G. I. Summary Of World News

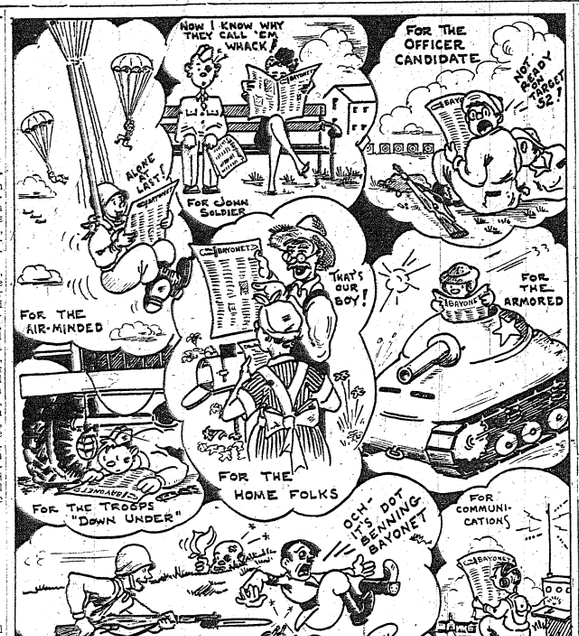
BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

BATTLEFRONTS. American troops joined their comrades-at-arms on world battlefronts in increasing numbers this week, as soldiers of many nations, fought, bled and died in gigantic struggles for supremacy—and existence.

The headlines, each morning, were the same: In Russia, the Germans threw everything their diabolical military machine had up its armored sleeve at the bloody, "back-to-the-wall" Russians, but it wasn't enough. Stalingrad still stood this week, a monument to Russian courage and tenacity, as factories turning out tanks and guns which had to be moved only a few miles to be placed in the hand of Red Army troops, fighting shoulder to shoulder with their civilians brothers, uncles, cousins and fathers, just outside the gates of the beleaguered city. One million men were locked in the death-struggle with the invading Germans fighting time and the Russian winter as well as Red Army men who preferred to die rather than step backward.

In London, W. Averell Harriman, special lend-lease minister to London, said "the Russians are determined to fight to the finish . . . along with their own resources if need be. But they will fight on with even more strength and courage if we give effective aid."

On the Pacific front, General MacArthur's headquarters reported Allied forces have kept the Japanese thrust toward Port Moresby bottled in the towering Owen Stanley Mountains while allied aircraft swept the seas surrounding the island bombing enemy supply ships. Japanese bombers continued to attack U. S. forces in the Solomon Islands, and the enemy has reinforced and supplied Japanese troops in the interior of the island of Guadalcanal where U. S. marines are mopping up.



Japan was having trouble in southeast China where revitalized Chinese troops are driving the Jap invader slowly back, retaking important towns and at least two potentially-powerful future Allied air bases which might be used for attacks on Japan. There was speculation that the Jap was withdrawing to concentrate elsewhere—maybe on the Siberian border in preparation for an attack on embattled Russia. American fliers on the West Coast were interested in reports from the Western Defense Command in San Francisco that a possible Jap sub-based seaplane had flown over southern Oregon and dropped incendiary bombs to start forest fires.

Elsewhere, troops of all nations "sat around" on powder kegs waiting for the sparks to touch off the works. In Egypt, Germany's Rommell and Britian's Eighth Army were squared off like boxers in a huge ring, waiting for an opening to deliver a knock-out blow. The fight looked pretty even, especially because the strengthened Allies have just driven back an attack by Rommell's forces. A light British force made a surprise attack on Germin-held Tobruk in Libya this week, inflicting damage and casualties before withdrawing.

In another Middle Eastern theater, British forces launched renewed attacks on Vichy-dominated Madagascar island, located dangerously near convoy routes to Allied Middle Eastern bases.

U. S. Army headquarters in London reported American flying fortresses and medium bombers successfully bombed the Schiedam shipyards at Rotterdam, railway yards at Utrecht, an airframe factory and the St. Omer Airdrome in Nazi-occupied France. Damage to intercepting

'Break Through' Regiment Is Here

Tennessee Vets Demonstration Unit At Post

117th Infantry Replaces 151st For Instruction

By ST. SGT. STEWART W. SMITH

That new regimental insignia bearing the words, "Break Through" seen on the uniforms of many officers and men at Ft. Benning during the past week, belongs to the 117th Infantry, a new member of The Infantry School family. The veteran Tennessee National Guard regiment arrived at the post Sunday from Ft. Jackson, S. C., to take over the duties of the 151st Infantry as school demonstration troops.

The regiment is part of the 30th Division and was stationed at Ft. Jackson since called to active duty two years ago yesterday. It is commanded by Colonel Grant A. Schlieker, veteran Army officer, a military specialist in research and development, formerly on the staff of the Chief of Infantry in Washington.

Brigadier General Leven C. Allen, Infantry School Commandant, and Colonel Henry P. Perrine, Infantry School executive officer, personally welcomed Colonel Schlieker and his regiment to Ft. Benning this week as the new outfit moved into its barracks on the Main Post, those formerly occupied by the 151st Infantry.

LONG HISTORY

The 117th brings a long and revered history of glory and action, and also a great athletic record which seems destined to give the present sports champions of Ft. Benning a real challenge.

Colonel Schlieker's regiment received two new trophies during the past two weeks for new championships won at Ft. Jackson where they held sway in almost every sport. Their latest victories were in swimming and boxing, while the 117th's diamond squad has retired after clinching the 30th Division baseball crown in impressive manner. Now the regiment is looking around for new fields to conquer and already is inquiring as to the football field hereabouts.

The regimental crest is blue for Infantry. The chevron rompu represents the "Breaking Through" of the Hindenburg line during the World War, and the

Harpo Marx, Hollywood Follies Due at Benning September 21-24

Harpo "Marx" the Spot

"Shame, oh shame," says Harpo Marx, famed silent partner of the Marx Brothers comedy team. "Didn't somebody teach this bird the school solution for the disposal of cigar butts?" Harpo will be at Fort Benning September 21 through 24 to entertain the soldiers. He is travelling for the USO-Camp Shows.

Star Comedian Drops Mum Role In Post Appearance

All right, boys, get out your housewives, sew on your buttons firmly and reinforce your seams. For button popping, seam-splitting laughter is on the way to Fort Benning. Harpo (Arthur) Marx, the mum member of the famed comedy team, the Marx Brothers, will be at Fort Benning for four days, September 21-24 with the Hollywood Follies, USO camp now.

Harpo is a master of pantomime, a wizard of the harp, and as a student of his brother Chico has learned to make the piano say the things that never pass his lips on the screen. And speaking of his dummy roles in pictures, when he comes to Benning he will step out of his traditional silent role and put Long John Silver's parrot in the shade for verbosity. He and the members of the cast will be greeted personally by Benning troops.

ABOUT HOLLYWOOD FOLLIES

"Hollywood Follies" is the new United Service Organizations-Camp Shows, Inc. Little can be said about Harpo that has not been said before, but something can be said about "Hollywood Follies". It is a show that originated in Hollywood and contains stars from all walks of the stage, screen and night-club circuit.

The first fall unit of the USO-Camp Shows to hit "America's Most Colorful Post" will feature Frank Gaby, Paul Gerrits, the Carr Brothers, Rae and Rudells, Rolly and Verna Pickert, the 16 Fanchonette Dancing Girls and, of course, one of the world's finest pantomimists, Harpo Marx.

"Hollywood Follies" breezes along on a beam of mirth and music. It's screamlined, up-to-the-minute revue boasting a cast that is tops.

Frank Gaby is a comedy ventriloquist that has played in many Broadway shows and in Universal pictures. Paul Gerrits does the "emceeing" and is well known to the theatre-goers of New York. He has been featured in Earl Carroll's "Murder at the Vanities" and has played the Radio City Music Hall every year for five years.

FAMOUS COMICS

The Carr Brothers are internationally famous comics that were booked direct from Radio City Music Hall. Rae and Rudells are three people who do a sensationally clever and funny trampoline act.

Rolly and Verna Pickert are a team that has played Broadway in "Babes in Arms" and "On Your Toes" in St. Louis. Famed for their difficult and intricate stilt dance, the Pickerts are well known at such top nightclubs as New York's Versailles.

To finish off the cast in a fine fashion, there are the 16 Fanchonette Dancing Girls, beauties from all parts of the country, who will delight the audience with their unusual and effective dance routines.

"Hollywood Follies" will play in the Alabama area of Fort Ben-

Cosmopolitan Benning Is Crossroads Of Army

America and Her Allies Prepare to Defeat Axis

As Times Square is the crossroads of the world, so is Fort Benning the crossroads of all Army folk.

It is a recognized fact among the Army and their wives that "if you stay at Fort Benning long enough you'll see everybody you know in the service." Certainly Webster's definition of cosmopolitan as "belonging to all the world, not restricted to any locality," fits Fort Benning as a glove fits a hand.

Carried across the pine-covered plains of the reservation by the hot Georgia breezes are the drawl of the Southerner, the nasal twang of the New England Yankee, the unmistakable "Brooklynese", the flat tones of the mid-Westerner and as often as not a Scotch burr on a Scandinavian accent.

For men of Fort Benning are not just from one section of the South or the North or the East. They come from the 48 states, from Alaska, from the South American nations, from Mexico, from Hawaii.

POST A MAGNET

And as often as one trainload of officers and men arrives, another leaves taking soldiers back to those 48 states, to Alaska—and to Hawaii. One great magnet attracting so many different men to Fort Benning during the course of a year is the huge Infantry School, training ground for America's infantry officers and infantry warfare.

Here every rank of American infantryman from general to private spends gruelling weeks taking courses taught by competent instructors with acres and acres of rolling terrain as classrooms. Hundreds of officers and enlisted men arrive every week for the courses and as many are graduated during a week.

For this reason much of the population of Fort Benning is ever-fluctuating so that the stay of thousands of men ordered to the post is short.

However, a soldier from the shores of Puget Sound in the distant state of Washington or from the foothills of the Adirondacks in upstate New York hasn't far to look for a "buddy" from Washington or New York.

Sign State Register

Listed at Service Club No. 1 on the post proper are hundreds of Fort Benning men and the states from which they are. Started as an idea by Miss Ivy Randall, senior hostess, the plan of hanging registers on the walls of the Service Club for men of all states to sign was an immediate success. Every state is now represented with the most men coming from New York State, Pennsylvania and other northern states. Several men have already located former friends at Fort Benning through discovering their names

26 Canadians Awarded Wings

Twenty enlisted men and six officers of the Canadian army proudly wore the wings of parachute troops Friday afternoon after completing the rigorous four weeks course of the parachute school at Fort Benning, Georgia.

The course came to its climax when they bailed out of a large transport plane one upon the heels of another for their fifth and qualifying jump.

Once each day this week they have made that jump, but Friday's jump was the one that really counted, the one which gave them those silver wings which each parachutist knows are gained only after going through the most intensive kind of training.

Friday night the Canadians left for Ottawa where they will go first and then to Camp Shilo in Manitoba where they will form the nucleus for the Canadian First Parachute Battalion.

Officers and enlisted men trained and jumped shoulder to shoulder along with a class of United States officers and men during the four weeks.

"Each of the Canadians did exceptionally well," was the comment made by several of the instructors at the parachute school.

Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, commandant of the parachute school, presented the wings to each of the graduating Canadians.

Your Editor Goes to His Wailing Wall

Today, our editor's face sagged another two inches as he read the list of transfers. He was mourning Captain Paul Troth, cartoonist, who produced those snappy sketches appearing on page one of the Bayonet

Captain Troth, a member of the publications section of the Infantry School since January, has been transferred to the headquarters of the Airborne Command at Fort Bragg, where he will head that post's new publication section.

Before entering duty last October, when he was ordered to attend the Infantry School, Captain Troth directed publicity for the Home Life Insurance Company of New York He is a journalism graduate of Michigan State.

Cartooning is just a hobby . . . but he does right well. Best of luck, we're going to miss you, Captain (Sob . . .).

Laff Of The Week—

A New England sergeant toiled and sweated digging himself a foxhole during field exercises. Then he set about camouflaging it with pine bough, dead leaves and bare branches. Stepping back, he viewed his work, pronounced it good, but decided one more branch would make it better. Strolling off 15 or 20 yards, he found a branch and started back. There was no need for the extra material. He couldn't fine the foxhole himself—until an organized search by his squad located it for him!

75 Are Recent Infantry School Grads

The 117th Infantry should be well qualified to serve this great military institution. Its regimental commander, his staff, and his battalion commanders, are veterans of World War I experience, and former students of The Infantry School, while 96 of its 2nd lieutenants are recent graduates of The Infantry School's basic or officer candidate school courses.

More than 75 of its second lieutenants were graduated from officer candidate school here within the past 15 days, and should prove fully capable of answering the school's demands in demonstrations of proper infantry tactics and administration.

Chief Warrant Officer Stanford Made Major

Famed Sprinter Is One Of Post's Best-Known Men

Chief Warrant Officer John Stanford, production manager for 10 years in the Infantry school's reproduction plant, was commissioned a major today, one of the first men on active duty in the U. S. Infantry to receive his initial commission in field officer grade.

One of the army's greatest sprinters back in the '20's when he was an Olympic performer, Major Stanford apparently has lost none of his speed when it comes to advancements. Less than two months ago, he was appointed chief warrant officer. And less than two years ago he was a master sergeant.

A veteran service man, 25 years with the Army, Major Stanford is well trained in administration matters of the plant and is thoroughly acquainted with the technical operation of the plant's printing facilities, its lithographing, photography, binding and drafting.

The new field officer and his dog, "Spot," inseparable pals, are known to almost everyone on the post.

His army career began back in 1917 when he enlisted in the 2nd Cavalry. He later joined the 303rd Tank battalion in which he rose to the rank of first sergeant, and later was at Ft. Meade, Md., with the service school detachment.

Major Stanford performed in many national events in this country, defeating the famous Jack Elder of Notre Dame in one event, and was the only Army man entered in the Olympics.

He became a master sergeant in 1925, and held that rank when he came to the Infantry School Detachment in 1926.

Receives Oak Leaves

When Major Stanford received his oak leaves from Col. McDonough, reproduction plant chief, his dog, "Spot" was promoted to Major "Spot". He has been his master's devoted shadow all of his short life of six years. At Benning the pair is often seen together.

Gayley, Wynne Name 'Bayonet'

First Lt. Henry T. Gayley, Jr., of the publications section, the Infantry School, and Corp. James A. Wynne, Company H, first student training regiment, are the winners of the prize offered by the Columbus Ledger to the soldier sending in the name selected for the new post newspaper. Lt. Gayley submitted "The Fort Benning Bayonet" and Cpl. Wynne "The Bayonet." The two men will divide the $25.00 award.

In addition to being the namer of the paper, Lt. Gayley designed the mast-head. The bayonet is the symbol of the infantryman, whether he trudges the roads, rides the jeep or six by six, or is air borne. The paratrooper forming the left ear of the mast-head represents the parachute trooper and Lawson Field, while the tank on the right ear is sybolical of the armored divisions which are trained at Fort Benning.

Bulletin

All civilians entering the Fort Benning reservation were called upon to present passes effective Thursday, Col. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, announces. The original dead-line set was October 1. Col. Fulton's announcement followed on the heels of an order issued by the Eastern Defense Command through the Fourth Service Command in Atlanta. Read details on page 2.

FORT BENNING LEADERS FELICITATE BAYONET

See Long-Felt Need Filled By New Paper

When definite announcements came that Fort Benning was to have a full-fledged post weekly paper, congratulatory messages began pouring into the publication's offices. Limitations of space permit publication of only a few statements.

This great army camp, with its widely varied types of organizations, its parachutists, its air force, its armored units, and The Infantry School, with many special troops, had had real need of such a periodical to aid these units coordinate their activities.

It is my hope and belief that The Benning Bayonet will have a long and useful life. Thursday is publication day, and I'm sure it will be looked forward to by all of us. I know it will by me.

BRIG. GEN. LEVIN C. ALLEN,
Commandant, Infantry School.

FROM PARACHUTE SCHOOL

We of the Paratroops welcome the Fort Benning Bayonet. A post newspaper should serve us all and should serve to bring all of us on this mighty post closer together.

BRIG. GEN. GEORGE P. HOWELL,
Commandant, Parachute School.

FROM POST HEADQUARTERS

I have long felt that there has been a need at this huge post for a newspaper which would serve to knit all of our many units together and through which the various units might learn of the others.

So it is with much anticipation that I await the first issue and the others which will follow. I hope that the men and families of Fort Benning will enjoy their new paper.

COL. WALTER SCOTT FULTON,

Civilians Told To Show Passes Thursday

Thousands Affected By Unexpected Move

MPs' Issue Temporary Passes On Post's Roads

Thousands of civilian employes on the Fort Benning reservation together with members of the families of military personnel stationed at the post found themselves in a predicament Thursday as announcement come from Col. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of the vast reservation, that effective yesterday, all civilians must present identification buttons with their pictures or a temporary pass. Col. Fulton also announced that no aliens would be permitted to enter the reservation. Visitors must have passes.

The announcement was issued on the authority of a directive issued Wednesday by the Eastern Defense Command through the Fourth Service Command in Atlanta.

To cope with the unprecedented situation, Captain Ralph Tolve, provost marshal, declared that he was ordering members of the Military Police Corps to station themselves on highways on the reservation to issue temporary passes to those presenting adequate credentials. The MP's were also ordered to contact members of all civilian construction crews on the post to issue these men temporary permits to enter the post.

Captain Tolve said that thousands who thought the order would go into effect on October 1 are affected by ten order. The photographing and finger-printing of civilians have been carried on by the Identification Bureau of the Provost Marshal's office. All civilians over the age of 12 must have the tags and pictures on their persons, and those under 12 must be accompanied by an adult with proper identification. This procedure is being carried out in line with Eastern Defense Command's orders designating Benning as a prohibited zone.

Sgt. Foxworth Is Commissioned In M. P. Corps

A veteran of more than 20 years' military service, Master Sergeant Lewis H. Foxworth, 54th Infantry Regiment has been rewarded with a commission as First Lieutenant in the Military Police Corps.

Lt. Foxworth, at the time of the commission, was serving as regimental sergeant major. He had been with the 10th Armored Division two months. Prior to his assignment here, he was with the Second Armored Division.

Following receipt of the commission, Lt. Foxworth was granted a leave pending his arrival at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for a tour of school duty.

His wife, Mrs. Mary Foxworth, a daughter, Mrs. Mary E. Belcher, a grandchild and the lieutenant are making their home at No. 37 Baker Village, Columbus, Ga.

TENNESSEE VOLS

The 117th was originally organized of volunteers as could be expected from the famous Volunteer State of Tennessee. They became the 3rd Tennessee Volunteers in 1847 and were mustered into service at that time to campaign in the Mexican War.

The Volunteers continued in existence as the Third Tennessee Infantry during the Spanish American War, seeing service under the command of Colonel J. P. Fyffe. It remained as the Tennessee Militia and went to the Mexican border in 1916, returning to go into Federal Service in World War I under the designation of Third Tennessee Infantry.

But on Sept. 12, 1917, it became the 117th Infantry, 30th Division, and went overseas serving until March 27, 1919. It is credited with a large share of glory in breaking the Hindenburg line and performed with valor and distinction in Ypres-Lys, the Somme Offensive and the Canal Sector.

The 117th returned to this country on the Pocahontas after the war and was disbanded at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, on April 17, 1918. Its members joined with the Fourth Tennessee Infantry, National Guard and remained the 117th Infantry, Tennessee National Guard.

MERITS STREAMERS

Under War Department orders the 117th Infantry is entitled to a streamer in the colors of the Victory ribbon embroidered for Flanders, Ypres-Lys and Somme Offensive.

The regiment saw important continental service in 1937 in connection with relief work during the Ohio-Mississippi river flood.

The regimental staff consists of: Executive officer, Lt. Col. Harry M. Arthur of Union, S. C.; plans and training, Major Robert E. Franklin of Jackson, Tenn.; supply, Captain Edgar H. Reece of Lincolnton, N. C.; adjutant, Captain Warren C. Giles of Athens, Tenn.; personnel adjutant, Albert D. McCollum of Jackson, Tenn.; intelligence officer, Captain Eugene H. Thomas of Nashville, Tenn.

117th Commander Has Fine Record

Colonel Grant S. Schlieker, commander of the 117th Infantry Regiment which arrived at Ft. Benning Sunday, brings to The Infantry School a varied and intensive military experience, gathered through 25 years of service.

A native of East Chicago, Ind., Colonel Schlieker entered the Army in 1917 as a provisional officer, from the 1st Officer Training Camp at Ft. Benjamin Harrison.

He was first assigned to the 28th Infantry and served with them during World War I. Since then he has attended a great number of Army schools, and has established himself as a specialist in tanks and in research and development. He is a graduate of the Quarter Master Motor Transport School at Camp Holabird, Md. He served with the 65th Infantry in Puerto Rico, and in 1925 went to school again, this time to the Tank School at Ft. Meade, Md., staying there as an instructor until 1928. From there he went to the French Tank School as a student in the advanced course.

He is not a stranger to Ft. Benning, for in 1932 he took command of H. Company, 29th Infantry, serving there until May, 1935, when he was sent to the University of California at Berkeley, Calif., for ROTC duty.

In Sept., 1936, Colonel Schlieker resumed his military studies at the Command and General Staff School in Leavenworth, Kan. In 1937 he became the executive officer of the 3rd Infantry Brigade, 2nd Division, serving until 1938, when he entered the Army War College.

From June, 1939 until June, 1940, he served as Infantry liaison officer at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., the Chief of Infantry's representative with the Ordinance Dept.

Until June, 1940, when the Chief of Infantry office was disbanded under the army reorganization plan, Colonel Schlieker was chief of its equipment and development branch. He later became Supply Chief for the Replacement and School Command in Birmingham, Ala., holding that post until Aug. 12, when he was assigned commander of the 117th Infantry.

Lt. Col. Arthur Executive of 117th

The 117th Infantry's executive officer, Lt. Col. Harry M. Arthur, is well known throughout the state of South Carolina.

A veteran of World War I, Colonel Arthur resides in Union, S. C., and has been State Commander of the South Carolina American Legion, was president of the South Carolina National Guard Association, is president of the Arthur State Bank, Union, S. C., president of the Arthur Retail Chain Department Stores of South Carolina and of the Excel Hosiery Mills of South Carolina.

He was with the 118th Infantry, South Carolina National Guard Regiment, for over 21 years. He was its battalion commander until recently when the 30th Division Commander, moved all lieutenant colonels out of their original regiment to another Division regiments.

Colonel Arthur is a graduate of The Citadel, Charleston, S. C., class of 1921. He has been on active service since the 117th Inf. was called to active duty two years ago yesterday.

"Breather There the Fore"

An amusing sidelight of Fort Benning's "national melting pot" aspect is the commotion caused in the theaters when in the course of a picture some section—any section—of the country is mentioned. Any reference to Brooklyn or the "Brooklyn Dodgers" brings a tumult of applause and cheers from the Flatbush Faithful. If Monroe, Michigan; Jenkintown, Pa., or Salt Lake City, Utah, are mentioned there is invariably applause—sometime hundreds cheering, very often one or two men applauding, depending on the size of the home-time contingent at Fort Benning.

Already at Fort Benning are veterans of campaigns in Hawaii and Alaska. Several officer candidates at Fort Benning at the present time fought through the treacherous Jap attack at Pearl Harbor and soon expect to be on their way back to return their respects to the enemy—not as enlisted men but as second lieutenants.

Despite the many drawls and accents found among the Army men at Fort Benning, there is little difficulty in soldiers understanding each other, although a slow Southern drawl or a staccato Yankee sentence will bring good-natured "joshing" or imitations by soldiers of other states.

Men of all states are united though in one purpose at Fort Benning. To train so completely, so efficiently and so speedily that the heavy tread of the Jap, the German and the Italian will never round the streets of Fort Benning. Toward this goal the Southerner, the Yankee, the Californian and the mid-Westerner march side by side with differences forgotten.

enemy planes included 17 fighters destroyed, 25 more probably destroyed and 25 damaged. RAF bombers assaulted Bremen and other targets in northwestern Germany early this week at the same time that Russian bombers dropped deadly packages of dynamite over eastern Germany, Rumania and Bulgaria.

News of Our Nation: Taxes, inflation, war production, transportation and the armed forces were topics of every American at the start of the third week in September.

A huge new revenue bill to increase treasury collections nearly $26,000,000 annually from individual taxpayers and corporations has just been approved by the Senate finance committee. The important phase of the tax measure is a five per cent "victory tax" on individual earnings over $624 annually.

President Roosevelt is after Congressional action immediately on his suggestion for a new inflation law. His seven-point program is:

Heavier taxes, ceilings on prices, wage stabilization, stabilization of farm prices, war-bonds sales, rationing of scarce commodities, discouraging buying on credit and encouraging payment of old debts. The President hoped for action by Oct. 1.

Motorists in the non-rationed areas of the country have been asked by Price Administrator Leon Henderson to observe the same rules as the rationed areas as a means of conservation until a national rationing plan can be put into effect. It will be several weeks before coupons-ration books can be printed to carry out the nation-wide gas rationing recommended by the Baruch Rubber Committee. Unless the nation's 27,000,000 motorists cut their driving "to the bone," said Henderson, "we're likely to coast right into Hitler's lap."

War Production Chairman Nelson asked war workers to stop taking an extra day off and to refrain from "quickie" strikes over minor grievances because such absences slow production. He added that the nation's production record was "not nearly good enough."

The Army was getting ready for something big. Under Secretary of War Patterson, speaking in Muskegon, Mich., said that more than 600,000 men in the armed forces are overseas and added that this force "will be doubled and doubled and doubled to the limit of our manpower."

The War Department said Two of these armored divisions, making fourteen in all. Two of these armored dvilsions will compose the new Third Armored Corps under Maj. Gen. Willis D. Crittenberger, a former Fort Benning officer, now at Camp Polk, La.

One of two new infantry divisions to be organized in October will be the second all-Negro division in World War II. President Roosevelt said he did not think it would be necessary to call up 18 and 19-year-olds before the first of next year because Army training facilities at present are only equal to the number of men being taken in, but he is discussing with the army whether enabling legislation will be needed soon.

STATE NEWS. Fort Benning soldiers watched with interest the Georgia Democratic primary fight between Governor Eugene Talmadge and his challenger, Ellis Arnall, of Newnan. Early returns found Arnall well ahead and after all of the counties in the state had finally reported, Talmadge conceded defeat nearly a week after the election and Arnall became governor-elect of Georgia.

NEWS NOTES. Yankees the nation over chuckled at Corp. Ora Foster of Pontiac, Mich., who somewhere in England, blithely thumbed a ride in a big limousine, exchanged pleasantries with two ladies in the rear seat; learned before the ride was through that one of the two was Queen Mary.

Reports from European battlefronts are that Nazis are supplied with a pep-pill by the Army to give "extra emphasis" during battles. British also reportedly use such pills, but American forces are not known to have had them issued yet.

Factory executives have new problems now that hundreds of thousands of women are at work in the nation's industries. The "sweater girls" very often have to be tactfully warned that "distractions" moving down a factory aisle sometimes cause accidents. In addition the girls "flirt", wear too-short sweaters and—of all things—use the air-raid shelter for lovemaking during lunch hours.

Texan Trains Air Commandos At Benning

McCauley Expert Flyer; Once Piloted MacArthur

A tall, square-shouldered Texan who has spent half his life in the service is molding into fighting trim one of the newest units of the Air Commandos.

He is Lieut. Col. Jerome B. McCauley, 38-year-old commanding officer of the 316th Troop Carrier Group, Army Air Forces, at Lawson Field.

With more than 5,000 hours of flying experience as an enlisted pilot, Colonel McCauley rose to his present position "the hard way." Enlisting at 19 in the Tank Corps, he was stationed for three years at Fort Meade, Md. Then transferred to the Air Corps with a commission of second lieutenant, Air Reserve (inactive), he was then assigned to Hawaii for the next three years.

SERVES IN HAWAII

Returning to this country for further training, he was graduated from the flying school at Kelly Field, Texas, in 1932 and remained there for another two years. In 1934 he began his second tour of duty in Hawaii.

While in the island territory in 1935, Colonel McCauley made a cross-wind landing on poor terrain and experienced the only accident of his flying career. The landing gear was washed out but by skillful handling of the plane, the pilot saved all the occupants from injury.

Colonel McCauley feels a strong attachment to Hawaii, where he was stationed longer than anywhere else. He speaks in glowing terms of the fine climate and the beautiful flowers, and he describes Hawaii as "an excellent place to live."

But, speaking as a pilot, he thinks the Island of Oahu is "too small for comfort in flying fast airplanes."

"A pilot may find he's too far out to sea too soon!" the colonel complains.

First on the list of distinguished passengers he has flown is General Douglas MacArthur, whom he greatly admires.

PROGRESS

Though he views flying as his chief "hobby" as well as his chief business, Colonel McCauley gives some attention to golf and to reading during the little leisure time at his disposal. But he seldom lets his thoughts wander far from aviation, for which his enthusiasm is boundless.

"The progress of aviation," he says, "is simply incredible. It is growing so fast that it cannot be described any longer in terms that convey any meaning except to the people who live with it 24 hours a day."

In December, 1940, the flying officer was called to active duty as a captain in the Air Corps Reserve. He became commanding officer of the 316th Transport(now Troop Carrier) Field, Ohio. Shortly thereafter he was promoted to major and in July he was advanced to his present rank.

A native of Hillsboro, Texas, Colonel McCauley was graduated from high school at Floydada, Texas, and later attended Baylor University in Waco.

His father, the Rev. Mr. J. H. McCauley, a retired Baptist minister, resides in Denton, Texas. His wife, Mrs. Cathryn Georges McCauley, and his nine-year-old daughter, Orene, are now living in San Antonio.

From time to time the Bayonet will carry items about Lawson Field and its men. It shall be our earnest endeavor to present to you stimulating, interest-holding news items, cartoons, editorials and photographs pertaining to our Field. In this manner, we hope to acquaint the officers and men of Fort Benning with the officers and men here, who are "right on the beam" when it comes to "keeping 'em flying".

We believe that the Bayonet will unquestionably be among the top ranking papers in the service before long, and so to the staff and all persons connected with the Bayonet we say "Happy Landing".

UP IN THE AIR

When Sergeant Wayne Hipser, at a New England Army camp, learned that he had passed his entrance examinations for the Army Air Force, it must have gone to his head. For that night his bunkmates found the enthusiastic Sergeant preparing to sleep on a mattress draped over the rafters of the ceiling. He insisted that he was just getting in shape, explaining that he wanted to get used to the altitude.

Former Disney Ace at Benning

LT. FRANK IRVINE

Rises From Ranks Now Illustrator For Uncle Sam

Maps, charts and diagrams of Fort Benning are now piled high on a desk where once Walt Disney characters and models of sleek, shiny new cars held complete sway.

The desk is that of Lt. Frank Irvine in charge of the drafting and charts section of the Infantry School's reproduction plant on the main post at Fort Benning. The charts and diagrams are the present work of Lieutenant Irvine. The Disney characters and the car models are memories of an interesting civilian career interrupted by the war.

Before entering the army in January, 1941, Lt. Irvine, a native of Detroit, Mich., was well along on a distinguished career as an illustrator. His current work was sketching dogs and he was so proficient at the art that he drew the canine pets of Wallace Beery, Judy Garland, Bette Davis, Robert Montgomery and other screen stars.

"SNOW WHITE" ARTIST

All this happened while Irvine was in Hollywood in 1939 working on the famous Walt Disney fantasy "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," in which he drew many of the fawns, birds and woodland animals.

At the time of his induction into service, Lt. Irvine was art director of the Lions Leader Dog Foundation in Rochester, Mich., and was also working as a designer for General Motors in Detroit. His professional background includes art study at the Art Students League in New York and intensive work in Europe in 1935 and 1936, also a course at the Walt Disney School of Animation in Hollywood.

OFFICER SCHOOL GRAD

Irvine has soldiered during his duty with the army. He participated in four maneuvers and was on duty for a month in a Kentucky coal mine during a strike before he was selected for officer candidate school and sent to Fort Benning. He was graduated from the Infantry School in June and assigned to the reproduction plant because of his designing experience.

Despite his busy civilian life, Irvine found time to take an active interest in flying and at the present time is endeavoring to transfer to the glider command of the army.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Irvine reside in Columbus. Mrs. Irvine is the former Miss Mary Dennert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dennert of Detroit.

Bayonet Dummy Gains Vengeance; Nips Officer's Leg

The much-ridiculed "school solution" of the Infantry School had the last laugh recently when a student officer failed to apply the approved grip on his rifle, and as a consequence a lowly bayonet dummy struck back with the officer's own rifle and nipped him in his right leg.

The officer, a student in the Rifle and Heavy Weapons course, was running the "blitz" course out on the Furham Road area the other day when suddenly he spied the dummy lying in ambush. The officer applied a vicious butt stroke. The dummy, bloody but unbowed, started crawling rapidly away on its guide wire. Surprised, the officer relaxed his hold on his rifle. Then the dummy, bearing the face of Hirohito, took its revenge. It flipped the rifle over so that the point of the bayonet grazed the officer's leg.

Gazing down at the gash, the student exclaimed: "That's the last time a bayonet will ever make a dummy out of me. Next time I'll apply the Infantry School approved solution and keep a tight grip on my rifle."

A lieutenant is an officer. An officer issues out passes. Passes permit soldiers to go to town. When oldiers go to town, they head for the nearest saloons. Saloons have bars in them. Most bars are long. Anything long has length. A length is a mile. A mile is a helluva' distance to travel. Anything that's a helluva' distance to travel is far away. And that's where the lieutenant is when you want Him to sign your pass.

Enlisted Man's Heaven Comes Down To Earth; Ain't Democracy Grand?

At last the worm has turned. Convincing proof that every dog has his day came Tuesday night when a sergeant gave the command "tenshun and at least three generals, tens of colonels and lieutenant colonels, and heaven konws how many captains and lieutenants obeyed.

But it only happens in the movies or on the radio, and this time it occurred at the beginning of "Cheers from the Camps" program sponsored by General Motors and broadcast from Fort Benning. The sarge hasn't come down to earth yet. When last seen he was still preening his feathers and was heard muttering, "I just can't believe it. Ge, Mom must be proud!"

Metal Salvage Drive Ordered Intensified

Non-Historical War Relics Are To Be Scrapped

The current conservation and salvage program at Fort Benning will be intensified immediately, according to post headquarters.

War Department officials have notified Fort Benning authorities that "it is desired that immediate and positive action be taken by all concerned to intensify the salvage and conservation program in accordance with the following instructions:"

Washington officials added that all units should cooperate with post salvage officers and that the importance of this program be impressed on the men.

"Initiation of a general 'house cleaning' of all posts, camps, and stations, including motor pools and maintenance shops . . . Clean-up of abandoned posts, camps, and stations and their environs, especially former CCC camps taken over by the War Department," was advised.

Active cooperation with civilian salvage programs was also recommended. Administrative work by Army salvage officers will be speeded up in order to expedite the reclamation of discarded, but valuable, metal and rubber.

All war relics must be cleared from Fort Benning unless such relics have a definite historic value.

'What's He Done?' Soldier Asks About Hitler

CAMP SHELBY, Miss.—A tall, gangling young man from deep in the hills of north Mississippi was ambling about the reception center, picking up bits of history here and there.

He said he came to the camp only because he "got a letter from the President to come on down here." But why, he didn't know.

A soldier broke it to him gently. "This is war, buddy."

"Aw, you're kiddin'," said the mountaineer. "The war was over when I was just four years old. I know 'cause my pappy went."

"Haven't you heard about Hitler?"

"Naw. What's he done?"

Camp officials investigated his story and found it to be true. A neighbor had put down his name at the draft board and his registration card had never reached him. His questionnaire was filled out by a local board member who visited his home, but never imparted the reason.

Post Danger Areas Named By Officers

A considerable area in the northeastern section of the Fort Benning reservation has been designated as a permanent closed danger area, post range officers have announced. All persons are prohibited from entering the restricted area without the approval of the post range office.

Another important announcement is the fact that the practice of posting guards to warn and stop traffic in the designated areas when firing is going on will be discontinued. Military personnel is urged to watch for road blocks and warning signs which will replace the guards.

The area, which will be closed at all times in the future except when opened by post headquarters, is bounded roughly in the north by the Buena Vista road; on the east by eastern boundary of the reservation; on the south by the Central of Georgia railroad and Highway 26 and on the west by Buffalo road and Hourglass road.

Particular stress was placed on the fact that most of the Box Springs road running from the Central of Georgia railroad north to Buena Vista road was within the restricted area. This road is said to be used rather extensively and because of this post range officers emphasized the importance of keeping off that portion of the road within the danger area. Another road cutting through the danger area from west to east is the Red Diamond road. That part of the Red Diamond road from Hourglass road to the eastern boundary of the reservation is within the closed area.

Sgt. Sets Record; Wins Commission In 28-Day Course

From sergeant to first lieutenant in 28 days and it didn't happen in Hollywood. It happened right here at Ft. Benning where any man has to be good to earn a second lieutenant's commission in the rigorous 90-day course the world's best Infantry School gives its prospective officers.

Robert T. Greene, son of Prof. and Mrs. E. M. Greene of 323 Lewis St., Vermillion, S. D., now shining up his silver bars prior to reporting to the Barrage Balloon School, Paris, Tenn., was a lieutenant in the reserves for seven years but let his commission expire in 1939. Enlisting in the Army last March as a Coast Artilleryman, he was sent to Officer Candidate School late in July and assigned to the 10th Co., 3rd Student Training Regiment. After 4 weeks of intensive training, he was informed by the War Dept. of his reinstatement as an officer.

ISSC Officer Is Promoted

Col. Jackson Was On Foreign Duty In Hawaii

Promotion of Lt. Col. Edward B. Jackson, Seattle, Wash., to the rank of colonel in the Army of the United States was announced here today at headquarters of the second student training regiment of the Infantry School. Col. Jackson is executive officer of the regiment.

Col. Jackson was first commissioned in the United States Army June 25, 1918, at Camp Gordon, Ga., after having attended officers' training school at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii. He has had foreign service in both the Hawaiian Islands and Alaska.

Col. Jackson came to the Infantry School Oct. 9, 1940, commanded an officers' training company and then became regimental supply officer of the first training regiment. In November of 1941 he was transferred to the second regiment when that unit was organized to handle the start of the present huge officer candidate training program. From supply officer Col. Jackson was recently assigned as regimental executive officer.

"The Bayonet"

Today is a Red-Letter Day for Fort Benning. This date marks the publication of the first issue of "The Bayonet," the first standard size all-post newspaper in the history of this reservation. It is a weekly newspaper published for the men and officers of Fort Benning through the cooperation of the Columbus Ledger and its able staff.

The Ledger has gone to considerable trouble to make this paper possible. It has placed at the disposal of Benning men all of its mechanical and art facilities. Its reportorial staff is available in an advisory capacity. The preparation of copy for our paper, the news, the commentators' columns, the art, and the cartoons is an all-soldier cooperative project. The editing and copy-desk work are all being done by soldier personnel.

The first issue was prepared by a staff of officers and men in the various public relations offices of the post with the cooperation of other military personnel vitally interested in the project. However, for this venture to be a success, we must have the cooperation of all the men if this weekly is to be both for the soldier and by the soldier, giving a week by week account of what is going on here. You men make the news, not the staff of this paper. For The Bayonet to be worthy of the confidence shown by the publishers of The Ledger, it must be interesting and newsy. Names make news, and you can do your part in making this project a credit to Benning.

If you know some news you think your buddies would like to hear, give the public relations officer of your unit a ring or drop him a summary of what you have to say. You do not have to be a trained reporter. Just tell him who, what, why, when, where, and how. If you can write or draw, or if you have written poetry, G. I., or otherwise, send it to him and he will pass it on to us. Maybe you have something in that little jingle you dashed off in a moment of inspiration. Send it in while it is fresh on your mind. An hour from now you forget it. Remember that this is your paper. If your contribution is worth printing, your name will appear in the list of weekly contributors on the editorial page.

And while we are thinking about it, maybe you would like the folks at home to know what is taking place on this mighty post. If you think they would like to have the "Bayonet," you can have it mailed home for a nominal sum, just enough to pay the cost of handling it through the mail. If you are transferred, perhaps as an alumnus of Benning, you would like to know what's happening back at Upatoie College on the Chattahoochee. Have the "Bayonet" follow you.

Salvage Vital

The United States is facing a crisis in its War production Program. The nation's scrap and salvageable material are needed by war industries to maintain production quotas and get necessary materials to the armed forces—in time.

Every soldier and officer knows the importance of this need and can help materially in meeting it. We must cooperate constantly and earnestly with the national effort to relieve the shortage of critical materials by supplying a continuous flow of salvageable material for use in war production.

So let's keep our eyes open in the barracks and company areas, on the firing ranges and bayonet courses, on the drill fields and maneuver grounds, at the post garages and maintenance installations. There's plenty of valuable scrap material that can be converted for industrial use. For instance, rubber heels, tires and tubes can be used to produce rubber shock absorbers, motor vehicle and airplane tires, and many other additional products. Waste paper and cloth are convertible to important war products. Remember, the material you salvage today will help you and your comrades in battles tomorrow!

It's our job to find, turn in, or report any valuable scrap material that we see to the salvage officer. Military personnel living off the post should turn in all materials available for salvage around their homes to charitable organizations or the local salvage officer. Scrap metal, discarded tires, or tubes, lying along the highway, should be picked up. Old machinery, boilers, or other metal objects which are in disuse, and appear to be abandoned, should be reported to the salvage officer, who will take steps to see that it is not overlooked by reporting this to the Regional Office of the Bureau of Industrial Conservation, War Production Board, Washington, D. C.

In your next letter home, tell the folks about the job the Army is doing to relieve the national shortage of raw materials and urge them to help in this vital scrap collection effort. There are probably quantities of salvageable material around your friends' homes and mother's backyard and cellar, which should be turned over to a charitable organization or sold to a licensed junk dealer. The old tire and garden hose in the garage, that worn-out lawnmower, steel shovel, and ash can, those obsolete brass faucets and plumbing fixtures, are all readily convertible to industrial use.

We, in the army, must get behind the national scrap campaign and wholeheartedly set an example of cooperative effort to overcome our nation's raw material shortage in basic industries. Each of us has a job to do; our salvage officer has a job to do; our nation has a job to do. By doing it, we can make certain that, "For want of a nail—our country will not be lost."

Pack Your Car

A recent survey made at Outpost number one at Fort Benning revealed that 25 per cent of the cars entering the post at that point carried only the driver, while 24 per cent had only the driver and one passenger.

As a result of this survey a plea has been made by post authorities that automobile owners, military and civilian, fill their cars to capacity. The reasons are obvious. One of them is a patriotic reason, while the other is purely a selfish one.

Our country has had its raw rubber supply cut off by the Jap invasion of the Dutch East Indies. Because of a shortage of tankers and the submarine menace off our coasts, there is a dearth of gas. Adding two and two together we find that cars simply won't run without gas and tires. Because of the lack of housing facilities on the reservation it has become necessary for hundreds of soldiers to take quarters off the post.

This personnel and civilians employed on the post must find transportation to work since the majorit yof them do not own cars, and even if they did, sufficient gas and tires are not available to continue operating them for long. The bus line from Columbus to Fort Benning is doing a noble job considering the immense growth of Fort Benning since November, 1940, but the limited facilities it has at hand. The line has been hard pressed during the rush hours to find room for its passengers. As many as can be packed in are picked up at the bus stations. Once the bus drivers leave the stations, they are forced by necessity to perform the disagreeable duty of passing up would-be passengers waiting at intermediate stops on the post. That isn't bad if one isn't in a hurry or if the weather is pretty. But just try cooling your heels in a down-pour or during a freeze.

Many of the drivers leaving the reservation in the afternoon are considerate. If there is room, colonels and generals have been seen making an unscheduled stop to pick up a lowly private. Numerous civilians on the post and in Columbus are equally as thoughtful. Recently a Columbus business man standing in the doorway of his place of business saw a soldier dismount from a car eight blocks from the bus terminal to make a dash for a bus slated to leave for Benning in a few minutes. After rounding the corner, the soldier was somewhat surprised to see a car stop a bit ahead of him as the colored chauffeur waved him to get in. He explained that the owner of the car realized where the doughboy was headed and that the latter could not make it afoot. To have waited for a bus or a taxi would have been too late.

This is the spirit of cooperation needed in solving the transportation problem at Benning. All drivers have had it instilled in them that hitchhikers may prove dangerous and they just don't want to take the risk of picking up the wrong party. But picking up ride-thumbers will not be necessary if all Benning car owners residing in Columbus follow the advice of the authorities and pool rides with friends and acquaintenances. Not only will this conserve the necessary gas, oil, and rubber needed to win this war, but those drivers who do pool rides will find that they are being given priority when the time comes to grant requests for recaps and retreads or even new tires. Moreover, a form signed by passengers will entitle them to additional gas.

"HIGH FLIGHT"

Oh, I have slipped the surly bonds of earth,
And danced the skies on laughter-silvered wings;
Sunward, I've climbed and joined the tumbling mirth
Of sun-split clouds—and done a hundred things
You have not dreamed of—wheeled and soared and swung
High in the sunlit silence. Hov'ring there,
I've chased the shouting wind along and flung
My eager craft through footless halls of air.
Up, up the long delirious, burning blue
I've topped the wind-swept heights with easy grace,
Where never lark, or even eagle flew;
And while with silent, lifting mind I've trod
The high untrespassed sanctity of space,
Put out my hand, and touched the face of God.

—John G. Magee, Jr.

John G. Magee, Jr., now belongs to the ages. An American volunteer with the Royal Canadian Air Force, he was shot down last December after dashing off his sonnet "High Flight" and placing it in the mails addressed to his mother in the nation's capital.

John Magee is dead. He died without knowing that he had perhaps written the first literary pearl coming from the pen of an American bard in this war. In it he has expressed that intangible something every airman feels yet cannot express in so many words, "patriotism, courage, . . . the compensation, the solace of 'High Flight' . . . the keen awareness of the heart's greatness in the shadow of the unknown . . . the titanic, bursting joy of flight, the undefeatable adventurous spirit of youth at top-surge, . . . the sheer ectasy of speed and height, and the feeling of being more than man . . ."

Work for that wise fellow was lighter—and more effective. When we remember the great cause each and every one of us are fighting for, our jobs become more important and easier.—Mitchell Beason.

Country Editor in Khaki

By CPL. IRWIN BLUMENFELD

FORT BENNING, Ga., Friday
Now I know why they call training school officers "90-Day Wonders." I'll wonder any of them survive the three months course of training!

I'm still in here pitching, but this week has been a bit rugged. We've been on the rifle range—which is similar to climbing into the ring with Joe Louis and Strangler Lewis at the same time. The rifle gives you a beating, and the firing positions just about break your arms and legs.

They tell us the firing positions are figured out to provide us the best foundation for effective shooting, but it's my personal opinion that they were invented by the military intelligence department to test various methods of torture for giving prisoners the third degree, and to determine just how much can be endured by mere flesh and blood.

I can imagine no quicker way of getting a spy to talk than to order him to assume the kneeling position used for firing!

I can understand why General Sherman said what he did about war. He said it while marching through Georgia!

And my countless lady friends, who seem to be so worried about the affect of these feminine Georgia peaches, need have no fears. How can a dame be attractive when she constantly has beads of perspiration on her brow, and a perpetually shiny rose?

If the secretary of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce reads this, I'm only kidding!

In this position, the left arm, while resting on the left knee, is bent under the right ear; you sit on your right leg in such a manner that the ankle is within one degree of a compound fracture; and the entire body is bent forward like a rusty jacknife.

Sometimes I wonder if it wouldn't be more comfortable to be in front of the rifle when it is fired!

But after several days of practice on the range—and a Sunday afternoon on my own time—I managed to master the military jiu jitsu to a reasonable facsimile of the proper positions.

We fired for record Tuesday, and while I didn't break any course records, I did manage to qualify as marksman, which is better than not qualifying at all.

And just because I'm a bit frayed at the edges, don't get the idea that I'm a sissy. Even the strong, silent men in my barracks, who have been in the Army for a number or years and who underwent the attack at Pearl Harbor, feel the same way about it.

There are lots of things about the Pacific Northwest that I miss, and one of them is the weather. What I wouldn't give for one of those refreshing Puget Sound breazes—or, yes, even a nice, cooling rain.

The temperature here hasn't been too high, but it's a sultry, humid heat that keeps everyone in a constant atmosphere of a turkish bath. It may be good for cotton, but I'd just as soon use wool.

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

Newspapers and weekly news magazines are an important part of everyone's life. Everything that goes on in any part of the world today may have a bearing on our life of the future. That doesn't change the indisputable fact that we're even more interested in news about our neighbors. A newspaper covering Fort Benning news has been long needed to cover the personal touch of a military city of this size.

When the Daily Bulletin was no longer available for general distribution, there was a distinct sense of loss felt by all women of the post. A husband couldn't be expected to remember the things he had read. It was something of a miracle if he remembered to tell you the important changes that affected you or your household plans.

There were notices brought to the door when the elaborate system of garbage sorting went into effect. That notice of course made it most official and personal to the individual household. Such a chore that seemed at first. Still, orders are orders and after a while paper, garbage, tin cans and bottles were segregated without too much effort. Why I can even flatten tin cans now with my hands! Secretly I didn't mind too much for I'm the saver type. I wish someone needed the huge balls of laundry string I've saved.

I did mind not knowing before hand that the Boy Scouts would call for scrap iron. Since that drive I've unearthed all sorts of bits of metal. I suppose there's someone on the Post to contact for a pick up, but it would have given me much more pleasure to give it to that bright eyed, freckled faced Boy Scout.

Since the discontinuance of the Bulletin I've never known what's being shown at the movies. I'm sure I've missed countless Academy Award possibilities. I'm not going to worry over that for movie going has become a survival of the fittest. It means gulping dinner, smacking your nose with a powder puff and dashing to the theatre.

I must always be let out at the corner to buy the tickets while the car is being parked. Then we stand and stand, until the welcomed sign comes for the scramble for seats. There's no dignity to it at all. The Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady dash with equal disregard for others toes and elbows. Sometimes when the vitality is low and I'm not conditioned for the act that resembles the land dash of 1893 in Oklahoma, we reach the theatre to find a stricken group of also came lates wondering what to do now that they're all dressed up and nowhere to go.

Most of all I think I missed the For Sale and Wanted Ads. Why I should get so much pleasure in reading that Captain Smith wants to sell a baby buggy in good condition, Major Whiteside has a lawn mower and length of garden hose for sale and Lieutenant Goldbars wants to buy a pair of riding boots size 19. I don't know. I ate it up with the relish of a small town old maid listening in on the party line. Guess it was the personal touch of army life.

That loss will be rectified now that we have the Fort Benning Bayonet. It will primarily published for soldiers, which doesn't exclude the feminine contingent in the least. No one can be in this game long, man, woman or child without becoming a soldier in actual fact. Whether the editorial staff knows it or not, they've started something that's going to be an important part in the life of everyone at Fort Benning and they shall be blessed for their efforts.

A Soldier's Meditation

By SGT. CARL M. GETTER

A quiet blue settled over the camp. Barracks, usually hospital white took on pastel shades of blue. Stately pines cut sharp figures in the dim blue. An occasional moth flitted against a screened window. In the distance a radio could be heard softly playing a romantic tune. What lonely soldier was listening and remembering?

The quietude was broken by the shuffle of a guard as he slowly made his rounds among massive, towering monsters of war that were covered with canvas, looking like shrouded figures from Dante's Inferno waiting for the signal to loose their horror and death. Occasionally his flash cut a swath in the night in which myriads of insects could be seen, just like the night you and Bill went fishing. Now a lonely soldier could be seen winding his way up a sandy road toward a dark, silent barrack building. His heavy shoes crunched on the sand, reminding him of the first hike he had made. And the lake along which he trudged trying to make more crunching sounds because his movie hero's boots made such a noise. Now he thought "what if a hidden foe heard that noise and lay waiting for him to pass that bush—or that one—or may be it was all of them? Well he'd have a gun then. It didn't matter if you had a gun. He thought of the men at Corregidor. They had guns, but it did make a difference what kind of gun. Supposing they don't have enough money back home to make more new ones, the kind that would give him a chance against his enemy? He was giving all he could to help equip him, but he was only one. As he crunched along he thought, four million out of one hundred and thirty million would hardly see him through. As he topped the hill he could see a highway winding its way through the gently rolling hills of Georgia. His musings were interrupted as an open car came speeding around a curve in the road. Music and gay laughter were heard. The car's headlights, it seemed, was betraying him to the enemy. He laughted to himself as he turned his thoughts to his comrades-in-arms far away in the Pacific and the way they handled the modern equipment made and bought by others such as he and those at home. A feeling of confidence swept over him as he entered his barracks and he saw the men he had lived with for the last year.

As he kicked off his shoes and as the sand poured out, he thought, "This isn't the Boy Scouts, but good deeds are different and much more important." He slid between the sheets careful not to disturb the blankets as taps echoed through the hills.

Poets' Corner

PRESCRIPTION
BY LT. F. M. SHILLING

When you've got a chance to grumble, when your dreams begin to tumble
And you've got to stand and take it on the chin
Do you weep into a blotter, just 'cause hell is gettin' hotter?
Do you feel like yellin' "quits" and givin' in?

Sure they've got you down. I'm certain, and they've really got you hurtin'
When the breaks are tossin' to the other guy
But the G. I. who's a winnin' (in the long run) does the grinin'
While the weeper sits around to whine and cry.

Sure the other guy ain't smart, he just got a lucky start
And he got the stripe that should have gone to you
Or he got the job of clerk, which was just the type of work
Cut out right and suited best for you to do.

Dogface sit it out awhile, cut the frown and wear a smile
For a G. I. learns a lot as he grows older
And if you can buckle down, wear a smile instead of frown
When they raffle-off you'll be the lucky holder

You can't go to town by sittin', givin' up or just plain quittin'
For you've got to stand up sluggin' in the fight
And you'll find that you can make it, if you'll stick it out and take it
Hell, it ain't so bad and life works out alright

If, perchance, you're feelin' better, sit right down and write a letter
Mail it straight to "Benning Poet", Post HQ.
For I've got the crazy notion, that I'm due for a promotion
But the old man just informed me it ain't true.

Daring Donald Dean

BY CPL. R. A. BUXTON
1st PARA. BRIGADE

Naw, I'm not scared said the husky lad,
As he stepped up to the plane,
I'm as calm as a breeze on Lake Louise
Why heck, this stuff is tame.

So he crawled aboard while the engines roared
And took position one
Then cross the field the old plane reeled
And Dean thought it was fun.

Way up they flew into the blue
And watched the earth below
And Dean's eyes buldged as he indulged
In a fear that was sure to grow.

He began to shout as the sweat popped out
To lessen the growing fear
But his buddies stared with eyes that glared
As the time was drawing near.

I'll say again to all you men
Said rugged Donald Dean
The jumps a snap and you'll come back
If you do like me, I mean.

The plane banked round, Dean saw the ground
His stomach pitched up high,
I swear he thought, his waist he caught,
I feel a butterfly.

He reeled and tossed, his nerve he lost
Amid the engine's roar
But he sprung to his feet for that daring leap
And lunged up to the door.

The light turned green and out he leaned
To make his graceful jump
But in his pose he found he froze
And felt a sudden slump.

Go on they yelled, but on he held
With an iron-fingered hold
His heart beat fast and now alas
His nerve was growing cold,

He backed inside where he could hide
He knew his chance had passed
But he missed his hoe now the story's told
And did fall out at last.

A sudden drop and a blast from the prop
And our hero gave a scream
But his chute opened wide and he started to glide
This daring Donald Dean.

Lt. Schilling's 'Call To The Infantry' Is Hit

"Call to the Infantry" was heard for the first time by the public on the "Cheers from the Camps" General Motors broadcast from Fort Benning September 1. Lyrics and musical score were written by 1st Lt. Falko M. Schilling of Headquarters company, Service Battalion, first student training regiment, assisted by Mrs. Schilling. Arranger for voice and orchestra was Merle Kendrick, musical director of "Cheers from the Camps".

Lt. Schilling is an officer candidate school graduate of the Infantry School. He enlisted in his home town, Manchester, N. H., the first day of the draft, Nov. 18, 1940. He received his commission on January 23, 1942, and was promoted to first lieutenant on June 23. He was married last June.

IMPRESSIVE BROADCAST DIRECTOR

His song was presented to Don Bernard, director of the "Cheers from the Camps" show after the original script for the broadcast was already prepared. Mr. Bernard was impressed by the lyrics, and asked for the musical score. As a result the script was re-written to permit including Lt. Schilling's song.

It was heard over a chain of 114 stations in the United States, a group of Canadian stations, and over short wave to our fighting men throughout the world. It was rebroadcast several times after the original presentation to enable American troops to hear it again.

PLENTY RUGGED, NO "CORN"

Lt. Schilling's march is further enhanced as a rugged, morale-building song for soldiers by the recent statement of Larry Adler, the harmonica virtuoso, attacking "corny" morale songs" which have been pouring out of Tin Pan Alley.

The Baltimore ace who moved the harmonica into a niche in concert halls thinks the place for corn is on the farm and not in the bandstand.

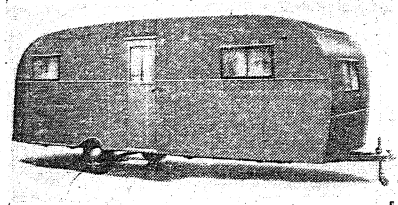
In a statement quoted by the Associated Press, Adler declared:

"Our fighting men know the war is no joke. They aren't fooled one second by the slush that Tin Pan Alley turns out for them. As a matter of fact, a lot of soldiers and sailors are insulted by the current crop of patriotic ballads. They feel that the songs insult their intelligence and good taste. They want and demand fine music. . . . And first-rate music for our armed forces can be found, too."

Screen Radio Favorites Try For Gold Bars

Three well known figures in the field of entertainment are together again at the Infantry Officer Candidate School, Ft. Benning, Georgia. They are Sgt. Hubert W. Bumpas of Duncan, Okla., and Corps. Thomas J. Hubbard and Hubert L. Aday of Little Rock, Ark., who are finding the stage settings here somewhat different from the Kleig lighted ones of the theatre.

Sgt. Bumpas under the name of Robert Wayne has played in some 42 pictures, been on the stage with such stars as Julie Hayden and Bert Lahr and had parts in numerous radio serials. Cpl. Hubbard, with the screen name Brent Thomas, made a place for himself in radio as one of the cast in the "Silver Theatre," and "Lux Radio Theatre" productions: and Cpl. Aday nicely rounds out the trio by having written scripts for several West Coast stations and radio agencies.



PREPARED SKITS

It's therefore not surprising that these men should have put their wits together and turned out an amusing series of skits under the title "The Reluctant Draftee" which rolled them in the aisles at their old post—Camp Roberts. This in addition to several radio shows, assured their place in the entertainment field, and upon transfer to Camp Robinson, they were given a free hand to continue their work and keep the boys laughing. "The Reluctant Draftee" was expanded into a musical comedy, and shortly before being sent to Officer Candidate School, the three were collaborating on a special series of stock shows to be given by regimental and battalion units.

By request of the War Dept., these manuscripts have been signed over to the Army for future use by the Army in its entertainment programs. If the work these men turned in is as good as what they have previously produced, the Army's morale problem will be greatly lessened.

Benning Mecca for Celebrities As Stars of Stage, Screen, Radio, Sports World, Visit Reservation

Writers Come Here To Gather Material

Fort Benning, the military cross-roads of the nation, has been a veritable mecca of celebrities of the military, the screen, the radio, the press and the sports world since the first of the year, a survey of the visitors' register shows.

Just recently the post was visited by Ted Husing, internationally-known radio announcer and sports commentator who announced the "Cheers from the Camp" program produced by Don Bernard and sponsored by General Motors; Miss Mary Ann Mercer, singing star of the National Broadcasting Company's "Uncle Walter's Dog-house"; Edwin Muller, staff writer of "Reader's Digest"; Sgt. George Baker, staff cartoonist for "Yank," the official Army newspaper; and Lt. Col. Arne D. Dahl, chief of the Norwegian Military mission to the United States and Canada who delivered a series of lectures for the War Department's orientation series on his experiences in the Battle of Norway in 1940.

NEWSPAPER CELEBRITIES

Newspaper and periodical celebrities who have come to the reservation since January 1 for the purpose of gathering material for articles included W. L. White, Thomas Johnson and Stanley High of Reader's Digest for material on colored troops, general material, and the chaplaincy respectively; William Howland of Time magazine; Jack Thompson of the Chicago Tribune, Frederick Griffin and Ronald Williams of the Toronto Star for material on Canadian troops in training here; Earl Brown of Fortune magazine; Marshall Andrews of the Washington Post, Webb Hall for a film story on parachute troops for Movietone News; Rod Warren and Rus Ervin of Grantland Rice's "Sportlight" who also took movies of the Parttroopers; Earle Poorbaugh of the Baltimore News-Post, Gene Morgan of the Chicago Daily News, Roy Crane, creator of Wash Tubbs and Captain Easy and Leslie Turner of NEA feature service; Edwin Dunham, announcer for NBC's Fort Benning "Army Hour" broadcast; and Hanson Baldwin of the New York Times.

Educators were represented by Dr. Pennington Hale, internationally known political economist, who spoke on a War Department Orientation series.

JOLSON, AUER, MEREDITH

Radio, stage and screen sent Al Jolson, famed "Mammy" songster and film star; Mischa Auer, screen comedian; Noble Sissie, colored orchestra leader; and Burgess Meredith of stage and screen.

Major "Bill" Slater of the War Department Public Relations office was a visitor. The sports world sent Ford Frick, president of the National baseball league, and Leo Durocher and his Brooklyn Dodgers.

Military leaders included General George Marshall, chief of staff of the United States Army; Sir John Dill, chief of the British Military Mission to the United States; Major Gen. Mark W. Clark, chief of the Army Ground Forces; and Lord Louis Mountbatten, chief of the British commando forces.

Wins Popularity When Pals Learn Sis Is Star

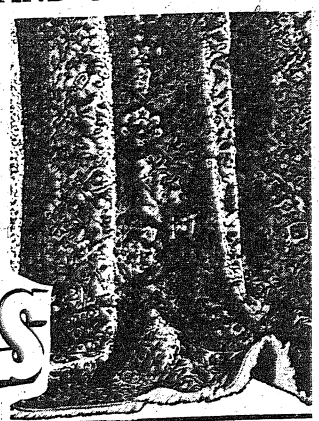
Officer Candidate Murray Eisner in the 7th company of the second student training regiment seemed to be very insistent about having his sister dance at the company party just before his graduation recently.

The boys on the social committee were in a way of giving him the brush-off with put-offs. That is they were until they read about his sister in Columbus papers a day before the party.

It seemes that Eisner's sister is Betty Bruce, star Broadway singing and dancing hit. After that came out, Eisner's popularity in the class increased immensely. And needless to say the party was a big success.

Beautiful Betty made her name in George Jessel's "High Kickers" and has a number of hit engagements on Broadway. She came to Benning to see her brother graduate from officer candidate school and pin on a second lieutenant's bars.

Benning Alumnus Meets "Jerry" On Dawn Patrol



Two months out of O. C. School here at Benning, a graduate of O. C. 14 wrote his former company commander here this week that "I met Jerry this morning at dawn."

The officer is Lt. L. L. Mansperger, who ranked No. 1 man in his old class in the 7th Company, and he wrote Major Hartwell T. Bynum, now regimental intelligence officer, mainly to give future graduates of his alma mater some very pertinent advice.

Put simply, it is this: "From right over here in the heart of things, I consider the ability of every man to identify every plane in the sky as paramount."

"If you can identify the silhouette you have time to hunt a hole or go into action," he says. "I hope this does somebody some good."

"I often wondered what I would do and how I would feel in my first 'blitz'. You couldn't realize it was for keeps until 20 mm. slugs began to fan your ears. It sure scares the devil out of men, and boy when I say I moved I don't mean maybe. I saw the first thing that even resembled an egg today since leaving the U. S. A. and to think I once grumbled about scrambled eggs in good old 14. Of course the ones I saw today were laid by Jerry."

SPORTS SLANTS

ON THE CAMPS

William A. (Wild Bill) Hallahan, former St. Louis Cardinal southpaw and veteran of four World Series, was inducted recently at Fort Niagara, N. Y. Said Hallahan: "I just want a chance to show those Axis fellows the stuff I've got on a hand grenade."

Boxing is the most popular sport of the soldiers stationed in Hawaii. And to give you an idea of the "sock 'em for keeps" shows they have out there, a recent card consisted of seven bouts—and everyone ended in a knockout!

Melio Bettina, the 26-year-old heavyweight contended from Beacon, N. Y., had no sooner donned his G. I. uniform at Camp Upton, Long Island, recently when post athletic officials pressed him into service as referee for the evening's bout.

They're getting a red-hot grid team ready at Fort Riley, out Kansas way, but it had better be good, because the first team they will meet this fall will be the Tigers from the University of Missouri, last year's Sugar Bowl contestants.

Pvt. Paul E. Hurley of the 28th Air Base Squadron at MacDill Field, Fla., copped the recent pool tournament held there. Hurley's tournament record now stands at 70 games won, and none lost. That's what you can call keeping from behind the eight-ball!

Lt. Carl C. Hinkle, former All-American center at Vanderbilt, will get back into the gridiron swing this fall when he helps with the coaching of the football team now being organized at Greenville Army Flying School, Greenville, Miss.

The baseball team at Will Rogers Field, Okla., has a very eccentric southpaw pitcher. His name is Pvt. Elmer "Not-the-Great" McGahan. Two weeks after shutting out a local ball club, 11-0, the same team scored 16 runs against him and still had 19 runners left on base!

The special service officer at Camp Roberts, Calif., has sent out a call for men who can "throw the bull." He means it literally! Plans are being made to stage a rodeo with soldiers from the camp acting as contestants. Ride 'em soldier!

With football still to come, Fort Monmouth, N. J., has already begun angling for basketball games with Rutgers, Princeton, Long Island University and several other top college fives. They are also negotiating with Ned Irish, promoter of cage bills in Madison Square Garden in New York City for a date there.

Backfield men on the Coast Guard Academy football team at New London, Conn., will get some expert coaching this fall, especially in the kicking department. Clark Hinkle, former Bucknell and Green Bay Packer star, has just been added to the staff.

Scott Field, Ill., held its annual track and field meet recently. The 83rd Technical Squadron won the team title and Pvt. James Scouler was individual high scorer. As a matter of fact, he was a one-man track team, capturing first place in the broadjump, 160-yard dash, 220-yard dash, and the 120-yard high hurdles!

SPORTSCASTING

With St. Sgt. Carl Neu

This is the time of year that sports fans are in a quandary. It's the tail-end of the baseball season, and football is coming on so fast that you hardly realize it, especially here in Georgia where the sun keeps beating down and it seems too unbearable to even watch a football game, let alone play in one. But time and tide wait for no man, and neither do sports—and sports at Benning are no exception.

Here, however, the baseball season is ended. It came to an abrupt close with a series of regrettable incidents. We hate to inaugurate this column by dragging into the open such a business, but this weekly pillar is to be dedicated to good sports and real sportsmanship, so the truth should come out.

By this time, everyone knows that the I. S. S. C. ball club won the Fort Benning title again for the seventh straight year. And well they deserved to win it, also, because Lieut. Frank Shannon had a hard-playing, alert team that fought every inning of the way.

But the way in which they won the post-season play-off from the 15st Infantry, second-half loop winners, didn't satisfy anyone, least of all the lads who wore I. S. S. C. uniforms. Lefty Frankie's classic mound performance in the first series game when he set the Hoosiers down with a lone scratch hit and fanned 22 of them is history. So is Lefty Lehner's flawless mound performance in the second when he was spinning along with another shut-out for eight innings.

But there is still argument about the "incident" in the last half of the eighth that closed the series so abruptly. Pete Plunk, academic catcher, was on third. On a ground ball to the infield, he was trapped off base and in the run-down that ensued, Plunk bowled over Hoosier hurler Harry Taylor who was covering the plate. Whether it was intentional or not is beside the point. Plunk has always been a hard-player, in the game every minute, and he was perfectly within his rights in trying to reach home by any means possible.

The fact that Taylor was not only the "one-man" pitching staff for the 151st team, but also had a lame back which the accident aggravated, seems to have been lost sight of it in the argument which followed. Both teams stormed on the field, and the locale of home plate was a maelstrom of players and fans alike for a few minutes.

Finally, the 151st packed up their bats and went home, automatically forfeiting the game. The next morning, the Hoosiers notified the F. B. A. A. that they were also forfeiting the series, and conceding the title to the academics in protest. In all fairness to everyone concerned, it still must be stated that even to this day, NO ONE HAS ANY IDEA WHAT THE HOOSIERS WERE PROTESTING.

They never made clear to the umpires or F. B. A. A. officials what they wanted. Did they want Plunk tossed from the game for doing something he had every right to do? Did they want the game nullified to them? Did they want a replay? Or did they want Francis and Lehner declared ineligible because they were tossing too many goose-eggs at them?

The whole season has dragged this sleeping dog out at this time is simply to point out and emphasize that Army sports are played, not just for the winning and losing. No sir, there are much bigger things at stake these days in another "game." The vast athletic program at Benning has been developed and is encouraged to foster friendly competition. AND TO PROVIDE ENTERTAINMENT FOR THE REST OF THE SOLDIERS.

Seems that this latter fact was lost sight of by the Indiana unit. It was bad enough that they walked out on the second game, but when they refused to play the third game after it had already been scheduled and announced, they left a potential audience of 3,500 men stranded. Fortunately, the F. B. A. A. scurried around and found a civilian team from Columbus to replace the 151st, and the I. S. S. C. closed the 1942 campaign by tripping this all-star club before a full house. That particular phase of the baseball season must have made some faces red!

Fort fans will be interested in knowing that one of the big stars in the victory of the Eastern Army All-Stars over the famous N. Y. Giants last Saturday was a Fort Benning officer. Lieut. Bob (Ace) Friedlund, who started at right end for Colonel Bob Neyland's winners, is a member of Company A, 1st Student Training Regiment.

Friedlund is a former Michigan State athlete, and captained the Spartan grid team last fall. He also was a co-captin of the North team in last year's North-South game at Montgomery. The rangy end has signed a contract with the Philly Eagles in pro circles when Uncle Sam called him up on his commission.

The Benning gridder has another reason to be excited these days besides his football exploits. He hopes to get a furlough after the final game with the Chicago Bears in Boston, and travel back to his home in East Lansing, Mich. to marry Mary Nancy Rowley. If Captain Johnny Pingel, tailback and captain of the army team, can get a leave also, he will be best man. Pingel is also a former Michigan State great.

Corp. Teddy Wingstrom, former comedy diver with Billy Rose's Aquacades and former guard at Russ Pool for two seasons, has departed from Benning to join the Army Mine Planter Service. . . . The 124th Infantry grid team will have a real live alligator for a mascot this fall. He's eight feet long and weighs 220 pounds. . . . F. B. A. There is also a possibility of a fracas with the Georgia "B" squad if Wally Butts has enough players to spare when his Bulldog varsity is finally set.

The big tilt, of course, will be on November 7th when the Pensacola Naval lads visit the fort. Last fall, the 29th Blue Devils representing Benning traveled to Florida and dropped a 27-20 verdict to the Fliers in a thriller. This year, however, Pensacola is stronger than ever with ex-pro tutor Potsy Clark at the helm, several former All-Americans in the line-up and a schedule of major college elevens that would do justice to Notre Dame or Minnesota.

Accordingly, fort athletic officials felt that no individual eleven in the Benning conference would pack enough punch to compete with the Navy gridders. Thus, plans are underway to select an all-star eleven at the fort around the middle of October, and have them work out as a unit three afternoons a week for three weeks before the Pensacola game. The coaching staff for the all-stars will also be selected from among the various regimental tutors, and be asked to pool their talents for the little "Army-Navy" game, which will probably be played under the lights.

Most of the games will be played on Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. However, the F. B. A. A., official sponsors of the conference, has arranged a schedule which is sufficiently flexible that games can be played at times when the most number of soldiers will be able to watch them.

Seven Teams Form Post Grid-Conference

Eleven Games With Outside Rivals Complete Schedules

BY STAFF SGT. CARL NEU
Sports Editor

The greatest football campaign in the history of the post is in prospect for this fall when seven full-fledged gridiron clubs go into action.

Early this week, the Fort Benning Athletic Association divulged a three-point football program that should satisfy even the most rabid soldier fan, as well as afford an unusual opportunity for a great many men to play football.

TO PLAY PENSACOLA

Announced by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post athletic officer and former head coach of the North Dakota State gridders, the program embraces the following:

1. Formation of the First Fort Benning Football Conference with seven regimental teams as members and a complete schedule wherein each club will meet the other at least once.

2. Scheduling of several games with outside opposition from colleges and camps in this area.

3. Selection of an all-star Fort Benning eleven to meet the strong Pensacola Naval Air Station team in the feature game of the season on November 7th in Doughboy Stadium.

Coupled with this announcement also came word that most of the games will probably be played under the lights, which means that more soldiers will be enabled to see each fracas on the Doughboy Stadium turf.

Plans are just about complete to move part of the lighting equipment from near-by Gowdy Field over to the stadium, and contracts will be let this week. The work should be completed no later than the second week of the campaign, and will make Doughboy Stadium one of the finest football lay-outs to be found anywhere in any Army camp.

21 GAMES IN CONFERENCE

The complete schedule, which has just been okayed by the regimental athletic officers, lists 21 games in the conference, and seven with outside clubs. All but six of the 32 tilts will be played right on the post which means that Benning grid maniacs will have more football right under their nose this fall than they could possibly have even in the greatest football centers of the nation.

Most of the tilts will be contested on the Doughboy Stadium loam. However, men of the 10th Armored Division are busy right now constructing a first rate football field in the Sand Hill area, and the F. B. A. A. has announced that it plans to schedule several of the league battles for this gridiron since four of the conference teams will be composed of armored lads.

29th VS. 124th

The 1942 campaign will get under in 10 days when the 29th Infantry Blue Devils and the 124th Infantry Gators, the two most advanced elevens at this date, collide with outside opposition. To the Floridans actually goes the honor of prying the lid off when they travel to Chattanooga on Saturday, Sept. 26th to play the University of Chattanooga.

The big home opener will be on the following day, Sunday, Sept. 27th with the strong Spence Field "Fliers" from Moultrie, Georgia, testing the Two-Niner's on the stadium turf. The first big Benning conference encounter has not listed until the week-end of October 11 since some of the teams have only been in training for a short time. But from that week-end on through December 6 there will be three or four grid battles listed on each week-end.

The line-up of conference teams will afford representation for all areas of the post. The post proper banners will be carried by the 29th and the scrapping Medicos of the 21st General Hospital who have been working out in their area along the First Division Road for almost three weeks. The 124th Gators, naturally will be the pride and joy of the Harmony Church fans.

To Sand Hill and the 10th Armored, however, will go the biggest representation with four crack elevens rearing into action. The two big tank outfits, the 3rd Armored and the 11th Armored will both field strong clubs, while the 54th Armored Infantry

Varied Sports Enjoyed By 124th Infantry

1000 Men Are Participants in Units Program

A well planned program of recreation is being carried out in the 124th Infantry in an effort to blend sports activities with military training and thereby develop the highest type of soldier—"Who may on other fields, win victories."

It has been the objective of the sports program to promote intra-regimental competition and actively to engage each man in some sport. This has been attained due to the large number of men who have participated in the varied sports programs this year.

There have been over 1000 men engaged in sports which began with a fast moving Basketball League composed of 16 teams and ended a very successful season with a tournament filled with thrills and spills. Baseball was next on the program and a league of 18 teams was formed. Vivid interest was shown in each team's play and the elimination playoff demonstrated excellent pitching and fielding ability. The softball league was run concurrently with baseball and a league of 20 teams was formed. Individual pitching performance was outstanding along with fast team play.

HAVE VOLLEY BALL ... PT 10

Volley ball league, ping pong league and golf tournaments were completed with many participants and keen competition.

The sports program now enters upon football and the first call for practice found about 145 men on hand and eager to earn a place on the squad. The football schedule is being completed which will pit the 124th against some of the strongest teams in this section.

The present schedule call for games with the University of Chattanooga, Georgia 'B', Auburn 'B', 29th Infantry, 3rd Armored Regiment, Daniels Field, 21st General Hospital, Spence Field and the 55th Armored Engineers.

Captain Harold F. Milton, former Georgia star is coaching the team assisted by Capt. William Stinson, Lts. Charles Schirard and Bob Horne, Lt. James B. Brooks is the manager of the team.

Aside from the fact that a large number of men have been engaged in regimental competition the 124th has placed an all star team in the field in baseball and softball and the showing in this outside competition has been very satisfactory.

BUILD OWN FIELDS

A notable feature of the recreational program is that the men have had to labor long and diligently to build the various playing fields, two baseball and three softball diamonds and numerous volley ball and basket courts being completed.

The cooperative spirit of the men of the 124th and their desire to compete in all manner of sports activities have been the main factors in carrying out the well planned and well balanced program.

The special service officer, Captain John G. Mactarlan, and his enlisted assistants, Sgt. Pat Murphy, athletic instructor, and Pvt. Leo Klempner, editor of the 'Alligator', are continually working out new plans and soliciting new ideas for the conduct of recreational features for the men of the regiment.

Fan-Mail Pours Into Fulton's Office As Broadcast Gets Nation's Acclaim

All Performers Come in For Share of Praise

It's been seventeen days since Fort Benning went on the air on General Motor's "Cheers from the Camps" program, and the boys who helped make the broadcast such a signal success are still strutting! No wonder to judge by the volume of fan mail which has been pouring into the office of

The letters have come from all sections of the country from people of all sexes, creeds, color, and walks of life. The sentiments expressed by our soldiers' fans were so sincere that Col. Fulton is making an attempt to answer personally every letter which has been sent to his office.

A sampling of the letters show they come from New York city; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Richmond, Va.; Chester, Va.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Denver, Colo.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Nashua, Iowa; Minneapolis, Minn.; East Orange, N. J.; Baltimore, Md.; Detroit, Mich.; Lawrence, Mass., and so forth.

It would be impossible to quote all of the complimentary remarks made by the writers. Every man on the program came in for an ample share of congratulations. Many of the correspondents stated that they had relatives stationed at Benning or at other posts. Some had visited the Fort and felt that the program meant so much more to them on that account. One letter of four pages in long hand took the individuals and groups one by one for a bit of lauding.

A summary of the letters reads like this: "impressed and touched", "high-grade program", "gave me a wonderful thrill", "best we ever heard on the air", "so many wonderful performers", "creditable . . . dignified . . . confess I wept during the religious part of the broadcast", "your boys' and cheers from the camp themselves": "most enjoyable hour on the radio for months", "revelation of talent".

'Bill' Fannin Camp Rucker Athletic Head

Served in FBAA Offices Twelve Years As Non-Com

One of the best-remembered figures in Benning sports circles during the last decade is now post athletic officer at Camp Rucker, Ala., home of the famous 81st (Wildcat) Division. Now 2nd Lieut. William Fannin, he was known at the fort as "Wild Bill" Fannin when he served as a tech sergeant in charge of the athletic office here.

Recently commissioned, Fannin has just been placed in charge of the athletic program at the Alabama encampment where he has been stationed for the past six months. He served at Benning for sixteen years before leaving here the end of March.

DEVELOPED SPORTS

Much of the credit for the development of the vast sports program now in progress at the fort has been given to Fannin, who was assistant to the athletic officer here for over twelve years. Athletic officers came and went during that period, but Fannin stayed on, developing athletes and sports at Benning. He served under ten different athletic officers during his incumbency in the sports office, and watched the Fort Benning Athletic Association grown into a sports organization now recognized as one of the best in the Army.

Bill Fannin came to the fort in 1926, and like many another prominent sports figure here served first with the 29th Infantry. He also had four years service as an M. P., and was the only traffic cop at Benning before the days of paved streets on the post.

Later he was assigned to the recreation board and he was on hand when Russ Pool was built, when the country club developed into maturity, and when the children's school was constructed.

ATHLETE HIMSELF

In Fannin's early days in the athletic office, he was still quite an athlete in his own right. He boxed and wrestled and played some football on the side. Then he became boxing coach of the Benning sluggers and turned out teams that won five Southeastern Golden Gloves titles in six years. Among others, Fannin is credited with developing such famous fort pugilists as Tut-Tut Taylor, Phil Carpenter, Emory Brooks, Acie Whatley, Dusty Rhodes, Pug Odom and Jimmy Reilly.

At one time Bill Fannin was post handball champion and he also played some tennis and badminton. As a matter of fact, he still takes a hand at a game of badminton in his few spare moments at Rucker. Just before he left Benning, the portly gent became interested in weight-lifting and last winter coached a team of huskies that would do credit to any Army.

KNOWN IN CITY

Fannin's athletic interests were not entirely confined to Benning, however, since he also took an active part in sports activities around Columbus. For several years he was vice-president of the city softball league, and a member of the Sportsmen's Club. He also served at one time on the staff of Dr. John McHaney, president, of the Southern Boxing Association, and was the official announcer for the annual Soap-Box Derbies held in Columbus.

Pride and joy of Lieut. Bill Fannin's life these days are Bill, Jr., aged 5, and Phillip, aged 11 months. If Bill has his way about it, there's no doubt that both lads will be outstanding Army athletes in future years, and he hopes that they'll be tackles on a Benning grid team, because the Rucker athletics boss still has a fond spot in his heart for the fort!

BASEBALL

History is repeating itself once again in the major league pennant races. As a matter of fact, it's the same old story. Monday, the New York Yankees polished off the Cleveland Indians by an 8-3 count and walked off with their sixth American League flag in seven years. Fittingly enough, it was Ernie Bonham, mainstay of the champs all season, who turned in the victory, his 20th of the campaign. No matter what happens the Bronx Bombers are "in" for another year. Now all they have to do is sit back patiently and watch another of those familiar dog-fights in the National loop to determine the World Series opposition.

Meanwhile, the past week saw the unpredictable Brooklyn Dodgers (they are also calling 'em Bums again now) tumble from their lofty perch at the top of the heap in the senior loop and give way to the rampageous St. Louis Cardinals. The Cardinals, coming like a house afire, moved into Flatbush on Friday for a two-game series and just two games out of first place.

Mort Cooper went to the mound in the opener and handcuffed the Dodgers with three hits and a shut-out. That cut the Brooklyn lead to one game. On Saturday, Max Lanier went to the mound for the Missourians, and sensational rookie third-sacked Whitey Kurowski socked a two-run homer to give the Cards a 2-1 verdict and knot up the standing.

Sunday, both teams played twin bills and the jittery Dodgers proceeded to do the inevitable by dropping a pair of tilts to their old rivals, the Cincy Reds. Meanwhile, the Cards went over to Philly and despite some stern opposition from the basement lads, they got an even break and pulled out in front of the Brooklyns by a full game.

The schedule saved the Dodgers from complete mortification by giving them two days off to collect themselves, but the Cards kept moving on Monday to trip the Phils and extend the lead to a game and a half, which is where we picked up the strain. From here on the schedule favors the easterners because most of their games are with the Phils, but Hans Lobert's boys despite their poor showing all season are playing good ball now, and may give the Cards a helping hand.

At this point, it looks like the Cards the rest of the way because the Brooks seem to have blown us high as a Jap battleship. But they could recover. Regardless of who wins, though, the series will probably follow the pattern of other years with the well-rested Yanks going into the grand finale against a National league opponent, well-exhausted from its own loop race.

BOXING

Big news in the ring world during the past week was also of great interest to every man in Uncle Sam's khaki because it told of how on the afternoon of October 12th in Yankee Stadium, New York, before some estimated 75,000 customers two G.I.'s will battle for the world's heavyweight crown.

A year ago June, it was Mr. Joe Louis and Mr. Billy Conn, but this time it will be Sgt. Joe Louis Barrow and Pvt. Billy Conn. Fans who remember their first battle will recall that the Pittsburgh Irisher actually had Louis licked on points going into the 13th round, but he let his guard down for just a moment, and that was the end. This time, Conn's probably hoping that Louis won't pull his rank, or that right hand, on him.

Actually though, the bout should be a humdinger. It will be the first daylight title-fight in years and years, but since little old New York is practically blacked-out now, it can't be held under lights. The show is being promoted by the one and only Mike Jacobs, and will be entirely for the benefit of Army Emergency Relief. All that Joe and Billy will get is their respective $78 and $50 per month which they'd get anyway.

The soldier sluggers have already begun training for the battle, with Louis returning to his familiar camp at Greenwood Lake, N. Y., and Conn getting into shape at Rumson, N. J. The champ came in from Fort Riley, Kan., wearing his new sergeant's stripes and Conn simply moved his foot locker over from Fort Wadsworth on Staten Island.

Meanwhile, as everyone got excited over the Louis-Conn bout, Fritzie Zivic and Freddie (Red) Cochrane, current welterweight champ now in the Navy, met in a non-title bout in Madison Square Garden for the benefit of the USO. And Zivic, the Pittsburgh veteran, proceeded to square an old account with Cochrane by taking a ten-round decision. Right after the bout, Jacobs announced plans to match Zivic with another former welterweight king, Henry Armstrong, sometime in late fall.

FOOTBALL

Football kept crowding into the sports picture as the All-Army teams and pros collided on several fronts, and college elevens the country over got down to serious work in preparation for openers either this coming weekend or the following one. One thing is definite, the Army squads with three wins against two losses were more than holding their own with the pros, an unusual occurrence for all-star teams that have had little time to get organized. But the big test was yet to come. The Eastern Army gridders, coached by Bob Neyland, and conceded to be the stronger of the two, are to meet the world-champion Chicago Bears in Boston this Saturday in the "game of

Headquarters Chatter

Don't ask Sgt. Burnes, supply sergeant, at post headquarters for pencils erasers, clips, or other materials unless you are definitely attached to headquarters, or have a special note requesting such supplies. This morning Sgt. Carl Neu, who handles public relations for the Quartermaster here at the post had a "hot-tip" that needed immediate action. Not a pencil could be found in the public relations office at Headquarters Fort Benning where the Sarge pounds out his daily grind of QMC publicity, so to Sgt. Burnes he went, but believe you me he had to do some tall talking to get a pencil from that supply sergeant before the news was "cold" and then only when Sgt. Whittemore was put up as collateral for it.

Mrs. Nell Freeman, Colonel Fulton's secretary, had a nice week-end attending an insurance convention with her husband, Ray, at Lookout Hotel, Lookout Mountain, Chattanooga, Tenn. While there she visited her family in Chattanooga.

Colonel Rosenberger's office is running into draft difficulties these days with his secretary, Mrs. Rosanne O'Kelly's husband, Tom, being called by the draft board in Atlanta this week.

Officer candidates' wives are like the men who join the navy to see the world. The latest O. C.'s wife to leave headquarters is Violet Shurman whose Bennie is an O. C. at Ft. Belvoir, Virginia.

Mrs. Josephine Haggard took a flying trip to Texas last week to see her husband now stationed at Camp Wolters, Mineral Wells, Texas. Pvt. Haggard is attached to Co "A" 58th Infantry Training Battalion, Infantry Replacement Training Center. While at Benning Pvt. Haggard was a clerk in the Transportation and Utilities Branch at Station Hospital. Josephine was bothered considerably with air sickness going out, but she went swimming in the "Crazy Crystal Springs" and was completely cured making the return trip without a single ill moment. Camp Wolters is almost an exact duplicate of Fort Benning as to hostess houses, service clubs and theaters, according to Josephine, so she felt completely at home.

Mrs. Perry Gordy left Wednesday for Boston, Mass. to spend a few days leave with her husband, Ensign Perry Gordy at the Naval Training School, Harvard University.

It is rumored that the day bed in the little girl's room at Headquarters Fort Benning is to be turned over to some organization's day room.

THE USO PRESENTS

Sitting in on a "inner sanctum" committee meeting the other night proved to be very interesting. It was the first time I had a chance to see how the USO got together with their committees to plan future programs. . . . The first thing you do is get comfortable because you are in for a hot session . . . not the type of session the jitterbugs go for . . . then you clear your voice . . . all set GO . . . the meeting is now in order and the suggestions pour in like the ice in winter. . . . Finally there are a few motions that all agree upon and something like this appears. . . . The USO Town Hall will initiate its first Sunday program September 20, at 2:30 p. m. The timely topic "Why We Fight" will be under discussion. Before the main topic is brought to the attention of the group there will be a quiz program. . . . Corporal Julius Seigel, president of the group, has expressed the hope that in changing the programs to Sunday they will attract those men who are unable to come in during the week.

The third of a series of Cabaret night programs will be held at the 100 9th Street USO Club, Monday, Sept. 21. . . . The evening will be dedicated to the theme of autumn. Music, decorations, and entertainment will revolve about the memories brought back by falling leaves and songs of autumn. . . . Sgt. Wolfe, popular master of ceremonies, is bringing a new floor show consisting of several variety skits and songs. One of the outstanding acts will be Frank Garrett and his Skating Devils. A specialty dancing troupe will round out the program. . . . The thing I like best about these Cabaret Nights is the idea that you can dance with your girl and not have to fear a tap on the shoulder. It is strictly a couple affair. No stags are allowed. It is requested that men make their reservations at the information desk as soon as possible, due to the large demand for tables.

There's one little story going around in town about the USO. This story was supposed to have happened in some other town so I don't know all the facts but I will try my best. . . . There was once a young Chinese-American soldier that was stationed somewheres in the south. Being the only Chinese in his camp, he became very homesick for the sounds of his native tongue. It seems that even though he could speak English very well, all he asked of the world was to baffle his friends by indulging in a Chinese conversation. . . . Making an appeal to the director of one of the USO clubs in the town he happened to be in at the moment, the director got busy and found him a very nice Chinese couple to talk to and talk he did to his heart's content. . . . But when the male side of the couple introduced his young sister to our Chinese hero, he really found his Heart's content. . . . Yes, sir, if the USO hasn't got it, she sure can get it for you. O. K. wise guy, what gender is USO.

This past Saturday Mr. Eugene Bergman was responsible for a magic show consisting of magicians from Atlanta, performing for the men of Fort Benning at Service Clubs 1 and 2. After finishing at the post, the show moved down to the USO Club at 100 9th Street and presented its magic wares to the 1,200 couples attending the Open House dance in the main auditorium. . . . The climaxed their program with a tricky exhibition of disappearing hats and flying coat tail, enough to make each soldier hold a little tighter than usual to his girl friend. And that's something.

The young men of Columbus about to be inducted into the armed services will be serenaded by the soldiers of Fort Benning with parodies of a soldier's first night in camp, Sept. 20 will see the USO Club and the Columbus American Legion, headed by Mr. Edward Pease, presenting a farewell gift to the future soldiers of the United States. The families of the Columbus men have been invited to participate in the program which will start at four o'clock.

While digging in his garden, Adjutant Langley C. Andrews of the Salvation Army USO Clubs in Columbus and Phenix City, was asked if he knew where horses could be hired. The soldiers asking the question were old Cavalry men that have been transferred to the 10th Armored and were just aching to throw their legs over a horse's back again. Thus, the new Boots and Saddle Club was started. The USO provides the horses, the men provide the time, and the horses provide the energy.

Fifty Tuskegee aviation cadets journeyed to Columbus Saturday evening, Sept. 12 to be the guests of the USO Clubs operated by the Colored YWCA at 936 5th avenue. . . . After arriving at the club the cadets were taken to Ingersolls Pool for a dip. . . . En-route to the pool Bernice Davis led the party in singing a number of rounds of songs which both the cadets and the ladies enjoyed. . . . Games and dancing were the features of the evening. As a means of getting acquainted, the game "Human Lotto" was played.

"What's Cookin' " . . . It's a spagetti with all the trimmings, New York style. Pvt. Joseph Guardino is the chef, assisted by Jack Dennis, Frank Masi, Lucky Gurrieri, Jerry Martin, Frank Carpenter, Abey Perlman and as many others as can get in on the eating, not K. P., end of the event. This group have arranged a regular delivery of the "fixins" direct from home each week using the kitchen at the U. S. O. Club at 14 W. 11th St. at Broadway. After a good sleep in the dormitory they spend most of Sunday preparing, cooking, eating and doing K. P. on a real spagetti dinner. . . . Guests become Hosts. . . . After successful rehearsals on cooking, and more especially eating, spagetti dinners the "New York Service Men's Spagetti Club" have decided to turn the tables on the Mothers Club and have them as guests Sunday, September 27. The call has gone out to the Bronx and Flatbush for extra "fixins" and this gustatory event promises to be one of the social occasions of the season, something to write home about. "Pop" Sims, club director, has been named official taster and on how he can taste, as proven by his midriff. By that time there may be no joy in Flatbush but there will be in Columbus.

"Keep 'em Rolling" is the new motto of the 14 W. 11th St. at Broadway USO Club. The idea is the roller skating that will be an added attraction on the patio in back of the club. Bring your own skates, which must be fiber or wood wheeled or you may rent them. . . . Special parties Monday nights at 8 a. m. beginning September 21. . . . Those of you that like informal skating, be around Wednesday nights at 7 p. m. . . . Some more news for those that like informal things. . . . You can have all that informal skating you want and no charge except that you have to feed the Juke box. . . . Any afternoon or evening except Sunday, when special programs are not scheduled and bring your girl. . . . Say, if you can't get one come without, for you will probably find one there.

Hey, Hey!!! What do you say we go on a sight-seeing tour, and I don't mean from the back of a GI truck. . . . No, No, a thousand times no! . . . But let's go with the group from the Phenix City USO, for they are going on bicycles. . . . Where they can get them with this rationing business, I don't know, but they have got them. . . . At the end of the tour there will be a blazing fire over which you can roast wieners. . . . Speaking of bikes . . . if you want to go for a round some time just contact the USO and they will let you know where to get them.

NO WONDER

When the training at Fort Devans, Massachusetts, called for the men to strip a Browning automatic rifle and put it back together again while blindfolded, Private Raymond Novak had no trouble at all—until he tried to put the trigger assembly back into the rifle. He was pretty expert at this and couldn't understand why it wouldn't work. Finally he discovered he was the goat in a practical joke. Someone had substituted the trigger assembly of a Garand rifle for that of his trusty Browning!

Camel Caravan Ends 3-Day Stand At Post On Wednesday Night

Star-Studded Show Makes Big Hit; Gives 5 Performances

The slam-bang "Grand Ole Opry" unit of the Camel Caravan, closed last night in the Alabama area of Fort Benning, after doing five performances in three days.

Seen and heard last night were the emcee work of Ford Rush, the dancing of Dolly Dearman, the sweet and hot singing of Kay Carlisle, the mountain music of the Golden West Cowboys, the guitar playing and Southwest ballad singing of San Antonio Rose, the fast-fiddlin' act of Fiddlin' Red, the comedy of Minnie Pearl and "Cipero," and the harmonizing of the Camelette Trio.

Ford Rush is an old time vaudeville star, from way back. He began his career singing in cafes for nickels and dimes, but soon acquired a partner and formed his own act. When radio came along he formed the famous radio act of Ford and Glenn.

Kay Carlisle and San Antonio Rose are the songthrushes of the show. Kay, who can "swing 'em" or "make 'em cry," can be heard over the NBC-Red network and has been a guest star on programs such as Ika Chase, George Jessel and some of the leading name bands of the country. Rose has been with the Cowboys for more than two years. She particularly enjoys performing for the servicemen, as her husband, James McCall, is a sergeant in the Army.

Dolly Dearman, during her stay at Fort Benning, did two turns in the show—her first, a complicated tap-routine, the second a zippy Pan-American rhumba. To say that the men of the post liked her performance is an understatement.

Minnie Pearl is the wisecracking bundle of dynamite. Unmarried at the age of 29, her ambition, she says, is to save enough money to have Mr. Rand McNally put Grinder's Switch on the map.

"Grand Ole Opry" played for the main post at Gowdy field, Monday evening, the 10 Armored Division, Tuesday at 7:30 p. m. and Harmony Church at 8:45 the same night. Yesterday a performance was given for the hospital at 3 in the afternoon before moving over to Alabama for the finale.

The unit is drawn from the famous Grand Ole Opry program heard weekly over station WSM, Nashville, Tennessee.

Movie Reviews

Timely in theme as a news dispatch from the Far Eastern theatre of war, M-G-M's "Somewhere I'll Find You," co-starring Clark Gable and Lana Turner, opening at the Main Theatre and Theatre No. 3 today.

Gable appears in the role of a war correspondent, a characterization with which he thoroughly familiar from several previous roles as a newspaper man. He rises to the occasion again with a superb performance.

Miss Turner is excellent as the girl reporter in the war zone who falls head over heels in love with him as she leads terrified Chinese children to safety from the Japanese bombers. Robert Sterling, as Gable's brother, also a newspaperman, plays with distinction a difficult role as the unsuccessful suitor.

"Somewhere I'll Find You" was directed for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by Wesley Ruggles, noted for "Cimarron," "Accent on Youth," "I Met Him in Paris" and other pictures. His deft touch is evident throughout the story.

Without exception the supporting cast turns in creditable performances, convincing and with sure understanding. The players include Patricia Dane, Tamara Shayne, Lee Patrick, Reginald Owen, Charles Dingle, Leonid Kinskey, Diana Lewis and Sara Haden.

The story presents Gable and Sterling as correspondents for a New York newspaper, just returned from the Far East. Their editor, Charles Dingle, is not yet awake to the danger of the situation there and by a ruse they get a story in the paper against his policy. Both are dismissed.

In the Greenwich Village home of an artist, Reginald Owen, where he once roomed, Gable discovers Lana Turner, a reporter on the same paper, occupying his former quarters. She is engaged to his brother.

But when the editor assigns her to cover the Far East and she is among the missing, Gable and Sterling go after her. They find her at length, transporting Chinese children to safety. The Pearl Harbor incident flings America into the war and the trio become involved in real action abruptly, with dramatic results.

Clark Gable—In The Army Now!

Peeps at Pics

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

At last there is a post newspaper for everyone on the post. Not a regimental or "school" newspaper, but one that anyone can point to with pride and say "that's my newspaper, it's about me and it's published for me."

As all the G. I.s on the post know, there are all of ten different theatres on the reservation. The purpose of this column is to give you the highlights and the unusual of the motion pictures playing at Fort Benning. Somewhere on this page you will find reviews of one or more pictures, currently on the post.

Speaking of somewhere, reminds one of the show at the Main theatre today and tomorrow, "Somewhere I'll Find You," starring Clark Gable, Lana Turner and Robert Sterling. This is one show this pic is the fact that Gable, playing a war correspondent, is now in the Army as a corporal at the Miami Army Flying School in Florida and Robert Sterling who plays the screen brother of Clark, has enlisted in the Army Air Corps as an aviation cadet.

"Eagle Squadron," playing at Theatres 2 and 3 today, is a show I won't forget for sometime to come. The story of the Eagle Squadron is something that grips you in a manner hard to explain. . . . Just for those of you that haven't seen "Eagle Squadron" yet, I will try to explain a few of the odd terms used in the picture . . . APRIL, FANTASTIC, ANGEL, etc., Code words for radio control stations and the planes in the air, used to keep vital information from the enemy. . . . DON-FIVE, ZERO-FOUR, etc.—Code words for defense areas in England, used for the same reason. Thus a ground station would call a fighter pilot in the air: 'Hello, Fantastic, April calling;' bandit pilot in the air: 'Hello, Fantastic, April calling;' bandit fighter

Five ISSC Non-Coms Boast Long Service Records

Three Decorated For Bravery In Action

Five sergeants in the second student training regiment got together and figured out that their quintet could claim 133 years of combined military service, an average of almost 27 years apiece.

They are all key-men in the smooth operation of the officer candidate training regiment. Mr. Sgt. William B. Pendorff is regimental sergeant major; Mr. Sgt. Floyd S. Chadwick is regimental supply sergeant; Mr. Sgt. Aaron Callicott runs the show at the regimental personnel section; while 1st Sgt. Ansley Smith and 1st Sgt. Basil S. Rayl are with the 15th and 20th Companies, respectively. All are members of the regiment's headquarters and headquarters company, which incidentally boasts three master sergeants, 21 first sergeants, two technica. sergeants, 30 staffs, 53 sergeants, 76 corporals, 20 technician fourths and 33 technician fifths.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE RECORDS

Sgt. Smith enlisted June 23, 1913 and soon afterward joined the American Punitive Expedition into Mexico. He sailed overseas with the A. E. F. in 1917 and won the D. S. C.

Sgt. Pendorff enlisted Nov. 22, 1916, served under General "Blackjack" Pershing on the Mexican border, and came to Benning in 1924.

Sgt. Chadwick entered service Oct. 25, 1912, served with the 10th Infantry in Panama until 1917, and also served for some time at Schofield Barracks, Oahu. He held a second lieutenant's commission in the Army of the United States at one time during the first World War.

Sgt. Rayl enlisted in 1915, went overseas in 1918 with the First Army Artillery and received the medal for bravery in action.

Sgt. Callicott enlisted June 6, 1917, went overseas with the historic First Division, received the Purple Heart, the Silver Star with Oak Leaf cluster and the French Fourragere. He has also had foreign service in Puerto Rico.

Lawson Bomb-Sight

Pfc. Edward Torrey of the M. P. detachment submits the following poem as a warning to one and all who seek to enter Lawson Field.

THEY SHALL NOT PASS

"Sir have you a pass?" Asks the M. P. at the gate.
On patrol it's, "fifteen miles sir, sorry that's the rate."
Polite but firm of visage stern, to a pass we only yield.
Stars or bars must have that pass to enter Lawson Field.

Boner of the week: Pvt. Ed Dixon, 54th Air Base Squadron, telling the boys in the barracks that of all the methods of suicide the one most repulsive to him was "Mata Hari," the Japanese version. Wonder if Ed ever heard of Hari Kari the international spy?

The 316th Troop Carrier Group lays claim to having the youngest grandfather at Fort Benning. He is Sergeant Harold E. Cadd, 42 years old, of Jefferson, Iowa. Sgt. Cadd has a son 21 years old, who is serving with the Coast Guard, and a granddaughter, 19 months old.

If you hear an occasional war-whoop emanating from the M. P. barracks don't be surprised. It seems that one of our military policemen, Pfc. Clyde Otterman, is a full blooded Sioux Indian. He hails from Parmelee, South Dakota, and is known for his athletic ability. He was captain of the football and track teams in high school as well as president of the senior class.

Clyde enlisted in the army at Camp Roberts, California, in July 1941. Before coming to Lawson Field he studied at the Air Corps Technical School, Lowry Field, Denver, Colorado.

We would like to have you meet S-Sgt. Samuel S. Prickett of the 54th Air Base Squadron. Sgt. Prickett, who is 44 years of age, is celebrating his twenty-fifth year in the military service, fifteen of which were spent in the Coast Guard and the other ten in the Army. He has seen service with the 2nd Alabama Infantry, which took him to the Mexican Border, and the 31st Division (Dixie) which took him across to France in World War I. He also served in the Quartermaster Division.

From 1926 to 1941 Sgt. Prickett served with the Coast Guard patrolling the coast of Florida and later serving on the Great Lakes. On April 10th, 1941 he joined the Air Corps at Fort Benning.

Sergeant Prickett is assigned to the Base Engineering Department of the 54th Air Base Squadron. He is single, and his home city is Gadsden, Alabama.

A contest is under way in the 423rd for the selection of an emblem to be adopted as the Battalion official coat of arms. The emblem is to be selected from entries from members of the command.

Hickory Dickory Dock; Let Mousie Try This Clock

There are 24 o'clocks in the army these days. But let us stop now and officially designate this as just the beginning, just in case you are already mixed up.

All messages, orders, and reports transmitted between the post and Fourth Service Command Headquarters, and messages going between the post and the War Department, will be dated Greenwich time. And how will one be able to tell Greenwich time? Well, the writer recommends that you take an aspirin first.

Now back to telling time. The easiest way is to figure the regular Eastern War Time on a 24 hour basis and add four hours, which is the difference between our time and Greenwich. Then a letter Z is put after it to denote Greenwich time.

To cite a concrete example, one o'clock, EWT, is 1700z, that is Greenwich time . . . remember. How come? Well, one o'clock is thirteen o'clock, on a straight EWT 24 hour basis, then just add four hours. The two numerals after the 17 are to designate minutes.

Now just take a powder, relax and forget about it all. It sure wasn't this way at home, and we had just the same 24 hours in every day. Some screwy world. Thanksgiving comes a week before it's due; the clock is two hours ahead of the sun; the Rose Bowl has jumped over 3000 miles out of place. What next?

Two Benning Men Decorated

Col. Harry Burkhalter, commanding the Academic Regiment, ISSC, presents Soldiers' Medals to Cpl. Cecil Wadkins (center) and St. Sgt. Orbin Truett for heroism beyond the call of duty.

Truett And Wadkins Are Awarded Soldier's Medal

Recognition for an act of heroism came this week to two soldiers in the academic regiment of the Infantry School Service Command when Staff Sergeant Orbin R. Truett and Technician Fifth Grade Cecil T. Wadkins were each awarded the Soldiers' Medal for bravery beyond the call of duty.

The incident for which the men were cited occurred on January 17, 1940, when both men were members of the 55th Quartermaster regiment which was then stationed at Fort Benning. Another soldier, Private Dolphus H. Johnson, was removing a leaky gasoline tank from a truck in one of the transportation shops here where Truett and Wadkins were working.

Gasoline-Soaked Clothes Fired

Johnson's clothing had become saturated with gasoline from the tank. A nearby soldier attempted to light a cigarette, and the head of the match flew off striking Johnson on the chest. His clothing burst into flames immediately, and he fell to the ground and rolled over and over in a vain attempt to extinguish the fire. When this did not work he rose to his feet in agony and started to run. He was aflame from his head to his heels.

Wadkins dived into Johnson, knocking him to the floor. He held him there while Truett secured a tarpaulin which he threw over Johnson, and with which he smothered the fire. The letter from the commanding officer which accompanied the medal stated that this action, "in utter disregard for their own safety was undoubtedly responsible for saving Private Johnson's life."

Ceremonal Held

The men were commended locally for their bravery at the time of the incident, but no official citation was made until this week. The medals were presented by Colonel Harry N. Burkhalter, commanding officer of The Academic Regiment before a formation of the officers and first sergeants of the regiment.

Sgt. Truett is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Truett of Midland City, Alabama, R. D. No. 2. At present he is a member of Company D of the Academic Regiment, and is an assistant instructor at the Motor Mechanics School of The Infantry School.

Corporal Wadkins is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Wadkins of Langdale, Alabama. His present assignment is with Company C of the Academic Regiment. He works with the test section of the Infantry Board.

VIGILANCE

Under cover of darkness on a recent night watch, an officer at Camp Barkeley, Texas, decided to test the reaction of the guard. He surprised him from the rear and made a pass at the guard's rifle. A split second later, the officer had his shoulder blades against the side of the sentry box and the point of a detached bayonet uncomfortably pressed to his midsection. It was a breath-taking experience. But now that officer knows he is well protected.

So You Want To Go To Officer's School?

Prerequisites Outlined By Examining Boards

Soldiers who score 110 or higher in the Army General Classification Test upon their entry into military service, and who can meet other qualifications, are encouraged to apply for entrance to an Officer Candidate School such as the one in the Infantry School at Fort Benning and win a commission upon the successful completion of the three-month course of instruction.

The mental hurdle each soldier must clear before his application is favorably considered is a personal appearance before an examining board of officers who judge the applicant for leadership, education, general characteristics of officer caliber, dependability, devotion to duty, initiative, military knowledge, and exemplary personal conduct. These, with neatness and soldierly bearing, are prime requisites which the soldier must display before his examining board.

These examining boards are a help, rather than an obstacle, for the aspirant, however. The members of these boards see their task as encouraging those men who meet the standards of the "leadership yardstick."

APPLICANTS QUESTIONED

The applicant appears before the board, which usually consists of five officers, of whom some may be members of his own unit. The preliminary examination is informal, with the soldier seated at ease and answering a variety of questions asked him by individual members of the officer group. These questions may concern his training and background, why he desires to become an officer of the Army of the United States, his outlook on military service and the world situation, and other pertinent questions. The way the soldier answers these questions, and his manner in responding to them, usually carry considerable weight with the examining board members, and have much to do with that board's final decision as to wether or not to approve his application for attendance at an Officer Candidate School.

Just as soon as a man steps inside the board room door the Board of Officers can tell whether or not he has in his make-up the fundamentals of leadership. If a man has in him the "makings" of an officer, it sticks out all over him.

As to the ability to pursue the course of study prescribed for officer candidates once they arrive at school that is another matter and one that the board has to determine by questioning. A man may have all the fine personal characteristics that go to make a leader, and yet, due to a lack of basic education, be unsuited for training as an officer. The Army officer, in this age of mechanization and precision weapons, must have a working knowledge of basic mathematics and allied subjects. A little skillful questioning reveals whether ro not the candidate meets this test. If he does, if he shows by his actions or record that he is a potential leader, and if he meets the physical standards, he is sent on his way to Officer Candidate School in a hurry.

One can tell if a man has leadership by his personality, poise, the volume and clarity of his voice, his ability to teach and direct others, his judgment and his experience in handling men.

Familiarity with mathematics, geography, and current events and good grammar always make an impression on the board.

Neatness and good bearing are considered important, and then the man's mental attitude and dependability are taken into consideration.

As for educational background, a limited formal education will not hamper a candidate who can lead men and has proved it during his basic training period.

COMFORT

There are mighy few square pegs in round holes in Uncle Sam's Army. And Private Raymond E. Forbes is good evidence of the fact. It seems that Private Forbes is allergic to woolen clothing. At his station in Fort Bliss, Texas, the weather has been known to become a bit frosty. But the army has solved his problem. He has been transferred to the Panama Canal Zone. Now he can wear cotton khaki the whole year round.

Service Companies Effect Change To Improve Efficiency

Reorganization of the huge and ungainly service companies of the second and third student training regiments into service battalions was completed recently.

Prior to the reorganization these companies each had about 1,500 colored troops who service the mess halls, barracks and guard detachments of the training regiments in the Harmony Church area. Administration, discipline, supply were all large-scale headaches.

Now each company is made into a battalion of six companies. There is a headquarters and headquarters company with a guard platoon and an overhead platoon, and there is one company of cadre for each of the five battalions in the regiments. For instance all of the K. P.'s, cooks, waiters and barracks orderlies for one battalion are all in one company housed near their work area.

The service battalion of the second regiment is commanded by Major Robert H. Garrison, while Major Francis J. Fishburn is the commanding officer in the third regiment.

Famous Sheet To Be Revived

"54th Liaison" Dates From World War I

This week the 54th Armored Infantry of the 10th Armored Division will reach back twenty-five years into his history and revive its famous Regimental newspaper of World War I days, "The 54th Liaison." This newspaper enjoyed the distinction of being the first newspaper published by the A. E. F. during the last war. The paper was founded in 1918 by Chaplain Gregory Mabry of the World War 54th U. S. Infantry.

"The 54th Liaison" of that day attracted considerable attention because of the high spirit and morale that was reflected within its pages. General Pershing was one of the readers of the World War paper, and in an official letter written in 1919, he called attention to the excellence of the paper.

The members of the present 54th Armored Infantry feel that they can not do better than to revive the name of the Regimental paper which became famous in the last war, and they hope to recapture some of the spirit that was characteristic of the old paper. A staff for the newspaper has been appointed by Lieut. Franklin A. Bideford, S-2 of the 54th Armored Infantry, who will act as manager and advisor of the paperf. Sergeant Paul E. Jenkins will be Editor-in-chief of the new "54th Liaison."

The "54th Liaison" was founded at Saint-Broing-les-Moines, France, in 1918, Chaplain Mabry, of the old 54th Infantry, writes that the paper was prepared on a Remington typewriter "suffering from rheumatic joints and overwork," and that the newspaper copy was carried several kilometers to the French town of Dijon where it was printed. Publication of the paper in those days depended on the temperament of "an asthmatic Ford," Model 1912, which carried the copy to the printer at Dijon. When the Ford failed, so did the newspaper.

The 54th Liaison was published by the Regiment during service with the Army of Occupation in Germany, and lived up to its name of "liaison" by maintaining contact between the companies and battalions of the Regiment which were scattered throughout numerous German towns.

Chemical Warfare School Completed

Students of the 10th Armored Division Chemical Warfare School have just completed an intensive three and a half-week's course under the supervision of the Division Chemical Officer, Captain Harry B. Feldman.

Each regiment, battalion within a regiment, and separate battalions and companies sent one officer and one non-commissioned officer to the school which was held in Building 805. In all, 50 men received "certificates of proficiency" certifying the satisfactory completion of the course.

The course included such subjects as decontamination, chemical intelligence, tactics, training and first aid.

Captain Feldman, who conducted the school, is former head of the War Department Civilian Protection School at Amherst College, Mass.

Fierce Mascot

Speaking of mascots, Service Company, 11th Armored Regiment, boasts of one of the most unusual in the 10th Armored Division. Tommy is a 5 month-old Southern California "bob cat" or "mountain lion" which was brought to Fort Benning when the Regiment was transferred from the West. He is shown in the arms of First Sergeant Thomas F. Burke.

Contest Winner Congratulated

Thompson whose suggested title, "10th Armored Tigers" was selected as the official name for the Division. Sgt. Thompson will receive a seven-day furlough for winning the recent contest.

Baseball League

With the 10th Armored Division baseball leagues at the halfway mark, the 3rd Armored Regiment has forged ahead in the National loop while in the American circuit the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion is knotted with the Maintenance Battalion.

Led by their hard-hitting captain, Private Lee Walsh, the 3rd Armored broke a tie with the 54th Infantry when they pounded out an easy 15 to 5 victory over the faltering 420th Field Artillery Battalion Saturday afternoon. On Sunday the 54th doughboys tasted defeat for the first time when they bowed to the "Mighty 55th" Engineer Battalion.

The 11th Armored Regiment climbed into fourth place by hammering out a 9 to 3 decision over the 423rd F. A.

In the American league, the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion is tied with the Maintaineers for first place with two wins apiece.

With Delmarter, Preller and Kowalski, the Recons have a powerful club which, at this writing, looks to be the inside choice in the league. Their easy 14 to 4 win over Division Headquarters Company stamps them as the team to beat in the American loop.

Supply Battalion moved into the third slot Saturday with a 7 to 0 shutout over the 150th Signal Company.

Headquarters Company kept the 80th Medical Battalion in the cellar by winning a 14 to 10 slugfest.

Standings in the National and American leagues, including last Sunday's games, are as follows:

General Praises 55th Engineers On Record Trek

In a special letter of commendation, Major General Paul W. Newgarden, Commander of the 10th Armored Division, praised the officers and men of the 55th Engineer Battalion for their "fine performance" on a recent march.

Last week the men of the "Mighty 55th" completed a march of 29.6 miles in 9 hours and 40 minutes. Not a man in the battalion fell out.

In his letter, General Newgarden pointed out that "you (commanding officer of the Battalion) have not only intelligently hardened your men physically, but established a spirit of determination of which you should be proud. All members of your Battalion are commended for their part in establishing this fine performance."

O. C. Schools Open Now For L. S. Soldiers

Provide Officers In Administration, Branch Immaterial

Limited service soldiers will now have an opportunity to try for a commission, according to a recent War Department announcement. This will be in the administrative branch of the service, and candidates who have minor defects which disqualify them for full field duty, will have preference over those physically fit for general service.

The new officer candidates school, which will be called "The Officer Candidate School of the Army Administration Schools," has been constituted under direction of The Adjutant General to provide officers trained for general administrative duties in positions where the branch of the officer is not material.

Qualifications for attendance at this school will be the same as currently prescribed for applicants for other schools, with the following exceptions:

(1) Applicants who meet physical standards prescribed for commissioned officers for limited service will be eligible for attendance at the school. Applicants who are physically qualified for limited service only and who meet other requirements for selection will be given preference over applicants who are physically fit for general service.

(2) It is not necessary that applicants posses those high qualities of leadership essential for combat command.

Branches of the school will be located at civilian educational institutions. Classes of approximately 450 candidates were enrolled bi-weekly commencing on or about September 15.

A system of solid-train movements of tank cars has been inaugurated to increase the flow of oil by rail to eastern states.

Tenth Armored Team Ready For Quiz Kids

"On the beam" is the term for the 10th Armored Division's crack quiz team which soundly tromped a picked team from the main post recently at Service Club No. 2 in the Sand Hill Area.

Answering 80 per cent of the questions fired at them, the 10th Armored team, composed of Sgt. Gayle Mattingly, 11th A. R.; Cpl. Melchoir Abeley, 3rd. A. R.; Sgt. Walter Kelsey, Div. Hqs., and Sgt. Saul Miller, won by the score of 425 to 345. The "Mental Wizards" of the 10th got off on the right foot and kept answering 'em as they came, and the outcome was never in doubt. The team from the main post was composed of Sgt. Wm. Howitz of the 24th General Hospital, Pvt. Milton Luban, U. S. S. C.; Pvt. John Rubel, D. E. H. L., and Pvt Milton Wolf of the 77th Ordnance.

Mrs. Winifred Baker, senior hostess of the Service Club, presented both teams with cigarettes. Corporal James E. Frye of Div. Hqs. Co. served as master of ceremonies.

What Makes a Champion Golfer

Proper holds, stance and the swing which make a champion golfer are explained to Sergeant Carl Burnett by Sergeant A. Robert Milco, right, former champion. Both are in the 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion. (10th Armored Division Photo by Kerbs.)

Ex-Golf Champ Still Finds Time for Game

Armored Force Linksman Winner of Many Trophies

Members of Headquarters Company, 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, have wondered why on each Saturday afternoon their diminutive Sergeant A. Robert Milco always makes a B-line for Atlanta.

At reveille on Mondays, Sergeant Milco never had that "morning after" look, but always he was silent as to the purpose of his week-end jaunts.

Finally, after a little reconnaissance work, the company discovered it was the Belvin Country Club, home club of Bobby Jones, that was the magnet drawing the soldier to Atlanta whenever time and finances permitted.

Sergeant Milco is a golfer, a former champion. Fifteen months in the Army has not separated him completely from his favorite diversion. A native of Hartford, Conn., he won the Connecticut State Amateur in 1940 and the same year qualified for the National Amateur, but failed to qualify for the final round.

From other tournaments, Sergeant Milco has accumulated a roomful of cups. In 1939 he won the Fraconia Country Club tournament at Springfield, Mass., and in 1940 took top honors at both the Shevacossett and Farmington Country Club invitation tournaments in Connecticut.

Although he plays much less frequently than in civilian life, he still is able to keep his scores in the low seventies. Sergeant Milco realizes that being a soldier is a full time job, but still likes to grab a round of golf, time and other elements permitting.

What's New With the QM

If you like sheepskins, and couldn't get to college, you stand a better chance of getting one by being a G. I. than you would otherwise. Seems that Uncle Sam's quartermasters have announced that they are going to use just about every sheepskin coat that can be manufactured this fall and winter.

Latest word heard at Benning is that the government has put a stop order on the use of lamb shearlings (skins to you) for the present, and perhaps the duration. And even with all those available in use, the Q. M. C. still won't have enough for present needs. What it all means is that baby brother back home won't be able to get his junior ski suit with sheepskin lining this year because your pal who is a bombardier in the Air Force has first call.

Comrades-at-arms in the Southwest Pacific Area no longer have to depend on the convoys from home to bring them foods, because the good old Q. M. C. is now supplying them with generous amounts of Australian meats, fresh from the cattle ranches down under. Since stock-raising is a major industry there, ample supplies of beef, pork and lamb are readily available.

Not only are the lads in Australia getting meats, but there is also an abundance of fresh fruit available such as apples, oranges, grapes, bananas, lemons and figs. And in a short time, all G. I.'s in the MacArthur command will wear woolen uniforms made in Australia, since that country is also a leading wool producer. Result of all this "on the scene" supply work is that thousands of tons of cargo space in ships Pacific-bound can be saved, which means getting more men there quicker.

Yeah man, look what G. I. Joe has now—suspenders, no less. Yes, it's true. For the first time in Army history, soldiers in Uncle Sam's ranks will be seen wearing suspenders this fall. It doesn't mean, however, that you and I will wear braces like we used to in civilian life. No sir, these are to be special galluses (and not Talmadge-red either) for lads in combat units who have extra-heavy loads to carry.

Seems that the Q. M. C. has discovered that paratchutists, jungle and mountain troops especially have such heavy loads of fighting equipment which is carried in huge cargo pockets that there's been a heavy strain on belts of late. So the master-developers have come up with a new-style suspender that gives a much more equitable distribution of weight.

Colonel Massey, post Q. M. boss, claims that the new braces offer an entirely new theory in shoulder suspension whereby an ever-changing distribution of weight while on the march is provided, plus constant freedom of movement. Sounds like a big help!

The quartermasters will also earn a rising vote of thanks from American ski troopers this winter, because they've found a way to make it easier for the lads to go up-hill, which is something. Latest wrinkle is a "climber" made of mohair material. All Pvt. Skier has to do is attach the contrivance to the bottom of his wooden runners, and presto he can glide up the hills practically as easily as he comes down. Well, not quite, perhaps!

The Q. M. C. got the idea from Old John Seal whose turned-up back hair permits a facility of movement. Because the mohair material of the "climber" goes against the grain, it gives the skier additional traction on the long climbs up hill.

Sgt. Thompson Gets Prize in Naming Contest

The "10th Armored Tigers"

That's the official title selected for the 10th Armored Division, chosen from over 900 entries submitted by enlisted personnel of the Division during the recent name contest.

To Master Sergeant Sterling G. Thompson, operations sergeant of the 3rd. Armored Regiment, goes the honor of being the enlisted man submitting the winning tribe.

For submitting the title suggested, Sergeant Thompson gets a seven-day furlough and four other enlisted men receive one-day passes each for receiveing "honorable mention" entries.

Sergeant Thompson, who boasts of more than 20 years in the service, has been assigned to the 10th Armored Division since July 15. He is 40 years old and married to Mrs. Mary L. Thompson. They have a son 15 and a daughter 14. The sergeant's home is in Augusta, Ga.

The title, "10th Armored Tigers," was selected by Major General Paul W. Newgarden, Division Commanding General, after a careful check of the 900 entries.

Coincident with the selection, it was announced that the name of the proposed "Ranger Platoons" to be composed of crack reconnaissance men of the various regiments in the division will be changed to "Tiger Platoons," in order that the designation of the latter units will be more in accord with the Division's title.

"Tiger platoons" to be selected from the various units will be chosen only after aspirants have passed a still 48-hour test in the field, including marching five miles in one hour with fighting equipment; carbine, tommy gun and machine gun shooting, swimming, vehicle driving, map reading and scouting and patrolling through swampy ground, day and night.

"Tiger platoons" will be authorized to paint the Tiger design on their vehicles and wear its insignia on their persons. Members of "Tiger platoons" are considered the elite of the "Tenth Armored Tigers."

Those receiving one-day passes for "honorable mention" entries in the contest and their entries are:

Private G. C. Moore, Jr., 11th Armorde Regiment, "10th Torando."

Corporal Horace B. Swain, 5th Armored Infantry, "The Armored Avalanche."

Sergeant Chas. E. Laux, Jr., 420th Field Artillery Battalion, "The Thunderbolt."

Sergeant John Hornyak, 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, "The Spearhead Division."

29th Band Head Is Elevated

One of Only 114 Chief Warrant Officers in U. S.

Warrant Officer Albert Andrews of the 29th Infantry has been named chief warrant officer, one of only 114 in the entire army, regimental headquarters announces.

Mr. Andrews has been a member of the Army band at Washington, D. C., for a number of years, and served with the band in World War I. He also attended the Army Music School in Washington. As a Warrant Officer his record stands as a model.

The 29th band conductor is known throughout the Army for the care, patience, and exactness with which he prepares his musical programs and arrangements. For those who desire to develop musically, Mr. Andrews' formula has been to use his "driving" personality to mold his musicians which results in a fine band.

In addition to his work as a conductor of the band, he has been instrumental in the formation of the 29th Glee Club which was so successful last year, and which is expected to be resumed once again this year under the auspices of the Special Service Office.

CONGRATULATIONS, to those whose vision contained such a publication as the "Benning Bayonet." It fills a great need. Then too, it is the launching of a new agency, the spading up of new ground, the departure from ordinary routine. All this saves life from becoming drab and colorless. However, there is nothing drab or colorless in the life and age in which we are now living. It is glamorous, dangerous, adventurous.

"AN AGE ON AGES TELLING, TO BE LIVING IS SUBLIME."

Some of you men in the service may think otherwise, may think that you have fallen on hard places. A year or two ago you had little thought of the army. You were in school, college or concerned with making good in your trade or profession. Now all that has changed. A great upheaval has taken place in your life. You are in a new environment with new duties, new companionship, and the adjustment has often been very difficult, but happily most of you men succeed gloriously in fitting yourselves into the changed conditions.

DON'T TALK BACK

It might not be amiss for a Chaplain with twenty-five years of experience in the army to offer you a bit of advice. OBEY ORDERS and DON'T TALK BACK. You do not like these words, Obedience to Orders. At least you didn't before you came into the service. If your employer told you to do something and you didn't like the tone of his voice or what he told you to do, you could wriggle your fingers, put on your coat and go your way. You can't do that now. Oh! Yes, you can go over the hill, but you won't get far, and when you return you will find that you have gotten yourself into a bigger mess. Learn to obey orders without question. That is necessary in time of peace —imperative in time of war. All are under orders in the army, from the buck private, to the Secretary of War. All must Obey.

After all, it is not such a strain, this matter of discipline. Most of your superior officers are fine fellows, anxious to help you, always on the alert for good material, men who are trustworthy, dependable.

WRITE OWN TICKET

Life in the service of one's country is what you make it. You can come to a bad end there. You can come to a bad end in college.

"It matters not how straight
the gate,
How charged with punishment the Scroll,
You are the master of your Fate,
The Captain of your Soul."

This Chaplain hopes that all the men who read these lines may read on the certificate of his discharge from the United States Army these words, Character EXCELLENT.

Minister, Priest, Rabbi Symbolize Unity

Symbolical of the nation's unity in the face of its greatest crisis in which men of all races and creeds are challenging the menace to our way of life shoulder to shoulder is the meeting of a Protestant minister, a Catholic priest, and a rabbi in the post chapel at Fort Benning for a moment of worship. Before them are seated the corps of chaplains assigned to Benning who are listening instead of speaking from the pulpit. Shown above are Father Thomas Patrick Kelly, post Catholic chaplain; Lt. Col. Frank M. Thompson, post chaplain; and Rabbi Samson A. Shain, post Jewish chaplain. Chaplain Thompson heads the complement of 46 chaplains, representing almost all faiths and denominations in the United States, who administer to the spiritual needs of Benning soldiers. Their presence on the post is a concrete demonstration that one of the most important of the Four Freedoms, freedom of worship guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, is in practical operation here and elsewhere in our country.

Miss Hagan Is Bride Of Lieut. Sexton

Colonel and Mrs. James Holden Hagan, of Fort Benning, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Mary Jeanne Hagan, to Lieutenant Luther Leonard Sexton, in Auburn, Ala.

Mrs. Sexton attended Notre Dame, Baltimore, Md., and Randolph Macon, Woman's College, in Lynchburg, Va., where she was a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

Faithful Filipinos Await Liberation Day

Prior to the battles of Bataan, Joan Q. Public heard just about enough of the Army's Philippine Scouts to consider them something between a bolo swinging savage and a cigar store Indian. But today we know them to be heroes who fought gloriously and courageously by the side of American doughboys, giving their all for flag and country in the Philippines. And thus was established a new bond of brotherhood between the brown man and the white . . . a deeper understanding of racial freedom and tolerance.

An excellent example of a Filipino soldier who has given 29 years of devoted service to the U. S. Army is Pfc. Gumersindo Joaquin. When he was 19 years old he enlisted in the Philippine Scouts in his native province, Laoag, Northern Luzon. He has served in Corregidor, in China and with the regular Army in Hawaii.

RECORD EXCELLENT

Pfc. Joaquin is an expert pistol and rifle shot. Long ago he graduated from the Army Cooks and Bakers School at Ft. Wm. McKinley, Rizal, P. I. and has acted in the capacity of mess sergeant, company supply sergeant, first sergeant and drum major of the band with the Philippine Scouts. Because of his excellent character and record with the Scouts, he was ordered to duty with the Regular Army and saw service in China, later enlisting with the 8th Field Artillery for duty in Hawaii. By this time, Joaquin, then a sergeant in the Scouts, had received citations and decorations including the Service Medal and Victory Medal. However, he was glad to become a private with the Regular Army as the pay was higher than a sergeant of the Scouts.

Not only has Joaquin proved to be a good soldier, but as a married man he has been raising and educating a family of five children. His oldest daughter now 18 is attending the University of Hawaii and studying nursing at Queens hospital. Since the war began Pfc. Joaquin has purchased a $100 bond for each of his five children.

SCORNS JAP MILITARISTS

When asked his opinion of Japanese militarists, he said, "I have only contempt for treachery and traitors. I think the war would be over in six months if we can meet the Japs on even terms in offensive battles. The Japanese have been fighting and beating practically defenseless peoples. They are now learning what it means to fight an armed United States. We will win decisively and my native Philippines will again be free and happy under the stars and stripes. Filipinos in Hawaii are ready and willing to die for our cause."

In about a year Pfc. Joaquin expects to retire from active duty after 30 years' service. He hopes to retire with a rating high enough that he will be able to support his family and continue to educate his children in the American way. "My retirement pension will be my main source of income for the rest of my life," he said. "The last few years, since I had a major operation, I cannot work so hard. My wife and I do not require much, and if my children are educated I know that America will offer them opportunity."

We salute Pfc. Gumersindo Joaquin, former Philippine Scout, who has given 29 years of faithful service to the Stars and Stripes . . . and we salute those of his countrymen who fought and died for freedom in the fox holes of Bataan. — "The Midpacifican," Hawaii.

Second S. T. R. Claims Largest White Company In United States

Hq. and Hq. Company, 2nd Stud. Tng. Regt., has as one of its claims to fame, one of the largest white companies in the United States armed forces. The company is under the command of Capt. Edward C. Elliott, and occupies the area just east of Theatre No. 4, along El Caney road.

According to 1st Sgt. Green, the company is composed of almost all non-commissioned officers, of which to date there are 316 men assigned to the company, and 326 men attached. These figures are smaller than those of a month ago which numbered 414 men assigned, and 432 men attached. This drop in strength is due to the fact that the enlisted cadre of the Third Regiment and Brigade Headquarters was drawn from Headquarters Company.

The breakdown by order of rank shows the following totals: 3 Mr. Sgts., 21 1st Sgts., 2 Tech. Sgts., 30 St. Sgts., 53 Sgts., 79 Cpls., 30 Tech. 4'ths, and 33 Tech. 5'ths. All these men are quartered and rationed at Headquarters Company, and furnish the enlisted personnel in Regimental Headquarters and all the battalions and companies of the Regiments.

Private Saves Colonel Is Promoted To Sgt.

FT. GEORGE WRIGHT, Wash.—The sharp eyes of a Georgia boy who can tell while a cartridge case is flipping out of a machine gun whether it has been fired, brought him the answer to a soldier's dream—a jump from buck private to sergeant.

The unusual circumstance was related by Capt. H. E. Coyer, public relations officer at the 2d Air Force base here, in announcing the advancement of William E. Edwards, 18 - year - old Rock Springs, Ga., soldier.

Edwards, by his sharp eyesight and swift action, prevented probably serious and possibly fatal injury to Col. William E. Matheny, base commander.

Pvt. Edwards was watching as the commander fired a machine gun. As one of the cartridge cases flipped from the gun, the soldier saw the primer was not dented in the usual manner of a fired case.

Springing forward, he prevented the colonel from firing another burst. Inspection disclosed the defective cartridge had left its bullet lodged in the machine-gun barrel. Another shot would have resulted at least in a blown-up gun, and possibly in serious injury to the officer.

Col. Matheny called him in the following day and announced: "Pvt. Edwards, you are now Sgt. Edwards."

Atonement Day To Be Observed By Soldiers

Four Services Slated For School, Theater September 20-21

Yom Kipper, or the Day of Atonement, will be observed by Fort Benning troops of the Jewish faith in a series of four services to be conducted by Chaplain Samson Aaron Shain September 20 and 21. Post headquarters has announced that all Jewish soldiers may be excused for these services.

Worship will begin Sunday evening, Sept. 20, at 7 p. m. in Children's School Auditorium. At 10 a. m., Monday, worship will take place in the Main Theater, and again at 4 p. m. in Children's School. The Holy Day music will be rendered by a choir of officers and men. An officer will act as cantor. The Atonement fast will be broken at 8:15 p. m., Monday, with a reception in Children's School. This reception is being arranged by the Army-Navy committee of the Jewish Welfare Board, of which Edward Korn of Columbus is director. At the same time Chairman Herman Julius and his committee are making arrangements for Jewish soldiers to receive hospitality in Columbus homes during the Holy Day season.

Period of Prayer

This sacred period of prayer and worship was ushered in September 11-13 with Rosh Hashanah, or the Jewish New Year. It marked the arrival of the year 5703 in the Hebrew calendar. During the period Jews throughout the world offer their ancient prayer for peace and seek divine forgiveness for sins through penetance.

In his Holy Day message to Jewish troops in his command, Col. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning extended his heartiest greetings and good wishes to the men and their families.

PATRIOTISM PRAISED

"Jews throughout the history of America have made great contributions to the economic, spiritual and cultural progress of America and have been ever ready to do more than their share in the defense of our beloved country," Col. Fulton wrote. "The thousands of Jewish men participating in America's armed forces, I am sure, speak well indeed for the genuine patriotism and loyalty of American Jewry.

"May the New Year bring America, all mankind, and Jewry surcease from want and war and care."

Service Battalion Gets New Club

Opening of a service club for the huge service battalion of the second student training regiment at The Infantry School here was announced recently by Col. M. G. Stubbs, regimental commander. The club is a place of relation for the colored troops who service this Officer Candidate training regiment, a lounge where they may entertain visitors of the fairer sex. Its new hostess is Miss Olga Williams, formerly of Spelman College in Atlanta, Ga.

WAAC's Brisk Eaters Benning Q. M. Declares

Dislike Liver, Circus Water; Go for Spuds and Beef Steak

If the ladies around Columbus are worried these days about their lack of a hearty appetite, they might do well to consider joining the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, according to Colonel Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning quartermaster.

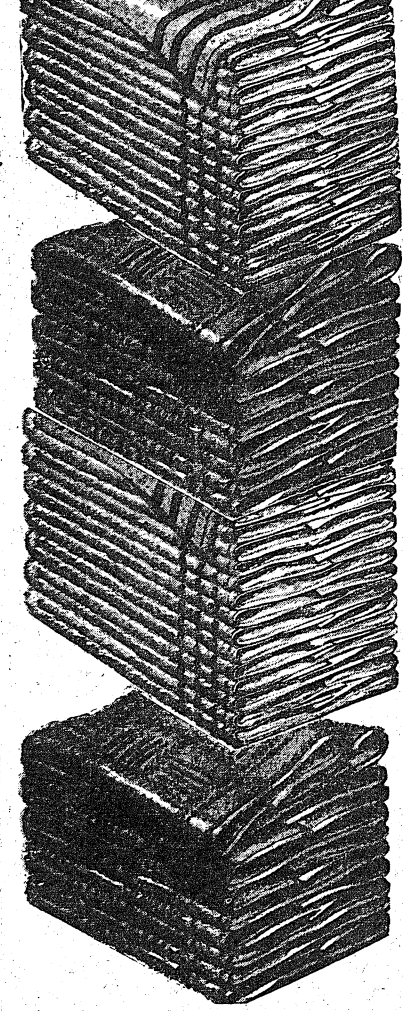
The Benning supply official stated yesterday that when the Q. M. C. started out feeding the WAAC's at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, only medium meals were provided, but it was soon discovered that hard work quickly wiped out the difference in meals between women and men.

Like the men in service, the women trainees wanted beefsteak and potatoes—and plenty of it. The quartermasters soon discovered that the women were eating six times as much as in civilian life (men eat only five times as much)—and believe it or not, instead of letting out their uniforms, they are taking them in.

WANT PIE A LA MODE

Colonel Massey said the officials in charge of the school, however, had found the ladies somewhat finicky about their chow at times. For instance, they don't like just pie—they want it a la mode. And liver and onions, definitely a male choice, is just as definitely unpopular with the female army.

Neither do they like canned fruit juices, known as "circus water." Instead they prefer fresh fruit drinks, and they like milk even better than either. Cold cuts, which are life-savers for most women, are out with the women's Army. What they do like is steak, chicken, roast beef and pork. The men agree 100 per cent on this score, and demand their meat three times a day, while the ladies cheerfully accept substitutes.



The WAAC's are great for macaroni and cheese, Spanish rice, spaghetti and meatballs and similar dishes. But they don't care too much for soups. They also go for salads and want a variety of these, all dressed up too. They are usually garnished with lettuce and parsley. Men like salads, too, but they don't want the trimmings usually, the Benning quartermaster added in conclusion.

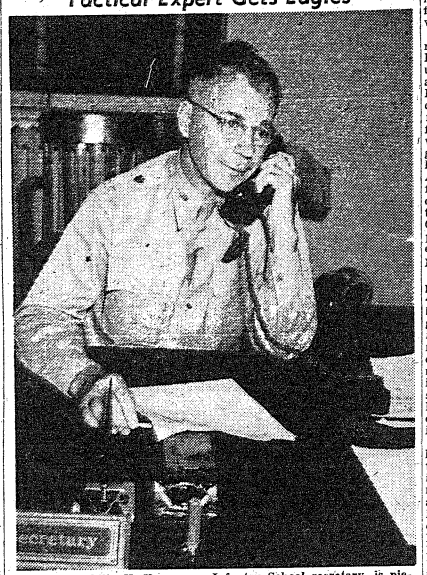
Station Hospital Has Fine War Bond Record Challenges Other Units

Technician Invests 83% of Salary In U. S. Securities

Station Hospital, Fort Benning, subscribes $6,142.75 monthly in pay reservations towards the purchase of war securities. Enlisted men alone reserve $3,000.25 for this purpose. One technician fifth grade receiving $66 a month allots $56.25 of his pay every pay day for a $50 and $25 bond.

This, in a nut-shell, is the story of the financial sacrifices being made at Fort Benning by a non-combatant group that is sending its dollars to the wars. The men and women of Station Hospital do not carry offensive arms into battle. Their prime responsibility in this war is to keep them fighting. They will even have to take care of the wounded enemy who fall into their hands. But as Capt. Donahue Emerson, adjutant of Station Hospital, points out, they want to help bring victory as early as possible, thus reducing bloodshed and loss of life as much as possible.

192 NEW RESERVATIONS



In August there were 192 new pay reservations bringing the total to 1,064 exclusive of civilians and the veterinary detachment. The increase in August over July in dollars and cents amounted to $711.50. Many of the men had already bought a number of bonds before the pay reservation plan was begun on May 1. Several in the lower salary bracket showed up with as much as $250 worth of bonds, having converted their savings into war securities.

Lt. N. F. Nedopad is war bonds officer for the hospital. He is assisted by Mr. Sgt. Clarence Auger, personnel sergeant major.

As representatives of their unit, these men have cited their record and thrown down the gauntlet to all other organizations at Fort Benning, with the statement "we are outbuying and will continue to outbuy every unit on the reservation."

Woman's Club

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

The question of whether there would be a Woman's Club this coming season can now be answered in the affirmative. Not only will there be a Woman's Club, but plans are underway for the membership drive and the traditional tea, which has always opened the season. The first meeting and tea will be held on the first Monday in October, which will be the 5th of the month.

Acknowledgement must be made to Mrs. Leven C. Allen, Honorary President, for her deep understanding of the needs of army women at Fort Benning. Her sympathy and appreciation of the necessity of a common meeting place to acquire new friends and acquaint themselves with the customs of the service, gave impetus for her whole hearted sponsorship. It is Mrs. Allen's conviction that the natural feeling of belonging to an army organization will tend to interest the members in the vital Red Cross activities, which is an imperative duty of all patriotic women today.

MRS. KELLY PRESIDENT

Mrs. Reginal H. Kelly will be president of the club for the 1942-43 season. She has spent many happy years as an army wife. Her great personal charm will be an important factor in the smooth functioning of the various branches of the organization. She has mothered a large and happy family. Her experience and understanding of young people's problems will make her an ideal leader of the newcomers to the service.

Mrs. Kelly held a meeting of her executive board to discuss the various policies of the organization for the coming year. The new officers for the coming year are: Mrs. Reginal H. Kelly, president; Mrs. Leveen C. Allen, honorary president; Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden, first vice president; Mrs. Williams Denton, second vice president; Mrs. Sevier Tupper, treasurer; Mrs. Richard McKee, recording secretary; Mrs. Clarence Sagmoen, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Paul Hamilton, program chairman.

A second meeting was held in Mrs. Kelly's quarters with the chairman of her group committees: Mrs. George P. Howell, membership; hospitality, Mrs. Syril E. Faine; Mrs. John B. Spitzer, music; Mrs. F. W. Pratt, bridge; Mrs. Horace L. Beall, book review Mrs. C. P. Chapman, practical homemaking; Mrs. H. P. Perrine, Spanish; Mrs. John Hamilton, creative writing; Mrs. Clark N. Bailey, publicity.

TALENTED WOMEN

The list of group activities is not complete. Mrs. Kelly plans to extend the scope of this popular branch of the Woman's Club, for she feels there is a wealth of talent and ability among the women who may be persuaded to take an active part in sharing their talents if their modesty and reluctance to make themselves known is overcome. The popularity of the group activities in the past proved their worth in bringing together women of mutual interests and talents.

Over and over the question was asked last year, "I'm the wife of a Reserve Officer—" or "I'm the wife of a National Guard Officer, am I eligible to join?" The answer was yes, they were especially invited to become a member of the Woman's Club. This year the answer is the same. All wives of officers and members of the Army Nurse Corps are eligible for membership. The dues are nominal, so nominal as to be almost infinitesimal when the many benefits and pleasure derived from that membership are considered.

MANY WELCOMERS

Last year there were a great many newcomers to the army who found a great deal of happiness and sense of belonging to the service through the Woman's Club. It is now their turn to establish themselves firmly in the traditions of army wives by helping those who have recently become members of the Fort Benning group of army wives. If each person who is anticipating her second year of membership accepts the responsibility of acquainting her recently arrived neighbors of the forthcoming club season, she will be accepting the responsibilities of her proud title of army wife.

A drive for membership will be started shortly under the direction of Mrs. George P. Howell. Mrs. Howell's committee will conduct an active campaign to acquaint every eligible woman of the forthcoming season that she may become a member of the Fort Benning Woman's Club.

Navy Loses Normandie; Army Gains Officer

The burning of the Normandie was quite a blow to the United States Navy but to the Army it gave Officer Candidate, now Second Lt. Walter E. Greene, a recent graduate of the 7th Company, second student training regiment.

Lt. Greene was working aboard the Normandie, being converted to a troop transport in New York harbor, when the giant fire broke out on the former trans-Atlantic queen and Greene got off in a lifeboat lowered over the sides.

He had been working as a translator of technical French documents for the engineers working on the liner. After this job went up in flames he decided he would enlist in the Army, for he wanted to do something for national defense.

The Army was nothing new to Lt. Greene, as he served with the Doughboys overseas in the last war. While with the Army of Occupation he was selected to attend the University of Toulouse in France, returned to France after being discharged to take more work at the University and remained in France as a business man and hotel owner until the 1930's when he came back to New York and opened a French restaurant.

Vets Of Dec. 7 Practice Digging Holes For Japs

If anyone at Fort Benning desires first-hand information on the importance of digging in, then let him page Sgt. Thomas Crabtree of St. Louis, Mo., and his buddy, Sgt. Harold Ethridge of Marion, Ala., now officer candidates in the third student training regiment.

These men were at Pearl Harbor the day the Japs began their sneak thrust at the United States. They have actually seen deadly bomb splinters flying about, and know how necessary it is to dig and swiftly.

Sgt. Crabtree was stationed at Schofield Barracks, as section leader of weapons and light machine guns, while Ethridge was with a fighter command of the Army Air Force.

Because of their outstanding performances, they were selected to attend the Infantry School for a three-month course leading to a commission in the Army of the United States.

When they complete their work here, come mid-November, they hope to be sent back to their pals in Hawaii and from there to the front where they can help repay the Jap for his infamous attack on a friend.

Post Adjutant Made Lt. Colonel

Rosenberger Wins Promotion After 3 Months Here

LT. COL. J. D. ROSENBERGER, JR.

Major J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., since July adjutant at Fort Benning, has been promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Colonel Rosenberger is a resident of Birmingham, Ala., and came to Benning in July from San Jose, Calif., where he was assistant adjutant for the Seventh Army Corps and acting adjutant for three months. While in California he was assistant to Col. Norris A. Wimberley, who left Fort Benning last spring.

Before being called to active duty in January, 1941, Colonel Rosenberger was active in the Reserve Officers' Association, holding executive offices in associations for the corps area and state.

He was promoted to major in January, 1942, and came to Fort Benning under orders from the adjutant general's office in Washington which, on July 1, changed the status of post adjutant so that it will be filled in the future by an officer from the adjutant general's office.

NAMESAKE

When the movie star, Carole Landis, visited Fort Bliss, Tex., she took the camp by storm. On a tour of the camp Miss Landis saw a sergeant carrying his newly acquired pet—a tiny puppy, not yet named. The star was delighted with the little dog and stopped to admire it. "What is that adorable little thing's name?" she asked. The private hadn't been in the Army six months for nothing. He gave Miss Landis his most diplomatic smile and replied, "Carole, of course."

30-Year Non-Com Record Compiled by Sgt. Daniels

Campaigned Against Villa; Chef Extraordinary at Fort

An outstanding record of nearly thirty years service as a colored non-com in the United States Army has been compiled by Master Sergeant George L. Daniels of the Service Battalion of the Second Student Training Regiment, making him the dean of this Regiment at the age of 47.

Sergeant Daniels was born in Huntsville, Ala., October 27, 1895. He enlisted in the Regular Army in Chattanooga, Tennessee and was sworn in at Columbus, Ohio, in November, 1912.

Thus began his long army career that was to take him all over the United States and into Mexico where he campaigned against Pancho Villa in 1914 and again in 1915 and 1916. He remained in Mexico after the Border Incident until 1917 to train wild horses for the Cavalry. Upon his return to the United States he was transferred to the Quartermaster Corps.

It was in the Quartermaster Corps that Sergeant Daniels began his career in Mess Management. He has conducted Mess for many well-known Army generals including General Heinzman and General Ralph Parker.

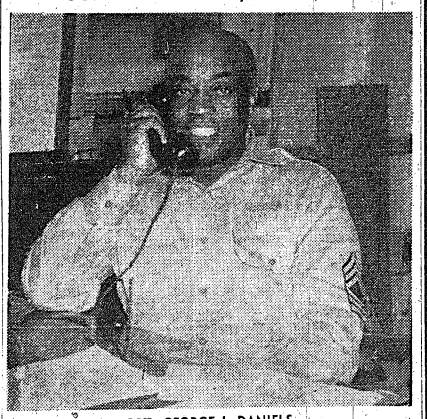
In September of 1933 Sergeant Daniels was assigned to duties at Ft. Benning, Ga., and placed in charge of the Service Company Mess of 24th Infantry. He was so expert that in 1940 he was transferred to the Bakers and Cooks School in the grade of Technical Sergeant. In May of this year he became a part of Service Company, Second Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School. He was promoted to the grade of Master Sergeant after taking over Mess Management of what is now Service Battalion.

In his spare time he enjoys cooking for the Commandant of the Infantry School, General Allen, and other high ranking officers assigned to duty at Ft. Benning. Master Sergeant Daniels is a particular favorite of the officers . . . and they swear by his cooking.

Classes Held For Troopers

Back In School To Learn 3 R's In Leisure Hours

School days are not over for many of the men of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), one of the largest colored organization in the Army. Voluntarily giving up their precious time off duty four nights a week, more than 115 members of the regiment who were denied educational advantages in civilian life are being given an opportunity to learn their "three R's" under personal supervision in classes conducted by the Adult Education Program, Works Projects Administration.



The popularity and success of smaller classes led to the organization of the class on a regimental basis. Through the cooperation of Colonel Ellis F. Altman, commanding officer of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), a building in the regimental area was equipped as a schoolroom, and an individual table was assigned to each man attending the class. Regimental funds furnished blackboards, chalk, erasers, tablets, and pencils. Enrollment in the classes was entirely voluntary, although all men in the regiment who could profit by the training were urged to attend.

The first class was held on July 1. All men who enrolled were given test in reading, writing, spelling, and arithmetic, in order that their individual needs could be determined. On the basis of these test, the men were divided into groups of approximately twenty, and each group was assigned a teacher provided through the Adult Education Program. These teachers supervise, rather than lecture, so that each man receives training based on his individual requirements.

The instruction covers reading, writing (including both grammar and spelling) and arithmetic. It has been found that in most cases less training is needed in arithmetic, as the men have acquired an ability to handle figures through experience. Study materials include the Army Life Reader, which emphasizes terms and phrases which they commonly use in their Army work, the "Weekly News," a newspaper especially written for adult education classes, and prepared material on care and driving of truck, the General Orders which apply to guard duty, and other phases of their work.

Classes are held for two hours on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday nights. Despite the fact that the men attending are excused from none of their regular duties, attendance has been very regular, and the men state that they are happy to have the opportunity to improve themselves.

SMOOTH AS GLASS

Armored Division officers at Fort Benning, Ga., found a new way to keep things running smoothly. They offered a 24-hour pass for the highest efficiency in care and maintenance of vehicles. And the soldiers really went to town. The inspecting officer reports that in one case the engine purred so quietly he had to lift the hood to make sure it was running!

Gas Can't Miss Experts Warn

No Second Chance, So Adjust Mask Right

From—America's Alertmen, Ft. Totten, N. Y.

You're slamming shells into your 90, firing at enemy planes that make blask crosses against the leaden sky. Suddenly the vicious scream of a dive bomber hurtling toward your anti-aircraft emplacement pierces your eardrums, and along with it comes the ugly chatter of strafing machine guns. A bullet zings past your head. That slug was as close as a whisper—but it missed, and a miss is as good as a mile.

Not long afterward the enemy lobs over a shell. Somebody yells, "Gas!" You hesitate a moment, look around unbelievably because gas hadn't been used before. Then a whiff sears your eyes, irritates your nose and throat, and you jam on your mask, meanwhile swearing to yourself that next time you'll get it on faster.

GAS NEVER MISSES

The bullet missed, gave you a second chance. Gas never misses.

The one whiff was enough. A thousand knives jab your nose and throat. Waves of nausea sweep you and finally you vomit. Then you tear off your gas mask in order to get a breath of fresh air. You get a breath—of phosgene.

Perhaps you do manage to get that mask back on, and perhaps you do carry on. A couple of hours go by, the attack is over, and you feel fine. Nothing is wrong. You hardly cough and your pulse is normal as you talk to a buddy. Gas never misses.

YOU JUST DIE

Three hours later coughs rack your body, and you have a frothy expectoration. Your skin is bluish quickly now, quickly. Every bit of coughing brings up large quantities of clear, yellowish frothy fluid. Your face goes ashen gray. You don't struggle for breath. You just die. Gas never misses.

If it is mustard gas instead of phosgene, you detect the faint odor of garlic or horseradish. Two hours later, your eyes smart and your nose runs with thin mucus. You sneeze a lot, and tears run down your face. You are nauseous and you throw up. For several hours, pains rip your stomach and abdomen.

As the hours progress, your eyes get worse, your dry throat burns, your voice is hoarse, and you have a dry harsh cough. Your skin is inflamed. Small vesicles grow into large blisters.

YOU ARE ON YOUR OWN

At the end of the day, your eyes pain agonizingly and you can not see because of inflamed and swollen lids. Tears ooze between bulging eyelids over your reddened, slightly blistered face. Your head aches. It may take anywhere from two or three days to three or four weeks before you die.

All this talk is in terms of you for good reason. The blunt fact is that in chemical warfare, every soldier is on his own. The man who does not stop breathing immediately, who does not adjust his mask properly and carefully, who does not clear the face-piece, who becomes panic-stricken, or who is in a hurry to take the mask off—that man is a dead pigeon. His buddy can be of no help at all. Neither can his officers. It's every man for himself. And there are only two kinds of soldiers where gas is concerned: the quick and the dead.

BULLETS AND GAS ARE DIFFERENT

A bullet and gas are two different stories. If you're not in a bullet's path you won't be tagged. But gas spreads and engulfs you. A bullet is an all-or-nothing bet with a fraction of a second in which to do its dirty work. Gas can kill a man three being released if it is out in the open in warm weather. It can kill him a month afterward if it is not exposed to the wind. It can kill him a year later if it is kept in closed rooms or old dugouts. It is just this persistent quality of mustard gas that has suggested the possibility of using it as a chemical barbed wire fence.

FOUR TYPES OF GASES

Actually there are four types of gases, classifying them in the way they affect the body. First there are the lacrimators or crying gases, such as CN or tear gas which all recruits who have been in the gas chamber have whiffed. Second are the lung irritants, of which phosgene is an excellent example. Third come the vesicators or blisterers, the class in which mustard gas falls. Fourth are irritant smokes or sneezing gases, and one of this sort is adamsite.

Their record is perfect—THEY NEVER MISS. ARE YOU NEXT?

BIG HELP

At Camp Shelby, Mississippi, the kitchen police keep the mess hall ringing with phrases like "Let me peel those potatoes, Sarge" and "Oh, I'll see that the dishes are washed." No, it is not a dream. But there is a reason. The Quartermaster Detachment at Shelby has just acquired an electric potato peeler and an electric dishwasher. It's a K.P.'s picture of heaven!

Soldiers' Travel Problems Reach 10,000 in August

Approximately 10,000 questions were asked and answered in the USO-Traveler's Aid during the month of August, enough to drive even the Quiz Kids dizzy. An accurate count is maintained of number of problems presented monthly by soldiers and their families who appeal to the organization for assistance.

"Where can I get a room for my wife? My mother, father, sweetheart (or what have you) is coming in tomorrow on the 1:40 and I shall be unable to meet her. Can you help me? Where can I get a front tooth put in at once? I'm going on a furlough, and my girl isn't going to like this gap in the line."

These are just a few samples of the typical questions asked every day. The USO-Travelers Aid is called upon to suggest useful and inexpensive gifts for various occasions and is often asked to wrap and mail them. The other day some Fort Benning men dragged in barracks bags filled to capacity for the USO to mail home for them.

Most of the workers in the office at Broadway and Tenth street are volunteers. For the month of August Mrs. George Bickerstaff was a close second with 104 hours.

Cables Become Matrimony Bonds In Wired Wedding

SPOKANE, Wash.—A pretty Spokane girl opened with trembling hands a cablegram from her fiance with the United States Army in Australia and read: "Darling, will you marry me by cable? Today I, Benjamin Vaughn, take you, Eleanor Lucille Grandlund, to be my lawful wedded wife. (Signed) Benjamin Vaughn."

Her reply was swift. It read: "Darling, I marry you by cable today. I, Eleanor Grandlund, take you, Benjamin Vaughn, to be my lawful wedded husband. (Signed) Eleanor Grandlund. Attendted: Chaplain Rusel L. Blaisdell."

Records of the ceremony spanning half the globe were on the file today in the county cleric's office here. With them was an affidavit sworn by Vaughn before his commanding officer which read in part:

"Benjamin Vaughn, being sworn and deposed, says his home is at Libby, Mont., and that at present he is with the United States Army in Australia, and that he did on July 13, 1942, transmit a cablegram to Eleanor Lucille Grandlund, Spokane, stating that he took her to be his lawful wedded wife.

"He further deposes that said Eleanor Grandlund did on the 18th day of July file a cablegram, accepting the agreement of marriage, and that copy of said cablegram is attached."

Mrs. Vaughn now lives with her father-in-law at Libby, Mont.

Darby Is Named Executive Officer Of 21st QM Regt.

Appointment of Major James Darby as Regimental Executive Officer of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) was announced by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, commanding officer of that regiment. This constitutes Major Darby second in command of his regiment, the largest truck organization acting as a unit in the Army, and the first organization to transport troops in tractor-trailer vans each capable of carrying sixty-eight men.

Major Darby, since being called to active service with the Quartermaster Corps in April, 1941, has been in command of truck organizations. His first command was the third battalion of the Forty-eighth Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), which in February of this year was redesignated the second battalion of the Forty-seventh Quartermaster Regiment (Truck). In April the battalion was again redesignated as the second battalion of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), with which organization Major Darby has since served. He was for a short time commanding officer of the third battalion before assuming the duties of regimental executive officer.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

BATTLEFRONTS: The world looked on with bated breath and a fervent prayer this week as those inimitable Russians, covered with blood and glory, rose from streets covered with dead and dying to hold the German advance on beleagured Stalingrad to a snail's pace.

