hill Sunday, but the Engineers are a rough-and-ready outfit, who could upset the best laid plans of Cap. Red Milton. But in the final analysis, the Gators will probably play too much real football for the armored lads who have been handicapped with a small squad and scattered practice sessions.

10-Team Court League Formed By City U. S. O.

Benning Fives Will Compete Downtown On Big Floor

The U. S. O. basketball league, composed entirely of Fort Benning teams started last night on the spacious court of the new U. S. O. club at 100 Ninth street in downtown Columbus. The 55th Engineers and First Parachute Training Headquarters were the rivals in the opener.

The Ninth street U. S. O. Club, operated by the National Catholic Community Service with the Jewish Welfare Board as cooperating agency, operate the league, which is composed of 10 service teams.

The Civilian Advisory committee, which will govern all league play is comprised of the following: Benny Rothstein, former University of Georgia football star; Sam Politano, Salvador Spano, I. Spielberger, and the directors of the U. S. O. club, Eugene J. Bergmann and Edward Korn.

The league play will be on Tuesday and Friday nights and on Sunday afternoons, with one game being played on Tuesdays, and two on Friday nights and Sunday afternoon, respectively. The Tuesday play will start at 8:15 p. m., Friday at 7:45 p. m., and Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m.

Following are the ten teams which form the league:

Headquarters First Parachute Training Regiment, Shackers, Station Hospital, 419th F. A. Battalion, First Student Training Regiment, 55th Armored Engineers Battalion, Supply Battalion 10th Armored, Student Training Brigade, 80th Med, 10th A. R., and Academic Regiment Company D.

Six-Man Grid Teams Ready For Action

Two six-man football teams will go into action next week at Fort Benning, it was announced today by Lt. Robert G. Ayers, head football coach of boys activities at the post.

The teams will practice each Tuesday and play on Wednesday, then practice on Thursday and play on Friday through the remainder of the season.

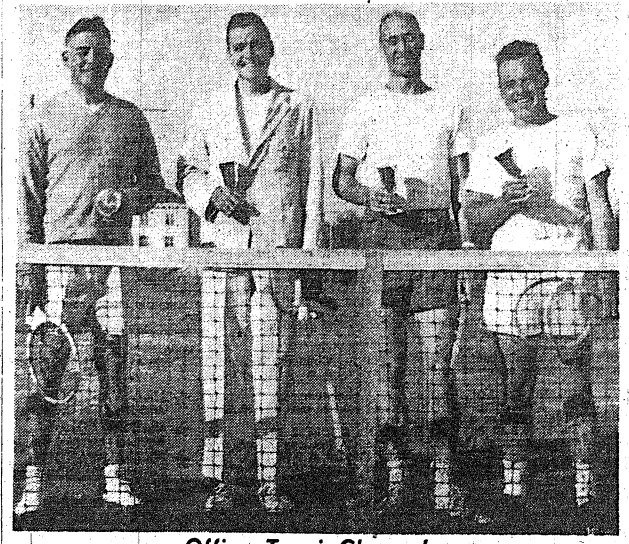
Court Star Is At O. C. School

The 28th Co., 2nd Student Training Regiment, unearthed the name of a former basketball star on its new roster. He is Harry S. Petraitis, former amateur and professional basketball luminary. Petraitis is now enrolled in O. C. class 156 and is scheduled to receive his gold bars on January 20, 1943.

Harry began his noted career at Englewood High in Chicago, where he played during 1932, '33, and 1934. He was selected All-City Forward in 1934 and was the second highest scorer of the city during that year. During the 1935 season he performed notably at forward for the Rockford Shamrocks. The 1937 season found him playing a lot of forward for the famous Chicago Duffy Floral team, one of the outstanding teams in the basketball world.

In 1938 Petraitis was selected to play on the team that represented the United States at the Lithuanian Olympics. He was elected captain of that team. While in Europe they made a tour of the Baltic Countries, playing in Lithuania, Latvia, Sweden, Poland, and Germany. While in Lithuania he witnessed border clashes between the Germans and Lithuanians just prior to the annexation of Memel.

In 1940 Petraitis enlisted in the United States Army and was assigned to the 202nd Coast Artillery, where he advanced from private to 1st sergeant. While at Fort Bliss he played for the post team which became the champs of the 8th Service Command.



Panthers Face Mobile Eleven

Fort Benning's Panthers will try hit the comeback trail tomorrow night under the lights of Doughboy Stadium when they oppose the Mobile Training College eleven from Mobile, Alabama. Kick-off is slated for 8:30.

Defeated 51-6 by the mighty Golden Tigers of Tuskegee Institute in their last outing on Saturday, the representatives of the Third Student Training Regiment's Service Battalion will be primed for their best effort of the season.

The visitors from Mobile are an unknown quantity but they are rated as one of the better colored elevens in the southland this year. The game may develop into an aerial affray with the visitors matching their ace thrower against Frankie Phillipson of the soldier club.

The Panthers accredited themselves in the Tuskegee fray by holding the famed Tigers to a 13-6 count at halftime. Then at the start of the second semester, they smashed all the way to the Tiger 5-yard stripe, but at that point a Benning pass boomeranged and an alert Tiger intercepted and raced 98 yards for another Tuskegee score.

Officer Tennis Champs!

Shown above are four well-known Fort Benning officers who played prominent parts in the recent tennis tourney held by the Officers' Club. On the left are Maj. Gen. Paul W. Newgarden, commanding general of the 10th Armored Division, and Lieut. E. J. Stahr, Jr., of the Infantry School, who captured the doubles crown. The losers are Lt. Col. R. L. Baughman and Capt. John D. Butler, both of the Infantry School who are posing above with the winners. Capt. Butler, however, was on top in the singles to take the post title.

Finally the story of Gentlemen Jim Corbett comes to life on the screen with Errol Flynn in the lead and Alexis Smith and Alan Hale doing the support . . . "Gentleman Jim," which hits the Main Theatre Sunday and Monday, is the story of the ups and downs of the best-known name in Ring history . . . It starts with Jim Corbett, a gentleman of high society, tired with banking and going into the ring to prove to a woman that he can fight . . . The story takes place in the days when the art of the squared circle was considered illegal . . . Not to be outdone, Jim was quick to laugh, quick to fight and easy to love . . . A laughing giant, he was quicker than the rest, harder than the rest and battered his way to the top in every fight he ever had except the fight for the woman he loved . . . That is the story of "Gentleman Jim" . . . A good show and one that Ring enthusiasts shouldn't miss.

"One of Our Aircraft is Missing" is one show that if you miss, you won't be missing much . . . It is the story of a bomber shot down over occupied Europe and the pilots fighting their way back to England . . . The thought behind the plot is good but it is not held together strong enough . . . At times the story is impressive and other times drags so much, one feels like walking out.

"Bambi" is another one of those Walt Disney full length features that no one missed before "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," but since then have looked forward to every one of Disney's productions . . . Combining all of the lessons he has learned in the past, Walt has really done a masterful job in "Bambi" . . . The story starts with the birth of Bambi, a deer, and goes right on through to his maturity . . . Towards the end of the feature, the audience feels that the pic lags a bit, but can anyone tell the story of a full grown deer and have it comical all the time . . . The character of Thumper the rabbit is another of Walt Disney's that will live forever . . . Thumper is one of the friends of young Bambi and derives his name from the habit of thumping his foot on a hollow log whenever he speaks . . . Another of the characters that you will like is Mrs. Thumper . . . If you are a follower of cartoons in your local movie houses or are a follower of Walt Disney, don't miss this at the penalty of a loss of one hour and a half of first-rate entertainment.

Once again that wackey pair of comedians take up the hat and glass of Sherlock Holmes and do some gumshoeing to the delight of the everyone in the audience . . . The pair I'm referring to is Abbott and Costello and the pic is "Who Done It?" . . . On this page you will find a review of the story so this column will just spill the dirt: Both Lou Costello and Bud Abbott got paid for their work in this picture but only Lou got the dough. Bud lost most of his earnings to his chubby partner playing gin rummy between scenes . . . The boys always wear black ties when working. They don't know why except that when they wore blue ones business was terrible . . . Walter Tetley, "brat" actor, heckled Lou so beautifully in his one short scene. Director Earle C. Kenton called him back for more work, had his part built up via extra scenes . . . Assistant Director Howard Christie's toughest job was tossing eggs at little Lou so they'd land directly in the middle of his face . . . After four tries, he got it right on the nose—literally . . . Funniest off-stage gag was pulled by a grammatically-minded assistant . . . Making out the call sheet for the following day, the guy crossed out "Who Done It?" and wrote in "Who Did It?" . . . Anyway, that's the way it was told to me.

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . . In "Road to Morrocco" starring Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, and Dorothy Lamour, Crosby had to done one glamour outfit for the film, a pair of skyblue and maroon Arabian pajamas. Said he looked like a spearbearer at Minsky's . . . In the same show there are talking camels and a talking ghost. As one camel remarked to the other in the pic: "Ridiculous."

Movie Review

"Who Done It?" opening at the Main Theatre this evening for a two day stay, co-stars Bud Abbott and Lou Costello, with the love affair handled by Patric Knowles and Louise Albritton. As you can guess by the name, this is another mystery, and deals with, not only two murders, but spies as well.

With such horseplay as: "I got to see a doctor about my face," says the chubby one of the team. "What's the matter with it?" asks Abbott. "It talks too much," says Costello. It talks enough to keep "Who Done It?" going at a zany clip from the opening shot to the fadeout.

Of course there's the usual list of suspects, and the mystery is fomally cleared up, but with the script the murder is played just for laughs. You might, for instance be slightly puzzled as to how a murder investigation could lead Abbott and Costello into a mix-up with a troupe of flying acrobats; and in between questioning of suspects, Costello manages to walk off with the $10,000 prize offered by a radio program known as the Wheel of Fortune. It's all in fun, though, and, when you come right down to it, which is more important anyway—crime or Costello?

The boys get a little support in this one from a subordinate love story and just to show what real police officers look like, there's William Gargon and William Bendix on hand to flash their shields and act tough.

As a matter of record, the stars go by the names of Chick and Mervyn in their latest pic; at other times they've been known as Wellington and Alsey, Duke and Willoughby. What's in a name? Somehow or other, they always come out Abbott and Costello, the funny fat man and the exclamation point.

Soldier Talent From The Post Needed For Play

Cast of Benning Thespians in "Man Who Came to Dinner"

Several soldiers from Fort Benning will have roles in the Columbus Civic Theater production of "The Man Who Came to Dinner," to be produced Dec. 3, 4 and 5, and more soldier talent can still be used, it was announced today by Corporal Frank Diamond, of the 29th Infantry, director.

Officer Candidate John Johannesson, who appeared in many Little Theater projects in Boston, San Francisco and Hollywood, and also helped direct many movies in Hollywood, will have the part of Bert Jefferson, the young newspaperman in the play. O. C. Johannesson, who used the stage name John Carl, was connected with the Bliss-Hayden Theater in Beverly Hills before joining the Army and part of his training there consisted in helping direct several movies, including "The Man Who Came To Dinner;" "Ten Gentlemen From West Point;" "Eagle Squadron;" "Thunder Bird" and others.

Corp. Owen J. Remington, of the Post Public Relations Office, will portray Sheridan Whiteside, "The Man" who came to dinner at a home in Mesalia, Ohio, while on a lecture tour—and stayed and stayed and stayed when he fell on the front doorstep and injured a hip.

Corporal Diamond, the director, has had considerable stage experience with Little Theater movements in New York and New Jersey.

Soldiers who have had experience on the stage are still needed for several important parts in the play. They are asked to contact Corp. Diamond at 8:30 p. m. any evening Monday through Friday at the Columbus Civic Theater, 220 Tenth street.

Identical Twins Confuse Tigers

T. W. Brundige or W. T. Brundige—take your choice. Anyone who can tell one from the other is a better man than your correspondent.

These identical twins, second lieutenants, recently arrived at the 10th Armored from California's desert maneuvers.

They both attended Johns Hopkins University as political science majors and entered the service in June with reserve commissions in the Infantry.

Starting out at Fort Meade, Md., they were sent to Fort Knox to attend the Armored Force Officers Orientation School and were in the same class.

From there they went to California and served with the 5th Armored Division on maneuvers. They were both platoon leaders in the same regiments first the 34th Armored and then the 46th Infantry.

Arriving at the 10th Armored fate put them together once again. They're assigned to combat command B and are busy training recruits over at the 3rd Armored Regiment—one with 1st Battalion Headquarters and one with 2nd Battalion Headquarters.

They have adjoining rooms in the bachelor quarters but make one of them a bedroom and one a sitting room.

Lt. McIlroy Made Captain

First Lieut. Horace S. McIlroy of the 10th Armored's Division Headquarters Company has been promoted to the rank of Captain it was announced by the public relations office.

Capt. McIlroy received his 2nd lieutenant's commission from Texas A and M. College in 1937. During the years 1937 and '38 he served with the 23rd Infantry at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. In 1939 he was Graduate Assistant in the Agronomy Department at A. and M. Until the time he was called to active duty in 1942. Captain McIlroy was on CCC duty in East Texas. Upon his arrival at Fort Benning with the advanced cadre he was assigned to Combat Command "B" and is now acting Company Commander of division headquarters company.

Jane and Comedian Frank Fay made previous appearances on "Stage Door Canteen" and return by popular acclaim. . . . C., and other cities where service men of the United Nations are fed and entertained free by stars of stage, screen and radio.

29th Infantry's Kinder Gives Battle Impressions

Sergeant Is One of Few War Vets in Regiment

Sgt. Joseph S. Kinder, Twenty-ninth Infantry cook and at one time a front line soldier with the 36th Infantry, 91st Division, on the Argonne front in France, is one of the few men left in the regiment who was actually under fire in the First World War. Sgt. Kinder had undergone just twenty-five days of training before he left Camp Lee, Virginia, for France.

"They taught us close order drill, showed us the Springfield rifle and told us how to use it, gave us our gas masks, and put us on the transports. We were better trained soldiers than you might think, though, and you can bet that we learned plenty more after we had been on the other side for a few weeks."

The sergeant isn't quite sure whether he killed any of the enemy in battle or not. "I spent quite a lot of time firing at them," he said. "Most of the action took place at night; in the daytime we'd generally try to get some sleep."

Concerning enemy soldiers, the Sergeant declared that he saw many German prisoners towards the end of the war. "Most of them," he said, "were old men and very young boys, their equipment and their uniforms were very bad."

Asked what general impressions of the battlefront he carried away with him, Sergeant Kinder answered: "First—lots of noise; lots of noise all the time—hair cuts with a safety razor—washing from a rusty bucket, each man taking turns scrubbing another man's back—gnashing your teeth on hard tack—the whole Division sleeping and eating in turnip fields—and no place to go when you were relieved from the front line because the towns to the rear were as badly battered as 'no man's land'".

One of the veterans of the Regiment, Sergeant Kinder has been in his present Company for twenty-two years. Born in Russia, he came to the United States in 1910, entered the Army in 1918—and since that time has lived only one year outside the Service; at the conclusion of the War he tried his hand at coal mining in Pennsylvania but soon gave it up to return to soldiering. He thinks the Army is a "pretty good place," and when this war is won he intends to go right on being a soldier.

They're telling the story around Washington these days of the Western Union messenger who was sent to the Pentagon Building, new War Department structure in Arlington, Va., adjacent to the Capital. It seems the youth became lost in the mammoth edifice, and after a week of wandering came out commissioned a lieutenant colonel.

It's getting harder and harder to hate MPs in this man's army.

Not so long ago a guy could really hate 'em with a mighty vengeance.

You could cuss 'em out for their nasty sneers when you'd left your pass at home.

You could compare 'em with dirty worms when they'd give you hell for a button undone.

Now they ask, "Please, may I see your pass?" in an apologetic tone.

And they say, "Won't you please button that," if they don't disregard the buttons entirely.

We sorta miss the good old days when an MP was a louse and that's all there was to it.

Reception Center News

'BY PFC. SMITHY NORTON

ARMY PERSONALITIES — Major Joseph H. Cooper on duty at Fort Benning—We soldiers of Fort Benning are appreciative of the efforts put forth by Major Joseph H. Cooper, Infantry as assistant special service officer. During past months hundreds of soldiers enjoyed the many activities at Service club No. 4. The colored officers and officer candidates make use of the Recreational building No. 231. The soldiers of Harmony Church will soon enjoy a program of recreational activities at their own service club. These varied programs are under the direction of Major Cooper. Fort Benning is growing and the responsibility of our officers is a huge one, but in the case of Major Cooper we find him on duty day and night. It is not the desire of the writer to imply that all problems of recreation and athletics have been solved. This is the beginning and the officers serving are limited in number. The job of Major Cooper is a difficult one and it will take time and more Special Service aids.

Major Joseph H. Cooper was commissioned 1st lieutenant O. R. C., October 15, 1917. After completing four months training course at Fort Des Moines, Ia., assigned successively to 167th Field Artillery and Battery B, 350th Field Artillery, Camp Dix, N. J. student Artillery School of Fire, Fort Sill, Oklahoma. 13th Co., 153rd Depot Brigade, Camp Dix, N. J.; instructor army detachment. Howard University, Washington, D. C.; Quartermaster S. A. T. C. unit, Virginia Union University, Richmond, Va.; commanding officer S. A. T. C. unit, Meharry Medical College, Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 25, 1918 to June 25, 1919. After the war reappointed 1st lieutenant O. R. C. Oct. 24, 1924; promoted captain, July 26, 1931; Major, Jan. 23, 1941, graduate Battalion Commanders Staff Officers' Course, Fort Benning, Ga., July 26, 1941.

MORALE—New colored commissioned officers are being added to many of our Army organizations at Fort Benning. Colored American doughboys are in various parts of Africa setting up and helping to guard the all important Allied life lines on that front. Daily at Tuskegee Army Base in Alabama our boys are training and preparing for their role in this world conflict. These officers and soldiers are endeavoring to do their part, and it is all important that immediate attention be given to the morale of our American soldiers. The problems that confront our Public Relations Offices, Special Service branches, and Morale divisions must be dealt with. For the good of our WHOLE united effort it will be necessary to accomplish an Army approach on the many problems. In the next three months along with the organizing of a second front, our people must lift themselves from a morale sluggishness. Our fight is a fight for our very existence as free men against a strong, intelligent, resourceful and ruthless enemies bent on world conquests! We desire to emerge victorious, we want to remain free, and we want democracy to be shared by all Americans, so, we must banish every difference, unite every effort, and campaign to win this war. Our talk of unity is old and our expression of a desire to win is not strong enough. The American soldier must be made to realize the seriousness of our war efforts, the importance of a united war program, and the reason for a change of an old pattern to a patter of cooperative race relations. Old prejudices should be laid aside. This is war—total war and all Americans must fight together

Troops Build Officers Club

505th Paratroopers Renovate Old Barn

A new officer's club has been opened by the 505th parachute Battalion, after an inspection by Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning and Col. James M. Gavin, commanding officer of the battalion.

The club has been made from an old warehouse, with men of the organization pitching in to repair and renovate it. It is decorated with vivid sketches of parachutists and flyers, made by soldier-artists.

At one end a huge fireplace has been constructed where formerly the large warehouse doors stood. This was made from salvaged materials and Colonel Gavin taught the men how to utilize the brick and old timber and lumber. The mantel, made from old timbers found around the area, has been worked over with chisel to give the impression of an antique adze-marked piece, after Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, commandant of the Parachute School, taught the troops how to process the wood finish.

Army Adopting Plastic Canteen

Heralding things to come, the Army Quartermaster Corps has just issued a procurement directive calling for the purchase of 50,000 canteens made of plastic. According to Col. Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning's new director of supply, this does not necessarily mean that the old aluminum canteen, used by the Army since 1910, will be relegated to the junk pile, but it is a definite possibility.

Colonel Massey pointed out that a casual glance at the achievements already accomplished in the use of plastics by the quartermaster shows the ingenuity now being practiced by the supply corps. The new shaving brush new comb, and a new bugle are all made of plastic materials.

A canteen made entirely of plastic has been under the Jeffersonville, Ind. quartermasters dept. for the past eight months. During this period of time, innumerable tests have been conducted with more than 300 different formulations of plastic designed by a leading industrial concern. The experimentation has now reached the stage where extensive field tests are justified, and thus the order for 50,000 canteens.

World Traveler To Speak on Monday At Woman's Club

Colonel Reginald H. Kelley, president of the reclassification board, will give the second of a series of lectures on the historical background and strategic moves of the war before the Current Events group of the Woman's Club next Monday. The meeting will be held in the ladies lounge of the Officers' Club at 2 p. m.

Colonel Kelley, who has acquired interesting first-hand knowledge of warring countries of Europe and Orient during his forty years of commissioned service, will use colored maps in pointing out the progress of the war to date. Officers as well as all members of the Woman's Club are invited to attend.

Post Inspection During This Week

The annual general inspection of the Station Complement activities and agencies at Fort Benning started Tuesday morning and is continuing this week. Conducting the inspection are Col. H. J. M. Smith, Lt. Col. Clarence F. Murray and Lt. Col. Jacob W. Spreesser of the Inspector General's Department.

During the inspection the three visiting officers are assisted by Fort Benning officers specially assigned to aid in the conduct of the annual inspection.

Dorothy Eley To Discuss 'Tosca'

Dorothy Githens Eley, dramatic soprano, will discuss and sing the opera "Tosca" before the Music group of the Woman's Club on Wednesday, November 25, at 2 p. m. in the ladies lounge of the Officers' Club.

Mrs. Eley will read the score as in a conductor's rehearsal, explaining phrases, the relation of the characters, and why the opera was written.

Marine Headquarters, Guadalcanal—Lt. Dan L. Gaede, Air Force, heard an air raid warning, so he dived into a foxhole.

Bumping into a U. S. Naval officer he said, "Sorry, my name's Dan Gaede."

"My name's Dan C. Gaede," replied the Navy man.

They weer cousins but had never met.

Friday, the 13th Lucky Day For Maj. H.C.Chapman

Friday the 13th was a lucky day for Captain Herbert Clifton Chapman, Fort Benning's Director of Internal Security and Intelligence, for on that day he became a major.

Major Chapman was ordered to duty as a first lieutenant, November 10, 1940. Major Chapman was appointed Post Fire Marshal where he served until July, 1941. At that time he assumed the additional duties of acting post intelligence officer. In January, 1942, he relinquished his duties as fire marshal to assume the full-time job of post intelligence officer. During a recent administrative reorganization eliminating the S-2 position, the major was named director of internal security and intelligence.

In civilian life Major Chapman was employed as Fire Protection Engineer, in charge of the Columbus office of the South Eastern Underwriters Association. A graduate of Georgia Tech, from which institution he gained the Bachelor of Science degree, Major Chapman is a former resident of Newnan, Ga.

Melbourne, Australia—Medical officers here told how soldiers' lives have been saved by portable Army hospitals erected near the battle fields of New Guinea.

"They should be called 'life-saver' hospitals," one officer remarked, "because they enable operations to be performed promptly. If these operations were delayed while the soldiers were being moved to base hospitals their lives would be endangered."

Army Training Song Leaders In All Units

Plenty of Music For Troops Assured By New Training Program

There may not be many Army bands in this war—due to difficulties of shipping bands and instruments overseas to follow various units scattered over thousands of miles of land and sea—but there'll be plenty of music for the troops nevertheless.

Under a plan announced by the War Department, trained music advisors will be used to train thousands of soldiers as songleaders within various individual units so that singing will become a feature of the organizations. The song-leader will be a regular combat soldier in the field and act as songmaster in his leisure time.

At the same time, music advisors will organize entertainment and music education programs in co-operation with commanding officers, special service officers, chaplains, and civilan organizations. Troops will be made musically self-reliant by teaching them to play small instruments, such as the tonette, the ocarina and the harmonize. These pocket instruments are expected to provide divisions to troops stationed at isolated outposts.

Other phases of the music development program already in operation are the training of Army band leaders at the Band Leaders School, Fort Myer, Va., and the encouragement of group singing.

New Medals For Service Overseas

Soldiers, sailors, and members of the auxiliary organizations serving with the armed forces will be awarded medals for service overseas, President Roosevelt has ordered. Three campaign medals for service outside the continental United States were established by the President.

The new medals are to be known as the American, European - African - Middle Eastern and Asiatic-Pacific campaign medals and will be awarded to members of the land and naval forces, including the Women's Naval Reserve and the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, for the period from Dec. 7, 1941 to six months after the war.

Brazil is to establish price control, a priorities system and other economic measures to strengthen the war effort, the Department of Commerce says.

To encourage group singing each soldier is issued an Army Song Book which fits the shirt pocket. For every thing such books in each unit a copy of the Song Book which contains the musical scores is furnished; in addition to the piano part for each song there are scores for guitar and ukelele. The contents of the Army Song Book were selected on the basis of an Army poll. Songs of the arms and services, patriotic numbers, and old favorites are included.

Music kits containing guitars, harmonicas, ocarinas, ukeleles, and collections of college, cowboy, mountain, patriotic and folk songs are sent to units manning isolated positions.

Austrian-born O. C. Lives to Avenge Land

Escaped Gestapo In Czecho-Slovakia

He risked his life to escape the Nazis and now he is anxious to get back to his native Austria and his adopted land, Czechoslovakia—but this time with conquering American troops, this Officer Candidate at Fort Benning hopes.

He is Officer Candidate Henry Walter, of the 10th company, Second Student Training Regiment. He saw his native Austria overrun by the Nazis and then, having moved to Czechoslovakia, escaped the Gestapo there only through a daring trick.

From first observation he knows that the foe that America now faces is cruel, heartless and capable of anything.

He was in Velky-Drevic, Czechoslovakia, four miles from the German border in 1938, when the Germans occupied the Sudeten. Realizing then the ultimate fate of the Czechs, he applied for a United States visa, and received it in March, 1939—just two weeks after the Germans occupied the remainder of the unhappy little country. He could not leave the country then.

PLANS GO AWRY

He attempted to escape but was unsuccessful when plane to get out by "underground methods" went awry. Later an uncle in Prague secured a Gestapo card which Walter used, despite the fact it was not in his name and did not bear his picture. He and a party of four other managed to get across a lonely spot on the Polish border near Moravska-Ostrava on a dark night in May, 1939. A German sentry did not look too closely at the card. He met his uncle who had preceded him into Poland, and received from him money with which to come to America. He sailed with a group of Czech aviators from Cherbourg, France and arrived in New York on June 3, 1939.

He was inducted at Oakland, Cal., March 17, 1941, and has been service with the AFRTC at Ft. Knox, Ky., and Ft. Ord, Cal. He also served on detached service, giving instructions in German at Camp Young, Cal.

O. C. Walter has an interest in skiing and hopes to be assigned as an officer with ski troops. He believes that such troops may well have an important role in the eventful invasion of Nazi-occupied Europe.

"Chow Hounds" Howl Thursday

Chow hounds at Fort Benning will have their inning next Thursday when Uncle Sam serves up a real old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner with plenty of turkey and all the trimmings.

1st Lieut. Marcus E. Cooper, subsistence officer on the staff of Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply, announced this morning that two refrigerator cars packed with more than 75,000 pounds of turkey were due to arrive at the quartermaster warehouses before the week-end.

The frozen birds are coming in all the way from Salt Lake City, Utah, and are among the choicest specimens of Thanksgiving fowl that Uncle Sam could lay his hands on for G. I. feasting.

The turkeys are actually costing the Q. M. C. close to 40 cents per pound even in quantity purchasing. This increased cost over the daily ration allowance is authorized, of course, by the Army's "turkey ration" which permits additional expenditure at Thanksgiving and Christmas so that G. I.'s may get a dinner just like the folks at home will be eating.

As a matter of fact not many of the folks at home will be sitting down to a meal that can compare with the one Benning soldiers will feast upon next week. And if you doubt that for a moment, just gaze on this menu which will be served in messhalls all over the post:

Fruit cocktail, cream of celery soup, olives, mixed pickles and celery hearts, roast turkey with oyster dressing, cranberry sauce, giblet gravy, rice, Virginia baked ham, sweet potatoes with marshmallow crust, buttered string beans, creamed peas, tomato and lettuce salad, mayonnaise, mince pie, ice cream, cookies, hot rolls, butter, crackers, apples, oranges, grapes, coffee and lemonade. Yum, yum!

VACATION RESORT OPEN IN WINTER

Pine Mountain Park will be kept open during the winter by the State of Georgia, officials at Fort Benning have been notified, and families of all sizes may reside there through the winter months. School facilities will be provided, it was announced and personnel of the fort are invited to take advantage of the housing facilities. The park is about 40 miles from Fort Benning, towards Atlanta.

Come and Get It: Cash Is Waiting!

Four prizes of two dollars each were announced today for contributions to last week's Bayonet. All prize winners this week, as well as some from past weeks, are urged to report as soon as possible to the Post Public Relations office in Post Headquarters to receive their awards.

Since no poetry prize was given last week, two are awarded this week: Corporal Paul F. Cunningham, of the 5th Signal Service Company, and Lieut. F. M. Schilling each won a two dollar award. For the best original cartoon, the two dollar award goes to Lt. M. F. Bach, for his full-page sketch on the "Home of the 3rd Student Training Regiment" in last week's Bayonet. To Lt. Walker ("NMI") Wilcox goes a two dollar prize for his editorial on "NMI", as the prize winning most original contribution of the week.

What's New With Q. M.?

Our new dehydrated foods, including baked beans, soon will be included on menus served to our fighting brethren overseas. Besides the popular legumes, the other foods just developed are prune powder, apricot powder, and a Swiss Cheese soup, of all things.

Prior to drying, the beans are baked, and the Q. M. C. states that four ounces of dehydrated beans are equivalent to 12 ounces of regularly cooked beans. The cheese soup contains dry powdered milk, potato, oat and soy bean flour in addition to the cheese. Flavoring ingredients such as onions, celery and parsley are added and the soup is pre-cooked.

Lest you're worried about the prune and apricot powder, let it be stated that they are to be used overseas for making G. I. jam. Sugar and water can be added to the powders and it provides an ideal spread on bread to replace jams and jellies, which are difficult to transport because of the bulky containers.

Several items which G. I.'s have always had to provide for themselves will now be issued as a part of the ration when troops are in the field. Latest word is that safety razors, blades, shaving cream, tooth brushes and powder, and soap can now be supplied at the discretion of the company commander. The good old Q. M. C., of course, will supply the goods.

Other articles which may be issued as part of the daily ration will include one ounce of candy, two books of safety matches and 20 cigarettes or one ounce of chewing or smoking tobacco. These issues are authorized only when troops are in theaters of operation, and the items cannot be obtained otherwise.

Personnel of the Quartermaster Corps at Fort Benning played an outstanding part in the recent war bond drive at the post which culminated with the huge Bond Breakfast in the post gymnasium on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock.

One quartermaster officer gained the distinction of making one of the highest individual purchases in the drive when he bought two $1,000 bonds and paid out $1,500 in cash. He was Capt. Walter H. Cook, veteran officer in charge of the operation of the post motor pool.

Capt. Cook purchased his bonds from Marian Johnson, a civilian employee of the Q. M. C., whose father is also a warrant officer on duty with the Quartermaster Corps at the post. Miss Johnson was one of the Bond-A-Dears, and sold upwards of $3,500 worth of bonds for the breakfast. Also the team of Bond-A-Dears recruited from the Quartermaster Office was the leader in total sales.

During the advance sale for the breakfast, a group of wives of Quartermaster officers at Benning conducted a sales booth in Service Club No. 1 on the post proper, and considerably boosted the total of bond sales. This group was supervised by Mrs. Stephen B. Massey, wife of the director of all supply at the post.

AN ARMY WIFE SHOPS IN COLUMBUS

Christmas shopping is one of the nicest errands in the world. That is, it's nice once the mind is settled down to making lists of sizes and colors for the various members of the family. We used to wait until Thanksgiving was over before we started to think of this task with any degree of seriousness. Quite alright that time period too before the war. Communities weren't changed by influx of families. The Post Office wasn't jammed to the gunnels with packages and letters. They are now, and if we're going to give our nearest and dearest the kind of special, Christmas we plan, right now is the time to get busy. And I mean right now.

The opportunity for definite and helpful war effort sometimes a very simple thing. In many instances we're actually clearing up cluttered and untidy corners that we've been meaning to get at. Just think of the clean basements and garages with all the scrap metal cleared out. KIRVEN'S is offering the women of Fort Benning and Columbus a chance to clean up bureau drawers and mending baskets of old silk stockings, and put these sad reminders of an unrestricted era to a patriotic use. The government has asked for used WASHED silk, rayon, nylon, silk and cotton, nylon and rayon and nylon and cotton hose. A process has been perfected whereby these discarded hose can be reprocessed and turned into the vital powder bags so essential to our war efforts. Powder bags must be made of silk so that the container will burn completely without ash and eliminate the possibility of a premature explosion. The man of the family will be delighted to explain this technical point to you. He'll agree to the importance of your contribution, so clean out those corners and bring or send the bundle with a friend who's going into town. Deposit them in the container in either of the two hosiery sections at Kirven's.

For weeks now I've been telling you about the stunning shoes at MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE CO. and haven't said one word about the branch store right here on the Post. I suppose that was because I thought everyone knew about that handy shop in the Doughboy Stadium. Our men folks have been buying the fine line of shoes they carry for ages. My favorite men's shoes are Florsheim, especially that strap and buckle model especially designed for the military forces. Merely a personal preference of course, for there's a complete line of every kind of shoe for men. Mothers have found it the handiest possible place to buy shoes for the small fry. It has eliminated a tiring trip into town and "Momma, buy me—" ringing in her ears. Shopping with several children is definitely not a pleasure jaunt. There's a sample line of their outstanding models of women's shoes. Place your order and you'll be able to pick them up next day. A convenience and extra special service when the gas indicator points low.

Patricia is glowing with enthusiasm over the lovely things she bought in New York. Her customers are too. They're taking them right out of the tissue paper. Especially timely are the cocktail dresses, what with the holidays coming up. Jewel tone colored dresses with belts studded with stones that might have come from Aladdin's Cave. Glittering sequins to catch the light at a gay party. Most of the dresses are pegged top, or if you prefer tulip draped skirts. Nice enough for the most important tea or cocktail party, yet equally suitable for the Woman's Club under your fur coat. She has some of those plaid wool skirts with stupendous pockets. They're called trench skirts and in case you're interested, New York has "gone mad over them." The colors in the skirt can be emphasized by a soft wool sweater or one of those smart silk blouses of meticulous tailored cut. PATRICIA'S SHOP is on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel. And don't wait too long to look over these "last word" received from New York clothes.

— — V — —

The Fort Benning addicts of the sleeping porch will not have to move inside if they're snuggled in warm flannelette pajamas or nightgowns. In case you haven't looked at these garments for a few years you'll be surprised to find that designers have taken those garments out of the "down on the farm" type of underwear. They are so skillfully cut and smart in appearance the change from lace and silk isn't a concession to comfort. Comfort? Ah! that soft fuzziness these nippy nights. The warm arms and shoulders. SEARS ROEBUCK has a wonderful assortment for the entire family. For Christmas gifts or for wear right now, there is something to investigate while the choice is large. While you're in the store look at those bright red corduroy coats. They's as gay as a robin in spring. You might match them or mix the colors skillfully with a corduroy pair of slacks for something rather elegant in the way of casual clothes.

Father Time of 1942 is rapidly reaching senility. Ere long he will turn over his scythe and hour glass to a rosy newborn 1943. The process of his aging are the days slipping by when you and you and you should be doing something about having your picture taken. It is no longer a matter of weeks but days before Christmas photographs can be made. AIME DUPONT on Broadway doesn't handle the dime in a slot picture, jumping out of another part of the machine in a moment, sort of photography. They are 5th Avenue photographers of distinction. Those looking for real bargains should know that Aime Dupont's in Columbus will give you a portrait at a fraction of the price you'd pay in New York. A concession to the military forces. Believe me, they really make pictures you won't mind having in the family album. Future generations won't snicker when they see the relaxed poses, soft lighting and true personality portrayal their photographer gives you. A picture of your self for the folks has always been the very nicest gift you could give them. Today it becomes something infinitely precious to those who are missing you terribly.

SAKS FIFTH AVENUE MILITARY SHOP on Cusseta Road insists it's a strictly men's shop. And so it is, with the wonderful selection of all manner of military necessities for the newly made Second Lieutenant graduate of the O. C. S. to the senior officer who replaces his uniforms at the insistent nagging of a uniform conscious wife. Just the same the New York store knows there are women around Fort Benning too. They've sent down a beautiful selection of handbags. Fine calfskin for months and months of dress-up wear, alligator calf to match those alligator shoes you adore, red calf with white saddle stitching for sports wear, suede with tortoise trimmed frame. Womanlike, I'm hoping all those men being fitted for uniforms will think of their best girl when they see those bags. Won't their gal like a gift snuggled in a box marked Saks Fifth Avenue?

One of the most fascinating places to linger in is a drug store. They have so many wonderful things to look at. The patent medicine shelves hold cures for all the ills in the world. The toiletries are arranged with such attractiveness only a strong-minded woman can resist them. They always give promise of the evanescent search for lasting beauty. JOINER'S PHARMACY at 14 Thirteenth Street is just this kind of drug store. They've stocked a wonderful line of Christmas gifts. One especially hard to find item is the well-known and universally liked Ronson Lighter. None of the gibes about matches being carried to save embarrassment from a nonlighting gadget has ever applied to the Ronson Cigarette Lighter. No one need be reminded this is a gift suitable for either the masculine or feminine members on your gift list. Another tricky gift is a plastic compact that lights when you snap it open. Ingenuous asset that light would be for a quick complexion repair job in a dark corner. A most acceptable gift for the girl who adores the new and unusual.

— — V — —

The Baby Shop in GODWIN, WELLS AND POPE on Broadway shouldn't be overlooked when you're thinking of gifts for the tiny one. They have a beautiful stock of those handmade baby things women gurgle and coo over. Certainly the desire of very proud mother in dressing up the precious mite. Sunshiny days or no in the south, there are cold moments and for those days nothing is more adorable than the pink corduroy baby buntings. The tiny adjustable hood and the fine wale silky corduroy makes this lovely and practical baby's garment something very grand as a gift. For special occasions the two toned blue silk down filled carriage robe is a queenly or kinglike possession whatever the sex of the proud owner may be. The stock on these lovely infants wear is limited and I warn you again seriously to do your shopping early at Godwin, Wells and Pope. I can't think of anything worse than a little one without gifts on it's first Christmas, and that's what will happen if friends and parents aren't early shoppers.

— — V — —

LEVINSON BROTHERS at 1220 Broadway is another headquarters for gifts for our menfolks. There's a splendid stock of all manner of uniform necessities too. Blouses that fit with the minimum alterations, slacks in regulation color and "pinks" for dressier occasions. Wool shirts cut to the necessary form fitting lines. Ties, all manner of insignia, hosiery, caps and all the necessities and luxuries for the military man. An especially attractive gift item is a scarf and glove set. Snug warmth they'll give on cold mornings.

Gifts can be found in almost every store on Broadway. One shop specializing in unusual gifts is the VALLEY SEED COMPANY at 1240 Broadway. Your garden enthusiast would adore a box full of tulip, daffodil and jonquil bulbs. They're mighty precious items these days. Of course you can buy them for your own garden. They have some strong young pansy plants to set out now for early blooming. The appealing velvety faces of pansy flowers make them universal favorites everywhere. Those who must have a gift under the tree for the family pet will be delighted with the fine stock of articles they have on hand for pets. Knitted dog sweaters, leashes, twin feeding dishes for the canine member of the family. They have those cedar shavings dogs like in their bed. Toys for the pets to make them gambol across the room in happy ecstacy. Even the canaries aren't forgotten, for there are special tid-bits for their diet and good singing health.

Insignia For Lawson Field

Corp. Frank Synor Designs New Emblem

A new insignia will make its appearance this week at Fort Benning when personnel of the 54th Base Headquarters and Air Base Squadron at Lawson Field begin wearing it.

The insignia, designed by Corp. Frank Synor, artist on the staff of "Tail Skid," the Lawson Field publication, has been approved by the Adjutant General's office in Washington, it was announced, and will henceforth be worn by personnel as well as painted on planes of the Squadron.

The insignia is an oblong pin with a beacon light in silver at the center. At the top, in a field of blue, is a fist in gold with thunderbolts in silver. In the left base is a gold quill and vessel on field of Air Force golden-orange while in the right base is a gold micrometer.

The beacon and rays signify an Army Air Field; the fist and thunderbolts symbolize the daring spirit of the squadron; the quill and vessel represent the administrative duties and the micrometer, the technical and maintenance duties.

News Of Medicos

DETACHMENT, MEDICAL DEPARTMENT, STATION HOSPITAL

We have just come to the conclusion that starting a new column is no fun. Evidence of our efforts have already filled two scrapbaskets, and investigators from the WPB are lurking outside of the office to nab us for causing a paper shortage. However, with the discontinuation of our own monthly publication "The Medicos," we feel that this bit of paper conservation will result in our acquittal. It is also our desire to cooperate more fully with the Public Relations Department which would be extremely difficult in addition to maintaining our own paper.

"The main purpose in bringing to light this column is to show the rest of Fort Benning that there is considerable activity going on at the Station Hospital in addition to the maintenance of our "Reproduction Plant," activity which a complement of over a thousand men are proud of advertising.

A fellow from the Infantry came in the other day and very calmly said: "Why don't you guys get out of the Medical Department and come into the U. S. Army?"

After picking him up and dusting him off we made him know that we've drilled, done "K. P." stood Guard, tended the sick and ailing, sweated all kinds of lines and formations, provided entertainment for the patients, and carried on our own large and comprehensive athletic and recreation program at the same time. After that we went into a brief discussion of a little extra work we did that our very apologetic and bit bewildered friend had never heard of.

So much of remarks regarding duties. A great many articles of interest in D. M. D. have come our way recently which merit special mention in our first column.

The Morning Report recently was big enough to choke a whale because of the great number of promotions in the ranks of the Detachment. Perhaps our organization is the only one of its kind which can boast of three bonafide 1st. Sgts. 1st Sgt. Henry Allen, in charge of over two hundred of our colored troops; and 1st Sgts. Bittle and Westenberger, whose jump from Staff to 1st was announced the 7th, are "topkicks" of the entire Detachment now almost at full strength.

SGT WICKER PROMOTED

Staff. Sgt. James Carson Wicker, assistant to the Special Service Officer at Fort Benning, who gained fame for production of many shows at the Post, has been appointed second lieutenant and will be transferred to Ft. Meade for further training and service, it was announced today.

Col. Raymond Writes Infantry March Song

In the near future radio listeners in this vicinity will be enjoying one of the newer infantry marching songs, "Old Doughboy."

Written by Colonel J. E. Raymond, 10th Armored Division chief of staff, the piece already has won acclaim from General George C. Marshall, and from Headquarters of the Army Ground Force.

Very popular in the north and often featured on network broadcasts, "Old Doughboy" is an inspiring air.

Copies of the latest arrangement of the words and music have just been received and the march no doubt will be heard shortly on one of the programs emanating from the post.

59 Medicos Are Promoted

When the Detachment, Medical Department at Fort Benning decides to have some promotions, they do it in a big way. On the latest list of promotions, there were 59 enlisted men advanced to a higher grade.

Tech Sgt. J. B. Bravo was promoted to master sergeant. Staff Sgt. R. G. Westenberger was made 1st sergeant. Staff Sgts. J. C. Peacock and P. B. Burns were promoted to technical sergeant.

Roberts, J. P. Ryan, W. H. Taylor, M. Taylor, J. W. Tique and H. Harris were promoted to technician 5th grade.

Pvts. H. A. Batts, A. E. Branch, J. C. Bullock, M. Burke, L. L. Campbell, M. Glass, M. H. Hurst, and J. N. Whitaker made private 1st class.

O. C. S. Grad Slips Dictator's Son Mickey Finn

The 14th Company of the 3rd Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Georgia claims the distinction of having as a member Candidate Murray W. Feldman, the bartender who won an "orchid" from Walter Winchell for the serving of a "Mickey Finn" to Bruno Mussolini, son of the present unfortunate dictator of Italy.

The incident took place in 1939, while Bruno was taking in the "Hot spots" of New York City. Boasting, by Mussolini, of his feats in bombing the helpless peoples of Ethiopia, led to the "orchid" offer by Winchell and Bartender Feldman received the "decoration" for administering the "knockout drops."

Candidate Feldman before entering the United States Army in January 1941, was head bartender of New York's popular night club, "Club Society". He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Feldman, 335 B 44 street; Edgemere, Long Island, N. Y. He attended the Infantry school and was a member of the 14th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, graduated November 16.

Today is Thanksgiving.

Here in the United States, we Americans will be sitting down this afternoon in Army mess halls, in crowded restaurants and in tens of thousands of family dining rooms observing a tradition, perhaps typically American above all others.

We will enjoy the roast turkey, the cranberry sauce, the pumpkin pie because we will eat it secure behind a ring of cold steel which American doughboys and their fighting allies have forged along our flag-flung fronts.

To make all future Thanksgivings safe for all future Americans—and perhaps to institute new Thanksgiving in a lot of other countries—that ring of steel from Guadalcanal, through North Africa to Stalingrad must be expanded step by step, German by German, Jap by Jap.

Many fortunate enough to eat turkey at Fort Benning and in America today will be "out there" helping to widen the ring next Thanksgiving. And, if necessary, their kid-brothers, even their Dads, might be helping the Thanksgiving after that if things get too tough for Johnny Doughboy.

Americans are funny people. They like their World Series, they'll lug a bushy, old pine-tree seven or eight blocks and set it up in the house at Christmas just "for the kids," they'll gripe about taxes, about Congress and about their boss day in and out, they'll gloat for months about a turkey dinner at Thanksgiving and then stuff themselves to their ears on the eventful day.

They'll make fun of "Adolf," and "Mussy" and Hirohito, they'll go out and get lambasted during the first few months of a war they didn't want and then turn around and fight to the last damned man when the going gets the toughest and the chips are down.

So it's no wonder today's Thanksgiving has a deep significance who today isn't thankful for:

One: "Ike" Eisenhowers and Mark W. Clarks and their fighting fellow soldiers so well-trained, so courageous, they invaded and took over a mighty chunk of the continent of Africa and a week later were tearing "Hell-bent for election" down the road after one Rommel and sundry other Germans and Italians in North Africa.

Two: Marines who worry more about "disposing" of 5,000 dead Japs than they do about dodging enemy bullets on Guadalcanal and who are relentlessly widening their hold on that tiny spot in the Pacific.

Three: Russians who took everything a supposedly super-modern German army could throw at Stalingrad in three months and three days before Thanksgiving were counter-attacking with deadly fury and chasing Germans back across the frozen steppes of Russia.

Four: For statesmen and leaders such as wise General George C. Marshall; silent, wily, strategist Cordell Hull and the "master player," President Roosevelt, who accepted criticism of their policies without comment so that United Nations soldiers could at least have a fighting chance when they struck North Africa.

Five: For the kind of Yankees who cheerfully turned in those extra tires; wise-cracked about the vanishing "sec-

Violinist Will Play Twice For Soldiers

Free Ducats, First Come, First Served, Are Available

Miriam Solovieff, internationally known violinist, will give a free concert for the men of Fort Benning at the 9th St. USO Club in downtown Columbus, at 8 p. m. Nov. 30, and will play for the men of Sand Hill area at Service Club No. 2 on Dec. 1. Ducats for the downtown concert can be had at the information desk of the club. Get your tickets early because it is first game, first serve.

Miss Solovieff, visiting a friend in the O. C. S., walked into the office of Mr. Edward Korn, who is publicity director for the USO in Columbus, and volunteered to play for the boys. "They are doing their job and the least I can do for them is play," explained the beautiful, young native San Franciscan.

Miss Solovieff started her musical career at the age of three without parental urging. There happened to be a piano teacher living in the same building and young Miriam spent more time in teacher's studio than in her own home.

She started the study of the violin when she was six years old because she had heard a noted violinist at a concert and she felt she could express herself better with that instrument. Her first appearance on the stage was at the age of five, at nine she made her debut with the violin.

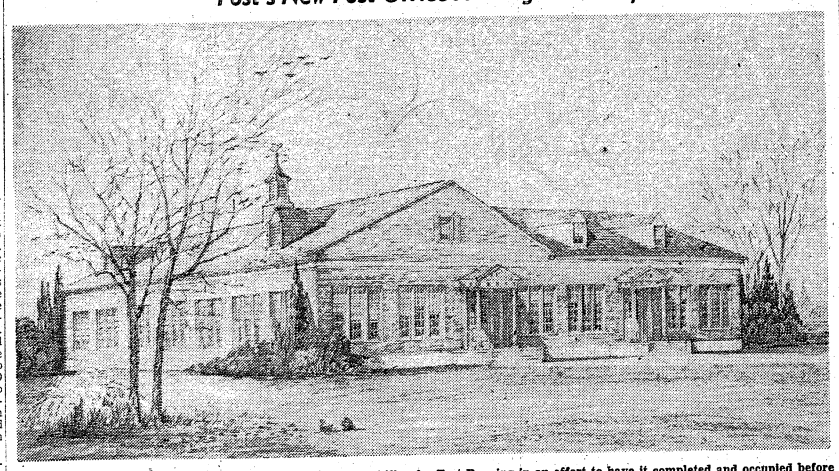
Miriam Solovieff was only eleven when she made her appearance as guest artist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra. The following season she appeared at the Hollywood Bowl under Ossip Gabrilowitsch before an audience of 19,000. On the strength of these appearances, the Juilliard School of Music awarded her a scholarship and she went to New York to study with Louis Persinger, teacher of Yehudi Menuhin.

In 1938, a year after her New York debut, Miss Solovieff went to Europe for an extended tour of England, Holland, France, and Scandinavia. Her European tour was interrupted by the outbreak of the war, and she returned to this country to resume her American appearances.

Miriam Solovieff is considered, among many critics to be one of the finest young artists in the country.

O. C. Company Invests $5,000 In War Bonds

First Student Training Regiment in 100 per cent participation purchased a total of $5,035.00 in War Bonds and Stamps following receipts of last payroll, it was announced this week by company officers.



Establishing what is believed to be a new high among individual officer candidate classes at Ft. Benning, members of 9th Co. turned huge amounts of their pay-checks into War Bonds and Stamps. Every member of the class purchased either Bonds or Stamps or both.

High individual purchasers among the class were Candidates William H. Scully, and William H. Alston, already purchasing many bonds as enlisted men, Candidate Scully bought over $700.00 and Candidate Alston over $650.-00 worth of Bonds, to aid 9th Co.'s drive. Many of the other candidates purchased sizeable amounts of Bonds and Stamps.

"9th Co. really came through," commented the officers of the Company, in praise of the can-

Post's New Post Office A Thing Of Beauty

Work is being rushed on construction of the new Post Office for Fort Benning in an effort to have it completed and occupied before the first of the year. The building is being put up between Hall and Ingersoll streets across Vibbert avenue from the fire department, with the entrance facing on Hall street. It is a one-story brick building, 110 feet by 110 feet, just about twice the floor space of the present Post Office building. Date for a corner stone laying will be announced soon, according to Leighton W. McPherson, postmaster of Columbus, under whose jurisdiction the Post branch is operated. The building is being constructed under supervision of the Area Engineers' Office and is designed especially for handling of large quantities of mail. This sketch, prepared especially by the Area Engineers' Office shows how the building will look when completed.

Ex-Musical Comedy Star Is Fort O. C.

Was In Casts Of Broadway Hits; Radio Star

When the 8th Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment, delves into their sea of talent, it is easy for them to dip out an interesting personality. Joseph S. Scandur, 29, and born in New York City, can easily furnish hours of entertainment. Singing musical comedy, he made his first appearance in 1933 at Radio City Music Hall with the Roxy Show Gang during their initial engagement which lasted four weeks. From there he went into Gilbert and Sullivan on Broadway for eight weeks. Next he played in "The Great Waltz" for nine months on Broadway. Later he was with the "Boys From Syracuse" for 8 1-2 months — which was later produced on the screen, with Eddie Albert, Wynn Murray, Jimmie Sabo, and Teddy Hart. His last appearance on Broadway was in "Higher and Higher" with Jack Haley, Shirley Ross, and Leif Erickson. He also won two musical scholarships which would have given him an opportunity to audition for the Metropolitan Opera Company.

IN ARMY TWO YEARS

Candidate Scandur was inducted at Fort Dix, New Jersey, and has been in the army nearly two years. Immediately upon induction he began assisting producing enlisted men's shows and performed in shows nightly until October 13, 1942, when he came to OCS. He also appeared on WOR, Mutual Broadcasting Company, on the average of once a month—besides performing on a station in Trenton, N. J., three nights a week.

Five days after arriving at Ft. Dix he started the camp newspaper—"Reception Center Gazette," and was editor for 15 months, turning it over to Jimmie Cannon, sports writer for a New York paper. He was in charge of the Special Service Office, being the ranking non-commissioned officer, and had 35 men plus about 35 special duty men to drill and to account for their duties every day.

He was in charge of all officer's social activities; arranging athletic programs, and saw that the inductees of 12 Receiving Companies were well taken care of—furnishing entertainment and bolstering morale in numerous ways. He made necessary arrangements for outside entertainment, equipment for shows, and arranged shows for task forces that would stop at camp to receive equipment before moving on. Also, having enlisted men's shows every night, four broadcasts a week, two dances a week, plus singing in three churches on Sundays, Candidate Scandur's motto has been "Most with the least in the quickest manner."

Pity the Poor Mail Orderly; He Only Delivers the Letters But Is Blamed for Everything

It seems everybody around Fort Benning is bucking a line at least once or twice a day, but there is one line nobody minds bucking in the Army. It's the one at the postal window.

A recent survey made by the "Bayonet" failed to turn up one bachelor (or married either for that matter) G. I. who minds standing in that particular line.

A large percentage of those contacted, however, said that they did object to standing there for half an hour or so, watching their more fortunate brethren getting stacks and stacks—well, even one letter sometimes looks like a stack,—of mail while they didn't get even so much as a postal card.

But every postal sergeant or corporal was vociferous in telling of the hardships he has to face each day in handling out the mail—and of the insults they sometimes have to take from the soldiers who stand out there in the line and don't get any mail.

"Some of those guys think we hide their mail or something," said Corp. Alfred Altenheim, at DEML headquarters, who is a veteran at the game of finding the little oblongs that mean so much to the soldier, no matter how poorly written the address may be or how badly misspelled the name may have been.

WE ONLY DELIVER 'EM

"Some of these boys seem to think we write these letters and address them, ourselves personally," he said. "They bawl us out something fierce if they don't get a letter every time there's mail call. After a long, long time at this job, I have just one word of advice to give—and I think everybody else on the Post with my job can say the same thing to the men—If you want to get letters, write some yourself first. Lots of the men never send out letters to the folks back home, never even tell 'em where they are now—and yet they expect to get lots of mail.

"It doesn't make sense and it makes even less sense to blame it on the poor mail orderlies when they don't get mail."

But writing letters first seems to come easier to some G. I.'s than to others. Some of the boys who get a lot of "sugar reports" as they call letters from the girl friend back home, frankly admit they're doggone poor correspondents themselves. Yet they seem to get their mail every day. Some claim it's just the force of their personality; others just smile more or less modestly and say nothing. Some of the smiles come closer to being smirks, however, it has been noted, intimating that there's more than merely personality behind their ability to rate a big mail.

Some of the men suffer intensely while writing letters. They worry, fret, and stew for an hour or so and manage to turn out a page or so. Then they sigh, mop their brows, and look enviously at the pile of letters that the versatile guy on the next bunk has turned out in the same time.

"How in hell do you do it?" they ask wistfully. The versatile writer shrugs—it's easy for him. He carries on a correspondence with half a dozen or more people back home, ranging from the girl friend to his folks and several friends, and possibly some people in the place where he formerly worked.

'ART, NOT CHANCE'

Writing letters is easy to this fellow. He likes to do it and he enjoys a lot of letters in the mail.

In between these two extremes, of course, come all sorts—there's the regular letter writer who manages to grind out a letter every day or every other day to

WAAC UNIT IS COMING

43rd Hq. Company Will Arrive By Christmas Ready For Work

Fort Benning's first contingent of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, the 43rd WAAC Post Headquarters Company, will arrive at the Post in December to assume jobs presently held by enlisted Army personnel and free them for full military duties.

In announcing the assignment of the WAAC company to this post, Lieutenant M. L. Holland, assistant chief of the Military Personnel Branch at Post Headquarters, pointed out that the women auxiliaries will not replace civilian personnel but will take over non-military jobs of Army personnel.

Nattily uniformed WAACs will, by Christmas, be seen in cashier's booths at the various post theaters, as ushers and projectionists also. Other women will be assigned to the several Service Clubs on the post where they will assist the hostesses as aides.

The clerical platoon of the Headquarters Company will take over stenographic and other duties at Post Headquarters and other offices on the Main Post.

150 AUXILIARIES

Comprising about 150 auxiliaries, comparable to privates in the Army, the Company will be commanded by a First Officer, whose rank is similar to that of a Captain in the Army. The Second Officer of the Company, who ranks with a first lieutenant in the Army, will be the executive and police officer of the company.

A Third Officer of the Company, whose rank is similar to that of a second lieutenant in the Army, will be the company's supply and mess officer. One First Leader, ranking with a First Sergeant, will carry out the many administrative duties of the company—giving the women passes to Columbus and sundry other tasks all first sergeants are well trained in.

When the WAACS arrive at Fort Benning, they will find themselves quartered in new barracks. Located on or near Ingersoll by the Reproduction Plant on the Main post, the barracks are similar to those which house enlisted personnel at Fort Benning.

All of the personnel of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps in the detachment slated for Fort Benning have been trained in a soldier's life at Fort DesMoines, Ia., the present WAAC training center. The members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, according to Army Regulations, are eligible to serve with the Army of the United States in the continental United States or overseas.

COMPANY BREAK-DOWN

The 43rd Headquarters Company consists of a Company headquarters platoon, a clerical platoon, and a miscellaneous platoon.

The Company headquarters platoon will include a company clerk and other technicians. Included in this platoon also is a baker, four cooks, and two cooks helpers, a similar organization to regular Army companies.

The Clerical platoon will bring to Benning stenographers and other clerks for headquarters duties at the Post. This platoon will include a chief clerk, personnel clerk, postal clerks, a record clerk, many technicians.

In the Miscellaneous platoon are three sections, consisting of a Theater section, Service Club section, and Library section. The duties of the auxiliaries in these sections will consist of technical jobs in the various recreational centers on the Post.

Fulton Extends Day's Greetings To Fort Troops

Holidays are a thing of the past for those of us at Fort Benning.

In former years Americans ceased their toil on the farm, in the factories, and in the Army to celebrate the heritage that has been ours on this Day of Thanksgiving. That custom was rightfully ours in this land of plenty.

But today—as we pay reverence to God for the blessings He has bestowed upon us—we continue working and training, striving for the final victory that will be ours. Neither on the farms, nor in the factories, nor in the Army, will there be an idle hand this Thanksgiving Day.

Even so at Fort Benning thousands of civilian hands will not hesitate from doing their part in the war effort today. The farmers' hands are busy tilling the soil, and factory hands are feeding our machines to create our weapons of war which we at Fort Benning are putting to practical use that next Thanksgiving Day we may return to our normal holiday on this sacred occasion.

Col. Barksdale Goes To Capital

Lt. Col. William E. Barksdale, recently named chief of distribution on the staff of Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply, at Fort Benning, has been transferred from the post and assigned to the Office of the Quartermaster General in Washington, D. C.

It is expected that Col. Barksdale will be assigned to the subsistence branch in the nation's capital, since it is in this phase of supply work that he was best known at Benning.

For more than a year, Col. Barksdale served as assistant commandant of the Quartermaster Bakers and Cooks School at the fort. The Benning school is commanded by Col. John M. Rooks, who also heads all B. and C.

Benning O. C. Receives Commission, Silver Star

Gen. Weems Makes Award For Gallantry In Midway Battle

A silver star for gallantry at Midway and a set of gold bars for hard work as an officer candidate were rewards received by Second Lt. George Scherba of Pittsburg, Pa., at Fort Benning last week-end.

The presentation of the Silver Star was made by Brig. Gen. George H. Weems of the Infantry School Staff for his action as staff sergeant on a bomber which made an attack on the Jap fleet off Midway Island.

On June 4 the 23rd Bombardiers, stationed at Hickam field on Oahu in the Hawaiians, received orders to attack the Jap fleet headed for Midway.

HIS SHIP AFIRE

The planes left Oahu and found the Nip ships 200 miles from Midway. Navy planes had already blasted the enemy, and all but four of his 15 ships were afire.

The squadron came in low and during the following exciting hour accounted for two more ships.

Finally at 10:30 that evening the men returned to Midway, and that night they were heavily shelled by Jap subs, but no damage was done to the planes or personnel.

For the next three days the American aircraft incessantly attacked the enemy fleet and his aircraft.

Sherba's ship scored a direct hit on a cruiser and several near hits on a heavy cruiser. From his position in the belly turret on the bomber with the aid of the rear gunner, Scherba accounted for one Japanese Zero fighter.

Five more Zeroes were brought down by the squadron in the encounter.

WAS IN ISLANDS

Lieut. Scherba enlisted in the army in 1932 immediately after graduating from the David B. Oliver High school in Pittsburgh. With the exception of a few brief visits to the states, he has been in the islands until his recent appointment to the Infantry School.

He was in the infantry for eight years and later became a member of a ground crew at Hickam field. Dec. 8, the day after the Japanese attack at Pearl Harbor, he became an assistant engineer in the training of a B-17.

Scherba was involved in the United States attack on the Gilbert islands, and his ship was once lost for eight hours.

While at Fort Benning, Scherba was a member of the third student training regiment under the command of Col. R. H. Lord.

5 Performances Are Slated For Dec. 1-5

America's radiant comedy hit, the John Golden Broadway success, "Claudia" by Rose Franken, author of the famous play, "Another Language," will be presented by the United States Organization-Camp Shows Inc. at Fort Benning with an exceptional cast, personally selected by Mr. Golden for the Camp Shows tour. The show will play the post for five days, opening at the Main Theatre on the main post, Dec. 1.

Acclaimed by the hyper-critical New York drama reviewers on its initial presentation as the "best new American play of the season," "Claudia" is a human, amusing and touching comedy, which has had a run of almost two years on Broadway.

The play takes its title from the central character, a child-like but knowing wife. Claudia is a problem to her husband and know will then move to Theatre No 7 in the Sand Hill area on her mother. She does and says the darndest things, but somehow they seem to make sense when analyzed.

Delightfully worded, rich in amusing lines, it hasn't a single carefully aimed wisecrack to indicate that the only effect intended is to be smart. There is no straining for effect, no slick insincerity, but "Claudia" has extremely funny dialogue with a little emotion here and there as the play gets along toward its end. And the flighty, flutery antics of Claudia all seem perfectly correct and very funny, because it's adolescent, irresponsible Claudia.

McNAIR PLAYS CLAUDIA

The name part will be portrayed by Emily McNair, former leading lady for Producer George Abbott, and Norman MacKay, featured artist of many Warner Brothers pictures and the Kaufman and Hart play, "The Fabulous Invalid," appears as David, her husband.

Myrtle Tannahill, member of a family famous in America theatre for three generations, and former leading lady for William Gillette and the late George M. Cohan, will essay the role of Claudia's mother. Others in the cast are Edward Harvey, Alice Buchanan, Hamilton Mott, Norma Bianchi, and Justina Wayne.

"Claudia," the first of the USO-Camp Shows winter presentations, will open in the Main Theatre Dec. 1 for a two-day stay. The show will then move to Theatre No 7 in the Sand Hill area on Dec. 3. The final two days, Dec. 4 and 5, will see the comedy in the Harmony Church area at Theatre No. 4.

The time schedule for the shows are: Dec. 1, 8 p. m., Main Theater. Dec. 2, 6:30 p. m., Main Theater. 8 p. m., Main theater, for colored personnel only.

All other showings on the post will begin at 8 p. m.

Japs Want No Crushing Nazi Victory

Col. Kelley Tells Current Events Group Of Woman's Club

The Japanese neither want to see Germany win with any marked strength remaining nor do they want Russia defeated badly, Co. Reginald Kelley, president of the Reclassification Board at Benning, declared Monday in an address before the Current Events group of Woman's Club. "Japan wants Russia to remain strong enough to act as the balance of power toward any belligerent country.

"On the other hand," Col. Kelley said, "the only people the Japanese really fear are the Russians. Japan has visioned herself as dominating the Far East, and there Russia is in the way. The Soviets have kept Siberian troops just across the border from Manchuria thus immobilizing the 'cream of the Japanese Army.' "

Col. Kelley's lecture was the second of a series of talks before the group clarifying moves of the Allied and Axis forces.

When asked if he believed there was any possibility if internal dissension in Germany, the speaker said that while Japan has "face" which she must not lose, and France has its sense of honor which makes handling the French a job of utmost delicacy, Germany has neither and will, therefore, sue for peace when she realizes that she is defeated.

NEXT MOVE

Tracing developments of the war which have taken place during the past month, Col Kelley pointed out that all indications are that a strong second front will be developed.

"The next move, from a logician's standpoint, would be to take Crete and Greece and reinforce the Yugo-Slavs. This in turn would give Turkey courage Turkey wishes to remain neutral but does not want to find herself on the losing side.

"The tremendous climax now being reached in the war was prepared at the conference of Churchill and Roosevelt in June, 1942. The decision reached then was one of the most momentous in the history of the world."

So emphasized Col. Reginald H. Kelley, president of the reclassification board, in a lecture Monday afternoon on late developments of the war before the Current Events group of the Woman's Club. The lecture was the second of a series of talks clarifying moves of the Allied and Axis forces.

Col. Kelley pointed out that although hundreds of persons, including scores of newspapermen, must have known of the decision, first word of the plan was not known until November 8, when American troops were reported landing at Casablanca, Oran, and Algiers. "It was a beautifully coordinated movement under American command," he declared.

21st QM Gave Radio Show November 19

The Regimental Chorus, directed by Lt. Henry A. Talbert, Pasadena, Calif., offered an original theme song, a spiritual, and closed the program with a semi-popular tune. In the absence of Lieut. Winfred Gilmore, regular announcer, Lieut. Robert C. Long, of Norfolk, Va., handled the broadcast.

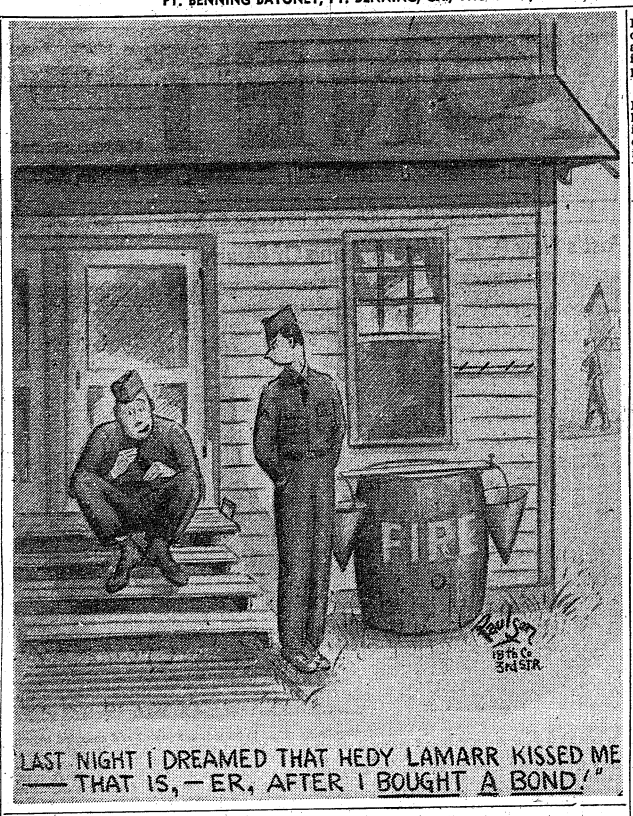
the sweetie pie, wife, of parents, as the case may be.



Then there's the fellow who is very punctual about answering letters. He has written to all his friends, telling them where he is. Then, as soon as he gets a letter, he manages to get off an answer. Opposite that, of course, there's the fellow who keeps muttering, "I really must write to Aunt Sally. I owe her one." A month or so later. he does get out a letter and the Auntie, or whoever it may be, is so astonished to hear from him that she probably answers immediately, thereby making another letter that the poor fellow must keep worrying about answering.

Another type of letter writer is the great lover. He keeps up a correspondence with half a dozen or so babes back home or from other cities near where he has been stationed at various Army posts.

The technique of these lads varies widely, too. Some merely write the same letter to all of the girls, simply changing names and addresses. This is highly recommended—as long as you can keep the ladies from getting together to compare notes sometime. Whenever this happens, you can be sure there's going to be fur flying. Then the "sugar reports" sometimes get changed to "blitz reports" and one or more correspondents have to be crossed off the list of the soldier.

Some adopt a variation of this technique and write the same material—but change it enough in each letter to keep up a sort of variety. Others attempt to keep all their women separate and to write fond, long letters to each one, suiting them to the individuality of the recipient. This, of course, shows much more imagination, but it also means a lot more work—and can be charged with plenty of high explosive, because sometimes the poor soldier gets mixed and says the wrong things to the wrong girls. For this, it is recommended that, if at all possible, duplicates should be retained so that the man can refer back to just what he has said to which girl. The fly in the ointment, however, is the difficulty of keeping dupes unless you have a typewriter; otherwise you have to write the same letter out twice.

Anyway, these lads do manage to find that their efforts make it very much worth while bucking the line at the post window and they, too, will tell the G. I. who doesn't ever find any mail waiting for him—"You can't get mail if you don't send any out."

Art Contest Is Sponsored By 2nd STR

All entries are now in for the Art Contest recently sponsored by the Second Student Training Regiment, and the 100-odd pieces of original art-work by Officer Candidates and permanent personnel of the Regiment testify to the success of the promotion. It is the first contest of its kind ever put on in the Harmony Church area.

Entries are being judged by Lt. Frank Irvine of the Reproduction Plant at the School and Lt. Milton Bach of the Third Student Training Regiment.

Additional showings are planned in the Harmony Church area and in Columbus.

Most of the art received were water-colors or pastels, and many of them depicting army life. Some were done by officer candidates while on duty in the Hawaiian Islands; others are from scenes on maneuvers in the U. S. There are also oils, pencil and pen and ink drawings and several crayon pieces.

MONTGOMERY WARD

9th Company, 1st STR, Boast Excellent Mess

Thursday, November 26 is Thanksgiving Day, and another day of work for officer candidates at Fort Benning . . . however, the day carries added significance this year as the candidates continue their training which will enable them as second lieutenants to handle important wartime responsibilities.

Around the kitchens, 9th Co., 1st Student Training Regiment, will put its company mess against the best of them. The mess officer and personnel have acquired a reputation for fine food and service. Added features include the serving of hot drinks and lunches in the evenings, welcomed by the candidates after a night problem in the field. Mess officer of the Company is 1st Lt. Edward M. Weiss.

Football, touch and coniact, is the popular relaxation sport in the 9th Company . . . candidates spend their off moments with the "pigskin" and often Monday's first formation reveals "charley horse" sustained during week-end scrimmages. Often the tactical officers join in the play, which many times brings out some outstanding football talent.

In addition to the traveling P.X. the 2nd Battalion OC's now have an Officer Candidates Club open to them during off-duty hours. Drinks, candy, cigarettes, cigars and many other items are sold here. Mainly, however, the club offers the candidates a place and a chance to get together.

Various demonstrations in the field, attended by more than one OC class, enable the candidates to renew acquaintances with "buddies" of good old non-com days. They assemble during the "breaks" and talk over the old times.

Capt. Edward W. Diehl, of the 9th Company, invites his candidates to bring their guests to the Sunday noon mess. Many have had friends, wives, or girl-friends eat with the company at this meal.

Sgt. I. J. Royal To QM Officer School, Camp Lee

With the acceptance of Staff Sgt. Isaac J. Royal for the Quartermaster Officer Candidate School, at Camp Lee, Va., the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) loses one of its most efficient and capable workers, officials said.

Coming into the army on March 17, 1941, Sergeant Royal was sent to Camp Lee, Va., for basic training and proved so efficient that he was kept there for 11 months as a company clerk. Transferred to Fort Benning, Georgia in February, 1942, he was assigned to the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), under the command of Colonel Ellis F. Altman. Working in the Army's largest truck unit operating on one post, Sgt. Royal was administrative assistant clerk in Regimental Headquarters and a member of the Regimental Chorus.

Lt. Marquardt Named Aide de Camp To Fulton

Lt. Oswald K. Marquardt, of Upper Montclair, N. J., has been appointed aide de camp to Brig. General Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning it is announced at post headquarters. Lt. Marquardt succeeds Captain Guy E. Snavely, Jr., who has been relieved of this duty. Army regulations specify that an officer in rank of Captain or above will not serve as aide to a brigadier general.

Capt. Snavely was recently promoted to his present rank and is now serving as assistant to the executive officer. Lt. Marquardt, previous to his present assignment, served as assistant to Lt. Col. James R. Johnson, post inspector.

Novel Club Is Formed By Service Battalion's Co. B

Soldiers of Co. "B" Service Battalion, First Student Training Regiment have inaugurated a stimulating, entertaining, and beneficial club which seeks to further develop military efforts in maintaining morale "esprit de corps."

Lt. Frank E. Burdell's company clerk, Corp. Leopold Foy, initiated the action in helping the war effort by purchasing War Bonds, also in starting a sound banking account. One must own or start a War Bond Saving account before joining the club.

In view of the variety of soldiers in the club, the close unity of its members provides a channel both up and down streams. The diverse hobbies, experiences, and talents of the group provide unending amusements in the form of impromptu gatherings which are to be expected in an Organization such as this. In addition to this, all forms of social programmes and gatherings that will frequently include civilian visitors are planned to produce warm and sincere acquaintances.

THIS IS SERGEANT EATON. YOU CAN'T TELL HIM FROM DIRT WHEN HE GETS CAMOUFLAGED.

Kaiser's Ex-Machine Gunner Is Now Blasting for Uncle Sammy

Twenty-four years ago George Schmidt was a member of the Kaiser's Army firing machine bullets at the Allied Forces in Flanders, Northern Belgium.

Today, the same George Schmidt, now an American, is a private in Company D, 54th Infantry, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, receiving basic training in the United States preparatory to taking up machine gun instructions in the "American way." He arrived as a "filler" a week ago.

Schmidt, a native of Germany, spent 22 months in the Kaiser's Army—serving with three separate outfits, the 12th Bavarian Division, the 5th Battalion and the 2nd Machine Gun Company. Prior to his actual four-month service in Flanders, he spent 18 months in training camps.

During the period, Schmidt recalls, his company suffered some casualties but non were taken prisoners. As for himself, he escaped without a scratch.

From what he had seen of training so far, save more modern equipment, ideas and conveniencies, there is not much difference between Army life today that it was 24 years ago. The principal difference, he said, was that "Officers of the U. S. Army are all-round nicer." He added that German officers were harsh, and that he was proud to have been given the privilege of serving in the U. S. Army.

TO STATES IN 1922

Schmidt came to the United States in 1922 at the invitation of an uncle who owned a 160-acre farm at Park Rapids, Minn., which was inherited when the relatives died three years ago.

When he was selected to serve in the fast-moving, hard-hitting Armored Force, Schmidt rented a portion of the farm, leaving the remainder in charge of a tenant farmer.

With his experience, First Lieutenant Stanley Weiner, Schmidt's commanding officer, said he believed the filler would be a valuable asset to "Deadly D Company" and would be one of the unit's best machine gun instructors. His battlefield experience should do much to steady the younger element in the Company, Lieutenant Weiner said.

Although he has not had a chance to become familiar with the Browning Machine Gun, Schmidt is to be sent to MG school as soon as he completes his basic training.

Schmidt, who as naturalized an American citizen in 1928, is 43 years old.

"ASK HIM WHAT BECAME OF THE COMPANY'S PET DOG."

Service Quintet, First STR Defeats Crusaders, 45-20

In their first basketball game of the season the Service Battalion of the First Student Training Regiment met the Columbus "Crusaders" on the "Old 24th Gym" court. Service Battalion proved the better of the two to the tune of 45 to 36. The score at the half was Service Battalion 24, "Crusaders" 17.

All of the substitutes of the Service Battalion saw action in the fast game. High scoring honors on the Service Battalion team were shared by Captain Johnson, Baker and Reape. Tom Rivers, captain and manager of the "Crusaders" was the high scorer for his team.

The Crusader team is one of long standing in Columbus, having played many teams on Fort Benning during the past four years. The club has been formed by a group of young colored men who participate in athletic and social activities.

The Service Battalion is a new organization on the post having been formed on September 1st, and though inexperienced in team play promises to be very high in athletic standards. The team has arrangements under way to meet Tuskegee, Morris Brown College, and other teams in the future.

O. C. Port Never Forgets Face Or Name

Members of the 4th platoon 10th Co., 1st STR feel candidate Tom Port would be a good representative for "What's My Name," coast to coast radio program of wide popularity, following an uncanny ability to remember faces and names of his buddies, as ably demonstrated in formation Monday evening.

The platoon leader had earlier suggested the platoon get better acquainted in order to enable them to use the knowledge in the barracks rating later on in the course. In order that he might get the boys a little more interested in this idea he said the winner would be given a dollar to buy that squad the cokes.

After ten days of living and working with the platoon Port was able to call 49 of the 50 members of the platoon by name. Needless to say the boys of the 1st squad enjoyed the cokes.

Top-Flight Boxers Start Training For Bouts This Winter

The boxing team of the Service Battalion, First Student Training Regiment, has started training in anticipation of team and tournament bouts this winter. Coach Georgie Pace, former World's Featherweight Champion, who will be fighting as a Lightweight, had a large turn-out of both professionals and amateurs.

Outstanding in initial workouts were: J. H. Eskew, who has won thirty-three consecutive professional fights and is New England Light Heavyweight Champion; Thomas Stewart, former Golden Gloves fighter, then a professional; Kid Corbin of Philadelphia, an experienced amateur with a hard punch in both hands; Young Henry Armstrong (Terry Livingston) Golden Gloves fighter who handles himself like a professional; and Danny Harris, a middleweight with a long record of K. O.'s in Golden Gloves and other amateur fights.

NASH COMMISSIONED

Technical Sergeant John Nash who has been at Fort Benning since July of 1920 has been commissioned a second lieutenant and ordered to Fort Bragg, it has been announced at post headquarters.

For 18 of his years at the post, Lt. Nash has been in the theater office. He came here originally with Co. D., of the 7th Engineers and at that time the buildings of the post were just under construction. He lives now with his family on the post but will leave for his new assignment Thursday.

2ND STR BOND-MINDED

None can say the Second Student Training Regimen isn't War Bond-minded. For many moons now Officer Candidates in the Regiment have been shouting the sleep out of their lungs first thing in the morning with three-minutes of voice exercise consisting mainly of chanting such hollow phrases as Hong Kong and Ding Dong.

In recent weeks the Third Battalion of the Regiment changed its chant to "Buy Bonds."

MORE PROMOTIONS

New chevrons are being worn by the following men of the 10th Armored's 55th Engineer Battalion. The men are:

To be sergeants, Wilburn E. Mobley, Clarence S. Foley and Coy M. Kirkland; to be technicians 4th grade, John W. Kirkendall and Vernon C. Rippy, and to be technicians 5th grade, Allen C. King.

The first company in the regiment to achieve a 100 per cent participation in bond pay reservations was the 31st. and the 23rd followed a week later.

AN ARMY WIFE SHOPS EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS

That silly smirk and self satisfied toss of the head you've noticed lately is due entirely to the fact that I have taken my own advice seriously. I'm way down on the list of gifts and hope before long to have it fully completed. Buying for oneself has always been a thrilling experience, buying for those we love is even nicer, especially when the gifts are something they'll treasure long after Christmas morning. All the emotions of happiness in doing for others are yours when you become a part of the happy people choosing gifts in the holiday setting of Columbus stores.

CHANCELLOR'S with a store at 1108 Broadway and a small shop under the Doughboy Stadium at the Post has long been known as a business catering to the haberdashery needs of our husbands, both in civilian and military needs. Their many years of familiarity with the tastes and needs of army men qualify them as experts in their line. It was no great surprise to find some rather special gifts for our menfolks. The handsome, usable and practical gift that should be the high point of the gift unwrapping hour. A rare and hard-to-find gift is the beautifully tailored 100% Botany wool bathrobe. They come in a stunning khaki color, which is suitably designated for the army. Navy blue and maroon for those who prefer a change from regulation color sameness. A small gift for the children to consider is the Sambrooks, Limited of London, 100% wool regulation colored ties. Hollywood adjectives and expletives are necessary to describe the handsome leather gifts. Manicure, pedicure, filled toilet cases, the favorite Dopp kits, insignia decoration and jewelry cases in finest English pigskin and saddle leather, suede lined. The prices for these superlative masculine luxuries are priced at an unusually low figure when one acknowledges the quality.

There's something gay and entirely party mood in giving a glittering evening bag. KAYSER - LILIENTHAL, INC., has just unpacked a collection that looks like a page out of Vogue. Every possible size, style and type are yours for an early choice. Heavy rich satin in glowing colors with jeweled clasps. Silver and gold kid, quilted for unusual richness. Beads on sheer marquisette, woven grosgrained ribbon in fuschia. Belle of the Ball accessories these, which will be treasured by the lucky women who receive them. Another thing to consider for the gal who likes lovely things is the famous line of Germaine Monteil toiletries. Exquisite lilac dusting powder with a luxurious puff. Fat satin sachets to put in bureau drawers. An unusual hat box make-up kit in English saddle leather, waterproof lined and filled with the specialties of the house of Germaine Monteil. A set of three lipsticks for the lady who makes up with fastidious attention to color harmony. This house has a new perfume with a gay name, Laughter, a lovely lasting fragrance. For the sophisticated lady there's Aphrodisia and Tigress perfume.

MILLER - TAYLOR SHOE STORE isn't exactly the place for a variety of Christmas gifts, but it's a wonderful store to treat yourself in case you're commencing to wonder if you're thinking about everyone you know and neglecting yourself. Well shod feet are something no fastidious woman neglects. The persistent trend toward comfortable walking heels makes me wonder if our beloved high heel shoe is doomed for a blackout on fashion pages. The newest and smartest shoe for wear today and into spring is the smooth leathered browns. Turf tan, wild honey, tobacco grown and town brown. Turf tan is the lightest color and each fascinating named shade is a tone darker, the town brown being the deep rich brown for dress wear. All these shoes are street shoes with a walking heel, with fine stitchings and detail that give them the dressy, trim air we like for our party moments. Miller-Taylor has a table of real bargains at a time of the year when we're thinking of parties and dress-up hours. They've reduced their finest evening shoes to $4.95. Of course, there's a broken size range, but imagine the thrilling bargain of finding a braided silver sandal by Laird Schoeber for a price like that.

What ever hours we have to spend together as a family should be luxurious ones of comfort. Home and house slippers to rest tired feet after the tiring demands of the day is every man's and woman's right. For a blissful look of content, what better for the man in your life than a trim leather house shoe of soft calf from KIRVEN'S? Soft warmness is his if you give him a pair of the popular Fuzzy-Wuzzy slippers. They're packable too, and should be insurance against the cold floors of tents and barracks if he has to leave you. For the daughter the adorable wedge heel, quilted and embroidered slippers in light blue, deeper blue and maroon are something elegant and leisure hour. Nice enough for the prettiest negligee. Kirven's tell me house slippers will not be obtainable when their present stock is exhausted, so a gift like this will be a duration comfort as well as a pretty grand gift.

The KIDDIE SHOPPE at 1144 Broadway is a special place of joy for shopping mothers. The atmosphere, meticulous curtesy and sincere attempt to gain satisfied customers makes for very pleasant shopping. The shop is gay with garments for the tiny one up to the sizes for the junior miss, who has very definite ideas of her own on what she'd like to wear. Several years ago one bought the appealing stuffed animals for the small moppet. Today the young miss and even the sophisticated college girl satisfy the woman's eternal love for dolls by using the gay stuffed dolls and animals to decorate their bedrooms. The Kiddie Shoppe has the adorable panda, beloved by all for it's pert black and white fuzziness. The relaxed and cuddly Sleepy Dolls that unzip to hold pajamas is certain to be a favorite Christmas gift. The nursery rhyme of "the gingham dog and calico cat—" has it's prototype in this shop, for those who love their nursery rhymes. An up-to-the-minute miss will adore the small stuffed animal with a Red Cross workers uniform, just like her mother wears.

All due respects to the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, there are times when the radio refuses to transmit soothing sounds. Love of music prompts one to turn to their phonographs at hours like that. The beloved Christmas carols can be heard over and over again if one has a phonograph and records. SEARS ROEBUCK have an outstanding collection of records. Their album sets come in a variety of choices to please every member of the family. There's Fred Waring's album entitled "'Twas the Night Before Christmas" for the entire families' Christmas pleasure. For the children, Ronald Coleman's reading of Dicken's Christmas Carol. The 'teen age would be estatic over the album collection of hot Dorsey, Harry James, Benny Goodman and Glenn Miller records. Sears Roebuck has an outstanding selection of fine symphony recordings in album form of the world's finest music and musicians. Wonderful gifts these are for hours of pleasure long after Christmas is a happy memory. While you're in the store leave the children in the toy department, especially the young lad in the family. You'll have moments of freedom for shopping while they spend blissful hours among the many toys Sears Roebuck has for the young.

WHITE'S BOOK STORE is a veritable treasure house of Christmas ideas. Their line of social stationery would be an especially fine choice for one of the women on your list. There are counters of engaging trifles for the small gift, leather address books, scrap books, ration card containers and supplies for the desk that can be wrapped to fill the Christmas stocking. Wrapping? White's Book Store are headquarters for the woman who personalizes her gifts with unusual paper, tissues, seals and ribbons. The themes of the paper are carried out with the accompanying cards and seals. One especially lovely paper has figures from Dicken's "Christmas Carol." Another beautiful paper has demure angels against a blue background. Remembrance of a New England Christmas can be recalled with paper of a quaint calico like print. Beautifull colored seals that can be pasted on plain colored tissue to make Christmas scenes are very unusual and individual. Handsome bronze military seals for a military touch. No need for the white tissue, red ribbon tied package when one has a choice of Christmas wrappings like these. The most inexpensive gift can be glamorous with fine wrappings and dexterous hands.

THE PATRICIA SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel is festive for the holiday shopping mood. Of course, Patricia's Shop is primarily a place to find your holiday clothes, but she also has gifts that any woman would gloat over. Exquisite handkerchiefs, white linen with imported lace that's wide and bride-like. Unusual bow earrings of felt, velvet ribbon or lace. The young college or high school girl would adore her sweaters. They're made of the soft Shetland Indian Kashmir, which is the irreplaceable English wool. She has the slip overs and cardigans in heavenly shades to match or contrast. It isn't only the young girls that like these sweaters, those who refuse to mention birthdays find them smart accessories for their prized tweed suit. There's underwear so fragile and exquisite any woman would feel glamorous as a movie star if some thoughtful member of her family choose them for her. Patricia carries that fine line of bags tagged Koret. The quality and finish of these superlatives put them on the top of the list for the extra special gift.

THE SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY and its varied services are so much a part of our life we're somewhat inclined to let the advantages they have to offer remain in our minds as an everyday convenience. There is a gift for many a man or woman in their store. The sewing classes they hold have been the means of many a woman owning clothes she wouldn't have if she hadn't learned to sew. What a wonderful gift a series of lessons would be. A more experienced seamstress would find her finished product in the modiste class if some member gave her an order for those famous nationally advertised dress forms made by Singer Sewing Machine Company. A thoughtful gift for quick mending service are the sewing kits this store has. They come in a variety of styles, prices and sizes to suit every need a purpose, from a small kit to tuck in ones suitcase to a handsome case complete with every sewing need. They might suggest these for the children to give mother. The bright colored threads and shining equipment of the kits make them gifts the children would enjoy buying.

The FIRESTONE STORE at 1246 First avenue has not let the automobile and tire rationing put them out of business. There are some of the automobile accessories available, one with especial appeal to women drivers, a lightweight foot jack for changing tires. With our men leaving us, it's quite possible we'll have to change tires in the months to come. With coffee rationing facing us, what little coffee we are able to have must be perfectly made. The Silex coffee makers are known to produce a perfect brew. The Firestone Store has a wide selection of this popular coffee maker, in all electric and gas burner types. They also have a wide selection of popular numbers of those hard-to-find records we're all hunting for. You'll find a lot of gift ideas in this store worth investigating, for their variety and stock is truly a Christmas selection.

— — V — —

We have come to think of our modern drug stores as all purpose supply houses and sometimes forget their original purpose and service to the community, that of dispensing prescriptions carefully and accurately according to the doctor's orders. JOINER'S PHARMACY at 14-13th Street takes a deep personal pride in their pharmaceutical service. Don't you think an attractive box filled with medicine cabinet needs would be a practical gift? I don't suppose it could be called glamorous, but we're thinking of service and practicability these days. I, for one, would like a supply of aspirin tablets, bandaids, iodine, rubbing alcohol, milk of magnesia and a supply of bandages in various sizes. If this idea is too prosaic, look to the toiletry counter, you'll find a choice of spirit-lifting items in colorful containers carrying nationally known names.

Thanksgiving—1942

As an American Army, we should be grateful for the blessings that we share,—blessings that come to each of us from the heart of a grateful nation.

As soldiers we are comfortably housed, our tables are filled with the best of foods, our clothing is warm and serviceable, our weapons are the finest that human ingenuity and resource can devise, our equipment has no equal. The best of the land is ours, for it is the product of our fellow countrymen, concrete expression of America's gratitude for its Army.

The folks at home have not forgotten us, nor will they ever forget. Concord, Bunker Hill, Yorktown, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and Appomattox are imperishable shrines. The white crosses on the soil of France still stand within the heart of Americans. The Armies of the United States have the love, concern, and respect of a grateful people. Let us offer our thanks this year, as we labor without pause, that we have received such blessings from our comrades at home.

They have not forgotten; let us not in turn forget. First the men of the Army should not forget our inheritance from the nation of yesterday. Plymouth Colony, where the men, women and children faced the terror of the wilderness, the rigors of a bitter winter, the scourge of sickness and disease, yet did not surrender their ideal of freedom. 1776—when an infant nation, badly disorganized, ill-equipped and impoverished took up the gage of battle for liberty, and suffered through years typified by Valley Forge to victory. 1812,—the struggle for Texas, the bitter years of 1861-65, whenever the security of our nation was threatened, wherever the blood of the Army was let for the safety of our land, here was our inheritance wrought. Blood, toil and tears are not new words in American history, but they have never been spent in vain. Our nation was fashioned by them, it endured free through them, and we are given this inheritance because of them.

For our part, lest we forget at times, each soldier of this Army is now the guarantor of that inheritance for those who will live in the years to come. This is no small responsibility, for we dare not forget the millions of grateful Americans that look to us to guarantee their homes in peace to them, nor the other millions who believe our promise to restore their lost freedoms.

We are not like the Hessian soldiers, mercenaries of another age. We do not fight for $50.00 a month, or for the side that promises the most. Ours is a struggle for ideals, and to preserve the sacred inheritance of another age. Each of us must constantly be on our guard, lest in our speech and our conduct we may diminish the confidence of America in us—their confidence that we can preserve the inheritance which others have purchased at great cost. In every village or city today, wherever a soldier walks the street, the eyes of America are upon him. Total strangers turn as he walks by. Why? Because he wears a uniform that speaks to every American this day to say, "You shall not know the terror of conquest and tyranny. I am your Army, the guardian of your freedom, and I guarantee that freedom to you with my life." We dare not sully that uniform, nor destroy the confidence of those who trust us. Boisterousness, loose speech, drunkenness, profanity, poor discipline, discourtesy, do not become the men who hold in their hands the future destiny of free people.

So on this Thanksgiving Day, let us be grateful for our glorious past, thankful for the folks at home, conscious of the responsibility which is upon our shoulders, The Army of the United States.—Chaplain Edwin C. Willson.

Who Says We're Soft?

Someone wisely said recently that if you really want to see a genuine cross-section of American life and get a liberal education along with it, ride the day-coach and let the Pullman go. With our transportation problems increasing daily, many people who would otherwise ride Pullman cars or drive private automobiles are taking the day-coaches and are using city buses. It was while riding a bus not so long ago that we innocently overheard a conversation between two soldiers, a monologue rather, that caused our heart to swell with pride and justified our abiding confidence in the spirit and stamina of the 1942 version of the American soldier.

It seems that one of the pair had gone to the station to escort to Fort Benning a newly-arrived officer candidate. The former was giving the latter some indication of what he was to expect during his three-months' training period. With the government ever expanding its officer-training program at Benning, the first soldier's company had been moved into newly-erected barracks in which the heating unit had not yet been completed. Consequently the arrival of the recent cool spell found the boys going to bed wearing their fatigue clothes, their field jackets, and their socks to help keep them warm. Furthermore the boys were shaving with cold water.

"But that doesn't bother us any," the monologist asserted. "We think it's lots of fun! And you ought to hear those boys when they get under a cold shower! But we figure it is good for us—and that we are enjoying luxuries contrasted with what we may have to put up with before the thing is over. It's rough, yes, but if we can't take it, then we ought not to be here.

"They work us morning, noon, and night, but that's good for us too because we don't have time to think about the soft living we left behind us. The more they pile it on, the better we like it."

If this statement is typical of the attitude of the Army as a whole and of the future leaders of the American fighting forces, America has little to fear concerning the outcome of the present war effort. It also bodes ill for Hitler, Hirohito, and their henchmen. And it gives the lie to the enemies of Democracy who tell their people that the Democracies are push-overs because we have grown soft and lazy.

If only remains for those on the home front to give our soldiers the tools of war, and they will use them to good advantage. Our enemies will learn that their talk of the "decadent democracies" was only wishful thinking. They have in store a rude awakening indeed.

The Way Of All Classes

There have been sinister things in the air lately. That is, a little more sinister than usual. 12th Co., 1st S. T. R. is reaching the point where everything seems sinister, but we think that the world has been shaking a bit more than usual here in our tight little area.

We got the sad news one evening that we were to move from our barracks. The chaos precipitated by Lieutenant Terry's innocent announcement made the retreat of Rommel's army in Africa seem comparatively orderly. We took everything with us but the buildings, and thought seriously about taking them. But we figured we'd leave all that nice cold water for some other deserving souls. Then we found nothing but the buildings when we entered where a previous evacuation had taken place. Well, not minding that, we settled down to divide the cubic inches. There weren't many to be had, but those few were cherished. We divided them without bloodshed mainly because there was a rating sheet still due. And we really found that it wasn't so bad having such a chummy crowd. We haven't felt so much breathing on our necks since Selective Service started—and we settled down.

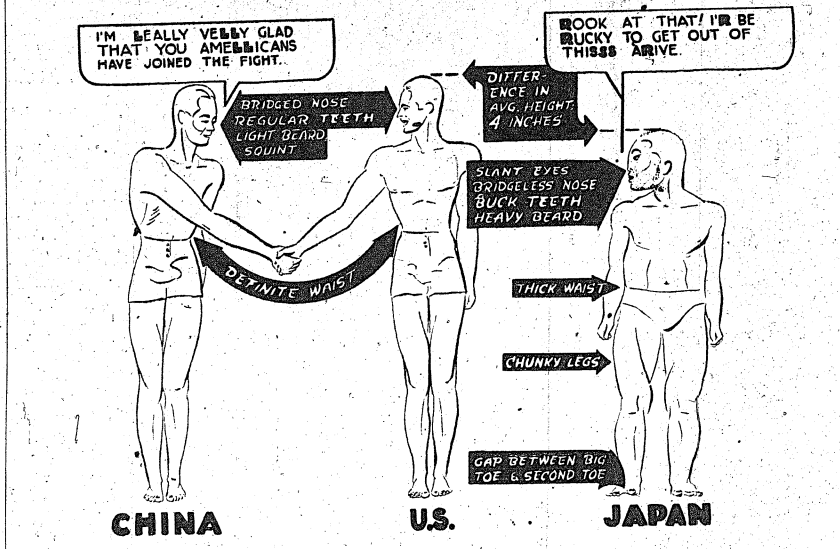
That was the first omen—moving. The second came when we were aroused by a chorus of sirens and discovered the next morning that our theater had gone up in flames. Well, it wasn't just our theater, but we felt a kind of proprietorship, having occupied so many seats so often for so many training films and so many other films. (Just two or three others.) That was a blow. It is discouraging to see the neat little building gutted and ragged. It just doesn't look either GI or Infantry School. But we see the wonders of quick construction daily at Fort Benning, and some day soon—indeed, in a matter of minutes, we'll have another Building 7, which was Theater 8.

The third omen came when our club inexplicably and determinedly closed at the preposterous hour of 9 o'clock on Saturday evening. Figuring that maybe the strain of the week had been too much, we checked on the day. No—it really was Saturday. So we muttered in our beard (not having any beer to mutter in), and were just a bit mollified when it opened again in twenty minutes, the wrath of the mighty having subdued. But still, it was an omen. And we started to wonder.

There were no more unscheduled things like this. But there were and are several scheduled omens. We won't talk about them. But we should mention Jungle Jim. We don't think any class who meets him will ever forget him, and we certainly won't.

Jungle Jim, to the uninitiate, is an important chapter in Boyology here at the Benning school. It is Candidate terminology for Combat Infiltration, and consists of the most successive series of streams, ridges, cliffs and woods that we have ever seen. Crossing the Upatoi was a triumph, though. We had heard of and seen that creek so often that it was a pleasure to put our feet into it. Some of the boys went over their heads. They were the more anxious ones.

Scaling the dizzy and muddy heights of sundry ridges was entertaining especially for those carrying BAR's and other trinkets. Assaulting various installations was the particular delight of the patrol leaders. Bayoneting the woods and everything except the live dummies—as you were, the live enemy—was the gibbering joy of everyone else. All in all, Jungle Jim is a nice five-hour tidbit. It is another of those PW (practical work) sessions that make you long to see GT's instead. But it is good, and it is firm. It is firm for the infirm and good for the bad. And we really don't know, any of us, just what we can take until we go ahead, and take it, and take it, and take it . . .



Help us where you are able, my friends, and we shall see again the glorious day when liberty and peace shall reign on earth.—President Roosevelt to Africa French.

Think of the soldiers at the front. They all have mothers, wives and sisters. We can't all be weeping.—Mrs. Mark Wayne Clark, wife of general who laid groundwork for Africa invasion.

It takes loss of life and loss of blood to attack, to press the war home to the enemy, to win momentous battles.—Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson.

Our task is to destroy the new order in Europe. We are not alone in the great war of liberation, and with our allies will achieve victory over the enemy.—Josef Stalin.

DON'T BUMP OFF YOUR BUDDY

Day Room Duds

BY T. SGT. HARRY R. CHARD

"Who called my bugler a damn fool?" the captain roared.

"I dunno," a meek voice from inside the tent replied, "but who called that damn fool a bugler?"

Another one of those eternal triangles is the old man, the top kick, and who the hell's running this outfit, anyway?

SMILES

Smile is quite a funny thing;
It wrinkles up your face.
When it's gone you never find
Its secret hiding place.
But far more wonderful it is
To see what smiles will bring;
You smile at her while hubby's near,
Tweet tweet, the birdies sing!

DIRTY STORY

Major Binks recently reported the theft of his bath tub that he believed the theft occurred something like a year previous—when asked why he hadn't reported it sooner he replied, "Well, I didn't miss it until today."

Here lies the body of sitting bull,
He died in a curious manner.
He just kept right on sitting
When they played the star spangled banner.

CAPTAIN RECRUIT

"Do you always salute an officer with a cigarette in your mouth?"

"No, sir, not always; you see I'm usually out of smokes just before payday."

Private extra duty says the best way to keep from going on guard Sunday is to go A. W. O. L. on Saturday.

ARTIST SOLDIER

"Have you ever been done in oil?"

"Nah, but I've been done in a lot of black jack games."

OBITUARY

Today we buried Private Goof;
We did it with a shout.
He had a habit of sounding off
After the lights were out.

Says Pvt. Feathersby, the company philosopher: "Soldiering is a game of give and take—give the top kick a growl and take a Sunday K. P."

BLACK MAGIC

A negro soldier while on furlough in the big city gave two bits to have his fortune told. The fortune teller gazed intently for several minutes into the depth of the mystic crystal, and then looked up at the negro and said:

"I see where you won two bucks in a crap game using loaded dice—and that you done six months on the chain gang for stealing chickens." The negro looked in amazement at the fortune teller and said: "Lawdy mercy, white folks, you has done went and told me my inmost thoughts!"

Did you hear the one about the absent minded sgt. major who thinking he had his car, hoofed it into the post exchange filling station and casually asked the attendant to check his rear end?

INSTRUCTOR ROOKIE

"What does this X on the map represent?"

"Beats me, Sarge, unless it's the spot where the body was found."

WAYS AND MEANS

The way of a man
With a maid was once
A puzzle to some old sage.
But the way of a soldier
With liquor and women
Is nothing this day and age.

"I'll shoot the works!" yelled the sentry as he blazed away at the guard house clock.

"Give me another drink, bartender," he asked in a deep-throated roar.

"I'll get in the mill, for I'm over the hill," then he waltzed through the swinging door.

The adjutant noticed a soldier going out the gate at Fort Nub with a barrack bag slung over his shoulder and queried: "Going over the hill, son?"

"I wasn't intending to, sir. But is that the best way out of here?"

WOULD YOU?

If two red lips were turned to you and you were sure that no one knew, would you?

If all the lights were turned down low and you were sure no one would know, would you? . . . The hell you wouldn't!

FAMOUS FAREWELLS

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

How ya' doing gals? I'm speaking specifically of the cash situation in your household. Personally, I'm scraping the bottom of the barrel. The pig bank has been robbed for nickles and dimes. I've looked through purses and pockets for forgotten quarters and pennies. I've even removed cushions on chairs and the davenport and found a thin dime. Strange places money can hide. Why, I even found a fifty-cent piece in a dark corner of the kitchen cupboard. The search has been thorough.

At this particular moment I could cheerfully strangle the self-possessed ones who smugly remind me that there was plenty of warning. They, the precious budgeteers, started paying cash in October. Maybe occult foresight warned them to go on a cash basis as early as September. Their twenty-dollar bills leave me weak and limp with frustration.

I never knew food could cost so much. Those heavy bags I toted to the car from the commissary were daily food necessities. The sum total didn't matter. I blithely signed the chit and chortled with satisfaction if the amount didn't exceed the established media. If it went over, I let him worry about it. The explanation was always, "well, we had a lot of company this month—".

Now food costs cash money. Two heavy bags mean a few cents change from a precious ten-dollar bill. A thick T-bone steak destroys a five-dollar bill. In fact, everything I do melts the supply of green bits I just received from the bank in exchange for a check.

Wouldn't all this change in our handling of finances come during the holiday season? What about the turkey that's supposed to grace the festive board? All logic tells one these are hamburger days just before the man with the beard gets around to rewarding our husbands for services rendered. But we've always had turkey and I can conduct another treasure hunt. There's a special luxury fund I've been saving. What greater luxury than turkey on the 26th of the month when the entire post goes on a no-charge, strictly cash basis.

Pay day will be something riotous. No bills for the first time in the history of this family. If it weren't indecent I'd cash the entire pay check into one dollar bills and finger them with gloating miser-like glee. It took a war department order to change a way of living. Now that it's changed let it stay that way. I'm resigned to looking at price tags and computing totals against cash in the purse. I can do very well without the first of the month complaints and blues that made the first ten days a period of hushed voices and tiptoeing. The slaves of the national habit and credit system have cast the shackles aside.

The USO Presents

By CPL. SOLOMON KLEINDORF

I just happened to remember that today is Thanksgiving. . . . Let's see, what would be a good theme for today? . . . I've got it. Last week I told you about my travelings among the different clubs, and this week I will try to show you why we should be thankful that there are USO Clubs for us to go to and what they have to offer.

First of all, can you think of anything to do in Columbus without going to a single USO Club. . . . Sure, you might be able to go to a show and then have some beer. . . . But how often can you do that and what happens when the end of the month runs around? And how many shows have you gone to (free) that have been sponsored by the USO or one of their affiliated organizations? Concerts, musicals, legitimate theatricals, movies and such. . . . Everyone knows of the fine work that the USO-Camp Shows Inc., have been doing and each season is better than the one before. . . . It's too bad I'm not one to make big words because I find it hard to say exactly how I feel about the United Service Organizations.

Now let us appraise, piece by piece, the different services the clubs in Columbus afford the men of Fort Benning. . . . First there is the atmosphere of the clubs themselves. . . . Many of us have never before now had a chance really to find all the game facilities that the clubs give under one roof. . . . And then there are those who have lived in the larger cities and are used to them. . . . For both sides of the fence there is this answer. Men from the smaller towns are finding things they never had before and men from the larger places find they didn't leave all behind.

I know that it sounds babyish to say some of us miss our home life. . . . Our mothers, our wives, our sweethearts, our girl friends and until the USO came along we missed them more than now. . . . No other organization offers so much to the members of the armed forces and asks for so little in return.

Where else can you get dances, parties, information service, travel service, rooms, lounging facilities, libraries, personal counseling, games, music, radio, popular recordings, radio, arts, crafts, writing paper, home hospitality, refreshments, sewing kits, package wrapping, and mailing? . . . And don't let me forget, the shopper's service, skating parties, all kinds of sports, and so many things you can't remember them all.

I think that is enough for me to say, but there is one other that must be said before I close and that is. . . . Hats off to the USO and thank you.

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

SERGEANT McDONALD'S WASTEBASKET

For a good while now the army has been badly in need of someone to "stick out his neck" and give advice to the lovelorn, the troubled, and the perplexed.

After numerous efforts to draft Dorothy Dix, a special G. I. board decided to designate some unsuspecting non-com for the job. At about the time in question I ambled into the office to ask for a three-day pass and instead of getting same, I had this "pink elephant" thrust upon me. You can't say no to a second lieutenant so here I am.

The idea is for me to draw upon my wide experience (mostly civil) and advise individuals on anything they want advice on whether I know anything about it or not. You may follow it at your own risk.

The first letter to reach my desk is from a private in—company—regiment, which is as follows:

Dear Sergeant:

I am 42 years old and I have been in the army 22 years, 19 years of which I spent at Ft. Benning. I spent the other three at the induction station filling out forms. During this time I have never been gigged, never been AWOL, never been in the guardhouse, never missed a meal, and at every inspection my foot locker has been above reproach. Do you think it will be all right for me to go to the C. O. and ask him to promote me to PFC?

Ambitious

We shouldn't be too hasty about promotions etc. Don't you think that perhaps you had better think the matter over before you do anything rash. At least have a heart to heart talk with your mess Sergeant about it. Don't forget too that a private has one of the most important positions in the army.

Dear Sergeant:

I am a "shack man" and my mother-in-law writes that she is coming here real soon to live with us for the duration. I don't know whether she means the rest of the war or for the duration of her life.

Could you tell me what steps to take to enter foreign service?

Desperate

Being a happy bachelor I can hardly get excited over your predicament, but if I were in your shoes I would apply for Officer's Candidate School, the army needs leaders who know what it is to have been "under fire."

Dear Sergeant:

I have a girl friend who is a Corporal in the W. A. A. C.'s and I'm only a private. Since regulations forbid soldiers from giving gifts to a superior in rank what am I going to do about giving her a Christmas present?

Hopeful

If your girl is a real soldierette and I'm sure she must be or she wouldn't be going with a man of such sterling character as you are, I feel sure that she will send you a present and naturally not expect one from you in return. If she takes a confrary attitude as women sometimes do, just send me her name, address, and telephone number and I will try to fix things up for you.

Editor's note:

Address letters for advice to the Bayonet and they will be answered by Sgt. McDonald.

TOY SOLDIERS

Harry R. Chard
T-Sgt. 7th Obsn. Sq. AAF (SP)

Where are the boys who use to play
With their army trucks on the floor,
Hauling supplies to the front lines
Out through the kitchen door?
What has become of these little boys
Who beat on their toy drums:
Playing the part of soldiers
Marching with wooden guns"
What are they doing? I'll tell you
They're still marching, "and how"—
But they're getting fifty bucks a month
For they're "in the army now."

SOME DAY I'LL BE BACK

Rudolf Schwed, Pfc.
Ass't. Librarian
Fort Benning, Ga.

The world is in flames and so is my heart,
Delays come and go—we still are apart.
It seems like a century since first we met
I do remember and will never forget.

Always will remember our last rendezvous,
When I promised faithfully on Fifth Avenue
To came back; but now gladly abey the call
To defend our country, so it never will fall.

Now I am also a man behind the gun
I'll do my share, this job will be done.
And I know at home you are doing your part
Everyone does with some pride in his heart.

Chin up dear! Our country will always be free
Though if it's God's will, if it has to be
I am willing to fight and proudly will die
To keep flying our banner in the almighty sky.

We'll take care of Germany and the "rising sun."
Sooner or later by us, this war will be won;
With God's help the day will come
—the day of Victory
Then we will be happy again, just you and me.

TOP SERGEANT

By Pvt. William Jones
HQ. Co. Reception Center

Tough?
Sure he's tough.
He must be tough
To make us rough enough

To beat the Axis.
Bluff?
Yes, he bluffs
When he yells
And says:
"I should break your necks."
When he would give his life
To save any man
Under his command.

He is often misunderstood,
And many heartless remarks
Are hurled in his direction.
But he must continue to drill
The new recruits mercilessly.

He knows there will come a day
When every lesson will pay.
For at the front
The enemy does not
Lighten up on the soldier
Who is soft.

So Buck Privates all
Let us arise
When the bugle calls,
And fall out on the field
And drill until
Our Top Sergeant says:
"Enough, Dismissed."

Tuesday, Dec. 1, the Reception Center Chorus will broadcast their regular weekly show at the usual time of 6:05 p. m. . . . After opening with their theme, "They Look Like Men of War," the chorus will sing "Absence". . . . The thing that makes this week's show so outstanding is that new and better variety is being used. . . . There will be vocal soloists and piano solos; . . . Lawrence Armstead will sing "Asleep in the Deep," and "The Lord's Prayer" will be sung by Otis Wright. . . . The quartet, which at this writing is still in Florida, will be back in time to do two numbers, one of which will be a spiritual. . . . Pvt. For a change Sgt. Bill Carrick will do a piano recital alone. . . . The date for the recital is tomorrow and the program will be the 6:05 "Fort Benning On the Air" program, coming to you over WRBL every day, Monday thru Friday at 6 p. m. . . . Many of the men of Fort Benning have heard Bill accompany a singer but few have heard him do a solo. . . . Therefore this should prove to be a real treat.

Once again a call is going out for talent, talent, and more talent. . . . Do you sing, play, or dance—or perhaps you have a very interesting story to tell about the type of unusual work that you have done or seen or maybe you are one of those people that have lived an exciting life and you want to tell the men of Fort Benning and the civilians of the surrounding towns all about it. . . . If you fit into any of the above mentioned slots, just drop a line to the Program Director, Public Relations Office, Fort Benning. . . . If it is more convenient for you to telephone the information in, the phone number is FB 3535. . . . Just let him know your name, organization and what you can do. . . . At the earliest possible moment you will be slated for a ten minute spot on the air.

Arival Aho will do the entertaining on one of the "Fort Benning on the Air" programs this week. . . . Aho has proven himself to be a very fine violinist and always puts on a good show. . . . One other item is listed for the same program but a different day, and that is the 21st Quartermaster Chorus. Sixteen men who can really harmonize and put their numbers over.

Miss Warsawska is also an accomplished composer and linguist, speaking French and Italian fluently, and having a knowledge also of Spanish, German, and Russian.

She made her operatic debut with the Chicago Opera Company in Rossini's "Barber of Seville," and afterwards appeared in Europe in "Lucia di Lamermoor" and "Rigoletto." 1st Regiment Richochet

"I don't know," said Pvt. Joe Stanley at Hdq's Co., "it's very confusing. I make a proposal to my corporal and he says, "When you get to be a non-com you'll have plenty of time to make proposals"..."So I don't say nothing ...When the CO comes around and makes the suggestion, I says, "I thought of that, sir, but I didn't say nothing"..."Private Stanley," he says to me, "that's why you aren't a non-com, no initiative..."

And then there was the sergeant who was assigned to drill and train WAACS, and his transfer papers read, "Assigned to attACTIVE Duty. . Overheard on the post, "I was here at Benning for three months before I discovered seats in a Ft. Benning-Columbus Bus. as for us, we're still looking for standing room. . . but what the hell . . it's the only place on the post where you can get your pants pressed for 15 cents...Bluchett; guide of the 1st platoon at MM 6th Co. wishes that the blonde in the red blouse who passes at noontime would choose another route. He ran into three trees and a post twice last week ...When Capt. Dickson asked Pvt. Gooden what two things he would look for in a vehicle road test, Gooden replied, "Blondes or brunettes, Sir"..."Gooden, go to the head of the class"...and then of course, there's the story about the goldbrick who applied for a transfer to the WAACS, under the impression that it would make him eligible for a Section 8.

There's an OC in the 16th company whose previous military experience has been with a regimental band...he's a little confused on the machine gun but sure is cooking on the nomenclature and functioning of the M3 Piccolo...funny thing . every OC class after the first days of Machine Gun instruction, screams all over the campus, "Blocks out, Bolts forward, Covers down, Haction"...if some of the companies don't stop doing take offs on the MG demonstrators from the 29th, "Howt Huv Haction!" there'll be a bunch of lungs scattered the length and breadth of Glenn Field ...speaking of rifle stretchers, sky hooks and left handed entrenching tools, did any of you guys hear about the supply sgt. who put in a requisition for a couple of cannon heaters?...No kidding,...he got it, too. It's masquerading a stove in the mess hall.

The boys in the 12th Co., OCs voted the Medical Service Demonstration as the best melodrama of the week...even Maurice Evans' Hamlet couldn't match the blood bath scene...the two or three corpses that were spread generously around to provide atmosphere which exceeded in realism only by that swell take out of Old Faithful done in blood...a bit chilling...but you know those medics...if the Obstacle Course Chronic Cripples at the 18th Co. get any more members it's estimate that 25 per cent of the class will hobble up for its diplomas and the other 75 per cent will swing down from the rafters... there's a Rich and a Poor in the 18th Co. and during this period when the Eagle is stubbornly refusing to eat his daily ration of all-Bran to keep regular most of the boys are lined up with the later...or will the censor cut this item out?

Scene 18th Co. Inspection...Lt. to Candidate Home..."Where's your black tie?" Home to Lt... "Lt., Sir, I haven't a black tie."...Well, use your ingenuity"...Lt. ...Sir, I haven't any black ingenuity...We're also trying to figure out what was meant when Candidate Bennet gave out with this classic, when dressing up a squad. "All right, Burris, straighten out your legs and get in line" ...the company was slicked up to get their mugs taken for the alma mater pic...Candidate Wilson was ordered by the Lt. who didn't like the way his socks were looking to "Roll up those socks"... ten seconds later the Lt. came around again and said, "Wilson, I thought I told you to roll up those socks"..."I did roll them up, sir"..."What I meant, Wilson, is to Unroll them UP."

The OC's in the 7th Co. swear its true, so here goes...Candidates Munsen and Nahagin read about the "using Arm" in the mortar field manual and spent the night trying to figure out where in the blazes the thing appeared...they asked other students, called in Tactical Officer, held bull session and no dice... no one knew where the "using Arm" was...the next day Capt. Salley of the Mortar Committee solved the problem..."I'm using Arm of the mortar" to quote Captain Salley, "is the Infantry" ...were their faces red...an old time TOP Kick was watching a bunch of new recruits muddle up a command of "Right Turn." You know, he mused, this army ain't what it used to be...Why, I remember, once in France, right after the Armistice, we wuz marching in a review in front of General Pershing...It was right before we wuz shipped home, and every mother's son in the AEF was in the parade...We were lined up in a Corp front, see, and suddenly General Pershing gives out with a command, "Army, Right Turn."...I wuz on the right flank, and do you know...I marked time in the same spot for two months...wore out 4 pair of shoes...and dug a hole 10 feet deep, on that movement alone... Nope, he said, "it ain't like it used to be"...add other first rate figures to the roster of the 1st STR...All-American Monk Meyers, Army's great back...he's now with the 4th Co. and will report to paratroops upon completion of the course...there was a little trouble on the last night problem of the 4th company, a regimental train was blown up with losses running into five truck loads of fox holes...it was a bad defensive situation until reliable Lt. Goldbar called up and ordered a few hundred yards of final protective line...the Jackson Giants who also bowl in the 1st STR Officers League (see sports page) have been sneaking in practices on the side...our scouts report that if you can't beat the J. G.'s, you can't beat anybody.

Ten Enlisted Men In 124th Are Promoted

Ten enlisted men of the 124th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, have been promoted to higher grades, according to an announcement by post headquarters.

Staff Sgt. Roy H. Lusk was promoted to 1st sergeant and Sgt. John A. McInnis made staff sergeant. Pfc. Robert F. Schermerhorn and Pvts. Sidney J. Gonzales, Jr., Martin Beno, and Cooper L. Partridge were advanced to corporal.

Pfcs. Bruce E. Helm and Harry A. Ramatowski, and Pvts. Walter E. Salois and Anthony R. Werbanteh were promoted to technician 5th grade.

If it takes a cold night and a blazing Officers' Branch Exchange to make a hero, then we have just the man. Pvt. Luther E. Lum, Company A, Service Battalion, 1st STR was on the spot when the fire broke out. He reported it immediately and aroused officers in near-by quarters, guaranteeing their safety and that of their cars parked near the Exchange. Commendation is due Pvt. Lum for a job well done. We also hear he is up for Officer Candidate School, and we hope he makes it.

Peeks at Pics

An up-to-the-minute film musical, jammed to the brim with mirth, melody, and romance, is presented in RKO Radio's "Seven Days' Leave," starring Victor Mature and Lucile Ball . . . The whirlwind action takes place in a U. S. Army camp and in swanky night spots and the homes of the wealthy in and around New York. The story deals with the amazing adventures of a young musician enlistee who is trying to marry an unknown girl and win a $100,000 inheritance in one short week. . . . Top personalities of stage and radio, both the bands of Freddy Martin and Les Brown, and other favorites of the screen are to be seen at the Main Theatre tonight and tomorrow when "Seven Days' Leave" opens.

Peter Lind Hayes, whose famous imitations of famous people is a feature of the pic, is an ardent golfer. Asked by a friend how his golf game was getting along, Hayes said:

"It's terrible. The only way I can get any score these days is to give an imitation of Johnny Dawson or some other good golfer."

The "Falcon" is dead — "Praise the Lord and Pass the Substitution"—and the substitution happens to be the screen brother and the real-life brother of the "Falcon" . . . The "Falcon," as everyone knows is portrayed by George Sanders and in the latest of the series "The Falcon's Brother," the story calls for him to die at the hands of the saboteurs . . . But his brother carries on the work. The brother in the plot is played by Tom Conway, who is the same relation to Sanders off the screen. This pic is the usual run of the mill "Falcon" stories.

All that can be said for the "Trail Riders" is that it is not any worse than the usual run of western thrillers . . . This horse-opry stars the "Range Busters," consisting of John (Dusty) King, David Sharpe, and Max (Alibi) Terhune . . . Terhune, who is well-known to the western lovers, still uses the same wooden dummy and can't get any more laughs now than he could years ago.

Did you ever see a dream dancing? Well, you can see one if you go to see "You Were Never Lovelier" . . . The dreamy is Rita Hayworth and she dances with Fred Astaire to the music of Jerome Kern played by Xavier Cugat . . . Is that enough or should I go on? Once again the story of the father Adolphe Menjou who prohibits his children to marry except in the order of age . . . The oldest one first and so on down the line . . . is told in "You Were Never Lovelier." But, of course, the plot in any pic that has Hayworth, Astaire, Menjou, and many others, is not the least bit necessary . . . Fred Astare has six dance numbers with Rita in their second co-starring film . . . One solo he does to straight rhythm, but no melody, provided by maracas and drums by Xavier Cugat's band.

"I Married a Witch" is a Salsbath brew made by mixing the somewhat corn-fed satiric fantasy of the late Thorne Smith with the ultra-sophisticated fantastic satire of Director Rene Clair. The comedy is either barn-broad or razor-sharp and the cast who serve this cider and absinthe cocktail make it more than easy to take . . . Veronica Lake and Fredric March do more than their share of comedy and satire, but the one that steals the show is Veronica's supernatural screen-father, Cecil Kellaway . . . Not wanting to spoil the show for you, I won't say more than—it is a Must See!

Gators Win Title, Face Auburn "B" Friday Night

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Praise the Gators and pass out the honors! The first Fort Benning Conference race is all over but the shouting and Capt. Red Milton and his crew of snappers from out Harmony Church way are the new kings of Army football around these parts.

To the 124th, therefore, go the heartiest congratulations of this column on their splendid achievement. No need to tell you why they won, because anyone who has seen the orange and blue machine in action could readily see the reasons.

Only thing we want to go on record as saying is that no team was ever more deserving of any honor than are the current champs. Their spirit has been undeniable. Their regiment has backed the team to the hilt. Their coaches fought for the boys, and the boys retaliated by playing their hearts out for the coaches. The Gator win was a triumph not only of ability but of team-work.

And the same type of teamwork shown by the Gators on the gridiron this fall is what is going to win this war for the good old U.S.A. The one-two-four regiment is an exemplary outfit in every way, and their gridiron machine did itself proud this fall. They also did a fine thing for Benning sports, because no finer team could have won the gonfalon.

* * * *

Tomorrow night's fray between the new champs and the Auburn Bees will provide the fort with its own version of the late (and lamented, by some) Georgia-Auburn game. The Gators themselves are a Florida regiment, but their coach, Capt. Red Milton, is an old Georgia Bulldog.

The burly red-head was a bang-up line star for the Bulldogs just a few years back, and he still harbors fond memories of previous Georgia-Auburn tilts in Columbus. Naturally, he was chagrinned on Saturday as he watched the Tigers smash the stuffing out of once-proud Georgia's bowl-bound eleven.

All of which means that there's nothing he would rather do at the moment than lead his soldier team to a ringing victory over the Baby Tigers in the stadium tomorrow night. It wouldn't help Wallace Butts and Sinkwich and Co. any but it would certainly help heal Capt. Milton's own wounds, especially if Jack Meagher himself is doing the master-minding for the Bees.

There is a good chance of that, too, since Meagher requested that the Fort Benning Athletic Association schedule the game for Friday so that his lads could return to Tigertown in time for the homecoming game with Clemson on Saturday. That being the case, he also expressed his own desires to come over to Benning for the game, so it may be Meagher vs. Milton.

Milton has one ace in the hole for the game in his own "Frankie Sinkwich," known better as Roy Cestary. What Mr. Sinky has been to Georgia this year, Cest has been to the Gators. He's their passer, kicker and best plunger, and like Sinkwich hails from Youngstown, Ohio. In the first tilt with Auburn, Cestary was injured and got in for only two plays. His presence on the field tomorrow night is bound to make a difference.

* * * * *

Speaking of the Georgia-Auburn game brings to mind the fun we've had "baiting" the downtown sports editors ever since the upset. Joe (Thin Man) Livingston of the Ledger and Tom (Fat Man) Kinney of the Enquirer, have quite naturally been Bulldog drum-besters all season. Not only that, but they have habitually had Boston College on the frying pan in their columns.

Being a Yankee, naturally, we couldn't just stand by idly, so we've been doing a bit of arguing on the other side about Georgia's national supremacy. And, of course, Saturday's upset plus B.C.'s climb to top spot in the national ranking considerably strengthened our argument. So, now we've got the top hand on the Thin Man and the Fat Man and it's sporting fun.

BAYONET TIPS—Georgi aalumni at Benning will have a chance to see and hear Wally Butts next Wednesday when he is a guest at the Columbus Football Officials annual get-together at the Waverly Hotel. The dinner is at 8, and the fee is two dollars. Tickets can be gotten by calling Red Wadsworth at 2-2381 in the city . . . There will be some mighty fancy boxing on the post this winter by the early season interest . . . The I. S. S. C. will have one of it's best court teams in years . . . Ga Tech's Clint Castleberry to make the majority of the All-Americans even tho he's only a freshie, but what a freshie . . . Georgia to rebound and knock off mighty Tech this week-end despite Castleberry . . . Gators to top Auburn, candidates to outscore the officers, and Dragons to destroy the Tankers in local games.

Former College Stars Romp in 3rd STR Tilt

All-Officer Eleven To Meet Candidates Saturday Night

Doughboy Stadium will be the scene of an unusual grid battle on Saturday night when a galaxy of former big-time college stars will collide in a game between an all-officer eleven and an officer candidate club of the Infantry School's 3rd Student Training Regiment. Kickoff is listed for 8:00 o'clock.

One All-American and two stars who made All-Pacific Coast a few years ago will be in the starting line-up for the officer aggregation. Lieut. Maurice Kirk, who is also co-coach of the colored Benning Panthers, was an All-American guard at Missouri and will start at left guard.

Big Charley Vose, 200-pound fullback from Southern Cal., and Right Guard Norman Hogenson of Williamette, were both nominated for All-Pacific Coast honors at one time. Vose's replacement at the fullback berth will be Lieut. Ben Cantwell, who was a smashing line-crasher for Williams College up New England way.

Other starting backs for the officers will be Mickey Bach of Illinois State at quarterback, Aubrey Jones of South Carolina and Bud Ayres of Massachusetts at the halfback slots. Bill Bessinger of Citadel is an outstanding lineman at right end.

The officer candidates will also have their share of former college talent. Foremost stars are the pair of 225-pound tackles, Tom Johnson of North Carolina's Tarheels and Jack Dargin of Rutgers. A former Notre Dame pivot, Ken Rohyans will be at center for the O. C. club while Illinois' Henry Rybolt is listed as the starter at right end.

The backfield for the future looies will have Al Giddings, once of Penn State at quarterback, Nick Zannos (Oregon) and Henry Kil (Illinois) at the halves and 200-pound Pat Kazanowicz at fullback. The latter once had a tryout with the pro Philly Eagles.

Dragons Upset 117th Eleven by 12-6 Count

Chief Carney Leads 3rd Armored To Victory Before 8,500

Capt. Leo Gregory's scrappy 3rd Armored Dragons played magnificent football Sunday afternoon to hand the 117th Infantry a stunning 12-6 setback before a crowd of 8,500 partisan fans in Doughboy Stadium. The Dragon win over the second-place Breakers enabled the 124th Infantry to clinch the conference honors.

Once again it was Big Chief Carney, the 3rd Armored's Indian fullback, who led the Dragons on the war-path. Although he did not score, the burly back dented Breaker line and dented it time and time again like a battering ram. Carney also played some great defensive ball.

COPRA GOES OVER

Fleet Nick Copra scored the first Dragon touchdown early in the second period when he slithered through guard from the three-yard line after taking the ball from Al Litwak, the ball-handling quarterback. A 13-yard pass from Copra to Litwak a moment earlier had set up the score.

A magnificent 95-yard sustained drive early in the fourth quarter gave the Dragons their second tally when Tony Laskosky raced over from the 12-yard line on a double-lateral. Carney took the ball from center, drove through center and slipped the oval backwards to Dick Kneeland, star guard, who in turn lateraled to Laskosky sweeping wide around end. The latter careened over for the score in the very corner of the gridiron.

BREAKERS FIGHT BACK

Lieut. Colonel Guy Cudmore's Breakers still packed fight, however, and they fought back with a 62-yard scoring drive of their own after the ensuing kickoff. Billy Sturgill set up the score with a 23-yard gallop off tackle, then went across on the six points a moment later on a plunge from the one-foot mark.

Two heroic figures stood out in the Breaker defeat. They were Ken Smith, peppery wingback from Indiana U., and Don Brown, the left end. Smith ran and passed gallantly in a losing cause and played great defensive ball. Brown was a tower of strength on defense and made tackle after tackle to halt the fast-moving Dragon backs.

DRAGONS IN FORM

In toppling the 117th, the Dragon minions of Capt. Gregory displayed their best football of the season to the edification of a large green and white following in the stands. They outcharged and outran the Breakers and piled up 15 first downs to nine for the losers.

Georgie Pace Will Coach Boxers For 1st STR Serv. Bn.

The boxing team of the Service Battalion, First Student Training Regiment, started training last week in preparation for both team and tournament bouts this winter.

A large turnout of prospective team members turned out for Coach Georgie Pace, former who will be fighting with the team as a lightweight.

Outstanding in initial workouts were J. H. Eskow, who has won 33 consecutive professional fights and is New England light heavyweight champion; Thomas Stewart, former Golden Gloves fighter and now a professional; Kid Corbin of Philadelphia, an experienced amateur with a hard punch in both hands; Young Henry Armstrong, another Golden Gloves fighter, and Danny Harris, a middleweight with a long record in Golden Glove and other amateur fights.

Phillipson Ace In Panther Win

Frankie Phillipson, former New York City schoolboy star, paced Fort Benning's Panther eleven to its first 1942 victory last Friday night under the lights of Doughboy Stadium when the Service Battalion lads of the 3rd Student Training romped over Mobile Training School, 19-0.

The fleet tailback ran wild throughout the fray and also handled the punting and passing for the winners with great skill. Midway in the initial period, Phillipson broke loose around right end and with a terrific burst of speed, he scampered 41 yards for a score without an enemy hand being laid on him. Burton's placement gave the Panthers a 7-0 advantage.

MASSENBURG, TALLIES

Benning scored again a few moments later after Phillipson had gathered in the ensuing kickoff on his own 35 and raced back 44 yards to the Mobile 21. It was the longest run of the ball game. In two plays, the Panthers tallied with fullback John Massenburg crashing through tackle from the 10-yard line. This time, Burton's kick failed.

The final Panther tally came in the second period on some great individual work by big Moody Randolph, star Benning end. Randolph crashed through to block a Mobile punt on the ten-yard line, then grabbed the loose ball in the air and crossed the last stripe for the six points.

With the victory well in hand, Coaches Kirk and Hogenson of the Panthers used reserves for most of the final semester and uncovered a budding star in Betro Polk, sub halfback. Twice Polk broke loose for lengthy gains of 38 and 20 yards around midfield.

Mobile's only threat of the entire game came at the very end, when the Trainers blocked a Panther kick on the Benning seven-yard line.

Prominent Football Referee Raised To Major At Age Of 25

W. H. Pearson, prominent Fort Benning and Columbus gridiron official, has just been promoted from the rank of captain to that of major in the United States Army.

At the age of 25, Major Pearson is believed to be one of the youngest officers holding his present rank in the entire Army. He is at present an instructor on the tactical committee of the Infantry School.

Born in Alexander City, Ala., Major Pearson attended the University of Alabama and was graduated with a B. S. degree in 1939.

This fall, Major Pearson has been a familiar figure in Doughboy Stadium where he has served as referee for most of the important football games. He has also officiated high school games in an around Columbus.

Devils Rebound To Topple 11th In Loop Battle

Hennessey Scores Two Of Three Touchdowns During Big Splurge

Scoring their last three touchdowns with record-breaking speed in the final period, the 29th Infantry Blue Devils swept to a 26-0 conquest of the 11th Armored Tankers in Doughboy Stadium Saturday night before a gathering of 5,000 fans. The victory returned the Two-Niners to the win column after a month's lapse, and enabled them to deadlock for second place in the conference standings.

The trio of scores came midway in the last quarter within a space of slightly less than four minutes' time. Two of them were tallied by rugged Jim Hennessey, star right end, who played a bang-up game all the way and considerably strengthened his bid for mythical all-conference honors.

QUICK WORK

The former North Carolina State flank grabbed a neat pass from sub-tailback Joe Ramlenski in the 1st zone and raced 24 yards for the first pair of six-pointers. Then a moment later, after the ensuing kickoff, Hennessey bolted through the Tanker defense, scooped up a fumbled lateral and tore 27 yards for the final Two-Nine tally.

Wingback Bill Chaney and Fullback Joe Bryan were the other scorers for the visitors. Chaney went over in the first period from the one-yard stripe on a reverse from Ed Hurley after a pass from Hurley to Leo Carr and a 17-yard run by Fritz Vogt had set up the score.

BRYAN SLASHES OVER

Bryan's tally came on a tackle slash from the one after the Devils had put on a sustained drive from their own 49-yard mark early in the fourth quarter. Bryan, Vogt and Hurley picked up most of the yardage along the way, but a ten-yard aerial from Bryan to Hennessey also helped. Mike Hutchins, Devil captain, booted the extra points from placement after both scores.

Two-Niners Leave For Tilt With Tampa Univ.

35 Devils Entrain Today For Battle Saturday Away

29th Infantry wil entrain this afternoon for Tampa, Florida, where they are slated to oppose the University of Tampa Spartans on the gridiron Saturday.

Conceded an even chance of halting the speedy collegians, the charges of Lieut. Joe Ashmore will arrive tomorrow morning in the Florida city, and work out tomorrow afternoon at Phillips Field, the scene of Saturday's big game.

The 29th goes into the Spartan battle with a record of four wins, two losses and a tie in seven outings this season. They defeated Spence Field, Daniel Field, 55th Engineers, 11th Armored and were dead-locked by the 3rd Armored. Troy State Teachers and the 117th Infantry gained decisions over the Big Blue.

Tampa's record this fall has not been as impressive as the Devils, but they have faced tougher opposition. The Spartans split even in eight games, losing to Rollins, Miami, Florida and Jacksonville Naval. One Spartan victim, however, was Troy State by a 26-0 count. The same Trojan team whipped the 29th, 20-6, in the stadium here.

Both the soldiers and the collegians started the season with great potentialities, but they have run into similar misfortunes with injury bugaboo. Right off the bat, the Devils lost Joe Ashmore and Bob Bowen, two of their best backs. Bowen, a former Tampa player, had hoped to face his old team-mates Saturday but is out of action for the season.

The 29th also lost top-notch ends at the start of the campaign when Archie Milano and Joe Stolarzyck came down with leg hurts. The latter, however, is finally back in uniform and may face the Spartans. Mickey McGuire and Tackie Mueller, two crack backs, are also out for the season, and the latest one hit by the jinx is Joe Bryan, star tailback and fullback.

Bryan has a painful elbow injury, aggravated last Saturday in the Tanker game, and all week has been carrying the injured member in a sling. It is doubtful if he will play any more this season, and he will certainly be inactive Saturday at Tampa.

The Spartans have had similar bad luck. Both Willard Knight and Frank Streiner, their first and second tailbacks are out of action with injuries, and wingback Art Spoltore is a doubtful starter. If Spoltore can play, he will share much of the offensive burden with Paul Straub, a compact fullback, who hits the line like a baby tank.

Along the forward wall, the Spartans boast three outstanding operatives in Bud Fuller, Ploughboy Thornton and Bill Lassan. Fuller is a great running guard, and a devasting defensive man. The Ploughboy is captain of the Tampans and a roving tackle, while Lassan is a lean flank who can really snare passes.

The Spartans are tutored by Mel Vines, former blocking back at the University of Alabama. The tilt Saturday will be the only away game of the current season for the 29th aggregation, and the revitalized Devils hope to bring home a Spartan scalp to celebrate the occasion.

College Pennants Wave At Tiger Gridiron Frolic

Pennants and banners of the leading colleges and universities of the football world were very much in evidence last week at Service Club No. 2 when men of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division were host to the Columbus Military Maids at their bi-monthly dance.

Goal posts were erected at each end of the dance floor and footballs tied with brightly colored streamers hung from the ceiling.

During the intermission Corporal Gordon Abele of the 3rd Regiment acted as master of ceremonies and presented the following program: Hillbilly music by the "Sage Brush Three" made up of Sgt. Sterling Price, Pvt. Tex Herdiman and Cpl. Gordon Abele. Pvt. Charley Carcionie entertained with his intricate tap dancing routines. Relay games and tag dances furnished the other means of entertainment.

Music was furnished by the 3rd Armored Regiment's dance band led by S-Sgt. Hubert P. Henderson.

124th Clinches League Honors With Easy Win

Capt. Milton's Gridmen Roll Over Engineers By 45-20 Count

With the 1942 Fort Benning Conference title already in the bag, the 124th Gators will go after an outside scalp tomorrow night in Doughboy Stadium when they entertain Jack Meagher's Auburn Tiger "B" squad under the mazdas at 8:00 o'clock.

The great Gator machine won the title last Sunday when they rolled over the hapless 55th Engineers by a 45-20 count at the same time that the improved 3rd Armored Dragons were surprising the 117th Infantry to the tune of 12-6.

This combination of results eliminated the Breakers as a last possible challenger, and placed the Gators in a position where they could lose their final tilt with the 29th and still capture the conference laurels. The orange and blue is unbeaten in four loop frays, while the 29th and 3rd, which now are deadlocked for second, have each lost one and tied one.

CHANCE FOR REVENGE

Friday night's nocturnal battle with the Tiger Bees will afford the Gators a chance to avenge an early season defeat at the hands of Auburn by a 20-0 count in a game played on the collegiate grid. At that time, Capt. Red Milton's club was still in the formative stages, but they have gone a long way since then and hope to turn the tables tomorrow night.

The visiting Tiger team will provide a mixture of frosh and varsity reserves. Outstanding back on the array is Buck Jenkins, varsity diamond star, who was in action for a few plays against Georgia Saturday. Playing for the Bees earlier in the campaign, Jenkins was the big ace in the win over the 124th.

STAR FROSH BACKS

Several great freshman backs will also try to churn up the battle-scarred stadium turf tomorrow night. Oscar Cagle from Birmingham is a great distance passer who will match tosses with Roy Cestary of the Gators. Jim Shiver, and Stewart Gaines are other classy backs while the end is Sam McClurkin is a brother of Jim, the a varsity line star. The visitors also boast two stellar yearling centers in School and Jones.

Capt. Milton will start his usual foursome of Cestary, Calos, Smith and Hackney and has some good reserve ball-carriers in Engler,

3rd Armored Reg't. Has 'Family' Party

Painting And Song Presented To Unit

Officers of the Third Armored Regiment and their ladies attended a "Family" party sponsored by the regiment recently at the Tenth Armored Division Officers' Mess.

Colonel Julian E. Raymond, Chief of Staff, represented Major General Paul W. Newgarden who was unable to attend. Brigadier General Morril C. Ross, commanding Combat Command "B," and Mrs. Ross were guests of the regiment.

To keep the party a family affair, music for dancing and entertainment was provided by the 3rd Armored Regiment's dance orchestra, directed by S-Sgt. Hubert F. Henderson.

Heading the highlights of the evening was the presentation of the coat of arms to the regiment through Col. Thomas M. Brinkley, commanding officer of the Third Armored. The presentation was made by Capt. William S. Huff, regimental adjutant. Colonel Brinkley unveiled a plaque of the coat of arms, which is a field of green with the head of a ferocious dragon in silver. Col. Brinkley, in accepting the plaque, read the motto of the regiment, inscribed thereon: "Either to Conquer or to Die."

Lieutenant Colonel William T. S. Roberts, the regiment's Executive Officer, served as toastmaster.

PREMIERE OF SONG

Another high spot in the program arrived with the premiere of a new Tenth Armored Song, the "Tenth Armored Tiger," and dedication to Major General Newgarden. Again, Colonel Raymond, acting for General Newgarden, accepted the song. Presentation of the song was made by S-Sgt. Henderson.

Two 3rd Armored bandsmen, Sgt. Chet Howard and Cpl. Frank Meinous, wrote the new song, and composed the words and arrangement for band. Sgt. Howard, as co-author, was introduced to those attending the party. Although Cpl. Meinous left the Third two weeks ago to attend the Army Music School in Washington, D.C., his partnership in writing the song was acknowledged Friday night.

PRESENT PAINTING

Final presentation of the evening was the painting of the "Tenth Armored Tiger," which was presented in the name of the regiment to the Commanding General by Col. Brinkley. A beautiful water-color of the head of a tiger, the painting was the outright gift of the Chicago animal painter, James Vlasaty, who painted the tiger especially for the division. Present plans that are hoped to materialize include the exhibition of Mr. Vlasaty's painting in the main Service Club and in prominent downtown commercial houses, where it may be used in connection with war bond sales.

Cpl. Gordon Abele served as master-of-ceremonies. Entertainers included 1st Lieut. Darrel Rathbun of Maintenance Co., who sang Cole Porter's "Night and Day." The quartet from the 3rd Armored Band sang "My Devotion," currently popular hit, and Charley Cercione, Co. "B" private and a former specialty dancer in civilian life, executed some of his tap specialities. Hq. Co. contributed Privates Sterling Price and "Ter" Herdman— the latter a former radio entertainer—who sang a hillbilly number, aided by Cpl. Abele.

The entertainment was concluded with the orchestra playing "Der Fuehrer's Face." Dancing, with music furnished by the 3rd. Armored Band, concluded the evenings affair.

TEN TO SCHOOL

Ten enlisted men of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division have reported at the Lexington Signal Depot, Avon, Kentucky for the purpose of pursuing a course of instruction in Repair and Maintenance of Radio Sets.

The men are: T-Sgt. Joseph F. Huber of the 3rd Regiment; T-4 John D. McMahon of Trains Hqs.; S-Sgt. Vernon U. Davis of the 150th Signal Company; Sgt. John W. Brittain of the 11th Regiment; T-4 William H. Wray of the 54th Infantry; T-4 Raymond L. Couturier of the 55th Engineers; T-5 Charles R. King of the 419th F. A. Bn.; S-Sgt. Calvin O. Jarrell of the 420th F. A. Bn.; T-Sgt. James R. Lowman of the 422nd F. A. Bn. and T-5 William D. Fellenbaum of the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion.

10th Armored Maintaineer Is Ring Vet

Pvt. Bob Binckley, 45-year-old Maintaineer, has spent 20 of those years in the atmosphere of the boxing ring. His professional career was made up of 65 pugilistic encounters, meeting at that time some of the top-flight contenders for the bantam weight crown.

Among these were Eddie Ketchell, Phil O'Dowd, Carl Tremayne and Gene LaRue, who was the Canadian champ at that time.

After the sixty-fifth fight, Bob, who was brainy beside being clever with his dukes, decided he had had enough, and gracefully stepped out of the pugilistic picture. To quote Bob, "I realized I was slowing up, so decided the best thing for me to do was to step out before I got hurt, which is what any sensible young man would have done in the same situation." These are the words spoken by a man who knows.

After Bob's professional career ended he entered the automobile business and was as successful in this enterprise as he was in his boxing venture. This, however, did not detour him from still playing an important part in the amateur boxing field. He has helped promote the Golden Gloves Tournament in Cleveland for the last couple of years, besides assisting Mid-Western boxing teams in learning the noble art of self-defense.

3rd Armored Promotes

The following recent promotions in the 3rd Armored Regiment have been announced by Col. Thomas M. Brinkley, commanding officer of the Third.

Promotions in "C" Company included those of S-Sgt. Charles H. Rafferty, now first sergeant; Sgt. John P. Coffenberg, now staff sergeant, and Corporal Sterling B. Price and T-5 Barney W. Bailles who were made sergeant and corporal respectively.

In Reconnaissance Company, Pfc. Herold C. Thomas was made corporal.

Herbert R. Corban, Company "G," was made sergeant, while T-5 Gerald H. Hardy was appointed T-4. New T-5's in Company "G" include: Harry F. Heinbaugh, Francis P. Brennan, Jack D. Hall, John F. Rose, William H. Sasser and William G. Troutman.

New sergeant in Hq. Co., 1st Bn. is Emedio Romagni, former corporal. Also raised to the NCO grades indicated were Corporal George J. Colton, T-4 Harry W. Martin, T-5's Clarence Work, Martin Svetz and Max L. Voleneck. Elevated one notch in grade in Hq. Co., 1st Bn., were Sgt. Albert Kelleher, now staff sergeant, and T-5 Frederick W. Mueller. Pfc. Warren I. Ferris is now a T-5. .

11th Regiment, 419th F. A. Bn. Tie In Quiz Test

Staging a photo finish in the last few minutes of the program, the 11th Regiment's Personnel quiz team came from behind at Service Club No. 2 last week to tie the team representing the 419th F. A. Bn. Personnel by the score of 410 points a piece. At one time the 11th's team trailed by 30 points and slowly but surely they whittled down the lead to werd off defeat and keep them in the running. This is the 5th week the 11th's team has competed and due to the tie the same two teams will compete again next week.

Members of the 11th Armored Regiment's Personnel team were: Corporals Joe Sullivan, Fred Boylan, Morse Johnson and Sergeant Walter Coss. The team representing the 419th F. A. Battalion were: Pvt. R. J. Griffeth, S-Sgt. Ray Cantrell, Sgt. Sam Freese and Sgt. Willis Shaibley.

Cigarettes were awarded to both teams. Corporal James E. Frye of the division public relations office acted as Master of Ceremonies.

Dragons Win Glove Compete

Hammering out three decisions to their opponents two, the 3rd Armored Regiment's 1st Battalion defeated the 2nd Battalion, 11th Armored, to win the boxing match held recently at Division Bowl.

The Dragons took the lead when T-4 Walter M. Enicks outpointed the 11th's Sgt. James P. Carlisle. Enicks, banking on speedy footwork and a roundhouse right, outsmarted his opponent for two rounds and then dropped him for the count of two in the third and last round.

Pfc. Isidore Vasco of the 11th tied up the match by scoring a technical k. o. of the Third's John Wojytlo. Vasco, a head taller than Wojytlo, had too much reach and power for the Dragon. In the second round he shot a short right to Wojytlo's head and the latter dropped to the canvas. Referee Charles Fleshman, who did a fine job all night, stopped the bout with Wojytlo completely stretched out.

The third bout saw Dragon Malcolm L. Haag battle to a draw with Corporal Esther L. Williams. This bout really had the crowd roaring as the battlers went at it hammer and tongs. Williams tried several all-or-nothing rights but none found their mark.

OESO WINS ON POINTS

S-Sgt. John Orso of the Third put his team in the lead by easily outboxing Corp. John Barth. Orso seemed to enjoy himself thoroughly as he jabbed his bigger opponent freely and easily outmaneuvered him.

First 3rd Armored man to have the advantage in reach and height was Sgt. Rufus Arms who won over T-Sgt. Clifford Gregory on a technical k. o. After two lively rounds Gregory was forced to give up the fight because of a bad ankle. This fight clinched the match for the Third.

Only heavyweight match on the card saw Corporal Stanton H. Kissel of the 11th hammer out a two-round technical knockout over Corporal Everett Peterson. Both boys drew blood and the doctors stopped the fight between the second and third rounds because of Peterson's badly battered right eye.

After the fights General Newgarden presented Dragon Coach Lieut. Don Hamilton with a silver cup.

PROMOTIONS

Four enlisted men of the 10th Armored Division's Maintenance Battalion are wearing new stripes. They are: to be sergeants, Lawrence E. Hubbard and Thomas C. Ross; to be technicians 5th grade, Roger W. Mitchell and Richard L. Laskey.

Let Axis Beware Tigers' Fangs

'Tiger' Crack Shots Capture Many Prizes

As the dust and smoke of competition slowly settled on Gill Range last week and the last echoes of firing died away, the contestants slowly stalked forward to examine their targets. When the judge completed their "estimate of the situation," the following pistol teams were found to be victorious:

August Hoehn, Sgt. Nichols Murphy and Alison Dyke, Cpl. John Evans and T-Sgt. Hurley Wheeler) came out on top with 8 points.

MACHINE GUN COMPETE

Not far from the Pistol Range, seven other teams were taking advantage of their recent training in the use of the machine gun to beat their competitors to the high scoring honors.

Winning team in the 1917 A1 water-cooled M. G. shoot was from Headquarters Co. 2nd Bn. 54th Infantry, with 29 points. Team members are: S-Sgt. Gerald Platz, Sgt. John Lang, S-Sgt. Julian Marshal and T-4 Charles Russo.

Co. G, 3rd AR shot a high score of 32 points with the 1919 A4 air-cooled M. G. Team members are: S-Sgt. Roger J. Aubrey, S-Sgt. Harry Reis, Jr., Sgt. Thomas Montz, Sgt. Edward Whalley and Cpl. Armond Brumori.

Each member of the winning pistol teams returned to quarters with a crisp greenback rustling in his pocket. Gunners of high-scoring M. G. teams also received cash awards to the tune of one dollar and their assistant gunners caried off "one each" half-dollar.

8th Company Gets New Type 10-Minute Break

When the Officer Candidates of 8th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, suddenly heard some solid boogie-woogie pouring from the public-address system during a ten-minute break they cheered loudly—for they discovered Moses Lamar, a colored officer candidate, who then stepped into their limelight for entertainment.

For more than seven years Candidate Lamar's bass voice has been rolling before theatre and radio audiences, including two Columbia Broadcasting programs from Fort Benning. The first program, "Service With a Smile," was sponsored by a candy company. The other, "Cheers From Camp," with sports-announcer Ted Husing as master of ceremonies, was broadcast by CBS over station WRBL, Columbus.

Previously, he has sung for six years with the Civilian Conservation Corps' Ochille Glee Club, often appearing on the radio. From September, 1941, until October, 1942, he sang every week over station WRBL with the Fort Benning Reception Center.

When that deep, resonant, bass voice comes sounding down the company street, the candidates are convinced that there is nothing better than a well-developed commanding voice in the army.

Former A. A. U. Boxing Champ In O. C. School

George H. Simmonds, former Lake Forrest, Illinois, boxing instructor, and once holder of Ohio A. A. U. and Illinois National Guard ring titles, has entered the Infantry School at Fort Benning as a member of an Officer Candidate Class in the Eleventh Company, 2nd Battalion, First Student Training Regiment.

Simmonds was Ohio A. A. U. Middleweight Champion in 1931, winning with a two-round knockout. As member of the 129th Infantry, Illinois National Guard, at Waukegan, he won the Illinois National Guard, Light heavy weight Title in 1927, outpointing Andy McCabe, former sparring partner Simmonds has served as Boxing Instructor at schools and Boxing Clubs.

He was inducted last April at Chicago and was stationed at Camp Croft, Spartansburg, S. C. before coming to Fort Benning.

Maj. Johnson Is Lt. Colonel

Promotion of Major Frederick E. Johnson to the rank of lieutenant colonel was announced this week at headquarters of the Second Student Training Regiment. Lt. Col. Johnson is the commanding officer of the Third Battalion.

Col. Johnson came to The Infantry School in September of 1941 to attend the Battalion and Staff Officers' course, and after graduation in December was assigned to the School and to the Second Regiment. He served as executive officer of the Second and Fourth Battalions and then went to the Command and General Staff school at Fort Leavenworth, Kas. Upon his return in July he rejoined the Second Regiment and on Aug. 1 became commanding officer of the Third Battalion.

Dewey's Aide At O. C. School

Brinkerhoff Served District Attorney

A former assistant district attorney of New York county, and ex-righthand man of Thomas E. Dewey, New York governor-elect, is Officer Candidate Remsen Brinkerhoff of the 16th Company, 2nd Student Training Regiment, Fort Benning.

Brinkerhoff had the distinction of serving with Dewey during the famous racket-busting days, when New York's two-fisted district attorney gained national recognition. After Dewey left, Brinkenhoff continued in his capacity as assistant district attorney, working with Frank Hogan for six months before entering the army.

After completing his pre-law studies at Princeton, he traveled extensively in Europe, the Near East, and Middle East. During this period he mastered four languages. Upon returning to the United States, Candidate Brinkenhoff entered Columbia Law School, from which institution he gained his LLB degree in 1937.

Before entering the army as a volunteer officer candidate, Brinkerhoff had previous military training at Princeton, and later attended the Businessmen's Training Camp conducted at Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y. in the fall of 1940. He is a former resident of Englewood, N. J.

1st STR Dispensaries Enjoy Rapid Expansion

The Regimental Dispensaries of the 1st STR under the supervision of Regimental Surgeon, Major Frank I. Ciofalo, have become an important unit of the Medical Arm of the post. This was achieved through the work of the Regimental Surgeon, Captain Joseph Drozd, Lt. David C. Young, Lt. Wm. H. Bernstein, and the combined efforts of the enlisted men in both dispensaries.

In April 1941 the dispensary was located in a small portion of the Student Training Units Headquarters building, with only three enlisted men as cadre. Since that time numerous obstacles have been hurdled in the expansion that saw the sick call at 641 cases per month in April 1941 grow proportionately to the increase in the regiment. The cadre that originally consisted of 3 enlisted men has grown to a staff of 19, pharmacists, medical assistants, etc. Staff Sgt. Robert L. Wilson who at present handles the administration work of the Medical Detachment was one of the original three members of the cadre.

The work of the dispensaries are not without their moments of humor. Recently a bespectacled soldier came to the desk in the receiving room and requested that he see a medical officer. Upon questioning, the patient revealed that his complaint was that he had trouble seeing. Stationed at the required distance from the eye chart he complained that he couldn't see anything at all, even the chart! The examination had been conducted with the soldier wearing his glasses. When he was asked to take off his glasses and read the chart from the required distance, he read the chart with ease and his vision was perfect.

MANY BARRYMORES

Then, of course, there is the drama that daily is presented as OCS, Officers, and enlisted men line up for "shots." As they come down the last mile toward the needle, one sees acting displays that would make the Barrymores and Lunts look amateurish. There is the group Sampson who throws out his chest and roars to the cowering group, "Watch out that needle packs an awful wallop." Then there is the type, the most common, who wears a smile for armour plate, who approaches the needle bravely only to start quivering just before the injection occurs. We can't forget to mention the boaster, who brags that he can take shots all day and who swaggers up to the needle and falls into a dead faint as soon as it is administered.

The daily routine of the Dispensaries begin at a quarter to eight to make it possible for the Officers, and the Officer Candidates of the Regiment to be ready for the regular eight thirty formations. From then on the day is busily occupied with sick call for the Hq's Co., the Service Bn, minor surgical operations, mess hall and kitchen inspections, surveys of the post exchanges and barber shops in the area, and the routine of conducting the splendid campaign against veneral diseases that has marked the work of the 1st Student Training Regiment.

Rickenbacker's Exploits Recalled By Colleague In World War 1

Major Leland Of Benning Was In France With Eddie In 1918

One Fort Benning soldier smiled knowingly last week-end when he heard that Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, World War ace and one of America's foremost fliers, had been rescued in the Pacific after being long overdue on a flight.

The Fort Benning soldier with a personal interest in the news about Rickenbacker is Maj. Richard M. Leland, Jr., member of an advanced class in the Third Company, First Student Training Regiment, who at one time was a sergeant in charge of motor repair work at the original American Training Base in France in 1918 when Rickenbacker received his first military pilot training there.

It was while in France with Rickenbacker that Major Leland first noticed the superior ability of Rickenbacker, the ability that made him America's No. 1 ace and enabled him to live through many crackups and other adventures during the war and in recent years.

"Rickenbacker came in as a sergeant and took his flying training in about 60 days," Major Leland said, when asked about his wartime experiences. "He soloed after twelve lessons, which was pretty good then. Eddie during those days was really on the beam. Right from the start he showed characteristics of those superior abilities which later enabled him to become both the first and the topmost of American aces."

Major Leland landed in France in July 1918 and helped set up the first American Training Base at Issoudan. He was assigned to the Foreign School Squadron, which places him as a pioneer member in the first All-American Air Unit to operate in France. This squadron afterward was changed to the 29th Airo Squadron, while the school itself later increased the number of its flying fields from one to eleven.

KNEW MANY ACES

Rickenbacker wasn't the only famous world war ace Major Leland serviced planes for and saw first-hand. A great many of the school's original students and instructors were transferees from the famous LaFayette Escadrille, and during its course, the Major stated, the school spawned such illustrious pilots as Fauntleroy, Prince, and Cord Meyer.

"I saw all these men almost every day while they were in training," he pointed out. "For the most part they were a quiet bunch, the majority were quite young. Many had already made names for themselves or came from well-known families. Seth Lowe, Jr., son of a former New York mayor, was an early student in the school. Also a beginner in this group was Princeton's All-American football player, Baker."

The school administrative staff had its share of famous names too, according to Major Leland. Quentin Roosevelt was a member and the commanding officer was Col. Lawrence S. Churchill, later stationed at Fort Benning.

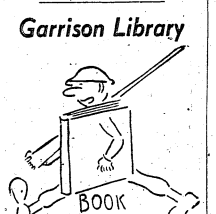
Asked about the training methods of that time, Major Leland said the chief impression he retains after viewing the complicated cirriculum of the present, was that the instruction and knowledge necessary then would have been apple pie for a mere primary graduate of today.

The basic trainer of those days, he said, was called the grasshopper—a small simplified single or double seater plane with wings shortened to the point where it could not leave the ground over a few feet. "Even with these precautions spills were not exactly rare," the Major added. "The fledglings of 1918 did not have the mechanical background of the present automobile generation to guide their reactions. Machinery was still a little imposing."

Except for some trainers which were received right before the Armistice, there were no completely American planes operating on the front at any time while he was there, Major Leland pointed out. "We had hybrid planes, such as the PH4, DH9, and SE5, all of which were part American and part French or English. The planes most preferred by the pilots were the French Spad and the SE5. The average maximum speed of the fighter planes," he added, "was 100-160 mph, with an absolute top of ground 175. These planes were good for about 100 miles in the air over the fighting front."

Major Leland's work consisted of keeping the motors of these planes in flying condition. "Machinery was not so perfect then," he said. "It broke down much more easily than present day apparatus and required more servicing — using poorer tools than have now been developed, too. On the other hand even the simplest plane nowdays has a great amount of elaborate mechanism to fail. So it comes out about even in the end, I guess."

FIRST BOMBING



As the battlefield moved north the training fields moved with them. From Issoudan the Foreign School moved to Nancy, then Toul. Major Leland's squadron was at Nancy 6 months and it was while there the Major experienced his first bombing.

"It occurred while our crew was eating mess," he said. "Altho we had not worked together very long, each man knew just what to do. Our teamwork was magnificent. No sooner had the first bomb hit than, in perfect unison, every man hit the mess hall floor — each man under the biggest table he could find. The whole thing was over in about one or two minutes," he continued. "There were four or five planes altogether and their bombs blew up several hangers and buildings, including a barrack just recently evacuated by a portion of the working crew.

Altho he encountered bigger bombings later, Major Leland states this one has always remained the most vivid and seemed the most devastating. "Of course, great improvements along this line have now been attained," he added dryly. "I may change my mind later."

Other recent happenings have also had a particular interest for the Major. When he read of the sinking of the battleship Arizona at Pearl Harbor last December, for instance, it too brought back memories of 20 years ago. For it was this same battlewagon that, in 1919, bore him back from the battlegrounds of World War One.

Garrison Library

BY FRANCES CHANDLER

Seeing the picture and reading the book are almost always two pleasures, because of the movie-makers practice of using a title and changing the story to suit themselves. Jan Struther's "Mrs. Miniver" was important enough to make Hollywood buy it—but almost all Hollywood used was the title. Nevertheless, the novel and the movie were both delightful. In the case of Daphne du Maurier's "Rebecca", the novel and the picture have very great resemblance to each other as readers of the book remember.

A number of films based on best-sellers of the past few months have just been completed in Hollywood John Brophy's "Immortal Sergeant", a novel of adventure and heroism in the Libyan Desert, is included in that group. Helen MacInnes' "Assignment in Brittany", Mary O'Hara's "My Friend Flicka," a touching story of a boy and his horse, and Ernest Hemingway's "For Whom the Bell Tolls" have also been filmed recently.

Among the new movies which you'll be seeing in the next few months are several based on novels which have been popular for a number of years. Rafael Sabatini's "The Black Swan" should be ideal for the screen. This story of Caribbean pirates has a characteristic Sabatini hero and has for a villian the notorious Tom Leach, captain of the Black Swan and terror of the Spanish Main.

Clark's "The Ox-Bow Incident" should turn out to be far above the run-of-the-mill western. The book's sharp, effective dialog distinguishes this cowboy story. The scene is the town of Bridger's Gulch, Nevada, in 1885. The pursuit of cattle rustlers by a posse made up of citizens of the town forms the principal action of the story.

James Hilton's novels seem to be good material for the screen. "Random Harvest" is a story of lost identity, the result of shell shock in World War I and of a two-year gap in the memory of a man who has become a successful industrialist.

The Garrison Library recommends that you read the book, then see the movie!

It's au revoir to Nell Freeman, General Fulton's secretary as she is leaving for Chattanooga, Tennessee. Nell will still work for the War Department, this time at Fort Oglethorpe. Only once in so many moons does one comes in contact with such a young woman as Nell. Sweet, courteous, considerate, lovely to look at, intelligent and a true friend to all the girls, she will really be missed at headquarters. It is easy to understand why General Fulton feels that he won't have another full-time secretary. No one could ever take Nell's place in headquarters. We wish her the best in her new position and know she will be happy because she will be "at home" with her family, husband, daughter, sisters and father. Don't forget Headquarters Nell, we feel sure you will haver be so loved in any other place you may work.

A great big hand to Montese Stewart of Detroit, Michigan who is holding the boys in the road at Service Club No. 1 until the new hostess arrives. Montess was over in about one or two minutes," she continued. "There were four or five planes altogether and their bombs blew up several hangers and buildings, including a barrack just recently evacuated by a portion of the working crew.

Nalda Fitzgerald pulling out the gray hairs caused from the worry of not knowing whether she was going to the football game or not, Ruth Lake feeling blue because Jimmie has gone, Mildred Goldberg worrying over the spelling of the visiting South Americans and Josephine Haggard aggravated because her boss would not let her finish out her chat with Nalda, Mildred and me just about takes care of everyone at headquarters.

W. A. Ford, senior administrative assistant and C. P. Chambers, Jr., administrative assistant, will tell you their hobby is football. But—what about that collection of hearts from the Post Engineer office and the Q. M.?

There is something new under the sun. Winifred Baker at Service Club No. 2 is planning a "scrap dance." N-n-n-not that kind of scrap. This is going to be a really nice dance. Admission fee is a piece of junk and the Queen will be crowned in tin. So—begin saving. It might be the other kind of a scrap dance after all. Who can tell?

What connection is there between a museum and a hospital. That is surely a $64 question. I give up.

FT. GREELY, Alaska—An eatery near here ran out of hot dogs and could not replenish its supply from any local point. The proprietor wired to Anchorage, nearest place where replacements were available, for 100 pounds to be shipped by airmail. Shipping costs were 20c per pound but this didn't halt soldiers and sailors from buying them when they arrived. They sold like hot dogs.

Hindu Caste System Is Big Headache for Yanks

The newspaper printed for American soldiers in China, Burma and India, called the "C. B. I. Roundup," contains articles to help the troops get along well in those unaccustomed lands. Copies which get back to America indicate there is a servant problem.

It is explained that differences between castes in India must be kept in mind. A sweeper, who keeps the barracks clean, may not shine shoes or make a bed. Shoes and beds are bearer's work, and a member of the bearer caste would consider it beneath his dignity to sweep.

The story points out that employment of a bearer does not relieve a soldier of his responsibility for a clean and well-ordered bunk and for well shined shoes.

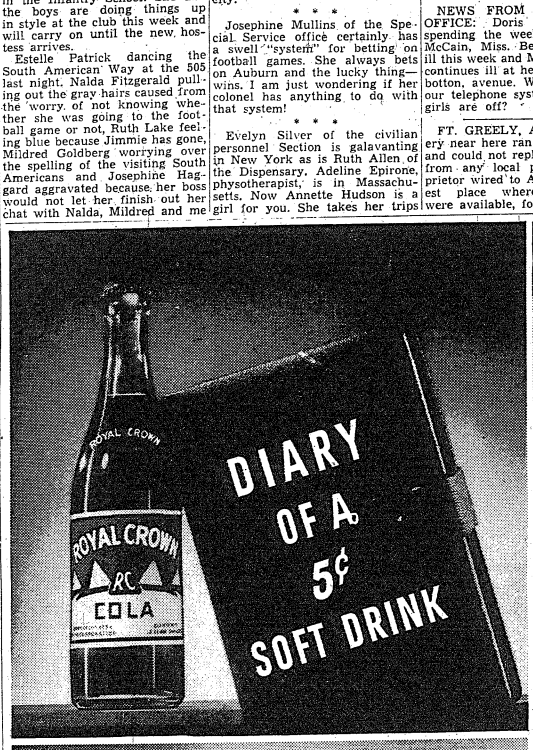
The rates of pay for such service also are discussed. The British soldiers do not receive so much pay as do American soldiers, and the Americans are asked to observe the pay scales already established by their allies. When a group of soldiers hires one of these native valets, they pay him about $1.00 a month each. Rates are proportionately higher for officers.

LAUNDRY PROBLEM

Members of the American Army in India have the laundry problem solved by way of a class of natives called Dhobis. It isn't a piece work job in India. The Dhobi looks over the doughboy and gives him an estimate for his entire laundry needs on a monthly basis. The price is very cheap, but the Dhobis are always losing clothing and the expense of hiring them, including the cost of clothes replacements, averages out much higher than the contract price, according to the C. B. I. Roundup.

Because the American accent is different from the British, the Indians of the housekeeper castes often get confused. They are used to the British, and the Americans have to take it a little slowly with them.

The article concludes with an interesting warning to U. S. Troops. It reads this way: "Bearers in particular are expert psychologists. They can size up a man quickly and accurately, and then it becomes the Bearer's plan to make himself indispensible. There is nothing wrong with this ambition, but the Bearer's success in this regard means a corresponding loss in a soldier's self reliance."—And loss of self-reliance among soldiers must not be permitted.



A FLASHY CORPORAL

One of the biggest thrills in the life of a soldier is the day he gets to sew his first corporal's stripes on his uniform. And it was just such a day for Corporal Tom Wright at Fort Moultrie, Georgia. He was sewing away when a buddy asked permission to paint the stripes on the new corporal's fatigue clothes, for that's the way the chevrons are applied to work clothes. Corporal Wright was grateful for the help—that is, until that night. As he walked into his barracks and opened his darkened locker his new rank flashed from every shirt. Corporal Wright's friend had used luminous paint!

Up before dawn to meet Betty. She'd been running a precision drill since midnight. Neck bent! Eyes front! Attention fixed on tiny bits of metal. But 3 A. M. is recess time in her war plant. And I turned it into a pleasant bit of relaxation that made her keen for the job again.

Had a date with Bill at noon. He'd been "downstairs" all morning, blasting, smashing and loading coal. Sweaty, back-breaking work. Vital to the war. Vital to millions of families this winter. That's why I was glad to be on hand to give him a "quick-up."

Saw Hank about 5:30. He was just back in camp from an afternoon on the rifle range. Squinting through a gunsight. Holding a lively, bucking Garand rifle on the target again and again. But at the camp canteen my frosty lift scored the bull's-eye with Hank.

So it goes... round the clock. More than a million and a half times each hour, Americans reach for soft drinks. Americans who are working, fighting, going all-out to win the war.

That means 24-hour duty for me. Any minute . . . every minute I'm ready to bring them a lift and a fresh start. Ready to bring them the same quality they've known for years as best by taste-test. And determined to maintain the quality, even if occasionally the quantity runs short.

Woman's Club

By LAURA M. BAILEY

Continuing the policy of offering the women of Fort Benning timely and pertinant subjects for the regular meetings of the Woman's Club, the December 7 meeting, will be of unusual interest. The meeting will be held at the Polo Hunt Club at 2 p. m.

The Christmas holidays will be held with special significance all over the country this year. The spiritual meaning and preciousness of family ties will be dearer to those who are still privileged to gather their loved ones about them.

Those families who are stationed at Fort Benning have known a direct impact from the tragedies of the war as they've seen the families separate and heard first hand of the loneliness and waiting hours of those wives who follow the news from the battle fronts. Those who are privileged to be with their husbands feel a deep obligation to maintain the highest standards of cheerfulness and happiness. The Christmas season ahead of them will be busy with preparations to make the holiday a memorable one for their family.

Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley, president of the Woman's Club, again shows her deep foresight in securing for the organization the nationally famous "Christmas Lady" to speak to them on the December meeting.

"CHRISTMAS LADY"

Mrs. John Vernon Denson, of Montgomery, Ala., acquired the fascinating title of "Christmas Lady" throughout the southern states to her talents as a speaker of charm and wit that brings to her audience a gaiety and stimulating will to emulate her enthusiasm of making our Christmas holidays the happiest festivity of the year.

Mrs. Denson's success was so great in the Southern states that her fame has spread throughout the country. She made a broadcast over a national hook-up, which has awakened interest in her work by national syndicates and important magazines.

The value of Mrs. Denson's lectures lay in the fact of the extreme simplicity and low cost of her Christmas ideas and decorations. Ingenuous use of simple materials, toys and trinkets from the dime store, discarded bits of oil cloth, dabs of paint and twists of ribbon, coupled with the various greens found in such rich profusion in the south, create breathless decorator's effects for doorways, mantels, Christmas tables, packages and Christmas trees.

The Polo Hunt Club was chosen for the meeting due to its intimate atmosphere and adaptability to decoration. Mrs. Denson will create her holiday decorations in conjunction with her lecture in such a simple and plausible fashion as to send those women with heretofore stiff fingers scurrying home to convert their home into unbelievable Christmas loveliness.

No lagging Christmas spirit will remain on the Post after the Christmas Lady's lecture. Odd corners, basements and toy boxes will be ransacked for materials. Members of the Woman's Club will meet at the toy counters of the dime store as they search for the trinkets to make wreaths, swags and Christmas tables an integral part of this especially lovely and spiritual Christmas the Army women will give their families this year.

Relate Experiences At Recent Party

Officer Candidates in the Second Platoon of the 17th Company, Third Student Training Regiment are well traveled.

They found that out the other evening when they had a party at the Chickasaw Inn. During the dinner members of the platoon gave short speeches and here are the facts that were uncovered by the talks:

Candidates Richard Eyster, of Indianapolis, Ind., and Frank Wasciewics of Frankfort, N. Y., participated in the aerial attacks on the Jap fleet at Oahu, Hawaii, and Midway.

Candidates Andrew Loo, of Honolulu; Arthur Katz, of Syracuse, N. Y.; John Ten Eyck, of Battle Creek, Mich.; Ernest Dickman, of Everett, Wash.; and Harold Scully of Oneonta, N. Y., came to the states from Hawaii to attend the Infantry School.

Candidates Frank Griffo, of New York City was stationed on the island of Antigua, in the British West Indies, and Candidates Richard Brown, of Pittsburgh and Wayland McPherson have had service with the Army in Panama.

They all gave brief accounts of personal experiences they have had in these theatres of operations.

Lt. Gilbert Huth, Platoon Tactical Officer, related a few incidents pertaining to his previous Army service in Panama.

Candidates Frank Sammons of Evanston, Ill., and Chester Snyder of Battle Creek, Mich., were co-chairman and alternated as toastmasters.

The 17th Co. is under the command of Captain Robert B. Kiffin.

The first Fort Benning Football Conference, consisting of seven teams, was initiated this fall, according to Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post athletic officer and former head coach of the North Dakota State eleven.

HOW TO MEET PEOPLE

At Chanute Field barracks of the Eighth School Squadron, Private Milton Malashock rolled over on his bunk and said to his neighbor, "That's a nice watch you have there soldier." Private Harry Sides replied, "Thanks. My girl sent it to me from Omaha." Malashock was pleased. He said, "I live in Omaha. Do you know where she bought it?" Private Sides certainly did. "Yeah," he said, "some place with a funny name. Mashalot or Malashop or something. Good watch, though." "Glad you like it," Malashock grinned. "But the name is Malashock. In fact, it's mine. It's my father's store." The watch indicated it was time to visit the post exchange to celebrate the Omaha reunion in Illinois.

American soldiers in many parts of the world (including Benning's) will sit down to a typical American Thanksgiving dinner on November 26, the War Department announces.

Already thousands of tons of turkey have been shipped to overseas bases, together with materials for the traditional cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie.

Each soldier will receive approximately one pound of turkey at his Thanksgiving dinner, and overseas garrisons will not be without cranberry sauce. Dehydrated cranberries are being shipped in volume to all those outlying areas where army forces are located. A typical menu follows:

Fruit Cup
Roast Turkey Dressing and Cranberry sauce Giblet gravy
Mashed Potatoes
Corn Peas
Stuffed celery Tomato salad
Assorted Pickles
Bread Butter
Pumpkin Pie
Apples Grapes
Candies Coffee Nuts

A similar dinner will be served on Christmas Day.

WHAT AN ECHO

Northern boys at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, discovered that Private William E. Hines, Jr., had been a tobacco auctioneer in civil life. They demanded demonstrations. At last Private Hines' good nature became strained so he started bragging about the carrying quality of the tobacco auctioneer's chant. They wouldn't believe him. Private Hines was willing to demonstrate, but he demanded that he be off forever if he could produce an echo where there aren't any hills for miles. It was agreed. Private Hines took a deep breath and gave forth. After a bit, sure enough, the chant came back again, faintly but unmistakably. Now Pvt. Hines' vocal chords are getting a rest. And now you know why Private Hines bought dinner in town for Private Carl Thibodeau, who also used to be a tobacco auctioneer.

Dragons Meet Tankers Sunday For 10th Armored Grid Crown

3rd, 11th Armored Elevens Clash In Stadium At 2:30

Gridiron supremacy of the 10th Armored Division will be decided Sunday afternoon in the Doughboy Stadium when Capt. Leo Gregory's 3rd Armored Dragons collide with Capt. Swede Carlson's 11th Armored Tankers in a Fort Benning conference game at 2:30.

Although the loop title has already been decided, the Dragons by winning Sunday still could finish in the runner-up spot, and besides endeavoring to grab the division laurels, they will be battling to improve their loop standings. It is the final league fray for both elevens.

BOTH BEAT 55TH

The Dragons and the Tankers have each toppled the 55th Engineers, the other Tiger Division entry in the conference, which means that Sunday's winner will be undisputed grid ruler of the 10th Armored. The game will be packed with color and is expected to attract close to 10,000 fans, including Major General Paul W. Newgarden, division commander, who has been an ardent follower of the Tiger teams all season.

As usual, victory hopes of the 3rd will depend upon their collection of classy backs including Chief Carney, Al Litwak, Nick Copra, Tony Laskosky and several others. Carney, the full-blooded Indian fullback, is the most colorful performer at the fort this year, and is probably the loop's most consistent ground-gainer.

COPRA IMPROVED

Copra has come along fast in the past few weeks, and is now a dangerous tailback who runs or passes with reckless abandon. Litwak, former little All-American at Western Reserve, is a grand blocker and adept ball handler whenever the Dragons utilize the T formation. Laskosky scored the winning touchdown last Sunday in the upset win over the 117th.

Capt. Carlson can also field an array of good backs, however, to match the Dragon combine. Duckworth, Chicklon, and McNulty are outstanding for the Tankers and are ably supported by Pontecour, Schneider and Schromm. The Tankers are capable of staging a real aerial circus and boast two left-handed passers.

DRAGON LINE GOOD

The game will probably be decided in the line play, however, and that is where the Dragons rate the nod. Against the 117th, the green and white forward wall displayed immense improvement, and if they continue their sterling work, the Tankers will be in for a real battle.

Intense rivalry between the two outfits has been brewing ever since the ex-cavalry units were assigned to the same division, and the "feud" between the two is sure to flame out on the gridiron Sunday.

Joos, Hamlin and McCullough. The latter particularly has come along fast of late and is used to spell Cestary at tailback.

One Gator will be playing against his old alma mater when Junie Belin lines up at right end for the Gators. The lanky flank played a season of varsity ball at the Tiger school, and this season has been a tower of strength for the 124th.

BY ED. FOGG

In a score studded game that saw an inspired 55th Engineer eleven pushing over three touchdowns in the last half, the 124th Infantry Gators matched them point for point to emerge the victor 45 to 20.

Roy Cestary again placed himself on the throne as king of the Gators and his teammates man for man were never to be denied. The game had hardly opened before the sparling Gator had landed in pay dirt, on an interception and three rushes by Cestary, Junie Belin of the Gators, blocking three Engineer kicks during the afternoon, set-up three of the seven touchdowns. Mike Aulenti, Shine Berasi, Alabama Tew and Green Howard were out in front of the runners on the scoring plays most of the game and the viciousness of their blocks could easily be seen on the faces of the Engineer supposed tacklers.

Deane, Gerrish and Krull were responsible for the scoring of the Engineers and can be commended for a superb brand of football.

initial 29th score, and made quite a ball game out of it until the final period, when the superior reserve strength of the Devils wore them down. Boasting a wide-open attack, the 11th was in complete control of the air lanes, completing 12 of 35 passes for a total yardage of 142

SUBS OUTSTANDING

Chicklon, O'Shea and Duckworth were outstanding backs for the losers throughout the game, and kept the fans on their feet with some sensational running and passing. For the 29th, Joe Kamienski and Bobby Ralph, until he was injured, were impressive reserve backs. Both are pantamweights, but they packed plenty of punch and made some nice gains through the heavy Tanker forward wall. Reade Giraulo again played an outstanding game at center for the winners.

The triumph ended a long drought for the 29th. They had nt been on the winning end of a score since their triumph over the 55th Engineers by a similar score in their first league outing. Since then, they had been beaten by Troy State and the 117th Infantry and tied by the 3rd Armored Regiment.

Nehi Reds Play ISSC Courtmen In Gym Tonight

Riddle And Zientara, Former Cincy Reds, On Opposing Fives

Erstwhile team-mates on the Cincinnati Reds in the National League, Elmer Riddle and Benny Zientara will oppose one another tonight on the basketball court when the famous Nehi Reds from Columbus visit the post gym for a tussle with the I. S. S. C. quintet in the feature of an attractive twin bill. The 1st Parachute Training Regiment will meet the Finance Detachment in the preliminary which gets under way at 7:45.

Riddle is the Columbus athlete who has been with the Reds for the past four years and in 1941 was voted the league's most valuable player and outstanding pitcher. During the off seasons, he plays and coaches the Nehi quintet, annually rated as one of the best semi-pro outfits in this part of the state.

PLAYED 27 GAMES

Zientara was a great star with the Indianapolis club in the American Association for two years and came up with the Reds at the tail end of the 1941 campaign. He played the final 27 games with Cincy that year, and was rated a rookie find. But when spring of 1942 rolled around, Benny was in the army at Fort Benning. He played second base this year for both the post team and the championship I. S. S. C. nine.

More recently, Zientara was a key member of the Academic Regiment's Headquarters team that captured the I. S. S. C. intramural title in a thriller-diller finish. Now, he is a scrappy guard on the regimental quintet, and although not listed as a starter tonight, he is bound to see plenty of action. Riddle also will insert himself as a sub.

TECH CAPTAIN PLAYS

The feature battle, which will get under way as soon as the prelim is finished, should feature some great basketball. Besides, Riddle, the visiting Nehis boast an all-star cast. Their center is Carlton Lewis, great Georgia Tech pivot and captain of the Golden Tornado last winter.

Junior Wilson, and the Satterfield boys, Ray and Ralph, all former Jordan High aces, are outstanding performers for the Reds, while the rest of the cast is made up of Lester Ray, Wallace Cash, Jim Adair and one or two others.

COACHED BY SHANNON

The Academics are being tutored by Lieut. Frank Shannon, a former member of some of Wittenburg College's crack fives out Ohio way. Shannon played for the I. S. S. C. last season, but this year expects to confine his efforts to tutoring.

schools in the Fourth Service Command. During Col. Rooks' repeated absences on inspection tours, Col. Barksdale handled all administrative details of the operation of the school.

About six weeks ago, Col. Barksdale was relieved of his duties with the Bakers and Cooks School and assigned as assistant to the post quartermaster. A month later, when the new setup for supply at the fort was installed, he became chief of the distribution branch under Col. Massey.

No successor to Col. Barksdale has yet been named, and for the time being, Col. Massey will assume the duties of chief of distribution as well as head of all supply activities.

Division, and the Parachute School as the guests of Major Gen. Leven C. Allen, Major Gen. Paul Newgarden, and Brig. Gen. George P. Howell.

Eight of the party were scheduled to leave the post Wednesday, while the others will remain until Saturday.

The officers arrived last Sunday by rail from Atlanta. They were greeted by high ranking officers of the Fort, and on Sunday evening were honor guests at a reception tendered by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton.

The visiting officers, and the countries they represent are: Major D. Salviano Herrera Chueca and Captain G. Bidone, of Argentina; Major de Arruda and Captain Macedo, of Brazil; Major Eduardo Beas Alvarez, of Chile; Major Roberto Torres Quintero and Captain Heracio Gonzalez, of Colombia; Major Antonio Bilbatua y Sans and Captain Pablo Roque y Orihuela, of Cuba; Major Enrique Balda and Captain Joe Granja, of Ecuador; Captain Albert Renard and Captain Roger Villedrouin, of Haiti.

Also Lieutenant Commander Arado Daniel Candia, of Paraguay; Captain Manuel Gambetta, Captain Walker Alexander Osones and Captain Alejandro Sanchez Selazar, of Peru; Captain Claudio Fonseca Hayes-Bazan and Captain Eduardo Rodriquez Bestutti, of Costa Rica; Captain Carlos Galderch Gonzales and Captain Juan Sanchez Ponce, of El Salvador; First Captain Esilo Loyo Ganzalez and Lt. Col. Gilardo Alarcon Martinez, of Mexico, and Col. S. Camilo Gonzalez, and Col. Ernesto Matamoros of Nicaragua.

The Jackson Giants held their first work-out Monday night in the Bowl-Mor Alleys. The J. G.'s have the team to beat this year, and every one was talking about their success. I heard them say that if you couldn't beat the J. G.'s, you couldn't beat anybody.

Chaplain's Corner

REGIMENTAL LOYALTY
By Chaplain W. J. Felix, Catholic Chaplain, 29th Infantry

When carrying on a friendly conversation with Lt. Hranicka, Special Service Officer, one should be careful not to mention anything that might contain news value. The slightest slip of the tongue will result in a not-to-be-denied request for a written article on the subject.

To illustrate, the other day I was at supper, and was telling him of a post card which I had just received in the evening mail from a friend. Well, here I am pen in hand.

On the night of my departure for Fort Benning, a young Jesuit math teacher in the college came to my room to say good-bye, "I'd give my right arm, he said, to be going with you."

Then I learned for the first time (Tom is not addicted to much talk about himself) that Thomas F. Mulcrone had formerly been a member of the U. S. Army. All this was a bit surprising, for he is still a young man, and I know that he had already completed ten years of the required fifteen-year course.

Our conversation drifted on to the war. Finally he asked, "Do you know yet what regiment you are assigned to?" "Sure, the Twenty-ninth Infantry," I replied. "The Twenty-ninth Infantry, why that's my old outfit!"

A few weeks after arriving I sent back a post card, which depicted a familiar scene. "All the boys here remember you," I wrote, "and the Colonel sends his best regards." His answer was what I was telling Lt. Hranicka about. In it Tom made mention of another member of the faculty who had left for the Navy, "But give me the 29th Infantry any day," he added. And Thomas Mulcrone means what he says.

General Fulton Visits 24th Hospital Mess

Sees Medical Battalion Served Lunch In 8 Minutes

An entire medical battalion served their midday meal in eight minutes. Impossible! No, not quite . . . for with the unique method of "four line service" and incorporating the facilities of buffet tables, the mess personnel of the 24th General Hospital under the direct guidance of Lt. Clifford E. Clinton, has accomplished this not once, but every day and for every meal.

When the news of this and other outstanding accomplishments reached Post Headquarters as news usually does, Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton at the invitation of Col. W. C. Royals, decided to witness this "art" of service. Gen. Fulton, Col. J. P. Edgerly, Executive Officer of the Post, and Col. A. J. Bain, Post Engineer, arrived at the 24th's mess hall. At 12 noon the service began. The men moved forward, the hands on the clock revolved—now the last man had been served, and the clock showed the time to be 12:08. It is believed the General and his party had reason to be pleased at the rapidity of the service, and with the good food and other interesting features of the 24th General Hospital's mess service.

The 24th has apparently established a precedent in the manner of messing its personnel which might relieve the headaches of many mess officers confronted with similiar program.

SET-UP SIMPLE

The set-up is amazing simple—it consists of two units; ie, four metal pipes one inch in diameter and approximately ten feet in length and two wooden stanchions. The ends of these pipes are set into the stanchions, and thus are suspended over the regular line of service. The pipes are also placed in pairs which are at different levels, and which form two separate tray slides.

The pots and containers from which the food is to be served into the individual trays are placed on the regular service line.

The operation of this method of service is carried out in three steps. First, one member of the mess personnel places the individual trays on the tray slide. The second step covers the movement of the trays as they pass the individual food server who is stationed along the tray slide routes. As the trays pass along, the food is dished out of the large containers on the regular service line, and placed into the individual trays. The last step is the removing of the trays from the tray slides, and handing it to the soldier who is already in line. This operation is also done by one of the mess personnel.

This does not conclude the service as there is still a buffet table on which can be found such items as pickles, salads, desserts, bread, and other miscellaneous foodstuffs necessary to insure a good meal. Upon receiving his partially filled tray, the soldier continues along in line and passes the buffet table. Here he is privileged to serve himself with the items listed above. Until he has finished this self-service, then and only then, is the line of service that is able to serve a minimum of 3000 an hour entirely concluded.

The members of the 24th are exceptionally proud of this arrangement for serving food, especially as it was constructed entirely from salvaged material.

Lt. Marley Gets New Duties

Lt. S. J. Marley, Jr., former resident of Charlotte, N. C., has assumed duties as assistant special service officer and Life Insurance Officer at Fort Benning succeeding Lt. James Wicker, now attending the special service school at Fort George G. Meade, Maryland.

Lieut. Marley, who has been on active duty for two years and four months, has been stationed at Fort Benning all of that time and is well acquainted with the post.

Before being selected to attend the special service school, Lieut. Marley served with the 24th Infantry and later with the provost Marshal's office and at the induction station.

Did you know that the first "soldier bonus" bill of World War II was recently proposed in a Senate Bill, calling for continuation of vast pay for six months after the end of the war?

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

Americans the nation over took heart this week at the news from the far-flung fronts, where for the first time in the long war, Allied troops were on the offensive everywhere.

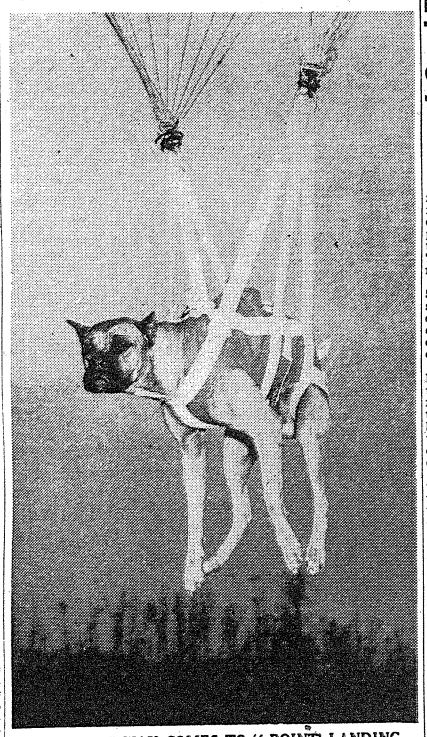
Faced with the military dilemma he had long dreaded — fighting on two fronts — Adolf Hitler was shuttling troops back and forth from the south of France to Russia this week.

On the Stalingrad front, the mighty Russians were counter-attacking with terrific fury in a gigantic encircling movement. Ensnaring tens of thousands of Germans and relieving the pressure all along the central Russian front. With the drifting snows and the icy winds of the Russian steppes at its back, the Red Army was in position this week to inflict major losses on the half-frozen German ranks.

In the south of France, Germans stood on the docks of Toulon and looked at the spectacle of many of the mightiest French battleship, blown up, burned or shattered by their valient French crews who, acting on terms of the armistice of 1940 with the Germans, preferred to see their ships at the bottom of the sea rather than in German hands.

Maybe too the Germans at Toulon looked across the Mediterranean and in fancy saw the smoke from Tunis, Bizerte and other North African ports, where grimly determined American, British, French and other Allied troops were relentlessly closing a wedge on the Germans and Italians, who with their backs to the Mediterranean, may possibly be facing a German "Dunkirk" unless Hitler can get enough men and planes and tanks to North Africa to hold the German beachhead against the onrushing Allies.

Winston Churchill, broadcasting from England, appealed to the Italian people to sever relations with the Axis powers now before events turned the sunny Italian peninsula into a world battleground. His warnings were punctuated effectively by block-busting bombs dropped from British bombers high over Genoa, Turin, and other key Italian cities.



On the other side of the world, fighting was no less bitter and no less encouraging for the Allies. The American Navy, Army and Marines had the situation well in hand here at Guadalcanal and in New Guinea. The Navy's superb victory over a numerically superior Japanese invasion fleet saved the day for Guadalcanal where the Army and Marines are systematically proceeding with the task of wiping out the Nip forces on the island.

On New Guinea, General MacArthur's army has the Japs crowded onto a narrow beach head, much the same as the Nazis are crowded into the North African shore line. Tree by tree, river by river the Allies were advancing against the Japs who only short months ago overran those South Pacific Islands.

On the home front, the nation's leaders warned a grimly-happy American people, that early victories, while heart-warming to the parents, brothers and friends of the fighting men, did not mean the war was over. Hospital Trains bearing North African wounded reached Walter Reed General Hospital near Washington, mute testimonial to what every Ameri-

"PARAPUP" MAX COMES TO '4-POINT' LANDING

505th's Mascot Max Qualifies As Parachutist

Pup Begs To Be Taken Aloft; Proves To Be Non-Freezer

BY. CAPT. BARNEY OLDFIELD

A 90 pound, rust colored boxer named Max, a dog who has already killed nine others he didn't like by merely snapping them between his jaws, is the full-fledged, fighting mascot of the 505th Parachute Infantry here.

Max has jumped the necessary five times from a plane in flight, felt the opening shock of a parachute, made his landings without injury, has been mentioned in the regimental orders of the day as a qualified parachutist, and has had the usual parachute wings certifying his jump competency pinned on his jacket.

Max, like all parachutists, was a volunteer.

Everytime the planes used to get ready to take off, Max would follow the men to the door, and bark to be taken along. After listening to his begging for several weeks, the troopers finally took him aloft.

He was rigged out in a special harness to which was attached a reserve canopy, one of the 22-foot jobs. His straps were tightened to him, and his static line fixed.

On his first trip up, he was second in line. He was placed in the pattern just behind Lt. Clyde Russell, of Lincoln, Neb., who was the jump-master.

He watched like an expert, nose in the air, while he was being hooked up to the anchor line in the roof of the plane. Then he sniffed at the edge of the door as the prop blast roared by.

When Russell yelled "Go!" and jumped out, Max went right out after him with a growl—the canine equivalent of counting to check the elapsed time.

The shock of opening hit him right in the middle of his second bark, which started as "arf" and wound up as an "umph."

From the ground, Max was applauded by other paratrooper watchers as a "non-freezer" in the door. He never broke the interval of the chutes in the sky, space between men and the jumpers fore and aft being identical.

He was slightly mystified by the appearance of the umbrella-like white canopy over his head. He looked up at it several times, then would point his nose down toward the ground which was fast coming up to meet him. The paratroopers in the air yelled reassurring words to him:

"Watch it, Max, ain't that first step a daisy!"

"Make a good downward pull, Nutt"

"If all those girl-dogs could see you now . . ."

Max landed feet first, which is better than most novices are able to do, but he was not visibly impressed. He waited around casually as the other jumpers ran to him to take him out of the harness and collapse his chute.

That was only the first hop, and it takes five to qualify. Of course, Max didn't know that, which may explain his calmness at the time.

SWEATS SECOND JUMP

Came the next day, however, when Max was being led to the field, his reactions were almost human. All paratroopers sweat the second jump. Max was nervous. He didn't like it much when the transport taxied up, and he was loaded aboard.

"Come on, Max," said Russell as he hooked him up. "Are you going to jump, or am I going to have to toss a piece of beefsteak out ahead of you so you'll have something to go after."

Max did not seem to care for the door, or be interested in beefsteak, or any kidding remarks from the sidelines. He held back with all his 90 pounds.

Again, they stood in the door as the plane roared over the field. Max gave every indication of preferring to back out, rather than face it. But, he somehow

Obstetrical Cases To Be Limited to Sixty

Crowded Conditions, Personnel Shortage Cause Restrictions

Limited facilities for the care of obstetrical cases in Station Hospital at Fort Benning have made it necessary to restrict patients admitted for such care to 60 in any one month, Col. E. A. Noyes, commanding officer of the hospital, announces.

Wives of military personnel desiring to avail themselves of prenatal and obstetrical care will be required to submit application for this service to the commanding officer of the hospital. Forms are available at the hospital, Dispensary A, and at the Columbus Dispensary. Patients will be notified of action taken on their applications.

Col. Noyes, in a memorandum to Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of the post, pointed out that the obstetrical service at Station Hospital has been steadily increasing during the past year.

"It has not reached the point where it is impossible to care for the number of patients applying for admission."

Col. Noyes said that the normal bed capacity of the obstetrical ward is 12 but by crowding and improvisation has been increased to 28. The daily census of patients now averages 25 and at times as high as 34 have been given care in a single day. In one 24-hour period, 11 babies were delivered.

PERSONNEL SCARCE

The hospital chief also pointed out that while it is the practice to keep mothers in the hospital from 10 to 14 days, the present emergency has forced this stay to be reduced to 7 and even to 5 days.

"Army nurses are not available to provide nursery service in the obstetrical ward and it is becoming more and more difficult to obtain competent civilian nurses," the Colonel declared.

Col. Noyes suggested that expectant mothers whose husbands are at Benning on duty of a temporary nature remain in their civilian home towns where obstetrical facilities are less crowded. He also recommended that obstetrical care be given only to the wives of military personnel whose home station is Fort Benning. He said that many expectant wives remain here after their husbands have left because it is known that obstetrical care is available to them. These conditions have produced an enormous burden on hospital personnel and have caused restrictive measures to be adopted.

O. C.'s To Get Only One-Day Yule Recess

Christmas Day will be observed with a full holiday for officer candidates in the Infantry School, it is announced by officials of the institution. New Year's Day will be a work day as usual.

It was also announced at post headquarters that there will be no official observance of either holiday.

Furlough Rail Tickets To Be Sold On Post

Applications Will Be Taken Dec. 7 At Transportation Office

Military personnel of Fort Benning who are granted Christmas furloughs will be able to purchase their tickets for rail transportation from representatives of the railroads at the Post Rail Transportation Office, it was announced today.

Starting next Monday, from 5:45 p. m. until 10 p. m. post personnel will be able to make application and buy their tickets here on the post to avoid the necessity of traveling to Columbus and purchasing their tickets.

Military personnel traveling by bus are requested to buy their tickets at the Columbus ticket office during the weekdays. Due to the regular weekend rush at the bus station soldiers are urged not to buy their tickets on Saturday or Sunday but to do so on weekdays where this is possible.

The railroad representatives will be at the Post Rail Transportation Office, which is located on the north side of the Commissary on the main Post. They will be on the Post from December 7 through Friday, December 11th. Tickets for either rail transportation or bus should be purchased not less than three days prior to the date and hour of departure.

Pay Bill Goes To President For Approval

Act Is Retroactive To June 1, 1942; Uniform Bill Approved

The Pay Readjustment Act Amendment bill which includes officers in the Army of the United States has now been passed by the Senate and has been sent to the White House for final approval, it was announced from Washington early this week.

At the same time, it was announced that the Army Clothing Pay bill had been passed by the Senate, but with some slight differences from the one previously passed by the House, so that a joint resolution of the House and Senate must now be agreed upon to arrange for presentation of the bill to the White House.

The pay act, retroactive to June 1, 1942, enables officers of all services and all components to count for both longevity pay and for periods, any prior enlisted or warrant service in any service or component.

NATIONAL GUARD AFFECTED

This act also permits Reserve officers and National Guard officers to count for pay periods all commissioned service, active or inactive. The Comptroller General has held that the original Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 permitted such officers to count inactive commissioned service for longevity pay, but not to determine advancements in pay periods. Finally, the measure entitles officers of the Regular Services to count prior inactive Reserve or National Guard service for all pay purposes.

With no debate whatever, the Senate approved a House Bill which increases Army uniform allowance from $150 to $250 and extends the allowance to warrant officers and National Guard officers.

Winners

BAYONET prize winners for last week include Cpl. William J. Paulson, 29th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, for his cartoon on Eighteen-Year-Olds; Pfc. Rudolph Schwed, Garrison library, for his poem "Someday I'll Be Back;" and Chaplain Edwin Willson for his editorial on Thanksgiving.

Prize winners are requested to come by the Public Relations Office at Post headquarters to sign for and receive their checks.

The BAYONET is in need of some dignified holiday art. We need cartoons dealing with the Christmas and New Year's Day theme. It is requested that cartoons submitted be connected with the Army in some way. Come on, fellas, who needs some Christmas money?

29th-124th Game Will Be Most Colorful Of Season

Post Commander To Award Trophy To Gator Team

Fort Benning's football season will reach a spectacular climax in Doughboy Stadium on Sunday afternoon when more than 15,000 fans are expected to watch the 124th Infantry Gators and the 29th Blue Devils clash in the most colorful game of the season.

Before the arch rivals trot out on the playing field for the 2:30 kick-off, brief pre-game ceremonies will honor the 124th squad which has already clinched the title in the Fort Benning Conference, regardless of the outcome of the "big" game.

Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, will present a handsome trophy, emblematic of the post championship, to the Gators. The trophy will be accepted by Roy Cestary, star halfback and captain of the orange and blue eleven, on behalf of his team-mates.

Also present at the presentation ceremonies which will take place in the center of the playing field will be the two pretty girl sponsor of the victorious Gator eleven. One of them is Moselle Hill, daughter of Col. John D. Hill, commanding officer of the 124th Regiment. Miss Hill is a sophomore at the University of Alabama, and has been a great follower of the Gator grid fortunes.

The other beauty who will be wearing Gator colors in the center of the field is Sue Lauderdale, well-known Columbus radio singer and entertainer, who also has been a loyal rooter for the 124th eleven. Miss Lauderdale has frequently entertained in the Gator rec. halls, and her choice as a co-sponsor of the title-winners was a popular one.

Both alligator mascots of the regiment, Adam Lazonga the First (28 inches) and Adam Lazonga the Second (eight foot, 250 pounds) will attend the game to help root the team home to another victory. Lazonga the Second is expected to arrive in a gaily decorated half-ton truck.

Between halves, the 124th Infantry will present a soldier drill team that has trained for several weeks for its football-game debut. The unit is similar to the one used by Auburn in the recent Georgia-Auburn game in downtown Columbus. Also, the Gators have promised another surprise for intermission, and claim it will be unlike anything Doughboy Stadium has ever seen.

Eye Witness Of Nazi Blitz To Speak

Dr. Dossogne's Talk Slated For Dec. 8 In Main Theater

The Rev. Dr. Victor Dossogne, an eye witness of the German Blitz in Belgium in 1940, will speak at the Main Theater at 5 p. m., Tuesday, Dec. 8, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, director of the personnel division, announces. The speaker will give a graphic description of his experiences during the invasion.

He is at present professor of history in the School of Law, Loyola University of New Orleans, La. At the time of the Nazi onslaught on his country, he was professor of history in the University of Namur.

Dr. Dossogne arrived in the United States in February, 1941 after a thrilling escape from occupied Belgium. After the Germans struck at the Belgians, he attempted to join the Belgian Army and witnessed the terrific ordeal of the refugees fleeing into France before the Nazis. He was on the spot when the French collapsed after the break-through at Sedan.

He was suspected by the panicky French of being a parachutist and barely escaped being shot. He then went to south France where he administered to the spiritual needs of the unhappy French, remaining there until the Franco-German armistice.

He then returned to Belgium, where he became persona non grata and was forced to flee by bicycle from occupied Belgium. He went through the ordeal of travelling through the forbidden occupied zone from unoccupied France, a spot where so many fugitives have paid with their lives for their dash for liberty.

From France Dr. Dossogne went to Spain and Portugal en route to America.

He is a graduate of the twice-destroyed University of Louvain, which was restored after the first World War with American funds. He holds four degrees from that institution including the bachelor of laws and Ph. D. degrees. He has done research in Germany, France, and England, and studied at the Sorbonne in Paris, Universities of Vienna, Munich, Bonn, and Cologne. He was a member of the Belgian and French Historical Academies.

W. D. Orders Holiday Pass Restrictions

Furloughs Limited To 10 Per Cent Enlisted Strength

Movements by rail of military personnel have reached approximately 1,600,000 per month, as compared with less than 1,000,000 in June, the War Department announced today.

Because of the steadily increasing strain on railroad facilities reported by the Transportation Corps, Service of Supply, orders have been issued to the Commanding Officers of all posts, camps and stations for the regulation of passes and furloughs during the holiday period to conform with available transportation.

Furloughs will not be granted during the period from December 12 to January 12, inclusive, to more than 10 per cent of the enlisted strength of any post, camp or station at any one time. Furloughs, which will be limited to 14 days, will be so arranged as not to permit travel to or from military reservations on December 24 and December 25.

XMAS DAY PASSES

Passes to enlisted men for Christmas Day and New Year's Day will be limited to the 10 per cent quota applying to furloughs. Men on Christmas passes will not be allowed to begin their journeys later than December 24, and will be required to return on December 25 or 26.

Passes granted for New Year's Day will require the men to begin their travel not later than December 31, and to return on January 1 or 2.

The Interterritorial Military Committee of the Railroads is cooperating on questions of transportation service with commanding officers.

Schedules of furloughs, showing the general destination areas, and times of departure and return, will be furnished to local railroad representatives.

Where it is found that available rail transportation is not sufficient to meet the number of furloughs and passes indicated in the schedule, the local commander will reduce the schedule of furloughs and passes accordingly.

CBS to Broadcast History of Infantry

Will Originate From Infantry School Saturday; Slocum Writes Script

Columbia Broadcasting System's weekly coast-to-coast radio program, "The Spirit of '42" will originate, for the second time, from The Infantry School Saturday, scheduled from 2:30 to 3:00 p. m.

The program will be staged in the Children's School on Lumpkin Road and Baltzell Ave. and will tell the story of the Infantry, tracing its history, its part in the great battles of the world, and the role it is expected to play in the present global conflict. Post personnel is invited to attend.

The program, written and directed by Columbia's Bill Slocum, will feature the 29th Infantry band under the baton of Chief Warrant Officer Albert Andrews. It is scheduled to play seven numbers including marches, patrols and other fast-moving selections.

A professional announcer and professional performers will arrive from New York City to enact the story.

Mr. Slocum, one of Columbia's crack script writers, was at Fort Benning this week, rounding the program into shape. He obtained much data on infantry in general and infantry as it concerns Fort Benning. He intends to incorporate this information in his story of the "Queen of Battle."

"The Spirit of '42" is ranked highly as a weekly program, and has been a regular nation wide Columbia feature for many months. Last March Captain Wyllis Cooper, now in charge of the "Army Hour" directed the program from The Infantry School, portraying a day in the life of an officer candidate. It received high praise throughout the country.

Saturday's program will be heard over a great network of 50 radio stations which practically blankets the entire country.

Chaplain Billman Takes Bitter With Better With His Boys

"Praise the Lord, and get me over the wall on the obstacle course."

The Third Student Training Regiment's dynamic Chaplain Adolph Billmann, former pastor at Memphis and Slater, Mo., perhaps doesn't make this plea, but he must have something similar to it on his mind as he takes his turn with the Infantry Officer Candidates on the obstacle course here at Fort Benning.

The 50-year old churchman has licked everything else at the Infantry School but that eight-foot wall on the obstacle course. He's gone on tough all-night problems with the students and has taken his shots at the targets on the numerous Infantry weapon ranges. All in all, he's learned to be an Infantry soldier along with his numerous chaplain's duties here in the Regiment.

One cold Sunday last winter in Memphis, Mo., Chaplain and Mrs. Billmann were relaxing after a hard day in the church when an announcement came over the radio urgently calling for 1000 chaplains for duty with our ever-expanding Army. They looked at one another, nodded and soon were Army bound.

Chaplain and Mrs. Billman came to the Third Student Training Regiment in September and have now firmly entrenched themselves in the hearts of the men and officers of the organization. During the services which Chaplain Billmann conducts, Mrs. Billmann often makes large colored sketches illustrating sacred music and passages from the Bible.

WRITES APHORISMS

The chaplain's bulletins and programs are interesting and they often contain such gems as these: "The rest of your days depend on the rest of your nights." "The long green doesn't stay with the green long," and "Those fellows who talk so much about 'Number one' should remember that it is the next thing to nothing." Every church program has the following notation written on the bottom: "Take this bulletin with you and this afternoon write a letter home on the back of it." The men do it, too, and the chaplain has received letters of gratitude from parents all over the country for his interest in their boys.

Chaplain Billmann attended Johnson Bible College and graduated from Phillips University in Enid, Okla., in 1926. He was pastor in Slater for seven years and was in Memphis for two years prior to joining the crack Third Student Training Regiment.

Over The Top, Hallelujah!

Chaplain Adolph Billmann, formerly pastor at Slater and Memphis, Mo., takes his turn on the obstacle course of the Third Student Training Regiment at the Infantry School here at Fort Benning. Caught in action as he climbs out of a ditch, the 50-year old churchman has just negotiated the rugged course which is part of the Infantry Officer Candidates intensive training program.

G.I.'s Amend 'Book' On Saluting Regulations

To execute the hand salute, "raise your right hand smartly until the tip of your forefinger touches the brim of your headdress above and slightly to the right of your right eye.

"If you are without cap or hat, the tip of your forefinger touches your forehead above and slightly to the right of your right eye. In either case you keep your thumbs and fingers extended and joined, palm to the left, and the hand and wrist straight. You also keep your upper arm horizontal and the forearm inclined at an angle of 45 degrees."

Well, believe it or not, that's what it says in "the Book." "The book," of course, being the Basic Field Manual, Soldier's Handbook.

Now, it sounds fairly simple, but a survey made by the BAYONET shows that the salute may vary as the number of soldiers or officers giving it. In other words, there are more individual methods of giving the salute than of executing any other movement in the manual.

Which may seem strange, except for the fact that it is about the only way that the soldier has of expressing a touch of individuality—something like the way he wears his cap or the flair he manages to give to his tie or the jauntiness he can get into the hang of his blouse.

Roughly speaking, the survey shows that the salutes rendered by the men (and this also includes those returned by the officers observed in the survey, by the way) fall into categories or methods.

INDIAN SCOUT SALUTE

Probably the most frequent bit of individuality in giving the salute might be classified as the "Indian Scout" salute. This somewhat resembles the gesture of friendship given under the old Indian hand language. The palm is extended outward in a rather high gesture and the head is thrown back.

Then there is the "Sun in the Eye" technique, whereby the salutor greets the salutee with a gesture reminiscent of a Western scout shading his eyes from the sun. You have seen the pictures of the rugged scout or cowboy shading his eye from the last ray of the slanting Western sun, so you get the idea of why this salute is given this designation.

Another technique is what may be termed the "Salute Delicate." In this, the little finger is held delicately away from the rest of the hand—something like a debutante taking a drink of water and being awfully, awfully conscious of that little finger not touching the glass.

There is, also, the "old timer" type wherein the hand is brought outward and downward, following the rendition of the salute, with sufficient force to jerk the renderer at least one pace forward.

And then there's the "Hi Pal" type, with the salute being tossed off in pretty much of a casual manner, as though calling "Hello there, old man," to a personal friend across the street.

There are two main types of "bent wrist" salutes — one of course with the wrist bent in; the other with the wrist bent out.

Each of these main varieties, naturally, has a number of subvarieties. Sometimes it is pretty difficult for the off-hand observer to put the salute into the proper pigeon-hole. Sometimes some men vary their own particular type of salute, too, so that it is difficult to point out a man and say "That fellow's the Inner-Bent-Wrist-Superimposed-on-the-Indian-Scout type of salute giver."

Yet generally it is pretty easy to type your man according to the style of salute he gives, and observing and classifying men and their salutes is a quiet sort of pastime in which some of the men at the Fort indulge.

Army Chow Has Improved Since Washington's Day

The average G. I. who misses his mother's chocolate cakes and all the delicacies only his mother knows how to make, should stop and reflect on the improvements of Army chow in the past few years.