The Russians did even better than that. Locked in desperate, savage battle with the flower of the German army for thirty nights and days of man-made Hell, they were reported on the 30th day to be inching the Nazis back street-by-street in merciless hand-to-hand fighting. So hard-pressed were the Germans they were said to be unable to care for their dead or badly-wounded.

Because Englishmen, American, German and Russian realized that in the outcome of the Battle of Stalingrad rested the fate of Russia and the Allied nations for many months to come, the struggle on the Russian steppes in front of Stalingrad was the most important of world battlefronts this week.

Second in importance to Americans, whose sons and brothers were doing the fighting and dying in this instance, was the battle in the Pacific, namely on New Guinea. General MacArthur's headquarters reported Sept. 21 that Australian troops had cleaned out the entire Milne Bay area at the southeastern tip of New Guinea.

The situation at Port Moresby is more serious. Here the ingenious Jap utilized the jungle warfare with which he took Malaya and in a matter of days penetrated successfully the steaming jungles and towering peaks of the mighty Owen Stanley Mountain range, the backbone of New Guinea. This week the Jap had thrust forward to within 32 air miles of the allied base at Port Moresby.

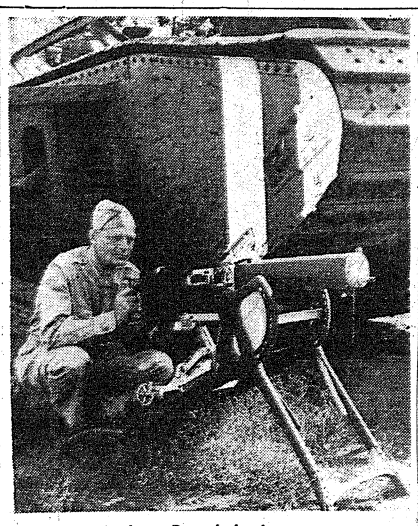
U. S. Marines continued to hold their positions in the Solomons despite constant air attacks from the enemy who successfully landed small numbers of troops and supplies on the islands.

On the European front, giant four-motored British bombers were over Munich and other vital areas of the Reich dropping huge bombs. The Lancasters are the ships that carry recently-developed, block-destroying two and four-ton bombs. Army headquarters in London announced a force of American parachute troops have been in Britain some time undergoing intensive training.

All was ominously quiet on the African front but no one was lulled into believing the quiet was not "the calm before the storm." The Allies continued to strengthen their positions while rumor-factories produced the story that Germany's Field Erwin Rommell was ill in a tropical disease clinic. The British continued to mop up Madagascar.

The $64 question this week was the whereabouts of Hitler's mightiest battleship, the Tirpitz, which the Allied nations report has slipped from her anchorage and might be heacing for the Atlantic sea lanes.

NATIONAL NEWS: War sacrifices hit closer and closer to the American home this week. Greatest sacrifice, of course, was the men that will be needed for America's ten-million man Army which Selective Service Director Lewis Hershey indicates would be mobilized by the end of 1943. Hershey said the size of the Army this year has been increased from the 4,500,000 total announced as the 1942 objective. It is expected unmarried men with dependents will be called this year, married men with children certainly by the last quarter of 1943, and 18 and 19-year olds next year. U. S. leaders pointed to Canada's progressive action on mobilizing manpower and spoke of similar action expected in this country.



War Manpower Chairman Paul McNutt said he considers adoption of National Service Legislation inevitable in order to place persons where they will best serve the war effort. Labor shortages are becoming acute and now exist in 26 centers of war production, he added.

Sooner or later it will mean the mobilization of all man and womanpower so that each person is where he or she is needed most for a victorious conclusion of the war.

The rationing and rubber situation grows more serious. Price Administrator Leon Henderson said flatly this week that "three-fourths of the nation faces the prospect of uncomfortably cold homes this winter." He announced a plan for coupon rationing of fuel oil which will reduce consumption by 25 percent. The area affected includes the 17 eastern states and the District of Columbia as well as 17 middle-Western states.

A few weeks ago, President Roosevelt asked for Congressional action against inflation by Oct. 1. This week it appeared he would get his request. The Senate has tentatively approved an amendment to an anti-inflation bill giving the President power to freeze by Nov. 1, his order stabilizing prices and wages.

Golden Rule Man Has Arrived at Ft. Benning

Saw Hunger in China So— He Fed Thousands Free

By ST. SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law . . . ." Matthew VII, 12.

Modest, firm-speaking 2nd Lt. Clifford Clinton, Los Angeles restaurateur who has become nationaly-known by making the Golden Rule pay, has arrived at Fort Benning for duty in the Medical Administration Corps.

Assigned to a general hospital at Fort Benning, Lieutenant Clinton hopes to see action, "the sooner the better," but rather gloomily admitted to the BAYONET Wednesday that because of his amazing career as the succeesful proprietor of two of the most unique restaurants in the world, he hasn't had much opportunity yet in the Army to get into a combat outfit.

Forty-two years old and a veteran of the tank corps in World War I, Lieutenant Clinton, with a son in the Coast Guard, enlisted as a private shortly after Pearl Harbor and had a varied career before reaching Fort Benning.

Because he is an idealist with two feet planted firmly on the ground, the lieutenant's unswerving faith in human nature has proved that sometimes a "sucker does get an even break." His checkbook is proof that "doing unto others as you would have them do unto you" pays off.

Galle Leaves Fort Benning

Sends Greetings Via Bayonet

Fort Benning lost one of its most familiar civilian figures this week when M. Robert Galle was called into government service to direct a new activity directly concerned with the war effort.

Mr. Galle has been a military tailor here since 1932. His clientele has included most of the Fort's personnel from the newly recruited privates to the present Chief of Staff of the Army. He has been operating the Doughboy Stadium Tailor shop and the Ingersoll Street Tailor Shop.

Galle has been very active as

Purple Heart Award for All Wounded, Killed

Medal to Be Automatic; Civilians Also Eligible For Decoration

Announcement comes from Washington that the War Department has decided to award the Purple Heart to all Army personnel killed or wounded by enemy action. The Purple Heart will be conferred posthumously to the relatives of men losing their lives in combat. Civilian personnel who meet death while serving in any capacity in the Army will be eligible for the Purple Heart award.

Those suffering wounds while serving in the Army will be decorated if the wounds require medical attention. The award will be automatic. Formerly it was necessary to apply for it.

The Purple Heart was first authorized by General George Washington at Newburgh, N. Y., August 7, 1782. It is believed to have been the first in history awarded to all ranks of soldiers.

It was revived by the War Department on Washington's birthday, 1932. It is in the form of a gold heart with a gold silhouette of Washington in the center. This is mounted on a background of purple enamel. The medal is suspended from a purple ribbon edged in white.

Important Notice:

Attention of military personnel is called to the fact that since the Bayonet is being circulated free of charge, there are not sufficient copies to provide each man with a personal paper. It is assumed that every soldier will be able to read the paper thoroughly in the barracks, the day rooms, or in the service clubs.

The paper is being delivered free to all homes on the post proper, in Baker Village, and in Benning Park. Therefore, officers and men receiving this service are requested not to take a copy home from the various office buildings.

In the event that any organization is receiving too many or too few copies, it is requested that the Public Relations Office be promptly notified. Any suggestions which will expedite or improve the delivery of the Bayonet will be appreciated.

'The Bayonet Girl' —How're We Doing?

Lovely Mary Martin writes, "My heart belongs to Benning." Okeh, Mary, hurry up and come over to see us sometime. Hotcha . . .

Mary Martin Accepts 'Bayonet Girl' Title

"My Heart Belongs To Benning," She Writes

Lovely Mary Martin, one of Hollywood's ranking screen stars these days, has accepted the title of "THE BAYONET GIRL" and is now officially the sponsor of Fort Benning's first all-post newspaper.

And no newspaper anywhere ever had a lovelier, more gorgeous sponsor than the soft-spoken lass from Texas who took Broadway by storm when she sang "My Heart Belongs to Daddy," and then went on to Hollywood to become one of its greatest box-office attractions.

She still talks with a soft southern drawl and her unusual beauty plus her characterization of Cindy Lou Bethany in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" made her a logical choice for the "sweetheart" of this, one of the South-

Plan Will Vitally Affect Post Life; Details Pending

Nov. 1 Deadline Set By Washington For New Decree

Fort Benning officers and enlisted men will "pay-as-they-go" after Nov. 1 in transactions with the commissary, exchanges, theaters and other military establishments, according to post officials who this week received War Department orders to that effect.

Since the order will vitally change the whole method of army life for military families, all details have not been worked out for the change-over, but conferences have been planned for the next few days in which various questions will be answered.

Col. Stephen B. Massey, post quartermaster, said that all business at the commissary will be on a cash basis except for ice tickets which are in use now. No coupon system will be used here, he said.

Major C. E. McGaffey, exchange officer, likewise pointed out that all exchange business would be put on a cash basis, and he added that for the convenience of families living on the post the use of coupons would be encouraged. As an example of the confusion which might result if some such system were not used, Major McGaffey explained that last Saturday the exchange made 200 deliveries and that at more than half the homes housewives were not at home.

COUPONS WILL HELP

"Obviously, it will be difficult for the delivery men to stop to make collections and the woman of the house is not likely to want to leave cash on the kitchen table with her back door open," Major McGaffey said, "but the use of coupons will help the situation."

The delivery system used by the commissary will likewise be affected by the order, Colonel Massey explained, and just what will

Store Opening Plan To Get Further Study

Plans for keeping Columbus stores open Wednesday nights for the benefit of Fort Benning personnel were abandoned Tuesday after protests were heard from clergymen that Wednesday night services would be interfered with.

N. R. Boyd, president of the Merchants' Association, said Wednesday that a further study of the problem would be made.

Meanwhile, Frank Poster, representing the J. A. Kirven company, informed the Bayonet that that store would remain open until 8 p. m. Tuesday nights beginning next Tuesday.

Former Benning Officer Decorated By English King

Colonel Edwin W. Piburn former commanding officer of the 3rd Armored Regiment, 10th Armored Division, has been decorated by King George VI of England for distinguished service in the Middle East.

Colonel Piburn, a veteran of World War I, went to Cairo in 1941, with the first American tanks to observe their action. To obtain first-hand information, Colonel Piburn went into action with the tanks.

He was decorated at a ceremony marking the first anniversary of the establishment of the American Mission at Cairo, Egypt.

Colonel Piburn was formerly a Battalion commander of the 67th Armored Regiment, 2nd Armored Division.

His son, Lt. Edwin Piburn, Jr., who formerly resided here, was taught by Lt. J. W. Schweitzer, now of Fort Benning, at the University of Alabama.

Four High Benning Officers Nominated for Promotions

3 Brigadier Generals, One Major General Included In Group

Four high administrative officers at Fort Benning were nominated for promotion by President Roosevelt in a communication sent to the Senate Monday.

The post commandant, the Infantry School commandant, assistant commandant of the Infantry School, and the commander of the demonstration regiment for the Infantry School were high on the list of presidential recommendations.

These recommendations were as follows:

Brigadier General Leven Cooper Allen, commandant of the Infantry School, to major general.

Col. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, to brigadier general.

Col. George Hatton Weems, assistant commandant of the Infantry School, to brigadier general.

Col. Fred Abraham Safay, commander of the 124th Infantry, a demonstration regiment for the Infantry School, to brigadier general.

Among other officers nominated were a number who have become well known at the post and in Columbus during previous tours of duty here. They include:

Brigadier Generals John Beugnot Wogan, Frank William Milburn, LeRoy Hugh Watson, Andrew Davis Bruce, Edward Mallory Allmond, and John Paul Mueller, to be major generals.

Colonels Lawrence Carmel Jaynes, Vernon Evans, Edwin William Piburn, William Francis Heavy and Harry Fouts Hazlett to be brigadier generals.

Here are the highlights in the military careers of the four high administrative officers at Fort Benning who were nominated by President Roosevelt for promotion:

Commandant Since February

General Allen came to Fort Benning for his present tour of duty as commandant of the Infantry School in February, 1942. He had been raised to the rank of brigadier general on February 6. He has served several previous tours of duty at Benning, having first been an instructor at

Why Personnel Clerks Go Nuts

This strange collection of rank at the Infantry School met on the drill field this week and discussed their confusion. From left to right, a field officer of long standing who is still a Sargent, a sergeant major who has never held that high rank, and a major general who is an assistant instructor in the weapons section and not a major general at all.

If you are not sufficiently confused now, consider that the Sargent on the left is a regimental supply officer, the sergeant major in the center was a major long before he became a sergeant, and the major general on the right wears the chevrons of a technical sergeant.

No, folks, we're really not crazy, although we thought we were when we began questioning these men. It's really very simple. The sergeant on the left is Major Francis A. Sargent, the supply officer of the Second Student Training Regiment. The man in the center is Master Sergeant Thomas H. Major who is an officer candidate in the 12th Company of that regiment. As for the major, general, that is his given name. His full name is Major General Simonton and he is a tech sergeant in C company of the Academic Regiment. He was christened thus in honor of a great-grandfather who was a major general in the Civil War.

Cash Prizes for Letters, Poetry, Essays, Cartoons

Look fellas, do you want two bucks?

We're going to give out prizes each week for the best stuff you submit for publication in the Bayonet. Can you draw and do you have ideas? Two sawbucks will go for the best cartoon we publish each week, be is editorial or humorous in nature.

We want plenty of G. I. poetry, arty or just plain funny. Two dollars will go to the author of the best one published.

We've got another two pieces of folding money for the best original contribution of a miscellaneous nature. It might be a letter to the editor, an essay, a column or anything of that kind.

All this starts next week, so get your stuff in no later than each Monday. It stands a better chance of publication if it gets in here earlier. Send your names and outfits along to the public relations office and after publication the staff will get their collective noggins together and award the prizes.

Oh, yes. Those six iron men are being made available each week by the Special Officer, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan. We convinced him it would bring out some swell stuff. How about it?

Golden—

Brookdale and the Pacific Seas, are world-famous because a hungry man, woman or child can eat and pay—or eat and walk out. Clinton, the son of Salvation Army parents, spent four long years in always-hungry China and the impression gained as he watched gaunt, starving people made an everlasting imprint on his memory.

This experience may be one of the inspiration for his "pay if you want to" cafeterias, but friends of the man declare the Goldn Rule is his way of life and he himself declared this week at Fort Benning that his successful restaurants are really "only hobbies," that he is solely concerned with bringing to people the realization that the Golden Rule is practical, workable and a certain key to success.

"Let's take the Golden Rule. Everyone can talk about it, and believe in it, but how many apply it 24 hours a day, live it, breath it and make it WORK?" he asked.

Warming up to his pet topic, Lieutenant Clinton added "it's a philosophy, a belief—a way of life. It can be applied, I say, to business, to every-day life to politics—yes, and even now it's being applied to international politics by the United States.

Must Teach World

"It looks like we've got to teach the world, by force if necessary, that we are willing to live in peace and security with other nations. Especially in politics in a democracy is the Rule applicable, because after all isn't a man elected by his voters in order to express and carry out their wishes?"

Clinton is active in civic affairs in Los Angeles, where he was one of those instrumental in the organization of the Citizens' Independent Vice Investigating Committee, an association fighting vice conditions in that city. As a matter of fact, Clinton and his associates were so active that his home was bombed, attempts made to damage his restaurant and fake accidents created to involve him in difficulties.

Clinton opened his two restaurants in 1931 and almost knocked Los Angeles for the proverbial "loop."

"I guess they couldn't believe they could walk into the restaurant, eat and walk out again without paying. They could not figure out the catch. Others have tried the scheme, you see, and failed because they were not sincere. They employed detectives to argue with those who really did walk out without paying.

Fed 10,000 Free

"There are no detectives in our cafeterias, because we happen to believe in what we're doing. When the enterprises first started, we fed up to 10,000 hungry and penniless people over a three-month period. But on the other side of the ledger, the paid number of meals rose like a skyrocket and now the cafeterias serve 26,000 meals a day—paid meals."

Here is why Lieutenant Clinton and his 600 employes have so much faith in human nature. Careful estimates show that only one tenth of one per cent of the people who come in to the cafeterias deliberately abuse the privilege and come back for more and more free meals. Only ten per cent of the customers actually walk out without paying and almost invariably those who do, come back and pay for their next meal when they have money.

Visitors from all over the world have marveled at the full course means served for a quarter or thirty-five cents and after glancing at the lavish setting of the two restaurants have voiced an oft-repeated question of Clinton, "How can it possibly pay?"

Golden Rule Pays

"But it does," says Lieutenant Clinton, "and believe me we have hundreds of thousands of dollars in those establishments. Why we have one 20-foot decorative illumination piece worth $20,000 in the Pacific Seas."

Lieutenant Clinton surprised Fort Benning associates when he declared the restaurants were really 'only a hobby", that in the past seven years he has spent only an hour a day in the restaurant business. The rest of his time has been spent in Los Angeles politics.

Lieutenant Clinton's success in the restaurant business over a period of a quarter of a century however, has dogged the genial, sandy-haired Californian during his Army life. Enlisting early in 1942, Clinton knocked at the doors of the armored forces and the Infantry but because of his age, he was turned down, placed in the Coast Artillery and sent to Camp Wallace, Texas, Energetic G. I. newshawks there ferreted out his identity and when officers learned about him, he was transferred to the bakers and cooks school. From there he went to the Medical Administration Corps school in Pennsylvania and was commissioned a second lieutenant. In late August and assigned to Fort Benning. Last week's issue of Time magazine had a photograph and interesting story on Lieutenant Clinton.

Now Lieutenant Clinton is hard at his duties at Fort Benning but his heart is still with the combat units and he is still trying to devise some way of getting back into a tank or behind a machine gun.

Mary's reply was received early this week, and she "accepted with pleasure" saying that the title of "The Bayonet Girl" is one of which she will long be proud. The gorgeous cinematress expressed her regret at not being able to appear here in person and really dedicate the Bayonet with a few kisses for the editors (ah, spring, thou art so far away), explained that she has just begun a new musical for Paramount, and that plus frequent army camp appearances on the coast make her a mighty busy little lady these days.

She closed by paraphrasing her greatest song hit and stating "My Heart Belongs to Benning". And Mary, dear, when you read this copy of the Bayonet, you'll know that the hearts of Benning belong to you, because how could we resist you when you've been so sweet (as if we wanted to resist) and sent us your very latest picture, wherein we think we see a more vivid, even more interesting Mary Martin who may soon be the "star of stars". We hope so anyhow.

BROADWAY HIT

And in case any G. I.'s at Benning have forgotten Mary. She's the pretty girl who was singing in an obscure California night club a few years back when discovered by Vinton Freedley and taken to Broadway for the lead in "Leave It To Me" along with Victor Moore, Billy Gaxton and Sophie Tucker. In that great show, Mary staggered Broadway with her rendition of "My Heart Belongs To Daddy", burlesquing a strip tease as she sang.

Hollywood grabbed her quickly, and her first big singing hit was in "The Great Victor Herbert". She has appeared with Bing Crosby in several great musicals, and as Cindy Lou Bethany in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" she made a great hit. Her pert pretty face, her de-lovely figure, her gorgeous gams (which the Bayonet thinks can out-Dietrich Dietrich) and her songbird soprano are all combining to make her one of Hollywood's brightest twinklers. And now comes her selection as "The Bayonet Girl" which we know you'll agree is the greatest honor ever accorded any actress. Yeah man, Mary's on her way!

Army Health Never Better W. D. Reports

The United States Army in training in this country is in better health than ever before during wartime, the War Department announced today. Admissions to hospitals and confinement to quarters for all causes currently are fewer than at this time last year when the Army's physical well-being was considered excellent. On the basis of figures to date it is anticipated that the general admission rate will be approximately 10 per cent lower in 1942 than in 1941.

Thus far in 1942, there has been no mild influenza epidemic like that of early last year. Incidence of disease shows a marked recession. Even the common ills such as colds, sore throat and measles, are down to as low a level as reasonably can be expected.

V. D. Decrease

Venereal disease is substantially less than during the World War, with the syphilis rate now lowest in Army history. The total venereal disease rate, on an annual basis, was 40.5 per 1000 men in 1941, and 38 per 1000 men for the first six months of 1942, including cases arising in newly inducted soldiers where the infection actually was acquired in civil life. This means that about 19 new infections occurred among every 1000 men during the first half of this year. Soldiers thus infected lose an average of 18 days or less from duty.

Throughout 1941 and thus far in 1942 the death rate has been the lowest in Army history. During this period from one-half to two-thirds of the deaths resulted from external causes such as traffic accidents. Overseas forces and battle casualties are excluded.

Meningitis Down

About one meningitis case in three was fatal during the World War, but this death rate is now down to one in 20. Promptness of diagnosis and use of newer treatment are principal reasons. Meningitis fatality rate in the Army is far below that in civil life.

The malaria rate per thousand men per year in continental United States is only 0.61 for the first eight months of 1942, by contrast with 1.24 in the 1941 comparative, and the autumn rise in incidence is expected to be less than a year ago.

Universal vaccination has virtually eliminated smallpox. Rigid sanitary control and vaccination had made typhoid fever almost non-existent in the Army. Incidence of scarlet fever is now extremely low.

No Epidemics

Thus far 1942 has experienced no true epidemics of infectious diseases in the Army. These normally account for a majority of all admissions to hospitals and confinements to quarters.

While the health of the Army in training at home is better than in 1941, nevertheless last year's Army health record was unusually good. This experience is the more remarkable considering the Army's rapid expansion.

Thru—

In general the measure provides for stabilization of pay and prices around the level of Sept. 15. It will be included in the general anti-inflation bill on which action is expected in a few days.

America watched with interest a meeting of representatives of 21 republics of North and South America, called together to learn if the five could be united as a single Central American nation. A polyglot group, still-native in many respects, the Central American countries hold an increasingly important place in developing world events because of their strategic locations.

THE ARMED FORCES: Tales of drinking water that gets too hot for washing and of metal machine that get so hot they catch fire are being told by America's hardy, desert-fighter training "by doing" in the great deserts of the nation's western plains. In this dry, arid, sun-baked, blazing desert, America's tankers are preparing for the day when it will be Rommel's tanks, not dummies in the business ends of those rifles and cannons. In other maneuver areas in other parts of the country, other U. S. soldiers, were grimly maneuvering day and night. They knew that this time "the chips were down."

Secretary of War Stimson said in Washington that the health of the Army in training in the U. S. is better than ever before during wartime. Throughout 1941 and so far this year, the death rate has been the lowest in the history of the Army. The Navy reported a disastrous fire on the liner Manhattan, now the transport Wakefield, westward bound across the Atlantic. Many Fort Benning men read the story with interest, having ridden the liner on many previous occasions.

NEWS NOTES: The American Legion, in convention at Kansas City, passed resolutions demanding conscription of both labor and capital for war production and the lowering of the military draft age to 18.

The Inter-Allied Information Committee reported from London this week that known executions committed by the Germans in conquered nations total a quarter of a million.

Harpo Marx, noted stage and screen comedian, arrived in Columbus Sunday afternoon, refused a press interview because he wanted to maintain the non-talking legend built up through his movies with the three other Marx brothers.

Glenn Miller, noted orchestra leader, accepted a commission as an Army captain; will break up his great band.

Private Theodore E. Borst, an upstate New Yorker from Clinton, home of Hamilton College, was paid $350,000 by one of the nation's leading chemical companies for a patent in the field of agricultural chemistry. Borst is stationed at Camp Rucker, near Ozark, Ala.

Coin-machine will soon be gulping a new kind of nickel which Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau has announced will soon be minted. It will contain silver, copper and manganese but no nickel.

CHAMP!

Sgt. Arthur Lock is base champion at Will Rogers' Field, Okla., at almost anything in the athletic line. To prove it he recently won the Decathalon held there by taking over the rest of the field in eight out of the ten events garnering 7,205 points out of a possible 10,000!

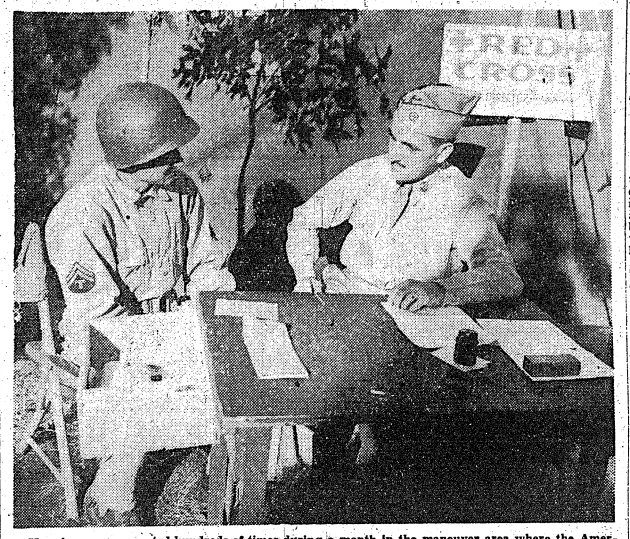
be done will have to be decided shortly.



The cash system, both Colonel Massey and Major McGaffey explained, would result in the shifting of personnel to other duties and relieve the heavy burden of bookkeeping now in practice. It is not anticipated that the order will result in the dismissal of any employes.

The order has far-reaching effects on all military personnel, it is pointed out, since company barber shops, tailor shops, the theaters and all establishments will be on a strict cash basis.

Major Karl Thornburg, secretary of the Officers' Club, said that a meeting of the board will be held soon to discuss the club's policy. At present the club carries charge accounts and coupon books may be bought on credit. The War Department order does not specify that officers' clubs must abide by the order, but there is the possibility that the board may change its present policy, Major Thornburg said.

Much the same view was expressed by Capt. A. W. Petrowski at the Infantry School book store which now extends credit to its customers. Many of the incoming students arrive after paying their travel costs, often are not paid for some time and yet have heavy initial costs in getting started in the school. Demanding cash from them would work a hardship, it was said. Nothing in the War Department order specifies that such an establishment as the book shop must be placed on a cash basis.

The Red Cross and the War

Here is a scene repeated hundreds of times during a month in the maneuver area where the American Army is becoming a tough, rugged fighting machine. The Red Cross has men living, eating and working with troops, solving their personal problems and helping in a hundred other ways where the soldier is in difficulty. Trained social workers such as Melvin Glasser, New York City, (at right), above, represent the Red Cross in the maneuver areas. Here Glasser talks over an emergency loan with a corporal technician called in from the field by a message that some member of his family is seriously ill.

War Duties Of Red Cross Men Are Rough

Glasser Tells Of Experiences on Maneuvers

Red Cross field workers in these days are as dusty and dirt-covered as unshaven and as weary as the American troops they are following all over the world, but—like the American soldier—they never lose their sense of humor.

At Fort Benning for a few days this week is Melvin A. Glasser, one of the assistant field directors who has been working in the Carolina maneuver area this summer and is on his way to national Red Cross headquarters before proceeding to a new assignment.

Glasser was formerly stationed at Fort Benning and he recalled with a grin of the days he used to work in a roomy headquarters building, wearing a clean pressed uniform and eating at tables with all the "trimmings."

LIVES WITH SOLDIERS

"In the maneuver area, your Red Cross man lives, eats and works with the soldier and after doing that this summer I know now that the soldier in trouble will come to the Red Cross for help much more quickly if the representative is as dirty and dishevelled as the soldier and is not sitting in some roomy headquarters or office building," says Glasser.

"The work in the field is about the same as that at a post only much harder. You're on the go 24 hours a day, in fact I was called out at night almost as much as in the daytime. You spend hours and even days tracking down a boy whose mother is seriously ill back home or trying to find another soldier and get an urgent message to him. The procedure is reversed when the soldier comes to you for help or advise and you have to keep on the move finding telegraph offices and the like to get his message through.

"It's hard, never-ending work, but what a sense of satisfaction you do get.

Glasser is currently relating the "story of the month" which actually happened last week in the maneuver area.

The Red Cross office received a hurry call to find a soldier whose mother was seriously ill. Glasser drove 40 miles over the maneuver area, nearly catching the man several times only to find he was "about ten miles ahead."

ENEMY OPPOSITION

Finally, Glasser came to the scene of action and, believe it or not, his man had just been captured by the "Red" army. Undaunted by this turn of events, the Red Cross man crossed the "line" and started to work on the "enemy" to release his man but here Glasser met with real opposition.

"Not on your life," cried one burly sergeant who had the prisoner in tow, "he's our prisoner and this is war. We ain't fooling." Glasser pleaded, tore his hair and pleaded some more. Finally he was forced to go to higher authority and the man was finally released in his custody.

As Glasser and the "prisoner" drove away, the last thing the disgruntled sergeant muttered was, "I'd like to see that Red Cross fellow argue Adolf Hitler out of a prisoner."

Another time a lady "invaded" the maneuver area and for five hours wandered around looking for her son, when non-plussed military authorities wondered how to help her. Finally one of them hit upon the Red Cross and Glasser was called to the rescue, finding the lady's son a little later in the day.

LOANS MONEY

In his capacity as a Red Cross field director, Glasser is entrusted with loaning money to soldiers in real emergencies and during the time he was working in the maneuver area, he loaned or advanced $2,300 to soldiers and worked on 800 different cases.

"Our work has increased immeasurably over the work in the maneuvers of last year. We feel the boys have come to depend on the Red Cross," said Glasser.

Glasser has a background in social work typical of most of the elected Red Cross workers. A graduate of the School of Social Work in New York City, Glasser worked for six years in social work in that city before he was assigned to Red Cross work.

A captain in the Georgia State Guard, he has been State Liaison Officer with the Regular Army, and also the Plans and Training Officer for the 15th District of Georgia. He is a member of the American Legion being an overseas veteran of the last war.

Mr. Galle was called away from the post very suddenly on Sunday, and did not get an opportunity to say good bye personally to all his friends. He wishes to use the BAYONET as a medium to convey his good wishes to those he was unable to see. "I feel as though I were leaving home," he said. "I want to say good bye and good luck and express my appreciation for the many kindnesses and privileges extended to me during these last ten years."

the Infantry School in 1920, shortly after the school's establishment. He continued in that position for four years.

He returned to Fort Benning in 1940 as a major in command of an anti-tank battalion, and in 1941 was appointed on the faculty of the Infantry School, being advanced to a colonelcy in October, 1941. General Allen was transferred to the Washington office of the chief of staff late in 1941, returning early this year as Infantry School commandant.

FULTON WIDELY KNOWN

Colonel Fulton assumed his duties as commanding officer of Fort Benning, April 11, 1942, being advanced to the position from the office of executive officer. He succeeded General Allen, who relinquished command of the post under war department regulations prohibiting the head of a service school from also commanding a fort.

Colonel Fulton recently reached the retirement age, was officially retired and resumed his command of Fort Benning immediately without any break in service. In the time he has been at Benning, Colonel Fulton has taken an active part in civic undertakings in Columbus and is widely known. He has had many executive assignments with the army in the last 20 years.

HELD HAITIAN POST

Colonel Weems has been assistant commandant of the Infantry School for about six months, having come here from the command of the 22nd Infantry, Camp Gordon. For a number of years, he was military governor of Haiti. The Haitian medal of honor was awarded to Colonel Weems last July, the presentation being made by General Allen at the Infantry School. Colonel Weems served as a captain and major in World War I. He holds the Distinguished Service Cross and the Silver Star, as well as foreign decorations.

SERVED IN FRANCE

Colonel Safay, commanding officer of the 124th Infantry, Fort Benning, is a native of Jacksonville, Fla. On June 15, 1899, at the age of 18, he joined Company F, First Florida Infantry, and later saw service on the Mexican border.

In 1918 he was selected to attend the Fourth Officers' Training School at Camp Wheeler and was graduated as a second lieutenant and assigned to the 121st Infantry, which was the Georgia National Guard regiment known as the "Blue Bonnets." Later he was reassigned to the 18th Infantry and, with this division, served through the Meuse and Argonne campaigns in France. Later he was assigned to the army of occupation in Germany.

Discharged in 1919, he became interested in reorganizing the Florida National Guard and was commissioned as a second lieutenant in September, 1920. In October he was raised to first lieutenant and was made a captain in 1922. In 1930 he was commissioned a major and in 1940 was elevated to the rank of lieutenant colonel and then colonel.

He has commanded the 124th Infanery in federal service since it was inducted in November, 1940. He carried the regiment through the Louisiana maneuvers, bringing it back to Benning on January 10 this year, where it is a demonstration regiment for the Infantry School.

SWIMMING

Seven regiments of Camp Livingston, La., recently vied for national honors. The swimming meet developed into a two-team battle between the 112th and the 193rd Field Artillery, the 112th finally winning by a point and a half, thanks to the splashing victory their 400-year relay uncorked in the last event of the evening.

THE USO PRESENTS

Instead of the regular Sunday Salute to States program, honoring soldiers of some specific state, the 9th St. USO Club saluted some two hundred selectees who are scheduled to leave for the armed forces this week. The American Legion Post of Columbus assisted as sponsors of this program. Mayor Ed Murrah, of Columbus, bade the fellows a fond farewell while Captain George Fink, Asst. Judge Advocate of Fort Benning, was the principal speaker. Father Dan McCarthy, American Legion chaplain, and veteran of World War I, was master of ceremonies, while Major H. B. Pase spoke in behalf of the Legion.

A small diary as a momento was given each selectee. The music was furnished by the 29th Infantry dance band which was augmented by seven acts of vaudeville. Next Sunday the club salutes both Carolinas.

All-1-1 a shore that's going ashore. . . . But not many will be going ashore until the entire evening is over. Come on along, one and all, for a moonlight sail on the Chattahoochee River. . . . This coming Thursday night the Salvation Army-USO Club of Phenix City will sponsor a boat ride in the moonlight for a party of sixty. Get your reservations in early for it is sure to be a bang-up affair.

As was predicted last week by this column, the change of program date of the USO Town Hall, from Tuesday to Sunday brought an increase in attendance to this feature program. Over seventy-five soldiers and civilians participated in the discussion, "Why We Fight." The USO Town Hall will meet every Sunday at 2:30 p. m. at the 9th St. USO Club.

Aside to the muscle-bounds. . . . The 9th St. USO Club is now formulating plans for an extensive winter program of athletics. The club has just been equipped with the latest glass backboard for basketball, and a little birdie tells me that a shipment is on its way which will include a portable boxing ring, wrestling mats, and standards for many court games. . . . Watch this column for further particulars which will be announced as soon as the athletic committee, consisting of some well-known college athletes, has completed the program schedule. Believe me, there are some big events in store for you fellows.

If you read this column last week, you already know how the Boots and Saddles Club came to be organized, but you do not know that September 25 will be the first day that the club goes into action. . . . A riding party of twelve at the Green Island Riding Club will be the first date. . . . Dust off cowhands that are inclined in using the horse's power instead of your own to get places, hurry, hurry, hurry to the Salvation Army-USO Clubs in Phenix City or Columbus.

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . . All these facilities are to be had at each and every one of the USO Clubs, both Columbus and Phenix City? . . . Information service . . . travel . . . rooms . . . lounging . . . library . . . personal counseling . . . games . . . music . . . radio . . . popular recordings . . . arts . . . crafts . . . writing paper . . . home hospitality . . . refreshments . . . sewing kits . . . package wrapping and mailing.

In one of the paragraphs above, it was mentioned that those persons desiring to use horse power instead of their own could get horses. Now, those people who want to use their leg power, but save the soles of their shoes, can get bicycles for rent at the USO-YWCA in Columbus.

Yes, sir, the USO has service. . . . On recent Sunday forty-five members of the S. T. R. wanted to spend the week-end in Atlanta. But alack alas, they were at a loss as to how to secure entertainment. . . . Here is where USO's Mr Bergman and Mr. Korn got busy and solved their difficulties. In a short time these two directors contacted by phone their connections in Atlanta, and presto—hotel accomodations were secured, a private dining room was arranged for, a band engaged, and forty-five charming young ladies dated up for the evening. The entire cost per man was a sawbuck, but in the words of one of the soldiers, "I would gladly have paid a hundred for the night we had."

This coming Thursday evening will see a joint skating party at the Army-Navy Y. . . . Organizing a new Sunday Breakfast Club September 27—free breakfast but admission only by ticket from program director. Both these things are sponsored by the USO-S. A. Club in Phenix City.

Monday evening's Cabaret Night at the USO Club on 8th St. is still one of the biggest drawing cards of that club. In the last show were featured piano playing by Bill Miller, ballet and tap dancing by Muriel McVea, sweet and torchy songs by Dorothy Gellers, comedy numbers by Robert E. Langley, and the intricate skate-dancing by the Skating Devils. The three Devils are Frank Gerace, Jimmy Medeiros, and Ann Jacobs. The program was rounded out by Fort Benning's Dixieland Band. This program is by admission by invitation only. Get your reservations now for the coming Cabaret Night which will feature an all-colored cast of real Harlem talent.

JUST MARRIED

First Lieutenant John H. Hobbs, Company A, 54th Infantry of the 10th Armored Division, was married to Miss Theda E. Rouse of Watertown, New York. The ceremony was performed at the Russell county, Alabama, courthouse. The bride and groom spent their honeymoon at Pine Ridge Tavern before establishing residence on Forrest Road, Columbus.

Service Club Brain Trust Hits Jack Pot

Piling up the highest score made thus far in any of the quiz contests held at the 10th Armored Division, Sgt. Frank Bachinger's Service Club team scored a decisive victory over a picked team representing the 423rd Field Artillery recently by the score of 485 to 410.

The losers got off to a bad start and it was unable to overcome the lead the Service Club team had piled up as they set a new contest record by not missing a question asked.

The winning team was composed of Sgt. Frank Bachinger of the 420th Field Artillery, Sgt. Jerry Tonkens of the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion, Corporal Melchior Abley of the 3rd Armored Regiment and Master Sgt. Saul Miller of the Artillery Command.

The team representing the 423rd Field Artillery was made up of T-5 Chas. W. Cartwright of Headquarters Battery, Sgt. Slorian Hillock of Headquarters Battery, 1st Sgt. Gordon Zanetti of A Battery and Tech. Sergeant John Lowman of Headquarters Battery.

Corporal James E. Frye of Division Headquarters Company served as Master of Ceremonies, Corporal Charles Merkel, Div. Hqs. Co., served as scorer and Sgt. Gayle Mattingly of the 11th Armored Regiment acted as timer.

Attention! Army Men

WOKO, Inc., Radio Centre, Albany, N. Y., announces that it is anxious to have letters from Benning men from the Albany area describing their activities.

Those sending in letters will be mailed articles of food and other materials collected from manufacturers and testeners. These articles will probably include cigarettes, tobacco, razor blades, candy, cookies, soap, etc.

The letters sent in will be broadcast to keep listeners informed as to trainee activities as censorship requirements will allow. For that reason, all letters must clear through the Public Relations Office here at Fort Benning. So start chewing your pencils, fellows, and mail in your letters to the PRO, Headquarters, Fort Benning. We will forward them for you.

Officer Candidate Recently Sworn As An Attorney

One member of the Infantry Officer Candidate School at Ft. Benning, Ga., who has found time to become a member of the Pennsylvania Bar while working toward the gold bars of a 2nd Lt. is Sgt. James F. Wildeman, son of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Wildeman, 821 Philadelphia Avenue, Barnesboro, Penn.

Wildeman was sworn in as an attorney by his company commander, Capt. Harold B. Eagle who is a member of the West Virginia Bar, and who has the power as a Summary Court Officer to administer the oath to Wildeman.

A graduate of St. Francis College, Loretta, Penn., the sergeant attended Pennsylvania University's Law School. He enlisted in the Army in March, 1941 and prior to being recommended as an officer candidate, was a member of the 307th Infantry at Ft. Jackson, S. C.

Wildeman is one of several thousand men in Col. R. H. Lord's 3rd Student Training Regiment which is now being trained by a picked faculty of seasoned officers in every phase of modern warfare, including the latest tactics used by the infantry as shown on the world's battle fronts. Upon successful completion of the course, Wildeman will be given his commission in October and go on active duty with the Army of the United States.

Silence Is Golden

Time and time again Fort Benning authorities have cautioned all military personnel on this post to keep their counsel in so far as divulging military information is concerned. War Department directives have been republished; films showing the disastrous results of talking out of school have been shown at the various post theatres; company commanders regularly speak to their men about this vital matter; and the walls of buildings blare forth their urgent message.

The importance of these instructions cannot be over-emphasized. Not only should our soldiers here at Benning cooperate themselves, but should see to it that their families do likewise. If the soldier wants to be certain that the little wife doesn't let her tongue slip at a bridge party, then don't tell her. After all, it is none of her business. The point is don't give her the chance to pester information out of you by refraining from hinting that "I know something I wish I could tell you, but the general told me I can't." That is the fatal mistake; the die is cast; the Rubicon is crossed; and your bridges are burned behind you. You may have good intentions, but not since Delilah has a man been able to keep a secret from a woman if once he lays himself open to wheedling. Remember that a secret is no longer a secret if more than one person knows it.

If you are driving along the railroad line to Columbus with civilian friends and all of you see a troop train or a load of tanks and troops headed out, answer your friends' questions with a polite but firm "I really don't know." Nine times out of ten you really won't, but that tenth time can be fatal to hundreds of boys if the news is noised about innocently by those friends.

As a soldier of Old Glory it is your duty to be viligent, suspicious, wary. Don't trust anyone who isn't supposed to know. Put aside traditional American hospitality towards strangers and don't tell your business out of school. If every mother's son of us during this emergency imitates our late President Calvin Coolidge in being close-mouthed, he will reap big dividends, the biggest that any man can receive; the preservation of the precious liberty for which we are fighting, and the early return of the Dove of Peace.

Benning's Scarlet O'Haras

Scarlet O'Hara, heroine of Margaret Mitchell's best seller, was afflicted with a Mexican disease known as "manana" which means "never do today what can be postponed until tomorrow." 'I'll think about that tomorrow,' she would say. Fortunately for the Mexicans and unfortunately for us Americans, we suffer with the same disease, and oft times it leads to unnecessary difficulties as many Benningites and civilian employes on this post can tell you.

Weeks ago all of us were warned that Fort Benning had been included in the prohibited area designated by the Eastern Defense Command and that after a certain date no person without proper credentials would be permitted to enter the reservation. The provost marshal's Identification Bureau set up machinery to make the needed photos for the identification tags and for finger printing. Some of our far-seeing citizens immediately arranged to go through this processing. Unhappily, thousands shrugged their shoulders and breathed a silent "tomorrow" under their breaths. As a result, when the Eastern Defense Command ordered the presentation of passes last Thursday, these thousands were caught unprepared. Now they will be inconvenienced by having to stand in line when a little more foresight would have prevented all of this turmoil. As the old philosopher said, 'If our foresight were as good as our hindsight, we would all be much better off by a darned sight."

For there is much to be said in favor of the 'early bird." The early bird gets to the movies or the cafeteria when the line has not yet formed. He is at the railroad station before the train is in, he is in his theater seat before the curtain goes up. And then he has to pay the same price as his less considerate brother. The late bird arrives at the movies and attempts to have an early bird buy his ticket for him. Why make him stand in line when early bird can buy an extra ticket without being inconvenienced? Late bird arrives at the theatre, walks down the aisle talking at the top of his voice, drowning out the actors on stage or screen. He squeezes his way to his seat, blocking the stage just when the suspense is highest.

Early bird starts for Benning early and arrives on time, driving along leisurely, thus saving gas and rubber. Late bird gets in that extra fifteen minutes of sleep, dashes away without breakfast, burns up the highway, has to slam on his brakes and wear away rubber to avoid colliding with the car in front, and all for what? To get caught in that famous Benning 8 o'clock traffic jab. If he is a trainee, he falls in with one legging off, the other half laced.

All of this dissertation brings us back to our main point again. Sew your stitch in time and save nine. Do today's task today, there will be plenty more to do tomorrow. What a lot of bother would have been saved by late identification-tag applicants had they heeded this little axiom. Next time procrastination may cause even more serious trouble. Let's all of us get wise. If we do, maybe we will get through earlier than scheduled with the dirty business at hand and get to go home sooner.

Benning's Talented Soldiers

On a reservation with a population as large as that of Fort Benning it is not to be marveled at that there are so many talented men in all fields of endeavor. Personnel in charge of arranging local radio programs have known that for a long time. When the talent scouts arrived on the post for auditions for "Cheers from the Camps," they too discovered that our post is a treasure house of talented people. When the editors of the Bayonet began scouting for writers, cartoonists, poets, etc., our last doubt was removed.

The presence of this talent on our post has facilitated a thousand-fold the publication of our first issue. It causes us to pause and repeat what we have heard so many times in recent days, "I would like to get in a shot at those Japs and Huns as soon as possible, but if I have to be stationed on a post, thank God I am at Benning." So your editors repeat that we hope to do more than sling ink in Hirohito's eyes, but if we are to continue editing and publishing news for you soldiers, we say "Thank God we are at Benning."

Look Like Soldiers

Recently a soldier in one of our outfits here at Fort Benning was publicly rewarded by a high-ranking officer as being the most soldierly and the neatest G. I. appearing in Columbus last Saturday. In the more remote past, announcement was made that one high-ranking officer on this post thought military courtesy and a soldierly appearance so important that he personally lectured the new men in his command on the subject. The Infantry School here thinks it merits a series of lectures to, mind you, student officers themselves.

Military courtesy and the proper rendering of the salute are most important. It is likewise important that our soldiers do their utmost to make a good impression on the public from the standpoint of appearance if but for the psychological effect alone.

Alas, too much can not be said in favor of Benning soldiers to judge a large number of them by their acts and looks on the streets of Columbus. Many of them render a perfunctory salute and do not even bother to look the man they are saluting in the eye. Better that they ignore him altogether than to execute it in a shoddy, half-hearted way.

As for neatness of appearance, Benning men have room for improvement. The MP's at Outpost Number I are contributing their bit towards this end by insisting that neck-ties be placed where they belong. But both the MP Corps and officers in downtown Columbus are not doing their duty to the Service and to the public when they shut their eyes to reality and let men pass through the streets, sans tie, or with open collar, sans shave, sans esprit de corps. And saddest of all is the fact that those soldiers who are lax in the matters mentioned above are reflecting discredit, not only on the Army as a whole, but upon their own commanding officers down to the company commander.

It goes without saying that a unit is only as good as the command over it. Little things count. Sloppiness, in small details indicates that the same may be expected in the more important ones. On the battle-field its dividends may be death. Let our company commanders see to it that the situation is remedied promptly. They will have no cause for regret.

DO THEY INDICT US?

American newspapers are now publishing photographs of the Midway battle.

That which will strike deepest to the American heart is one showing a long line of flag-draped caskets with a firing party standing by to render last honors.

Those caskets symbolize "the last full measure of devotion" a man can show his country. Those contained in them will never come home again. An eternal barrier separates them from us. There are many others elsewhere like them —at Pearl Harbor, on Bataan, on Corregidor, on Wake Island, in the Solomons, in the Aleutians —deep, deep down at the bottom of the Seven Seas.

And what a long line of flag-draped symbols they would make if all were in one row—so long and yet to be so much longer before peace returns to earth.

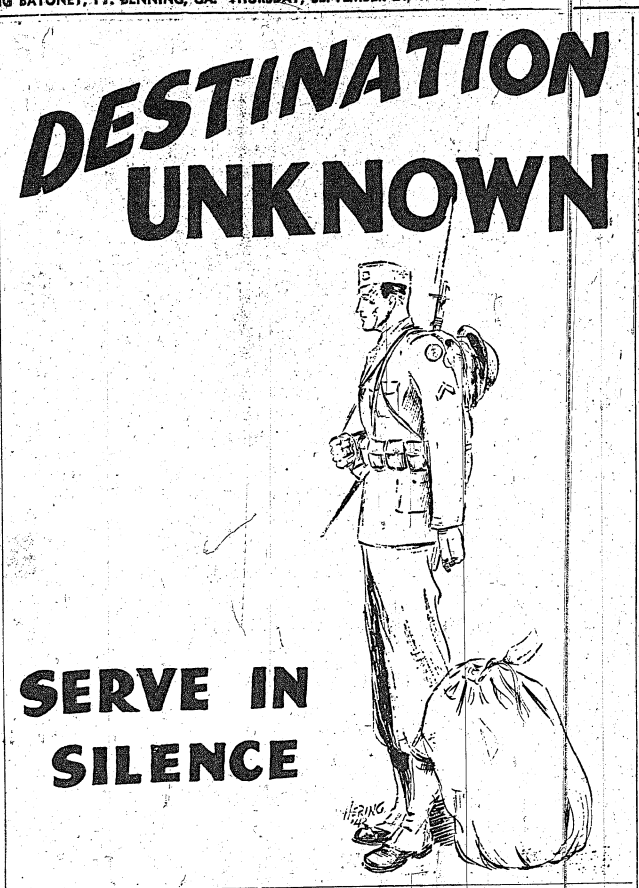
We could write a lot about them—from an old soldier's viewpoint—but won't. We just looked at the picture and thought:

Are we worthy of this?

Are we? Will we be?

Only the collective national conscience and the heart of each individual American can truly answer.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

LITTLE STORY WITH A BIG POINT



Here's a story we remember from our early teens. A number of men were working in a rock quarry. A stranger from another town stopped to ask one of the workers what he was doing and how he liked the job.

"I'm just cutting out these slabs of stone. It's awfully monotonous. Whatever you do, don't try and get a job here—you'll just break your back. And the work doesn't have any 'kick' to it."

The stranger got the same sort of an answer from all the men—they were "just hacking out stones."

One worker, however, had a different reply. "I'm building a cathedral," he said. "I found out that these stones are being used in a holy building and as I work I can't help but think that everything I do is making that temple grow."

Work for that wise fellow was lighter—and more effective. When we remember the great cause each and every one of us are fighting for, our jobs bcome more important and easier.—Mitchell Beason.

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

The first breath of fall weather and the opening of school has an effect of stimulation on most women. A summer of debilitating heat, noisy children, sticky peanut butter sandwiches and endless piles of faded cotton clothes is enough to make any human scream for a change, a change of any sort.

The blessed relief of a quiet house after the children have piled on the school bus gives a vista of endless hours of time to do the things that had been set aside from the jangle of interruptions. This is the period of great resolution in the mind of a housewife. She will have a new permanent, try a new polish, go over last year's clothes with a clear eye that can judge better for the months of out of sight storage.

That nagging conscience will be quieted by additional hours on Red Cross duty. Even now the attendance at the Work Room has picked up. When the word gets around that 90 per cent tof the bandages needed will have to be made by volunteer workers because medical supply houses are limited in their production of only 10 per cent of the actual demand, the Work Room will be crowded every day. That's a serious incentive, for there is not one army woman today who hasn't faced the possibility that her own may one day need bandages. Abstract demands can always be side tracked with pleas of personal duties.

Then there's the Woman's Club, which will start its season the first of October. It has always been an important part of the life at Fort Benning. These times it is more important from a morale standpoint. A dribbling, homesick wife never did any man any good, much less a tired soldier who's had a day of demand and grinding pressure. No woman is happy unless she feels part of a community. There's no better short cut to getting acquainted in the army than the Woman's Club. In a group of that size one is bound to hear of similar problems, joys and frustrations, making them all sisters under the skin.

Besides, it's a wonderful excuse to buy a new hat, give yourself a careful make-up job and look over the rest of the gals to see what they're wearing this season. A lot of them will be wearing last year's hats, but no one will know the difference, the turnover has been so thorough. The only crumb of comfort one can salvage from losing friends through change of station, is that new ones you make don't know your old clothes.

On Getting Ahead

(From Camp Rucker Reporter)

In the Army's enlisted ranks there are three kinds of promotions. They are: (1) Your own, (2) the other fellow's which you think is justified, and, (3) the other fellow's which you think is unjustified. One of the earliest selectees to come into the present Army tells us we might as well forget about the other fellow's promotions right now, and worry exclusively about our own. We're convinced that this is a first rule.

Because we have done a lot of worrying about Army promotions in general, we have distilled from our experience a few other well-fixed ideas.

One is that promotions do not come automatically because you are handling your present job well. They do not come automatically because your are qualified for a bigger job. You may have as much leadership as President Roosevelt, but that alone won't promote you from corporal to sergeant. So there's no use talking about your qualifications and how you could—if given the chance—handle a bigger job. The little job at hand is the one to swing first.

Another thing we have learned from experience is that Army promotions have no relationship to promotions in civilian life. They just haven't. For example, in the Army a man who holds a top non-commissioned job for ten of 15 years is considered a "good man." And you will come to consider him so yourself. But in the outside world a man who holds any given job for half that length of time is considered finished; he becomes ineligible for promotion after a given tenure of the same office, simply because he has held that office for so long.

Another difference: In the world of civilians, if a man believes he should be promoted because of his hard work or the way he handles his job, and isn't promoted, he's at liberty to look for a better job elsewhere. Not so in the Army.

Then, too, as the Army expands rapidly, but unevenly, there develops certain hardships and apparent inequalities. Some types of units remain relatively unchanged; others grow, split up, form cadres and grow some more. It's obvious that opportunities will vary with the degree of expansion.

When you, who have been civilians until recently, start thinking about Army non-commissioned promotions, you have to readjust your sights—you're in the Army now. Few of the old familiar ways are practiced here. Yet for your own satisfaction and advancement you want to find the new basis, the Army reasoning, which governs promotion. And so far as we can see, Army promotions depend largely on one personal characteristic.

Are you stretching yourself? Though you've the leadership of President Roosevelt, and are not stretching it, you're not as useful to the Army as the Casper Milquetoast who's bucking. And you're not as useful to yourself.

Right there is the kernel of the nut. The Army is a proving ground for you. The Wildcat grows large and strong through stretching. For him size is the sole reward. For you, stretching will provide stature, and eventually promotion. Men don't admire what another man is half as much as they admire what the other man is making himself into. It's effort that's rewarded with promotion.—Camp Rucker Reporter.

TOXIC DERMATITIS (OR) (SKIN ERUPTION)

By Corp. Louis Fiedelman
11th Armored Regiment
10th Armored Division

From the dispensary, to the hospital cot,
It was nice getting in, getting outs not so hot.
Whether you're sick, lame, or lazy,
If you don't get out, it will drive you crazy.
You lie in bed, you sweat, you curse,
And then along comes a pretty nurse.

Each morning, she comes to hold your hand,
And your pulse will race to beat the band.
You're not sick, they can't find a cure,
But still they take your temperature.
After all have had their chow,
It's time to get behind the plow.

Fix your bed, clean that table,
Of course, just those who are able.
Each day this ward is looking worse,
No! guess it couldn't be the nurse.
Put those cola bottles away,
For this is inspection day.

At half past eight, the rounds are made,
To see what new spots have decayed.
You sit and soak with Boric A,
Until, the skin just rots away.
And then they'll try another salve,
That is, one you didn't have.

So then you use this new type stuff,
You think you'll call the doctor's bluff,
And as usual it does no good,
Oh! could you hit him with a wood.
But then he holds that thing called rank,
And you're up against a stone walled bank.

We're all counting the days until November 19—our graduation date. Wish someone would tear the month of October out of the Captain's calendar! (Hope you're assigned to duty at Benning! The editor.)

Not that we particularly dislike it here, but with so many things going on, we're all anxious to get out where we can do some good. However, the days pass rapidly, and our biggest worry is whether or not we'll be barred or "barred" when the diplomas are passed out.

There's an old fable about a king named Damocles whose fate was to live with a sword constantly suspended over his head by one thin horse-hair. That's our situation exactly.

We were on the machine gun range this week, and those guns are the real stuff. I think I'll bring one home with me, and take it out during deer season.

We fired the light air-cooled type and also the heavy water-cooled machine, and I did pretty well on both of them. That makes a total of three weapons I've qualified on so far, which ain't so bad for a guy who had never operated anything more deadly than a linotype machine.

But it almost made me homesick to operate the thing, because the machine gun reminds me of my linotype. The trigger squeeze is very similar to the touch of a linotype keyboard, and both machines also make about the same amount of noise when in operation.

And just about as many things go wrong, too.

But you can't make errors on a machine gun and stay healthy!

One class period they try to make John Dillingers out of us, and the next they try to transform us into Little Lord Fauntleroys. The same day we had some of our machine gun training, we also had a lecture on table etiquette, of all things.

We eat in a mess hall that has a capacity of about 200. Each table seats ten men, and we must file into the hall without pushing or shoving. We remain standing at our table until it is filled to keep "chow hounds" from getting a head start and grabbing off all the grub.

If we want the butter, we don't yell: "Hey, shove the salve;" we politely request: "Pass the butter, please."

"Short-stopping," an old army custom, is definitely frowned upon in our mess hall. When someone at the other end of the table asks for something, it is passed directly to him—no one en route is allowed to help himself first.

All the other niceties of table manners are also strictly observed —no southpaw eating, no sword-swallowing, no spoon in cup, no loud talking or noise, and no reaching across the table—even with one foot on the floor.

It would be a fine thing if we got our etiquette and fighting confused sometime in the future. Imagine saying: "Oops, Pardon my reach," while tickling a Jap in the ribs with a bayonet.

Of Goldbrickitis

By PVT. M. N. BOLNICK

In the Army a goldbrick is a guy who does the least amount of work in the longest time and with the most help to do it.

The medicos explain goldbricking as a disease of the blood. A little gold gets into the bloodstream and travels through the circulatory system, finally settling in man's heaviest region. This disease is sometimes incorrectly called "lead in the pants." The medical name for the species is "NOWORKUM GOLDBRICKS", and a patient so afflicted is prone to pull the sheets over his head long before the doctor even thinks of giving him a pill.

One of the early symptoms of goldbricking is a general slowing up of the reflexes, sometimes even in healthy individuals—especially in distasteful work, and may be in the system for many years before it reaches the medical stage.

They tell of the Army bass drummer who was touched with the disease, and while he played on the beat the feeling was there that he wasn't quite with them. It was just that he was tired of bass drumming and had taken to goldbricking.

An old sergeant tells of the soldier who used to appear with broken eye glasses each time he was called for guard duty and plead to be excused on that ground. The only catch was that during inspection the Major found seven pairs of broken glasses in the soldier's footlocker.

The disease can easily be acquired. KP is as good a starting place as any. The soldier wipes a pot and then steps back and admires his work. The longer he looks at it the more it fascinates him. Then he takes a walk to refresh himself for a new viewpoint. Back at his choice pot he looks again, sighs "ah!" and polishes a bit more. Thus he has been bitten by this dreadful disease for which the medical profession has discovered no "shots."

The more advanced stages show themselves in the victim not wanting to drill or do any kind of extended march.

The story is told of a soldier who was always found sitting in the Squadron's Day Room: Each time a corporal approached him for a detail his words were always the same: "The first sergeant told me to wait here." The strange part of it was that he didn't ever know the first sergeant.

There's one point, however, on which there'll be no goldbricking —and that is something for the Japs to worry about.—M. N. B.

What's New With the QM

An "air-conditioned" sock with a cushioned heel, toe and sole for desert and jungle wear is the very latest item of clothing that Uncle Sam's haberdasher-to-the-soldier has turned out. Designed by the Q. M. C. for limited issue, the sock is made of 50-50 cotton and wool and is spun in a new loose-porous stitch which gives the foot a chance to "breathe," a factor which prevents excess perspiration.

Months of experimentation in hot desert regions and thick jungles under simulated combat conditions preceded the final okay on the new foot covering by Army authorities. The new socks are lightweight and the special stitch used gives the foot so much resiliency that it almost feels as if the wearer was equipped with a well-ventilated sole and heel. That should certainly help a lot inside those G. I. brogans.

Still more improvements in the new combat helmet have just been announced. This time, a new headband has been designed for the helmet liner that is worn underneath the 3-pound steel outer casing. Originally, you'll remember, the liner came in thirteen different sizes, but such a variety was not too desirable, so now only one adjustable size will be provided. Also, a new leather facing for comfort has been put on the cotton twill headband.

A new chin strap has also been put on the helmet liner. The old one was permanently fastened to the helmet, but now that has been removed and the new chin strap will be attached by garter studs and clips. The Q. M.'s objection to the permanent chin strap was that it deteriorated under steam temperatures needed to de-louse the helmets.

And now comes the latest mode in tents for G. I.'s. This one is mosquito proof, believe it or not, and will be provided at the outset for mountain troops, who usually have quite a pitched battle with all kinds of bugs and insects.

The new tent is actually a regular pup tent except that it has a built-in floor which seems like a good idea. The fabric of the floor is sturdy enough to keep out Mr. Bug and all his relatives, but at the same time is porous enough to permit free passage of air.

The tents used by the mountain troopers, you know, are only half as heavy as those you and I would use. They weigh only about seven pounds complete since they are made of a special type of featherweight nylon cloth. They're fully waterproof, however, and can sleep three average sized soldiers in a pinch without too much of a pinch!

Field Ration "K," newest concentrated food product of ye good old Q. M., met with full approval in its first actual field test. And what a test it was! The lads of the Desert Command out India way went into the California desert for four days with nothing but the new ration to subsist upon. Their decision was that the new concentrated food was not only sustaining, but pleasing to the appetite as well. It comes packed in small boxes, one for each meal and gives each man 32-86 ounces per day which evidently is sufficient.

Colonel Stephen B. Massey, post quartermaster, was lavish in his praise of the farmers of America on last night's Quartermaster Quarter Hour broadcast over WRBL. He told of the cooperation between the supply corps and farmers in keeping you and me not only fed, but clothed and equipped as well. He brought out several stories of Army equipment that few of us had ever realized depended so entirely upon the farmer for providing us with them.

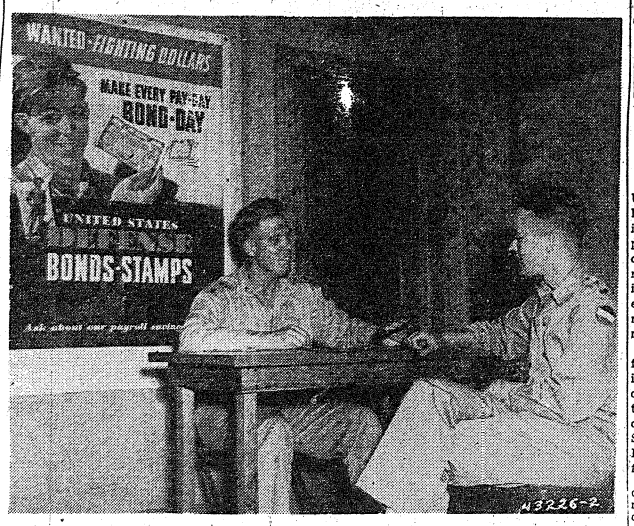
Because you have no cuffs on your O. D. trousers, the Army saves almost 450,000 yards of wool each year. And that's enough to make 150,000 new G. I. uniforms according to Q. M. C. statistics. So you see that by wearing cuffless trousers you're doing an extra-bit for the country as well as not having to bother about those confounded dust-catching cuffs of civilian days.

Officers Swapped In Good Will Plan



In a new plan to achieve greater cooperation between faculty and tactical officer staffs of The Infantry School, four officers of the Second Student Training Regiment were exchanged with four officers from the Weapons Section of the Academic Department recently.

The four Second Regiment officers who joined the Weapons Section for a temporary three-months tour of duty are Lts. James A. Woody, 5th Co.; Carl W. Palmer, 26th Co.; Cecil W. Parks, 17th Co.; and Thomas C. Walker, 23rd Co.

Assigned to the Second Regiment for a like period from the Academic Department were Lts. Donald R. Burrowbridge, 5th Co., John C. Gellatly, 17th Co.; Arthur J. Goldsmith, 26th Co.; and Frederick D. Kesler, 23rd Co.

GIRLS! Watch your bobbie pins. Just what use they will be put to remains to be seen but a certain Jackie Moore in message center is collecting them. RUMOR has it that when the W. A. A. C.'s "take over" at Fort Benning in the early Fall a certain lieutenant who is especially experienced in handling the ladies will be their new chief.

LIEUT. and Mrs. George W. Marshall, Cannon Course No. 1, Fort Benning will leave this weekend on their honeymoon. Their first stop will be Chicago where they will "do the town" and then on to St. Louis to visit Lt. Marshall's mother, Mrs. Jessie W. Marshall, and Mrs. Marshall's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Turner.

Mrs. Marshall, the former Helen Gardiner Fleming, will certainly be missed from headquarters where she has been for over a year in various departments—the latest being "Information". Our sincerest wishes for the best of everything to this popular Columbus and Fort Benning couple.

HEADQUARTERS went and done it again. Another bang up party. Plenty of good ole Southern barbecue, shrimp, 'tater salad, and all the other fixings including something to quench the thirst.' These parties are looked forward to by the officers, enlisted and civilian personnel at headquarters and the one Saturday night was 'right on the beam'.

MAJOR J. R. Johnson's (post inspector Johnson) health is not really on the decline this week. That long, drawn-out, down - in the mouth look is caused by a slight temporary deficiency in diet: no hot biscuits, brown to a tune with plenty of fresh, sweet butter; no honey or home made pear preserves; no real coffee for breakfast due to Mrs. Johnson's absence from home on a little trip back home to Kentucky. But—just watch for the bloom of youth to re-appear on his cheeks when she returns.

Lt. J. Walter Myers, Jr., would like to have a good reliable automatic reminder to keep track of radio programs and night duty. An automatic record player playing a little rhyme like "You gotta do a radio show, you gotta do a radio show", or maybe "Oh Johnny, Oh Johnny don't you be late, you know that you have a five-thirty date", might be a good idea. Have you any suggestions?

This Miller's Promotion Mill Grinds Swiftly

Many are the stories of late of the rapid promotion of enlisted men to commissioned ranks, but few will equal the career of Cpl. Jacob Miller of Hq. and Hq. Co. of the Second Student Training Regiment.

Promoted only Sept. 1 to the grade of technician, fifth grade, Cpl. Miller was commissioned a second lieutenant last week in the Adjutant General Department.

Cpl. Miller had six years experience in the post office of Philadelphia, which qualified him for commission as a postal officer. He is expected to receive foreign service duty almost immediately.

Detachment At Benning Vitally Interested In Washington Order

Because of the number of general hospital attendants in training at Fort Benning and because of the size of the Medical Detachment operating the huge station hospital on the post, a War Department order doubling the capacity of the Medical Administrative Corps officer candidate school was received with considerable interest Monday at post headquarters.

As a result of a campaign to relieve Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps officers from administrative work for professional duties, the War Department has decided to double the capacity of the officer candidate school for medical administrative students at Camp Barkeley, Texas.

As a result of the expansion, the class of officer candidates enrolled for the training course on Sept. 26, will be twice the size of previous classes, which were also increased in May and again in August of this year.

Medical Administrative Corps officer candidates are chosen from among applicants of the enlisted ranks of the medical department or other branches of the army who have demonstrated qualities of leadership during their basic training.

The officer candidates are trained in the duties of maintaining hospital records, supply accounts, mess management, and numerous other administrative tasks to serve as adjutants, inspectors, mess officers, etc., in the Medical Administrative Corps. Upon successful completion of the course, candidates are commissioned as second lieutenants in the army of the United States.

A Medical Administrative Corps officer candidate school is also operated at Carlisle Barracks, Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Finger-Printing Expert at Fort Commissioned

Tech. Sgt. Harry W. Bennett, Corps of Military Police at Fort Benning, was discharged from the Army last Wednesday and next day was appointed a first lieutenant in the Military Police.

Lieutenant Bennett, who has been on duty at Fort Benning since 1926, was immediately ordered to the Military Police school at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. for further training.

Bennett enlisted in the Army on Nov. 27, 1926, in Dayton, Ohio, and was sent to Fort Benning where he was assigned to Company C of the 29th Infantry regiment. On Nov. 4, 1928 he was transferred to the Military Police at the post, serving first with the motorcyle squad. Later he qualified in fingerprinting and eventually was placed in charge of fingerprinting and photography at the provost marshal's office.

Bennett remained as head of the Bureau of Identification until August of 1941, when he went to Columbus to assist in maintaining harmonious relations between civil and military authorities. In January, 1942, he was placed in charge of a military police detail in the Harmony Church area and remained there until word of his commission was received.

Lieutenant Bennett's father, J. K. Bennett, resides at 270 Goodview Avenue in Akron, Ohio.

COMMANDOS

The Keesler Field, Miss., gridiron Commandos, who last month loomed on the 1942 football horizon as one of the most formidable Army teams of the year, cancelled its 11-game schedule last week on orders from Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, Commanding General of the Army Air Force Technical Training Command. A huge intra-mural grid program is being substituted.

Tons Of Wool To Be Bought By Uncle Sam

Present Army Contracts To Expire This Coming January

The Quartermaster Corps of Uncle Sam's army is really a large buyer these days! According to 1st Lieut. William McGee, purchasing and contracting officer for the Q.M.C. at Fort Benning, the supply corps is now taking steps to place orders for woolen cloth that will use approximately 150,000,000 pounds of domestic wool during 1943.

The army's present contracts for textiles will expire this coming January, and now on the recommendation of the War Production Board and with the approval of the headquarters of Services of Supplies and the Bureau of the Budget, the new orders are ready for placement.

In the ordinary course of procedure, Lieut. McGee pointed out, negotiations for extension of these contracts would not take place until late this fall. The present purchases to occur in the near future, however, will not require immediate delivery.

This procurement will be an extension of present Quartermaster Corps contracts for delivery during the first half of the 1943 calendar year. This move is being made, Lieut. McGee said, in order that the growers may market the remainder of the 1942 domestic clip.

It is estimated that the domestic wool required for these purchases will consume the majority of the 1942 clip, and will take care of the major part of the Q. M. C.'s woolen textile requirements until next year's clip is available.

Barracks Bag

In the weekly production of an Army camp newspaper every soldier is a member of the staff. The staff dresses the baby, puts it to bed, tucks it in, and then lets the gang admire it—or otherwise.

By adoption it belongs to the gang and they are entitled to and do have plenty to say about raising it. There are squawks and even a little bedwetting—but all concerned are going to see that it grows up a bouncing, healthy child. Teething is past and baby is on its way.

At the camp there are a number of units and divisions to be "covered" and soldiers tip the paper to news that the staff can't pick up. Somehow the paper always hears that Joe Blow's gal has gone AWOL.

A reporter's first job when he checks in for duty on his newspaper is to police up the area around his desk and pick up the butts around the editor's desk. He is then free to look over the papers sent in, and comments caustically how much better his paper is, and wonders why metropolitan papers haven't copied his written gems. Then the other members of the staff join in and say things about civilians, sergeants and how to receive promotions in three easy lessons. Noon chow call usuall yinterrupts this set-to. PM is usually a repitition of the morning session except that the reporter doesn't pick up any more butts.

In an Army newspaper a reporter can't work like a reporter on a metropolitan daily. He can't, for instance, send in an expense account. Or he can't go out drinking beer with a visiting general to find out if the recontamination of long-handled underwear is a thing of the past or what-not. Besides, they might not dring the same beer.

He can't tell the editor that he's got an offer of a better job in another camp. He can't send a scoop to a rival shee (he'd better not). Then sometimes when he's out on a hot story or going to press, the powers that be in camp decide that Private Typelice ought to learn more about KP.

When the sheet comes out and the reporter comes in for his share of glory or what-not he remarks simply, "That's all right, but remember, this thing is bigger than you and I."

Benning Youths Learn Wrestling

Wrestling and jiu-jitsu are the latest sports to be added to the roster of the Boys' Activities Athletic Association at Benning. Lieut. Dean F. Ferrell, a member of the publications section at the Infantry School, has been appointed coach, and candidates for the teams will turn out for the initial practice shortly.

The practices will be more in the form of classes with Lieut. Ferrell, a wrestling star at Colorado State Aggies, conducting them. However, the coach has indicated that there will be plenty of competition for all lads who turn out.

The fort youngsters have evidenced much interest in the rough-and-tumble sports since the advent of "judo" training for commandos in the armies of the United Nations.

SPORTSCASTING

With St. Sgt. Carl Neu

Old king football, one of the greatest of all sports, returns to the center of the stage in the fort sports picture this week-end when two of the seven Fort Benning grid teams open their 1942 campaigns against outside opposition. Both the 124th and the 29th appear ready for their openers after several weeks of training under the broiling Georgia sun, but only one of them will go into the initial fray as a favorite.

The 29th Blue Devils, on the basis of their record last season and the snap and precision they have shown in recent drills, must be accorded the favorite's spot in Sunday's Doughboy Stadium affray. The Spence Field Fliers will come here from Moultrie with their first football squad and little advance hullabaloo. They are an uncertain quantity, but there are a lot of good athletes in the Air Force these days, and the Spence eleven will be a stiff opponent for the Two-Niners who should win after a hard battle.

On the other hand, the Gators can't possibly be rated any better than a long shot as an underdog against the Chattanooga Moccasins. The Tennessee collegians are always one of the best small-college elevens in the south and this year they have grabbed up a lot of likely-looking transfers from other schools that dropped the pigskin sport.

Also the Moccasins have the added advantage of having already played one game. They dropped a 20-7 opener to Jack Meagher's Auburn Tigers over in Montgomery last Friday night, and will be primed to gain their first win at the expense of the 124th team. The way this column figures it, if the Chattanoogans were good enough to score on the Tigers, they'll be good enough to cross the Gator line at least once or twice and perhaps oftener.

True enough the Auburn eleven was under wraps when it met Scrappy Moore's Moccasins, but even so the Tennessee club showed a surprisingly strong defense against a set of Auburn backs that look like the best the Alabama school's had in years. Also the losers repeatedly jammed up the Tiger ground game inside the 20-yard line and forced Meagher's men to take to the air. Quarterback Johnny Kovacevich, sub center Cook and Capt. Vernon Fromang of the 'Noogans were among the best linemen on the field.

On offense, the Moccasins added up seven first downs and scored in the second period after blocking a quick kick. They showed a lot of power at times with an attack built around Fourley and Brady who often had Auburn jittery with end sweeps and darts through tackle.

Capt. Harold (Red) Milton, Gator coach, naturally scouted the game and all week has been drilling his eleven on defense against Chattanooga plays, so the Benning lads will be ready. The Gators are sure to put up a great battle, and will be in the ball game all the way.

George Cestary, their triple-threat back who played a year at Notre Dame, is a great performer who runs, kicks and passes with equal ability. With Joe Smith, a clever scatback, to help him out the Gators have a fairly potent attack. They are also expected to flash an aerial game since the ends are big and rangy. However, in the final analysis, they probably lack enough experience and cohesion as a team to halt the Dixie Conference eleven, but we sure wish 'em luck.

Getting back to the 29th for a moment, this pillar hopes that Lieut. Joe Ashmore, coach of the Big Blues and former star at Wofford College, sees plenty of action. He is an amazingly versatile running back and adds a great deal of strength to the Two-Niners when traveling in the tailback slot. However, because he also is coaching the team, Ashmore may have a tendency to keep himself out of the line-up most of thime time. We hope not, because his own playing will strengthen the team plenty and it will buoy up the rest of the team's confidence to have him in there. Besides which, all the boys want him to play as much as he can, because they realize he's one of the team's best offensive threats.

The Eastern All-Army team has finished its three-game card and gone on a well-deserved furlough after tripping the Giants and the Dodgers and coming awfully close to upsetting the Big Bad Bears from Chicago. They can well be proud of their record, and Benning can well be proud of them, because there were no less than six Benning men on that great team. No other post in the country had more than three players, which is just a little more proof that this is the best sports camp in the nation.

We still aren't sure who two of the six men were because they had just recently been assigned here when they were called up by Col. Bob Neyland. However, the other four all did themselves proud, and Benning is bursting with pride over their grid achievements. They were Bob (Ace) Friedlund, formerly of Michigan State; Swede Swanson, formerly of Kansas State; Sam Bartholomew, the ex-Tennessee great; and Ermal Allen, Kentucky's triple-threater of last season. All are now Benning officers and will be back on duty here next week.

BAYONET TIPS—Watch for a possible upset when the Georgia Bulldogs tangle with Jacksonville Naval Air Station in a twilight tilt at Macon Friday afternoon. The sailors made mince-meat of the Florida Gators last Saturday and are said to be even better than the 1941 club which mangled the 28th Infantry by a 40-6 count and was a powerhouse if we ever saw one. Mr. Sinkwich and Co. had better beware. . . . Joe Bryan, 29th Infantry fullback, is the most improved player on the team and will be hitting that Spence Field line Sunday like a medium tank. Given a chance to run plenty this year, he should be "Mr. Big" of the Big Blue team. . . . News may soon break on a post-wide swimming meet for both individual and team championships. Both the 10th Armored and 117th Infantry have crack natatorial squads that could put on quite a battle. . . . Saturday November 7th will be "grid day of the year" around these parts. In the afternoon, Auburn meets the Georgia Naval Pre-Flighters in Columbus, and at night the Benning All-Stars will face Pensacola Naval Air Station in Doughboy Stadium. . . . If you're looking for good gridfare, there are two night games in Columbus this week that should be corkers. Tonight, Jordan High meets Lanier High's Poets from Macon and Friday night Columbus High tangles with Central of Phenix City in the opening Big Three tilt. These games are played at Memorial Stadium under the lights and provide mighty good football for dyed-in-the-wool fans.

Infantry School Grad Former Athletic Great

One of the country's all-time athletic greats received his second lieutenant's commission in the Infantry School last week. Here at Benning for three months, he has now departed for a new station.

Now 2nd Lieut. Edward Wagner, sports fans will recognize him more readily as Ed Wagner, former Washington Husky grid star who made two All-American elevens, and was also a great Olympic performer in both track and winter sports.

"Wag" played halfback on the Washington teams of 1930 and 1931 and was one of the big stars in the Rose Bowl game with Alabama during the latter season. The Husky ace was named on the Associated Press All-Americans both years.

OLYMPIC STAR

A great sprinter, as well as grid star, Wagner entered the 1932 Olympics at Los Angeles and captured third place in both the 100-meter and 200-meter dashes, placing behind two such immortals as Jesse Owens and Ralph Metcalfe.

In 1936, Wagner returned to Olympic competition and again took third place in both sprint events. He stayed in Europe for the Winter Olympics and showed his versatility by skating to "places" in the 1500-meter and two-mile events.

ON HUSKY CREW

The Washington star's all-around ability in the field of sports was truly amazing. He still holds the world's record for the 50-yard dash of 5.1 second, and one year he rowed in the number four spot on the famous Husky crew which was invited to London for special meet.

Wagner is now 31 years old and has passed his physical peak, but three months of the tough Infantry School O. C. school have put him back into the pink and fitted him for the job of an infantry combat leader.

29th Meets Spence Field Sunday; Gators Will Open In Chattanooga

Devils Favored Over Fliers In Stadium Game

Large Crowd Expected For First Battle At 2:30 Sunday

The 29th Infantry opens its 1942 football campaign on Sunday afternoon when the Big Blue eleven will trot out onto the Doughboy Stadium turf for an inter-camp battle with the Spence Field Fliers from Moultrie, Georgia. The kick-off is scheduled for 2:30 and an estimated 8,000 soldier fans will be in the stands as the fort's season gets under way.

Lieut. Joe Ashmore's team will take the field as a favorite over the visiting Air Force team. This is Spence Field's first season on the gridiron, and their team may lack the experience of the Two-Niners, but the game is expected to be closely contested.

MILANO OUT

The Blue Devils are in excellent shape for their opener with the exception of Archie Milano, a varsity end, who was injured in practice last week and may be lost for the season. Milano was a regular most of last year and a valuable pass receiver and defensive flank.

The rest of the squad is primed, however, and after several weeks of heavy work, Ashmore has had them tapering off this week as the day of the opening game approached. The Spence Field engagement is the first of ten games scheduled for the Devils, including six in the new Fort Benning Conference.

STARTING BACKS

The starting backfield on Sunday will have Joe Bryan, Ed Hurley, Phil Del Monte and Bill Bowen running as a unit. Bryan, once of the professional Dayton Merchants, will operate in the tailback slot although he is nominally a fullback. He is the big offensive threat of the Devils and a great line-crasher.

Hurley, a speedy 165-pounder from Orange (NJ) High School, is a swivel-hipped wingback who also may help out with the passing. Del Monte is a rugged blocker and a former Corapolis (Pa.) school and pro star. Bowen, who is listed to start at fullbacks, is the only officer in the line-up and was a crack end on last season's Tampa University eleven. He was shifted to the backfield by Ashmore and will do the bulk of the passing and punting for the Big Blue team.

HEAVY TACKLES

The starting ends will be Joe Stolarzyck and Frank Jennette, a rangy pair of boys who are equally at home on offense and defense. The big bulk in the Devil line will be at tackles where 210-pounder Mike Hutchins and 225-pounder Hank Zawaski will get the call. Both are rugged towers of strength and hard men to move out on any day.

In the center of the line, Ashmore will start a veteran and two newcomers. The vet is Frank Mastramuzio, lightest man on the team at 145 pounds, but a typical watch charm guard who makes up for lack of weight with his aggressiveness. He shared a first team berth last season, and the No. 1 on his jersey will be in the middle of every pile-up.

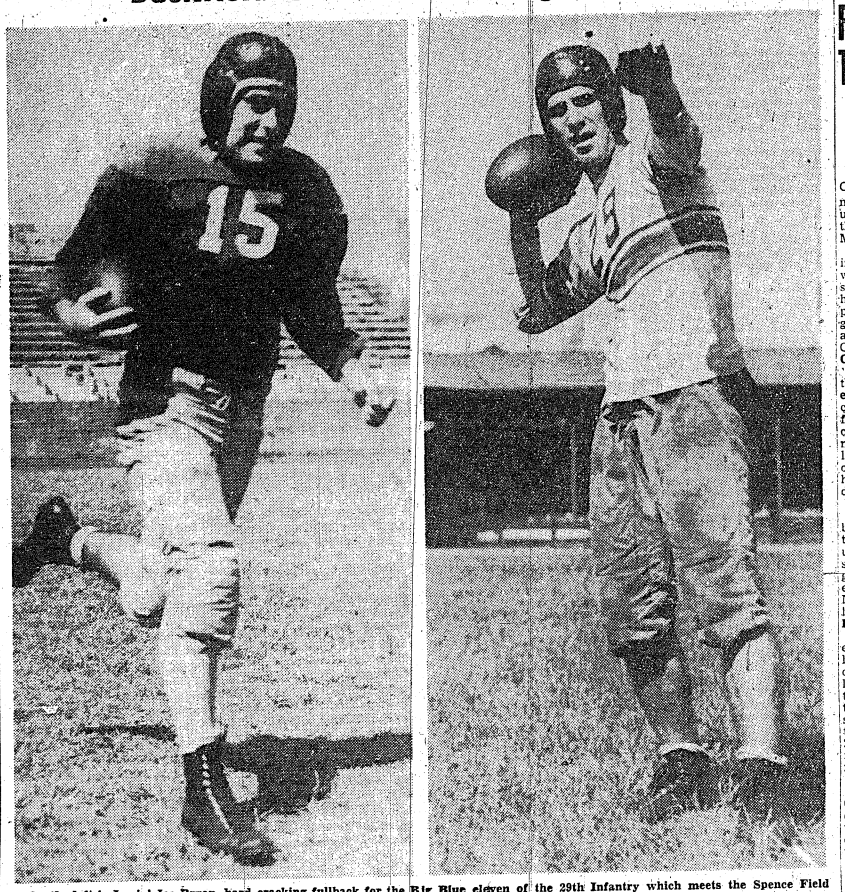
Pollard Flaken, a 175-pounder from Stowe (Pa.) High will start at the other guard post, while Ralph Giraulo is expected to get the nod at center. The latter has come fast in the last week or two to take the starting post away from big Frank Cornelius, a rugged line holdover from the 1942 squad.

CAPABLE RESERVES

The 29th is not deep in reserves, but has some very capable ones, particularly in the backfield when Lieut. Ashmore himself is a crackerjack tailback who can also kick and pass. Mickey McGuire is a hard-running wingback who may share duties with Hurley at that post. Hamenski is a suitable replacement at quarter, and Costanza is a good second-string fullback.

117th Enters Football Loop

The 117th Infantry, famous "Break Through" regiment that arrived at Benning only last week, has already thrown its hat into the fort sports ring with the announcement early this week that it will be represented on the gridiron this fall with a top-notch football team.



The Tennessee unit has already applied for admittance to the newly-formed Fort Benning Football Conference, and final action was taken yesterday by loop officials who okayed it. The 117th will replace the 54th Armored Infantry of the 10th Armored Division who were forced to withdraw.

CUDMORE COACH

Lieut. John H. Cudmore, formerly head gridiron tutor at Palmetto High School, Palmetto, Fla., has been appointed coach of the Tennessee unit, and will be assisted by Lieut. Bob Roberts, former star back at Presbyterian College in South Carolina.

About forty men turned out for the first practice early this week, including several ex-college stars. As yet all positions are wide open, and the 117th should have a hustling team packed with plenty of power, and may turn out to be the "dark horse" entry in the fort conference.

Backfield Stars of Benning Elevens

On the left is Jarrin' Joe Bryan, hard-cracking fullback for the Big Blue eleven of the 29th Infantry which meets the Spence Field Fliers in Doughboy Stadium on Sunday afternoon. On the right is George Cestary, triple-threat back of the 124th Infantry Gators, who will be the chief hope of the Benning squad in its battle with Chattanooga's Moccasins in the Tennessee city on Saturday afternoon.

124th Gridders Face Moccasin Team Saturday

Coach Red Milton's Club Will Leave Tomorrow For Opening Tilt

The 124th Infantry's powerful Gator eleven will open Fort Benning's 1942 pigskin campaign Saturday afternoon when they battle the University of Chattanooga's Moccasins in the Tennessee city.

First of seven Fort teams to go into action this fall, the Floridians will field a rugged eleven with several flashy backs operating behind a heavy but relatively inexperienced line. The Gators will go into battle as underdogs but are expected to test the Dixie Conference team to the utmost.

COACH INJURED

Only casualty in the ranks as the 124th prepared for their opener earlier in the week was their coach, Capt. Harold (Red) Milton, former line star at the University of Georgia. The rugged tutor was mixing it up with his team late last week when he aggravated an old leg injury that has confined him to his quarters for several days.

However, he is expected to be back on his feet in time to lead the team to Chattanooga for Saturday's big time debut. In his absence, Capt. Bill Stinson has been guiding the Gators as they tapered off for the opener. Stinson is Milton's assistant and an ex-college gridder at Florida.

LEAVE TOMORROW

The 124th squad of forty players, coaches and managers will leave for Chattanooga early Friday morning, arriving there shortly before lunch. In the afternoon they will go through a light practice session on one of the high school gridirons there in preparation for Saturday's kick-off at 2:30 in Chattanooga Stadium. The return trip to Benning will be made on Sunday.

The starting line-up for the Gators was still in doubt yesterday as they went through a mid-week session at Cowdy Field. According to the coaches there is not very much difference between the first two elevens, which means that the 124th is deep in reserve strength.

However, four backs stood out as probable starters. They were

Jeeps, Peeps Organize For Grid Campaign

Benning Youngsters Turn Out For First Practice

Fort Benning's junior footballers, the Jeeps and Peeps, will be in action on the gridiron again this fall, according to recent plans announced by Major Virgil Ney, director of boys activities at the post.

The first football meeting of the boys' athletic association was held at the Scout cabin late last week, and 42 sons of officers and non-coms living on the reservation turned out with a great deal of enthusiasm for the pigskin season.

With such an outburst of youthful interest, Major Ney decided to reorganize the junior footballers in a set-up similar to the one used last fall. There will be two squads, each with a separate coaching staff. The junior team for the real "small fry" will again be known as the Peeps, while the senior squad for the older boys will be Jeeps.

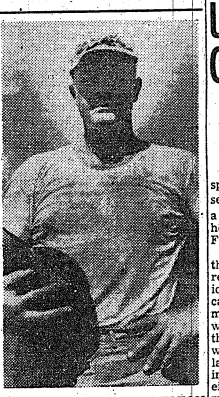
SEEKING GAMES

Last fall, both teams played separate schedules and established quite a reputation in junior circles around Columbus. The most immediate problem right now is the preparing of schedules for this year, and the managers of any junior squads in the vicinity are asked to contact Major Ney at 317-J after 6 p.m. any night.

New coaches have been secured for both boys' teams, and the first practice sessions were held at Cowdy field on Sunday with large turnouts despite the broiling sun.

GRAYSON IS COACH

Boys' activities have been fortunate in securing the services of a former Georgia Military Academy coach to tutor the Peeps. He is Robert Grayson, more popularly known in sports circles as "Captain" Grayson, an honorary title bestowed on him during his eight-year tenure as grid coach at G. M. A.



Grayson is now a civilian employe in the area engineers office at the post, and volunteered his services to help out with the younger lads and teach them the rudiments of football. Last fall, Grayson coached the successful Metcalf "Pals," the outstanding junior team in Columbus, and one of the biggest rivals of the Benning youngsters.

MILANO ASSISTANT

The Jeeps will be tutored this year by Lieut. Ayers, of the physical education staff of the Infantry School. The young officer is a graduate of one of the leading physical education schools in the country and is an ideal choice for the position. He will be assisted by Corp. Arch Milano, also assistant coach of the 29th Infantry's Big Blue grid team, who has volunteered to help out with the Jeeps in his spare time.

The Jeeps and Peeps will be fully uniformed and "kid football," as it's known on the post, will probably draw some large crowds again this year as it did in 1941.

Plans Already Under Way For Court Season

Post Team Planned In Addition To Intra-Mural Loop

Basketball, king of the indoor sports, is in for another banner season according to indications at a meeting of unit athletic officers held recently in the office of the Fort Benning Athletic Association.

No definite plans were made at the session, but the various representatives agreed on several basic policies for the coming court campaign. These could be summed up as follows: (1) The season will open early in December with the formation of a post team that will play an abbreviated schedule lasting about six weeks; (2) The intra-mural league, probably an eight-team affair, will open play in mid-January and play a split schedule with a post-season playoff early in March; (3) Some kind of a team, either an all-officer five or a club composed of stars from units not represented in the loop, will continue to play exhibition games against outside opposition after the regular post team is disbanded.

29TH DEFENDS

The defending champions in the intra-mural loop will be the 29th loopInfantry courtmen who captured the 1941-42 crown in a hair-raising play-off with the Infantry School Service Command. Other teams that will probably be league-members are the 124th Infantry, the 117th Infantry, the 507th Parachutes, at least three teams from the 10th Armored Division, and about four others yet to be organized.

Two floors will be used for most of the games with the possibilities of some games being played in remote areas to bring the sports entertainment closer to troops. The post gym and the Harmony Church Sports Arena, however, will be the scene of most conflicts.

Several leading college fives in the southeast as well as any number of army camps and air stations have already inquired about games and prospects are that the post team will meet some of the best court opposition in the country.

Try-outs for the post court team will be held starting in late October, and the club will be coached by some outstanding tutor to be selected by post athletic officials after a list of prospective coaches has been submitted by the various units.

A preliminary survey indicates that some of the best basketball talent in the Army is stationed at Benning, and the coming campaign is being planned in a way that the maximum use can be made of the limited playing facilities both as to giving men a chance to play the hoop game as well as providing entertainment for spectators.

BASEBALL

With the season due to close on Sunday, it looked on Tuesday as if it were all over but the shouting in the National league's red-hot pennant race. And there was probably many a sad face around Benning because after leading most of the way, the beloved Brooklyn Bums fell in the stretch and the St. Louis Cardinals have come like a whirlwind to take the laurels.

The past week saw the Bums make no progress at all in cutting into the lead they had spotted the Cards the week before. As a matter of fact, they actually dropped behind another half game, and at this point even their mathematical chances seem poor.

As of Tuesday, the Cards were out in front by 2 1-2 games and it looked as if they would clinch the pennant by Thursday or Friday at the latest. If they won only three of their remaining five games, the Brooks would have had to win all six of theirs even to gain a tie. And if the Cards won four and lost only one, they were in regardless of what the Bums did.

The possibilities of the air-tight race down the stretch ending in a deadlock were discussed, however, and it was determined that if this happened, a two-out-of-three game playoff series would be held. This, however, would set back the World Series opener until Oct. 3rd, but seemed the only solution of the unexpected happened and the Dodgers staged a comeback.

Meanwhile the Yankees rested on their new-found laurels as champs once more and announced that they had already sold out all reserved and box seats for the series regardless of who the opponent was to be. Elsewhere in the big time, Tex Hughson of the Red Sox and Mort Cooper of the Cards both racked up their 21st mound victories of the year to practically establish themselves as the leading flingers in their loops; Ted Williams continued his march towards retention of his American league batting and home run crowns before he left for the Navy; Pete Reiser of the Bums found himself in a battle with the Braves' Ernie Lombardi and the Cards' Enos Slaughter for the senior loop batting laurels. In the nearby Sally league, Macon's Peaches took the post-season round-robin after the Charleston Rebels had won the loop title during the regular schedule.

FOOTBALL

The All-Army teams finished their campaigns over the week-end and ended up with an even break against the top-notch pro opposition in eight tilts. The Western eleven dropped its finale to the New York Giants at Syracuse by a 10-7 score with a field goal by former St. Mary's back Andy Marefos proving the deciding margin over Wallace Wade's soldier lads. That was the third loss for the westerners who had previously toppled the Cardinals and Lions but lost to the Redskins and Packers.

Col. Bob Neyland's Easterners took the Brooklyn Dodgers into camp in a hard scuffle at Baltimore in mid-week, then journeyed to Boston on Sunday for the "big" game with the Chicago Bears. But the "greatest football team of all time" was equal to the occasion and tripped the Army eleven by a 14-7 score in a great game. That gave the Neyland team two wins against one loss since they beat the Giants in their opener. After the games, the Army teams were disbanded, given ten-day furloughs, and then ordered back to their permanent posts.

Service teams also dominated the first big opening day of the collegiate season with one of them stepping into the picture as the temporary leader. It was the Iowa Naval Cadet eleven which walloped Kansas 61-0, handing the Jayhawkers their worst licking in history. Bernie Bierman is coaching the sailors.

The Jacksonville Naval Air Station team licked Florida convincingly and Camp Grant surprised by holding the dark-horse Wisconsin eleven to a 7-0 win. Texas helped the collegian standards by dumping Corpus Christi Naval Station, however, to the tune of 40-6.

Georgia's Bulldogs, touted as the best in the south if not the nation, were surprised by Kentucky, but came off the victor 7-6. Auburn opened with a 20-7 win over Chattanooga and Iowa and Missouri were other major clubs that gained initial victories.

But the big fireworks were scheduled for this Saturday when many of the nation's greatest elevens go into action against one another. Again many of the colleges were booked against service elevens and some great games are carded.

Georgia meets the Jacksonville Naval lads at Macon on Friday; the Athens Naval Pre-Flighters travel to Philadelphia to take on Penn, heralded as the East's strongest eleven; Michigan meets Great Lakes; Northwestern bumps head-on into Bierman's Iowa cadets; Ohio State takes on Fort Knox; Oregon meets the California naval air cadets; Columbia battles Fort Monmouth and Princeton entertains Lakehurst Naval Station.

Elsewhere in the south, Auburn and Georgia Tech meet in Atlanta in a humdinger; Tennessee meets South Carolina's Gamecocks; Louisiana State catches a tartar in Texas A. and M.; North Carolina and Wake Forest tangle; and Duke meets Davidson.

Big games in the country will be the Purdue-Fordham, Minnesota - Pitt, Wisconsin-Notre Dame, Holy Cross-Dartmouth and Southern California-Tulane frays. In each case the home team has been mentioned first. On Friday night, Temple is scheduled against Georgetown, and U. C. L. A. against Texas Christian.

Candidate Stanceau Is Former Yank Mound Ace

The Army got a great hand grenade tosser when it drafted Charley Stanceau last January because the husky giant had just completed his first season as a big league pitcher with the World Champion New York Yankees. He's now at Fort Benning in the Officer Candidate School and will pin on his gold bars early next month.

Stanceau spent just one campaign with the champs but he was considered an outstanding prospect and if Uncle Sam hadn't stepped in and "signed him" to a contract for the duration, he might have been helping Tiny Bonham, who's just about his equal in size and heft, hurl the mighty Yanks to victory this season.

The soldier chucker won three and lost three in his first year in the big-time, and considered his biggest thrill as the "bench-warming" he did while the Yanks flattened the Dodgers in the 1941 series.

STAR IN MINORS

Stanceau had quite a minor league record before Joe McCarthy called him up from Kansas City at the end of the 1940 campaign. The big fellow was initially a sandlot product, and made his pro bow with the Binghamton club in the Eastern league.

He moved fast, though, and went straight from there to Kansas City, and then on to the Yanks. While with the K. C. Blues, Charley pitched what he considers his best game, a 12-inning shut-out against Columbus during which he allowed only two scratch hits.

WON 18 FOR BLUES

He won 18 games for Kansas City in 1940 and was backed up by the famous double-A team of Gerry Priddy and Phil Rizzuto at second and short. He came up to the Yankees along with his Kansas City team-mates.

Stanceau is a native of Canton, Ohio, and when first inducted in the service, he was sent to Camp Wolters, Texas. There as Corp. Stanceau, he hurled the Wolters nine to many impressive triumphs. Right now, the Ex - Yankee moundsman is concentrating on his "schoolwork" hoping to get a chance to toss a few grenades at Hitler, Hirohito and Co., but when he's helped "fan" that combination, he hopes to go back to big league ball to help the Yankees to a few more pennants.

21st Hospital Gridders Prep For Loop Tilts

First Medico Football Squad Is Raw But Eager For Action

BY PVT. BILL KILLILEA

One of the first Medico football teams in Fort Benning history will take to the gridiron this fall when the 21st General Hospital fields a full-fledged eleven in the Fort Benning Conference.

Smaller than most of the organizations that will be represented in the first post intra-mural football loop, the 21st has only about 500 men to draw from, but despite that fact almost a hundred eager grid prospects answered the first practice call about two weeks ago.

The squad has now been cut down to about thirty likely-looking prospects, and are being put through a rigorous conditioning campaign. Most of the pill-rollers spend their Army day indoors at the Station Hospital pursuing various duties of a general hospital unit. Therefore, they do not receive the same amount of vigorous soldiering work that enables other post elevens to round into shape so quickly.

However, the Medicos promise to be ready for their first tilt on Oct. 11th when they collide head-on with the Big Blue eleven of the 29th Infantry on the Doughboy Stadium turf. They will play six conference games, meeting the 124th Infantry, the 117th Infantry, the 3rd Armored, the 11th Armored, and the 55th Engineers as well an away game with the Spence Field Fliers at Moultrie, Georgia.

The 21st General will be coached by Captain Francis McCarthy, a catholic chaplain, who is an ardent sports fan and also tutored the Medico baseball team this past summer. Chaplain McCarthy is being assisted in the coaching duties by Sgt. George O'Neil, former Fordham Ram footballer.

While the Medicos will field a team heavy in weight, they will not be deep in reserves. Much of the material is raw but rugged. Several of the lads have played some college ball, however, and they are helping Chaplain McCarthy and Sgt. O'Neil with the newcomers.

The 21st has been fully-uniformed in bran new Maroon and White equipment and will have a spirited team on the field for every opening whistle. Not considered as a contender for the conference title, the Medicos will nevertheless provide some stern opposition for the leaders and be a colorful team in action.

The squad has not been practicing long enough for the tutors to even approximate a starting eleven, but the material has been narrowed down to the best prospects. Outstanding backs still fighting for the varsity slots are: Cobb, Petaczek, Hamilton, Henser, Kelly, DeRosa, Palastro, Tannhauser and Manuzak.

The flankmen will be chosen from the following ends: Brieur, Ebert, Hewett, Hapack, Nafsted, Rogers, Capecchi, Bendos, and Olsen. In the middle of the line Reinkee, Hollscher, Varno, Moegler, Pastore, Binsfield, Terry, Levy, Erickson, Weissman ,Asaley and several others are scrapping for positions.

Potential stars include Tony Manuzak, a husky back who is an adept kicker, and Tom Hamilton, a flashback who played varsity ball at Colorado University.

NEW TIGER CUB

Corporal Technician and Mrs. Bus M. Santacroce, 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, 10th Armored Division, announce the birth of a son.

Corporal Santacroce is a native of the Bronx, N. Y. He is clerk in the Personnel Section of Headquarters, 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion.

124th Gridders—

George Chakurdo at quarter, Vernon Smith and Roy Cestary at the halves, and Stan Ergler at fullback. Chakurdo will call the signals and is a blocker of no mean ability.

CESTARY IS STAR

The big offensive threats are the halfbacks, Cestary and Smith. Cestary is the triple-threat man and played one year of varsity ball at Notre Dame a few years back. He is an adept runner, an accurate passer and a long-distance kicker as well as a crack defensive man. Pre-season indications are that Cestary is one of the classiest backs to be seen on a fort gridiron in several years.

Smith at wingback will be the perfect complement to Cestary and enable the Gators to use a diversified attack. He is fast, shifty and a good pass receiver. Ergler is a big 190-pounder who hits the line hard and is a good backer-upper. Stebbins, Hamlin, Argus, Poulos, Bolognia and Joos are other fast-moving backs that may break in against the Moccasins.

TALL ENDS

The Gators' aerial game will be aided by several tall ends. The starters will no doubt be Puton and Dyal, but Junie Belin, McIntosh, Curry and Moore are only a step behind. Belin played a year at Auburn, and is a great pass-snagger.

Shurbiar and Kisch will get the call in the tackle slots, but they will get plenty of relief from Oxford and Barrazzi. All four are plenty big and rugged. The guard positions will be filled by Tony Aulenti and Green Howard, both of whom are small but fast. Tim Rollins who starts at center is one of four good pivots on the Gator squad. Harry Keller will get the relief call at the snapper-back spot.

History-Making Breaking Of Fast

Probably for the first time anywhere in the country, the breaking of the Atonement Day Fast last Monday evening became a public function as Jewish soldiers at Fort Benning brought the ten-day Holy Day period to a close with a buffet feast.

The Fast breaking was marked by the breaking of the bread and the blessing thereof by Chaplain Samson Shain. Heretofore it has been the practice for each individual family to leave the synagogue with its guests for a banquet served at home.

The Benning rituals were held in an improvised synagogue in Children's School. The food was prepared by the Jewish Welfare Board of Columbus under the direction of Leo Trigoboff, program director. Young ladies of the Junior Hadassah assisted in serving.

Chaplain's Corner..

BY ALFRED L. POLLACK, Ass't. Post Chaplain

We have all faced certain decisions and said to ourselves, "Well, what difference does it make what I do in this situation?" In many minor decisions andcerelatively unimportant things it may not make much difference which course is followed, but this is not true for a great many decisions that all must make in life. We have found out to our regret that it did make a difference. In this connection note two important things.

WATCH YOUR ATTITUDE. How do you react when you have to perform a task you do not especially like? Do you growl and grow sour, and is there a confusion and rebellion within? Whether it is K. P. or guard or any other work—do you let it get you down and let it control you or are you the master of situation? Every essential task is honorable and should have your best. There are some whose very attitude is a deterriment to the good and fine in life. There are chronic kickers—they kick themselves, they criticize their fellow-beings, they cast a shadow of gloom wherever they go. Someone has said, "A cheery soul is a good medicine," and true it is. How much good it does to meet such souls on the road of life. They make the rough places smoother, and inspire us to reach for better things; they send us on our way refreshed and with a firmer grip on ourselves and on life.

WHAT YOU ARE IS MORE IMPORTANT THAN WHERE YOU ARE. How many times do you hear someone say, "If I were in some other place, I could really do something." Most of us have alibis for our failures. The circumstances under which we live are important, to be sure, but what we are is more important. No one or any circumstance can keep you from having the qualities of life that make strong character, courage, determination, sincerity and loyality to your deepest convictions. In the last analysis most of the failures of every kind can be traced to ourselves.

"The fault, ——, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings."

You who are wise will day by day watch your attitude, and remember that WHAT YOU ARE is more important than WHERE YOU ARE. It does make a difference.

Lawson Bomb-Sight

BY PFC. F. T. KILLEAVY

Gag of the Week:

The most talked of gag this week is the one concerning a group of Lawson Field M. P.s, returning from a furlough. It seems Pvt. Oscar Shaw, married the day before, was asked if he had some matches. He handed them over and promptly went back to dreaming of his new bride. Imagine his surprise when being awakened by a "hot foot" to discover that he had supplied the matches.

There will no longer be any need of getting lost at Lawson Field. Signs have been placed at street intersections and every street now has a name.

No more K.P. at Lawson. Recently orders were issued that henceforth no one will be called a K.P.—but Cook's Helper. It was also announced that no other changes had been made; the pots, pans and mops remain the same.

With the arrival of Captain Donovan C. Moffett, new Lawson Field Special Services Officer, the basketball and football hopes of the field now definitely show promise of fine seasons.

Captain Moffett, formerly head of the Department of Physical Education and director of intercollegiate athletics at De Pauw University, was one of the country's outstanding coaches. He holds degrees in physical education from De Pauw, Columbia, and Iowa State where he received his Ph.D. in physical ed.

This week we introduced First Sergeant Thomas I. Burke, of the 54th Base Headquarters and Air Base Squadron. Sgt. Burke, who is 25 years of age, was born on New Year's Eve, 1916, in New York City.

His army career started in 1936 when he enlisted at Fort Slocum, New York, with the 8th Field Artillery for service in Hawaii. He finished his hitch and returned to civilian life as an instructor-operator with Lord and Taylor, New York.

In May, 1941, he enlisted in the Air Force and after a week at Camp Dix, N. J., he was sent to Lawson Field. Because of previous service he was assigned as an instructor in the Recruit School. He was made a payroll clerk and received a specialist's rating. A series of promotions followed that brought him from Corporal to First Sergeant in June, 1942.

The sergeant feels there's a spot in Ireland for him and hopes for service there. That slight touch of the "olde sod" that can be noticed when he sings his favorite Irish ballad, "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," didn't come from eating Irish potatoes.

Did He Really Vant to Know?

The Infantry School instructor posed a question to an Officer Candidate about a tactical situation with an enemy machine gun nest, a small patrol, several avenues of approach and methods of attack, and asked him what he would do about it. "I'd crawl up through the woods and charge, shooting from the hip," the Candidate replied.

"Now you wouldn't really do that, would you," chided the instructor.

"I did it once in the World War and received a D. S. C.," replied the O. C.

Bee-Lover Stung— Just Guess Where

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(AP)—You won't believe it, but—

S. D. Pitts, a bee-fancier, came home and found a swarm of bees in the back yard. Excited, he got down on hands and knees to search for the queen bee so he could hive them.

The bees swarmed right spang on the seat of his pants.

Bond Rally Is Signal Success

Broadcast and Film Net $118,000 Sale

More than 118,000 dollars worth of bonds were sold for the special bond rally held at the Bradley theatre in downtown Columbus, during which "Listen, It's Fort Benning" had equal billing with the new motion picture "Wake Island," last Friday.

A special broadcast of the regular "Listen, It's Fort Benning," preceded the Columbus premiere of "Wake Island." The radio show had such talented soldier performers as: Rawn Spearman, famed Negro tenor; Pvt. Russ Nyberg, wizard of the accordian; the Reception Center Quintet under the direction of Corp. Willis Brown, 3rd Armored Regiment Military Band led by Sgt. Frank Chase, with the regular master of ceremonies, Pvt. Ryan Halloran. The announcing was done by Sgt. Jimmy Wicker, and instead of the usual news report, Sgt. Carl Neu interviewed Officer Candidate Crabtree who was in the Pearl Harbor attack last December.

Golden-Voiced Tenor Gets Gotham Audition

Wins Acclaim From Town Hall Critics

Another of Fort Benning's favorite sons has achieved national recognition in a new field—all because the Army decided to give him a chance.

He is Private Rawn Spearman, golden-voiced tenor of the Fort Benning Reception Center, who has won the acclaim of music critics throughout the South and now in New York City.

Spearman, one of the featured singers on the coast-to-coast Fort Benning "Cheers from the Camps" program over the Columbia Broadcasting System, returned last Friday from New York City where he sang for Dean Dixon and other nationally-known music critics of the Town Hall in New York.

Spearman was invited to audition in Town Hall earlier in the summer and through the efforts of Lt. Col. U. N. James, commanding officer of the Reception Center, Capt. R. P. Langley, Center special service officer, and others, Spearman was granted a ten-day furlough to audition for Dixon.

Arriving at Fort Benning the same time that Spearman returned from New York was a letter from Dixon declaring the Fort Benning youth had "one of the most beautiful natural voices I have ever heard.

"As plans go now, the New-Talent Town Hall concert will take place in the early spring of 1943 . . . if during the interim you develop according to my expectations and according to the talent and ability you already possess, you will be one of my featured artists on that 1943 program."

Spearman, who became an established singer during his four years in Florida A & M College at Tallahassee, auditoned for the Town Hall concert before he joined the Army in June. Recordings of his voice were sent to Dixon who sent for the boy after he had heard the records.

A good-looking, likeable lad, Spearman has made several personal appearances at Fort Benning in addition to the solo work on "Cheers from the Camps." He sings regularly with the Reception Center Chorus and quintet.

Service Battalion Has Own Theater Troupe

The Service aBttalion is one of the few organizations in the military service that can boast of possessing a complete show consisting of dancers, singers, pianists and comedians. This show, uncoached and unsponsored by any outside agency, was organized many months ago, soon after the activation of the then Service Company.

Among its members are men whose civilian occupation was the theater and the concert stage. Staff Sergeant Colonius S. Davis, 1st Sergeant of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Service Battalion, the pianist of the group, studied under George Harris, accompanist to Jean Dineski, as well as at the Julliard School of Music, New York City, where he studied under the best teachers to be found in the world of music. In civilian life, Davis was the organist for the largest Baptist Church in Norfolk, Virginia, along with filling many concert stage engagements. At present, he is the organist at Chapel No. 3, in addition to being the choirmaster of a choir made up for the most part of Officer Candidates. During week-days, he finds time to preside at the organ for most of the weddings held in Chapel No. 3.

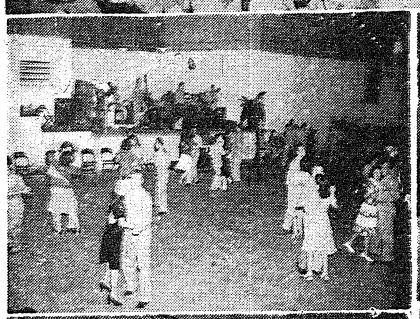
Sergeant William E. Irons, the M. C. of the show, and 1st Sergeant of A Company, Service Battalion, is one of the hottest hoofers ever produced on Broadway. His now well-known roller-skate tap dance won him a contract with Major Bowes, and carried him to the largest, best-known theaters all over the country. At the time he was called to the military service, he was appearing with the Major Bowes show at the Ford Theater in Detroit. Sergeant Irons hails from West Chester, Pennsylvania.

Private James Bailey, of Company B, Service Battalion, in civilian life produced shows. His shows have appeared as the main attraction at many of New York's famous night spots, as well as playing the eastern seaboard in general. Bailey also composes music, "Jumpin' On KP Time," "Furlough Blues," "What Will the Neighbors Say?" being a few of the numbers he has composed since being here at Fort Benning.

These brief character resumes give a fair estimate of the talent in the show. The show, often referred to as "Major Garrett's Show," is regularly called upon to entertain officers and enlisted men alike on the Fort Benning Reservation, appearing from time to time at the Officers' Club, the Horse Show Bowl, the Polo Hunt Club, and the homes of many of the ranking officers on the Post. Their engagements also carry them into Columbus and neighboring cities where they entertain at the leading hotels and clubs. Many graduating Officer Candidate classes' last impression of Fort Benning has been the performance given them by the Service Battalion show on the eve of their graduation: And thus has been carried to the far-flung carners of the world the name of the Service Battalion, a unit that not only made life a bit easier for the students here at Fort Benning, but also, in its off moments, was able to supply entertainment as well.

American Team Work

BY PFC. SMITHY MORTON



This is the phrase to be stressed among all people of our nation today. The efforts of the American people are far too short for immediate victory. Few citizens, besides those who have entered the armed forces, have made any real sacrifices, and it is about time those having a great deal to say concerning conditions of the soldiers and the war effort should realize that the first objective is to win the war. I cite a very striking story from the Amsterdam, New York, Star News that will be of interest to all Americans. This is a true story; it comes from the South; its origin is from an humble American family, but militant indeed:

"We are a small group of Americans living in a quiet, safe valley in north Alabama. Our ancestors were free men in Africa, who were captured and forced into slavery, as so many free men all over the world are being forced into slavery today. Through the grace of God and the generous laws of our beloved America we live in joyful freedom. We can proudly point to our homes we own. We can gather and raise our voices in praise and prayer without fear. Many of our young men have marched to war; they have marched away to fight for the protection of American freedom, and we want to help, too. Our little cabins are built of logs and planks, and there isn't much food, but although our pockets are empty, our hearts are full, so we are sending the amount we raised ($22.50) twenty-two dollars and fifty cents, and we ask—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, please give it to the Red Cross for us."

This is an example of true Americanism and an example of what it takes to demonstrate American team work. Our task at Fort Benning and camps throughout the United States is a very difficult one. We are having it tough, but we feel that if citizens in the valley of Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi are pledging to do their ($22.50) twenty-two dollars and fifty cents worth, we can and will continue to make our contribution. It is not what the people say concerning the war efforts that counts . . . It is what we are doing to win the war. . . . American team work is the thing that counts.

Johnny Doughboy Makes Merry On USO Patio

The Patio located in the rear of the Army and Navy YMCA-USO Club in Columbus is always a pleasant spot for soldiers of Fort Benning who like to relax from the week's rough work by dancing.

Saw German Blitz Work In 1940 Battle Of France

Grounded in German tactics, both in the field and behind the lines, Lawrence A. Jump, of Boston and Nantucket, is currently securing an equal footing in American army precedures at the Infantry Officer Candidate School, Fort Benning, Ga., with a view to more ably meeting the representatives of the major Axis power when next he gets a crack at them.

Candidate Jump has recently completed his third week of training at this Officer Candidate School, qualifying as a rifle sharpshooter and a machine gun expert. He has successfully completed two of the written examinations on which much of the school's practical and theoretical instruction and grading is based.

Jump received his experience in German methods through contact with them in the early days of the invasion of France, where he was serving as a volunteer American ambulance driver. He was captured, along with several French soldiers, near the German-French frontier and was interned in a prison camp near Stuttgart from May, 1940 until July of the same year.

Through efforts of the American state department he obtained his release from the prison camp and was returned to this country, via Finland, in September, 1940. He made a brief speaking tour of New England during the following winter and enlisted in the army in April, 1942.

Following thirteen weeks of basic training in Infantry tactics at Camp Roberts, California, he was assigned to the Fort Benning Officer Candidates' School in August and is scheduled to graduate with a Second Lieutenant's commission in November.

A native of Oakland, California, he is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Herbert A. Jump. Reverend Jump is the former pastor of the Columbus Congregational church in Boston. Young Jump received his education in New England schools and is a graduate of Dartmouth University.

Varied Program Planned By U. S. O. For Winter

Patio Is Provided For Outdoor Activities

To counteract the summer heat and use the mild weather all year 'round in Columbus, a real outdoor patio has been developed at the USO club at 14 W. 11th St. at Broadway.

A large area back of the building has been attractively paved with terrazzo, suitable for dancing, skating, parties, meetings, movies, band concerts, and radio broadcasting.

The patio is adorned with rustic outdoor furnishings, consisting of tables for refreshments, reading and writing; and with comfortable arm chairs and settees, all in keeping with the outdoor motif. Besides these chairs, there are enough folding chairs to seat over a thousand on special occasions.

The patio floor proper has been kept clear by setting the stage into a niche between two adjoining buildings. This stage is large enough for a full military band for concerts, ample space for guests and talent during the broadcasts, a full size boxing ring and small theatricles.

Special equipment for this part of the Army and Navy YMCA-USO Club include:

Floodlights, varicolored streamers and spotlights with appropriate controls; piano; roller skates for hire; a dolley providing radio pick-ups and a public address system contained in one unit, booked up to a large umbrella type speaker that is suspended above the floor; the inevitable juke box; a long throw 16 mm movie projector and a complete boxing ring with its stakes, ropes and mats, complete the assortment.

NEVER AN IDLE MOMENT

Never an idle moment, the patio is busy all week long. Monday it's roller skating with Chicago skates, only fiber wheels allowed, available to service men and their lady partners. The pick-up and P. A. system, or the juke box provides the music. Tuesdays and Saturdays are the regular dance and party nights. The Military Maids organization provide the fairer sex, and music is by your favorite Fort Benning dance band.

Special parties and dances may be made on Thursdays by reservation. This service is open only to organizations and groups desiring to have a little get-together of their own. Fridays are for the Officer Candidates' dances.

Plans are now being formed to have boxing matches on Thursdays when the weather is a little cooler. On Wednesdays everyone comes to see the regular run motion pictures. They are not the latest releases but that only adds to the fun.

ARMY HOUR

The most outstanding feature of the week is the "Army Hour." This program is broadcast every Sunday at 9:30 p. m. over local station WRBL. It is dedicated to an organization, occasion or leader and presents army talent, with some civilian guest artists. This program has been running for nearly three years and has attracted national attention as it was one of the first of the forerunners of this type of show, being broadcast from the camps on a national hook-up.

Those men that like to lounge around on Saturday afternoons and at the same time listen to their favorite football game can now do it to their heart's content. This season, football games will be picked up Friday nights and Saturday afternoons. Special music and the president's speeches are more of the programs that are picked up and routed out to the patio for one and all's enjoyment.

This is not for Dodger rooters, but the World Series will be handled in the same manner. Ah, pity, there is no joy in Flatbush.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

When I write you that I regard the Bayonet as a most important weapon in the effort of soldiers' unification at Fort Benning, I know I am echoing the feelings of hundreds of thousands of soldiers throughout the United States. We in this area need the Bayonet, we need it for reporting all news, we need it for creating a better understanding among soldiers at Fort Benning, and morale building. We need it, too, for public relations and army relations. We are happy to be a vital part of Fort Benning and the Bayonet.

Ever Been Out With Zeke on a Night Problem? Then You'll Appreciate His Letter to 'Mom'

Trainee Writes Account Of His Two Wild Nights

Dear Mom:

Today is Thursday, and am I tired! My company and I just finished a second night problem in a row. Now don't get excited, mom, it isn't the kind of night problem you may think it is.

Before we started off, I remembered what you told me: now, you couldn't see how I was going to get along in the Army all by myself, wandering around all alone somewhere in Europe, Asia, or God knows where, because I can't see beyond the end of my nose and always have to have somebody leading me around by it, the nose, I mean. Well, last night I was beginning to believe you were right.

We were divided into groups of four before we got started. The captain warned us that the man whose name appeared at the top of the card was to be leader and that he was to see to it that come what may all of us were to stick together; one for all, and all for one in case we got lost. Then they loaded us in trucks and they took us deep into the woods. The truck drivers were instructed to go to the initial starting point in a round about way to make us lose our sense of direction. Then we were dropped, and after final instructions set out. We had a flashlight, a map, and a compass.

SAVE FLASHLIGHTS

We were instructed to use the flashes as little as possible. But you know how a bunch of fellows are when you turn them loose in the woods at night. Once when I was on top of a hill, I looked down into the woods and beheld at least 5,000 flashlights all glowing at the same time. Can you imagine 5,000 lightning bugs aglow against a sable background? It was truly beautiful, and I confess that I was touched to the point of tears. A few minutes later I was again on the verge of tears, but not for the same reason. The fellow who had charge of our party was one of those guys who sets a course, and come hell or high water, he simply won't veer from it. He aimed the compass for the North Star and we set out, pacing off 380 paces as specified on our instruction card. We came to a swamp, and all of us hesitated, that is, all but one. All but he, wanted to go around it, but our leader said, "hell, no. The Infantry can't be stopped by a little swamp. So we followed him, and soon we were up to our hips in the slime. What we were muttering can't be quoted here. We finally got through it, thanking the stars above that we hadn't encountered one of those giant California red-wood trees, for darned if we still don't think he would have made us climb it instead of going around.

CROSS-BONES AND SKULL

We were told before starting out that a lamp swinging from a tree would mark our destination. Well we spotted one after trudging over hill and dale for three hours, but one of the boys had heard that should we report to the wrong station, we would be disqualified. We wandered around in the woods, getting pretty much disgusted. Suddenly I discovered that it had grown mighty quiet around me. I called out to the boys, first in a tremulous whisper which developed into a silence-splitting howl, when I got no answer. I turned on my spot and thought my feet would sprout through my hair when I discovered a grinning skull and cross-bones. It was a sign marking an artillery impact area. My imagination began to run riot. Suppose night artillery practice was scheduled for this area?

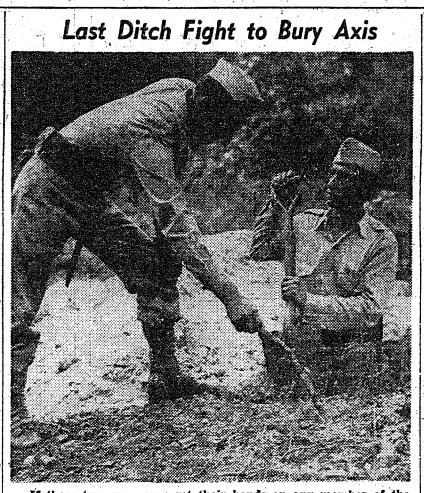
Well, Ma, I told my feet about it. I began to move with my shadow having a hard time keeping up with me when suddenly I went sprawling into a patch of thorns. I felt my face and there was something wet and sticky on it. Blood, I moaned. I licked my "wounded" mouth, but instead of blood, it was something sweet. I felt around and discovered I had landed in a blackberry pat. Might as well make myself comfortable, I thought. I looked at my watch and discovered it was past midnight. Boy, what awkward situations you find yourself in. I began thinking when in the distance I heard the blasting of horns and the whine of truck motors running up and down the highway. I gathered myself together and set out, guiding myself on powerful spot lights turned heavenward. When I reached First Division Road, I and my officers gave a sigh of relief. But did I get the horse-laugh from my buddies who had been kept out looking for me. Then I was told that the light we had spotted hours before did mark our goal, and that a lot of bother would have been saved had we just stopped to inquire.

OF NIGHT PATROLS

Last night we went on a scouting and patrolling problem. The idea was to patrol the roads for land mines and road blocks. It was inky black so we tied ourselves to each other with stout cords and went sneaking along the dark road, just inching along. In the distance we could hear the cracking of rifles and the sputter of machineguns as the enemy spotted some of our parties. From time to time a flare would go up and we hit the ground if we heard the characteristic sound first or froze in our tracks if caught by the glare before we detected the sound. We found a few mines along the way which led through briars and thorns and some more swamps.

Believing we had performed our mission, we started back for the trucks. While sneaking along through the pitch-black night, we suddenly froze—— in our tracks. From the side of the road we heard a click. Was it an enemy rifle or a rattle snake? As one man, we hit the ditch on the other side of the road. Suddenly a smudge pot began to blaze. In the white light of the flare we could detect an umpire and his sergeant reclining in the reeds, supported on an elbow. The umpire was calmly smoking a cigar. Well, Mom, we didn't know what we were supposed to do. So we just lay there and stared, and the umpire indolently stared back, puffing away leisurely on that cigar. After 30 minutes of it, we decided he was just tired and was going to stay there all night. So we got to our feet and started up the road with me as the rear point. Then darned if the ump didn't raise up and shoot me smack in the back—— with a blank. Since he didn't tell me I was a dead duck, I plugged on courageously. When I got back to the truck about a mile or so away, I found out I had been badly wounded and might have been carried in. Why don't they tell me these things?????

Well, this is all I have to write, except to say you'd have been mighty proud of me the other day when I came sloshing through the mud of the Shell Creek area all by myself with 200 men standing on top of the hill cheering me on. Who said I wouldn't be a success in the Army?



With love to Pop and the girls and don't forget to feed my gold fish.

Your sonny boy,
ZEKE.

SPLASHES

Somewhere in England, Sgt. Johnny Anderson of Paterson, N. J., walked off with the diving laurels in a field of 12 American and English tanksters. A. U. S. team also won the 150-yard free style relay. Nice splashing, boys!

Last Ditch Fight to Bury Axis

If these two guys ever get their hands on any member of the Axis, he'll be to bury for sure. The two officer candidates, Paul Tainor, of Worcester, Mass., and Michael Matondi, Nedway, Mass., were in civilian life an undertaker and a gravedigger, respectively. This pair, whom their buddies refer to, affectionately, as the 'gruesome twosome,' often worked together in civilian life, but when war broke out their paths separated, until arrival at Officer Candidates School, here at Benning. Most of their study has been in new fields, but it sure reminded them of the good ole days, when they were assigned one morning to dig foxholes.

Hey, There, Soldier, Let's Have a Talk

From THE COMMUNIQUE, Camp Livingston, La.

How about sitting down with yourself tonight, soldier, and talking seriously a few minutes about the grim business of winning the war?

In a few weeks or a few months now you'll be going overseas. No point in fooling yourself any longer about a quick war. It's beginning to look like a war that may last for years. And no matter how long it lasts, we'll probably be policing the world for a long time afterward.

That's not a happy picture. It means it'll be a long time before you see friends, family and home. The fate of the world hinges upon the result—the fate of the friends, families and homes of all the world.

You've undergone a strenuous training program. Of necessity, it has been a period packed with arduous and, in many cases, disagreeable tasks. You are now supposed to be a trained, efficient soldier; not just as good as the enemy, but better than the enemy.

YOU AND ENEMY

But ask yourself, soldier. Are you a trained, efficient fighting man? Are you as good as the enemy? Are you better? Let's not let our ego or our spirit fool us. Look square at yourself and take inventory. Deep down inside, do you feel competent, able to take care of yourself in any emergency?

Can you scout? Can you slither along the ground and through the underbrush as quietly as the Japanese? Are you satisfied with your marksmanship? Can you throw a grenade and throw it accurately? Can you march long hours under all conditions?

Can you dig a hasty trench? A foxhole? Do you know how you, individually, can stop a tank? Can you identify gas? Can you make a tourniquet? Do you know what to do in case low flying planes attempt to strafe your outfit? Can you use your bayonet and use it as well as you like?

Have you been careless about your gas mask and the care of your equipment? Is it always in the best of condition and ready for use? And your gun: is it always in top condition and working order?

These are only a few of the important questions to ask yourself tonight. There is no need to outlin ethe countless others that apply to you and the branch of the service you represent. But it is not enough to know all the questions. How do your answers stack up? Are you satisfied with them?

WAR NO SHAM

There is no sham about war. It is the grimmest kind of reality. The earth trembles and rocks with the roar and thunder of guns; the skies are red and crackling with fire. Men kill each other. The guns the tanks, the big guns; they are the weapons of war with which to kill the enemy.

Men will try to kill you. They will come at you on foot and in machines. Their faces will be screwed into a strange mask of hatred. Sweat will stand out in moist beads on their foreheads. Their guns will be firing, not at targets, but at you. The cold steel of their bayonets will be pointed, not at straw men, but at you.

Are you ready to bet your life on how well you have learned to do your job? Are you ready to stake your life on the efficient way you keep up your equipment?

If you are not ready—if you would be afraid to stake your life and your future upon how well you have learned your job and your ability to keep your equipment clean and ready — then you've some serious thinking to do. There is still time to make up for some of that lost time and carelessness.

Let's be ready, soldier. Tomorrow is a grim day.

2nd Student Training Regiment Heavy Bond Buyers

A total of $78,151.85 worth of War Bonds and Stamps have been sold in the Second Student Training Regiment since the Victory Bond campaign was launched in that outfit May 6, a survey by Capt. Fred A. Polumbo, regimental bond officer, revealed this week. The Third Battalion paces the field with a total of $21,454.

PAY-OFF!

Basil James, veteran jockey, entered the Army as a private last week at Camp Upton, N. Y. James, whose problem the last few years has been keeping his weight down to 98 pounds, signified a preference for the cavalry, but was assigned to limited service until he puts on more weight. What a pay-off!

W. D. Accepts War Terms By Benning Man

Spanish List Now In Use by U. S. Naval Intelligence

A list of approximately 500 Spanish war terms, prepared by Dr. Marshall E. Nunn, associate professor of Spanish, and First Lieutenant Jerome W. Schweitzer (of Fort Benning), assistant professor of Romance Languages, both of University of Alabama faculty, has been accepted by the War Department, it was announced at post headquarters Wednesday.

The list includes many new words which have been coined since Hitler began his blitz against the world. Consequently, many of them have not yet appeared in the dictionaries. The list was originally published in "Modern Language Journal," and later in pamphlet form.

Since its publication, several University of Alabama language teachers have entered the intelligence department of the Navy taking the pamphlets with them. They aroused considerable interest and were used in censoring cables and other written matter in the Spanish language. The request came from offices in Miami, Fla., and San Antonio, Texas, for permission to reproduce the list for general use.

The authors gave this permission and in addition the pamphlets was mailed to the Adjutant General in Washington with a letter offering it to the Government for its use. This week a letter came from the office of the Adjutant General accepting the list and expressing thanks to the authors.

Dr. Nunn is a graduate of Stanford University and has the Ph. D. from the University of Illinois. He was formerly director of sports publicity for the University of Alabama, but now devotes his entire time to teaching and writing. He is the author of numerous articles in the Spanish language which have gained wide-spread publicity in Latin America.

Lt. Schweitzer is assistant public relations officer at headquarters, Fort Benning. He is a graduate of the University of Alabama and holds the Ph. D. from the Johns Hopkins University. He is also the author of a work in belles-letters published by the Johns Hopkins Press. He was formerly public relations director for the University of Alabama. He is now on extended leave of absence.

Laff Of The Week

One of the problems of the poor unfortunate yardbird who draws K.P. is the lining up of dishes in a military manner so that when the chowhounds arrive they will know exactly how to park. Out of this grows a story, allegedly originating in Camp Crowder, Mo., about a mess sergeant who had his final Saturday night drink a little too close to Sunday morning's breakfast. While he was trying to pull himself together a shavetail entered the mess hall and snapped, "Sergeant! Those dishes are out of line!" The terror of the kitchen went to the end of the row of tables and looked down his nose at the crockery, nodded loole, then bellowed, "Dishes — Ten-shun! D-r-r-e-sss, right, DRESS!"

MIGHTY

The Pacific Coast's biggest basketball player, William (Nap) Van Sistine, is now a private at Ft. Sheridan, Ill. Nap won that title playing for the Gonzaga University team, Spokane, Wash. The mighty man weighs 293 pounds and stretches only 5 feet, 10 1-2 inches. Oh my, oh my!

Jewish Doc Flees Hitler—Joins Up Here as Private

FT. DIX, N. J.—Dr. Herbert Kainer, an authority on bone tuberculosis who has taught advanced surgery in a German hospital, is now a U. S. Army private issuing pills and first aid to fellow soldiers at the Ft. Dix Reception Center. A surgeon of Berlin's Jewish Hospital, he fled Germany in 1939, passed the New Jersey Medical Board's examination with ease and set up practice in Weehawken. He tried to enlist in the Army twice, but was rejected because he was an alien.

Drafted, he took advantage of a law providing for special naturalization of soldiers and became a citizen. He now is eligible for a commission and has submitted his application to the War Department.

"I'm glad I've been a private," the surgeon said. "Now, when I'm an officer, I'll know how the boys react and what they think. That is important."

AN ARMY WIFE Shops in Columbus

Homesickness and loneliness is one of the most difficult emotions to overcome. One misses the many little things they took for granted in the home town. Not the least of these is knowing where to find the familiar things one had been accustomed to purchase in the home town shop. Labeled goods, where this or that repair job could be done to your satisfaction, the best shop for hats, or shoes, or kitchen wear. Once one finds them, a feeling of orientation sets in and the satisfying sense of knowing your way about overcomes that dreadful newcomer emotion. Here then, is your passport for a quick disposal of that problem.....

There are times when a luxury purchase turns out to be one of the most practical things you've ever bought. The generous size overnight cases filled with your favorite beauty preparations at KIEVEN'S falls into this classification. There are full sized jars and bottles of everything you'll want for weeks. The real joy is the space for nightgown, robe and slippers. He'll appreciate the fact you can go into a hotel with a small kit and eliminate his pulling out the heavier luggage. It is in fact, a smart piece of practical luggage in fine leather, equipped for endless and pleasureable service. For yourself or a gift, you'd best shop early. Priorities and such make it unlikely that there'll be many of these on hand around the Christmas season.

—V—

One would think that everyone stationed at Benning had had their photograph taken at AIMIE DUPONT'S. I know they haven't, but they should. Women are sentimental sillies, but a good picture of their special soldier in uniform is a treasured gift of gifts. Dupont makes the kind of photograph Mother will show the mailman, grocer and minister and hug to herself in the quiet moment of loneliness for her son.

Merchandise experts tell us the amount one should spend should be in proportion to the times one expects to wear the garment. On that basis the Eisenburg dresses at SEALY'S run less than the most inexpensive wash frock one could buy. Any woman who's ever owned an Eisenburg dress knows that garment she'll put on season after season when she wants to feel rigged out in her best. The simple lines of a dressmaker genius, the full seams, and finished touches topped off with what amounts to practically millinrys in costume jewelry gives a woman that inexpressible feeling of grooming and good sophistication.

—V—

We are all too busy these days with our Red Cross duties and keeping up our spirits to be annoyed with creeps and seams pulling out. Constant mending has always been a chore. Barbizon underwear has long been known for being tops in smart tailored underwear that gives endless service. KIRALFY'S carries this fine line of merchandise. The attention to decorative detail has an appeal to the fastidious woman. If, however, you'd like to venture on the naugthy but nice with a touch of Lana Turner, look at those diaphaous black chiffon and lace confections.

SEARS ROEBUCK has been an institution with the army going back to horse and buggy days on isolated army post. Many an army brat wearing the eagles of a colonel today can tell you of the excitement and anticipation of an order coming from Sears Roebuck. The service is no less important today for the essential necessities of the home. When the integrity of this firm combines with the merchandising skill to put on an Anniversary Sale, there's truly an incentive for the shrewd shopper to investigate. I liked the unpainted furniture. For attractiveness and value for young homemakers it can't be equalled. A drop leaf table with three drawers at each end is an all purpose functional piece of furniture. The good design of this piece will show up under application of bright lacquer.

Did you see the gay and silly shoes MILLER - TAYLOR have on hand? They're I. Miller, which is tops in dress shoes to the woman who knows. Pert, stubby toes with the gayest flowers perched just below the instep. In suede for the coming season. Reminded me of those gay French maids we used to see in musical comedies. Certainly they're feminine and a complete answer to masculine diversion from the "G. I." shoe.

It's easy enough to see why Ethel shouldn't wear that fullness around the hips, or why Mary looks bilious in Kelly green. When it comes to picking out your own clothes your mind is cluttered with a great many ideas that sometimes detract from clear judgement. What a find, then, a shop where one can depend upon sincere advice and assistance in finding the exact sort of dress or suit that's going to really do things for you. No one can afford mistakes these days. THE PATRICIA SHOP, located on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel, carries an outstanding line of clothing especially suited for the needs of army women. And girls, Patricia has somethings for every pocketbook—prices ranging from 12.95 up, and with that personal service touch, you're bound to be known as a gal who looks right at the right time.

10th Armored Play Hosts To Military Maids

Service Club Is Scene Of Cafe De La Paix Dance

Dancing in their colorfully decorated Service Club, the men of the 10th Armored Division played hosts to the Columbus Military Maids in a formal Cafe de la Paiz dance held last Thursday night.

The Club, bedecked in its finest for the gala affair, featured a French shoppe of costume jewelry, a huge replica of the Eifel Tower and refreshment tables under brilliantly-colored awnings and soft lights.

Honor guests of the evening were Major General and Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden, Lieutenant and Mrs. Roger A. Rawley and Mrs. Hugh Roberts, chaperon in charge of the Military Maids.

Tenth men and their guests were entertained by lovely Mrs. Muriel McVea, professional dancer from Chicago, and the wife of Corporal John McVea of the 11th Armored Regiment. Mrs. McVea did several tap-dance numbers and later led a long and enthusiastic Conga line.

Hilarity was added to the affair during the intermission when Corporal James E. Frye of the Division public relations office and Private Ray Griff of the Service Club Staff, clad in outlandish ballet costumes, gave their interpretation of the "Spring Song" as it shouldn't be done.

Music for the gala occasion was furnished by the 3rd Armored Regiment dance band.

Soldier Honored

Before the assembled 54th Armored Infantry regiment, Colonel William S. Eley, regimental commander, reads record of 1st Lieutenant Lewis H. Foxworth who was recently commissioned after 20 years military service as an enlisted man. Immediately afterward, Lieutenant Foxworth reviewed the regiment which held a retreat parade in his honor. The division, however, loses Lieutenant Foxworth to the Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., M. P.'s. (10th Armored Photo by Kerbs.)

Benning Unit Spurred By Mercer Buys War Bonds

Armored Reconnaissance Battalion Almost 100 Per Cent

The War Bond allotment record of the Armored Reconnaissance Battalion will be tough for the rest of the 10th Armored Division to beat. Starting its drive August 28th with the appearance of Songstress Mary Ann Mercer at a G. I. banquet, the 90th now leads the 10th Armored with 98 per cent of its available enlisted men and 97.5 per cent of its available officers signed up for bonds.

According to Personnel Adjutant Lt. Becker, the Battalion's unusual record seems to have resulted from Miss Mercer's making the Recons War Bond conscious. The day after her appearance here, bond allotment slips started pouring into Battalion Headquarters, and they haven't stopped coming. There seems to be little doubt in anyone's mind that the 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion will soon be 100 per cent sold on bonds.

In the course of the drive one man came to his company commander and said that he would like to make an allotment, but wasn't able. "But surely you can put aside at least the minimum of $1.25?" the officer asked.

No, he couldn't do it. He had already bought the limit: paid out $7,500.00 for $10,000.00 in bonds, the maximum permitted by law. He's a sergeant in Headquarters Company who prefers to remain anonymous.

Benning's Iron 'Mine' Yields Great Tonnage

Valuable Metals Salvaged In Extended Post Campaign

Unfortunately for the Japs and the Nazis, Fort Benning has an "iron mine" and, in addition, a hard-working "miner" to work it.

The "miner" is Maj. Clarence A. Will, permanent field officer of the day, and the "mine" is the wealth of scrap metal and rubber thrown into the discard since Fort Benning first became a military post in 1919.

The work already accomplished by soldier-details under Major Will in salvaging valuable scrap metal is staggering because in less than a week the major's men have taken no less than 50 tons of metal from the "iron mine" and that'll make a lot of tanks and guns for American troops.

The "mine," of course, isn't underground and isn't even a mine, as it consists of a huge dump in which everything metal from bent nails to huge safes have been tossed by soldiers in the last two decades. As the scrap metal pile grew each year, it expanded farther and farther into the pine woods which border the post proper near the Infantry School stables.

The "mine" first came to official military attention as a potential metal supply when the national scrap metal salvage campaign began. In his capacity as field officer of the day, Major Will has an opportunity of visiting almost every acre of the post proper and he lost no time instituting a roundup of every available bit of metal at Fort Benning.

BOY SCOUTS HELP

Aided by soldier details and by independent campaigns such as that put on by Boys Activities, post authorities were able to turn in many tons of scrap metal and rubber but the final "take" from the "mine" will top all previous totals.

It takes good, hard physical labor to haul the rusty, bent and dirt-covered metal from its hiding place of years, but soldier crews under Major Will's direction have turned to and the major reported this week to Major J. E. Johnson, post inspector, that 50 tons had been carried to the salvage yards to be catalogued and shipped to factories for reconversion.

Workmen say the surface of the mine has "hardly been scratched." Major Will estimates it will take two months to empty the huge dump of its valuable metal content.

Other results turned in by details under Major Will's supervision have been astounding since the drive was started. For instance, men go around on all construction jobs and pick up discarded nails. To date they have found three barrels of nails. Good ones are returned to the carpenters, others are sent to the salvage yard.

COPPER, BRASS FOUND

One hundred and thirty tons of iron rail have been salvaged with good rail returned to the Quartermaster Corps and the remainder salvaged. Twenty-three tons of other metal—odds and ends found in scattered parts of the reservation—have been turned in to the salvage officer. Six hundred pounds of valuable copper, brass and aluminum have been salvaged. This is all in addition to the 55 tons of metal gathered up before the national drive began in earnest.

Major Will has asked for the cooperation of all military and civilian personnel at the post in continuing the drive to eliminate the waste of any metal.

"It may seem a bit unimportant to save such things as little nails, but it might be just such painstaking things as that which win this war," he declared in closing.

Books For Tankers

Two books on the "must read" list for Tenth Armored Tankers are "Fighting Tanks Since 1916" and Major Kutz's "War on Wheels," Miss Mary E. Clark, division librarian recommends.

These two books will bring you up to the present war on the history and development of tanks. For a better understanding of the tanks in the present conflict, Miss Clark also recommends "The War" first and second years, by McInnes; "Blitzkrieg," by Marshall, and the regular reading of the "Cavalry Journal," "Field Artillery Journal" and "Infantry of Squadron A," 1939-1939.

Baseball Leagues

With just a week to go in the 10th Armored Division baseball leagues, the 3rd Armored Regiment and the Maintenance Battalion still remain the only undefeated teams in their respective loops with four victories apiece.

Behind the speed-ball pitching of burly Ed Bronc, the Mainteaners continued the fast pace on top of the American league with a 5 to 1 win-over Division Headquarters Company Saturday. Bronc, who on last Wednesday put his club on top with a six-hitter over the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion, racked up ten strikeouts in a row over the Headquarters nine to win his third successive league victory.

The undefeated 3rd Armored Regiment, idle over the weekend, continued to lead the National league with four victories without a loss.

The 55th Engineers moved into the National league's third slot by trouncing the 419th F. A. Battalion.

Led by Pfc. Raymond Daw, who hurled six innings of one hit ball and hammered out a three-run homer, the 11th Armored Regiment outscored the 420th F. A. 13 to 7. The win jumped the 11th to the National's fourth place.

In the American circuit, Supply Battalion scored an important 9 to 7 triumph over the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion and moved into second place. The hard-hitting of Lt. Locke and Privates Al Monchack and Tony Fragale proved too much for the Recons. The Supply nine now figures to be Maintenance Battalion's only opposition.

The 150th Signal Company kept out of the cellar by trouncing the hapless 80th Medics 13 to 4.

Standings of the clubs after Saturday's games are as follows:

Kline Is Made 1st Lieutenant

Has Held Every Enlisted Grade From Private To Mr. Sgt.

From regimental sergeant-major to regimental adjutant in one quick step is the story of 1st Lieutenant Herman L. Kline of the Academic Regiment, Infantry School Service Command.

He has held every enlisted grade in the Army from private to master sergeant. He was the personnel sergeant major when the Academic Regiment was changed over from a detachment in January, 1940 and later became the regimental sergeant major, the highest position held by an enlisted man.

He was discharged as an enlisted man with 20 years and eight months continuous service in the regular army. With the exception of one three-year hitch spent with the 26th and 29th Infantries at Camp Dix, New Jersey, all of his service has been with the Infantry School Detachment and its successor, the Infantry School Service Command.

Lt. Kline is a native of Crossville, Tennessee. He is the son of Mrs. A. C. Beadle of that village. He makes his home with his wife and two children at Fort Benning.

Bakersfield, Calif., has a bakery located on Baker street.

Armored Unit Boasts 82 Per Cent Volunteers

Prewar Soldiers Provide Remainder Of Organization

The Maintenance Battalion, 10th Armored Division, whose slogan is "With Wrench and Gun," boasts of over 82 per cent volunteers! The balance of the Battalion is almost entirely composed of old prewar soldiers who have been in cadres. The Battalion is commanded by Lt. Col. Benjamin S. Mesick, a "West Pointer" and Regular Army Officer, who has had much valuable ordnance experience. He is not only a graduate of the Army Industrial College, but holds a D. S. C. in M. E. from Mass. Institute of Tech.

Lt. Col. Messick is most ably assisted by Major Merten K. Heimstead, Executive Officer. The Major is a Regular Army officer who graduated from the University of Wis. with and Engineering degree.

MAY ENLIST

Although enlistments in special branches of the service have been closed, an exception was made for the Maintenance Battalion of the 10th Armored Division, because of the acute need for highly skilled and trained technical men.

Almost 250 men who volunteered for service are now assigned to the 10th Armored Division Maintenance Battalion.

With much able assistance from the National Automotive Dealers association, a recruiting program was initiated in the industrial areas of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Recruiting programs were spirited and the response was most gratifying. Men came long distances to enlist in the Ordnance. At Woodbury, N. J. Recruiting Office, in a very few days, well over 100 men applied for enlistment in both the Maintenance Battalion and the 302nd Ordnance Regiment.

SPECIAL SCHOOLS

Every one of these men who demonstrates ability to learn more about his particular branch of mechanics is sent by the Battalion to special schools. Courses there vary in length from 3 weeks to 3 months. For example, General Motors runs a school on Cadillac engines and hydromatic transmissions; Chrysler runs one on Multiple Engine Installation in Tanks.

The combination of recruiting and special schooling has resulted in the formation of a Battalion of extremely high caliber men who will keep 'em rolling and shooting.

Baumer Seeks to Cut Red Tape in Keeping Army Records

Many new military techniques have originated at the Infantry School, Fort Benning, since this specialized institution was founded, but now comes an experiment in a new field—army paper work—which holds out promises of cutting a big swath through the reams of red tape in Uncle Sam's rapidly expanding armed forces.

It's an experiment in applying modern business machine methods to army administration, and its echoes are already being heard through military channels.

The man behind the machines is an energetic young officer who got fed up with the intricacies, the round-about methods in the administration of the huge Infantry Officer Candidate school at Benning and decided to see if something couldn't be done about it. He's Capt. Edward F. Baumer, a lawyer in civilian life, whose title is personnel adjutant of the Student Training Brigade at The Infantry School.

TOO MANY FORMS

Captain Baumer through research found that each Officer Candidate through the three-months course there was required to fill out some 100 different forms. Every different unit of the school which required information on a student had its own form for him to fill out. And in most cases the same information was merely duplicated. So the first thing Captain Baumer did was to revise these down to one form covering all the essential information.

From this one form the Machine Service Unit at brigade headquarters, which will soon start handling most of the paper work of the three training regiments here, makes up a master plate for an addressograph machine covering some 30 items of essential information.

Then when some unit wants to roster on this or that, the master plates are simply run through the addressograph and the desired information is taken off. Anywhere from one to 100 such rosters or sets of file cards can be produced with minimum effort.

TWO ADVANTAGES.

The system has two big advantages. It cuts time, eliminates staffs of typists rapping out similar rosters of information for numerous different offices. And it cuts error. For the master plate is absolutely checked for accuracy before it is cut and any information taken from it will be correct.

What portent does this hold for the army as a whole? Here's Captain Baumer's idea.

Suppose every soldier when he enters services had such a master plate made up on him, containing all essential information. Then suppose this masterplate was posted in the back of his service record, a permanent record which accompanies him wherever he may be transferred.

Suppose then this soldier were sent from an induction center to a new division. Under the present system when he arrives at his new outfit he fills out a pack of forms for division's file system, another pack for regiment, another for battalion, another for his company. By this time he's got a good dose of writer's cramp.

Suppose he had a master plate with him when he reported to the new division. Division could then merely put the plate in an addressograph machine and run off the number of file cards which all the units would need in a matter of minutes.

Small portable machines for making up master plates, cases for filing them and portable addressograph machine have already been designed even for use in the field.

TRIED OUT HERE

That's the captain's idea. He's putting his idea into practice here at Benning, where paper work is probably as complicated as anywhere else in the army, starting about Oct. 1.

After he gets the system rolling here it will be time enough to see what army higher-ups think of the plan. But already personnel experts from other large training schools have been here to find out how they could apply the system to their institution.

Soldier's Medal Awarded Layman For Heroic Deed

First Sergeant Paul P. Layman, Company E, 55th Armored Engineer Battalion, 10th Armored Division, has been awarded the Soldier's Medal for bravery, reports from Washington disclose.

The hero risked his life to save his comrade, Sgt. James L. Murrell when the latter backed a crane into a high tension wire in the 10th Armored Area. Murrell got off the seat of his machine to investigate and was unable to free himself from the metal portion.

Sgt. Layman, happening to pass in a truck, saw Murrell's predicament and pulled him from the machine. Both suffered burns, and Sgt. Murrell is still in Atlanta's Lawson general hospital.

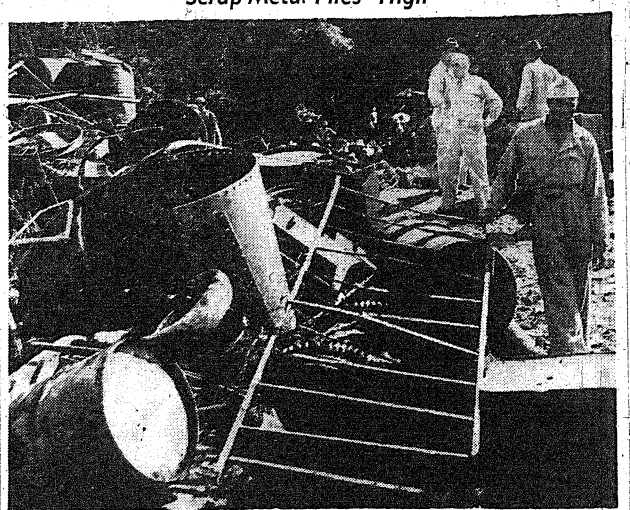
Music Charms Savage Breasts Tigers Learn

Men of the 10th Armored Division hurrying along Third Avenue Saturday afternoon, Columbus bound, stopped dead in their tracks when they heard a beautiful feminine voice singing, "You Beautiful Baby." It seemed to be coming from the 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion area; "B" Company mess hall to be exact. Some of the more curious looked through a window, hoping the WAAC's might have been taken on as K.P.'s.

They soon discovered a party in progress with three very pretty guests of honor. They were Peggy Alexander (who was singing the above), Tina Paully and Olya Klem, all of USO's Camp Shows. The hosts were the men of the 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion's "A" and "B" Companies.

The affair included a "G. I." luncheon with singing and accordian playing by the girls. Technical Sgt. Chas. Wolf was the M.C. and Lt. Tom Ingales was the man behind the scenes.

Not a few of the men of the 90th strained their voices in joining in the chorus of "You Beautiful Baby." The vocal effect was enough to send the Third Avenue kibitzers on their way.



Red Cross Branch Opened At Sand Hill

Opening of an American Red Cross branch in the 10th Armored Division area was announced this week by Eugene Bussey, post field director.

The branch is situated in building No. 3784, North Fifth and Pine Streets and is in charge of Glen Baker, assistant field director.

Office hours will be from 9 a. m. to 5 a. m., with 24 hours service planned. The telephone number is 214.

Scrap Metal Piles High

Everything from 'soup to nuts"—or at least from soup containers to nuts are being salvaged for the war effort at Fort Benning where authorities have uncovered and are cleaning out a mine of discarded but still valuable metal. Consisting of hundreds of tons of metal discarded over the last twenty years, the "mine" or post dump is being stripped of every piece of metal by soldier-details. Here is Maj. Clarence A. Will, permanent field officer of the day, (hands on his hips facing camera) in direct supervision of the men cleaning out the dump. In less than a week the crews took 50 tons of metal such as this from the "mine." (161st Signal Photographic Company.)

Peeks at Pics

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

The largest single motion picture set ever erected outside Hollywood appears in the screen version of Rudyard Kipling's immortal ballad, "Gunga Din," impressive screen spectacle, with Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Sam Jaffe and Joan Fontaine, currently playing the post. . . . The set is a mammoth representation of a Hindu Temple, headquarters of a band of fanatics noted for strangling victims. It was constructed 225 miles from Hollywood at the base of snow-capped Mount Whitney, which represented the Himalayan peaks of northwestern India. . . . There is an imposing cast of 1,000 supporting players in this massive production. . . . This pic is a revival and I recommend is for those that haven't as yet seen it. Those of you that saw it on its initial trip around the country do not have to be told to see it again.

I suppose those fellows out at Lawson Field may know that a German plane sounds different from an American one and that an enemy bomb whistles down unlike the Yankee Doodle kind, but you and I, uninformed as we are, would not know such things. . . . Well, don't feel too bad about it . . . you see, Columbia Pictures Corporation didn't know about it either. . . . When they were all through writing their script for the picture, "Counter-Espionage," a story of the Lone Wolf at work in London trapping German spies, Columbia sent it to London for their okay. . . . Some of the criticisms sent back by British authorities included the information that a German Messerschmidt makes an intermittent drone rather than a continuous one, and the missles it drops, ring with a high "whe-e-e-ee" instead of the "whew" associated with American bombs. All this was faithfully produced and we have learned something new . . . I hope.

Last Friday night I was at the Bond Rally that was held at the Bradley theater in downtown Columbus. . . . Part of the rally was the motion pic "Wake Island," starring Brian Donlevy, Albert Dekker, and Robert Preston. . . . A dynamic expose of the treachery and ruthlessness of the Japs. . . . It is the story of the Marine garrison at Wake Island, from the middle of November of 1941 to that fateful day in December when there no longer was a garrison on Wake Island but there was a story of heroism and self-sacrifice that will remain in the hearts of every American forever and a day. . . . Each and every actor in the show seemed to be inspired with the characters they portrayed. All I can say is . . . Don't Miss It . . . when it comes to your local theatre for regular presentations.

Chalk up another for Sherlock Holmes—he gave Charles Chaplin his start. . . . Sherlock was first put on the stage by William Gillette in New York, and soon afterwards found its way across to London where it was presented at Sir Henry Irving's Lyceum in 1901. And the boy character of "Little Billy" was portrayed by none other than, as the playbill reads, "Master Charles Chaplin, an orphan boy of talent." . . . Chaplin never played the role in the United States. Over in this country he found another medium, called the movies. . . . And in the latest Sherlock Holmes mystery, "Sherlock Holmes and the Voice of Terror," the old mastermind takes a beating. For once, he who invariably wins, comes off second best during the filming of one of the scenes. . . . Basil Rathbone who portrays Holmes, got a painful blow on the leg in a free-for-all fight with some waterfront toughs. One of the battlers was knocked down and fell against Rathbone, who in turn was felled. Rathbone came out of it with a limp, but otherwise was all right, and went on working.

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . . The story about Bing and Dixie Crosby being on the verge of a break-up is as false as Reveille oil. . . . Now the rumors have it that Bing wants to join the Air Force. If he does, Dixie and the kids don't have to worry about money, Foppe's movie earnings last year totaled $300,600. His recordings netted him $100,646—and will continue to furnish a steady income. Therefore, I don't think that anyone should get gray hair worrying about the Crosbys being able to balance the budget.

Now we come to the picture of the week . . . "Panama Hattie," starring the wacky, yet lovable pair, Ann Southern and Red Skelton. Or as their own studio describes them in this new pic . . . Ann Southern, she's the topic and pride of the Navy—but her heart belongs to the Army (Smart gal). . . . Red Skelton, a waif in "ship's" (get it?) clothing . . . who joined the Navy to see the girls. . . . Some of the others in the pic are: Ben Blue, the Navy rejects goos with flat feet . . . but takes them with flat heads . . . (for launching sea-planes!). . . . "Rags" Ragland, voted by his first-grade classmates as the one most likely to stay there! . . . Alan Mowbray, a Bundle from Britain . . . butling his way through a nervous breakdown . . . Virginia O'Brien, men who know cigarette girls best . . . say it's men in uniform two to one . . . Dan Dailey, Jr., Hattie's gob friends can't understand why such a smart gal would go for a soldier . . . (I wonder why) . . . Jackie Horner, little . . . but oh my! A seven-year-old package of dancing, singing, T. N. T.!!!

Oddities of motion picture making: For several scenes in "Panama Hattie" at M-G-M, thirty extras were garbed as sailors in tropical whites and twenty more in civilian white linens. But the uniforms and suits had to be dyed white because they were too white. . . . Sounds confused, but it's correct. After a couple of rehearsals, the camera crew announced the garb would have to be dyed and, when the wardrobe representative asked what color, they said white. Explanation—the cloth was a shiny white and glittered in the camera. The dye took off the glitter.

Movie Reviews

"Panama Hattie" and company, which will open Thursday night at the Main Theatre, are on their merry musical way through Panama and not a spy is safe. Nor a grouch.

Starring Ann Southern and Red Skelton, this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer version of the Broadway production is fast-moving at all times, offers new and hummable tunes and is funny enough to entertain the worst grouch you know.

Rich in elaborate stag numbers and tempered a good down-to-earth story revolving around the romance of Miss Southern and Dan Dailey, Jr., plus the zany antics of Skelton, Rags Ragland and Ben Blue, the film contains every conceivable element of entertainment.

Miss Southern, as Panama Hattie, has one of the most brilliant roles of her career. She portrays a night club singer who is loved by everyone who meets her.

Red Skelton continues his amazing strides along the star path, ably abetted by Ragland and Blue. Virginia O'Brien switches from her deadpan technique of singing and does an excellent job of deciding that Alan Mowbray, playing the butler again, is "her man" and proceeding to snag him. Dailey turns in his usual outstanding performances.

Lena Horne, noted colored chanteuse, renders a wonderful interpretation of Cole Porter's "Just One of Those Things," and the Berry Brothers amaze one with their extraordinary dance routines.

In addition to the Cole Porter numbers from the Broadway show, "Just One of Those Things," "Let's Be Buddies," "Fresh as a Daisy," and "I've Still Got My Health," there are five other numbers, "Good Neighbors," "Hattie From Panama," "The Son of a Gun Who Picks on Uncle Sam," "At the Savoy" and "The Spring." You'll be whistling them on the way out.