They should be thankful they weren't drafted in the time of the Revolutionary War. Washington's men crossed the Delaware on 24 hour rations consisting of a pint of milk, 16 ounces of beef, seven ounces of dried peas, and a quart of spruce beer.

By the War of 1812, the army had compiled a G. I. Cook Book with stipulations that mess should be prepared by privates of squads, including musicians. Regulation 202 contained a reasonable, if elementary, injunction: Bread ought not to be burnt.

The mess sergeants of Civil War Days were allowed to add yeast and pepper to their grocery list, which still bore little resemblance to the modern "balanced diet." The Spanish-American war ushered in the first K. P. potato-peeling duty, and by World War I soldiers were allowed butter on their bread.

Not until 1927 did fruits, cocoa, cheese, bacon, macaroni, and tea become part of the regular issue.

By 1982, predicts a culinary columnist at Davis-Monthan Field, the chow line may be forming for filet mignon, crepe suzettes, a good Mulligan, and a cup of real coffee.

WHAT WE'RE LOOKING FOR IS LEADERSHIP, — BE CONFIDENT, — BE AGGRESSIVE!"

29er Recalls Hawaii's Jolly Old Pre-War Days

Sgt. Walter T. Smith, self-styled "laughing boy" of Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry, likes to recall the two and one half years he soldiered in Hawaii. Among other impressions which he has carried away with him from the land of coconuts, palm trees, white sands, and hula skirts is his memory of the Jap admiral who ran a "beer joint" there. "Wasn't a bad place at all," confided Smith. "I guess they shipped the old boy to the States though when war was declared."

Smith was sent to the 29th in 1934, shortly after his enlistment. He was assigned to "C" Company until 1938—at which time he began to hear the call of the open road; he listened to it and it sounded pretty good. A month later found him in Hawaii.

"The girls there were swell," said Smith. "I wouldn't take anything for my experiences in Hawaii. "The climate was O. K., too."

The Sergeant didn't think very highly of certain items of the Hawaiian diet. Particularly lacking in praise is his opinion of "poi." "I thought it despicable," he said. "It's a little bit like a heap of cold, wet, mashed-up grits. It's served from a big bowl and when it's 'ready' a whole family will crowd around and dig into it with their fingers. A man would have to be pretty d——n hungry to eat that stuff. I've heard that it's good for fertilizer, though."

Upon his return from Hawaii, Smith was reassigned to the 29th for duty with Headquarters Company. At present he is a squad leader in the intelligence section there. He declares that "the most exciting event" of his army career was his elevation to corporal.

Sergeant Smith comes from Uvalda, Georgia; his civilian occupation was that of ticket collector in a theater. In his opinion the "old army" was "pretty tough." He stated that, as a recruit, his principal preoccupation was with the thought of going back home again. Now, however, he intends to remain in the army "even after the war"—which he believes will be over very soon.

His favorite pastime, he would like everybody to know, is lying upon his bunk listening to "the music of the hills." As a parting thought he stated that he does not care very much for either Hitler or the Emperor of Japan, and would consider it very nice if—following the war—the people of the occupied countries would do something about it for him.

Lt. Phipps Knew "Cliveden Set"

Brought up in England where he knew well the members of the famous "Cliveden Set," although he was an American citizen, Tommy Phipps, Hollywood script writer who has several screen hits to his credit, pinned on his bars yesterday when the 13th company of the Second Student Training Regiment graduated here.

A nephew of Lady Nancy Astor, young Phipps lived for a considerable time at the Cliveden estate, attended Eton College, and met the members of the Cliveden set and others, including George Bernard Shaw while he lived in England. His parents had taken him there as a child.

Lt. Phipps didn't pay much attention to the political aspects of the group, however, since he was early attracted to the stage and the movies, becoming a writer for the cinema in England before he came to Hollywood.

In Hollywood he wrote such successful shows as "Broadway Melody," "Destiny Bay" and his most recent hit, "A Yank at Eton," which starred Mickey Rooney. He also served for a time as associate editor for the Vanity Fair magazine.

O. C. Schools In War Zones Are Established

Officer candidate schools have been established and are in operation now at several overseas places in order to give enlisted men an opportunity to earn commissions, it was announced today by the War Department.

These schools are established in addition to the 18 separate branch officer candidate schools maintained by the Army in 24 locations in the United States.

Since the inception of the officer candidate program, several thousand candidates have been returned to schools in the United States from points all over the world where United States troops are garrisoned.

Because of the distances involved and the time required for return to this country and the irregularity of transportation, however, it was explained that officer candidate schools now have been set up overseas, with several classes already having been graduated.

While capacities of such schools are necessarily military secrets, such schools have been established for some time in Australia, England, and a limited number of small island bases, the War Department said. At the same time, additional schools will be authorized as need arises, it was stated.

Officer Candidate Sought Bars In '18; Tries Here Again

Taking up where he left off 24 years ago, Horace C. Dixon is once again an Officer Candidate.

When the Armistice was signed Nov. 11, 1918, O. C. Dixon, now of the 20th company of the Second Student Training Regiment, was in the officer training course at Camp MacArthur, Waco, Tex. After the war was over, most of the members of the school returned home almost immediately.

Today, however, Candidate Dixon has taken up where he left off, and hopes that this time he'll actually have a chance to see active duty against the Germans and Japanese.

O. C. Dixon is 44 years old now. His home is in Fairfax, Oklahoma. The training course of 1918 was not as thorough or as difficult as the present one, he states. Close order drill and field training were the order of the day, with lectures and academic work held at night under the World War I training plan, he says.

Work Started On Officers' Club In Harmony Church

Work on an Officers' Club building for the Harmony Church area now is under way, it was announced today, with foundations already in and part of the frame structure up.

The building is being erected behind the southernmost group of bachelor officer quarters, west of Cusseta highway near the Eighth Division road, and is situated on a knoll about 200 yards from the highway.

The building will contain a large recreation room with porch and second story balcony in the right wing; rest rooms and tap room in the center, and a restaurant, grill and kitchen in the left wing. Officers and a game room will be located on the second floor. The new club is expected to be ready for occupancy by the end of December.

Col. McQuarrie Commands 110th

Col. C. M. McQuarrie, former student and instructor in the Infantry School and at one time assigned to the 29th Infantry here, has assumed command of the 110th Infantry at Camp Livingston, La.

The Colonel is a graduate of West Point where he starred in football and received honorable mention for the All-America team. While at Benning with the 29th he coached and participated in his battalion's football, basketball, and track program.

His son, C. M., Jr., is now a student at West Point, and two other sons are attending Georgia Military Academy. Mrs. McQuarrie and young daughter reside in College Park, Ga.

MAJ. GARRISON GETS PROMOTION TO LT. COL.

Major Robert H. Garrison, in command of the Service Battalion of the Second Student Training Regiment, has been promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, it is announced. He was first commissioned in the Organized Reserves as a second lieutenant in 1927 on graduation from Clemson college. For the next 10 years, Col. Garrison served as principal of the high school in Orangeburg, S. C., then went with the Barrett company as an agronomist with headquarters in Columbia, S. C. He was called into active duty with the Army in February, 1941.

Director Hobby Reveals Vital WAAC Statistics

Corresponding Army Titles Are Listed

In case you've been wondering, the pay scale for personnel of the WAAC contingent that is due to come to Fort Benning late in December, will be just exactly the same as that for enlisted men and officers of the regular Army.

In issuing an appeal for more enlistments in the WAACS, Oveta Culp Hobby, director of the group, announces that new facilities and enlarged opportunities for training now exist as WAAC is to be increased to six times the original size. In the appeal, the pay scale in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps is given.

A private in the WAACS will be known as an auxiliary, and will receive $50.00 per month base pay. When a girl attains the rating equivalent to that of private first class, she'll be known as auxiliary first class, and will wear the single chevron, and will receive $54.00 base pay monthly.

The grade equivalent to that of corporal will wear the double chevron, will be known as a junior leader and receive $66.00 per month. A leader will wear sergeant's chevrons, and receive $78.00 base monthly pay. A staff leader will be equivalent to staff sergeant, and will receive $96.00. A technical leader will correspond to technical sergeant, and receive $114 while a first leader will be the same as a master sergeant and receive $138.00 base pay.

THE OFFICERS

In the ranks of officers, a third officer will correspond to a second lieutenant, and will receive $150. A second officer will correspond to rank of first lieutenant and will receive $166.67 while a first officer will correspond to rank of captain, and will receive $200. A field director will be the same as a major, and will receive $250 while an assistant director will correspond to rank of Lt. Colonel and receive $291.67. The director corresponds to rank of colonel and receives $333.33.

The WAACS, of course, won't be known as "enlisted men," but will be termed enrolled members. All grades and ranks will wear the same insignia as the men or officers of the regular Army.

Among jobs that women may fill in the ranks of the WAACS, Director Hobby announced, are accountant, baker, bookkeeper, cadre clerk, camera technician, cashier, chauffeur, clerk, cook, dispatcher of motor vehicles, draftsman, librarian, machine record operator, messenger, mimeograph operator, musician, photo laboratory technician, postal clerk, radio operator, sales clerk, statistician, stenographer, telegraph printer operator, telephone operator, teletype operator, truck driver, typist, weather observer.

Previous experience is helpful, but is not a requirement, except in a few classifications, she pointed out.

TANK OFFICERS PROMOTED

The following named officers of the 764th Tank Battalion (L), have received promotion from second to first lieutenants:

James A. Dick, John E. Krebs, William F. Dwyer, Edward M. Donahue.

Soldiers Slated For Foreign Duty Procrastinating

Soldiers are not responding to appeals of authorities that military personnel attend to personal affairs before leaving for staging areas and ports of embarkation, Lt. Samuel Marley, post insurance officer, warned Saturday.

"It's up to each individual soldier who is scheduled for foreign service now or later, to stop putting it off and set his personal affairs in shape right now before he reaches a staging area where there is much to do," the lieutenant added.

The officer added that the advantages of settling such personal affairs as power of attorney, insurance, wills, futurity pay now while there is time to handle details can not be over-emphasized.

"It will mean a lot to men overseas to know their loved ones are cared for at home. The Army is keenly interested in avoiding last-minute arrangements in staging areas by having these affairs taken care of now, especially the matter of insurance."

Lieutenant Marley pointed out that there were insurance officers with each regiment and other organizations on the post whose assignment is to aid men in handling their personal affairs.

Chavis Is Chief Warrant Officer

Regimental Headquarters, 29th Infantry, has announced the promotion of Warrant Officer Nehemiah Chavis to Chief Warrant Officer, a rank held by less than 200 men in the entire American Army.

Mr. Chavis, assistant supply officer of the regiment since his appointment to warrant officer on May 15 of this year, has spent all of his fourteen years of soldering in the 29th Infantry. Prior to his appointment last May he had been variously employed in the regiment as supply sergeant, regimental operation sergeant, and as a clerk in Service Company.

'Tiger' Officer Served France's Foreign Legion

If and when the 10th Armored Division ever gets to North Africa there'll be one "Tiger" who won't be a stranger to that continent's vast desert lands. He's First Lieut. Charles W. Simms, company commander of Supply Battalion's B Company.

The lieutenant spent three years and three months there fighting with the French Foreign Legion. He was in numerous skirmishes, was wounded twice and received the coveted Croix de Guerre with two palms.

Deciding that life in the States was a bit too dull the adventure-seeking Simms got a job on a tramp steamer some ten years ago when he was 18 years old. But the ship went into drydock at Marseilles and he was stranded.

"I'd heard and read a lot about the famous French Foreign Legion," he said, "so I decided to see what it was like."

He left France shortly afterwards and landed at now famous Oran. After his recruit training near there he was sent to French West Africa on the Moroccan border. Oddly enough it was here, in his first engagement, that he won the famous Croix de Guerre with which he was decorated some time later at Casablanca.

FIGHTS BERBERS

The fierce native Berbers were at that time starting a religious uprising and Simms, then a private, was sent out with an advanced guard of 27 men against them. Ambushed in a surprised attack by the natives, the guard was literally cut to pieces. The noncoms in charge were "knocked down" (killed, to you) and Simms was put in charge. Greatly outnumbered, the French fought back to dispel the attackers and Simms brought back to camp with him a tired band of eleven men.

He was decorated with his first palm while out on a scouting mission. Running into a strong force of Berbers who, Lieut. Simms says are "wiry and absolutely fearless fighters" Simms, though wounded, furnished the covering fire which enabled his fellow soldiers to escape.

The third decoration was won shortly afterwards.

"On our way to an outpost in a vehicle," Lieut. Simms described, "the Berbers attacked us with hand grenades, their favorite weapons. Seven of our men were killed outright. The two of us fought it out with machine guns and were able to get our car out safely. The French placed great stress on not leaving a vehicle behind to fall into the hands of the enemy. Unfortunately, my buddy died before I could get him medical aid."

BADLY WOUNDED

Simms was wounded badly by machine gun fire in this skirmish and later was discharged from both the hospital and the Legion after thirty-nine months of the type of adventure he sought.

Oddly enough, his company commander in the Legion was an American, Captain H. C. Jackson of Richmond, Va. who was a 1st sergeant in the last war and decided to stay in Europe with the French army. He went to Officer Candidate School and later was commissioned and sent to Africa with the Legion.

After returning to the States in '35, Simms joined the 104th Quartermaster Regiment and later the 146th QM both at Fort Meade, Md.

From there he went to Officer Candidate School at Fort Knox and was assigned to the 10th Armored's Supply Battalion in July. In scarcely more than two months he was promoted to a first lieutenant.

Lt. Simms gave us a little encouragement. He says the natives "over there" are as friendly as can be, particularly to soldiers. The cities and towns, he says, are interesting and have enough lavish entertainment to satisfy everyone.

OBSERVATION

When approaching a previously selected observation position always stop and observe it closely for at least 15 minutes to be sure it's not occupied by the enemy.

Young friends . . . old friends . . . they're all friends of 7-Up, the "fresh-up" drink. And 7-Up is their friend, too . . . always welcome, always the same. Wherever friends meet, 7-Up is a friendly greeting.

Ex-Referee Thrills Tigers With Tales Of Ring Experiences

It took the 10th Armored's recent boxing tournament to uncover T-5 Charles "Gib" Fleshman who came out of the North-West seven months ago to volunteer with the Division's Maintenance Battalion.

When the Special Service Office sent out a call for officials for the Division Bowl matches Fleshman's refereeing experience won him the ring's "third man" post. He's been an amateur and professional boxing and wrestling referee out on the West Coast for the past ten years and has even officiated in hair pulling matches between girls.

"Gib's" career ended on a high note last year when he refereed a wrestling bout between Jim Londos and "Jumpin' Joe" Savoldi, the former Notre Dame flash. His friendship with these two mussle men has been a long and pleasant one filled with many an amusing tale.

He was telling us about the night he and Savoldi were staying at a "Y" and Joe, as usual, was besieged by a mob of kids.

He was right in the middle, telling them stories and showing them some tricks of his trade when suddenly his manager appeared on the scene, foaming, fuming, and demanding the expulsion of the juveniles. At this moment Savoldi took a deep breath, pulled in his stomach, bulged out his muscles and glared at the manager . . . Joe continued his story.

"Gib's" nomination for the "best built man" title goes to Londos. The Wily Greek has the body according to Fleshman and is one of the few wrestlers in the game who doesn't smoke nor drink. As a matter of fact, says Fleshman, easy going as "Jeem" is he absolutely insists that no one smoke while in his company.

11th Reg't. Quiz Team Is Winner

Definitely establishing themselves as the team to beat, the quiz team of the 11th Regiment's personnel came through with flying colors to tromp the quiz team representing the 419th F. A. personnel last week at Service Club No. 2. Both teams started out in nip and tuck fashion but the 11th pulled ahead to win 405 to 310.

Members of the winning team were: Corps. Joe Sullivan, Fred Boylan, Morse Johnson and Sgt. Walter Coss. The 419th team was made up of Pvt. R. J. Griffith, S-Sgt. Ray Cantrell, Sgt. Sam Freese and Sgt. Willis Shaibley.

Mrs. Winifred H. Baker, Senior Hostess, awarded the winning team a carton of cigarettes. Cpl. James E. Frye of the division public relations office served as Emcee. Sanford Axelrod acted as timer and scorer.

11th Regiment Promotes Sixteen

As a result of their recent promotions, the following men in the 10th Armored's 11th Regiment are wearing new chevrons. The men are:

To be 1st sergeant, Joe H. Attaway; to be tech sergeant, Milton Miller; to be staff sergeant, Austin R. Miller; to be sergeants, Charles W. Greener, Edward C. Frederiek, William K. Evans, Merle Tool, John H. Radwan, Charles C. Jameson and Richard P. Sillonis.

To be corporals, Joseph G. Zoglman and Morris J. Stein; to be technicians 5th grade, James L. Jeffers, Richard I. Godfrey, James G. Borden, and William E. Cannon.

3rd Armored Stopped At Last!

After failing to stop the Third Armored Regiment in both baseball and football, the 55th Engineers did the trick with this tank obstacle. Photo was taken at anti-tank demonstration held last Saturday. Tank is medium M-3. (10th Armored Photo by Gilbert.)

10th Armored Announces Anti-Tank Gun Winners

Early on a frosty morning recently a visitor at 10th Armored's Frey Range could readily see that members of the 37mm Gun Crews were possessed with especially itchy trigger fingers. Eight of these crews were manning the new 37mm self-propelled anti-tank guns, and the other four were using the M5 model mounted in light tanks. Both types were equipped with .22 subcaliber mounts for firing on the one-thousand inch range.

The 419th's Battery B took top scoring honors with the self-propelled guns by notching 283 points while the 3rd Armored's Hq. Co., 1st Battalion grabbed the tanker honors by scoring 330 points.

When the last target was pasted and the final score tabulated, the results were such that they might serve as a formidable warning to enemy tankers "over there."

The 419th Field Artillery lads fought to the top in the Self-propelled competition with 283 points to nose out Headquarters Co., Maintenance Battalion, whose crew punched out a score of 270.

The boys who did it for B Battery, 419th are Sgts. Howard Roberts, Samuel Freese, Jr., Charles Wister and Pvt. Herman Nichols.

Company B, Supply Battalion, notched 250 points to overcome Company D, 90th Reconnaissance with a score of 90.

Co. B's team included Sgt. Carroll Hudson, Sgt. John Kuczek, and Corporals Gregory Meehan and Joseph Robertson.

The Doughboys from Company A, 54th Isfantry turned in 244 points against Battery B, 420th F. A. Bn's. 185.

Shooting for Company A were Sgts. W. A. Stafford, Emory Stephens, William Cubrich and Orville Slaughter.

SERVICE COMPANY

Again the 54th came through, this time with Service Company's 190 taking the honors from Company B, 55th Engineer Battalion who shot 180 points. Shooting for Service Company, 54th were S-Sgt. Floyd Kreh, S-Sgt. Adm Jasinski, Sgt. George Stouffer and T-4 Carlton Rooney.

When the self-propelled mounts had completed their firing, the tankers rolled in to see what they could do.

Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, Third Regiment, established the day's highest mark of 330 points and appropriately enough, their opponents Headquarters Company, First Battalion, Eleventh Regiment, chalked up the day's second high score of 298.

The winning crew's members are Sgts. Albert Holt, Henry Barber, Pvt. William Swartzlander, and Cpl. Warren Ferris. Cpl. Ferris, incidentally, had the highest individual score for the day, 95 out of a possible 100. Company B, Third Regiment, with 285 points had enough to top Company B, Eleventh Regiment's 244.

The crew from Company B, Third Regiment includes S-Sgts. Alfred Couturier, Don Hayes, Sgt. Ray Kimberly and Sgt. C. F. Stolarczyk.

SENT TO KNOX

Eleven enlisted men of the 10th Armored Division have been named to pursue a course of instruction in wheeled vehicles at Fort Knox, Kentucky. The men are: T-5 William H. Reilly, Pfc. Arthur P. Hq. Company, 1st Bn., 11th Reg't Gives Party

A chicken dinner and beer bust was the order of entertainment for the members of Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion of the 10th Armored's 11th Regiment recently. Guests of honor were Lt. Col. and Mrs. Joseph I. Lambert. Others who attended were the officers of the 1st Battalion Headquarters and the company commanders and 1st Sergeants of Companies A, B, and C.

The following promotions were announced during the evening: Tech Sgt. Milton Miller, Staff Sgt. Austin R. Miller, Sgt. William Evans, Corp. Joseph Zoglman and T-5 John J. Marek.

For the Sake of What We Love

"Love" is an expression which is, in some of its varied forms, as old as the oldest of words; yet, just what love is has been a question since time immemorial and still is a question. We are all familiar with some of the effects of this mysterious thing, LOVE. However, to single it out from its effects to examine it and see what it is would be quite an impossible task. It has been demonstrated time and time again that there is no limit to the efforts which one will put forth to protect and preserve that which he loves. Assuming that adequate means are available, we know that in many cases only death will limit the efforts put forth in defense of loved and cherished objects.

Today we Americans are living in an era where we all have a common object at stake, one which we love and cherish and value very highly. That object is our American Way of Living. We know that to be better than any other that could be substituted for it. It is ours to defend. America today has on a larger defense program by far than any it has ever experienced; yet we know and we must know very emphatically that this vast program is necessary for the sake of what we love. In this vast program every American is called upon to make a contribution. Every American is expected to contribute toward the preservation of our American way of life. Not everybody can help in the same way, but there are numerous ways in which help can be rendered.

We, gathered here today, are soldiers who, like millions of other Americans have been appointed to make our contributions in the armed forces of this vast defense program. We are expected to do our job well. We should not feel that because life in the army is so different from the civilian life that we have been used to all our life, we are being treated unfairly. We should not feel that this war can be won without our participation. We should not be guilty of saying or even thinking, "Oh, they don't need me in the army." "What is there that I can do?" "Why don't they just let me go back home; I wouldn't even be missed." If anyone is tempted to feel that way about the matter, he should analyze the situation this way: "After all, I am only one of the several millions of American men who have been taken out of their civilian environments and put into the army. Now, supposing every one of those millions would feel that he could be done without; it would really be pretty bad for our American way of life.

Remember, fellow soldiers, that the folks back home want us back there as bad as we want to be back there, but there is a job to be done and we cant' do it back home. We have to stick with our job and finish it, feeling assured that the folks back home are supporting us one hundred per cent in whatever way they can to finish the job and come back home. Unless we take that attitude toward our assignments there may not be any back-home after a while. We must also remember that the folks back home are doing without many of the things which they would enjoy in normal times.

We, together with the rest of the United Nations, are striving against the enemy for the sake of what we love. With our united efforts we feel sure that victory will be ours. When the contest is over, we will feel all the more proud of what we have preserved because we will have had to suffer for it and thus helped to pay the price of keeping it. We will feel that we really have a share in it.

No price is too big to pay for something that you love and want. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life." Surely love must be a mighty force to cause the Almighty God to give His only Son into death for the sake of what he loved. Let us be Americans and stick with the cause whole-heartedly and achieve our goal.

—Pfc. Paul E. Leacraft (Colored).

Booby Traps

Here is the story of Private Abdul McCranberry, veteran of campaigns against the Germans, Japs, Italians, K.P. duty, and Georgia cockroaches.

Abdul first encountered a booby trap in the Sahara desert while serving with the Imperial Ethiopian Eye-Gougers. He spotted a bottle of beer cleverly left behind by the retreating enemy. He put the beer in his hip pocket and it exploded, serving him right for not drinking it when he had the chance.

The explosion blew two of Abdul's vertebrae through his pants and scared 637 Italians into surrender. An ambulance rushed Abdul to the base hospital. "Hmmmm," said the medico, who had worked his way through college scraping gum off lecture hall seats, "I will have to stitch up the wound." So he donned his rubber gloves, sterilized four needles, and sewed up Abdul's pants. Then Abdul went out to look for more beer.

Abdul was fighting a fierce rear guard action on the Russian front. A lady sniper mistaking Abdul for an evacuated Five-Year Plan, laid aside her rifle and knitting, and adroitly fastened a "Napoleon Special" type booby trap to his other hip pocket. "I didn't like those pants, anyway," Abdul said, "They were so fuzzy I had to shave them every Saturday night."

Then Abdul was hunting snipers in the Solomons. He stopped to watch two dogs airplane fight and a coconut he was eating exploded because it had three pounds of TNT in it. Abdul gathered up his teeth and put them in his pocket (not his hip pocket).

When Abdul came home, he was greeted by his Congressman, who presented him with the order of the purple liver and an exploding cigar.

That night while Abdul was sleeping soundly in his barracks bag, a Nazi fifth columnist ingenuously concealed a "Potato-masher" type booby trap in Abdul's good ear. It went off while Abdul was dreaming about Dorothy Lamour and blew Abdul's brains out. (It did not blow Dorothy Lamour's sarong off, as is sometimes hinted).

With his brains gone, Abdul advanced rapidly in the army. He was promoted to technician 5th grade and sent to the Infantry School to learn all about booby traps.

—Lt. Walter Wilcox.

Total Victory

Reports of deliberate slowdowns in industry keep filtering in — men giving only part of their minds, hearts and muscles to the job of equipping our soldiers who are giving all. An enemy force of hurt feelings, petty jealousies, resentments influences men more than love of America. In one part of the country sixty per cent of the butcher shops were out of meat on Saturday afternoon. The overbuying of a few robbed many of their meat supply. Greed, the very enemy we are battling overseas, influencing American men and women more than love of neighbor.

The victories in the Solomons, North Africa, China and Europe are cause for fresh hope and thanksgiving but that other enemy force is still winning—right in our own homes, in our factories and neighborhoods.

There are other men and women in America who recognize these enemy ideas and fight them. Take a man like Len who is one of many on a production line working in one of the largest aircraft factories. Production was about one half what it should have been. He asked himself why and wrote down the reasons. He was honest and unselfish in his diagnosis. Friction—not in the machines, but in the men. In the victory program "You Can Defend America" he found the cure: honest apology for mistakes and unselfish cooperation. He returned some tools he "borrowed" and apologized to his bench mate for working against him instead of with him. This new spirit spread through the section. Production was normal in one month. The month after it was ahead of schedule.

The secret of this total victory spirit was summed up by one man recently interviewed in Washington: "To win this war we need a voice from on High, brother. Something better than human brains has got to show us how."

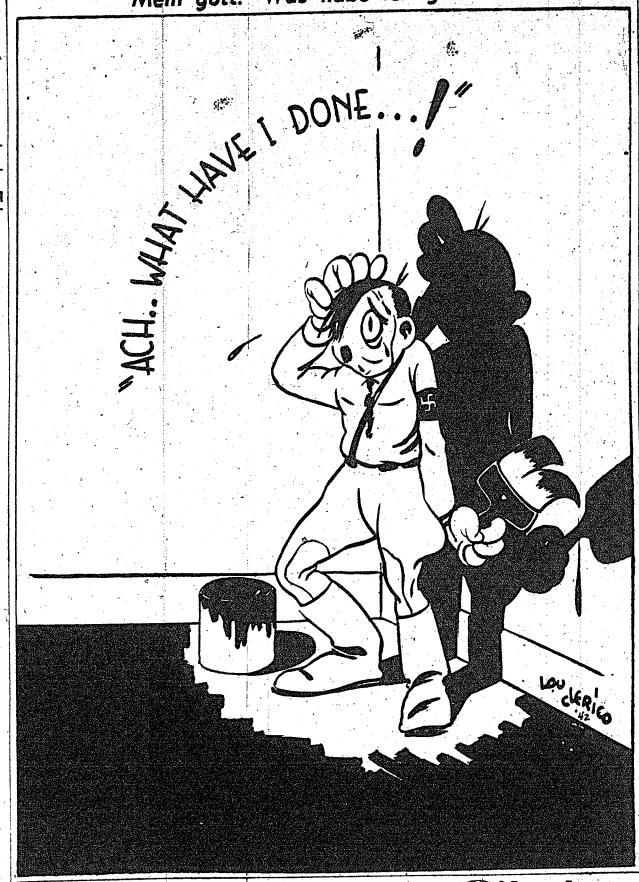
Wanted—Group Singing

"If someone were to say that the governing board of The Infantry School has made an omission in the curriculum which they have prepared for Officer Candidate Classes, I am quite sure that anybody who has been subject to the ninety-day blitzkrieg by which officers are developed would want to send the man who made that statement to a psychiatrist. Never-the-less, I shall say that something has been omitted, and it is instruction in the conducting of group singing.

That there is a deplorable lag in the high level to which the American fighting man's spirit has been raised the songs which he sings as he marches to battle can hardly be denied. Unlike our allies—the armies of the English, the Australians, the Free French, the Russians and the Chinese—the American soldier does not have worthwhile battle music, songs which honestly reflect the spirit of this people's war in which we are engaged.

Possibly, the fact that heretofore our Broadway music publishing concerns have not been able to produce anything which does not have a sickening tinge of "juke-box" commercialism is irremediable. It seems not likely, though. Our music publishers, albeit sluggish to the "nth" degree in coming through with music that had any roots whatsoever with this all-out struggle, have of late turned out some material which is on the proper track. Witness: "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition" and "The Fuehrer's Face."

The present unhealthy condition with respect to our nation's war songs will not remain static. Decent army songs most certainly will emerge as we Americans progress further into the war. On this hypothesis, who is to ignite the spark that will flame, through song, into an added something in the way of spirit and morale for our troops? Naturally, our army's leaders—its officers.



If this be true, how are our officer candidates being equipped for the task in the training program which they undergo? As future officers, we are being taught how to train soldiers, how to give them instruction, discipline, food, clothing, shelter, money, drill exercise and mass games in which they can participate competitively. In short, we are given "suggested solutions" to deal with every possible contingency connected with the military life in combat, in garrison and in the field.

Every condition, that is, but the one which I have named. And soldiers will sing. And our boys will have songs which they can wholeheartedly whip into before they are through. And an army that sings is one that won't be beaten. Ask the Germans who have been around Stalingrad for the past three months for an opinion on this.

So how about it? Can we be instructed for an hour or two, in the extremely efficient Infantry School manner, in the proper method of leading and directing mass singing?"

Mein gott! Was habe ich getan???

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

In digging through my ol' waste basket this morning I uncovered some startling news! A clipping therein was glaringly banishing the rumor that the W. A. A. C.'s are coming to Bennning.

Yes sir! Our alma mater is going co-educational. The girl friends are moving in on us and believe me, gentlemen, we're going to have competition with a capital "C." Judging from the latest reports the ladies are really IA when it comes to close order drill, K. P., making up beds, and general military snap!

Colonel Swampwater says to remind all you yardbirds to wear your shirts and shoes when you go out in public from now on, since the "Wackys" are sticklers for fashion.

Well, these are all the scraps I can find at present but here are a few letters from here and there. The first seems to be from a first sergeant in—company of the 29th Infantry.

Dearest Sergeant:

I feel awfully silly trying to do something intelligent, but I am determined to write you a letter to let you know how I feel. Something deep down in my big, generous, noble heart prompted me to do so.

You see, I've tried terribly hard to be a "pal" to the boys, but they just don't seem to appreciate it. Every time I bellow at them they frown and grit their teeth, and when I put them on work details they are really snotty toward me. It didn't even make the "yard police detail" happy when I told 'em they could smoke all the cigarette butts they picked up. Please tell me how I can win my way into their good graces and be a "regular fellow."

Desperate

Before you decide to go over the hill try reading Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends and Influence People." If this doesn't succeed, put a fresh vase of flowers on your desk every day. A pleasant atmosphere is quite a boon to the average orderly room.

Dear Sergeant:

Why do I always have to stand in line when I go to the picture show?

Worried

This is entirely unnecessary! As you probably recall the rifle Field Manual gives many excellent positions for the soldier. The prone, sitting, kneeling, wobbling, and leaning. Any of these may be relied upon to furnish variety to your sojourn in line.

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

It was a nice Thanksgiving after all, wasn't it? Say what you will about army wives they manage no matter what the obstacles to carry on the homelike traditions. They've managed in times of war and peace, in shacks and fine homes, in our own country and on foreign service.

I think the nicest thing about the holiday on the post was the brightly lighted quarters and the many parked cars along the curbs. That meant shared holiday treats. There were very few quarters on Thanksgiving that didn't remember there were bachelors hungry for home cooking and a gala table for celebration. Eager young men were appreciative of the privilege of their invitation that meant a change from the sameness of the regular mess table.

But holiday feast is past. The turkey has extended from hash to the soup pot. No matter how much we want to evade the issue, Christmas and the many duties that it means are before us. From now until Christmas we'll be busy gals for these days carry responsibilities to others as well as our own family. There will be Red Cross duties in conjunction with Christmas plans for the patients in the hospital. Many packages will be wrapped for soldiers who will avail themselves of this service of the Red Cross volunteers.

There'll be shoping and hiding of gifts from curious eyes and poking fingers. Christmas cards seemed to present a hopeless situation when one didn't know where their friends were. That didn't prevent us from ordering cards. The hours of addressing and speculating if the card will find its way from station to station will provide a vivid contrast to pleasant memories of another Christmas when you shared your holiday gaieties with these friends. You'll wonder what to say in the notes you scribble. It won't be easy writing gay words to wives whose husbands are away.

The young ones will be home from school. Food will be ordered in alarming amounts. Haven't they spent the last weeks thinking of good things they want to eat when they get home? What mother can refuse them any request? She has them such a short while. The house will be gay with their snatches of song. They'll dash in and out of the house on their mysterious errands of "Got to see Joe—or Mary."

The month of December will be a good month. A month when the mother of the household will find her busy daytime hours stretching into the night. But they will be happy, for each and everyone knows she's a lucky woman. She has her family together this Christmas. Next Christmas things will be different. The great, good luck of being at Fort Benning can't last forever.

Chaplain's Corner..

A PUPPET SHOW

Chaplain Frank M. Thompson

I attended a puppet show the other night. I always do when opportunity permits. Nothing more amusing than the antics of these comical little creatures. They are in a class by themselves. Tracing their history back to the ancient Egyptians, their purpose down the ages has been to make merry the hearts of men.

To handle them successfully is almost an art. Certainly it requires much skill and great patience.

Some say that life is a matter of strings and pulleys; that we are all puppets; that there is an invisible, inscrutable power pulling us here and there, and there is nothing we can do about it. That while we must recognize the freedom of the will, this freedom is very limited.

It sounds plausible.

You meet a man, you miss a train, you go broke or break a leg, and a new day begins. You travel around the globe, you look into a pair of eyes and life is never the same.

We call these happenings, strange coincidences, a mysterious working of providence. Perhaps these occurrences may not be as haphazard as we think. Perhaps this unseen force is an intelligent force manipulating the wires and the strings for the benefit of mankind. Let your memory record the fact that your whole life was revolutionized by an unusual incident or a series of events over which you had not the slightest control.

As a lad of ten, James J. Jeffries saw John L. Sullivan walking down a street in Los Angeles; in that hour was born the determination to be the heavyweight champion of the world. A chance meeting with Robert Moffatt changed David Livingstone, a weaver, into David Livingstone, the hero and savior of Africa. A voice out of the sky transformed Saul the persecutor into Paul the Apostle.

Yes—

"There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will."

LAFF OF THE WEEK

FT. McCLELLAN, Ala. — The sentries here take no chances. And neither does Capt. John Busiek, when he is officer of the day. Recently the Captain, while making his rounds, approached a rookie sentry.

"H-halt," stammered the rookie.

Capt. Busiek halted and waited. Then he asked, "Don't you remember what to do next?"

"N-no sir," the sentry replied, "but you'd better stand still until I do."

Day Room Duds

BY T. SGT. HARRY R. CHARD

A regimental commander gave the men a lecture on saving money. He told them they should put something away for a rainy day. The next day the skippers raincoat was A. W. O. L.

Listen, Buddy: On me pay do only kind of ring I could give me golf would be a teething ring.

Gold Tooth Gertie says, kissing a soldier without a mustache is like drinking a cocktail minus the kick.

This talk we hear about a soldier being so tall the army had to have a special bed made for him strikes us as "just a lot of bunk."

ETIQUETTE

Soldiers dining in fashionable restaurants should eat with dignity and avoid making social blunders . . . be especially careful never to blow in the cup to cool the coffee . . . Always pour into the saucer and fan it with your garrison cap.

Another one of those eternal triangles: The mess sgt., the K. P.'s, and who the hell broke that plate?

"I started fighting in 1918."
"Did you join the army then?"
"Nah, I got married."

"Can you give me a six letter word meaning head covering for soldiers?"
"Sure! Cootie."

"This lets me out," remarked the prisoner as he slipped the keys from the corporal of the guard's pocket.

Private Nit Wit says he can't see how they could have a cover charge at a nudist colony.

Here lies the body
Of dog tag McGann,
He dealt six aces
In a poker hand.

Then there was the absent minded company barber, who after shaving, talked himself into a shampoo and tonic.

Private Goof says his idea of a good job is to be a lineman on a wireless telephone detail.

PARADISE

Two soldiers on a bus were discussing the general situation. Said the tall one:

"When I get done with this hitch I'm gonna get me a barrack bag, sling it across my shoulder and start walking. When I finally hit a place where folks say, 'what is that thing you have on your shoulder?' Boy—that's where I'm gonna settle down."

Here's to Gertie, the fan dancer, who sends her discarded fans to the soldier boys in the tropics for cooling purposes.

I'll get to the bottom of this mess." remarked the M. P. as he turned up the jug.

Then there was the absent minded K. P. who, after washing off the ice—put it out in the sun to dry.

"I'll drill that recruit," remarked the instructor as he pressed the trigger on his garand.

PAST HEROES

The sentry who halted the general and made him dismount in the middle of a mud hole—then calmly asked: "What the hell are you gonna do about it?"

DREAM BOOK

With this little book prepared by a noted psychoanalyst, you can interpret your dreams—keep it handy so you can refer to it at Reveille.

Cards—Foretells of your going broke in a poker game.

Mule—This denotes a kick out of the army.

Knife — Signifies another pay cut.

Cigar—A sure sign you'll shoot a butt the next day.

Shot-gun—A warning that you'd better marry the girl.

Clock—You'll be late for Reveille again.

Wedding—To dream this, is a sign your best girl has married a marine.

It is rumored, that during the cold winter months the motorists artillerymen at Fort Benning have to put alcohol in their liquor to prevent their blocks from freezing and cracking.

The USO Presents

By CPL. SOLOMON KLEINDORF

Cpl. Solomon S. Kleindorf

Here we go again on another round of USO. This afternoon, if all you Army Wives are smart, you will attend the luncheon held in your honor every Thursday afternoon at 1 p.m. There is always some distinguished speaker on hand and lots of fun is had by all. The place is USO-YWCA at 1426 Third Ave. . . . Those who like sports will enjoy the basketball game at the 9th St. USO tonight and then again, if you don't like sports, you are invited to attend a party at the Phenix City Salvation Army-USO.

Friday at 6:30 there is a tap-dancing class for the colored boys at the YWCA at 926 5th Ave. . . . And there are movies at the other colored Club tonight. . . . By the way, tonight is OCS night. There are two OCS dances going on, one at the YWCA on 3rd Ave. and the other in the Patio at the Army and Navy Y on W. 11th St.

Saturday is of course Dance Night. . . . Almost every club in town has a dance or party going on. . . . There is every type of activity for every type of taste. . . . You can attend a "bring your date" dance or the other kind. . . . There are movies, refreshments, clubs and lots of other things to do tonight. . . . Just consult your USO calendar for the location of all these things. . . . In case you can't locate your calendar look on the Bulletin board.

* * *

Sunday, for those who get up early or didn't go to bed the night before, there will be found at most clubs a free breakfast. . . . Church Services and just loafing. Then as the day gets older, sports, dances, radio broadcasts, parties, forums, suppers, Vesper Services, musical programs, loafing, informal talks, skating, and open house can be found at the different clubs. Once again, consult your calendar.

Now we come to "blue Monday," but it won't be a "blue Monday" if you follow my advice and go roller skating at the 11th St. Y. . . . It will kind of clean the cobwebs out of that skull of yours. . . . Then of course after the skating is over, you should remain for the folk and square dancing that is held in the patio. . . . And if you want good music, please show up at the 9th St. USO at 8:30 for the Community Chorus.

I can only find two dances for you on Tuesday. . . . One is at the Negro YMCA, 841 5th Ave. at 8:30 p.m. and the other is at the YMCA on 11th St. . . . If you are tired of dances, how about some formal games and music. . . . You can find that at the SA-USO in Phenix City. . . . At the other SA Club, which is in Columbus, there is a special invitation party.

* * *

Now we come to the Army Wives again, this time they are going bowling starting at 2 p.m. at the 11th St. Bowling Center. Roller skating at the 11th St. Y. The rest of the clubs are saving their energy for the week-end.

Poetry

A LITTLE GREEN CASINO

There's a little green casino
On a hilltop near the sea,
With a reminiscent corner
Like a paradise to me.
There's a little green casino
Where the waiter serves me wine
And the sparkle so reminds me
Of the love I thought was mine.
Ev'ry evening in the twilight
I can see its picture plain.
Softly all the mellow music
Whispers, won't you come again?
There's a little green casino
All the memories of it are Like the chapters of a history
To be read by every star.

G. I. SHOES

By Private William Jones
Hq. Co., R. C.

Those G. I. shoes are built to stand
The torture of all types of land.
They'll keep out water every drop
Unless it comes over the top.

But G. I. "Shieks" won't wear them out
When they would take a girl about.
Because they make a foot size eight.
Look larger than the main post gate.

And the poor guy who wears a ten
Must pick the place that he goes in.
For when his head enters a door
He'll find his feet refuses to go.

From size ten up I'm forced to say
Always demand the right of way.
When they are told to "Right About."
All other soldiers must "Fall Out."

Promote 'Em And Lose 'Em

Staff Sgt. John P. Joyner, who has served for eight years as clerk in the office of the chief of chaplains, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army of the United States this week. When word of the promotion was received at the Fort, Chaplain Frank M. Thompson, chief of the chaplains branch, pinned the gold bar on Lt. Joyner's shirt. The latter has been assigned to duty at Fort Bragg, N. C. He is a native of Philadelphia, Miss., the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Joyner. (Photo by 161st Signal Photographic Company.)

Dr. Whyte To Speak

Six Sermons Are Slated For Post

A series of six sermons will be delivered before Fort Benning groups by Dr. Robert B. Whyte, distinguished pastor of the Old Stone Presbyterian Church of Cleveland, O., during the week of December 6, Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, chief of the Chaplains' Branch, announces. Dr. Whyte is considered one of the outstanding speakers of his denomination.

He will speak at the Main Post Chapel Sunday, Dec. 6, at 10:30 a. m.; at the Tenth Armored Division, Dec. 6, at 8 p. m.; at the Reception Center, Monday, Dec. 7, at 8 p. m.; Second Student Training Regiment, Tuesday, Dec. 8, at 8 p. m.; at Lawson Field Chapel, Wednesday, Dec. 9, at 8 p. m., and in Chapel No. 3, 117th Infantry, Thursday, Dec. 10, at 8 p. m.

His addresses on the post have been arranged through the courtesy of Dr. J. Calvin Reid, minister of the First Presbyterian Church of Columbus, in whose pulpit he is guest speaker during the current week.

A native of Toronto, Canada, he has held pastorates in Ottawa and in Philadelphia, Pa. In addition to being an eminent speaker, he is an author of note, having published two great books, "The Sins That Crucified Him" and "Personalities Behind the Songs."

Chaplain Thompson is urging that as many soldiers as possible make an effort to hear Dr. Whyte during his visit to Fort Benning.

If your observation post is on a hill, select a spot where the skyline is broken so you will not become conspicuous to the enemy.

AN ARMY WIFE SHOPS EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS

There are a lot of people in this world that find no pleasure in spending money. I'm not one of those indiviguals. I adore shopping. I also adore arriving home loaded with bundles. I can hardly get my hat off for eagerness in opening those bundles to look over what I've bought. One looking is never enough, I go back for constant peeking at my recent purchases. That's why I'm having trouble these days. If I hide my Christmas purchases in safe places I can't enjoy taking them out to look at. There's always a chance I'll hide them too well. I sometimes can't find them myself.

I've been telling you about AIME DUPONT'S fine photography for weeks now, and I'll bet there's plenty of you men and women too who are suffering from a guilty conscience because you haven't done something about that extra special Christmas gift your mother especially asked for. There's still time, but very little. Certainly you've put it off long enough. Pictures these days will be treasured. They won't be ordinary photographs to be stuck in a bureau drawer. Your family will look at it constantly, for it's the only thing they have of you. You, yourself will treasure it as a reminder of your days in uniform and the tragic days of World War II. Why, you'll show it to your grancchildren with pride, when your recount stories of your soldiering days. That's why you want a fine portrait of yourself. Aime Dupont's on Broadway is a Fifth Avenue firm. Their sincerity in giving those in the service the best results at prices far below their New York prices are something to take advantage of. But for Christmas photographs the time is now.

Another Christmas and another opportunity for our men folks to indulge in the "for men only" and completely stag evening that KIRVEN'S is putting on Tuesday night, December 8, from 6 to 9 P. M. Those men who did their shopping during the stag hours Kirven's set aside last year will be among the early arrivals to shop in masculine ease. There will be cigarettes and refreshments served to make the evening gala. As if that weren't enough, Kitty Kay and fourteen charming hostesses will be on hand to advise the bewildered male on his choice of gift. I haven't forgotten the conversation that followed this "men only" shopping night last year. Feminine curiosity still makes me wonder why so many heretofore sober and serious men bought sets of sheer black chiffon underwear for wives of many years standing. I'll never know the answer. I do know the men folks had a gay night of it, and if it takes a special evening to help them choose their gifts, Kirven's has the blessings and thanks of the women who will receeive them.

Pretty negligees and robes are found in profusion. Handsome slippers worthy of their luxuriousness are something else again. You might know that MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE STORE would have anticipated this need long ago to provide pre-war quality and material, in lovely intimate footgear for the leisure hours. The established and well advertised line of famous Daniel Green are well represented in their stock. The heavy satins in classical styles of the Majorettes with military implication, a soft drape bow tie in beautiful colors of blue, black, pink, red and maroon. There's a white satin sandal in this make that can be dyed to match the negligee. My special pet of leisure foot wear continues to intrigue me with deft combination of material and designer's witchery. I'm speaking of that famous Joyce line. One bride-like creation is in pink satin, wedge heel with an instep strap of trapunto work. Utterly lovely to peek out of swirling chiffons. Another unusual slipper is monk style of blue or red wool fuzzy jersey. This is distinctive with colorful wool crewel embroidery. Wedge heel of course. Then there are velvets with real fur, design reminiscent of Robin Hood's shoes. Fascinating all of them, and hard to make a choice, each one is so unusual and lovely. The men have not been forgotten either. Miller-Taylor has given special attention in stocking packable slippers that are especially worthy of attention for our men folks who may be traveling soon. Fine calfskin leathers in tan, black and wine have hard leather soles. The kind they can use out of barracks walking if the occasoin arises. Woolies in the popular mule styles are especially appropriate as gifts.

Kirvens To Have Special Shopping Hours For Post

As a special service to military personnel at Fort Benning, the J. A. Kirven company of Columbus has set aside Tuesday evening, December 8, from 6 to 9 o'clock as "Army Night."

Twenty-four shopping hostesses will be available to serve officers and enlisted men and help them with their Christmas shopping. In addition there will be two cigarette girls who will distribute smokes and refreshments "on the house."

When observing from a building, keep back from doors and windows and stay in the shadows of the room.

If your personal Santa Claus is a lavish gentleman and has asked you what you'd like for Christmas, why don't you suggest furs? KAYSER - LILIENTHAL has a magnificent collection of the pieces that will give you years of luxurious appearance, if you're lucky enough to find a gift like that under your tree. The soft and silky kolinsky and baum marten skins formed into smart neck pieces are something to yearn over. The simplest dress or suit becomes high fashion when furs of this type are slung over the shoulders. There's silver fox too, that's for those who's choice runs to black furs rather than browns. Maybe, you've already bought your gifts and are thinking of dressing up for the holiday season. Then look at the breath-taking collection of evening things Kayser-Lilienthal just received for the holiday season. One beautiful model is in two toned grey, with a tricky bolero effect embroidered and beaded with pink, blue and silver beads and threads. Bouffant dresses with tight bodices glittering with sequins and full frothy skirts of net and tulle will enthrall the college girl, who must impress her young man of draft age with indestructible dream visions. Lovely dinner dresses, sleek and wearable for many important occasions. Evening wraps too, that can be a gift item; if you're clever in stating your wants.

— — V — —

The PATRICIA SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel is offering a special inducement to our shopping men. She will be open evenings by appointment so that they can make their gift choices. A telephone call will suffice for the appointment. Patricia has an engaging line of hostesses pajamas that will prove to any woman that the man in her life still thinks she's the lovely lady in his heart. Beautiful is the fuschia and purple hostess pajama with a glittering amethyst buckle. The coat is full length and made of fuschia crepe. Purple pajamas peek out for contrast. Another is in kelly green with a Russian blouse, gay with yellow and royal blue side trim. Smart hostesses have been wearing these for their informal entertaining. Only the quickest eye can detect their dual purpose of use for intimate hours and hostess wear. Exquisitely feminine are the pastel robes of pink and blue with lace dyed to match around the throat and sleeves. Quilted robes of white with tiny flower sprigs are made gay with fuschia taffeta lining. Luxurious fitted bedjackets are quilted too. Wonderful gift choices each one of them for the lady of his heart.

The Toy Center at SEARS ROEBUCK is a busy spot these days. The fascination of the electric train enthralls the young as well as the old as the engine busily hurries about the track. There's an impressive supply of military toys to gladden the army-minded boy. The girl too, can add to her collection of dolls with a uniformed likeness of our famous General MacArthur. Outdoor Christmas lights, to give a fairy-like touch during the holidays. Lights for the trees inside too. Santa Claus will endear himself to the small fry if he should bring a slide for year around pleasure. Sand boxes for the little tot are gay with bright awnings to protect them from too much sun. So well stocked is Sears Roebuck they're even showing a supply of bicycles, which would, in this day and age of transportation difficulties, be a superlative gift for any member of the family. A handsome gift for the entire family is the radio and phonograph combination. The cabinet is handsome and a complete piece of furniture. We won't find this kind of household luxury on the market much longer.

No matter how delightful shopping may be, it is tiring. There's nothing that puts a gala touch to a long day in town like meeting a friend or one's husband for cocktails. THE WAVERLY HOTEL has a cocktail lounge "The Cabin." The atmosphere of dim lights, soft music and decorative motif of bamboo furniture and homespun offers an attractive rendezvous after a busy day. The hours of The Cabin are from 3:00 to 9:00. Should you linger past the dinner hour, which you're apt to do, there's the well known Green Room in the hotel for further pleasure and dinner. Of course the whole evening might be planned with shrewd forethought by a gal who's long thought she deserved a special date with her husband. Husbands enjoy a treat like this if they're subtly lead into thinking it's their own idea. In case you have a long list of obligations and would like to entertain away from home, consider the Columbus Room, which is especially equipped for large scale entertaining. The Waverly Hotel has long been known for its service to Fort Benning folks.

A gift of a length of dress goods has always been an appropriate present for the clever woman who's wardrobe is varied through her own nimble fingers. HAYNIE'S, INC., at 1207 Broadway, has a magnificent stock of materials. Woolens, that are precious and will be off the market before long, soft velveteens and corduroy in jewel toned colors. Rayon weaves that can be turned into frocks particularly adaptable to southern climate. While Haynie's have become headquarters for materials they have a fine stock of items for suitable gifts. Their tufted and candlewick spreads should be considered, for nothing is more suitable in a bedroom where the man of the house considers it his privilege to flop on the bed for a quick forty winks. The originator of this type of spread may have had this practical use in mind, but whether he did or didn't, it's saved many a harsh word in army households. This shop also has a line of ready made drapes and a wide selection of materials for the woman who wants to make her own.

The SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY is diverting it's efforts to developing latent talents of women in teaching them to make use of the sewing machines they already own. Too many of the fine Singer Sewing machines are left in dark corners and brought out for mending chores alone. A series of sewing lessons, such as this firm has perfected will enable any woman to conform to the spirit of the times and turn her home hours into profitable creation of clothing for the family and bright accessories for the house. This shop is a veritable treasure house of sewing needs and accessories. All manner of buttons, threads, tapes for bright trimming, and zippers are available. You'll find an outstanding stock of such necessities as tapes, needles, and aids to fine finish of garments. They have an expert hemstitching, button hole and button service, too, in case you didn't know. Don't overlook their line of sewing kits and baskets. They're really something special.

The NOVELTY SHOP on 1243 Broadway has a selection of those popular and practical garments, chenille robes. Well known for their warmth and tubability, they're a favorite with many women for day in and day out wear. They come in lovely shades of pink and blue. The school girl would adore one of the bright red flannel jackets and plaid skirts. They're so gay these winter mornings and suitable too for the mix and match methods that age indulges in. The Novelty Shop also carries a line of hosiery and underwear, which is a gift idea any time of the year, and especially so at Christmas time.

Devils Tangle With Gators Sunday In Climax Grid Battle

Here are eight battle-scarred grid veterans on the 29th and 124th squads who will probably see plenty of action in Sunday's grand finale of the 1942 campaign. On the top row, left to right, are Frank Mastranunzio, rugged guard, and Farrish Cornelius, alternate center, of the Devils; Hal Keller, varsity center, and Len Belin, outstanding left end, of the Gators. In the bottom row in the same order are Phil Del Monte, blocking back, and Mike Hutchins, right tackle and captain, of the 29th; Al Berasi, star tackle, and Vernon Smith, fast-moving back, of the 124th. Mastranunzio, Keller, Del Monte, and Smith have all been on the injured list but are sure to play at least part of Sunday's game.

Season's Largest Crowd To Watch Rivals Clash In Doughboy Stadium

Both Elevens Hampered By Injuries On Eve of Long-Awaited "Big" Game

Every nook and cranny of palatial Doughboy Stadium is expected to be jammed Sunday afternoon when the 124th Infantry Gators and 29th Infantry Blue Devils crash head-on in the grid battle for which all of Fort Benning has waited the entire season. A throng of more than 15,000 fans, even out-doing the Pensacola game attendance, will be on hand for the 2:30 Kick-off.

Pennants will wave, bands will play, mascots will romp, pretty girl sponsors will be on hand, and college-like atmosphere will predominate, but the real thrills will be provided by the men in mole-skin down on the playing field.

Ever since the one-two-four regiment came to Benning almost a year ago, they have challenged the 29th Infantry's supremacy in all fields. Already the Gators have clinched the Fort Benning conference crown that the Devils were supposed to win according to pre-season indications. But the Two-Niners can salvage much by a Sunday victory.

TEAMS FAIRLY EVEN

The big game will be fought out in a tooth-and-nail battle, and should produce the best football of the season. Despite their comparative records the teams are far more evenly matched than many suspect, and injuries during the past two weeks have wreaked havoc with both squads. The extent of these injuries and ability of some of the cripples to play Sunday may determine the winner.

COACHES PESSIMISTIC

The rival coaches, Capt. Milton and Lieut. Joe Ashmore of the Devils, are both rather pessimistic about the game. Recent injuries have forced them to continually juggle their starting lineups, and as late as last night neither was certain whether some of his key operatives would be able to play. Both have promised that their clubs will fight to the last whistle, however.

The champion Gators are probably in their most uncertain condition of the entire campaign. Len Belin and Lud Dyal, their stellar ends, are injured and while Belin, the ex-Auburn flank, will prob-

Dragons Down 11th Armored, 12-0 For Crown

Copra And Carney Pace Winners To Divisional Title

Scoring twice in a torrid third period, the powerful 3rd Armored Dragons swept to the gridiron championship of the 10th Armored Division in Doughboy Stadium at Fort Benning last night with a convincing 12-0 triumph over the 11th Armored Tankers. Over 5,000 soldier fans witnessed the title tilt.

Flashy Nick Copra and Big Chief Carney, the twin touchdown threats on the winning eleven, tallied the scores midway in the quarter to assure the Dragon win. Copra went over from the four-yard line on a wide sweep around right end after a drive from the Tanker 32 where a poor kick had gone out of bounds.

Carney's six-pointer came a few minutes later on the most spectacular play of the ball game. Copra took the pass from center and fired a fast pass to Tom Hamilton, the left end, just over the line of scrimmage. After running a few feet, the big flank then tossed a lateral to Carney who traversed the remaining distance to pay dirt. The play was good for 28 yards in all.

The Tankers put up a gallant fight every inch of the way, and brought the crowd to its feet in the second half when they staged goal line stands to twice halt the Dragons on the one-yard line. The 11th actually had an advantage in first downs of 10-9, gained by their superiority in the air.

In addition to the game setting the 10th Armored title, it was an important Fort Benning conference tilt. The victory assured the green and white minions of Capt. Leo Gregory of finishing up no worse than a tie for second. The Dragon gridders will be awarded a large trophy emblematic of the division crown.

Tampa Topples 29th Devils In Florida Battle

Collegians Score On Benning Eleven In Every Period

Tampa's Spartans handed the 29th Infantry eleven its worst defeat of the season last Saturday in an uninteresting game played at Phillips Field in the Florida city. The collegians scored in every period to end up on the top side of a 30-0 score.

Big Fred Hancock, a stellar end, and Paul Straub, hard-cracking fullback, paced the Spartans to victory over the out-manned Blue Devil machine from the fort.

SMALL CROWD

Less than 1,000 spectators saw the game, but they saw everything from long runs and looping passes to plunges and smashing tackles. The Spartans even added a field goal to make the game complete. Tampa U. rolled up 15 first downs against five for the soldiers, and lost 50 yards in penalties. Fort Benning was penalized once, for five yards.

The Spartans scored midway of the first quarter and kept driving for touchdowns in every period. With two minutes left to play, Straub booted a field goal from the four-yard line to give the locals their final score.

SCORE ON PASS

Bob Crosland, Tampa U. end, scored the first touchdown on a pass by Straub from the Soldiers' 24. The Spartans had marched down the field after the soldiers failed to gain at the outset. Hancock kicked the extra point.

The second touchdown came in the second period with Straub smashing over tackle. This play was set up by good gains by Holmes and Straub following an exchange of punts.

Another six points were added to the Tampa U. score by Wallace Gillette, who recovered a blocked Devil kick in the third period for a touchdown. Hancock again converted.

GAIN BIG LEAD

The score went to 27 to 0 for the locals in the fourth quarter when Ashworth took the ball over on a quarterback sneak and Hancock added his third extra point. Ashworth's score came after three forward passes from the Ft. Benning 34.

The final three points were made by Straub with a field goal. This score also followed an exchange of punts, the only soldier penalty and fumble.

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Seems that we stepped right into a hornet's nest when this corner got involved in that now over-worked Boston College-Georgia grid feud (?). You'll remember, if you happen to read one man's opinion weekly, that a few days ago we were chortling with glee over the discomfiture of Columbus writers after Georgia's loss to Auburn. Well, as it always goes, the worm turned last week-end, and at least until the bowl games are played, we're on the under side.

The letter below was received early this week from the esteemed Mr. Joe Livingston, sports ed of the Columbus Ledger. Evidently Joe had quite a few things to get off his chest, particularly about some of the letters he has been getting from Benning grid fans. His letter, we think, is interesting from many angles, and that's why we're printing it intact below. We'll reserve our opinion until you've digested the epistle and formed your own.

Sgt. Carl Neu,
Sports Editor
Bayonet,
Fort Benning, Georgia.

Dear Carl:

Now that football season is over, the bowl bids are in and, in general, all is said and done, let me pen a few words in reply to your "thin man" epic of last week. You have been a great deal of help to me, Carl, during the five months that I have been in Columbus and even though you are a Damyankee and I a Southerner whose tradition can still point to living darkies who were once slaves to the Livingston estate.

It is only natural that you should want to stand by Boston College and dear old Penn. Being a loyal son your support was even more evident in the trying moments of the heated campaign just past. Over the span of years and I will be the first to admit it, the Big Ten (or is it Nine) has shown us the best in football. The only thing is that it appears to me, chum, you boys just ain't got it now—and I speak in terms of the past couple of seasons.

When I first entered a newspaper office I pledged myself to give an unbiased account of the news and that I strive to do at all times. In my column, however, it is my privilege to express opinion and sentiment. Even then I would like to keep things sans and calm. But there is an influence that prompts one like me to sometimes overstep what you and your friends above the Smith and Wesson line have set as bounds.

It is not you, Carl, and it is not the majority of the truly grand fellows I have met from Fort Benning. There are some, however, who like to accept Southern hospitality as a matter of course because they feel it is owed a soldier. They march away triumphantly then and suggest how better it would have been "at home." Instead of constructive criticism in the places we are falling down on the job, it is vicious and unfair. I give you the piles of indecent, unprintable letters sports editors over the state have been receiving since the Boston College issue. No facts and no parliamentary argument—just an attack on personalities and character. It is for that reason then, Carl, that fellows like me go into an offensive defense.

We have to fight for every inch of recognition we can get because there has always been a superior attitude displayed by Northerners who fail to reason out that we have feelings beneath our patriotism and that there is glory enough for all. The problems are different here than from where you come. You settle yours and we will try to do the same with ours.

It is for that round-about reason then that I have been on Georgia's bandwagon this year. We have something and we know it. Even today Northern writers fail to give us credit. If not then how did Boston College rate first last week over Tech when the latter had more first place votes. I heard you admit yourself it wasn't right.

When it's over over there and I am ever in New York City and in need of a couple of yards of gingham to flag down another high-flying Southeastern conference team, I'll drop in Macy's Sports Dept. to see you.

With sincerest regard for you and every soldier at Fort Benning, I remain at your service.

JOE LIVINGSTON,
Sports Editor,
Columbus Ledger.

(ED. NOTE) Just a P. S., Joe. Have you seen this week's A. P. poll which rates Ohio State first in the nation, and Georgia second?

124th Gators Defeat Auburn 'B' Gridders

Fort Benning's championship football eleven from the 124th Infantry turned in one of its best performances last Friday in Doughboy Stadium to defeat a strong Auburn Tiger "B" team by a 6-0 count. A crowd of about 4,500 watched one of best games of the current season.

The chill blasts that swept through the vast concrete stadium proved a handicap to both teams, used to playing under warm sunlight. Time and again, the backs fumbled and although the passers were in rare form, none of the receivers seemed to be able to hold onto the slippery pigskin.

AUBURN LEADS IN DOWNS

Auburn ran up an impressive advantage in first downs over the soldier club, by 11-4, but practically all of the Tiger gaining was done between the 25-yard lines. Whenever the collegians moved into scoring territory, the soldier champs managed to brace and avert a score.

The game was hard fought all the way, with Cestary, the former Notre Dame player, once again leading the Gators to victory. The big tailback did some neat broken field running, culminated by his touchdown dash. He also punted well, and fooled the Baby Tigers several times with quick kicks.

Panthers Face Commandos Tonight for Colored Title

Colored gridiron supremacy of Fort Benning will be decided tonight in Doughboy Stadium at 8:30 when the Fort Benning Panthers, representing the Service Battalion of the 3rd Student Training Regiment, clash with the Benning Commandos, of the 2nd Student Training's Service unit.

The Panthers, coached by Lieuts. Maurice Kirk and Norman Hogenson, have been organized all season and played a stiff schedule of collegiate and prep school competition, while the Commandos are newly organized and tonight's battle may be their first and last tilt.

COACHED BY LT. DOCTOR

Lieut. William R. Doctor is tutoring the Commandos, and has had them hard at work for almost a month in preparation for tonight's tilt with their arch rivals. The game may well develop into one of the most exciting of the campaign.

Once again, Panther victory hopes rest on the able shoulders of Frankie Phillipson, their ace quarterback, who paced the green and white to their victory over Mobile Training a couple of weeks ago. His punting, passing and plunging are counted on to ring up a win for the more experienced Panthers.

YOUNG AND MASSENBURG

Other good backs on the Panther machine are wingback Bill Young and fullback John Massenburg. Outstanding lineman on the Panther forward wall is big Clarence Reid, former Tuskegee star, who has been a great player all season.

Breakers Trip Fliers In Mobile Tilt, 18-14

BY PVT. KEVE GRUNIN

In a hot, fast and furious gridiron battle, marked by the sensational running of Vince Daddino, 117th Infantry halfback, the colorful Breakers beat the Brookley Field Flyers in Mobile, Alabama, Sunday to the tune of 18-14.

A capacity crowd of Brookley Field soldiers and civilian spectators witnessed the best and most exciting football game ever played at Hartwell Stadium. The doughboys, under the field leadership of Lt. John Cudmore, outplayed and outfought a hard charging Brookley Field eleven. The vicious line play of both ball clubs gave the customers a real thrill.

BROOKLEY SCORES

The Bookley Field team got off to a good start in the first period. Led by Lutz, their big burly fullback, the Flyers rolled down the field and crossed the goal line after only three minutes of play had elapsed.

In the second period the Breakers really let loose! After a steady grind down the field with Pierce, Sturgill and Pansock doing the heavy work, they romped over the double stripes. It was Pansock on a line buck through center who carried the pigskin over. The try for conversion failed.

A short time later Daddino on a reverse from Pierce ran the ball down the field for a 75-yd. gain to the 10-yd. stripe. From there on in it was easy sailing.

The Breaker linemen opened up a hole through center and Pansock carrying the ball, took advantage and carried the ball through for another touchdown. Once again the try for conversion failed.

STILL SCORES

With but two minutes remaining in the second quarter the Flyers fumbled on their own 30-yd. line and the 117th Infantry recovered. Sturgill, on three successive plays, then drove off right tackle for the third touchdown—making the score 18-7 at the end of the half.

In the third period the Brookley Field boys scored another touchdown on a long pass from Taylor to Slemp. Specter, the ex-Utah University star, converted for the extra point.

BREAKERS THREATEN

In the fourth period the Breakers were on the offensive again. From their own 10-yd. line, the 117th moved the ball down the field on four successive first downs to the 50-yard marker. Then Pete Cuomo hurled a 40-yd. pass to Brown who was immediately downed on the 10-yd. stripe.

ably start and go most of the way, the chances of Dyal even getting into the game are slim. He has a serious charley-horse, and was still hospitalized Wednesday. Johnny Soltas will probably get the call at right end in Dyal's place, with Pete Pieton spelling Belin at the other terminal.

Varsity center Hal Keller got a badly fractured nose in the last Auburn tilt, and will probably give way to Pete Poulos at the pivot, although he will play some with the aid of a head guard. Handyman Vernon Smith, one of the speediest backs, has also been ailing and won't start.

With Smith out, the Gator backfield will consist of Nick Calos at quarter, Roy Cestary and Claude Hackney at halves, and burly Stan Ergler at fullback. Biggest threat is, of course, Cestary, the great tailback who can pass, punt and plunge with rare abandon. Two-Nine victory hopes probably depend first on shackling Cestary, who has been the Gator big gun all season.

Most serious handicap to the Devils will be the absence of Joe Bryan in the starting line-up. The nefty Dayton, Ohio, gridder, has a bruised elbow, and although he is sure to play, it is doubtful how long he can last. Bryan has alternated at tailback and fullback and plays both positions well.

Ashmore has announced that his starting backfield quartet will probably have Phil Del Monte returning to quarterback after a lay-off due to injuries, Ed Hurley and Bobby Ralph at the halves, and big Fritz Vogt at fullback. If Hurley has a good day, the game may develop into a battle between he and Cestary, since the Devil back is speedy and a good passer. Ralph is a fleet wingback who has developed rapidly since mid-season, and will be getting his first starting role Sunday.

Plans Are Discussed For Rebuilding Club

Plans for rebuilding fire-gutted Service Club 1 on the post proper as soon as possible were developing rapidly today shortly after the exchange restaurant in one wing of the building was reopened for business.

Capt. James C. Sutton, post recreation officer, said every effort was being made to find temporary quarters to carry on the recreational program of the club, the only service club on the main post, and added that work of rebuilding the blackened and charred main lounge and guest rooms of the club would get under way as soon as arrangements for work and materials can be made.

Reopening of the exchange restaurant, already over-crowded 14 hours a day, was rushed in order to accommodate main post soldiers. Dishes and other equipment to make up the minor property loss suffered in the fire were loaned by Columbus merchants, Maj. H. E. McGaffey, exchange officer, disclosed, in announcing that the restaurant would reopen Tuesday morning.

On the other end of the building, the post library was reopened yesterday after soldiers moved thousands of books back into the shelves from which they were removed during the height of the blaze.

The radio studio of WRBL is being repaired and is being used this week for broadcasts, but the telephone booths on the porch were dismantled during the fire and will not be re-installed because of lack of room. Larger quarters will be obtained for the booths and switchboard shortly.

Repairs to guest rooms on the second floor will take several weeks because of fire, smoke and water damage and the shortage of rooms will create an even more over-crowded condition during the Christmas holidays as the rooms housed the overflow from the main hostess house across the street.

FIRE ON SUNDAY

The fire broke out shortly before 2 o'clock last Sunday afternoon when the club and the restaurant were jammed with soldiers seeking entertainment on a rainy afternoon. Smoke was first noticed seeping up from the basement near the office of the hostess.

An announcement was made immediately over the public address system and the building was cleared within minutes in an orderly fashion as smoke filled the lounge and choked Mrs. May H. Williams, hostess in charge of the guest rooms, as she endeavored to leave the second floor by the stairs.

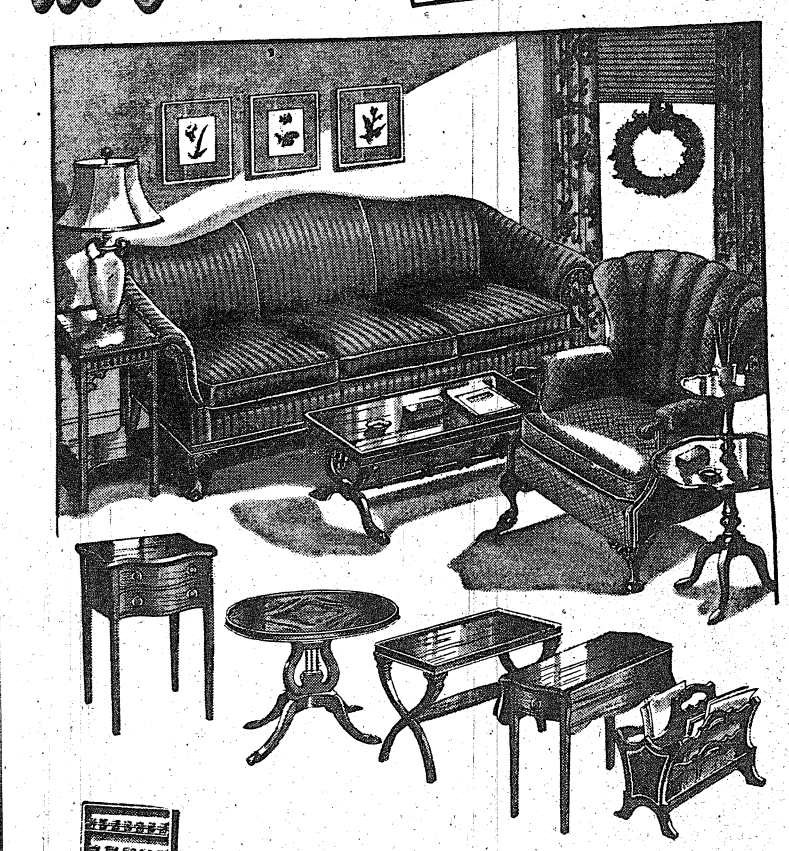
Unable to see through the dense smoke, Mrs. Williams returned to her room for a few personal belongings and then climbed through a window to the roof where firemen put up a ladder and she was assisted to the ground by soldiers and firemen.

Mrs. Williams told the Bayonet Wednesday that she could not say enough for the coolness and consideration shown by soldiers who helped her to escape and afterward moved her furniture and belongings to a safe place upstairs "without cracking a single glass or mirror."

"The boy knew exactly what to do and treated me as if I were their own mother," were her words.

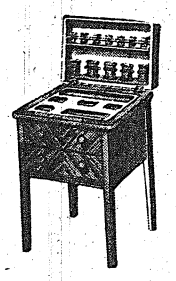
Firemen, handicapped by dense smoke and aided by soldier volunteers who did yeoman work in removing expensive furniture and radio equipment, hauling hoses and other duties, battled the stubborn blaze for three hours before it was brought under control.

About an hour after the fire began, flames and smoke had subsided sufficiently to allow soldier volunteers to enter the club and carry out all portable equipment from the lounge, radio studio and library. Thousands of books were either carried out or passed through open windows. Two practically new pianos and three billard tables were also moved out of the club during the height of the fire by soldiers.



Many soldiers worked long hours and soiled uniforms in assisting in the fight against the fire. One in particular was Pvt. Joseph Jackson of the 1st Canadian Parachute Battalion, who was a fire-fighter in civilian life north of the border and who was in the club when the alarm sounded.

He immediately volunteered to help and even though overcome by smoke and dragged to safety by other soldiers during the early stages of the blaze, Jackson rushed back into the building, brought out valuable library equipment and helped firemen in locating and controlling the fire.



A board of officers was investigating the fire as the Bayonet went to press today. The Service Club, built in 1922, is constructed partially of brick which may have been one reason why the building was not destroyed before the fire was brought under control.

Across the street from the club, a new exchange restaurant and cafeteria is under construction and will be completed early in 1943. It will be four times as large as the present restaurant in the Service Club building.

Woman's Club

By LAURA M. BAILEY

Widespread interest is evidenced in the December 7 meeting of the Woman's Club at Fort Benning, when Mrs. John Vernon Denson, known as the "Christmas Lady," talks before the members at the Polo Hunt Club at 5 p. m.

The Chrismas meeting of the club coming at the early part of the month is a distinct advantage for the stimulating lecture will provide an impetus for unusual holiday spirit. The wealth of ideas for beautifying the house, through the simple expediancy of using inexpensive and close at hand materials, makes Mrs. Denson's lectures appealing.

"The Christmas Lady" won her gay title in the south for her inspirational and timely lectures. Her work was so outstanding and unusual it brought nation-wide attention to the abilities of this charming and inspired personality.

Mrs. Denson is making an unusual concession in appearing before the Woman's Club as a complimentary gesture to army women. She has waived the usual fee charged for her lectures. Her sincere belief that Army women need all possible help in giving their families the gayest sort of holiday season prompted her generous gift of talent and time to the Woman's Club.

She suggests each woman come with a note book and pencil for her ideas are many and may, unless written down, slip the memory. She plans on giving her famous formula for "Fairy Lights" that transforms a fire of pine cones into a glamorous highlight of the holiday season.

The Christmas tea will follow the lecture. Mrs. Syril E. Fame, Hospitality Chairman, is in charge of the arrangements of the tea hour.

MRS. ALBERT HALEY

Mrs. Albert Heley, wife of Major Haley of the 29th Infantry, will show members of the Practical Home Making group of the Woman's Club how to grow flowers indoors and how to make corsages in the home of inexpensive flowers. The meeting will be held Thursday, December 10, at 2:30 p.m. in the ladies lounge. Mrs. Haley, who is part owner of a florist shop in her home-town in Tennessee, has many interesting and novel ideas on floral arrangements.

Meetings of the group have been changed from the second and fourth Fridays of each month to the second and fourth Thursdays to avoid conflicting with the Red Cross Work Room, which remains open Friday afternoons.

MUSIC GROUP

A program of Christmas music followed by a tea has been arranged for the next meeting of the Music group of the Woman's Club. The meeting will be held Wednesday, December 9, at 2 p. m in the ladies lounge of the Officers' Club. All music lovers are urged to attend, and members of the Music group are invited to bring guests.

Mrs. B. F. Wills and Miss Ruth Buettner have arranged the Christmas program, containing many of the traditional carols. Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden and Mrs. E. S. Wallace will act as hostesses at the tea. The program is as follows:

"Joy to the World" sung by entire group.

"Lo, How A Rose 'Ere Blooming" by Praetorius; "They Sang That Night in Bethlehem" by Shubert; arranged by Deis; "Shepherds Awake" by Davis. Choral club group of fourteen women.

Violin solo "Jesu Bambino" by Yon, soloist, Mrs. Frederick A. Harris.

Vocal solos selected by Mrs. Richard Lamb.

1st STR Unit Crack Shots

Tenth Company, 1st STR is setting the ranges afire these days.

Up to date the 4th Platoon has been showing the way in firing the various weapons. In M1 marksmanship this platoon was able to boast of having placed five men of the ten with highest scores in the company. Not to be outdone by their classmates the platoon chalked up further honors at Hook Range when a four man group from the fourth emerged with the highest aggregate score of the entire company in Cal. 30 Light Machine Gun competition. In summing up the totals after record firing it was found group 46 totalled 950 points. This group, all finishing in the expert class, was comprised of Candidate Sessions, Schettler, Seely and Schmitz. The official summation of the firing showed the 4th platoon was exceptionally successful, producing 39 experts and 10 1st class gunners from a platoon of 49 men.

The company gets a big bang out of this platoon competition on the range and is looking forward to the other weapons especially the 37mm Anti-Tank Gun. The company numbers at least 25 of its members for whom anti-tank marksmanship should hold no terrors. The candidates were all members of Company "D," 86th Infantry Training Battalion (anti-tank) when that organization established an all time camp record of 100 per cent qualification on the range. All of the 25 qualified as expert.

Army Seeks Married Nurses

Restrictions on admission to the Army Nurse Corps have been further lowered to meet the great demand for trained nurses in the armed forces.

Fort Benning officials received word this week from the War Department that the Army Nurse Corps will accept applications for appointment from married nurses.

Previously only single women were eligible for appointment to the Nurse Corps and until recently members of the Corps who married while in service were dismissed. Since Oct. 1, 1942, marriage has ceased to be a mandatory reason for discharge.

Registered nurses between the ages of 21 and 40 who are citizens of the United States are now eligible for appointment in the Nurse Corps, to serve for the duration of the war and six months thereafter.

Nurses who have husbands in the Army will not be permitted to serve at the post or station where their husbands are assigned. Applicants with minor children will be accepted only if adequate care for the children can be provided elsewhere than on a military reservation.

Motor Mechanics Class Gets Gold Guidon Ribbon

The esprit de corps of Enlisted Motor Mechanics Class 21 Lt Co., 1st STR has been at its highest peak since the addition of the Gold Ribbon to their Company Guidon.

The 4th Student Training Battalion (Enl), 1st Student Training Regiment, points with pride to the excellence of the nine Enlisted Motor Mechanics classes and the three Enlisted Radio Operators classes as they march to and from their daily classes.

A degree of this excellence is attained through the work of the tactical officers of the Battalion, but the big share is gained through the students themselves as they are trying each day to bring their unit to the fore that it may be awarded a ribbon for "Excellence in March Discipline," by the battalion commander, Major Ellis Moore, at the Monday morning review.

The Battalion has a program whereby the best companies are awarded ribbons which fly from the guidon staff. These are awarded as follows: red, white, blue and gold. It may be that all companies have the first three, but only one has the Gold. Once a company gets it they must continue to be the best or it is removed and given to their successor.

At present it belongs to the Motor Mechanics Class in the 21st Company, but the 20th and 23rd Companies respectively are battling them for possession and several other companies have two ribbons and are striving for the blue so that they may enter the race for the most valued property in the 4th Battalion, THE GOLD RIBBON.

MYRTLE JOINES

The entire civilian personnel of the Finance office were guests of the Bakers and Cooks School for Thanksgiving dinner. Colonel John M. Rooks acted as host, and doing the honors in a very elegant manner. Everything from soup to nuts was served in best Army style, including delicious QM punch.

Speaking of the QM, they have a big welcome shingle hanging out down the QM way for two former employees who have returned to the fold after extended leave. They are Jean Koncir and Sarah Ingram. Funny how some people don't seem to know when they are well off and have to stray away before appreciating just how good the QM is—how happy they are to back with the old gang again.

Helen Gray of Atlanta spent the week-end with her sister, Adeline Gray, junior hostess at Service Club No. 4 this week-end. Helen teaches in the Atlanta Public Schools at Washington High school—two of the most interesting subjects right now science and photography, are her responsibility.

Employees at the Station Hospital claim winner in the $64 question as to what Annette Hudson was studying at the Army Medical Academy and the answer is "specimen of flesh." They admit they never should have started this whole thing about her going away in the first place, maybe but IF they get the $64, we think we should come in for a short of it. What do you think?

The visit of Mrs. Geo. A. Sossaman to the post last week was the occasion for a luncheon party at Service Club in the Sand Hill Area. Charlotte Baughman, Estelle Patrick, Rosanne O'Kelley and I went to the Service Club and did we have a swell lunch! Even Pecan pie baked especially for us by Juanita Wilkins, dietitian out there. It was nice to be together again and even say hello to Winefred Baker in the rush.

Wedding bells are ringing in the 507th Parachute Infantry we understand with Mary Elizabeth Simmons and Paratrooper Buck Walker leading the way.

Has anybody noticed the nice new bracelet Isabelle Chadwick is sporting these days? Well it's a honey, but don't think Uncle Sam's treasury suffered. She is doing her bit on war bonds too; I hear $500 worth at a clip. Nice goings, girlie. That is one way to help her nice hubby in Australia.

I hear from reliable sources that they have found Irene Warner of Service Club No. 2 buried under the flags of the Allies she was struggling with to decorate the club for that dance next week. Good going, Cpl. Fry. We'll send you to hunt out the Japs.

Clara Zehrback had Christmas and Thanksgiving together. Her son, Pvt. Jack Blount from Camp Sutton, N. C. Must make a mother mighty proud to have such a fine son. He is doing all right for himself too, in the Medical Detachment.

Mae H. Williams, hostess at Service Club No. 1 which burned wants to express her appreciation to all the soldiers who were so considerate and cooperative in removing her belongings from the burning club. She has fully recovered from the shock under the expert care of Lucille Kirkpatrick. She is worried about rooms for her boys' mothers, sweethearts and friends during the Christmas season.

Have you heard about Josephine Haggard's diet? I understand she is having meatless days so her doggie can have this. Can you blame her? He is some dog.

The indorsement section at Headquarters is wondering how old Ruth Schaufele is, where Nalda Fitzgerald gets her apples from, and why Elizabeth Carlson would be so happy just because she gets a letter from her husband in Africa. In case you don't know, he is a captain over there.

All the OC wives in the Motor Transport section had Thanksgiving dinner with their husbands. The girls at the Station Hospital were guests of—correct me if I'm wrong—Major Johnson. Doris Tew Roberts, HQ, had dinner at the 26th Infantry—some of the girls at the Infantry School ate dinner with units and so on down the line until you come to the 24th General Hospital Mess and there was a dinner for you. To tell you the truth Estelle Patrick and I went there for dinner and we almost decided to have them prepare a place for us, never saw so much food—but Estelle had three parties in the afternoon and dinner at the Reception Center so it couldn't be arranged. Nice place to stay though.

Lt. Harold McGuire Is Made Captain

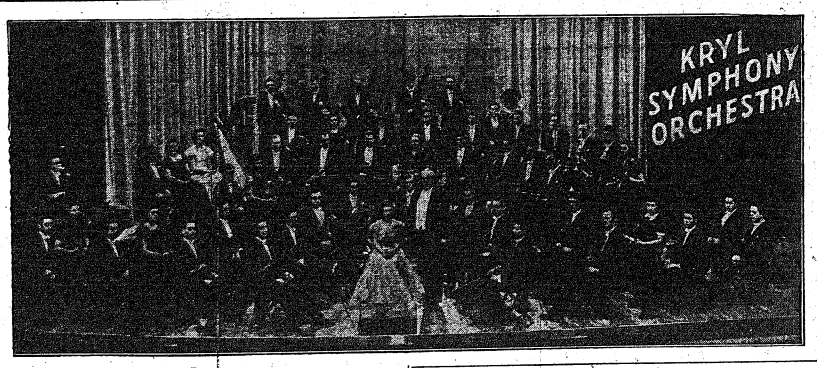
The promotion of First Lieut. Harold F. McGuire, son of the late Captain B. F. McGuire and Mrs. McGuire of St. Louis, Missouri has been announced here by Col. Thomas R. Gibson, commanding the First Student Training Regiment.

Capt. McGuire received his commission in November 1941, after successfully completing the Officers Candidate Course given at the Infantry School, Fort Benning, Georgia. Upon graduation he was made a company officer of the First Student Training Regiment and then made adjutant of the Second Battalion. On March 23, 1942 he was made first lieutenant, and on November 6, 1942, was promoted to captain. Captain McGuire is assigned to the Ninth Company composed of officer candidate students.

The Glory of Democracy

THE sacrifices that are needed in order to win the war are apparent to us all.

The Treasury's appeals to buy War Bonds, the Government's pleas to conserve gas and rubber, the economies required to avoid inflation, the necessity of rationing many essential commodities—all these have become vital in the minds of our people.



Necessity has awakened us, not only to the size of the task before us, but to the fact that our future as a nation is at stake; and in characteristic fashion we all are responding.

Our hearts speak, our purses are open wide; and regardless of creed, or color, or political convictions, our honest differences of opinion are being dissipated before the issue that confronts us.

This is the glory of democracy: that a man may think as he will, speak as he will, vote as he will, and worship God in his own way; yet in the hour of peril to the State, that which is for the greatest good of all is not only his most compelling thought but the strongest prompting of his heart.

In that hour his thought is no longer of himself but of his country; and it is as though his soul were crying out those memorable words of Plato: "Man was not born for himself alone but for his country."

Kryl Symphony Orchestra Plays at Post Sunday

The concert engagement of the Kryl Symphony Orchestra America's only touring concert organization, which will be heard Sunday evening at 8 p. m., in the Fort Benning Sports Arena in the Harmony Church Area, must certainly be ranked among the important musical events of the year in Fort Benning.

This organization of artists and fine musicians, assembled from the finest orchestras and music schools of our nation, has been attracting extraordinary attention wherever it has appeared.

Bohumir Kryl, organizer and conductor of the symphony orchestra of 50 artists, was born in Prague, Bohemia. He is the son of a sculptor and indulging in the various whims of boys ran away from home to join a circus at the tender age of 11. In this troupe, the Rentz Traveling Circus, he was contortionist, tumbler, jumper, and a "boy on the flying trapeze"—doubling with his coronet in the grand parade.

After two years as a trouper, he met with an accident while jumping, and returned to his home. Six months later was on his way again, this time bound for America.

Sweet melodies and tuneful notes from his violin helped him earn his passage to America. Turning to his sculpturing, Kryl tried to earn a meager living. While on a commission for General Lew Wallace, he was overheard playing his violin by none other than the great Sousa.

Featured soloists include Rita Warsawska, brilliant young coloratura soprano, and June Nanson, internationally-known harpist.

The present tour of the Kryl Symphony Orchestra includes appearances in Mexico, Canada, Army camps, Air field, Naval bases, and large cities in the United States.

Book Week Is Observed

Colored Troops See Colorful Display

By PFC. SMITHY NORTON

Soldiers from every Army organization in the Service Club No. 4 area recently observed the fine one week display of books depicting every part of American life. Copies of the Fort Benning Bayonet were given away during this week and special attention was given to advertising new Negro book.

Books bring inspiration, too. For in them can be found stories of the past struggles to make men free. They are the best means by which we can find out why we are at war, and for what we are fighting. The foe we face began his war against us by burning books, but we who are taught to love books, to look to them for friendship, comfort, inspiration, and guidance, will be armed with knowledge to oppose the forces of destruction.

In 1942 we observe our first War-Time Book-Week. As our soldiers march into a global conflict fighting for freedom on the home front the slogan for Children's Book Week — 'Forward With Books' is shouted like a victory war cry. Books today are implements of war and our youth as well as our soldiers can use them as mental ammunition for the future.

In America the freedom of reading books is still ours. From the time of the first book for American children, 'The New England Primer' (contents, catechism, lessons, and Bible questions—for a choice few) to our present reading of 'Chap Books' book reading has become very popular. From the period of the Horn Book, a single sheet of paper, to this period of authors of pages, chapters and volumes of beautifully bound books we have gone far and now is the time for reading good books. It will be one of the responsibilities of our American soldier to keep the United Nations free for the purpose of reading good books.

Cpl. Jitter Will Be Tried For AWOL

Company punishment appeared in prospect for Corporal Jitter today as cold weather drove him back from the wilds of the "jungles" in which he had gone native a few days ago.

At least he has had his stripes taken away and may have to go without his peanut ration for a time as a punishment.

Jitter is a white faced, ring tail monkey that was purchased by Captain Curtis Yarbrough, commanding Company C, 760th Tank Battalion, as a mascot. He became so attached to members of the Company that when a man from another company took him along for a ride a few days ago, he broke loose, disappeared into the tall timber, and had not been seen since.

Today, however, he limped up to a mess shack in the 10th Armored Division area, anxious to get some food and warmth. So the members of the company now have their mascot back but Jitter is still in disgrace for having literally "gone over the hill."

Lt. Munson Is Expert On WAAC's

First Lt. Henry L. Munson, 13th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, is one of the few officers in this country who has served in an advisory capacity with the WAAC's. Lt. Munson, who was largely responsible for Congressman Baldwin's recent visit to Fort Benning, found that his first assignment when he went on active duty in February, 1942, was to draft a plan for the recruiting and training of personnel for the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps.

This unusual assignment was the result of experience Lt. Munson received in 1941, when, as secretary of a congressional delegation headed by Congressman Baldwin, he went to England to study the organization and training of various British auxiliary corps similiar to the WAAC's and the WAVE's in this country.

While in England, Lt. Munson lunched with Prime Minister Winston Churchill and many notables, including the King and the Crown Prince of Greece, King Haakon and Crown Prince Olaf of Norway, the Duchess of Ken, and Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands.

He also conferred with Lord Beaverbrook, Anthony Eden, Ernest Bevins, and other members of the cabinet, as well as with heads of the army and navy.

Returning to the United States by way of Africa, he was in Brazil the day of Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor.

Lt. Munson was formerly in the brokerage business and for six years was campaign manager for Congressman Baldwin, with whom he made a tour of South America at the request of the Chilean government. He graduated in 1934 from Rutgers University, where he received his reserve commission. He was president of the Young Republican Club of Long Island.

Officer Duo Had Hawaiian Service

Two student officers in the Officers' Communication Class of the 5th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment served as enlisted men in the Hawaiian Islands for some time before coming to Benning. 2nd Lt. Alan K. Smith, who is now assigned to the Academic Regiment, and on special duty taking the Communications Course, knows the islands very well.

2nd Lt. Glenn E. Picking was stationed at Pearl Harbor on December 7th, and was very much "in" on all the activity. Soon after the attack his address was changed to "Fort Benning, Georgia, care of OCS, Harmony Church." Upon his graduation he was selected for training as a communication officer, and sent to the 5th Company, 1st Regiment. Having previously received training as a candidate, and now in the process of being trained as a student officer, Lt. Picking is enthusiastic over the type of leaders being turned out by the Infantry School. Having also observed the cool courage of our men under fire at Pearl Harbor, Lt. Picking is confident of ultimate victory for the United Nations.

Peeks at Pics

If you are expecting a slap-stick comedy, go to see "Road to Morocco", but if you want more than slap-stick, my advice is stay home. . . . The plot is dead, the location is all wrong, the jokes are corny and the songs are not too good. . . . The only advantage of the pic is that it has Dorothy Lamour, who can retain the plesaant knack of looking undressed even when she is fully clothed. . . . After the picture was released, Time Magazine said "Dorothy Lamour will probably pick up a few more votes as the Army's favorite pin-up girl." . . . It's all up to one's taste.

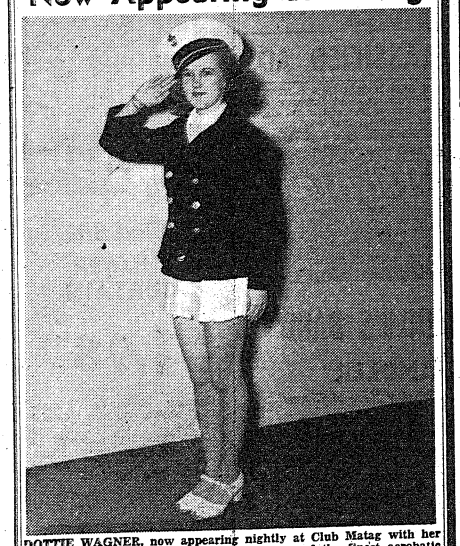
Lauded by every important critic in the country is "For Me and My Gal", and there is no reason why the BAYONET critic shouldn't do the same. . . . This pic has the best in musical comedy that Hollywood can offer. Judy Garland, Gene Kelly and George Murphy really outdo anything they have done before. . . . This is the first appearance on the screen for kelly, and he shows great promise. . . . He is the young felow that made such a hit in the Broadway success, "My Pal Joey". . . . Judy has really outgrown the female Mickey Rooney roles, and shows a fine instinct for the finer points in acting besides being to date the finest songplugger in the business. . . . singing old numbers and doing old scenes of the unforgettable vaudeville is the backbone of the show. . . . The plot is not strained and réally satisfies the audience.



And now for the final "big feature" of the week . . . "Thunder Birds". . . . From all corners of the globe they come to Arizona's famed Thunderbird Field—reckless fledglings determined to become Democracy's avenging eagles and erase the enemy from the sky. . . . Action is the kyenote here. . . . Cadets from China, England, and other United Nations are seen, with American men, taking off, whirling, zooming, learning to master the skies. . . . And that is the story of the new pic, featuring Gene Tierney, Preston Foster, John Sutton, Jack Holt, Dame May Whitty, and Reginald Denny. . . . The plot evolves around the usual glamour-story of the air corps and the training of cadets. . . . But as usual, Gene is something to look at and the story supported by this "more than meddlin" cast is not too hard to take.

21st QM Reg't Advances Four

Four enlisted men of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) have been promoted. Sergeant Oneder Hall of Newark, N. J., was made a staff sergeant; Technician Fifth Grade Edwin E. Blake, New York City, was promoted to sergeant; Pfc. Al M. Dowtin, Warrenton, N. C., was made a corporal; Sgt. Willie Pruitt has been promoted to staff sergeant.

When there are several good points from which to observe, always choose the least prominent position.

TIS Sound Men Responsible For Stentorian Voices on Post

Wire Goes Dead On Harpo Marx

If you want to have a voice heard 'round Fort Benning, make the acquaintance of Staff Sgt. Emanuel Neiditch and Sgt. William MacFarlane.

They'll string some wires, put up a microphone and with a couple of twists of the wrist send your voice booming out over the Georgia countryside at Fort Benning.

Neiditch and MacFarlane are two of the mainstays of the sound section at the great Infantry School, the former serving now as chief maintenance man of the repair shop, and MacFarlane working as a sound dispatcher in the section.

In the last year, however, the two have become well-known around Fort Benning as the "sound men"—the boys who make it possible for thousands to hear what is going on at huge sports events, rallies, celebrations and USO shows.

Much of the work of erecting sound equipment for the various events on the post has been done in their spare time. As Neiditch says, "my first job is to make sure sound equipment is ready and in working order each day for the Infantry School problems. After that, we'll take care of public address systems for anything and everything."

Neiditch's background of years of civilian experiences in radio and sound work is largely responsible for his success in "rigging up" excellent public address systems at Fort Benning—sometimes on very short notices.

COMPLICATED JOB

The most complicated job the boys ever accomplished was setting up 12 "mikes" and laying 8,000 feet of "mike" cable in order to bring the various acts of the Fort Benning water-show "Aqua-Poppin' " to an audience of 10,000 at Russ Pool. On this job, "mikes" were placed on floating platforms in the middle of the pool; on diving platforms and in boats in the pool and were under constant control.

In recent months, Neiditch and MacFarlane have worked long hours to set up and operate public address system at the USO-Camp Shows performances and other entertainments; at special events such as war bond rallies and the huge war-bonds breakfast in the post gym, and at the football games and other sports events on the main post and in the Sand Hill area. Their amplifying system is also used on the radio programs from Fort Benning in order that studio audiences in the service clubs may hear the programs. They installed a permanent public address system in Doughboy Stadium.

Usually their equipment operates without a "hitch" but MacFarlane recalls one embarrassing incident last summer when Harpo Marx stepped up to the "mike" to say the first words he had ever spoken at Fort Benning. Just as he spoke, an over-zealous photographer stepped on the sound cord and pulled the plug from the socket, causing the system to go "dead" momentarily.

SYSTEM GOES DEAD

"Harpo, though, got a big kick out of it by turning to the audience, shrugging his shoulders and saying 'See, I speak and the system goes dead!" MacFarlane recalled.

Neiditch used to work with radio stars in civilian life, including Al Jolson who visited Fort Benning last summer, looked down from the stage and recognized Neiditch at the controls.

Working under Capt. William A. Myers, chief of the School's sound section, Sergeant Neiditch has the most completely equipped sound-maintenance shop at Fort Benning, including commercial recording appartus to record organizations such as bands and orchestras.

Russian-born, Sergeant Neiditch worked in radio and sound business for leading radio stations and radio manufacturing corporations such as RCA and Bendix

71st Engineers Enjoy Problem And A Party

By PFC. S. B. SUSSINA
71st Engr. L. Pon. Co.

A colored land owner in South Georgia, reported an anticipated invasion of Florida by the German Batmen. The Eastern Defense Command then sent the tried and true 71st Engineer Light Ponton Company to reinforce the Home Guards at Fort Gaines, Georgia from November 23 to November 28, 1942, inclusive.

It should be understood that Fort Gaines is not a fort or anything that resembles the results of application of the art of field fortifications, or a reasonable facsimile thereof. It is merely a city noted for its scenic location on the mighty Mother of Rivers, the Chattahoochee, approximately 65 miles south of Columbus, Ga. The total population is 1,200 men, women, and children, and innumerable cows, horses and chickens.

Many military roads were built to increase the offensive capabilities of the 71st; bridges were erected; trees felled for the construction of anti-tank obstacles; and nightly reconnaisances made.

The first small scouting party moved southward with a great determination to bring back invaluable military information. But it was arrested in its forward movement along State Cowpath No. 27 in the vicinity of Fort Gaines. Upon their return to the bivouac area it was greeted with open arms. They reported numerous facilities for extra-curricular activities a hoot-'n-holler to the south.

Fortunately the prospective invasion of Florida did not materialize. Further appearances of military personnel in Fort Gaines was not for any constructive military purpose, but solely for the enlivenment of morale.

The first mass evacuation of Fort Gaines by the civilian population took place on Nov. 28, the year of our Lord 1942. The mission of this mass movement was to investigate the armed might of the second light ponton outfit ever activated. The secondary purpose was to acquaint themselves with the living conditions of field troops. Great admiration of the mess facilities was evinced. A generous invitation was extended to the personnel of the 71st to dine at private home and to dance at the City Club House. This invitation was accepted with a great deal of pleasure and enthusiasm. Fun was had by all.

The problem terminated rather abruptly on the morning of November 28. The only objection to the sudden departure from the bivouac area was that no time was available for sufficient thanks to the kind people of Fort Gaines and vicinity for the more than generous hospitality and kindness extended by them.

made it, and the trip was much the same as before.

The remaining three jumps were without incident, Max finally getting used to it.

At a review staged in his honor, Max was decked out in a small jacket, and on it, as all the men of the regiment stood at attention, the canine was given his silver wings by Colonel James M. Gavin, the regimental commanding officer.

Max, of course, didn't salute, or say anything after the presentation.

But, if ever there was a stumpy tail wagged which said plainly, "Colonel, I deserve it!" it was Maxie's.

Automatic Phones Improve Benning Alabama Service

With installation of a 200 line automatic telephone exchange, improved telephone service for the Alabama area of Fort Benning now is in operation, it is announced by Post Communications Officer Lt. Col. A. W. Young.

Forty-eight lines now are being utilized, leaving a surplus to be used as becomes necessary. The new automatic exchange replaces a field switchboard service that was maintained previously by the various units located in the Alabama area.

Alabama offices dial 9 on the dial system to be connected with the Post exchange, and then utilize the dial system to be connected with any telephone on the post. To get Columbus, Alabama users dial exactly the same as regular Post exchange phones after they have been connected with the post exchange.

To be connected with Alabama telephones, offices on the Main Post dial 8 and ask for the Alabama number.

The new equipment was installed by experts from the North Electric company, Galin, Ohio.

around Chicago for many years. For some time he installed marine transmitters and direction-finders on ships plying the Great Lakes.

MacFarlane, a combustion engineer for Phelps-Dodge Company in his home town, Elizabeth, N. J., had no previous experience in sound work before joining the Army, but declares he has learned considerable under the tutelage of Neiditch.

Both were inducted into the Army on the same day, Feb. 19, 1941, Neiditch at Camp Croft, S. C., and MacFarlane at Fort Dix, N. J. Neiditch took the communications course at the Infantry School and was later transferred to the School's sound section. MacFarlane was in the 29th Infantry, worked on special duty with the sound section and was later transferred to the section.

Medical Inspector Appointed Major

Captain James A. Loveless, post medical inspector and post venereal control officer at Fort Benning, has been promoted to the rank of major, it is announced.

A native of Winder, Ga., Major Loveless graduated from Emory University, then engaged in public health work, being a member of the Public Health department of Davidson County, with headquarters at Nashville, Tenn., when he was called into service.

Major Loveless entered the army in July, 1941, as a Lieutenant, was made a captain in April, 1942, and then was named a major.

As post venereal control officer, he earned commendation from city officials of cities in nearby areas to Fort Benning for his work in helping to clean up vice conditions.

Regimental Dinner Dance Is Given

Floor Show Entertains Many Distinguished Guests

With a star studded guest listed headed by Gen. Geo. H. Weems and a brilliant floor show, the First Student Training Regiment commanded by Col. Thomas R. Gibson opened the Pre-Christmas social season with a buffet-dinner dance at the Polo Hunt Club on Friday, November 27, 1942.

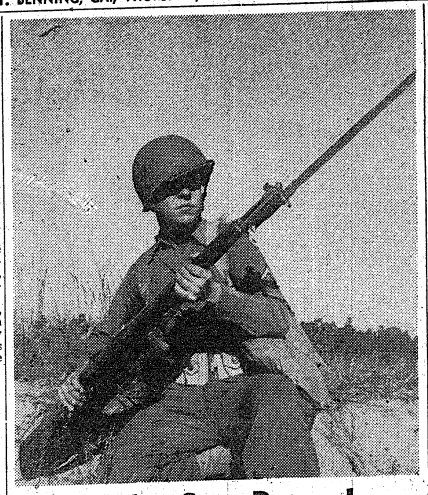
There were many innovations seen at the affair. As the officers and ladies entered the club, they were announced by Lt. Logan over a public address system. For each invited guest a cartoon and a jingle had been made up emphasizing the particular hobbies or fancies of each officer. The jingles were written by Lt. Schilling and Lt. Logan, and the cartoons were drawn by Lt. Sweeney.

Outstanding talent selected from the regiment presented an excellent floor show. The entertainers were Candidate James Coletta, a magician, Candidates Paul Donovan, Charles Donovan, James White and William Scully, vocalists; Candidate Edward Walker, tap dancer; Candidate Persival Bambridge, pianist; Frank Gerriets, Jimmy Mederios and Miss Ann Adcock of Columbus, skating team, and a fine Master of Ceremonies, Candidate John Francis.

The menu prepared by the 1st Battalion Mess under the capable direction of Lt. Vaughan, battalion mess officer and Lieutenant Crump, assistant battalion mess officer was so delicious it satisfied the most epicuran taste.

The decorations were tastefully and artistically arranged by Private Miller of the 29th Infantry. He transformed the Polo Hunt Club into a veritable fairyland. The music furnished by the 29th Infantry Orchestra kept the dance floor crowded.

Among the guests were Gen. George H. Weems, Col. and Mrs. Henry P. Perrine, Col. and Mrs. Harold E. Potter, Col. and Mrs. Robert Sharp, Col. and Mrs. Grant A. Schlicker, Col. and Mrs. John D. Hill, Col. and Mrs. Carroll A. Bagby, Col. and Mrs. Richard G. McKee, Col. and Mrs. Harvey T. Morgan, Col. and Mrs. Maurice G. Stubbs, Col. and Mrs. Richard R. Coussey, Lt. Col. and Mrs. Frederick R. Undritz and Major and Mrs. Allen D. Albert.