Others that lend strength to the excellent cast are little Jackie Horner, Marsha Hunt and Carl Esmond. Norman McLeod directed and Arthur Freed produced.

Army Arranges O. C. Schools For Administrators

The War Department has made arrangements with three widely-separated colleges for the establishment of army administrative officer candidate schools, according word received at Fort Benning.

The first classes will begin Oct. 1 for enlisted men who have completed their basic training and have been selected as officer candidates.

Establishment of the schools has been authorized under the direction of the Adjutant General's Office and branches of the school will be in operation shortly, probably before the end of September at North Dakota Agricultural College, Fargo, North Dakota; The University of Florida, Gainesville, Florida; and Grinnell, Grinnell, Iowa.

The administrative officer candidate school will provide officer training in general administrative duties, in positions where the branch of the officer is not material. It is expected to relieve for field duty, many officers now assigned to administrative tasks.

Applicants who meet the physical standards prescribed for commissioned officers for limited service will be eligible for appointment to the administrative officer candidate school upon completion of basic training if they meet the other requirements.

The area of Sicily is 9,860 square miles.

Listen . . . . . It's Fort Benning

Look out, soldiers! Bob Hope's back on the air.

A little red check on my calendar reminds me that September 22 is the day that Bob Hope will again spout forth his unimitable type of humor. What this means to Bob Hope, in his own words, is " . . . It's time to oil up the jeep, vulcanize skinny's left lung, and start out on another tour of army camps." One of Hope's favorite stories of his trip around the country while trying to entertain G. I's, is the one about his first broadcast from a service club. Everyone seemed to be having a good time. . . . (Could that have been an order?) . . . when a P. F. C. in the front row got up and walked out right in the middle of the show.

"I enlisted to serve my country," he announced, "but this is ridiculous." Bob says that this business of broadcasting from army camps is really swell. The first time in his life he had to ask an audience to stop laughing was at Camp Haan. Since then, he makes the same request at all army appearances. Does he like working in army camps? Say, are you kidding? Bob Hope and his regular gang is heard every Tuesday evening over the NBC network at 10 p. m. EWT.

Personal notes to Sgt. Carl Neu: This reporter is taking this opportunity to make a public apology to Sgt. Carl Neu for the wrong type of ad libbing pulled by the same reporter on the Army Hour last Sunday.

Many of you fellows remember Mary Ann Mercer, the NBC singing star, who was here last month in connection with War Savings Bonds campaign. We thought you would like to know that Miss Mercer now signs herself Col. M. A. Mercer.

Officially, she is the army's honorary "huddle girl", "command pilot," "Barranca Breeze girl," "Colonel of New Mexico," "Arkansas Traveler," and "Dugoug Girl," as well as official "Sweetheart" of numerous service bases.

To keep America's fighting men in touch with their country, NBC's shortwave stations, WRCA and WNBI, and Westinghouse station, WBOS now present more than seventy programs weekly for the men overseas. These programs include specially created sustaining shows, re-broadcasts of the popular NBC commercial programs, and the gigantic Government program, "Command Performance." These are beamed at hours when the armed forces can listen, bringing news, sports, music, comedy, drama—all the big-time radio fare heard at home—to camps abroad.

The powerful NBC short-wave transmitters are beamed to uniformed audiences throughout the world, to Greenland, Iceland, Great Britain, the Caribbean, North Russia, India, and the desert battlefields of Africa.

Letters marked "soldier mail-free' arrive at the New York offices of NBC daily attesting to the part the short-wave schedule plays in World War II.

"It's really great to hear our favorite programs from the good old U. S. A." comes from "somewhere in Panama," and similar letters of praise and thanks are received from everywhere that Uncle Sam is meeting and fighting the enemy.

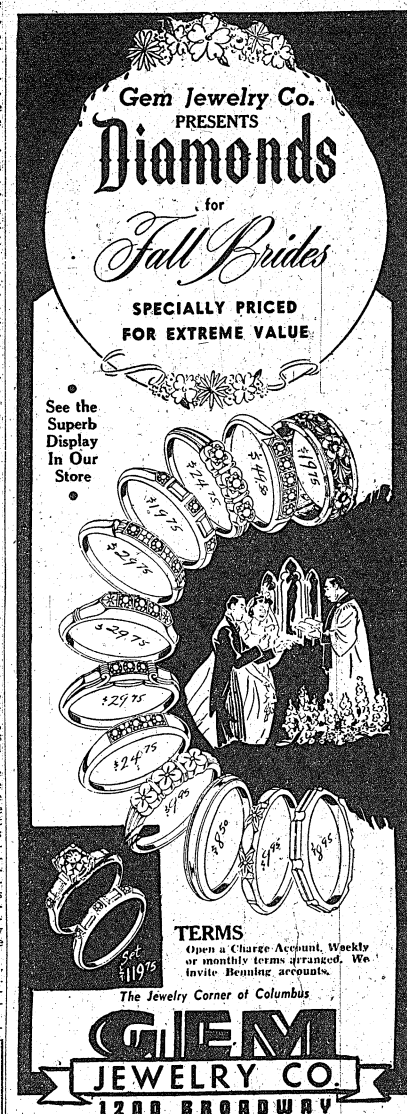
Miss Gertrude Handley of Station WRBL has asked this reporter to make a public request for requests of your favorite recordings. Miss Handley is that sweet voice you hear on the "Benning Bandwagon" Mondays through Saturdays from 6 a. m. to 6:45 a. m., and again from 7 to 7:30 a. m. over station WRBL. Her program features request recordings, birthday announcements, anniversarys, and little intimate tidbits about the boys at Fort Benning.

Sherman Made Lieut. Colonel

Has Five Brothers In Armed Forces

Major Frank J. Sherman, Jr., Infantry School tactics instructor, has been appointed a lieutenant colonel, it was announced today by Brig. Gen. Leven C. Allen, Infantry School Commandant.

Colonel Sherman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Sherman of 167 Porter St., Melrose, Mass., and of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. He is one of six brothers in the armed services.



Colonel Sherman has three brothers in the navy, one in the Marines, and one brother in the Massachusetts State Guard. Three of them saw service in the last war. Colonel Sherman knows that one of his brothers, Lt. Ernest L. Sherman, is at sea as commander of a gun crew on a merchantman, but has no definite information as to the whereabouts of his other brothers with the exception of Capt. Edward A. Sherman, World War I veteran, now with the Massachusetts State Guard.

His other brothers are: Lt. Col. Paul D. Sherman of the U. S. Marine Corps, Capt. F. P. Sherman and Lt. Kenneth L. Sherman, both in the navy.

Colonel Sherman was commissioned in 1924 at Boston University, in the ROTC. He was called to active duty Sept. 20, 1940, from Wilkes Barre, Pa., where he was employed by the Proctor and Gamble Distributing Company for five years.

He was assigned as executive of the Wilkes Barre, Pa., Military District, and in October, 1941, came to the Infantry School to take the advanced training course here. On graduation he was assigned as tactics instructor.

With Colonel Sherman at Ft. Benning are his wife and their three children, Frank 3rd, 15, Peter W., 13, both students in Columbus High School; and John E., 6.

Deborah Advises...
The Army Wife

DEAR DEBORAH:
We had new calling cards made when we came to Fort Benning as Lieutenants. My husband has recently been promoted to Captain. We never seem to pay many calls and the use for calling cards is limited. Should we have new ones now?—M. C. A.

DEAR M. C. A.:
Army customs are usually based upon pretty sensible theories, which generally work out for the individual's good. By all means use your old cards. Cross out the Lieutenant neatly and write legibly in ink the new rank of your husband. It seems to me we are losing much of the opportunity to make friends when we don't pay calls. Getting tired husbands dressed and out for calls these trying days is more than any woman will insist upon. Why don't you try calling on your neighbors during the afternoon?

DEAR DEBORAH:
I'm finding life in the army a pretty grand experience. I feel I've adjusted myself in record time. The only time I get down is when I think of the gang at home and the swell gals I danced and did the town with. A soldier doesn't have much chance in Columbus. Seems as though one has to have gold bars for a passport. Can you help me with this problem?—H. W. M.

DEAR H. W. M.:
Your problem is one that has received the attention of the sincere workers in war effort. Haven't you gone to the dances put on by your outfit? Surely attractive girls are on hand to dance with the men. It seems to me your problem is one of homesickness, for it is friendship of the gang you really miss. You know the army is really a man's world. I've been especially impressed with the small groups of men I've noticed about town enjoying each others company over a dinner or a bottle of coke. There's something satisfying about "batting the breeze" with men in your outfit. It's quite possible these very same bull sessions will be one of the things you'll miss most when you return to civilian life.

DEAR DEBORAH:
I'm nearly crazy with worry. I've been doing pretty well in this army and expect to do even better. My problem is my wife. We were married when I reached the place I thought I could provide for her. The kid never had much and this new life has gone to her head. She has opened charge accounts in all the stores in town and is obsessed with buying everything that catches her eye. I can't handle the bills on my pay. I have begged and pleaded with her to change her ways. I've told her my chances for the future will be ruined if she keeps up the way she's been going. She promises to do better, but I guess something stronger than our love for each other makes her forget her promise when she looks at the store windows. I love my wife very much and wish I could give her everything in the world. I want to know if there is any way to handle this difficulty before it's brought to the attention of my company commander.—T. R. H.

DEAR T. R. H.:
You are faced with a difficult problem. If your wife can't be convinced that your future depends upon her using judgment and self control you'll have to take some very unpleasant steps. If every appeal has failed I should advise you to call on each merchant you owe and explain the situation to him. Tell each one you want your wife's credit stopped immediately. Promise to pay off the bills a little at a time each month. Put your wife on a cash basis for every item, including food. The going will be tough for a while, but it is the only thing that will save both your marriage and your career. It will take strength of character on your part to develop character in your wife and help her grow up to be the wife worthy of sharing your life and responsibilities.

New Sports Books Added To Library

Since swimming is a "must" in the 10th Armored Division, the division librarian suggests you improve your stroke by referring to Steve Forsyth's "Quick Way to Better Swimming." Tenth Armored men will also find material useful in helping towards better golf, better baseball, better bowling and other sports.

Books which will interest the sport-minded are Gallico's "Farewell to Sport," Kieran's "American Sporting Scene" and other titles including a whole series on "Famous American Athletes of Today."

For fiction with a background of sporting action, try the books of Barbour and Tunis.

Q. M. Office Quips

Everyone watched with varying expressions, the slow evacuation of the Rail Transportation Section from the quartermaster office recently. Here and there were scattered the "long faces" including GLORIA MONROE and ANN GOSSETT. Elsewhere there was noted a gleeful light in some of the girls' eyes, the reason being that there would be three or four less rivals for them to compete with in the future. And the chief reason, of course, being VIVIAN FOSTER.

For several days there was a desolate looking space, silent and empty, where previously there had been bustling activity. But not for long, because there came a day when desks and typewriters streamed in, and were placed in neat rows. But everyone was asking, where are the people that are supposed to go with them. Everyone wanted a glimpse of the newcomers. Curiosity reigned, and then finally the blow fell. What happened to the girls in the Q. M. office shouldn't happen to anyone. In came girls, all kinds of girls, pretty girls, and much more competition than the quartermaster lasses had ever expected.

The newcomers represented the PERSONNEL SECTIONS from the station hospital, the area engineer, motor transport and Laundry No. 2. They had come to live with us, and after a few days we found them to be a really nice crowd of girls, and now we're beginning to be glad they've come. So, a big welcome to the new people, both girls and BOYS.

P. S.—The Rail Transportation Corps is now located in the old area engineer building.

Wonder why C. B. Warren, the Don Juan of the purchasing and contracting section, is so happy these days? Couldn't be because he's just traded cars, could it?

BELLES AND WEDDING BELLS—What is this I hear about MARGUERITE BRESCIA, of the personnel section, feeling so domestically inclined that she hankers to go home in the afternoon and bake cookies, hang new curtains in the kitchen, and plant red geraniums in little pots in the windows? Anyhow, CONGRATULATIONS, and why don't you let us in on the date of your forth-coming marriage? . . . Latest newly-wed in the office is also in the personnel section. It's Lieut. Gorman, assistant to Lieut. Peins, who is now the boss of all civilian workers on the post. It was a case of a "louie" marrying a "louie" because Lieut. Gorman's pretty wife was a full-fledged Army Nurse.

The whole quartermaster office is in mourning lately, because we are losing one of "old-timers," Clara Williams, of the P. and C. branch, who has been here nigh onto three years is resigning to go to Chattanooga where she will live with her mother. She is one of the best-loved people in the Q. M. office, and everyone hates to see her go. But we'll envy her when she's spending her time playing golf, and hob-nobbing with the social life, while we're still slaving over contracts. Best of luck, CLARA, and we'll be thinking of you.

We notice the PROPERTY SECTION has several new girls. Hope they like our office, and a big WELCOME to them.

Could it be that Captain Coney likes the girls in the Q. M. office better than those at the Infantry School? Well, anyhow, he spends quite a bit of time over here, and we notice that he gets chiseled out of at least two cokes every time he has business in the P. and C. branch. However, we think he only has eyes for one person. RIGHT? . . . G'bye now.—Susie Q. M.

The Household Hint Of The Week

The difficult places to reach on brass ornaments may be cleaned in a heated solution of vinegar and salt. Place the ornament in the solution and scrub briskly with a stiff brush. Rinse off with water. The button or ornament will have a slightly pinkish tinge, which may be removed with a whisk of the blitz cloth. Rub off the oily substance with a clean dry cloth and finish with a thin coat of transparent nail polish. This treatment guarantees your brass ornaments will pass the most meticulous inspection.

The Receipe of the Week:
A never-fail receipe for a good coffee cake is an invaluable asset in a desperate moment when one has to extend meagre rations to cover an emergency moment of sudden guests. It's even better to have on hand for a quick and satisfying desert for the family. If anything is left over, it's mighty tasty for breakfast as a change from the day in and day out toast. Pop it in the oven for a few moments to warm up the second day.

STREUSEL-FILLED COFFEE CAKE:
Streusel Filling and Topping
1-2 cup brown sugar
2 tsp. cinnamon
2 tbsp. melted butter
1-2 cup chopped nuts
Mix together with a fork before mixing coffee cake

Coffee Cake
1 1-2 cups sifted flour
3 tsp. baking powder
1-4 tsp. salt
3-4 cups sugar
1-4 cup shortening
1 egg
1-2 cup milk
Sift dry ingredients, cut in shortening, blend in well beaten egg mixed with milk. Spread half the batter in greased and floured "6 x 10" pan. Sprinkle with half the Streusel mixture. Add the other half of batter, and sprinkle remaining Streusel over top. Bake 25 to 30 minutes at a temperature of 375 degrees. Serve warm.

Woman's Club

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

Interest shown in the traditional tea, which has always opened the Woman's Club, speaks well for success for the coming year. Plans are being formulated to make this meeting an outstanding affair. It will be held in the Officer's Club on October 5, at 3 p. m. All wives of officers, members of the Army Nurse Corps, members of the Hospital Recreation Corps and teachers of the Fort Benning school are urged to attend.

Mrs. George P. Howell is handling the difficult and exacting assignment of chairmeen of the membership committee. Through her committee and sub-committees the majority of women eligible to join will be contacted. Assisting Mrs. Howell on her committee are: Mrs. Roger A. Rawley, 11th Armored Regiment; Mrs. L. A. Walsh, Parachute Brigade; Mrs. John M. Ferguson, Infantry School; Mrs. C. A. Bagby, 29th Infantry; Mrs. S. D. Massey, 4th Service Command; Mrs. M. C. Snyder, 124th Infantry; Mrs. G. A. Key, Air Corps.

Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley, president of the Women's Club and prominent officers' wives of Fort Benning are giving their time and talent to make this club season a memorable one. It is their firm belief that this Club, which has stood for culture, social contact and the worthwhile achievements of the army wives, who have been stationed here in the past 18 years, should continue to hold to the standards of the past and strive to further the aims and duties of women who live so closely to patriotism itself.

Membership in a woman's organization gives a feeling of unity with the community in which they are living. Through an organization so closely connected with the pulse and life blood of our service their morale, duties to the service and its various enterprises will be stimulated.

Immediate interest has been shown in the first announcement of the proposed Nursery School. The idea orginated with Mrs. Kelley. Her first plans were based on the need of the younger mothers of the Post to have a few hours a day freedom for outside activities. Because of the shortage of maids, many mothers were unable to participate in the various Red Cross activities that have become such an important duty to all women. Mrs. Kelley felt the establishing of such a unit would be of benefit not only to the mothers but the post activities that are so eager to assimulate the entire group of women stationed at Fort Benning.

The enthusiastic response is showing the need is more far reaching than that of a few hours release from child care. Comments have been made to the effect that such a school would solve the problem of companionship for the toddlers, besides train them in the important lesson of getting along with other children.

General Walter Scott Fulton has given his whole hearted backing to the project. Mrs. Fulton, who has distinguished herself with an enviable record as a leader of the Fort Benning Red Cross activities, is an enthusiastic sponsor of the Nursery School.

Mrs. Horace L. Beall, ably trained in child psychology and methods used in important progressive nursery schools, will assist Mrs. Kelley in establishing the school. Mrs. Beall is anxious to contact anyone trained in this type of work. The task of organizing a school of this kind from the ground up is a tremendous undertaking. It can only be accomplished with the whole hearted co-operation of everyone interested in this worthwhile and important service to the personel of Fort Benning.

It is hoped that the Pan-Hellenic Club of Fort Benning will join the Woman's Club in sponsoring the establishment of the Nursery School. Mrs. George A. Millener, presicent of the Pan-Hellenic Club has already expressed her whole hearted approval and backing.

The chairmen of the various group committees are completing their plans for outstanding attractions, which are certain to find support and attendance from the members.

Review Will Honor Allen
21st QM Regiment To Parade Sunday

Brig. Gen. Leven C. Allen, Infantry School Commandant, and his staff will review the 21st Quartermaster Truck Regiment at 5:00 p. m. Sunday at Gordon Field here. It will be the first review of its kind, including all trucks and rolling equipment. Bleachers have been erected. Public is invited.

The 21st Regiment, commanded by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, is the only quartermaster truck regiment assembled at one post. It is composed of negro troops. Its duties are to transport men and equipment for the Infantry School, and it daily averages over 17,000 miles transporting more than 14,000 men.

Colonel Altman was ordered to form the regiment by War Department order on April 18, and is its original and only commanding officer.

It was less than 30 days later that necessary personnel and equipment was obtained, buildings for the three battalions were constructed and the regiment was in operation. It is capable of transporting two full divisions of combat troops plus provisional equipment. Colonel Altman has designed the regiment's coat of arms and distinctive insignia.

The regiment is particularly proud of its record of its many months of daily driving without a fatality. The men are also able to give a good account of themselves on defense and offense when fully equipped with the new carbine rifle.

Activities

MAJOR
VIRGIL NEY

The subject of youth movements is becoming one of increasing importance to all Americans. The training of the citizens of tomorrow is and will be one of the most important vital tasks now and during the post war period. The following report of the American Legion Child Welfare Committee is worthy of careful reading by every American citizen:

"The commission's report shows a distressing picture of physical and mental defects among youths called to the colors, particularly those who were between the ages of 7 and 12 in the first World War.

"Selective service records, L. A. Williams of Seattle, chairman of the commission, said, show that of the first 2,000,000 men called to arms, more than 900,000 were rejected. He added that the rate of rejections of men between the ages of 31 and 36 was nearly twice as great as those between 21 and 25.

"What was happening to those older men in 1918? he asked. They were neglected then as boys because of the exigencies of war, and they are the rejected men today!

"We have a tremendous responsibility in this war not to permit the children of this same age group to point their finger at us later and charge us with neglect.

Boy's activities is an official Post activity established to foster character-building, leadership training and recreation for the sons of the Army personnel on duty at Fort Benning. Every youngster may participate in everything that a boy expects. Captain Grayson former GMA Coach is the head Mentor and his small huskies range from age six (6) to age twelve (12), weight 65 to 105. The senior football team, the Jeeps work out on Gowdy Field each Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings at 6:00 p. m. under direction of Lieut. Ayers of the Physical Training Section of The Infantry School.

A class in wrestling is planned for the future, to be coached by 1st Lt. D. F. Farrell of the Publications Section, who will teach "Jiddo" suitable for use by youngsters, as a means for physical development.

The directing head of Boys' Activities is Major Virgil Ney of the Publications Section of The Infantry School, who volunteered for this task over a year ago. Major Ney has devoted his spare time in building a youth program of which Fort Benning may well be proud. Under his guidance scouting and clubbing have grown and flourished into well organized effective units of Boy-power, ready for service to the community. In the scrap rubber and metal campaigns these youngsters gave a concrete example of the value of youth in the war effort. Tons of scrap was collected and turned over to salvage, to the fighting slogan of "Scrap the Axis."

Each Friday at 5:15 p. m. the cubs assemble at the Scout Cabin, South of Russ Pool, where they are taught the value of team-work, fairplay and the elements of discipline.

At 7:30 p. m. Friday the Scout Troop meets in the Scout Cabin where fun, knowledge and good comradeship combine to make each Scout a better citizen.

The Director of Boys' Activities cordially invites all old Scouts and Scouters now at the Post to visit Troop II and Pack No. I. On week-ends cubs and Scouts take hikes, (always under adult leadership) to nearby ancient Indian Mounds and Old Fort sites in Alabama. Major Ney does not always guarantee that arrow heads will be found but they have been found along with splendid examples of pre-Columbian pottery.

At 4:30 p. m. each Monday, Wednesday and Thursday the Junior Football teams, the Peeps and Trailers meet at Doughboy Stadium for real football, complete with uniforms, coaches and everything that a boy expects. Captain Grayson former GMA Coach is the head Mentor and his small huskies range from age six (6) to age twelve (12), weight 65 to 105. The senior football team, the Jeeps work out on Gowdy Field each Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings at 6:00 p. m. under direction of Lieut. Ayers of the Physical Training Section of The Infantry School.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

WASHINGTON OFFICIALS are working at the task of abolishing some import duties so that AMERICAN TROOPS can mail home trinkets from all over the world for Christmas without paying the duty. Any package up to the value of $50 will probably be allowed in free, according to present plans.

The name of LT. GENERAL JONOTHAN WAINWRIGHT was unofficially listed this week along with 200 other defenders of Corregidor and Bataan as a prisoner of war on the Philippine Islands.

CLARK GABLE, officer candidate in the Army Air Force School in Florida, won the upperclassmen's privilege of going to the motion pictures.

RALPH M. INGERSOLL, former editor of the New York tabloid, PM, is now a first lieutenant in the Army. He was inducted in July, promoted to staff sergeant soon after that and is now a commissioned officer.

In the Solomons, the Jap, forever trying to save face, attacked and re-attacked with no success. They fought with "no success" because at the other end of the rifles and cannons pointed their way were hard-bitten, tough-fighting United States Marines, who sometimes were outnumbered ten men to one Marine, but did not let that fact stop them from beating of fall attacks and holding their positions secure.

General MacArthur's headquarters in Australia reported Sept. 28 that U. S. Army flying fortresses hit and "probably sank" a 15,000-ton merchantman in an attack on the enemy base at Rabaul. It was the fourth straight day of attack by the fortresses on the big enemy base. Army, Navy and Marine pilots smashed unrelentingly at Jap planes and ships in the Aleutians and the Solomons and causing widespread damage to Jap ships and bombers.

U. S. Army bomber commander Eaker in London states that U. S. and British airman will work together in day and night raids to give Germany a long winter of bombing. Added Eaker:

"I believe it is possible to destroy the enemy from the air. There is hardly a corner of Germany we cannot reach."

CIVILIANS AT FORT URGED TO BUY BONDS

War Department Asks Employes To Make Reservations

"Join the Ten Percenters," is the urge of Secretary of Treasury, Henry M. Morgenthau, issued to all civilian employees of the War Department. Favoring a stupendous financial program, necessary to hasten the winning of the war, the secretary said that it was the aim of the War Department to have at least 90 per cent of its civilian employees putting 10 per cent of their salary into War Savings Bonds, each month.

Fort Benning, with its vast number of civilian employees will be expected to cooperate to the fullest. The plan is on a purely voluntary basis. However, every War Department employee on the post should realize the importance and the necessity of participating in the 10 per cent plan, it was pointed out.

Several new features in the pay reservation plan were announced at the same time. Class A pay reservations authorized by civilian employees in or working under the War Department will not be accepted when the reservation is at a rate less than $12.50 a month, except for employees paid less than $1500.00 a year, in which cases reservations at a rate of $7.50 or $10.00 a month will be accepted. All employees are expected to invest at least 10 per cent in bonds every pay day.

The Post War Bond Officer Lt. O. K. Marquart, is still receiving many inquiries about non-receipt of bonds. Subscribers have been advised that 90 days are necessary to set up new accounts, receive proper deduction forms and to issue and mail first bonds. No inquiries concerning non-receipt of bonds or refunds should be made prior to 90 days after complete purchase price of a bond has been deducted. However, subscribers should bear in mind that after the first bond has been received, subsequent bonds will follow at much shorter intervals, as the account will be set up.

Bonds will also be dated the first of the month in which the final payment has been made. Therefore subscribers will lose no interest because of non-receipt of bonds for 90 days.

'Goose Hangs High' As Pay-Day Arrives

10th Armored To Be Paid Oct. 7 Finance Men Say

Thousands of Fort Benning men "sweated" a line yesterday but they didn't mind at all. Because yesterday was pay-day and the afore-mentioned lines led straight to the desks of the company commanders and acting finance officers.

Said desks presented a pretty picture to hard-working doughboys, paratroopers, engineers and flyers because they were piled high with the green lettuce leaf that's never served in mess halls.

Today is the day after pay-day. Pockets of Fort Benning soldiers are still pretty well-filled with said lettuce leaf, but a goodly portion of it is already on the way "back [illegible]" or on the way to Washington in the form of war bonds and stamps. Some of it of course is reposing now in Columbus cash registers.

Not all Fort Benning troops were paid yesterday. 10th Armored Division men will receive their pay this middle of next week, probably around Oct. 7, according to the division finance office.

Fort Benning men who were paid yesterday owe a vote of thanks to the personnel of the Finance Department who have been toiling night and day for months to meet payrolls on time.

Due to the unprecedented expansion of Fort Benning, payrolls at the post have skyrocketed, reaching the five million dollar mark last month for officers, enlisted men and civilians, and the resultant increase had sorely pressed the Finance Officer's smooth-working system.

HOLLYWOOD'S VERONICA LAKE AND BENNING'S SERGEANT CARL NEU
Star and Soldier Talk "Army"—and Find Something Very Amusing

Sergeant Neu Steals Show At Veronica's Press Chat

When Ft. Benning's Sergeant Carl Neu met the vivacious Veronica Lake Monday, he literally stole the show—not from the petite film star, because that would be hard to do—but from the more seasoned Ledger reporters.

Veronica, who was in Columbus aiding in the sale of War Bonds, was gracious to all at the press conference held Monday morning at the Ralston hotel—to newspaper women, high school boys and girls, theatre representatives—but it was when she met Sergeant Neu, to quote Latimer Watson, Ledger society editor, and was shown a copy of The Bayonet that she really came to life.

"Will you send me a copy of the issue with my picture in it?" she asked the Sergeant.

"Will I! Picture being asked if I will send Veronica Lake a copy of The Bayonet," Sergeant beamed at Veronica and his own pun.

And when Veronica started talking "Army" she really went to town. She is an army wife and she loves it. Every minute she can spare from the studio and her work for Uncle Sam, is spent at her five-room house in Seattle with her husband, Capt. John Stuart Detlie, of the corps of engineers, and her 13-months-old baby girl, Elaine.

Veronica evinced much interest in soldiers and wanted to know all about them.

"What type of show do they like best?" she asked. "We have heard that the troupes traveling from camp to camp haven't always been popular. We want to give them what they want, so give me some pointers, and be sure to tell Benning hello for me."

At the conclusion of her Bond tour Veronica plans to go on an entertainment tour of the camps. Carl assured the lovely film star that Benning would be impatiently waiting.

The upshot of the press conference was, that Carl made such good "copy" he and The Bayonet were royally scooped by the Monday Ledger, as Carl's interview, Carl and Veronica "made" the afternoon's daily story.

Series Results

SPORTSMAN PARK, St. Louis, Sept. 30—Finally throttling a fourth-run Cardinal rally in the ninth inning, the New York Yankees took the opening game of the World Series here today, 7 to 4. The National League entry, which shelled Red the Ruffing, starting Yank hurler from the mound in the final frame, scored all its runs after two were out. Ruffing, however, set a new World Series record for hurling hitless ball by going seven and two-third innings before surrendering a safety to the Red Birds. When the final Cardinal out was scored the National Leaguers had the bases loaded.

Ground Force Official Visits Fort Benning

Assistant Chief Of Staff Inspects Infantry School

Brigadier General Alexander R Bolling, assistant chief of staff, G-1, under Lieutenant General Lesley J. McNair, commander of the Army Ground Forces, left Fort Benning Wednesday after visiting The Infantry School with his staff for a conference with Major General Leven C. Allen, school commandant.

General Bolling and his aides made a tour of the schools' extensive officer candidate training program Tuesday, visiting the future officers in the field and watching them in all phases of their course. They watched them fire on the ranges, followed them in field exercises, listened in on conference meetings, witnessed mass demonstrations by prize troops; they saw them in their various physical training program ranging from calisthenics and hikes to periods on obstacle courses; and they saw them perspire on their "GTs", graded tests.

Yesterday the party continued its survey of the school installations and programs, visiting the great automotive section in which officers and enlisted men are acquainted with the intricacies of military motors and motorized movement. They also saw the communications section and its program of radio and telephone instruction. Today the visitors watched the parachutists in action before completing their visit.

WON CROIX DE GUERRE

General Bolling is a veteran of World War I, and is well known in the military world. He holds the French Croix de Guerre and the Distinguished Service Cross with several citations.

The high ranking Army official is especially well known throughout New England, where he served with the First Corps Area as Assistant Chief of Staff for Military Intelligence, and at the Boston Army Base from 1938 until called to Army Ground Forces Headquarters last summer.

While in New England General Bolling brought about intimate relations between the Army and the press and radio there. Under his supervision daily programs on the Army's training program were instigated throughout the six states and were considered as among the first in the nation to bring an understanding of the Army to the American home.

General Bolling also maintained a close liaison between military intelligence agencies and civil and government bureaus there.

MANY DIPLOMAS

General Bolling first served with the Army in 1917, when he attended the Officers' training camp at Fort Niagara, N. Y. He is a graduate of almost all of the Army's important military schools. He holds diplomas from the Army War College, the Command and General Staff School, the advanced course of The Infantry School.

Under General McNair, General Bolling directs the personnel of the entire Army Ground Forces in which every member of the Army has first contact on entering the service.

He is a native of Philadelphia, Pa., born Aug. 28, 1895. He attended Chestnut Hill Academy and Northeast High School there, and was active in basketball. He spent two years at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis before deciding on the Army as a career. During his long service he has always been with the Infantry.

Members of General Bolling's staff who were here with him are: Colonel Joseph A. Cranston,

New, Modern Post Store To Open Soon

Tentative Date Of October 6 Set By Gaffey

Enlarged Main Exchange To Fill Acute Fort Need

Completely modernized and equipped to meet the needs of the expanding population of Fort Benning, a new and much-needed main exchange store will be opened about Oct. 6 on the post proper, Maj. H. E. Gaffey, exchange officer, told the BAYONET Wednesday.

Many times larger than the present over-crowded exchange in the Doughboy Stadium building near Service Club 1 on the post proper, the new store will be located in the long, frame building on Word Avenue that formerly housed the exchange grocery.

The new exchange is immediately adjacent to the Main Theater and is situated at the rear of the post proper bus terminal on Wold Avenue with large parking areas available around the building.

The building, partially destroyed by fire several months ago, has been rebuilt and fitted with new equipment costing nearly $25,000, according to Major McGaffey.

NEW LINES ADDDED

Equally as important to military personnel depending on the exchange stores for hundreds of personal articles is the announcement by Major McGaffey that many new lines of merchandise have been added and that present stocks have been re-ordered as far as priorities will permit. This includes several lines of Christmas gifts, but Major McGaffey warned soldiers and their wives that the time-worn slogan about "shopping early" was doubly important this year. "We will run out of articles and lines of merchandise, there won't be anymore right away," he declared.

The store will carry just about every item a soldier or his family will need, however, Major McGaffey said, emphasizing the fact that Army exchange officials hoped to make the main exchange one of the best if not the best at any Army post in the United States."

Floor space in the new store will be several times that of the area in the old store. Asbestos

Two Bucks For Snappy Creations

Don't overlook the chance to make yourself those $2 checks we're giving out every week. For the best original contribution in this week's Bayonet goes a two-buck check and the same amount will go for the best cartoon and the best poem. Don't get discouraged if your stuff isn't in this week. It might have been crowded out and it may pop into print next week. Be sure to include your name and outfit with your contribution. Keep it coming. It's you fellows who will make The Bayonet the best damn army paper in the country.

Late Shopping Hours In Effect Tonight

Members of the Columbus Merchants' Association, Inc., last night voted to institute a system of remaining open for business longer on Thursday evenings, and decided to put the new hours for Thursday into effect on October 1.

This move will be of particular benefit to military and civilian personnel at Fort Benning.

The association, at a called meeting last night unanimously adopted a committee recommendation that stores of association members open at 12 noon on Thursdays and remain open until 8 p. m., thereby giving shoppers two evenings a week in which they can do their buying—Thursdays and Saturdays.

Most of the retail establishments of members will observe the new hours, Novel R. Boyd, president of the association, announced. There are some already staying open until a later hour, and they will continue the practice. Others have set their fall operation hours and will adhere to them. But a majority of the retail establishments in town will comply with the new opening and closing hours on Thursdays.

Decision of the merchants follows an earlier vote to keep similar hours on Wednesdays. However, that plan was abandoned when ministers protested the hours would conflict with prayer meetings, thereby reducing their congregations.

Mr. Boyd said the merchants had found a strong demand, particularly among Fort Benning personnel and defense workers for a time when they could do their buying in the evenings. He said that he had received a number of letters as well as verbal expressions from persons desiring the institution of the system.

USO WILL MAKE GI PURCHASES

Soldier Submits List; Committee Does Rest

[illegible] and to buy those things that the soldiers can't get because of the early closing of stores, has been inaugurated at the 100 9th street USO club.

A well organized "Soldiers' Shoppers" Committee of young women under the volunteer leadership of Mrs. Eleanor Winckur, has been arranged so that someone will be on hand at all times to handle the requests.

A soldier desiring the assistance of the "Soldiers' Shoppers" will make his needs known by filling out a form, a copy of which he retains, and depositing the necessary money for the particular purpose with the original. This will then be filed until shopping day, when two of the workers will take all requests up to that day and make the purchases, having the packages delivered to the club, where the soldier may pick it up at his convienence. The "Shoppers" will make purchases twice a week, thus permitting the soldier to place his order on Saturday and pick it up some time during the week or the following Saturday.

A careful survey of merchandise in the city has been made, and soldiers will be advised as to the price and quality they may expect. In addition to shopping, the "Soldiers' Shoppers" will also act as a shopper's guide in advising soldiers where certain type articles of goods may be purchased.

The directors of the club feel that here is the answer to a decided need; as the Information Desk reveals that many soldiers are unable to come to town in time to make their purchases and have requested that women of the club assist them. It is believed that with the new organization devoting their entire time to this project, soldiers can look forward to very prompt and courteous service, relieving their minds of selecting birthday gifts, remembrances, and the numerous gifts they desire to send the folks back home.

Probable Date For Woolens Oct. 10 Authorities State

October 10 has been set tentatively as the date when all Fourth Service Command units at Fort Benning will don woolens, post headquarters announced this week. The date is subject to change and the exact time will be announced later.

Organizations other than Fourth Service Command units will change to woolens as prescribed by the separate commanding officers.

Imagination To Win War, Commander Of Armored Forces Informs Tigers

Gen. Devers Guest Of Tenth Armored In Inspection Tour

This war is going to be won by the imagination of the individual soldier, Lt. General Jacob L. Devers, commanding officer of the U. S. Armored Force declared Tuesday in an address before the personnel of the Tenth Armored Division stationed at Fort Benning.

"The welfare and the future of every division of the Army and of the Army as a whole is going to depend on each private, its smallest unit."

Commenting on the new name adopted by the Division, "the Tigers," Gen. Devers said, "I rather like that name. It has fierce, determined effort behind it. And that's what we need if we're going to win this war."

The distinguished visitor expressed pleasure in the fine appearance of the men of the 10th Armored and the excellence of their equipment. "It looks as if they can do a job," he exclaimed. "Again I say I like your new name and if you can live up to it, I am sure you will go places."

Observation Squadron Plays Important Role Training Infantry for Defense from Air Attack

Manifold Activities Keep Unit Busy

The days when "knighthood was in flour" (phooh...!) have returned to Fort Benning, and the fellows responsible for dubbing the Twentieth Century crusader of the American Army are the members of the Seventh Observation Squadron.

To this organization is delegated the responsibility of providing the Infantry with plenty of practice in defending themselves against bombing and strafing. The ammunition used consists of flour bags which quite often find their mark on Johnny Doughboy. That's oiteh with him except when the flour mixes with perspiration to form a nice oozy paste. This bombing practice serves a double purpose. It provides practical training in giving ground forces air support, demonstrating to troops the value of support in their operations and how to defend themselves against hedge hopping enemy aircraft. The pilot garners valuable experience and technique in the art of destroying enemy concentrations.

This is only one phase of the all-important work being done by the Seventh. In addition, they fly on reconnaissance missions to observe and secure information about an area, road, route, locality, or objective. On night flights of this nature flares are dropped that light up an area one-quarter of a mile in diameter.

Reconnaissance Missions

Perhaps one of the most important tasks undertaken by an observation squadron are the photographic missions. The idea behind these flights is to take photos of an objective to locate the objective with respect to its surroundings. Pictures are frequently made of an area before and after bombing so that the results can be computed and recently camouflaged objects can be made the targets of bombers.

Liaison flights are flights made behind the lines in ships that carry neither guns nor armor. The primary purpose of these trips is for the establishment of communications between troops and the carrying of officers who can observe for themselves the results of artillery fire or ground action. Under actual combat conditions this information would prove of invaluable assistance.

The Seventh Observation Squadron is under the command of Major John K. Coughlan, a veteran Air Corps Officer and Lieutenant W. J. James is the operations officer. The pilots are all graduates of the Air Corps Advanced Flying School and are selected from the best among their classmates, because of the nature and importance of their duties. With the exception of three or four, all have attended the Brooks Field Observation School, San Antonio, Texas.

Laff of the Week

An amusing story about an American soldier now stationed in Northern Ireland is making the rounds there. The soldier is said to have written home:

"Dear Dad:

Gue$$ what I need mo$t of all? That's right. $end it along. Be$t wihe.

Your $on,
Tom"

The father replied:

"Dear Tom:

NOthing ever happens here. Write us aNOther letter aNOn: Jimmie was asking about you Monday. NOw we have to say goodbye.

Dad"

oring, querying and outright criticism of policies also continued. In Russia, army men anxiously queried America's "fact-finder"—Wendell Willkie—on a second front. In Canada, announcement came that the Dieppe raid, considered by many as a "test" for an invasion, cost 3,350 Canadian casualties.

THE NATION:

Manpower is the word on the lips of most American officials concerned with the war effort. The problem: Where to keep, where to transfer, where to send each man so that he can do the utmost toward winning the war.

Agricultural Secretary Wickard says that unless there is prompt and energetic action the "food situation will become serious . . . our supply is rapidly diminishing." He proposed a six-point program including plans to retain on the farms as many as possible of experienced managers who understand year-round farm operation, to transport workers to farm and to use greater numbers of women and young people on farms. He estimated farms would lose 1,000,000 workers between July 1, 1942 and and July 1, 1943, if an 8,000,000-man army is mobilized by the latter date.

News commentators warned of a doctor and nurse shortage just ahead. They told of 25,000 physicians already in the army; of 60,000 that might be needed when the Army's 10,000,000-men mark is reached. Also mentioned was the fact that 3,000 nurses a month are being taken in by the armed forces.

Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission announced the formation of a high school Victory Corps calling for voluntary enrollment of secondary school students to train them for possible war work in the event of a long war. The plan will be presented to the 6,500,000 students in the nation's 28,000 public and private high schools.

The nation's capital reported this week of a proposal by Director of Selective Service L. B. Hershey to the House Agriculture Committee to deliver a "farm or fight" ultimatum to the nation's agricultural workers. He proposed that to alleviate the farm labor shortage, any draft-age, physically fit farmer who leaves for a higher-paid city job be inducted into the armed forces immediately.

The nation's "fast-vanishing Americans"—those still fortunate enough to drive cars—were pushed even further behind the eight-ball this week. Rubber Administrator Jeffers directed the Office of Defense Transportation to limit driving speeds to 35 miles an hour and told the Office of Price Administration to prepare to ration gasoline throughout the nation. Nation-wide rationing will become effective about Nov. 22, Price Administrator Henderson estimated.

NEWS NOTES AND PERSONALITIES:

That "letter home" from American soldiers came from far corners of the world this week as the fan of United States military might begin to reach to every corner of the hemisphere. Certainly American boys will "know whereof they speak" in the years after the war when tales of India, of the Belgian Congo, Brazil, Africa, China, England and Iceland are swapped around the cracker-barrels of the nation.

"That sounds like Americans" was the nation's comment this week when they read of the heroism reported in the sinking of the aircraft "Yorktown" last summer near Midway. They particularly liked the tale of the three sailors trapped in the bowels of the sinking ship who talked to buddies "on the outside" over the telephone. When asked by the latter if they knew the predicament they were in, the trapped trio replied they knew they couldn't get out but added they had "a darn good acey-duecey game going on down here."

WAR SECRETARY STIMSON announced that the Canadian-Alaskan military highway will be ready for use about Dec. 1, several months ahead of schedule. WAR DEPARTMENT said that members of the Army Nurse Corps will not be permitted to resign because of marriage unless replacements are available.

BATTLEFRONTS:

RUSSIA

Savage, "no quarter asked, none given," fighting marked the last seven days of battle on the two major battlefronts of the world. 36 days of never-ending, hand-to-hand fighting, gave its life blood in the streets of the city's worker settlements where two divisions of German infantry had managed to break through the Russian defenses.

Even as the great struggle continued unabated in the parks, the streets and even individual "backyards" of the bloody metropolis, the situation grew increasingly desperate for the Russian army as the Nazis concentrated everything on winning Stalingrad and stabilizing campaign lines before winter.

Russian reserves thrown into the battle came from western Siberian training camps to relieve weary Red Army fighters. It appeared Russian generals might be withdrawing veteran troops for a rest and re-alignment in preparation for other battles in other cities if mighty Stalingrad topples.

SOUTH PACIFIC

Here, rugged Jap-wise Australian and American troops, supported by new artillery, fought the invader in the towering, steaming Owen Stanley Mountain range on New Guinea. At week's end, they were reported driving the Japanese from outposts in the mountain range only a critically-short 32 air miles from the Allied base at Port Moresby. Allied officials did not disguise the fact the situation was serious, both at Port Moresby and in the Solomon Islands, wrestled from the Japs a few short weeks ago.

Hybrids In Khaki Confuse Enlisted Men As Gold Braid Trust Expands

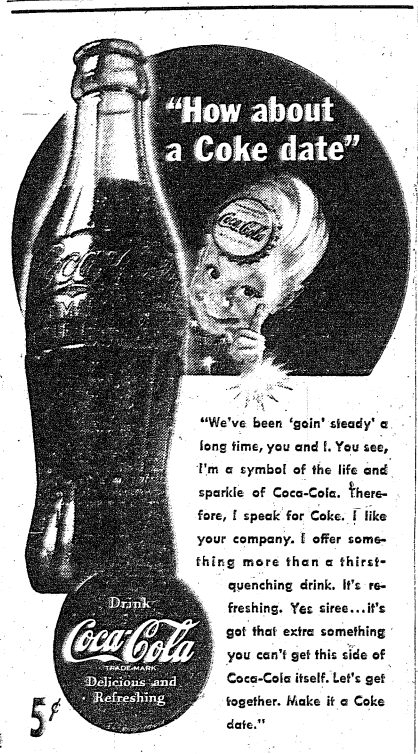
To Salute Or Not Salute Is Question; 57 Varieties Develop

Pretty soon we are going to need an orientation course in order to identify all the different ranks and categories in this man's army. There used to be only officers and enlisted men, and occasionally a warrant officer-bandmaster.

Not any more! You may see a soldier in khaki, with an officer's cap, crossed rifles, and U. S.'s, but no bars. What could that be, and does he rate a salute? That mysterious fellow is a cadet. And truly a middle man. He is neither an enlisted man nor an officer, feels out of place in the enlisted man's club, and is not allowed in the officer's club, even though he is taking the basic officer course and rubs shoulders with officers all day long. However, his situation will be cleared up on completion of the three months course, when he receives his bars.

CANDIDATE "G. I."

That's not all though. The next soldier you meet is wearing a big OCS patch on his left shirt pocket. Someone introduces you, and explains that Johnny G. I. is an officer candidate. Then the question arises, how shall he be addressed. Well, just call him, Candidate G. I.



The next soldier wears an officer's cap, U. S.'s, and an eagle on his collar, and wanders in and out of both the officer's club and service club with equal ease. That, my fine fellow, is a warrant officer and goes by the title of "Mister." He is somewhere between a master sergeant and a second lieutenant. Those bars on his shoulders? Yes, he does wear a pair. They are brown, rounded on both ends, and have a stripe of gold in the center.

PRESS IN UNIFORM

And now in strolls an individual decked out in regulation khaki, no bars, no branch insignia, but with an officer's cap. Could that be a misled rookie? Probably, not. More than likely he is an accredited press correspondent.

And now there is talk of the army specialist corps. Civilians in uniform, and I'll be darn if I know whether to salute them or not.

What's that young lady shouting? Don't forget the WAAC and the Army Nurse Corps! I knew we'd get around to talking about wimmen before this was over. So before this degenerates into a lowly bull session. . . .

"We've been 'goin' steady' a long time, you and I. You see, I'm a symbol of the life and sparkle of Coca-Cola. Therefore, I speak for Coke. I like your company. I offer something more than a thirst-quenching drink. It's refreshing. Yes siree... it's got that extra something you can't get this side of Coca-Cola itself. Let's get together. Make it a Coke date."

Alaskan Yank Gives Tips to Army Rookies

Says George Can't Do It All By Himself This Time

BAYONET . . . . . BAYONET
ALASKAN YANK . . 3-34 . . .
From Kodiak Bear, Alaska

Occasionally a pal back home writes he is soon to join the armed forces. Reading between the lines, we detect a note of worry and anxiety.

When a young man enters a life altogether different from the one he has known, there is the feeling of stepping off into space. To those of a sheltered life, the Reception Center is a "jumping off place" from all that he has learned to love.

To these pals, and many more like them, just a few tips on how to take it:

1. Mix with the others and form new friendships. Learn to tolerate their views even if you don't agree. You'll have to live with them.

2. Don't be a 'know-it-all' broadcasting your wisdom on 500,000 watts and shouting your qualities from the housetop.

3. Respect your superiors. Those eagles, leafs, bars and stripes are not mere ornaments. They mean that the wearer is there to teach and direct. He didn't get them from the grab bag.

4. Keep your eyes and ears open, and your mouth shut as much as possible, except to ask sensible questions.

5. Learn and practice military courtesy. Put some life into that salute. Say "Sir" even if not used to it.

6. Don't be a chronic beefer. Beef once in a while, but only to your buddies who know that you don't really mean it. Don't complain to outsiders, who will misunderstand and exaggerate.

7. Don't shirk duty. Geebees soon lose the respect of men and officers. Sick Calls for the sick—not to kill time and avoid work.

8. If you come from a prominent family, don't talk about it. The Army recognizes no class distinction. If you were well off in civil life, skip it. To us you're just a buck private rookie. We don't give a hang if your Uncle was a captain or a major at dear old Camp Mushbowl, and grandpa led a charge at San Juan—it's what YOU are that counts. The Army doesn't kow-tow to blue-bloods or listen open-mouthed to tales of past glory.

9. Don't knock your organization. It is what you make it. Pitch in to build, don't tear down.

10. Don't list nonexistent or exaggerated qualifications. Deeds speak louder than claims. The truth will out.

11. Don't be afraid to study. Curiosity never killed a soldier. Find out what makes it tick and maybe you'll work your way to a promotion.

12. Don't lean over the fence for the grass on the other side. It's not any greener. When assigned to a unit, make yourself part of it, don't try to transfer from one to the other unless your qualifications indicate that it would be best for all concerned.

13. Don't belittle units of other services or branches. We're all Uncle Sam's nephews and Old Glory is our mutual emblem. Each branch and service has its place and one without the other is like an innertube without air.

14. Take things calmly. Don't act without thinking, but don't think too long. This isn't chess. Rely on yourself, but follow rules and instructions. A pilotless plane comes down just as hard as a planeless pilot.

15. We are at War. We didn't start it but we'll finish it. You hate to leave home and job as much as we did but if you don't there won't be any home or job, because the Rising Sun doesn't represent Santa Claus and Nazis are not a charitable organization. Don't expect George to do it because George never won a war alone. It's Johnny Doughboy who does the trick, and Buddy, you're it!

So Brother, fall in, let's go!

FLYING FEET!

Pvt. Barney Ewell, Penn State's great dash man and current national collegiate sprint champ, led the 9th Regiment track team to an easy victory over the other post teams represented in the Camp Lee (Va.) track meet held last week. Ewell won the 100 and 220-yard dashes and the broad jump. Times for the 'century' and '220' were 10 and 23.2 seconds respectively. That's what is known as 'flying feet'!

BRIGHT STARS

Fifteen thousand soldiers watched the New York Yankees, world baseball champions, nose out the Ft. Dix (N. J.) team 4-2 in a tight, exciting game played last week on the Ft. Dix diamond. After the game, Lefty Gomez who pitched most of the game for the champs said, "They have a great ball club here. A lot of these fellows will be stars when this war is over."

Former Bowling Champ Is Here

A former national champion bowler is at Fort Benning attending "radio school." Known in ten-pin circles as Johnny Murphy of Indianapolis, he is now Pfc. John J. Murphy, a member of the 152nd Infantry, 38th Division, Camp Shelby. The bowling ace is currently at the Infantry School taking the communications course and has been a frequent visitor and performer on the post alleys since they were re-opened last week.

Murphy captured his national title in 1936 when he won the A. B. C. all-events crown. At that time, he was the youngest man ever to capture a national title in A. B. C. competition. He was 22 years old. The Indiana Irishman won the diadem with a better-than 240 average in all the games rolled, despite the fact that in the second game he turned in a poor 150.

MANAGED ALLEYS

The ex-champ was a bowling alley manager in civilian life and intends to resume the business at the war's end. He has racked up a trio of perfect 300 games in his 12-year career on the hardwoods, and sports a 198 average for nine years of competition in A. B. C. circles.

In addition to the all-events national crown, Murphy was also a star on the team which won the team title in the National championships of the Knights of Columbus in 1941. He holds several records and individual titles in the mid-west and distinguished himself at the tender age of 19 by bowling a 20-game match with the famed Joe Falcaro and coming off the victor by an average of 20 pins per game.

THREE FACTORS

Murphy is an advocate of the two-finger grip in bowling, and attributes his phenomenal success to footwork, timing, and proper fitting of the ball at all times. The three factors, claims the ex-champ, are the keystone of anyone's success in the ten-pin sport.

The soldier kegler is quite enthusiastic about the bowling facilities at the post and lauded the work of the F. B. A. A. in the recent renovation of the alleys.

Ex Libris

Nearly 4000 books were circulated by the Garrison Library during the past month, thereby providing a cross section of soldier reading interests at Fort Benning.

"Kings Row" by Henry Bellaman still leads as the most popular novel, with Helen MacInnes' exciting counter-espionage tale "Assignment in Brittany" and Elliott Arnold's authentic story "The Commandos" having their share of requests from readers.

Another popular novel is one whose heroine is in the class with Scarlett O'Hara. This story, "Drivin' Woman," by Elizabeth Chevalier, opens in post-war Virginia and then shifts to Kentucky with a background of the rise of the tobacco industry during the period following the Civil War.

The library's mystery fans have wholeheartedly taken to Dorothy Macardle's "The Uninvited," a superlative ghost story with not just one ghost but two very realistic ones! Another thriller is Mary Roberts Rinehart's latest book "Haunted Lady."

Current books on the war seem to be the most popular among non-fiction titles. Gallagher's "Action in the East" is a war correspondent's well written account of the scene of war in the Far East from the fall of Singapore to the fighting in Burma and the capture of Rangoon. Russell Hill's "Desert War" was written by a correspondent who was in the thick of the actual fighting in North Africa. "The Raft" by Robert Trumbull is a story of the three navy fliers who drifted on a rubber raft for 34 days, without food or equipment. Readers who enjoyed "Victory through Air Power" will like William B. Ziff's "The Coming Battle of Germany" which reveals the strategy of aerial warfare and its supporting attack techniques.

Do not remove your gas mask until permission is given by an officer or a gas non-commissioned officer. Violation of this rule was a major cause of gas casualties during World War I.

Gas Czar Has Difficult Task At Ft. Benning

A corporal that can say "NO" to a general and make it stick is really an unique soldier indeed, but such is the case of Cpl. Kalman Ruban, who is a member of the Corps of Military Police and incidentally is the head of the military gas rationing board of Fort Benning.

Corporal Rubin says that he believes his job to be the most unusual of all Fort Benning. His job is one that requires him to be a cross between a diplomat and a "Fuehrer."

If someone comes into his office asking for a few extra gallons of gas, there must be a very good reason for him to get it. Only once has he found it necessary to consult his associates in Columbus on a case. It has been said many times by his superiors that he knows more about his type of job than any one in the state of Georgia.

Ably assisted by Pfc. Louis Lipp, the corporal has handled more than 25,000 cars since the opening of the office last July. It has averaged 100,000 gallons of gas per month.

NEW EQUIPMENT

Private Charles Schmitt of Camp Shelby, Mississippi, is new to the army. But he is mighty anxious to be one of the top notch men in his outfit. A slight mistake made on maneuvers set him to studying his "Soldier's Handbook" with a vengeance. While engaged in a certain field problem his platoon hesitated before a stream. A lieutenant, intent on giving constructive criticism, observed: "If we had a skirmish line, we could cross without delay." The assiduous Private Schmitt dashed off. But the lieutenant's query as to his destination brought him back with a rejoinder that was nearly his undoing. He said: 'Why, sir, I'm going to get a skirmish line."

Keep out of unprotected dugouts after an attack. Mustard gas or other vesicants may remain in an area for days.

Officer Hurt In Accident

Suffers Fractured Knee-Caps, Ankle

Serious injuries were received by Lt. Col. George A. Sossaman, former post officer, and Mrs. Sossaman, in an auto accident last Friday near Centreville, Miss.

Colonel Sossaman left Fort Benning about the first of September and was en route to begin a lecture tour as a member of a joint Army-Navy presentation board visiting southern colleges when the accident occurred.

The officer suffered fractures of both kneecaps and his right ankle and his wife received a broken right ankle and lacerations, according to reports from New Orleans where they were carried for treatment.

General Walter Scott Fulton and many other post officials expressed regret at news of the mishap. Just prior to his transfer to his new duties, Colonel Sossaman was serving on General Fulton's staff as judge advocate of the post, in charge of the administration of military justice.

Called to active duty from Mobile, Ala., where he was a practicing attorney, Colonel Sossaman had been stationed at Fort Benning for well over a year and had been post morale officer before his appointment as judge advocate.

He had held many other administrative positions on the post and was well known in military circles.

Another member of the Quartermaster Detachment, Fourth Service Command, at Fort Benning has been admitted to the office candidate course of the Infantry School at the post and will report for duty immediately, according to an announcement by Colonel Stephen B. Massey, post quartermaster.

He is Corporal Richard L. Epes, a native of Petersburg, Virginia. Epes has been a member of the supply corps detachment at the fort since early this year when he was transferred to Benning from the Quartermaster Replacement Training Center at Camp Lee, Virginia.

Barracks Room Meditation

The bugler had just sounded "lights-out," and the lights in our area were being turned out. The setting seemed to be for some play or movie. The night seemed to hold an abundance of mysteries. It was one of those evenings when I realized that sleep would shut out all real life. The only constant disturbance of the darkness was the ever flashing of the beacon at the nearby airfield.

The night was being filled with quietness. Men appeared to fade into a state of calm emptiness as they strode to their barracks. Men of all walks of life were now united and serving a truly good deed. They were now soldiers in the United States Army. They realized that the cause for which they were united was as good as life itself. Most of the men talked of the day when they would be able to return to home and all of their loved ones. All were in constant prayer that the Lord will hasten the arrival of that glorious day. However, they do not want it until they have ultimate victory.

I began to wonder as to the seriousness and enormous change that was brought on by this World War No. II. I felt that all wars must create a feeling of unnatural living to all sane people involved in a war. Vast numbers of people are required to make sacrifices, the only drawback is—not enough of them are made willingly. Many American people are not giving enough serious thought as to the future of the American Government or for a broader view of the Democracies.

From my personal experience there have been many enjoyable and disagreeable events in my life. But, I feel this cause of fighting for the people and democracy is bigger than any one individual's life. We all have our sacrifices to make—it will be hard—but think of the men and women of our country who have given everything including their lives to protect our way of government. Anyone with the above realization in mind cannot say that he is doing or giving too much for the nation. Sacrifices before they are made seem impossible and are hard for some of us to make; however, after we have made them our pride and rewards are swelled by our self-satisfaction. The knowledge of our achievement is a thing that money cannot purchase, money seems to have little room in our life at the time satisfaction comes from within. Many people have given more than their share and continue to give but that number is by far in the minority compered on a percentage basis. We must all work together. The people in the home front have an important job and the men in combat are aware that they must depend upon us at home. Just because it may not seem a dangerous task is no reason for a let-up. The men in actual combat do not allow for easy going for fear of defeat and death. Work should be on the same basis in the home front. True our country and people have never been war minded but for goodness sake let's get realistic, forget our selfishness and unite in our efforts. Let's hurry and permit our men and women to return home.

I have grown up in a small town. First I met my family, I learned to play, fight and work with them. Years passed. I entered public school, my education concerning books started in grammar school. Lessons of loyalty, honesty and cooperation taught in my home started to reach these people not directly related by blood bonds. My associates were numerous. Soon I found myself a member of a gang of boys where loyalty, honesty and cooperation were being more deeply rooted in my character. Our gang would compete with other gangs and naturally all of us youngsters would delight in telling how our group was the best in the neighborhood. The accomplishments no matter how small were as important to each and everyone of us as if our lives depended upon them. Our fellows learned that honesty was the best policy, although, at times we would fight fire with fire. Fighting for a cause to benefit our club was well worth the many scratches and bruises inflicted on our persons. Many times I had an occasion to use my previous teachings. I participated in sports in high-school. From football I learned the art of self-defense in the great manner which only a football player can experience at that age. In football my knowledge of timing and importance of well planned plays was greatened. In basketball it is evident to participate to the best of your ability it is necessary to be in good, strong physical condition. In order to play the game well you must be as humanly close to being a mechanical man as possible. You learn by practice but game conditions are sometimes absent in practice so fundamentals must be mastered. Teamwork and loyalty are two factors that practice should bring out besides the developing of skills. In practice you learn how each teammate reacts and you notice which players can be depended upon and which must be led to act. All of this has a direct bearing on a soldier, he is a member of a team and is guided by the same principles. Instead of basketball and football it is a game of war which is larger in scope and every other respect. Now it is truly a case of "win or die."

I realize now more than ever the importance of absolute attention that must be given to the coach in order to have a winning team. In college sports I would sometimes let little things enter to interfere with the highest and greatest amount of proficiency in my playing. Even with this factor being neglected it taught me a lesson valuable in my Army life.—To "give the man running the show a break." You must be united in order to achieve the best possible results. You can look at Europe and see the big, drastic changes the Axis have made with nothing more than the follow-the-leader idea. (Even if it is by coercion). We of the democracies with more wealth and a more intelligent group can and will defeat the enemy if we follow our leaders. And we have the best that there is in—President Roosevelt — Generals MacArthur — Doolittle— etc. "Do your duty and a little more!"—They are!

It is an all out proposition, those that are able must rise and participate in their best field. Those that can afford to give the much needed financial aid have been fortunate in living in such a country and certainly realize selfishness cannot bring true happiness.

We must think of the coming generations. I for one want them to enjoy peace. They must have the same if not more than the opportunities that were available to us. United we will be able to make it possible for them to live a normal healthy life and enjoy the freedom our forefathers meant for us to have. We can accomplish the greatest event of our lives by extending our aid and services to a great cause. "VICTORY FOR THE DEMOCRACIES" . . . Our institutions and way of government are not perfect, but life under the Axis government would be worse than death. . . .

We must hold faith in our Lord. The Lord will be with us until humanity has returned to a civilized basis. We need not be afraid of death if we are prepared for it. "GOD BLESS CIVILIZATION."

Cash and Carry

In one of the chapters of his great masterpiece, Rabelais, the renowned French writer of the Sixteenth Century includes a discussion of the advantages of being in debt. In effect, he writes that it is good to have creditors since that is one way to make certain that one will have prayers said every night for one's continuing health—so the creditor will be sure to be able to collect.

Be that as it may, last week announcement came from post headquarters that effective November 1, army personnel making purchases at the several post exchanges and the commissary will begin a 'pay-as-you-go" program. Post authorities are working out a plan to allow certain exceptions (if the War Department will allow) so that various individuals short of cold cash will not suffer undue hardships. Not too many of us, especially those of us coming up from civilian life to the status of an officer, have saved enough with which to pay for the uniforms and other equipment necessary to go to the Infantry School. Not too many of us enjoyed salaries large enough to save the wherewithal to meet such an initial expense.

However, hard as this new measure may seem at first, it is a wise one. In the first place the payment of cash for each group of purchases made will mean that all those little chits and bills will not come in with the first of the month to harry us. Nor will we chew our nails trying to remember whether or not we really bought all included on the itemized statement.

Secondly, it will force us to husband our finances, to go on a budget as it were. Budgets can be made workable. At first it will seem exceedingly difficult to make ends meet in buying all the little things we see and want, but in the long run, we shall have much for which to thank the wiser heads above us who have deemed it necessary to enforce this law. It will also go a long way in helping to banish the threat of inflation which hangs over our heads. We shall think twice before buying and when we do buy, we shall purchase only that which is absolutely necessary.

Finally, the training we get on the past will prove valuable off the reservation for what we practice here, we shall most probably practice away from Benning, in town, and on furloughs. This means that more money can be devoted to bonds and stamps and savings, and when this horrible maelstrom is over, most of us will have a goodly nest-egg with which to enter once more into the "even tenor of our ways."

Efficiency

Those encharged with the internal security of Fort Benning are to be complimented for the speed with which they have remedied little but irritating kinks which developed in the traffic situation as a result of the new pass law.

The first day the pass regulations were in effect there was a terrific tie-up of traffic on Fort Benning Boulevard as MP's stopped cars for inspection of credentials. As a result cars were backed up as far back as Baker Village. It took an average of one hour to travel from the entrance to the reservation to Outpost Number One. Almost everyone was late to work.

General Fulton and Captain H. C. Chapman, in charge of internal security, were noted making a quick survey of the situation. The result of their investigation and subsequent consultation was that next morning, same time, same place, drivers were amazed to find few or no cars blocking the road ahead of them. Some who started early to avoid the jam found themselves at work half an hour ahead of time.

With the inspection of busses entering the post came another bother. Passengers who had their passes were considerably irritated when the busses were delayed ten or more minutes while MP's questioned those without passes and filled out temporary ones for them. Next morning the evil had been remedied. Those sans passes were taken off the busses at Outpost No. 1 in order that they might get their papers and be permitted to catch the next bus. This delayed them only half an hour, and those with credentials not at all.

Now comes the announcement that post headquarters has made it possible for friends and relatives of soldiers stationed here to reserve passes for the former in advance of their arrival. This is very considerate of our commanding officers and indicates that they have the whole interest of the men at heart. They are indeed due a vote of thanks.

USO Presents

It is about time for this column to recognize the Mother's Club at the 11th Street USO. . . . For three weeks now, "Pop" Sims, director of the club, has been sending the story in to this reporter. . . . But each week it has been crowded out by something. . . . Now at last the story comes to light. . . . The Mother's Club was originated by Mrs. J. Dupont Kirven, assisted by Mesdames A. N. Dykes, Willard Cooper, Cornelius T, MacDonald, Lawrence Murray, James Callaway, and Misses Eva Zacharias, Louise Randall, Mary Tigner and many others, including the Woman Assistant Director, Miss E. E. Sherwood. . . . Quite a list of impressive names, but don't let them scare you into thinking that this is one of those clubs that serve 'tea and crumpets" and gossip about Mrs. So-and-so's new dress. . . . No indeed! . . . this club serves refreshments; visits with service men, plays games, writes letters; puts on musicals and literary programs; sews on buttons, chevrons and does those infinite things that mothers do for their boys. . . . Almost all of them have someone of their own in the service.

Due to this new program, there will have to be changes made in the present one. . . . Pie Bingo will be changed to Wednesday evening, Movie Night to Sunday at 9 p. m., and the dance class to Wednesday evening. . . . All are effective Oct. 13 except for the dance class. . . . That is effective the seventh.

Too bad you weren't there but you were warned. . . . There was swimming, horseshoe pitching, volley ball, weiner roast and loads of fun . . . all at the party out at Strauss' party this past Friday. . . . Of course, this column described it as a moonlight sail, but that was what it was supposed to be. Instead it turned out to be an evening picnic with the above mentioned activities. "So solly."

Trying to interview a Chinese Lieutenant is like trying to interview "Yehudi." . . . But I finally got him away from the crowd at the 100—9th St. USO Club, only to find that he was "very sorry, but I do not have the time to give an interview at the moment. Well, some other time perhaps, Lieutenant.

Flash . . . The Mother's Club was entertained by the "New York Service Men's Spaghetti Club" . . . It all happened last Sunday at the 11th St. Club. . . . Serving a real Italian Spaghetti dinner with all the fixings the members of the club felt that they were repaying the Mother's club for all the nice things that have been done for them. . . . After the dinner was over the Chefs explained how the meal was prepared and how it should be served. . . . All of the food was secured and prepared by the men.

The Top Kick Speaks

By H. L. BURCHILL

Remember: You belong to the greatest military organization on earth.

You are the nucelus, the backbone, the foundation on which this organization rests.

This foundation must be built on the following principles:

Devotion, Loyalty, Obedience, Courtesy, Justice. Self-Control:

Undying devotion to your country.

Loyalty to your superiors in command, and be loyal to yourself.

Obedience,—obey and execute promptly all lawful orders you receive.

Courtesy, — courtesy costs nothing, declares big dividends in return.

Justice,—be just but firm. Remember the Golden Rule.

Self-control,—If you cannot control yourself, you cannot control others.

Remember: To be a leader of your men, you must be able to impart your military knowledge:

By Preparation, — prepare yourself in advance in the subject you are to instruct.

By Explanation, — explain the methods, or the movements to be executed.

By Demonstration,—demonstrate the methods or movements you wish to execute. Don't require your men to do something you are unable to do yourself.

Remember: Correct mistakes when they occur. If allowed to continue, they become a habit.

Remember: Personal comforts of your men are paramount to your own comforts: You lead your men in combat, but, you follow them in the chow line: See that their personal comforts are taken care of first.

Remember: By emulation of these notes your organization will continue to be the greatest on on earth. This organization I refer to is the one you came from, the one you belong to at present, and the one you might be transferred to.

I defy Hitler, Hirohito, Mussolini, and their hordes to dent this organization.

Strictly Back Fence

By EVE

Life is just one worry after another. I've no more solved one problem than up pops another. Take this business of the identification pin. Just what to do with it so I'll never be caught unprepared for identification is a knotty problem.

I know costume jewelry is smarter if it's a bit on the fantastic side, for who can forget those ugly cannibals, bloated sows with suckling pigs, clusters of carrots and onions and flowers that resembled something in a opium dream, that decorated our lapels not so long ago. Amusing was the word Vogue used. And aren't we gals suckers for the merest whisper from Vogue.

Goodness only knows the picture of me on the identification pin could be called quaint and amusing to even one's kindest friend. That's no sign I want the world to see it in the form of costume jewelry. I couldn't bear the smirks of amusement behind my back, nor could I stand the strain of looking at it myself.

The next best place seemed to be the inner flap of my purse. I tried that for awhile, but I purse was old and the silk is rayon and miserable shoddy at that. Now I have an ugly tear to show for that idea, which was letting me off easy on that bright thought, for I nearly lost the troublesome gadget.

The purse idea wasn't so good anyway, for I have a beautiful collection of shabby jobs that I intend to "finish out" with patriotic attention to the slogan "use it up—wear it out." I would certainly forget to change the pin to another purse. The last minute flutter to gather up one's things in a purse while your share-the-car neighbor honks her horn is unnerving enough without having the additional burden of remembering that important pin.

So I looked about me with the avidness of an inquiring reporter to see what others were about this ticklish situation. The percentage of brave and courageous who pinned their identification badges on securely like an efficient workman was surprising. One ingenious gal had hers fastened to a glass dog tag chain and it dangled with the abandon of an old fashioned lavaliere.

The results of my research hadn't brought me any solution to my problem. Concentrated efforts usually bring a brilliant thought when you've given up completely. I've now put aside all the fancy coin purses and unearthed an old job, the capacious farmer type of snap purse one must twist with her fingers to open. That was supposed to retard impulses of riotous spending that unsnapping business, I could do with, some of the retarding business, if anyone is interested.

Anyway, the pin is nestled in the corner with a dog eared dollar bill, a few pennies, a quarter and a three cent stamp crumpled and without stickum. Since the purse will be the repository of my total cash assets it will necessarily go with me at all times. I shall not be caught at the gate as an unidentified and unexplainable alien by an efficient and stern M. P.

POETRY

Dear Sir:

Enclosed is a copy of a sincere (not necessarily good) poem attempt. Written at 10:00 a. m., May 13, 1942, I previously planned to use the same for a proposal of marriage, to someone dear to me, but due to lack of courage I have yet failed to do so.

Purpose of submission is for publication in "The New York Times of Army Papers" (The Bayonet"), at the earliest convenience.

Please grant an unusual and strange request: In the event the enclosed is published, please label the same "By Benning's Unknown Soldier."

"WOULDST THOU?"

Wouldst thou please be my wartown bride?
Wouldst thou console my wartorn pride?

Wouldst thou with all thy charms of splendor
Complete my dreams with sweet surrender?

Wouldst thou whose heart as pure as gold
To me thy secrets not withhold?

My heart to thine I offer true.
O' wouldst thou say "The same to you?"

Wouldst thou whose smile bright as the sun,
After the vict'ry to be won.

Hast come, hast gone, AXIS to pay,
Democracy, to rule its way.

To heights untold, God let it be
The best for you, the best for me.

Adhere to me O' lovely one
Thy hand to hold when day is done.

I knowest not how Allies'll do
To make Our Countries strong and true.

10
But when this time hast come, has gone,
Wouldst thou then be MY only one???

—"By Benning's Unknown Soldier."

ODE TO A BARRACKS BAG

Barracks bag hanging on my bunk
Always so filled with all sorts of junk.

The only time you get a tumble
Is when our clothes are in a jumble.

To a civilian you are just a sack:
But to a G. I. you are a wardrobe, a collapsible clothes rack.

You swallow everything in that bag of blue,
A soiled shirt, an unpolished shoe.
The bric-a-brack that don't belong on the shelf
You hide within yourself.
You are a pal so tried and true.
Anything we don't want the Old Man to see we trust to you.

NORTH STAR-POINTING HOME

Cpl. Harold A. Woodward

Sometimes when I get dreary,
And my heart is growing weary,
At night, through misty clouds my eyes would foam.
Through southern skies they wander,
'Til they reach that star up yonder,
The North Star, ever pointing, northward to my home.

I think myself quite silly,
And a bit of "willy-nilly,"
Accuse myself of bats within my "dome."
But in the still of night,
It would stand out clear and bright,
The North Star pointing northward, ever pointing to my home.

I don't know if I'm a fighter,
May be a sentimental "blighter."
Instead of digging ditches, I write a poem.
But I can't help what's inside me.
When my love's enough to tide me,
Till I'll be turning northward, toward the North Star pointing home.

But! What e'er this war will make me,
And whe'r e're this war will take me,
If it means I dig a ditch from here to Nome,
When I see that star above me,
By God that made her love her,
I'll dig that ditch forever, if it's for my love and home!

New Outfit Is Hard At Work

117th Loses No Time Settling Down

Tennessee's "Break Through" regiment, the 117th Infantry, hardened by months of intensive training in the woods and fields of South Carolina yesterday began its second week among Fort Benning's red scarred hills, ranges and classrooms as Infantry School demonstration troops.

The regiment, part of the 30th Division, had been stationed at Fort Jackson, S. C., since its call to active service two years ago and arrived last week to replace the 151st Infantry.

The infantrymen, under command of Colonel Grant A. Schliekman, a former member of the staff of the Chief of Infantry in Washington, were quick to settle in their new homes on the main post and even the morning after their arrival, elements of the regiment were engaged in rehearsals for and were engaged in rehearsals for demonstrations conducted all last week. On Friday, the First Battalion, commanded by Major Ernest R. Morgan, was rated "superior" by the Infantry School for its demonstration involving a difficult river crossing before an audience consisting of the commandant of the Infantry School, Brig. Gen. L. C. Allen and other officials of the Infantry School as well as students, totaling approximately 1,800 spectators.

In addition, it was announced today, Col. Troland, engineer officer of the Infantry School, in direct charge of the demonstration, stated to the assembled spectators that a foot bridge spanning the Chattahoochee river was built by Major Morgan's men in the fastest time he had ever seen." In the office today, Col. Schliekter told reporters that he is very proud to add his commendation to those already bestowed upon Major Morgan and officers and enlisted men of the First Battalion, 117th Infantry, for the splendid manner in which they represented their regiment." "This Battalion," Col. Schliekter added, "has set a standard worthy of the 117th Infantry.

Col. Schliekter told his interviewers that he spoke for the regiment as a whole in expressing "the pleasure of each officer and enlisted men in serving Fort Benning side by side with another of the famous old regiments of the south, the 124th Infantry and with the time-honored 29th Infantry. "We have come to Fort Benning," he said, "resolved to the last man to give our best, in strength, experience and zeal to the Infantry School that we may serve successfully as a cog in the huge task of creating leaders and trained soldiers to follow those leaders." "We are all deeply grateful for this assignment—honored that the opportunity to participate in a great work has been given the 117th Infantry," he concluded.

Remember that all gas casualties require: first, rest; second, warmth; third, fresh air. If gassed, do not talk, walk or move about.

Chaplain's Corner..

CHAP. A. W. Whitaker, Jr.

Everyone thinks at times that he is the busiest person in town. Entering the office, store, or factory, one hears the statement, "this is my busy day." Approaching the ordinary individual concerning some project aside from the regular routine, and he will likely say, "I haven't time.

Because folks are busy with many things is no reason why they should neglect the claims of the biggest Man in the world, Jesus Christ was busy all of the time. Yet He always found time to be about His Father's business.

Christ needs big men and busy men. His is the biggest business in the world. It is winning men to Christ instead of letting them go to hell because we are too busy. When Lord Kitchener was once approached by a subordinate officer with a recital of reasons for not obeying an order, he repied, "Your reasons for not doing it are the best I ever heard; now go and do it." Our Christ speaks likewise to us.

May we preserve our moral equilibrium, speed up our spiritual development, and live happier lives because we find time for Christ. With Shakespeare, may we realize that "In persons grafted in a serious trust, negligence is a crime."

The early church was built around the Lord's Supper. This is what is meant in the New Testament when we read of the disciples' breaking bread together. It was a sacramental occasion. Sometimes they allowed the Supper to degenerate into a common meal, and then they were rebuked for their lack of reverence and faith.

It was a supper—not a breakfast. A breakfast leaves no time for leisure. We must hurry through breakfast and away to our work.

It was not a dinner. A dinner is too formal, too much of a function. It requires too much preparation. It attracts too much attention to itself.

It was a supper where those who sat around the table might linger and talk about life, and the things they had in common. It was a simple meal, which called for a minimum of preparation, and where the poorest might furnish the table.

They seem to have broken bread together often,—indeed, whenever they came together, and the home was the place where the sacramental meal was served. Then they visited each other in their homes, and it was easy for strangers to find friends. There the big facts of Christian experience became common table talk, and it was easy for them to testify and witness for Christ.

Thus the life of the early church was characterized by two outstanding experiences. The first was communion. This was the divine side of Christian experience. It was the life of the church in its attitude towards God.

The second thing they had was fellowship. This is the human side of Christian experience. It is the life of Christians in their attitude to one another, in their contacts, and these contacts were prayers. Fellowship was also built around two things,—breaking bread together and praying together. Christ's friends must be friends of each other.

Communion and fellowship; these are the two things that Christ built into the early Church. These are the two biggest and best things in the world. It is hard to say which is the more important. Given these two the Church can save and transform society.

Why World Wide Communion? Could anything be more fitting in these very distressing times, than that we should in penitence, faith and humbleness, gather, with Christians all over the world, around the table of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ? No I think not. World Wide Communion Sunday, October 4th will be in kind, a second Easter, a renewal of our faith and trust in God; The strengthening of the Christian Faith and Love we share with millions of Christians throughout the world.

GATOR HOLE

BY PVT. LEO KLEMPNER AND PVT. JOHN F. O'CONNOR
124TH INFANTRY

Robert Grenfell (Co. C) streamlined it to New York the other day in order to take onto himself a wife. . . . A man in the Third Battalion vows that this happened in his mess-hall the other chow time. The mess sergeant who usually blesses the food was on furlough. In his absence a corporal was assigned to ask the blessing. He rose and remarked: "There being no mess sergeant present, let us thank the Lord." . . . Cpl. Jaybee Stapler (Med. Det.) was carrying the torch for his ambulance, which was taken from him, until he found a remedy. He sent for his girl friend, married her, and now he's forgotten all about his first love.

First Lieutenant James Jackson (C. H) was investigating men holding governmental driver's licenses the other day. He found two who had never driven a car in civilian life. When Lt. Jackson asked them for an explanation, one of them said: "Hell, I never had a chance to drive a truck as a civilian. I was a cowboy." . . . During the late summer heat wave of last week, Mike Dudko (Co. F) approached Phil Kirschner (Co. A) and asked him the conventional "What's cookin'?" Wiping the perspiration from his face, Phil snapped back, "Me!" . . . And then there's Charley (Co. M) Jensen's in-a-word description of most corporals and sergeants. He calls them "noncompoops."

The following letter was found in this column's mail box the other day . . . Dear Sir; . . . In one last, desperate effort to salvage my shattered nerves, and to restore whatever faith I and many others once had in Marconi's genius, I am turning to the Gator Hole for my final appeal. Please . . . please . . . ask all men with radios not to tune in hill-billy music the first thing in the morning. The raucous, off-beat, die-happy songs have driven me to the verge of cutting paper dolls, and then eating them. I'm slowly but surely going nuts . . . I've tried arbitration, persuasion, and even threatened to resort to force, but all to no avail. As soon as reveille is sounded, on come those five little tubes, and the unearthly strains of a cowboy who sounds as if he's trying to sing and brush his teeth at the same time. Again I say, please . . . ask them to stop it, or else . . . signed, D. T., who is suffering from same. . . .Now, listen hyar, fellars, this gosh dern city slicker don't like our kinda music. D'ya all reckon we should cut it out?

In describing a blind date with a Columbus gal last Saturday night, Sgt. Leon Lust (Hq. Co.) said; "She looked like something out of this world—and I do mean Hell." . . . Becoming a master sergeant and a father on the same day is really cause for celebration . . . and Sgt. Jimmy Marsh (Co. M) did just that when he was presented his extra stripe from the army and an eight pound boy from his wife, all within twenty-four hours. . . . Someone suggested that we give the Academy Award for acting to Lt. Hugh T. Lawson (3rd Bn. Hq. Co.). It seems that various circumstances the other day placed him in the role of Acting Battalion Commander, Acting Battalion Adjutant, and Acting Co. O. of Headquarters Company of the Third Battalion. That's some acting.

Company C is boasting about the industriousness of some men in their outfit. On Sundays, they claim that volunteers have been using their idle time by laying out brick walks and sodding the company area. What! No victory gardens? . . . . St. Sgt. Bronze Cagle has been transferred to the Adjutant-General's OCS. Good luck, bronze . . . and that goes double in brass. . . .That delightful, de-lovely doll in the Company A area last week-end was Nick (the Joisey Cracker) Cracker's wife. What were you trying to do, Nick, sell the boys on the advantages of matrimony?

News, which can be placed in the man-bites-dog category, is a sergeant doing Kay Pee. And that's exactly what happened at Pine Mountain recently. When the time came for the after-dinner bout with the soap and suds, all the kitchen-scarred privates disappeared. Someone had to do the job . . . so the lot fell to Sgts. Richardson, Tyner and Johnson (all of Company M) with Cpl. Halbrook as supervisor. . . . "Is my girl friend fat!" exclaims Tommy Connell (Co. A). "I walked down the street with her the other day, without knowing a guy from the 29th was doing the same."

"Look Homeward, Pigeon" could be the title of the following story. Joseph Jackimski (Hq. Co. 1st Bn) is a pigeon fancier. While traveling back to Benning from Baltimore while on furlough several months ago, he took his homing pigeons with him, and released them in North Carolina. . . . Three days later they arrived safely in Baltimore. . . . He decided to try the same stunt while on furlough three weeks ago. This time he made it tougher for the pigeons by turning them loose in Atlanta. They haven't been heard from since. . . . Joe doesn't know whether they ran into an anti-aircraft practice barrage, whether they were drafted, or stolen. In the meantime, the language Joe's using to describe his luck isn't pidgin English.

Wedding are about the only thing that are not affected by priorities. The latest in the M. T. Q. M. C. Division is Miss Eugenia M. Gallant Fort MP Helps Lady In Distress—Praised

The fine training of the Fort Benning Corps of Military Police was praised this week in a letter received by 1st Lt. Wheeler Sidwell, acting provost marshal at the post.

Lt. Frank H. Crowe of the 124th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning was the author of the letter and the particular military policeman he was praising was Pfc. M. B. Terry.

Lieutenant Crowe said he was writing at the request of his sister-in-law in Tallahassee, Fla., who wanted convéyed to military police authorities her "deep appreciation of the courtesy and soldierly bearing of Pfc. Terry."

The lady accompanied by four small children was enroute to the 124st Infantry area to view a regimental parade on Sept. 6 when her car had a flat tire on the Cusseta highway.

"Terry rode up and in a short time changed her tire in spite of the fact that he was dressed in a clean, new uniform. In her words, 'He acted as if it were a pleasure to do it,' wrote Lieutenant Crowe

"My sister-in-law was so impressed with the fact that such a type of man composed our military police that she is very anxious that he should learn of her gratitude. I, and my family are also grateful and feel that this man reflects the fine training of your corps."

SPORTSCASTING

With St. Sgt. Carl Neu

The first week-end of Benning football came out just about as this pillar predicted. The 124th Gators, playing in Chattanooga, simply didn't have the material to cope with the Dixie Conference Moccasins and went down 20-0 in a muddy battle. Capt. Red Milton's lads fought it out all the way, however, and deserve a pat on the back even in defeat.

It was summed up, quite accurately, we think, by Sports Editor Wirt Gammon of the Chattanooga Times who wrote "the soldiers simply stepped out of their class in opening their season against Scrappy Moore's youngsters who played an all-around good game in the bad footing."

Chattanooga's kicking game was particularly good in the wet going and their George Gourley kept the 124th backed up all afternoon. Three men stood out for the Gators according to Gammon. They were Roy Cestary, the hard-driving tailback; Big Ed Jones, second-string fullback; and Tony Aulenti, rugged guard.

After the Moccasin first-stringers had pushed over a pair of touchdowns, Scrappy Moore sent in his reserves and they played the better part of the last half. The Gators may have been outclassed, but don't forget that the orange-and-blue clad Benning eleven probably learned plenty on Saturday afternoon.

Capt. Milton's team, at best, was woefully inexperienced but big and potent. The results of their defeat at Chattanooga will probably show up on the credit side for the Gators in their next major game ten days from now when they travel to Auburn to play Jack Meagher's "B" squad. This week-end, Capt. Milton will send his gridders against one of the 10th Armored elevens in a practice tilt that also should give them added experience.

The Big Blue eleven of the 29th Infantry also performed about as expected in their 7-0 triumph over Spence Field in the stadium Sunday. We figured the Two-Niners to win on the basis of their hold-over material from last year, plus the fine condition into which Lieut. Joe Ahmore had whipped his squad. And it was those two factors that paid off in the victory column.

The hulking Fliers from Moultrie outweighed the Devils almost twenty pounds to the man, but they simply hadn't been practicing long enough to get into shape. They couldn't cope with the hard-blocking Two-Niners who stood up well under the 60-minutes of play with the use of only a few reserves.

Naturally, the 29th made quite a few mistakes. They are a long way from having polish, but they showed enough potential ability on Sunday to stamp them as favorites for the Benning Conference title. Ashmore was not at all satisfied with the team, and after a light work-out Monday, he had the Devils scrimmaging again the middle of the week.

But for a few fatal miscues at crucial moments, the home forces might have rolled up a four touchdown margin over Spence Field. But from a spectator standpoint the final score made the game more interesting, and guaranteed another banner turnout this Sunday when the Daniel Field Eagles test the mettle of the 29th. This column's guess is that the Big Blues will be a tougher team to halt inside the 20-yard line this week, and may win by two or three touchdowns.

Just as if the already sumptuous grid sked arranged by the F. B. A. A. wasn't enough, now comes more good news for Benning grid-maniacs. The post will have an eighth team this fall, and the latest addition will be an all-colored team composed of soldier pigskinners from the Service Company of the 3rd Student Training Regiment, a unit of the Infantry School.

The Negro lads are just getting organized, but indications are that they will have a powerful team boasting several ex-college stars at leading colored schools in the South. Their schedule, also in the making, will list several of the outstanding colored colleges such as Tuskegee, Morehouse and others. The home games, according to the F. B. A. A., will be played in Doughboy stadium under the lights on Friday evening. Sounds like some red-hot gridfare.

Frank Goss, who should know since he's pro at the Officer's Club Golf Course on the post, claims that Benning's best golfer right now is Earl Stephens, a first-class private in the 21st General Hospital. Before induction into the service, Stephens was assistant to dapper Dick Metz at the Oak Park Country Club in Chicago.

Through the generosity of the Officer's Club, which is to be lauded, Stephens has been able to play as often as he desired on the Benning course. Although he has not yet tied or broken any course records, he has been knocking on the door with a 67 a number of times. The record is 65. Combining his best scores for both nines, Stephens has had a mythical 63. He shot a 31 recently on the front nine, and a short while later hacked out a 32 on the tougher back nine. That's some shooting on any man's course!

BAYONETT IPS—Lieut. Bill Desobry and Lieut. Frank Shannon, two of Benning's best-known athletic figures, will coach the all-post basketball team which is slated to play outside opposition from December 1st until January 10th when the intra-mural loop takes over. . . . The kids may take the play away from the big boys Sunday when between halves of the 29th-Daniel Field fracas, the Benning Peeps and the Benning Trailers stage a miniature game. . . . Russ Pool for enlisted men will remain open this fall as long as organizations on the post want to use it for recreational or educational swimming programs. . . . Jordan High meets Richmond Academy from Augusta in Memorial Stadium down town tomorrow night in what should be a corking good prep school game. . . . WRBL's "Football Dodo Club" on Monday nights at 8:30 is an interesting bit of after-game discussions that's worth listening to. . . . Reade Giraulo, center on the 29th grid team, will make fans forget last year's stellar Lou Otterbein if he backs up the line all the time like he did last Sunday. . . . Red Moore, who got his umpiring start while still a soldier here at Benning several years ago, is now being sought for the umpiring staff of the American League for next season. . . . This corner likes the Cardinals in seven games and looks for Big Mort Cooper, the best pitcher to come along in many a moon, to handcuff the Yanks at least twice.

Want to Toughen Up? Try Marathon Running

So you think marathon runners are crazy. You can't see why on earth anyone wants to run himself ragged for fifteen or twenty miles—especially when he isn't really going any place.

Listen for a moment to a 44-year old Red Cross overseas field director recently stationed at Fort Benning but who now might be in England, Australia—even India with the American troops. He's Alex Proven, a Scotchman by way of Philadelphia, and he's been running—and walking—marathons for two decades and predicts he'll be doing the same thing for another 20 years.

While he was at Fort Benning training for Red Cross overseas duty, a few weeks ago, Proven used to circle the cinder track in Doughboy Stadium sixteen or eighteen times a night several times a week and inasmuch as the track is a quarter-mile long—well, figure it out for yourself.

"Sure marathon running is a grind but you'll very rarely find a marathon runner in the hands of doctors," panted Proven one night, when we caught him at the end of his workout.

"Long distance running is a challenge—a challenge to your ability to endure—which is why it probably still appeals to me at 44," he added, "but if you're thinking of going in for it, train well, keep in perfect condition and remember using common sense is half the battle."

"It's all in getting adjusted which is where the much-discussed 'second wind' comes in. It's when your heart and lungs become adjusted to the increased pace and you have less difficulty in breathing. Sometimes you feel like running, sometime you don't and that's where the common sense comes in. If you don't feel like it, don't run!

"As far as marathon running itself goes, pace is what the long-distance runner has to learn. Like the turtle, he'll win races where faster men fail if he develops a ground-covering pace that is easy on him."

"Believe me, it's a great build-

29th Awaits Eagles After Opening Win

Coach Ashmore Out Of Sunday Stadium Game

Devils Prepare For Daniel Field Foe Without Help Of Injured Tutor

Fresh from their opening-game triumph over the Spence Field Fliers in Doughboy Stadium last Sunday, the 29th Infantry's grid warriors are now anxiously awaiting their second test of the infant season this Sunday when they entertain the high-flying Eagles from Daniel Field.

The Air Force footballers are expected to arrive Saturday afternoon from their base near Augusta, Georgia, and will probably take a light work-out on the stadium turf. The kick-off on Sunday is scheduled for 2:30, and once more a capacity crowd is expected.

The Big Blue eleven of the 29th will go into battle as a distinct favorite over the Eagles who were toppled last week by the South Carolina Freshmen, but will suffer under the severe handicap of playing without their youthful coach, Lieut. Joe Ashmore.

ASHMORE INJURED

Ashmore, who was the flashiest back on the field last Sunday and who also fired the touchdown pass, was on crutches early this week, and feared that medical authorities might force him to take a furlough so he could get some special treatment and plenty of rest for his banged-up knee.

After demonstrating some fancy-stepping against Spence Field, Ashmore aggravated an old knee injury sustained when he was cavorting in the backfield for Wofford College a few years back. After the game he was limping and by Monday the knee was swollen badly. Tuesday he was on crutches, and indications were that he was lost to the squad as an active player for the rest of the campaign.

MILANO ACTING TUTOR

Meanwhile, Archie Milano took over the coaching reins and began preparing the Blue Devils for Daniel Field. Milano, a varsity end last year and line coach this season, was himself the victim of a recurring knee injury a few weeks back that forced him out of action for this fall.

Surveying the squad early this week, the dark-haired acting mentor found that outside of Ashmore, most of the men had come through the opening battle in good shape. Bill Bowen, the big fullback, has an ailing back and may be held in reserve until needed on Sunday. Hank Zawaski, burly tackle, also was limping with a charley-horse, but will be ready for the Eagle tilt. Otherwise the Big Blue was in good condition considering the bruising opener.

HENNESSEY REPORTS

Adding considerable strength to the varsity, according to Milano, is the return of Jim Hennessey, last year's regular right end. The husky terminal is a former North Carolina State varsity star and played top-notch ball all last fall. Military duties have kept him from reporting to the squad until this week. He will give Joe Stolarzyck a battle for the starting slot.

There is also some stiff competition developing for the other flank position. Frank Jennette started against Spence Field, but burly Ed Carr, ex-West Virginia ace, is crowding him for the job and Mark Simmons is also a contender.

LINE IS SET

Otherwise the line seems set with the same men starting against Daniel Field as worked the opener. Mike Hutchins and Zawaski will be at the tackles, Frank Mastranunzio and Joe Sacewitz at guards and Stellar Reade Giraulo at center.

The possibility of Bowen's not starting Sunday plus Ashmore's injury has caused some shifts in the backfield. Jarrin's Joe Bryan who can play either tailback or fullback will probably start at the latter post. Ed Hurley, who impressed at wingback has been shifted to tailback where he will get more of a chance to run with the pigskin, while reserve Bill Chaney may move up into a starting role at wingback.

McGUIRE SHIFTED

Husky Phil Del Monte will get the call at quarterback and do the blocking but this time he will get some relief since rugged Mickey McGuire, formerly a wingback, has been shifted to the all-important blocking post. McGuire is also a good ball-carrier and will give the Devils more depth all-around in the backfield.

TOP SPENCE FIELD

Before a partisan crowd of 7,500 soldier rooters, the 29th Infantry unveiled its 1942 gridiron machine in Doughboy Stadium Sunday afternoon with a convincing 7-0 triumph over the gigantic Spence Field Fliers from Moultrie, Georgia.

A snappy aerial thrust in the second quarter with Lieut. Joe Ashmore, Blue Devil coach, hurling to Ed Hurley for thirty yards and a touchdown, gave the home team its victory bulge. Ashmore also converted the extra point from placement with Fullback Joe Bryan holding.

The triumph for the Benning eleven was one of skill, experience and conditioning over a huge foe which outweighed the plucky Devils almost twenty pounds per man. The airmen from Moultrie were not in the superb condition the 29th squad enjoyed and by game's end had been given a thorough beating not all evident in the final score.

The Blue Devils of the 29th rolled up five first downs in the final period to give them the edge in that department by nine to seven. Their big bulge, however, was in gaining along the ground where the infantry should be tops anyway. The Big Blue covered

Two-Niners in Battle Formation

Pensacola Will Bring All-Star Gridders Here

Potsy Clark Coaches Navy Eleven Which Plays On November 7th

The Pensacola Naval Air Station eleven that will come to Doughboy Stadium on the night of November 7th promises to be one of the greatest grid clubs ever to perform at Fort Benning. The Goslings will clash with an all-star Benning team in the "big" game of the fort's season.

Then Pensacolans are coached this year by Lt. Commander George Clark, better known in grid circles as "Potsy" Clark, former tutor of the crack professional Detroit Lions. Assisting the pro mentor are Glenn Harmeson, once head football coach at Lehigh; Bernie Masteron, former UCLA backfield coach; Herb Brackett, ex-Tennessee backfield star; and Ed Danowski, the great Fordham and N. Y. Giant passing ace.

ABUNDANT MATERIAL

With such an all-star coaching cast, the material could be slightly dimmed, but it is not. As a matter of fact, the Goslings have so many star prospects that even some of the great college stars of the past few years were not in the starting line-up last Saturday when Pensacola romped over Southeastern Louisiana College in their opener.

The Goslings have several major games, notably with Alabama, Georgia Naval Pre-Flight, and the Horned Frogs of Texas Christian, before they visit Fort Benning, however, and Clark should have a varsity by that time.

EX-FORDHAM STARS

Included in the list of prospects are four stars of the great Fordham Ram elevens of the past few years. They are Jim Blumenstock, one of the great triple-threat backs of Maroon grid history; Jim Lansing, last year's captain and All-American end; Matt Maryanski, a rugged tackle; and Leo DeConcini, star guard.

Don Clawson, Northwestern's tearing fullback of a few years ago; George Sauer, former All-American at Nebraska and also an assistant coach; Bill Johnson, great end on the 1939 L. S. U. team; and Johnny Birr, Indiana flank are just a few of Pensacola's other leading lights.

STARTING LINE-UP

The starting line-up against Southeastern Louisiana had a former collegian in every slot. The ends were Lansing and Birr; the tackles were Ed Hostetter of Duke and J. B. Carter of Arkansas; the guards were Ed Whaler of Northwestern and Homer Hazel of Ole Miss; and the center was Jack Hennemeir of Duke.

Clark's starting backfield was composed of Ty Bain, former Texas Tech star, as the blocker; Big Bill Leckonby, St. Lawrence and Brooklyn Dodger ace at tailback; Cotton Milner, great L. S. U. running back at wing; and C. B.

117th Infantry Athletes Have Hot Reputation

"Break Through" Teams Won Baseball, Track And Swimming Crowns

BY PVT. KEVE GRUNIN

When the men of the 117th Infantry arrived at Fort Benning a few weeks back they brought along an outstanding reputation in sports. At Fort Jackson, their former station, they walked off with just about every athletic trophy in sight, and already the "Break Through" lads have hurled numerous challenges at other sports-minded Benning units.

The entire regiment, from commanding officer to lowest buck private is sports conscious, and it won't be long before the 117th has carved itself a real niche in fort sport circles. The regiment has always been noted for its sportsmanship as well as its determination to win.

WON THREE TITLES

Just before leaving Fort Jackson, the "Break Through" regiment captured the baseball, track and field, and swimming titles of the 30th Division which is no mean achievement. The diamond and track teams have disbanded for the year, but the natators still hope to get a chance to demonstrate their prowess in Russ Pool.

There were several outstanding stars on the Tennessee regiment's baseball team including Lefty Sherer, Pete Cuomo and Pete Buck. Sherer at one time played with the Savannah Indians in the Sally League and later moved up to the Forth Worth club in the

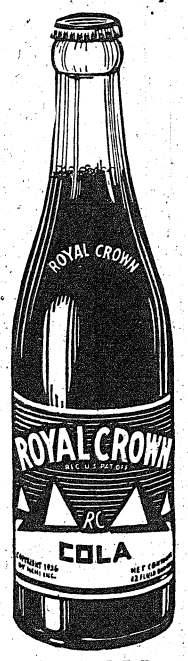
124th Infantry Eleven Is Beaten By 20-0 Score At Chattanooga

The hard-fighting Gators of the 124th Infantry were defeated by the Moccasins of the University of Chattanooga 20-0 last Saturday in their opening game of the season at Chattanooga. The contest was played in the rain and under such conditions, the slippery Moccasins proved to be the better mudders.

The crowd at Chamberlain Field was kept small by the adverse weather, but those hardies who did venture out were thrilled with the spectacular running of Roy Cestary, 124th halfback, and Dick Brady of the Moccasins. George Goudrey's great kicking with a slippery ball also stood out for the ultimate victors.

TWO SCORING CHANCES



The Benning Gators had two splendid opportunities to score during the tilt, and but for some misfortune might have made the final count much closer. Near the end of the first half, Cestary broke loose on two plays to carry the pigskin 36 yards from his own 34 to the Chattanooga's 28-yard stripe. But time ran out before the Gators could continue their goalward march.

A second golden opportunity came late in the final period when Cestary, backing up the line like a demon, tore through to block a kick by Charley Watts. The Gators recovered deep in Moc-

BASEBALL

Baseball's first war-time season came to a major league conclusion on Sunday with the St. Louis Cardinals and the New York Yankees emerging as the 1942 flag-winners. And because it was an unusual season in many respects, the unpredictable National Leaguers put on an unusual finish. The pennant was not decided until the final day of play when the Cards slapped down the Cubs in the first game of a twin bill to eliminate the defending Brooklyns.

Brooklyn had led the race practically from the start, and at one point as late as mid-August had an 8-game lead. But the rambunctious Cards, with a good many youngsters in the line-up, came like a house afire to close with 42 victories in their last 55 games.

Leo Durocher's men finished up with 104 wins, enough to win in any normal year, but this was not a normal year since the Cards had 106 triumphs and won by two full games. The Bums fought to the last draw, however, winning their final eight games in a row, but it was not enough to overhaul the even-faster moving Cards.

The St. Louis lads have now gone into the World Series with the Yankees. (It started yesterday and you'll find the first game result elsewhere in this issue) Before the opener, the Yanks were a 9-5 favorite, and few folks wanted to bet against them.

But the Cardinals were red-hot and in strapping Mort Cooper (22-game winner) had as fine a pitcher as has climbed a major mound in years. Rookie Johnny Beazley, and left-handers Ernie White and Max Lanier were better-than-average performers and in this pillar's opinion gave the Cards an edge on the hill as the series opened.

The Yanks, however, were still the Yanks and that meant batting superiority. But Tommy Henrich and Johnny Sturm were missing from the 1941 winners, and folks who played hunches figured this might be the year that McCarthy and Co. would go down. Everyone admitted they couldn't go on forever.

Season's end saw two previous winners capture the loop batting crowns, Ted Williams about to go into the Navy, once again paced the Americans with a .356 average. It was not quite as gorgeous as last year's .406 but it won the diadem. Williams also clouted 25 homers and batted in 137 markers to take those crowns as well. Good ole Schnozzle Lombardi, now a Boston Brave, won the National hitting crown with a .331 percentage.

BOXING

Boxing's biggest attraction in over a year, and possibly one of the biggest of all time, went into rapid discard during the past week when our boss, Secretary Stimson, got to investigating the conditions surrounding that "G. I. Battle of the Century." Seems that Sergeant Joe Louis and Corporal Billy Conn were going to battle it out for the title. Both being soldiers, of course, they could earn no money, and Army Relief was to get all the gravy.

But, somehow or other it didn't look that way to Stimson who ordered the cancellation of the bout when he discovered that Yussel Mike Jacobs, proprietor of Jacob's Beach and promoter of the fight, had some fancy arrangements arranged. Mike was to get some healthy swipes of the swag amounting to well over $200,000 in total from both fighters as payment for some alleged "debts."

No one knows what the real truth of the situation is, but we do know that Sarge Joe and Corporal Billy are back at their respective camp doing it by the numbers once again, instead of training for that dream-battle that was to have been.

FOOTBALL

Outstanding news of the week was the amazing strength of the service teams, particularly the four Naval Pre-Flight schools. The Georgia Skycrackers upset all the dope by scrambling mighty Penn of the Ivy League 14-6 in Philly. "Fordham" Jim Crowley's N. C. Cloudbusters busted Harvard 13-0, while Bernie Bierman's Iowa Seahawks were toppling Northwestern, 20-12. Only close call was experienced by the St. Mary's preflighters who needed a last-second field goal to topple Oregon, 10-9.

Upsets were predominant with one of the biggest coming when Wisconsin tied Notre Dame, 7-7. But there were others. Tulane fooled Southern Cal, and L. S. U. bumped Texas A. and M. The losers along with the Irish and Penn had been rated among country's top ten.

Other expected leaders came through with ease. Minnesota looked better than ever routing Pitt, 50-7. Texas ran wild over Kansas State, Indiana romped over Butler, Missouri walloped St. Louis, Fordham had trouble before topping Purdue, and Tennessee was tied by scrappy South Carolina. Mild upset in the south was Georgia Tech's win over Auburn.

Leading games for this coming Saturday are: Harvard-Penn, and Cornell-Colgate in the East; Alabama-Mississippi State, Tennessee-Fordham, Vanderbilt-Purdue in the South; Minnesota-Iowa Pre-Flight, Notre Dame-Georgia Tech, and Ohio State-Indiana in the West; and Oregon State-California in the Far West. The Gopher-Seahawk clash in Minneapolis looked like battle number one with Bernie Bierman leading his Navy crushers against his old team.

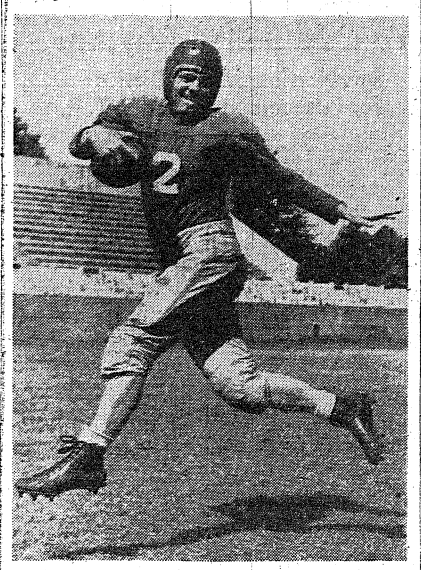
Texas League, before coming into the service.

TRIAL WITH GIANTS

Cuomo had a trial with the New York Giants in the National League, and was to be assigned to a Giant farm team when Uncle Sam presented a counteroffer. Pete Buck was a well-known semi-pro player around Augusta, Georgia. Ridings, Buda, Barksdale, Hand, Morgan, Armstrong, Sayers and Deck were others who held down regular positions on the 30th Division's top nine.

In addition to capturing the team title in track and field events, the 117th athletes also garnered a good share of the individual medals in the meet which was held the first week of September: Sgt. Nicks (high jump), Sgt. Westmoreland (broad jump), Sgt. Kirkland (javelin), and Sgt. Nicks (pole vault) were individual champs, while Mabus, Overbay, Nicks and Westmoreland teamed up to give the "Break Through" team a win in the one-mile relay.

The swimming team splashed its way to the division title with ease, and was definitely the class of the contest. Some of the outstanding members of the championship squad were Banasnick, Liebowitz, Eadie, Oyler, Ware, Feld, and Davis.



GRIDDERS PREPARE

The 117th athletes have now turned to new fields to conquer. The football squad has entered the seven-team Fort Benning conference and been practicing for its Oct. 11th opener for almost two weeks now. Officers are also laying plans now for crack basketball and boxing teams, both of which will see action against other Benning squads.

To give every man in the regiment a crack at his favorite sports, the 117th has also planned a well-rounded intra-mural program of athletics. This fall, basketball, volleyball, softball and touch football will be the chief sports, and the "Break Through" athletic officials are also planning to award trophies and medals for prowess in these sports.

casin territory on the ten-yard line. Cestary, Smith, Joos, and Cestary again cracked the collegian line, but when the fourth down was recorded, the soldiers were still two yards short of paydirt.

Capt. Harold (Red) Milton, Gator coach, expressed his satisfaction with the showing of the entire squad which came through its first game without a serious injury. This week, the 124th have been drilling for their next major game with the Auburn "B" team at Auburn on October 10th.

Chattanooga started its first team in both halves, hitting early in the second period and midway of the third. The reserves played the rest of the way, scoring one of the three U. C. markers in the second when Jim Hood, of Benton, Tenn., rammed over from the 1-yard line to climax a 55-yard march by the second-stringers. Third-stringers finished the game.

TWO TALLIES

er-upper," the sturdy little Scotchman declared in closing. And as if to prove his words, Proven went out the next afternoon in a blazing hot Georgia sun and circled the mile in five minutes and fifteen second—good time for any 44-year old man.

Proven has never come in first in the nationally-important marathons he has raced in but consistently has finished well up among the leaders. He has participated in such famous events as the annual Valley Forge-Philadelphia marathon, the famous Boston cross-country run and many others, finishing twelfth in the New York-Post Chester grind one year.

In 1942, before joining the Red Cross, he finished third in the national junior indoor one mile walking championship in Philadelphia and as late as July 10 walked against a field that included six national champions and finished ninth in the national 30-kilometer marathon on the Atlantic City broadwalk.

With the prospects of seeing many former college greats in action on the same gridiron, Benning fans are already agog over the visit of the lads from "The Annapolis of the Air." Last fall, the 29th Infantry represented the fort and travelled to Florida where they dropped a hard-fought battle to the Goslings.

The work of moving equipment from the old store to the new building is already under way but the former store will remain open for business right up until about two days before exchange employes move into the new store. The old exchange, however, will be closed for a few days while the actual moving is taking place.

Post officials are still conferring about plans for carrying out the War Department order for the "pay-as-you-go system" to go into effect at all Army posts in the United States, Nov. 1.

After that date all purchases made by soldiers at either the exchange activities or the post commissary will be strictly for cash.

107 yards by rushing against a scant 38 for the visiting Fliers.

Supremacy in the air went to the Moultrie gridders, however, according to the statistics. With powerful Tony Antonucci, former Pitt back, throwing the pigskin all over Doughboy Stadium, the Fliers accounted for 108 yards gained by passing. The 29th gained 89 yards through the airlanes with thirty of them coming on the touchdown play.

Individual star of the tilt was the biggest man on the field, 225-pound Tiny Cwiklinski of the visitors. A former star for the famous Frankford Yellow Jackets of the American Football Association, the giant tackle also was the captain of the Spence Field forces. He played all but a few of the full sixty minutes and was a tower of strength.

There were any number of outstanding performers for the 29th with Bryan, Bowen, Ashmore and Hurley doing most of the ground-gaining and sub Halfback Bill Chaney impressing in his brief role as a wingback. In the forward wall, all seven starters did a real job stopping the big backs that Spence Field tried to pour through on them. Center Reade Giraulo and Guard Frank Mastranunzio were particularly potent from the press box angle.

The predominantly khaki-clad crowd was one of the largest ever to see a game in Doughboy Stadium. They thrilled to the exploits of the home team, laughed at the dog that pulled a "twelfth man" act in the first period, and were entertained throughout the fracas by the military band of the 29th regiment. It was a banner start for what appears to be the fort's biggest year of football.

An honor guard composed of the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion and the Third Armored Regiment Band were also on hand for the occasion.

In addition to the address delivered in Division Bowl, he watched an artillery demonstration staged for the benefit of his party on the artillery firing ranges. He also witnessed a parade by the Third and Eleventh Armored Regiments and inspected the ordnance shops.

Later in the day, General Newgarden and his staff entertained the visitors at a luncheon. The guest list included Col. William Cornog, recently decorated by George VI of England; Col. Julian E. Raymond, Division Chief of Staff; Col. J. B. Murphy, assistant chief of staff of the Armored Forces; Col. Maurice Daniels, artillery commander of the 10th Armored; Col. E. K. Friends of Soldiers Are Granted Advance Passes

Benning Personnel Urged To Avail Selves Of Concession

In a further move to alleviate traffic congestion caused by the rigid enforcement of identification regulations at the outposts of the reservation, post officials announced that a system of granting temporary passes in advance to visiting friends of soldiers had been worked out.

The plan went into effect immediately and Fort Benning men were and are urged to take advantage of the plan and secure passes for their relatives and friends planning to visit Fort Benning in the near future.

At the present time, no civilians are allowed past the outpost unless they have permanent or temporary passes which have been issued by the provost marshal. Under the new plan, a modified pass, which does not require the detailed information which a permanent tag does, can be secured at the outpost by the relatives whom are commissioned officers in the Army of the United States, will be known as Traveling Transportation Officers and will go on duty shortly in their respective localities.

If your duties require you to go into areas in which there has been mustard gas, remain as short a time as possible even though you are wearing protective clothing and a gas mask.

I like to be able to say 'I told you so', but I've noticed no one ever appreciates that comment once the dire prediction has come true. Just to keep the records straight I'd like to offer sincere advice on the merchandising problem in Columbus. If you're thinking about a new fall and winter outfit, you'd best do your looking right now. Come first tinge of frost and you'll only find the sad leftovers on the rack. The season starts early, whether it be spring or fall, and the old saying 'an early bird catches the worm' is applicable in this case. You might give a thought to the holiday season that will be here before you know it. It won't be so easy to run to Atlanta this year either. Gas, tires and crowded trains discourage any ideas of this kind.

The PATRICIA SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel is an ally of romance and suddenly planned marriages. She has in stock for immediate trying on some of the most dreamy, ethereal bridal gowns and accessories I've seen in many a day. One model with heirloom possibilities is of creamy satin. It's a quaint, tight bodiced and buttoned redingote that falls into a sumptuous long train. The neckline, three quarter sleeves, front skirt opening and train are frothy with chantilly type of lace. The undership of the bridal gown is a confection in itself. The bridal veil's froth is caught into a lace Russian coronet. The entire ensemble is the answer to what a dream vision bride should wear. Bridal attendants too are able to choose their bit of glory for the important day. Tawny tones for the fall and winter months in taffeta and materials beautiful enough to contrast with the bride's perfection. Tricky head pieces designed by Patricia herself are so numerous as to make choice difficult. PATRICIA, well trained as a designer, proves herself a competent bridal consultant.

Vogue says, 'alligator shoes are the best investment you can make today.' I found that out long ago when the stunning pair of alligator shoes I bought persisted in standing up under the hardest year and remaining the smartest bit of footwear I owned. MILLER-TAYLOR had a window full of all types and styles of alligator shoes, which of course means their stock is stocked with every size in various price ranges. Manufacturers of shoes have developed a soft, flexible leather that will give you comfort as additional value to the wearing qualities. You lucky gals that have a new tweed three-piece suit could choose nothing better than the smart I. Miller pump. It has a dressy type of walking heel with a trim stitched tongue, making this shoe adaptable for dressier occasions as well as your sport clothes. Those who like the sandle back can find their shoe in the dressy oxford model MILLER-TAYLOR has in stock. Telling you about Joyce and Moccaround shoes seems wasted effort. One sees Joyce shoes on every other woman on her shopping tours around the post. There are new fall models in stock with clever designers art and bright colors we've associated with this most comfortable of all shoes.

Second in importance to military preparations are the blessed events. Well, to the expectant parents anyway. Next to wondering whether it's going to be a boy or girl, the most serious occupation of the mother-to-be is choosing her layette. KIRVEN'S Baby Shop will be the headquarters for this dream like happiness. Expert advice is available for the practical necessities. For the soft, cuddly pretties in blue or pink there's choice enough for even the most important General-to-be. If you're congratulating the new baby with a gift, consider the creamy sheer wool sacques, beautifully embroidered with blue feather stitching and tiny pink rosebuds. They have that delicate perfection appreciated by a young mother of a first-born. Practical, too, for warmth. For the very small fry KIRVEN'S has on stock a goodly supply of those much desired Holgate toys. Functional they are and as practical as the ideas of the most progressive nursery school.

— — V — —

If the ever-nagging problem of what to give as a gift is something you can no longer put off, MAX ROSENBERG on Brodaway is not only the solution to that problem, but a treasure chest of ideas for future demands. ROSENBERG'S is really a 'big city' shop with both quality and quantity of beautiful articles. You know the kind you give away, wishing you could keep them for yourself. The canny shopper will look this store over with a mind to Christmas gifts and early mailing. Your gifts will be wrapped with crisp tissue papers and ribbons. Then if you want to mail your gifts they are prepared to wrap your package in a manner that will pass the most eagle eyed postal clerk deciding whether he'll grant you insurance and safe delivery. This is no small item for a soldier's consideration, to whom paper and string for package wrapping is a minus quality.

— — V — —

What a stir over the announcement that SAK'S FIFTH AVENUE Store was opening a shop in Columbus! Magic name that, for it stands for quality, integrity and absolute tops in merchandise. I wish I could tell you gals there would be a Woman's Shop. There won't. It's our men folks that will be getting the break in this new shop. Well, we've long been told women are the primary forces behind most male purchases. Just because they wear a uniform our interest in their well-groomed appearances isn't any different than the civilian wife. If anything, we're a bit prouder and more conscious of their appearance. There will be standard size ready-made uniforms. For the meticulous officer a large staff of tailors and New York fitters will be on hand to carry out their every wish for uniform perfection. A large stock of military haberdashery will catch the eye for gift needs of our men folks. The shop is located on the left hand side of the highway on Cusseta road as you go into town. You'll see it a little ways before the turn off into Brown avenue.

— — V — —

Consistent proof that low price range doesn't limit attractiveness of design is constantly in evidence at SEARS ROEBUCK. Very few families feel they want to make a large investment in their temporary home. That doesn't mean they're satisfied to use unattractive things about their house. One of the most stunning sets of dishes I've seen in the low price range for many a day is the "Shortcake Pattern" carried by this store. The design of the dishes is modern. A lovely cream background sets off the bright spill of strawberries of crimson red. The coffee cups are squatty and large enough to satisfy the man of the house. Something gay and bride-like. The first culinary mistakes could be forgiven if the table was gay with these sprightly dishes.

— — V — —

In coming to Fort Benning, I feel you should know FIRM ROBERTS and his famous eating place. It is as familiar to the infantry as the school building itself. FIRM ROBERTS, has, in his kindly role of boniface to the army, a long list of friends. Many of the lieuteriants who ate his steaks years ago now wear stars on their shoulders and unquestionably reminisce in the far-flung corners of the world of those light hearted days when a party meant a planked steak at Firm Roberts'.

Have you visited WHITE'S BOOK STORE in their new location? It is now located at 1021 Broadway, in the store formerly occupied by Allsobrook's. The atmosphere of order and quality merchandise that distinguished the store in its former location for 37 years will be in even greater evidence in the new store. I've always liked to browse around books, stationery and the many clever gift items a store of this kind stocks. If you are one of those efficient sort of persons, and you'd better be or you'll be lost in the general confusion of coming shopping months, look over that fresh new stock of Christmas cards. Social stationery is another thing to consider right now, for that item will be difficult to secure as the months pass.

Buzzard Attacks Army Plane--Plane Wins

This is a story of a bird of prey —a buzzard—that lived among the trees along the Chattahoochee. From his daily habitat he watched the planes as they zoomed up over the trees and headed toward Alabama. Perhaps it was an instinct of envy or wonderment that kept him watching the planes. But one day last week he decided that he could no longer be a yard-bird, that his place was in the sun alongside these big birds.

As transport number one, the flagship of the fleet going out on a routine flying formation headed out over the tree-tops the buzzard stretched his wings and followed. He rose, swooped, turned, and dove, and judged his distance by the roar of the motors. At a height of 3000 feet the buzzard became incensed that there wasn't more glory in it for him and decided that it was his destiny to win more honor by fighting his "big chief."

When the transport banked, the buzzard came on, hit the plane on its left side, and crashed through the windshield into the plane, a dead bird.

Captain B. A. Garland of the Troop Carriers was at the controls. Cut about the face and neck and momentarily stunned he quickly decided on an emergency landing. He brought the plane about.

The operator in the control tower watched through glasses as Number one circled the field for a landing and wondered why he hadn't called in.

The ground crew stepped in, cleaned up a bit and threw the buzzard on the grass. The plane went to the hangar.

Said the first mechanic, "Looks like the Captain tried to eat a buzzard."

Second mechanic, "Beats me—maybe the bird wanted to be copilot."

Third mechanic, "Might have been a Japanese buzzard trying to sabotage us."

The next day a plane was warmed up for the captain. It had a bright new Number 1 painted on the side—but it was not the same plane he had flown the date before.

QM Seeks to Make Certain Shoes Fit Well

Special Footwear Is Provided For Odd-Sized Feet

American soldiers may do most of their traveling in this war by machine, but just in case they have to do some prolonged marching they will be well-prepared. A recent survey of Army posts in the continental United States revealed that no Army in the world has taken so many precautions to assure its soldiers of a correct fit in shoes as the U. S. Army.

Commenting on the survey which was conducted by the Quartermaster Corps, Cloonel Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning supply head, stated that special emphasis was placed upon problems affecting soldiers who are extremely hard to fit.

The post official pointed out that in any army composed of several million men, there are bound to be some with minor malformations of the feet, a high or low arch, one flat foot or two flat feet, and some extreme cases have been discovered where one foot is a half size longer than the other.

SPECIAL FITTING

At Fort Benning, the Q. M. C. takes care of such cases by providing special measurement shoes, and any selectee who can not be fitted properly with one of the 238 sizes of G. I. shoes carried in stock is given immediate and special attention. An experienced shoe man carefully traces the outline of both feet on a form provided for the purpose.

The next step to be taken is the taking of accurate measurements with a tape measure at the ball, waist, instep, heel and at a point two inches above the ankle bone. These measurements are taken of each foot and entered on a special form. The size of the shoes worn by the selectee in civilian life is recorded also, plus the size of both feet as measured by a machine.

MEDICOS HELP

After that, the Medical Department steps in to assist the Quartermaster Corps. A medical officer is asked to certify that the soldier in question should not and cannot be fitted with regular-sized shoes. He also recommends that special shoes be supplied, and if in the opinion of the medical officer, it is advisable to have a plaster cast made of the man's feet to assist in developing the last, this is also done.

Then in order to insure that any man for whom these special measurement shoes are provided may continue to get them, the Quartermaster Corps tags the individual lasts with the soldier's name and identification numbers before they are filed away for future use.

Thus Colonel Massey concluded, those men who are difficult to fit with shoes are now receiving special measurement shoes that in civilian life might cost up to $25 a pair.

Finance Office Has Branch In Harmony Church District

The post finance office has set up a branch office in the Harmony Church area under Lt. Harold C. Amick which has already started handling all pay of enlisted men for organizations in that area. These include the Second and Third Student Training Regiments, the 760th Tank Battalion, 802nd and 101st Field Artillery units, 124th Infantry, and units of the 21st Quartermaster Truck.

The office right in the area is expected to be a great convenience for the Student Training Regiments where many involved matters of pay arise with Officer Candidate students. Pay of officers in that area will still be handled by the office on the main post.

or can be secured in advance by the visiting relative's soldier and mailed to his family or friends.

The latter method is advocated by post officials who point out that if a temporary pass is secured and mailed to the visitors in advance, considerable delay and some confusion will be eliminated when they arrive at Fort Benning.

The modified pass can be secured by soldiers at the provost marshal's office, Outpost No. 1 or from the various identification booths established along the roads leading into the military reservation.

Meanwhile photographing of civilian employes and residents of the post continues at a daily rate of several hundred, according to the identification bureau.

Gator Shorts

Sergeant Axel F. Olivenbaum, Co. M and Corporal Charles A. Gardner, Service Co. 124th Infantry have been transferred to the Air Force where they will undergo training as flying cadets.

Master Sergeant Frank Emmerling, chairman of the Board of Governors for the Enlisted Mens' Guest House reported today that since the House was opened on September 5th it has been 100 per cent occupied each week end and 90 per cent during week days as members of the soldiers families visit them. It is necessary, due to the demand for accomodations, for reservations to be made several weeks in advance.

Departing guests have been high in their praise of the courteous and fine welcome they have received from the hostess, Mrs. E. M. Sullivan.

As a special gift to the Guest House each unit in the regiment has constructed a lawn chair of distinctive design and color to grace the porch and grounds.

Other members of the Board of Governors are: Master Sergeant John T. Scoville; First Sergeant James H. Moser; First Sergeant Herbert Butler and Sergeant George W. Burke, Jr.

The following enlisted men of the 124th Infantry have been selected to attend the Officer Candidate School of the Infantry School: Corporals Franklin A. Bachrach, William J. Giggenbach, Ralph L. Guard Swings Along To Odd Ballad Rhythm

Sgt. Norfleet Makes Ditties For Prisoners In Second S. T. R.

Rapidly becoming famous for his ballad making, Sergeant John S. Norfleet of the Guard Detachment, Headquarters Company, Service Battalion, Second Student Training Regiment, sings as he swings to his work. One of his jobs is marching prisoners to and from the stockade. And they march, too, with no foolishment about it because the very swing of the sergeant's words makes them want to march.

You'll have to chant Norfleets verses to really get the feel of them as the prisoners and the officers and the boys of the Guard do. The spelling is the sergeant's own.

ISSC Unit Gets Full Quota Of Pearl Harbor Vets

Falling shells and bursting bombs are no novelty for many recently arrived candidates in the Second Student Training Regiment. In a number of classes which have reported this month are enrolled men who were on duty at Pearl Harbor and nearby forts when the Japs struck Dec. 7.

The 21st Company has 80 such men enrolled, while the 4th Company has 30, the 8th Company 20, the 31st Company 10 and the 13th Company 8.

One of these men, Candidate George J. Van Gieri, of 13th Company, was awarded the Purple Heart for bravery in action in the attack on Pearl Harbor where he was on duty as desk sergeant with the guard at the time.

MARRIED

Sergeant and Mrs. Harold Baecker were married last Wednesday at Phenix City, Alabama. Sergeant Baecker is assigned to the 54th Infantry of the 10th Armored Division.

His bride, the former Miss Betty Burns, is from Watertown, New York.

The couple are residing at 710 1st Avenue in Columbus.

NEATEST SOLDIER

Saturday inspections may be a nuisance to some, but the last one the 11th Armored Regiment had paid dividends to Sergeant Robert J. Matas.

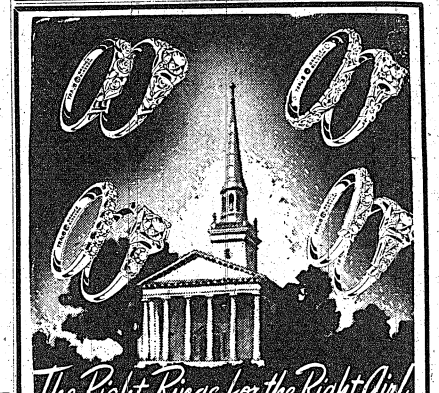
He was chosen the "neatest appearing soldier" by Colonel Bertrand Morrow, the 11th's regimental commander, and received a coveted three day pass.

Army Traffic Study Slated For Benning

Experts Will Assist In Providing Smooth Transport Flow

Columbus has been selected as one of fifty cities throughout the country that will serve as headquarters for traffic specialists of the Army's Transportation Corps it was announced at Fort Benning.

These experts will assist in maintaining the smooth flow of military troops and supplies without dislocation of essential civilian traffic according to War Department plans.



They will also cooperate with the Transportation Corps at Benning in coordinating military shipments. The rail transport duties at the fort, until recently a function under the direction of the post quartermaster, Col. Stephen B. Massey, have now been delegated to the newly-formed Transportation Corps which is headed by 1st Lieut. Charles W. McKeown, a Quartermaster Corps Officer.

The traffic control experts will be drawn from experienced personnel of industry and railroads and will coordinate transportation facilities in the field also, in order to prevent congestions and bottle necks that might delay the movement of troops and military freight.

The men selected for the assignments have just completed a one-week "refresher" course, conducted by the traffic control division of the Transportation Corps. The course emphasized the necessity of utilizing all forms of transportation facilities to the utmost to assure efficient operations.

Ft. Benning—America's Most Complete Post

Hub of the Infantry School at Fort Benning the class rooms of which sprawl over thousands of acres of the reservation is the beautiful Infantry School building upper left(which houses the offices of the administrative and some of the instructional staff of the organization. This edifice wins the immediate admiration of all visitors to the Fort. At the upper right is shown a class in mechanical functioning of the machine gun. Every machine gunner must be thoroughly familiar, not only with the nomenclature of this weapon, but how each and every part functions. In case of a stoppage, he must be prepared to field strip this death-dealer to find the cause of the stoppage and be able to get it back into the fight quickly. The boys are so well versed in stripping the gun that they can do it blind folded or in pitch-black darkness. At center left is shown a class in radio and communications so important in modern warfare in which combat leaders must know where every supporting unit is located and what it is doing and is prepared to do. The scene in center right shows demonstration troops crossing on the double a foot bridge spanning the Chattahoochee at Engineer's Landing. These little bridges are of prime importance in warfare when river-lines are attacked and crossings effected under most difficult conditions. After the bridge is built, troops make the crossings with specified intervals separating each man. Ganging up on the bridge will cause it to sink below the surface at the congested point. Too heavy a load may cause it to break. If you think it is easy to maintain your equilibrium on the swinging swaying bridge, come down to the landing when there is a demonstration and try it for yourself. Another class in communications is in progress in the photo second from the bottom, and lower right is shown a class in map reading. During the last World War, General John J. Pershing sent word back from the front that he needed officers and men who could read maps. Since the advent of the air weapon as a main factor in combat the aerial photo has become exceedingly important. It has also emphasized the importance of camouflage. Enemy installations (and the enemy does the same) are photographed each day several times. The slightest change on the map indicates something "rotten in the State of Denmark" and may bring an enemy bombing.. So our own planes photo our installations to discover tell-tale give aways in order that mistakes may be rectified at once. (Infantry School Photos.)

Thousands Of Officers, Enlisted Men Taught Complexities of Modern Battle In This Vast 150,000 Acre Classroom

BY STAFF SERGEANT STEWART W. SMITH
Public Relations, Infantry School

If the Infantry is the Queen of Battle, then truly, The Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., is her throbbing heart.

For it is here that young blood is pumped into the arteries of every Infantry command. The Infantry School nestled in its 150,000 acres of rolling Georgia hills, supplies the new officer, keeps the veteran commanders up to date on modern infantry developments, it tests new weapons, plans new strategy. It is the crucible of theories, of ideas, of revolutionary military thoughts. It is the counsel room of the greatest military men of the United States.

Here some 1,000 new second lieutenants are commissioned each week, all graduates of the officer candidate courses. Here, too, privates, corporals, sergeants, lieutenants and even Brigadier Generals come to learn about new tactics, the intricacies of army motor vehicles, of communications. They learn to fire every one of the many weapons which the infantry uses today—from the pistol to the 105 mm. cannon.

It is the birthplace of the Army's paratroopers, and of the Airborne Infantry, two of its proudest offspring. The glamor boys of the air were carefully nursed in their early stages by The Infantry School, and since have branched out to be a vital part of the U. S. Army.

A significant fact which the public does not fully realize, is that the school's graduates are not merely fully trained fighting men, but each can consider himself a well grounded military instructor.

EVERY STUDENT A TEACHER

One of the first thoughts behind the school's great program is to make every student a future teacher, capable of imparting scientifically and intelligently, to future students the knowledge which he learned during his stay here. The vast reservation of fast-flowing streams, bogs, hills, woods and plains, bissed for the most part with warm sunshine which permits training the year round, is an immense classroom.

Everywhere throughout the sprawling reservation are students, seated in large bleachers, perched upon hillsides or perhaps strolling up a ravine, making "an estimate of the situation" prior to starting a maneuver. They are learning the best way to get a regiment of men and equipment across a rapid 300-foot wide river; or they are learning how to clean a mess kit, to apply first aid, to sneak up on an outpost, to run a truck, to ride a bike. Maybe they're learning how to read a map, how to load a truck, or how to make out a payroll. But no matter what the subject is there are two points which are ever prominent. First is the vast use of visual aids to get the subject across, and the second is the stress given to methods of instruction which the officer may use when he has his own command.

VISUAL AIDS USED

An entire section with a large staff of officers and enlisted men—photographers, artists, cabinet makers and what not, is given over to the visual aids of the school. They are taking photographs by the hundred, making film strips to be shown on screens to large classes. There is a great library of military films which are a big part of the army's training effort. These are available to all units in the U. S. Army for educating its fighting men.

The school's technicians produce great maps, large painted scenes, landscapes to use in explaining military problems. Large scale drawings and actual working wooden models of weapons are in use in large quantity. Just one section of an automatic rifle, which is in reality four inches long, is duplicated in a wooden model that is eight feet long. This is put on the platform of one of the many classrooms and its working parts explained in great detail. Such is the system of education used throughout every course of The Infantry School.

It is the result of counsel from some of the greatest educators of the country. Officials went into intensive research to determine the best way to instruct its students.

The intelligence behind The Infantry School's program is born out by the great records being established by its graduates. Reports from all commands show that they have become able battle leaders, and able instructors, fully qualified to turn raw recruits into raw-boned, hard-fighting doughboys.

Not the least important is the school's publication section. It produces the soldier's "Bibles," the field manuals and training manuals that produce the by-words and the authority behind the actions of every man in the infantry. They also go in for the visual side of things and have a staff of artists and photographers at their beck and call in order to produce profusely illustrated manuals on such extreme subjects as how to lace a shoe and how to place an entire army in combat.

PRODUCE 'SOLDIERS' BIBLES

They produce volume upon volume which are printed in large quantity, carrying the latest trends in battle and the latest precepts of army organization. One of their greatest pieces of work is "The Mailing List" which is a composite volume of the new twists and turns of the previous six months in warfare. It is intended to keep graduates of the school up to date on the new modes and trends which the Infantry School has uncovered or found to be best by the acid test of experience. To these volumes the highest ranking and best qualified men of the armed forces contribute.

The Infantry School was first established in October, 1918, near Columbus, Ga. Previously it had been known in successive stages as "The School of Musketry," at Monterey, Calif., and the "School of Small Arms Fire," at Fort Sill, Okla.

Since coming to Fort Benning in 1919, The Infantry School has grown rapidly. It has gathered a choice group of enlisted men, all specialists in their respective fields. They are a vital part of the school training program. They are the men who instruct the thousands of students in automotive mechanics, the secrets of infantry weapons, the proper technique of fire, how to maneuver against an enemy.

They are members of the Academic Regiment, the highest ranking enlisted man unit in the U. S. Army. And every man has earned the right to his high rating by demonstration of high technical ability. There are more than 70 master sergeants and some 400 "buck" sergeants in the organization, not to mention the many other grades.

DEMONSTRATION UNITS

Three infantry regiments, a tank battalion, a field artillery battalion, and an observation airplane squadron are part of the school's personnel, used for demonstration purposes. Not only do these thousands of men maneuver before the eyes of the students to show the proper procedure to "Withdraw under fire" or make a "regimental attack," but they are actually commanded by students during part of the courses of instruction.

There is an entire regiment of trucks and drivers, the largest transportation unit in the army, assigned to transport students and school personnel around the vast reservation. There are a great number of administrative officers and enlisted men who take care of service records, messes, pay rolls, transfer orders, and what not. The school is an army in itself.

Community Chorus Concert Planned By USO Oct. 7

For the third time since the opening of the new USO Club at 100—9th Street, the directors will present the Community Chorus in a concert on October 7.

The Chorus will feature the noted soloists Mrs. Richard Lamb, coloratura soprano and Harold Scheckman, violinist. A miscellaneous program, including a concert medley from the opera "Aida" by Verdi, "Carmena Waltz," and a humorous number, "Goosie, Goosie, Gander" by Kathrine Davis, has been prepared.

Mrs. Lamb will sing the aria "Una dine Moore Goldsworthy of New York, Virginia Kendrick of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia and with John Lewis Roberts from the Royal Academy of London She has done church and concert work in Philadelphia and Harrisburg, appearing at the Wanamaker auditorium in Philadelphia. Mrs. Lamb will sing the aria "Una voce poco fa" from the "Barber of Seville," "Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark," and Mozart's "Alleluia."

Harold Scheckman, already well known to the people of Columbus and the men of Fort Benning, will play a group of solos consisting of:

Meditation from "Thais" by Massenet, "Liebesleid" by Kreisler, "Jalousie" by Gade and "Intermezzo" from the opera "Caveleria Rustieana."

Local singers doing solo parts are Miss Annie Romeo, Mrs. Helen Smothers and Jack Kinney.

Plan Club For H. C. Officers

Fulfillment of a genuine need of officers in the Harmony Church area—an officers club—became a reality last week when it was announced that an appropriation for a clubhouse had been approved and that contracts were about to be let for construction of the lodge.

The building will be in a central location for that extensive area, near the bachelor officers' quarters on Cusseta highway south of Eighth Division road.

Plans for administration of the club are now being discussed, but the set-up of the building itself is determined. It will have a large lounge and recreation room in the right wing, with porch in the rear, while in the left wing will be a tap room with bar, kitchen, and a resturant with soda fountain and grill. There will be a balcony around the recreation room and a game room and office in addition on the second floor.

O. C. Puts Squeeze On Bleacher Space

The fertile inventive brain of Candidate Sidney Mischel of Hartford, Conn., a member of the 5th Co., 3rd Student Training Regiment, commanded by Col. R. H. Lord, is at it again.

Mischel, whose admiring classmates were quick to applaud his illuminated watch dial for telling direction at night when caught out without a compass; and his telescoping rammer staff which, if successful, will revolutionize anti-tank gunnery, is about to announce a new and even more startling discovery.

"If I can just get a few more millemeters into an inch," Mischel explains guardedly, "I can make the 20 inches of bleacher space per man allotted by the quartermaster corps come out right and every candidate can sit down in complete comfort."

Mischel, a graduate of Hartford's Weaver High School, of the Class of 1931, is the son of Mrs. A. Mischel. He attended the University of Connecticut.

Ex-Jockey Is On Duty With 10th Armored

Was Rodeo Star, Movie Double

One of the most versatile men in the 10th Armored Division is First Sergeant T. F. Burke of the 11th Regiment. Burke, top-kick of Service Company, looks back on an exciting past of rodeo riding, steeplechases, movie double and stunt man, and as a leading West Coast Jockey. He's been in the Army since 1936, when he enlisted in the 11th Cavalry at Monterey, California.

Born in New York City, he took Horace Greely's advice and headed for the far west where he quickly learned to ride horses. When he was fifteen years old he started riding relay and specialty races in rodeos.

But the rodeos apparently didn't hold enough thrills and variety for him so he took to doubling for movie stars in Westerns. Due to his small size, he doubled for many popular actresses. When the script called for the heroine's horse to run away with her or for the heroine to suffer a bad spill, it was Burke who did the riding. One of his favorite tricks was dismounting from a galloping horse and landing in a speeding car.

PROXY FOR COOGAN

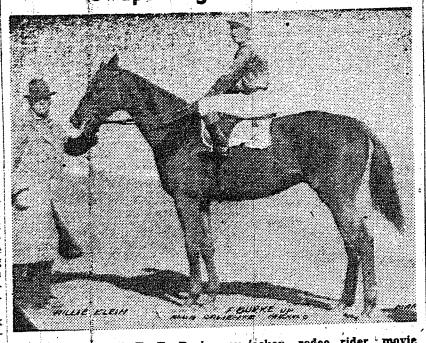
Burke doubled for Jackie Coogan during the filming of his two horse pictures. In the "Bugle Call," which starred Coogan as a mounted bugle boy in the cavalry, Burke did all the riding that called for any daring or expert horsemanship. The other picture is the one in which Coogan lost his famous long hair and was portrayed as a kid jockey. In this picture Burke took "The Kid's place in falling off a horse just after it crossed the line in a "photo finish."

After three years of being a stuntman and double for M. G. M., Columbia and other studios, the urge for a new field again took hold of him and he started riding the "ponies".

He rode his first race at Agua Caliente, Mexico and his last at Santa Anita. In his six years of riding over half-mile tracks, bush tracks, county fairs and some of the leading ovals of the country, Burke garnered over 300 victories and was reputedly one of the top jockeys in the country.

RODE SEA CLIFF

His favorite mounts included Sea Cliff, leading West Coast handicap horse of his time; Supelia, known as the King of the half-mile tracks in California and New Hampshire, whom he rode for nine straight wins, including a $2,500 race. At Agua Caliente he was a steady winner and often rode Willie Klein into the charmed winner's circle.



It was at Santa Anita that Burke found his weight too difficult to keep down so he bowed out of racing after six exciting years.

In 1936 he enlisted in the 11th Cavalry at Monterey, California. There he toured the Coast with an exhibition platoon of expert horseman.

At present, Burke, one of the 10th Armored Division's most popular top-kicks uses up what little spare time a first sergeant has in motorcycle riding. "Anything," he says, "for a little speed and thrill."

Sergeant Burke's home is in Bakersfield, California.

Swaps Nags for Tanks

First Sergeant T. F. Burke, ex-jockey, rodeo rider, movie double, on "Willie Klein," one of his favorite mounts. Sergeant Burke is a "top-kick" in the 10th Armored Division's 11th Regiment.

September to Go Down In 10th Armored History As Month of 25 Miler

Walk To Stables Not To Cause Any More Beefing

September is over but the sound of tramping feet still lingers on in the ears of the 10th Armored men. For the past month will be remembered as one which saw the completion of the 25-mile marching schedule for every officer and man in the Division.

The hikes ordered by Major General Paul W. Newgarden in a conditioning program, were accepted and carried out in a spirit of determination and good fellowship.

From an article in the "54th Liaison" it is reported each doughboy's by-word was, "I'll make it if I have to CRAWL."

The 419th F. A. men reported their hike theme song was, "Get along little doggies, get along." Sergeant John Buckley, the 419th's reporter, says he never thought the ground could be so hard until he hiked the last five miles. Few of us will disagree with him. Especially Sergeant Crabtree, who recently transferred here because he heard that in the Armored Force nobody walked.

After completing the 25 miler, Sergeant Bill Madaras of Division Headquarters Company flopped on his bunk and groaned. "From the 20 mile mark on in, my feet were so numb I was walking from memory!"

Corporal McVea of the 11th Armored reports the ex-cavalrymen are mighty proud of themselves as one company after another reported they completed the 25 miler without a man falling out. "That's darn good," he says, "especially when you consider that a short time ago these same men thought the walk to the stables at Camp Lockett was one worth beefing about".

As he reached the 25-mile mark, Chaplain Frankenstein flabbergasted the 54th Infantry boys by saying he was ready to continue on to 30 miles! Apparently he was believed, for no one volunteered to go. Sergeant Willangby made many friends (?) by telling the doughboys how the "Old Army" used to make 100-mile hikes.

To the Engineers go top hiking honors. The men of the "Mighty 55th" completed a march of 29.6 miles in 9 hours and 40 minutes. Not a man in the battalion fell out. General Newgarden, in a letter of commendation, praised the officers and men for their "fine performance."

Michigan Pair In 11th Armored Advance Together

Both from the same home town—both entered the service the same date—both in the same outfit—and now, both receive promotions on the same date and are equal in pay. That is the record of Sgt. Austin R. Miller and Tech 4th Gr. Basil G. Zimmer of the 11th Armored Regiment.

Miller led by a nose for awhile when he was Pfc. and Zimmer remained a private. But not to be outdone Zimmer skipped all the inbetween grades to equal Miller in the final count.

Both are from Port Huron, Michigan and entered the service October 16, 1941.

What's New With the QM

Biggest news of the week is that G. I.'s from Iceland to India will soon be eating that good old American stand-by for breakfast—ham and eggs. And we don't mean maybe, because the Quartermaster Corps has just announced that its own experts working in cooperation with the famous pickle people, H. J. Heinz, have discovered a method of mixing up ham and eggs and canning the product.

The product is chopped to a delicate consistency, prepared in commercial kitchens and then canned. When the ham and eggs have been shipped overseas they can be served by simply heating the can. The canned breakfast favorite is already rolling off the "assembly" line and it won't be long before American khaki-clads will be going into battle well fortified with a breakfast of ham and eggs. Then, Hitler and Hirohito had better take heed.

Colonel Stephen B. Massey, the Benning Q. M., divulged this week that in its all-out effort to achieve best results at once, rather than by delaying until facilities were available, the Quartermaster Corps has taken over huge public warehouses in 15 of the nation's largest cities. The plan is expected to effect large savings in vital transportation costs, reduce coast-to-coast shipping of military supplies, and relieve the pressure on warehouses at ports of embarkation. A suitable arrangement has been worked out with the individual warehouse operators so that neither they nor the Q. M. will have idle space on its hands.

A brand new gasoline burning lantern has resulted from one of the speediest research programs in Q. M. C. history. The new "bright light" has interchangeable parts (a real boon on a dark night), a heat-resistant globe, and a fuel compartment that will operate continuously for ten hours without being refilled.

The interchangeable parts feature means that six of the parts are made exactly on the same pattern, no matter what manufacturer makes them. A built-in self-cleaning device for the generator is so simple to operate that it requires only a slight spin by the hand to perform efficiently in but a few seconds.

The speedy research was accomplished when the Q. M. C. called 90 per cent of the lantern-making trade to a conference in Washington, and had these technicians design a lantern that could be made from existing materials. Within three days specifications were completed and okayed by the supply corps. The lantern is already in production, and should be in use shortly.

Warehouses aren't the only things that the Quartermaster Corps is taking over these days. They are also helping out the Dept. of Agriculture by absorbing surplus food stocks. The method is simple. The Q. M. C. makes known its needs and the D. of A. its surpluses. Negotiations as to price and delivery are rushed to completion and the foods change hands. The Dept. of Agriculture is now paying certain sums to farmers in advance with the actual cash outlay being supplied by the good old Q. M. C.

War or no war, your beard and my beard just keep on growing, and our few remaining hairs somehow seem to get tangled ever so often. And those are just two more problems that the Q. M. C. has to solve, especially since the rubber shortage outlawed rubber-base shaving brushes and rubber combs. The solution, says the supply corps, is in non-strategic plastics.

In the case of settings for shave brushes, the plastics also effect a saving in brass, also quite valuable now. In the cast of combs, on the other hand, it has meant a change from one type of plastic to another type, since long ago the Army ceased procurement of rubber combs.

Both the shaving brush and comb have been built to withstand cracking, bending and disintegration which sounds okay. A single tooth of the comb, for instance, can support a one pound load which should be strong enough to unfurl the most reluctant curl. The most recent order consisted of 2 million of both the whisker-latherer and the head rake.

Regiment Forms Drum, Fife Corps In 10th Armored

Soon to make their debut is the newly organized Drum, Bugle and Fife Corps of the 10th Armored Division's 11th Regiment. The Corps is supervised by Major C. W. Walson and instructed by Pfc. Edward Gayeski, former musical supervisor of two champion American Legion Drum Corps.

The bugle section consists of Privates First class Joseph Woodburn, George Hill, William Lovegrove, Redman Whitehead, J. Aloya and John Zelik, and Privates Ray Profit, Oscar Ulness and Bernard Wehe.

The drum section consists of T-5 Wesley Hickok and Privates Joe Bland, Norbert Hauser, George Sturgis, Clifford Poppen, J. Modeo, Jose Falcon, Jack Coxe and Verne Patton.

At present there are only three fife players. They are: Privates Jose Morles, Bob Chicklon and Forman Lunceford.

Although only together less than a month, the Corps is making fine progress and expect to accompany the band in the near future at all formations and parades.

'Yank' Is Official G. I. Army Paper

We're trying to make the BAYONET a good newspaper, YANK, the official Army newspaper, is already a good paper. So just in case you'd like to read a copy of YANK after you've finished with the BAYONET, here's the dope.

Regardless of where you are in the world, you G. I.'s can get 26 issues of YANK for "six bits" or seventy-five cents. Just send your full name, rank and serial number with your Army address to YANK, 205 East 42nd Street, New York City, PLUS the six bits and you'll soon be receiving your copy regularly.

YANK adds this one stipulation however. That seventy-five cents is the standard price in every country except Germany. There American troops will be able to get YANK without charge, says YANK.

Woman's Club

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

LAURA M. BAILEY

Plans are complete for a brilliant opening of the Woman's Club at 3:00 p. m. on October 5. The meeting will be held in the Main Lounge of the Officers' Club at Fort Benning. All wives of officers on the active and retired list, members of the Army Nurse Corps, members of the Hospital Recreation Corps and teachers of the Fort Benning School are invited to attend the opening meeting and tea.

Major General Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School, will be the principal speaker of the day. He is expected to bring a message of particular importance to army wives on that day.

Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley, president of the Woman's Club will open the meeting and outline the aims and purposes of the coming club year. She will introduce the various chairmen of the group committees, who in turn will clarify the objectives of their particular activity.

The proposed Day Nursery School, being sponsored by the Woman's Club will be brought to the attention of the women, with a special plea that the club back the enterprise with its whole hearted support.

The musical interlude of the day's program promises to be of extraordinary interest. Mrs. William S. Eley, dramatic soprano, well known for her Wagnerian operatic roles, will offer a brilliant program of songs, accompanied by the talented concert pianist, Ruth Bennett Beuttner. Mrs. John B. Spitzer, well known to Fort Benning and Columbus music circles, will offer a group of piano numbers. Mrs. Spitzer heads the Music Group of the Club for the coming season.

The hospitality committee under the direction of Mrs. Syril E. Faine, will preside over the tea hour, which has lent much social charm to the closing of the club meetings in the past.

Mrs. Henry C. Jones, chairman of the house committee, is making arrangements for an outstanding art exhibit by prominent Fort Benning artists.

Following the tea hour, registration for club membership and group committees will be taken in the Ladies Lounge. Clearly identified tables will facilitate the handling of this part of the day's activity. Mrs. George P. Howell is in charge of the membership drive. The membership dues for the coming year will be $1.50 for officer's wives up to the grade of captain. Field officers' wives dues will be $2.00 for the club season.

Registration for the Day Nursery and Nursery School and volunteer workers will be held in the same room under the direction of Mrs. Horace L. Beall.

Plans for Post Day Nursery, School Made

Need Is Acute; Idea Has Gen. Fulton's Support

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

The widespread interest and cooperation already shown since the announcement of the proposed Day Nursery and Nursery School speaks well for the success of the project. Unquestionably the need for a service of this kind is acute. It took the foresight and initiative of Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley, president of the Woman's Club and trained experience of Mrs. Horace L. Beall to undertake the initial steps to formulate a feasable working plan to present to Brigadier General Walter Scott Fulton for approval.

General Fulton was quick to realize the possibilities of their plan and the great service such a school would offer the post. He has given his whole hearted support to the plan feeling that a school of this kind would give young mothers of the post a few hours of freedom to devote to the important Red Cross activities that is such a vital duty for every patriotic minded woman today. Participation in these activities broaden the interest of women sharing today's duties and most certainly are a definite change from the monotonous and confining cares facing the mother of a small child.

SELF-SUSTAINING

The school would be operated on a self sustaining plan. A nominal monthly charge will be made. It is planned to hire a competent trained, pre-school teacher for full time supervision. Additional help would be given by volunteer workers. In order to lighten the responsibilities, it is hoped that Fort Benning women with previous training, either as teachers or trained nurses will interest themselves in this school.

Something of the old fashioned neighborhood spirit known in farming communities on barn raising days will be needed to put the Nursery School on the good and helpful neighbor basis Mrs. Kelley has in mind. One can no longer confine herself to the self-centered interest of letting friends and neighbors worry about their own difficulties. The entire business of winning the war falls on the individual and unselfish effort each person might give of her special training or abilities to the community as a whole.

GET IN TOUCH

If each woman stationed at Fort Benning would assume the solemn obligation of a war activity to which she is best suited to perform, there could be no question that the women of the army had not only given to their country their loved one, but everything of themselves in a whole hearted effort to fit into the scheme of unselfish service to their community.

The location for the school has not yet been decided upon, though it is planned to have it at a central location for everyone's convenience. There will be cots, playpens and a piano or victrola for the little tots. Donation of suitable equipment for the school would be appreciated.

The Day Nursery will be equipped to take care of infants. Linen for the cribs and formulas will have to be supplied by the mothers. Cribs, refrigerator for storage of formulas will be available. There will be a stove for the heating of the formula at the proper time. It is hoped that there will be medical inspection at regular intervals to keep a close check on the health of the children.

HOURS GIVEN

The school will open at 9 a. m. and close at 11:30 a. m. in the mornings. The afternoon hours will be from 1 p. m. to 4 p. m. daily.

Registration of the children and volunteer workers will be held on the opening day of the Woman's Club on October 5 in the Ladies Lounge. Mrs. Beall and her committee will be on hand to answer any questions and enroll the prospective applicants. The registration will take place after the completion of the opening meeting.

Soldiers To Get 500 Free Ducats To Buck Lecture

Five hundred free tickets for servicemen at Fort Benning have been made available for the Frank "Bring 'em Back Alive" Buck lecture in Columbus October 21. The ducats will be issued at the information desk of the USO Club at 100—9th street immediately and will go to the first comers.

Buck is the world-famed wild animal hunter who has crossed the Pacific 45 times in the last 30 years and who has traveled round the globe many times. He is appearing under the sponsorship of the Columbus Business and Professional Women's Club. The USO Club on Ninth street will be the scene of the lecture. Buck is also expected to broadcast on the "Fort Benning Is on the Air" program the afternoon of October 21.

Listen . . . . . It's Fort Benning

This week I would like to start a little something that has been on my mind for a long time. . . . A short biography of the radio entertainers of Fort Benning. . . . The first on the list will be Pvt. Phillip Marantz of Headquarters Detachment, DEML, 4th S. C. . . . A real and rich baritone voice is his claim to fame. . . . A former student of Miss Lucile Kellogg of Carnegie Hall in New York City, he has been a solo vocalist with the National Opera Association of the same city. . . . Private Marantz was inducted into the Army at Camp Upton. . . . From Upton he was sent to Camp Croft and thence to Fort Benning. At Camp Croft he was very well known for his work at bond rallies and other gatherings. . . . At the moment he is working in Service Club No. 1 on the main post, as a general all-around clerk. . . . One of the first things that he would like to do is form a Choral Society of semi-permanent members. . . . Any one that is interested in this can contact him at the club. . . . His other ambition is literally to fill up Gowdy Field and hold a gigantic community sing. Using his own words, "I want to make the air around the field just cry out with song."

Last Monday "Listen, It's Fort Benning," went on the air with another all-army variety program from this mighty reservation. . . . Coming from Service Club No. 2 in the Sandhill area, the show featured the Reception Center Quartette, Pvt. Rawn Spearman, and that new dance band of the Fort Benning Reception Center. That was the first time that the new band was on the air . . . and they did very well. . . . Lt. Col. Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Reception Center explained to the audience the workings and the purpose of his command. . . . Next Monday, "Listen, Fort Benning" will present a six-piece dance band from Lawson Field and other Field talent.

This coming Sunday, the "Army Hour" program broadcast from the 11th St. USO club in Columbus, will feature the Station Hospital unit under Sgt. W. D. Smith. . . . It will be an all-religious program and Chaplain R. J. McCarty will be heard.

During the coming week there will be presented the regular series of "Fort Benning On the Air" will feature; an interview of the Woman's Club of Fort Benning Thursday by Capt. Russell J. Hammargren, post public relations officer. Mrs. Reginald Kelly and Mrs. George P. Howell will be present. . . . Monday will hear Miss Ruth Glatt singing classical and semi-classical music. . . . She is the daughter of Maj. Ralph A. Glatt of Fort Benning . . . and Tuesday a new musical unit will be introduced over the air . . . a brand new string orchestra from the Station Hospital.

This past Wednesday evening, beside the daily Newscast and variety program at 6 p. m., there was heard the Reception Center Chorus at 9 p. m. and the "Quartermaster Quarter Hour" at 7:45. The quartermaster program featured an interview of Col. Stephen B. Massey on the subject of the Quartermaster marketing center and how the wheels are kept rolling. The interview was conducted by Sgt. Carl Neu.

For the finest program of the week, don't forget to listen to "Listen, It's Fort Benning" every Monday night at 8:05. . . . Talking about not forgetting . . . have you sent your requests for your favorite recordings to the "Benning Bandwagon.

SPLASHERS!

The Lowry Field (Colo.) swimming team invaded the A.A.U. regionals held in Denver recently and came away with enough hardware to build a Liberty ship. The soldier fin flippers captured two first places, three seconds, and two thirds. Max Von Isser, former national junior breast stroke champ, was the leading Lowry point-getter. He romped home first in the 200 meter breast stroke, placed second in the 300 meter medley, and anchored the soldier relay team, which copped second place!

Everybody's Reading It!

And just to prove it, here's a shot showing the "shortest" and "tallest" enjoying one of the features in last week's paper. In the center is midget Billy Curtis, who scales only 85 pounds and is slightly under four feet tall. Grouped around the "little man' are four of those tall, toothsome and terrific chorines who thrilled Benning G. I's in last week's "Hollywood Follies" which played to banner crowds everywhere. The gals, in case you're interested, are blonde Betty Leonard, New York City; brunette Rose, Santa Monica, Calif.; brownette Madelyn Dressler, Denver, Col.; and redhead Sally Loomis, St. Paul, Minn. A YANK AT ETON
CAST

Tim Dennis—Mickey Rooney.
Justin—Edmund Gwean.
Roger Carlton—Ian Hunter.
Peter Carlton—Freddie Bartholomew.
Winifred Dennis Carlton—Marta Linden.
Jane—Juanita Quigley.
Mr. Dunesk—Alan Mowbray.
Ronnie Kenvil—Peter Lawford.
Inky Weeld—Raymond Severn.
Flossie Sampson—Tina Thayer.
Kilspeth—Terry Kilburn.
Directed by Norman Taurog.

When Tim and Jane Dennis's still young, and exceptionally attractive mother married again, their world went into an abrupt tailspin. Even with an American step-father, it might have taken sometime for them to have become adjusted. But Roger Carlton, the quietly distinguished widower she had married was an Englishman. And his home, the great estate whose pictures he had shown them, was in England. Which meant, staggeringly, that it would now be their home, too. That, as soon as passage could be arranged. Tim and Jane would be uprooted from everything they had ever known, and taken to England to live.

Thus the adventures of "A Yank at Eton" starts. This story is one that has not a definite time value. It could happen after the war or perhaps it was before the war. Whenever it happened, it is a typical story about two young Americans and their difficulties in a strange place.

Young Peter Carlton tries to help Tim adjust himself, but even he can't understand the thoughts and acts of the "Yankee".

One of the best scenes in the picture is when Tim tries to organize the students of Eton into a form of labor union.

After getting himself into trouble with everyone, including the headmaster of the school and his step-father, Tim finally feels the spirit of tradition behind all of England and becomes one of them.

After building up to a high climax the picture ends with a real surprise.

Now he sees him often—for it's Pvt. Carmody and Cpl. Anderson in the backfield of the Camp Grant, Ill., eleven.

Peeks at Pics

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

The latest item to come out of Hollywood about Marjorie Main, now starring with Wallace Beery in the current revival "The Bugle Sounds," tells about her being a vegetable juice addict. Everywhere that Miss Main works there is sure to be a bottle of some sort of juice around. When she was asked about it, she said that the reason that she drinks it is that it makes her have nice dreams. The first time that she drank it, Miss Main had a dream about Clark Gable . . . (even the women in Hollywood go for the men in uniform). . . . Before her carrot juice, Marge used to drink coffee. . . . But she didn't like that very much because the only one she would dream about was Wallace Beery.