That the affair was such a great success was due to Major Youngflesh and Lt. Logan who capably handled all arrangements under the supervision of the commanding officer. The affair was in many respects the outstanding social event in the history of the regiment.

can knows may be the price of the final victory.

And on the home front rationing was the big news. Rationing and war production and a disastrous night club fire in Boston, Mass., that snuffed out more than 400 lives in the space of minutes when flames from a match ignited decorations and spread quickly to the walls and partitions of the building.

Pfc. Tudor Sets Record As Colonel's Orderly

Every time that he has mounted guard in the last three months, Pfc. LaVerne Tudor of Company "F" 29th Infantry, has been chosen Colonel's Orderly. By his own admission, Tudor is out to establish a record "that will be hard to beat."

When asked "Just how do you do it, man?" Tudor made known the secret of his outstanding success. "It's really quite simple," he said, "I merely see to it that my equipment is clean—all of it just as clean as I can get it in three hours work. I go over everything —my bayonet, my rifle belt, my shoes, my clothes, and my rifle—I spend most of the time working on that; I take special care in polishing the stock and the hand grips."

Leaving school to join the army in 1940, Tudor has spent the entire length of his service here in the 29th. He received his recruit training in Company "F."

He comes from Queens County, Long Island, is single, likes to bowl, go to the movies, blow bugles, and says that he'd rather stay in the 29th than go to O. C. S.

Tudor has good reason for feeling elated over his achievement. Despite the grumblings that may be heard now and then from a man slated for guard duty, mounting guard in the American Army is actually a privilege and a testimonial.

Scouting Around

CARDINAL TROOP
Scribe Sarah Anne Pickering

The Cardinal Scouts had a most exciting meeting Friday afternoon, November 27. During the afternoon, they made their first camp fires, and cooked marshmallows.

Plans for a Court of Awards in December are being made.

All the Girl Scouts' Mothers will be invited to see the presentation of the pins to the new scouts. At this time, the girls who have earned other awards will receive them.

DOGWOOD TROOP
Scribe Marian Gregory

In place of our regular Thursday meeting, the "cavalry unit" of the Dogwood Troop took a hike on horseback on Friday. We rode along the Marne Road to the gravel wash on the Upatoi. Mrs. George Milliner, our scout leader, and Mrs. Elliott Watkins accompanied us.

We left the stables in the morning at eleven o'clock, ate our lunch around a fire on the bank of the Upatoi, and returned at two-thirty in the afternoon. We had several thrills, but no spills.

The girls who made the trip were: Marian Allen, Connie Friend, Betty Rutte, Shirley Sharpless, Jackie Riley, Barbara Riley, Marian Gregory, and Marie Colston.

PINE TREE TROOP
Scribe Betty Eikel

The Pine Tree Troop met at the Scout Cabin on Monday Nov 30, to have the investment of the new scouts. Barbara Criswell of the Knothole patrol talked about the activities of our troop and Nancy Gilmore told us the meaning of the words of the last verse of our national anthem. There was an exhibit of miniature dogs collected by Pixie Howard and dolls from different countries were displayed by Jocelyn Clapp. An original play written by Sue Moppett was given by six girls who were working for their dramatics badge, Charlotte Mesick, Georgia Day Eley, Sue Moppett, Susan Stillenger, Marion Clark and Phyllis Jacobs took part in it. Refreshments were served.

Then we all formed the wishing circle with our mothers, and sang taps which ended a very enjoyable afternoon.

Observance Of Chanukah Set

Party Is Slated For Dec. 5

Chanukah or the Feast of Lights will be observed by men of the Jewish faith at Fort Benning Dec. 3-11 with Chaplain Samson A. Shain officiating, Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, chief of the post's branch of chaplains, announces.

The holidays commemorate the miracle of the rededication of the Temple in Maccabean days. The Jews, outnumbered by Hellenic Syrians, were forced into the worship of idols, but were able to triumph finally over their foes and rededicate the Temple, which had been desecrated by the Syrians, to God and His Worship. Observance of these holidays has served as a reservoir of inspiration to all persecuted and troubled Jews down through the ages to the present day.

The observance of Chanukah begins Thursday night with the lighting of the first candle. An additional candle will be kindled each successive night for eight days until all are lighted.

The first candle will be kindled at Lawson Field Chapel No. 2 at 7:30 p. m. Thursday; the second candle at Children's School Friday at 7:30 p. m.; and others are to be kindled at Harmony Church Sunday and in the Tenth Armored Division Monday, following the regular schedule of services.

Saturday evening, Dec. 5, the USO will entertain a group of Jewish soldiers at the Standard Club. Invitations have been issued for this function at which Military Maids from Columbus, Atlanta, and Birmingham will act as hostesses.

Chaplain Shain stated that he has at his office a supply of Chanukah greeting cards which will be issued free to those requesting them for mailing to their families and friends. The chaplain also has a supply of Chanukah menorahs (candle-sticks) and candles to be used by families of Jewish troops residing on the post or in Columbus and vicinity.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

The first anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor was just another day this week as Americans the world over got on with the task of winning a war and a permanent peace.

On the sands of North African deserts; in the slit trenches of the Solomon Islands and in the ice-bound Aleutian Islands, American soldiers and sailors looked at grimy calendars last Monday and remembered Dec. 7, 1941, when many of them were still at home or training in Army camps in the USA. Then they turned to the business of storming Axis strongholds at Tunis and Bizerte and of driving the Jap from Gladalcanal, New Guinea and the Aleutian Islands.

Back home, 17,500,00 war workers kept at their jobs with no observance of the fateful "day that will live in infamy" and 110,000,000 other Americans remembered the day too, but looked forward to Dec. 7, 1943, instead of over their shoulders to Dec. 7, 1941.

The war news could not be termed "good," but it was encouraging. Communiques told of the United Nations gathering men and materials for a tremendous drive in Tunis and Bizerte which the Nazis were still holding despite heavy losses. Those back home reading "between the lines" knew that the Yankees in North Africa had their work "cut out for them" in that campaign, but they also knew that it would take a lot of Nazis and Italians to completely stop the carefully-prepared Allied onslaught, because the United Nations weren't "too late with too little" this time.

Across the narrow Mediterranean, the Italians were evacuating their much-bombed coastal cities and the Nazis were working frantically to strengthen their defenses along the coast of southern France, fearing an Allied second front thrust there if North Africa becomes a German "Dunkirk."

In the Solomons, the Americans were gaining inch by inch against the hard-pressed Japs, weakened by huge naval losses sustained in recent battles with the U. S. Navy. On the other Pacific Islands, such as New Guinea, the Australians and the Americans continued to advance against the Japs, who were fighting this time with their backs against the seas.

Perhaps the most stirring news this week was the report of U. S. production during the last 12 months. The Office of War Information announced that the nation during 1942 will have produced approximately 49,000 planes, 32,000 tanks and self-propelled artillery, 17,000 anti-aircraft guns, 8,200,000 tons of merchant shipping, thousands of anti-aircraft machine guns and thousands of scout cars and half and half-truck carriers.

The navy told the story of Pearl Harbor, a story zealdriving the Jap from Guadalcanal. New Guinea and the Aleutian Islands.

during which America's workers like mad to make the harbor stronger and larger than before the Japs bombed it last December.

Rationing was still the topic on every tongue in the land. A new system of rationing known as the "point system" will be used with War Ration Book No. 2 to ration certain commodities not yet announced. The system will not replace straight couponing ration-

Paratroops Stage Florida Dress Rehearsal

505 Paratroopers 'Take' Orlando In Spectacular Air Maneuvers

Raid Filmed by Crack Cameraman; Parapup Sights Cat; Trees Same

BY CAPT. BARNEY OLDFIELD

ORLANDO, Fla.—With potato grenades, two companies of the 505th Parachute Infantry took over this piece of the orange belt last week in two days of mock invasion by vertical envelopment.

Call to the Florida midlands was sourced in the defense board headed by Col. M. K. Deichelmann, who brought Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, commanding the 1st Parachute Infantry Bridage, and Col. James M. Gavin, 505th C. O. into the plans for the test of an air base defense battalion at Orlando.

It was a two-day affair, and it fell to Major Arthur F. Gorham's 1st Battalion of the 505th. He assigned the first day's jump to Lt. Ed Sayre's A company, the second to C company commanded by Capt. J. E. McGinity.

The haul was the longest from base to jump of any training junket so far attempted in this country by parachutists—375 air miles.

To gain the proper air superiority of fighters and dive bombers, planes from Jacksonville, Fla., were called upon to rendezvous and strike some 20 minutes prior to arrival of the transports—theoretically subduing ground installations which could menace the aerial delivery of fighting men.

The 505th Parachute Infantry played it hard all the way. A single company was to be thrown against a battalion in each of the daily tests, and there was some tendency on the part of the problem stagers to say it wasn't fair, that the paratroopers couldn't be expected to do much, but to do the best they could.

MAKE QUICK SNAPS

Treated as a legitimate combat operation, the 505th camera crew flew over the Orlando fields at 15,000 feet, made quick snaps of the ground below, and scurried back to Benning four days in advance of the attack date. Photos were rushed through developing tanks, other members of the intelligence platoon converted the pictures quickly into sand tables. Every man in each company was thoroughly oriented on the sand tables before the takeoff.

When the flight and the jump were made, those who were inclined to wish the parachutists had a better chance, found they didn't need it. Lt. Sayre's outfit, confusing the defense by choosing a jump area which was filled with stumps and trees, moved in, dug in, and stayed in—a very decisive showing against much greater numbers.

Second day, when it came Capt. McGinity's turn, the jump area was even tougher, involved landing on the cement runways of Orlando's main airfield. Again the showing was very creditable, although the defenses had a better chance knowing more about the peculiarities of parachute invasion.

Col. M. K. Deichelmann was enthusiastic, his test having been designed to disclose all the bugs in offense and defense possible. "In this," he said," the maneuvers were a complete success. — we found everything we wanted to know."

BUBBLE POPPED

The old bubble about paratroopers being at the mercy of ground forces while in the air was certainly popped, because the 505th crew was on the ground so quickly from 11 planes, the time consumed by the defenders getting in place to do anything was more than enough to allow the chutists to get safely to the ground and organize.

Pay Increase Is Approved

Details Promised In Daily Bulletin

Officers at Fort Benning will be notified through the Daily Bulletin as soon as the Finance Department receives notification from Washington regarding payment of increased back pay allowances, Col. J. H. McFall, post Finance Officer announced today.

President Roosevelt has signed legislation which, for purposes of computing pay, allows officers full credit for time served as enlisted man or officer in the National Guard or various other reserve forces, according to word received from Washington.

The act will be retroactive to last June 1. It was designed to prevent loss of pay to members of the national guard or other reserves when they were appointed as officers in the regular Army.

No directive has yet been received from Washington and it probably will take some time for full information to be sent out to various posts, Col. McFall pointed out.

Legion Officials Guests Of Fulton On Visit To Post

Roane Waring, national commander of the American Legion, visited Fort Benning Wednesday. He was accompanied by Jackson Dick, Georgia state legion commander; Stanley Jones, state legion adjutant general and Joseph Lumpkin.

Waring served in France in World War I as adjutant of the 65th Brigade, 33d Division, after being promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel as assistant chief of staff, G-3. He participated in both the Meuse-Argonne and St. Mihiel battles.

The national commander, a native of Memphis, Tenn., is president of the Memphis Street Railway company. He is a graduate of the Law School of the University of Virginia.

AWOL Serious Offense Now, Fink Warns

Troops On Furlough Must Return To Duty At Proper Time

Warning was issued today to relatives and friends of Army men who will be on holiday furloughs that severe penalties for AWOL—absent without leave — became effective Dec. 1.

The warning was issued by Capt. George Fink, post judge advocate at Fort Benning, who urged that relatives and friends make certain that men in uniform start for their camps to be back when their leave is completed.

Captain Fink was notified this week by the War Department that an Executive Order dated November 9, and effective on Dec. 1, removed the maximum limitations of punishment for violations of Article of War 61, covering AWOL offenses.

"According to this, absence of just one day; in aggravated cases, may receive any punishment that the court martail sees fit to impose. In cases where absence of only a day is construed as desertion, the death penalty may be invoked.

PREVIOUS LIMITS OFF

"The previous limits of punishment for absence without leave contained in the table which was suspended by President Roosevelt's executive order, were prescribed to meet peace time conditions, and not those of wartime, Capt. Fink pointed out.

"Under wartime conditions, an unauthorized absence is a serious offense, especially in cases where it is proved that there was an attempt or intent to evade or shirk hazardous or important service, may be desertion, punishment of which is death or such other punishment as the court-martial may direct.

"Even in cases where minor punishment may be meted out, any soldier who deserted the service subsequent to Dec. 7, 1941, and is convicted by a court-martial, automatically loses his American citizenship. Such a man will find it very difficult, if not impossible, to secure employment in many fields on his return to civilian life."

INSIGNIA ON JACKET

Officer's insignia of rank will be worn on the field jacket, according to an announcement received at post headquarters today.

Dedication Of Post Office Set For Saturday At Noon

Washington Official Attending; Stillwell Scion To Unveil Stone

First Assistant Postmaster General Ambrose O'Connell will come from Washington to assist in the ceremonies of the laying and dedication of the cornerstone of the new Post Office building at Fort Benning, at noon Saturday.

The cornerstone will be unveiled by 12-year-old Joseph W. Stilwell, III, grandson of Lt. General Joseph Stilwell, now leading American forces in China and Burma, and chief-of-staff to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek. Maj. Joseph W. Stilwell, the boy's father, is also serving overseas.

Leighton W. McPherson, postmaster of Columbus, under whose jurisdiction the Fort Benning branch is maintained, will act as master of ceremonies for the occasion.

Music will be furnished by the 29th Infantry band. The invocation will be given by Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, chief of the post chaplains branch, after which Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, will give the address of welcome.

The address by Postmaster General O'Connell will follow, after which Bentley Chappell, county attorney of Muscogee county, will give a brief talk. The benediction will be pronounced by Chaplain William H. Hunt.

The new postoffice, now rapidly nearing completion, is of brick structure and will furnish nearly twice as much floor space for postal purposes as the present branch on the reservation. It is being built between Hall and Ingersoll streets on avenue Vibbert. The entrance will be on Hall street.

Bond Delivery To Be Speeded By New Plan

Col. McFall Named Bond Issuing Officer For Fort Benning

Delivery of War Savings Bonds purchased by military and civilian personnel at Fort Benning, under the pay reservation plan will be speeded up by inauguration of a new system recently announced by Col. John H. McFall, post finance officer.

Effective January 1, 1943, War Savings Bonds purchased under this system will be issued directly by the Finance Department Office here at Fort Benning. Though this means the purchaser will be insured more rapid receipt of the securities, the interval between deduction and delivery being reduced to little more than a month, once the organization has been set up.

Colonel McFall has been appointed a bond issuing officer, in addition to his duties as finance officer. Additional employees will be added to his staff to take care of the new task and all reservations made by Fort Benning personnel, military and civilian, will be handled through that department.

ABSTRACT REQUIRED

An abstract of class A pay reservation deductions will be required for all military personnel. This will include the name of person authorizing deduction, serial number, month or months for which pay reservations were deducted, voucher and month, and amount of deduction authorized. In the case of enlisted men this abstract will be prepared by the personnel officer along with the pay roll. Abstracts for officers and men on detached service will be handled by the Finance office.

For all civilian employees authorizing class A pay reservations for the purchase of War Savings Bonds, an individual ledger card showing payroll deductions and

Paratroops March In From Atlanta For Jump Course

Husky paratroop trainees, here to take the jump course at Fort Benning's famous Parachute School, arrived late yesterday afternoon in the Frying Pan Area at the completion of a forced march on foot from Atlanta, Ga., which began on Sunday.

The recruits were greeted by a band and brief, impressive ceremonies were held in their honor.

The men are all members of the 3rd Battalion of the 506th Parachute Infantry, now stationed at Toccoa, Ga., above Atlanta. The unit is commanded by Lt. Col. Robert Sink.

Their arrival here to take the jump course marks a departure from the usual procedure of training sky-jumpers. Previously, the men came to Benning direct from replacement centers.

This is the first group to come from Toccoa, where in the future the 13 weeks' basic training will be given to recruits under the supervision of trained parachute officers and non-coms. Following the completion of the jump training, the men will then undergo several weeks of tactical instruction.

Capt. Fargo Named War Bond Officer

Capt. Charles F. Fargo, formerly assistant adjutant of Post Headquarters, has been named Post War Bond officer, according to an announcement at headquarters.

Capt. Fargo succeeds Lt. Oswald K. Marquardt as bond officer, the latter recently having been named aide-de-camp to Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, post commander.

During the past six months, Capt. Fargo had been assigned to the Infantry School and recently completed the course at the Command and General Staff School, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

HEAD COACH JACK MEAGHER AUBURN

Auburn Coach Will Speak At Grid Fete

Sunday Dinner Will Be Finale For 1942 Season

Jack Meagher, famed coach of Auburn's great football team which scored the "upset of the year" over Georgia in Columbus a few weeks ago, will be the feature speaker Sunday night in the Polo Hunt Club when the Fort Benning Athletic Association fetes the members of all six post conference football teams at a gala grid dinner.

The Tiger mentor is a former Notre Dame great and is rated not only as one of the best coaches in the sport, but also ranks high in popularity. He is an unusually interesting speaker and is in great demand throughout the southeastern states.

EX-MARINE OFFICER

Meagher is affectionately known as the "old Marine" and was a Marine Corps officer in the last war. He has already announced his intentions of giving up coaching for the duration and expects to re-enter the service as a major shortly after the first of the year. Sunday may be his final appearance in this section for some time.

The Auburn coach, who is also athletic director of the Alabama school, has promised to bring along the movies of the now-famous Georgia-Auburn game to entertain the Benning gridders. The feature guest will be introduced at the dinner by Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of the post and a great follower of the conference teams all season.

FINNEGAN TO SPEAK

Another short talk will be given by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, the post athletic officer, and head of the F. B. A. A. Colonel Finnegan was formerly head football coach at Notre Dakota State and is a humorous speaker, with a great selection of anedotes about midwestern football. The toastmaster will be Sgt. Carl Neu,

Sable-hued Unmentionables Hold Sway in G. I. Christmas Gifts

Burly Soldiers Exhaust P. X. Stock; Sweethearts, Wives To Get Perfumes

Black nightgowns and negligees and enchanting perfume known as "Passion" will find their way into the homes of many wives, mothers, and sweethearts of the soldiers at Benning this Christmas.

Hardy paratroopers, tough infantrymen and rugged armored force troops of this vast training center already are flooding the Main Post Exchange daily to select holiday gifts. But, the brawny soldiers pay little attention to the candy counters—preferring to send their sweethearts the more dainty lingerie and toiletries.

The Main Post Exchange at Fort Benning is completely out of the black nightgowns and appealing black negligees, although many soldiers have left "standing orders" for them when the shipment arrives. Less spectacular pink panties, girdles and hankies are among the soldiers' favorite items, according to C. E. Shean, manager of the Exchange for the last 16 years.

A native of Danville, Ill., where he was in the tire and automobile accessory business, Mr. Shean says that he has had to change his outlook on appropriate gifts for the women-folk back home when he took over a job with the army.

$2,000 PER DAY

Although the shopping rush for Christmas gifts hasn't hit the season "high" yet, Mr. Shean revealed that every day officers and enlisted men at the post are buying more than $3,000 worth of merchandise at the exchange, much of it destined for Christmas gifts.

Although several bashful soldiers, reluctant to discuss the whimsies of flimsy underwear and nighties with the feminine clerks, have just eyed the dainty lingerie, most of the troops "have a good idea of what they want and what they expect in the way of feminine lingerie," according to Mr. Shean.

The manager explained that on several occasions he has personally helped the more bashful soldiers on their lingerie problems. So, soldier, if you would like a black nightie for your wife or sweetheart, Mr. Shean will be glad to help you out!

The appropriate sizes for the women-folk habitually cause consternation to the soldiers! However, a saleslady in the lingerie department, which is one of eleven in the exchange, said that a soldier usually gets at the approximate size by observing that his girl is "a little bit taller than that girl over there but not quite so fat as you."

NO MISERS

Although the 75-odd varieties of perfumes at the exchange present an enticing appeal to the soldiers in gay bottles and packages, several "test bottles" are available for the soldiers to sniff and make their final selection.

And, Fort Benning's soldiers are not miserly in their choice of gifts. Paying six or seven dollars for a small bottle of perfume does not frighten the gift-loving soldiers.

Major H. E. McGaffey, post exchange officer of the post, pointed out that, as in civilian stores, the post exchange finds it difficult to obtain many items for their shelves. Maj. McGaffey said that between 6,000 to 7,000 persons a day pass through the Main Post Exchange, many of them "window-shoppers" but more yet are potential buyers.

A large storeroom in the rear of the exchange has an untapped supply of "La Perfume Fleurs" and "Tuliptime" cologne, among other appropriate gifts. So, the time still is not too short for the Benning G. I. to make his gift selection: be it fishing tackle, a box of candy or an exquisite perfume!

Rooms Scarce in Columbus To House Holiday Guests

BY ALVARETTA KENAN
Director, USO-Travelers Aid

Were you thinking of inviting your wife to Columbus to spend the Christmas holidays with you? Or, perhaps you have already done so. If so, you should read this article.

Did you know that so many wives have already come, and cannot find a room and are sitting in the USO-Travelers Aid and Billeting Offices waiting for the telephone to ring, hoping someone will call and say a room is available? Dozens of officers and enlisted men alike visit the USO-Travelers Aid office each night in hopes of making a reservation for their wives, but very few get them.

USO-Travelers Air workers say everything possible is being done to find accommodations for visitors but there just aren't enough rooms and beds in Columbus to accommodate all of the adopted and visiting military families. It is not unusual for six to eight a night to sleep in the waiting room and rest room of the Greyhound Bus Station, Railroad Terminal and hotel lobbies. Whole families are sleeping in their automobiles because no rooms can be located.

Military authorities have notified other army posts in this area that families should not follow their soldier-husband, son, or sweetheart unless he has obtained

2,100 Packages To Be Distributed Christmas Day

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

One of the least publicized units of the Red Cross, the Grey Ladies, is quietly and efficiently co-ordinating plans for a Christmas at the Station Hospital, reminiscent of days when the holidays meant a happy willingness of spirit and ingenuity in creating loveliness out of simple materials.

Mrs. Walter Scott Fulton, Chairman of the Red Cross Chapter at Fort Benning, Mrs. Richard Coursey, Chairman of the Grey Ladies Corps at the Fort Benning Station Hospital, and Mrs. Francis J. Hattaway, Red Cross Assistant Field Director of the Hospital and Recreational Service, have unified the interest and resources of their particular units, post wide contribution of both funds, material and effort and large scale effort from various Columbus groups.

Training At Post School Produces Polished MP's

Col. Will Directs Program For Police

Based on methods of the Infantry School, the Military Police School at Fort Benning—believed to be the only one of its sort in the country—is turning out a new type of personnel as different from the hardboiled, rough-fisted, sharp-tongued MP of World War I days as the present day civilian officer is different from the "copper" of 25 years ago.

The MP of today who addresses a soldier or helps a civilian with a problem knows his business. He probably is a graduate of the Military Police school—or if he isn't, the chances are he very shortly will be replaced by such a highly trained, efficient man.

The school is under the direction of Lt. Col. C. A. Will, provost marshal of Fort Benning, with Lieutenant William K. Ward, formerly of Arlington, Ga., in active charge.

Lt. Ward served as an enlisted man in the Military Police at Fort Benning for four years, then went to Ft. McClellan for training and then was sent to Ft. Ord, Calif., where he went through the California State Police School. He then returned to Fort Benning as an Officer Candidate and on graduation was assigned to Col. Will's office.

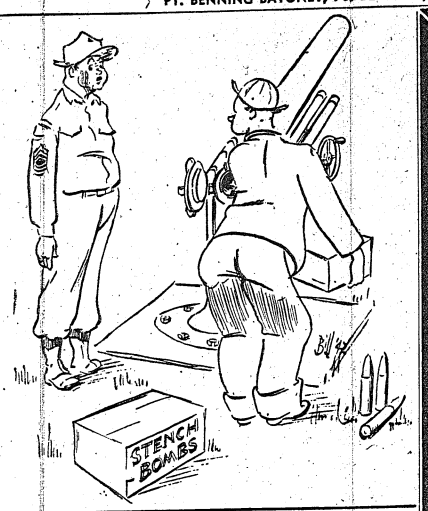
The school was set up last July, and to date has graduated five classes averaging 30 men. The present class now going through training is one of 20 men.

Men now are assigned from the ranks of limited service men from the Fourth Service Command. Students are given instruction on all phases of police work, including military law, traffic control, post regulations, accident and criminal investigations.

The Day Room of the Military Police Barracks serves as the class room, and the various intersections and MP posts on the main post of the Fort are the laboratories where the men receive both class room and practical training under the watchful eyes of men who have previously gone through the training.

After the graduates of the school become proficient and efficient MP's, through several months of service as actual personnel and instructors in the "working laboratories" about the Post they are then shipped out in groups as cadres for other military reservations through the Fourth Service Command.

At the conclusion of the course, each man is awarded a certificate. Lieut. Ward also has trained instructors for several organizations through the reservation, and these men now are at work diving training to men of those organizations who are called on to do police work in their respective areas.



"The Military Policeman of today is as different from the MP of World War I to much the same degree that the civilian police force of our country has changed," Col. Will said, commenting on the school. "Modern methods of crime detection and of scientific research is changing the old time 'copper' into a man of real police ability. In the same way it must be with those whose duty it is to be policemen in the Army. We need good, capable men who know their work. After a four weeks' course at this new Military school, students are sent out on the job prepared to do this new and better type of military work."

Assisting Lieut. Ward in charge of the course of instructions, which is laid out on the same basis as the course in the Infantry School, are three sergeants and a Pfc. Sergeant Leonard A. Spector, who was an attorney in civilian life, is in charge of criminal investigation and military law courses. The others are Sgt. Ike Bentley, Sgt. Lester K. Pittman and Pfc. Bernard Lundrigen.

Seven Officers Are Advanced

Another group of officers in the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), of Fort Benning, has been promoted, according to a recent announcement by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, the regimental commander. First Lt. Wilbert D. Meeks, of Nichols, Ga., adjutant for the regiment and commander of the Headquarters Detachment, was promoted to Captain.

Two captains have been made in the regiment's Medical Detachment: First Lt. Roy Settle, of Inman, South Carolina, the Regimental Surgeon, and First Lt. Frederick W. Braastad, of Ishpeming, Michigan, Medical Officer for the regiment.

A company commander, First Lt. Robert Alexander, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, has added the extra bar. Capt. Alexander is one of the regiment's widely traveled officers—having been stationed at thirteen posts in his twelve year period of service in the army.

First Lt. William G. Walters, of East Point, Ga., Motor Officer for Company "B," has likewise been elevated to a captain while two second lieutenants, Wales W. Wallace, of Columbiana, Ala., and Eugene C. Hagewood, of Ashland City, Tenn., recent additions to the regimental official roster, have been promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant.

Two Lawson Officers Advanced

Two second lieutenants at Lawson Field, Fort Benning, have been promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, it was announced today.

They are Lt. Edmond D. Humphreys, Rochester, N. Y., and Lt. Arthur H. Nylen, Jr., of Little Rock, Ark.

Lt. Humphreys is a graduate of the University of Michigan, where he spent much time with the Glider Club of the university. He received his commission on April 29, 1942.

Lt. Nylen attended the University of Georgia and the American University in Washington, D. C., and also took post graduate work in accounting at the Harvard Graduate School. He is the son of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Arthur H. Nylen, Little Rock.

Lt. Edward Healy Made Captain

First Lt. Edward J. Healy of New York City has been promoted to the rank of Captain, according to an announcement by Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, Commanding Officer, 124th Infantry.

Captain Healy formerly was Operations Officer for the 2nd Battalion but recently has been assigned to Regimental Headquarters as the Assistant Operations Officer for the Regiment.

Paratroopers Send War Bond Sales Over The Top

The Third Battalion of the 507th Parachute Infantry, commanded by Major Arthur A. Maloney, has exceeded the goal of 10 per cent a month for pay reservations allotted to the purchase of War Bonds. A total of $6,475 a month presently is being invested in securities by members of the unit, it was disclosed today.

Colonel G. V. Millett, Jr., commanding officer of the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, heralded the achievement of the battalion by saying that "it reflects very favorably on the various unit commanders for their efforts to promote such subscriptions.

"The enlisted men and officers of this battalion are indicating by their purchases unfailing loyalty and effort toward the successful prosecution of the war that is just as important to have ultimate victory success in battle."

Benning O. C. Scaled Matterhorn At Age Of 14

Candidate David Owen, of Fifteenth Company, First Student Training Regiment, claims the distinction of being the youngest to ascend the treacherous Matterhorn of the Swiss Alps. This amazing feat was accomplished at the ripe old age of fourteen years.

This hobby of mountain climbing was thrust upon him by his father, Carl M. Owen, who has accompanied him on climbs in the Rockies, the Swiss Alps and the Himalayas.

Though somewhat reluctant to relate his own experience, Owen tells the story of an English nobleman who fell in a crevice at the head of a glacier. Efforts to locate his body were unavailing. Experts, who knew the glacier's rate of flow, predicted that the body would be uncovered at the end of the glacier after forty years. The perfectly preserved body appeared forty-two years later.

President Signs Clothing Bill

The bill increasing uniform allowance for officers from $150 to $250 has now been signed by President Roosevelt, according to word received from Washington by Fort Benning officials.

The new bill also extends the allowance to warrant officers and makes inclusions for National Guard officers who come into the service. Previously National Guard and warrant officers were excluded from benefits of uniform allowance statutes.

Under the new regulations, the $250 allowance is to go to each officer who was on duty April 3, 1939, or thereafter, and not above the third pay period.

Religious Interest High Among Officer Candidates

"Man for man, Sunday for Sunday, religious interest and attendance at religious functions is greater among Officer Candidates than in any comparable civilian group or regular line Army outfit with which I have been connected."

That is the way 1st Lt. Edwin C. Willson, regimental chaplain for the Second Student Training Regiment at The Infantry School, sums up his experience with the young men who come to Fort Benning to qualify as the new leaders of America's greatly expanding armies.

Chaplain Willson has some rather definite figures and some even more definite personal observations with which to support his statement. Having served a Protestant congregation in civilian life and a normal line regiment in the Army before coming to The Infantry School, he also has a fairly comprehensive basis for comparison.

MASS ATTENDANCE

Among Catholic Officer Candidates, attendance at Sunday masses comes pretty close to being 100 per cent, Chaplain Willson said.

But it is among Protestants that the most revealing figures appear. Attendance at Sunday services by Protestant Officer Candidates he estimates at about 40 per cent, as compared to about 15 per cent in the line regiment from which he came here. Also among Protestants, at monthly communion services the number of communicants has always been between 95 and 100 per cent of those present, an even more startling revelation.

In considering attendance figures such as these, it must be pointed out too, Chaplain Willson said, that it is a real hardship for Officer Candidates to attend church services on Sundays. This is the only free day on their weekly schedule, and it customarily is a day set aside for letter writing, studies, cleaning catching up on such things as rifles, polishing shoes and washing clothes, scores of little things which just do not get done during the week when Candidates work up to 14 hours a day six days of the week. Church services have to be squeezed into a busy schedule.

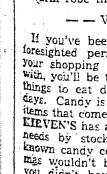
Thus he believes that these young men about to become combat officers go to church because of a sincere desire for spiritual guidance and not because of less fundamental considerations which are apt to influence church attendance in private life. There is ordinarily no pleasant music at army church services, there is no feminine interest in the congregation, and there are not the normal considerations of habit and custom such as attending with the rest of the family.

Chaplain Willson has noted this same fundamental attitude toward religion in his many personal conferences with Candidates.

SEEK TRUTH

"To put it frankly," he explained, "these young men know that they are facing danger and even death soon after they assume their new responsibilities, and they want to know two things. First what their own attitude under such conditions should be. And second what new religious responsibilities they will be assuming when they lead other men into combat. They want to get their fundamental religious beliefs straightened out with themselves. And they want to know how they can be of spiritual help to their men in spots where the services of a chaplain are not likely to be available."

To cite an example, Chaplain Willson tells of a Candidate who came to him seeking copies of the Old and New Testament, Catholic, Protestant and Hebrew prayer books, in fact every kind of prayer book he could get. The Candidate said he wanted to prepare himself to be a spiritual as well as a material adviser to his men on the battlefield. And this has happened not once, but many times.



In his personal contacts with Officer Candidates the chaplain finds that he is more sought after as a spiritual adviser himself than as a mere source of help on personal material problems. Too many times in the Army, he believes, the chaplain is used as a mere social workers from whom loans can be obtained in emergencies, from whom help can be sought when a soldier has gotten into trouble.

The chaplain feels that this new attitude which Officer Candidates have toward the Chaplain is a vital thing, for these young men will not only be the junior officers during the great war which is yet to be fought, but many of them will also remain in the army after the peace has been won and will eventually be the leaders of the American Army in the days to come. Their outlook on religion is important now for what it will mean in the future, and their outlook now bodes much hope for that future.

Never take someone else's word that a weapon is unloaded. Inspect it yourself to be sure.

Remember always to inspect a weapon before you put it away.

AN ARMY WIFE SHOPS EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS

I suspected that the pay day following the month when the army paid October's bills and lived on the remaining cash in November, would produce retord shopping crowds in Columbus. .It did. If the crowds of shoppers continue to make the streets and aisles of the stores almost unpassable I'm wondering if there will be one item left on the shelves and counters the week bfore Christmas. From now on it will be a matter of buying what's left.

We always think of CHANCELLOR'S as a military store for our menfolks, and so it is. But it's also a mighty fine shop to buy things for the young high school boy. The "Joe College" air of the corduroy jackets and matching slacks, would give him a thoroughly "Esquire" look. He'd like those plaid flannel shirts, they're so violently colorful and typical of today's youth. For your husband you might consider a fine gabardine all wool shirt. It's in that dress-up color known to the army as "pink." The tailoring detail is especially fine. If you're looking for something handsome in a short, this is it. If you haven't shopped around you may not know that a shirt of this quality isn't found on every corner. Gloves are a necessary part of the uniform. If you give him a pair of pigskins you'll add a fine accessory touch to his smart military appearance. A cigarette case in saddle leather stamped "U. S." is another handsome gift item. It holds a full pack. Somehow I was reminded of cavalry saddles with their identification stamped in the corner, when I saw this case.

SEARS ROEBUCK.. must have planned a campaign for looking pretty in your home when they stocked the amazing supply of robes, house coats and house frocks. This department looks as gay as a florist shop, the colors are bright and stimulating. Men are to be seen in numbers choosing among these practical and lovely gifts for their ladies. There are quilted silk robes, white and pastel colors with tiny sprays of flowers for real luxury lounging. The quilted cotton robes combine the practicability of cotton and bright designs of splashy colors. The red roses against a white background gives a pert, fresh effect, that's rather desirable during the deshabille moments. Then there are bright colored seersucker housecoats and the ever-popular chenille robe. So great is the variety and color choice one is certain to find the exact robe wanted for a gift, and I'll defy you to resist buying one for yourself. Sears Roebuck have a stock of boyish grey and red flannel robes for the small fry that would rather play in a warm robe than dress.

If you've been one of those foresighted persons and have your shopping done and over with, you'll be thinking of fine things to eat during the holidays. Candy is one of the first items that comes to your mind. KIRVEN'S has anticipated your needs by stocking their well known candy counter. Christmas wouldn't be Christmas if you didn't have a supply of hard candies to munch on as you trim the tree and wrap the families' gifts. A universal favorite is the hard satin smooth fruit filled candies Kirven's has in big economical jars. There's enough candy for the average family unless they're especially addicted to those luscious morsels. You're all familiar with the extra goodness of Mrs. Stevens' fine chocolate candies. Several boxes should supply the family's hunger for rich chocolate. Then there are mints, both chocolate covered and the party kind. They make a nice addition to the eggnogg table.

You know KAYSER-LILIENTHAL has a special shopping service especially planned for the men folks in the service. They'll help you choose a gift, wrap it beautifully and even pay postage charges on the package if it's for the girl back home. Besides that they have a supply of tht wicked chiffon underwear so popular with the male purchasers of feminine undergarments. For the more conservative in taste is the matching gown and quilted robe. Unusual and attractive is the quilted brunch coat that would be mighty smart over the printed satin pajamas they have stocked in such luscious colors. Wonderfully practical for gifts are the smart tailored silk blouses and kitten soft sweaters. That ultra line of Germain Monteil toileries would be an acceptable gift for the girl who has everything. I'm personally yearning over those jeweled costume watches. I have a suit lapel that's barren waste space. I wonder if Santa Claus reads my shopping column?

Discovery of an unsuspected shopping center is a satisfying experiencee. Especially so is finding FIRESTONE STORE at 1246 First Avenue, bursting with all manner of Christmas gifts I thought would be off the market entirely. If you've seen the national advertising in your pet magazine you have an idea what they carry. Toys, and toys! All the beloved favorites that have stood the test of years of childish yearnings. Trains, dolls, tiny stoves, doll houses, house cleaning sets for the domestic minded miss, small soldiers that Dad will use to illustrate his theories of tactics. Sporting equipment for the older boys and girls and the senior members of the family if they have time these days for relaxation of their special hobby and game. Especially precious and hard to find is the stock of electrical appliances. They've always been a gift de luxe for the woman of the house. This year, a gift like this is more valuable than jewels.

Something new and astonishingly practical are the beautiful theatre jackets and skirts the PATRICIA SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel is showing. You can wear the skirt with a handsome dinner blouse, add the jacket and you have a formal suit for grand occasions. They're in silky black velvet, which is a perennial favorite for the feminine woman who knows her luxurious materials. The college girl would adore one of those gay and silly grannie hats. They're only a patch to pin on the back of the head with bobby pins. The roses, fluted ruffles and satin bows form an irresistible halo. She'd like a pouf of bright colored maline or tight swirls of colored horsehair. They're something new and very smart for evening hair dress. A bright printed scarf wouldn't go amiss as a gift either. Patricia has a goodly supply of that fine bag labeled Koret. Anyone that's ever been fortunate enough to own one will know what a super gift this would make. Tell your men folks Patricia will open her shop evenings by appointment. You might even help him by phoning for the appointment.

There was a time when the word practical gift meant the giver was lacking in imagination and will to shop. That's no longer true. We have a new sense of values these days.

This thought of practicability lead MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE STORE to offering gift certificates for future purchase of shoes. Personally, I can't think of a nicer gift. But then I'm a shoe crazy woman and find comfort in the thought there are many others like me who feel handsomely shod feet are one of the most important items of one's wardrobe. I'd even go so far as to say fine shoes are more than a fashion item. They're a mark of fastidiousness. This vanity isn't an exclusive right of the feminine world. There are men who set a store in handsome, gleaming leather. What better then than to indulge in their special weakness with a gift order. They can choose their own shoes then. You already know Miller-Taylor carry the finest shoes on the market today. Florsheim, Jarman and Walk-Over for the men. I. Miller, Daniel Green, Joyce for the women.

FIRM ROBERTS could rightly be included in the list of our old timers at Fort Benning. So long has this dispenser of good food and sincere friendliness for army folks, served those of the infantry, he's become one of us. Historians of Fort Benning will include his famous eating place on their pages. His restaurant "knew us when." We of the army have always known Firm Roberts' for it's fine planked steaks, when we felt rich. On equally gala occasions we devoured his hamburgers in an effort to prolong the night's party spirit. Cleanliness and strict attention to a properly run restaurant characterizes this famous spot in spite of the pressure of today's conditions, just as it was "before the war." The personality of the genial boniface to the infantry may make him as famous as the "Benny Haven's" of another day and age.

CPL. ROBERTSON

Fort M. P. Joins Army, Sees World

Join the Army and get to be a globe trotter is what Cpl. J. Adrain Robertson, formerly of Savannah, Tenn., now with the Corps of Military Police at Fort Benning, is advocating as a motto.

Cpl. Robertson has been in the Army for the past 10 years and during that time has served on the Mexican border, making frequent trips to Mexico City and visiting historic Central American spots; has served in China, the Philippines and Alaska and has managed to be sent to such spots as Death Valley, lowest spot in the country, on the one hand and to fly over Mt. McKinley, highest mountain in North America on the other.

During his service in China he was stationed at Tientsin, China, during the Japanese invasion of Northern China in 1937 and 1938. While there he attended a Chinese school, learning to speak some Chinese and also studying Spanish.

During his 10 years in the Army, he has served with the cavalry, field artillery, engineers, infantry and in the paratroops before being assigned to the Military Police.

Woman's Club

By LAURA M. BAILEY

A brilliant preview to the holiday season was enthusiastically received by a record attendance of members of the Woman's Club of Fort Benning, at the Polo Hunt Club last Monday afternoon, Mrs. John V. Denson, known as the "Christmas Lady" with a sparkling program, which will be reflected in the army homes during the Christmas season.

The greens and colorful atmosphere of the Polo Hunt Club did much to make this meeting a memorable one. The speaker's platform was backed with a blue tree dangling with silver stars. Doorways were distinctive with magnolia greens, realistic with glowing white lights to represent the buds of the magnolia flower. The fireplace was gay with a winking Santa Claus and massed greenery brightened with red candles in apple holders. Clever floodlights caught the sparkle of the silver, gold and gilt of the piles of ornamental assessories and decorations that illustrated the lecture with visable clarity.

Mrs. Denson was generous in her explanations and concise with her receipes and methods of achieving results. Simplicity of material was stressed. Her gay and bubbling personality awakened any lagging spirit that may have existed in the minds of the club members.

Generous too, was Mrs. Denson when she turned over the baby bond presented to her by Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley, to Mrs. Walter Scott Fulton to buy supplies for the Kit Bags for our service men on overseas duty. Mrs. Fulton had requested a Christmas donation of one dollar from each member of the Woman's Club for this vital need. The gift of the baby bond to Mrs. Denson was a gesture of appreciation from the Woman's Club to Mrs. Denson for her generosity in waiving her usual fee for her lecture. Mrs. Denson's gift to the Red Cross of the bond brought enthusiastic applause from the club members.

HOLIDAY TEA

The fasnaating and instructive lecture was closed with a holiday tea. The tea tables were festive with holiday decorations. Mrs. Denson's decorated tables were the center of much interest during the tea hour, as were the many decorative ideas heaped about the lecture platform. The red tarlton and Della Robia table was and effective contrast to white and silver table that glittered in the candlelight.

Officiating in the gracious art of pouring at the tea tables were: Mrs. R. W. Grove, Mrs. George P. Howell, Mrs. M. J. Gunner, Mrs. Sevier R. Tupper, Mrs. Julien Raymond and Mrs. John Hill.

The success of this outstanding meeting must be credited to the unstinted efforts of Mrs. Paul Hamilton, Mrs. H. C. Jones and Mrs. Syril E. Faine and their committees. They gave many hours of work in preparing the Polo Hunt Club for the meeting and stayed long after the meetings close to pack the mass of material used by Mrs. Denson in her lecture.

Mrs. A. M. Parsons, Mrs. P. H. Camp, Mrs. Harold Jess Lipscomb, Mrs. John Lynch, Mrs. G. G. Rielley, Mrs. Alfred McKinney, Mrs. Clarke Donnegan, Mrs. J. F. Gestering, Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden and Miss Jean Parsons, comprised the committee that can congratulate themselves on an outstanding and successful Christmas program given for the members of the Woman's Club of Fort Benning.

Mrs. Lawrence Murray, president of the Columbus Garden Club, graciously assisted Mrs. Denson during the lecture and contributed a large portion of her efforts to the success of the meeting.

The Book Reviews group of the Woman's Club will discuss books about the war at its next meeting to be held Monday, Dec. 14, at 2 p. m. in the ladies lounge of the Officers' Club. The highlight of the afternoon will be Mrs. Warren S. Lee's dramatic reading of cuttings from Edna St. Vincent Millay's "The Murder of Lidice."

Other reviews will be: "We're In This with Russia" by Carroll. Reviewed by Mrs. Mason Lucas.

"Sabotage" by Fayers and Kahn, reviewed by Mrs. McLean.

"The Last Time I Saw Paris" by Elliott, Mrs. Lane.

"Only the Stars are Neutral" by Quenton Reynolds, Mrs. Humphrey.

"Three Bamboos" by Standish, Mrs. Farrell.

"The Seventh Cross" by Anna Seghers, Mrs. Landaman.

Mrs. Mason Lucas is replacing Mrs. H. L. Beall as chairman of the Book Reviews group. Mrs. Beall is leaving Dec. 15 to join her husband at Fort Sam Houston.

We are glad that she won't be leaving us.

Hazel Phillips in the Publigation Section of the Adjutant General's Office at the Infantry School has a lovely voice and the personnel in that section certainly have a treat in store for them at the Christmas party. That is going to be some party from all I hear about it. I am sworn to secrecy until nearer Christmas time but then all will be told.

Where was Barbara when the lights went out today in the Record Section of the Infantry School? Well, she wasn't in the light you can bet on that. They heard her voice "Come get me," and they looked and they looked and they looked but nowhere could they find her. Finally they traced the voice to the dead file section in the attic and low and behold there she was!

Bubblin' Over' Plays Alabama Area Dec. 18

With plenty of surprises and unexpected novelties, plus comedy and rhythm, the United Service Organizations—Camp Shows Inc., unit "Bubblin' Over" will open in the Alabama area of Fort Benning, December 18. It is a hit stamped with excellent showmanship.

All talent is big-time and the whole show is well-routined and fast-paced. Proving this are the Del Rios, Monroe Brothers, Martin Brothers, Terry and Ralph Rio, and Dorothy Wenzel.

The Del Rios, two men and a very attractive girl partner, are one of the smartest acrobatic teams in the business. An extremely well-dressed act, the trio look like dancers when they come on stage and their original routine done in any easy, graceful, and slow-motion style, are as easy to watch as the suavest ballroom dancing. They have thrilled audiences from coast to coast in all the best theatres with their "New Trends In Motion" act and they are also an extremely popular supper club trio.

Those very funny and very well-known trampoline artists, the Monroe Brothers—one toothless, one not—are in "Bubblin' Oven." And these boys have lots of tricks as well as humor in their act. A saxaphone, a phonograph, and a number of zany juggling stunts are used by the Monroe Brothers for one purpose only; to get laughs. And do they get them!

Terry and Ralph Rio also keep the laughs bouncing over in the show. A man and woman duo, long established in the big-time, their fast gags and lively patter really click.

The Martin Brothers are two good men doing a still better marionette act. They were booked for "Bubblin' Over" direct from the Strand Theatre in New York.

Dorothy Wenzel, a young, attractive song and dance girl who works a lot of comedy into her numbers rounds out "Bubblin' Over." Dorothy has played all the big-time variety boards and has scored in many broadway musicals including Billy Rose's "Jumbo." She has entertained for Camp Shows Inc. both in this country and overseas and has worked into her act an audience participation routine which goes over solidly with the G. I.s.

"Bubblin' Over" will be at Fort Benning only one day and will play in the Alabama area.

Can You Spare A Room?

The Bayonet this week carries a story about the more than usual over-crowded housing conditions which will prevail over the Christmas holiday season. Since only a very limited number of military personnel can travel to their homes, it is only natural that families will want to come here over Christmas.

We have one suggestion which might help. Officers and non-commissioned officers on the post who have guest rooms can, if they wish, open these rooms for a few days and thus make a few more families happy. If you wish to do this, telephone the post billeting office, 3505, and register your name and address.

Private rooms are choked downtown and every available hotel room has been reserved long ago. But in spite of these warnings, wives and friends will continue to come. The best advice is to warn your families and friends not to come without a definite room reserved, but those families now on the post can help the situation by making a room available where it is possible.

Military Fairyland

Of course, everyone knows that the Infantry School has a just and legitimate claim to fame. It has for several reasons. Not the least is its ability to keep its students on their collective and individual toes. But it has another reason which some people might consider vastly more important. It can take things from its grab-bag and make them amusing. What's more, the amusing things serve to teach us in a very thorough way. We've been noting some of them—but we've decided that the tactics committees really pull them out of the bag in a flashing, colorful way.

For purposes of this panegyric, we'll forget all the diabolical things the tactics committees are able to do. They are the things we prefer to forgive (but not forget). For other purposes, we point to the sand table. More specifically ,to the sand table of Captain Westlake. eW are sure that there never has been a sand table of greater interest and greater color than Captain Westlake's. We went to the sand table demonstration (PW also) with some misgivings. Several of us thought that our hours in the first two or three grades were ample enough on sand tables and blocks. But then we remembered that blocks in the army have proven very disconcerting. (i. e. They appear on various and sundry IQ tests.) So we decided that this sand table might be a little grimmer, and perhaps another chapter in Jungle Jim-ology. So we sat down, just a bit apprehensive. (We might point out here to the doubting that apprehension is SOP for an Officer Candidate.) Then out came Captain Westlake. The sand table was already there. And we started to play.

First, we built a few hills. And then we put in a few roads and a railroad and a stream and (just for the fun of it) a tributary stream. All this was done to the accompaniment of as amazing bit of by-play as we've been privileged to hear The stories poured out as the sand poured out. One assisted the other so nicely that we weren't quite sure which was the more interesting.

There were about six or seven visiting parachutists present—and even those stalwarts were chuckling and definitely engrossed. Especially when the Captain started sprinkling the foliage —a bit of this for trees, a bit of that for wheat fields; a bit of white for cotton, a bit of the same for snow. A little GI trinket for a bridge, and a bit of 'GI sponge dipped in GI ink stuck on a GI paper clip for trees. It was enchanting. Another new world opened for us, one of many at the Infantry School. We even worked a tactical problem, forgot all about the GT approaching, and sprinkled along with the Captain, merrily adding hazards, planting riflemen, posting observers, and in general planning and making a reconnaissance.

The instruments for all this make-believe, the Captain pointed out, were very simple. Hitherto, we have always prepared for a jolt when we heard that phrase 'very simple.' We remember too well that simple display of motorized troop movements, of pulling trucks out by simple complexities like winches. Bu this turned out to be just that. Just a table—any size. A bag of sand—engineer's. A little roller which, when operated in the facile hand of the Captain, seemed most effective. A road maker—easily constructed. A railroad maker—done with the same ease. Shakers of green and yellow calsomine, an da bit of white chalk. We liked it. We also will use it. Indeed, we wish we had one all to ourselves, to haul around and pull out on tactics and just set up any kink of terrain. It is a School Solution that's neat—and that's more than we can say for just any old bag of sand in any old school.

Why The O. C. S.

Each graduate O. C. S. class is an expression of confidence that America has voiced in her men. There is a deeper significance to being an officer than just the wearing of bars and insignia. A real officer is a man to the fullest extent, a man of exemplary character, courage and understanding. Graduates should be everlastingly reminded that behind their being commissioned, that behind all the training given at Fort Benning, that behind every one of our united efforts lies a deadly earnestness to win this war at all costs.

The men who successfully complete the course should have engraven in their minds the picture of soldiers dying in Bataan, who gave their lives unselfishly, heroically and without pomp that America might live. Behind each turning gear, each furrowed acre, each drilled platoon lies spilled American blood. We must never forget that.

There is more to being an officer than just the basking in the sunshine of personal admiration and ambition. Men entrusted with this honor must feel that their work is only beginning, that the real test of their character is yet to come, and that in each one has been placed the duty to acquit himself nobly and fully whenever and wherever called upon, so that America will continue to live as the symbol of justice and freedom.

We are relying upon our officers to lead us to victory. This can only be done when each one of us performs his job with the feeling and determination that he is contributing to the mighty effort of a mighty people to liberate the world from tyranny.

Each American death on the battlefield is a fervent appeal to us, the living, to fight on and redouble our efforts in this titanic struggle for human rights. Each graduate officer candidate should take with him some of that glorious fervor and determination so unselfishly expressed by those who died for us, as a reminder, as a goad, urging him to spare no effort to prove that "they shall not have died in vain!"

A Design For Living

"This stand is run by a disabled World War Veteran" . . . The sign was swaying with the mild westerly wind . . . Resembling the aftermath of a storm, the dim-lighted street seemed quiet and dignified . . . The little newspaper stand was closing for the night; no more till to-morrow . . .

"Hey, Mister," I yelled, "got a Sun?" "Yeh, I think so; you're lucky, it's the last one." In answer to my thanks, he muttered an incoherent phrase, and proceeded to snap the lock. . . . His deliberate actions attracted my attention; the significance of the sign "Disabled World War Veteran" then occurred to me . . . He was blind.

"D'ya go my way?" he asked expectantly. . . . Tucking his arm under mine, we started to walk.

Suddenly the macabre stillness of the night was pierced by staccoto-like shots . . . My companion recoiled . . . It was only the backfiring of an auto . . . We resumed walking. . . . "I guess ya noticed how tense I became; that's an old hangover . . . Yeh, goes back a long time . . . Ya see I wuz Pvt. Joe Collins then." He looked at me knowingly as if sensing my inexperience . . . "Yup," he continued, "War? That wuz only another adventure." All the while he kept looking at me as if wondering whether I followed his faltering speech. At times, he sounded tired, then suddenly his face would light up with "Ya see, I owed a lot to this country . . . made some money . . . nice family . . . even a little home . . . What more could a man want . . ."

He paused and then . . . "The next month we went to the front. That same night my company, on advance control, wuz struck." He continued quietly, "I wuz the only one left. . . . Lemme tell ya son, I volunteered for this one, too, but it seems I couldn't fit in."

I think we both understood one another.

Our parting left me in a semi-stupor; the way home was punctuated by my steps cadence to Joe's "I couldn't fit in . . . couldn't fit in . . . fit in . . . fit in . . .

Almost one year has passed, but Joe Collins and his simple story have remained vivid memories. People like Joe have given us the confidence that with such undying patriotism, our ultimate victory is assured.

This same spirit has been the foundation of our Civilian Army and our Officer's Candidates Schools among which the Infantry School at Fort Benning is a splendid example. Here, almost daily, hundreds of husky, patriotic, young Americans are commissioned as well-trained combat leaders.

Joe's "I couldn't fit in" has been transformed into "we MUST fit in" . . . This has become our battle cry for the American Way which converts every available resource into a double-barreled cannon blasting its way to the preservation of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

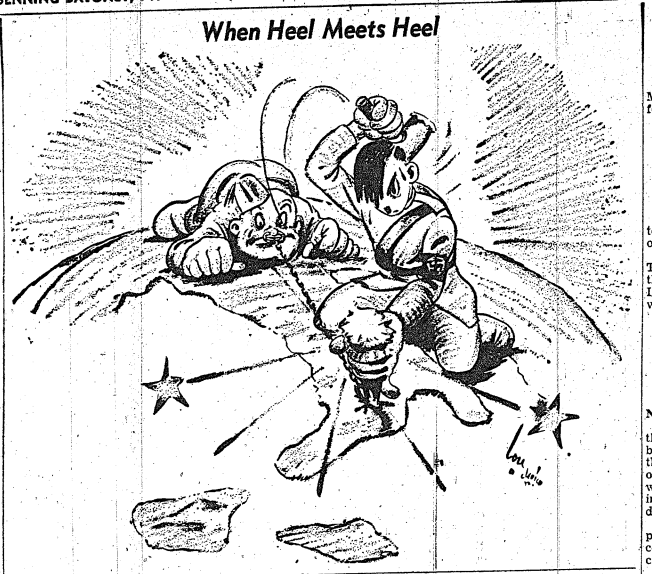
WHICH ONE?

A couple stepped into a church and were made one. Then they stepped into their car and the question was—"Which one?"

Husbands—do you live to get the best of your wife, or to bring out the best in her?

Wives—do you live to make your husband comfortable, or to make him great?

Money talks. To some it is the most eloquent speaker in the world. But even money says—"In God we trust." Worship of anything else is un-American.



Subversive forces don't wear tages,
Or boast a foreign label;
They work if folks like you and me
Don't do what we are able.

Golfers were once described as "men with the hoof-and-mouth disease." They hoofed it around all day and talked about it all night.

The same disease now seems to be spreading to holders of gas ration cards. But people are discovering again those evenings at home which save both gas and hoofing.

The word INDIVIDUALISTIC has five I's and only one U. The word UNITY has one I and one U. The U comes first.

When Heel Meets Heel

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

BY SGT TOM McDONALD

December the 7th has come and gone. A year of disaster, decision and the framework of victory has been ours. This year Americans can look forward to Christmas with zeal and confidence in the future. Perhaps the spirit and hope for what the New Year has to offer has prompted so many of Ft. Benning's yardbirds to write to Santa Claus.

But ol' Saint Nick is a very busy man this year. He's doing his best to do his duty on Guadalcanal, India, Europe and North Africa. From the frozen steppes of Alaska to the shores of Tripoli the reindeer are prancing. Santa remembers that the little boys whose stockings he used to fill are now carrying heavy packs of their own. Each and all are doing their part to help keep the Christmas spirit permanent.

Still Ol' Santa Claus isn't forgetting that we've got plenty of eager boys on duty over here too and not only will he answer each and every letter but he intends to see that each and every sender has a happy holiday.

The first letter on Saint Nick's hit parade is from T5 Elbeau Tanglefoot Cook, an orderly in Co.— of the ISSC.

Dear Santa Claus:

I am a good boy. I do a good turn daily in all four directions. I don't want much for Christmas. Just send me a list of what you've got and I will check off the items I want and send it back to you and you can bring them to me on Xmas eve.

By all means give Sgt. Eaton a new fountain pen so he won't be getting ink spots all over his shirt everytime he scratches himself. Our company clerk needs a new pair of pants, he has worn out the seat on his others.

Your devoted admirer,
E. T. Cook

Dear Nick:

How about a pair of dice with revolving "sevens" on the reverse side. My old pair are getting topheavy.

Herbert

Dear Santa;

I am going to borrow a stocking from my girl friend in the W. A. A. C.'s for Christmas eve. If you fill it too full, put all the surplus in my barracks bag with the rest of my treasures.

Always,
Cohen

Well, this is all for today in the way of letters but in closing I have again been forced by Colonel Swampwater to add a few of his original instructions.

1. Don't pay more than twice for those presents you are sending home to Mom and the girl friend.

2. Don't wait until December 24 to do your shopping.

3. Remember to eat, drink, and be merry through the holiday, but don't spoil someone else's fun by making him have to take time to carry you home.

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

This is one of the moments when I wish I could violently thrust my stint at the typewriter to one of those numerous individuals who are so certain they could write a Pulitzer Prize novel if they could find a little time to dash it off. Or maybe I should offer the chore to the shy one who thinks writing a column must be a thrilling and exciting job.

If sweat and agony of words drawn out one by one is thrilling, I'm a perfect splash of bright fireworks. If an ash tray of cigarette butts, a pile of gnawed apple cores, dictionary, Roget's "Thesaurus," Webster's "Dictionary of Synonyms," Wooley's "Handbook of Composition," papers, clippings, unintelligible notes, frayer carbon paper and a wild-eyed wooer of the elusive muse of creation, is a thrilling picture, I'm it.

The eternal question "why?" moaned by the desperate sounds weird in the quiet night hours. The blame must be placed squarely on a grade school teacher who recklessly prophesized honor and glory for the written word of a silly girl with a fatuous grin and tight braids. It's been a lovely retreat and dream world these visions of applauding multitude, the crush of autograph seakers, Hollywood and all the glitter of fame.

What harsh reality then to find oneself on a post the size of Fort Benning and lacking so much in news sense as to be unable to find one subject for a weekly column. I mean a printable subject. I can certainly find enough unprintable gossip but that would subject me to swift and thorough censure. That perhaps is the one fascination found in the business of being a reporter. The opportunity of observing the workings of a community and the strange and wonderous things that make up the pattern of daily living.

I haven't been entirely blind this week. I wish I could have been instrumental in some newsreel outfit taking a picture of one of the classes near the Post Exchange. At their ten-minute break they scrambled in the haste of eager school boys for a coke or ice cream at the Post Exchange fountain.

Now, I've thought the phrase "soldier boy" was rather silly expression to be used for the magnificent healthy specimens that make up the personnel of our armed forces. The phrase ran through my mind as I grinned at the wild scramble for sweets.

I should like that sour-faced reformer to see the picture. The "tch, tching" of her tongues as she accused our men of sinful fondness for spiritous liquors was insulting in the general application she used so freely. One look at those soldiers gulping cokes and spooning up ice cream out of a paper cup with satisfied relish should send her to the back yard for a full burial of her prohibition schemes.

Worried mothers should see the picture too. The cleanness and decency of these young men in their youthful enthusiasm would leave a thought that a country which could produce men like these can look with hope to the future.

Now I'll make my dash to the refrigerator for a coke and bring an end to labors that should be dripping with glamour, but aren't.

GHOST TOWNS

Chaplain Frank M. Thompson

You have read about ghost towns and no doubt visited some. Once they were full of life, flourishing, promising. Then something happened. Today they live in memory or lie in desolation. All of which is very bad.

However, there are other ruins which remind us of ghosts. Men who in days gone by were strong in mind and body, now wasted away, a shadow of their former selves. What happened to them is in store for all whose years lengthen. Time sees to that. This, too, is a matter for tears.

The most pathetic of all ruins, though are those brought about by moral disintegration, a spiritual collapse, the destruction of the qualities which make life wholesome and worth while.

Would you know where spirits do congregate, where you will find a real ghost town? It is found behind prison walls. There existence is emptied of all beautiful dreams, fond hopes. There the shades of the inmates wander forth to scenes of long ago where life was good and the future rich with promise. But something happened.

Ghosts also walk in more inviting places. There was the old man whose wealth had come by tactics none too ethical. As he sat musing over things, the angel of his better nature appeared to him in the form of a visitor, unannounced. Under the spell of the visitor's gracious words and kindly presence, his soul grew restless, his life seemed so cheap and shabby.

Then suddenly as he had come, the specter disappeared. The man ran to the door crying, "I didn't get your name."

Out of the darkness came a voice, "I am the man you might have been."

"Of all the sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these, it might have been."

THE PARATROOPER'S PRAYER

Now I lay me down to sleep.
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
Grant no other soldier take.
My shoes and socks before I wake.
For sharply at six o'clock each morn.
I listen to the buglar's corn.
So, Lord, please guard me in my slumber.
In this barracks made of lumber.

May no posts or bed springs break.
And let me fall before I wake.
Cause when I dream that I am falling.
I can always hear St. Peter calling.
So in the morning let me wake.
Dreaming of the jump's I'll make.
God, protect me in my dream's.
When I am far across the stream.

Grant the time will swiftly fly.
And we'll wipe out all them slant eyes.
When there's no more rising sun.
And we again can have our fun,
Then I'll return to my feather bed.
Where I long to rest my head.
Far away from all these scenes.
And the smell of half done beans.

Take me back into the land.
Where you don't eat your food with sand.
Where for sure each soldier knows
That the women wash their clothes.
God, thou knowest all our woes.
Help wipe out our yellow foes.
Take me back I'll promise then.
Never to get caught in the draft 'again!

THE MIGHTY WEAPON

Oh, worthy mothers of 20th century American might!
Victims again of whimful history's plight,
Hear this tribute to the part that is yours
In this game of human chess that men call wars.

Your great battle began the day he went away,
And it continues yet, all through the day
And through many hours of sleepless nights
Leaving scars, time's deadly work, years 'fore 'tis right.

In dawn's mist hugging the earth like a covering of gauze
In the thick of scarey night now scared too because
In every shell-hole, in every battle, on every front
You're with every fighting man, sharing in his brunt.

Every whining bomb that falls to wound the earth
Sends misery-laden shrapnel screaming for a berth.
And near or miles away in your heart it strikes to wrest
What little life remains therein since that day he left.

For every mother's son on scorched land or churning sea,
Who falls to preserve a heritage this right to be free,
You bleed great buckets of blood and blood that's not red;
Yes, it's purer still! It's the tears that you shed.

A soldier has but one life to give only once does he die:
But you die a million deaths, each time death's shadow walks by Oh, mothers, hear me out, you're front line soldiers all;
Grim fighters in gingham, ready at every call.

Wherever in God's world that sons fight sons
And this frightened earth trembles at the roar of big guns,
You bring the mightiest of war's weapons to bear,
And your only weapon is a silent prayer.

Day-Room Duds

By SGT. HARRY R. CHARD

"It's all off!" shouted Corporal Messkit, joining the nudist colony for the duration of his furlough.

That's a cute baby, you have there, but why is he so bow-legged?"

"Well, you know, the sergeant, before transferring, was in the cavalry."

Supply Sgt.: "You don't mean to tell me those shoes are worn out?"

Pvt. Rastus: "Nah, suh, sarge. They's not exactly wore out, but they is getting so thin that when I steps on a dime I can tell whether it's heads or tails."

Private Cluck says women are like a watch—they have pretty hands— pretty faces— good movements—but they're hard to regulate when they get out of order.

NEWS ITEM

Private Wetnose, disregarding the "knock before entering" sign, busted into the orderly room, told the top kick he wasn't running the outfit right, the duty roster was wrong, and that he would see him in hell before he pulled that Sunday K. P.

The deceased would have completed six years service in December. Burial will be in the post cemetery at 9:00 a. m.

"Sarge, how about a three-day pass for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday? Then I can leave here Saturday, noon."

'Scram, dogface! The army ain't issuing rubber passes that will stretch that far."

Soldier at circus: "Look! here's a monkey in a glass cage!"

Trainer: "Pardon me, soldier, but you're looking in a mirror."

Sergeant Snipes, back from a thirty-day furlough, reports that upon entering Hicksville and for the first time beholding the town's new police patrol, he was completely carried away.

"Gee, this steak is tough," the recruit exclaimed.

"That's not tough," the old-timer consoled. "Wait till you see the mess sergeant."

The Peeping Toms Club at Fort Nudist now has as its official theme song that appropriate ditty, "With My Eyes Wide Open."

"The mess is in a hell of a shape," the old man told his top kick. "The men are beginning to growl. I wish I could find a mess sergeant who doesn't drink, smoke, cuss, or run around with women. I wonder where I could dig one up."

"Sir, try the post cemetery."

"Darling, you're the seventh wonder of the world!"

"Oh yeah? Well, listen, soldier! Don't ever let me catch you out with the other six!"

THE BERRIES

"What's your name?" the recruiting clerk asked the first of three applicants standing in line.

"Newberry."

"Next?"

"Marberry."

Looking hard at the third, the pen-pusher cracked sarcastically, "Now, I suppose you're gonna tell me yours is razzberry, huh?"

Recruit Feathersby was walking post at night for the first time. He heard someone approaching in the gloom. Bringing his rifle to port arms, he yelled:

"Halt! Who's there?"

"Officer of the day!" came the reply.

For some time the O. D. waited to be advanced, but evidently the recruit had forgotten the procedure. At length:

"Are you going to keep me standing here at attention all night?" the O. D. called angrily.

No, sir," he recruit responded. "Stand at ease!"

I'm at the end of my rope, joshed the jaunty sergeant major as his five-cent stogie started burning his mustache.

Fined for drunkenness and lacking the money to pay the judge, the private crossfire wired his company commander

Roses are red.
Violets are pale;
Send me ten bucks
To get out of jail.

The irate officer replied;

Roses are red,
Violets are pink;
I'll send ten bucks
I don't think.

I hate the guy who Calls me Pal,
Who borrows my dough,
The n steals my gal.

Soldiers used to be shot at sunrise. . . . Some of them still are.

Of Bunkfatigueitis

By PVT. M. N. BOLNICK

Bunk Fatigue is a disease peculiar to the sleeping organs and because of its commonness and prevalence Tail Skid has made a survey of it with the following results:

This disease is not easy to understand or diagnose. There are no objective consequences as in seasickness. Nor is there pain as in appendicitis—or loss of appetite, dizziness or hot flashes—symptoms of a disturbed constitution. The medicos themselves are at a loss to explain it because the cause is so remote and their seasonal salt tablets are of no avail.

Sometimes soldiers pick it up from the climate, sometimes from reading the bulletin board and sometimes just from hearing the bugle. Bugle fatigue is one phase of bunk fatigue. Shortly after Reveille the fatiguee vaguely makes out something with three stripes hovering directly over him.

"Let's see something move, soldier."

The fatiguee mumbles three words or maybe only two.

"What's that?" yells 'three stripes,' which is meant for any other fatiguees nearby.

"Hey, you sorry sack, why don't you shack up somewheres and lemme lone . . . model T sergeant?"

"Yeh, that's clever, soldier, but remember you're now in the Army. P. D. Q., C. O. D., and KP.

"Er—what, oh, yes sarge . . . of right there . . . anything you say, sarge." And quicker than a soldier can dispose of his pay he's on the line.

The survey showed that on the whole, bunk fatigue doesn't affect stripes. Non-coms, when sober, are not given to the horizontal. Whether it is alcoholic content or whether just bucking for the extra stripes keep them immune could not be learned. But the survey showed that it is the special privilege of the lowly private, and the lower the private the more he is apt to be subject to it.

There are two schools of bunk fatigue. One enjoys the fatigue by a flat-on-back position with left forearm across the forehead and the right arm perpendicular with hand slightly open, just enough to pass a cake of soap in. The left leg is bent at the knee with foot straight on the bed and the right leg bent at knee but down on the bed.

The other school believes that the best position is on the side, with one leg hanging over the bed and feels that in this position the fatiguee cannot easily be disturbed.

Both schools find a whistle their greatest annoyance, and every fatiguee hopes for the day when the army's slogan will be "Every man to the last bunk."

Officer Candidate Cited By Gen. Pershing In 1919

Sgt. Donsife Saw Action In 5 Battles

Officer Candidate William A. Donsife, though still a young man, has had a long and interesting career with the armed forces of the United States. He started this career by enlisting in the 28th Infantry Division in 1917 and promptly underwent eight months of intensive training Camp Hancock in Augusta, Ga. Having completed this training he was sent to France, landing at Calais on April 3, 1918.

On his very first night on foreign soil the harbor of Calais was bombed by German Zeppelins. The American soldiers went outside smoking cigarettes, but there were promptly put out by British soldiers who even then were accustomed to air-raids. After two months more training the big day arrived and for the first time Donsife saw actual combat with the Germans in the famous battle of Chateau-Thierry. Then followed in rapid succession the Meuse-Argonne, Aimes-Oisne and the fifth German offensive in the Argonne Forest. Donsife, a private at this time, completed his World War One fighting about twenty miles from Metz when the Germans laid down their arms on that memorable date of November 11, 1918.

WRITTEN COMMENDATION

Sgt. Donsife was given a written commendation by General Pershing for his service to this country, at a Division Inspection held in Domremey, France, on the birthplace of Joan of Arc on March 18, 1919, and claims the distinction of having participated in five of the world's great battles.

Discharged from the Army in 1919, Donsife tried the Navy for the next few years, and excitement and adventure came his way again. He spent a year at the dangerous business of sweeping mines in the North Sea, and was an eye-witness to the surrender of the German fleet at Scapa-Flow, Scotland in 1919, being at the time a seaman aboard mine-sweeper number twenty-six, the U. S. S. Rail.

Returning to his first love, the Army, in 1924, Sgt. Donsife served another three years with the 11th Signal Battalion at Fort Hamilton. In 1938 he enlisted again and has been soldiering since that time. He rose rapidly to the rank of Technical Sergeant with 1st Infantry, quarters Company, 1st Infantry, and then Headquarters Company, 15th Infantry. Following this he was sent to Fort Benning, where he successfully led his class through the Enlisted Radio Operator's course here.

Sgt. Donsife applied for Officer's Candidate School and was accepted. He is at present attached to the 23rd Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment, and is studying to become an Officer in the Army he has served so well.

Soldiers Warned To Beware Of New Racket

Soldiers should make sure the folks back home know that he and he alone will carry on money dealings with them, says the War Department Bureau of Public Relations in exposing one of the current "rackets."

The department cites a letter from a soldier in the field who received a card from his mother asking if he had a chance to use the camera for which she had sent him money. The soldier, added the department, had not seen any camera money and started a quiet little investigation.

It seems that a soldier, posing as a friend of his, had visited his mother, told her all about her son and mentioned that he wanted money for a camera. The mother—like all mothers do—scraped up the money and sent it back by her son's "friend." Her son, of course, never got the money.

"Every soldier," says Washington, "should make it plain to his folks back home that he alone will conduct financial dealings with them."

10 Lieutenants Made Captains

The first lieutenants in the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division have been promoted to the rank of captain. The newly appointed officers are:

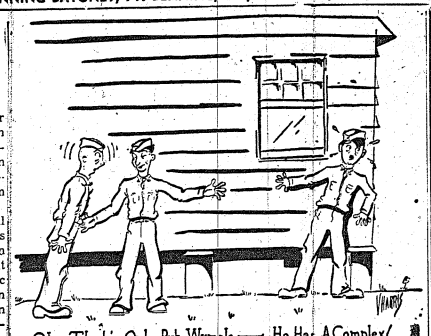
100 QM Soldiers Complete Course In Three R's

School days were ended for approximately one hundred men of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) last week when Colonel Ellis F. Altman, regimental commander, spoke to them at their final session.



For six months the Educational Division of the Georgia Works Progress Administration has been working along with this regiment in providing instruction in basic school subjects for certain men of the regiment who have been unable to secure sufficient fundamental education before coming into the army. Meeting four evenings a week, after days of routine duties, these soldiers came from every company within the regiment and were taught by civilian instructors furnished by the state WPA.

On the final night of their period of training, the men of the school heard Colonel Altman congratulate them on their willingness to improve themselves. "You have shown by your presence at this school," said the Colonel, "that you are interested in bettering yourselves and any man in my regiment who tries to improve himself will be rewarded for his efforts, as I am more interested in your desire to advance than in the grades you have made." With these words, the men who comprised the first Regimental School were released from further attendance—confident that their spare time had been put to good use.

NEW CLASS SLATED

Hardly had the records of these men been completed, when plans were made, qualification cards studied, and a roster drawn up of prospective students for the next class in the school. Checking on men who had reported to the regiment since the other class began, it was found that there were a sufficient number of soldiers in need of training to justify this new class. Consequently, on Thursday evening, December 3rd, another large group of men was enrolled in the school and immediately started learning the fundamentals of reading, writing, geography, spelling, and arithmetic.

Often spoken of, by Mrs. Juanita Black and Miss Shaw, supervisors of this state wide WPA Educational project, as being the best equipped and most cooperative school in their system for the training of colored soldiers, this extra activity of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) is typical of the many opportunities offered men in the organization.

Peeks at Pics

The two main features this week are "George Washington Slept Here" and "Once Upon A Honeymoon" . . . Both of them are top-notch stories with top-notch casts. . . . The first of them, "George Washington Slept Here," has been changed a bit from the original Broadway script . . . In the original show it was the husband who wanted to live in the country and falls in love with the little house, thus giving the wife all the gags, and sarcastic lines . . . But this had to be changed in order to have Benny as the funny man and give Sheridan the straight lines. So, in the movie version, it is the wife who yearns for the wide-open places . . . Some of the things happening on the set during the filming of "George ———" may have some effect on the life of Comedian Jack Benny. There was a time during the filming of one scene when a tree fell in the direction of Ann Sheridan . . . Jack became a hero by rushing to her aid and getting her out of the way just in time . . . But something else had to be sacrificed and that was his famous violin . . . It was crushed beyond repair.

The other show, "Once Upon A Honeymoon" is the story of two young people in the period of history before and after the invasion of France. . . . History, or what passes for a reasonable facsimile thereof, is the theme of the pic. Supporting the stars, Ginger Rogers and Cary Grant, are such assorted characters as Chamberlain, Daladier, Adolph Hitler, and a bit player, named Mussolini. Opening in the Vienna of 1938, it skips at the properly critical time, to such spots as Munich, Danzig, Norway, Latvia, Rotterdam, Denmark, Norway, Belgium, and ends in Paris as the Germans take over. The pic screens as if it were sired by a newsreel out of a radio broadcast . . . But don't let this fool you, it is still a comedy, even though it does have its dramatic points here and there.

A few of the scens behind the show up some very interesting facts . . . The three stars—Rogers, Grant, and McCarey—have more in common than their opinion in timing or how lines should be read. Each is a better-than-average piano player and singer, and there was always a rush to see who could get to those 88 keys first. McCarey has a repertoire of original tunes, never published, but well known to his friends. Most often requested is "Sitting On Your Patio," written by Leo years ago for the Duncan Sisters . . . Grant and Rogers discovered they harmonize well, and Rogers discovered that Grant dances well. Cary and Leo whip into a vaudeville routine they've worked up to the tune of "Lorelei" that's so good they could have headlined at the Palace any time. For an encore, the boys sing their own version of "The Strip Polka."

Fisk Singers Slated Dec. 15

Colored Chorus To Entertain For 5 Days

Once again the world-famous Fisk Jubilee Singers will bring sweet music to the soldiers of Fort Benning when they play a United Service Organization-Camp Shows engagement, for five days beginning Tuesday Dec. 15.

Acclaimed by numerous experts as the leading singers of Negro spirituals, this large ensemble of vocalists will present a program of the favorite songs of the South, with added novelties and specialties prepared for the amusement and entertainment of men in uniform.

The present group of Fisk Jubilee Singers, under the direction of Mrs. James A. Myers, sing with that harmony, rhythm and blending of tonal quality which belongs to the Fisk interpretation of the spirituals. They have enjoyed the praise of such renowned musicians as Walter Damrosch, Alma Gluck, and Roland Hayes, who was formerly a Fisk student and one of the Jubilee group.

Mrs. Myers has been director of the Jubilee Singers for 37 years. Beginning her education at Fisk University as a girl in the children's department, she learned to sing the spirituals from one of the original Jubilees and has become one of the nation's leading authorities on interpretation of these stirring folk songs of the Southland.

The group will play for five days at Fort Benning. The first two days will be spent at the Main Theatre. From there, they will go to Theatre No. 4 in the Harmony Church area for a one night stand. The last two nights will see them in Theatre No. 7 in the Sand Hill area, finishing up their stay at Fort Benning.

College By Mail Is Available For Soldiers

WASHINGTON — Correspondence courses are offered United States servicemen in the U. S. and overseas by 76 colleges under a plan sponsored by the War Department. Part of the cost is paid by the Government.

The courses are distributed under the auspices of the Army Institute, Madison, Wis. Both college and high school grade subjects are included.

Any man who has been in service for more than four months is eligible to enroll. Men of the Navy, Coast Guard and Marine Corps may subscribe to the courses through the Navy Registrar at the Army Institute.

The courses have been planned to increase earning power after discharge and to improve service efficiency and chances for promotion while in service.

Two services are offered. In addition to those courses made available by the various cooperating colleges, the Army Institute itself offers 64 courses.

Costs are low and vary according to specific courses. Each course taken under the Institute itself costs $2, which is paid by the enrollee. The Government will pay one half the text and tuition fee up to the amount of $20. Thus if a course costs more than $40 the Government's obligation is limited to $20.

Complete information on lists of courses, participating colleges, and enrollment may be obtained by writing the Institute and asking specific questions or requesting a catalog.

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Mr. Big of Benning football this fall was undoubtedly Roy Cestary, the great tailback and captain of the all-winning 124th Gators who closed their campaign with Sunday's resounding win over the 29th Infantry. If there ever was any doubt as to Cestary's position at the top of the heap, it was dispelled in that game before the popping eyes of some 8,500 soldier fans.

The big lad in the orange and blue moleskins turned on one of the most amazing performances that even old-timers had ever seen in Doughboy Stadium. And he was playing against an inspired Blue Devil team which knew that it had to stop Cestary in order to win a game that meant everything to them. In other words, "Cest" was a marked man. The heat was on him, but like the great competitor he is, the Gator G. I. came through magnificently.

He passed a soggy ball just as accurately as he ever hurled a dry one. His kicks were getting plenty of distance, and his control over the punts was worthy of high praise. Once or twice, they helped the Gators pick up valuable yardage. He ran the team, as he has all season, with much aplomb and cunning. He seemed to know where to strike and when and how.

And all this, mind you, was in addition to the fact that on Sunday, Cestary was just about as fine a running back as this writer has ever seen anywhere on college or pro gridirons—and that includes Tommy Harmon, Frank Reagan, Tuffy Leemans, Frank Sinkwich, Monk Gafford, and a host of others noted for their great ball-carrying ability.

Joe Livingston, the able sports editor of the Columbus Ledger who watched the fray from the press box, just about summed it up when he wrote that "as a tailback Cestary ranks among the best." The Locker Room Linguist also added that Cestary's passing reminded him of Dixie Howell, Alabama's great heaver a few years back, who was really tops in the art of flinging the pigskin.

When Cestary was reeling off those two sensational touchdown runs of 65 and 48 yards (one of which was called back), one couldn't help but think of how valuable he would have been for Notre Dame this year if he had been able to continue his schooling at the South Bend institution. Instead of being an outstanding contender for all-conference honors at Fort Benning right now, he might be pushing his home town rival, Frank Sinkwich, for All-American honors.

But Roy Cestary is playing a much bigger game than football these days. Right now, he is a first class private in Co. "H" of the 124th, but his consuming ambition at the moment is to be accepted for the officer candidate course right here at Benning's famous Infantry School. And we know, he'll realize it, too, because a man who can lead as Cestary does on the gridiron would be invaluable on the field of battle.

Cestary is not only a great footballer, but a grand fellow, too. He's modest, unassuming but not the "put on" bashful type. He's popular not only with his team-mates but with every last officer and enlisted man in the Gator regiment. He's also a religious boy, and has been a great volunteer helper for Lieut. Peter Quinn, popular Catholic chaplain of the 124th.

Pride and joy of the Gator star's life right now is the football heritage of his home town which he has carried on so admirably on Benning gridirons. He hails from Youngstown, Ohio, and points with pride to the fact that three of his home towners are almost sure bets for All-American this fall. Besides Sinkwich, Georgia's George Poschner and Notre Dame's Bob Dove, probably the nation's best ends, are Youngstown boys. Cestary played high school football against all three of them, as well as being on the same freshman and varsity squads with Dove during his two seasons at Notre Dame.

Roy played for Ursuline High, a Catholic school in Youngstown, and for three seasons was the star tailback. In his junior and senior years, he made the all-city teams. That was in the fall of 1937 and 1938. During those same years, Sinkwich and Poschner were the big stars at Chaney High, a larger public school in Youngstown.

Chaney beat Ursuline all three years, but Cestary recalls that the games were always close and hard fought. In the junior year, the present Gator great scored his team's touchdown, but an extra point beat his team, 7-6. In the final campaign in high school, it was none other than Sinkwich who tallied for Chaney to give them a 7-0 win. Roy had a chance to chat with his old high school rivals a couple weeks ago when Georgia played Auburn in Columbus.

After high school, Cestary went at once to Notre Dame, and was just one of the lads playing freshman ball in the fall of 1939. However, he was good enough to make the varsity squad in his sophomore year, and that was the crew that included Dove, Harry Wright, Murphy and all the other seniors of this fall's Fighting Irish eleven. That was Elmer Layden's last year as head coach at N. D., and it was also the season that Angelo Bertelli was the frosh star.

Circumstances forced Cestary to drop out of school in the spring of '41, and the next fall he entered Youngstown College in his home town. However, "Cest" had a chance to play only one game there, before Uncle Sam tapped him on the shoulder and summoned him into the "big" game. He eventually was sent to Fort Benning and assigned to the 124th which was a lucky day for Capt. Red Milton, Gator coach, and the rest of the regiment.

Cestary has captained the Gators all season and inspired by leading the way. Pictures of Sunday's game show him blocking just as hard for another ball carrier as they block for him. Right now, he's busy working out with the Gator court squad, and if he plays basketball like he does football, the orange and blue will be right in the thick of the pennant fight. He plays forward, and was on his high school varsity for three seasons. He's a fair shot, a good floor man, and there's no need to ask about his passing.

Great fellow, this Cestary. He's been the Frankie Sinkwich of Fort Benning this fall, and he can be on our All-American of great players anytime anywhere!

Cestary Stars As Gators Smash Devils In Final Conference Game Before 8,500

Dragons Close Grid Campaign With 13-0 Win

Linscott And Carney Score As 3rd Armd. Tops Drew Field

A surprisingly large crowd of more than 5,000 fans watched the powerful 3rd Armored Dragons of the Fort Benning Conference whip a signal corps team from Drew Field at Phillips Field in Tampa, Florida, last Sunday afternoon by a 13-0 count.

The minions of Capt. Leo Gregory closed out their first grid campaign with their third straight win as they scored once in the first period and again in the third. Meanwhile, the Dragon forward wall played great football to hold the Fliers to four first downs while their own backs were running up 14, mostly on passes.

LINSCOTT SCORES

Benning scored mid-way in the initial canto after a 34-yard aerial from Ralph Brett to End John Hamilton had carried to the six-yard line. On the very next play, flashy Tailback Nick Copra took the ball from center and tossed to Bob Linscott, sub quarterback, in the end zone for six points. Copra added the extra point from placement.

It took the Dragons most of the third period to set up their final tally, and then a blocked punt aided them. The punt was recovered by Jimmy Phipps on the Drew Field 29, and a roughing penalty against the home team pushed the 3rd Armored to the 14.

CARNEY BULLS OVER

Brett passed to Copra for another first down on the four-yard line, and then Big Chief Carney, the Indian fullback, took over for the Dragons and punched over the last stripe in two plays. Copra's placekick was blocked.

Drew's only serious threat came late in the final quarter, but a pass interception by Center Harry Baldon of the Dragons averted serious danger. If the game had lasted a minute longer, the Benning eleven might have scored again because they were on the one-yard stripe of the Tampa team when the final whistle blew.

Gator Quintet Will Meet ISSC Profs In Saturday Tussle

Two of the most potentially powerful quintets on the post will clash in a practice tilt Saturday night in the post gym at 7:30 o'clock when the 124th Gator courtmen oppose the Academic Regiment's Profs.

Coached by Lieut. Frank Shannon, the Profs have already played several warm-up tilts and won them from teams in Columbus such as Nehi Reds and Bibb Mills. This will be their first outing against a soldier five.

The Gators, who will be tutored this year by Lieutenants Bender and Jackson, expect to have a powerful quintet. They have been drilling for the past two weeks every afternoon in the Harmony Church sports arena, and the squad has already been cut to varsity size. Outstanding Gator prospects are Foster, Yearman, Strayer, Hodges, Bradley, Howell, Cestary and several others.

Devils Start Boxing League

By CORP. TOM MULVIHILL

Last Thursday night opened the fight season in the 29th Infantry, at the Recreation Hall. A crowd of better than 500 filled the small arena to witness some fancy slugging, and when the final bell rang the fans still wanted more. Most of the companies in the regiment participate in the boxing league, each Monday and Thursday evening.

The fastest fight of the evening was the T. K. O. by Thompson of G Company over Gresham of H Company. Thompson flew at his opponent with the fury of a wild cat, and all his blows were good, smashing thunderously over his man.

Another TKO was added to the attraction in a heavyweight battle between Oglesby of M Company, and Whittington of company F. Oglesby held off his attacker for two rounds, and in the final Whittington came back, and lait them in fast and furious.

In the main attraction of the evening, Abramowitz of 1st Bn. Hq. Co. won a decision over Womack of Service Company. The fight was a grudge match, and Womack was downed twice, but came back to stay the three rounds. Abramowitz is a well known fighter in Jersey, and fought the best of them, but the gamest man in the whole card was Womack to stand the beating.

Monday night December 7th, brought forth the second card in the league series. In the lightweight class Lee, of H Company, slugged his way to the decision over McDonald of F Company. Both were good boxers, but Lee had the edge over his man, for the hard rights and uppercuts that he managed to get in.

Morgan of G Company and Candalino of Company H, fought it out in the welterweights, but Candalino outpointed his man to take the decision.

Ace Back Runs, Passes For All Three Scores As 124th Wins, 21-7

In one of the greatest games ever played on the battle-scarred turf of historic Doughboy Stadium, the mighty Gator gridmen of the 124th Infantry rose to superb heights last Sunday to defeat a hard-fighting 29th Blue Devil eleven, 21-7, in the finale of the Fort Benning Conference.

A crowd of 8,500 screaming fans watched the bitter rivals battle, and saw the great Roy Cestary perform in All-American fashion as he led the charges of Capt. Red Milton to a smashing triumph over an inspired Two-Nine team.

RUNS 65 YARDS

Cestary turned in his greatest performance of the season for the champion Gators, scoring once himself on a thrilling 65-yard burst off-tackle, and heaving two passes for the other Gator tallies. The first touchdown pass to End Pete Peiton, was good for 16 yards, and the second was taken by Vernon Smith, speedy wingback, for a 33-yard scoring play.

The Gator tailback's greatest piece of individual work, however, was a 48-yard touchdown run in the final period that was nullified by a penalty. He crashed off-tackle, was apparently stopped, reversed his field twice, and miraculously evaded swarms of tacklers for a great run in vain.

Passing with a soggy ball, the former Notre Dame player did some exceptional aerial work that played a major part in earning the 124th its triumph. Cestary also did the punting, and several times executed quick kicks to pull the Orange and Blue out of danger.

29TH PLAYED WELL

The 29th Blue Devils went down, bloody but unbowed, turning in a magnificent performance all the way in a game that they probably would have won were it not for Cestary. Lieut. Joe Ashmore's charges in blue and white, seeking to salvage a disappointing season with a climax win, never gave up. They played hard, aggressive football and did themselves proud even in defeat. In first downs, they led the winners by a margin of ten to eight.

Gator fans were shocked at the very start, when the inspired Two-Niners drove 73 yards for a score in one and a half minutes after taking the opening kick-off. Joe Bryan's line smashes and Ed Hurley's passes sparked the drive with Hurley unleashing a beauty to Jim Hennessey, stellar right end, for a touchdown from the 24-yard line. Mike Hutchins, 29th captain, converted from placement and the crowd was in an uproar.

The 29th continued its great offensive after the kick-off and kept the Gators deep in their own territory for the rest of the first period. Early in the second canto, the Devils were on their way to another score and had reached the Gator 18 when a pass was intercepted in the end zone for a touchback. The ball came out to the twenty, and a holding penalty advanced it fifteen more yards for the Gators. Then Cestary ripped off, tackle, and raced 65 yards for the Gator machine's first tally. Nick Calos booted the conversion to knot the count.

PIETON SCORES ON PASS

Capt. Red Milton's title-winning Gators broke the deadlock less than a minute before the intermission when Cestary completed his fifth straight pass to Pieton for a 16-yard scoring effort. Crossing up the Devils, Calos also passed to Pieton for the extra point, and the Gators were out in front, 14-7 at half-time.

The Gators struck quickly early

Here are three prize shots which show the fast action in Sunday's rip-roaring struggle between the Gators and Devils on the soggy turf of Doughboy Stadium. In the top photo, opposing linemen can be seen blocking one another as Bill Chaney, 29th wingback, steps over tackle in the second period. The ball-carrier seems to be just waving away the Gators but they halted him after a two-yard gain. In the middle picture, is graphic evidence of the all-around ability of the great Cestary. He is shown here blocking out two Devils with one fell swoop as his team-mate Claude Hackney roars back 36 yards with a punt return. The blocked-out Two-Niners are Ed Hurley with the nose guard and Mark Simmons, sub end. In the shot alongside is a mugging scene snapped as Cestary tried to buck over tackle late in the game. Simmons of the Devils has a firm grasp on his head, and Reade Giraulo, Devil pivot, has him around the mid-section. It was one time that the Two-Niners managed to halt him completely.

Panthers Lose To Commandos In Title Game

In one of the year's most stunning upsets, the brand new Commando gridmen of the 2nd Student Training's Service Battalion upset the highly-touted Benning Panthers last Thursday night in the stadium by a 13-0 score to capture the colored championship of the post.

The Commandos, coached by Lieut. Bill Doctor, had trained only a short while for the climax tilt, but they were in tip-top shape, and gave the more experienced Panthers a battle right from the opening whistle.

COMMANDOS STRIKE

Until the final two minutes of play, however, the game was a scoreless deadlock, but then within the space of 55 seconds, the Commandos lived up to their name and struck ruthlessly for a pair of touchdowns to clinch the victory and the title.

The first score came after McClinton Greer, attempting to kick for the Panthers, had received a bad pass from center on fourth down and was trapped deep in his own territory. With only a short time remaining, the Commandos took to the air at once with Sululah Milow, a sub tailback, doing the heaving.

DENTLEY SCORES

Milow's first effort to Oliver Moody carried to the Panther five, and after one line Buck had failed, the same hurler passed to End Will Dentley in the end zone for a touchdown. Dentley made a thrilling catch, stealing the ball away from Panther defenders.

After the Commandos kicked off, the desperate Panthers went into the air and on the second play, Norman Bartley's long heave out into the flat zone was intercepted by Mack Younger, 2nd STR right half, who proceeded to race 41 yards untouched for a second six-pointer. This time, Dentley converted, and the Commandos had registered the upset of the year.

Both teams played hard, exciting football with the winners holding an edge in first downs of six to four. Dentley was the big star of the game, playing a grand game on defense for the Commandos as well as accounting for a lot of yardage on the receiving end of some fine passes by Milow and Pete Patterson.

Gators Receive League Trophy From General

Fulton Presents Loop Prize In Colorful Pre-Game Affair

Fort Benning's championship grid team, the 124th Gators, were signally honored Sunday before the kick-off of their final game with the 29th Infantry when they were awarded the title trophy by Brig. General Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of the post, in full view of the 8,500 spectators.

The brief, impressive ceremony took place just before the kick-off at one end of the soggy playing field. General Fulton was introduced by Lt. Co. Charles C. Finnegan, post athletic officer and head of the Fort Benning Athletic Association, which operated the conference.

In his remarks, General Fulton commended not only the players on all the teams in the league, but the fans as well for the splendid support they lent in making it the most highly successful football campaign in Benning history. He also lauded the winning Gators for their great play and the spirited backing they received from the men of their regiment.

The commanding general turned the handsome trophy over to Roy Cestary, star halfback and captain of the Gator eleven. Cestary in turn presented it to Col. John D. Hill, commanding officer of the 124th, on behalf of the football team.

Colonel Hill's pretty daughter, Moselle, a University of Alabama sophomore, was one of two girl sponsors of the Gator team who were presented with flowers at the close of the pre-game ceremonies. The other beauty was Sue Lauderdale, well-known Columbus radio singer and entertainer. The flowers were presented by Cestary and Claude Hackney, another backfield star on the 124th. Players of both the 29th and the 124th grouped around the principals during the presentation scene which was broadcast over the loud speaker system.

The halftime entertainment of high praise and gained by the Gators was deserving round after round of applause from the crowd. The soldier drill team, bearing rifles and nattily attired with white dress gloves was particularly impressive and treated the

Lanky End Tallies Twice In Final Night Game

Lieut. Johnny Cudmore's speedy 117th Infantry Breakers wound up their grid campaign Saturday night under the Doughboy Stadium mazdas with a convincing 27-7 conquest of the 55th Engineers in one of the year's most gruelling battles.

The Engineers, cellar-dwellers in the loop standings, showed surprisingly strong resistance and made the game a lot closer than the final score indicated. Two Breaker tallies came late in the fray as a result of a blocked kick and a pass interception, and turned the game into a rout.

BROWN SENSATIONAL

Lanky "Stbop" Brown, sensational left end, was the big star for the 117th, scoring two of the four Breaker tallies, and playing a whale of a game on defense. Another end was a stand-out for the Engineers. He was Whitey Gerrish, also a left flanker, who had the tough break of having an early touchdown called back for a penalty after he had made a miraculous catch of a pass in the end zone.

The Engineers threatened early, marching over 50 yards, before the penalty on their score nullified it and forced them back. A short while later, they were knocking on the door again when Mike Banaseak, stellar Breaker center, plucked a pass thrown by Fred King out of the air on the 18-yard line, and raced 82 yards for the first touchdown. The big pivot was convoyed most of the way by Blue and Gold blockers. Cudmore's conversion boosted the lead to seven points.

In the second period, the ultimate victors scored again when they unfurled a double-pass effort from the four-yard line with Billy Sturgill slipping the ball to Cot Presnell who faded back and heaved to End Bill Bowlin in the corner of the field for the tally. The Breakers held a 13-0 lead at intermission.

Led by their playing coach, Lieut. Carl Deane, ex-Duke blocker, the armored lads roared back in the third period to drive 68-yards for a tally. Deane and Fullback Johnny Krull paced the land attack, with Krull romping through a big hole at left tackle from the 12-yard line for the six-pointer.

BREAKER BLOCKS KICK

It was in the final canto that Brown came into his own. Early in the period, Deane dropped back to kick for the Engineers from his own 12, but the lanky Breaker end ripped through to block the punt, then scooped it up and dashed into pay dirt for a touchdown.

A few minutes later, John Cudmore, the Breaker coach who played 58 minutes of bang-up ball at right tackle, intercepted a 55th aerial on the 24-yard line. On the first play, Charley Pierce heaved a bulls-eye to Brown on the ten, and the great flankman went over for the final tally. Cudmore converted after both fourth period scores to account for the final figures of 27-7.

11th Armored "Tankers" Win Boxing Laurels

The winnah! And with that announcement went the cup to the 1st Battalion, 11th Armored Regiment's boxing team as they barely nosed out the Doughboys of the 54th Armored Infantry, 2nd Battalion, last Monday night in the 11th Regiment's recreational hall. The Tankers took three bouts to two with the last fight ending in a draw.

Pvt. Vincinzo Peluso of the 11th's Company "C" started the ball to rolling when he defeated Pvt. Charles Hibbitts of "E" Company of the 54th. Peluso had a very sharp left that bothered Hibbitts in the first and third rounds. Hibbitts came out strong in the second but Peluso toyed with him for awhile and knocked him down for the count of 8 in the middle of the round but just couldn't finish him off.

Pvt. Dale Fearing of the Doughboys tied up the affair in the second bout when he outpointed Pvt. Leslie Reynolds of "B" Company. Both fighters took a lot of punishment. Fearing's big advantage was his tremendous right that tried desperately to finish Reynolds when he had him on the ropes twice but couldn't deliver the killing blow.

Comedy was provided in the third bout due to the extreme sizes of the two boxers. T-5 James Ransom of the 11th looked like the giant trying to take care of "Little Jack," Pvt. Guido Satori of the 54th. It looked like a Mutt and Jeff affair as both fighters swung wildly with neither having much punch. Satori displayed the better footwork but was handicapped by his lack of height. Ransom won the bout to put the 11th in the lead.

DOUGHBOY K. O.'D

The only k. o. of the evening came in the second round of the 4th bout when Pfc. James Menetrey of the 11th, who by the way was one of the outstanding fighters of the evening, flattened his opponent, Pvt. Enrico Ciancione of the Doughboys in 32 seconds of the second round. Both fighters started strong and fast and really roughed it up much to the delight of the audience. The boys at the start were evenly matched as they exchanged sharp rights and lefts that were packed with plenty of zip. Menetrey slipped a sharp right through that caught Ciancione right on the button and he went down for the count of 8. The second round only lasted 32 seconds as Menetrey opened the round with a blistering right that floored his opponent for the 11th's third victory.

Pvt. John Hetlan of Hqs. Com. through with the second and last win for the 54th when he won a close decision from S-Sgt. Eugene Prasek of "B" Company of the 11th in a bout that brought out many boos and cat calls when the decision was announced. This bout featured two very big boys both displaying lots of power. Rights and lefts flew fast and furious but there were few connections. Once in the first round Hetlan let go one that caught Prasek on the chin and staggered him. In the second round both fighters were so eager to land punches that they missed with such swings that they lost their balance and bumped heads with both men sprawling on the canvas. In the third round both men were very tired and as the bell ended the match, Prasek leaning away from a blow caught one on the jaw and landed across the other side of the canvas.

MAIN BOUT

The main bout of the evening featured two heavyweights with Pvt. Andrew Gutknecht of the 11th's Company "A" and Pvt. John Kelley of the 54th's Company "E" going at it with blood in their eyes. Gutknecht with his south-paw punch flattened Kelley in the first round but you can't keep the Irish down and Kelley came back taking the offensive and staggered Gutknecht with hard lefts and rights to the head. Kelley was still mad as the second round opened and in 32 seconds of this round he flattened Gutknecht for the count of 6. Gutknecht was able to hold off his opponent because of his arm length and was waiting for the kill but Kelley was too spry and danced around the ring making Gutknecht come to him.

As the third round faded by the seconds, both men just stood up and battered one another to win a draw and give the cup to the 11th's 1st Battalion by the score of 3 to 2 with one draw.

Officials for the evening was M-Sgt. E. A. Frazier, Headquarters Company of Division Trains who acted as referee. Judges were T-5 Charles G. Fleshman, "A" Company of the Maintenance Battalion and T-5 Everett Peterson, Headquarters Company of the 3rd Armored Regiment. Pvt. Warren Shultz of Special Service office acted as timer.

fans to an unusual and precision-like performance.

Also, the Gators flooded the field with Halloween-like characters at intermission and graphically described the progress of the Gator team through the season. The Gator figure managed to bowl over all opponents except the Chattanooga Moccasin, and then having finished this job, all the team characters arose and converged on Hitler, Mussolini and Hirohito who had entered from one corner of the field. They literally knocked the stuffings out of that trio!

Pfc. Murray (Red) Kaplan, Co. "B" of the 29th, had the crowd in hysterics with his crazy antics as he dashed madly about the stadium dressed in a blue devil costume, swishing his tail at the Gator stands and stabbing his pitchfork into the air. When he led the Two-Nine on the grid, he also carried a suitcase, supposed to represent the Gators, and took great relish in stabbing that, also. Later, he summoned up courage, and managed to clamber aboard the truck hauling the real alligator mascot around the field. The crowd roared at the fun.

Adding plenty of interest on the Devil side of the field were the pretty girl cheer leaders "borrowed" from Central High in Phenix City. The capricious youngsters didn't get too much noise out of the soldiers but they did get plenty of attention with their swirling skirts and daring cartwheel turns.

* * *

The stadium presented an unusual sight for the game. Sawdust had been sprinkled all over the actual grid to help mop up the moisture from the overnight rains. The track was flooded, and looked like a moat between the field and the stands, except that there was no drawbridge. The goal posts were gaily decorated as were both stands with banneds and placards. The bands played, and the crowd roared, and it was the big show of the year, better than a three-ring circus.

Tigers Have 'Scrap' Dance

Miss Scrap Of '42 Is Crowned Queen

Any Bottles! Any Rags! Any Scrap! To the echoes of those cries, the Military Maids of Columbus brought their tin cans and scrap to Service Club No. 2 Thursday night, December 3 as the men of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division played hosts at a Scrap Drive Dance.

The highlight of the evening was the crowning of "Miss Scrap of 1942" with the honor going to the petite and vivacious Miss Tabby Sinelair of Columbus. The Queen is one of the most faithful of the Military Maids and since its organization has attended over one-hundred dances. Queen Tabby was attired in the regalia appropriate for the occasion. Tin cans hung from her skirts, all sorts of scrap covered her regal gown and her wand was a rusty piece of iron.

The Queen's party entered the main room of the Service Club led by Mrs. Hugh Roberts, head of the Military Maids, and her escort, Sgt. Saul Miller of the Artillery Command who carried the Queen's crown. Next in line came Miss Scrap of 1942 escorted by Cpl. George Pick of the 3rd Regiment and Pvt. John Lambur of Trains Headquarters Company. Train bearers, who shyly but proudly carried the green shower curtain that served as the train added much to the brilliancy of the affair, were Pvts. Gene Fitch and Harold Todd of Trains Headquarters Company.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS

Other members of the Queen's party were Mrs. Winifred H. Baker, Senior Hostess of the Service Club and her escort Sgt. Walter Kelsey of Division Headquarters Company and Miss Irene Warner, Junior Hostess with her escort, Cpl. Charles Merkel also of Division Headquarters Company.

Following the crowning of the Queen by Mrs. Roberts, the 10th Armored "Tigers" and the Military Maids formed for the grand march.

During the program a telegram was received from Mrs. Vivian Poulnot who was formerly a chaperon for the Military Maids and has now moved to another city. She expressed great regret that she could not be at the party and thanked the men of the division for the autographed plaque they gave her at the last dance at which she was guest of honor.

Music for the evenings dancing was furnished by the dance orchestra of the 11th Armored Regiment.

sports editor of the BAYONET.