Speaking of men in uniform . . . Vic Mature is in the Navy . . . (Watch the rush of girls for enlistment in the WAVES) . . .

And here is a little item for your scrap book . . . Robert Montgomery, ex-movie star, is now in charge of a fleet of torpedo boats . . . American Paratroopers Learn Much In England

Yankees Create Commotion With Helmets And Boots

The high boots and helmets of the American paratroopers, so familiar at Fort Benning where the Parachute School is located, have created considerable commotion in England, according to reports of foreign correspondents and radio commentators in London.

One newspaperman said the American parachutists had been taken for Nazi paratroopers because of those high boots and helmets. In a more serious vein, the correspondent added that Lt. Col. Edson Raff, formerly of Fort Benning, commander of a parachute unit from America, said the Yankees had learned much from English airborne soldiers.

"Also," say the correspondents, "the British have taken a trick or two from the American 'bag of stunts.'"

SHORTER JUMPS

Of interest to Fort Benning parachute troops is the word of one of the well-known raido commentators, Bob Trout, who broadcasts regularly from London in "The World Today" program. Here is what Trout had to say about the brothers-in-arms of Fort Benning paratroopers:

TOUGH AND YOUNG

"American parachute troops are training in England and I've just returned from a trip to one of their camps. These men are tough and young. Their average age is 23 years. Carrying a load of heavy equipment, they charged around an obstacle course, racing uphill, scrambling through culverts, weaving through barbed wire, balancing themselves on a tightrope and on slippery logs.

"Their commanding officer, 34-year-old Lt. Col. Edson Raff, said: 'Don't forget, the jumping part is small. It's what they do after they hit the ground that counts.' Their firepower would amaze an old soldier. A parachute spuad on their stomachs in a wheat field pointed their regular weapons at the side of a hill and pulled the triggers. It was like a New Year's celebration in Chinatown. The air almost quivered with the sustained hammerings of the automatic guns. The helmets and uniforms of the parachute troops are camouflaged, painted with dabs of color that melt into the English background."

SHORTER JUMPS

"At home to qualify for the silver badges these paratroopers all wear, they make five jumps at 800 feet. Over here, they jump at a much lower altitude. That's one thing the British airborne troops showed them.

"There's a constant exchange of information and the British and American parachutists go on maneuvers together. While the troops roared over the obstacle course or practiced their jumping technique from a dummy fuselage on the ground, planes sailed overheard, but not very far overhead."

Still another radio commentator said the paratroops were among the first U. S. forces to reach England and that they've been training extensively ever since. Quoting Colonel Raff, the commentator concluded with the statement that "if they're not ready for action, I miss my guess."

G. I. Coffee Is World's Best

Benning Soldiers Consume 4 Cups Of Java Daily

Back in the good old days of the Depression, a cup of coffee was something someone was forever asking for a nickel to buy. Now it's something pleasant to start the day with when you can get it. But when it comes to supplying several million men a day with it, the Army's Quartermaster Corps is the expert advisor.

At Fort Benning, for instance, records show, that the soldiers consume on an average of four cups of what is affectionately known as "G. I. java," every day. And all that coffee comes from the big ultra-modern roasting plant recently placed in operation at Atlanta.

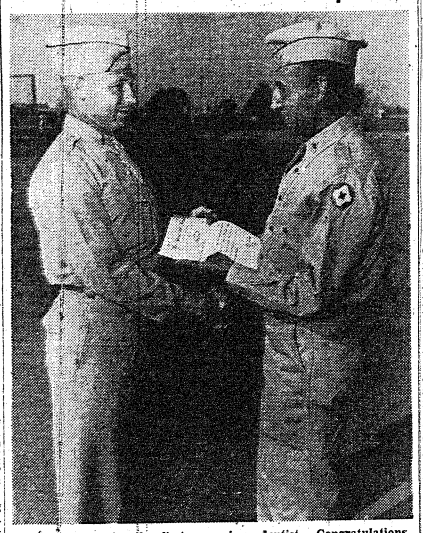
It is one of five which are now operated by the Q. M. C. in different parts of the country, and the capacity is amazing. In one 8-hour day, the Atlanta plant can easily handle and process 48,000 pounds of green coffee beans. And a complete roast, averaging 435 pounds, goes through the plant in practically no time at all.

One of the most interesting gadgets, invented by the Q. M. C. to test the green coffee for quality, is the "trier". It is something that looks like a flashlight in the inspector's hand. All he does is press it into the sack, spreading the mesh slightly and scooping out a small quantity of beans to test for appearance, grade, color and taste.

After passing "muster", the coffee is then cleaned, blended, roasted, granulated, re-granulated, weighed and packed in quick order. Finally, it is packed in fifty pound bags for shipment to Fort Benning and other posts in the Fourth Service Command—and within a few days is being served brewing hot to soldiers.

25 Promoted In ISSC Unit

Promotion of one first lieutenant to captain and 24 second lieutenants to first were announced this week in the Second Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School.



First Lt. Francis Strapp, commanding the 30th Co., was promoted to the rank of captain in the Army of the United States. He is a native of Columbus, Ohio.

The following second lieutenants were made first lieutenant: Charles D. Alexander, 19th Co.; Paul A. Ballantyne, 3rd Bn. Hq.; Darwin A. Brock, 26th Co.; John S. Calhoun, 29th Co.; Mattauer E. Davidson, 22nd Co.; William J. Derevlany, 7th Co.; William R. Doctor, 2nd Bn. Hq.; Edward J. Doherty, 9th Co.; Joseph F. Grady, Jr., 8th Co.; George A. Hambrecht, 5th Bn. H.; Ned R. Hickel, 13th Co.; William E. Kennedy, 14th Co.; Frederick M. Lehman, 29th Co.; George W. Lennox, 5th Co.; Leonard C. Menius, 27th Co.; Claude M. Merrill, Personnel Office; Wadsworth O. Norren, Personnel Office; Edwin K. Newman, 30th Co.; Roy A. Ostram, 16th Co.; Leonard F. Perna, Personnel Office; John Pisarkiewicz, former of 13th Co., now with Student Training Brigade; Richard E. Purington, 25th Co.; Jay M. Welsh, 12th Co., and Douglas F. Young, 29th Co.

OFFICERS ATTEND SCHOOL

Executive officers of the two battalions of the Second Student Training Regiment are attending the Battalion and Staff Officers course of the Infantry School. They are Majors Arthur J. Carlson of the 2nd Bn., and William L. Gardner of the 4th Bn. Appointed to succeed Major Carlson was Capt. Lester E. Winslow of the 12th Co.

"Drill" Master on the Jump

"So now you're the first jumping dentist. Congratulations, lieutenant," says Col. Melville Sanderson, Dental Corps, to 1st Lt. Herbert O. Eppleman, Dental Corps, upon the latter's graduation as a qualified parachutist at Fort Benning, Georgia. Lieutenant Eppleman wears the silver wings of the qualified parachutist. He transferred to the paratroopers after he found the 4th Service Command and the 2nd Armored Division too quiet for a dentist. From Gloucester, N. J., Lieutenant Eppleman has been assigned to the 503rd Parachute Infantry. (161st Signal Photographic Company.)

Esquire's Scoring Table For Prospective War Brides

"Every soldier should have one," Esquire says. "For with love an occupational disease in the army, not to have one is dangerous. We mean a scientific bride guide, of course. And Ed S. Woodhead has prepared such a one for October ESQUIRE. It gives pre-enlistment training for the marriage ranks, and a chance to pick your own commanding officer. To take this quiz you have only to put head over heart, and draw your own conclusions from the answers.

"Naturally it's best not to have the little woman back seat drive while you're checking off her plusses and minuses on this Esquire chart. And if certain parts of her personality are address unknown to you, score 'em zero till time writes the figures. Above all, be personal. This table is adjusted for you and you alone so don't let the boys in the backroom befuddle you. After the bells, you'll be paying the bills. So the goods had better be worth 'em."

War Insurance For Soldiers Is Explained

Many Are Paying Premiums But Get No Coverage

Army men holding insurance policies read with interest this week a memorandum from the War Department reminding officers and enlisted men that many members of the armed forces are not adequately informed as to their rights under accident and health insurance policies and their use in wartime.

The Adjutant General's Office explained in the memorandum that "most of these policies provide that restricted benefits or even no benefits at all are payable when the policy holder is in military service and practically all of them contain provisions which exclude any coverage while the insured is engaged in military service in time of war.

"Accordingly, many members of the armed forces are paying premiums on such policies, which they held prior to entry into service, and are receiving restricted or no coverage for these premium paymenis."

Some of the announcements made by insurance companies that effect military men are listed by the War Department as follows:

No coverage of any kind offered; policies will be canceled pro rata only upon departure of policy holders from continental United States; extension of limited coverage on land within continental United States to Jan. 1, 1943.

Suspension of premiums on noncancelable policies during the nullification of protection due to military service; refund of premiums for periods during which no protection was afforded.

Commanding officers of all Army units have been asked to bring the matter to the attention of personnel in their command so that individual policy holders may determine what protection they have.

Fuller Named Senior Lieut.

Has 20 Year Record In Service

Twenty years of service with the U. S. Army were rewarded this month when Master Sergeant James S. Fuller was commissioned as 1st Lieutenant.

Enlisting in 1922 at the age of 19, Lieut. Fuller has spent 19 years with the Range Detachment, serving as a range sergeant, chief clerk, chief range sergeant and now as Assistant Range Officer. He has supervised the expansion of the range organization from its meager beginnings of two ranges and a bayonet court to its present ever-expanding size.

Lt. Fuller's promotions came gradually but steadily. He become a corporal in 1922, sergeant in 1924, staff sergeant in 1933 and technical sergeant in 1939. On Feb. 1, 1941 he achieved the rank of master sergeant.

At the present time Lt. Fuller lives on the post. His wife, a music teacher by profession, works at the station hospital.

Omaha Singer Enrolled Here In O. C. School

Candidate Robert Herring, leading tenor soloist from 1933-1935 with the Omaha, Neb., Opera in English Association, famous musical organization directed by Madame Thea Moeller Herms is an officer candidate at Benning.

In 1935, young Herring sought and found further singing fame in New York, singing for eight months at Radio City Music Hall with the Opera Series of the Air. While in New York, he also appeared in leading roles in many musical shows of note, including "DuBarry Was a Lady" and "The Show Is On."

Shortly after his induction into the Army in June 1941, he was selected as the singing star of "Ready on the Firing Line," Fort Leonard Wood's famous musical comedy which earned $22,000 for the Army Emergency Relief Fund in the short period of 6 days.

While at Fort Wood, Herring was attached to a heavy weapons unit, advanced to Corporal, and took part in the Louisiana Maneuvers of 1941. Seeking to further his military career, he applied for candidacy in the Infantry School, was accepted, and is now in the 19th Company of Colonel R. H. Lords' 3rd Student Training Regiment.

Human Cannonball Confines Activities To Shots In Arm

"I just wish that I had a dollar bill for every time I've been shot out of a cannon," Private Howard Hug of the 24th General Hospital, could be thinking as he inspects a 75 mm.

And he isn't just kidding either. In civilian life Hug worked with Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey, and Greg Shows, as a "human cannonball." About 300 times a year, he donned on a specially tailored, white canvas suit, and a crash helmet, climbed into the mouth of a 28-inch cannon, signalled OK, and went whizzing over tents, ferris wheels and the like.

There really isn't much in it, either, if you know how. There is little jar at the outset, because the "cannon-ball" stands on a small platform, with both feet firmly planted, and is merely pushed out. Sounds easy, doesn't it?

Due to careful planning and figuring Hug has never been seriously injured.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

BATTLEFRONTS:

1. German and Russian dead piled higher and higher at Stalingrad as the Reds grimly held the blood-stained city and the Nazi Army gained support from new divisions. The doughs Russians, counter-attacking in the face of a half million Germans, gained slightly on the Nazi flanks. In Stalingrad, itself, the Red Army met a new German assault.

2. Along thousands of miles of Pacific front, the Jap, Australians and Americans fought tooth and nail for "toe-holds" on Pacific Islands, "toeholds" which may some day turn the tide of the inevitable great battles for the lands in the Pacific.

In the Solomons, hard-pressed Marines held their well-escped positions in the face of Jap reinforcements and constant attacks.

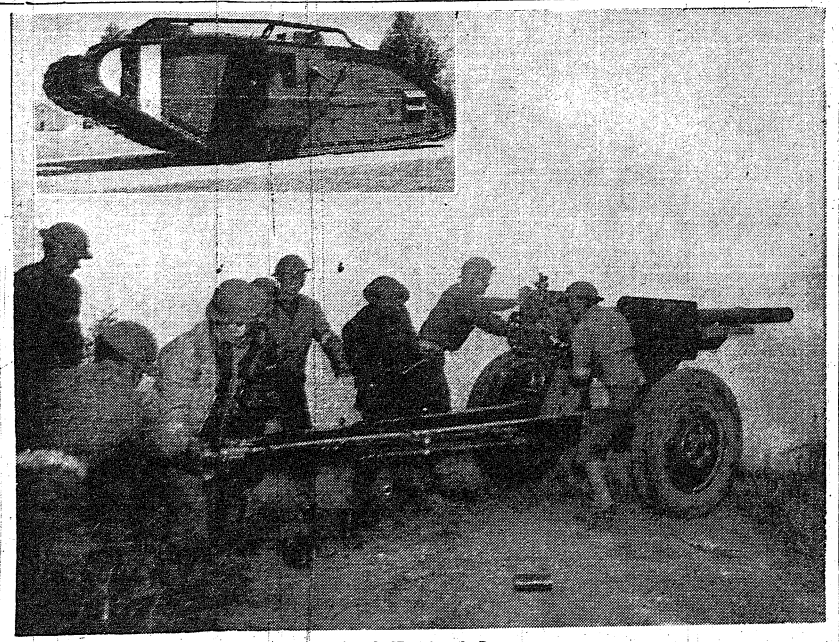
In the Aleutian Islands, U. S. Army troops took positions less than 300 miles from Jap-held Kiska island and moved closer and closer to Jap bases in the Aleutians. Many Jap planes were destroyed by unceasing American attacks.

On New Guinea, leathery, crack-shot Australians and Americans pushed the enterprising Jap back over the "hump" of the Owen Stanley Mountain range, considerably lessening the threat to embattled Port Moresby, allied base on the Australian coside of New Guinea.

3. American soldiers, fighting and training the world over, followed headlines on the second front debate closely during their spare time. They realized probably better than most civilians the responsibilities of the Allied military leaders.

They read of Stalin's letter to an American correspondent stressing the vital need for an immediate second front. As they read, they remembered a statement on Sept. 26 by their own Wendell Willkie. Following a visit to Russia, Willkie called for a second front and added some military leaders "might need some public prodding."

The American soldier agreed that the sympathies of every red-blooded fighting man was with the under-dog Russian troopers. But at the same time, our soldiers also realized that second fronts aren't "dreamed up"; that a man isn't given a gun; taken across a body of water; placed on a beach somewhere and announced as a "second front." As he fought the Jap in the Pacific or stuck his bayonet through a straw dummy in some training camp, the American soldier knew that a second front now or at any time must not fail and that to keep it from failing it must be as well-prepared, as perfectly-executed and as perfectly-supplied as the successful offense of the German armies in the last two years. That, as a matter of fact, it must be better than those offenses.



Knowing this though, the American soldier—and probably the 130 million Americans on the home front—still wished something could be done to help the embattled, gallant Red Army.

THE WAR-TIME NATION

The "squeeze was on" this week as the United States Americans had asked for it because they wanted to help in the war-effort and they were in a mood to accept it. "It" was several things.

Of importance to millions, were new orders issued by Price Administrator Leon Henderson freezing all uncontrolled urban and rural rents at levels of last March 1. Previously rent control was li-

From Tank To Tank Destroyer

The 1918 Mark VIII British tank, shown in the upper left, for long the favorite subject of amateur photographers visiting the post, has gone back to the wars. Who knows but what it will soon be the modern big gun shown above. Thus it may change roles from bone-crushing machine which once rolled against the Hindenburg line to tank destroyer. The 37-mm is the usual gun used against tanks, but in the Battle of France larger guns were vainlessly pressed into use.

505 Paratroopers Enjoy Rapid Growth

Outfit Led By Capable Rough, Ready Officers

On July 6 1942 Lt. Col. James M. Gavin was credited in military vital statistics with having been presented with a brand new baby.

It was named the 505th Parachute Infantry. The 'baby' shook its rattle in jump school, cut its teeth with basic training in weapons in the drying pan area at Benning, and is now growing lustily with tactical training in Alabama. For a youngster, it has been precocious. Already, it has outshot all previous scores by parachute regiments. Its firing record would inspire Hitlerian nightmares.

OVER-STRENGTH

Although the youngest full strength regiment in the army today, it didn't stop. It's overstrength. Everything about the 505th; the Colonel's young 'un, is a military delight to behold. Every move it makes adds up to trouble for the enemies it will one day meet.

It doesn't matter whether the men are standing in the door to jump, attacking dummies with bayonets, marching in review, or just plain walking down the street, they are extra something in it, which is the difference between just a man in uniform, and a man who firmly believes that whatever tradition the 505th will one day have is up to him.

Recognizing the rapid strides made in the bringing up of this regiment, two promotions came last week when it was officially announced that it is now Colonel James M. Gavin, and Lt. Col. Orin D. Haugen. The latter is the 505th executive officer.

Gavin is one of the early parachute infantry officers, and so is Lt. Col. Haugen. They have followed the branch through its

Four Generals Are Honored With Review

124th Infantry Is Host To Allen, Fulton, Safay, Weems

Four of Fort Benning's high-ranking generals were honored this week at a parade and review of the 124th Infantry Regiment in the Harmony Church Area.

The ceremonies were held in honor of Brig. Gen. Fred A. Safay, former regimental commander of the 124th, who was promoted to brigadier general recently and was ordered to the Infantry School for temporary duty.

With General Safay on the reviewing stand were Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School; Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of the post; and Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of the school. The latter three were promoted to their present positions at the same time that General Safay was advanced.

Several hundred officers, enlisted men and civilians attended the colorful parade and ceremony at 4 p. m.

General Safay has been in command of the 124th since it was called into active duty as a unit of the Florida National Guard in the winter of 1940. The regiment was brought to Fort Benning as demonstration troops for the Infantry School following its excellent showing in the maneuvers area.

9 Post Non-Coms Are Promoted To Warrant Officers

Nine prominent Fort Benning non-commissioned officers received word from Washington yesterday of their promotion to the rank of Warrant Officer, Junior Grade, in the Army of the United States.

Three of the men, all of whom were warranted in the general administrative classification, now hold important key positions on the staff at post headquarters. They are: Mr. Sgt. A. A. Poulin, chief clerk; Mr. Sgt. Marion J. Jammes, personnel sergeant major; and Tech Sgt. James D. Beck, chief clerk of the enlisted section.

Three members of the Medical Detachment at the station hospital were also included on the list of those promoted. They are Sergeants Fred Bogwell, Clive Crawford, and Marshall M. Tucker, all of whom were classified in medical supply administrative.

Paratroopers Get Jump In 3-Hour War Bond Sale

The 505th Parachute Infantry seems determined to do better than ever all the time.

It's the newest full strength regiment.

It has putshot all previous parachute scores.

It jumped 450 men one day last week, never injured one in any way.

And, on payday, in just three hours, the enlisted men bought $7,088 worth of defense bonds.

Uncle Sam Mails Millions To Doughboy Dependents

Warm clothing, food, medical attention for wives, children, mothers of America's fighting men are represented in 270,000 checks placed in the mails this week by Uncle Sam. Families of thousands of Benning men are affected.

Uncle Sam in this instance is the War Department which is mailing the checks totaling $19,-300,000 to relatives and dependents of the fighting men of America stationed on the far flung coasts of the world.

The checks, which are family allowance payments authorized under the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, are "worry-insurance" to the soldiers if the four lower grades of the Army who asked for the allotments to make sure their families are provided for in the months to come.

The mailing of the checks, which represent payments to approximately 405,000 relatives and dependents of soldiers, was started last Thursday and is expected to be completed by this Saturday, Oct. 10.

And this is only the beginning of the government's program to provide for those on the home front. The War Department disclosed that the number of checks mailed this week is approximately twice the number of checks mailed in September and that it is expected that twice as many payments will be made in November as in October.

Of the total number of checks being mailed, 135, 362 are first payments on family allowances which have been authorized for payment in October, and the remainder represents the October payment of allowances which were authorized and on which payments were made during September. The payments are made once a month on all family allowances.

A number of checks mailed in September have been returned to the Finance Department for correct address and are being held by the War Department in Washington until the correct address is supplied. Those entitled to family allowance payments are urged to report any change of address immediately. Such changes should be reported directly to the Allowance and Allotment Branch, 20th and B street, N. E., Washington, D. C.

The authority for these allotments is contained in the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942. Under this act, certain relatives and dependents of enlisted men in the four lower grades of the Army, privates through technicians fourth grade, and sergeants, are eligible for family allowances.

29th's Co. G Leading Way Buying Bonds

Allots $2000 War Securities

By PFC. MURRAY KAPLAN

The motto of the 29th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning is "We Lead the Way" and a perfect example of why the regiment has that slogan is Company G.

In addition to carrying out their part of the heavy demonstration schedule of the 29th, officers and enlisted men of Company G now lead the regiment in the purchase of war bonds.

A banquet celebrating the work of the company in the war bonds drive was held a few days ago in the company mess hall and was the occasion for a tremendous spurt in war bonds purchasing. First Sergeant Elbe Knowles "led the way" by subscribing for three bonds a month and many of the other officers and enlisted men immediately subscribed for even further allotments so that at the end of the rally, nearly 50 men had subscribed to at least one $25 bond a month and the total allotment for the company totaled more than $2,000.

The rally was handled by a committee of officers and men supervised by the company commander, Lt. J. W. Lawson. Entertainment featured numbers by the 29th Infantry dance band, songs by Pvt. Raymond J. Belsky and songs and dancing by Pvt. Hugh Sanderson. Lieutenant Smith, officer in charge of the war bonds drive, spoke briefly on the progress of the drive, particularly in Company G.

Wide Choice of Branches Given Young Volunteers

U. S. Seeks 18 And 19 Year-Olds For Expanding Army

When the younger brother, cousins and friends of U. S. Army soldiers decide to enlist for service they will be given a wide range of choice in branches of service, Fort Benning officials learned Monday.

The War Department has announced the opening of an intensified campaign for the recruiting of 18 and 19-year-old volunteers for the Army. Under new rulings recruits of 18 and 19 may now volunteer specifically for the Quartermaster Corps, the Ordnance Department, the Chemical Warfare Service, the Medical Department, and the Corps of Military Police, in addition to the previous range of choice between the Infantry, Calvary, Army Air Forces, Coast Artillery, Field Artillery, Armored Force, Engineers and the Signal Corps.

"This System of elective service is of vital importance to the Army today as a supplement to selective service," said Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, commanding general of the Service of Supply, "as it is not enough for our Army to be as big and well-equipped as the enemy's, it should also be as well-balanced in age groups." The Army invites American youths to answer that challenge.

Continuing he said, "the privilege of electing their branches of the service can safely be given to the men in the younger age group for precisely the reason for which the Army needs them—their adaptability and ready response to training."

Washington explained that in each of the five services newly added to the list, as well as the eight branches previously opened there are ample opportunities for advancement and a chance to apply for Officer Candidate School. No release from Selective Service Boards is needed in the case of volunteers 18 and 19 years old. The written consent of their parents, however, is required.

Benning Collects 6,000,000 Pounds Scrap In 6 Months

Army Helps Columbus In Scrap Drive

Fort Cooperates With Civilians In War Effort

Army trucks have been offered Columbus and Phenix City officials when they are needed to collect scrap iron in the salvage drives being conducted in those cities, Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton announced this week.

The offer is the result of the army's desire to cooperate with civilians in the war effort, both in the sale of bonds and the collection of scrap, it was said.

A squad of men in full uniform and with rifles and machine guns helped in a salvage rally Tuesday night at Phenix City.

Last week three planes from the 7th Observation squadron flew over Phenix City and bombarded the city with leaflets asking the city to buy war bonds. The quota of $15,000 set by the committee there was doubled and high praise was given the army for its part in the sale. The 7th Observation squadron is commanded by Major John K. Coughlan.

Recently the regular "Listen, It's Fort Benning" radio program was put on from the stage of the Bradley theater in Columbus as a part of a special show to raise bond sales.

Cards Sent To Soldiers

Are Absentee Ballot Applications

Thousands of post cards are being sent to the posts, camps and stations in the United States for use of soldiers in requesting the Secretary of State of the state of their residence for a ballot.

In order that men from states where there are two parties may vote in the general elections in November, and commanding officers have been furnished with the form of the card and a summary of Public Law 712, which provides means for members of the armed forces to cast their ballots.

Officers are to supervise the handling of ballot cast under the provisions of the law, as well as ballots for such state elections as may be provided for by the laws of the various states.

Each voter is required to attest to his eligibility and status, under oath, and any commissioned officer may administer such oath. Through the use of these cards, a direct contact is established between the soldier and his home state. Following receipt of his request for an official war ballot, this will be sent to him by the Secretary of State of his home state, together with instructions for voters and a sealed envelope in which to return the ballot.

After marking the war ballot a voter will seal it in the official envelope, then fill in and take the oath printed upon the envelope and mail it to the Secretary of State of his home state, who will transmit it to the appropriate election officials.

Nazi Firing Squad Foiled By U. S. Consul

Corporal Leo A. Szczetka of Chicago, Ill., can credit the last-minute intervention of an American consul as he was lined up for execution before a Nazi firing squad for the fact that he is now alive and well enough to attend Officer Candidate School here at Fort Benning.

Corporal Szczetka's escape from the Germans when they first invaded Poland back in 1939 was one of those Hairbreath Harry affairs. But that consul saved a valuable life for the United States of their residence for a ballot.

Post Record One Of Best In Country

Drive Continues As Steel Mills Call For More

The shortage of metal for guns and planes and tanks was no joke to the nation last week—neither was the amount of scrap metal already contributed to the nation by men of Fort Benning.

National attention was focused on our part in the scrap drive after preliminary estimates on the local drive supplied to Fourth Service Command and War Department headquarters in Atlanta and Washington disclosed the scope of the scrap and rubber drive at Fort Benning.

Maj. J. R. Johnson, in charge of the campaign, reported to Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general, this week that from April 1 to Sept. 30 a grand total of 6,663,844 pounds or metal—3,331 tons—had been collected at Fort Benning.

The amount collected, sold and shipped to dealers in that period was 5,125,544 pounds or 2,562 tons. Collected and still awaiting disposal are 1,138,300 pounds or 569 tons. Salvaged and returned to use were 400,000 pounds or 200 tons of metal. Workmen have also salvaged 164,416 pounds of rubber during the period.

It's the little things that count as well as the big things in the nation's scrap metal drive.

Fort Benning's scrap collectors reported to Maj. J. R. Johnson, in charge of the drive, that included in the "take" for this summer were 800 pounds of shaving cream and toothpaste tubes and 175 pounds of pocketknives.

Included in the "big things" was 76,000 pounds of British World War tank which will supply plenty of English armor plate, brass and aluminum when dismantled.

NATIONAL NEEDS GREAT

Even as officers and men at Fort Benning who are leading this drive were praised for these outstanding efforts, the tonnage collected since April at the post was dwarfed by national estimates of the amount of scrap metal needed this winter to keep production lines going at top speed.

Estimates showed that steel mills are consuming scrap metal at the staggering rate of two and one quarter million tons a month and that the government is striving to collect a "backlog" of 17,000,000 tons of scrap to see the mills through the winter months.

One of the largest contributors of scrap metal at Fort Benning is the "iron mine," the dump in which old metal on the post has been thrown away for two decades. Men under the supervision of Maj. Clarence A. Will, permanent field officer of the day, are gradually cleaning the huge dump of every nail and silver of metal thrown there by Fort Benning soldiers since 1922.

Old tanks, guns, fences, footlockers—in fact everything metal not actually in use—is disappearing as salvage crews scour the post. In discussing the thoroughness of the campaign, Major Johnson told of letters received from civilians asking why metal such as guard rails around parking areas near the post chapel have not been taken.

Fort to Go on Air In Blue Hook-up Tuesday

90 Stations To Pick Up 'Our Nation At War' From Post

The weekly radio program of "Our Nation At War" will be broadcast next week from Fort Benning over the nation wide Blue net work of 90 radio stations. The show will be heard Tuesday night, October 13, at 10:-15. Most of the program will be staged in Service Club No. 1 with two features originating at Hook range.

"Our Nation at War" is a cooperative non-commercial program sponsored jointly by the Blue network and the National Association of Manufacturers. Its purpose is to tell the public how American industry is producing the equipment needed for the men in the service, and likewise, how the army is using the equipment produced.

The program is presented from a different location each Tuesday. It originates generally from a service post or defense plant. It is a thirty minute show.

As a special feature of the program, an Officer Candidate who will receive his commission that day will tell the nation what it means to win gold bars in Uncle Sam's Army the hard way. He is Candidate William H. Curran, Jr., of St. Louis, Missouri. During his portion of the program he will talk over long distance telephone with his father who works in a defense plant producing shell castings.

The musical portion of the program will be furnished by the band from the Eleventh Armored Regiment, and by the Reception Center Chorus.

Colonel Stephen B. Massey, post quartermaster, will be interviewed during the program. He will explain how the quartermaster here uses the equipment produced by American industry.

Identification Bureau Is 'Rapid-Fire' Organization

Ersatz Sorority Pin

"It's all over but the shouting," says pretty Miss Isabelle Jenkins of the Fort Benning Ordnance Shop, as she pins on her new identification button. Miss Jenkins is one of the thousands of civilians working and living at the post who have already reported at the provost marshal's identification bureau to be photographed and fingerprinted. According to the military police however there are hundreds more still to report. This is one detail that G. I's did not have to worry about. (161st Signal Photographic Company.)

The nation's manufacturers can well afford to look to Fort Benning—and more specifically to the identification bureau of the provost marshal's office—for the technique of rapid-fire assembly lines.

In the last month, photographers, fingerprinters and clerks in the identification bureau have become mere shadows of their former selves, but they have photographed thousands of civilian employes and residents of the reservation.

It's all because of War Department orders that unidentified civilians can not enter the post without proper passes and identification buttons. Inasmuch as the buttons had to include pictures of the civilians, someone had to take the pictures with as little delay and confusion as possible. And that's where the provost marshal's office came in.

By figuring their "system" out in advance and by working like automats most of the day, the soldiers in the identification bureau have been able to turn out hundreds of photographed, fingerprinted and registered civilians every day.

1,420 IN ONE DAY

Their crowning achievement—and one which might be claimed a national record—was one day in late September when they photographed and registered 1,420 civilians. So fast did the staff work that the rate of persons handled through the office was almost two a minute. And, brother G. I., that's production.

Since that record day they handled 900 one other busy day and have maintained a daily average of from four to six hundred. Civilians, however, haven't minded because the staff at the bureau had the system so fool-proof that being identified, even though it was a matter of four different steps, took only a few moments.

The first step is to register, giving name, address, place of employment and other pertinent facts. The second step is to be fingerprinted and the third is to be photographed, a matter of seconds. The fourth, and last step, is merely receiving the button and the photograph and placing the two together to make a permanent pass.

Thousands of Fort Benning civilians have obtained their buttons well in advance of the deadline, but according to the military police—who should know—there are hundreds and hundreds still without passes.

The provost marshal's office continues to issue urgent requests at frequent intervals asking that civilians obtain permanent passes immediately to alleviate needless delay at the outposts where all incoming civilians have to be checked by the guards before entering the reservation.

formative stages, know what its capabilities are and intend to have a great deal to do with the history paratrooping is out to make.

ROUGH AND READY

As the executive officer, Lt. Col. Haugen pops up all over the training area. He's a rough and ready officer, who takes to coveralls with a relish. Once, on maneuvers, he bailed out with a crew of parachutists, avoided being caught for 36 hours, raised havoc with everything he could put his mitts on, travelled more than 110 miles in captured transportation, and finally gave himself up more to give his maneuver enemies a chance than anything else.

With the 1st Battalion is Major Arthur F. Gorham, its commanding officer. He has had many important parachute test assignments. A one-time West Point "B" team football player, used to taking the hardest knocks, he was sent with the ski paratroopers to Utah some months ago to learn how to jump in the mountains and snow, with runners underfoot.

The 2nd Battalion is the charge of Captain Freddie Wright, also from the military academy and a professional soldier.

Major Herbert F. Batchellor, who recently returned from a powder-smelling hitch as an observer in England, commands the 3rd Battalion. The Major knows something of the task ahead by seeing operations of the enemy first hand.

COLORS PRESENTED

Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, commanding general of the 1st Parachute Infantry Brigade, as the first act of its kind since he was put in command, presented the colors to the 505th at a special ceremonial parade recently at the Fiske Range field. He was generous in his praise of the unit and its showing both on the march in review and for its marksmanship with its weapons.

But, the goal of the 505th isn't pretty marching, or pretty range scores; it's to get ready to jump and fight for record—and to that end, it is progressing rapidly.

Gliders will be used in the future to provide a silent approach for our Leathernecks. Large gliders will carry 24 fully-armed Marines.

Post Engineer Made Colonel

Bain Has One Of Fort's Heavy Jobs

Lt. Col. Albert J. Bain, post engineer at Fort Benning, has been promoted to the rank of full colonel by the War Department.

Colonel Bain, who has been on active duty in the Corps of Engineers, since March, 1941, holds one of the most responsible positions at Fort Benning. He is charged with the maintenance and repair of all buildings and structures and the procurement of labor and material for repairs. His other duties include road maintenance, flood control and mosquito and inspect control, as well as maintenance and operation of the domestic water system and the procurement of electricity, gasoline and other commodities.

Colonel Bain, who came to Fort Benning from Atlanta, Ga., where he was on duty with the Utilities Section of the War Department, was a consulting and structural engineer in Chicago, Ill., for many years before he came on active Army duty.

His military career started in 1918 when he was commissioned a captain in the Corps of Engineers. He joined the Officers Reserve Corps in 1920 when he went to Chicago to reside.

In addition to his other duties [illegible] at Fort Benning, Colonel Bain is Fish and Game Commission.

scrap today, know where the metal that's in sight is—and can estimate how much there is. Its the metal in the homes, the unseen dumps, the thousands of places where scrap has been discarded and forgotten that we want to get at first and estimate. By getting at that and then estimating how much metal we have in plain sight in our cities and forts we can tell exactly how much to plan on," the major pointed out.

"It's that 'hidden treasure such as the thousands of miles of trolley track buried under concrete and asphalt in hundreds of our cities that we're after now," he concluded.

So the drive goes on at Fort Benning—in Georgia—throughout the 48 states. Campaign officials only have to point out that it's the metal discovered today that will be the guns of the Allied nations next year to gain 100 per cent cooperation from the nation's millions.

The recently completed "wishing Well" of the First Battalion is proving very popular, judging from the number of pennies that have been thrown into the pool. It seems that anytime a Gator wants a wish to come true, so the legend goes, all he has to do is drop a penny in the Wishing Well, close his eyes, and pray to the celestial fathers. The particularly zealous believers sometimes drop in two, three, or even as much as five pennies in the Well, hoping for their dreams to become realities. The particular wishes of most cent-tossers are of the "hope I get another stripe" or "oh, for a furlough variety. To date, more than 300 coppers have been taken from the bottom of the Well. This has been invested in goldfish and water plants to grace the pool.

Dog's best friend is man . . . Giving the old cliche a new twist, we come to the story we've got to tell about "Boots," the canine companion of Company M. Three weeks ago she went to the land beyond. However, several days before her demise, Sergeant Stork presented her with a litter of six young 'uns. How can the pups survive now that Boots is gone—was the question of the day. The problem perplexed the M-men until Sgt. William Barber, who has since been renamed "Mom," suggested weaning the pups from a bottle. A garrison hat, quickly passed around, supplied the needed cash for six bottles and a nipple . . . and now the pups are well on their way to becoming dogs . . . The pups have already been named Adolph I, Benito I, Hirohito I, Adolph II, Benito II, and Hirohito II. . .It's been reported from Company M that the dogs don't seem to mind being called by their predecessors' names. But, after all, they're still too young to know any better.

We hope that this was due to skill on the part of our gun crews, not luck.

Relatives and friends of soldiers stationed at Fort Jackson, S. C., have been asked by that post's authorities to refrain from sending knitted woolen garments to the men stationed there. The mild climate of the post makes the extra garments unnecessary. The temperature seldom falls below 27 degrees above zero.

It is suggested that relatives and friends who want to do their bit for national defense by knitting, send their products to the American Red Cross or to the Bundles for American organization. These groups will forward them to soldiers in such spots as Iceland or Alaska where there is really a need for the woolen garments.

Girl Scouts At Fort Organize

First Meeting Is Slated Tuesday

Girl Scouts and Brownies turned out in such unexpected numbers for registration Friday in the Post School auditorium that pencils of the registrars flew furiously to record all the names, and the post photographer struggled valiantly to include everyone in his picture. Thirty-two Brownies, there were, and sixty-one Girl Scouts, all eager to begin while enthusiasm is high and the weather fine.

Two leaders to direct the activities of the Brownies are Miss Vanita Strain, who is entering her third year in Brownie leadership, and Mrs. I. P. Clark, also a trained leader, who has volunteered to work with the older girls, as well, in teaching handicrafts. Their first meeting will be held Friday this week, October 9, at 2:45 in the Girl Scout cabin. Games and fun will be the chief occupation of the afternoon.

The high school (intermediate) girl scouts will hold their first meeting at the cabin next Tuesday, Oct. 13, at 5 o'clock, when they will plan their activities for the coming year. Announcement of their leader will be made later.

TRAINED LEADER

Apparently the post has only to express a wish for trained workers for them to appear and offer their services. Mrs. Eric Molitor, newcomer to the post, is a new addition to the council. Trained in scout work, she held active leadership for several years at Fort Leavenworth and in Washington.

Other new leaders who responded to the appeal made at the first meeting of the Woman's Club are Mrs. A. E. McKenney, assistant troop leader, who will give instruction in cooking and sewing; Mrs. J. A. Heintges, who has volunteered to take a troop and who has had a course in occupational therapy and will teach leathercraft to girl scouts; Mrs. W. T. Ryder, who has offered to take a troop and will also assist all troops interested in the development of dramatics; Mrs. R. L. Rowan, who will act as assistant leader; and Mrs. Paul Hamilton, a trained leader who has actively participated in scout work for the last three years, and who has volunteered to act as a substitute when the need arises.

Old Campaigner Trains at Fort For More Action

Serving as a lieutenant in the Chinese army fighting the Japanese and as a corporal in the Spanish Loyalist army in the Spanish Civil war is part of the history of a soldier of fortune who is now a mess sergeant in one of the Officer Candidate companies in the Second Student Training Regiment.

He is Sgt. Edward Carter of Co. B of the Service Battalion of that Regiment.

Though Sgt. Carter was born in the United States, his mother was a native of India, and he received his early schooling in that country. He then went to the Military College of China, and upon graduation was commissioned a lieutenant in the Chinese army which was already battling the little Japs. After about six months at the front he was discharged because of his age.

He then returned to the U. S., but got right back in the wars with the Loyalists in Spain. His division was pushed back into France, where he escaped and again returned to America. He joined the United States Army in 1940.

Besides having barrage balloons set for protection of the Panama Canal, there is also a "killer-net," a mesh of steel cables extending across the canal which would enmesh any plane swooping down to drop a torpedo.

Full-Blooded Cherokee at Fort Slated to Graduate Next Week

Heritage to Make Jap Tactics Pie For Parachutist

"Jumping Warrior" could well be the name of this young Indian brave, Private Henry F. Carter, of Pembroke, N. C., who is at present training to become a paratrooper. At the Parachute School, Fort Benning, Ga., Carter, a full-blooded Cherokee, is learning how to swoop down from the skies to "axe the Axis".

And although the axing will be done with a tommy-gun rather than a tomahawk, much of the tactics used by his ancestors should come in handy, when this soldier goes into action.

The Carter family, which is only one generation off the reservation, has two other sons in the Army. One of these is in the Army Air Force, and another is with an anti-tank outfit, somewhere in the Pacific.

Private Carter has been in the army since 1939, and once before applied for the jumping branch, but was not allowed to transfer until recently. In another week he will graduate, a qualified parachutist, and hopes soon to have an Axis scalp hanging from his belt.

Sidwell Named MP Chieftan

Fills Temporarily Tolve's Position

1st Lt. Wheeler Sidwell, assistant provost marshal at Benning, has been appointed acting provost marshal to fill the office relinquished last week by Capt. Ralph A. Tolve. Capt. Tolve is leaving the post shortly for duty at an unannounced place.

Captain Tolve only recently returned from a course of study at the Military Police School at Fort Ogiethorpe, Georgia, and previous to that had considerable experience in military police work.

A native of Nashua, New Hampshire, Captain Tolve graduated from Tech High School in Atlanta and from Auburn University in 1935. He traveled and studied in Europe previous to his college study and after his graduation, coached football at Ogiethorpe University where he received a B. S. degree in education. He later completed a course of study at the John Marshal Law School in Atlanta and in 1937 entered the Georgia State Patrol under Lt. Col. John C. Carter, a former Fort Benning officer.

Called to active duty at Fort Benning in September, 1940, Captain Tolve was transferred from the Field Artillery to the Corps of Military Police and was assigned to duty as assistant provost marshal.

Captain Tolve was active in athletics in college, playing three years of football with the college and winning the Southern Collegiate Boxing championship in 1936.

Boys Activities

By MAJOR VIRGIL NEY

Cubbing gives your boy—opportunities to do interesting things—games, handicrafts, nature lore, collections, stunts, hobbies—in his own back yard—with sympathetically trained leaders and natural boy companions.

Opportunities to do things for others (a vital part of good citizenship)—to take responsibility and find satisfaction in carrying his share of the load.

Opportunities to find more pleasure in and around his home and neighborhood.

Cubbing is a year-round, home-centered program of boy-action, boy-achievement, boy-health and boy-helpfulness developed through much scientific research and testing, by the Boy Scouts of America.

It is a part of the general Scout Program and has been developed for parents of 9, 10 and 11-year-old boys to use with and for their sons. It makes good use of a period in your boy's life that might otherwise be left to pure chance. It gives your boy something to work for—something to look forward to—and the program is as American as the American home.

The Cub learns to respect his God, his country, his home and his fellow men. The ideals and activities of Cubbing contribute in the best possible way toward the battle of life and the fullest appreciation of American citizenship.

Pack No. 1, Fort Benning, cordially invites all boys 7-11 to join. Meetings are held each Friday at 5:15 p. m. in the Scout cabin south of Russ pool. Major Ney especially invites interested mothers and fathers to serve as Den Mothers and Dads.

History of Benning Broadcasts Unfolds Story of Hard Work

Practice On Local Shows Made 'Cheers' A Sensation

"Quiet! We're on the air."

These words have a familiar ring around Fort Benning this fall as post soldiers become increasingly "air-minded."

And apparently Fort Benning is "on the beam" with the rest of the Army camps in the nation in promoting and advancing radio work for soldiers, because a report from Lt. Col. E. M. Kirby, chief of the Bureau of Public Relations radio branch, in the current issue of the national radio magazine BROADCASTING tells of 600 different radio shows the nation's army camps are producing.

The development of radio work at Fort Benning from virtually nothing to the present schedule of nine programs a week is an interesting story, a tale of hard work and one hundred per cent cooperation from radio executives, post officials, service club hostesses, and most important of all, from soldier-entertainers who more than once have gone without meals to perform over the air.

The success of Fort Benning's radio work was best demonstrated early in September when the Columbia Broadcasting System's "Cheers from the Camps" program, sponsored by General Motors, originated from Fort Benning and became one of the best soldier-programs of 1942.

Professional radio men who came to the post to direct the hour-long program said that the wealth of talent available for the show was undoubtedly due to the radio set-up at the post which had uncovered radio talent and given soldiers an opportunity to "polish up" microphone technique lost through months of work on the drill fields and in the maneuver areas.

FIRST STUDIO

The development of Fort Benning's four big radio programs has rather a Horatio Alger from "rags to riches" aspect. When early in April, the first regular Fort Benning newscast went on the air over nearby WRBL in Columbus, for a modest ten minutes, the "newscaster" broadcast from a noisy little back room, formerly used as a Turkish bath, located in the post gymnasium only about six feet from the usually clearly-audible showers.

The program was a success and on June 1 the newscasters moved from their Turkish bath studio into the new sound-proof studio on the porch of Service Club 1 on the post proper from where most of the programs have emanated since that time. The new studio was constructed through the cooperation of General Walter S. Fulton, commanding general; Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer; Maj. A. H. Veasey, Service Club officer, and Capt. Russell J. Hammargren, public relations officer, who has supervised the development of all of the radio work at the post. Lieutenant John W. Myers, assistant public relations officer, is now directly in charge of radio talent appearing on the "Fort Benning on the Air" newscast each night at 6.

On the first day of the broadcast, the news of Fort Benning was read by the then-Corporal Carl F. Neu of the Quartermaster detachment. Since that time, Neu, now a staff sergeant, has never missed a broadcast of "Fort Benning on the Air," which now is heard from 6 to 6:20 and features ten minutes of soldier talent in addition to the news.

STUDIO EQUIPMENT

The presentation of talent from the new studio is facilitated by a control board, three microphones, a piano and other equipment needed for broadcasting. Soldier-artist from all areas of the post have appeared on the program in the last six months.

Since the inception of the program, more than a dozen national and internationally-known personalities have been interviewed during the spot. In one week-end, Neu interviewed Mary Ann Mercer, radio star; Ted Husing, sports commentator and announcer, and Lt. Col. Arne Dahl, chief of the Norwegian Mission to the United States.

Other important people who have appeared on the program include Maj. William Slater, chief of the Public Relations planning and liaison branch and a former national sports announcer; Mischa Auer, movie star; Ronald Williams, correspondent for the Toronto, Canada, Star; Earl Poorbaugh, war correspondent of the Baltimore News-Post, and many other officials and dignitaries.

There are two half-hour broadcasts at the present time. "Listen, It's Fort Benning" is presented every Monday night at 8:05 from the various service clubs on the post. In addition to featuring soldier talent, this program is planned to present a serious side of the Army. Prominent officers of the post are interviewed about their work and other phases of military life are depicted in sketches and by narrators.

SERIOUS PHASE

The program was started by John Clarke, former co-ordinator of Fort Benning broadcasts for WRBL, but since his absence the work has been carried on by Sergeants Jimmie Wicker, H. E. Whittemore and Neu, of the special service and public relations offices. In all of the programs, officials endeavor to present some serious worthy phase of the army and army life in order that every broadcast might have a purpose other than purely entertainment.

Two other popular programs are the Quartermaster Quarter-Hour every Wednesday night at 7:45 and the Reception Center Chorus Half Hour, a 30-minute program of spirituals sung by the highly-regarded chorus of the Fort Benning Reception Center every Wednesday from 9 to 9:30 p. m. The Quartermaster Quarter Hour is featured by interviews with the post quartermaster, Col. Stephen B. Massey, and present a varied picture of the work of the Quartermaster Corps.

The Monday night variety show "Listen, It's Fort Benning," presented from the main lounges of the service clubs, always attracts a capacity soldier audience.

A story about Fort Benning radio would not be complete without a mention of Corporal Bill Carrick of the Headquarters Detachment, 4th Service Command. Carrick is an accomplished pianist and when the officers and enlisted men in charge of the program become "stuck" just before the broadcast without an accompanist due to the late arrival or other delay of the scheduled performer, Carrick is dragged from the showers, the mess hall and even from buses going to town long enough to fill in. On at least two occasions, Carrick has walked into the studio and played without music, a few moments after he arrived.

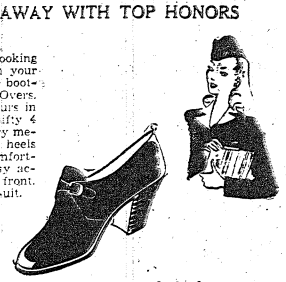
Funniest incident occurred just last week when four-foot Billy Curtis, Hollywood midget, showed up at the studio for a scheduled interview. Billy, however, was late and Neu was already on the air with the news when the midget arrived. The windows in the studio are about five feet high and Curtis tried frantically, without success, to attract the attention of men in the studio. It wasn't until one of the soldiers watching the broadcast lifted Curtis up to the window that the attention of Neu was attracted and the door was opened for Curtis to come in the studio.

HUMORORS INCIDENT

The public relations and special service officers are always looking for new talent to present over the air. Officers and men possessing any talent, or knowing of other men with talent are asked to communicate with either of these two officers at post headquarters.

Lt. Meyer Is Made Captain

Promotion of 1st Lt. Floyd R. Meyer of Lincoln, Neb., to the rank of captain in the Army of the United States was announced today at headquarters of the Second Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School.



Capt. Meyer was called to active duty as a Reserve Officer in September of 1941 and came direct to the Infantry School where he took a three-month course in officer training, before being assigned to the Second Regiment, a unit engaged exclusively in the training of Infantry Officer Candidates. He has been serving as adjutant of the 5th Battalion of the Regiment.

Lieutenant James W. Begbie, Jr., Salvage Officer of Camp Blanding, Florida, has replaced the wooden name plate on his desk with another which fellow officers presented to him. It reads "MOE THE JUNKMAN."

Its purpose is to remind all that pass that scrap metal and rubber are needed for the planes, tanks, guns and bullets which are vital to victory.

The Church and the War

One of the soldier's main sports, officers not excluded, is the time-honored "bull-session" in the course of which ideas are exchanged. Oftimes these sessions are stimulating and inspire a flow of discussion which proves of great value. It is part of the soldier's education.

In a recent such session, a group of officers here at Benning found themselves weighing the importance of religion in the present world conflagration. One officer made the statement that "the Church is a dead issue in this war." Feeling that this layman's viewpoint should be answered by a man of God, we asked Chaplain Frank M. Thompson to consider the question and have a chaplain attempt to give a satisfactory answer to the question raised by the Benning officer. As a result the Rev. Mr. Earl F. Fowler, travelling for the Presbyterian Church and now attached to the First Presbyterian Church of Columbus, wrote the following reply.

My attention has been called to a statement that "the Church is a dead issue in this war." I understand an officer is so quoted. Now I doubt that this statement was a considered, serious expression. Quite frequently people make a statement to sponsor thought and expression on the matter. And I am glad for the opportunity this statement offers me to express my personal opinion in this matter.

I repeat, though I am the official representative of the Presbyterian (Northern) Church, U. S. A. in the Presbyterian Service Center in Columbus, my statement is entirely my own view in the matter.

First of all I would like to point out the fact that this country was founded by those who sought a place where they could worship God according to the dictates of conscience. Our very basic theory of government is that each and all possess the right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." So we may rightly say that the incentive which brought our forefathers to these shores has been incorporated in the theory of government. Someone has said: "The principles of democracy are best expressed by the principles of Christianity, and the corporate voice of Christianity is the Church." The very roots of our country were found in the Church.

Secondly, I would like to point out the fact that the leadership of our country has been outstanding and noteworthy, yet in nearly every instance these leaders have been dominated by principles the Church has voiced through the centuries. We have been proud of our national slogan: "In God Is Our Trust." We have been reminded in every generation that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," that it is "in Him we live, and move, and have our being," that "if God be for us" it matters little "who can be against us." So the Church not only contributed to the very founding of our country but has contributed guiding principles which have seen our country progress through the years as a growing influence and power in world affair.

How, you say, does this concern the statement "the Church is a dead issue in this war?" Because the very foundation stone upon which our country was established is being undermined. Because there are those who deny the principle of "freedom of worship," as well as all the other phases of true freedom. Because there are those who claim the right to deny such freedom to certain classes, certain races, certain peoples. Because the very root of individualistic rights is being uprooted by those who invest themselves with the right to deprive others of their rights. Because we need to realize that our land is not free from all responsibility in the issue now being decided. We are guilty of gross neglect, and utter indifference to the rise of these stifling influences of democracy. We have turned our heads, like the priest and Pharisee in the Parable of the Good Samaritan, disclaiming responsibility for the ruthless conquest of Manchuria, the rape of Ethiopia, (not to mention Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg, France, Poland, Austria, Hungary, Jugo Slavia, Greece, and all the others). Not only did we see China invaded and bleeding, but we sent the weapons to Japan to help accomplish the crime. This definitely is not "righteousness" but "a sin that is a reproach to the people." So other sins could be enumerated. The function of the Church is to keep the need of repentance before the minds of the people, to remind the nation it cannot pray 'God bless America' until America first comes to 'bless God,' and walk in righteousness before Him. To try to win the war by force without recognizing our fault is like treating a sore with salve while letting the disease run rampant through the body. The Church must not be a dead issue. The Church must not be pushed to the background, for it reminds us of our beginnings, of our growth as an outgrowth of a right relationship with Him.

Our Command-in-chief, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, has pointed out the fact that we must not only "win the war" but "the peace that follows it." Can a just and abiding peace come apart from a right attitude toward God and our fellowmen? Is the peace which follows this war to be after the pattern of the so-called peace in France? Are we to let our emotions rule the final draft of peace, or cool, Christ-like judgment . . . and on the basis that all the peoples of the earth deserve the right to live under a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people?"

The Church is not a dead issue in this war, for the Church has as its great responsibility the constant presentation of the principles of Christ . . . for they are the best expression of the basic principles of democracy. The voice of the Church must not wane nor die "until the kingdoms of this world become a Kingdom under God and in Christ."

Personally I am convinced that the ideologies represented in the totalitarian powers aim to stifle not only the right of the people to rule themselves, but the right to worship and work according to the dictates of conscience. This vitally concerns the Church. This is in utter disregard of the principles of Christ, which are the guiding principles for the Church. I can understand how others may feel that this is not a fair indictment of the Axis powers, but I cannot understand how anyone can say that the Church is such a dead issue it needs not examine the possibility! That which is dead cannot examine that which gives life, and the Church more than ever needs to be alive as an issue.

If I thought the Church was a dead issue in this war I certainly would not have come to Columbus to help out in this time of great responsibility. Nor would I even raise my voice to speak in the pulpit or through my pen. My Christ said: "I came that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly." The war has not cancelled that statement, it merely emphasizes more than ever the need. Christianity and the Church were born in hard times for people having a hard time. And the tragedy of the situation is that the Touchstone of the world's need has been given in Christ and His teachings . . . and they go unheeded.

Preserve the Franchise

There was a notice in this week's daily bulletin stating that Headquarters, Fort Benning was in receipt of application for registrants and war ballots for the state of New York.

A rather simple statement, yet packed with significance. Here we are fighting to preserve our right to vote, to speak, to read and write what we think is true, and yet we still have the duty to keep using those rights. If we for one minute close our presses down, shut the doors of our churches, or fail to keep voting and electing the proper men to office, today's soldiers will march home to an empty victory. There can be no coasting in a democracy . . . it's fight all the way.

Dr. Pennington Haile, prominent Harvard professor and authority on international affairs, speaking on the same subject here recently said, "In earlier periods of history, it was more clearly understood than it has been in our time, that any right which a man possessed meant a corresponding duty."

So soldiers, let's take a hand in helping to preserve our rights. Exercise your privileges even though you are in the army . . . send home your ballot, go to the church of your choice on Sunday, and fight like Hell . . . we're really going to win this war.

Below is a list of the capital cities and the secretaries. Drop a note to yours right now and ask for an absentee ballot.

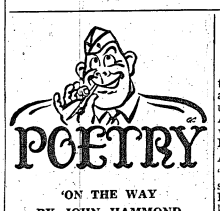
America, Hope of the World



(Every American should read this—read it slowly and absorb its substance.)

"There was a dream . . . that men could one day speak the thoughts of their own choosing. There was a hope . . . that men could one day stroll through streets at evening unafraid. There was a prayer . . . that each could speak to his own God—in his own church — That dream, that hope, that prayer became . . . AMERICA! Great strength, youthful heart, vast enterprise, hard work made it so. Now that same America is the dream . . . the hope . . . the prayer of the world. Our freedom—its dream. Our strength—its hope. Our swift race against time—its prayer! We must not fail to share our freedom with it—afterwards . . . KEEP SINGING, KEEP WORKING, AND FIGHT FOR AMERICA!"

—Bulletin—Federal Wholesale Druggists Assoc.

"If winter comes, can spring be far behind?" is oft quoted by those who long for the time when 'spring comes back with days so fair," but we are "cold weather" babies. We were born during a December blizzard, and can't wait for the continued cool mornings of an early November day, and the comforting warmth of those good ole O. D. woolens. For even in the fall and winter, Benning is beautiful.

Note: To Adolph Shicklegruber Alias Adolph, "Butcher" Hitler. There's going to be a reckoning some sweet day:

You will surely shake and shiver
And your "tuck" mustache will quiver
For ten million fighting yanks are "on the way."

You have raved, and stormed, and ranted,
Cursed, and fumed, and groaned, and panted
And you're vowed that o'er the earth you'd hold full sway!
But you underestimated all the men by whom you're hated.
Now ten million fighting yanks are 'on the way."

One hundred thirty million soldiers,
Sailors, and civilians
Are determined that sweet peace shall come to stay!
That peace, liberty, and laughter shall exist forever after.
So, ten million fighting yanks are "on the way."

In this great God-fearing nation
With perfect organization.
Our plants are running smoothly night and day;
Making guns and ammunition for humanity's great mission
Of the fearless, fighting yanks now "on the way."

From production lines extending, planes and
Tanks, and trucks are wending.
And our troops are getting tougher every day;
On land, sea, in air, they're "clicking"
And preparing for your licking
By the hordes of fighting yanks now "on the way."

We're demanding retribution for unlawful executions
And we'll soon have all your heathen beasts at bay;
There'll be no quarter granted 'till your cohorts all are "planted"
By the dashing, slashing yanks now "on the way."

You've defied all law and order, and reveled in wanton slaughter,
But, for all your heinous crimes you'll surely pay;
Soon, for mercy you'll be shrieking and a refuge vainly seeking
From the grim, determined yanks now "on the way."

'Cross the peaceful Cliffs of Dover—with the strife of battle over—
The sun will shine upon your lonely grave;
May there be a great rejoicing and a cry of victory voicing—
What I would do . . . I would get my "coffee ands" at one of the USO Clubs in town . . . No kidding . . . Free coffee and do-nuts served hot, just the way you like them.

Do you want to get married? . . . The S. A.-USO in Columbus will gladly help you do so! . . . That is they will arrange the wedding but they will not find the mate. . . . To prove that I'm not spoofing you . . . The last couple to be married with the help of the Club are Lt. and Mrs. Joe Scott. . . . Gosh, I wonder how it feels to get married and receive your gold bars both on the same day. . . . In a way it's the same thing. . . . You wear one set of bars and you're behind the others . . . But all joking aside congratulations to you, Lieutenant, and I hope you have a good station.

Speaking about the SA-USO Club in Columbus reminds me that there some new members of the club that deserves a few lines. . . . They are Adjutant and Mrs. Thomas Evans . . . the new directors of the club . . . The Adjutant is an old hand at this type of work, having served as an officer in the Salvation Army more than 14 years . . . A native of England, the Adjutant has been in the SA since he was knee high to a grasshopper. For those of you that don't know . . . In the Salvation Army, the grade of Adjutant is intermediary between a captain and a major.

Now for bits of news around the different clubs . . . The first of a series of Choral concerts at the 9th St. USO went over with a bang yesterday . . . Playing to a capacity house Scheckman and Mrs. Lamb stole the show . . . Get your recordings for home at the SA-USO Club in Columbus. . . . Talk a letter home . . . Their motto is "You make 'em—we mail 'em" . . . Informal dancing and games at the YWCA-USO for all "drop-in" soldier guests tonight . . . Now that cooler weather is here, don't forget to hire your bikes at the same club . . . The Army and Navy YWCA-USO Club has announced that there will be a special booth at the Chattahoochee Valley Fair in Grounds, Findler Arts Building, by 3 p. m. Saturday, October 10th. . . . I hope that this is a scoop. . . . If it is, my life ambition will have been realized.

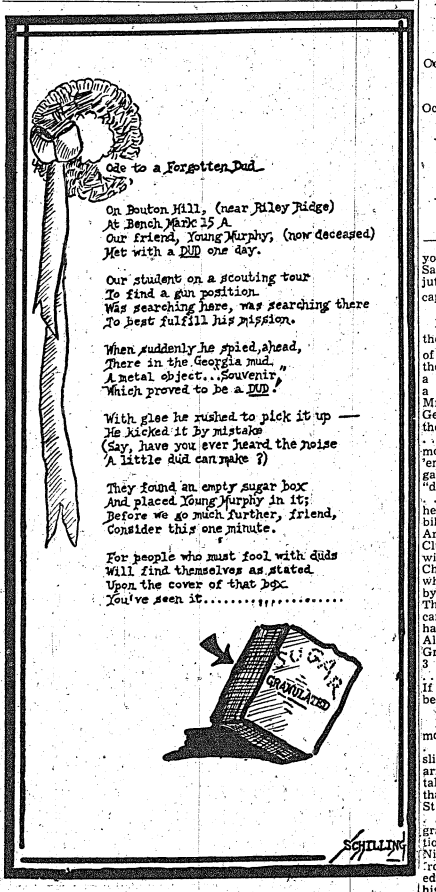
I almost forgot to tell about the most important item of the week. . . . Of course, this column is slightly prejudiced being that it arranged the show . . . What I'm talking about is the jam session that was held down at the 9th St USO club this past Monday. . . . A real Harlem night program was presented in conjuction with the regular Cabaret Night show . . . Those hep-cats from Service Club No. 4 furnished the music and Sgt. Irons and his boys did the rest.

USO Presents



The first thing on the calendar this week is a few remembrances . . . Don't forget to pick up you free duoats for the Three Arts League opening concert, which will star Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan opera contralto . . . And the Frank Buck show, with "Bring-em-back-alive" in person, showing technicolor pictures of his lates adventures. . . . These tickets can be had at the Information desk of the 100-9th St. USO . . . Miss Kaskas will be here October 12 and Frank Buck, nine days later . . . There are only five hundred tickets per show for service men, so get them early . . . It's first come first served.

Say, fellows, what do you do when you get up on Sundays . . . That is if you spent the night before in Columbus . . . I know

While above, the Flag of Freedom proudly waves.

So good-bye now Schickelgruber—
And go play this on your tuba
For your dirty, rotten soul you'd better pray.
When to earth peace is returning deep in hell you will be burning
For ten million fighting yanks are "on the way."

I didn't have a chance to see any baseball games this summer, but I've had to sit in plenty of bleachers during the past few weeks, and I am now suffering from an occupational malady known as the Benning Bleacher Bulge.

Much of our instruction is in the field, and for our lectures, which are sandwiched in between practical work, we are herded into these bleachers. Most of them are of such size that they accommodate 100 men easily—but unfortunately for us, there are over 200 in our class, which complicates matters somewhat, as you no doubt can visualize by a little simple mathematics.

An eminent local authority has this to say about the matter: "The malformation is caused by prolonged sitting on unresilient objects, such as wooden planks. It can be acquired in a very short period of time, and over a period of, say 90 days, extremely advanced cases may develop. It can be further aggravated by attempting to crowd into spaces of less than 22 inches.

Yep, sitting on those hard seats for hours on end, crowded between two burly ex-top sergeants, has really done things to my figure. It's a very sad "seatuation!"

I almost wish I were in the cavalry, with all those nice, soft horses to sit on.

I ordered my officer's uniform the other day. Nope, I'm not THAT confident that I'll make the grade here, but it is necessary to place the order early, to make sure it will be ready when—and if—I graduate.

But I had my fingers crossed—like the spinster who buys her wedding dress before her boy friend pops the question!

However, if I should leave here in advance, I won't be stuck with the stuff. The regimental authorities, with keen foresight, have made arrangements whereby a candidate who does not graduate is not financially liable for the order.

So that makes at least two people who hope I graduate—my mother, and the guy who sold me the uniform.

And judging from the cost of the thing, the brass shortage must have forced the manufacturers to use solid gold buttons instead.

The government allots us a specified amount for our duds, and anything over that, we have to pay for ourselves. I almost made it, but ran out as I got down to the socks. I wonder if the general would object to a barefooted second lieutenant!

I will be "on my toes," at least, and he should like that.

Defense workers, with their time-and-a-half and double-time for overtime, will be interested to know that we get double-time here for our regular work. In fact, we double-time all over the place.

One day this week, for instance, we double-timed over the bayonet assault course; then we double-timed over the obstacle course; then we double-timed the parade ground. As a rest in between double-times, we had calisthenics and what is coyly termed "body-contact" sports.

That assault course, incidentally, is a cutie. It's a sort of a steeplechase affair, but instead of horses carrying us, we carry rifles with bayonet attached. We have to jump or climb over fences, jump into or hurdle trenches and shellholes, and generally ramble all over some very rough landscape, sticking our bayonets into straw dummies enroute.

By the time I finished the course, some of the straw ones were in better shape than I was!

Mail-Call

Public Relations Officer
Fort Benning, Georgia.
Sir:

"Silence is occasionally Golden" or "Where ignorance is Bliss 'tis folly to be wise." However, this may or may not be a rarefied occasion for the preliminaries of "Praise and Criticism."

Prior to our observing a newspaper published by the Army's most complete Post, we (Our Gang) thought all the brains were in civilian life (we apologize). Most of us were too busy residing how Itzcatl joined a revolt in 1427 and broke the Atzcapotzalcan and Tepanec Powers, or, how Bethoven composed his "Great 5th" and "Eroica," or even how Richard Wagner was exiled from Germany where he composed perhaps his greatest Romantic works, the ever beloved "Tristan and Isolde."

The above is just a prelude to the following: It is eminently logical that the Poem appearing on the Edit' Page Thurs. Oct. 1, 1942, "Bayonet," "The New York Times of Army Newspapers," entitled "Wouldst Thou" is far superior to any ordinary poem we have ever read. As original and as ever loving as Sgt. Joyce Kilmers' "TREES" (Sgt. Kilmer, most unfortunately was killed in action with the Immortal 80th Division in World War No. I). We all are memorizing "Wouldst Thou" in its entirely and plan to use it in a proposal of Marriage (Take nerve for the latter, pal).

Please reveal this Benning "Unknown Soldiers" identity in the very next issue (I am sure he wouldn't mind) and may he continue to write poems that are equally as good.

"The Classical Gang,"
28th Infantry.

Dear Sir:

Is the Infantry Minded Fort aware that there are more than a thousand Air Force men stationed on the far west corner of the Reservation. That the majority of the activity of the paratroopers is carried on in the air, which it should be, and that no mention of these pilots, who fly day and night, and still more if the job requires, has been made in the Benning Herald?

It's amazing how well the Air Force and the Infantry get along. That should make a good story.

Yours, til you here otherwise,
Bill.

Soldiers' Radio Likes, Dislikes Surveyed by W. D.

Serials, Operas, And Hilby-Billy Music Not So Hot, G. I.'s Say

The average soldier prefers radio programs of dance music, news broadcasts, comedy programs and sports events, and doesn't care too much for serial dramas, operas, symphonies or hill-billy music, according to a survey conducted in Army camps throughout the United States by the Research Branch, Special Service Division, Fort Benning was included in the survey.

Approximately one soldier out of six owns a radio, the survey disclosed, and slightly more than half of the men listen to a program at some time during a typical weekday. Forty per cent said there are certain programs they would like to hear but cannot, the chief reasons being that there is no radio convenient, that programs come through when they are unable to listen, or that they have difficulty in getting the stations that carry them.

For some reason, more soldiers listen on Thursday than on any other weekday, and of those who listen on this day, 26 per cent tune in on morning programs, 29 per cent during midday hours and 52 per cent in the evening.

POPULAR HOURS

The listening peak on a typical weekday morning is from 6:15 to 7:00 o'clock; at midday from 12:15 to 12:45, and in the evening from 7:00 to 8:30 o'clock. The majority listen to programs in their barracks.

Popular music, sweet and dance music, is the favorite program, the survey showed, with 87 per cent of the soldiers questioned expressing a like for this type of broadcast, 3 per cent expressing dislike and 10 per cent expressing no opinion.

Second in popularity are news broadcasts, reports and comments on current happenings, liked by 86 per cent, disliked by 3 per cent and 11 per cent expressing no preference.

Comedy programs, gags, skits and funny plays are liked by 85 per cent, disliked by 4 per cent, and 11 per cent voiced no opinion.

Sports broadcasts, news and reviews of athletic activities are liked by 69 per cent, disliked by 10 per cent, and no opinion from 21 per cent.

Variety programs, offering several different kinds of entertainment, are favored by 66 per cent, disliked by 9 per cent, and no opinion from 25 per cent.

Popular music of the swing type, hot scat and jive, are approved by 62 per cent, disapproved by 16 per cent, and 22 per cent expressed no opinion.

RADIO PLAYS

Radio plays, complete in one broadcast, are also approved by 62 per cent, disliked by 13 per cent, and 25 per cent voiced no opinion.

Old familiar music, ballads, folk songs and tunes of long ago, are liked by 57 per cent, disliked by 15 per cent, and no opinion from 28 per cent.

Quiz programs are also liked by 57 per cent, disliked by 17 per cent and no preference by 26 per cent.

Hill-billy and western music are approved by 42 per cent, disapproved by 33 per cent, and no opinion from 25 per cent.

Special event programs, including on-the-spot descriptions of ceremonies and other events, are favored by 39 per cent, disliked by 22 per cent, and no opinion from 39 per cent.

Classical music, broadcasts of symphonies, opera and other "serious" music are approved by 32 per cent, disliked by 35 per cent, and 33 per cent expressed no preference.

Serial dramas, stories that are continued from one broadcast to another, are approved by only 16 per cent, while 57 per cent disliked such broadcasts and 27 per cent expressed no opinion.

'Hello, Benning,' Voice Clamors In Wilderness

They may leave old Benning but they never forget her. The proof of the pudding is in the tasting, and the tasting came this week.

Attached to a returned signed copy of an ordnance shipping ticket came the following note written on a yellow slip of paper:

"My very very best cheerio to Benning." It was signed by Sgt. S. Bradford, regimental supply sergeant of the 24th Infantry, at one time stationed here and now on foreign duty on one of the far-flung battle-lines of the world.

3 AAF Men Are Promoted

Schoew Burke, Perry Honored

Three flying officers stationed with the Army Air Forces at Lawson Field have just been promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. They are Second Lieut. Frederick W. Schoew, Jr., Thomas J. Burke and Allison S. Perry, Jr.

Lieut. Schoew, a native Virginian, attended the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, Va. and the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va. While at the University he was an outstanding member of the freshman basketball, tennis and track teams. He was also elected to Delta Phi fraternity. He is also a graduate of the Army Air Force Flying Schools. His family is well represented in the services, his father being a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy.

Lieut. Burke, a native of Dorchester, Mass., is a graduate of the Boston Latin School. An ardent sportsman, when he is not flying devotes his leisure moments to boxing, softball, skiing, track or swimming. He is a graduate of the Army Air Force primary, basic and advanced flying schools. Lieut. Burke is single and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Burke, of 19 Dakota St., Dorchester, Mass.

Lieut. Perry, who hails from Lake Wales, Fla., attended the Lake Wales high school. Before entering the Army Air Force flying schools he studied aeronautical engineering at Glendale, Los Angeles, Cal., and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, Ala.

He is also very active in sports, participating in boxing, softball, skiing, mountain climbing, tennis, swimming and rifle or pistol shooting.

21st QM PRO Made 1st Lieut., Altman Announces

Promotion of Lt. Louis Wooll Ritz to the rank of first lieutenant has been announced by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, commanding officer of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), to which Lt. Ritz has been assigned since last May.

Lt. Ritz was one of the first men to be called from Evansville, Ind., under the Selective Service Act, and spent his first year in the army doing Public Relations work in El Paso, Texas, attached to the Fort Bliss-El Paso Liaison Office. Selected as an Officer Candidate last January, he received his commission in April at Camp Lee, Virginia, and was stationed at Fort Benning following a brief assignment at Fort Francis E. Warren, Wyoming.

In addition to his duties as company supply and mess officer as well as battalion air raid warden, Lt. Ritz has found use for his legal training as he is Investigating Officer for motor accidents occurring within his battalion. Likewise, his position as counsel for Courts-Martial offers additional opportunities for legal expression on his part. Along with his other assignment at Fort Benning, Lt. Ritz has been serving as Public Relations Officer and has been instrumental in having much attention and favorable publicity given to the 21st Quartermaster Regiment.

Former Benning Salvage Officer Made Major

Word was received this week at Fort Benning of the recent promotion of Capt. Frederic A. Smith-Petersen to the rank of major. Capt. Smith-Petersen recently left the post after having served as salvage officer there for the Quartermaster Corps for some time.

He is currently in Atlanta, where he is pursuing a refresher course of instruction in Army motor transport work at the Atlanta Motor Base. At the conclusion of the course, he will probably be ordered to a new station and assigned to motor transport work.

Major Smith-Petersen established an enviable record as salvage officer at Benning and organized many of the systems now in use which effected one of the most thorough salvage jobs being performed in any Army camp in the nation.

FOUR PROMOTED

Promotion of four company commanders in the Second Student Training Regiment to the rank of captain was announced this week at regimental headquarters.

The four are Capts. Edgar J. Lambert, 2nd Co., Miami, Fla.; Stanley Dixon, 3rd Co., Hominy, Okla.; Herbert H. Christen, 25th Co., Huron, S. D.; and Robert E. Frickey, 27th Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Careful What You Do or 'Booby' Trap'll Get You

Soldier Is Trained To Detect, Destroy Dangerous Toys

American soldiers entering the field of combat are trained to detect and deal effectively with enemy 'booby' traps, it has been announced by the War Department.

A 'booby' trap is the name given explosive contrivances with treacherous mechanisms for detonation used by the enemy to wound or kill careless or thoughtless opponents. Although not new, they could cause many casualties unless troops are trained to guard against them. Every war produces such traps. To teach our soldiers to recognize these hidden dangers and to handle them, a training program has been under way for some time, it has been revealed by Lieut. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, chief of the Army Ground Forces.

The elementary trap usually consists of a small charge of explosive, either in slabs or in a cartridge, with an igniter worked by either the push or pull method. A discharge may be caused by stepping on a push type hidden explosive, or tripping over a cord or wire attached to the pull type trap. These methods generally apply to the outdoor trap.

SOUVENIRS SERVE AS BAIT

The trap also may be connected to doors, windows, furniture, and souvenirs, such as helmets, rifles, or parts of uniforms, or applied to weapons or vehicles which have been abandoned.

They may be connected in the most unusual and unsuspected places—a machine gun apparently carelessly hidden in a tree but ready to set off a high explosive when touched by a soldier — a door slightly ajar, which sets off an explosion when moved. They are sometimes hidden around window sills, so that any movement to enter a building in that manner would prove disastrous. When traps are set, they usually are fixed with heavy explosive charges, and the carelessness of one soldier may mean death or serious injury to others with him.

Barns or large buildings are especially dangerous, because the enemy anticipates the quartering of troops in those structures. Sometimes an apparently abandoned vehicle appeals to the enemy for the purpose of hiding a trap in the motor, inside the cab, or attaching it to the door or brake handle.

BEDS SPRING TRAPS

The ways in which a trap may be hidden are many—inside a drawer, attached to the springs of an inviting-looking bed, in cupboards, or connected with kitchen utensils.

Similar to "booby" traps and operated in the same manner are anti-personnel mines. These operate with shrapnel effect from a casing containing hundreds of bullets or other missiles which are blown through the air by the explosion of the mine. They often are used in woods where they can be camouflaged easily, or to protect barbed wire, anti-tank mine fields, and other obstacles from clearing operations.

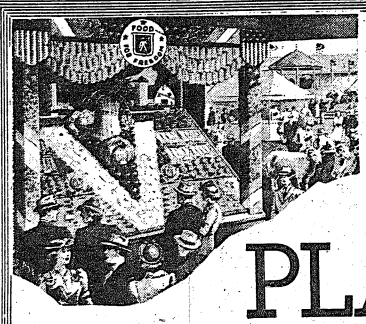
Vigorous efforts are being made to obtain more of the rubber available from South America, whose jungles, river banks and mountain sides contain an enormous supply growing wild.

Frank Nichols Made Captain

Chief Ordnance Foreman Advances

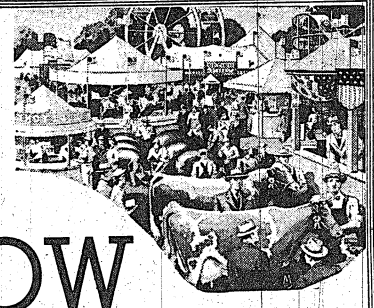
Efficient and thorough work of a Fort Benning master sergeant in moving thousands of troops has resulted in his being commissioned a captain in the Army of the United States.

The new captain is Frank Nichols, chief foreman of the ordnance shop at Fort Benning since 1937, who has been made a captain in Ordnance on the recommendation of the Chief of Ordnance in Washington.



Captain Nichols has been in the Army for 24 years, reaching the grade of master sergeant early in 1942. Before coming to Fort Benning, Captain Nichols served as assistant shop foreman in the Ordnance shops at Fort Hoyle, Md., from 1931 until 1936.

In addition to the practical experience on Ordnance work that Captain Nichols acquired during his army career, he attended several service schools including the Ordnance Field Service School, and ordnance non-commissioned officer and motor transport schools.



His first enlistment was in 1915. Since then he has come up through the ranks, serving at Fort Adams, R. I., Ft. Meade, Maryland, Ft. Hoyle and Ft. Benning. Before becoming shop foreman, he worked as a gunner, instructor, stock clerk and assistant foreman in the various ordnance plants.

The greatest number of vehicles on the road are from two to five years old and the next most numerous group ranges in age from five to 10 years.

The opening games of the Fort Benning Football Conference this coming week-end mark a welcome innovation in post athletic circles. Officials of the athletic association have worked long and hard under the direction Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, the athletic officer, to make the conference possible and pre-season indications are that their efforts will be more than repaid by the support which the league receives.

Seven teams are entered in the intra-mural loop including the 29th, 124th and 117 Infantries, the 21st General Hospital, 55 Engineers, and 3rd and 11th Armored regiments. The brand of football displayed will probably vary with the teams matched on any particular gridiron. It may be good or bad, but at least it will be entertaining, and probably far more interesting to Benning soldiers than games with totally unknown outside opposition.

Some of the rivalries will create post-wide interest such as when the 29th Devils collide with the 124th Gators late in November or when the two armored regiments tangle. Many fans lament the fact that Benning cannot have an all-post team, because they feel such an eleven could hold its own with any college or service team in the nation. And they are probably right, but the diversity of the training program at the fort makes such a team impossible.

In forming a seven-team conference right on the post, the F. B. A. A. has not only done the next best thing, but they also provided a great deal more entertainment for soldiers than a single post team could offer, since at the most only about six home games would be played. With the conference, there will be at least two and usually three games every week-end. Not only that, but a great deal of interest will be created in the loop standings, and by mid-November every soldier at the fort will probably be agog over the title race.

Another factor to be remembered is that each of the seven elevens will carry a squad of about 35 men, which means that almost 250 Benning soldiers are getting a chance to play organized football. All in all, this corner thinks that the F. B. A. A. deserves a pot on the back for the splendid work it has done in creating Fort Benning's first football league.

Speaking of the grid conference brings to mind the ironical fact that the man most responsible for the details and arrangement of the schedule won't even be here to witness his dream come true when the loop opens Saturday night. He is now 2nd Lieut. Irving Fleischer, but he's been known for months throughout post athletic circles as "Sergeant Fleischer." He received his commission in the special service branch early this week, and is now bound for Fort George Meade, Md., to join an officer replacement pool.

Fleischer will be badly missed at Benning. Ever since he took over the reins of the F. B. A. A. from Bill Fannin early this year, he has been an invaluable aid to Colonel Finnegan in the administration of sports at the past. He worked hard and unceasingly and earned a tremendous admiration from every athlete at the post. Lieut. Fleischer was a real sportsman and contributed much to athletic progress at Benning. He won't soon be forgotten. We're sure he'll be a real success in his new work, and Benning's loss is certainly some one else's gain!

The 29th Infantry's conquest of Daniel Field on Sunday was a well-deserved one and definitely stamps the Big Blue as the team to beat in the conference. In that third-period onslaught that gave the Two-Niners their two scores, they looked like a classy team. It was the first and only time in their first two games that they really lived up to expectations. This pillar picked the Devils to win by two or three touchdowns, and that's just what they did. The 29th looked good enough to punch over a couple of scores, but their ball-handling and passing is still spotty.

The aerial attack will probably be improved in this week's practice sessions by changing formations and allowing the tosser more time and protection. True enough, two of the three touchdowns scored so far by the Devils have been via the air, but their over-all average has been poor. The ground attack is potent when the blocking clicks as it did most of the time on Sunday.

The addition of veteran Jim Hennessey at end has added considerably to the strength of the eleven. He is a great pass-snagger and a fine defensive end who hits with a vengeance. Along with Ed Carr, he has just about solved the Blue team's flank problems. The 29th line seems pretty well set and barring injuries is a compact unit.

Line Coach Archie Milano deserves plenty of credit for the way he took over the squad when Lieut. Joe Ashmore, the head tutor, was forced out of action with a knee injury. The officer is confined to his home, and on Sunday Milano was in complete charge, the first time within recent memory that an enlisted man has guided a Benning eleven into combat. His use of subs showed good judgement and the "pep" talk he evidently gave the boys at halftime was just what the doctor ordered because they played good ball after a slow start.

Devils-Medicos Clash In Loop Tilt As 3rd Armored Faces Engineers Sunday

29th Infantry Battles 21st Hospital Gridmen In Doughboy Stadium

The opening guns of the Fort Benning Football Conference will be fired this week-end when four of the loop's seven elevens roar into action in feature attractions on two gridirons.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30 before an expected capacity throng in Doughboy Stadium, the 29th Infantry's Big Blue machine will clash with the Medico gridders from the 21st General hospital.

The other tilt will be waged at the same time on Sunday a few miles away in another portion of the reservation when the 3rd Armored Dragons face the 55th Engineers on Tenth Armored Field in the Sand Hill Area. The new gridiron is just beyond the MP outpost on the Cusseta Road.

TWO-NINERS FAVORED

In the stadium feature, the veteran Two-Niners are a distinct favorite over the inexperienced hospital gridders, but an old baseball rivalry between the two units will probably carry over to the gridiron which means that anything can happen.

The Medicos, coached by Chaplain Francis McCarthy, a Catholic priest, have been scrimmaging for almost a month now, but they still cannot be rated on a par with the Big Blue team which has already hung up two victories over Army Air Force elevens from Spence Field and Daniel Field.

The 29th, however, has paid for its victories dearly with the loss of several star operatives, including its coach-Lieut. Joe Ashmore. Forced out of the Spence Field

Col. Jeter Named On Benning Fish, Game Commission

Lt. Col. John R. Jeter, Infantry, is the new member of the Fort Benning fish and game commisson, according to a reorganization of the commission announced this week at post headquarters.

The commission, charged with controlling conservation of wild life on the reservation, now consists of the following:

President, Lt. Col. A. J. Bain, Corps of Engineers; Members, Col. Albert Rothermich, Infantry; 1st Lt. Guy E. Snavely, Jr.; and Colonel Jeter.

The two members retiring from the board were Lt. Col. Charles B. King and Col. Harold Helvey. Only one of the two vacancies was filled.

The commission sets up and controls hunting and fishing on the reservation. Work on several new regulations has just been completed by the commission and the regulations will be announced in a few days.

Sgt. Fleischer Is Commissioned 2nd Lieutenant

Former Athletic Assistant Leaves For New Post At Fort Meade

Fort Benning athletic circles lost one of its key figures this week when Staff Sgt. Irving S. Fleischer, assistant to the athletic officer, was commissioned a second lieutenant and ordered to a new station.

He left this morning for Fort George G. Meade, Md., where he has been assigned to an officer replacement pool. Lieut. Fleischer was commissioned in the special service branch of the Services of Supply and will probably be assigned to recreational duty with troops.

For the past eight months, the newly-commissioned officer has assisted Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, the post athletic officer, in the supervision of the vast program of sports now being carried on at the post. He was one of the originators of the Fort Benning Football Conference which gets under way this week-end.

ONCE IN 29TH

Fleischer entered the Army in February, 1941, under the Selective Service Act and shortly thereafter he was sent to Fort Benning. Originally, the former athletic assistant was a member of the 29th Infantry regiment, and last fall he served as manager of the Blue Devil grid squad.

Soon after the football campaign closed, Fleischer was transferred to Headquarters Detachment of the Fourth Service Command and assigned to the athletic office. He was placed in charge of the Sports Arena located in the Harmony Church Area and directed the sports program there during the winter months.

REPLACED FANNIN

Early this year, Lieut. Fleischer moved into the main post again and took over the reins of the Fort Benning Athletic Association which had just been relinquished by Bill Fannin. Since that time, he has been responsible for many improvements and additions to the fort athletic set-up.

Fleischer received word of his elevation to the rank of a commissioned officer over the week-end, and he was sworn in early this morning at post headquarters, just prior to his departure for Fort Meade. He is one of the first selective service men at the fort to gain a commission without attending an officer candidate school.

The former Benning athletic official is a resident of East Orange, New Jersey.

If you are interested in gasoline economy the best speed at which to go into second gear is about 15 miles an hour.

Eleven Men In Search Of Name

The 117th Infantry is seeking a suitable nickname for the football team that will represent it on the gridiron this fall in the Fort Benning Conference. The other two infantry units, the 29th and 124th are already well set with such ferocious-sounding titles as the Blue Devils and Gators respectively.

Now the "Break Through" regiment wants a name to compete their rivals for fandom's attention. To encourage men of the regiment to submit suggestions, Lieut. Lester F. Soldz, special service officer, has arranged to offer five sawbucks to the lad in the Tennessee regiment who profers a name which is selected by the judges.

The suggested names should be submitted by the men of the regiment to Lieut. Soldz in the special service office before tomorrow night at midnight in order to be eligible for the prize.

117TH INFANTRY

Five enlisted men of the 117th Infantry regiment have been promoted to higher grades. They are: Cpl. Jene G. Johnson, Bristol, Tenn., to sergeant; Pfc. Warren B. Steed, London, Tenn., to technician 4th grade; Pfc. George J. Brefit, Linden, N. J., Pvt. Felix J. Blonchard, Donaldsonville, La., and Pvt. Robert G. Wackerle, Bay City, Mich., to corporal.

Dragon Eleven Ready For Tilt With Engineers

3rd Armored Regt. Team Boasts Former Little All-America Star

Capt. Leo Gregory's brand new gridiron Dragons from the 3rd Armored Regiment, boasting a former Little All-American in the line-up, are ready for their opening fracas on Sunday when they oppose the 55th Engineers in a Fort Benning Conference tilt on the Tenth Armored Field.

Although the big Green and White eleven has been practicing only a little over three weeks, the armoradders are in good shape and by game-time should come up with a polished team that will be favored over the Engineers.

C. O. RABID FAN

Capt. Gregory, a former University of Florida halfback, has molded his small squad into a well-drilled football machine that should do credit to Col. Thomas M. Brinkley's regiment. The commanding officer, incidentally, is probably the most rabid of the Dragon fans and has backed the team whole-heartedly from the very start.

The Little All-American in the Dragon line-up is rugged Al Litwak, the quarterback and blocker. For three years, he held down a similar position in the backfield for Western Reserve, but carried the ball only once in that span of time.

LITWAK ALL-AMERICAN

In his senior year, Litwak's ability was recognized when he was named to the small-college

Hurley and Hennessey Star In 29th Win Over Eagle Foe

Two Third Period Scores Give Devils 12-0 Victory In Stadium Tilt

Two sharp thrusts in the third period accounted for the pair of touchdowns that gave the Two-Niners their triumph, Midway in the canto, Ed Hurley heaved a scoring pass to Jim Hennessey for the first six-pointer, and a few minutes later the home team scored again when Mickey McGuire bolted over from the five-yard line on a weak side reverse.

That was all the actual scoring, but both elevens threatened in the closing period only to be halted by timely pass interceptions. Once the 29th marched 65 yards down the field, their longest drive of the game, but were stalled at the Eagle 13-yard line when another score seemed imminent.

HENNESSEY STARS

Outstanding for the winners was Jim Hennessey, former North Carolina State end, who not only also played a great defensive game at his flank position. The rugged terminal had been unable to report for the squad until Monday of last week, yet he played most of the game on Sunday and seemed in good condition.

The backfield shift which moved Ed Hurley to tailback also helped the Big Blue, since the shifthey had played a good all-around game. His passing was accurate, and his punting filled the bill. He also broke loose for some welcome gains through the line several times, and played a good game on defense.

STRONG AIR ATTACK

Daniel Field had an ever-threatening air attack paced by Bob Bumgardner, ex-Alabama frosh ace, who was a grand leather-slinger. The 160-pound Daniel Field ace helped the Eagles complete 11 our of 21 passes for a total yardage of 139 markers, which kept them in the ball game all the way.

The game was marred by frequent penalties, but both teams seemed overanxious in the intense heat and were jumping off sides continually. Also several major penalties were inflicted on the visiting fliers for infractions of the rules which did not help their cause any.

29TH LINE POWERFUL

Once again the powerful line of the 29th played a bang-up game, with acting Captain Mike Hutchins standing out at tackle. The end-play, bolstered by Hennessey's addition was better than in the opening game with Seven Spence Field, and the blocking was vastly improved. The 29th played minus the services of their flashback and coach, Lieut. Joe Ashmore, who was confined to his home with injuries received in the Spence Field tilt. But Archie Milano, the line coach, who ran the team, did a good job, exercising fine judgment in his use of reserves.

Held at bay during the entire first half by the visiting airmen, the big Blue eleven started to click shortly after the intermission and culminated two drives from near midfield with spectacular scoring plays.

The initial six-pointer came on a perfectly executed pass play with Tailback Ed Hurley flinging a naerial to Jim Hennessey that was good for 28 yards and a touchdown. Hennessy grabbed the pigskin on the 15-yard line and raced over the broad stripe without an enemy hand being laid on him.

McGUIRE SCORES

Rugged Mickey McGuire, operating from the wingback slot, accounted for the second score a few minutes later, when he went over from the 5-yard line. The big Blue had driven from the midfield stripe in seven rapid plays but once inside the ten, the attack bogged down. However, McGuire took the ball on a weak-side reverse and bolted through the Eagle line like a supercharger, butting over two tacklers to rack up the score.

The Two-Niners threatened continually for the rest of the game and might have added a couple of more touchdowns had not the Daniel Field eleven been unusually alert in recovering fumbles and intercepting passes. The superiority of the Benning eleven, however, was celar cut even though the visitors held the upper hand in first downs by a count of 11-8.

What's New With Q. M.?

The Quartermaster Corps pressed the middle valve down, the music went round and round, but when it came out it was still loud enough to blast the sweet dreams of soldiers. Seems that the rising shortage of brass had leap the supply corps to discontinue the making of brass bugles, thereby saving 20 ounces of precious metal per instrument.

Hearing that news, Johnny Doughboy quickly began to anticipate the absence of that hated tone that breaks the dawn each morning to arouse him from his slumbers. What a pleasure it would be not to have any more bugles! But as usual, the Q. M. C. was undaunted and this week blared forth the news that a new plastic trumpet has been adopted and will soon be issued.

And if it can be of any solace to the soldiers whose dreams were so rudely shattered, the notes of reveille which awaken him now will have a better tone, giving the morning call a resonant ring it never had before. Not only that, but the new super-duper-trooper-whooper is amazingly and startlingly sudden, too. It doesn't even need the decent warm-up period that the old brass trumpet required.

Actually, if you're not too disgusted by now, the trumpet is made of cellulose acetate, and is olive drab so that it blends well with uniforms and other G. I. equipment without benefit of paint or polish. Isn't that the best news of the week?

The haberdashers to America's fighting men are now using such a variety of so-called scientific measuring devices that every bit of clothing a soldier receives fits him as well as is humanly possible. Some of these ingenious devices are sock-sizers, legging measurers, trouser fitters, crotch bars and shoe fitters. These successors to the old-fashioned tape measure are not only far more accurate, but save a lot of time as well.

A new camoflauge mitten of the gauntlet type has been developed for use by G. I.'s who will be stationed in cold climes this winter. It is of featherweight construction and intended to be worn over the regulation hand-covering used in extremely cold climates. The mitten is white so that it will blend into the snow and ice background and thus afford protection against observation by enemy forces.

The glove is designed with a hinge opening on the back that leaves the hand free for use of firearms if necessary. It is made of a light poplin, which has been specially treated to make it water-repellant and wind-resistant. Also, the camoflauge covering adds about 20 degrees of additional warmth to the regulation mitten without any appreciable addition of weight. Sounds good!

The Q. M. C. saves about $2,000,000 of John Q. Public's money every year by saving the scrap cloth from cutting and piecing machines that make Army uniforms, according to Colonel Stephen B. Massey, the post quartermaster. The scraps are returned from the outside manufacturer along with the completed garments, and are then sorted and auctioned off to the highest bidders. The actual money saving on the cost of each complete uniform is approximately 25 cents.

When Benning soldiers change into woolen uniforms in the near future, there will be very few changes noticeable. The Quartermaster Corps has made no radical changes in the winter uniform during the hot months, and the principal replacements and improvements were made in the interest of greater warmth, which means they may not be in evidence at this southern camp.

A new winter field jacket has been adopted which is similar to the one now worn at Benning except that it has collar, waistband and wristlets of knitted wool with enough elastic to afford a snug fit. A new knitted cap is also ready for issue. It has a shawl that can be worn up over the ears in moderate weather or turned down in extreme cold. The only other change is in the O. D. woolen gloves—they now have a leather palm, better suited to the hard wear they are bound to get in wartime.

All-American eleven. Last year, this superb blocker played all but two minutes of a tough eight-game schedule for the last eleven of the Cavalry Replacement Training Center at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Another satellite in the Dragon backfield is John Carney, 185-pound fullback, who is a full-blooded Indian and played varsity ball for the famous Haskell Indians at one time. Known to his mates as "Big Chief," Carney is a pile-driving fullback that will cause the Engineers plenty of woe on Sunday.

Named to the two other starting backfield posts for the opener are Tony Laskosky and Charley Wargo. Laskosky will play tailback and is a flashy ball-carrier who once played for Freeland High School in Pennsylvania. Wargo spent a couple of seasons with the West Virginia Mountaineers and is an experienced wingback.

Gator Gridmen Play "B" Team In Auburn Tilt

124th Eleven Will Travel To College Town For Saturday's Game

Fort Benning's 124th Infantry gtid machine once again will carry the colors of the post to a foreign field this Saturday afternoon when they play the Auburn "B" team in a game scheduled for the college stadium in Tigertown.

Capt. Harold (Red) Milton's moleskinners have had almost a two week respite from major competition and once again are straining at the leash. The Gators dropped their opener to the powerful Chattanooga Moccasins in a muddy battle on a Tennessee gridiron ten days ago.

PRIMED FOR UPSET

Although they will line up for the 2:30 kick-off as the underdog, the feeling in the Harmony Church camp all week has been that the orange-and-blue Benning team will stage an upset and bring home a verdict over the collegians.

The strength of the Auburn eleven is unpredictable, and it is expected that most of the Tiger Bees will be freshmen. However, the collegians have been hardened by constant scrimmage sessions with Jack Meagher's varsity, the same team that beat Tulane's mighty Green Wave on Saturday last.

Despite the 20-0 score against them in the Chattanooga battle, the 124th eleven showed great promise, and the game was much closer than the final score indicated. Also, the Moccasins are rated as one of the best small college teams in the south this year, and are expected to give powerful Georgia Tech a real scrap this week when they meet in Atlanta.

CESTARY, INJURED

Only serious casualty of the opening game for the Gators was the loss of Roy Cestary, their star defensive back, who carried the brunt of the attack against the collegians. The former Notre Dame flash sustained some painful thigh bruises that may keep him inactive this week-end at Auburn.

Fortunately, however, the Benning team has come up with another great tailback to replace Cestary. He is Claude Hackney, the only officer on the Gator squad, who just reported to the regiment for duty this past week. Last year, Hackney was the ace ball-carrier for Davidson and had the distinction of being one of the few backs to score against Duke's mighty Rose Bowl eleven.

HACKNEY IMPRESSES

In practice sessions this week, the former Davidson flash has been quite impressive and he may prove the spearhead of the Gator attack on Saturday. The rest of the starting backfield will probably be composed of Vernon Smith at wingback, George Chakurdo at quarterback, and big Stan Ergler at fullback. All three opened against the Moccasins along with Cestary.

Eddie Joos who played impressive ball against Chattanooga is sure to see action at fullback, and Sam Zinni, another newcomer on the Gator squad may break in as a reserve quarterback. Zinni is a former star at West Palm Beach High and University of Florida.

Coach Milton has not indicated that there will be any changes in the starting line, which means that Pielon and Dyal will be at the ends, Suhrbier and Berasi at tackles, Tony Aulenti and Green Howard at guards, and Jim Rollins at center.

EX-AUBURN PLAYER

One end who is sure to break into the line-up will be playing against his old school. That is Junie Belin, lanky flank, whose flair is pass-catching and who played one year of varsity football at Auburn a few years back.

Since the Tiger varsity plays at Gainesville, Fla., against the Florida collegians on Saturday, it means that Auburn will have its hands full with Gator opposition inasmuch as most of the Benning Gators also hail from the sunshine state.

Gator Cagers Get To Work

24 Teams Will Participate In Leagues

Athletic interest in the 124th Infantry is fast turning to basketball according to Lt. James B. Brooks, Assistant Special Service Officer, as a number of the company teams have already started to work out in the Sports Arena.

Regimental athletic officials have been preparing fo ra banner cage season and have constructed an up to date court in the Regimental Recreation Hall. The floor has been treated and will be ready for action within the next several days.

Two leagues are to be formed with ten teams each and one officers league with four teams representing the four battalions. All three leagues will begin play about November 1st.

Practice sessions for all teams will get under way within the next week or ten days and Sgt. Pat Murphy of the Special Service Staff is now busy lining up a schedule that will allow all teams access to the new playing court.

29th Infantry—

encounter when he suffered the recurrence of an old knee injury, the youthful tutor was not even able to be present last Sunday when the Devils bumped Daniel Field.

ASHMORE IS BACK

Ashmore was back on the post this week, however, and although still hobbling on crutches, he will be able to direct the team once more from the bench on Sunday afternoon. Unless the injured joint recovers rapidly, Ashmore will probably not be available as a player for the duration of the campaign.

Other Devil stars still nursing injuries are Bob Bowen, Joe Sacewitz and Reade Giraulo. Bowen, the step-ladder fullback, has a bruised back and although he was used sparingly against Daniel Field, he still is a doubtful starter against the Medicos.

Bowen's absence from the starting line-up means that Joe Bryan will be at fullback, Ed Hurley and Bill Chaney at the halfback slots, and Phil Del Monte doing the blocking at quarterback. Mickey McGuire, who scored one of the six-pointers against the Eagles, and Raminski are two other slippery ball-carriers slated to see plenty of action against the Medicos.

CORNELIUS TO START

Giraulo, the regular center, will be capably replaced by veteran Frank Cornelius, a hold-over from last year's 29th eleven. Pollard Plakan and Steve Hooretz shared the guard slot left open by Sacewitz's injury on Sunday and will probably repeat under conditions with the former getting the initial call.

Acting Captain Mike Hutchins and Big Hank Zawaski, the two iron-man tackles will provide the big bulk in the Devil line, while Joe Stolarzyck and Jim Hennessey are the probable end starters. Hennessey, former North Carolina State ace, has whipped himself into shape rapidly to take the starting post away from rugged Ed Carr.

STARTERS IN DOUBT

Many of the starting spots in the Medico line-up were still in doubt as late as mid-week, but Father McCarthy promises to have a capable, fighting ball club ready by kick-off time. The Medicos have plenty of spirit and with some seasoning may be a dangerous eleven.

Tom Asaley, a 230-pound behemoth at center, will add weight to an otherwise light line. Ed Levy, former junior varsity player at California, and Tony Pastore are the probable guards with Bill Terry and Reinke slated to start at tackles. The ends will most likely be Hewitt and Schafnit, the team's expert place-kicker.

The starting foursome in the backfield is expected to be composed of Hamilton, Tannhauser, Kelly and DeRosa. Marty Mamusiak, counted upon as one of the Medico club's best backs, is a doubtful starter due to a torn ligament sustained in practice ten days ago.

The 29th Infantry band will be on hand to entertain, and all indications point to a banner crowd for Fort Benning's opening loop battle.

Bayonet's Sports Editor Picked the Cardinals to Win

Not that we like to brag, but the baby Bayonet, now in its fourth week of publication, has at least uncovered a sports prognosticator who is right once in a while. Sgt. Carl Neu, Bayonet Sports Editor, in his regular weekly column "Sportscasting" called the shot on the St. Louis Cardinals to win the world series from the New York Yankees. He was one of the few columnists in this section to pick it right, and now has the city sports editors saying they wished they had the courage to go out "on the limb" in calling the underdog to win. In last week's column, Neu wrote "this corner likes the Cardinals in seven games." Of course, the St. Louis gang went out and did the job even faster than expected, winning in five. Also, the Bayonet writer figured Mort Cooper to win twice. He was wrong on that, but he did pick the Cards and they WON!

Rawn Spearman Invited To Appear in Town Hall

Offered Month Of Study, Tuition Free, By Dean Dixon

BY PFC. SMITHY NORTON

A soldier's voice . . . In a typical American home Mrs. Friedman and her guest were sitting in the living room listening to America's No. 1 all soldiers radio program, "CHEERS FROM THE CAMPS." A half hour of the program passed, then the announcer, TED HUSING, in his eloquent manner introduced the RECEPTION CENTER CHOURS. (THE ARMY'S FINEST ALL SOLDIERS CHOURS-FORT BENNING, GEORGIA). As the melodious voices of this military ensemble surged a way into the Friedman's Detroit home there was a silence—the Friedmans listen closely, in fact the entire nation hankered.

The title of the song being sung was "STAR." The leading tenor was PRIVATE RAWN W. SPEARMAN. Near the end of this fine radio broadcast the Reception Center Chours was heard for a second time—this rendition was equally as soul stirring as the first. The full hour of the program passed and this was the end of the "CHEERS FROM THE CAMPS" broadcast. America will long remember this excellent group of singers—Mrs. Friedman did remember the tenor who sang the lead, and a note of appreciation was expressed thus: 'I WISH TO THANK THE LOVELY SINGER. I THINK HE WAS A COLORED BOY WHO SANG LAST NIGHT, "MONDAY" OVER THE RADIO. THE ONE WHO WAS TAKEN BY UNCLE SAM JUST WHEN HIS GRAND VOICE WAS DISCOVERED. GOOD LUCK TO YOU AND ALL THE BOYS. signed . . . Mrs. N. Friedman, Detroit, Michigan.

The lustrous tenor voice that caught the listening ears of American music lovers, the voice that stood out and still remaining a vital part of the Reception Center Chours, the soldier's voice that gained the attention of JONNIE LEE, music instructor at Florida A & M college, four years ago, the velvet tone voice heard for the first time at Reception Center by Captain R. P. Langley and Sergeant Van J. Malone and this was the tenor voice of PRIVATE RAWN W. SPEARMAN, Headquarters Co. Reception Center, AMERICA MET PRIVATE RAWN W. SPEARMAN FOR THE FIRST TIME ON SEPTEMBER 1, 1942. PRIVATE RAWN W. SPEARMAN, . . . The 25-years-old tenor is a native of BEXAR, ALABAMA, and was a member of FLORIDA A & M college chours before entering the Army in June, 1942. Private Spearman loves to sing and is truly a talented artist.

He will complete his fifth month in the Army at the close of October. When assigned to the Reception Center, Fort Benning, Georgia, he plunged into drill, K. P. duty, area police, and intrine detail. The musical background of Private Spearman enabled him to render an important role in the Reception Center Chours and Quartette. As a result he was given a lead in the soldiers radio show "CHEERS FROM CAMP," and an audition by DEAN DIXON SYMPHONY SOCIETY, New York City. During his leisure time he teaches First Aid to recruits, and collects articles—stories on world famous singers. To become an outstanding concert artist is the real ambition and his favorite artist is ROLAND HAYES.

On the day entering the Army his daily talk was the Air Corps, but he is an Army man now. Private Spearman was formerly a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. His choice sports are swimming, basketball, football, and track. He stands 6 ft. tall, weight 170 lb. and looks immaculate in uniform. He is a typical American soldier and speaks in a sharp elegant manner. I will always remember the look on his copper brown face when these words fell from his lips 'I AM PROUD OF THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE AMERICAN NEGRO . . . MY DAILY ENDEAVOR WILL CONSIST OF DOING MY PART IN AMERICA'S WAR EFFORT . . . AND IF I AM GIVEN AN OPPORTUNITY TO SING THIS SPRING FOR DEAN DIXON SYMPHONY SOCIETY—I WILL DO MY BEST TO MAKE AMERICA PROUD OF MY EFFORTS! I AM INDEED GREATFUL FOR THE KINDNESS AND INTEREST SHOWN BY SGT. V. J. MALONE, CAPT. LANGLEY, CAPT. HAMMARGREEN, MAJOR J. H. COOPER, LT. COL. U. N. JAMES, AND GENERAL W. S. FULTON!

Rawn Spearman who has been invited to sing next spring in the New Talent Town Hall concert program in New York by Dean Dixon. If the Army can arrange it, Spearman will go to New York for a month of study and coaching, tuition free. Dixon calls Spearman's voice unspoiled, one of the most beautiful natural voices the former has ever heard.

R. C. Variety

BY PFC. SMITHY NORTON

"WINGS OVER JORDAN" . . Every Sunday morning the soldiers of Fort Benning enjoy a real Musical treat. Almost ever barrack, and they are countless in number, on Sunday morning tunes the radio dial to Columbia's sustaining feature 'Wing Over Jordan', an unusual heart striking broadcast of America's finest folk songs, Negro spirituals. Rev. Glenn T. Settle, of Cleveland, Ohio, is the originator and narrator. His eloquent speech has voiced the script of this splendid religious program in more than five hundred concerts and sung before a million people in forty-two states. Their largest audience was seventy-five thousands in Cleveland's outdoor stadium. This 'GOOD WILL' program of the Air waves and Church rostums has accomplished a great deal in the field of Public Relations between colored and white people. 'WINGS OVER JORDAN', has won the praises of the Old South as well as Yankeeland, and last ever audience this group of singers have won the devoted respect of the soldiers at Fort Benning. 'A Mississippian wrote that he noticed how every Sunday morning his entire servants corps disappeared. He found them gathered about a radio listen to Wings Over Jordan. He listen, too, and became a fan. Now his family and servants join together every Sunday morning in the huge living room to hear the spirituals. 'On each broadcast outstanding persons are featured, White and Colored. Up to this date, August 15, there have been 237 broadcast. This radio choir has more than 300 spirituals in its repertory. The singers are of the younger generation and their souls poure out true notes of a new day. God will surely hear them as they sing your favorite and my choice each Sunday morning.

CORPORAL WALTER W. HILL is a native of Baltimore and formerly a student of Douglas Senior High. In a recent conversation with Corporal Hill, we find that he is an artist, and spends his leisure sketching. 'I like to dance and I try to attend as many of our Fort dances as possible. During his high school days he played basketball, baseball, and football. This is Corporal Hill's twenty-second month in the U. S. Army. At the time he was drafted, Corporal Hill served as a Mail carrier. 'Fort Benning is a grand place—we need a program of athletics for the colored soldiers at Benning'—says Corporal Hill as he busied himself with work of the Bakers and Cooks school.

Sergeant THOMAS H. DEYAMPERT is from Attalla, Alabama and a graduate of the popular CARVER High School. Sergeant Deyampert is one of the most progressive soldiers in the Q. M. C. Det. He has served two years and three months in the U. S. army. Sergeant Deyampert is a good Air plane mechanic and has had a great deal of experience at the profession in civilian life. R. C. Medical Center Growth Is Remarkable

Dispensary Opens With Few Tools; Fine Set-up Now

The Reception Center Dispensary at Fort Benning, Georgia, has come a long way since its modest beginning some eighteen months ago. The medical unit for the Reception Center was begun in a twenty foot square space equipped with one kitchen table, a medical cabinet, a record file and seven enlisted men. Today this same organization boasts an entirely separate building with facilities for caring for the medical needs of more than five hundred soldiers.

This medical group is under the direction of Major William C. Kennedy, who for the past three decades has had contact with army medicine and its problems. He is assisted in this work by Captain Dennis L. Hallisey and Lieut. Lloyd M. Thompson. This staff of officers is supplemented from time to time by other medical officers sent to the Reception Center Dispensary to assist in its operation and to learn the scope of medical assistance as rendered in this organization.

2,500 SOME DAYS

On many days more than twenty-five hundred men have passed through the doors of the Dispensary for physical inspection, emergency treatment, or in answer to regular sick call. This unit is required to make a complete physical check of all new selectees sent to the Reception Center and to make an additional physical inspection of each selectee within twenty-four hours prior to his departure to his next station.

The new soldier is inspected at the Dispensary both physically and mentally and is hospitalized in cases which may require hospital treatment. The selectee is vaccinated as a safeguard against smallpox, is inoculated by typhoid and given the new tetanus toxoid injections. At the Dispensary the soldier is instructed in the care of the feet, the proper posture and is given a complete lecture on the question of personal hygiene, sex hygiene and venereal disease.

In addition to its regular chores, it is the province of the Reception Center Dispensary to furnish such trained medical first aid attendants as are required for large shipments of selectees from this station to other stations.

Enlisted personnel in this section includes: Sgt. Charles E. Powell, Tech. 5th Joseph White, Cpl. George Bynes, Cpl. Charles Boozer, Pvt. Fran Thomas, Pfc. John H. Tipton, Pfc. George Culkler, Pvt. David Shaw, Pvt. Benjamin Bagley, Pvt. Timothy Thompson, Pvt. Herman Dawson, Pvt. Theodore Mathis, Pvt. Edward Daniels, Pvt. Eugene Thomas, Pvt. Quinten Barbee, and Pvt. Alferd May.

Colored Troops Enjoy Old Fashion Camp Meeting

Something new in religious entertainment was presented to visitors to the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) on Sunday, October 4th, when Regimental Chaplain Levi L. Stanmore conducted an Old Fashioned Camp Meeting in the Third Battalion area.

Endeavoring to encourage closer spiritual contacts between civilians and service men, Chaplain Stanmore outlined a day of fellowship that drew a record number of visitors to the Harmony Church area. A reception committee was formed to greet the guests—among which were some one hundred girls provided by the colored Army-Navy Y. M. C. A.-U. S. O. who were directed to the Educational building where Sunday School classes were held. After the noon meal, a period was set aside during which the service men had an opportunity to get acquainted with their guests and amuse themselves in various manners.

The hi-light of the day came when an afternoon service introduced the new Regimental Chorus in several musical selections along with an address by William Farley, director of the Army-Navy Y. M. C. A.-U. S. O. for colored soldiers.

124TH INFANTRY

500 Soldiers To Hear Star Free

Soldiers Issued 500 Kaskas Concert Tickets

Contralto Sings In Columbus On October 21

By GREGORY KRANES

Five hundred free tickets for soldiers have been allotted for the first Three Arts League concert of the season, presenting Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan contralto, at the auditorium of the USO Club at 100 Ninth street, Oct. 12.

Men in uniform desiring ducats will be given them at the Information desk at the club. Only one ticket per man will be available. In order for a soldier to have his wife, sweetheart or friend accompany him, the civilian must have a regular Three Arts League season ticket.

Anna Kaskas is one of the few American artists who have gained distinction the world over. Born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, of Lithuanian parents, this golden-haired, luscious-voiced young artist has, in a short time, built up an enviable reputation. She has sung with the Metropolitan in New York and on tour, has made operatic appearances in Cincinnati, and has been soloist with major orchestras under great conductors.

In addition, she has performed radio and oratorio work with distinction, besides starring at the country's big music festivals. In concert, particularly, her vibrant personality and glowing voice have made her one of the most popular figures before the music public.

Miss Kaskas has studied under the great teachers of Lithuania and Italy. Striving to prove the ability of her voice, she entered and won the Metropolitan opera contest in 1936. Her voice was selected as the best of 700 young artists. Since then her rise has been phenomenal.

Other concerts listed by the Three Arts League for this season are:

November 2—Bartlett and Robertson, English concert duo pianists.

January 21—General Platoff Don Cossack Chorus.

February 18—Cincinnati Symphony, Eugene Goussens conducting.

Season tickets for officers and their families plus enlisted men's families went on sale the first of October in the lobby of the Ralston hotel in downtown Columbus. Memberships are $5.50 including government tax.

Movie Reviews

As gripping a film as has ever been projected on the screen will come thundering into the Main Theatre this week. It is Paramount's "Wake Island," a masterpiece of a movie telling the story of a little band of outnumbered Marines who for fourteen days stood off the pounding of Jap invasion forces and by so doing thrilled the hearts of all Americans and wrote glorious Marine history.

Paramount gathered together a brilliant cast to portray the many real-life roles. Heading the list are Brian Donlevy, Robert Preston, MacDonald Carey, Albert Dekker, Walter Abel, Barbara Britton and William Bendix.

The fact that "Wake Island" was filmed with the complete Marine Corps cooperation stands out unmistakably. The realistic land, sea and air battles are thrilling testimonials to that fact.

"Wake Island," bear in mind, isn't all battle scenes. The film has a very definite story, scripted by W. R. Burnett and Frank Butler. It is the story of the men that fought the battle, and therefore is a highly personal dramatic tale that becomes magnificent film entertainment as acted by an inspired cast and forcefully directed by John Farrow. It has humor and gaiety amid the shambles of furious battle.

The picture starts before the actual attack. It takes you right through the battle and makes you feel in every fiber the almost incredible heroism of that small contingent of fighting marines.

As red-blooded movie entertainment, "Wake Island" should not be missed. As an example to every American of courage and determination against odds, it must be seen.

Movie Actor

Officer Candidate P. L. Robles of the 1st Student Training Regiment is in reality Ruby Robles, screen actor. Currently appearing in "Wake Island," which is now showing on the post, Robles has played in such pictures as: "Across the Pacific," "Submarine Raider," "South of Pago Pago," "The Real Glory," and many others.

Quartermaster At Fort Adds Two Lieuts. To Staff

Two new officers have been added to the staff of Fort Benning's post quartermaster, Colonel Stephen B. Massey.

They are 2nd Lieut. Thomas C. Soar and 2nd Lieut. Earl R. Swain. Both are recent graduates of the Quartermaster School at Camp Lee, Va., where they successfully completed the officer candidate course and received their commissions.

Both Soar and Swain are immediately assigned to Fort Benning for duty with the post quartermaster. Lieut. Soar has been detailed as assistant to the officer in charge of supply, Lieut. B. W. Broemmel, while Lieut. Swain will serve as assistant to Capt. Walter H. Cook, who is in charge of the operation of the post motor pool.

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

Being beautiful and dumb paid off for Burma recently, Burma, Hollywood's newest glamor girl, put her paw on a seven year contract—and all she has to do is act catty . . . Which shouldn't be too difficult . . . for she is a prize Siamese cat . . . Currently appearing with Virginia Bruce in "Careful, Soft Shoulders," now playing the post . . . Burma plays the inseparable pet of Virginia . . . The unusual about Burma is that at one time she has the entire screen to herself . . . I wonder if that sort of sets some kind of record.

Being that "Mrs. Miniver" was such an outstanding hit, M-G-M tried to take a story about an American Mrs. Miniver and also to make it a success . . . Instead only a passable production was achieved . . . Packed with stars and top supporting players, "The War Against Mrs. Hadley," doesn't carry the conviction of real life . . . Currently playing the post, the pic features Edward Arnold, Fay Bainter, Richard Ney, Jean Rogers, Sara Allgood, Spring Byington and other favorites . . . One of the funny stories to come out of Hollywood about the filming of this feature is the one on director Harold S. Bucquet . . . Jean Rogers was supposed to run into a truck with a station wagon in one scene . . . Just before Jean got into the car, Bucquet warned her to be careful "so as not to scratch a tire."

And now we come to the pic of the week . . . "Wake Island" . . . As has been told to you before in this column, this picture is one that people will not forget for some time to come . . . In it, is preserved for posterity the hectic and unforgetable 14 days of Wake Island . . . Some of the unusual features of this production were encountered during the construction and filming of the sets and byplay . . . In order to insure an exact replica of the Marine post on the fateful Island, Paramount hired the construction company that built the base to reproduce it for the screen . . . Famous "Betsy" lived once more in the picture . . . In case you don't know, "Betsy" was the last plane of the Air Force detachment at Wake Island . . . This was the plane that sank a Jap heavy cruiser . . . "she" is the ship that was in reality a patchwork of the other planes that was destroyed . . . Reproduced with the utmost of authenticity "Betsy" is a ship to honor . . . Taking no chances while the picture was being filmed, Paramount, with the cooperation of the proper authorities, warned all residents in the area not to be alarmed if they say Jap soldiers walking around or Jap planes in the air, not to be alarmed, as they were only make believe . . . In fact the planes had to go through certain maneuvers every few minutes to prove that they were really friendly "enemies."

"My Sister Eileen" (and what a wacky sister she turns out to be in the new Columbia production of the famous Broadway stage show), stars Rosalind Russell, Brian Aherne and Janet Blair with supporting players George Tobias and Allyn Joslyn . . . A story about two small town girls who come to the "big town" to seek their fortunes . . . One is writer and the other is supposedly an actress . . . The adventures that befall them before Ruth's stories about her sister Eileen bring her success is really a hilarious hit . . . One of the gags used in the picture was put in it because of the laughs it brought at Army camps which Rosalind Russell has toured . . . At one of her appearances, A G. I. emcee asked her to define a Hollywood wolf . . . Her answer was, "That's easy . . . A wolf is a man who, when he meets a pretty girl, says 'Hello-oo-oooo'."

Looking for CQ

By PVT. M. N. BOLNICK

From the 54th Orderly Room, one flight up, Barracks 2352, comes all bulletins, orders, passes, furlough, guard and KP assignments for the Squadron. A short walk up would convince the soldier that he could have his choice—almost. The fellow seeking a pass might pull guard, and the one seeking a furlough might make KP. He'd hardly be looking for KP and wind up with a furlough. It just all depends.

Presiding over this domicile is First Sergeant Thomas I. Burke, just an ordinary fellow in the uniform she loves. His days as executive non-com of the Squadron are filled with wife allotments, family allotments, allowances, passes, furloughs, personal miseries and t. s. (tough stuff) that make for the life of a soldier at camp.

When a telegram arrives he sees that the soldier gets it at once. When a long distance phone call comes in he'll go out and corall the soldier and drag him to the phone.

When Pvt. Edward Fusillo, chief Vari-Typer of Tail Skid staff returned from furlough recently he was summoned to the Orderly Room for one such long distance call.

"Yes, darling, I just got in . . . sure I still love you . . . sure I know you do . . . yes . . . yes, darling . . . OF COURSE . . . Yes, I know you love me but look at what it's costing you in a phone bill . . . Yes, I know you don't mind the expense . . . but why don't you buy War Bonds. War Stamps . . . Send me a three cent letter, a postcard . . . greeting card—just write . . . That's fine, Bev, do that.

"Yes, darling I'd do it but I can't . . . Y-e-s, darling BUT I CAN'T . . . Darling, I tell you I can't go over the hill.

"Sure I'd do anything . . . of course . . . ."

Just another phone call in the day of "Topkick" Burke.—M.N.B.

Fort Radio To Present Buck In Interview

Frank Buck, known the world over as the "bring 'em back alive" man, will be in Columbus and at Fort Benning Oct. 12, according to plans of the Columbus Business and Professional Women's club.

Buck, for more than 30 years a big-game hunter and trapper in the wildest and most unexplored jungles of the world is scheduled to lecture before members and guests of the Business and Professional Women's club the night of Oct. 21 in the auditorium of the USO Club on Ninth street. He will appear also on the regular daily radio program "Fort Benning on the Air," from Service Club No. 1 at 6 p. m. over WRBL in Columbus.

Arrangements have been made by the sponsors of Buck's appearance to have 500 free tickets allotted for Fort Benning soldiers. The tickets may be obtained by calling at the Information Desk of the USO Club in Columbus.

Several Fort Benning business women had the opportunity to obtain first-hand accounts of some of Buck's adventures when LeRoy Fields, ace motion picture photographer on several of the big-game hunter's trips, came to Fort Benning recently on an assignment for the Office of War Information.

Phelps met some of the committee members arranging Buck's appearance and told them something of their experience in the various jungles of the South Pacific.

For years Buck has been invading the jungles of Malaya Borneo, Southern Asia and other wild countries to bring back rare and unusual animals, and reptiles for the zoos of the nation.

In his travels, Buck has crossed the Pacific Ocean 45 times and has traveled around the world a dozen times. Many of the ferocious animals and reptiles he has brought safely back to civilization have been the first species to be seen in the United States.

Phelps told of numerous hair-raising adventures that Buck's dozen times have experienced and added that the big-game trapper would tell many of these in his lecture in Columbus.

Of the people who drive to and from work or in the course of their occupations, physicians account for more miles than any other group.

Deborah Advises...

The Army Wife

Dear Deborah:

Thanks a lot for the advice you have made available for some of us poor ignorant army wives, who entered the army with buck private husbands. Much to our delight and amazement they showed they are leaders and men, regardless of what we thought of them at home. Please answer for me two questions in the columns of the Bayonet. First of all, when my husband meets an army nurse with bars or eagles, or a WAAC, he does not know whether to salute. Should he? He is a second lieutenant. Also, when we walk together, do I walk on his right or left?

Distracted

Dear Distracted:

Your letter reminded me of the suffocating pride and feeling of importance I felt as a bride when my husband was saluted. I don't think that feeling left me until I was startled one day to be saluted myself. I was driving the family car and an overzealous recruit, recognizing the "old man's" car wasn't to be caught lacking in military courtesy. The helpless feeling I had for a few frantic moments was solved by bowing to him with such emphasis as to put a crick in my neck. After that extension of military courtesy to a mere camp follower, the familiar custom took its rightful place in ordinary events. Regulations say that a junior officer will salute senior rank. That would include nurses and WAACs if they are senior in rank to your husband. I can't ever remember seeing a nurse salute. They've alwa,s seemed seriously occupied with their profession of nursing and stressed that rather than the gold bars on their uniforms. It doesn't make much difference how you walk with your husband, just so you don't hang on his arm. You in all probabilities want to follow that ancient rule of etiquette in letting your husband take the curb side of the pavement.

Dear Deborah:

I've pretty near figured out my own problem, but I'd like you to tell me if I'm thinking along the right track. I've been dating a pretty girl in Columbus. For a while I've been considering asking her to marry me. Everytime we go out she spends most of the time catching the eye of other soldiers in the place. I sometimes get pretty embarrassed. I figured if I couldn't hold her attention now I probably wouldn't have much chance for a happy marriage with her. Maybe she even wouldn't want to marry me. What do you think?

J. M. L.

Dear J. M. L.:

Your reasoning is very sound and you've showing good judgement in not getting yourself emotionally involved with a young girl obviously not ready for the serious business of marriage. You'd stand little chance for happiness unless you had faith in the girl you married. There are a lot of attractive girls in the world. You'll find one someday that has only eyes for you.

Dear Deborah:

I got married several months ago, just before I was inducted into the army. I've always had to help my mother out financially and with the additional burden of a wife to support the only arrangement possible at the time was to take my wife to live with my mother. It hasn't worked out so well. My mother has some pretty strict ideas. I had a letter from her yesterday saying she was fed up with having my wife lie around the house as a guest. She wasn't going to clean up after her while she lay around smoking cigarettes and reading True Story Magazines. She threatens to close the home, go live with my sister and get a job so I can send my entire allotment to my wife. My mother's worked pretty hard all her life and I never wanted to add any burden to her later years. Seems like I've made a terrible mistake. I've written my wife asking her if she wouldn't be happier working while I was away. She doesn't seem to think she would be. What shall I do?

A. E. R.

Dear A. E. R.:

Your mother is showing a courage and resourcefullness that is commendable. In relieving you of the partial responsibility of augmenting her income, she is releasing herself from an obligation that is distasteful to her. If your mother is well and able to find some work not too difficult for her age I should certainly let her follow her wishes. Your wife would then be forced to make some provision for her own well being. There is a very old saying that no home is big enough to shelter two women. That is especially true of mothers and daughter-in-laws when one or another fails to assume her share of the responsibilities.

Lt. Snavely

Lt. Snavely Aide To Fulton

Appointee Assumes New Duties; Was In Supply Division

First Lieutenant Guy Snavely, Jr., former Columbus business man, has been appointed aide-de-camp to Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, according to announcement at post headquarters.

Lieutenant Snavely, who has been acting as assistant to Lt. Col. R. Otto Probst, chief of the supply division, Station Complement, has already assumed his new duties under General Fulton, who was promoted to brigadier general earlier this week on recommendation by the President.

Lieutenant Snavely, who came on active duty at Fort Benning in January, 1942, served as assistant athletic officer for some time before transferring to Colonel Probst's division.

Previous to Army duty, Lieutenant Snavely was executive secretary of the Pickett-Hatcher Educational Fund, Inc., for more than three years; was business manager and assistant superintendent of the Alabama Institute for the Deaf and Blind and agent instructor for the Pan American Petroleum Corp. for two years.

He is a graduate of Birmingham Southern College where he earned an A. B. degree. He resides on the post proper.

WOMAN'S CLUB

LAURA M. BAILEY

A brilliant meeting and tea on Monday afternoon marked the opening of the Woman's Club of Fort Benning. The large attendance and enthusiasm shown on the opening day speaks well for the success of the coming season.

The meeting was opened by Mrs. Walter Scott Fulton, who spoke briefly on the co-operative merging of the women's activities and interests on the post. She gave a brief and complimentary introduction in presenting Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley as president of the organization for the coming season.

Mrs. Kelley reminded the audience that the Woman's Club has consistently stood for the highest ideals of the army wife in its eighteen years of existence. Its past record of co-operation with the worthwhile objectives of the immediate needs of service people was to be carried out to a greater completion in these tragic war months. The need for organized strength to carry out these plans through a woman's organization is more vital today than in any previous time.

Mrs. Kelley then introduced the speaker of the day, Major General Leven C. Allen, Commandant of the Infantry School. His forceful and concise talk lent an impressive seriousness and import to the message he brought the club. His approval of the continuance of the Woman's Club during the war months was unqualified.

The high point of General Allen's talk was his emphazis on the serious responsibility of service families in guarding their conversation. Stray bits of information, which in itself might seem unimportant, has proven to be of tragic and overwhelming significance. He illustrated with great clarity and force the method in which these bits of information may be correlated by own enemies. He charged the women of Fort Benning with the grave responsibility of maintaining the strictest silence on all information regarding any and all troop movements.

General Allen commented that women had never before in the history of war taken such an important role as they do today, whether it be actual war production work, or the less spectacular role of the part time volunteer worker.

Mrs. Kelley then introduced the members of her executive board and the chairmen of the group committees. Each chairman explained the planned activities for the coming year in a convincing manner, which bore results in a record registration of members in the various groups.

Mrs. Horace L. Beall, chairman of the Book Review Group and the Day Nursery and Nursery School, made an effective presentation of the plans for this new service on the post. The immediate enthusiasm shown the initial plans was substantiated by an outstanding enrollment of the prospective entrants for the school and volunteer workers. The large enrollment guarantees the success of the Nursery School and Day Nursery. Definite plans for the opening will be announced shortly.

The musical portion of the afternoon was an especially brilliant one. Mrs. John B. Spitzer, chairman of the Music Group, played Ravel's "Pavanne." Miss Ruth Bennett Beuttner, brilliant concert pianist, played "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 11" by Liszt. Mrs. William S. Riley, distinguished for her operettic roles, added to the program with her rendition of the aria "Pace Pace, Mio Dio" by Verdi. Her encore, a dramatic contrast in tones, was "Wiegenlied" by Brahms.

The afternoon was brought to a close with the tea hour. Mrs. Harold Potter and Mrs. A. M. Parsons were responsible for the decoration of the tea tables. Holding the place of honor at the tea tables were Mrs. Leon C. Allen, Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden, Mrs. Walter Scott Fulton and Mrs. William Denton.

The outstanding art exhibit of magnificent dogs by the talented artist, Lieutenant Frank Irvine, lent an unusual decorative interest to the atmosphere.

Uncle Sam Even Saves Horses' Tail Clippings

QMC Saves Nation Millions Of Dollars In Salvage Drive

The United States Army is waging one of the greatest salvage campaigns in history and the Quartermaster Corps is leading the way in finding new means of conservation of vital materials and proper secondary use of others. This was pointed out by Colonel Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning quartermaster, in discussing how the Q. M. C. saves everywhere possible.

Under the supervision of the supply corps, every bit of scrap metal, paper, cardboard, tin and glass is being collected and properly disposed of at camps and stations. Even the clippings from horses' tails are saved for use in plane cushions and upholstering.

Only a very small percentage of the materials which find their way into Quartermaster Salvage Warehouses are past reclaiming in one form or another. Salvage units of the Q. M. C. have also been organized to follow on the heels of fighting troops in combat and collect damaged weapons and equipment, not only for our own men but the enemy as well.

Also, the Q. M. C. saves over $2,000,000 every year by saving the scrap cloth from the cutting and piecing machines which make uniforms for the Army. The uniform materials are purchased by the Army and turned over to manufacturers, who return the scraps along with the completed garments.

These scraps are sorted and auctioned off to the highest bidders. Records show, said Colonel Massey, that approximately 35 cents worth of cloth is saved from each complete uniform of coat, pants, cap, overcoat, shirt and field jacket.

Fort's Supply Officer Moved

Col. Probst Now At Camp Croft

Fort Benning lost one of its most efficient officers this week when Lt. Col. R. Otto Probst, director of post division supply, was ordered to Camp Croft, S. C., for new duties there.

Colonel Probst, who was called to active duty in May, 1941, has had wide experience in utilities work both in the service and in civilian life. It was because of this background of experience that Colonel Probst was assigned to the staff of Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of the post, as supply officer.

Before coming to Fort Benning, Colonel Probst was assistant engineer to the 7th Army Corps with headquarters at Birmingham, Ala., taking an active part in the Tennessee and Louisiana-Arkansas and going with his unit to the West Coast for special training.

A native of South Bend, Ind., Colonel Probst has been associated with the Indiana-Michigan Electric Company of South Bend for nearly 30 years. A graduate of the parochial high schools of South Bend, the colonel studied for eight years at the University of Notre Dame, graduating with degrees in mechanical and electrical engineering.

The Marine Aviation Corps, inugurated in May, 1912, had on its roll call one name—First Lieut. Alfred A. Cunningham.

10th Armored Grid Slate To Open Sunday

3rd Regiment And 55th Engineers Clash At 2:30

The opening gun of the '42 football season for the 10th Armored Division teams will be fired Sunday when the 3rd Regiment clashes with the 55th Engineer Battalion at the Tenth's Field No. 5. The game, scheduled for 2:30 p. m. will be the league opener for both teams.

Captain Lee Gregory, the Third's hard-working coach, will send a heavy, hard-charging line into action. In Dan Quarcione and John Leshke he has a pair of 200-pound tackles who aim to spell trouble for the Engineers. And he's got one of the league's outstanding wingman in George Jenkins, former star at L. S. U.

The Third's backfield, sparked by tireless Albert Litwak, boasts two bruising fullbacks in "Chief" Carney and Peterson.

The Engineer's will bank their hopes on their big halfback, Earl Hagan. His triple threat abilities have fitted in nicely with the 55th's speedy, deceptive attack. Along with him the Red and White have a speedy quarterback in George Martin and a hard-plunging fullback in Johnny Krull.

The forward will will depend on the playing of Joe Gustitus, Al Gallow, Leigh Tobin and Bill Smith.

The backfields of both elevens look fairly even in talent but the Third seems to have an edge in the line. They've got a multitude of heavy fast-moving linesman which may prove too much for the smaller Engineer squad to contend with.

10th Armored Is Visited By Gen. Bolling

Brigadier General Alexander R. Bolling, assisting chief of staff; G-1, of the Army Ground Forces, visited the 10th Armored Division last week for a conference with Major General Paul W. Newgarden, commander of the 10th.

He was welcomed by General Newgarden at Division headquarters. There he inspected the guard of honor composed of crack men of the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion. The Third Armored Regiment band played the "General's March."

After the brief ceremony General Bolling was introduced to the Division staff officers and later attended a luncheon in his honor at the Officer's Mess.

Those present were: Generals Newgarden and Bolling; Colonel Joseph A. Cranston, executive officer, visiting with General Bolling; Colonel Julian E. Raymond, division chief of staff; Lt. Colonel William E. Shambora, an assistant to the ground forces surgeon; Lt. Colonel William F. Nee, special service officer, with General Bolling's party; Lt. Colonel John F. Landig, division G-1; Lt. Colonel T. H. Allen, division G-3; Major Michael D. Bussemi, commanding officer of the 80th Medical Battalion; Major Edwin S. Wallace, acting division surgeon; Major Russell C. Hinote, division special service officer and Captain Roger A. Rawley, aide to General Newgarden.

3rd Armored Reg't Nine Wins Tiger World Series

Yonchuk, Lanhan Star In 10th Armored Baseball Compete

Displaying the same brand of hard hitting that won them the National League championship, the 3rd Armored Regiment baseball team pounded out two victories in a row to win the "Tiger World Series" over the Maintenance Battalion.

The Green and White nine took last Tuesday's game 9 to 7 and came back the following day to trim the Maints, American loop winners, 10 to 3, to win the 10th Armored's best 2 out of 3 series.

Series hero honors go to the 3rd Armored's Walter Yonchuk and "Lefty" Lanhan. Yonchuk led the ex-cavalmen in the opener with two tremendous triples and a single while Lanhan bagged three for three in Thursday's clincher, crossing the plate three times himself.

Failure of Ed Brunc to hurl his usual standard of high-class ball proved disappointing. Brunc, strike-out star of the American Loop, was no puzzle to Lieutenant Nazzaro's men as they pounded him freely in the opener. And in the final game the tired Brunc had to be recalled to the mound in the very first inning as Maint hurler Ed Knudsen proved ineffective.

The pressure was on the Maintaineers during both games for not once were they in the lead.

In the opener, the 3rd jumped to a 4 to 0 start in the second inning on singles by Lanhan, Hamilton, Snyder, Bashaw and a long triple by Yonchuk.

The lead looked good as quiet-working Joe Lacks set the Maints down with little trouble. But in the fourth, Garland Frye, the Maintaineer's top hitter, opened up with a triple to start a four-run rally as two walks, an error, and singles by "Red" Ezra and Catcher Valandri knotted the score.

The Green and White came right back with two singles and Center Fielder Hamilton's long double to give them a lead they never surrendered.

In the final game, Maint Hurler Ed Knudsen showed no control as he gave up four walks, a single and a double to Johnny Snyder for a four-run lead in the first inning.

The 3rd Armored kept picking up runs off Brunc as Pitcher Paul Curran twirled himself out of one jam after another until he was relieved in the eighth by John Hammond.

Capt. Feldman Named Major

Captain Harry B. Feldman of the 10th Armored Division has been promoted to the rank of major. Major Feldman is the Division's Chemical Warfare Service Officer. Before his assignment to the Tenth, he headed the War Department Civilian Protection School at Amherst College, Mass.

He is a graduate of the Chemical Warfare School at Edgewood Arsenal, Md., and formerly was professor of physical chemistry at the Worchester Polytechnic Institute.

54th Inantry Wears Shield

Officers and enlisted men of the 10th Armored Division's 54th Infantry soon will be wearing their handsome and historical shield.

The shield, blue for Infantry, has a gold band which was taken from the Coat-of-Arms of the Province of Alsace in France where the Regiment saw its first and hardest service in World War I. It also has a ragged tree trunk which denotes the Meuse-Argonne offensive of 1918 in which the 54th took part.

Promotions

The following promotions are announced in the 10th Armored Division:

Staff Sergeant Samuel K. Reeves of the 420th F. A. Battalion has been promoted to the rank of Technical Sergeant. He has recently transferred from Battery "C" to Headquarters Company.

In the 11th Armored Regiment, the following have been promoted: To be Staff Sergeant, George R. Lee. To be Technicians 5th Grade Jesse S. Alexander, Roger W. Barney and Harold W. Wheeler.

Supply Battalion announces the following promotion. To be T-4, Edmund Bentkowski. To be T-5, Burneze Compton.

Supply Executive Of 10th Armored Named Captain

First Lieutenant Richard A. Webb, Executive Officer of the Supply Battalion, 10th Armored Division, was promoted to the rank of Captain.

Captain Webb was commissioned a 2nd. Lieut. in the Cavalry Reserve in 1932. He was ordered to extended active duty in 1940.

Captain Webb has served with the old 11th Cavalry, now the 11th Armored Regiment. While with that organization, he served as regimental adjutant.

Captain Webb is a resident of San Francisco, Calif., and is a graduate of Wayne University, Detroit, Mich. He is married and has one son.

Hq. Quiz Team Has Close Shave

Coming from behind on the last round of questions, the officers of Division Headquarters Company, 10th Armored Division, nosed out the officers of the 420th Field Artillery Battalion team in a spirited quiz contest held last week at Service Club No. 2 in the Sand Hill Area. The final score was 355 to 350.

Capt. C. F. Meinzinger and Lieuts. Byford Long, Thomas O'Rorke and Horace McIlroy were members of the winning team. The 420th team was composed of Lieuts. Donald Goings, William Gaffken, William Milton and Howard Larson.

A carton of cigarettes was awarded to the winning team by Mrs. Winifred Baker, Senior Hostess of the Service Club.

Corporal James E. Frye of the Division public relations office served as master of ceremonies with Master Sergt. Saul Miller acting as timer. Sergts. Gayle Mattingly and Sanford Axelrod were the scorers.

Weight Lifting Classes Given

Over 100 Officers And Men Enrolled

Sergeant Martin D. Medved's unusual class in weight lifting, wrestling, and gymnastics is rapidly gaining in popularity. These classes, open to officers and enlisted men, are held nightly at the 11th Armored Regiment's recreation hall and now number over one hundred members.

"These weight lifting exercises will put a man in better condition than anything I know of," claims Medved, who holds the title of Wisconsin's "Perfect Man." After a few short weeks of training," he says, "the muscles start to develop, much to the startled surprise of many students. And with the development there's broadening at the shoulders, a thinning at the waists."

Weight lifting, apparently is a scientific exercise. A score card, checked daily, is kept for each individual. Flaws are determined, corrected and a training schedule set up for every man. Pupils are segregated into two general classes—reduction of weight and increase of weight. It's Medved's object to weigh every man into hardened, muscular shape.

He's also giving the men the low down on jiu jitsu. So Mr. Jap, beware!

Major Lichirie Is Lt. Col.

Was Star Hurdler For West Point

It's Colonel "Corny" now, rather than Major "Corny" in the 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion. The nickname (which isn't used to his face, and has no reference to his sense of humor) is short for Cornelius A. Lichirie, Commander of the Recons, who has just been upped to Lieutenant Colonel.

The men of the 90th will tell you that Colonel "Corny" is in the groove. His subordinate officers will tell you that they have as yet to meet the Colonel's equal when it comes to versatility. They know also that you can't bluff the Colonel and it's a rare man that can out-talk him.

Colonel Lichirie has a flare for talking which dates back to his collegiate debating team days. Today, whether conducting the bi-weekly tactics school for officers and non-coms, or correcting a man's position on the firing range, he'll spare no pains in making his point clear.

A New Yorker by birth, Colonel Lichirie entered New York University for a pre-medical course. He was graduated in 1927, winning high scholastic honors as a Phi Beta Kappa megber. However, he dropped medicine and four years later graduated from the United States Military Academy where he starred as a hurdler on the West Point track team.

He served three years in the Philippines with the cavalry before being transferred to the 1st Regiment, 1st Armored Division, then at Fort Knox. Prior to his service in the Philippines Colonel Lichirie was on C. C. duty in Idaho and Oregon.

He has travelled widely in Europe, the Balkans and the Orient.

In 1934 he married the former Miss Charlotte Rohrbeck of Mount Vernon, New York where the Colonel now makes his home. He has two children, Karina and Cornelius, aged four and one respectively.

Eight Officers Complete Course In Carbine, Rifle

Eight officers of the 54th Infantry, 10th Armored Division, have completed a course in the new U. S. Carbine weapon and "refresher" studies with the M-1 Rifle at the Fort Benning Infantry School on the main post. They are:

Second Lieutenants Walter H. Lare, Ray J. Yantis, Watler K. Holehouse, Matthew A. Matson, Jr., Vincent C. Gorman, John E. Askew, Nathan G. Alderman and Norris L. Watkins.

At the same time, five others attended the same school, receiving instruction on the machine gun. The list included: Second Lieutenant Kenneth L. Huffman, John M. Waddell, Robert N. Smith, George H. Sparks and Maurice B. Sanders.

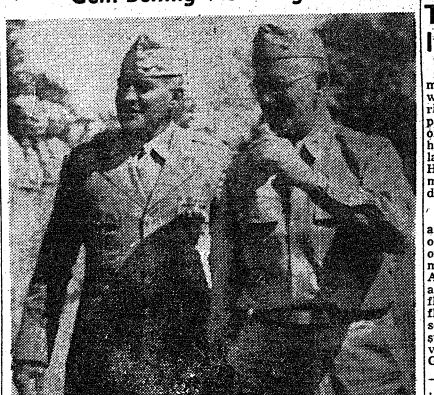
Field Artillery Unit Sends 5 To School

Two officers and three non-commissioned officers of the 10th Armored Division's 420th F. A. Battalion have recently left to attend Armored force schools. They are:

Captain Herbert Benson and Lieutenant Theodore Hamer who are attending the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Okla.

Staff Sergeant Aaron McQuown is attending the Tank Maintenance School at Fort Knox, Ky.

Corporal Edward Schumacher is at the Clerical School at Fort Knox, Ky. and Corporal James S. Verlenden is also at Fort Knox attending the Gunnery School.



JUST MARRIED

Corporal Louis C. Galli of the 423rd F. A. Battalion, 10th Armored Division, was married recently while on furlough to Miss Alice Q. Iacuanielf.

Corporal Galli hails from Cougers, New York. His bride's home is in South Ozone Park, New York.

The couple will reside in Columbus.

3rd Armored Grid Team Prepares For All Comers

Gregory To Have Star-Studded 11 For Fort League

The big Green and White football eleven of the 3rd Armored Regiment is rapidly being molded into a powerful, well-drilled football machine that intends to make things mighty tough for the rest of the teams in the Fort Benning Football League.

Captain Lee Gregory has welded together a fast-breaking, deceptive attack that he hopes will spell headaches for his rival coaches.

The roster fairly bristles with speedy, hard-hitting backs. In the quarterback slot Captain Gregory has Al Litwak, who to date has been running the club with the finesse of a past master. In a tough eight-game schedule last year, Litwak played all but two minutes for the fast C. R. T. C. eleven at Fort Riley.

PILE-DRIVING FULLBACKS

Alternating at fullback the 3rd has two pile-drivers in "Big Chief" Carney and Peterson. Captain Gregory says a coach could hardly ask for two better line plungers. Other ball carriers in the backfield which is still undergoing changes are: Wargo, Linscott, Roettger, Allamong and Laskosky.

In the forward wall, Line Coach John Flanagan, a disciple of Hunk Anderson, has a heavy, fast moving crew of linemen. Like Anderson, he's a stickler for the fundamentals and has been putting his crew through hard blocking and tackling drills. At the tackles he's got a pair of hard charging two hundred pounders in Dan Quarcione and John Leshko who are counted on to give enemy backs plenty of trouble.

At right end the Third Tankers have George Jenkins, who was an outstanding wingman for L. S. U.

There's a host of other good linemen for Coach Flanagan to choose from. Right now his big worry is selecting his starters among Stokesbury, Hamilton, Hammond, Marsey, Baldwin, Swatsig, Taylor, Kneeland, Robinson, Bordner, Marsyada, Padgett, Fuller, Quinn, Hudock, Gedgowd and Pood.

35 M.P.H Limit For Army Vehicles

A speed limit of 35 miles per hour has been set for all Army automotive vehicles within the continental United States except when for urgent military reasons higher speeds are essential, the War Department has announced.

This action was taken to conserve rubber, since speeds above 35 miles per hour cause rapid wearing away of tread rubber on tires. The order applies to both passenger and truck vehicles.

Fort Benning transportation officials several months ago took action to conserve rubber and fuel wherever possible. Government transportation is used only when necessary and the speed limit for the post is 25 miles an hour and in some sections of the post proper the limit is 15 miles an hour.

It was just too much for the Corporal. Shyness possessed him and he bashfully refused the opportunity for which most soldiers would have remained on KP forever.

Chaplain's Corner...

CHAPLAIN T. G. PROCTOR, Jr.

A very learned and a very good man once came to Jesus with his problems. He was a teacher and a leader. He was a man who was concerned about the problems of his people—political, social and religious problems. We can assume that he wanted to be of unselfish service to his people.

People then were very much like people everywhere today. Their temptations, their trials, their vices were very similar to those of our people in modern times. There was religious indifference and unbelief in God. There was excessive intemperance in the use of alcoholic drinks. There was immorality with its attending diseases. There was insanity and crime. Many were selfish and greedy. This great teacher and leader, like some today, wanted to do something to correct the conditions of his people. He wanted the land to be a better place in which to live,—wanted fewer temptations for the children of the coming generation. What could he do?

It was good that Nicodemus came to the right person—Jesus. It would be wise if our people did the same today. Jesus had the answer. This answer was not a method which entailed a long process. He didn't, at this time, say quit this and that bad habit. He didn't give a long list of "do's" and "don'ts." Rather he struck at the heart of the matter. He said, "Ye must be born again." He meant that as long as men desire to do harmful things, they'll do them. Change that desire, give them a new heart, a new spirit—and that Spirit must come from above. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and call these things will be added." Let men be born and led of the Spirit of God and their lives will be different. For "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

Men are the same today. Sin is the same. God is the same. His cure is the same. Jesus says, "Ye must be born again." John 3: 7.

However, the pilot of the plane must be on a regularly assigned duty.

The regulation reads:

"Military, Naval, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard personnel, while on leaves of absence, furlough, or on detached service, may be permitted by commanding officers of Army Air Forces station or higher authority to ride as passengers on flights in Army aircraft when such flights are incident to a regularly scheduled mission, and provided such transportation does not involve additional expense to the Government.

AN ARMY WIFE Shops in Columbus

by EVE

Maybe winter won't be here for a while, but the touch of cold weather and the tinge of red on the dogwood lead us to believe that we can expect a change of season soon. Doesn't everyone look nice in dark things? We must have looked pretty sad in the remnants of a summer wardrobe to make a change of clothing so noticeable. Fall is a grand time to do all the things you've thought about during the summer. Resolutions are new and ideas for carrying them out are many. Here's some ideas I found in the stores the last time I went to town.

Anticipating the spirit of these bright new resolutions KIRVEN'S has planned something special for the women of Fort Benning and Columbus. They are presenting a technicolor film entitled Ninety-seven Salon Secrets for the Home." Coming at a time when hours spent at the beauty parlor seriously conflict with busy hours, this film showing simplified methods of that famous house of Dorothy Gray cosmetics, that can be used in our own homes to revive the well groomed look, is especially timely. A fashion show with the intriguing title "Heads Up—Hearts Up—Dress Up" will follow the film showing. The show will be held in the Ralston Hotel, and since the space limits the audience, KIRVEN'S will give for the asking, a ticket for admission. Monday, October 12th at 3:30 p. m. is the day set aside for members of the Woman's Club. October 14th at 3:30 p. m. will be a showing for the general public. On the same date at 8:30 p. m., career girls will be invited to attend. On October 15th at 3:30 p. m. there will be another showing for the general public. Tickets will be mailed promptly if you phone Kitty Kay's Shopping Service. Tickets will also be available in the store. A combination of instruction for sleek grooming and a fashion show has an irresistible appeal for me. Pull up your car with friends, shop, have lunch in town and finish a big day at the Ralston Hotel for that special Woman's Club date on October 12th.

When you see the lovely young fashion conscious girls buying a special type of shoe, you know it's passed severe critics. Their gay, young lives are filled with dates and important occasions. They are fully aware of the necessity of trim femininity in footgear. Their choice this year for important cocktail, tea and Sunday night supper dances is the engaging I. Miller sling pump from MILLER-TAYLOR. It comes in soft black and brown suede with a pinkish plastic buckle emphasizing the fore shortened shoe. The total effect is one of smart appropriateness for important occasions. The second choice for the season is the bump-toe spectator pump. This perennial favorite of the fashion-wise woman looks new with the unusual named toe-lined, designed to make the foot look tiny and trim. It comes in a luscious combination of tan calf and brown suede. It's available too in black and all tan calf. Perfect for the town and country type of clothes we wear so much.

Seventy-eight days until Christmas, and that isn't too much time if you're planning that most personal of gifts, a photograph for the folks at home. Family group pictures are generally classed as pretty old fashioned stuff. Well, we've returned to a lot of old fashioned things, one of them being the realization of the deepness of family ties. You who will spend the first Christmas away from your home should consider what a fine portrait will mean to those who will miss you. AIME DUPONT, on Broadway, has a genius photographer capable of giving a family group an air of inexpressable charm. There is nothing of the stiff posed look that characterized the old time atrocities we found in our albums. Maybe you'd like it for yourself to remember when you were together as a family. Families have a way of breaking up these days. All of us must catch the precious things we have at the present moment. For ourselves and those who love our close ones, look in at DUPONT'S soon and see if I'm not right that they're something special in photographic artists.

Our homes are coming in for critical inspection as we face the possibility of the coming winter months. Our gardens will no longer be able to supply the bright touch of color that enlivened it during the summer months. What better could we do than add that colorful touch with new drapes. SEARS-ROEBUCK has some beautiful drapery material in their Dust-Rite line that's exceptional in quality and design for the price asked. Try the splashy flower print against a cream background. Decorators are stressing the trend toward Victorian flower prints in great profusion. Be sure your drapes are long and don't skimp on the width. Make enough pairs and you'll have a basic curtain supply you can use in any home. Time and again you'll give thanks for drapes that can be hung immediately after unpacking and the flexibility of decoration a goodly amount of matching drapes can give you.

— — V — —

The horrors of unpacking and subsequent tragedy in finding your loveliest piece of furniture hopelessly damaged is lightened somewhat if you can get your broken treasure to a competent firm for repair and refinishing. THWEATT & SON on Broadway are qualified to repair broken legs, carving and serious damage to the finish of your piece. They specialize in that hand-rubbed lacquer finish that defies watermark and liquor stains Those of you who are avid antique collectors should look over their stock. They have some beautiful pieces that will give a home a breath of another period of our country. There are some unusual glass pieces too, for collectors who are constantly searching for fine things in this line.

Fine town and country clothes are a specialty at SEALY'S They have the hardest-of-all-to-find, 100% virgin wool in soft Shetland, Dunstan, Norspun and Harris Tweed, which will be precious assets to the wardrobe with the future uncertainty of wool for women's garments. Loved by the army wife for general wear on post errands and travel is the great coat. It comes in solid colors and tweeds. This type of box coat will be used as a perfect ensemble for your suit or slung casually over the shoulders of your wool sport dress. Those less sport minded might prefer the fitted lines of the untrimmed coats. This type is a perfect companion for your silk dress as well as sheer woolens. If you'd like a matching three-piece outfit, than which there is nothing smarter, you have many of those to choose from. Impeccable tailoring, soft wearable colors, make these outfits the darling of the wardrobe.

The ORIGINAL LINEN and TINY DOT SHOP is pretty proud of that superlative Richelieu banquet cloth they have in the window. Tiny stitches by patient nuns make this an heirloom piece of beauty to use for the most special occasions. It is four yards long. The napkins are huge dinner size. Luxury, of course, but wouldn't it be wonderful to own? The nippy days we had last week must have set the mothers to thinking of warm clothes for the toddlers. Leggin sets in soft wool to keep the chubby knees of the one to six year toddlers warm are stocked in a generous variety of colors and styles.

— — V — —

A dress to turn heads and bring forth the comment: "Who's that stunning woman?" is the dream desire of every clothes conscious woman. The PATRICIA SHOP in the Ralston Hotel has just received some cocktail dresses that defy the most extravagant Hollywood adjectives. I, myself, am speechless and say merely, "Oh—!" They are confections to bridge the gap between the tendency of short dresses and the desire to dress in formal clothes. One beautiful model is sleekly sophisticated with a creamy off beige shirtwaist top. It is closely sprinkled with tiny rhinestones that glitter like stars. Rhinestones stud the self-covered buttons. The black crepe skirt falls in the flattering peg top seen in this year's dress. Another creation has a sheer top of black marquisette covered with all over tracery of sequins. Irridescent pinkish flowers and green leaves against the sheer black sequined background make the bodice of this dress an achievement in designers art. The black crepe short skirt has the important soft front fullness. There is a two piece model, the jacket crusted with black sequins. A dizzy array of big-time party elegance and enough to turn the head of the wearer or beholder.

Don't let the unfinished effect of SAKS FIFTH AVENUE SHOP on Cusseta Road fool you. They're open for business and that means the discriminating and hard-to-please officer will find the uniform he's been wanting. Absolutely tops is the lightweight topcoat, tailored to military specifications. It's waterproof, but much too elegant to be called a raincoat. It's in that silky, close weave, 100% all-wool gabardine that responds to fine tailoring and beautiful stitching. Clear bone buttons and a fine leather covered buckle is especially noticeable. There's a soft wool lining that can be removed with a yank of the zipper, giving great adaptability to weather conditions. An officer who likes a touch of Esquire and dash in his uniform will choose this for special dress occasions. The stock sizes of blouses carried by this outstanding shop for military needs are proving to fit with tailored perfection, with minimum alterations. There's a New York fitter to assure perfection.

Reception Center C. O. Has Responsible Job

Commands One Of Most Efficient Post Units

Ulric James

Heavy is the responsibility that rests on the shoulders of Lt.-Colonel Ulric N. James, Commanding Officer of Reception Center, the largest unit of its kind in the country. Due to his training, experience, ability, character, and other qualities of leadership, he has the distinction of commanding one of the smoothest running and most efficient units on the post.

His military career dates back to the gruesome days of 1916 when he served on the Mexican Border for one year with the 32nd and 10th Divisions as 1st Lieutenant in the Field Artillery. Since that date, he has served with distinction on both military and civil life. For several years he served as United States Property and Disbursing Officer, and later as Contracting and Purchasing Officer for the Alabama National Guard with the rank of Lt. Colonel. After World War No. I, he served in the Air Corps and qualified as a pilot. Since February, 1941, he has been on active duty with the Reception Center, Fort Benning, Georgia, where he has served efficiently as Battalion Commander, Executive Officer, and Commanding Officer. During the time he has been with the Reception Center, it has developed from a comparatively small unit to a very large one, and he is to be commended for the high quality of leadership which he has exhibited as Commanding Officer of the unit.

When called to active duty in August, 1940, Colonel James was employed by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company as Assistant General Manager in Charge of Sales.

Capt. Cohen Weds Miss Evelyn Mendel

Miss Anita Evelyn Mendel of Dalton, Ga., and Capt. Samuel Z. Cohen, medical officer assigned to the 423rd Armored Field Artillery Battalion, were married Sunday evening at 8 o'clock in Chapel No. 1, Tenth Armored Division. Chaplain Samson A. Shain officiated in the presence of a number of friends of the bride and groom.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. Simon Mendel of Dalton. The groom holds a degree in surgical chiropody. He attended Penn. State College, Temple University, and the University of Chicago.

Prize Pictures Are Exhibited By Special Services

Prize-winning photographs will be on display in Fort Benning service clubs during October, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer, has announced.

The prints are photographs that won high awards in the $5,000 contest sponsored by Popular Photography Magazine during 1940. A total of 103 were selected to make up the second annual Popular Photography Magazine traveling salon, which is being sent to Army camps throughout the nation for exhibit in service clubs.

The display are being shown Oct. 5-10 in Service Club 4, and will be displayed Oct. 12-17 in Service Club 2; Oct. 19-14, Service Club 3, and Oct. 26-31 in Service Club 1.

Capt. Crawford Completes Course In A. G. School

Captain Ralph C. Crawford, personnel officer, 124th Infantry, has returned to duty with the Regiment after completing the Adjutant General's School at Fort Washington, Md.

According to Captain Crawford the school presents the modern concept that the administrative officer is not a super-clerk, moving papers from one basket to another, but is an operating officer on whom rests the responsibility of executive decisions. Students are taught not only the science of administration, but also the art of leadership.

The School has its own research division, which is an aid in developing new methods of administration, developing and revising blank forms and publications, procuring, testing, and experimenting with new and existing items of office equipment.

Major Dresser Deserts Tactics For Paratroopers

Major Holland L. Dresser, after 10 months as tactics instructor at The Infantry School, has decided to get back into a more rigorous life, and has joined Uncle Sam's glamor boys, the parachutists.