The members of the Columbus-Fort Benning Football Officials Association are expected to attend the affair, first of its kind in recent years at the post. Besides the coaches, managers and players of the conference teams, the commanding officers of the six units will also be invited guests, as will several other Benning officials connected with football and the sports editors of the downtown papers, Tom Kinney and Joe Livingston.

The member teams of the first Fort Benning Football Conference, sponsored by the F. B. A. A., who will attend the affair represent the 124th Infantry, the 3rd Armored Regiment, the 117th Infantry, the 29th Infantry, the 11th Armored Regiment, and the 55th Engineer Battalion.

Riflemen Score Possible On Thousand-Inch Range

If Company B of the Supply Battalion depends on its rifle team for security in future campaigns, it has a good many nights of peaceful sleep in store.

This fact was forcefully brought to the attention of all entrants in the .22 Caliber Rifle Rapid Fire competition held recently at the 10th Armored Division's Gill Range when Company B's perfect score of ten points took the match from the opposing team.

On the team were First Sgt. Saint C. Burchett, Sgts. Carroll Hudson and Cecil Reynolds and Cpls. Gregory Meehan and Joseph Robertson.

Scores were based on the number of men who could group five shots in the area covered by the bullseye of the thousand inch "D" target in the prescribed time of 30 seconds (standing to prone), and 33 seconds (standing to kneeling), giving each team a possible ten points.

Close on the heels of Company B were three other match winners with eight points each. These teams who benefitted from a good many hours of the well known "dry run," were from Headquarters Company, 55th Armored Engineer Battalion; Company G, 3rd Armored Regiment; and Company H, 11th Armored Regiment.

TEAM MEMBERS

Team members from Headquarters Company, 55th Armored Engineer Battalion are 1st Sgt. James E. Ellis, Sgt. John R. Hill, Cpl. Jack Thornton, Pfc. James E. Blythe and Pvt. Roy Robinson.

Representing Company G, 3rd Armored, Regiment were S-Sgt. Harry Reese, Sgts. Robert Telfeyan and Harvey Harbaczewski and Cpls. James Beers and Armond Brunori.

Shooting for Company H, 11th AR were S-Sgt. James Bartlett, Sgts. Oval Amyx and John Williams, Cpl. Marvin Ragusa and Pfc. Jesse Pickerill.

Two more match winners were Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Armored Infantry Regiment with seven points; and Company A, Maintenance Battalion with six points.

Riflemen from Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Armored Infantry Regiment were Sgts. Orris Burch, William Matthess, John Lang, Edward Pettit and Cpl. Rollin Mings.

Company A, Maintenance Battalion's team members were Tech. Sgt. Marshall Combs, Sgts. Joe Mahaffey and K. E. Thompson and Cpls. Richard Pennington and C. R. Pea.

Prizes to the winning teams were framed photographs of the team for the Organization Day Room, a copy of the photograph and a two-day pass for each rifleman.

"Army Night" Jams Kirven's So Event Repeats Next Tues.

Hundreds of Fort Benning officers and enlisted men crowded Kirven's Dept. Store Tuesday on the occasion of "Army Night" when hostesses aided military personnel in selecting Christmas gifts.

Due to the crowd of the soldiers this week, Kirven's will celebrate a second "Army Night" next Tuesday in conjunction with "Stag Night" when the store will be open till 9 p. m. Also the hostesses will help shoppers and refreshments and cigarettes will be given soldiers.

ly in the third period to put the game on ice. Cestary's superb 64-yard punt rolled to the Devil one-yard stripe, and then after the 29th had kicked out, Cestary uncorked another perfect aerial, this time to fleet Vernon Smith, who scampered over for the final tally. Calos again converted to account for the final figures.

LATE THREATS

Both teams threatened several times later in the final half, but brilliant individual work prevented further scoring. Besides Cestary, Claude Hackney was a great back Sunday. His punt returns, which averaged almost 15 yards, were a big help to the winners. Shooting for Company H, 11th AR were S-Sgt. James Bartlett, Sgts. Oval Amyx and John Williams, Cpl. Marvin Ragusa and Pfc. Jesse Pickerill.

Two more match winners were Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Armored Infantry Regiment with seven points; and Company A, Maintenance Battalion with six points.

QM Regiment Singers Active

The 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), commanded by Col. Ellis F. Altman, is rapidly working out a well-organized musical program. Under the leadership of Chaplain Levi L. Stanmore, Lt. Robert C. Long, and Lt. Henry A. Talbert, various groups are making public appearances that are bringing credit to the regiment.

On Tuesday evening, December 1, Chaplain Stanmore was the guest speaker at one of the sessions of a Christian Worker's Conference being held at the African Baptist Church, in downtown Columbus. Furnishing the music for this occasion were 50 men from one of the companies in the regiment who sang hymns that were directed by Private Abraham Lee, Chaplain's Assistant. Special music was furnished by the sixteen voice regimental chorus.

Then, on Thursday evening, December 3, a quartet, composed of Sgts. Preston Johnson, David Smallwood, Corp. Hughey Davis, and Pvts. James Matthews, presented a 10 minute radio broadcast from Service Club No. 1, as a part of the daily "Fort Benning on the Air" feature.

Rounding out a busy week of singing engagements, the chorus sang two numbers on the "Army Hour" radio broadcast coming from the 11th Street Army Navy YMCA-USO, in Columbus, Georgia, on Sunday evening.

Continuing their moments of musical melodies, the chorus will again be heard in a broadcast Thursday evening, December 10, from the Colored Army-Navy USO Club, in Columbus.

Door-To-Door Mail Delivery To Be Instituted During Yule Season

100 Extra Clerks Added To Force, Postal Officer Says

Fort Benning postal officials, backs bent from the most tremendous surge of pre-Christmas mail in the post's history, went home after working hours dog-tired this week and sighed with understanding when they read in national magazines that the Army Postal Service was delivering upwards of 11,000,000 letters a week.

Then after eight hours of sleep they went back to work because a considerable portion of that weekly mail was pouring into mighty Fort Benning and it is the responsibility of the postal workers to make sure those letters, packages and cards from back home get into the hands of the soldiers—before Christmas.

To handle the tens of thousands of letters arriving daily at the huge post, civilian and military postal staffs are to be augmented by a small army of more than 100 soldiers and civilians "extras," many of whom are already at work as the mail grows in daily volume.

There will be 35 "extra" soldier postal-clerks working at the 29th Infantry Regiment's motor pool where postal authorities have established temporary quarters to handle the packages and mail overflowing from the Army post office in the old theater building and from the main postoffice. Twenty-two soldiers will augment the regular staff at the Army postoffice and another 40 extra soldiers and civilians will work at the main postoffice and in other places where they will be needed during the rush.

MAIL GROWING

"Evidently the folks back home are taking Washington's advice and mailing early, because our Christmas mail is growing larger daily," Captain Joseph Twohig, postal officer, declared this week in explaining preparations for handling the mail.

"What breaks our heart—and our backs though—is the fact that almost 15 per cent of the mail received by the Army postoffice is misdirected.

"Each mis-sent letter has to be re-routed by one of our men and that all takes time, sometimes five minutes, often longer. And Washington agencies sometimes are as bad as civilians in sending letters to the wrong post. Because military personnel is shifting constantly, keeping a correct mailing address is one of our chief problems," Captain Twohig added.

The captain announced that the tremendous influx of Christmas mail at Fort Benning had resulted in a decision to institute home delivery of mail during the Christmas season. The mail will be delivered to the doors of officers and enlisted men living on the post from about Dec. 12 until after Christmas. There is no home delivery usually because the volume of incoming mail does not warrant it, he said.

Postal officials expect the "peak" of Christmas mail will hit Fort Benning about Dec. 18 but with the augmented staff, officials are certain that every last letter and package will be where it belongs at Fort Benning by Christmas day.

Travel Suggestions Are Given Soldiers

The actions and conduct of men in uniform who are on a long journey make deep and unforgettable impressions on the civilians who share with them the discomforts of wartime rail travel.

Ten suggestions for traveling service men to follow are offered by Capt. T. C. Kahn, S. C., as a result of observations made while doing considerable traveling for the Government:

1. Don't drink before or while traveling. Nothing can give the Service a black eye faster than an intoxicated soldier.

2. Don't push in crowds, linger in dining cars or sit while ladies are standing. Chivalry and courtesy are always noticed and appreciated.

3. Don't be sloppy when you travel. Always be neat and in correct uniform.

4. Don't dirty seats, floors or station platforms with discarded papers and wrappers.

5. Don't chew gum vulgarly or noisily.

6. Don't smoke in cars not designated as smokers.

7. Don't be noisy or shout, especially when others want to sleep.

8. Treat officers with the same respect as you would at your post. Officers should always set the example of proper conduct.

9. Plan your trip and make all the necessary arrangements so you will not be a burden to others.

10. Do not discuss military matters or argue religion and politics with civilians. Your silence on military subjects will give them confidence in the Army.

Name Of Heroic Fort Soldier Is Sought

The grateful parents of a young Talbotton, Ga., lad are seeking the identity of a Fort Benning soldier who probably saved the child's life Sunday when he was attacked by a visious German police dog.

The child is George Jacob, Jr., age 4 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Jacob. The Benning soldier was passing through Talbotton when he saw the attack and heroically separated the dog from the youth.

The dog was killed and his head sent to Columbus to determine the possibility of rabies.

The soldier is being asked to communicate with the editors of the BAYONET at post headquarters.

29 Enlisted Men Advance

McGinty of Flint, Michigan and Alvin A. Jones of Thicket, Texas, promoted to technician fifth grade, and George W. Rickman of Waynesville, North Carolina who was raised to corporal.

"The Man" Play Starts Tonight

Soldier Actors Star In Columbus Show

Five enlisted men of Fort Benning will have important roles in the production by the Columbus Civic Theater of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" tonight, Friday and Saturday at the Chase Playhouse, 220 Tenth street, in Columbus.

Special rates to service men of the Fort will be in effect for the three nights of the play, it is announced. A flat price of 25 cents has been set for all men in uniform. Tickets will be available at the door of the theater, just as for a movie, it was announced.

The play is a comedy, written around a mythical visit by Alexander Woollcott, famed radio orator, lecturer, author and wit, to the home of a middle class couple in Mesalia, O. He falls on the doorstep, injuring his hip, and is forced to remain in the place for several weeks, much to the consternation of the townspeople and to the amusement of audiences.

CAST ASSURES HIT

Corp. Owen J. Remington will portray the part of Sheridan Whiteside, the visiting celebrity. Corp. Solomon Kleindorf will act the role of Bert Jefferson, the young newspaperman who falls in love with Maggie, Whiteside's secretary, thereby motivating the entire play. Pfc. George Siegal plays the role of the doctor and Corp. Bert Bristol has the role of the radio technician, Westcott. Private Ray Martin has the highly funny role of "Banjo," the movie ironic. All have had previous stage or acting experience in various parts of the country.

and able efforts of these three women that the patients at the Station Hospital will have a Christmas redolent with a home-like atmosphere. Many of the patients are away from home for the first time. Others will remember this Christmas in the hospital as their last holiday in this country before leaving for overseas service. It is certain that no one will be forgotten. The effort to personalize the gifts and make the entire hospital gala will mitigate a period, which might be filled with nostalgic hours for many of the patients.

85 CHRISTMAS TREES

It is planned to set up eighty-five Christmas trees in the hospital area. Each ward will have its individual tree, which will be trimmed by the convalescent patients, the nurse on duty in the ward and members of the Hospital and Recreation Staff. The trees in the wards of bed patients will be lighted. Patients in convalescent wards will have trimmed, but unlighted trees, since they are able to enjoy the huge trimmed and lighted tree that will grace one corner of the Recreation Hall.

The Recreation Hall will be festive with swags of greenery festooned between the windows, looped with large red bows. The pillars of the Recreation Hall will be transformed with Christmas trees. Balancing the large tree at the end of the hall will be a table decorated with a colorful centerpiece of fruits and vegetables, symbolical of the holiday feast days. Red candles will light the table and decorate the small wall brackets.

The library and lounge will also have a lighted Christmas tree and decorations of greenery and red bows. The foyer of the hall and the outside entrance of the building will be decorated with swags of looped greenery and red bows. The growing cedar tree outside the entrance will be gay with colored lights and provide a beacon for the festivities inside the building. Mrs. Bass Lewis, Mrs. H. G. Elliot and Mrs. D. A. Turner of the Grey Ladies Corps are responsible for the decorations.

SCHOOL CHILDREN BUSY

The school children, under the direction of the Junior Red Cross, have been busy for weeks making angels, bells, trees and miles of paper chains to decorate the eighty-five trees. The schools of Montgomery, Ala., Columbus and Fort Benning can rightly be credited with a tremendous portion of the effort that will make the hospital Christmas a colorful holiday. The Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts have been devoting their time to gathering pine cones and sweet gum balls for silvering into glittering ornaments.

Twenty-one hundred gifts have been purchased for the patients. One half of the number has been donated and wrapped by the Columbus United Garden Club. Mrs. Robert M. Lewis, president of that organization and a member of the Grey Ladies Corps, has been responsible for this generous portion of the Christmas effort. The Chaplains' Fund of Fort Benning contributed the money for the remaining half of the gifts. Mrs. W. M. Ives Jr., Mrs. H. W. Venable and Mrs. J. K. Coughlin were responsible for the purchase of these gifts. The Production Unit of the Red Cross, under the direction of Mrs. William Denton wrapped the gifts in colorful holiday wrappings.

Col. Edward A. Noyes, commanding officer of the Station Hospital, is prending the men and transportation for gathering the trees and greens on the reservation. He has also authorized the purchase of candy that will be placed in red tarlton stockings. The Chaplains' Fund will purchase oranges for the stocking and the Red Cross will have small gifts with which to stuff the traditional Christmas stocking. Col. Noyes has also accepted the responsibility of the many lights needed for the Christmas trees.

Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, director of Personnel at Fort Benning, has secured a portable recording, phonograph and radio machine and 500 discs for the hospital. This machine will be taken to the bedside of the very ill patients in order that they may record a message to their family. The discs will be mailed to arrive in time for Christmas.

CHRISTMAS TRAYS

The trays for the patients will be filled to overflowing with traditional holiday foods. Place cards for the individual trays and on the tables of the ambulatory patients will be held by small holders made by the boys in the manual arts department of the Fort Benning School.

A portion of the Recreation Hall will be set aside prior to Christmas for wrapping gifts patients have purchased. The Hospital and Recreation Staff will be on duty for this service. The Motor Corps of Fort Benning under the direction of Mrs. W. F. Pratt, has arranged a transportation program for taking hospital patients into Columbus for their Christmas shopping. Members of the Motor Corps will assist patients with their purchases and be fully responsible for the safety and well being of the patient during his shopping tour in town.

The Grey Ladies unit has given, and will continue to give many hours of their time to complete and round up the varied tasks in completing the final plans for a memorable and homelike Christmas for the men in our Army who must spend those days in the hospital. They are, in their efforts, continuing the traditions of service which has known continuous duty in our army hospitals since World War I.

Provost Marshal To Issue Permits To Sportsmen

Announcement was made this week at post headquarters that the 1942-43 hunting and fishing permits for the reservation are available for issue at the office of the provost marshal.

Permits will be issued only to officers, warrant officers, enlisted men and members of their immediate families or house guests who voluntarily pay the fee for the licenses.

There will be two classes of permits, resident and non-residents. Resident permits will be issued only to members of the local garrison. Non-resident permits will be issued only to house guests of officers, warrant officers and enlisted men who reside ordinarily more than 50 miles from the post or to active or retired military personnel not stationed at Fort Benning. The fee for the season for resident permits will be one dollar, for non-resident permits fifty cents for the day and one dollar and fifty cents for the season.

The Fort Benning Fish and Game Commission has also announced that no persons will be allowed to hunt or fish on the reservation without having in his possession a permit issued by the provost marshal. Hunting with fire-arms will be authorized on Wednesdays, Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, during the open season only.

Regulations have been printed for the convenience of military personnel or guests hunting and fishing on the reservation.

54th Infantry Has Party

Honors Promoted Officers, New Parents

Celebrating a dual occasion, commissioned men of the 54th Infantry made merry at an informal dinner-dance at the Division Officers' Club.

Although the party was arranged as a celebration in honor of recently promoted officers of the Regiment, participants took time off from the festivities to witness presentation of Baby Cups to parents of future "Soldiers and WAAC's."

Engraved cups were presented in names of Miles L. Standish, son of Major Miles L. Sandish, 1st Battalion commander; Patricia Ann Haskell, daughter of 1st Lieutenant Warren B. Haskell, Regimental S-2 and William Charles Murray, son of Captain William E. Murray, commanding Company I.

It was a dual observance for Captain Murray as he was one of the recently promoted officers.

Other officers in whose honor the party was held were Captains Franklin A. Bickford, Kenneth F. Frankenstein, Richard L. Gamwell, Curtis L. Hankins, Joseph N. Hopkins, Charles P. Hustead, Jr., John H. Mowen, George A. Renoux and Richard W. Ulrich.

Also, First Lts. Alfred C. Bedford, Arthur C. Brink, John C. Bush, Edward A. Carrigo, James C. Felice, Gordon Geiger, Warren C. Holehouse, Charles F. Heeran, Raymond Kalgren, Robert A. Kellman, John M. Killer, Walter H. Lare, James R. Long, Matthew A. Matson, Norris L. Watkins, Ray J. Yantis, Melvin L. Mason and George M. Seignious.

The party was arranged by Colonel William S. Eley, Regimental commander and Major Welson A. Butler, executive officer.

Sic Transit Gloria Sergeant Learns

The Pine-Bur, regimental newspaper of the 2nd Student Training Regiment, Infantry School, reports a great and stony silence from none other than the first sergeant of the 17th Company—Sgt. George Capoot. And here is why:

Seems that for ten weeks Sgt. Capoot had been playing "father," "mother" and "good friend" to 17th Company men as only a first on personalities and the company was asked to identify national figures and also men around the company area. One of the names to be identified was "Capoot" and here are some of the answers given in identifying "Capoot."

"General of the Air Corps of the United States and Great Britain."

"A battleship."

"A person to be found in the orderly room."

"Italian writer."

"American admiral."

"Don't know."

"A city."

"Leader of the fighting forces of Boers in Africa."

"An Indian leader."

Soldiers Are Church Goers

Average Weekly Attendance 10,000

Soldiers at Fort Benning attend religious services at a rate of more than 10,000 per week, according to figures compiled today by Lt. Colonel Frank M. Thompson, Post Chaplain.

In the 15 chapels on the post, masses and preaching services average 98 each week with weekly attendance of more than 10,000 while Sunday school services average eight, with an average attendance each week of 240, his figures show.

Church attendance in the entire Army during the average month runs well over 3,500,000, according to figures of the War Department, which also show that more than 62,000 services are held each month. Many of the services are held out of doors, with chaplains bringing the church services to soldiers in the field.

At Fort Benning, there are 33 Protestant chaplains, 11 Catholics and one Jewish chaplain, with 15 chapels being maintained. During the month of October, last month for which full figures were compiled, there were 74 weddings performed by the chaplains. They also attended 27 Infantry School graduation exercises, attended by 5,174 persons, held 1,314 conferences attended by 1,469 persons and paid 1,170 hospital visits to 6,286 persons. In addition, the chaplains investigated 717 welfare cases involving 732 persons, Chaplain Thompson's figures showed.

"The religious attendance at Fort Benning will compare most favorably with any Army post in the country and parents may be certain that their sons are being well taken care of in religious matters all over the Army," he said.

Art Winners Are Announced

Winners in the Art Contest sponsored by the Second Student Training Regiment were announced this week after the more than 100 original pieces entered by personnel of the regiment had been judged by Lt. Milton Bach of the Third Regiment and Lt. Frank Irvine of the Reproduction Plant.

First prize went to Officer Candidate Andrew Harbar for a water color of an army cabin he had painted while on duty in the Hawaiian Islands. The winner is a graduate of the New York Academy of Fine Arts and was a professional artist in private life.

An officer candidate also carried off second place, George W. Alsup, whose water color study of an army truck lumbering through rain and muddy roads provided the judges with quite a problem in picking. Alsup was also a professional artist.

Corporal Allyn Sternloff of Headquarters Company, a commercial artist by trade, captured third place with his pastel woodland scene, while fourth place went to Candidate Richard S. Cody, a graduate of Daton Art Institute and in civilian life an industrial designer for General Motors. Candidate Jack B. Hoff and Pfc. Edwin Kennedy, the later of Service Battalion, were both given honorable mention awards.

The best pieces submitted were exhibited at Service Club No. 3 and a future showing in Columbus is being arranged.

3rd STR Hoopsters Seek Games

Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the Third Student Training Regiment has 25 men trying out for its basketball team and all indications point to a crack outfit for the coming season.

The squad is composed of ex-high school and college players representing among them Duke, Notre Dame, Texas Christian and Alabama. Lt. W. H. Bass, well known basketball coach in Army circles is directing the team assisted by 1st. Sgt. William R. Crew, former Alabama star.

Any team interested in playing this Headquarters quint on the Post or in Columbus may make arrangements by calling Captain Richard Stock at Harmony church 256.

Fox Movietones, who shot the affair of Mussolini and Haile Selassie in Ethiopia, covered this invasion. Said he got some of best film of all time....Capt Will Cline, under orders from General Arnold, the AAF top man, chased alongside in a plane making footage with his movie camera which will go before the special audience of War Department brass for any ideas it may contain....Max, the jumping dog mascot, made his seventh jump, going out with Col. James M. Gavin, the 505th CO. He promptly went into action (Max, that is) and treed a stray cat....There were only two bummed ankles in about 300 jumps in terrain as tough as parachutists will ever run into.

CAPT. EASY THERE

Roy Crane, the Orlandoan who draws "Wash Tubbs" and the creator of the character, "Captain Easy", watched the display because he's about to get Easy either into a parachute or a glider for a part of his story....John Forney Rudy, the A. Rudy rode the lead plane....Lt. Hubert Van Kan, one-time society photog of the New York Daily News, and Corp. Rooms—living accommodations prior to their arrival.

So you think you can get a room in a hotel! Well, the three leading ones are already booked solid during the holidays.

Columbus families have made a united and desperate effort to meet the needs of ever increasing Fort Benning. Many families have made one or two rooms available, feeling that this is their patriotic duty, and that this can be their contribution to the war effort. Some have opened the studio couch in the living room, others have put up a cot in the hall, kitchen or back porch, and one Columbus woman told us she slept in the garage during the summer and let soldiers' visitors have her own bedroom.

We are reminded of several incidents which have occurred recently. There was one young mother and baby who stayed in five different places in one week during their visit here at the Thanksgiving season. In each place, the bed was available for only one night as it had been reserved for someone else the following day.

Recently the wives and children of two high-ranking officers paid them a surprise week-end visit. After exhausting the list of available rooms at USO-Travelers Aid they decided to go to nearby towns rather than sleep in their automobiles on a cold night.

CROWDED FACILITIES

One army wife recently told us she was going back home in order that her child might have a bath daily. Sixteen people were having to use one bath room.

We tried to persuade one lady in Columbus to reserve her room for an Officer Candidates' wife coming for the holidays. Her reply was that the room she had been renting to help in the situation belonged to her daughter in college. Of course, she would be at home for the holidays. What about a room in the home of her neighbor who had previously helped out? Her children still believe in Santa Claus. Christmas Eve night is sacred for only the immediate family and Santa Claus.

The USO Travelers Aid is unable to handle all personal requests for rooms, therefore are having to turn down requests by mail and telephone. If you were thinking of inviting your wife down—wait—be sure you have a room first.

New March Written For 117th Infantry

A new "117th Regimental March" has been written by Pfc. Albert De Vito, the "Break Through" outfit announces.

DeVito's musical background started in the eighth grade when he started learning "jazz piano." His first job was playing in the Washington St. School Orchestra. Upon entering high school he got in a dance band and started to do much dance work. By the time De Vito was a sophomore he was teaching piano and he had his own weekly radio shows. About this time he developed an interest in the classics and studied with one of the finest teachers in Connecticut, R. Augustus Lawson.

Upon graduating high school he attended Hartford Federal College taking a course in music. While at this college he was very popular with the students and he was also recognized for his musicianship. During his hard work in and out of school he was made president of the Hartford Federal College Music Club and Glee Club. A few months later he was made vice-president of the Pianoforte Club. While still here he wrote the school song and an orchestral composition entitled "September 1939". This composition describes the peace before the war, started and the hope for peace in a very short time.

In September, 1941, De Vito started classes at New York University, School of Education. While here he joined the musicians' union, and played with some fine musicians and orchestras.

After being at N. Y. U. for a short time he was asked to join Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, a national musical honorary fraternity.

On May 27, 1942, De Vito saw his first day in the army. Shipped from Ft. Devens to Ft. Jackson, he was put in a rifle company. While there he was in great demand as a pianist and organist. After a month of basic training, he was transferred to the 117th band, playing trumpet.

De Vito is still tooting a horn and arranging for the band. In his spare time he works in the Special Service Office.

Have any of you heard the 117th dance band yet? It was through the efforts of De Vito that this orchestra got started. It is very popular among officers and enlisted men.

Lew Riggs, thirty-two-year-old third baseman of the Brooklyn Dodgers, has enlisted in the Army Air Forces, and is now stationed at Ft. Myers, Fla.

Champ Marathoner Still Runs at Fort

Pvt. Barney Holds 265 Trophies, Medals

When anybody is needed to run errands in the 32nd Station Hospital unit—they have a soldier there who likes literally to run them.

He's Pvt. Albert Barney, who thinks nothing of running 26 miles at a clip, and regularly, rain or shine, dashes off 12 miles a day just to keep in condition.

And he comes up puffing less than the average soldier who has to get into condition to make a five-mile hike as part of his training.

Pvt. Barney holds the New England A. A. U. record for the six-mile run, established just this November 27, when he won from a field of 73 entrants at Waterbury, Conn., setting up a mark of 32 minutes and 11 seconds for the distance. He defeated the famed Johnny Kelley, who came in second, in setting this record.

It was back in 1930, when he was just 16, that Pvt. Barney who lives at 404 Wellington ave., Providence, R. I., took up marathon running. His father dared him to run against a well known local lad, promising a bicycle if he won. He won the bike, and has been winning races—and dozens of medals and trophies — ever since. He now has 92 major trophies and 173 medals.

12-MILE RECORD

Besides holding the six-mile record, he has set the 12-mile record of an hour and six minutes, breaking the mark set previously by Tarzan Brown, the great Indian marathoner.

He started his career running the mile, worked up to the five, then the 10, in preparation for really long distance work. It took him from 1930 to 1935 to prepare himself, but now he thinks nothing of doing 10 or 15 miles. He held the Canadian 26-mile championship in 1937, winning it at New Germany, Nova Scotia, in 2 hours and 41 minutes.

Pvt. Barney served in the 243rd Coast Artillery from 1929 to 1932, then worked as a fireman at Bradley Field, Windsor Locks, Connecticut before entering the Army June 21, 1942. Now he keeps in condition by running continually.

30 Medical Dept. Soldiers Earn Commissions

The Detachment, Medical Department, now boasts of almost 30 former members who this year have become commissioned officers in practically all of the arms and services of the army.

This week, 2nd. Lt. David C. Burke, former first sergeant of the Detachment, received his commission at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., completing the course in eight weeks. Lt. Burke returned to Fort Benning before going back to Carlisle Barracks for further study.

Lt. Burke was graduated from Otterbine College in Ohio where he played varsity football and track, captaining both teams in his senior year. He then began a graduate study of medicine at the University of Alabama and the University of Tennessee Medical School.

When war was declared, Lt. Burke was called into active service from the Ohio State National Guard where he was first sergeant for the clearing company of the 151st Medical Battalion.

New Orders Curb Conduct

Officers, Non-Coms Charged With Job

A policy of close cooperation between the War and Navy departments in maintaining orderly conduct among members of all of the armored forces has been reached, according to word from Washington this week.

The departments have agreed that members of the Army military police, members of the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard shore patrols, and officers, noncommissioned officers and petty officers of the services shall be authorized and directed to take corrective measures, including arrest if necessary, in the case of any member of the armored forces committing a breach of the peace, disorderly conduct or any other offense which reflects discredit upon the service.

This announcement will be read to the personnel of all commands on or before Dec 15 and, in addition, will be displayed on bulletin boards for a period of 30 days. The order will become effective on Dec. 15.

TACT URGED

Instructions from Washington regarding the order stressed the fact that personnel exercising authority under the provisions do so with judgment and tact and advised that arrests should not be made where other corrective measures will suffice. Personnel arrested will be returned to the jurisdiction of their respective service as soon as practicable.

Military police officials at Fort Benning said this week that Army military police have always had the authority to make arrests when necessary and that it has always been the obligation of officers and noncommissioned officers to maintain orderly conduct and report violations of regulations. Officials at Fort Benning interpreted the new instructions as signifying closer cooperation between the Army and Navy with the military police branches of both departments and the commissioned and noncommissioned personnel having authority to maintain orderly conduct among personnel of all of the armed forces.

The details for effecting the new procedure will be worked out jointly by the military and naval authorities in the various areas concerned.

11th Armored Wins Again

The 11th Armored Regiment's Personnel quiz team pulled another "believe it or not" last week at Service Club No. 2 when they came from behind in the closing minutes of the weekly quiz contest held every Wednesday night to tie the 90th Reconnaissance quiz team with each team netting 309 points. This is the second time in three weeks that the 11th Team has had to come from behind to ward off defeat and win the right to compete again. Following a rest while a few of the officers teams compete, these same two teams will return and try to break the tie.

Members of the 11th's team were Cpls. Joe Sullivan, Fred Boylan, Morse K. Johnson and Sgt. Walter Coss. The team representing the 90th Reconnaissance was made up of Pfc's. Harry Hosack, McLeod Ross, Gerson Fishman and Sgt. Gerald Wilbur.

Corporal James E. Frye of the public relations office served as master of ceremonies. Sgt. Jerry Tonkens acted as timer and Pvt. Gene Lambur was scorer.

28 Shavetails Change Bars

Twenty-eight Second Lieutenants in the 10th Armored Division have been promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. The newly promoted officers are:

First Lts. David Anderson, Alfred C. Bedford, Jr., Edmond B. Bradford, Arthur O. Brink, John C. Bush, Edward A. Carrigo, Jr., Americo O. Costantino, Edward M. Donahue, William Dubey, James C. Felice, Jack P. Galvin, Gordon Geiger, Raymond N. Hebert, Charles F. Heeran, Walton K. Holehouse, Raymond Kalgren, Robert A. Kellman, Joseph R. Kern, John M. Kidker, Albert O. Kreigsman, Jr., Walter H. Lare, James R. Long, Kenneth H. Mason, Melvin I. Mason, Mathew A. Matson, Jr., Harold H. Miller, Morris L. Watkins and Ray J. Yantis.

When leaving your observation position always go by a route different from which you came. The enemy may have discovered your tracks and be waiting for your return.

Officers Are TIS Guests

The director and assistant director of physical training at the Second WAAC Training Center at Daytona Beach, Fla. are unofficial visitors at The Infantry School today, the guests of Brigadier General George H. Weems, assistant commandant here.

The two WAAC officers, who are on three day leave from their Florida station, are Third Officer Catherine Weems and Third Officer Virginia Clampitte. The former is the niece of General Weems.

Lt. Clampitte is a graduate of the first WAAC class at Fort Des Moines, Iowa and received her commission on July 20. A resident of Houston, Tex., she attended Texas University and was a teacher of physical education at a Houston High School before entering the service. She was stationed at Fort Des Moines before being assigned to the 2nd WAAC Training Center as physical training director.

Lt. Weems comes from Dickson, Tenn. She received a bachelor of science degree in physical education from Peabody College in Nashville, Tennessee and a masters degree from Louisiana State University. She was formerly dance director at Northwestern Missouri State Teachers College, and was personnel director of Du Barry Success School in New York City before entering service. She was a member of the third class at Fort Des Moines, graduating September 26.

The two officers express a keen interest and high regard for The Infantry School because most of their instructors at the WAAC Training Centers were sent from here. Their program was set up by their assistant commandant, Col. A. C. Morgan who was sent from The Infantry School.

MIGHT HAVE BEEN

FT. DEVENS, Mass.—Pvt. Malcolm Dixon approached his first sergeant and went through the lines of requesting a one-day pass. The absent-minded sergeant who had been transferred from Texas shortly before, wrote Ft. Worth as the destination and dated the paper from May 10, 1942, to May 11, 1943. The error was corrected before Pvt. Dixon left the Post.

Army May Send Enlisted Men To College

Joining the Army may mean a college education for a lot of enlisted men according to proposals now under study in Washington.

Discussing plans to select qualified enlisted men and send them to college in certain courses such as medicine, pre-medicine and science, Rep. J. J. Sparkman of Alabama, a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs, outlined tentative plans in a report to the House prepared for him by the War Department.

Sparkman's report was as follows:

"The War Department plans to send qualified men to college as soldiers on an active-duty status in such numbers as it deems necessary for the training of specialists or individuals trained at the college level for Army requirements.

"I have questioned, stopping right there, the limitations for Army requirements because I felt that essential needs should be taken care of. So I am told this in addition to that:

"In determining the number of men that the Army will send to college, we recognize that there will be a continuing need for some men with this type of training to meet civilian and industrial requirements. The Army plans, therefore, to increase the number of men to train for its own requirements by a predetermined percentage in order that it will be possible to assist in relieving critical shortages of men with college training by the release of a limited number from the Army.

PREREQUISITES

"Men will be selected for training under this program on the basis of previous education, results of scholastic aptitude and achievement tests, and under tests of leadership and aptitude for military service as demonstrated during a period of service in the Army. Selection will be made from the Army at large and it will be accomplished by means of a system similar to that now in effect for the selection of candidates for the officer candidate schools. Any soldier may compete without regard to his financial status. Preference will be given to soldiers in the younger age group because of their more recent school experience and of the longer potential value to the Army. The Army will maintain those selected while at college. They will be under military control and the Army will prescribe the courses to be pursued. The courses will vary in length from 9 to 27 months and in the case of medical students will probably extend for a longer period. The principal subjects will be medical and premedical, engineering, and science. It is expected that this program will be initiated about February 1, 1943."

2nd STR Is Heavy War Bond Buyer

November Sales Total $47,575 To Set Record

The Second Student Training Regiment set up a smashing record for other Officer Candidate outfits to shoot at during the month of November when bond sales in the Regiment hit a total of $47,575.75.

Included in the figure on total sales were cash sales of bonds and stamps and new pay reservations made out for the purchase of bonds.

And while the figure itself is startling enough, some of the facts behind the figure are even more unusual.

The Third Battalion of the Regiment did something no other Officer Candidate battalion on the post has done before by subscribing all six companies in the battalion 100 per cent for bonds. This battalion turned in $25,147.75 of the Regiment's total sales.

Five of its companies have 100 per cent of their personnel signed on the dotted line on pay reservations, while the sixth company is with cash sales to go over the top. The battalion is commanded by Lt. Col. Frederick E. Johnson, while Lt. Edward G. Schmitt is the battalion bond officer.

COSTLY STUNT

In one of the companies, the 15th, officers of the company and the first sergeant at one point offered to buy themselves 10 per cent of the total bonds bought by the company. Their little promotion stunt cost them $250. A bond sales board was posted at battalion headquarters and new returns were telephoned in almost hourly by the companies.

Meanwhile the Fourth Battalion was leading the way in cash bond sales in the Regiment, and turned in a total of $10,778.50 in greenbacks. The Fourth is commanded by Lt. Col. Paul E. Jacobs.

Two companies in the Regiment surpassed the record claimed several weeks ago by the 9th Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment in monthy company bond sales.

The 16th Company was tops in the Regiment and set up a new all-time high among O. C. outfits at Benning with total sales of $5,222.75, while the 13th Company was close behind with $5,103.50.

The Second Regiment now has 10 companies who have hit the 100 per cent mark in sales. There are the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th companies of the Third Battalion, the 19th, 21st and 23rd companies of the Fourth Battalion, and the 31st Company of the Fifth Battalion.

May Curtail Phone Calls

Personnel Requested To Make Voluntary Cuts Or Else—

Official action restricting telephone calls, both local and long distance is in prospect at Fort Benning unless military and civilian personnel take voluntary steps immediately to curtail unnecessary calls.

Military authorities at Fort Benning this week reiterated two previous warnings that the situation is serious and cautioned everyone at Fort Benning "to think twice" before they make that next telephone call and to ask themselves "is it necessary."

Their appeal was emphasized by the recent fire in Service Club 1 which deprived military personnel of the use of a long distance switchboard and eight telephone booths at the club. Until larger quarter can be found for the switchboard, three temporary self-serving booths have been installed in the gym on the post proper, telephone officials announced, but even with the reinstallation of more booths facilities will continue to be taxed by the number of calls.

In commenting on the need for voluntary cooperation of personnel in limiting telephone calls, military authorities said "there is an urgent need now for curtailment in telephone usage, both local and long distance.

"The operators are seriously overloaded and the service is deteriorating. Equipment is not readily obtainable to remedy a situation which is developing due to the excessive use of telephones.

"Therefore the number of calls placed and the length of conversations must materially be reduced immediately.

"Consider the need for each call and make only those calls which are essentially necessary. Be brief so that the lines may be kept open for urgent messages."

FIVE PROMOTED

Staff Sgt. Leonard J. Witt of the 124th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, has been promoted to 1st sergeant and four other enlisted men of the same organization were advanced to higher grades, according to an announcement by post headquarters.

Tech 5th Gr. Farris H. Davis made sergeant and Pfc. James D. Faust was promoted to technician 4th grade. Pfcs. James E. Huddleston and Jimmy W. Kellet were advanced to technician 5th grade.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

The nation girded for its second year of war this week; watched the progress of global warfare, and learned that by the end of December 1,000,000 Yankees will be fighting on foreign soil.

"Girding for a second year of war" meant a lot of things to the U. S. It meant that more and more common foodstuffs, such as sugar, coffee, butter, those kind of things, were disappearing from the shelves of the nation's groceries. It meant chillier nights intens of thousands of American homes because of the lack of fuel oil. Mileage rationing boards across the country checked closer and closer on the gas and rubber being used by the automobile owners and at Fort Benning speeders arrested by the military police are having their gas rationing cards withdrawn for periods of from two weeks to a month. But Americans pretty generally accepted rationing as necessary for total victory and read forecasts of even tighter rationing to come with little "griping."

The sacrifices were for a definite purpose, a purpose reflected from the world battlefronts. On this giant "checkerboard" it was the Allies move this week and they did not hesitate. In North Africa, the British Eighth Army was on the move again, relentlessly pursuing Rommel and his men who for some reason put up only a token resistance at El Agheila, where some of the Germans strongest defense lines were evacuated by the Germans soon after the British drive resumed in force.

A little farther west along the "board" Americans and British driving on Tunis and Bizerte had successfully forestalled vicious German counterattacks and were using heavy bombing attacks as a prelude to another assault on the Nazis—an assault timed to coincide with the British drive on Rommel.

Russians and Germans were deadlocked in the second terrific battle of the world this week high up on the steppes of Russia where the temperature was dropping and the snows were drifting higher and higher. The Nazis had been able to keep their tanks in action this early winter because of milder-than-usual weather and consequently the Red counter-attack had been somewhat slowed. But the Russians, determined to annihilate the Germans on the Stalingrad front this winter, were biding their time, waiting for the real Russian winter weather to set in before attacking the frozen Germans anew.

Chief news from the Pacific area came from New Guinea early this week where General MacArthur's American and Australian forces captured Buna, important Japanese outpost this week, and then defended it against Nip counter-attacks. Capture of Buna

Children's Yule Party Slated December 18

The annual Children's Christmas Party will be held in the Main Theatre at 2:00 p. m., Friday, December 18. All army children, including children of the Harmony Church Area, 10th Armored Division and the Main Post are invited to attend.

The program will open with a motion picture show followed by a Christmas Pageant, "The Nativity," given by the Post School, under the direction of Mrs. William T. Ryder, which will include the following cast: Gabriel: Jean Werrell, Mary: Katherine Helfer, Joseph; Billy Jackson, Angel; Barbara Gavin, Shepherds; Red Youngflesh, Mike Heraty, Bob Smith, the Three Wise Men; Bill McKenny, Myron Leedy, Bob Rhyan. 'Hellzapoppin' Is Slated With Broadway Players

Rip-Roaring Comedy To Ring Out Old, Ring In New Year

Ending the old year with a bang and bringing the new year in with a roar will be Olsen and Johnsons' "Hellzapoppin," on tour for USO-Camp Show Inc., booked at Fort Benning for five days, beginning Dec. 29 at the Main Theatre.

The show will open for two days at the Main theater on the post proper, Dec. 31 will be the day for the men of the Sand Hill area in Theatre No. 7. The last two days will be spent at Theatre No. 4 in the Harmony Church area.

No musical production in the history of the American theatre has aroused so much interest and hilarity as this mad entertainment. In New York it grossed over five million dollars and played there to more than two million customers. Celebrities in every walk of life have screamed at the antics of its comedians. Many of them have danced the "Boomps-a-Daisy" in the aisles and returned time and time again, and all have paid tribute to the amazing character of this show.

Brought to Fort Benning through the efforts of the Special Service office, "Hellzapoppin" defies description, but for the sakes of brevity it is called "a screamlined revue," but it is neither a revue nor a musical comedy, nor opera, nor vaudeville, nor circus, nor drama, nor farce, but it is a little bit of each.

Fun spills over the footlights into the audience, and rib-tickling antics are apt to occur anywhere, in the aisles, in the orchestra, or even in the lobby. Firecrackers, pistols, animals, the largest and widest collection of props ever assembled for one show, laughable acts and beautiful girls are all happily intermingled in this unbeatable, ever-popping show.

The company of "Hellzapoppin" will number 31 persons, headed by Milton Douglas and Company, Jack Leonard, Ben Dova, the Emarald Sisters, the Three Grace Notes, Charles De Haven, Maxine Turner, Claire Louise Evans, Harry Hines and Billy Potter, and the 16 Roxyettes.

6 Post Units Are Merged

Capt. Cook Heads Supply Detachment

Six important station complement units at Fort Benning, all members of the Fourth Service Command, have been merged to form a new Supply Detachment. The change went into effect this morning and the new unit will be commanded by Capt. Walter H. Cook, a veteran officer formerly with the Quartermaster Corps.

The units which belong to the supply detachment were formerly known as the Chemical Warfare Detachment, Engineer Detachment, Detachment Ordnance Department, Detachment Quartermaster Corps, Detachment Signal Corps, and the colored quartermaster detachment. The first five will comprise section one of the new unit, while the colored unit will be section two.

The Supply Detachment will provide the enlisted strength to operate the various activities of the newly-created Supply Division of post headquarters, which is headed by Col. Stephen B. Massey, formerly post quartermaster. The unit will be billeted in the permanent barracks formerly occupied by the quartermaster detachment on Vibbert Ave. on the post proper.

Capt. Cook is an officer with many years service who has been at Fort Benning for the past two years. During that time, he has served as commanding officer o. both Q. M. detachments at various times, as well as laundry officer, and officer in charge of the post motor pool.

Government Order Curtails Use Of Zinc For Newspaper Cuts

A Government order to newspapers pertaining to a drastic and permanent cut in zinc allotments effective at once makes it necessary for the BAYONET to reduce the number of cuts and cartoons published in the post newspaper. Therefore the BAYONET will consider for publication only those photos which its editors deem high in news value.

The BAYONET regrets that these steps must be taken but at the same time will cooperate 100 per cent with this order. It means that fewer and smaller cuts will be used, but it also means that vital metals will be diverted into war production, thereby hastening the day of ultimate victory.

This statement is made in order that all contributors and readers may understand the cause of future reduction of art work in the paper. While there will be a dearth of quantity, it is hoped that it will improve the quality of pictures and cartoons appearing in this publication.

Speedsters Are Grounded By Post MP's

Gas Rationing Books Withdrawn For Violations

Speeding Fort Benning automobile drivers who still think the presidential proclamation establishing a national 35-mile an hour speed limit is something you read about in newspapers are being "clipped" on their "Achilles heel" —gasoline.

The military police have worked out an arrangement with the Mileage Rationing Board at the post to have violators of speed regulations turned over to the Rationing Board for action.

"And the action is that drivers arrested while exceeding the 35-mile an hour limit are now being 'grounded'—that is their gas rationing books are being withdrawn for a period from two weeks to a month," Lt. Henry Boudreaux, assistant provost marshal, explained Wednesday.

"Drivers arrested for driving while intoxicated or arrested for reckless driving and other more serious offenses are being dealt with 'in another way,' " Lt. Boudreaux added. Only a few violations have been reported since the new system was placed in effect.

Checking the gas-rationing cards of fast drivers was just another duty added to the complex problems of the Mileage Rationing Board, which this week moved into new quarters in the office of the provost marshal.

For several weeks, the Board under the supervision of Corp. Louis Lipp, has been working overtime distributing tire registrations forms to the thousands of drivers under the jurisdiction of Who Purchased A House-Coat For The Wife?

Lost: One address for a package that probably was going to mean a Merry Christmas to some soldier's wife, but probably won't unless the soldier hears about this.

On Dec. 12, a soldier from Fort Benning bought a housecoat at the Gowdin, Wells & Pope shop in Columbus. He had it wrapped, then left a slip with an address to which it was to be mailed. But the slip of paper became lost and although the store officials searched high and low, even in wastebaskets and through floor sweepings, it cannot be found.

So, if the Fort Benning soldier who bought the housecoat can identify himself, the shop wants to hear from him and get the address.

Lt. Galang Studies To Pay Nips Back For Cruelties

A Filipino officer now studying at Fort Benning to learn the latest scientific war developments is anxious to lead his troops back again in the Philippines. He is confident that the Japanese will be chased out in time to give the Philippines their independence by July 4, 1946, the date already set by American law for it.

He is Lt. Ricardo Galang, aide-de-camp to the Filipino chief of staff and a former instructor at the commonwealth's military academy at Baguio—the island version of the United States West Point.

Lt. Galang and his wife, now living in Columbus, were on their way to America aboard the President Coolidge (since sunk by a mine) when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. He completed some studies at Boston, taking his Master of Arts degree from Boston University, then went to Harvard to study the Japanese language before being called to Washington as aide to Basilio J. Valdes, chief of staff for the Philippine Army who had made his way here from Australia. Now he has been sent to Ft. Benning to study latest methods of modern warfare.

JAPS HOLD CHILDREN

Four children of the Galangs are still in the islands and are believed to be held prisoners, together with other relatives of Lt. Galang and Mrs. Galang's mother, two sisters and brothers.

"The Philippines will be free of the Japanese in time to assume their independence by July 4, 1946, I am confident," he said. "But even when we become independent, we will be dependent in many respects upon the United States, because the connections between this country and the islands will be much closer, based on a better understanding because of the war in which we are now all engaged."

Although the President Coolidge sailed on Nov. 27, 1941, when there was no inkling of a Japanese attack on the Hawaiian Is-

Pfc. Blooey Goes to Heaven But It Was Only a Dream—

BY PFC. S. B. SUSSINA
71st Eng. L. Pon. Co.

Private First Class Pooey Blooey, after being red lined for three months, finally showed up at supplemental pay call for more than a dry run.

As the company commander handed him his money, (one hundred dollars and deducts) he asked Pooey if he would accept a fifteen-day furlough.

Pooey thought it over and asked the Commander if he could wear civilian shoes, etc. The C. O. agreed and told him that if he didn't have a pair hidden somewhere, he would be glad to loan him some.—But he had a pair.

Pooey went over to his barracks, removed a board from under his foot locker, and produced shoes and a garrison cap. He filled his suit case with everything he wanted to take with him. He rolled up his bedding and then turned his rifle into the supply room, well oiled, of course.

As he walked to the corner where he was to get a bus, the company commander, driving his personal car picked him up and drove him to the station in Columbus.

Private First Class Blooey walked up to the ticket window where he was informed that he was the lucky one hundredth soldier to request a ticket that day, and therefore he would get his ticket free. He took the ticket and was about to pick up his suit case when an M. P. rushed over and took it from his hand and checked it on the train.

Pooey stepped on the train. It was crowded to capacity. Every seat was taken. However, a second lieutenant got up and gave him his. The lieutenant told Blooey that he was only going as far as Richmond and wouldn't mind standing.

Pooey arrived in Atlanta and found that he had several hours to kill before his train would leave for New York. Pooey decided to take a walk. As he was crossing Peachtree, the Mayor drove up and asked Blooey to dine with him. Upon his acceptance, they drove to the Ansley.

DON'T WAKE HIM UP

After dinner, the Mayor drove him back to the station. He boarded his train to find that he was the only soldier in sight. Finding a seat, he made himself comfortable and promptly fell asleep. As the train lurched to a start at Decatur, Pooey awakened to find a beautiful blond sitting beside him. It wasn't long before Pooey learned that her name was Virginia, she attended a girl's school in Decatur, her father was a congressman in Washington, and that she was on her way to visit him.

Even though Virginia was a vivacious blond, Pooey couldn't keep his mind from wandering back to Ruth who waited for him in White Plains, N. Y. But by the time they reached Washington he had agreed to spend the evening with her and her father.

Due to Washington's crowded condition, Virginia's father arranged for Pooey to spend the night at the White House. Private First Class Blooey breakfasted alone with the President. His eggs weren't scrambled and he was stunned with surprise when he was asked to have a second cup of coffee.

Following breakfast, the President, with a motorcycle escort, accompanied him to the station. The President would have flown him on to New York but his plane was grounded awaiting a spark plug from Montgomery and Ward. As it was, he almost missed his train because the President would not drive over thirty-five.

DREAM CONTINUED

The President had made special arrangements for Pooey Blooey to ride to New York in a private car. When he arrived at Pennsylvania Station, his Honor, Mayor La Guardia was on hand to meet him. Following a spaghetti dinner

Columbus Homes Open To Soldiers On Dec. 27th

Holiday Hospitality Program Is Being Planned By USO, Civic Groups

Hundreds of families in Columbus will open their homes to Fort Benning soldiers on Sunday, December 27th, in a Christmas holiday hospitality program, according to plans now being devised by the Columbus USO Council and representatives of civic, fraternal groups and Fort Benning authorities.

Thousands of soldiers will be welcomed into homes to enjoy dinner and a change from Army routine. There will be no "mess" calls sounded in the homes on the 27th, it was announced, for the soldiers will be able to enjoy an easy day as they would in their own homes.

The goal of the Columbus civic leaders planning the event is that "there will not be a lonely soldier at Fort Benning" on the 27th. A survey already has been launched in the city to determine how many families can play host to troops from the post.

All soldiers who wish to take advantage of the southern hospitality are urged to register as soon as possible. Soldiers on the Main Post should list their names with the senior hostess at the Hostess House or with Lieut. S. F. Marley, assistant Special Service Officer at Post Headquarters. Troops in the Harmony Church areas should register with Miss Nellie Mitchell at the Service Club in that area while soldiers in the Tenth Armored Division should communicate with Mrs. Winifred Baker in the Service Club.

SOLDIERS TO REGISTER

Soldiers who can not register at the various Service clubs may do so at the USO centers in Columbus.

Cards stating "I want a soldier home for Christmas" on Sunday, Dec. 27th, will be circulated among Columbus citizens through churches, civic organizations, fraternal groups, women's clubs, Parent-Teachers' Association and patriotic groups. These cards are to be filled out by the invited.

When the cards are returned, an invitation letter will be mailed to the soldier-guest, signed in the name of the host and hostess.

"We want to make this a personalized affair," leaders stressed at a round-table meeting this week in Columbus. "We believe the letters, cards and the personal invitation voiced by the hostesses and other persons engaged in getting soldiers and homes together will add much to the Christmas good-will spirit which is the basis of the whole idea."

If, for some reason or other, the soldier-guest finds he will not be able to keep his appointment, after arrangements have been made, he will be urged to notify his host. In such cases, arrangements for an alternate to be sent out will be made by the USO clubs.

T. S. Sloan, chairman of the Columbus USO Council, heads the 505th's Max Eyes Hollywood Bright Lights

Max has made the movies! And it's not Slapsie-Maxie of ring fame. But it is the photogenic 90-pound Boxer paratroop pooch of Fort Benning's 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Yesterday cameramen from the major newsreel companies and picture syndicates arrived at the Main Post to photograph the famous dog as he jumped from the transport planes with his comrades in the 505th.

Life magazine also is represented here for Max's movie debut.

Max is a qualified paratrooper, having made several jumps from the transports. In the recent Florida maneuvers of the outfit, the dog took part in the assault and did his part by jumping, seeking out a cat, and "treeing" it!

Yule Holiday Is Announced

Skeleton Staffs Will Hold Down Fort

All troops at Fort Benning who can be spared from their regular duties will enjoy a holiday Christmas, according to a War Department directive which has been received at Post Headquarters. Skeleton staffs will be on duty at all headquarters on the post, however.

Most civilians employed on the post likewise will be given a holiday except a few who will be necessary to carry out their special duties. Post Headquarters announced that full staffs will be on duty on December 24 and 26.

The Infantry School, as previously announced, will suspend activities in officer candidate classes on Christmas day also.

At Post Headquarters, Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., post adjutant, will be on duty Christmas day, and is in charge of that office. Mrs. Lester Bridges, a civilian employe, will be in charge of the civilian staff. Lieut. Jerome Schweitzer, assistant public relations officer, is in charge of the skeleton crew on duty Christmas eve and Christmas night at post headquarters.

Blood Donors Rush to Aid Stricken Comrade

The speaker's voice hesitated and sudden tension gripped the Advance Class in the middle of instruction in the Infantry School building as an assistant instructor hurried up the aisle and whispered rapidly to the instructor. The instructor didn't hesitate, but turned at once to the loud speaker.

"A member of this class, Captain Richard O. Ballschmider, is critically ill in Station Hospital," he said. "He is in need of an immediate blood transfusion. Three donors of blood type A are asked to volunteer—"

Before the speaker had even finished six officers were on their feet. Others was hastily pulling out their dog tags.

"Only three are wanted," the instructor added quickly. "I guess all six might as well go, though, to make sure."

Within the minute the six were on their way in their cars to the hospital. At the station laboratory their blood was checked and that of Lt. Col. Ozni H. Cornwell selected. Without further delay the transfusion was made and Capt. Ballschmider, trying to fight back from the shock of a ruptured appendix, soon felt new life flowing in his veins. Col. Cornwell has only one thing to say regarding his donation:

"This captain has some mighty fine lieutenant colonel's blood flowing in him. I hope it doesn't go to his head."

Captain Ballschmider is reported recovering rapidly and actually received his graduation certificate Thursday morning—sooner than the rest of his classmates, who graduated that afternoon.

Soldier Grid Stars Lauded By Meagher

Dinner Writes Finis To 1942 Football Season

A grand finish to the most successful football season in Fort Benning history was written Sunday night at the polo hunt club when more than 200 conference players were guests at a gala grid dinner tendered by the Fort Benning Athletic Association.

Jack Meagher, head coach of the Auburn Tigers who tripped Georgia in the upset of the year, was guest speaker and thrilled the soldier gridders when he praised their accomplishments this fall, and expressed his admiration for the way in which they carried on with football under difficult circumstances.

INTRODUCED BY FULTON

The former Notre Dame player was introduced by Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general and himself a former footballer. The Tiger tutor stated it was a great thrill for him to appear before a soldier audience. He was a Marine officer in the last war, and has applied for reinstatement of his commission in this conflict.

"Football is a demonstration of the qualities that all soldiers admire," said Meagher. "It develops a spirit and a morale that I know you boys at Benning will carry with you into battle no matter where this war may take you," he concluded.

Speaking of the Georgia game, Meagher said that he did not consider it quite the upset that others claim. He said he felt that his Tiger team had never approached its peak until that day, but when they met the Bulldogs they were and that is why they were selected to play in the Rose Bowl.

Prior to his introductory remarks, General Fulton praised the members of the teams for their hard play all season, and the great contribution they had made to sports at Fort Benning. He also lauded the coaches for the way in which they had developed their teams.

FINNEGAN SPEAKS

Another speaker was Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, the post athletic officer, and head football coach at North Dakota State, who concluded the program by relating several anecdotes gathered during his almost three decades of coaching football. He also praised the way the Benning teams had been molded from boys who hailed from many different sections of the country.

Besides the teams of the 124th Infantry, 29th Infantry, 117th Infantry, 3rd Armored Regiment, 11th Armored Regiment, and 55th Engineers, commanding officers of the units as well as coaches and managers also attended the dinner. Other guests included the members of the Columbus Football Officials group, and Joe Livingston, sports editor of the Columbus Ledger, St. Sgt. Carl Neu, sports writer of the Bayonet, served as toastmaster.

FETED AT BEER PARTY

Before going to the Polo Hunt club for the sumptuous steak dinner, the soldier gridders were also feted by the F. B. A. A. at a beer party held in the post gymnasium. The entire affair was planned under Col. Finnegan's direction to honor not just the winning team, but all elevens which

Winners

Come right in, soldiers, and pick up your checks. The BAYONET winners for last week include O. C. Stanley L. Wojcik, 11th Co., 1st STR, for the best original contribution "Why the O. C. S." Pfc. J. P. Denove, Corps of Military Police, for the poem "The Mighty Weapon;" and Lt. Lou Clerico for his cartoon "When Heel Meets Heel."

We are still in the market for New Year's Day cartoons. The work must have a professional appearance and must be connected with the Army in some way. So get out the India ink and make a try for a perfectly good check for two bucks which at present is still going begging.

Pomp and Circumstance Mark P. O. Dedication

O'Connell Says Event Is a 'First' In Nation's History

Speaking at the dedication of Fort Benning's new post office on the main post Saturday afternoon, First Assistant Postmaster General Ambrose O'Connell heralded the occasion as the "first of its kind in the history of the nation."

Joseph W. Stilwell, III, grandson of Lt. Gen. Joseph Stilwell, leader of the American forces in China and Burma and chief-of-staff to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, unveiled the cornerstone while many army officers, enlisted men and civilians on the post watched the three-year-old youngster do his part in the impressive ceremonies.

Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, welcomed the guests and introduced Mr. O'Connell.

Among those seated on the speaker's platform were Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, commandant of The Infantry School, Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, commandant of the Parachute School, Judge T. Hicks Fort and Leighton W. McPherson, postmaster of Columbus.

Coming from Washington, D. C., for the ceremony, Mr. O'Connell pointed out that the dedication of the cornerstone, held under the joint auspices of the United States Army and the United States Postal Service was an innovation.

"It marks a new epoch in relation to wartime mail," Mr. O'Connell said, "and it is symbolic of the all-out effort that is being put forth by our national leaders to provide a prompt and reliable service for the delivery and dispatch of the mail to the armed forces at home and overseas."

Mr. O'Connell pointed out that both the War Department and

Red Cross Helps Santa Spread Cheer Overseas

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Despite the roll of war drums, Uncle Sam and Santa Claus have joined hands to bring holiday cheer to American servicemen at home and abroad and children of distant lands.

With the American Red Cross acting as the distributing medium, contents of the immense Christmas sock have been flowing overseas in a steady stream for months.

Preparations for the observance in hospitals at Army and Navy bases at home and foreign stations were planned last summer when most people were more concerned with the heat than with Christmas.

Santa's chief worry, finding troop concentrations known only by an A. P. O. number, was solved by military authorities who provided space on freighters and government transports moving war supplies up to the fronts.

In addition to these shipments are the offerings of the American Junior Red Cross, loaded in many ships' holds and now moving across seas as another expression of America's goodwill.

FIRST CONCERN

The first concern of the American Red Cross field workers at Christmas time is the welfare of soldiers and sailors in service hospitals. Elaborate programs have been planned to supplement the generous celebration Uncle Sam provides for his warriors. Christmas carols will echo through hospital wards, recreation halls will resound with gayety, whenever possible traditional holiday greenery will abound, but whether the halls are decked with holy, Spanish moss, or palm fronds, the Christmas spirit will be present.

Children of Alaska and Iceland, England, Greenland, and Central and South America will receive attractive boxes of toys assembled by members of the Junior Red Cross throughout the United States. Fifty thousand have been consigned to England, 2,000 to Ireland, 1,500 to Greenland, a large number to Alaska and the remainder to Central and South America. This has been an annual project of the Junior Red Cross since the first World War, its scope increasing with the years.

In the great military centers overseas, such as Great Britain and Australia, tons of supplies, such as candies, tobacco, cigarettes and small toilet articles, will remind American servicemen that they are not forgotten. Arrangements have been made to insure even men in the battle zones their Christmas presents.

Thus, from "pole to pole," American Red Cross workers in the field are reminding service men that they still rate top priority in the hearts of the folks back home.

VOC Program To Continue

Men Past 38 Are Barred

Recent restrictions on enlistments in the Army will not abolish the volunteer officer candidate system, according to word received at Fort Benning. As volunteer officer candidates are inducted into the military service through Selective Service processes, the only effect on the program will be that no more volunteer officer candidates who have passed their thirty-eighth birthdays will be eligible under the program. Those registrants over 38 whose inductions as volunteer officer candidates had already been ordered on the effective date of the Executive Order restricting enlistment will be inducted as ordered.

Selective Service registrants deferred for dependency only are at present eligible to volunteer for induction for the purpose of earning a commission only in one of the combatant arms or the technical services. These arms and services are Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, Antiaircraft Artillery, Armored Force, Tank Destroyer, Military Police, Corps of Engineers, Signal Corps, Ordnance Department and Chemical Warfare Service.

Present monthly quotas permit the induction of 3000 volunteer officer candidates in the United States, 30 in the Hawaiian Department and 20 in the Puerto Rican Department each month, or the aforementioned branches. In addition, within the United States, quotas permit induction of 500 volunteer officer candidates monthly, restricted to Antiaircraft Artillery aspirants, and 400 for the Corps of Engineers.

Hospital Unit Is Arranging Personal Affairs

Personnel of the 24th General Hospital are staging the first concerted drive by any organization on the post at Fort Benning to have every member put personal affairs in order and arrange his insurance.

Sgt. Jack Le Comte has been named in charge of the campaign and is co-operating with Lieut. Samuel Marley, post insurance officer, in making available to every member of the organization all necessary papers and forms and in giving out information about insurance and on settling personal affairs.

Efforts are being made to have every man in the organization make a will and to arrange all insurance problems in order to safeguard those left at home. Leaving such affairs until men are at a point of embarkation frequently puts a burden on clerical help and often means that the soldier may make out papers wrong, thereby endangering future welfare of his family because the mistake may never be remedied on records.

3rd Armored Promotes Many

During the past two weeks, the following men of the Third Armored Regiment received their first stripes, or added some to the ones already had.

Leading the list was Company "B," with five new promotions. Appointed corporal was Pfc. Frank Geist, while Pvt. Charles Learn was made technician 4th grade. Promoted to technician 5th grade was Pvt. Charles Carcione, former tap and specialty dancer from Philadelphia. Other new T-5's include Pfc. (Carpenter) Frederick Ebnerand Harry N. Crain.

Four promotions were announced in Maintenance Company — all T-5's, Men included, Pfc. Amos Mowrer, Pfc. Donald Parry, Pvts. Robert Reath and David Parsons.

Sole appointment in Headquarters Company, Second Battalion was that of Pfc. Harrison Burney, Jr. now T-5. Two appointments were announced in Company "E," those of Pvt. Joseph Becht to T-5 and T-5 Philip Moll to corporal.

In Company "A," T-4 Raymond Warner was made sergeant.

'GATORS PROMOTED

Promotions in the 124th Infantry announced today by Col. John D. Hill were those of Pfc. Stanislaw S. Samason of New York City and Pfc. Allison R. Yates of Caryville, Florida to corporals, and Cpl. Elwood E. Rich of Oneka, Florida to sergeant.

USO Installs Phone Booths

New Service Relieves Situation

Installation of a switchboard and eight telephone booths were ready for use by personnel of Fort Benning at the USO Club, 100 Ninth street, in Columbus, last week end, it was announced by Eugene Bergmann, director of the club.

With the installation of the switchboard and booths, personnel at the Fort find better telephone accommodations that ease the situation created when fires burned part of the Service Club No. 1 on the main post, necessitating removal of the telephone switchboard service there. Three booths were set up in the post gymnasium and a full switchboard service will be set up later at the Post when space can be provided.

An operator is on duty every night at the USO club so that long distance calls can be placed, and two will be kept at the board each Thursday, Saturday and Sunday night, officials of the telephone company announced.

Soldiers desiring to place long distance calls can now leave their number with the operator, and then will be paged over the loud speaker system.

The new installation was put in when facilities of the existing booths became overtaxed. Frequently, Mr. Bergmann said, as much as $40 in quarters was supplied as change by the USO soldiers making long distance calls on a Sunday night. Now the payment can be made directly to the operator on duty.

The new plan is expected to speed up making of telephone calls and to help relieve the load of work on long distance operators.

New Goggles Have Special Lenses

Goggles with five sets of interchangeable lenses, which provide protection against dust and glare, now are being used by Army aviators, anti-aircraft gun crews, tank drivers, tank operators, and other soldiers where clear vision day or night is essential.

Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning, told of the new development yesterday in describing how they have been designed by the technicians of the Quartermaster Corps.

The goggles are cose fitting and the soldier can insert the type of lens needed within a few seconds. The lenses come in clear, green, amber, light red and dark red. The frames are made of reclaimed rubber of long-wearing qualities. They fit close to the face and are so flexible they can be carried in a soldier's pocket without danger of breakage.

Colonel Massey added that the clear lens is for protection only and does not affect the vision or the mechanism of the eye. Each of the other colors has a particular use such as piercing a haze, protection in extra-bright sunlight, adapting one's eyes in going from light into sudden dark, and help in following tracer bullets.

Head Hunters Assist Allies

They Are Paid With Tin Cans

In the Naga hills of Assam, the geographical barrier between India and Burma, the United States Army patrols on guard against Japanese invasion have head hunters as native allies against enemy planes.

Captain James A. Kehoe, who pioneered the mountain jungles to set up the advance posts, reports that Naga ears are so sharp that they sometimes detect planes a full minute before Americans pick up the sound, and their interest is so great that they demand to know at once whether the aircraft are American or Japanese.

The Naga earn twelve cents a day building roads through the hills for Army jeeps. Naga children get a big thrill from riding in the jeeps over the few level areas, and their parents have placed votive offerings of bamboo, feathers and rice at each treacherous curve of the road to protect the soldier drivers from accident.

The natives prefer to receive their wages in tin cans, which they make into ornaments. The keys that come with sardine cans are highly valued and are worn in holes pierced through the ears and nose, the outpost units report.

YANKS LEARN CROSSBOW

The American soldiers are learning how to use the native crossbows as well as the Nagas, but the local champions still have them beat at hurling their spears. Practice at these sports is restricted now, however, since Lieutenant Donald Hartberg found an arrow hole in his hat.

They chew betel nut and they still hunt heads in the Assam highlands, Lieutenant Lucien L. Hall reports. And they telegraph with drum beats. Lieutenant Kenneth Glaisdell is compiling a Naga-English dictionary and studying the drum code. He reports that American slang is creeping into the Naga language and the terms "O. K." and "scram" now are drum signals, too.

At night, the mountain valleys of Assam echo with a blend of radio music picked up by the American soldiers from California radio stations, and the drum beats of the messages sent by one group of India hill people to another.

Supply Chief Is Promoted To Full Colonel

Lt. Col. Myron Leedy, chief of the supply branch on the staff of Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, has been promoted to the rank of full colonel.

Col. Leedy, who in addition to his duties as chief of the supply control branch, serves as Ordnance member of the Infantry Board at Benning, has been in the Army for nearly a quarter of a century and is recognized as an expert in Army ordnance because of his attendance at many different schools and his practical experience in the field. He was named Ordnance member of the Infantry Board on May 1, 1942.

Ten Enlisted Men Get New Chevrons

New chevrons are being worn by ten enlisted men as a result of their recent promotion in the Maintenance Battalion of the 10th Armored's "Tiger" Division. The men are:

To be staff sergeant, Clarence J. Trentman.

To be tech sergeant, James E. Chandler.

To be technician 3rd grade, Tillman O. Lindblom.

To be technician 4th grade, Jack R. Elleman, Lucien H. Smith and Claude Stier.

To be technicians 5th grade, Albert Niccoli, Harry Kimball, Willard Ruggers and Burton Shewan.

An Army Wife Completes Her Christmas Shopping

The best resolutions for cutting down on Christmas buying generally goes awry about this time. You've bought for the family and friends. Gifts are wrapped and tucked away. Then you start thinking of this one and that one who's been nice to you throughout the year. Just a little gift to prove your appreciation would be thoughtful. Of course it wrecks the good resolutions, but what's the difference. Those gestures are the true spirit of Christmas, the joy of giving for the fun of it.

An armload of packages is a PATRIOTIC GESTURE

Did you know KIRVEN'S has 49 departments in their store? Out of that many departments the late shopper can certainly find a choice of gifts. In case your trouble has been indecision, there's a staff of Personal Shoppers, who have been specially trained to assist you in choosing a gift for the person you have in mind. Those with a lagging Christmas spirit can find further service in the gift wrapping booth. They not only wrap the gift prettily but prepare it securely for mailing. You can have it mailed from that booth, and avoid standing in line at the Post Office. Scrooge would feel a softening of the heart with a service like that, for it most certainly eliminates the fuss.

The PATRICIA GOWN SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel still has a stock of glamour gifts for the gals who adore lovely personal gifts. The woman who's been thinking ahead about the after-season reductions had better visit Patricia. Her fur trimmed coats, fur trimmed suits and hats are now being sold with reductions that make arithmetic easy for those who are weak on fractions. The very handsome silver fox, Persian lamb, nutria and red fox that trim the coats make them an investment one can't afford to overlook in these days. The furred suits are so handsome they'll be worn for many a season's undiminished smartness. Patricia's hats are so high styled and individual they're a more than one season hat. Wonderful buys they all are for a shrewd and fashion wise shopper.

We could all do with a large dose of nonsense these days. The first counter on the left as you enter CHANCELLOR'S has a supply that could keep the post rocking with mirth for days. A prosaic term would be party aids, but they're something more than that, for slightly mad supplies for a party are more than an aide, they constitute an incentive for a party. Packs of napkins and matches with sly and witty remarks are conversation pieces to say the least. The Toastmaster contains the wherewithall for a hilarious poke at John Barleycorn and all his weaknesses. Packaged stationery for those who collect hotel souvenirs, or delight in startling their friends. Three towels done up in a cellophane package with prestige names, such as The White House, Buckingham Palace, China Clipper. A gay gift for a friend who surreptitiously collects hotel towels. The entire counter is a stop-over for amusing perusal. I defy you to leave without purchasing something out of this screwball collection of laugh provokers.

KAYSER - LILIENTHAL'S INC. has a collection of gowns that will give the average woman wishful yearning until she buys the one she's entranced with. This trend among the menfolks of buying black chiffon underthings proves more than anything else they want glamour in their womenfolks. For out - and - out glamour there's nothing so effective as a beautiful gown for evening wear. Frothy nets glittering with sequins, sophisticated dinner dresses restrained and smooth, beads, embroidery and clever manipulation of fine materials make the gowns at Kayser-Lilienthal's authentic visual productions from the pages of Vogue and Harpers. Their Junior Miss collection of evening gowns is so fetching in youthful appeal you'd be a hard-hearted mother indeed if you didn't treat your young college daughter to a real glamour dress. There's a wonderful choice of evening wraps. Luxurious velvet, crusty with gold and bead embroideries, rich with tails of ermine fur. These are gift items or satisfying lovelies for your own purchasing.

Convenient and appealing is that Slipper Bar MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE CO. have installed in their store. I've already told you about the unusual selection of slippers that miraculously combine both lounging comfort and real foot style. The Slipper Bar gives you that privilege beloved of all good shoppers of looking over the entire stock. The Daniel Green line is too well known for me to add my bit of praise. So is the Joyce line. Do look at these adorable soft leather slippers for the little tots. They're really miniature replicas of grown-up slippers. The line for menfolks will please you in its combination of comfort and fine leather. Best-of-all feature, is the Gift Certificate. A choice of slipper or wanted a few weeks after the Christmas rush is a mighty fine present for anyone. You'd know for certain then they'd have exactly what they wanted, and no matter what, that's the point we're striving for in all our gift buying.

SEARS ROEBUCK is a real Christmas store and proof of that lies in the honest-to-goodness Santa Claus that presides over their Toyland. Authentic in size with the proper twinkle in his eye, he gives a holiday lift to the spirits of both young and old. Grown ups would never admit it, but there's delight in all the trappins of Christmas as much as the younger ones. The Toyland at Sears Roebuck is especially impressive with a stock of wheel goods, I didn't expect to see anywhere. Fire engines, automobiles and U. S. Army planes that will provide fast and furious transportation for moppets as they pump sturdy legs in their round of the block. Bicycles too, but they're grown up size. I made a new discovery this week at this store. Their corset and girdle department has a line of garments that offer astonishing value for the price. There's a competent fitter too that will assure you of proper fitting for those important intimate garments.

A lot of people have discovered the shopping finds at the FIRESTONE STORE at 1246 First Avenue. That doesn't mean there isn't a lot yet to choose from. There is, and the choice is in those items we call irreplaceable. For instance, radios table, console and portable models. Then there are G. E. mixers, a household joy for the woman who prides herself in culinary art. Not only are there mixers but there's a full line of housewear, and that, my pets, is something very hard to find in Columbus. Then there's luggage, which heads the list for gift giving among service folks. And, last but not least, toys. Electric trains for Dad and the young son. Mechanical trains for the tiny lad. Adorable replicas of household needs for the tiny housekeeper. Dolls, games and push toys. Firestone has a real selection for complete family choice of gifts.

That Extra Something!

...You can spot it every time

SUPPOSING you were Old Santa Claus. What a job you'd have! Chimneys waiting everywhere... youngsters' gift lists to be checked. The job certainly calls for that extra something.

You'd get tired and thirsty, too. You'd want that extra something in refreshment —ice-cold Coca-Cola. Well, you'd find it in many homes everywhere. You could help yourself at the icebox and be welcome.

You'd find thirst gone and refreshment arriving. You'd thrill to the taste so delicious and distinctive that it stands alone. You'd know you were enjoying all the quality that skill and choicest ingredients could put there. You'd find refreshment going quickly into energy. You'd be ready again to shout, "Ho, Prancer! Ho, Vixen..."

(You can pretend you're Santa. You don't have to pretend you're enjoying an ice-cold Coca-Cola. Have one!)

Happy moments at home are brighter when ice-cold Coca-Cola adds its life and sparkle. It's an old friend of the family ready to take off its cap and help out any time.

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called Coke. Coca-Cola and Coke mean the same thing...the real thing ..."coming from a single source, and well known to the community".

The best is always the better buy!

'Tiger' Saw Action In Libyan Campaign

Twice during the past fortnight good news has come to George S. Lively, member of Co. "H," 3rd Armored Regiment. His first piece of good news arrived with radio reports of a tough and alert British Eighth Army that was making Rommel pay dearly for his summer victory that had pushed the British back from Tobruk well into Egypt.

The second piece of good news came in a special order from the Dragon Regiment's headquarters, in which Lively was made Technician 5th grade, partly for his experience under fire as a member of an American tank crew that participated in last summer's shifting Libyan campaign.

Leaving the United States on May 25 of this year, Lively and companions were flown into Cairo, arriving there on June 6. After two short days there they moved out for the front on the coast railroad to Matruh, and were detailed for duty with the British Eighth Army in the Bardia sector.

Before moving up to the front, however, the American party was the guest of Gen. Sir Claude Auchinleck, whose army had first used American-made equipment against German equipment and material in late 1941.

"But there was before Knightsbridge," concluded Lively, "after that, there wasn't much entertaining going on."

TOMMY BREWS TEA

Lively found the British Tommy brewing tea at the front just as the news dispatches had indicated, openly admitting his admiration for Rommel's abilities as a field general, but grimly determined to drive him out of North Africa.

"The last three weeks have proven that the British are tough fighters," Lively said, "however, we knew that this was so when we were fighting side by side with them last summer. We came in contact at one time or another with Britishers, Aussies, South Africans, New Zealanders, Scotch Highlanders—about all of them. I guess—and they all had one big characteristic. That was nerve. They aren't afraid of anything that they've met yet, and we had plenty of stuff thrown at us last summer.

Although he had never tasted it before his Libyan venture, Lively is now a confirmed tea drinker, and took his turn brewing it on the small portable burner that is unofficial operating equipment with every tank crew.

In addition to their reception by General Auchinleck, the members of the American party (which Lively believes was the second one to face the Germans in Libya) met and talked with Wendell Willkie, who made the front one of his stopping places on his tour of the world theaters of war last summer.

"He was a big, friendly guy," Lively recalls, "in particular, he was impressed with the work of our tanks and crews. Wish that he could take a run back there and see some of these new Shermans in action."

WITH PATTON

Lively enlisted in the Army in September, 1940, and was a member of the 67th Armored Regiment of the Second Armored Division, commanded by Major Gen. George S. Patton, Jr. He volunteered for foreign service when given the chance, found out that it was to be Libya just before he and his companions left the United States. During one main engagement there, the 75 mm gun on his tank was put out of commission, but the crew (of which Lively was weapons gunner) maintained contact with the enemy and fired at him with the weapons on hand.

"One thing that you learn quickly out on the desert is the use of the sun-compass," Lively concluded. "We didn't lose visual contact with our neighboring tanks for any length of time. But there is little to navigate with out there—I didn't see a tree for eight weeks one time—and it's not hard to get lost."

Lively is from Cumming, Ga., near Atlanta.

Army Nurse Bill, Sent to President; Would Boost Pay

The bill increasing pay of nurses attached to the armed forces has been sent to the White House for final signature, it is announced today from Washington.

Under the new law, all nurses will be given a base income corresponding to that of a second lieutenant in the Army or that of an ensign in the Navy. Under the existing regulations, pay is based on length of service.

At the same time, it is announced in Washington that a bill has been introduced into the House of Representatives to allow women doctors to accept temporary Army commissions. The existing laws have been interpreted as prohibiting such commissions, sponsors of the bill said.

Fort R. C. Unit Renders Aid In 'Bama Storm

An aftermath of the disastrous windstorm in nearby Hurtsboro, Alabama, several days ago was the report this week of the role the Fort Benning Red Cross office played in the incident.

A few hours after the heavy wind struck the Alabama village Eugene Bussey, field director of the Red Cross at Fort Benning, received an emergency call from the Muscogee County Chapter of the Red Cross in Columbus asking for assistance in a disaster which had occurred in Hurtsboro, Russell County, Alabama.

Lewis Scheffenacker, assistant field director in the Fort Benning office, was sent to the scene with a Red Cross car from the post and in a survey of Hurtsboro later that night counted 46 homes either totally demolished or damaged. With the assistance of Hurtsboro physicians and county health officials, emergency treatment and first aid was given to many victims, and arrangements made for temporary shelter, food and clothing.

Bussey pointed out in commenting on the response of Fort Benning and Columbus Red Cross officials "that the public is not generally aware of the machinery functioning in the American Red Cross with regard to disaster and it is interesting to note that while fortunately the wind storm at Hurtsboro created a relatively small disaster, nevertheless, the wheels of the American Red Cross disaster committee started spinning immediately.

"When the mayor of Hurtsboro called the local chapter for help, that call was immediately transmitted to the headquarters of the American National Red Cross in Washington, D. C. There, where a 24-hour watch is kept, an immediate plan of attack, pre-arranged and well-coordinated, was started. A disaster specialist with funds, equipment and most important with experience was on the way to Hurtsboro Sunday evening."

Scheffenacker returned to the Alabama area last weekend to assist the national disaster specialist with plans for reconstruction.

MAJOR GEN. PAUL W. NEWGARDEN DEDICATES NEW RANGE

New 10th Armored Division Range Honors Col. Carmouche's Memory

Gen. Newgarden Fires First Shot And Marks Up Dead Center Bull

In a simple ceremony before Division officers, Major. Gen. dedicated the Division's brand in honor of Lt. Col. George served at Fort Benning with the 29th Infantry, and the Infantry

Col. Carmouche, who died last August at Camp Polk, La., served under Gen. Newgarden in the 2nd Armored's 41st Infantry. The 10th Armored Commander went over the Colonel's military service and said of him, "he was tireless, resourceful, loyal and considerate of all about him. Throughout his service I believe he was the best loved officer in the regiment."

The officers then joined Gen. Newgarden in a salute of honor to the colonel whose work at the post, particularly with the 41st, is widely known. While serving as Regimental Supply Officer he supervised the building of the 41st Infantry Camp, then out in the Harmony Church area. Starting with little more than "six faucets and a few hundred feet of plumbing," Gen. Newgarden related, "Col. Carmouche did a prodigious job in building up the winter camp which he rapidly developed into one of the best in the Division, at a time when lumber facilities and equipment were extremely limited."

WEST POINT GRAD.

Col. Carmouche graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1922, graduated from the Infantry School Company Officers' Course in 1930. He later high-ranking 10th Armored Paul W. Newgarden officially new Carmouche Rifle Range H. Carmouche, who formerly the 2nd Armored Division, the School.

served with the 29th Infantry, was assistant adjutant of Fort Benning's Infantry School, and S-4, battalion commander and regimental executive of the 41st Armored Infantry during the extended maneuvers in Tennessee, Louisiana and Carolina in 1941. While serving as G-4 of the Seventh Armored Division at Camp Polk, La., he later developed yellow jaundice and died on August 16.

Carmouche Range is one of the finest army rifle ranges in the country. Constructed under the supervision of Fort Benning's Area Engineer, Major C. W. Hamilton, it took over two months and 100 men to convert hilly forest land into a level, ultra-modern range which is situated to take advantage of the best lighting effects and background possible.

In reality it is three ranges in one, each allowing thirty men to fire at once. Two of the ranges have firing points at 200, 300, and 500 yards while the third has 100, 200, 300, 500 and 600 yard points.

The first shot fired on the range—and a bulls eye—was made by Gen. Newgarden, Maintenance Battalion had the honor of being the first 10th Armored organization to use the range.

'Tiger' Chaplains Rough It With Armored Force

The Chaplains of the Tenth Armored "Tiger" Division are hemen, able to run the obstacle course at callisthenics, swim an hundred yards, ride and drive every vehicle from a motor-cycle to a tank, and march for 25 miles with the men in the ranks. One Chaplain has qualified for the "Tiger Platoon" of his unit.

These Chaplains take all the physical, hardening training that the other officers and men of the Division undergo. So then, as men among men, they say Mass or conduct their services either in the field or in the Chapel as the occasion demands. Trained at Chaplain's School in drill, they take their place with the Staff at Parades or at any formation.

From this experience, there developed a comradeship and understanding between the Chaplain and his men so that the problems of the men with which the Chaplain must deal are experiences of real advice, counsel, and guidance. Whether on his knees in prayer with men, or for men, tackling knotty problems, preaching, visiting the sick in the hospital, or pleading the cause of some man with his Company Commander, the Chaplain is every inch a man of God—but every inch a man!

BIBLE AND SWORD

In somewhat the same spirit as that of the Pilgrim Fathers who went to the meeting house with a gun over their shoulder and a Bible under their arm, these men live among men, inspiring their morale in this epic struggle to defend successfully our liberty.

The Chaplains of the Tenth Armored Division are: Paul J. Maddox, Division Chaplain; John A. Feckter, Asst. Division Chaplain; Walter H. Ruth, 54th Infantry Reg.; Clarence E. Downing, 11th Arm. Reg.; Albert J. DuBois, Field Artillery; Stephen P. Kenny, Field Artillery; Kenneth W. Frankenstein, 54th Infantry Reg.; James W. Turnbull, Division Trains; Thomas M. Anthony, 3rd Arm. Reg.; John E. Batterson Division Trains; Charles B. Hastie, 55th Engineers Bn.; Joseph E. Krochesski, 3rd Arm. Reg.; David M. Shepherd, 11th Arm. Reg.; Patrick J. Trainor, 90th Rcn. Bn.

COL. CRIM JOINS NEW UNIT

Lieut. Col. Sterling Crim, who has served as Executive Officer of the 29th Infantry since last March, has been ordered to assume the duties of Executive Officer of the School Troops Brigade, Harmony Church Area. He entered the Army in 1917, and served as an instructor of troops at Camp Gordon, Ga., after graduating from an Officers' Training School in his home state of Texas.

Four 'Tigers' Made Majors

Four 10th Armored Division majors have recently been appointed to lieutenant colonels the public relation office announced. The newly promoted officers are Lt. Cols. Robert M. Blanchard, Franklin R. Sibert, Ned T. Norris and Henry T. Cherry, Jr.

Col. Blanchard is the 10th Armored's Intelligence Officer. He was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1933, the Tank School in 1940 and is now attending the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

He was a battalion commander in the 32nd Armored Regiment, 3rd Armored Division at Camp Polk, La., and formerly was a company commander in the 2nd Armored Division's 67th Regiment. He served for three years in the Philippines with the 45th Infantry Regiment. Col. and Mrs. Anne Blanchard live on the post and have three children.

Col. Sibert is the Division Quartermaster and is the son of Major Gen. F. C. Sibert, commander of the 6th Motorized Division. He graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1936, the Infantry School Regular Course in 1940 and the Command and General Staff School in '42.

COL. SIBERT

Before his assignment here, Col. Sibert was commander of Supply Battalion, 8th Armored Division. He also served with the supply battalions of both the 2nd and 5th Armored Divisions. He's proud of the fact that he reached his present rank at the age of 28 thereby matching his father who was the same age when he received his silver leaves in the last war. Col. Sibert's home town is Ho-ko-kus, N. J. His son, George W. Sibert, aged 5 was class Godson when Col. Sibert was commissioned at West Point.

Col. Norris is commander of the 3rd Armored Regiment's 1st Battalion. A graduate of the U. S. M. A. in 1936 and the Cavalry School in 1940, he was chief of the Engine Division Tank Department of the Armored Force School and has held his present position since July, 1942. He also served with the 6th Cavalry, the 13th Cavalry (mechanized). Colonel Norris attended both Virginia Polytechnic School and the Air Corps Primary Flying School.

Only Georgia-born officer of the four is Lieut. Col. Henry T. Cherry, Jr., commander of the 3rd Armored's 12nd Battalion. He graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1935 and entered active service with the Eighth Cavalry. He attended the Fort Riley Cavalry School where he attended the Troop Officers' Course and later attended the advanced Communications School there. Prior to his assignment to the 10th Armored he was commander of the Cavalry School Detachment. He is married to Suzanne S. Cherry of Macon, Ga.

Regiment Has Sports Slate

Program Includes Every Soldier

In spite of the rigorous training program now in effect in the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), men still find time to show interest in things athletic.

Recognizing this fact, the athletic office, with the approval of Colonel Ellis F. Altman, Regimental Commander, is starting a program that is intended to include every man within the regiment. Although popular sports will be played, the basic reason for this planning is to start a physical fitness program that will enable every man to gain exercise that is not made possible through the driving of vehicles.

Among other items of sporting equipment, each company has been issued the famous "Medicine Balls" and already groups of men are hardening little used muscles by daily practice. Some of the men are finding horseshoe pitching quite a sport and in one company several exceptional players have been discovered. The officers have been using the greater portion of their lunch hour for volleyball and have started the afternoon's work with the extra vigor gained during their "game" period.

However, the greatest step toward a unified program is the conversion of the recreation building into a miniature sports arena. With work already underway, a basketball and volleyball court is being laid out and the necessary equipment is being installed. Space is also provided for those men who care to engage in boxing and wrestling, and before long this building will be a veritable beehive of sports activities. Plans are being formed so that each company in the regiment will have a basketball team, and within a few weeks, battalion tournaments will be held and all star teams picked in order to take part in a regimental tourney. With many of the soldiers of the regiment from the metropolitan areas where basketball is becoming increasingly popular, great games are in prospect and many "stars" are certain to be discovered.

Johnny Beazley, Card pitcher and hero of the 1942 World Series, has been assigned to Berry Field, Tenn., to work with Lt. Mike Murphy in the Physical Education Department.

Where There's A Will, There Is A Way

Inability to get materials to set up a restaurant doesn't stop officers and men of the 505th Parachute Infantry.

Col. James M. Gavin, commanding officer of the regiment, wanted a restaurant installed in time for the men to have a gathering place for the Christmas holidays. Priorities, however, held up the obtaining of fixtures.

So, today Col. Gavin announced that arrangements have been made whereby the Exchange in the area managed by J. J. Joines of Phenix City, will serve as a place where coffee and doughnuts can be served evenings beginning this Saturday night and going through the holiday season.

The various battalion messes will take turns in bringing in the coffee in huge cans and serving it with doughnuts.

THREE PROMOTED

Three enlisted men of Company C, 117th Infantry received promotions this week. They are PFC. Harold K. Chamberlin, PFC. Albert Hohenstein, and PFC. Charlie Presley, all promoted to technician grade V.

Stimson Lauds Life Insurance

Official Asks Men To Protect Families

Henry L. Stimson, secretary of war, directed a personal appeal to the officers and men of the Army this week to investigate the potentialities of national service life insurance and act on it immediately.

A drive has been under way at Fort Benning for several weeks by Lt. Samuel Marley, post insurance officer, to interest military personnel in taking insurance under Army provisions and to get their personal affairs straightened out before they leave for overseas service.

Mr. Stimson's message to the armed forces was as follows:

"In order to furnish maximum protection for members of the Army and their dependents, the Congress provided National Service Life Insurance. It is to the personal advantage of every officer and man to have this protection. The cost is small and with present pay rates every soldier should be able to carry the maximum amount authorized.

"Men are not taking maximum advantage of the benefits Congress has provided, largely because they are not properly informed as to its value and are not sufficiently impressed with the need.

"It is my desire that commanding officers of all grades stress the value of National Service Life Insurance to the individual soldier through educational methods and by personal interview."

Lieutenant Marley has appealed to the officers of Fort Benning to make every effort to bring the benefits of the life insurance offered to military personnel to the attention of their enlisted men.

PURSUE COURSE

Tucker is a native of Washington and Lt. Jefferson hails from Vicksburg, Miss. S-Sergeant Vernon Rivers, Corporal Bayard C. Fisher and Corporal Rogers N. Smith will study at the Officers Candidate School. Private Maurice Edwards, former student at Morgan State College, Baltimore, and Private Charles Beaubien of Pawtucket, R. Filipino O. C. Training To Strike at Japanese Officer Candidate Manuel J. Pamintuan of the Philippine Islands was right smack in the middle of his education at Schwyz, Switzerland when hostilities flared up in Europe.

O. C. Pamintuan, 17th Co., IST S. T. R., says his favorite yarns was developed on the boat trip from the islands to his European school-house. On board were 30 Hitler Jugend (Hitler Youth) returning from Japan and enroute to Italy. That was November, 1938. They were on a so-called good-will tour.

During the summer of 1939, Pamintuan roamed the continent. His family insisted that he return to the United States and he left Bordeaux on the S. S. Washington. The ship stopped at Lisbon and then proceeded for New York. The following morning, the palatial liner was halted for some unknown reason. The passengers were ordered to the life boats. This was followed by another order to return all passengers to the main salon.

It was there they learned that the ship was stopped by two German submarines. After an exchange of messages, the cold-shivering ex-lifeboat dwellers were informed that the S. S. Washington had to remove all its passengers within ten minutes. There followed more messages between the skipper of the Washington and the two German submarine commanders. Pamintuan watched the blinking lights of the subs still flashing messages to the ship about 1,000 yards away. When the passengers were hauled aboard again, one cheerfully chirped, "Wonder if the okay came directly from Bertschesgaden?"

Shortly after his arrival in the United States, "Pam" enrolled for a course in Textile Manufacturing at North Carolina State College. He enlisted in the army on July 29 and was attached to the First Philippino Infantry in California. Pam's family is at Manila. His brother, Ramon, is a lieutenant in the Philippine Army and fought at Historic Bataan.

Pam's ambition? To be commissioned as a second lieutenant in the army of the U. S. on December 23.

LT. DECH NAMED PERSONNEL ADJUTANT

Lieut. Robert W. Dech, formerly a platoon leader in Co. K of the 29th Infantry, has been assigned as personnel adjutant of the regiment, it is announced. He relieves Lt. Buckman. Lt. Dech was graduated from Lehigh University and has served also with Co. L as platoon leader.

Here's Chance For Easy Money

By S. SGT. TOM McDONALD

In a recent issue of the Daily Bulletin was an item reading as follows: A pet skunk which is harmless and tame was lost in the vicinity of Miller Loop. Skunk answers to the name of "Flower" and has white markings on his head only. Reward is offered for return to owner."

Surely some gallant soldier will go above and beyond the call of duty for the sake of this pet's owner. Question only those skunks with white markings. Equipment for this excursion should include the gas mask, M135, regulation gloves and fatigue uniform. All casualties will automatically receive 15 day furloughs. Skunks not answering to the name of "Flower" will not be considered. Remember, there is to be a reward.

Warrant Officers Are Appointed In 29th Infantry

Two sergeants of the 29th Infantry have received appointments as Warrant Officers, it is announced. They are Technical Sergeant Edwin J. Doucet, regimental communication chief, and Staff Sergeant Jack Smith, a radio chief in the communications section.

Warrant Officer Douset has been in the regiment for 16 years, being connected with the communications section during that time. He is an expert rifleman and has placed twice on the Infantry School rifle team.

Mr. Smith served as motor transport sergeant of the 29th Infantry motor park before taking over his duties as radio chief.

Those Vacant Rooms Again

In an editorial in last week's Bayonet we suggested that officers and non-commissioned officers living on the post might show a true Christmas spirit by opening up a spare room to accommodate the overflow crowds of visitors to the Fort Benning area during the Christmas holidays.

There was some response to that editorial and the billeting office received several phone calls. One point needs to be clarified. No charge can be made for the room, but a service charge may be made to cover the costs of laundry, a charge which most visitors undoubtedly would be only too happy to pay.

The situation in the Columbus area is critical. Walter Pike, of the Chamber of Commerce, told us that soldiers are coming in with tears in their eyes after tramping the streets all day looking for a room for their mothers. Hotels are out of the question and it appears that practically every possible available room in the city has been reserved.

Here is a chance, perhaps, to make a real Christmas for a family, a reunion which may be the last for a long time to come. The slight inconvenience to the family with rooms to spare of having others in the house for a few days at the most will be more than made up for by the happiness the hospitality will bring. Call FB 3505.

Children For Victory

We may win the war and lose our children. In one of our largest cities child delinquency has gone up 14 percent in the last six months. A high percentage of our most hardened criminals are in their teens. There are many mothers in industry who value a double paycheck more than a secure home for their children. Venereal infection has risen 75 percent this year in a key port of embarkation.

The first aim of the subversive forces in overthrowing a country is to corrupt the young by slackening their moral standard. America's inner enemies are not idle.

A number of parents, facing the problem, decided, "No matter what you tell your children, you can't stop them from being just like you." So they figured out a program of moral re-armament, beginning with themselves.

They said, "Our homes need to be more than filling stations by day and parking lots at night. We need homes where there is lots of love and laughter, where the children long to be. Homes that pull together pull the town together. Sound homes are the strength of a nation." They back up our fighting sons abroad and push up production in industry."

One of these families starts every day with a "council of war" before the eldest son goes to his job in an airplane plant. God is the boss in that home. Marcia, aged 10, and Bruce, aged 14, help their big brother solve the problems that arise in his work. Together they tackle friction at home; so he knows how to cure it if it pops up along the production line. As a result production has risen 40 percent in three departments of that plant.

The fight for sound homes is the fight for total victory and a new world. You and your children are on the front lines.

Change Step

Fourth Platoons get plenty of bad breaks, they sweat every line from payroll to chow and get all the left-overs and misfits in clothing and equipment. The stiffest penalty they pay for their position in life however is the reputation for always being out of step.

Find nothing in the field manuals or old "GT's" on the subject, the "fighting 4th" of Company 16, First Student Training Regiment, has tried to arrive at the correct solution. Of course this is by the trial and error method but if success is ours then it must be O. K.

The following classified suggestions on "How to Keep in Step for Fourth Platoons Only" are submitted in hope that those in this platoon will profit by our suggestions.

1. AUTOMATIC CHANGE STEP METHOD: Every sixteen steps the entire platoon changes steps without command. The number of steps will vary between companies but sixteen is a good average.

2. SPLIT STEP METHOD: Two squads maintain one step; the remaining two, the opposite. In extremely difficult cases all squads may maintain a different step but this is resorted to only after written permission is obtained.

3. SMOKE SCREEN METHOD: Every member of the platoon scuffs his feet raising so much dust that their cadence cannot be observed. This is especially effective in dusty camps if such a camp is available, need we say more.

4. VICE VERSA METHOD: Have the platoon keep in the opposite step of the third platoon. This simple method will insure accuracy about three-fourths of the time.

5. SLOPPY JOE METHOD: Every platoon has at least one individual who is always out of step with the rest of the group. Make him guide and you will be surprised how much of the time he will be in step with the student company commander.

6. RIGHT FOOT METHOD: Simply have the platoon step off on the right foot. This method has the unique feature of putting the group in step just about the time you pass by the C. O.'s window.

These methods are merely suggestions and readers must not accept them as the ultimate—after all, one cannot overlook the differences in situations and terrain. To date there is no real solution except possibly to eliminate the fourth platoon.

CANDIDATE ART URY,
16th Co., 1st S. T. R.

Muddled Thinking

We sit drinking our milk-shakes and reading in the papers about the milk-shortages. The same way we sat and read about shortages in England or famine in Greece. Now it's coming closer to home.

"We'll manage somehow. We'll win the war soon, and then everything'll be O. K." That's what we'd like to think.

But that sort of thinking has got us into the muddle. There are lots of shortages before there's a shortage of milk. And a shortage of thinking is one of them.

The man who takes the long view is the man with the answer to shortages. He's the fellow who'll help America win this war. Take one farming community in the West. A couple of years back they had a feud to every square mile. Some of them carried guns; others hadn't spoken in years. But they got together long before Pearl Harbor on the program of "You Can Defend America." That program says, "We'll never have V for Victory until we have U for Unity." And so lots of these ranchers sank their pride for the good of their valley. Now they are meeting shortage by sharing—sharing machinery, ideas, manpower. And more milk and cattle come out of that valley to feed civilians, soldiers and allies, because these families have learned how to work together.

The garage-owner in that valley, an expert welder and mechanic, says, "I could go down to the cities and earn big money, but I feel my job is here keeping the ranch-machinery going." There ought to be an "E for Excellence" flag floating above his workshop; it's producing its maximum for America. That kind of thinking and living is the answer to shortages of manpower and machinery. It comes from a fighting faith in God and in America.

Lack of that fighting faith is the first of all shortages. Only by obedience to the guidance of God can we find the guts and the "know-how" to plan ahead, work together and live for our country. It is still true that if everybody cares enough and everybody shares enough, everybody will have enough.

Most Embarrassing Moment

The warm rays of a non-committal Georgia sun diffused its way earthward to the group of husky Officer's Candidates at the Fort Benning Infantry School.

Standing military and erect on the raised platform, the Physical Training instructor barked his commands to the more than eager class. All, by the way, members of the 13th Co., 3rd Student Training Regiment. The "hup, two" cadence of the exercise reflected the training and alertness of these potential officers.

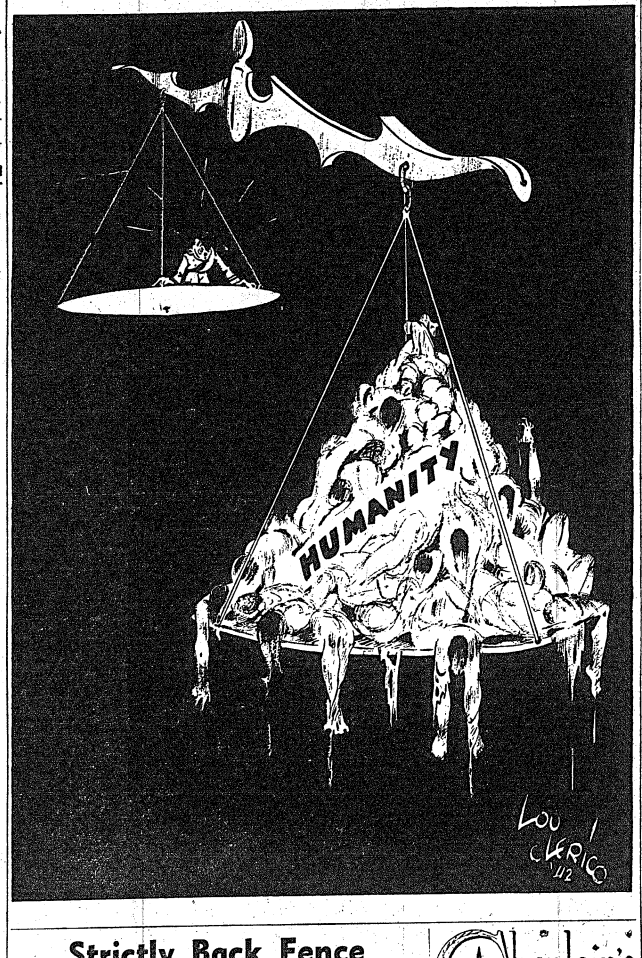
"All right, men, strip to your under-shorts." The class, stunned by the request of their instructor, proceeded very cautiously to discard all unnecessary outer garments. Shorts too wide, too long, too short, in effect all types soon made their flapping appearance in the mild wind. All except Candidate . . . Well, let's call him "X" for he has already been subjected to a terrific amount of "ribbing" by his fellow O. C's. Very conspicuous 'midst the generally white appearance of the surrounding shorts, he retained his green fatigue trousers, and continued to exercise, until his buddies' shouts of "take it off" were reminiscent of the one-time ubiquitous burlesque.

Shamed into removing his trousers, there he stood, bright and glowing in his "flame red" plaid shorts . . . Oh gosh, where's that hole in the ground?

Even As You And I

The night infiltration problem was a howling success for the Third Platoon, 18th Co. STR in more ways than one. Group No. 11 seemed to have all the tough luck as it straggled into the assembly point in three pieces.

The first man lost was Candidate L. L. Reed, who became confused after lying on the ground during a flare attack. Upon rising some minutes later he fell in behind what he believed was his patrol.



He tagged behind this group for an hour. Then the patrol counted noses and found an extra one. They challenged him with the signal word "White." Reed, thinking they asked his name, said "no." He quickly changed it to "yes" when the group approached him threateningly.

The fourth squad of the Third Platoon, 18th Company, shot a high score on the "Technique of Fire" range. It was noted that there were many volunteers to shoot the B. A. R.'s because the boys were figuring a way out of cleaning rifles.

Good natured and roly poly Candidate E. E. Osgood is through with trips off the post. He caught a ride to Baker Village, Sunday, to visit an officer friend. On the way back he missed three buses before he learned one had to get on at the front end.

Ossie kept trying to get on at the rear, as in his own Virginia, and the disgusted drivers would pull out before Ossie could find the door.

Weighed In The Balance And Found Wanting

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

Dear Santa Claus:

I have been a good army wife this past year. I have limited myself to a weekly fit of hysterics. I'm sure you can't blame me for that one indulgence. You'd grant any woman that privilege when her meat tag number's 86 and the butcher calls out 23 just as you take it off the hook.

I have listened so long to the tiredness of our men and the need for peaceful quiet evenings I've at long last become accustomed to this lack of enthusiasm for any proposed entertainment. I have yet to see Lana Turner, Veronica Lake, and Alexis Smith on the screen. This will give you an idea how long ago it was since I forsook the movies as a diversion.

The daily recital of my woes and tribulations have sent him back to duty with a feeling that war and its problems were a simple affair compared to the struggle a woman endures. You'll agree that this is a perfectly proper state of mind for a military man, thinking his job is a mere bagatelle.

For these and many unmentioned virtues throughout the year I should like you to grant the following requests on Christmas Eve, when you visit Fort Benning:

1. Please bring me a new and up-to-date telephone book. At least twenty or more on each page have left the post for parts unknown. The remaining number have moved at least once. This would be a joint gift in a manner of speaking, for the pleasant operator who handles "Information" would be benefitted too.

2. Please give me a regular delivery of our evening and morning paper. Especially the morning paper. The husbands looking angrily for their morning paper up and down the block is an unnerving experience these dark mornings. A husband drumming his fingers on the dining room table, in lieu of a peaceful perusal of his paper, makes breakfast preparations a very jittery affair.