Major Dresser has always led a more or less athletic life. At college he was active in many sports and became lightweight boxing champion at University of New Hampshire. For the past 10 years, until inducted into service 14 months ago, he was mathematics teacher and coach of football, skiing and baseball at Proctor Academy, Andover, N. H.

Major Dresser, although not out of condition, is not in quite the tip top shape he kept himself while participating in athletics at Andover. He has kept himself lean and wiry, though, weighing only 132 pounds as against the 139 pounds he fought at in college. He expects he'll be able to take the strenuous physical routine of the parachutists without any serious physical pains.

A small airplane with a range of 350 miles and designed for landings on highways has been developed for air ambulance use.

Lt. Tally Arrives At Lawson Field

Second Lieut. Paul Tally reported for duty at Lawson Field this past week.

Lieut. Tally is an outstanding athlete. He plays football, basketball and polo. He also played baseball professionally.

A civic leader in Corpus Christi, Tex., he was a member of the Lion's Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the Corpus Christi Polo Club, the Corpus Christi General Insurance Exchange and is past president of the Corpus Christi Underwriters Association.

Col. Massey Gives Us Low Down on Doughboy

The average young American entering the Army today is 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighs 144 pounds, has a chest measurement of 33-1-4 inches, a 31-inch waistline, wears a 9-1-2 D shoe and a size 7 hat. So say the records of the Quartermaster Corps which has directed the manufacturing, fitting and issuing of clothing for several million of these soldiers in the past two years.

These figures were divulged by Colonel Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning quartermaster, in discussing the fact that it costs the government $404.65 to feed, clothe and shelter the average soldier during his first year in service.

Of this amount, the Quartermaster Corps spends $107.89 for clothing to start Johnny Doughboy off on his service career and $34.16 for maintenance and repair. This does not include laundry service for which the soldier himself pays $1.50 a month. Another $67.40 is spent for individual and barracks equipment.

Uncle Sam also has to put out about 48 cents per day or $175.20 a year through the Q. M. C. for food per soldier. This is an amazingly low subsistence figure, even with shrewd shopping, quantity cooking, and absolute elimination of waste, Colonel Massey pointed out.

And the soldiers are more than well fed. The Benning official listed the average weekly ration of the men at the Fort as an example. Benning men get 4 pounds 6 ounces of fresh beef, 14 ounces of chicken, 12 ounces of fresh pork, 7 eggs, (one a day or two some days at the discretion of the mess sergeant), 9 pounds and 3 ounces of fresh and canned fruits, 14 ounces of coffee, four pounds and six ounces of potatoes, and four pounds of fresh and evaporated milk.

Oh, Lord; Give Us Men, And Lord Fills The Bill

His Hobby Is Horses And Cavalry Almost Got Him

They're training MEN in the Third Student Regiment these days and there's a MAN at the head of the show by the name of Colonel Robert H. Lord.

In his quiet and sincere way, Col. Lord has guided and welded the regiment from a loosely knit group of approximately 2,000 men, when it was activated last March, to its present status, a smooth functioning group of many times its original strength.

Born in Delaware, Ohio, Col. Lord received his degree from Ohio Wesleyan in 1913. While there, besides making a name academically, he starred on the basketball court and was a hard-hitting outfielder on the baseball team.

LIKES CAVALRY

His one hobby is horses, and the Infantry was on the verge of losing him several times when he seriously considered going into the Cavalry because of his interest in horseback riding.

The Colonel's military career started in 1911 when he became a member of the Ohio National Guard. He became a member of the Regular Army in 1917 and was made a Captain in 1918. 1920 to '23 found him in Panama and he spent 1927 and 1928 at Fort Benning.

He was in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of War in Washington from 1934 to 1938 and in 1941 joined the Infantry School with the First Training Regiment

TOOK REGT. LAST MARCH

March of 1942 found him taking over the reigns of the Third Student Training Regiment.

Now under his guidance the Third Regiment is turning out thoroughly trained, tough and ready 2nd Lieutenants that are being sent to take their places in our ever expanding army in all parts of the world.

The proof that the graduates are good MEN lies in the fact that over 50 per cent of the officers now in the crack Third Student Training Regiment are former students of the Regiment.

The week's best novel at the Garrison Library is James Aldridge's "Signed with Their Honor." Through the experience of John Quayle, young British flying officer, is told the desperate story of 80 Squadron which was shunted from Libya to Greece in a hopeless attempt to defend the Greeks against the tide of Italian plans sweeping over Greek troops. Along with the heroism and growing despair of the aviators is the tenderness of Quayle's love for the Greek girl, Helen Stangou, whom he married and lost. This book is probably the most stirring and memorable novel yet written about the war.

Among the new historical novels are John Jenning's "Gentleman Ranker" and Philip Van Doren Stern's "The Drums of Morning." "Gentleman Ranker" is a story of pioneer adventure in Virginia, Maryland, and western Pennsylvania in the late 1750s. The hero of the story is Stephen Trent, the young black sheep of an English family, who sails to the new world with an army made up very largely of water front outcasts from London and consequently goes through Braddock's expedition across the Allegheny mountains. "The Drums of Morning" deals with the anti-slavery movement in the United States. This story has all the requirements for historical romance—suspenses, drama, violence, and romantic love.

The recommended non-fiction title this week is Emil Ludwig's "The Mediterranean." In this book is presented the fascinating story of the Mediterranean region and its peoples from the Phoenicians up to the outbreak of the present war. Love of Greece is the theme of the book. To Mr. Ludwig "The civilization of Europe was begun wholly on the little scrap of land we call Greece." Readers of the author's earlier book, "the Nile," will certainly enjoy this latest book from Mr. Ludwig's pen.

"With your bare hands you can beat the man who wants to kill you," says the author of this book on how to win in hand-to-hand fighting, as taught to the British Commandos, and U. S. Armed Forces. By drawings and by brief descriptions this book tells how.

AMERICA ORGANIZES TO WIN THE WAR. A handbook on the American war effort by twenty-one world figures. 395 pp., New York, Harcourt, Brace and Company. $2.00.

As its title suggests, AMERICA ORGANIZES TO WIN THE WAR, outlines the war and peace aims of the United States and tells how we propose to carry them out. Such matters as the organization of our fighting men, ways in which individual citizens can fit into the war effort, the organization of our channels of communication, etc., are discussed by well-known writers, among them, John Chamberlain, Paul de Kruif, Waldemar Kaempffert, Dorothy Canfield Fisher. Finally, war and peace aims are set forth in selections from the most important speeches of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, and the book is climaxed by the essay, "Foundations of Peace," by Vice-President Wallace.

ONLY THE STARS ARE NEUTRAL. By Quentin Reynolds. 309 pp., New York, Random House, $2.50.

Quentin Reynolds' eye-witness account of England's indomitable courage through ceaseless bombings, of Russia's rallying to stop the Nazis of the battles against Rommel's tanks in the North African desert, etc. Intimate stories of Russian government, military leaders, foreign diplomats and correspondents, as well as unconventional portraits of well-know leaders—Cripps, Steinhardt, Harriman, Hopkins, Beaverbook—are scattered through the book.

THE UNITED STATES ARMY. By Earl C. Ewert, Lt. Col., U. S. A., 72 pp., Boston, Little, Brown and Company. $1.25.

Lt. Col. Ewert gives first hand information on how the Army is organized, how each branch is trained, what special abilities each branch requires, and what the insignia and uniforms of each are. Fact-crammed descriptions of the various weapons—their rate of fire, accuracy and size—lead up to an account of how the Army is used in actual battle formation.

DECEMBER 7, THE FIRST 30 HOURS. By the correspondents of TIME, LIFE and FORTUNE. 230 pp., New York, Alfred A. Knopf. $2.00.

December 7 was written in just a little over 30 hours by 50 journalists—50 working reporters called from golf courses — and football games, from unfinished midday dinners, symphony concerts and favorite radio programs, to tell the editors of TIME, LIFE and FORTUNE how, on that Sunday, war came to the United States. The book is made up of on-the-spot reports from principal cities throughout the nation.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. E. E. WHITTEMORE

The smooth-skinned, slightly stubble-chinned, keen-eyed American youth of 18 and 19 was in the public eye this week after President Roosevelt's report to the nation Monday night in which he recommended calling these youth into the services to insure armed forces geared to the spirit and hardihood of youth.

Justifying this important declaration, the President has this to say. His sentiments can be appreciated by soldiers already in the service:

"All of our combat units that go overseas must consist of young, strong men who have had thorough training. A division that has an average age of 23 or 24 is a better fighting unit than one which has an average of 33 or 34. The more such troops we have in the field, the sooner the war will be won and the smaller will be the loss in casualties."

The President discussed other matters vitally important to the war effort. The chief executive put the manpower shortage in a nutshell when he said the objective must be "the right number of people in the right place at the right time."

Added the President:

". . . we shall be compelled to stop workers from moving from one war job to another as a matter of personal preference; to stop employes from stealing labor from each other; to use older men and handicapped people and more women, even grown boys and girls . . . to replace men of military age and fitness; to train new personnel for essential war work; and to stop the wastage of labor in all non-essential activities."

The President's views on the possible rationing of manpower to insure labor for the farm fields and war-production factories were echoed by other national leaders. On a second front, the President said:

"As I have said before, major decisions of strategy have been made. One of them on which we have all agreed relates to the necessity of diverting enemy forces from Russia and China to other theaters of war by new offensives against Germany and Japan. An announcement of how these offensives are to be launched, and when and where, cannot be broadcast over the radio at this time."

Other national news attracting attention of busy Americans concerned taxes and rationing. The Senate passed and sent to conference with the House the 1942 War Revenue Bill which the Treasury estimated will yield $9 billion in new revenue annually. The new bill will make 42 to 44 million persons subject to federal taxes, compared with 28 million at present, and will bring total revenue up to $26 billion a year.

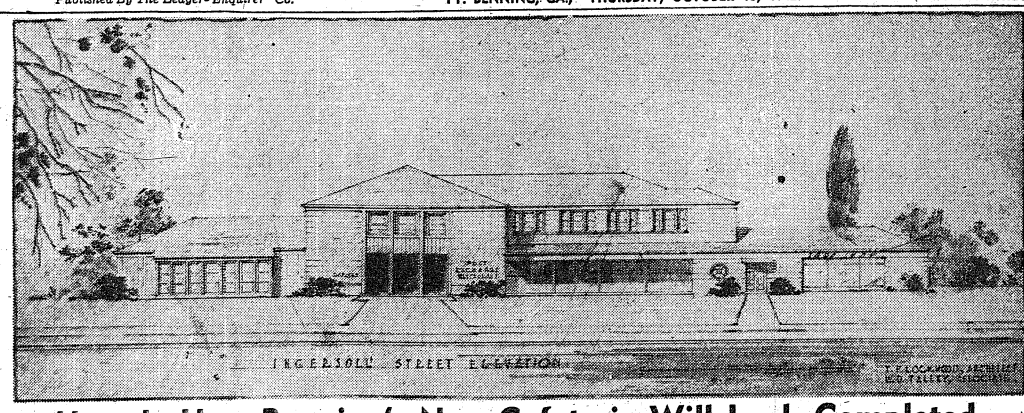
Price Administrator Henderson released a five-step government plan to keep every passenger car "rolling for essential mileage" throughout the war.

(1) Rationing of used tires and recaps and new tires now in stock, to provide as far as possible the minimum essential mileage to each of the nation's passenger cars.

(2) Actual control of each car's mileage through the rationing of gasoline to prevent unnecessary driving and to hold the national average down to 5,000 miles per car per year.

(3) Compulsory periodical inspection of all tires.

(4) Denial of gasoline and of tire replacement to drivers who persistently violate the national 35-mile an hour speed limit.



(5) Capacity use, through car sharing, of every car on every trip so far as possible.

The Board of War Communications ordered long distance telephone calls relating to the war effort and public safety be given priority over all other calls, effective Nov. 1. Calls concerning moving armed forces during combat operations, urgent orders for the armed forces and other such important calls should and will get priority. Here at Fort Benning authorities asked civilians to keep long distance calls to a minimum and asked the cooperation of all soldier personnel in making required calls "short and sweet."

The world-wide war continued with only lightly abated fury this last week on all the scattered battlefronts of the globe.

In Russia, the city of Stalingrad might have been largely rubble and blocks of ruined buildings but they were still Russian buildings, not German buildings. The Red Army still held Stalingrad, still moved down the Nazi infantry as they attacked and attacked. In addition, the amazing Russians were counter-attacking in strength on the German flanks and were making gains. Stalingrad may still fall, but regardless of its fate, the battle of Stalingrad this last two months has been a Russian victory never to be forgotten. Stalin, though, and the other millions of Russians might need both eyes to kill Nazis but they did glance

Here Is How Benning's New Cafeteria Will Look Completed

An Editorial
SOLDIERS ALSO CAN VOTE
(Reprinted From The Columbus Ledger)

We wonder if the armed forces of the United States—very definitely including the hosts at Benning!—understand their importance as citizens who possess the right to vote in the elections which will be held November 3?

As of September 16, when the Congress enacted the Soldiers Vote Act of 1942, the men who have offered their lives for their country came into possession of very special privileges—and obligations.

In sharp contradistinction to some other wars in which the act of donning a uniform was equivalent to disfranchisement, the New Army of the United States is genuinely a citizens' army.

It's right to vote on November 3—without payment of a poll tax or any other inhibiting circumstances—has been settled by special enactment.

However much we might disagree with the right of Congress to infringe the idea of States Rights even to accomplish the destruction of such a hideous caricature of democracy as the poll tax has come to be, we certainly have no quarrel with the result achieved, which is that every soldier, every Marine, and every Navy man has only to obtain and file an absentee ballot in order to register his vote on November 3.

The procedure is not too complicated. Every soldier away from his home state has only to write his home town registrar. Simply ask him for a ballot, and—do it now! Absentee voting regulations quite generally require that the request for a ballot be made not less than ten days prior to the election—which would make the 1942 deadline Saturday, October 24—and that it be returned promptly.

The Ledger urges every man at Benning—and at every other Army post within the range of our voice—to avail himself of this priceless heritage of freemen.

We say to them that democracy—and the processes which have made this spacious land a good place in which to live—are not alone threatened by our enemies abroad. They also are threatened by enemies at home—by weak men, or vicious men, or corrupt men, who stand an excellent chance of election in many sections of the country unless the men under arms make their voices heard.

You, the soldiers, sailors and marines of the United States, have it within your power to turn the 1942 elections whichever way you will.

You know—or should know—the caliber of the men who seek to go to Congress from your home communities. If they are good men, whose patriotism and skill are equal to the gigantic tasks imposed by war, then you owe them your suffrage. If they are weak men, or bad men, or reactionary men who still cling to the old "ostrich" ideologies which came so very near to being fatal at Pearl Harbor, then you owe it to your manhood to repudiate them.

The Congress which will be elected this fall may turn out to be the most important Congress in the history of your country.

These are the men who must implement your battalions, and strengthen your sinews.

If they are devoted to winning the war, then the fight will be over more quickly.

If, on the contrary, they are the sort of men who put politics and pressure groups and pork barrels ahead of patriotism, then it will be that much longer before you can nope to lay down your arms and go home as a victorious army.

We repeat—the armed forces of the United States could turn the 1942 elections, because they are upwards of 4,500,000 strong.

You are ready to give your lives to save the democratic idea, but you also have to remember that your country needs your voices as citizens.

Write your registrar today, and cast that absentee ballot! It is your right and also your profound duty.

Thrift Shop Renders Important Post Service

Everyone on the post should familiarize themselves with the Thrifty Shop operated by the Army Daughters Society of the post. It's the important business house on Wold avenue next to Dispensary A where so many officers and enlisted men go to secure furnishings for homes and apartments, temporary or otherwise during long or short sojourns at Benning.

The shop is open from 9 to 12 daily each morning except Thursdays when it closes at 5 p. m.

Almost everything needed by Benning families is bought or sold in the shop. There, one finds furniture, some of it quite beautiful and practically new, dishes, bric-a-brac, sporting goods, and even officers' clothing. The shop is patronized especially by student officers in the Infantry School who come here for the three-month course and bring their families along with them. They are interested in furnishings for that period of time only; therefore they usually bring the pieces back at the end of the period for re-sale, rather than have it shipped to the next station.

A volunteer truck service is provided the Thrifty Shop to pick up and deliver stock on the post proper free of charge. Off the post a nominal sum is charged by a trucking company?

Any articles turned over to the shop are sold on consignment for a ten per cent commission. All funds are used to help the families of needy enlisted men or of the indigent in the station hospital wards.

Mrs. Raymond C. Barlow is president of the Army Daughters Society. The Thrifty Shop is sponsored by Mrs. S. R. Tupper, an Army Daughter; and the manager and assistant manager are Mrs. Hamilton Thorn and Miss Venita Strain, respectively.

In these troubled times when war-time economy has caused shortages of many materials formerly consigned to civilian use and when money saved on necessities can be converted into war saving bonds and stamps, all residents of the post are being urged by the Thrifty Shop sponsors to take inventories of their attics and basements for items no longer needed in the homes but too valuable to be given away. The sponsors point out that a great service can be rendered to other families on the post seeking temporary furnishings by calling the Thrifty Shop. A greater service is rendered since ten per cent of the sales are turned over to charity.

First STR Is On Campaign Against V. D.

Claims Lowest Rate On Post; Drives For Perfect Record

The First Student Training Regiment, commanded by Colonel Thomas R. Gibson, has embarked on a campaign designed to establish a perfect record of no venereal diseases in the regiment.

The First Student Training Regiment has already done an excellent job in the Army-wide fight against the venereal disease menace, having at the present time the lowest rate on the post.

The program over at the First Student Training Regiment is realistic, straight forward, practical and, what's more important, workable. They are getting to the root of the program and are determined that the results will quickly bear out the contention of Colonel Thomas R. Gibson that if the men are thoroughly acquainted with all of the facts surrounding the venereal disease question: physical, moral, and military, that the 100 per cent cooperation of every man in the 1st will be secured.

Woolens Will Be Donned Oct. 19

Effective at reveille Oct. 19, the woolen uniform will be the prescribed dress of 4th Service Command troops and troops of the Infantry School Service Command. Previously Oct. 10 had been designated as the tentative date for the change from summer uniforms.

However, such personnel who, due to anticipatory planning, find it impracticable to continue wearing the cotton uniform until Oct. 19 may wear the prescribed uniforms."

Neckties will be worn at all times, both on and off the reservation.

Shown here breaking ground for the new exchange cafeteria and soda fountain at Fort Benning is Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of the post, while Firth Lockwood, the architect, and Maj. H. E. McGaffey, exchange officer, look on. The new restaurant will fill a long-apparent need on the post proper, where it will be located between the guest house and the Main Theater on Ingersoll Avenue. Message Center Veteran Thinks New Army Fine

Kushnetsky Served Under Gen. Marshall

He's the senior soldier in the Infantry School Service Command and he's in the army for the duration with everyone, even if he is due for retirement in 30 months.

In a few words that's the past and future of Master Sergeant Fishel Kushnetsky, chief of the Infantry School message center and grand old man of Company B of the Academic Regt.

Sergeant Kushnetsky was transferred into this organization when it was still at Fort Sill, Okla., in August 1915.

"I still have the order transferring me to the school of musketry," he proudly announced today as he stopped for a few minutes in the Company B dayroom. He exhibited the few typewritten sentences on a yellowed and thin piece of paper, ordering Pvt. Hushnetsky (yes, even master sergeants must start out as privates!) and two others from the 33rd Infantry, then stationed at Texas City, Tex., near Galveston.

HAS HAD 3 NAMES

That was so long ago the organization has had three names before it became the I. S. S. C. Originally it was the School of Musketry, then the Infantry School of Arms detachment, and third, the Infantry School detachment.

When Benning was founded in 1918 Kushnetsky was among the first trainload of some 300 soldiers to arrive in Columbus. It was on a Sunday morning, he recalls. At that time the area now occupied by one of America's largest military reservations was a cotton plantation. It wasn't until 1919 that the men were moved over dirt roads to Benning. They occupied six wooden buildings which stood on the site of the barracks occupied today by the 2th Infantry. The area was then known as Block 7.

Several of the original men who came here from Fort Sill are still on the post, although they joined the organization after Kushnetsky.

IN ARMY SINCE 1913

The sergeant has been in the army since December 5, 1913. And with that "G. I." background he has some definite ideas about the present war. "I'm positive we'll win," is the way he sums it. "And I'll be here until it's over, whether it be two years or ten."

He'd do it all over again. "I wouldn't change a thing. I've enjoyed the army. Why? Just because I enjoy life, I guess," he said.

Among the fondest military memories of the sergeant is the time when he served under the present chief of staff, General George C. Marshall. At that time the latter was a lt. colonel and assistant commandant of the Infantry School. That was 12 years ago, when he first took his place in the message center.

"What do I think of the new army?" he mused. "It's fine! The spirit is right. There is no complaining."

Sergeant Kushnetsky has not always been an American. He was born in what was once Byalystok, Russia, on May 27, 1888, coming to this country in 1906. "Byalystok was Russia then, but it isn't now," he smiled, a little nostalgically. Then, with an expression suggesting another reason he's in the army to win the war, he added. "It's nobody's—now."

WHAT'S IN A HORSE'S NAME?

What's in a name? Not much, if it's a horse's name. At any rate, the owner of Seabiscuit isn't in the Navy. Charles Howard parted from his horse to join the Army, instead, and has reported for duty as a captain with the West Coast Army Air Forces Training Center at Santa Ana, California.

NEW CAFE UNDERWAY

Building, To House Soda Fount, Will Be Finished By Jan. 15

Contracts have been let and excavation work started for a new restaurant, cafeteria and soda fountain, four times the capacity of the present restaurant, Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, announced Wednesday.

The new restaurant will be completed about Jan. 15, 1943, and will be ready for occupancy by Feb. 1, according to Maj. H. E. McGaffey, exchange officer and the man responsible for culminating long-postponed plans for the badly-needed restaurant and cafeteria.

The two-story, wooden structure which will house the restaurant, cafeteria and fountain, will be built in the area on Ingersoll Avenue between the Main Theater and the post guest house. It will be 188 feet long and 200 feet wide.

Start of the work of excavating for the foundation of the restaurant was important news at Fort Benning, where thousands of soldiers have long recognized the desperate need for a restaurant with adequate seating capacity to handle the crowds.

WILL SEAT 250

The new building will seat approximately 250 customers in comparison to the seating capacity of 66 persons in the present restaurant, where on some days nearly 2,000 persons have been fed. The restaurant will be in the center of the first floor, with the cafeteria in the wing toward the guest house and the soda fountain in the wing toward the Main Theater on Wold Avenue. A huge kitchen at the rear of the restaurant will serve both that and the cafeteria, and in back of the kitchen will be storage rooms and a small colored dining room, where Negro workers and civilians will be fed. This is an innovation and will fill a long-present need.

On the second floor will be the general offices of the exchange and the private offices of the exchange officer and assistant exchange officer as well as offices for auditors and for other visitors. In the basement will be the vaults of the exchange.

The present exchange restaurant in the Service Club and the soda fountain in the Doughboy Stadium building will be closed after the new restaurant opens. The restaurant space in the Service Club will be turned over to Service Club officials for their use.

The actual start of work on the new building marked the end of a long struggle by General Fulton, Major McGaffey and other Fort Benning officials to secure a new restaurant in the face of material shortages and other problems. General Fulton has long been interested in obtaining a new and enlarged restaurant for the post proper and he and Major McGaffey spent many hours in communication with Atlanta and Wash-

Parachute School Gets Second Class Of Canadians

A new class of 55 Canadian officers and men have arrived at the Parachute School at Fort Benning to take the parachute course, officials of the school announced Wednesday.

The men will be subjected to the same rigorous training which 27 of their countrymen recently completed in preparation for the organization of a Canadian parachute corps and school. The course is also designed to give a better understanding of American methods and create greater unity in training programs of the two nations.

The group includes six officers and forty-nine men, some of whom have already qualified as parachutists as prescribed by British standards. However, all will take the regular course set up for training American jumpers.

Bulletin

Special emphasis in the drive to enlist boys 18 and 19 years of age in the Army of the United States will be made during the period Oct. 14-18, Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, announced Wednesday. Gen. Fulton stated that the urgency of this campaign cannot be overemphasized.

A parade and several other events are planned for the period.

He added that all soldiers are urged to write their friends between these ages not already in the Army, telling them of our country's very great need of them and asking them to enlist.

Good Income Tax News Comes From Capital for Servicemen

Treasury Expects Congress To Abolish Tax Debts Owed

The millions of men already in the armed forces of the United States and the millions yet to be inducted will be interested in dispatches released from Washington concerning the payment of income taxes. The news is good considering the fact that the Congress is now in the process of making new tax laws to finance the war.

According to an anlysis of tax laws and Treasury Department regulations, men in the armed forces need pay no income taxes until six months after the end of the war. Those serving within the United States must file returns but pay no tax. Those serving outside the nation do not have to file returns until the end of the war.

Treasury officials were also reported confident that soldiers and sailors may never actually have to pay federal taxes on the money earned while serving in the armed forces. They are quoted as stating that they expect the Congress to pass legislation either during or after the war abolishing all tax debts owed by servicemen on their service pay.

In the case of enlisted men and lower ranking officers, those who are unmarried will be given $750 personal exemption, while married men will be allowed to earn up to $1,500 before they have to file a return for taxes.

Men soon to enter the armed forces need not worry about where they will get the money on their civilian income, according to Treasury officials.

DEBTS ARE SUSPENDED

Provisions of the revised Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act signed this week by President Roosevelt, suspends the debts men owe the Internal Revenue Department immediately upon their induction into the services. These debts, likewise, will not have to be paid until six months after the war, with no penalty attached.

But, if a man is inducted into the Army on March 14, 1943—the day before tax payments fall due—he will not have to pay any tax on his 1942 income until after the war. If he is inducted on March 16—the day after tax payment date—and elects to pay his taxes in quarterly installments, he will have to pay only the first, but not the other three.

Phone Company Outlines Suggestions to Doughboys

Clear the wires for Uncle Sam and Johnny Doughboy is the urgent request of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company to all civilians. The latter have been asked not to make any long distance calls unless they are absolutely necessary.

The request is designed to assure the quickest possible service on vital war calls reducing the load on long distance wires.

Service men at Benning are asked only to observe a few simple rules in placing their calls, so that they will not interfere with other more important messages; and so that they may assure themselves of the fastest possible service. These are:

Call by number when possible.

Try to have sufficient change ready to pay for the period of time they expect to talk.

Speak distinctly in a natural tone, with lips one-half inch from the transmitter. This saves repeating, which consumes valuable time.

Replace the receiver on the hook after a conversation so the operator will know the call has been completed.

On calls between soldiers and the folks back home, arrange to place the calls from this end. The homefolks have a fixed location and can usually be reached more quickly.

Please read all instructions displayed on cards and posters near the telephone.

This new request supplements an earlier one made during the summer, that civilians make their long-distance calls during the least-congested hours. But it goes further in that it urges elimination of all calls except the really necessary ones and asks that the essential calls be made brief. In addition all civilians have been asked to reduce their local calls by at least one-third.

Negro Vocalist With Second STR

A notable from the theatrical field is a member of the 4th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment. He is O. C. Archie (The Great) Harris, Negro vocalist who has played many of the top night clubs in the country.

His musical career began with the Versatile Four, a quartette which did feature and radio work and made plate history with their rendition of "Take Me To Your Heart Suzanne." The number was written by Carl Anderson, member of the quartette.

Harris then appeared on a program with The Ink Spots at the Trianon ballroom in Toledo, where his smooth basso profundo voice brought down the house and earned him the moniker of "Archie The Great."

21st QM Regimet Is Largest Army Truck Unit on Any Post

Its Vehicles Take Students To Infantry School Classes

Fort Benning's 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) claims the distinction of being the army's largest truck organization operating as a unit at one post. Commanded by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, this organization, by virtue of its size, is faced with tremendous responsibilities and numerous assignments and, from ever increasing reports, is carrying them out in a very creditable manner.

Originators of the giant trailer vans that daily carry thousands of Infantry School students to widely scattered classrooms and tactical sites, this regiment symbolizes the spirit of readiness and alertness for which the army of today is noted. Her vehicles are on the move the clock around—her seemingly tireless drivers ready to go at a moment's notice. In fact, it is not uncommon to see one of the large vans suddenly come into the glare of sleepy automobile headlights in the wee hours of the morning and, after a brief moment in passing, slip away into the darkness on some undisclosed mission of vital importance. Thousands of persons at Fort Benning have learned to respect the work done by this regiment and few indeed are those soldiers and officers who have not ridden in some of her vehicles with the skillful drivers and the familiar markings.

ITS INNER WORKINGS

In fact, the work of this regiment has become so familiar in the eyes of Fort Benning that many persons fail to go behind the scenes and observe the inner workings of this great organization. Its enormity can not be realized until one learns that it is broken up into three distanct areas—each with a centralized plan of operation. Each area has its headquarters, barracks, mess halls, post exchanges, and places of recreation and, because of this, many of the men know very few of the soldiers outside of their own areas.

A large staff of officers includes eight colored, who hold jobs ranging from Supply Officers to the position of Regimental Chaplain. Regimental Headquarters reminds one of the large civilian offices where important transactions are made and where world progress is stimulated. A civilian woman does clerical work along with enlisted men who have widely varied backgrounds. Several hold Master of Arts degrees from outstanding universities and one of the recent additions to the office force has completed practically all of the requirements for the Ph. D. degree.

DISPATCH OFFICES

Regulating points for the steady flow of vehicles must be maintained which makes necessary dispatch offices in various areas. These offices are characterized, by their business-like appearances as well as noisy atmospheres. Telephones ring—bringing requests for vehicles of all types. Master schedules are drawn up and constantly revised. New maps, showing the areas to be covered, frequently appear on the walls and there is the usual scene of drivers checking in from trips downtown or from convoy operations that have carried them as far away as Atlanta.

Truly there are countless small details that must be considered when dealing with a unit of this size and very few are overlooked by Colonel Altman and his staff. Realizing the value of a high morale among the men, many recreational activities are planned for "off hour" entertainment and organization commanders are considerate in issuing passes authorizing visits to adjacent communities.

3rd Armored Grid Star Comes From Choctaw Indian Stock

Big Chief Is Demon On Field But At Heart Is A Scholar

That burly, hard-hitting fullback who was the big noise in the 3rd Armored Regiment's 18 to 6 victory over the 55th Engineers Sunday is John "Big Chief" Carney, a descendent of the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi. But, Carney revealed, some of the fight power he showed in the game must be due to "my one-quarter Irish."

After watching him hit that Engineer line his teammates have unofficially nicknamed him "Thunder Cloud."

Off the field, John Carney is a quiet tanker who does his job and does not talk about his Indian ancestry unless prodded. On the field, Carney is a different person. Because of his former football experience gained in college, and at the Third under the expert coaching of Captain Leo Gregory, himself a onetime team member of the University of Florida eleven, Carney has developed into the Dragons' firstline fullback, combining his old college tactics with the approved "G. I.", 3rd Armored brand of football. With him—and other sparkplugs on the team—the Dragons expect to make their first year of Army football a good one.

PLAYED AT HASKELL

Big John was born in 1915 at Quinton, Oklahoma, near an Indian reservation. He attended Haskell Institute (near Topeka, Kansas), where he played halfback, and later played the same position at Cameron Junior College. He also starred in baseball and track, and "broke" horses for exercise. This, he says, was in the days "when I could really run." However, it was not because of any alleged lack of speed that Captain Gregory placed Carney in the fullback position. Since he has been in the Army (since April 1, 1941), the 190 pound fullback has gained weight on Company "F" cooking, and this weight, combined with well-timed driving power, helped him get the "big job."

Although the "Chief" makes scrimmage on time daily, he gets plenty of extra training since he is also a member of the 3rd Armored's "Tiger Platoon," whose training schedule is enough to make weak men fall out and stronger men wonder why they ever joined. Despite rigorous training, he is holding on to his weight. "It wouldn't be fair to say that I would rather play football than eat," he says, "they simply go hand in hand."

BACK TO BIOLOGY

After he helps win the war, he intends to go back to his first love, which is biology. He doesn't have much time to keep up on his studies now. But after the war, he claims, he intends to brush up on his biology and then get a job with the Indian Advisory Commission as a teacher. After all, says the Dragons' fullback, the Choctaws of Mississippi were noted for their education and not for their raiding prowess ("not that anyone pushed us around"), and he believes that in doing this he will be doing good for his people as well as his country.

EASY DOES IT

The Classification Division at the Miami Beach Technical Training Command of the Army Air Forces was thrown into utter confusion Wednesday by Private William B. Dykes. It was their fault. They shouldn't have been kidding him. When Private Dykes was asked his birthplace, he replied, "Mississippi." The sergeant exclaimed, "Phew, the towns I've been stuck in there! Well, what's the best one?" Private Dykes answered, "Soso." The sergeant laughed and surmised they're all "soso," then asked: "I mean what place were you born?" Private Dykes answered, "Soso." After some explanation, the same word had been written for the residence and birthplace of Private Dykes's father and mother, the place he went to grammar and high school, and where he worked at various jobs—Soso, Mississippi.

LIFE SAVERS

IN CAMOUFLAGE

Never look directly up at airplanes. Your face doesn't blend in with the surroundings and can be spotted easily from the air.

Don't walk in the open. Every time you put your foot down you leave a minimum sized mark of 48 square inches to attract enemy attention.

Avoid gathering in groups. The dispersion of men insures longer life for all.

Don't throw or leave papers, boxes, tins, cans, munition cases or any refuse in the open. They should be concealed or buried as they indicate activity in the area.

Never dry clothing in the open. This also will attract the attention of the enemy observer to your location.

Flashlights and matches should never be lighted outdoors at night in a combat area. Such lights serve the enemy as well as a beacon does a pilot.

A truck should never be parked with the windshield uncovered. Any reflection is liable to attract the wrong kind of visitors.

Don't be careless and attract attention to your position. Anything that will disclose the enemy's position to you will disclose your presence to him.

Inspect the camouflage material frequently and correct any changes made by displacement or wilting.

Blast marks on the camouflage from a gun will disclose a concealed position to the enemy. Such damaged parts should be repaired or replaced as necessary.

Spuds Are King On Army Menu, Col. Massey Says

The potato is "king" of the Army foods! At least that's the case according to Colonel Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benney quartermaster, during the month of October.

The statement was drawn from an analysis of the master menu to be served Benning troops during the 30-day period which shows that potatoes will be served exactly 39 times and in 14 different ways.

Here's the breakdown: mashed potatoes are listed eight times; hashed browns six and lyonnaise five times. Boiled potatoes will be served six times and French fries and baked spuds three each. Browned potatoes, potato cakes, ordinary baked potatoes, creamed potatoes and baked brown ones are listed once each on the menu.

Of the potato's value, Colonel Massey had this to say: "Irish potatoes provide quick energy, supply all the needed vitamins and are a good source of minerals. They give little roughage if peeled, but can furnish needed roughage by leaving on the skins. Sweet potatoes also have high energy value and provide a good source of vitamins and minerals but do not furnish much roughage."

His father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Cosmo Carucci live at 14 Bogart street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

10th's Marksmen Hit Bull's Eye To Collect Kitty

During the past week all 10th Armored roads have led to the firing range where the officers and non-commissioned officers of the Division have been squeezing those triggers as they blasted away at the bulls eyes to qualify with the rifle, pistol and machine gun.

As an added incentive, the men of the 11th Armored's Reconnaissance Company have devised two targets. One is the bulls eye, the other a kitty. Each man has plunked in ten cents with the purse going to the man with the highest score.

"I don't know whether it's the kitty or not," said Sgt. Henry Dietz, the company news reporter, "but the men certainly have been hitting those targets right where they should."

Sergeant Jim

This is a column which has as its purpose the clarification of questions of military courtesy, etiquette, and War Department regulations. All service men are invited to send any questions they may have to Sergeant Jim, Public Relations Office, Post Hq.

Dear Sergeant Jim:

Just recently at an out-door affair, the Star Spangled Banner was played. I promptly came to attention, and saluted covered. There were plenty of other soldiers in the stands . . . most of these took off their hats, and merely stood at attention.

Corp. C. P. G.

You were right, Cpl. G. When the National Anthem is played out doors, military personnel come to attention and salute, leaving their hats on.

Dear Sergeant:

I am an officer candidate, and will receive my commission in the next few weeks. May I wear shirts with shoulder straps? Buying these now would save expense and necessity of having them sewed on later.

OC J. P.

Sorry, but according to Army Regulations, only commissioned officers are allowed to wear shoulder straps on their shirts.

Dear Sergeant Jim:

Yesterday I was walking down the street with my captain. A lieutenant passed . . . We more or less all saluted at the same time, but as a matter of information, who salutes first.

Rank is always recognized first. The lieutenant should salute, recognizing the captain. You return the salute with the captain.

WEARIN' OUT THE GREEN

Pvt. James P. Rouche insists to fellow trainees at Miami Beach that he can't bear to drill, not because it hurts his feet but because his heart is torn. The drill field is the former municipal golf course. Private Rouche used to be a greens keeper for New York City public golf courses, and when he sees what all that marching does to all that grass . . . Well, Private Rouche can't bear to drill.

Maj. Will

Major Clarence A. Will, permanent field officer of the day, was recently named Fort Benning's new Provost Marshal, in an announcement made by Brig.-Gen. Walter S. Fulton, post commander.

The major, well-known for his splendid part in the salvage drive conducted on the post, has already assumed his new duties. During the drive, which is still in progress, Major Will helped in the exploitation of the Fort Benning scrap mine, gathering more than 125 tons of usable metal.

Formerly of Miami, Fla., Major Will came on active duty, January 15, 1941, after completing 11 years as patrol inspector for the U. S. Customs Service.

QM Corps Uses Wire Strapping to Conserve Metal

The Army Quartermaster Corps is sparing nothing in its all-out metal conservation job. Latest substitution is that of round wire strapping on nailed wooden where metal strapping was previously required. Crates now arriving at Fort Benning from Quartermaster Depots are using the wire method, according to Colonel Stephen B. Massey, Post quartermaster.

Under the old method of packing wood shipping boxes, relatively large tonnages of steel were required to box the various Quartermaster Corps supplies and equipment. The new method, Colonel Massey estimated, will save between 40 and 50 per cent of steel plus a reduction of from 25 to 30 per cent in cost.

All local contracting officer have been notified by the Office of the Quartermaster General to direct the use of round wire strapping of applicable strength wherever possible. This is to apply to all outstanding contracts where metal strapping is now required by specification.

In all future applications for bids, the use of the wire method will be prescribed in accordance with schedules. Substitution of metal strapping, however, will be acceptable in instances where the round wire is unobtainable for packing cases.

4 Colored MP's Get Promotions

Four enlisted men of the Corps of Military Police, (Colored), at Fort Benning have been promoted to higher grades, according to an announcement by post headquarters. They are Pfc. Hugh L. Porter, to the technician 5th grade; Pvts. George W. Tompkins, Oliver Jenkins, and John A. Wilson, to privates 1st class.

Group Set Up To Entertain Fort Officers

First Dance Is Slated For Friday At Ralston Hotel

Plans were made Tuesday evening by the Home Hospitality Committee of the Columbus Defense Service council for the first social event sponsored by the organization for Fort Benning officers. The calendar will open Friday evening at 9 p. m. with a dance at the Ralston hotel, Mrs. James Nuckolls, chairman of the committee, announced.

One hundred young women were present for the meeting in the main auditorium of St. Paul's Methodist church. For Friday's dance the following were named host and hostesses: Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Pease, Mrs. J. E. Humes, Miss Edwina Wood, and Miss Ethel Woodall.

The calendar for the month of November was also drawn up and will be announced next week, Mrs. Nuckolls said.

The program for the officers includes one large monthly dance and approximately 15 parties each month in the homes of local young ladies. Setting up and operating the program is being aided by supervisory assistants offered by the WPA administration of Georgia.

Assisting Mrs. Nuckolls on the Home Hospitality committee are Mrs. S. C. Butler, Mrs. Jamie McDuffie, Mrs. B. B. Key, Mrs. Hatcher Boykin, Mrs. Ralph Richards, Mrs. John Martin, Jr., Mrs. Lewis Scarbrough, Mrs. J. E. Humes, and Mrs. W. C. Pease.

Charlotte Baughman of post headquarters has returned from Montgomery. Her sister, Mrs. George A. Like the shifting sands of the desert so is the personnel in the Indorsement section at Headquarters, Fort Benning. The latest to join the caravans are Frances Gordy to Boston, Mass. (Perry is at the Harvard Navy Training School there); Neoma Wintz, the gal from the Ozark Mountains, is going to visit her relatives at Iatan before joining her husband at South Field, Indiana; Mary Markey, whose lieutenant husband, Sam J., Jr., has been sent to school again, will take up residence as near Fort George Meade, Md., as possible during his three month's training and then, we hope, will return to Benning. Mary certainly has a way with her and will be missed; Mrs. Flora Fuqua is returning to Atlanta to be with her daughter and grandchild while her son travels for Uncle Sam. "Flossie" has become a favorite with us and won't Bee Brown be lonesome without her?

WANTED a good course is map reading and road finding by Nell Freeman, Rosanne O'Kelly, Frances Gordy and me.

We are not WAACs but we were just about WACKY when we finally reached the service club in the 10th armored division yesterday after NOT seeing the review of honor for General Walter S. Fulton, Commanding General of Fort Benning. We must have gotten started off on the wrong wheel for every right turn we took should have been a left turn and every MP who told us to take the "road to the right between the third barracks" surely must have meant the left road for we never go to where we were going. Never covered so much territory. Half tracks all lined up with men and officers in them—"Where is the review for General Fulton?" we would ask, only to have them take one look at us and shake their heads. On and on we went left turn and right turn, dead-end roads overlooking deep ravines ready to swallow us up—through lines of motor cycles, past hospitals, look at all those officers in full equipment—surely there are the officers for the review—but they too just stared at us—Never turned so many corners, never counted so many rows of barracks and they never came out like the MP told us they would—they just can't count is all—why here is the same hill we just went up but it was swell riding coming down—you know like a roller coaster—the charge of the light brigade—did nothing on us—here's the Officers' Club—that's where they are going to eat lunch but where definitely where is the General? Well just one more left turn and let's see. Oh yes, there's another MP. The review is over. Why it can't be we were coming to it. But it was. Sure had a funny flat feeling.

Chaplain's Corner...

CHAPLAIN C. M. PINKARD

GET TOGETHER, BROTHERS!

Wise Benjamin Franklin once said, "We must all hang together or assuredly we shall all hang separately." And his is a wise statement for the times in which we live.

The above statement has become the motto for the religious work done in the First Student Training Regiment. As chaplains we sit down together, seek Divine guidance, and ask the question, "What does this outfit need to build it up spiritually?" We have come to the conclusion that at least three things are extremely important if we help our men spiritually.

Our first great objective is cooperation among the chaplains and a coordination of their work. By this cooperation and thorough understanding the Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant services rendered in the regiment are worked out in the finest spirit of unity. Each helps the other in every way possible. When we show the spirit of brotherhood we feel that we can better teach our men to be brothers.

We have decided our second need is perfect harmony between the chaplains and their commanding officers. We ask the commanding officers, who have been gracious and kind at all times, to feel free in making suggestions or criticisms of our work any time anywhere. We have found them keenly interested in the religious welfare of their men. No major program is undertaken without their consent; and we have been greatly encouraged by their suggestions and words of approval.

The third objective is that we, as chaplains, shall not neglect our own daily devotions. We believe it most important that we keep in close touch with God. Only when this is done can we lead our men aright. This is our most difficult task because of our many many duties.

The chaplains who are rendering full time service in the First Student Training Regiment are Chaplain Calvin M. Pinkard and Chaplain Frederick W. Helfer. Also we never could our most capable and understanding Post Chaplain, Chaplain Frank M. Thompson, too tired or too busy to give us every assistance possible.

Then Chaplain Aaron Shain, the Jewish chaplain, Chaplain Ignatius McCarty, a Catholic chaplain, and Chaplain William O. Jones, a colored chaplain, are assisting us in various and most helpful ways. We highly appreciate them and their work with us.

Services of the following types are being rendered in the regiment by the above chaplains: worship services for all faiths, teaching Sunday School classes, preaching in the guardhouses, "sings" on Thursday evening, helping plan socials going with men to USO programs, becoming buddies to men, visiting all sick in hospital of all faiths and colors, encouraging men to write home, attending all opening exercises of officers and enlisted men, attending all graduations of officers and enlisted men, distributing religious literature to all faiths, helping relieve worry and fear, giving sex lectures, handling welfare cases, holding consulations of all types, performing marriages, conducting funerals, administering Communion, and praying for our men.

"When the soldiers are at their worst, the Chaplains must be at their best."

Magician Loses Much Poundage At Magic Post

Officer Candidate Andrew K. Jacobson travelled all over North and South America, Europe and the high seas as a professional magician, but so far he claims as one of his greatest tricks the disappearance of some 50 pounds from his large frame somewhere around his battalion's obstacle course.

Jacobson is a member of the 28th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment, graduating Oct. 19.

While at Officer Candidate school here he has been in constant demand as a magician and master of ceremonies, and made his claim to fame in the Regiment with his appearance at a party of regimental officers several weeks ago when he called up several high-ranking officers in the crowd as "stooges" and proceeded to put them to shame.

Jacobson developed his routine in his home town of Hutchinson, Minn., and it was natural he should go on the road as both his father and an older brother were in show business. His most successful tours were as an entertainer on ocean liners. He was in Rio De Janeiro when his draft number caught up with him.

Lawson Bomb Sight

BY CPL. F. T. KILLEAVY

The officers and enlisted men welcomed into their midst last week the new chaplain of Lawson Field, 1st Lieutenant Floyd S. Smith. He arrived here from Langley Field, W. Virginia where he was Chaplain for the 65th Observation Squadron. Chaplain Smith was commissioned a reserve officer in 1936 and has been stationed at Camp Bowie, Texas, Jackson Field, Jackson, Mississippi and Langley Field, Virginia. He is a graduate of the Phillips University Bible College, Enid, Oklahoma and also did his post graduate work there. The Chaplain likes to fly and when he was stationed at Langley Field formulated the policy of travelling up and down the coast preaching special Sunday sermons. The Chaplain is married to the former Miss Pearl L. Martin and they have two sons, Robert and Arthur.

Don't let this happen to you . . . One of the men from Lawson Field traveled to Atlanta and registered at a hotel. He promptly left in quest of a quench 'dispenser. A few hours later he was found by his buddies explaining to a cop that his room was number 116 but in what hotel he couldn't remember.

One of our Sergeants on the alert crew thought that he had devised a quick and short route to China. When he found the motor of the plane in his lap he decided that the older method of over the ground rather than through it was after all the better of the two.

The Army Air Forces has announced that there will be no longer any "washouts." Marked down now as something obsolete, "washouts" in the past have been cadets who were eliminated for some reason or other from flying training. Now cadets are classified by scientific physical and psychological tests for training as pilots, navigators, bombadiers. No men are to be wasted, the Army Air Forces has numerous jobs for which each man is capable of doing. Every cadet who is accepted will get his wings in some phase of aviation. Come on in, fellows, the air's fine.

The men of Lawson Field wish to thank the group of singers from the Headquarters Company of the Fort Benning Reception Center for a grand night of entertainment. Hurry back, fellows.

The MP's of Lawson Field were given a good piece of news last week. A civilian guard consisting of Sub-Depot employees will now be on guard in hangars numbered one and two. The guards will work in eight hour shifts. I wonder will they be required to walk their post in a civilian or military manner.

It was announced that the newest emergency food combination for Army flyers is a featherweight package that contains enough nourishment for a soldier for at least a day. The complete ration weighing about 8 1-4 ounces, fits easily into a soldier's pocket. You can imagine the expression of the First Sergeant when one of the men going on a three-day pass asked could he "have three of those emergency food things, then he could save some money on food."

Captain Chalker, former Lawson Field officer now stationed in India writing to Captain Adair, Lawson Field adjutant says, "I'm sure that you and the others at Lawson Field have a tendency to feel sorry that we were sent to such a strange country, but I can assure you that we're all quite glad that we had the fortune to be sent here . . . It is customary for officers to get 10 days off each year and Sprinagar, Kashmir, has been selected as the spot for the officers to go. We stayed on a houseboat on Goonbog Lake, which is 7,000 feet above sea level. The only means of transportation was the water boats, called shikira, and resembling a gondola. We went horseback riding up to Gulmarg which is about 10,000 feet. This is a valley which is surrounded with 15,000 foot mountains. The scenery was gorgeous and we all took some wonderful pictures. We purchased a number of things—everything from a Kashmir shawl to the beautiful woodworks—I don't know how we will ever get the stuff back to the States—shawls, knives, silverware and beautiful carved boxes."

The theatres at Fort Benning, as at almost every other post in the country, show rip-roaring, two-fisted cowboy pictures every Monday night. The boys in G Company would have us believe that one of their men, who never misses one of these shows, sits so close to the screen on Monday nights that he always returns to the barracks with powder burns . . . Third Battalion Of Second STR Gets Much Scrap

The 3rd Battalion of the Second Student Training Regiment started something with its GET IN THE SCRAP contest between its six Officer Candidate companies. Now the campaign has spread to the entire regiment.

Candidates in the 3rd Battalion got in an amazing pile of scrap metal by merely policing up around the battalion area, with the 14th Company coming out on top in the competition.

Because of the success of the drive there it was decided to expand it to the other battalions, with the deadline set as Oct. 31. While post scrap authorities are tapping the large sources of scrap all over the post, local campaigns to clean out organizational areas can still produce sizeable quantities of the valuable metal.

Cpl. Hugh Brady (Co. C) is off to get a pair of golden bars at OCS. He left his company last Saturday.

O. C.s Brother Held By Japs

Col. Traywick Was Instructor In TIS

There is one officer candidate now attending the United States Army's Infantry School here who has a very special reason for wanting to reach Tokyo at the earliest possible date. He is Corporal Alston Traywick, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Traywick, 207 Capitol ave., Montgomery, Alabama.

Candidate Traywick only recently received word that his elder brother Col. Jesse Traywick is now being held in Tarlac, a Japanese military prison, having been taken prisoner at the time the Nipponese forced Gen. Wainright's forces to surrender at Corregidor. Col. Traywick, a West Point graduate, was himself an instructor at the Infantry School from 1934 to 1936.

Candidate Traywick graduated from Lanier High School in 1928 and joined the Army in December 1941. He is at present undergoing vigorious training in all the methods of modern warfare as a member of the Third Student Training Regiment under the command of Col. R. H. Lord. Upon graduation in November, he will be ready for the first leg of his trip to Tokyo with the commission of a 2nd Lt. in the army of the United States.

"I dot my eyes on you," . . . For the second time within a month the First Battalion scored a medical K. O. as all units in the Battalion were reported 100 per cent, according to Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, Jr.'s records.

I string along because the wife makes me carry the packages (that's the patriotic thing to do these days, anyhow!). It's a great service, believe me, what with the wife and myself working, we like the idea of Tuesday night shopping . . . it sort of evenly spaces the night shopping between Tuesday and Saturday nights.

IT'S A SWELL TIME TO BEGIN EARLY CHRISTMAS SHOPPING, TOO! The wife and I think so . . why don't you try it? I'm sure you'll agree. All the added services KIRVEN'S has are available . . such as Gift Wrapping, Mailing Dept., Luncheonette, War Bond Booth and others. We're meeting our friends down at KIRVEN'S, Tuesday nights, so we'll be seeing you, too!

Start Reading, Soldier!

"We have a war on our hands, this is no time to start reading." . . . You're wrong, soldier. There is a war going on, but there's still plenty of time to start reading. Reading that will give you relaxation and enjoyment. Reading that will comfort and soothe you after a weary day. But mainly, reading that will keep you mentally alert and progressive.

Perhaps you are one of the younger members of the outfit, one of the boys who never really got the chance to settle down in a civilian profession. Well, here is your chance, the one you've been waiting for. Have you ever tried picking up a field manual or training manuel on a subject of particular interest to you. The army publishes hundreds of them. They are as complete and composite as any textbook you might have studied at college or high school. Why not spend that dull evening this week in preparing yourself for a better and more skilled army or civilian job? You may be able to use the information sometime in the future. Don't shake your head, you know this is the truth. What's the subject going to be?

And you, Corporal . . . sitting over there in the corner. You're going to stay in the army after the war is over, I know. But are you keeping as mentally alert as you can keeping yourself physically fit? Why not pick up a field manual on soldiering and keep mentally in step . . . or try one of the many training manuals on a mental obstacle course. I'll bet you a dime on payday that you find the old head a bit rusty. You forgot how much firepower some newly organized type of unit has . . . or maybe you didn't know in the first place. But it isn't hard to catch up, is it? A few nights reading "the book" will make a new man out of you. And maybe that's the only thing standing between you and the next stripe.

You're next, Lieutenant! You just graduated from that basic class or one of the O. C. C. S. So you've decided that as long as you passed the course those textbooks can go back into the footlocker. Well, we aren't going to suggest or advise your doing any differently . . . but maybe you'll run into the Corporal we met in the paragraph before this one. He really studied. In fact, he hit the books, and hit them hard.

"We have a war on our hands, this is no time for reading" . . . I'd like to find the guy who tried to hand us that line. He didn't finish the sentence. He should have said, "We have a war on our hands, this is no time for reading ANYTHING BUT THE BEST."

A Swell Job Well Done

It is with pardonable pride that the BAYONET points to Benning's record in the current drive to salvage all available metals for conversion into sinews of war. While we have no figures to use as a basic of comparison, it is quite possible that this reservation is way up with the leaders in the gathering of scrap so urgently needed by our steel mills to make guns, tanks, ships, planes, and shells.

A great deal of praise is due Major J. R. Johnson, post inspector, who "knows where it is" and furthermore knows how to get it. Major Clarence A. Will, our new provost marshal, has also done a noble job in cleaning out the metal dump of the post. Major Virgil Ney and his Scouts and Cubs have also blazed a trail for other young Americans to follow with their fine-tooth combing of the reservation for small but important items of scrap others might have overlooked.

Nor should we forget the enlisted men who have been working under the supervision of their superior officers in doing the muscle work. Especially commendable is the work of Staff Sgt. Grant Ray of the Quartermaster Detachment who was relieved of his quartermaster duties to enable him to carry on the specific duty of scouring the post. With wrecker and heavy equipment Sgt. Ray and his helpers went out and in one day alone hauled in 45 tons of scrap to the collection dump.

All Fort Benning has contributed the more than 6,000,000 pounds of scrap collected on this post. Their efforts did not go unnoticed as various press associations picked up the big story and informed the nation of our contribution to the salvage campaign.

Indians On Warpath Again

A release from the Parachute School here published in last week's BAYONET that the full-blooded Cherokee Indian, Pvt. Henry F. Carter, expected to be graduated from the school reminds us that all over the country members of the Red Race are joining with the rest of the nation in an all-out effort against the Axis.

It wasn't so long ago that we read of a declaration of war against the dictators by the chiefs of the Iroquois Confederation, the remnant of the Six Nations once ruling the territory stretching between the Mississippi and the Atlantic. "This merciless slaughter of mankind," their declaration read, "upon the part of these enemies of free peoples can no longer be tolerated." This declaration represents Indian reaction through the United States of America. It must be remembered that since 1924 the Indians have been legal citizens of the United States and that within their tribes, the earlier inhabitants had been democratic.

The Christian Science Monitor points to a report from the Office of Indian Affairs which reveals that over 99 per cent of all Indians of eligible age have registered for selective service. Many of the Navajos brought their rifles when they registered, thinking that after signing on the dotted line and passing their physicals, they could immediately begin taking pot shots at the enemy. Montana's Blackfeet asserted that registration was unnecessary since every fit fighter would be certain to enlist. Enlistments on some reservations have been so heavy that some have commented that no conscription would be necessary if voluntary enlistments from the entire population were in like proportion.

The Klamath Indians of Oregon have established a training school in war work for Indians, and in San Diego an all-Indian platoon was in training for the Marine Corps.

And so it goes all over the nation. The patriotism and loyalty of our red brothers can not be questioned. Such unity, demonstrative of the attitude of the nation as a whole, should give pause to the dictator nations and cause their leaders to shudder at the thought of the day of reckoning now fast approaching.

Damned Mad

TENNESSEE COAL, IRON and RAILROAD CO.
U. S. Steel (USS) Corporation Subsidiary
GENERAL OFFICES: BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
September 28, 1942

Dear Bruce:

I'm getting pretty damned mad.

Now it's Freddie Bice whom this war has killed. A clean good-looking, brave kid. He was no intimate friend of mine, but he had spent several evenings in my home with his buddy, Bruce Pou. And now Freddie has got it. He's the fourth friend I've had to leave this world because of this war. To say nothing of one who has been shot to pieces, but still lives. And Bert Bank, on Bataan. And a cousin who has been shot down a couple of times by the Japs, but who keeps coming back for more.

I'm getting pretty damned mad. I don't love my neighbor, if that neighbor is German, Jap or Italian. If that condemns me to perdition, that's where I'll go.

I'm getting pretty damned mad. Within a month or so I expect to become one of the bearded Uncle's worst soldiers, with a weak physique and poor eyes. But I'll do my best, and I want folks at home doing their best.

I don't want to hear of any more things like this (And I apologize for not being able to say positively whether it's true. It might be just one of those stories. But it's told widely hereabouts): A woman on a Birmingham bus was talking with a companion. "I hope this war goes on a mighty long time," she said. "We're making more money than we ever made before, and we're having the time of our lives. Another woman, immediately in front of her, got up, turned around and slapped the speaker, hard, on one cheek. "That's for my boy in the Philippines," she said. Then she slapped the speaker, hard, on the left cheek and said, "And that's for my boy in Iceland."

I'm getting pretty damned mad. To my discredit, I did not sock that middle-aged man in a local restaurant yesterday. He came in, sat down, ordered a bottle of a certain type of beer. The waitress said, very politely, "I'm sorry, but I don't think we have any. I'll look, though." He said, angrily, "Well, you'd better have it. I've walked two whole blocks to get it." By the beard of the prophet! "Two whole blocks" for a bottle of beer, and I know 75 boys who are having to walk 20 miles a day and more, with no beer at the end of the trail. And I may be doing it myself, if they can develop my carcass to the point where I can make it. Why didn't I slug that man, even though he beat me later? I'm ashamed. And I promise to do it the next time.

I'm getting pretty damned mad. And I'm mad at myself. Sam Bank would have punched the man for his boy in the Philippines. And Freddie Bice's mother would have slapped that woman on the bus for her boy, Freddie.

I don't apologize for the "damns." My mother, a very great lady, is getting pretty damned mad—and she'll say the word, too. Just a few minutes ago Mrs. G. C. Long, Sr., of Calera, dropped by my office. She always comes by when she's in Birmingham, to bring me letters from her boy, G. C., who's now in Australia. Or to bring me news of him. Or a picture. G. C. was a student of mine and is a friend. And Mrs. Long, a fine lady, said she was "getting pretty damned mad."

We've seen only the beginning, and a slim one, at that. Let's quit this infernal squawking and get to work. Sadly enough, it is taking the loss of life of boys we know to wake us up. It's beginning to strike home now.

I'm getting pretty damned mad. And everybody else had better.

Sincerely yours,
RANDY FORT,
Former Ass't

A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE

A corporal is said to be a man who knows a great deal about very little and, who goes on knowing more and more about less and less until finally he knows practically everything about nothing; whereas,

A buck sergeant, on the other hand, is a man who knows very little about a great deal and keeps knowing less and less about more and more until he knows practically nothing about everything.

A top kick starts out knowing practically everything about everything but ends up knowing nothing about anything due to his association with corporals and buck sergeants

POETRY

A. W. O. L. BLUES
Pvt. A. A. Abraham
Co. E. 117th Inf.

This soldier's name I shall not tell
Cause he was a guy that went A. W. O. L.
He thought it took "guts" to go away
So he packed his bag and left one day.

The folks at home were glad to see
The boy who left, a soldier to be.
He slept late each day and ate his share
Of the good food his ma would prepare.

Believe it or not, he began to long
For the morning notes of the bugler's song.
He told his ma he was "over the hill"
And left for camp of his own free will.

He sneaked back to camp like a hunted man.
The boys were there to give him the pan.
No pats on the back but lots of hell
For the pal that was marked up A. W. O. L.

He's building time, now, four days for one,
Can't smoke a cig and eats under a gun.
Can't talk to his pals or go to town
Why, even his best girl turned him down.

So, all you wise guys who think you're smart,
You'll find out some day after you start
There's not many places this side of HELL—
That you'll be welcome when you're A. W. O. L.!

I SHOULDER MY PEN

P. F. Cunningham, Signal Corps.

There's no glory for us as we struggle along,
In the same routine day by day,
Our job is unchanging and often dull,
But we're pitching all the way.

You may say we see no danger,
That we don't take chance with life,
We've offered ours to Uncle Sam,
And He may need them to end this strife.

We roll out of bed just as early,
As the soldier in the field,
And now though we have it easy,
In the past many spuds have we peeled.

We have our share of worries,
For we make the Army spin,
And we may use a pen instead of a gun,
But we're doing our part to win.

If it weren't for us the fighters,
Would really be in quite a stew,
We keep all the records and get them their pay,
Just two of the many things that we do.

Without us they'd have no allotments,
Or Insurance or Bonds or Mail,
They'd never have anyone to come to,
When they wanted to weep and wail.

When this old war is over,
I'll be proud my children to tell,
That I helped win it in an office,
And I'll still say, "War Is Hell."

OUR FLAG FOREVER
Abraham Brandt

We're proud to salute our flag
Our flag so brave and free
With the Stars and Stripes to lead us
We'd give our lives for thee.

Our flag will wave on the battlefields
And also on the fighting seas
Old Glory has never failed us
To guide us to victory

The land of our birth is truly worth
Our troubles we're going through
We'll fight by day and fight by night
To defend our red, white, and blue.

USO Presents

We have just received a bulletin from the USO-Camp Shows, Inc., office in New York . . . . They promise the boys in camp a new show every two weeks during the 1942-43 program. . . . Seventy shows, including 22 musical varieties, 36 tabloid troupes, four concert companies and eight legit plays . . . will tour nationwide this winter. . . . The organization's basic program of show units is almost triple over last year.

* * *

Last Monday, a glorious voice penetrated the hard exteriors of the G. I.'s to find the soft heart beneath. . . . The voice belonged to the beautiful Metropolitan contralto, Miss Anna Kaskas. . . . With a record turnout, Miss Kaskas really thrilled both the civilians and the soldiers that were present at the Ninth St. USO Club. . . . Selecting both heavy and light numbers, Miss Kaskas enchanted the audience with such numbers as "O Don Fatale" from "Don Carlos" by Verdi and made them laugh with "The China Figure." . . . In a private interview with this reporter, Anna Kaskas said that she was very sorry not to be able to visit the post as her schedule was so heavy she was forced to leave the next morning for her next stop. . . . She is as charming off the stage as on.

* * *

Under the soft colored lights of the outdoor patio of the USO-Army-Navy YMCA, skating parties continue to be held on Mondays and Wednesdays. . . . Frank Gerrits is the chief instructor and master of ceremonies, ably assisted by Miss Bonnie Love Wells. . . . A word about Miss Bonnie. . . . She has been on skates since she was four years old and has had a great deal of experience in many rinks. . . . She and Frank really entertain the boys with their rug cutting. . . . Bring your own skates or hire a pair at the Club. . . . Free instruction in fancy skating for those that want some.

Last Sunday was a great day for the community because the first of a series of Community Band Concerts was held in the Auditorium of the USO-SA building in Phenix City. . . . Mrs. Floradell Kimber sang "My Hero" from the "Chocolate Soldier" and the "Indian Love Call" by Friml. . . . Next Sunday, the second of the series of band concerts will be presented at 4 p. m. All service men are heartily invited.

This column has a bit to clear up. . . . Last week we stated that you can get your "coffee ands" at any club in town. . . . This was meant as an expression, not as the name of the activity. . . . As far as this column knows, the only club to call that particular Sunday morning activity, "Coffee Ands," is the USO Club at Ninth Street.

* * *

And here is a flash from the Army-Navy YMCA-USO Club . . . Until the smokers start there will continue to be square dancing and folk dances on Thursday nights. . . . Those not knowing the dances will be instructed in the mysteries of the dance of yesteryear. . . . Smokers are expected to start soon. . . . Good fight cards and wrestling matches are planned. . . . Watch this column for further developments.

* * *

The USO at Ninth St. has a new and very effective Public Address system, which has just been installed. . . . From a layman's point of view, I should say that it is the finest in town. . . . It has everything. . . . It is used for paging, recordings, motion pictures and radio. . . . There isn't a room in the club that the PA doesn't reach.

Country Editor in Khaki

By CPL. IRWIN BLUMENFELD

What this army needs is a good singable tune.

Every war up until now has spawned at least one characteristic tune, but so far in this one, none has come forth. So barracks baritones and truck tenors have to be satisfied with the old standbys—some of which were being sung when Pvt. Napoleon Bonaparte made corporal.

We travel to most of our classes in large trucks, and we while away the time going to and from our training areas by indulging in a little close harmony, a la the old-time barbershops.

But our repertoire is practically the same as the one the boys in '13 had—even including the one about that famous lady of Armentieres, with a few modern additions, and "Down By the Old Mill Stream," "Sweet Adeline," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Old MacDonald Had a Farm," "Home, Sweet Home," "Suwanee River," etc.

I imagine some of the harmony would make Stephen Foster turn over in his grave. In fact, by now, he's probably known in his sphere as "Revolving Steve!"

* * *

And some of the boys are threatening to take up a collection to pay me to keep quiet during the singing periods. But I won't take their "hush" money.

But we hear a lot of talk about that indefinable something known as "morale." Well, when a gang of dog-tired guys coming home after a tough day, still feel like singing, that, my friends, is real morale.

The most popular officer in the entire officer candidate school is a mysterious gentleman known as the Assistant Commandant.

Like "Yehudi" of radio fame, we hear a lot about him, but we never see him. Whenever there's any open time on our daily program, it's always listed on the schedule as "Reserved for the Assistant Commandant." Needless to say, we're always glad to see it, because he never shows up, and we have the time off.

Some day, if he crosses us up and really puts in an appearance and gives us some work to do, he'll lose an awful lot of friends.

They're very polite to us here. When we give a wrong answer instructors don't say: "Sorry, But you're all wet." Their reply usually is: "Your answer does not agree with the school solution."

Of course, we're just as wrong, and get just as low a mark, but it sounds nicer, anyway.

But sometimes it's more difficult to solve the school solution than it is to solve the problem!

We ran the "Bilis Course" last week, which was very interesting. The course simulates actual battle conditions, with unexpected targets jumping up from nowhere, and its purpose is to train the individual soldier to act quickly and correctly with the appropriate weapon under sudden situations.

* * *

For instance, what would you do if you were crossing a log over a ditch and just as you were in the middle of the thing, practically hanging on by your toes, an enemy on the other side started firing at you?

Or, if you were fired upon just as you were nicely tangled up in some barbed wire you were trying to crawl through?

Or, as you were climbing out of a ditch, someone suddenly jumped down on you?

I had varied reactions to these and other situations, but the one that recurred the most was: "I wonder if I could turn in my dog-tags and resign!"

This, however, did not agree with the "school solution."

Strictly Backfence

BY EVE

If this war does nothing else to us, we'll understand what Grandma meant when she talked about old fashioned virtues of never buying anything you couldn't pay for. It always sounded interesting, but as remote as the Indian fighting days and grasshopper plagues.

We've had such a wonderful and irresponsible time and never even knew it. Now that it's pay cash or do without in the army, we'll look back on those blissful chit signing days with nostalgia.

There will be no more closing of the books, that wonderful day when we stocked up on canned lobster meat and pate de fois gras. One always felt so rich knowing the sad news of our extravagance wouldn't have to be faced until the first of next month. We bought a sheer nightgown we didn't need. It would be fun to own for special occasions. Some games for the children. A bottle of vitamin pills, the expensive kind. Everyone was talking about them and maybe they would pep up the family to unheard of energies. A copy of Vogue and Better Homes and Gardens. One might as well be properly informed on everything. It was fun.

If we won't have the joy of that day of feeling unlimited wealth, neither will we know the trembling sickness when he opens the P. X. bill. Nor hear him say, "My God, woman, did you have to buy these things? Didn't I ask you to go easy last month?"

What explanation could you give. You didn't really need any of them. No one in the family seemed stronger or calmer for taking the vitamin pills. The can of lobster and pate stood on the shelf unused. No occasion grand enough had arisen to warrant opening them. The nightgown was tucked in a drawer with perfumed sachet. Nice, of course, but you didn't really need it. As for the magazines, Vogue and Better Homes and Gardens always gave you an uneasy sense of deficiency in personal appearance and home decorations.

The shock and surprise of the total figures was a horrible thing to face. Why do a lot of little numbers add up to such a large amount? Bills from stores down town. The club bill, with cokes, lunches, magazines and hair waves. The commissary bill with its charges for staple food necessities. Gruesome they were and depressing hours were yours until the glum husband paid them off.

Has anyone figured out how the change is going to be made? It will be a lot like that horrible month when you changed station. You had to pay off the bills before you left, have enough money to travel on and get settled on the new post. It was a matter of living two months on one month's pay.

That's what November will be for most of us. Some of the canny ones will already start paying cash this month so their post bills won't be so large. Easing the burden into two months as it were.

That, of course, would be the best way, but then suppose we were foolish on the 25th of September.

We shall in all probabilities learn the astonishing lesson that if we don't buy the first thing that catches our eye because of lack of cash on hand, we can well do without it once we get home and think it over. With that knowledge we'll learn to budget our whims and our money. We won't like eating hamburger days on end any more than the family will. Even with the best planning there's going to be a lot of low cost feeding of families come the end of November.

Peeks at Pics

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

A set planned for "Girl Trouble" was the first victim of the government's new restrictions placing a $5,000 ceiling on motion picture background construction. . . Director Harold Schuster, in an effort to minimize the cost, suggested that the set—an interior of an elaborate restaurant—be so devised as to be readily alterable into other types of background likely to be needed in the near future . . . Set-builders followed Schuster's verbal blueprints: as a result, the total cost was exactly $6,996.67 . . . Moreover, the same set will be seen in forthcoming pictures as a skating rink (tables removed, of course); a hospital foyer; an Army enlistment station; and a college dormitory.

Breathes there a male with soul so dead, who never to himself has said—"Boy, do I have girl trouble!" . . . We don't think so, and you won't think so either after you see "Girl Trouble," coming to the post this week . . . Starring Joan Bennett and Don Ameche, this is a story of the rich girl who accidently is offered a job as a maid and accepts because she has fallen in love with the boss-man . . . The action is fast and the comedy is high . . . More than one adventure befalls Joan in her role as the maid and Don as the boss.

"Deep in the Heart of Texas" is an old tollsong . . . With the radio, the juke boxes and universal whistling spreading the tune into every nook, cranny and consciousness in the country, it is taken for granted that the song popped right out of the 20th century . . . Well—it didn't . . . When Universal decided to use the title of the famous number as the name of an outdoor adventure drama co-starring Johnny Mack Brown and Tex Ritter, it was planned that the musical score should, of course, include the modern novelty song . . . The pic, which features Fuzzy Knight, Jennifer Holt, and William Farnum, is due on the post this week . . . Knight sings the tune in one of the film's musical sequences . . . But the tune is not so modern . . . Playing an old folk song one day a studio arranger was suddenly aware of its tuneful likeness to the popular ditty of today and closer study brought to light the fact that "Deep in the Heart of Texas" had been sung around the campfires of a period even ante-dating the Civil War.

Another in the series of Michael Shayne detective is coming to the post this week, under the name of "Just Off Broadway" . . . It is a name that will make a great deal of the boys here at Fort Benning homesick . . . Lloyd Nolan again plays the title role and comely Marjorie Weaver plays opposite, while "Funny Man" Phil Silvers plays all over . . . Lloyd Nolan talks like a New Yorker, looks like a New Yorker, and acts like one . . . That's why he's forever being sought to play the sophisticated city slicker . . . Indeed, Lloyd reached the heights just a little while back by being cast as the garrulous manager of the Brooklyn baseball team in "It Happened in Flatbush," solely on the strength of his matchless command of the most advanced of all New York tongues — Brooklynese . . . Yet, this same Mr. Nolan was born in San Francisco and traveled high and low through the hinterland, never stopping off in the big town until a few years ago, when the stage beckoned . . . But for years Lloyd has been cast as New York characters, making out handsomely.

LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE . . . A pic to watch for is "The Big Street" . . . It is a pleasant bit of story that cannot possibly displease anyone, even though you may be baffled for a while . . . It is the first of Damon Runyon's homely tales about Times Square (I better cut this kind of gab out or I'll make myself homesick) to be produced by himself . . . Runyon is just one of those "unusual" people who seem to live on Broadway . . . He is inordinately proud of the fact that nobody has ever paid a check while he was at the table (Just the kind of guy I want to meet); of his ties about which people on the lot swear that he wore a new one, each louder than the last, every day for five months (He should see the ties my wife gave me for Christmas); of a wire from his good friend Lord Beaverbrook: "Thanks for the ties. They ought to get me more attention in my present work. Max." (with those colors how can he help getting more attention).

This column gave you the low down on the movie of the week in a previous issue . . . In case you have forgotten it is "My Sister Eileen." . . . A great show; don't miss it.

At the moment there is touring through Georgia, a man who can tell you more about the background of the new picture "Flying Tigers" than I can . . . His name is Lt. Haymond L. Hastey, a former member of the famous flying unit . . . But we can tell you about the picture itself . . . The story about the "Flying Tigers" really, makes a thrilling show . . . If at times it may seem unreal because there are too many Japs falling from the sky with blood pouring from their mouths, . . . Just remember that it is difficult for a motion picture to show what war is really like unless it is filmed at the actual battle . . . It is a powerful, timely and intensely dramatic photoplay presenting most vividly the heroic exploits of the American Volunteer Group in defending the Burma Road.

QM Soldier Is Admitted To O. C. School

Another Quartermaster Corps soldier at Fort Benning has made the grade and been admitted to the Officer Candidate School of the supply branch at Camp Lee, Virginia.

He is Pvt. Vincent A. DeLeo, a former resident of New York City. DeLeo was a member of the Quartermaster Detachment, a unit of the Fourth Service Command at the fort. He was assigned to duties in the cold storage warehouse.

First entering the service, the Q. M. soldier became a member of the 8th Infantry, 4th Motorized Division, early in 1941 and was later transferred to the Quartermaster Detachment at Benning. He was released last fall under the over-28 bill, but recalled from the Enlisted Reserve Corps in May of this year.

During his brief return to civilian life, DeLeo was employed in the huge Philadelphia Quartermaster Dept. At Camp Lee he will pursue the 3-month course leading to the commission of second lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps.

'Red, White, and Khaki' At USO Friday Night

"Red, White and Khaki," the South's own version of "This Is the Army," takes over the stage of the USO Club at 100 9th Street, Friday, at 8:30 p. m., with a strictly big-time musical revue designed to give an evening of top legitimate entertainment—and to give a further boost to the war effort. The general public is invited.

An all-soldier show from start to finish, "Red, White and Khaki" represents no amateurish efforts despite the fact that it was written, directed, staged, and enacted by personnel of Maxwell, Gunter, Craig, Napier, Brookley and Lynn Fields. Author of the book is none other than Morris Effron, now Pvt. Effron of Gunter Field, Alabama, whose last business association in civilian life was behind the scenes of the one and only "Hellzapoppin."

Directing the revue and acting as master of ceremonies, Lt. Wayne E. Scrivener is by way of being the hero of the piece, a young man bent on breaking into the lurid and alluring ranks of show business. His trials and tribulations are neatly strung into the song and dance and comedy routines which make "Red, White, and Khaki" one of the most novel stage productions.

"The idea of an all-soldier stage revue for the promotion of Army Mechanic enlistments developed, of course, from the success of 'This Is the Army,' " Eugene J. Bergmann, director of the USO Club, said today.

"Red, White, and Khaki" was born a show without a name, when members of the Alabama War Bond Sales Committee called on Maxwell Field for assistance in firing public support of the sales campaign. Private Effron, called in from his post in the Public Relations Office at Gunter Field, had the partially finished book which is no small opus of two acts and 23 scenes. This show, when first presented in the interests of War Bond Sales, grossed $85,000 for the campaign.

A nameless member of the chorus supplied the catchy title during one of the myriad rehearsals which the men had been enduring that the piece, when it is presented Friday night, might be professionally smooth. "Say," he yelled above the babble of scrambled routines, "let's call it, 'Red, White, and Khaki!' "

"And 'Red, White, and Khaki' it is," commented Lieutenant Scrivener.

Admission to the show will be free.

THE DELAY in getting night football started at Benning is one of those minor inconveniences that has been occasioned by war-time shortages. When it was first decided to install lights in Doughboy Stadium, plans called for the simple removal of the entire set-up from Gowdy Field over to the football arena. Later, officials thought it best simply to move the lights themselves and install new poles in the stadium.

CONSEQUENTLY, the new poles had to be secured from outside the reservation since they must be at least 55 feet high and specially-treated. They were ordered from a firm in Pensacola, Fla., and ready for shipment in due time. However, that's where the difficulties arose. The poles for Doughboy stadium had to be shipped on a flat car, and flat cars are naturally at a premium these days. So the light standards were held in the Florida city for over a week awaiting suitable transportation. It finally was secured, however, and the poles reached the fort on Tuesday of this week.

THE CONTRACTORS are now busily engaged installing the system, and although it may not be completed by this week-end, it will be in tip-top shape by the middle of next week, and then fort grid teams will swing into a heavy schedule of night games. One thing is certain, when the installation is completed, Doughboy Stadium will have as fine a lighting system as can be found on any gridiron anywhere.

LIEUT. JACK GUSHIN, special service officer for the Service Battalion of the 3rd Student Training Regiment, deserves a few verbal orchids for all the effort he has gone to in getting a colored football team organized at Benning. He had to do plenty of drum-beating to get things started, but his efforts bore fruit because the Benning Panthers, as the club will be called, loom as one of the strongest elevens on the reservation. They boast many outstanding colored college stars, and their schedule will bring some of the South's most imposing colored teams to Doughboy stadium, including Tuskegee, Morehouse and others.

THIS ISN'T by way of an alibi for the 124th Gators losing to Auburn's "B" team last Saturday, but simply an explanation of why the performance of the orange-and-blue eleven was so disappointing to its followers. It's pretty tough to play a game of football against a crack team when you have the use of your first and second team tailbacks for only four plays in the entire tilt.

YET, THAT'S what happened to the Gators. Against Chattanooga in the opener, Roy Cestary was the spearhead of the Gator attack, and most of the offense was built around him. But the former Notre Dame flash played so hard and so long, that he suffered severe thigh bruises that kept him out of action at Auburn. His replacement, however, was to be Claude Hackney, ex-Davidson star, who loomed as another star tailback.

BUT ALAS for the Gators, Hackney was injured on the second play against the Tiger Bees and had to be withdrawn. Later on, Capt. Harold (Red) Milton sent Cestary into the game, but he also lasted only two plays. The result was the 124th played most of the game with a third-string tailback as their spearhead. Another factor that contributed to the Gator defeat was their inability to solve the tricky "T" formations employed by Jack Meagher's cubs. Despite their pair of defeats by collegiate opposition, the Gators will be mighty tough to handle in league competition because their inexperienced men have learned plenty in these outside frays.

THE LAY-OFF which the 29th Infantry's Big Blue team had over the past week-end will probably help the main post aggregation. When the 21st General Hospital club was forced to drop out of the loop due to military reasons, the Two-Niners were left with an open date. The inactivity was actually welcomed by the Blues because they have several injured stars who thereby got a prolonged rest. Some of them, however, will not see action for several weeks. Big Bob Bowen, the varsity fullback, now has his injured knee in a cast and is confined to the station hospital. His loss, coming on top of the injury to Coach Joe Ashmore's knee puts the 29th in a precarious position as far as backs are concerned. However, such top-notchers as Joe Bryan, Ed Hurley and Bill Chaney can really carry the mail and will give the 55th Engineers plenty of headaches this Sunday in the stadium.

LAST WEEK'S opener in the Fort Benning Conference which saw Capt. Leo Gregory's 3rd Armored club topple the Engineers was a thriller. Both clubs were impressive even though they had been practicing only a short time, and still needed contact work. The Dragons won because they packed more experience as a team and showed a diversified attack sparked by some accurate aerial work.

BOTH LINES were big and rough and played hard all the way, but it was the flashy backs that stole the show. For the Draogns, Big Chief Carney, full-blooded Indian, and Al Litwak, the former Little All-American from Western Reserve, lived up to pre-game ballyhoo in great style. The Chief was a pile-driving fullback, who also looked good in an open field. Litwak ran the Dragons eleven well, and looks like a great punter and better-than-average passer. You'll hear a lot more from both these boys before the season ends.

THE 55TH ALSO had some sweet backs, but their coach, Lieut. Carl Deane, was outstanding. Time and again, the small but compact former Duke star swept off tackle and around the Dragon flanks for sizeable gains, and with some better blocking in front of him, he might have broken loose for a couple of scores. But "might haves" don't win ball games. However, the Engineers are dangerous, and will probably play better ball Sunday against the 29th. It should be a corking good game.

Dragon Passes Trip Engineers In Loop Opener

3rd Armored Team Wins By 18-6 Score In Conference Tilt

BY LIEUT. HENRY WINKLER

Displaying a strong aerial attack, the big green and white Dragons of the 3rd Armored Regiment whipped the 55th Engineers by an 18-6 count in the opener of the Fort Benning Conference last Sunday. The game was played before a crowd of about 1,000 on Field No. 5 in the Sand Hill area.

Capt. Leo Gregory's eleven scored twice in the second period, both times as a direct result of pass plays. The Engineers rallied in the third canto to push over their lone six-pointer and then had a forward pass intercepted in the final period that gave the Dragon gridders their third tally.

DRAGONS TOP LOOP

The victory for the 3rd Armored put the Dragons on top of the heap in the conference standings, and they gave plenty of evidence that they will be in the midst of the title fight all the way. The Engineers also looked potent and should be a contender by mid-season.

After a scoreless first quarter that was marred by fumbles by both teams, the Third opened up its aerial attack. On the very first play of the second period the Third's right halfback, Tony Laskosky, whipped a 20-yard pass to End George Jenkins, who ran another 20 before he was downed on the Red and White's 15-yard stripe.

"CHIEF" CARNEY SCORES

From there the Third's star, "Chief" Carney, a burly, pile-driving fullback, took over. On three bucks he hammered the ball to the four-yard marker. After a line play had failed, the full-blooded Indian plunged over his own left guard to score. The try for the extra point was low.

A short while later a Third Armored punt was fumbled by Ed Homenick and the ex-cavalrymen took the ball on the 55th's 40-yard stripe.

Nick Copra faded back on the first play and tossed a 25-yard pass to Walter Ruettiger who outran the Red and White easily to go over without being touched.

DEAN SPURS 55TH

The 55th made their first bid of the game when their little quarterback, Carl Dean, formerly of Duke University, went into the Red and White's backfield. He tossed two 15-yard passes in a row to Larry Grossman at right end to put the pigskin on the Green's 27-yard line, but the half ended shortly afterward.

The third quarter was a duel between Dean and Carney.

The "Chief" and Tony Laskosky alternated in carrying the ball as they ripped holes in the Engineers' line to pound out three first downs in a row. But the attack stalled and for almost ten minutes neither team could make much headway.

KRULL GOES OVER

The 55th took over on their 49-yard line and proceeded to chop off yardage bit by bit until Johnny Krull went over from the one-yard line. Dean did most of the damage as he tore off three first downs in a row, carrying the pigskin five times in succession. He brought the ball to the five-yard stripe and a penalty against the Third put it on the one where Krull crashed through guard for the tally. Weintraub's attempted conversion failed as the quarter ended.

After holding the Green and White in the last period, Dean again took over and drove for two first downs in a row. But the attack bogged down.

Speedy Al Litwak, from kick formation, went around the Engineers' left end for twenty yards. Carney was finally stopped and the Third punted.

PASS INTERCEPTED

Trying desperately for a score to tie it up, Carl Hagan, deep in Red territory, attempted to pass. But the toss was intercepted by Halfback Nick Copra on the Engineer's 30, and he raced over without a hand being laid on him. Again the try for the extra point failed.

The game ended shortly afterwards with the 55th tossing futile passes in an attempt to score once again.

THERE HE GOES!

117th Breakers Smash Draper Prison, 44-0

Sturgell, Pansock, Smith Pace Benning Eleven To Opening Victory

BY KEVE GRUNIN

The 117th Infantry Breakers, with three high-stepping backs leading the way, overwhelmed a sturdy Draper Prison eleven at Speigner, Ala., on Sunday by a 44-0 count before a madly-cheering crowd of inmate spectators.

The Benning eleven was paced by Sturgell, Pansock and Smith and presented a varied attack that marks the Breakers as a dark horse entry in the Fort Benning Conference. It was the opening game of the season for both the 117th and the prison gridders.

GAIN 216 YARDS

The soldiers outplayed and outmaneuvered the inmates with their end sweeps and power drives off tackle. The 117th played heads-up ball all the way and showed a strong line. The victors rolled up 216 yards from scrimmage and totaled 14 first downs.

The first touchdown was made just seven minutes after the kick-off. Pansock intercepted a pass and scooted down the field to the Draper's two yard marker. On the next play Pansock drove through the line for the score. With only one minute remaining in the first period, Smith, the 117th Inf. halfback, received the ball and made a beautiful 45 yards run to the Draper 11 yards line where the whistle sounded, ending the first quarter.

SCORE ON LATERAL

In the beginning of the second period, Smith took the ball from center and for a moment couldn't find a receiver. He faded back five—still no receiver—then another five yards and finally heaved to Sturgell on the three yards line, just short of a touchdown. On the next play Smith laterated to Pansock who went over the goal line for a touchdown.

Toward the close of the second period the inmates came to life and were on their way to a touchdown. The Draper Prison quarterback, Bryson, threw a long pass to the coach of the team, Davis, who ran down the field and was eventually tackled on the Breaker's 25 yd. line.

The inmate rooters started hooting it up, Draper's band began to cheer their team on with some music, and it looked like the boys from Draper Prison had hit their winning stride. They tackle d on third gain on their first down, but on the next play Armstrong, the right end of the 117th, broke through the Draper line and threw the ball carrier for a 15 yd. loss. In a desperate attempt to make a touchdown, the prisoners tried an aerial attack but it was to no avail because the Breakers drove through their line and blocked Davis's passes.

STURGELL TALLIES

Near the close of the second period the Breakers had the ball on the Draper 3 yd. line. Sturgell then leaped over the line for a touchdown and Pansock kicked for the extra point. The half ended with the 117th leading by the score of 19-0.

In the third period the Breakers played great ball. Smith, aided by some fine interference, carried the pigskin over the goal line for another touchdown. The inmates again took to the air and tossed long passes but Banasieak, the 117th center, grabbed one of these long heaves on his own 30 yd. line, evaded three tacklers, straight-armed another and went over the line for the fifth touchdown of the game.

The Breakers, on three successive first downs in the four quarter, once again took the ball over the line for their sixth score. Roberts converted for the extra point. Five minutes later the Benning team broke loose again and made their final touchdown of the afternoon.

Auburn Tiger Claws Gators

Locals Lose Tilt By 21-0 Score

Fort Benning's 124th Infantry gridiron machine went down for the second time this season before the onslaught of collegiate opposition last Saturday when the Gators were defeated by a fast Auburn "B" team, 21-0 in a game played in the Alabama college town.

The soldier eleven's attack was futile all afternoon, and they seemed to lack the spirit shown in their opening game attempt against the Chattanooga Moccasins. Auburn, however, sent a hard-charging line against the Gators and they simply out-played the big soldier forward wall from start to finish.

TAILBACKS INJURED

Capt. Harold (Red) Milton's club was severely handicapped when it put out its two ace tailbacks, Roy Cestary and Claude Hackney. Each managed to play only two plays against the Tiger Bees, and their absence for most of the game gummed up the 124th attack which had been built around them.

The Benning eleven threatened only once during the entire game. That came in the second period when Hal Stebbins tossed a 35-yard aerial to Pete Dyal and then followed with another beauty to McCullough that was good for 20 yards and a first down on the Tiger 19-yard stripe. McCullough's attempted aerial on the next play was intercepted, however, by Jim Rollins, ending the Gator threat.

AUBURN SCORES

Auburn scored its first touchdown in the second quarter when Harell tossed a long pass downfield to Shiver who scampered across for the initial score of the ball game. The Tigers missed the conversion, and led at half-time by a 6-0 count.

The Gators came out fighting in the second half, and immediately opened up with a startling aerial attack that misfired when Auburn intercepted on the 124th 45-yard line. The collegians then proceeded to drive the remaining distance for a score with Lambert going over and also converting.

TIGERS GAIN SAFETY

Later in the same period, the Tigers backed the Gators up to their own 25-yard line. From this precarious position, the desperate Benning lads attempted a pass, but Sal Stebbins couldn't find a receiver and was chased backwards behind his goal line, where the Tigers downed him and recorded a safety, boasting their advantage to 15-0.

The final tally for the victors came in the last canto on 15-yard pass play from Rollins to Tommy Thompson. The conversion failed and the game ended a short while later with the final count, 21-0, and the Gators on the short end for the second time this season.

Midget Gridsters Vs. Baker Village In Stadium Setto

Those "mighty midgets," the Fort Benning Boys Activities football team, return to the gridiron "wars" this Sunday afternoon when they meet the Baker Village eleven in the second game of their annual series.

The two teams will clash on the Doughboy Stadium field at 2 Sunday afternoon and parents, relatives and friends of the boys are welcome to attend.

First game of the series was played at the Stadium last Sunday afternoon with several hundred soldiers and guests in the stands to enjoy the clash. The Fort Benning boys "took it on the chin" last week but have been practicing intensively this week under Coach Grayson and are content to give a good account of themselves this Sunday.

Sparking the attack of the fast-moving midget eleven is "Superman" McKeon, a fast and flashy back who has done much of the ball-carrying for the Fort Benning boys this fall.

Other important news of Boys Activities this week includes the announcement by the Activities director, Major Virgil Ney, of the Infantry School staff, that the First Company of the Rangers will meet at 5 p. m. Friday for final organization. The meeting will be held at the Scout Cabin and all boys from 7 to 9 are invited to attend the session.

The Benning Sharpshooters, another unit of Boys Activities, is in need of an instructor for rifle marksmanship to supervise and instruct when firing starts on the indoor range in a few days.

117th Infantry's Football Eleven Named Breakers

The football team of the 117th Infantry will henceforth be known as the "Breakers" as a result of the Football Nickname Contest recently held in the demonstration regiment. The contest ran for a week, and was concluded last Friday.

The name "Breakers" was chosen for the 117th entry in the Fort Benning Football conference because of the motto of the famous National Guard regiment, which is "Break Through". And that is exactly what the unit did during the World War, when it was one of the first to break through the Hindenburg line.

Known as the Breakers, the 117th gridders hope to break through many an opposing line this season on the gridiron, and they have already established themselves as a dark horse entry in the conference with a smashing 44-0 triumph over Draper Prison last Sunday.

Three men in the regiment suggested the new nickname. They were Pfc. A. J. Daddino of Headquarters Company, who was awarded the five-dollar prize; Sgt. Bud Hale of Co. "A", and Pct. A. A. Abraham of Co. "E". The latter two were awarded three-day passes.

The winning name in the contest was selected by a group of judges composed of Lieutenants Soldz. Cudmore, Roberts, Stillwell and Van Schryner, Col. Grant A. Schlieker, commanding officer of the 117th, pulled Daddine's name out of hat to gain him the money prize.

Devils Meet Engineers; 117th Battles Tankers; Gators, Dragons Travel

Fort Benning's biggest week-end of football so far is on tap for this coming week-end when all six of the post's gridiron machines go into action. Four elevens will battle one another in two conference tilts, while the remaining two will oppose outside clubs.

The feature tilt will be the conference battle in Doughboy Stadium on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 when the unbeaten 29th Infantry Blue Devils roar into action against the once-beaten but powerful 55th Engineers of the 10th Armored Division.

The other loop tilt, also scheduled for the same time on Sunday, will be contested on Field No. 5 in the Sand Hill area and will pit the 117th Infantry's Breakers against the 11th Armored Tankers.

Meanwhile, Capt. Lee Gregory's 3rd Armored Dragons, victorious in their first conference game, will travel to Speigner, Ala., for a tussle with the Draper Prison eleven. On Saturday night, the 124th Gators will be in action under the lights at Moultrie, Ga., when they play the Spence Field Fliers.

DEVILS VS. ENGINEERS

The battle between the 29th and the 55th in the stadium on Sunday will probably draw a crowd of more than 8,000 rooters and will be the most colorful tilt of the infant season. The 29th, of course, will be supported by its famous band, and plans are underway to get a high school band from the city to help whoop it up for the Engineers.

Lieut. Joe Ashmore's Big Blue already the victor over two Air Force elevens from Spence Field and Daniel Field, will be a slight favorite at the kick-off, but will have to spot the rough-and-ready Engineers a considerable weight advantage.

In losing to the 3rd Armored last Sunday, the 55th contingent showed plenty of potential power in the backfield, operating behind a strong line coached by Lieut. Morris Weintraub, former Union College star. Head coach and flashback for the 55th is Lieut. Carl Deane, erstwhile Duke University ace, who played in the Rose Bowl for the Durham Blue Devils a few years back.

In Deane, who inserts himself as a spot player, and Earl Hagan, Johnny Krull and Paul Homenick, the armored lads have some hard-running backs that should test the strong 29th forward wall. Against the Dragons, the 55th aerial attack was weak, however, and the 29th will probably control the airlanes.

Riddled by injuries, the Big Blue will present a patched-up line-up with two newcomers getting the starting call. Mickey McGuire, rugged blocker, will start at quarterback in place of Phil Del Monte, and Joe Sacewitz, who opened at guard against Spence Field, is slated to return to his old post after a short lay-off due to an injured leg.

Along with McGuire, who can also be used to spell the wing-back, the Two-Nine backs will be Jarrin' Joe Bryan at fullback, Ed Hurley at tailback and fleet Bill Chaney at wingback. Mike Hutchins, just appointed 29th field captain for the season, is the standout on a strong forward wall.

The battle will probably resolve itself into a battle of strong lines, with the verdict going to the team that produces the best break-away backs plus a sustained aerial attack. It should be a thriller, though, from whistle to whistle.

BREAKERS VS. TANKERS

When Capt. Swede Carlson leads his 11th Armored eleven into action against the 117th Infantry, the former Arizona fullback will be watching an untested team that may surprise or disappoint. The Tankers are the only loop club yet to see action, and no one knows quite what to expect of them.

The Breakers rolled up 44 points against a light Draper Prison team on Sunday, and uncovered some fast-moving backs in Smith, Pansock and a couple more. But against the 11th eleven, they will be facing a much heavier aggregation, and may have to resort to an aerial attack.

Both teams were among the late starters in holding practice sessions, and are not as advanced in their training as some of the other loop clubs, which gives them an advantage in meeting one another in their first conference start.

The 117th, due to its warm-up game against the Draper team will be a slight favorite, but the game is being played on the armored team's home grounds and that should just about even things up. The verdict could go either way.

GATORS VS. FLIERS

Under the lights of the Meuldrie High School Stadium on Saturday evening, the 124th Infantry's big orange and blue eleven will play its third straight game away from the post, and try to overcome this obstacle by turning in its first win.

Three weeks ago, the Spence Field team played here in Doughboy and bowled to the 29th by a 6-0 count, when Joe Ashmore hurled a touchdown pass to Ed Hurley. At that time, the Fliers were not in condition, but they were huge and potent. The following week, they absorbed a 75-0 shellacking from Pensacola's Gobs, but they are well over that now, and anxious to break into the win column against the Gators.

Thus, the game will resolve itself into a fracas between two strong clubs that have yet to taste the sweet meats of victory, so it should be a humdinger. The loss, for the time being, of Roy Cestary and Claude Hackney will handicap the Gators for the entire offense was built around these star tailbacks.

DRAGONS VS. DRAPER

The big green and white dragons of the 3rd Armored are a distinct favorite over the much lighter prison eleven in the game that will be played behind walls. However, the test should give Capt. Gregory a chance to try out his reserve strength which went untested in the Engineer victory.

Big Chief Carney, Al Litwak, Tony Laskosky and Nick Copra should have a field day against the Draper lads, but the prisoners will counter with at least one classy back in inmate coach Gene Davis, who scatted all over the field against the 117th.

In the final analysis, however, that may surprise or disappoint, its bound to be a Dragon win, and the tilt will be a good stepping stone to get the Dragons ready for more important tilts which lie ahead for the eleven which right now is pacing the conference.

Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, athletic officer at Benning, proudly pins the gold bars on newly-commissioned 2nd Lieut. Irving Fleischer. Lieut. He is now at the Special Service School, Fort Meade, Md.

Colored Football Returns To Post as Panthers Open

Colored football will return to Fort Benning for the first time since the days of the famous 24th Infantry next Wednesday night when the Benning Panthers, representing the Service Battalion of the 3rd Student Training Regiment, meets a powerful Spencer High Alumni eleven from Columbus in Doughboy Stadium at 8:30.

The game will be the first to be played under the new lighting system now being installed in the grid arena, and which will be ready for the big colored opener next Wednesday. The Spencer tilt will be the first of several to be played in the stadium by the Panthers who expect to bring Tuskegee, Morehouse, and several other high calibre teams to the fort.

COACHED BY KIRK

The Panthers have been practicing for several weeks under the tutelage of 1st Lieut. Maurice D. Kirk, former varsity line star at Missouri from 1935 to 1937. He is being assisted by 1st Lieut. Norman P. Hogenson, who once played guard for Willamette University out on Oregon. Lieut. Jack Gustin is the team manager and responsible for the attractive schedule.

More than sixty colored boys in the service battalion answered the first call, and now Coach Kirk has narrowed his material down to three full teams that show great promise. Several former college stars are included in the roster, and indications are that the Pan-

PHILLIPSON IS STAR

Frank Phillipson, one of the fastest high school backs in New York City in 1940 is the shining light of the backfield. Johnnie Williams, of Allen University, Bill Young of Bloomfield (NJ.) High, and Charley Powell complete an unusually speedy quartet of backs. Roscoe Burton of Madison (NJ.) High and Ken Bell of Chicago's Phillips High School are an outstanding guard and end on a powerful forward wall that will also have Clarence Reid at center, Charley Jackson at the other guard, Tom Still and Levi Fonville at tackles, and Lou Celestin at the other flank.

HIGH SCHOOL PLAYERS

The orange and black Benning eleven will meet some real opposition from the Columbus aggregation. Although billed as an alumni team, Spencer's line-up will include many members of this year's high school varsity, and is a well-drilled club, coached by John H. Martin.

Starting backs for Spencer will be Cecil Jones, John Butler, George Ford and Willie Banks. In the forward wall, the Spencers will have Allen Slocumb and Jim Carter at ends, Ralph Rogers and Ed Sparks at tackles, Clarence O'Neil and Jim Whatley at guards and Isaac James at the pivot.

Since the Panther-Spencer tilt will be the first under the Doughboy Stadium lights, it will probably attract a banner turn-out of grid fans.

Red Cross Man in Ala. Area Has Tough Time

Thomas A. Boyle, assistant Red Cross field director in the Alabama area of Fort Benning brushes snakes, frogs and cockroaches from his desk every morning when he comes to work at his "office", but he considers that and a few other "problems" all in a day's work.

Having four secretaries gracefully bow out in succession might floor an ordinary man, but ten years in social work at New York plus a lot of "stick-to-it-iveness" helped Boyle to pitch in and make a going concern of Red Cross work in the Alabama area. Not only has he a semi-permanent field tent erected for a headquarters but the fifth secretary, Miss Mildred Johnsen, has won a convincing victory over the frogs, snakes and gnats and appears to be settling down for a lot of work.

Red Cross aid to soldiers is well-developed and smoothly-functioning in most of the great areas at Fort Benning. In order to serve all of the post's soldiers, Joseph Eugene Bussey, Red Cross director at Fort Benning, early last summer assigned Boyle to the Alabama area. He picked the right man because the tougher things became, the tougher Boyle got. When he first started, Boyle used to hitch-hike to work in the Alabama area. Later he was assigned a car and used it as a field headquarters for some time, keeping his files in the back seat and using the fender as a "desk."

FINALLY GETS QUARTERS

Then they put the Red Cross office in an old latrine in the exchange building and after that transferred Boyle to a tent erected on a swamp. The tent blew down three times in a row and leaked like a sieve during a heavy rainstorm. Boyle finally prevailed on authorities to grant him a detail of men to erect a wooden foundation for the present field tent he and Miss Johnson are now using for their office work.

Outside of the fact that most of the mosquitoes and gnats in Georgia and Alabama use it as a base, this tent's O.K., Boyle said.

Boyle is handling 350 cases a month for the soldiers in the area and a "case" means everything from wiring a boy's home to learn how his mother is to loaning money for emergencies. Boyle is averaging about $2,000 a month on loans to soldiers for emergency furloughs, wives having babies and other important things.

I think military authorities will agree when I say the Red Cross helps to make better soldiers by relieving the soldier's mind of many pressing personal problems. I have in mind one man who hadn't been paid in months and whose wife was having a baby. I managed to arrange to have him paid and also took care of some things for his wife. From a man who was about ready to commit suicide, that man has become one of the best soldiers in the regiment simply because his mind is more at ease," Boyle pointed out.

RED CROSS AIDS

Boyle is convinced that many soldiers do not know all of the work the Red Cross is doing for service men. He points to the hundreds of times that soldiers assisted by the Red Cross have said "if I only knew before what the Red Cross does" or "back in civilian life I used to contribute to the Red Cross every year, and boy, am I glad that I and millions of others did give."

Boyle is typical of the hundreds of able assistant directors on leaves of absence from civilian life. A graduate of the City College of New York, Boyle, who resides at 3770 62nd Street, Woodside, L. I., took courses at Fordham University, the Russell Sage Foundation and the Henry George School of Social Science before going to work for the city's Department of Welfare. He worked there for 10 years before taking up Red Cross work.

Boyle was liked so well by one outfit that when it moved on, the commanding officer, figuratively speaking "moved heaven and earth" to have Boyle go along, but Washington headquarters said Boyle was more useful at Fort Benning.

Former Davis Cup Star Wants Return Engagement in Germany

Candidate Wilmer Hines Was Doubles Player On 1934 U. S. Squad

A return engagement in Germany!

That's what Candidate Wilmer Hines, nationally known topflight tennis player, is asking for these days as he proceeds through the crack Infantry Officers' Training School here at Fort Benning.

A return engagement, but this time with the rifle and knife of a fighting United States Army Infantryman instead of the tennis racket that he used to wield so well.

DAVIS CUP STAR

Back in 1934, as a member of the United States Davis Cup team, Hines had the doubtful pleasure of meeting some of Hitler's high-ranking henchmen and developed a keen dislike for that crowd even then.

The British team was victorious that year and Hines recalls the violent hate that Propaganda Minister Goebbels showed towards the British and Americans as he presented them with their prizes at Wiesbaden. "Goebbels," said Hines, "reminded me of a cobra about to strike."

SPLIT SERIES

Hines, with his doubles partner, Henry Culley, of Santa Barbara, Cal., split their series with the great doubles team of Baron Gottfried Von Cramm and Heinrich Henkel of Germany, but he predicts a clean cut victory when the return engagement comes to pass.

A native of Columbia, S. C., Hines started his tennis career as a freshman at the University of North Carolina in 1929 when he won the National Junior championship and remained unbeaten in Intercollegiate matches during his next four years at the University.

Before turning professional, Hines ranked third in American doubles and eighth in American singles which is good tennis on anyone's court.

PLAYED BUDGE

As a fitting climax to his career he played the sensational Don Budge at the Charleston Tennis Club in Charleston, West Virginia, on January 20. On January 21st he took the oath of enlistment as a private in the Army of the United States.

Since then he has worked his way up through the ranks to be selected for Officers' Training in the finest Infantry School in the world here at Benning. He is now a member of the Third Student Training Regiment under the command of Col. R. H. Lord and if he successfully completes the course he will play that return engagement, not as Wilmer Hines of the Davis Cup team, but as 2nd Lieutenant Wilmer Hines, of the Army of the United States.

Mrs. Winifred Baker, senior hostess of the 10th Armored Division's Service Club, entertained at a luncheon on Tuesday honoring Miss Ann Pridmore, USO-YWCA Director and Miss Elizabeth Lowe, Program Director, both of Columbus.

During the luncheon, plans were discussed to coordinate social activities of both the USO-YWCA and the Service Club in an effort to exchange entertainment ideas and cooperate more closely with a well-rounded program beneficial to the two organizations.

Other guests at the luncheon included Miss Irene Warner, junior hostess of the Service Club, Private Ray Graf of the Service Club Staff, Master Sergeant Saul Miller of the Artillery Command, Sergeant Frank Bachinger of the 420th Field Artillery and Corporal James E. Frye of the division public relations office.

In the Pacific, the Marines in the Solomons had their work cut out for them as the Jap landed more and more troops and equipment, apparently readying for a desperate attempt to regain the islands—and regain the lost Jap face. While the Jap landings were in progress, U. S. forces shot down 21 Japanese planes, torpedoed a cruiser and bombed and strafed enemy troops and equipment on Guadalcanal. Australian troops continued to drive the enemy back over the Owen Stanley Mountain Range in New Guinea. If they chose, the Australians could have started down the "Jap side" of the range but supply problems are tremendous. The threat to the Allied Fort Moresby on the other side of the mountains was considerably eased.

From new bases in the Aleutian Islands, Army bombers kept Jap-held Kiska Island under "continual fire" during the week, in Britain, U. S. Army headquarters reported that 115 American bombers shot down 48 Nazi planes, probably destroyed 38 more and seriously damaged at least 19. In Africa, the forces of Rommell and the forces of the Allied Nations faced each other along the same battle lines in Egypt, each growing stronger by the week.

Several things were of special interest to the man in olive-drab or Navy-blue this week.

Sen. Johnson introduced a bill calling for the continuation of pay to soldiers, sailors and Marines for a period of six months after the end of the war.

Sen. Wiley proposed to exempt the armed forces from paying customs duties on gifts they send from foreign ports to relatives and friends within the continental United States.

American parachutists landing from practice jumps in English fields were sometimes mistaken for Germans and in at least once instance, an American paratroop officer was brought in at the point of a Home Guard gun.

questions surrounding the issue are brought to light. The venereal disease question is discussed from the point of view of the health of the individual soldier, the relationship between high healthy standards and an effective Army, and the medical aspects of venereal disease.

There is constantly present an appreciation of the fact that if the men know the full story, the toll that venereal diseases have been extracting from amongst the personnel of the Army will sharply drop.

NEW LEVEL

The First Student Training Regiment has set a high standard for itself but judging from the progress of the campaign and the results to date, it is expected that they will be successful. Those who have had an opportunity to observe the campaign in action, listened in at the lectures, noted the sidespread publicity throughout the Regiment that the campaign is receiving, and more importantly, taken note of the changing attitude of the men towards the question since the inception of the campaign, are certain that the First Student Training Regiment is going to establish a level in this field that will serve as a model for the entire post.

$1,000 In Prizes to Be Awarded Soldier Verse

A one thousand dollar war poetry contest open to all members of the armed forces of the United States is announced by A. S. Barnes and company, New York publishers.

The prize award committee will include Daniel Henderson, Grantland Rice, and John Kieran, all well known in the literary world.

First prize will consist of $250; second prize, $100; third prize, $50; honorable mention will go to 120 additional poems with a cash award of $5 each totaling $600.

The rules for the contest are that any member of the armed forces may submit one or more original selections to be accompanied by the full name of the author, together with his mailing address (subject to military regulations) and the name and address of his nearest relative. Each contestant will warrant that the work is his own original composition. Selections must be written legibly on one side of plain or ruled paper. Selections not awarded a prize will not be returned. All entries must bear a postmark dated not later than Feb. 1, 1943. All prize winning selections will become the property of the A. S. Barnes and company.

The purpose of the contest is to stimulate the publication of war poetry, "poems expressing the ideals of our country and allied nations in this world conflict, and human poems expressing the feelings of the individual in whatever branch he serves."

The poems, which will be collected in a book to serve as a record of the spirit and valor of our military forces, may be simple lyrics, ballads of camp life or action at the battle fronts. The judges, it is announced, will place less emphasis on technic than on the spirit and freshness of the poem. Avoid phrases and slogans that have become over-used since the war began. Humor will not be barred.

Contributors of poetry to the BAYONET's verse columns are requested to signify whether they want us to forward their work to the contest committee in New York.

O. C. Loses Fear of Tank Pick, Shovel Horrify Him

It was a case of "rob Peter and pay Paul" with Candidate Robert M. Moore of Minneapolis, Minn., and at present a student in the Infantry Officer School here, after that tank ran over him.

The tank didn't actually pass over the sturdy frame of Candidate Moore, however, as he had previously used much sweat and elbow grease in digging a deep "fox hole" in which to crouch while the ponderous vehicle passed overhead. In consequence, the tank rolled over and did him no harm. In fact, the whole idea of the training was to help the students overcome their fear of tanks.

"Now, you'll never be afraid of a tank again, as long as you have a pick and shovel, will you?" the instructor asked Moore.

"No," Moore said. "But now I'm scared to death of a pick and shovel!"

Moore is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris E. Moore, 1015 West Minnehaha Parkway, Minneapolis. He graduated from Washburn High School in 1938 and was employed by the Northwestern National Bank and Trust Company until his entry into the service in March, 1942.

Candidate Moore is at present a member of the Third Student Training Regiment, under the command of Col. R. H. Lord.

Coming the night of the Yale-Dartmouth game, the club is fully expecting to celebrate the afternoon's gridiron victory.

Private Doakes goes to Town

Wide Variety Of Antithesis At Lawson

BY PFC. P. J. HOPKINS, JR.

Here, at Lawson Field, we have men from all walks of life and representing about every known profession and business. In addition, we have men with unusual names and we doubt very much if any other outfit on the Post can outdo us in this respect.

For instance, we have a Pvt. Robert E. Lee who doesn't hail from the deep south but who comes from Philadelphia, Pa. . . . a Papa who has no children . . . Storms even when the sun is shining . . . a Cobb who is anything but corny . . . a Monk who has never been inside a monastery . . . a Fish who hates water . . . a King with no royal blood in his veins . . . a Minor who is well over twent.-one . . . a Green and a Brown who are definitely white . . . a Valentine who is not romantic . . . a Cole but no slaw . . . a Forrester but no forest . . . a Berry that didn't grow on a bush and you can't eat.

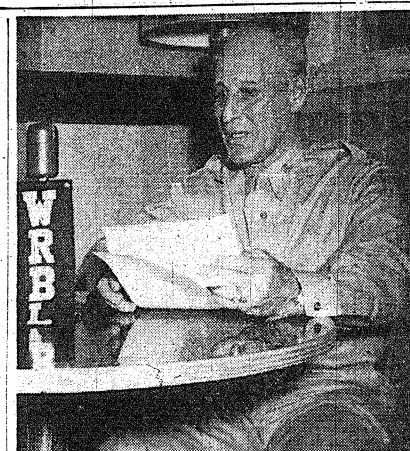
A Bell you can't ring . . . a Bride who has never been married . . . a Caesar who was never in Gaul . . . a Bier who has never been used for a casket . . . a Still who doesn't make liquor . . . a Zinc that is neither a metal nor an ointment . . . a Story who doesn't have a motto . . . a Crow that is not a bird . . . and a Drankwater whose drinking is not confined to the past tense . . . Can you top that?

24th General Stages Review

Unit Has Excellent World War I Record

Col. Walter C. Royals, commanding officer of the 24th General Hospital, reviewed the nurses, officers and enlisted men of his command Thursday afternoon in a retreat parade near the barracks of the hospital on First Division Road.

Taking a salute from the troops of the organization in addition to Colonel Royals were the members of his staff. The parade was made doubly impressive by the well-drilled Nurses Corps of the 24th, which has been drilling for several weeks along with the enlisted men.



A native of Meridian, Miss., an officer with 24 years of service, and a graduate of Tulane, Colonel Royals has risen through all of the commissioned ranks to his present position and has served in posts all over the nation from San Francisco to New York.

Previous to taking over command of the 24th General, Colonel Royals was executive officer of LaGarde General Hospital in New Orleans, La., from which the commissioned medical personnel of the 24th was drawn.

In a message to his men, Colonel Royals declared that the 24th was one of the first general hospitals designated in the present emergency and added that "Base Hospital 24 in World War I established an enviable record.

"It represented, as it does in World War II, the South's greatest Tulane University. It saw more patients and had the lowest death rate and in that time had not one case requiring disciplinary action.

"Our mission is to equal if not better this record. I shall expect every man connected with the 24th General Hospital to consider this his individual responsibility."

Before the Mike

Col. Stephen B. Massey, who spoke on a national hook-up Tuesday night, is shown in a familiar pose as he appears on the regular weekly "Quartermaster Quarter Hour."

American Industry Praised By Col. Massey on Network

The Infantry School Headquarters expresses its appreciation to the officials of Service Club No. One, Col. Stephen B. Massey, the 11th Armored Band, and the Reception Center Chorus for the parts they played in making the Infantry School broadcast of "This Nation at War" Tuesday evening such a big success.

The program which was carried over a 90-station Blue network hook-up coast to coast featured the training of Officer Candidates at the Infantry School in a salute to their team-mates in this battle for freedom—American Industry. A portion of a night problem of a rifle company in attack was broadcast from Hook Range, and a candidate who had completed the course on Tuesday was sworn in as a second lieutenant.

Part of the program originated from Service Club No. 1, where the 11th Armored Band and the Reception Center Chorus furnished the musical portion of the show, and where Col. Massey was interviewed. The Infantry School thanks them for their cooperation.

Speaking on a national hook-up over the Blue Network on Tuesday night, Colonel Stephen B. Massey, Fort Benning quartermaster, praised American industry for the excellent job it has done in producing equipment for the United States Army.

The supply head was a guest speaker on the program "This Nation at War" which featured the training activities of the Infantry School's officer candidate course and was heard over 90 stations throughout the nation from 10:15 until 10:45.

Most of the half hour show was broadcast from Service Club No. 1 on the post proper, but two pickups were also made from Hook Range on the reservation where actual training problems were related to the listening audience.

Another feature of the show was the swearing in of Officer Candidate William H. Curran, Jr., of St. Louis, Mo. as a second lieutenant following his successful completion of the course. Also heard was Curran's father, a defense worker in a St. Louis steel mill, who talked from a studio in the Mound City.

Musical interludes were provided by the military band of the 11th Armored Regiment under the direction of Tech. Sgt. Dante Perfumo, and the famous Reception Center Chorus, directed by Corp. Willis Brown.

In his interview over the national network, Colonel Massey stated that American fighting men have the finest food and clothing of any Army in the world, and expressed the reason for this as being the fact that a man is a better fighter if he gets good food and clothing.

In praising industry for the team-work it is showing in this war, Colonel Massey said that only an industrial system such as we have in America could produce the quantity and quality of materiel that is now being received by our armed forces.

The post quartermaster then went on to tell how the Army was not affected by present world shortages because for many years prior to the war, the Quartermaster Corps in cooperation with industry had been developing suitable substitutes which in many instances have proven to be better than the original.

Large quantity purchases are necessary in this war, Colonel Massey added, because of the many specialized units that have to be equipped and because of the unusually tough wear that clothing and equipment gets in this era of mechanized warfare.

In concluding his network talk, the Benning officer emphatically stated that the Army was not wasting the materiel gotten from American industry. He told how millions of items are repaired and used over again by the Quartermaster Corps who, under ordinary circumstances they would be thrown away.

The program was jointly sponsored by the Blue Network and the National Association of Manufacturers. It was written and produced by Sam Slate, Jr., a former resident of nearby Columbus.

PRIZE

A Chicago department store sponsored a contest last month which was won by Private Ernie Whitney of nearby Camp Grant. The prize was free delivery of any article in the store, up to a price ceiling, of course. Private Whitney shopped the whole place, but his selection surprised everybody. He asked as his prize a date with a brunette salesgirl in the college shop. But the management was equal to the occasion. The store promised to pay expenses if Private Whitney could persuade the salesgirl to accept. For the records, it may be said that Private Whitney's record as a contest winner is unimpaired. He did.

MENTAL HAZARD

Captain Paul Hood, commander of Company D., Fifty-seventh Battalion at Camp Barkley, Texas, had nobody more attentive than Private Fred W. Eppinheimer when he explained to his company of new trainees the workings of the Army's allotment plan for soldiers' wives. At the end of the explanation, Private Eppinheimer, stood up. When he stood on a chair, because he is a former jockey, and short. Then he asked in anguished tones: "Sir, do you mean to tell me that for every time a man is married he has to make a $22 deduction!" The answer is no. But Private Eppinheimer has been married nine times and his mental arithmetic broke down on the problem of deducting $198 from $50.

DIALOGUE

Soldiers like to complain. It makes for wisecracks at Camp Barkley, Texas. Private Hugh Williamson of Headquarters Detachment, Medical Replacement Training Center, was prowling his locker when he called out, "Where's my tie? Anybody seen it?" Private Eli Olbin retorted, "What color is it?"

QM Corps Adds Two New Officers, Col. Massey Says

Two more officers have been added to the staff of Colonel Stephen B. Massey, post quartermaster at Fort Benning.

They are 1st Lieut. Benjamin F. Wallingsford and 2nd Lieut. John R. Williams. Both were ordered to Benning for duty with the station complement and went on duty late last week with the supply corps.

Lieut. Wallingsford, a former enlisted man for many years, was just recently commissioned and reported to the fort from Camp Polk, La. At Benning he has been assigned as an assistant to 1st. Lieut. Herman E. Klein, the officer in charge of quartermaster salvage activities.

Lieut. William is also a former enlisted man, and was recently commissioned at Camp Lee, Va., following his graduation from the three month office candidate course at the famous Quartermaster School there. He will serve as an assistant supply officer on Colonel Massey's staff.

Soldiers to Get Free Legal Advice

WASHINGTON—Legal advice for servicemen is available through Federal law if needed in relation to action arising from debts or contracts made either as a civilian or after induction.

Unit commanders should be able to give complete information about the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act which became law Oct. 17, 1940. It will remain effective until May 15, 1945, or until six months after the duration.

Sorority Girls Are Organized At Benning

Meet Weekly For Bandage Rolling In Red Cross Rooms

Have you heard about Ft. Benning's Panhellenic?

Panhellenic is the governing body of campus social sororities made up of representatives from each sorority at colleges or universities. There is also a National Panhellenic consisting of a representative, who is a National or International Officer depending upon the sorority, which rules on all matters concerning sororities in general.

At Benning no one group had enough representatives for separate alumnae clubs, so it was decided some six or seven years ago to meet together as a strictly social Panhellenic. Due to the changing personnel it is not affiliated with the National Panhellenic, as an active unit. A chairman is elected for the duration of her stay at Benning. At that time an election is held and a new one selected.

In the past year there have been four chairmen: Mrs. John Eden, Kappa Kappa Gamma; Mrs. John Hundley, Gamma Phi Beta; Mrs. Peggy Ward Groneweg, Chi Omega, and Mrs. Geo. A. Millener, Alpha Phi, is the present chairman.

Each month two members, one from the Post and one living in Columbus, are appointed to be in charge of the luncheon.

MEETS SEMI-MONTHLY

Benning's Panhellenic is unique in several ways. Instead of discontinuing during the summer months it has two meetings a month instead of one. The only project is to meet once a week at the Red Cross work rooms to roll bandages. There are no dues or extra assessments, or business meetings. At this time meetings are the second Monday of each month for luncheon at the Officers' Club. The group usually adjourns to the Book Review section of the Woman's Club later, however, this is entirely optional. During the summer luncheon is followed by bridge, swimming or knitting.

At least once a year a get together is held with the husbands. This summer a Sunday evening dinner party was given for them at the Officers' Club. Dinner on the veranda and dancing following.

HOW TO JOIN

Anyone whose husband or father, stationed at Fort Benning or on duty elsewhere, as long as he is an officer is most cordially invited. Simply add your name to the list by calling Mrs. G. A. Millener, FE-2515 or Mrs. H. L. Axling, in Columbus 3-3563.

Women coming here with husbands for a short or long time make contacts quickly through Panhellenic. Sometimes meeting sorority sisters from all corners of the United States, or perhaps seated besides a close neighbor, heretofore unknown, finding someone from the same college or university and usually able to figure out mutual friends. Then too, the members become better acquainted with other sororities.

At one time or another almost every college or university in the United States and Hawaii as well as every sorority has been represented at Panhellenic.

Now you've heard about Panhellenic—do come!

Day Nursery and School Open at Benning Today

Full Time Supervisor Takes Charge Of Unit

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

The Day Nursery and Nursery School opened today at 8:30 a. m. at 106 Madden. The immediate response and efficient co-operation received from enthusiastic and interested members of Fort Benning personnel made the early opening of the school possible.

The set of quarters put aside for this important post activity has been freshly painted and will be quickly adapted to the needs of the school. The living and dining rooms are being used for school rooms. The three bedrooms will be converted into dormitories for the infants' Day Nursery and the smaller children needing mid-morning rest periods. The kitchen will be utilized for the heating and storage of formulas for the infants and preparation of fruit juices, which will be served during the day to the Nursery School Children.

The school has been fortunate in securing the services of Mrs. Horatio C. Mason as full time supervisor. Mrs. Mason is a graduate of the Ohio State University. After receiving her degree she joined the staff of the Home Economics Progressive Nursery School Department of the Ohio State University, which is conceded to be one of the outstanding training centers for this specialized type of education. During her six years at the University she conducted special summer nursery schools in Columbus, Ohio. Besides her valuable training and practical experience, Mrs. Mason will bring to the Fort Benning School a genuine and sincere affection for children, which is no small detail in the success of a school of this type.

MEDICAL INSPECTION

The schedule for the opening day was a medical inspection from 8:30 to 9:00. A daily medical inspection will keep a close watch on the health of the children and prevent the spread of contagious diseases. The next hour was devoted to supervised play, with direct efforts towards socialization and adjustment to group companionship. Fruit juice was served mid morning and smaller children given a rest period. The school's morning activities were closed at 11:30 a. m.

The tuition fee charged for the school will at present cover only the most urgent expenses. A plea is being made for donations of suitable equipment, cribs and bassinets are needed for the infants. Wheel toys, large blocks and children's books are needed. Small chairs and tables for the important business of making pictures to bring home to mother are also needed. Paints, crayons, easles, clay are also on the list. Arrangements can be made to pick up these items by phoning either Mrs. Mason at 3237 or Mrs. Horace L. Beall at 2430. The school would like to acquire a jungle gym and a slide, for outdoor play. A donation of clean washed rags, such as old sheets or tablecloths will be helpful in wiping grubby hands.

The Woman's Club of Fort Benning is sponsoring the school. Offering additional assistance and support are the Pan-Hellenic Club and the Army Daughters' Association.

The enrollment of volunteer assistants necessary for smooth functioning of the school has been gratifying. Over thirty volunteers have expressed their desire to give their knowledge of professional nurses training, kindergarden and school teachers' experience to assure the success of this highly professional school that has been a vital necessity for some time at Fort Benning.

Mrs. Flippo To Give Course For Woman's Club

Mrs. P. H. Flippo, professional tailor who is skilled enough to make Lieutenant Flippo's uniforms—and does—will give valuable suggestions on how to make slip covers at the first meeting of the Practical Home Making group of the Woman's Club Monday, October 19, at 3 p. m. in the ladies' lounge of the Officers' Club.

The initial demonstration will show how to cut and fit a sample pattern from inexpensive material, Mrs. Flippo plans at future meetings such practical things as the remodeling of children's clothes and the turning of men's shirt collars.

Eighty-five women have signed for the course, which is under the direction of Mrs. C. P. Chapman. Others who are interested are cordially invited to attend.

Garrison Library

BY FRANCES CHANDLER

The Garrison Library, located in one wing of Service Club No. 1, serves the entire military personnel of Fort Benning. The library is open seven days a week from 10 o'clock in the morning until 10 at night. More than sixty current newspapers and magazines are available to readers in the library in addition to a collection of 7,000 books. New books are constantly being added to the library to met the demands of borrowers.

The week's best seller in the library include Marion Hargrove's "See Here, Private Hargrove", one of the best humorous books yet produced by the war. This well-written day-to-day account of a private's life in the new army sparkles with dry American humor.

A most interesting book on Russia is Margaret Bourke-White's "Shooting the Russian War". This well-known photographer, wife of Erskine Caldwell, tells the story of the greatest assignment of her career—photographing Russia at war. The book includes a hundred of the best photographs which the author made while in Russia.

For a light love story with a touch of mystery, readers will like Dorothy Van Doren's "Dacey Hamilton". This novel is also a story of New York City on the eve of the twenties. Dacey Hamilton is a widow at 27, with five children. She comes to New York during World War I to get a job, and good luck sends her to Urian Oakes, newspaper man. Urian gets Dacey a job, and after a brief interval, falls in love with her.

Among the many fine books which have been written about conditions in Germany by refugees who have been fortunate enough to escape the country, Anna Seghers' "The Seventh Cross" must certainly rank as one of the best. The story concerns George Heisler, who, with six others escaped one day from a Nazi concentration camp. Day after day, even after the other six prisoners are captured, George eludes his pursuers. At times so exciting that it is almost unbearable, "The Seventh Cross" is a forceful indictment of Naziism.

THE BLACK BOOK OF POLAND. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. 1942. 615 pp. $3.00.

Based on eye-witness narratives as well as documents, this book is a detailed account of the working of the "New Order" in Poland. Covering a period of nearly two years (September 1939 through June 1941) it describes compulsory transfers of population, pillage, devastating exploitation of economic resources, mass utilization of human beings at forced labor, the creation of medieval ghettos, etc. Yet every page of this book reaffirms the vital strength of a great nation, resisting the invader at every step.

OUR NEW ARMY. By Marshall Andrews. Little Brown and Company, Boston, 1942. 225 pp. $1.50.

This first hand report on how our new, tough Army is being trained, tells dramatically for prospective draftees, friends and families of soldiers, just what is being done to mould the American citizen into an expert fighting man. Many types of training camps and every major branch of the service is shown in the making.

INDIA WITHOUT FABLE. By Kate L. Mitchell. Alfred A. Knopf Company, New York. 1942. 296 pp. $2.50.

An up-to-date analysis of the political, social and economic forces which keep India in ferment today. Not only does it outline the history of India from the beginning of British rule to the failure of the Cripps mission, but it gives a clear description of every part of the country—its vast potential wealth and abject poverty; its communal and religious conflict; the unique doctrine of non-violent resistance; the aims and influences of its powerful groups and the British rule and its effects.

THE ARMY MEANS BUSINESS. By Herbert Corey. Bobbs-Merrill Company, New York. 1941. 297 pp. $2.75.

The story of the new American Army built from scratch in an amazing short time, still being built, and destined to be the finest fighting force in history. How it is organized and how it is furnished, what it wears, what it eats, where and how it lives, what it fights with and how it gets from here to there—is reported in this book.

VICTORY OVER FEAR. By John Dollard. Reynal and Hitchcock, Inc., New York. 1942. 213 pp. $2.00.

VICTORY OVER FEAR tells how you may gain control over those fears which may be wrecking your life and robbing you of the confidence and peace of mind which make for a full and satisfying experience. The author's principles have come straight from his long experience in studying human beings and their fears at the Institute of Human Relations, Yale University.

THE MERCHANT SERVICE TO-DAY. By Leslie Howe. Oxford University Press, New York. 1942. 160 pp. $1.75.

The importance of the Merchant Service in peace and war is fully described in this book which not only traces every stage of its development, but which fully deals with its various aspects such as trade routes and cargoes, navigation, loading and discharging, chartering, fuel supply, docks and harbours, insurance, and personnel.

Star Debater Uses Talents

Is Convincing Lecturer In Infantry School

Several years experience in oratorical competition is the background of Lt. Don Wright, an instructor in the Weapons Section of The Infantry School here, who has been promoted this month to first lieutenant after slightly more than four months as a commissioned officer.

Lt. Wright has been a valuable member of the faculty of The Infantry School because of his convincing method of presenting a subject, a talent developed when he was in college in Oklahoma and, which won for him the national championship in debating in 1937 and 1938 at the National Delta Sigma Rho competition held at Madison, Wisconsin. He also won the national extemporaneous speaking contests the same years. He numbers among his trophies the Oklahoma State oratorical championship.

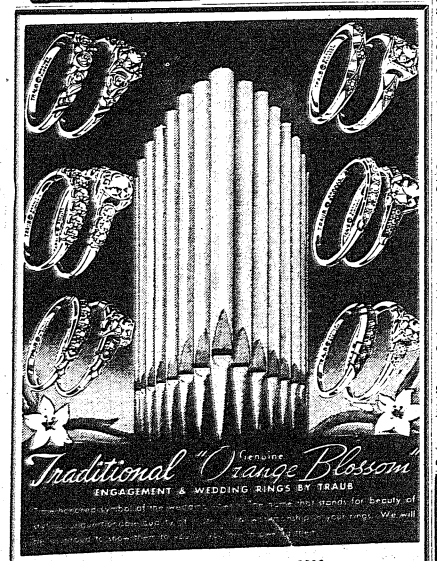
Lt. Wright practiced law in Oklahoma City until his law partner was called into the army. He closed his office and became District Director for the National Youth Administration for the Fifth District of Oklahoma, a position he held until he was inducted into the army as a private on March 21, 1941.

He was assigned to Fort Sill, Oklahoma where he worked up through the ranks to the grade of sergeant before being selected as an Officer Candidate and sent to The Infantry School here on February 1st of this year. After completing the thirteen week course, he was commissioned a second lieutenant on April 30th and assigned to the school as an instructor. He teached combat training for heavy weapons units.

Pratt Family Has 17 Boosters For Uncle Sam

It looks as if Uncle Sam has uncovered a promising source of material up in Auburn, Maine.

Candidate Earl L. Pratt of the Third Student Training Regiment under the command of Col. R. H. Lord in the crack Infantry School is next to the oldest of 17 children in the Pratt family.



Pratt, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Albro C. Pratt, of Auburn, Maine, has five brothers and eleven sisters. Plenty of OCS and WAAC material there, is the way Candidate Pratt looks at it.

Pratt, a graduate of Edward Little High School of Auburn in 1938, was employed by the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Coming until his entry into the armed forces in March 1941.

Since then Pratt has worked his way up through the ranks and is now receiving a thorough and intensive course in the weapons and tactics of modern warfare here at the Infantry School. Upon successful completion of the course Candidate Pratt will receive a commission of Second Lieutenant in the Army of the United States.

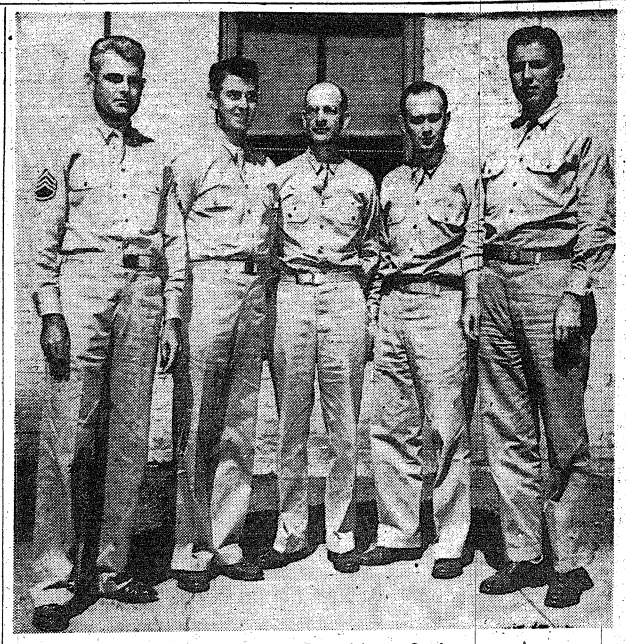
Col. Rosenberger Swears In New W. O.'s

A big moment in the lives of eight new warrant officers at Fort Benning as they are sworn in at post headquarters by Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., post adjutant. All were sergeants or higher in various administrative offices around the post until appointments as warrant officers came through this week. From left to right they are: Warrant Officers Cleve Crawford, John E. Smith, Eldredre Lewis, Marshall Tucker, Fred Bogwell, James D. Beck, Marion Jammes and A. A. Paulin. Beck, Jammes and Paulin are members of the staff at post headquarters, Lewis and Smith are assigned to the machine records unit and the other three are in the Medical Department. A ninth new warrant officer, William Beckett, was not present when the picture was taken. (Photo by 161st Signal Photographic Company.)

Fort Rangers Are Organized

Boys, 7 To 9, Have Rifleman Uniforms

Fort Benning has its own "Rangers," counter-parts of Uncle Sam's highly trained assault specialists. The post's unit, however, is made up of stalwarts from 7 to 9 years of age. The Rangers have been organized by Major Virgil Ney of The Infantry School Publications Section, to stress patriotism, physical activity, hobby-craft and good citizenship.



Although the organization is new and shiny yet, and plans are not fully formulated, it has already adopted a uniform. The miniature "Dieppe Raiders" will wear green caps with suitable sweaters and shorts. The color is meant to symbolize the traditional rifleman green of the early American Army. They are modeled after the famed "Rogers' Rangers," as is The U. S. Army commando unit.

Ft. Benning's pocket sized Rangers are made up as a company, divided into two platoons. Each platoon has adopted an early American hero after which it will pattern its conduct.

The company will be presented with National Colors and a Company Flag, the latter being in process of design under direction of Major Ney who is in charge of boys activities of the post.

The Ranger organization is open to any boy, a son of Ft. Benning military personnel. It will include as Junior Leaders, former Trailers (older boys) of Cub Pack No. 1.

Major Ney is drawing up a series of proficiency tests and regulations for the rangers. The organization's program includes limited athletic events and mass games. It is intended to teach the members the need for obedience at home and in school, cleanliness, and helpfulness to others. Medals are to be awarded for neatness. Meeting dates will be announced later.

Five Non-Coms Get More Stripes

Wearing new and well-earned stripes at Fort Benning this week are five non-commissioned officers of the Headquarters Detachment, DEML, 4th Service Command. All hold key positions at Fort Benning's post headquarters. Left to right with their new rank they are: Master Sgt. Robert Sain; Tech Sgt. Deumah Bishop; Staff Sgt. Franklin Crowder; Tech Sgt. Richard Harris, and Staff Sgt. James C. Wicker.

The hospital will be ready for occupancy soon after the first of the year. It is designed to handle all medical and minor surgical cases from the Harmony Church area although distribution of patients between the hospital in the area and the main post will be governed by the vacancies available in one or the other at any given time.

124th Infantry Dedicates New Bowl Costing 10 Cents

Production chiefs of the nation could well look to men of the enterprising 124th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning for tips on fast—and very economical construction.

Monday at 8 p. m., the regiment, one of the Florida National Guard units called to active service in the late months of 1940, officially opened the new McMillan Bowl constructed almost entirely by the Headquarters Company of the First Battalion and at a total cost of only ten cents—the purchase price of two plug fuses.

The bowl, named after Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, one of the regimental officers, seats nearly 1,000 persons and is complete with two dressing rooms, a movie-size screen and a stage nearly as large as that of the Hollywood Bowl in the Harmony Church area.

Talent from Columbus entertained Monday night when the ten-cent bowl was dedicated.

PX Prepares For Cash Business November 1

In accordance with War Department orders to all Army posts, all charge accounts with the main Benning exchange for all individuals, companies, and organizations will cease at the close of business Oct. 31. Effective the following day, Nov. 1, all sales to all concerned will be for cash or coupons. The latter may be purchased for cash.

The main branch of the exchange will be closed Monday and Tuesday for the purpose of moving to the new location on Weld avenue adjacent to the Main theater. New Match Box, Compass Adopted By Government

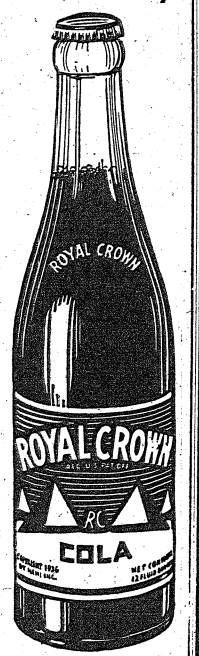
A new floating match box equipped with striking bars that will enable United States soldiers to get a light from a very wet box has been adopted by the Army, the War Department announced Saturday.

In recent tests, these boxes were soaked in water for more than a month. When removed, the interiors were entirely dry and the matches burst into flame almost at once when struck. No matter how wet the box becomes, the matches can be struck because of friction provided by the striking bars.

Made of a strong synthetic resin, the box is three inches long by three-fourths of an inch in diameter. It holds twenty matches.

There is a small emergency compass on one end of the round box.



TWO ENLISTED

Two enlisted men from the 24th General Hospital have been selected to attend Officer Candidate School here at Benning, Col. W. R. Royals, commanding, announced.

They are Anthony Marvullo, and Pvt. Donald Ralphel. Pvt. Raphel is a former member of the famous 7th Regiment, of the New York National Guard.

The Third Armored Regiment band played the "General's March" and then General Fulton inspected the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion's honor guard.

Shortly afterwards he was introduced to the Tenth's officers by General Newgarden.

The party then went to the 10th Armored's officers mess for luncheon. Those who attended were General and Mrs. Paul W. Newgarden, General and Mrs. Walter S. Fulton, Colonel and Mrs. Julian E. Raymond, Mrs. Stephen W. Ackerman, General Fulton's daughter and Captain Carl P. Croninger, 10th Armored liaison officer.

William Caxton was the first man to print a book in England.

Tenth Armored Couple Married

T-4 Herbert J. Wheelock of Headquarters Company, 90th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, 10th Armored Division was recently married to Miss Essie Helen Parris of Jasper, Alabama, at Chapel No. 4 by Chaplain W. H. Ruth.

Sergeant John Jordon of Headquarters Company was best man and the bride was attended by Miss Mary Clark, librarian of the 10th Armored.

A peep decorated by members of the wedding party with the usual old shoes, mops, paper and "Just Married" signs was a highlight of the ceremony.

An informal dimner was held at the Idle Hour Park near Columbus.

The bride will join her husband who has been sent as an enrollee at Fort Knox for a course at the Motorcycle School.

JUST MARRIED

Sergeant Anton W. Makas of the M. P. Platoon of the 10th Armored's Service Company was married to Miss Leocadia V. Motyl of Chicago, Ill., recently in Chicago.

The bridegroom's home is in Downers Grove, Illinois.

The couple are making their home at Baker Village.

Gen. Fulton Reviews Tigers

Brig. General Walter S. Fulton, post commander, paid a brief visit to the 10th Armored Division Monday to meet the Tenth's staff officers. He's shown being introduced to Major Edwin S. Wallace, assistant division surgeon, by Major Gen. Paul W. Newgarden, commander of the Tenth. (10th Armored Photo by Kerbs.)

Tigers Entertain Military Maids At Barn Dance

"Swing your partner, round and round, first lady swing and the second lady pass"—those were the familiar calls that emanated from the Service Club No. 2 Thursday night as the Tenth Armored "Tigers" entertained the Military Maids of Columbus at their barn dance.

Everything that it takes to make a barn dance successful was in evidence as Jakes and Mirandas came dressed in overalls, red handkerchiefs, straw hats, jugs of cider, ginghams, calicos and the "Yippee" that puts zip into the square dance.

The Club was attractively decorated with baled hay, straw in the balcony which gave the appearing of a hay loft, and kerosene lamps that furnished visible means of finding one's way amid the hanging harnesses, saddles and dummy horses in the stalls. The squeal of the live pigs that rooted and grunted in their pens added barnyard atmosphere to the affair.

Specialities during the evening were square dances put on by the couples and the graceful Virginia Reel.

Music was furnished by the 11th Armored Regiment dance band.

Guests included Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Strickland and Miss Waver Colbert who were in charge of the Military Maids for the occasion.

Newgarden Aide Is Made Major

Promotion of Captain John W. Sheffield of the 10th Armored Division to the rank of major is announced. He is aide-de-camp to Major General Paul W. Newgarden, commander of the Tenth, and is also the Division's Provost Marshal.

Before his assignment to the Tenth, Major Sheffield was plans and training officer, Combat Command A, of the Second Armored Division.

He was graduated from Virginia Military Institute in 1926, the second youngest member of his class. Because he was only 20 years old at the time, he did not receive his commission until 1927. At VMI he held the lightweight boxing title for two years. He it also a graduate of the Armored Force Communication School at Fort Knox, Kentucky.

Major Sheffield hails from Americus, Ga. His wife, Mrs. Emily Cheves Sheffield, is from Montazuma, Ga. They have two sons, aged 12 and 14.

AN ARMY WIFE Shops In Columbus by EVE

It's rather nice to think that war or no war one can still find the things in the shops for childhood pleasures identical with those of more peaceful years. Right now it's the merry black and orange absurdities that children adore for the Halloween season. And in case you haven't noticed, there's Christmas tissue, cards and ribbons. For overseas gifts, no doubt, but a reminder nevertheless that days and weeks will tumble over each other in rapid succession and we'll soon be saying this Christmas must be nicer than the last one.

I wonder if other service wives have the same trouble finding gifts for their husband as I do. Uniforms limited practical and usable gifts. A hammer, several sizes of screw drivers, pliers and an assortment of nails and screws to put in a small mayonnaise jar. Of course this needn't be a gift. It could be a temper saver for either member of the family when things get out of kilter and need minor repairs. You'll be tempted to enlarge my list of necessities for the home repair kit when you look over that fascinating hardwear counter at SEARS ROEBUCK. They're good quality too, and something you won't be able to buy at any price once these things are sold. While you're down stairs look at that counter of lovely plants. They'll add a touch of green for the coming winter. You can get from Texas and Arizona will like the variety of cactus plants. A reminder of home and the open skys.

I think discriminating mothers will like the atmosphere of the Kiddie Shoppe at 1144 Broadway. It has that clean, bright look modern decorative ideas give a shop. There's an orderly arrangement of clothing in the various size groups, which run from infants wear to Junior size 14. That itself is a boon for a harried mother who's outfitting the children and has limited time for finding her way about. Do little boys still like to imitate their daddies? They must for the Kiddie Shop has an impressive stock of diminutive soldier uniforms, some complete with two stripes of gold braid, which would make the military minded young one a junior captain, no less. The Junior Miss will be impressed with the sophisticated touch and attention to her style consciousness, in the new fall dresses for school and extra special occasions.

Old regulars, and I mean doughboys circa 1906 and thereabouts had a trick of smearing their socks with G. I. soap to prevent blisters on their long marches. The idea might still be good today for the foot weary army wives who stand in line endlessly. The draw back is the lack of socks to rub the soap on. The alternate solution is a comfortable easy fitting walking shoe. MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE SHOP has been canny in it's anticipation of our needs. The walkover model with a smart strap and buckle in tan calf is trim enough for your nicest suit. The captivating name of "Whistle Stop" by I. Miller in black or brown is another shoe with walking comfort plus dress up possibilities. The perenial favorite shoe of all seasons, the Joyce Play Shoe, is especially attractive for casual clothes in a soft green calfskin oxford tie. Wear it with a bright red corduroy outfit and you're decked out in the seasons newest color combination.

Those stunning leather toilet kits we've been giving our men folks for years are mighty elegant gifts. However, these days one thinks of space and weight for the necessities for their comfort. That's why the duffle bag at SAKS FIFTH AVENUE SHOP on Cussets Road took my eye. It's made out of water repellent sail cloth, satin lined for elegance. Every possible need is considered in the supply of items of the bag. There's a shoe shine kit, razor, sewing kit, soap in a sturdy box, tooth brush, razor, first aid items and toilet necessities for freshening up under the most rigorous field conditions. Plenty of room for additional personal preference and what's most appealing of all it's squishy enough to pack into a tiny corner. Menfolks that like the broadshoulder, slim hip effect a well tailored shirt will give had better look over that stock of 100 per cent virgin wool tropical worsted shirts. Saks takes special pride in the form fitting shirt they carry. The shoulder and neckline fitting is comparable to the finest tailoring standards.

The intimate and personal thrill beautiful lingerie gives a woman isn't the special privilege of brides. The discriminating woman takes as much time and care in choosing her underthings as she does her smart afternoon ensembles. THE PATRICIA SHOP in the Ralston Hotel is already stocked with its Christmas lingerie. Consistent with the type of outstanding perfection in designer's art carried in this shop, the beautiful ensemble of night gown and negligees are something inspired. Sleekly smart is the white crepe gown with sprays of appliqued flowers scattered down the front. The skirt of the gown is flared to unusual fullness and grace. The matching negligee has larger appliques padded for accent. Then there's frothy pleated chiffon with that French touch of tiny silk cording. White chiffon with creamy lace, foamy and delicate. Yellow and green chiffons with bright appliqued flowered nosegays. For utter devastation there is black chiffon and lace and even red in wicked sheerness. The Patricia Shop will be open until 8 o'clock on Thursday evenings, which is a very good way of telling you to bring him along. I'll bet he buys you a present when he sees these extra special bits of allurement.

It's a matter of argument whether it's worthwhile to establish a home these days. I, for one, like to think the man in my life will have a comfortable home to remember as part of our life together. It will be my duty to keep those bits that make up a home for his return. There is security of mind in material things. That's why I suggest the beautiful Heywood-Wakefield Victory Village furniture shown by KIRVEN'S for the newly married. It's the mar-proof beautifully grained birch wood in a warm wheat color. The style resembles the clear cut functional lines of the Swedish modern furniture. Scaled to small apartments it still has the depth quality found in fine furniture. Sectional sofas, double purpose desks, deep upholstered chairs and low tables as smart accessories for the living room. The bedroom furniture's classic simplicity will have an irresistible appeal for the smart young moderns that are looking for enduring beauty for the temporary home today and their permanent life of another tomorrow.

Finish Course In Intelligence

Classes Held By Armored Officers

Students of the 10th Armored's combat intelligence school have recently completed an intensive three and a half week's course under the supervision of Major Robert M. Blanchard, division intelligence officer. The school was held four times a week at the 3rd and 11th Armored Regiment's recreation halls.

The purpose of the course was to both train students in combat intelligence and also to give them methods of instruction and acquaint team with training aids. Those who attended the course, S-2 officers and non-commissioned officers, and reconnaissance platoon non-coms, are now holding intelligence classes in their separate organizations.

Among the subjects taught were: camouflage, identification of enemy troops, planes and armored vehicles, theory and practice of observation, map and aerial photograph reading, and scouting and patrolling.

Major James F. O'Hanlan and Lieutenant Carl F. Merlet, of the division's intelligence section, aided Major Blanchard in conducting the school.

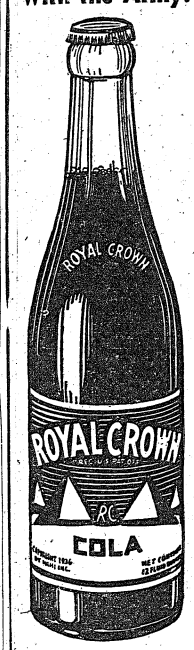
Phillips Made Lieut. Colonel

Is Division's Inspector General

Promotion of Major James T. Phillips of the 10th Armored Division to the rank of lieutenant colonel is announced. He is the division's inspector general.

Before his assignment to the Tenth, Colonel Phillips was with the 8th Service Command at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. An artillery man for eleven years, he also served with the 18th F. A. Brigade at Camp Bowie, Texas.

He is a graduate of the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Okla. and the Inspector General's School at Washington, D. C.



Colonel and Mrs. Phillips are alumni of the University of Arkansas. They are residing on the Main Post.

The first railroad in China, ten miles long, was built in 1876. The government abolished it a few years later because a man was run over and killed.

NEW LIBRARIAN

Service Club No. 3 in the Harmony Church area has a new librarian in the person of Miss Theresa Atkinson of Atlanta. Miss Atkinson replaces Mrs. Ruth Lumnus, who had been with the library since January, 1941. Miss Atkinson is a graduate of Sweetbriar college and has a degree in library science from Emory Library school.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

The long battle lines stretching around the world over the seven seas and all the continents bent back and forth a little here and there as Allied Nations fighting men gave ground grudgingly in one battle zone and advanced over dead Germans, Japs and Italians in other battle areas.

The American boys from the Bronx, from Dixie, from the western plains, were doing a lot of the heavy fighting early this week as the Jap went all-out in a desperate effort to recapture the important bases in the Solomon Islands.

But the indomitable Marines well-supported by the Army and the Navy took everything Jap battleships, planes, tanks and infantrymen threw their way and at last reports were still holding Henderson Field and the other important positions in the Solomons.

In the Kiska Island area, Americans bombed the last important Jap stronghold unceasingly while "down under" on the top of the mighty Owen Stanley Mountain Range on New Guinea, hard-fighting Australian troops pushed the yellow men nearer and near their base on the northern edge of the island, farther and farther away from Allied Port Moresby on the other side of the mountain range.

Nazis continued to die by the hundreds and thousands as the German High Command renewed attacks on bloody, determined Stalingrad, still holding after more than two months of unrelenting seige. Still-intact Russian armies bulge inward a little through sheer pressure of numerically superior German troops but the most the Germans could take would be a block of bomb-leveled Stalingrad. Before the Nazis could rest or even consolidate their positions, the Red Army would counter-attack.

Reports of plans for widespread revolt in conquered Europe in answer to the plan

[illegible] plants were [illegible] in the United States this week. The "grapevine" reported that dissension and near-revolt was circulating among German troops stationed in cold Norway. Contributing factors, said the reports, were the severe climate, no home leaves, fears of being sent to the Russian front and the hostility of the great majority of the Norwegians.

Bombs dropped every now and then on England, on Germany, on Iceland, or China with the usual casulties, many of them civilians.

In the United States, Americans read pre-Christmas shopping advertisements grimly and remembered other years when Christmas was not darkened by the thoughts of men away from home battling for the right to live and have holidays. For many American men, this Christmas will be their first in the armed forces because this week is expected to see the passage of the Congressional bill ordering the drafting of the 18 anc 19-year old men.

"The spirit and hardihood of youth" is what the Army likes and early this week saw the climax of a spirited campaign to enlist the younger men, who were offered their choices of 12 branches. The younger men, who have the stamina, the courage and the initiative so important in the 1942 Army, were flocking to the recruiting offices as the BAYONET went to press but the passage of the bill drafting the younger men will bring tens of thousands more in.

One report from Washington had this to say about the situation:

"The bill as approved by the House committee provides safeguards against the induction of married men as long as single men are available. Unlike the system at present where local draft board's monthly quota are filled with married men, if necessary a draft board may not order the induction of a married man when elsewhere

Mr. Sergeant Bennett

TIS Claims Nation's Ranking Non-Com

Sgt. Bennett Has Been Master Sergeant Since Oct. 1922

We can't be sure; we've written to Washington to check it, but we're willing to put a few sheckels on the line that The Infantry School has the highest ranking enlisted man in the U. S.—Master Sergeant Frank Bennett.

It was more than 20 years ago—on Oct. 1, 1922—that Sgt. Bennett received a warrant making him a master sergeant. And he's held it ever since.

It'll take a lot of huntin' to find any of Uncle Sam's doughboys who won't have to take orders from Company B's veteran. His company commander, Major John M. Lemmon, checked the records to certify the date of warrant. He found that Sergeant Bennett, now chief clerk of The Infantry School's tactical section, came to Benning way back in November, 1919, when this post was known as "Camp Benning." "It was just a cotton patch then," Sgt. Bennett recalls. He was assigned to the Tactical Section and has been with it ever since.

Sergeant Bennett has been with Uncle Sam's army since June, 1914, enlisting in Chicago. He has served in the Philippines with the 13th Infantry, in California at Palo Alto, on Stanford University campus, and at Camp Mills, L. I.

He was like a bride left waiting at the church in the last war. His entire division had gone over seas, with the exception of his regiment, and that was all packed and ready to ship out when the Armistice was signed. After years of training his regiment was destined to serve the entire War on U. S. soil.

STAR SHORTSTOP

He has made his name a baseball by-word since coming to Benning. For 12 years he was the post's star shortstop. Maybe that's why he has had such good health. He has rarely been away from duty in his long term of service. Even when in the Philippines he was on the all-army baseball team which made a three-month swing out through the Orient, including Japan, each season.

And he has intimate acquaintance with scores of general officers—including Chief of Staff General George C. Marshall, Lt. Gen. Joseph W. Stillwell, chief of staff for Gen. Chiang Kai Shek in China, and others. General Stillwell was Tactical Section chief from 1930 thru 1933, and Sergeant Bennett's direct superior.

SING SOMETHING SIMPLE

Sgt. Benning recalls a large sign which General Stillwell, then a lt. colonel, had prominently displayed in his office. It read, "Sing Something Simple." And every-time an instructor brought in a complicated, detailed lecture to be okehed, General Stillwell would point to the sign, and tell the instructor to make his remarks simple and to the point.

Sgt. Bennett gives his opinion of future events in the war: "The Germans already see the handwriting on the wall." Maybe they'll be finished by next year. This winter's bombing may do it. Germany will give up," he believes.

He thinks it will be different

Wrong Numbers Tie Up Post Phone Trunk Lines

Wrong numbers tie up needed lines and equipment and needlessly disturb busy people, officials at Fort Benning declared this week in asking for the cooperation of all military personnel using telephones.

The following suggestions were listed as a means of avoiding such harm to the war effort:

Be sure you have the right number in mind before dialing or placing your call.

Refer to the telephone directory first. If you don't find the party listed, call information from a manual phone or dial 113 and get the number from the information operator.

Those making calls to the post should remember that each section of the reservation has its own number. It is essentially necessary that the correct exchange number be dialed. This information is shown in both the Columbus and Fort Benning phone books. If a phone book is not handy, the operator will give it to you.

Many complaints are received from parties who are called when another exchange is wanted. For example—A Sand Hill number is wanted in which case 6681 should be called but inadvertently or carelessly 6611 is dialed, consequently the Harmony Church exchange is called erroneously. This ties up the trunk line and wastes the time of the party who is called in error.

Close cooperation in this matter will help improve telephone service and leave the lines clear for the war effort.

Promotion Bill Approved By FDR

President Roosevelt has approved legislation enabling every Army officer promoted since December 7, 1941, to enter upon his new rank and receive appropriate pay and allowances from the date of issuance of the promotion order. The new law also relieves officers from executing a new oath of office each time they are promoted.

It is believed that hundreds of officers will receive additional back pay by reason of the act, the Army-Navy Journal states. There is no official decision on this matter yet.

In the majority of promotions made since December 7, periods from a day or two to several months have elapsed between the issuance of the promotion order and acceptance of the promotion in each case. The officers so promoted will probably be entitled to recover the pay of the higher grade of such periods.

Work On New P. O. Building Is Progressing

Foundations Are Practically Completed MacPherson Announces

Construction of a new Post Office at Ft. Benning now is under way, it was announced today by Layton W. MacPherson, postmaster of Columbus, under whose jurisdiction the Post branch is operated.

Foundations for the new building have now been practically completed and construction will be pushed as rapidly as possible in an effort to have the Post Office in operation by the first of the year.

The site of the new building is across Vibbert avenue from the Post Fire Department, between Hall and Ingersoll streets, with the entrance to face Hall street. It will be a one story brick building, 110 feet by 110 feet, affording about twice the floor space of the present Post Office Building.

Now there are 45 men working in this original space, according to R. P. Richardson, superintendent of the branch, and more than a million and a quarter pieces of incoming mail are handled there each month, with about an equal number of outgoing pieces written by men stationed at the Post.

Incoming mail is separated in the Post branch for 93 different groups organizations, Mr. Richardson pointed out. It then is sent to the mail orderlies in each organization for distribution to the men. Need for the new building became imperative when increased amount of mail rendered present facilities "entirely inadequate."

The new building is being constructed under supervision of the Area Engineers' Office. It is designed especially for handling of large quantities of mail and will be equipped with office furniture and machinery designed to facilitate quicker and more efficient distribution of mail for the Fort. Dates for a cornerstone laying ceremony will be announced soon.

Travelers' Aid Gives Pointers

Notify Organization Of Cancelled Arrivals

The USO-Traveler's Aid in Columbus stands ready to meet children, aged people, or inexperienced travellers at any time or night, but they ask the consideration and cooperation of the Fort Benning soldiers in this matter.

tell them you will meet them at the station, as at the last minute you may find out that you are on duty and cannot go to town," officials said. Inform them that if anything happens and you aren't there, they should go to the USO-Traveler's Aid office at Broadway and 10th Sstreet. Then if you can't meet your better half, telephone the USO-TA, and let them know she will be in and tell them where you have reserved a room for her.

"If the party you are expecting can take care of herself, don't call the Traveler's and have them meet the party. She would probably enjoy the attention but so many of the buses and trains are late nowadays that it may cause the USO-TA workers to lose hours of their time waiting for the bus or train to arrive. Write the party and tell them to take a taxi to the office and if you have not made arrangements for a room, they will be glad to find a place for her. In the event she makes a surprise visit to see you, the Traveler's Aid will telephone you and has the privilege of getting through to lines restricted to city service."

Recently a soldier called from Benning saying that his wife was expected in at 6:45 a. m. and as he was unable to meet her she would be upset. Although the worker was not due to begin work until 9 a. m., she gladly met the train only to find that the wife did not arrive.

In another instance a train was met but no wife located. When the USO-TA worker telephoned the husband, she found he had received a telegram saying she was not coming but had not thought to notify the USO-Traveler's Aid and save them time and trouble.

In cases of real need call 3-4321 in Columbus between the hours of 9 a. m. and 10 p. m. and the USO-Traveler's aid will be glad to assist you.

Winners

Two non-commissioned officers and a private were winners in the weekly "original contributions" contest conducted by the BAYONET.

In the poetry field, the the "AWOL Blues", by Pvt. A. A. Abraham, Company E, 117th Infantry, won first prize last week. For original cartoons, the judges selected "Private Doakes Goes to Town", drawn by Sgt. George A. Cook, and for the best original contribution, the honors go to the column, "Country Editor in Khaki", by Corp. Irwin Blumenfeld.

The public relations officer has announced that these three men and previous winners in the weekly contests conducted by the BAYONET may report at the public relations ofiice at post headquarters as soon as possible and receive their prizes.

Woman's Club Brings Ruth Bryan Rohde to Fort

Famed Diplomat Speaks At Theater Nov. 7

LAURA M. BAILEY

The members of the Woman's Club of Fort Benning are looking forward to an outstanding meeting at the Main Theatre, Nov. 2, at 3:00 p. m., when Ruth Bryan Rohde, distinguished daughter of William Jennings Bryan, gives a timely lecture on "New Horizons for America."

Mrs. Rohde's reputation as a brilliant speaker and her authoritive knowledge of world wide events has prompted the Woman's Club to open this meeting to the general public. Tickets will be sold in the lobby for fifty cents. Officers are especially urged to attend this lecture if the time element makes it practicable.

Ruth Bryan Rohde was the first woman to represent the "Old South" in Congress, the first woman to serve on the Congressional Foreign Affairs Committee, and, as Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to Denmark, had the distinction of becoming America's first woman diplomat.

She was born into an environment of public service as the daughter of William Jennings Bryan and Mary Baird Bryan. She began her speaking career as a young girl stumping for her father when he was battling for the presidency of the United States. During the first world war she was Joint Secretary-Treasurer with Mrs. Herbert Hoover of the American Women's War Relief Fund in London and later served as a nurse in the Egypt-Palestine campaign.

MINISTER TO DENMARK

As Congresswoman, it has been said that she had as large an influence on legislation as any Congressman ever had during one term. She was no less successful during her three years in the diplomatic service as Minister to Denmark.

Ruth Bryan Rohde adds to a unique background of experience a record of exceptional achievement. Her oratorical ability has given her the means of contact with millions of her fellow citizens and for the past ten years she has been one of the most popular figures on the lecture platform. In every state in the Union on an average of twenty towns per state her voice has been heard, pleading for peace, painting her own rare background of work or

Priority Ratings Are Established For Four Groups

Dormitories designed to house 310 persons will be available Nov. 1 for civilians employed at Fort Benning, it was announced today by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general.

Since several thousand employees work at the post priority ratings will be necessary, the announcement stated. Rooms are not designed to house families but will accommodate from one to thre persons.

Four priority ratings have been established. First will come those whose duties require them to be available day and night. Next will come those who are unable to obtain lodgings in neighboring communities at prices within their price range. Third listing is for those living at an unreasonable distance and lastly is a listing for those living under sub-standard conditions.

10 DORMITORIES

There will be a total of 10 dormitories to be divided between white and colored men and five buildings to be used for white and colored women. There will be a recreation and mess hall for white men and women and similar facilities for colored personnel.

All buildings are being constructed generally in the neighborhood of the new quartermaster laundry near the Lawson field road.

Rental rates have been established at $15 per month for one person per room; $10 per month for each person when two occupy the room, and $8 per month when

G. I. Reporter Discovers That All Lines Are Busy in Army

The Ole Sarge Makes Analysis Of Traditional Fine Art

By ST. SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

Breathes there a G. I. with a soul so dead who never to himself has said:

"Look, another line."

"Another line"—tragic words in this man's Army but oft-spoken so "oft-spoken" in fact that well convinced by now that there'll be a line in front of the Pearly Gates, if and when he gets there.

"Sweating a line" is an art so highly developed in the Army that the poor civilian won't have a chance in front of the nation's ticket offices when a few million soldiers are released to practice their new-found art of "bucking a line."

There are many different kinds of lines in the Army. As a matter of fact, a line is only conspicuous by its absence and your G. I. will immediately suspect foul play when he stands a formation or attends activity where he's ushered right in without the benefit of standing in a line.

STARTS EARLY

This business of long lines begins when you first come in the service. They say "misery loves company" and the first few long, wavering lines in front of the examining physician's office, in front of the clothing depots and in front of the mess halls are rather welcomed as an opportunity to rest and "chew the fat."

"Heh. Heh," you confide to the guy in front of you, "this won't last after we get all settled. These long lines are just caused by the preliminary confusion."

But it does last. And how! There is nothing in the Army you don't stand in line for. It's stand in line for mess, to draw supplies, to get paid, to do a half hundred other things in the course of duty. But that's not the worst of it. When you do get away to attend a movie or hop a bus to town or when you stop a sandwich at the restaurant or a coke at the soda fountain—yeah, you're right—you don't walk in—you stand in line.

And an Army line isn't any trifling half dozen people. It's tremendous, colossal—and d a m n long. Take the Main Theater. The line is double there twice a night and it winds backward from the lobby out the door, around the front of the building, down the driveway, straggles along the curb of Wold Avenue and finally just before the show breaks, the line's "tail" is wagging back and forth by the Howard Bus Line Terminal nearly a hundred yards from the Theater. And the line at the Howard Bus Line terminal during rush hours, winds three and four times around the spacious lobby and gets so complicated that even the military police don't know which end is which.

IT'S A SCIENCE

The real story in all of this though is how the boys have developed the science of waiting in line. As in every other profession, certain men become experts—rise to the top of the heap—only the objective in this case is the front of the line.

An experienced line-waiter with hundreds of "waiting hours" to his credit is a sight to behold. His technique is noticeable first as he approaches the line. He is undismayed at its length, no matter how many times it doubles back and forth, no matter how many of his fellows watch his approach with pity from their berths in the middle of the line.

So our hero takes his place at the very end and here is where the science comes in. Does he shuffle from one foot to the other, growl and mutter into his beard as the line snakes slowly forward? He does not. He balances lightly on the balls of his feet for a while, usually with his arms folded in solid comfort. Then he'll casually

G. I.—Government Issue. In other words, almost all of us guys.

"Sweating a Line" — To stand in line, not for three or four minutes, but for thirty, forty and probably more minutes.

"Angle - players" — Those who look for the shortest distance between the usual two points.

"Line-buckers"—The boys "in the know" who firmly believe that nothing comes to him who waits. Same family as "gate-crashers."

"Red-lined" — A catastrophe. A red line through your name on the payroll which means, in short, you don't get paid.

"Jerks" — Any guys you don't like.

Postoffice Reveals Why You Don't Get Your Mail

Send Home Your Correct Address, Officials Say

Have you been missing a letter now and then from your family or that best girl you left at home?

Well, perhaps it's all your own fault for not having given the home folks the exact Army address by which you can be reached. Or perhaps you haven't told them to be sure to address it exactly as you gave it to them.

That was the warning issued today by R. P. Richardson, superintendent of the Ft. Benning Branch Post Office, as new regulations went into effect regarding handling of mail that cannot be delivered and other regulations were put into effect to speed the handling and delivery of mail ou the military reservation.

NEW REGULATIONS

"Every effort is being made to expedite delivery and collection of mail on the post," he said. "Under a new order published in the daily bulletin by Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, articles deposited in unit mail boxes, as well as forwarded mail, will now be delivered directly to the Ft. Benning Post Office in order to eliminate one extra handling of mail and thereby speed up deliveries.

"At the same time, all mail that is improperly addressed, or undeliverable for any reason, and for which no forwarding address is available, will be segregated and securely tied in bundles and returned to the Army Post Office and Information Center located on Ingersoll Street.

"Many men don't get mail that their friends and relatives send to them simply because they haven't given the correct Army address. The Post Office makes every possible effort to deliver mail, but sometimes the men just cannot be found.

"The first thing a soldier should do upon being assigned to a post is to let all his correspondents know his exact and correct address, and he should impress upon them to address his mail correctly. This should include his rank, name, and serial number, his company, and his regiment, as well as the post address.

LOCATER CARDS

"At the same time, the soldier should be sure that his orderly room has his correct name, correctly spelled. The orderly room makes out a locater card that goes to the post office. If soldiers included some addresses on the cards, too, it frequently would prevent mixups in similar names.

"Here at Fort Benning we have a good deal of trouble getting mail to the Officer Candidate School because they don't come to the post in the same manner as most troops. They should be especially careful in giving proper training regiment designations and they should always notify the posts they have left as to the correct addresses so that forwarded mail can reach them promptly.

move weight from one foot to the other. This move is usually done as the line inches forward to save extra motion.

The real test of an ace "standerin-liner" is his ability to withdraw himself from conversation around him, to concentrate on anything a thousand miles away and still sense the movement of the line and keep his place as he moves forward. Semi-professionals often give themselves away by frowning as they concentrate. Your expert's face is bland and contented-looking—his eye unseeing—but he never misses a trick.

ALL KINDS

There are all kinds. Many of the old-timers bring newspapers, letters or magazines with them—usually short stories for longer lines, comic-magazines for light-waiting, may be a half hour. They operate much as subway readers. They fold the papers so as to take up as little room as possible.

Reading letters and newspapers in line though has created a sort of sub-science—the art of reading over the shoulder of the man in front of you. It's not too hard to do but the secret is not to get caught doing it and still be able to finish the story or the letter you (and the guy in front of you) are reading. I know of some champions along this line who consistently landed in back of the same man so as not to lose the trend of thought in his letters or in the comic sheet in his newspaper.

Of course there are the "angle-players" in the Army as everywhere else, and a line is the perfect stamping ground for them. They firmly believe to wait in line is to be ignorant and doddering. They pride themselves on their ability to "buck" a line.

As much as you hate the "jerks", it's sort of fun to watch them operate, especially at the Main Theater. You won't notice them very much while you're standing in line because their success is largely a matter of timing.

Just as the line starts to move, the "buckers" appear from nowhere, crowding toward the door, laughing and talking with the "suckers" in the line just as though they'd been in there waiting for the last half hour or hour. The mark of an expert "bucker" is on the man who will turn with a sarcastic crack if the going gets tough and wonder "where the Hell" all these line-buckers came from. They don't work from the back of the line but from the front, and their only deadly enemy is the M. P., who somehow aren't admirers of the art of "line-bucking."

There are other experts. Like the boy who will be in there pushing to his heart's content as the line surges forward, yet will be the first to lift his head and bellow in a voice heard around the post:

"Willya quit that pushin' back there?"

Then, too, you have the boy who is a past master at working in close quarters, such as theater lobbies, where you are packed in so close the mob moves as one man when you breathe. The expert there is the soldier who can relax completely, knowing he won't fall because he can't—there isn't room. One can "doze off" for a few minutes in a situation like this, secure in the knowledge he'll just be carried along when the crowd moves.

Some lines have varying effects on the men. Chow lines, for instance, are as a rule pretty quiet because each G. I. is wondering if that steak will last until he gets 'round the bend—also why that big mug a little farther up the line takes so darn long getting that food on his plate.

Pay-day lines usually make the boys talkative and invariably breeds a "wise-cracker" who more times than one is just the guy who finds out he's been "red-lined" after waiting an hour or two in line.

Officials pushed plans to allow as many of the men in the armed forces as possible to vote in the general elections in November. Postcards were distributed through organizations to all soldiers and mailing the cards, countersigned by commissioned officers, brought official ballots to the soldiers.

Uniform Store For Officers Opened by PX

Located in Space Formerly Occupied By Main Branch

The opening of the exchange uniform department in the store space formerly occupied by the main exchange was announced Friday by Maj. H. E. McGaffey, exchange officer at Fort Benning.

The uniform department opened Friday and will operate daily from 9:30 a. m. to 6:30 p. m. for the convenience of commissioned officers and officer candidates desiring to purchase the new regulation uniform now sold by the Army Exchange Service.

Major McGaffey explained Friday that one of the chief purposes of the Fort Benning uniform department, which is the only one operated on the military reservation by the exchange, is to provide uniforms for the officer candidates who are graduating as second lieutenants from the Infantry School.

Under the present arrangements, the prospective second lieutenants may order new uniforms ten days or two weeks before they are scheduled to graduate. The uniforms are altered by the exchange and are ready to wear after the officer candidate graduates, according to the major.

PRICE LIST QUOTED

The exchange is selling officers' blouses and slacks in a matching combination at $44.50; blouses at $32.50 and three different types of trousers at $13 a pair. Field caps are sold for $5 and overseas caps at $2.25. Short coasts are sold for $29.75. The uniform does not carry regulation shirts at present but shirts are available at Quartermaster warehouses.

Two other announcements were made by Major McGaffey. Effective Monday morning, all activities of the exchange will open at 9:30 a. m. and close at 6:30 p. m. Former hours were from 8:30 until 5:30.

The main branch of the exchange in the old grocery building on Wold avenue will be officially opened for business Monday afternoon with a special program from 2 to 6. The 124th Infantry band will play several selections and the Reception Center Chorus will sing. Guests will include Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general.

Boy's Activities

By MAJOR VIRGIL NEY

On my honor, I will do my best—

1. To do my duty to God and my Country, and to obey the Scout Laws:

2. To help other people at all times:

3. To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight.

Every boy before he may become a Scout, must subscribe to the Scout oath. This oath is recognized the world over as the basis for the effectiveness of the Scout movement, individually and collectively, among the youngsters who have sworn to follow its requirements.

In its scope and application to the growing boy and his aspirations and ambitions, the Scout oath owes much of its effectiveness to the fact that it does not overlook the vital principle of honor—so essential to all honest and sincere endeavors. The Scout oath immediately places the boy upon his honor to "do his best." Indeed, in the boy world "Scout Honor" means the plain unvarnished truth and is never used lightly or in a jokingly manner, even among non-Scouts. When a Scout pledges his statement by "Scout Honor" the Honor Code of Scouting has asserted itself.

The boy may repeat the Scout oath many times during his career as a Scout—yet the great moment is when faced by twenty or more youngsters of his troop, he dedicates himself to its principles—in a fitting and simple ceremony.

Since the beginning of Scouting in the United States in 1910, over one and one-half million boys and men have subscribed to the Scout oath. That it has been a vital and powerful factor in molding their characters can be assumed—any boy will become a better and more useful citizen if he will live up to any part of the Scout oath. Its influence for good in the daily life of the boy cannot be accurately measured—except in terms of the future. It is for this future that the Scout leader toils without pay or reward, assisting the home, the school, and the church in the development of men of character, trained for citizenship.

The youth of ancient Greece swore to their Athenian oath, the boys of Merrie England pledged their faith to the code of the Round Table; today, the American Boy can well emulate them in his loyalty to the tenets of the Scout oath. If he does this, Scouting will have accomplished its mission.

Chaplain's Corner...

BY CHAPLAIN ARCHIE D. CLARK, JR.
29th Infantry

When the T. O. lists three chaplains as attached to an infantry regiment, it is not an adjunct or an afterthought but a full realization that there is a definite field of labor for the chaplain that no other officer or service will fill.

Closely associated with but not duplicating the work of the chaplain is the work of the Special Services Officer and Hostess. Their work is recreational and social.

Being a believer in the old adage that an idle mind is the Devil's workshop and an empty life is the Devil's warehouse, it is the desire of every alert chaplain to support and encourage those services and facilities that employ the mind of the fighting man wholesomely and fill his life with the worthwhile things—those things that add to character and pave the way to virtuous living. There are times when these services are not available and the chaplain must be the man of the hour and must fill in. The one that gets to a life first usually wins; and the race is between God, represented by the chaplains, and the Devil, represented by all evil forces and interests. It is a continuous warfare and no time off for idleness.

The chaplain is the minister to the individual man with his need of personal interviews, counselling and advice. The soldier seeks his help from one who can speak, act and feel as man to man. The chaplain must be able to advise with the sympathy and understanding of a father; to comfort and nurture with the love of a mother; to accept confidences as friend and companion.

Almost every soldier has relatives, and many have families of their own. The soldier often has problems with which he is unable to cope; and the chaplain is called in to assist. One of our foreign-born soldiers has a wife and two children in an allied country. His business partner is being inducted into service. A seventeen year old brother is left in charge of the business. Can he get a dependency discharge to care for his family and business? A wife learns her soldier husband has married a second wife. Will the chaplain assist? A soldier in the guardhouse wants to send his mother $10 for Mothers' Day. A sergeant loses his furniture and personal effects in a fire. A mother wants a picture of the soldier that is the father of her child. A soldier's wife is coming to Benning to live. Could the chaplain find an officer's wife that needs a housekeeper? A dependent mother needs help from a soldier son that doesn't care. And so on. The versatility of a chaplain is often challenged to meet the welfare needs of soldiers. The reward is the satisfaction of knowing a service has been rendered.

The chaplain at work finds his greatest opportunity ministering to the inner man: that is his military "raison d'etre." He ministers to the man's religious needs, regardless of the man's faith, Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish. These services, among hundreds of others, include sermons, masses, Bible lessons, prayer meetings, baptisms, last rites, holy communion, and confessions.

Capt. Taylor Made Major

A veteran paratrooper, Capt. Alton R. Taylor, has been promoted to major, according to an announcement received at post headquarters.

Major Taylor, who is now secretary of the Academic Section of the Parachute School, become a jumping infantryman, way back in December 1940.

Since that time he has served as platoon leader with the 501st, instructor with the 501st, and more recently as instructor in charge of jump training with the Parachute School.

Major Taylor is a former resident of Greenwood, Miss., and a graduate of Clemson College, Clemson, S. C.

124TH INFANTRY

Although the basketball for the Gators doesn't officially begin until Nov. 2, the newly opened hoop court in the Recreation Hall was given a stiff workout by the impatient basketeers during the past week. Obviously, the various company teams have become tired of the long trek to the Harmony Church Sports Arena for their pre-season workouts . . . Once the league schedule gets started, the teams will be divided into two leagues—the Georgia and Florida—with ten teams in each league . . . That sports feud between "F" and "G" Companies will culminate in a touch-tackle skirmish between the two units at Hill Field sometime the next week.

Phil Kirshner (Co. A) tells us that he knows a soldier who is so snooty that he doesn't put the word "FREE" on his envelopes, but "Ft. Benning." . . . Sgt. Sy Saffer, the Romeo from Cannon Company, was bragging about his way with women to some of his buddies at a dance in Columbus last Saturday night. "Watch my technique, you guys, and learn how to make the gals," boasted Sy. With the boys watching, he sauntered over to a blonde-hair, blue-eyed thing. "Hello there," sighed Sy. "You remember me, don't you?" . . . "I never forget a face," answered the sweet young thing. "But in your case I'll make an exception."

Y'KNOW THAT HE LIVES IN COLUMBUS . . . Joseph Hutton (Med. Det) adds to the list of signs seen around for the scrap rubber campaign. He claims that he saw one which read: "Contribute your girdle. The shape of your country is more important." . . . Although "Pigeon" Williams (Reg. Hq. Co.) is no angel, he will soon have his wings. He was transferred to the Air Force last week. . . . Pvt. ARMORED VEHICLES

Your position can be concealed from armored vehicles by many forms of natural obstacles. Bodies of water, marshes, boggy ground, deep ditches, and ground littered with large boulders are a few obstacles which will block their passage and offer the best protection.

Use smoke grenades or candles to blind the crew before attempting to approach close to a tank.

Bombardiers Learn Egg Laying Where It'll Hurt

MIDLAND ARMY TRAINING SCHOOL, Tex.—The Hell from Heaven Men, the name given bombardiers after Brig. Gen. James H. Doolittle's raid on Tokio, are trained here day and night in the deadly art of laying eggs where they will do the most harm to the enemy.

Accuracy in bombing, based on a thorough knowledge of Uncle Sam's secret bombsight, is the most important of the more than 20 phases of a bombardier cadet's training. Precision bombing is demanded instead of splash bombing, the wasteful method used by the Germans on London, Bristol and Coventry.

The hit-or-miss system of the Nazis destroyed large amounts of civilian property, but very few military objectives, instructors here pointed out.

"We teach them to do it the way Jimmy Doolittle did it," said a captain. "Every bomb a hit, and every hit a smash in the Jap's military vitals"

HOMEWORK ELIMINATED

Study on the bombsight begins in classrooms, behind locked doors. The cadets are not given homework because details of the bombsight or its operation never have been printed.

"They have to use their memories to learn about the bombsight, and they've got to have damn good memories," an instructor said.

The cadets make their first practical acquaintance with a bombsight in a locked and guarded hangar. They climb atop powered, wheeled steel scaffolds, 12 feet high, called 'high-chairs.' They sit in bucket seats with the bombsights in front of them. An operator on each high-chair guides it around the hangar while the cadet practices sighting on a 'bug,' an electrically operated, wheeled box about two feet long.

After the high-chair exercises which consume a total of several hours over a few days, the cadets begin air work. First they familiarize themselves with the equipment in the planes, bomb racks, navigation instruments and weapons.

Next they are taken out for flights on which they observe how planes are operated. Then comes live bombing.

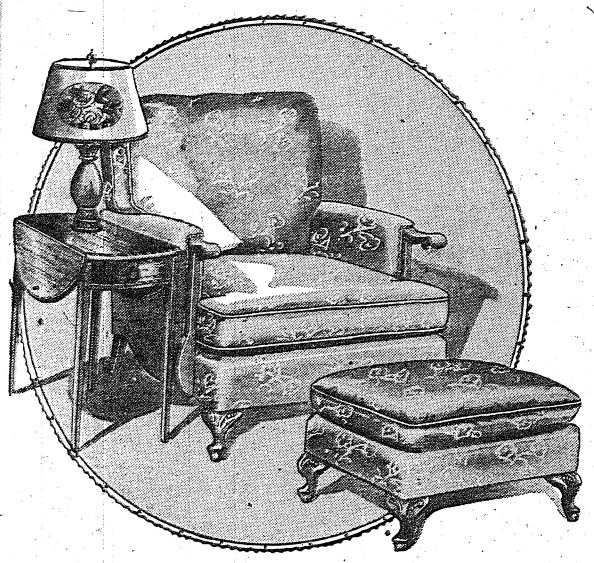
The first 25 hours of bombing is carried on by day, a total of 80 eggs being dropped by each cadet. In the night exercises, 12 hours of flying, they drop 20 projectiles.

The final exam is scored bombing. The cadets are allowed a certain number of misses in a given number of shots. Photographic records are made of each cadet's firing to insure accurate scoring. The cadets get credit for hits and near misses.

WINGS AWARDED

When the cadets are graduated they are commissioned second lieutenants, awarded wings, given flying pay—and sent to a gunnery school for five weeks. A new system of manning the guns on bombers require bombardiers, navigators, co-pilots and radio operators to 'double' in gunnery on bombing missions, going out and coming back. After completing the gunnery course, the cadets are assigned to combat units.

Prior to the training here, the cadets spent 12 weeks at a bombardier replacement center, during which they are given basic military training and a ground course.



Bombardier cadets are selected by Air Force psychologists. The requirements established by the psychologists are:

"He must have supreme finger dexterity. He must be calm under stress. He must be able to concentrate on crucial moments amid anti-aircraft fire. He must be able to make rapid calculations."

Brig. Gen. Isaiah Davies, Commandant of the school, described the bombardier as follows:

"His bombs make him the most dangerous man on earth. He is our anti-Japanese Sandman."

Power of Prayer

The telephone rings. It is the Sergeant at the Receiving Office calling the Medical Officer of the Day. "Sir! A soldier has just been brought in. There was an awful wreck. It is an emergency. Come quickly! Please."

As quickly as he can, the O.D. is on his way to minister to this patient that is wounded, bleeding and perhaps dying. We know that if it is humanly possible, he will save his life.

It is past mid-night. Another telephone rings. This time it is the O.D. calling the Chaplain. "Chaplain, this is the O.D. There has been an accident, and I am afraid the boy can't live long. Will you come to the Receiving Office as quickly as you can? The boy needs your help badly. I have done all I can possibly do for him". "Yes," said the Chaplain, "I will be there in a few minutes".

Soon the Chaplain enters the Receiving Office and without taking up any more time than is necessary to find out who the boy is, where he is from, and his organization, he goes to the side of the boy. The boy quickly recognizes the Chaplain and says: "Chaplain, I need you. The O.D. says I can't live long in the condition I am in. I want you to pray for me because I am lost, and I am not ready to die now. I don't want to be lost! Pray for me! If mother knew this, she would be praying for me".

And in the stillness and quietness of the night, we see the Chaplain kneel by the boy's side and hear him ask in the most humble way and with all sincerity that God will save this boy's precious soul.

Listen! I hear another voice, and we have to move inside the Dressing Room at the Receiving Office in order to hear the words. It is the boy that is lying on the table. His voice is weak, let's move a little closer and listen. "Lord Jesus, I don't know how to pray, I have never had to pray before but now they tell me that I am not going to live long. If I die now I will be lost. I don't want to be lost! And God! I remember mother reading from her Bible that if we ask in Jesus' Name it will be granted, so I am asking in Jesus' Name that You forgive me of all my sins; the things I didn't do as well as the things I have done. Save me, Lord Jesus! I remember the Preacher back home saying that when we confess our sins and take Christ as our Personal Savior, we would be saved. So, Jesus, I am taking you as my Sevior as best I know how, because I have already confessed all my sins. I have done all I know to do. Won't you save me NOW"?

After this prayer the boy fell asleep. Yes, unconsciousness. "Perhaps an emergency operation would save his life", says the Chaplain to the O.D. The O.D. looks at the boy and says, "It's certainly worth trying. Come with me".

The O.D. quickly makes his way to a telephone. Soon he is talking with the Post Surgeon and telling him of the accident and the critical condition of the boy. And when the O.D. has finished, the Surgeon tells the O.D. to call some of his assistants, some extra nurses and the needed amount of orderlies in order to more quickly prepare for an emergency operation, stating that he will come to the Hospital immediately.

Upon arriving at the Hospital, the Surgeon finds the best assistant surgeons preparing themselves for the operation soon to follow. A few extra nurses are doing their duty along with the orderlies. They have heard that the boy's life probably depends upon their speed and accuracy. Each one is anxious to get their assignments completed so the boy can get the necessary attention as quickly as possible.

Soon the Surgeon comes into the Operating Room. "Everything ready?" he asks the O.D. "Yes Sir!", is the O.D.'s reply. The boy is brought in and placed on the operating table. He at this time gains consciousness. He looks around and asks, "Where am I and what are you going to do?" The Surgeon takes the boy by the hand and says, "Son! in your case we are not sure that we can save your life, but all of us are going to do our best. But we may fail, it could be too late, and we want you to know this before we operate".

The boy looks around the Operating Room that was a scene such as he has never seen before. There are assistant surgeons and the best nurses ready to lend their hand in an operation like this. The orderlies are standing along the side of the Operating Room, for they have just finished their assignments, but have not been told to leave. The boy smiles weakly and says, "Sir! I appreciate all your efforts, and let me say that if I don't survive the operation, I don't dread to go now. When I was brought into the Receiving Office and while in the Dressing Room, I was scared nearly to death because I was not ready to die. I would have been lost, eternally. But—turning to the Chaplain, who was dressed to observe the operation—it's alright now. Since the Chaplain prayed for me and since I did all I knew to do in order to be saved, it's alright now. I am ready to either live or die".

There is a minute of hesitancy. Each one exchanges glances, just as to say as we hear today, "I don't get it". Then the Surgeon looks at the anesthetist and says, "Alright! What are we waiting for?" Then all except necessary personnel and the Chaplain are asked to leave the Operating Room.

The boy's weakness seems to aid the anesthetist in getting him asleep. The operation is begun and every one is giving his best in aiding the Surgeon and his assistants. After a minute or so, the boy's breath becomes very short and weak. The Surgeon looks at his assistants, and each exchange knowing glances. The anesthetist looks over at the Chaplain who stands with bowed head at this moment. Not a word is said for a second or two, then the Chaplain utters this prayer: "O God! Thy will be done". This seems to "Pave the way" or "Break the ice" for others who are not too busy to bow their head and utter a prayer, unheard by human ears. In a few seconds the boy is breathing stronger and more regularly. Everyone seems so happy and thrilled, and by their actions and the expressions on their faces, seem to say "He's going to pull through it". And he does!

As soon as the operation is over, the Surgeon takes a deep breath and turns to the Chaplain who is wiping the tears from his eyes, and says, "Chaplain, it was Answered Prayer that has saved this young man, not anything we have done".

When the boy has recovered from the anesthetic, the Surgeon and Chaplain go to see him. They talk of the accident; his condition before the operation; the operation itself; and what a "Close Call" he has had. The boy looks at the Surgeon and Chaplain and says, "I know now that a person is not worthy to live until he is ready to die".

Colonel Sossaman

"None knew thee but to love thee,
None named thee but to praise".

It is too bad that more of the thousands of officers and men did not share the high privilege of those of us at headquarters who knew George A. Sossaman and came in contact with him as we went about our daily work.

These are stern times; terrible things are happening around us in this world at war, things which tend to innure one to the passing of individuals as thousands spill their blood in this fight for freedom. But no one who knew Col. Sossaman will for the moment hesitate to pardon a moment of sentimentality.

George Sossaman was a quiet, gentle man. He was unassuming and when honors were heaped upon him, he accepted them modestly. A few moments of association with him were sufficient to win over one's heart completely. When he was given his new assignment by Fourth Service Command and bade his friends adieu, there were tears in many an eye. We knew for we saw them shed. We knew that our country believed that she needed him more in his new field than as judge advocate at Benning, but as we told him good-bye, we hoped that some time, some where we would again have the honor of associating with him. We even hoped it would be possible for him to return to Benning some day soon.

Now that he has met with an untimely end as the result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident, we can only say that America has lost the services of a loyal, efficient officer in whose heart abided unfailing faith in the ability of this country to weather this storm and assume a great role in shaping the destinies of the world.

G.I. Joke

Many and varied have been the castigations and insults thrown at the instructor's joke. These would-be comical interludes have long been regarded as fair game by both sharp-witted and half-witted O. C.'s. It's high time some held aloft the banner and manned the battlements for that beaten, battered, down-trodden creature—the instructor's joke.

From the instructor's standpoint, I have compiled a table in an attempt to analyze this monstrosity and thus create better understanding all around.

I will take them up one at a time in outline form:

1. The funny joke, a comparative rarity.

STUDENT REACTION: Loud guffaws and thigh slapping, punctuated by scattered clapping.

INSTRUCTOR'S REACTION: Beams on the class with fatherly affection.

2. The long, involved joke.

STUDENT REACTION: Occasional titters at the wrong spots, a passable courtesy laugh at the end.

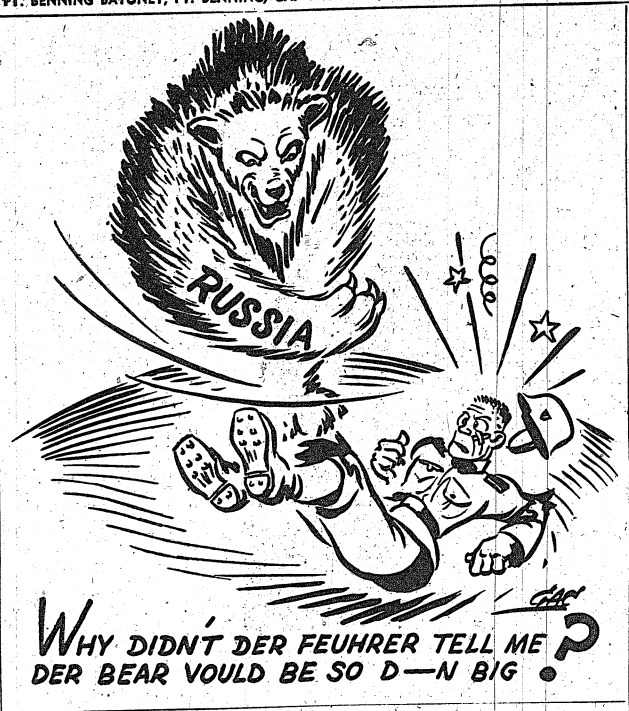
INSTRUCTOR'S REACTION: Hurries along with the lecture as if nothing had happened.

The stinker.

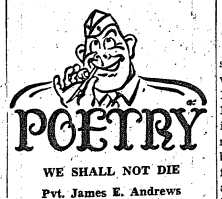
STUDENT REACTION: Half the class titters, other half hisses.

INSTRUCTOR'S REACTION: Clears throat and wishes he hadn't told it.

4. Joke that didn't go over.



STUDENT REACTION: Silence.



INSTRUCTOR'S REACTION: Blushes, says "damn" under his breath, and wishes to hell he was in Iceland.

There we have the various categories, reactions and acknowledgements. Now let us take up the courtesy laugh, most horrible of the numerous noises only an O. C. class can make.

The individual O. C. first scrutinizes the instructor's face carefully to determine positively that the joke is completed. His face then undergoes a terrible change. He twists his unwilling lips into a ghastly smile, while his eyes fill with righteous suffering. His larynx responds with a pitiful "Hunh-hunh," and then his facial expression suddenly assumes a blank, bewildered state, which it continues to hold the rest of the morning. Such is the courtesy laugh.

Continuing, we can now solve the problem of the instructor's joke by abolishing all but the funny joke. But it won't work. Many an instructor has pensioned off his stinkers and involved jokes, hoping they would die a natural death of old age or perish from looking at one another. But they always creep back into his repetoire. We shall have them always fellows, so let's just yawn, muster a grin, and make the best of them.—Lt. Walter Wilcox.

WE SHALL NOT DIE

Pvt. James E. Andrews
Hqs. Co., Reception Center

We shall not die—
Not though the red-jawed cannon gape
His hot mouth burning nigh,
And all the shrieking imps of hell
Come zooming from the sky.
We'll win the fight—
Though twice ten thousand smoking ruins
Proclaim the Spoilers' might;
Though Death stretch out his bony hand
To clutch us in the night.
We shall not yield—
Your courage gives us strength to face
The enemy concealed.
We know you march beside us all
Upon the battlefield.
We know the end
Will see our flag triumphant wave
Where'er we now contend;
And love and peace will bless the land
We with our lives defend.

MY FOLKS

By T-Sgt. W. D. Smith

I just received a letter
From my folks at home today.
It wasn't the costly stationery
It's what they had to say.
The words: they were mis-spelled,
And the English wasn't the best.
It was written with a pencil,
But let's forget the rest.
It isn't the way it was written,
It's what they had to say,
They haven't forgotten their boy,
That's why they wrote today.
"My son, Be strong, resist all evil,
You know we've tried to raise you right.
We'd give you anything we have,
If you were here with us tonight."
"And son! 'cause you're away from home,
Don't forget what we've taught you each day.
Go to church! Do as you used to do.
You know what's the Right Way."
"Soon, you'll be back at home, we hope,
And how happy we all will be!
Around the fireside at the close of day.
With our Bible read; we'll bow our knee."
"We'll thank God that we're Americans,
As our Flag so proudly flies
Over our homes and our loved ones,
Where Freedom, Liberty, and Justice lie."

With dizzy and wooey spice,
So my friend heed advice,
For marriage is a women's game,
And we poor men are all the same;
It's we who pay the price,
A soft white hand is something grand,
With dizzy and wooey spice,
So my friend heed advice,
For you'll find, you've been tagged,
And when you're through, you'll be gagged,
And always pay the price.

USO Presents

When the USO Club at Blackstone, Va., opened on Sept. 25, it was numbered "USO Unit No. 1000" . . . On Oct. 1, there were 1014 USO Clubs and units stretching from coast to coast, and into many of the Western Hemisphere bases of the United States armed forces . . . The total of 1014 operations—607 of which are clubs—is nearly three times the number projected when USO was first organized . . . Over 500 of these operations have been initiated since Pearl Harbor.

Skating still continues to be one of the main attractions at the USO-Army and Navy YMCA . . . And now another day has been added to the skating schedule . . . From now on the patio will be open on Sunday afternoons for those that wish to glide about on the silver wheels . . . Monday and Wednesday evenings are still the nights to be at the "Y" if you skate . . . Classes are being held both nights at ten o'clock for those who want to learn to dance and cut fancy figures.

It seems that the Columbus USO's are finally getting some recognition . . . This is a little article I dug out of the NCCS Bulletin of Oct. 1 . . . "The Columbus, Ga., Symphony, which holds rehearsals in the club directed by Eugene Bergmann, has, with NCCS aid, 'impounded' many of Benning's most competent soldier bowers and blowers."

Seeing Mr. Bergmann's name in print reminds me that we all owe him a vote of thanks for the fine job he has done in arranging the free tickets for all the activities that the Three Arts League has scheduled for the season . . . He is responsible for the show that was given at his club on Ninth street last week . . . "Red, White and Khaki" was swell and Wednesday Frank Buck held his show there . . . Thanks for the free tickets for the boys and keep up the good work.

Next Sunday's band concert at the SA-USO in Phenix City will feature vocalist Pvt. Hoard Hank, formerly of the Chicago Conservatory of Music, and Pvt. Howard Willmoth, who will act as accompanist. He was a teacher of music in the Chicago public schools. . . . Ah, country sausage and eggs, coffee and toast, with plenty of butter and jam . . . Such is the type of meal served at the same club every Sunday morning . . . Mrs. J. D. Dykes of the Red Cross and a group of helpers cook and serve the boys of the Breakfast Club . . . Pretty soon the different clubs will be serving your breakfast in bed and with the morning paper . . . No, nothing has been said about it, but by gosh, if each club tries to improve on the other as has been done in the past, this dream will soon be a reality . . . A special Hallowe'en party will be held at this same club . . . Watch this column for further developments.

Here is a past and future paragraph from the Ninth Street USO Club . . . In the past, meaning this last Monday, another Cabaret night was held and as usual there was a packed house and the show was enjoyed by all...Miss Judie Lamarr sang, Miss Nora Bickerstaff played the piano and Mrs. McVea danced . . . The "Two-Nine" band provided the music for dancing . . . In the future, we find that this coming Sunday will see the "down-east" states saluted in the "Salute to the States" program . . . The states are: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island . . . Come one—Come all . . . You don't have to be from these states to enjoy the show . . . There will be a quiz program on these states and the winner is entitled to a free telephone call to anywhere in the country . . . Entertainment and refreshments are your due at this activity.

The Fort Benning Public Relations Office has been trying to wake the men of the post up to the fact that they can vote in their home state elections even though they can't be present . . . Radio, Columbus papers and the BAYONET have been used as a medium through which to contact the men . . . Now the Town Hall Forum at the USO club at Ninth street will use this subject as their topic of discussion Sunday . . . Discussions of the Act itself and the candidates of a number of individual states will be presented . . . Mrs. R. J. Morris, a representative of the League of Women Voters and Pvt. R. M. Sherod will present briefly the outline for discussion . . . Cpl. Jules Siegel wil act as moderator.

RUNNING A PAPER

Isn't one-half as easy as you think. If we have gossip, the writer is criticised;
If we don't, we're too literary and stilted.
If we have small headlines, they are not prominent enough;
If we run bold heads, they take up too much room.
If we print jokes, people say they are silly;
If we don't the paper is dry. Somebody will say that we swiped this column. WE DID.

GOILS

I think that I shall never see
A girl refuse a meal that's free,
A girl with hungry eyes not fixed
Upon the drink that's being mixed,
A girl who doesn't like to wear
A lot of junk to match her hair,
Girls are loved by guys like me
'Cause we don't like to kiss a tree.

NEW PURSUIT: Fighter Command headquarters in an eastern city recently began to wonder whether they had missed up on a new development in aviation. What caused the excitement was a call from a worried feminine aircraft spotter who reported "something that looked like a couple of planes with their arms wrapped around one another" flying suspiciously overhead. It turned out to be a P-38.—Mitchell Beacon.

Day-Room Duds

By HARRY R. CHARD

"I'm bailing out!" chortled the air corps soldier as he saw his bondsman approaching the hoosegow.

GENERAL SITUATION

I should have been a general
Then I could wear important looks;
And have an office cluttered up
With army training books;
For I could, as a general,
Raise lots of hell, no doubt,
And it would be a lot of fun
To bawl some soldier out.

Mess Sgt.: "I don't think I made a mistake when I bought this liver for twenty cents a pound, do you?"

Chow Hound: "No—But when you put it on the table, that will be your mistake."

The government says there's a shortage of rubber in this country, which seems to offer an ideal opportunity for the army hotcake to come into its own.

"I ain't no fortune teller" the top kick confided in private extra duty, "but I'll bet I can tell you what you will be doing next Sunday."

Wine and women,
And a few notes of sing,
Is the eternal triangle
That makes soldiers go wrong.

"They're off!" yelled the pill roller, pointing at the patients in the nut ward.

Sunday school teacher: "Who were the three wise men?"

Army Kid: 'The . O., the adjutant, and the sergeant major."

Taps

The tactics of an M. P.
Are very, very plain;
They tap you on the cerebellum
So you never feel the pain.

Then there was the infantry recruit who thought the harder he pulled the trigger on his Garand the farther it would shoot.

Ode to an O. D. Shirt

I wonder why my O. D. shirts
Have tails that reach my knees;
I wonder why the neck bands shrink
And why such damn short sleeves.

Inspecting Officer: "Is that your cigarette butt on the floor?"

Rookie: "Nah, go ahead and get it, you saw it first."

I'll bet the bozo who once said "there's dignity in labor" never went out on an army fatigue detail.

Strictly Backfence

BY EVE

It's hard to tell what sparkled the most, the new Post Exchange or the clerks who beamed from every counter on opening day. The familiar faces who have served us with so much good humor and patience in the dusty, crowded Post Exchange under the stadium so many years are perfect examples of real army folks.

The Post Exchange might be G. I., as indeed it is, fully backed by official authority in Washington. That fact doesn't keep the army from acquiring a deep personal feeling of ownership and pride in post improvements. One might almost expect each clerk owned the Post Exchange as a private and individual enterprise. If it were they couldn't have worked harder or happier to open the Exchange last Wednesday.

I don't think the fact they wouldn't have to crawl under eaves to fish out merchandise any longer had anything to do with their attitude. It is just one of those inexpressible things that becomes a part of an individual's personality after they've associated with the army for a while. It's working and sharing together for a common good. Pretty special that trait is and certainly a great part of the charm that keeps us a loyal and close family of service people.

The effect on entering the new Exchange is startling when one remembers the building as a grocery store. The outside hasn't been changed. Maybe that's why one isn't prepared for the elegant department store look of low counters, wide display cases, last word in lighting and modern floor covering. One immediately feels at last Fort Benning has a Post Exchange worthy of the most outstanding army post in the world.

So many of the familiar items are there, but their sales appeal has improved immeasurably by the attractive space for proper display. Each department of merchandise is clearly defined. The long counter for cigarettes and cokes is something to tempt anyone tired of crowded places. And the new merchandise! It has a definitely holiday air. All the lovely boxed toiletries, beautiful underwear and tricky gift items. The drug counter is impressive enough to compete favorably with any modern drug store. Magazines and stationery have their space as have the special departments for sporting goods, uniform equipment and luggage.

I can think of no addition to improve the Post Exchange, which unquestionably will bid for number one in outstanding Post Exchanges in our army, unless it would be a floor walker in a frock coat and a carnation in his button hole. That would be the crowning touch, but perhaps too unnerving to those who have done their shopping in the army in strange and fearful marts of trade.

AMERICA

"America, I cannot say, My country, right or wrong;
I love thee, so I can but pray God keep thee brave and strong.
"America, unshackled, free;
within a fettered world,
May wisdom guard thy liberty and keep our flag unfurled.
::America, my country fair, those words engraven stand;
They were our founding fathers' prayer that faith might save this land.
America, in God we trust! Far-flung democracy
May thine be e'er a peace most just, a peace with charity.
America, thou blessed sod; thine I am proud to be
I only ask, be true to God, and I'll be true to thee!

Mountbattens Mastodonic Minstrels" is the Detroit News suggestion for a Commando nickname. But doubtless Hitler would say, with Molly, "It ain't funny, McGee."

Peeks at Pics

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

For the first time in his life Charlie McCarthy is glad he is a dummy, for only a boy of wood could play Charlie starring role in RKO Radio's "Here We Go Again," second top comedy film headed by Charlie, Edgar Bergan, and Fibber McGee and Molly . . . The scene which would bar a flesh and blood boy from the part is the one between Charlie and an eight-year-old Canadian black bear . . . In this sequence, Charlie has to welcome the bear into bed under the impression that it is Bergen . . . He has to snuggle down close to the animal and laugh and chuckle when the bear prowls around the tent, knocking over everything in the way . . . It required several days to film this particular scene and Pal the bear, was not always in a good mood . . . Several times he clawed and bit Charlie and once knocked him out of bed with his paw . . . But being made of wood, despite his seeming humanism, Charlie was able to take it with only a few minor scratches to show for his encounters . . . However, the "Here We Go Again" company was treated to thrills and chills during the sequences, because Bergen screamed and howled for Charlie for the off-the-record actions and made it seem so realistic that for a moment many of the players forget that Charlie was not a real, living boy.

Red Skelton's no tightwad when it comes to gags . . . Gives 'em away . . . The latest one being told about him is the one where he arrived one morning at the studio and told the crew that he had a dream about Hedy Lamarr . . . "I couldn't catch her," he said, "As fast as I ran, she ran faster" . . . After keeping the gang with their tongues hanging out, waiting for the punch line, he finished . . . 'Tonight I'm putting my scooter bike right beside my bed."

* * *

ADD ODD FACTS DEPARTMENT . . . Jane Randolph, the girl about whom RKO Radio is making so much of a fuss these days, was named after Randolph Field . . . She chose the label herself when for picture use she changed her name from Roemer . . . Reason because she's so crazy about flying . . . Taught to fly by her air-minded father an industrial engineer, the actress didn't have an opportunity to earn her pilot's license until just a short time ago, when small, privately-owned planes in the Pacific Coast area were grounded . . . Jane Randolph is now starring in "Highways By Night," which has as a featured player, Gordon Jones . . . A funny story is told by Jones on himself that should be passed on . . . A former UCLA football star, Jones always looks in the mirror before going into a film scene . . . Explaining the reason, he declared "Had a horrible experience in a college play once . . . Y'see, I was made up by the school make-up man. Was playing a Greek senator or something, so I had on a white mother-hubbard effect and short curly hair . . . Just before I stepped out on the stage the make-up man stopped me and did some things to my make-up. When I stepped out of the wings the audience began to roar, yoo-hoo and so on. I ran back and looked at myself in the mirror . . . That guy had pointed the cutest little cupid's bow on me you ever saw!" . . . Jones is six feet one and weighs 190 pounds.

When John Carroll, now starring in "Flying Tigers," currently playing the post, heard that the Denver Red Cross needed an ambulance equipped to reach victims in mountain disasters, he traded his bank account, bought a big Packard and had it converted into a canvas-topped truck . . . Complete with two-way radio, specially designed operating table and necessary instruments, and a water tank for use in case the truck were to be stranded, the outfit cost Mr. Carroll a neat seven thousand dollars . . . He genuinely wanted no publicity about the transaction—but that kind of secret should be shared.

Another little story to come out of Hollywood about the filming of "Here We Go Again" is the one about Charlie McCarthy and his solo dance . . . For the first time, Charlie does a dance with a bevy of cuties and Mr. Bergen isn't there to help him . . . The script calls for Charlie to join in an Iroquois Indian dance . . . With the ingenious aid of famous dance director Nick Castle and Bergen the difficult scene was shot . . . At its conclusion wise-cracking McCarthy quipped to Bergen . . . "That's all brother. I won't be needing you any more."

HEARD ON THE LOT . . . of "Cairo," starring Jeanette McDonald, Robert Young, Ethel Waters, Mona Barrie, Reginald Owen, Lionel Atwell and Edward Ciannelli . . . Banter runs wild on any picture directed by Maj. W. S. Van Dyke II, and Ethel Waters, colored songstress proved she was sharp off-screen as well as on. Proud of his reputation for being the fastest director in the business, Van Dyke was telling her how he worked . . . "We start promptly at nine each morning," he explained. "That means you will have to get here an hour before to get into your costume" . . . "My, my!" she exclaimed, "I don't know if I'll be able to get up that early" . . . It's the best way," assured Van Dyke. "We start early, work fast and get through early" . . . "Maybe so," cracked the irrepressible Waters, 'but you know I only got one speed. And that's slow."

Bayonet's Sweetie Pie

Mary Martin

'Bayonet Girl' Makes Special Photo for Us

Remember the "Bayonet Girl"? As if you could forget that lovely, luscious Hollywood film star who so cheerfully accepted the title bestowed upon her when the "New York Times of Army Newspapers" made its debut a few short weeks ago.

You'll no doubt recall that super-terrific pose of Mary Martin that appeared on the front page of the second issue of the Bayonet. Well, now gaze upwards and you'll see the latest pose that Mary has struck, this time especially for the Bayonet and honoring the Bayonet.

Ye editors of the Benning weekly naturally, sent a copy of the other Bayonet containing Mary's picture to her out in Hollywood. The lovely film star was so delighted with the Bayonet's lay-out and story that she immediately posed for a special picture, the result of which you see above.

The shot was taken right on the set of Mary's newest film entitled "True to Life" in which she will co-star with Victor Moore and Franchot Tone. And judging by the picture, we'd say it was pretty "true to life" for the "Bayonet Girl". After all, there's the overseas cap, the Springfield, and the bayonet. Naturally, you5re not supposed to notice those beautiful gams, but they look mighty fetching too, just in case you're interested.

AH, WILDERNESS!

At any rate, we of the Bayonet adore Mary Martin. She has surely justified our choice of her as sponsor of the paper. In her last letter, she said to be sure and throw a kiss to all the lads at Benning for her.

Paramount Studios are so excited about Mary's selection as Bayonet Girl that they are even getting out some nation-wide publicity on it, all of which won't hurt the Bayonet or Benning. You see, we're really getting talked about these days—and with two such gorgeous screen stars as Mary and Veronica Lake listed among our devoted readers, is it any wonder that ye editors work so hard to make the Bayonet a success.

And now, if you've waded this far, we'll gladly tell you that the only reasnn for the story was to call your attention to the picture of Mary Martin, especially posed for the Bayonet. We were afraid it might not catch your eye. Oh yeah!

Special Service Slates USO Winter Shows

Programs To Start In Late November, Finnegan Says

More of those good USO-Camp Shows Inc. units are headed Fort Benning way, according to announcement Wednesday by the Fourth Service Command headquarters in Atlanta.

Plans for the winter entertainment program for Camp Shows Inc., for the year 1942-43, call for its initiation the latter part of November with tentative plans for three different circuits operating in the Fourth Service Command.

The largest circuit, to be known as the Red, will play the posts with a minimum of 6,000 troop population and with the larger War Department theaters. The White circuit will be for posts with a minimum of 1,500 troop population and smaller theaters and recreation buildings. The third, or Blue, circuit will play isolated posts and detachments. The entertainment units on the Blue circuit will consist of small groups of three to five performers, offering intimate, informal entertainment. They will perform in barracks, mess halls, at gun and searchlight positions and can perform for an audience of from ten to several hundred men.

It is contemplated that the Blue circuit will include isolated posts of the Army Air Force Commands and Defense Commands. The two larger circuits will feature the usual elaborate USO shows which have played to tens of thousands of soldiers on their frequent trips to Fort Benning during the last year.

Definite dates for the first appearances of the units will be announced in a few weeks by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer.

Listen . . . . . It's Fort Benning

It seems as if the "two-nine" band had a busy time this past week. . . . First they were on the "Army Hour" broadcast from the USO-Army-Navy Y this past Sunday and then the following day they played for the Cabaret Night at still another club. . . . But getting back to the "Army Hour", the 29th Infantry Band did a fine job. . . . Colonel Carrol A. Bagby, commanding officer of the 29th Infantry was the guest of honor and speaker. . . . The colonel spoke on the theme that every infantry officer owes a considerable part of his military education to his contact with the Twenty-ninth Infantry.

RADIO BIOGS. . . . Pfc. Harold Scheckman is the man with the violin. . . . There aren't many on the post who haven't heard him play at one time or another . . . He has been over the air many times, and has played for the USO activities in town. . . . He is the director of the Columbus Symphony. . . . Born in Newark, N. J., Harold graduated from the Weequahic High School in the same city. . . . He studied violin under private instructors and has done them proud. . . . At the moment he is in the "two-nine" band, beating a bass drum. . . . Harold has been featured as a soloist with some well-known symphony orchestras. . . . He has played with them, directed them and arranged music for them. . . . Scheckman's hobby is photography and during his school years did some track work for the Alma Mater. . . . He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Scheckman of the above named city. . . . His most exciting adventure was not, as we imagined, the first time he stepped out on the stage before a large audience. . . . Instead, he says that it was when he rode the parachute seat down from the top of one of the training towers here at Fort Benning. . . . His burning desire is to conduct a well-known symphony orchestra. . . . We sincerely hope to see you reach your goal someday, Harold.

Once again "Listen, It's Fort Benning" went on the airlanes of WRBL in Columbus and WGPC in Albany, Georgia, last Monday evening. . . . Coming from Service Club No. 2 in the Sand Hill area, the 25 minute program presented the 11th Armored regiment band under Tech Sgt. Dante Purfumo. . . . Instead of having the program planned, that is, the story of Army Emergency Relief, five men who enlisted in the service under the age of 20 were interviewed. . . . This was in line with the recruiting drive being conducted by the War Department for men of 18 and 19. . . . The men interviewed are: Staff Sergeant Albert T. Vieira, of Lawson Field, age 19 . . . Pvt. Lorence Heselton, 505th Parachute Battalion, age 19. . . . Pvt. Richard Baker, 3rd Armored Regiment, age 18. . . . Sgt. Robert O. Duncan, Station hospital, age at time of enlistment 18. . . . Pfc. William Davies, 29th Infantry, age 18. . . . Each one of these men had a message for the public. . . . A short skit was presented by R. N. Smith.

Don't forget that there are eight different programs coming from Fort Benning that are sent out over the Airlanes by WRBL in Columbus. . . . This station operates on 1230 kc. . . . The list of programs include "Listen, It's Fort Benning," every Monday at 8:05 p. m. . . . "Reception Center Chorus" . . . every Tuesday evening at 8:05 . . . "Quartermaster Quarter Hour" every Wednesday at 7:45 p. m. and Monday thru Friday "Fort Benning on the Air" at 6 p. m. presents news of the post and some form of entertainment or interview of well-known personalities.

Frank "bring-em - back - alive" Buck was interviewed over the air yesterday on the 6 p. m. news cast. . . . Mr. Buck described some of the countries that the men of Fort Benning will be in when they go overseas. . . . Capt. Russell J. Hammargren, post public relations officer conducted the interview. . . . "Bring-em-back-alive" told of his adventures and how he started in his profession.

This coming Friday Lt. Col. R. H. Wood, executive officer of the Internal Security, District No. 4 at Fort Benning, will be interviewed on the subjects of sabotage and internal security. . . . The interview will take place on the "Fort Benning On The Air" program at 6 p. m. . . . The man with the questions will be Lt. J. Walter Myers of the Public Relations Office. . . . Every soldier should listen to this broadcast because of the information to be gained.

The 29th Infantry eleven that rolled over the 55th Engineers in Doughboy Stadium on Sunday was just about as well-coached a grid machine as has performed on the stadium turf in a long time. The Big Blue this year is not long on outstanding material, but Coaches Joe Ashmore and Archie Milano have welded together a ball club that seems destined for an unusually successful campaign.

With three victories already in the sack, the Two-Niners face their remaining six tilts with a chance to win everyone of them. Certainly, if they play as they did Sunday they will win most. The line play of the 29th was particularly outstanding. That compact forward wall charged the Engineer linemen off their feet, and opened up enormous holes time and again. With backs like Bryan and Hurley to cavort through those holes, the Blues are always dangerous.

The 29th line, which has been tutored by Milano, has not changed materially since the opening game. Giraulo and Cornelius, alternately at center, appear equally proficient. Little Frank Mastrananzio, weighing only 140 pounds but hard as nails, is a great guard. Plakan or Sacewitz are good running mates for the mighty little man.

Seldom has this corner seen a better pair of tackles than Mike Hutchens and Hank Zawaski. Totaling 435 pounds of beef on the hoof, they are in the midst of every play. Joe Stolarzyck has developed into a valuable left end, and veteran Jim Hennessey at the right flank is one of the team's mainstays, just as great defensively as he is when snaring touchdown passes.

Backs are important in winning grid games, too, and the 29th has a snappy set even with two of the best, Ashmore and Bowen, sidelined with injuries. But as Joe Bryan, the burly fullback, said after Sunday's game "It's a pleasure to run behind such a wonderful line." And Joe should know, because he gave his greatest exhibition for the Blues against the Engineers. He was a whirling dervish on the spinner plays, a most effective weapon, and picked up many a yard careening through the gaping holes opened ahead of him.

So far this season, we've tried to refrain from handing out too many bouquets to any of the teams, but the 29th crew deserves a few for their showing Sunday. They played hard, blocked well and looked like a well-knit crew that realized the advantages of teamwork and used it also as a weapon against the opposition. They are a good group of pigskinners and a credit to their coaches as well as their regiment.

The sky-jumpers of the 505th Parachutes have stolen the jump on everybody else in fort boxing circles and already started their regimental pugilistic program. Under the very capable direction of Major Patrick D. Mulcahy, athletic officer, the paratroopers held their third show in two weeks in their cantonment area over Alabama way last night. Aim of the twice-weekly shows is to weed out the real champions in the regiment, and get them lined up for future post-wide competition.

Already, the 505th has uncovered two colorful performers in Sailor Joe Robinson and Tony Lewandowski. The sailor lad had the crowd literally rolling in the aisles with his comedy antics in one of the bouts last week, and still came off the victor. They call Lewandowski the "baby tank" and the former professional wrestler is a great showman, even when he's getting beaten as he was last week by Irving Jones, who has won 27 of 30 fights by a K. O. The paratroopers work hard and train hard, and they also fight hard, which means plenty of excitement for the on-lookers.

Plans will be announced before the week is out, and by this time next week, the All-Star team that is to represent Benning against the Pensacola Naval Air Station eleven next month should be working out. The Goslings, boasting many great college stars of former years, don't have too successful a record on the books, but the team that visits Doughboy Stadium will be a corker. Witness who has defeated the minions of Potsy Clark, former pro coach of the Detroit Lions—Alabama and Georgia Naval. The Crimson Wave is still unbeaten and loom as even a Rose Bowl choice. The Athens Cadets have toppled all college opposition, including Duke and Penn, two of the top elevens this side of the Mississippi.

This week, the Pensacolans entertain the Horned Frogs of Texas Christian and the following week they'll prep for their Benning visit by playing the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station. Any team playing a big-time card like that is bound to be tough, and Benning will have to muster all its forces if soldiers are to top sailors in the big Army-Navy game in Doughboy.

BAYONET TIPS—Watch Lieut. Henry Boudreaux hang up some more bowling titles and records this year. The campaign's hardly begun, and already the popular M. P. chief has rolled a 269 game on the post alleys . . . Lieut. Claude Hackney, backfield coach of the 124th, was coached in high school at Live Oak, Fla., by Capt. Leo Gregory, head tutor of the 3rd Armd. Their respective teams clash Sunday as they renew acquaintances . . . Tuskegee to beat Morehouse by two touchdowns in the big colored game downtown tomorrow night, and Columbus High to eke out a win over Opelika in the schoolboy tilt tonight. Both games are in Memorial Stadium . . . Academic Regiment of the I. S. S. C. will have another cracker-jack court team judging by some of the material already uncovered in regimental frays . . . 124th Infantry's Cestary and Spence Field's Antonucci, who were spearheads of their team's attacks in that night game at Moultrie last Saturday, were laso former rivals in high school football circles around Youngstown, Ohio . . . Watch for a battle of super de luxe pass-snaggers on Sunday when Junie Belin, ex-Auburn and now 124th, and George Jenkins, ex-L. S. U. and now 3rd Armored, line up on opposite sides of the ball . . . This corner likes the 29th to trip Troy State, the Gators by a whisker over the Dragons, the Tankers to stop the 55th in week-end attractions. But we could be wrong.

29th Plays Troy State Saturday Night; Two Conference Battles Are Listed

Plenty of Action In Stadium

There was plenty of action last Sunday in Doughboy Stadium when the 29th toppled the Engineers by a 25-0 count. Shown in the top picture is Jarrin' Joe Bryan, Big Blue fullback, rolling on the ground in the end zone just after he had crashed over for the fourth and final touchdown. Below is some of the half-time action as the pretty girl drum majorettes of the Central High band paraded across the field to serenade the opposite stands.

Gators Meet Dragons In Doughboy Stadium; 11th Faces Engineers

Fort Benning's 1942 grid campaign continues in high speed this week-end when five of six conference elevens go into action for the second week in a row. A pair of loop games on Sunday will highlight the attractive card, while the fifth team will meet outside opposition, and the remaining eleven is idle.

The football week-end will get off to a big start in Doughboy Stadium on Saturday night when the undefeated 29th Infantry eleven entertains Troy State Teachers from Troy, Ala., in a feature attraction under the lights. Kick-off will be at 8 o'clock.

Sunday afternoon the stadium will again be the scene of a pitched battle when the 124th Gators and the 3rd Armored Dragons collide head-on in a conference tilt. At the same time, the 55th Engineers, twice-beaten in league play, will attempt to hit their winning stride in a game with the 11th Armored Tankers to be played at Tiger Field in the Sand Hill area.

The Lone Benning eleven to remain idle this week will be the speedy 117th Infantry Breakers, coached by Lieut. John Cudmore.

DEVILS VS. TEACHERS

The smooth-working Two-Niners are an odds-on favorite to come off the field late Saturday night with a fourth straight scalp hitched to their belt. Already the victor over Spence Field, Daniel Field, and the 55th Engineers, the Big Blue has still not been scored upon or even in great danger.

Troy State is an unknown quantity with only a fair record so far this season, and although the game will probably be hard fought all the way, the Two-Niners rate the nod in pre-game figuring.

Injuries continued to plague the Big Blue this week, and the latest varsity lad to join the hospital list was Joe Stolarzyck, rangy left end, who scored one of the four Devil touchdowns against the Engineers on Sunday. The stellar flank injured his knee and may be on the shelf for as long as a month.

Stolarzyck will probably be replaced by rugged Ed Carr, former West Virginia University flank, who operates equally well at left or right end. Previously, Carr has been serving as Jim Hennessey's understudy on the other terminal of the line.

Another new face almost certain to be in the starting line-up for the night fray is Mickey McGuire, the 170-pound back who alternates between the wingback and blocking back positions. He will probably replace Bill Chaney at wing for the kick-off and then move over to quarterback later on to spell Phil Del Monte, who is nursing a bad leg.

Sure to see a lot of action at wingback is Bobby Ralph, diminutive ball-tarrier, who impressed favorably in the Engineer battle. Several times the fleet halfback scooted around the ends and through tackle for sizeable gains, and in the final period he romped 30 yards for a touchdown after taking a lateral from Joe Bryan.

The rest of the starting line-up will be the same as the one that opened against the Engineers, with Bryan and Hurley the other backs, and Hennessey, Hutchins, Zawaski, Mastranunzio, Plakan and Giraulo in addition to Carr in the forward wall.

Once again the 29th Infantry band will be on hand to provide plenty of entertainment under the lights, and a banner turn-out, is expected.

GATORS VS. DRAGONS

The fracas between Capt. Red Milion (ex-Georgia) and his 124th eleven and Capt. Leo Gregory (ex-Florida) and his 3rd Armored crew promises to be the best conference battle to date. The teams are well-matched and both play all-out football.

The Gators broke into the win column last week after a pair of losses to Chattanooga and Auburn "B," while the Dragons have won their first two outings from the 55th Engineers and Draper Prison, whom they toppled last Sunday by a 26-0 count.

Both teams boast big offensive stars and a crack end. Tailback Roy Cestary and flank Junie Belin give the Gators a potent pair in the airlines, while Big Chief Carney's line-plunging and George Jenkins' all-around end play are standout Dragon threats. The 3rd Armored also has another fine performer in quarterback Al Litwak, the former little All-American from Western Reserve.

The rival lines will be plenty big, and superiority in the forward wall may decide the outcome since the clubs seem fairly well matched in all other spots. Bands and plenty of rooters will accompany both elevens in from their areas for the stadium attraction.

ENGINEERS VS. TANKERS

Outcome of the 55th-11th setto will decide the cellar position for the present in the conference standings. The Engineers have dropped two loop tilts, while Capt. Swede Carlson's big Tankers bowed to the 117th in their opener.

Lieut. Carl Deane, Engineer tutor, however, expects to field an improved team for the Sunday game at Sand Hill. The 55th has plenty of material, but it needed a great deal of seasoning, Deane himself, is the club's big offensive threat, but seldom does he get good support.

Hokenick, Hagan, Mayhew and Roberts are other good backs on the 55th that the Tankers will have to halt if they are to win. Capt. Carlson's club is still in the formative stages, and several line-up changes may be made before kick-off time.

Bryan Shines As Blue Devils Smash 55th Engineers 25-0

29th Infantry Gridsters Register First Post Conference Win Sunday

More than 8,000 fans saw the 29th Infantry's undefeated grid warriors smash their way to a 25-0 triumph over the 55th Engineers in Doughboy Stadium Sunday afternoon.

The 29ths victorious team was paced by Jarrin's Joe Bryan, pile-driving fullback who drove over for two of the Big Blue team's four scores to give them their first win in the Fort Benning Conference. Bryan was also directly responsible for the victors' third touchdown.

All afternoon he plagued the courageous but out-manned Engineers as he drove off tackle and dented their line on spinners. But he was backed up by ten other men all of whom played as a smoothly-functioning team to overwhelm the Engineers.

CENTRAL BAND PLAYS

The game was marked by spirited support on both sides of the stadium with the Central High School band from Phenix City representing the losers. Between the halves, the music-makers paraded on the field and thrilled the huge gathering with their intricate formations and their pretty high-stepping drum majorettes. The game was witnessed by Major General Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School; Brigadier General Walter S. Fulton, post commander, and other military notables.

The 29th started the aerial fireworks early in the game which were sustained throughout and continually befuddled the Engineers. Tailback Ed Hurley did most of the passing and near the end of the first quarter he flipped a pass to Right End Jim Hennessey good for 21 yards, carrying the ball to the Engineers' 14-yard line. After failing to dent the opposition's line, the Devils took to the air again with Hurley pitching to Joe Stolarzyck, rangy left end, for a tally. Hutchins failed to convert.

SCORELESS SECOND PERIOD

In the second quarter neither team was able to score although the 29th kept knocking at pay dirt. Bryan scurried for a score which was called back after Reade Giraulo had recovered a blocked kick to give the Blues possession of the ball on the thirteen. The whistle caught the 29ths three yards away from another potential score.

The early moments of the second half saw the Devils smash their way 55 yards down field with Bryan and Ramienski carrying the ball, only to be stalled on the Engineer 15. A moment later the Engineers tried to kick out, but the magnificent 29th line again blocked the kick, and Giraulo recovered on the 18 yard stripe.

A tackle-around play with a lateral to Joe Stolarzyck tacked on the end of it carried to the 9; then Hurley in two tries moved to the 3, and Bryan on a spinner went over for a touchdown. Hutchins split the uprights to give the Devils a 13-0 lead.

ENGINEERS THREATEN

Early in the final period the Engineers staged a sustained drive to the Devils' 15 where Ed Hurley made a flying catch of Carl Dean's pass and carried the ball upfield 33 yards. The 29ers scored again on the next play when Bryan crashed center on a spinner and raced 22 yards before finding himself in a swarm of Engineers. He lateraled the ball to Bobby Ralph, sub halfback, who went the remaining 30 yards for a score, thus completing a 52-yard touchdown play.

SUPERB LINE-PLAY

It was an auspicious start in the six-team post conference for the eleven that has been rated a favorite to win the crown. The forward wall was superb all afternoon and permitted the Engineers only four first downs. Bryan, Hurley, Ralph, and Ramienski were the great running backs, and the 29th aerial attack was sure-fire most of the time. All in all, it was a big afternoon for the Blues.

Big First Half Gives Breakers 14-0 Loop Win

117th Inf. Eleven Scores Twice Before Intermission To Topple Tankers

BY PVT. KEVE GRUNIN

Scoring all their points in a big first-half, the 117th Infantry's speedy Breaker eleven opened its Fort Benning Conference slate with a 14-0 victory over the 11th Armored Tankers in a game played on Tiger Field in the Sand Hill area Sunday afternoon.

The light but speedy infantrymen started fast and swept to a pair of touchdowns before Capt. Swede Carlson's huge Tankers had gotten unlimbered. In the final two periods, however, it was a different story, with the 11th Armored holding an advantage in first downs, although they could not penetrate the Breaker defense for a score.

SECOND VICTORY

The 117th victory made it two in a row for Lieut. John Cudmore's charges who will play another outside game this Sunday before they oppose the powerful 29th Infantry next week-end in the tilt which the Breakers have been pointing for all season.

Brown, the Breakers' fast moving end, was the "big noise" in the game as he broke through the strong Tanker forward wall time after time to hurl back their ball handlers and prevent them from making any headway.

SCORE EARLY

The Breakers got off to a good start in the first period. At the kick-off Smith took the ball and zig-zagged up the field until he was finally downed on the Tanker 42-yard marked. The 117th, on three successive plays, rolled down the field to the Tankers 12-yard stripe. From there Sturgill took the ball from center, faded back, then heaved the pigskin to Brown in the end zone for the first touchdown of the game. Roberts replaced Smith and kicked for the extra point making the score 7-0 in favor of the doughboys.

The last half of the period saw the Tankers fighting in the 117th Infantry territory. Lead by Duckworth and O'Shea, it seemed that the 11 A. D. was on their way to tying up the score, but the strong defense of the 117th hurled the Tankers back.

SMITH TALLIES

The 117th took to the air in the latter part of the second period. Sturgill, the flashy halfback of the Breakers, whipped two successive passes to Smith for a total yard gainage of 65 yards. With but two minutes remaining in the first half, Smith took the ball from center and ran across the goal line for another Breaker touchdown. Roberts converted for the extra point making the score 14-0.

The spectators witnessed a good grand of football coupled with infrequent moments of excitement in the third and fourth periods, but there was no score.

Snagging a wide one is Junie Belin, great pass-catching end for the 124th Infantry eleven, who will be seen in action on the stadium grid Sunday when his team clashes with the 3rd Armored Dragons in a conference battle. Belin scored one of the Gator touchdowns against Spence Field last week.

Gators Top Spence Field For First Victory, 14-0

The 124th Infantry's big gridiron machine, frustrated twice this season in its bids for victory, finally broke into the win column last Saturday when the Gators rolled to a 14-0 triumph over the Spence Field Fliers in a night game at Moultrie, Georgia.

A capacity throng of over 3,500 watched the service elevens battle under the lights of the municipal stadium in the South Georgia city, including the entire personnel of the Spence Field Air Base.

Disregarding the partisan crowd, the Benning Gators played hard ball all the way and pushed over a pair of scores in the final half to win the ball game. The big orange and blue linemen opened up gaping holes in the Spence forward wall and the Gator backs tore through time and again for healthy gains.

The entire first half was a pretty even proposition with the Fliers staging one serious threat only to be halted deep in Gator territory by the strong defense of the Benning eleven. The 124th also did its own share of attacking, but lacked power inside the 20-yard lines and the teams were deadlocked without a score at intermission.

Capt. Harold (Red) Milton's infantrymen came out fast for the third canto and turned on the heat with a neat passing and running attack that brought them their first score of the campaign midway in the period. The six-pointer came on a nicely-executed pass play with Roy Cestary heaving to Junie Belin who took the pigskin on the ten and went over for the score. The play was good for 20 yards in all, and the same aerial combine accounted for the extra point.

After a prolonged punting duel had carried into the final period, the Gators started a long drive down the field that was culminated when Big Stan Ergler, their pile-driving fullback, smashed over the final stripe from the four-yard line. Nick Callos booted the conversion from placement to put the finishing touches on a 14-0 victory.

The Benning eleven piled up 17 first downs during the night tilt to 11 for the Fliers. Cestary and Ergler were great backs throughout the game, and Tom Green's line play stood out for the winners. Tony Antonucci, ex-Pitt ace, was a continual threat for the Spence eleven but the Gators throttled his accurate passing at the right moments.

'Gator Sketches Set For Tuesday In H. C. Stadium

The Queen of Battle's loyal subjects will again display their theatrical ability in the 124th Infantry's "Gator Sketches" at the Harmony Church Sports Arena on Tuesday, Oct. 27, at 8:30 p. m.

The show is under the management and direction of Tech Sgt. Wiley B. Scott, director of the 124th Infantry Band. The cast will include such popular Benning entertainers as Cpl. Jack Randall, ex-professional stage and radio emcee and vocalist, and Sam Freeman, violinist. The Gator orchestra will give out with the accompaniment.

Capt. John G. MacFarlan, Special Service Officer of the 124th, extends a cordial invitation to all Harmony Church personnel.

Tennis Tourney Is Planned For Women

A tennis tournament for officers wives and members of the Army Nurse Corps has been announced.

The matches will follow the men's contest, which is now in progress, and will probably start Sunday, November 1. All women whose husbands are members of the Officer's Club and all Army nurses, who hold memberships are eligible to participate.

Registration will begin immediately at the Tennis Shop, according to Walter Senior, club professional. There will be an entrance fee of fifty cents charged and trophies will be awarded the winners.

The mount for a five-inch anti-aircraft gun weighs about 24 tons and contains 2700 different parts.

Tuskegee-Morehouse Meet Tomorrow in Annual Tilt

The Tuskegee-Morehouse football game, annually one of the outstanding negro college classics in the country, will be played in Columbus at Memorial Stadium tomorrow night. Kick-off will be at 8:30.

This year the clash hold unusual interest for Fort Benning soldiers since both Tuskegee and Morehouse appear later in the season on the schedule of the Benning Panthers, the colored eleven which is representing the post in negro grid circles this fall.

The soldier eleven from the Service Battalion of the 3rd Student Training Regiment will play the Morehouse collegians next week-end, but the site of the game has not yet been determined. The game with Tuskegee is listed for the Alabama school's grid on November 14th.

Pre-game activities and demonstrations between the halves will rival the actual game for interest. Friday afternoon, student bodies of both schools lead by their respective bands will parade through the business section of downtown Columbus. At half-time, all stadium lights will be turned off and the famous Tuskegee band will drill with colored lights.

The Tuskegee Tigers rate a slight pre-game favorite because of their crackerjack backfield quartet consisting of Bob Robinson, Ray Head, Art Sawyer and Whitney Van Cleve. The Alabamans also have a strong forward wall, but in facing Morehouse, the Tigers will be up against another powerful club and the game promises to be 60-minute thriller.

Officer and enlisted personnel of Fort Benning, as well as their lady friends, will be admitted to the Tuskegee-Morehouse game at a special service price of 75 cents, including tax.

SPORTRAITS

CAPT. JIMMIE JOHNSON

This week's subject is Captain Jimmie Johnson of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, assistant operations officer of the 124th Infantry, and former star full-back for the mighty Alabama Crimson Tides which wrote Rose Bowl history back in 1926 and 1927. After graduation he coached football. He joined the 124th in January 1941, coming from the Alabama National Guard.

Back in the heyday of his football glory, Johnson suffered with what is called a trick shoulder. At the slightest provocation it would slip out of place. Consequently it was necessary for Coach Wallace Wade, now Major Wade of the powerful Army West team, to keep it strapped and at that he had to use Johnson sparingly.

In the game with Stanford on January 1, 1927, in the Rose Bowl, the late third quarter found Alabama trailing Stanford 0-7 just as she had lagged behind the preceding New Year's Day 0-12 in the third quarter, only to smash over three touchdowns and 20 points within a five minute period to win 20-19. This time the Crimson Tide worked the ball within scoring distance. Coach Wade knew that Johnson could do the work if the shoulder would not decide to get temperamental. In went the big full-back to smash over center for six points. Caldwell converted, and Alabama went back to Tuscaloosa with a glorious 7-7 tie.

Six Officers Are Given Promotions In Second STR

Promotion of First Lieut. Wilmer H. Salmon, senior Personnel Officer of the Second Student Training Regiment, to the rank of captain in the Army of the United States, was announced this week.

Capt. Salmon, a native of Elk Hill, Va., had been on duty for 22 years as an enlisted man when he was called up as a second lieutenant under his Reserve Officers' commission Feb. 7, 1942. At the time he was serving as chief clerk of the First Armored Division at Fort Knox, Ky.

He came to the Second Regiment Feb. 22 and has been in the personnel office of the Regiment since.

Five second lieutenants in the Regiment were also promoted to first lieutenant at the same time. They are Charles H. Carraway, 4th Company; William G. Rimes, 6th Company; Donald E. Draper, 11th Company; John C. Bottle, 28rd Company; and Cecil W. Parks, 17th Company, who is now on special duty with the Academic Department.

Major de Seversky predicts that after the war air flivvers will be developed which will be as much in use as the automobile flivvers of today.

Many Athletes Are Enrolled In Company

Tennis, Grid, Track Hockey Represented In 2nd Co., 2nd STR

An unusual number of well-known athletes are listed among the personnel of the 2nd Company of the Second Student Training Regiment which graduates Oct. 22.

A candidate who ranked 12th national tennis rankings in 1938, is John P. Feigenbaum of Los Angeles. In amateur circles around California, Feigenbaum boasts at least one victory over now National Champion Ted Schroeder and has competed against such other stars as Bobby Riggs and Bitsy Grant.

Four others were well-known college football players, headed by Leo (Pope) Dillon of St. Edward's University in Texas. Representing an unknown college, he still received honorable mention in the All-American listings of 1933. Dillon himself is prouder of his record as a high school grid coach, however. He mentored the St. Joseph, Tex., "Flyers" to two state championships, in 1940 and 1941, in a high school of 225 pupils. He won 15 letters in high school and college track, football and basketball.

STAR CENTER

John W. Gaynor was a standout center for Manhattan college and later played with the Brooklyn Eagles pro-football outfit. Anthony J. Cavallo starred for Lafayette college in 1936-38 and was also given honorable mention in the All-American poll. Frank J. Politi was a guard for Cornell University's hot teams from 1933 to 1936, and also went in for bobsledding at his home town of Lake Placid, N. Y.

An ace on the cinder paths was O. C. Donald E. Smith of Ohio State university. He competed in the 440 high hurdles, the 440-yard dash and on the mile-relay team for the Buckeyes. The latter crew won the Ohio A. A. U. mile relay title in 1938 and 1939. Smith competed in the Chicago and Penn Relays.

Virgin O. Bergeron is another Big Ten athlete. He was captain of the University of Minnesota hockey team which won the Big Ten championship in 1930. And finally there's Michael Rusnov of Steeltown, Pa., who has competed in about every pro basketball loop in Pennsylvania.

Big Nine Grid Star With First Company First Student Reg't.

The last is now the first, for "Old Company 'X' " is now First Company of the Colonel Thomas R. Gibson's First Student Training Regiment. This change of designation has not altered routine or policy. First Company continues to have its select clientele of brigadier generals and colonels, Division Class Students.

It is strenuous work—being a Company A officer—work suited only to the young and the strong. It was this fact that brought us Lt. Eugene G. White.

"Gene" trained for his duties as officer with the First Company, on the football fields of the middle west. Entering Indiana University in the fall of 1938 he distinguished himself both in the class room and on the gridiron, during his college career he was mentioned for all-American rating in 1941, chosen all-conference guard in the Big Nine Conference two years in succession (1940-1941). He was selected captain of the team his last year, 1941. During the summer "Gene" worked at various activities, principally, a plumbers apprentice, with State of Indiana Highway Department, and one summer in Alaska with Fish Canneries. "Gene" completed the Weapons and Company Commanders course before joining First Company. His home is in South Bend, Indiana.

Chinese Officer Is With 124th As Observer

First Lieut. Shao-Yuan Liang, officer of the Chinese Nationalist Army and graduate of the Central Military Academy (the West Point of China), has been attached to the 124th Infantry as an observer, after which he will take the Officers Training Course at the Infantry School. Lt. Liang was commissioned four years ago.

His home is in the Kwang-Tung Province, the birthplace of Sun Yat Sen, the founder of the Chinese Republic.

Lt. Liang's introduction to the Gator Regiment was in the form of a shrimp supper in the Cannon Company mess hall. For breakfast the next morning, he was introduced to Georgia's grits and eggs. When asked what he thought of g. and e. he answered diplomatically: "Delicious."

The Lieutenant expressed confidence in the forces of the United Nations, stating that the Chinese advances in the China campaign are indicative of the eventual victory. He asserted that the Nips were feeling more and more the wrath of the Allied armies, as well as that of the civilian guerilla fighters of China, who are constantly harassing their supply lines in occupied China, making it harder for the Japs to wage their battles with the degree of efficiency necessary to a winning army.

Post Exchange Opens New Store With Ceremony

Fort Benning's new main exchange is officially open for business following ceremonies Monday afternoon arranged by Maj. H. E. McGaffey, exchange officer.

The new exchange, located in the building formerly housing the grocery on the post proper adjacent to the Main Theater on Wold Avenue, was opened for business last week after it was moved from its former location in the Doughboy Stadium building.

Special entertainment and gifts were provided from 2 to 6 Monday afternoon during the opening ceremonies. The 124th Infantry band under Tech. Sgt. Wiley B. Scott played most of the afternoon and special numbers were sung by the Reception Center Quartet.

Included in the guests at the opening ceremonies were Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, commanding general of the Infantry School, and Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning.

The new exchange is completely modernized and many times larger than the old over-crowded store. At the same time the new store was opened, Major McGaffey announced that the exchange would be open at 9:30 and close at 6:30 in the future as will all of the other exchange activities.

Col. Barksdale Gets New Duties

Lt. Col. William E. Barksdale, well-known Quartermaster Corps officer at Fort Benning, has just been assigned to new duties with the supply corps.

Colonel Barksdale has served for nearly two years as assistant commandant of Fort Benning's famous School of Bakers and Cooks, parent school for 10 similar institutions scattered throughout the Army's Fourth Service Command in the southeastern states.

His new duties will be with the post quartermaster, where he will serve as an assistant to Colonel Stephen B. Massey, supply head at the fort, and study the administration of all quartermaster activities. It is expected that at the completion of his training in this work, he will be transferred to another post and assigned as a post quartermaster.

The army transport command is operating an intercontinental airline today that is already much larger than practical men thought possible for many years to come.

Col. McMillan To Command 124th Infantry

Col. Snyder Is Given Assignment At Another Station

Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, senior battalion commander of the 124th Infantry, assumed command of the Gator Regiment today, relieving Lt. Col. Maxwell C. Snyder who has been assigned to another station.

Col. McMillan was born in Pike County, Miss., but for 10 years lived in Tallahassee, Fla., where he was connected with the Internal Revenue Bureau.

He enlisted in the 124th Infantry as a private and held all enlisted grades successively until his appointment as a 2nd lieutenant in 1934. He was a Captain commanding Co. M when he was called to active duty with other members of the 124th Infantry.

He served for some time as the assistant G-3 of the 31st Division at Camp Blanding, Fla., but returned to the regiment to command the 1st Battalion in July 1941.

Col. McMillan is a graduate of the Infantry School, Ft. Benning, Ga. and the Command and General Staff School at Levenworth, Kans.

Children's School Given High Rank By State Board

A certificate naming the Fort Benning Children's School as a "Standard Elementary School No. 1" has been received by Major A. H. Veasey, post school officer, from the state department of education.

The certificate is the highest given by the state body and is given as the result of periodic visits by supervisors, an examination of texts used, qualifications of teachers, and other factors going into the school.

AN ARMY WIFE Shops in Columbus

by EVE

Some of the things I had packed away so carefully during the summer months didn't look too modish when I unpacked them. It seemed that they needed a strong dose of new accessories to give just the right dash to my leftover wardrobe. Only a fashion-wise shopper knows the wonders a smart new matching hat, bag, gloves, and shoe combination can give to a leftover suit or dress. And the possibilities of an added piece of jewelry or neckwear are numberless. So I decided to make a trip to the shops downtown where I had noticed an assortment of accessories which would be an asset to any costume as well as give just the right lilt to my last year's models. After all, Uncle Sam wants us to make our old things do, but he doesn't want us to damage our soldiers' morale by looking dowdy on a crisp Fall day.

I'm having something of a problem trying to choose my Christmas cards. WHITE'S BOOK STORE, in their new location at 1211 Broadway has a magnificent selection of cards to choose from. There are the traditional cards with Santa Clauses, snow scenes and the Madonna and Child. Then there's the exquisite Dorothy Simmons' line of cards with adorable victorian subjects in hand colored effects. There's something nostalgic about these cards, reminding one of our parent's youth when wan meant Teddy Roosevelt and troops singing "Good-bye Darling, I Must Leave You." For us today, there's a new kind of Christmas card. No blatant patriotic slogans, but restrained handsome cards in our national colors with military emblems. One unusual card is in fact two small cards fastened together with a cord, one has the wife's name, the other the husband's, with the words "In the Service." Beautiful simplicity in telling a story of today's family at Christmas. If most make my decision and choose these, I'd better decide too if you want to share that charming exchange of greetings at Christmas time.

It doesn't take army folks long to find a shop of quality and service. The atmosphere of groups of officers being fitted for uniforms while the business of constructing a smart looking shop goes unnoticed speaks much for the quality and merchandise pull of SAKS FOURTH AVENUE MILITARY SHOP on Cusseta Road. The row of slacks in the new regulation color and pinks for those who like the lighter standards of meticulous tailoring. Expert cutting, stitching and finishing throughout make these necessary parts of an officer's uniform something of an investment in fit and wear. The cut and tailoring of any garment is as important as the quality of the material. These things contribute to the wearing qualities to say nothing of appearance.

While shoes are the first consideration at MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY, they carry an extraordinarily fine line of bags, which demonstrates fully their buying knowledge of fine leather and workmanship. Addicts of the nationally famous I. Miller shoe know that this firm also makes bags to match their stunning shoes. The same attention to fine finish and smooth leather completes a stunning ensemble for the fashion conscious woman. The lovely warm shade of Wild Honey with saddle stitching is a perfect complement for the walking shoe of the same shade designed for the perfect tailleur costume. Another bag with the name of Red Relish is made of soft rubbed leather that reminds one of old Italian leather. They have some beautiful red bags, that all-season favorite to highlight a smart costume. Genuine alligator bags to carry when you wear your smart alligator shoes. Suedes and calf skin bags, all beautifully finished and fitted with usable zippered sections. Fine bags and shoes are marks of distinction and labels instantly the discriminating woman.

The days and weeks are passing, and while you may be able to pick up a bottle of toilet water on the 24th of December for the folks at home, you certainly won't be able to give them the thing they'd prize above all gifts, a photograph of yourself by AIME DUPONT on Broadway. Photograph isn't the right word for the work they turn out. They make portraits, beautiful relaxed poses that catch a glimpse of the personality. That kind of work takes time for fishing. Mothers of small fry and newly born babies should look at their work. The dewy look of babyhood is enchanting when caught by the genius photographer at Aime Dupont's. Next to seeing the new grandchild, the grandparents treasure a portrait as second choice, and the precious babyhood is caught for lifetime remembrance.

I found something in SEARS ROEBUCK I hadn't seen in a long while. I didn't think one was able to buy them any more. I mean those beautiful and practical Numdah rugs of felt like creamy wool, embroidered in soft colors and patterns of India. They are especially effective on handsome cards in our national colors with military emblems. One unusual card is in fact two small cards fastened together with a cord, one has the wife's name, the other the husband's, with the words "In the Service." Screen Starlet Weds Army Colonel's Son at Benning

Groom Is Naval Officer But Army Does Knot Tying

Close cooperation between the Army and Navy is apparent in the American sea and land battles but even another illustration bobbed up last week-end at Fort Benning.

This time the Army and the Navy teamed up at a wedding in the Catholic chapel on the post proper. The navy was represented by Lt. William Denton, Jr., of Pensacola, Fla., while on the Army "team" were Col. William Denton of the Station Hospital staff and his wife, Mrs. Denton, both of Fort Benning, parents of Lieutenant Denton.

Marrying the Navy son of an Army man on the Army's most complete post was lovely Rosemary Coleman of Washington and Hollywood, a former Powers model and a screen actress who finished a picture in Hollywood just before flying to Fort Benning for the marriage.

Maybe the Navy did score a "beat" there but it took an Army chaplain to tie the knot.

The bride met her husband at Annapolis while she was attending George Washington College in Washington, D. C. Prior to coming to Washington, she had attended Immaculate Heart College in Hollywood, California. The bride and her mother-in-law, Mrs. William Denton, Sr., are sorority sisters in the Pi Beta Phi sorority.

Lieutenant Denton showed an interest in the sea during his life as an army child, a tendency contrary to family tradition which boasted a long line of physicians and surgeons on both parent's sides of the family. He attended Hendrix College in Conway, Ark., for two years prior to entering the Naval Academy. He graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1939 and served on fleet duty until recently when he transferred to the Naval Air Station at Pensacola, Florida for training.

Sunday Chapel Collection Given to Nursery School

Bridge Winners Also Donate Prize Money

BY LAURA M. BAILEY

Destined to be known as one of the most successful undertakings at Fort Benning is the new Day Nursery and Nursery School which opened at 8:30 on Thursday October 15, at 106 Madden avenue under the supervision of Mrs. Horatio C. Mason.

The acute need for a service of this kind has been known for some time. Changing conditions due to the acceleration of war demands and lack of servants available for the care of small children has made the forming of a school of this type a necessity.

While the primary force behind the organization was to be its direct contribution of freeing mothers for important Red Cross duties, an indirect and perhaps even more important function has been evident since its opening date. It is providing a security and happiness during the morning hours for the children through the expert trained guidance of Mrs. Horatio C. Mason, the full time supervisor of the school.

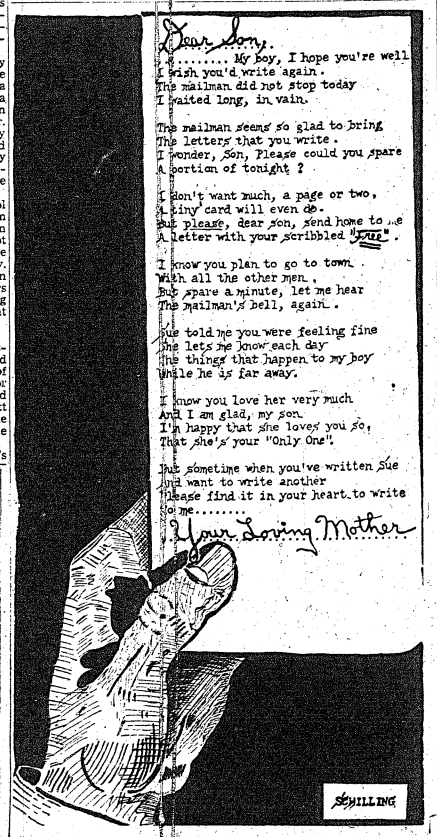
The engaging charm of curly headed moppets absorbed in the happy business of constructing a train out of orange crates for a trip to a make-believe land, is an enchanting sight to the beholder. Sand boxes, wheel toys and clay moulded into the inevitable mud pie shape of childhood are happy activities interrupted by hand-washings and drings of orange juice.

In the short while the school has been functioning a firm friendship has sprung up between the toddlers. One outraged tot couldn't understand why she couldn't go to school on Sunday. So fascinating is their occupation with each other, their mothers have a difficult time persuading them the school period is over at 11:30 a. m.

BACKED BY FULTON

Mrs. Reginald H. Kelley, president of the Woman's Club, found a quick response to her idea of forming a service of this kind for Fort Benning, when she presented the plans to General Walter Scott Fulton. He quickly assembled the resources at his command for the early opening of the school.

The need for General Fulton's approval and assistance was great, for there were no funds available to start a project of this kind. While the school is to be self-supporting, the current expenses for supplies were being carried by Mrs. Kelley and Mrs. Horace L. Beall.



Immediate financial assistance was made available through Chaplain Frank M. Thompson in donating the collection from last Sunday's services, which amounted to $80.25. The timeliness and generosity of this offer of Chaplain Thompson, coupled with the assistance and sponsorship of General Fulton will establish the school on a permanent basis.

Further evidence of the interest the school has aroused was evidenced by the Bridge Group donating the winnings of the small prizes offered by holders of high scores.

CLARIFY AIMS

Mrs. Mason held a meeting at the school last Monday for the volunteer workers and mothers of the children. The purpose of the meeting was to clarify the aims and principles of pre-school training for small children. She cited the common feeling of tension known in most families of the service today and the general feeling of insecurity felt by wives and mothers facing the fact they may soon be the sole moral support of their family. The Nursery School of today with its principles of applied pyschology provides an emotional stability coupled with direct educational training. Children are taught physically how to use their bodies, socially how to get along with people and mentally how to reason and handle materials. Never again in their lives will they learn as quickly as they do at the pre-school age.

Destined to become the alumni and first day students of the Fort Benning Day Nursery and Nursery School are the following children; Billy Keach, Betsy Waldron, Freddy Millener, Donnie Booth, Ann Blanchard, Margaret Blanchard, Joe Lambert, Phillip Lambert, Barbara Haegelin, John Hammargren, Billie Reynolds, Michael Ekman, Eleanor Hardy, Susie Shattuck, Butch Russ, and Bobby Jones.

COL. KELLY SPEAKS

Col. Reginald Kelly, president of the reclassification board, will review basic causes for world conflict at the first meeting of the Current Events group of the Woman's Club Monday, October 26, at 2 p. m. in the ladies' lounge of the Officers' Club.

Col. Kelly, who has seen 40 years of commissioned service all over the United States and around the world, has a thorough understanding, through observation, of countries both in Europe and in the Orient. Interested in the progress of events not only as an army officer but as a student of history, he believes that it is the historical background and causes of friction which are important. Individuals who have involved the world in war today are merely incidents, Colonel Kelley feels.

This is Colonel Kelley's third tour at Fort Benning. From 1919 to 1921 he was instructor at the Infantry School. He was director of the department of experiment from 1932 to 1935, coming here on his present duties in March, 1942.

After tracing the causes and progress of war, Colonel Kelley will devote the rest of his lecture to outlining the progress of the war to date and to sketching the biggest strategic moves.

DOROTHY GITHENS ELEY

Dorothy Githens Eley, dramatic soprano, will discuss and sing the opera "Aida," before the Music group of the Woman's Club on Wednesday, October 28, at 2 p. m. in the ladies lounge of the Officers' Club. The meeting was originally scheduled for 10 a. m.

Mrs. Eley will read the score of the opera, telling the main theme and the relation of the characters to Aida as well as the composer's reasons for writing the opera.

Popular Youth Is Improving

Charlie Pearce, the 12-year-old popular Journal carrier for Austin Loop, who became critically ill on September 8, is making excellent progress. Charlie is the son of Lt. Col. and Mrs. Lorick B. Pearce of 225 Austin Loop. Immediately upon arrival at Warm Springs Foundation it was necessary to resort to the use of the respirator, or "iron lung." By the end of September he was able to dispense with the "lung" for only three minutes. He has gradually increased this period so that now he is able to use his own breathing muscles for as long as three and a half hours at a time. During the day these intervals total as much as six hours.

Charlie's day nurse is the wife of Sergeant Garnett, crew chief in the Army Air Force, stationed in England; his night nurse is the wife of Sergeant Dunn of Fort Benning. Charlie wants his many friends on the post to know that he thoroughly enjoyed all the letters that they have written him, and he hopes that they will continue to keep him abreast of post events.

BRIDGE GROUP

The Bridge group of the Woman's Club will meet at 2 p. m. Tuesday, October 27, in the ladies lounge of the Officers' Club. Mrs. F. W. Pratt, chairman, will organize special meetings of instructions for beginners if enough members are interested.

Fink Outlines Ballot Casting By Soldiers

Card Applications Are Provided To Simplify Process

Voting by absentee ballot by members of the armed forces has been made about as easy as signing the payroll according to an explanation of the procedure by Capt. George Fink, acting judge advocate at Fort Benning.

Absentee voting was tremendously simplified by an act of Congress last month setting up new methods of balloting for soldiers away from their home states.

Under the provisions of the act, request for a voting ballot is made to the Secretary of State of the applicant's state through official postcards which are now being distributed by the Army and Navy Department to the men in the ranks.

The applicant, after he has secured a postcard probably through his orderly room will print the following form on one side of the postcard:

"Secretary of State:

"Being on active duty in the armed forces of the United States and desiring to vote in the coming election, I hereby apply for an official war ballot.

"My Home address is (Number and Street), in the city, town or village of (Name) in the county of (Name) in the State of (Name) and my voting district or precinct is the best of my knowledge is (District). I desire that the ballot be sent to me at the following address (Address)."

The card will be signed by the applicant and signed, or certified to, by any commissioned officer. Upon the other side of such postcard the words "Free, Official War Ballot" will be printed in the upper right hand corner and the card addressed to Secretary of State of the applicant's state.

The various states will mail ballots to the soldiers from whom postcards have been received and the ballots are to be mailed so that they will be received by Nov. 3, date of the general election.

Polish Nobleman, Last of Family, Trains At Fort

In the home of the Swierczewskis in Poland hang the portraits of warrior ancestors who trace their tradition of arms to the Carolingian emperors. The Swierczewskis have always served in the army.

The last of the Swierczewskis was bending over his draftman's board one morning in the winter of last year. He had worked hard in America for the few years he had been here. Here was Freedom. No shadow of Empire fell across the broad borders of this land. True, sometimes he was troubled. Sometimes he thought of the rumble of German caissons over the lands of Poland — how it echoes through the vaults of the Swierczewski dead. Over these vaults was carved in the language of Poland "My Land and My Sword." But was not THIS his land? His sword and those of his countrymen must remain sheathed.

Over the radio on that morning of December 7, he heard the news that the Japanese had attacked his land. Early on the morning of December 8, George Swierczewski enlisted in the Army of the United States and became Private Swierczewski.

Today George Swierczewski is an OCS in the 1st Student Training Regiment which is commanded by Colonel Thomas R. Gibson.

"I'm proud to fight," he says with a quiet smile, "back in Poland there is a big room filled with swords and lances and guns and funny little pistols. Maybe some day soon, I'll go back and throw my GI M-1 on top of the stack."

George talked about freedom, too, and democracy. In fact he talked about little else. We had to draw him out about the counts and barons in the family. "But this Freedom," he was saying with a great light in his eyes, when we edged out of the room.

Lt. Talbert Is Advanced

The United States Army has another first lieutenant, with the announcement by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, commander of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), of the promotion of Second Lieutenant Henry A. Talbert.

A native of Cleveland, Ohio, Lieutenant Talbert has spent the greater part of his life in traveling to various sections of the country. In spite of his gypsy-like actions, he managed to stay in one place long enough to finish his college course—gaining the honor of being Magna Cum Laude graduate.

Deciding to settle down on the west coast, he was preparing to do graduate work at the University of California when drafted into the Army under the Selective Service act. Inducted in Los Angeles, Calif., in June, 1941, he was sent to Fort MacArthur, Calif., and then on to the Fourth Regiment, Quartermaster Replacement Training Center, Fort Francis E. Warren, Wyo. While there he acted as classification clerk, public relations writer, chorus director, regimental quartet member, script writer and announcer for the regimental radio programs, and assistant to the hostess in one of the service clubs. One of his greatest thrills came when he was selected to represent his regiment on a quiz show over a nation-wide radio hookup —winning a substantial cash prize.

Entering the Quartermaster Officer Candidate School, at Fort Warren, in April, he received his commission as second lieutenant and was ordered to the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), of Fort Benning, Ga., where he now serves as public relations officer, morale and recreation officer, and educational officer.

'Yank' Features Infantry School's O. C. Course

A word and picture story of The Infantry School's officer candidate course, featuring Lt. Robert F. Mitchell of the 117th Infantry, and written by Sgt. Walter Bernstein, former Infantry School public relations writer, holds the lead spot in this week's "Yank," the Army newspaper.

Lt. Mitchell, a recent graduate of the school, is shown in photos by Yank's staff photographer, Sgt. John Bushemi, depicting a candidate in the various steps of the course.

Lt. Mitchell's photograph covers almost the entire front page of the paper, showing him on his arrival at Ft. Benning. Four inside pages are devoted to Bernstein's story and 14 photographs of Lt. Mitchell in the process of earning his commission.

Sgt. Bernstein was with the school's PRO staff for more than a year until his recent transfer as staff writer of the Yank, and his article on the course is authoritative and informative. It goes into detail on the experiences of an officer candidate through his three-months training period.

Nine Enlisted Men Advance In 117th

The promotion in grade of nine enlisted men in the 117th Infantry has been announced by the Special Service Officer.

Sgt. Wayne Robertson, Clouds, Tenn., was named staff sergeant; Pfcs. Millard Manry, Athens, Tenn.; Arthur Napoli, Florence, N. J.; Wayne Goodwin, Athens, Tenn., and Wade Dietz, West Mills, N. C., were made corporals, and the following were named technicians, fifth grade: Pfcs. William Collins, Winston-Salem, N. C., and Raymond Burg, Centerline, Tenn., and Pvts. Edward Askew, Asheville, N. C., and Pvt. Lee Luster, Greeneville, Tenn.

AAF LIEUTENANT GETS PROMOTION

Rudolph B. Walters, of Bladenboro, N. C., a member of the Army Air Forces at Lawson Field, has been promoted to the rank of captain.

Captain Walters is Engineer and Photographic Officer of the 7th Observation Squadron in addition to being Commander Officer of Flight "A." He came to Lawson Field in April, 1941.

He is a graduate of Wake Forest College and spent several years studying at the Medical College of Virginia. He is a native of Bladenboro, N. C., and was commissioned at 2nd lieutenant March 14, 1941.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Walters, of Bladenboro N. C.

Senate Okehs Base Pay Bill

Officers From Enlisted Ranks Benefitted

Reserve and National Guard officers at Fort Benning who were affected by a ruling by the Comptroller General that inactive commissioned service would not advance them in pay periods will learn with interest that bill has been passed by the Senate providing that all officers on active duty shall count all previous commissioned service, active or inactive, for all pay purposes.

Numerous officers were advanced in pay period last July 1 on the basis of all previous commissioned service, but following the ruling of the Comptroller General, finance officers were instructed to collect all over-payments on base pay.

The bill was scheduled to go to the House, where it was expected that Rep. Sparkman of Alabama would add a measure permitting officers to count prior enlisted services for longevity purposes. This measure will be introduced upon the recommendation of the War Department, and should benefit many officer candidate graduates as well as non-commissioned officers who have recently been and will be appointed commissioned officers in the Army of the United States.

The Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 provided for an increase in base pay for second lieutenants, and permitted officers to count all previous commissioned service, active or inactive, for purposes of longevity pay. It also provided for increases in rental allowances and subsistence.

The authors of the bill stated, following the ruling of the Comptroller General, that it was their intention that all commissioned service be counted for purposes of longevity and pay periods. The War Department then recommended that officers be allowed to count enlisted service for longevity purposes.

New Record is Set By Machinegun Crew

Academic Reg't. Men Put Up Heavy Weapon in 9 Seconds

An all-time Ft. Benning record and what is believed to be an all-time United States Army record, was set this week with the heavy machine gun, when a lightning-like crew from Co. C of the Academic Regiment put its gun into action in nine and one-fifth seconds, with all points correct. The crew was composed of Pvt. Jim Pulley, number one gunner; Sgt. Charles Dinnebier, number two, and Cpl. Ed Pagels, number three.

The time was checked by Captain Cline and T. Sgt. Holtzclaw, who also verified that all points were correct.

An even more startling bit of news was disclosed when T. Sgt. Holtzclaw revealed that the demon crew had, in practice, set the machine gun in action in 8 1-2 seconds and taken it out of action in six and four-fifths seconds. At any time the crew is expected to establish this record in actual demonstration.

Pvt. Pulley was formerly a grocery clerk in Richmond, Va., but expects to become a 30 year man in the army. "I've found my home," the youthful, grinning gunner announced.

Sgt. Dinnebier is an ex-truck driver from Cleveland, Ohio, and a nationally-known soccer star, having played for the Ohio championship team and with the Ohio All-Stars which toured the entire country.

Cpl. Pogoda is a carpenter from Gill, Mass., where he had his own shop and was "a mighty good carpenter," as he'll proudly inform you.

Daughtry, Gallatin, Tenn.; and John P. Gregory, Nashville, Tenn., to sergeants; Pfcs. Eddie Allison, Whitelock, S. D.; and Charles Leusner, Riverton, N. J., to corporals; and Pvts. Francis Gallagher, Brooklyn, Ia.; Alvin Deitz, Waynesville, N. C.; Victoriano Diaz, Uvalde, Tex.; and Robert Gunnels, Celina, Tenn., to corporals; and Pvt. Carl Campbell, N. Chattanooga, Tenn., to technical corporal.

How Times Do Change, eh, Bob?

On September 16 young Mr. Robert Horton left his job as artist in the visual aids section of the Infantry School and went home to Queens Village, N. Y., where his number was "coming up." On October 15, less than one month later, Bob Horton was back at Benning—as Private Horton.

So, he's sitting in the same office, daubing the same paint with the same brushes on the same work—at a considerable "cut" in pay, wearing olive drab instead of gabardines and green neckties and eating chow with his buddies at Company B instead of at the S. and S.

He also has another distinction: he is one of the few privates who has been dancing at the Officers' club, as a civilian in that "other life."

3rd STR Company Sets MG Records On 1000 Range

Range records on the 1000-inch course at Deese Range for the light and heavy machine guns were shattered recently by the crack shooting 17th Company of the Third Student Training Regiment.

This unit of the Third Student Training Regiment under the command of Captain Robert B. Kiffin established averages of 176.7 on the M1918 water-cooled spurter and 226.2 on the M1918 light gun.

The improved individual scores of the majority of the men who were formerly in heavy weapons companies is convincing evidence of the practical value of the school's instructional methods which differ in some respects from machine gun training in other camps and posts.

Tigers Instruct Enlisted Men by Novel Method

Call It 'County Fair' System

The "County Fair" method of instructing enlisted men of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division was inaugurated Friday in a series of four sections set up in various areas of the Division.

The 54th Infantry, one of the quartet, set up its section on Bovington Avenue, opposite the Motor Park, where enlisted men of the Division are scheduled to pass for this phase of the "Fair."

Under plans set up, the "Fair" is a test as to what an individual knows as well as an instrument of instruction in the subjects with which he is not familiar.

In the event the enlisted man, on passing a table, is unable to answer the series of questions, he is required to stand by until he learns the answers. Then he will be permitted to pass along to the next table. Answers to the questions are to be learned, it is hoped, from soldiers who follow along the line.

The 54th phase of the "Fair" is in charge of Major Nelson A. Butler, Executive Officer, and Lieutenant A. P. Breaux, assistant S-3.

The Regiment's subjects and those in charge are:

Commands and Signals—Lts. Waddell and Johnson and Sergts. Quirk, Wollny, Capone, Seigel and Gibson.

Grenades—Lt. Murray and Sgt. Zakizawski.

60 MM Mortar—Lt. Hankins and Sergts. Smith, 3rd A. R.; Fliss and Kranjic, 11th A. R., and Sgts. Vanpelt, Carper, Rankin, Harak and Jordan and Private Allen.

Care of Clothing and Equipment—Lt. Bedford and Sgts. Prine and Pultz.

Interior Guard Duty—Lt. Crosson and Sergts. Stepheno, Rambo and Bruhn.

Defense vs. Air and Mechanical attack—Lt. Filley and Sgts. Quello and Colvin.

Pitching of Shelter Tents and Display of Equipment—Lt. Gorman and Sgt. Lang.

Manual of Arms—Lt. Dowl and Sgts. Everett and Carlson.

Handling of Recruits—Lt. Yantis and Sgt. Phillips.

Rifle Coaching—Lt. John and Sgts. Karnas and Bragovic.

"THE UNINVITED"

"The Uninvited," this year's most exciting mystery, will take you away from war and worry and make your major problem the solving of complications in a derelict but beautiful old English house, the 10th Division librarian advises. If the shivers from that title are agreeable but not enough, try "The Haunted Lady" by the indefatigable mystery writer, Mary Roberts Rinehart. "Drivin' Woman" a current top flight novel, and "The Drums of Morning," will take even further away, even centuries away, from the current battle ground, and entertain you with fascinating new characters and situations.

But if you insist on knowing the truth, meet the enemy in Pierre Huss' "The Foe We Face," or read the stories set in the present-day conflict, "Old Soldiers Never Die" and "The Hour Before Dawn."

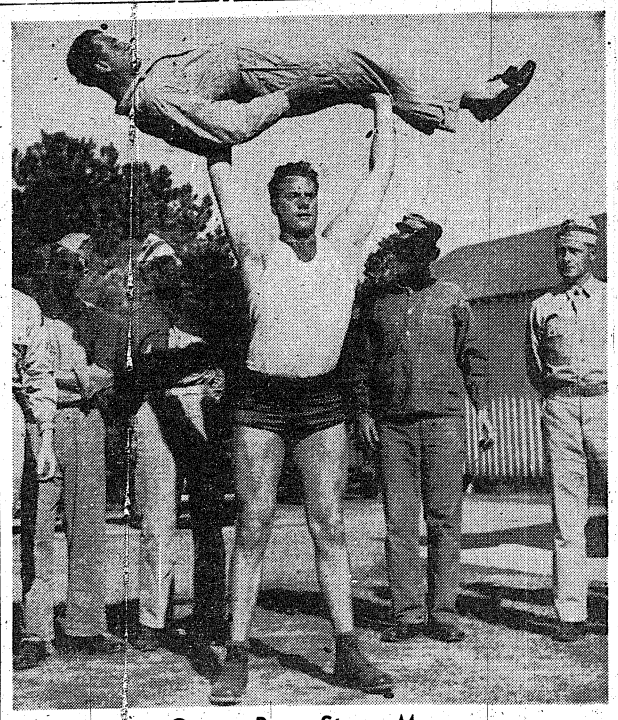
Private McFongel's Dream

BY S. SGT. TOM McDONALD

1. One night a few months after Private McFongle joined the army he had a dream like this—

2. Softly from his restful sleep he heard the sweet call of the reveille bugle. He got up and went into the washroom and found that the water was hot when he started to shave.

3. Later in the mess hall he was delighted to discover that milk was included on the menu at the same time that they had cornflakes.



4. After breakfast the Sergeant complimented him on how well he had made up his bunk.

5. During extended order drill that morning his squad leader failed to cuss him out when he went too far to the left.

6. His Captain smiled and said "How are you, Mac?" when he saluted on the way to the post exchange.

7. At rifle inspection the Lieutenant failed to see tiny invisible particle of dust which was three inches down the bore.

8. Suddenly, Private McFongle was rudely awakened! He had slept through reveille.

Former Swiss Army Officer Works for U. S. Commission

When graduation day arrives for Officer Candidate Class 17th Co. of the First Student Training Regiment, commanded by Colonel Thomas R. Gibson, there will be at least one among the happy group to whom an army commission will be no novelty, for enrolled among its industrious aspirants for the privilege of wearing bars is a former second lieutenant in the Swiss army.

This veteran soldier is Corporal Remy Klee. Corporal Klee was born in Altstaetter, Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gaul. After attending school there in a German speaking part of the country he answered the call of compulsory military service at the age of 19. He says that military training in Switzerland is conducted in very much the same manner as that which he has found in our own country.

He there proved himself to be an outstanding soldier and was sent to an officer candidate school, which lasted three months and which was in many respects very similar in training to that which he is now getting in The Infantry School.

Corporal Klee received his commission in the Swiss army in 1929 and held it for one year. He then came to the United States in 1930 in pursuit of a job promised him by a Swiss importing firm but upon arrival in New York he discovered that the firm had bowed to the depression and gone broke. Nevertheless he remained here and accepted this country as his home.

His parents are still in Switzerland and, wishing to play an active part in the war against his former German neighbors, Corporal Klee has enlisted in our army as a voluntary officer candidate. He states that the thing he misses most are the mountains of his former home and therefore he hopes to find service with our mountain troops. He is willing to serve in any capacity just so long as he gets a few shots at the Axis but he does admit that he was a little disappointed when upon his enlistment he was sent to Texas.

Lt. James of AAF Is Made Captain

Lieutenant William J. James Shannon, Miss., a member of the Army Air Force at Lawson Field, has been promoted to the rank of Captain.

Captain James came to Lawson Field, July 15, 1941 and was assigned to the 97th Observation Squadron as Assistant Operations Officer and as Operations Officer of Flight B of that squadron. He had his Primary flying course at Lakeland Aero Tech, Lakeland, Florida. His Basic course was taken at Gunter Field, Montgomery, Alabama. He then went to Barksdale Field, La., for his advanced training and he stayed on there for several months as an instructor. In March 1942 he became a member of the 7th Observation Squadron upon its activation and in May of this year became Operations Officer of the Squadron.

NEW YORK—Invitations to a dance have been received at several servicemen's welfare agencies—but they specify TALL soldiers, TALL sailors, and TALL marines. The dance is sponsored by the Stratoliner club, a group of girls who must be over six feet in height to belong. Most of their own boy friends have entered service.

U. S. Soldiers In War Zones To Be Amused

Special Service Unit Now Being Trained In Maryland

Leaving no stone unturned in providing as much recreation and entertainment as possible for U. S. soldiers engaged in the grim business of war, the War Department has announced the creation of special service units to work in the rear of combat zones where troops will be withdrawn for rest periods.

The units will be mobile and flexible designed to provide a maximum of recreation, entertainment and exchange service. They will assist and supplement, not replace—special service personnel or equipment of tactical organizations.

The Special Service unit will be a military unit. Its personnel of five commissioned officers and 116 enlisted men will be armed and all will have completed basic military training before being assigned to special unit training.

Each unit will consist of an exchange platoon, which will operate field exchange services, and two service platoons, which will furnish entertainments and equipment for athletics, libraries, motion pictures, musical and radio programs, theatricals and publications.

The service platoons will be composed of two sections, each of which is to be self-contained and designed to function independently. Each section will have an athletic group, an entertainment group, a library group and a motion picture group.

The athletic groups will organize sports events, the entertainment group will sponsor amateur theatricals and entertainments. Other groups will supervise their respective activities and the entire program will be developed as far as is as many troops as possible.

Officers and men to man these units are now being trained in Maryland.

Four Get Passes For Neatness In 10th Armored

Pfc. Judson E. Gudehus, a member of the Detachment Quartermaster Corps has just been selected as an air cadet, and left this week to join the Army Air Forces for training.

He reported to The Nashville, Tenn., classification center for the Air Forces, from where he will be assigned to one of the technical training commands.

Gudehus is a resident of Toledo, Ohio, and has been stationed at Fort Benning for over a year as a member of the Q. M. Detachment. He was assigned to the service section of the supply division in the Quartermaster office at Benning.

124TH PROMOTES 5

Five enlisted men of the 124th Infantry Regiment have been promoted to higher grades. They are: Tech 5th Gr. Edward A. Verboys, Uniondale, Pa., to technician 4th grade; Pfcs. Charles T. Hand, Hartford, Ala.; Sam L. Cibella, Cleveland, Ohio; Willi Landwehr, Lake Erskine, N. J.; and Pvt. Frank K. Weller, Miami, Fla., to be technician 5th grade.

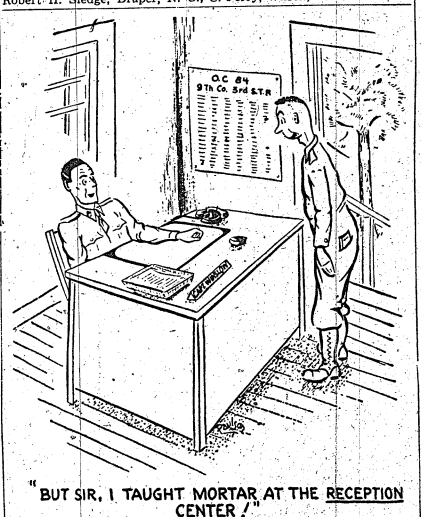
U. S. Mail Bans Circular Letters Via W. D. Channels

Fort Benning military personnel will still get those much-awaited letters from home but their mail, if it comes through official War Department channels will no longer contain those ever-present advertising letters and circular letters.

The War Department has announced that no bulk advertising or circular mail will be accepted for delivery through the War Department's official mail system.

Action was taken following a recent survey when it was disclosed that in one month more than 200,000 pieces of such mail were sent to the War Department in Washington and that in one day more than 10,000 pieces were received from a single source.

In many cases, the War Department adds, the addresses were incorrect, apparently having been taken from out-dated directories and the separation, sorting and directory service needed to handle this bulk of mail caused delay in handling official mail.



In the future, all advertising, circular and bulk mailings will be returned to the sender. All military and civilian personnel of the War Department in Washington and vicinity have been instructed to provide their correspondents with their home addresses so that third class mail will not be addressed in care of the War Department.

Eight Promoted In Training Reg't.

The promotion of five officers and three non-commissioned officers is announced from headquarters of the First Student Training Regiment, Infantry School.

Sledge, Draper, N. C.; and William H. Cox, Parsons; West Va., have been advanced to first lieutenants.

The following sergeants have been named staff sergeants: Ralph Shelley, Newville, Ala.; Louis J. Watson, Jesup, Ga.; and Charles C. Perry, Wilson, N. C.

"BUT SIR, I TAUGHT MORTAR AT THE RECEPTION CENTER!"

What's New With Q. M.?

Knee-length trousers are now being issued for wear by troops in certain areas for the first time in the history of the United States Army, it was announced this week.

Long a controversial subject, the use of cotton khaki shorts by large numbers of Johnny Doughboys now seems a foregone conclusion. The new short pants are cut to a smart serviceable pattern, somewhat similar to those worn by British soldiers in tropical and desert areas.

The new garments have unusually wide legs, thus giving a maximum freedom of movement. They are made of 8.2 ounce cotton khaki and have five pockets, a watch pocket, two side pockets and two hip pockets. In most cases, knee-length socks of olive drab merino yarn are worn with the shorts.

Going from hot to cold in one quick paragraph, here's news of a new G. I. sleeping bag for cold climates that weighs almost four pounds less than its predecessor and occupies nearly 35 per cent less space when rolled. It's made of balloon cloth and poplin and has a water-repellant carrying case which can also be used as foot cover for the sleeping soldier. There's a quick opening slide fastener!

Continuing its policy of the localized purchasing of perishable foods, the Quartermaster Corps has added five more marketing centers in Spokane, Salk Lake City, Phoenix, Philadelphia and Harlingen, Texas. At the same time, they released information that there were already 33 of these centers, all similar to the one in Columbus which provides most of the fresh fruits, vegetables and dairy products we eat here at Benning.

These market centers, in case you don't already know, are controlled by a headquarters in Chicago. Each day, the local center wires in the prices and quantities being offered in its area. All this info is compared in Chi and then the local purchasing officers are advised whether to purchase locally or wait for a shipment from elsewhere. It's a sound system, and has actually resulted in stabilizing civilian prices instead of upsetting them as would be expected with the Army buying so much grub these days.

If you think you are headed for someplace this winter where the temperature is liable to be slightly on the extreme side, you needn't worry about keeping warm. The good old Q. M. has just procured 100,000 lightweight pull-over knit shirts it was announced last week. The new jobs have long sleeves and a high collar, and are knitted with a flat jersey stitch. They come in 11 sizes from 34 to 54, so everyone should get a good fit in knit.

Most ingenious thing the Q. M. C. has done lately is to take salt water, air and electricity and make buttons out of it. Sounds fantastic, but it's true, so help us. Most of the Army buttons, other than brass, in the past have been made of Tagua nuts which had to be shipped in from Ecuador or from expensive fresh water pearls.

Faced with this situation of shortages due to lack of shipping facilities plus a desire to cut expenses, the Q. M. C. put its experts to work in developing a suitable plastic button that could be made cheaply. And presto, it was done.

Actually, the product is known as molamine formaldehyde plastic, as if that mattered. Anyway, it will replace the more rare and expensive buttons, and has already been made optional on all garments where the others were previously specified. And again, we repeat, it is made simply of salt water and air, which has been electrically treated. How about that!

You Figure This Out; Then Explain It to Us

A new field manual is being prepared by two Officer Candidates of the 30th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment. It's FM 281-900, entitled "New S. O. P. for Area Policing or Who Is Left Holding The Bag." Here's the general idea:

You have a squad of three men and a corporal. At the command of the corporal the squad falls in behind the corporal in single file. The correct soldier's position in this formation will show him with head down, butt up, feet spread 12 1-2 inches and his hands dangling at his sides. Equipment includes: corporal, magnifying glass; No. 1, an M7 marking stake; No. 2, M1942 spearing rod and spart parts kit, and No. 3, holding the bag.

The squad moves forward cautiously, taking advantage of cover and concealment. The corporal, acting as observer, searches the ground thoroughly. His method of searching is to search an area to the front for six feet, then to search an area to his left for six feet, then an area to his right for six feet. He traverses the area quickly but carefully until he spots a target. When he does he deploys his squad with the command, "H'action." The squad then forms a diamond, a rough one, which is quite a trick.

Pointing in the general direction of the target, the corporal puts his squad into action with a fire order in this manner: "Range, two feet, six and three-quarter inches; azimuth 275 degrees; cigarette butt; GO, GET IT!" It is felt that the command of execution "GO GET IT!" is in a more aggressive spirit than just some command like "Fire."

No. 1 then runs up and plunges his M7 marking stake into the ground not less than one and three-quarter inches, nor more than two and one-quarter inches behind the butt. He points to it with his left index finger, with his right hand, clenched, held behind his back. Then No. 2, using a free swinging motion, spears the butt with the sharpened point of his M1942 Spearing Rod. Finally No. 3 comes up holding his bag and the butt is carefully placed in the corporal's pocket so as not to soil the bag.

Authors of the manual are Candidates "Brooklyn" Lane and "Mother" Campbell. A good corporal, say Lane and Campbell, can play poker every night and still smoke without grubbing. A fast No. 1 can make a mark for himself anywhere, and an expert No. 2 man can spear four of every five butts. It must be remembered, however, that there are different kinds and types of butts, in varied positions, and No. 2 must be on the ball so as not to spear the wrong kind of butt. If he does he had better make himself scarce fast. Of course No. 3 always gets it in the end.

Any man caught towing a target into defilade is severely criticized, Lane and Campbell warn.

A. R. C. Will Try to Get Messages to Internees

Plans Food Parcels For War Prisoners

Arrangements for distribution of Christmas food parcels to the 1,400 Americans interned by the German authorities in Occupied France have been made by the Red Cross representatives in Geneva, local Red Cross authorities have been informed by Washington.

Relatives and friends of unidentified prisoners of war or military men missing in action in the Far East are urged by the American Red Cross to go immediately to their local Red Cross chapters and file messages to them. The messages will be carried on the exchange ship, Gripsholm, soon to sail on its second voyage. The messages must be limited to 25 words.

The messages will be addressed to the International Red Cross delegate in Japan who will make every effort to see that they are delivered.

The packages to be sent those interned in Occupied France will be selected from a stock of standard 11-pound parcels in Geneva. The parcels contain meat, sugar, fats, dried fruit, tobacco and other supplementary food rations packed in the United States.

The messages to be mailed on the Gripsholm must contain complete information as to name, number, rank, military unit and last known address. The Red Cross can offer no assurance of delivery, but the method was adopted in agreement with the State, War, Navy and Postoffice Departments because the Japanese government has not yet furnished official lists of the majority of American prisoners held in the Far East.

The Gripsholm will carry messages for men reported missing after the fall of Bataan and Corregidor, but whose names have not yet been reported by the Japanese to the International Red Cross committee on official war lists.

Schilling Presents March To the Infantry School

May Be Adopted As Official Infantry Song

Lt. Falko M. Schilling, 24th Co., 4th Battalion of the 1st Student Training Regiment which is commanded by Col. Thomas R. Gibson has presented the words and music to his song, "Call The Infantry" to The Infantry School, Fort Benning and The Commandant, Major General Leven C. Allen. If approved by the Chief of the Radio Branch, Bureau of Public Relations and the War Department, it may be adopted as an official army song for the Infantry and The Infantry School, Fort Benning.

A copy of the words and music to "Call The Infantry" was turned over to the United States Army Band by Brig. Gen. Alexander R. Bolling, Assistant Chief of Staff, G1, of the Army Ground Forces, with the request that it be used on one of the next round-the-globe radio concerts played every Saturday at 11:30 by the United States Army Band. This musical organization, under the direction of Captain Thomas F. Darcy, Jr., is now become world known through its half hour program of march and band music radioed from the Band Auditorium to all corners of the globe by short-wave every Saturday.

WRITES ANOTHER SONG

Brig. Gen. Bolling was presented with the original copy of the words to another one of Lt. Schilling's compositions, "SONG OF THE SERVICE". The music for this number has recently been completed and the original score will also be mailed to General Bolling. The dedication still reads, "TO LT. COL. A. R. BOLLING, HQ 1st C. A., FROM PVT. F. M. SCHILLING, MARCH 1941".

Warrant Officer Albert Andrews, director and bandleader of the 29th Infantry Band is working on a special arrangement of "CALL THE INFANTRY" for one of the next "Listen, It's Fort Benning" programs.

He has been on duty at Fort Benning four different times, and is an Officers' Candidate School graduate.

Hq. Co., 1st Bn., 117th Inf.

SGT. N. HALUSZCZAK.

Private Daniel B. Dowling of HQ. Co., 117th Infantry and a former resident of Omaha, Nebraska, was temporarily transferred to the 1204th C A S U, 165 Broadway, New York. The transfer for the temporary transfer was for cooperation in the production of the show "This IS THE Army" produced by Irving Berlin. Upon completion of the assignment Private Dowling will return to his proper station,

The assignment was made until the 117th Infantry was in training at Fort Jackson, S. C., and the transfer was effective June 22, 1942.

Private Dowling's parents reside at Eleventh Victoria St., Harlon, Iowa.

Our day room is now open for business, and is one of the best looking in the regiment (if not the best). True, it is not as yet completely furnished, but since up to the time of our arrival at Fort Benning, the 3rd Bn., H. Q. So., of the 117th Inf., did not have one, they have a right to be proud of it.

It has been finished in green paint with black trim, and the floor is the only one to be varnished. New furniture has been installed, as well as a record player. There are games and magazines to be played and read. When finished, you can be sure that it will be good.

Last week Sgt. Sebastain A. Aliano, Corp. Charles Kimmel and Privates John Itko, Hugh Lackey and Ronald Wilmot left their country estates (3rd Bn., H. Q. Co., 117th Inf.,) at Fort Benning for a visit to their home towns for a furlough.

From the looks on their faces when they left, there is no doubt but that they intend to have a good time.

What demon was around again (rumor) and dropped word that there is a certain private in the 3rd Bn., H. Q. Co., 117th Inf., who is now expecting a visit from either Sir or Mrs. Stork some time in December. His initials are R. S.

Good luck to Pfc. Sherman Sayer of the 3rd Bn. Hq. Co. Last week he was giving out ciggies to the boys. The reason is that his wife Anna gave birth to a bouncing baby girl. When last seen on Saturday the happy father was on his way to join the missus at their home in Sterling Forest, N. Y. in order to be with her for ten days. The boys all want to extend their best to Sherman.

The ninth of this month found Pfc. Mack C. Robinson of the 3rd Bn. Hq. Co. wreathed in smiles. He was on that day promoted to the rank of Corp. Tech. Corp Robinson was recently transferred to this company from the 120th Inf. of Fort Jackson, S. C. He is one of the radio operators and claims to be a product of Lunday, N. C. Congratulations and keep 'em on the air.

Last Saturday the boys of the 3rd Bn. Hq. Co. walked into their mess hall as usual. There was something wrong, and it didn't take the chow-hounds long to locate the trouble. Curtains were now on the windows, and very pretty ones too. (No gags about the paper doilies either, wise guy!)

Pvt. Raymond Keen of the 3rd Bn., Hq. Co. early this week declared his intentions to leave the state of bachelorhood. Apparently a lass named Miss Louise Eice of Mamaroneck, N. J. has so captivated his heart—and she also being that way about him—that the wedding can be expected very soon.

The 3rd Bn. Hq. Co. is highly resolved to have the best day room in the Regiment. As a means to that end, the latter part of last week and the early part of this has been spent in making it attractive.

It has been painted pea-green with black trim and nothing has been omitted. The floor will next be properly treated with a coat of varnish. The curtains have already arrived and match the attractive color scheme nicely. (Anybody jealous?)

The equipment will arrive soon enough and you can bet the boys will love it.

Pvt. Buford Collins has just returned from a well deserved five day furlough. He looks swell and our guess is that he had a grand time.

A narrow trench or a fox hole in solid ground, in which you can get below the surface, will also protect you from being run over by tanks or other track laying vehicles.

MP Chief and Protege

In 1933 First Sgt. Henry J. Boudreaux, of the Military Police Detachment at Fort Benning, arranged for the transfer of a promising young private from the 29th Infantry to the M. P.'s. He was Private Hubert C. Hines. Today it is 1st Lt. Boudreaux and 2nd Lt. Hines. Lt. Boudreaux, who is now commanding officer of the white M. P. Detachment, has been commissioned since June 25, 1942, and Hines followed in his comrade's footsteps today when he went on active duty as 2nd lieutenant in the Army of the United States. Although they are only 35 and 36 years old, respectively, their tenure in the Military Police totals twenty-four and one-half years. Boudreaux has the longer service record, boasting fourteen and one-half years. Lt. Hines will go to the Provost Marshal General School Center at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., after which he will receive further assignment. Belle Rose, La., is the home of Lt Boudreaux, and Hines comes from Cloverdale, Ala. (Photo by 161st Signal Photo Co.)

Motor Maintenance Class Finds 'Spy' in Its Midst

Instructors in Officers' Motor Maintenance classes of Colonel Thomas R. Gibson's 1st S. T. R. better be on their toes, because a member of their class is observing their methods with a very critical eye. It smacks of espionage, but it's all for the good of the service.

In the mechanized cavalry, smooth operation of motors is vital, and a strong factor in guaranteeing it is the efficient Motors Section of the Cavalry School at Fort Riley, Kansas. But even a good thing must be kept good, and the leaders of the Motors Section, to be sure of keeping abreast of the latest teaching techniques, decided to "scout" a similar course operated by a different branch of the service. What better course could they pick than the Infantry School's own Officers' Motor Maintenance Course? And what better way could they scout it than by sending one of their own instructors as a student?

This is exactly what they did. The "spy" selected was 1st Lt. John F. Howe, and reports indicate he is doing a very thorough job. Lt. Howe, a graduate of Norwich University, Vt., was called to active duty on March 9, 1942, under his reserve commission, and was soon assigned to Fort Riley and the Motors Section. As he had been a Chevrolet dealer in Claremont, N. H., before entering the services, he was not surprised at that assignment; but he was hardly prepared to be sent away later as an "information gatherer" in the guise of a student.

"However, we are proud of the selection of the Infantry School as an example of successful instructional methods, and we are pleased to have Lt. Howe with us, cavalry insignia included," the class asserted. "Here's hoping he is able to carry a lot of useful information back to Fort Riley with him. And here's repeating—instructors had better be on their toes!"

NEW QUARTERS FOR GUARD

The Guard platoon of the Service Battalion of the Second Student Training Regiment has moved into newly constructed quarters on Jamestown road near the new water tower. The platoon is now housed in large-type huts on the east side of Jamestown road. The regimental guardhouse and stockade are also located in this new area now.

Officer Trio Made Majors

Mulcahy, Wright, Cornett of 505th Get Maple Leaves

Three captains with the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment have been promoted to major, according to word received from that headquarters.

These included the Special Service officer, Captain Patrick D. Mulcahy, the commanding officer of the second battalion, Captain Fredrick Wright, and the regimental S-3, Captain Jack Cornett.

Major Mulcahy and Major Wrights are both West Pointers, and both qualified as paratroopers in August of this year. Mulcahy was formerly captain, and battalion S-3, with the 81st Training Battalion, Camp Roberts, Calif. Wright served with the 168th Infantry, at Fort Hutchinson, Arizona, as commanding officer of an anti-tank company.

The other new field officer, Major Cornett, qualified as a paratrooper back in October 1941, and was a line officer and company commander with the 503rd Parachute Regiment, until appointed battalion S-3 of the 505th Regiment, when it was organized.

He is a native of Fort Smith, Ark., while Major Mulcahy is from Des Moines, Iowa, and Major Wright comes from Brownsville, Texas.

Three Promoted In First STR

Colonel Thomas R. Gibson, commanding officer of the 1st Student Training Regiment, has announced the following promotions:

Pfc. William A. Emerson, son of Mrs. Ollie Emerson of Atlanta to corporal technician; Sergeant James L. Bryant, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Bryant, Sr., of Norfolk, Va., to staff sergeant; Pfc. Frederick A. Campbell, son of Mrs. Martha Campbell of New York City to sergeant technician.

Colored M. P. Saves 6 Lives In Sunday Fire

Private F. March, colored, member of the Benning Corps of Military Police, is credited with having saved six negro children from death last Sunday night when he led them to safety from a burning house.

Pvt. March was on duty on a road about four miles from Phenix City when he discovered a home ablaze. He rushed into the house and led and carried the six children to safety. Their ages ranged from two months to ten years. The parents were at work and had left the children at home.

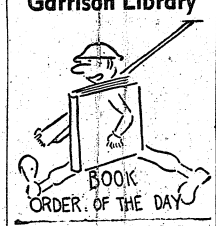
The soldier suffered slight burns about the face. The house was completely destroyed.

Mohamet Can't Go To Mount So Mount---

The whistle blows—And it is church call every Sunday morning at ten o'clock in the Service Battalion of the First Student Training Regiment. The boys drop their K. P. duties and are on their way to the Chapel.

Chaplain Jones of the Colored Reception Center is responsible for this church call. In order to make it possible for the men of the Service Battalion, whose Sunday duties prevent their attending regular religious services at the Reception Center, Chaplain Jones holds a special service for these men every Sunday morning at ten o'clock in the Battalion Day Room. Thus, the Service Men can leave their duties for forty-five minutes, attend church in fatigue clothes, then return to their work.

At present, the men have no instrumental accompaniment for their morning hymns, but are trying to obtain a field organ for the group through the Quartermaster Corps.



FIVE MPS ADVANCE

Five privates of the Corps of Military Police at Fort Benning, have been promoted to privates 1st class. They are Pvts. Andrew J. Alexander, Euell M. Buntin, Robert L. Canfield, Nelson K. Johnson and Calvin A. Merson.

Contrary to the general impression ordinary civilians can still find seats in air transports.

When firing at a tank, aim at spots where your bullets may penetrate. The steel interior causes the bullets and metal to ricochet and you may get several of the crowded crew with one shot.

Garrison Library

BY FRANCES CHANDLER

Edward Streeter's "Dere Mable" of World War I has its counterpart in a number of clever humorous books published since this new war began. For a book of cartoons, Dave Breger's "Private Breger" is guaranteed for many laughs. H. I. Phillips has portrayed his idea of life in the new army for a rookie with "The Private Papers of Private Purkey" and "Private Purkey in Love and War." The navy has its humorists, too, as represented by Ensign Brooks' "Elmer Squee," a book of cartoons with a connected commentary printed underneath.

As World War II's best book to date about U. S. Army life, Marion Hargrove's "See Here, Private Hargrove" certainly rates a medal. And medals, as Private Hargrove translates into army slang, are "chest hardware"!

The author is a former newspaper man from Charlotte, N. C., whose introduction to army life took place at Fort Bragg, N. C. Originally mis-classified as a cook, Hargrove's cooking career was stopped—in order to save the morale of his battery!—and he was transferred to the public relations office.

From the start, Private Hargrove was something of a dud when it came to neatness, drill, and getting up on time. Thus he was introduced to K. P. quite early in his Army career. "It was all very simple, this KP business. All you have to do is get up an hour earlier, serve the food, and keep the mess hall clean. After we served breakfast, I found a very easy job in the dining hall, where life is much pinker than it is in the kitchen. A quartet was formed and we were singing 'Home on the Range.' A corporal passed by just as I hit a sour note. He put the broom into my left hand, the mop into my right . . . He wanted to be able to see his face in the kitchen floor. After lunch he wanted the back porch polished. It is like woman's work—never really done."

According to Private Hargrove griping is an extremely important morale builder. Typical soldier's gripe: "Our battery has the worst food in the army. We've got the worst sergeant in the battery. No kidding, though, our platoon makes all the others look crummy."

The book's clever reportorial writing, clean humor, and glossary of army slang will interest both civilian readers and readers who are in the service. "See Here, Private Hargrove" really expresses the typical American soldier's attitude toward Army life. If a book can build morale, this one should.

When is a LOST house not lost? Ask Mary Dinsmore or Mary Hundertmark of the Billeting Office and they can tell you. For days and weeks they searched high and low for a lost house. Then one day when everything was nice and quiet in their office, this little house that was lost suddenly appeared out of the nowhere belonging to the Officers' Club. Were their faces red?

Executive Officer Of First STR Made Colonel

Many Fort Benning friends of Col. Robert Sharp, learned with interest of his recent promotion to a full colonelcy. Col. Sharp is at present the Executive Officer of the 1st Student Training Regiment.

He was born in Utah, and entered the Army through the Officers Training Camp held at the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., in 1917. He received his commission in the Regular Army in July of 1920.

Colonel Sharp has previously served at Fort Benning, having been with the 29th Infantry from 1925 to 1928. He again returned to Fort Benning in August of this year, to assume his present duties as Executive Officer of the 1st Student Training Regiment, from the Headquarters of the Seventh Service Command.

Limited Service Men Are Affected By New Ruling

In order to release general service enlisted men for field duty, new regulations governing limited service men in all posts and camp commands now have gone into effect, according to announcements from Headquarters of the Fourth Service Command at Atlanta.

Effective immediately, each post and camp commander must now investigate the possibilities of every limited service enlisted man now attached to the station complement, or who may be transferred there in future, who is unassigned and who is not understudying a general service enlisted man, in order to determine where these limited service men can best be utilized.

General service enlisted men must be reported to the Fourth Command headquarters for release to the field forces within 60 days after a limited service enlisted man has been assigned as his understudy. In cases where limited service enlisted men, now acting as understudies, have been acting as such for more than 60 days, the general service men for whom they have acted as understudies will be reported for release to the field forces.

In order to provide for training of understudies, an overstrength of 10 per cent of the total authorized strength of station complements is authorized. Then, when the strength of a station exceeds this authorized overstrength, general service enlisted men must be released to the field forces.

No limited service enlisted man is to be allowed to remain at a station unless he is assigned to a vacancy in the station complement or is an understudy to a general service enlisted man. If, after an appropriate period of adjustment, it is found that there is no suitable assignment for such limited service men, they will be reported to headquarters at Atlanta for reassignment.

The new order governing limited service enlisted men now has gone into effect, it was announced by General Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of Ft. Benning.

Fort Pleases Its Ex-Chief

Gen. Singleton Is Gratified by Progress

Gratification in the manner in which Fort Benning is measuring up in every way to what is expected of this post during the present world crisis was expressed by Brig. General Asa L. Singleton, retired former commandant of the Infantry School, who visited old friends and acquaintances at Fort Benning and in Columbus last week. He is on a short vacation from duties as superintendent of Manlius (N. Y.) Boys' Military School.

Commenting on the many changes he noted during his visit, Gen. Singleton said that all the changes have added tremendously to the goal "we are all seeking at this time.

"The work observed here by me, and the great improvements manifested, indicate unmistakeably, that those charged with responsibility all function toward a single end, or system of ends — that is the winning of this global war."

The retired general is making his home at his winter residence near Warm Springs, and plans to return to Fort Benning before reassuming his duties in Manlius.

29TH EXECUTIVE

He relinquished his command here in August 1940 when he was retired. He first came to Benning in February 1925 as executive officer of the 29th Infantry. He left in July 1927 to join the General Staff Corps of the 9th Corps Area.

The former commandant returned here again in March of 1935, completing a tour of duty in the office of the Chief of Infantry, Washington, D. C., and taking command of the 29th Infantry. He held that position until his promotion to Brigadier General in October, 1936, when he took command of The Infantry School.

General Singleton rose from the ranks. He first joined the service in June 8, 1899, when he enlisted in the 4th Infantry. He received his commission as second lieutenant in 1911. During World War I he served with distinction and was rewarded with the Distinguished Service Medal. General Singleton was on the General Staff Corps from Aug. 15, 1921 to April 15, 1925, and again from July 1, 1927 to July 30, 1931. He is a graduate of the Army War College, Army School of Line and Signal School.

Attention, Sgt., And We Mean Sgt. Paulin

In spite of the old sergeant's blushing brow, the members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps will be well outfitted. But the three-stripper's countenance promises to be a neat scarlet before this is over.

A War Department directive recently received at Fort Benning gives us a hint of what's to come. It lists the garments which may be permanently retained on separation from service.

When the enrolled member or officer leaves the corps after six months or more active duty, the following become personal property: brassiere, winter and summer cap, girdle, gloves, handkerchiefs, winter and summer jacket, neckties, overcoats, pajamas, panties, scarf, shoes, skirt, slips, stockings, exercise suit, vests, waists, and utility bags.

In case of separation from active duty before six months, all except the more personal garments must be turned in.

124TH PROMOTES

Seven enlisted men of the 124th Infantry regiment at Fort Benning, have been promoted to higher grades.

Tech 4th Gr. Thomas M. Henry, Jr., Live Oak, Fla., was advanced to sergeant. Cpl. Albert J. Fell, Philadelphia, Pa., and Pvt. William B. Kokes, Cape May, N. J., were promoted to technician 4th grade.

Tech 5th Gr. Robert W. Henderson, Jacksonville, Fla., and Pfc. Earl R. Keene, Lake Butler, Fla., made corporal. Pvts. William E. Hickey, Portland, Maine, and Melvin Greenspan, New York, N. Y., were promoted to technician 5th grade.

SCHILLING DONATES PRIZE

1st Lt. Falko M. Schilling of the 1st Regiment, one of the post's poets, has made his outfit proud of his philanthropy. Winner of a cash prize given by The Bayonet for the best poem last week, Lt. Schilling is turning the money over to the Chaplain's petty cash fund in the 4th Battalion.

HAWAIIAN SLUGGER

The boys over at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, are comparing one of the Post's outstanding fighters, Gil Lowenstein, a husky middleweight and a tremendous puncher, has been hammering out some of the most devastating two - fisted attacks seen on the islands.

The Breakers
117th Infantry
The 1st Bn. Hq. Co., 117th Infantry shines again.
Coming to Fort Benning with the determination to make good, Hq. Co., 1st Bn. has done so in every endeavor. Setting a record for infantry troops in the building of the foot bridge at Engineer's Landing.
The first time we constructed the bridge was in record time of eight minutes, tying a thirteen year record. This fete of workmanship and cooperation was accomplished on September 15, 1942.
On October 14, we were called on to put on the demonstration again before several thousand officer candidate students. This time all the boys were determined to beat their own record along with a thirteen year record, which we did in the record time of 7 1-2 minutes.
While we were working so hard to beat our first record, one of our boys who seemed so anxious to get finished and get back to camp, announced on his return to the company area that his wife, Carolyn, had a seven pound boy. Thus solving the mystery of his anxiety to get finished early. Maybe that's where we picked up the old minute to beat the record.
Congratulations to Pvt. George R. Parsons, on the birth of his son. Pvt. Parsons has gone to visit his wife and son who live in Omaha, Neb.
Looks as if Hq. Co. 1st Bn., 117th Infantry is going to have a very successful campaign on the sale of bonds, supervised by Lt. Swim, company bond officer. The campaign has just got under way but a number of the boys have already bought bonds. Some of the boys have pledged to buy a bond a month.
Good work, fellows, and let's keep going till we get a 100 per cent company, then stretch the campaign into larger fields.
First Lt. Michael J. Barry, a veteran of the World war and commander of this company, was in charge of the bridge building.

23-Year Odyssey Ends In Return to Oglethorpe

Carley Goes Home As First Lieut.

You might say that First Sgt. Amos Carley of Augusta, Ga., has been traveling in a huge circle for the past 23 years!

But, unlike most people who travel in circles, Sgt. Carley has accomplished something.

Sgt. Carley began his military career at Fort Oglethorpe as a private in 1919. Since then he has traveled thousands of miles to many odd corners of this world only to be scheduled to return to Fort Oglethorpe the latter part of November. However, on his homecoming, he will carry with him the commission of 1st lieutenant in the Army of the United States.

At present a member of the 6th Company of the crack Third Student Training Regiment under the command of Col. R. H. Lord in the Infantry Officers' School here at Fort Benning, he will receive his commission November 12.

After enlisting in 1919, Sgt. Carley was sent immediately to Vladivostok, Siberia, where for six months the 31st Infantry guarded vital railroad supplies. From Russia he went to the Philippine Islands for 32 months, returning to the United States in 1922.

He then joined the 22nd Infantry at Fort McPherson, Ga., and was with that organization for seven years prior to joining the Infantry School at Fort Benning. In 1929 he was on his way to China and was there until 1931. In 1942 he joined the Third Student Training Regiment and is now 1st Sgt. in the 6th Company of that organization.

Upon receiving his commission he will attend the Military Police School at Fort Oglethorpe after which he expects to start the second leg of his world touring circle.

Benningites Are Invited To Enter Hobby Contest

Exhibit Planned For Oct. 26-Nov. 7

An invitation to Fort Benning soldier-hobbyists to enter their hobbies in the Victory Show of the American Hobby Federation has been received from Erwin M. Frey, Federation president.

The exhibit will be held in the Sachs Auditorium, 35th Street and Eighth Avenue, New York City, from Oct. 26 through Nov. 7, and will be open daily from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Frey informed Colonel Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer at Fort Benning, that the show will be devoted entirely to the hobbies of men in the armed forces. Any kind of hobby may be exhibited, whether it is creative such as photography, painting, model making, wood-carving and so forth, or a collective hobby such as collections of stamps, buttons, badges, bells, insignia or relics.

"Prizes in the form of war bonds and stamps will be awarded. There is no charge for exhibiting and all collections are insured. Glass show cases are used where needed. All hobbies can be shipped Railway Express collect and will be returned prepaid. We will arrange the hobbies so that they are shown to the best advantage with full credit card giving each man's name."

For the last six years, the official American Hobby Show has been held in New York City and on some occasions as many as 45,000 people have attended the shows. During past years no admittance has been charged but this year the price of entering the show will be a war bond or stamp.

Lawson Bomb Sight

PFC. P. J. HOPKINS

Army Air Forces enlisted technicians and mechanics have been recently authorized to wear a distinctive silver badge indicating the skills in which they are qualified. The design of the silver badge is a gear wheel, surmounted by a four bladed propeller. Suspended from the badge, in the manner of a marksman's badge, are one or more silver bars with an inscription noting the technical skill for which the wearer has qualified.

The Seventh Observation Squadron wish to announce the promotion of two 1st lieutenants to the rank of captain. The men to be congratulated are Capts. W. J. James and W. A. Dickson. Both Captain James and Captain Dickson pilots who came to Lawson Field as 2nd Lieutenants assigned to the 97th Observation Squadron. Early this year they transferred to the Seventh where Captain James was appointed Operations Officer and Captain Dickson was appointed Commanding Officer of Flight B.

It's basketball time again and the men of Lawson Field are serving notice on any and all Post teams that they are the team to beat this year. Coached by Capt. D. C. Moffet, a famous national basketball coach, we are looking forward to a successful season and expect to be right up with the league leaders from the start. Captain Moffet is one of the outstanding basketball coaches in the country and several of the teams he has coached have played at Madison Square Garden and hold decisions over Long Island University and New York University. He was formerly Director of Inter-collegiate Athletics at DePauw University and head of the Department of Physical Education.

Corporal Tom Floyd of the M.-P.'s stopped an old darky, one day last week, and gave him a good tongue lashing for failing to stand at attention while Retreat was being played. When the darky explained that he did not know the significance of the call the Corporal asked him what he would do if the national anthem was played. When the man replied that he didn't know what the National Anthem was, and that he wouldn't do anything if he heard it played, the Corporal was dumbfounded. "How long have you been in the United States," he asked. To which the old man replied, "I ain't been here long, boss. I've been living in Alabama all my life and just moved over here the other day."

From S-Sgt. to colonel in one short trip is a record promotion. But that's exactly what happened to S-Sgt. John H. Hewitt on a recent trip to a nearby suburb. When he registered at a local hotel the clerk advised him that there had been a call for Col. John H. Hewitt and would be please contact a certain young lady. John got in touch with the young lady only to discover it was a case of mistaken identity. P. S. He was demoted as soon as he returned to the field.

The employees of the Lawson Sub-Depot have organized a club to promote recreational and social activities among the civilian personnel. A contest was held among the employees to select a name for the club and Mr. C. I. Brown was adjudged the winner. His choice "Ace of Clubs" was selected and officially adopted as the club name. Mr. C. S. Latona was elected president and is busy planning many and varied programs of entertainment.

Regan was inducted in March, 1942, and served with the 53rd General Hospital before being transferred to the 24th.

11th Street School Has Speech Class For Fort Soldiers

Men of Fort Benning who are eager to "go forward" will be interested in knowing that instruction is given at the 11th St. School in Columbus for those who desire instruction in speech.

Sponsored by the Board of Education, this class is now in its fifth year of operation. The purpose of the class is to help men gain confidence in their speaking voice and to be able to carry on a proper conversation. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, classes are conducted to meet the needs of those people desiring help in vocabulary, in practical English and its application to every day use, in improvements in personality and in speech.

These qualifications Miss Rheba Byrd, instructor of the class, feels, will be of great help to men who are determined to advance in their present work, or go on to higher things.

The classes are held on the second floor of the 11th Street School building, corner of 4th, and 11th Street, between the hours of 8 and 10 p. m.

Symphony Set For Oct. 28

Fort Contributes Many Musicians

Unique in musical history because of the fact that it is made up of 50 per cent men in the Armed Forces, donating their services from various Ft. Benning units, the Columbus Symphony Orchestra will present the first of a series of Fall Concerts Wednesday, Oct. 28 at the USO Club, 100 Ninth St., Columbus.

The orchestra will be conducted by Pfc. Harold Scheckman, Newark, N. J., who played with many orchestras and did a great deal of violin solo work in the East. He also did considerable radio work before coming into the Army.

Twenty-five musicians from various Ft. Benning units will play as part of the 45-piece symphony, which will present a program that will open with the "Lustspiel Overture" by Keler Bela, and then continue with Bizet's "L'Arlesienne Suite" (Prelude, Andante moto, minuetto, intermezzo and farandole); the "Valse Triste" by Sibellus and "Black Eyes", a Gypsy air by Horlick & Stone. Private Scheckman will present three violin solos—the "Meditation" from "Thais" by Massenet, "Jealousy" by Gade and Kreisler's "Liebestreud". The solo numbers were included by popular request.

Soldier members of the orchestra are from the Eleventh Armored Regiment; Twenty-Seventh General Hospital; 117th Infantry; 124th Infantry and the 29th Infantry.

Those from the 11th Armored are Sgt. E. Martinetti, flute; Sgt. J. Sorci, clarinet; Pvts. Joseph D. Romano, violin; Don E. Wright; Chas. S. Le Medico, clarinet and Earl Hefsner of the Reconnaissance company, violin.

Sgt. D. G. Taddei, viola, represents the 24th General Hospital while from the 117th Infantry will come Lt. J. B. Slavich of Co. G., violin and Corporal Arv. Ahlo, violin. Pfc. Joe Scheitz, violinist, represents the 124th Infantry.

From the 29th Infantry come Robert Sugarman, tympani; Vernon Glickman, horn; Tommy Leonard, trumpet; Anthony Battaglia, tuba; Walton Smith, saxaphone; Alex Mendel, violin; S. T. Prunesti, flute; Tommy Lytle, trombone; Joe Sullivan, saxaphone; John Lucas, violin; William Henry Sprout, trombone; Delos Andrus, French horn and Victor Franco, violin.

Soldier-musicians who will play in the orchestra have nearly all had experience in bands or orchestras in various parts of the country. Private Scheckman expresses thanks to the bandmasters who have allowed the men to give their services in the orchestra for the concert.

Cinema Songster Entertains Comrades-in-Arms of 1st STR

Tenor Scully Starred In 'Blessed Event,' 'Gold-diggers'

O. C. students in the 9th Company of Colonel Thomas R. Gibson's 1st STR. are given a real treat when tenor Bill Scully steps out of the ranks to lead the good old Sing Song—Hong Kon—King Dong sequence. Candidate Scully, a past master of the swing and the sweet with such solid and nationally known outfits as Tommy Dorsey, Ray Noble, and Isham Jones, is now a very busy lad getting 'hep to the jive' of Ft. Bennings' Officer Candidate School.

Bill, who came to Ft. Benning, straight from New York's Mitchell Field, has been "cooking with gas" for quite a few years before going to work for Uncle Sam. He traveled high, wide, and handsome as vocalist with the Dorsey, Noble, and Jones aggregations and there are few towns that he hasn't honored with his tenor voice.

PLAYS IN PICTURES

The fame and reputation of Candidate Scully's work carried him along the bright lights of the entertainment world until he reached the goal of all good singers—Hollywood. There Bill got into pictures, and good ones, like—BLESSED EVENT. In this one Bill looked plenty smooth' singing side by side with Dick Powell, and tossing jokes with Walter Winchell and Ben Bernie.

After BLESSED EVENT, Candidate Scully continued to star with Dick Powell in the GOLD-DIGGER'S series. Following these triumphs Bill stormed New York on his own as a successful Master of Ceremonies of some of the "big towns" finest night spots.

During "off hours" Candidate Scully played with and directed such well known "little theatre" groups as the "Cherry Lane Players" and the Vagabonds.

Bis jump into an army career in the spring of '41 was a big change in his life, but he's taking it "right in the groove" and "keeping too busy to have a worry in the world.

'Gators Dedicate Outdoor Theater With Girl Show

McMillan Bowl, super deluxe outdoor theatre, was dedicated last week with one of the finest shows ever witnessed by the 124th Infantry Regiment.

The opening ceremonies brought Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan forward to present the Bowl officially to the regiment. Lt. Col. Maxwell C. Snyder, Commanding Officer, accepted the gift in behalf of the regiment and praised the men of the first battalion for their fine work in completing such a worthwhile project.

With Private Frank Benenato as the master of ceremonies the show opened with a star studded revue from the Club Maytag and the Southern Manor. The six lovely starlets offered several well received numbers and Mitzy Wright won approval of all with a Hula Hula dance.

Sue Lauderdale of WRBL entertained with several beautiful songs and Harold Rifas, the Parachute Infantry magician showed the boys some expert tricks.

Emile Parra of the Southern Manor and Sgt. William E. Irons of the Service Battalion, 2nd Student Training Regiment starred as Emcee of the two main revues. Sgt. Irons introduced the members of Major Robert Garrison's "Service Revue" which included tap dancer Pfc. Henry T. Carter and singer Pfc. William Cumber.

Filipino At Fort Makes Ready To Avenge Land

A man with personal grudge against the whole Japanese empire is Officer Candidate Magdaleno G. Tomaneng, 35-year-old Filipino of the 13th Company, Second Student Training Regiment.

Tomaneng's family lived on the island of Luzon in the Philippines about 14 miles from where the Japs initially attacked at Vigan. He has not heard from his family since November of last year.

Although he has lived in the United States since 1929 and considers the United States his homeland, family ties and loyalty to the land of his birth make the Japanese occupation of the Philippines a particularly bitter pill for him to take.

Right at the moment, while preparing for a commission, Tomaneng has to content himself with buying bonds as his share in the war effort. He has done a pretty fair job of that, purchasing about $1,000 worth mainly out of his army pay since the first of the year. But his ambition is to be assigned to a Filipino regiment under General MacArthur's command and fight northward from Australia, island by island, until Luzon is recaptured.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. E. E. WHITTEMORE

Battles that will shape the destiny of the world war for months and years to come were under way this week. It was cold steel in bitter, savage fighting on the Solomon Islands, in the African desert and on the Russian steppes as fighting fronts erupted in a wave of fire and flame.

Offensive and defensive strategy of the Allied Nations and of their enemies in coming months will depend on the outcome of the struggles in the three widely separated theater of wars.

Americans were most interested—and most concerned—in the Battle for the Solomons, where U. S. Marines and a battered American Navy were locked in a life-and-death struggle with huge Jap forces that were attacking on Guadalcanal Island.

The Nips came by land, sea and air in a full-scale attack. Before it had fairly begun, "straight from the shoulder" came a Navy disclosure that we had lost the aircraft carrier Wasp, had had another carrier severely damaged and had lost a destroyer around Guadalcanal. This announcement, which followed by only a few days the news of the sinking of three American cruisers, sobered an anxious nation and brought the realization full home that the Solomon Islands battle was of great importance.