3. Please give me the name of a cleaner that won't shrink my husband's trousers to an adolescent gawky ankle length garment. I'd like this cleaner to be able to return my dresses with a reasonably straight hem, if that isn't asking too much.

4. And seriously, Santa, give me a little magic packet that will make me courageously cheerful and brave when my day arrives to move into civilian life. My many friends whom I call "Widows of Bataan" have set an example I should like to follow. I'm not sure that I wouldn't falter and a gift like this might be necessary for me to maintain the high standard of integrity and courage established by army women before me.

5. And lastly, please see that the hard working, competent and always gay staff of soldier newspapermen that give us our Bayonet each week are granted an especially wonderful holiday. Each week they give the entire personnel of the post their talent and abilities in creating the outstanding service paper of today. But maybe you've already planned something special for them.

For the granting of these wishes, Santa, I'll write a whole list of good resolutions at New Years, and remain,

Devotedly yours,
Eve

WHAT MEN LIVE BY

Chaplain Frank M. Thompson

Old Testament—"Man that is born of a woman hath but a short time to live and is full of misery."

Modern:

"Preach to the storm, and reason with despair,
But tell not misery's son that life is fair."

A rather discouraging outlook, since life is about the same in all ages. The external trappings, no; the basic facts, the fundamentals, yes. Now, as in the past, man is subject to disappointment, calamity; a prey to hunger, disease, death, and "the thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to." And yet man plods on, courageously, with his face toward the rising sun, because he is girded about, fortified by hope—that is what he lives by—

"It springs eternal in the human heart,
Man never is, but always to be, blest."

If it is cloudy today, it will be fair on the morrow. Sickness will give way to health; tears to laughter. Want now may be our portion, but some day the barns will be full to overflowing. In time there will be a cabin in the pines, a mansion on the hill.

That is the fine thing about life—the best is always out in front. It is true of the life that now is and the one to come.

In the play, "The Last Mile," a battered wretch in one of the cells, watching the condemned slowly making his way to the death house, cries out: "They talk about heaven; well, if there isn't one, there ought to be."

It is hope speaking—

"It's the rainbow to the storms of life,
The evening beam that smiles the clouds away,
And tints tomorrow with prophetic ray."

REVEILLE

By Muzzy

When we falls out for Reveille
so early every morn,
It's quite a job to make it and you're sorry that you're born.
Ya got to lace your boots an' fall out lookin' trim:
An' only one guy usta make it,
but he was awful prim.
Got everyone to wonderin' why they couldn't do just like him.

When we falls out for Reveille,
a seedy lookin' bunch,
Li'l Johnny Chance is standin' lookin' just as trim as Punch.
His boots are highly polished, his long coat's all acrease
An' Sergeant Butch gives us a look with murder in his face,
An' compliments Li'l Johnny cause he's allus in his place.

When we falls out for Reveille
an' hustles into ranks,
Johnny Chance is allus present, his coat down to his shanks.
The rest of us so crummy—Sergeant Butch is thunderous mad
An' he says to look at Johnny . . .
an example to be had;
Tho look like him we couldn't as our form was very bad.
He orders Johnny to peel his coat and show us dumb galoots
Just how the well-dressed soldier looks in britches, blouse and boots.
So when Johnny doffs his well creased coat, we get a good long glance;
An eyebrow raises, a smile appears—the Sergeant's eyes are slants
For Li'l Johnny sure fell out—but Chance without his pants!

Day-Room Duds

By SGT. HARRY R. CHARD

"I'll give you a lift, buddy," the post heavyweight champ whispered in the ear of his opponent just before cutting loose with a right uppercut.

RED LIGHT

Personally posting recruit Biggs on guard, the officer of the day pointed at a red light at the far end of the dim warehouse.

"That," he instructed, "is the limit of your post." Thirty days later Biggs reported back on the post and informed the O. D. he had reached the red light. It was a tail light on a furniture van bound for Omaha.

ON OUR POST

A certain K. P. had the habit of spilling garbage on the kitchen floor. The mess sergeant, a real tough egg, decided to put a stop to it. He grabbed the K. P. by the neck, shoved his nose in it, then hurled him through the window. But the next day the hapless K. P. made the same mistake again. As the mess sergeant started for him, he got down on his knees, dipped his nose in the garbage, hopped up, and out the window he jumped.

"How do you like this picture of a drunkard?"

"Why, that's only a blank piece of paper."

"Sure it is—he got drunk and passed out of the picture."

"There's the big shot of the army," said the soldier—pointing at the 16-inch gun.

"Hell's bells," remarked the dog-face as the alarm clock went off.

FAMOUS LAST WORDS

Get in! I'm not too tight to drive.

Recruit: "The soles you put on these G. I. shoes are too thick."

Post cobbler: "Ah, that objection will soon wear off."

BLANKETY BLANK

Listen soldier, if your brains were sorted, they wouldn't grade two ounces to the ton—you look just like a cancelled postage stamp.

HIGH EXPLOSIVE

A barber supply salesman told the regimental barber that the price of hair tonic was due to skyrocket in a few days, so the barber decided to take advantage of the tip by purchasing 500 bottles. Months passed, yet the price of hair tonic remained the same.

Then one day, while inspecting, the C. O. noticed all the tonic and said to the barber, "you sell a lot of tonic, don't you?"

"No sir!" replied the barber. "I don't sell a lot of tonic, The salesman that sold me this; he's the guy that sells a lot of tonic."

Pvt. Hooey: "There's the bird that killed a company single-handed during the war."

Pvt. Phooey: "Was he a machine gunner?"

Pvt. Hooey: "Nah! A slum burner."

Upon seeing his first shower bath, Rookie Jenkins, from the hill country, sang the following ballad with appropriate gestures:

There's a thing in the army
Beats all I've seen before;
The water comes out of the ceiling
And runs through a hole in the floor!

"Did you hear how the chaps came out at the fight last nite?"

"Yeah; on a stretcher."

BULL-ONEY

Hi, fellows! Did you ever meet the editor of the "Bayonet?" Well he's a swell fellow and a practical joker. He asked me recently what I'd do if I was out on a desert with a gun and only one shell and in the distance a wild bull was charging toward me, while a few feet away a large rattler was coiled and ready to strike.

I told him I would shoot the snake. He said that was the sensible thing to do, for I could shoot the bull any old time.

When the chow ain't quite done, the cooks get that collegiate yell, "Raw, Raw, Raw!"

Corp. Binks: "Sir, that's a bum looking scarecrow you have in your garden."

Captain: "I'll give you to understand that you are talking about my wife."

Moonshiners are getting jealous of the fancy labels on bottled in bond, so now their giggle water bears the following label:

"Try hillside, inside, for that goofy feeling.

"Mountain made — for army trade."

The USO Presents

By Cpl. Solomon Kleindorf

Sorry there wasn't any column last week, but it seems as if all the clubs were resting up for Christmas, and I don't blame them. . . . They have a big week planned. . . . The first thing on the list is a little thank-you note to all the clubs for the fine service they have been performing with their Wrapping Service. . . . All you have to do is buy the gift—they wrap it in very fancy paper, bees-utiful ribbons and then prepare them for mailing. . . . They even mail them for you if it is so requested.

Next on the list, is the week at the Salvation Army-USO Club in Columbus. . . . Tomorrow is going to be a big day at the club. Instead of the usual Christmas cards, the men of Fort Benning will be given a chance to make some really fine Christmas talking-cards to send home. . . . The recording machine will be placed near the piano so that the song "White Christmas" may be sung and placed on the record. . . . Don't worry, there will be somebody there who can sing. . . . And speaking of singing, reminds me that Edgar White will be at the club starting today and remaining through Xmas, and will lead the men in Christmas Carols for his entire stay. . . . This coming Wednesday will see a big party, sponsored by the Wynnton Club, with a still larger Xmas tree at the club. . . . Be sure to be there, as girl will receive a gift.

And now for a little dirt about the club. . . . Mell Talbot has finally finished the sweater for Jim, and if she seems to have her mind wandering off somewhere else, don't be harsh with her. . . . Jim is arriving for a visit around the 26th of December.

There are now 20 teams in the 9th St. USO Basketball league. . . . It started with ten teams in one league and now has branched into two. . . . Some more dope from the 9th St. Club is that the High School Glee Club of Columbus will entertain the dancers at the regular Thursday dance this evening, with Christmas carols. . . . Monday will see the Cabaret night built around the Christmas theme. . . . There will be a tree and all the gals will bring little novelties to hang thereon. . . . Don't forget—there are now a regular switchboard and eight telephones with which to make all your long-distance calls.

A flash has just come into the office, and it says that more than 5,000 packages were wrapped by the different USO clubs over this week-end. . . . Another flash says, there will be a bit of entertainment at the Columbus SA-USO this Saturday by the Station Hospital orchestra. . . . That is a plenty good outfit and shouldn't be missed.

* * *

Here is a little advance dope on the new policy ever at the SA-USO in Phenix City. . . . Every Saturday, some kind of real entertainment will be presented by the club. . . . Don't tell anyone we told you, but just be there and then let us know how you like it.

Peeks at Pics

James Ellison, Heather Angel, and John Howard are co-starred in the new 20th Century-Fox mystery thriller, "The Undying Monster". The story winds around the history of the Hammond family, which states that all members of the family must and do die a horrible death at the hands of a werewolf. . . . Howard and Angel are all that is left of the Hammonds, and James Ellison is a detective who is called in to help solve the mystery. There are chills and thrills in the best "grade B" manner, which isn't saying much.

The other feature of the double bill is a western, "Pardon My Gun", with Charles Starrett. . . . Not better than the average horse-opry and in spots plenty worse, "Pardon My Gun" limps across the screen. . . . The story has been told too many times before. . . . Someone is murdered on the way to town with a large amount of money. . . . Through a series of incidents the hero is framed and escaped to round up the real culprits. . . . Just before the end of the feature, the hero fights it out with the leader of the bad men and it ends with a clinch between the conquering hero and the bashful heroine.

"The Black Swan" is another of those swash-buckling stories that have come from the pen of Rafael Sabatini, author of "Captain Blood" and many others. . . . Tyrone Power plays the role of Jamie Waring and makes love whenever he can to Maureen O'Hara, as Margaret Denby. . . . This is one of the few times Laird Cregar does not play one of villians. . . . Even in this he can't be too good, so they gave him the role of the pardoned pirate Henry Morgan. . . . Jamie is a pirate who reforms when Morgan is made the governor of Jamaica, and is offered a king's pardon. . . . But there are a few that will not pledge allegiance to the crown and desert Morgan's command to become freebooters on their own. . . . The head of these is Captain Billy Leech, otherwise known as George Sanders. . . . And thus the story progresses. . . . There are plenty of fencing duels, free-for-alls and all around action.

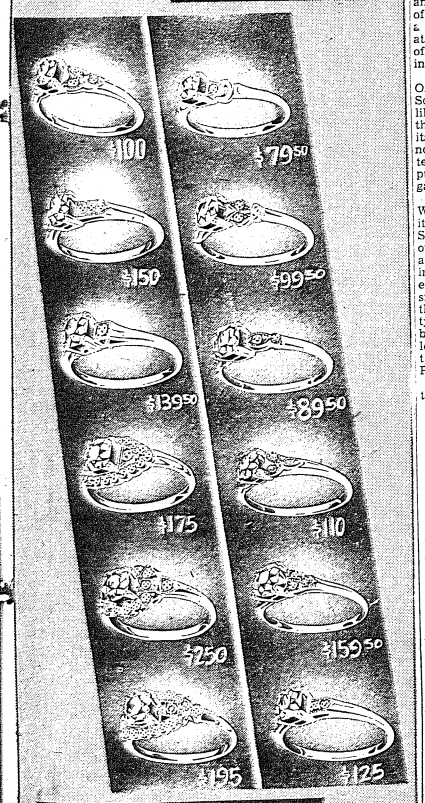
"White Cargo" is the new version of the well-known Broadway play. . . . Hedy Lamarr does the lead, with Walter Pidgeon and Frank Morgan doing a very good support. . . . It is the story of a young, beautiful girl, who bewitches all of the white men entering her section of the jungle. . . . Pidgeon, in the role of the company director, is the only one who doesn't fall under her spell. . . . And is the main factor in the fight against her, finally winning by having her poisoned.

* * *

The last but not the least of the features this week, is "A Night to Remember", starring Loretta Young and Brian Aherne. . . . A murder is committed in the basement apartment of the Troys, who are played by the leads and the chase is on. . . . Jeff Troy is a novelist and takes the apartment because it is in Greenwich Village, and he may be able to get some material there. . . . Nancy is the typical, slightly wacky wife, belonging to all screen detectives.

LAFF OF THE WEEK—

CAMP HOOD, Tex. (CNS)—A buck private, said to be the dumbest soldier at this Post, had been the victim of practical jokes time after time and was beginning to doubt all of his buddies and their motives. One night while he was on his first guard duty stint, one of the officers came up to him in the darkness.



"Who goes there?" he challenged.

"Maj. Moses," replied the officer.

The rookie scented another hoax.

"Glad to meet you, Moses old top," he cracked. "Advance forward and give the Ten Commandments."

Fort's Communication System Would Be Credit to Large City

Photographic Laboratory Is Being Added To Set-up

BY. CORP. PAUL F. CUNNINGHAM
Signal Corps

Our readers have perhaps wondered from time to time at the speed and precision of the communication system here at Fort Benning, a system which is equal to, if not better than many in large cities throughout the country.

You might well marvel at this system when you stop to think awhile of the many and varied activities is combines, all of which are handled by a handful of men, members of the Detachment, Signal Corps at Large, 4th Service Command. These man, most of them graduates of technical schools at Fort Monmouth, N. J., the home of the Signal Corps, sparked by the quiet and intelligent leadership of Lt. Col. Alexander W. Young, Post Signal Officer, and amazing vitality of Capt. Herbert W. Cooley, Asst. Signal Officer, Signal Property Officer and their company commander, cover a tremendous amount of territory in the course of a day's work. Let's pause for a moment and catch a quick look at some of these activities, each of which is so vitally important in this great war machine.

First, we have the Telegraph Office, situated in the Infantry School building, and which hums like a beehive every moment of the day and night, as also does its big sister the Radio Station, now housed in Post Headquarters, and which never ceases to put truth to the Signal Corps slogan, "Get The Message Through."

The Signal Property Office and Warehouse comes next, although it is very difficult to say which Signal activity comes before the other in importance because each and every one of them is equally important to the other. The Property Office and Warehouse smoothly and efficiently cope with the large issues of Signal Property which pass through its doors both going and coming, all day long, to and from every one of the many organizations on the Post.

The telephone system, one of the finest in the country, is maintained in collaboration with Southern Tel. & Tel. Co., by a crew of men who typify the hardy and courageous spirit of the Corps. In telephone parlance they are called "The Bull Gang," or line crew, without whom the message would never get through.

PIGEON DETACHMENT

Another ever expanding activity in this compact system and under the careful and able scrutiny of Lt. Arthur M. Lehman, is the Pigeon Detachment, which by careful breeding of choice Homers is fast forging to the front of all Signal Corps work, not only on this post but throughout the world.

Repairs, so very essential where anything technical is concerned, are presided over by genial Lt. Kenneth G. Flook in the Signal Corps' own repair shop, a very important cog in the Signal Corps wheel.

Last, but far from least, there is the Signal Office itself, housing the administrative offices, telephone exchange and detachment orderly room, and which may rightly be called the nerve center of Fort Benning, and even now, as we take our leave of these very busy people of the Signal Corps, another activity is being added to the already many and varied ones mentioned. It will be a photographic laboratory, and needless to say, it will be handled in the same smooth and efficient manner as all the other duties of the Corps, which is tireless in its efforts to improve methods, and more quickly, "Get That Message Through."

LT. SCHWARTZ IS CAPTAIN

Announcement has been made of the promotion of First Lt. George Schwartz, Special Service Officer of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) to the rank of captain.

He has held the positions of Trial Judge Advocate, Special Service Officer, and Regimental Investigating Officer. His educational and legal background proving invaluable to him, Captain Schwartz has served on many Special Court-Martials and, on December 5, had the distinction of serving as trial judge advocate on the regiment's first General Court-Martial.

CAMERA CLUB

Soldiers who are interested in photography are invited to attend an organization meeting of a Camera Club to be sponsored by the YMCA-USO at 16 West 11th street in Columbus, according to Mr. E. F. Ackerman, director.

A dark room, and developing and enlarging facilities will be made available free of charge. Further details will be discussed at the first meeting, Tuesday, December 22 at 7:30 p. m. in the recreation center.

Yanks Report On African Wogs

American soldiers in West Africa, those stationed south of Dakar, are writing home descriptions of new acquaintances they are making.

All natives are called "wogs." They don't wear shoes, and are their feet tough! One soldier writes that when the African natives click their heels for a salute, it is almost as loud as if the wog were wearing shoes.

The West Coast African plays a good game of soccer barefooted and he also fights by kicking. If a kick lands, the native wins. Furthermore, while the "wogs" are regarded as lazy about work, they like to drill and will march cheerfully for hours in formation. American soldiers find both traits of African character equally astonishing.

FINANCE PROMOTES

Three enlisted men of the Detachment, Finance Department at Fort Benning, have been promoted to higher grades, according to an announcement by post headquarters. They are:

Tech. 4th Gr. George J. Frank, to technician 3rd grade; Tech 5th Gr. Angelo V. Carbone, to technician 4th grade; and Pfc. John G. Kopcak, to technician 5th grade.

When sleeping in the field without a cot, spread your raincoat over your improvised bed. This will prevent the ground dampness from chilling your body.

Officers Take Staff Course

2nd STR Shifts Personnel Assignments

With assignment of eight officers of the Second Student Training Regiment to enter the Battalion and Staff Officers advance course at Fort Benning, shifting of assignments in the entire regiment are announced today.

The group entering the advance course includes Lt. Col. Robert H. Garrison, Maj. John J. Hazel and Captains Robert L. Bowan, William C. Kahle, Maxwell A. Snead, Joshua V. Davidow, E. A. P. McCarthy and Edward T. Johnson.

Captain William H. Booth has now been assigned to succeed Col. Garrison in command of the Service Battalion, while 2nd Lt. Lawrence MacKenzie replaces Capt. Booth as commanding officer of Co. A.

Captain John B. Jacobs now is the new executive officer of the Fourth Battalion. Captain Norman W. Hueston succeeds Captain Rowan in command of 8th Company. First Lt. David R. Price replaces Captain Kahle at the 24th Company; Captain Richard H. Evans is in command of 22nd company, replacing Captain McCarthy and First Lt. Norman P. Patterson replaces Captain Jacobs in command of 19th company. First Lt. Russell S. Deetz is the new commanding officer of 20th Company.

When drinking water from a Lyster bag always let the water run from the faucet into your cup. Never dip the cup into the bag nor drink by putting your mouth to the faucet.

Drink plenty of water at intervals during the day but never a large amount at any one time, especially when you are overheated.

More Convenient Telephone Service Available at Columbus for Service Men

"Attended public telephone service," an arrangement of centrally located telephone facilities operated by trained attendants and maintained for the convenience of men in the Services, is now available in the Columbus U. S. O. Club at 100 Ninth Street, across the street from the Howard Bus Terminal.

The service is designed primarily to make telephone service, especially long distance, more convenient to Fort Benning soldiers.

The attendants are on duty from 5:30 p. m. to 10:30 p. m. on week days and from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m. on Sundays, but men of the armed forces also may use the telephones at other times.

They will find it especially helpful to place their calls while the attendants are on duty to provide rate quotations not normally obtainable from telephone directories, to make change and to assist otherwise in obtaining the most convenient service possible.

Gators, Breakers Place Three On All-Conference

Two Positions Landed By Dragons, Two-Nine; 11th Gains Other Slot

Cestary, Brown Unanimous Choices On Team Hailing From Eight States

Reflecting a wide spread of individual talent throughout the league, the first annual All-Conference team, selected this week by the Bayonet, allots places on the first eleven to five of the six units which formed the post's initial intra-mural grid conference.

On the honorary squad of 39 players, chosen after a careful survey of expert opinion, three first team positions went to the 124th Infantry Gators, loop champions, and the Breakers of the 117th Infantry who finished in third place. The 3rd Armored Dragons and 29th Infantry Devils each landed two slots, with the final one going to the fifth-place 11th Armored Tankers.

Eight states are represented on the first eleven, ranging in distance from California to Massachusetts, while New Jersey, Ohio and Florida each had a pair of home-state products selected for the Benning eleven. Soldiers from many other states were chosen for the remainder of the squad.

CESTARY NAMED CAPTAIN

Two players were unanimously selected by the board of experts, composed of a representative from each team plus a Bayonet scribe. They were Roy Cestary, brilliant left halfback and captain of the champion Gators who is also named honorary captain of the mythical eleven, and Thurman (Stoop) Brown, the rangy left end of Breakers who was a standout all season.

Rounding out the first team backfield with Cestary are one of his team-mates, Spiro (Nick) Calos, stellar blocker and place-kicker of the 124th; Ken Smith, 117th's flashy wingback and only officer named; and John (Big Chief) Carney, the bull-like fullback of the 3rd Armored who was the most colorful performer in the conference.

Three of the backfield quartet had previous college experience. Cestary played freshman and sophomore ball at Notre Dame, Smith was a Hoosier star at the University of Indiana a few years back, and Carney performed at one time for the famed Haskell Indians, as well as at Oklahoma University.

EX-COLLEGE LINEMEN

Two other first team members also played collegiate football before entering the Army. They were Larsen of the Tankers who spent three years on the varsity at Santa Barbara State out in California, and Jim Hennessey of the 29th who was a cracker jack end for the Wolfpack of North Carolina State. Larsen was selected for a tackle berth, and Hennessey at end as Brown's running mate.

Selected opposite Larsen at the other tackle was burly Mike Hutchins, team captain and standout lineman for the Blue Devil machine of the 29th. The guards chosen were Green Howard, demon blocker of the Gators, and Karl Kneeland, a versatile line star for the 3rd Armored. Mike Banasieak, great backer-upper for the 117th, gained the pivot position, and lacked only one vote of being a unanimous selection. Hutchins, Howard and Smith also fell short by a single tally.

TACKLES ARE HEAVY

The forward wall is definitely representative of the type of lines that were in evidence all season in the loop. The tackles are the only 200-pounders on the first eleven, the guards are small but speedy, the center is rugged, and the ends are big and fast.

Behind this "perfect" line, the backfield is a nicely balanced offensive and defensive unit. It has Cestary to fireball the passes, crash the tackles and punt; Smith to skirt the ends; Carney to roar over center; and Calos to do the blocking and place-kicking with great skill. The Chief was also a good backer-upper. Cestary and Smith were standout defensive halfbacks, and Calos was a better-than-average safety who could alternate with Smith.

DREAM TEAM

All in all, the first eleven comes close to being a dream team that any coach in the conference would have liked to field as his starting line-up. Not only that, but the Bayonet is convinced that given the proper amount of practice as a unit, it is a team that could cope with some of the best collegiate opposition.

Cestary, the great Gator star, was a stand-out performer all season, and none could seriously challenge his right to position on the honorary team. He passed, punted and paced the champs all the way. His running at times was truly phenomenal and he ran the Gator eleven on the field with great finesse.

ANOTHER YOUNGSTOWN BOY

Hailing from Youngstown, Ohio, the home of Georgias All-American Frank Sinkwich, whom he played against in high school, the 185 pound, 5 foot 10 inch youth was not only a great player, but an inspiring leader as well. There was real drama in some of his feats. Against the 29th in the season finale, his team was trailing 7-0 and looked beaten when he took the ball on a slice over tackle, and raced 65-yards for the tying score. After that, he heaved a pair of perfect passes for the winning touchdowns.

Cestary was a marked man in almost every game he played, yet consistently he was the best player on the field. A great competitor, a fine athlete and a good soldier, the Youngstown boy is a great addition to any mythical team.

Smith, Cestary's running-mate at halfback, was a sterling back for the Breakers. He also did a share of the passing, played safety at times, and was a one-man backfield on defense where he stood out. Many an enemy score was thwarted when Smith would come from nowhere to bring down a runner in the clear.

CARNEY DEPENDABLE

Carney besides being "most colorful" was also probably "most dependable." Whenever the Dragons needed that extra yard, the stands would let out a war whoop and yell "Give it to the Chief," and when they did, he was almost sure to bull through for the yardage. He was also a great sport, and as hard driving a fullback as Doughboy Stadium saw all year.

Calos got the nod at quarterback because he was a versatile performer of great skill. His blocking went unnoticed in the Gator trip to the title, but it was a big factor. He was fast and sure and cleared the way for many of Cestary's great runs. His accuracy in booting field goals was also an invaluable aid to the winners.

DEANE GREAT FOR LOSERS

Pushing the first four for mythical honors are a flock of other good backs, led by Lieut. Carl Deane, coach and flashback of the 55th Engineers who failed to win a game in the conference. Playing in a losing cause, the former Duke Rose Bowl ace was an amazing performer. He ran with reckless abandon, passed and punted when necessary and was all over the grid on defense.

Litwak, the former little All-American from Western Reserve was a great blocker, who also took a hand at ball-carrying and looked good in spots. He did all the ball-handling when the Dragons used a T-formation, and was a reliable punter. Hackney of the Gators was a high-stepper who could really move once in the open, and Bryan was second only to Carney as a line-plunger and driving back.

ORCHIDS FOR BELIN

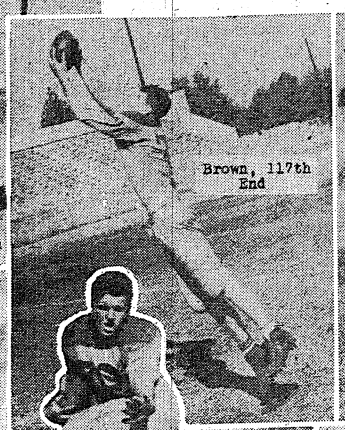
One lad who deserves plenty of orchids is Len Belin, the rangy end star of the Gators. Although, the voting showed Brown of the 117th to be a unanimous selection at one end, Belin ended in a tie with Hennessey for the other spot as far as total points were concerned. But the Two-Nine star had more first place votes and was given the nod, consigning Belin to the second team.

Brown was in a class by himself as a flank. He played recklessly in every game, and raised havoc with the opposition, messing up plays and blocking kicks. He also was a great pass-snagger and led the Breakers in scoring. Hennessey was reliable, a good pass receiver, and a staunch defensive flank.

Hutchins at tackle not only paced a fine forward wall for the 29th, but also did most of their punting. In the Gator game, his great work with a soggy ball was amazing. Paired with Larsen, it gives the team a pair of stellar tackles. Al Berasi of the Gators was a close third in the voting.

HAD GIANT CONTRACT

Larsen is the boy who was forced to relinquish a contract with the New York Giants to enter the service. Biggest man on the all-star team at 214, he played fine ball for Santa Barbara State, and was selected for the Gauchos' all-time eleven when he finished school there in 1940. He was a real big-timer on a Tanker team that won only one game.



Most of the good guards in the loop belonged to the 124th who had a fine trio in Howard, Aulenti and Tavarone. All three made the squad, but Howard's superlative blocking and tackling gained him first team honors. Karl Kneeland, his running mate from the 3rd got very little notice, but he played consistently all season. Besides his other duties, he also handled the ball on the Dragon team's trickly guard-lateral that scored late season touchdowns.

Banasieak was a good ball-snapper, a good blocker, and a good backer-upper, but his best field was pass defense. Time and again, he not only batted down enemy aerial thrusts, but intercepted, and in the final game against the 55th, he raced 60 yards with one of the interceptions to record the longest run of the year in the conference. Giraulo of the 29th, Keller of the 124th and Baldon of the 3rd were all great centers, but his all-around ability gained Banasieak the honors.

Prizefighter K. O.'d Nazi Bundists As A Sideline

PFC Abramowitz Of 29th Infantry Had 'Interesting' Life

A prizefighter and boxing promoter who fought the German-American Bund movement in New Jersey with their own methods, now as a soldier at Fort Benning and is hoping to train his guns on the much bigger game of the Nazis in Germany itself.

He's Pfc. Sidney Abramowitz, of First Battalion Headquarters, 29th Infantry. During his fighting and managing days he was well known as Nat Arno back in his home town of Newark, N. J.

He began his fistic career at the age of 14 after he had lost $25.00 given him by his father to buy a new suit—the lost occurring in a dice game. He had gained fame as a battler among his cronies of Newark, and was approached by a promoter to appear in an "amateur bout," but he managed to get the $25.00 even though an amateur.

FIRE WITH FIRE

After that he entered the ring, became interested in politics and the entertainment world of Newark. When the Bundists began their preaching of hatred and distrust under the guise of patriotic meetings, he organized some of his friends and met fire with fire.

Soon he was leader of nearly 2,000 men of all races and creeds who saw with dismay what the Bundists were endeavoring to accomplish. They raided meetings, managed to steal orders from Germany, and often engaged in pitched battles with the Nazis. Finally the F. B. I. singled him out as a vital source of information on Bundist activities, and he happily engaged in securing information of vital nature.

Now he has ambitions to enter OCS and hopes to be leading troops, into Germany against the bosses of the Nazis he previously fought in his home bailiwick.

Carding 88 for his last 18 holes, Sgt. Alphonse Bedalis recently won the enlisted men's golf championship of Ft. Hancock, N. J. Zedalis had earlier toured the difficult course in 90, bringing his total to 178 for the 36 holes of madal play.

They're still playing baseball on the West Coast! Camp Kohler's (Cal.) baseball team won its third game last week in Sacramento's Winter League by trouncing the Oakland Rookies, 9 to 1.

BAT BATS 'EM!

Amerigo L. (Bat) Battinelli, a member of the 29th Infantry's Medical Detachment, recently copped the regimental handball championship and has now issued an open challenge to anyone on the post to meet him for the Benning title. The crack handballer gained the 29th crown by winning 40 games and losing but two. Battinelli was quite a star in A. A. U. competition before entering the service, and has a room full of trophies and medal at home. He plays mostly single wall handball, but will play four wall games if desired. His challenge also applies to officers, and anyone wishing to stack up against Bat on the handball court is requested to contact the Special Service Office of his regiment for arrangements.

First Sgt. Czeslaw Jablonowski, of Ft. Eustis, Va., played on the Polish hockey team in the 1932 Winter Olympic games held at Lake Placid, N. Y. Jablonowski was captain and manager of the team.

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Culling through the sports pages of the Columbus Ledger of 10 years ago the other day, we ran across stories of Benning sports a decade ago, that would surely revive fond memories for old-timers. The year was 1932, and Benning was a Baby compared to the colossal fort of 1942. But football was then as now a favorite sport with the soldiers, and it was just a year ago this coming Saturday that two teams met for the post championship.

The rival squads were the Kellys of the 29th Infantry's 2nd Battalion, and the 1st Battalion's Irish of the same regiment. The Kellys won the game, 6-0, but the interesting thing about the story was the great similarity between that game and the one played just a couple weeks back between the 124th Gators and the 29th Blue Devils.

In '32, as now, Doughboy Stadium was the home of Benning football. A huge crowd, considering the post's much smaller population at that time, saw the game. And at halftime, the lads ten years ago "cut up" in much the same manner as the Gators and the Devils this year, except that perhaps it was a little more rough and tumble.

Seems that the Irish cohorts went through a mock ceremony of executing a Kelley player by hanging a dummy dressed in a Kelly uniform and cutting off his head. Then the Kelly supporters charged on the field, and a rough and tumble battle for the "body" resulted with the dummy eventually being torn to shreds.

Kelly rooters retaliated by staging a mock football game using a bursted ball. The game was a real farce, with stretcher bearers toting away the injured. In the midst of everything, a lady with a very short skirt and a highly painted face, rushed on the field brandishing an umbrella. Seemed that her husband had been hurt, and when one of the "medicos" proceeded to "saw" off his leg, she fainted dead away. Then the entire team carried her from the field in an undignified manner as the crowd roared. At the end, it developed that the "lady" was Pvt. Slim Chapman of the 2nd Battalion. It's amazing how similar that intermission was to the one last week when the Gator victims ganged up on Hitler and Co.

The game itself also showed many similarities. The winning score came on a 66-yard run around the right side of the line by Tommy Thompson, star back of the Kellys. Last week's turning point was a 65-yard dash also around the right side by Roy Cestary, Gator star. Then in the third period of the 1932 game, a 45-yard touchdown play by the winners was called back because of the penalty, and the play caused great discussion. In the Gator-Devil fracas, a 48-yard touchdown by Cestary was likewise called back, and a disputed penalty inflicted. And that also was in the third period. Do you still think that history doesn't repeat itself?

Interesting to note, also, was that then as now, the infantry elevens were at the top of the heap, and had gained the right to play for the post crown by toppling the Terrible Tankers and Galloping Gunners who represented tank and artillery units on the post in 1932. An outstanding player for the Kellys in that game was Sam Prophet at tailback. Now in the I. S. S. C., Prophet was an official in the 1942 conference.

Prophet was one of the outstanding backs at the post that year with his swivel-hipped running, accurate passing and good kicking. He was rewarded at season's end with a spot on the All-Benning team selected by Jack Gibney, now WRBL's ace sports announcer, and then the Benning sports writer for downtown papers. Ends on that team were Wilson 2nd Bn., 29th) and Love (66th Tanks). Alvord (66th Tanks) and Cappell (2nd Bn., 29th) were the tackles while Pressley and Rhodes (both 1st Bn., 29th) were the guards. The center was Carlin (2nd Bn., 29th). Besides Prophet in the backfield were Jordan (1st Bn., 29th) a unanimous selection, and two lads from the Terrible Tankers named Matthews and Swantic.

Sunday's gala grid dinner at the Polo Hunt Club marked a fitting finale to the greatest football campaign that Fort Benning has ever seen in its 24 years of existence. The slogan of the F. B. A. A., sponsors of the conference, and donors of the dinner, is "Keep 'Em Playing," and that is exactly what the organization did this year. There were fifteen games in the loop, a great number outside the league played both at home and away, and eight games played by the two colored elevens.

It is safe to say that no one locality in the country had more football games this fall than we did right here on the reservation. All details for these games cleared through the office of the F. B. A. A. and it was a behemoth task. Everyone from Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, the head man of the organization, right down to the office girls who made the programs every week, deserve a real pat on the back for their splendid contribution to the success of the campaign. The conference dinner, paid for entirely out of F. B. A. A. funds, added the perfect closing touch. It was one of the nicest affairs of its kind ever given at Benning. Yes, sir, the F. B. A. A. really kept 'em playing this year, and more than lived up to its slogan.

Zientara Paces Academic Quint To 38-18 Victory

124th Gators Outclassed By Veteran Team In Practice Game

Paced by Benny Zientara, the Academic Regiment's Profs administered a basketball lesson to a brand new Gator quintet from the 124th Infantry Saturday night at the post gym by a 38-18 count.

The more experienced Profs ran up their seventh straight early season victory in impressive fashion and definitely established themselves as a contender for Fort Benning conference laurels late in the campaign.

Zientara, a former major league baseball player with the Cincinnati Reds, dropped four field goals and a trio of fouls to lead both fives in scoring with 11 points. Three of his double-deckers were spectacular long shots that barely flocked the rim. The bandy-legged guard also played a good floor game.

The other scoring leader for the Profs, runners-up in last year's loop race, was Lieut. Frank Shannon, coach of the Academic Regiment, who looped in three field goals and a foul for seven points. Shannon is a former Wittenberg (Ohio) college ace.

No one player stood out for the losers, although several of them showed great promise for the Orange and Blue. The Gators have only been practicing a short time, and had played one practice tussle prior to Saturday. The Profs, on the other hand boasted a veteran squad than won almost as it pleased.

Sport Slants On The Camps

March Field's (Cal.) hottest softball team in years—the Medical Detachment club—received a large loving cup as a permanent trophy emblematic of the 1942 Post championship. The Meds, besides winning the Post title, won 77 of their 95 games against all comers in Southern California. That's playing pu-lenty of ball!

Bob Pastor, one of the leading contenders for the heavyweight title, announced his retirement from the ring for the duration last week. Pastor intends to enlist in the armed services, but has not yet decided which branch it will be.

The table tennis team of Chanute Field, Ill., proved the power in their paddles when they decisively overpowered the University of Illinois team 28 to 8 for the second time recently at the Chanute Service Club.

Ft. Monmouth's (N. J.) football team continued to drive toward its second successive 2nd Service Command championship by crushing the Camp Upton, N. Y., eleven 32 to 0 last week. The Ft. Monmouth gridders scored in every period.

Aviation Cadet Jimmy Crowell won the first annual cross-country championship held at Maxwell Field, Ala., recently. Crowell streaked over the rough two and one-quarter miles in 12 minutes, 9 seconds.

"A" Co. Gains 29th Basketball Laurels With 28-24 Triumph

In a tight game of basketball, Company "A" eked out the 29th championship Saturday with a win over Company "E." The score which was 28-24, and was kept low as the result of a man to man game. Two overtime periods had to be played to decide the best team on the court.

Jim Hennessy, the winner's most spirited player, began the tie-scorched overtime when with 30 seconds to go, he threw one in, and tied up the ball game. Bob Keary, star of the 1942 post champs, played his usual cool game, but could not out-smart the "A" men. Biglasco of "A" company was the big gun, and his 8 points led the scoring.

Both teams played good defensive ball, and hard and clean. Company "A" will receive a large trophy, as will the battalion winners.

Well Trained Technicians With 32nd Hospital Unit

C. O. Is Plastic Surgery Specialist

When the 32nd Station Hospital unit now training at Fort Benning, takes to the field, the personnel will be made up of the most highly trained technicians it is possible for modern scientific training to produce.

Now composed of several hundred officers and enlisted men, the organization has been recently expanded to provide for a full 300 bed field hospital.

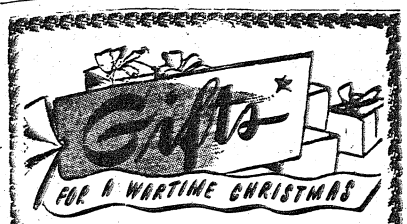
Training now is going on at Fort Benning, with the enlisted personnel being educated as specialist technicians in several fields. They will be medical assistants, dental technicians, surgical technicians, X-ray specialists and sanitary experts. In addition, many are being specially prepared for the administrative work necessary to run a big modern hospital under field conditions in any theater of war to which the organization may be sent.

Officers are all physicians and surgeons, except those who are in the administrative branch. Lt. Col. Theodore Burstein commandant of the organization, is from Canton, Ohio, a specialist in plastic surgery and a veteran of the World War I when he was battalion surgeon of the Third Battalion of the 53rd Heavy Field Artillery.

CHAPLAIN A VETERAN

Another veteran of the last war is newly appointed Chaplain John B. Shearer, wearer of the Purple Heart and participant as an enlisted man in five major campaigns with the American Expeditionary Force. He also served with the Army of Occupation following the Armistice. He is a recent graduate of the Chaplains School at Harvard University.

The 32nd Station Hospital was formed a year ago at Barksdale Field, La., then went to Camp Rucker, Ala., where training was begun. It has been here since October, with many of the personnel taking special training in various fields of actual hospital practice at the Post Hospital.



When training is complete, the organization will be fitted to set up a field hospital, working as a complete unit behind battle lines. It will have its own corps of five ambulances and other automotive equipment as well.

Attached to it in the actual field will be a complement of Army nurses now being trained at another base. The group will care for cases removed from the battalion aid stations and will be fully equipped as a modern hospital.

SOURCE OF PERSONNEL

Officers of the organization are drawn from the ranks of doctors and dentists assigned to medical department organizations. In addition, the War Department assigns medical administrative corps officer personnel to handle administrative details, thus relieving the professionally trained men to devote their entire time to the tasks for which they are best qualified.

Many of them are former enlisted men who earned their commissions in attendance at officer candidate schools. First Lieutenant Albert H. Hanssen, Jr., Baltimore, Md., adjutant of the 32rd, is a former enlisted man who had served at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., where he was regimental sergeant major of the 104th Medical Regiment, 29th Infantry Division.

Yuletide Greetings Sent Home in Talking Letters

Records Being Made By Pepsi-Cola Unit

Christmas greetings in the form of "talking letters" to the home folks now are being made by personnel of Fort Benning through a portable unit that will visit various spots on the post.

The unit is brought to Fort Benning through courtesy of the Pepsi-Cola company and at present is at Service Club No. 3. It will visit other areas of the post as well.

The recordings and mailings are all free to the men of the post, it was announced by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, of the post Special Services office.

Messages may be of a nature to fit the Christmas season or may be anything that the soldier desires to send, it was emphasized. Several suggested messages are printed to guide senders. They are recorded on small discs that will fit any phonograph, and they run a minute and a half.

For guidance of men making the recordings, Lt. Col. Finnegan stated that the messages must be of a completely personal nature and must not contain any information about the camp or the armed forces; must not state number of men on the post nor mention type of equipment in use, or where a man may be going, or give out any similar information. Messages such as those printed by the company have the approval of morale officers and are recommended for direct use or guidance in making up messages.

1st STR Candidate Holds Extensive Travel Record

If Candidate Tom Sather, 16th Company, First Student Training Regiment, is sent into the European theater of operations, he'll know his way around.

Tom was born and reared in Tromso, Norway. For the geographically uninformed, this is a coastal city in the land of the Midnight Sun, 160 miles north of Narvik and at 70 degrees latitude (making it slightly colder than Georgia). It is, or was, an important port in the Russian and Arctic trade.

Tom's father is a former British consul. His parents and one brother and sister were still in Tromso when last he heard from them, which was in a letter dated December 6, 1941. Another brother, Cai, is training with Norwegian forces in Canada.

Practically born with skis in his mouth, Tom later became a ski instructor.

ACCOMPLISHED LINGUST

But his knowledge is not only of things Norwegian. In addition to having travelled extensively in his native country and Sweden he has visited England, Russia, Spain, German, Greece, Persia, Egypt, Australia, Dutch West Indies, Arctic Islands and South American ports. He speaks Norwegian, Swedish, Danish, German and English fluently.

Candidate Sather left his native land in 1939, working his way around the world on boats. He landed in the United States on April 9, 1940—a date he is not likely to forget, since it was the same day Norway was invaded.

Drafted in October, 1941, in Los Angeles, Tom served his military apprenticeship at Camp Callan before coming to Benning for officers' training.

Now a naturalized citizen, Tom would like nothing better than to be sent to Norway—to fight for the continued freedom of his adopted country and to help free the land of his birth.

Service Club Wins Compete

Coming back after several week's lay off, the Service Club Quiz team proved they were definitely in the groove as they defeated the officers from Division Headquarters Company in the weekly quiz contest by the score of 375 to 340 at the Service Club No. 2.

Both teams had many loyal supporters on the side lines rooting and cheering when their team members came through with the correct answers. Jokes and wise cracks flew back and forth between members of both teams.

The winning team was composed of Mr. Sanford Axelrod and Mr. Ralph Ellis, both newly appointed Warrant Officers, Sgt. Gordon Abele of the 3rd Regiment and Master Sergeant Saul Miller of the Artillery Command.

The officers team was composed of Captain C. F. Meinzinger, and Lieutenants Byford Long, Thomas St. John O'Rorke and Steve Lang.

Cigarettes were awarded to the winners.

54th Recruits Are Commended

Special letters of commendation for their rapid adaptability to Army life and assurances of promising military careers have been given thirteen recruits of Regimental Headquarters Company, 54th Infantry by Captain George A. Renoux, company commander.

Generally, the commendations covered neatness, alertness in carrying out orders, aggressiveness and being a credit to the organization. The men are:

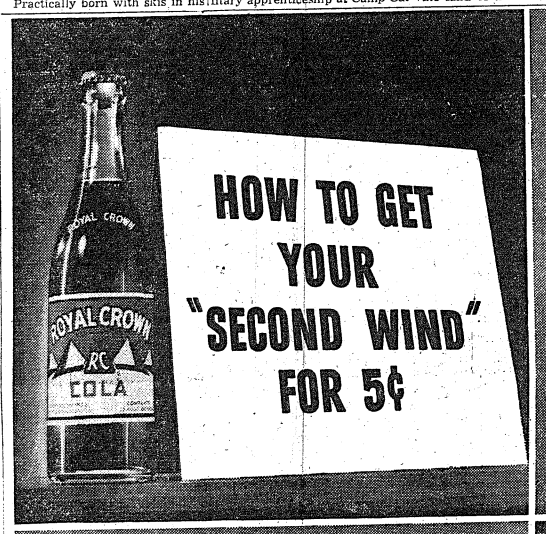
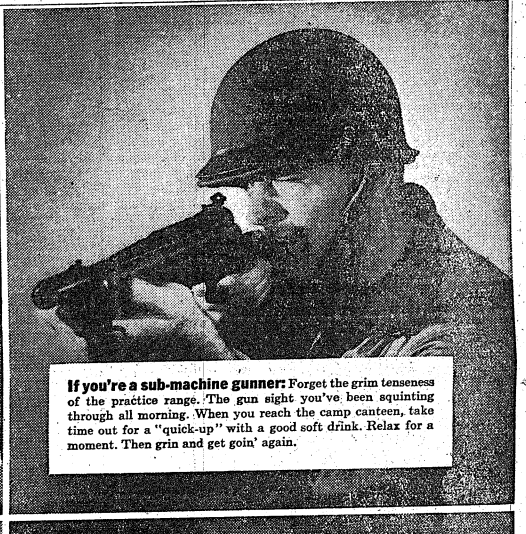
Captain George A. Renoux recently promoted Privates Charles Brock and Charles Kidd to privates first class.

When orders have been issued that all drinking water must be boiled, be sure that the water you drink has been boiled for 20 minutes and not merely heated a little.



Military Police Promoted Twelve

Eleven enlisted men of the Corps of Military Police have been promoted to higher grades, according to an announcement by post headquarters. They are:



Staff Sgt. Carl W. Baughn, to 1st sergeant; Sgt. Ikey Bentley, to staff sergeant; Cpls. Charles C. Edwards and Henry C. Daniel, to sergeant; Pfcs. Louis L. Lipp and Robert M. Skelton, to corporal; and Pvts. Shelby R. Bryan, Arthur B. McCready, Leon S. Plunk, James B. Strange, and Paul H. Weismann, to private 1st class.

If you're a sub-machine gunner: Forget the grim tenseness of the practice range. The gun sight you've been squinting through all morning. When you reach the camp canteen, take time out for a "quick-up" with a good soft drink. Relax for a moment. Then grin and get goin' again.

If you're a parachute maker: When your recess comes, s-t-r-e-t-c-h! Look far away from those billowing white folds you've been sewing. Then look far enough to find the nearest soft drink cooler. Get a lift with a good soft drink. Then go back to your 'chute-sewing with a smile.

If you're an air raid warden: When the siren sounds, see that all lights on your post are out. Shoo the curious indoors. Patrol your beat until the "all clear" sounds. 507th Defeats Pepsi-Cola Foe

Having won their first game, the 507th Parachute Infantry basketball team is out for big-time competition, with games now scheduled against Georgia, Auburn and Georgia Tech. Arrangements are now being completed for games with Georgia Pre-Flight, Alabama, Pensacola Naval Training, and Florida as well.

The first game, against the Columbus Pepsi-Cola Five, played last Friday, was won by a score of 34-30 and it was one of those games that furnish more than enough thrills and excitement for the spectators.

Starring for the parachute lads were Ray Walters, former Rice Institute star, who rang the basket no less than eight times for the jumpers, and Lt. Ardziejewski who was a bulwark at a guard. The lieutenant is a former Ripon (Wis.) college star. The team is coached and captained by Lt. Lillge, an ex-pro who played with the famed Oshkosh All-Stars of the National Pro League.

The score at half time was 16 to 12 in favor of the 507 boys and the game was bitterly contested all the way.

117th Prepares For Court Loop

BY PVT. KEVE GRUNIN

With headgears, cleats and sweaters stowed away for another year, the 117th Infantry has turned its attention to another major sport—basketball.

The regiment is now in the process of organizing and developing a quintet which has all intentions of being a "hot" contender for the Fort Benning basketball championship.

The team, under the supervision of its basketball mentor, Lt. Lester Soldz, has been working out in the Harmony Church Sports Arena for the past two weeks, and soon the Breakers will be ready and set to clash with all sorts of competition.

A good number of candidates turned out for the first few try-outs and practice sessions and now the team has been cut down to approximately 28 men. When the season gets into full swing the Breakers will be carrying 20 cagers on the squad.

The 117th Infantry intends employing a combination and variation of the man-to-man and zone system of defensive play. Making use of this particular type of defensive play has proven to be highly successful, as can be verified by some of the most progressive basketball outfits.

Something new in offensive play will be demonstrated by the Breakers when they encounter their first loop opponents.

Their style of play will be somewhat unorthodox, but it should run up a good number of points in their score column.

Outstanding Breaker prospects are Bowlin, Moore, Hite, Williams, Vaughan, Presnell, Dale and several others.

'Follow Me' Hoop Club Sets Pace

When it comes to ballyhooing basketball teams around Fort Benning this season, due credit should be paid to the Follow Me club of Headquarters Company of the Second Student Training Regiment.

The quintet is the same one which captured the title in last year's Fort Benning league, and it has gone through the present season undefeated to date in games with all comers on the post.

The team is competing in the USO league in Columbus, and won its first game last week against officers of the Third Student Training Regiment by a handy score of 35 to 27. The week previously they defeated the Headquarters Company quintet of the Third Regiment by 44 to 14, and their other victims include officers of the First Regiment, the 54th Air Base squad at Lawson Field, and the Professors of the Academic Regiment of the school.

The Follow Me club played its second game in the USO league last night. It is the current favorite to cop the title in this loop which includes six service teams and two civilian clubs. When the Post Tournament rolls around this winter the Follow Me boys can't be counted out of the running to defend successfully their title.

lands, Japanese submarines followed the boat for several days, Lt. Galang said. There were more than 60 Chinese aviators aboard, on their way to school in the United States, but the submarines did not get the boat that trip.

TWO OF FOOTBALL'S most popular Irish coaches got together last Sunday when Jack Meagher, Auburn Tiger mentor, came to Benning for the big grid dinner. He is shown above being escorted from the Ralston hotel in Columbus by Lt. Col. Charles C. (Casey) Finnegan, post athletic officer and formerly head coach at North Dakota State. Both were feature speakers later in the evening at the affair in the Polo Hunt club.

Boxing Card

The first boxing card of the winter season sponsored by the F. B. A. A., will be held tomorrow night in the Harmony Church sports arena. Eight attractive bouts will bring together crack colored punchers from the service battalions of the 1st and 3rd Student Training Regiments. Headline bout will be the battle between Georgie Pace, former world lightweight champ, and Dynamite Daniels, ex-Golden Glove title-holder. The Benning tussle will be a renewal of a fistic feud they started in New York a few years back. The first bout is scheduled for 8:30, and admission is free to all military personnel.

the Fort Benning board.

Since the work of registering tires was turned over to the Rationing Board, the name of the office has been changed to Mileage Rationing Board, a much more suitable description of the officer, according to Lipp, who pointed out his men worked to ration miles and thus conserve rubber on tires rather than to expressly ration gasoline and tires.

CONTACT OPA

In order to keep pace with the ever-changing regulations governing tires and gasoline, Corp. Lipp and his staff are in constant contact with OPA officials in Columbus and hold "inter-office" meetings nightly after working hours to compare new problems and work out correct explanations and decisions.

In addition to governing the use of basic and supplemental gas ration cards, the board is working hard to co-ordinate "pool the ride" clubs to cut down further on gas consumption and to impress on drivers the imperative need for taking the best of care of their present tires.

The enlisted men working in the office are thoroughly acquainted with the regulations on tire rationing and spends hours each day explaining such things as why it will be impossible for any driver to sell, rent or give away any of his tires to his father, brother or best friend without the permission of the Rationing Board.

"Tires will be classified, you see, and placed in different grades, according to their quality," Corporal Lipp explained, "and they will be allocated according to their quality to the drivers doing the most essential driving. For that reason, you will not be able to dispose of your tires without the permission of the board and even then if there is someone else in line for those tire before the person you want to give them to, the former is entitled to them."

Work of the board was praised by Lt. Col. Will, provost marshal, just before he left Ft. Benning for Military Police at Fort Custer, Mich. Colonel Will declared the men were doing an "excellent job," on their own initiative.

participated in the league schedule.

Movies of the Auburn-L. S. U. game were shown following Meagher's talk, and the Tiger coach gave a running comment as the soldiers watched the interesting slow-motion film.

MILTON HONORED

During the dinner, Capt. Harold (Red) Milton, coach of the title-winning 124th Gators, was presented with a traveling bag by the members of the Orange and Blue squad in appreciation of his efforts throughout the season. An autographed football used in the second Gator game with Auburn "B" was also presented to S. Sgt. James Moore of the 124th who was injured in the first Baby Tiger game.

At the start of the dinner, the all-conference selections of the Bayonet were announced by the toastmaster. As each first team member was announced, the honored player stood and took a bow. The second and third teams were applauded as units.

Overseas Men Filling Out Many Forms

Qualify for Info Please With 27 Point Quiz

American Army officers assigned to foreign duty should qualify as "Information, Please" experts after they have finished arranging their personal affairs.

The War Department makes sure that its officers are equipped and ready for any eventuality before they are ordered overseas and to accomplish this check, an officer assigned to an overseas base must complete a 27-point questionnaire.

If he can complete the questionnaire, he is ready for the trip. The questions deal with the settlement of all personal affairs, equipment and correct travel orders of the officer and many other details of that nature.

The check list asks if a will has been executed and if the officer has copies of such papers as power of attorney and orders permitting allotments. The officer is asked if he is insured; if he has in his possession copies of his orders, his pay card and other military papers necessary.

He must check to see if he is immunized against smallpox, lockjaw, typhoid, yellow fever and other diseases depending on the countries the officer will pass through.

Next he must check his identifications tags to determine if they are in proper order; must check his uniforms with the prescribed equipment and must secure a suit of civilian clothes if travel is to be through a neutral country.

And that's just a fair beginning.

In reporting to Congress on the progress of the war, President Roosevelt said that a million Americans would be overseas by the end of December and added that "the Axis powers have temporarily at least lost the initiative."

The Officer of War Information reported that from Dec. 7, 1941, to Dec. 7, 1942, the U. S. Armed forces suffered 58,307 casualties, (36,678 in the Army and 22,629 in the Navy).

The Navy announced the sinking of the 22,000-ton liner, President Coolidge, with a loss of only four men from a crew and passenger list of 4,000 Army troops.

War Production Board Chairman Donald Nelson described the October arms output as "disappointing" as it was up only three per cent over September.

Gallant Lad Progressing In Battle With Paralysis

Wants Singing Canary For Christmas Gift Anybody Have One?

Little 12-year-old Charlie Pearce, the former Austin Loop newsboy, who is fighting off an attack of infantile paralysis at Warm Springs, has always had a yearning for a yellow canary, a cheery singing one. But Charlie always had a cat—so—no canary. They just don't go togther.

Now Charlie is dividing his time between lying eight out of 48 hours in an iron lung at the famous Warm Springs center, and the rest of the time in bed. There's no place at the foundation for cats, but now Charlie can have his canary.

Only so far Charlie's parents, Lt. Col. and Mrs. Lovick B. Pearce of Austin Loop, haven't been able to locate one. They're trying their darndest, too. They know just how much Charlie would like one. He always was a bird fancier; has a heavy volume on our feathered friends which he used to study.

Colonel Pearce has advertised for a canary in the post's daily bulletin—but to no avail. He's tracing down a few leads, however, and hopes he'll soon have a singing canary to make Charlie's life a little happier. Anyone who can help is asked to communicate with Colonel Pearce at Fort Benning.

Charlie was a popular member of the young set of Fort Benning, and a familiar figure at Austin Loop. He was stricken with the disease on Sept. 5 and has been at Warm Springs Foundation since September 8.

the Post Office Department are endeavoring to perfect the Army postal system "that has delivered and received millions of tons of mail in the life of the soldier at home and overseas, Mr. O'Connell said that one of the first establishments which were set up by American forces when they landed in North Africa was the Army post office.

Principal problems which may interrupt the smooth flow of wartime mail in this country and abroad, Mr. O'Connell observed, is the manpower and transportation shortages as well as continuously increasing volume of mail. "Millions of tons of mail are transported by truck both here and abroad," Mr. O'Connell said.

Members of the armed forces both at home and abroad, as well as our citizens," the speaker continued "can make a vital contribution on their part to avoid unnecessary delay in the handling of mail." He pointed out that thousands of letters which have gone astray or delayed en route have been caused by being addressed inadequately, improperly, or carelessly.

Major C. W. Hamilton, area engineer at Fort Benning, who is charged with the construction of the post office building, was commended by Mr. O'Connell.

"I also congratulate Major Hamilton," Mr. O'Connell said, "who has progressed so rapidly in the erection of this structure. I am sure that when it is completed, it will be a credit to him and to Fort Benning."

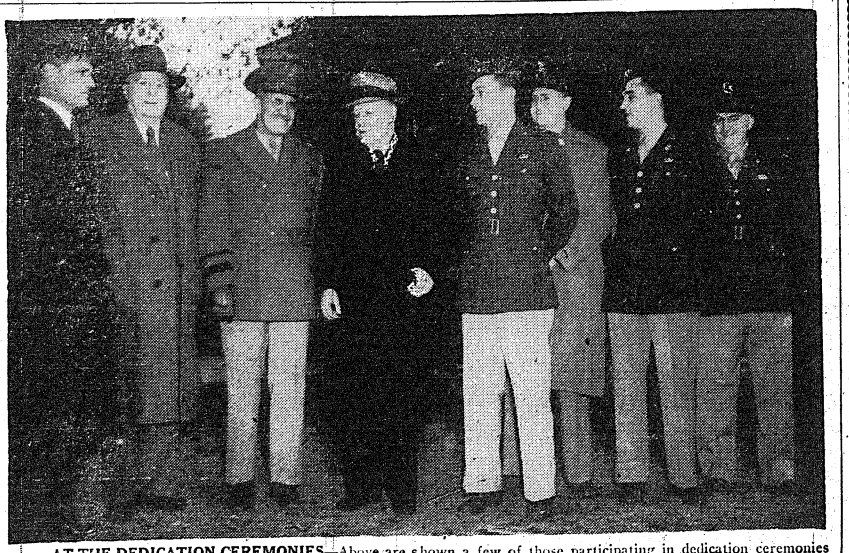
In closing Mr. O'Connell praised Leighton McPherson, postmaster of Columbus, and described him as "one of the great postmasters of the nation."

PRAISES McPHERSON

"His record of attainment," Mr. O'Connell said, "is in keeping with the finest tradition of the United States Postal Service, and I take this occasion to pay tribute to him and to express the high esteem and affection in which he is held by every official and member of the postal service."

Following Mr. O'Connell's talk, Judge Fort was introduced by Gen. Fulton. In welcoming Mr. O'Connell on the behalf of the civilian population of Columbus, Judge Fort pointed out to the postal official that the city of Columbus has a vast airport near completion "which will accommodate air mail." He urged Mr. O'Connell to consider the possibility of initiating an air mail service from the point.

Judge Fort then paid tribute to Fort Benning, its leaders and personnel. He pointed out that thousands of men who have received their training at the vast Army post are now serving on almost every battlefield in the world.



"We are relying on the arms at Fort Benning," Judge Fort observed, "to contribute their part and lead the way to victory."

As Judge Fort concluded his remarks, young Stillwell jumped up to the cornerstone and pulled the cord which unveiled the inscribed white stone. Young Joseph's father, Maj. Stillwell, is serving overseas.

The band of the 29th Infantry, under the baton of Warrant Officer Albert Andrews, provided music for the occasion. The invocation was given by Lieut. Frank M. Thompson, chief of chaplains at the post, and the benediction was rendered by Chaplain William H. Hunt.

Following the dedication ceremonies, General Fulton entertained at a luncheon at the Officers' club, honoring Mr. O'Connell.

Those attending the luncheon were Mayor W. G. Bridges of Columbus, Charles F. Williams, president of the Williams Construction Company which is erecting the post office; R. P. Richardson, Fort Benning postmaster; W. C. Hines, superintendent of mails in Columbus; H. M. Simmons, assistant postmaster at Columbus; Walter Pike, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce; Edward Cates, C. W. Street, and J. M. Dannally, Jr., the latter two of Birmingham, Ala.

Board to Name Topographical Features in Honor of Heroes

What's New With Q. M.?

Conservation practices in the consumption of coffee may be something new to the civilian populace, but its nothing new in Army mess halls. More than a year ago, the Quartermaster Corps inaugurated such a program, and the results of it have materially increased the quantity of the beverage available for the general public.

Figures show that Army master menus in 1941 called for coffee twice a day on the basis of servings requiring 7 pounds of coffee for each 100 men for each meal, or a total of 14 pounds per day. By rigid control of brewing and other steps calculated to get the maximum benefit from each pound of coffee it was possible by January 1st of this year to reduce the requirements from 7 pounds to four pounds for each 100 soldiers.

This program of conservation is reflected not only in increased supplies for civilian consumers, but also in releasing valuable shipping space. Coffee will still be served once a day and suitable substitute beverages will be served at the other two meals. Tea, milk, cocoa, fruit juices, and the like are provided, and are preferred by many G. I's. Actually, the number of men at Benning who prefer other beverages at all meals makes it possible for the profound coffee drinkers to enjoy that beverage more than once a day.

Army tents, tarpaulins, and truck covers now are made fire, weather, and water resistant by the application of an improved protective film based on resin plastics. The plastic compound is blended with the compounds designed to guard against weathering and storage deterioration and the entire preservative surface is laid on in one operation.

The new plastic element, composed of ordinary pine pitch and phenol formaldehyde resins, is cheaper and more effective than the chlorinated rubber previously used for the same purpose. It is estimated that approximately 10 millions pounds will be used on Army tentage during 1943.

Latest food item to be developed in tablet form by the ingenious Quartermaster Corps technicians is an imitation vanilla tablet, which will be used only at overseas stations. The tablet weighs 5 grains, and is equivalent to a teaspoonful of vanilla extract. It will dissolve in either hot or cold liquids. The tablets are packed in weather-proofed containers which give protection against light rays and insects.

Last week, the Quartermaster Corps announced that it had developed three new types of footgear for use by the Army. Two of them are to be worn over the service shoe while the third is a specially built type of "non-skid" low shoe.

The "non-skid" number is known as a boatman's shoe. It has a canvas top and rubber sole and looks like a tennis sneaker. The rubber sole has a tread similar to those on non-skid tires. When a soldier puts a slight pressure on the sole, the rubber spreads and provides a firm foothold.

The boatman's overshoe is a companion piece. It slips over the boatman's shoe on the regular service shoe. The third item is a type of wader boot developed by the Q. M. C. to be worn over the service shoe also. It has an extended top reaching all the way up to the armpits with a bib extending to the neck, and will be used by Engineers engaged in construction work in or near water.

A new guide book for shippers of war materiel has just been prepared and is available to manufacturers and shippers from the Office of the Quartermaster General without charge. Methods of protection against moisture and corrosion, assemblies, packing of delicate instruments, efficient use of common types of containers, techniques of interior packing, bracing and blocking, and similar topics are included in the publication which is illustrated and indexed.

Pfc. Blooey–

speeches were made. Without revealing any military secrets Pooey told his public about the Engineers in Georgia. Before ending the festivities, the number one fireman, Mayor F. H. La Guardia, made Pooey an honorary chief.

In short order he was loaded on a fire truck driven by La Guardia, and rushed to White Plains, his home and the county seat of Westchester County. Amid the clanging of bells and the shrill of sirens, Blooey was escorted to 84 Lincoln Avenue. This was Ruth's home and she stood waiting for him. Pooey jumped from the truck and ran up the walk.

Up until this time Pooey had forgotten about the Army. Now he remembered one thing distinctly. He had learned it in basic training and practiced it many times since. It was, PRESENTARMS.

He put one arm around her in a military manner, and as his suit case tumbled down the porch steps, he was rudely awakened from his dream by that familiar tune, "If You Don't Like the Army, Go Over the Hill."—REVEILLE.

Ruth is still waiting.

Soldiers and military organizations who distinguish themselves in World War II may be perpetually honored in Fort Benning by having a hill, streams or branches, woods and important roads named after them, it was learned this week.

Post Headquarters has announced the appointment of a board of officers selected for the purpose of naming topographical features on the Fort Benning reservation after soldiers or units distinguishing themselves.

Appointed to the board were the following officers:

Col. William J. Niederprum, Col. Girard B., Troland, Col. Joseph C. Addington, Lt. Col. Mose Kent, all of the Infantry School, and Maj. Clark Webber, 10th Armored Division.

In outlining plans for designating the names of hills, roads and other features of the post, headquarters asked that as far as possible, hills, streams or branches should be named for deceased infantrymen, especially those killed in action or who have earned the Distinguished Service Cross.

Also that woods should be named after units below divisions and that post roads be named after divisions.

Many of the streets of Fort Benning are already named after important officers and men who have served with distinction in past years. The post is named in honor of General Henry L. Benning, well-known Confederate general and other places such as Lawson Field, the airport, and Gowdy Field, the baseball field, are named after soldiers.

Soldiers' Legal Rights Discussed In Dec. 16 Yank

In a frank interview with one of YANK's soldier-correspondents, Attorney General Francis Biddle answers many questions which have been asked by men of the Armed Forces. The article, appearing in the Dec. 16 issue of YANK, deals with the personal problems of citizen soldiers everywhere.

Many legal matters are clarified in the article, and servicemen will find answers to such questions as, "Can I get my old job back after the war? Do I have to pay my old income tax? Does my wife have to meet the last four installments on the new refrigerator?"

As the nation's foremost authority on legal problems, Attorney General Biddle is the man who knows the answers better than anyone else. Soldiers will find YANK's article high informative and well worth keeping for their reference. All Yanks are urged to watch for this important issue which appeared on PX newsstands Dec. 16.

When Officer Candidate Luis F. Padilla, came across this question in a recent form, he had little trouble with a suitable answer. "What is your first choice for Foreign Service?" Padilla answered in the following words, "With General MacArthur."

Padilla is completing his eleventh week at the 17th Company of the First Student Training Regiment. He was born at Occidental Negros, Philippine Islands.

TIS Sergeant May Be Dean Of Enlisted Men

Mr. Sgt. Charley Cox, retired but called back to active duty, has a record of 31 years of continuous service in the U. S. Army, and may well be the dean of enlisted men.

The Infantry School's veteran "first grader" has worn khaki since 1911—a mark hard to beat. Now assigned to The Infantry School's famous automotive instruction school here, Sgt. Cox was retired in August, 1941, but immediately returned to active duty—not content with his 30 years of service to his country.

The tall, white-haired non-com is a well-known figure at Fort Benning. He came here 13 years ago, after serving for many years at Fort Meade, Md.

WORTHY JUMP

Sgt. Cox first walked into a recruiting office on March 11, 1911, and immediately proved a capable soldier—reaching the rank of duty sergeant in the 14th Company, CAC, in his first enlistment, a worthy jump in those days of a small army.

He served again in the Coast Artillery corps with the 9th Company, for two enlistments, and in 1920 transferred to a CAC detachment, promoted to the rank of first sergeant.

In 1926 Sgt. Cox left the Coast Artillery and moved into a tank regiment for three years. Apparently tiring of the lumbering monsters, he transferred again — this time to The Infantry School where he has been ever since.

He comes from Chiesman, Texas, originally, but it has been 31 years since he has made his home in the Lone Star State.

Chinese Duo on Post Will Avenge People

Two Chinese members of Company "A" of the Academic Regiment at Fort Benning have some personal scores to settle with the Japanese invaders of China — and they hope to be with American troops that will some day march into the Far East to help liberate Asia of the oppressors' rule.

They are Pfc. You Toy Soohoo, born in China, and Sgt. Lincoln E. Chan, born in America.

Private Soohoo's wife was killed during bombing of Canton, he has learned, while his two children were taken by their grandmother — but nothing has been heard of them since.

Sgt. Chan's parents returned to China and fled from Canton to Hong Kong and into oblivion after the Japanese captured that British Crown colony.

Private Soohoo was born in Canton 29 years ago. He came to this country in 1931, leaving his wife and two sons in Canton. He worked in Boston as a salesman for the Tung Fong company, an importing firm, and joined the Army 10 months ago, hoping to be with American troops that liberate China.

L. RADIO

Sgt. Chan was born in Emeryville, Cal., 30 years ago. He was educated in the high school there, then spent two years at the Polytechnic College of Engineering in Oakland, specializing in radio, then completed a two year course in radio engineering in the R. C. A. Institute in Chicago. He then settled in Pace, Miss., opening a radio service and repair shop, where he remained from 1934 until 1941 when he entered the Army. Following his basic training at Camp Shelby, Miss., he was sent to Fort Benning and placed in the Radio Maintenance Section of the Infantry School.

His parents had come to America from China about 60 years ago, and returned there in 1931, settling in Canton. They fled after the bombardment in 1938 which killed Pfc. Soohoo's wife. They went to Hong Kong and have not been heard from directly since the Japanese took the settlement although a missionary who returned on the diplomatic ship Gripsholm has informed Sgt. Chan that they had gone to Canton again. Whether they are alive now, Sgt. Chan has no idea. A sister is married to a British Naval officer and Sgt. Chan believes they are both dead following the fall of Hong Kong.

32ND HOSPITAL PROMOTIONS

Cpls. Monroe S. Bellomy and Fred Weber of the 32nd Station Hospital have been promoted to sergeants and 55 other enlisted men of the organization were advanced to a higher grade, according to an announcement by the hospital's headquarters. Among them are Tech 5th Grs. Bernard J. Bucher and Ralph G. Bongarden, to technician 4th grade; Pfc. Walter Menio to corporal; Pfcs. Arthur C. Jones, Richmond H. Parmenter, Lorenz A. Seiler and Donald E. Sudlow, to technician 5th grade.

Tommy Harmon, former University of Michigan All-American football player whose flying feet have torn up many a college gridiron, has sprouted wings. Recently he was graduated and commissioned as a bomber pilot at Williams Fld., Missouri.

TIS Outfit Is Ready For Yuletide

The Fourth Battalion, 24th Co., of the 1st Student Training Regiment is going "ALL OUT" in making this Christmas the best-ever at Fort Benning. Already the companies are putting up wreaths and garlands in the first stages of what promises to be a most colorful display of Christmas cheer.

Here and there one can see a group of the permanent personnel huddling in a "we can do it best this way" debate. Everyone is getting into the swing of things, and even the mail clerk can't fail to notice the Yuletide spirit, what with all the extra packages and parcels marked "DO NOT OPEN UNTIL DEC. 25." And the Fourth Battalion Chaplain has been rehearsing the men in Christmas carols.

Each day-room of the battalion will be filled to the brim with red and green crystal-cellophane garlands, studded with multi-colored bells, icicles, and crystal-shimmering ornamental balls. With huge evergreen trees as centerpieces; trimmed and styled to perfection with spun-glass and "priority" garlands, a plentitude of rainbow tinted lights . . . well, it may help to really carry on the "homey Christmas" that men of the Fourth (ENL) Battalion will be unable to enjoy at their own homes this year.

Some of the companies are planning to give each man a small present, either useful or as a joker, but all companies are going to make sure that the men have plenty of smokes and cigars . . . with the best Christmas dinner they've ever planned; equal to anything the folks at home have ever enjoyed. The Captain, too, will add his bit to the atmosphere. A gigantic assembly of Fort Benning talent will furnish the after-dinner entertainment at the party to be held in the Chaplain's Office. The evening will conclude with a mass singing of Christmas carols.

FOUR PROMOTED

Four men were promoted in grade in the 124th Infantry today according to an announcement by Colonel John D. Hill, regimental commander. Privates First Class Solomon Handler of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Michael Tonosky of Ellsworth, Penn., and Russel F. Coyle of Hollywood, Fla., were promoted to technician fifth grade. Pvt. John H. Berman of Pittsburgh, Penn. was made a technician fourth grade.

Conceding his opponent a 12-pound weight advantage, Pvt. Walter Henley of Mather Field, Cal., a former sparring partner of Henry Armstrong, won a four-round decision over Pvt. Frank Elliott of Minter Field, Cal., in the outstanding slugfest of an all-servicemen's card held in Stockton, Cal., last week. Henley wore down Elliott with a series of body blows and in-fighting tactics which he picked up from the one-time triple titleholder.

Over-Age Men May Apply For Discharge

Oldsters' Status Is Clarified By Washington

An analysis of the order applying to soldiers over 38 years old has now been made by officials in Washington it is announced by officials at Fort Benning.

Those who are in the "oldster" age group may now be considered for an honorable discharge from the Army by complying with the following rules, it was announced:

1. The soldier must voluntarily request discharge in writing to his immediate commanding officer.

2. He must be handicapped by age, to such an extent that his usefulness to the Army is secondary to his usefulness to industry.

3. He must present satisfactory evidence that he will be employed in an essential war industry if he is discharged. An essential war industry has been construed to include agriculture.

INDIVIDUAL MERITS

All applications will be considered on their individual merits and no soldier will be discharged, it was emphasized, unless a suitable trained replacement is present and available.

Officials of the War Department stressed the fact that the provisions for discharge of men over 38 are subject to revision or revocation at any time and that acceptance of an application for discharge will not be considered as a promise to release any individual.

Such acceptance of an application means merely that the request will receive consideration. Any discharges, it was emphasized, will be granted in furtherance of the war effort, and not as a right of the individual.

Officer Hoopsters Sport All-Stars

The Officers' basketball team of the Motor Maintenance Class in the 6th Co. the First Student Training Regiment, has now won 10 games against 4 defeats in the current basketball season. Three of the four defeats were in over time games, while wins were registered over various I. S. S. C. teams and teams in the Columbus U. S. O. Basketball League.

The Officers boast an array of basketball talent from all over the country, some of which are: Lt. Evers, Ball State Teachers College, Indiana; Lt. Provost, Woodville, N. H. Athletic Club; Lt. Ennis, Socony Semi-Pros; Lt. Butler, Hartford Red Wings; Lt. Scheeren, University of Pennsylvania; Lt. Wade, E. C. S. T. Club, Oklahoma; Lt. Lunning, Saganaw, Michigan Semi-Pros; Lt. McAllister, Citadel; Lt. Barnes, Semi-Pro Team in Washington, D. C. and with the coaching services of Lt. Woodill, former football coach of Los Angeles Cats, a Semi-Pro football team of Los Angeles, California.

Upon graduation December 22, 1942, the Officers of this sharp-eyed Motor Maintenance Class will turn the balance of their U. S. O. league schedule over to following Motor Maintenance basketeers. At the present time the standings in the league are four wins and no defeats. Succeeding Motor Maintenance classes are expected to place strong teams on the hardwoods to carry on the good record of their predecessors.

Intricies of TIS Publications Section, A. G. O. Are Revealed

Unit Is School's Circulation Artery

The Infantry School has its circulation department—it's known as the Publications Section of the Adjutant General's Office.

It's not a very big department in personnel. It has a section chief, 1st Lt. C. I. Moore; a chief clerk, Tech. Sgt. Walter A. Player; a battery of four girl typists: Miss Elizabeth Wall, Mrs. Hazel E. Phillips, Miss Josephine Wright, Mrs. Leona M. Whitesell; a mimeograph operator, Corp. Joseph J. Sheedy; and a supply sergeant, Sgt. Charles F. Murray.

But its quantity of work speaks for itself. It is the job of Lt. Moore's department to give official distribution to every kind of Army publication, from manuals to copies of promotion orders. It takes long experience to know the intricacies, the regulations and the ways and means of stretching a small supply of manuals to satisfy a big demand. Lt. Moore and Sgt. Player have had years of military background and experience at the job of satisfying the many demands placed on their office.

The department is responsible for distribution of the numerous War Department Adjutant General's Office forms. It must cut stencils for orders on every student graduating from the school's great instructional program. It must make extracts of orders transferring men to the school, and it must forward orders on to proper posts and proper persons.

STATISTICS GIVEN

Here are a few figures on the mass of distribution and work handled by the Publications Office. In a month's time 49,424 copies of army regulations, field manuals, technical manuals, training circulars, general orders, tables of basic allowances, tables of organizations, War Department and other headquarters circulars, bulletins and miscellaneous literature were distributed.

In a similar 30-day period there were 195,900 blank War Department AGO forms distributed.

The department's four typists have to be expert speedsters on the keyboards, for their stencil cutting reaches high proportions. During a month's period they cut many hundreds of those long blue sheets for file copies, extracts of War Department and Infantry School Special orders. It's partly because the school special orders, issued on hundreds of men every day, that keep the department busy.

The Publications Office has two of the latest style of mimeograph machines, the kind that need only the touch of buttons to make them spin. And spin they do at high speed to turn out 576,000 copies of special orders, extracts, etc. in 30 days. It's a problem in itself to keep the two hungry machines supplied with paper.

The publications section has drawer upon drawer of index cards which carry receipts and details of distributions of the thousands of pieces of literature received from higher headquarters.

WALKING A. R.'S

The section must distribute each book, each circular, according to army regulations. Lt. Moore and Sgt. Player have become walking army regulations when it comes to answering questions about the allowances for each type of organization and each office for a certain manual, a certain war department order.

They are accountable for every item they receive and must acknowledge receipt to higher headquarters, a neat little job of continuous inventory in itself.

The publications office is familiar to just about everyone in the Infantry School Service command, including the 14 or more regiments, battalions and special units under it. For it not only is responsible for circulation of all the previously mentioned books, pamphlets, papers, etc., but also is the office of supply for typewriter paper, typewriter ribbons, pencils, erasers, envelopes, etc. As can be imagined, the requests are varied and in great quantity.

By and large the greatest job of the office is the detailed proposition of distributing special orders on personnel transferring from the school to a new unit.

When it is realized that there are thousands of students graduating each week, and hundreds of other members of the school command changing station, it can well be realized just how big is the circulation job of orders on each man.

For every man transferred, several copies of the order transferring him must be sent to the man himself, two or more copies to his present organization, a copy to The Infantry School records section, several copies to his new station, and a copy to the office which originated the order, for checking purposes.

HUNDREDS OF NAMES

On each order there can be hundreds of names, which means the number of copies necessary for each man must be multiplied by the number of names on the order, and the total is the number of copies run off on the mimeograph machine and properly distributed.

Another big proposition for the office, is duplicating of special orders received. When a large number of men are received in the school, they usually are authorized to come to the school on one big order. It is necessary then to duplicate that order, so that the records section can have a copy of it for each man's file, and one for each man's new organization in the Infantry School Service Command.

Yes, the publications section has its headaches. If it isn't checking stencils to see if the apostrophe is in the right place, or trying to stretch 200 copies of a basic field manual to satisfy a demand for 500, it's doodling with figures trying to decide how many copies of a special order are necessary before a class of new officers can be sent on their way to a new station, or explaining to a colonel that they just can't replace his "danged" stapling machine.

Special Masses Are Slated For Yuletide

A number of special masses for Catholic personnel on Christmas eve and Christmas Day have been arranged by Fort Benning chaplains, according to announcement Wednesday.

There will be midnight masses in Chapels 1, 2 and 3 in the Lawson Field,—117th Infantry area at midnight Dec. 24. In the Harmony Church area, the midnight masses Christmas eve will be conducted in Chapel 3 and Chapel 5 and on the main post at midnight and at 12:45 a. m.

Christmas Day, special masses will be celebrated in Chapel 4 on the post proper at 9 a. m., 10:30 a. m. and at noon.

FAMILY'S FIGHTING FORCE

FREDERICK, Okla. (AP)—Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Hollomon of Frederick now have seven sons in the armed services. The roll call: Haskell, lieutenant in the navy; Delmar, army major; Leon, a surgeon, lieutenant; Captain Robert; Horace, a dentist and a lieutenant; I. J., a lieutenant, and Jeff, a private.

Army Requests Suggestions Of Personnel

Suggestions from Army personnel relative to new techniques, weapons, military doctrines, and organizations, which have always been welcomed, are to be especially encouraged by all commanders, the War Department announced today.

Suggestions, whether from officers or enlisted men, which are found worthy of consideration will be forwarded through military channels to the Commanding Generals of the Army Ground Forces, Air Forces, Services of Supply, defense commands, departments, theaters, task forces, and overseas bases. After a further screening process, meritorious suggestions will be forwarded to the particular agency of the Ground Forces, Air Forces, Services of Supply, or the War Department most directly concerned.

Suitable official recognition will be given to officers or enlisted men whose ideas are adopted.

With the steadily increasing number of men with specialized skills in the Army, it is anticipated that many suggestions of a technical nature will be received.

The Army has long recognized the value of suggestions from individuals in the service.

Close liaison is maintained with the National Inventors Council and the National Defense Resources Council, which receive and process many ideas of military value. Changes have frequently been made in tactical doctrine, as a result of recommendations received from the field. Essay competitions conducted by service journals bring many further suggestions. Also, tactics, technique, and equipment are subjected to constant re-appraisal and revision on the basis of reports from military attaches and military observers.

Soldier Proposes In Public; She Says 'Yes'

Privacy is something a soldier learns to do without in the Army and even popping the big question in front of an interested audience means nothing to the American soldier these days.

At least, Corporal Allyn Sternlof, company clerk of the 20th company, Second Student Training Regiment, didn't have any hesitation in proposing by long distance telephone right in the day room of his company with a couple of pingpong players and seven other soldiers all waiting to use the telephone standing there listening.

The girl said "Yes." But the Corporal hasn't set any date yet.

Officer-Wrestler Shuns Ju Jitsu; Prefers Own Tactics To Jap Version

Capt. Clodfelter Took Part In 1932 Olympic Spectacle

The strange spectacle of one of the world's top wrestlers actually pinning his own self and losing the most important match of his life without a hand being laid on him is described by Captain Melvin C. Clodfelter, student member of the 3d Company in the 1st Student Training Regiment and member of the United States 1932 Olympic Wrestling Team.

"This particular man was a Canadian who was competing in the Olympics the year I participated," Capt. Clodfelter relates. "He fell victim to one of the peculiar, arbitrary rules governing Olympic wrestling. The rule in question states that if a wrestler so much as touches both shoulders to the mat simultaneously, no matter how or why, he is thereby pinned and beaten."

The Canadian had been wrestling a Turk on fairly even terms for several minutes, the captain pointed out, when suddenly both men broke contact and each hopped backwards. In so moving the Canadian tripped over a wrinkle in the canvas and fell into a roll. Both shoulders happened to touch the mat as he rolled quickly over and on to his feet again. His opponent wasn't even touching him all this time but he was nevertheless declared to have been pinned and that was the end of the match. "The unfortunate Canadian was a good wrestler, too, even by Olympic standards," Captain Clodfelter adds "He might have had a chance to cop the world title but for that."

Captain Clodfelter has good reason to be well versed in wrestling rules. He not only wrestled 12 of the best 145-pound wrestlers in this country during 1932, but after beating them all and thus winning the right to represent this country in his weight, he went on and wrestled six of the world's best wrestlers beating them all and actually beating the second place winner twice.

PECULIAR SITUATION

"This was another case of Olympic rules," says Capt. Clodfelter in explaining this curious anomaly. According to these rules a wrestler who wins a match by decision actually has a black mark placed against him. Only if he wins by fall can he avoid getting black marks. If he loses his match he has three marks against him regardless of how he lost. Five black marks eliminate a man.

During his Olympic competition Captain Clodfelter wrestled seven matches, winning one by fall and five by decision. One match, the sixth, was against a Hungarian and the result was contested, altho the referee and all four judges awarded a fall to Captain Clodfelter, which would have won him the title. Since the United States was the host country that year diplomacy entered the picture and compelled a rerun the next day. Capt. Clodfelter was able only to get a decision on this return bout and had the sad experience of seeing a man he had beaten once by a fall and a second time by a decision go on and win second place. "This Hungarian won the Olympic title in 1936," the captain adds, "and in fact only missed it in 1932 by losing a close final match decision requiring overtime periods."

Captain Clodfelter's efforts as a wrestler began in 1925 as a sophomore at Oklahoma A & M. They were so successful that in addition to attaining Olympic heights he also won the Missouri Valley title at 145 pounds in 1927, and the next year by splitting weights took the same title at 158 pounds while winning the National Collegiate crown at the 145-pound weight. In the same year he participated in the Olympics he also won the National AAU title for the 145-pound class.

In making the Olympic Team Captain Clodfelter wrestled 12 men before clinching a berth. He scored eight falls and four decisions. The final tryouts for the team were held at Ohio State University and Captain Clodfelter says he believes his hardest match and the one to which he gave most preparation was the final bout with Bishop of Lehigh University. Bishop had previously won over such powerful wrestlers as Goins of Indiana and Lewis of Oklahoma University and was considered one of the toughest men ever to wrestle at 145 pounds.

RUGGED TRAINING

In preparing for the Olympics Captain Clodfelter underwent three months of preliminary training which consisted largely of road work, calisthenics and light workouts. For the six weeks just prior to the Olympics he followed an intensive schedule that called for two miles of road work, 15 minutes of calisthenics, 30 minutes practicing holds and 15 minutes of all-out competitive wrestling daily.

The entire Olympic wrestling tournament, the captain states, lasted four days. On two of these he wrestled two matches each. Between matches he would eat normal substantial meals with plenty of steak and sugar. However, during the two hours just prior to match time tea and chocolate only was permitted. And nothing could be taken for the half hour just preceding a bout.

Captain Clodfelter has something to say about the Japs as wrestlers and their vaunted ju jitsu. Japs won no titles in the 1932 Olympics and didn't make a particularly impressive showing, according to him.

"The Jap style of ju jitsu wrestling is simple and vulnerable to a well-trained American style wrestler," he says. "There's no one I'd rather meet on the mat than a man who relies upon ju jitsu alone. One of my opponents in the Olympics," the captain adds, "was a Jap. I had been watching him for several bouts and noticed he relied greatly upon ju jutsu tactics. He would continually turn around so as to get his opponent across his back for a throw. Well, I waited, and when after about three minutes of wrestling with him he tried this on me I was ready. I tackled him around the legs immediately and got a pin on him less than a moment later. This was the first fall I got to my credit."

Chance in the form of a banged-up nose started Captain Clodfelter on the road to wrestling fame. During his four years of high school at Enide, Okla., he wrestled none at all. It wasn't until his sophomore year in college and after he had injured his nose playing varsity football that he was introduced to wrestling. A famous exponent of that activity contacted him at that time and pointed out the merits of a sport in which casualties were less frequent. The sport he recommended, of course, was wrestling and its endorser ought to have known because he was none other than the late, famous E. C. Gallagher, Oklahoma A & M athletic director and wrestling coach.

VETERAN TRAINER

Gallagher coached 25 years, Capt. Clodfelter says, and in this time produced 20 National Collegiate team titleholders, 9 AAU team champs, had 17 of his pupils make the Olympic team, of which 8 won titles. He has produced coaches for 17 universities and 375 high schools.

Just as in his own case, Capt. Clodfelter says his coach, Gallagher, who was a graduate of engineering, took over the wrestling job at Oklahoma A & M when it was decided to carry that sport there for the first time. He had actually never wrestled before, Capt. Clodfelter says, and knew little about the art. However, he had years of training as a physical training instructor behind him and by study of books alone quickly picked up the art he was so successful in imparting to others. "By applying leverage and pressure principles of engineering," the captain declares, "he developed the most scientific style of wrestling ever known."

Asked about the relative effectiveness of boxing versus wrestling as fighting methods, Capt. Clodfelter says he believes a good wrestler can take a good boxer any day. "All he has to do is tackle him so fast the latter can't get a good blow at him. As soon as he gets his hands on the boxer, it's all over."

The best wrestlers of today, thinks the captain, are the Finns, Swedes, and Americans. The first two rate as winners because of their marvellous endurance, and the Americans because of their all-around development and science. The strongest wrestlers seem to be the Greeks, who as far as sheer power is concerned rank at the top and always start with the appearance of overwhelming superiority. After a few moments, however, Capt. Clodfelter says, they seem to wear down faster and are usually beaten in the finishing stages.

WRESTLING COACH

After leaving college Capt. Clodfelter coached high school wrestling and football for seven years at Enid, Oklahoma, and six years at Ponca City in the same state. His wrestling teams during this period won five high school conference championships, one state championship, and three times placed second in the state. Five of his high school boys won national titles either in National Collegiate or AAU tournaments. One of them, winner of the 128-pound National AAU title in 1942 is now at Ft. Benning. He is O. C. Sidney Marks presently with the 9th Company in the 1st STR.

Capt. Clodfelter says the passing years have not dimmed the value of the wrestling training he has received. When asked if he has ever had occasion to utilize for personal protection the prowess he has developed he admits there were a few such occasions. "Every now and then the ability to tie a big and violent man up in a docile knot has proved a Godsend," he declares.

Once at an Oklahoma football game a 210-pound truck driver, said to be influenced by some alcoholic spirits and certain incidents he had been observing on the field, rose in wrath from the bleachers and came down to the players' bench where he started to tie into the captain. "All I used on him was a cross body hitch," says Capt. Clodfelter, "but it definitely changed his point of view."

Capt. Clodfelter received his commission via the Oklahoma ROTC in 1928. He entered on active duty in June of 1941 and has been on Reception Center duty at Ft. Sill, Okla., and at Ft. Logan, Colorado, and is permanently assigned to the IRTC at Camp Wheeler, Ga. His home town is Ponca City, Okla. He is married and has one child.

Did you see "Priorities on Parade" recently? Well, those welders, riveters, assemblywomen, etc., have nothing on the girls who are taking the Mechanic Learner's course at Lawson Field, Fort Benning, preparatory to going to school at Anderson Air Plant School, Nashville, Tenn., where for 28 weeks they will study Aircraft Engineering, Aircraft Instruments, General Air Craft Mechanics, work in machine shops and study all about gyro instruments at the Shelby County School of Aeronautics at Whitehaven, Tenn. These are a swell bunch and if you could see Elizabeth V. Hannan, Elbethel McCall, Susie Stewart, Mabel Davis, Elsie V. Metcalf, Margaret M. Carey, Georgia F. Shannon, Louise A. Allison and Alma F. Palmer, you would all feel better about air production for you would know that they were really going to "Keep 'em Flying."

While this Mechanics Learner's Course was especially designed for women Hugh S. Bray decided he would like to work with the ladies so he is right down there not missing a trick.

Clarabelle Stephens certainly is having coat trouble. Good enough for her because she didn't buy her coat in the home stores but had to go to Atlanta. As I have said before, what's Atlanta got that we don't have? I can tell you—$108. of Clarabelle's money."

* * *

A great big welcome to Helen Smothers in the Engineering Office at Lawson Field. Better watch Helen she will be out collecting fares for plane rides she is so accustomed to collecting money for insurance and various things. Scrap too. She is a whiz-bang after scrap. So they had better be on the alert where that girl is concerned.

* * *

Well is seems Bee Brown just has to be teaching somebody something all the time. It used to be indorsements at Headquarters now it bowling at Lawson Field. Understand she has two very apt pupils in Helen Martin and Esther Feinberg.

* * *

Joyce Moyer in the post Engineer's office certainly splurged on her sister's Christmas Gift. After all who could have resisted what she bought? Some sister she must have.

Did you see that stunning hat with the bow and veil riding down Cussetta Road in an automobile late Monday afternoon? Well the reason for the Hat was the person under it. Mary Dinsmore was so delighted to be able to have her mother sufficiently recovered to leave her in the good care of the Baptist Memorial Hospital in Memphis, that you can understand all about the hat when you know the cause. Mrs. Francis Price Haralson has many friends in Benning who will learn of her improvement with much interest. Three times in enough for one year's illness we think, Mrs. Haralson. Let's hope the New Year finds you back in your regular ways again.

Would you believe it if I told you Doris Lee was actually passing the hat in Headquarters today? Well, I had better explain that she was holding the drawing for names for Christmas. You draw mine and I'll draw yours kind of affair. No fair telling whose name you drew either.

* * *

Must tell you that Josphine Haggard is better and we hope will soon be with us again. She had to stay a few days in the hospital to be near an oxygen tent in case of emergency. She does have the worst time with that head of hers.

CAPT. MEYER BACK

Lawson Field Personnel Officer Made Major

Capt. William A. Allen, personnel and insurance officer at Lawson Field, has just been promoted to the rank of major.

He formerly served for one year with the 38th Infantry Regiment with Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, now commanding general of Fort Benning.

MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL!

Louis Armstrong Swings Tomorrow For Soldiers

Famous Musicians Play Four Hours In Special Program

Fort Benning's Sports Arena will rock in rhythm to the music of Louis Armstrong, his trumpet, and his famed orchestra four hours tomorrow afternoon as the musicians appear here to entertain thousands of soldiers on the Christmas holiday and broadcast over a national radio hook-up.

From 2 until 6 p. m. tomorrow, music from the Sports Arena in the Harmony Church Area will echo throughout the reservation. Several score Military Maids from Columbus will attend the entertainment and dance with soldiers.

Special buses will run, starting at noon, from the main post terminal to the Sports Arena to transport soldiers to the scene of the festivities. The fare will be 15 cents each way.

Louis Armstrong, known for his "hot licks" on a trumpet, is coming to Fort Benning to broadcast for fifteen minutes at 3 p. m. over the national BLUE radio network for the Coca Cola Company. However, before and after the broadcast the musicians will be "on their own" to entertain the music-loving soldiers on the post.

All military personnel on the post have been invited to attend the entertainment, which has been arranged by the post special service officer.

Mrs. Hugh Roberts, chairman of the Columbus Entertainment Committee, is planning to bring several busloads of Columbus Military Maids out for the dance and at least one bus load is expected to arrive before the broadcast.

Miss Nellie Mitchell, hostess of the Harmony Church service club, is in charge of general arrangements at the Sports Arena, selected for the dance because it is the largest hall at the post. In this area are thousands of officer candidates who will have an official holiday and who are expected to help jam the arena.

Thru The Peepsight

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

So tomorrow is Christmas at Fort Benning.

Christmas at Fort Benning means a day of comparative peace and quiet; a good Army Christmas dinner (which won't be at all bad); maybe a movie or a dance, and many thoughts of how the folks are making out back home.

It'll be Christmas too in North Africa, the Aleutian Islands, New Guinea, the Solomon Islands but you know the presents our boys will be getting—and giving—there. Screeching bombs, machine gun bullets, grenades.

Men will die on Christmas Day as they work to wipe out the German Afrika Korps, capture Tunis and Bizerte, and drive the Jap from the Pacific. But their deaths will not go unnoticed nor will they be in vain. America knows full well which of her sons are carrying on the battle today, and all the world knows how that battle is going.

Maybe the boys are thinking about being home next Christmas as they pursue Rommel's fleeing Army a little more grimly or fight a little more relentlessly to close the iron vise on Axis-held Tunis and Bizerte. Possibly the men on Guadalcanal or New Guinea were so busy they didn't have time (or the store) to get that present for Mom or Sis or the girl-friend, but they certainly were giving the Jap hell in assorted packages as the Nips struggled to hold a narrow beach along one shore of New Guinea.

The Jap was so hard-pressed that in one sink-hole they defended, the living soldiers were wearing gas masks against the stench of their own dead. That's a Christmas present all right—but one little appreciated.

It will be a white Christmas in Russia—white snow stained with the blood of tens of thousands of Germans and Rumanians fighting and dying to stave off the inevitable Red Army counterattacks, reported this week in full sway.

Italians will have little time for Yuletide ceremonies. Those in the large Italian cities were hurrying to the less-bombed country side to escape British avengers in four-motored planes. Those in the country were wondering how to feed the incoming thousands.

General Wavell's British Indian Army was on the march through Burma this week with little time for Christmas grog. They were intent on opening the long-awaited British push to regain Burma and reopen China's so-called "life-line" — the Burma Road. The Jap withdrew from the first 50 miles with no opposition but the whole way will be tough for Wavell and his men.

Rommel in North Africa was also withdrawing without much opposition but the "desert fox" was taking the lives of many fine Allied soldiers through the use of thousands of fiendishly-placed land mine "boobies"—which when picked up or kicked by unsuspecting Tommies became the last earthly things they touched.

At home, Americans spent their second war-time Christmas, but it wasn't like the first one. There were empty places at family circles. Tens of thousands of mothers, fathers and wives preferred to sleep on Army cots and eat

1,500 Requests For Quarters Inundate TA

With more than 1,500 requests for accommodations for rooms pouring in, Alveretta Kenan, director of the USO-Traveler's Aid in Columbus, requested the men of Fort Benning today not to insist on a room for their mothers, fathers, sisters and sweethearts. Single cots are available for them. All rooms are being reserved for the wives of soldiers, Miss Kenan said.

The USO Council of Columbus has made arrangements for army cots to be placed in the old telephone building at 1318 Second ave. for women, and in the Georgia Power Co. Service Hall, Second ave. and 17th St. for men. Reservations should be made through the Travelers' Aid. There will be someone on duty at all times at both dormitories in order to handle people arriving after the TA has closed for the night. This service will be continued through Jan. 3.

Accommodations for the relatives of colored troops can be had through the Colored USO-YWCA. The tenants of the Booker T. Washington apartments have offered to put up cots and open their extra rooms for the visitors.

Places on the Fort Benning reservation will close at 11 p. m. Persons who arrive after 11 p. m. are requested to go direct to one of the places in town.

No restriction has been placed on the length of occupying rooms in town. The visitors may remain for as many days as they like. A fee of seventy-five cents, payable in advance, will be charged.

Christmas Greetings To Fort Benning

It is with a deep sense of appreciation and gratitude that I extend to the military and civilian personnel of Fort Benning my very best wishes for a good holiday and the very best of fortune for the new year.

This is the second Christmas of a trying time, and like all true Americans everyone at Fort Benning has contributed all that is possible to end the storm that now desecrates the teachings of Him whose birthday we observe.

Let us all hope that another Christmas will see peace, but if that shall not be possible, let us firmly resolve, as we begin another year, that there shall be no peace until the liberty and dignity of the individual is re-established as the inalienable birthright of man.

Barney Brings Back Benning Bound Beauties

When Capt. Barney Oldfield came through Outpost No. 1 at Fort Benning Sunday night with 11 gorgeous gals in tow, the sentry at the gate began tossing off salutes.

"Hey, what's the idea," inquired Capt. Oldfield.

"Well sir, if you don't disapprove, I want to salute you twice," replied the sentry. "Once for your rank. And once for your ability."

Capt. Oldfield, it turned out, was bringing in the Cathryn Duffy Dancers, now appearing at the Henry Grady Hotel floor show in Atlanta, for a "Prop Blast" party that the 505th Parachute Infantry was giving.

He gravely returned both salutes.

Col. Raff Is In Spotlight

Former Benning Paratrooper Fights In Tunisia Now

Ever since last summer when it was first announced that the United States had parachute troops in England, the name of Col. Edson Raff has been a familiar name in press dispatches.

This is the same "Ed" Raff who not so long ago was a captain and adjutant of the old Parachute Provisional Group which was then a part of the Infantry School. He is the same man who was promoted to a major and then commanded a battalion in the regiment then commanded by Col. Robert Sink who now commands the 506th here at Benning.

Major Raff then was transferred to Fort Bragg. Last Spring "Duncan" as some called him, drove down here, visited his wife and newborn son, Chaney, and their four and one half year old Tommy, told his wife that she'd better keep their car here since she'd need it more than he.

Next word came shortly that he was a lieutenant colonel and in England. Officially during the summer came the press release that the United States parachute contigent in England was commanded by a dashing young officer named Raff.

And when the paratroopers hit North Africa and began raising hell generally with Axis held airports and strategic points, newspaper stories again were relating how the same Raff, now a full colonel. And his wife, Virginia, is proud but none the less worried because the reporters have written "Raff leads his men and is absolutely indifferent to danger." Little Tommy and Chaney can't appre-

Red Tape Sliced Thin By Baumer Invention

Assigned To Washington To Help Solve More Woes

BY SGT. HERBERT KALETTE
Infantry School Public Relations

Through the efforts of a young Army captain who is the personnel officer of its Student Training Brigade, The Infantry School at Fort Benning, may lay claim to revolutionizing the field of army paper work by substituting modern business technique for the cumbersome system of filling out hundreds of forms individually.

The young officer is Captain Edward F. Baumer who has been conducting his experiments under the command of the brigade commander, Colonel Sevier R. Tupper. In streamlining the personnel procedure he is making use of modern office machines to do the work of hundreds of typists, checkers, and file clerks. And he has put his system into operation in a spot where army paper work had just about reached the realm of impossibility—in the largest of all officer candidate schools.

This is an entirely new idea in the Army. The organization handling the system has been named the Machine Service Unit, so titled because it serves the lower echelons — regiments, battalions, and companies—alleviating much of the pressure on their clerical personnel. The crux of the system is two types of machines, one of which stamps embossed letters on a metalic plate; the other prints from that plate.

EX-SWIMMING CHAMP

Captain Baumer has always been an exponent of efficiency. A native of Newark, N. J., he has spent nearly all of his 29 years in and around the Newark area. He is a former New Jersey State A. A. U. swimming champion, and he was named to A. G. Spalding's All-Collegiate water polo team when he captained that sport during his senior year at Rutgers University. After his graduation in 1934, he attended law school nights at the University of Newark, receiving his LLB in 1937. He was admitted to the bar of the State of New Jersey in the fall of 1937.

During his undergraduate days at Rutgers, Captain Baumer was sports editor of the college paper, member of Cap and Skull senior honorary society, a member of the student council governing board, captain of Scabbard and Blade military society, cadet-colonel of his R. O. T. C. class, and recipient of the School's "Best Soldier" award. Yet in spite of this demonstrated proficiency, he was the only member of his R. O. T. C. class who did not receive a commission in the Organized Reserves at his graduation. Reason: he was too young. He did not attain the required 21 years of age until the following December, at which time he was sworn in as a second lieutenant.

Captain Baumer was called to

Army Relief Loans $1,400

AER, Red Cross Fill Soldier Needs

Approximately $1,400 has been made available to needy Fort Benning soldiers and their families during the month of November, according to Lt. John J. A. Lyons, officer in charge of the Army Emergency Relief Program on the post.

Working in close conjunction with the American Red Cross, Army Emergency Relief seeks to aid military personnel with financial problems arising from military reasons. Loans can be granted when the individual fails to receive pay due to no fault of his own, and when regularly authorized allotment are not being received because of necessary primary procedure. Then, of course, one of the main objects of the organization is aid to families of men killed or wounded in action, until arrangements are made for pension.

Roughly work of the Army Emergency Relief differs from that of Red Cross in that the latter group seeks to aid soldiers with all social problems, whereas AER is designed, expressly, to tide the soldier and his family over financial difficulties due to Army peculiarities.

SOURCE OF INCOME

Money for the Red Cross, which is the older of the two, organizations, is raised by nation-wide subscriptions held yearly. Funds for the AER have been enriched by proceeds from the army show, "This is the Army," directed by Irving Berlin, and by donations of differents artists such as Jeanette McDonald, and by free-will public contributions. The Civilian personnel at Fort Benning, alone, contributed $475.

Most of the aid is in the form of loans. Only in exceptional cases is aid given by outright grants. Liberal time is allotted for repayment of loans and extensions

Post Plans Shop Center

New Building Is Under Construction

A shopping center, characterized as Fort Benning's "Fifth Avenue," will soon be open for business in the vicinity of the Main Exchange on Wold avenue near the Main Theater.

Construction has just been started on a new building, near the Main Exchange, which will house all of the exchange activities now located under Doughboy stadium. The shopping center will embody all of the sales stores of the exchange in one central location and is expected to open for business by March 1.

Near the Main Exchange, across Wold avenue the new exchange restaurant and cafeteria is rapidly nearing completion. It will be open for business about February 7.

The new wooden structure, now going up by the Main Exchange, will house the uniform and clothing departments, the watch repair department, barber shop, beauty parlor, and shoe and hat repair department. It is expected that a shoe department may be added to the exchange activities in the new location.

MORE CONVENIENT

At the present time, soldiers, officers, and their wives need walk—or ride (?)—some distance between the exchange activities under Doughboy stadium and the Main Exchange. However, with the new shopping center centrally located, it is expected that patrons of the exchange will find it more pleasant to shop in the one area.

Work on the new restaurant and cafeteria is progressing rapidly. The construction of the building is being rushed because of the great need for increased restaurant facilities on the post proper, especially since the present restaurant was damaged by the recent fire in Service Club I. Most of the exterior work is completed and workmen are installing equipment at the present time. The capacity of the restaurant and cafeteria is four times that of the present restaurant and soda fountain.