In Egypt, it appeared the Allied Nations were out to make Erwin Rommel, Germany's African general, "play their game." But it was a "game" of dive-bombers, death-dealing tank attacks and bloody, hand-to-hand infantry fighting, because the British Eighth Army this week was attacking in great force and early in the assault had cracked preliminary defenses of the Nazis and was well-established in battle array within Rommel's territory.

As the BAYONET went to press Rommel's tanks were hurrying to the front to engage the fighting Allied nations army. An allied victory would mean the establishment of a new front in the Mediterranean area—perhaps an eventual invasion of Italy. Failure could mean—but the world was more concerned with the progress of the battle this week. Speculation over a German victory was tomorrow's worry.

In Russia, it was still Stalingrad—still a story of unrelenting German attacks, of huge piles of German dead—of one street or one shattered city block wrested from the dogged, determined, well-disciplined Red Army, that gave a bit here and there, but counter-attacked so well that the German were constantly harried on their flanks. The Russian ranks remained intact as did their ability to destroy invading infantry, tanks and planes.

Wendell Willkie, who was President Roosevelt's emissary on a recent round-the-world junket, unburdened himself to his fellow Americans Monday night after previously reporting in confidence to FDR. Willkie, always an outspoken man, "pulled no punches." Debate on his talk still raged Wednesday and Thursday.

Said Willkie in brief:

. . . "Military experts as well as our leaders, must be constantly exposed to democracy's greatest, driving power — the whip-lash of public opinion, developed from honest, free discussion . . ."

". . . we and our allies must establish a second fighting front in Europe . . . and if we continue to fail to deliver to our Allies what they are entitled to expect of us or what we have promised them, our reservoir of good-will will turn into one of resentment." He added that failure to define our war aims was also losing friends for us and that this and other policies was "punching holes" in our reservoir of good will among allied nations. A good point he made was that to win the war

Major Will Is Promoted

New Provost Marshal Made Lt.-Colonel

Major Clarence A. Will, Fort Benning provost marshal and permanent field officer of the day, has been promoted to lieutenant-colonel according to an announcement received at post headquarters.

Formerly commander of headquarters detachment, Lt. Colonel Will was just recently appointed provost marshal. He has been very active in the salvage and scrap metal campaign on the post.

Prior to coming into the army Lt. Colonel Will serveday patrol inspector with the U. S. Customs Service for 11 years.

The colonel is a former resident of Miami, Fla., and has been on active duty since January 15, 1941.

"Cash-Carry" Policy at PX Next Monday

Grocery Purchases Can be Charged to Prior Cash Deposit

Plans for placing the new "cash and carry" policy into effect at the post commissary and all exchange activities on Nov. 1 were disclosed yesterday by Fort Benning authorities following meetings of the Post Exchange Councils and several conferences among other post officials.

Under War Department orders to eliminate credit wherever possible on all Army posts, cash policies will go into effect Monday morning for military personnel and their families who trade at the commissary, the exchange grocery and other post activities. To accommodate Fort Benning personnel, however, the policies have been tempered to some extent by revamping purchase systems at the commissary and the exchange grocery.

Maj. H. E. McGaffey, exchange officer, outlined a new plan for purchases at the exchange grocery under which voluntary cash deposits will be accepted and deliveries made to the homes of families making deposits until the amount of cash deposited has been exhausted.

Second phase of the new exchange plan is that agencies such as laundrymen, tailors, cleaners, and barbers must in the future be authorized by the company commander in whose area they operate. If the agencies are authorized, the exchange will accept coupons from them. The coupons will be distributed to the soldiers through organizations. Only agencies authorized by company commanders will be able to have coupons redeemed, Major McGaffey pointed out.

It will be a "cash or coupons" policy at the main exchange, the garage, the barber shop and all of the other exchange activities on the post after Nov. 1. The coupons will be on sale for cash at the main exchange or the post exchange office.

Col. Stephen B. Massey, post quartermaster, said that after the close of business Oct. 31 it will be strictly "cash and carry" at the post commissary. Delivery of groceries from the commissary to post homes will be discontinued. Ice will still be delivered and may be paid for with ice tickets and charge accounts at the post laundry will still be maintained as will credit for electric current. All other business will be cash, Colonel Massey said.

Those making purchases at the commissary must present proper identification. All credit cards will be turned in and exchanged for cash identification cards. Identification cards will not be required for officers in uniform, but will be for members of their family. Enlisted men who are married will be issued purchase identification cards which will be used by the men and dependent members of his family.

Dependent families of military personnel who are not carried on the rolls of organizations at Fort Benning may secure identification cards by presenting a written request approved by the post commander.

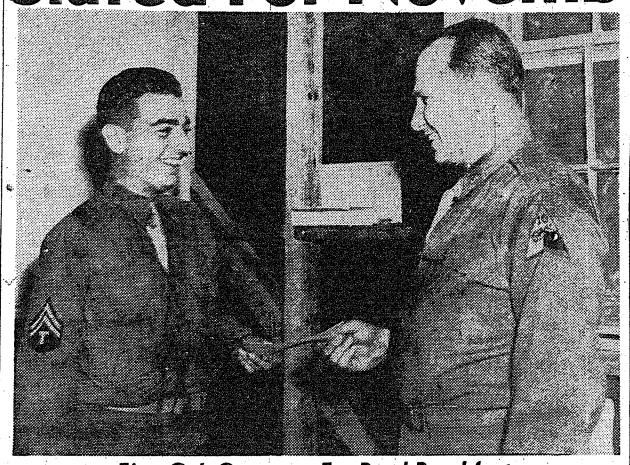
The Officers' Club will also go on a cash basis, Lt. Col. Karl Thornburg, club secretary, has announced. Coupon books may be purchased for cash, it was explained.

Gen. Fulton Urges Letters To 18-Year-Olds

An urgent request is again voiced by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, that all soldiers of the post write again and again to their male friends 18 and 19 years of age asking them to enlist for service with the Army.

Gen. Fulton stated that the nation's need for men of these ages cannot be overemphasized. He added that those boys who enlist instead of awaiting the draft will have decided advantages in the selection of the branch of service in which they desire to serve.

Recently Oct 14-18 was designated as a period during which Fort Benning would concentrate in urging immediate enlistments by teen-age boys. Fort Benning personnel staged a parade in down-town Columbus in observance of the period.



Tiger PRO Scooped On Own Promotion Story

Maybe absence does make the heart grow fonder.

Anway, it's a possibility says Lt. Henry L. Winkler, public relations officer for the 10th Armored Division at Fort Benning.

Lieut. Winkler left for Brooklyn, N. Y., on a well-earned leave last week and a few days after his departure came War Department word of his promotion from second lieutenant to first lieutenant.

War Bond Breakfast Is Slated For November 15

First G. I. Customer For Bond Breakfast

The first enlisted man at Fort Benning to purchase a war bond and a ticket to the War Bond Breakfast slated for 9 a. m., Sunday, November 15 was Cpl. Richard Alpert, Chicago, Ill., assigned to division headquarters, Tenth Armored Division. He and Maj. Russell C. Hinote, special service officer for the Tigers, are shown as the check for the bond changes hands. (161st Signal Photographic Company Photo.)

Officers, Men Will Attend Big Function

Nationally Known Speaker Invited To Participate

Teasers have appeared in the Daily Bulletin. Questions have been asked. What is to take place Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, Nov. 15?

The answer is that at that time Fort Benning will be the first army post to hold an all-army War Bond breakfast, according to Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger Jr., post adjutant and chairman of the affair. The affair is scheduled for the Post Gymnasium, served by the Officers club.

Still hanging in the fire and of possible national interest is the announcement of the name of an internationally known figure as speaker for the breakfast, but regardless of that, according to the chairman, precedent shattering history will be made as it is expected that all personnel, enlisted as well as officers, will combine to make this breakfast a mark for all other posts to try to duplicate.

Civilians have conducted similar ventures with great success, but this will be the first breakfast in the nation to be sponsored solely by military personnel. Considering that the majority of the bonds will be purchased by individuals, the quota which has been set at $30,000 is an ambitious one.

600 EXPECTED

However, the breakfast has the endorsement of the commanding officer of every unit on the post, and all are planning to participate personally. Present estimates point to a crowd of about 600.

Both officers and enlisted men and their families are invited to attend. The rules for admission will be the same. The purchase of one War Bond, will entitle that person to buy a fifty cent ticket to the breakfast. Men who bring their families must buy a separate bond and breakfast ticket for each member.

Since company funds may be used for investment in War Bonds, all organizations are urged to help the breakfast drive by purchasing a bond and selecting a soldier to represent the unit at the occasion.

Bonds can be purchased from the unit War Bond officers, or from booths set up in the different officer's clubs and service clubs. Here money will be taken and receipts given, so that the bonds may be delivered at the breakfast or mailed directly to the individual.

ALL BENNING INVITED

Bonds may also be purchased at the breakfast itself. However, only persons purchasing bonds from one of the authorized agencies, and having them properly receipted, will be sold tickets to the affair.

All Fort Bennnig is urged to come out and make this breakfast a tremendous success. Being the largest and most complete army post in the nation, Fort Benning wants to give any post that may take up the idea something to shoot at.

3rd STR Officer Candidate Can Boast Colorful Career

Was Coxswain, Tennis Champ, Lecturer, Hollywood Stuntster

A bunch of the boys were sitting around blowing the suds off their lemonade when the talk swung to places seen and deeds accomplished. Without swagger, in a carefully modulated tone, a voice broke in to the conversation with mention of such places as Chile, Spain and Switzerland. That, brothers, was Candidate Rene Alexander Russaq, student in the Third Student Training Regiment here at the Infantry Officers' School.

During his 30-year glorified Cooks Tour, beginning with being born in Buenos Aires, Dussaq has been linguist-traveler, coxswain of an Olympic rowing team, Cuban tennis champ and internationally-known swimmer and Hollywood stuntman.

After a high school education in Geneva, Switzerland, he moved into the famed "Grand College de Genevee" and graduated with a B. A. degree while the 18 candles on his birthday cake were still burning.

WORLD TRAVELER

It was about this time that he really became earnest about his traveling. He journeyed through France and spain and finally took a short break into Cuba. Came the revolution and Dussaq made for California via Panama-way.

The next chapter in this saga falls in Hollywood. It was here that he became a stuntman, later a technical director for Warner Brothers South American pictures. As a stunt man he walked the wings of flying planes, parachuted, fell off horses and wound up falling 400 feet in an automobile. He likes St. Vincent's hospital.

Deep-sea diving came next and a hitch with Captain John D. Craig making under-sea moving pictures. Waldo Logan, Chicago financier, contacted the well-traveled Rene and gave him the neat assignment of handling an expedition to Mona island in the Carribbean sea.

LECTURER

When the expedition was over, Dussaq made for South America to gather lecture material, returned to the States and began a series of travel-adventure talks. All of this was cut short when he volunteered for duty with a parachute outfit and landed in Camp Croft, S. C., early last spring. Eventually he elbowed the lines of becoming an infantry officer and won his appointment to the Infantry school.

He is now pursuing a vigorous three-months course learning the methods and weapons of modern warfare which upon successful completion will give him a commission of second lieutenant in the army of the United States.

That brings the story up to the present, and Candidate Dussaq admits that the near-future may over shadow his colorful years as a fellow who has really been around.

'Bayonet' Is Delivered Free

The BAYONET has been advised from various sources that mistresses of households on the reservation proper and in Baker Village who have had the BAYONET delivered to their doorsteps weekly since the paper was founded are expecting the newsboy to drop by to collect. The editors desire to reiterate that the BAYONET is absolutely free to all military personnel on the post and in Baker Village.

The free delivery is made possible by the cooperation of the Ledger-Enquirer papers, and the 39 merchants of Columbus who contribute to the financial support of the BAYONET with paid advertising.

We have been advised that the price of the paper published on the mast-head is responsible for this erroneous belief. The price is published for the benefit of civilians in down-town Columbus who have been purchasing copies from news stands and news boys. There is no charge to military personnel.

Incidently, we would like to notify those officers who have been leaving five cents on top of the stack of BAYONETS left each week at the Officers' Club that their contributions have been turned over to the Benning Day Nursery and that toys have been purchased for the tots with this money. However, we repeat that the BAYONET is free at the Officers' Club and is being distributed there for the enjoyment and edification of officers patronizing that organization.

Zip--Click--Scrape--Right! G. I. Haircut!

A Topeka, Kansas, barber is handing out business cards with this slogan:

"Servicemen's Barber Shop; Army Haircuts Repaired."

Now the average soldier will say that it's not possible to "repair" an Army haircut, because after post barbers get through there's never anything to repair.

But it's not quite that bad. Not quite.

There's this to be said for those dispensers of the "Haircut, G. I." They're fast. They're so fast that even while the soldier walks slowly away from the chair, passing his fingers through the "hair that wasn't there," he's so awed by the lightning-like work of the barber that he forgets how he looks—although from instinct he never glances in the mirrors around the barber shop.

The close-cropped haircut termed the "G. I. Haircut" is basically sound because the Army wants no unkempt-looking soldiers, or no long hair falling into the bolts of rifles "Daniel Boone" style.

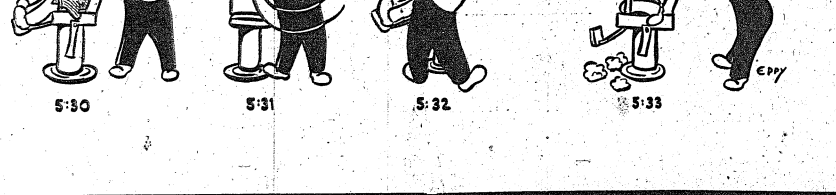
IT'S A MESS

It isn't that that gets the guys—it's the variations of the "close-shave" haircut that causes the just-barbered soldier to slink through back streets and to provoke whistles, catcalls, and jeers when he makes a hesitant appearance at mess, as a "mess."

You see, it's the old story. Barbers working in an Army post are surrounded by potential customers—in fact they're swamped by them. The crowds in most Army barbershops—especially around payday and at the end of the week—would be a dream to the average small-town civilian barber, but they are a nightmare to your Army barber, who never gets to say "next" because a new customer gets in the chair so fast, once it's vacated that the barber never even bothers to remove the apron—the new man slides under from one side just as the barbered man goes out the other side.

A spokesman for Fort Benning barbers came to their defense this week when questioned about their methods of cutting hair in ten minutes that would take their civilian contemporaries at least half an hour.

SPEED-KINGS



"My men are speed-kings. They have to be or they couldn't accomplish what they do in a day. We haven't got time to dally around. We try an dgive the man what he wants. Many times he doesn't know what he wants, neither do we—so we just cut his hair. If we cut it short, as your questions imply, we are cutting our throats in a way, because it'll take longer for it to grow back in."

"That isn't much of an excuse though, is it?" he added, with a weak laugh. Very weak.

Soldiers at Fort Eustis, Va., determined recently to discover the real secret of the "G. I. Haircut" but even their exhaustive—and exhausting investigation—failed to disclose the formula of the Army "clip-joints."

They quoted the chief of post exchange barbers there as declar-

Sherman Brothers Are Proving To Enemies That War Is Hell

Lt. Col. Frank J. Sherman, instructor in tactics in the Infantry School, is a brother of Capt. Forrest P. Sherman, commander of the U. S. aircraft carrier Wasp, sunk by a Jap submarine Sept. 15 off Guadalcanal. Col. Sherman is one of six brothers, known in their home town of Melrose, Mass., as "the fighting Shermans". All of them are serving in the armed forces of the United States.

Colonel Sherman listed his fighting brothers as follows:

Captain Frank, Wasp skipper; Lt. Col. Paul D. Sherman, U. S. Marine Corps; Captain Edward A. Sherman, in the Army; and Lt. Kenneth L. Sherman and Lt. (jg) Ernest L. Sherman, in the Navy.

The spirit of the "fighting Shermans" is reflected in the remark Frank J. Sherman, father of the war-minded sextet, made to reporters when informed of the sinking of the Wasp.

"We're not worried about Forrest," was the terse comment of the father.

Colonel Sherman said that, while he did not know of the sinking of the Wasp until the Navy announcement, he did know that his brother was no longer on the vessel.

Having been called to active duty from a reserve status in September, 1940, Colonel Sherman has been at Benning as an instructor since February 10. However, previously he was at the Infantry School as a student. He was promoted to lieutenant colonel from major on September 18.

A native of Melrose, Captain Forrest Sherman attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology for a year before winning appointment to Annapolis. He was top man in his class, which was graduated in 1917 a year ahead of schedule because of World War I.

During that conflict, he served in European waters, being assigned to duty at Gibraltar for the greater part of the time.

Following the Armistice, he became interested in naval aviation and won his wings at Pensacola, Fla. in 1922.

He was a naval flight instructor for a time, and then was assigned to sea duty on the carriers Lexington and Saratoga. In June of this year he was placed in command of the Wasp.

Captain Sherman's wife and their daughter, Ann, 18, reside in Washington, D. C.

Captain Yeh Studies Tactics At Benning

Captain E. Tsung Yeh, a Chinese Army officer, has been assigned to the 29th Infantry as an observer. While here he will probably take a course in tactics at The Infantry School.

Captain Yeh has been in this country for two months and expects to remain anywhere from one to three years. He is a graduate of the Chinese Central Military Academy which is very similar to our West Point.

The Chinese officer says that his countrymen are very intent upon fashioning themselves after the American way of life because all the men, women and children in China consider the Americans their best friends. They believe that through our efforts in supplying China with the necessary materials for war, China will eventually kick out the Japs.

Captain Yeh says the Chinese are much better trained and equipped than formerly. They have been trained the hard way and now it is paying dividends. He maintains that the Chinese will never turn toward imperialism. They are peace-loving people who will return to a peaceful way of life in conjunction with the United States and our Allies after the war is over.

Winners in the BAYONET'S original contribution contest for last week are Tech. Sgt. W. D. Smith of the Detachment, Medical Department, Station Hospital, for his essay "Power of Prayer"; Pvt. James E. Andrews, Hq. company, Reception Center, for his verse "We Shall Not Die"; and Lt. Michael Bach, 3rd Student Training Regiment, for his cartoon on Army lines. You're doing swell, fellas, so keep it rolling. We still need essays, and just a little suggestion. Thanksgiving Christmas, and New Year's Day are coming up fast. How about some dignified cartoons, tying up these holidays with the Army and Fort Benning. If you turn in good ones, you may get the prizes.

Gen. Fulton Lauds Navy

29th Band, R. C. Chorus Help Observe Navy Day Oct. 27

The American Navy was highly lauded by Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, in a Navy Day broadcast from the Army-Navy USO Club in Columbus Tuesday night. Gen. Fulton represented the Army in the Navy Day observance by Columbus which featured an address by Lt. Commander Edwin Phillips, commandant of naval training at Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Declaring that we have a navy more efficient, more determined, and more ardent than any other navy in the world, Gen. Fulton traced briefly the history of the navy and some of its accomplishments and expressed the belief that in the battles which are ahead, our sea-arm would continue to deliver the goods.

Lt. Commander Phillips asserted that this Navy Day is one on which we can rededicate our best efforts to the common cause as we pay homage to the brave men of our fleet who are taking the fight to the enemy.

The speakers were introduced by Mayor Edward Murrah of Columbus. The program broadcast over WRBL also featured a medley and other selections by the 29th Infantry Band under the direction of Chief Warrant Officer Albert Andrews, and the Reception Center Chorus with Cpl. Willis Brown directing rendered several vocal selections.

Fort Officer Candidate Has Had War Experience

Knocked Unconscious As Japs Sink Moved-Up Vessel

When the 8th Co. of the 1st Student Training Regiment, lined up for its first inspection, the inspecting officer paused in front of a candidate who was wearing civilian shoes.

"Where," he demanded, "are your regulation shoes?"

"I don't have any, Sir."

"Why, not?"

"The ship I was on, Sir, was torpedoed and I lost all my equipment . . ."

ROYALTY HONOR GUARD

The soldier was Candidate Karl N. Riewe, fresh from the Army Transport Service on duty around Hawaii, Oahu, Fiji and points throughout the Southern Pacific.

Candidate Riewe, who comes from the farm country of northern Wisconsin has been a soldier in the regular Army since December 1936. Joining the Army from the National Guard, he was assigned at that time to Fort Sheridan, Illinois. On three occasions, during the visit of King George of England to Chicago, and during the visits of Crown Prince Olaf of Norway, and King Gustavus Adophus of Sweden, he was chosen to serve on a special guard-of-honor.

SHIP TORPEDOED

The outbreak of war found him in the Transport Service assigned to duty convoying American soldiers to the man ytheatres of action from Australia to Hawaii. On his last trip, the convoy on which he served, was moored three and one-half miles from its destination, a small island off the coast of Australia. Candidate Riewe was writing a report at about 6 o'clock in the evening when suddenly he experienced first a lifting and then a falling sensation, accompanied by an intense heat. Forty-four hours later he was picked up unconscious by an offshore patrol, having spent the intervening time in a life preserver hanging onto a mass of floating debris.

STRAFFED BY JAPS

So great had been the force of the explosion, that Candidate Riewe remembers only vaguely the events between the time the torpedoeing occurred and the rescue almost two days later. He did not regain full consciousness until he was brought ashore and treated at an American base hospital on the island. On the island, he had his first taste of battle. They were repeatedly straffed by Japanese aircraft, and the American forces there fought repeated engagements with Japanese landing parties.

When he returned to the United States, on board a vessel in the service of the Army Transport, he was assigned briefly to the Coast Artillery. From there he was assigned to the Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning.

Merchant Marine Aid In Peace-Time is Urged

Seamen's Institute Director Is Chapel Speaker

With more and more importance being placed on sea transport as the key to ultimate victory in the war, work of the Seamen's Church Institute of New York, established for the men of the merchant marine, is becoming ever more important, Dr. Harold H. Kelley, director of the Institute, said Sunday at Fort Benning. Dr. Kelley was guest speaker at Chapel services at the Main Chapel.

Dr. Kelley paid a brief visit to his brother, Col. Reginald H. Kelley, head of the reclassification center at the Post, as he was returning from the West to New York, and was invited to speak at Sunday services.

"The Seamen's Church Institute was founded in 1834, and provides a home for merchant seamen, supplying hundreds of services in its modern 13-story building," he said. "Thousands of sailors make it their headquarters while in New York between shipping. There are recreational facilities including a large auditorium with stage and projection room where films are shown three times each week; club rooms and other facilities for younger men now being recruited to rtraining.

MAINTAIN SCHOOL

"There, also, is maintained a merchant marine school to prepare men in the fundamentals of merchant marine work and also to prepare them for officers' berths. Classes are given for Naval and Coast Guard reserves both in navigation and in avigation, the science of aerial navigation.

"A complete clinic also is maintained, as well as a chapel for all faiths; check room facilities, a large postal branch, and other facilities.

"The war has put a great strain on the facilities of the Institute. We now sleep 1,400 men each night. The Government makes it headquarters for newly-trained men and recently we have given rooms to the Dutch seamen, the Belgian, and still more recently to the British Merchant Navy men," Dr. Kelley asserted.

"A social service is maintained which is of tremendous value to the sailors. There they can arrange temporary emergency loans, for instance. And a Seamen's Fund bureau to allow men to deposit funds for safekeeping is so popular that now we must maintain 5 men to visit ships to collect money for safeguarding. We have banked $3,000,000 so far this year for sailors.

KEEP 'EM SAILING

"The seamen are determined to keep 'em sailing. We have had men who have been torpedoed three or four times and we have cared for the crews of more than 70 torpedoed ships. We maintain emergency gear and clothing for them and not a one of them has left the sea even after some terrible experiences.

"I believe that the American public at last is awakening to the value and the need for maintaining our merchant marine. We hope that after the war the merchant marine service will continue to be supported and maintained. Its importance in time of peace will be just as important as in time of war and right now it is of tremendously vital importance to this country and to the fighting."

The entire cause for which we are all

ing he, himself, was awed by the technique of his men. He did reveal the reason why post exchange barbers have violated all rules of international barbering and do not, as a rule, engage their customers in conversation. He said the barbers work on a commission basis so the more they cut, the more pay they make. Thus the high-peed "clipper-lines."

Of course in the "war" on soldiers' noggins, the clipper is the No. 1 offensive weapon. Said the Fort Eustis chief barber in explaining the development of those tonsorial masterpieces:

"Naturally the clippers are used a great deal because they take off more hair. Civilian barbers do the same thing with scissors, but they have more time at their disposal."

HAIR-KREIGS

It's amazing to some, but easily explained with a little thought, why soldiers repeatedly come back for more. Time and time again, they'll steal a glance in the mirror the night after one of the "hairkreigs" and vow "never again." But time—and the wish of the company commander that every man looks neat at all times—go on endlessly and one fine day, your G. I. again sidles in the side door of the barber shop, reads some old papers for a while and finally climbs into the chair—and the waiting arms of the barber. Often he mumbles something about a "little off the top," but "not much" and again the gleeful clipper is left to his own devices—and again the G. I. stumbles out of the job, wondering how on earth a pair of clippers and scissors can move so fast, so far, so quickly.

80 Per Cent of Air Accidents Are Caused By Carelessness

Most Flying Mishaps Occur On Ground, Survey by Coronet Indicates

Eighty per cent of all military flying accidents are due to the carelessness of flying personnel. This is what the United States Army Air Forces have discovered, reports November issue of Coronet magazine. What's more, only 30 per cent of those accidents occur in the air. Concerned with the increasing ratio of training accidents, the Army Air Forces have sifted clues and found that most accidents are due to pilot error in take-off and landings, when a young pilot, filled with the urgency of his new wings, forgets the rules of basic flying safety.

With the thought that these careless pilot is flying for the Axis, the Army Air Forces have appointed Colonel Samuel E. Harris Director of Flying Safety. To see that the safest military flying organization in the world doesn't lose the safety record hung up by its pilots, the U. S. A. A. F., Colonel Harris and his ten hand-picked regional chiefs, all specialists in analyzing accidents and expert in determing cause and effect, have rolled up their sleeves and gone to work to find the cracks in crack-ups, says Coronet.

The experts say that most accidents in which men and planes are lost can be traced to the violation of ground school rules—forgotten in that split second when a pilot is faced with his first emergency in a powerful plane.

THE PRIME CAUSES

In addition to the extra-careful routine of flying safety, Colonel Harris has added features of his own, including testimonials by men who have narrowly escaped crashing and death. It is estimated that the accidents most responsible for sending men and planes zooming to earth are:

Taking off on wrong runway;
Failure to allow time for landing wheels to lock;
Landing with wheels up;
Failure to check gas supply before take-off;
Taking off without instructions from control tower;
Hedge-hopping;
Overshooting field;
Undershooting field;
Failure to fasten safety belt;
Colliding on runways through failure to observe incoming planes;
Careless switching of gas tanks in flight;
Ignoring wind direction and velocity;
Excessive use of brakes on landing;
Forgetting to check throttle on landing;
Improper use of wing flaps;
Ignoring weather reports.

Colonel Harris and the Army Air Forces are well aware of the problem that face them. Inspired by the deeds of Colin Kelly, the Flying Tigers and Butch O'Hare, their pilots are all set to spring from ground school to Tokyo in seven months, but the transition from slow trainers to fast pursuits requires a strong grip on the seat of a young pilot's pants! That's why Colonel Harris is determined that if planes and men must crash, they crash over fighting territory and that the loss of many enemy planes be the result of the flight into the earth.

"There are," says Colonel Harris, "old pilots and bold pilots. There aren't any old, bold pilots."

Soldier Pay After War Provided in Senate Bill

Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D-Colo.) introduced a bill in the senate last week calling for the continuation of pay to soldiers, sailors and marines for a period of six months after the end of the war.

It is the first "soldier bonus" bill for veterans of World War II and is designed to ease the shock of return to civilian life for millions of service men.

Under the terms of the bill the six months' pay period would start after discharge from the service following official end of war. It would be granted only to those who served 90 days or more.

"The purpose of the measure is to aid in rehabilitating men who may find themselves without jobs when they leave the Army after the war," Senator Johnson explained. "I call it rehabilitation pay."

He said the legislation is favored by the American Legion, veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans, and other patriotic organizations.

Text of the bill follows:

A bill to continue the pay of all persons serving in the armed forces of the United States for six months after the termination of the present conflict.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the pay exclusive of allowances, of all persons in the armed forces of the United States on or after December 7, 1941, and at the date of the termination of the present conflict, unless previously honorably discharged, and who shall have served at least ninety-days, shall be continued for a period of six months from the date of their honorable discharge, separation, release from active service, during which six month's period such persons shall be members of the reserve forces: Provided, that in no event shall the monthly pay of any such persons, during the six months period, exceed $200 unless recalled for active service: Provided further, that within the monthly pay limitation imposed herein, the increased percentage in pay allowed for foreign service shall apply where any such service is shown.

OFFICERS PROMOTED

Promotion of First Lieutenants Charles Wilson and Estil O. McBride, both of the 423rd Field Artillery Battalion, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, to captains has been announced. Captain Wilson is Battalion Motor Officer, and Captain McBride is on detached service at the Battery Officers school at Fort Sill, Okla. Promotion of Second Lieutenant Robert W. Brown, commanding officer of Battery A, to first lieutenant was reported at the same time.

Fort Top-Kicks To See Royal Pic On The House

All army top-kicks of Fort Benning and vicinity have been extended a cordial invitation to view the picture, "Top Sergeants", starring Leo Carrillo, Andy Devine, Don Terry and Elyse Knox, playing at the Royal Theatre in Columbus Friday and Saturday. The sole price of admission is the chevrons on the doughboy's sleeves, Manager Victor Smith announces.

The main plot deals with the action taken by the Army when an underworld character cloaks himself with an Army uniform to serve as a perfect hideout for a murder.

Carillo and Devine are a couple of non-coms who are constantly busted for playing hide-and-seek with Army regulations. Don Terry plays the role of the hard-boiled top-kick, while the love interest is furnished by Miss Knox, favorite magazine cover-girl.

Mr. Smith urges all soldiers to see this picture. Remember, if you are a top-sergeant, come on down and have one on the house.

Lawson Bomb Sight

PFC. P. J. HOPKINS

"Lead in the pants"—meaning lead in the pants of Japs has been the policy at Lawson Field during the past week. An intensified campaign for the collection of scrap metal, directed by Lt. Victor B. Stonecipher got underway.

Today, practice targets, tomorrow Nazi Messerschmitts or Jap Zeros. That's the way the pilots of the Seventh Observation Squadron had it figured out when they returned from a week spent in brushing up on their marksmanship. Five of them: Captains Walters and Dickson and Lieutenants Bennett, Verket and Pitkin returned to Lawson Field enthusiastic over the progress they had made and confident of their ability to hold their own against the foe they will someday meet in combat. The primary reason for their trip, a trip to be made by all the pilots in the Seventh, was to refresh them on the all important jobs of ground strafing and aerial gunnery. An equal amount of time was spent on each phase of this important work.

It is a normal day in the Army when a private chauffeur's the Commanding Officer. But like the man biting the dog it is really news when the Base Commander is the chauffeur's chauffeur. Such was the experience of Pvt. A. Caroprese, driver to Major John E. Albert, Commanding Officer of Lawson Field. The Major upon learning that Pvt. Caropress had never been aloft, promptly ordered him to drive to the line where the Major ordered his plane prepared for take off. Pvt. Caropress then experienced the thrill of his lifetime when he skimmed through the clouds with the Major at the controls.

the nation must know as much about it as possible, subject only to the needs of military security.

Another noted man had something to say on the conduct of the war a few days ago. He was Hanson W. Baldwin, military editor of the New York Times, who recently returned from a trip which brought him to Fort Benning for a look at the infantry training and eventually landed him in the Solomon Islands.

Writing in the Times, Baldwin expressed the opinion the U. S. will keep the Solomon Islands if the "mistakes" made in August and September are not repeated. Baldwin, noted as a keen analyst, went on to say that the preliminary operations in the Solomon started "brilliantly" but that heavy losses were caused by "mistakes" and that the three U. S. cruisers sunk by the Jap Navy were surprised "like sitting ducks." He mentioned as an encouraging sign, the "invigorated leadership and offensive spirit" in the battle areas.

Of New Guinea, Australians continued to push toward Jap bases on the northern side of the Owen Stanley Mountain range. The Japs bombed Port Moresby, the Allied base, and the Allied Nations responded by bombing several Jap bases in the area. Italian cities were subjected to several air-raids and subsequent bombings and Axis attacks on Malta continued without letup.

In America, man-power continued to be a vitally-important topic with debate in the 18 and 19-year old draft bill continuing and the Army considering "furloughing" older service men providing they return to jobs in essential war industries. The 18- and 19-year old draft bill's passage seemed likely in a few days despite a number of amendments offered on the bill. Sen. Thomas introduced an amendment requiring the Army to give at least one year's training to men under 20 before sending them into combat service. There was national controversy over a proposal by Senator Lee that officials prohibit the sale of liquor near Army camps in order to safeguard the interests of the younger men coming into the service.

Washington was working to keep essential men on the farms of the nation to insure a supply of milk, vegetables and other vitally-needed staples.

Eddie Rickenbacker, noted World War ace, and a number of Army men are presumed lost on a flight in the Pacific area. Inasmuch as many fliers have been rescued from rubber emergency boats even after drifting for weeks, a little hope remains that Rickenbacker may be yet saved. Says Columnist J. R. Covert in the Philadelphia Bulletin:

"It has been a strain on the eyes and pride too to observe the generally sloppy appearance of privates, non-coms, and many, many officers in the jumper and slacks outfit worn during the hot months."

As a part of the training of medical soldiers, the Army disclosed facts about a special "chamber of horrors" at Fort Meade where wax and synthetic rubber creations are used to demonstrate the full horror of war.

Reports from Seattle, Wash., are that the city's 12 Selective Service Boards have stopped inducting married men into the Army. "We are reliably informed great pools of single men still exist in New York, Chicago, Detroit and other congested areas and that no thought has been given to the induction of married men in those cities nor is such a step likely to come for many months," says the board chairman.

Lawson Pilot Fatally Burned In Accident

Lt. Burke Had Just Been Named Operations Officer

First Lt. Thomas J. Burke, 26, operations officer for Lawson Field, died last Friday morning in Station Hospital, from burns sustained in a plane landing accident at Lawson Field the preceding night. Lt. Oswald K. Marquardt, post war bond officer, was also burned, but will recover.

Lt. Burke, just last week assigned to his new duties at Lawson Field, piloted the plane which had flown Lt. Marquardt to Birmingham and back where the latter had gone in connection with the war bond drive on the post. Ironically, Lt. Burke's picture and a story about his being named officer of the week were in proof for publication in Lawson Field's official paper "Tail-Skid."

Lt. Burke was the son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Burke of Dorchester, Mass. He took his basic flight training at Randolph Field and his advanced training at Brooks Field. He was assigned to Fort Benning in May 1942 and was promoted to first lieutenant just four weeks ago. He is a graduate of the famous Boston Latin School, and before being inducted into the Army was a statistical clerk for the State of Massachusetts.

If you have to enter a building and suspect a door trap, open the door with a long pole from a sheltered position. Be careful after you get in because there may be a second trap which will explode when you close the door.

Correction

A story published in last week's BAYONET concerning the rescue from a blazing house of six small negro children by a Fort Benning MP erroneously stated that Private F. March was colored. The editors of the BAYONET regret the error and take this means of correcting the statement.

Private March was on duty as traffic officer on a road about six miles from Phenix City when he discovered the home on fire. He pushed his way into the house to lead and carry out the six children who had been left at home while their parents were at work. Private March suffered slight burns on his face in effecting the rescue.

He is from Monterey, Calif., and has been in the army seven months. Before induction he was in the show business.

NED DAY BOWS

Although generally conceded to be one of the best bowlers at Chanute Field, Ill., Cadet Norman Hanson would not be expected to beat world champion Ned Day. Hanson did just that, however, when he rang up the high three line total of 633 in leading the Chanute team to a brilliant victory over a highly touted civilian all-star aggregation in a benefit match held at Chicago recently. Day, who was bowling on another of the all-star fives in the same series of matches, couldn't match Hanson's score!

Emerson Is Made Major

Hospital Adjutant Rose From Ranks

Captain Donahue Emerson, one of Benning's old-line former regular army master sergeants and adjutants of Station Hospital since November, 1940, has been promoted to the rank of major, it was announced Saturday.

Major Emerson enlisted in the Army as a private in October, 1919, and came up through the non-commissioned ranks to a master sergeant. In 1935 he entered upon active service as a commissioned officer under the reserve commission he had held since 1922. He was ordered to Fort Benning in 1936.

He is the father of three children, one of whom, Lt. William Emerson, is now in service at Camp Campbell, Ky., as an ordnance officer with the 12th Armored Division. He was recently commissioned a second lieutenant upon completion of officer training at the Ordnance School, Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md. His other children, Don 15, and Beatrice, 7, are residents of Fort Benning.

Horror Chamber Inures Medicos to War Wounds

Of interest to hospital units in training at Fort Benning is a story released this week from Fort George G. Meade, Md., drawing back the curtain on a "chamber of horrors" designed to prepare medical soldiers for grisly battlefield scenes.

The "chamber" consists of models of war wounds made of wax and synthetic rubber. The rubber creations are so constructed as to permit soldiers to don them, pulling them over their own heads, arms and legs, and lie on a simulated field of battle to await medical attention.

The picture which will present itself to medical units in training will include arms punctured by machine gun slugs, legs, torsos and skulls ripped by explosives and badly burned. It is so realistic that more than one recruit has exhibited a greenish tinge after the first look, but it is hoped that the exhibits will serve their purpose? That purpose is to give medical corps recruits steadiness and knowledge which one day may save American lives in the global war. It is the shock at first sight of such war casualties that the models, among other things, were designed to overcome.

The wax and rubber models will surplant photographs which were used because nothing better was available. The former will make it easier to get across to the men just what war wounds are like.

Chaplain Ritchie Joins 124th Regt.

Symphony Of Stoppages

We get up in the morning—just as locking begins. There is a glow at a reference point on the horizon and another class next door—only a foot away—just finishes falling out in, on its feet, and ultimately on its face for reveille. Wicked demonstration. We take a back azimuth and finally arrive at a sink (at least, it's something metallic) after hitting only two walls, one bench, and a closed door. After that, unlocking begins—but we collect our thoughts and live rounds and start assembling our brass. Why? To shave—to shave, with Fort Benning aqua velva (i. e., cold water); nothing like it, we muse, pulling the operating handle to the rear; nothing like it—in the dawn, cold and clammy; in the dawn, gray and grisly.

Then we lay our initial burst on our faces—with parryings, short and long thrusts; jabs and withdrawals. We relay on our final protective line, only to find it leads to a bunk, where there are dust and wrinkled blankets and loose packs and falling field manuals. Pursuant to orders, we advance (watching for aircraft) to the mess hall. . . . where a second-in-command arranges a seat near the floor show and close to the door. (All this to cover up the one ration cuisine.) Setting our sight leaves on our morning reports, we take up the collection sheet, and decide that First Sgt. Randy Brown has left his wife again. (Why is he rationing with the company, we ask—most judiciously—unless he has left his wife?) Taking cover and concealment with no regard to the distinction between the two. We long thrust with a fragmentation grenade (35 yard throw, 30 yard bursting radius), and get into the sitting position on top of the wall of a lovely, cream-puffed obstacle course. It is full of diabolism, full of the hazards of man (God and nature would not dare construct them). We more-than-simulate falling in. We fall. But there are 200,000 men of the 29th Infantry, standing by, ready to demonstrate a mode of coaxing a creek line to surrender. The Infantry School nursery assists—that is, the Geronimos, who float in their cradles, billowy, bubbly, and oblivious.

The first sergeant tells the company commander to post (by this time all is lost), and we are off, off the beam and everything else. We double time, to a right flank, to a left flank, to the rear. We at-ease into a building, where we have lunch in the field after three ten-minute breaks of eight minutes each. There are two minutes to go—and we suddenly find ourselves seated in a downpour on gorgeous Galloway range—surrounded by glistening glades of defilades. In the dazzling distance, buildings in the mode of Fort Benning colonial loom and leer. The architectural variation stuns us, as we stream-line the streams and Ridge-line the ridges.

We float to the point of entrucking (as you were—embarkation) and zero our dials. When we are in the proper throwing position, we stack arms, lock legs, and assume the prone position, being careful to break at least three bones to make sure we are in the school solution contortion. We detruck (as you were—disembark), with the first platoon on MY right, facing me, who am facing the trees, which are facing the right rear, which is facing the railroad tracks, going THAT way.' In cadence, we count the number of errors on the bayonet qualification course, and settle our TBA allotments (which do not include one cottage, dissasembled). We take visual aids to another chow, charting the colors of the items, as an aid to digestion. First aid follows, with blocks out, bolts forward, covers down. Live grenades fall and candidates scatter; parachute flares are shot down and candidates shatter. We turn in field manuels on mortars, and receive salvage sheets—we salvage our own salvage, and try to find something to salvage, we wonder about the 81 mortar. We go to study hall and G-T, with tetanus whirling; but we stick to demonstration, application, explanation, rationalization generalization, deterioration. We change a five in the club and get a coke. And so to bed (without Pepys) with the CQ on the IAP, initiated by the CO, indorsed by the CG, in accord with Circular XYZ, which rescinds, amonds, and changes all AR-s to date. Authority: We of the Infantry School.

Football And The War

While many army posts and other training centers are boasting about their football teams, Fort Benning—one of the nation's largest army posts—is boasting about the team it doesn't have.

For this huge military reservation does not have a team. It has six. And thereby hangs the tale.

Attending officer candidate school at the Infantry School for instance, are men who would make a team far beyond the average coach's dream. There are men who have played in every bowl in the country and whose names make football legendry, but these men are working for commissions and that means all-day work and study at night.

But recreation officials led by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, former head football coach at North Dakota State hit upon a plan which has met with every last soldier's approval.

Various units on the post organized teams and they are playing a round—robin "intra-mural" schedule. The result? From a recreational point of view, soldiers now can get to see as many as three crack games a week and that has meant about 30,000 spectators a week. Wholesome unit rivalry has been set up. Instead of a few boys playing there are now about 350 men actively playing the sport,. No time is lost from training. There are no problems of tying up transportation.

Also of particular interest to the soldiers who crowd Doughboy Stadium is the fact that all the games are, of course, free. Lights have been installed so that all games can be played at night or on Sundays so that they are open to all personnel and can be seen without taking time away from the busy full six-day training program.

To call the roll of former grid greats now working on Fort Benning's 200,000 acre "campus" would take columns. However, most coaches, for instance, could do all right with such men as Sam Bartholomew of Tennessee; Joe Routt of Texas A. and M.; Ermal Allen of Kentucky; Swede Swanson of Kansas State; Bob Friedlund of Michigan State; or Bernie Scherer of Nebraska. Grid luminaries from hundreds of colleges and from every section of the nation are now training for war, and training harder than they ever trained before.

The Red Cross And Cupid

For long the American Red Cross has been called the "greatest Mother of them all," but it assumed a new role recently here at Benning in which "Mother" became cupid for a day.

From Niagara Falls (and most appropriately too) there came a letter to the Red Cross headquarters here thanking officials for their assistance in bringing two young hearts together.

"Through your tireless effort and persistence," the correspondent wrote, "I got to see my fiance after not seeing him for almost eleven months. We only had five short hours together, but we managed to get married in that short time. So, I am very thankful that I was directed to the American Red Cross Headquarters, for if I had not gone there, I am sure I would not have been able to locate George."

All the world loves a lover, it has been said, and personally we are glad to see a cheerful note like this sounded through the gloom of war. The letter also goes to show the multifarious activities of the Red Cross. It is unnecessary to say that this organization deserves the whole-hearted cooperation of every Benning man and woman. When disaster falls, the Red Cross is the first there with assistance. It is also there to help in the little things of every day life. We can never know when we shall need the aid of the Red Cross in one way or another.

The Army Chews To Run

Every one here at Benning will remember the historical words of our late President Calvin Coolidge when he was approached on the subject of running for the Presidency back in 1928. "I do not choose to run", he asserted. Unlike President Coolidge, the Army chews to run, if you will forgive our yielding to the impulse to pun.

Many Benning soldiers visiting Columbus for the evening have probably wondered why they were unable to purchase their favorite package of chewing gum at this or that drug or grocery store. "We just can't get it," the clerks exclaim. We thought for the moment that transportation difficulties were responsible, but an Associated Press dispatch from New York now explains the enigma.

The Army is buying gum in quantities, principally for resale at overseas post exchanges, the Quartermaster Corps explained to the AP. It has also been included in Army emergency ration kits as a reliever of thirst, just as coaches have their athletes chew gum for the same reason.

"It is not a component of regular garrison rations," a quartermaster officer said, "but it is being tried in emergency rations and we want to make it available to men overseas. The Army feels it helps provide a relaxation of nervous tension and also gives some sugar to the body."

Chewing gum manufacturers say that in addition to the Army purchases, civilian demand for their product has risen, particularly among war workers.

"The present demand," said one major manufacturer, "is straining our manufacturing facilities to the limit while our raw materials have been severely restricted."

An official of another company said quota restrictions in the use of sugar and decreased supplies of raw materials had strained the output available to civilians. He said chicle and other raw materials formerly were received from the now Japanese-occupied East Indies or Singapore.

One chicle manufacturer, however, declared 'there isn't a shortage" of chicle, and said that unrestricted quantities of the gum base still were obtainable from Mexico and Central America.

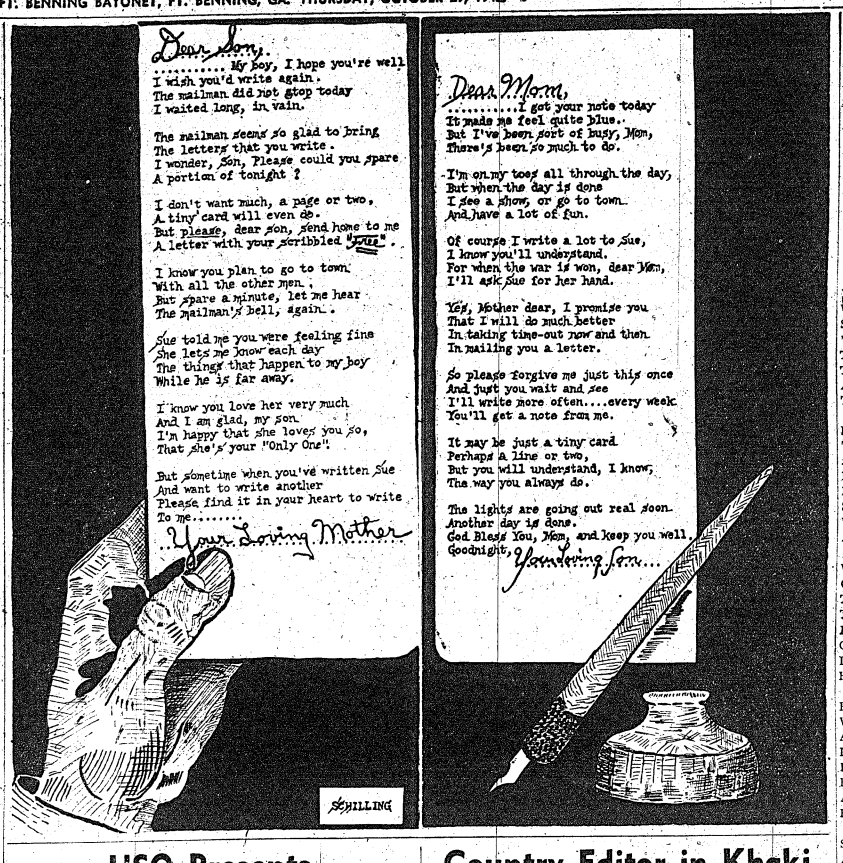
THE LONG AND SHORT OF IT



Short on rubber, short on gas,
America's not what she was!
Short on coffee, short on tea,
America, what will she be?

Long on courage, long on fight,
America toils through the night.
Long on spirit, long on men,
She'll rebuild the world again!

Aggressor nations were fired by ideas before they ever fired a shot. Nations which had no greater idea fell before them without ever firing a shot.

We must either face the future with self-sacrifice or leave our children to face the music.

Improvising and compromising are the parents of "too little" and "too late."

USO Presents

All those interested in basketball and wishing to enter a team in the USO league, which will be played on the court of the Ninth Street Club, should get busy at once. . . . Final arrangements for league organization is well under way. . . . Six teams have already entered, and the league schedule will be discussed and possibly set up at the next meeting, which will be held Tuesday night, Nov. 3, at 8:30. . . . It is not necessary that the team represent any military unit. . . . In fact, the desire of the basketball committee is to reach the basketball enthusiasts who, by nature of his work, or due to the great number of players in his unit, have been unable to make a regimental team. . . . Any group of not less than ten players can enter a team in the league if sufficient entries warrant it, the club proposes to set up a second league. . . . Anyone interested should communicate immediately with Mr. Edward Korn, associate director, and particularly attend the organization meeting set for Tuesday night, Nov. 3.

Have you had that recording of your voice made yet? If you haven't, you can get it done tonight by going to the Salvation Army-USO Club in Columbus and have it done free of any cost. . . . Talk your letter home instead of writing it. . . . The folks back home will appreciate having a recording of your voice so that they can let all the family hear that you are well and feeling fine. . . . Perhaps you will do the same as one soldier did. . . . During the recording of his voice he inserted a command to his dog to get him his slippers. . . . When the pooch heard this at home, he ran and got the slippers, bringing them back to the place the record was playing. . . . When the soldier heard about this in the next letter from home, he decided he would make a good officer. . . . He gave a command and thousands of miles away, it was carried out.

The State of Missouri will be saluted Sunday by the Ninth Street USO Club in the weekly Salute to the States program. . . . This should prove to be very interesting. . . . The "Show Me" This should prove to be very in to the citizens of Missouri to test their knowledge in the Quiz program to follow the 30-minute entertainment and will be based on facts dealing with the state directly.

Saturday at the SA-USO in Phenix City will see the first in a new series of motion pictures. . . . Every Saturday at 8:30 in the evening some well-known feature will be revived. . . . Some of these shows are so old that they have to be revived:

It is not the usual policy of this column to chatter about any club outside of those sponsored by the USO. . . . But, this time we are making an exception, due to the fact that soon it will be under the sponsorship of one of the various USO clubs in town. . . . This club is unique because it is to be formed of enlisted men who at one time belonged to an organization that is no longer at Fort Benning—the 1st Infantry Division. The rolls are open to anyone who at any time has been a member of the "Fighting First". . . . The first thing on the program for the new club is a general reunion, at which the plans for the club will be discussed and voted upon. . . . It is estimated that there are at least 200 men at Fort Benning who are eligible. . . . A record turnout is desired. . . . Send your name, present organization and past organization to Cpl. S. Kleindorf, Public Relations Office, Fort Benning. . . . You will then be notified as to where and when the reunion will be held.

On Friday night, Oct. 30, the USO club at 100 Ninth street, in association with the Columbus Community Chorus, will hold a reception for members of the Glee Club of the second Student Training Regiment. . . . This is the club of singers under the direction of Capt. John S. Greenfield, who have been singing at the Post Chapel.

An invitation is extended to all singers who are interested in attending this reception. . . . Mrs. J. C. Methvin, director of the Community Chorus, is preparing a group of songs to be presented, and the ladies of the Chorus are preparing the supper, which will be served buffet style.

Last Tuesday Columbus observed Navy Day at the USO-Army and Navy YMCA, when a special radio broadcast was put on in the patio. . . . Lt. Commander Edwin Philips, U. S. N., from Auburn, Ala., was the principal speaker and Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton represented the Army. . . . The mayor of Columbus and other distinguished guests were present. . . . During the program the 29th Infantry orchestra was broadcast along with special music by the Reception Center Chorus.

Strictly Backfence

BY EVE

The evolution of an army child is a strange and wonderful thing. The whispered news of its coming is much like any small community. Everyone is interested. There are showers before it is born, flowers at the hospital, cigars passed out by the proud father recovering from the strain of parenthood. Infancy proceeds with normal progress.

Distinction becomes noticeable around eighteen months to two years. They've learned to scream with a force that would drown the sound of a steam calliope. Neighbours are regretting their acceptance of quarters and thinking of mountain tops where peace and quiet reigns.

As the months pass they acquire friends and learn to roam the immediate neighborhood. They gather stumpy bouquets from the neighbors' gardens. She was saving them for the flower exhibit of the Woman's Club and won't speak to the mother for a while. The mother won't speak either, because she can't understand why any objection should be raised over a few measly flowers. The boys' mechanical instinct will direct them toward automobiles, where their childish hands can create damage calling for several hours repair work of an expert mechanic. Their toys are always left on the sidewalk for conscientous callers to stumble over.

Years pass and soon they are organizing opposing armies. Realistic guns are fashioned from T. C'd bits from the dump heap. Ah, the dump heap! What a wonderful place that is for the ingenuous one. Litter and hammering, absorption in construction problems fill the daylight hours. Stern and harsh orders are barked out to awkward recruits by an equally awkward general. Shabby mussette bags and dented canteens slung over the shoulders for the march. Soldiers they are seriously and completely for a wonderful month of make-believe.

They know the kitchens on the post where cookies are made. Persistent hunger pangs lead them to the back door of the mess hall. A grinning Mess Sergeant knows what to do about that. He likes the "old man's" kids. The girls are now forming important clubs. Secrets, giggles, diaries and surreptitious notes fill their life. The increasing interest in clothes is a disturbing discussion at all meals.

The gang spirit breaks up and they become conscious of each other. Then it's dates at the movies. Shy holding of hands and dancing to records at home on Saturday night. Parties, lots of parties for it's fun being young and having your first beau and girl on an army post.

Then suddenly high school is over and the serious business of life begins. All the awkwardness is gone. There's no nonsense if one is to get into West Point or Wellsley. Surprised friends who knew them during their savage years are confronted with poised and serious young folks.

Suddenly it dawns on one that all the experience of change and adjustment has made these rather special folks for tomorrow. They have never known the security of a home in one locality. They have found their adventures and pleasures with friends for the little while they remained at each station. Their adventures were wonderful and terrible to those who witnessed them, but admitted, part of the process that makes an special in a world of children.

These are nerve-wracking days in our company. We've just completed our ninth week, which is the traditional time for preliminary reckoning in officer candidate units.

Those who don't rate too high are called in for interviews with company and battalion officials, at which time their shortcomings are discussed, and they're told to snap into it, or else.

Two main factors determine, whether or not we get our commissions — academic work and leadership abilty.

The academic standing depends on a series of 13 graded tests (G-T's), given over the period of the course, and also on individual performances of specific assignments.

The leadership factor is more difficult to evaluate and is based on what the company officers think of the candidate plus what the other candidates think of him. This latter is determined by having the candidates turn in ratings on the good and bad qualities of the other man living in their squad room. The officers then compare their own ratings with those of the men, and use the two to arrive at each candidate's individual rating. It is this rating that decides whether or not the candidate is called in for going-over at the present time.

So far, my name has been overlooked and I haven't been summoned yet, but every time a list of names is called out, my heart does a couple of ground-loops. And my laundry bill is going to be a bit higher from now on—I have to change my undershirt every day, because I'm constantly in a cold sweat from worry!

But even those of us who haven't been called in for interviews are still on a spot and will have to continue to watch our step. We don't want to trip and fall on our faces just before we reach the finish line.

* * *

So if there are a few more errors than usual in the column this week, you'll have to pardon them. It's not only hard to concentrate, but, also, it's very difficult to operate a typewriter while holding my thumbs!

* * *

And it's really a shame that my hair should be turning gray at such a tender age.

I hereby apologize to the citizens of the great state of, Georgia for the unkind remarks in this column a couple of months ago about their weather. I didn't like it so well in August, but for the past few weeks it's been so nice that all is forgiven. In fact, it's almost as nice as the Pacific Northwest in mid-summer—than which there is no greater compliment.

I've been reading an interesting little volume entitled "How the Jap Army Fights," and there's one part that was of especial interest to me:

A U. S. Army officer, serving as an observer with the Jap forces before the war, reports that while on maneuvers practically all the Jap soldiers were sent off on night patrols after a tough day. The American officer asked why the men weren't allowed to sleep, and a Jap officer explained: "That is not necessary. They already know how to sleep. They need training in how to stay awake."

Hope that passage eludes the alert eyes of our battalion officers, or it may give them some ideas!

DEAR AGNES . . .
By T. Thomas McGill

Although you do not want my love,
I am not one to weep,
I shall not lose on your account
One single wink of sleep.

My heart has learned to forget at once,
The cause of any sorrow,
The love I have for you to-day,
May vanish by to-morrow.

So if you think it wise to leave,
I shall not wonder why,
There'll be no tears to brush away,
When you tell me good-bye.

In all these lines are really facts,
That my heart has to say,
So if you think it wise to leave,
Just let me know to-day . . .

"MOA'NING REPO'T"

Cpl. Lester A. Sobel
Co. C. 54th Armd. Inf. Regt.
10th Armored Div. A. P. O. 260

I

We have a First Sergeant
Who hails from the South
Seems mild and quite gentle
'Till he opens his mouth.
Then the nouns and adjectives
That issue thenceforth
Are a language brand new
To us lads from the North.

II

But there's one time each day
That he strikes his high note
And that's when he fills out
His "Moa'ning Repo't."
For sixteen-inch gunfire
Sounds thin and remote
When you've once heard our 1st
At his "Moa'ning Repo't."

III

When he interviews recruits
Or lads who've done wrong
There are few who suspect
That he's singing a song.
But the time to seek cover
Or don bullet-proof coat
Is the time when he fills out
His "Moa'ning Repo't."

IV

He can nag or berate you
With the skill of your wife
And his sarcasms penetrate
Deep like a knife.
His words so expressive
His oratorical style
Are impressed on our neighbors
For many a mile.

V

So if you pass by
And see gore on the floor
This is the reason
(You need seek no more)
Our top kick with curses
That blister the throat
Has embarked once again
On his "Moa'ning Repo't."

MEMORYS AND HAPPINESS OF YOU

Sgt. Anthony Sanavitis
Hq. Co. 1st STR ISSC

As I see the golden sun sink in the west,
Another day has gone by to rest.
It is then I think of you, and our happiness,
When then I had you in my arms to kiss, and to caress.
But then just like the golden sun that has gone,
I now have but fond memories to live on.
Night then comes to linger on, but to bring only dreams,
Of you, my dear, it seems,
But our love must wait as yet,
Even though with my regret.
For now that the day is near, that will soon make us three,
And that this will be in a land both happy and free.
I now more than realize I have a job to do,
To make sure for at least a happiness for two.
May God bless you and keep you safe for me.

Mail Call

Editor,
Fort Benning, Bayonet,
Fort Benning, Georgia.
Sir:

I have just finished reading the latest issue of the Fort Benning Bayonet and find it a most complete paper for America's most complete Post with the exception of one thing; that is that you have never mentioned in any of your copies the 71st Engineer Light Ponton Company.

It is true that you have mentioned and even printed pictures of the 55th Engineers but you have completely ignored the 71st. True, we don't belong to a the armored division, we are only a Company. But our work is proof that even a small Company can count.

We are not new on this Post. We originated here and have been here for over two years. Although we are Special Troops of Ben Lear's Second Army, one of our most important jobs is to give river crossing demonstrations for the Infantry School.

As you know the Corp of Engineers do everything, and we have done everything; everything from pulling parachutists out of the Chattahoochie to building a stage in Russ Pool for the annual Fort Benning water carnival, "Aqua Poppin."

I am sure that you can find many interesting things to write about the 71st. If your paper is to be a complete paper for a complete Post, you can't forget the 71st Engineers who have done more for Fort Benning than any before us.

I am sure you will accept this suggestion in the manner in which it is intended; one of utmost cooperation.

Sincerely,
Sugar Brown Sussina,
Pfc. 71st Engr. L. Pon. Co.

We appreciate your note, Soldier. All contributions sent from your outfit through Infantry School Public Relations will be gratefully accepted.

The Editors.

Peeks at Pics

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

There are plenty of good shows to satisfy the appetite of most anyone on the post this week . . . For instance, there is "Seven Sweethearts" starring Kathryn Grayson, Van Heflin and Marsha Hunt . . . This is a story to get your mind off the war . . . Van plays the part of a news photographer who is sent to cover a Tulip carnival . . . There he meets and falls in love with Kathryn Grayson . . . Before he is allowed to marry her, the oldest daughter in the family (Marsha Hunt) must marry . . . (The Lean Rachael Bible plot) . . . Finally this is done, and all is well . . . The troubles that Van has in the small town, trying to marry off the oldest of the seven daughters, makes this pic one of the better comedies of the season.

One of the best stories to come out of Hollywood this week is the one about our little BAYONET GIRL, Mary Martin . . . Fast - thinking Mary, in common with Mrs. Uppity of Park Avenue and Mrs. Jones of Jefferson Center, was having trouble finding a good maid . . . So when Mary found the ideal domestic, an elderly woman who's a jewel of a housekeeper and a whiz of a cook, she took no chances and signed her discovery to a seven-year contract, drawn up by an attorney and duly notarized and signed . . . But what gave the agreement a real star-twist was the fact that is calls for regular six-month options, each stipulating a substantial raise in pay.

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . . Besides selling a whale of a lot of bonds on her government tour, Veronica Lake collected $186,000 for a lock of hair in Atlanta—which went into the bond box too . . . Miss Lake is now appearing on the post in "The Glass Key" starring Brian Donlevy and Alan Ladd . . . This pic is a rousing murder mystery that keeps you guessing right down to the last minute . . . Dashiell Hammett's plot per excellence plus the good work of Donlevy and William Bendix and the Ladd-Lake combination make this picture a natural for spine- tingling thrills . . . This show proves that Alan Ladd is up and coming.

Charles Drake, who plays Bette Davis' first sweetheart in the new picture "Now, Voyager," scheduled for the post in the near future, was awed at the idea . . . "Gosh! Imagine me kissing a girl with two Oscars!" he exclaimed . . . Laughed Bette: "And he acted at first as though he was kissing an Oscar instead of me."

* * *

Hazel Scott, who's swung to fame and fortune by swinging the classics in Manhattan's Cafe Society—Uptown and Downtown—is making her screen debut in "Something to Shout About," and Director Gregory Ratoff gave a party in her honor at the Beverly Hills Hotel . . . Hazel was asked to give out with a few tunes for the assembled screen sophisticates . . . Unlike the audience smiled . . . But when she finished her rendition of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, she has them in the palm of her talented hand . . . Margaret Sullavan, Louis Bromfield, Zorina, Mary Astor and Don Ameche were among the many who cheered her to the rafters.

Theater men in the United States and Canada have compiled a list of ten young screen players whom they consider the most promising candidates for stardom . . . The chosen ten, as voted in the Motion Picture Herald's second annual poll, are: Van Heflin, Eddie Bracken, John Carroll, Alan Ladd, Jane Wyman, Lynn Bari, Nancy Kelly, Donna Reed, Betty Hutton and Teresa Wright . . . Of these ten, there are three that are playing the post this week . . . Van Heflin in "Seven Sweethearts," John Carroll in "Flying Tigers" and Alan Ladd in "The Glass Key."

MORE CHATTER . . . Bette Davis has never aspired to a glamour-girl tag, but even she shuddered when she saw the mirrored reflection of herself as Charlotte Vale in the early sequences of her new film "Now, Voyager" . . . A wig, false eyebrows, cotton padding, glasses, and most unbecoming clothes made her look like the thwarted, self-conscious spinster she plays before sailing to South America where she meets Romance . . . The kissing scenes took eight hours and three complete lipsticks to do . . . Bette's face was made up four times during the day, twice before and twice after lunch.

Rawn Spearman Gives Command Recital On Bus

The fame of Rawn Spearman as a tenor singer of rare ability is not confined to Fort Benning.

Spearman, the Negro vocalist who starred on the national broadcast "Cheers from the Camps" and later went to New York for an audition in Town Hall, was returning to Fort Benning recently from Tallahassee, Fla. As he stepped on the night bus, a lady stopped him and asked if he wasn't Rawn Spearman. He said he was and she promptly urged him to sing "Just one song."

Taking the crowded bus, the noise of the engine and the probable desire of the passengers to sleep into consideration, Spearman begged off, but the woman insisted so—as the bus rolled on through the night—Spearman sang several of his favorite selections.

"I thought the other people on the bus were asleep and would be angry with me for making noise but when I stopped singing everyone in the bus apparently liked it because they applauded and applauded," Spearman related on his return to Fort Benning.

HONESTY PAYS

FT. BRAGG, N. C.—Pvt. John Vetter received a letter which had been forwarded from a reception center. He knew it was not for him because the sender, a young lady, had included a $5 bill. He returned the communique—money and all. The young lady told her feminine coworkers about the incident. They all started writing—30 of 'em—and in the first batch of letters Vetter received ten bucks.

"I never saw a fighting man who didn't cherish the very thought of a pause with Coca-Cola. That goes for workers in factories, too. Ice-cold Coke is something more than the drink that answers thirst. It adds the feel of refreshment.

"In war, Uncle Sam restricts the supply. But there's still enough for many refreshing pauses."

Detachment Orchestra Expands to 15 Pieces

Musical Unit Is In Popular Demand For Service Functions

Starting with a complement of only three stringed instruments, the Station Hospital Medical Detachment now has organized an excellent musical unit of fifteen instruments. This musical group known as The Medicos has become well known in musical and entertainment circles on the post and at the local USO clubs, having appeared several times on the Army-Navy YMCA Army Hour and at various USO sponsored programs.

The above photograph is a part of this group appearing on the "Cheers from the Camps" program recently broadcast over a national radio hook-up from the stage of the main post theater.

Tech. 5th Grade Dale R. Clifton, is the director of this unique musical aggregation. The roster of the Medicos consists of the following: Director and Marimbist-Tech 5th Grade Dale R. Clifton, vocalist and pianist-Cpl. M. R. Jenter; accordianist, Cpl. Natale Pintello; electric guitar, Sgt. E. L. Clark; electric steel guitar, Tech 5th Grade M. E. Hornsby; violins, Pvt. H. W. Moore; bass viol, Cpl. G. R. Ellefson; guitars. Cpl. J. E. Marks and Sgt. L. C. Braden; banjo and mandolin, Sgt. G. W. Stover; trumpet and cornet, Cpl. Boudreaux; trombone, Pvt. E. Members of the musical unit have organized an Ocorina Quartet and members of the Colored Detachment of the Hospital Unit contribute two Quartet as their part in the musical activities. These men contribute freely of their "off-duty" time toward the morale program of the Medical Detachment and other Benning units.

Fort Soldiers Are Invited To Rome Parties

Fort Benning soldiers visiting Rome, Ga., have been extended a cordial invitation to attend parties sponsored by the Fellowship Group in the Presbyterian Church House. The group is inter-denominational.

The parties begin at 8:30 p. m. and are held in the Church House on the corner of Third Avenue and E. First Street, across from the Habrin Hospital. The parties are featured by games, group singing, and old-fashioned gab-fests.

The Fellowship group is composed of young men and women between the ages of 20 and 30. Inasmuch as Rome does not have an Army camp, the group has been placing posters in train, bus stations, and hotels, inviting visiting soldiers to participate. With Rome situated as it is between Atlanta, Chattanooga, Anniston, and Columbus, it is visited every week-end by many soldiers.

The Fellowship Group has been sponsoring USO parties every Saturday night. It hopes that Rome will soon have an official USO center.

Painting Exhibits By Fort Medico Are Slated

Capt. Thomas R. Shulack of Station Hospital keeps busy these days as do all medical officers—but he does have a hobby and he has become so proficient at it that he will exhibit his work in three different national shows early in November.

Captain Shulack likes to paint—oil-paintings, water-colors, pastels—anything along that line. He's been at it for several years and has had the pleasure of seeing his work hanging on the walls of many exhibit halls.

Next month two of his oil-paintings will be shown in the art and hobby show sponsored by a New York firm and by the magazine, "The New York Physician."

Two of his water-colors, "Army Wife" and "Army Home" will be exhibited at the victory show of the American Hobby Federation in Sachs Auditorium in New York City and a favorite pastel painting of his is to be shown at the annual hobby exhibit of the Southern Medical Association in Richmond, Va. It's entitled "Child with Golden Hair."

Bob Hope Won't Like Being Reminded of This

The best story Officer Candidate Edward T. Freel likes to tell about his life in Broadway shows and night club revues is the one about the time he stole Madeline Carroll away from Bob Hope. Are you yardbirds listening?

It was at the Stage Door Canteen in New York City. Freel was acting as master of ceremonies for a Fort Hancock variety show performing at the Canteen when Hope unexpectedly dropped in with the lovely Madeline and his stooge, Jerry Colonna.

But Freel was equal to the occasion. He deftly introduced the trio to the crowd, bowed Hope to the mike as the new emcee, and walked off with Miss Carroll.

Freel got his start in show business right after he finished high school in 1935 with a comedy role in "Yokel Boy Makes Good," starring Buddy Ibsen, Jack Pearl, Jackie Heller and Mitzi Mayfair.

AMATEUR BOXER

In 1937 during a layoff he decided to take up amateur boxing—he'll never know why. He entered the Long Island Golden Gloves tournament, won the title, went on to win the 135-pound championship in the New York Tournament of Champions. But he got his ears pinned back in the inter-city bouts with the Chicago team, and went back to show business.

During the next four years before the army got him he appeared on Broadway in "Ceiling Zero" and "Whistling in the Dark" and appeared with Nancy Carroll in "Mr. and Mrs. North." He emceed in such night clubs as the Miami Biltmore in Florida, the Coconut Grove in Boston and the Yacht Club in Pittsburgh, and for a time badgered guests at Jack Whites noted "Club 18" in New York. Just before his induction in March, 1942, he spent 22 weeks with Rita Rio's All-Girl Orchestra as M-C.

"That's the way it goes," Freel reflects. "Now Rita is in Hollywood as Donny Drake and I'm in the army."

As a Doughboy Freel continued in the show business. He went to Camp Upton and was assigned to the Opry House where he added his flippant patter to a number of soldier shows. Later he was put in charge of the theater section of the Special Services Office at Fort Hancock. Then he was picked for a part in Irving Berlin's "This Is The Army" but about the time he was to report "some so-and-so in my barracks got scarlet fever."

Freel is now a member of the 10th Company of the Second Student Training Regiment.

BY SGT. CARL NEU

It was mighty encouraging this week to hear that old Hank Gowdy had taken his physical exam at Fort Hayes out in Ohio and was planning on coming back into the service. Somehow it made you feel that now we were really on the way to victory, because with good old Hankus Pankus in khaki again it was just like old times. Hank Gowdy, in case you haven't already heard, was the first major league ball-player to enlist in the first World War, and he is also the same chap for whom Fort Benning's ideal ball park was named.

Gowdy Field has always served as a lasting testimonial to Hank's great record as a soldier in the last war, and it always seemed fitting that one of the finest Army baseball set-ups in the country should be named after the distinguished gentlemen who acquitted himself so honorably as a sergeant for Uncle Sam back in 1918.

There's an interesting story behind the naming of the field, too. Seems that Hank felt the Benning park should have been named Grant Field in honor of Captain Eddie Grant, the New York Giant outfielder, who was killed in action. But Benning officials way back then insisted that the field be named after an enlisted man, and that made old Hankus Pankus a logical choice.

Incidentally, just last summer in an interview in Sporting News, the baseball paper, Hank said that having Gowdy Field named after him was probably the biggest thrill he had gotten in his entire baseball career. And that's a career that took him through the stages of a great catcher to an equally great coach. For the past few seasons he's been with the Cincy Reds, but next season he hopes to be with Uncle Sam again.

Just what Hank has applied for in the service, or what his ambitions are in this war, we do not know. We're not even sure he's been accepted for service. But one thing is sure. If he does don a G. I. uniform again, there's one Army post where he will be more than welcome. And that, of course, is at Benning. It sure would be a thrill next spring to see Hank Gowdy out there on Gowdy Field teaching young soldiers how to throw and bat!

Lieut. John Cudmore, 117th Infantry coach, who scouted Potsy Clark's Pensacola Naval gridders in their game against Texas Christian on Saturday, retuurned with some interesting information about the powerful Goslings who will come here a week from Sunday for the big Army-Navy fuss with a Benning all-star aggregation. The Navy lads have lost three in a row to Alabama, Georgia Naval, and T., C. U., but they still are a great team insists Cudmore.

Fordham's Jim Blumenstock, Indiana's Johnny Birr, Michigan State's Charley Eckels, Duke's Hennemier and Hostetter, L. S. U.'s Cotton Milner, Ole Miss' Homer Hazel, Northwestern's Ed Whalen, Nebraska's George Sauer, and Bill Leckonby of the Brooklyn Dodgers are all names to be reckoned with in big-time circles. The best back on the Gosling eleven, however, is an ordinary gob named Sam Lococo, who never even played college ball. He had an off-day against the Horned Frogs, but may be on the beam when he hits Doughboy Stadium.

To combat this array of all-stars, Fort Benning will field an eleven that is built around the 29th Infantry as a base team. All next week, however, the Two-Nine coaches will have the additional help of all other conference tutors plus about a half dozen of the ranking stars of each eleven at the fort. Added to this combination will be several other former college stars who have not competed in the league this year, but who are in sufficiently good condition to play in this one tilt.

The result, it is hoped, will be an all-star club that may rival the Pensacolans for notoriety, and certainly will be capable of giving Potsy Clark's young men in blue a busy afternoon in Doughboy Stadium. Some of the backs expected to cavort for the soldier team are: Carl Deane (55th Engineers) of Duke, Al Litwak, (3rd Armored) of Western Reserve, Roy Cestary (124th) of Notre Dame, Claude Hackney (124th) of Davidson, Ken Smith (117th) of Indiana, Bob Roberts (117th) of Presbyterian, and Chief Carney (3rd Armored) of Haskell Institute in addition to the regular Devil backs. Two notable additions at fullback who did not play here this year will be Charley Vose, Southern Cal., and Al Avignone, Washington.

PRESS BOX NOTATIONS—Defeat of the 29th by Troy State was due to being caught off guard by a speedy team plus a bad case of over-confidence on the part of the Two-Niners. They had played three big, slow soldier elevens and couldn't get set for the pace of the speedy Trojans. Not only that, but the visitors looked small and the Two-Niners felt big until the kids started running wild . . . Fred Hatfield, the Troian flash, was an 18-year old youngster who in this pillar's opinion could play for any major club anywhere. BUT he has signed a pro baseball contract, and regulations prevent him from playing anywhere except in a small conference such as the one to which Troy State belongs over Alabama way . . . The result of the Dragon-Gator game COULD have been different if Chief Carney, the Third's demon plunger, had been able to play when they reached the two with four downs to punch it over. That might have tied the score and made it quite a scrap, but as it was the Gator forwards smothered everything the Dragons could muster for the final assault . . . The Gators have a splendid set of ends with this lad Pieton looming as one of the great stars of the year at Benning . . . The lighting system in Doughboy stadium is just about twice as bright as that in downtown Columbus and makes the fort grid set-up as fine as any in the nation.

BAYONET TIPS—Look for announcement of plans for an interesting home-and-home boxing series with Maxwell Field in the near future . . . Jacksonville Naval Air Station's crack basketball quintet may appear here this winter . . . Reade Giraulo of the 29th IS making the fans forget the great Otterbein of last year's team, just as we predicted several weeks ago . . . Alabama to trip Trippi, and sink Sinkwich on Saturday . . . Fort's boxing season will be the biggest and best in history . . . Morehouse to beat the Panthers after a hard fight . . . 29th to eke out a win over 117th . . . 124th to win by two touchdowns . . . 3rd Armored to either tie or win at Daniel Field.

Important Loop Battles On Grid Card

Breakers Ready For 29th

Shown above are six of the speedy backs who will see action for the 117th Infantry in Doughboy Stadium on Saturday night against the 29th. The crouching ball-carriers in the top photo are Pierce, Smith, Sturgill and Pansock, the starting foursome. Below is the Breaker eleven's extra-point combine, Bob Roberts and Lieut. John Cudmore, coach of the unbeaten gridders.

Unbeaten 117th Meets 29th Saturday Night; Tankers, Gators Clash

Two games that may clear up the muddled title picture in the Fort Benning Conference are on tap for this week-end, while the other clubs with open dates in the loop schedule will travel for exhibition games.

In Doughboy Stadium on Saturday night at 8:00 o'clock, the unbeaten 117th Infantry Breakers will challenge the Big Blue eleven of the 29th Infantry in what may be the most exciting battle of entire campaign.

Sunday afternoon, the stadium will again be the scene of a loop test when the 124th Infantry Gators clash with the burly 11th Armored Tankers. The outcome of these tilts will go a long way towards establishing a definite leader in the conference, since at present the three infantry elevens are deadlocked in first place with one victory and no defeats apiece.

Meanwhile on Sunday, the 3rd Armored Dragons, smarting from Sunday's defeat by the Gators, will travel to Augusta for a service clash with the high-flying Eagles of Daniel Field, coached by Capt. Marion Bird. The 55th Engineers, thrice-beaten in loop tilts but still game, will try to get on the victory path at the expense of Draper Prison in a game at Speigner, Alabama.

DEVILS VS. BREAKERS

Saturday night's stadium fray which pits the unbeaten Breakers against the once-defeated 29th promises to be a real dogfight from beginning to end. The 117th aggregation is relatively untested thus far, but has been pointing for this tilt ever since Lieut Johnny Gudmore called the first practice session several weeks ago.

Cast as the dark horse in the conference title race, the 117th gridmen have assembled a mystery team that may surprise everyone. In their opener against Draper Prison, the Breakers rolled up a 44-0 count, and then a week later tripped the 11th Armored in a loop fray by a 14-0 count. Both tilts were won going away, and Saturday night will be their first real test.

However, the impression in the 117th camp is that the blue and gold clad pigskinners haven't really turned on the heat, and when they do under the stadium lights, plenty of fur will fly. The Breakers are not a big team, but their line averages slightly under 180 pounds and is reputedly lightning fast. Cudmore, former Stetson star and once with the professional Cleveland Rams, is an astute tutor who has drilled his team well and taught them hard-charging football.

One thing is known about the Breakers. They have what is probably the fastest set of backs in the conference and their starting foursome is a well-balanced quartet. Three of the four, Pierce, Sturgill and Pansock all played high school football together at Elizabethton, Tennessee, while the remaining member is Ken Smith, star halfback at Indiana a few years back.

Cudmore has also added deception to the Breaker attack by using all four backs as ball-carriers and shifting them in and out of the blocking positions. In this way, he has added a versatility to the attack that will probably give the Two-Niners plenty of trouble. In Lieut. Bob Roberts, who is used to spell Smith, the 117th has a fine auxiliary back who once starred at Presbyterian College. Cudmore himself may see action in the line if the occasion warrants, either as an end or tackle.

Pre-game indications are that the tilt is as close to being a toss-up as any so far this fall. If a favorite had to be chosen, the Two-Nine would probably rate the nod, but chances for an upset are plentiful. The 29th is badly crippled, and may not rebound from its defeat by Troy State as quickly as some fans expect.

Another blow was dealt the Devils this week when Mickey McGuire went on crutches and into hospital confinement with a banged-up leg. The rugged 160-pounder had been alternating at both the quarterback and wing back slots and had proven invaluable as a spot performer. With varsity blocker Phil Del Monte still ailing and not capable of going the route, it leaves the Two-Nine without a capable replacement at this important post. Also, it puts the entire wing back load on Chaney and Ralph, two lightweight performers.

The rest of the club is in just fair shape, but by Saturday they will probably be rarin' to go again. Once more Hurley and Bryan will spearhead the Devil ground attack and both will alternate tossing aerials. The same line which started against Troy will probably be used with Carr, Zawaski, Plakan, Giraulo, Mastranunzio, Hutchins and Hennessey lining up from left to right in that order.

A banner turn-out is expected to watch the tilt under the lamps and there will be plenty of color with bands on both sides of the Stadium, and probably some half-time Halloween capers on the field. It is the first tilt that features a real natural rivalry this season, and soldiers fans all over the post have been agog all week over the prospects of a real Doughboy affair.

GATORS VS. TANKERS

The big 124th Gators are a distinct favorite over Capt. Swede Carlson's 11th Armored eleven, but the Tankers are improving steadily and will probably offer quite a problem for the clawing Gators. The 11th showed plenty of power in its last half drive to victory over the Engineers on Sunday, and will test the 124th line to the utmost.

Gator victory hopes in the Sunday tussle once again rest squarely on the shoulders of Roy Cestary, their great triple-threat halfback, who does most of the running, passing and kicking. However, Cestary is ably supported by other good backs in Nick Calos, Vernon Smith and Stan Engler with McCullough and Hamlin as capable subs.

If the Tankers are to win, they must figure out some effective way of throttling the vaunted Gator aerial attack. With Cestar tossing sky-rocket passes with amazing accuracy and at least four big ends to grab them, the Gators are ever-dangerous. Dyal, Pieton, Belin and Soltas are all outstanding flanks and add a great deal of strength to the 124th offense.

DRAGONS VS. EAGLES

Still smarting from their licking by the Gators, the promising Dragons of the 3rd Armored will journey to Augusta for an interesting test with the Daniel Field Eagles. The Air Force club was here almost a month ago and bowed to the 29th by a 12-0 score, and the results of this game may indicate the potential strength of the armoraiders.

Capt. Leo Gregory's club ran into some bad breaks Sunday, such as playing the entire last half without the services of hard-hitting Chief Carney at fullback and George Jenkins at end. Jenkins, former L. S. U. star flank, received an elbow injury incidentally that may keep him on the shelf for at least two weeks. Ed Giedgowd will replace him Sunday.

Tanker Gridmen Down Engineers In Loop Battle

11th Armored Scores 3 Times In Final Half To Win By 20-7

Smashing over three scores in the final two periods, Capt. Swede Carlson's burly 11th Armored Tankers won their Fort Benning Conference tilt on Sunday when they toppled the hard-fighting 55th Engineers by a 20-7 count in a game played at Sand Hill.

The red-jersied Engineers outgained the victors by piling up 152 yards from scrimmage against 94 for the Tankers. The losers were also supreme in the air lanes, completing five aerials for a gain of 47 yards, while the green and white armoraiders clicked on only three passes for a total of 15 yards.

RUNS 80 YARDS

In all other departments, however, the Tankers were supreme and they took advantage of every break offered them. At the start of the second half, following a scoreless initial semester, the Tankers forged into the lead when Chuck Chicklon, speedy halfback, took the kick-off and raced 80 yards to cross the Engineers goal line for a thrilling touchdown. It was the longest run of the season on a fort gridiron.

Towards the end of the period, the Tankers scored again after McNulty had recovered a 55th fumble near midfield. A long pass from Duckworth to Pontecoure which was good for 35 yards set up the score, and then Pontecoure, the hefty line-plunger ripped over for the score. This time, the Tankers converted and were out in front, 13-0.

Hagan and Deane combined some good running plays in the early part of the final period as the Engineer attack finally got moving and they marched down the field for their only tally of the conference tilt. Hagan carried over fo rthe score from the three-yard line, and Deane converted from placement.

CARLSON GOES OVER

The final Tanker score came near the end of the ball game on some brilliant individual work by the 11th Armored coach, Capt. Carlson, who was a former star fullback at Arizona. Playing sub fullback, the big tutor grabbed an Engineer fumble on the 29-yard line and raced 28 yards to the one before he was thrown out of bounds. On the next play, Carlson bulled over center for the score, then added the extra point to make the final figures, 20-7.

The Tanker line played great ball throughout the ball game with Mumford, Rowan, Coleman, Wynanoski and Larson outstanding. The Engineers rolled up 13 first downs, but when they got near scoring territory, the 11th forward wall always braced and averted scoring threats.

The victory for the Tankers gave them an even break in the standings with one victory and one defeat, since they had already dropped their loop opened to the unbeaten 117th Infantry.

Gator Aerials Defeat Pragons Before 8,500

Cestary Fires Two Touchdown Passes To Pieton In 20-0 Win

Striking savagely through the air on three occasions, the powerful Gators of the 124th Infantry moved right smack into the middle of the Fort Benning Conference title picture Sunday afternoon when they whipped the 3rd Armored Dragons in Doughboy Stadium, 20-0.

More than 8,500 fans, the largest crowd so far this season, jammed the concrete structure on the main post to watch the battle between two of the loops most colorful elevens. And when it was all over, many a soldier spectator went away thrilled with a ball game that packed a thrill a minute.

Roy Cestary, the triple-threat halfback of the 124th, was the big individual star of the fray. The former Notre Dame pigskinner twice heaved touchdown passes to lanky Pete Pieton, and his running and kicking troubled the Dragons all afternoon. The final score came with less than two minutes to play, on another long aerial from Bobby McCullough to Tom Soltas that covered 31 yards.

Spurring the 'Gators to victory was the presence o nthe sidelines of their unusual mascot, Adam Lazonga the Second, an 8-foot, 250-pound Florida alligator. The giant reptile, wearing a grid helmet and an orange and blue blanket plus a special harness, lumbered up and down the sidelines during the tilt and delighted the huge crowd. Crack military bands also supported both teams and helped make it the most colorful game of the campaign.

The two big soldier elevens battled one another fruitlessly in a first quarter that finally resolved itself into a punting duel between Cestary of the 124th and Al Litwak, the 3rd Armored's little All-American from Western Reserve.

The initial 'Gator score came in the early moments of the second canto after the 124th had recovered a Dragon fumble on the Third's 42-yard line. Cestary hurled to Soltas for an eleven yard gain, then alternated with Vernon Smith on tackle plunges to move the oval to the Dragon 21-yard stripe.

After a line play had failed, the great 'Gator tailback faded back almost to the 35-yard line and heaved a long pass into the end zone where Pieton grabbed it for the touchdown, even though he was surrounded by Dragon defenders. Nick Calos came back in the ball game and booted a placement squarely through the uprights to add the extra point and give the ultimate winners a 7-0 lead.

The Dragons came back spouting fire for the second half and got the break they had been waiting for when Calos fumbled on the 'Gator 39 after running back a punt. Wargo recovered for the green and white, and on the next play, the same back passed to Tony Laskosky for a first down on the 16. On the third play, Nick Copra broke loose and carried off tackle to the 2-yard line and the stage was set for the most thrilling moments of the game.

Four times the sturdy Dragons pounded into the Gator forward wall, but it was all to no avail for when the series of downs was completed, the ball was still on the 2-yard line, although it had been as close as three inches from the goal. The orange and blue line was magnificent in this goal-line stand, and decided the ball game right then and there.

After that the Gators won going away, scoring twice in the final period. The first tally came on another gorgeous pass from Cestary which was taken by Pieton on the one and carried over for the score. The other came on a 31-yard heave from Bobby McCullough, sub tailback, to Tom Soltas who was standing alone in the end zone.

The 'Gators held an edge in first downs of 9 to 6, and gained a lot more yardage both on the ground and through the air. It was the debut of the big 124th eleven in conference circles, and they immediately moved into a first place deadlock with the 29th and 117th Infantry clubs, both of whom have won one loop game.

Troy State Hands Devils First Defeat by 20-6

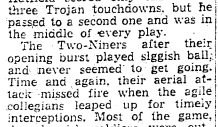
Outplayed most of the way by a younger, faster and more spirited group of collegians from Troy State Teachers, the previously unbeaten Blue Devils of the 29th Infantry lost their first tilt of the 1942 campaign by a 20-6 score on Saturday night in Doughboy Stadium.

The Red Wave from Troy, Alabama, completely engulfed the soldier gridders with speedy backs and a neat pass attack. The Big Blue scored first, in the opening minutes, moving 57 yards after returning the kick-off. But after that, the collegians took over and the issue was never in doubt.

HATFIELD STARS

Big noise for the visitors was an 18-year-old tailback named Fred Hatfield who ran wild on the stadium loam and was one of the classiest backs to appear at the fort in many years. His sweeping end runs and cut-backs over tackle gained yard after yard and had the Two-Niners thinking their name was McCoy and they were in the midst of the famous feud. Hatfield scored only one of the three Trojan touchdowns, but he passed to a second one and was in the middle of every play.

The Two-Niners after their opening burst played siggish ball, and never seemed to get going. Time and again, their aerial attack missed fire when the agile collegians leaped up for timely interceptions. Most of the game, the sluggish soldiers were outcharged by the spirited charges of Coach A. E. Choate who played hard all the way.



The Two-Niners scored early when Phil Del Monte grabbed the opening kick-off and brought it back 32 yards to his own 43 to set the stage. In several quick reverses to the weak side, the Devils moved down the field, and went over for a six-pointer with Ed Hurley bucking off tackle from the two-yard line. Carr's placement went wide, but the score, coming four minutes after the opening whistle, seemed to indicate an easy soldier victory.

The tide turned quickly a few moments later, however, when after an exchange of punts, Hurley fumbled on his own 12 and an alert Trojan recovered. On the second play, the Red Wave turned the break into a touchdown, the first score of the year against Lieut. Joe Ashmore's machine. The six-pointer came on a neat pass into the flat one from Chuck King to Doug Gafford.

The same Gafford scored another Trojan touchdown in the second quarter on a 20-yard pass into the end one thrown by Hatfield. The aerial culminated an 85-yard sustained drive that had begun deep in Troy territory in the previous period. This time, Gafford's conversion was good and the Teachers held a 13-6 lead at half.

Another long drive this time for 69 yards, midway in the third period, gave the Trojans their final score. During the long march, the visitors stayed close to the ground with Hatfield's end sweeps and Louie Harrelson's plunges gaining most of the yardage. Hatfield finally went over for the score when he darted off tackle from the seven-yard stripe to score standing up. Gafford converted and Troy had its victory margin.

A flurry of Two-Nine passes in the final canto was in vain with the alert Trojans intercepting a couple of them at crucial moments to avert any possible scoring threat by the ultimate losers. Right near the end Hatfield grabbed a Devil aerial and traipsed 36 yards for the longest run of the ball game before he was halted on the Devil 12-yard line.

Morehouse Tigers Invade Stadium For Night Battle With Panthers

Elevens Clash Tomorrow at 8:30

The Maroon Tigers of Morehouse College, stung by their recent defeat at the hands of powerful Tuskegee, will invade Fort Benning tomorrow night for a nocturnal battle with the Fort Benning Panthers in Doughboy Stadium at 8:30.

Representing the Service Battalion of the Third Student Training Regiment, the Panthers were held to a scoreless tie in their opening tilt over a week ago, but Lieutenants Maurice Kirk and Norman Hogeson have primed their charges for the tilt with the Atlanta collegians, and it promises to be one of the best games of the campaign.

MOREHOUSE, FAVORED

A capacity crowd is expected to witness the tilt which may rival last Friday's Tuskegee-Morehouse fray in downtown Columbus as the colored classic of the season. Morehouse will be a slight favorite at the kick-off, because of more experienced material, but the Panthers have several brilliant stars who may burst into gridiron glory tomorrow night.

One Panther ace who did not appear in the line-up against Spencer High is lanky Bill Young, fleet halfback and probably, the outstanding operative in the Benning backfield. Young is a former Bloomfield (N. J.) High star who can snare passes with rare abandon.

With Young on the receiving end of some of Frank Phillipson's aerials, the Panthers will be able to boast a top-notch pass attack. In his first appearance in Doughboy Stadium, Phillipson impressed everyone with his long, accurate heaves down field, but he needed speedy receivers. Phillipson, former New York City schoolboy flash, is also a dangerous runner and will give the Maroon Tigers plenty of trouble on his end sweeps and tackle dashes.

REID STAR CENTER

The Panthers also boast some other outstanding stars, and a relatively powerful line bolstered by Clarence Reid at center. Reid is field captain of the green-and-white clad soldier team, and a hard-hitting backer-up on defense. Left End Kenny Bell and Right Guard Roscoe Burton were two other service battalion lads who impressed in their debut a week ago.

Morehouse will bring a potentially great eleven into the stadium. Against Tuskegee the Tigers were up against one of the south's strongest grid aggregations, yet they were in the ball game all the way until the final period. The Maroon line was a bulwark of strength, and several times halted Tuskegee drives in the shadow of their own goal posts.

SCOTT GREAT PUNTER

The Atlantans have several sensational backs and a superb punter in Robert Scott. Against Tuskegee he gave one of the finest kicking exhibitions ever seen in this section, repeatedly getting off sixty-yard boots, several times from his own end zone. His punting average for the first half against the Golden Tigers was 54-yards per kick which is exceptional.

Both teams tomorrow will have fleet, break-away stars who may get off on long scoring jaunts and provide the expected capacity audience with plenty of thrills.

Panther Pass-Snagger

Hauling down a high one is Bill Young, fleet halfback for the Fort Benning Panthers who will entertain the Morehouse College Tigers in the stadium tomorrow night at 8:30. Young is a former Bloomfield (N. J.) High ace and may be the spearhead of the Panther attack against the powerful Atlanta collegians.

Eddie Jackson Finds Many Ring Stars In 3rd STR Serv. Bn.

Under the capable instruction of Eddie Jackson, former pro star, the Service Battalion of the 3rd Student Training Regiment, is rounding up a stable of colored boxers that will create plenty of fireworks in fort fistic circles this winter.

The Panther sluggers have already started their unit boxing program, and several likely prospects for fort titles have come to light, Jackson, a heavyweight who has served as sparring partner for Abe Simon and other top-notchers, is quite enthusiastic about some of his charges.

Included in the Panther "stable" are Dynamite Daniels, Tim Still, Jimmy Mitchell, Chris Craggs, Oliver Roberts, Johnny Morgan, Rosy Pitts, Buddy Williams, Lee Young, Levi Irvis Joe Nobel, Eddie Washington and Tiger Peterson.

An outstanding prospect is Tom Beatty, a 147-pounder from Cambridge, Mass., who scored a whirlwind one-round knockout in his last bout. Bennie DeShaziar, a Newark, New Jersey, youngster also impressed as a fine puncher in five starts, four of which he won by knockouts.

What's New With Q. M.?

The latest canned ration developed for our use by the good, old Q. M. C. is a "5 in 1" affair that includes among other things, ham and eggs in their newest form. The new ration was developed chiefly for use by units of motorized and mechanized forces and seems ideal for those purposes.

It consists of canned and dehydrated foods, and includes three full meals for five men for one day, hence the name "5 in 1." No cooking ability is needed to prepare it either, since the cans are heated simply and ready for use in a few minutes.

Typical of the type of food offered on the canned menu is the following one. For breakfast, there's canned grapefruit, dry cereal, canned ham and eggs, soluble coffee, sugar and canned milk. The dinner consists of dehydrated pea soup, creamed corn beef, canned snap beans, hard candy, orange juice powder and sugar. And it's topped off with a super of dehydrated baked beans, canned vegetables, evaporated apricots and cocoa with sugar and milk. Not bad for chow while "on the march!"

The G. I.'s who may find themselves embroiled in tropic warfare before this scrap is over will be slipping their 16-inch machete into a new canvas sheath, just designed by supply corps technicians. It will replace the former one made of leather, which is getting scarcer every day. The machete, if you don't know already, is the handy tool used to cut jungle underbrush and clear trails. It could also be used for other emergencies, like cutting up a Jap.

Traversing from hot to cold climes in the same week, the Q. M. C. also disclosed the other day that it was using an increasing amount of cotton fabrics in clothing for issue to troops on duty in frigid theaters of operation. The cotton is being used chiefly in field jackets, similar to the one we wear, as well as parkas and parka-type overcoats.

Laboratory and field experimentation, based largely on the experience of Arctic explorers, has been conducted by the supply corps, and indicates that cotton as well as fur, wool and leather, is an essential material in cold-weather clothing.

The research indicated that perhaps the most efficient cold weather garb for soldiers was a combination of a wind-resistant material and an insulator to preserve body heat. Cotton fabrics of certain types can be used for both these purposes, and when worn with additional heat-helding garments, jackets and parkas fabricated with cotton have provided excellent protection against extreme cold.

Talking about cold climates reminds us that the Quartermaster Corps seems to think of everything in this war to improve the soldier's efficiency. Latest gadget is a "chapstick" to be used as a preventative against chapped skin or sunburn among troops serving in extreme climates. The cylindrical packaged medicant is about two inches long, and contains soothing ingredients, including camphor.

A new-type field insect bar which fits under the standard shelter tent, will protect G. I.'s in bad mosquito and sand-fly areas, according to word from Washington this week. It has already been service-tested under actual field conditions both in the continental United States and overseas.

The netting, designed of course by the Quartermaster Corps, will replace the sand-fly and mosquito bars previously issued to troops in the field. The new "bar" can be tucked in to keep bugs and flys from entering underneath the tent walls and is made of cotton and chemically treated to resist mildew and water, Sounds pretty bug-proof!

'K' Company Again Favored In 29th Court League

The 29th Infantry's regimental court league is now in full swing, with the 1941 championship "K" company quintet again the ruling favorite. The games are all being played in the unit's A. and R. hall, and large turn-outs have evinced another big basketball campaign for the Two-Niners.

The defending Kays once again have a veteran squad paced by "Pop" Moylan, who is averaging well over 12 points per game. At the present Sloka, Carypie, White and Davis support Moylan. Lost to the team for perhaps their regimental season is Joe Stolarzyck, one of last season's stars and a varsity end on the big Two-Nine grid eleven, who is on the shelf with a football injury.

The "K" company squad is already way out in front in the Third Battalion competition and is expected to go on to the regimental title. After that, several of the Kays will probably be outstanding contenders for positions on the regimental team, which last year won the post championship and will again be a strong contender.

Lt. Hill Assigned To Morris Field

Lt. H. F. Hill, Base Operations Officer at Lawson Field, has been assigned to duty at Morris Field, Charlotte, N. C., under Col. Warner B. Gates, former commanding officer at Lawson Field.

A native of Illinois, Lt. Hill received his high school education at Culver Military Academy, Culver, Ind. Later he attended the University of Indiana and spent several years studying law.

Before being called to active duty with the Army Air Forces, Lt. Hill was associated with Eastern Air Lines. For a time he was in the advertising business.

Lt. Hill was commissioned a second lieutenant on Sept. 2, 1933. He was called to active duty July 23, 1941, and was promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant on March 20, 1942.

Gen. Fulton Is Honored With Musicale

Service Club No. 4 Has Talent Parade For Guest

The soldiers at Fort Benning turned out on Sunday afternoon to witness one of the finest musicales ever presented at Service Club No. 4. "The Parade of Talent" was given in the honor of Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning.

The auditorium stage dazzled with soldier artists and artists from the various sections of the Southland. At three o'clock the Commanding General and a host of friends from the main post began the procession and at three-twenty, soldiers, civilians, officers and non commissioned officers were assembled.

The Service Club Staff of women, Mrs. Nell Blackshear (senior hostess), Miss Adeline E. Gray (junior hostess), Miss V. Elizabeth Brown (librarian), and Miss Eileen A. Reese (cashier) extended welcome smiles and a copy of the eight page musical program. The program opened with a democratic air and the song "America" rang in every corner of the auditorium.

The General came forth, Mrs. Blackshear (senior hostess) voiced the presentation. The music of Calvin Love (blind pianist) caught the ears of the crowd—his playing was truly wonderful. Pvt. Wm. A. Jones sang "The Lord's Prayer." Miss Mahalia Smith of the Friendship Baptist Church, Atlanta, gave a delightful version of Schubert's "Ava Maria." Norton Evans, noted tenor from Atlanta, sang "Who Is Sylvia." The Reception Center quartette made a contribution in spirituals and Miss Priscilla Williams, special guest of the General, sang "The Cuckoo Song." "Taint No Use Worrying," was the reading rendered by Miss Ozora Renfroe and "Song of Love" from Blossom Time was voiced by Miss Smith and Pvt. Long.

Gordon Anderson played a group of piano selections during the intermission. At the close of the intermission period another portion of the program was presented. Pvt. John Thomas Davis sang "Passing By" by Purcell, and Rawn Spearman, Reception Center tenor, concluded the program with a fine group of songs. Lt. Col. C. C. Finnegan and Major J. H. Cooper, officer in charge, made remarks. The program closed with a democratic air and the song "God Bless America" sounded in the four corners of auditorium.

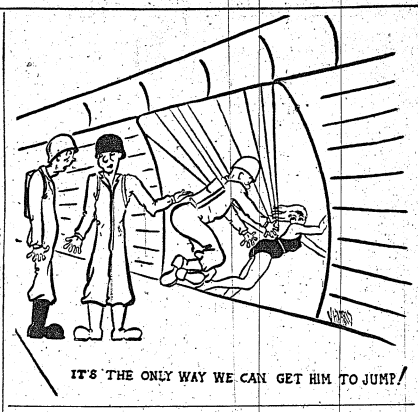
The monument was erected on Brinson Range in the Harmony Church Area by the range personnel as a token of their esteem for their late leader. It is a handsome monument with a bronze plaque inscribed, "BRINSON RANGE, Named In Honor Of John F. Brinson, Lieutenant Colonel, U. S. Army. Born April 19, 1893. Died December 22, 1941.

Colonel Brinson died very suddenly of a heart attack at his home at Fort Benning on December 22, 1941. He had been Range Officer of The Infantry School for almost five years. When he died he left a widow and two sons. A daughter was born shortly after his death. He was a native of Millen, Georgia, and his family has since returned to that village.

FRIEND TO ALL

Captain James A. Paulson, who has been with the range office longer than any other officer, speaks of the late colonel as an active, energetic man to whom everybody was a friend. He was one of the most popular officers on the post. The range which bears his name was in process of completion at the time of his death. It was named Brinson Range two weeks later.

Colonel Brinson was well known in athletic circles on the post. He was assistant coach of the Post Baseball team for a while, and he also coached the old I. S. D. team, now known as the I. S. S. C., perennial post champions. Fishing, hunting, and other athletics were among his chief interests.



Major Lewis A. Minichiello, present Range Officer, presented the monument in behalf of the range personnel. General Allen and Colonel Richard G. McKee, School Operations Officer and Executive Officer of the School Troops Brigade, represented The Infantry School at the dedication.

Ex-Pugilist Now Swings Punches For Uncle Sam

A stocky-built, deep-chested fellow, with a slightly bent nose and a clear, ruddy complexion, that's Pvt. Rex Sexton, instructor at the Parachute School and former professional prize-fighter.

Pvt. Sexton was just climbing into the top bracket of heavyweights, when the army called. As a matter of fact he already had the scalp of a well-known fighter hanging from his belt, in the biggest fight of his life Johnny Paychek. Paychek will be remembered as a recent challenger of the champion, Joe Louis.

It was in the Coliseum at Omaha, Neb., that Rex Sexton punched his way into a ten-round victory over Paychek. That was in 1936. Since then, Sexton has been fairly successful in the prize-ring.

However, eight months ago Uncle Sam decided that Rex should fight for him, and so he's fighter hanging from his belt, in the biggest fight of his life right now. He is a paratrooper, and claims that next to nothing, it's the swellest business in the world. Is it tougher than trading fistcuffs? You bet your life, but twice as much fun, and we're really going to give those guys h—l.

Fellow Officer Loses Him But Demitz Gets Home

One evening recently, Lt. Col. Whiteside Miller of the 11th Armored Regiment and Maj. R. S. Demitz, 10th Armored Automotive Officer, were in deep discussion. The colonel said it couldn't be done but the major stated that it could be done and that he was the man to do it.

Out of the discussion there arose a proposal to settle the matter at once and to make it worth while a side bet was made. The odds given were 2 to 1, and the payoff was to be made in cases of beer. The time was 9:30 p. m. and a more mysterious appearing group had never been observed on this reservation. One major as a passenger in a peep with a barracks bag over his head being driven by a lieutenant colonel.

NO SNIPE HUNT

It wasn't a snipe hunt or anything like that but two determined men on their way to settle a bet. The major stated that he was a good field soldier and as such could find his way home in the dark from any point of the reservation. In fact, said the major, all officers should be able to do the same. Col. Miller took up the argument and the bet and conditions were agreed upon.

Col. Miller was to blindfold Maj. Demitz by pulling a barracks bag over his head to be kept on while on the way out and 30 minutes later was to turn over to him the peep, a flashlight and compass and from there on the major was on his own.

After arriving at the appointed place, Maj. Demitz immediately set about orienting himself and then proceeded via Daniel Boone methods to find his way back to the Sand Hill Area. He found his back trail through the broken twig method and then soon located a small trail through the woods. After careful orientation on the major's part the proper direction was selected and he started down the trail. It soon led to a small sand road which in turn emptied into one of the main roads.

BEATS TIME LIMIT

In one hour after being left in the woods the Major was at Gate No. 1, the winner of two cases of beer and beating the time limit by 60 minutes. Col. Miller will never pay off a finer debt because if this is an example of the type of leaders the 10th Armored "Tigers" have it is a point well settled.

Gen. Newgarden Presents Trophies To Swim Team

Presentation of a trophy and individual metals were made by Major General Paul W. Newgarden, commanding officer of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, to the swimming team of the 11th Armored Regiment last week at a retreat parade held in their honor. The team won the Division's swim meet last month Riss pool.

Each member received a handsome medal—with the event and place won engraved on the back. General Newgarden presented the medals before the entire regiment and then presented the trophy to Lt. Earl Rogers, captain of the team. Following the presentation, members of the team, standing beside the commanding general and Colonel Bertrand Morrow, the 11th commanding officer, viewed the regiment as it strutted proudly past.

Lt. Rogers received two medals, one for swimming first place in the 100-yard back stroke and the other for anchoring the winning 200-yard relay team. Others receiving medals for the relay pull were Cpl. James Harmon, Sgt. William Salerno and Pfc. James Daniels.

Cpl. Carl Peterson won first honors in the 100-yard breast stroke and Private Brimisi took third place in the 200-yard free style.

For Heroism Beyond Duty's Call

The "inspiring" action of First Sgt. Paul P. Layman, Company E, 55th Engineer Battalion, in saving the life of a fellow engineer was cited by Major General Paul W. Newgarden, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division commander, in pinning a soldiers' medal for valor on the breast of Sergeant Layman. The presentation was made at an assembly of the 10th at the Division Bowl. Sergeant Layman, at the risk of his own life, knocked Sgt. James Murrell, Knifely, Ky., from a vehicle that had been charged by electricity when a crane accidentally contacted a high tension wire. Tigers Have New Paper

Commander Praises Armored Sheet

"The Tigers' Tale," official publication of the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, made its debut this week.

"This is the paper of our team, the Armored Tigers," Major General Paul W. Newgarden, Division Commander, wrote in an introductory editorial. "The big mission of 'The Tigers' Tale' is to foster 10th Armored spirit and to help us along our relentless trail that leads to destruction of our enemy.

"This it can do by amplifying, illustrating and broadcasting the sparks of humor that glint from our drill fields, our class rooms, our barracks, our maneuvers, our firing ranges and thus make each Armored Tiger chuckle as he toils to reach his difficult training goal —the ability to take on any five of the enemy.

"You Tigers who have a gift of humor, cartoon craft, illustration, narrative, inspiration or philosophy—be on the alert to contribute to your paper, 'The Tigers' Tale.'

"There is one rule—this Tiger never whines—he only smiles, snarls or roars. Let's feed him the best material so that he can grow strong and tough to Terrify and Destroy'."

Cpl. James E. Frye is editor of "The Tigers' Tale"; Cpl. Robert K. Kerbs, assistant editor; Sgt. Paul R. Jenkins, feature editor; Sgt. Robert A. Clay, art editor; and Sgts. Robert M. Brown, John Buckley and Robert Berlin and Cpl. John McVea, reporters.

Major Russell C. Hinote, Division Special Service Officer, and Lt. Henry Winkler, Division Public Relations Officer, comprise the Advisory Board.

Tankers Defeat 55th Engineers On Grid 20-7

The 11th Armored "Tankers" evened the score as far as the "won and lost" column is concerned Sunday afternoon by defeating the "Mighty 55th Engineers," red jersies 20-7. Their loss to the 117th Infantry the previous Sunday is the only disappointment in their record.

Throughout the game, the Tankers backfield — Duckworth, Pontecourse, McNulty and Carlson—played superior ball with Duckworth being the principal threat.

Pontecourse was injured in the third quarter, but finished the game. The Engineers outrushed the 11th with a total of 152 yards gained from scrimmage to 94 and completed passes for 47 yards to the 11th's 16 yards.

In another gridiron encounter, the 124th Infantry " 'Gators" defeated the 3rd Armored "Dragons" 20-0. Roy Cestary, former Notre Dame star, triple threat half back of the 124th, was the star of the game.

The first "Gator" score came early in the second quarter when the 124th recovered a fumble on the 3rd's 42-yard line. A steady drive down the field and a long pass into the end zone put the game on ice.

Tiger Personnel Studies German

'Trink, Bruderlein, Trink!"

This, in the event you don't already know, is the title of a German drink song, somewhat in the order of the 'Main Stein Song," which needs no introduction. Rudy Valee did that.

To get to the point, the German song is rendered at the opening and closing of the classes in German being conducted by First Lt. Franklin A. Bickford, S-2 of the 54th Infantry Regiment, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division, for officers and non-coms of the Intelligence and Reconnaissance platoons.

To date, five classes have been held and the boys already are able to burst forth with varied fluent phrases of the 'sauerkraut" lingo.

Lieut. Bickford, a student of foreign languages, has traveled in Germany is presenting the subject both from the text book and practical points of view.

Sioux Chieftain In 10th Armored Wants Nazi Scalp

"Iya cheecha kan abay we chun ka sota peeckate!"

That's the common expression of Private David Young Eagle, 90th Reconnaissance Battalion, 10th Armored "Tiger" Division.

Which means, "We're going to clean up the Germans again!" spoken in the Sioux Chieftain's ancestral tongue.

Young Eagle, one of the stellar entertainers in the 10th Armored Division, last week entertained Service Club visitors with his rope tricks, Indian songs and Indian war dances.

Before enlisting in the Army six years ago, he traveled from coast to coast and throughout Europe with a number of rodeo and wild west shows. In some of them he performed his rope tricks and in others he rode bucking broncos in full tribal regalia.

With the 101 Ranch, which went from Oklahome to Madison Square Garden, Canada, London and Berlin, the Chief nightly would ride a wild buffalo and for about ten hair-raising seconds cling to its back before it would make a dash for its stall.

AN ARMY WIFE Shops In Columbus

by EVE

Whatever else we might remember about these months of otday, we're not likely to forget the gay colors we wore. The "good" black dress is still the favorite of many women, but the temptation to wear the gay and daring color combinations found in our better shops today must be strong indeed. A trend toward simplicity is shown in the practical suits and tailored dresses. With the peversity of women we disguise the ulitarian effect with bright holored hats and feminine trickery to achieve the lihgt hearted note.

A woman wise in the ways of costume perfcetion will provide herself with a basic wardrobe of fine bags, gloves and costume jewelry. The distinction achieved with these accessories to a modest and simple dress is recognized by the shrewd shopper. KAYSER - LILIENTHAL, INC, has an eye-catching department of accessories. The famous Lewis and Mark Cross bags have always been known as an investment for several seasons. One sttunning bag in tan pig skin is simple perfecttion for a tweed suit. Soft dressmaker bags in fine broadcloth with handsome frames of plastic are perfect for dress-up occasions. Less dressy, but equally important are the soft calf and crushed calf that combines beauty, and service. The Mark Cross gloves come in that beloved classic pull-on that remains a perennial favorite. It comes in natural, white and oatmeal pigskin. Soft washable doeskin in natural and white and the indispensable black suede. Look at those amazing costume watches made by Belmar. I'll bet you'll want to find one in your Christmas stocking. No junk pewelry these charming trinkets of utility.

No southern garden blooms with gayer colors than the Hat Shop of Roberta Wells, of the GODWIN-WELLS-POPE SHOP on 1212 Broadway. Try on one of those finy flowered or feathered creations with their swirls of veiling with your suit and see what looks back at you from the mirror. There's a pecan brown postilion style of perky hat with a gay cockade of flecked feathers. Another dream hat for turning any woman into a Powers model is the salute blue felt sailor. Blue and brown ostrich feathers are intertwined in a fluffy roll around the edge. Tulle veiling crosses the crown and floats over each shoulder. Fuschia and purple flowers, large and luscious, trim another lovely. Smooth distinction is found in the black felt sailor trimmed in a glowning plastron of glossecent peacock breast feathers. Lovely creations from the Gage Handcraft line each one of them destined to give the owner a reputation for wearing smart and beautiful hats.

If you'd like to look at next month's Vogue magazine creations step into SEALY'S on Broadway. Dramatic and exquisite are her new evening and dinner dresses. All of the dressed have the standing peg top and draped skirts. Deliciously feminine and suggestive of World War I. A black creation with a skillfully draped peg topped skirt is made daring with a pink marquiset topped bodice with insets of black lace. Another breathtaking model has a bodice of white lace with sparkling sequins and a white draped crepe skirt. Less sophisticated are the California designed bright plaid taffetas with rustling full skirts. Sealy's have just received an outstanding collection of replicas of old English and Russian jewelry. Exquisite heirloom pieces of semi-precious stones and enamel on washed gold. They are without question some of the finest pieces of theirkind I've ever seen. Santa Claus would forgive a woman for putting them for him to put in her stocking, for they're certain not to be available at Christmas time.

Our brides had best not waste their time looking for aluminum kitchen utensils. There isn't any to be had. That doesn't mean she can't prove a good craftsman is worthy of the fine tools of her trade. SEARS ROEBUCK still has a goodly supply of stainless steel kitchen utensils. They have always been classed with sterling silver on your dining table. Less expensive are the white and red or blue trimmed enameled aids to good cooking. One tricky pan has a glass cover. Thick pottery mixing bowls in bright colors are almost ornaments, they're that attractive. All the little necessities of mixing spoons, can openers, spatulas and fine knives are grouped together for comparison and easy choice. Many have the bright plastic handles that make our kitchens gay and cooking hours bright. The wise bride that follows the adage "Feed the Brute" will give her husband lasting and heartwarming memories.

Joyce play shoes were first shown the summer of 1938. They were utterly new in design and unheard-of comfort. Beautiful color combinations in cloth made them ideal for beach and resort wear. Women found them so comfortable and flattering they no longer limtied them to resort wear, and adopteted them as a national favorite summer shoe. Sustained popularity lead the designers to experiment with leather and even satins for the boudoir. They were shown in suede and gold and silver for evenings. Soft calfskins with gold studs sparkled against gay solid colors. This year there's a slight deviation from the open toed model. The Alert pattern is a soft closed toe oxford wedge heel shoe in green, tan and blue. The popular Blazer pattern of crushed calf has a dressmaker touch that caught the fancy of women in white. It comes in black and cordovan for the winter months. Poker Flat is the intriguing name of the punched wing trimmed shoe with an instep strap. Do I have to remind you that MILLER - TAYLOR—the shop of fine shoes, is the headquarters for Joyce Play Shoes?

It may still be October to you, but theholiday spirit is well established in the Toy Center, just opened in the new 12th Street wing of KIRVEN'S. You'll like the soft star-sprinkled blue paper and peppermint stick candy poles that gives a definite Christmas air. A surprise is in store for you when you see the stock of toys they have on hand. All sorts of wheel goods, tricycles, doll buggies, pull and push toys so dear to all children. Shelves full of dolls. Quaint character dolls, the adorable Raggedy Ann and Raggedy Ann baby dolls that say "Mommia" and "Poppa." Plastic soldiers, strategic war games guaranteed to keep Daddy amused over the holidays. Cowboy, Buck Jones, soldier, mounted police suits to put the young man in uniform. Tea sets of plastic. Swiss music boxes in tiny pianos. Kirven's have never before stocked their Christmas shelves so handsomely with toys. Of course they were ordered many months ago to be able to make such a handsome display. Just th esame I'd advise an early choice. There's so many children at Fort Benning and Columbus.

There's nothing so cozy and smart for the leisure hours at home as a well tailored slack suit. THE PATRICIA SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel, has an unusual selection of mix and match outfits for every taste. A definite "must have" for a well supplied wardrobe is the grey flannel slacks and matching coat. Different is the black smoking jacket of corduroy with frogs. The slacks for this outfit are satin striped black silk. Classed as a hostess type dinner slacks are ribbed silk in dull green. The coat is finger tip length, princess lines and smartly trimmed with frogs. A soft knited beige vest over a brown silk jersey blouse and knitted beige slacks are slightly reminiscent of Dude Ranches. The more tailored versions are ideal for the fall picnics you plan these sunshiny Sundays. Slacks are with us as a permanent addition to our wardrobe. If they're the perfectly tailored and well fitting slacks Patricia carries, they become an asset of attractiveness instead of a garment of mere comfort.

You gais better keep an eye on that display in SAKS FIFTH AVENUE MILITARY SHOP on Cusseta Road. There's some of the most unusual gift items, with more to come as the weeks pass. Gifts are going to be limited this year with our men wearing uniforms constantly and never having time for their favorite hobbies. If your husband is the pipe smoking kind of a man he'll like the Middleton kit of fine tobaccos for mixing and blending to his personal taste. There's a pipe in this kit too. A handsome pair of capeskin gloves is another gift idea. Something really special is thepigskin toilet kit, spacious enough for all personal needs. These gift items are Saks Fifth Avenue type of merchandise, direct from their New York Shop.

Garrison Library

By FRANCES CHANDLER

"Books are weapons," said President Roosevelt in one of his recent speeches. Libraries today should certainly offer readers books in which facts are presented relating to winning the war and planning for the postwar world. Available for readers in the Garrison Library are many books which might be listed in the above category.

Howard K. Smith's "Last Train From Berlin" is an account of the economic and psychological conditions in Germany before the war, and in the months of war which he experienced from inside the Reich. The author, a newspaper man and CBS commentator, was the last American to leave Germany before Japan entered the war.

F. O. Miksche's "Attack" is a technical treatise on the art of war as practiced by Germany at the present time. Not a book for amateurs or armchair critics, this is probably the best work on modern tactics which the present war has produced. The author is a Czech who served in the Czech army for twelve years, then joined the International Brigade fighting on the Loyalist side in Spain's civil war.

"The Japanese Enemy" is an admirable survey of present-day Japan written by a New York Times correspondent, Hugh Byas, who has spent more than twenty years in Japan. Mr. Byas predicts a long, difficult war and he stresses the necessity for speeding up industrial production in the United States.

Helen Mears' "Year of the Wild Boar" is another book which presents an excellent portrait of Japan and the JJapanese.

In "India Today" W. E. Duffett presents a readable introduction to the problems of Indian nationalism for those readers who are beginning to realize the importance of India.

Raymond K. Kennedy's "Ageless Indies" is a factual book on the Dutch East Indies which is written in a very informal and interesting style. The author is a sociologist and anthropologist who lived for several years in the Indies.

Perhaps the best book yet written by a newspaper correspondent concerning the present war, A. A. Michie's "Retreat to Victory" is a valuable contribution to a better understanding of what has already happened during World War II and what we are still up against. As correspondent for Time, Life, and Fortune magazines, Mr. Michie saw the "Stuka-stupid Tommie come back across the channel from the hell of Dunkerque," followed the fortunes of the British in Greece, Crete, and Libya, watched the campaigns in Iraq, Syria, and Iran, and toured India and the Far East just before Pearl Harbor. Thus he became something of a specialist on retreats which, he says, "are not pleasant spectacles." He sees them all, however, as contributions to victory when the tide turns, reasoning that in every case they deprived the enemy of men, supplies, and time.

Doleful Music Sobs Sad News of 'Gator' 8-Ball

Regimental Units Dodge It As If It Were Plague

The drum is muffled, the pace is slow—the 124th Infantry Band plays Chopin's "Funeral March" and the solemn soldiers, with crying towels to catch their tears, follow somberly behind. The curious onlookers whisper as they gather in little groups along the line of march. Some linger and smile. Others join in the procession to weep and wail for—SOMEBODY IS GOING TO GET THE 8-BALL TODAY.

With a simple but impressive ceremony the famed 8-ball is formally presented to Captain Toughbreak who in turn will deliver it to Lt. Didntcheck who passes it on to Sgt. Disremember. 'Tis a sad day indeed for someone has "pulled a boner," something has gone wrong, demonstration unsatisfied, something which could have been prevented with just a little careful planning or preparation; now the black stigma of disgrace has fallen and the 8-ball has come to rest for a week unless recalled to Regimental Headquarters for presentation to some other unit.

Units of the 124th avoid this signal ceremony as they would the plague, so there are very few that have received the doubtful honor of receiving the black-ball bedring the figure 8. When not in the unwilling custody of its red-faced recipient, the 8-ball resides in the operations office near the desk of Master Sergeant James L. Wadsworth. It was Sergeant Wadsworth who personally acquired the 8ball about 12 years ago and has kept it near him ever since.

Usually he is behind it as it sits dolefully on his desk.

On February 18 of this year, after certain units of this regiment had bungled a detail, Sgt. Wadsworth suggested to Major Thomas T. Long, operations officer, that the 8-ball about 12 years ago and some of the worst offenders. This suggestion was enthusiastically accepted and another institution was born, an institution which serves to help keep all personnel of the 124th eternally vigilant and in turn "off the 8-ball."

Pearl Harbor Attack Plans 20 Years Old

Col. Kelley Says Defeating Nipponese Will Be Hard Nut

"Japan's plans for this year are at least 20 years old and she has been following them carefully. It will take all the skill, courage and backbone the Occidentals possess to defeat her," Colonel Reginald H. Kelley emphasized Monday in a talk on causes of world conflict before the Current Events group of the Woman's Club.

Colonel Kelley, president of the reclassification board, divided the world's population into the "sit-downers" and the "go-getters." One-half the world, including peoples of the South Sea islands, Africa, China, and India, is made up of "sit-downers," he explained. The philosophy of fatalism prevalent in India and China was forced upon the people by their geographically hemmed-in area and the immense population, he said.

WHITE RACE GO-GETTERS

The white race, or "go-getters," have developed within comparatively recent years, Colonel Kelley declared. They have been characterized by growing hostility toward despotic government and a desire to govern themselves. Modern democracy developed in east coast Europe, he said, but the democracies tried to force despotic government on their colonies.

"Unrest in the colonies is largely due to our treatment of the Philippines," the speaker said. "The United States was the first to feel that an Oriental colony had the ability to govern itself, the first to say, 'Go, and God bless you.'"

30 GENERATIONS OF WAR

Colonel Kelley explained that the population of the world has doubled in the last four or five hundred years, mostly in North America and Europe, with little chance of expansion for those countreis with fixed boundaries. Consequently, for the last thirty generations no generation in Europe has been without a war. If the interests of the growing countries are parallel, he said, there will be no trouble, but if interests conflict wars occur.

Colonel Kelley clarified the present world conflict by the use of large color maps, explaining strategic moves and reasons why certain combat areas are particularly important. Russia, he said, slowed up Germany immediately by laying waste a belt of land 200 miels wide, over which the Nazis made slow progress. He pointed out that Russia had combed out all fifth-columnists and Nazi sympathizers before she was invaded, and was thus able to rise as a nation.

"It looks like another long, cold winter for the Germans in Russia," he said.

Women's Club

COL. KELLY SPEAKS

The Woman's Club of Fort Benning is reserving the Main Theatre Monday, November 2, at 3:30 p. m. for one of their outstanding programs of the year. Ruth Bryan Rhode will speak on "New Horizons for America." Due to the importance of the speaker in national and international affairs the meeting will be open to the general public. Tickets will be sold in the lobby for fifty cents. The membership drive will be continued under the direction of Mrs. George P. Howell. Tables for registration of membership will be placed in the lobby.

Ruth Bryan Rhode, daughter of the famous William Jennings Bryan, adds to a unique background of experience a record of exceptional achievement. Her oratorical ability has given her the means of contact with millions of her fellow citizens and for the past ten years she has been one of the most popular figures on the lecture platform. In every state in the Union on an average of twenty towns per state her voice has been heard, pleading for peace, painting her own rare background of work or telling all about this very modern business of being a stateswoman.

From a broad experience she speaks and in her sentences clear and colorful an Egypt, an England and a United States, or the far countries of Greenland or Denmark, peculiarly her own, take form and life. Life under the national capitol dome, topping an already wide observation of national and international affairs, has given Mrs. Rhode a grasp on the opportunities of citizenship held by no other woman speaker in America today. By many, she is regarded as the one woman speaking for all womankind as an official on the national scene.

Contrary to the popular heredity theory of this orator daughter of an orator father, she worked out her own technique, slowly, painstakingly, and since each success must have its secret vigor, these seem to be the secret of Mrs. Rhodes success. Freshness and enthusiasm which are the rare gifts of the favored few souls of maturer years seeing the whole world with ripened judgment and at the same time seeing it with the whole souled fine enthusiasm of youth.

No problem is greater in the minds of army women today than the future of our country. Her message to the members of the Women's Club is certain to be provocative and inspirational.

Captain John G. Macfarlan, Intelligence Officer of the 124th Infantry, was promoted to the rank of Major, according to an announcement by Lt. Col. Henry W. McMillan, Jr., Commanding Officer, 124th Infantry.

Major Macfarlan is formerly from Miami (Fla.) where he was Democratic Chairman of Dade County, resigning that position upon entering active service on Nov. 25, 1940. He now resides at Fort Benning with his wife and two children.

He enlisted in the Florida National Guard in 1923, and served in the ranks as private, corporal, sergeant and top-kick.

Major Macfarlan was commissioned a second lieutenant in March 1929, then a first lieutenant and captain, in command of Company "A" and was transferred to the Regimental Staff in December, 1941, as Intelligence officer.

Lt. Callahan Made Captain

Promotion of 1st Lt. Henry R. Callahan of Newark, N. J., to the rank of captain in the Army of the United States was announced here today.

Capt. Callahan was called to active duty as a Reserve Officer Feb. 1, 1941, and spent almost a year in the headquarters of the Second Corps Area at Gouvernor's Island, N. Y., before coming to The Infantry School in January of this year to attend the officers training course. Following his graduation in April he was assigned to the Second Student Training Regiment here, a unit engaged exclusively in the training of Infantry Officer Candidates. Capt. Callahan is now serving as executive officer of Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the Regiment, the company which supplies the administrative personnel for the Regiment.

Chaplain's Corner..

CHAPLAIN PETER J. QUINN
124th Infantry

Writing an article for the Chaplain's Column in The Bayonet is indeed a pleasure. Today I am going to try and give the reader an idea of chaplain's duties and work from the practical viewpoint.

Since the 124th. Infantry is a combat regiment, engaged at present as a demonstration regiment with the Infantry School, the experience of a chaplain assigned to such a regiment may be interesting. The old saying that a chaplain works only "one day a week" is not true of the chaplains in the army today; whether it was true of those in the past, I do not know.

The T. O. of the Infantry regiment calls for three chaplains or one chaplain for every twelve hundred men. First of all, the fundamental purpose of the office of a chaplain in the field is to provide religious worship, spiritual ministration, moral counsel, and religious guidance for those under his jurisdiction. This is not a part-time job—It is a full day's work seven days a week.

How is this work divided among the three chaplains? Here in this regiment we have two Protestant chaplains and one Catholic. The Protestant chaplains take care of religious services for the Protestant men and the Catholic chaplain for the Catholic men. Regarding welfare cases and other needs of the men, there is no such division.—Whoever is on duty or in the office at the time takes care of that particular soldier's needs, regardless of his church affiliations, whether he be Jew, Catholic, or Protestant. For example, the other morning I was in my office preparing for my early morning service. A soldier came to my door and said he had just received word that his sister had died and he needed money to go home. I immediately contacted the custodian of the Harmony Church Emergency Fund and within thirty minutes he was on his way. What denomination that boy belongs to, I do not know, but I was happy to be able to assist him.

Recently I answered my phone to hear a worried voice on the other end of the line asking if he could see me for a few minutes. I said, "Yes, come on down." As he entered my office he was out of breath, and with his Brooklyn accent, he told me his story. I had to have him repeat it, as at first it was very incoherent. He repeated it, and here was his request: "I am going out on B-19 and my girl is coming from Brooklyn this afternoon. I have no one to meet her. Would you please meet her for me?" I asked him for a description of her and his reply was, "She is the most beautiful girl in the world!" — Of course every boy thinks the same thing. So I asked him to be a little more specific, and he then described her to me. I went to the railroad station, and from his description, I recognized her getting off the train. I took her to the guest house and there the hostess entertained her until the soldier returned from his problem.—Yes, the chaplain's office is a busy place; new problems are expounded, and most of the times, they are solved. Thus the soldier's mind is eased, and therefore, he is a much better soldier after the solution.

The mission entrusted to us is supernatural. We are, so to speak, messengers speaking in God's name. We are the watchmen, hearing the Word from God's mouth and telling it from God. We are the keepers and teachers of knowledge. We are the shepherds, the pastors, the husbandmen. The church has entrusted to us certain portions of his flock. The United States Government has indicated which portion we are to attend, and has the right to demand of us a supernatural ministration.

Yes, the chaplains' work in a regiment like ours is an understanding service, based on a hierarchy of values. Automatically, in the life of a chaplain God comes first. The externals of military etiquette do not blind the chaplains to the fact that colonels and privates are important because they have souls to save. The chaplains owe them their spiritual allegiance and their prayers, as well as the absolution they can impart to penitents. Often they inspire him to saving humility by their own generosity in serving God. Generosity is perhaps the soldierly trait which often encourages the chaplain. Here in our regiment, for example, the commanding officer is more than generous to the chaplains.—Well equipped chapels, offices, assistants and transportation are provided by him for his chaplains. With his permission a very thorough census has been taken of every man in the regiment. This census is in book form, and the chaplains here know the church affiliations of every man in the regiment. This is of inestimable value to each chaplain in the exercise of his religious duty.

Personally, this present tour of duty has brought great edification and spiritual consolation. How satisfying is the sight of the work itself!—The smile that greets the chaplain's daily visits to the hospital, the healthy, confident grin of the man who has just received the Sacraments, the record of instructions.—These and other activities that make up the long day of the chaplain give reason to hope that America can be saved spiritually by the present generation of soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Whatcha Say, Soldier? Let's Go to Church--

The Communique, Camp Livingston, La.

It's probably been a long time since you've been to church and you probably resent anyone's suggesting you try going again.

Maybe you were never much on praying and you thought the guys who wore collars and donned clerical robes were dull stuff.

Maybe you didn't like the fluttering old ladies, the familiar hymns, the lean-faced deacons. Or the cherubic faced altar boys, the choir or the kneeling. Maybe you'd rather sleep off Saturday night's revel on Sunday mornings.

That was in civilian life. Things were easier and different, then. Religion was pretty important, but it didn't mean much to you. There were too many other things to be done.

Besides church was for women and the pastyfaced guys. The real guy who understood the world and its ways didn't need religion. He lived it by being a good guy—that was your argument.

It used to be our argument, too. A fella didn't have to go to church to let the world know he believed in God and wanted to live up to all that religion was supposed to mean.

It was a swell argument — a clincher, in fact—when you discussed religion over midnight coffee or hotly debated it over a hamburg in your corner lunch cart during the wee hours of the morning.

But honestly, weren't you a take?

Wasn't the argument something you built up because you didn't want to be bothered going to church or were too lazy to make it on Sundays? Or because you just didn't like going to church?

And weren't you a failure at living up to the creed you so smugly laid down? Didn't you occasionally covet your neighbor's wife, push a guy in the face to get yourself a little further up near the top? Did you always love thy neighbor as thyself?

There's no point in enumerating the others, you're caught. You did break the rules and truthfully, didn't you break with yourself? While you were hollering 'hypocrite' at everybody else weren't you a bit on the hypocritical side yourself?

NO ARGUMENT

This is no argument for you to go to church. Maybe you don't need to go. Maybe you've found out how to live up to all the rules. If you have, don't go.

But let's get this straight. These are tough days on a guy. Days when it's easy to lose faith and days when a guy's courage is undergoing its greatest test, and there's no use foolin' about the future. It's going to be even tougher when we get into this war with both feet.

Maybe you think you don't need religion, but did you ever stop to think in the days ahead when you're going to need something to lean on, something to believe in? Because maybe we'll stop believing in a lot of other things out there.

You'll find religion in the Army is the kind of religion a guy can understand because it's the kind that understands a guy with a gun in his hands.

Maybe you remember the chaplain at Pearl Harbor who shouted, "Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition." And way back in the Revolution there was Chaplain James Caldwell who was in the thick of the New Jersey battle at Springfield. When the patriots ran out of paper shot for their muzzle loaders, he dashed into a country church nearby and emerged with an armful of hymn books. "Now put Watts into 'em, boys!" And then there was Father Duffy.

Try going to church some Sunday, soldier. See if you don't find that something that's been missing from your life. See if it doesn't help a guy to have faith in himself and the uncertain future. See if it doesn't sort of make you warm and proud and happy inside.

And see if it doesn't give you something to lean on when things go wrong. And from now on, lots of things can go wrong.

Chaplain Corps Personalities

1st Lt. Frederick Helfer, the new Regimental Chaplain of the 1st Student Training Regiment, commanded by Col. Thomas R. Gibson, comes to the Regiment from Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, where for eight years he has been pastor and councilor to the student body. He has spent thirteen years with students, having served in a similar capacity the five preceding years at Eureka College, in Illinois.

The college career of Lt. Helfer was cut short, when in his junior year at Bethany College, West Va., he left to join the A. E. F. and was commissioned in France as the youngest chaplain in World War I. His first assignment was with the 326th Infantry, 82nd Division, an All-American unit. He served in France for eight months after the Armistice as head of a hospital, a German prison camp and a demobilization station, all at the same time.

Upon his return to civilian life, he completed his college and graduate work at the University of Pittsburgh and University of Chicago.

Mrs. Helfer and one daughter are here at Fort Benning with the Lieutenant. Another daughter is a junior at Bethany College.

Lt. Helfer is very pleased with his appointment to the 1st Student Training Regiment, as he enjoys to work with students and understands and appreciate their points of view. In a statement to the BAYONET, Lt. Helfer said, "I feel the office of the Chaplain is the place for Officers-Candidates and men of the Regiment to bring any personal difficulties or home worries to be ironed out and a place to drop in from time to time to keep up good fellowship."

Paratroopers Promote 5

From headquarters of the Parachute School comes notification of the promotion of three first lieutenants to captain and two second lieutenants to first.

The officers advanced to captain were Lt. Richard Campbell, assistant secretary of the school, Lt. Sanford Frank, instructor in jump training and Lt. Fred C. Stone, instructor with the demolition section.

The new first lieutenants are Lt. Forrest T. Ulm, a member of the demolition section and Lt. Larry L. Lynch, of the supply office.

Capt. Campbell, who was formerly personnel officer of the Parachute School, was a member of Officer Candidate Class Number One, and qualified as a jumper in March, 1942. The other two captains, Frank and Stone both qualified as paratroopers in May, 1942. Captain Frank was formerly commanding officer of a line company of the 32nd Infantry, Portland, Oregon, and Captain Stone came to the Parachute School from the Infantry School, where he was a student officer.

Akron, O., is the home of Captain Campbell, Captain Frank comes from Portland, Ore., and Captain Stone from Alexandria, La.

G. I. Summary Of World News

BY SGT. H. E. WHITTEMORE

The armies of the great nations were locked in destiny-shaping battles as November turned the corner of time this week. More apparent each passing day was the fact that development in the final weeks of fleeting 1942 will have a vitally-important bearing on the length of World War II.

Grim U. S. Marines, sailors and soldiers, who knew what it meant to "kill or be killed" were battling the Solomon-invading Japs to a standstill on Guadalcanal Island and were counter-attacking early in the week.

Jap infantrymen, tanks, many planes and nearly a half score of ships had been lost but not without a tremendous cost to U. S. forces, carrying on without the aircraft carrier, Wasp, fourth American carrier sent to the bottom in the present conflict, and several other cruisers, destroyers and transports.

Elsewhere on the South Pacific battlefront, the Americans and Australians were battling the yellow-men on even terms, were advancing slowly through jungle swamps on New Guinea and were consolidating bases on other strategic islands in the Solomons and other northern Australian islands. Possession of these islands could mean—for the Jap— invasion of Australia, for the Allies—a road to Tokyo.

In the second important theater of war—the blazing deserts of North Africa—the British Eighth Army, a cosmopolitan collection of Allied nations fighting men were deep in the heart of the German Afrika Corps, battling for a knock-out blow to Rommel's forces, consisting of a half dozen divisions of German and Italian infantry and tank troops. American airmen rode the bullet-whipped airplanes over the desert fighting, as the Allies endeavored to open a path to the Mediterranean and Italy and Rommel worked to "have and to hold" the desert lands had wrested from the British earlier in 1942.

Winter blasts were whistling through the streets of Russian cities and villages this week as Hitler's legions still knocked savagely at the barred doors of bloody Stalingrad and still received the same answer — Russian bullets, tanks, and planes. The Germans had succeeded in winning a few blocks from the tired Red Army, but even as they did this at a tremendous cost in men and machines, the Russians were counter-attacking in other sections of the fighting front. And what is most important, as winter approached to slow the killing in Russia, was the fact that the Red armies were still intact.

Italy was taking it "on the chin" last week from high-flying, army-efficient British flying aces who gave several Italian industrial centers a savage pasting. Genoa, Turin, Milan took the brunt of Allied high explosives as the English worked to cut Rommel's life-line, supplies from the Italian factories.

American troops marched toward the battlefronts of the world this week and their fellow American citizens took a few moments from war production to march to the polls and vote in the first U. S. wartime election since 1918. Maybe they heard the tramp of soldiers' boots as they voted, may be they made a silent promise to themselves to help maintain those principles for which their sons, brothers and friends were over there fighting for — maybe they worked a little faster when they returned to the production lines.

Temporarily shelved for election was the Congressional debate on the drafting of 18 and 19-year old boys for Army service. Debate on the bill—with the side issues of prohibition near Army camps and an amendment to provide a year's training before the youngsters can go into combat

POST SUPPLY CHIEF NAMED

Col. Massey Placed As Coordinator In New Reorganization

Two new major staff assignments in a reorganization plan have been announced by Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, with Col. Stephen B. Massey becoming director of supply and Lt. Col. John P. Edgerly being named executive officer, a post left vacant since the departure of Major Maynard Ashworth.

Under the reorganization plan, Colonel Massey, formerly quartermaster, will direct all supplies, communications, transportation, ordnance, subsistence, and all branches having to do with the supply of the thousands of troops stationed at the post. Functioning as Colonel Massey's assistants will be officers heading the various branches, but responsibility for all supply problems will be placed in the director's position.

Lt. Col. Edgerly, the new executive officer, has had many years of varied military service and comes to Fort Benning from Charlotte, N. C., where he had charge of the recruiting induction office.

A graduate of the Naval Academy in 1910, Colonel Edgerly served with the fleet until 1911 when he resigned to become a second lieutenant in the infantry. He saw action in the Mexican punitive expedition of 1916 and during the World War served as a major with the air corps, but returned to the infantry in 1920.

Colonel Edgerly is a graduate of the field officers' course at the Infantry School at Fort Benning and the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth. He was senior instructor in the Vermont National Guard for five years and in 1934 he retired, but in November, 1940 he was recalled to active duty. He was promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel in May, 1941.

3 More Winners Are Announced By 'Bayonet'

Six more bucks in search of temporary abodes in nice warm pockets have attained their quests as three additional soldiers are awarded BAYONET prizes for original contributions.

Last week Lt. F. M. Schilling won the prize for the most original contribution with his two editorial letters "Dear Son" and "Dear Mom," and his prize money will be added to the chaplains' fund of the fourth battalion, First Student Training Regiment.

"Moa'ning Repo't" by Cpl. Lester A. Sobel, Co. C, 54th Armored Infantry, 10th Armored Division, was adjudged the best poem published, and Artist V. Harris gets the prize for the best cartoon with his 'It's the only way we can get him to jump..' "

These winners are asked to report to the Public Relations office at main post headquarters to sign vouchers and receive their checks. We are sorry, fellers, that this is necessary and that we can't just mail the checks to you, but Army Regulations stipulate that the disbursing officer must have the vouchers signed as receipts that the money has been paid out.

Incidently we have several checks waiting for some of the winners to pick up. Lt. Michael Bach of the Third Student Training Regiment has checks totaling four dollars, G. A. Cook of the Reproduction plant has a sum; T. Sgt. W. D. Smith of Station Hospital has a two dollar check; and Louis A. Veltri also has two dollars waiting for him.

Meantime, please keep sending in your contributions. We will publish them as rapidly as possible, subject to the space we have available. Don't be discouraged if your contribution doesn't appear a few days after it leaves your hands. Many of the cartoons are already in metal and will be inserted soon.

Data Compiled Here For New Army Manual

Meat Specialists Study Problems In An Army Kitchen

Using Fort Benning as a "living laboratory" for one of the most exacting experiments ever conducted in teaching methods of the cutting, handling and distribution of meats, experts of the National Livestock and Meat Board will prepare a new training manual as a result of what they are learning here. This manual will be made available to all unit supply officers.

Results of the knowledge gained at Fort Benning will be put into practice for a thorough check at several other large army camps, then will be compiled into a manual for use by unit supply personnel groups concerned with the issuing of meat.

Data for the new manual is being gathered by H. H. White and D. R. Miller, both of Chicago, experts of the Board who have been conducting an intensive series of classes for unit supply groups daily since Oct. 26. The classes will come to an end this Saturday.

Taking the 29th Infantry as a typical unit, the two meat experts have used that organization for demonstration purposes. Classes for mess sergeants and cooks are held each morning while other classes and demonstrations for unit supply personnel of the Post who are responsible for supplying the kitchen with meat have been held in the afternoons all over the Reservation.

The two experts took the mean drawn as rations for the 29th Infantry and demonstrated in terms of that particular organization just how many pounds of meat of certain cut could be obtained from a carcase or from a quarter. They then translated that into terms of distribution to the various companies, depending upon the number of men to be served.

As an example, on one day when the menu called for beef roasts and ground beef, 19 kind quarters were drawn for the regiment. The men then broke down the meat cuts for issue to 17 companies on the basis of strength of the company and amount of meat authorized per 100 men.

Fulton Speaks Armistice Day

In Army-Navy YMCA Downtown

Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, will be the principal speaker in the Armistice Day observance in Columbus next Wednesday, General Fulton will speak at 11 a. m. in the auditorium of the Army-Navy YMCA in downtown Columbus.

The program will be presented under the auspices of the Charles H. Harrison Post of the American Legion. The complete program will be announced later.

The program committee includes Dr. Paul M. Munro, superintendent of Columbus schools, chairman; L. D. Hill, Neal Thomas, Bentley Chappell, Father Daniel McCarthy and Willis Battle.

Fort Benning itself will observe the day quietly and "work as usual" will be the general order of the day. Lt. James Freeman, plans and training officer, stated that Benning will proceed with all activities in furtherance of the war effort.

"Bond-A-Dearos" Sell Bonds For Heroes

The Fort Benning committee directing the huge War Bond breakfast schedule for Sunday morning, Nov. 15 at 9 a. m., is missing no bets if it means that more dollars will be added to the war chest. So these "bond-a-dears" set out and the first soldiers they enlisted in the drive were Capt. Barney Oldfield, Intelligence officer of the 505th Parachute Infantry, and Pvt. Phillip Grossman of headquarters Detachment, DEML. In the photo from left to right are Mrs. Doris Lee, Miss Estelle Patrick, Pvt. Grossman, Capt. Oldfield, Miss Elizabeth Morgan, and Miss Sara Bross. Bond-A-Dears to Launch Drive For War Securities Breakfast

Sweatered Fort Beauties Are Determined To Double Quota

"Buy a bond from a Bond-A-Dear," will be the cry ringing out at all service clubs and post exchanges at Fort Benning next week.

The "Bond-A-Dears," an organization of 25 pretty, female bond salesmen, will visit the favorite haunts of the soldier in an effort to increase bond sales and boost attendance at the Fort Benning War Bond Breakfast, on Sunday morning, November 15.

Clad in smart sweaters and divided into teams of six, the young women will visit approximately 25 different places on the post, during the course of the seven days. They will visit each club or exchange in the evening between 7 and 10 p. m., giving information about the breakfast and selling bonds to those desiring to attend.

The affair is open to officers, enlisted men and their families and will feature an outstanding, national figure, as yet unannounced, who will be the guest-of-honor and the top-billed speaker. Admission is by purchase of a War Bond, $18.75 or more, and a fifty-cent breakfast ticket.

In addition to the Bond-A-Dears, bonds and tickets can be obtained from the unit War Bond officers, and from booths in the various officers' and service clubs, and a booth in front of the finance office. These are being manned by members of the Fort Benning Women's Club, who have donated their time to make this the biggest affair to hit Benning.

QUOTA $30,000

The quota for the breakfast conservatively set at $30,000, will in all probability be far oversubscribed, judging from advance sales.

Many large cities have held similar ventures, but this is the first all-soldier breakfast in America.

Every commanding officer on the post has given his endorsement and each is planning to participate personally. With such support the previously estimated attendance mark of 600 should be easily achieved.

Organizations are reminded that company funds can be used for investment in War Bonds. It is suggested that as many as possible purchase bonds and send men to the breakfast. Two men will be admitted from each unit buying a $50 or more bond. Sales for the breakfast will officially close Thursday, November 12.

The Bond-A-Dears, who held their first meeting Monday, include representatives from many offices on the post. The 25 chosen were: Elizabeth Morgan (First Sergeant), Mildred Feinberg, Verne Niederprum, Rosanne O'Kelley, Nell Freeman, Sara Bridges, Nalda Fitzgerald, Mary M. Culbreth, Charlotte Baughman, Estelle Patrick, Doris Lee, Peggie Moore, post headquarters; Sara Bross, Ruth Cohen, station hospital; Martha Woolbright, Mamie Nicholson, Marguerite Brescia, Winona Andrews, Lorraine Potter, Margaret Coan, quartermaster; Marion Johnson, commissary; Mary Childress, Civil Service board; Miriam Noel, Transportation; Mildred Arnold, headquarters, Lawson Field; Isabelle Chadwick, finance.

Assistant S-2 At Benning Is Transferred

First Lt. Fobert Burton, assistant intelligence officer at Fort Benning, has been ordered to another station, it was announced at post headquarters.

Lt. Burton came to Fort Benning in April of this year and was immediately assigned to intelligence work. He came here from Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Generals Urge Men Support War Bond Drive Here

Four Fort Benning general officers today issued statements urging the personnel of the post —officers and enlisted men alike —to join in wholehearted support of the current War Bond drive here and attend the War Bond Breakfast on Nov. 15th.

Maj. Gen. Paul Newgarden, Commanding Officer of the 10th Armored Division; Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, Commandant of the Infantry School; Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, Commandant of the Parachute School; and Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, joined in the united appeal to the post personnel.

General Newgarden's statement follows:

"It is gratifying to note the wholehearted support given the War Bond Drive by military personnel, and I am sure the War Bond Breakfast will prove to be a record-breaker as well as another Fort Benning First."

General Allen's statement said:

"Men in uniform have never needed much prompting to buy their share of war bonds. They well know the need of proper financing when it comes to fighting a battle. Money will provide the necessary guns, ammunition, food and clothing without which victory cannot be achieved. The man in khaki knows that one war bond may make the difference between life and death for one of his buddies, for himself, for his family. It might turn the tide of battle. I feel confident Fort Benning's military men will make the War Bond Breakfast on Nov. 15 a huge success."

General Howell's statement follows:

"It is the duty of all personnel in the military service to do their utmost to win this war. Each officers and enlisted man who attends the Fort Benning War Bond Breakfast will be adding a little more to the successful progress of

10,000 To See Grid Tilt With Pensacola Foe

Army-Navy Spectacle In Stadium Starts At 2 P. M. Sunday

The greatest gridiron spectacle in Fort Benning's history will be unfolded before some 10,000 onlookers Sunday afternoon in Doughboy Stadium when the crack Pensacola Naval Air Station eleven, coached by the redoubtable Potsy Clark, invades the post for a battle with an all-star aggregation of soldier footballers.

Former college stars from almost every corner of the nation, including several all-Americans, will line up for the opening kick-off, scheduled for 2 o'clock sharp. Bands will play, soldiers will march, pretty girls will be on hand, mascots will romp, and flags will wave as America's greatest military post has its own version of an Army-Navy football classic.

FOUR BENNING TEAMS

From the mere standpoint of pigskin stars alone, the game is a four-star attraction. Pensacola will bring a squad of some 40 men, all but three of whom have gained renown on college gridirons in the past few years. And to combat this barrage of Naval stars, Benning will field not one, but four, complete teams.

The best fifteen men from each of the top four teams in the strong Fort Benning Conference have been chosen for the all-star squad, and supplemented with a few collegiate aces who have not played as yet on a Benning grid this fall. It is expected that the teams will be played as units throughout the game, with each eleven seeing action for approximately one quarter of the battle.

The four clubs are the 124th Infantry, the 117th Infantry, the 29th Infantry, and the 3rd Arm-

Lt. Barry Wins Captain's Bars

A graduate of Virginia Military Institute, class of 1920, Lt. Berry was formerly president of the Berry and Brown firm in Marianna, Fla.

Fugitive From The Chow Line Tells Old Sarge How He Does It

Little Woman Is Handy Stooge To Have Around

Dear Editor:

I read the Ole Sarge's interesting account of Army lines in a recent issue of the BAYONET, and can't figure out to this day why he is getting so excited. The lines, at least some of them, can be beaten, I know because I am a fugitive from a Columbus chow line. It's all very easy if you know how, especially if you have wife handy. A wife is a very handy thing to have around in this man's Army.

I don't think I ought to be selfish and keep it a secret. After all, everybody in the country has been calling for unity: united we stand, divided it makes it easy for some guy to muscle into a line. And I say, down with lines! So I have decided to be magnanimous and let the fellas in on the little secret.

Take movie lines, for instance. All you gotta do is walk up to the line near its head, of course, until you find a guy you know, or a young girl who serves the purpose even better, especially since she probably won't be able to resist a uniform. Ask him or her, as the case may be, if he or she would very kindly buy your ticket for you. Don't let all those people behind the sucker bother you. Yep, they've been standing there for at least 30 minutes, patiently awaiting their turn and observing the old American custom of first come, first served. If that's the way they want it, that's the way they want it. Let 'em stand there, but I'll lay you a dollar to a dime that I'll have seen the pic and be ready for the S & S line before those poor goofs ever see the inside of the show. You gotta be hard-boiled in this war, so I feel no pangs of conscience if I work up from the bottom and into a comfortable seat in five minutes flat.

LIGHT BRIGADE CHARGES

Now just suppose after getting me, suckers all around me, but into the valley of trills sweep the 600 minus 599.

Now for the trick. You remember the poor sheep following the leader to the slaughter; one man jumps and the others follow him into the water? Just persuade a buddy or two, or maybe a little kid or three to step out of line and plough straight ahead. Like the sheep all those out of line will sweep right down with you, and the dumbkopfs who have stood in line for another 30 minutes after getting past the ticket window licking their chops over the prospects of getting a seat in another 20 minutes will be left holding the bag. In a second the stampede is on, and those poor fish now find half a regiment in front of them where only a platoon stood before. Some of them will be made enough to demand of the managre that money be refunded, but most of them will smile philosophically, charge it to experience, and wonder why they didn't think of the idea first. Ain't nothing there to stop you; the helpless ushers haven't a Chinaman's chance, not even if they have fixed bayonets. I remember how we used to beat the ticket racket in the big football games in the east. Buy a $1.10 ticket to the game, wait five minutes after the kickoff and then start a bum's rush to the $3.33 seats. One man they can stop, but who can stop 10,000? It ain't exactly cricket, but, Johnny, this ain't no cricket game; it's football.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK

All you gotta do is remember how we used to beat the game back in the subway. Remember how we bought one slug, picked out a guy with a good strong back, let one fella climb on his back and a third fella on the second one's back and then all three went through the turnstiles for a nickel? Well, it's the same principle. Naw, it ain't fair, but who cares. My conscience don't bother me

Now about that chow line at the S & S. They open down there around five bells. In the meantime some folks may have been sitting around waiting for fifteen or twenty minutes. They came to cook at home because they ain't got nothing to cook it on. I can get a filling, healthful plate in the mess hall back on the post, but I'd rather not. Let 'em eat cake as Marie Antoinette said. She only lost her head for saying it. But what the heck. I have only one head to lose for my country. So just before the time for serving arrives, I get inside the door of the cafe, making sure to stay near the door, dropping three or four pennies in the scales and pretending to weigh just so I ain't asked to move inside to a table. Then when they give us the green light, there I am right at the head of the 50 customers who beat me there by a good fifteen minutes, and I get the first serving. Ain't it simple?

ENTER THE LITTLE WOMAN

Remember way back at the start of this letter I mentioned the wife. Boy, of boy, can she be handy sometimes. Ain't nobody in this man's army gonna stop a woman, naw, suh. Send her on ahead to the movies, and you can bet she can get an early ticket. They teach us to be aggressive in this man's army and what's sauce for the gander is sauce for the goose. I teach mine to be aggressive-like. I send her ahead of the line, and she brings home the bacon. Of course, I could be aggressive myself, but ain't nobody gonna punch a lady, naw suhree, bob!

The wife is especially good at getting seats on a train. Send her on ahead with the red-cap and baggage and when you get there, there'll be a seat waiting for you. Nobody's gonna dispute with you because they figger a man should be with his wife

What's New With Q. M.?

This little item will no doubt make your face light up, and have you throwing awey your Blitz rag. You'll be elated because Uncle Sam's quartermasters are now starting to provide G. I. belts with buckles that don't have to be polished!

The newest buckle, which the Benning warehouses have just begun issuing, needs little or no attention from a polishing rag. There are two reasons for adopting the new buckle. The first is that brass is becoming increasingly scarce, and while it is still used to some extent in the present buckle, it may be replaced in the near future.

Also, in combat zones, the brightly polished brass buckles formerly in use would have to be "blacked out" anyway, so there could be no reflection. Therefore, the Q.M.C. is now issuing buckles that have already been darkened. And are we happy about it?

A notable change has just been announced by the Q.M.C. in the matter of handling alterations of clothing for new inductees. Previously you'll remember, alterations had to be delayed until the soldier had been transferred from the induction center to his first regular station. Now, however, plans are being made to take care of all necessary alterations right at the clothing warehouses where they are issued.

Latest training school opened by the Quartermaster Corps, which is the instructor for most of the Army, is one at Camp Lee, Virginia, for civilian warehouse experts. It is part of a general program of instruction aimed at making selected civilians available to the various supply services of the Army.

The first class, composed of about 100 men with experience in commercial and industrial warehousing, is already in session studying the various phases of Army depot operation. The ones who successfully complete the course of instruction will be commissioned in the Army Specialist Corps in grades depending upon the aptitude shown at the school. They will then be assigned to depots to relieve officers for field duty.

Special emphasis in the intensive course is being placed on training in conservation of space and manpower, and efficient handling of supplies. In addition, the training is designed to give the Army Specialists a thorough understanding of Army methods. More than 1,000 civilians are expected to take the course befofe the present demand is met for that type of personnel.

The Quartermaster Corps will not be procuring any more horses for the Army, at least for the remainder of this year. It has just been announced that the year's quota has been purchased from horse breeders, and at least until next year, when the expansion of the armed forces is expected to hit new highs, no more mounts are needed. During the fiscal year of 1941, the Q.M.C. Remount division procured and trained 28,000 G. I. animals.

One slogan of the Quartermaster Corps is "Keep 'Em Supplied," and the supply branch is adopting every possible means to insure that this aim is carried out. Anticipating difficulties in getting supplies into snow-bound areas, the Q.M.C. is soon to begin training sledge dogs and enlisted men as drivers so that dog teams can haul food and equipment over frozen wastes if all other means fail.

Once again the busy Remount division is in charge, and an old C.C.C. camp near Helena, Montana, has been set up for the training. The enlisted men assigned to this station will receive instruction in sledge driving and the care of huskies, malamutes and St. Bernards, the threes principal breeds to be used for this purpose.

Experienced dog teamsters will serve as instructors for the soldiers, and both dog and driver will receive a six-to-eight weeks course of instruction. The canines to be used for this work will be obtained through the same channels as those being used for sentry duty with the armed forces.

Maj. Stubbs Made Lt. Col.

Another milestone has been passed by Maj. William E. Stubbs with the announcement by Colonel Ellis F. Altman, commanding officer of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck), of his promotion to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Lieut. Col. Stubbs, who comes from Berea, O., is no newcomer to army service. Back in April, 1917, the urge to serve his country struck him and he enlisted in the United States Army in time to see foreign service. During his 16 months abroad with the AEF he served in the 5th Trench Mortar Battalion of the famous Fifth Division and participated, with distinction, in five major campaigns.

Returning to the United States at the end of the war, Lt. Col. Stubbs was not content to settle down in one place so he became a traveling salesman and covered 32 states while in that line of work. In 1933 he became associated with a company that manufactured Beauty Parlor Equipment and Display Fixtures and soon worked his way into the presidency of this firm. Later, he became the owner of this same business, located in the nearby city of Cleveland, and was engaged in that work when called back into active service on January 8, 1941. He served as recruiting and induction officer at Fort Hayes, O. until September of that year and was then ordered to attend the Battalion and Staff Officers Course. The Infantry School, at Fort Benning. Graduating from that school, he was assigned the task of activating the First Battalion of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck).

Since being called back to active service, Lt. Col. Stubbs has completed courses at the General and Field Officers School, Atlanta Motor Base, Atlanta, Ga. and the Officers Motor Maintenance School, Fort Benning. At present he is assigned to the Second Battalion of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck) where he serves as Battalion Commander.

Capt. Posey Made Major

Captain Everett Posey of Woodruff, S. C., has recently been promoted to the rank of Major at the Infantry Officers' School here at Fort Benning.

After graduating from The Citadel, Charleston, S. C., in 1928, Major Posey became associated with the Pacific Textile Mills at Lyman. He was active in Spartanburg County Reserve Officer Association affairs until he was called to active duty February 25, 1942.

He was assigned to the 24th Infantry and remained with that organization until February 19, 1942, at which time he went to Camp Blanding, Fla. He returned to Fort Benning in April 1942 and joined the Third Student Training Regiment as assistant Supply Officer. In September he became Regimental Supply Officer, which is the position he now holds in the Third Student Training Regiment.

'Yank' Sponsors Nuts To Axis Note Contest

Hitting the Axis where it hurts—that's the aim of the "Nuts to the Axis" contest now being sponsored by YANK, the official Army Newspaper.

The contest, which is open to servicemen only, was first announced in the October 21 issue of YANK, and calls for short, hard-hitting messages to Hitler, Mussolini or Tojo. Winning messages will be broadcast to all parts of the world through the cooperation of the Office of War Information.

To enter their "Nuts to the Axis" messages, soldiers must use a coupon printed in YANK, and they must write on one of six subjects as follows:

1. "I'll Be Seein' You!"
2. "Here's What I'm Fighting For."
3. "My Father Did It in 1918."
4. "Doolittle Was Only the Beginning."
5. "If I Had You in My Squad."
6. "I've Got a Better Idea—Here It Is."

(The soldier's own subject)

Messages may be any length up to 200 words, and with the exception of cussing or obscene language, no holds are barred. The full-page advertisement in the Army Newspaper states that this is the average yardbird's chance to tell the Axis big shots what he thinks of them.

Not only will the most original blasts at Hitler, Mussolini or Tojo be broadcast, but winners will receive free six-month subscriptions to YANK. Names of all winners and some of the winning messages will be printed in the Army Newspaper.

All entries must be postmarked on or before midnight, December 10, 1942, and winning messages will be broadcast as soon after that date as possible. Soldiers, sailors and marines all over the world are urged to use this opportunity to tell the Axis what Uncle Sam's fighting men are thinking these days.

WASHINGTON—The girls back home working for the Government have decided to run a beauty contest. Entered so far are: Miss OPA, Miss WPB, Miss FSA, Miss WAR, Miss OWI, and Miss Republic 7500. The last named is a telephone number.

Georgia Mother Gives 5 Officers to Uncle Sam

A record of having five children in service as officers in the Army of the United States is the contribution of Mrs. Lillian E. Baugh of Millersville, Ga., the mother of Lt. James E. Baugh, a student in the 6th company of the First Student Training Regiment.

Lt. Baugh is taken the Motor Maintenance course at The Infantry School. He is one of four sons and one daughter holding commissions in the Army.

Other members of the family in service include Captain Marvin Baugh of the Army Air Corps, 1st Lt. Joseph R. Baugh, 1st Lt. John W. Baugh, and 2nd Lt. James E. Baugh, all with the infantry. Their sister, Lt. Myrtle E. Baugh is with the medical corps as a nurse.

Mrs. Baugh's sons received their military training at Georgia Military College in Millersville. The one now attending The Infantry School received a reserve commission in 1939 and was called to active duty in 1942 while attending the University of Georgia. At present he is attached to the 82nd Division.

In September of this year Mrs. Baugh received a personal letter from the Secretary of War, Henry L. Stimson, in recognition of the contribution she has made to her country. She also has been honored by the Emblem of Honor Association who have awarded her a Five Star Pin.

French People Await Yanks, O. C. Declares

From The Pine-Bur

"Ninety per cent of all French men, women, and children anxiously await the opening of an Allied front, and will take up arms against their German oppressors and beat them back to the Berlin line," stated an O. C. in 26th Company Second Student Training Regiment.

Raymond P. Raux, who is a member of that company, joined the army of the United States partly to help set his homeland free. He left his birthplace and kin-folk in Lyons, France in Aug., 1933 to come to America.

"France," Raux stated, "was overly optimistic on the eve of the war. Even just before the occupation of France, night clubs in all the large cities were filled to capacity. I believe German propaganda was largely responsible for the apparent inaptitude and false security of a freedom-loving and peaceful people.

"Letters from my sister in France before its fall depicted an unsound belief in the strength and impregnability of the 'Maginot Line,' and the defensive spirit as an instrument of war."

He went on to say that Lyons was a deserted town two days after German occupation, for the Germans drove all before them as the French realized too late that a corrupt government and a taxarmy couldn't stop the well-trained German juggernaut.

Raux's sister fled from Paris before the invading enemy troops. She escaped, riding a bicycle through the gates of the capital on the eve of that city's capitulation. On reaching the Spanish border, she was stopped by guards in her intended flight to the United States.

"My brother-in-law, an Air Corps lieutenant, at present, like millions of other Frenchmen, is waiting the Big Push of the United Nations that will free him and other Frenchmen to re-establish their rights once more as Free French citizens," Raux went on to say.

"I myself, as was the case of all French young men, served once in the Republic's Army. I was and still am proud of that period of service, just as I am now proud to be numbered among the ranks of Uncle Sam's forces. I believe the old French army stood for and fought for the same principles so dear to the American people — democracy, liberty, equality, and fraternity. I believe that some day—some day soon—France will again be placing her arms in the field to regain these things she has lost."

Maj. Darby Is Lt. Colonel

The recent promotion of Maj. James E. Darby to the rank of lieutenant colonel has been announced by Col. Ellis F. Altman, commanding officer of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck).

Lieutenant Colonel Darby is a native of Lowrys, S. C. His parents were the late William A. and Dilla Darby of that community. Two brothers, Oswald A. and William A. Darby, live in chester and Lowrys, S. C., respectively. His wife is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Martin, of Simpsonville, S. C.

Lieutenant Colonel Darby received his early education in his home state and later graduated from Clemson College in 1925. From civilian life he was ordered to active duty and reported to Fort Benning in April, 1941. Within a short time, he was placed in command of a Quartermaster Truck Battalion and held that position until May, 1942 when, he was appointed to his present position as Executive Officer of the 21st Quartermaster Regiment (Truck).

Garrison Library

By FRANCES CHANDLER

Recommended for mystery addicts are the many exciting counter espionage tales which have been published in the last few months. Spy stories have greatly gained in popularity since the success of Helen MacInnes' "Above Suspicion" and "Assignment in Brittany"—two very exciting novels on the espionage theme. For those readers who like to spend sleepless nights, the Garrison Library has on its shelves many books guaranteed to produce just that effect.

One of the best thrillers of the season is Kurt Steel's "The Imposter." Written by a New York University professor who is an old hand at mystery stories, this book is a headline story of treason in the airplane industry and of a Nazi spy ring's daring attempt to sabotage America.

Alice Campbell's "Ringed with Fire" is an up-to-the-minute novel based on fifth column activities in wartime London. The story begins with a murder in a musty attic in Bloomsbury and leads to the very heart of the Ministry of Security.

An amusing light novel with a pleasant combination of romance, adventure, and mystery is Eileen Clements' "Perhaps a Little Danger." The story concerns the summer adventures in Scotland of the writer Peregrine family who became wholeheartedly mixed up in what turned out to be an international episode involving Nazis and the British intelligence service.

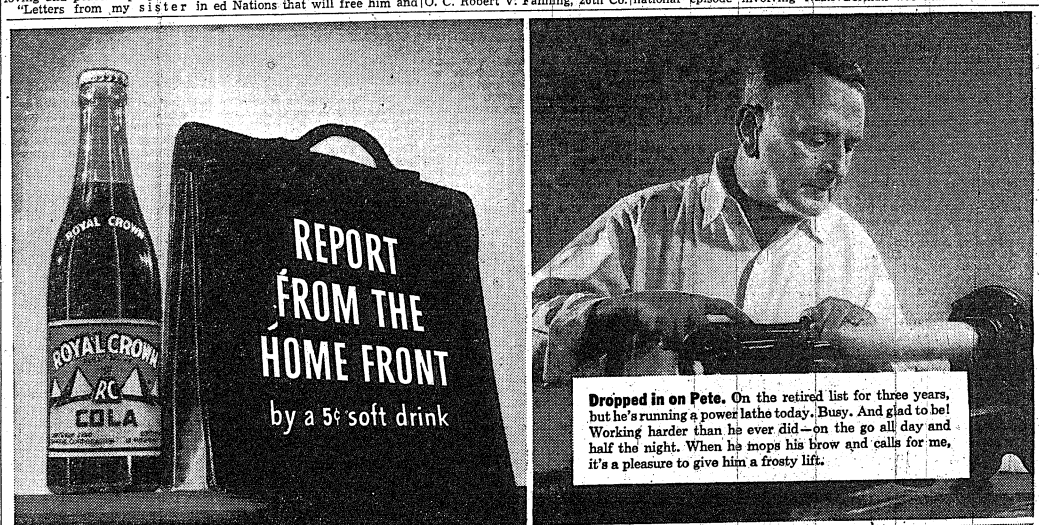
Exciting events occur rapidly in James S. Childers' "Enemy Outpost," a spy story of the present war. The scene is a private hunting and fishing lodge in the Canadian wilderness with Mike Kilpatrick, a New York newspaper man, to outwit a ring of Nazi spies.

Dennis Wheatley's "V for Vengeance" is a spy thriller packed with excitement and suspense. Against the background of Vichy France and the occupied territory, we follow several underground workers through a series of desperate adventures to sabotage the German war machine.

12 Enlisted Men In 124th Infantry Are Promoted

Twelve enlisted men of the 124th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, have been promoted to higher grades.

Sgt. Theodore S. Long, Palmetto, Fla., was promoted to staff sergeant.

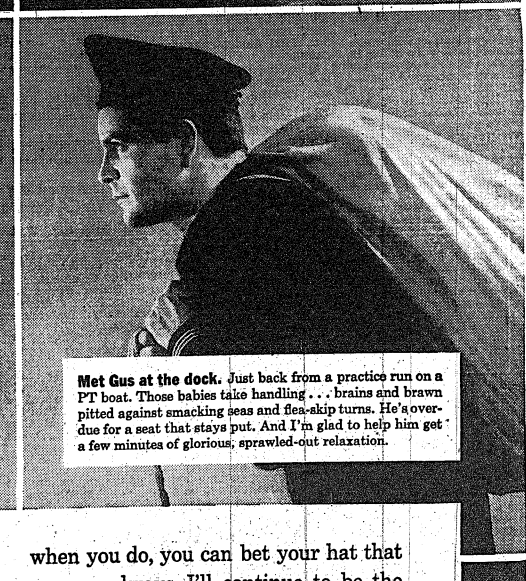


Cpls. Willard Roberts, Miami, Fla.; Clarence D. Bolton, Bagdad, Fla.; Jesse U. Lee, Sanford, Fla.; and Pfc. Kenneth W. Strickland, Hollywood, Fla., were advanced to sergeants.

Tech 5th Gr. Pasquale A. Gazzara, Hammonton, N. J.; Pfc. Gordon P. Hayes, Knoxville, Tenn.; Pfc. George A. Hughes, Sanford, Fla.; and Pvt. Arthur B. Conner, New London, Conn., were made corporals.

Pfcs. Forrest L. Chapman, Orlando, Fla.; Albert Brau, Easton, Pa.; and Herbert Logue, Whigham, Ga., were promoted to technician 5th grade.

It is unlikely that more than 10 per cent of the passenger vehicles, about 150,000, are still in use in Germany.



Travel by passenger automobile reached a peak of 501 billion miles in 1941, outstripping all other travel mileage.

Dropped in on Pete. On the retired list for three years, but he's running a power lathe today. Busy. And glad to be! Working harder than he ever did—on the go all day and half the night. When he mops his brow and calls for me, it's a pleasure to give him a frosty lift.

Called on Sally. Not at Swingtime Pavilion. In a shell factory. Working overtime to rush more sharp-nosed shells abroad. Proud of the Army-Navy "E" she wears. When she's ready for a little recess, I'm waiting at the cooler . . . ready to give her a relaxed moment and a fresh start.

Met Gus at the dock. Just back from a practice run on a PT boat. Those babies take handling . . . brains and brawn pitted against smacking seas and flea-skip turns. He's overdue for a seat that stays put. And I'm glad to help him get a few minutes of glorious, sprawled-out relaxation.

Shall I go on? But you know how soft drinks cover the home front. More than 39,000,000 calls a day . . . on Americans who know how to put in their licks to help win the war . . . Americans with a shrewd understanding that one relaxed moment makes working and fighting easier.

Occasionally for a day or so, you may not find me at your store or cooler. But when you do, you can bet your hat that now, as always, I'll continue to be the cola that's best by taste-test.

"A church standing at the junction of two roads has its roof blown away; the windows and their frames are missing; the organ lies in ruins, its pipes and fittings all mixed with the rubble, broken brick and stone, plaster, splintered glass, broken wood that now make up an interior of desolation. The winter snow covers the whole with white robes. Alone, like a watchful sentinel, the clock tower stands, its clock still marking the hour of day. Across the front of the tower is a large poster in letters of red and blue against a white background. The poster contains one word: RESURGAM."—"I shall rise again."

Another church, near the one above, is badly ruined. Its beautiful windows all blasted and broken, and for which the vicar had given weeks collecting money to pay for them.

On the Sunday following the raid the vicar inserted in the local press this announcement. "Nevertheless, notwithstanding . . . divine worship will be held at the usual hours."

Nevertheless, notwithstanding . . .

Resurgram!

The morning cometh!

The Gates of Hell shall not prevail!

If the soldier is to see the best things prevail when he gets back home after the war is over, he must strive to maintain those best things while he is the army. It is the chaplain's duty and privilege to keep the emphasis upon those things which have eternal significance. We need scrap iron, rubber and gasoline, yes. But above all we need that inner quality of spirit which is immune to outward disaster. That quality of spirit is possible through Him who said, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." We can live this faith . . .

"Nevertheless, notwithstanding . . ."

"Resurgram! I shall rise again . . ."

Chaplain Anthony In 3rd Armored

Chaplain Thomas Melville Anthony, Regimental Chaplain of the Third Armored Regiment, of the Tenth Armored Division at Fort Benning, has been notified of his inclusion in Who's Who of the Western Hemisphere, soon to appear.

Prior to receiving his commission as a First Lieutenant in the Chaplain Corps of the Army of the United States, Chaplain Anthony was the rector of the Park Avenue Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Memphis, Tenn., for ten years, having been ordained in October, 1930. Chaplain Anthony received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Bethel College and an B.D. degree from Vanderbuilt University in 1932, and did graduate work at Scarritt College.

Chaplain Anthony began his career in the Army in June at the Chaplain's School, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., and came to the 10th Armored Armored Division in July, this year. Major Higgins, TIS, Promoted

Officer Assigned Here Last Year

Announcement has been made of the promotion of Major Maurice C. Higgins of The Infantry School, to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Colonel Higgins is commanding officer of the Casual Battalion of the school's Student Training Brigade. He was graduated from Georgetown University in 1927 and received his original commission as second lieutenant, reserve. He was called to active duty with The Civilian Conservation Corps in 1934 and served until November 1, 1940, when he was ordered on extended active duty with the Regular Army.

Colonel Higgins came to The Infantry School in October, 1941, completing the advance course here in January, 1942. He was then assigned as commanding officer of the Headquarters Company 1st Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School, and served in that capacity until the organization of the Student Training Brigade when he was placed in command of the Casual Battalion, the unit which receives newly arrived students and processes them preparatory to their start of studies.

Colonel Higgins resides at 110 Eames Ave., Fort Benning with his wife and two sons, Charles and James.

Role of Colored Soldier Described by Chaplain

Recalling the significant roles that have been played in past wars by colored soldiers from the United States, Chaplain A. L. Thomas, regimental chaplain for colored troops of the Second Student Training Regiment, in the Harmony Church Area, stated in an address before the USO-Army and Navy YMCA in Columbus on Sunday that "America can count on the loyal support of the Negro whether in or out of the Army, in the air, on land, or sea."

Chaplain Thomas' talk follows:

"Today our country is engaged in one of the greatest wars of all times and needs the undaunted assurance of the faith, courage, confidence, support, and loyalty of every citizen whether in the Army or out of the Army, whether on land, on water, or in the air. Unless we think cooperatively as citizens, work, pray, and fight in a cooperative way, we will forfeit our rights and opportunity to win this war for our country.

"As a race, Negroes from the Revolutionary War to the present have proved their ability to be loyal citizens and soldiers for their country. Negroes have served with distinction in every war that the United States has waged. They generally served in the same regiments with the white soldier. Some of the most heroic deeds of the war of independence were performed by the black man. The first martyr in Boston-Massacre, March 5, 1770 was a Negro, Crispus Attucks. Samuel Poor, another Negro, so distinguished himself at the Battle of Bunker Hill that a petition was drawn up by some of the principal officers to secure him recognition by the Massachusetts Colony. Friends, there has always been in the Army in every war a real white man as an officer, who was big enough and had the heart and courage to give the Negro soldiers the credit and courtesy deserved. We had it in the past and we have it today. Just as the giant Negro, Sampson, armed with a scythe swept his way through the British works at the fight at Brandywine Beach during the Revolutionary War, so will our Negro boys, along with others who are in this present war, sweep their way to victory for themselves and their country. All the Negro race needs any where and at any time is a chance."

WILL PROVE WORTHY

"The Negroes have been benefactors for the salvation of their country in every war from the Revolutionary War to the present war; and now all he is asking for is the rights and privileges granted him or any citizen of the United States of America now and he will prove worthy and takes his place in the present war just as he did in the past.

"Commodore Perry spoke highly of the bravery and good conduct of the many Negroes who were under his command at the Battle of Lake Erie, (War of 1812). He said: "They seemed to be absolutely insensible to danger." The legislature of New York, in October 24, 1814, authorized the raising of two regiments of men of color. As a result, 2,000 black men were enlisted and sent forward to the Army at Sackett's Harbor. Two battalions composed of 500 Negroes distinguished themselves at the battle of New Orleans. Three months before the battle, General Andrew Jackson issued a proclamation—"To the Free Colored Inhabitants of Louisiana." Friends, history has talked and will forever talk, and if you read or listen to it, it will assure you that the Negro has always been a loyal citizen to his country.

"History tells us that something like 178,975 Negro soldiers were employed in the Civil War. These made up 161 regiments, of which 141 were infantry, seven were cavalry, twelve were heavy artillery, and one light artillery. Negro troops during the Civil War were engaged in many of the bloodiest battles of the war. The engagements in which they particularly distinguished themselves were the battle of Milliken's Bend, on the Mississippi near Vicksburg, July 6, 1863; the assault on Fort Wagner; a defense of Charleston, S. C., July 18, 1863; etc. This is enough to identify the Negro boys as loyal citizens and red-blooded soldiers.

NEW ORGANIZATIONS

"July 23, 1866, Congress passed a law that Negro regiments should be a part of the regular army. Under this Act the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry, and the 38th and 39th, 40th, and 41st Regiments of Infantry were organized.

"March 5, 1863, a Consolidation Act was passed, and the 38th and 41st were reorganized as the 24th Regiment of Infantry; the 39th and 40th were reorganized as the 25th Regiment of Infantry. These regiments of Negro boys (soldiers) were stationed on the Frontier and rendered valuable services in the military operations against the Indians, extending from Dakota to Mexico. The 9th and 10th Cavalry won the reputation of being the best Indian fighters on the frontier. Why? I will tell you; the Negro anyway you take him proves above every reasonable doubt to be a benefactor for good.

Shows Produced For Troops By 124th, 2rd, S. T. R.

When the 2nd Student Training Regiment and the 124th Infantry get together on entertainment some good shows are in the offing.

For almost a year now the two regiments have worked side by side at the big job of suppying capable officers for this Infantry of ours. Then one day not long ago the staffs of both regiments were confronted by the adage "All work and no play" and decided to do something about it.

The regimental areas were a bustle of feverish activity. The 124th began drawing up plans for McMillan Bowl, plans were completed and Second Battalion went to work on construction of the huge amphitheatre. Capt. Polombo put his 2nd Student Training Regiment men to work preparing their program. The 124ths "Gator Sketches" went into production with the Band and novelty acts. Entertainment was "on the Ball" and the ball was rolling toward the Harmony Church area.

On October 5th, McMillan Bowl opened before a capacity crowd. The premier show was a fine beginning for the cooperation between the regiments. The Gator band was there, with their novelty acts. Captain Polombo and Sgt. Irons enhanced the entertainment; and as an added feature the Southern Manor and the Matag night clubs sent performers to add a feminine touch to the otherwise all-soldier cast.

Other evenings of fun for the Fort Benning soldiers are in prospect. "Gator Sketches" consisting of Jack Randall, Al Pugliese, Joe Schietz, Jack Weber, Sam Stipick, the 124th Military Band, and the Gator Swingsters, all under the direction of Tech. Sgt. Wiley B. Scott, appeared at the Sports Arena last Tuesday night for their introduction to the personnel to the Second Student Training Regiment.

The 124th is trying out applicants for their Glee Club which promises to produce top enjoyment for the winter months ahead . . . and Captain Polombo's Revue and a request return engagement at McMillan Bowl October 29.

These shows aren't solely for the men of the 124th Infantry and 2nd S. T. R. In fact, all servicemen at Fort Benning are cordially invited to attend the functions of these two regiments.

The cost per ment for housing on the military reservation at Fort Benning is about $323, lowest in the entire army.

There are now almost 100 firing ranges on the Post at Ft. Benning.

A nurse at Camp Barkley, Texas, travels by bus when she goes home to Abelene on leaves. On a recent trip, the nurse shared a seat with a private but at the first stop an Army cook wangled himself into the seat and began a recital of how good he was in a kitchen. But the way to a woman's heart is not that. After some 20 miles, the nurse remarked that the private with whom she had been riding had some hair-raising stories about the short-comings of the cooks in his outfit. She told them. Scornfully, the cook demanded, "What outfit is that?" The nurse named the company.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

Time has come for pumpkin pie and all the things we couldn't eat during the hot summer months. Time has also come for warmer clothes. The bright sunshiny days we have in the south are perfect for dressing up. Say what you will, women will put shopping and looking pretty first as long as they can. When conditions are such they no longer can indulge in feminine whimsies, they'll meet the challenge of still looking pretty months from now in things they bought today.

It looked like SAKS FIFTH AVENUE MILITARY SHOP was going to forget the women entirely in their efforts to supply our men with uniforms. They've relented and are going to have something pretty special for us right under the eyes of the men. Good idea, for that concession to women are the super extra special travel kits by Elizabeth Arden. Calling handsome alligator and leather travel cases kits is a misleading word. Large enough for overnight necessities and many weeks supply of that famous line of beauty aids makes it one of those, "Oh, I wish—" sort of things with every woman. Well, it wouldn't hurt to tell him about them, would it? Saks is located on Cusseta Road, you know.

Now that the weather is cooler we've packed our cotton formals. Time for silk, velvet and chiffons. And aren't they nice for a change from the washables? The bright sandals we wore during the summer have had their hours too. Elegant gowns call for equally elegant shoes. The place to find them? MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE STORE, of course. One of the most exquisite evening shoes seen in many a day is the Jerro model, it's gold kid, high heeled sandal. The vamp is embroidered so closely with heavy gold cord the effect is one of crusted gold. Dull leaves and vine tracery of gold set off the glowing topaz and complete the jewel-like perfection of this exquisite handmade shoe. They have sandals too in silver and gold. Flat, medium and high heels. White satin sandals to dye the color of your dress. Just because dresses are long evening shoes aren't hidden. The fastidiously groomed woman knows this and sees that her feet are perfectly shod for evening.

No use saying you think you'll cross Christmas cards off your list. You know you won't. Christmas isn't Christmas unless you spend hours trying to find out where this friend or that friend might be. Cards have a way of finding you no matter what the address is and the assumption is your cards arrive with greetings too. You'll have to make up your mind soon, for time is drawing close for ordering printed names. KIRVEN'S has a beautiful stock to choose from. All the loved Christmas thoughts renewed with the three wise men, Santa Claus, snow scenes and the new trend of patriotic cards for service people. For the fortunate "they-have-everything" friends there's personalized matches, napkins, coasters and stationery. Playing cards, too, with military insignia to add a distinctive touch to the name. No orders for these sort of special gifts will be taken after December 9th.

Nippy fall and winter days increase the gusto of rough and tumble play hours of the six to twelve year boys. Sturdy school and play clothes in a price range easy on the budget is a find for a mother of growing boys. SEARS ROEBUCK are well stocked in these gay plaid flannel shirts the boys adore. Plenty of the wild west and Buck Jones in those shirts. They have lots of corduroy trousers and knickers. The corduroy is that dark tweedy kind that's proven so popular the past few years. There are lumberjacks too with woolen plaid jackets and sleeves of corduroy matching the trousers. Boy stuff, these items, and good for many weeks of wrestling, climbing and working off high pressure steam.

We think of fur coats so much for dress I think we have forgotten the smartness of a fur-trimmed wool coats The PATRICIA SHOP on the third floor of the Ralston Hotel have something pretty elegant in coats for the coming winter months. One stunning model is in black broadcloth. The sleeves and tiny round collar are of black Persian paw fur. Straight, svelte lines and the contrast of fine wool cloth and silky fur is something beautiful and smart for dress up occasions. Another black coat is trimmed with luscious collar of red fox. The collar is large and ripples in flattering fullness. White tips at the bottom of the collar shows the beauty of a full fox skin. Patricia has those ultra resort and casual coats in beige and grey, collared in creamy wolf fur. There's a red one furred in wolf to brighten up the travel costume.

Some folks class a trip to the photographer with a visit to the dentist. Only the severest form of coercion can push them before a camera. Psychologists may have an answer for behavior like that. I haven't. A picture of you sent home to the folks is about one of the nicest things you can do for them. Use Your Pen, Soldier

This is an urgent message, Soldier, addressed to you by the Commanding Officer of Fort Benning, Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton. Twice during the month of October General Fulton through the BAYONET has sent out an appeal to all soldiers on the post to write to their friends back home who are 18 and 19 years old, urging them to enlist in the Army of the United States.

At present there pends in Congress a bill authorizing the War Department to call for the drafting of young men of these ages. The Nation needs these youngsters desperately; she needs them to inject into the Army youth, stamina, and daring, all of which are necessary to increase the TNT in the punch the High Command is preparing to deal the enemy. That punch must be a knockout blow, deadly and benumbing. If it is made so it will mean that this war will not drag on for years; it will mean that all of us can go home to the people and things we love all the sooner. And the "sooner to work the sooner to sleep."

There are decided advantages for those youngsters who enlist right away rather than wait for the draft. These men will have the choice of thirteen different branches in which to serve, all of them providing varied fields of activity in their divers ramifications.

There is the Army Air Force which needs mechanics and radio-men; bombardiers, pilots, navigators, gunners, and aerial photographers. All of these are of great appeal to youth with imagination and daring. Moreover, what a thrill to be able to pilot a Flying Fortress; what a delight to "cut the surly bonds of earth and climb the clouds on silver-laughtered wings" in one of Uncle Sam's gliders. Or if the youngster is mechanically-minded, what a satisfaction to service these planes and keep 'em flying!

Then there is the armored force needing gunners and tank drivers, and operators of trucks and jeeps.

And the cavalry! How it has changed with the advent of modern war of movement! Uncle Sam still has some of the finest horses in the world, but to this branch he has added motor cars and motorcycles equipped with death-dealing guns. He has added light mortars to increase the striking power of this branch.

The youthful enlistee may choose chemical warfare with the new chemical mortar which can retaliate if the enemy ever chooses to unleash gas attacks.

In the Coast Artillery Corps they will have the opportunity of manning powerful anti-aircraft guns, those tremendous railroads guns throwing great shells for miles; and there is the tractor-drawn 155 gun.

The Corps of Engineers offers various advantages with its bridge and road building; this branch constructs tank traps; camouflage is set up; railroads are operated as well as the assault boats of the amphibian command.

The Corps of Military Police needs more men to direct traffic, to safeguard vital points, to keep order among military personnel.

There is the Field Artillery with its supporting fire for the Queen of Battles, the Infantry. The latter branch is now equipped with 11 different weapons, all of which have added to the fire power of the foot soldier.

The Medical Department needs young men. Just last week a hurry call was sent out for young men with some college training who can serve as dental assistants; ambulance drivers are wanted; laboratory specialists, X-ray men, veterinary assistants are needed.

Another branch open to these youngsters is Ordnance which supplies the weapons and keeps them in repair.

The Quartermaster Corps wants men to keep our soldiers clothed and fed and sheltered, and the Signal Corps offers vital work for radio men who can transmit and receive. In this branch young men will learn to use electronic centries, walkie-talkers, and other secret devices which are being guarded from enemy intelligence.

The Army is ready to give these youngsters thorough training in all of these thirteen branches of the Army of the United States. So, Soldier, just for a few minutes lay down your sword, pick up your pen, and write a letter or two to all of your acquaintances who are physically qualified and 18 and 19 years of age. Do it now! Don't let it be said that all of us did too little too late.

The Bond Breakfast

Fort Benning is first again! On Sunday morning, Nov. 15, officers, enlisted men and their wives, regardless of rank or race, will sit down together for the first all-Army War Bond breakfast anywhere in America. It is the hope of the fathers of the idea to sell $30,000 worth of war bonds to servicemen at that time.

The idea is a good one. The proof is that the requests for bonds and tickets are coming into the office of Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., in such quantities that it will be no surprise if the quota is over-subscribed.

It must be remembered also that these reservations are, in addition to the thousands of dollars officers and men of this post have already allotted in pay reservations for the automatic monthly purchase of bonds.

All of this speaks well for Benning. Recently, during the "Honor Your Hero with a War Bond" drive sponsored by the motion picture industry of America, a booth was set up in front of a Columbus theater. A civilian standing by the booth remarked as a soldier counted out his bills for a bond that it was a wonderful sight to see men who are to handle the guns in Freedom's fight adding their dollars to the war chest with which to buy the weapons they will use.

When we're out for something big, watch the small things—especially small minds, small details, small temptations.

Army Swap Day

Salvage is Army's swap day.

You don't get a pair of new shoes for a pair of shoelaces, or a jeep for a pair of tires. Nor do you yell 'bingo' and get a set of dishes.

You turn in something that's been through "fair wear and tear"—something that may not be so good for something you hope will be better.

The supply department pulls this deal every three months or so. You look at the bulletin board to see if you've got some stripes or KP and you see a notice stating that on a certain few days you can make an honest exchange. On the word "honest" you always get the benefit of the doubt. Of course if you try to shove through a pair of civies for something GI, the clerk behind the counter might say, "Listen bud, why don't you wear them a little while longer, then you might take home with you." He's still giving you the benefit of the doubt.

Sgt. H. Horne of the Supply whom some of the boys try to blame for what the GI laundry does to their duds, failing to remember that he is only the agent and not the laundress—explained salvage to a reporter. "When the seat of the trousers goes it must be from sitting and not from getting caught on top of a fence trying to beat the curfew home. We can tell because we've tried going over the fence ourself. Sometimes a soldier living on rations with his wife brings in some of her things for exchange. One soldier brought in some of his wife's dresses for exchange, and what do you think he got in exchange? A pair of bloomers.

"Some soldiers want low cut shoes for regular GI. Sergeant Daniels brought in a 1917 shirt for exchange. Don't get us wrong, he hasn't been wearing it all that time. The shirt was issued to him.

"Soldiers think they can get most anything here—their mail, three-day passes and what not—now what else do you want to know?

"Listen Sarge", the reporter said, "I sent a good pair of GI socks to the laundry—and what I got back was a pair that must have belonged to a kid. Now Sarge, I ain't griping about that—but what worries me is what can that poor kid do with my socks."

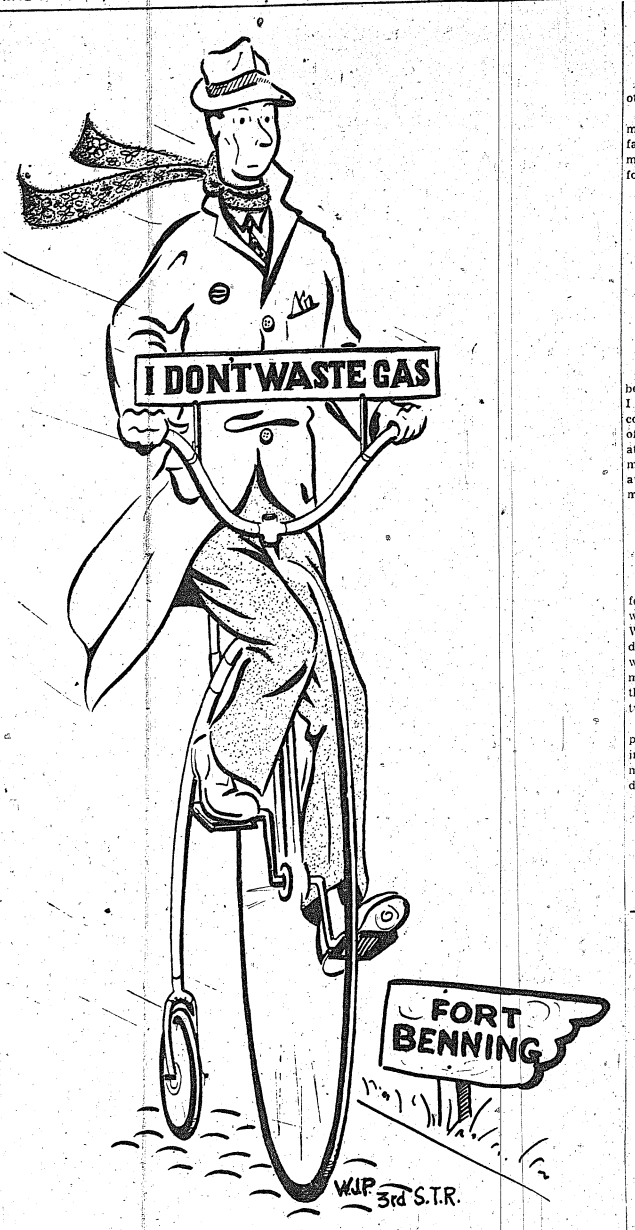
The Boys In Uniform

What kind of young fellows make up the armed forces of the United States? Commanding generals and morale officers, chaplains, parents—yes, and even the liquor sellers and other parasites that form a disreputable fringe around army camps and naval bases — have sought the answer to this question in various ways since America began building up its Army and Navy. The answer seems to be: "They're a fine lot, perhaps even a little better than the grand youngsters that served in the ranks during World War One. They are on the whole religious, highly intelligent, morally clean. In short, just what anyone would expect average young Americans to be."

Mothers have perhaps most often asked the question posed above. They have wanted to know: "What is my boy going into? What will his companions be like? Will he be exposed to greater temptations than he has had to face in his daily experience at home?"

While it is true that beyond the limits of the military reservations, harpies of vice hover about to prey upon the weak and unwary, this condition is clearing up, Government authorities report. Still, many lads in uniform are being exposed to such temptations who never met with them before. But the good home training and bringing-up of thousands of American boys are serving them well. It is not easy to turn such lads into evil ways.

And the average American boy is decent in behavior—naturally. Stanley High, in an article in the American Magazine, reports soldier attendance at army religious services in Southern camps averaging 85 or 90 percent and the demand for Bibles growing. The Navy Chief of Chaplains says, "Never before in the memory of our oldest officers has there been such interest in religion throughout the Navy as there is today."



Many of the men in the armed forces were Boy Scouts. Their Troops met in church basements and parish houses, and they attended Sunday School. They came from American homes where the worship of God, love of country, respect for authority, the honoring of democratic principles, and contempt for dishonesty, immorality, cruelty, and oppression were inherent to their upbringing. They are not being taught to shoot, bomb, and bayonet out of personal hatred or revenge, but out of love for what is right and a determination that it shall prevail. When they come back, America's soldiers and sailors will be changed mentally only for the better, in most cases. Their foundation being sure, they will not return spiritually disillusioned or morally weakened, but rather strengthened and purified, as gold which passes through a refiner's fire. — Christian Science Monitor.

Some people still don't see what morals have to do with the war effort. "I'll do everything I can to win," they say, "but my private life is my own affair." That's like swimming to the rescue, reserving the right to hang window weights around your neck instead of tying on a life preserver.

A nation that fights for principles must depend on principled people.

Total victory is something to be won at home as well as abroad.

It will take more than soft soap to clean up this world. It will take plenty of grit.

Country Editor in Khaki

By CPL. IRWIN BLUMENFELD

I was run over by a tank the other day.

But there are no tank treadmarks on my chest, despite the fact that I'm not exactly a Superman. I was snuggled in a cozy foxhole at the time.

We were having instruction in the construction of hasty field fortifications, and after the lecture was completed, the practical work began. The instructor said: "Here are some picks and shovels. In one hour a tank will run over your position. Start digging."

I dug!

Home town folks, who remember the leisurely manner in which I helped mix concrete for the community tennis courts a couple of years ago, would be astonished at the speed I can actually do manual labor when it means avoiding a permanent wave on my skull from a tank-tread.

* * *

In fact, I dug so fast and so deep, that I almost joined our Chinese allies—straight down!

The idea was to complete a foxhole 3 1-2 feet long by 2 feet wide, and about 4 to 5 feet deep. When standing upright in it, a soldier can observe and fire, and when a tank comes along, he merely curls up in the bottom of the foxhole, with his head between his legs.

A foxhole of this type is good protection against tanks—it says in the book. But what worried me was whether or not the tank driver had read the same book.

It's quite a sensation to have 30 tons of hardware rumbling about two feet overhead. Especially when the tank tread sends loose top soil down your neck, and you imagine the hole is caving in on you.

* * *

But, fortunately, the foxhole held up very nicely, and the only ill effects I suffered from the experience were several beautiful blisters on my dainty hands—caused by too much energy and enthusiasm in the preparatory operations.

We had another interesting exercise last week—Commando training. We waded across streams, climbed up and down steep ravines and plowed through thick woods to stage surprise attacks on various installations.

Our instructor, who recently returned from overseas, had actually taken part in Commando raids, so we really got some first-hand information on the gentlemanly art of back-stabbing.

A really efficient Commando is the kind of a guy who would be expelled from Reform School. He's never heard of the Marquis of Queensberry; he thinks an opponent's back is a much better target than his face; a belt is merely to keep pants up and is not a dividing line; kicking, scratching, gouging and brass knuckles are important items of his stock in trade; and when he goes to work with knife or bayonet, there's "guts at both ends," as one instructor so picturesquely put it.

* * *

We hear a lot about various "secret weapons," but there's one that is reported in actual operation on this post—in the quartermaster laundry. It's an infernal machine that pulls buttons off of shirts and shoots them through the toes of socks!

BY EVE

Human beings are the most illogical creatures. Take the young folks of today, for instance. Not more than three years ago they were wailing to the heavens over their sad plight. Each June brought masses of articles sympathizing with the world they face upon graduation. Bitter they were in their blame of oldsters who made a world with no bright futures for them.

Not only were there no jobs for them but they could see no opportunity for a normal life of marriage with their college sweetheart. Those were no days to get married and have children. Frightened and lacking in courage were these young folks of yesterday who expected so much to be waiting for them.

Then came a war of such proportions as the world had never seen before. Security for everyone was swept aside in the holacaust. All the simple taken-for-granted things of daily living were rapidly being rationed or gone for the while our nation remanded in war.

Young men left their homes by the thousands gladly and eagerly. This was a job for them to do. Mothers wept in the quiet of their rooms. Older folks knew war was no gay adventure. No excitement lightened their steps or brightened their eyes.

The depression world of yesterday had offered youth little. The world of war aroused some impetus of courage. No longer were they afraid of marriage. The attitude of let us drink for tomorrow we ourselves may be with "yesterday's seven thousand years" sprang into being.

So they marry for a few quiet hours or weeks of honeymoon. No longer do they ask for security or whether they have any right to bring children into the world. Feverishly they cram moments of living into short hours, never asking what tomorrow may bring as a bill of reckoning on their emotional impulses.

The old song, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again" gives a sober thought of a Jack returning to Susan who had once been known as light hearted Sue.

Not all the casualties of the war will be listed in the War Department. Broken hearts and lives are important only to individuals. Romantic mistakes are such trifling bits in the mass of greater tragedies. One wonders at an alchemy of war that changes thinking from despair of depression years to courage and belief in a time of international disaster.

Movie Review

So her eyes lifted, until she was staring straight up through the jagged hole which had been a vaulted ceiling of a little old church.

Across the cloud-daubed blueness, a V of planes in trim formation went winging toward the channel. The sound of their engines was lost in the swelling peal from the organ. Kay rose and began to sing with the others.

"Onward Christian Soldiers—"

And so the finest picture to come out of this war ends. But the fight the plot portrays still goes on. It is the story—not of the action, but the reaction—of people of Britain during the battle of England.

"Mrs. Miniver" opening tonight at the Main Theatre, stars Greer Garson, in the title role; Walter Pidgeon as her husband; Theresa Wright, the beautiful daughter of royalty with whom Vin. Kay Miniver's oldest son, falls in love—played by Richard Ney—Dame May Whitty, as the real royalty. These are just a few of the fine list of names that make the cast of "Mrs. Miniver" so outstanding.

Opening before the war, the story goes on through the fall of France and the heroism of Dunkirk. The plot evolves around the "Mrs." and her little brood. Vin the oldest goes into the R.A.F.... Her husband joins the river patrol and when he is called away to help rescue the British Army at Dunkirk, for almost a week no word is heard by her...During his absence, a German flyer who was shot down in the vicinity forces her at the point of a gun to give him food and some clothes ...The first night of bombing when her youngest one asks if this bombing means the war is over...These scenes are just a few of the many that make this pic the finest in a great many years.

The splendid concrete barracks at Fort Benning are believed to house more soldiers than any other permanent barracks at any post in the country.

The Post Chapel at Fort Benning is regarded as the most beautiful on any army post.

Reunion Sought For Enlisted Men From 1st Division

Enlisted men now serving at Fort Benning, who were at one time members of the First Division, are invited to send in names, present organization and past organization with a view to holding a reunion of the "Fighting First."

Call for names of all enlisted men was sent out today by Pfc. S. Kleindorf, of the Public Relations Office at post headquarters, who stated that if enough names are received, the reunion will be planned for the "near future."

"Many men who served in the First are now assigned to various organizations here on the post, and we'd like to get together if enough of them are interested," he said. "We want to show movies of the 'First' in action on the recent Carolina maneuvers, and we'll serve refreshments—all at no cost, of course. So send in your names and let's get together."

Private Kleindorf was in the Intelligence platoon of Headquarters company of the 18th regiment and also is a previous member of G company in the same capacity.

Peeks at Pics

BY GREGORY S. KRANES

"The Glass Key" still playing the post, has some very interesting stories about its production...Bonita Granville turned on the weeps for seven straight hours and finished her crying scenes in one day. Only top actresses can do it. Amateurs lose control and wind up with hysterics...Paramount made a silent version some years ago, starring George Raft. Leading lady—Ann Sheridan...Brian Donlevy climbed into his lucky coat again, a wildly checkered number he's worn in every film since "The Great McGinty"...Reward for the Surprise-Discovery-of-the-Month went to the stunt men who tangled with Alan Ladd. Found out to their sorrow that he, too, has muscles...All of Hollywood Press correspondents were given a Glass Key at the beginning of the picture's production, with instructions to use it any time they wanted to visit the set. Veronica was so intrigued with them—the keys, not the correspondents—she begged some extras from the publicity department and had them fashioned into buttons for her newest suit.

Well, it's Lieut. Clark Gable now...and you can add some more names on the list of Hollywood personalities in the armed services. ...Author Dashiell Hammett enlisted in the armed forces shortly after "The Glass Key" was completed...John Payne is now in the Army Air Corps.

* * *

Those of us who remember Allan Jones in the "Firefly" and "The Boys From Syracuse" are wondering what the idea of the producers can be. Allan has the finest voice on the screen and a great many places off....He is not in the least bad looking, and he can act —better than some of those cute looking boys in Hollywood today.... Now what is the idea putting him in some thing like "Moonlight In Havana"... Sure, give us plenty of pics with Allan Jones, but please make them worth seeing...Jones can't carry the thing alone.

"Eyes In The Night" sees Ann Harding trying to make a comeback...I always did like her and I hope that this will be her new rise to stardom...Not many of the younger set will remember Ann and her swell pics...But take it from one who does remember...She was swell before and she can do it again.

* * *

And now we come to the show of the week—"Mrs. Miniver"—The finest pic to come out of this war... No one on the set had to be told how to react during the church sequence...As the Vicar announced the declaration of war, every face, from start to extra, mirrored the intense feeling of the entire cast. The scene was shot the day after Pearl Harbor...The production has some swell comedy bits, but they are all in the picture...For once there wasn't any horseplay on the set. No one gave Walter Pidgeon a hot foot, Greer Garson's set chair wasn't sawed apart so that it would collapse when she sat in it...The plot was serious and that's the way the reacted ...The entire story, as directed by William Tyler, is a study in reaction, not action...The funniest scene shows the reaction of Greer Garson and Pidgeon whacked her with a newspaper...After five retakes. Miss Garson remained standing—all day.

Here is a tip for those who like real comedy...So get out your crying towels—you will laugh so hard that you will cry—and prepare to really enjoy yourself...Two weeks from today "Who Done It?" will play the Main Theatre and No. 8...The stars—guess who!!! Oh, well, I always said that I couldn't keep a secret.... The stars are Abbott and Costello.

Eight Plays On USO Slate For Season

Tours Of Camps To Begin Nov. 23 For 22-Week Run

To meet the demand by soldier and sailor audiences for straight dramatic plays in addition to the musical revue type of entertainment, USO-CAMP SHOWS is producing six "legitimate" plays for its 1942-43 winter program, it was learned at Ft. Benning. Two additional comedies will be produced by USO-CAMP SHOWS on the West Coast.

Already selected by Bert Lytell and Eiml Friendlander, co-chairman of the Camp Shows' drama committee, are: JUNIOR MISS (playing a repeat engagement by popular request from the servicemen), CLAUDIA, ARSENIC AND OLD LACE, YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU, THE MALE ANIMAL, and ROOM SERVICE. All eight, plays will start touring the Army camps and Naval stations around November 23 and will continue a 22-week run on the USO-CAMP SHOWS circuit this winter and spring throughout the United States. Thousands of young Americans, through these Camp Show performances, will see legitimate drama for the first time in their lives; and the plays were chosen with the aim of broad audience appeal.

62 SHOWS PLANNED

Producers and authors have waived all royalties on these USO-CAMP SHOWS productions, and in many cases are offering their services to assist in staging them. These plays are part of an expanded Camp Shows' schedule of entertainment for the coming season; and in addition to the "legit" shows the soldiers and sailors stationed in more than 1,000 posts will see 22 variety revues, 36 tabloid troupes(miniature vaudeville shows for small audiences in the remote sectors), and four concert units.

JUNIOR MISS, by Jerome Chodorov and Joseph Fields, based on the stories by Sally Benson, is being staged through the courtesy of Max Gordon. The Camp Shows' production will be under supervision of Nancy Stern and Henry Ephron, with Irving Schneider directing; and Frederick Fox will design the set.

John Golden has donated the entire production of CLAUDIA, including lights, original sets by Donald Oenlager and costumes. Rose Franken, author of the play, has donated her rights and volunteered her services to assist on production; and John Pollock will supervise the production. Stuart Fox will direct the play.

ARSENIC AND OLD LACE

ARSENIC AND OLD LACE has been made available for the free Army-Navy circuit of USO-CAMP SHOWS through the courtesy of Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse. Alfred Bloomingdale is the producer and he and Bretaigne Windust will be the general supervisors. Hugh Rennie will direct and Raymond Sovey will design the set.

George Kaufman and Moss Hart have placed YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU at the disposal of CAMP SHOWS, through the cooperation of the Estate of Sam Harris. Lutner Adler will produce and direct and Frederick Fox is the scenic designer for this production.

ROOM SERVICE is being offered gratis by Allen Boretz and John Murray, authors, through Lou Mandell, their representative; and Jacob A. Weiser will produce, direct and supervise this comedy. Art director is Herbert Andrews.

Through the courtesy of Herman Shumlin and Kermit Bloomgarden, THE MALE ANIMAL, by Elliott Nugent and James Turber, will also entertain the soldiers and sailors on the USO-CAMP SHOWS circuit. Ronald T. Hammond is supervising and directing, and Herbert Andrews will also design the set for this popular comedy.

Bianca Stroock and Paul DuPont will be in charge of costumes and technical direction, respectively, of all these productions.

All Is Well That Ends Well; Tires Are Okeh

Staff Sgt. David A. Clark, 11th Armored Regiment, is the hard luck man in the 10th Armored "Tiger" Division to date.

Returning from furlough, he overturned his newly overhauled automibel and wrecked it. The mishap put him in the old G. I. Clinic.

A few days later, he went back for a more than serious operation, and latest reports say he is well on the road to recovery.

P. S. The tires were O. K. after the mishap.

Benning Fans Agog Over Army-Navy Game Sunday

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Lieut. Commander George Clark who will lead the Pensacola Navy eleven into the fort on Sunday is much better known in grid circles simply as Potsy Clark. Before donning navy blue this past year, he was a coach of note with the professional Detroit Lions. And a mighty good coach, too. As a matter of fact, Potsy is recognized as one of the best in the business. But that's about all we youngsters know about Potsy Clark.

Old-timers at Benning, however, could tell you lots more about Potsy Clark. They will remember that he is the same gentleman who wore an Army uniform in the last war, and came out of it with recognition as the outstanding athlete in the AEF. He was the great back who sparked the 89th Division to the AEF gridiron championship on a spring day in Paris in 1919.

Writing in a recent issue of the Satevepost, Lou Little, the present Columbia coach, told a lot about Potsy and some of it is worth passing along this week, because it serves to give you plenty of background on the man who will be on the sidelines Sunday in Doughboy Stadium directing the Navy against the Army. It'll probably be like old home week again for the eminent Lieut. Commander because Army football was really his meat.

Lou Little says that Clark emerged from World War I as probably America's most famous soldier athlete. He learned about toughening and the part it can play in the transformation of peacetime boys into wartime men. And now he's imparting that knowledge, ripened with more than 25 years experience in big-time grid coaching circles, to his Pensacola charges.

Sunday's "Battle of Benning" will no doubt make Potsy harken back to the game in 1917 between Camp Funston and the redoubtable Great Lakes eleven at Kansas City in what amounted to an Army-Navy championship that year. Maj. General Leonard Wood was commandant at Funston at that time, and between the halves he strode into the dressing room after a scoreless first semester.

He came that day, according to the story by Little, not to talk to the players, but to give them a command to win. Potsy Clark was on that Camp Funston eleven, and he reports that General Wood told the men football was like war and they couldn't win a war without being tired and hurt, so in the remaining 30 minutes of the game, he expected them to win. And evidently, the "two-star" said it so convincingly that there was no doubt in anyone's mind, because the soldiers returned to the field and won, 7-0. Service football may not be quite so serious today, but it's a cinch that Pensacola will be out to win Sunday, Because Potsy Clark only plays to win.

The 89th Division team, on which Potsy Clark was the big star, started training in a little town in Germany late in 1918, and wound up its great campaign by winning the AEF title at the Auteiul Velodrome near Paris on March 30, 1919. The final score was 14-6 over another great soldier eleven from the 36th Division. And Potsy Clark scored both touchdowns.

He had played at Illinois before the war, but according to reports was never more brilliant than on that spring day in Paris. He caught a forward pass from Adrian Lindsey of Kansas for the first score, and then sewed up the verdict for the Eighty-Niners with a long, twisting run over wet turf.

Lou Little claims that the 89th club was one of the greatest ever seen on a football field. In addition to Clark, it contained many other stars who later gained great renown in gridiron circles. Little claims his own personal dream game would pit the Eighty-Niners against the great Chicago Bears of a year ago. And no one doubts the ability of the Bruins, which means the 89th must have been some eleven.!

So when you see Potsy Clark on the sidelines Sunday, remember you'll be looking at the man who was the greatest athlete of World War I. His Pensacola eleven hasn't fared too well this season, but they have lost to three of the nation's best elevens in Alabama, Georgia Pre-Flight and Texas Christian. That means they'll be all the tougher on the Doughboy turf, and if Potsy should happen to take a leaf from General Wood's book and order the sailor fliers to win, we may need a tank or two to stop them. At any rate, it should be a whale of a game and will surely bring back old memories to Lieut. Commander Clark.

BAYONET TIPS—Watch this boy Blumenstock at tailback for the Goslings on Sunday. We've seen him in action before with the Fordham Rams, and he can do just about everything on a gridiron and do it well...Sal Lococo, reputedly the best back on the Navy club that contains several former All-Americans, never even went to college. He was a schoolboy star around Lincoln, Nebraska, and then entered the service...Bill Leckonby may be listed on the program as being from St. Lawrence. That's true, but he is also the same Leckonby that used to run wild for the Brooklyn Dodgers against Potsy's old club, the Lions...Cotton Milner, Gosling back of note, may run into an old L. S. U. team-mate if George Jenkins of the 3rd Armored is fit to play for Benning...There are nine ensigns and four lieutenants (junior grade) on the Pensacola roster...Benning will also use a liberal sprinkling of officers for this game only, although only one is allowed to play on any eleven in loop competition...The Navy will naturally be favored, but it will be some scrap, and you won't want to miss it because you will see the greatest galaxy of grid stars that ever trod the battle-scarred turf of historic Doughboy Stadium.

Pensacola Naval Air Station Invades Fort For Grid Battle With All-Star Aggregation

10,000 Expected To Witness Classic

ored Regiment. Capt. Red Milton (Georgia), Lieut. Johnny Cudmore (Stetson), Lieut. Joe Ashmore (Wofford), and Capt. Leo Gregory (Florida), the respective coaches of the four Benning elevens, will do the master-minding in an attempt to out-trick the cagey Potsy Clark, once of the Detroit Lions, and now a Lieut. Commander in the Naval Reserve.

COL. FINNEGAN HELPS

The Benning coaches will also have some invaluable help from one of the game's best-known coaches in Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, the post athletic officer, who for many years was head tutor at North Dakota State and holds an enviable record in Mid-West football circles. Colonel Finnegan will serve as an advisory coach for the soldier all-stars.

Clark also has several well-known assistants in Lieut. Weems Baskin, line coach at Ole Miss; Lieut. Glenn Harmeson, Purdue captain in 1929 and later head coach at Lehigh; Lieut. Bernie Masterson, Nebraska '34 and backfield coach at U. C. L. A.; Lieut. (jg) George Sauer, All-American at Nebraska and head coach at New Hampshire; and Lieut. (jg) Ed Danowski, former Fordham and N. Y. iGant star.

BENNING STARS

But the glittering stars on the actual gridiron will out-shine everything else in the stadium. Benning will have many such as Roy Gestary, Notre Dame; Claude Hackney, Davidson; Jumie Belin, Auburn; Ken Smith, Indiana; Bob Roberts, Presbyterian; Joe Bryan, Dayton Merchants; Jim Hennessey, North Carolina State; Leo Carr, West Virginia; Ed Hurley, West Orange High; Al Litwak, Western Reserve; Chief Carney, Haskell Indians; and Charley Vose, Southern Cal.

The Goslings from Pensacola will probably out-shine that array, however, for on their squad are listed names that have made legendary fame on college football fields. Paced by such superb players as Jim Blumenstock of Fordham, Bill Leckonby of the Brooklyn Dodgers, Johnny Birr of Indiana, Rip Whalen of Northwestern, Homer Hazel of Ole Miss and a raft of others, the visitors are a potent group.

The probable starting line-up for the Goslings against Benning will be: McLeod (Alabama) and Birr (Indiana) at the ends; Reeves (East Central Oklahoma) and Hostetter (Duke) at the tackles; Hazel (Ole Miss) and Hardin (East Texas State) at the guards; Schlosser (Gonzaga) at center; Bain (Texas Tech) at quarter; Blumenstock (Fordham) and Leckonby (St. Lawrence) at the halfbacks; and Eckels (Michigan State) at fullback.

But that will be just the beginning, because the strong Pensacolans are three deep in some positions and Potsy Clark will probably keep pouring fresh men into the game all the way. In Sal Lococo, sub tailback, the Goslins have a lad who never played college ball, yet holds his own in such fast company. Jack McGarry, reserve quarter, is another regular sailor lad who has done most of his blocking in the service.

Pre-game expectations are that the visitors will throw a real aerial broadside at the Benning eleven. They have several excellent heavers and in their first five games this season, the Goslings completed 32 out of 81 attempts through the air which is a fine average. This total, incidentally, resulted in a net gain of 434 yards.

Evidence of the relative strength of the powerful Goslings is the fact that they whipped Spence Field by a 72-0 count just two weeks after Fort Benning's 29th Infantry had tripped the Fliers by a 6-0 count. Last year, the Two-Niners represented the post on the gridiron and visited Pierce Field the base for the annual game. The final score favored the Goslings by 27-20 after a nip-and-tuck battle.

Pensacola Naval Station Is "The Annapolis Of The Air"

Located on the Gulf of Mexico, approximately 200 miles east of New Orleans, the "Annapolis of the Air" is one of the largest naval aviation training centers in the world; where thousands of naval aviation cadets and enlisted men from the regular navy and marine corps take basic and advance flight training.

The oldest naval air station in the country, it began training in the year 1914, with the late Captain H. C. Mustin, USN, in command. At that time the school boasted a staff of three instructors, a dozen mechanics and eight planes. Following the entrance of the United States into the first World War, the station was expanded to such an extent that over 1,000 aviators were trained prior to the Armistice, at which time the personnel had risen to 438 officers and 5,539 enlisted men.

For many years following the war aviation training at Pensacola slowed down. From the 12-month-long flight training course an average of 100 pilots were being graduated yearly. This was before the day of the aviation cadets, the majority of those undergoing flight training being Annapolis graduates, with a few men from the enlisted ranks also included each year. But when the cadet training program was inaugurated in 1935, things once again began to busily hum at Pensacola.

Today—a little over 25 years after its founding—the station has grown into a naval training center that is perhaps the world's greatest. Personnel alone has increased to over 15,000 officers, cadets, navy and marine enlisted men and civilian employes.

Since 1935 the station has steadily increased in size, until today, in addition to Chevalier Field on the main base, there are three large auxiliary base fields—Corry, Saufley and Ellyson—and 28 outlying practice fields.

24th Hospital Courtmen Prep For Campaign

Medicos Boast Veteran Players With Varied Court Experience

One of the first units on the post to start practice, the 24th General Hospital Medicos have already whipped a first-rate basketball squad into shape, although the court campaign is still several weeks away.

The Medicos have been working out two nights a week in the post gym, and have narrowed their large turn-out to a likely looking squad, which packs plenty of previous court experience. The 24th is a certain entry in the fort loop, which will get under way in January, and may be a dark horse.

The courtmen are being tutored by Capt. Welch and Lieut. Stankus, and the coaches have featured a fast-passing offense that may cause many a team trouble this coming winter. Bunny Koontz, well-known on Benning basketball diamonds, and Skip Ruger, one of the fort's best boxers, will captain and manage the Medicos respectively.

Koontz may be the big gun for the Medicos. The Two-Four captain also captained his high school team at Roger Bacon in Cincinnati for two seasons, and later played for the professional Cincinnati Bengals. One of his Roger Bacon High clubs won the Ohio State Title. He is a left-handed passer and an accurate shot as wel as a good floor man.

Biggest man on the Medicos squad is the step-ladder center, Earl Marzettes, who hits the beams at six feet, five inches. He also held down the pivot post at Salt Lake City High out Utah way, and played semi-pro ball with several outstanding industrial clubs before donning a G. I. uniform.

Don Warner, from Waterbury, Conn., and Glenn Riffle, from Greenville, Ohio, are a pair of fast forward prospects. Warner played high school varsity for three years and four years of fast semi-pro basketball, which has given him plenty of experience. After high school, Riffle played two years with a title-winning pro team in Dayton, Ohio. He is an eagle-eye shot and averaged in double figures for most of his pro career.

Two other outstanding prospects for the Medico varsity are George Martin and Johnny Pugsley. Martin played for the Reading (Cincinnati) High School quintet. He captained the varsity for two years, and won the individual scoring title of the city. Later he took a fling at pro ball with the Flying Red Horses, a crack Cincy outfit. Pugsley hailed from Weehawken, New Jersey, and played varsity at Woodrow Wilson High there for three seasons. He has also played on several Army quintets since entering the service.

With a few more practice sessions under the belt, the up-and-coming Medicos will be ready to take on all comers on the hardwood.

'Mighty 55th' Draws Grid Team From Unit of 120 Men

From Fort Benning has come another thrilling story of the pluck and courage of American soldiers—the same kind of pluck and courage that eventually will whip Hitler, Hirohito and Company. This time, as so often before this fall, the story involves army athletics and football in particular.

At Benning this year, there is such a plentitude of first-class football material that a six-team conference has been formed within the bounds of the fort. All of the teams except one represent infantry or armored regiments. The remaining squad represents a battalion and a skeleton cadre of the battalion at that. And thereby hangs the tale.

They call themselves the "Mighty 55th," and mighty they are, too, in both deed and valor. Representing the 55th Engineers of Major General Paul W. Newgarden's new 10th Armored Division, the red-jersied football warriers have had a struggle from the day of their first practice session.

GREAT SPIRIT

With a complement of only 120 men, the 55th Engineers undertook to compete in a league with five teams drawn from regiments. But what they lack in total manpower, the Engineers more than make up for in spirit. True enough they have lost their first three league games in the Fort Benning Conference, but they are handicapped in other ways besides lack of man-power.

The cadre of the "Mighty 55th" is operating as a full battalion, and the men have very little time for practice, since they are doing multiple military duties. But somehow, the red-jersies seem to work out daily and when Sundays come, the 55th always puts a ball team on the field that is not only the pride of the battalion, but the division as well.

Coached by Lieut. Carl Deane, who was a star blocking back on one of Wallace Wade's Duke entries in the Rose Bowl, the "Mighty 55th" as assembled a grid machine that is at least the equal of any team in the league for size and weight. But the manpower is still acute, and everyone in the battalion has been helping.

EVEN COLONEL PLAYS

Even the commanding officer of the 55th, Lt. Col. Robert Spangler, former star-athlete at West Point, dons a grid uniform occasionally and goes out to scrimmage with the boys. And the 6-foot, 4-inch 200-pound colonel can make it mighty tough for the boys, too, because even at his over-30 age, he is just about the roughest, toughest man in the battalion.

It is behind the leadership of men such as Lt. Col. Spangler, that the "Mighty 55th" has grown to be a popular favorite at Fort Benning where many units vie for athletic popularity. The spirit of the Engineers carries down through every one of the 120 members of the battalion. Those not playing attend every game in a body and root their heads off from whistle to whistle.

ADOPTED BAND

Because of their small size, the 55th found it was the only entry in the league without a military band, so in a recent game, they traveled across the river to Phenix City, Ala., and arranged to have the snappy Central High music-makers from that town represent them in a game on the reservation. And the high school kids not only "represented" the Mighty 55th, but stole the show as well with their pretty, high-stepping drum majorettes.

The Engineers still have several tough games ahead on their schedule, but they are perfectly confident they'll win most of them, and end up the season with a better than even-break. Mighty men are these soldiers of the "Mighty 55th at Fort Benning, and there are probably danger signals flashing in Berlin already for the day they arrive there!

Unbeaten Trio Battle For Hoop League Lead

Two undefeated teams, from Headquarters and Company D, were still battling for the league lead as the Academic Regiment's basketball tournament swings into its final week of play. Both quintets have now won four in a row.

By a dramatic quirk in the schedule, the two leaders do not face each other until next Monday in the final game of the tournament. Each team has one game to play before Monday's clash. Headquarters having an easy one with company F's Fliesties who have as yet to win a game.

The Skyscrapers from Company D have a tougher one taking on the strong Company A team which, since losing its first two games, has been trouncing everyone in sight.

Last week's games were all one-sided affairs, being distinguished only by the huge scores piled up by Headquarters and Companies D and A, and by the individual scoring duel between Ossi of Co. E and Shannon of Headquarters, both aces ringing up 25 points apiece, as HQ won out 46 to 36.

One thing clearly brought out by the tournament is that the Academic Regiment will have a team that will make a strong bid for the Post championship it lost last year in the play-offs. A powerful squad will be gathered from among such men as Shannon, Francis, Neibler, Kelly and Zientara of Headquarters; Harpe, Smith and Cappella of Co. D; Fyffe and Homan of Co. A; Fenno and Prophet of Co. C, Sherman and Russo of Co. B, Ayers of F and Ossi of Company C.

Draper Prison Ties Engineers

The big red and white eleven of the 55th Engineers, known in Benning grid circles as the "Mighty 55th", caught a tartar last Sunday when they were held to a scoreless tie by an underdog Draper Prison eleven in a tilt played at Speigner, Ala.

The Benning soldiers pushed the prisoners all over the gridiron, but could not score against the Draper club's stubborn resistance inside the 10-yard lines. The game was hard-fought all the way, and provided many thrills for the onlookers.

Johnny Krull, returning to action after a lay-off due to injuries, was the big star for the 55th. The big fullback ran hard all afternoon, and slashed off the Draper tackles with rare abandon. He had help from Deane, Homenick, Hagan and others, but it was Krull who did most of the ground gaining.

ENDS OUTSTANDING

Gerrish and Mayhew played a great game at the flanks for the Engineers, both on offense and defense. As a matter of fact, Gerrish scored a pair of touchdowns in the last quarter by mailing passes in the end zone, but both scores were called back, one because of a penalty and the other because the officials ruled the ball had been caught off the playing field.

The rugged forward wall of the 55th once more gave a good account of itself, and completely halted the Draper running attack.

But the prisoners had a potent aerial offensive, and with Gene Davis doing the flinging, they threatened to score several times.

Panthers Card Three College Gridiron Foes

The Fort Benning Panthers, colored grid representatives of the 3rd Student Training Regiment's Service Battalion, have scheduled three more outstanding collegiate elevens for the month of November. Last night, the Panthers played a return tilt with Spencer High in Memorial Stadium in downtown Columbus.

After last night's battle, the green and white soldier eleven has a ten-day lay-off before they encounter the famed Tuskegee Institute team in a game at Tuskegee on November 14th. Then on the following Friday night, the 20th, the Panthers will return to the home loam entertaining the crack Mobile Training College squad in Doughboy Stadium under the lights.

The final scrap will take the Panthers away once more on the 26th when they journey to Jacksonville, Fla., to oppose Edward Waters College. In their only meeting so far with colored collegians, the Panthers dropped a decision to the Morehouse Maroon Tigers from Atlanta.

117th Breakers and 124th Gators Win Week-End Games; Enter Deadlock for First Place in Grid Conference

Unbeaten Loop Leaders To Clash On Sunday, November 15th

Emerging the victors in hard-fought grid battles over the past week-end, the 117th Infantry Breakers and 124th Infantry Gators have now stepped to the forefront of the title picture in the Fort Benning Conference, and are deadlocked for the top position with two victories and no defeats apiece.

The Breakers, coached by Lieut. Johnny Cudmore, ground out a 6-0 verdict over the favored 29th Infantry entry on Saturday night in an epic struggle under the lights. That put the 117th temporarily in the top spot, but the redoubtable Gators quickly knotted things up again Sunday afternoon when they ripped through the 11th Armored Tankers for a 20-6 triumph.

TEAMS RED HOT

Both teams are playing red-hot football at present, and after a week's cooperative effort for Pensacola tiff this Sunday, they will start preparing next week for the "game of the year" on Sunday, November 15, when they collide with one another in Doughboy Stadium. That game might decide the conference winner, although the 29th and 3rd Armored Dragons, who clash the night before, are still in the running.

As the conference schedule hit the half-way mark over the week-end, the Tankers and 55th Engineers seemed definitely out of the running with two and three defeats marked against them respectively. However, they are both big and potentially dangerous elevens that may complicate things later on by staging an upset.

INJURIES HURT BIG BLUE

Injuries of every conceivable type have wreaked havoc with the Big Blue eleven of the 29th which began the campaign as a distinct favorite for the conference crown. However, the chance of relieving some of the injured operatives from full-time duty for almost two weeks should revive the Devils. They have yet to encounter the Dragons, Gators and Tankers, and by winning all three could probably enter a deadlock for the crown, provided some one rises to halt the fast-moving Breakers who are unbeaten and unscored-upon in three tilts.

This week, the four leading elevens will combine to battle the visitors from Pensacola in the big Army-Navy game on Sunday. The 11th Armored meanwhile will journey to Augusta for a battle with the strong Daniel Field Eagles, while the 55th Engineers may travel to Montgomery for a tussle with Kilby Prison.

Smith's 3rd Period Score Tops 29th in Night Tussle

One sharp touchdown thrust mid-way in the third period gave the undefeated 117th Infantry Breakers an important 6-0 victory over a fighting 29th Infantry eleven last Saturday night in Doughboy Stadium before a Halloween throng of 6,500 spectators.

It was flashy Ken Smith, former Indiana collegian, who broke up the hard-fought ball game in the third canto when he swept around end and then cutback to score standing up from the seven-yard line. Just before the touchdown, a downpour of rain hit the stadium and the wet weather handicapped the 29th, which might have used a late aerial attack to advantage.

The game was packed with thrills all the way, and marked by several gallant stands by both elevens deep in their own territory. The teams were evenly matched and both played wide-open, spectacular ball until the rain arrived.

STATISTICS FAVOR DEVILS

Even though they went down, the Two-Niners held an advantage in total yardage gained and first downs. They ran up ten first downs to five for the Breakers, but lacked the punch to put over a score. Twice in the opening period, when they played their best ball, the Big Blue was stopped, once on the Breaker 19, and again on the 16.

After that, the Breakers had command of the ball game until they finally pushed across the lone score. Then the 29th got fighting mad, and in the final period, they sloshed through the mud for as gallant a drive as Doughboy Stadium has ever seen. Starting on their own eight-yard line, the Devils swept 55 yards to the Breaker 37 before they finally were halted.

In moving that distance, they gave it the hard way, using rushing and plunges through the line, and registering five of their first downs en route. The drive had the drenched spectators cheering madly and provided a great climax to a hard-hitting struggle.

SMITH BIG STAR

The Breakers won the fracas because they took everything the 29th had, and they came back to drive over a score. Smith was the real wheel-horse for the winners, and played great ball all the way. Even in defeat, there were many heroes for the 29th, some of the Devils playing superbly even though swathed in bandages. Between the halves, the 117th staged added mass college spirit to the battle by parading on the field and forming a "29" and then a "117" as well as a giant football. The music-makers marched to the stadium all the way from the company area and led a contingent of over a thousand Breaker rooters.

DEVILS THREATEN

Shortly after the opening kickoff, Deddino of the Breakers fumbled a punt on his own 35-yard line and Mueller recovered for the Devils. Mueller and Bryan teamed up to give the Devils a first down on the 23, but the Breaker line tightened and held, and the Devil drive sputtered out on the 17-yard line.

On an exchange of punts, the Breakers picked up considerable yardage, and took over on the Devil 28. Four plays netted the Breakers only two yards, however, and on the first 29th play Ed Hurley passed to Jim Hennessey in the flat for a gain of 46 yards and a first on the 117th Cubby 26-yard stripe. Again the Devils moved deeper into Breaker territory, but this time the drive was stopped on the 16, and the Breakers punted out of danger.

Mike Pansock, the 117th fullback, intercepted a Hurley pass early in the second period on his 43 to start another Breaker drive. The burly fullback ground out one first down on the plunges, then took a short pass from Ken Smith for a second one, but again the 29th forward wall braced and with the help of a penalty, the Devils forced the 117th to kick once more.

BRYAN AVERTS SCORE

Near the end of the half, the Breakers staged their most determined bid for a score after a tricky lateral on a punt return. Sturgill took the punt on the fifty and passed backwards to Smith who scampered 32 yards to the Devil 18. Sturgill made three on a reverse, then Pansock passed to Smith for a first down on the Devil 6-yard line. On the second play, however, Bryan intercepted a Smith pass in the end zone for an automatic touchback to avert the threat.

Hurley's fumble of a wet ball early in the second half gave the ball to the Breakers deep in 29th territory, but the Big Blue forward wall braced and held for downs on the 4-yard line. Hurley booted out from his own end zone to the 42, and Daddino took the punt, moved five yards, then lateraled to Sturgill who traipsed all the way to the Devil 10-yard stripe before he was thrown out of bounds.

BREAKERS TALLY

Pansock carried for two, then Smith for one through the center of the line. On third down, Smith took the ball again and swept wide around the right flank. Soon after he reached the line of scrimmage, he cut back sharply, evaded three tacklers and crossed into the end zone for the winning touchdown. Roberts came in to try the extra point, but failed.

Near the end of the third quarter, the desperate Two-Niners attempted a pass from their own 5 that was intercepted by the ever-alert Smith on the ten. But by this time, the 29th was fighting mad, and held the Breakers for four downs, taking over on their own eight-yard stripe.

That set the stage for the gallant last minute ground attack that looked for awhile as if it might tie up the ball game, but when the Breakers finally halted the Devil surge on the 37, that was the ball game, and the Breakers had retained their unbeaten record.

Before their big game Sunday in Doughboy Stadium with the 11th Armored Tankers, the Gators of the 124th Infantry gathered in a huddle as shown in the top picture to stroke the back of their pet 26-inch alligator, Adam Lazonga the First. You can hardly see the baby reptile, but you'll have to take our word for the fact that he's here. And evidently, it brought the 124th plenty of luck, because in the bottom shot you can see them moving forward on one of their vicious off-tackle slants for a first down. Roy Cestary is the hidden ball-carrier, and Nick Calos is right in front of him leading the way. The rest of the Gators are also doing some good blocking, despite the efforts of the Tankers to bring Cestary down to earth.

Georgia Naval Pre-Flight Meets Auburn on Saturday In Grid Feature Downtown

Tickets Available For Benning Soldiers At Reduced Prices

Fort Benning football fans are preparing for a real grid treat this Saturday when the powerful Auburn Tigers clash with the Georgia Naval Pre-Flight eleven from Athens at Memorial Stadium in downtown Columbus. Tickets at a reduced price are being provided for soldiers, and a large representation in khaki is expected to help fill the stands. Kickoff is at 3 o'clock.

The battle looms as one that may take some of the shine off the impending Georgia-Auburn conflict in the same stadium two weeks hence. The Fliers from Athens will bring some of the outstanding collegiate stars of the past few years into town for the game, and the Tigers from Alabama boast one of their best elevens in recent years.

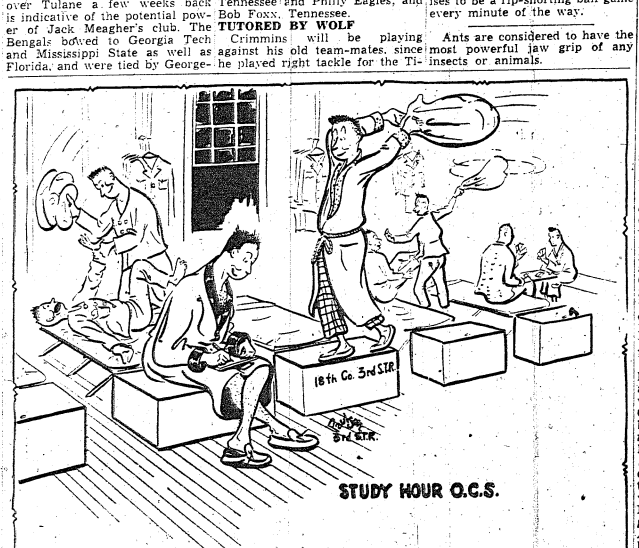
TIGERS MAY REBOUND

Auburn's record has not been too impressive, but the smashing victory which the Tigers achieved over Tulane a few weeks back is indicative of the potential power of Jack Meagher's club. The Bengals bowed to Georgia Tech and Mississippi State as well as Florida, and were tied by Georgetown, but they are expected to be on the rebound Saturday.

The Pre-Flighters from Athens hold triumphs over two of the nation's best in Penn and Duke as well as two cracker-jack service elevens in the Navy clubs from Pensacola and Jacksonville. They tied North Carolina Pre-Flight and suffered their only loss at the hands of L. S. U.

EXPECT AERIAL CIRCUS

Saturday's tussle will probably result in a real aerial circus, inasmuch as the Georgia Naval eleven boasts four top-notch passers, paced by Flingin' Frank Filchock, former Indiana and Washington Redskin ace, who is a great triple-threat back as well. Billy Patterson, Jack Crain and Darrell Tully are other former collegiate passing wonders who are wearing Navy uniforms.



There are also a good many more scintillating stars in the Pre-Flighter's line-up. They include Jim Poole, Mississippi and N. Y. Giants; Ernie Blandin, Tulane; Quentin Lumpkin, Georgia; Ed Hickerson, Alabama; Francis Crimmins, Auburn; Bob Suffridge, Tennessee and Philly Eagles; and Bob Foxx, Tennessee.

TUTORED BY WOLF

Crimmins will be playing against his old team-mates, since he played right tackle for the Tigers last season. However, he has been shifted to guard in the Flier line. The Athens eleven is tutored by Raymond (Bear) Wolf, former head coach of the North Carolina Tarheels.

Auburn also boasts some great individual stars in backs like Monk Gafford, Ty Irby and a few others. Pre-game dope favors the Navy club, but Auburn should be ready to have another big Saturday and may surprise. It promises to be a rip-snorting ball game every minute of the way.

Ants are considered to have the most powerful jaw grip of any insects or animals.

Academic Regt. Promotes 12

The following men of the Academic Regiment ISSC have been advanced in grade:

To T. Sgt. S. Sgt. Robert W. Smith, Washington, D. C.

To S. Sgt., Sgt. Thomas C. Cass, Miami, Fla.

To T-4: Cpl. Charles F. Murray, Hakalau, Hawaii; Cpl. Mose Goldsby, Jamaica, Long Island, N. Y.; Cpl. Willie Buck, Patterson, Miss.; T-5 Frederick W. Baker, Paulsboro, N. J.

To Cpl., T-5 James Harrell, Zachary, La.

To T-5: Pfc. James Tyson, Rodessa, La.; Pfc. Jerome J. Solari, St. Martinville, La.; Pvt. John H. Briggs Jr., Lexington, N. C.; Pvt. Alexander C. Philp, Millburn, N. J.; Pvt. Jack E. Daugherty, University City, Mo.

Tickets Available

Plenty of good tickets for the Auburn-Georgia Naval battle in Memorial Stadium on Saturday are available in the office of the Fort Benning Athletic Association in the bowling alley building on the main post.

There is a considerable quantity of soldier tickets available at a reduced price of 55 cents. These seats will be general admission, and will be located from about the 30-yard line to the goal line on the Auburn side of the stadium. The regular general admission tickets are priced at $1.50, and good reserved seats near mid-field are available at a $2.50 scale.

Bowlers Start New League

1st S. T. R. Features Eight Teams Here

With Colonel Gibson heaving the first ball straight down the center of the alley, the 1st Student Training Regiment Bowling League was off to a flying start, Monday nite at the New Bowl Mor Alleys.

There are 8 teams entered in the league and the schedule calls for 14 matches on successive Monday nites. The final play-off between the first and second half winners will take place on March 1st of '43.

The Headquarters Howitzers from "position defiled" blasted the Brigade Boomerangs out of position to the tune of 3-0. The 2nd Battalion Gentlemen left their gloves home, cutting the Jackson Giants down to their size in another 3-0 victory. The 3rd Battalion Boloes left their maggies drawers home long enough to nose out the 2nd Btn. Bums in a close 2-1 match. In the final match the 4th Battalion Blitzes had too much on the ball for the 3rd Battalion Bombers and sent them back to their hangars to critique a clean 3-0 trouncing.

The Headquarter's Howitzers rolled up the high team score for the nite with a 758 total and Lt. Halvorson captured individual honors rolling an impressive 212.

Cestary Star In Gator Win

Roy Cestary sparked the 124th Infantry's big eleven to its second Fort Benning Conference win last Sunday when the Gators rolled over the 11th Armored Tankers by a 20-6 count before 8,000 rooters in Doughboy Stadium.

The big tailback passed, plunged and punted with rare skill all afternoon. He tallied the first Gator touchdown four minutes after the kick-off on a slash over right tackle from the eight-yard line, then handed the pigskin to Vernon Smith on a reverse to aid in the second six-pointer a few moments later.

After that opening burst of power, the verdict was never in doubt, and the game turned into a more even affair, since Capt. Red Milton made liberal use of his reserve players for the remainder of the game. It was the Gator subs who racked up the final 124th score in the second period when Big Ed Joos ripped through center for a touchdown from the two-yard stripe.

Capt. Swede Carlson's Tankers seemed to be off their mettle throughout the opening half, but in the final semester they played better football, and managed to shove over a touchdown in the waning moments after they had recovered a Gator fumble at midfield.

COLORFUL GAME

The game was packed with color, and once again the Gators had an alligator mascot present. This time, though, it was Adam Lazonga the First, the smaller member of the famous team who is only 28-inches long. He seemed to do the trick, though, because, as usual, the orange and blue played with their usual dash and spirit.

The victorious Gators held an advantage of eleven to seven in first downs, all of the Tanker eleven's coming in the second half. Capt. Milton's outfit attempted 13 aerials and connected with four of them for a total yardage of 85, while the 11th had a slightly better average of four out of twelve, but they could advance only 27 yards on the passes.

The Tanker line played gallant ball throughout the game, and proved a good match for the already noted Gator forward wall. But Capt. Swede Carlson's armoraiders had no backs to match Cestary, Smith, Ergler, Calos, Hackney, Hamlin and the rest of the 124th ball-carriers.

SCORE IN 7 PLAYS

Cestary scored for the 124th in exactly seven plays after the Gators had obtained possession of the oval on the Tanker 44 following a short punt in the early moments of the battle. The entire advance was via ground with Cestary tearing off the tackles and Smith skirting the ends on reverses. The score came on an eight-yard slash over the Tanker left tackle. Calos booted the conversion and the Gators were off to a fast start.

On the second play following the kick-off, the Tankers attempted a quick kick, but Ed O'Shea's boot was blocked and recovered for the Gators on the 11th 25-yard stripe by Tony Aulenti, their rugged right guard.

PENALTY HURTS

A fifteen-yard penalty set the orange and blue clad Gators back to the 40, but Cestary retaliated with a beautiful pass to Junie Belin, ex-Auburn end, who grabbed it for a 37-yard advance. Afterq three fruitless attempts still left the Gators a yard away from pay dirt, the 124th crossed up the Tankers and sent Smith scooting around end on a reverse to rack up the points. Again Calos converted.

Twice during the second period, the Tanker line staved off Gator scoring thrusts deep in its own territory, but the second time when they punted out of danger, Hackney, a former Davidson star, raced back 19 yards to place it on the 11th eleven's 21. From there Hackney and Hamlin alternated in moving to the 2nd and Joos finally went across for the score. Hamlin's placement was wide, but the Gators were in front, 20-0 at intermission.

TANKERS IMPROVE

The third period found the Tankers playing better ball and the two clubs fought on even terms. Then in the final canto, a recovery of a Gator fumble on the midfield stripe inspired the Tankers to drive the remaining distance for a score against the Gator reserves. The losers mixed passes and line plays nicely and finally scored on an aerial by Pontecour which Schneider grabbed on the goal line. It was good for seven yards.

Benning Panthers Bow To Morehouse College

Colored Eleven Defeated 22-6 In Exciting Battle

Before a wildly excited crowd of over 8,000 soldier spectators last Friday night, the Maroon Tigers from Morehouse College in Atlanta pounded out a 22-6 victory over the Fort Benning Panthers in a hard-bitted struggle in Doughboy Stadium.

The plucky Panthers played rugged ball all the way, but the maroon-clad visitors finally wore down the soldier eleven with greater reserve power and swept on to an impressive triumph. It was a splendid comeback for the Tiger eleven that had been put to rout by Tuskegee the week before.

The Benning team, representing the Service Battalion of the Infantry School's Student Training Regiment, put up a game fight, but in the long run was outclassed by the trim collegians. The game was a rooter-tooter from start to finish, however, and had the huge crowd on its feet time and again.

REID OUTSTANDING

Outstanding player of the fracas was big Clarence Reid, center and captain of the Panthers. The former Tuskegee great carried a tremendous burden on the defense for the Benning club and made tackle after tackle. He also intercepted two passes and did some notable blocking. He got a big ovation when he left the fray near the end.

Morehouse scored first in the opening quarter on a freaky play which resulted in a safety against the Panthers and gave the visitors a scant two-point margin. Mixing passes and brilliant reverses, the Tigers had moved from their own 28 to the Panther 3-yard line when Homer Hill fumbled while bucking over tackle. Dixon recovered for Benning, but was tossed behind the goal line for a safety.

SCORE ON PASS

The first Morehouse touchdown came in the second quarter, after both elevens had swapped pass interceptions. The Tigers got the best of the deal, however, for their Stan Smith raced 25 yards with his interception to the Panther 15-yard stripe. A pass from Clarence Anderson to Homer Hill moved the oval to the five, and then after the rugged Panther line had held for three downs, the same pass combine clicked for the score. Kornegay came in to boot the extra point from placement and give the visitors a 9-0 advantage at intermission.

A second Tiger touchdown came midway in the third period after Bob Scott's sensational punting had driven the cagy Panthers deep into their own territory. Finally a punt run-back gave the Maroons the ball on the Benning 17, and three lightning-fast reverses carried over for the score. The touchdown play was a double reverse from Hill to Scott to Anderson with the latter scampering over untouched from the five-yard marker.

PHILLIPSON TALLIES

Opportunity finally knocked for the Panthers early in the final canto when a clipping penalty was called against Morehouse deep in their own territory, and Benning got the ball on the Tiger 10. The Panthers gained two, then were penalized five yards, but retaliated on the next play when Norman Bartley fired a bullet pass to Frankie Phillipson on the goal line for the six points. It was the most sensational scoring play of the game, and tightened the score to 16-6.

The final Morehouse score came with only a few minutes remaining after a 35-yard drive. Bob Scott, who played a whale of a game all the way, finally counted on a straight buck over center from the two-yard line. The Tigers were threatening again when the final whistle blew.

Score by quarters:

Morehouse	2	7	6	7	—22
Benning	0	0	0	6	—6

His commission was result of an application for the O. C. C. in the Army Postal Service, it was announced today.

Lieut. Davis enlisted in the Army August 30, 1940. He is the son of E. T. Davis, Charleston, Miss., and is married.

Sgt. Brown Commissioned

Has Been Enlisted Man 15 Years

After fifteen years of service as an enlisted man, Master Sergeant David C. Brown, chief clerk of the Reproduction Plant at the Infantry School, has been commissioned a first lieutenant.

Lt. Brown has spent his entire military career at Fort Benning. He came here in January, 1928, and served for eighteen months with the 29th Infantry. In July of 1929 he was transferred to the Infantry School Detachment, now the Infantry School Service Command, for duty with the Reproduction Plant. He has remained with that assignment since.

The new lieutenant has been chief clerk of the plant since 1931. He has held every enlisted grade from private to master sergeant. He became a master sergeant in January of this year. He has the excellent record of not having lost a day of duty since he has been in service.

Lt. Brown comes from Live Oak, Florida, where his family still resides. He is the step-son of Mrs. J. V. Brown, of Route C, Live Oak, and a brother of Miss E. A. Brown. He has been a resident of Columbus, Georgia, for the past ten years.

He was sworn in as an officer on October 27, and assigned to the Infantry School for continued duty with the Reproduction Plant.

Unit Of Range Troops Formed

With the appointment of Lt. Frank Shannon as company commander, and the selection of a cadre, Company G took its place this week as the baby of the Academic Regiment of the Infantry School.

Transfers were hurtling through the air as approximately 100 Range men prepared to leave Company C to join the new organization.

Company G will consist mostly of Range men. It is located at Shannon Field, on the Main Post, with the First Student Training Regiment. The company will have its own mess hall, a large room capable of seating between 300 and 400 men at one time.

The staff of Company G includes Sgt. Boggs, 1st sergeant; St. Sgt. Follendore, mess sergeant; Sgt. Neibler, supply sergeant; Cpl. Brofman, company clerk and unit mail clerk; Cpl. Gannon, company clerk assigned to headquarters; Pvt. Kelly, company mechanic.

Replacing Lt. Shannon as the Headquarters' company commander, is Lt. Herman L. Kline.

Doughboy Stadium, the modern concrete football stadium at Ft. Benning, has a seating capacity of 12,000, one of the finest and largest in the entire country.

World's Future Depends Upon Understanding

Hon. Ruth B. Owen Sees "New Horizons"

The greatest pioneering—that in human values and relationships—remains to be done, according to the Hon Ruth Bryan Owen, former United States minister to Denmark.

Mrs. Owen spoke to an audience of 500 in the Main Theatre Monday afternoon on "New Horizons for America." The meeting was sponsored by the Woman's Club of Fort Benning. The speaker, Mrs. Borge Rohde in private life, emphasized that once the problem of human relationships has been solved, promised horizons will be much brighter than those of today.

"Motion pictures are one of the greatest propaganda forces in the world today," Mrs. Owen said. "However, movies have yet to reach their full usefulness. If we could show all that government gives it would do much to stabilize our thinking. I wish we could give, through the films, a message to those who sit in darkness. I wish we could show American faith in our democratic institution, our faith in our country."

Speaking of radio, Mrs. Owen said: "I would like a Voice of Government speaking each day, giving facts on which we could rely. I would like spiritual setting-up exercises giving us the unchanging things worth dying for. There is so much radio could still do."

The frontier of public health also has to be crossed in the future, the speaker pointed out. "Sometime we will devise a means here which will provide all our people with adequate medical care. Sometime across the years pioneers will point a way to better care for every American," she said.

REHABILITATE CRIMINALS

Mrs. Owen sees a different approach to the crime problem in the future. Those who have committed crimes through lack of education and opportunity must have a chance to learn, she believes, while those with warped minds must have hospitilization rather than prison.

Turning to international frontiers, the speaker said: "We have begun to see hemispheric friendship and solidarity in our relations with South America. But we should learn not only to use their languages but to think in their languages, to learn the lives of our neighbors and their contributions to civilization. Some day there will be pioneers who will bridge, in greater understanding, the gaps between the republics."

In conclusion, Mrs. Owen referred to "the bullies on a vast scale riding in the world today." She reminded her audience that sometime the citizens of America will have to be as wise in according peace as they have been strong on the battlefield, pioneers who can point the way and say, "We will be wise and strong. We will not subject another generation to the chaos our generation has known."

"Among students at their books today," she said, "are pioneers who will help solve these problems. With vision, guidance, and wisdom, democracy will establish a stable future."

TIS Sergeants Score Possible With Tank Gun

Enemy tanks heading in the direction of Tech. Sgt. J. R. Lilze, Jr., and Staff Sgt. T. W. Jackson will find it healthier to change course immediately.

Both boys have scored possibles with the 37 mm. Anti-Tank gun. In fact, it is an event when either one misses a perfect score.

Both soldiers are attached to Company C of the Academic Regiment, Infantry School Service Command, and both hail from Alabama. Lilze is from Birmingham; Jackson from Dothan.

our country on its march to victory."

General Fulton stated:

"I am looking forward with great anticipation to the War Bond Breakfast to be held at Fort Benning on November 15th.

"It is only befitting that this large Army Post should be the first to have an affair of this kind, but we are hoping that it will be the beginning of a great movement among our Army Posts throughout the nation.

"I know that the officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of Fort Benning will respond in their usual, wholehearted manner."

as long as possible during the sojourn on this side of the big drink. Speaking of trains and redcaps, the wife can serve another useful purpose. Men are always too generous with the tips; a woman is more thrifty or stingy, or whatever you want to call it. This trick worked fine until the redcaps got wise and started charging ten cents a suitcase. I used to let my wife handle the business-end of the tipping deal and still do in the restaurants. She could smile so sweetly while handing the sweating red-cap a ten-cent piece on delivery of five or six bags to our seats on the train.

Yes, suh, Mr. Editor. Those lines can be licked. I know. I'm a fugitive from Columbus chow-lines, movie lines, train lines, or what have you, and believe me, I ain't just handing you a line. Naw, suh!

Sincerely,
Private Doakes.

Goudy Field, with a seating capacity of 3,600, is the scene of intra-mural baseball league games, where teams from opposing regiments play regularly during the summer. Fourteen regimental teams were entered during the last season, and thousands of soldiers from all over the post witnessed the contests.

The Main Theater, seating 1,504, was constructed in 1938 and is considered the finest of all War Department theaters in the country. Combined average attendance at all of the Post theaters runs close to 10,000 daily.

A greenhouse with a capacity of more than 25,000 plants is maintained at Fort Benning for beautification of the grounds.

issued the amount of meat needed to supply a given number of men for variously prepared meat dishes. At the same time, other tables are being prepared that will allow the unit supply group to divide the meat on an equitable basis for companies according to strength.

Work sheets are prepared for each problem and members of the classes take part in solving the problems. Later in the course of classes the men work out the distribution of cuts to the various companies.

The National Livestock and Meat Board has been working with the office of the Army Quartermaster General since early in 1940. Three series of schools have been conducted through the country. The first was a series of meat lectures and demonstrations for mess sergeants and cooks. The second was a series of one week training schools when one representative from each regiment was trained in meat cutting. The third was a three week meat training school for instructors in Bakers and Cooks schools.

Subjects covered during the present course of instructions at Fort Benning include cutting of frozen and fresh chilled carcases of beef, lamb and veal for distribution at the regimental and battalion mess supplies; correlating the issue of beef, lamb and veal with the various dishes on the menu; how to make and use cutting tests in order to judge approximate weights of various cuts before the cutting is performed; care and use of meat tools, scales, blocks and other equipment at the regimental supply; theoretical breakdown and issue problems which will be applicable to those problems, which arise in actual practice.

training—still waged around the cracker-barrels of the nation and will be important matters when Congress returns to settle the tate of the bill.

Chief of Staff George C. Marshal was worried about the proposal to keep the youthful soldiers in training for at least a year. The wise, capable, four-starred general told Congressional leaders:

"This amendment is the equivalent of blowing the whistle and telling the enemies time is out indefinitel . . ., it means either too old or too late. If the amendment is adopted, the Army will be forced to complete its organization with men too old to do the job efficiently or wait for the lapse of a year's time before it can fight."

On the proposal to ban intoxicating beverages from the areas around Army camps, a Chicago SUN columnist, Llewellyn White had an interesting thought. Said White:

"Soldiers can teach themselves temperance or even sobriety. But nobody can jam either down their throats. A boy just sort of figures that if he's old enough and responsible enough to fight and maybe die for his country, he's old enough and responsible enough to regulate his own morals."

War Secretary Stimson reported the Alcan Highway to Alaska is now open to trucks carrying munitions and materials to troops in Alaska for its entire length of 1,600 miles. Army Chief of Staff Marshall, in a letter to Commander in Chief King of the U. S. Fleet, said "skillful seamanship" of the Navy had already escorted 800,000 soldiers safely "across the submarine infested waters of the Atlantic and Pacific."

President Roosevelt declared that a compulsory registration of American women to determine their availability for war work is being considered. Added FDR, "while no compulsory drafting of women for war industries is contemplated, there is need for information which a compulsory registration would produce."

Man-power was a vital problem to the nation—probably easily as important as rationing and shortages. Labor Secretary Perkins reported 4,500,000 new workers must come into the labor market before the end of 1943. War Manpower Commission Chairman McNutt said that about 500,000 workers will be released for war industries when nation-wide gasoline rationing becomes effective Nov. 22.

McNutt added that all "necessary" workers on the nation's dairy, livestock and poultry farms will be frozen in their present occupation. Local draft boards will be asked to defer such workers, all other employers will be instructed to refrain from hiring them and the Agriculture Department will act toward stabilizing wages.

Sugar rations for Army and Navy personnel on furlough will be one half pound per week instead of on the basis of the value of the current sugar ration coupon. The first coffee ration will be started beginning Nov. 28.

The OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION told this week how the Japs are promoting the American Navy. The OWI said after the Coral Sea Battle, the U. S. Navy was reduced (by the Jap propagandists) to a "fourth-rate power." Following the first battle of the Solomons, the Tokyo radio reported our Navy was now a "third-rate power." Now the Japs claim America must be considered a "second-rate power."

CLARK GABLE, new second lieutenant in the Army Air Corps, graduated last weekend from the Army Air Forces OCS at Miami. Said LIEUTENANT GABLE, "individual discipline on a nation-wide scale is a thing necessary for victory."

MRS. ROOSEVELT in England, checked on the warmth of our boys' G. I. socks, looked over their barracks, promised to see why the mail wasn't coming in so fast. "Hi ya, Eleanor," was the boys' greeting to the first lady of the land. She liked it.

WAR BOND SALES in the nation during October totaled $814,353,000, exceeding the established national quota of $775,000,000. At Fort Benning, plans were about complete for the first war bonds breakfast for military personnel scheduled Nov. 15.

YANKS IN THE FIJI ISLANDS at last gained official recognition of their presence, were checking their time with Greenwich by radio recently, when the Tokyo radio broke in with a caustic comment. Said the Jap:

"Hey, you Yankees, down there in Suva. Your clock's a minute slow."

Second STR Boasts Good Health Record

Unit Has Able Medical Staff, Fine Equipment

The health of the Second Student Training regiment is unusually good. This is attributed to the fact that officer candidates are a picked group—and one of the requirements is that they shall possess a strong, healthy body. Most men with serious physical defects are eliminated before they get as far as the school. Others with minor defects are treated and the troubles are corrected before they get here.

But the health of both Hq. and Hq. Company and the companies of Service Battalion is also unusually good. That the whole regiment is "in feeling fine" is largely so because the regiment is blessed by an active and experienced group of medicos—both M. Cs and dental officers.

The dispensaries in the Harmony Church area are headed by Lt. Col. George F. Schmidt, Regimental Surgeon. He is ably assisted by Captain Jonathan Cohen, Capt. Harold O. Ernst, Capt. Lewis M. Jones and Lt. Joseph H. Selman.

FIVE DISPENSARIES IN AREA

There are five dispensaries in the area. Each is staffed at all times by an officer and enlisted men. Dispensary No. 2 is in the 2nd and 3rd Battalion area; Dispensary No. 3 is in the 4th Battalion area; Dispensary No. 4 is located in the Student Training Brigade area. No. 1, the main Dispensary, is located near Regimental Headquarters in the 1st Battalion area.

Although the regiment may enjoy good health, the dispensaries are always busy. It is their job to keep the officer candidates and men well.

But according to Lt. Col. Schmidt, most work consists in checking the records of incoming candidates to discover if any men are in need of immediate attention. Also, in some instances, records are lost. These must be replaced. Then finally, just before a candidate is commissioned, he must pass a final physical check-up.

Other than routine cases such as respiratory diseases, most men report to the dispensaries for minor injuries suffered in some phase of their instruction. Sprained ankles, backache and barked shins are common. The obstacle course, naturally, is the largest single factor contributing to injuries of this sort.

VERY FEW DISQUALIFIED

"But," commented Col. Schmidt, "there are very few candidates disqualified for physical disability. Out of the great number of men who have passed through the school courses, only a negligible percentage are dropped for health reasons. We are proud of this record."

Besides the officers, there are some 27 enlisted men attached to the dispensaries.

Both the Medical Detachment and the Dental Detachment in the Harmony Church area are a part of the Station Hospital set-up. Extremely serious cases requiring special attention that can not be rendered here are sent to the Station Hospital on the post. When the new hospital is completed for the area, all cases of this nature but surgical cases will be sent there.

DENTAL CLINIC

The Dental Clinic, under the direction of Major Nathan Adlerstein, Chief of Clinic, has been functioning in the area since last December when it was set up to care for the dental needs of some 2,500 men. Now, it is required to serve almost ten times that number.

Not only does the Dental Clinic, located in the regiment area, serve the men of the Second, but it also cares for the personnel of the Third Student Training Regiment, 124th Infantry, and other units located in Harmony Church.

The Dental Clinic is staffed by some 15 dental officers. These are a fine group of men — fine dentists. Major Adlerstein speaks of his subordinates with a large measure of pride. "I believe the dental officers we have with us here compare favorably with any group of dentists, in the army or out, anywhere. And the service we are set up to render is as complete and done with as exacting and painstaking care as that done anywhere in the United States."

Assisting the major in heading the clinic is Lt. Buell Herzig, chief of surgery, and Lt. Theodore Czaplinski, chief of prosthetics.

"Officer candidates' teeth are in far better condition than those of the average enlisted man. We work hard to keep them that way."

CHECK NEWCOMERS' TEETH

Two dental officers are assigned to the Casual Battalion to check the teeth of the incoming candidates. Every O. C. is checked before he is assigned to a company. All necessary and urgent work is done at this time. In this manner students are saved from missing classes and otherwise losing time from the school because of acute dental disorders. Of course minor troubles may be postponed until they can be cared for in the candidates' free time—Sundays and A. C. time. Proof of this system is that it works.

The dental clinic is open for urgent cases 24 hours of the day. For routine matters, it is open from 8:30 to 5:30 daily and from 8:30 to 1 p. m. on Sundays. Although officer candidates are not always free to visit the clinic at all time, usually permanent personnel of the regiment can be excused by their commanding officers to seek dental care.

In an average day the clinic may care for from 100 to 200 patients. In the month of September—the last complete month reported on—some 3,146 patients were treated. Some 3,142 teeth were filled, 951 extractions were made, 57 bridge-work-cases were cared for, and 250 prophylactics were performed.

Veteran Post Top-Kick Commissioned in Army

"1st Sgt. Harry L. Burchill, having served in the Army of the United States for 32 years, and having performed during that period the duties falling to him with distinction and unusual competence, is hereby commissioned as a 1st Lt. in the United States Army."

With this announcement over the loud speaker system in the area of the 4th Bn. of the 1st Student Training Regiment, Sgt. Burchill, in the presence of the entire battalion assembled for the purpose of commemorating the occasion, stepped forward and was sworn in by the commanding officer of the 4th Bn., Maj. Ellis Moore.

Lt. Burchill enlisted at Ft. Slocum, N. Y., Nov. 11, 1911, and was assigned to the famous 3rd Cavalry, at Ft. Sam Houston, Tex. Upon graduating from the riding school at Ft. Riley, Kan., his fondness for the service kept Lt. Burchill in the cavalry for the first 16 years of his service. For the past 15 years, he has served in a number of branches of the Infantry.

He saw action against hostile Moros on Mount Bagsec, Jolo, Philippines in 1913. He crossed the Rio Grande with the 16th Cavalry under command of General James Parker, after bandits at Matamoris, Mexico, and again went into Mexico under Gen. Pershing, chasing bandits with the 6th Cavalry, crossing over at Columbus, N. M., in 1916.

IN ENGLAND

During World War I, Sgt. Burchill was stationed for nine months at Aldershot, England, as an instructor in machine gunnery.

From the time of the Armistice, Lt. Burchill was stationed in Alaska and Hawaii, returning to the States in 1922. For the next 8 years he served as Sgt. Instructor in the Alabama National Guard and in the same capacity with the Ohio National Guard Cavalry in Toledo, O.

In 1932, he was sent to Bakersfield, Calif. with a company of C. C. C. boys from Kentucky. In 1936 he joined the 29th Infantry and served there until joining the 1st Student Training Regiment, when it was activated in 1940.

Lt. Burchill had been a non-commissioned officer for over a quarter of a century and has the distinction of never having been reduced for disciplinary reasons.

SPEED DEMON

He is also the proud holder of the record of having ridden 18 miles in 1 hour and 17 minutes, a record achieved while summoning reinforcements when the outpost of which he was a member was attacked by Mexican bandits. This is the fastest ride officially on record and was so noted on his Service Record. Lt. Burchill incidentally rode back to his post with the reinforcements on the same horse.

He was a member of the machine gun troop of the 3rd Cavalry, which was the first unit of machine gun Cavalry to be formed in our Army. While he was a member of this organization in 1941, it was presented with a silken guidon by Beneral Pershing for all-around excellence, and was the only unit in the Army to be so honored at that time. Lt. Burchill recalls that his platoon, in exhibition, could, at the blast of a whistle, stop from an extended gallop and set up its four machine guns, firing a shot within ten seconds.

Lt. Burchill has been assigned for duty to Fort McPherson, Georgia.

He will act as psychologist at the Induction Center where new inductees are interviewed as they enter the Army.

21st QM Has New Chorus

Many Programs Planned By Unit

A regimental chorus has recently been organized in the 21st Quartermaster truck, and is now holding daily rehearsals.

The group is composed of 17 men who hold various jobs within the regiment but who find time during their hours of leisure to meet and blend their voices in song. Several of the men in the chorus are former members of musical groups and two of the singers, Staff Sgt. Isaac Royal and Pvt. Henry L. Smith, both working in regimental headquarters, are accomplished pianists and organists.

Each section of the group has key men around which a new type of harmony is built and a unique feature of the group is the fact that rehearsals may be held by sections and when all voices are called together for combined rehearsals, some of the singers meet for the first time although all make up the regimental group.

To date, public appearances by this group have been limited to two radio broadcasts. The chorus appeared on a regular weekly broadcast from the Colored Army-Navy YMCA-USO in Columbus, Ga., and, on Thursday evening, October 29, presented a ten-minute program as a part of the "Fort Benning on the Air" feature. This was a profitable experience for the chorus in that it afforded excellent practice for the men and because a very fine announcer discovered in the person of Lieut. Winfred S. Gilmore, one of the regiment's officers. As a result of the favorable welcome given this group, many programs are being planned upon which they will take part and they are planning to present periodic radio broadcasts featuring a special swing quartet, short skits worked out by Cpl. Joseph Minter, former coast to coast vaudeville star, and other features.

Gen. Newgarden Lauds Tigers Following Tactical Road March

The "fine spirit and energy shown" during last week's tactical road march and field exercise was highly praised by Maj. Gen. Paul Newgarden, Commanding General of the 10th Armored "Tigers," at a critique in the Division bowl this week.

Despite the lack of adequate preparation for the exercise, the performance was nothing to be ashamed of, he said, and added that a great deal was learned from the problem. The General said he was well pleased with the "Tiger" patrols and praised the 90th Reconnaissance Battalion for its part in locating most of the strategic positions of the opposing forces. The Reconnaissance Battalion served as the "enemy" forces during the first three days of the problem.

Climaxing the four-day exercise, the Division was split into two groups, Combat Commands "A" and "B," which took to the field with missions to contact and destroy each other.

The "A" group, in charge of Brig. Gen. Robert W. Grow, and "B" under leadership of Brig. Gen. Morrill Ross, were bivouaced at separate areas on the Benning Reservation approximately 10 miles apart.

PATROLS OUT

Thursday night, each combat command sent out "Tigers" patrols, composed of one officer and 21 enlisted men to locate "enemy" positions so as to be prepared for Friday's encounter which began at 0730.

General Grow sent out his command in three sections, one a holding force and two as attacking elements, while General Ross split his men into two groups, striking and flanking. After several hours of maneuvering the "war" was called off and the march back to camp began. As the "battle" was called off at 1300, both sides were in the middle of an attack and it was impossible to determine just which side was the winner.

Meanwhile, General Newgarden and his staff served as observers and umpires.

During the encounter, one of the patrols was sent out with a mission to "capture" General Ross and it advanced to within hearing distance of the command post before it finally was taken.

The Division moved out Tuesday afternoon in four sections, Combat Commands "A" and "B," the reserve in charge of Col. William S. Eley, 54th Infantry, and the Reconnaissance Battalion, in charge of Lieut. Col. Cornelius A. Lichirie.

THE ENEMY

Colonel Lichirie's battalion, which served as "enemy" forces during the first three days, Tuesday night located the command posts of both combat commands, the Division command post, bivouac areas and practically all of the outposts of the opposite side.

Wednesday's march to Americus, Ga., was composed chiefly of point, advance party, support and main body movements and delayed action activities. The return to the reservation Thursday was similar to the previous day's movement except that each group returned by opposite routes from those used on the march out.

However, in the last phase, General Newgarden turned activities over to the combat commanders and served as observer and umpire. One of his first acts was to rule as "captured" a peep, a half track and a 37 MM gun, part of the point of the friendly troops that drove into a well-concealed ambush set up by the Reconnaissance Battalion.

Wednesday night, the men were permitted to visit Americus, nine miles from the bivouac area, where the principal event was a dance at the Service Men's Center. It had been arranged by Mrs. Dick Brinson, senior hostess, and Maj. Russell C. Hinote, Division Special Service Officer. A band, composed of men from the 11th and 3rd Armored Regiments, under leadership of Staff Sgt. Hubert P. Henderson, supplied the music.

MEN, EVENTS HIGHLIGHT BUSY HISTORIC YEAR

As Benning Goes On War Footing

The story of Fort Benning in the last twelve historic months has been one of men and events.

It has been a tale, first of capable, hard-driving Army men men who accepted the responsibility of leadership and intelligent initiative in the all-important task of troop-training, and secondly of important events closely related to the development of a war-time America.

The assignment of top-flight military leaders to the vital installations at Fort Benning was one of the immediate developments after Pearl Harbor. Their work, its results and the consequent promotion of many of them formed the basis for the important news stories of the year at Fort Benning.

So all-important was Fort Benning in the War Department's plan for victory that the Chief of Staff, General George C. Marshall twice visited the post and many others of the highest-ranking military and government officials of the United States and its allies were at the post during the twelve months.

In the early months after the news of Pearl Harbor broke on a startled nation, the tremendous enlargement of the Infantry School at Fort Benning through the creation of another student training regiment for officer candidates was indicative of the expansion program of the Army.

Hard on the heels of the reorganization for expansion came the announcement of Fort Benning's determination to cooperate with officials of Columbus, Ga., and Phenix City, Ala., in "cleaning up" vice conditions in the Fort Benning area. The Army and the municipalities hammered long and hard at vice conditions and won a victory so outstanding that national attention was attracted to the results in the spring of 1942.

Benning's Bond Sales Soar; Breakfast Set For Sunday

Pvt. Pierre Huss, Who Knows Hitler, To Speak At Affair

Fort Benning's all-soldier War Bond Breakfast, the first of its kind in the Nation, has skyrocketed "over the top" with the sale of more than $75,000 in securities early this week—more than doubling the original quota—and with the announcement that Private Pierre J. Huss, famed war correspondent, would deliver a personal "Message to Hitler" at the gala affair next Sunday morning in the Post gymnasium, starting at 9:30 o'clock.

Pvt. Huss, who has visited more than 50 battlefields in Europe, and had a personal interview with Der Fuehrer of the Nazis a year ago this month, a few weeks ago was inducted into the Army of the United States to fight for the rights of freedom of the Allied nations. He is now at Fort McClellan.

"America's democracy will highlight the Fort Benning War Bond breakfast as Brigadier General Walter Scott Fulton, commanding general of Fort Benning, will introduce Private Huss as the principal guest speaker.

Several other high ranking Army officers are expected to attend the breakfast as well as scores of enlisted men from the Post. For admission, each person must buy at least a War Bond with a $25 maturity value.

All subscriptions to the War Bond breakfast are in addition to more than $200,000 invested monthly by thousands of Benning troops in regular pay reservations for War Bonds. Each day, since the innovation of the Bond sale, Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., chairman of the War Bond Breakfast Committee, has announced sales of bonds mounting over the original quota anticipated of $30,000.

COMPLETE COOPERATION

Whole-hearted cooperation has been extended by all units and organizations at Fort Benning in the promotion of the War Bond sales. All subscriptions by soldiers and officers at the Post have been completely voluntary.

A group of 25 young women civilian employes at Post Headquarters and other Post offices this week have launched a drive at the Post to "Buy a bond from a Bond-A-Dear." This group of volunteer saleswomen is divided into teams and throughout the week, in their spare time, the young women are visiting service clubs and canteens and exchanges to take orders for bonds from any soldiers wishing to buy one. With the purchase of one bond, each individual is then entitled to buy

Post's History Depicts Rapid Growth of Army

Fort Benning — originally the home of The Infantry School and the Infantry Board — has mushroomed from a camp of a few acres in 1918 to what is now considered the most complete Army post in the continental United States, embracing approximately 187,000 acres. First located about three miles east of Columbus, Fort Benning now sprawls 22 miles south over the pine-covered hills of Georgia with other important installations on the west shores of the Chattahoochee.

As the Post grew in size, new Army activities blossomed forth. Parachute troops, air-borne Infantry, air-borne artillery, armored units—the latest adaptations of warfare are among the newest branches which have been assigned to Benning for training. Ar-

No 2nd Front Fulton Says

U. S. To Open 100 Fronts Of Battle

There will be no second front but a hundred fronts in the present world conflict, Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, commanding officer of Fort Benning, declared Wednesday in an Armistice Day address before the Charles Harrison post of the American Legion.

"As I utter these words the black and white type screams and the radio blasts: The American Eagle has spread his wings encompassing another front. Algiers has capitulated and Morocco knows the liberating, firm tramp of the doughboys. A mighty Allied Armada is silencing the shore batteries manned by the Vichy French, and our fliers already operate from air bases captured a few hours ago. Our forces move to unite with those of the victorious British 8th Army who chase the fleeing remnants of Rommel's Afrika Corps and the Italians. It is unknown who runs faster, the robot German or the Italian. . . ."

General Fulton declared that Americans have no quarrel with the freedom-loving France of Lafayette, Clemenceau, and Foch, but only those afflicted with the disease of Axis collaboration.

"This evil disease shall be cured. Yes, wherever intolerance, fear, hate, and despotism trample the rights of free people and disfigure the faces of nations, there our boys will go. And this time they'll stay until right makes might instead of might making right!"

The speaker told the Legion that it is duty bound to fight on the front of morale, the defense of our spirit, our determination, our objects in this war. . .

"We must constantly remember the 'Four Freedoms;' we must keep them alive and write them into the next peace. We must keep America a country worthy of victory."

Benning Alumni Are In Action In African Blitz

Two major generals well-known at Fort Benning for their work at the post last year and in previous years are in command of important theaters in the U. S. invasion of French Africa.

Capable, aggressive, colorful Maj. Gen. George S. Patton, known to the Army as "Old Blood and Guts" and former commanding officer of Fort Benning, commands the West African landing. General Patton was the commanding officer of the 2nd Armored Division and the First Armored Corps while he was at Fort Benning. He left last year to command desert training in California.

Maj. Gen. Lloyd R. Fredendall, another former post commander and the chief of the 4th Motorized Division while the division was at Fort Benning, is the commander of forces invading Oran.

Another leading general who is acting as deputy commander-in-chief under Lt. Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, commander of the invasion forces, is Maj. Gen. Mark W. Clark, former chief of Army ground forces and a visitor at Fort Benning earlier this year with General George C. Marshall, chief of staff.

The three-pronged invasion of French Africa was considered a major operation by the Allied nations and was hailed as a "second front" in many quarters. It was timed to coincide with the British Eighth Army's advance against Rommell in Egypt.

$75,000 BOND SALES

The cash sale of War Bonds at the Fort Benning post office is expected to total more than $75,000 this month, according to R. P. Richardson, postmaster. These bonds represent an addition to the more than $75,000 invested in bonds for the War Bond Breakfast and the $200,000 subscribed monthly by troops for securities through the pay reservation plan.

Gen. H. L. Benning Honored By Designation Of Army Fort

Confederate Officer Made Famous In Battle

Where Ft. Benning gets its name is one of the things that most new soldiers want to know when they arrive on the post. And for that matter a great many of those who have been here a long time don't seem able to give them much enlightenment, either.

The post was named in honor of Brigadier General Henry Lewis Benning, jurist and soldier of Columbus, one of the leaders of the Confederacy and one of the members of the Convention of Georgia which adopted the Ordinance of Secession.

Born in Columbia County, Georgia, April 2, 1814, he was educated at the University of Georgia at Athens, graduating at the head of his class in 1834. In that same year he began the study of law at Talbotton, in the office of George W. Towns, later a member of Congress and still later a Governor of Georgia. The young man was admitted to the bar in May, 1835, at Columbus, where he then made his home.

In 1837 he was appointed by Governor McDonald to serve as solicitor-general of the Chattahoochee circuit and in 1838 was elected by the general assembly for a four-year term. In the following year, however, he was married to Mary Howard, daughter of Col. Seaborn Jones, and resigned his position to form a partnership with Col. Jones in the practice of law. In 1850 he, together with Martin J. Crawford and James N. Ramsey, were delegates to the Southern Convention at Nashville, Tenn., and in the fall of 1853 he was elected one of the justices of the Supreme Court of Georgia, serving for six years.

JOINS CONFEDERATES

In December, 1860 he was elected by his county as a member of the Convention of Georgia, and was an earnest advocate of adoption of the Ordinance of Secession. He then was sent as a commissioner to the Virginia convention in January, 1861, and made one of the main speeches urging that body to adopt a similar ordinance. In August, 1861, he entered the Confederate Service as Colonel of the Seventh Georgia regiment.

For some time he was in command of the Toombs' brigade of the Army of Virginia and in little more than a year he was made a brigadier-general. One of the last acts of John C. Breckenridge, Secretary of War in the Confederate Cabinet, was to attach his signature to the commission making him a major general.

As brigadier general, he was frequently in command of Hood's famed Division of the First Corps.

Post's 'Good' Old Days When Things Were Really Tough Are Revived By Fort Historian

By LAURA M. BAILEY

Every community and town has its pioneers and early settlers. The foresight and courage displayed by the founders of any locality are always an inspiration and guidance for those who follow in later years. Fort Benning is no exception to this rule. It has a long list of pioneer army families who are affectionately known as the F. F. B., first families of Benning.

Each age group of army family has had their personal difficulties and trials minimized by tales of greater hardships endured by those ahead of them. Well known are the stories of army life on the western frontier. Indian fighting days they were and the wives who followed the flag lived under incredible hardships unknown to the city women of her day. The regimental spirit and happiness they created out of their talents are sagas today in army history.

Later wives knew hardships on the Mexican border. Adobe shacks, heat and the barest necessities of living. Life in the Philippines when it meant living in nipa shacks, being the only white woman within hundreds of miles among hostile natives.

Today those who find life difficult at Fort Benning are reminded of an earlier life of army families when Camp Benning was first established. It was directly after World War I time that promotions took a sickening turn when generals and colonels, became majors and captains. Lieutenant colonels became 1st lieutenants. Living costs were outrageously high. The drop in pay with the change in rank meant a serious adjustment of living for army families.

MACHINE GUN COURSE

One of the first officers to be assigned a machine gun course was Col. Morris G. Stubbs, then a lieutenant. At that time the school was held on the Macon road. Property for Camp Benning had not yet been purchased.

After the purchase of land which was later to become the world famous Infantry School of Fort Benning, officers were ordered in for courses of instruction in the School of Musketry. Wooden barrack like buildings were erected for the school. As today where the men went their wives followed. Columbus was pitifully inadequate to take care of the housing shortage brought on by their arrival. Rents rose to alarming proportions, based in many instances upon the actual commutation received by the officer.

Many weird housing accommodations were found. One family could look through the knot holes of their floor to the landlord's chickens housed underneath them. Another family lived in an apartment distributed through the house of the landlord. The living room was in one corner of the lower floor, the bedroom on the second floor of another corner, the kitchen on the far corner of the same second floor. In order to go from room to room of their apartment, they had to pass through the rooms occupied by their landlady. Houses were considered furnished if they had one frying pan and a mixing spoon, a chair, a bed and a rickety table.

ROAD UNPAVED

The road from Columbus to Camp Benning was unpaved. Automobiles were a luxury to most army families. The first group to arrive at the post boasted four highly-prized and much-used automobiles. After heavy rain it was impossible to drive the sticky red clay road. Officers commuted from town to classes on the post by train. Catching the train morning and night became a feat of endurance and close attention to the clock.

In order to relieve the difficult situation a tent area was established of officers' quarters. Five tents were lined up one behind the other, later to become known as the famous shot-gun houses. The quartermaster provided wooden floors and sides. Coal ranges of tempermental eccentricities tested the ingenuities and temper of the cook. The tents were heated in the winter by Sibley stoves. Plumbing was impossible in the tent houses. A common bath house was used by the families. They waited their turn for baths swathed in bathrobes, clutching bars of soap and towels.

LUCKY US

As crude as the quarters were, the wives of those days considered themselves lucky to occupy them, for they were living on the Post. Eligibility for such quarters was based on the size of the family. If one had two children, they were entitled to a tent house. If the family was larger, they were assigned to the wooden shacks hastily erected by the labor battalions.

Women are always the persistent urge behind improvements. It wasn't long before the officer husbands were boarding up the tent tops and laying tar paper roofs. Treacherous things, these tar paper roofs. Storms weakened them until they leaked like sieves. Many an army family slept under raincoats and umbrellas during the heavy rains.

BUILD THEIR OWN

Officers were allowed to build their own homes. Plans were drawn and negro carpenters were hired to erect these quarters, which were the source of much personal pride. After school hours the officer owners lent a hand to the finishing touches. Colonel and Mrs. Morris G. Stubbs built a set of quarters near the Commandant's quarters, which was the original Bussey plantation house. A nearby neighbor, Captain Leven C. Allen, lived in the bachelor tent area on the lawn of the quarters he now occupies as major general and commandant of the Infantry School. Brig. Gen. G. H. Weems, assistant commandant, was another occupant of the bachelor tent area.

Another early home owner of Fort Benning was Col. and Mrs. Julian Dayton. The then Lieut. Dayton made a name for himself among the house constructing officers by installing a second hand bath tub. The first night of occupancy of their newly built quarters was a lively affair with the wholesale slaughter of nineteen field mice whose homes had been disturbed by the erection of the house.

SKUNKS PLENTIFUL

Skunks were plentiful and not averse to making themselves at home under the hastily built quarters of the officers. Col. Dayton recalls a losing battle with a persistent occupant with a white stripe down its back. He burned his clothes. Col. B. A. Byrne used different tactics and made pets of the kitten-like animals.

The Post Commissary was established in its present location. The Post Exchange Grocery was located in the building now occupied by the Red Cross Work Room. Long waiting lines were in existance during those days. Wives who wearied of waiting threatened to bring canvas chairs and their knitting to pass the time. The Post Office was in a wooden building reminiscent of the stage settings of wild western movies. A postmistress presided over mail window. Her living quarters were in the rear of the building. Much speculation was caused by her habit of polishing the furniture of her quarters with dye and shine shoe polish. That seemed an extravagant manner of housekeeping.

The children on the post were taken into Columbus in an old World War reconnaisance car. This was impracticable for the younger children, so the wives established a school and took the responsibility of teaching the pupils. Miss Ann Lou Grimes, principal of the Fort Benning School today, took over those responsibilities in 1920.

Maids were hired at $1.00 a week. If they did the laundry they were paid $1.25 a week. Their usefulness as maids was somewhat hampered by their interest in the colored labor battalions on the post. The maids were quartered in a tent area known as Hollywood. Canny mistresses hid the knives and ice picks on Saturday night. Such "weepons" were often used to settle amatory disputes.

COLORFUL COLUMBUS

Columbus was colorful on Saturday night when the negroes came in from the country on mules. After walking up Broadway, the shoes they wore became uncomfortable. They removed them with unabashed forthrightness and carried them under their arms for the remainder of their stay in town.

All the discomforts from struggling with coal stoves that blew up with gases fromed from burning coal dust, lack of reasonable living comforts and the problems confronting the early settlers, didn't retard the spirit of social life that has always leavened the hardships in the army.

OFFICERS' CLUB

A wooden two story building near the present flag pole served as the Officers' Club. Saturday Night Hops alternated between the Officers' Club, the Biglerville Mess, now being used as a Post Exchange Grocery and the Polo Club. Gay dinner parties were held in the tent houses with complete unconcern of the surroundings. Wives found pleasure in riding classes and bridge clubs. A dramatic club presented plays at regular intervals. The Cricket and Cosy Corner Rooms were headquarters for off the post entertaining. The Muscogee Club in Columbus was the scene of many a gay Saturday night dance. Firm Roberts was the place for hamburgers and steaks, just as it is now. Charcoal sticks aged the Georgia corn and many a recipe for home brew was exchanged by ingeniuous brewers of that era.

With all the hardships of the early days a rightful pride glows in the hearts of those who knew Camp Benning then and the Fort Benning of today. It is the home of the Infantry and the favorite post of the Infantry officer. Many of the pioneers have been stationed here the past months. Many of them are here now. Maj. Gen. Leven C. Allen, Brig. Gen. G. H. Weems, Col. and Mrs. Matthew Gunner, Col. and Mrs. Joseph C. Addington, Col. and Mrs. J. D. Bender, Col. and Mrs. Thomas B. Gibson, Col. and Mrs. Julien Dayton, Col. and Mrs. Morris G. Stubbs, Col. and Mrs. William J. Niederpruem, Col. and Mrs. William S. Eley, Col. and Mrs. M. G. Shattuck, Col. and Mrs. H. G. Svenham, Col. and Mrs. Thomas C. Hamilton, Col. and Mrs. Furman W. Hardee, Col. and Mrs. F. H. Kron, Col. and Mrs. H. A. Bagby, Col. and Mrs. B. A. Byrne, and Col. and Mrs. H. McG. Matthews.

mored units in the Middle East, paratroopers in England, Infantrymen in the Solomons: many of them at one time or another learned and practiced their art while training at Fort Benning.

"POTENT" TRAINING CENTER

Although wartime censorship naturally has shrouded many of the training activities of the post from description in the press, the Axis well knows from the history of the past that Fort Benning is one of the most potent training centers of Uncle Sam's Army. Although training for warfare is the primary objective at the post, Fort Benning has diversionary activities for sports and recreation for the troops here to balance the program for the men. Football and baseball stadiums, swimming pools, tennis courts, several theaters, Service Clubs and field houses are among the so-called "extra-curricular" activities which provide diversion for the soldiers when they have occasion for recreation and social activities at the post.

Fort Benning is literally a metropolis within itself. The vast number of troops here necessitates a large utility system which would dwarf those available to many communities with a like population. The water supply and drainage systems heating and lighting systems, transportation and living facilities, offices and recreational facilities are so planned and erected that Fort Benning has come to be known as "the most complete post in the United States."

Directing the administration of this huge post is a brigadier general, Walter S. Fulton, a veteran Army officer and a man well acquainted with the executive problems of Fort Benning.

General Fulton has been on duty at Fort Benning for two years and a half and served as executive officer of the post before being named commanding general last April 8. Previous to his assignment as executive officer, General Fulton held several other administrative posts at Fort Benning and was able to gain a thorough knowledge of the many problems confronting a commanding officer.

A West Point graduate, General Fulton has held many important posts with the War Department including some years spent on the General Staff in Washington where he was in charge of the section laying the groundwork for the present Selective Service System.

Since he has been executive officer and commanding general, General Fulton has been instrumental in many of the improvements at the post. He is well known in civic circles in the Columbus-Fort Benning area.

In October, 1918, Camp Benning was first established about three miles east of Columbus, as the home of the Infantry School. In 1919 the principal administrative center of activity, which today is known as the post proper, was moved to its present location, nine miles south of Columbus.

NATURAL TERRAIN

Natural terrain features adjacent to the present location, which were considered especially suitable for training of troops and the needs of the school, were among the factors which brought about the change in location. In 1922, the reservation having been designated a permanent military establishment, the War Department changed the post's name from Camp Benning to Fort Benning.

During the two decades in which Fort Benning existed primarily for the uses of the Infantry School and the Infantry Board, the reservation embraced an area of 97,245 acres. Additional land recently acquired gives it a total of more than 187,000 acres. The enlarged reservation measures about 22 miles north and south and about 24 miles from east to west. The post lies within two counties in Georgia and one in Alabama, the Chattahoochee River dividing the portions in each state. Today — as the various branches of service are engaged in training—units from the post utilize the far corners of the reservation for field exercises and firing ranges.

The first buildings erected on the reservation were of the wooden cantonment type used in the first World War. There were hundreds of them. By 1938 practically all of these wooden buildings had been replaced by permanently constructed buildings of steel, concrete, and brick. There were at that time approximately 1,500 of these buildings. Included were large modern houses and apartment buildings to provide accommodations for the approximately 6,000 officers and enlisted men that then made up the reservation's population. Today with the influx of more troops and units, hundreds more buildings have been erected and many are in the process of building as construction still goes on.

NEW PROJECTS UNDERWAY

Among the most recent projects completed is a modernized main exchange store. Projects now underway, in addition to barracks and warehouses, include a new restaurant, cafeteria, and soda fountain which is being built on Ingersoll avenue, and several dormitories to house some of civilian personnel working on the post. A new post office large enough to serve 100,000 persons is to be built.

The post takes its name from Brigadier General Henry Louis Benning, one of the outstanding battle leaders of the Confederate Army, who spent practically all of his life, except during the period of the War between the States, as a lawyer and jurist in Columbus.

Lawson Field, the post's airport, is located on the edge of the post proper. It derives its name from that of Captain William Ross Lawson, of the Air Corps, who died in an airplane crash at Wright Field in 1923 after a distinguished record in the first World War.

"BIGGEST LITTLE RAILROAD"

Fort Benning has the biggest "little railroad" in the world and on that fact hangs an amazing tale of transportation problems. The Fort Benning Railroad, which is recognized as one of the longest narrow gauge railroads in the world, is an important and integral part of the transportation system at the post. The railroad's tracks cover about 18 and a half miles.

Fort Benning has one permanently constructed Chapel on the post, which was built several years ago at a cost of $70,000. It's protype is one of the oldest of the churches in Savannah, Ga. With the increase of personnel at the post, several additional wooden chapels have been constructed in various parts of the post to accomodate troops at services. In any of these chapels, soldiers of the Protestant, Catholic or Jewish Faiths can worship in amity and accord.

Among the nine motion picture buildings, one — known as the Main Theater — is of permanent type of construction, built in 1938 at a cost of $240,000.

the conditions threatening the health and welfare of troops stationed here was Brig. Gen. Walter S. Fulton, who on April 8 assumed command of Fort Benning after a distinguished record of service in other administrative positions on the post and in the Army during his long career as an officer.

In the news of Fort Benning last spring were other far-reaching events. The Parachute Training School, aftermath of two years of parachute training at Fort Benning, was formally established and an able, experienced officer—Brig. Gen. George P. Howell, then a colonel, was brought to Fort Benning as commandant with Maj. William T. Ryder, pioneer parachute officer, as assistant commandant.

Stepping into a vitally important post as commandant of the Infantry School was Maj. Gen. Leven C. Alen, who took over the administration of the school at a time when its expansion was in full swing.

Establishment of a Women' Red Cross Motor Corps and a unique observance of Mother's Day in which 20 mothers from all over the nation were brought to the post to visit their sons were methods in which Fort Benning remained in the headlines—and in step with the rest of the nation—in the late spring.

June 9 brought the first highranking officials to Fort Benning since Pearl Harbor. Stopping for a tour of the post were General Marshal; Sir John Dill, chief of the British Joint Staff Mission; Vice Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten, chief of the British Commandoes, and Major Gen. Mark W. Clark, chief of the American ground forces.

Seven days later, Col. Frank Murphy, left his position as associate justice on the Supreme Court bench and inconspicuously began combat training at the Infantry School.

A new adjutant arrived to assume duties at Fort Benhing on July 8 when Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., reported at Post Headquarters.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS

The parade of distinguished visitors resumed nine days later when Fort Benning welcomed Under secretary of War Robert P. Patterson and Lt. Gen. William S. Knudsen, director of production.

Two days previously, a new unit of the armed forces, the 10th Armored Division, was activated in the Sand Hill area. Maj. Gen. Paul J. Newgarden; an Army Officer of recognized ability, assumed command of the new division.

August saw the arrival of hundreds of men for the new division and also the arrival of 26 handpicked Canadians for instruction at the Parachute school. The Canadians left a month later, after completing training, to organize the first Canadian parachute school. They left without their leader, Major Proctor, victim of a training mishap.

All the nation—any many American troops in foreign lands—heard of Fort Benning and its soldier talent on Sept. 1 when the Columbia Broadcasting Company brought the "Cheers from the Camps" coast-to-coast network program to Fort Benning.

The need for "tightening up" on persons visiting the nation's posts brought a system of civilian identification early in September at Fort Benning and thousands of civilians were registered, photographed and fingerprinted.

Mary Ann Mercer, singing star of NBC, was at the post for a war bonds rally and a few days later —Sept. 6—William L. Batts, Sr., vice-chariman of the War Production Board, spoke at Fort Benning during the graduation of his son, 2nd Lt. W. L. Batts, Jr., from Officer Candidate School.

Fort Benning turned its attention to the nation's collection of scrap metal in September and after the dust of the first few weeks activity had cleared, Fort Benning had contributed more than 6,000,000 pounds of metal.

Sept. 16 brought another precedent-shattering event when the first all-post camp newspaper, the BENNING BAYONET went to press. The following week came probably the most significant news story of the year when four top-ranking administrative officers were promoted to generals at the same time.

PROMOTIONS AT FORT

Rising to major general was General Allen of the Infantry School and promoted to Brigadier Generals at the same time were Walter S. Fulton, post commanding officer; George H. Weems, assistant commandant of the Infantry School, and Fred A. Safay, commanding officer of the 124th Infantry Regiment.

The promotions were milestones in the careers of the quartet, who probably more than any other group of officers had been responsible for the achievements of Fort Benning during the last year.

For General Allen the promotion to major general highlighted a career which started a quarter of a century ago—in November, 1916—when he was commissioned a second lieutenant. He served in France as captain of a machine-gun company and after the war returned to the United States and to Fort Benning in 1920 where he was an instructor on the school staff for four years. He rose through the ranks in later years, serving in the office of the Chief of Infantry for four years and as chief of staf in the Pacific sector for three years. He was ordered to Fort Benning as school commandant from Washington, where he was on the general staff.

General Fulton's rise to brigadier general came after nearly two years and a half of outstanding service at Fort Benning. A West Point graduate, General Fulton was executive officer of the post for eleven months before assuming command of the post on April 8, 1942. He also served as special inspector at Fort Benning and in this capacity became well-acquainted with organizational and administrative problems of the post.

Include din the important command and executive assignments General Fulton has had in the last twenty years was work from 1929 until 1933 in Washington, where he was on the War Department general staff in charge of the section studying plans for selective service. He served for four years as senior instructor of the Minnesota National Guard; was senior instructor of the Louisiana National Guard and also served as executive officer of the National Guard Bureau in Washington.

General Safay, a native of Jacksonville, Fla., was instrumental in the reorganization of the Florida National Guard after the World War and in 1940 when the 124th Infantry Regiment was federalized and called to active duty as a National Guard outfit, he was named commanding officer and led the regiment through two years of training and maneuvers. The regiment's work was so outstanding during that two years, that it was ordered to Fort Benning as the demonstration regiment of the Infantry School. General Safay served with the 18th Infantry in France having earned a commission by attending officers training school in 1918. He held a reserve commission in the National Guard of Florida from 1920 until 1940.

A graduate of West Point Military Academy in 1917, Brig. Gen. George H. Weems has held important positions in the service since World War I when he was decorated for gallantry in action, receiving the Distinguished Service Cross, the Silver Star and French and Italian medals. He served as head of the United States Army Mission to Haiti in later years and combined this work with duties as the head of the Haitian Military Academy from 1939 until 1941. He became assistant commandant of the Infantry School in March, 1942.

Another far-reaching news story early in the fall was the Army's decision to adopt a "pay as you go" policy at all Army camps. The ruling went into effect at Fort Benning on Nov. 1 and affected all officers, warrant officers and enlisted men.

As the special edition of the BAYONET went to press, arrangements were completed for the huge war bonds breakfast in the post gym on November 15, the first event of its kind held in an Army camp in the nation.

First Lieutenant Henry T. Gayley, Jr., of the publication section, The Infantry School, and Corp. James A. Wynne, Company H, First Student Training Regiment, chose the winning name for Fort Benning's newspaper—the "Fort Benning Bayonet."

James Freeman, plans and training officer; Captain George Fink, acting judge advocate; Captain Russell J. Hammargren, public relations officer; Lt. Guy Snavely, aide de camp; Captain C. H. Chapman, intelligence officer; Lt. R. A. Parkins, chief of the civilian branch; Lt. W. B. Arbuthnot, chief of the military personnel branch; and Lt. Jack Gibbs, engineer property officer.

Prize Winners

Winners for last week in the BAYONET'S original contribution contest include Harry Chard of the Seventh Observation Squadron for his "Day-Room Duds" and cartoons by Sweeney of the First Student Training Regiment. No prize was awarded for verse since none was published. However, double prizes will be given this week to two contestants whose verse appears on the full page of poetry we publish this week. Keep on trying, soldiers.

5 Class-Mates At West Point Made Colonels

Five lieutenant colonels of the Infantry School, all of whom are graduates of the World War I class of 1918 of West Point and all of whom have held lt.-colonel appointments since September 15, 1941, have been promoted to full colonels, Major Gen. Leven C. Allen, commandant of the Infantry School, announced Monday.

They include Cols. Richard R. Coursey, director of training for officer candidates; Bernard A. Byrne, chief of the communications section; Arthur M. Parsons, chief of heavy weapons combat training group, weapons section; Raymond C. Barlow, executive officer and instructor in physical training section; and Walter Scott Winn, Jr., chairman of the map and photograph reading committee, general section.

He participated with gallantry in the battles of Second Manassas, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, Chickamauga, Thoroughfare Gap, Malvern Hill, Lookout Valley, Fort Loudon, Knoxville, Petersburg, Farmville and others. He was distinguished for coolness and daring and was called "Ole Rock" by his troops. In the second day fighting at the Wilderness, he was wounded severely.

At the time of the surrender of General Lee's army, he was in command of his Georgia brigade which though greatly reduced in numbers, was in good discipline and still ready for duty.

Following the end of the war, he returned to Columbus and resumed the practice of law. He died on July 10th, 1875.

Organizations and units at the Post can use company funds with which to invest in War Bonds, it was announced. Leaders in the drive have suggested that as many units as possible invest surplus funds in the Bonds and send their men to the breakfast. Two men will be admitted from each unit buying a $50 bond.

Private Huss, whose first-hand information of the Nazi regime is well-known throughout the country, has been a foreign correspondent of International News Service since 1929. Huss was Bureau manager of INS in Berlin since 1934 until last year when the United States entered the war against Germany and he was repatriated.

Among the other well-known persons slated to attend the breakfast is Harold B. Hall, Birmingham, Ala., department store executive, who conceived the war bond breakfast idea to sell bonds, and who was recently cited by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. To date more than $75,000,000 in war bonds have been accumulated by breakfasts of civilians throughout the country. Fort Benning's all-soldier affair is expected to be followed by similar affairs to be staged at other Army camps throughout the country.

All units of the 117th Infantry Regiment, commanded by Col. Grant Schleicker, have purchased War Bonds, the first organization to be enrolled 100 per cent in the current drive, Lieut. W. W. Brockenmier is War Bond officer of the Regiment.

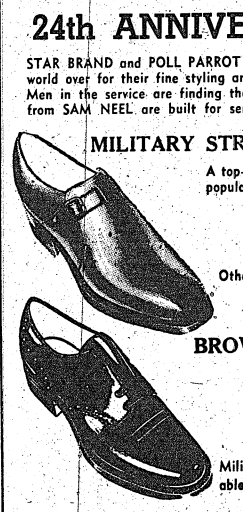
Four Sawmills Fashion Timbers For Buildings

With a systematic forestry program being carried on four sawmills are kept busy at Fort Benning.

The Post Engineer's office "harvests" the virgin pine and other trees on the post after the forestry service determines that they should be cut. Three sawmills are humming with the results of the lumberjacks' work.

At the same time, the Area Engineer's office maintains one sawmill to make timbers and lumber from the trees cut down in clearing land for major projects at the Post.

IMPRACTICAL JOKERS



The trouble with anti-tank Company H at Camp Barkeley, Texas, used to be practical joking. It was, that is, until pranksters caught a rattlesnake and tied a fine wire around its neck to make it wriggle near Private Benjamin J. Gorski, company cook. Pretty soon Private Gorski saw the snake. But did he see the wire? Anyway, Private Gorski ran so far, so fast, that Company H didn't get any dinner that night. It was harder work catching Private Gorski than it was to catch the snake, and nobody is sure yet that Private Gorski didn't just hide out. He wasn't scared of the three guys he caught raiding the pantry . . . Practical joking used to be the trouble in Company H.

Infantry Board Proves Quality Of Equipment Issued For Battle Use; Tests, Verbal Battles Show Results

If Equipment Is Good, It Will Stand Up Under Gruelling Tests Here

The War Department said the Garand rifle was good. But Fort Benning's Infantry Board, which tests all equipment slated for use by the infantry, reported "Well, we'll see . . ."

As an example the Infantry Board, which is an astute organization of veteran officers of the Regular Army, called for an M-1 rifle. They took it out for tests. Sand was thrown all over the rifle, inside and out, and then blown out and the piece was fired. The Board then covered the rifle with mud, wiped it, and fired it. Then then the rifle was drenched in water and fired. Finally, the rifle was dropped—with a loud thud—the magazine open. Then it was fired.

Results? Well, the Infantry Board put its official stamp of approval on the Garand M-1 rifle as a good firearm for the Infantry.

Tests similar to the above are characteristic of the Board's "show me" policy. The Infantry Board, which from 1927 to 1932 included George C. Marshall, the Army's chief of staff, on its role, puts equipment and material through more rigorous tests than it is liable to be subjected to on the field of battle.

Everything from khaki shirts to mess kits and neckties are tested by the Infantry Board. Major General Leven C. Allen, commander of the Infantry School, is president of the Board. Present director of the organization is Col. Matthew J. Gunner.

Colonel Gunner says that he wants no "yes" men on the Board. Consequently, the director points out, it is not infrequent to find the members of the board at a round-table discussion one morning, varitably groping at one another's throat with pro and con arguments, and shortly afterward amicably eating lunch together in the Officers' club.

Each of the officers on the Board is possessed of an analytical mind. No one of the Board's members has had less than 18 years' Army experience. Thus the officers have many questions about the value of all equipment. A round table discussion may veer off into a heated argument, with hands thumping on the tables, or bursts of inventive passing back and forth.

But, were it not for such a "show me" policy, American doughboys would not be considered the best equipped infantrymen in the world. Shortcomings in various types of equipment are readily discernible to the wary eyes of the Infantry Board. And when out on the field of battle with his equipment the modern infantryman can thank his lucky stars that Benning's Infantry Board put the equipment through all the rigors of battle conditions before approving it as standard equipment fit for the battle.

Although the Infantry Board can adopt no equipment for the infantry, it can and does freely speak for or against proposed changes in material. The War Department regularly sends new ideas and suggestions to the Board's director, who then assigns them to an officer to delve into an exhaustive study of the innovations. Models of new weapons and equipment are forwarded to the Infantry Board which assigns them to the section to determine if the material will stand up under the impact of battle.

The test section of the Infantry Board carries on tests of every proposed innovation for the infantry. Headed by a veteran of World War I, Col. Harold G. Sydenham, the section is made up of specialists in various fields to whom various tests are assigned.

Incidentally, it was Col. Sydenham who conceived the idea for the new type helmet worn now by Uncle Sam's army. After getting the idea he constructed models, worked on it for years after the last war, and finally after removing the "bugs" from early models he convinced the army that this new helmet offers greater protection and more comfort than that worn by any soldier of any other country.

Tests put to the Garand rifle were not extraordinarily tough. They were just symbolic of the standards demanded of equipment for American soldiers who must fight this war with the best equipment and material available.

Cameramen Trained A Post In 161st Signal Co. Overseas

Skilled photographers, many of them veterans of maneuvers and other campaigns and all former members of the 161st Signal Photographic Company at Fort Benning, are now taking "shots" of American and allied troops in several theaters of operations throughout the World.

Photographic technicians from the 161st Signal Company have been detailed to form separate detachments during the past year and now are overseas serving in Australia, India, China, Iceland, Ireland, and England.

The Signal Company, which is made up of still cameramen, newsreel cameramen, laboratory technicians, drivers, and mechanics, has long used Fort Benning as a base of operations. Presently units from the Company are on detached service recording the Tennessee, Louisiana, and Desert Maneuvers in California—among other things. A unit of the 161st still is functioning at Benning, serving the photographic needs of the Post.

Captain John N. Harman, Jr. commands the present organization, which has produced many skilled cameramen who received training in the laboratories here at Benning and out in the field on special assignments.

During World War I, the value of photographic records of training and combat operations was recognized soon after the United States entered the war and the services of outstanding still and movie photographers were requested for this important duty.

STARTED IN 1917

Working with equipment and materials which would be considered wholly inadequate today, the Signal Corps photographers of 1917-18 produced a record of war training and combat that proved of great value for subsequent military study and as a historical document.

Long before the United States entered the present war, the Signal Corps made plans for a thorough camera record of every Army activity. A Photographic Laboratory was established at Fort Monmouth, N. J. for the development of both still and movie cameramen and the production of instructional training films was commenced on a large scale. Upon mobilization, some of these activities were extended into the field and the 161st Signal Photographic Company was activated and placed into operation.

Through the new method of Army classification, skilled professional and amateur photographers have been located and sent to the Signal Corps for a thorough training in all phases of photography. Equipped with the finest American-made cameras and supplies, these soldiers are coached and trained in its use under every conceivable field condition. Mobile darkrooms are improvised in regular Army trucks and photographers are expected to produce pictures regardless of difficulties that may be encountered.

The 161st, operating in the field, supplements the regular training course of the Signal Corps laboratory, and has already sent out several photographic units with our overseas forces. Such units operating at great distances from home bases, must be able to cope with all unusual local condition and bring back a complete record, in both still and moving pictures of every important activity on these fronts.

Veteran Army Sarge Ray Is Commissioned

Former Non-Com Did Muscle Work In Salvage Drive

For 21 years a soldier in the regular army, Staff Sergeant Grant L. Ray, who has served as Salvage and Reclamation Sergeant at the district Motor Transport Repair shop at Fort Benning for the past three years, has been commissioned a First Lieutenant.

He will report November 1, to Fourth Service Command headquarters at Atlanta, for assignment to duty.

Lt. Ray, now 42 years old, was born at Bluffs, Illinois, and enlisted when a recruiting officer came through Scott county with a promise that "every day in the army is just like Sunday on the farm." So the young farm lad said "Hand me out a stack of that and I'll try it."

"I soon found out that the army was plenty hard work but I loved it," he says now. "I was sent to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., in the old Sixth Infantry, then we went to Coblenz as part of the First Division in the Army of Occupation."

ARMY IN BLOOD

After that he went to Camp Taylor, Kentucky, and served at Camp Dix, N. J., then tried a bit of civilian life from 1921 to 1923 but returned to the army, being sent to Fort Worth, Texas, for three years. He also served in New York and San Francisco in the Motor Transport; then was sent to the Quartermaster department at Ft. Lewis, Washington; Ft. Leavenworth, Kans.; Fort Meade, S. D.; then attended the Holabird Motor Transport School at Baltimore; then went to Ft. Meade; then to Cheyenne, Wyo., and then came to the Quartermaster at Ft. Benning.

"I want to come back to serve right here at Fort Benning, as it is the best post I have ever served," he said today.

Lt. Ray set a record in the scrap campaign heading up a unit that turned in hundreds of tons of scrap metal, hauling most of the heavy material that was discovered on the post.

Patriotic Songs Gushing From Composers' Pens

"Remember Pearl Harbor!"

This battle challenge sung over every microphone, played on every juke box, and whistled on every street corner during the grim days following Dec. 7, is only one of a long line of war-songs that have kept American spirits high in times of national stress. "Call the Infantry" by Lt. F. M. Schilling of Benning, is another.

Ever since the thirteen colonies struck out for themselves back in 1776, American history has been written into its patriotic music. In each major struggle in which the country has been involved, many a stirring, swinging tune has helped to send U. S. fighters over the top to victory.

Revolutionary patriots had the "Liberty Song" of colonial John Dickinson and the fanatic ballads of Tom Paine, but the most lasting song to come out of that period was "Yankee Doodle," first taken up as a derisive chant and later adopted by the Concord Minute Men as their own anthem.

During the Civil War, Confederate Armies marched to the "War Song of Dixie," while northerners rallied round to the tune of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again." Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic" appeared as a poem. An unrenowned soldier, Pvt. Miles O'Reilly, composed a song to the Old 10th Army Corps.

STAR SPANGLED BANNER

Greatest patriotic song of all—our national anthem—arrived in the War of 1812, during an exchange of British and American prisoners at Fort McHenry, when Francis Scott Key was inspired at the sight of the "Star Spangled Banner" proudly waving over the smoke of battle.

VMI's March "To the Cadets" is also among the veterans.

Old as the Navy itself is its songlore. From "The True Yankee Sailor" down to "Anchors Aweigh," U. S. naval forces have gone to sea singing.

So have the Merchant Mariners, those sturdy adventurers who have helped to fight and win every war. Theirs is a lusty sea-tune, smacking of ships and waterfronts, beginning with the famous line—"As I Was Walkin' Down Paradise Street."

Spanish American War days brought the sentimental ballad in which were celebrated the triumphs of the heroes of Manila Bay and San Juan Hill, as well as "The Flag My Father Bore." Most people may not realize that "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," since become the model for many a college pep-song, first became popular at this time.

BERLIN AND COHAN

World War I gave us Irving Berlin and George M. Cohan. The Berlin Bugle Song "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" was sung by every doughboy, and Cohan's "Over There" and "You're a Grand Old Flag" stirred many wartorn hearts. Interesting sidelight on the development of crude air warfare in 1917 was "Daddy Is a U. S. Aeroplane Man."

Now every branch of the armed service has its own rousing theme-song, most kidely known of which is probably "The Marines' Hymn." Fred Waring's "Sky Anchors" celebrates the Naval Air Corps, while the Army Air Corps' official song was composed by Robert Crawford, copyrighted in 1939 "The Caisson Song," traditional Field Artillery song, is familiar even to civilians. "Keep 'Em Rolling" is dedicated to the Quartermaster Corps, and "Arms for the Love of America" is the Army Ordnance Song, dedicated to Maj. Gen C. M. Wesson, Army Chief of Ordnance.

Berlin has come through again with his million-dollar musical "This Is the Army," whose catchy tunes have already found a place in everybody's song-repertoire, especially the one which commemorates that tragedy peculiar to doughboys, "I Left My Heart at the Stage Door Canteen," and the humorously true-to-life "This is the Army, Mr. Jones."

Pre-war community gatherings loved to let loose on "God Bless America" or "The White Cliffs of Dover," but the soft sentimentalism of these songs was forgotten when Japanese bombs burst over Pearl Harbor.

CHRISTMAS 1942

Keep It SHINING For All The World

Soon, for one night, there will be peace on earth. Mud-smeared soldiers will sing hymns, women will pray and men will point to a steady bright light shining overhead! A light that shines on cottage and castle, on young or old, saying, "Have courage and faith and keep your hearts kindled with brotherly love." So rejoice, make merry, for we are free men, not kneeling under a whip. Rejoice, for we worship as we please. Rejoice, for ours is not an ersatz Christmas, but the true holiday spirit reigning throughout our land. And soon, with the Grace of God, we will have it shining throughout the world.

To the American Soldier

Today the BAYONET commemorates the twenty-fourth anniversary of the founding of Fort Benning. But we are not dedicating this anniversary edition of our paper to Benning, rather we dedicate it to the individual American soldier of 1942. The soldier whose grim determined visage is reproduced on the front page is a symbol. He is the symbol of the millions of young men who today are bearing arms under our country's banners in the training camps, on the high seas, in the air, in Alaska, in Iceland. He is symbolical of the men who fight for freedom in Europe, in the Solomons, in the burning desert sands of far-away Egypt and now in North Africa. He represents the faith of a nation in the belief that truth, right, and justice shall prevail. Sometimes these abstractions must necessarily assume a concrete form; sometimes allegory must be changed to realism as Truth, Right, and Justice gird themselves with mail and the sword.

In the hands of this typical American we have entrusted the hopes of a free people. His is a tremendous burden. But he is equal to the task as were his fathers who fought and won at Yorktown, in Tripoli, in France. His task is much greater than theirs, yes, but not so, relatively speaking. Our problems are greater now but so is our country. The United States has the man-power, the resources, and the industrial development to win this war. Add to this the courage, the stamina, and the resourcefulness of the individual American soldier, together with national unity and determined effort of our people. Those nations which win in the end are those which are free. Our nation is free, the American Soldier of 1942 is determined to keep her thus, so help us God.

Marriage and the War

Last week Dr. JANET FOWLER NELSON of New York University, noted consultant and sociologist, delivered an address in Columbus, the principal points of which the BAYONET considers important enough to bring to the attention of Fort Benning soldiers. Dr. NELSON, as acting consultant on family relations and social hygiene for the USO division of the national YWCA, has spent fifteen months touring the nation, studying conditions in various military camps and training stations. As an expert who has scrutinized the situation first-hand, she should know whereof she speaks.

Dr. NELSON represents a very large majority in this country who are terribly concerned over emotional instability which has resulted in hasty marriages, the rise of prostitution, and an increase in illegitimacy.

She recognizes that the V. D. rate is rising, that young girls are wrecking their lives because of hasty and unstable marriages, and that the age of unmarried mothers is dropping. She also wisely recognizes the fact that merely taking cognizance of the situation is not providing a solution. Dr. NELSON urges that parents face realities and, holding fast to the right principles and philosophies, take steps to correct them.

"The solution lies deep-rooted in the home, going back directly to the individual and the values of home-training. Consequently the absolute basic importance of the proper education, first at home, then at school and so branching out among the various other organizations of the community, cannot be over-emphasized".

Dr. NELSON is much concerned over war-time trickery of emotions and the glamour that the uniform plays in the attitude towards war marriages. It is on this particular problem that we would like to comment.

"Marriage is not something to be grabbed, at the cost of overburdening the soldier or sailor, who already has a great responsibility on his shoulders and is moved by uncertainty always found in war, or at the cost of over-burdening the community to which the war-bride must travel following her husband to camp," the speaker declared. "On the other hand, all marriages cannot be suspended until after the Armistice".

Dr. NELSON is correct in admitting that, as in every war, American society has a hard nut to crack. To marry or not to marry is as difficult as decision for the American soldier to make as it was for Rabelais' famous character Panurge who travelled over the globe asking advice and receiving only conflicting opinions.

As she states, this is not the time to give war-time marriage the green light to go ahead or the red light to stop. It is a time for the yellow light of caution. But merely making the statement does not solve the problem. General advice cannot be made to fit the individual case. The foundations of marriage for the soldier and his intended bride depend just as they do in normal times on emotional stability, morality, fidelity on the part of both parties to the marriage as well as the financial ability to support a home. Education in the home and school is probably the best weapon we can find in attempting to meet the situation, but the human element will continue to make this problem indeed a hard nut to crack. As long as men are men and women are women Cupid and Mars will play havoc with emotions.

As our transportation difficulties mount due to the rubber and gasoline shortages, more and more restrictions will be placed on the use of automobiles. It may well be that even public transportation facilities will have to limit space to those who are on vital business. Great as the sacrifice may seem, it may bring about the restoration of home life, the back-bone of our nation, and may go a long way in reducing the magnitude of the problem and giving reason a chance. Complete elimination of ill-advised marriages, seems to us, would be asking for too much, perhaps.

War isn't the only rift to conquer. There's division over wages—bickering over the family ear.

A Soldier's Prayer

In lasting memory of Armistice Day, November 11, and dedicated to every Soldier in the Armed Forces of the United States Army.

Almighty and everlasting God, whose days are without end, and whose mercies cannot be numbered; and who are the giver of all victory: I humbly beseech Thee, stretch forth Thy almighty hand to strengthen, protect and support me in the day of battle and from the violence of the enemy: And in the hour of peace keep me safe from evil: Grant that I may cheerfully perform all necessary duties: Guide and direct me in the maintenance of my country's honor, so that I may be a safeguard unto the United States of America, committing myself and my loved ones to Thy trust, until I am finally called into Thy haven of rest and lasting peace: Through Jesus Christ our Lord—Amen.

Whose War Is It?

Did you every stop to think whose war this is? You know the Irishman who saw the street fight going on. He asked "Is this a private fight or can anybody join in?" In total war everybody pitches in.

What are you doing to win the war? Buying War Bonds? Doing Civilian Defense work? Working in a war plant? That's fine, but more is need if we are to win this war.

We need three things:

1. Men.
2. Ships, planes and guns.
3. A fighting spirit that unites and inspires the whole country.

We need everybody in the right place pulling his weight with all he's got. Do you take the kind of responsibility for your family and friends that holds them to their highest contribution to national service?

Whose job is it to speed up production? Friction between men costs America more than friction in machines. Everyone can help to settle differences between people who don't get along together. A home which can settle private quarrels can settle community quarrels and forge the teamwork between management and men that will give maximum production.

Any military leader will tell you that to win the war we need a fighting spirit. General MARSHALL, Army Chief-of-Staff, says that morale is six times as important as material. It can only come from knowing what we are fighting for and being willing to sacrifice to the death for it. It will come from hard living and clear thinking as to what our war aims are.

"There are no atheists in fox holes," said a sergeant at Bataan. And there's no room for any here. Faith in God, a fighting spirit and unselfish teamwork will win the war and provide the foundations for a new world.

M. M. I.

Many enlisted men and officers in the army are soldiering under a distinct mental hazard; something on the order of the man without a country, although not quite as tragic. They are the men without middle names, doomed for the duration as military misfits unless some action is taken to remedy the situation.