Don't Forget 'Long Handles' General Warns

If you're going north on your furlough, don't forget to take along ample winter clothing was the warning issued today by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning. Reports have come to post headquarters that many men, misled by the mild weather in Georgia, are neglecting to dress properly for northern climes, where Old Man Winter prevails.

Special Events Herald Celebration Of Christmas

Troop Training Halts One Day; Units Schedule Many Parties

In the midst of feverish training for war, personnel of Fort Benning will pause tomorrow to celebrate Christmas in tribute to the Prince of Peace, as a token to the world of one of the many freedoms for which thousands of Americans are fighting today on far-flung battle fronts.

Various organizations on the post are marking Christmas in different ways, some with parties, others with mass singing of carols, others with special musical programs.

Many religious ceremonies will be conducted tonight and tomorrow in chapels and even in the open air at the Fort.

Probably the biggest single entertainment event of Christmas tomorrow will be the appearance from 2 to 6 p. m. at the Harmony Church Sports Arena of Louis Armstrong and his internationally-known dance band. The band will stage a coast to coast broadcast for 15 minutes beginning at 3 p. m. over the Blue Network. For the rest of the time, the orchestra will play for dancing.

R. C. CHORUS

Members of the Colored Reception Center Chorus will have a very full night's program for tonight, beginning with their appearance on the "Fort Benning on the Air" radio program at 6 p. m. when they will start their evening of carol singing. After that they will proceed to the Fourth Battalion headquarters of the First Student Training Regiment for a half hour of carols beginning at 7:30 p. m.

Then the chorus will go to the Colored USO club in Columbus for another broadcast from 9:30 to 10 p. m., after which they will visit the City Hospital and the City Jail, then return to the post at 11 p. m. for an all-night singing of carols. The chorus is under direction of Corp. Willis Brown.

In the Fourth Battalion, several companies entered into competition for the best decorated organization.

At Service Club Number 2 there will be a tea dance from 5:30 to 8 p. m. today, with open house on Christmas Day when fruits and nuts and other things will be served.

Members of the 29th Infantry have decorated their cuartel and also the front of their main headquarters. In the cuartel tonight, two religious services will be staged, a Protestant one at 11:30 p. m. and a Catholic field mass at midnight. The 29th Infantry Band will play hymns. In case of rain or inclement weather, these will be cancelled.

STATION HOSPITAL

Special decorations have been put up at the 24th General Hospital while at the Station Hospital, the Grey Ladies of the Red Cross have set up 85 Christmas trees, and also have decorated large evergreens on the hospital grounds. There, too, they have decorated the Recreation Hall, library and lounge. There is a large tree in each ward. On Christmas

Gen. Bryden Awards D. S. M. To Gen. Funk

Wife Receives Medal For Husband Once Assigned To Benning

Maj. Gen. William Bryden, commanding general of the Fourth Service Command, presented a Distinguished Service Medal to Mrs. Arnold J. Funk, wife of Brigadier General Funk, who has been listed as "missing in action," in a special review at Doughboy Stadium here today.

Acting on behalf of President Roosevelt, General Bryden made the award in the stadium to the wife of the general officer who served at Fort Benning as provost marshal from 1931 to 1933.

The Third Battalion of the 29th Infantry, under the command of Major Argyle R. Jones, and the 29th Infantry Band passed in review before General Bryden and Mrs. Funk, the latter coming here today from her home in Sarasota, Fla., for the ceremonies. General officers of Fort Benning also were in the reviewing stand.

When he served here, General Funk was a captain and later a major. He assumed his assignment as provost marshal when he was a captain and was promoted to his majority. With the outbreak of hostilities in the Philippines, the former Fort Benning officer had been promoted to brigadier general. However, with the fall of Corregidor and the Philippine Islands, General Funk has been listed as "missing" by the War Department, so the Distinguished Service Medal, awarded for gallantry in action, was presented to his wife.

Following the presentation of the medal at noon today, Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, post commander, entertained General Bryden at a luncheon in the Officers Club.

Greeting Is Same In Any Language

Pvt. Martin Miret, 36, member of Headquarters Detachment, DEML, a linguist, is sending personal Christmas greetings to friends in the several languages he speaks fluently: Chinese, Turkish, Arabian, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, and French. Though he speaks Japanese, he is not sending any greetings to Tokyo this year.

Ex-Lieutenant Colonel Now Serves as Private

From private to acting lieutenant colonel, and back to private is just part of the amazing story of Patrick Smith, now of the 161st Signal Photographic Co.

Early in the last war, Patrick Smith a young Scotchman, volunteered for service and spent three and a half years on the firing lines. During this time he was wounded twice by machine gun fire, three times in his left arm and four in his left leg. At the close of the struggle, Smith was commanding 1,000 officers and men on the firing line in France and held the title of acting lieutenant colonel.

Turning down an offer of a captaincy in the regular British Army, he came to America as an official British representative in connection with the Victory Loan Drive. In this capacity, he traveled all over the United States lecturing. Upon completion of this work, Smith decided to make America home and became a citizen.

However, his restless nature would not let him stay put. The mysteries of the Orient fascinated him, and for the next 20 years he traveled back and forth from the United States to all parts of the Near and Far East. For four to seven months of the year, Smith would wander over different parts of little known lands, taking pictures, writing for newspapers, and gathering lecture material. The remaining months he would return to the United States, giving lectures, showing his splendid color movies, and writing still more about the East. Smith has crossed the Pacific 34 times in the past 20 years.

COVERED THE JAPS

While all of the East held a special fascination for him, Japan interested him most. Here he has taken approximately 200,000 feet of film, showing many side lights on the average Nipponese. In addition, as Far Eastern editor of the New York Sunday Mirror, Smith has covered every major activity of the Japanese Army during the ten years prior to Pearl Harbor.

Always seeking to gain the true aspect of things, Smith soon learned that the Japanese Army, and the resources behind this army were far greater than most Americans realized. The true wealth of Japan's natural resources had never been revealed; not even to the Japanese people. Vast stores of iron, magnesite, coal, oil, copper, lead, and gold were cleverly concealed from less watchful eyes.

All Japan was preparing for war, and Smith, who spoke Japanese and Chinese, and who was

Pearl Harbor Attack Described by Candidate

Candidate Robert O. Murphy, son of Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Murphy of Waco, Texas, a member of 7th Co. 1st STR, was a member of Battery C, 98th Coast Artillery, stationed at Schofield Barracks, T. H. On the morning of December 7, 1941, he, with the other members of his battery, were peacefully eating breakfast when bombs started exploding not far away.

The entire battery gave the Air Corps a good going over for practising on Sunday and disturbing their breakfast but when a few minutes later some of the planes came roaring over the mess hall realization of the truth dawned suddenly. Instead of the usual red, white, and blue insignia of the U. S. Army Air Corps the wings of these planes sported red circles—big red circles—unmistakably Japanese.

Within a few minutes the battery received their orders and went into action. Candidate Murphy with the rest of his crew wheeled their 3 in. anti-aircraft gun into position and when ammo arrived proceeded to get in a little practical work. Murphy's crew believed they accounted for two or three Nip planes but this belief was never confirmed. However, two members of the 98th, Lt. Saltzman and Sgt. Klatt, received silver stars for knocking down two of the attacking planes with automatic rifles.

When asked how he felt when he realized it was a real attack Candidate Murphy said he didn't know whether he was scared or mad or both, but whatever it was he had time to realize that the Jap pilots were good and daring fighters and were not to be underrated. "That" he said, 'is the big thing I learned from the attack and that's what I would like to pass along—not to underestimate the Japs. They're deadly on dive bombing and uncanny with torpedo planes and if their ground forces, which I haven't seen, are as good as their air force they're going to be tough to lick. Sure, we're the ones that can do it but we have to make the most of everything in the time available."

With that, Candidate Murphy said no more and when you stop and think about it he said a mouthful.

Second STR Choir To Offer Yule Program

The Second Student Training Regiment's choir, one of the best-known singing organizations on the post despite the fact that its officer candidate personnel is constantly changing, has prepared a special Christmas program which it is offering at several special services during the Yuletide season.

The choir will be a feature of a vesper service to be given at the Main Protestant Chapel on the Main Post Sunday evening, Dec. 27. Chaplain Edwin L. Willson of the Second Regiment, will officiate.

The choir is also singing at a Protestant Christmas Eve service in Chapel No. 2 at Harmony Church at midnight Christmas Eve, and its Christmas program was broadcast over the Columbus radio station last Sunday night.

There will also be a Catholic mass at midnight tonight at Harmony Church, in Chapel No. 3, while another midnight Protestant service will be offered in Chapel No. 4.

O. C. Simmonds Was Boxing Champ

George H. Simmonds, former Lake Forrest, Ill., boxing instructor, and once holder of Ohio A. A. U. and Illinois National Guard ring titles, has entered the Infantry School at Fort Benning, as a member of the 11th Company, 2nd Battalion, First Student Training Regiment.

Simmonds was Ohio A. A. U. Middleweight Champion in 1931, winning with a two round knockout. As a member of the 129th Infantry, Illinois National Guard, at Waukeegan, he won the Illinois National Guard Light-heavyweight title in 1927, outpointing Andy McCabe, former sparing partner of Jack Dempsey. In recent years Simmonds has served as boxing instructor at schools and boxing clubs.

He was inducted last April at Chicago and was stationed at Camp Croft, Spartansburg, S. C. before coming to Fort Benning.

MOTHERS MADE COMFORTABLE for Christmas at Benning. The vanguard of hundreds of holiday visitors, these two mothers said they could find no words to tell their delight when a soldier unlocked the door of the new barracks temporarily turned into guest houses. Mrs. Jack Wallace, left, came from Los Angeles, Calif., to spend Christmas with her son, Sgt. R. J. Wallace, a Benning paratrooper recuperating in the Station hospital. Mrs. William Bornmann, of Roxboro, Penn., is visiting her son, Pvt. William Bornmann, who is also confined to the hospital.

1st STR Set For Yuletide

Ingenuity, Economy Mark Decorations

In keeping with the true spirit of Christmas the enlisted men of the First Student Training Regiment set about to display their skill in the erection of unusual decorations and the planning of Christmas dinners.

Due to the fact that both the individual enlisted men and the companies of the regiment have subscribed heavily to the purchase of War Bonds, Col. Thomas R. Gibson, Regimental Commander, cautioned all concerned that a sharp limitation was to be placed on expenses involved in displays and entertainments. He futher suggested that money spent in this manner could be put to better use, and be more in the keeping with the true Christmas spirit, by the further purchase of bonds and stamps.

These words from Col. Gibson served to put before the men of the Regiment a direct challenge to their skill, ingenuity and imaginations. A tour of the area shows that the challenge was met with a will. Old cardboard, old paint, cast off clothes, a ball of twine, a bit of colored paper and plenty of imagination were the basis from which professional like decorations were forthcoming.

The men of each individual company felt that the efforts of his next door neighbor were a direct test of superiority. Secret meetings were held, plans were made, decorations were engineered in hidden corners and necks were suffering from a touch of "good neighborly" gawking. However, the greatest display of all was the display of high morale and eagerness to win. From all battalions came the good word that the men of the Regiment were looking forward with zest to their Christmas dinners and the never-to-be-forgotten spirit of good fellowship.

RELIGIOUS EVENTS

As is befitting the season, the Regimental Chaplain's Office is the center of all activity. From here Chaplain Frederick W. Helfer makes known his extensive plans for special Christmas worship. Already announcement has been made of a very full and inspiring schedule: Starting at 8 p. m. tonight a party will be held in the beautifully decorated Chaplain's Office. This party is for the "permanent enlisted personnel" of the Regiment and will conclude in such time as to permit the men to attend 11:30 p. m., services at the Main Chapel. On Christmas Day worship services and carol singing will be conducted in Bldg., No. 12 for the Second Battalion at 11:30 a. m. and Bldg., No. 4, for both the First and Third Battalions. There also will be an afternoon service at 1:20 p. m. Chaplain Helfer made it clear that at all times any men of the Regiment are welcome to stop in to his office and inspect the handy-work of his charges. The members of the Regiment are proud of the beautiful altar and colorful decorations arranged by the Chaplain. It truly will be a great Christmas. A Christmas close to God.

LT. COL. PAUL D. CARTER recently completed the division officers' refresher course at Fort Benning and was assigned to the 347th Infantry at Camp McCain, Miss. The colonel served in the first World War and was decorated for gallantry in action several times.

Army Post Office officials at Fort Sill, Okla., can decipher most any kind of writing, but they were stumped when they found a letter addressed to: "Paragraph 10, Special Order 309, Replacement Center Headquarters, Fort Sill."

Marriage now is no barrier to becoming a member of the Army Nurse Corps, for the War Department has announced that it will accept applications for appointments from married nurses.

The best known and loved of all Army mobile equipment, the Jeep, got its name when the first of the bouncing buggies was rolled off the freight car by a soldier who noticed the initials 'G. P." stencilled on the side to signify "General Purpose."

3rd STR O. C. Seeks Commission 'Hard Way'

Student Scores 100 Per Cent In Auto Course

Among the hundreds of men putting in long hours of hard work at the Army's training school for Infantry officers at Fort Benning are many who might have had an officer's commission just by saying "yes," but who preferred to earn their bars the hard way. Fairly typical of this group is Candidate Emil Leavitt, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

A qualified navigator of small craft, and owner of the 30-foot auxiliary "Valhalla," Leavitt became a member of the Coast Guard Reserve in October 1940 and, because of his 20 years experience in waters along the Atlantic coasts and in the West Indies, he was offered a commission in the Amphibious Corps of the Engineers last June.

However, Leavitt figured that a man should be a soldier before becoming an officer so he entered the Army on June 22, 1942, as a volunteer officer candidate. Sent to Camp Croft, S. C. for basic training he soon proved his worth and was appointed to the Infantry School last Armistice Day. Now he is undergoing three months of tough and intensive training in the weapons and tactics of the modern United States Infantry soldier.

At present Candidate Leavitt is a member of the crack Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School and if he successfully passes his course here he will be commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the Army of the United States.

When the war is over Leavitt hopes he will have an opportunity to pay another visit in the "Valhalla" to Haiti and other West Indian Islands among which he cruised extensively in 1939. Meanwhile the "Valhalla" is tied up in idle statue at the docks of the Sheepshead Bay Yacht Club in New York.

Lawson Field Offices Move To New Building

Several offices of administrative branches of Lawson Field have been moved in to the newly completed headquarters building addition at the field, it was reported today.

The new addition includes the offices of the Base Commander, Executive, Personnel, Adjutant, Base Supply, Administrative, Trial Judge Advocate, Public Relations and Intelligence Officers.

In the old building at the headquarters at the field, partitions have been removed and allotted to the enlisted personnel of various squadrons handling clerical and administrative work of their respective squadrons.

At the same time, the various squadrons have been segregated, thus eliminating crowded conditions. Further enlargement of the facilities of the field still is under way.

Private Abe Schik of Camp Wolters, Tex., was discharged from the Canadian army after Pearl Harbor —to permit him to join the American Army, but a bullet lodged near his spine at Dunkirk, caused him to be rejected for enlistment and again by his draft board. It wasn't until after six months of treatment that he made the grade for another crack at the enemy with the Yanks.

War Movie Slated Soon

Film Was Directed By Frank Capra

Soldiers at Fort Benning and at all other Army posts in the nation will shortly have an opportunity to attend a Hollywood-produced motion picture during duty hours—but it's all a part of their military training.

The picture is "Prelude to War," the first picture made for the Army by Lt. Col. Frank Capra, one of Hollywood's most able movie directors. It is a one-hour motion picture that will be shown to military personnel during duty hours as it is considered a part of their Army training.

In connection with the picture, a man-sized task—that of distributing the picture throughout the nation so that every soldier in training will see it sometime in the next 42 days—was handed to the Army Motion Picture Service. One hundred and 14 prints of the film were made, including prints in 16 mm. form for all units overseas.

"Prelude to War" has a commentary recited by Walter Huston, although he never appears. It covers the territory of the Office of War Information feature "The World at War" but Colonel Capra has used marching feet as a symphony, gave the reel other "Capra touches" to make it powerful and dramatic.

Reports on the picture indicate that it portrays the reasons why America is engaged in the global war and is based on a series of lectures prepared by college professors.

Faith, Courage Mark Eulogy of Lost Son

Editor's Note: The following essay needs little explanation. It was written by the country editor of the Walsh County Record at Grafton, N. D. We reprint it because we think it shows the faith in their country and the courage of the "folks" back home. To soldiers it should provide an inspiration to know that such are the fathers whose sons they are. And this typically American father entitled this piece simply,

For more than 30 years, as a newspaper man, I have been writing about people-mostly people whom I knew. I have chronicled their successes and their failures, their joys and their sorrows. Naturally it has been easier and more pleasant to write of their success and their joys. It is not easy to write about the dark shadows which occasionally slip down over every community and almost every life.

In the first World War, in line with my duty, I told of the passing of many fine young men who had gone out from the little community of Starkweather where I then lived, to defend and protect their country.

In the great conflict now raging, it has been the unpleasant duty of myself, or someone on the Record staff, to tell the heroic stories of several brave youths from Walsh county who have made the supreme sacrifice.

I am familiar, therefore, with the form of the message which the War Department sends out on such occasions. It is a simple, carefully worded document. When the first few words came over the telephone Friday night, I could have repeated the remainder of the message from memory. It said: "The Secretary of War desires me to express his deep regret, that your son, Second Lieutenant Rillie R. Morgan, Jr., was killed in action in the defense of his country in the south Pacific on Nov. 22. Letter follows: Ulio, the adjutant general."

And thus there came to me and my family the great sorrow which we have tried so often to share when others have received the dread news. It is not easy, but we are sustained and supported by the words and messages of comfort and sympathy which have come from friends throughout the state.

WE LOOK BACK

Now that the effects of the first shock have passed, we naturally look back over the life of this young man who was so typically American and who symbolizes the millions of brave young men who are fighting the battles of humanity and justice and freedom on every continent and every sea and island that gem the sea. In doing so we catch and hold memories that will remain with us so long as life shall endure.

We recall as if it were yesterday, how proud we were when our first male child was born back on the beautiful spring day in April 1920. Now his older sister would have a playmate and there would be someone to carry on the family name when we should have finished our labors here on earth.

He was not much different from other American babies. In a few brief months he began to show that restless energy which was to characterize his entire life. As soon as he was able to walk he became something of a town pet. He went alone everywhere in the little town where we lived and everyone knew him. When we would go to look for him, we might find him on the front porch, or in the parlor of a neighbor on the outskirts of the village, or on top of an automobile being repaired in the town garage.

Twenty years ago when we came to Grafton, he was not quite three years old. He grew up here. He went through the grades and the high school. He was not an outstanding student. He worked hard enough only to make his grades. He was interested in athletics and played on the high school football and basketball teams. I doubt if a more mischievous youngster ever lived and there were times when he sorely tried the patience of his parents, his teachers and his friends. Yet, when he smiled that frank, friendly, open smile of his, one was completely disarmed. He had a very remarkable personality.

GENEROUS, LOYAL

And while he was mischievous and got himself into his share of childish trouble, there was not a trace of meanness in his makeup. He was generous to a fault, he was loyal to his friends, and above all he was truthful and trustworthy.

I do not claim that he had more faults or more virtues than the average American boy. Rather, I glory in the fact that he was a typical, average American boy.

After completing high sch... he went to the University for ... years. During his second year, he was able to get into the R. O. T. C., after being refused the first year because of poor eyesight. He could have remained at the university from 1940 to 1942 had he so desired, but he knew his country would need him sooner or later and he early determined to serve with the boys whom he knew and with whom he had grown up. He joined Company C and left here in February, 1941.

At Camp Claiborne, he was quickly promoted to corporal. Then a few months later he was made the company supply sergeant. It was in that capacity that he went overseas.

Then this summer, when the War Department set up the first officers candidate school outside of continental United States, in New Caledonia, he was one of the 153 selected from a group of 1,650 to take the first training. Two other Grafton boys were selected for the same class, and ironic enough both of them, Arvid Brasvik and Albert Whitney, have also made the supreme sacrifice.

No one will ever know just how proud his mother and I felt when he was commissioned a second lieutenant. It was the pride of parents who know that this son has "made good."

DEEPLY RELIGIOUS

Like most typically American boys, he seldom showed the deep religious faith which was within him. When he arrived at the age of understanding, without suggestions or prompting from his parents, he joined the church of his choice. At home and in camp he attended church whenever possible. In the last letter we received from him written on Guadalcanal, he made this epigramic statement in substance: "I know now what it means to have faith in God." From the letters I have read from other boys in the service, I am convinced he spoke for all his comrades.

There is comfort and consolation for us who mourn in the knowledge that he died holding firm to his faith—a faith upon which we, too, must depend to sustain us.

Last winter, not knowing what the future might hold for him or us, his mother and I made a trip to LeGrande, Ore., where Company C was then located, and visited briefly with him. At that time, because of the prospective rubber shortage, we felt just a little guilty for making the trip. Now we would not trade the memory of those sacred hours for all the riches of the world.

Thus ends the story of this typical American boy. It might be written about millions of other boys who are now fighting for righteousness throughout the world.

SACRED OBLIGATION

The sacrifice he and others have made, and others will make, place upon us a heavy responsibility which we dare not shirk. Every American must realize now that we cannot live unto ourselves alone. There rests upon us the sacred obligation to see to it that the world is not again plunged into the hell of war at the instigation of one man or one nation. We owe it to them to see to it that America becomes so strong and is kept so strong that she, and other peaceful nations, can put down the threat of war in its incepancy wherever it may arise. Then we must have the courage and the vision to use that strength to see to it that never again shall a fanatical Hitler, a swashbuckling Mussolini, or a treacherous Jap raise his hideous head in this world. If we do less we shall not have kept faith with them.

And so, my son, hail and farewell. You lived abundantly you fought valiantly, you kept the faith, you died bravely, you gave your life that that we who live may enjoy the blessings of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and the American way of life. No man can give more.

God bless you for the precious memories you have left us.

Another Kind of CHRISTMAS STAR

There's another . . . NEW kind of Christmas Star this year of 1942. It glows beside the Blessed Star of Bethlehem that guided the Wise Men on that first Christmas. This new Christmas Star is pinned to our American doorways . . . shines through windows . . . is carried in our hearts . . . a symbol of courage and faith . . . a tribute to those away from home.

To the men in uniform, near and far, this New Christmas Star stands for a principle . . . for all that Christmas represents . . . peace, freedom, love of fellow-man. They pray, as we do, that our enemies may right their wrongs . . . that the world may return to the blessings it was created for. Those men . . . your men . . . believe in this mission to clear the world of evil. WE believe in THEM and their fight to preserve our way of life.

CHRISTMAS, 1942 is a star-studded season. Spiritual stars that shine for all time. Stars that glisten from Service Flags throughout our land, proclaiming a brief interval, for them and for us, when we can all be together again. But joy prevails . . . we deck our halls with holly . . . gather 'round the Christmas tree . . . sing hymns and praises of Christ, The New-Born King! All this is Christmas . . . the way they want it . . . the way Americans want it, now and always . . . to keep it SHINING FOR ALL THE WORLD!

Dad's 'Easy' Chair— And A Swell Dinner

Sundays are usually pretty dreary days in this man's Army. Most of us forsake "chow" call, sleep through breakfast, and rise about noon—spending the rest of the day taking it easy. But, being far away from home, especially at the Christmas season, the prospects of being "out in the cold" as far as spending a day with the home folks are concerned were not much to our liking.

This year it won't be necessary! The news columns of the Bayonet last week announced that hundreds of families in Columbus would open their "family corners" to Fort Benning soldiers next Sunday. The theme of the idea bespeaks the wholesome relationship which Columbus citizens feel for those of us in training at Fort Benning.

"There will not be a lonely soldier at Fort Benning on Sunday, December 27th" sounds a bit lush but nontheless the theme is wholehearted. Hundreds of Columbus "Moms" and "Dads" have sons in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps or Coast Guard: many of these sons are far overseas, some have been maimed by enemy bullets, others are "missing." These are the people, just like our own Mothers and Fathers, who are opening their doors to us.

The folks in Columbus want us to join them in dinner on Sunday, the 27th. Instead of propping ourselves on the edge of our bunks in the barracks, we'll be able to lounge in some "Dad's" favorite chair in the living room and read the comics or pet the family dog. Then we'll enjoy a swell dinner which some Mother will have spent hours planning and preparing. Turkey or roast pork always tastes different at home—and next Sunday we've been invited to make our "homes" in Columbus. So let's join in the spirit of the occasion.

'America Must Win' Echoes From Tomb

"America must win this war. Therefore I will work; I will save; I will sacrifice; I will endure; I will fight cheerfully and do my utmost, as if the issue of the whole struggle depended on me alone."

The above statement is an entry from the diary of a common soldier, Martin Treptow, and was found on his body after the battle of Chateau Thierry in World War I. It was considered significant enough to be made part of the Congressional Record, as of February 13, 1942. An unknown soldier of this war has added a thought that is pregnant in the minds of many World War II doughboys, and directs his voice toward the civilian worker in our great factories:

"And if our lines should form and break
Because of things you failed to make,
An extra ship, a tank, a plane,
For which we waited . . . all in vain . . .
And the supplies that never come . . .
Will you then come and take the blame?
For we, not you, will pay the cost
Of battles YOU, not WE, have lost."

Just Wondering

I wonder why the world seems bright
In cheerful homes on Christmas night,
Where cozy log fires crack and roar
And welcome's written on the door.

I wonder why, when all is quiet,
The snowflakes soft and fluffy white
Come falling, whirling, gently down
To spread a blanket o'er the ground.

I wonder why that just a tree
In dazzling lights and brilliancy
Can ever be so gorgeous, bright
A symbol that it's Christmas night.

I wonder why the church bells chime
Their carols sweet at Christmas time,
To tell you that it's time again
For peace on earth, good will to men.

I wonder why, when far away,
Your thoughts turn homeward Christmas day
To mother rocking in her chair
Wishing, praying you were there.

I wonder why we hail the king
Saint Nicholas who reigns supreme
Upon his throne so happily—
To him we pledge our loyalty.

I wonder why when we're asleep
The reindeers o'er the rooftops creep.
With Santa and his sack of toys
For all the little girls and boys.

I wonder why a boy should kiss
A very charming, lovely miss
Because she stands 'neath mistletoe
Like the legend of long ago.

I wonder why we spread good cheer
To loved ones that we hold so dear.
I wonder why we pray in vain
To live and be just kids again.

Sgt. Harry R. Chard,
7th Observation Squadron

Our family is bigger now than before—
A family of countries united in war.
The best gift to give these United Nations
Is found in the way we share our rations.
It's to carry out in our year-round living
The unselfish spirit of Christmas giving.

Christmas—1942

The flame leaps high from thick birch logs
The winter's cold is locked outside
And all things stay from brittle cold
Stay near the warmth, and therein hide.

The family grouped around the fire
Makes loud the wooden rafters ring
Tis Christmas Eve—O Precious night,
With joy the Christmas Songs they sing.

And listen while the Elder reads
The story of the Saviour's birth
In Bethlehem . . . so long ago
. . . To bring GOOD WILL . . . AND PEACE
. . . TO EARTH.

And as the story comes to life
There . . . hear the fire's flickering flame
The star appears . . . in brillian light,
The same as then . . . the very same.

A star to guide, to point the way
To manger where the Saviour lay
To show to men the place where born
Was God's own Son, that early morn.

And when the Wise Men saw that light
Of single star . . . so clear . . . so bright
Upon that sacred . . . silent night
They knelt to pray, for by God's might
Was born the Saviour of the Right.

But there has been a change in time . . .
Until this year, our year of war
Which finds us locked in battle's grip
To hold on high the Christmas Law.

Lie shepherds . . . then . . . who left the hills
We leave our flocks safe in the fold
While, we, ourselves, gird armor on
To serve the cause . . . OUR PEACE TO HOLD.
Then . . . As the Wise men did that day,
We bow our heads . . . We kneel to pray,
For strength to serve our Righteous Cause
The same as they.

You and I are the fighting strong
Seeking to stamp out hate and wrong
Pledging our strength . . . we join the throng
Raising our voice in Freedom's Song.

O Lord, upon this Christmas Day
We ask Thy Blessing . . . KEEP US FREE
That we can live in brotherhood,
In Peace, In Liberty.

God guide us through the year ahead
Give us the strength and might
To save our land . . . preserve our cause.
For justice . . . AND THE RIGHT.

On high, Old Glory flies unharmed,
Our flag, long may it wave,
The symbol of the Good, the Pure,
The Faith We Pledge To Save.

The Faith, through hell of war ahead
Will stay, unfurled, on high . . .
That PEACE ON EARTH . . . GOOD WILL TO MEN
Will live . . . SOMEDAY . . . NOT DIE!

And though the road be long and rough
We pledge, in this, our Pray'r . . .
On Christmas Day . . . in years to come
OUR FLAG WILL STILL BE THERE.

Thus do we lay aside our guns,
Our tanks, our planes . . . this day.
On foreign soil . . .
On land . . . On Sea,
To kneel down as we pray.

Yes, on this Christmas we are free
And by God's Will shall ever be.

We pledge our lives . . . if that we must.
OUR VICTORY . . .
IN GOD WE TRUST.

O. C. Course Teaches Officers To Think

It is the endeavor of the Infantry School to develop thinking officers, for only through superior thinking will we win this war. Training at the O. C. S. has the primary purpose of instilling in each student mind the critical necessity for clear thinking and sound planning.

Our enemy is a human being who can be outwitted, outguessed and outmaneuvered. "Horse-sense" coupled with our acquisition of technical knowledge at Fort Benning will heighten greatly our chances of emerging victors. The enemy has all the weaknesses susceptibility and gullibility of the human being and we can fool him.

Superior thinking gave us skyscrapers, radio and electricity as well as countless other things and superior thinking will enable us to preserve our precious Americanism.

Instructors of the O. C. S. are striving to impress upon each candidate the urgent need for mental alertness at all times. Human minds direct machines, compel strategies, erect fortresses and steer armies; only by thinking—the dearest, smartest kind of thinking will our army best the enemy.

No matter what your individual missions may be, nor to what distant regions we may be assigned, for the sake of our friends and relatives, of our men in ranks, for the sake of our American principles, for God's sake, let's use our brains!

USO Presents—

POP-CORN AND DANCES FOR A REAL CHRISTMAS

By CPL. SOLOMON KLEINDORF

This week at the different USO Clubs in Columbus and Phenix City there really will be a big Christmas with all the clubs doing their best to take the place of the homes we miss so much at this time of the year . . . At the YWCA there will be special parties for the Army wives and their associates at the club . . . On Thursday, a Christmas luncheon for the wives and plenty of fun. This starts at 1 p. m. and ends about three hours later . . . Friday, there will be what is known as open house. Fires will be made in all the fire places; stories will be told and pop-corn will be popped. This takes place in the evening and is just what the name implies. Open house for all who care to attend.

The only report about Christmas coming from the USO-Salvation Army in Phenix City tells us there will be a party and much the same activities that the rest of the clubs will be having . . . This will have to be excused as the program director left for the Carolinas in very short notice and George Hardin, the new program director, hasn't got around to letting me know what is going on . . . But there is one thing I can tell you and that is, if you want to hear some very good music be on hand Saturday evening for the Station Hospital String ensemble.

Another club handing in a negative report is the USO-Army and Navy Y . . . This club will have a Christmas party, consisting of ?????

At the 9th St. USO Club starting the holidays off right, the Two-Nine band will play and all the good soldier boys and the Military Maids will make merry upon the dance floor . . . The following morning (Friday) the Red Cross workers will be on hand to serve hot coffee ands—to relieve that hangover. From 3 to 8, the same day, the ladies committee will serve cakes, candy, and nuts . . . At 9:15 all the boys and gals will get together . . . to watch a movie . . . And last but not in the least bit smaller than the rest—Saturday will see the post-Christmas dance . . . And that means after-Christmas — not the Fort Benning Christmas dance. Don't feel bad, I made the same mistake when I heard about it.

The last item for this week is the very swell way in which the USO-Salvation Army Club in Columbus has done up their club . . . Here is one place you can sing "White Christmas" and mean it. They have a big white Christmas tree in one corner of the club and plenty of mistletoe and holly around . . . Bring your girl down and get her under some mistletoe and then go to town. . . . Thursday the club is planning a small service and then a Christmas pageant . . . Friday is open house and they will have just about the same as the rest of the clubs . . . Saturday and Sunday the big event is the arrival of Jim (I never could find out his last name), much to Mell Talbot's satisfaction.

Merry Christmas—and don't forget to register at any one of the USO clubs for the big time to be had this Sunday.

Eve Says—

HOT BATHS, BUTTERED TOAST THE SWEETEST GIFTS OF ALL

Christmas on an army post—

Santa Claus, lighted trees and fulfilled wishes is Christmas to children wherever they spend their holidays—comparison of gifts with their friends down the street—small mouths stuffed with hard candy — sturdy legs pumping wheel toys, the precious reminders of priorities that will be missing from the holiday scene next year.

Tired and happy parents—tissue paper, sad in its crumpled gaiety—the bits of colored and gilt ribbon. They served their purpose for a brief moment of ecstatic anticipation. Mother is happy over the pile of gifts that proved she was still the lovely lady in the heart of the man she loves. Dad is touched with the evidence of his children's pride in his military standing. His gifts are so completely military.

Soldier's wives, mothers and sweethearts—they're happy and grateful to be with their dear one. This is a different sort of Christmas for them. Bewilderment and awe are in their eyes as they take in the military picture. How terribly different from the Christmas they've always had at home. All they have is the soldier himself—none of the familiar customs of their home at holiday time—none of the busy preparation of meals, of visits with friends. They grin at the contact with strangers and hold to the thought that they can talk things out and at last have their questions answered. Letters tell so little. They're comforted that he finds happiness in this man's world.

Soldiers who enjoy the comradeship of filled barracks—soldiers greedily enjoying the luxury and plenty of the Army Christmas dinner—soldiers, shy and reserved, longing for privacy. The greatest gift they could think of for the holiday would be a hot steaming bath in luxurious privacy of their own bathroom. They'd trade the entire holiday dinner for a slice of hot buttered toast at their own breakfast table. Soldiers hungry with longing for their wives and sweethearts, for the tart comments of their wise mother.

Gifts shabby from handling—sad little packages wrapped in crumpled paper and tied with bits of string—Broken packages—beautiful packages, gay with color and ribbons, securely packed—boxes of stale commercial Christmas cheer, crumbled store cookies, talcum powder, and strange cheap soap—razor blades that fit no known razor—silly kits filled with unusable gadgets—wonderful gift boxes filled with rich candy and cookies, evidence of family denial of the precious sugar — warm hand knit sweaters and gloves—fuzzy soft slippers — a handsome watch — fountain pen and a compact writing kit — a small Bible bound in soft leather.

Christmas cards—brave and gay messages from friends in strange and lonely towns—cards from relatives at home who are trying so hard to do their bit—cards from wives who include the good wishes of their husband with theirs, even though he's been overseas for months and she hasn't heard from him in weeks—cards from bewildered parents who are missing their sons for the first Christmas of nagging worry and loneliness.

The deep gratefullness in the hearts of the families who are together on the post—the sharing of their home and holiday parties for those who might be lonely—The insistent thought of next year, when Christmas will mean separation.

Christmas on an army post — carols, lighted trees, services in the chapels—deep and reverant prayers in hearts that have faced the tragedy of their generation. Their prayers are for strength and courage to face the task ahead of them in making the world a place where Christmas will be a joyous celebration for all men.

Chaplain's Corner

NO SANTA CLAUS

Chaplain Frank M. Thompson

The world today is very much upset.
We hoped for peace, there came a sword,
Goodwill and still there grows discord,
The snow with bloody slaughter red,
Passion is regnant, God is dead, so it would seem.

But think what the world would be if the angels had never sung their message of peace and goodwill over the plains of Bethlehem; if the Christmas spirit had never spread over the earth, giving birth and fostering hospitals for the sick and the maimed, homes for crippled and neglected children, a thousand and one philanthropic institutions for the alleviation of human suffering and the bettering of social conditions. Yes, in the midst of all the turmoil and tragedy there is a spirit that makes life safe, helpful, hopeful, beautiful. And this spirit will continue to stir the hearts of men until His will is done on earth as it is done in heaven.

There is a Santa Claus. A multitude of children on the morrow will bear witness to the fact. At the break of dawn they will steal down stairs, cross the room to a tree all colorful and with shouts of glee gather gifts left them by the man of their dreams. He would not dare disappoint these little ones "Glory to God in the highest."

Christmas is coming, the geese are getting fat,
Please to put a penny in the old man's hat;
If you haven't got a penny, a ha' penny will do,
If you haven't got a ha' penny, God bless you.

"Why did you take Brown's cigarettes out of his locker?"

"I don't know, Sarge, unless it was the gypsy in me."

Inspecting officer: "This pistol is dirty! Look at it!"
Rookie: "That's alright, sir; I'll take your word for it."

1st prisoner: "What are you in the guard house for?"

2nd prisoner: "Because the colonel told me to have his horse shod."

1st prisoner: "That's no reason, is it?"

2nd prisoner: "Yeah, but I misunderstood him; I thought he said shot."

BLACK MAGIC

Hambone, the champion crap shooter of the regiment, was teaching Rastus, the new Rookie, the art of rolling the African dominoes. He told him a seven or eleven won, and a deuce or trey lost.

Rastus picked up the dice and shook them like a professional, snapped his fingers and said, "I don't want no chance."

Hambone eyed him for a moment, then said, "Lissen, heah, niggah; is yo all sho you don't knows nuthin 'bout dis game? If you is, den you sho de hell am learning fast!"

EPITAPH

Of Pvt. Bennie McSnoot.
One day he left an airplane
Without a parachute.

The cook is getting crummy,
The chow is getting bum,
The mess sergeant's in the hole
And his slogan's "Feed 'em slum."

"I'll get a kick out of this," grinned the garrison guzzler, as the general court martial found him guilty.

And when the top kick announced that the articles of war would be read, the recruit piped up, "What war?"

This old world we're living in
Has turned out mighty well;
Corn like makes you happy
And also feel like hell.

"They tell me the sergeant major and that bugler who always used to argue with him buried the hatchet."

"Wrong; They buried the bugler."

"Private Plunk told the waitress at the Fort Web post exchange that she would have to pardon him for drinking his coffee out the cup, that he didn't have time to pour it out in his saucer."

Hostess: "Corporal, do you prefer an outside room?"

Corporal: "Guess not, ma'am; looks sorta like rain."

'Twas the fight before Christmas
And all through the flat
It sounded just like Casey
Had homer-ed at bat.

"Well I guess I'll hit the hay," chanted the chauffeur, as he lost control of the G. I. truck and headed for the forage shed.

Which sentence is correct?
"The K. P.'s worked like hell today," or, "like hell, the K. P.'s worked today."

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

Upon arriving at the office I was very surprised to find Colonel T. P. Swampwater in a state of great perplexity.

"Sergeant," he says, "I've been up all night worrying over a very profound and complex problem.

"Yes sir," I said, trying to humor the ol' boy, and at the same time being consciously cognizant of the colonel's bewitching habit o. looking at his nose with both eyes.

"I can't exactly generalize to any extremes, sergeant, but I've been wondering in a curious way, just what soldiers think about while they are standing in line in front of the main post theatre."

"Sometimes they think about Rita Hayworth, sometimes Hedy Lamarr, depending on which picture is playing," says I.

"Hell sergeant! I've got to have facts! I can't gauge the army's matinee morale on your generalities. I want you to find out what picture is playing and go over there and get me a first hand report of the whole situation."

"Yes sir," I said, "GEORGE WASHINGTON SLEPT HERE with Ann Sheridan."

"What in blazes, sergeant!

"That's the name of the picture, sir, you asked me what it was you know. Jack Benny is in it too."

For a minute I thought the steam radiator was boiling over, but it was only the colonel clearing his throat. A signal he often used to let me know when an interview was over.

So I about faced, remembered that I'd forgot to salute, about faced again, remembered that I wasn't supposed to about face, saluted, and ambled out, fully aware.

That Ol' T. P. was looking a hole through the back of my head.

About 3:30 o'clock that evening I arrived in the vicinity of the theatre to begin my job. A four abreast enlisted line was drooling from the ticket window to the bus station on my right and a two abreast officer line was drooping from the ticket window to goodness knows where on my left.

For my first Guinea pig, I selected a tall, tow headed tech sergeant from the paratroopers, in the right line.

"Whatta yuh thinking about?" I asked him.

"Who in the hell wants to know?" he replied.

"Colonel Swampwater," I answered, slightly confused.

"Well tell him I quit trying to think after my first jump" drawled, said sergeant.

"Very well," I glared, moving on down the line to a rather dejected looking private.

"What's preying on your mind, soldier?"

"Yuh speaking to me, sergeant?"

"Yes, you."

"Well, 'er I was just wondering if the popcorn was gonna be as fresh tonight as it was last night?"

"Undoubtedly, soldier, undoubtedly," I mused, glancing eagarly around for another victim.

I immediately spotted a rather solemn looking officer candidate near the end of the line.

"Colonel T. P. Swampwater wishes some information from you," said I to him.

"Yes, sir!" says he, snapping to attention. "The colonel's wish is my duty. I am Corporal Stanley MacGregor of the First Student Training Regiment O. C. Class 3462 J."

"That's fine," I said, "but the colonel wants to know what you're thinking about."

"The school solution, sergeant."

"Yes, I know, but whatta are you thinking about now, off duty?"

"Why about my commission! I'm gonna get one, aren't I? Don't the colonel want me to have one. I passed all my G. T.'s and—"

"Yes. That's all very nice, Mr. MacGregor, but what the colonel wants to know is what you're thinking about right now! While you're standing in this line!"

"Oh! That's different. Eh, well I guess I was thinking about Minnie. She's my girl. She's buying war stamps and bonds so we will have enough to get married on after I get my commission."

That my friends completes my survey of the state of mind of the enlisted portion of the main post theatre line. I intended questioning the office. portion. but decided against it, since I don't want to be any more confused than I already am when I make my report to the colonel.

Peeks at Pics

It seems that this week runs to action in the pics playing the post. Starting with the rip-roaring story of "Pittsburgh" . . . Action of the story follows the career of three people, a girl and two men, who struggle dangerously, face hardships valiantly and are eventually united by the war effort. . . Marlene Dietrich has the role of the girl, a miner's daughter. John Wayne and Randolph Scott appear as rivals for her attentions. . . Frank Craven is seen as a scientist and Louise Allbritton's assignment is that of a debutante . . . The leading trio appeared in "The Spoilers" and are now once more romance, rivalry, and adventure together in the new film . . . The title of the film's principal characters run parallel to the drama of the steel city itself and the climax of dusty interwomen with the mighty swing-over to all-out war production.

Half-man and half-ape is the creature who represents "Dr. Renault's Secret." J. Carrol Naish, who has been hanging around for a long time and not very often getting a break, does the half-half characterization . . . Billed as the successor of Lon Chaney, Naish will have to go some if this pic is an example of his work . . . This show is laid in France and involves the murder of at least a half-dozen people . . . Plenty thrilling and blood-curdling. It can not compare with "Frankenstein" after which it was modeled.

The rip-snortin', gal-ropin', hard-ridin' horse-opry which plays on the other half of a double bill with "Dr. Renault's Secret" is none other than "Heart of the Golden West" starring Roy Rogers, Ruth Terry, Smiley Burnette, and supported by "Gabby" Hayes, Sons of the Pioneers, and the Hall Johnson Choir . . . This western has an unusual twist which in itself is outstanding . . . Because of the enormous prices asked for the shipping of cattle by racketeers, Roy asks an old southern Colonel to bring his river steamboat up to the town and use it to ship cattle . . . That is the beginning of the end and also the beginning of all the excitement and fun.

See the Burning of Bagdad —looted by desert raiders. See the 500 harem beauties—held in silken bondage. See the Slave Market—and its captive beauties. See and hear the Terrors of the Rack—and its tortured victims . . . All this and action too. Praise the Lord and pass the price of admission . . . "Arabian Nights," starring Jon Hall, Sabu, Maria Montez and supported by Billy Gilbert, Leif Erikson and Shemp Howard, will give you all this and throw in some wild love making too . . . The funniest part of the pic is when Sabu sneaks into the Harem in order to solve the mystery of all harems . . . I don't want to tell you about it because that will spoil it, but I will say that it is the funniest, giddiest scene ever made . . . As you have probably guessed by this time the setting is in old Bagdad with the action overlapping into the desert.

Monty Woolley scores again! This time in "Life Begins at 8:30" . . . The pic doesn't live up to what is expected when one looks at the cast, but at times it is strictly Woolley and that kind of makes up for it . . . Ida Lupino, in the role of Monty's crippled daughter does her best to pick the show up, but it really is the fault of the scenario writers . . . The best that can be said for the show is that it is not a waste of time or money.

active duty February 1, 1940 to attend the National Guard and Reserve Officers Course at The Infantry School. Upon completion of the course in June of that year he returned to civilian status where he was in the legal department of a large insurance company in Newark.

TOO MUCH PAPER WORK

He was recalled in October 1940 for one year's active duty with the staff and faculty of The Infantry School. During that year he was in successive steps the assistant company commander of the first Battalion Commander and Staff Officers course, a faculty officer with the first General Officers class, adjutant of the First Student Training Regiment, and a tactical officer with the Officer Candidate class. By the time he reverted to inactive status in October 1941 at the end of his year of active duty, he was thoroughly convinced that Army paper work was getting out of hand.

Our entry into the war brought Captain Baumer back to active duty, and in February 1942 he became personnel officer of the Second Student Training Regiment here. He began immediately to search for methods of simplifying paper work. The stock reply that "it's the Army way, and you can't change it" served only as a challenge to this ambitious young officer. He set out to change the old methods which had been plaguing Army personnel officers for generations.

His investigations revealed that more than one hundred separate forms were being filled out individually either by each Officer Candidate himself or by clerks for the candidate. Checking further he found that some thirty items of information had to be repeated more than a dozen times, with many of these running over fifty repeats each. Each candidate's name and army serial number had to be written on every one of the more than one hundred forms. At least 27,864 personal signatures of officers were required each week to deprocess and commission the candidates graduating that week. The pressure of the volume of work on the available clerical personnel had seriously increased the number of errors.

TIS SPONSORED

The obvious result of the survey was an attempt to find some low cost machines which could reduce the number of clerks and typewriters serving in these tasks. In May Captain Baumer contacted an office machine manufacturer to ascertain whether their equipment might be a solution, and in June The Infantry School sent him to that company's factory to study the feasibility of their product for Army needs.

When the Student Training Brigade was formed on July 1st to take over administrative functions for the three Student Training Regiments, Captain Baumer became its personnel officer. Under the encouragement of Colonel Tupper, and with the approval of Major General Leven C. Allen, School Commandant, he arranged to have machines sent here on approval. After exhaustive testing he submitted a report explaining what he had found. In September the War Department approved the set-up, and early in October the Machine Service Unit began processing Officer Candidate classes.

The captain had discovered that the thirty most frequently used items of information required by the hundred odd forms could be covered by a single master plate. Accordingly, under the system he has instituted, each candidate, when he enters the school, fills out only one individual record form containing all the information needed during his stay here.

After this form has been checked against his permanent record for accuracy, the information is embossed on his master plate. All necessary forms and rosters for all the various departments of The Infantry School are printed from this plate. The plates can be tabbed for automatic selection, say for a Catholic Chaplain's roster, so only the names of Catholics in the group are printed.

Temporary rosters, formerly typewritten by the company clerks, are no longer needed because of the speed with which the permanent rosters are prepared.

MINIMIZES ERRORS

An auxiliary plate with extra large type is made of the man's name. From these plates a supply of identification labels is imprinted for each item of the candidate's equipment. Formerly these name cards were printed by hand.

None of the rosters, forms, or other material prepared by this unit require the time or cost of checking for accuracy because they all coincide with the master plate. The system is able to process the 6,450 items of information needed daily with an average error of less than one thirtieth of one per cent.

For purposes of his survey, Captain Baumer divided the paper work on officer candidates into three phases, processing, training, and deprocessing. Under the old Army system, 139 hours of work were required for each class in the processing phase, whereas the machines are able to do the job in 21 work hours. The training phase took 43 hours the old way as against five hours under the present system. The figure for deprocessing has been cut from 222 work hours to 12 work hours.

In addition, the 27,864 personal signatures of officers required each week in deprocessing and commissioning candidates consumed 71 work hours per week when signed by hand (300 signatures per hour), and only 21 hours per week by machine. Thus the introduction of modern office machines saves a total of 2,306 work hours per week in the paper work for Officer Candidates at The Infantry School.

ECONOMY ITS VIRTUE

In computing these figures, the captain used as a standard measure of the old system a clerk who could type sixty words per minute and who never had to take any time for corrections. Such a clerk is indeed rare. Therefore, the figures on time saved must be considered very conservative.

One of the most amazing things about the whole system is its economy. The cost of all the machines and equipment for the first year of operation, including the cost of buying them outright and operating them, is less than 15 cents per candidate. After the first year when the machines have been paid for, the cost will be but two cents per candidate for operation.

Shortly after the program was adopted here, commandants and representatives of other service schools began visiting The Infantry School to study the Machine Service Unit, and other schools made plans to set up similar systems. On November 12th Captain Baumer was ordered to Washington to explain in detail to the War Department heads how his "brain child" was functioning. While there he introduced a model of a new machine he had devised to simplify other phases of paper work, and he was sent to the factory of the same company to work out details for its manufacture.

Soon after his return to The Infantry School, the captain received orders which will transfer him permanently to Washington for duty with the Methods Management Branch, Control Division, of the Adjutant General's Office to work out details for and the establishment of his system in all officer candidate schools, reception centers, and in such other installations as may be recommended by the Adjutant General Board.

COMBINING GRACE and charm with her difficult and amazing acrobatic dances, Maxine Turner appears with Olson and Johnson's Hellzapoppin', when the unit plays Fort Benning for five days starting Dec. 29. Miss Turner has appeared with Orrin Tucker, Russ Morgan, the Andrews Sisters, Glenn Miller, and Brenda and Corbina. It is nothing unusual for Maxine to play before a soldier audience because in reality her heart is with the army. Her brother is in the air corps, and she is engaged to a G. I. in the ordnance.

Hilarious 'Hellzapoppin' Opens on Post Tuesday

The big news of the week is the arrival of Olson and Johnson's "Hellzapoppin" for a five-day stay at Fort Benning, starting Dec. 29. The show is a traveling unit of USO-Camp Shows Inc., playing to soldiers around the country with admission free.

"Hellzapoppin" will play the first two days at the Main Theatre on the post proper. On Dec. 31, it will show at Theatre No. 2, in the Sand Hill area. The rip-roaring comedy will start the new year off right in Theatre No. 4 in the Harmony Church area, by playing there Jan. 1 and 2.

Produced under the personal supervision of the masters themselves this is a riot of fun, laughs and guffaws. It is packed with 30 headliners from stage, screen, and radio. Headed by Milton Douglas and Company, Jack Leonard, the Emerald Sisters, the Three Grace Notes, Charles De Haven, Claire Louise Evans, Harry Hines and Billy Potter, Maxine Turner, and the 16 Roxyettes.

taken into confidence as a Samurai, because of his wounds in battle—high marks of distinction by Japanese standards—realized Japan was seeking world domination. Few American Military authorities had any conception of Japan's strength. The situation was alarming.

FIGHTS COMPLACENCY

He came back to the United States in 1938 and traveled the length and breadth of the nation begging the people not to underestimate their Nipponese neighbors across the Pacific. At the same time he was amazed at the number of young American army and naval officers who believed Japan could be subdued in three months. Smith continued to write and lecture upon Japan, seeking always to open the eyes that would not see. Then came Pearl Harbor. There was little need to say, "I told you so."

Instead Smith immediately volunteered his services to the United States in any capacity in any branch. There were difficulties and delays, and Smith finally enlisted as private in the Signal Corps.

in jammed restaurants in order to be with their soldier-sons and husbands at Army camps such as Fort Benning.

The nation's drivers—mostly those in the eastern states—were still breathing heavily after the worst scare of the war as far as rationing was concerned. For a brief day and night, the OPA took away all gas except that needed for commercial vehicles. Drivers in the eastern states were incredulous, then mad and then—in most instances—patriotic when they were denied gas. But there were thousands of gas-hungry Americans who swamped the gas stations and filled their tanks to overflowing as soon as word of a threatened shortage reached their ears. Many a filling station attendant recalled drivers who joggled their cars back and forth to get that last ounce in and make sure they got their Sunday drive.

This week the A, B, and C cards were all good for three gallons of gas per unit.

ciate that yet but some day they'll be proud, no doubt, of their dad.

Early last summer Mrs. Raff and the two boys left their quarters on the post and boarded a train for Richmond Hill, Ga., near Savannah where they now live, just in case some of their friends want the address.

POPULAR OFFICER

Col. Raff was a popular young officer here at Fort Benning and his associates, of course, are not at all surprised that he is a real leader of men. They're not surprised either that his men like him and for proof that they do it's no military secret to say that they went out and presented him with a captured airport for his birthday present. His men, for good reason, call him, "Little Caesar."

"He never drank or smoked," said one of his former superior officers, "but Man, he could stay out later than any man at Benning and be fresh as a daisy the next day. He liked fun."

John Thompson wrote recently in a Chicago Tribune syndicated article of how he accompanied Col. Raff and his men in "one of the most successful, tactically, jumps ever made by 'chutists. That story was of interest here because Thompson was at Benning last winter to write a series of stories. At the time he said he wanted to jump with the 'chutists, but that was no-go. However, he jumped out with Col. Raff and thus became the first newspaperman to make a combat jump, and that in North Africa.

CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

Thompson wrote that they occupied a landing field and were joined by French officers and men. The officers gave them a royal spread and with ample wine toasted Col. Raff who was celebrating his thirty-fifth birthday and his twenty-first jump.

Thompson concluded his story with: "As this is written we all have been put on the alert by a report that Germans have landed 100 miles away. In addition to being the nearest American troops to Rommel's rear, we may also be the first to engage his men in battles."

And the men who know Col. Raff and the outfit of men he commands just take for granted that any gang they tangle with will know they've met a buzz saw.

Story of O. C. Cotton Supplies Cross-Section Of Potential Material

Using the background of Candidate Joseph Cotton, of the 8th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, as an example, one finds a cross-section of officer candidates stepping forth from many walks of life.

Born in New York City, he was the son of one of the leading and most successful members of the New York Bar. His father was prominent in public affairs, being on the Food Administration and Shipping Boards in the last war, and Undersecretary of State at the time of his death in 1931.

Candidate Cotton attended high school at Milton Academy in Massachusetts, and was captain of the tennis team his senior year. Attending Harvard University, 1925-29, he received a B. A. degree magna cum laude, specializing in philosophy. He received three minor "H"'s for polo, being the captain the last year. The clubs he belonged to were the "Signet Society," "Hasty Pudding," Phoenix—S. K. He attended the Harvard Law School, 1930-33, receiving the LLB Degree, and was admitted to the N. Y. Bar in 1933.

As indicated below Candidate Cotton has had considerable experience in legal, governmental, and international affairs.

IN PARIS

Chronologically, he was a clerk Washington, D. C. He was an asin a Paris banking house and had a minor job in the Secretarial U. S. A. delegation in the London Naval Conference of 1930. For three years he was a member of the legal division in Public Works Administration, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Securities and Exchange Commission in sociate in a prominent law firm in New York City two years. For seven months in 1938-39, he was assistant to Mr. George Rublee, who was appointed Director of the Inter-governmental Committee on Political Refugees by President Roosevelt. The following year he was assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury of U. S. A. in Washington, D. C., advising the Secretary on foreign, financial, and economic problems, and representing him on governmental committees, and on a mission to Central America. During his last two years before induction he was a member of the legal division of the War Production Board in Washington, D. C., his work being mainly a legal advisor to the Aluminum and Magnesium Branch and before Congressional Committees investigating the defense program.

SPORTS DEPARTMENT
Fort Benning Bayonet
Fort Benning, Ga., December 24, 1942.

Dear Mr. Santa Claus,

Headquarters North Pole,
North Pole Service Command.

Dear S. Claus:

Realizing how busy you are at this particular time of the year in catering to all the kiddies and their young-again parents, I thought it might be helpful in your visit to Fort Benning if we sent along a list of suggested gifts for some of the sporting folks around this particular post. Of course, you can't possibly fill all these requesets because of war shortages and rationing and so forth, but we'd all sure appreciate it if a good many of the folks listed below got what they wanted this year. Trusting this will prove helpful in your gigantic task when you start climbing down the mess-hall chimneys tonight, here goes:

LT. COL. CHARLES C. FINNEGAN, Post Athletic Officer—A football season that lasts the year round instead of three short months.

CAPT. HAROLD (Red) MILTON, 124th grid coach—Funds for a scouting trip so he can dig up some draftee prospects for next year's Gator eleven.

CORP. TOM MULVIHILL, 29th Infantry scribe and special service lad—A by-line in the Columbus Ledger.

ST. SGT. BILL MacFARLAND, the Doughboy Stadium sound engineer—A little black note book so he can jot down where he leaves his equipment.

LIEUT. FRANK SHANNON, Academic Regiment coach—Another Lefty Francis to replace the all-around diamond and court star who's about to leave for O.C. school.

LIEUT. LESTER SOLDZ, 117th Infantry grid manager and court coach—A personal barber to carry with the team if they make any out of town trips.

GEORGE CARMACK, the sporting goods man-about-the-fort—A toy rabbit, more base hits, and two field goals in one game.

JOE CONNOLLY, another sporting goods M.A.T.F.—A free pass to all sports events at the post.

ROY CESTARY, The Gator grid great—Word that he's been accepted for Officer Candidate school.

JOE LIVINGSTON, Ledger sports ed—The chance to go on another hike with one Dottie Elliott.

TOM KINNEY, Enquirer sports chief—A package of B.C. to use for dual purposes: (1) If Georgia loses while he's watching them in the Rose Bowl, or (2) In case he gets a headache from over-eating that hotel fare.

JOE BRYAN, Blue Devil fullback—A scrapbook.

LIEUT. HENRY BOUDREAUX, the M.P. chief and bowler de luxe—Some competition in the hardwood game.

"BAT" BATTINELLI, Two-Nine handball champ—Ditto Boudreaux except on the handball court.

LIEUT. JOE ASHMORE, 29th grid mentor—A quarterback for the 1943 team.

"STOOP" BROWN, 117th's flashy end—A step-ladder so he can get 20 feet off the ground for passes.

LIEUT. JAMES BROOKS, Gator grid manager—More sponsors for grid games next fall.

CAPT. LEO GREGORY, 3rd Armored football coach—A whole team of Indians like Chief Carney.

BENNY ZIENTARA, Academic Regiment courtman—Long pants for basketball to hide that bandy-legged appearance.

THE ALLIGATOR STAFF, 124th weekly paper—A magnifying glass so they can find Gator write-ups in this rag.

LIEUT. JACK GUSHIN, Benning Panther boss—Good files to sharpen the Panther claws.

CORP. SHORTY BURRELL, Doughboy Stadium groundkeeper—More gridirons to line in his sleep.

BOBBY RALPH, 29th sub back—That "one and only" touchdown that was called back.

PAUL KORNMAN, Doughboy press box statistician—The power of decision in affairs de la femme.

LIEUT. J. W. SCHWEITZER, Bayonet boss—Sports copy before the deadline just once.

And there, dear Santa, is the list. Do with it what you will, and don't drink all the G.I. coffee tonight during your midnight visit.

Your obedient servant,

Ye Olde Sportscaster.

Lt. Peter Zager, former All-American tackle at Stanford University, is motor instructor in the Officers' Pool at Camp Roberts, Cal. Zager played left tackle for the Stanford Indians for three years, and was coach of the freshmen squad in 1939. As a discus thrower he was a member of the 1938 AAU track team which toured Europe.

Pvt. John Davis of Brooklyn, N. Y., and now stationed at Ft. Sill, Okla., is the world's heavyweight champion weight lifter. He won the title in 1941 when he set a new record of 1,015 pounds total lift. He successfully defended his championship this year while attending the University of Pennsylvania. Davis entered the Army Oct. 8.

Lefty Francis Named 'Athlete Of Year'

CAPT. LOUIS "KID" ALBERT, former Army ring champ, gets the feel of the gloves again during a call at the offices of the Fort Benning Athletic Association.

QMC Captain Is Baker, Boxer of Army Renown

Capt. Louis Albert, who has been bustling around the bake ovens and classrooms of the Quartermaster Bakers and Cooks school at the post lately is the same veteran soldier who over a quarter of a century ago was known as one of the Army's most prominent sports figures.

Then he was known as "Kid" Albert and at one time he held both the lightweight and welterweight boxing championships of the service as well as being a contender for the world title in both classes.

For almost 35 years, with only a slight interruption, Captain Albert has been an Army man, and for every one of those years he has been a sportsman. About the first thing he did after arriving at Benning was to drop in the offices of the Fort Benning Athletic Association and offer his services.

CRACK REFEREE

Just recently at Fort Francis E. Warren, Wyoming, he had been serving as a referee in the squared circles, and he rates among the best. Although he has just left for a few week's temporary duty at the American Institute of Baking in Chicago, he will be back at Benning in February, and no doubt will see much action as the third man in the ring during some of the big bouts.

His career in both military and sports circles is just as amazing as the man himself. Capt. Albert began his Army career in 1908, and also started his boxing career the same year while he was a buck private. His first fight of prominence came a couple years later when he whipped a lad named Collins for the championship of the Philippines.

CHAMP OF ORIENT

Later, by licking Machado, the champ of the Pacific Coast and Asiatic Fleet, "Kid" Albert captured the service championship of the entire Orient. He went on to China and Hongkong and other Asiatic cities, fighting everywhere, but he returned undefeated.

He kept rising to the top in fistic circles, and by the time he was ready to retire from the ring in 1914, Albert was not only champ of the Orient, but champ of the whole U. S. Army in both the light and welterweight classes. During his career, he fought 104 scraps and was never knocked out.

"PERFECT FIGHTING MACHINE"

Newspapers throughout the country heard of the soldier boxer and his exploits, and he was described in one paper as the "perfect fighting machine." But "Kid" Albert wasn't only a boxer. He was also an excellent track and field man. He held titles in the 220 and 440-yard hurdles and also set a new record for the mile run in the Philippines.

Capt. Albert stayed out of the Army for a little over seven months back in 1914, intending to concentrate on a professional ring career, but when he learned of the pending trouble in Mexico, the lure was too strong, and he re-enlisted, and has been at it ever since.

MADE 1ST LIEUTENANT

After serving in the artillery and the cavalry, he was transferred to the Quartermaster Corps in 1915 and went into his chosen work, that of being an Army bakery expert. During World War I, "Kid" Albert was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Q. M. C., and went to France with the Fifth Division.

Because of his great experence as a baker, he was placed in charge of a bakery company as well as a gigantic shop which baked Army bread for the entire military district of Paris. Capt. Albert states that the bakery was housed in a huge warehouse in the city, and had a capacity of 100,000 loaves of bread daily.

KNEW COL. MASSEY

It was while in Paris that he made the acquaintance of Col. Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning's director of supply, who was at that time a major serving as quartermaster for the district of Paris. Capt. Albert renewed his acquaintance with Colonel Massey later when they both served at Fort Sam Houston in Texas, and again this month when the veteran bakery officer was assigned to Fort Benning.

Two events that Capt. Albert points to with pride occurred while he was stationed in France. He personally baked the bread, buns and sweet dough used at President Wilson's peace conference when the later came to France after the war. Also, the ex-Army boxing champ referred Gene Tunney's first fight which was given in France for the benefit of the soldiers.

RUSSIAN EPISODE

At the close of the war, Capt. Albert went to Russia with a railway engineer outfit where he served as quartermaster and athletic officer. When they arrived in Russia, the American troops did not have any bread supply, and were wholly dependent on British troops for rations. The resourceful Albert found an old deserted Russian bakery on the White Sea, took untrained railway engineers, taught them baking and was soon supplying 1,-200 soldiers with bread and pastries.

After his return to the United States, the ex-pugilist became a warrant officer and in 1924 he was assigned to Fort Sam Houston where he served until being appointed a captain in the Q. M. C. on May 11th of this year. At "Fort Sam" he was a subsistence officer and also the first "boss" of the new sports arena opened there a couple years ago.

MANY OLD FRIENDS

Coming to Fort Benning about a month ago, Capt. Albert found many old friends here in addition to Colonel Massey. His superior officer at the B. and C. School, Col. John M. Rooks, he knew as a second lieutenant in Hawaii years ago. Also, Benning's civilian fire chief, Joseph L. Hogan, was a close friend of Albert at Fort Sam Houston for many years.

Pride and joy of Capt. Albert's life is his teen-age daughter Phyllis, a beautiful youngster, who is currently a student at San Antonio Junior College preparing to enter the University of Texas. His impressive home in San Antonio stands as a tribute to a man who has devoted his life to the service of his country.

SUBSISTENCE AND SPORTS

Captain Albert's entire career has been devoted to the twin interests of quartermaster subsistence and sports. Both have an important part, he feels, in any Army. The value of proper food can never be underestimated of course, but he is also an advocate of more and more athletic training, particularly boxing. He feels that boxing is an undisputed aid in developing men for certain types of fighting, particularly thrusting with a bayonet.

Even after years of service, Captain Albert is in the pink of condition and anxious to help win another war. If Benning fans see him as the third man in the ring this winter, they will surely be seeing one of the finest sports figures the Army has ever produced.

Ex-Champ Leads 1st STR Boxers To Ring Victory

Georgie Pace Defeats Dynamite Daniels In 5-Round Wind-Up

Paced by Georgie Pace, former world bantamweight champ and now their coach, the soldier sluggers of the 1st Student Training's service battalion slugged their way to a team win over the Panther minions of Sgt. Eddie Jackson last Friday night in a thrill-packed card at the Harmony Church sports arena.

Pace, jabbed and stepped his way to a five-round decision over an old memesis, Dynamite Daniels in an exciting wind-up match. The fight was fairly close most of the way, with the more spectacular Daniels, a former Golden Glove title-holder, catching the fans eyes.

DECISION UNANIMOUS

However, Pace fought in workmanlike fashion, and at times cut loose with some of the finesse and clever "in-fighting" that made him a world champ a couple years ago. The decision in favor of the exchamp was a unanimous one on the part of the three judges.

The Panther sluggers, under the tutelage of Jackson, former sparring mate for Abe Simon, managed to win only one of the four team matches against the 1st STR. That came when Benny De Shazier, a Newark, N. J. puncher, knocked out Eddie White in 2 minutes and 21 seconds of the first rounds.

CROWD OF 1,200

Although the rival teams were matched in only four bouts, some of their members fought in exhibitions against opponents from the 2nd STR. Several knock-outs on the seven-bout card kept the crowd of about 1,200 highly excited. The bouts were sponsored by the Fort Benning Athletic Association.

In other bouts on the card Leroy Hunter (122) of Baltimore knocked out Dave Williams (128) of Port Allen, La., in the third round.

Horace Pierson (147) of New Orleans won via the t.k.o. route in the second round of his bout with Charley Dirckley of Wilmington, Del.

Benny De Shazier (146) of Newark, N. J., won a technical knockout over Edward White (146) of Richmond, Va., in two minutes and 21 seconds of the initial canto.

Danny Harris (169) of New York took the nod over Jimmy Mitchell (174) of Los Angeles.

Oree Smith (159) of St. Louis won a decision in his battle with Tommy Stewart (156) of New York.

Terry Livingston (134) of St. Louis was awarded a decision over Joe Noble (130) of New Orleans.

The referee was Sgt. Johnny Wilson and Sgt. Bobby Green, Sgt. William McClung and Cpl. Mickey Maguire were judges.

Panthers Boast Strong Quintet

One of the strongest basketball teams on the post this winter is expected to represent the Service Battalion of the 3rd Student Training Regiment. Playing under the name of Fort Benning Panthers, the colored hoopsters have been practicing now for several weeks and appear ready for top-notch opposition.

More than 45 men turned out when Lieut. Jack Gushin, Panther coach, issued the first practice call. Eventually, the tutor expects to cut to a varsity group of no more than 20, but meanwhile the larger squad continues to work out daily in the Harmony Church sports arena.

EX-RENAISSANCE STAR

The Panthers will be paced by an outstanding performer in Henry (Hank) Blackburn, a former Xavier College ace, who also spent several seasons with the famous Renaissance club, for years one of the nation's leading colored quintets.

Another flashy prospect for the Panthers varsity is Frankie Philipson, former New York City schoolboy star, who paced the service battalion lads on the gridiron this past fall. Louis Jackson, Hilbert Jones, and Lou Simmons are other leading prospects for the green and white court squad.

The Panthers expect to meet some leading colored colleges, and are also a pre-season favorite to capture the laurels in the colored post loop which will be sponsored by the Fort Benning Athletic Association.

OUR ENTIRE PERSONNEL WISHES YOU ALL A MERRY CHRISTMAS

WILSON "LEFTY" FRANCIS, named the athlete of the year in a Bayonet poll, is shown in his familiar wind-up pose that was the warning signal to enemy batsmen of a fireball pitch.

Sport Fan Poll Picks Academic Ace For Honors

Great Southpaw Hurler Won 25 Diamond Tilts; Also Basketball Ace

Wilson (Lefty) Francis, two-sports star of the Infantry School Service Command's Academic Regiment, has been named Fort Benning's "athlete of the year" as a result of a poll conducted among post sport fans by the Bayonet.

Although many other athletes were mentioned in the voting, the 23-year old native of Corea, Maine, was way out in front of his nearest rivals in the final tabulations. Roy Cestary, star gridder for the championship 124th Infantry Gators, ran second, and Benny Zientara, a team-mate of Francis on three squads, was in third place.

In the recent hustle-bustle of gridmania which swept the fort this fall, many folks overlooked the amazing performances which Lefty Francis turned in on the baseball diamond earlier in the year. But faced with selecting an "athlete of the year," fans could not deny Francis the honor.

BASEBALL AND BASKETBALL

His two sports were baseball and basketball, both of them games in which individual prowess is more noticeable than in football, but since this is an individual honor, it was fitting that the I. S. S. C. southpaw get the nod. Proof that he continues as Benning's top athlete is the fact that he is already coming back into the limelight as a member of the Academic Regiment's current court edition.

As a member of both the Fort

Breakers Down Hospital Quint

In a practice game at the post gymnasium Saturday night, the 117th Infantry quintet trounced the 24th General Hospital by a score of 41-27, making it three consecutive wins for the Breakers."

The Parachute School was the first to taste defeat at the hand of the 117th basketeers, 31-30. The next encounter was against Columbus High, which saw the Breakers whip the lanky high school boys by the score of 55-18.

In Saturday night's fray, with Hite leading the attack, the Breakers outclassed the 24th Gen. Hosp. with fancy passwork and accurate sharpshooting. The 117th seldom gave the medicos an opportunity to pop them through the hoop. Very frequently they snatched the ball away from the 24th and would then streak down the court for another lay-up shot.

Almost every member of the 117th had a chance to play in the second half. Lt. Lester Soldz also gave his second and third squads an opportunity to play under fire.

Prof Quintet Drops First Court Battle To Turner Fielders

The powerful court Profs of the Academic Regiment dropped their first decision of the infant season Saturday when they bowed to a surprising Turner Field quintet, 42-38, in a wide-open game played at the Albany (Ga.) High school gym.

Lieut. Frank Shannon, Prof coach, paced both teams in scoring with 14 points, but it was to no avail. Shannon, former Wittenberg (Ohio) College star, also played a great defensive game, especially in the second half while guarding Ed Brock of the Fliers. Brock made ten points in the first semester, but was held to three counters in the final periods.

The game was rough all the way, and the Profs lost Johnny Ossi, forward star, early in the game on personals. Also, they were off the mark in shooting fouls missing fifteen free throws out of 25 attempts. Benny Zientara once again was a sparkplug for the Profs.

Stanley Chanowicz, star tackle on the Notre Dame varsity teams of '34 and '35, is now tackling clerical school, KP and other Army problems at Camp Barkeley, Tex.

Confederate General to Pin Gold Bars on Son Saturday

Officer Is Last Surviving Member Of Lee's Staff

When Officer Candidate William C. Gellette graduates from The Infantry School on Saturday as a second lieutenant, he'll be getting in stride with his father, Major General O. R. Gellette, last surviving member of Gen. Robert E. Lee's staff.

O. C. Gellette, a member of the Third Student Training Regiment, has had his goal set on a lieutenant's commission but will have to go a long way to match the record of his hearty father.

Completing a 600-mile railroad trip that smacked of the rigors of his military campaigns, 97-year-old Gen. Gellette, who witnessed the wounding of Stonewall Jackson, arrived in Columbus last Saturday. He will attend his son's graduation to pin the gold bars on the new officer.

In a whimsical mood at the Ralston hotel, Gen. Gellette made a wager with his son having to do with the number of casualties he inflicted as a soldier with those his son hopes to make upon our enemies during this war. The General expressed hope that his son wins the wager.

During the congested railroad journey from his Shreveport, La., home, General Gellette stood the 125-odd miles between Meridian, Miss., and Birmingham, and that's what he gets for not looking his age. So intense is the filial pride of this top soldier of a soldierly family, he would even have reached for the day coach ceiling all the way to be at that bar-pinning ceremony.

MILITARY FIGURE

The nonagenarian cuts a truly military figure in his grey uniform with three gold stars and an open wreath embroidered on the collar. He wears it to all his "public appearances," but he won't make a speech. He merely gives a Confederate salute. During the past 15 years he has spent "a whale of a lot of time turning down banquet invitations."

General Gellette knew Lee so well he called the latter, "Marse Bob." In fact, General Gellette not only was associated with Lee for four years of war, but for two years afterwards he attended old Washington University, of which Lee was president.

Excepting Lee, General Gellette considers Stonewall Jackson the greatest general the world ever produced. It was Jackson who commissioned Gellette a major general when Gellette was not yet 21 years old. And Gellette was at Jackson's side when the latter was shot through the left wrist by his own men.

General Gellette follows every battle of this, the fourth war in which he has seen his country entangled. He can compare the fighting in Tunisia and in Buna with Jackson's March Through the Valley and with the Battle of the Wilderness.

IN 12 BIG BATTLES

The agile, grey haired gentleman who fought in 13 of the South's major battles, including the Battle of Bull Run, has high praise for Uncle Sam's army of today. He particularly approves of current army rations and recalls the time when he spent a whole day with only parched corn to eat and mule's blood to quench his thirst. Yet he has lived almost a century and he didn't begin married life until he was 60.

Ex-railroad man and former breeder of Jersey cattle, General Gellette played as a boy on the plantation in Mississippi next door the home of Jefferson Davis. The pair were friends from childhood until the death of Davis.

The veteran brought along only two of his 55 coveted medals, the Confederate Southern Cross and the Order of Stars and Bars. He also brought along his faithful pipe, plenty of reading material and a hearty laugh.

General Gellette is one of the few people who hasn't seen "Gone With the Wind."

"Why," asks he, "should I go to see something artificial? I've seen the real thing."

Prison Officer Joins AAF As Captain

Captain Lester Bridges, Police and Prison Officer, has been transferred in grade to the Army Air Force. He will start pilot training at Maxwell Field, Ala., January 26.

Serving first with the 24th Infantry, Captain Bridges later was placed in charge of mosquito control activities, and in October 1941 was appointed assistant police and prison officer. In September of this year, he became police and prison officer, succeeding Major Oscar Farris who was transferred to Florida.

Second Army Slates Yule Assembly Sunday

The Fourth Detachment of Second Army Special Troops, commanded by Lt. Col. Frank E. Sharpless, will hold a Christmas assembly at the Main Post Theater, Sunday morning, December 27, at 10:45 o'clock.

The program will consist of special music, carol singing and an address by the detachment chaplain. It will be entirely non-sectarian in character. These assemblies have become a monthly feature in the Fourth Detachment. Because its troops are widely scattered over the post, there are not many opportunities for combined meetings. Normally the chaplain conducts services in four different places each week.

29th Infantry Tops Academic Eleven In Initial Soccer Tilt

Before a highly interested crowd in Doughboy Stadium last Sunday, Benning's soccer campaign opened with the 29th Infantry Blue Devils booting their way to an impressive 3-1 triumph over the Academic Regiment.

The game was well-played all the way, and the Two-Niners won out with superior footwork and better team-play. Shoates scored two of the goals for the victors, while Durkin accounted for the third tally. Snyder and Diehl were also outstanding for the 29th.

For the Profs, Sgt. Dunnebier, coach and crack defense man, was a standout. The Academics scored their lone goal on a free kick which got by Bat Battinelli, stellar goalie of the winners.

Trinity Episcopal Invites Soldiers To Yule Services

Special Christmas services to which all officers, men, and families at Fort Benning are cordially invited have been announced by the Rev. Mr. Harry G. Walker, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church. The church is located at 1130 First avenue, Columbus.

On Christmas Eve at 11:30 o'clock there will be Holy Communion. A beautiful musical setting has been provided for this occasion.

Christmas Day at 11 a. m., Holy Communion will be held and from 3 p. m. to 10 p. m., Open House. Refreshments will be served through the afternoon and evening, and members of Trinity congregation will be present to exchange Christmas greetings with all who come and to help them spend a happy Christmas.

The Episcopal Service Men's Club room will be open each day through the holiday season from 11 a. m. to 10 p. m., for the use and comfort of men in the service and their visiting families who are so situated that they do not have the use of such facilities.

Second STR Candidate At Pearl Harbor

By O. C. JULIAN S. BACH, JR.
(Former foreign correspondent for Life Magazine)

War often comes in strange and devious ways.

When Edwin B. Duane of Cambridge, Mass., arose in Hawaii on the morning of Dec. 7 a year ago, he was thinking of the boat that was to take him to San Francisco on the 8th and the furlough he was due to enjoy. In his barracks his bags stood packed and ready.

When he arrived at his machine gun post on a Hawaiian beach at 6 a. m. that Sunday, it was presumably for the last time. Sitting down by his gun, he turned on a portable radio and tuned in on the "Morning Melodies" program. They were just playing his favorite song, "Shrine of St. Cecelia," when Duane spotted planes approaching the beach.

As U. S. planes usually maneuvered in the area, he thought nothing of it. But the identity of the aircraft became apparent when one strafed a nearby road, killing a civilian, setting four cars on fire, seriously wounding one of Duane's men in the stomach and shooting the arm off another soldier.

At that moment "Morning Melodies" ceased. An announcer cut in: "Hawaii is under attack."

Traversing his gun to fire at more Jap planes, Duane let go with his first shot of the war just as the radio burst forth with the Star Spangled Banner.

Duane is now an Officer Candidate in the 3rd Company, 1st Battalion, Second Student Training Regiment.

Reading both fiction and heavier literature, including many text books on diverse subjects, is popular with the enlisted men at Fort Benning, where more than 500 books are withdrawn daily from the Post Library.

Thirteen regimental teams were entered in intra-mural boxing title contests during the past season at Fort Benning.

LAFF OF THE WEEK—

FT. WORTH TEX. (CNS) — Two rabbits escaped from the Medical Center experimental hutch here and hit the road, honeymoon bound. They had covered some distance when suddenly back along the trail they heard the baying of hounds.

'Look,' said Mr. Rabbit, "we were born and raised in the Army. We're pretty tough. Let's stay right where we are and lick those babies."

The coy young rabbit bride blushed. "Let's wait until tomorrow, dear," she said, "and outnumber them."

Sport Slants On The Camps

Jack Carveth, native of Toronto and dean of Detroit hockey writers, is now at the Reception Center, Ft. Custer, Mich., awaiting assignment. A former hockey player himself, Carveth covered his favorite sport for ten years for the Detroit Free Press, and for two years pounded out hockey stories for the Detroit Times.

Lt. Darold W. Jenkins, All-American center on the University of Missouri football team in 1941, is a student officer at Thompson - Robbins Field, Ark. His goal this time is attainment of the wings of the U. S. Army Air Forces!

Pvt. Ray Moyle, Camp Roberts, Cal., golf ace, won a $25 War Bond, when he captured second place in a medal play tournament sponsored by the Santa Clara (Cal.) Golf Association recently. Moyle, the only serviceman in the tournament, shot a 73-74 for the 36 holes, losing first place to Frank Hebiert, San Francisco accountant, by only three strokes!

Pvt. Basil James, who once piloted such turf greats as Alsab and Whirlaway, is now riding saw-horses in the Utility Shop of the Grand Central Induction Center, New York City.

Cpl. Dick Crayne, All-American at the University of Iowa in 1935 and later a pro football star with the Brooklyn Dodgers, is now the main cog of the Camp Crowder (Mo.) basketball team. Prior to his entrance in the Army, Crayne was football, basketball and track coach at Western Union college in Iowa.

Snapping into the win column after three straight defeats, the Ft. Niagara (N. Y.) basketball team took a hair raising 36 to 33 victory from the University of Buffalo cagers in Buffalo last week. The soldiers trailed at the half 24-20, but came back to take the lead, and never relinquished it until the final whistle!

Lefty—

Benning Doughboys, the post baseball nine, and the I. S. S. C. this past spring and summer, Francis played a superb brand of baseball. Principally he was a pitcher, and as great a one as Gowdy Field fans had ever seen hurl. But, he was also a fine all-around player, capable of filling in as an outfielder, and also a hard hitter.

WON 25 GAMES

It was on the mound, though that the blond, chunky left-hander achieved his greatest glory. For the Doughboys, he won 25 games, and lost only two. For the I. S. S. C. in the post league, he won 10 and lost only two. That gave him a mound record for the year of 25 victories against four losses. And many of the victories were against crack professional and college nines as well as strong soldier opposition.

Lefty was also the strike-out king of the post. Early in the season he equalled the record of Jimmy Dorman, 29th Infantry flinger, by fanning 21 men in one game. Then a few weeks later, hurling against the 151st Infantry Hoosiers, a crack team that won the second half title, he shattered the record, and hung up a new mark of 22 strikeouts in one game. His season's average was 16 strikeouts per game, an amazing total against any type of opposition.

TWO NO-HITTERS

Not only that, but he twice entered baseball's mythical hall of fame during the 1942 season. His crowning achievement was a no-hit, no-run triumph over the I. S. S. C.'s arch rivals, the 29th Infantry. That was a nine-inning affair and a grand performance, but Lefty also chalked up a seven-inning no-hitter over the Medicos of the 21st General Hospital, and three times turned in one-hit performances. One of the one-hitters was a perfect game until the last batsman faced Francis to spoil his effort.

With Francis pitching, the Benning Doughboys had one of their best seasons, and he was the biggest single factor in the title drive o fhis own I. S. S. C. team later. Typical of his story-book deeds was a Benning tilt with the Montgomery Rebels of the Southeastern League, when Francis stepped in as a pinch-hitter in the 10th inning of an overtime game, and proceeded to whale the horsehide over the right field fence for a home run to break up the game. But he did things like that all year, and justly deserves the honor of his latest title.

HEADED FOR O. C. S.

A likable chap, a grand athlete, and a goodsoldier, he has just been accepted for the officer candidate course at the Infantry School, and will soon be lost to the Academic Regiment where he is also a star on the court team. His performances last winter on the hardwood were notable, and this season so far he has been the spearhead of the Profs' attack. The team will miss him when he goes.

Lefty Francis started his diamond career in Maine after a few years ago up he had been the hurling star for four years at Higgins Classical institute, one of the best prep schools in the state. His first pro stint was with Dover-Foxcroft in the Eastern Maine League. During one of his seasons there, he broke the thumb on his pitching hand, and he attributes some of his success to that, because ever since he has been able to get plenty of curve on the ball.

In 1940, Francis pitched for Harrisonburg in the Virginia State League, won 12 and lost six, but attracted attention of big league scouts. However, Uncle Sam had first call, and in 1941, he was in the Army pitching for Camp Wheeler. Last winter, he came to the Academic Regiment at Benning, and ever since, the Maine athlete has been Benning's top man in sports.

Besides Century, the gridder, and Zientara, formerly a Cincinnati Red and now a diamond and court star for the Academic Regiment, several other Benning athletes were mentioned in the poll. Here they are without regard to their final standings: Jack Schwartz, star boxer of the 2nd Armd. who went to the Golden Glove semi-finals in New York; Len Belin, baseball first-sacker and grid end for the 124th; Collis D. (Lefty) Lehner, outstanding volleyball player and baseball star for the Academic Regiment; Joe Bryan, Stolarzyck, outstanding court star football fullback for the 29th; Joe and football end until injured for the29th; Charles (Muscles) Neitling, 29th strong man who won second place in national weightlifting competition; Thurman (Stoop) Brown, great football end of the 117th; Chief Carney, football star of the 3rd Armd.; Lieut. Henry Boudreaux, the post's outstanding bowler who gained all kinds of honors; and many others.

2nd STR Leaders Boast Good Court Entry In Leagues

The Headquarters Company Leaders of the Second Student Training Regiment continue to breeze through their schedule in the USO Basketball League and meantime are preparing for the start of play in the Fort Benning Cage league.

The Leaders defeated Headquarters Company of the 11th Armored's First Battalion in the city league last week, 38 to 15, and met Reconnaissance Company of the 11th Armored in this week's game Wednesday, Dec. 23. It was the second straight win in this loop.

The club is entered in one of the loops of the Fort Benning conference. Paced by the same players who led the club to a championship last season, Cpl. Henry (Big Chief) Whitehorse, Pfc. John Bancisko, The Mad Russian, and Staff Sgt Herman Friedrich, the quintet is expected to provide plenty of opposition in the Benning wheel.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS

Many a soldier could tell you about his most embarrassing moment. For instance, at Camp Barkeley, Texas, Corporal Bernard Hutchinson waited in line at the camp theater for a U. S. O. show. The line was long and moved slowly. Then the corporal spied another and shorter line of men. It was moving faster, so he stepped out of the first group and joined the second. In no time he was inside the theater, but not with the audience. Instead he found himself on the stage singing with a glee club!

WAS HIS FACE RED!

It happened at the Army Air Forces Fighter Command School the other night. Returning to his quarters was Private Clinton Blessing when a sentry, doing his first turn at guard duty, halted him. Words followed and the sentry took Private Blessing into custody. He wanted to make sure the soldier was not an intruder in disguise, and besides Private Blessing admitted he was taking a short cut. The pair started walking. They walked and walked and walked some more. Finally the sentry halted, peered about in the darkness, then queried: "Look, prisoner, can YOU tell me the way to the guard house?"

FEET SAVED HIM

There's one thing that always irritated Lawrence Williams of Paoli, Indiana. He wore size 14 1-2 shoes, and he didn't like the ribbing his friends gave him. Now he's happy his feet are so big. Two weeks before his recent induction at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Williams was married. After a honeymoon he reported for duty. The induction center didn't have size 141-2 shoes in stock and had to send for them. Meantime, Private Williams enjoyed a second honeymoon in Indianapolis, awaiting arrival of his Government Issue shoes.

Keeper of National Heirlooms Is in Training With 1st STR

Capt. Weisgerber Managed Famed Betsy Ross House

The Third Company of the First Student Training Regiment boasts an officer with a truly American heritage. He is Captain Vexil D. Weisgerber, who before going on active duty in September 1940, was manager of the famous Betsy Ross House in Philadelphia.

Captain Weisgerber for the last 10 years has been charged with safe keeping of such national heirlooms as the house in which Betsy Ross made the first American Flag and the chair in which she sat while undertaking her historic weaving and sewing.

History has deeply permeated not only the Weisgerber family background and Captain Weisgerber's childhood but has even written his name for him. For the Captain was born in the Betsy Ross House and his father, unable to resist the opportunity, named him Vexil Domus—Latin for Flag Home.

Out of his store of knowledge concerning our flag and its genesis Captain Weisgerber can reveal several little known facts. Like so many events of world-wide importance, the creation of the American Flag grew from a casual and informal conversational exchanges. It all started like this:

Just around the corner from he Betsy Ross House in Philadelphia, Captain Weisgerber said, was the Old Christ Church, which back in Colonial times Betsy was wont to attend, come Sundays. Also steady attenders were certain other illustrious gentry, including George Washington, Ben Franklin, Bob Morris and many signers of the Declaration of Independence. Among them they composed most of the powerful Maritime Commission. Nearly always at these gatherings for worship, discussion arose over what was one of the most troublesome problems of the day—the need for American privateers to combat British depradations on the high seas and the fact American-o-war and armed merchantmen were then being treated as pirates, due to lack of a nationally recognized flag.

BETSY ROSS

Betsy Ross came into contact with these men. She was a highly skilled seamstress and apparently had ideas. This was known to the Commission and, one thing leading to another, Betsy soon found herself commissioned to design and make a flag.

The design Betsy and the Commission finally chose was perhaps as appropriate as any that could have been selected. Little known to most Americans, Capt. Weisgerber said, "Is the fact the basic design of Old Glory is nothing more than the stars and stripes of the shield of the House of George Washington turned sideways."

Betsy Ross had during the years past made up several flags in her home. On what was actually to be our country's first flag she is said to have spent about a month's time. Today her home is owned by the City of Philadelphia and is visited by more than a quarter of a million sightseers every year. Its managership has been a Weisgerber family heritage for many years. Captain Weisgerber's father, who painted the picture, Birth of Our Nation's Flag, for the Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1898, was asked by a number of patriotic societies to mance he has the house as a museum. He took up this task in that same year and it has been in the family ever since.

Captain Weisgerber was appointed 2nd Lieut. in the Engineer Reserve on October 24, 1924. He graduated from Drexel Institute in 1926 after specializing in mechanical engineering. On July 31, 1928 he transferred in grade to the Infantry, National Guard of United States, and joined the 114th Infantry. For the last fourteen years he has been assigned to the Service Company of that regiment, serving in turn as Assistant Adjutant, Assistant Supply Officer, Transportation Officer, Company Commander, and, more recently, as Regimental Supply Officer.

Captain Weisgerber is a graduate of the NG and RA Course at the Infantry School in 1939, the Motor Maintenance Course in 1941, and is at present attending the Battalion Commander and Staff course. He is married and has two children.

'Tiger' Pistol Shots Show Speed in Test

Dueling Added As Innovation

Suddenly meeting Nippon's yellow warriors face to face should hold no terror for the men of the 10th Armored Division.

In a recent rapid fire and dueling contest designed to test the speed, agility and coordination of the 10th Armored Division's pistol toters the following men of Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 3rd Armored Regiment distinguished themselves by chalking up an impressive score: First Sgt. W. D. Carey, Sgt. Charles Chase, Sgt. W. D. Tabor, Cpl. M. E. Nace and Cpl. H. L. Burney, Jr.

Blazing away with their 45's to tie for the day's second highest score were two other match winners, one from Company A, 90th Reconnaissance Battalion and the other from Company D, 11th Armored Regiment. Company A selected 1st Sgt. W. R. Holowin, Tech. Sgt. T. R. Harris, S-Sgt. J. D. Rodgers, S-Sgt. F. A. Eddings and Sgt. R. J. Lawless for their team. Company D was represented by A. Heath, Sgt. Edgar Knight, ed by S-Sgt. Joe Attaway, Sgt. Cpl. James Shepler and Pvt. Joe Kaldunski.

In the first, or rapid fire, phase of the meet, the contestants pumped out 3 rounds apiece in 7 seconds or less to group their shots inside bulls of 3 or 5 inches, the smaller group earning doube the score of the larger.

To the rapid fire tally was added that of the dueling matches, to give the team its final total.

DUELING ADDED

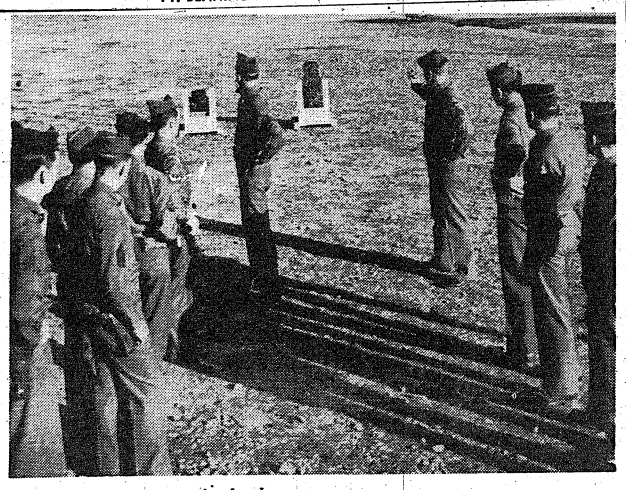
Dueling an innovation in pistol competition, adds a great deal of interest by providing the men with the nearest possible approach to an actual exchange of shots in combat.

The men who are dueling stand shoulder to shoulder on the range, each facing a collapsible target in the shape of a soldier at 25 yards. At a given signal, such as "Jap!", given suddenly by the individual conducting fire, the competitors swing into firing position and let blast at their targets, each being allowed 2 rounds if necessary. The first target to fall determines the winner. Should the winner fold his target with one round, he gets twice the score allowed for bowling it over with two rounds.

The three other match winners were: Company B, 55th Engineer Battalion; Battery A, 419th F. A. Battalion and Battery A, 423rd F. A. Battalion.

On the Engineers' team were Sgts. Danny Wagner, Adam Laksh, Lee Briner, Cpl. Richard Hayes and Pvt. Donald Hyde. The 419th' representatives were 1st Sgt. James Orange, S-Sgt. Earl Dougherty, Sgt. Victor Regavich and Pvts. George Hamilton and Francis Stearns.

Those who scored for the 423rd F. A. Battalion were 1st Sgt. Gordon Zanetti, Sgts. Paul Hawk, James Hellyer, Melchoir Marsala and Pvt. Wesley Mabbitt.



Team prizes were framed photographs for organization day rooms, and the team members were rewarded with a copy of the photograph and a two-day pass — which is something to shoot for.

Novel Calendar Appears In 'Yank' For December 30

A big, full-page 1943 calendar, decorated with numerous and humorous cartoons by Sgt. Ralph Stein, will be featured in the December 30 issue of YANK, The Army Weekly.

This exclusively G. I. calendar will be coveted by all servicemen as a scrapbook item or as a pin-up for barracks walls. By itself it will be worth the nickel YANK costs at the PX, and though only one calendar will be found in a single copy of the December 30 issue, soldiers, sailors and marines will want extra copies to send the folks at home.

Servicemen are urged to watch for this unusual feature in YANK. But even YANK won't venture to predict how many dates listed on the G. I. calendar will mark Allied victories in 1943!

Christmas Greetings 10th Armored Division

In extending Christmas greetings to our Division it is my hope that in each of the 87 Tiger lairs, the friendships that are springing up among new arrivals and old comrades-at-arms will be firm and lasting and a source of strength and comfort in future campaigns. I cannot think of a better time to initiate such friendship than this Christmas Season nor a better way to do this than to help some new friend in one of his many problems of adjustment to the life of a 10th Armored "Tiger."

Tankers Win Boxing Bouts From Artillery

Just missing a grand slam in their boxing matches with the 419th Field Artillery Battalion, the 3rd Battalion of the 11th Armored Regiment came through for a decisive smashing victory by the score of 4 wins, 2 defaults, one draw and one loss. The matches were held in the Recreational Hall of the 11th Armored Regiment last Monday night, being the seventh in the series of Inter-Battalion Boxing Team Matches.

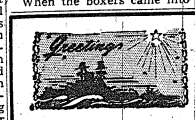
The first two bouts of the evening were defaults with Pvts. Herbert Coburn and Nick Lilczakawski of the 11th being given the credit in the win column.

The third bout brought some scrappy boxing as Pvt. William Fink of the 11th and Pvt. William Perkins battled for three rounds to a draw. The two boxers looked like champs in size and both boys were evenly matched. Perkins did most of the leading and showed a very sharp right that flattened Fink for the count of three in the first round. As the round closed Fink showed signs of coming back getting in two terrific blows to Perkins head that rocked him at the bell. As the bout neared its finish, the two boys were very tired but had given the audience a real exhibition of good boxing.

RUSS OUTPOINTED

After two defaults and a draw, S-Sgt. Tom Miccaloni of the 11th stepped into the ring and whipped out a three-round win over Pvt. Dan Russ of the 419th. Russ danced all over the ring like a rabbit being chased by the hounds with Miccaloni being on the ball and tying him up at every opening. In the second Miccaloni came out with a burst of power that sent two pounding rights to Russ' head and from then on Miccaloni was the master of the situation and gave Russ a terrible mauling before the bell ended the round. The third round was a reproduction of the second as Miccaloni mauled Russ all over the ring and left no doubt in anyone's mind as to whom was the victor.

At the opening of the 5th bout, Pvt. Paul Franklin of the 11th stepped in and really gave Pvt. Ray Muche a good-going over to chalk up another win for the 11th as he shot rights and lefts into Muche that had him hugging the corner and pretty well dazed at the bell. In the second round Franklin flattened Muche for the count of six. Franklin rushed in the third round to make the kill as Muche was just about to fold up. He doggedly held on and warded off the blows as Franklin poured 'em in with the rapidity of a machine gun. It was Franklin from start to finish.



When the boxers came into the ring for the 6th bout, one would think that Robert Taylor was fighting as the handsome Pfc. Henry Ostega of the 11th took his place in his corner. Pvt. Tom Barger of the 419th furnished the opposition. Ostega was a revived man in the 2nd after a slow start and let go with a terrific amount of speed and power that brought the fans to their feet as he pounded to a victory which put another notch in the 11th's scalp of wins.

It looked like the major and the minor in the 7th bout of the evening with Pvt. Joe Seber of the 419th being the minor in size but proved to be the winner and gave the 419th their only win of the evening. Seber charged his opponent Pvt. S. F. Haney of the 11th like a bull in a china shop and displayed one of the most beautiful left hooks of the evening that made Haney hold on for dear life. Seber seemed to maul his opponent at will having little or no opposition. From start to finish it was Seber by a mile.

The last bout of the evening brought out the heavyweights as Pvt. Harry Abrams of the 11th won a three round decision over Pvt. William Wiercinski of the 419th. Things were pretty dull in the first round but as the second round opened, Wiercinski let go a smashing right that split Abrams' lip but the crafty Abrams came right back with rights and lefts that landed his opponent full force as he began to take command of the situation. Both boys ruffed it up in the last round as they landed hard rights and lefts but those landed by Abrams were more effective and did more damage to give him the nod from the officials.

Officials for the evening were referee Master Sgt. E. A. Frazier of Headquarters Company of Division Trains, judges were Lieuts. G. R. Jenkins of the Maintenance Battalion and Raymond Guzman of the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion. Sgt. William Dillon of the 423rd F. A. Bn. served as announcer and timer was Pvt. Warren Schultz of the Special Service Office.

An Army Wife Gives You Greetings!

By EVE

What a lot of fun shopping in the Columbus stores has been. There are unquestionably bigger shopping centers in our country, but for sincere effort in offering helpful service and variety of merchandise for your choice, no one has tried harder than the Columbus merchants to supply your wants. When they've failed their disappointment has been as great as your. They and their staffs are exhausted from the long hours they kept the stores open for your convenience. They are appreciative of the business and opportunities they've had through the close proximity of Fort Benning. Since the middle of September they have shown their appreciation by supporting and making possible the free delivery of the Fort Benning Bayonet with their paid advertising. This is the Columbus merchant's gift to the army at Fort Benning.

I salute them and give my sincere wishes for a happy Christmas and New Year to the merchants who have made my shopping hours so pleasant. The readers of the Bayonet are given special greetings and wishes for all the things they'll need to see them through for another year.

The following stores and their entire staff of employees wish Fort Benning, its personnel and families a

'Esquire' Article Gives Advice for Clothing Care

How best to care for your cap, your shoes, your shirts, and other items of G. I. clothing is the timely topic of O. E. Schoeffler's article, THE FINE ART OF BUCKING, in the January issue of ESQUIRE. Veterans, says ESQUIRE, have learned lots of good techniques.

For example, the right way to handle your cap may seem inconsequential, yet the veteran doesn't think so. He places his thumb firmly under the visor and extends his first finger to the eagle of the cap device. This firm hold keeps the cap from being pulled out of shape and does not fingerprint the leather of the visor. Old soldiers always lay the cap down with the top side up. This keeps the cap from being soiled as quickly as when it is placed top side down. After an Army, Navy or Marine cap has been worn for quite a while, the visor may flatten out. To restore the proper curved shape, fasten a rubber band or attach a tightly drawn cord to the two side buttons.

Most men don't like to fuss with a tie to keep it in place. The lock knot is a good solution to this problem . . . the accompanying sketch illustrates how to tie it.

Lots of yardbirds prefer to have woolen shirts dry-cleaned so that the shirt has a better chance of staying in shape. They also contend that a dry-cleaned shirt is more comfortable for the wearer and presents a better appearance.

WOOLEN SOCKS

Woolen socks are preferred for various reasons. The fibers have absorptive qualities, Wool, having a certain springiness, serves as a cushion under the foot and makes walking great distances (whether it's a matter of maneuvers, or just hitch-hiking home) less tiring. A few subtly dropped hints among the gals at home who knit should bring you a good supply of wool socks, says ESQUIRE.

A can of foot powder is worth its weight in gold to the average serviceman. Foot powder is a material aid to comfort and endurance during hard footwork. Shoes, particularly if moist, slip on the foot without much trouble if some powder is lightly sprinkled inside.

Shoes, of course, are a sore spot when it comes to inspection. Regular use of a shoeshine kit keeps the shoes polished and their owners free from demerits. Shoestrings tied in a special knot prevent them from coming undone, and have saved the day for many a gob, leatherneck, or soldier. An extra turn in the loop will make it stay put till you-know-what freezes.

Walters Tallies 21 Points As 507 Wins

The 507th parachute basketball team downed Pepsi-Cola by a score of 43 to 31 Friday night in the Independent cage league on the Comer Auditorium floor in Columbus.

The parachute five took an early lead and was never headed but the count was close during the last two quarters. Pepsi-Cola came within seven points of knotting the score in the last period but fell slightly more behind before the final whistle.

Walters, Parachute forward, led the scoring when he ran up a total of 21 points. He was far in front of all other sharpshooters in the game. Brooks, of Pepsi-Cola, was next in line with nine.

Smith-Petersen Assumes Post With Supply

Major Fredrick A. Smith-Petersen, at one time salvage officer at Fort Benning, has received a new assignment in the supply division at the post according to an announcement made yesterday by Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply.

The veteran officer has been relieved of his most recent duties as assistant to the post quartermaster, and now will serve as assistant chief of the automotive branch which is headed by Lt. Col. Ernest J. Rush.

Until a few months ago, Major Smith-Petersen was in charge of all salvage activities for the Quartermaster Corps at the fort. Relieved of that assignment, he then attended motor transport school at the Atlanta Motor Base, and received advanced training in this work which prepared him for his new assignment.

BOY SCOUT BRITT. He's been rounding up scrap all afternoon. Tugging old radiators, hunks of iron and cobwebbed steel and rubber out to the pushcart he made himself. Tired? Who wouldn't be? But when he gets home and grabs me out of the icebox, watch his freckled grin.

PX Officer Is 'Trouble-Shooter' Of Post When Things Go Wrong

Gas-Freezing Produced His Latest Headache With Transportation Crisis

Post filling stations are suddenly ordered closed. Soldiers swamp the main exchange causing a "run" on certain types of Christmas gifts. Fire threatens the exchange restaurant in Service Club 1.

A lot of people are telephoned about one or more of such incidents as these, but there is one Fort Benning officer that gets telephoned about all of them—and those telephone calls always mean more "headaches."

He is Maj. H. E. McGaffey, exchange officer at Fort Benning and one of the busiest officers on the post. The problem of distributing precious gasoline to military personnel and civilian employes on the post is now directly in Major McGaffey's lap as gasoline stations on the reservation are under the jurisdiction of the exchange.

And the gas stations are just one of the problems that pass over the major's desk in the course of a day. He has direct supervision over 75 exchange activities, including 64 branch stores and more than 850 civilian employes.

Operating this tremendous chain of filling station, grocery stores, main exchange stores, branches, barber shops, watch repair shops, soda fountains and other activities requires an officer with considerable experience in handling retail supply and in handling personnel—and also the ability to have answer to most questions before they are asked.

Major McGaffey fits this description well. For instance, this week when gasoline stations were suddenly closed in Georgia, the exchange was faced with the problem of transporting employes, who usually travel to work by private car, from the bus stations to their places of work.

BIRTH OF HEADACHE

Before the telephone wires had "cooled off" after the first news of the freezing of gasoline had come through, the exchange officer was mulling over a plan to convert the little-used exchange "rolling stores" into buses to carry employes from the bus station over the huge reservation to the 64 branches of the exchange.

"If things go from bad to worse, we're set on at least that transportation," says the major.

Just as an illustration of the "big business" handled by the exchange at Fort Benning, Major McGaffey disclosed this week that the main exchange on the post proper was doing at the present time between two and three thousand dollars worth of business daily.

With a background of years of experience with a New England wholesale grocery and with a large chain grocery in Miami Beach, Fla., Major McGaffey was recalled to active military duty in 1940 and was sent shortly after to Camp Blanding, Fla., to be exchange officer.

Starting with $60 of his own money, Major McGaffey built the Camp Blanding exchange into a $3,000,000 business in less than a year and on June 18, 1942, was ordered to Fort Benning and assigned as assistant exchange officer. A few weeks later, he was appointed exchange officer and has been supervising the post's exchange stores since that time.

Major McGaffey has also had considerable military experience, serving first on the Mexican border in 1916 and later going to Plattsburg Training Camp where he received a commission as a second lieutenant.

In December, 1917, he was sent overseas in the Signal Corps Aviation Section. After serving six months in England, he went to France served in four major battles and received the Croix de Guerre and a personal citation.

Later the major served with the Army of Occupation, returning to the United States after 23 months and eight days service with the American Expeditionary Force. He was assigned to Mitchell Field, New York, for a time before resigning his commission to go into private business.

A native of Barnet, Vt., Major McGaffey attended public schools there before going to Dartmouth University.

Iron Guard Foe Gets Commission at Benning

A lifelong ambition, born as a lad battling the notorious "Iron Guards" back in Rumania, has come true for Lt. George Bookbinder when he completed the Officer Candidate School course and received his gold bars at Fort Benning recently.

It was in strife-torn Bessarabia, striking fiercely in desperate defense against persecutions of the "Iron Guards," the Rumanian Nazi party, that the "impossible dream" of becoming a commissioned officer in the armed forces of America began to take form.

From earliest boyhood he had fought for the democratic ideal and he was only 14 when he was the recognized leader of the Roumanian Zionist movement, coming into direct opposition to the German-inspired Guardists, forerunner of the present Fascist controlled government of Rumania.

He took active part in anti-fascist programs, often engaging in violent action against the ruffians who were being fostered and supported by the Hitler movement in Germany.

It was in 1934 that the first step in his vision of becoming an officer in the American Army became reality. He was included in the immigration quota and together with his father fled the dreaded Gestapo across Europe to France, dodging through the turbulent Balkan states, through ill-starred Austria, already on the brink of the Nazi conquest, and skirted Germany in his travels.

In the United States he became a member of a New York textile firm and by 1940 had become an executive of the firm. He joined the Army in January 1942, and after taking his basic training was assigned in the supply department of Headquarters company in the Infantry School. He became a staff sergeant before applying for officer candidate school.

Several Florida golf courses, which once sported national tourneys, now are the training grounds for hundreds of soldiers.

Stories of lost soldiers wandering for days in the Australian jungle are a dime a dozen, but Private John Christopher O'Brien holds the most unsual story record. He wandered from camp, was lost a week and then discovered he hadn't been more than 20 miles away at any time.

Legion Head Sends Greetings To U. S. Troops

Roane Waring, National Commander of The American Legion, who visited Fort Benning recently as the guest of Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, post commander, today issued Christmas greetings to troops of the Army from the Legion.

Speaking for the Legion, which numbers more than 1,135,000 veterans of World War I, Mr. Waring said "We feel a special closeness to you because you fellows are finishing a job we started. We know what you are up against.

"Yours is now the mighty task of putting an end forever to the crucifixion of freedom-loving men and women everywhere. You are bearing the cross today, as we bore it yesterday, not only against the immediate evil in this world, but also for the ultimate good. We pray that out of your gallantry and out of your heroism may grow that better world of tomorrow for which we, too, bled and sacrificed but which eluded our efforts.

"As our Christmas gift we pledge you that your needs, present and future, will always come first with us. That means arms to fight with now, and jobs to live by later!

"Merry Christmas God bless you! Carry on"

MAJOR H. E. McGAFFEY
Trouble, naturally seeks him out.

Lt. Schilling Is Contributor To 'Bayonet'

First Lt. Falko M. Schilling, whose Christmas cartoon is published on the front page of today's BAYONET, is one of the post's most productive poets and artists.

He has contributed extensively to the poetry columns of the BAYONET and has been of great assistance in the preparation of various programs for the "Listen, It's Fort Benning" radio feature broadcast from the Fort Benning studios of WRBL, Columbus. His most recent contribution is the Yuletide poem which was one of the highlights of Monday night's broadcast of "Listen, It's Fort Benning". This verse appears on the editorial page today.

Before entering the Army, Lt. Schilling was on the staff of the Manchester, N. H., Union Leader as a photo engraver and feature writer. He attended the University of New Hampshire and in 1939 graduatedw from St. Anselm's College in Manchester.

On the first day of the draft, November 18, 1940, he enlisted in the Army as a private. Later he was accepted as an officer candidate and was sent to Fort Benning. He graduated from officer candidate school, The Infantry School, on Jan. 23, 1942, as a second lieutenant and was assigned to the Second Battalion, Student Training Regiment, now commanded by Col. Gibson, as finance officer. He was promoted to first lieutenant last June, and in the same month married the former Miss Elsie Gray of New York City.

At present he is with the 24th Company, Fourth Battalion, of the First Student Training Regiment.

Stewart Has 427 Leaps To His Credit

Captain E. Verne Stewart, veteran paratrooper and officer in charge of the rigger's course at the Parachute School, has been promoted to major, according o an announcement received today.

Credited with more jumps than any other man in the school, Major Stewart has descended via the silk a total of 427 times. Starting as an enlisted man in the Air Corps during the last year, Stewart at one time served as mechanic to General Billy Mitchell.

Returning to civilian life in 1920, he barnstormed for a while as a parachutist, jumping for carnivals, newsreels, and at various air races. During this period he became a member of the Caterpillar Club, when his chute tangled on a ship's tail, and he had a hair-raising escape.

Later Stewart organized a parachute school of his own, teaching jumping technique, packing and rigging. He was working in this capacity when taken into the army as a lieutenant, with a National Guard outfit in 1940.

As soon as possible he transfered to the Parachute Group. After serving for a time as jump director, he was promoted to captain and placed in charge of the rigger's section.

The recommended novel of the week is Robert Standish's "The Three Bamboos"—a novel which might be described as a history of Japan in fictional form. The story concerns several generations of an ancient Samurai family, the Furenos, representing them as being responsible for Nippon's quest of world domination. Writ ten by a man who has lived for years in Japan, the book is overwhelming in its revelation of the way they really are. Their fanatical hatred of the foreigner, their boundless and unscrupulous ambition, and their cruelty are all traits of the Japanese which are incredible to the reader. This unusual novel will furnish more unusual knowledge of Japanese character than many a profound history of the race.

A travel book is the favored non-fiction title of the week. Cornelia Otis Skinner and Emily Kimbrough, who was once managing editor of "The Ladies Home Journal," have gayly recaptured a summer they spent abroad during the early twenties in "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay." They were 19, on their own, and out to conquer the world. The two girls were cast from Montreal—Cornelia went by train from New York to Montreal and Emily from Buffalo. Cornelia relates: "At the station I tried to bid my parents a worldly and somewhat indifferent goodbye. It was hard to get away with. Father, when it came to travel, went on the theory that I wasn't quite bright and as I look back on myself I don't think I was. Mother, despite my nineteen years and a lamentable determination to look like Theda Bara, still persisted in calling me "Baby." She kept reminding me to put my purse in my pillow, never to speak to any strange men, and to wire her if I arrived there safely. (She said nothing about wiring her if I didn't.) And as we'd been separated, our partings were always emotional. Besides, this was my first flight from the home nest. I was going off on my own, whatever my own was. Mother cried a little and father looked brave, but as if he never expected to meet me again in this world despite the fact that in all probability we'd be meeting again fairly shortly. They too were sailing, but on a different ship and from New York. They had no idea of cramping Emily's and my style, but they thought it just as well to be in the same hemisphere as we." The library recommends "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay" to any reader as an antidote to his more serious reading.

Regimental Surgeon Stresses Value Of Preventive Medicine In War

In every major military campaign throughout the history of the world, more men have died from disease than from enemy action. The ratio in some wars has been as high as twelve to one. Through the achievements of the United States Army Medical Corps in effectively immunizing the American soldiers against the most dreaded of these diseases, the story of this war may be entirely different.

Here at The Infantry School the dispensary of the First Student Training Regiment this week administered its 100,000th innoculation since the dispensary was organized in April 1941. These inhoculations have been given under the supervision of Major Frank I. Ciofalo, regimental surgeon. The volume over such a short period of time ranks high among army regiments.

Chief among the Army's innoculations are the immunizing agents against lockjaw, typhoid fever, and smallpox. Tetanus or lockjaw has been recognized for many centuries, but no cure for it was known until 1884 when the first successful experiments were made. The mortality rate from this disease during the last war was exceedingly high when sixty per cent of those contacting the disease succumbed.

Tetanus toxoid is now administered to all military personnel on active duty. Innoculations are given in a series of three injections 21 days apart, and a stimulating dose is given at the end of the first year. The year of the final injection is always entered on the soldier's identification tag and his Immunization Register so that the first aid man who collects the wounded knows that the soldier has been immunized. Any man wounded in battle gets another emergency dose of the toxoid.

TYPHOID REDUCED

The immunity sustained by the body through these innoculations will practically eliminate lockjaw from our fighting forces. Even though a wounded soldier is not found in time to be given a stimulating dose, the chances of his developing lockjaw are very slight.

During the Spanish-American War the dreaded typhoid fever showed its fangs in a most deadly manner. Twelve times as many men died from disease during that war as were killed in battle. Most of the fatalities occurred in the typhoid epidemic which was our most dangerous enemy during the campaigns in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands. In spite of the greatest campaign for sanitation in history the deadly virus continued to strike at our troops.

Major Walter Reed of the United States Medical Corps and a board of Army medical officers discovered a typhoid vaccine in 1908. As a result of the protection of this vaccine, our peacetime army in 1940 had a record of only two fatalities from typhoid fever.

Typhoid vaccine, like tetanus toxoid, small pox vaccine, and blood typing, is a compulsory item in the Army, and is entered on the soldiers' immunization register. The shots are taken every third year in a series of three, five to seven days apart. Our fighting forces entering zones affected with typhoid fever will be protected by the innoculations received at their home stations.

In the early part of the Eighteenth Century an epidemic of smallpox killed 25,000,000 people throughout Europe. The ominous threat of this disease hung over the human race throughout the centuries. In 1801 the vaccine to counteract this diseases was discovered by Edward Jenner.

All men in the armed forces are compelled to have a smallpox vaccination. During peace time it was given every third year. Now it is repeated when the soldiers reach ports of embarkation. The dreaded scourge has been reduced to a negligible amount in our armed forces as a result of these precautions.

Another important function of Army dispensaries is the typing of blood. The Army tests the blood type of every soldier and enters that information on his identification tags and on his Immunization Register. Through this method the Medical Corps knows the type of blood necessary for transfusion to each wounded man. This procedure is demonstrating its value in all theatres of operation where thousands of lives have been saved by replacing matched blood.

Thus the "shots in the arm" with which all soldiers are familiar, and which frequently are a source of dread and discomfort, are in reality, as important as a rifle or armor plate in the prosecution of the war. They are the only effective protection against the tiny enemies which cannot be seen.

Massey Makes Supply Shifts

Several important changes and assignments in the officer staff of the supply division of post headquarters have been announced by Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply.

Maj. Guy C. Cheatham, a Quartermaster Corps officer, who was recently transferred to Benning from Fort McClellan, Ala., has been named chief of the distribution branch which supervises the procurement and issuance of all clothing and equipage for fort troops.

Major Cheatham fills the important post vacated by Lt. Col. Wm. E. Barksdale, who was transferred to Washington, D. C., about a month ago. Colonel Barksdale is now serving with the subsistence branch in the Office of the Quartermaster General.

Another important change involves the shift of Maj. Foster D. Shaver from the post of assistant to the Ordnance Officer to that of assistant chief of the supply control branch in the office of the director of supply, Col. Myron E. Leedy is head of this branch.

A third shift involved Lieut. Jack Ward, who formerly was assigned as an assistant to the property officer in charge of general supplies. He is now serving with the subsistence branch as an assistant to the sales officer, Capt. Marcus E. Cooper.

First School For Colored Troops Uses Textbooks And Bayonets

Training Detachment Staff Has Excellent Instructors

The United States Army is bent on developing men of brawn and strength to meet our enemies on the battlefield. However, Uncle Sam wants intelligence as well as brawn and good physique in his new Army.

In keeping with the widespread systems instituted by the Army there is a specialized task at Fort Benning. Here many colored soldiers are being taught fundamentals of education, since many of them had small bits of formal education during their youth.

The Special Training Deatchment, commanded by Major David G. Wilson is believed to be the first colored unit of its kind in the country. Originated by the Fourth Service Command in September, the Training Deatchment at Benning draws troops from all units of the Service Command in the southeastern United States.

Every day college-trained colored instructors — who are enlisted men in the grade which supervises the educational program of the Deatchment— hold classes for the men where they teach the rudiments of elementary education which the soldiers lacked when they entered the Army.

A balanced program of classroom work as well as physical training, drilling and the like make up the full schedule. Major Wilson has devised a twelve-week program for the bulk of the men assigned to his unit. However, if a man with a low intelligence rating can complete the course in a shorterr period, he is then graduated earlier.

BASED ON SCORE

The assignment of troops to the Training Detachment is based upon the intelligence score of the soldiers in their Army general classification tests. Men who rate exceptionally low, but who may possess the potentialities of absorbing more education, are assigned to the Training Detachment for their own improvement.

Upon entering the Detachment, each man is given a Placement test, the soldier then is given a comprehensive rating— to determine in which classes he should be especially trained in reading, writing, arithmetic, and related subjects. Men with more education than others do not start out in the lowest section of the school, but are put in more advanced classes. As the courses continue, regular weekly tests are given to determine the progress of each soldier.

Upon completion of the schooling, the soldiers are given an "achievement test." If the soldier passes it, he is "graduated" and then sent to a branch of the Army to assume responsibility.

As the soldiers are graduated, they usually are slated for field troops or station complements.

This type of school is not entirely new to the Army. Field forces have instituted similar organizations to help educate their troops. However, this Fourth Service Command unit at Benning seems to be the forerunner of others in various parts of the country, for the less-educated troops of these commands. There are two similar detachments for white soldiers at Fort Jackson, S. C., and at Camp Shelby, Miss.

"The principal thing we first endeavor to teach these men," Major Wilson observed, "is self-respect and dependability. These soldiers may not have had the benefit of much elemenjary education in their younger years, and thus we must educate them from the point where they left off."

TAUGHT SELF-RESPECT

"Primarily," he continued, all of the men must be taught self-respect. They all have a job to do in the Army and once they have polished their self-respect and established their dependability, they will be better equipped to go out and do that job."

In Major Wilson's headquarters is at least one veteran soldier. He is Master Sgt. Louis A. Scipio, a colored soldier with 29 years' service. A native of Washington, D. C., where he attended elementary and secondary school, Sgt. Scipio later attended the Medical School of Howard University.

Sgt. Scipio enlisted in the Army in 1914 in the Marine Barracks in Washington and was assigned to the 24th Infantry. He earned his promotion to sergeant in his first enlistment, and served with the 24th Infantry at Fort Benning until April of this year, a veteran of 28 years with the same outfit. In the Training Detachment, Sgt. Scipio is the chief clerk.

Among the instructors in the school are five enlisted men, all of whom attended college. Sgt. Walter R. Bennett, Jr., a native of Columbus, Ga., is a graduate of South Carolina State University at Orangeburg, S. C. He majored in Biology and English and later taught in the public schools in Florence, S. C. before entering the Army. Sgt. Bennett is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Bennett of 726—4th Ave., Columbus.

Private Louis B. Smalls, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis W. Smalls, of Georgetown, S. C., also attended South Carolina State University. He majored in secondary education in college taking specialized courses in mathematics and sociology. A member of the cadre in the school, Pvt. Smalls is another of Major Wilson's teachers.

EXCELLENT TEACHERS

Private Willie Chiles, of Augusta, Ga., the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Chiles of 1322—11th Street, is another instructor. He is a graduate of Paine College, Augusta, where he majored in social sciences.

Another teacher is Private George Andrews Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. David, of Route 1, Lancaster, South Carolina. Pvt. Davis graduated from Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, N. C.

Private Orven Godwin, another teacher, from Knoxville, Tenn., the son of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Godwin, attended Georgia Normal School at Auburn, Ga., where he majored in English.

These well-educated soldiers in the Special Training Detachment have proved themselves fine teachers, according to Major Wilson. The soldiers vary their classes in mathematics, reading, and writing.

Although these colored enlisted men are being afforded an opportunity to practice their vocation of teaching while they are in the Army, they form no small part of the Training Detachment which is endeavoring to provide the soldier-pupil the means to become better educated and prepare themselves for jobs in the war, as well as prepare them, in a wider sense for civilian pursuits which will come when the war ends.

Parachutists Get Two New Towers

Two new, steel, training towers have been added to the ever increasing parachute school facilities at Fort Benning. This brings the number of these 250-foot training devices to four.

One of the new towers is a controlled type and the other is a free one. On the controlled tower the students receive their first instruction. The individual is hauled up to 250 feet and released. However, control wires permit the parachute to move only in a downward direction. The free tower leap, which comes later, is designed so the parachute and student are released floating as one would from an airplane.

These structures are among the few expenditures by the Government for parachute training equipment. Most of the other devices have been developed by the school, built by school labor, and made from materials available.

The parachute packing sheds, are hangars borrowed from the Air Corps. The offices of the school which were until recently upstairs in the hangar were originally out-fitted with plain wooden tables and mess benches and were a long time without typewriters. Barracks to house the students were borrowed from the neighboring engineers and infantry. Mock-up training towers, and most of the other devices were made from material on hand and constructed by soldiers from the school. Yet week by week scores of the best trained soldiers in America have been graduated as qualified parachutist.

1st. Lt. Carroll York, assisted by Lt. Howard W. Chappell, and Lt. Charles V. Tillson, supervise training on the parachute towers.

Benning Gets Its Initial AAS Graduate

Fort Benning's Infantry School for officer candidates has nothing on the Army's new Army Administrative School at Fargo, N. D.—they're both tough courses!

At least Second Lt. Albert Swallows, graduate of the first class from the school and the first such officer to be assigned to this post, revealed today that administrative officers do plenty of field-work in their training for "desk" jobs.

Lt. Swallows arrived at the post today for his assignment at Headquarters Detachment. He said that many of the officer candidates in the administration school had previous business management training.

"They certainly kept us on our toes," Lt. Swallows affirmed. A native of Crossville, Tenn., Lt. Swallows was inducted into the Army about several months ago and received his appointment to the school upon completion of his basic training.

Another graduate of the Administrative School's first class, Second Lt. George LeRoy Nicholson, of Tulsa, Okla., has also been assigned to Benning. Other schools for training officers for administrative jobs have recently been opened in other sections of the country.

Lt. Hamilton graduated from the first Officer's Candidate Class he has been active in sports at Fort Benning and since then at fairs of the 29th. He produced a championship volley-ball team while at "D" company and was a player-coach with the 1st Battalion baseball team. He now has been coach of the Cannon Company touch football team, which is hot on the trail of the Regimental championship.

One million Christmas parcels were included in the tons of mail sent overseas to American soldiers during October.

Holiday Greetings The Infantry School

This second Christmas of the present war closes a year filled with accomplishments by The Infantry School, a year in which every officer and enlisted man on duty with this great institution has served without thought of self but with full consideration for the task to be done and the mission to be performed. the five-fold expansion during the past year has called for the complete support of each individual connectted with the School. The well-merited praise of higher commands, as well as the complimentary remarks of visitors and students, indicate how well we have maintained the high standard of instruction in which staff, instructors, administrative units and troops have all played an important part.

With my wish for a Happy Christmas and a successful New Year, let me add my appreciation to each of you for your loyal support and cooperation.

Max 'Resting Comfortably' Longs for His Parachute

Famed Dog on Mend After Car Accident

Max is on the road to recovery.

Max is the German Boxer dog, mascot of the 505th Parachute Infantry, who gained nationwide fame as being the first dog ever to qualify as a paratrooper after completing the required number of jumps from an airplane.

Proving once again the contention of the paratroopers that more accidents occur on the ground than in the air, Max was struck down by a hit-run automobile driver in the gray hours just before dawn a week ago—just as he was about to gain additional fame by making jumps for three newsreel cameramen.

At first his case was believed hopeless. He was badly smashed up. His skull was thought fractured and his jaw, a front leg were broken. X-rays showed, however, that the skull was not fractured and surgeons of the 505th wired up the jaw, set the leg, gave intravenous feedings to supply food energy.

From all over the country came messages of condolence to Max. Pictures of the dog lying gravely injured ran in newspapers all over the nation. An American Legionnaire in Atlanta sent down $5.00 to be sure that medicines or other materials could be purchased if necessary.

HAS CHRISTMAS TREE

Probably the most touching tribute of all came from children at the Fort Benning school, who sent over a small Christmas tree, (not dog-wood) fully decorated, Max had thrilled the children by paying them a visit a short time before he had been injured and this was their way of repaying the entertainment he had furnished them.

Today it appeared that, barring complications, Max will recover. He soon will be fed by a throat tube and his jaw appears on the mend although surgeons of the regiment admitted he may still suffer a relapse.

But men of the 505th are preparing for the day when Max will be up and around again, his fighting spirit having won a bout with Death. And they're prophesying that Max will jump again.

And when he does, the news reel companies promise to be back.

Lt. H. A. Gorman Returns To Post

Lieut. Howard A. Gorman has just returned to his duties at the post after completing a six-weeks course of instruction in industrial relations at the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.

The Quartermaster Corps officer is serving at Benning as an assistant to the chief of the civilian personnel branch, which is headed by Lieut. Raymond A. Parking. During his absence at school, Lt. Gorman was notified of his promotion to the rank of first lieutenant.

A houseboat on the Nile has been opened as a club for warrant and non-commissioned officers serving with American Army Forces in Egypt.

At Camp Livingston, La., Sergeant Robert Sullivan, grandson of John L. Sullivan, gives rifle instruction to Private John W. York, cousin of Sergeant Alvin C. York.

Benning Officer Has 4 Brothers In Armed Forces

Lieut. Wm. J. Bryne, assistant sales officer in the Quartermaster commissary at Fort Benning, is justly proud of his mother back in Pittsburg, Penn., and with good reason. For she, Mrs. Thomas I. Bryne, is a Five Star mother in the present war, having four other sons besides the Benning officer in the United States Army.

The quartermaster lieutenant, who serves in the subsistence branch of the supply division headed by Col. Stephen B. Massey, is the eldest Bryne brother serving with the Army, both in age and point of service. At 32, he has had 18 and one half years of service in the regular Army, and just recently was commissioned.

Another brother, Joseph F. Bryne, is also an officer, serving as a first lieutenant with the Signal Corps at Camp Shelby, Miss. Timothy is a private in ordnance at Camp Sutton, N. C.; Thomas, Jr., is a private first class with an air transport squadron in Australia; and Paul is a private at the Army Air Force Technical Training Command school in Gulfport, Miss.

The father of the five Army brothers also is playing a prominent part in the nation's war effort. Connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad, he is a civilian director of military movements in and around the Pittsburg sector.

Thrilling Film Made Available To Post Units

Organizations at Fort Benning desiring a thrilling film may obtain 48 minutes of entertainment from the Special Services Office, it was announced today.

The film, put out by Phillip Morris cigarettes, is available free to any group on the Post. It has a football review of 1941, rodeo thrill shots, movies of "Monarchs of the Prize Ring" and other entertainment interwoven. The film is 16 mm.

24th General To Attend Victory Dance

The third in a series of monthly "Victory Dances," sponsored by the enlisted personnel of the 24th General Hospital, will be held Christmas night at 8:30 p. m. in the Georgia Power Company club rooms at Second avenue and 18th street in Columbus. The dance, in honor of Santa's annual visit, will be formal with the music supplied by the 117th Infantry Dance Band.

Both the Columbus Military Maids and the wives or friends of the enlisted men will be the guests for the evening. Mrs. J. W. Coppack will be the "mother" hostess and Mrs. Hugh Roberts, Jr., will act as the hostess for the guests.

The decorating committee, under the direction of Cpl. "Emmy" Moskowits, will decorate the entire hall in natural Christmas foliage and holly. Refreshments in the nature of a light buffet supper will be served.

'Gators Plan Gala Christmas

The 124th Infantry, long noted for its rich traditions, is truly bringing the spirit of a traditional Christmas into its midst this year.

In the heart of the area is a large tree aglitter with lights and symbolic of the spirit that is evident in the decorating of all the company areas. Each company is competing for a prize for the most beautiful area and Col. John D. Hill will select the winning area from selections made by the battalion commanders and a committee judging the special units.

Mess halls, barracks and streets are garlanded with holly and tinsel and Christmas bells, while windows frame wreathes and glow with candle light.

As each company has been busy so the offices of the Chapel have been planning and arranging for a great holiday. Christmas eve will witness a candle light service with the 124th Infantry Chorus, under the direction of Cpl. H. E. Williams, singing the beloved seasonal songs after a reading of the immortal Dicken's "Christmas Carol." Christmas day will be marked by special services within the Chapel which has been decorated with evergreens and holly and with the ruddy Poensettas banking the alter.

AMPLIFIER INSTALLED

Song will flood the area as an amplifier installed in the spire of the Chapel will send carols out over the air to the whole regiment throughout the holiday.

Fulfilling an old army custom the Chorus will serenade the Regimental Commander and the Commanding officers of the Post beneath the windows of their homes.

Captain Harold F. Milton, the Special Service Officer, has made especial arrangements with the 9th St. USO in Columbus for a Regimental Christmas Dance and despite the restrictions on transportation it is expected that the regiment will turn out practically en masse for the gay occasion. The well known 124th Infantry Dance Band will solidly keep the tempo of the evening high.

The famed "Alligator," the 124th's newspaper, also is preparing an elaborate Christmas issue regaled with some splendid art work and containing the finest of feature stories and crammed with news of the activity in the old "Gator" regiment as it rises typically to meet the spirit of the season.

Special Services Slated In Town Christmas Eve

There will be special services at the First Presbyterian Church in Columbus Christmas Eve at 8 p. m. for service men who are in town at the time. All others who are interested are invited to attend.

Chaplain Frank M. Thompson, Post Chaplain of Fort Benning and Chaplain Thomas M. Anthony will be in charge of the service assisted by Dr. Calvin J. Reid, the pastor.

It was a happy day for First Sergeant Ross Jones of Camp Barkeley, Tex., when he picked up his laundry, for he needed some clean clothing, but when he opened the bundle he found, instead of his own apparel, that of a woman. The company now affects to believe it wasn't a mistake at all and anyone who wants a fight can get it just by looking under Sergeant Jones' bed.

'Speed' Is Secret Of 90-Day Wonder

He's a 90-day wonder, just out of the Benning School for boys. How in the hell can a man become a good officer in just three months?

To that question, often put sarcastically, one word will suffice as an answer. That word is:

"Speed!"

This is not a defense of Officer Candidate Schools. They need no defense. It is, rather, an attempt to remove any remaining doubts regarding the Army's system of incubating officers on a mass-production scale.

Officer Candidates move fast. They have to, if they cross the finish line. A great many of them—the ones who start slow and the ones who don't keep kicking along the home stretch—eat dust. They haven't learned the meaning of the word "Speed!" They aren't commissioned.

Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, must have had that in mind when he addressed a West Point graduating class. He said, in substance, "You're in fast company." He was referring to graduates of Officer Candidate Schools.

Here, roughly, is the rate at which OCS men of the 1St STR move:

On opening day there are given a brief orientation speech. Then they begin their first major course, map and aerial photograph reading. Seven days later they are expected to be experts. In the meantime they've studied hygiene and sanitation, principles of training, combat intelligence, hasty field fortification and supply, besides regularly running the obstacle course, and taking calisthentics.

AVOID GIGS

But that isn't all. They must be perpetually neat and master the technique of avoiding "gigs," a full time job in itself.

The first seven days are, comparatively speaking, warm-up exercises for the work to come.

In five days they learn the nomenclature, functioning and firing of M-1 rifle, a weapon many of them have never been before. Many attain expert rating. A few become "bolos."

The next 10 days are spent thoroughly learning the 30 calibre light and heavy machine guns, most of them have never touched machine guns before, but in 10 days they are expected to qualify as marksmen. Most of them do, many of them become experts.

In six days they cram down such diverse subjects as "Supply, Regiment in Defense," "Troop Movement, Motor," "Company Management," and "Night Training of the Individual Soldier." At the same time they are expected to become accomplished technicians with the bayonet, grenade and the Browning Automatic Rifle. By this time they've learned to take "gigs," surprise formations, the obstacle course and calisthentics in stride. They've learned that "speed" is essential. They've developed the capacity.

They learn to fire—and accurately—the 81 and 60 millimeter mortars in three days. Their brief acqdaintance with the 37 millimeter anti-tank gun is of two-and-one-half day duration. Out of one class of 200 men, 76.5 per cent qualified as marksmen and 16.4 per cent were rated as experts.

After they've finished studying weapons, they're ready to start to work. They still have tactics to learn—dovetailing into each day, of course, more work on supply, chemical warfare, company management, etc. They still have to run the "Blitz Course," and struggle over the "Jungle Jim" course. Graded tests come in quick succession, inspections keep them on their toes, strenuous "walks" keep them physically fit, and the prospect of failure keeps them perpetually worried.

These are just a few of the "obstacles" an OCS man must hurdle. There are many more, but you get the general idea. By the time they've received their commissions they've almost forgotten what it means to walk, dress and eat leisurely. They've been primed for three months to work at capacity speed, and that's the way they'll continue to work "for the duration and six months."

Yuletide Greetings
The Parachute School

I desire at this time of year to extend to all the officers, enlisted men and civilian employees of The Parachute School my best wishes for "A Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year."

Since May 15, 1942, we have witnessed a 100% expansion of The Parachute School. At times, this appeared impossible to accomplish. Through the hard work, cheerfulness and willing cooperation of each and every one of you, The Parachute School has never failed to meet any requirement it was called upon to face. We have all worked as a team with only one end in view—to graduate qualified parachutists.

Let us resolve that we will meet the duties and responsibilities of the New Year with the same spirit of loyalty and cooperation that all have manifested during this first year of The Parachute School. Let us all work together so that every individual and each Department will contribute everything possible to maintain the excellent record that we have built for The Parachute School.

Insurance Officers Must Make Selves Known To Units

Insurance officers of various units on the Post were asked today to notify all personnel of their organizations as to their identity and let it be known where they can be reached.

Many of those appointed as insurance officers have failed to carry out such a plan, so that many officers and enlisted men of different organizations are forced to come to Post Headquarters for information, Lieut. S. J. Marley, post insurance officer, said today.

"Since this is a War Department desire that all men have easy availability to an insurance officer in their own organization, these officers should take means to make themselves known to their personnel," he said.

Response is growing daily from the insurance campaign being conducted on the post, Lieut. Marley reported. He urged again that all Army personnel put their affairs in shaps before leaving for a port of embarkation where it may prove impossible to fill out forms properly at the last moment.

Hospital Red Cross Is All Set To Give Patients Gala Christmas

Hundreds Of Gifs Are Ready; Tinseled Trees Placed In Wards

Plans for a full and varied holiday program have been completed for the patients of Station Hospital. The Red Cross, under the supervision of Mrs. Francis J. Hattaway, Assistant Field Director of the Red Cross Hospital and Recreation Corps with the aid of various groups in Columbus and on the Post will make this a homelike Christmas for each patient in the hospital.

At 7 o'clock Christmas Eve a party will be given in the Red Cross Recreation Hall. One of the features of the program will be the singing of special Christmas music by a group of colored soldiers. Piled around a large and beautifully decorated Christmas tree will be hundreds of gayly wrapped gifts. A Santa Claus with a special flair for comedy will distribute these gifts along with stockings filled with candy, fruit and various small gifts.

Staff members of the Red Cross Hospital and Recreation Corps, assisted by the nurses, will distribute gifts from the tree on the wards where patients are unable to attend the party in the Recreation Hall. At nine o'clock, when the bugle plays "Tatoo" for "Lights Out," two groups of nurses, trim in their uniforms and capes, will sing carols between the wards. At midnight a special Christmas Mass will be held in the Recreation Hall. Chaplain Ignatius McCarty will officiate.

YULE SERVICES

At ten o'clock Christmas morning services will be held with Post Chaplain Frank M. Thompson delivering the sermon. A vested choir from the Post Chapel, under the direction of Mrs. Harley A. Twedt, will provide special Christmas music. Christmas night thirteen students from the Columbus High school, under the direction of Miss Clothilde Hair, will present a Christmas play.

The holiday schedule follows:

Saturday night, Dec. 26, the movie "Tales of Manhattan" will be shown.

Sunday night, Dec. 27, is Open House with the Station Hospital Orchestra playing. Refreshments will be served to patients and their guests.

Monday night, Dec. 28, The Matag Club is sending out its full floor show which promises to be an outstanding event.

Tuesday night, Dec. 29, The Southern Manor will present its complete floor show in a clever and entertaining review.

Wednesday night, Dec. 30, comes the popular movie, "Take a Letter, Darling."

NEW YEAR'S EVE

Thursday night, a gala New Year's Eve party is planned with decorations and entertaining turning the Recreation Hall into a cabaret. Plenty of noise makers, ballon barrages, paper hats and the Service Club No. 4 Orchestra promise to make New Year's Eve in the Station Hospital a happy event for those patients well enough to be up and around. For those patients not well enough to be up an appropriate program will be taken to the wards.

Families and friends of the soldiers in the hospital will be glad to know that nothing has been spared to make the holiday a happy one. Many of these soldiers are spending their first Christmas away from home, and Col. E. A. Noyes, Commanding Officer of the hospital, and the Red Cross Staff have tried in every way to show their personal interest in each individual patient.

Gen. Fulton Issues Share Ride Warning

Urging that "share a-ride" arrangements be made in order to assist in the national gasoline emergency, Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, today quoted a War Department bulletin to all troops and civilian personnel on the post regarding the situation.

"Bona-fide ride sharing arrangements must be worked out, and other usual requirements met," the War Department letter said. "Cars with supplemental books have been noticed going in and out of the reservation without passengers. All personnel are advised that an investigation may be made as to the eligibility of drivers who are not complying with regulations to retain or renew their supplemental books."

Second STR Announces Full Holiday Slate

A full program of activities will keep officer candidates of the Second Student Training Regiment busy over the Christmas holiday.

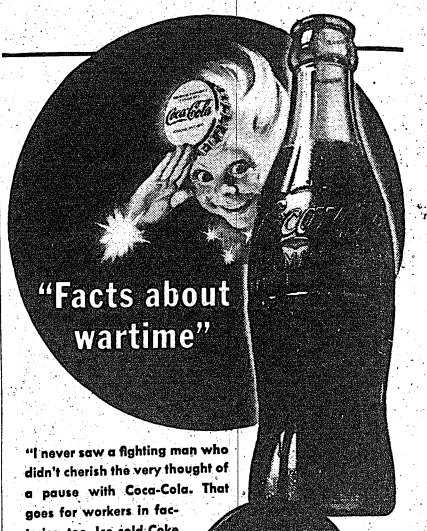
Religious services are particularly featured, starting with Christmas Eve services at midnight Thursday night. The Second Student Regiment's choir will sing a full Christmas program at a midnight service for Protestants in Chapel No. 2 at which Regimental Chaplain Edwin L. Willson will officiate. There will be another Protestant service at the same time in Chapel No. 4 with Chaplain William F. Willingham in charge, while Chaplain John M. McMahon will be in charge of the traditional Catholic mass at Chapel No. 3.

On Christmas morning there will be Catholic masses at 7 and 7:30 a. m. in Chapel No. 3 and at 8 p. m. in both Chapels No. 2 and 4. There will be a Christmas morning Protestant service at Chapel No. 3 at 9:45 a. m.

The big Christmas day feast for all companies will be served at 2 o'clock, featuring turkey with all the trimmings, combining dinner and supper in one large meal.

Later in the afternoon gala entertainment will be offered in the Sports Arena in the Harmony Church area when the nationally-famous band of Louis Armstrong will play for the entertainment of soldiers of the area from 2 to 6 p. m. At 3 o'clock he will be offering a broadcast for national consumption over the Blue network.

Colored Troops To Observe Christmas Tide



By CPL. SMITHY NORTON

Peace on earth good-will toward all men . . . This is Christmas week and once more the people of the world will observe the birth of Jesus Christ. The men of our armed forces are being remembered by folks at home. Cards packages, and letters will bring much joy to soldiers in service.

This week at Fort Benning the various Army organizations have planned special programs and the week will be religiously observed. The men of the Post Detachment will be served a deluxe dinner and the NCO's club house will be open for members and visitors.

In the Reception Center Recreation building a Christmas program by casuals will be presented Thursday. On the Christmas eve the Reception Center Chorus will be featured in the Army-Navy Y. M. C. A. broadcast. The City hospital patients and those confined in the city jail will be cheered by members of the RC chorus. The colorful moments at Fort Benning will be the R. C. chorus caroling Dec. 24 from 11:20 p. m. until the dawn of Christmas morning.

On Christmas day at 8:30 a. m. a special Christmas pageant and religious services will be presented by the men of the Reception Center . . . The St. James Church, the Friendship Baptist church, other churches in Columbus and have planned Christmas services and all soldiers are invited.

CHRISTMAS 1942

Yes Another year has gone by. It's been a hectic year, but we should all realize how fortunate we are. We, still living in a land over which the skies are calm. We, living in the hearts of our families, surrounded by the children and friends and possessions we love. We should realize now the preciousness of these things, and that they must be safeguarded for all time. It is in this very spirit that we can make this a wonderful Christmas, a memorable Christmas, a challenge to those who would wrest these simple pleasures from us. And so in the knowledge that peace on earth and good will toward men will again be abroad in our land, we pause to say

G. I. Summary Of World News

By SGT. O. J. REMINGTON

What will the New Year bring?

In times of peace, New Year's Eve has always been a time of celebration, with the thought of the New Year and what it might mean to the individual in the background probably to be more seriously considered when the individual awoke the next day and tried to recall what had gone on the evening before.

But this year the thought of what the future year means, what it will bring to the entire world, as well as to each individual, will undoubtedly be uppermost in the minds of all Americans.

Certainly the future of 1943 looks a good deal brighter to all of us than the year of 1942 looked to us at this same time last year.

The nation has buckled down to war, facing all the hardships it has brought, performing a record breaking major miracle of turning the entire productive forces of a nation of peace lovers into production for the terribly grim business of war, looking ahead without fear to many more serious privations and hardships that seem certain to be faced before final Victory can be achieved.

That business of turning our forces into war production in a few short months was something that our enemies did not count upon. They thought it couldn't be done or that, granted it might be accomplished, the American people was too soft, too fat, too lazy, to desire to do it.

Our enemies made the same mistake, it may be remembered, back in 1917. They underestimated entirely our ability to get terribly mad as a nation, and to roll up our sleeves and finish any job that confronted us.

This time their mistake will be more costly to them. This time America has been attacked. The nation is in dire peril. There can be no blinking at that fact. And during 1942 Americans haven't blinked at it. They have faced it. They know that they will have to pitch in and work even harder during 1943. And they'll do it.

No matter what else might be predicted for 1943, it takes no prophet to foretell right now that the American sleeve will have to be rolled up still farther and that it is being rolled up. It is safe to predict, too, that the collective American belt will have to be tightened, as more rationing looms on the early horizon.

In fact, announcements concerning rationing have already been made, with dates for the first of the rationing moves set for Feb. 1.

We are a nation that loves its meat that is already scarce; vegetables also are becoming difficult to get. But the public is resolved to take all of this and a great deal more too during the coming year, if it proves necessary to our victory.

On the actual fighting fronts, the future certainly holds more promise for 1943 than at this time a year ago. Our men and equipment are pushing ahead in Africa. Our men and equipment are pushing ahead in the vastness of the Pacific. A year ago we were in pretty bad shape. We still have a long way to go our leaders warn us before we can turn the tide. But our armies have begun to make offensive movements and our naval strength has been rebuilt after Pearl Harbor.

And certain it seems that our enemies will feel the might of our armed wrath in the year to come. Whether 1943 will see an ultimate victory, of course, is far beyond our power of prediction. But at least the 12 months that lie ahead are heavy with promise of brightness contrasted with the 12 months that lay ahead at this particular time in 1941.

With food rationing now on the way, the fuel, gasoline and oil situation still is acute, but a note of cheer is injected by an announcement by the War Production Board that it has approved the barge, Tugboat and towboat building program recommended by ODT. Construction is to begit shortly on 500 wooden tank barges, 21 steel hull towboats and 100 tugboats, to enable an additional barge eastward barge movement of 50,000 barrels of residual fuel oil within five months, and 100,000 barrels within 10 months. Terminals are to be constructed at Jacksonville and Panama City, Fla., and at Cairo, Ill.

Commenting on the assassination of Admiral Darlan, Secretary of State Hull called it "an odious and cowardly act," and then went on to say that now the all-important consideration is not to be "diverted for a moment from the

R. C. Chorus Voted Best Musical Group

Unit Gains Fame On 'Cheers' Broadcast

Voting the Reception Center Chorus, composed of all colored soldiers, the best musical organization of its kind in the camp, soldiers of Fort Benning today issued a challenge to any other camp in the United States "to better or even match it."

The chorus, which is under the direction of Cpl. Willis Brown of Birmingham, has been in existence just a little more than the 52 weeks of 1942 now coming to a close.

Gaining local fame with a series of Tuesday night radio programs over WRBL, the chorus soon was in wide demand for singing at various camp functions and in the city of Columbus.

It gained nationwide repute when it sang on the "Cheers From The Camps" national broadcast early last fall, and at that time Columbia Broadcasting Company radio men said it was the best they had heard anywhere, and also stated it would rank with any singing group in the world today.

Men of Fort Benning backed up the opinion by voting practically unanimously that the Chorus should be ranked as the top musical group at the Fort, in a survey conducted by the Fort Benning "Bayonet," camp newspaper.

Many officers and men expressed the wish that some sort of national camp singing contest could be arranged to prove their

Bond Delivery Begins Mar. 1

Regular delivery of war bonds purchased by civilians under the class A pay reservation plan should be accomplished by March 1, 1943, according to Colonel J. H. McFall, post finance officer.

Bonds will be issued directly by the Fort Benning branch of the Finance Department, under supervision of Col. McFall, who was recently appointed an issuing officer. Records of all deductions will be handled by the civilian personnel officers on the post, and upon their certification the finance office will issue the bonds.

There have been many questions about the old system of bond delivery, and due to misunderstandings many cancellations have resulted. However, with the new streamlined method of recording and delivering the securities, the reservations will undoubtedly increase. All persons authorizing deductions are urged to continue doing so. Prompt and accurate service is promised under the system, which becomes effective January 1, 1943.

Reservations authorized by military personnel will be handled out of Washington as previously. However, with the volume of work decreasing as a result of the decentralized civilian plan, these should receive better service too.

He Who Laughs Last Laughs Best Captain Learns

Sgt. John F. Bevilaqua of the 54th Infantry, who was laid up in the hospital recently with a busted knee suffered in football practice, has the last laugh on Captain George A. Renoux, company commander.

Bevilaqua took a few razzberries, he avows, from the captain about the mishap and all of a sudden the noise ceased.

Reason: The captain hobbled into the orderly room one day with a busted knee —suffered in football practice.

Norse Officer Eluded Nazis To Join Allies

Lt. Melbye Training At Infantry School To Fight Axis Again

Norwegians are tough.

When the Nazi legions drove through the small Scandinavian country in 1940, thousands of strong, proud Norwegian soldiers were captured and forced to lay down their arms.

But since the German invasion, many rugged Scandinavians have eluded their captors and fled to freedom, once again to take up arms against the aggressors who invaded their homeland.

Such is the saga of Lieutenant Willy K. Melbye, now at Ft. Benning's Infantry School, who was forced to give up his arms and equipment and return to civilian life after the Nazi conquest. But Lieut. Melbye, like so many of his countrymen, would not follow Norway's arch-traitor Quisling.

After a year in occupied Norway, Lt. Melbye made good his escape. With a friend, he crossed the border into Sweden on skis. From Sweden, Lt. Melbye's odyssey carried him by airplane to Hong Kong, China, by way of Moscow and Chungking, a distance of nearly six thousand miles.

At Hong Kong, Lt. Melbye stayed at the American Embassy for two weeks, during which time the Japs bombed the city relentlessly, spreading death and destruction in the fortress. Obtaining passage on a Norwegian cargo vessel, Lt. Melbye earned his passage to Los Angeles—some seven weeks after fleeing his native land.

FIGHTS FOR FREEDOM

From the time of his arrival in this country, Lt. Melbye has been actively working toward the restoration of his homeland's emancipation from the humiliating rule of Quisling and the Germans. He has taken several military courses in Canada, and worked for the Norwegian Government in exile, which has been calling to arms Norwegian Nationals in Canada.

At this time, Lt. Melbye is on special duty as a student in the Battalion Commander and Staff Officers' Course at the Infantry School here.

HELLZAPOPPIN AT BENNING THIS WEEK—If you don't believe it, just peek at the two scenes above, taken by a Bayonet photog in the Main theater Tuesday night, when the USO riot opened its five-day stay. At top is the leggy chorus of boys from Benning and gals from heaven going through their paces. Below, shows the audience holding their stomachs as the gals prepare their "dates" for the polka number. Having a particularly big time is the ducky Infantry school major second from the front, who's enjoying his first lollypop in ten years. (Signal Lab Photos by Kortmeir.)

'Hellzapoppin' Rocks Post In Fun Riot

10th Armored Tigers And Show's Cast Break Loose Tonight

By Sgt. Carl Neu

They're dancing in the aisles at Benning this week!

And that means leg-lovely Broadway show girls, buck privates, master sergeants, majors and colonels in the biggest fun riot that has ever hit America's number one army post.

It's "Hellzapoppin," a miniature edition of the riotous madhouse that rocked New York for over two years now touring southern Army camps as a USO-Camp Show unit.

Jam-packed houses have already belly-laughed their way through four performances in the Main Theater and a hospital show that had the patients tossing away crutches to do the boomps-a-daisy. Tonight, the cast of over 40 guys and gals invades the Sand Hill area to help the 10th Armored Tigers tear the lid off the New Year at Theater No. 7. Friday and Saturday "Hellzapoppin" will pop at Theater No. 4 in the Harmony Church area.

TOPS THEM ALL

USO shows have come and gone at Benning, but "Hellzapoppin" tops them all, because everyone has a chance to join in the fun. Imagine a band of military men with trouser legs rolled to the knees, rouge smeared on their cheeks, party hats atop their noggins, lollypops in their mouths and dancing a polka in the aisles. It actually happens, and the men and officers alike love it.

Cause for all this high-jinks is the Helizapoppin Polka number, latest variation of the famed Boomps-a-daisy. The darling Gae Foster Roxyettes, one of the best lines to ever tap their way across a Benning stage, sweep into the audience, flooding the aisles with pretty faces (and legs) that set the boys mad. Each picks a partner, then the fun begins. The number comes to a smashing finale when the chorines haul(?) their quarry up to the stage for a final jig that shows the strangest assortment of legs anyone has ever seen.

MAJOR OBJECTION

The Main Theater rocked with laughter every time this number was staged, and everyone joined in the fun. One well-known Infantry School major was a bit reticent once he had been corralled by Sandy Lee of the girlie cast. Between licks on his lollypop, he managed to shout at the Bayonet photographer "Don't take my picture, please." Our enterprising photog got it, though, and it's printed above for your delight. (Wonder what the Baker's wife will say tonight?)

But the polka number was one of many that took place in the audience and had the lads who rushed for front row seats to get leg closeups wishing they'd stayed back further. Stooges were sprinkled all over the auditorium, and every remark on the stage got an answer from the audience.

BLANKETY-BLANKS

Telegraph girls, a balloon man, a clown with a glowing nose, Lena looking for her Oscar, fat men, thin men and the wackiest crowd Benning has ever seen cavorted all over the place. On the stage, more blanks were fired than at Hook Range on a busy day. Hellzapoppin really flows all over the play.

The principals, of course, all do a bang-up job, but foremost in G. I. eye-interest, as usual, were the girls. And there were plenty of them. The 16 Gae Foster Roxyettes, trained personally by the

Victory Tax For Civilians Starts Jan. 1

Allowances, Overtime To Be Included In Computation

Collection of the new Victory Tax from civilian employees will commence January 1, 1943, according to word received from the War Department today.

The new assessment will be figured on gross earnings, including allowances, and any overtime pay. Gross yearly earnings, plus overtime pay, minus $624 (allowable deduction) multiplied by five per cent will roughly give the sum due. This figure will be broken down into as many parts as the individual has pay periods.

Records pertaining to this tax, and all deductions made for war bonds under the class A pay reservation plan, as well as regular retirement deductions will be handled by the various civilian personnel officers on newly devised record cards. All payroll deductions will be made from data included on these forms. Personnel officers will be appointed certifying officers and will be directly accountable for the accuracy, legality, and completeness of the information posted on these individual earning records.

By use of this new plan unnecessary duplication will be eliminated and a complete record from which to audit will be available.

No information on the collection of the Victory Tax from military personnel has been released. Members of the armed forces will be required to pay this tax but possibly not until March 1944, along with regular income taxes.

Seminars Set For Chaplains

Three Meetings Will Discuss Mental Aids

A series of seminars on the subject of pastoral theology personal counseling, and ministry to the sick has been arranged for Fort Benning chaplains and nurses and individuals in downtown Columbus January 5-7, Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, chief of the chaplains' branch, has announced.

The seminars will be conducted by the Rev. Mr. Ralph D. Bonacker, chaplain and teacher of theological students at the New York State Training School for Boys, Warwick, N. Y. Meetings have been arranged for 10 a. m. in the post chapel during the three seminar days, while other sessions are being scheduled for the nurses and for the Columbus groups.

The courses were arranged through Colonel Thompson by the Commission on Religion and Health of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in collaboration with the Chief of Chaplains Army of the United States, and the Head of the Chaplains Division, United States Navy.

REFRESHER COURSES

The seminars are designed as "refresher courses" and are considered important due to the high percentage of the chaplains' work which involves dealing with individuals; because of the comparatively small amount of training which ministers have had in this field in comparison with the training they have had in other fields; and due to the very considerable advance in knowledge made in recent years in the field of personal counseling, pastoral psychology, and ministry to the sick.

The Rev. Mr. Bonaker is a graduate of the Yale School of Divinity and also studied in the General Theological Seminary in New York.

He supervised clinical training in the New Jersey State Hospital, Greystone Park, N. J. For three years he was curate of St. Paul's

They Say It's So— So—It Must Be

Imagine calling a roll like this: Private Limepuss, Yura Sot, Jimmie Christmas, Corporal Ima Cheater, Private Dumbell, Sergeant Sapp, Private Wastebasket . . . it could happen. These are a few names from the rolls of the Machine Records Unit collected by Warrant Officer E. D. Lewis.

Winners

BAYONET prize-winners for last week include Lt. Falko Schilling's cartoon, "Thus Do We Lay Aside our Guns," Sgt. Harry Chard's "Just Wondering", a poem; and Sgt. Tom McDonald for his original contribution, "Sgt. McDonald's Basket".

Winners will call by the public relations office at post headquarters to receive their prize money.

'You Can't Take It With You' Stars Broadway Cast For 5-Day Post Show

Kaufman, Hart Pulitzer Prize Play Opens January 12

Broadway is coming to Fort Benning to teach us "You Can't Take It With You." This comedy masterpiece of George Kaufman and Moss Hart will be presented by USO-Camp Shows with an all-star cast. Lovers of the best in legitimate theater entertainment will enjoy this Pulitzer Prize play during the five-day stay at the post, starting Jan. 12.

The original three-act hilarious brainstorm was acclaimed by press and public as the maddest and merriest comedy seen in years and is the work of two of America's leading playwrights, Kaufman and Hart, who already have to their credit a most impressive list of stage successes, which include "Once In A Lifetime," "Merrily We Roll Along," "The American Way," "The Man Who Came to Dinner," and "I'd Rather Be Right."

The plot of the play deals with the daffiest family on Morningside Heights. The amiable antics of the mad Sycamores and the crazy Vanderhofs draw all the attention the audience can give.

Jack Norworth, famous vaudeville star and songwriter, who wrote "Shine On Harvest Moon," "Take Me Out To the Ball Game," "Apple Blossom Time in Normandy," and other all time favorites, will appear as Grandpa Vanderhof, head of the clan. Mr. Norworth is very well-known and beloved by the folks who used to hear him do his songs from the vaudeville stage at the time when Gus Edwards, Eddie Foy, and King

MARJORIE CRAMER will appear as Alice Sycamore in the USO-Camp Shows unit "You Can't Take It With You" which is scheduled for Fort Benning for five days, starting Jan. 12. Miss Cramer has appeared in such plays as "Kind Lady," "The Man Who Came to Dinner," and "Philadelphia Story."

Pathe News to Film TIS Officer Course

'Lieutenant Smith Of U. S. A. ' To Be Directed At Benning By Slavko Vorkapich

The Officer Candidate Course at The Infantry School will be the subject of a two reel motion picture to be made here by Pathe News some time in March. The title of the show will be "Lieutenant Smith of the U. S. A." starring William Terry. It will be a sequel to "Private Smith of the U. S. A." made last season by the same company.

The writer and director of the picture, Mr. Slavko Vorkapich, is at The Infantry School this week gathering material for his scenario. He is making a thorough study of the entire course of instruction so that the story as finally written will be completely accurate Vorkapich is a native of Jugoslavia, but he has been a resident of the United States for 22 years. He studied art in Budapest and Paris and was in the latter city at the close of the last war. Coming to this country in 1920, he worked as a commercial artist in New York City for a few months before moving to California. He had a painting studio in Banta Barbara for three years before going to Hollywood.

Vorkapich has always been keenly interested in movies. Thus, when he sold a painting to a rich man for a considerable sum, he used the money for photographic equipment, and made his first movie short in 1928. As soon as that picture was released, Paramount engaged him as a montage expert. He was with Paramount for three years and with Metro Goldwyn Mayer for six years as montage expert and co-director.

WORKED GREAT FILMS

In the former capacity, Vorkapich worked on "Good Earth," "Romeo and Juliet," "David Copperfield," "May Time," "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," "Meet John Doe," and many others.

He was co-director of "Girls About Town," "What Price Hollywood," "Bill of Divorcement," and "I Take This Women," among others.

Vorkapich left M. G. M. in 1938 and worked as a free lance under Frank Capra and other independent producers. He has been with Pathe for six months during which time he directed "Private Smith of the U. S. A." and "Conquer by the Clock." The latter opens all over the country on December 31st.

Except for William Terry who will play the lead, the entire cast of the Officer Candidate movie will be taken from personnel at Fort Benning. Terry was a little known stage actor before the filming of "Private Smith of the U. S. A.," but his performance in that vehicle was so outstanding that he has been in demand since its release. He is currently playing in "Stage Door Canteen."

Forms Are Ready For Back Pay, Uniform Allowance

Fort Benning officers entitled to back pay dating from June 1 and an additional $100 uniform allowance will be required to submit form certificates, each in duplicate, Col. John H. McFall, finance officer, announced this week in the Daily Bulletin. The forms were outlined in the Bulletin and may be copied directly therefrom, or personnel sections may secure them from the Finance Office.

They are to be submitted with the January pay vouchers. The Finance Office plans to begin making payments of the additional salary and allowances on February 1. It was requested that no special pay voucher be filled out as these will not be attended to until claims on regular vouchers are paid.

The uniform allowance bill provides $250 for officers not above the third pay period, or $100 additional for those already paid $150 in compliance with the original bill. The pay bill places all components of the Army on the same pay status and allows officers to count previous enlisted service for purposes of pay and longevity. As the bill is retroactive, many officers will receive in a lump sum back pay which has been accruing since June 1,

O. C. 'Doing It Again'; Sutter Trained In 1918

"The Infantry is the Queen of the service for it was, is, and always will be the first soldier."

With this epigram, Candidate Winfred N. Sutter of Tampa, Florida and now a student of the 13th Co., Third Student Training Regiment here at the Infantry Officer's School prefaced his reminiscences of O. C. S. during World War I.

Uninitiated and fresh from four years at Western Military Academy, Sutter entered the 7th Infantry Officer's Training School, at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill. in 1918.

This was "war-time" Officer's Training in its infancy, and as such, "Win" (as Sutter prefers to be called) concludes that their methods of instruction were not as fully systematized and polished as our present set-up at Ft. Benning. For one thing, the conception of an infantryman was essentially a "foot-soldier" with plenty of brawn. Consequently, Officer's Training consisted mainly in the development of efficiency in drill and field work.

"The mortar and the automatic rifle were first coming into play; therefore, we were given the Springfield rifle as our bible and saviour. Naturally," Sutter continued, "the aim of the course was to harden the men and teach them what others had learned by bitter experience."

Officer's Training Schools in 1918 were composed principally of experienced soldiers and those withdrawn from combat to be trained as leaders. These men had already learned the significance of the phrase "battle importance"; therefore, there was little need to stress the value of the applicatory phase of instruction. All classes were conducted by the commanding officer and company officers of the candidate company. Instruction committees, as we know them at Fort Benning, were just being conceived. Training was limited to the knowledge that a few men could impart. However, we must realize that the basis for future Officer's Training was being founded and our present system of exposing Candidates to the viewpoints and experience of many instructors gradually evolved.

The methods developed at the Infantry School at Ft. Benning, concludes Sutter, are so well-defined and comprehensive in comparison that the term "superlative" is an under estimation. However, this can be directly traced to the fact that our conception of an infantry leader has undergone a radical change. No longer is the infantry confined to display of overwhelming strength, but in its place we have a well-trained, intelligent fighting unit. In addition to developing physical prowness, the infantryman is taught the value of mental alertness. Therefore, we now visualize him as a well-versed soldier, particularly in the tactical use of weapons . . . above all, a thinking individual who comprehends his place in the combat picture.

With this change in attitude, our infantry officers are now being taught every phase of the military curriculum from prosaic military discipline to the more complex theories underlying military tactics. The modern officer must not only be a seasoned soldier, but is required to assume command of any situation at the slightest opportunity.

We are confident that our officers know their job and are instilling that same feeling in their men. As "Win" so ably puts it, "the Japs' conception of heaven is dying in combat . . . the Americans' heaven is coming home". With this spirit, you can't lick the "doughboy."

Fort Benning Boasts 46 Varieties of Trees

Forty-five miles of trees, with 46 different varieties recognizable, make a formidable array of thousands of trees that must be maintained at Fort Benning, with two tree surgeons and a detail of men continuously on the job.

The surgeons are Staff Sergeant Winfield Purvis, assisted by Sgt. R. R. Steedley, and theirs is a year around job, under the direction of Captain Lester Bridges, post green house officer.

Daily they make the rounds of trees, doctoring the "sick" ones, pruning, spraying in the spring and seeing that they are protected against wintry blasts or that proper work is done during the cold months on the ground around them so that they will be healthy and beautiful in the summer.

Sgt. Purvis estimates that there are 45 miles of trees lining streets and boulevards on the Post, besides many that have been set out or were native to the post in various areas. There are at least 20,000 trees that he must take care of through the year, he estimated.

BOTANICAL PARADISE

Here's a list of the trees that Sgt. Purvis and Sgt. Steedley have identified—and they admit that there may even be more varieties that they have not yet come across:

Tulip poplar; sweet gum and black gum; silver maple; mimosa; sycamore; water, live, white, red, black jack and post oaks; white ash; pig hickory; shag bark hickory; red hall; crab apple; holly; red bud; china berry; honey and black locusts; silver beech; magnolia; Australian, long leaf, short leaf and slash pines; catalpa; cottonwood; ginko; cherry laurel; wild cherry; lilacs; pecan; peach; pear; black and English walnuts; persommon; dogwood; English and American elms; sassafras; hackberry; mulberry and swamp bay.

In the spring the tree surgeons and their crews are kept busy with sprays and prunings. Just now they are busy cultivating the dogwoods that were set out about three years ago along the roads leading to the post and around the swimming pool.

Scarcity of materials is hampering the work of caring for the trees, too, Sgt. Purvis said, with quite a few large limbs on several trees needing cabling, but with scarcity of steel, this work probably will be forced to wait until after the war. Some of the large trees also are suffering from cavities that cannot be properly treated, he also stated.

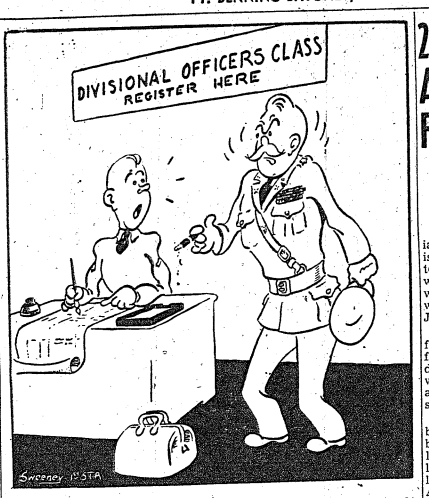
Sgt. Purvis studied tree surgery at the Davy Institute of tree surgery at Kent, Ohio, and worked in New Jersey for several years. He has worked on some of the large estates in the North and also was employed for some time in Memphis, Tenn. He is a former member of the 124th Infantry, where he was assigned when he joined the Army in November, 1940. Sgt. Steedly is a graduate of the Mississippi Agricultural Mechanical Engineering college.

Army Field Cook Must Be A Houdini

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 30—In a combat area an Army field cook has to be a combination chef and Houdini to whip up victuals for the boys, because a lot of his cooking must be done in a complete blackout.

When he lands in the area with his field range and other equipment, it's up to his ingenuity to pick a location where the enemy won't find him and blast his whole layout apart, it is pointed out in instructions at headquarters, Fourth Service Command.

Trained for his job, he picks a site for his kitchen where he can take advantage of natural cover to prevent observation of troop concentrations by the enemy. To his range and cooking utensils, other equipment is added in strict accordance with his initiative and that of his helpers in improvising such expedients as possible from available resources.



He can't cook without fire, but fire and smoke may draw the attention of the enemy, so he has to pass and enforce his own smoke ordinance and fix things up so the fire won't show.

The cook and his helpers must rig up benches adjacent to the range, so they can be used as serving tables. He's got to arrange his uncooked food, known as stores, near the kitchen and remember where each item is located, for if he wants to boil some potatoes, he wouldn't do so well if he fumbled around in the dark some night and got into the pile of onions instead. Or, if he wanted canned tomatoes, he'd have a red face if he made a mistake and dumped a lot of canned peaches into the pot of vegetable soup.

The mess sergeant and his crew come in for a bit of lynx-eyed sleuthing themselves. The sergeant first locates the regimental or battalion ration dump. There are no street lights along the route between this dump and the company field kitchen and a lot of food must be carried along the trail they pick out.

Teams of two men carry the rations from the dump to the kitchen, using shelter halves, blankets or other means of transportation that they may be able to think up. As each team arrives at the kitchen with its load, the cook is informed as to the contents and he must direct its storage in the proper place.

Meanwhile, he's got to keep an eye on that fire and take care of his smoke inspection duties, remember to not let the beef stew burn, keep the water hot for the dehydrated potatoes and keep the coffee from boiling over. The instructions don't tell how he handles all his jobs—in the dark, at that. It's simply regulation that he's got to do it.

"....."ER. YOU A U.O.C., OR SELECTIVE SERVICE?"

O. C. Company Gives Bonds As Yule Gifts

Santa Claus "passed the bonds" this Christmas to friends and relatives of officer candidates in the Eighth Company, Third Student Training Regiment, where officer candidates purchased $206.25 in bonds and $25.00 in stamps to fill the Christmas socks of their loved ones "somewhere in the U. S."

Earlier in the month, Lt. Malcolm Kullmar, tactical officer of the Eighth Company charged with bond sales, proposed a "Bond Christmas" to candidates as a means of beating the holiday shopping rush and helping Uncle Sam at the same time. The drive was aided by posters and charts showing mounting sales of bonds and stamps.

The Eighth Company already had alloted $1,557.75 worth of their December pay for bonds, and had purchased nearly $400.00 additional in bonds and stamps over the company's pay table on pay day. Thus total December sale of bonds will amount to about $2,189.00, a record of which any organization on the post may justly be proud, it is pointed out.

December marks the third month during which one hundred per cent of the Eighth Company's roster has made pay reservations. Captain William G. Scheding is the commanding officer of the company whose motto is "Save for your and America's future."

'Pine-Bur' Forms Press Club

Formation of a press club among the many former newspapermen and radio casters now officer candidates in the Second Student Training Regiment is being sponsored by the regimental newspaper, THE PINE-BUR.

Many companies in the regiment already have press clubs started which meet once a week to drum up contributions for their paper, and the idea of the informal club is to get these groups together for a weekly conference.

117TH PROMOTES

The commanding officer of the 117th Infantry this week announced the promotions of eight enlisted men in his regiment. Pfc. Joe H. Melton was promoted to technician grade four. Raised to technician grade five were Pvts. Carl H. James, Jack D. Shelton, Thomas Testner, and Peter B. Pothier, and Pfcs. Fred C. Leno, Thomas W. Colasanto, and Thomas J. Reece.

OFFICERS REASSIGNED

Seven officers in the Second Student Training Regiment recently received new assignments elsewhere. Lt. Claude M. Merrill of the Personnel Office has gone to Brigade headquarters, while the following officers all have new assignments in the Infantry School: Lt. Jess W. Walls, 18th Co.; Thomas G. Hammong, 9th Co.; Lester D. Troutman, 5th Bn. Hq.; James M. Bradford, 3rd Co.; Lloyd W. Engelland, 1st Co.; and George M. German, 10th Co.

210 Rooms Are Available For Civilians

Quarters Ready For Occupancy January 2

Room for more than 200 civilian employes of Fort Benning still is available in the new dormitories established on the Post, it was announced today as it also was announced that the rooms would be ready for occupancy on Jan. 2.

So far about 100 applications for rooms have been received and filled, but altogether, the new dormitories can accommodate 310, when all rooms are filled to capacity, the Post Engineer's office said today.

The dormitories have been built behind Dispensary A, and are to be completely furnished, even to linens. No mess has been established but one may be set up later if conditions warrant, Col. Albert J. Bain, post engineer, said. Rooms are renting for $15 per month for single occupancy, $12 for two or $8 for three occupants, he said.

Rooms are available for both white and colored personnel and for both men and women employees. Civil Service personnel have the first choice on applications while other civilian employees, such as Red Cross personnel, officers club employees and others will be housed after the civil service employe applications are filled.

Applications for rooms in the new dormitories now are being received at the Billeting Office at Post Headquarters. While rooms still are available at the dormitories, the room situation in downtown Columbus for families of personnel at the Fort is growing more acute, the Billeting Office reported. No single rooms were available all last week and there was a large waiting list. Rooms are being snapped up by the eager applicants as rapidly as they are vacated by previous occupants and hundreds of additional rooms could well be used.

Father, Private, Sees Son Get Gold Bars

A father who was recently drafted into the Army at the age of 42 was transferred to Fort Benning just in time to see his son, 21, graduated from Officer Candidate school here.

The father is Pvt. Howard S. Johnson of the Third Battalion Headquarters Company, Third Armored Regiment, while his son is now 2nd Lt. Lionel H. Johnson, an alumnus of the Second Student Training Regiment's 23rd Company.

The son enlisted in the New York National Guards in 1939, spent two years with that outfit and then went to a Tank Destroyer unit in the state of Washington, from where he came to O. C. school. His father was just drafted on Nov. 16 of this year, and was sent after processing to Benning, where he immediately looked up his son.

A vehicle should always be parked in a place where camouflage may be used to prevent its shape, shadow and tracks from revealing its location to the enemy.

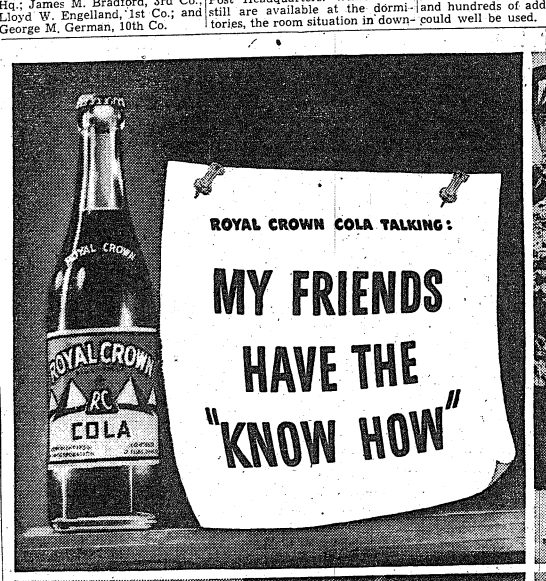
Drivers of motor vehicles should remain in concealment near their trucks, but not in or under them and never gather in groups.

'Yank' Scribe Visits Post

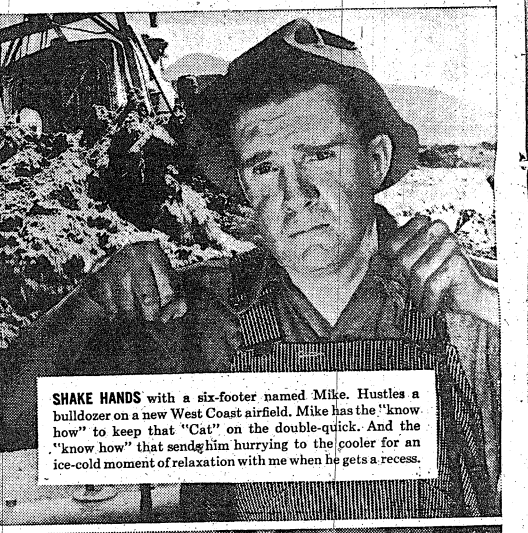
Describes Inner Workings Of Paper

Making a survey of Army camps through the country Pvt. William Crocco, representative of the staff of the Army's own newspaper, "Yank," has been at Fort Benning for several days.

He described the 24-page tabloid and told how it was established, drawing upon expert journalists, writers, editors, artists, photographers from the ranks of Army men who have marched and drilled and sweated with the tools of war.

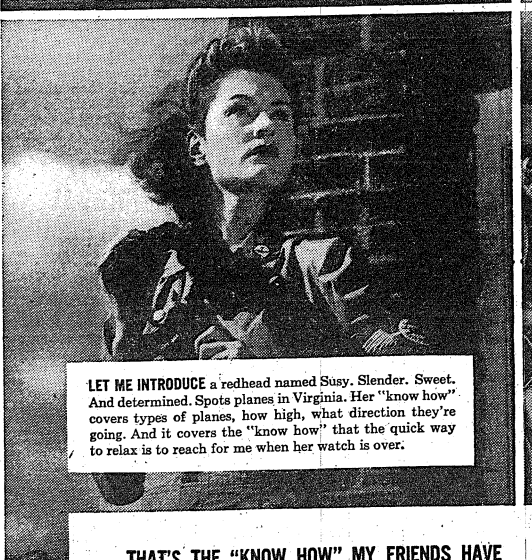


Now 'Yank' correspondents have been sent to the far corners of the world to report the activities of American Armed forces overseas.



Among well known writers are included Marion Hargrove, author of the best seller "See Here, Private Hargrove;" Joe McCarthy, well known Boston Post sports editor, who is managing editor; Sgt. Harry Brown of "New Yorker" fame as assistant managing editor. On the art staff are such men as S-Sgt. Dave Breger, creator of the "Private Breger" cartoons, Sgt. Ralph Stein and Corp. Pete Paris and many others who have contributed to national publications.

Sgt. Walter Bernstein, formerly of the Infantry School Public Relations Office, is now a member of the staff.



Among the regular features are a series of articles on our enemies as well as our allies; articles describing personnel, training and fighting equipment of the various armies; a weekly news summary, illustrated by large maps; sports, radio and movies covered on special pages while every issue contains a page of cartoons by soldier-artists. A number of short wave radio programs also have been established under ttles of G. I. News and G. I. Jive. The paper gives accurate news from the battle fronts also.

505th Paratroopers Practice On Simulated 'German' Village

Down To Earth Labors Are Hard Work For Boys

Persons believing that parachute troops spend their time jumping out of airplanes should follow a platoon of the 505th Parachute Infantry as it goes through a problem in a simulated attack on a German village.

For several weeks now the platoon problem has been going on. Each platoon starts from a given point, and on the way to the objective every kind of obstacle is encountered. "German" tanks are met, artillery barrages are laid down on the advancing men, wire entanglements are set up. Not the least obstacle is plain old Georgia mud.

As the platoons approach the village they come to a road. To cross it means exposing their approach. The only other choice is to crawl through a culvert which usually is half filled with water, but through it the men go.

Nothing is overlooked within the village and the men often find, to their embarrassment, that they are suckers for booby traps. The "German" village, incidentally, is made up of old shanties that once were colored help homes on the Alabama farm which is now a part of the sprawling Fort Benning reservation.

Canadian Jumpers Enjoy Officer K. P.'s Friday

First Unit In U. S. Celebrates New Year With Quaint Custom

When the First Canadian Parachute Battalion spends its first New Year's on U. S. soil, the troops will start the year off by having the officers and sergeants wait on the enlisted personnel for mess on New Year's Day.

It's an old Canadian custom, it seems, and as Capt. Jeff Nicklin, of Winnipeg, who is in command of the Battalion while Lt. Col. George Fred Preston Bradbrooke, is in Canada on official business, described it—"The men wait on the officers at mess 363 days of the year so why shouldn't we do it on Christmas and New Year's."

Officers and sergeants will set the tables, help prepare the food, act as KP's, serve the food, and then eat with the men at the various company messes on New Year's Day, just as they did on Christmas day.

After serving the men, the officers and sergeants will wash the dishes, sweep and mop the floors, clean the ranges and generally do all of the work that the regular kitchen police detail would do normally.

NEW MESS HALL

Sergeants of the Battalion have now formed their own mess it also was announced today by Sgt. Major A. C. Hincks, of the Black Watch, president of the new group.

The Canadian military attache in Washington has been asked to secure an autographed picture of President and Mr. Roosevelt to be put up at a ceremony on New Year's Day under the American colors alongside a picture of the King and Queen of England under the British Union Jack.

"As the first sergeant's mess of any Canadian outfit ever formed on United States soil, we shall keep the pictures and flag always, and it will form part of our tradition," Regimental Sergeant Major W. J. Clark, who organized the mess, said today. "When we get to England, we shall try to have the King and Queen autograph their picture too.

"If we cannot secure the picture of President and Mrs. Roosevelt in time for New Year's Day, we are appealing to people in Columbus or on the post at Fort Benning who may have a picture that we could use. A Columbus store found one but it was five feet high and we couldn't get it out here."

LT. BACON NAMED IN PROMOTION

Lt. Fletcher H. Bacon, post investigation and surveying officer, has been promoted to first lieutenant. Since called to active duty on May 8, he has served in his present capacity.

Lt. Bacon is a graduate of the University of Tennessee, and a former resident of East Chattanooga. He is married and lives in Benning Park.

Always camouflage a motor vehicle so that its sharp outline and the shadow it casts will be broken up and appear natural to the surrounding terrain.

DEML's Duties Are Numerous and Varied

Unit Supplies Details For Post's Needs

Want a detail—want an expert in nearly anything—want an interpreter—need several dozen men for a cadre—want a labor group—want almost anything?

Chances are that DEML will supply it.

For in the Headquarters Detachment, Detached Enlisted Men's Listing, are men ranging in skills from trained laborers in various fields to clerks and to experts in many lines, including linguists, newspaper men, and attorneys. There's even a tree surgeon there.

The Detachment was formed about 18 months ago and now is under command of 1st. Lt. Samuel Lowry. From its ranks all the many and varied needs of Post Headquarters are supplied.

First Sgt. Russell Stowe sat down recently and figured out a score of main activities in which the members of the Detachment are used. From the ranks come the main guard and the prison guard, as well as the stockade guard. Men of the group supply all details for service clubs as well as for theaters. Range guards are members of the Detachment too.

OTHER DETAILS

Other details supplied from personnel of the Detachment include men for the post chaplain's office; athletic office; swimming pool; Billeting office; bowling alleys; golf course, Officers Club; recruiting office; rail transportation office; carpenter shop; nursery; library and the Children's School.

Men who work at various jobs in Post Headquarters also are all attached or assigned to the Detachment.

In addition to supplying the personnel for these varied jobs, the organization is charged with caring for all transients, casuals and air corps unassigned. If a man is left behind for any reason by an organization moving out, he is quartered and fed at the Detachment. If any fatigue details of unusual nature are needed, the Detachment is called on to supply the men.

But that isn't all. A man from the organization meets the trains and cares for new arrivals who are being transferred to the Post. Whenever some enlisted man shows up at the station with no very definite place to go—he is sent to the Detachment until his papers are straightened out. At the same time, men discharged for any reason or who are being transferred to another post, all are routed through the Detachment.

Sometimes an entire unit coming onto the Post will be handled for several days at the Detachment barracks, just to make things interesting for the officers. Sometimes the organization is called on to supply interpreters, too since many of the men either have studied languages or come from backgrounds where different tongues were spoken.

African AEF Eats Turkey

Pointing out how special food treats for American soldiers can be a great morale builder, Col. Stephen B. Massey, director of supply at Fort Benning, tells how turkey, delivered to the front lines in Libya by transport plane, was served on Thanksgiving Day as a rare treat.

Capt. Porter R. Chandler, an Army Air Forces officer, recently wrote to the War Department telling of the incident as follows:

"Our diet here is largely belly beef and hardtack, varied occasionally by hardtack and bully beef, but yesterday we actually had Thanksgiving turkey, delivered by transport plane. And you can tell Washington officialdom, from the Secretary down, that that turkey was the best morale builder the Army Air Forces ever had."

'Who'll Carry the Mail—?' Is O. C. Platoon's War Cry

'Way back in the days of the Pony Express, in a little town in the Panhandle of Texas, lived a man known as Pappy Byers.

Things were normally peaceful in this little town were Pappy lived until one day in came an express rider, shot full of lead and arrows, to tell the townsmen that he had run into a band of Indians on the warpath, led by a group of renegade whites. The band, so the rider had been able to find out, was only a small part of a large force of thousands and they were headed towards the town from all sides.

Well, the rider was taken to the local doc's office and immediately a rider was sought to continue the trip because the mail had to go through and anyone reaching Deadwood Gulch could arouse the army garrison there and they would save the town. However, even the strong men in the crowd quaked at the thought of breaking through the encirclement they were facing so the hue and cry went around the town, "Who'll carry the mail to Deadwood Gulch?" Pretty soon it reached the ears of Pappy Byers and immediately he stepped out into the Main Street shouting, "I'll carry the mail to Deadwood Gulch." Immediately a fresh horse was made ready for him and inside of ten minutes he was on his way.

Some of the crowd followed him out of town as far as they dared and then stopped and watched him continue. Before he got very far he ran into the attacking forces and the spectators felt a touch of awe as they watched brave Pappy riding, Hell-bent-for-leather, through practically a solid wall of bullets and arrows. First they saw his hat knocked off. Then they saw his revolver go spinning out of his hand but immediately he grabbed his other one and, firing as he rode, he cleared a path for himself. With a sigh of relief the people watched him move out of sight and then returned to the town and barricaded themselves against the attack which came a few hours later. The town luckily held out for a whole day and at the end of that time the troops arrived, driving off the Indians.

The troops later told how Pappy came riding up to his destination yelling, "Here's the mail for Deadwood Gulch" and of how the second his horse stopped it dropped dead of over-exertion.

Later on in his years Pappy moved to Arkansas and settled down to bringing up his family, among whom was a boy named Donald. This Donald grew up to be a true Texan, over six feet tall, and when he became old enough he joined the army. Later in 1942 he applied for Officer Candidate School and in October he arrived at Fort Benning and was assigned to the First Platoon, 18th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, where he is now.

It is rumored that one day an instructor on a nearby hill spotted Don standing out against the skyline and started to point him out as a lone pine tree because of his height. We cannot certify as to the veracity of this but certain it is that as he hurdles the 8-foot wall on the obstacle course he can be heard to sing out his Daddy's old cry of the plains which is so contagious that his platoon has adopted it as their battle cry and now, wherever they go, they can be heard yelling "Who'll carry the mail to Deadwood Gulch?"

KIRVEN'S

Wartime PLEDGES for '43

Gone are the days when the New Year personifies hundreds of minute resolutions. This New Year introduces Wartime 1943 . . . and with it pledges . . . not resolutions. We have a war to win this year, and your New Year's pledges should be made with that in mind. This is a fighting New Year . . . for the boys on the front . . . and for you at home . . . make your pledges and keep them . . . for then, and only then, can we reach our goal . . . Victory!

I PLEDGE
To Carry My Packages . . .
While He Carries a Gun

I PLEDGE
My Hose to The Firing Line

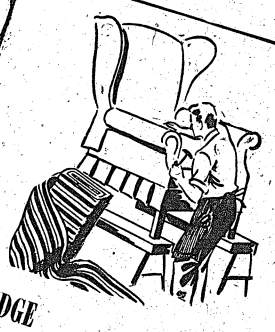
Don't throw your worn silk and nylon stockings away . . . they're as deadly to the Axis as a weapon. Bring them to Kirven's Hosiery Collection Depot . . . then they'll become powder bags to blast the enemy.

A pound of your waste fat is a direct bomb on Berlin. Send your waste fats to war by turning a pound or more over to your butcher . . . he'll pay you for them . . . and you'll be helping to fight the Axis the same as the man with a gun.

I PLEDGE
Kitchen Fats
To Bullets



Carry your packages and release vital rubber and fuel supplies to men carrying guns. Each small package you carry means we will be able to deliver a cumbersome one at a later date. Pledge to help save our precious gas and rubber . . . a package carried is a Jap harried.

I PLEDGE
My "Junk" to the Axis

Your junk can strike a death-blow to the Axis. Turn it into your nearest salvage station . . . it will be converted into guns, tanks and munitions, and what a bang your junk will make, on an enemy sub or plane.

I PLEDGE
To Buy WAR BONDS

I PLEDGE
To Care . . . Repair My Home
so 'Twill Last for the Duration

This wartime year it's wasteful to neglect your home. So mend, repair and reupholster what you can . . . for furniture is hard to replace this wartime 1943. By keeping your home in ship-shape condition our factories, instead of turning out furniture, will produce bullets . . . and bullets are what we need . . . they're the only language the Axis understands.

1943—A Year Of Action; A Year Of High Resolve

Friday will usher in the year 1943. What it portends for the United Nations no man can foretell, but what all of us do and say during the forthcoming year will have an important bearing on whether we will be making ready next year at this time for joyous reunions with our loved ones and the resumption of the tasks we left behind us in civilian life.

It is true that never before has Janus, the two-headed God who looks back on the old year and forward into the new one, been so significant. Everywhere in this global struggle, the armed forces of the United Nations have seized the initiative and are on the offensive. Janus looks back upon the beginnings of this action in the fall of 1942 as American forces went into action in the Solomons and in North Africa, as the Russians began their mighty winter offensive which continues to roll back the Nazi hordes, as the British Army put Rommel, the desert fox, to flight.

No doubt we are in a much better position than we were a year ago. The future is much, much brighter, so much so that President Eduard Benes, the exiled Czech president, predicts victory in 1943, and General Wavell declares that the United Nations can now see clearly the road ahead for the first time since the outbreak of the war.

Yet we must heed the sage words of our Commander in Chief who warns that the road to victory will continue to be a hard uphill fight.

There is little doubt but what the Axis will soon turn upon us the propaganda guns of a tempting peace offensive. We must keep in mind that every word of propaganda issued by the enemies of the democracies has a definite purpose. With their "peace" offensive, they will be seeking to cause us to relax in our preparations, to throw us off balance as it were.

The New Year's resolution of all of us must be to keep driving ahead with every ounce of energy at our command. Let the enemy talk to his heart's content; our response must be action and more action. We must make the firm resolve to waste not a single precious moment in our work, we must resolve to tighten our belts and save—time, food, rubber, gas, oil, metals, and money, the latter in spite of increased taxes. Let us not stop buying more and more bonds. Christmas is passed but the war is not. The year 1943 is here, the year which might bring the death blow to the enemy.

Officer Candidates A Versatile Lot

Much speculation has been going on concerning O. C.'s. Just what kind of guys are they? What makes them think they can take a thirteen week's course and come out fit to lead a platoon in combat?

For one thing, these men have confidence. It's a confidence self born of an ability to take a tough job, any job, and handle it well.

Jim Carrington, for instance, came here from the Pacific Coast by way of the Philippines. Jim's a Missouri City, Texas, boy, who started in the Texas oil-fields as a roughneck, handled those oversized supply trucks, and wound up building rigs. Compared to a roughneck crew even a platoon of the toughest marines would come easy.

Dan W. Ford, on the other hand, blew a saxophone in Clyde McCoy's orch. This character has signed up for the parachuters to gain firsthand experience, we suppose, in practicing his secret love, undertaking. Ford has been studying an I. C. S. course and expects a brisk business. He's a St. Petersburg, Fla., product, and was frustrated at Camp Bowie, Texas, for several months while exiled to the 31st. Div. Arty HQ. Co. and even played Indiantown Gap for two months.

Diversity in vocations is found in the checkered career of Uncle Walter H. Conner, who shook the dust of Social Circle, Ga., from his feet these many y'ars ago. The bright lights and oval track of Louisville finally lured this connoisseur of horses and women after he tired of jobs such as newspaper reporter, football coach, credit manager, railroad lost freight chaser, and hotel and bank clerk. This correspondent is overjoyed to announce that Uncle Walter once was that much maligned personage, the Fuller Brush Man. Conner closed out his civilian occupations as a theatre manager when he graciously accepted the President's invitation to become a Service Man.

The Infantry School itself claims that scholastic achievements are not the first requirement around here.

Now, we don't mean that brains ain't necessary, but we do mean that Keats and Einstein even would have to be on the ball in other ways to survive the treatment.

However, we nominate Francis H. Deter as our fountain of knowledge. "Doctor" Deter officiated as the principal of Batavia High School, in the suburbs of Cincinnati for several years, and has lectured at the University of Cincinnati and Ohio State while not second-guessing the football teams. It is fortunate for him his racket is philosophy. This school requires a philosophical outlook. Deter's claim to fame results from two feats, (1) he is the only live, flourishing poet to keep out of the Atlantic Monthly, and (2) while acting as squad leader the other day he bellowed "Follow me" in such a resounding bass that three platoon slung arms and marched off.

The above mentioned candidate has been offered in direct contrast to the unnamed, unsung hero who found out in his twelfth week it is not required to initial the daily bulletin.

We sometimes wonder what that nationally known tenor in a neighboring class thinks about while getting a rising inflection on "Hong-Kong."

But to return to the subject. O. C.'s are just an ordinary bunch of guys who want to help out, even to taking what is probably the most thankless job in the army, next to the first sergeant's.

One of them, Ippol Ferdinando Bongiolatti, used to be a foreman in a limestone quarry. we don't know where he's from but we are confident he won't be confused with anyone else. We just brought him in to illustrate what can happen when parents let themselves go.

By the way, address any inquiries concerning G. I. Zippers to Candidate Carl Bovard, who once sweated in a Talon Zipper factory supervising the operation of closing the damned things prior to shipping. Bovard's headed for the ski troopers.

This weapons course is a snap to Lewis Clinkscales Brownlee, who came to U. S. direct from the office of chief deputy sheriff of Conroe, Tex. Yes, by all that's holy, it really is Clinkscales. We passed through Conroe once and we respect Clinkscales.

In slipping around in our oily fashion we exhumed some rare examples of initiative, courage, resourcefulness, and fast thinking, all qualities valued by the school. It is unfortunate that most of these incidents are of such a nature as to preclude the use of names. We would like to offer the tale of Candidate "X."

"X" once made a living on the spur of any moment. Prior to an Army-Navy game in Philly some time back he got a brain-wave. Why not buy a flock of rubber footballs and sell them to the patrons of the game? Candidate "X" invested his fortune in a thousand Army footballs and a thousand Navy footballs and started out. He arrived on the scene, gathered some of the kids who always hang around such an affair, and employed them to blow up the two thousand footballs. A cold, drizzling rain only inspired this entrepreneur who was so enthusiastic he felt he had the competitor of the hot-dog. But there is always something.

The cops got our friend before sale No. 1 was made. Some technicalities about a license, child-labor, etc., had arisen, and Candidate "X" was clapped into the jug.

The judge, a Navy man, let him out only after the game, and there he was, stuck with two thousand anachronistic footballs.

Nothing daunted, this live-wire conceived the idea of selling the entire lot to the proprietor of a Gay Nite Spot to drop out of his balloon loft. Unshaven, wet, bedraggled, unnerved by the unusual experience of being held by force, he pulled himself together and put the sale across.

Candidate "X" remained to squander his profits and see his triumph. At the merry height of the festivities the Gay Nit Spot's prop. raised his hand and released the footballs. He saw no gaily drifting vari-colored balloons such as those to which he was accustomed. Those footballs came down like two thousand G. I. pancakes and broke up enough glassware to let Kress & Co. show a nice annual profit.

Our Honored Dead Live On Forever

We are proud of our dead, proud of the spirit that urged our men to leave their homes and beloved to fight and die for the cause of humanity. What matters that a simple disheveled mound marks the spot of their burial? These men have not died in our hearts. They live with us in the immortal spirit of America—of the Washingtons, Lincolns and John Joneses.

Yes, we are proud of our dead, proud of the minutemen who answered in the hour of need, proud of the unconquerable spirit of freedom that lives among us, proud of everything American.

This is our America and we chose it as a haven of free-thinking, free worshipping and free living. We are ready to exact a terrific price for each inch of its ground, ready to follow in the footsteps of those men who fell in the Philippines, in Guadalcanal, in Africa, rather than give up our rights.

We are proud of those great souls who stood up and defended these shores. Theirs have been glorious deaths, however unnoticed or distant, and we vow to carry on in their stead, vow to fulfill the purpose of our efforts. We know there are millions of Joes and Harrys ready to follow us. We revere that humble mound of the American soldier with its broken bayonet crucifix as representative of the undying spirit of our blessed land.

USO Presents—

A RECORD OF UNSELFISH SERVICE AS 1942 IS VIEWED IN RETROSPECT

By Cpl. Solomon S. Kleindorf

A review of the past year of entertainment and other services afforded the men of Fort Benning by the USO of Columbus shows a lot of changes and outstanding events.

Starting with the USO Club at Ninth Street, which is run by the Jewish Welfare Board and the National Catholic Community Service . . . This club alone is a challenge to Hitler and his mobs. He claims that Jews and Catholics are at each others throats and just can't live together. In this club we find not only are they working in perfect harmony but they are doing better now than they did as individual clubs . . . A lot of credit goes to Edward Korn, director of the JWB in Columbus and Eugene Bergmann, acting in the same capacity for the NCCS, for the fine record they have hung up.

The club was opened in May of '42 and to date has established the all time high of an average of 60,000 to 70,000 soldier participants per month. This club has tried to satisfy all of the different tastes of the soldier by having an average of 105 different activities per month, consisting of special concerts by the Community Chorus, Three Arts League and other organizations; Cabaret Nights for men who like to dance with the gals and not worry about someone cutting in on them; USO Town Hall for soldiers and civilians alike, who want to express their opinions and have others shout them down; Salute to the States, giving the men a chance to show how much they know about their own states with a free long-distance telephone call as a prize; and bringing such things as entertainment to the men in the camp.

Another club that opened in the early part of the year is the Salvation Army USO Club in Phenix City, now under the direction of Capt. Richard T. Bergren. Since its opening the club has become the official meeting place for a lot of organizations. Just this past month the club was used for the official Phenix City Christmas festival. The programs over on the other side of the river take on a more or less informal atmosphere. This club has built a name as the marryin' club" with more than 30 in the past year to its record.

Speaking of informal atmosphere brings to mind the one club in town that has built its reputation on the homey surroundings. The club is the Salvation Army USO in Columbus. Seeing a great many changes in its direction, the club has in a way been run by one Mell Talbot and to her goes all the credit. One of the nicer stories to come out of this club is the one about the soldier who walked up to Mell and told her how good it made him feel to see a pretty dress on someone. This has nothing to do with reflections upon anyone else but in many of the clubs a soldier couldn't get up the courage to say a thing like that.

The Army and Navy YMCA-USO seems to like to celebrate all types of events. They had a big time during Navy Day and the 167th anniversary of the Marine Corps. There were dances, broadcasts and plenty of speechmakers, but maybe the latter shouldn't be stressed if soldiers are expected to attend the future programs. This year saw the club rebuilt and a patio for dancing, skating, and broadcasts added. One of the outstanding dances held at the club is the OC dance for Officer Candidates ONLY.

The most impressive list of figures comes from the Traveler's Aid-USO in downtown Columbus. There were a total of 7,248 services rendered by this organization during the year of 1941. Of these, 21,263 were requests for rooms, 18,559 were requests for information about transportation, 7,468 were requests about the resources of Columbus, 12,017 were requests to locate persons, 11,377 were requests for directions about town and to the post, 11,444 were incidental services, and 820 were social cases. Miss Kenan wants to use this column as a medium through which to thank all of the Army wives and civilians who have volunteered their services, without which this impressive record could never have been attained.

THE LAND OF BEGINNING AGAIN

Chap. Frank M. Thompson

Louise Tarkington wishes—

"There was some wonderful place,
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches
And all our poor selfish grief, at the door,
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat,
And never put on again."

Well, there is. It is marvelously real, this land of beginning again. Many have made the discovery. It is within the reach of all. The time to gain possession is now. You can mend those broken promises; correct the misunderstanding; repair the wrongs; throw all your prejudices, bigotries, animosities into the rubbish heap of the closing year and start doing those things you have always wanted to do. It may require some thought, some patience, some endeavor. Perhaps this little poem, 'Try It

POETRY

SHADOWS ON THE HEART

As I walked my post ere sunup
When the night seemed blackest yet,
Every bush and every glassblade
Hid a strange and awful threat.
From the darkness all around me,
From the blackness I heard whispers
Whispered taunts that darkness shouted,
Shouted voiceless through the stillness,
Shouted 'till my eardrums quivered
With the sound they could not hear.
Figures moved there in the blackness
Monsters that I could not see,
Goblins fought and shrieked and mocked me,
At my panic laughed with glee.
Coldness crept into my bosom
To my heart through every vein.
Then my soul began to clamor,
"Cease, you stark and senseless horror,
Cease, you formless mounting horror,
Tread no longer on my manhood!"
Some kind spirit heard my pleading
And I grew a little bolder.
Chin up, then, did I march forward
With my rifle on my shoulder.
Yes, I admit I swaggered
For I thought that I had won.
Aye, I thought that I had conquered
But my trial had just begun.
Lord, again I felt that terror,
Madness seized me—drew me closer.
Darkness, pouring from above me
Spilled upon me 'till it drenched me;
Soundless voices did assure me,
"All is futile, all is vain."
Then behold the dawn came on me
And the blackness turned to grayness
Omen of the coming day.
Now appeared the welcome sun,
Come to light the world with reason,
Come to teach a mighty lesson—
Fear is nought but lack of light.
And to learn that potent lesson,
Yes, it's worth a night of dread.
I resumed my measured pacing,
Peace descending on my soul.
I could fight and face all danger
For the light shone on my goal.

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

BY S-SGT. TOM McDONALD

This week I was most delightfully surprised to receive a letter from a young lady way out in Hutchinson, Was. Following so many G. I. Headaches, a letter from a member of the fair sex will be a pleasure to answer, so here goes—

"Hello, Sgt. McDonald:

"Now you ought to be pleased with yourself reaching such a wide audience because this letter comes all the way from Hutchinson, Kas. My boy friend, Sgt. H. H. of Hq. Det. D. E. M. L., 4th S. C., sends the Bayonet to me, so you see that's how come I decided you're the logical one to hear my plea.

"Well, 'Mr. (CENSORED),' I'm practically despairing of my friend ever getting a furlough. He's been trying and trying and trying since so long I've lost count. Yes, I know 'all things come to him who waits,' but I would like to see my guy before Buck Rogers, 25th Century, A.D., comes into his own.

"Would it do any good to write to his company commander? I want to see him again so much and he wants to see me, too (I hope), and I go to college and can't very well come down there unless it's the only chance left.

"Can't you pull a rabbit out of your hat, or better still, a furlough?

"Hoping this lands in your basket and not the wastebasket, I'll stop and keep my fingers crossed.

"Thank you-all kindly, Suh!

"SYLVIA."

Dear Sylvia:

I am indeed pleased to reach such a "wide audience" and to know that the girls in Hutchinson read the Bayonet. We think that our weekly edition is also a good way for you girls to keep up with your boy friends—that is, in a military manner, of course.

In regard to the furlough—as you well know, the army has dozens of reasons why a man should not get a furlough, and you girls hundreds of reasons why he should, so bearing all this in mind, I still thoroughly sympathize with you for the "lack of leave". I had a girl friend at home once (but she met a sailor) so I fully realize how terrible it is not to get to see her for so long.

Being only a sarge, the "Generals in charge of furloughs" don't always share their secrets with me, but I am a personal acquaintance of Col. T. P. Swampwater, and I shall implore him to use whatever influence he has to get Sgt. H. a furlough. Naturally, I can't promise anything, since the Colonel has a very peculiar disposition, but keep your fingers crossed.

Eve Says—

ARMY BRIDES AND BAYONET DESERVE A NEW YEAR'S TOAST

New Year's Eve is a time for reflection, for hope and faith in the future. On the strength of our achievements of the past year we base our hopes for the months to come. There will be no decorations to commemorate what has been done at Fort Benning the past year. Each man and woman who has been a part of the life here can look back with satisfaction on a job well done. I raise the cup and offer a toast.

To The Infantry School of Fort Benning, whose expansion and record of training officers for our army will go down in history as one of the notable achievements of our war efforts.

To the Parachute Troops whose very beginning saw light at Fort Benning and developed an esprit de corps equalled only by the Armored Forces with their rumbling tanks and half tracks. The magnificent confidence of these new units of our Infantry forces is inspiring. To the last man they are boastfully certain they and they alone will determine the outcome of our conflict.

To the Station Hospital for its expansion and magnificent record of healing and sending physically deficient men back to their units in better health than they have experienced before their entrance into the Army.

To the Red Cross Recreation unit that has provided mental therapy for the thousands of men who had their hospital hours shortened by the recreational, facilities. Of greater value than their hours of diversion is the assurance that they counted as individuals to an organization whose operations are world wide in scope.

To the organizations of supply, service and coordinated units that dovetail into a smooth functioning life, whether it be for training or the important business of living for the many peoples who call Fort Benning their home. No publicity, no special attention to the day in and day out attention to duties of these soldiers of today's war effort demands, but without their efficiency we would find life difficult.

To the thousands of women who have left their homes and established themselves in whatever circumstances they found available. Their heartbreaking loneliness and adjustment to the demands and sacrifices of the service wife. Their growing understanding of their pace in the general scheme and the good soldiers they've become as their awareness increased.

To the service wives who have accepted the demands and changes brought about through war conditions. Lack of servants and household services has put full responsibility of duties on their shoulders. The long hours spent in securing food from our Post Exchange and Commissary cheerfully accepted as part of their duty. Faithful acceptance of duties and training in the Red Cross units, that has meant in most cases a sacrifice of limited hours of relaxation.

To the Red Cross units of Fort Benning, which bows to no other organization in its accomplishment of the past year. The Army women have exceeded the required quotas and have extended their efforts of services to Red Cross needs of our own. The pins and uniforms of the women are meri badges of distinction. They were rightly and honorably earned by sincere application to their chosen duty.

To the Woman's Club that has given the Army women a common meeting place for intellectual approach to their problems. To the one place where they could dress up in their prettiest frock and gain security through their unified interests and problems. A special toast for the new Nursery School sponsored and operated by the Woman's Club to relieve mothers for a few hours daily to meet the demands of the present day conditions.

To the chapels and chaplains who have given us the spiritual strength to face our problems and renewed our faith

To the U. S. O. for the magnificent entertainment it has given us, along with the many services it gave our men.

To the new Bayonet that's become an important news feature to each person at Fort Benning and won national acclaim for its excellence.

To the brides and the babies who've become a part of our post life.

To the cotton stockings, automobiles used so carefully, the cheerful compliance of all rationed foods and commodities.

A toast this New Year's Eve to everyone and everything at this most important unit in our national war effort, Fort Benning.

"I'm one jump ahead of the M. P.," remarked the aviator as he pulled the rip cord on his parachute.

Let me dwell in a shack near an Army post
And sell corn liquor and gin.

REVEILLE

"Why aren't you down for Reveille?" asked the top kick of a recruit who had his head protruding from a second story window watching the formation.

"What's the use, Sargy, when I can see it all from here?"

Bed Sack Willie, the bandsman, states: "These bozos who are always chirping about nothing being impossible should try playing a slide trombone in a telephone booth!"

"Do you mean to say Corporal Pivot got ten years just for peeping through a keyhole?"

"Yup! It was midnight and the keyhole was in the finance office safe."

The Army nurse corps lieutenant announces: "Private Sapp is entirely out of danger now. He died last night."

Recruit (in hospital): "Say, soldier, what does M. D. USA., on these blankets stand for?"

Pill roller: "Many die; you shall also."

"I'm pulling a fast one," gurgled the gunner as he yanked the lanyard on the big gun.

Pvt. Nit: Lieutenant Bunk seems to be running around in circles these days.

Pvt. Wit: Yeah, he's coaching the post track team this year.

HELPFUL ARMY HINTS

To remove rust spots from pistol magazines, place them in nitric acid solution and allow to remain five days. Spots will be gone . . . so will magazines.

To stretch new G. I. shoes, fill them with army beans, add one canteen of water and allow to stand over night. The beans will swell, thereby stretching shoes.

An improvised shaving brush can be made by tying a small bunch of steel wool on a pup tent pin, using dog tag tape.

WHY, OH, WHY

Oh, what a simple sap was I
When I was twenty-one;
I fell for that old Hokum
Of a soldier and his gun.
And what a nitwit I have been
To labor on fatigue,
While others do a darn sight less
When they are in the brig.

EPITAPH

Here lies the body of Pvt. Bloke;
What an awful fix to be in.
He drank some varnish remover
From a bottle labeled gin.

Englishman: "I challenge you to a duel; choose the weapons."

Soldier: "Okey Doke, pal; we'll make it marshmallows at sixty paces."

Since the spread of the bubble dance, the soldiers at Fort Nuts have adopted as their theme song "I'm forever blowing bubbles."

Private Bo Peep fell fast asleep
While walking post number four;
He quickly awakes, for the O. D. he takes
And locks him behind a steel door.

"Private Zook if I had seventy rounds of ammunition and fired twenty rounds, what would be the difference?"

"Sir, that's what I say. What's the difference?"

You can always tell a corporal, but the hell of it is, you can't tell him much.

Post's Dental Clinics Maintaining Strong, Sound Teeth For Fighters

Surgeons Replace 65 Per Cent Of 29,000 Extractions Annually

If, as Napoleon said, an Army travels on its stomach—it must have strong teeth to do it, and at Fort Benning the program of maintaining strong, sound teeth is one of the major health measures of the post.

In fact, the Army measures at Benning include not only maintaining teeth but in replacing nearly 65 per cent of those found necessary to pull, even supplying entire sets to soldiers who otherwise would be totally unable to function.

A new laboratory installed during the past several weeks now enables the Dental Clinic to turn out 600 dentures a month, and to perform work that requires the highest of skilled hands working with fine materials.
